Kennedy won't seek presidency in 1984

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen Edward M. Kennedy, bowing to the wishes of his three children, will not seek the Democratic presidential nomination in 1984, sources said early today.

"The reason is personal," said one aide, who added the Massachusetts Democrat would disclose his decision publicly at a news conference later in the day.

"His kids really feel very strongly that they don't want him to run," added this aide. Kennedy is in the process of arranging a divorce settlement with his wife Joan. Their children are Edward M. Jr., Kara and Patrick.

Kennedy, 50, has been the early front-runner in public opinion polls for the party's 1984 presidential nomination and this aide said that the senator has private polling data that indicates he would do well if he ran.

But Kennedy, after going over the political information one final time with senior aides on Tuesday, reportedly told them, "I think you guys are right, and I think I can win, but I'm not going to do it."

Kennedy spent Tuesday evening at his home telephoning friends and political adversaries to tell them of his decision. Among those called were House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., a longtime political ally. Kennedy also called several other Democrats who are exploring the presidential candidacy for themselves, including former Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Sens. Alan Cranston of California and John Glenn of Ohio.

Aides to all three said none of the hopefuls would comment until Kennedy's announcement. President Reagan, asked in Brazil if he was surprised, told a reporter, "Yes, I am."

One Kennedy aide said the decision not to run is for the 1984 campaign only, and does not rule out the possibility of seeking the presidency in the future. At his age, Kennedy could be expected to be a potential presidential candidate through at least the early 1990s.

The aides provided information to The Associated Press on condition that they not be named.

Until recently, Kennedy appeared almost certain to run again for the party nomination that he lost to former President Jimmy Carter in 1980.

But aides and other associates said that in addition to whatever political considerations were involved, members of Kennedy's family were strongly opposed to his potential candidacy and evidently persuaded him not to run over the Thanksgiving holiday.

None of the family could be reached for comment, but their concern almost certainly was focused in part on Kennedy's physical safety. Two of his brothers were assassinated — President John F. Kennedy in 1963 and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy in 1968 while running for the White House.

A Kennedy withdrawal from the 1984 race would presumably give a boost to Mondale, who runs second among Democrats in most public opinion polls. But it also would free Kennedy's many political operatives and supporters to join the cause of other potential contenders.

Other Democrats considering seeking the nomination include Sens. Gary Hart of Colorado and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, as well as former Florida Gov. Reuben Askew.

Hart, attending a fundraiser in Los Angeles, declined to say Tuesday night how he thought Kennedy's withdrawal from the race would affect his own potential presidential run.

"I don't have any reaction to it," said Hart, who has a committee to explore his possible candidacy.

Until recently, Kennedy's aides talked openly of a 1984 presidential race and made it clear they didn't want to repeat some of the organizational and other mistakes that helped doom his 1980 campaign.

Honor guard

Reagan lauds Brazil's 'steadying' influence

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — President Reagan, praising Brazil's stability on a troubled continent, is offering the military leaders of the financially ailing nation words of encouragement — but no dollars.

He opened his first official visit to South America with a full schedule of formal and informal meetings, beginning with a private conference with President Joao Baptista Figueiredo.

But before Reagan could focus on Latin American issues, he was asked by reporters while posing for pictures at the start of the meeting with Figueiredo whether he had been surprised by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's decision not to run for president in 1984.

"Yes," Reagan replied. Kennedy had been among the top Democratic contenders to oppose Reagan should he seek re-election.

Reagan, sitting with Figueiredo in the Brazilian president's office, refused to answer another question about Lebanon's request that the foreign peace-keeping troops in that nation be doubled.

On his way to the executive offices, Reagan passed through an honor guard in 19th century white tunics, white breeches decorated with red sash belts and gold helmets sprouting red and black plumes.

From the presidential offices in the modernistic Palacio do Planalto at the end of the capital's string of government buildings to a 300-acre ranch on the northern outskirts of town and then to a dinner at the foreign ministry, Reagan planned to spend more than seven hours with President Figueiredo.

Reagan, on a five-day tour of Brazil and three other Latin American nations arrived shortly before midnight Tuesay in this central Brazilian city built on the high plains 25 years ago.

"We all know of the strong and steady advance of Brazil both domestically and internationally," Reagan said. He praised the nation's Nov. 15 congressional and gubernatorial elections — the first in almost 18 years — as a demonstration of "Brazil's confidence in itself and its stability in freedom."

Figueiredo told Reagan: "Present difficulties not withstanding, we are fully confident that we will follow the road of democracy and progress chosen by the Brazilian people."

"It is high time," he said, that the United States and Brazil discuss their mutual problems and "move toward genuine and equitable partnership."

The streets of Brasilia were quiet when Reagan arrived, although anti-Reagan demonstrations took place earlier in Brasilia and Rio de Janeiro.

Reagan met last May with Figueiredo in Washington and Secretary of State George P. Shultz described the Brazilian on Tuesday as "a real guy, full of pep, vim and vigor...a very enjoyable person. He and the president hit it off well, and their conversation is likely to roam all over the world."

Figueiredo is the fifth in a string of military men who have ruled the country since a 1964 coup overthrew the last democratically elected government.

Shultz, demonstrating sensitivity to Latin American concern that the United States overlooks its hemispheric neighbors, reminded reporters during the 8½-hour flight that the "real world includes our neighbors, and don't you forget it."

Reagan's aides held out the possibility that during a three-hour visit to Figueiredo's ranch, Granja do Torto, the U.S. president would spend some time riding horseback with the Brazilian leader.

"If he is invited, he is going to ride," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes.

Reagan stressed on his arrival that he was on a "working visit." The schedule omitted many of the ceremonial events and late nights that left Reagan exhausted and dozing in the midst of his European trip last June.

"As long as we stay awake, he'll stay awake," said Speakes.

Reagan's trip has brought some criticism in Washington because he left town just as Congress was returning for a special session he requested.

"We'll be back by the time they start moving legislation," Speakes said.

While Reagan and his aides were stressing advancing democracy and inter-American cooperation during the trip, the Brazilians, who must borrow $14 billion to fuel an economy staggering under 100 percent inflation and a zero growth rate, are likely to focus on financial issues.

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Midland City Council Tuesday gave a green light to the purchase of 64 new police cruisers while temporarily slamming its brakes on a proposed taxi fare increase.

Councilman Steve Davidson, mayor pro tem while Mayor G. Thane Akins attends a National League of Cities meeting in Los Angeles, led the council through a 40-item agenda, lunch and at 4:50 p.m. recessed the regularly scheduled meeting until 9 a.m. Thursday.

The council decided to purchase 32 squad cars from each of two local auto dealerships, Frank See Chevrolet and Rogers Ford. In total, the 1983 four-door Chevrolet Impalas and Ford Crown Victorias will cost the city about $530,000.

Councilmen also voted to delay action on a proposed taxi fare increase pending further analysis of the rate structure.

IN OTHER ACTION, the council consented to rezoning provisions in the recently annexed 349 Ranch Estates subdivision, pondered improvements on the police vehicle impoundment lot, approved a contract with Curbside Services Inc., for skycap service at Midland Regional Airport and granted a local limousine service franchise to Schaler Rolls Royce.

During discussion of the police vehicle purchase, Councilman Jesse Hatfield suggested the council avoid buying 64 of an identical model car. Operating under the "all eggs in one basket" theory, Hatfield suggested the city hedge against buying 64 possible "lemons" by splitting its order between two manufacturers.

Bid price for 64 Chevrolet Impalas was $538,187.58, or $8,542.66 per vehicle. The quoted price for an identical number of Ford Crown Victorias — about $55 per vehicle cheaper — was $534,728.25, or $8,487.75 per vehicle.

Despite initial savings offered by the Ford bid, Hatfield said, "You go one (model) and we get 64 lemons, we've really got problems."

COUNCILMAN Tom Sloan disagreed with Hatfield, suggesting the city could save money on parts inventory expense by "standardizing" its purchase. "I just think that standardization is more important," said Sloan, who also suggested that city mechanics could more efficiently maintain a single type of vehicle.

"If they can work on a Ford, they can work on a Chevrolet, I think," replied Hatfield.

Fred Baker, public works director, said the city garage would require a larger parts inventory if different models were purchased. Baker said a surplus of parts could be a problem when the vehicles are later retired.

The council eventually voted 4-1 to split the purchase, with Councilman Gordon Marcum II voting against the move.

Baker later explained that new police cars were needed to replace retired cars, provide additional standby vehicles and supply transportation for 27 new officers scheduled to assume duty soon.

AFTER DISCUSSING some previously undisclosed difficulties in a proposed taxi rate hike, the councilmen voted to delay an increase until further adjustments are made to the rate schedule.

For a group traveling anywhere within Midland, the proposed rate structure calls for a $4.50 charge for each additional passenger more than two.

Councilman Carroll Thomas said if the

MMH president testifies as THFC hearings resume

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Cross-examination of Midland Memorial Hospital President Ray Branson opened this morning in the Texas Health Facilities Commission's hearing on certificate of need applications by Midland Memorial Hospital and Parkview Hospital.

Both hospitals are seeking additional beds. MMH wants to expand its current facility by 77 beds, while American Medical Corporation, which owns Parkview, would like to build a 110-bed hospital in northwest Midland, calling it Doctors Hospital of the Permian Basin.

AMC attorneys also are expected to question Don Davis, a representative from TriBrook Group Inc., MMH's management consultant.

The hearings ran Nov. 9-19, but recessed for Thanksgiving week and reopened this morning for cross-examination concerning MMH's planning documents.

Questioning this morning included cross-examination of Branson by AMC attorney Ace Pickens about the hospital's major objectives for the period Oct. 1, 1982, to Sept. 30, 1987.

Cross-examination also included MMH's plans on its recently-approved behavioral health center. Pickens zeroed in on two objectives which where were to be acted upon by the MMH governing boards this month. The master site plan includes the ultimate number of beds, programs and services to be located on the present hospital site and additional land that would be necessary to adequately support them.

Pickens asked if Branson had made any recommendation to the board concerning this objective. Branson testified that he and the hospital's planning committee would make a recommendation sometime before the board's scheduled meeting this month.

"We have not had the master site plan in our hands very long," Branson said, adding that after consultation with the MMH planning committee and the hospital's architect, it was determined that it is feasible to have 400 beds at the MMH site.

Another objective to be acted upon this month is a professional office building near the hospital. Branson said this is a goal that has not been met.

In testimony concerning the hospital's approved behavioral health center, Branson said the site for the MMH center, which would be located at Wad-

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Sarah Favours will clean house. Mike Wotring will landscape lawns or fix a broken stereo. John Harmon can provide an evening of gospel music. Someone needing a nurse's aide can call Carolyn Hill.

It's not a page from the want ads, but a growing list of laid-off auto workers who have turned their union local into a job referral center.

"Rent a Laid-Off Worker" is the latest undertaking of United Autoworkers Local 969 to help members whose unemployment benefits have been terminated.

"We would like to do a lot more," said local vice president Don Deibel. "In view of the finances, membership is down and there's no way to help them. We're hoping this will get off the ground and we will help some people."

Workers whose benefits have run out can fill out a questionnaire at the local, listing the jobs they can do. The local then acts as a clearinghouse for potential employers, leaving salary negotiations up to the individuals.

So far, about 50 workers have signed up for the program, but few referrals have been made.

Dean Shoemaker, who made $50 for moving furniture, has achieved a certain celebrity status since the program has been publicized.

"I was the guest on a Detroit talk show last night," Shoemaker said Tuesday. "At first, we weren't getting many calls, but then other auto workers started calling in asking about the program."

Last week, Shoemaker's $206 weekly benefits expired. It's been a year since the 33-year-old auto worker was earning more than $400 a week at the General Motors Corp. Fisher Body plant in Columbus, where more than 1,500 employees have been laid off in the past year.

"We were lucky," Shoemaker says of his wife, Valerie, and their 2½-year-old son, Joshua. "When I was laid off, we weren't in extremely bad shape. We'll pay one bill one month and let it slide the next. This month we'll pay rent and gas, next month it's the phone.

"My wife is looking for a job and I'm still looking. We're at the point where we'll have to take anything we can get. I'm getting down to applying for the $3.50 and $4 an hour jobs."

De la Madrid to continue Lopez Portillo's policy

Although victory was a foregone conclusion for the party that has won every presidential election for 53 years, de la Madrid traveled the length and the breadth of the country during his nine-month electoral campaign.

He boasts of having covered more ground than any candidate before him — 60,000 miles crisscrossing all 31 Mexican states.

De la Madrid, to be 48 on Dec. 16, is more accustomed to planning budgets and guiding economies. He served as budget and planning secretary in the administration of outgoing President Jose Lopez Portillo from 1979 until Sept. 25, 1981, when he was named the presidential heir-apparent.

De la Madrid has pledged to continue the foreign policy of Lopez Portillo, which includes continued close relations with the United States "not based on mere proximity, but on cordial and sincere friendship."

He has also said he would maintain friendly relations with Cuba and Nicaragua and, in keeping with Lopez Portillo's policy, try to act as a go-between in contacts between Cuba and the United States.

De la Madrid has publicly supported Lopez Portillo's economic measures and in his old post played a key role in designing Mexico's strategy of heavy foreign borrowing to fuel high economic growth rates.

But sources say he had little or no input in recent economic measures that include expropriation of the nation's banking system and the imposition of strict exchange controls. It is widely believed he disagrees with the measures, and changes are expected.

De la Madrid was born in the western city of Colima on Dec. 12, 1934. His father, a lawyer, died when de la Madrid was 2 years old. His mother moved to Mexico City and opened a boarding house to support him and his elder sister, Alicia.

He entered Mexico's national University when he was 18, was graduated with honors in law, and was admitted to the bar in 1958.

His administrative career began in the legal department of a state bank while he was a student. He later moved to Banco de Mexico, the nation's central bank, where he was offered a scholarship to study for a master's degree in public administration at Harvard.

De la Madrid's teachers at Harvard, where he studied from September 1964 to May 1965, included the celebrated liberal economist John Kenneth Galbraith.

Since de la Madrid's return to Mexico, he has held several government finance posts.

He married Paloma Cordero in 1959, and they have five children — Margarita, 22, who is studying tourism and hotel administration; Miguel, 21, who is studying business administration; Enrique, 20, a law student; Federico, 16; and Gerardo, 11.

Mrs. de la Madrid has said her husband enjoys going to movies and plays, listening to classical and Mexican folk music and visiting art shows. His favorite artist is Mexico's Jose Maria Velasco, a painter of rich landscapes that evoke a time when Mexico was a simpler, easier going place to live.

Mexico's new president likes to eat well but keeps trim by jogging and doesn't need to be placed on any special diets, de la Madrid's personal physician said recently.

Many also see a man under a lot of pressure.

An official portrait that started going up in place of Lopez Portillo's in government offices here two months ago shows a close-up of de la Madrid sweating profusely.

"If he's sweating that much already, imagine how he'll be when he takes power," said one executive with the state-run telephone company.

First lady to maintain low profile

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's new first lady, Paloma Cordero de la Madrid, has maintained a modest, low profile that contrasts sharply with the flashy reput 'ion of her predecessor, Carmen Romano de Lopez Portillo.

The soft-spoken wife of Mexico's next president has stayed out of the limelight in the year since Miguel de la Madrid was tapped as presidential heir-apparent.

Although she may well serve the new government as head of a public charity organization, as outgoing president Jose Lopez Portillo's wife did, Mrs. de la Madrid has said: "The help I can provide will not be as a government official, but as a collaborator whose loyalty is beyond question."

Mrs. de la Madrid's maiden name "Cordero" literally means lamb, while her first name "Paloma" means dove.

Born in Mexico City in 1937, she was introduced to de la Madrid by her brother, Luis Cordero Tapia, who became friends with the future president while serving with him in the military.

Mrs. de la Madrid accompanied her husband when he went to Boston to obtain a master's degree in public administration at Harvard University in 1964-65.

She also traveled the length and breadth of Mexico during his nine-month campaign for the presidency.

Of that experience she said in an official biography: "What most impressed me was the great vitality of the people and their enormous human potential, which undoubtedly is Mexico's fundamental wealth."

President's absolute rule traced to political party

MEXICO CITY (AP) — With his oath of office, Miguel de la Madrid today rises from a career of financial planning to virtual absolute rule of Mexico for the next six years.

Historians trace the absolutism of Mexican government and the awe with which many Mexicans view "el senor presidente" to ancient Aztec civilization, when despotic warrior priests built empires for themselves and the fierce gods they claimed to serve.

Another more recent factor is "Caudillismo" — a longstanding political tradition throughout Latin American whereby the man who is president, although perhaps not a dictator, rules almost singlehandedly.

Contemporary political observers, however, attribute the power de la Madrid will accept with the presidency in today's ceremonies to the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has won every major election here in the past 53 years.

THE PARTY chooses its presidential candidates in an almost ritualistic closed-door ceremony every six years when the outgoing president, as kingmaker, hand-picks his successor and submits his choice to the party.

There is no record of the party ever having rejected its leader's choice as to who should succeed him. Party members who give any public indication of being dissatisfied with the selection have a way of disappearing from influence.

An example of the sweeping powers held by Mexican leaders was outgoing President Jose Lopez Portillo's expropriation of the nation's private banking system and imposition of strict currency controls on Sept. 1.

Although Lopez Portillo said the measures were only enacted after a broad political consultation process, private sector spokesmen complained the measures should have been submitted for approval by Congress before taking effect.

A legislative debate may have slowed enactment of the measures, but it seems doubtful it would have quashed them.

THE MEXICAN Constitution says the chief executive should rule together with judicial and legisla- tive branches of the government, but these are controlled by the party's political apparatus and rarely defy the president's wishes.

De la Madrid has made the excesses of government — primarily corruption — a dominant theme of his political campaign and has said he will seek to modernize and strengthen the judicial branch.

He is widely expected to retain much of the absolute power held by his predecessors, however.

Mexican presidents are limited by law to a single term, and former chief executives have rarely held public office after that.

By JAMES T. YENCKEL

The nightmare pressures of a Boston patrolman's life were mounting — "riots, protests...little children burned to death. It's sickening. You go around a corner and cry. I got hardened to it, but I never got used to it. I'd take anti-anxiety pills.

"I was your average real cop. I rushed people to the hospital...the burning buildings. The boring calls. The standing in blood. The uncertainty.

"You can do everything right for 15 years and then in a split-second decision, you can mess up once, and you're in trouble. There's always that pressure."

Besides popping pills he took to heavy drinking. Ultimately, thoughts of suicide crept in.

"I put a gun to my head more than once," says Donovan, then a 12-year veteran of the force, in his late thirties with a wife and seven children. "I took my cruiser and aimed it at a tree, but I pulled out at the last minute."

KNOWING THEN THAT HE was about to hit bottom, "I asked for help."

For a policeman raised on the Hollywood image of the strong, silent cop able to handle anything, conceding frailty was one of the hardest things he ever did. To shatter the macho dark-blue uniform and side-holster facade would be unmanly, he thought, even while inside his guts trembled at what the next call on the car radio might bring.

Speaking up, however, turned out to be "the biggest favor I did for myself." He has subsequently become internationally known in the law-enforcement world for his work in counseling other police officers, encouraging them to voice their fears as a way of easing them.

Still holding the rank of patrolman on the Boston force, Donovan, now 50, is director of that department's Police Stress Program; president of the International Law Enforcement Stress Society (which he formed); founding editor of "Police Stress," a quarterly journal that goes out to police agencies around the world, and a board member of the American institute of Stress. Even the license plate on his battered Ford LTD reads "STRESS."

ONCE OVER THE HURDLE of asking for help, Donovan had himself admitted to an alcoholism recovery program, where he became aware of how major a role police stress — and his inability to deal with it — had played in his descent into alcoholism. He became interested in the research of stress expert Hans Selye of Montreal, and later studied under him.

Donovan — "I'm in my 13th year of sobriety" — became convinced that the kind of peer counseling and group meetings practiced by Alcoholics Anonymous would be valuable in treating other officers, "a cop helping a cop." This idea led to the formation in 1973 of the stress unit, one of the first of its kind in the nation. About 100 police departments now have stress programs.

Donovan has been invited to lecture on police stress by Harvard, Notre Dame, the FBI, the Secret Service and the International Chiefs of Police Association. He was the keynote speaker Nov. 6 at a men's-issues conference (co-sponsored by the Coalition of Free Men and Adelphi University), where the topic is "Freeing Men for Healthier Life Styles."

THAT, OF COURSE, IS the theme of Donovan's new life. Stress can be "a killer," and he is hard put to think of another profession more stressful than police work.

"The public's expectation of a cop," he has written, "requires that he be all things to all people — a police officer, doctor, lawyer, judge, juror, psychiatrist, social worker, ambulance driver, plumber, veterinarian, locksmith and every other occupation in the public domain. It is an impossible demand.

"A cop is never off duty. He's paid to look for trouble — to look for the negative in people. It causes trouble in marriages."

As the internal tensions mount, a great many police officers, Donovan has found, have no safety-release valve. The result is that as a profession police work ranks high in causing depression, domestic strife, alcoholism and suicide.

For many, he believes, the blame can be laid on the "male macho mystique."

"Did you ever see a cop approach a car he has stopped?" he asks. "He looks like a 10-foot gladiator. You don't know underneath he's a pussycat or a troubled man."

AS A RED-HAIRED ROOKIE (5-9, 135 pounds) he used to ask himself, "Who's scared of me?"

The macho cop sees inner fears as a sign of weakness and tries to hide them not only from the public, but from colleagues. But, insists Donovan, there is nothing to be ashamed of. "Those teenagers are testing you — it's scary."

Not, of course, that he believes cops shouldn't project authority. But they should know when "to take off that armor — to be human." The focus of the Boston program is on getting the officer to open up — to "ventilate."

The "No. 1 thing I tell them," says Donovan, "if something is bothering you, you've got to talk to someone."

Donovan operates out of a ramshackle white-frame cottage on the grounds of a city hospital at the edge of South Boston. The site was picked deliberately to isolate it from police headquarters.

The last thing a macho cop wants his cronies to know, says Donovan, is that he has sought help from the stress program. If an officer requests it, Donovan or one of his 30 volunteer counselors — all members of the force — will meet him or her in a car, bar or any other place of the officer's choice. Donovan wears civilian clothes — typically jeans and a sports shirt — to separate himself from department officialdom.

"HEY, ARE YOU thinking of 'swallowing' your gun?" Donovan asked a policeman recently, and then related his own contemplation of suicide.

Not infrequently, a policeman will start crying. "That's why we've got the tissue right there."

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico has become the principal supplier of crude oil to the United States, slightly ahead of Saudi Arabia, the National Energy Commission said in a report made public earlier this week.

The Mexican state petroleum monopoly PEMEX supplied 14.7 percent of all the oil imported by the United States during the first semester of this year, and during the second semester American companies bought 32.5 percent of the oil exported by Mexico, the report said.

Mexican oil exports to the United States averaged 690,000 barrels a day during the third quarter of the year, and are averaging 886,000 barrels daily in the last quarter.

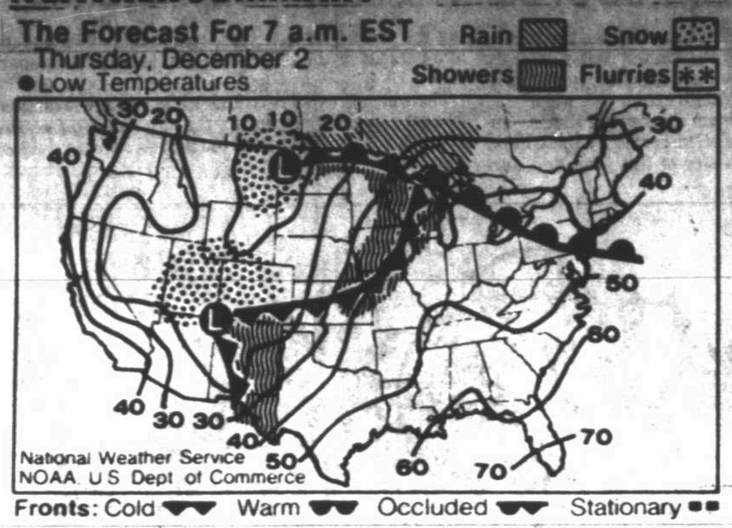
WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

Showers and snow are forecast for the Southwest and from the northern Plains into the upper Great Lakes and eastern Plains, according to the National Weather Service. Mostly cloudy skies with mild temperatures are predicted for the East.

Return of winter weather forecast

After a few misleading days of mild temperatures and calm breezes, the National Weather Service forecast indicates turbulent, chilly winter weather should return to Midland.

According to the NWS, tonight should be partly cloudy with a low sagging into the low-30s. Winds tonight should be southwesterly and strong at 15-20 mph. Thursday should also be partly, windy and colder, with temperatures peaking in the upper-50s and winds gusty at 15-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 68 dropped 13 degrees short of the record high 81 set in 1946. The overnight low of 49 was easily warmer than the record low 19 for this date set in 1979.

December begins dry, with no precipitation in the month's first several hours. Precipitation for the year totals 13.25 inches.

Sunset tonight is at 5:44 p.m.; sunrise Thursday is at 7:32.

Storm rocks coast

By BETSY BROWN KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

A fast, ruthless storm bulldozed across California and careened into the Rockies today, with driving rain and heavy snow that left six people dead and four people missing. The storm cut power to hundreds of thousands of homes and flooded rich farmlands.

It stomped into Arizona and Nevada, blasting more rain and snow, and kept going. Winter storm warnings were issued today for Utah and the Colorado Rockies, with a storm watch in Montana, according to the National Weather Service.

The storm, the worst of the season, battered California on Tuesday from San Francisco to San Diego, dumping snow as fast as 3 inches an hour in the Sierra Nevada; ripping up power poles, trees and roofs with winds up to 78 mph; triggering mudslides and sinking boats.

The assault came just one day after the National Weather Service forecast a cold, wet winter for the West.

"It was a complete mess," said California Highway Patrol Officer Jerry Skelton in Los Angeles. "Trees down everywhere, lines down everywhere, cars and traffic accidents everywhere."

As the storm moved east, it blanketed northern and central Nevada with a foot or more of snow and flooded Las Vegas streets with rain. Two avalanches closed roads in the mountains.

In Arizona, 10 inches of snow fell in Flagstaff by Tuesday night and school buses had to be towed. In Kingman, wind gusts were clocked at 84 mph, and in Phoenix, a building roof collapsed from the weight of rain.

The storm struck California with little warning as winds shifted from light to 50 mph "within a matter of minutes," said Keith Ewing, the state's chief National Weather Service forecaster.

As the storm plowed inland into Northern California, rain combined with record high tides to rip a 50-foot hole in a levee, flooding Venice Tract, a 3,000-acre island on the Sacramento-San Joaquin River delta.

Floodwaters were expected to reach 15 feet over the rich farmland.

Winds gusted to 82 mph on the Santa Cruz coast and turned a parked Boeing 707 jet in a half-circle at San Francisco International Airport.

Falling trees knocked down wires and cut power to up to 400,000 Northern California electric customers. But workers restored power to all but about 22,500 customers by late Tuesday.

By mid-afternoon, 73 inches of snow had accumulated in Norden, Calif., and avalanche warnings were issued for the eastern Sierra.

Four people were missing in the storm and at least six people died, including a 4-year-old boy who was swept into the De Luze River when his family's Jeep overturned. Two men died in San Diego County traffic accidents, a 66-year-old Los Angeles man died in a car-bus accident on a rain-slick street, and a Camarillo woman was missing after her car hit a bridge abutment and she was flipped into a creek.

Heavy winds toppled a 110-foot crane in Long Beach, killing the operator. In Humboldt Bay, a man's body washed ashore after his crab boat broke up in rough waters and two other men were missing. A Napa man was missing after being swept into stormy Bodega Bay.

In Southern California, the storm dumped 2.33 inches of rain in less than 12 hours and washed a $500,000 home into the sea at Malibu.

In Long Beach and San Diego Bay, dozens of pleasure boats were ripped from their moorings. In Marina del Rey, wind gusts of up to 70 mph blasted panes of glass out of high-rise office buildings, but no one was injured, authorities said.

Pondering where to start their cleanup of Fulton Avenue in Van Nuys, Calif., are city firefighters and Department of Water and Power crewmen. Fifteen utility poles, stretching for more than a block, were toppled by high winds that accompanied a severe storm which hit the California coast Tuesday.

new rates were approved, a family of four traveling from the airport to their home would be socked with a $9 surcharge despite sharing the same destination.

Several councilmen suggested that a fee of 50 cents-$1 for "extra" passengers would be more reasonable.

Thomas went on to illustrate a problem with proposed rates between the airport and various points in Midland.

A $13.50 base charge is proposed on trips from the airport to points north of Loop 250. Thomas noted that the rate structure becomes messy if two people living near each other share a ride. He said it's unclear whether the base rate would be charged twice, or whether the person dropped off first would pay $13.50 and the second person would cover the additional mileage.

With inconsistencies and inequities apparent, the council voted unanimously to delay action until Dec. 14 and asked James Brown, city manager, to explore further fare refinements.

AFTER LENGTHY discussion, the council voted 3-2 to rezone from agricultural estate to local retail a series of lots along State Highway 349's east side. A proposal to change from agricultural estate to single family zoning several tracts in the southeast and north central portions of 349 Ranchland Estates was approved unanimously, along with rezoning from agricultural estate to planned district several tracts in the subdivision's northeast sector.

Prior to the action, all of 349 Ranchland Estates subdivision was zoned agricultural estate.

Councilmen Thomas and Davidson opposed the local retail zoning, fearing it could set a precedent for a future glut of retail development along highway 349. But Marcum, Sloan and Hatfield voted in favor of the rezoning.

Fearing another precedent setting action, the council rejected an easement request by West Texas Welders Supply Inc., which sought permission to extend underground phone cables from its building on the north side of West Dakota Avenue to a new structure on the south side.

Baker said the city, historically, has not permitted installation of a private line in a public right-of-way. He said private records of a line's location could easily be lost and the line may be unwittingly damaged in the future.

Proposed improvements for the police vehicle impoundment area will proceed after councilmen approved a resolution for the project. Suggested changes include enlarging the parking area, skirting it with chain link fence, erecting additional lights and posting a 24-hour guard at the lot.

COUNCILMEN approved plans, specifications and advertisement for bids on a new, 42-inch sanitary sewer line to carry sewage into the city's treatment plant and relieve the heavy load now borne by an old, cracking 27-inch pipe. The council also authorized adjustment of a Texas-New Mexico Pipeline Co., pipeline to accommodate the new sewage pipe.

The council passed a motion to reject all bids and authorized re-advertisement for bids on the proposed Hogan Park restroom expansion.

A specific use permit also was approved for Lupe Castillo, who requested permission to operate a day nursery for up to 34 children in her home at 912 Canyon Drive.

Although the councilmen withdrew to executive session twice, no announcement was made on progress toward the appointment of a successor for Col. Wilson Banks, retiring city aviation director.

Reagan says he'd veto public works jobs plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has told Republican congressional leaders he firmly opposes a $5 billion public works jobs plan Democrats are drafting and will veto the measure if it reaches his desk.

At the same time, a Reagan administration plan for a 5-cent-a-gallon hike in the federal gasoline tax to finance $5.5 billion worth of highway, bridge and mass transit repairs is moving toward consideration in the full House and Senate.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis lobbied for the administration measure Tuesday before the Senate Finance Committee and was making a similar appearance before the House Ways and Means Committee today. Both panels hope to draft their own versions of the plan this week.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., says Democrats hope to attach their public works measure to a stopgap spending bill that Congress must pass before adjourning in mid-December. Without the so-called continuing resolution, federal agencies and programs will technically go broke Dec. 17.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said that during Tuesday's meeting Reagan said, "if we garland it (the stopgap measure) up with all sorts of other things, he would have no hesitation" to veto it. "There's no doubt about it."

"He said he'd veto it," said Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., who also attended the meeting. "He didn't care" if the bill reached him "the day before Christmas" and Congress was about to adjourn.

Even if Democrats, who control the House, pass their jobs measure in that chamber, it faces a bleak future in the GOP-controlled Senate, despite O'Neill's claim that Senate Republicans may be willing to meet Democrats "half way."

"I don't close my mind to other jobs legislation," Baker said. But he added it would be a "heroic-size accomplishment" for Congress just to pass the highway construction program the administration backs.

Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., said Senate Republican leaders agree that "the 5-cent gas tax and those jobs (it is supposed to create) will be the major and only action" on jobs during the lame duck session.

Conte and Hatfield have expressed interest in creating more than the 320,000 jobs the administration estimates in its highway construction legislation.

But, Hatfield said, the $5 billion Democratic plan "becomes a tremendous target and the president will veto it."

ley Avenue and Loop 250 is a suitable site for such a facility. However, Branson said, it is not an accessible site for Permian Basin residents for a general acute care hospital. Doctors Hospital of the Permian Basin has proposed to build its 110-bed general acute care facility directly across the street from the proposed site of MMH's behavioral health center.

Pickens asked Branson why the hospital has not begun construction on the behavioral health center. Branson said it is now in the hands of an ad hoc committee of the MMH planning committee to determine financial feasibility due to pending court action. AMC originally sought to convert the existing 60-bed Parkview Hospital into a psychiatric hospital. That application was rejected, however, by the THFC, and AMC is now pursuing the matter in Travis County Court.

Testimony was expected to continue through Thursday, but a THFC decision is not expected until late January or early February.

U.S. likely to double troops in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration probably will double the number of American troops in Lebanon to 2,400 in response to an appeal from the Lebanese president, U.S. and diplomatic sources say.

The object is to hasten withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops from Lebanon. Arrangements for a withdrawal are proceeding much slower than the United States had hoped, in part because the Israelis are demanding political concessions from the Lebanese government first, the U.S. officials say.

"The Begin government (Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin) wants something to take to the Israeli electorate and say, 'See, it was worth it. It was right,'" a State Department official said Tuesday.

The Italians and French, who along with the United States make up a three-nation peacekeeping force totaling about 3,400, also have been asked by Lebanon's president, Amin Gemayel, to increase their troop contingents.

Gemayel believes having more peacekeeping troops will lead to an earlier withdrawal by the Israelis and Syrians, with the Palestinians departing with the Syrians.

Diplomatic sources here say the continuing presence in Lebanon of large armies, peacekeeping units and domestic militias is creating an explosive situation where a mistake by one side could set off a major new outbreak of fighting that could involve Americans.

There are now about 1,200 American Marines in Lebanon. U.S. State Department and diplomatic sources, who asked not to be identified, said Gemayel wants the number of Americans increased to 5,000, but the administration probably will agree to approximately 2,400.

Alan Romberg, the deputy State Department spokesman, acknowledged Tuesday that a request for more U.S. troops had been received and said the administration would actively consider it.

A senior State Department official had told The Asscociated Press the same thing in an interview last week.

Another U.S. official, who did not want to be identified, said Tuesday it was all but certain the administration would decide to dispatch another 1,200 American troops, although he cautioned a decision was not final.

Gemayel has been quoted as saying he wants the force increased to 30,000. The British, South Koreans and Dutch all have said they would be willing to contribute and may do so, officials here said.

Romberg had no further comment on the Lebanese request except to say the American response would be consistent with the U.S. objective of promoting the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

Philip C. Habib, Reagan's special Mideast envoy, is trying to negotiate a two-stage withdrawal of foreign forces, with an initial pullback of Israeli and Syrian troops to the border regions followed by a complete pullout later on.

The precise mission of a reinforced peacekeeping force isn't clear, but the senior official told the AP that the American contingent could be deployed along the Beirut-to-Damascus highway east of Beirut, evidently to help supervise a disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces and guard against any return of guerrilla forces to the area.

On Monday, the State Department expressed disappointment that direct negotiations between Israel and Lebanon on the withdrawal of Israeli forces have yet to begin.

Probe clears Odessa housing panel

ODESSA — A four-month federal investigation into the operations of the Odessa Housing Authority has cleared the OHA of any wrongdoing in the way it disburses money for its various projects, according to officials from the U.S. Inspector General's office, the agency that conducted the probe.

IG representatives met with city and OHA officials Tuesday and said although there is some question as to procedural methods, no evidence of criminal wrongdoing was uncovered.

Among six or so procedural questions raised by the investigation are salary and travel policies employed by the OHA. They were termed "not major," however, and the IG's office is not contemplating any criminal charges in the matter, officials said.

The federal audit revolved around how some $4 million in OHA had been disbursed to finance four housing programs in Odessa during the past year, including 300 low-cost apartments for the poor and elderly.

Officials declined to say what prompted the investigation, which began in July, and said a final draft of their preliminary report should be completed in a month.

Residential mortgage firms wait for falling rates to spur buying

By DON G. CAMPBELL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

What if you scheduled a parade and nobody showed up for it?

An increasingly outspoken segment of the residential mortgage industry feels that there is an uncomfortable analogy here between the expectations — and the realities — of what will happen in the housing market on that golden day when mortgage interest rates again become livable.

And while not yet "livable" by anyone's definition of the term — they've dropped, nationally, from about 17 percent as recently as July to about 14 percent now, with scattered instances of interest rates in the 12 1-2 to 13 percent range — it is no longer considered irresponsibly optimistic to talk of 10 percent-to-12 percent mortgages as routine occurrences.

When that happens, conventional thinking has it, the floodgates of pent-up demand for housing will open, new home building will skyrocket and the worst real estate slump since the '30s will be no more than a bitter aftertaste in the country's mouth.

"All of which is well and good," one knowledgeable insider in the mortgage lending business says, dryly, "except that it overlooks one little thing: Where's the money going to come from? What we're going to get as interest rates come down is a lot of applause to an empty house."

THE SCENARIO: a pressing, "catch-up," need for anywhere from 1.8 million to 2.5 million new housing units a year for the next three to five years, versus the economic resources to build, at the maximum, 1.3 million units a year. Worse yet: a home construction industry that has been so dismantled, and abandoned, in the past three years that "if we had all the money in the world," one industry spokesman says, "we don't have the delivery system to provide what's needed."

Admittedly, such gloom flies in the face of recent predictions by Michael Sumichrast, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, who sees first mortgage interest rates declining to 12 percent or 13 percent by the end of this year and, next year, a one-third jump in new housing starts from this year's depressed tally of 1 million units.

If not a boom triggered by a return to interest rates that would bring back into the fold millions of would-be home buyers — hungry for housing but, for the past three years, fenced off by their inability to handle monthly payments of gargantuan proportions — why not?

BECAUSE, IN THE opinion of such diverse experts in the field as Leonard Shane, chief executive officer of Huntington Beach, Calif.'s, Mercury Savings and the incoming chairman of the United States League of Savings Associations, and Fred E. Case of the University of California at Los Angeles' Graduate School of Management, two fundamental and wrenching changes have taken place, politically and in the money markets, that take the housing industry back to the early 1900s.

