Bynum resigns from police department

By D. Lance Lunsford
Staff Writer

An investigation into whether long-time Midland police officer Paula Bynum should be charged with "filing a false report to police" is continuing in the Midland County District Attorney's office.

The probe is the result of Ms. Bynum reporting she had been shot by two men in a pick up shortly before midnight on Aug. 3. However, an investigation by the police department revealed the shot that wounded her left arm was self-inflicted.

Ms. Bynum told the Reporter-Telegram on Wednesday she had turned in her resignation on Tuesday.

But confusion surrounds her official status.

Ms. Bynum said she was told last Friday by Midland Police Chief John Urby she was being terminated. However, city of Midland Public Information Officer Tina Jauz said Wednesday Ms. Bynum had not officially been terminated, and there was "nothing new to report."

Ms. Jauz said Ms. Bynum "remains under

Paula Bynum was the first female S.W.A.T. member with the Midland Police Department. She was Midland's first female K-9 officer. She served on the department's honor guard and as a field training officer.

But her decorated career in law enforcement began to unravel in March 1999 when she discharged her handgun in her west Midland home. She was reprimanded by the police department in the wake of that incident, but returned to active police duty.

Two and a half years later on Aug. 3, Ms. Bynum reported she had been the victim of a drive-by shooting outside her home. An investigation by her fellow offi-

Combest: Midland likely to be united in his district

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest addressed the Midland County Young Republicans Wednesday as one of three congressmen who represent the county.

When the next congressional redistricting plan is finalized, however, Midland County will likely have just one congressman, and that is expected to be Combest, a Republican from Lubbock.

Combest

"Under the plan the attorney general has submitted on behalf of the state of Texas, (Midland) would be included in the 19th District," said Combest after Wednesday's luncheon at the Petroleum Club. "There has been an interest in having Midland and Ector (counties) in one district, which is fine with me. I hope I am their man."

Midland County is expected to be lumped in with others from the Permian Basin (including Ector) and placed with those in and around Lubbock. It will be the new 19th District.

Howard County's removal still upsets Sen. Duncan

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — State Sen. Robert Duncan was not alone in his disdain for the Legislative Redistricting Board's statewide plan Wednesday.

Talking to the Big Spring Lions Club, he was preaching to the choir.

Duncan continued to be critical of LRB efforts that moved Howard County out of his Senate district (28) and into the newly redesigned District 31 that would include Midland, Odessa and an overall stronger Permian Basin presence.

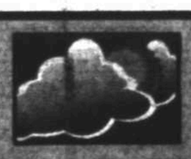

"The issue is, Howard County has expressed its objection to being moved into District 31. It was unanimous," Duncan said. "I haven't talked to one person who was in favor of it. That was expressed to the LRB and ignored."

The issue is old hat for many in Big Spring. Since the redistricting plan was voted on by the five-member LRB board in July, Howard County's political scene couldn't get much more in disarray.

Residents lost their state representative — David Counts (D-Knox City). They lost their state senator — Duncan (R-Lubbock). There are rumors Howard County will be placed in a

Bush's vacation limps to conclusion with more work, fewer fish

By Christopher Newton
Associated Press

CRAWFORD — To hear President Bush tell it, few things in life could be finer than spending a month away from Washington's stuffy bureaucracy, jogging at dawn and reeling in fish close to his ranch patio.

Nevertheless, Bush keeps cutting his vacation shorter, bringing the bureaucracy to Texas with him and slivering off days.

His wife is itching to leave. Every day, the searing heat steals away a little more of his fishpond. If the fish had a choice, they might go back to Washington with him.

"We're going back on the 30th," Bush said. He later noted that the pond is evaporating but didn't indicate a connection between the early return and the evaporation. "Laura wants to get back a day early."

The president and Mrs. Bush originally planned to stay at their ranch through Labor Day but announced last week they would leave Aug. 31 and spend the Labor Day weekend in Washington. Bush didn't elaborate on why the first lady wanted to head back to the White House even earlier.

There are hints that Bush's vacation has worn on his staff.

Because the nearest hotel is more than 30 miles away in Waco, senior White House advisers, Secret Service agents and military aides have been bunking together in a cluster of doublewide trailers across the road from Bush's gated ranch.

Tax cuts, slow economy mix to virtually erase non-Social Security surplus

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush's tax cut and the sluggish economy have combined to virtually erase the projected budget surplus not dedicated to Social Security this year and next, the White House estimated Wednesday.

The Office of Management and Budget projected a fiscal 2001 surplus of $158 billion, only $1 billion above the tax receipts that flow to Social Security. The revision is $123 billion less than the last estimate in April but the surplus still will be the second-largest ever.

The forecast envisions a similarly tiny non-Social Security surplus of $1 billion in fiscal 2002, which begins Oct. 1. That represents a $58 billion drop from the April estimate, for an overall surplus of $173 billion next year that is almost entirely Social Security.

Despite the reductions, White House Budget Director Mitch Daniels said, the government's fiscal health is sound even as the economic woes continue. "The nation is awash in money, and it will be," Daniels said.

The new figures for fiscal years 2001 and 2002 will add fuel to Democratic charges that Bush's 10-year, $1.35 trillion tax cut is squandering the surplus.

"I see no more irresponsible act than that of the Bush administration's tax cut," Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who chairs the Senate Appropriations Committee, said in an interview Tuesday. "It was a tax cut based on faulty projections."

Republicans, led by the president, retort that even with the economic slowdown plenty of money is available for the tax cut, to meet government spending needs and to protect Social Security and Medicare. The OMB predicts that economic growth will pick up next year, partly due to the stimulus provided by the tax cut, which in turn would boost government revenues.

"We cut the taxes. It was the right thing to do," Bush said Tuesday during a visit to Independence, Mo. "It was the right thing to do for our economy."

Some key points in the OMB budget outlook:

—The economic downturn will reduce government revenue by $148 billion over the next 10 years, mainly in lower income and corporate taxes in the early years. But an improving economy will increase revenue in 2005 and beyond, leading to an overall upward revision of almost $74 billion for the decade.

—The 10-year surplus is forecast at $3.1 trillion, of which $2.5 trillion is Social Security. That leaves $575 billion for spending or tax cuts, down from $850 billion forecast in April. The total surplus before the tax cuts or other spending was pegged at $5.6 trillion.

—The administration is proposing a 10-year, $198 billion increase in defense spending and an extra $37 billion over the decade for a Medicare overhaul, including a prescription drug benefit.

—Growth in the nation's gross domestic product, estimated at just 1.7 percent in 2001, is projected to improve to 3.2 percent in 2002 and remain above 3 percent for the balance of the decade. The tax cuts and interest rate reductions by the Federal Reserve should improve the economy dramatically, the OMB says.

—The fiscal 2001 bottom line was fattened by an estimate from the Treasury Department that $5 billion in corporate taxes would be paid before Sept. 30, even though the new tax law moved the payment deadline until after the start of fiscal 2002.

The fiscal 2001 surplus figure includes an accounting change criticized by Democrats that effectively shifted $4.3 billion from the Social Security trust fund to regular government accounts. This enabled the administration and congressional Republicans to say that, just barely, they kept a promise not to dip into Social Security for other government operations.

But the document also says that further tax relief or spending initiatives beyond those proposed by Bush would have to be offset, either by other spending cuts or by raising other taxes. Republicans say that will force Congress to adhere to strict spending limits that were ignored in previous years.

"We must contain spending over the coming year," the OMB document says.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office, whose estimates Congress must follow, plans to release its own surplus update next week. Many analysts on Capitol Hill expect the CBO to show that a small portion of the Social Security surplus will be diverted to other government purposes this year.

"The president needs to present a new budget and explain how he will work with Congress to solve this mess of his own making," said House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo.

On Medicare, the OMB update estimates a $32 billion surplus for Part A, which pays hospital costs. That surplus will be shifted to cover unpaid costs such as doctor bills from the program's Part B. Without that money and other cash from general government accounts, the White House estimates, Part B would face a $48 billion shortfall this year.

Democrats contend that this still amounts to a raid on Medicare — Part B always has been paid for with general revenue — breaking a bipartisan commitment to keep both Medicare and Social Security walled off in a so-called "lock box." Republicans say that's a distortion.

Touchdown: Three spacefarers back on Earth after 167-day mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Discovery glided to a landing Wednesday, bringing home three spacefarers who spent nearly six months aboard the international space station.

Russian cosmonaut Yuri Usachev and his American crewmates, Susan Helms and Jim Voss, were weak and wobbly after spending so much time in weightlessness but managed to walk off the shuttle, instead of being carried off on stretchers.

Shuttle commander Scott Horowitz reported that all three were doing great.

"In fact, we were surprised," Horowitz said after he and the six others who returned aboard Discovery left the shuttle. "It looked like they were doing a little better than us when we got off the vehicle today, so they're real troupers. They had a great mission."

Their homecoming was delayed 1 1/2 hours by dark clouds and rain near the landing strip.

The midafternoon landing ended a 167-day mission for Usachev, Helms and Voss, just 21 days shy of NASA's space endurance record. They circled Earth about 2,600 times and logged 70 million miles during the adventure.

About 300 people gathered along the Kennedy Space Center runway to welcome back Discovery and, in particular, the space station's second resident crew.

Among the well-wishers: the wives and daughters of Usachev and Voss and the parents of Helms, who is single. Usachev's daughter is 12, Voss' is 21.

The three former space station residents face at least six weeks of medical tests and rehabilitation, beginning immediately. Despite daily exercise in orbit, their muscles and bones were weakened by weightlessness and their immune systems were depressed.

To ease the jolt of gravity, Usachev, Helms and Voss came back lying on reclining seats. Doctors and rescue crews were standing by to help them off the shuttle, just in case.

Discovery also delivered a fresh crew to the space station: American commander Frank Culbertson and two Russians, Vladimir Dezhurov and Mikhail Tyurin. They will remain on the space station until December. NASA's next shuttle flight, by Endeavour, will be their ride home.

Discovery dropped off more than five tons of gear at the space station during its 12-day flight and brought back two tons of dirty clothes, empty food containers, packing foam and discarded equipment.

During their space station stay, Usachev, Helms and Voss took delivery of a robot arm and an air lock and overcame repeated computer problems. They also entertained the world's first paying space tourist, California millionaire Dennis Tito.

Teen-age girls fleeing fundamentalist sect to avoid polygamy

By C.G. Wallace
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — One of the first things Caroline Cooke did after she escaped from her polygamist community was cut her knee-length hair to an above-the-shoulder bob. She also traded her full-length dresses for sleeveless shirts and shorts.

They were radical and symbolic moves for the 15-year-old girl who walked away from her family and religion, which encourages pioneer-style long hair and long dresses for women.

Cooke left the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, one of the country's largest polygamist groups, four months ago because she feared she soon would be married to a man three times her age who already had more than a dozen wives.

"I just feel free. I get to listen to music, to watch TV, to look on the Internet. For the first time in my life I get my own room," said Cooke, who now lives with her uncle's family in rural southwestern Colorado.

The situation of girls such as Cooke has gotten more attention as a result of the case against polygamist Tom Green, who does not belong to the fundamentalist church. Green, 52, was convicted in May of keeping five wives in Utah's first polygamy prosecution in nearly 50 years.

Green, 52, is scheduled to be sentenced Friday. He could get up to 25 years in prison.

He is also awaiting trial on charges of child rape stemming from his marriage to a young woman in Mexico, apparently when she was 13. She is pregnant with her seventh child.

Members of the Mormon church brought polygamy to the West when they settled Utah more than 150 years ago. The church renounced polygamy in the 1890s and now excommunicates those who practice it. But some groups and individuals — including the FLDS church — say they are adhering to early Mormon tradition. Estimates put the number of polygamists in the West at 30,000.

Life within the closed FLDS fundamentalist community is strict, and women have little say about their futures, Cooke said. Almost all the teen-age girls in the group are married at 16 to men much older.

Cooke said FLDS leaders found out about her secret 18-year-old boyfriend, who was promptly kicked out of the group. But for girls, it is harder to leave.

"They want as many girls as they can get," she said.

Cooke has not been in school since she was in sixth grade and has only been educated in schools run by polygamists, she said. Now she nervously awaits her first day in public school on Sept. 1.

She said she has no regrets. However, her decision has meant estrangement from her polygamist parents and 26 brothers and sisters.

"I just feel free. I get to listen to music, to watch TV, to look on the Internet. For the first time in my life I get my own room."
— Caroline Cook

While Cooke adjusts to her new life, another 15-year-old girl is making her case in Salt Lake juvenile court to leave the same polygamist community.

In addition, an older sister of 14-year-old Ruby Jessop is claiming the teen is being held against her will inside the FLDS community in Utah. Flora Jessop said her sister was forced into a marriage with her stepbrother.

The FLDS church, governed by Rulon Jeffs, is said to have as many as 12,000 members. It is headquartered in the Salt Lake City suburb of Sandy, but its members dominate the remote stateline towns of Hildale, Utah, and Colorado City, Ariz.

Scott Berry, the group's Salt Lake City-based attorney, was out of town and unavailable for comment, a secretary said.

Todd Minchey, a regional director with the Utah Division of Child and Family Services, said when girls leave the tightlipped polygamist communities, it is rare that the outside world hears about it. He thinks these cases are getting more attention now because of the Green case.

Cooke said being a part of the polygamist community was like living in a foreign country, though she spent the past six years in Salt Lake City.

Diana Hollis, an investigator in the Utah Attorney General's criminal division whose job is to look into these closed societies, has childhood memories of trying to peer inside a neighbor's polygamist household.

"I'd look through the knotholes in the fence that surrounded the home and say, 'I wish those kids would come out and play with us,'" she said. "Who would have thought I would still be looking through the knotholes?"

Tickets selling quickly for $200 million jackpot

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The Rev. Clarence Dameron figured his odds of winning a $200 million lottery jackpot were a little better than those of the average player.

"The Lord knows my heart," he said as he stood in line at a Des Moines convenience store, waiting to buy tickets for Wednesday night's drawing in the multistate Powerball game. "I could do a lot for the Lord."

Around the country, in Washington, D.C., and the 21 states where Powerball is played, people snapped up tickets in hopes of hitting the jackpot, despite odds of only 1 in 80 million.

The biggest Powerball jackpot ever is the $295.7 million won in 1998 by a group of factory workers in Ohio. The richest lottery prize in U.S. history is the $363 million Big Game jackpot, won last year by two players in Illinois and Michigan.

"I would do so much for this community," Dameron said, describing a ministry house that would provide food and shelter to those who need it. "Everyone would be happy."

HELP: Bynum on force for 22 years

(From 1A)

cers determined Ms. Bynum's claim of a drive-by shooting was unfounded. They determined that she had shot herself with her service revolver.

On Tuesday, Ms. Bynum submitted her resignation after 22 years on the Midland Police force.

In a Wednesday afternoon interview with the Reporter-Telegram, Ms. Bynum said she is facing her mistakes, and wants to get the "medical help" she says she needs.

"I made a grave mistake, and we all do," Ms. Bynum said. "The goal now is to get back on my feet and get back to 100 percent. My main concern is I want the public to know I'm very sorry for violating my code of ethics. I've got to get the help that I need."

She declined to elaborate.

She acknowledged it was unlikely she would ever be able to return to the police force, adding she feels she has disappointed her fellow officers.

In fact, she said her resignation was prompted because she felt so guilty about disappointing the men and women with whom she had served for more than two decades.

"The reason for my resignation was basically for my fellow officers that I served side-by-side with ... for their safety and well-being. I have no ill will against the MPD," Ms. Bynum said.

Ms. Bynum began with the MPD as a secretary at age 19 after earning an associate's degree in Applied Science from Midland College. She advanced to officer status rapidly within the city's police department.

Her home has proud displays of her years in law enforcement. A wall in her living room is covered with certificates and honors from various law enforcement agencies. In the center is a copy of an article on a plaque from a Sept. 24, 1998 edition of the Reporter-Telegram honoring the retirement of her police canine, Cody.

Ms. Bynum said her resignation came after she was told on Friday by Midland Police Chief John Urby she was being terminated. Ms. Bynum said she did not hold a grudge.

"He was just doing his job," she said.

Ms. Bynum hopes to remain in Midland, where, she said, she has received much support from her family and friends.

"I've got a lot of friends' support. I've got a lot of officers' support. The department was good to me over the years. I'm sorry I let the citizens down. I didn't waste my 22 years (on the force), because I know I touched a lot of human beings," Ms. Bynum said, occasionally fighting back tears.

RESIGN: Officers reprimanded for not reporting prior incident

administrative suspension with pay at this time."

Urby has been out of town since the weekend and has been unavailable for comment.

Ms. Bynum, 42, told fellow police officers she was watering her front lawn when two men drove by in a pick up and shot her. On Aug. 14, Urby confirmed suspicions within the department revealing Ms. Bynum shot herself.

If presented to the grand jury and an indictment is returned, Ms. Bynum could face the possibility of a fine, jail time and probation if found guilty.

At the time of the incident, police said they were investigating the case as a drive-by shooting and labeled Ms. Bynum the possible "revenge target" from cases she had been involved with in the past.

This was not the first time Ms. Bynum had been in official trouble with the department.

She was reprimanded along with six other officers in 1999 after a March 21 incident where her gun was discharged in her home.

After further investigation of that incident, those fellow officers were reprimanded for not reporting the incident soon enough.

COMBEST: County has three representatives

(From 1A)

As it stands now, Midland County is represented by three different representatives — Combest, Lamar Smith (R-San Antonio in the 21st district) and Henry Bonilla (R-San Antonio in the 23rd district).

District 19 starts at the northern section of Midland County and extends north to the top of the Panhandle.

Proposed congressional maps are being submitted to courts in Harris and Travis counties. The courts are expected to look at the maps, draw their own lines for proper redistricting and send them to the Justice Department for its approval.

Having three congressmen represent at least some portion of Midland County has drawn mixed reviews in the past.

There are some who think Midland is getting three representatives for the price of one. Still, having one representative does make more sense to others.

"Strategically, there is probably an advantage from having one congressman representing Midland County and that seems to be the goal of redistricting," said Chad Weaver, Senate District 31 member of the State Republican Executive Committee.

Combest said, "I think there is more of a common interest with Midland, Odessa and Lubbock than Midland, Odessa and San Antonio."

Congressional redistricting could be similar to statewide efforts of the Legislative Redistricting Board. In addition to a Midland-Odessa union, it appears Big Spring might be added to the district. Statewide, Republicans would take control, continuing another redistricting trend.

Currently, there are 17 Democrats and 13 Republicans in Congress. Combest said Wednesday, there could be a 10-seat switch.

"All maps I have seen — because of the growth of the Republican Party across the state — the Republicans are gaining seats, anywhere from six to eight," Weaver said. "Regardless of whichever map is approved by the Justice Department, the Republicans will have the majority of the congressional delegation in the state of Texas."

Larry Combest
Party: Republican
District: 19

Elected to Office: 1984

Henry Bonilla
Party: Republican

Elected to Office: 1992
Notes: Bonilla's election marked the first time a Hispanic Republican was elected to Congress from Texas... Member of House Appropriations Committee...

