Hazardous smoke

Derailed tank cars containing liquid natural gas and vinyl chloride continue burning today as another explosion sends clouds of toxic smoke and flaming debris over Livingston, La. The town has been evacuated, but neighboring communities are still threatened by the escaping fumes.

Cuthbert Street residents fight council's U-turn

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Residents along Cuthbert Street charged that a "public official is using his position for his private business" after the City Council Tuesday afternoon voted to switch the traffic on Cuthbert between Ward and Garfield from westbound to eastbound.

But after the public hearing on the matter had ended about 5 p.m. with the vote to switch, Councilman Tom Sloan continued his lobbying all evening and into executive sessions to change it to two-way traffic on Cuthbert. He succeeded by 8 p.m., despite earlier objections from city staff members that it wouldn't work.

The council took up the matter for reconsideration — three hours after the Cuthbert Street residents had left — and ordered the staff to draw up an ordinance that would make that section of Cuthbert two-way with some limitations.

While the residents had begged that the street be left the way it was, they specifically requested that it not be put back to two-way. Under Sloan's plan, it will be two-way with a stop sign at Lanham and a different type of traffic signal at Garfield. In addition, no left turns from Cuthbert onto Garfield will be allowed.

COUNCILMAN JESSE HATFIELD owns Stadium Sports Center at 2040 W. Cuthbert Ave., which is on a segment that sees two-way traffic. Under Sloan's plan, traffic can come off Andrews Highway and down Cuthbert, straight past Hatfield's store.

In November 1979 the council had voted to change that part of Cuthbert to one-way westbound to alleviate numerous traffic problems. Residents had complained about cars crashing into their houses, including City Attorney Joe Nuessle who said it happened to his house on two occasions. At that meeting, he had pleaded with the council "to do something now about the situation." Other complaints centered on too much traffic, the street being too narrow to be two-way and cars hitting parked vehicles.

Hatfield contended during the meeting in City Hall Council Chambers that since the council had changed the Cuthbert segment to one-way going west he had lost a lot of business.

"I was the one who made the original motion" that westbound traffic be changed to eastbound so customers on the west side of Midland would have an easy access to his store.

His request for the change was prompted by the council's decision to extend one-way traffic on Louisiana and Michigan out to Andrews Highway. "People would have to go down the Andrews Highway to Michigan and up. It's going to hurt the business," Hatfield said.

FRED BAKER, director of public works, noted that changing the direction of traffic on Cuthbert would cause a safety problem. Sloan, who had pushed consistently throughout the public hearing for a reversal to two-way traffic, asked if the traffic volume and speed had increased on Cuthbert since the change to one-way.

Baker replied that the overall speed is somewhat higher "as it is all over Midland." But the one-way street had stopped the high speeds of 74 mph, which once had been clocked on Cuthbert when that segment was two-way, he added.

Barbara Smith, 2312 W. Cuthbert Ave., in representing several of the residents, said Cuthbert "is safer since it's been one-way. For the people here, I'll voice objections to changing it. If the traffic comes from west to east, we'll get trash from the fast food places," which they had experienced when it was two-way.

She also pointed out that Fire Station No. 5 at Golf Course and Garfield uses Cuthbert to make fire runs out to the commercial areas, such as Albertsons and Park Plaza. By changing the one-way designation, fire trucks would have to go down Golf Course and Whitney to reach those areas.

"And we do not want it two-way under any circumstances," she added.

Mayor G. Thane Akins acknowledged that the different route for fire trucks "would take a little longer."

WADE WHITELEY, 2211 W. Golf Course Road, asked how people would get into the shopping center from the east side of town. "You have a good

Tanker car explosions continue

LIVINGSTON, La. (AP) — A new explosion rocked this empty town early today, sending flaming debris from derailed tanker cars "all over the place," and authorities feared toxic smoke would drift to a nearby community where some of the 3,000 evacuees had taken refuge.

No one was seriously hurt in today's blast or in the explosion that took place when 42 cars of an Illinois Central-Gulf freight train derailed before dawn Tuesday.

The derailment caused a thunderous explosion that sent flames leaping from one chemical tank car to another all day long, and spewed toxic smoke.

"We had another explosion this morning, and we assume it was one of the vinyl chloride tank cars," State Police Sgt. Stephen Campbell said early today. "It was nothing we weren't expecting, but it blew pieces of the tank car all over the place when it exploded...and it lighted up the sky briefly."

On Tuesday night, Lt. Gov. Bobby Freeman put the Louisiana National Guard on alert and sent more state police in to this southeastern Louisiana town to arrest any looters. Gov. Dave Treen cut short a Florida vacation to return today.

The American Red Cross set up evacuation shelters at Walker and Holden high schools, about six miles from Livingston. About 96 people spent the night at both, officials said. Many displaced people moved in with relatives or friends.

Hours after Tuesday's blast, all 2,000 Livingston residents fled.

The situation worsened at mid-afternoon, when a tanker containing tetraethyl lead shot a fireball into the sky, spreading fumes over a wide area and driving flames closer to seven overturned tankers containing highly poisonous vinyl chloride.

The explosion produced thick, dark smoke that state Department of Natural Resources officials said contained highly concentrated amounts of poison gas. More evacuations were ordered — including emergency workers — bringing the total to more than 3,000 people.

"We have more fire now than at any time during the day," Lt. Ronnie Jones, a state police spokesman, said Tuesday night. "We have a very vigorous burning going on in there now and we are very concerned about possible explosions from the vinyl chloride."

Jones feared that heavy fog might prevent the fumes from rising and dissipating or that winds might turn and push toxic fumes about five miles westward to Walker, which was put on alert.

An added danger, chemical experts said, was that if the vinyl chloride heat up but did not catch fire, it could produce phosgene, a deadly poison gas used during World War I.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Plans for student housing next to the busiest runway at Midland Air Park were given the go-ahead by the Midland City Council on Tuesday despite objections by the aviation director to locate housing that close to the airport.

During a regular session in City Hall Council Chambers, the council also heard about a rejected proposal from the Glasscock County Underground Water District, authorized final payment to the contractor for Ward and Garfield bridges, changed the lease for the Soil Conservation District and approved the air space zoning around Midland Regional Airport.

A light plane taking off from Air Park Friday afternoon hit the Warwick Apartments — directly west of Air Park — and crashed, igniting a fire in the building which gutted the structure. But the council's primary concern Tuesday was the noise factor affecting students in the proposed housing.

Maurice Bullock, attorney for Midland College, explained to the council the school needed its specific use permit changed to allow buiding dorms that would house about 40 junior college students, primarily athletes.

DR. JESS Parrish, MC president, said that problems of finding housing in the community, particularly affordable housing, for college students had prompted the board of trustees to approve the plan for on-campus housing.

However, City Manager Jim Brown pointed out that this housing would be adjacent to the "most active runway at Air Park."

"I don't feel there will be any noise problem," responded Dr. Parrish. "It's no closer than our closest classroom."

Col. Wilson Banks, aviation director, said he wanted to know the distance from the runway first, but that he would take the same stand he's always taken in the past about housing near the airport and "that is to oppose it. It's close to the runway that's used 80 to 90 percent of the time. I'd like to see it on the back side of the college and not that close to the airport."

After Dr. Parrish assured the council the structure would be constructed in such a manner as to prohibit noise problems, the change in the permit was approved. This should enable the contractor to construct the buildings by January.

THE GLASSCOCK County Underground Water District rejected the city's proposal for taking part of Midland's effluent for irrigation purposes and a pay-back system on $2.3 million to put in the necessary equipment. The city, meanwhile, is waiting on a verdict from the Texas Water Commission on its permit application to pump the effluent to land 15 miles southeast of Midland where is will be kept in holding ponds and used for irrigation.

A penalty of $100 a day for 189 days was assessed the contractor who built the Ward Street and Garfield Street bridges when the council approved the final payment. Max Richardson, an engineer who checked out the project, noted there were 189 days which couldn't be attributed to utility line problems or change orders. The project originally was scheduled to require 300 days, but there were 639 involved. Of that, 150 resulted from the council's change orders or trying to move utility lines, he said.

Mayor G. Thane Akins remarked that

Reagan says unemployment could reach 10 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, conceding unemployment soon could hit 10 percent, is blaming two decades of Democratic policies for the economy's lingering woes.

But in a sharp retort by the nation's ranking Democrat, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., insists that Reagan "cannot pass the buck" for the failure of Reaganomics.

The president, refusing to hold his own policies responsible for the long recession, said at a nationally televised news conference Tuesday night that, "We're heading toward a good recovery." But he also acknowledged the economy appeared to have weakened further last month and cautioned, "We still have a long way to go."

"We think August has been kind of in the doldrums and it may show a dip," Reagan said of economic statistics due out later this week. "But that'll be a glitch," he said, contending that most signs point to an imminent recovery that he has been forecasting since early this year.

O'Neill read the signs differently. "The failure of Reaganomics is an American tragedy," the Massachusetts congressman charged. "Last year, President Reagan predicted a 'new era' of prosperity. Tonight he predicted 10 percent unemployment."

The Labor Department is to release new jobless figures Oct. 8 in what will be the last employment report before the November congressional elections. Most economists are predicting at least 10 percent unemployment, marking the first double-digit jobless rate since the tail-end of the Great Depression in 1940.

Tuesday night's political exchange was a preview of the fight over economic policy that the Republicans and Democrats will be waging between now and Election Day.

With a recovery now almost certain to arrive too late for the elections, Democrats will try to hold Reagan and fellow Republicans responsible for worsening unemployment and a severe economic slump that refuses to end.

Accident not 'flighty' matter to controller (or pigeon)

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A pigeon which survived an apparent swipe of a propeller blade has ended up permanently grounded, caged and loved by an air controller who took the winged bird to home and heart.

The slate-blue pigeon became the center of attention a week ago today when a taxiing pilot radioed the control tower at Midland Regional Airport: "'Hey, you've got an injured pigeon out here, and he's gone through a propeller,'" recalled Pat Osborn, an air controller-pilot who ultimately became the bird's keeper. "'Get somebody out here to put him out of his misery,'" the pilot radioed.

The bird was bleeding at the right wing on Runway 100.

Promptly, Darrell Adams, airport manager, and Jeff Rawls, airport maintenance supervisor, barrelled out to the threshold of the approach end of the northwest runway, hopped out and snatched the crippled bird.

"He got chewed up," said Adams. "Looked like he just got mixed up in the wrong air traffic."

Seminole residents injured as tornadoes sweep area

SEMINOLE — Two persons remained hospitalized today after sustaining injuries during a series of strikes by as many as four tornadoes in Gaines County Tuesday night.

Randy Rangel, 23, and Esther Martinez Garza, 34, are listed in good condition in Seminole Memorial Hospital after suffering lacerations during the out-of-season tornadoes which plagued rural areas of the county. Five other persons were treated for minor injuries at the hospital's emergency room.

The five strikes by tornadoes occurred within a nine-minute span, 9:56 p.m.-10:05 p.m., with one situated six miles north of Seminole and the remainder one-half mile to five miles east of the city.

"Two of (the strikes) were possible from the same one," a Midland Department of Public Safety spokesman said this morning. "It looks like there may have been four different tornadoes."

Four to five mobile homes were either damaged or destroyed, as well as barns, small warehouse-type buildings, water sheds and power lines, said the spokesman.

No monetary estimate of damage was immediately available.

Mount St. Helens' Truman to be remembered in stone

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A local stonecutter has nearly completed a memorial to Harry Truman, the defiant old man who refused to leave Mount St. Helens when it erupted more than two years ago.

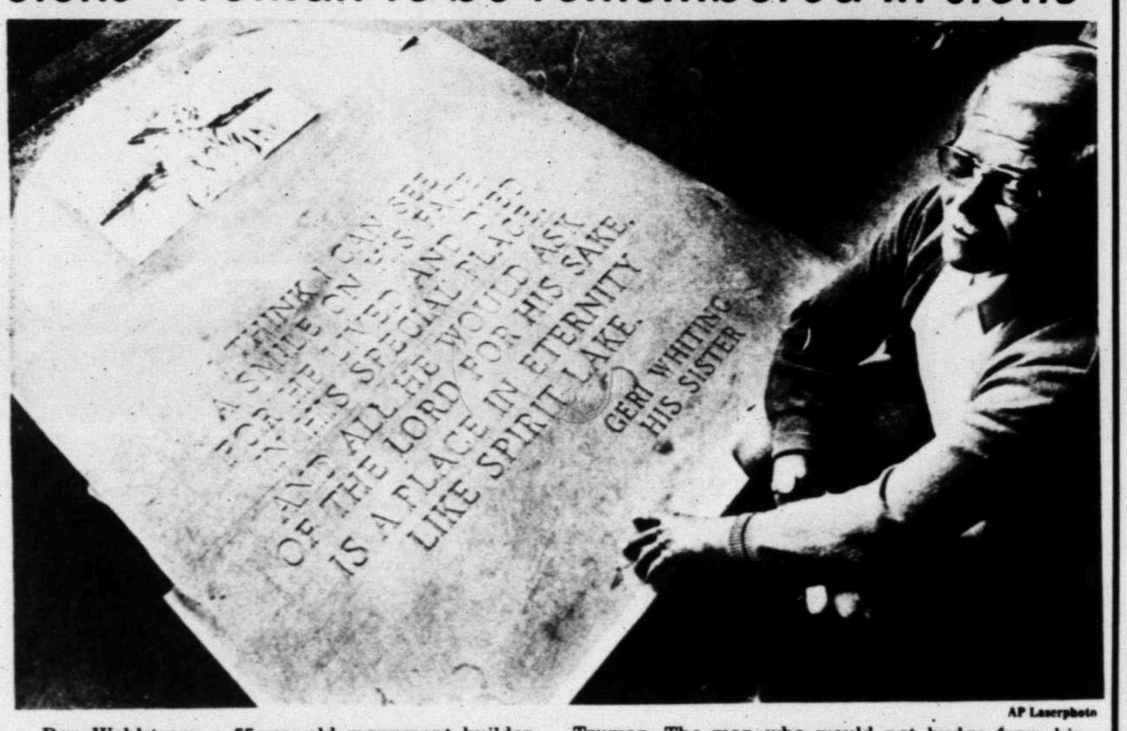

The 1,800-pound monument, commissioned by Truman's sister, Geri Whiting, lies nearly finished in Don Wahlstrom's shop here. All it lacks is a likeness of Truman, Spirit Lake and the volcano to be carved on the shiny marble surface.

Originally the memorial was to be erected at Spirit Lake, where Truman's remains and beloved lodge are buried under tons of volcanic ash, Wahlstrom said. Truman, who refused to leave the lodge, is one of 59 people left dead or missing by the enormous eruption on May 18, 1980.

"We were going to fly it in by helicopter, but the government wouldn't let us," the 55-year-old stonecutter said.

The six-foot, upright monument bears the inscription:

"I think I can see
A smile on his face,
For he lived and died
In his special place;
And all he would ask
Of the Lord for his sake,
Is a place in eternity
Like Spirit Lake."

Don Wahlstrom, a 55-year-old monument builder from Tacoma, Wash., faces another monumental task as he crafts an 1,800-pound grave stone for Harry Truman: The man who would not budge from his beloved Spirit Lake Lodge and was killed when Mount St. Helens erupted on May 18, 1980.

Schmidt will not give up without fight

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Though Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's political opponents are united to oust him in a parliamentary vote, he is not expected to give up the title he has held for eight years without a fight.

Schmidt called what may be his last Cabinet meeting today after his conservative and liberal foes decided to push for a no-confidence vote Friday in the Bundestag, or lower house of Parliament.

The liberal Free Democrats had been partners of Schmidt's Social Democrats for 13 years, but that ended Sept. 17 when four Free Democrat deputies resigned over a long-running economic feud.

If Schmidt's opponents succeed, conservative Christian Democrat leader Helmut Kohl will be the next chancellor and head of West Germany's first center-right government since 1966.

By law, the Parliament decides in a single vote whether it has confidence in Schmidt and if not, his replacement automatically will be elected. That would end Schmidt's 10-year term two years early, hough polls show he is West Germany's most popular politician.

On Tuesday, Kohl won crucial backing at a tense nine-hour caucus meeting, where Free Democrat parliamentary deputies voted 34 to 18 for a new coalition with the conservatives and a vote of no-confidence to elect Kohl chancellor.

The liberal support seemed likely to give Kohl enough votes to win. The 52-year-old conservative leader won unanimous endorsement from the 226 deputies in his own Christian Democratic Union and its sister party, the Bavarian Christian Social Union. With the liberal votes, this would be enough to give him a 249 majority in the 497-seat Bundestag.

Schmidt had no immediate comment on the Tuesday developments, but government sources said he planned a major speech to Parliament just before the vote in a last bid to win over deputies and foil Kohl's plans.

Since the government crisis erupted, Schmidt repeatedly has called for new national elections to give any new government a clear mandate for the economic reforms conservatives and liberals say are needed.

Schmidt won apparent backing from 4 million voters in the state of Hesse on Sunday. His party was expected to suffer broad defeat, but instead lost only one seat in the state parliament.

Despite their setback Sunday, Kohl and Free Democrat leader Hans-Dietrich Genscher forged ahead with a new alliance and got the backing they needed from their deputies.

Genscher, foreign minister and vice chancellor under Schmidt until Sept. 17, has been criticized by some Free Democrats and many West Germans for openly flirting with the conservative opposition for more than a year before resigning.

But Free Democrat deputies were also under pressure to back Genscher's alliance with Kohl to avoid immediate national elections.

Hance won't be pushed into amendment OK

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Lewis Uhler, who heads up the National Tax Limitation Committee, has been putting pressure on various Texas congressmen, including Kent Hance of Lubbock, to sign a discharge petition that would bring a balanced budget amendment before the floor of the House for a vote.

But a spokesman in Hance's office said Tuesday that the congressman from the 19th District isn't wavering in his refusal to sign the petition.

Uhler explained that since the Senate passed the measure on Aug. 4, "we've been doing battle with the House ever since. They've continued to bottle it up."

Known under the label of HJ Res 350, the bill has been stuck in the House Judiciary Committee, chaired by Peter Rodino of New Jersey, for several months. Meanwhile, Hance has co-sponsored a different balanced budget bill. And that, too, is stuck in the Judiciary Committee, according to Miller Bonner, Hance's press secretary.

With over 200 signatures on the discharge petition, and 218 needed to get the amendment out of committee, Uhler said his group has targeted Hance, Jack Hightower, Bill Patman, J.J. Pickle and Charles Wilson. "Their voting records show they exercise independence and look to what their constituency wants," said Uhler, who contended that polls show 75 percent of the voters want a balanced budget amendment.

The petition must be signed within the next few days since Congress is planning to adjourn soon. "We want to get a vote on this before election day," Uhler said. "We must get at the process of adopting our budget at the earliest possible time."

Uhler and his group have talked with Hance, and "he said our amendment is sound. And there's no chance his measure will be heard anytime in the near future. We must get at the process of adopting this amendment," he added.

In August, Hance had argued that HJ Res 350 has too many loopholes. Uhler countered that some people say it's too rigid and others say it's too loose. "I feel we've found the proper middle ground."

This amendment, argued Uhler, would be the supreme law of the land and both the Congress and the president would assure that outlays don't exceed revenues. "It would force a re-arrangement in the way they've done business. They will have to address some of these programs and have to set up a reserve fund.

Bonner, however, reported that Hance isn't thinking of changing his mind and putting his signature to the discharge petition. He is opposed to the discharge petition because once the amendment is on the floor it can't be changed. It must be voted on in its current state, he explained.

As it now reads, HJ Res 350 "wouldn't serve the purpose it was designed for," said the press secretary, admitting that Hance's version doesn't stand a good chance of getting out to the House floor before Congress adjourns.

Bonner explained that Hance's version incorporates the language of the Constitution "and it will close the loopholes." It also calls for a three-fifths "recorded" vote before Congress can raise taxes or spend more money.

"You don't want a balanced budget amendment that causes more problems than the budgetary processes we have today," Bonner said.

Hance's resolution sets a limit on borrowing money. "You have to be careful you don't raise taxes to balance that budget."

HJ Res 350 doesn't speak to that tax increase limit, nor does it define national income, the press secretary said in pointing out deficiencies of the amendment.

Uhler argued, though, that the amendment would control the growth rate of taxes and spending without focusing on any specific tax. "That's left up to Congress."

Adding that telephone calls and letters indicate constituents want a balanced budget amendment, Bonner added, "but we want it done right."

Uhler said if the amendment is passed by this Congress it should take little more than a year to get ratified by enough states to put it into law. It would become effective in fiscal year 1986, which means Oct. 1, 1985. He admitted there is nothing stopping Congress and the president from coming up with a balanced budget before then, "but it takes time to whittle down those deficits."

Judge threatens to lock New Jersey teachers inside schools

By The Associated Press

Teachers went on strike in a Michigan public school system, students returned to class in an Illinois district and a judge threatened to hold Teaneck, N.J., teachers in custody in a school building if they violated his back-to-work order.

Nationwide, about 286,000 students stayed out of class as September neared its end. About 200,000 of them were in Detroit and the rest were in smaller districts in Pennsylvania, Michigan, New Jersey and Illinois.

In New Jersey, a judge planned to meet today with 14 negotiators for 419 striking teachers and 170 secretaries and aides in Teaneck.

The striking teachers promised mass picketing today in protest of Superior Court Judge Sherwin D. Lester's order that they be held in a school building if they continue to defy his back-to-work order, said union spokesman Vince Giordano.

Talks between negotiators for the school board and the striking employees broke off Tuesday without a settlement. The board's latest offer would raise salaries by 16.5 percent over two years. The union seeks 19.5 percent.

Lester threatened Tuesday to fine strikers unless they return to work. Last week, he fined 14 union negotiators for ignoring his order to end the strike, which began Sept. 17 and affects 5,200 students. Schools have stayed open.

Lester ordered the Bergen County sheriff and the Teaneck police chief to confine strikers in schools from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. on school days.

Elsewhere in New Jersey, the Waldwick Education Association approved a contract agreement reached Tuesday, ending a week-long strike by 127 teachers. The district's 1,750 students had been taught by substitutes. The one-year pact calls for a 9 percent pay raise.

In Detroit, school board member Gerald O'Neill proposed at a board meeting Tuesday night that the teachers be dismissed if they don't return to class by next week. The proposal died with no support from his fellow board members.

"I think everybody's getting fed up with this," he said of the strike.

A 26-year-old Midlander who cried mistaken identity as a defense has been convicted of possessing a $3,220.30 forged check and trying to cash it at the drive-in window of a Midland bank last Feb. 25.

For that, the jury in 142nd State District Court gave the defendant, Wesley Gwyn Braggs, a six-year prison sentence in the Texas Department of Corrections and fined him $1,000.

"He claimed it wasn't he," prosecutor Jack Chappell said of Braggs, who has a another forgery case pending against him, though two others have been dismissed, and who only a year ago was released from probation after serving a three-year probated term for possession of marijuana in 1978.

A man who was identified as Braggs was accused of trying to cash the check on the business account of oil operator W.B. Robbins III, but drove off from The Midland National Bank drive-in slot as the teller was checking the signature card and verifying the check with Robbins.

Robbins had testified that about 20 of his checks were missing from his office in The Midland National Bank Tower, Chappell said.

But Braggs, the prosecutor said, had insisted that a construction worker who resembles him had worked on the same floor from which the checks were taken. Braggs denied that he had taken the checks, forged Robbins' name, or tried to cash the $3,220.30 check, which, according to a notation on the check, was a payment for 2,000 feet of five-eighths-inch oilfield rods.

Before the trial had started in Judge Pat Baskin's court, Chappell noted that he had offered the defendant a six-year prison term in exchange for a guilty plea in a plea-bargaining arrangement but Braggs declined the offer.

Defending Braggs was Midland attorney Mike Williams.

TCTA clarifies endorsement policy

The Texas Classroom Teachers Association has announced that although several individual members and officers have publicly endorsed specific candidates, these endorsements do not represent the political opinion of the organization as a whole.

According to a news release issued by TCTA, during the past few months, numerous misleading reports have appeared in the Texas news media which have misrepresented the position of the TCTA with regard to the various races. While these reports may not have been intentionally misleading, they have helped to create confusion about TCTA among the teachers of Texas, the release stated.

"Therefore, we would like to clear the air and reiterate once again that TCTA does not endorse candidates for public office. This is a matter of TCTA policy and applies to all political races. It is TCTA's position that our members, as professionals, are capable of making their own choices in political races," the news release states.

In a letter to Classroom Teachers Association of Midland President Ron Bolin, Betty Pyle, state president, wrote, "As educators we seek to teach our students that a democratic society will survive only as long as we have informed and active participants in the social and political processes. And, because TCTA believes so strongly in this principle, we encourage all members to become involved as individuals."

Congress receives appropriations bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional negotiators are returning to the House and Senate a multibillion-dollar appropriation for housing and other federal programs that could be the first 1983 budget bill accepted by President Reagan.

But the bill, totaling more than $46 billion, defers action on federal housing assistance, for which Reagan has recommended no money during the next year.

The joint House-Senate committee working on the compromise agreed to delay any action on housing assistance until after Congress considers proposals for major changes in that program.

House and Senate leaders say the measure now has the president's support. They hope to get final congressional approval before Congress adjourns this week with the bill going to the House possibly as early as today.

The bill will finance 1983 operations of the Housing and Urban Development Department, EPA, the Veterans Administration and 15 other independent federal agencies.

Although about $5 billion more than Reagan recommended for those programs early this year, the compromise proposal is still some $10 billion less than allocated for those agencies in the congressionally approved budget blueprint Reagan embraced this summer.