"What we have now," according to Case, "is a situation in Washington where housing has no priority at all. It's a bipartisan move that began under Carter and is now firmly in place. We're back to the pre-FHA and VA days where there was no subsidization for housing and down payments were in the 30 percent-to-40 percent range."

It was an era characterized thusly in an article prepared for the Conference Board magazine, "Across the Board," by George Sternlieb and James W. Hughes, two urban planning experts associated with Rutgers University:

"When current housing mechanisms are examined, there is a dreadful feeling of deja vu. In essence we have spent the last four years reinventing just those perils and shortcomings of the market which were thought long cured. Before the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, for example, it was customary for a home buyer to obtain two or three separate mortgage loans.

THIS WAS NECESSITATED by the low level of coverage of first mortgages — the latter, in turn were relatively short term, many running for five years or less.

"They were not amortized and the balloon payments fell due at the end of the short term of the mortgage. Homeowner aspirants of today find such strictures commonplace. We have reinvented the housing equivalent of the Dark Ages."

But even with housing on the back burner as far as Washington's priorities are concerned, why shouldn't the release of the pent-up demand for housing — unleashed by a dropping of interest rates to the 10 percent-to-12 percent level — prove an irresistible lure for lenders, eager to provide the long-term funds for new construction?

"Because," according to the local Los Angeles area consultant to the lending industry, "recent legislation, such as the Monetary Control Act of 1980 and the Garn Bill — both designed to 'deregulate' the financial institutions — have practically mandated the savings and loan industry to get out of residential mortgages. And the banks didn't want to get into them in the first place — they don't like long-term lending.

"So, you've got the S&Ls and the banks competing in all sorts of new areas, and offering all sorts of new services — money market funds, going into the brokerage business — everything but home mortgages."

"NOT ONLY HAS THERE been a major change in national policy — in the deprioritization of home ownerships — without a public debate," the U.S. League of Savings Associations' Shane adds, "but there has been a total destruction of the maturity situation in the financial markets — maturities have been foreshortened as never before, from X number of years and months to one day! How can a lender think in terms of a 30-year mortgage any longer?

"What we have is deregulation for its own sake with no recognition being taken of the unique nature of housing. It's different from all other forms of credit."

While no one pretends that the S&Ls will completely flee the mortgage market, the move out of it, overall, is already under way and, inevitably, James W. Christian, chief economist for the Chicago-based U.S. League of Savings Associations, says, some individual S&Ls will, indeed, abandon home mortgages altogether.

"I don't see it drying up," he adds, "because it will be a profitable area of the total credit market over the next decade — but with variable rates, certainly. It's true that we're going to be a much more diversified industry than ever before, and some individual S&Ls in unique situations will find themselves much more geared to commercial lending, and the chief officer may say, 'That's what I'm going to get into.' In effect, 'I'm going to be a bank.'"

Phone company seeking paging services operation

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Rochester Telephone Corp. is seeking permission today to operate paging services in eight large cities, including Houston and the Dallas-Fort Worth area, from Boston to Los Angeles.

The nation's sixth largest independent phone company is expected to be among dozens of operators filing applications today as the Federal Communications Commission opens a new band of pager frequencies around 900 megahertz.

"Based on our studies, we believe radio paging has a tremendous growth potential," James Henderson, the company president, said in a news release Tuesday.

Australians greet holiday season with dampened spirits, dry yards

The drought's chokehold on Australia's economy faces the nation of 14 million with a "national disaster." Its grip is felt throughout the massive country:

— Whole truckloads of sheep are sold for 50 cents by farmers who have no water or fodder for them.

— Rural showers spit out dark, foul-smelling water. In some areas, residents pay for mucky liquid dug out from dried riverbeds.

— In Broken Hill, 600 miles west of this capital city, 30,000 residents receive water in an odd-even rationing system similar to those used in the United States during gasoline shortages.

— City-dwellers and suburbanites watch lawns brown and dust accumulate on cars as local governments impose tight restrictions on water use. In Melbourne, Australia's second-largest city, residents face fines of up to $1,000 under restrictions taking effect tonight.

The arrival of summer, and its promise of 100-degree days, has deepened pre-Christmas gloom in a country already hurt by its worst recession since the 1930s.

"If there is no rain between now and Christmas, I would expect it would be approaching a disaster situation," said Peter Abbottsmith, an engineer in Eurobadalla, 150 miles south of Sydney.

Michael Davidson, president of the National Farmers' Federation, Monday called the drought a "national disaster" that could cost the country $7.5 billion, a figure equal to 4 percent of the nation's Gross National Product and the equivalent of $7.1 billion in U.S. dollars.

He said 110,000 of Australia's 170,000 farms were drought-hit. This year's wheat crop is estimated at 8.62 million tons, down from nearly 17.5 million tons. Victoria, normally a wheat-exporting region, has begun importing wheat for the first time in 37 years.

Ralph Hunt, minister for transport and construction, has urged the Australian government to allocate funds to sink wells and build more dams. There are no national rainfall figures, but Hunt called the drought the worst of the century.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics said the drought has seriously affected 80 per cent of Australia's large ranches, which raise 93 million sheep and 14 million cattle.

The drought has been accompanied by an outbreak of bushfires in the eastern states. Last weekend, 64-year-old William Benjamin Paxton of Kingston, Ohio, burned to death in the Blue Mountains area.

Unemployment officially stands at 8.2 percent. Labor Party opposition leader Bill Hayden predicts it will reach 10 percent by January. Inflation, meanwhile, spirals at 12.3 percent, while the country's manufacturing industry is in a nose dive.

Bureau of Statistics figures show that as of October, production of steel, cement, fabrics and consumer durables such as television sets and refrigerators had plunged 40 per cent.

With economic hard times trimming Christmas shopping lists, some residents wish for simple things once taken for granted.

"Water is very, very scarce and there'll soon place a ban on flushing toilets," said Doug McLeod, police constable in Cobargo, 175 miles south of Sydney. "The bore (well) water is so smelly and dirty we can't enjoy a decent shower."

Women's exercise class 'seriously' strains building

PENZANCE, England (AP) — A reducing class for overweight women that met on City Hall's second floor got off to a shaky start when the exercises "seriously overstressed" the building.

But things are back on a solid footing now that class is held in a ground-floor room.

"The building literally moved every time they were up there doing their exercises," said Desmond Hosken, secretary of the Penwith District Council. "We had to report it to the council."

"Vibration in the ceiling was becoming more prominent," Hosken said. "The structural engineer reported that the timber joints were seriously overstressed."

Janet Blackbourn, said the class, which was grounded Monday, now exercises in a room next to the magistrate's court.

"We can't do any harm there," she said.

Mexico's airline workers postpone strike

By The Associated Press

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Airline ground workers voted overwhelmingly to postpone for a week a strike against major foreign airlines serving Mexico to avoid disturbing the inauguration of president-elect Miguel de la Madrid.

The strike, planned in sympathy with striking ground personnel at Mexicana Airlines, was delayed in order to avoid political implications, a union spokesman said earlier this week.

Mexicana's 7,323 ground workers walked out 29 days ago demanding a 50 percent salary increase. Negotiations deadlocked when the state-controlled airline drew the line at 25 percent.

Mexicana workers currently average $170 to $645 a month.

The Mexican Aviation Workers Union had threatened a walk out unless some progress was made in negotiations with Mexicana by noon Monday. Foreign airlines involved include Eastern, Air France, Varig, Japan Air Lines, Iberia, Taca, Lacsa, Panama, Aeroperu and Avianca.

Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher waves as she leaves London's No. 10 Downing St. Tuesdayfor the House of Commons. Earlier in the day a package being opened by an official exploded, injuring one person. The prime minister ws not in her office at the time and was not involed in the explosion.

Scotland Yard to begin review of security at No. 10 Downing St.

LONDON (AP) — Scotland Yard has begun an urgent review of security at 10 Downing Street after a firebomb mailed to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher there evaded detection and ignited, scorching the face and hair of her office manager.

The Financial Times reported today that "five or six suspicious packages have been intercepted over the past five years" at the prime minister's official London residence and that "one was an explosive device."

The newspaper gave no other details but said the failure to detect the eight-inch-by-four-inch package Tuesday showed "some remarkable loopholes in security arrangements at No. 10."

Four similar incendiary devices mailed to the leaders of Britain's three main opposition parties at the House of Commons were intercepted Tuesday and safely defused, police said.

A Scotland Yard press officer said Downing Street messenger staff became suspicious of the lightweight package and passed it to the prime minister's office manager Peter Taylor, 54, who took it to his first-floor office. It ignited as he opened it, inflicting superficial burns to his face and hair.

The package contained the heads of matches, a strip of emery paper and an inflammable liquid, the spokesman said. Neither Mrs. Thatcher, who was holding a meeting in her study on the second floor, nor anybody else in the building was hurt.

The charred remains of a note in the parcel addressed to Mrs. Thatcher said it was sent by the previously unknown Animal Rights Militia, Scotland Yard said.

The four devices spotted by Post Office staff at the Commons were addressed to Labor Party leader Michael Foot, Liberal leader David Steel, Social Democratic Party leader Roy Jenkins, and Timothy Raison, minister of state at the Home Office, the government official responsible for animal legislation.

Post Office officials said all mail bound for Downing Street, government offices, ministers and other politicians is subject to special screening at Post Office sorting centers by staff using X-ray machines and other electronic devices.

But 10 Downing Street, where between 2,000 and 3,000 items of mail are received each week, does not have any mail screening equipment of its own, the London Times said. It said the nearest screening device was at Cannon Row police station 100 yards away.

All mail is re-examined on receipt in the Downing Street sorting room and Taylor is informed of anything suspicious. It is up to him whether to send an item to Cannon Row police station for examination, open it himself or call in the security coordinator.

NATO countries support Reagan's 'zero option'

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The Western alliance has urged the Soviet Union to make new disarmament proposals but reaffirmed its plans to deploy new nuclear missiles in Europe next year if no disarmament pact is signed.

In a declaration Tuesday, 14 NATO countries reiterated their strong support for the Reagan administration's "zero option" negotiating position at the year-old arms limitation talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

The U.S. stance calls for the Soviet Union to dismantle its SS-20 intermediate range missiles in return for a NATO decision to forego deployment of 108 Pershing 2 and 464 cruise missiles.

Western defense ministers "stressed the importance of a successful outcome to the (Geneva) negotiations but noted however that while there had been some progess in them, the Soviets have not yet made any move on the central issue," the declaration said.

The ministers also called for agreement by Moscow and Washington on reduction of long-range weapons.

They sent a plea to new Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov for disarmament and promised in the declaration "to give full consideration to any serious Soviet proposals which would enhance chances for effective and verifiable arms control agreements."

"We want genuine disarmament," said British Defense Secretary John Nott.

The alliance said the Soviet Union enjoys a 1,200-to-zero warhead advantage over North Atlantic Treaty Organization weapons in Europe because it has 324 SS-20 missiles, with 972 warheads, in addition to older generation SS-4 and SS-5 missiles still available.

NATO would not have comparable defense until deployment of the 572 new missiles by the end of the decade, they said.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger told a news conference there will be no change in the zero option position, but that the Reagan administration remains willing to listen to Soviet proposals.

But he cautioned: "I am not prepared to undercut our negotiators in Geneva by announcing in advance or guessing in advance what may or may not happen in the event the Soviets do something which they have not done yet."

NATO wants to deploy the new missiles in West Germany, Italy, Britain, Belgium and the Netherlands. So far the first three have agreed to the plan.

Situation gloomy for grads

DALLAS (AP) — Hard times are making it harder for December graduates from Texas colleges and universities to find that first job.

Companies are sending fewer recruiters to campuses this year and they are hiring fewer people.

The College Placement Council headquarterd in Bethlehem, Pa., predicted a 16.7 percent decrease in hiring by college recruiters nationwide. And placement officers at Texas schools say the news is gloomy.

"Companies are still coming, but they're not recruiting as heavily and not hiring as many," said Margaret Harris, administrative secretary with the carreer planning and placement office at Rice University.

Rice reported its first decrease in the number of job interviews in 10 years.

The Dallas Times Herald said corporate recruiting decreased from 20 to 30 percent at the University of Texas at Austin, 23 percent at Southern Methodist, 17 percent at Texas A&M and as much as 50 percent at the Univeristy of Houston and North Texas State University.

Jack Brooks, director of career planning and placement at NTSU, said that his office had recorded 101 job offers by November 1981. This year, he knows of nine.

Charles Sorber, associate dean of UT's College of Engineering, said fewer companies are coming to interview job candidates, but that doesn't mean students won't get jobs.

"The companies are being a little more deliberate and a little more selective. That doesn't mean a student can't find a job. It just means they can't pick their choice of benefits and car," Sorber said.

One job placement counselor managed to find a bright side to the gloomy employment picture.

This is a good time for students to "be creative," said Howard Figler, a placement counseling coordinator who mainly works with UT's liberal arts majors.

"Students put a little too much emphasis on security," said Figler. "When you graduate college, you have fewer financial obligations and fewer personal obligations that at any other time in your life.

"It's the time to take chances. In a way, taking a job with a large corporation may be the worst thing you could do."

Of students looking for jobs, those with computer science backgrounds will fare the best, and students in petroleum and chemical engineering will have the most difficulty, the newspaper said.

"The oil companies are staying away in droves," said Joe Vorsas, placement director at UT's huge business school. "All the majors have come through, but a lot of the support groups are not recruiting. Even the Exxons and the Mobils are running fewer (interviews)."

He said one problem could be that December graduates could find themselves "underemployed."

"A person who would have gone into the management training program at a bank might take a job as a teller," Vorsas said. "That may cause problems in career development later."

Chitlin eaters raise funds

SALLEY, S.C. (AP) — About 40,000 people turned out for this rural community's annual Chitlin Strut, but even Miss Chitlin says she wouldn't touch the celebration's namesake.

Susan Drake, Miss Chitlin 1982, said she's never had a chitlin, which is a section of hog intestine that is boiled then battered and deep-fried. "They smell bad," she said.

Money raised during the 17th annual Chitlin Strut is used to pay for the town's fire trucks, community centers and other needs.

Artificial insulin produced

Hearst Feature Service

The idea of gene-splicing or recombinant DNA techniques conjures up unsettling images of human cloning or of George Orwell's "1984" to some. But to many physicians, such advances represent the means to developing some of the most promising new drugs in medicine.

Last month, the federal Food and Drug Administration approved the use of Humulin, an artificially-produced insulin identical to human insulin produced in the pancreas.

More than 11 million Americans, 5 percent of the population, suffer from diabetes, the inability of the body to produce enough natural insulin to maintain a proper blood-sugar level. The disease is the third-largest killer in the United States (after heart disease and cancer), and approximately 600,000 new cases are diagnosed each year. In addition, there are an estimated 5 million Americans who have the disease and don't know it.

Insulin facilitates the storing of glucose in the body tissues until it is released into the bloodstream, providing the body with energy. In the past, insulin was extracted from the pancreas of animals, usually pigs or cows slaughtered for food, but because of a decrease in the demand for meat, a situation could develop where there wouldn't be enough animal-produced insulin to meet the demands of diabetics.

The supply of Humulin, however, is virtually limitless because it is chemically produced. The drug was developed by researchers at San Francisco-based Genentech, who were able to identify the human gene responsible for insulin production. Humulin is scheduled to be available to diabetes specialists by the end of this year, and should be sold in pharmacies without a perscription sometime next year, said John Dolan Heitlinger, a spokesman for Eli Lily and Co., the manufacturers of Humulin.

Humulin will be more expensive than other forms of insulin, costing the average diabetic 50 cents to 55 cents a day compared to 28 cents to 52 cents a day for animal-produced insulin, Dolan Heitlinger said.

Though studies have yet to prove any advantage of Humulin over animal insulins, researchers theorize that because it is identical to human insulin, it will not cause allergic reactions in diabetics sensitive to animal insulins.

Other drugs made from gene-splicing and close to being approved by the FDA include interferon and human growth hormones developed to help stimulate growth in children suffering from dwarfism. Interferon is designed to stimulate the body's defense systems to aid in fighting off most kinds of viral infections.

Handyman raffles off his services

David Stillman, 47, is printing 10,000 tickets offering as a prize his services for one year.

"It's a silly idea when you think about it, I guess, but I don't see why it wouldn't work," he said this weekend. "Of the $20,000 earned, $1,000 would pay costs, such as ticket printing and banking charges, $4,000 would go to the raffle winner's favorite charity, and the remaining $15,000 would go into a bank which would pay me at a rate of $288 a week while I am working for the raffle winner."

Stillman said he just hasn't been able to get a job recently.

"My back is strong but I just haven't been able to find work," he said. "You see so many people out of work now. It's terrible. You get desperate."

Vitamins essential extra intake

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm so confused about vitamins that I don't even know what questions to ask. But can you tell me what is a vitamin and what makes one vitamin different from another? — Gail, Madison, Wisc.

Dear Gail: Vitamins are both similar to — and different from — each other. They are similar in that, for the most part, they are composed of the same elements. These include carbon, hydrogen, oxygen and occasionally nitrogen. Vitamin B12 also contains cobalt. Vitamins cannot be manufactured in the body; they must be taken in as part of foods or as a supplement; in rare cases they must be injected.

They are different from each other because their elements are arranged differently. In addition, each vitamin performs a specific function or functions within the body.

Dear Dr. Solomon: As a new mother, I'm anxious to do whatever I can to help my child. Along these lines, is it possible to prepare baby food at home instead of buying it in the store? — Mrs. H.C., Wilmington, Del.

Dear Mrs. C.: Baby foods can be prepared at home, but I should warn you that cleanliness is essential. All utensils should be well-cleaned and, of course, your hands should be washed before you start to work.

Fruits and vegetables should be steamed or cooked in a little water. Meat, fish and poultry can be prepared by any method you prefer except frying. Do not add sugar, salt or other seasonings. Cooked foods should not be left out at room temperatures but should be refrigerated immediately after cooking.

The food can be warmed over a low flame immediately before serving, either in a double boiler or in a saucepan.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My neighbor tells me she eats bananas to keep up her potassium. I take water pills and my doctor makes me take potassium, which I don't like. Could I eat bananas instead? — Marie, New Orleans

Dear Marie: First, a general comment before I respond to your specific question. Never change either the medication or the dosage prescribed by a physician without first discussing it with him. To do so is another form of Russian roulette that can do no good and may do harm.

As for your question, diuretics (water pills) do tend to deplete potassium. In some patients, eating foods high in potassium, such as bananas, may be sufficient to restore the potassium to a desired level. Where there is significant potassium depletion, however, it might be necessary to eat as many as 20 bananas to compensate for it. This, in turn, would add significantly to your daily intake of calories.

I assume that your potassium depletion as a result of taking the diuretic is significant and that by taking the potassium supplement you avoid increasing your caloric intake by as much as 700 to 800 calories a day.

Morning News promotions announced, effective Jan. 1

DALLAS (AP) — Ralph Langer, managing editor of The Dallas Morning News, will become executive editor of the newspaper Jan. 1, said Burl Osborne, who will become editor and senior vice president on the same date.

Osborne, currently vice president and executive editor, said Monday that William W. "Bill" Evans, associate managing editor, will be promoted to managing editor.

Four senior editors will be advanced to assistant managing editors, Osborne said.

Garfield creator thankful

EL LAGO, Texas (AP) — Samantha Lenoir's latest addition to her art collection isn't a Rembrandt, a Picasso or even a Da Vinci.

It's Garfield — that obnoxious, lasagna-loving comic strip feline who managed a free ride on the space shuttle Columbia's last mission.

Garfield, you see, had a little help from 14-year-old Samantha and her father, astronaut Bill Lenoir.

"I was sitting in math class one day and I was bored. My father's little pen had Garfield on it, so I drew him," she said. "My dad saw it and asked me to draw him a picture of Garfield that said 'Hi, Houston' on it so I did."

During the Columbia's five-day mission, Lenoir held the drawing before television cameras.

"I didn't know he was going to take it up on the shuttle. I just thought he was taking it to work," she said.

Garfield's creator, cartoonist Jim Davis, also was surprised to see his progeny greeting Earthlings from outer space.

"I just happened to see it," Davis said. "I was just so excited that Garfield had made it into space. I just had to do something. That was one of the pleasant little surprises that happens in the business."

After a little detective work to find out who was responsible for Garfield's travels, Davis put the cat in a space suit and sent a special thank you to Samantha. She received the copy of the drawing at her suburban Houston home last week.

The inscription on the cartoon read, "From one space cadet to another. Thanks."

Davis said Samantha's efforts have given him a few thoughts for future comic strips but there are a few problems still to be worked out.

Woman has sight restored

HOUSTON (AP) — Surgeons using a small piece of plastic have restored for Barbara Schindler the sight medication helped take away.

The risky and painful operation to attach a plastic cornea to the natural one damaged by an allegic reaction may give her the chance to drive again and to make a long-postponed trip to Yellowstone National Park.

"It was painful and frustrating. But then a lot of good things in life are worth the pain," said Miss Schindler, a 39-year-old telephone operator from Houston.

Miss Schindler recalled the first things she saw after the sutures were removed last week were her doctor's maroon tie, the pastels of his office and sunlight breaking through the sullen clouds.

Miss Schindler had perfect vision until 1968, when she developed Steven-Johnson syndrome because of an allergy to penicillin.

Pigs have heart

HUGHSON, Calif. (AP) — One little piggy went to market. One little piggy stayed home. And one little piggy donated a heart valve for human surgery.

Actually, Bill Macedo Jr. makes sure most of his pigs donate their heart valves for human implantation.

The Stanislaus County farmer raises or slaughters 12,000 to 15,000 pigs a year under the cleanest conditions possible, to guarantee the value of the aortic valve.

MACEDO'S pigs and thousands from other ranches are killed at his ranch for shipment to retailers in San Francisco's Chinatown for meat.

But before they leave the ranch, a small piece of tissue that regulates blood flow from the heart to the arteries is carefully trimmed away.

"They can take the heart valve, then clean off the muscle fibers and it is purely connective tissues of the valve that is transplanted," explained Dr. Everett Johnson, a Turlock physician.

With time a critical factor, the valve is packed in a saline solution for shipment to a laboratory in southern California. It must reach the lab within 72 hours to be of any use, the 45-year-old rancher said.

"AFTER THE valve is cleaned and sterilized, it's packaged in a vacuum-type container and put on a shelf and kept until needed," Johnson said.

He noted a similarity between porcine and human blood-pumping organs.

"The pig's heart and the human heart are very much alike," Johnson said. "Their digestive track is a lot like ours."

About 90 percent of the pig valves are usable. The remainder are discarded because of damage or disease.

THE PIGS are fed a high-protein grain diet to keep both their meat and valves useful.

The valve business represents less than half of Macedo's income, but his product can mean life or death for patients in need of a new valve.

Leonard Ellefson, a 67-year-old Turlock pharmacist, has been living with the aid of a pig valve for eight years. A synthetic valve had to be replaced after several years when he suffered a series of small strokes.

"I had to go through several years in a terminal situation," he recalled. At one time, he required ready access to oxygen and stuck to a salt-free diet.

The natural valve gave him more freedom than the original substitute for his ailing heart. He now does 100 pushups daily and rides an exercise bicycle.

"When they use the pig valve, if they are very careful to clean off the muscle, it does not give any more trouble than a human valve," Johnson said. "And it's much better to be able to go into the shelf to get the right size. You don't have to wait until someone dies."

SURGEONS measure a patient's valve size during surgery and trim one to fit before suturing it in place, he said. The pig valve can replace both the aortic and mitral valves in humans.

The rejection rate is similar to that involved with a human valve transplant, Johnson said.

Macedo has a pretty good idea of how valuable his pig valves can be to heart patients. He suffered a massive heart attack three years ago, and his farm schedule was partly to blame.

Luckily, he didn't require the kind of surgery that his farm makes possible.

Store closing door

LONDON (AP) — A little bit more of old London died at twilight on a recent Friday, when the street door of E. Joseph, the secondhand bookstore, closed for the last time at 48A Charing Cross Road.

"We are the oldest bookshop in the street and the best-known, despite Helen Hanff," said proprietor David Joseph Brass, whose great-grandfather, Emmanuel Joseph, founded the business in 1876 and moved to Charing Cross Road in 1901.

When the book came out in 1970, Marks and Co. was shut and empty.

Now Joseph's is going. With its drab green frontage stretching round the corner into Great Newport Street, the bookstore was prominently visible to book-hunters emerging from busy Leicester Square subway station. They knew this was the place.

"The world and its aunt come to London to buy books, but times have changed and it's time to go. There are new and better ways of doing things," Brass said in an interview in the inner office, where entry was always by invitation only.

Brass, 35, is giving up general bookselling and is renting offices over a bank on the corner of Vere Street and Oxford Street.

He will deal from his catalogs of mostly rare books. Callers will be welcome but there will be no ground-level windows to gaze in and no outside racks to browse through.

Emmanuel Joseph has been dead snce 1929, although the business will continue to bear his name. Its new home, three-quarters of a mile to the northwest, is nothing like Charing Cross Road.

But the road is a shadow of what it used to be. Once upon a time almost every shop there sold old books.

There are still booksellers there, but the sleaziness of the Soho district along its western edge has eaten into it.

Pinball parlors, porno movies and cheap cafes have changed the atmosphere. Across the road from Joseph's, a row of book and print shops has disappeared into a vast hole in the ground, to await a coming complex of offices, shops and apartments.

Papal plans relayed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Pope John Paul II will visit war-torn El Salvador early next year, the Roman Catholic Church here announced.

"His Holiness, John Paul II, has confirmed he will come to El Salvador toward the end of February or at the beginning of March 1983," Monsignor Gregorio Rosa Chavez said in his weekly homily at the Metropolitan Cathedral.

The pontiff also plans to visit Costa Rica and Honduras and possibly Guatemala sometime between February and March, according to local church prelates in those nations. No details have been made public.

"Later on, we will give more details concerning the visit and we will confirm the exact date," said Rosa Chavez, the auxiliary bishop of San Salvador. There was no immediate statement from the Vatican.

Call before you give

Charitable organizations have a difficult enough time raising the funds they need to carry out their operations — services which, for the most part, would go lacking were it not for the efforts of the dedicated groups. They don't need competition, particularly competition that siphons money away from its intended beneficiary.

Unfortunately, Midland organizations are plagued from time to time by "scam" activities. There's a good reason: A lot of money is involved and the public usually isn't too wary where charitable organizations are involved.

Recently the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens fell victim to a "scam" and executive director Marion Fisher decided to warn other organizations and the public about the dangers. The "scam" involved someone who was making telephone solicitation calls from a local motel and identifying himself as collecting for "the retarded center."

Mrs. Fisher says the man was in no way connected with Midland Association for Retarded Citizens. MARC had a professional promoter conducting fund-raising activities for it at the time the incident occurred, but the man in question was not connected with that group either.

This type of scam occurs all too often and it hurts everyone it touches. The intended recipients of the donations never receive what was rightfully theirs, the organization for which the drive was being conducted suffers financially, the reputable promoter suffers because the incident makes the public wary of all those collecting for worthwhile charities and last but not least the public suffers because their dollars never fulfill their worthy mission.

Of course there are reputable promoters who contract with organizations to conduct fund-raising events. One such promoter is Osie Jackson of Mojack Productions in Odessa, who is currently conducting MARC's fund-raising activities here. Jackson has conducted a number of fund drives in the Odessa area.

But how does one ascertain whether a person who says he is collecting for a charitable organization is reputable and legitimate? Jackson, Mrs. Fisher and Midland police officials all are in agreement on how this can be done. They say when you're contacted by someone who says they're collecting for an organization, you should find out their name, telephone number and then attempt to call the agency to confirm they are legitimate.

In most instances, they'll likely give you literature containing a telephone number of the organization. You can check your telephone directory to see if it matches the number on the literature, but to be completely safe, go ahead and call the agency before you donate.

You certainly should give to charitable causes. Just take a moment to make sure the money you're giving will get to the people you want it to help.

Another View:

Does registration work?

No one should pronounce the country's draft registration system dead merely because one trial judge in Los Angeles has ruled that the system was implemented in technical violation of federal procedures. If the system serves the country, then it will — and should — be preserved.

The question is whether it does, or whether the whole thing is now more a nuisance, both to registrants and the government, and more a source of national divisiveness, than it is a source of strength.

Registration was implemented in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, both as a substantive step toward preparedness and as a symbolic declaration of American strength and commitment. And while it was never the universal registration system that many of its advocates had wished — finally Congress did not include either women or men over 19 — it appeared under the circumstances to be better than nothing.

Now, some three years later, it may be worse. There is, of course, no draft, nor is there any planning for a draft. Registration is thus an exercise in compiling a list of the names and addresses of 18-year-old men which, particularly in this age group, is quickly out of date. There is no inventory of people with the special skills that would be needed desperately in an emergency and which even the current volunteer Army is short of.

Nor is there fairness or universality in the system. When Ronald Reagan ran for president in 1980, he attacked the draft registration law as immoral; it was only this year that the administration declared it would enforce it. That's hardly a record that would persuade anyone of either the urgency or the legitimacy of the system. All the other measures this country took in response to Afghanistan — the grain embargo, for example — have been dropped.

For many years, there has been talk about some sort of universal service in this country — service that would require every young man and woman to devote some time, perhaps a year, perhaps two, either in the military or in some form of civilian public service.

That would, at the very least, restore some fairness, would give the concept of a democratic citizen army and democratic public service some real meaning, and provide millions of young Americans a real opportunity to serve their country in a way they regard as meaningful.

Given the condition of the economy, a system of universal service at this time may well be beyond the resources of the country to maintain. At the same time, the existing incomplete, ineffective and widely disregarded registration system falls into a no man's land where it requires either too much or far too little. Either way — and regardless of what the courts may now do — the existing system fairly screams for congressional review.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Document reveals plans for Argentine coup

WASHINGTON — Argentine President Reynaldo Begnone will be overthrown before the month is out.

Jack Anderson

This, at least, is the prediction contained in a secret Argentine army document, which reveals that the man who is the real power behind Bignone, Army Commander-in-Chief Cristino Nicolaides, intends to seize the presidency as well as the power — and soon.

The document, stamped "Secreto," was translated and confirmed as authentic by my associates Jon Lee Anderson and Dale Van Atta. Dated Aug. 19, it is from Brig. Gen. Rodolfo Enrique Luis Wehner to the army's top intelligence officer, Brig. Gen. Alfredo Sotera, laying out instructions from their "jefe maximo," Gen. Nicolaides.

"The ascension of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to the presidency of the nation ... should be achieved toward the end of this year," the orders state unequivocally.

Ever since Bignone took over the military regime from disgraced Gen. Leopoldo Fortunato Galtieri in the aftermath of the disastrous Falkland Islands adventure, there have been repeated rumors that Nicolaides was not satisfied with his behind-the-scenes role. Nicolaides routinely dismissed these rumors as "malicious gossip."

In the secret directive, Wehner reminds Sotera of "the meeting we both had with His Excellency," and alludes to the commander-in-chief's concern about disloyalty within the army high command, some of whom evidently have political ambitions of their own.

It is vital, the intelligence chief is told, that they "impede the rise of internal dissident tendencies which (would) make it impossible for (Nicolaides) to exercise the necessary control" over the army.

A disinformation campaign is called for. Sotera is ordered to "make it known that it is not in the interests of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to occupy the presidency of the nation, that this would only occur in case the current government headed by President Reynaldo Bignone doesn't work out."

At the same time, though, "there should be created ... the sense of a lack of stability, a power vacuum, and increased concern over the development of the social and economic crisis," the document states.

Using the phrase "political decision" for Bignone's planned takeover, the secret instructions tell the intelligence chief to contact "pertinent civilian sectors" — that is, politicians chosen by Nicolaides — to make certain "that they go along with the 'political decision,' which will ensure a normal transfer of power."

The orders continue: "At the same time, develop and increase the contacts with the Navy and Air Force High Commands. Let it then be perfectly understood that the thinking of (Nicolaides) is that 'the process' (his presidency) shouldn't go on for longer than the first months of 1984. If a prolongation should occur ... it would only happen after previous agreement with 'the most representative civilian sectors.'"

In other words, the anticipated suspicions among the other armed forces that Nicolaides plans to keep control indefinitely should be allayed by an assurance that he will give up the presidency in about a year unless civilian leaders agree that he should stay on.

It is possible, of course, that Nicolaides may decide to give up his plans for a coup — or at least his timetable for one — now that I've blown his cover.

"As the Commander-in-Chief ordered," the secret orders state, "the taking of the 'political decision' depends, for the most part, upon the level of confidentiality maintained. For this reason, it is important to take all the precautions necessary to ensure the success of the operation."

Sorry about that, general.

LAME-DUCK LEMONS: Any lame-duck session is a happy hunting ground for special-interest lobbyists. Members of Congress who lost or retired have nothing more to fear from voters' wrath; even those who won re-election will have two years to mend their fences.

My reporter Jock Hatfield has compiled the campaign contributions certain special interests have laid out in hopes of buying legislative favors. Some examples:

— Bankrupty reform: This would allow creditors to go after a bankrupt individual — but not a corporation — for up to five years after the supposedly fresh start. Bankers and finance-industry political action committees made $1.5 million in campaign contributions this year; of the legislation's 273 congressional sponsors, 259 got industry donations.

— Doctor's exemption: The American Medical Association and American Dental Association have lobbied fiercely for a bill exempting medical professionals from antitrust and price-fixing laws. More than 200 of the bill's 219 co-sponsors shared in the AMA-ADA's $2.3 million 1981-82 PAC largesse.

— Drug patents: The drug industry contributed more than $500,000 in the 1981-82 campaign season. It wants legislation that will extend the current 17-year life of drug patents.

— Beer: Of the 67 House members who got donations from SIXPAC, the wholesale beer industry group, 42 are listed as co-sponsors of legislation that would permit the assignment of competition-free beer distributorships.

— Pesticide: Leading companies in the chemical industry shelled out more than $700,000 in 1981-82 campaigns. The industry wants to prevent states from enforcing stronger controls on pesticides than the federal government's.

— Maritime exemption: The shipping industry and maritime unions contributed more than $1.5 million to favored candidates this year. They want the shipping industry exempted from anti-trust and price-fixing laws.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Latin recovery dependent on United States

WASHINGTON — Latin America is ready to take off as soon as the United States comes out of its recession, hemisphere bankers say privately.

William Glandoni

Publicly, for the record, the Inter-American Development Bank (IADB) talks about "developed countries," "industrialized countries," the "international recession" and other such.

But the bank's message, embodied in its 1982 annual report entitled Economic and Social Progress in Latin America, is clearly aimed at the United States.

The report was released Monday, Nov. 22.

Why the bank is so concerned about the United States is not hard to understand. Latest IADB statistics show that 35 percent of Latin America's exports are destined for the United States and that the United States supplies Latin American countries with 32.9 percent of the goods they buy abroad.

The United States is, by far, the region's most important trading partner.

When the United States and, as is the case at the present, the rest of the industrialized countries of the world are suffering a downturn in their economies, Latin America hurts, too.

For example, Latin America, as a whole, experienced a sharp decline in economic growth, from an average of 6 percent a year over the last decade, to a negative 1.6 percent in 1981, according to bank estimates.

The slowdown in the world economy, inflation and high interest rates are to blame.

However, if the industrialized countries, by which is meant principally the United States, "ultimately adopt consistent monetary and fiscal policies (they) will put an end to the long-term economic downturn," the IADB's 1982 report affirms.

"Should this not happen, there is the risk of a more severe international economic recession."

In any case, Latin America's ability to export to the industrialized countries plays a big role in its economic future. Without exports, prospects are not overly bright.

Nevertheless there is cause for some optimism.

The productive structure of Latin America is intact and well-developed enough to be able to face up even to this international recession without suffering as the region did in the depression of the 1930s, IADB sources say.

The men who authored the IADB report hope, though, that "fiscal policy is adopted to monetary policy, thereby tending to reduce the fiscal deficits in the industrialized countries." That would eliminate the recession as well as end the long-term growth of inflation.

"The international economy would then enter a period of more stable growth," a process that "would be relayed at a higher rate to the countries of Latin America."

The stop-and-go scenario that the IADB fears, on the other hand, "would postpone for some future time the adjustment and stabilization the world economy needs."

According to the bank, "the decade of the '80s would be as unstable and recessionary as that of the '70s, or even more so," if because of high unemployment, "monetary policy is relaxed and adapted to a fiscal policy which is highlighted by deficits."

The bank expects that world economic activity will rise from 1983 onward and that inflation will moderate and international interest rates will fall between 1982 and 1986.

But, if inconsistent policies, "especially those related to employment and price stabilization objectives," are followed, "a higher rate of growth is assumed for 1983 ... with the result that inflation goes up again and interest rates go down. ... In order to counteract this new inflationary advance, international monetary policies would have to be more restrictive and, as a result, the economic growth of the industrialized countries would slow down substantially by 1986," the bank says.

In any case, Latin American economic growth will be lower than it was in the 1970-81 period, when it rose at an annual compound rate of 5.85 percent. During the 1982-86 period, the bank predicts growth rates of 3.13 or 2.85 percent, for the consistent and stop-and-go scenarios, respectively.

The bank report includes a chapter on Latin America's external debt, a subject of considerable discussion recently, particularly with reference to Mexico, Argentina and Brazil. The author, Ricardo Ffrench-Davis, a Chilean economist, suggests that the rise in Latin American debt (which soared at an annual rate of more than 23 percent from 1975 to 1981) will taper off in the next few years because of "the probably smaller expansion of the financial market." Ffrench-Davis counsels against "the extremes of incoherent interventionism and indiscriminate liberalization" in economic policies.

ART BUCHWALD

Ship sails to 'Fantasy Island'

"This is your captain speaking. Welcome to 'Love Boat USA.' We're going to have a wonderful trip because my crew has navigated a sure-fire course to get us out of these heavy seas."

Art Buchwald

"Permission to come on the bridge, sir."

"Permission granted, Stockman."

"Sir, we're in much deeper water than I predicted."

"Stay the course."

"When we set sail my calculations indicated that we would be short 50 billion gallons of fuel. But now because the ship is hardly moving, we could be short 185 billion gallons."

"Let's give every passenger another fare cut. That should get the boat moving again."

"We have to find some way of getting more fuel. Giving everyone a fare cut now won't do it."

"Why don't we lay off more of the crew?"

"We've cut the crew to the bone. There won't be much savings there."

"Then cut down on benefits for the passengers."

"Yes, sir. All the passengers?"

"Of course not. Just those in tourist class. We don't want to deprive the first class passengers of anything they need. If the first class passengers are happy, it will eventually trickle down to the tourist class."