COMBEST NOTES:

Combest addressed numerous topics during the luncheon, including Texas' growing Republican Party and the nation's energy policy ... Combest, who called U.S. Congressional District 19 — the most Republican in the nation — said Texans should get used to a Republican Texas ... He also said the country is being filled with misinformation concerning President Bush's energy policy. "This administration has had the most realistic look at energy of any administration ever," Combest said ... Among the misconceptions, he said, included those involving the Alaskan Native Wildlife Refuge (ANWR). "The Alaskan Native Wildlife Refuge is 19 million acres. That is the size of South Carolina," Combest said. "The size of the drilling area they will disrupt in that area is half as large as Dulles Airport ... Unfortunately, the facts don't always matter and people don't have to know something about a subject to form an opinion."

HOWARD: Bivin's mother cancels event

(From 1A)

congressional district with Midland, Odessa and Lubbock and away from its current U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm (D-Abilene). Stenholm has represented Big Spring since 1979.

"We've been slapped three times," said Frances Wheat, who works in Duncan's Big Spring office.

Duncan isn't very happy about it either. He never was. On July 24, he made a last-minute effort to get Howard County back into his district and move Gray County (Pampa) back into District 31. His amendment was shot down, and Gray was moved out of the district where it has resided since the 1920s.

On Wednesday, Duncan said members of the LRB — specifically Land Commissioner David Dewhurst, Attorney General John Cornyn and Comptroller Carole Keeton Rylander who voted for the plan — owe West Texas residents an explanation.

"Somebody ought to stand up and say 'wait a minute,'" Duncan said. "'LRB members, what about West Texas? Are we so loyal that we will support you, or do you need to listen to us?'"

Duncan wouldn't go as far as Amarillo's Betty Lowell, the mother of District 31 State Sen. Teel Bivins. Ms. Lowell canceled a Republican fundraiser in Amarillo for Cornyn.

"What I am telling people is they have to answer questions before the people in West Texas consider supporting them," Duncan said.

Duncan wants answers, too.

He believes Big Spring has more in common with sister cities along the Ports-to-Plains trade route (San Angelo and Lubbock) than it does with Midland and Odessa. He says judging by the appeals of the Howard County citizenry, they want the same thing.

"There is no problem with Midland and Odessa wanting to get together," Duncan said. "That is their prerogative to increase their ability to have influence in the Texas Senate. What becomes questionable is the process. Decisions were made over objections.

"I think if the courts look at this and determine that statewide there were problems or issues, I think there is a good chance Senate districts and House districts will be drawn again," Duncan added.

Howard County has added its name to state and federal lawsuits already in progress. They joined the battle to change their lines one week after Bivins came to Amarillo to announced his intent to run for reelection of District 31.

"We are not mad at Sen. Bivins and we're not mad at District 31. That's not it," Ms. Wheat said. "Howard County is more like Lubbock and San Angelo. We like where we are."

BUSH: President speaks with Vicente Fox

(From 1A)

Some aides chuckled knowingly when Bush, during a business outing to Missouri on Tuesday, referred to this month as "the so-called vacation."

Bush spoke with Mexico President Vicente Fox on Wednesday about the economy in Argentina, which is suffering a financial meltdown.

The two leaders talked about how to help Argentina handle its debt, said Bush spokesman Ari Fleischer. Bush wants to help the country help itself, Fleischer said.

The International Monetary Fund has agreed to offer Argentina an additional $8 billion in loans, which will bring to $22 billion the amount of IMF help available to help the country.

Before he returns to Washington, the president will meet with Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Air Force Gen. Richard Myers. On the agenda: Rumsfeld's continuing reviews of military forces and the U.S. nuclear strategy.

Fleischer also said Bush has decided who will be the next Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman, but declined to comment on who had been selected. White House aides said Myers is Bush's likely choice but cautioned that the decision was not final.

Kinship counts in a variety of federal jobs offered to fresh faces

By Calvin Woodward
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In Washington, it's not just who you know, but who's your dad.

Among the tens of thousands of names in the mix for presidentially appointed jobs, some have stood out: A Rehnquist. A junior Strom Thurmond. A Scalia. A Powell.

A cousin from President Bush's family. The vice president's son-in-law.

And more close relatives of prominent Republicans or the otherwise well-connected.

Going over the list, an expert in presidential appointments observes that most of the kin are qualified in their own right. But the mere fact of being related surely helped some get noticed in the first place.

"The whole game in Washington," says Paul Light of the Brookings Institution, "is how do you get your name in play?" A famous name is one way.

Sen. Strom Thurmond put J. Strom Thurmond Jr.'s name in play for U.S. attorney for South Carolina. Bush obliged with a nomination, and the 98-year-old senator's 28-year-old son is expected to be confirmed despite his striking inexperience and — by the standards of his peers — his tender years.

"Has my father helped me get this far in this process?" asked the younger Thurmond. "Of course he has. But he can't do the job for me."

The younger Thurmond has prosecuted seven cases on his own in his two years as an assistant state's attorney in Aiken County.

"That's a really itty bit of experience," said Mary Cheh, a law professor at George Washington University.

Sen. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., meanwhile, is promoting his son David's nomination for a lifetime job as a federal judge. He is also expected to be confirmed, despite falling a little short of the experience recommended by the American Bar Association.

In senior levels of the Washington-based bureaucracy, family ties are a persistent undercurrent but by no means the strongest one.

A much larger phenomenon has been the growth of a Washington political class whose members are either working in government or ready to come on board when the White House changes hands.

Despite Bush's tendency to disparage the ways of the nation's capital, by Brookings' count, 55 percent of his appointees lived inside the Washington Beltway when he selected them. Other recent presidents have also depended heavily on the Washington circle.

"The best experience, to become a presidential appointee, is to have been a presidential appointee in a previous administration," Light said.

So it may be no surprise that younger generations in some families long known to Washington are rising in government.

Here, Bush, himself the son of a president, has picked:

■ Janet Rehnquist, daughter of Chief Justice William Rehnquist, to be inspector general at the Health and Human Services Department. She's an assistant U.S. attorney who was an associate White House counsel for Bush's father.

■ Eugene Scalia, son of Justice Antonin Scalia, to be the Labor department's top lawyer. He's a leading Washington labor attorney who faces Democratic resistance because of some of his views.

■ Michael Powell, son of Secretary of State Colin Powell, as Federal Communications Commission chairman. A former antitrust lawyer in the Justice Department, he was nominated as a commission member by President Clinton.

"These are folks who likely would have been considered for something sooner or later," Light said, no matter what their names are.

But with 50,000 to 70,000 resumes vying for roughly 3,000 Bush appointments, kinship counts, too.

It always has. President Kennedy named brother Robert attorney general and brother-in-law Sargeant Shriver director of the Peace Corps. Dozens of families have had at least two generations of diplomats.

Not long before his death, Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall asked that his son John be considered as a U.S. marshal. Clinton saw to it, later promoting him to head of the Marshals Service, and also hired John's brother, Thurgood Marshall Jr., as an aide.

When Bush took office, Philip J. Perry, Vice President Dick Cheney's son-in-law, was placed at the Justice Department. Perry has been elevated to acting associate attorney general, the department's No. 3 job, until another candidate is confirmed.

New York real estate executive Craig Stapleton, a Bush relative by marriage and longtime friend of the president, got a crash course in diplomacy before his confirmation as ambassador to the Czech Republic.

As the younger Thurmond once put it: "Any political appointment is some combination of opportunity and merit."

His dad says it's only nepotism when you hire your family, not when you recommend them.

Kinship counts in government

Some of the fresh faces selected for government jobs by President Bush have familiar names. A look at some of the children of prominent people nominated by Bush.

Sports complex marketing will be key to success

Lee Wood, the former Midland City Council member elected this week to serve as head of the 4b Midland Football-Soccer and Baseball Complex Development Corporation, has indicated emphasis should be placed — now — on marketing the city's new multi-million-dollar venue.

While some members of the complex development corporation are busy worrying about chatter in the community that the project has fallen behind schedule, Wood is correctly trying to focus on the future.

A great deal of the city's resources are tied up in the massive project at Texas Highway 191 and Loop 250. Many of us have watched with great interest the progress of the construction crews. We look forward to the day when we'll see the first RockHounds pitch thrown out and the first football kickoff and the first soccer kick.

The completion date for the facility is August 2002 — one short year from now.

As we have stated many times before, the success or failure of the complex will be measured by how many days the facility is filled with people. If the complex develops into an excitement-generating, capacity-filled revenue machine, questions about budget and construction schedules will quickly fade from memory.

In this week's complex development corporation meeting, Assistant City Manager Tommy Hudson re-iterated the perception the greatest return for major sporting events, concerts, shows and gatherings won't be in revenues for the complex but for the community.

"We don't make our money from the games," he said. "We make our money from the concessions, from local commerce and people staying in hotels. We want to get them to come."

And, of course, it is hoped those crowds will spill over into our city's restaurants, shopping centers and convenience stores, thereby helping to fuel our sales tax receipts.

In November 1999, Midland voters approved a quarter-cent sales tax to pay for construction of the sports complex. Controversy over the cost of the complex triggered mass turnover on the City Council with only Councilman Berry Simpson today remaining from those euphoric days of the November 1999 election victory.

Like Wood, we are concerned a full-scale marketing effort gets up and running. We have asked these questions before:

- Are our city leaders working with groups like the Midland Chamber of Commerce and the Convention and Visitors Bureau to ensure the new facility lives up to its potential?
- Do we feel confident we have a fully coordinated marketing effort in place — including visions that tie in the proposed Midland County Multi-Purpose Facility?
- How will these marketing efforts be funded?

The citizens of Midland want to see the greatest possible return on this investment. A full-scale marketing effort could mean the difference between the facility becoming the jewel of the community or a multi-million boondoggle.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Aug. 23, the 235th day of 2001. There are 130 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 23, 1927, Italian-born anarchists Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were executed in Boston for the murders of two men during a 1920 robbery. (Sacco and Vanzetti were vindicated in 1977 by Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.)

On this date:

In 1754, France's King Louis XVI was born at Versailles.

In 1914, Japan declared war on Germany in World War I.

In 1926, silent film star Rudolph Valentino died in New York at age 31.

In 1939, Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union signed a non-aggression treaty.

In 1944, Romanian prime minister Ion Antonescu was dismissed by King Michael, paving the way for Romania to abandon the Axis in favor of the Allies.

In 1960, Broadway librettist Oscar Hammerstein II died in Doylestown, Pa.

In 1972, the Republican national convention, meeting in Miami Beach, Fla., nominated Vice President Spiro T. Agnew for a second term.

In 1979, Soviet dancer Alexander Godunov defected while the Bolshoi Ballet was on tour in New York.

In 1982, Lebanon's parliament elected Chrisfian militia leader Bashir Gemayel president. (However, Gemayel was assassinated some three weeks later.)

Whiskers or not, Gore is back ready to work

WASHINGTON — He's been plotting his makeover for seven months during a self-imposed political sabbatical. Finally the Democrat who was almost president is poised to present us with the new-new Al Gore.

Means

Resurfacing after a long silence and a European vacation, Gore quickly returned to the political center stage with minimal public activity, wearing a beard and promising to speak next month in politically significant Iowa. His party gave him a mixed welcome, but nobody ignored him.

Gore is unmistakably signaling that he intends to seek the presidency again in 2004. He is running a training school for young political activists, setting up a political action committee to raise money for congressional contenders, planning to teach at two colleges in his home state of Tennessee and accepting speaking invitations on behalf of Democratic candidates. This is the traditional behavior of a politician getting ready for a campaign, although thus far much of what he is doing is behind closed doors.

He was greeted last week by a USA Today-Gallup poll in which 65 percent of the Democrats surveyed said they wanted him to run again. But 72 percent of the Republicans surveyed opposed another Gore campaign either because they don't like the man who won more popular votes than President Bush or because they fear him.

While Gore was out of sight, Bush failed to close the political divisions that split the country so evenly last year and created the election tossup settled by a Supreme Court ruling. Without measuring party affiliation, the USA Today poll reported that 48 percent of those surveyed would vote for Bush and 48 percent would vote for Gore.

Which Gore will emerge in the coming weeks is the subject of much speculation. He has reinvented himself several times, as many successful politicians do. Richard Nixon, for instance, was a master at presenting himself in a new, ever friendlier guise after each electoral setback.

As a senator, Gore had a reputation for policy savvy, a moderate philosophical outlook, legislative diligence and an uptight manner. As vice president, he was seen as liberal, tough-minded and loyal and as a killer debater. As a 2002 presidential candidate, however, his personality was chaotic, his message incoherent, his debate performances unsteady.

He had a tense confrontation with President Clinton that exposed their mutual frustration and resentment and persuaded Gore to ignore his controversial mentor during his presidential campaign. It was a move many Democrats believe was a fatal mistake.

But now Gore is on his own again at last, free of the overpowering Clinton shadow. His beard isn't part of a strategy to help him stand out in a crowd. After five nationwide campaigns, he's one of the most recognizable figures in the country. But it may well be a defiant symbol of new independence. Hair as metaphor.

Not everybody thinks the country is ready for a bearded presidential candidate. But the bristly gray appendage is growing on many of us, figuratively speaking. My first reaction was to recoil in horror. But the more I see it, the more I like it. It just takes getting used to.

When former President Jimmy Carter's popularity fell in the middle of his term, he changed the part in his hair to give himself a new look. It had no effect on his fortunes. He was not re-elected.

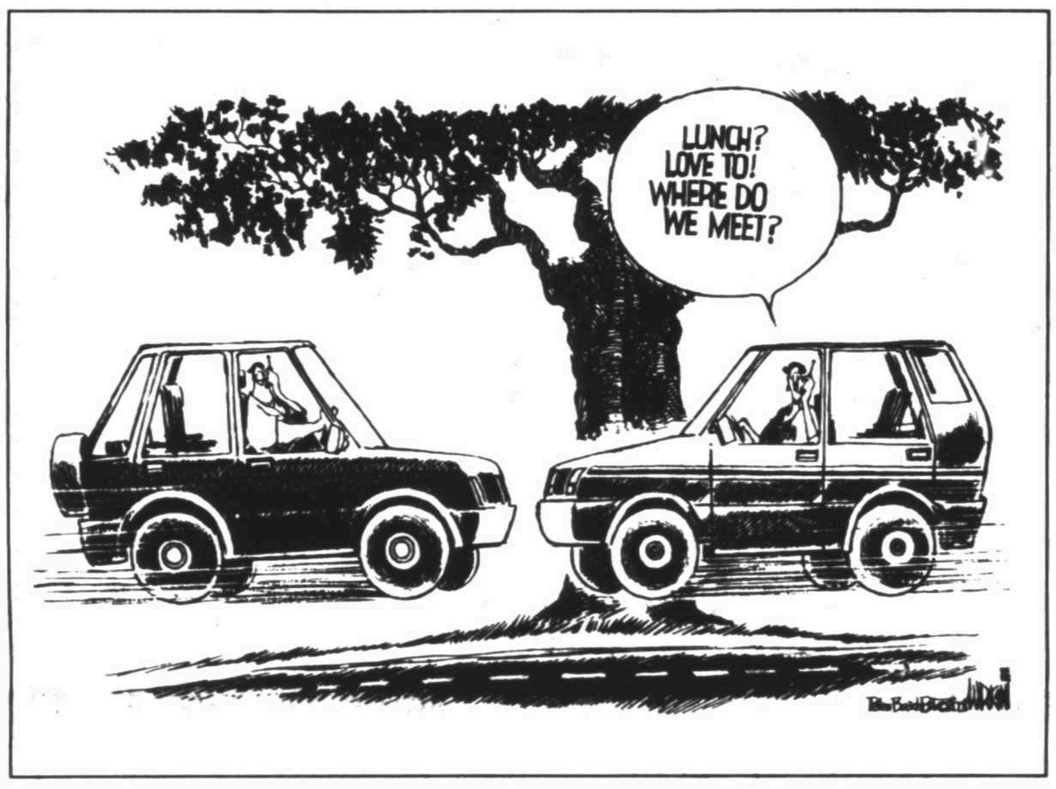

But a beard grown during his 1860 presidential campaign worked fine for Abraham Lincoln, our most famous bewhiskered president. An 11-year-old girl named Grace Bedell had written to the candidate suggesting that he might be better looking behind some facial shrubbery. Lincoln wrote back, "It might look like a piece of silly affectation if I began raising whiskers."

But he stopped shaving anyway and even kissed the little girl upon finding her in a crowd at a campaign train stop. "I let these whiskers grow for you, Grace," he told her in a loud voice that accompanying reporters could overhear.

Lincoln's whiskers caused an instant uproar in the press with the nation's newspapers taking heated sides on the subject. One writer complained that "this dreadful young person" had adopted "the ill-designed hairy ornamentation which ... hid the really beautiful modeling of his jaw and chin." Another paper liked the whole episode, headlining a story "Old Abe Kissed by Pretty Girl."

The Gore whiskers are an interesting experiment even if they do not last until the next presidential campaign. Perhaps he is thinking that if he sounds more composed and confident when he begins speaking out this fall than he did last year, we may compare him with Samson, who also drew strength from facial hair. But then he will be stuck, unable to sheer off his locks if he changes his mind, Delilah or no. We — and he — are better off without such exaggerated imagery. Let's just go with the symbol of independence theory.

With cheap drugs, we might have to close both borders

The skinny is if you go to Tijuana, Mexico, you will get your drugs for 80 percent less than you would pay in the United States. Senior citizens, some on their last legs, are making the trip because it's the only way they can afford their medicine.

Obviously the drug companies don't like the idea because it violates their patents, and also, since some of the drugs are not the real thing, Americans are getting ripped off.

Buchwald

While most Mexican pharmacists are honest, there is a handful interested in making a profit. What they do is buy the drugs from the poorer countries where we give them away or sell them at cost, and they become part of the Tijuana market.

I knew an elderly lady who had just come back from Tijuana when she said to me, "Por favor."

I asked, "How did you find Mexico?"

"It was beautiful. Zoloft for depression was on sale for 10 cents a pill, and they were practically giving away Procardin for heart troubles. I could have stayed there all week."

"Did you see any of the country?"

"I went to another pharmacy at a mall, but they didn't want to give me Allegra for my allergies unless I bought a case of Crest toothpaste."

"What's wrong with that?" I asked.

"The Crest was no cheaper than it is in the states."

I asked the lady if she didn't think that Mexican gangsters were in the business.

She said, "I don't care as long as they give me a good parking place."

"They say thousands and thousands of Americans go there every day."

"They do. I hate the ugly Americans who throw their dollars around to the Mexicans. It's one thing to get your medicine, but it's another to make fun of their money."

I also talked to a spokesman for one of the largest drug companies in the United States.

He said, "It's not fair for people to buy drugs in Tijuana that they can't afford to buy in the United States."

"Of course it is."

"What hurts is that we advertise in this country, people see the ads, and then buy in Mexico."

"There is no way to compete with pharmaceuticals south of the border."

"Our drugs take millions of dollars to develop and the patents run out in such a short time. Then we have to battle the generics. I don't know one Mexican who is worried about generics."