In another step to ease passage of the bill, the negotiating committee agreed to strip from it a controversial plan that would effectively repeal a mandatory vehicle emission inspection and maintenance program for states.

Rain prediction off the mark

The weathermen missed the boat with the promise of rain droplets on the Midland area Tuesday, but in setting a new course, they are predicting "there's a good chance" for showers tonight and Thursday.

A low pressure system sailng down from Canada to the Big Bend area should form wispy clouds which are expected to billow, harboring a little rain.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, there is a (not less than) 20 percent chance of rain with southerly winds 15-20 mph through Thursday.

Tonight's low should plummet to near 60 after today's predicted high in the upper 80s.

Tuesday's high of 91 was a relief compared to the record high century mark set in 1977, but the overnight low of 70 was a far cry from the record low of 41 set in 1945.

Prisoners to be transferred from MMH to Louisiana site

Two Louisiana men injured in Friday's plane crash at Warwick Apartments were scheduled to be transferred from Midland Memorial Hospital to an undisclosed hospital in Louisiana this morning.

George Gibbs and Bernell Bell, both 30 and both Louisiana Department of Corrections prisoners who were being taken back to Louisiana on probation and parole violation charges, suffered burns to 20 percent of their bodies in the crash, which also injured the plane's pilot, co-pilot and an apartment resident, 21-year-old Randy Sellars.

Gibbs and Bell were listed in satisfactory condition Tuesday. Sellars was in serious condition at Lubbock General Hospital, while pilot Alex Sheets, 56, and co-pilot Ken Hornsby, 41, remained in critical condition at Lubbock General.

Sheets reportedly has told doctors the port engine on the twin-engine Beechcraft Baron failed on takeoff from Midland Air Park after a refueling stop. Preliminary results of a federal investigation into the crash have determined that no jet fuel had accidentally been used to fuel the plane.

Investigators say it may take four months to determine what caused the plane to go down at the complex, which is located at the intersection of Garfield Street and Whitmire Boulevard. One apartment building was destroyed by fire and seven vehicles parked on an adjacent lot also were destroyed.

Accident not 'flighty' matter to controller (or pigeon)

"He was still sitting there."

Back in the pickup-turned-ambulance, Adams and Rawls drove the bleeding bird to the control tower and handed him over to Jerry Lane, who climbed up the stairway to the tower's observation deck and put the pigeon into the care of Ms. Osborn.

"It could only happen to me," said Ms. Osborn. "I just couldn't let the pigeon bleed to death, so I took him to the vet" after she had applied a bandage to the airport casualty.

At the clinic, veterinarians Dr. O.C. Collins Jr. and Dr. Mark Miller worked on the flightless bird which, according to the leg band, was hatched in August.

"The wing was bleeding, and the bird started flapping," said the bemused controller.

The veterinarians did what they could.

"There wasn't much we could do other than control the pigeon's hemorrhage," said Dr. Collins. "Evidently, he got mixed up in a prop and got his right wing cut off at the elbow."

"He was bleeding profusely when Pat brought him in," the veterinarian said. He used silver nitrate to control the bleeding, bandaged the wounded wing by strapping it to the bird's body, and gave Ms. Osborn the antibiotic Terramycin to put in the bird's water, billed her $17, told her to stop laughing and sent the controller and patient home.

"It's really a pity that he'll never be able to fly again, but maybe being in a cage is better than lying around and bleeding to death," said Ms. Osborn. "Maybe he'll be happy. He's lucky (to be alive)."

Earlier, Dr. Collins said he suggested that Ms. Osborn name the bird "Walter" after the actor Walter Pidgeon.

But, he said, the other veterinarian "wisecracked" that the bird ought to be "nicknamed 'Braniff,' because he'll never fly again. He'll have to walk."

Rita Clements

Teacher support forecast

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Gov. Bill Clements is predicting he'll receive more than 50 percent of the teacher vote in the upcoming election against State Attorney General Mark White, Clements' wife Rita said in a Midland press conference Tuesday.

She was in town to officially open the phone bank center at Republican Headquarters, 1900 W. Wall. Mrs. Clements said her husband has the support of teachers statewide, despite his veto of a teachers' health insurance bill and his remarks at a June 18, 1981, news conference, where he said most teachers are provided health insurance through their spouses' insurance coverage.

Clements recently received the individual endorsements of a former president of the National Classroom Teachers Association and a current vice-president of the Association of Texas Professional Educators. The organizations themselves, however, are prevented by their constitutions from supporting political candidates.

The larger Texas State Teachers Association is under no such constitional restrictions, according to Brad Ritter, director of communications for the organization, and is supporting White's candidacy. "We categorically deny Clements has broad teacher support in the state," said Ritter.

Mrs. Clements said during the press conference that the "more militant leadership" of the more radical teacher groups are opposed to Clements because "he is strongly opposed to collective bargaining and the unionization of teachers."

She said the issues in this election are much the same as they were when Clements defeated former Attorney General John Hill in 1978: education, crime, drugs and better management of the state bureaucracy. One difference this time, she noted, "is the economy."

Asked why White's arrest on a DWI charge 19 years ago has become an issue in Clements' campaign ads, she said the issue "had surfaced" elsewhere in the state and was a matter of public record. "It goes back to your record," she added. "Any time you run for public office, your record is out for people to see."

The DWI charge against the then-23-year-old White was reduced to a public intoxication charge and he paid a $50 fine, according to court records.

Mrs. Clements said her husband is "running on his record and is extremely optimistic (because) he's significantly ahead in the polls."

The press conference was followed by a ribbon-cutting ceremony at the headquarters. Mrs. Clements said workers at Republican phone banks statewide would make some 2 million calls urging people to go the polls in November. She then departed for Odessa to officially open the phone banks there.

MISD adds 185 teachers

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

While the 1982-83 school year may be the first for many students new to Midland Independent School District, it also is the first in the district for 185 teachers, MISD trustees learned Tuesday.

The report on the district's recruiting and staffing efforts, as well as approval of preliminary plans for the rebuilding of the portion of Carver school that was destroyed by fire and additions to Travis Elementary School were given during the regular meeting of the MISD Board of Trustees.

Ronald Whitmore, director of human resource services, reported that of the 185 newly-hired teachers, 40 hold master's degrees and 127 have previous teaching experience.

Thirty-two in-state and 36 out-of-state colleges and universities were represented. While 120 new teachers are assigned to elementary levels, compared to the 384 returning instructors, 65 new teachers were placed in the secondary level, where 382 teachers returned.

THE STATE OF the economy was not one of the factors in the successful recruiting effort, according to Whitmore, who explained, "I don't think it was because people are flocking to Midland or, because of the local economy, people are flocking back to teaching. In my assessment, that's more of a trickle than a big rush.

"I think it has more to do with the attractiveness of our school district," he continued. "I feel confident that when (prospective teachers are) basing (their decision) on a school district, rather than where it is, we're going to win."

MISD's salary, which is 32 percent above the state base, also was a factor in the recruitment of qualified new teachers, he said. "I think in terms of salary, again, we are competitive."

Also cited as an asset in the hirings was the recruitment effort begun by Dr. Duane Moore, now assistant superintendent of instruction, when he served as director of human resource services last year. Moore explained that 12 separate recruiting trips were made which sometimes covered several campuses and were several days long.

ALSO, FOR THE first time in recent years, teachers participated in the recruitment. According to Whitmore, using these first-year teachers in next year's recruiting procedure is "very likely."

Trustee president Parker Humes asked administrators about the success of minority recruitment. In August 1981, MISD was found in compliance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 after a complaint was filed with the Office of Civil Rights alleging that MISD's recruitment and employment policies discriminated against black teachers.

According to Moore, major efforts to establish communication with and visits to several black colleges in the state were made successfully. Of the minorities hired, about 75 percent came from minority schools, he said.

Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., MISD superintendent, pointed out that while several new administrative appointments have recently been made to out-of-district personnel, the majority of administrative placements have gone to in-district people during the last two years.

"WE'VE HAD 43 opportunities over the past two years to promote, transfer or hire new personnel," he said. "Thirty of those opportunities went to emplyees of the district and 13 went to those outside of the district, which means about 70 percent went to MISD people."

That figure does not include the newly-instigated intern program, which involves six MISD personnel.

"I do feel we are making significant steps in trying to hire the best personnel," he said.

Trustees approved architect Preston Geren's preliminary plans for the rebuilding of Carver Occupational Development Lab, the portion of the school which was destroyed by a fire last March. According to Dr. James H. Mailey, director of school plant maintenance and grounds, cost for rebuilding the 12,500 square-foot facility will be about $600,000.

"THE BUILDING going back up won't have any relation to the old building other than it is going up on the (existing) slab," Mailey explained, adding that an independent engineering firm had determined the slab was usable. Portions of the building used when Carver was a high school, such as the cosmetology lab, homemaking facilities and other classrooms, will not be rebuilt and the new building will be designed solely to house the special education program. Costs of rebuilding that structure, as well as a separate one to replace the storage center for science, special education and social studies materials, also destroyed in the fire, should be covered by the insurance settlement of $800,000.

According to Sue Beasley, Carver teacher, about $20,000 would be needed to replace special education materials, supplies and equipment. Mailey said that while some of the funds for lost supplies will come from the insurance reimbursement, whatever is not covered will be taken from the budget.

Trustees also approved preliminary plans for the addition of six new classrooms at Travis Elementary School, passed in the April school bond election.

APPROVAL ALSO was given to authorize the employment of Geren to make additions to the Lee High School band hall.

Board members approved the appointment of the 1982-83 MISD Textbook Selection Committee. Appointed to serve were the following: Baressi, Eloisa Martinez, Josefina Saldana, Martha Lewis, Dick Harris, Alma Marshall, Frances Ratliff, Maxine Robinson, Rita Bell, Clyde Wilson, Karen Walker, Marilyn Jones, Michael McMullen, Billy Gilbreath and David Kleinbeck.

The position for a school security supervisor was approved following a second reading, game reports were given and bids on new vehicles were awarded. Trustees also set a limit to serve as a guideline for preparing the 1983-84 district budget. The guideline established limits the amount of cost per student to $2,975, compared to the $2,848 per student in average daily attendance budgeted for the 1982-83 year. The figure reflects an increase of about 11.5 percent in the tax rate.

Council's U-turn raises eyebrows

Pete Hogue of 2611 W. Cuthbert Ave., voted for keeping Cuthbert the way it is and adding a one-way street going the other way. "We had a crash through the house next to mine when it was two-way."

Adding her "amens" to the previous speakers was Martha Gould, who at 2303 W. Cuthbert is two houses from the intersection at Garfield. When it was two-way, she heard "fender-benders and screeching of brakes at all hours. Andrews is a six-lane road and Garfield is four-lane. If traffic is put onto Garfield, we're only compounding traffic on Garfield."

Becky Smith, whose husband is a fireman at Station No. 5, reinforced the earlier contention of closing off the quickest route to businesses. Firemen at that station "couldn't imagine going down Whitney. The shortest route is to go down Garfield and onto Cuthbert."

Sloan at this point said that he agreed Cuthbert should be one-way west. "But I don't think it ought to be one-way at all; it should be two-way or make Kansas one-way."

Objecting was Assistant City Manager Fred Poe. "From a traffic standpoint, it won't work any better than it is now."

"Then make it two-way and put in a light," suggested Hatfield.

AGREEING THAT THE one-way as it is now is working was the mayor. "Going back to two-way is out of the question. It has worked better one-way than I thought it would. There's no question about businesses next to the stadium that turning it around would create more access for them."

Fighting Hatfield's argument that people would have to go to Michigan to get to Stadium Sports Center, Akins said, "I wouldn't go down Michigan. I'd go down Kansas and I have no problem making a left turn onto Garfield."

Agreeing with this route was Councilman Carroll Thomas.

Mrs. Gould interjected that those merchants north of Memorial Stadium "are already on a two-way street. They take care of that segment of residents living east of Cuthbert. It's my experience that if people want to buy something they'll find a way to get there."

But Hatfield contended that he serves a lot of customers from west and north Midland and westbound Cuthbert is keeping them from his store.

"Most people come down Garfield to get to the stadium," pointed out Councilman Gordon Marcum.

Questioning the council's reasoning, Poe said, "Why would you want to go back to two-way that didn't work and with all those accidents?"

"This will reduce the traffic flow," theorized Sloan.

Hatfield made the motion for traffic on Cuthbert to be changed eastbound and it was seconded. "We'll just have to re-educate the public," he said.

The motion was approved by all but Councilman Steve Davidson and with the mayor saying it would be done on a trial basis only.

Davidson, asked if Hatfield's theory that one-way traffic ruins businesses would have an effect on downtown stores with it's one-way traffic, replied, "Not yet. I haven't seen Carter's Furniture close down."

Mrs. Smith charged that Hatfield's insistence upon the change was a "public official using his position for his own personal business. They didn't consider the safety of the residents."

Mrs. Paul Smyres, who has lived 2313 W. Cuthbert Ave., for 20 years, added, "He (Hatfield) is supposed to be representing me and not himself."

Sloan continued talking to the council members in the midst of remaining agenda items. After an executive session, the council came out and moved to reconsider the Cuthbert Street item. At that point, they voted to draw up the ordinance for two-way traffic.

Asked why, Sloan said because the only people in the area who want Cuthbert kept the way it is are those who live on Cuthbert. Nearby residents want it two-way, he said.

"It's 20-to-1 on the people who don't want Cuthbert one-way."

No one from other streets had appeared at the 4 p.m. public hearing to voice their opinion about the proposed change.

Sloan also charged that the previous problems that existed with two-way traffic on Cuthbert won't reappear "because of the traffic signal we're going to put on Garfield."

he had taken "$18,000 worth of flak from residents over the bridge construction problems and "I lost one good friend over it."

Councilman Steve Davidson added, "A project of this size and magnitude should be supervised and not have the problems we had. I'm putting everyone on notice that from now on when we contract out projects we're not going to sit back and take the punches."

THE AIR SPACE zoning plan around Midland Regional Airport, which sets up height limitations, was adopted by the council. Banks noted that the Texas Aeronautics Commission had assisted in preparing the maps and zoning ordinance.

A lease for the Soil Conservation District to construct offices at Hogan Park was approved. Plans locate the building between the Midland Woman's Club and Wadley Avenue.

In zoning matters, the council approved a housing and office plan for a tract located between Andrews Highway and Shell Drive and west of McDonald Street. That had been the site for the Westwood Theatre and The Chief Drive-In theater.

After reviewing plans from architect Bill Babb for remodeling three floors of City Hall and adding two more, the council decided to advertise for bids. Babb said the two new floors would cost about $932,000 while remodeling of the others will require about $100,500.

"I'VE HAD MORE inquiries about this particular building from a lot of builders," said Babb. "Some are from out of town and a lot of firms I've never heard of. I'm not too happy about it. I don't know these people's reputations. It takes a certain expertise to build onto an existing building. If they've never done it, you'll be in for a real surprise. You're going to be exposed to the elements for about eight months and they've got to protect you."

And Ackerly Airport Advertising firm was given the contract to handle advertising at Midland Regional Airport. The city will get $30,000 a year, or 50 percent of the gross, whichever is greater.

Black vote helps Wallace win primary

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Former Gov. George C. Wallace, taking black votes in Alabama hamlets where he once symbolized racial oppression, battled back into the political spotlight by narrowly winning the Democratic nomination for governor.

His opponent in the primary runoff, Lt. Gov. George McMillan, refused to concede defeat in a midnight speech Tuesday night, questioning vote handling in several counties.

"We also beat the Republican party tonight," Wallace told wildly cheering campaign workers. "I want to tell the special interests of Alabama, the special monied interests crowd in this state, who've tried to run politics, they can't run it with Governor Wallace as governor."

With 4,115 of 4,144 precincts reporting, Wallace had 505,243 votes, or 51 percent, and McMillan had 485,223, or 49 percent. McMillan said he would seek to verify the returns, leaving the final tally in doubt as the official canvass is compiled.

McMillan, 38, is a moderate who had urged Alabama voters to reject "the politics of the past." He drew many votes in urban areas, campus districts and scattered rural counties where most residents are black.

But Wallace, 63, who is paralyzed in the legs from a 1972 assassination attempt and who spent four quiet years on the political sidelines, added thousands of black votes to his longstanding coalition of rural and blue-collar whites.

He carried 55 of Alabama's 67 counties — including six of the 10 counties with predominantly black populations.

Among them was Lowndes — the site of a bloody night-rider killing after a 1965 voting-rights march that Wallace had sought to block. In Lowndes, which is 75 percent black, Wallace defeated McMillan by nearly a 2-1 margin.

In other state races Tuesday, Supreme Court Justice Oscar Adams beat Public Service Commissioner Jim Zeigler by a slim margin in the Democratic runoff for the seat Adams now holds. Adams, appointed to the post to fill a vacancy in 1980, is trying to become the first black elected to a statewide office in Alabama.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Afrikaner unity, a driving force for the ruling "white tribe" of South Africa, appears to be disintegrating in the debate over race reform.

The divisions burst into the open in February in the political arena. Since then they have penetrated the Afrikaner churches, business world, news media and university campuses, raising a potential threat to Afrikaner control of the country.

Prominent Afrikaners disagreed in interviews on the ramifications of the disunity and whether it will speed or hamper concessions by the white-minority government to other races. But none disputed that divisions cut deep among the 3 million Afrikaans-speaking "volk," who by sticking together have imposed their will on a nation of 28 million for a generation.

"You can say Afrikanerdom is in total disarray. And how they can put Humpty Dumpty together again, I don't know," said Professor Willem Kleynhans, head of the political science department at the University of South Africa in Pretoria.

THE AFRIKANERS, MAINLY Dutch-descended Calvinist immigrants who began settling at Cape Town in 1652, make up 58 percent of the nation's 4.8 million whites. With notable exceptions, Afrikaners have rallied behind two concepts: maintaining white supremacy and guarding their culture against perceived oppression by English-speakers, roughly 40 percent of the whites.

The National Party took power in 1948 on a platform of power and jobs for Afrikaans-speaking whites (the language is Afrikaans, the people are Afrikaners). The party has kept a tenacious grip on power since then, gaining English-speaking supporters as well, while building the legal structures of apartheid — South Africa's system of racial separation.

The focus has been on carving a place for Afrikaners, some of whom are of French Huguenot and German descent. Afrikaners now hold virtually all key ministry and civil service posts, their language is equal by law to English, and a tradition of the wealthy English looking down on poor white Afrikaners is disappearing.

But last Feb. 24 a long-threatened rift in the party developed over Prime Minister P.W. Botha's proposals for limited power-sharing with the 3.5 million people of mixed-race and Asian descent.

THE PLAN IGNORES THE BLACK majority of almost 21 million, but even the hint of including Asian and "colored" minorities in government led Transvaal Province leader Andries Treurnicht and 18 other Nationalist members of Parliament to bolt and form a new party, the Conservatives. The party then merged with a small far-right party led by Connie Mulder, who once was almost chosen prime minister by the Nationalist caucus.

The Conservatives have not managed an alliance with the remaining white-supremacist party, the Herstigte Nasionale (Purified National) Party, and the Nationalists still control two-thirds of the seats in Parliament. But the threat of a right-wing alliance became clear in the first voter test since the split. The Nationalist candidate won a provincial by-election last month, but the two right-wing parties together outpolled the Nationalist candidate by 56 to 44 percent. The mainly English-speaking opposition party did not bother to contest the seat.

"This division of left and right will now manifest itself in all spheres of Afrikanerdom," Mulder said in an interview. "This same line will be drawn in churches, cultural organizations, business, et cetera."

Mulder contended the split would put the brakes on reform.

"THE MINUTE WE PROVE THAT we have viability, that we can win seats, at that minute the many doubtfuls in the National Party who have been sitting and watching will swing to the Conservative Party. And that will leave the prime minister with no choice but to reconsider the whole reform proposal."

An alternative for the Nationalists, however, might be an aggressive reform program to try to draw English-speakers aboard in an alliance leaving the far right in the cold. English and Afrikaners worked together from 1934 to 1948 in the United Party.

Midland office space growing, unemployment dwindling

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Midland office space is growing while unemployment is dwindling, according to reports released by the Midland Chamber of Commerce at its monthly board of directors meeting Tuesday.

The Midland Office Building Survey, conducted twice yearly by the chamber, included 68 multi-tenant office projects compared with 59 projects in the February survey. Only multi-tenant office projects of 10,000 square feet or more, either existing or under construction by Sept. 1, are included in the study.

Total net leaseable square feet existing or under construction climbed from 5.48 million in February to 5.82 million in September. Leaseable square feet of completed office space jumped from February's 3.97 million to 4.55 million in September.

Survey findings also indicated that while office space was increasing, so was its cost. The average rent for leased space covered in the survey went from $14.85 per square foot annually to $15.11 from February to September.

While office space was increasing, the occupancy rate was declining. The survey revealed that in February 99.21 percent of the completed office space was leased. In September, the percentage of leased space dropped to 96.09 percent.

Of those projects existing or under construction, 87.61 percent were leased or pre-leased in February compared with 83.94 percent in September.

Grant Billingsley, of the Chamber's Economic Development Department, said that although the office occupancy rate declined, "I can tell you that's still a very strong percentage for our existing office space." Billingsley said the twice-annual survey was a popular publication with developers, who use the data in making decisions about construction or expansion in Midland.

Billingsley went on to reveal results of a survey of proposed office projects announced or proposed for Midland through 1985.

The survey, which included owner-occupied as well as multi-tenant buildings, called for an additional 3,905,616 square feet of office space to be constructed by Dec. 31, 1985 — a 53.25 percent increase on existing office space.

Billingley said that while "I think it's valid to assume that the occupancy rate is going to drop some," with the proposed construction, "I don't see any reason that it would just drop through the floor."

He emphasized that only 413,147 of the 3.9 million square feet is now under construction. Depending on future economic trends, some of the proposed projects may or may not be built.

The Chamber also released a study of economic indicators for August, which showed total employment in Midland rose from 57,850 persons in August 1981 to 59,950 in August 1982, a 3.63 percent increase.

A comparison of total unemployment for the same two months shows 3,100 people out of work in 1982 compared with 2,100 in 1981. Larry Bell, chamber president, noted that unemployment for August was 4.9 percent, a healthy drop from earlier in the year. Midland's unemployment peaked at 7 percent in April.

Midland posted increases in such categories as postal receipts, airline boardings, bank deposits and water, gas, electric and telephone connections. But total residential and commercial building permits dropped from 285 in August 1981 to 191 in August 1982.

In other action, the board approved a 1982-83 budget calling for $820,650 in operating expenses and $812,400 in revenues. Carrying over funds from this years operations, the board projected an ending balance of $6,750 for fiscal year 1983.

Board members approved bylaws changes that would change its fiscal year from the calendar year to Oct. 1 - Sept. 30. The board made the change in order to align its fiscal year with that used by the city.

To ease the fiscal year change, the board also extended the terms of current officeholders an additional nine months, through Sept. 30, 1983. All 24 Chamber directors agreed to serve the extended terms.

The board also added a new office, president-elect, in which the officeholder will serve for one year prior to becoming chamber president. The board elected W.P. "Bill" Franklin, Midland National Bank executive vice president, as its first president-elect.

Major bank cuts prime to 13 percent; No others follow

By TOM REDBURN
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

A major New York bank cut its prime lending rate to 13 percent Tuesday, the lowest level the key interest rate has reached in two years, but no other large banks followed the move by Bankers Trust Co., the nation's 10th largest bank.

The prime rate is the base from which commercial banks calculate interest charges on short-term loans to business borrowers. Companies with excellent credit ratings often arrange loans at rates lower than the prime, while smaller, less well-established business customers usually are charged more than the prime rate. The prime rate does not directly affect most consumer loans.

Some economists predicted the move by Bankers Trust could foster a split in the industry on the prime rate, since many bankers maintain that uncertainty over the direction of short-term money market rates will discourage a mass migration by banks to a lower prime rate.

"There's a significant amount of uncertainty about the near-term outlook for money markets," said David M. Jones, economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. in New York. "In this sort of environment, banks are going to be cautious about lowering the prime."

The prime rate dropped rapidly from 16.5 percent to 13.5 percent over a six-week period in July and August, following in the wake of declines in other money market interest rates. But since that period, interest rates have generally bottomed out and the prime rate had stabilized. With certificates of deposit, one of the key sources of bank funds, generally selling at about 10 percent, however, several financial analysts and government analysts have argued that the prime rate should be lower to reflect the much cheaper cost of acquiring funds.

"Clearly the banks are lagging," said Ben Laden, chief economist at the investment firm of T. Rowe Price Associates in Baltimore, who suggested that banking costs have been down enough over the past month to justify a prime rate even lower than 13 percent. In an effort to offset recent losses from bad loans, he said, "they're dragging their feet and enjoying a bigger profit margin."

In explaining its move to a 13 percent prime, Bankers Trust said its cost of acquiring funds for lending has recently declined. "We see 13 percent as the right prime rate," the bank said in a statement, "given other rates in the money markets, which are stable right now."

Although M-1, which measures money readily available for spending, declined last week, the growth trend over the last several weeks has pushed the closely watched money supply figure above the Fed's target. While some analysts believe the Fed will tolerate the rapid money supply gains, others worry that the central bank could clamp down in an effort to get M-1 back inside its target boundaries.

The action in money markets was generally mixed on Tuesday. While rates across the board dropped slightly in the morning, by later in the day some rates were higher than the day before and others were lower. Dealers quoted 13-week Treasury bills at 7.48 percent in the afternoon compared to 7.43 percent at the same time on Monday, while federal funds were quoted at 9.75 percent versus 9.625 percent the previous day. But even though interest rates on government bills rose, the cost of certificates of deposit generally fell slightly. For instance, three-month CDs were bid at 10.35 percent compared to 10.45 percent the day before.