"Chief Regan wants to speak to you, sir."

"What is it, Regan?"

"Bad news from the boiler room. We're running out of steam and the engines are only operating at half their capacity."

"Stay the course, Regan."

"Yes, sir, but if we can't produce steam we're going to have to use up even more fuel than we anticipated."

"Don't worry. When my fare cut goes into effect we'll have all the steam we want."

"Captain, this is Officer Schweiker on C Deck. A lot of steerage passengers are seasick. Many of them are falling over the side."

"Put up some more safety nets."

"I don't have any safety nets. You ordered them thrown overboard to lighten the ship's load."

"Well, then, the passengers are going to have to stay in the water until we get things straightened out on the bridge."

"They're drowning, sir."

"My heart goes out to them, but stay the course."

"Captain, damage control says we're taking bilge in the cargo holds and the gross national product barometer is dropping fast."

"Tell them to reduce the prime interest rate valves."

"They have, sir, but the bilge won't stop. They want to know if you could turn the ship twenty degrees until they can pump out the water."

"I'm not interested in quick fixes to save a leaking boat. Stay the course."

"Chief Gunnery Officer Weinberger requests to speak to the captain."

"Of course, Caspar. What's up?"

"I'm going to have to put more 16-inch guns front and aft, sir, and I want laser-controlled depth charges and torpedoes on deck, and I must install MX missiles on the stern."

"I don't see any problem with any of that. Go ahead. Why are you sulking, Stockman?"

"Sir, if we put all that military hardware on deck in these heavy seas we'll be short over 220 billion gallons of fuel."

"As captain I have no intention of cutting back on the security needs of my ship. If Caspar says he needs all that stuff, then that's good enough for me."

"Captain, look at those waves! I think we're rolling into a depression."

Guidelines to protect customers shopping by mail

By The Associated Press

Shopping by mail can save time and energy during the pre-Christmas crush, but late deliveries or mixed-up merchandise can turn holiday happiness into horror.

The Federal Trade Commission has a Mail Order Merchandise Rule to protect consumers. But the rule can't be enforced properly unless individuals know — and demand — their rights.

The FTC says January and February bring the year's biggest volume of mail-order complaints. And it says most of the letter writers are unaware that marketers have specific responsibilities in terms of when they must ship orders and what they must do if they can't meet the deadline.

It also is important to understand that the regulations don't cover everything that is shipped by mail. The rules do not apply to photo-finishing, to magazine subscriptions except for the first issue, to COD orders, to seeds and plants or to credit orders where your account is not charged before the goods are shipped.

CONSUMERS should keep careful track of when they place their orders. That's because companies which are covered by the mail-order rule must ship your order by the date promised. If no date is given, the merchandise must be sent out within 30 days after your order is received.

If there is a delay in shipment, the seller must mail you what's called an "option notice," telling you what's happened and giving a new shipping date. The seller must provide a postage-free way for you to reply, accepting or rejecting the change.

If you decide you don't want to wait for your merchandise, you have the right to cancel your order and get a complete refund. If you paid by cash, check or money order, the company must mail you a refund within seven business days of the time it gets your cancellation notice. If you charged the items to a credit card, the papers adjusting your account must be mailed within one billing cycle.

If the delay is less than 30 days, you must notify the company of your decision. If you don't do anything, the seller has the right to assume you have agreed to the new date. If the delay is more than 30 days, however, the burden shifts to the company. If you don't respond, the seller must return your money by the end of the first 30 days of delay.

COMPARE prices carefully. When you add shipping charges, the catalog may be no cheaper than your local store — and you can't inspect the item before you buy it.

Check out the company before you place your order. How long has it been in business? Do you know anyone who has dealt with it? Does the Better Business Bureau have any record of complaints?

Make sure you understand the company policy on returns in advance. Read the fine print carefully to make sure that the seller does not reserve the right to make substitutions if the exact item you want is out of stock. If you don't want a substitute, say so.

Find out ahead of time what you should do if the merchandise arrives damaged or if something is the wrong size or color. Who has to pay the postage if you have to send something back? Never send cash through the mail and keep copies of your check or money order along with any correspondence involved.

If you have a problem with something ordered by mail, take your complaint to the seller. If that doesn't work, try contacting the Direct Mail Marketing Association, a trade group, which has a Mail Order Action Line service. The address is 6 E. 43rd St., New York, N.Y., 10017.

The same group can help you decrease — or increase — the amount of advertising mail you get. If you want to remove your name from mailing lists, write to the marketing association and ask for a mail preference service name-removal form. If you want more mail, ask for an add-on form. It includes 24 categories of advertising mail; you can check the ones you're interested in.

Radio station has chopper waiting to go airborne

HOBART, Okla. (AP) — Helicopters have become commonplace for television and radio stations in major cities to help report on traffic conditions or whip reporters and camera operators to the scene of a fast-breaking news story.

But in rural southwest Oklahoma?

But there it sits, behind the brick building housing KTJS and its sister FM radio station, KQTZ.

"We've never used it on a news story — yet," sighs Paul Shields, news director. "But we keep hoping."

Actually, the two-seat Hughes helicopter is used by station owner Al Fuchs to make his weekly trips to the FM tower atop King Mountain 15 miles away.

"IT'S A 45-minute climb up that mountain otherwise," explains Shields. "We have a four-acre lease from the Bureau of Reclamation on the mountain as the tower site.

"One of the conditions of the lease was that we could not build a road to the tower."

"We're the only station in Oklahoma where the tower was erected by helicopter," Shields said. "There wasn't any other way to get it up there."

Shields said that Fuchs had a pilot's license and took training to get a helicopter license. Then he was able to buy the used chopper from the Phoenix Police Department.

"THE FIRST time he brought it in for a landing, we were all watching," Shields said. "There was a pretty good wind blowing, and he bobbed and weaved around for awhile before he could get it down.

"The most critical part in landing a helicopter is in the final six feet. That's when a wind gust could tip it and a rotor could hit the ground."

Shields said that because the tower's elevation is about 1,000 feet above the average terrain, "we have the best coverage in western Oklahoma. We're authorized to go to 100 kilowatts, but we only run 25 kilowatts because we just don't need the extra power."

Through the use of advanced electronics, Shields said, a signal could be sent from as far away as Elk City to the northwest or Altus to the southwest to the tower, where there is another transmitter — or even from the helicopter — "and we would be on the air with a studio-quality signal."

And he said the potential for using the helicopter for news is there.

"The area to the south is flood-prone," he said. "And there always is the potential for a big range fire.

"If we needed to be, we could be in the air in minutes."

Kennedy won't seek presidency in 1984

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen Edward M. Kennedy, bowing to the wishes of his three children, will not seek the Democratic presidential nomination in 1984, sources said early today.

"The reason is personal," said one aide, who added the Massachusetts Democrat would disclose his decision publicly at a news conference later in the day.

"His kids really feel very strongly that they don't want him to run," added this aide. Kennedy is in the process of arranging a divorce settlement with his wife Joan. Their children are Edward M. Jr., Kara and Patrick.

Kennedy, 50, has been the early front-runner in public opinion polls for the party's 1984 presidential nomination and this aide said that the senator has private polling data that indicates he would do well if he ran.

But Kennedy, after going over the political information one final time with senior aides on Tuesday, reportedly told them, "I think you guys are right, and I think I can win, but I'm not going to do it."

Kennedy spent Tuesday evening at his home telephoning friends and political adversaries to tell them of his decision. Among those called were House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., a longtime political ally. Kennedy also called several other Democrats who are exploring the presidential candidacy for themselves, including former Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Sens. Alan Cranston of California and John Glenn of Ohio.

Aides to all three said none of the hopefuls would comment until Kennedy's announcement. President Reagan, asked in Brazil if he was surprised, told a reporter, "Yes, I am."

One Kennedy aide said the decision not to run is for the 1984 campaign only, and does not rule out the possibility of seeking the presidency in the future. At his age, Kennedy could be expected to be a potential presidential candidate through at least the early 1990s.

The aides provided information to The Associated Press on condition that they not be named.

Until recently, Kennedy appeared almost certain to run again for the party nomination that he lost to former President Jimmy Carter in 1980.

But aides and other associates said that in addition to whatever political considerations were involved, members of Kennedy's family were strongly opposed to his potential candidacy and evidently persuaded him not to run over the Thanksgiving holiday.

None of the family could be reached for comment, but their concern almost certainly was focused in part on Kennedy's physical safety. Two of his brothers were assassinated — President John F. Kennedy in 1963 and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy in 1968 while running for the White House.

A Kennedy withdrawal from the 1984 race would presumably give a boost to Mondale, who runs second among Democrats in most public opinion polls. But it also would free Kennedy's many political operatives and supporters to join the cause of other potential contenders.

Other Democrats considering seeking the nomination include Sens. Gary Hart of Colorado and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, as well as former Florida Gov. Reuben Askew.

Hart, attending a fundraiser in Los Angeles, declined to say Tuesday night how he thought Kennedy's withdrawal from the race would affect his own potential presidential run.

"I don't have any reaction to it," said Hart, who has a committee to explore his possible candidacy.

Until recently, Kennedy's aides talked openly of a 1984 presidential race and made it clear they didn't want to repeat some of the organizational and other mistakes that helped doom his 1980 campaign.

Honor guard

Reviewing an honor guard during arrival ceremonies at Brasilia, Brazil, on Tuesday in U.S. President Ronald Reagan. With Reagan, bottom center, is Brasilian President Joao Figueiredo.

Reagan lauds Brazil's 'steadying' influence

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — President Reagan, praising Brazil's stability on a troubled continent, is offering the military leaders of the financially ailing nation words of encouragement — but no dollars.

He opened his first official visit to South America with a full schedule of for formal and informal meetings, beginning with a private conference with President Joao Baptista Figueiredo.

But before Reagan could focus on Latin American issues, he was asked by reporters while posing for pictures at the start of the meeting with Figueiredo whether he had been surprised by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's decision not to run for president in 1984.

"Yes," Reagan replied. Kennedy had been among the top Democratic contenders to oppose Reagan should he seek re-election.

Reagan, sitting with Figueiredo in the Brazilian president's office, refused to answer another question about Lebanon's request that the foreign peace-keeping troops in that nation be doubled.

On his way to the executive offices, Reagan passed through an honor guard in 19th century white tunics, white breeches decorated with red sash belts and gold helmets sprouting red and black plumes.

From the presidential offices in the modernistic Palacio do Planalto at the end of the capital's string of government buildings to a 300-acre ranch on the northern outskirts of town and then to a dinner at the foreign ministry, Reagan planned to spend more than seven hours with President Figueiredo.

Reagan, on a five-day tour of Brazil and three other Latin American nations arrived shortly before midnight Tuesay in this central Brazilian city built on the high plains 25 years ago.

"We all know of the strong and steady advance of Brazil both domestically and internationally," Reagan said. He praised the nation's Nov. 15 congressional and gubernatorial elections — the first in almost 18 years — as a demonstration of "Brazil's confidence in itself and its stability in freedom."

Figueiredo told Reagan: "Present difficulties not withstanding, we are fully confident that we will follow the road of democracy and progress chosen by the Brazilian people."

"It is high time," he said, that the United States and Brazil discuss their mutual problems and "move toward genuine and equitable partnership."

The streets of Brasilia were quiet when Reagan arrived, although anti-Reagan demonstrations took place earlier in Brasilia and Rio de Janeiro.

Reagan met last May with Figueiredo in Washington and Secretary of State George P. Shultz described the Brazilian on Tuesday as "a real guy, full of pep, vim and vigor ..a very enjoyable person. He and the president hit it off well, and their conversation is likely to roam all over the world."

Figueiredo is the fifth in a string of military men who have ruled the country since a 1964 coup overthrew the last democratically elected government.

Shultz, demonstrating sensitivity to Latin American concern that the United States overlooks its hemispheric neighbors, reminded reporters during the 8½-hour flight that the "real world includes our neighbors, and don't you forget it."

Reagan's aides held out the possibility that during a three-hour visit to Figueiredo's ranch, Granja do Torto, the U.S. president would spend some time riding horseback with the Brazilian leader.

"If he is invited, he is going to ride," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes.

Reagan stressed on his arrival that he was on a "working visit." The schedule omitted many of the ceremonial events and late nights that left Reagan exhausted and dozing in the midst of his European trip last June.

"As long as we stay awake, he'll stay awake," said Speakes.

Reagan's trip has brought some criticism in Washington because he left town just as Congress was returning for a special session he requested.

"We'll be back by the time they start moving legislation," Speakes said.

While Reagan and his aides were stressing advancing democracy and inter-American cooperation during the trip, the Brazilians, who must borrow $14 billion to fuel an economy staggering under 100 percent inflation and a zero growth rate, are likely to focus on financial issues.

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Midland City Council Tuesday gave a green light to the purchase of 64 new police cruisers while temporarily slamming its brakes on a proposed taxi fare increase.

Councilman Steve Davidson, mayor pro tem while Mayor G. Thane Akins attends a National League of Cities meeting in Los Angeles, led the council through a 40-item agenda, lunch and at 4:50 p.m. recessed the regularly scheduled meeting until 9 a.m. Thursday.

The council decided to purchase 32 squad cars from each of two local auto dealerships, Frank See Chevrolet and Rogers Ford. In total, the 1983 four-door Chevrolet Impalas and Ford Crown Victorias will cost the city about $530,000.

Councilmen also voted to delay action on a proposed taxi fare increase pending further analysis of the rate structure.

IN OTHER ACTION, the council consented to rezoning provisions in the recently annexed 349 Ranch Estates subdivision, pondered improvements on the police vehicle impoundment lot, approved a contract with Curbside Services Inc., for skycap service at Midland Regional Airport and granted a local limousine service franchise to Schaler Rolls Royce.

During discussion of the police vehicle purchase, Councilman Jesse Hatfield suggested the council avoid buying 64 of an identical model car. Operating under the "all eggs in one basket" theory, Hatfield suggested the city hedge against buying 64 possible "lemons" by splitting its order between two manufacturers.

Bid price for 64 Chevrolet Impalas was $538,187.58, or $8,542.66 per vehicle. The quoted price for an indentical number of Ford Crown Victorias — about $55 per vehicle cheaper — was $534,728.25, or $8,487.75 per vehicle.

Despite initial savings offered by the Ford bid, Hatfield said, "You go one (model), and we get 64 'lemons,' we've really got problems."

COUNCILMAN Tom Sloan disagreed with Hatfield, suggesting the city could save money on parts inventory expense by "standardizing" its purchase. "I just think that standardization is more important," said Sloan, who also suggested that city mechanics could more efficiently maintain a single type of vehicle.

"If they can work on a Ford, they can work on a Chevrolet, I think," replied Hatfield.

Fred Baker, public works director, said the city garage would require a larger parts inventory if different models were purchased. Baker said a surplus of parts could be a problem when the vehicles are later retired.

The council eventually voted 4-1 to split the purchase, with Councilman Gordon Marcum II voting against the move.

Baker later explained that new police cars were needed to replace retired cars, provide additional standby vehicles and supply transportation for 27 new officers scheduled to assume duty soon.

AFTER DISCUSSING some previously undisclosed difficulties in a proposed taxi rate hike, the councilmen voted to delay an increase until further adjustments are made to the rate schedule.

For a group traveling anywhere within Midland, the proposed rate structure calls for a $4.50 charge for each additional passenger more than two.

Councilman Carroll Thomas said if the Mexican president to be inaugurated

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Miguel de la Madrid begins a six-year term as president of Mexico today, unveiling an economic recovery program expected to include an appeal for "moral renewal" and an end to institutionalized corruption.

De la Madrid, 47, is replacing President Jose Lopez Portillo with the traditional inaugural pledge to "look after the well-being and prosperity of the union. And if I do otherwise, let the nation cast blame upon me."

Following the ceremony at the newly built House of Representatives palace, de la Madrid planned to deliver a nationally televised speech providing the first details of a political program that has been a tightly guarded secret.

The hour-long address to the country's 70 million people was expected to touch on plans to repair the near-bankrupt economy, while stressing the related issue of corruption.

Institutionalized corruption is widely acknowledged as the hidden factor in Mexico's financial problems. De la Madrid has pledged to combat corruption, especially in government, and suggests that offenders may go to jail.

The agenda also included an open motorcade carrying de la Madrid and Lopez Portillo along the capital's broad Paseo de la Reforma avenue, where they were to lay floral wreaths at the monuments to Mexican independence, the 1910-1920 Revolution and to revolutionary hero Benito Juarez.

On the eve of the inauguration, de la Madrid announced the 21 members of his Cabinet, holding over six ministers from Lopez Portillo's administration.

Topping the list is Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog, chosen to retain the job he has held since April as Mexico's top financial manager. Mexico's envoy to Washington, Bernardo Sepulveda Amor, was named foreign minister, and is expected to maintain the nation's policy of balancing friendly contacts with the United States, Cuba and Nicaragua's Sandinista government.

Mexican political tradition prohibits presidents-elect from making policy statements or from directly criticizing their predecessors after they take office.

But de la Madrid is widely believed to disagree with many recent economic decisions imposed by Lopez Portillo, a fellow member of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Sarah Favours will clean house. Mike Wotring will landscape lawns or fix a broken stereo. John Harmon can provide an evening of gospel music. Someone needing a nurse's aide can call Carolyn Hill.

It's not a page from the want ads, but a growing list of laid-off auto workers who have turned their union local into a job referral center.

"Rent a Laid-Off Worker" is the latest undertaking of United Autoworkers Local 969 to help members whose unemployment benefits have been terminated.

"We would like to do a lot more," said local vice president Don Deibel. "In view of the finances, membership is down and there's no way to help them. We're hoping this will get off the ground and we will help some people."

Workers whose benefits have run out can fill out a questionnaire at the local, listing the jobs they can do. The local then acts as a clearinghouse for potential employers, leaving salary negotiations up to the individuals.

So far, about 50 workers have signed up for the program, but few referrals have been made.

Dean Shoemaker, who made $50 for moving furniture, has achieved a certain celebrity status since the program has been publicized.

"I was the guest on a Detroit talk show last night," Shoemaker said Tuesday. "At first, we weren't getting many calls, but then other auto workers started calling in asking about the program."

Last week, Shoemaker's $206 weekly benefits expired. It's been a year since the 33-year-old auto worker was earning more than $400 a week at the General Motors Corp. Fisher Body plant in Columbus, where more than 1,500 employees have been laid off in the past year.

"We were lucky," Shoemaker says of his wife, Valerie, and their 2½-year-old son, Joshua. "When I was laid off, we weren't in extremely bad shape. We'll pay one bill one month and let it slide the next. This month we'll pay rent and gas, next month it's the phone.

"My wife is looking for a job and I'm still looking. We're at the point where we'll have to take anything we can get. I'm getting down to applying for the $3.50 and $4 an hour jobs."

A Christmas Tradition

De la Madrid to continue Lopez Portillo's policy

Although victory was a foregone conclusion for the party that has won every presidential election for 53 years, de la Madrid traveled the length and the breadth of the country during his nine-month electoral campaign.

He boasts of having covered more ground than any candidate before him — 60,000 miles crisscrossing all 31 Mexican states.

De la Madrid, to be 48 on Dec. 16, is more accustomed to planning budgets and guiding economies. He served as budget and planning secretary in the administration of outgoing President Jose Lopez Portillo from 1979 until Sept. 25, 1981, when he was named the presidential heir-apparent.

De la Madrid has pledged to continue the foreign policy of Lopez Portillo, which includes continued close relations with the United States "not based on mere proximity, but on cordial and sincere friendship."

He has also said he would maintain friendly relations with Cuba and Nicaragua and, in keeping with Lopez Portillo's policy, try to act as a go-between in contacts between Cuba and the United States.

De la Madrid has publicly supported Lopez Portillo's economic measures and in his old post played a key role in designing Mexico's strategy of heavy foreign borrowing to fuel high economic growth rates.

But sources say he had little or no input in recent economic measures that include expropriation of the nation's banking system and the imposition of strict exchange controls. It is widely believed he disagrees with the measures, and changes are expected.

De la Madrid was born in the western city of Colima on Dec. 12, 1934. His father, a lawyer, died when de la Madrid was 2 years old. His mother moved to Mexico City and opened a boarding house to support him and his elder sister, Alicia.

He entered Mexico's national University when he was 18, was graduated with honors in law, and was admitted to the bar in 1958.

His administrative career began in the legal department of a state bank while he was a student. He later moved to Banco de Mexico, the nation's central bank, where he was offered a scholarship to study for a master's degree in public administration at Harvard.

De la Madrid's teachers at Harvard, where he studied from September 1964 to May 1965, included the celebrated liberal economist John Kenneth Galbraith.

Since de la Madrid's return to Mexico, he has held several government finance posts.

He married Paloma Cordero in 1959, and they have five children — Margarita, 22, who is studying tourism and hotel administration; Miguel, 21, who is studying business administration; Enrique, 20, a law student; Federico, 16, and Gerardo, 11.

Mrs. de la Madrid has said her husband enjoys going to movies and plays, listening to classical and Mexican folk music and visiting art shows. His favorite artist is Mexico's Jose Maria Velasco, a painter of rich landscapes that evoke a time when Mexico was a simpler, easier-going place to live.

Mexico's new president likes to eat well but keeps trim by jogging and doesn't need to be placed on any special diets, de la Madrid's personal physician said recently.

Many also see a man under a lot of pressure.

An official portrait that started going up in place of Lopez Portillo's in government offices here two months ago shows a close-up of de la Madrid sweating profusely.

"If he's sweating that much already, imagine how he'll be when he takes power," said one executive with the state-run telephone company.

President's absolute rule traced to political party

MEXICO CITY (AP) — With his oath of office, Miguel de la Madrid today rises from a career of financial planning to virtual absolute rule of Mexico for the next six years.

Historians trace the absolutism of Mexican government and the awe with which many Mexicans view "el senor presidente" to ancient Aztec civilization, when despotic warrior priests built empires for themselves and the fierce gods they claimed to serve.

Another more recent factor is "Caudillismo" — a longstanding political tradition throughout Latin American whereby the man who is president, although perhaps not a dictator, rules almost singlehandedly.

Contemporary political observers, however, attribute the power de la Madrid will accept with the presidency in today's ceremonies to the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has won every major election here in the past 53 years.

THE PARTY chooses its presidential candidates in an almost ritualistic closed-door ceremony every six years when the outgoing president, as kingmaker, hand-picks his successor and submits his choice to the party.

There is no record of the party ever having rejected its leader's choice as to who should succeed him. Party members who give any public indication of being dissatisfied with the selection have a way of disappearing from influence.

An example of the sweeping powers held by Mexican leaders was outgoing President Jose Lopez Portillo's expropriation of the nation's private banking system and imposition of strict currency controls on Sept. 1.

Although Lopez Portillo said the measures were only enacted after a broad political consultation process, private sector spokesmen complained the measures should have been submitted for approval by Congress before taking effect.

A legislative debate may have slowed enactment of the measures, but it seems doubtful it would have quashed them.

THE MEXICAN Constitution says the chief executive should rule together with judicial and legislative branches of the government, but these are controlled by the party's political apparatus and rarely defy the president's wishes.

De la Madrid has made the excesses of government — primarily corruption — a dominant theme of his political campaign and has said he will seek to modernize and strengthen the judicial branch.

He is widely expected to retain much of the absolute power held by his predecessors, however.

Mexican presidents are limited by law to a single term, and former chief executives have rarely held public office after that.

First lady to maintain low profile

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's new first lady, Paloma Cordero de la Madrid, has maintained a modest, low profile that contrasts sharply with the flashy reputation of her predecessor, Carmen Romano de Lopez Portillo.

The soft-spoken wife of Mexico's next president has stayed out of the limelight in the year since Miguel de la Madrid was tapped as presidential heir-apparent.

Although she may well serve the new government as head of a public charity organization, as outgoing president Jose Lopez Portillo's wife did, Mrs. de la Madrid has said: "The help I can provide will not be as a government official, but as a collaborator whose loyalty is beyond question..."

Mrs. de la Madrid's maiden name "Cordero" literally means lamb, while her first name "Paloma" means dove.

Born in Mexico City in 1937, she was introduced to de la Madrid by her brother, Luis Cordero Tapia, who became friends with the future president while serving with him in the military.

Mrs. de la Madrid accompanied her husband when he went to Boston to obtain a master's degree in public administration at Harvard University in 1964-65.

She also traveled the length and breadth of Mexico during his nine-month campaign for the presidency.

Of that experience, she said in an official biography: "What most impressed me was the great vitality of the people and their enormous human potential, which undoubtedly is Mexico's fundamental wealth.

Officer starts stress program

By JAMES T. YENCKEL

The nightmare pressures of a Boston patrolman's life were mounting — "riots, protests...little children burned to death. It's sickening. You go around a corner and cry. I got hardened to it, but I never got used to it. I'd take anti-anxiety pills.

"I was your average real cop. I rushed people to the hospital...the burning buildings. The boring calls. The standing in blood. The uncertainty.

"You can do everything right for 15 years and then in a split-second decision, you can mess up once, and you're in trouble. There's always that pressure."

Besides popping pills he took to heavy drinking. Ultimately, thoughts of suicide crept in.

"I put a gun to my head more than once," says Donovan, then a 12-year veteran of the force, in his late thirties with a wife and seven children. "I took my cruiser and aimed it at a tree, but I pulled out at the last minute."

KNOWING THEN THAT HE was about to hit bottom, "I asked for help."

For a policeman raised on the Hollywood image of the strong, silent cop able to handle anything, conceding frailty was one of the hardest things he ever did. To shatter the macho dark-blue uniform and side-holster facade would be unmanly, he thought, even while inside his guts trembled at what the next call on the car radio might bring.

Speaking up, however, turned out to be "the biggest favor I did for myself." He has subsequently become internationally known in the law-enforcement world for his work in counseling other police officers, encouraging them to voice their fears as a way of easing them.

Still holding the rank of patrolman on the Boston force, Donovan, now 50, is director of that department's Police Stress Program; president of the International Law Enforcement Stress Society (which he formed); founding editor of "Police Stress," a quarterly journal that goes out to police agencies around the world, and a board member of the American Institute of Stress. Even the license plate on his battered Ford LTD reads "STRESS."

ONCE OVER THE HURDLE of asking for help, Donovan had himself admitted to an alcoholism recovery program, where he became aware of how major a role police stress — and his inability to deal with it — had played in his descent into alcoholism. He became interested in the research of stress expert Hans Selye of Montreal, and later studied under him.

Donovan — "I'm in my 13th year of sobriety" — became convinced that the kind of peer counseling and group meetings practiced by Alcoholics Anonymous would be valuable in treating other officers, "a cop helping a cop." This idea led to the formation in 1973 of the stress unit, one of the first of its kind in the nation. About 100 police departments now have stress programs.

Donovan has been invited to lecture on police stress by Harvard, Notre Dame, the FBI, the Secret Service and the International Chiefs of Police Association. He was the keynote speaker Nov. 6 at a men's-issues conferernce (co-sponsored by the Coalition of Free Men and Adelphi University), where the topic is "Freeing Men for Healthier Life Styles."

THAT, OF COURSE, IS the theme of Donovan's new life. Stress can be "a killer," and he is hard put to think of another profession more stressful than police work.

"The public's expectation of a cop," he has written, "requires that he be all things to all people — a police officer, doctor, lawyer, judge, juror, psychiatrist, social worker, ambulance driver, plumber, veterinarian, locksmith and every other occupation in the public domain. It is an impossible demand.

"A cop is never off duty. He's paid to look for trouble — to look for the negative in people. It causes trouble in marriages."

As the internal tensions mount, a great many police officers, Donovan has found, have no safety-release valve. The result is that as a profession police work ranks high in causing depression, domestic strife, alcoholism and suicide.

For many, he believes, the blame can be laid on the "male macho mystique."

"Did you ever see a cop approach a car he has stopped?" he asks. "He looks like a 10-foot gladiator. You don't know underneath he's a pussycat or a troubled man."

AS A RED-HAIRED ROOKIE (5-9, 135 pounds) he used to ask himself, "Who's scared of me?"

The macho cop sees inner fears as a sign of weakness and tries to hide them not only from the public, but from colleagues. But, insists Donovan, there is nothing to be ashamed of. "Those teenagers are testing you — it's scary."

Not, of course, that he believes cops shouldn't project authority. But they should know when "to take off that armor — to be human." The focus of the Boston program is on getting the officer to open up — to "ventilate."

The "No. 1 thing I tell them," says Donovan, "if something is bothering you, you've got to talk to someone."

Donovan operates out of a ramshackle white-frame cottage on the grounds of a city hospital at the edge of South Boston. The site was picked deliberately to isolate it from police headquarters.

The last thing a macho cop wants his cronies to know, says Donovan, is that he has sought help from the stress program. If an officer requests it, Donovan or one of his 30 volunteer counselors — all members of the force — will meet him or her in a car, bar or any other place of the officer's choice. Donovan wears civilian clothes — typically jeans and a sports shirt — to separate himself from department officialdom.

"HEY, ARE YOU thinking of 'swallowing' your gun?" Donovan asked a policeman recently, and then related his own contemplation of suicide.

Not infrequently, a policeman will start crying. "That's why we've got the tissue right there.' "

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico has become the principal supplier of crude oil to the United States, slightly ahead of Saudi Arabia, the National Energy Commission said in a report made public earlier this week.

The Mexican state petroleum monopoly PEMEX supplied 14.7 percent of all the oil imported by the United States during the first semester of this year, and during the second semester American companies bought 52.5 percent of the oil exported by Mexico, the report said.

Mexican oil exports to the United States averaged 690,000 barrels a day during the third quarter of the year, and are averaging 886,000 barrels daily in the last quarter.

Storm rocks coast

By BETSY BROWN KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

A fast, ruthless storm bulldozed across California and careened into the Rockies today, with driving rain and heavy snow that left six people dead and four people missing. The storm cut power to hundreds of thousands of homes and flooded rich farmlands.

It stomped into Arizona and Nevada, blasting more rain and snow, and kept going. Winter storm warnings were issued today for Utah and the Colorado Rockies, with a storm watch in Montana, according to the National Weather Service.

The storm, the worst of the season, battered California on Tuesday from San Francisco to San Diego, dumping snow as fast as 3 inches an hour in the Sierra Nevada; ripping up power poles, trees and roofs with winds up to 78 mph; triggering mudslides and sinking boats.

The assault came just one day after the National Weather Service forecast a cold, wet winter for the West.

"It was a complete mess," said California Highway Patrol Officer Jerry Skelton in Los Angeles. "Trees down everywhere, lines down everywhere, cars and traffic accidents everywhere."

As the storm moved east, it blanketed northern and central Nevada with a foot or more of snow and flooded Las Vegas streets with rain. Two avalanches closed roads in the mountains.

In Arizona, 10 inches of snow fell in Flagstaff by Tuesday night and school buses had to be towed. In Kingman, wind gusts were clocked at 84 mph, and in Phoenix, a building roof collapsed from the weight of rain.

The storm struck California with little warning as winds shifted from light to 50 mph "within a matter of minutes," said Keith Ewing, the state's chief National Weather Service forecaster.

As the storm plowed inland into Northern California, rain combined with record high tides to rip a 50-foot hole in a levee, flooding Venice Tract, a 3,000-acre island on the Sacramento-San Joaquin River delta.

Floodwaters were expected to reach 15 feet over the rich farmland.

Winds gusted to 82 mph on the Santa Cruz coast and turned a parked Boeing 707 jet in a half-circle at San Francisco International Airport.

Falling trees knocked down wires and cut power to up to 400,000 Northern California electric customers. But workers restored power to all but about 22,500 customers by late Tuesday.

By mid-afternoon, 73 inches of snow had accumulated in Norden, Calif., and avalanche warnings were issued for the eastern Sierra.

Four people were missing in the storm and at least six people died, including a 4-year-old boy who was swept into the De Luze River when his family's Jeep overturned. Two men died in San Diego County traffic accidents, a 66-year-old Los Angeles man died in a car-bus accident on a rain-slick street, and a Camarillo woman was missing after her car hit a bridge abutment and she was flipped into a creek.

Heavy winds toppled a 110-foot crane in Long Beach, killing the operator. In Humboldt Bay, a man's body washed ashore after his crab boat broke up in rough waters and two other men were missing. A Napa man was missing after being swept into stormy Bodega Bay.

In Southern California, the storm dumped 2.33 inches of rain in less than 12 hours and washed a $500,000 home into the sea at Malibu.

In Long Beach and San Diego Bay, dozens of pleasure boats were ripped from their moorings. In Marina del Rey, wind gusts of up to 70 mph blasted panes of glass out of high-rise office buildings, but no one was injured, authorities said.

Pondering where to start their cleanup of Fulton Avenue in Van Nuys, Calif., are city firefighters and Department of Water and Power crewmen. Fifteen utility poles, stretching for more than a block, were toppled by high winds that accompanied a severe storm which hit the California coast Tuesday.

new rates were approved, a family of four traveling from the airport to their home would be socked with a $9 surcharge despite sharing the same destination.

Several councilmen suggested that a fee of 50 cents-$1 for "extra" passengers would be more reasonable.

Thomas went on to illustrate a problem with proposed rates between the airport and various points in Midland:

A $13.50 base charge is proposed on trips from the airport to points north of Loop 250. Thomas noted that the rate structure becomes messy if two people living near each other share a ride. He said it's unclear whether the base rate would be charged twice, or whether the person dropped off first would pay $13.50 and the second person would cover the additional mileage.

With inconsistencies and inequities apparent, the council voted unanimously to delay action until Dec. 14 and asked James Brown, city manager, to explore further fare refinements.

AFTER LENGTHY discussion, the council voted 3-2 to rezone from agricultural estate to local retail a series of lots along State Highway 349's east side. A proposal to change from agricultural estate to single family zoning several tracts in the southeast and north central portions of 349 Ranchland Estates was approved unanimously, along with rezoning from agricultural estate to planned district several tracts in the subdivision's northeast sector.

Prior to the action, all of 349 Ranchland Estates subdivision was zoned agricultural estate.

Councilmen Thomas and Davidson opposed the local retail zoning, fearing it could set a precedent for a future glut of retail development along highway 349. But Marcum, Sloan and Hatfield voted in favor of the rezoning.

Fearing another precedent setting action, the council rejected an easement request by West Texas Welders Supply Inc., which sought permission to extend underground phone cables from its building on the north side of West Dakota Avenue to a new structure on the south side.

Baker said the city, historically, has not permitted installation of a private line in a public right-of-way. He said private records of a line's location could easily be lost and the line may be unwittingly damaged in the future.

Proposed improvements for the police vehicle impoundment area will proceed after councilmen approved a resolution for the project. Suggested changes include enlarging the parking area, skirting it with chain link fence, erecting additional lights and posting a 24-hour guard at the lot.

COUNCILMEN approved plans, specifications and advertisement for bids on a new, 42-inch sanitary sewer line to carry sewage into the city's treatment plant and relieve the heavy load now borne by an old, cracking 27-inch pipe. The council also authorized adjustment of a Texas-New Mexico Pipeline Co., pipeline to accommodate the new sewage pipe.

The council passed a motion to reject all bids and authorized re-advertisement for bids on the proposed Hogan Park restroom expansion.

A specific use permit also was approved for Lupe Castillo, who requested permission to operate a day nursery for up to 34 children in her home at 912 Canyon Drive.

Although the councilmen withdrew to executive session twice, no announcement was made on progress toward the appointment of a successor for Col. Wilson Banks, retiring city aviation director.

Reagan says he'd veto public works jobs plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has told Republican congressional leaders he firmly opposes a $5 billion public works jobs plan Democrats are drafting and will veto the measure if it reaches his desk.

At the same time, a Reagan administration plan for a 5-cent-a-gallon hike in the federal gasoline tax to finance $5.5 billion worth of highway, bridge and mass transit repairs is moving toward consideration in the full House and Senate.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis lobbied for the administration measure Tuesday before the Senate Finance Committee and was making a similar appearance before the House Ways and Means Committee today. Both panels hope to draft their own versions of the plan this week.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., says Democrats hope to attach their public works measure to a stopgap spending bill that Congress must pass before adjourning in mid-December. Without the so-called continuing resolution, federal agencies and programs will technically go broke Dec. 17.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said that during Tuesday's meeting Reagan said, "if we garland it (the stopgap measure) up with all sorts of other things...he would have no hesitation" to veto it. "There's no doubt about it."

"He said he'd veto it," said Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., who also attended the meeting. "He didn't care" if the bill reached him "the day before Christmas" and Congress was about to adjourn.

Even if Democrats, who control the House, pass their jobs measure in that chamber, it faces a bleak future in the GOP-controlled Senate, despite O'Neill's claim that Senate Republicans may be willing to meet Democrats "half way."

"I don't close my mind to other jobs legislation," Baker said. But he added it would be a "heroic-size accomplishment" for Congress just to pass the highway construction program the administration backs.

Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., said Senate Republican leaders agree that "the 5-cent gas tax and those jobs (it is supposed to create) will be the major and only action" on jobs during the lame duck session.

Conte and Hatfield have expressed interest in creating more than the 320,000 jobs the administration estimates in its highway construction legislation.

But, Hatfield said, the $5 billion Democratic plan "becomes a tremendous target and the president will veto it."

U.S. likely to double troops in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration probably will double the number of American troops in Lebanon to 2,400 in response to an appeal from the Lebanese president, U.S. and diplomatic sources say.

The object is to hasten withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops from Lebanon. Arrangements for a withdrawal are proceeding much slower than the United States had hoped, in part because the Israelis are demanding political concessions from the Lebanese government first, the U.S. officials say.

"The Begin government (Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin) wants something to take to the Israeli electorate and say, 'See, it was worth it. It was right,'" a State Department official said Tuesday.

The Italians and French, who along with the United States make up a three-nation peacekeeping force totaling about 3,400, also have been asked by Lebanon's president, Amin Gemayel, to increase their troop contingents.

Gemayel believes having more peacekeeping troops will lead to an earlier withdrawal by the Israelis and Syrians, with the Palestinians departing with the Syrians.

Diplomatic sources here say the continuing presence in Lebanon of large armies, peacekeeping units and domestic militias is creating an explosive situation where a mistake by one side could set off a major new outbreak of fighting that could involve Americans.

There are now about 1,200 American Marines in Lebanon. U.S. State Department and diplomatic sources, who asked not to be identified, said Gemayel wants the number of Americans increased to 5,000, but the administration probably will agree to approximately 2,400.

Alan Romberg, the deputy State Department spokesman, acknowledged Tuesday that a request for more U.S. troops had been received and said the administration would actively consider it.

A senior State Department official had told The Asscociated Press the same thing in an interview last week.

Another U.S. official, who did not want to be identified, said Tuesday it was all but certain the administration would decide to dispatch another 1,200 American troops, although he cautioned a decision was not final.