I said, "I don't either. Do you think we should close the borders to America?"

"That's not a bad idea. The United States is the most powerful country in the world and we should teach them a lesson."

"Canada is also selling medicine on the cheap."

"Of course, and there is no reason we shouldn't close that border too."

Technology helps in fight against crime

SAN DIEGO — Like virtually every modern advance of technology, computers have entered the arsenals of, and expanded the opportunities for, criminal enterprises. The telegraph, telephone, camera, automobile, typewriter (remember how the "fingerprint" of Alger Hiss' Woodstock typewriter helped convict him) — these and other technologies increased the range of old criminal activities and the variety of new ones. Now law enforcement must respond to the permeation of society by computers, and computer skills, which are giving rise to law-enforcement problems much more complex than those posed by Dickman.

Will

On a mesa near the intersection of Interstates 15 and 8 — that is how Southern Californians describe things, with reference to freeways — stands the local FBI headquarters, across the street from which, in a modern glass building, is a potentially powerful weapon in the endless war against the ever-evolving problem of crime. The weapon is the Regional Computer Forensic Laboratory (RCFL), which is shared by the FBI and 13 other agencies from 19 Southern California jurisdictions.

Bill Gore, special agent in charge of the FBI's office here, says that where computers are concerned, there are not a lot of new crimes, there are mostly old ones committed with new techniques. For example, companies' proprietary information often is stored in, and hence stolen from, computers rather than files.

However, with schools teaching keyboarding in kindergarten, computer literacy is becoming nearly universal. Hence, America has, at least technologically, a more intellectually up-scale criminal class, one capable of more sophisticated offenses. For example, The Washington Post recently reported on how criminals exploit widespread security lapses of financial institutions to commit "identity theft."

More than 500,000 cases a year make this Information Age opportunity one of the fastest-growing white-collar crimes. The Post reports that James Jackson of Memphis selected some prominent people from "Who's Who in America" and bought dossiers on them — including Social Security numbers and locations of bank accounts — from "information brokers" selling on the Internet. He then inveigled clerks at some banks and other financial institutions to give bank account and credit card numbers, change billing addresses and even, in one case, to wire $300,000 to jewelers, some of them online.

Such crimes are relatively easy to prevent by financial institutions' vigilance. However, crimes facilitated by encryption present more daunting challenges, as in the FBI's dueling with Nicodemo Scarfo, the 35-year-old son of Nicodemo "Little Nicky" Scarfo, a reputed Philadelphia mob boss. The son, an apple that allegedly did not fall far from the tree, is suspected of being an associate of the Gambino crime family and of running a computerized sports-betting and loan-sharking operation in New Jersey.

The Post has reported how the FBI defeated the younger Scarfo's method of protecting his files with an encryption program that can be purchased on the Internet for as little as $50. FBI agents with a search warrant copied Scarfo's computer files but could not unscramble the encryption without the password. So they obtained another warrant and secretly installed on his computer something that records every keystroke.

Defenders of privacy rights, who are also defenders of encryption, worry about such "key-logging" technology — it, too, is commercially available — because law enforcement agencies can install it under search warrants, which are easier to obtain and less restrictive than court-approved wiretaps.

In any case, the "key-logging" surveillance revealed the password. It was nds09813-050 — Scarfo's father's prisoner identification number. Call that filial piety and family values.

Technology evenhandedly serves the nice and the not nice, so law enforcement needs other RCFLs. Since the one in San Diego opened in 2000, foreigners from Singapore to Scotland Yard have visited it. For a pittance, relative to the big-ticket appropriations, this lab can be replicated around the nation, which needs new skills and national protocols for refining, interpreting and making use of computer data germane to law enforcement. Bear in mind Nicodemo Scarfo, one manifestation of computer literacy in the Information Age.

Study discounts link between IUDs and infertility

By Linda A. Johnson
Associated Press

A new study has exonerated the IUD, the birth control device that has been shunned in the United States since the 1970s because of fears it makes women sterile.

The federally funded study found that never-pregnant women who had used a modern intrauterine device had no increased risk of their fallopian tubes becoming blocked. The study suggested that the blockages seen in IUD users were caused instead by chlamydia, a sexually transmitted disease.

"The IUD is much safer than previously thought," said David Hubacher, lead researcher and an epidemiologist at Family Health International of Durham, N.C., a nonprofit research group.

The study does not clear the Dalkon Shield, which started the IUD scare in the 1970s. Unlike other IUDs, it had multiple filaments that dangled from the device to let women know it was in the correct position. Doctors believe the filaments let bacteria climb easily into the uterus. The Dalkon Shield was not studied in this latest research and was taken off the market long ago.

Previous safety studies on IUDs had conflicting results. Many linking the devices and infertility had no comparison group, or they compared IUD users with women whose birth control method protected against sexually transmitted diseases.

The latest study was conducted in Mexico, where IUDs are widely accepted, and was funded by the National Institutes of Health and U.S. Agency for International Development. It was reported in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

The researchers found that IUD users whose blood had antibodies indicating prior infection with the chlamydia bacteria were 2.4 times more likely to have blocked tubes than women never infected.

IUD usage

A periodic national survey on family planning methods shows how IUD use rose rapidly and then plummeted after the Dalkon Shield was linked to pelvic infections, infertility and other serious side effects.

The intrauterine device (IUD) is a small plastic device placed inside the uterus to prevent pregnancy, which works by disrupting the uterine lining.

SOURCES: National Center for Health Statistics; Medline — AP

Dr. Felicia Stewart, co-director of the Center for Reproductive Health Research and Policy at University of California at San Francisco, said the results are solid and part of "a gradually building consensus" IUDs do not cause infertility.

She called them a good option for women who are in monogamous relationships and thereby run a low risk of sexually transmitted infections. But she said women should consider condom use, choose partners wisely and get tested for chlamydia.

Dr. Gerson Weiss, chairman of obstetrics, gynecology and women's health at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey in Newark, said he is not ready to clear IUDs.

"What this really says is, it's not a major issue," he said.

The copper IUD, a T-shaped piece of plastic wrapped in copper wire, slowly releases copper, preventing pregnancy by irritating the uterine lining and altering fluid in the uterus and fallopian tubes. Some new versions release contraceptive hormones.

IUDs are 99 percent effective and last 10 years. They cost about $350, including the insertion procedure.

About 4 million Dalkon Shields were sold from 1971 through 1974, when U.S. sales were halted because the design was blamed for painful, sexually transmitted uterine infections resulting in infertility, hysterectomies, ectopic pregnancies and at least 18 deaths.

Manufacturer A.H. Robins & Co. of Richmond, Va., was deluged with lawsuits, filed for bankruptcy protection in 1985, set up a trust fund for injury claims and eventually paid about $3 billion to some 200,000 women.

Meanwhile, IUD use fell from nearly 10 percent to about 1 percent of the U.S. contraceptive market today. Yet with 106 million users, IUDs are the world's most prevalent reversible contraception.

Hubacher's group studied women seeking infertility treatment at three Mexico City public hospitals from 1997 to 1999.

Each was X-rayed to determine whether her fallopian tubes were blocked. Studying factors such as past birth control use and previous genital infections, the researchers then compared 358 women with blocked tubes, 953 infertile for other reasons, and 584 pregnant women. The researchers found IUDs were not associated with blocked tubes.

Weiss said younger doctors seeing the results will probably recommend the device to patients.

City marshal killed, set on fire in New York City as he served eviction notice

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman enraged by a city marshal's attempt to serve her with an eviction notice beat him to death and set him on fire, police said Wednesday.

JoAnne Jones, 53, was arrested and charged with second-degree murder in the death of Erskine G. Bryce, 66.

An autopsy showed Bryce was alive when he was set ablaze, said Ellen Borakove, spokeswoman for the medical examiner's office.

He died of blunt trauma to his head and neck, and extensive burns, she said.

Prosecutors obtained a video confession from Jones, who was arrested late Tuesday, First Deputy Police Commissioner Joseph Dunne said.

She was taken to a hospital for chest pains shortly before she was scheduled to be arraigned on Wednesday. It was not known when she was going to appear in court.

Bryce, a marshal for 12 years, went to Jones' Brooklyn apartment to serve an eviction notice Tuesday afternoon. They argued and Bryce followed Jones to the second floor of the building, Dunne said.

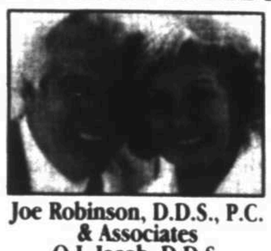

Bryce fell over a banister, probably pushed by Jones, and hit his head, Dunne said.

Jones then beat Bryce on the head with a stick, doused him with a flammable liquid that was nearby and set him afire with his own cigarette lighter, Dunne said.

Mayor Rudolph Giuliani called the murder "horrendous and horrific."

Jones has an arrest record dating to 1970, and served a one-year jail sentence in 1994 for shooting a 14-year-old boy in his groin after the boy allegedly bullied her son.

A law enforcement source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said she had had a rent dispute over her apartment for about two years.

Officials say U.S. will withdraw from ABM treaty if no agreement reached with Russia

By Sarah Karush
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The United States hopes to reach an agreement on missile defense with Russia before a November summit, but is prepared to use its right to unilaterally withdraw from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty if necessary, a top U.S. official said in a Russian radio interview.

U.S. Undersecretary of State John Bolton said Washington would prefer to come to a joint decision with Russia and that he hoped progress would be made before President Bush and Russian President Vladimir Putin meet in November.

The interview was conducted with the Echo of Moscow radio station Tuesday and was to be broadcast Wednesday evening. A Russian translation was posted on the station's Web site, and an English-language transcript was made available to The Associated Press.

The Bush administration proposed that both countries jointly withdraw from the ABM treaty, but the Russian government rejected that approach when it was presented by Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld in Moscow on Aug. 13.

Russia is opposed to dismantling the treaty, which it calls a cornerstone of international security and which prohibits national missile defense systems. But the United States says it will go ahead with building a missile defense system because of potential nuclear threats from countries such as North Korea and Iran.

"If, contrary to what our preference is, we're not able to reach agreement with Russia, then at some point in the not too distant future we would exercise our express right under the treaty to give notice of withdrawal," Bolton said. "But withdrawal, of course, is not violating the treaty."

The treaty allows each side to withdraw from it six months after notifying the other side of its intentions.

The question of withdrawing from the treaty is linked directly to the Pentagon's timetable for accelerating its testing of various missile defense technologies.

At some stage — perhaps next spring or early summer — the Pentagon hopes to begin construction of interceptor missile silos at Fort Greely, Alaska.

Bolton was in Moscow this week as part of a series of consultations that began after Bush and Putin announced in July that missile defense would be linked to talks on cutting the nuclear arsenals of both countries.

The Russian delegation emphasized the need to make cuts in strategic weapons "on the condition that the ABM treaty is preserved in its current form," according to a statement from the Russian Foreign Ministry.

Asked by the interviewer whether U.S. officials were aiming to make progress on the issue before a meeting between Bush and Putin tentatively planned for November, Bolton said that was the hope.

"I would imagine the presidents would be disappointed if by that time we have not achieved significant progress and they won't have anything to talk about at their meeting in Texas," he was quoted as saying.

He added: "The real issue, I think, is the deepening of the political and economic conversations between the two governments, and that alone would be substantial progress. But we'll just have to see what happens by November."

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Rear Adm. Craig Quigley said Wednesday it would be wrong to conclude from Bolton's remarks that the Bush administration has set a November deadline for resolving the treaty issue.

Quigley acknowledged that the Pentagon's missile defense activities planned for 2002 include some that may violate the treaty. But the administration has not decided if it will avoid the violations by withdrawing from the treaty or by altering or delaying the banned activities, he said.

Washington hoped to avoid that choice by reaching an agreement with Moscow to set aside the treaty and create a new security framework under which both sides could pursue missile defenses, he said.

Russian officials repeatedly have complained that they lack concrete information on U.S. missile defense plans, but Bolton said Washington had presented a tremendous amount of information to the Russians about a Defense Department review of offensive weapons and about funding proposals to the U.S. Congress.

"We also have provided a very substantial amount of information about what our ballistic missile development program has already accomplished and what its plans are for the next year or 18 months, elaborating in very considerable details for our Russian counterparts the kinds of systems that we're exploring and the kinds of capabilities that we'll have," Bolton said.

French actor Jean-Paul Belmondo returns home after stroke

PARIS (AP) — Jean-Paul Belmondo, one of France's most beloved actors, checked out of a Paris hospital Wednesday, two weeks after suffering a stroke while on vacation in Corsica.

The 68-year-old star, a gifted athlete who once performed his own stunts, will continue to undergo physical therapy, Saint Joseph hospital said in a statement.

"His remarkable capacity for recovery allowed him to leave as planned and begin outpatient therapy to try to reduce, as much as possible, his initial problems," the statement said.

After the actor fell ill on Aug. 8, various media reports said the actor's face was paralyzed on the right side, or that he was unable to speak. The hospital has not commented on the reports.

The statement said that Belmondo wanted to thank the medical personnel who treated him.

Belmondo's breakthrough role came in Jean-Luc Godard's 1959 film "Breathless," in which he played a debonaire young crook fleeing the police. He went on to become one of France's most popular leading men, starring in dozens of films and plays.

The actor reportedly suffered a mild heart attack in 1999 in the middle of a theater performance.

AG's opinion delayed on Midland County case

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Texas Attorney General John Cornyn's written opinion on an open-records request pertaining to a report on alleged wrong-doing in the Midland County District Attorney's Office apparently has been delayed for a second time.

"We have not yet received a response to our request for an opinion," Midland County Attorney Russell Malm said on Wednesday.

Malm had requested an attorney general's opinion on the release to the press of former Midland County Auditor Carole Wayland's report on alleged misuse of District Attorney Al Schorre's discretionary drug-forfeiture funds by an investigator.

Malm had requested the opinion after the Reporter-Telegram on May 21 of this year asked Ms. Wayland under the Texas Public Information Act for a copy of the report. She had forwarded her report to Schorre and to the Texas Rangers, the investigative arm of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Subsequently, Schorre, the Midland County district attorney since 1985, requested the Texas Rangers investigate the allegations.

Since then, the case, pending any indictments, has been turned over to Sweetwater lawyer Frank Conard, a former Nolan County district attorney, for possible prosecution.

Schorre, 54, had recused himself. And 238th Texas Judicial District Court Judge John Hyde, who is administrative judge of the Midland Judicial District, appointed Conard, 53, as the special prosecutor in the case.

Conard was chief prosecutor for the 32nd Texas Judicial District Court in Sweetwater for eight years from 1989 through 1996.

From the June 5th date that the Cornyn's Open Records Division had received Malm's request, the attorney general had 45 "working days" to issue a written opinion on disclosure of Ms. Wayland's report.

As the deadline approached, Katherine Minter Cary, chief of Cornyn's Open Records Division, on Aug. 8 notified Malm the attorney general took his option of extending the original deadline by 10 working days in order to further "research the legal issues" raised by the open-records request.

The 10-day extension ended on Wednesday, noted a spokesman for the attorney general's Open Records Division, but the opinion had not been released by late that afternoon.

Ms. Wayland, auditor since 1995, is no longer in public office. The Midland Judicial District, which every two years appoints the independent county auditor, named Julie Schumacher, 29, auditor. She took office in late June 2001 when Ms. Wayland exited the office.

In his request to the attorney general, Malm wrote that information requested by the newspaper "may be excepted from required disclosure" under a Texas Government Code provision.

That provision "excepts from required disclosure information held by a law-enforcement agency that deals with the detection, investigation, or prosecution of crime under certain circumstances."

Information barred from disclosure would include information that "would interfere with the detection, investigation, or prosecution of crime," Malm wrote.

Information that the Reporter-Telegram seeks in the case stems from an internal audit of Schorre's Drug Forfeiture Funds from Sept. 30, 1999, to Sept. 30, 2000.

"The (auditor's) report alleges several instances of mismanaged funds and discrepancies in the account and abuse that the report states was committed with intent to obtain a personal benefit," Malm wrote Cornyn.

The case was "properly referred" to the Texas Rangers for investigation "because of the obvious conflict" were the district attorney to probe into the allegations. Texas Ranger Jess Malone was assigned to investigate the case.

The Texas Rangers took the stance that release of the auditor's report "would interfere" with the investigation.

While Malm noted that the Midland County Auditor's Office is "clearly not a law-enforcement agency," he said that Ms. Wayland's audit did "reveal conduct that the auditor believes to be possibly criminal in nature."

UTPB sees rise in enrollment, says more are welcome

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

ODESSA — New University of Texas of the Permian Basin President David Watts said when he entered his office this summer his goal was a 2 percent rise in enrollment. As of the first day of classes Wednesday, the enrollment was nearly 6 percent more than last year at this time — and Watts said it will likely stay that way.

"The only way that would go down is if we don't have the same level of late registers that we have had in previous years, and I think that is highly unlikely," he said. "I think we'll have the same level of late registration that we've had in previous years."

Watts also said classes are still open, and if Permian Basin residents want to get in, they should come on down.

"If you want to register, come on," he said. "We've got classes open, we've got advisors ready to help you, we've got financial aid we can process, we've got emergency loans we can award, and we can get you accepted almost on the spot."

As students and faculty at the UTPB went to their first classes Wednesday morning, the hallways and breezeways were unusually calm.

Despite preliminary numbers suggesting an increase in enrollment of nearly 6 percent, students say the options of early registration have made the process easier, and the lines shorter.

"I'm a sophomore this year, so I registered back in April. I've been done for a long time," said biology/pre-med major Jose Meza. "This semester, all I had to do was handle my financial aid."

Sophomore accounting major Amanda Rodriguez agreed. She said changing her major from biology to accounting over the summer was a little strenuous, but she also worked this summer helping new freshmen with orientation, and said now she knows how to avoid the lines.

"Most of my time was spent getting my financial aid straight," she said. "And after I changed my major, getting into the classes was easy."

UTPB Vice President for Student Services Patricio Jaramillo said as of Wednesday morning there were 2,244 students enrolled, a full 5.9 percent increase over the enrollment as of this time last year.

Now, he said, he just hopes it will stay that way.

"Our goal is to try to achieve a 2 percent increase, and so far, our numbers look pretty good," Jaramillo said. "But you never know how many students will enroll late."

Librarian Michele Kuchel said the university took other steps to help ease the woes of waiting in line. The most beneficial, she said, was the "one-stop-shopping" — placing the identification card booth, the accounting office and representatives of the security office all in one place.

Watts also said if enrollment continues to grow according to his plans, high-tech advancements will help the registration process stay smooth.

"We've already moved to a web-based registration system," he said. "In fact, this is the first semester that we've used our web-based system, and it was a real-life, real-time test. Now, we'll be able to do preregistration by web-based registration, as well as our two-day regular registration period ... The level of growth we can handle using web-based registration — it's difficult to put a proportional number to it, but it's almost infinite."

UT system chancellor announces eventual resignation

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

ODESSA — R.D. Burck, chancellor of the University of Texas System, announced his resignation last week, but the UT system will have a full two years to replace him.