The bond market, which responds more closely to long-term interest rates than to short-term rates, rallied strongly on Tuesday as rates for the latest bond issues fell. "The long-term fundamentals — a weak economy and prospects that the recession will continue and moderate credit demands — suggest that (interest rates) will move unevenly downward," said Aubrey Lanston's Jones. "But there is still a lot of uncertainty about when credit demands will ease significantly in line with the weak economy."

Similar names cause grief

A news story recently circulated by the Associated Press has caused nothing but grief for Champion Drilling, Odessa. Not because of what the story said, but because of what it didn't say.

The story, published in Midland Reporter-Telegram's energy/business section Sunday, Sept. 19, told how a state judge in Dallas had taken control of five oil drilling companies pending the outcome of a $19 million law suit. One of the five companies listed was Champion Drilling and Development Co.

What the story failed to mention is that Champion Drilling and Development Co. and Champion Drilling, the Odessa-based firm, are two separate and unrelated entities.

Many have apparently failed to notice the difference. "It's causing me some grief," said Bill Buchanan of Champion Drilling. Buchanan said he has had many calls from concerned customers, creditors and others since the article appeared.

"I don't need that kind of publicity at all," said Buchanan. "The business climate is not good enough that you can put any black marks on (your business)."

Champion Drilling, the Odessa firm, is a Texas corporation founded in November, 1980, by Buchanan and his partner John M. Rogers Jr. The company operates six rigs rated between 4,000 and 18,000 foot capacity in Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Louisiana.

Buchanan said his firm's list of customers almost covers the alphabet. It starts with Amerada and ends with Yale.

Buchanan said he hasn't lost any business because of the article and the misunderstanding it has caused. "But you can't say that its effected me positively," he said.

NTSB: Pilot 'violated procedure'

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The pilot of the plane that crashed into the Warwick Apartments last Friday afternoon violated standard flight procedures by taking off with the wind at his tail, according to federal investigators who also say he may not have used all the runway available to him.

T.W. Finch, chief of the Fort Worth field office of the National Transportation Safety Board, said Wednesday that pilot Alex Sheets took off from runway 25 at Midland Air Park on a flight path approximately "20 degrees to the left of due west."

The twin-engine Beechcraft Baron banked sharply seconds later, glanced off the roof of Building 6 at the north-side complex, cartwheeled into an adjacent parking lot and exploded.

The building and seven parked vehicles were destroyed. Sheets, three passengers aboard the plane and one apartment resident were severely burned.

WINDS AT THE time were in almost the same direction as the flight path. This was indicated by clouds of smoke that rose hundreds of feet into the air and was confirmed Wednesday by a spokesman for the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. "The wind was out of the east at 9 mph at the time of the crash," said the spokesman.

The NTSB investigator said it "isn't recommended" that planes take off with a tailwind and that as-yet unverified witness accounts of the crash indicate Sheets also took off from an intersection of the runway, not from the end of it.

Air Park is an "uncontrolled," city-owned airport that does not have a tower to guide or advise pilots.

Witnesses told investigators the plane, which had gained about 50 feet of altitude before coming down, seemed to develop engine trouble and Sheets has reportedly told doctors his port engine failed on takeoff.

Losing one engine of a twin-engine plane on takeoff causes the craft to "torque," or turn, in the direction of the lost engine and there is also a slight tendency for the plane to be forced downward, according to Finch.

HOWEVER, UNDER ideal weight and weather conditions, and assuming no pilot error, the plane should have gained enough altitude so the pilot can correct for the engine problem and land safely, he added.

Sheriff Dallas Smith, a pilot and part-owner of a World War II P-51 fighter hangared at Air Park, said taking off into the wind gives planes more lift and reduces the distance needed for takeoff. Planes also normally land into the wind, which, among other things, stabilizes their descent.

Thus, a pilot who takes off "against the flow of traffic" not only needs more runway to become airborne, but also risks colliding with incoming flights, Smith added.

Not wanting to second-guess Sheets, Smith emphasized that he didn't investigate the crash and hadn't seen the reports yet. "But," he added, "it is generally accepted practice to take off into the wind. I don't take off with a tailwind because I was taught not to."

THE ENGINES of the plane, which is owned by the Louisiana Department of Corrections, are in the process of being analyzed for mechanical failure, and it may take up to four months to ascertain the exact cause of the fiery crash, according to federal investigators.

Prison spokesman Mike Martin said Wednesday he had not been notified by the NTSB that the plane had taken off with a tailwind and he declined comment. He remained convinced, however, that a letter criticizing Sheets' competence as a pilot was a case of "sour grapes."

Martin used that term in a news conference earlier this week to refute allegations made in a letter written by former Corrections Department pilot Donald Murray, who was recently "laid off" due to budgetary problems, according to Martin.

Murray released the letter, which he wrote to aviation officials in July, after learning of the Warwick crash. The letter cited eight reasons why he thought Sheets was unable to handle his job, including one flight that Sheets allegedly took with "flaps extended" and another flight he made with a defective battery.

"BUT MR. MURRAY knew prior to writing the letter that he was losing his job," Martin said at the press conference. "This is all sour grapes. He listed these incidents as going back to Octo-

It's a dog's life, isn't it?

The summertime temperatures which have stuck with Midlanders through the beginning of fall have been pretty doggone hot. And, according to one Great Dane, it's about time for some cooler weather. Maximillian, owned by Terry Teate of 2506 Elizabeth, recently was caught with a mournful expression as he dozed in the sun. But, if the weatherman's prediction of a slight chance of rain holds true, Maximillian's dog day afternoons might turn into ones raining, what else, cats and dogs.

Several die in Luxembourg crash

LUXEMBOURG (AP) — A Soviet airliner skidded off a runway at Luxembourg's airport, sideswiped a water tower and exploded into flames, and the government said today that five people were killed and 72 injured.

Initial reports put the death toll at 53. That was revised to 12 and later a police spokesman said the number was no higher than 10. The latest toll was given by Roger Sietzen, president of Luxembourg's national airline, Luxair.

Sietzen, speaking for the Luxembourg government, said all five dead in Wednesday's crash at Findel Airport were Luxembourg nationals.

He said the injuries to the other 72 people "vary considerably."

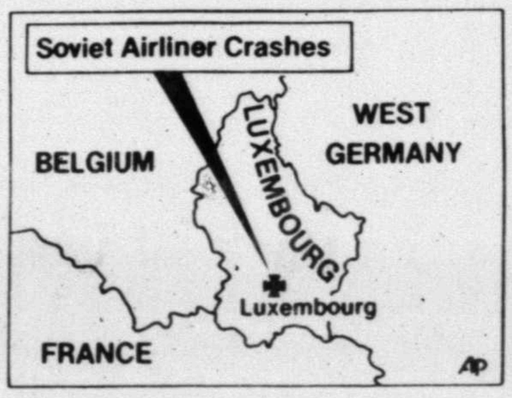

He said the Aeroflot Ilyushin-62 airliner — enroute to Lima, Peru, from Moscow with 66 passengers and a crew of 11 — skidded off the runway after it made a normal approach at the Luxembourg airport.

"Immediately after the landing the aircraft drifted toward the right of the landing strip and came to a standstill in a small woods," he said.

The aircraft, which had sideswiped a water tower, burst into flames but most of the passengers and the entire crew escaped, he said.

Neither Sietzen nor any other government official would speculate on what made the plane shoot off the runway or comment on police reports that one of the engines malfunctioned.

Transportation Minister Joseph Barthel also denied a report published in a local newspaper that the crew members were lax in assisting the injured.

"To the contrary, I would say," Barthel said.

The pilot told investigators he lost control when he tried to reverse engines in a standard braking procedure. One engine may have failed to reverse, sending the plane into a sharp turn, investigators speculated.

Also among the survivors was a diplomatic courier, whose documents were turned over to Soviet Embassy officials at the scene, said Luxembourg Police Chief Jean-Pierre Wagner.

Officials said the passengers were from several countries but a precise breakdown was not immediately available. A police spokesman said casualty tolls were revised as searchers combed woody ravines beside Findel Airport for victims of the disaster, the first major air crash in Luxembourg's history.

Witnesses said the the plane suddenly veered to the right, sideswiped a water tower, shot into the woods and caught fire, forcing passengers and crew to flee for their lives as explosions shattered the flaming, blackened fuselage.

"We heard an extremely loud engine noise that lasted for a few seconds," said a man who lives next to Findel Airport. "Then there was silence. After the plane crashed there were continuing explosions for about 20 minutes as it burned."

Many of the victims suffered severe burns and were taken to a burn center in Metz, France, 37 miles south. Others were taken to five hospitals in the city.

A group of survivors, including some crew members, took refuge in a nearby farmhouse, witnesses said. Rescue workers brought powerful lights to the scene and called out for survivors in several different languages, including Russian.

About 15 people were to have disembarked during the stopover, officials said. An Aeroflot spokesman in Lima said the other scheduled stops were Shannon, Ireland; Havana, Cuba; and Kingston, Jamaica.

After hitting the water tower, the plane shot over a small pond and plunged into some woods, felling trees for about 100 yards before it halted at the end of a small valley, television reports said.

Midland City Council's U-turn and backtracking action on Tuesday that changed the one-way designation on Cuthbert Avenue between Garfield and Ward streets has brought charges of "highly irregular" from one resident as the band of citizens plans its next strategy to do battle.

Yet the action taken, which Councilman Tom Sloan had alluded to as being recommended by the city's traffic engineer, may not have been the full story.

In November 1979, the council designated that segment of Cuthbert for one-way westbound traffic after residents complained of high speed traffic, trash and speeding cars crashing into parked vehicles or homes.

On Tuesday, the council changed that westbound traffic — in spite of having no complaints from the residents who lived there — to eastbound.

Cited as one reason for the switch is that Councilman Jesse Hatfield contended he had lost business at his Stadium Sports Center, east of Garfield, when traffic had been going westbound.

After the residents had lodged their protests to the change and left when the decision had been made, the council opened up the matter later for reconsideration and decided to draw up an ordinance turning it back into a two-way street.

"Oh, that's horrible," proclaimed Martha Gould of 2303 W. Cuthbert Ave. She had spent most of Wednesday thinking the traffic would be switched to eastbound until she was informed with a telephone call.

"WE HAD A SERIES of accidents here in the past" when it was two-way. "We (residents) left the council meeting because we thought the item had been concluded. Therefore, I think it's highly irregular to reopen the matter when these citizens who live between Ward and Garfield on Cuthbert weren't there.

"It does not follow a true legislative process," she added.

Mrs. Paul Smyres, upon hearing that Cuthbert will be two-way, first said she probably will have to leave her home of 20 years at 2313 W. Cuthbert.

"Oh dear, I wish I'd left here a long time ago," she remarked. "We fought for so long for it to be one-way. It was marvelous to us. I would like to move now. When football is on Friday nights, it's very bad for us here. We can't get out."

But she and others recapitulated and by this morning Mrs. Smyres said the group "is gathering and we're going to fight it."

The idea to reconsider that item came from Tom Sloan toward the end of the council meeting. After an executive session, Sloan moved that it be reconsidered, and it was seconded by Councilman Gordon Marcum.

AT THAT POINT, Sloan rattled off the list of changes that included making Cuthbert two-way with no left turns allowed off Cuthbert onto Garfield, making the light at that intersection demand responsive with twice as much time given to traffic on Garfield, putting four-way stop signs at Lanham and Cuthbert and removing all Stop

Midlanders agree that dogfighting law overdue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Texas is becoming the "dogfighting capital" of the nation because its law is too lax, one legislator said before his committee voted to make dogfighting a felony and dogfight-watching illegal as well.

The House Committee on State Affairs unanimously decided Wednesday to ask the Legislature to enact the tougher law when it convenes in January.

The proposal was hailed by at least two Midlanders who feel the legislation is long overdue.

Local legislators were not immediately available for comment, but Midland Animal Control Center Director Dalton Byerly gave a one-word response when he heard about the legislative proposal this morning: "Hallelujah!"

Maureen Dotsun-Wall of Midland, a member of an informal group called "Friends of the Animals" and a strong advocate of stiffer penalties for dogfighting, said, "Great! That's terrific. It needs to be a felony to offset the money they (dogfighters) make on the gambling that goes on at dogfights."

Eight persons were arrested and charged with cruelty to animals, a Class A misdemeanor, after Midland County Sheriff's Department deputies and Department of Public Safety troopers raided a dogfighting arena in rural Midland Aug. 30.

"We're becoming the dogfighting capital because other states are cracking down," said Rep. Milton Fox, R-Houston. "This is not just some local good ol' boys fighting dogs. This is a national activity designed to make money and some other very unsavory activities go along with it."

San Antonio Rep. Paul Elizondo said that at his subcommittee's hearings this summer, law enforcement officials testified thay had better luck prosecuting dogfighters under gambling laws than under the state's anti-dogfighting

American Marine killed at Beirut airport; Details 'fragmentary'

WASHINGTON (AP) — One American Marine was killed and three were injured at Beirut International Airport today in what Pentagon officials said "may have been a mine explosion."

Col. Robert O'Brien, a Pentagon spokesman, said officials here were getting "fragmentary information. Indications are that one of the men was seriously injured and that two others are ambulatory."

No names were released.

Earlier, Assistant Secretary of Defense Henry Catto told a midday briefing that the Marines were injured by the explosion sometime after 10:30 a.m. EDT. He said they were transported by a medical evacuation helicopter to the USS Guam, an amphibious ship anchored within sight of the Lebanese coast.

Identities of the Marines were not immediately known, Catto said.

But he said the injuries were "not the result of hostile fire. It was an accident of some sort."

Military officials said there is still "quite a bit of ordinance" in the airport area, which until just two days ago had been occupied by Israeli armed forces.

Some 900 U.S. troops moved into Beirut Wednesday and set up headquarters at the airport. They were joined today by another 300 troops equipped with amphibious fighting vehicles and 60 tanks, Catto sad.

As the additional leathernecks moved ashore, Marine frogmen searched the waters off the airport for mines and other Marines swept the shore for more explosives.

It was not immediately clear if the dead and injured Marines had been involved in the mine-clearing operations.

Other duties assigned to the U.S. Marines in Beirut included guarding the airport, where the first commercial flight in nearly four months landed today, and patroling major avenues of approach to the city.

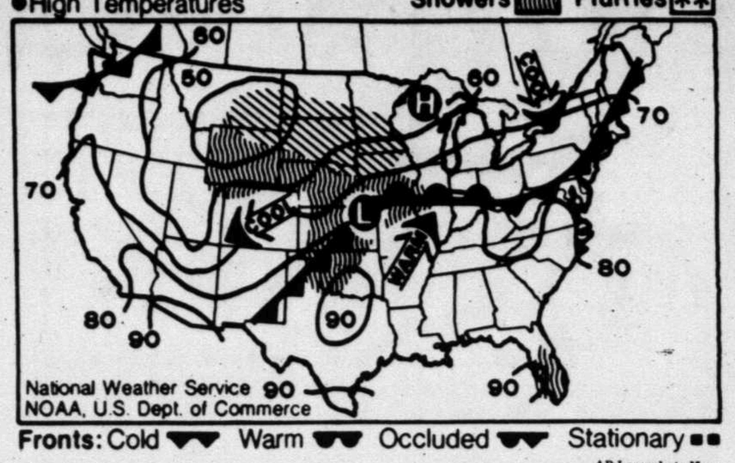

The landings Wednesday and today represented the second time the Marines have been sent to Beirut as part of a multinational peacekeeping force since late last month.

Even in advance of the new landings, however, Catto conceded the leathernecks would face a much greater chance of danger this time.

Weather no month change indicator

Does anybody really know what month it is?

Midlanders watching the weather for some sign of a change in the month may be puzzled, since September's end and October's beginning will be virtually indistinguishable according to the National Weather Service forecast.

A 30 percent chance of thunderstorms is predicted for tonight and Friday, with winds southerly at 10 to 15 mph both tonight and Friday. Tonight's low should drop to the mid-60s and Friday's high should reach the mid-80s.

Wednesday's high was a brisk 86 degrees when compared with the record high 102 set in 1977. Conversely, the overnight low of 68 was warm when judged against the record low 42 set in 1936.

A trace of measurable precipitation Wednesday was not enough to nudge monthly and yearly rainfall totals past 1.43 and 11.62 inches.

Sunset tonight comes at 7:35 p.m.; sunrise Friday is at 7:42 a.m.

ber of 1981, but he never notified his superiors and we didn't find out anything until after he wrote the letter."

Murray was laid off earlier this month and could not be reached for comment.

Martin also said at the press conference that Sheets had an "unauthorized passenger aboard" and that he might face disciplinary action when he recovers from his injuries. That passenger was 41-year-old Ken Hornsby, a personal friend of Sheets who may have served as an unofficial co-pilot on the flight, a prison spokeswoman said Tuesday.

The plane was transporting two prisoners back to Louisiana from California and Nevada when it made a refueling stop at Air Park. The prisoners were flown to hospitals in Louisiana Wednesday morning. They were listed in satisfactory condition.

Sheets and Hornsby, both of Baton Rouge, remain in critical condition at Lubbock General Hospital. The apartment resident, 21-year-old Randy Sellars of Midland, was in serious condition at Lubbock General.

The manager of the complex, Beth Ann Broughton, said Wednesday that no damage estimate had been compiled yet, adding: "We're trying to get things back to a normal workday and are looking forward to it."

Odessa store robbed

ODESSA — Zeb's Convenience Store at 503 S. Grant was held up Wednesday night, according to a clerk who told police a man came in about 9 p.m., got a can of beer out of the cooler, placed it on the counter, then pulled a silver pistol and demanded the money.

The clerk complied and the man fled on foot. He was described as Mexican, about 5 feet, 6 inches tall, weighing 135 pounds and dressed in a long-sleeved shirt and khaki pants.

Unidentified body found in Odessa

ODESSA — Ector County sheriff's deputies have no leads in the murder of an unidentified man whose body was found in a pasture late Wednesday morning.

"We have absolutely nothing," said a sheriff's spokeswoman this morning. "We have to find out who he is before we can come up with any suspects."

A passing oilfield worker discovered the bullet-riddled, badly decomposed corpse in a pasture in the Pleasant Farms subdivision south of the city limits about 11 a.m. Wednesday. A pathologist estimated the man had been dead about three days.

Authorities said the body was so badly decomposed that they haven't been able to determine his age or even his race. He had been shot an undetermined number of times.

Money reported missing from office

An employee of the Hacienda Apartments, 220½ Gist, told officers someone took $270 in cash from an unlocked desk drawer in the office sometime between 4 and 5 p.m. Wednesday. Police said there was no sign of forced entry to the office.

Fire blamed on a malfunctioning water heater extensively damaged a storeroom in a home owned by Anita Merriman at 3219 Roosevelt about 2:20 p.m. Wednesday. Seven fire department units responded to the call and firemen used 250 gallons of water extinguishing the blaze, which also caused smoke damage to the rest of the house.

Weiker making voters' choices tough

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — "Lowell Weicker has been very good to us. There's a strong feeling that you don't kick your friends in the teeth."

Therein lies the major roadblock to Democratic Rep. Toby Moffett's campaign to knock Republican Weicker out of the U.S. Senate seat he has held for 12 years.

Groups like the National Organization for Women and AFL-CIO — which might be expected to line up behind the liberal congressman — are reluctant to turn on Weicker.

THE MAVERICK Republican has made their choice even harder in recent weeks and months by taking a lead role in scuttling anti-abortion and school prayer legislation in the Senate and waging a long if unsuccessful fight against an anti-busing bill.

The recent remark about not wanting to kick Weicker in the teeth came from Joan Dineen, the NOW treasurer in Connecticut, in response to what she views as pressure from the group's national leaders in Washington to support Moffett.

But two of the 18 Connecticut chapters of NOW — both in Fairfield County, where Weicker got his start in politics — held out for neutrality. Unable to meet its requirement of unanimous support for Moffett from all the chapters, NOW is internally fractured and officially sitting out the election.

NOW's Connecticut political action committee chairwoman, Jill Gorman, protested a $1,000 contribution made by the national office to Moffett's campaign last year. "We told national we would appreciate it if they didn't contribute any more," she said.

Weicker — like Moffett — is a stronger backer of the drive for an Equal Rights Amendment.

Trying to counter Weicker's image as a liberal on social issues, Moffett trots out statistics showing that he has better ratings than Weicker from a variety of liberal groups which score members of Congress on their votes.

BUT HE'S finding that statistics don't tell the whole story in determining the allegiances of liberal groups that traditionally back Democrats.

Incumbency carries clout.

For example, Weicker has managed to stymie Moffett's quest for a formal endorsement from organized labor even though the national AFL-CIO gives Moffett an 89 percent favorable career voting record rating to 65 percent for Weicker.

The state AFL-CIO shrugged off the rating and refused to endorse the 38-year-old Moffett. The four-term congressman was denied the two-thirds vote needed for the endorsement after some delegates pointed out that Weicker, who serves on the Senate Labor Committee, has been a moderately good backer of labor causes.

"It's too close to call and some of these union people don't want to be on the wrong side if Weicker goes back on that committee in January," said Jeff Leichtman, the Moffett campaign's political director.

Weicker was in the national spotlight last week as a leader of a liberal filibuster that stopped conservative Republicans from achieving Senate approval of a bill intended to overturn federal court rulings banning prayer in public schools.

Weicker, 51-year-old heir to the Squibb pharmaceutical fortune, was a freshman in the Senate when he vaulted to attention as one of the earliest attackers of President Nixon during Senate Watergate Committee hearings.

HE CULTIVATED his image as a liberal defender of the Constitution earlier this year with a filibuster against a bill to ban busing to integrate public schools and vows to do it again if the bill, finally approved by the Senate, comes back from the House with amendments.

After being rejected by the conservative political activists who are helping many other Republicans this year with big contributions and workers, Weicker must try to blunt Moffett's appeal among liberals wherever he can.

Bernell Bell, one of two prisoners aboard the twin-engine Beechcraft Baron which crashed into the Warwick Apartments last Friday, leaves a plane after arriving in Baton Rouge Wednesday for transfer to Earl K. Long Hospital. Bell and four others, including 21-year-old Randy Sellars, a resident of the Warwick, were burned in the crash.

Prison guard will be held without bail pending hearings

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — George Banks, the prison guard charged in the shooting deaths of 13 people, will be held without bail until his preliminary hearings next week.

Banks, tapping his foot nervously as he sat at a table in the Luzerne County Courthouse during an arraignment Wednesday, was charged with eight more counts of murder.

The 40-year-old Banks was charged with five counts of murder Saturday. The eight additional charges were delayed by paperwork, said Luzerne County District Attorney Robert Gillespie.

Banks answered briefly and nodded when questioned by the court as to whether he understood the charges against him.

The dead were seven children, five of them his own, and six adults, including four women who had borne his children outside marriage.

After the 11-minute arraignment, Banks was led under tight security across the street to jail cell where he is being held in seclusion without bail. He is being watched around the clock to prevent him from committing suicide.

"Our position is, right now, this is a capital case and bail should not be set," Gillespie said. "A capital case is one where a death penalty may be imposed."

Besides the eight counts of murder, Banks also is charged with attempted murder, aggravated assault and recklessly endangering another person in connection with the wounding of a bystander.

Luzerne County officials also accused Banks of stealing a car at gunpoint during Saturday's shooting spree, and he was charged with robbery and theft.

Two named in unsuccessful murder try

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A father and son, passing notes during prison visits, tried to use a kilogram of cocaine and $25,000 to arrange the murder of a federal judge and four other people who helped break a drug ring, the FBI says.

In an affidavit filed Wednesday in federal court, the FBI identified the conspirators in the alleged assassination scheme — which did not succeed — as convicted drug trafficker Robert Gomez-Soto, 57, and his son, Peter Gomez, 24.

The intended victims included U.S. District Court Judge Robert Aguilar, who sentenced Gomez-Soto, a drug importer, to 20 years in prison, the FBI said.

Another intended victim was Stephen Green, Gomez-Soto's son-in-law, the FBI said. Green was the convicted "Nob Hill connection" who testified against Gomez-Soto at his trial last May in exchange for reduction of Green's own 20-year sentence in a separate drug case.

Gomez, of Los Altos, awaited arraignment today before a federal magistrate in San Diego. He was arrested Wednesday in Encinitas, a beachfront community 28 miles north of San Diego.

Gomez had been waiting for the arrival of the cash and 2.2 pounds of cocaine from Colombia, where Luis Enrique "Kiki" Otoya-Toban was to have supplied the drug, FBI Special Agent John W. Zent Jr. said in the affidavit.

Gomez-Soto, who is appealing his drug conviction while in prison, was arraigned Wednesday in San Francisco on the same charges his son faces: conspiracy to murder, conspiracy to murder federal officers and employees and conspiracy to obstruct justice.

George T. Davis, an attorney for the father and the son, claimed the charges were "a ploy to get extradition proceedings against Kiki Otoya(-Toban)."

Davis said federal investigators have unsuccessfully tried to extradite Otoya-Toban from Colombia on drug charges and hope to change their luck if they bring murder conspiracy charges. Otoya-Toban's wife, Linda, is Gomez-Soto's daughter.

The other intended victims were Assistant U.S. Attorney William Farmer, who prosecuted Gomez-Soto; Drug Enforcement Administration agent Lowrey Leong, who headed the DEA investigation of the drug ring; and federal witness Bobby Sharp, the FBI said.

"I am relieved to learn that the plot to kill me has been unsuccessful," Farmer said.