Gemayel has been quoted as saying he wants the force increased to 30,000. The British, South Koreans and Dutch all have said they would be willing to contribute and may do so, officials here said.

Romberg had no further comment on the Lebanese request except to say the American response would be consistent with the U.S. objective of promoting the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

Philip C. Habib, Reagan's special Mideast envoy, is trying to negotiate a two-stage withdrawal of foreign forces, with an initial pullback of Israeli and Syrian troops to the border regions followed by a complete pullout later on.

The precise mission of a reinforced peacekeeping force isn't clear, but the senior official told the AP that the American contingent could be deployed along the Beirut-to-Damascus highway east of Beirut, evidently to help supervise a disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces and guard against any return of guerrilla forces to the area.

On Monday, the State Department expressed disappointment that direct negotiations between Israel and Lebanon on the withdrawal of Israeli forces have yet to begin.

One obstacle has been disagreement between Israel and Lebanon on a site for the negotiations. Israel prefers they be held alternately in Beirut and Jerusalem.

Lebanese officials want the talks held in towns along the Israeli-Lebanese border, contending that any discussions held in Jerusalem would imply recognition of that city as Israel's capital.

U.S. officials are sympathetic to Lebanon's position and privately critical of Israel. Under pressure from Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Israel previously dropped a demand that Gemayel sign a peace treaty prior to a withdrawal.

The State Department official said Israel is seeking whatever political concessions it can get from the Lebanese government, even at the risk of weakening the government. He said Begin appears worried that Israelis might conclude that the invasion of Lebanon was a mistake.

But all the blame is not Israel's that a troop withdrawal hasn't been arranged, the official said. "There is a lot of foot dragging by all sides," he said. "No one wants to take the first step. We (the U.S.) want to be the catalysts."

Except for the death of one Marine in a mine explosion, there have been few incidents involving the Americans in Lebanon and virtually no fighting. The 1,200 Marines were sent to Lebanon on Sept. 29 in the wake of the massacre of Palestinians in Beirut refugee camps in mid-September.

IADC leader tells drillers it's time to sit and wait

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Oilmen "did their damnedest" to sow positive things in the Nov. 2 elections, but they did not reap all they had hoped for. Now, the alternative is to sit back and wait

The wait will be none too restful because there are three branches of the federal government to keep an eye on, Ed McGhee told a group of West Texas drilling contractors here last night. He is the executive vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors.

The lame duck Congress which convened Nov. 29 will not do anything to affect the drilling industry, he predicted, but rather, it will be up to the new session meeting in January to address questions which could stimulate or depress the industry.

"This five-cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline will not cause any fewer wells to be drilled," McGhee said, although he disagreed with politicians who call the proposed tax a user tax. Republican and Democratic leaders, as well as the President, support the new tax, which will be used to create jobs and meet the vast problems of the nation's highways.

Other energy issues will come before the Congress in 1983 that will have more impact, McGhee predicted. Legislation concerning natural gas prices has been introduced in Congress on a regular basis in the last few years, and the new session will be no exception.

He cautioned, however, that the mood of the electorate is such that if Congress were to deregulate gas prices next year, the bill would probably carry a windfall profits tax on gas with it, "which would be counter-productive."

"In my opinion, we'd be just about as well off if we let the thing (Natural Gas Policy Act) go until 1985." Under the NGPA, passed in 1978, some natural gas prices would be deregulated by 1985.

Another issue McGhee sees coming up is the possibility Congress might try to limit political action committee (PAC) activities and instead, tax the public and use those monies to finance Congressional races.

The IADC PAC has been the most active part of that organization, McGhee said. This year it donated $175,000 to federal campaigns. Although the PAC did not see all its candidates elected, "If the collective PACs in this industry, and in business, had not done their damnedest, it would've been a lot worse," he said.

A second area oilmen need to watch in the federal government is the Supreme Court, now that a Wyoming federal judge has ruled the crude oil windfall profits tax unconstitutional, McGhee said.

"I don't know of anything that would have a more stimulating affect on us," than for the high court to uphold the Nov. 4 decision, he said. "It would put a thousand rigs in the field in six months, there's no question."

Two major points will affect the court's decision, he warned: There is still too much anti-oil sentiment in the country, and a desire to "punish" the oil industry, and the nation needs money to offset its huge budget deficit.

"The windfall profits tax is probably second only to the personal income tax as a source of revenue. If they strike it down, they'll come up with some other kind of tax," he said.

Finally, McGhee said oilmen need to watch the executive branch of the federal government, as exemplified by the bureaucrats at the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

"In spite of having a basically pro-business Administration in Washington, we have OSHA poised to regulate the drilling business far in excess of previous regulations."

The IADC has petitioned OSHA for exemption to the new hearing rules, he said. The construction and agriculture industries are already exempt. If the new rules are put into effect, it will mean tremendous expenses for drilling contractors to conduct noise studies, meet personal sound equipment standards, and perform all the record-keeping OSHA would require, he said.

The proposed vertical safety standards, which concern ladders, steps, heights and so on, would affect drilling and well servicing rigs, frac trucks and "anything that shows up on location," McGhee said. Although this proposal is not as "insidious" as the one concerning noise levels, it has also been opposed by the IADC, primarily "because of unnecessary red tape, and the fact it will not make one soul safer."

Because the Reagan Administration has pulled back much of its support for various programs, states, cities and counties are looking for new sources of revenues, McGhee said. As a result, the IADC recently appointed a director of state affairs to monitor actions below the federal level.

Nation's crash synfuels program pretty much crashlanded

By BILL STALL
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The crash program to make the United States forever immune from another Arab world oil shock so far has pretty much crashlanded.

More than two years ago, Jimmy Carter signed into law the bill creating the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp. and arming it with a $20 billion fund to help private companies develop new petroleum products from the nation's abundant storehouse of oil shale, coal, tar sands and other material.

So far, the corporation has not approved a single project and is not likely to for some months, if then, Synfuels Corp. officials acknowledged Tuesday.

The corporation board had set Tuesday as the deadline for applicants for financial assistance, either in the form of loans or price guarantees for the finished product, to meet certain conditions before final negotiations could begin on a second round of synfuels project. Corporation officials, who declined to be identified by name, refused Tuesday to say whether those conditions had been met. The officials would say only that "not all have met all conditions."

The full board meets Thursday to decide whether final negotiations should begin on any of the 11 projects bids called for in June. If the board agrees to proceed, it and the firms involved would sign letters of intent to negotiate actual financial arrangements. Those arrangements would take about two months or more to conclude, if all went well, the corporation staff officials said.

IN THE PAST two years, however, all has not gone well for the fledgling synfuels industry.

One of Ronald Reagan's first actions as president was to halt the direct subsidy program at the Department of Energy after it approved $3.1 billion in loan guarantees for two projects, in North Dakota and Colorado.

Then, the giant Exxon Corp. pulled out of its partnership in the $6 billion Colony oil shale project in western Colorado.

And, just last week, Ashland Oil Co. withdrew from the $4 billion Breckinridge project at Catlettsburg, Ky., effectively killing that effort to make an oil substitute out of coal.

The Breckinridge project is one of the 11 seeking financial assistance.

In announcing Ashland's decision, John R. Hall, the company's chairman, said the government should take a new look at its commitment to the synthetic fuels industry as represented by the Synfuels Corp.

"If we rely on the free market with only limited government assistance, synthetic fuels may not be available in the next crisis when they will be badly needed," Hall said.

THE REAGAN administration approach to the problem has been that the industry will be developed if the free market and private industry supports it. The government can provide assistance to develop technologies, but should not underwrite production facilities, the administration believes — a dramatic change from the policies of former President Carter and the intent of his keystone synthetic fuels program.

Two other factors, in addition to the shift in federal policy, have had a dramatic, negative impact on synthetic fuels. Persistent, high interest rates have forced energy firms to take a strong new look at their long-range investments. Because they are so complex and costly, synthetic fuels projects tie up vast amounts of investment capital with little expectation of return for many years.

Also, the worldwide recession and energy conservation have combined to drastically cut the world oil market and depressed prices. Historically, synfuels projects look good when prices are rising. Economically, they are far less promising when prices are stable.

In general, the petroleum and energy industries are delighted with Reagan's programs of decontrolling domestic oil prices and encouraging traditional oil and gas exploration by opening more public lands for private development.

However, they have been increasingly critical of the administration's lack of commitment to major synfuels development and the Synfuels Corp.'s slowness in approving projects.

IN A RECENT interview, Exxon Chairman C. J. Garvin Jr., also chairman of the American Petroleum Institute, said the oil glut, at best, would delay the need for synthetic fuels production for, perhaps, 10 years.

"That seems to you and me like a long time, but in the history of the business, it's not a long time," Garvin said in the Nov. 8 issue of Oil & Gas Journal. The basic fact of limited world oil supplies has not changed, he said.

Nor has the need for oil shale changed, he said in reference to the Colony project, only the timing.

Garvin said Exxon was disappointed that it had to shelve the Colony project because "we think this nation needs to develop these reserves for national security reasons ... I'm a little bit perplexed about how this country can address those problems. If you leave it to the free market, you may not have synfuels when you need them."

In response to criticism of the corporation's lack of action so far — some of it from key figures in Congress — one of the corporation staff aides said, "The corporation is committed to doing projects. Indeed, the act requires us to do so."

HE ADDED there is a good chance the board will agree Thursday to try a new form of seeking project applications called "targeted solicitation." Under such a system, the board might say, for instance, that it wants proposals for development of a particular type of oil shale plant. Further, the board might also indicate what sort of plant it envisioned and what type of financial assistance might be offered.

So far, the open solicitation system has left it entirely up to the companies to decide what form of project they wanted to propose. It also left them in the dark as to what sort of financial aid the corporation might be willing to grant.

One industry official was somewhat encouraged by this apparent willingness to innvoate.

Michael S. Koleda, president of the National Council on Synthetic Fuels Production, said, "This could provide industry with a needed, sharper picture of what the SFC wants to support and how much support can likely be expected. With luck, this new strategy will be unveiled soon and will be seen by congressional and industry supporters as realistic in today's economic and energy climate."

Dollar skidding, gold rose

LONDON (AP) — Expectations of lower U.S. interest rates and forecasts of a record U.S. trade deficit this year sent the dollar skidding on world foreign exchanges today.

Gold prices rose, although initial gains fell away slightly by late morning due to profit-taking, dealers said.

"A bit of selling has been coming in here, perhaps out of Zurich with some of the professionals taking profits," said a London trader.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day gets under way, the dollar slumped more than 4 yen in heavy trading to a closing 249.10 yen from 253.45 Tuesday. Dealers said volume totaled more than $2.1 billion from Tuesday's $1.65 billion.

Later in London, the dollar slipped further to 248.43 Yen.

— 2.4568 German marks, down from 2.4800
— 2.1128 Swiss francs, down from 2.1300
— 6.9465 French francs, down from 7.0125
— 2.7060 Dutch guilders, down from 2.7325
— 1,419.90 Italian lire, down from 1,431.63
— 1.2358 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2398

In London, the British pound rose more than a cent to $1.6340, up from 1.6215 late Tuesday and a 5-cent increase from the six-year low it hit last week at the ebb of a two-week dive.

Frankfurt money dealers attributed the dollar's slide to a market belief that the U.S. currency will head downwards in coming weeks and months, after its year-long strength because of prevailing high American interest rates.

London's five major bullion houses fixed a morning recommended gold price of $444.00 a Troy ounce, up from $437.50 late Tuesday.

Strike looms

BOSTON (AP) — Hotel and union negotiators extended a midnight strike deadline, working into the early morning hours today to avert a walkout by 3,000 workers at nine major hotels.

Negotiations with Local 26 of the Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Employees and Bartenders Union, scheduled to strike at midnight, were being extended hour-by-hour early this morning, said Marie Kenney, business agent for the local.

Union members on hand at the Hotel Colonnade, where the talks were being held, had about 500 picket signs stacked up in the event of a walkout.

HLH Corp. reports loss

DALLAS (AP) — HLH Petroleum Corp. Tuesday reported a loss from operations of $523,550, or 12 cents per share, that resulted from a nationwide decline in drilling, president W.O. Hill said.

The loss, for the second quarter ending Sept. 30, came on revenues of $1,428,300.

For the six months ending Sept. 30, HLH reported earnings of $1,443,736, or 33 cents per share, on revenues of $5,990,505.

Hill said the decline in drilling for oil and gas weakened the demand for the company's six drilling rigs.

Muse Air closes deal

DALLAS (AP) — Muse Air Corp. announced Tuesday that it has closed $62 million worth of financing for the purchase of three new DC-9 Super 80 aircraft from McDonnell Douglas Corp.

The financing, approved Monday, includes a $42 million 10-year senior secured bank loan and gross proceeds of $20 million from the sale of federal income tax benefits associated with the three aircraft, the company said.

The permanent bank loan was arranged by Crocker National Bank of Los Angeles, Muse president Michael L. Muse said.

Charlie Brooks Jr. plans to exchange vows Friday with a Fort Worth nurse he met as a pen pal. Four days later he is scheduled to be executed by lethal injection, what would be the first execution in Texas since 1964 and the first-ever death by lethal injection in the United States.

Execution-bound inmate plans vows

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Charlie Brooks Jr. says he plans to exchange vows Friday with a Fort Worth nurse he met as a pen pal. He is scheduled to die four days later.

Brooks, 40, is on death row at the Ellis Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections, awaiting execution Tuesday for the 1976 kidnap-murder of a used-car-lot mechanic in Fort Worth.

The exchange of vows will be in the visiting room at the prison, with no minister or justice of the peace, he said.

"We are planning to exchange vows with each other with God as our witness," he said last Wednesday in an interview at the prison. "It's just between the two of us."

"We will be committing ourselves to each other in preparation for the next life," said Brooks, who declines to identify the woman by name.

If executed Tuesday for the shooting death of David Gregory, Brooks would be the first man executed in Texas since 1964 and the first in the United States to be executed by lethal injection.

His lawyers plan to ask U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron White for a stay of execution later this week. A three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last Friday rejected a request for a stay.

Brooks said the woman he plans to exchange vows with has agreed to witness his execution.

"I have a wonderful lady that Allah has sent to me. She has been with me for five years and she has agreed to be there at the execution should it come about," Brooks said.

He said they were brought together by a fellow inmate while Brooks was awaiting trial.

"He was receiving quite a few letters and so I jokingly asked him if he would get one of his friends to find me a friend," he said. "I started corresponding with her in 1977. Our relationship bloomed from there."

Brooks now considers her his "mate."

"Allah says in the Koran that he has chosen a mate for you, talking about men. And he has placed love in their hearts for each other. So I like to look at her as my mate. She is my other half," Brooks said.

Brooks said he has become a religious man since his 1977 conviction, and has changed his religion to Islam and his name to Shareef Ahmad Abdul-Rahim.

"I was a different person. I was Charlie Brooks Jr. then. Charlie Brooks Jr. was an ex-convict, dope fiend, anything else you could think of a person who lives outside the law...but he's dead. He was put to death the day that Shareef Ahmad Abdul-Rahim was born."

Brooks and Woodie Loudres were convicted in separate trials of murdering David Gregory, who had accompanied Brooks during a test drive of a car from the used car lot where Gregory worked. Gregory was shot to death in a motel. Brooks said the victim's hands and feet were bound at the time.

Life without God

William J. Murray III, the son of vowed atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair, is promoting his book, "Life without God," in which the born-again Christian details growing up with his mother, who sued the Baltimore, Md., school system on behalf of him. In her attempts to stop school prayer, Murray contends in his book and on his promotional tours, his mother used him and "everyone around" her in order to further her cause.

Son not following mother's footsteps

DALLAS (AP) — William J. Murray III says that his mother, outspoken atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair, used him for her own financial interests during her successful crusade to abolish mandatory prayer from public schools.

"She used me and everyone around me for her own profit and gain," said Murray, 36, who wrote a book about his experiences of being raised in an atheist household and helping his mother with her cause before he became a born-again Christian.

The plaintiff of record in the U.S. Supreme Court case that ruled open Bible readings and prayer in public schools to be unconstitutional, Murray portrayed his mother as a self-centered opportunist whose beliefs drew her to communism and destroyed their family.

"DURING THE (COURT) case, she used to agitate kids in the neighborhood to beat me up, so that she could send out newsletters about the beatings and raise more money for her cause," Murray said Tuesday.

His mother's efforts were successful, he said, because he was regularly threatened with physical abuse by schoolmates, who at one point chased him several blocks and began beating him with a belt.

He said he was called a "commie" and shunned by other students. He had to eat alone at lunch, he said.

Mrs. O'Hair refused to respond to the book, "My Life Without God," when she was contacted in Austin, where she runs the American Atheist Center.

"You know I'm not going to do that," she said. "It's an exercise in futility to call me."

THE LANDMARK SUPREME Court decision arose from a lawsuit filed on Murray's behalf by his mother while he was a 14-year-old student in Baltimore's public school system. The suit sought to force the board of education to stop Bible readings and prayer exercises.

"At the time, I did cooperate with my mother," Murray said. "At that age, I had been raised believing that the United States was a fascist labor camp, and that the country was run by a bunch of Jewish bankers in New York."

He became so steeped in Marxist philosophy, he said, that his viewpoints began to change from other students'. Asked by a teacher where he wanted to spend the summer, Murray replied he wanted to go to a Caspian Sea resort to be with communist workers.

His mother had pulled him out of public school rather than allow him to be exposed to Bible readings and prayers. But she demanded later that he return there to enhance her court case against the district, he said.

"At that point, the case started," Murray said. "I just didn't want to go back to school, though."

HE DETAILS FAMILY fights in the book, including one in which he said Mrs. O'Hair would became enraged, brandishing a knife and hurling dinner plates.

The wound drew blood and he was taken by his father to receive tetanus shots for it.

Murray said the fights were prompted by his mother's beliefs that each atheist is "the center of the universe."

Suspended postal supervisor removed before acquittal

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Booker T. "Billy" Green Jr., the 42-year-old U.S. Postal Service supervisor who was suspended from work after he was charged with murder Nov. 14, 1981, was "removed" — fired — from his USPS job about a week before he was acquitted of slaying R.J. Morris, 50, in a the wake of a dice game.

Green claimed self-defense.

In a hearing Tuesday on Green's appeal for job reinstatement, Postmaster David Holster testified that he approved of Green's suspension without pay Nov. 24, 1981, after he had been charged with murdering Morris.

He was subsequently tried in March in state court for murder, but the jury found him guilty of the lesser included offense of voluntary manslaughter, although it could not agree on a punishment. The judge subsequently declared a mistrial and Green was reindicted for voluntary manslaughter and was retried in late July, when he was acquitted and set free.

Holster noted that Green was indicted, tried, a mistrial was declared, and was reindicted and then he was removed from service before the second trial had started.

Holster noted that USPS regulations allow for the dismissal of an employee if he is charged with an offense for which he could be sent to prison and if the employee's continued service with the USPS would impede efficiency and the best interests of the postal service.

Holster said he was concerned with "our image" and with possible conflicts between Green and Robert Jam[illegible] "Bubba" Morris Jr., son of the late J.R. Morris, and who worked under Gr[illegible] at the main post office.

THE FINAL hearing on Green's appeal was presided over by William Wayne Carnes of the federal Merit System Protection Board in Dallas; his ruling is expected to come in a few weeks. Carnes will decide if Green, who alleges violation of his civil and constitutional rights, will be returned to his $27,000 a year job or not. Arguing against his reinstatement and upholding the postal service's decision to terminate Green was Gartone Batson of El Paso. Representing Green were John and Joan Love of San Angelo.

In cross-examining six witnesses presented by the USPS, the Loves tried to show that Green was maliciously suspended, that he was removed from the USPS a few days before his second trial started as a ploy to abet a conviction and that his race — black — had a bearing on the decision to remove him from the USPS.

Holster denied those contentions.

HOWEVER, THE postmaster, who described Green as a "good supervisor," said he would "have terminated his suspension" and put Green back to work had the murder charges been dropped prior to the first trial.

Holster said his ultimate decision to remove Green from the postal service was based on the gravity of the act — Green admitted shooting Morris in the wake of a dispute over a dice game — the adverse publicity and the community's image of the postal service, the "moral situation...among our employees," and the inhibiting of USPS efficiency should Green return to the postal service.

Batson asked Holster if the coincidence of Green being black had a bearing on his termination. "Not at all," Holster said.

"You would have taken that same action if he were a white man?" asked Batson.

"Yes," said Holster.

Even though Green was fired about a week before the second jury acquitted him of voluntary manslaughter and exonerated him, Holster said the USPS deliberations on Green's career were "separate and apart from the criminal law."

Holster said he had talked with Green Nov. 19 and 24 of 1981 and had received a letter from Green's attorney, H. Thomas Hirsch of Odessa, in Green's behalf.

Holster briefly recounted what he said Green told him of the slaying.

"He got his rifle out (of his car) and wished it hadn't happened, but it did happen."

HOLSTER SAID that Green's gambling "had nothing" to do with his ultimate decisions to suspend and then remove him from the service.

"What he does in his own time is his own business within reason," the postmaster said.

But under cross-examination by Ms. Love, Holster said he felt that many of the employees' reactions to Green should he return to work would have an adverse "impact on productivity."

"People do talk, and they love to talk," he said.

Green's return to work would tend to "undermine the postal service in the eyes of the public that we serve," Holster said.

"They form an image in their mind of all employees in the postal service based on the actions of one employee," he said.

"Bubba" Morris, a USPS mail handler and another witness called by the USPS, said he would be uncomfortable working under Green again.

Batson asked him when.

"The night he murdered my father."

Morris said he was "still mad" at Green, his former friend and supervisor.

"I can control my madness," Morris said, "(but) I don't know if he (Green) can control his."

An earlier witness in the six-hour hearing was Fred Thummel, a USPS supervisor who proposed that Green be put on administrative leave and later suspended and removed from the USPS.

"MY WHOLE FEELING is that he would not promote the efficiency (of the USPS)," Thummel said. "It (Green's return) would affect the work force. Some of them might feel uneasy about him being there. I know personally I would feel uneasy."

"Do you believe that a person is innocent until proven guilty?" John Love asked Thummel."

"Oh yes," he said. But Thummel said reports that Green had admitted shooting Morris, though in self-defense, "led me to believe that there was a reasonable cause that he could go to jail (prison)."

Another USPS supervisor, Gary Gammage, testified that Green told him that "he had shot R.J. Morris in self-defense over a gambling debt."

Gammage said that Green has "always been a likable person" and that it wouldn't bother him if Green were to return to work.

Another USPS witness, Milford Prichard, supervisor of mail processing, said he advised Thummel on a proposal to remove Green from the USPS.

"I also knew the impact it (news reports of Green's first trial) had on the community," Prichard said of what he termed "adverse publicity." He said some postal service workers would be "fearful of working" with Green.

In justifying the USPS's action, Batson said that Green's not returning to work would "serve to promote the overall efficiency of the postal service."

Love, on the other hand, faulted the USPS for "abuse of discretion" in removing Green from the postal service even before the trial which ultimately exonerated him of guilt had begun. He said the USPS action in handling the Green case was "arbitrary and capricious."

Lots of work behind good-looking nuts

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Those scrumptious pecan kernels decked out on the tables and getting those "I'd-eat-you-if-no-one-was-looking" look didn't just happen to appear all prettied up and fancy.

A lot of hard-core, custom shelling went into getting those 1,380 Midland County pecans laid open and exposed. Most halved perfectly; some shattered and crumbled on impact.

"It's very tiring to sit and crack 138 samples, but it was fun," admitted Willie Stumberg, Midland County agent who helped with the shelling of pecans for the annual Midland County Pecan Show which wrapped up Tuesday. The show was held in Midland Park Mall under the sponsorship of the Midland Pecan Growers Association.

Commercial, amateur and backyardpecan growers submitted 5,520 choice pickings of their nutty fruit — from Apache to Kiowa to Western Schley varieties — for judging, but only a fourth of them were shelled for the county show. Each of the 138 entries was made up of 40 pecans but only 10 pecans from each entry were shelled for judging.

The 30 left intact from each of the winners and runners-up will be sacked and hauled to Wichita Falls for regional competition Dec. 10-11. There, 10 more from each entry will be whacked, cracked and judged. Then there will only be 20 left from each entry, and they'll head for state competition next year.

This year's pecan harvest was judged by a land specialist, Ken Lindsay, an agronomist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX), and a bugman, Charles Neeb, an TAEX entomologist.

"Well," Stumberg said of Neeb's and Lindsay's credentials, "you've got to have soil to grow them, and you've got to keep the insects off."

Among the rows and columns of nuts which didn't fare too well in the shelling were the Van Deman. They're a tough nut; they cracked up.

"These Van Demans, you almost have to take a crowbar and hammer to crack them," Stemberg said. "Consequently, you get some broken kernels because you really have to whack them."

The show didn't pull in as many entries as last year's exhibition, noted Charles Green, retired Midland County agent, but "we agreed that the numbers are down but the qualities are good."

They're down in part because the trees didn't get a "good killing frost until recently," said Green. "They just now are beginning to dry up in the shuck."

Otherwise, it's a good year price-wise, "because of the short crop," he said. The pecan is an alternate-bearing tree, explained Green, and, like a sine wave, production follows the up-and-down curves from year to year.

Store-bought pecans, which often are from cold storage and are not up to the quality of freshly-harvested nuts, are selling for $1.79 to $1.99 in the shell this year. "And if the consumer is wise, he'll avoid them" and get his pecans directedly from the producer, who would like to get $1.50 a pound but may settle for $1, Green said.

Harold Semple, chairman of this year's show, cited the up-and-down year-to-year pecan prices.

"It goes back to the same old story — supply and demand," he said. Last year, pecans were in over-supply, and in-shell pecans were marked down in price — from $1.29 to $1.59 a pound at the retail outlet. Unless the producer sold his pecans directly to the consumer, he might have ended with 35 to 42 cents a pound last year if he sold them to the sheller. "Anything less than 60 cents, you can't make it," Semple said.

This year, that same producer might be getting 80 cents on the pound from the sheller and $1.50 directly from the consumer.

While the kernel is used in confections, salads, baking, snacks and other foods, the woody shell is utilitarian.

"I put my shells in flower beds," said Marge Shaw.

"We've been doing that for years," said Pat Semple.

"That keeps the soil from packing," Ms. Shaw said.

"Also," volunteered Semple, "they are using pecan shells for sand blasting, because they will not spark" as will sand, and thus the dangers of explosions and fires in places such as oil field tanks are avoided. Ground-up pecan shells are used in cleaning jet engines; the shell, thrown in the running engine, will clean out the carbon and clean off other residue and matter but will not damage the metal and plating. Aside from finding uses for her pecan shells, Ms. Shaw has found something enterprising in the pecan-cracking machine which she and her spouse, Art, operate.

"I do commercial cracking for people," she said, "and if they want any cracking done, I'll do it...for a price."

And she also has the answer to the most asked question at the pecan show: "Where can I buy pecans?"

Marijuana-related arrests should result in felony charges

From Staff and Wire Reports

BIG SPRING — Two Dallas-area men arrested Monday while driving through the Midland area with almost 600 pounds of marijuana probably can be prosecuted for no more than a third-degree felony, a state judge says.

"A first-class felony carries a penalty of from 10 years to 99 years, or life, but the appellate court ruled recently that that law isn't any good," State District Judge James Gregg of Big Spring said Tuesday.

"The caption was wrong when it was passed. If that statute has been knocked down, as apparently it has, it will be a third-class felony, with a penalty of 2 to 10 years," Gregg added.

Mark James Smith, 36, of Dallas was arrested Monday night while driving a van through Big Spring, and Jorge Manuel Pariente, 45, of Denton was arrested earlier in a pickup truck near Midland. About 330 pounds of marijuana was found in Smith's vehicle and 250 pounds in Pariente's pickup.

The arrests followed a tip to Texas Rangers in Midland that a pickup truck and a van met a single-engine plane that landed about 5:45 p.m. Monday at a remote airstrip near Imperial in Crane County. The informant said the vehicles were on their way to Dallas with $400,000 worth of marijuana.

Pariente was taken to the Ector County Jail in Odessa, where Justice of the Peace Virgil Lumpee set bond at $25,000. Smith was taken to the Howard County Jail in Big Spring, where Gregg set bond at $100,000.

On Tuesday, during a hearing on Smith's complaint that the bond was excessive, Gregg reduced bail to $50,000.

Midland teen-ager charged in Monday hit-and-run death

A rural Midland teen-ager has been freed on $2,500 bond after being charged with the Monday night hit-and-run traffic death of 10-year-old Christopher Scott Baker.

Charged with failure to stop and render aid, a felony, was 17-year-old construction laborer Rusty Dean Box of County Road 1270-South. Bond was set Tuesday by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry.

Judge Sprayberry said the family with whom Box is staying called him late Tuesday afternoon and said the youth told them he thought he hit an animal with the family car as he was on his way home after dropping off a family member at a Girl Scout meeting.

Box told the family he turned around and went back but didn't see anything, according to Sprayberry, who checked the car himself and determined from the damage that it was probably the vehicle that hit the boy, who was a fourth-grade student at Henderson Elementary School.

Box, whose older brother was killed in a hunting accident near Temple Nov. 19, was released from custody after bond was posted and the case will be referred to the grand jury, according to Sprayberry.

The Baker youth was apparently walking home from a grocery store when he was struck and killed along the south service road of Interstate 20 near Midland Industrial Park about 7 p.m. Monday. Services are pending at the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Dried fruits are among the most concentrated sources of natural carbohydrates. Raisins contain more than 75 percent carbohydrate by weight and are also rich in essential vitamins and minerals, according to Del Monte Corp.

Tylenol poisonings suspect Masterson will go to Illinois for arraignment

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A mechanic who surrendered for questioning about the Chicago-area Tylenol poisonings is expected to waive extradition and submit to a lie detector test in Illinois, authorities said.

Kevin John Masterson, 35, sought because of statements he allegedly made about the seven deaths from cyanide-tainted capsules of Extra Strength Tylenol, faced arraignment in Municipal Court today on an unrelated charge of possession of marijuana.

Meanwhile, two Illinois agents were dispatched to Los Angeles to take Masterson into custody. Officials said he could be returned to Chicago today.

"We will ask that Masterson submit to a polygraph examination," Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner told a Chicago news conference Tuesday night.

Masterson will waive an extradition hearing and his attorney, David Schippers, has indicated Masterson also will voluntarily take a lie detector test.

Antelopes beat Rebels

Hustle not enough for Lee

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Good hustle brought Midland Lee back into the ball game Tuesday night but it wasn't enough to overcome a taller Abernathy squad as the Rebels fell to 0-5 on the season with a 66-55 loss to the unbeaten 3A Antelopes at Chap Center.

Trailing by a 29-13 count early in the second quarter and down 40-29 at the half, the Rebels wouldn't give in. After intermission they came out of the locker-room and quickly eliminated a good portion of Abernathy's lead, pulling to within three, 44-41, with 3:05 remaining in the period.

It was as close as Lee would come for the rest of the night as Abernathy rediscovered its scoring touch for five unanswered buckets, spearheaded by guard Larry Perkins who scored three of the five field goals in the final minute of the third and opening minute of the fourth quarters for a seemingly insurmountable 54-41 lead. One basket by Lee's Tod Brown was quickly followed by a pair of Ed Teal free throws and a fourth Perkins' two-pointer to increase the margin to 58-43.

With 3:24 left in the ball game, Lee made a final run with eight straight points to pull within seven but were outscored 8-4 in the final two minutes to suffer the loss.

IT WAS the use of the full-court pressure defense with double-team traps in the back court and a running attack that kept Lee in the ball game.

After having their own way in the early going, the Antelopes seemed to lose their control in the middle of the game. Lee forced several Abernathy turnovers which produced some scoring but caused a lot to get away when their intense play caused them to throw the ball away or rush high percentage shots which bounced harmlessly off the rim or backboard.

"I'm real proud of the hustle and the two good comebacks we had tonight," said Lee's Paul Stueckler. "Hey, that's a good team. They beat Plainview twice in scrimmages and Lubbock Estacado. We had a hard time putting the ball in the hole and were a little nervous yet, lacking confidence. I thought the guys did a good job rebounding considering the height they've (Antelopes) got."

ABERNATHY USED it's height, featuring 6-foot-6 Allen Lester and 6-foot-4 players Ed Teal and Sammy Galloway, as a psychological tool before the start of the game. In warmup drills, the big guys were displaying their slam dunk skills.

At 6-foot-2, Brown and Sylvester Johnson are the tallest Rebels on the court most of the time.

Coach Stueckler pointed to Abernathy's pre-game antics after the game by asking Rebel Bryan White (aka Chopper) "did you see them in the pre-game warmups doing their ally oops and dunking?"

"I tried not to look," replied White as he headed to the showers.

Chris Iribeck led the Antelopes with 19 pointds while Perkins scored 18 and Teal 16. For Lee, Sylvester Johnson was high man with 11 followed by Brown, Alvin Henry and Derek Westbrook with 10 each.

Playing Abernathy Tuesday night, which was a last-minute pick-up game on the schedule, gives the Rebels the knowledge they need for their next opponent: the Antelopes. On Friday Lee will travel to Abernathy for a 7:30 p.m. varsity game.

Victor Brown and Moses Corrales led the scoring attack with 11 points each while Thanh Nguyen added 10. For the Antelopes, Scott Furgeson canned 18 points and Lonnie Teal 16.

Lee girls down Hobbs, 77-63

Farias cans 22 to set scoring pace

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

Despite reinjuring an ankle in the first period, Felicia Farias canned 22 points to lead the Midland Lee girl's basketball team to its third win of the young season with a solid 77-63 win over the Eagles of Hobbs N.M. Tuesday night.

The difference in the game came at the charity stripe where the Lady Rebs outscored the Eagles by the 14-point winning margin, 19-5.

The Rebels didn't pick up their first foul until three minutes had elapsed in the second period, by which time they were already enjoying the benefits of being in the bonus situation. The Lady Rebels took advantage of the unencumbered shots as they canned 19-of-33 for 57.6 percent. The Eagles were 45.5 percent from the line, hitting five of 11.

LEE JUMPED to and early 6-2 lead when the Eagles started a full court press. The Hobbs girls kept the Rebles from crossing half court while scoring eight unanswered points. It was the only time the Eagles would have the lead.

Lee coach Shirley Stephenson called a time out in order to stop the onslaught and instruct her girls on how to beat the press. The results were successful as the Rebels moved to a seven-point advantage by the end of the period, 21-14.

Stephenson tried several five-player combinations using all 13 players in the first half alone.

"Everyone on this team can play basketball," she said. "I never feel its a problem putting any of these girls in a game situation."

Both teams came out of the locker-room pressing all over the court. Again it was Hobbs full-court trap defense that was more effective, but offensively the Eagles couldn't capatalize on the turnovers as the Rebels opened up a seven-point lead by the end of the third stanza.

Stacy Harmon did some tough work under the boards against the taller Eagles and chipped in 11 of her 13 points to lead the second half charge. Yshun King also finished with 13 for Lee.

The Rebels were never really challenged in the final period as they jumped to and maintained a nine point lead.

COMPARING THE teams progress with last year's district co-champions Stephenson said, "At this point we're a little bit further along than last year. We're in better control of our game."

Sharon Haynes pumped in 17 points for the Eagles and Sharon Smith had 16 befor leaving the game with 1:29 remaining due to a leg injury. It was Hobb's first game.

Rebel point guard Ellen Matson reinjured a hyper-extended knee in the opening period and had to be carried off the court. The 5-foot-5 senior spent the rest of the game on the bench with a ice pack on her knee.

Prompted by the two first period injuries to starting players coach Stphens said, "If we can survive the injuries we'll have a good ball club."

The Lee junior varsity came away with 44-33 victory over the Hobbs JV in the opening game. Diana Mackey scored 10 points for the Rebels as teamates Diane White and Brenda Haven chipped in with eight each.

The Lee girls next game will be against Amarillo High in the Amarillo tournament Dec. 3-4. The JV will travel to Big Lake on Dec. 2 for the Reagan County tournament which continues through the fourth.

Lee Rebel Eric Griffin (20) fights an Abernathy player for a loose ball Tuesday at Chap Center

By The Associated Press

In last year's NCAA finals, if you remember, a long shot by the North Carolina guard gave the Tar Heels a 63-62 victory over the Georgetown Hoyas in the New Orleans Superdome.

Tuesday night, another long shot by Jordan helped Dean Smith's 15th ranked basketball team pull out a 70-68 thriller over Tulane in three overtimes.

"Coach Smith wanted us to deny them the ball," Jordan said. "I just saw the ball fall into my hands and fired away. It just happened to fall in."

Jordan's 20-foot shot followed a Green Wave turnover on an inbounds play near the end of regulation that sent the game into its first overtime. The Tar Heel sophomore then helped to win the game with a three-point play in the third overtime.

"Actually, it should have never gone into overtime," said Tulane Coach Ned Fowler. "This has to take a great deal out of us. A win here (at Chapel Hill, N.C.) would have been awfully big for us."

Jordan's three-point play came with 1:48 left in the third overtime. The Tar Heels trailed 59-57 when Matt Doherty hit a jumper with 2:18 remaining to force the second extra period. Doherty's two free throws with 38 seconds left in the second overtime put North Carolina on top 63-61, but Howard Jenkins' shot beat the buzzer, creating a need for another period.

In the third overtime, Jim Braddock hit a 20-foot jumper and Jordan followed with his three-point play to extend North Carolina's edge to 68-63. Buzz Peterson added a free throw to make it a six-point margin, providing the Tar Heels with their first victory of the year after two opening losses.

IN OTHER college basketball action involving the Top Twenty, second-ranked Georgetown routed Morgan State 91-57, ninth-ranked Missouri hammered Augustana (S.D.) 85-55 and No. 20 Nevada-Las Vegas edged Nevada-Reno 85-84.

Pat Ewing scored 19 points and grabbed 11 rebounds to lead Georgetown over Morgan State. The Hoyas started slowly against the Bears. But with the score tied at 6-6 four minutes into the game, their overall quickness and height advantage began to take its toll.

With the Hoyas ahead 29-18, Ewing scored on three straight trips down the court. He then stole a pass and was credited with an assist as he fed Michael Jackson for a layup and a 37-18 Georgetown lead with 3:22 remaining in the half. From there, the undefeated Hoyas coasted to their third straight victory of the season.

"You are never secure at this time of the year," said Georgetown Coach John Thompson. "And you don't look at every game in relation to the final score. It was a good test."

STEVE STIPANOVICH scored 20 points, and Jon Sundvold added 17 to lead Missouri's rout of Augustana. Stipanovich led the assault early by scoring 13 of his points in the first half. The 6-foot-11-inch center hit his first five field-goal attempts as Missouri outscored the Vikings 17-4 in an eight-minute span to take a commanding 27-12 lead with 7:06 left in the half.