"I strongly believe it is time for the University of Texas system to plan for succession in leadership," Burck wrote in his letter of resignation to the system's board of regents. "Realizing that the selection of a new chancellor may take as long as two years, I am willing to serve as chancellor until Sept. 1, 2003, or such a time as the new chancellor has been selected by the board of regents and is in position to assume the responsibilities of the office."

University of Texas of the Permian Basin President David Watts said the plan for leadership succession is a good one, and well-planned leadership successions in education are not common.

"We have a planned change in leadership, and ... in previous changes in leadership, they have not been this well-planned," he said. "This gives the region and the whole system an opportunity to search nationally, if not internationally, to select the very best candidate for ... one of the world's leading university systems. So the university system is going to have the benefit of his experience and leadership well beyond his announced retirement date."

Teens, bands will 'Rock the Desert'

By Summer Creech
MRT Correspondent

On Saturday, teens will leave behind the homework and "Rock the Desert."

Midland teens will enjoy a free, 12-hour-long rock n' roll extravaganza with nationally known bands such as the Newsboys, The Benjamin Gate, L.A. Symphony, Lane Oliver, Chris Tomlin, Aurora, Among Thorns, Justifide and 3000Plus, a local group. Teens will also hear speakers Matt Chandler, who will be emcee for the event, Brad Fogarty, Joe Beene and Midland Mayor Mike Canon.

The Manna Skateboard Team will also be doing demonstrations in the skateboard area.

Charlie Dodd, the youth minister of First Baptist, said he thought there were several reasons teens will be drawn to "Rock the Desert."

"I think the Christian music is really going to be the biggest draw, but a lot of it is West Texas hospitality," Dodd said.

Lauren Kinsey, 15, said she was looking forward to going to "Rock the Desert."

"I want to go because I love music and I really want to see the Newsboys," Miss Kinsey said.

Clockwise and counter-clockwise: Round and round she goes one way or the other. The digital time pieces are "just there," no character, no romances, no ticking, just changing and repeating without hands.

She: Things of wonder and great affection are accorded the "she" word: Nations among patriots, airplanes among aviators, ships among sailors, automobiles among car aficionados. There she goes.

Keyhole: Peeking through the keyhole or fishing to trip a lock are becoming past fancies (or misdemeanors). The hostelry industry, except, perhaps in places called quaint, has or is converting to the magnetic key cards.

Stick shift, double-clutching, four-in-the floor (or more): Those are among terms applicable to the old standard transmission — the foot-and-hand synchronization of changing gears. Nowadays, the standard seems to be the automatic.

Card Catalogue: The old three-by-five-inch index cards, once the peephole to a library's vast holdings, also were a researcher's notation tool. The computer now stores information electronically.

Outhouse: In the old days in both town and country, it was the place to go when you needed to go. On cold nights, it was the slop jar. Today, mostly, privy is private, sort of esoteric.

Secretary: A secretary is a person or thing, as in a desk with a bookcase, that ideally helps keep things organized and is a priority-setting tool. As duties expand, the he or she secretary is becoming an administrative assistant or aide or, in instances, surrogate.

Partner: Ideally, your partner ought to be your best friend, spouse, sidekick, or mount as in a horse, mule, or donkey. In the business realm, partner suggests an equal sharing in responsibilities, debts and profits. He or she likely won't be a hired hand.

PBX: Back when telephones were wired-up inventions and party lines were extant, the private branch exchange (PBX) operator kept the company phone lines from being too entangled and called you by name.

Party line: Take your pick. But the political meaning, as long as legislators politick, will be around for a long, long time until the rise of Utopia.

Ploughboy: The young farm hand is still around, but teams of mules and workhorses guided by young'uns in America have largely been replaced by the air-conditioned tractor, though there are some open-air plowing or ploughing machines and some, surely still, with the shade of an umbrella.

Edison and Victrola: Those were the days of the old wind-up phonograph and 78-rpm (revolutions per minute) records before the 45-rpm records and the LP (long-playing) record albums came out.

Pshaw, poppycock, balderdash: Oh dear! What can the matter be? Those exclamations today are such mild terms of dismay or shock or dread or disbelief. Who wants to know society's utterances today when what was vulgar today is "acceptable" though still vulgar, obscene or profane.

Genuine, natural, authentic, organic, original, garden-fresh, pure, nutritional, old reliable, enriched, new and improved: What really is may all be in the context and often between the lines. Beware and be aware of spiels and pitches.

Pure ... mostly: That's honesty. In his A Prairie Home Companion, American radio humorist Garrison Keillor touts Powder Milk Biscuits which are, he declares, "pure, mostly."

And all that you see and hear and read is, of course, true, mostly, or maybe not.

UTPB Alumni Association President Violet Singh said although a new candidate has not been announced, she believes the board of regents will pick the right person to lead the university system.

Jack Donald Riggs

Jack Donald Riggs died on August 20, 2001 after a brief illness.

Jack Riggs, a native of Electra, Texas, was born on January 27, 1925, to Alice and William Riggs. His early schooling, including high school graduation, was completed in Big Spring. Jack enrolled at the University of Texas before serving in the Pacific Theatre as a Naval Officer from 1945-1948. Following the war, Jack returned to the University where he was active in student government, Silver Spurs and Chi Phi fraternity. He received a business degree in 1949. That same year he married Margery Sherar in Houston and they moved to Snyder, Texas, where he went to work for Reed Roller Bit. He was hired by Llano Drilling Company in 1951 as Vice President and moved to Midland, Texas. He became President of Llano in 1955. In 1964, Llano was sold and Jack went to work for Forest Oil Corporation as Division Manager of the West Texas Division in Midland. In 1972, Jack and his family moved to London where he was the manager for Forest Oil's North Sea operations. In 1977 he became a director of Forest and returned to Midland, Texas. He retired from Forest Oil in January of 1987.

Jack contributed to his community in numerous ways including service on the board of Trinity School and president of that board and also as a board member and president of the board of the Museum of the Southwest. He was a member of the board of the Texas Commerce Bank and a trustee of Arts Assembly of Midland. Jack was an avid bird hunter and fisherman and collector of American Art. Because of his interest in Texas history he built a fine collection of maps of the Republic of Texas. # Drug warrant recalled for man later charged in Dallas murder

PALESTINE (AP) — An arrest warrant issued for a county commissioner's nephew who violated a plea agreement on a drug conviction was recalled a day before a fatal shooting he's been accused of in Dallas, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

Daniel Patrick Howard, 21, of Dallas and two others were charged Aug. 2 with capital murder in the July 31 shooting death of security officer Dwight Bryant Jr., 32, of Dallas.

Bryant had finished escorting a funeral procession in Dallas when he tried to stop a grocery store robbery and was gunned down on his motorcycle. Accused with Howard are Michael Andrew Nimnic and Carla Lynn Campos.

In August 2000, Howard, the nephew of Anderson County Commissioner Rodney Howard, was assessed five years' deferred adjudication for a drug possession offense, the Palestine Herald-Press reported Wednesday. As part of the plea agreement, Howard had to pay a $2,500 fine and perform 800 hours of community service.

A year later, when he tested positive for marijuana, the district attorney's office filed a motion July 6 to proceed "with adjudication of guilt and sentence." It's unclear if he was jailed then.

But on July 27, the district attorney's office filed a motion to modify conditions of his probation and recall the arrest warrant, which a judge did on July 30. Howard was ordered to be home by 7 p.m. each day and to report to a substance-abuse treatment program.

Anderson County District Attorney Doug Lowe did not return calls Wednesday.

At different times last month, the county commissioner discussed his nephew's drug case with Lowe, assistant District Attorney Daphne Session Castleberry and an employee of the Community Supervision and Corrections Department, officials said.

Gary Thomas, chief investigator in the district attorney's office, said no special favors were extended. The case was handled "by the book," said corrections department director Roy Drewett.

"It's not unusual that parents, grandparents or friends will come talk to us about probationers who have revocation warrants," Drewett told the Herald-Press.

Rodney Howard, the county commissioner, was out of town Wednesday and could not be reached for comment.

Earlier this month, Daniel Howard and another inmate tried unsuccessfully to escape their Dallas jail cell, officials said.

Pilot killed in crash after aborted landing

HUDSON OAKS (AP) — A student pilot was killed Wednesday when a small plane crashed into a tractor-trailer rig on a busy interstate highway after an aborted landing attempt at Parker County Airport, authorities said.

The small plane struck the trailer of an 18-wheel rig on Interstate 20 just north of the runway, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety said.

The driver of the tractor-trailer was not injured in the 9 a.m. crash.

Officials said the wreckage of the plane came to rest in the eastbound lanes of Interstate 20 in Hudson Oaks, about 30 miles west of Fort Worth. Authorities closed the eastbound lanes.

The pilot was identified as Atul Shri, 20, of Haltom City, a member of Aer Mistral Flying School, said Department of Public Safety spokeswoman Lorraine Ronquillo. Shri was the only occupant of the plane.

Prosecutors ask jurors for death penalty for Rivas

By Susan Parrott
Associated Press

DALLAS — Prosecutors seeking the death penalty for the leader of a gang of escaped convicts tried to show jurors Wednesday that 17 previous life sentences couldn't keep George Rivas behind bars.

Rivas was found guilty of capital murder Tuesday in the Christmas Eve slaying of police officer Aubrey Hawkins, who was shot and run over with a car during the robbery of a sporting goods store in Irving.

Rivas faces the death penalty or life in prison.

During testimony Wednesday in the trial's sentencing phase, jurors heard for the first time about the gang's meticulously planned Dec. 13 breakout from the Connally Unit in Kenedy, where they stole a pickup and 16 guns and left a note threatening, "You haven't heard the last of us yet."

Prison guard Alejandro Marroquin testified he was beaten unconscious and feared for his life.

"'Marroquin, if you keep on fighting, I will not hesitate to kill you,'" the guard quoted Rivas as saying.

"I was telling him I'd comply," Marroquin said. "Just don't hurt anyone else."

Patrick Moczygemba, a maintenance supervisor at the Connally Unit, told how the men tricked prison workers into letting them stay in the maintenance department during lunch, then hit him over the head — nearly severing an ear — and tied him up.

Twelve prison workers and three inmates not involved in the plot also were taken hostage as they returned from lunch and were locked in a small electrical room. They managed to free themselves and used their bodies to blockade the door when several of the escapees tried to reenter with a homemade knife.

"They were trying to stab anybody that was standing by the door," Moczygemba said.

When workers held hostage set off a fire alarm, an officer at the central control picket turned off the alarm signal on her control panel after calling the maintenance department and getting no answer.

On cross examination, defense attorney Karo Johnson said the inmates kept their promise not to harm guards if they cooperated and even left ice water in the electrical room.

"It might have been easier to kill you. But that didn't happen did it?" Johnson asked Moczygemba, who quit his job several months later.

Correctional officer Lou Gips testified that when he let Rivas, dressed as a maintenance worker, into a watchtower at the back of the prison, Rivas grabbed a loaded gun off the desk.

"He pointed it at my head and said this was escape. He told me to sit down in a chair and don't try anything or I'd be killed."

Rivas and another escapee then broke into a gun cabinet in the tower and stole more weapons. The two men fled with the other five escapees in a prison pickup. They escaped with a 12-gauge shotgun, an AR-15 rifle and 14 .357-caliber revolvers.

Mary Lynn Berry, a manager of a Pearland Radio Shack, testified about the robbery two days later that authorities say Rivas orchestrated to steal money, walkie talkies and police radio scanners.

"I knew by the cold, hard look in his eye, that if anybody moved he wouldn't kill just one of us, he'd kill all of us."

Dallas County prosecutor Toby Shook, arguing against another life sentence for Rivas, led a deputy sheriff step by step down Rivas' long list of prior sentences.

Prosecutors presented evidence for five days last week, including a confession in which Rivas asked for forgiveness and said he deserves to die for shooting Hawkins. Jurors also heard testimony from robbery victims, forensic experts and the officer's widow.

Defense attorneys have indicated that Rivas may take the stand during the sentencing portion of the trial.

Rivas' attorneys argued that he never intended to kill Hawkins, only to disarm him by shooting him in the shoulders. He said the other escapees joined in the gunfire.

"These guys were just in a panic," said attorney Johnson.

Rivas was the first of the escaped convicts to be tried for Hawkins' murder.

Police supervisor resigns in wake of officer's death

ARLINGTON (AP) — A police supervisor facing demotion in the wake of a fellow officer's shooting death is quitting the force, officials said Wednesday.

Deputy Chief Jerry Kendrick, a 30-year police veteran, was being demoted to lieutenant over the accidental death of Cpl. Joey Cushman during a training exercise June 7.

On Friday, Police Chief Theron Bowman announced his recommendations for Kendrick, who was responsible for overseeing tactical officers, and for four other supervisors investigated in the incident.

Kendrick did not give a reason when he announced his decision at a staff meeting Wednesday, officials said. His last day will be Friday.

Kendrick could not appeal his demotion to the city manager because he was an at-will employee and had been named deputy chief by Bowman, said police spokesman Sgt. James Hawthorne.

Officer Blane Shaw, who fired the fatal shot at Cushman's head, filed an appeal Monday to Bowman's decision to terminate him. Shaw accidentally took his service revolver out of his holster instead of picking up the gun containing fake bullets on a nearby table, police said.

Sgt. Mark Garber, who has been an officer seven years, has appealed his demotion to patrol officer. An internal investigation determined that Garber made the decision to allow instructors to take loaded duty weapons to the exercises.

Bowman recommended a written reprimand for Lt. Roy Mitchell, a 21-year police veteran, and an exoneration for officer Johnny Spruiel, who has nine years of police service.

Amateur filmmaker says police confiscated video of questionable raid

By Kristen Hays
Associated Press

HOUSTON — An amateur filmmaker who was videotaping footage at a southeast Houston bar for a cable access program about the rap music club scene said Wednesday that city police assaulted her and state alcohol officers confiscated her tape during a raid.

Crystal Muhammad of Houston said she was videotaping rappers at Smitty's Sports Lounge on Aug. 18 when a Houston police officer came in the front door with a shotgun, cocked the weapon while pointing it toward the ceiling, and ordered no one to move.

She said TABC officers confiscated her tape and then Houston police officers dragged her through the back door. She was charged with assaulting a police officer, who says she bit him during the melee.

Muhammad also displayed pictures of bruises on her lower back, arm and neck she said were caused by the Houston officers.

"They were snatching and pulling on me," Muhammad said.

Sgt. Tom Dickson with the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission's Houston office said the tape is evidence because it captured underage drinkers at the bar and two men who may have been smoking marijuana.

Houston police spokesman Robert Hurst said Wednesday that the police department's internal affairs division is investigating the incident, so "we are in no position to discuss any information about the allegations that have been made by the complainant."

Dickson said two undercover TABC officers went to the bar that night on a tip that Smitty's was selling alcohol without a liquor license. The officers ordered beers, saw a valid license on the wall, and looked around.

Dickson said the officers smelled marijuana and saw two men pass back and forth what may have been a marijuana cigarette. He said the officers also saw three men drinking who appeared to be underage. They ended up citing three 18-year-old men for underage drinking, but no one was arrested on drug charges.

The undercover officers left the bar and told four other TABC officers about the possibility that underage drinkers and marijuana was inside. Those four officers went back inside and called Houston police for help because the Smitty's crowd exceeded 100, Dickson said.

Muhammad said authorities have ignored her repeated demands that the TABC officers return her videotape, which shows the city officer with a shotgun.

Dickson said Muhammad's videotape is considered evidence in cases involving underage drinking and marijuana use and Muhammad's case. "Until we complete our investigation, it will remain with us as evidence," Dickson said.

George Michael attends friend's wedding in embattled Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel — Braving Mideast turmoil, George Michael attended a wedding at a seaside hotel in Tel Aviv.

The pop singer was the only celebrity to arrive for the Tuesday night nuptials of friend Simon Halfon, a British photographer, and his Israeli bride Anat Browerman, said Orna Goldfeld, a spokeswoman for the Tel Aviv Hilton.

Several celebrities were invited, but Goldfeld said they were frightened off by Israeli-Palestinian fighting, now in its 11th month. She declined to name the famous no-shows.

The Israeli daily Yediot Ahronot said security guards flanked Michael during the wedding. Guards were posted at the entrances to the hotel.

The 38-year-old singer didn't perform at the wedding, but he signed autographs, Goldfeld said. He was scheduled to fly back to Britain late Wednesday.

Israel's entertainment calendar this summer has been notably bleak. Last week, the Red Hot Chili Peppers canceled a concert planned later this month because of security concerns.

LOS ANGELES — Severe bronchitis has forced Stevie Nicks to postpone two concerts while she undergoes treatment.

The former Fleetwood Mac singer was to perform Tuesday and Wednesday at the Universal Amphitheatre.

She first experienced respiratory problems last month as she embarked on the "Trouble in Shangri-La Tour," her publicist, Liz Rosenberg, said Tuesday.

As the tour went on, Nicks' voice grew more hoarse, Rosenberg said.

After an Aug. 17 concert in Santa Barbara, "it's clear that she's not going to get better until she gets off the road and rests for a while," she said.

The 53-year-old singer will undergo tests and treatment in Los Angeles, and hopes to return for a Las Vegas concert Saturday if she responds well to medication, Rosenberg said. The two Los Angeles shows will be rescheduled.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Shania Twain feels like a mother.

The country singer gave birth to a boy, Eja (pronounced Asia), on Aug. 12, according to a publicist who works for a public relations firm representing Twain. He spoke Tuesday on condition of anonymity.

The Grammy-winning country singer and her producer-husband, Mutt Lange, are releasing no information on the baby, including where he was born. The couple lives in Switzerland and Twain is a native of Canada.

She and Lange have been married since 1993. The baby is the couple's first child.

Twain, 35, has sold more than 50 million albums with hits including "Man! I Feel Like a Woman!" "Any Man of Mine" and "That Don't Impress Me Much."

Lange, a rock producer for Def Leppard, Foreigner, Bryan Adams and AC/DC, produced Twain's two hit albums, "The Woman in Me" and "Come on Over," and co-writes with his wife many of Twain's songs.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Tony Danza will be the boss of the year's Miss America Pageant.

The former star of TV's "Who's the Boss?" will be the host of the 81st annual pageant, scheduled for Sept. 22 on ABC.

Danza replaces Donny and Marie Osmond, who were co-hosts the past two years, the Miss America Organization said Tuesday.

The 50-year-old actor was nominated for an Emmy for his guest appearances on the legal drama "The Practice." He co-starred on the sitcom "Taxi" from 1978-83, and on "Who's the Boss?" from 1984-92.

"Tony's charm, enthusiasm and energy perfectly complement the changes we are making in the show," said Bob Bain, the producer of the telecast. "We believe Tony's talent and intelligence will be real assets to our efforts revitalizing and updating the Miss America telecast."

Last week, organizers announced several changes to this year's Miss America Pageant. They're incorporating elements of quiz shows and reality TV, including an opportunity for contestants to help vote for the winner.

LONDON — U2 lead singer Bono lost his father to cancer Tuesday, but took the stage at a London concert hours later, dedicating a song to him from the band's new album.