If convicted, the men could be fined $5,000 and sentenced to five years in prison, said Norman Zigrossi, FBI special agent in charge in San Diego.

signs on Storey Street with the exception of a four-way stop at Kansas and Lanham.

If this ordinance is passed at the next meeting and becomes effective Nov. 1, Sloan said he wanted to leave the new process in "at least through Christmas."

Van Cook, the traffic engineer who has been in his position with the city of Midland since May, said he had been told there was a problem at the intersection of Garfield and Cuthbert and to find a solution.

He studied the intersection and came up with several recommendations that were listed in a memo to his supervisor, Public Works Director Fred Baker. That apparently was passed on to the City Council. At a previous meeting, Sloan had said the council should follow what the new traffic engineer recommended.

But, noted Cook, what the council did Tuesday was only half of what he recommended.

"I was not really confident in what the problem was there," Cook reported. "I tried to make that point at the first of the memo.

"I have not been able to identify a specific problem with the operation of the one-way section. It apparently had been functioning well in terms of movement of traffic."

BUT HE DID uncover a problem with the traffic light at Garfield and Cuthbert, recommending the council spend $12,000 to purchase a new one, which the council approved.

However, Cook said in his memo that if Cuthbert were to be made two-way, he suggested the traffic light at that intersection be removed. The traffic count on Garfield far exceeds that on Cuthbert and the light impedes traffic movement, he explained.

"Garfield already is a major street; Cuthbert is a residential street," he said, noting that traffic signals don't always solve problems but can sometimes create them. "It attracts people to the signal; they think it's safer to cross Garfield at Cuthbert."

By eliminating the signal, traffic flows easier on Garfield and reduces the amount of vehicles on Cuthbert. In Cook's reasoning, if vehicles on Cuthbert can't cross Garfield, they'll find another easier route.

The four-way stop approved for Lanham and Cuthbert concerns Cook, who said studies show that stop signs cause traffic to go faster to make up for lost time. "It's harder on the car and causes more noise pollution."

He added that a report from the Institute of Transportation Engineers shows that stop signs cause an excess consumption of energy.

Noting that his job is concerned primarily with movement of traffic, Cook said "I still firmly believe we should identify what the problem is — if it's to get people over to businesses or if it's to deter traffic flow on Cuthbert. It's important to be able to identify what the problem is and then we can apply the solutions accordingly.

"I had not heard any complaints about Cuthbert, except from the council," he said.

The Legislature considered raising penalties for dogfighting and cockfighting during its last session, but the measure failed because of pressure from supporters of birdfighting.

The maximum current penalty for staging a dogfight is a year in jail and a $2,000 fine. The next stage in severity would be a third-degree felony, carrying a penalty of two to 10 years in prison and a fine of up to $5,000.

Committee members also agreed to warn the Legislature against inadvertently making legitimate dog-breeding and training activities illegal. Rep. Milton Fox, R-Houston, said he had received several calls from constituents concerned that they might "automatically be felons by raising pit terriers."

Teaching distributive education students the fundamentals of free enterprise prepares them not only for situations that occur during their jobs after school, but also for those that will occur during their lives. Midland High School DE instructor Ruben Vargas explains one of ten basic categories, ranging from store operation to communication skills.

By HALLYE JORDAN

A complaint often heard from students is that the curriculum they are being taught doesn't help prepare them for the future.

While their studies do prepare them for exams and entrance to college-level work, they often feel they are not beneficial to what they plan to do after they complete their education.

Students in distributive education are taught more than what is neccessary to pass the next test, according to Ruben Vargas, DE instructor at Midland High School.

"We teach them 10 basic skills that are not only necessary for preparing for contests, but also for preparing for the cold, cruel world we live in," he said during a morning class Monday.

STUDENTS WHO participate in the program, all juniors and seniors, have elected to enroll in DE as their elective class, along with their regular academic courses. At MHS, they attend a class taught by Vargas or Bill Rouse for one hour a day. What they are taught during that hour can be applied every day, either during the morning or afternoon, when they work at a job site for pay ranging from the minimum wage of $3.35 to $7 an hour. Saturdays and holidays also are typically spent working.

The ten basic preparation stages taught in the class include advertising and promotion, communication skills, display merchandising, human relations, basic concepts of management, business math, merchandising, store operation, product technology and selling.

And each category is very involved, Vargas emphasized.

For example, under the category of basic concepts of management, the class presently is learning how to make a good impression on a job interview. That, as well as other areas covered in the class, can benefit a student in any career choice.

And although much of the class time is spent preparing for district, regional, state and national competitions, even that time can be applied to everyday situations.

AT THE CONTESTS, judges select three of the 10 categories in which to test students. The students have a short time, sometimes as brief as eight minutes, to prepare their presentations for judging. For example, studying for the human relations contest is used by the students who deal with those situations every time they walk through the door of their place of employment, Vargas explained, turning around to ask one student who had participated in that particular contest if he ever encountered situations similar to those simulated during a contest.

Other contests include competition in supermarket marketing, food services, petroleum and automotive, general merchandising, finance and credit areas.

Previous students have entered group marketing projects in different contests, although it is not a mandatory competition and students decide whether or not they want to enter each year, Vargas added.

"It is a class effort and includes community involvement," he explained. "Four years back we did a marketing research project for Midland which involved the shopping history of Midland. That was before they had built Midland Park Mall or some of the smaller shopping centers, like San Miguel. They figured out that Midland did need more shops.

"ONE YEAR, THE students did a project on there being nothing to do in Midland," he continued. "The next year they built Wild River Canyon."

Distributive education students at MHS have two complications with which they must deal. Not only do they compete in one of the largest areas in the state, ranging from Weatherford to El Paso and from Lamesa to Fredericksburg, but they also have to adjust to a new lunch schedule.

This year, MISD trustees approved a revised lunch schedule which has all MHS students off for lunch from 11:10 a.m. to 12:05 p.m. The students then return to the campus for their fourth period class, resulting in their "work day" beginning around 1 p.m. Several students remarked on the inconvenience, citing previously they were able to leave the campus at lunch and go straight to work, thereby taking advantage of noon-time shoppers on their lunch breaks.

"We are totally for free enterprise," Drew Richards, DECA reporter, explained. "We're on a competitive level with other schools and we don't take handouts. Every bit of money we earn is on our own."

CITING DECA'S reputation as "the working class of Midland High School," Richards pointed out community projects the club sponsors as well as several money-making projects to earn funds for participation in different contests.

DECA members presently are in the middle of selling Wisconsin Homestead cheese and sausage and Suncatchers, which are casting and acrylic ornaments that look similar to stained glass. The sale, which began last Monday, will continue through Oct. 8. DECA members will be knocking on doors to take orders or persons may place orders by calling MHS at 682-7367 and asking for the distributive education department. The Suncatchers will be delivered in October while the cheese and sausage gift packs will be delivered in November.

'We are totally for free enterprise. We're on a competitive level with other schools and we don't take handouts. Every bit of money we earn is on our own.'

In addition to raising money to be used for contests, several leaders and potential leaders from the 100-member MHS club will travel to the DECA leadership conference in San Angelo later this month. A picnic will be held Tuesday and future plans call for a February student-employer banquet.

Payment changes announced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Changes in Medicare reimbursements designed to make hospitals more efficient were announced today by Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker.

The changes put into effect portions of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 which was signed by President Reagan Sept. 3.

"The positive incentives in these new Medicare reimbursement reforms will go a long way toward moderating the rapid rate of increase Medicare has experienced in recent years," Schweiker said.

"While inflation has only been running at 5.1 percent during the first 8 months of this year, hospital costs over the last year have jumped by a staggering 15.5 percent," Schweiker said.

Schweiker said his department also has been developing a prospective payment plan which will be submitted to Congress as another way to curtail medical costs and as further implementation of the fiscal responsibility act.

Pain often warning

Pain is usually a warning sign caused by a potentially damaging condition within or outside the body, according to Upjohn Co. It is triggered most commonly by heat, pressure, tissue damage or chemicals, including some chemicals produced by the body itself.

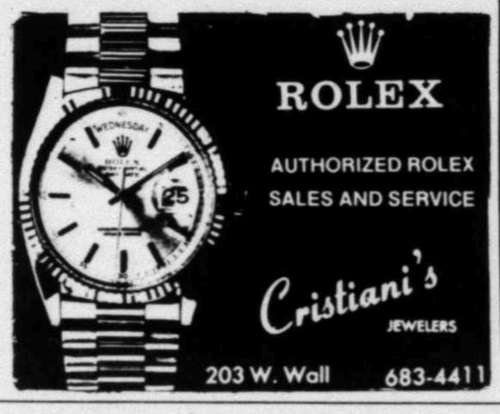

Fewer men older than 65 working

Older men — those 65 and older — are less likely today to be in the labor force than in the past, and those who do work are more likely to have part-time jobs, according to the American Council of Life Insurance. In addition, proportionately fewer men in the 55 to 64 age bracket are working now than a decade ago.

Man suspected in kidnappings, live burial arrested after 100-mph chase

Ronald White

RIO HONDO, Texas (AP) — A self-described "political terrorist" wanted in three kidnappings, including the live burial of a young man, was arrested after police cars bumped him off the road at the end of a 100-mph chase, authorities said.

Two police officers were injured in the chase late Wednesday on a south Texas highway, neither seriously.

Ronald Floyd White, 38, was arrested at about 8:40 p.m. on an aggravated kidnapping warrant in the abduction of Michael Baucom, 21, of Santa Fe, Texas. Baucom was buried Sept. 21 in a coffin-like box while his kidnappers demanded a $75,000 ransom from his father.

Baucom was freed four days later, and three people were arrested, although police accused White of masterminding the crime.

White was being held early today at the Brownsville Medical Center, where he was admitted with an undisclosed "personal illness," nursing supervisor Shirley Heathcock said. Police said he would be taken to the Cameron County Jail.

Officers, acting on a tip that White was in southern Texas, spotted him in Brownsville, said Larry Todd, a Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman.

DPS agents, FBI agents and local authorities used 10 cars as they chased White for more than 30 minutes, exceeding 100 mph, Todd said. Police slowed him to 80 mph by "bumping him off the road," said DPS agent Bud Peters.

Shootings began just after man fired

BRIDGEPORT, Texas (AP) — A 56-year-old energy company employee, killed after he fatally shot his boss and critically wounded another administrator, had been fired the same day for fighting and arguing with other workers, authorities said.

An autopsy has been ordered in the death of Lloyd Cowden, a process operator at Mitchell Energy Corp.'s natural gas liquids processing plant west of here.

Cowden died of multiple injuries Wednesday after his pickup truck collided with a gasoline transport truck as he fled from the shooting scene, a sheriff's spokesman said.

His truck burst into flames and Cowden was pinned inside the wreckage about three miles east of Jacksboro at the intersection of U.S. Highway 380 and Highway 199.

Cowden's daughter, Michelle Mann of Decatur, said her father "wasn't a lunatic or anything. He was just a depressed man."

The man left the plant offices Wednesday morning after he was told he had been dismissed, said sheriff's investigator Pat Howard. Cowden then returned at about 12:15 p.m. with a deer rifle and began shooting, Howard said.

Charles Kelley, 52, received two gunshot wounds in the abdomen and one in the right arm, and underwent surgery at Harris Hospital in Fort Worth, 30 miles away.

Wood jury may be impaneled soon

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Unless the defense figures out a way to stall it, a jury probably will be impaneled here by Friday to try the first three defendants in the U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. assassination case.

Chief U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions today continues his drive to select 17 more people to complete the pool from which the 12-member jury and three alternates will be chosen.

Sessions qualified 16 more people Wednesday and a total of 29 over two days of his individual questioning of prospective jurors. The pool will have 46 people.

He had excused a total of 20 during the first two days because they said they had formed opinions about the guilt or innocence of Charles V. Harrelson, Jo Ann Harrelson and Elizabeth Chagra, based on pretrial news reports.

Upon recess Wednesday, Sessions agreed to a request from defense attorney Warren Burnett that he turn over questionnaires received from 500 prospective jurors.

Court to consider at-large election plan

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court has set a Nov. 3 date for oral arguments on a small Texas town's request to overturn a lower court ruling that said its at-large city council elections discriminated against Hispanic candidates.

The case, the United States vs. the city of Lockhart, Texas, could have a large state and national impact. Hispanics say a victory for Lockhart would encourage other cities to enact election plans that effectively bar minorities from elective office.

"It is nearly impossible for a Mexican-American to win an election (under Lockhart's plan)," says Jose Garza, a lawyer for the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund, which last year won its suit against Lockhart in the U.S. District Court.

Lockhart, a town of about 8,000 people and about 30 miles southeast of Austin, is approximately 40 percent Hispanic. But only one Hispanic has been elected to the city council since 1972 when the city approved new election guidelines.

Under the Lockhart plan, each city council candidate runs for a specific seat, but must run in a citywide race.

MALDEF argues in its court brief that the plan "enhances the likelihood of racial targeting against Hispanic candidates." In short, there may be a lot of Hispanics in town but not enough to elect an Hispanic in a citywide election. The U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., last year ruled that the plan "effectively" discriminated against Hispanic candidates.

"It was obviously an attempt to keep Hispanics off the council," Garza says.

In 1979, the U.S. District Court in Texas ordered a permanent injunction against elections under the Lockhart system. The Supreme Court agreed last March to hear Lockhart's appeal.

The city claims that the new election plan actually gives Hispanics a greater opportunity to win a council seat because the old setup only had two seats open.

"We've helped the Mexican-Americans," says Walter Mizell, an Austin-based attorney who is representing the city. "The more slots you have, the more chances of getting elected."

Lockhart asks the Supreme Court to overturn the decision and return the case to the U.S. District Court to decide if the plan "intended" to discriminate. The city has won the support of the Justice Department, which has filed a brief with the court requesting the case be returned to the District Court.

Presidio County escapee captured at Marfa ranch

MARFA (AP) — Presidio County officials say a 31-year-old jail inmate who escaped by overpowering a guard he had tricked into entering his cell is back behind bars again.

Ezra Raiten of Israel was recaptured about noon Wednesday after a U.S. Border Patrol plane located him on a ranch five miles south of here, said chief deputy Dave Duncan.

Raiten, who is being held pending his transfer to Long Beach, Calif., on charges of fraud and forgery, was first spotted on the ranch by Santa Fe railway employees, Duncan said.

He said Raiten escaped after assaulting a jailer about 4 a.m. Tuesday. Jailer Robert Armendariz said Raiten had asked the guard to check for ants in his mattress.

Three indicted on arms charges

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — British arms dealer Ian Smalley and two other men have been indicted on federal charges of conspiring to export 8,300 missiles to Iraq and 100 tanks to Iran.

The indictments, returned Wednesday by a grand jury, also named David Bizzell, believed to be a native of Ireland, and Chris Territt, a British citizen.

Bizzell was indicted with Smalley on the tank-exporting charge, while Territt was accused with Smalley of conspiring to export missiles.

Damage believed about $125,000

SEMINOLE — The National Weather Service has made a determination that Tuesday night's wind storms which destroyed six mobile homes and injured 10 persons were the result of a tornado or tornadoes.

In an on-site inspection, NWS officials noted such tornadic occurrences as the moving of a mobile home 25 feet without it touching the ground in-between.

"Straight line winds would not do that," a spokesman for Midland's NWS office said this morning.

However, straight line winds — 50-80 knot winds which descend from clouds and maintain their speeds on a horizontal course for up to two miles as they reach the ground — also may have caused some of the damage in the 9-minute series of strikes in east and northeast Gaines County.

"We're assessing the damage right now at $125,000," Gaines County Judge Max Townsend said this morning. "All of the damage was done to trailer houses with the exception of a storage building at Cedar Lake, in the northeast corner of Gaines County. The only other damage I've had reported to me is a power line down in the northeast part."

Randy Rangel, 23, remained hospitalized today with lacerations sustained in the storm. He was listed in satisfactory condition by officials at Seminole Memorial Hospital, which admitted three persons and treated seven others at the emergency room Tuesday night.

A second NWS spokesman, while noting it is unusual for tornadoes to strike West Texas this time of year, indicated "it's almost impossible" to ascertain how many tornadoes struck Gaines County.

Gaines County resident Alton Pipkin was away from home Tuesday night when high winds picked up his mobile home, carried it about 20 yards and deposited it on top of his car. At least six mobile homes were destroyed by the storm, and as many as ten persons were injured. Some of the damage was blamed on several tornadoes, some on high wind.

Osteopathic college to honor County Commissioner Brown

FORT WORTH — Winfree L. Brown, Midland independent landman and county commissioner, will be honored by the Texas College of Osteopathic Medicine Friday for the leadership role he has filled with the college since 1979.

Brown, who is chairman of the North Texas State University Board of Regents that governs the Fort Worth medical school, will receive TCOM's highest honor, the Founders' Medal, given for contributions to medical education and health care.

Brown, who has been in the oil business in Midland since 1954, is running unopposed for his fourth term on the Midland County Commissioners Court, representing Precinct 4. He is active in the re-election campaign of Gov. Bill Clements this year as he was in 1978. He also works on the legislative and workmen's compensation committees of the Texas Association of Counties and has been appointed to a new task force to advise the governor on county government problems.

Under Brown's guidance, the board approved in 1980 TCOM's plan to become the first medical school in the United States to base its curriculum on health promotion and disease prevention instead of on after-the-fact disease.

Winfree Brown

TCOM, the only osteopathic medical school in Texas and one of only 15 in the nation, opened in 1970 as a private college and became state supported under the NTSU board in 1975.

Passenger flies helicopter so pilot can 'die in Texas'

HOUSTON (AP) — A helicopter pilot who suffered a fatal heart attack while flying home refused to stop for help in Arkansas because he wanted "to die in Texas," says a passenger who took over the controls and safely landed the craft.

K.W. Musgrove, who lives in the suburb of Deer Park, said he managed to land the helicopter Wednesday at two different farm houses in rural East Texas to summon medical help, but no one was home.

Musgrove, a student pilot with 15 hours experience, said he then taxied the helicopter to a brickyard about two miles north of Garrison. But by the time an ambulance was called Jolly R. Wheeler Jr., 39, also of Deer Park, had died, said Peace Justice Harold Bogue.

"I tried to get him to stop and get to a hospital, but he jokingly said, 'I want to die in Texas.' I said, 'Oh no, don't say that,'" Musgrove said.

"We finally stopped at a small airport about 20 miles from where he died and a lady there gave him some medicine. He said he would be all right," he said.

The two men were returning from a trip to Illinois, where Musgrove had purchased the helciopter, he said.

They spent Tuesday night in Bentley, Ark., where Wheeler complained of feeling ill and went to a hospital. Wheeler was told he probably had indigestion.

"He said they ran a test on his heart but found nothing wrong," Musgrove said.

As they were flying back to the Southeast Texas community of LaPorte on Wednesday afternoon, Wheeler complained of severe chest pains and asked him to take the controls, Musgrove said.

SIMS talks SENSE

"Crime"

In recent years we have watched Texas grow and grow as the word has spread about our healthy economic climate and our weather. Much of that growth has been good for our state and for this district.

But there are clouds on the horizon. Our healthy economy not only attracts the law abiding, but it is also a bright beacon for the lawless.

By and large, our criminal system works well. Texas is blessed with fine law enforcement agencies and officers. We must make sure that they continue to have the money and manpower to carry on their work.

We must also provide the incentives to speed up the court system and end the legal foot-dragging so that the criminal will know he faces swift and certain justice...

We must also make sure that we have the prison facilities to handle the rising criminal element, once the judicial system has had a chance to work.

But there is a more important element that we do not address here in Texas:

CRIME PREVENTION

Statistics show that most adults sentenced to prison have had more than one brush with our laws as a juvenile...I want the state to make more of an investment in our juvenile system to keep today's kids from becoming tomorrow's cons.

We can do that by reducing the case loads of juvenile probation officers who often have to cover many counties and act as truant officers as well. And, we can put the first-time juvenile offender under close supervision so that he doesn't become a repeater.

We can get tough about enforcing our school truancy laws so that parents fully understand they will be held responsible...This approach means that the parents become involved with truant children early. We can provide money for counseling both parents and child in cases of repeated truancy or juvenile crime...

There are no easy answers to the crime problem. I would be the last to tell you there are.

But any approaches to the problem should attempt to address the whole problem, not just bits and pieces.

A West Texan for our times.

Trooper living a nightmare

HOUSTON (AP) — When Texas Department of Public Safety patrolman James Wade objected to a traffic ticket quota system, he was, he said, branded a "renegade" and worse. His life turned slowly into a nightmare that continues still.

Wade, 37, was known as a man of unblushing, uncompromising dedication. His was not a job, but a calling, a personal crusade for public safety and service.

"I'm law enforcement officer," he says. "I eat it, I breath it, I sleep and wake with it. That's my life."

In 14 years as a trooper, those who know him say Wade built a reputation in Vidor, Texas, of respect, admiration and fondness.

"We referred to him as Uncle Jimmy," recalled trooper Roland Real of Vidor. "He was the guy you went to for help, the one you count on in any situation. He was the ideal."

WADE KNEW all of the local lawmen and judges. He helped to break in new supervisors. He was the center of the troopers' social gatherings. If there was a barbeque or a party being organized, Wade was there, helping bring it all together.

Wade was the steady veteran, the one whose word was taken as gospel by rookies just starting out. He helped train dozens of new men. Supervisors felt they could relax when he was on the job.

That began to change in 1978.

A new system of evaluating troopers started that year. According to Wade and other troopers, it was an informal, unspoken system based on numbers. Its focus was on the volumne of traffic tickets issued, though supervisors were quick to deny this.

"Everybody has to issue a certain number of tickets or your sergeant will get down on you," said trooper Lee Johnson.

No numbers were ever mentioned, say the troopers, but they found that, as Real put it, "there's a certain number of tickets you must write to stay in the good graces of your supervisor."

The "magic number", as the troopers call it, was discovered through trial and error. In some patrol areas, for instance, officers who issued 10 or more a day received good evaluations. Those who fell below that number were critized for "unsatisfactory volumne of work."

ONE SERGEANT even awarded certificates of approval or disapproval. Troopers issuing the "magic number" of tickets were given "Attaboy" citations. Those who didn't were given certificates citing their work as body waste.

Most troopers despised the system. It turned their work into a numbers game. No credit was given for service to the public. Things such as aiding a motorist stalled on a lonesome highway, or caring for the injured in an accident were ignored. The pressure was on numbers — issuing scores and scores of traffic citations was the way to get ahead.

The troopers grumbled and complained among themselves, but it fell to the veterans, such as "Uncle Jimmy," to carry the objections into official channels.

Wade did complain, again and again.

"I felt it wasn't good law enforcement," he said. "We weren't really doing our job. We were just chasing numbers."

The complaint, from a man such as Wade, touched a nerve. His evaluations turned sour. Relations with supervisors, as Wade put it, "chilled."

Wade's evaluations, always before recorded as "above average," suddenly slipped. He was accused of lax work and "an acute lack of allegiance to the department's objectives and programs."

IN MARCH 1981, Wade performed a duty that is routine for troopers working in the Orange-Beaumont office.

There is a roadside park between Orange and Vidor that has become a gathering place for homosexuals. Troopers are under instructions to patrol there occasionally to disperse gatherings.

"We all have to do that," said Real. "It's part of the job."

Wade made a routine patrol through the park on March 10 and thought nothing about it.

But a few days later, two citizens filed complaints, claiming that Wade, in full trooper uniform and driving a black-and-white patrol car, stopped there to make homosexual solitations.

To troopers who knew Wade, said Real and Johnson, the charges "were a big joke. Anyone who knows James Wade knows that the complaint was ridiculous."

But the department conducted an internal investigation and brought disciplinary charges against Wade. A hearing was ordered.

IN PREPARING his case, Wade took a polygraph examination, administered by the DPS, and passed.

The hearing was held in Austin on July 14, 1981, and Wade was found guilty of "using poor judgment." He was not able to confront his accusors, the two citizens who had filed the complaint. They refused to appear. But he was given three days' of suspension and placed on probation for six months.

It was after that, says Wade, that the true nighmare started.

A whisper campaign, he says, started, accusing him of being a homosexual. For a lawman in Texas it's the worst possible charge.

"You have to understand," said trooper Johnson, "that police officers are the most anti-gay group in the world."

A rumor that an officer is gay, he added, is devastating, professionally and personally.

Slowly, the rumors eroded his reputation, said Wade. Slowly, the attitude of fellow officers changed.

HE BECAME shunned and whispered about.

"At first, the people who knew James Wade took it as a joke," said trooper Real. "Then it got serious and out of hand. It's no joking matter now."

Real and Johnson said other troopers began talking about Wade. There were jokes and slurs. Some DPS superiors talked openly about Wade to lawmen in other agencies. The ripples spread.

And Wade suffered. He lost his appetite and his weight dropped by 60 pounds. He became nervous and couldn't sleep at night. He was suspicious of those around him.

"When you walk down the street, it makes you wonder what people are thinking about you," he said. "Sometimes I just want to crawl into a hole and hide."

When other troopers threw parties, the Wades weren't invited.

"HE WOULD have been in the middle of them in the past," said Real. "Now he's not included in anything."

The stress took a serious medical toll and Wade went under the care of a Houston doctor. He also sought psychological counseling.

This summer, Wade officially became a "morale" problem. A DPS inspector polled selected troopers about the veteran trooper. Few of those questioned knew Wade personally. A few days later, on June 16, 1982, Wade was ordered transferred to the Dallas suburb of Garland "for the good of the service."