"I thought that Steve Stipanovich came to play. He was ready to play both offensively and defensively," said Missouri Coach Norm Stewart. "But overall, I thought we could have had a much better reaction just in being mentally ready to play."

Even Stipanovich wasn't satisfied after scoring his game-high point total and grabbing 11 rebounds.

"I was fortunate enough that the first couple of shots went in and I got going early, but throughout the game I was inconsistent," he said. "The team as a whole wasn't consistent through-out the game, and that's something we're going to have to work on. Each player is going to have to work on getting consistent."

SIDNEY GREEN'S 28 points and nine rebounds paced Nevada-Las Vegas to an emotion-packed victory over upstate rival Nevada-Reno.

UNR led by a point at the half, and nearly erased an eight-point deficit in the final three minutes. But UNLV, paced by Green's dunks, deft outside shots and domination of the boards, held on to win.

The game reached an emotional peak with about four minutes left in the first half, when UNR forward Sam Mosley fouled Green and then slapped Las Vegas center Eldridge Hudson in an angry exchange. Mosley was ejected from the game as teammates restrained Green and Hudson.

IN OTHER action, Roy Hinson's 19 points led Rutgers over Princeton 60-55, Clyde Vaughan scored 26 points as Pittsburgh broke away from stubborn Duquesne in the closing minutes to defeat the Dukes 62-53, Terence Stansbury's free throw with four seconds left offset a barrage of three-point field goals by George Washington as Temple beat the Colonials 68-67, David Little, Chucky Barnett and Wayman Tisdale combined for 62 points as Oklahoma drubbed Auburn 104-83 and Dane Suttle scored 28 points to lead Pepperdine to an 89-70 victory over Los Angeles State.

SMU dominates All-SWC team

To the champions go the spoils.

Again, it was an all-SMU backfield for the second year in a row with senior running backs Craig James and Eric Dickerson joining quarterback Lance McIlhenny, a junior.

Guard Joe Beard, a senior, was the fourth Mustang to make the mythical first team on offense.

It was almost an all Mustang secondary. Seniors Blane Smith and Wes Hopkins, and junior Russell Carter were named to the defensive backfield.

SMU COACH Bobby Collins was named the SWC Coach of the Year in his first season at the helm.

Dickerson, who gained 1,617 yards rushing with an average of 147 per contest and a seven-yard average, was named the Offensive Player of the Year.

James also made the first team as a punter.

SMU had three players on the second team including offensive tackle Brian O'Meara and defensive linemen Russell Washington and Kevin Chaney.

The other offensive members of the first team included center Jay Bequette of Arkansas, wide receivers Gerald McNeill of Baylor and Herkie Walls of Texas, tight end Deron Miller of Rice, guard Steve Korte and tackle Alfred Mohammed of Arkansas, tackle Bryan Millard of Texas, and placekicker Ricky Gann of Texas Tech.

Kelley, Hart refuse to regard themselves as football oddities

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Silver-haired Larry Kelley and massive Leon Hart refuse to regard themselves as oddities — the only linemen ever to win the Heisman Trophy as the best player in college football. Instead, they are proud relics of what they regard as a more glorious age in the game.

"Football used to belong to the players on the field — now it's a chess game," commented the 67-year-old Kelley of Yale who joined Hart, the giant end from Notre Dame, in watching a studio preview of Bud Greenspan's 1982 Heisman Trophy Award film.

The film, rich in clips of gridiron heroics dating back to the first Heisman award in 1935, will be shown on national television (ABC-TV) Saturday in connection with formal presentation of the 1982 trophy at the Downtown Athletic Club. Georgia's Herschel Walker is a heavy favorite.

"Puppets. Players are simply puppets," agreed Hart, who at 6-5 and 265 pounds is the largest man ever to have won the trophy. "The quarterback isn't the field general any more. He's just a messenger for the coach.

"It's all so systemitized. A man sitting in a high box relays a message to the bench. It goes to the coach who confers with his offensive coordinator. Then the play is sent to the quarterback. Yes, puppets on a string.

"Too bad the college game has come under such influence from the pros. It was a better game the way it was."

Kelley, himself a powerful end of 210 pounds, was the second Heisman winner in 1936, after Chicago's Jay Berwanger. Hart, who never played in a losing game in his four varsity years with the Fighting Irish, won in 1949.

BOTH PLAYED in the pre-platoon era when players performed on both offense and defense. Under the substitution rule then in effect, a player removed could not return in the same quarter.

"Even then, he could not communicate with the other players," recalled Kelley. "He had to stand to one side, guarded by an official, while his teammates went into a huddle. A coach couldn't even signal from the sidelines. It was illegal."

Both recalled playing 60 minutes without relief.

"I missed only eight minutes of play in my entire final year," said Kelley. "I had to do it all — make tackles, make blocks, intercept passes, even occasionally kick."

"I played 60 minutes, too," said Hart. "I played a little back of the line, sort of what you would call a weak side linebacker today. I was free lance. I had to do a lot of blocking and tackling."

Neither Kelley nor Hart feel hurt that their 50-pound trophies symbolize a heavily-armored runner with one arm cradling the ball, the other outstretched in a stiff-arm.

"I stiff-armed a few fellows myself," said Kelley, who caught passes from Jerry Roscoe and Clint Frank and ran through broken fields to shatter such Ivy League dynasties as that of the Princeton Tigers in the mid-1930s. Allison Danzig of the New York Times wrote, "No player in our time has more conclusively left the impression of his personality upon the poublic as has Kelley of Yale."

SOUTHERN METHODIST'S Kyle Rote once said of Hart, "I thought he was eight feet tall and weighed 350 pounds."

Hart, now 53, owner of his own business in Birmingham, Mich., played seven years with the professional Detroit Lions, occasionally running as fullback. Kelley is retired and living in Pensacola, Fla.

Both have strong feelings about specialized football, insisting that's one reason a lineman today has no chance of winning the Heisman.

"He's only in the game 30 minutes," says Hart. "He can't possibly make enough individual tackles to make any impression. An offensive lineman has no chance at all."

"I thought when Hugh Green (Pittsburgh's great defensive line) could do no better than finish well back of George Rogers two years ago," said Kelley, "that no lineman would ever do it."

"The advantage college football has over the pros is youth," said Hart. "That implies stamina, effort and ability. The influence of the pros has taken that away from them. Now everybody's a specialist and college football programs are going broke.

"I remember seeing Alabama and Notre Dame in a bowl game once. Alabama had used 70 men at halftime, Notre Dame 55. That's not to count 19 coaches and all sorts of assistants. From the economic standpoint alone, it's crazy."

Privateers hand UT's Weltlich first loss

By The Associated Press

The University of New Orleans handed Bob Weltlich his first loss as Texas basketball coach as the Longhorns fell to the Privateers 74-56 in a game that wasn't much of a contest after the first five minutes.

New Orleans grabbed the lead for good with 15 minutes left in the first half Tuesday night and opened a 27-point lead midway through the second half.

Lamar 57, Southwest Texas 44

SAN MARCOS, Texas — Tom Sewell scored 20 points to lead Lamar University to a 57-44 victory over Southwest Texas State in basketball Tuesday night.

The game was tied seven times in the first half before Lamont Robinson's jumper with 5:48 left in the period put the Cardinals ahead to stay. Lamar, which hit 51 percent of its field goal efforts, led 29-24 at the half.

Texas Southern 91, NTSU 89 (OT)

DENTON, Texas — Patrick Kelly hit a desperation shot at the buzzer in overtime to lift Texas Southern to a 91-89 college basketball victory over North Texas State Tuesday night.

North Texas' Kenneth Lyons sent the game into overtime when he scored with five seconds remaining in regulation play to deadlock the score at 85-85.

Texas Southern's Harry "Machine Gun" Kelly scored 27 points and Alton Jefferson added 26 as the Tigers raised their season record to 2-0.

Lub Christian 86, NM Highlands 74

LAS VEGAS, N.M. — Harold Jones sank a game-high 31 points Tuesday night to spearhead Lubbock Christian to an 86-74 non-conference basketball victory over New Mexico Highlands.

The triumph boosted Lubbock Christian's record this season to 7-1, while New Mexico Highlands' mark slumped to 0-4.

Jones scored 19 of his points in the first half, three of those points coming 15 seconds before intermission to give his team a 41-36 halftime lead.

New Mexico Highlands erased a nine-point deficit and pulled to within three points with 13:11 remaining in the game.

Things picking up for Islanders

By The Associated Press

For most of November, the New York Islanders haven't looked anything like the three-time Stanley Cup champions they are.

But things are picking up of late, according to Coach Al Arbour.

"We were more disciplined in Washington Sunday night and we improved on that again tonight," Arbour said Tuesday night after his team's first victory in six games, a 3-2 decision over St. Louis.

The 3-3 tie with the Caps on Sunday, coupled with Tuesday night's victory, helped the Islanders finish the month on a high note. They had a 4-7-5 mark overall.

"You could see the slump coming as far back as 15 games ago," the New York coach added. "It's still not the way we're capable of playing but I think I can see us coming on now."

In other National Hockey League action, Quebec defeated Winnipeg 8-6 and Los Angeles turned back Vancouver 5-2.

The Blues struck first on Wayne Babych's rebound goal three minutes into the contest. Just 1:44 later, the Islanders' Brent Sutter tied the game after Greg Gilbert frisked the puck from Liut behind the net and sent a pass in front of the net.

After Joe Mullen gave the Blues a 2-1 lead 88 seconds into the second period, Clark Gillies slipped a 15-foot backhander between Liut's pads 11½ minutes into the period to once again tie the game.

Nordiques 8, Jets 6

Real Cloutier broke a 6-6 tie with two power-play goals early in the third period to trigger Quebec over Winnipeg. Marc Tardif had tied the game at 6-6 at 1:52 of the third period when he scored on a rebound.

Cloutier gave Quebec the lead at 5:53 when he sent a shot from the right-wing faceoff circle past Winnipeg goaltender Ed Staniowski. He made it 8-6 at 7:25 when he drilled a rebound past Staniowski from the slot.

Kings 5, Canucks 2

Ulf Isaksson broke a tie midway through the third period and Steve Bozek added two more goals as Los Angeles defeated Vancouver.

Isaksson scored his sixth goal of the season on a deflection at 8:07 to break a 2-2 tie and Bozek got his first 37 seconds later. Bozek made it three Los Angeles goals in three minutes and eight seconds with his second marker at 11:15 on another deflection.

The Kings got brilliant netminding from rookie Gary Laskoski, who stopped 36 shots, including 15 in the second period. Rookie Ken Ellacott of the Canucks made 34 saves.

IMF's lending pool increased

WASHINGTON (AP) — The five largest industrialized democracies, working to prevent a string of Third World defaults that could trigger a global credit crisis, tentatively agreed to increase the International Monetary Fund's lending pool by 50 percent, monetary sources say.

Under the agreement, the Fund's lending resources would be increased from an estimated $65 billion to about $100 billion, starting in late 1983 or early 1984, according to the sources, who did not want to be publicly identified.

The new lending total represents a compromise between the United States, which originally opposed any increase, and its major economic allies, who had been pushing to boost the IMF's resources by 50 percent to 100 percent. In this regard, the United States appears to have given the most ground.

The agreement is expected to be approved formally Dec. 9 in Bonn at a meeting of finance ministers and central bankers from the "Big Five" IMF members — the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain and France.

The "Big Five" ministers and bankers also are expected to approve a U.S. plan to set up a multibillion dollar supplemental fund designed to provide emergency loans to nation's facing urgent cash needs, the sources said.

Farmers receive higher prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government says farmers got higher prices for their products in November.

Prices farmers get for raw products rose 0.8 percent from October but fell far short of regaining ground lost in a sharp decline the month before, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

Further, according to USDA records, the increase failed to budge the historic "parity" ratio from its lowest reading since the depths of the Great Depression. That ratio measures farmers' buying power compared with what it was in 1910-14.

A month ago, the preliminary figures for October showed the index was down 5.1 percent from September. Revised figures in the latest report put the October decline at 5.9 percent.

Commodity prices generally have been depressed because of huge grain harvests the past two years, along with lagging consumer demand for meat, poultry and dairy products.

Reagan turns around on cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has decided against asking Congress to advance the effective date of the scheduled 10 percent cut in personal tax rates from July to January.

Reagan told reporters after meeting with Republican congressional leaders Tuesday that "we're not going to make a push" for moving up the scheduled tax cut. Instead, he said, he will concentrate on resisting anticipated efforts to delay or even cancel the rate reduction.

"We agreed that our most important objective for this final session is to protect the cuts that are already in place," the president said shortly before departing for a five-day trip to Latin America.

Asked if he thought his third-year cut can be preserved, Reagan replied: "I think it can be saved; I'm sure of it."

In addition to saving the tax cut, the president said the Republican leadership agreed major GOP priorities in the current lame-duck Congress should be to complete action on 10 outstanding appropriations bills, passage of a bipartisan $5.5 billion plan to finance highway, bridge and transit repairs through a nickel-a-gallon increase in the federal gasoline tax and his enterprise zone legislation that would provide tax incentives for industry to locate in depressed inner city areas.

Unemployment may slow down

NEW YORK (AP) — A new survey is pointing toward a possible slowdown in the rise of unemployment.

The Conference Board, a business-sponsored research group, said Tuesday its help wanted advertising index rose in October, the first monthly upturn in a year.

The group, which checks the classified ads in 51 major newspapers, said the index rose to 76 in October from 73 in September, but was 34 points lower than a year ago.

Kenneth Goldstein, a board economist, said that while data for one month cannot support a claim of any significant change in the economy, it still is encouraging.

"It suggests a pause in the steady drum beat of depressing news on unemployment, and this might help bolster sagging consumer confidence," he said.

The board said want-ad volume rose in all regions of the country. It said the index rose the most, 9.4 percent, in the East North Central region and the least, 0.2 percent, in the Middle Atlantic.

Pipeline rate guidelines set

WASHINGTON (AP) — A goverment regulatory agency, in a decision opponents charged would cost consumers millions of dollars, has established guidelines for setting petroleum pipeline rates.

The ruling by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission came in a decade-old case involving Williams Pipe Line Co., which operates an 8,400-mile line carrying crude oil and refined petroleum products through 12 Midwestern states. A group of refiners had sued the pipeline, contending its rates were too high.

The commission's 391-page ruling could eventually affect all the nation's pipelines — including the huge Trans Alaska Pipeline System — because it sets the guidelines the agency will use to establish future rates.

The Reagan administration has been pushing Congress for a bill that would deregulate most oil pipelines on the grounds that market forces are adequate to set rates.

In its ruling, the Reagan-appointed commission majority agreed, saying it was difficult to make a case for "aggressive federal intervention" in oil pipeline rates. It urged Congress to "take a fresh and hard look" at changing the law.

The commission's Tuesday ruling said consumers' had a "negligible" stake in pipeline rates because the rates represented a small percentage of the cost of crude and refined products shipped.

In the future, the commission said it would challenge rates only when "aggrieved parties" complain. It said in setting a fair rate of return, it would be "liberal to the carriers" and merely place a "cap on gross abuse."

Columbia, HBO announce plan

NEW YORK (AP) — Columbia Pictures Industries Inc., CBS Inc. and Home Box Office Inc. have jointly announced plans to form a new company to produce and distribute movies.

The companies said they would share equally the cost of financing the new company, which has not been named. The partners also said they would use a line of credit that has been negotiated with certain commerical banks that were not named.

Under terms of the joint agreement, the management of the studio would be separate from the managements of the three parent companies and would report to a committee representing the owners.

Columbia has agreed to furnish support services in connection with the operation of the venture for which Columbia would receive a service fee, the announcement said.

Also, HBO agreed to license for pay television the films produced or acquired by the new entity.

October indicator index up 0.2 percent

By The Associated Press

Private economists generally agree that a mild recovery is imminent, based on a government report that its main economic barometer has risen for the sixth time in the last seven months.

The Commerce Department said Tuesday that its Index of Leading Indicators, a measure of future economic activity, rose 0.2 percent in October. The department said it made a mistake earlier in the day when it reported the increase was 0.6 percent.

Robert Sinche, chief economist at the investment firm of Bear, Stearns & Co. in New York, said he viewed the steady improvement in leading indicators as clear evidence that the economy was headed toward a mild recovery.

"There are indications from our own analysis that the November increase will be pretty substantial," Sinche said.

Lawrence Chimerine, chairman and chief economist of Chase Econometrics, told delegates at a forecasting seminar in New York that he viewed the underlying forces in the economy as "brighter now than at any time in the past three or four years."

He pointed to reduced levels of inflation, higher productivity and improved supplies of commodities.

Chase Econometrics, a private consulting unit of Chase Manhattan Bank, is forecasting a mild recovery for 1983, restrained mainly by high unemployment and lingering high interest rates. It expects the economy to grow 2.4 percent next year, compared with an estimated 1.7 percent decline in economic activity this year.

The stock market, meanwhile, got a boost Tuesday from President Reagan's disclosure that he had decided against asking Congress to move up the effective date of the July cut in personal income tax rates to January. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials soared 36.43 points to 1,039.28 on Tuesday. The gain was the fourth-largest in history and pushed the average to its highest close since Nov. 12.

Many investment advisers and economists had feared that moving up the date of the tax cut to January would widen the federal budget deficit, which in turn would increase the government's borrowing needs and possibly lead to higher interest rates.

The Commerce Department said the mistake in Tuesday's announcement of the leading economic indicators occurred when someone used September's factory order figures — instead of October's — in compiling the index.

In other economic developments:

—The Conference Board's index of help-wanted advertising rose in October, the first monthly upturn in a year. The business-sponsored research group, which checks the classified ads in 51 major newspapers, said the index rose to 76 in October from 73 in September, but was 34 points lower than a year ago. The index is figured on a base of 100 in 1967.

—The Agriculture Department said prices received by farmers in November rose 0.8 percent from the month before — but they were still 0.8 percent below year-ago levels.

—Sylvia Ostry, head of the economics and statistics division at the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, said at a conference in Paris that the U.S. economy will improve gradually next year and that the U.S. unemployment rate will begin to decline in the second half of 1983 after climbing above current levels. The October jobless rate was 10.4 percent of the labor force.

Uncle's number crunchers goof amazingly

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It might not mean much to most Americans: a gain of 0.2 percent rather than 0.6 percent in the government's Index of Leading Economic Indicators. But to business officials and analysts who care deeply about such figures, it added up to an amazing statistical goof.

The government, sole tabulator of most national economic figures, just isn't supposed to get the numbers wrong.

Abashed Commerce Department economists sent out the word shortly after 4 p.m. Tuesday that the leading indicators had risen just 0.2 percent in October, only one-third of the 0.6 percent gain officials had announced at 10 a.m.

The index, designed to forecast future trends of the entire national economy, is always news in economic circles. And the economy — mired in a 16-month recession — is big news in even wider circles these days.

So, in the minutes and hours after the first annoucement, reporters had reported the news, newspapers had printed it, analysts had analyzed it, perhaps a few business decisions had been made because of it.

On Wall Street, the Dow-Jones Industrial Average rose 36.43 points, the fourth-biggest one-day increase in history — though analysts didn't credit that gain to the news on the indicators.

While all this was happening, according to Commerce officials, a few economists in that federal building were wondering why the increase had been higher than they had expected. On Monday, The Associated Press had run a few officials' guesses that the gain would be only 0.2 percent or 0.3 percent.

Chief Commerce economist Robert Ortner explained that Ted Torda, another department economist who specializes in the leading indicators, pored over the figures, and he finally found one component that didn't look right: October's orders to factories for consumer goods.

They were down but not nearly as much as expected.

After several phone calls back and forth between Torda and the Bureau of Economic Analysis, the Commerce agency that actually puts the figures together, the mystery was solved.

Yes, factory orders should have been down sharply in October. And that change meant the overall index rose only 0.2 percent.

It was already close to 4 p.m., Ortner said, denying that news of the correction was held back until after the 4 p.m. stock market closing.

"We let the secretary (Malcolm Baldrige) know; he said get the correction out instantly," Ortner said.

No one at Commerce was saying who made the original mistake or what might happen to him or her. Apparently the employee was not added to the nation's already long unemployment rolls — at least not yet.

One official, asking not to be named, said the mistake was this simple: Someone used a September figure for orders rather than a worse October one.

The government routinely revises its statistics when later and better information becomes available. For example, Tuesday's report said the September indicators gain was 1.1 percent, more than twice the 0.5 percent reported one month ago. And Ortner was asked if it occurred to anybody to try to cover up the October mistake that way.

"Someone did raise that possibility, but it was squelched instantly," he said. "I think that's to our credit."

And how much difference did the change really make? Probably not much since the direction of the index — up or down — is considered much more important than the amount it moves.

John Albertine, president of the American Business Conference, said, "It's incredible they would make that kind of a mistake." And no one else could remember a similar situation in recent years.

But Albertine didn't want to change the analysis he'd sent to reporters earlier based on the higher number. Nor did other economists and officials. Not even — or maybe especially not — Baldrige.

But there was one last change.

Reporters were given a one-sentence Baldrige statement about the situation: "We pride ourselves on our reputation for accuracy, and when an error is made we want to rectify it as quickly as possible."

A spokesman called back a minute later, revising the beginning of the statement to "We have a reputation for accuracy. ..."

Ungrammatical law could have caused great damage

DENVER (AP) — A grammatical error in federal legislation could have led to the "irrevocable" destruction of wilderness land though energy exploration, an appeals court has said in overturning an oil and gas association's federal court victory.

The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals held Tuesday that use of the word "was" instead of "were" in a key section of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 caused the lower court in Wyoming to err in clearing the way for new oil and gas drilling in wilderness study areas.

The Rocky Mountain Oil and Gas Association had challenged the Interior Department's and Bureau of Land Management's interpretation of the act in regard to mineral leases in the wilderness study areas.

The part of the act in question dictated that Interior officials manage the lands "in a manner so as not to impair the suitability of such areas for preservation as wilderness, subject, however, to the continuation of existing mining and grazing uses and mineral leasing in the manner and degree in which the same was being conducted on Oct. 21, 1976 ..."

Because Congress intended the act "to refer both to mining and grazing use...as well as to mineral leasing, the use of the singular "was" (being conducted) rather than the plural "were" is clearly an error in grammar and not a signal that mineral leasing was to be accorded different treatment," the appeals court ruled.

"The purpose of the WSA (Wilderness Study Areas) management scheme is to maintain the status quo existing Oct. 21, 1976, so that lands then suitable for wilderness consideration will not be rendered unfit for such consideration before" a decision is made on the lands, the appeals court wrote.

"Under Rocky Mountain Oil and Gas Association's interpretation however, lands suitable for wilderness could be irrevocably altered by development and their wilderness values destroyed.

"It would be incongruous to limit mining and grazing to pre-FLPMA levels, but give disruptive mineral leasing activities carte blanche," the decision said.

Joining the Interior Department in the successful appeal were the Sierra Club, the Natural Resources Defense Council, the National Wildlife Federation and the Wilderness Society.

The lower court ruled that Interior's policy had caused association members "irreparable financial harm ... because of the loss of monies previously invested and the halting of oil and gas exploration and development."

The Wyoming court held that Interior's interpretation completely sacrificed mineral development for environmental concerns and was "statutorally erroneous."

In its decision, the appeals court noted that Congress did not intend to allow activity on public lands "to degrade lands containing wilderness values on the date of enactment" until a decision had been made on the lands' designation.

Hodel says he supports deregulation, ending DOE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Donald P. Hodel, chosen by President Reagan as the nation's fourth secretary of energy, told his Senate confirmation hearing today he supports the president's proposals to deregulate natural gas prices and to abolish the Energy Department.

In testimony prepared for delivery to the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Hodel signaled no major changes in direction for the department and cited his commitment to administration policies.

Hodel, formerly Interior Secretary James G. Watt's top aide, was testifying before a mostly friendly Republican-controlled panel, which is expected to approve his nomination to replace James B. Edwards. Edwards, former governor of South Carolina, resigned to become president of the Medical University of South Carolina.

Hodel's support on the panel was signaled a week before the hearing when Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, chairman of the panel, called Hodel "an excellent choice" for the post who "will provide this department with the strong administration it needs."

However, his appointment has been opposed by environmentalists, who say his policies and his close association with Watt should disqualify him for the energy secretary's post.

"America does not need a second James Watt in the Cabinet," the Sierra Club said in a letter to Reagan.

In his prepared testimony, Hodel termed the Energy Department "an interim organizational step" in energy policy, and pledged to continue the administration's efforts to merge the agency with the Commerce Department.

"Although we continue to need an agency devoted to energy matters, it no longer should be a separate Cabinet-level agency devoted only to energy," Hodel said.

He called the current system of controlling some natural gas prices a "regulatory morass which effectively prevents natural gas prices from responding to market pressures which ... might result in lower prices to consumers."

He also endorsed the administration's programs "to revitalize the nuclear industry," including support for the Clinch River Breeder Reactor and reprocessing of spent reactor fuel.

Hodel said he believed strongly in energy conservation, which has been a sore point for some in Congress who feel the administration has slighted conservation programs. But in line with the administration's position, he told the panel that "the most effective means of obtaining real gains will be through the incentives of the marketplace" rather than direct aid.

"Continued subsidies or regulations for those who otherwise would act to conserve or develop renewable resources is not necessary and not cost-effective," he said.

Hodel offered no challenges to the Congress, pledging to work with lawmakers to find "the proper federal role" in conservation and said he was "open to your suggestions" on natural gas pricing legislation.

Hodel, a 47-year-old lawyer, brings a strong energy background to the department. After practicing law in Portland, Ore., for nine years, Hodel became deputy administrator of the Bonneville Power Administration in 1969 and its administrator in 1972.

As BPA administrator, a post he held for six years, Hodel was the top energy policymaker in the Pacific Northwest. In that role, he clashed frequently with environmentalists over his commitment to diversify power sources from strictly hydroelectric to a mix including nuclear.

After leaving BPA, Hodel ran an energy consulting business in Oregon before being tapped by Watt as undersecretary of the interior, the department's No. 2 position.

If confirmed by the Senate, Hodel will become the fourth secretary of the five-year old department and one of its strongest in energy background. His predecessors have been Edwards, an oral surgeon before turning politician; former Coca-Cola President Charles Duncan; and James Schlesinger, whose background included heading the old Atomic Energy Commission.

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Oilmen "did their damnedest" to sow positive things in the Nov. 2 elections, but they did not reap all they had hoped for. Now, the alternative is to sit back and wait.

The wait will be none too restful because there are three branches of the federal government to keep an eye on, Ed McGhee told a group of West Texas drilling contractors here last night. He is the executive vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors.

The lame duck Congress which convened Nov. 29 will not do anything to affect the drilling industry, he predicted, but rather, it will be up to the new session meeting in January to address questions which could stimulate or depress the industry.

"This five-cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline will not cause any fewer wells to be drilled," McGhee said, although he disagreed with politicians who call the proposed tax a user tax. Republican and Democratic leaders, as well as the President, support the new tax, which will be used to create jobs and meet the vast problems of the nation's highways.

Other energy issues will come before the Congress in 1983 that will have more impact, McGhee predicted. Legislation concerning natural gas prices has been introduced in Congress on a regular basis in the last few years, and the new session will be no exception.

He cautioned, however, that the mood of the electorate is such that if Congress were to deregulate gas prices next year, the bill would probably carry a windfall profits tax on gas with it, "which would be counter-productive."

"In my opinion, we'd be just about as well off if we let the thing (Natural Gas Policy Act) go until 1985." Under the NGPA, passed in 1978, some natural gas prices would be deregulated by 1985.

Another issue McGhee sees coming up is the possibility Congress might try to limit political action committee (PAC) activities and instead, tax the public and use those monies to finance Congressional races.

The IADC PAC has been the most active part of that organization, McGhee said. This year it donated $175,000 to federal campaigns. Although the PAC did not see all its candidates elected, "If the collective PACs in this industry, and in business, had not done their damnedest, it would've been a lot worse," he said.

A second area oilmen need to watch in the federal government is the Supreme Court, now that a Wyoming federal judge has ruled the crude oil windfall profits tax unconstitutional, McGhee said.

"I don't know of anything that would have a more stimulating affect on us," than for the high court to uphold the Nov. 4 decision, he said. "It would put a thousand rigs in the field in six months, there's no question."

Two major points will affect the court's decision, he warned: There is still too much anti-oil sentiment in the country, and a desire to "punish" the oil industry, and the nation needs money to offset its huge budget deficit.

"The windfall profits tax is probably second only to the personal income tax as a source of revenue. If they strike it down, they'll come up with some other kind of tax," he said.

Finally, McGhee said oilmen need to watch the executive branch of the federal government, as exemplified by the bureaucrats at the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

"In spite of having a basically pro-business Administration in Washington, we have OSHA poised to regulate the drilling business far in excess of previous regulations."

The IADC has petitioned OSHA for exemption to the new hearing rules, he said. The construction and agriculture industries are already exempt. If the new rules are put into effect, it will mean tremendous expenses for drilling contractors to conduct noise studies, meet personal sound equipment standards, and perform all the record-keeping OSHA would require, he said.

The proposed vertical safety standards, which concern ladders, steps, heights and so on, would affect drilling and well servicing rigs, frac trucks and "anything that shows up on location," McGhee said. Although this proposal is not as "insidious" as the one concerning noise levels, it has also been opposed by the IADC, primarily "because of unnecessary red tape, and the fact it will not make one soul safer."

Because the Reagan Administration has pulled back much of its support for various programs, states, cities and counties are looking for new sources of revenues, McGhee said. As a result, the IADC recently appointed a director of state affairs to monitor actions below the federal level.

Nation's crash synfuels program pretty much crashlanded

By BILL STALL

WASHINGTON — The crash program to make the United States forever immune from another Arab world oil shock so far has pretty much crashlanded.

More than two years ago, Jimmy Carter signed into law the bill creating the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp. and arming it with a $20 billion fund to help private companies develop new petroleum products from the nation's abundant storehouse of oil shale, coal, tar sands and other material.

So far, the corporation has not approved a single project and is not likely to for some months, if then, Synfuels Corp. officials acknowledged Tuesday.

The corporation board had set Tuesday as the deadline for applicants for financial assistance, either in the form of loans or price guarantees for the finished product, to meet certain conditions before final negotiations could begin on a second round of synfuels project. Corporation officials, who declined to be identified by name, refused Tuesday to say whether those conditions had been met. The officials would say only that "not all have met all conditions."

The full board meets Thursday to decide whether final negotiations should begin on any of the 11 projects bids called for in June. If the board agrees to proceed, it and the firms involved would sign letters of intent to negotiate actual financial arrangements. Those arrangements would take about two months or more to conclude, if all went well, the corporation staff officials said.

IN THE PAST two years, however, all has not gone well for the fledgling synfuels industry.

One of Ronald Reagan's first actions as president was to halt the direct subsidy program at the Department of Energy after it approved $3.1 billion in loan guarantees for two projects, in North Dakota and Colorado.

Then, the giant Exxon Corp. pulled out of its partnership in the $6 billion Colony oil shale project in western Colorado.

And, just last week, Ashland Oil Co. withdrew from the $4 billion Breckinridge project at Catlettsburg, Ky., effectively killing that effort to make an oil substitute out of coal.

The Breckinridge project is one of the 11 seeking financial assistance.

In announcing Ashland's decision, John R. Hall, the company's chairman, said the government should take a new look at its commitment to the synthetic fuels industry as represented by the Synfuels Corp.

"If we rely on the free market with only limited government assistance, synthetic fuels may not be available in the next crisis when they will be badly needed," Hall said.

THE REAGAN administration approach to the problem has been that the industry will be developed if the free market and private industry supports it. The government can provide assistance to develop technologies, but should not underwrite production facilities, the administration believes — a dramatic change from the policies of former President Carter and the intent of his keystone synthetic fuels program.

Two other factors, in addition to the shift in federal policy, have had a dramatic, negative impact on synthetic fuels. Persistent, high interest rates have forced energy firms to take a strong new look at their long-range investments. Because they are so complex and costly, synthetic fuels projects tie up vast amounts of investment capital with little expectation of return for many years.

Also, the worldwide recession and energy conservation have combined to drastically cut the world oil market and depressed prices. Historically, synfuels projects look good when prices are rising. Economically, they are far less promising when prices are stable.

In general, the petroleum and energy industries are delighted with Reagan's programs of decontrolling domestic oil prices and encouraging traditional oil and gas exploration by opening more public lands for private development.

However, they have been increasingly critical of the administration's lack of commitment to major synfuels development and the Synfuels Corp.'s slowness in approving projects.

IN A RECENT interview, Exxon Chairman C. J. Garvin Jr., also chairman of the American Petroleum Institute, said the oil glut, at best, would delay the need for synthetic fuels production for, perhaps, 10 years.

"That seems to you and me like a long time, but in the history of the business, it's not a long time," Garvin said in the Nov. 8 issue of Oil & Gas Journal. The basic fact of limited world oil supplies has not changed, he said.

Nor has the need for oil shale changed, he said in reference to the Colony project, only the timing.

Garvin said Exxon was disappointed that it had to shelve the Colony project because "we think this nation needs to develop these reserves for national security reasons ... I'm a little bit perplexed about how this country can address those problems. If you leave it to the free market, you may not have synfuels when you need them."

In response to criticism of the corporation's lack of action so far — some of it from key figures in Congress — one of the corporation staff aides said, "The corporation is committed to doing projects. Indeed, the act requires us to do so."

HE ADDED there is a good chance the board will agree Thursday to try a new form of seeking project applications called "targeted solicitation." Under such a system, the board might say, for instance, that it wants proposals for development of a particular type of oil shale plant. Further, the board might also indicate what sort of plant it envisioned and what type of financial assistance might be offered.

So far, the open solicitation system has left it entirely up to the companies to decide what form of project they wanted to propose. It also left them in the dark as to what sort of financial aid the corporation might be willing to grant.

One industry official was somewhat encouraged by this apparent willingness to innvoate.

Michael S. Koleda, president of the National Council on Synthetic Fuels Production, said, "This could provide industry with a needed, sharper picture of what the SFC wants to support and how much support can likely be expected. With luck, this new strategy will be unveiled soon and will be seen by congressional and industry supporters as realistic in today's economic and energy climate."

Dollar skidding, gold rose

LONDON (AP) — Expectations of lower U.S. interest rates and forecasts of a record U.S. trade deficit this year sent the dollar skidding on world foreign exchanges today.

Gold prices rose, although initial gains fell away slightly by late morning due to profit-taking, dealers said.

"A bit of selling has been coming in here, perhaps out of Zurich with some of the professionals taking profits," said a London trader.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day gets under way, the dollar slumped more than 4 yen in heavy trading to a closing 249.10 yen from 253.45 Tuesday. Dealers said volume totaled more than $2.1 billion from Tuesday's $1.65 billion.

Later in London, the dollar slipped further to 248.43 Yen.

— 2.4568 German marks, down from 2.4800
— 2.1128 Swiss francs, down from 2.1300
— 6.9465 French francs, down from 7.0125
— 2.7060 Dutch guilders, down from 2.7325
— 1,419.90 Italian lire, down from 1,431.63
— 1.2358 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2398

In London, the British pound rose more than a cent to $1.6340, up from 1.6215 late Tuesday and a 5-cent increase from the six-year low it hit last week at the ebb of a two-week dive.

Frankfurt money dealers attributed the dollar's slide to a market belief that the U.S. currency will head downwards in coming weeks and months, after its year-long strength because of prevailing high American interest rates.

London's five major bullion houses fixed a morning recommended gold price of $444.00 a Troy ounce, up from $437.50 late Tuesday.

Strike looms

BOSTON (AP) — Hotel and union negotiators extended a midnight strike deadline, working into the early morning hours today to avert a walkout by 3,000 workers at nine major hotels.

Negotiations with Local 26 of the Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Employees and Bartenders Union, scheduled to strike at midnight, were being extended hour-by-hour early this morning, said Marie Kenney, business agent for the local.

Union members on hand at the Hotel Colonnade, where the talks were being held, had about 500 picket signs stacked up in the event of a walkout.

HLH Corp. reports loss

DALLAS (AP) — HLH Petroleum Corp. Tuesday reported a loss from operations of $523,550, or 12 cents per share, that resulted from a nationwide decline in drilling, president W.O. Hill said.

The loss, for the second quarter ending Sept. 30, came on revenues of $1,428,300.

For the six months ending Sept. 30, HLH reported earnings of $1,443,736, or 33 cents per share, on revenues of $5,990,505.

Hill said the decline in drilling for oil and gas weakened the demand for the company's six drilling rigs.

Muse Air closes deal

DALLAS (AP) — Muse Air Corp. announced Tuesday that it has closed $62 million worth of financing for the purchase of three new DC-9 Super 80 aircraft from McDonnell Douglas Corp.

The financing, approved Monday, includes a $42 million 10-year senior secured bank loan and gross proceeds of $20 million from the sale of federal income tax benefits associated with the three aircraft, the company said.

The permanent bank loan was arranged by Crocker National Bank of Los Angeles, Muse president Michael L. Muse said.

Teen-ager following idol's feats

LONDON, Ohio (AP) — When his allowance runs short, Mark Johnson picks up some change at school by picking locks.

It's a legitimate pastime. He wins every bet with fellow students that he can open school lockers, bike locks or whatever they have under lock and key.

Winning such bets helps keep him in books about escapism, his favorite topic, and about his hero, Harry Houdini, a Hungarian native who was billed as the most famous escape artist of all time.

The slender 18-year-old Johnson hopes to some day be the Houdini of modern times. Escapism, he says, is perfected mainly through practice, developing physical dexterity and logic.

Until he can earn his way with that profession, Johnson plans to learn computer programming and hopes to become a systems analyst. With that knowledge in mind, he then wants to enroll at a state university to study acting.

"That will help me get confidence and recognition," he said.

Then he hopes to earn his keep with computers until he gets his Houdini act together.

He practices escapism — some call it tricks, but he sees it as an art form — "during any free time I get, if I'm not at my homework or playing chess."

As a senior at London High School last year, he was an "A" student and took a full complement of courses, plus an independent course of study in computer science. He played percussion instruments and piano in seven school and private bands.

Johnson, the middle of three children of a Presbyterian minister, got interested in escapism after reading a couple of books about Houdini. He has since become intimately familiar with the man he calls "my idol."

"His mind is always working," said his mother, Ruthanne Johnson. "I think he does escapism because of his logic. He's never gotten into anything he couldn't get out of."

Johnson continually baffles one local policeman by escaping from handcuffs. The officer even searched him once for hidden keys or lock picks.