"I want to thank my old man, my father, for giving me this voice," Bono told the audience. "He was a fine tenor and he always said if I had his voice, who knows what might have happened."

Bob Hewson, 75, had suffered from cancer.

"He's free of all that now," Bono said. "This is a song I wrote for him."

The Irish band performed "Kite," which Bono has said he wrote after taking his two daughters outside to fly a kite.

Bono flew back to Dublin to visit his ailing father, a retired postal worker, nearly every night the band has played in Britain. Performances this week in London and at Slane Castle in Ireland will go ahead as scheduled.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, Aug. 23, 2001:

Your perspective of your home life radically changes because of another's attitude. What seemed like a contest of wills now works itself through. Put more of your time and attention into day-to-day matters. The quality of your life needs to reflect more of you. Think about what you do for work, as well. Once you become more in tune with yourself, you'll greet success. You gain new friends and see unusual new options. If single, you'll meet someone very special through a friend. This person will become a friend and lover. If you are attached, combine your energies, and you can create whatever you want. Develop the friendship between the two of you. SCORPIO loves to tease you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ A reversal transforms into good news, if not immediately, then very soon. Others express confusion. Look at hard facts and details. You're able to enhance your long-term well-being if you seize the opportunity. You run in where others fear to go! Tonight: Suppress the urge to dance about your accomplishments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ Finances will get straightened out, now that someone becomes more willing to "talk turkey." You cannot get out of dealing with a vague associate. Learn how to verify what this person says. These communication skills will help you deal with others. Tonight: Accept an invitation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ You sigh in relief because what you thought was an unresolvable problem settles down. Given space, another accepts your thinking. Deal with lawyers, writers and different publishers. Swap ideas, and you'll make money. Tonight: Consider a different exercise routine.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★★ You have a sixth sense for others' mood changes. You easily could know others' moods before they do. You can use this knowledge to your advantage. Establish greater clarity at work about what is expected. Tonight: How 'bout an old -fashioned date?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ It is time to be flexible with a child or loved one. This person will respond, but only if given the space. Someone puts you on a pedestal. Be the real you, and help this person see you clearly. Tonight: Let someone indulge you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★★ Your personality shines in the company of a family member. Expressing your own personal style when with others sometimes might be difficult. The tone of a discussion with a loved one changes, once you express your caring and nurturing side. Tonight: Visit with a pal.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★ Though you hate being materialistic, the bottom line is that you need money to make your life work. Use your skills to make money, but don't live for it, either. Review a decision that involves a neighbor or sibling. Chaos hides something you might not want to see. Tonight: Treat someone to a favorite restaurant.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★★ Put another's ideas into play as you tackle issues surrounding your budget. It also might be time to put on your rose-colored glasses. Tonight: Another is not a mind reader. Ask.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★ What you might not have understood becomes a lot clearer. Pluto, the planet of transformation, goes direct. This allows you to yield more power and understanding in your personal life. Zero in on what you want. Stop the hemming and hawing. Tonight: Do some thinking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★★ Gain comes through others, groups and meetings. Though you like to be independent, you cannot walk away from your need for others. Accept another's admiration and loving. You'll be a lot happier. Worry less about spending right now. Tonight: Aim for your desires.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★ What you are hearing might not make sense to you, but on the other hand, what you are saying might be gibberish to another. Demonstrate your feelings through actions and someone will hear. Push through and complete a boring task that others won't do. Tonight: Work as late as needed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Make it your business to explore options rather than saying yes or no. If you aren't satisfied, dig into that creative well of yours for different approaches. A relationship might be taking a turn that makes you a little nervous. Be open. Tonight: Check out some information on the QT.

Opening lead: Ten of ◇ Study the bidding and play to this deal. Should four hearts have been defeated, or was there a way for declarer to make the contract? If so, how?

Note North's raise to two hearts. With the king of spades equal to the ace in light of the bidding, three reasonably good cards in support of partner, and a queen of unknown value, the raise is fully justified. With a terrible holding in spades, South's jump to game is a bit pushy. We would prefer a game try in diamonds, which North should accept because of the length in the trial suit.

West led the 10 of diamonds, covered by the jack and queen and won with the ace. Trumps were drawn in three rounds, and the three of diamonds was led to the seven and eight. East shifted to the jack of clubs, declarer played low, and West won with the king. Declarer still had to surrender tricks to the ace of spades and king of diamonds — down one.

It all looks perfectly normal, yet South made an egregious error at trick one which cost the contract. Look at what would happen if declarer should play a low diamond from dummy instead of covering the 10.

East cannot afford to insert a high diamond, and South lets the 10 hold the trick. West, who is marked with the ace of spades and king of clubs for the overcall, cannot shift to a black suit, because that gives declarer the contract; therefore, he must exit with a trump. Declarer wins in dummy and draws two more rounds of trumps, then plays ace and another diamond to clear out the defenders' winner in the suit. When East shifts to a club, declarer rises with the ace and cashes out the diamonds for a club discard. Declarer still must surrender a trick to the ace of spades, but that is the third and last trick for the defense.

NATO authorizes troops for Macedonia, could begin collecting arms

By Jeffery Ulbrich
Associated Press

BRUSSELS, Belgium — NATO authorized deployment of 3,500 troops to Macedonia on Wednesday and could begin collecting weapons from ethnic Albanian rebels early next week in its latest foray trying to bring stability in the Balkans.

Troops started moving almost immediately, with the first French soldiers of the main force arriving in the capital Skopje on Wednesday afternoon, joining the 400 communications and headquarters personnel already on the ground.

NATO officials said complete deployment probably would take 10 days to two weeks, but the job of collecting rebel arms and transporting them to a central location for destruction could begin well before all the troops had arrived.

"The commander is confident that he can start the weapons collection sometime at the beginning of next week," said NATO Secretary-General Lord Robertson.

The clock on NATO's self-imposed 30-day time limit for the mission starts ticking once the entire force in Macedonia. Several hundred Americans will participate — mostly taken from troops already in Kosovo and Macedonia — in a behind-the-scenes role focusing on logistical duties.

NATO approved the deployment — its third Balkans venture in the past six years — despite that the risks of not sending them are far greater," he said.

AP Photo
NATO Secretary General Lord Robertso addresses the media at a news conference at NATO headquarters in Brussels, Wednesday. NATO has authorized the deployment of 3,500 troops to Macedonia.

The NATO intervention is seen as essential for shoring up the political deal, which spells out constitutional changes to give Macedonia's ethnic Albanian minority greater rights. Those changes will only be ratified once the rebels — who claim to have been fighting for more rights — disarm.

The Macedonian government, which had asked for NATO's help, welcomed the decision by the North Atlantic Alliance to launch Operation Essential Harvest.

"We have big expectations from NATO's mission," said Stevo Pendarovski, an adviser to Macedonian President Boris Trajkovksi. "Macedonia has the intention to be compliant with the cease-fire agreement and to provide NATO all necessary preconditions for successful completion of its mission."

An ethnic Albanian rebel spokesman known as Besniku also cautiously welcomed the decision, "provided that NATO will be evenhanded with both sides."

Robertson said NATO has an explicit agreement in writing from the ethnic Albanian rebels that they will give up weapons.

"We must have confidence that those who have given their word will go ahead and do so," the secretary-general said.

But the question remains of how many weapons NATO should collect.

The Macedonian Interior Ministry said the rebels have 85,000 different weapons while the rebels say they have only 2,000. All sides will have to agree on what figure is realistic.

"We are assessing the estimate that has been put forward by the ethnic Albanians. The total will have to be realistic," Robertson said.

The deployment to Macedonia is NATO's third mission to the Balkans. In December 1995, 60,000 troops were dispatched to Bosnia on a mission of six months to one year. Twenty-thousand of them are still there. In 1999, after a 78-day bombing campaign against Yugoslavia, more than 40,000 troops were sent to Kosovo. No end to either of those mission is in sight.

The alliance insists, however, it has no plan to extend the Macedonia mission. Robertson said it would be difficult to get a council consensus to extend the mission.

The Macedonia mission is led by Britain, with about 1,800 troops, plus another 1,700 drawn from the Czech Republic, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Turkey and the United States.

The French Defense Ministry said it was sending "the major part" of its contribution Wednesday, an initial 185 troops to fly to Skopje and another 350 was being transported by ship. Up to 700 men from the 2nd battalion of Britain's Parachute Regiment were expected to fly out today. Greece, which has pledged about 350 troops, will begin moving them today.

Days before royal wedding, future princess admits wild past

OSLO, Norway (AP) — The bride-to-be of Norway's crown prince admitted — and regretted — her wild past Wednesday, days before their wedding, hoping to clear the slate at the start of a long path to her someday becoming queen.

Ever since Crown Prince Haakon announced he was dating Mette-Marit Tjessem Hoiby 15 months ago, the Norwegian news media have been abuzz about the future crown princess' past.

Hoiby, 28, the unwed mother of a 4-year-old boy, had frequented parties where drugs were used. Ahead of Saturday's royal wedding, she for the first time neared a public admission of using drugs herself.

"We violated the limits," she said Wednesday, appearing with the 28-year-old crown prince at a palace news conference. "That was a costly experience for me, that I took a long time to get over. My youth rebellion was much stronger than many others. That resulted in me living quite a wild life."

About half of Norway's first-born children are to single mothers, so Norwegians barely raised an eyebrow over Hoiby having a child. But the nation takes a dim view of drug abuse, and public support for the monarchy has been declining in opinion polls.

"I know this was very difficult for very many people, and I am sorry for that," the statuesque blonde said, fighting back tears. "But unfortunately I can't make those choices again."

Hoiby, a former university student and part-time waitress, said she now opposes illegal drug use and considers the subject of her past closed. The crown prince, sitting beside her on a couch, gave her a long look and said, "It's no wonder that I love her."

Whatever doubts this liberal Scandinavian nation of 4.5 million has about her past, the capital Oslo was readying for its first royal wedding since 1968, when crown prince Harald — now King Harald V — and the commoner Sonja Haraldsen, now queen, were wed.

The three-day wedding celebration will draw much of the royalty of Europe, including Britain's Crown Prince Charles and Prince Edward.

GEOWEEK — Where are horseshoe crabs being saved?

These prehistoric-looking arthropods have a new safe haven, thanks to the American government. A 1,500-square-mile (3,885-square-kilometer) area at the mouth of the Delaware Bay was set aside this spring as a sanctuary for these threatened creatures.

Horseshoe crabs have been overfished along this part of the Eastern seaboard for the past decade, and their dwindling numbers worry environmentalists. The crabs' eggs constitute a major food source for migrating seabirds in this region. The animals are also used as bait for other fisheries and have played a role in emerging scientific and medical research.

Adult horseshoe crabs are bottom-dwellers, spending their lives scavenging on the shallow coastal seafloor. After mating, however, the crabs come ashore to lay their eggs on protected, sandy beaches away from the surf. It takes about a month for the eggs to hatch, after which the tiny larvae enter the water. After a week or so, the animals molt and begin their lives on the sea bottom.

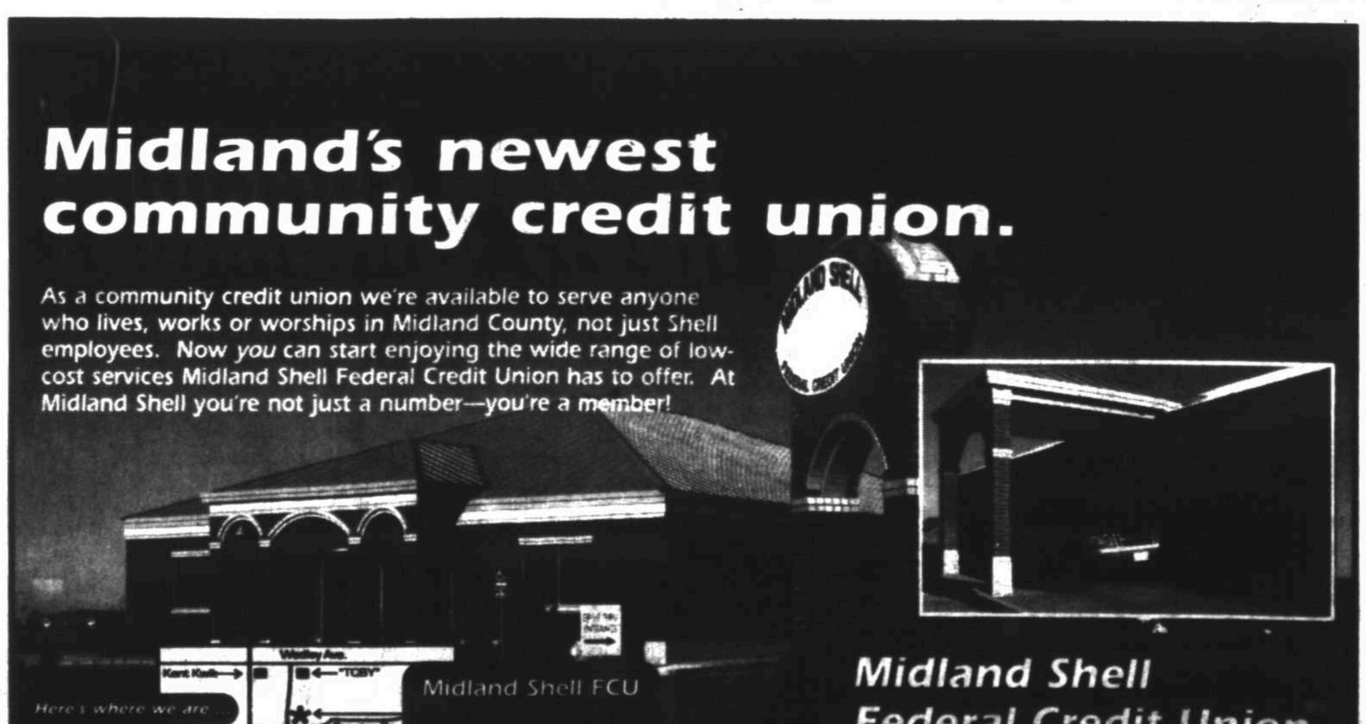

The new sanctuary is bordered on both sides by state waters, which offer additional protection. Eastern coastal states have all agreed to reduce allowable catches of horseshoe crabs by 25 percent in hope of further strengthening their numbers.

Immigrants flood now-prosperous Spain despite anti-migrant sentiment

By Jerome Socolovsky
Associated Press

CUENCA, Spain — Maria Perez-Minguez thought of Spain's past as she gave a crate of plums to Moroccan and Algerian vegetable-pickers who had just ended a five-day hunger strike against their threatened expulsion from the country.

These days illegal immigrants are swamping Spain's shores like never before, crossing perilous waters in rickety boats despite a tough new immigration law that has triggered police crackdowns and an outburst of anti-immigrant sentiment.

It's a sharp turnaround for Spain, once among Europe's poorest countries whose people migrated to its richer neighbors in search of work.

Perez-Minguez recalled that in the late 1950s, her mother-in-law was forced to go to Paris to find work as a maid.

"After all, 2 million of us once went abroad to work in places like Germany and France," she said.

But a quarter century of economic growth has changed all that. Since joining the European Union in the late 1980s, this country of 40 million has blossomed into the world's 14th largest economy and sharply narrowed the income gap with its European neighbors.

Its economic success and geographical closeness to Africa have made it a prime destination for poor immigrants.

Absorption shelters were filled to capacity after a record 800 people were detained last weekend along Spain's southern coast.

The government on Tuesday summoned Morocco's ambassador to the Foreign Ministry to express its concern that most of the illegal immigrants arrived from his country.

According to unions, migrant workers from Africa and Latin America work up to 14 hours a day for as little as $1.50, sleeping under plastic sheeting as they follow harvests of strawberries, garlic and tomatoes across the country.

The illegals also work in the cities in construction, domestic work and prostitution, part of an underground economy that amounts to $110 billion, or one-fifth of Spain's gross domestic product, according to European Union figures.

"This is an invasion," said Alvaro Penas of Democracia Nacional, a small but growing far-right party. "It's out of control."

Moroccan immigrant Mohamed Saeed sits in the early morning, surrounded by sleeping companions wrapped in blankets at the plaza of Cuenca, in central Spain Wednesday. The group of Moroccan and Algerian vegetable pickers concluded a 5-day hunger strike Aug. 18 against their threatened expulsion, but continue to protest in the square until they get work papers. Hundreds of miles to the south, illegal immigrants were swamping Spain's shores like never before, despite a new immigration law that has triggered police crackdowns and rising anti-immigrant sentiment.

Democracia Nacional grabbed the national spotlight with a protest in the village of Las Pedroneras — population 5,000 — after more than 2,000 undocumented migrant workers had converged on the village to vie for 700 contract jobs picking garlic.

Faced with deportation under the new law if they could not get work contracts, scores of illegals from Las Pedroneras staged their own 60-mile protest march to Cuenca, the provincial capital and popular tourist destination.

Now the immigrants sleep on cardboard boxes on the square, refusing to budge until they get working papers.

That's where Maria Perez-Minguez presented her gift of plums. "The least we can do is receive them in a humane way, not by pouring racism on them," she said.

The immigrants were protesting their possible expulsion under the Aliens Act, enacted Aug. 1, which allows summary deportation of anyone caught without working papers while also promulgating the kind of amnesty that President Bush is considering for U.S.-based Mexicans.

Around a quarter million undocumented workers have asked for amnesty since applications were first accepted in January. According to Interior Ministry figures, around 200,000 have been given work permits.

Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar's conservative government hoped the law would balance Spain's need for cheap labor against pressure from other European Union governments, who fear the country is becoming a continental gateway for illegal immigration.

But it has also backfired in Barcelona, where police roundups have sent illegal immigrants scurrying from one city park to another, because the city had no processing center as required under the legislation.

"They seem to have thought that with the enactment of the law, the immigrants would up and march to the border all by themselves," said Miguel Angel Saiz, a labor union official.

Saiz alleged that the new law is being applied selectively, with authorities turning a blind eye to the oversupply of illegal labor to drive down costs for employers.

"We don't want the California model," said Saiz. "There the message is sent that we don't want 'wetbacks' — as they call them — while the government's permissiveness allows four or five times as many to pass as are necessary."

Bomb threats blamed on rival dissidents close shops

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Bomb alerts forced police to close a major bridge in one Northern Ireland city and to evacuate shops and homes in another town Wednesday. Extremists opposed to the peace process were suspected in both cases.

British army experts conducted a controlled explosion to neutralize a pipebomb in the mailbox of an office belonging to Sinn Fein, the Irish Republican Army-linked party, in Cookstown, 40 miles west of Belfast. More than 30 surrounding businesses and homes were evacuated for several hours.

Workers for Sinn Fein's Martin McGuinness, the former IRA commander who holds the British parliamentary seat for the Cookstown area, discovered the suspected pipebomb when they opened the front door. McGuinness, who is education minister in Northern Ireland's joint Catholic-Protestant government, was on vacation.

An extremist Protestant group calling itself the Red Hand Defenders later claimed responsibility in a telephone call to a Belfast newsroom.