It was the last straw. In July, Wade filed an $18 million slander and libel suit. Named as defendants were the DPS, Wade's sergeant, Charles Dorbandt, the Public Safety Commission and Col. James Adams, director of the DPS.

The suit charges that there was a "malicious" campaign to force Wade's resignation and that "such malicious intentions were publicized to other troopers and to individuals outside the Department in some detail."

Dittos are all doctors

Edward Ditto Jr. began the family tradition of practicing medicine here in 1920, opening general practice on the first floor of his home. He was followed by his son, Edward Ditto III.

The elder Ditto died in January, and his grandson, Dr. Allen Ditto, became the third generation of Ditto doctors in the city when he set up practice seven weeks ago.

Edward Ditto III, 58, says that when he was a boy, he was drawn to his father's office. "I used to go down to his waiting room and talk to his patients, which used to bother him," he said.

His curiosity extended to his father's medical books, which he started reading when he was 9. He says his father had to screen them because some "had naked women in them."

Edward Ditto eventually joined the Navy, working as a medical corpsman, and later earned a medical degree from his father's alma mater, Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia.

Eventually he returned here to set up an office next door to his father's, and each would seek medical advice from the other.

Princess Grace

Jimmy Stewart

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Princeaa Grace of Monaco "was about the nicest lady I ever met," actor Jimmy Stewart said at a small memorial service for the woman he knew as Grace Kelly.

The 74-year-old Stewart, who acted with her in Alfred Hitchcock's 1954 movie, "Rear Window," said he "just loved Grace Kelly."

"She brought into my life a soft, warm light every time I saw her," the tall, graying actor said in a eulogy Wednesday at a Roman Catholic Mass celebrated by Msgr. Daniel Sullivan at the Church of the Good Shepherd. About 50 people attended, including actor John Forsythe.

No member of the Philadelphia-born Princess Grace's family was there, said Rupert Allan, a friend and the Los Angeles Consul of Monaco, where the 52-year-old princess had lived with her husband, Prince Rainier III. She died Sept. 14, the day after suffering a stroke while driving on a mountain road.

"She rests serenely now," said Stewart, who lost another close friend when actor Henry Fonda died August 12. "So I guess we're going to have to keep in touch with her by prayer. God bless you, princess."

Grace Kelly appeared in only 11 films before marrying Prince Rainier in 1956 at the peak of her film career. Although known for her cool, patrician beauty, she won an Oscar for best actress for her role as the bitter wife of an alcoholic in "Country Girl" in 1954.

LITTLETON, Colo. (AP) — Former astronaut Jack Swigert compares his suffering from cancer to a "slight problem" that he and two crewmates had on the ill-fated Apollo 13 flight.

Swigert, 51, said Wednesday he is being treated for cancer of the bone marrow but is continuing his campaign for Congress.

He said at a news conference it was "slightly disappointing" to him when he learned of the malignancy.

"It was like being told 'we have a slight problem' on Apollo 13," Swigert said, referring to the third manned lunar mission in 1970 when he and fellow astronauts James A. Lovell Jr. and Fred W. Haise Jr. were forced to abort their flight halfway to the moon when an oxygen tank in the rear of the spacecraft exploded.

"Apollo 13 taught me that challenges are to be met and overcome," Swigert said.

He entered the hospital Sept. 16 to determine the cause of back pain, two days after he won the Republican nomination for the 6th congressional district. Dr. Bob Sawyer, his physician, said Swigert was found to be suffering from lymphoma that developed in the bone marrow. Swigert is undergoing drug therapy.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (AP) — Violinist Itzhak Perlman has been hospitalized for treatment of kidney stones, forcing postponement of a concert appearance here.

Perlman, who was to perform tonight at Proctor's Theater, is being treated at Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center in Manhattan, said theater spokeswoman Audrey Hughes.

The Schenectady concert has been rescheduled to Nov. 14 when 2,700 tickets sold for tonight's concert will be honored, Ms. Hughes said.

Lillian Carter

ATLANTA (AP) — Lillian Carter, the mother of former President Jimmy Carter, is back home after undergoing medical tests at Emory University Hospital.

Mrs. Carter, 84, entered the hospital for the tests last week. She was released Wednesday, said Emory spokeswoman Julia Hoye.

Jane Simpson, a spokeswoman for Carter, declined to say why the tests were performed because Mrs. Carter wished it to be "a private matter."

Ms. Hoye said Mrs. Carter was admitted for a physical examination, but she said no further information would be released.

"She's just elderly, and just (had) some complaints you should look into," Faye Dill, an employee of Carter's office in Plains, said earlier this week. "They just want to make sure she's OK."

Attorney gives tips on how to fly with jet-setters

NEW YORK (AP) — Just a few limousine lengths from the glitter of Fifth Avenue, 23 people sipped champagne as they spent an evening learning how to move up in life — to high society.

One tip from instructor Stephen M. Pollan: Give the impression you know about fashionable vacation spots you can't afford to visit by saying things like, "I would never spend August in Florence."

Another hint for would-be jet-setters: Don't smoke, drink moderately and leave the chewing gum at home with the polyester suit. And reading newspapers and books is a must because "people who don't know can't disguise it for long."

"No, really, I'm deadly serious about this," Pollan found himself telling his class of attractive and articulate adults Wednesday night. Much of what he said, however, was generously laced with blarney.

Pollan, a real estate consultant and attorney who admitted to having a fascination with being "with it," said social climbing is really "accelerating in life, getting places a little more quickly."

The two-hour class was sponsored by Network for Learning, a 3-year-old company that sells adult education courses in New York and Houston, as well as educational audio cassettes.

A successful social climber, Pollan said, has "reverence for symbols" and knows "how to get people to say 'yes' to you, making others conclude that you are intelligent, have good taste, are purposeful, are a leader."

"I've been dating a couple of very wealthy men, and I thought this might give me a few pointers," said Megan Spangeman, one of the students who paid $21 for the evening of social climbing tips.

Richard Zielinski, who said he has written a play and wants to interest a producer in it, was hoping for "just those one or two little keys that might get me the social climbing technique."

—Join a club, any club. "It's enough to be able to say, 'Meet me for lunch at my club,'" Pollan said. It's also a plus to include esoterica, like being able to say you're a member of the Boston Chamber of Commerce "if you live in New York."

—Buy stationery with your own letterhead.

—Sound as smart as you can about real estate, even if all you can afford is a one-room studio.

—Subscribing to an out-of-town newspaper can score points by giving you a store of unusual knowledge.

—Have a favorite charity and pay attention to it. "It makes a person a bit taller," Pollan said.

Good places to practice climbing, he added, are those spots where desirable people congregate — churches, health clubs, charitable organizations and, of course, adult education classes.

Majorette flunks weigh-in; Baton grounded

MONONGAHELA, Pa. (AP) — A high school majorette who flunked a weigh-in by just 24 ounces will be sitting in the stands at Friday night's football game because she didn't lose enough weight for her band instructor.

"I'm definitely marching next week," the 5-foot-4, 127½-pound junior promised after Wednesday's weigh-in. "One way or another, I will be out there. Even if I've got to sneak on the field, I'm going to be there. I'm not sitting on the bench again."

She was ordered by Ringgold High School officials to slim down to 126 pounds by Friday's game or not march with the school band.

To meet their demand, the 16-year-old began skipping meals and swallowing diet pills. Although she fasted before Wednesday's weigh-in, the scales tipped against her.

"I feel hurt. I really do. I really want to march," sighed Miss Ward, her dental braces shining. "I was a little bit upset, but I didn't cry or anything.

"I just stood there. They said, 'What do you think you can do about this?' I looked at them and I said I can't do anything about this. All I can do is diet."

Band instructor Joseph Cersosimo, who imposed weight restrictions on the high school's 17 majorettes and 23 drill team members last spring, declined comment following the weigh-in. John Esaias, principal of the school which is located in Monongahela just south of Pittsburgh, also refused to discuss the issue.

Miss Ward's mother, Marjorie, said her daughter weighed 127 pounds — in her pajamas — at home in Finleyville on Wednesday morning.

"She was dizzy and I made her stay home a while. But she wanted to go to school, she wanted to be weighed in," Mrs. Ward said.

"I've been hungry. But it's worth it," Miss Ward said.

The band instructor estimates that girls of 5 feet should weigh a maximum 100 pounds. He added 5 pounds for every extra inch, but gave the girls a little leeway.

So far, Miss Ward has been the only one affected by the rules.

Cersosimo has said there has been no pressure on the girls to keep their weight down. "If you don't make it this week, you can make it the following week," he said.

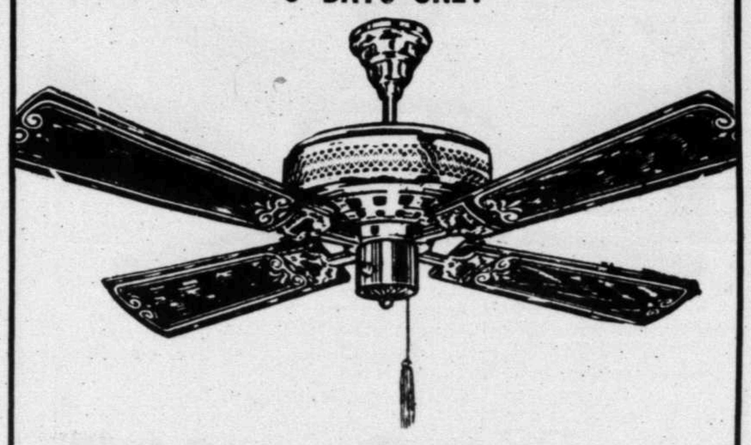

Although Miss Ward dropped from 138 pounds to 130 pounds, high school officials stopped her from marching in the first two games. She had to sit in the stands and help move the majorettes' props at halftime.

Miss Ward marched in the Sept. 17 game, at 130 pounds, after being told to lose two pounds last week and another two pounds this week.

She said she decided before Wednesday's weigh-in, however, to veer slightly from her strict diet for at least one night. Before she left for school, she placed the dinner order with her parents.

"I want a nice big salad with chicken and cheese in it," she said. "That'll suit me just fine since my stomach has shrunk."

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Pigs, as a general rule, practice a sedentary way of life. They wallow in mud. They eat. They wallow some more.

Besides procreating and dying, that's about all they do.

But a group of pigs housed in a small, austere room behind the College of Veterinary Medicine at Texas A&M University are an exception to the general rule.

These pigs work.

Four times a week, they climb up on a treadmill and run. And run. And run. For 30 minutes they run — at a pace calculated to be about 80 percent as fast as they possibly can run. They do this in the service of better health. Human health, that is.

The pigs are part of a research project designed to see whether exercise can decrease or even eliminate the buildup of fatty tissues known as plaque in the body's main artery. That plaque buildup leads to a condition called arterosclerosis.

When pieces of plaque break away from the arterial wall, they can clog smaller arteries in the heart, causing a heart attack. When the plaque material breaks off and clogs an artery in the brain, the result is a stroke.

"Since half a million people a year in the United States die of complications from this disease (arteriosclerosis) — either from heart attacks or strokes — it's a matter of considerable interest," says Dr. David R. Gross, a professor of verterminary physiology.

Gross is conducting the experiment along with Gijs van Oort, a Dutch-born doctoral student in health and physical education. The work is funded by the university's Center for Comparative Medicine.

Other researchers have posited a relationship between exercise and the elimination of fatty deposits in the arteries. But Gross says most of the evidence is based on studies of human populations, where it's impossible to isolate one factor and say positively that it's the cause of the healthy blood vessels.

"That's always the problem in any study done on humans," Van Oort says. "You can't control all the variables.

"But by using the animal model you can control all the variables," he said. "You can keep them all under the same conditions — same amount of stress, same temperature, same type of handling. The only thing different is the amount of exercise and the diet."

Van Oort and Gross have divided their collection of 20 miniature pigs into four groups. Pigs were chosen for the experiment because their cardiovascular system resembles that of humans and because, like humans, they are omnivores.

One group gets ordinary pig feed and does no exercise. A second group has regular feed and hits the treadmill for the workout four times a week. The third group gets a diet high in fat and cholestrol and does not exercise. The last group gets the high fat diet and exercises.

Gross describes the high-fat diets "equivalent to someone who ate very, very rich French food every day, along with a half-gallon of ice cream."

For eight weeks, the pigs eat. Then they are put on the treadmill for eight weeks of exercise.

The treadmill is an old machine designed for humans which Van Oort got from A&M's physical education department. He built a wooden cage around it to keep the animals on course and decorated the cage with — what else? — a portrait of the ineffable Miss Piggy.

The cage "looked pretty shabby in the beginning, so I had to do something to cheer it up," Van Oort says.

To entice the pigs to their labors, he places an Oreo cookie on the treadmill. He had learned from another researcher that pigs are quite partial to the popular cookie.

What Gross and Van Oort hope to see when the research project is completed is that the pigs on the high-fat diet who exercised have demonstrably less fatty tissue in their aortas than those who ate the rich diet but weren't exercised.

Eight pigs already have run through the 16-week experiment and their aortas have been extracted for inspection.

The preliminary evidence looks promising, officials say.

"Our impression is that exercise does cause less plaque," Gross said, "but we haven't completed all the necessary measurements yet, so we can't say for sure."

In the meantime, six of the remaining 12 pigs are preparing to don their running sneakers — at least figuratively — and chase that elusive Oreo in the name of Getting Fit.

Opening lead: Jack of ◇.

We have never been unqualified admirers of the weak no trump opening bid. But there is no denying that it produces surprising results — and not always in the way you might think!

This hand is from a recent European tournament. North's hand is the sort of 14 points that might not qualify for an opening bid. The doubleton spade honors are of doubtful value and the hand has only one ace and no king. South's decision to run from one no trump is a typical tactic of exponents of the weak no trump (try to escape before getting doubled), but why he chose two spades is beyond us. (We would have started with two clubs (Stayman) and, should partner deny a major, we would bid two hearts to give partner a choice of suits.) East made a balancing double and West was delighted at the prospects of defending two spades doubled.

Unfortunately, West's skill at selecting an opening lead did not measure up to the wisdom of his decision to defend the doubled contract. Had he started with the king of spades, he would have been able to draw declarer's trumps. Careful play in the minor suits would then have allowed the defenders to take all thirteen tricks, for a penalty of 1500 points.

A strange thing happened when West elected to lead the top of his diamond sequence. Declarer ruffed and took a heart finesse. That left him in dummy for another diamond ruff. There followed in quick order a heart to the queen, a diamond ruff, a heart to the ace and another diamond ruff. Declarer had scored the first seven tricks, and when he now led the thirteenth heart, there was no way he could be prevented from scoring the fulfilling trick with one of dummy's trump honors. Whether West ruffed high, low or not at all, the eighth trick was assured. Since this was tournament play, declarer scored 470 points instead of being set 1500 points. What a swing!

Running the lights

When Midland firetrucks and ambulances speed through city streets responding to emergencies, the danger to every motorist on those streets is greatly increased. Near-collisions aren't all that uncommon and from time-to-time collisions do occur.

That dangerous situation cannot be eliminated without sacrificing the response time of emergency vehicles. But it can be minimized and a new traffic light system now being installed in downtown Midland undoubtedly will help.

According to Fire Chief Raymond D. Lewis, changes currently are under way at 16 signalized intersections in downtown Midland. The changes being made will allow fire and ambulance personnel to control the lights as they approach them, turning red lights green and the lights of cross traffic lanes red.

Plans call for having all signalized intersections in Midland on the system within 18 months to two years at a cost of $360,000, said Chief Lewis.

The change will give emergency personnel a "green avenue" while responding to fires, wrecks and other emergencies, like last week's tragic plane crash and fire at Warwick Apartments. Private vehicles continued to move in some intersections, witnesses said, slowing emergency vehicles. But the new system should freeze traffic to allow the fastest movement of emergency vehicles through intersections, thus improving response time and, of course, safety for all those motorists on the streets.

"At 5 o'clock in the afternoon, trying to get through the downtown area is next to impossible," noted the fire chief. He also said many motorists refuse to yield to emergency vehicles as the law requires, greatly increasing the danger of a traffic accident.

While the change should be a great benefit both to the public and emergency personnel, a similar system is not being recommended or considered for the police department, said Chief Lewis, because police units typically do not respond to calls from a fixed location as do firetrucks and ambulances.

Motorists will not be inconvenienced by the change because after emergency vehicles change a signal's cycle and pass through the interseetion, the signal will return to its normal cycle in four to five seconds, the chief said.

This sounds like a good change that will improve the safety factor for all motorists during emergencies. It's needed. But it does not remove the need for each individual motorist to obey the law and yield to emergency vehicles.

Why skip Afghanistan?

A prestigious United Nations diplomat told a news conference the other day that he deplored the massacre in Beirut, but refrained from deploring the Soviet-inflicted deaths in Afghanistan.

These remarks were even more regrettable because the diplomat was none other than Imre Hollai of Hungary, the new president of the General Assembly. A man in that position is supposed to assail atrocities and oppression wherever they occur, rather than to pick and choose among them.

Not so Hollai. "The killings in Afghanistan are largely exaggerated compared to what is happening in Lebanon," he said. "The two situations are not comparable, not the same. It's shocking, the attempt to exterminate the Palestinian people, innocent people."

That several hundred people were massacred in Lebanon is shocking, indeed. But one would assume the gentleman would consider it at least equally shocking that several thousand Afghans have been killed by Russian invaders.

By failing to condemn the fighting in Afghanistan, Hollai abandoned the independence expected of a man in his position. The U.N., after all, is supposed to stand for indiscriminate peace.

In fairness to Hollai, it should be mentioned that he expressed concern over "mass violations" of human rights in his opening speech at the U.N. In fairness to principle, he should not have singled out Lebanon and discounted Afghanistan in his attack on those who wage war against the innocent and the helpless.

Another View:

The best weapons?

How good are the multi-billion-dollar weapons the Pentagon plans to buy? That subject was stirred up again the other day by public release of a year-old Army report on field testing of the controversial M1 tank.

Whether or not the tests show that the M1 is a wise investment for the $20 billion involved, it's the general question that is more interesting: is defense decision-making sufficiently open to the possibility that, no matter how much money has already been spent, experience may show that some weapons ought to be junked — or greatly modified — before more money is wasted?

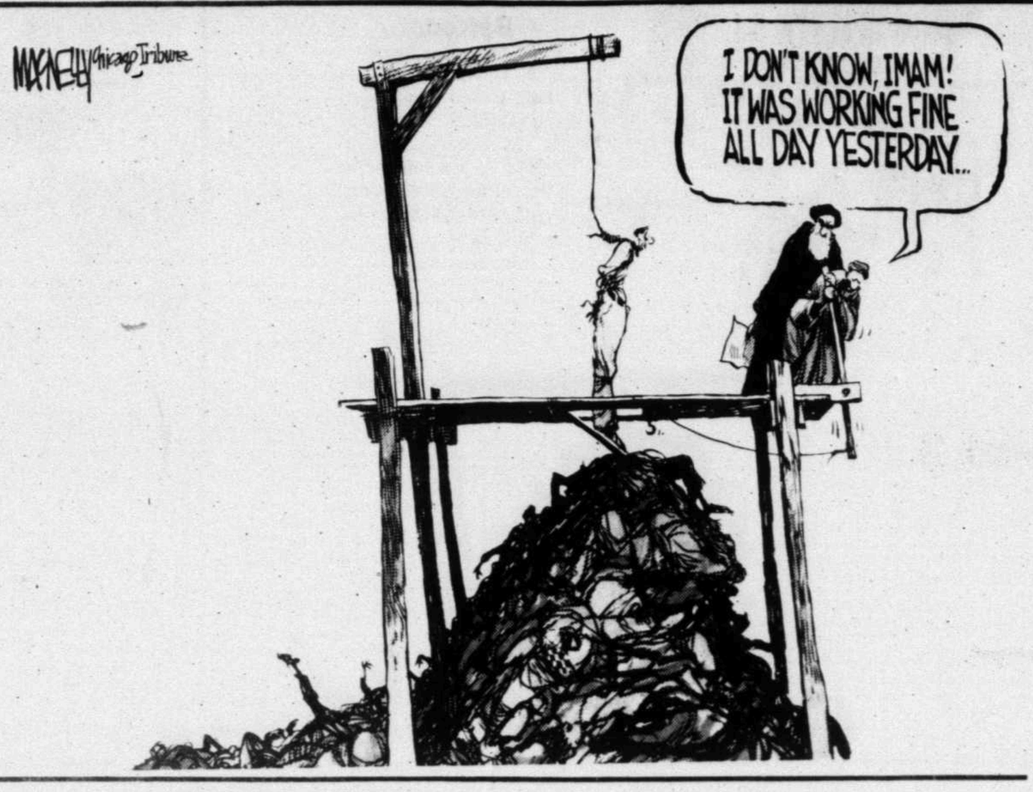

For some years now, the General Accounting Office, special defense advisory panels and academic critics have asserted that weapons testing within the Pentagon is not rigorous enough. Test findings are ignored or explained away in the powerful drive within the bureaucracy and the defense industry to move weapons systems into full production as quickly as possible.

Realistic field tests are not normally conducted until after the decision to start weapon production has been made. Testing organizations within each of the services and at the departmental level have independent access to the people who will make the decisions, but by the time their tests are completed, much time, money and prestige have already been invested in the project. At that point, test advisers can't do much but insist on certain modifications, even if their findings call the whole weapons project into doubt. Reagan administration moves to give more control over weapons development to the individual services — where the commitment to particular weapons is traditionally strongest — may further reduce the testers' influence.

Pentagon managers argue that the system has a strong built-in check: the weapons it produces must ultimately be used by its own forces. But the actual field deployment of a weapons system in combat is far removed in time and responsibility from the decision-makers who guide the budget process. In any case, making sure that, for example, a tank won't burn up its occupants is only one aspect of determining that the best possible weaponry is being bought for the available money.

One frequent proposal, soon to be introduced as legislation by Sen. David Pryor, is to set up a test office totally independent of the rest of the Pentagon bureaucracy. That might help raise the visibility of testing, but it's not likely in itself to produce better decisions. What's really needed is a commitment by congressional committees and top Pentagon officials to ask tough and thorough questions at the right time and, further, to be prepared to accept inconvenient or disagreeable answers. That, of course, also means not worrying about how much money has already been misspent or whose reputation is on the line or whether the Pentagon won't get as much money as it hoped for next year.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Los Alamos nepotism report causes stir

WASHINGTON — Bureaucrats at the Los Alamos National Laboratory responded to my recent exposure of nepotism at the nuclear research facility in typical fashion: They attempted to uncover the whistle blowers, instead of taking steps to correct the abuses.

Jack Anderson

Officials pored over telephone records of the New Mexico lab in a desperate attempt to find out who had talked to my associate John Dillon. And what terrible secrets had been compromised? That officials had given cushy jobs to their relatives at a time when less favored employees were being laid off.

Los Alamos spokesman Jim Breen said the search of phone records was done to determine whether employees were making unauthorized calls to my office on the Federal Telephone System (FTS). "We have reason to believe FTS may have been used," he said. "It is a criminal violation."

In hopes of preventing any further waste of time and effort, I can assure the vengeful bureaucrats their telephone search was doomed from the start. None of my sources called from laboratory telephones.

Fortunately for the taxpayers and Los Alamos workers, my report inspired other, less perverted investigations of the situation at the laboratory. The investigators are going after the substance of the charges, not trying to unmask the whistle blowers.

A Hispanic rights group, the American G.I. Forum, asked the United States attorney to look into Los Alamas hiring practices. And the Energy Department, which oversees Los Alamos, has launched an investigation by its inspector general.

Spokesman Breen said that the lab itself had requested the U.S. attorney's investigation of the G.I. Forum's complaint, and added that laboratory officials will cooperate fully. Breen said he was not aware of the separate inspector general's investigation.

A spokesman for the inspector general said he could neither confirm nor deny that an investigation was under way. But my sources say the I.G., while focusing primarily on alleged abuse of travel allowances by lab personnel, is also scrutinizing hiring practices at Los Alamos.

Meanwhile, I have further examples of nepotism for the bureaucrats and the investigators to chew over.

One case I reported was the hiring of Susan Gilmore, the stepdaughter of Rosemary Harris, associate director for administration, whose office is responsible for hiring and firing, among other things. Disgruntled employees said Gilmore was hired over more qualified candidates, but Harris denied she pulled any strings for her stepdaughter.

Now I've learned that David Chastain, the stepdaughter's husband, was hired last July as a $2,900-a-month laboratory engineer, even though he does not have a New Mexico engineering license. The Los Alamos spokesman confirmed this, but said "many" of the 879 other engineers at the facility don't have state licenses either. He said the job opening was advertised.

Chief administrator Harris' father, Dr. Payne Harris, also works at Los Alamos. A physician, he originally worked at the laboratory from 1954 to 1962. He was an unpaid consultant in 1979, and became a paid consultant last year.

Dr. Harris has been working under a contract, which extends through the end of the fiscal year today, that pays him $295 for each day he works for the lab, with total yearly compensation not to exceed $20,000. The contract also includes a $5,000 travel budget.

The Los Alamos spokesman said Harris assists the legal staff in litigation brought by former employees claiming to have suffered radiation exposure from atomic tests at the facility during the 1940s and 1950s. "He's one of the few people who can provide historical data," the spokesman explained, adding that Harris' consulting fee is "pretty cheap for a medical doctor."

PROLETARIAN PROBLEM: The "workers' paradise" is facing a critical labor shortage. A CIA report predicts that the Soviet Union's work force will increase by less than 300,000 a year by 1986, compared to an average increase of 2.3 million a year in the 1970s.