The youth admits only to unusual dexterity and says that, while freeing himself from some restraints is painful, he never resorts to self-injury, such as dislocating bone joints, to achieve freedom.

"It takes 10 to 15 minutes and makes my arm muscles sore," he said.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

South, declarer at four spades, seemed to have an impregnable holding in the trump suit. But accurate defense proved that appearances can be deceiving.

North-South's bidding was impeccable. However, had they been using some sort of transfer bid to allow North to become declarer, four spades would have been an unbeatable contract.

West led the queen of hearts, which was ducked all round the table. Even if the defenders could take two heart tricks, defensive chances appeared grim unless East held the king of clubs as well. However, since there was no point in not leading another heart, West decided that he might as well see what his prospects were right away. His low heart continuation was won by the ace as declarer followed suit.

East read his partner's low heart as being a suit preference signal for clubs. He duly shifted to the nine of clubs. West won the ace, and paused to take stock. The fate of the contract hinged on his next play.

From his partner's return of the nine of clubs, West deduced that East could not hold the king. With that card, he would either have first cashed the king before continuing with a low club, or else he would have shifted to a low club rather than the nine. Now, the trump suit was the only place to develop the setting trick. So, West reverted to hearts, again leading low. East used his jack of spades to telling effect when he ruffed. Declarer was forced to overruff with the ace, and now West had a sure trump trick provided he carefully covered the ten if South elected to lead that card.

All it took to sink the contract was some thoughtful defense combined with an uppercut.

Diver finds life no handicap

HOUSTON (AP) — Randy Widaman teaches scuba diving and says the missing leg poses no handicap for him in the water. In fact, he wonders why more handicapped people don't try it.

"Losing my leg really didn't affect me like it does a lot of people," says Widaman, who lost his left leg to cancer. "I just got over it and started doing the things I wanted to do."

But when Widaman's students learn their scuba diving instructor has only one leg, they start asking about shark attacks or diving accidents.

"I know it kind of worries them because they ask if it was caused by a diving accident," he said in a recent interview with the Houston Chronicle. "When I tell them 'no' they seem very relieved."

The blond, bearded Widaman said doctors discovered osteopathic sarcoma in his lower left leg when he was 14. Amputation was then considered the only alternative.

One of those things was water skiing. He learned how to balance on one ski and soon became better than most people with two legs.

"I used to ski all summer and I tried not show off because I knew people were watching me," said Widaman. "I didn't want them to think I was showing them up on purpose because I had only one leg."

"They didn't really know if I could handle it at first," he said. "I had been swimming and water skiing religiously for years so when they told me I had to swim six laps in the pool and swim underwater, I just did what they told me to do. When I came in first out of a class of 20, I guess they figured I would do all right."

There was even more resistance when he applied to earn his diving instructors certificate. The instructor, recalls Widaman, "literally jumped back" when he came into his office.

"At first he was a little concerned," said Widaman. "He asked me if I had any limitations in the water and I told him no. I was able to qualify for a diving instructor's certificate."

More handicapped people, he says, could do the same. Scuba diving and swimming, in general, says Widaman, can be therapeutic for amputees.

"A lot of handicapped people are sitting back at home doing nothing because think they can't do anything," he says. "Really there isn't anything they can't do. I can even ride a bicycle."

Widaman said he has taught one amputee to scuba dive.

"He was missing a foot so we had to specially rig a swim fin so he could get through the water and he did just fine," said the instructor. "I'd like to let handicapped people know they can scuba dive."

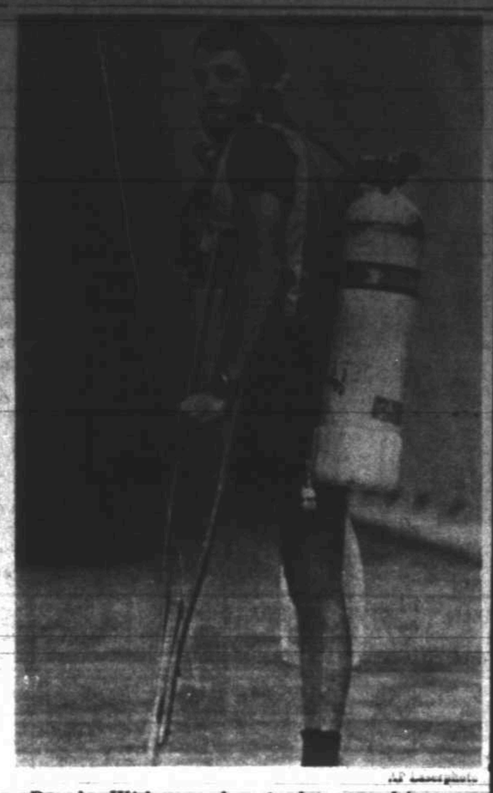
Widaman holds an engineering degree and worked in a research lab for General Dynamics in Fort Worth during the building of the F-111 fighter bomber. After he was laid off, he earned his diving instructor's certificate and got into the retail diving equipment business and teaching in 1973.

The toughest thing about being a one-legged diver, he said, is getting to the water, particularly when the diving spot is far off the beaten path.

"My diving partners have to drag me up a lot of hills when we head to some diving spots," Widaman said with a laugh.

But once in the water, he's got only one problem -- swimming straight.

"It is tough to swim in a straight line because I'm kicking with one leg," said Widaman, "but I've been able to work that out."



Randy Widaman has to lean on his sun-bleached crutches when he talks to students in his scuba diving class in Houston, but in the water he's not only a qualified diving instructor but an accomplished water skier. When he was 14 doctors diagnosed him as having a form of cancer and the lower part of his leg was amputated. Widaman says handicapped people who need some confidence may find scuba diving therapeutic.

Researchers link flu, heart disease occurrence

ATLANTA (AP) — People who catch the flu may face chronic heart disease and neurological disorders decades later, according to researchers at the federal Centers for Disease Control.

"Influenza pandemics and epidemics probably are contributing a major portion of the disease burden of mankind, and most of it could be prevented," Dr. Reimer T. Ravenholt said Monday.

Ravenholt, director of CDC world health surveys, and CDC Director William H. Foege contended in an article published in the British medical journal Lancet that a worldwide outbreak of a severe neurological disease from 1919-1928 probably was caused by the widespread "Spanish flu" epidemic of 1918.

The researchers said the 20 million people, including 500,000 in the United States, who died in the influenza outbreak were only the first casualties.

In the next nine years, 500,000 people died of encephalitis lethargica, a paralyzing disorder of the brain, they said.

Ravenholt said many current cases of heart disease among elderly people may be traced to 1918 influenza damage to nerves controlling heart action.

The researchers said the 1918 epidemic may have caused a variety of nervous-system problems, such as manic depression and schizophrenia, and probably caused most later cases of Parkinson's disease.

Charlie Brooks Jr. plans to exchange vows Friday with a Fort Worth nurse he met as a pen pal. Four days later he is scheduled to be executed by lethal injection, what would be the first execution in Texas since 1964 and the first-ever death by lethal injection in the United States.

Execution-bound inmate plans vows

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Charlie Brooks Jr. says he plans to exchange vows Friday with a Fort Worth nurse he met as a pen pal. He is scheduled to die four days later.

Brooks, 40, is on death row at the Ellis Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections, awaiting execution Tuesday for the 1976 kidnap-murder of a used-car lot mechanic in Fort Worth.

The exchange of vows will be in the visiting room at the prison, with no minister or justice of the peace, he said.

"We are planning to exchange vows with each other with God as our witness," he said last Wednesday in an interview at the prison. "It's just between the two of us."

"We will be committing ourselves to each other in preparation for the next life," said Brooks, who declines to identify the woman by name.

If executed Tuesday for the shooting death of David Gregory, Brooks would be the first man executed in Texas since 1964 and the first in the United States to be executed by lethal injection.

His lawyers plan to ask U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron White for a stay of execution later this week. A three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last Friday rejected a request for a stay.

Brooks said the woman he plans to exchange vows with has agreed to witness his execution.

"I have a wonderful lady that Allah has sent to me. She has been with me for five years and she has agreed to be there at the execution should it come about," Brooks said.

He said they were brought together by a fellow inmate while Brooks was awaiting trial.

"He was receiving quite a few letters and so I jokingly asked him if he would get one of his friends to find me a friend," he said. "I started corresponding with her in 1977. Our relationship bloomed from there."

Brooks now considers her his "mate."

"Allah says in the Koran that he has chosen a mate for you, talking about men. And he has placed love in their hearts for each other. So I like to look at her as my mate. She is my other half," Brooks said.

Brooks said he has become a religious man since his 1977 conviction, and has changed his religion to Islam and his name to Shareef Ahmad Abdul-Rahim.

"I was a different person. I was Charlie Brooks Jr. then. Charlie Brooks Jr. was an ex-convict, dope fiend, anything else you could think of a person who lives outside the law...but he's dead. He was put to death the day that Shareef Ahmad Abdul-Rahim was born."

Brooks and Woodie Loudres were convicted in separate trials of murdering David Gregory, who had accompanied Brooks during a test drive of a car from the used car lot where Gregory worked. Gregory was shot to death in a motel. Brooks said the victim's hands and feet were bound at the time.

Life without God

William J. Murray III, the son of vowed atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair, is promoting his book, "Life without God," in which the born-again Christian details growing up with his mother, who sued the Baltimore, Md., school system on behalf of him. In her attempts to stop school prayer, Murray contends in his book and on his promotional tours, his mother used him and "everyone around" her in order to further her cause.

Son not following mother's footsteps

DALLAS (AP) — William J. Murray III says that his mother, outspoken atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair, used him for her own financial interests during her successful crusade to abolish mandatory prayer from public schools.

"She used me and everyone around me for her own profit and gain," said Murray, 36, who wrote a book about his experiences of being raised in an atheist household and helping his mother with her cause before he became a born-again Christian.

The plaintiff of record in the U.S. Supreme Court case that ruled open Bible readings and prayer in public schools to be unconstitutional, Murray portrayed his mother as a self-centered opportunist whose beliefs drew her to communism and destroyed their family.

"DURING THE (COURT) case, she used to agitate kids in the neighborhood to beat me up, so that she could send out newsletters about the beatings and raise more money for her cause," Murray said Tuesday.

His mother's efforts were successful, he said, because he was regularly threatened with physical abuse by schoolmates, who at one point chased him several blocks and began beating him with a belt.

He said he was called a "commie" and shunned by other students. He had to eat alone at lunch, he said.

Mrs. O'Hair refused to respond to the book, "My Life Without God," when she was contacted in Austin, where she runs the American Atheist Center.

"You know I'm not going to do that," she said. "It's an exercise in futility to call me."

THE LANDMARK SUPREME Court decision arose from a lawsuit filed on Murray's behalf by his mother while he was a 14-year-old student in Baltimore's public school system. The suit sought to force the board of education to stop Bible readings and prayer exercises.

"At the time, I did cooperate with my mother," Murray said. "At that age, I had been raised believing that the United States was a fascist labor camp, and that the country was run by a bunch of Jewish bankers in New York."

He became so steeped in Marxist philosophy, he said, that his viewpoints began to change from other students. Asked by a teacher where he wanted to spend the summer, Murray replied he wanted to go to a Caspian Sea resort to be with communist workers.

His mother had pulled him out of public school rather than allow him to be exposed to Bible readings and prayers. But she demanded later that he return there to enhance her court case against the district, he said.

"At that point, the case started," Murray said. "I just didn't want to go back to school, though."

HE DETAILS FAMILY fights in the book, including one in which he said Mrs. O'Hair would became enraged, brandishing a knife and hurling dinner plates.

The wound drew blood and he was taken by his father to receive tetanus shots for it.

Murray said the fights were prompted by his mother's beliefs that each atheist is "the center of the universe."

Suspended postal supervisor removed before acquittal

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Booker T. "Billy" Green Jr., the 42-year-old U.S. Postal Service supervisor who was suspended from work after he was charged with murder Nov. 14, 1981, was "removed" — fired — from his USPS job about a week before he was acquitted of slaying R.J. Morris, 50, in a the wake of a dice game.

Green claimed self-defense.

In a hearing Tuesday on Green's appeal for job reinstatement, Postmaster David Holster testified that he approved of Green's suspension without pay Nov. 24, 1981, after he had been charged with murdering Morris.

He was subsequently tried in March in state court for murder, but the jury found him guilty of the lesser included offense of voluntary manslaughter, although it could not agree on a punishment. The judge subsequently declared a mistrial and Green was reindicted for voluntary manslaughter and was retried in late July, when he was acquitted and set free.

Holster noted that Green was indicted, tried, a mistrial was declared, and was reindicted and then he was removed from service before the second trial had started.

Holster noted that USPS regulations allow for the dismissal of an employee if he is charged with an offense for which he could be sent to prison and if the employee's continued service with the USPS would impede efficiency and the best interests of the postal service.

Holster said he was concerned with "our image" and with possible conflicts between Green and Robert James "Bubba" Morris Jr., son of the late J.R. Morris, and who worked under Green at the main post office.

THE FINAL hearing on Green's appeal was presided over by William Wayne Carnes of the federal Merit System Protection Board in Dallas; his ruling is expected to come in a few weeks. Carnes will decide if Green, who alleges violation of his civil and constitutional rights, will be returned to his $27,000 a year job or not. Arguing against his reinstatement and upholding the postal service's decision to terminate Green was Gartone Batson of El Paso. Representing Green were John and Joan Love of San Angelo.

In cross-examining six witnesses presented by the USPS, the Loves tried to show that Green was maliciously suspended, that he was removed from the USPS a few days before his second trial started as a ploy to abet a conviction and that his race — black — had a bearing on the decision to remove him from the USPS.

Holster denied those contentions.

HOWEVER, THE postmaster, who described Green as a "good supervisor," said he would "have terminated his suspension" and put Green back to work had the murder charges been dropped prior to the first trial.

Holster said his ultimate decision to remove Green from the postal service was based on the gravity of the act — Green admitted shooting Morris in the wake of a dispute over a dice game — the adverse publicity and the community's image of the postal service, the "moral situation...among our employees," and the inhibiting of USPS efficiency should Green return to the postal service.

Batson asked Holster if the coincidence of Green being black had a bearing on his termination. "Not at all," Holster said.

"You would have taken that same action if he were a white man?" asked Batson.

"Yes," said Holster.

Even though Green was fired about a week before the second jury acquitted him of voluntary manslaughter and exonerated him, Holster said the USPS deliberations on Green's career were "separate and apart from the criminal law."

Holster said he had talked with Green Nov. 19 and 24 of 1981 and had received a letter from Green's attorney, H. Thomas Hirsch of Odessa, in Green's behalf.

Holster briefly recounted what he said Green told him of the slaying.

"He got his rifle out (of his car) and wished it hadn't happened, but it did happen."

HOLSTER SAID that Green's gambling "had nothing" to do with his ultimate decisions to suspend and then remove him from the service.

"What he does in his own time is his own business within reason," the postmaster said.

But under cross-examination by Ms. Love, Holster said he felt that many of the employees' reactions to Green should he return to work would have an adverse "impact on productivity."

"People do talk, and they love to talk," he said.

Green's return to work would tend to "undermine the postal service in the eyes of the public that we serve," Holster said.

"They form an image in their mind of all employees in the postal service based on the actions of one employee," he said.

"Bubba" Morris, a USPS mail handler and another witness called by the USPS, said he would be uncomfortable working under Green again.

Batson asked him when.

"The night he murdered my father."

Morris said he was "still mad" at Green, his former friend and supervisor.

"I can control my madness," Morris said, "(but) I don't know if he (Green) can control his."

An earlier witness in the six-hour hearing was Fred Thummel, a USPS supervisor who proposed that Green be put on administrative leave and later suspended and removed from the USPS.

"MY WHOLE FEELING is that he would not promote the efficiency (of the USPS)," Thummel said. "It (Green's return) would affect the work force. Some of them might feel uneasy about him being there. I know personally I would feel uneasy."

"Do you believe that a person is innocent until proven guilty?" John Love asked Thummel.

"Oh yes," he said. But Thummel said reports that Green had admitted shooting Morris, though in self-defense, "led me to believe that there was a reasonable cause that he could go to jail (prison)."

Another USPS supervisor, Gary Gammage, testified that Green told him that "he had shot R.J. Morris in self-defense over a gambling debt."

Gammage said that Green has "always been a likable person" and that it wouldn't bother him if Green were to return to work.

Another USPS witness, Milford Prichard, supervisor of mail processing, said he advised Thummel on a proposal to remove Green from the USPS.

"I also knew the impact it (news reports of Green's first trial) had on the community," Prichard said of what he termed "adverse publicity." He said some postal service workers would be "fearful of working" with Green.

In justifying the USPS's action, Batson said that Green's not returning to work would "serve to promote the overall efficiency of the postal service."

Love, on the other hand, faulted the USPS for "abuse of discretion" in removing Green from the postal service even before the trial which ultimately exonerated him of guilt had begun. He said the USPS action in handling the Green case was "arbitrary and capricious."

Lots of work behind good-looking nuts

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Those scrumptious pecan kernels decked out on the tables and getting those "I'd-eat-you-if-no-one-was-looking" look didn't just happen to appear all prettied up and fancy.

A lot of hard-core, custom shelling went into getting those 1,380 Midland County pecans laid open and exposed. Most halved perfectly; some shattered and crumbled on impact.

"It's very tiring to sit and crack 138 samples, but it was fun," admitted Wilke Stumberg, Midland County agent who helped with the shelling of pecans for the annual Midland County Pecan Show which wrapped up Tuesday. The show was held in Midland Park Mall under the sponsorship of the Midland Pecan Growers Association.

Commercial, amateur and backyardpecan growers submitted 5,520 choice pickings of their nutty fruit — from Apache to Kiowa to Western Schley varieties — for judging, but only a fourth of them were shelled for the county show. Each of the 138 entries was made up of 40 pecans but only 10 pecans from each entry were shelled for judging.

The 30 left intact from each of the winners and runners-up will be sacked and hauled to Wichita Falls for regional competition Dec. 10-11. There, 10 more from each entry will be whacked, cracked and judged. Then there will only be 20 left from each entry, and they'll head for state competition next year.

This year's pecan harvest was judged by a land specialist, Ken Lindsay, an agronomist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX), and a bug-man, Charles Neeb, an TAEX entomologist.

"Well," Stumberg said of Neeb's and Lindsay's credentials, "you've got to have soil to grow them, and you've got to keep the insects off."

Among the rows and columns of nuts which didn't fare too well in the shelling were the Van Deman. They're a tough nut; they cracked up.

"These Van Demans, you almost have to take a crowbar and hammer to crack them," Stemberg said. "Consequently, you get some broken kernels because you really have to whack them."

The show didn't pull in as many entries as last year's exhibition, noted Charles Green, retired Midland County agent, but "we agreed that the numbers are down but the qualities are good."

They're down in part because the trees didn't get a "good killing frost until recently," said Green. "They just now are beginning to dry up in the shuck."

Otherwise, it's a good year price-wise, "because of the short crop," he said. The pecan is an alternate-bearing tree, explained Green, and, like a sine wave, production follows the up-and-down curves from year to year.

Store-bought pecans, which often are from cold storage and are not up to the quality of freshly-harvested nuts, are selling for $1.79 to $1.99 in the shell this year. "And if the consumer is wise, he'll avoid them" and get his pecans directedly from the producer, who would like to get $1.50 a pound but may settle for $1, Green said.

Harold Semple, chairman of this year's show, cited the up-and-down year-to-year pecan prices.

"It goes back to the same old story — supply and demand," he said. Last year, pecans were in over-supply, and in-shell pecans were marked down in price — from $1.29 to $1.59 a pound at the retail outlet. Unless the producer sold his pecans directly to the consumer, he might have ended with 35 to 42 cents a pound last year if he sold them to the sheller. "Anything less than 60 cents, you can't make it," Semple said.

This year, that same producer might be getting 80 cents on the pound from the sheller and $1.50 directly from the consumer.

While the kernel is used in confections, salads, baking, snacks and other foods, the woody shell is utilitarian.

"I put my shells in flower beds," said Marge Shaw.

"We've been doing that for years," said Pat Semple.

"That keeps the soil from packing," Ms. Shaw said.

"Also," volunteered Semple, "they are using pecan shells for sand blasting, because they will not spark" as will sand, and thus the dangers of explosions and fires in places such as oil field tanks are avoided. Ground-up pecan shells are used in cleaning jet engines; the shell, thrown in the running engine, will clean out the carbon and clean off other residue and matter but will not damage the metal and plating. Aside from finding uses for her pecan shells, Ms. Shaw has found something enterprising in the pecan-cracking machine which she and her spouse, Art, operate.

"I do commercial cracking for people," she said, "and if they want any cracking done, I'll do it...for a price."

And she also has the answer to the most asked question at the pecan show: "Where can I buy pecans?"

Marijuana-related arrests should result in felony charges

From Staff and Wire Reports

BIG SPRING — Two Dallas-area men arrested Monday while driving through the Midland area with almost 600 pounds of marijuana probably can be prosecuted for no more than a third-degree felony, a state judge says.

"A first-class felony carries a penalty of from 10 years to 99 years, or life, but the appellate court ruled recently that that law isn't any good," State District Judge James Gregg of Big Spring said Tuesday.

"The caption was wrong when it was passed. If that statute has been knocked down, as apparently it has, it will be a third-class felony, with a penalty of 2 to 10 years," Gregg added.

Mark James Smith, 36, of Dallas was arrested Monday night while driving a van through Big Spring, and Jorge Manuel Pariente, 45, of Denton was arrested earlier in a pickup truck near Midland. About 330 pounds of marijuana was found in Smith's vehicle and 250 pounds in Pariente's pickup.

The arrests followed a tip to Texas Rangers in Midland that a pickup truck and a van met a single-engine plane that landed about 5:45 p.m. Monday at a remote airstrip near Imperial in Crane County. The informant said the vehicles were on their way to Dallas with $400,000 worth of marijuana.

Pariente was taken to the Ector County Jail in Odessa, where Justice of the Peace Virgil Lumpee set bond at $25,000. Smith was taken to the Howard County Jail in Big Spring, where Gregg set bond at $100,000.

On Tuesday, during a hearing on Smith's complaint that the bond was excessive, Gregg reduced bail to $50,000.

Midland teen-ager charged in Monday hit-and-run death

A rural Midland teen-ager has been freed on $2,500 bond after being charged with the Monday night hit-and-run traffic death of 10-year-old Christopher Scott Baker.

Charged with failure to stop and render aid, a felony, was 17-year-old construction laborer Rusty Dean Box of County Road 1270-South. Bond was set Tuesday by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry.

Judge Sprayberry said the family with whom Box is staying called him late Tuesday afternoon and said the youth told them he thought he hit an animal with the family car as he was on his way home after dropping off a family member at a Girl Scout meeting.

Box told the family he turned around and went back but didn't see anything, according to Sprayberry, who checked the car himself and determined from the damage that it was probably the vehicle that hit the boy, who was a fourth-grade student at Henderson Elementary School.

Box, whose older brother was killed in a hunting accident near Temple Nov. 19, was released from custody after bond was posted and the case will be referred to the grand jury, according to Sprayberry.

The Baker youth was apparently walking home from a grocery store when he was struck and killed along the south service road of Interstate 20 near Midland Industrial Park about 7 p.m. Monday.

State court rules against injunction

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court today let stand an appeals court ruling dissolving an injunction against a Monahans couple seeking to construct a carport.

The 143rd District Court, Ward County, had issued the injunction against Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Wade, concluding that constructing the carport would violate a restrictive covenant in the subdivision where the couple lived.

However, the appeals court said the provisions in the restrictions applied to corner lots and concluded that the property involved was not a corner lot, and "thus, the restriction in question is not applicable."

The Supreme Court ruled "no reversible error" had been made.

Remains of body to be sent to Dallas

ODESSA — The skeletal remains of a woman's body found in a shallow grave near here Tuesday night will be sent to Dallas for an autopsy and possible identification, according to police.

Lt. Rusty Baker said this morning the body was recovered in a field in far northeast Ector County shortly before 8 p.m. Tuesday after Det. Sgt. Jerry Smith was alerted by an anonymous phone call Monday.

The 4-foot 7-inch body appeared to be that of an adult female, according to Baker, who said no ruling will be made on the cause of death until after the autopsy is completed. The woman had apparently been dead several months.

Why do women live longer?

By JACK SMITH
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

"It occurs to me that I may have happened onto the reason why women live longer than men," writes Jo Hadley.

She thinks the reason may be that women carry purses.

"My brother told me that he and his wife walk several miles a day," she says, "and, because he is tall and has a long stride, he must walk slower than his maximum pace so his wife can keep up with him. Therefore, to increase his cardiovascular efficiency, he carries a piece of pipe or a box of rocks when they walk...."

Miss Hadley says she has seen ads for weights that joggers and walkers can wear around their waists for the same purpose. "It seems logical to me," she reasons, "that if this limited use of extra weight load promotes health and longevity, then women live longer and have stronger constitutions because they carry five-pound purses every time they venture out, every day...."

Miss Hadley says she interrupted the writing of her letter to weigh her purse, and it weighed 5 pounds 6 ounces.

"Some women's purses weigh as much as the travel case carried by the anvil salesman in 'The Music Man,'" she points out. "This is probably because women, especially mothers, of necessity adopt the Coast Guard motto, Semper paratus, very early in their careers. They are always expected to be able to provide, from the dark recesses of their handbags, the means to alleviate any emergency.

"I THINK IT WOULD be interesting if you would conduct a survey among the women employees at The Times to see what the average handbag weight is, and publish the results. I would also like to know your opinion on this theory. It seems obvious to me that the reason we don't see many men living as long as women is because we don't see many men carrying purses — at least not where I live."

Miss Hadley's theory indeed is provocative, but I have no intention of conducting a survey among women employees of the Los Angeles Times to find out how much their purses weigh. Miss Hadley doesn't mention, in her observations about the purse, that it is sometimes used, very efficiently, as a weapon. The weight of a woman's purse, I would think, is as private a matter as her own weight.

I certainly sympathize with her brother, though. I have always been a fast walker, and still am, though I have been slowed down in recent years by a spinal injury and normal processes of degeneration. Despite these minor handicaps, I still walk much faster than my wife — not that she isn't quite capable of keeping up. I long ago found out that no matter how fast or slow I walk, she will fall two or three strides behind me. If I wait till she catches up, and then try to walk on at her speed, she immediately slows her pace and falls back again.

CONSEQUENTLY, I AM continually stopping and standing while my wife maintains an uninterrupted motion, meanwhile carrying her added weight of five pounds or whatever it is.

We have discussed this phenomenon, calmly, and neither of us can understand it. Why does she always manage to stay a pace or two behind me, no matter what adjustment I make?

I have conjectured that it is some instinctive female gesture of subjugation to the male, perhaps deriving from certain hormones; or perhaps it is learned, unconsciously, from watching her mother walk behind her father when she was a child, or from looking at too many pictures of husbands and wives of other cultures in the National Geographic.

Though I am not about to carry a pipe or a box of rocks to improve my cardiovascular efficiency, I am suddenly more curious about my wife's practice of asking me to carry a rock home every time we're out walking and she sees one she likes. (I have learned that the one I carried back from Maui is taboo; God knows what kind of trouble I'm in.)

Is this, too, some atavistic female subterfuge for adding weight to her mate and thus increasing his cardiovascular efficiency? No, subtle as they are, I doubt that women are that subtle.

NEVERTHELESS, AS Miss Hadley points out, they live longer.

Inconclusive as this inquiry may be, it brings up one more time the question of what Queen Elizabeth carries in her purse. I had considered the subject closed, but I have lately received from Laverne Robertson a page copied from Majesty magazine, which evidently is concerned exclusively with the queen and her family. The page includes an item called "Inside the Queen's Handbag."

Though I think the guesses already made by various readers came very close to the facts, Majesty appears to have access to those close enough to the queen to know, and perhaps it should have the last word.

"Apart from her hankie and a tiny phial of smelling salts," says Majesty, "the Queen carries the keys of her dispatch-boxes wherever she goes, with car keys and the key of her own private front door at Windsor Castle." She always has a shining new penny or two for ceremonial purchases, Majesty adds; an aide-memoire with names and details about people she will meet; a platinum compact and lipstick holder designed by Prince Philip himself; and a lump of sugar for her horse — among other things, we must imagine, which Majesty does not mention.

IF HADLEY IS RIGHT, you can bet Elizabeth will outlive poor Philip by at least a dozen years. All he carries, as far as I can see, is his medals.

Recession affecting mens' fashion, too

By GARRY ABRAMS
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Socialism sells clothes. That's not an opinion of Karl Marx but of Barry Austin Reed, a British menswear manufacturer and retailer whose manner and style suggest that he has just stepped out of a Rolls-Royce.

"We always did better business under Labor in Great Britain," he says in a glancing reference to the stringent economic policies of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Tory government. "In France, under (Socialist President Francois) Mitterand, things have been quite good at retail for us because of the inflation there. During inflationary times, people don't want to hold on to their money because they know it will buy less in the future. Financial rectitude is not healthy for retailers."

Dressed in a silk suit and a white-collared blue shirt, the pipe-smoking Reed seems to typify stolid conservatism. But when he talks about the apparel business, he predicts radical changes.

Like many other menswear manufacturers, he says that the recession will cause a "big shakeout" in — largely because department stores are concentrating their dollars on established makers rather than on newer, fashion-forward resources. This forecast seems to hold no fears for Reed. In England, he's chairman and managing director of Austin Reed Group of Great Britain, an 80-year-old firm that operates retail stores and also manufactures traditional English suits, shirts, slacks and riding apparel. In the United States, the firm's clothes are available under the Austin Reed of Regent Street label, which is a division of Hart Schaffner and Marx.

Reed's company is benefiting from the current conservative or classic orientation in men's fashion, much of it with an English flavor, he says. "English style in clothing is the classic style around the world — especially in hard times, when people don't really want to splash out on something they're just going to wear a few times. And at any time, the great bulk of men are buying classic clothing. It's merely that movement of the 10 percent or 15 percent of men who are very fashion conscious that makes any trend become apparent. We have a static look in menswear at the moment, and I don't think that anyone's anxious to widen lapels or that sort of thing — business is tough as it is."

Reed thinks that part of the shakeout in menswear will affect companies and designers that have sought to Department and specialty stores will turn to labels that they "feel are not going to be discounted. I think they will go after more brand labels than designer labels."

Although English clothing has been making much of the men's fashion news in this country, Reed says that American style is making big headlines across the Atlantic. "Activewear has caught on in the United Kingdom and Europe," he says. "It's forced Austin Reed as retailers to stock it heavily." Knit shirts of the Izod LaCoste type are particularly popular, he says.

These matters are small potatoes compared to what Reed sees as the biggest development in fashion. The Japanese, he says, are poised to add apparel to their already formidable export successes in automobiles and electronics. "It's a sort of gut feeling I have that the Japanese will go after a share of the Western apparel market. In Hong Kong, a Japanese company already is making excellent tailored clothing. Eventually, there may be a Japanese style of Western dress. I think that their influence first will be in women's apparel." He adds that the Japanese probably won't do much manufacturing in their own country but will go offshore to Hong Kong and China, where labor costs are lower.

In part, Reed says, the Japanese are becoming interested in fashion manufacturing because of their fascination with Western dress. "The Japanese look to England for classic clothing and to America for activewar."

The Japanese may help push apparel manufacturing into the technological age, he adds, by improving and using such tools as laser fabric cutters to trim the cost of clothing.

Students learning realities of economics at very young age

By GREGORY SPECTOR

CANOGA PARK, Calif. — Business may be sluggish on the world markets, but trading is brisk in Valerie Plaisance's first- and second-grade class at Welby Way Elementary School here.

Plaisance's students have organized a "Solid Silver Society," with its own currency, businesses and government as part of a class project to understand real economic and political pricipals at the tender age of 6 or 7.

For example, Dorie Bryan's manicurist business is thriving at the Pink Shop. "You get all this stuff done for only one 'gold' (the society's currency), even buffing!" said one wide-eyed customer flashing her shiny pink nails.

Jonathan Firestein, owner and founder of Firestein Insurance Co., with his team of claim investigators, is bullish about business. At his firm's grand opening, he predicted a record quarter. "I was the top leader in the class until I lost my 59 golds — that's how I got into this business — but I'm going to get back to being the top leader soon."

And two budding businesswomen have combined art and kiddie haute cuisine at "Shannon and Sherrie's Everything Shop," where art lovers can munch on homemade muffins while deciding on which of the owners' latest drawings they'd like to buy. Business is good, said Sherrie Webber, despite their high overhead: "We had to pay 15 'golds' for our piece of real estate."

The Solid Silver Society's business is part of a program, known as "Mini-Society," being implemented in several hundred Los Angeles County classrooms designed to teach school-age children down to the level of kindergarten the essential elements of economics, Developed nine years ago by Dr. Marilyn Kourilsky, an economist at University of California-Los Angeles' Graduate School of Education, the Mini-Society program has taught over a million kids how to handle problems of a modern economy.

The program begins with a scarcity situation, such as not enough felt-tip pens. The shortage introduces the concept of limited resources outstripping demand, Kourilsky said. The students then discuss ways to resolve the shortage problem, coming up with solutions like getting things by force, by trading or on a first-come, first-served basis. They also learn about lotteries and using cash for goods.

Money then is minted and distributed, sometimes through a payroll system, where students earn money by designing and printing the society's currency, or by doing "minimum wage" chores such as lining up quietly and keeping their desks clean.

Without any prompting, insists Plaisance, the children then begin to compete for the money by setting up businesses — buying and selling goods and services such as homemade wallets, food concessions and banks.

Through this impromptu process, other businesses spring up. Partnerships are formed. Employees are hired. Business owners buy real estate or rent space in the classroom for conducting business. The teacher, who is also a citizen of the Mini-Society, usually is hired as a consultant. Income tax is instituted and a government is formed so that the students learn political realities as well as economics.

Plaisance said that one year she had a boy who couldn't think of a business, but had to pay his rent, "so the kids decided to pay taxes and set up a welfare system to help him."

In another class, Kourilsky said, "one banker closed up shop even though he was making a lot of money because, he said, he just 'couldn't stand the pressure.'"

"They realize they really are autonomous human beings," said Kourilsky. "They come out of the program believing they are change agents that can make something happen — finding out early in their lives that they too can be doers."

Not everyone needs to lose weight for the Holidays.

Cooking today's beef steak tender, juicy

By MERLE ELLIS

The beef that generally is available in markets these days makes me glad I'm almost 50. I'm grateful to have lived long enough to remember what a really great steak tasted like. Most of you kids under 40 can't even imagine!

Thirty years ago, it was almost impossible to get anything but a good, juicy, flavorful steak. All you had to do back then was buy a USDA Choice T-bone or Porterhouse, toss it on the grill, cook it as little or as much as you liked and it came out fine — tender, juicy, full of rich beefy flavor.

You had to work at it to louse up a steak in those days because they had some fat in them. Fat is where the flavor is in meat. Those little flecks of intramuscular fat called marbling are what make for a great juicy, tender, flavorful steak.

They also provide something of an "insurance factor" when it comes to cooking a steak. There is less risk of seriously damaging the palatability of a steak or roast by improper cooking or over-cooking if there is some fat in the meat.

Fat has become a four-letter word. The cattle industry has responded to consumer demands for less fat by producing leaner and leaner beef. Therefore, if you want a steak that even comes close to the steak of the 50s in terms of flavor, juiciness and texture, you have to be careful how you cook it.

There are three simple things to do when cooking one of today's leaner beef steaks that may help achieve satisfactory results.

First, sear it. I have found that I can do a better steak with today's lean beef in Grandma's old black iron skillet than I can in the broiler or on the barbecue.

But however you cook it, brown the surfaces of the steak quickly over high heat to seal in the juices, then reduce the heat and cook over medium heat to the desired degree of doneness.

Second, don't make the "desired degree of doneness" much past medium if you want a tender steak. That has always been the case, but with today's leaner beef it is an absolute must!

Third, make a sauce. Today's steaks just don't have much flavor on their own.

Here is a recipe that has worked well for me using today's leaner beef. It hasn't blotted out my memories of the real steak of 30 years ago, but it is good.

PAN-BROILED STEAK WITH WHISKEY SAUCE

1 large two-inch thick sirloin steak OR 4 small one-inch thick strip steaks
1 tablespoon black peppercorns, coarsely crushed
2 or 3 cloves garlic, minced
1/2 teaspoon coarse rock salt (or 1/4 teaspoon table salt)

Trim excess fat from steak. Press crushed peppercorns and garlic into both sides of steak and let stand at room temperature for one hour. Heat a heavy black iron skillet over high heat. Grease the bottom of the hot skillet with a piece of the fat that you trimmed off the steak. Toss in about half of the salt. Sear the steak or steaks quickly on one side, then lift out — add remaining salt to the skillet, turn the steak and sear the other side. Reduce the heat to medium and cook the steaks as desired. Remove to a warm platter. Make the sauce.

WHISKEY SAUCE

1/4 pound butter
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons whiskey
1 tablespoon Worchestershire sauce
1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
Dash Tabasco

Pour off any fat from cooking the steak. Melt butter in the same skillet over low heat; add onion and garlic and cook slowly until soft. Add remaining ingredients and simmer for a minute or two. Pour over steaks and serve.

Highest mountain

Mount Everest is the world's highest mountain. It was named in 1865 for British surveyor Sir George Everest. The Nepalese call the mountain Sagarmatha, and that name has been given to the 480-square-mile national park which includes three of the world's highest mountains — Everest, Lhotse, and Cho Oyu.

Potato cookbook has it all

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

Automobile fuel made from potatoes? It sound crazy but, according to the newly published "All-American Potato Cookbook," research is well under way.

The book, which contains over 200 recipes collected from various Wisconsin potato farms, lists many other interesting facts about the not-so-simple spud.

The first potato plants are thought to have been brought to Europe by Pizarro, the Spanish conqueror of Peru, in the mid-16th century. Then early in the 17th century the potato arrived in Virginia with English settlers and has been growing as an American staple ever since.

The myth that potatoes are high in calories is just that: a myth. A plain baked potato has a mere 100 calories — only 20 more than an apple. It's the sour cream and butter which are the calorie culprits: one tablespoon of butter adds another hundred off the bat! If you're watching your weight, try plain yogurt instead, and sprinkle with chives.

Potatoes are rich in iron, potassium and vitamins C and B6. Virtually fat-free, they are also a good source of complex carbohydrates which are essential to good health. Potatoes will keep well up to two months if stored in a cool, dark place (but don't refrigerate). If left exposed to too much light they may turn green and develop an unpleasant bitter flavor, and the green portions must be discarded.

Although "The All-American Potato Cookbook" does list quite a few recipes containing meat and fish, a good many recipes are suitable for a vegetarian diet. And many of those with such ingredients can be easily altered by simply omitting the meat.