The group said it had left pipebombs at several other premises, and police later found a pipebomb outside a Gaelic Athletic Association hall in the village of Garvagh. Gaelic sports are followed mainly by Catholics.

Anti-Catholic groups using a variety of aliases have thrown more than 150 pipebombs and other homemade explosives at Catholic homes and property this year, without wounding anybody seriously.

Also Wednesday, police in Londonderry closed the Foyle Bridge after spotting a suspected bomb near a railway line running beneath the bridge. They said the bridge, one of two major bridges in Northern Ireland's second-largest city, could remain closed until Friday while army experts examined the device using remote-controlled robots.

Families seek visas to visit American aid workers detained in Afghanistan

By Kathy Gannon
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Parents of two American women jailed for allegedly preaching Christianity pleaded with Afghanistan diplomats Wednesday to let them see their daughters.

The families are hoping that the personal approach will succeed where government overtures have failed, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said.

"They are hoping that the Taliban can make the distinction" between a personal plea and an official request, said John Kincannon, of the U.S. Embassy in neighboring Pakistan.

"They feel there might be some merit in separating themselves from us," he said, referring to the embassy.

No one has seen the eight foreign aid workers and 16 Afghan staff of Shelter Now International since their arrest in the Afghan capital of Kabul in early August on charges of preaching Christianity.

The U.N. World Food Program on Wednesday rejected as "baseless allegations" Taliban claims that it was part of a conspiracy among some western organizations to spread Christianity in Afghanistan's to weaken its people's Islamic fervor.

Afghanistan is a deeply devout Muslim nation. Under Taliban rules, foreigners convicted of proselytizing serve a jail term and are deported, while Afghans face execution.

On Wednesday, the mother of one American woman and the father of the other were in Pakistan seeking visas to Afghanistan to see their children.

Diplomats from the United States, Germany and Australia returned Tuesday from Afghanistan after a failed weeklong effort to visit the jailed aid workers.

"It is a frustrating thing" for the families, Kincannon said. "You want action. You want to do something. But this may be a long wait for them."

A spokesman at the Taliban Embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan's capital, said the family members applied Wednesday for visas, but none had been issued.

"They will be back tomorrow to try again, but the decision will be made by Kabul," said Abid, who uses only one name.

The two jailed American women are in their mid-20s, single and identified as Dana Curry and Heather Mercer. The other six jailed foreigners have been identified as Germans George Taubmann, Margrit Stebnar, Kati Jelinek and Silke Duerrkopf; and Australians Peter Bunch and Diana Thomas.

The families are hoping that the personal approach will succeed where government overtures have failed.

A Taliban official outside the vice and virtue ministry in Kabul said the eight foreign aid workers have worn the same clothes for the last four days and had refused to accept a change of clothing.

They also refused to eat one day, he said, but later relented.

He speculated that the group refused to change their clothes as a form of protest at their detention and at the Taliban's refusal to allow diplomats to visit them.

In Washington, State Department deputy spokesman Philip Reeker said that U.S. consular officials visited the Taliban representatives in Islamabad again Wednesday to formally request visas to return to Afghanistan.

"We continue to press for information about the health and condition of the detainees, but most importantly to press for consular access, which is our goal."

Since arresting the aid workers, the Taliban say they have expanded their investigation to include other international aid organizations, including the U.N. World Food Program.

"The WFP has never been involved in propagating any religious persuasion in Afghanistan or elsewhere," the program said in a statement issued in Pakistan.

Shelter Now International is operated by Vision for Asia, a Christian organization based in Germany. Its workers were described as missionaries by the U.S.-based Shelter Now International, which shares the name but has no affiliation.

From the offices of Shelter Now International in Kabul, the Taliban have confiscated compact discs and Christian material translated into local languages. The Taliban also say they have confessions from the detained workers.

In Washington, State Department deputy spokesman Philip Reeker said that U.S. consular officials visited the Taliban representatives in Islamabad again Wednesday to formally request visas to return to Afghanistan.

"We continue to press for information about the health and condition of the detainees, but most importantly to press for consular access, which is our goal."

'Captain Calamity' abandons bid to sail solo around Britain

LONDON (AP) — Stuart Hill's quest for maritime glory ended as he was plucked from the sea by coast guards. And it wasn't the first time. Nor the second.

The sailor, whose ill-fated progress up Britain's east coast has gained him the nickname "Captain Calamity," said Wednesday he was abandoning his bid to sail solo around Britain in a 14-foot dinghy.

"The boat is still upside down in the Atlantic and the chances of retrieving it to continue the journey are virtually nil," Hill said from the Shetland Islands off Scotland's northern tip, where he was recovering from his latest mishap.

Hill was thrown from his boat, the aptly named Maximum Exposure, when it capsized in a force-eight gale west of Shetland on Tuesday. He was winched to safety by a coast guard helicopter and treated for hypothermia in the Shetland town of Lerwick.

It was the latest — and, it transpires, final — episode in a star-crossed circumnavigation that began in May from Hill's home port of Manningtree in eastern England. The 58-year-old Internet company director dreamed of circling Britain in the dinghy he'd fitted out with an adapted windsurfer sail.

On the way out to sea, Maximum Exposure hit another boat. Hill lost contact with shore when his radio became waterlogged. Six days into his journey, his mast snapped in high winds and he had to be towed into port by coast guards.

Then things got worse.

"The first contact we had with him, we had to go take him some food," said Colin Tomlinson, the coast guard district controller in Great Yarmouth, eastern England.

Tomlinson's crews saw a lot of Hill, who spent almost two months alternately becalmed and ashore along England's east coast. At different times, they towed him to shore, escorted him to port or sent a helicopter to check on him after hearing reports of a boat in trouble.

Against the odds, Hill made it more than 600 miles before Tuesday's gale, from Southwold to the northernmost point of Great Britain. "I think Captain Calamity did rather well," Hill said.

Not everyone was so impressed by Hill's escapade, which was intended to raise money for charity.

The coast guard couldn't say how much their rescue efforts for Hill had cost. But the Royal National Lifeboat Institute estimates that launching a lifeboat — the kind of powerful motor craft used several times to help Hill — costs between $3,200 and $8,400. Scrambling a rescue helicopter costs $5,800 an hour.

Mavericks acquire Hardaway

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — Here's proof the Dallas Mavericks are becoming legitimate playoff contenders: They've acquired five-time All-Star Tim Hardaway to be a backup.

Hardaway was sent to Dallas Wednesday in a sign-and-trade deal from Miami. The Heat gets the Mavericks' $3.2 million salary-cap exception and a second-round draft pick within three years. Hardaway gets a three-year contract worth about $10 million.

"We feel good about getting Tim Hardaway," said Dallas coach-general manager Don Nelson, who drafted Hardaway for Golden State in 1989 and coached him there for five seasons.

"He is the quality of player we want to help us not just in the regular season, but in the playoffs."

The Mavs have a young nucleus with Michael Finley, Dirk Nowitzki and Steve Nash. Last season, they carried Dallas into the second round of the playoffs for the first time since 1988.

To continue the climb, Nelson has sought veteran help. He signed Danny Manning a few weeks ago and has been targeting Hardaway all offseason. Dallas finally got room to acquire him by recently trading Howard Eisley to New York in a three-way deal that also sent Glen Rice to Houston.

Hardaway, who will be 35 Sept. 1, no longer averages more than 20 points and 10 assists per game as he did early in his career. Foot and knee injuries also have been problems.

But Hardaway averaged 14.9 points and 6.3 assists last season and played in 77 games, more than either of the previous two seasons. His 52 games of playoff experience are more than anyone else on the roster.

The Mavericks hope to get more out of Hardaway by using him less. He'll back up Nash at point guard, with the pair occasionally sharing the backcourt.

Eisley had the same role last season, but wasn't consistent and failed to recover from a late-season shooting slump.

When Hardaway and Nash play together, Finley will move to small forward and Nowitzki to power forward.

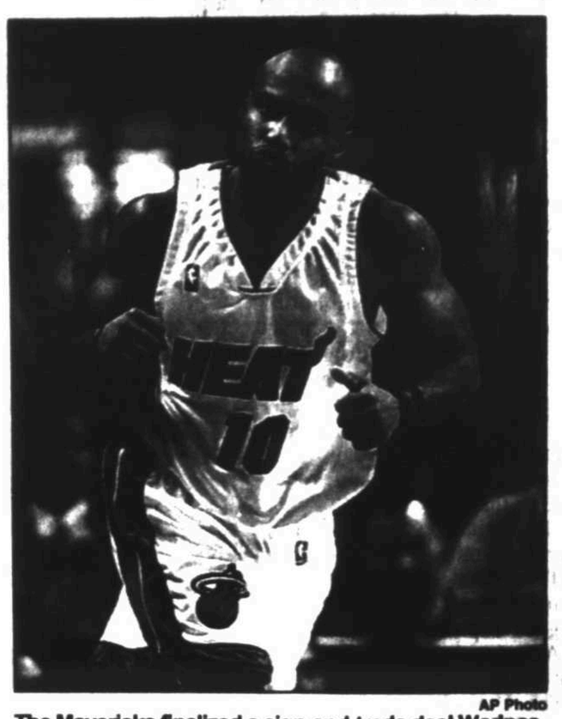

"He knows his role coming in is to back up Nash and at times give us a shot with him and Nash on the court at the same time," Mavs owner Mark Cuban said. "That means about 20 minutes per game, which should hopefully lead to Tim extending his career with the Mavs and the NBA. He can still play."

The Finley-Nowitzki-Nash trio is Dallas' backbone much like Hardaway, Mitch Richmond and Chris Mullin were for Nelson-coached Golden State in the early 1990s. The Warriors marketed their threesome as Run TMC.

Nelson wanted to reunite them with the Mavericks this season, but Richmond signed with the Los Angeles Lakers, and Mullin, whom Nelson wanted as an assistant, decided to play another season.

This deal probably concludes a typically busy off-season for Nelson, who re-signed Finley and Shawn Bradley and signed free agents Evan Eschmeyer and Manning.

The Mavs also lost starting center Calvin Booth to Seattle through free agency and saw player personnel director Kiki Vandeweghe become general manager in Denver.

'Kats primed for playoffs

Garden City aims to participate in playoffs for first time since '91

By Jay Peden
Sports Writer

Wade Wesley doesn't have to look up the last time the Garden City Bearkats made the playoffs. Even though Wesley wasn't there — he's now in his second year as the 'Kats head football coach — the year 1991 springs off the tip of his tongue in an instant.

Garden City was ranked No. 1 in the preseason that year, and they made the playoffs, but not the next year. Or the next.

Maybe Bearkat fans expected a long run of playoff seasons after that.

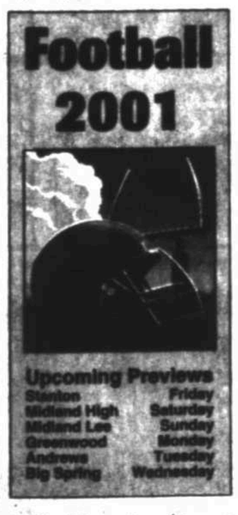

Maybe the fans — and coaches — are frustrated with the wait.

Maybe this is the year Garden City returns to the postseason. Wesley had the 'Kats close last year.

"We ended up third (in District 9-A) last year after losing a game by three points to Rotan," Wesley said. "The kids realize that was a big loss, and it's good that they realize that."

The 'Kats seem primed for a playoff run, with six offensive and five defensive starters returning from last year's 7-3 team.

"We've got a great nucleus coming back, and that's something we feel like we can build on," said Wesley, who added that a few more Garden City boys have come out for football this year. "We've got six players who didn't play last year. We're hopeful for them. I'm interested in seeing what they can do."

He knows what Curtis Eggemeyer can do. Last season, Eggemeyer rushed for 1,177 yards as a tailback, and he also started at linebacker. He's one of a core of four players who are returning starters on both sides of the ball, although each one of them is going to see a change in his role this season, Wesley said.

Eggemeyer, a senior, will move from linebacker to defensive end. T.J Pelzel, also a senior, started at tight end and defensive end last year; this year on defense he'll move in to defensive tackle. Drew Plagens, a junior, started at defensive tackle and offensive guard last; this year he'll be a fullback and a middle linebacker. And senior Boyd Batla, the starting cornerback who also played quarterback when (now-graduated) Justin Hillger broke his jaw, will concentrate on leading the offense and leave the defensive backfield to others.

Wesley, like the majority of high school coaches, likes to run the ball, but he's also seen first-hand the damage a good passing attack can do.

"My roots are in the I-formation... I like to run the ball," Wesley said. "But as a defensive coordinator (in Pampa), we played against Stephenville, and they ran up lots of points on us. You've got to be able to spread the ball out at times — at least have another thing the defense has got to prepare for. But it's only good when it works."

Batla seems ready for the challenge.

"I'm pretty confident this year," he said. "Coach wanted us to have a good passing

OXNARD, Calif. — They kept meeting at the quarterback, as if drawn by the fact that the other would eventually be there, too.

Greg Ellis and Ebenezer Ekuban, the Cowboys' starting defensive ends and one-time college teammates at North Carolina, made life tough for New Orleans Saints' quarterback Aaron Brooks and his pair of Pro Bowl tackles, Kyle Turley and William Roaf, in last Saturday's preseason game.

Just like old times.

"I was so excited to have Greg back there with me because we shared so much and have gone through so much," Ekuban said. "That's what we've always wanted to do. It's something we want to have frequently in the regular season."

That's something the Cowboys are counting on this season from their most recent first-round draft picks — Ellis in '98 and Ekuban in '99.

It's taken awhile for Ellis and Ekuban, also best friends off the field, to develop into the pass-rushing duo the Cowboys hoped.

Ellis and Ekuban provided that 1-2 punch against the Saints. Ellis had four tackles, a half sack and a fumble recovery, and Ekuban had three tackles, 1 1/2 sacks and a pass deflection.

"Our defensive ends controlled the line of scrimmage all night," Cowboys coach Dave Campo said. "They have to play good. They're the cornerstones of our defense."

Ellis and Ekuban left New Orleans thinking this could finally be the year they live up to expectations.

"We can really get some things done out there this year," Ellis said. "We wanted to do this last year, but now we've got a chance to do something really special."

Ellis' fractured left leg, Ekuban's inconsistency and the Cowboys' problems stopping the run prevented the pair from piling up the sack numbers they'd like to see.

"There aren't too many defensive ends that can come into the league and get 10 sacks," Ellis said. "I wanted to see those sack numbers, too. But you've got to do all the little things that make a defensive end great."

Earnhardt Jr. satisfied with NASCAR's findings on car drivers' safety

By Pete Iacobelli
AP Sports Writer

DARLINGTON, S.C. — Dale Earnhardt Jr. is satisfied with NASCAR's report on his father's death, although he still would like to see seat belt standards established for Winston Cup cars.

"It would be good if they could establish standards for the manufacturers and seat-belt companies, like there are in the Navy and Air Force for seat belts in fighter jets," he said Wednesday in his first public comments on the report.

On Tuesday, NASCAR released details on its investigation into Dale Earnhardt Sr.'s crash, finding that a variety of factors — including a broken seat belt — played a part in his death on the final lap of the Daytona 500 on Feb. 18.

Even though his father was wearing a Simpson seat belt, the younger Earnhardt has no worries about using the company's product.

"I still feel comfortable with Simpson seat belts," he said, adding that he talked with NASCAR president Mike Helton about the report.

NASCAR's report did not mandate that drivers wear a head-and-neck restraint device, although many, including Earnhardt Jr., have used them.

His father was not wearing a head and neck restraint system at Daytona.

"Little E" wore the Hutchens device to support his head and neck at the Pepsi 400 last weekend, pressured by colleagues who worried about his safety.

"A bunch of drivers had asked me to wear one," Earnhardt Jr. said. "Terry Labonte was prob-

Enochs' solid outing leads 'Hounds to 4-2 win over Swamp Dragons

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

Midland RockHounds manager Tony DeFrancesco called Chris Enochs the most consistent pitcher on the team in the second half of the season.

On Wednesday, Enochs showed why as he continued his solid play on the mound by allowing just one run in 6 2/3 innings of work in a 4-2 win over the Shreveport Swamp Dragons.

The win was a good way to begin the final eight-game homestand ever for the RockHounds at Christensen Stadium. Next year, the RockHounds will play in their new stadium at the Scharbauer Sports Complex in West Midland.

"I felt good out there," said Enochs, who improved to 3-4 on the season. "I stayed ahead of the hitters and our defense played really well. I just wanted to get ahead and make them put the ball in play.

"(Catcher) Brian Luderer caught a great game today. He called some pitches down and I was able to throw strikes."

DeFrancesco said that Enochs has shown a lot of improvement since the beginning of the season when the righthander was in the bullpen.

"He's a quality pitcher and he's put himself on the map again," DeFrancesco said. "It took a lot of hard work and a lot of frustration but it looks like he's gotten through

Dickson, Martin make finals

Jo Dickson and Polly Martin will face off today for the Women's Club Championship of Ranchland Country Club after winning their semifinal matches on Wednesday.

Following are semifinal and consolation semifinal results of three flights:

Championship flight: Semifinals — Jo Dickson def. Liz Hughes, 6 and 4; Polly Martin def. Becky Hakes, 1-up (19). Consolation semifinals — Donna Winborn def. Anne Drake, 2 and 1; Dorothy Maring advanced with a bye.

First flight: Semifinals — Audrey Foster def. Marty Farris, 3 and 2; Terry Marney def. Susan Taylor, 7 and 6. Consolation semifinals — Emily Goodfellow def. Norma Pyle, 1-up; Elaine Hicks def. Judy Hunnicutt, 2 and 1.

Second flight: Semifinals — Phyllis Maxwell def. Pat Keller, 1-up (20), Gladys Awalt def. Pebbie Corbell, 1-up. Consolation semifinals — Kathy Armstrong def. Kathy Motley, 1-up (19); Shirley Edwards def. Jane Gill, 6 and 4.

Bears trade McNown to Dolphins

Associated Press

DAVIE, Fla. — The Miami Dolphins are taking a low-risk chance on quarterback Cade McNown.

Chicago received a sixth-round draft pick in 2002 and a conditional seventh-round pick the next year. Miami also received a 2002 seventh-round selection.

McNown will compete with Mike Quinn for the Dolphins' third-string job behind starter Jay Fiedler and Ray Lucas.

The 6-foot-1 lefty was 3-12 as a starter and finished with a 67.7 passer rating, completing 281 of 515 passes for 3,111 yards. He threw 16 touchdowns and 19 interceptions.

After a largely ineffective preseason, he dropped behind Jim Miller and Shane Matthews on the depth chart.

NASCAR: Computer models will be used to design safer cars

bly the first guy who said he wanted me to be around a long time and to wear it"

Earnhardt Jr. said it was uncomfortable at first, but he adjusted it several times during the race's rain delays and it became easier to wear.

In all, 41 of 43 drivers at Michigan Speedway wore a head and neck restraint device. Earnhardt Jr. said he probably would keep wearing one.

Earnhardt Jr. was in Darlington to promote the Southern 500 on Sept. 2, under a commitment he made weeks ago. At the time, NASCAR had not yet scheduled its news conference about the crash investigation.