"The prospect of a labor shortage is especially painful for Soviet planners, because up to now the share of labor's contribution to growth generally has been larger than in other developed countries, while the contribution of productivity has been smaller," the CIA explains. The report, reviewed by my reporter Michael Binstein, lays the blame for this reverse situation on the Soviets' notoriously backward technology.

A major factor in the lagging working-age population is the rising mortality rate among adult males due to alcoholism, industrial accidents and cardiovascular disease, the CIA reports.

What can the Kremlin do? Possibilities include pushing workers into certain industries, cracking down on absenteeism and on-the-job drunkenness, increasing the birth rate, shifting investment capital to areas of surplus labor like Central Asia, and making the huge investments needed to automate currently labor-intensive industries. But all of this will take time, the CIA notes.

Increasing workers' productivity would be an obvious solution to the coming labor shortage, but there's a serious roadblock: lack of incentive. Increasing the wages of good workers has been tried and has failed; because of shortages of food and consumer items, they already have too little to spend their money on.

GEORGE F. WILL

Christianity is good news, not good advice

George F. Will

It lives.
Forever.
Rejoice.

"It" is the 1928 Prayer Book, which recently suffered revisions much resented by the authors of those billboard messages.

Those messages were aimed at some Episcopalians by other Episcopalians during the church's recent triennial General Convention in New Orleans. Taken singly, Episcopalians are creatures of brio, gusto and zip, and whenever two or more are gathered together they become a seething cauldron of the improving spirit. This year, when thousands descended on New Orleans, that dangerous spirit was focused on the hymnal.

Churches should be rocks in the river of time, but recently many of them have been corks swept hither and yon with eddies of opinion. Hence, whenever a church undertakes change there is an understandable tendency to suspect it of trendiness. Certainly I, whose motto is "Change, forsooth!", am disposed to think the worst.

But the changes in the hymnal seem, by and large, to have been undertaken for serious — which is to say theological — reasons, rather than for reasons of political or other fashion. The signs of seriousness, including those somewhat defiant billboards, are pleasing.

It is said that whereas Roman Catholics claim to be infallible, Episcopalians claim only to be always right. They are not, but at least they did nothing very naughty in revising the 1940 hymnal.

They may have been overscrupulous in expunging Kipling's reference to "lesser breeds without the law" (which I like to think refers to the House of Representatives). There was a large dollop of consciousness-raising nonsense in the campaign against "sexist" language. But in "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," this line survived: "Time, like an ever-rolling stream bears all its sons away." And when someone suggested that "God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen" should become "God Rest You Merry, My Good Friends," people laughed until their ribs complained.

More interestingly, two baptismal hymns were dropped because they assume that persons being baptized are infants. Those hymns have been replaced by hymns suitable when adults are involved. Because God offers more than one chance for forgiveness, the revisers dropped James Russell Lowell's hymn:

Once to every man and nation
Comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood,
For the good or evil side.

A press release issued at the General Convention (you don't get this sort of release at Democratic or even Republican conventions) says: "Neo-Platonic references to the fleshspirit duality of human nature have also been expunged," as in the references to human beings as "Dumb, in the life of the body confined," and longing to "soar as the birds from the mesh freed from the weakness and wonder of flesh."

The hymn "Turn back, O Man, Forswear Thy Foolish Ways" expresses, in those words, a sensible thought. But a few stanzas later the Pelagian heresy creeps in. Condemned in the 5th century — one of the soundest centuries — this heresy holds that the initial and fundamental steps toward salvation are made by human effort unassisted by grace. With the Pelagian heresy being battled in New Orleans (near the French Quarter, a nest of Neo-Platonists who insist on the duality of spirit and flesh, and are preoccupied with the latter), there is hope for the 20th century.

Theological vigor, including disagreement, is a sign of overflowing life. Even blasphemy (wrote G.K. Chesterton) depends on strong faith. "If anyone doubts this, let him sit down seriously and try to think blasphemous thoughts about Thor. I think his family will find him at the end of the day in a state of some exhaustion." Theological seriousness may be divisive, or may impede the elimination of long-standing divisions. But there is no value to any ecumenicism made possible by tepidness about doctrine.

To the extent that theology is taken seriously, to that extent churches have an anchor against the pull of political and other fads. Roman Catholic leaders say — or at least they used to — "Pensiamo in secoli" ("We think in centuries"). Unfortunately, there is today a tendency among religious leaders to try to identify Christianity with (or extract from it) a contemporary political agenda of the left or right: prayer in public schools, or a nuclear freeze, or this, or that.

A new study indicates that in the 1970s, for the first time in at least three decades, church membership declined relative to population. Church leaders preoccupied with politics should remember Dean Inge's admonition: "Christianity is good news, not good advice."

ART BUCHWALD

Politicos get best mud they can buy!

"Negative Political Ad Agency, may I help you?"

"This is Chaps Dunbar. I'm running for senator this November and I was calling to inquire about your negative political ad campaigns."

Art Buchwald

"Slinger, my campaign seems to be in a little bit of trouble and I was hoping your people could come up with a few dirty TV commercials to help me get well in the polls again? I was very impressed with the one I saw the other night for Bill Damadun, in which you filmed an actor who looked like his opponent, Horace Lager, pushing an old lady down the stairs in her wheelchair and a voice said, 'That is Horace Lager's answer to Social Security.'"

"Yes. We're very proud of that one ourselves. We had to use six old ladies before we got it right. Thank God for Medicare or we would have gone over budget. Do you know we had more protests on it than any negative commercial we've ever done? But our surveys indicate that 87 percent of the people now believe Lager pushes old ladies down the stairs."

"What can you do for me?"

"He's a former congressman named Flap who has been traveling around the state promising the people jobs, prosperity and an honest government — the usual stuff. Trouble is, he looks like a young Jimmy Stewart and the people think he can do it."

"You got any dirt on him we can use in a TV Commercial?"

"What else?"

"Okay, we'll take the testimonial approach. We won't show Flap in your commercials. But we'll show people who support him."

"What's so dirty about that?"

"Well get a clip of Castro ranting and raving and waving his hands. Then underneath we'll run subtitles of what he's supposed to be saying — something like, 'If Americans elect Congressman Flap to the Senate, you will make me the happiest dictator in the world.'"

"That's pretty negative. I'll tell you what seems to be a big issue here. Crime in the streets."

"We can hang that one on Flap. We'll show a guy being mugged in the park, and then we'll show a clip of Flap smiling and shaking hands with workers as they leave the gate of a factory. Our announcer will intone, 'Congressman Flap cares more about freeing criminals than he does about protecting the victims of crimes.'"

"Most factories look like prisons, and nobody will know the people he is shaking hands with aren't inmates."

"That is about as dirty as you can get," Chaps chuckled.

Slinger said, "Did you see the mean one we ran last week, in which we used the ex-wife of Dick Tanquery, who is running for Congress, and she said into the camera, 'I lived with him for 20 years, now you people can live with him for two.'"

"I loved it. Particularly when she showed the bruises on her arms. You people really are experts when it comes to slinging mud."

"Any candidate who thinks he can win an election these days by being affirmative is crazy."

"How much do you charge?"

"Our standard 60-second smear is $15,000. If you want us to film a look-alike of your opponent sticking up a Brink's truck, or running over a dog it will be five grand extra."

"I'm willing to spend the extra money. No one will ever say when Chaps Dunbar ran for office he didn't go first class."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 30, 1946, an international military tribunal in Nuremberg, Germany, found 22 top German Nazi leaders guilty of war crimes, and 11 were sentenced to death.

On this date:

— In 1846, Boston dentist William Morton made the first use of ether as an anesthetic.

— In 1949, Pakistan and Yemen were admitted to the United Nations.

Ten years ago: U.S. fighter bombers destroyed 14 planes in heavy strikes against four air bases in North Vietnam.

Five years ago: The United States and Soviet Union pledged to use their utmost efforts toward bringing about a Mideast peace.

Tougher drunken driving laws Congressional goal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is moving rapidly to complete action on legislation designed to encourage states to toughen their laws against drunken driving, which is a leading cause of highway deaths.

The bill was passed by the House on a voice vote Wednesday and sent to the Senate, which passed similar legislation earlier this year.

The House version would establish a three-year, $125 million grant program for states that move to combat drunken driving.

In order to get the bill to the White House for President Reagan's signature before Congress recesses Friday, Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., chief sponsor of the Senate measure, said the Senate would adopt the House version.

"The cornerstone of this legislation is really very simple: to make our drunk driving laws an effective deterrent by ensuring that penalties will be swiftly and surely meted out — without exception — in all cases," said Pell.

"It is the certainty of the sanction, rather than the severity of it, that is the key to an effective deterrent; indeed, if punishment is too severe, judges and prosecutors will refuse to invoke it," he said.

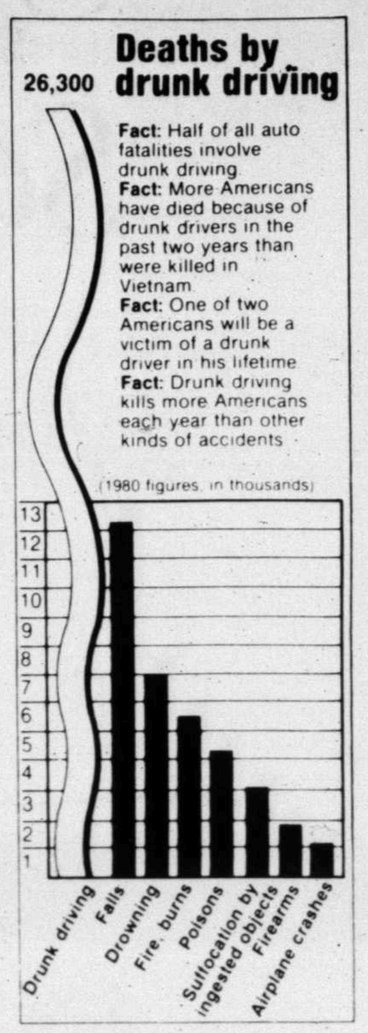

Under the legislation, states would be eligible for highway safety grants by satisfying four basic criteria.

The measure includes an automatic 90-day license suspension on first offense and a one-year license suspension for any repeat offense; a mandatory 48-hour jail sentence or 10 days of community service for a second offense within a five-year period; the establishment of 0.10 percent level of alcohol in the bloodstream as "per se" evidence of intoxication; and increased enforcement of a state's drunken driving laws.

A House aide said only two states, Iowa and West Virginia, now could meet the four basic criteria necessary to receive the federal funds. However, he said, Delaware is near reaching the criteria.

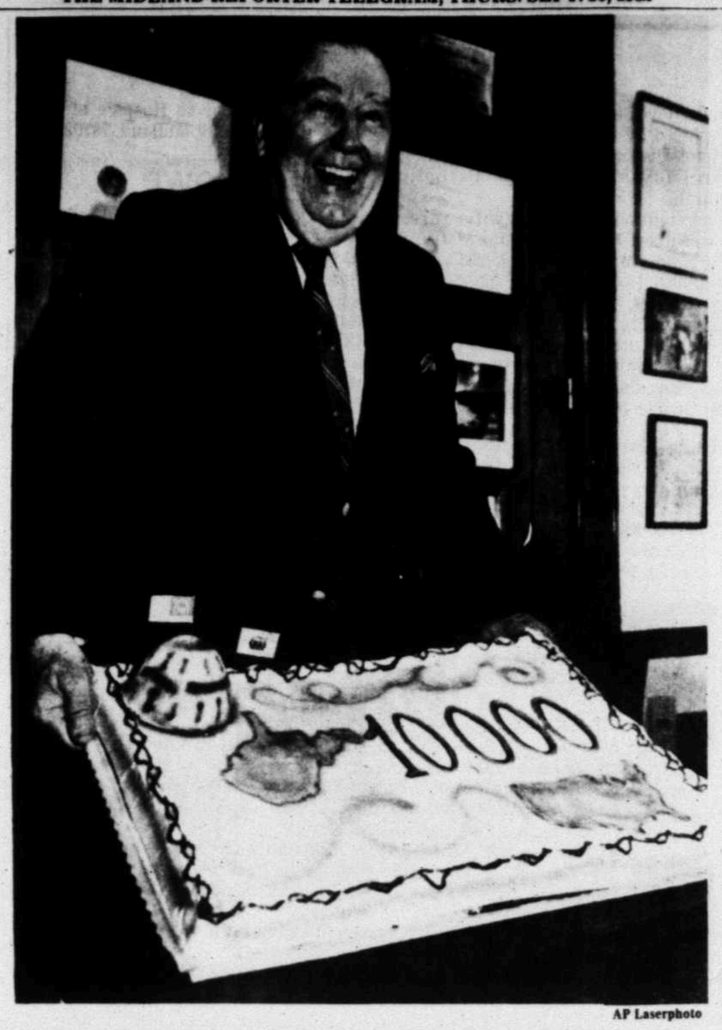

Eight other states would have to change their administrative practices to make sure a drunken driver gets his license suspended. Those states are Alaska, Arizona, Florida, Illinois, Maine, Minnesota, Utah and Washington.

Pell and the House sponsors, Reps. James J. Howard, D-N.J., and Michael D. Barnes, D-Md., said the legislation is necessary because drunken driving is responsible for at least half of the 50,000 highway deaths each year and for 125,000 permanent injuries annually.

Pell also said that drunken driving causes an estimated $17 billion annually in medical, rehabilitation, and insurance costs; lost income and lost tax revenues; property damage; and police and emergency services.

"Our nation's number one highway safety problem is drunk driving, and our legislation will establish a strong national deterrent to reduce the senseless and tragic loss of life caused by drunk drivers," said Pell.

Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W. Va., was presented a cake Wednesday to celebrate the 10,000th roll call of his 38-year congressional career. The 80-year-old West Virginian served seven terms in the House before moving to the Senate in 1958. His first roll call vote, in favor of the election of Henry T. Rainey of Illinois as House speaker, was recorded March 9, 1933. Wednesday Randolph voted to table an amendment to a continuing resolution.

Chauffeur users receive latest Golden Fleece

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government officials who travel by chauffeur-driven cars are being "coddled and pampered" at a cost to taxpayers of $3.4 million a year, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., charged today.

"Only a handful of federal officials are specifically given the authority under law to enjoy home-to-work chauffeuring," Proxmire said. "But my survey of federal agencies demonstrates that the lack of legal authority has not stopped scores of federal officials from hopping into the backseat."

Proxmire, a physical fitness advocate who runs to work every day, awarded his "Golden Fleece" for September to the 190 federal officials who use chauffeur-driven cars. The award is intended to single out wasteful government spending.

The list is headed by President Reagan. But Proxmire noted that the president is specifically entitled by law to use of a chauffeur at all times.

But he said the law limits use of chauffeured cars for most others to official business. That shouldn't include going back and forth to work, Proxmire asserted.

"At an annual average cost of $32,000 for this personal convenience, the American taxpayers are being billed enough to provide these bureaucrats with over 5,000 roundtrip rides in a taxicab from Capitol Hill to Georgetown each and every year," he said.

Computer firm takes Medicaid service case to appeals court

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)— Attorneys for a California computer company have gone to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to try and prevent cancellation of the firm's $23 million contract to process Tennessee's Medicaid claims.

Computer Sciences Corp., of El Segundo, Calif., appealed to the Cincinnati court on Wednesday after U.S. District Judge John T. Nixon denied the company's request for a preliminary injunction to stop the termination of the contract at midnight tonight.

Nixon made his ruling Monday and refused Tuesday to reconsider his decision.

CSC, which won the five-year contract to handle Medicaid claims for Tennessee beginning Jan. 1, 1982, argues that ending the contract would irreparably harm the company's reputation and that the pact was canceled illegally.

State officials canceled the contract on grounds that CSC failed to live up to the agreement. On Friday, the state plans to turn the job of processing claims over to Electronic Data Systems Federal of Dallas. EDSF formerly had the contract to process Tennessee Medicaid claims, but was underbid by CSC for the current contract.

Meanwhile, Attorney General William Leech and other officials were considering going to Chancery Court to try to force CSC to provide essential computer tapes and files to EDSF.

County clerk candidate aces primary

EUREKA, Nev. (AP) — The ace of spades defeated the seven of hearts as a winner was declared in the Democratic primary for Eureka County clerk.

Charlotte Crutchley drew the ace Wednesday to take the party nomination over opponent Dorothy Moyle as the two candidates settled their election tie according to county law — by lot.

Mrs. Crutchley was originally declared the winner by one vote in the Sept. 14 primary.

Midland man to be retried in theft

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 29-year-old Midland man who "enjoyed the finer things in life" may have another chance at "the high life" after the Texas Court of Appeals reversed his conviction of theft of scotch and other liquor by check in 1981.

The defendant, Rickie Charles Harris, was ordered to be re-tried in the case. He was found guilty by jury in Midland's 142nd State District Court of writing two "hot" checks of $132.79 and $73.19 on Jan. 19 and Jan. 20, 1981, at B&B Liquor Store in Midland, was sentenced to 15 years in prison and was fined $7,500.

Harris was indicted for thieving, by personalized checks, "two half gallons of Chivas Regal scotch whisky and other merchandise" on Jan. 19 and "one half-gallon of Chivas Regal and other merchandise" the next day.

But in a 2-1 vote by the appellate court in El Paso, the conviction was reversed and a new trial was ordered primarily on the grounds that the indictment was not specific enough. In addition to the three half-gallon bottles of scotch specified in the indictment, the indictment only cited "and other merchandise, the exact name and number and kind of which is unknown to the grand jury."

In reversing the judgment of the trial court and ordering a new trial, the appellate court said the grand jury should have inquired into the "other merchandise" and specifically named it.

The state had combined the two checks, which were written on Harris' closed checking account at The Midland National Bank, in order to make the thefts a felony — theft of more than $200.

In the majority opinion by Associate Justice Charles R. Schulte, "The State failed to sustain its burden of showing the grand jury exercised reasonable diligence in its attempt to discover the nature of the items taken on January 20."

The appellate court held that the state failed to identify to the grand jury the "other merchandise" which Harris allegedly bought in addition to the three half-gallons of scotch whisky, which Justice Schulte noted were worth $33 each.

Richard Scott, the B&B Liquor Store clerk, had testified in the trial that Harris "took two bottles of scotch and 'some other stuff' on Jan. 19...(and) took a half-gallon bottle of vodka and an assortment of drink mixes on Jan. 20," Schulte said in his majority opinion.

The indictment only named the three half-gallon bottles of the scotch whisky and did not specify the "other merchandise."

"No evidence shows the grand jury attempted to inquire about the nature of this other merchandise," Schulte wrote, "and no explanation for the jury's failure to call Scott as a witness was offered."

In his dissenting opinion, Chief Justice Stephen F. Preslar wrote that he viewed the "other merchandise" phrase in the indictment as "immaterial" when "the proof (at trial) showed that some of the other merchandise was vodka."

Jim Rex, an assistant district attorney who was a co-prosecutor in the Harris trial, said that Harris either would be tried again on the B&B Liquor Store case or on another hot-check case.

Harris was convicted of theft by check in 1978 after he had pleaded guilty to writing checks of $50, $25, $100 and $100 in March 1978 to M-System supermarket and was sentenced by Judge Perry D. Pickett to three years in prison. Judge Pickett, who then was judge of the 142nd State District Court for Midland County, has retired from the bench and has been succeeded by Judge Pat Baskin, who presided over the 1981 Harris trial.

After Harris' conviction by jury last year, the office of District Attorney Vern Martin had moved for dismissal of another theft-by-check case against Harris. Checks, dated Jan. 23, 1981, were written on the same bank account as were the checks in 1978 and on Jan. 19 and 20 to B&B Liquor Store.

In the dismissed indictment, Harris was accused of writing checks for $177.42 and $42 in purchasing designer blue jeans and vests, sports shirts and jackets from Jeans West.

In another dismissed case against him, Harris was charged with writing a hot check for $291.67 in purchasing a television set, a pillow case, two towels and two blankets from Montgomery Ward & Co. department store.

In yet another case, he was cleared of forging a $191 check on the account of Roto Drilling Co. in 1980.

"He (Harris) just enjoyed the finer things in life," prosecutor Rex had said at the 1981 trial, "and his (hot-check writing) was the only way he had of getting them." Co-prosecutor Rob Sutphen had said that Harris was "living the high life" as long he could.

Four-nation satellite system locates missing people

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Soviet satellite high over the Canadian wilderness detected an emergency radio beacon from a crashed plane, triggering a search operation that rescued three injured people who might otherwise have died.

The Sept. 10 rescue was the first payoff from a four-nation program to develop space systems to locate aircraft and ships missing or in distress. The Russians and Americans are building the satellites, while France and Canada are contributing ground stations and electronic equipment for the U.S. payload.

The Soviet spacecraft, COSPAS 1, was launched June 30 as the first element in the network. The first American search and rescue gear is to be fired into orbit on Feb. 15, riding piggyback on a weather satellite.

Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration discussed the Canadian rescue operation and the operation of the system at a briefing Wednesday at the nearby Goddard Space Flight Center, which manages the international effort.

Displaying a chart of squiggly lines — a readout from COSPAS 1 — Bernie Trudell, mission manager at Goddard, pointed to a curved signal line and said: "There is a piece of data that changed the fate of three lives."

THE TRACE OF the curve pinpointed the location of the emergency beacon from the downed plane. The satellite signal was relayed to a tracking station in Ottawa, which transmitted the information to the Air Station Search and Rescue Terminal in Trenton, Ontario.

Within hours, a Buffalo search aircraft was over the spot in a remote mountainous area of British Columbia. It sighted the wreckage of the small Cessna 172 among 50-foot trees.

One of the survivors, Gary Van Amelsvoort, later told the Toronto Star: "We did a helluva lot of praying up there. We had some mirrors, and we flashed them to try to attract the attention of the pilot of the Buffalo. We had a fire going and we threw everything we could on it to create smoke.

"Finally, when we saw those guys parachuting down to us, it was just too much," he said. "They took a great chance. They could have been killed. It was very rugged country."

The Canadian team's report on the rescue concluded: "The survivors would probably have gone into shock and the pilot may not have survived beyond three or four days without medical attention." All recovered from their injuries.

A Canadian Armed Forces official speculated that the reason the satellite — and not an earlier search plane — got the signal is that it was high enough to avoid natural interference in the 7,000-foot mountains.

TRUDELL SAID the Americans and Canadians began working on the joint project in 1976 as a means of saving lives and reducing the cost of search operations.

NEW YORK — If Frank Masandrea could have his way, he'd design one collection whose only criterion for success was beauty.

"I'd like to do one collection that I didn't have to worry about selling," said Masandrea over coffee in his fabric-cluttered office in Manhattan. "I'd use only the most beautiful fabrics, the best techniques. It's hard to predict what the fashion will be five years from now, but if I could do it, it would only involve the best of everything."

Getting to the point where he can think seriously about doing "only the best" has been a slow, careful climb for Masandrea, who is 35. After five years as a ready-to-wear designer, he has just signed his first licensing contract — with Manhattan Industries — for a sportswear line and is looking around for other things to do with his talents. One project, said Masandrea, who likes cooking gourmet meals for himself, his friends and his three cats, may be a cookbook and book of table settings.

BORN IN BROOKLYN, Masandrea graduated from the High School of Art and Design, then went on to study fashion design at the Fashion Institute of Technology. During his two-year stint at F.I.T., Masandrea worked summers in the display department at Lord & Taylor, a job that led to an opportunity to do some free-lance designing.

"I was real lucky because a buyer asked me to do some sketches for a bridal manufacturer," he explained. "And he liked the sketches and manufacturered them."

That was the beginning of Frank Masandrea, designer. "I had never had any plans about being a bridal designer," Masandrea said. "When I graduated in 1967, they asked me to come do it full time so I said to myself 'Why not? It's a job.' The pay was good, and, besides, everybody usually starts as an assistant or an apprentice, so to start as a full-fledged designer was a big thing. I was doing very avant-garde things and very modern-looking clothes when at the time everybody else was doing very traditional-looking dresses."

Masandrea thought he would be designing bridal clothing for only a "few years"; it turned out to be almost 10 years altogether.

"Every time I wanted to leave I would get a better job offer with a better house," he explained. "It was getting more and more successful, and I was getting a lot of credit, so I stuck it out until '70."

TWO YEARS AFTER he began, he said, he had to quit. "I broke out," he explained, laughing. "I left for two years. I figured that I was 21 years old, and now was my chance to make it in the big time on Seventh Avenue. I mean I really was sophisticated."

To test his "sophistication," Masandrea took a job as a coat designer with Modelia, then owner of Anne Klein and Co. and one of the largest coat and suit manufacturers on Seventh Avenue. It was what he calls "the year of the great midi fiasco."

The job didn't last. "The line was accepted, and I was doing well," he said. "But I felt like a commodity. There was no personal attention. I was used to such close relationships with my bosses in bridal and to feeling very good about my work; but, with these people every time something would go wrong there were screams and fights. I wasn't ready emotionally to put up with all that. I discovered I really wasn't ready for the rigors of Seventh Avenue and how they can be. I just was not that attuned. I was still very up in the clouds."

Fortunately, his old boss was still around, and Masandrea was able to flee back into the world of brides and bridesmaids for another seven years.

DURING THAT TIME Masandrea met and went to work for his present partner, Steve Lawrence, at the House of Belena, a leading bridal house.

"I took them through everything," he said. "From miniskirts with lace boots on Ali McGraw to barefoot brides to gypsy brides to everything. And I was approaching 30, and I really came to that point where I was deciding, 'What are you going to do with your life? You'd better move now or it'll be too late.'"

But, he said, it was Bob Sakowitz of the Sakowitz department stores in Texas who gave him the clue as to where to go next when he asked to buy Belena's bridesmaid dresses to sell in Sakowitz' evening wear department. At that point Lawrence and Masandrea got together and set up a dress department.