CREAM OF POTATO SOUP

4 medium potatoes, washed, peeled and cubed (3 cups)
4 medium onions, sliced
2 T. butter or margarine
2 T. all-purpose flour
3 cups milk, heated
2 vegetable bouillon cubes
1 t. salt
¼ t. white pepper
Minced parsley

Combine potatoes, onions and water to cover (about 4 cups) in 3½-quart saucepan. Bring to a boil; cover and boil 20 minutes, or until potatoes are tender; drain, reserving 1 cup potato water. Process potatoes and onions through food mill or ricer. Blend butter and flour in saucepan. Stir in warm milk, bouillon, salt, pepper and reserved potato water. Simmer until slightly thickened, stirring often. Stir in vegetables, heat through. Sprinkle parsley on each serving. Makes 6 servings.

(Note: The original recipe calls for 2 teaspoons instant chicken bouillon granules. I adapted it for vegetarian purposes.)

APPLE POTATO SALAD

6 medium potatoes, washed, cooked and sliced (6 cups)
2 cups thinly sliced red apples
1 cup diced celery
½ cup diced green pepper
¼ cup minced onion
1 cup dairy sour cream or plain yogurt
½ cup mayonnaise
1 t. salt
¼ t. celery seed
Dash pepper
Mixed salad greens
¼ cup coarsely chopped walnuts or pecans

Combine potatoes, apples, celery, green pepper and onion in large bowl. Combine sour cream, mayonnaise, salt, celery seed and pepper in small bowl; blend well. Stir into potato mixture; blend well. Cover and chill several hours to blend flavors. Arrange salad greens in large salad bowl or on individual plates. Spoon potato salad on top. Sprinkle with nuts. Makes 8 servings.

Soda bread hearty addition to any meal

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Perhaps soda bread is so well liked because it not only tastes good but is easy to make. Served warm from the oven, it's a thrifty addition to a simple weekend brunch or light supper.

SODA OAT BREAD

1¾ cups all-purpose flour
1¼ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup quick or regular oats
3 tablespoons butter, cut in 3 pat
4 tablespoons Parmesan cheese
2 large eggs
½ cup buttermilk

In a medium bowl stir together flour, baking powder, soda and salt; stir in oats. With a pastry blender cut in butter until it is in small particles. Stir in 3 tablespoons of the Parmesan. In a small bowl, beat eggs just until yolks and whites are combined; reserve 1 tablespoon for brushing on bread. To the remaining beaten eggs add buttermilk and beat until blended; stir into flour mixture until a stiff dough is formed.

With lightly floured hands knead dough in the bowl about a dozen times. Shape into a ball; place in a buttered 1-quart shallow, round baking dish (7 by 1½ inches) and flatten evenly to cover bottom. With a sharp knife cut an X about ¼-inch deep through the center and to the edges. Brush with reserved 1 tablespoon beaten egg; sprinkle with remaining 1 tablespoon Parmesan.

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until golden brown and a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 40 minutes. Loosen edges. Serve warm, cut in wedges.

Makes 6 servings.

Author, culinary expert enjoys work

By DIGBY DIEHL
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Martha Stewart, culinary expert extraordinaire and author of "Entertaining" — a 320-page tome with 500 full-color photographs — was in high spirits at breakfast. The previous night she had eaten three dinners at three different restaurants in order to sample the gourmet delights of Los Angeles, and already she had been to the produce market and the flower market at 6 a.m. that day to select ingredients for a meal she would prepare on a television show that afternoon.

At a demonstration the previous day, she had whipped up a quick dinner made up of "California ingredients with a New England flavor." This consisted of boned squabs stuffed with wild mushrooms, braised artichokes and okra, and a dessert of figs stuffed with raspberries. That kind of cooking is a cinch for Stewart, who regularly performs culinary wizardry for hundreds of people at a time.

In her book, Stewart details plans for entertainments ranging from a Valentine's Day dinner for two to a catered wedding luncheon for 270. The author has actually prepared and served each of the meals she describes and offers a thoughtful recreation of her planning, recipes and the results.

She prepares what she calls "our farmhouse Thanksgiving for eight" with a real sense of holiday tradition. Listen to this description:

"Early on Thanksgiving morning, when I walk out into our garden and pick vegetables from the frozen soil to grace our table, I feel proud, productive and grateful. Our family dinner, like Thanksgiving of old, is truly a celebration of the harvest. Although the ingredients are strictly time-honored native produce — turkey, cranberry, pumpkin, squash — little surprises make tradition more interesting. The pumpkin makes its appearance in a soup served in its natural shell; the cranberries in a crunchy nut sauce for the turkey. I add raisins soaked in cognac to the standard bread dressing, and I substitute parsnips — a less familiar colonial root vegetable — for yams. These surprises are fun, and to me they make an eloquent point about the continuing life of a tradition."

Since Stewart has caterered many parties for several thousand people, is it difficult for her to understand how the average hostess can become frozen with fear when six of her friends are coming to dinner?

"Are you kidding?" she says in real amazement. "I always feel a nervous wreck about having people for dinner. I never seem to have enough time to think through the evening and prepare the right organizational touches for my guests. But I try to turn my nervousness into positive energy."

Her ideas in "Entertaining" are so good that when the editors of the New York Times saw an early copy, they hired Stewart to direct their spring home advertising supplement. That one completed, she is contracted for two more. The first printing of "Entertaining," with 44,000 copies, has sold out.

When she is not jet-setting, Stewart keeps busy with her catering business, which handles parties for the likes of Erica Jong, Paul Newman, Beverly Sills and Robert Redford. She produces many of the ingredients she serves in the half-acre garden of her circa-1800 Connecticut farmhouse, where she also keeps 100 chickens. "I just catered a lovely birthday party for 16 people that Robert Ludlum gave for Ted "Dr. Seuss" Geisel, and I am presenting a dinner for the King and Queen of Sweden and 56 guests at the American-Scandinavian Foundation. One of the most exciting events I catered recently was Pia Zadora's fifth wedding anniversary — we gave a country-and-western barbecue for 300 people."

DEAR ABBY

Sure-fire deal sends savings up in smoke

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am desperate. I am in charge of my mother's money. She had $2,500 in the bank — her life's savings — until I drew it all out last June. I also took $1,500 from the account my husband and I had in the same bank, added it to my mother's money and invested the whole $4,000 in a deal that was guaranteed to triple my money in two months.

Well, I lost the $4,000, and now I don't know what to do.

My mother knows nothing of this and neither does my husband. I was going to surprise them when I tripled the money.

I have prayed and prayed to the Blessed Virgin and to St. Jude, but it hasn't helped. I don't know what I will do when my mother and husband find out.

Abby, do you know any rich Catholics who believe in the Blessed Virgin and St. Jude and would be willing to give me $4,000 to help me out? Please tell me what to do. — DESPERATE

DEAR DESPERATE: Please don't look for any "rich Catholics" to bail you out. First, tell your husband and mother what you have done. Then notify the fraud division of your police department. You may not get your money back, but if this was a case of fraud, the police may be able to track down the people who took advantage of you and prevent them from swindling other innocent victims.

DEAR ABBY: Now that it's gift-giving time again, please say a few reassuring words to those of us who give grandchildren, nieces, nephews and other loved ones a check instead of a gift.

Shopping is not always easy for older people. I've been giving checks for birthdays, graduations, Christmas and weddings for years. Sometimes I'm thanked by telephone, in person or with a lovely note. Occasionally, the only way I know that my check was received is when my bank statement and cancelled checks arrive with the endorsement on the backs of the checks.

I'd be fibbing if I said I didn't feel a wee bit hurt, but my gifts always come from the heart, and I have never given a gift because I wanted a thank-you. — CHECK AND DOUBLE CHECK

DEAR CHECK: Your unselfish motivation doesn't excuse the bad manners of those who fail to acknowledge your gifts.

Read on for a letter from a reader who offers an excellent suggestion for acknowledging checks:

DEAR ABBY: Many in my family now receive checks for birthdays, etc. When they endorse the checks, they always write a little message on the back: "Thanks, mucho!" "This will buy that neat sweater I've had my eye on. Thank you." "You are a doll, and I love you, Grandma," etc. And sometimes a clever drawing is added.

I usually get a note farther down the road from each of them, but when the cancelled checks come back to me, I enjoy the cute messages on the back. — NO NAME, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: Another correspondent wrote to say that he had sent his grandson a check for his bar mitzvah, and he was thrilled beyond words to receive the most beautiful thank-you letter he had ever received written on the back of the cancelled check.

Microwave fudge is quick, easy

This fudge is quick because it isn't cooked on top of the stove. Instead, it's cooked in a microwave oven. The entire cooking process takes less than nine minutes, and there's no need for a candy thermometer.

The fudge is a blend of chocolate, marshmallow creme, evaporated milk and 100 percent natural cereal. The cereal adds a nutty crunch. Crushed peppermint candy is swirled throughout, creating a cool sensation in every bite.

PEPPERMINT SURPRISE FUDGE

1/2 c. butter or margarine
1 3/4 c. sugar
1 5-oz. can (2/3 c.) evaporated milk
1 5-oz. pkg. (1 c.) semi-sweet chocolate pieces
1 c. 100 percent natural cereal
1 7-oz. jar marshmallow creme
1/4 c. crushed peppermint candies
1 t. vanilla

Lightly grease 13x9-inch baking pan. Place butter in 4-qt. microwave bowl. Cook on high 30 second in microwave. Add sugar and milk; mix well. Cook on high 8 minutes, stirring well after each 2 minutes of cooking.

Remove from oven. Add chocolate pieces; stir until melted. Fold in remaining ingredients. Spread into prepared pan. Chill several hours or until firm. Cut into squares; store in tightly covered container in refrigerator. Makes 13x9-inch pan of fudge.

Try apple cake

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

This apple cake, with its slim layer of cream cheese filling and its lacing of custard, is the brainchild of Lee Keating, owner-chef of Chicago's La Belle Cuisine restaurant. A friend tasted it there and brought me the recipe.

If you try this dessert, be sure to follow directions and wrap the springform pan with foil so the butter in the crust won't leak out onto the oven floor.

CREAM CHEESE APPLE CAKE

2 cups all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon cream of tartar
¼ teaspoon salt
Two ¼-pound sticks butter (1 cup)
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 large eggs
Cream Cheese Filling, recipe follows
Custard Topping, recipe follows
3 pounds (9 medium) apples (a variety that holds its shape)
1/3 cup chopped (medium-fine) pecans

Tightly wrap the outside of a 9- by 3-inch springform pan with 18-inch wide heavyweight foil so it covers the bottom and sides of the pan. Butter the inside sides of the pan. On wax paper stir together flour, baking soda, cream of tartar and salt.

In a large bowl cream butter, sugar and vanilla; beat in eggs, then flour mixture, until blended. With a wide rubber spatula, spread batter over bottom and sides of prepared pan. Refrigerate.

Without washing the beater, make the Cream Cheese Filling and the Custard Topping. Pare and core apples. In a food processor or with a knife, slice apples ⅛-inch thick.

Remove pan from refrigerator; spread the Cream Cheese Filling over bottom. Arrange apples over Filling. Pour Custard Topping over apples. Sprinkle with pecans. Bake on rack below center in a preheated 350-degree oven for 1 hour; cover top with a sheet of foil; continue baking until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — 1 hour longer. Place pan on rack to cool completely; remove foil; with a small metal spatula loosen sides and remove band. Serve at room temperature.

Cream Cheese Filling: In a small bowl beat together until blended two 8-ounce packages cream cheese (at room temperature), 2 teaspoons vanilla, 1/3 cup sugar and 2 teaspoons heavy cream.

Custard Topping: In a small bowl beat together until blended 1 cup minus 2 teaspoons heavy cream, 2 large eggs, ⅓ cup sugar, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, ½ teaspoon cinnamon and ⅛ teaspoon nutmeg.

Cranberries used in bread

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Cranberry quick breads began to be popular in the 1940s. The attractive crimson berries made them appropriate to serve around the holiday season.

Then came yeast breads made with cranberries. I had never tried these until we used the following recipe. Adding oats, along with white flour, plus cranberries and walnuts make for an interesting texture.

CRANBERRY BREAD

2/3 cup boiling water
1½ one-quarter pound sticks (¾ cup) butter, cut in 12 pats
3 packages (each ¼ ounce) dry yeast
½ cup warm water (110 to 115 degrees)
6¼ to 6¾ cups all-purpose flour
2 cups fresh cranberries, chopped medium-fine (about 2¼ cups)
1 cup quick or regular oats
1 cup sugar
1 cup walnuts, chopped medium-fine
2 large eggs
4 teaspoons salt
Grated rind from 2 medium oranges
Glaze (if desired), recipe follows

In a 4-quart bowl, pour boiling water over butter; stir to melt; cool to lukewarm.

In a 1-cup measure sprinkle yeast over warm water and stir until dissolved.

Into butter mixture, stir dissolved yeast, 1 cup flour, cranberries, oats, sugar, walnuts, eggs, salt and orange rind until eggs are blended. Stir in enough more flour to make a stiff dough. Knead on a lightly floured surface until smooth and elastic — about 10 minutes.

Shape into a ball. Wash, dry and butter the large bowl; place dough in it, turning once to coat all sides. Cover bowl tightly with saran; let rise in a warm place (about 80 degrees) until nearly double — about 1½ hours.

Punch down dough (it will have softened during rising); divide in half. Drop by large spoonfuls or with your hands into two buttered 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pans, forming 3 mounds on the surface of each. Let rise, uncovered, as before until nearly double — about 1½ hours.

Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven for 15 minutes; cover loosely with foil. Continue baking until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 35 to 40 minutes longer. Turn out of pans onto wire racks. Turn right side up. Cool completely. If desired, top with Glaze.

Makes 2 loaves.

Glaze. In a small bowl stir together until smooth 1 cup confectioners' sugar and 1 tablespoon orange juice. Add enough more orange juice, ¼ teaspoon at a time, to make a medium-thin glaze. Drizzle over cooled loaves.

LIVING TODAY

Protect skin from winter

By SHARON HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Winter is a difficult time of year for many types of skin, with chief enemies being cold, wind and the drop in relative humidity. Most heating systems also rob the air of moisture and may cause the skin to crack, become rough or red, scale and develop lines.

A moist skin is healty skin. Use a moisturizer — not to add water or oil to the skin, but to prevent the skin's own water content from escaping.

If you wear an oily, protective makeup base in the winter, a toner can help get your face completely clean. A toner, usually an alcohol based lotion, should be applied with a cotton pad after cleaning the face. This treatment should be followed with a moisturizer while the skin is damp — unless your skin is so oily that you don't need moisturizer. Astringents — toners with more alcohol — may be used after cleaning the face but may irritate the skin. People with dry skin should avoid products containing alcohol.

Three areas of the face require different amounts of moisturizer. Around the eyes there are few oil glands and the skin is driest. Pat moisturizer on gently before applying foundation. The cheeks and neck require a lighter moisturizer. The area around the nose and forehead is usually oily and may need little or no moisturizer.

Women with extremely oily skin should select and use moisturizers carefully, because they can cause oily skin to break out.

Moisturizers are available in lotions and creams. Lotions have a higher water content and contain less oil. In dry climates, the water in the lotion evaporates rapidly, so one may need a cream for longer protection.

Finally, don't forget to protect lips by using lip conditioner and lipstick or gloss. Winterize your skin, indoors and out this season.

Resilent roaches

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Cockroaches have been around for more than 350 million years. They reproduce rapidly and often develop biological resistance to pesticides.

The hardy insects can live almost anywhere, even inside electric appliances. In homes, they thrive on warmth and leftover human or pet food, and drink the water in bathrooms and kitchens. Even the glue in furniture and wallpaper provides them with nourishment.

The most effective way to combat roaches is to keep a clean house and to use an appropriate insecticide on a regular basis, according to the manufacturer of Spectracide pest-control products.

By HAL SPENCER

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — When Barbara Carey of Dade County, Fla., suggested recently that Alaska pay the cost of a new Orange Bowl in Miami, Alaska Gov. Jay Hammond wrote her a poem.

"We know you Alaskans are rolling in wealth' is a statement heard often these days — from those with a plan for ripping us off to further some cause or pet craze," Hammond wrote.

In the tortured rhyme that followed, the bearded governor explained that Alaska, despite its oil wealth, had pressing needs of its own, and hadn't the money to build Dade County a new stadium.

BARRED BY LAW from serving a third term, the former bush pilot, trapper, wolf hunter, commercial fisherman and hunting guide retires Dec. 6.

That's fine with Hammond, who describes himself as a "bush rat more at home with my gum boots in bilge water" than in the Statehouse. The Republican will be succeeded by Democrat Bill Sheffield, a millionaire who owns a hotel chain in Alaska and the Yukon Territory.

Hammond says he and his wife, Bella, will retire to their homestead in the remote Lake Clark area northeast of Bristol Bay to "repair the tattered remnants" of his bush flying service.

After 34 years in government — as a mayor, legislator and governor — Hammond wryly concedes: "I guess there's no escaping the fact that I've spent most of my life as a bureaucrat...I certainly had no aspirations to join up with those rascals."

In many ways, Hammond is Alaska — or at least the Alaska that some might envision.

INFLUENCED BY a Texas friend's tales of Alaska, Hammond, who was reared in Vermont, bought a 1929-vintage Loening Keystone amphibious plane and flew to Alaska in 1946.

But, "I really wasn't some wild-eyed kid seeking my fortune as so many are who come up here," Hammond recalls.

The former Marine fighter pilot lifts weights regularly — therapy for a back injury suffered in a World War II crash landing — and is built like a bull. His voice, compared to an "untamed, rushing Alaskan river" by one former state lawmaker, fills up a room.

"His appearance, his doggerel and his style is refreshing," says Byron Mallott, head of Sealaska, a huge native regional corporation with interests in the salmon and timber industries. "He really did bring the flavor of what is good and unique about Alaska to the forefront."

When Hammond became governor in 1974, construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline was just beginning. The giant state's sparse population was swelling with newcomers and was confronted with enormous service needs as it waited for a wave of oil wealth.

"WE WERE NOT rich then. We had the resources, but we didn't have the money," says Hammond, explaining that the huge increases in revenue from state-owned oil leases didn't come until 1979 when oil prices skyrocketed with the Iranian revolution.

Business interests and environmentalists were locked in strident debate over the state's future. Would Alaska's riches — petroleum, fish, timber and minerals — be exploited, or would development be stymied?

Hammond now believes he succeeded in balancing those interests, a contention not shared by some on either side of the issue.

"I attempted to screen healthy growth from unhealthy growth. I was in the middle. I had more empathy with the environmentalists, but knew there would be decisions they would be affronted by."

HAMMOND LEAVES a bureaucracy that has grown along with oil revenues. The state operating budget alone rose during his tenure by 18.4 percent annually. He admits that government growth is out of control, but is proud of his leadership role for a spending limit approved by voters in November.

Many, including Mallott and veteran state Sen. Bill Ray, say Hammond was "a man of vision." But they assert he often paid scant attention to day-to-day government, allowing it to grow, sometimes without direction.

Taxing benefits idea whose time has yet to come

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — As an exercise in public relations, political timing, and coping with a more Democratic Congress, the White House suggestion that unemployment benefits be taxed was the pits.

That's where it wound up.

The idea surfaced on Thanksgiving Day, began sinking the next day, and was buried the day after that. Nobody is saying who produced it, and Reagan's spokesman says the president never saw it. Not until he saw it on television, shortly after which he killed it.

The proposition turned up on the Thanksgiving menu at Santa Barbara, Calif., after Reagan aides told reporters on Air Force One that the president was considering new options to deal with unemployment, the highest in 42 years.

Deputy press secretary Larry Speakes gave no details, but he said the administration was at work on proposals to be sent to the new Congress.

Reagan considered a six-month stepup in the withholding tax reductions due next July 1, but dropped that idea on Tuesday. The proposal would have faced heavy going in a Congress short on time and wary of adding to the record deficit already in prospect.

THE PRESIDENT, spurred by Congress, is proposing a 5-cent increase in the gasoline tax for highway and transit improvements, and that would create jobs, although Reagan said it was not intended as a jobs program. It really doesn't fit Reagan's style, for it harks back to the kind of government-financed job programs the president always has criticized.

Under the circumstances, the president's men had reason to promote the idea of a new Reagan initiative, a package of measures to help curb joblessness. And the time was right. It is White House habit to leave for any vacation with a bit of news to be disclosed while the president is on holiday.

That didn't begin with the Reagan administration. It has been standard procedure for years. An announcement or two at the press center gives the impression that the president has his hand in business even while vacationing. It doesn't take big things to make the point. John F. Kennedy's spokesman once held an extended Cape Cod briefing to disclose that the administration was changing the import duty on cotton scraps.

In this case, there was an administration option paper on unemployment proposals, prepared by a Cabinet-White House task force for a meeting that was to have been held before Reagan headed west. The meeting was postponed. The jobless pay tax was among the options.

IN SANTA BARBARA, Speakes told reporters that Reagan was considering a tax on unemployment benefits "to make it less attractive" for people to be out of work and collecting them. He said there were studies showing that unemployment benefits discourage people from seeking work.

Democrats and organized labor began protesting within hours. According to his aides, Reagan learned of the idea, and the controversy, when it turned up on television newscasts.

By Friday, Reagan's traveling aides were saying — anonymously — that the idea was going nowhere. Counselor Edwin Meese III said the president himself never had considered it. Speakes said nothing for the record.

But Meese said in a CBS interview that "we do know that when unemployment benefits end, most people find jobs very quickly after that point."

Democratic critics called the whole business callous and cynical, saying that the administration made it sound as though the unemployed were shirkers who could find jobs if they wanted.

ACTUALLY, THERE are circumstances in which unemployment pays better than working. Jobless pay is exempt from taxation unless it is going to a family with an income of $18,000 or more. In a family with one of two wage earners out of work, tax-free unemployment benefits can be worth more than the second job until the total hits $18,000.

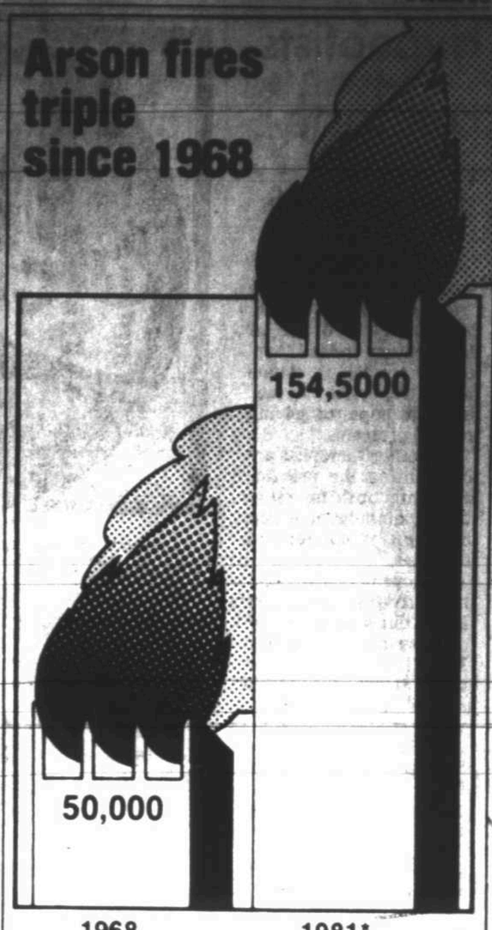
Arson fires triple since 1968



*Estimate

Better reporting procedures may account for some of the increase since 1968, according to the National Fire Protection Association. Some investigators say another factor may be that as cities start to decay in a poor economy, it becomes profitable to burn properties for insurance monies.

Lack of evidence means seismic tests will occur

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Beginning this week, an ocean-bottom search for oil off the Northern California coast will move into the path of pregnant, migrating gray whales despite protests that it could harm the mammals.

A State Lands Commission moratorium on exploratory seismic depth charges off California's three northernmost counties will be lifted because a task force has reportedly found no evidence of harm either to whales or to other sea life.

The exploration vessels fire blasts of compressed air at about 5,000 pounds of pressure per square inch to the ocean bottom. Underwater microphones towed on two-mile-long cables record the echoes as they bounce back, helping to give geologists a clearer picture of what may lie under the ocean floor.

Ron Storro-Patterson, research director of the Whale Center, an organization of 3,000 members headquartered in Oakland, Calif., noted that the gray whale, which reaches 45 feet in length and can weigh as much as 35 tons, depends primarily on hearing for its navigation. The seismic exploration, he said, "can be presumed to be above the threshold of pain and even potentially damaging to hearing organs."

The annual trek by the gray whale species began this fall at the Bering Strait between Alaska and the Soviet Union. The 6,000-mile migration along the North American coast is headed by expectant mothers who calve in the lagoons of Baja California. The mothers-to-be currently are off Northern California.

Their path ranges from a few miles to 10 miles from shore, at depths of about 150 feet. The gray whale is the only species recovering from worldwide destruction by mankind, but it is still on the U.S. endangered species list. Its cousins off the Asian coast have been hunted virtually to extinction by Japanese, Korean and Soviet whalers.

According to Claire Dedrick, Lands Commission executive officer, two ships equipped for seismic testing should be in operation off the California coast this week.

A task force appointed by Dedrick has spent weeks seeking evidence that the air blasts harm marine life. But unless there are last-minute findings to the contrary, informed sources at the commission say, the task force report will clear the way for unlimited seismic testing.

Ms. Dedrick conceded that the report could not be definitive. At her request, a 10-month federal study of the gray whale migration will include the effect of the controversial seismic exploration for oil.

The moratorium on such tests within the state's three-mile limit had been in effect for about a month.

Although she sought the temporary ban, Ms. Dedrick noted that such tests took place for five years off California without any evidence of harm. Until now, however, such testing has not been extensive off Northern California.

A Whale Center spokesman said that "until we learn specifically of equipment used, we cannot support continuation of that activity.

"We must be satisfied that the intensity of shock waves is not high enough to have negative impact on the hearing organs of migrating whales and other living resources of the marine environment."

Commission sources said it was difficult to see how any harm could be done unless a whale was directly under such an "air bubble" or "piston," because lateral sound waves disperse rapidly.

Byrd Baker, who organized a boycott of Japanese goods six years ago to protest the Japanese whale slaughters, has been leading environmentalists' protests regarding the testing. Last month, he contended that "there have been up to six foreign vessels at a time of approximately 200 feet in length, with air and steam cannons arrayed around the stern — up to 30 of them — which explode under water...The gray whale has lately been observed to be acting erratic, hugging close to the coastline." But Ms. Dedrick's staff says it has found no evidence to confirm Baker's claims.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Thirty years after the "reincarnation" of Bridey Murphy relived life in 19th-century Ireland, hypnotists are taking clients to controversial "former lives" in hopes of solving mental problems.

But other therapists are discounting the practice as being nothing more than confabulation — the creation of convenient fantasies.

In November 1952, amateur hypnotist Morey Bernstein began a series of experiments with Ruth Tighe in Pueblo, Colo., in which she related the life and death of a barrister's wife.

When the experiments became publicized and his book, "The Search for Bridey Murphy," was published, a storm of controversy erupted over the implications of reincarnation.

With deceptive ease, most people can be hypnotized and relate a past life, say authorities on the subject. For about $50 an hour, many of the growing number of hypnotherapists will attempt to take a client back in time for curiosity or therapy.

Eugene Paquet, who runs a Portland hypnosis clinic called "Journey Inward," says sometimes it takes two or three sessions, but most people say they have been around before.

"Some people relive it. Some people just remember it. It depends on the individual," he said.

"Almost everybody will claim a past life — but you can also progress someone to the year 2000," said Portland clinical psychiatrist Stanley Abrams. "It's a nice gimmick, I suppose, but there's no way I'd believe it."

Dr. Ken Paltrow, a Portland psychiatrist, says he's not ready to espouse the reincarnation theory. "But I've used it (past-life regression) and it's helped out many people in many ways."

Paltrow says he has had a dozen patients who, under hypnosis, saw themselves as Jewish victims of Nazi concentration camps, although only two were Jewish.

"After they experienced their own deaths, they all felt better," he says.

Edith Fiore, a clinical psychologist in Saratoga, Calif., says she uses past-life regression for all therapy and tends to believe in reincarnation.

"It doesn't really matter one whit. This really works," says Dr. Fiore, whose book, "You Have Been Here Before," details the treatment of several clients whose intrance experiences helped clear up such problems as fear of heights, smoking, migraine headaches and sexual problems.

She says about 500 psychiatrists or psychologists worldwide use past-life regressions for treatment and have formed the Association of Past-Life Researchers and Therapists.

U.S. ranks fifth for benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States ranks fifth among 12 nations in the amount of government retirement benefits couples get compared with earnings before retirement, according to a study by the U.S. Social Security Administration.

The study, published in the November issue of the agency's "Social Security Bulletin," examined benefits for 1980, the most recent year for which such data is complete.

Retired married couples fared the best in Sweden, where their old-age benefits equaled 83 percent of their earnings the year prior to retiring. West Germans got 75 percent of their earnings, Italians 69 percent and Austrians 68 percent.

Reagan approves COLA cuts

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has given tentative approval to curtailment of the cost-of-living adjustments on Social Security as part of a $25 billion package of budget cuts he plans to send Congress next January, aides close to the budget process say.

Reagan has insisted publicly that he would take no position on cuts in Social Security until after the year-end report from a special blue ribbon advisory commission, which has its final scheduled meeting on Dec. 10.

He is having to decide between a range of unpleasant choices of cutting federal spending or increasing revenues for the fiscal 1984 budget this month, however, and the $172 billion Social Security retirement system plays a major role in the budget and its projected $175 billion to $200 billion deficit.

JUST HOW much Reagan would trim the COLAs on Social Security remained unclear but a source close to the budget-briefing sessions said Reagan had agreed in principle to move forward with some action on them.

Among the options: to freeze the Social Security COLA for one year, which would save $14 billion; to tie the inflation adjustment to the wage index rather than the cost-of-living index and then to reduce it by 2 percent; to postpone next year's COLA by at least three months and then to delay each subsequent annual payment for the next few years by two months each for savings of $35 billion.

Business groups generally have called for tough action to constrict the so-called "entitlement" programs, those that are open-ended to a specified group of people as Social Security is open to the elderly and the disabled poor. They also have insisted that even if the eligibility is left open-ended, that the cost-of-living adjustments must be sharply curtailed if inflation is to be kept down for good.

ALEXANDER Trowbridge, president of the National Alliance of Business who also is a member of the Social Security advisory commission, said he favored putting a lid not just on the Social Security COLAs but on those that affect federal payments in at least three dozen other federal programs.

"If we limited the COLAs in the future only for Social Security, I would expect the elderly and the retired to say 'you're putting the full burden on us,'" Trowbridge said.

"I would guess that the political acceptance would be enhanced if you could say this is a reduction across the board," Trowbridge said.

NEXT AFTER Social Security's $172 billion in annual retirement benefits are the federal civil service retirement system, at an estimated $19 billion; the military retirement, at $17 billion; veterans' compensation at $9 billion; railroad retirement at $4 billion and veterans' pensions at $3 billion.

It is just such a sweeping COLA reduction that the White House is planning, a budget source said.

So far, Reagan has not agreed to any tax-increase proposals although Congress probably will pass a 5-cent-a-gallon gasoline increase to be funneled back into $3 billion of roads-and-bridges repair projects even if he objects.

Another tax-increase proposal confronting Reagan is an acceleration of the Social Security payroll tax, which is the Democratic preference for short-term relief for the system, which is projected to have a $200 billion shortfall in revenues between now and 1990.

Holding the Jarvik-7 artificial heart, which is to become the first permanent artificial heart implanted in a human, is Dr. Willian DeVries. DeVries, head of Cardiothoracic Surgery at the University of Utah, is to perform the surgery Thursday.

First permanent artificial heart to be implanted

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A 61-year-old Seattle dentist who is dying of incurable heart disease can make medical history Thursday by becoming the first person to receive a permanent artificial heart.

Officials at the University of Utah Medical Center announced the transplant Tuesday. The fist-sized polyurethane heart, named the Jarvik-7 after its inventor, has previously been tested in calves and other lab animals.

The patient, whose name is being withheld until after the operation, is dying from cardiomyopathy, an inoperable, degenerative disease of the heart that afflicts an estimated 8,000 to 10,000 people in the United States, said John Dwan, a spokesman for the medical center.

"We do not plan to identify him until after the surgery to minimize public pressure on him and his family, and because he has the right to change his mind at any time," Dwan said.

DeVries is the only surgeon authorized by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to implant the Jarvik-7, which was developed by Dr. Robert Jarvik of the university's Artificial Organs Division.

Recipients of the heart, which is driven by an external air compressor, will have to spend the rest of their lives tethered to the compressor by two 6-foot hoses.

Artificial hearts have been implanted three times before, but all were intended for temporary use while awaiting a transplant.

The first artificial heart was implanted in a human in 1969 by Dr. Denton Cooley at the Texas Heart Institute in Houston. The patient lived 64 hours with the device before a transplanted human organ replaced it. However, the recipient died 32 hours later of pneumonia.

The University of Utah's patient was cleared for the operation by the school's Artificial Heart Patient Evaluation Committee and signed initial consent forms Monday, Dwan said.

"He visited the medical center several months ago and visited with Dr. DeVries at that time," Dwan said. "He also visited the research laboratories and saw the animals living there with the artificial hearts."

After the surgery, the school will hold a news conference to identify the recipient, Dwan said.

Before being accepted for the experimental procedure, potential recipients must first be recommended by DeVries and then be unanimously approved by a six-member evaluation committee consisting of DeVries, two cardiologists, a psychiatrist, a nurse and a social worker.

VA doctor issues dioxin warning

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Veterans Administration dermatologist wants the government to look for Vietnam veterans suffering from chloracne, a skin disease caused by dioxin, "the most toxic chemical ever synthesized by man."

In a report Tuesday to the VA's scientific advisory panel on Agent Orange, Dr. A. Betty Fischmann put new urgency on locating veterans suffering from the disease, a possible precursor to other ailments.

Dioxin is a contaminant in Agent Orange, a herbicide that U.S. forces sprayed over much of Vietnam.

Many veterans blame exposure to the herbicide for a variety of serious health disorders, but the government recognizes chloracne as the only ailment known to be caused by Agent Orange.

Ms. Fischmann, who chairs the VA's Chloracne Task Force, said researchers once believed chloracne disappeared in a few years but know now that it sometimes persists for 30 years.

Moreover, she said, animal studies show that dioxin promotes cancer.

"Therefore, veterans who were exposed to Agent Orange and are heavy users of tobacco, a known carcinogen, or who are subsequently exposed to carcinogens at work or elsewhere shall be followed closely," she said.

Her report concluded that the issue of how serious chloracne is can only be resolved through an aggressive effort to locate veterans who may have had or still have chloracne.

"This is the group at risk from systemic absorption of the most toxic chemical ever synthesized by man. It is, therefore, the group of Vietnam veterans whose health must be monitored indefinitely," she said.

Ms. Fischmann, said only 13 possible cases of chloracne have been found in 3,200 claims filed by Vietnam veterans for disability compensation, but she said greater efforts to locate victims must be undertaken.

Of the 13 veterans, special examinations are being given to nine while a search is under way for the other four.

The panel also heard from representatives of some of the 18 states that have established commissions to gather information about the effects of Agent Orange on veterans. The state leaders asked the VA to back legislation under which compensation would be paid to Vietnam veterans suffering from certain cancers even without proof that their diseases were caused by Agent Orange.

Their spokesmen, Robert D. Santos, chairman of New York State's Temporary Commisson on Dioxin Exposure, said he doubted there would ever be sufficient scientific evidence of a link between the herbicide and cancer to persuade everyone.

State Sen. Karl Berning of Illinois, chairman of his state's Agent Orange Study Commisson, said the solution to the Agent Orange problem will have to be political, not scientific.

"We would like to know that we can approach Congress, and when we do we aren't going to be running into bureaucratic blocks," Berning said.

But Dr. Barclay Shepard, replying for the VA, was noncommittal.

"One has to look at those issues on a case-by-case basis, and it is difficult to generalize," he said.

Stroke claims life of patient

TORONTO (AP) — An American man who was the first person ever given two transplanted lungs from different donors died from a massive stroke brought on by weeks of dependency on an artificial ventilator, doctors reported.

James Franzen, 32, of Marietta, Ga., died in Toronto General Hospital on Tuesday, more than three months after the first lung transplant and more than two months after the second.

Hospital officials said in a statement that the herbicide weakened Franzen's muscles and left him unable to breathe entirely on his own, except briefly, after the operations.

"Death was due to a massive stroke," the statement said. "Late last week, Mr. Franzen developed complications related to his long-time dependency on a ventilator." A ventilator pumps oxygen into the lungs.

Hospital officials said an autopsy was planned.

The fatal exposure of paraquat apparently happened in July, about three weeks before Franzen began to have chest pains and trouble breathing.

His right lung was replaced in a 6½-hour operation on Aug. 29. The donor, Dennis Blakely, 25, of Decatur, Ga., had died after being shot accidentally.

Number of fires decreases

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico and Arizona had almost 32 percent fewer forest fires in 1982 than 1981, thanks to Mother Nature creating less lightning and churning out rain to help firefighters.

"One of the primary reasons for the decrease was lightning activity...we had a grand total of 1,050 lightning-caused fires this year, while last year we had 2,000," said Jim Hickman, U.S. Forest Service director of aviation and fire management for Arizona and New Mexico.

"Almost all of our lightning storms were accompanied by rain," he said. "Even if fires were started by lightning, most of them were extinguished before we even had a report on them."

From January through October, there were 645 fires sparked by people and 1,060 touched off by lightning, Hickman said.

For the same period in 1981, there were 2,500 fires in the two states, he said.

In New Mexico, there were 110 man-caused blazes this year and 510 fires triggered by lightning. In Arizona, there were 535 fires caused by people and 550 lightning-kindled fires.

The number of acres scorched by forest fires dipped 45 percent from 1981 to 1982 — 3,450 acres this year compared with 6,400 acres in 1981, Hickman said.

There were 1,400 acres burned this year in New Mexico and 2,050 acres singed in Arizona, he said.

A five-year average shows 2,250 fires and 40,000 acres blackened by fire, Hickman said.

The rainy season got off to an early start "in the middle of June or the first of July. We just had continuous storms throughout the country and they were all wet storms," he said.

That helped efforts to battle fires — especially with the firefighting force strapped by federal budget cutbacks, he said.

"We're feeling the pinch just like all the other forces," Hickman said. "This year, for the first time in New Mexico, we used an inter-agency fire team on a large fire by Mount Taylor."