On Wednesday, Earnhardt Jr. was met by about 70 media members, several of whom drove in from Atlanta to hear his views about the two-volume report.

"I know NASCAR was scrutinized for being secretive, but I think they did it in a real professional manner," Earnhardt Jr. said. "Everything that they believe and have found are real consistent with my beliefs and the family's interests. We're very content with everything."

NASCAR outlined several steps Tuesday to improve safety.

It said it will install "black boxes" in cars, similar to flight-data recorders on airplanes, to help understand the forces during crashes and improve safety.

NASCAR will also use computer models to design safer cars and will be involved in testing of race track barriers. The organization will commission a study on restraint systems to take a closer look at seat-belt strength.

NASCAR also will open a research center in Conover, N.C., sometime next year and will continue to work with experts on car safety.

However, the report contained no recommendations on changes to cars or barriers.

his injury phase and back where he needs to be."

Midland gave the Enochs some cushion by taking advantage of three Swamp Dragon errors.

"We didn't swing the bats very well tonight," DeFrancesco said. (Shreveport starter Joe) Horgan slowed us down. We got a lot of cheap hits today but we got a couple of key hits when we needed them by (Jay) Pecci, (Brian) Luderer and Jacques (Landry) with a sac fly. We've got a lot of new faces on the team and guys are getting their feet wet in Double-A for the first time, so this is going to be adjustment period."

The 'Hounds got two runs in the second inning as Luderer had an RBI single and Pecci added an RBI double for a 2-0 lead.

In the third with Oscar Salazar on third, Landry hit a sacrifice fly to left field to make it 3-0.

That would be enough for Enochs, who allowed his only run in the top of the sixth as Michael Byas scored on a Joe Jester groundout.

The RockHounds added an insurance run in the bottom of the sixth as Todd Mensik, who reached on a two-base error, plated thanks to a Mike Lockwood single.

The win kept the 'Hounds mathematically alive for the playoffs even though they know that it's an uphill climb being 10 games out with 11 to go.

"Hopefully we'll finish strong with who we got and keep sending players to Triple-A," DeFrancesco said. "Claudio Galva is going up (to Triple-A Sacramento) today. Guys who are coming in hopefully can step up a little bit."

Enochs said his team will keep the same approach it has had all season during the final stretch.

"We just go out every day and try to win baseball games whether we're in the playoffs or not," Enochs said.

'HOUND BITES: There are just seven games left at Christensen Stadium in 2001... Pitcher Wayne Nix had joined the RockHounds from Single-A Visalia. Nix joins recent Visalia call-ups outfielder Kirk Asche and catcher Aaron Nieckula — all of whom take the roster spots of recent Triple-A call-ups outfielder Ryan Ludwick, pitcher Joe Cotton and pitcher Jon Adkins.

LEAGUE HONORS: Three 'Hounds were named to the Texas League All-Star Team: center fielder Ryan Ludwick, infielder Salazar and designated hitter Landry. Ludwick hit 25 home runs and still leads the team with 96 RBI despite having been called up to Triple-A Sacramento on Aug. 16. Salazar, who has played second base, third base and shortstop, is batting .275 with 18 homers and 91 RBIs. Landry, with 34 homers and 32 stolen bases, became the fourth 30/30 man in Texas League history... The All-Stars are just an honorary team. There is no game involved... There were 17 spots on the team —11 position players and six pitchers... The Round Rock Express led the league with five players on the team. Like Midland, El Paso and Wichita also had three selections. Tulsa, San Antonio and Arkansas had one each. Shreveport was shut out... The 'Hounds have put 10 players on the league's postseason honor team in the three years since they became affiliated with the Oakland Athletics. In 1999, there were five Midland players on the team: first baseman T.R. Marcinczyk, third baseman Adam Piatt, utility player Josue Espada and outfielders Jeff DaVanon and Mario Encarnacion. Last year, first baseman Jason Hart and catcher Cody McKay made the TL team...

Rangers beat Yankees 8-1

Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — While so much else has gone wrong this season, the Texas Rangers are finally beating the New York Yankees.

Darren Oliver outpitched Mike Mussina Wednesday night and the Rangers went on to beat the Yankees 8-1 to clinch a season series against the World Series champions for the first time since 1996.

"We know what's happened in the past," said Bill Haselman, who had two RBI singles after coming off the bench. "It is good to play good, solid baseball. That's the only way to beat them."

The Rangers, who won Tuesday night 13-3, have won four of six against the Yankees this season. They play for the last time Thursday night.

Since winning the season series in 1996 and beating the Yankees in Game 1 of the playoffs that fall, the Rangers had been 13-42 against New York until this year.

"Anytime you can play spoiler to anybody when they are in the race, it's definitely great," Oliver said.

New York has been in first place in the AL East for 49 straight days. The Rangers have been in last place in the AL West all season.

Texas went ahead to stay with three runs in the fourth, when Mussina (12-11) walked two and threw a pair of wild pitches.

In his other five innings, Mussina allowed just two hits and one walk.

"Moose had that one bad inning and that was it," said Yankees manager Joe Torre. "It was weird, but we're not playing well."

Mussina didn't talk to reporters after the game.

Oliver (10-8), who has struggled since the end of June, allowed just one run while scattering four hits over six innings. He is 3-6 his last 11 starts since starting the season 7-2.

Phillies 2, Astros 1

PHILADELPHIA — Robert Person gave the Philadelphia Phillies just what they needed.

Person allowed two hits in eight innings and Scott Rolen drove in both Philadelphia runs as the Phillies snapped a season-high five-game losing streak with a 2-1 victory against the Houston Astros on Wednesday night.

"He stopped the bleeding," Phillies manager Larry Bowa said. "He's been unbelievable. (Houston) might have the best lineup from top to bottom and he's shut them down twice."

On May 5, Person threw a two-hit shutout against the Astros at Enron Field.

"The key was locating my fastball," Person said. "The outside corner of the plate has been my friend lately and if you get that pitch, it opens everything else up."

Houston had its five-game winning streak snapped and is two games ahead of second-place Chicago in the NL Central.

Philadelphia remained one game behind first-place Atlanta in the NL East.

Person (11-6) didn't allow a hit after Lance Berkman's RBI double in the fourth. He retired 12 straight batters from the fourth inning to the eighth. After a two-out walk to Craig Biggio, Person got Jose Vizcaino to ground out to end the inning.

"You're not going to win with three hits very often," Houston manager Larry Dierker said. "(Person) doesn't look much different than any other pitcher but for some reason he gives us trouble."

'BOYS: Ellis, Ekuban expected to be 1-2 punch for Dallas' Defense

(From 1C)

For Ellis, it was completely recovering from the leg injury near the end of the 1999 season. He was forced to switch to the right side last season to take pressure off his healing leg.

He still managed to lead all Cowboys' defensive linemen with 77 tackles and tie for the team lead with seven tackles for losses and two fumble recoveries.

For Ekuban, it was becoming better at stopping the run and regaining his starting position after he was benched for poor play. Relying mostly on his speed off the edge, Ekuban led the Cowboys with 6 1/2 sacks.

Now, Ellis is healthy and Ekuban appears to have remedied the inconsistency that plagued his play throughout last season.

To celebrate, they'd like to schedule a few more quarterback meetings.

Weight-training regimen makes 'Kats stronger for football season

By Jay Peden
Sports Writer

If you watch to see where T.J. Pelzel lines up for Garden City this season, whether he's playing tight end or defensive tackle, that side will be called, in football parlance, the strong side.

But thanks to a weight-training regimen Wade Wesley brought to Garden City when he was named head coach last year, the Bearkats don't really have a weak side.

"Probably within the last year, all of our maxes have gone up 50-70 pounds on benches and squats," said senior Curtis Eggemeyer. When he says "maxes," he means the maximum amount of weight each player is able to lift.

"It's been dramatic," said Pelzel, also a senior, although his estimates are a little lower than Eggemeyer's. "Almost everyone's max went up (at least) 40 pounds. We went from hardly ever lifting before coach Wesley got here to lifting all the time. And we enjoy it."

In any football program, strength training is important. Major colleges like Texas, Texas A&M and Nebraska have weight facilities that are nearly the size of Garden City. High school players need to lift, too, even during the summer. High schools open the doors of their weight rooms during the summer for workouts. The workouts are voluntary, but the fact is: if most players want to be good players, they'd better volunteer.

The Bearkats turned out this summer in force.

"On our varsity, roughly speaking, we had seven out of every 10 (players in the football program) that came in on a regular basis this summer for weight training," Wesley said. "I feel like when they came into two-a-days, they were in really good shape. We ended up with six people who could bench (press) over 225 (pounds). Out of 20 (players) who are going to be on the varsity, that's a high percentage for us."

Garden City doesn't have any 300-pounders on its roster, but many of the players look solidly built, without much excess weight. Pelzel, at 239 pounds, is the heaviest 'Kat. It's obvious that he's hefted a quite a few iron plates but not too many dinner plates.

He's noticed the difference that the weight training has made on his game.

"It feels like I'm quicker on my first step," Pelzel said, "and it feels like it's easier to move someone than it was last year."

Eggemeyer, an 182-pound tailback, also said that he's seen personal improvement to some degree. However, weight lifting isn't everything.

"Most of it (success in football) is technique and mental preparation," he said, "but the muscle does help on the field — I can't deny that."

KATS: Wesley hopes to have balanced attack

(From 1C)

game, to open up the run. We've got pretty good receivers, with good hands. And I'll get it to them."

Those receivers include Pelzel, who at 239 pounds is the heaviest 'Kat, plus split end Darren Hillger and flanker Kendall Goodwin, a state track meet qualifier in the triple jump.

Garden City has three returning starters — counting Pelzel — on the offensive line, which bodes well for Eggemeyer's chances of repeating his 1,000-yard season. The returning starters are tackle Matthew Frysak, a 226-pound senior, and center Josh Schmitz, a 220-pound junior. They'll be joined by guards Matthew Cmerek (235) and Samuel Sanchez (169), and there's a battle for the other tackle spot between Blake Chudej and Pat Randel.

With Wesley, a former defensive coordinator — and a successful one at that — taking over the team last year, it shouldn't have been surprising that the defense would be strong. But last year's squad probably surpassed any fair expectations.

"We were in the top 15 in the state in scoring (defense) last year," Wesley said. "We gave up 190 yards a game or so. Defensively, we hope to be very physical."

Up front, Garden City has Pelzel at tackle and Eggemeyer at end on the strong side. On the weak side, Schmitz will play tackle, with Anthony Hoelscher at end. The linebacking corp will have Plagens in the middle, Adrian Treviño on the weak side and Donato Gonzalez on the strong side. At free safety, there's returning starter Brian Hillger, and Ty Coats will play strong safety. Goodwin will man the right corner, with Brandon Bednar on the other side. .

Any talk about the District 9-A race has to start with Roscoe, the defending district champion. The Plowboys left a furrow in the 'Kats with a 46-16 win in the regular season finalé, then went all the way to the Class A quarterfinals, where they lost a double overtime game to Collinsville, 27-20. They have seven starters back on both sides of the ball this year. They're ranked No. 2 in the class by Dave Campbell's Texas Football, just behind Stratford, the defending state champion which also has a lot of players back.

"Roscoe is just in a league of its own," Wesley said.

But two teams make the playoffs from each district in Class A, leaving room for a team like — maybe — Garden City. Rotan doesn't have too many players back from the team that edged out Garden City for the second playoff spot and went to the regional semifinals, losing, like Roscoe, to Collinsville. But the Yellow Hammers can't be counted out.

"Rotan may be down, but they've got so much tradition," Wesley said. His voice rises and wavers on the word "may," suggesting that if Rotan is down, he'll believe it when he sees it.

Wesley predicts Robert Lee, 4-6 last year, to be "much stronger" this year, and he describes both Roby and Garden City as "better." Sterling City (1-9 last year) rounds out the district.

"We hope we'll be competitive with the other four," Wesley said, excluding Roscoe. "We hope to make the playoffs, just like everybody else."

And if everybody else gets to make the playoffs eventually, why not Garden City?

Crude down

NEW YORK — After rising sharply at the opening bell, crude oil futures slid 35 cents to $26.37 a barrel Wednesday as traders reassessed their initial bullish reaction to inventory data.

The American Petroleum Institute reported that crude supplies shrank by 5 million barrels, but traders said stocks should rebuild soon amid recent refinery output cuts and exports from Iraq that could hit U.S. shores at any time after resuming in early July.

October gasoline futures fell .16 cent to 78.25 cents a gallon at the New York Mercantile Exchange

"This was somewhat of a 'Buy the rumor, Sell the news' reaction after (Tuesday's) rally," said John Kilduff, senior vice president at Fimat USA Inc.

September heating oil fell .17 cent to 72.82 cents a gallon, while September natural gas fell 31.8 cents to $2.848 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Brent crude from the North Sea fell 15 cents to $25.34 on London's International Petroleum Exchange.

The early gains in the petroleum complex came after the American Petroleum Institute reported late Tuesday that U.S. crude oil stocks fell by a huge 5.3 million barrels to 301.9 million barrels last week as imports dropped sharply.

The API also reported gasoline supplies fell by 3 million barrels as demand surged to a record high of 9.6 million barrels a day. Distillate stocks, which include heating oil and diesel fuel, dropped by an unexpected 856,000 barrels, the API said.

Data released early Wednesday by the Energy Department, however, was less bullish. The department reported a decline of 4 million barrels in crude oil stocks and pegged the draw in gasoline stocks at only 2.5 million barrels.

Contradicting the API, the Energy Department data also showed a build of 100,000 barrels in inventories of distillate fuels.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — News of improved German business sentiment sent the euro to a new 5-month high Wednesday, though the European currency slipped in late trading.

Business optimism in the German economy, the largest in Europe, increased in July, in the first such rise in six months, according to a survey issued Wednesday by the Ifo Institute.

The euro responded with a penny rise to 92.39 cents, its highest level since mid-March, before drifting back to end the day only moderately higher against the dollar.

"It's really just one number and I don't think there's too much to get excited about even in that number," said Andrew Delano, foreign exchange analyst at IDEAglobal.

Other analysts were surprised to see the euro lose its initial gains.

"It should be significant," said Joe Francomano, vice president of foreign exchange at Erste Bank in New York. But "the way the market has finished today seems to have discounted the significance of the Ifo number."

In late New York trading, the euro was quoted at 91.70 cents, up from 91.14 cents late Tuesday.

Elsewhere, a rumor that Standard & Poor's, an international ratings agency, was on the verge of cutting Japan's long-term debt rating was false, S&P officials said.

Still, the issues raised by the rumor remained relevant to the currency market, analysts said. Although the rumor had little effect on yen value overnight, concerns about Japanese debt might have contributed to the yen's moderate fall in the New York session.

The dollar was quoted at 120.45 Japanese yen, up from 119.75 yen.

The dollar also was quoted at 1.6642 Swiss francs, up from 1.6618, and 1.5430 Canadian dollars, down from 1.5478. The British pound fell to $1.4495 from $1.4497.

Dell wants top education spot

By Connie Mabin
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Dell Computer Corp. is planning to expand some of its educational programs as it continues to battle with Apple Computer Corp. and other competitors for sales to the nation's schools.

Last year, Dell took the K-12 market-share lead from Apple. Last week, a report by industry researchers Gartner/Dataquest showed that Dell doubled its shipments to schools since last year.

"That's something that's very, very important to us," Dell's Bill Rodriguez said Wednesday during a conference call.

"Technology is transforming education in the United States," said Rodriguez, vice president of Dell's education and health care division. "Our goal is to be at the forefront of that transformation."

He said the Round Rock-based company plans to expand a program that allows poor students to learn how to rebuild refurbished Dell computers. The students are able to take the computers home and receive free Internet access as long as they maintain a "C" average, attend school regularly and stay out of trouble.

In addition to selling computers to schools, Dell wants to help schools stay on top of technology, Rodriguez said.

The strategy appears to be working.

According to the Gartner/Dataquest report, Dell's market share was 33.5 percent in the second quarter, compared to 21 percent for Apple, based in Cupertino, Calif. It was the seventh consecutive quarter Dell held the top spot.

Notebook computer and server sales to K-12 schools and higher education institutions also grew above the industry rate, Rodriguez said.

The sales pitch worked on Baltimore County Public Schools Superintendent Joe A. Hairston. His 162-school system chose Dell when it decided to buy 9,000 new computers and standardize its software and hardware.

"We had a mess. However, we did have a vision and we wanted to take advantage of the potential of a school district of this size," Hairston said. "That didn't happen without some assistance. The support we received from Dell was just incredible."

Michigan's Rochester Community Schools chose Dell over Houston-based Compaq Computer Corp. for an $8 million technology update.

"We wanted to have a partnership," said Superintendent John Schultz. "Dell had that, and that's one of the reasons why we selected them."

In a bid to regain the top spot it long held among schools, Apple has heavily promoted its iBook laptop and wireless technology to educators. It has gone to training institutes for teachers, including one held last month at the University of Texas at Austin.