"I'd said as much in bridal as I could say," he explained. "I didn't feel there was anything more to be contributed. I wanted to get on to doing different things — I think that's what makes life interesting and challenging."

But, Masandrea said, he didn't burn his bridal bridges right away. For two years — until the Masandrea dress line got successful enough to demand more and more of his time — he did bridal collections along with his ready-to-wear.

LOOKING BACK on his years as a bridal designer, Masandrea said he realizes how good it was for him to begin his career in that way. "All those years that I was in bridal most of my friends were in ready-to-wear," he explained. "And I just sort of sat back as an observer, and I watched designers come and go, get hot and get cold and saw what made this one good and what ego did to some people and what success did to some people and I got a lot of insight into what this business is about.

"I learned how, if I should ever go into it, to keep my head. Because being into it is extremely difficult. I think that had I started when I was 21 and thought I knew everything, I never would have made it. Because now I know how little I really know."

If working on Seventh Avenue and living with its customs and worries were once difficult for Masandrea, designing never was. "My whole concept has been trying to bring people up to a certain taste level while trying to maintain a healthy business," he explained.

Black rhinoceroses to find Texas home

By MAGGIE KENNEDY
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

GLEN ROSE, Texas — Shoulders straight, chin up and his silver hair meticulously combed back from his softly wrinkled face, Marlin Perkins stood regally beneath a live oak tree surveying another kind of wild kingdom.

Dressed in his customary safari suit of tan trousers, tan shirt and tan bush jacket, Perkins smiled slightly. "This looks like a lot of places in Africa," he replied as he looked down the hill, his hand shading his eyes from the sun. "The food is available here, too. This land is rich in grasses and the leaves of the trees are also edible."

Perkins had come to Waterfall Ranch, a 1,300-acre wildlife breeding sanctuary near this Somervell County community 40 miles from Fort Worth, to check out the prospective home of eight to 10 African black rhinoceroses. He was also the special guest of honor at a $100-a-person safari party to raise the funds needed to relocate the rhinos to millionaire oilman Tom Mantzel's unique facility next spring.

THE RHINOCEROS, which has survived man, beast and the elements for 60 million years, is now the most seriously endangered animal on the African continent. And of the five species of rhinoceros, the black rhino with its two slightly curved horns has fared the worst. In 1930, approximately 150,000 black rhinos thrived in the African bush. By 1969, their population had dwindled to 20,000, and six years ago there were 13,000 Kenyan black rhinos. Today there are fewer than 800.

The "Rhinos for Texas" wildlife conservation project is supported by the African Fund for Endangered Wildlife (A FEW) and IVECO, Europe's second largest commercial vehicle manufacturer.

Texas was chosen as an ideal relocation spot for the black rhino, according to Perkins, because the environment here is so similar to that of Africa. The ranch is currently home to 600 other rare and endangered species, including Grevy's zebra, addax and sable.

"I feel it's very important to establish a gene pool for the rhino," he said. He, his wife, Carol and his longtime assistant Jim Fowler are members of the project's honorary committee. "There is very heavy poaching of the rhino in Africa now and the animal's numbers are diminishing very quickly. It's imperative that the black rhino have the opportunity to breed and develop in safety."

THE FAMED WILDLIFE conservationist explained that the black rhino has prospered in traditional zoos for some time but that the "rhino ranch" idea is relatively new. "Seven black rhinos have been born at the Cincinnati zoo in the past 20 years," he said, "and there have been quite a few more bred in zoos in the rest of the world."

A FEW wants to breed black rhinos on a much larger scale so that eventually animals can be shipped back to Africa to repopulate and strengthen dwindling herds. The non-profit organization hopes that Waterfall Ranch will be the first of several rhino-breeding stations operating in the United States.

"I can remember in Kenya when you could drive out and see bunches of rhinos," Perkins added. "Today they're very scarce. You have to look a long time before you'll see one."

The 78-year-old veteran of hundreds of expeditions into the wild wasn't the only person who thought Waterfall Ranch looked a great deal like Africa.

"It's good, it's the best imitation of Kenya I've seen," laughed Betty Leslie-Melville, the founder-president of A FEW and one of the hosts for the ranch party. "All it needs is a few giraffes, elephants and rhinos to make it complete. I think our rhinos will be very comfortable and at home here."

MRS. MELVILLE is a former Baltimore nursery school teacher who went to Africa to visit her best friend and became so enamored with Kenya that she came home and talked her banker husband and her three children into making Nairobi their new home. In 1960, the couple started the first non-hunting tours of Africa. She later married Jock Melville, an Englishman who had become a citizen of Kenya, and together they have written five books on wildlife conservation, lectured throughout the world and been the subject of a movie, "The Last Giraffe."

The Melvilles started A FEW several years ago during their effort to save Kenya's rare and endangered Rhothschild giraffe. Currently, the organization is directing its efforts almost exclusively toward saving the black rhino.

"There is in Africa today only 1 percent of the game that was there before the white man came," Mrs. Melville said, "and he shot most of it."

Mrs. Melville called the rhino-relocation project necessary to the survival of Kenya. "Kenya has no natural resources," she said. "Tourism is our biggest industry and people come here from all over the world to see the wild animals. Without tourism, the native Kenyans would be without jobs. By saving the animals we are helping both the people and the animals."

THE RHINO HAS LONG been cursed by its myth-encrusted horn.

The young men of Yemen prize daggers with handles carved of rhino horn. And throughout Asia, apothecary shops sell ground rhino horn as a cure for everything from high fevers to headaches. Ancient Chinese carved the horn into magnificent works of art, including ceremonial cups and decorative dishes for washing paint brushes. They also made sword handles, buttons and belt buckles from it.

Introductory meeting for adoptive couples to be held

The Permian Basin Office representing Lutheran Social Service of Texas will hold its annual intake and introductory meeting for infant adoptive couples on Oct. 14 at 7:30 p.m. at Midland Lutheran Church.

Approximately 50 couples have been invited to attend the meeting after previously expressing interest during 1981-82 to adopt an infant through the agency.

Eligibility for the infant adoption program is limited to couples who have been married at least two years, who are between the ages of 21 — 40, who have no more than one child already and who have some medical advisement against pregnancy. Social workers use further information attained at the intake meeting to select the couples who the agency will study for placement.

During the year, Lutheran Social Service also provides counseling and referral services to young girls and women experiencing an unplanned pregnancy. Medical and legal costs are paid for those clients choosing to relinquish their child for adoption. Foster care between the relinquishment of an infant by a natural mother and placement of the child with its adoptive family is an additional service.

Located in the former parsonage of Midland Lutheran Church at 2705-A West Michigan in Midland, the office is open from 8:30 a.m. — 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Ms. Lael Cordes, MSW, serves as director/social worker for the office. Pat Sims is a part-time social worker.

Further information may be obtained by calling 697-5761 or 563-1883 or by writing Lutheran Social Service of Texas, Permian Basin office, 2705-A W. Michigan, Midland 79701.

By JOANNE RODGERS
Science Writer, Hearst Feature Service

Grim visions of American males stress-crazed by the prospect of Sundays and Monday nights without televised football fail to impress or worry mental health experts.

"Gad," said a Johns Hopkins University psychologist in response to a reporter's request for comment. "Wait 'till I tell my colleagues about THIS one." Click.

"Let's face it," intoned Dr. John Imboden, a psychiatrist at Baltimore's Sinai Hospital, "in the larger order of things, the stress of facing Monday night without football can ony be called trivial."

Dire forecasts began pleasantly enough shortly after the NFL players strike threatened. With tongue firmly set in cheek, football-starved fans warned that millions of households were due for epidemics of ennui and irritability.

They foretold upturns in the incidence of dog-kicking, child-swatting, floor-pacing and elbow-bending. Some anticipated a new baby boom exploding nine months from Monday.

BUT THE SITUATION took a serious turn this week when a psychologist, quoted on a network evening news show, suggested that football lovers denied their share of first downs and points after would be genuinely stressed.

Now stress, as most people know, is a dangerous villain. Medical scientists say that those under its influence are at greater risk of everything from heart attacks, cancer and ulcers to infertility, insomnia and nervous breakdowns.

If a Monday night football void increased stress, the strike emerges not simply as an annoyance or economic loss, but as a downright public health hazard.

Animal and human studies have confirmed that the most potent sources of stress are the inability to control one's environment and unpredictable change.

"THE REASON THAT the elimination of televised football might be perceived as stressful," according to one psychologist, "is that it represents both a change that came without much warning and that most will perceive it as a negative change. Whenever change is imposed in a way that the subject can do nothing about it, stress results. There is no question about that."

He added, however, that in the case of football, the stress might be viewed as positive. Positive stress?

Absolutely, says Dr. Imboden. "Some stresses forced upon us may be good because they produce changes that turn out to be quite rewarding in the long run."

If weekend and Monday night football aren't available, he said, the growing separation of American families might be narrowed, at least for a while. Parents might rediscover the children, the book business might boom and homework skills improve.

"Frankly, with all the terrific problems this world faces, I can't believe American men will be that upset over the loss of football," added Dr. Imboden. "If they are, then we Americans are even worse off than I feared."

DR. MICHAEL CATALDO, a psychologist and president of the Society for Behavior Medicine, agrees. "Of all the things there are in society to threaten the stability of families, this one doesn't even get near the top of the list."

He added, "I have a hunch the networks will find some other sport to fill the prime time void that will also fill the need."

Even that may not be necessary, however, if a Florida psychologist's research is right.

Dr. James Flanders, associate professor at Florida International University in Miami, has a new theory of televiewing that emphasizes the actual process of watching, rather than the content of the program.

"My theory predicts that the habit of watching television on Sunday afternoon or Monday night will continue with or without football. People will follow the pattern and watch anything rather than mowing the lawn, reading a book, doing homework or expressing love," he says.

"Research shows that when you watch television at a cetain time after a while you'll watch anything in that time slot. That certainly was the case with the baseball strike. Fans just watched other things, I doubt very many took up backgammon."

DR. FLANDERS said it would be "interesting" to check the Nielson ratings this Monday night. "It would test the relative impact of the process of watching versus the content of what is watched. I believe you'll find only a modest drop-off in viewing. The football fans will just find something else to tune in."

Sports lovers will watch any Monday night lineup, Dr. Flanders suggests, not because televiewing reduces stress so much as it contains little stress to begin with.

"Televiewing is a behavioral sponge," he says. "If you ask why people watch, it's because TV provides a moderately stimulating, very rewarding experience with a very, very low social, emotional, intellectual cost.

Best seller updated for today's lifestyle

NEW YORK (AP) — First published 45 years ago, "How To Win Friends and Influence People" has now been updated to meet the changes that have taken place in the world since then.

Dorothy Carnegie, widow of author Dale Carnegie, undertook the revision with the editorial assistance of Arthur R. Pell. Dated references and outmoded situations have been replaced with more contemporary examples.

"Many of the names of prominent people in the book, well known at the time of first publication, are no longer recognized by many of today's readers," Mrs. Carnegie explains in a preface to the revised edition.

"Certain examples and phrases seem as quaint and dated in our social climate as those in a Victorian novel." Words such as "man" and "salesgirl" were changed to "person" and "clerk," for instance.

Carnegie, who died in 1955 at age 66, began in 1912 to teach public speaking to businessmen in New York City. He wrote the self-help book as a textbook for his courses in "Effective Speaking and Human Relations."

After a first printing of 5,000 copies, in the years since its original publication in 1937 it has sold more than 15 million copies. It is among the best-selling books of all time, having been translated into numerous languages. Carnegie also wrote eight other books.

Rural French restaurant flourishes

By KENNETH CARLSON

GLENDALE SPRINGS, N.C. (AP) — It sometimes happens on mountain roads that just beyond the next curve lined with rhododendron an unanticipated sight stands out from the forest.

Take, for example, a French restaurant posing as a country inn in Ashe County.

Not that Ashe County or even Glendale Springs are undeserving of international cuisine — but in a land where country inns seem married to family-style servings of green beans, hot biscuits and country ham, veal au vinaigre et vin in puff pastry is a bit unusual.

The Glendale Springs Inn has been a French restaurant and hotel since July 1981. The food is a far cry from what was served in the inn before the turn of the century.

The inn was built in 1895 by a former Confederate colonel. Although it offered rooms for rent, it was primarily used as a country store. In the early 1900s, the colonel took advantage of nearby spring water and turned the inn into a health spa whose popularity lasted until World War I.

The inn had several lives in the following years — a chapel, hotel, community center, private residence and headquarters for the Works Progress Administration and the Army Corps of Engineers during work on the Blue Ridge Parkway.

Its present owner, Gayle Hamby Winston, bought the inn at an auction two years ago. That was after she had moved from New York into her great-uncle's farmhouse in nearby Grassy Creek and had, over eight years, acquired about 1,000 acres, a herd of cattle, part ownership in a restaurant in Virginia and a knowledge of tobacco farming.

"The bad thing is that I get excited about so many different things," Mrs. Winston said.

She was born in West Jefferson 53 years ago and raised in the county until her family moved to Washington, D.C., when she was 10. Before marrying a Hollywood television and film director in 1958, she had produced Broadway plays in New York.

When her husband, Ron Winston, died of a heart attack in 1973, she decided to come home.

"It was a good time to move," she said.

Her fast-paced friends in New York kept asking what she was going to do "down there," but Mrs. Winston had no problems keeping busy. She chopped wood, gardened and put in plumbing in the old farm house whose central room was a log cabin her great-uncle had built.

She bought land, grew tobacco and started raising cattle. She helped start the restaurant in Virginia six years ago, not guessing that four years later she would own a 16-room National Historic Site with wrap-around porch, balconies and about three acres.

Mrs. Winston bought the inn to keep its land from being sold in lots. She told the auctioneer that she didn't have the money but that if he would take a chance on her getting a loan she would bid. He took a chance, she bid and last year opened the inn on N.C. 16.

She said that she opened a French restaurant because she liked French food and there vouldn't be much competition. There wouldn't be much of a clientele either, she said, if it weren't for cities like Winston-Salem, Charlotte and Raleigh, where most of her patrons come from.

Word seems to have spread quickly because the inn and its four guest rooms, open April 1 to Nov. 1, are staying busy. The recipes developed by Mrs. Winston have attracted so much attention that she now manages the food service at a private club in Roaring Gap and has catered parties as far away as New York.

Devices help sight of low vision people

By NORMAN ODER
MICHAEL UNGER
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post
News Service

NEW YORK — The young woman approached an art object in the Metropolitan Museum of Art's exhibit designed for visually handicapped people in Bellevue Hospital's busy lobby. Casually and unobtrusively, she drew a small metal optical instrument out of her purse and peered through the cylinder at a reproduction of an ancient horse.

The woman, Laura Gardner, was using a device called a monocular, or telescope, to see the fine details she cannot ordinarily make out. "I concentrate on the things I can see, instead of the things I can't see," said Gardner, who lost most of her sight when she was a teen-ager. "Once I learned that, it made all the difference in the world."

It is her job as a museum consultant to help staff members understand better what she and other with low vision can see, and to help develop ways for handicapped persons to visit museums.

Althought she has no central vision, Gardner is adept at using her peripheral vision to move easily in crowds, on subways, buses and city thoroughfares. She is a graduate of Barnard College and has a master's degree from Columbia in special education. "Just being in the presence of an art object is inspiring," she said. But the telescope, one of a number of special optical aids she obtained from a low-vision clinic, enabled her to enjoy seeing the art in finer detail.

"IT'S EASY to manipulate," Gardner said, showing the telescope to a photographer. "But it's not your standard kind. You can't buy it in a department store. These things are available at low-vision centers. I bought it several years ago for $50 to $60. They can be prescribed, but I just went in and chose the best one for me. I also use a hand magnifier and a very strong magnifier in an eyeglass lens that I put in myself. I've got a pretty pair in a nicer frame, but there's no way, really, to make them elegant. They're very thick magnifiers."

Gardner, 33, is one of some 2 million or more people with low vision in the United States. People with low vision, many of them elderly, have some useful vision despite serious impairment. Many, like Gardner, are legally blind, with a visual acuity of 20-200 or less in the better eye after correction. Increasingly, people with such vision problems are seeking help at low-vision centers.

Today, low-vision centers offer an array of aids that allow low-vision patients to maintain their independence and ability to read. Such aids range from eyeglasses and hand magnifiers to more sophisticated focusing telescopes and closed-circuit television reading machines.

THE BASIC SERVICE provided by low-vision clinics, according to the American Foundation for the Blind, is analysis of a person's residual vision based on a medical diagnosis. The low-vision aids are prescribed individually. But clinics differ in how much attention they give to assessing and improving how patients function visually in tgheir everyday lives, the Manhattan-based foundation concluded in a 1980 report. Most clinics took case histories of patients and gave tests of distance and near acuity, reading ability, and ophthalmoscopy, refraction and retinoscopy examinations.

Among distance vision aids prescribed, eye-glasses were most frequently called for followed by hand-held monocular telescopes. Among near vision aids the Hi-Plus lens — a high magnification lens put into special eyeglasses — was most frequently prescribed. The cost of these optical devices ranges from $30 to $700. Least often prescribed were closed-circuit video systems, which cost between $1,800 and $2,500 and are difficult to use, bulky and heavy.

EMPHASIS ON TREATMENT of low vision is relatively recent. Until the early 1960s, said Julie Jones, executive director of the American Association for the Education of the Visually Handicapped, "We were in the 'sight-saving era' — we thought that if people had sight and used it too much they would lose it. Now we train people to use whatever degree of vision that they have."

In reality, there is no clear cut definition of low vision. Generally, people with low vision have trouble reading the newspaper, seeing street signs, reading their mail, and seeing enough to write and read for any length of time. "Low vision has more to do with how a person functions and was trained rather than the amount of eyesight," said Gardner's brother, Larry, who teaches at Columbia University and has the same problem as his sister. They both have a condition called macular degeneration.

Many people with low vision suffer from retinal problems, which include macular degeneration, retinitis pigmentosa, and other degeneration of the retina. Macular degeneration is a progressive disease that most often strikes the elderly, according to Dr. Eleanor Faye, an ophthalmologist and medical director of low-vision services at the New York Association for the Blind, also known as The Lighthouse.

Macular degeneration is damage or breakdown of the macula, the central portion of the eye's retina. The macula is a small area of the retina directly in line with the pupil; it is composed entirely of cones, which are cone-shaped photoreceptor cells and are responsible for fine, detailed vision and color. The other type of photoreceptor cells in the retina are the rods, which are responsible for peripheral vision and which allow a person to see motion and objects, and to see at night.

IN MACULAR DEGENERATION, peripheral vision remains and is used as a substitute for the lost central vision. Thus, a person with macular degeneration may appear to be looking off center or to one side of an object or another individual while actually using his or her peripheral vision. This is called eccentric viewing.

About 70 percent of such cases are associated with aging; the macula tissue simply breaks down. Sometimes fine blood vessels in the eye leak small amounts of blood into the macula and lead to a scar on the retina, leading to further deterioration of vision. Sometimes one eye loses vision while the other one functions adequately. Sometimes it is hereditary. Signs of such degeneration are blurred vision and the distortion of straight lines.

What can be done? In most cases, nothing to restore vision and little to halt its deterioration. But a small percentage of cases, perhaps only 5 percent, can be treated successfully by sealing off the leaking blood vessels with laser beam treatment. Treatment can be determined only by a retina specialist.

GLAUCOMA AND RETINITIS pigmentosa, on the other hand, involve the loss of peripheral vision. A cataract does not change the field of vision, but leads to an overhall haziness of view. Retinitis pigmentosa ("tunnel vision") leaves only a small area of central vision. Hemianopia, a defect in the optic pathways between the eyes and the brain, cuts off half of the eye's field of vision — either right, left, lower, or upper.

"The biggest point is to get care early," according to Faye, "so they can learn to use the devices while they still have moderately high level of vision. The minute the vision goes down, the patient should be told to seek help. If you start using something early, you become skilled.

"Our average patient is relatively healthy," Faye said. "We're trying to let active people remain active."

Low-vision aids, though they help, do not restore vision completely. "It's not normal vision," Faye said. "It's magnified vision." The patients are sometimes not geared to expect that it would be hard work, she said. "It's not a panacea," agreed Arden Himmlebrand, low-vision coordinator at the eye clinic at North Shore University Hospital in Manhasset, N.Y. "If you want to get something, you have to give up something. If you use a magnifier, you lose extreme peripheral vision. If you used microscopic glasses so your hands are free, you're giving up distance."

THE LIGHTHOUSE requires that people have a written report from an ophthalmologist, so that the proper medical care is ensured. However, any person can call the Lighthouse for an appointment or information. Once there, the person is put through a series of evaluations, including a vision test that determines how much vision a patient has. A special, newly designed eye chart, for example, has subtle gradations between the letter sizes to measure low vision more comprehensively. They are then shown the variety of aids available, and taught to use and apply them. A loan program allows patients to try devices for two weeks.

The array begins with the most simple of aids. Magnifying spectacles, which are small thick prisms, can be used while working or reading when the object is at a fixed distance. Some have a "button" built in for magnification when only one eye is to be used at a time.

There also are a series of hand-held devices that magnify from two to five times. These can be useful, Faye said, not only for reading, but also for shopping. For those who cannot hold a magnifying device steady — people with arthritis or neurological tremors — magnifiers on stands are available.

When distance viewing is required, telescopes are used. Some telescopes can be attached to regular spectacles. A person who doesn't want to be conspicuous or call attention to a handicap may prefer to use the hand-held telescope rather than the spectacle telescope.

FOR THOSE WHO WANT the greatest flexibility in reading, there are television monitors that project images on a screen; others are unified, but all have a high quality video display and a television camera with a zoom lens, so that the magnification can be varied. The reading material — or any object, such as a fingernail that needs clipping — is placed under the camera and the enlarged image is broadcast onto the monitor. Its principal use is on the job.

Touch needed by babies

By CECELIA GOODNOW
Hearst Feature Service

Vimala Schneider was a yoga student in India nine years ago when she made a discovery that changed the way she and hundreds of other young parents care for their children.

Babies, she learned, thrive on tender, loving touch — a concept that was taken for granted in the poverty-stricken villages she visited. Everywhere she went, older children and mothers crooned to babies and systematically massaged their tiny limbs. It was the custom, they explained.

The image was driven home forcefully one day by an emaciated mother who sat outside her crude hovel singing and massaging her baby.

"It made an indelible impression on me," Schneider said. "The mother couldn't give the baby anything else, but she gave it her love and touch. Suddenly, it dawned on me that that was nourishment, too."

Inspired to explore further, Schneider developed a program that adapts Indian and Swedish massage techniques to the special needs of babies. She has taught her techniques to parents and health-care professionals since 1977 at the Boulder (Colo.) School for Massage Therapy and at the Stress and Health Center of N.T. Enloe Memorial Hospital in Chico, Calif. Step-by-step directions are available in her newly published paperback, "Infant Massage, A Handbook for Loving Parents."

"When I first started teaching, I was terrified," said Schneider, 30, a calm, articulate woman with a warm sense of humor. "Normally, the medical community will jump down your throat anytime you come out with something new."

However, she said that she has received nothing but encouragement from medical professionals. Her book contains laudatory introductions by Walt Schafer, Ph.D., director of the Stress and Health Center, and Stephen Berman, M.D., chief of general pediatrics at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center.

A gentle, daily massage tones and stimulates babies' vital functions, teaches them to relax, helps relieve stressful medical conditions such as colic, chest congestion and fever, and promotes a close emotional bond with parents Schneider said.

The sense of touch is one of the most highly developed senses a baby possesses, she said. Animal studies have shown development differences between infants that are handled and those that are deprived. In one study, infant rats that were systematically handled were more resistant to disease, showed faster weight gains and were calmer and friendler than other rats, she said.

Massage may be the human equivalent of licking in animal mothers, according to Schneider. "It tones and stimulates the baby's vital functions," she said, adding that some researchers speculate that human labor may last longer than animal labor "because babies need that extra stimulation of contractions."

But the most important benefit, she believes, is the emotional closeness that evolves through eye contact, touch and gentle relaxation.

Although massage can begin anytime, it's best to start slowly and gently with newborns. "I tell mothers to listen to their babies and experiment," she said. "If a baby repeatedly cries frantically after 10 minutes, shorten the sessions. A full routine usually lasts 15 to 20 minutes. If they're massaged every day just a little bit, it raises their threshhold for stimulation," she added.

It may be difficult to tell if a baby is overstimulated, since some infants cry during massage as a way of releasing tension. It's more fun to massage a gurgling baby than a fussy baby, but the long-term benefits are the same — the baby sleeps better and is more serene during the rest of the day, Schneider said.

The baby's clothes, including diapers, should be removed during massage so that back and buttocks also can be stroked. It is vital to keep the room warm — and keep some loose diapers handy to mop up accidents.

"In these classes, we always have somebody who goes out with a wet lap," Schneider said.

To prevent chafing, the baby should be stroked with oil, preferably cold-pressed vegetable oil, which does not rob the body of nutrients when absorbed into the skin.

'Grande dames': Place in American history

By GREGORY N. JOSEPH
Copley News Service

The grandes dames. From the gilded to the atomic ages, they supported — and often created — art museums, theaters, symphony orchestras, opera houses, civic centers, libraries or entire cities, then dangled the accomplishments before a bedazzled public like so many trinkets picked up on a buying spree at Cartier's.

Matriarchs of wealth, privilege and guile who, between the 1870s and the start of World War II, were so successful in casting American cultural and social life in their own images that the institutions they ruled still resound with their influence.