In New Mexico and Arizona, the Forest Service has teamed up with the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Indian Affairs and state forestry departments to battle fires, he said.

The Forest Service also is "having more people going back to the old concept of one individual doing a lot of different jobs," he said. "A person may be out working with a timber crew today and tomorrow be fighting a fire.

"Consolidating jobs is what it amounts to," Hickman said. "As we got more money, we got more specialists. Now, we're going back to the multi-function type of individual because of budget constraints."

Another factor that led to the decrease in burned acreage this year was the increased use of smokejumpers — parachuting firefighting forces "that can be transported to the fire in a very short time and dropped with equipment and supplies and left until the fire is out," he said.

Cable TV dominated by males

"The cable industry is even more dominated than is television by white males, who hold 57 percent of all (cable) positions and 75 percent of the decision-making posts," said the study, released Sunday by the United Church of Christ's Office of Communication.

Davis takes lecture tour of Europe

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Next in view for legendary film star Bette Davis: a lecture tour of Europe.

For several years the veteran actress has been touring the United States with "An Evening With Bette Davis," showing clips of her famous film scenes and answering questions for the audience.

"Now I want to take my show to Italy, France and Germany," she said at a recent Hollywood awards dinner.

And she's figured out how she'll handle the language problem: "I would take along someone who could speak excellent English as well as the language of the country, someone who could catch my inflections. My answers usually come fast."

Man has certain envy of animals

By DAN SULLIVAN

Chickens have no trouble behaving like chickens and tigers go about their business with authority. Only man, the caretaker, wonders what he is meant to be.

Possessing a body that walks around and makes sounds, he is clearly some kind of animal. But an animal with responsibilities, an animal that has to make choices. It was simpler before one had to think.

Man looks at the other animals with a certain envy. One wouldn't give up being caretaker. But it would be wonderful to have the bravery of the lion. If only one could crawl into the lion's skin. What would happen if you put on the lion's pelt? Would the bravery rub off?

Some such impulse, the anthropologists say, may explain the animal dances of early man, which can be thought of as the origins of theatrical performance. Such dances are still seriously performed in certain parts of the world. And today's theater still sees performers dressed up as animals, not just for childish purposes. We are still trying to read our mystery with clues and metaphors from the animal world.

THE TENDENCY IS especially noticeable this fall, with "Cats" playing on Broadway and "Metamorphosis" playing at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles. The first is based on T.S. Eliot's little book of light verse, "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats." Everybody in the company plays a cat of one kind of another, whether Manx, Siamese or alley. The human race is represented only by its leavings, piled up in a gorgeous junkyard where the cats dance under a "jellicle moon." If it weren't for someone's dropping a giant boot on the cats to stop their caterwauling (it misses), this might be a post-human universe.

"Metamorphosis" is based on Kafka's fable of a young man who turns into a giant insect overnight. Once more the insect is one that might turn up in a junk heap, a dung beetle. The victim's family does remain human — the metamorphosis isn't an epidemic, as when the snout horns start sprouting in Ionesco's "Rhinoceros" — but their behavior is less and less humane as they realize that the son's condition will be permanent. It is a relief to everybody, including him, when he shrivels up and dies.

THE SHOWS ARE AS different as can be. "Cats" is a big Broadway musical, all song and dance. "Metamorphosis" is a severe black-and-white morality take, all words and expressionist devices. But there are similarities as well. Each evening relies heavily on the physical skills of its performers to convey strong kinetic impressions of how a cat lands on her feet and how a bug cocks his head. Both also suggest that in this century the condition of animals is not to be envied, at least if they live with man.

"Cats" is an exuberant show, but the most memorable cat on the heap is a damaged one. Her name is Grizabella the Glamour Cat (Betty Buckley). "Glamour Cat" in the past tense. Grizabella has been to the bottom of every garbage can in town, and it shows. Buckley does not play her as a what-the-hell Mehitabel. She presents her pathetically, as a ravaged lady of the streets with something distinctive about her still. She cannot dance (she tries a couple of times, but nothing seems to work). The voice, however, is still strong enough to raise the moon. Buckley's aria, "Memory," may be a steal from Puccini. It also melts you into a puddle of pity.

BUCKLEY PRESENTS A used-up woman more than she does a bedraggled cat. But there is enough of the cat to suggest the connection. In both cases a delicate, light-boned thing has been mortally abused. Absurdly, you find yourself rejoicing at the end of the piece as the lady rises to cat heaven, a Magdalen redeemed.

It is easier to identify with a car than with a dung-beetle, of course. Brad Davis in the Taper's "Metamorphosis" has the difficult assignment of playing an insect with no redeeming traits, a bug that agrees with his family that he is a piece of vermin.

Again the metaphor is clear. To step on one's son for 25 years (as Kafka felt his father had done) is to turn him into something that skulks under the sink when the light goes on. Steven Berkoff's staging (he also did the adaptation) calls for an actor who can crawl a pipe upside down and can fit his limbs into the armature of an insect without raising a smile from the audience. Davis renounces even a smile of approval at the cleverness of his imitation. He draws the insect very clearly, but it is even more clear that this is the story of a man's damnation. It is not interesting to be a dung beetle. This one dies of depression.

BUCKLEY AND DAVIS present their animals as images of human degradation, redeemed in her case, not in his. Playwright Israel Horovitz used the same approach in an early one-act, "Rats," in which two tenement rats fight over whether to attack a human baby. But the tradition is not peculiar to modern plays. Ben Jonson's "Volpone" models its nasty characters on animals considered shifty in Renaissance zoology: the fox, the fly, the raven. Caliban in Shakespeare's "The Tempest" is a man-beast as unfortunately transmogrified as Kafka's dung-beetle. Aristophanes' "The Birds" were not especially nice people either.

But theater does not necessarily use animals as symbols of the dark side of human nature. More often, in fact, its uses them genially, whether as themselves (floppy Nana in "Peter Pan") or as emblems of humans who mean well (the Cowardly Lion in "The Wiz.") "Cats" also links up with this tradition. Particularly when Stephen Hanan as Gus the Theater Cat, another loser, throws off his shabby coat and becomes Growltiger the Bravo Cat, fighting off the green-eyed Siamese hordes as he sings duets with his lady love — Walter Mitty to the life.

STORY THEATER ALSO CAME out of this tradition — Turkey Lurkey off to Vietnam. Berkoff uses Story Theater techniques to narrate "Metamorphosis," and Davis' performance recalls that this stage once held a show called "Bugs," by Doris Baizley. It must have had a moral (animal fables usually do), but I forget it.

'Missing Children' kind of tale TV does well

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — Tonight's TV-movie heroine, evicted from her home, abused and abandoned by her husband, is telling bedtime stories to her small children. The sandman is late arriving. It's not easy going beddy-bye in a bus terminal.

She tells them about better days, the kind they've seen at the picture shows. She has them imagine they're snacking on popcorn, jujube candies and root beer. Gene Kelly and his flying feet are on the screen.

Ever so sweetly, she whispers that when their fantasy film ends, they would get into their "fancy motor car" and drive to their mansion, the one with "trees and big lawns, just like we've seen in the movies."

The moving picture the heroine paints could be any zippy movie spectacle churned out by Hollywood in the 1940s. The movie she's in — "Missing Children: A Mother's Story" on CBS tonight — is the kind of intimate, heart-tugging tale that television does well and often around Christmastime.

Mothers, old softies and, maybe, the thick-skinned will be touched by "Missing Children," the story of a courageous, kindly, yet naive mother who temporarily places her kids in a free boarding home, while she endeavors to find work, only to then discover that the children were put up for adoption.

This movie makes no pretense about its intentions: going for the goosebumps and dividing the world into good and evil.

Who could resist a mother who refuses to yield to life's rotten apples? Who wouldn't be swept away by a struggling family that pulls all its worldy possessions on a kid's red wagon? Who wouldn't hate the snake who sells off the children?

Actually, without the right actresses, "Missing Children" would have been too smarmy and heavy-handed. The script stretches even Christmastime's more lenient credibility quotient. But Mare Winningham, in the Joan of Arc role, and Polly Holliday, who makes J.R. Ewing look like a saint, are letter perfect.

Audience cheers premiere showing of movie 'Gandhi'

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Actor Ben Kingsley drew a standing ovation at the world premiere of the movie "Gandhi" for his performance as Mohandas K. Gandhi, the hero of India's independence movement.

Besides cheering the British-Indian actor, many of the 1,500 viewers praised the $23 million movie, calling it "deeply moving."

"I would want them to be moved," said British producer-director Sir Richard Attenborough. "This is not a diatribe. I tried to bring him to life."

The audience in the Indian capital Tuesday night included President Zail Singh; Indian political, business and social leaders; Coretta King, widow of American civil rights leader Martin Luther King; and Kingsley.

Attenborough, who also got a warm reception, thanked everyone for "permitting me to attempt to tell something about the man who is the father of your nation."

Many Indians earlier had said no filmmaker, and particularly no Englishman, could do justice to Gandhi. Others objected to the Indian government putting up a third of the $23 million.

The premiere raised more than $105,000 in ticket sales and donations for the Gandhi Memorial Leprosy Foundation and UNICEF.

Mrs. King said her husband, whose non-violent campaign for black rights in America led to his assassination in April 1968, often said "he got his inspiration from Jesus and his tactics from Gandhi."

Along with Gandhi's campaigns of non-violence against British rule, the movie depicts the violence during his career, including the brutality against Indians in South Africa.

Queen Mother

LONDON (AP) — In her first public appearance since an operation to remove a fishbone from her throat, Queen Mother Elizabeth said she was still bothered by the effects of anesthesia.

The 82-year old mother of Queen Elizabeth, known affectionately to Britons as the "Queen Mum," appeared Tuesday at a fundraising event for the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

She choked on a fishbone during a dinner party last week. After several hours of coughing, she was taken to a London hospital for an operation to remove the object.

Her doctors said the effects of the anesthetic were similar to jet lag. Even so, an aide said she was "in splendid form."

"I am still suffering from jet lag," the queen mother said, appearing paler than usual. "That's the trouble with that sort of thing."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Joy Baker, wife of Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, is expected to be released this weekend from Georgetown University Hospital, where she had surgery for lung cancer.

Mrs. Baker is in satisfactory condition, according to a statement Tuesday from the Senate majority leader. She underwent surgery Nov. 23 for a malignant tumor.

In the operation, the lower right lobe of her lung was removed. Pathology tests indicated the cancer had not spread beyond that area. She is not expected to have to undergo any more treatment at this time, the announcement said.

NEW YORK (AP) — British actor Robert Coote, who won acclaim on Broadway more than two decades ago when he played the role of Col. Pickering in the musical "My Fair Lady," is dead at the age of 73.

Coote died in his sleep of a heart attack last Thursday at the New York Athletic Club, where he lived when he was in New York.

'Mouseburgers' advised in Brown's new book

By NANCY SHULINS

NEW YORK (AP) — The problem, dear girls, is statistical.

"The latest U.S. Census reveals that, between the ages of 35 and 39, there are 13 million women for every 10 million men. Bottom line: There are too many of us, too few of them..."

If you, too, are a "mouseburger," Mrs. Brown's buzz word for waifs everywhere who have more bravado than beauty, more ambition than affluence, more character than confidence, do not despair.

Instead, work hard. Exercise. Go easy on salt. Scrub. Moisturize. Condition. Tuck. Repair. Reduce. Augment.

Give him compliments. Give him gifts. Tell white lies. Feed his ego. And don't expect him to be perfect. That's your job.

"The question is, do you want a man in your life or don't you?" Mrs. Brown asks, her voice lapsing into the trademark italics that pepper her magazine. "If you do, we're talking about a precious commodity. I think men and women are totally equal — there are dodo men and there are dodo women. But we are not equal in numbers."

If we were, obviously, young women wouldn't have to do all this dieting and exercising, conditioning and repairing, bikini waxing and perfuming. All this *mouse*burgering.

And Mrs. Brown wouldn't have to do all this worrying over what her critics are likely to say about "Having It All."

"Some feminists will say there's too much emphasis on man-pleasing. Some women will say it's too manipulative, that I advocate using trickery and guile. And some people will say I have a double standard about married people who cheat."

Personally, Mrs. Brown prefers fidelity. She has been happily married for 23 years to David Brown, a successful movie producer. But she has nightmares about him dying, or her becoming incapacitated, or a thousand other things.

In fact, she has nightmares about a lot of things. "Residual anxiety," she whispers. "Anxiety never goes away. Not really. I never stop finding things to worry about."

Once, there was plenty to worry about for Helen Gurley, the poor-as-a-churchmouse daughter of a Little Rock, Ark., man killed in an accident when she was 10. As a teen-ager, she had terminal acne, a chest flat as a billiard table, and what she insists was "brain-damaged" hair.

She also had a financially dependent mother and a sister who contracted polio.

She parlayed her typing and shorthand skills into 17 secretarial jobs, which led to a series of advertising copywriting jobs, which led to who-knows-how-many affairs. All of that led to marriage at 37, her first book, "Sex and the Single Girl," and her job as editor-in-chief of Cosmo.

At 60, Mrs. Brown swathes herself in designer clothes, lunches at the exclusive "21" restaurant each Thursday, and lives in a luxurious penthouse on Central Park West.

She made the World Almanac's list of the 25 most influential women five years running, and she gets more invitations to more glamorous parties than anyone could possibly attend.

But she can't bring herself to read her own book for fear she'll find too many flaws; she was left off the latest World Almanac list, and she's so shy she hasn't been to a cocktail party in five years.

"First, it was, Will I ever get married? Then, Will I ever be able to buy two dresses at once?"

Now it's the book and the mixed reviews it is receiving. "Freud said the two biggest things in our lives are work and love. Well, that's what I write about, work and love. I do what I can, which is to give advice to young women. If the price of that is upsetting some people..."

The thought of upsetting some people gives her pause. She stares down at her toes, sighs a tiny sigh, and says, in a whisper, "I hate to do it."

Anxiety never goes away. Not really.

Big band leader now on God's bandstand

CHICAGO (AP) — Maggie Cavalo, most of them in their 60s and 70s, applauded Kay Kyser's trip back to the old days when he was the Ol' Professor from the College of Musical Knowledge. But now he's on God's bandstand.

"I saw a bumper sticker that said, 'God Grant Me Patience.' And I want it right NOW," he said to laughs and applause during his hour-long talk as one of the Christian Science church's accredited lecturers. He makes as many as 50 appearances a year around the country.

Kay Kyser

In Kyser's big band days, his trademark was coming on with singing song titles, usually by vocalists Harry Babbitt, Ginny Simms and even Isch Kabibble (Merwyn Bogue).

Now he comes on with "We are the children of God, and heirs to God. The kingdom of God is in me." And he proceeds on themes of "understanding our spiritual identity."

Kyser became one of the nation's wealthiest bandleaders, combining a good downbeat with down-home humor and entertained American troops all over the world in World War II. In 1945, he wanted to retire to "sit and spit and whittle," but sponsors of the network radio shows wouldn't let him out of his contract.

He finally hung up his academic cloak and mortarboard costume in 1951, retiring to Chapel Hill, N.C., to become a stay-at-home father to his three girls and "a serious student of the Bible and Christian Science."

"When I formed the band and got recognition, it worried me," Kyser told his audience Tuesday. "I felt shallow and misdirected. Here I was on a bandstand when relatives or family members held prominent and more meaningful positions such as in-law."

"It got so I resented the dancers. Why aren't they home reading a book or something?"

It brought laughs.

Accompanied by his wife of 38 years, "Gawgeous Georgia" Carroll, who had a brief singing stint with the band, Kyser still has a tuned ear.

Once he stopped in his talk. "Excuse me," he said. "Do you hear a little ring going on in the microphone? Let's have less ring, please."

Cleanliness wins

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Fifty food service establishments in Maine's largest city will soon be award-winners — not for their cuisine, but their cleanliness.

Portland's health inspection division plans to pass out "certificates of merit" to the cleanest 50 of the 560 city establishments that handle food.

FCC doesn't like call letters WSEX

WASHINGTON (AP) — Darrell Peters has decided to fight the Federal Communications Commission over its denial of his request to use the call sign WSEX-FM. And he's getting some unexpected support.

Peters is the president and majority stockholder of Darrell Peters Productions Inc., which acquired the license in September for WTCO-FM in Arlington Heights, Ill.

When Peters then asked to change the station's call letters to WSEX-FM, it took the FCC's staff just two days to turn him down on grounds the proposal was not in good taste.

That decision apparently raised a few eyebrows within the industry. Broadcasters have written letters to the editor of "Broadcasting" magazine suggesting the FCC's review of call-sign requests has been inconsistent.

Larry O'Neal, the operations manager of WJDQ-AM-FM in Meridian, Miss., wrote in the current issue: "I personally wouldn't want WSEX as my call letters, but in view of the sum of the others that have been approved by the FCC, I see absolutely nothing wrong with them."

Ranch to serve buffalo salami, hot dogs

WEST BLOOMFIELD, N.Y. (AP) — salami and hot dogs made of buffalo meat will be served this weekend to visitors at the Scott T. Ranch, which already provides buffalo steaks to exclusive restaurants.

The ranch, boasting 100 head of buffalo, sells steaks through a distributor to restaurants in New York City, Rochester and Rhode Island.

The venture into cheaper meat products like salami and hot dogs was made possible by an arrangement with a local butcher, according to Hulbert W. Tripp, a partner in the ranch.

Tripp said he and partner Oliver Scott hope the new products will soon be marketed more widely and joined by ground buffalo meat, buffalo stew, buffalo steaks and buffalo livers.

'Maidens' picking up pieces

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Many of the 25 Hiroshima Maidens just want to obliterate the memory of Aug. 6, 1945, the horrible years of pain, even their brief period of public notice when they came to the United States for plastic surgery on disfigured bodies.

"They don't want to relate their sad stories. They want to leave this behind," said Rev. Kiyoshi Tanimoto, co-developer of the Maidens project.

Along with magazine editor Norman Cousins, Tanimoto, a Japanese Christian who was schooled at Emory University in Atlanta, Ga., developed the joint American-Japanese effort to obtain for the victims desperately needed operations from the best U.S. surgeons at no cost.

Most of the Maidens were teen-agers or younger when the bomb dropped. They had eyes that could not be closed because of radiation wounds, faces horribly disfigured, burns that made every step excruciating.

Today, a roll call shows 18 living in their hometown of Hiroshima. Three are in the United States and one in Canada. Three are dead. Ten are married, nine are single and three are divorced.

Two went to Tokyo to study, but eventually returned home. Tanimoto suggests there was little straying because the women felt more comfortable among their own. "People don't stare as much in Hiroshima," the white-haired minister said. "The victims draw much more support from each other."

There are estimates of up to 120,000 living victims from the blast. The immediate death toll was estimated at 78,000, with another 24,000 dying in the two months following the blast.

Several ex-maidens are staunch workers for world peace, exceptions to the dominant desire to remain out of the limelight. The most active is Shigeko Sasemori, a conscripted 13-year-old member of a road-clearing battalion when the first A-bomb dropped in war exploded. Now a nurse's aide at Cedars Sinai Hospital in Los Angeles, Sasemori lectures, shows documentary films on atomic survivors and is translating into English a book she wrote in Japanese and published in Japan last spring.

"I tell my experiences. I talk heart to heart," said Sasemori, a 50-year-old divorcee with a 20-year-old son. "I survived because people loved me and cared about me."

Sasemori cannot give the exact number of operations she had in 1955, but knows it was more than 10. Last year, she testified at a Senate hearing on survivors in Washington, along with Hisako Tasaka Harris, who was her traveling companion in 1955 and is still a close friend.

Considered the most serious case at the time, Harris wore a mask over the lower part of her face. She had been working with Sasemori and about 600 others at the time of the blast. Only 150 of them survived. She now lives in Baltimore with her husband, a cab driver.

Shortly before returning home in 1966, Michiko Sako told an American reporter, "I was unable to get out and mingle with people before the operations, but now I do not mind at all. My outlook on life is brighter."

Ultrasound opening up minds

CHICAGO (AP) — High-pitched sound waves called ultrasound can take the guesswork — and some of the risk — out of brain and spinal cord surgery, say two University of Chicago researchers.

George Dohrmann, an associate professor of neurosurgery, and Jonathan Rubin, assistant professor of radiology, say that the technique outperforms computerized axial tomography, or CAT scans, which are more often used by neurosurgeons.

The said they have used ultrasound to diagnose and treat 300 patients over the last three years.

Ultrasound works the way underwater sonar locates submarines. Sound waves at a frequency far above human hearing are beamed through the body to bounce off dense tissues. The echo is converted to a moving picture on a TV screen that can reveal tumors, abscesses, lesions and cysts with surprising accuracy.

Ultrasound can be used to find the depth of a brain injury and make it easier to identify the contents and determine the treatment without breaking the dura — the protective layer between the skull and brain, they said.

"Most of the problems we operate for are not near the surface of the brain," Dohrmann told the annual meeting of the Radiological Society of North America.

CAT scans are obtained by coupling an X-ray machine with a computer. A CAT scan, while valuable, is performed before surgery and does not always provide enough information about how far a tumor is from the brain surface.

During surgery, ultrasound can help surgeons respond quickly to emergencies such as burst blood vessels. Before surgery, it can identify problems that did not show up with other diagnostic methods.

Ultrasound has increased surgeons' abilities to obtain biopsies of tumors and abscesses deep within the brain, the researchers said.

"For the first time, we've been able to drain abscesses at the very center of the brain — the area of great risk," Dohrmann said.

He said ultrasound has been used to find lesions so tiny that a CAT scan "only suggested something might be present."

Dohrmann said few other neurosurgeons are using ultrasound, and none to the extent to which he and Rubin have put it to use. The two have found it especially helpful in treating problems of the spinal cord, which is even more delicate than the brain.

In addition to its relatively low cost, ultrasound testing produces no known biological hazard. Ultrasound techniques also have been used to examine fetuses and heart patients.

But some experts, such as Dr. Keith Russell, president of the International Federation of Gynecology and Obstetrics, have urged that ultrasound be used only on high risk patients until more is known about its long term side effects.

AP Laserphoto

University of Chicago researchers believe ultrasound may make brain surgery easier in the future. At the Radiological Society of North America convention in Chicago this week, they explained how ultrasound allows "exploratory" brain surgery to be performed and gives surgeons pictures of what the brain looks like.

One drawback to ultrasound is its inability to travel through bone or air, Rubins said. So surgeons must open the skull before they look inside.

It adds up to new territory in the diagnosis of brain ailments — exploratory surgery.

Neurosurgeons have responded with "spectacular" enthusiasm to the findings, Rubins said.

Midland High senior top Century III leader

Shawn W. McCarter, 17, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Dale McCarter and a senior at Midland High School, has been named the top Century III Leader in a competition here, according to Jack Stone, MHS principal.

McCarter now is eligible to compete with 10 other winners from around the state for one of two $1,500 scholarships and an all-expense-paid trip to the national Century III Conference in Williamsburg, Va., March 4-7. The state finals will be Dec. 15 in Fort Worth. State winners will compete for the national winner's prize of an additional $10,000 scholarship.

The Century III Leaders program is designed to bring together and recognize student leaders who show both strong leadership abilities and an interest in the future of America. McCarter was judged on the basis of leadership skills, school and community involvement and a current events examination. He also wrote a short essay on a particular issue which challenges America in its third century. He has a 4.04 grade point average and plans to major in electrical engineering in college.

Runners-up in the competition at the high school were Randy Goodfellow and Suzanne Wiley.

Harley-Davidson says imports from Japan hurting business

WASHINGTON (AP) — The last U.S. motorcycle maker, Harley-Davidson, is asking the government for protection from Japanese competition which it says threatens to drive it out of business.

The company says it has laid off 40 percent of its work force because of losses it blames on Japanese competition.

Its plea to the U.S. International Trade Commission today came two days after William H. Brock, U.S. Trade Representative, joined in a pledge with 87 other countries in Geneva to overcome protection measures interfering with free international trade.

"We estimated that the Japanese have an unsold inventory equal to a two-year supply already warehoused and in dealer showrooms in the United States," Vaughn Beals, Harley's chairman, said in a press statement. "We know that the pressure to unload their excess inventory that is building up across the country means the real onslaught is yet to come."

Wolinsky very effective public interest lawyer

By K. Connie Kang
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Whether they like or dislike him, people who know Sidney Wolinsky agree on one thing — he is one of the most effective public interest lawyers in the nation.

In the 14 years since leaving a lucrative practice in Beverly Hills, where his clients included Marlon Brando and Groucho Marx, to represent the poor and disadvantaged of San Francisco, this wiry 46-year-old marathon runner has won numerous groundbreaking cases that have touched countless lives.

Wolinsky was the primary attorney in a landmark decision in which the state Supreme Court ruled that California's public school financing system based on property taxes was unconstitutional.

He was a key attorney in the lawsuit which blocked an urban renewal project until defendants promised to build 1,800 new units of low-cost housing for the elderly. It was the first time an urban renewal project was stopped because of the failure to provide housing for those being displaced.

AND HE was involved in securing a federal ruling that civil service tests for firefighters were racially discriminatory.

What makes Wolinsky special, say those who know his work, is the range of his legal skills. He is at ease trying a case before a jury in the courtroom as he is writing appellate briefs and arguing eloquently before the state Supreme Court, they say. And he is a fighter.

So widely known is Wolinsky's reputation that his legal advice is sought by people not only in the United States but from abroad as well. After spending last year setting up the first legal education clinic in Malaysia, he was asked to stop in a half-dozen Asian countries to lecture on his way home.

Wolinsky credits the year he spent in Asia with teaching him "a badly needed lesson in patience." When he first went there, he went into a "cultural shock" because of the slow pace, the emphasis on personal relationships in conducting business and the importance of working through "consensus," rather than "confrontation."

THESE DAYS, Wolinsky is one of the main lawyers for Disabled Persons International, an organization with headquarters in Singapore. He is also a lawyer for Amnesty International. In August, he went to Malaysia as a part of a human rights investigation team of seven lawyers from five countries to look into the human rights situation after the government threatened to hang 31 prisoners arrested under that nation's securities act.

If Wolinsky were practicing law in a private firm in Los Angeles today, he could be earning as much as $500,000 a year, one prominent public attorney ventured. Instead Wolinsky earns $50,000.

Though Wolinsky admits money is a "sore point" with him these days — he has three children — he wouldn't trade what he is doing for money. "I find myself in a wonderful position," he said, noting that no other type of law practice would allow him as much variety.

DURING A two-week period last month, Wolinsky won a case before the Hawaii Supreme Court which blocks any further construction of a $47 million development on Kauai, and a case involving the right of children in mobile home parks in California's Santa Clara County. And he acted as chief counsel-organizer for the disabled nationally, unveiling a 120-page report on the status of the disabled in America at a press conference in Washington.

For the last several years, Wolinsky has been representing Hawaiian leprosy patients who have been resisting forced move from Hale Mohalu Hospital on Oahu, which served as the only treatment center for victims of Hansen's disease until 1978.

A key argument in the case involves a relatively new legal and medical concept called "transfer trauma," a term coined by Wolinsky. There is evidence that the single transfer of a lifelong leprosy patient from one home to another can cause increased physical and mental deterioration and even death, Wolsinky says.

WOLINSKY grew up as the son of a grocer in Trenton, N.J., living in an apartment above the store where every member of the family worked, including his retarded brother. He won a scholarship to Princeton, where he was graduated cum laude in 1958, then another scholarship to Yale Law School, where he was graduated fifth in the class of 171 in 1961.

He was a clerk for an appellate justice in the nation's capital, worked briefly at a Washington law firm, and then left the East Coast for Beverly Hills.

Natural gas, nuke waste disposal concern Congress, state

By WILLIAM GARLAND
States News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal spending will dominate the brief lame-duck session of Congress, but it may also hold a smorgasbord of issues related to Texas. They range from energy to immigration, from military pay to highways and nuclear waste disposal.

Congress is expected also to approve a small federal reservation for the Texas Kickapoos, a straggling band of about 600 Indians who live along the Rio Grande near Eagle Pass.

A bill giving them federal status and allowing them the land already has passed the House and probably will pass the Senate soon, according to congressional aides.

Probably most important to Texas is the reform of immigration laws. The immigration bill, already passed by the Senate and pending in the House, would affect many thousands of Texas Hispanics as well as thousands of other Texas employers.

employer penalties and a program for temporarily hiring aliens, while the Reagan administration supports it. Hispanics would view it as a victory if the bill were ignored in the session, clearing the way for a new bill next year.

Also included in the bill are conditions for granting citizenship status to current illegal aliens and a limiting of judicial review for deportation of arrested aliens.

Other issues of importance to Texas include:

—A proposed overhaul of the natural gas contract system. Northeasterners are blaming current contract provisions as a major cause for rising costs for the fuel in their region.

As a result, the Northeast-Midwest Coalition plans to introduce a bill Thursday that would force renegotiation of so-called "take-or-pay" provisions that lock pipelines into buying given amounts of gas at prices higher than the market-clearing level.

"For the producer, what the take-or-pay does is guarantee a certain amount of cash flow he has for his drilling," said Mike Waters with the Natural Gas Supply Association. "If that's interrupted, that interrupts him financially," he added.

Congress will not confront the highly-charged issue of natural gas decontrol, which probably will come up in the next session.

—A proposed 5-cent-a-gallon increase in the federal gasoline tax that would generate some $5.5 billion in federal revenues.

Although approximately $250 million out of that tax would go to the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation for maintenance of highways, it would be more profitable for Texas to add to the state gasoline tax, according to Dan Ward, director of public affairs with the Texas Good Roads Association.

He said the Texas association hoped that the federal tax increase would not blunt the drive for an increase in the state tax to keep Texas highways in good repair. A similar tax imposed by the state would bring almost double the amount of funding into the state highway department, he said.

The association has projected that Texas will need to triple its expenditures on highway maintenance over the next 20 years to keep up with growing amounts of traffic.

—A proposal to set guidelines for the storage of nuclear waste, possibly in the Texas Panhandle. Criteria are being set in the House bill for the protection of water where the waste is eventually stored and for regulating the transportation of waste to the disposal site.

From Our Washington Bureau

The House passed an amendment to the bill Monday that would give authority to that body to overrule a state's veto of selection of a site for nuclear waste storage.

Under consideration for the storage site are salt dome structures near the cities of Hereford and Tulia. A spokesman for the Texas State Office of State-Federal Relations said the state government would support storage of the waste in Texas so long as it was done responsibly. Texas plans to increase the amount of nuclear power in the state and storage of the waste will be a continuing necessity, he said.

—A House-passed provision to raise the cap on military pay raises for all personnel from 4 to 8 percent. The House already passed the bill, and an aide to Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, said the Senate would likely take up its version of the bill, which only allows increased bonuses and special payments to personnel.

A conference committee would reconcile differences in the bill if the Senate passes it.

Ambulance attendants move 71-year-old Carry Haynes from a line of people waiting to receive surplus federal food in Beaumont. The food was being distributed Tuesday by Programs for Human Services. Several hundred elderly and unemployed people waited for hours in intermittent rain for the free food.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, calm in the midst of an explosive national debate, is considering whether changes are needed in its landmark 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

For more than three hours Tuesday, the justices of the nation's highest court coolly debated the question and heard arguments on the politically and emotionally charged issue.

Q: Who's imposing what regulations?

A: The key case stems from an ordinance Akron's city council tried unsuccessfully to enforce four years ago. It would require that all abortions on women more than three months pregnant be performed in a hospital.

The ordinance also would require all girls under age 15 to have the consent of one parent or a judge before obtaining an abortion. A 24-hour waiting period for all women requesting an abortion would be imposed and doctors would be required to tell patients seeking abortions that the fetus is a "human life."

Q: What about the regulations in the Missouri and Virginia cases?

A: The court's argument sessions Tuesday focused primarily on similar mandatory-hospitalization requirements imposed by laws in those states.

Missouri law also requires parental or judicial consent before girls under 18 years of age can obtain an abortion. It requires that two doctors be present when any abortion is performed on a fetus that may be able to survive outside the womb.

Q: What effect would all these regulations have on the availability of abortions?

A: Most likely, the Supreme Court's decision about the validity of mandatory hospitalization will have little impact on the vast majority of the more than 1 million women who get abortions in the United States each year.

More than 95 percent of adult women who obtain abortions do so early in their pregnancies and would not be affected by the mandatory-hospitalization requirements.

There's no way of telling how many women would be deterred from having abortions by the other regulations. The various regulations also could have a significant practical impact on the number of young girls who seek legal abortions.

Q: Is there any possibility that the Supreme Court will use these cases to overturn its 1973 ruling — and allow abortion to be outlawed again?

Justice Harry A. Blackmun, author of the court's 1973 decision, asked government lawyer Rex Lee whether the Reagan administration, which favors less court control of abortion, is asking the court to overturn the ruling. Lee said, "No."

Of course, whatever guidelines the court issues for Virginia, Missouri and Akron will apply nationwide.

Q: What reason did the Supreme Court have to legalize abortion in the first place? Isn't that a determination for state legislatures?

A: The court's overturning of such laws passed by state legislatures was based on its decision that a woman had a constitutional right to control her body.

Q: If that's so, how can any state or local community regulate abortions.

A: In the 1973 decision, the court said that governments can in no way interfere with a woman's decision to have an abortion during the first three months of her pregnancy. But, the court said, government regulation aimed at protecting a woman's health during the pregnancy's second trimester and regulation aimed at protecting fetal life in the final trimester is allowed.

Groups question subcompacts' safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drivers and passengers involved in accidents in subcompact cars are twice as likely to die or be injured as occupants of large cars, an insurance industry spokesman says.

Domestically produced small cars, on the average, have a lower death and injury rate than similar cars manufactured in Japan, he said.

Dr. William Haddon Jr., president of the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, told two House subcommittees Tuesday that the Transportation Department has predicted that the annual number of motor vehicle deaths could increase from the current 50,000 to 70,000 in the 1990s, "and the big part of this increase would result from the increasing number of small cars."

The House subcommittees on transportation, aviation and materials and investigations and oversight of the Science and Technology Committee conducted the hearing on small car safety with emphasis on the crashworthiness of subcompact automobiles.

The General Accounting Office — the congressional auditors — testified that in 1979 cars weighing less than 3,500 pounds represented only 37 percent of the passenger cars in operation, but by 1990 they are estimated to represent 64 percent of the passenger car fleet.

BLM officials say starving horses from East Texas ranch all found

PITTSBURG, Texas (AP) — Investigators looking for malnourished horses "adopted" by an East Texan under a federal program designed to save wild mustangs from starvation say it appears all of the stricken animals have been found.

Another horse died Tuesday, the 38th taken from an overgrazed pasture three miles east of here, said rancher Jerry Owens of Brownsboro, who is helping to take care of the animals.

Last week, officials discovered the remains of about 30 dead horses and more than 150 other horses that appeared to be starving. A lost deer hunter reported finding the carcasses.

Federal officials from Sante Fe, N.M., flew to Dallas Tuesday to discuss with the U.S. Attorney there possible federal charges against ranch owner Joe Corbett. Bureau of Land Management investigator John Gumert said.

The Wild Horses Act carries a maximum penalty of a $10,000 fine and 10 years' imprisonment.

Corbett obtained the wild horses last December under a BLM "Adopt-a-Horse" program to reduce the population of wild horses and burros on federal lands. Reports that many of the horses were starving brought about the program.

Gumert said officials were sorting the herd at a ranch near Tyler to determine which of the horses are federally owned and which were Corbett's personal property. Colts born to federally owned horses would belong to Corbett, he said.

Camp County Attorney Paul Mayben said Monday he plans to dismiss a general complaint filed last week against Corbett and replace it with multiple charges based upon Texas' statute on cruelty to animals.

The state charge carries a maximum $2,000 fine and a year in jail.

"It's the worst one I've ever seen," said John Whitley, a BLM official based in New Mexico. "I've been with the wild horse program for 12 years now and this was the worst instance."

Whitley said recent federal budget cuts hampered the BLM's effectiveness at policing programs in Texas.

"They took a lot of money out of the wild horse program and when they reduced the budget they pulled me back into New Mexico," Whitley said. "So I don't travel to Texas anymore unless it's to check on violations."

Whitley said he expected the case to trigger some changes in the "Adopt-a-Horse" program.

Under the "Adopt-a-Horse" program, a person can adopt a maximum of four horses, but Corbett obtained power of attorney to acquire additional horses for 42 people living in Texas and Oklahoma.

The Dallas Times Herald reported that many low-income East Texas residents were promised a free horse if they gave Corbett their power of attorney.

Is that racket a rocket? A bomb? No, it's just the senator's Dodge

By PHILLIP SWANN
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Haaarrugh! Haaarrugh! That noise is unmistakable. It must be...it is...the Green Bomb!

Tower's neighbors here in exclusive Georgetown probably would prefer the dragon. They have complained to the police that the car is driving them batty.

"There would have to be safety problems (for the police to act)," said the spokesman, who declined to be named. "A loud muffler and some smoke won't do it."

But a spokesman for the city's "noise pollution" office says that his department would require Tower to bring his car in for a noise test if a neighbor registered a formal complaint.

"I would write the senator a letter. No, I would get my boss to write him. I wouldn't write a senator," said Herb Wood, deputy chief of the city's noise pollution office.

Tower, who calls the car "my green bullet" (his aides claim the "green bomb" is a more accurate description), says he has no plans to repair the automobile. It could use a new muffler (it's the original), an engine, a paint job, a car wash and a little remodeling on the left side.

"We consider it a miracle that we keep it running," says Terry Ware, a Tower press assistant. "He loves it."

The lime-colored car, which could be called one man's revenge against the Clean Air Act, is covered with bird droppings. The speedometer reads 68,000 miles. It looks closer to 680,000. A battered Tower campaign sticker is on the bumper. Dents line the left side and steel chrome is peeling off the door on the driver's side.

"We baby it," says Ware. "We give it the kid glove treatment." Vic Sherlock, a Tower aide who also serves as the senator's occasional driver, was asked to identify the car's main defect.

"I don't think that could be scientifically proven," Sherlock said.

The Reporter-Telegram's Washington Bureau asked Tower's office for his address to interview his neighbors. The senator's aides declined, but they did provide some help:

"If you want to find out where he lives, go to Georgetown and listen. Just listen," said Ware.

The Best Thing About Trinity Place Is The Neighborhood.

Where you live is an extension of your personality, your tastes and values. Living at Trinity Place is an expression of a special way of life, not just for everyone. Trinity Place was built for the contemporary lifestyle of the 80's.

Tucked away in Midland's newest residential subdivisions, Trinity Place is off the beaten path and insulated from highway noise and the hemmed-in feeling of a commercial neighborhood. Yet, Trinity Place is within

- ☐ 10 minutes of downtown Midland
- ☐ 5 minutes of Midland College