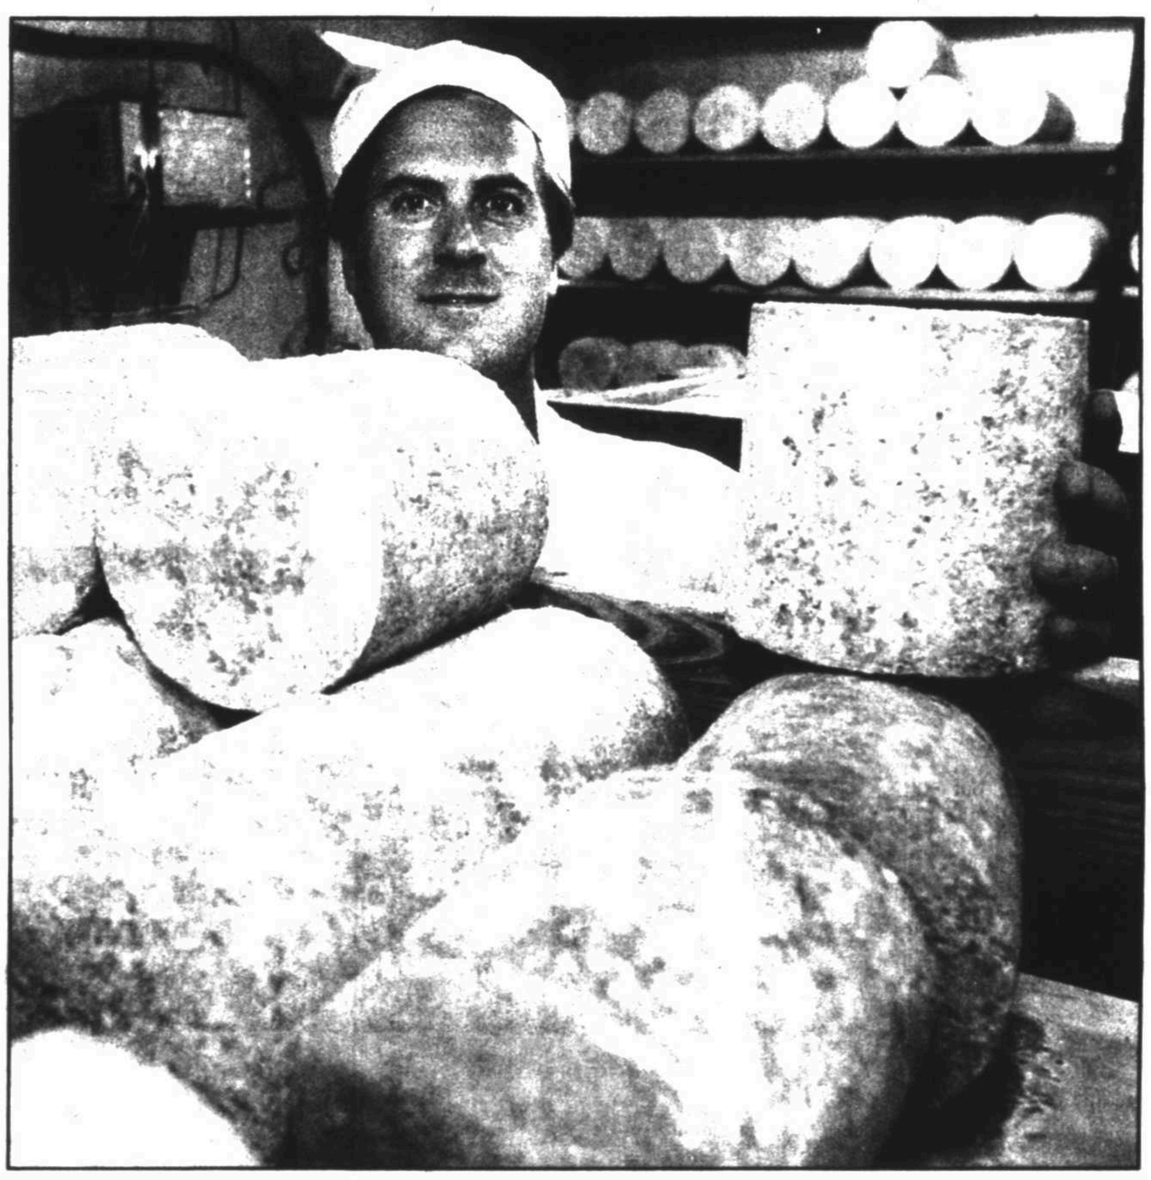

Cheryl Vedoe, vice president of education marketing at Apple, said then that the company felt confident it would remain a leader in schools.

Rodriguez said Dell is confident it will keep the top spot even with increased competition from Apple and others in notebook sales.

"We don't really see them playing very often, but I'm sure that they are all still focused on education just like we are," Rodriguez said.

Stocks rise as investors begin bargain-hunting

NEW YORK (AP) — Placing some bets despite their worries about the economy, bargain-hunting investors sent the stock market higher Wednesday.

Wall Street enjoyed a solid advance by late afternoon after investors spent much of the day pondering what the Federal Reserve's seventh interest rate cut will mean for the economy. The market alternated between worries that Tuesday's quarter-point cut won't be enough to reinvigorate the economy and relief that the central bank didn't think the economy needed a bigger cut.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished a choppy session up 102.76 at 10,276.90, recovering most of the 145 points it lost Tuesday.

"Contrary sentiment was getting overdone," said Steven Goldman, market strategist for Weeden & Co.

The broader market also advanced. The Nasdaq composite index rose 28.71 to 1,860.01, and the Standard & Poor's 500 index gained 8.05 to end at 1,165.31.

However, buyers likely were prompted by cheaper prices from Tuesday's sell-off rather than optimism about an economic turnaround in the near future, analysts said. The Fed did not predict business would soon improve, leading investors to sell stocks across sectors Tuesday. And analysts also don't expect any gains to be long lasting until companies can say business is improving.

"There was a lot of hope that the Fed would say they are about done easing (rates), because the economy is showing strength. But they basically said we continue to see weakness," said Richard A. Dickson, a technical analyst at Hilliard Lyons in Louisville, Ky. "We are looking for some indication that the economy has bottomed out."

Among the gainers were companies that indicated business was getting better.

Dow industrial General Motors climbed $1.50 to $57.20 after affirming its third-quarter earnings outlook.

The tech sector got a boost from semiconductor equipment makers, which reported better-than-expected July sales — $764 million in orders in July and a book-to-bill ratio of 0.67, meaning $67 of orders were received for every $100 of product shipped. Triquint Semiconductor rose $2.92 to $22.32, and Applied Materials advanced $1.89 to $43.90 on the news.

Eating patterns seeing change across the country

By M. Ray Perryman

We've all been taught that breakfast is the most important meal of the day. That lesson seems to be falling on deaf ears, or closed mouths as it were, for the latest reports indicate about a quarter of Americans skip breakfast altogether and less than half of us eat it seven days a week.

Perryman

It seems that those with more education and higher incomes eat breakfast more regularly than their opposites. This situation is perhaps understandable, as those with less money tend to look for things they believe they can do without, and breakfast is near the top of the list.

And just what do Americans eat for their first meal of the day? About two-thirds have cereal with hot cereal being more of a favorite for women. About 36% of breakfasters have toast while about one in nine favors pancakes, sausages and waffles. The consumption of eggs, which had dropped considerably in the early 1990s is making a rebound. They are popular today among families with school-age children, but least desired by singles under the age of 35.

While the idyllic is for a family to have breakfast around the kitchen table before each member of the group leaves to participate in various responsibilities, that picture is far from reality. Half of American adults are now single, and even those in traditional family units normally have schedules that don't lend themselves to regularly scheduled meals. Asynchronous communication seems to be accompanied by asynchronous eating.

A recent study indicated that the average American often eats breakfast at work, or on the way. Those who patronize quick-service restaurants (what we used to call fast-food outlets) for breakfast have grown from about 52% in 1982 to 68% according to the latest figures. A significant percentage of the income generated at quick-service restaurants is from breakfast foods. (For McDonald's, it's about 20%.)

What are the favorite foods on the menus of these quick-stop eating establishments? Topping the list of breakfast items is coffee with some 37% of the people ordering it. A breakfast sandwich is the choice of about 32%. Hash browns, fashioned in handy-eating packages, are requested by about 16% of the breakfast customers. Donuts and bagels have their special clientele too, and account for approximately 13% and 8% of the orders, respectively.

While the number of Americans who eat breakfast away from home has increased significantly over the past few years, the trend is continuing the pattern that began shortly after World War II when eating out changed from an occurrence scheduled for a special occasion, to a regular weekly, and in some cases, daily event.

Over the next few decades, dining out will be experienced on a regular basis by more and more people in the U.S., but there will be some rather significant changes in the items on the menu. These changes will be reflective of the evolving tastes of the American consumer, particularly with regard to ethnic foods.

The Census Bureau projects that over the next decade the population growth of Hispanics (31%) and African-Americans (13%) in the U.S. will greatly outpace that of Caucasians (3%). The result will be what many people are calling the "browning of America." The 2000 census data shows that the Hispanic population of the country — 35.3%, is almost equal to that of African-Americans-36.4%, which, of course, is the largest minority group in the U.S. In Texas, Hispanics represent about 32% of the state total, with the African-American population hovering around 11%. Non-Hispanic whites have declined from 61% in 1990 to 52% to 2000.

To meet the changes occurring in the American pallet, many food companies are developing special lines for particular ethnic groups or tailoring their offerings to fit local or regional preferences. In more cases, however, foodservice operations, supermarkets, and quick-service restaurants are changing what they provide to incorporate items for all consumers, ethnic and mainstream.

Specialty restaurants will always be with us, of course, but the possibilities are expanding and will probably increase in the future, for a wider selection of food choices to be available in most major restaurants. In other words, the opportunities are expanding for a family of four, with each person having a desire for a different kind of food, to be able to fill all the plates at a single restaurant.

A similar phenomenon is occurring with respect to age. Older patrons eat at home more and use full-service restaurants with greater frequency than their younger counterparts. As the Baby Boomers continue to grow older, these outlets are expected to outpace quick-serve facilities in overall growth.

Regardless of the widening variety of tastes and colors gracing the menus of the future, the color that most food industry establishments anticipate seeing is green, as in greenbacks, for by the end of this decade, Americans are expected to be spending more than $820 billion per year on food products. Any way you look at it, that's a lot of dough.

AMHERST, Mass. — The path through the New England woods by a beaver pond opens into a scene from another continent as women no longer young laugh and chatter, stooping to tend the delicate sprouts of water grass and exotic melon vines climbing woven wood trellis.

Meet the Khmer Growers of Western Massachusetts — four Cambodian sisters and their friends — who are raising money to rebuild the Buddhist temples in their homeland by growing the vegetables they know best.

They began selling to Massachusetts' ethnic farm markets seven years ago. And this summer — thanks to a couple of bushels of exotic basils and sinuous melons a former top U.S. agriculture official brought to high-powered chefs — they are adding some chic restaurants in Manhattan and Washington, D.C., to their growing customer list.

The aim is to open new and more lucrative markets for immigrant growers here and across the country, said Gus Shumacher, a former Massachusetts agriculture commissioner who served as undersecretary of agriculture in the Clinton administration.

"The chefs love this stuff and it is such high quality food that it should be getting top dollar," Shumacher said. He has also brought Hmong and other immigrant growers in Fresno, Calif., together with chefs in San Francisco and Los Angeles and is working with farmers in Iowa, Wisconsin and North Carolina.

"It's very challenging to find quality Asian goods," said Michel Nischan, executive chef of the Heartbeat restaurant at the Hotel W in Manhattan, who is buying from the Cambodian women and other western Massachusetts growers.

"As people have been able to travel more their palates have expanded. They want the exotic and interesting," he said. "And these folks are growing it all."

Prak Ky's return to farming after escaping the killing fields of the Pol Pot regime started when her doctor gave her a stern warning. "He said I must exercise or I would die," she said. He told her sister Prak Kom the same thing.

The elderly women, sitting cross-legged in a shelter in the field, burst into uncontrollable giggles as they recalled the doctor's suggested exercise: jogging.

Instead, they began a small garden at the apartment complex where they live. Some of the seeds they planted were seeds members of the small group of Cambodian families here had brought with them when they fled.

"They were farmers and the seeds were all they had to bring to a new life," said Sokhen Mao, the women's nephew, a teacher and an organizer for the Hampshire Community Action Coalition. In the summer he helps his mother and her sisters on the farm.

Peter Westover, the town's conservation director, saw their garden and was fascinated by the multicolored basils and trailing vines. He was so impressed at how much the women were growing on the tiny plot that he helped them lease a 40-acre plot of town conservation land.

"We had just been mowing the big field and hoping to be able to do more," he said. "I'll never forget the look on their faces when we walked over the hill and they saw the pond and the fields."

"I was so happy," said Prak Ky. "It is so beautiful. Our prayers were answered."

They now have more than four acres planted — without an inch wasted — in more than 30 different kinds of Asian vegetables, greens and hot peppers. The crops range from lemon grass and baby corn to the more exotic water grass — or tachouen — which resembles asparagus. They also grow big-leaved arum, fish cheek basil, sticky melon, two-foot long Asian beans and sinuous melons.

It's a mosaic of varied shades of green now, but this year's snowy winter and late frosts took their toll. "I planted that corn three times," said Prak Ky. "Twice everything was gone. It was so cold."

The farm is set up as a nonprofit to finance reconstruction of the temples. It is a lesson in an old culture that could have vanished in a new American world where children and grandchildren have other interests, Mao said.

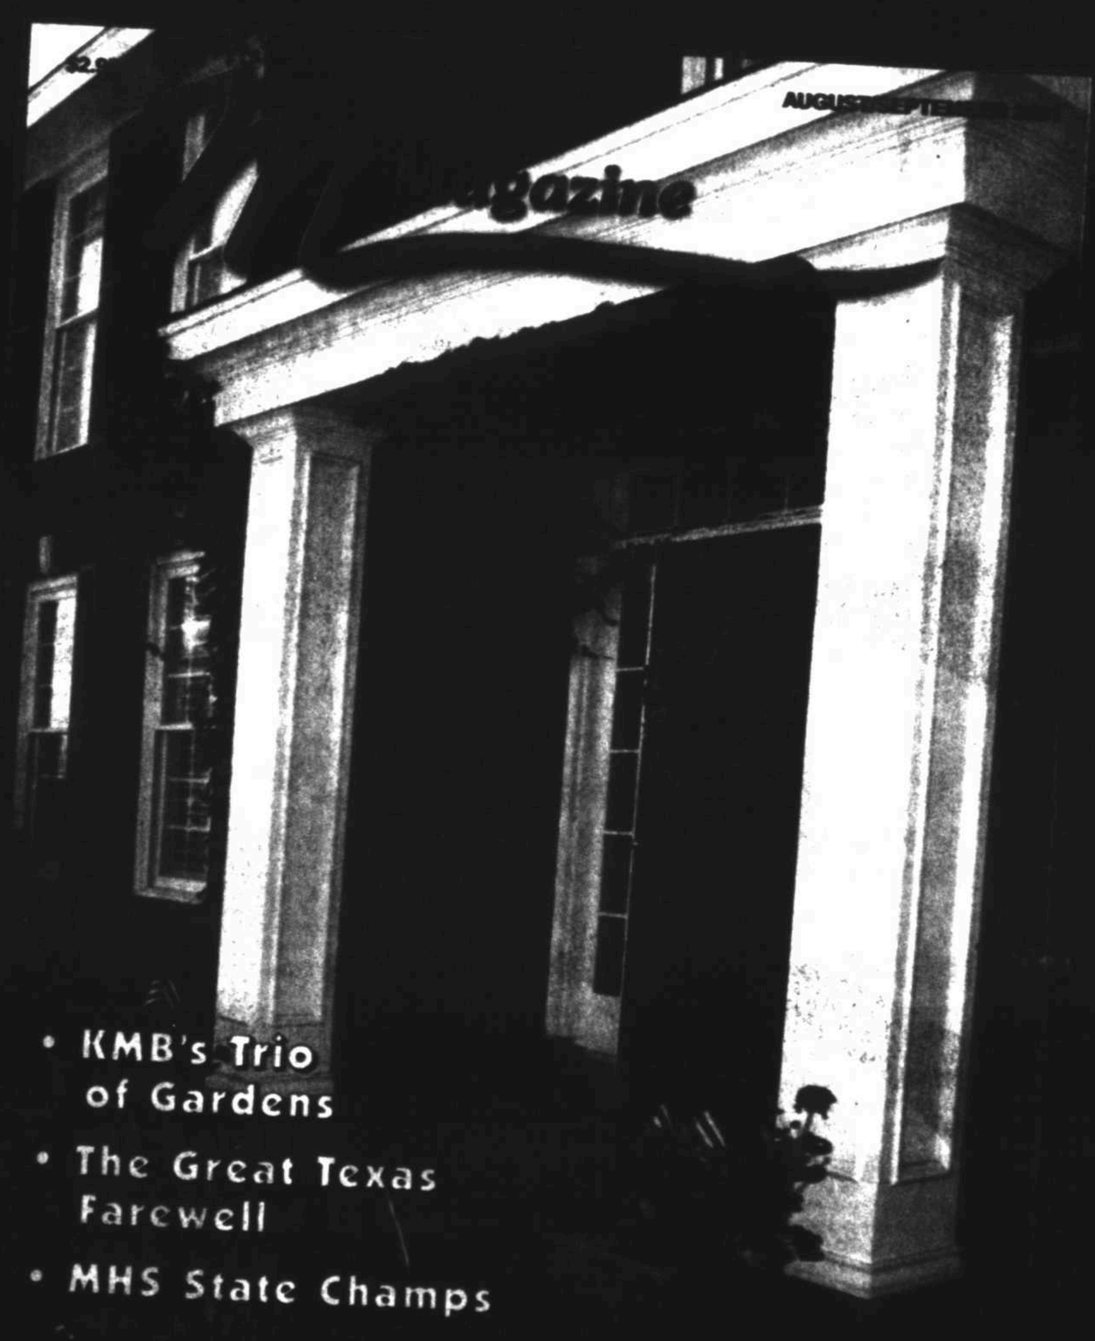

Children from the town's public schools come to study the farm. Students from area colleges also help.

Still, it is the older women in the community, working by hand, that do the bulk of the weeding and planting. They laugh and talk as they work and assure their children they take frequent breaks to rest.

"They are out there every day in their conical hats," Westover said. "They are wonderful workers. They don't walk. They trot."

"This is what is good for me," said Prak Ky. "Now, I'm healthy."

DEAR ABBY

Grandpa chooses not to view video of his grandson's birth

By Abigail Van Buren

Pauline and Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: Five weeks ago, our son and his wife welcomed a baby boy. They asked a close friend to videotape the birth and presented a copy to us and the other grandparents.

The proud parents asked us to wait and view it with them at an appointed time. All along, my husband said he was not interested and would not stay home to watch it. I thought he would relent, but sure enough, he went to a local softball game, leaving me to explain.

My son took it in stride. However, his wife is angry and hurt. I tried to explain that men in my husband's generation were not allowed to be involved in childbirth, which accounts for much of his attitude. My husband has often said, "I was there when my children were conceived — that's all that counts!" After 35 years of marriage, he is not about to change his opinion.

My daughter-in-law says my husband is rude and thoughtless. My husband refuses to apologize and thinks SHE is acting foolish. Your thoughts, please? — NEW GRANDMA CAUGHT IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR NEW GRANDMA: While the birth of her first child was a watershed experience in your daughter-in-law's life, it does not give her the right to insist your husband do anything that makes him uncomfortable. If he doesn't want to see her in that position, that's his right. It may be just a little too much "reality TV" for his taste.

DEAR ABBY: I am 12 years old and want to be a model, an actress and a singer.

My mother is a housekeeper. My father is a supervisor in a factory. My aunts and uncles have similar jobs. Well, I don't want to do that. I want to be the next Daisy Fuentes or Cindy Crawford. I want people to know who I am. I don't want to be a "no one" — I want to be a "someone."

My mother says not to get my hopes up because not too many people get famous. I say I don't care — I want to risk it. My parents think I might get hurt, but I know I am tough and can handle it.

Abby, what do you think? Should I just forget about my dreams or "go for it"? — WANTING TO BE A STAR IN ELGIN, ILL.

DEAR WANTING: Don't abandon your dreams. If you don't have dreams, how can they come true?

Take classes in drama, dancing and singing. If they are not offered at your school, ask your parents how you can earn extra money so you can take classes on Saturday. Don't neglect your schoolwork. You'll get even further if you have both brains and talent. There's no doubt in my mind you have the drive and determination to succeed. Good luck!

DEAR ABBY: I am one of your male readers. I'll make this short and sweet. Must I tell my fiancee I was in a mental hospital when I was 19? — NEEDS TO KNOW IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

DEAR NEEDS TO KNOW: If you think it might make a difference to your fiancee, better to find out before the wedding. While it's not the kind of information you're obligated to disclose to an employer, the person you contemplate sharing your life with has a right to know. It would be better coming from you than from some relative who lets it slip somewhere down the line.