Women like Eleanor Robson, an acclaimed actress for whom George Bernard Shaw wrote the play "Major Barbara." She gave up her theatrical career to marry August Belmont Jr. of the New York racing family and in the 1920s and '30s, worked on behalf of the Metropolitan Opera, the National Institute of Social Sciences and the Emergency Unemployment Relief Committee. She raised a fortune for her pet cause, the Red Cross.

Stephen Birmingham, author of "Grande Dames," is surrounded by some of the privileged ladies from a fascinating era in America. Clockwise from top left are Eva Roberts Stotesbery, Isabella Stewart Gardner, Eleanor Robson Belmont and Edith Rosenwald Stern.

AND WOMEN LIKE Lucretia Bishop "Eva" Roberts Stotesbury, who would marry and bury Oliver Cromwell (a descendant of THE Oliver Cromwell, Britain's lord protector), then marry Edward Stotesbury. With him, she erected Philadelphia's Whitemarsh Hall, a six-story mansion with 147 rooms and 45 bathrooms where she "introduced wildlife into her decors."

Yet these were often women, who, like Edith Rockefeller McCormick — second-oldest daughter of John D. Rockefeller Sr. and the daughter-in-law of "reaper king" Cyrus McCormick — could also be extraordinarily cold in their personal lives despite doing so much public good.

It is reported Edith Rockefeller McCormick registered great annoyance when servants interrupted a society dinner she was having to announce that her young son had just died of scarlet fever. But she did support the Chicago Opera Company.

"I suppose nowadays people might tend to look back at the grandes dames as some kind of jet-setters, but they weren't like that at all," observed social chronicler and author Stephen Birmingham, who offers a bittersweet account of this vanished breed in his meticulously researched book, "The Grandes Dames" (Simon and Schuster; 299 pages; $15.50).

"THERE ARE PLENTY of rich women around now," he said in an interview. "But that's not what we're talking about here. So many of the things that they did have now been taken over by the federal government, anonymous organizations and corporate giving.

"I mean, Mrs. Belmont routinely wrote out checks of $30,000 a month for the Metropolitan Opera. The other day, I read about some corporation giving the same amount to the Met. It's just not the same.

"No, the grandes dames had a deeper kind of social commitment than the modern jet-setter, more flair than the so-called beautiful people. They had tremendous, almost naive faith in their own infallibility, and weren't afraid of making enemies.

"They also had complacent husbands who let them do what they wanted — in many cases the husbands were grateful they were off doing something, since they either had their own pet projects or flings going."

An author whose works include "California Rich" and "Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy Onassis," Birmingham, 51, admits to having chosen the grandes dames for his book arbitrarily, his prime concerns being their prominence nationally and the extent of their wealth and power.

He said he spent several years doing research for the book, traveling to all the cities where the grandes dames lived, interviewing their descendants and exhausting library archives.

"I WAS TRYING TO TREAT the book as a hunt for American social history," he said. "I think my goal was to show that long before there was anything like the women's movement, long before the term feminism was invented, women were out doing things.

He knew some of his subjects firsthand, and in fact was related to one — Isabella Stewart Gardner, an ultimate patroness of the arts who used Boston as the canvas for her cultural creations. Those familiar with Boston might remember the Italian palazzo she filled with great works of art and gave to the city.

It became the museum that now bears her name. It is said her ghost still returns to the museum at 2 a.m. on the third Tuesday of each month, "to see if things are all right," according to a guard there.

Gardner's husband, John Lowell Gardner Jr. — whose family made its fortune in banking and shipping — was a first cousin of Birmingham's grandfather. "I wish I could have known Belle — my family always used to refer to her as 'Cousin Belle,'" Birmingham said.

OVER THE YEARS, he made the acquaintance of several other women in the book, most memorably Edith "Effie" Rosenwald Stern, a daughter of Julius Rosenwald, who rose to riches as one-quarter owner of Sears, Roebuck and Co. She would fly planeloads of family to Venice or Paris to celebrate her birthdays, and once built a school to accommodate her school-age child.

Powerful businessmen and politicos quaked at her tirades. Her husband Edgar retired to become her "assistant." In 1965, she received a loving cup from the New Orleans Times-Picayune as the citizen who did the most for her city. The cup's image now adorns her tombstone.

"I remember when I met Mrs. Stern," Birmingham said. "Seeing her make an entrance into a room was like watching the parting of the Red Sea."

Birmingham said he gained insight into the psyche of the grande dame through his own mother, whom he said held such vaunted status in the little Connecticut town where she resided. Her specialty, he said, was improving the local schools and straightening out the local politics. But apparently she left something to be desired as a mother.

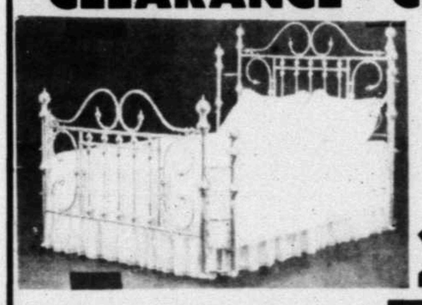

"SHE PRETTY WELL ran things where I grew up," recalled Birmingham, who now makes his home in Mount Adams, Ohio. "But like the other grandes dames, she wasn't a particularly domestic woman. She wasn't a particularly good mother. She was never around, not a very good cook ... she passed away not long ago."

Indeed, Birmingham notes that this seemed to have been a common trait among the grandes dames of whom he writes.

While cloaking themselves in righteous causes and fighting like demons to dominate culture and social life, they were almost always somehow tragically lacking in the most elementary and important of human needs — love.

Whether they were working for the public good to fill this void — or whether the work itself caused the void — is, of course, anyone's guess. But the answer may lie in a letter Birmingham received from Jimmy Cromwell, son of Eva Stotesbury by her first marriage.

Fall fashion trends accent legs

By JUDI HUNT
Hearst Feature Service

The good news for men who claim to be "leg-watchers" is that it will be hard to miss the female leg this fall.

Colored hosiery — some of it in bright shades that will knock your socks off — is "in." Plain old skin tones are being retired to the back of the underwear drawer — at least for the time being.

Furthermore, the new hosiery is opaque for daytime, which certainly seems to make it more noticeable, and in shades such as turquoise, red and black, which means REALLY noticeable. Even in the same vibrant colors, evening sheers pale by comparison.

The bad news? Some women this fall and winter will insist on wearing legwarmers, which have become one of the most popular leg fashion trends in the country, especially during cold weather.

But relax. This year's legwarmers — which look a lot like socks except that they don't have any feet on them and are frequently of acrylic and wool blends — still manage to give women a long, leggy look. Besides, the legwarmers are in such appealing shades and patterns that even the fussiest connoisseur of bare legs will find himself noticing the legs encased in them.

And legwarmers won't be worn all the time, since they're really a sporty, casual look that began when college coeds started wearing them over jeans, a style picked up by other women — especially those into exercising and other body improvement activities — who decided that they liked the way legwarmers flattered their tights-covered legs.

Legwarmers, however, will go other places besides exercise rooms this fall. Expect to see them anywhere that casual clothing is worn — at football games, outdoor markets and parties, to name just a few places.

Legwarmers are intended to be worn both with pants and skirts; how a woman wears them will depend on her mood. For example, if a woman is wearing a short, sporty skirt that ends above the knees, such as the ones being made out of sweatshirt materials, she might choose to wear tights, legwarmers pulled up to the knees, contrasting socks underneath the legwarmers and flat shoes like ballet flats.

Effective accessories necessary in fashion

By ELEANOR ROBERTS
Hearst Feature Service

Special effects! That's what accessories should be labeled this season. On them hinges the success of a dress, a suit, a gown.

Their role is more important than ever because black is so big. What you put with it — the gleaming jeweled belt, the Yves Saint Laurent asymmetrically set bubble crystals in smoky anthracite, or Halston's soft drift of a shawl in fuschia cashmere — will personalize what you are wearing.

Forget your simple gold chains or your understated hammered gold earrings. Jewelry is an integral part of dressing this fall. The mystique of Marrakesh is evident in the splendid jeweled cross of faux amethysts and emeralds hung from an open-work chain.

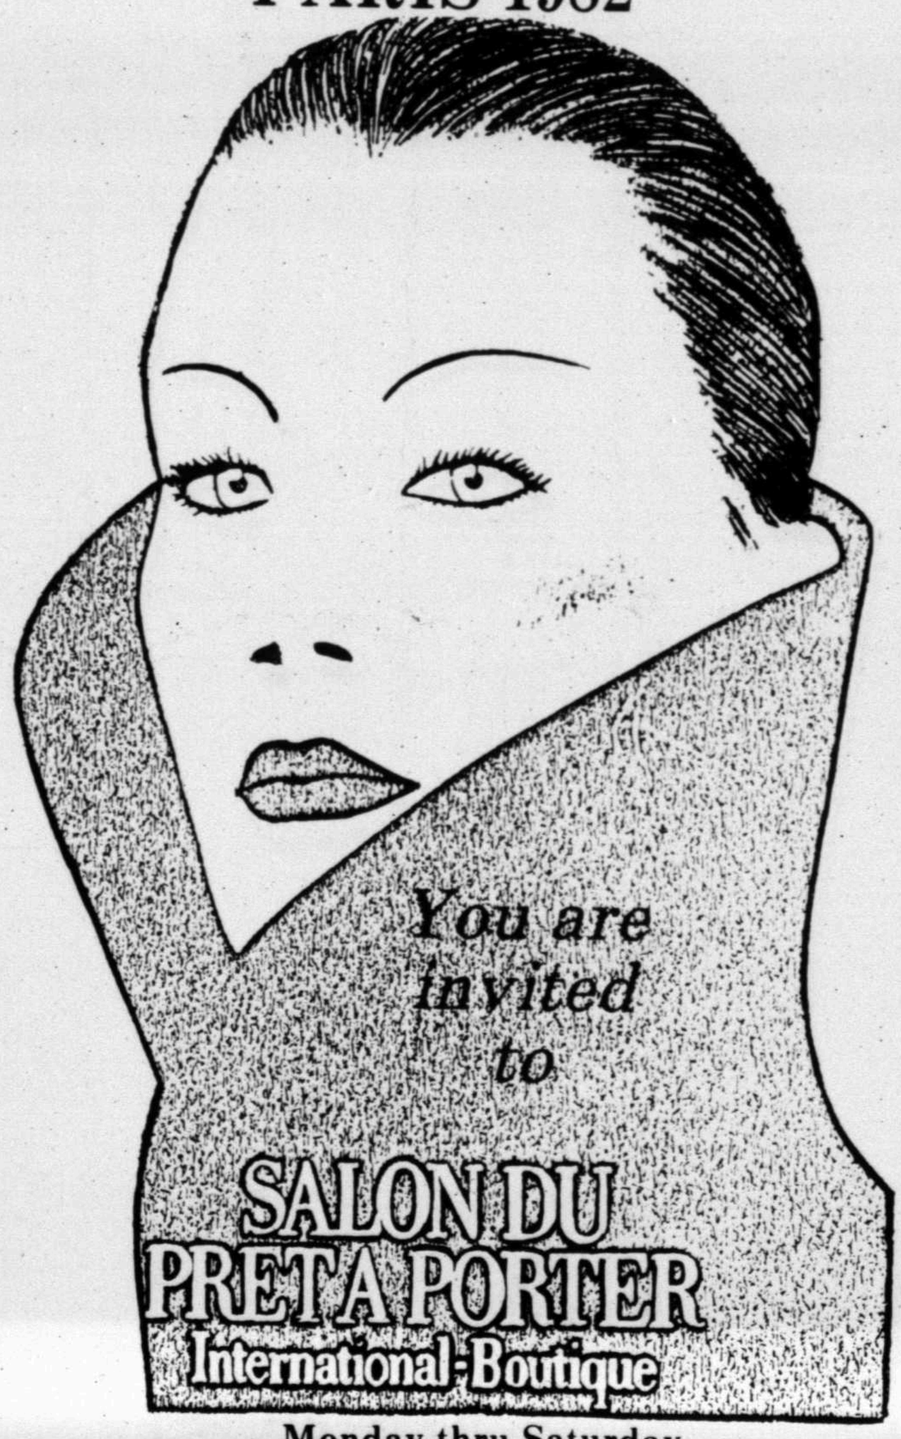

Earrings are huge and almost medieval-looking. You'll fasten big squares of simulated ruby, emerald or sapphire in your earlobes. But if you're a petite young charmer with a small, piquant face, they're a no-no.

There are little girl lace collars and big girl lace body stockings which make you feel like the girl in a Playboy centerfold.

DEAR ABBY

Beethoven story needs little bit of revising

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Poor Ludwig van Beethoven! Dead these 155 years only to be revived by the anti-abortionists. I quote an item sent by a reader and published in your column:

'A professor at the UCLA Medical School asked his students this question. 'Here is the family history: The father has syphilis. The mother has TB. They already have had four children. The first is blind. The second has died. The third is deaf. The fourth has TB. The mother is pregnant. The parents are willing to have an abortion if you decide they should. What do you think?'

"'Congratulations,' said the professor. 'You have just murdered Beethoven.'"

To set the record straight, Abby, Beeethoven was the SECOND of seven (not the fifth), of whom only three survived.

One child was average, another became very wealthy, and Ludwig, of course, was a genius. True, four siblings died, but infant mortality was very high in the 1770s due to cholera, typhoid fever, TB, diphtheria, etc. Further, there is no evidence that Beethoven's father was syphilitic.

So, all you anti-abortionists out there, when you quote, please be accurate, and in the future, please leave poor Ludwig out of it. — N.K., EAST MEADOW, N.Y.

DEAR ABBY: If you can stand one more comment regarding responses to Julia Child's letter on abortion: Rather than agitating to get as many human beings born as possible on the chance that one of them will be another Beethoven, the anti-abortion crowd should ask themselves whether in today's world, a second Beethoven would get a chance to develop his genius before he was mugged, brainwashed or smothered in pollution. — CONCERNED NATURALIST IN DENVER

DEAR ABBY: I'm terribly confused and need an outside opinion. I've been seeing this man who works at a local business, and the problem is that he's engaged to someone I knew from school. Abby, he's the sweetest man I've ever met, and when we're together we are very happy.

He tells me he doesn't love his fiancee anymore, but I realize it may be just a line to keep me with him. I don't like being the other woman, but I am not ready to give up my newfound happiness.

We haven't made love as yet, and we won't unless his engagement to my ex-school chum is broken. I can't make that much of a commitment to a man who is engaged to another woman. What should I do? — ANONYMOUS

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Refuse to see him as long as he's engaged. Then ask yourself, what kind of man would become engaged, then take up with another woman and tell her he's no longer in love with his fiancee?

He doesn't sound like much of a prize to me.

(What you don't know can hurt you. For Abby's booklet, "What Teen-Agers Ought to Know," send $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

By ERMA BOMBECK

I'm sick of people putting this country down for shoddy workmanship and sloppy merchandise. Every time I get cornered by some malcontent who wants to point out how some defective product was recalled, I smile and say, "When was the last time anyone in this country recalled a product because the price tag fell off? Huh?" That shuts them up!

We attach price tags that stay attached longer than any other nation in the world. I have a price tag on a set of iced tea glasses, marked .05, so you have some idea how long the price has been there.

Bought a saucepan in the supermarket back in 1978. There was a $2.98 price marked on it in indelible purple. I've washed it, soaked it, bleached it, scrubbed it, sanded it and chiseled at it. Nothing. The enamel has chipped on the pan, the bottom became permanently scorched and the handle fell off, but the price tag is still there.

I suppose the original idea of securing a price tag was so people would not rub out the original price and substitute something else. I would rather move Mt. Rushmore.

I haven't bought a new car lately, but I'm here to tell you when they say "sticker price," they're not kidding. Those little suckers are laminated to the entire glass where the whole world can see how much you paid for power steering and whitewalls. I once soaked a window for three days trying to get it off. The paper finally came off, but the glue on the window is with us for life/whenever we make the last payment to the bank/whichever comes first.

There's another phenomenon that no one has ever been able to figure out. The cheaper the item, the more the price tag adheres to the article. I bought a cheap hairbrush for a birthday present once and if the brush could have withstood the strain, you could have chinned yourself on the price tag.

I happen to believe applying price tags is an art. In clothes, they must be hidden in a sewn-up inner seam or pinned in the armpit so that you have to ask the salesperson where it is.

On edibles, the marking is indelible so you can eat a grapefruit and suffer guilt at the same time. On glass, they must be cohesive enough to withstand a decade of wear, as with picture frames.

We only fall short in one area. No one has ever figured out how to get a price tag also listing the weight of a frozen turkey. You just sorta have to judge for yourself.

I don't see turkeys made in Hong Kong marked any better!

New acne drug finally on market

By PENNY CHORLTON
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration has been able to streamline its process for approving new drugs to the point where, at least in one case, the manufacturer couldn't keep up with it.

Hoffman-La Roche Inc. recently began marketing a new prescription drug called Accutane, which could help up to 90 percent of the 360,000 Americans who suffer from severe cystic acne. But it took the company nearly four months to get the drug on the market after the FDA approved it for use last May.

"It was fast-tracked through the FDA," explained a company spokesman, "and approval came through so fast that it came as quite a surprise to everyone, including people at the FDA. Obviously they felt it was an important new drug that was needed urgently."

The company said it still needed to make decisions on what form the drug would take and its marketing strategy when the FDA approved the product, 9 1-2 months after the company submitted its application.

Although drug companies complain about the time the agency takes to get new drugs approved, the FDA has taken only 10 months, on average, over the past few years to approve drugs like Accutane that are considered to be significant advances. The firm's spokesman said, however, that it has been several years since the company had a new drug that fell into that category.

Accutane, known chemically as isotretinoin, is said to help those who have been unable to treat their lesions with the creams and pills that are now on the market. Hoffman-La Roche describes the product as a "medical breakthrough" because it can "reverse the physical and social trauma that accompanies" cystic acne. FDA Commissioner Arthur Hull Hayes Jr. used similar words when he announced the drug's approval, saying "it holds promise for the many sufferers of this physicially and psychologically debilitating disease."

The United States is the first country to approve the drug's use, a fact Reagan administration officials noted prominently when approval was announced.

After Hoffman-La Roche submitted its application last year, Accutane was classified 1-A, the FDA's top priority. Eighteen other drugs were given that designation last year, and half have been approved.

The agency also approved 27 new drug compounds last year, the most in the 20 years since the new drug approval process was put in place, and 15 more than the year before.

When the FDA approved Accutane, it had been tested on 170 patients at the National Cancer Institute and at four universities. Hoffman-La Roche estimates that 500 people have been treated with the drug and that the success rate is about 75 percent.

But there is some concern about potential side-effects.

Widowhood fact of life for many

WASHINGTON (AP) — When a woman marries a man, she imagines growing old with him when she vows "till death do us part." But current statistics indicate women are becoming widowed at an average age of 56, says Mona Shevlin, an assistant professor in the School of Education at the Catholic University of America.

To help women prepare for the probable return to singlehood, Ms. Shevlin, who sees many women in her counseling practice at the Counseling Center for Greater Washington, advises them to be realistic.

"You'll probably be either widowed or divorced at least once in your lifetime," she tells them.

Little formal preparation for widowhood exists, says Ms. Shevlin, who teaches in the university's counseling and guidance master's and doctoral programs. She feels there should be more.

An area of great hardship for many widows who have had satisfactory marriages is the loss of an intimate companion and a partner for decision making. Financial decisions are an area of particular weakness, says Ms. Shevlin.

"Women are trained early on to espouse dependence and passivity," she points out. "They are taught to nurture and serve others. When they lose their mates, they often lose their identities because all their married lives they've been 'somebody's wife.' When their husbands die, they feel as though their lives are over, and they proceed to merely tolerate the rest of their lives."

An elderly widow must face the fact that if she does desire to date and possibly remarry, there is the problem of numbers, since there is a much larger pool of single elderly women than men, she explains.

Ms. Shevlin counsels women that while it may be desirable, it is not necessary to have a mate. And thus women who have lost their husbands must learn to live alone for perhaps the first time in 30 to 50 years in a world that is totally different from the one in which they may have been single years before.

The idea of preparing for widowhood is a much avoided topic, suggests Ms. Devlin, because people have difficulty accepting that there are usually beginnings, middles and ends in all relationships. "And the ends don't always come when they're expected or wanted."

In addition to enrolling in seminars and workshops when they're available, women should foster and encourage both male and female friendships, Ms. Shevlin advises.

"Enjoy the person you're married to, but make sure to build other relationships as well," urges Ms. Shevlin, who adds that throughout her life a women should expand her interests and continue to engage in them.

To cope with a common feeling of anger directed at the dead spouse, Ms. Shevlin tells women, "Give yourself permission to be angry. For anybody who has experienced a loss, it's a normal feeling. Talk about the anger with other people. Vent it."

Though there are not many seminars or workshops to prepare for widowhood, there are self-help, support groups for the already-widowed, which she suggests joining. The advantage of joining a group, she says, is that the people in it have all experienced the loss of a spouse, and there is a commonality and understanding that can't be found among the best intentioned of friends and relatives.

"Friends and relatives can listen and be helpful up to a certain point, but then they often get bored or impatient," she says.

To confront depression, Ms. Shevlin suggests viewing it simply as "learned helplessness and hopelessness," that can be unlearned. Socialize, be involved with people, be active. It's important to establish companionship, especially in cases where there is no family support system, she says.

If widowed women can do many things to help themselves, those people around them can also help to smooth the way, she adds. Many people wonder how to react to the newly widowed, what to say and what to do.

"Don't say, 'I know exactly how you feel'," she advises. "You never know exactly how another person feels until you allow them to tell you and even then, you don't really know for sure."

The most appropriate response, says Ms. Shevlin, is "I'm sorry." And then let the individual know that you are available to listen and talk if and when the need arises.

Staff Photos by Bill Hunter

Trombonist James Pankow, above, and singer/bass guitarist Pete Cetera stole the stage show during Wednesday's Chicago concert at Chaparral Center. Onstage first to break in the 4,600 fans was commedian Alan Kaye, who kept the crowd laughing for 45 minutes of jokes and stories. Chicago mounted the stage at 9 p.m., and, counting the two encores the group played, performed for 90 minutes.

A Review

The 4,600 fans, ranging in age from early teens to mid-fifties, were attentive, appreciative and well behaved during the Chicago Concert at Chaparral Center Wednesday night. Although a rock concert is usually festival style seating, all seats were reserved for this one.

Chicago entertained its listeners in a laid back, relaxed manner, playing one hit into another with very little conversation in between. The crowd applauded at all the appropriate places, as in the beginnings of such long-time hits as "Feelin' Stronger Every Day," "Does Anybody Really Know What Time It Is?," "Saturday in the Park," "Color My World," "25 or 6 to 4," as well as for the group's newest numbers "Hard to Say I'm Sorry," "Follow Me" and "Love Me Tomorrow," off its "Chicago XVI" album.

The entire atomsphere of the concert was very mellow until Chicago, concluding with a medley of its greatest hits, said goodbye. Immediately, fans were on their feet clapping, stomping and yelling for more.

They got it — twice. And by the time Chicago actually left the stage and the house lights went on, much of the crowd, which had prior to the encores sat quietly, was meshed together toward the stage. All those on the floor were standing.

The show was deemed a success by the fans there who felt Chicago had given them their money's worth.

And the group had. It would be difficult for a group with 16 albums to its credit to decide which songs to play in a little over an hour's time. (The group began at 9 p.m. and the house light went on at 10:30 p.m.)

Chicago's set Wednesday was a nice blend of old and new hits, with almost each member having his special time in the center spotlight. The sound system was set at just the right amplification for the size of the center. (Many rock groups seem to be unable to achieve this level at Chaparral Center which is smaller than the arenas in larger cities.)

The two showmen of the evening were Pete Cetera, bass and vocals, and James Pankow, trombone. Both commanded the stage, whether in the limelight or not. It would be hard not to notice that Pankow brings a whole new manner of playing to his trombone, complete with body wiggles and twists which added a different dimension to the visual image of a trombone player, and that Cetera's ear ring (left ear) adds to rather than takes away from the total look he achieves onstage.

Other members of the group are Danny Seraphine, drums; Lee Loughnane, trumpet; Robert Lamm, keyboards and vocals; Chris Pinnick, guitar; Walt Parazaider, woodwinds, saxophone and clarinet; and the newest member, Bill Champlin, keyboards, guitar and vocals.

All were good. Musically noteworthy during the evening was Lamm's solo playing on the grand piano, Seraphine's drum solo, and the brass section whether in solo or together.

Champlin is a definite plus, with Parazaider saying of his talent, "We haven't had his special vocal qualities since the passing of Terry Kath." Kath was the former lead vocalist of the group who died approximately five years ago.

Perhaps the line from one of Chicago's hits best sums up how the audience felt about Wednesday's show, "Time passes much too quickly." It's possible that Chicago, which first recorded "Beginnings" under the name of Chicago Transit Authority in the sixties, may be into another beginning in the eighties.

They recommend that people only use the devices with TV sets that have been built since 1970.

The old TVs are safe for normal viewing, but youngsters sit much closer when operating video games and could be exposed to to potentially harmful doses of radiation, according to a report by doctors from the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Washington.

It was published in a letter in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

"Our calculations suggest that youngsters using older color televisions for display screens may be at risk for radiation exposure far in excess of the National Council for Radiation Protection and Measurement's recommendation of 100 mrem (millirems) per year for persons under 18 years of age," they wrote.

They estimated that a child who sits 16 inches from an old set and uses it two hours a day would receive 890 millirems of radiation in the eyes each year. In comparison, a chest X-ray produces between 20 and 30 millirems.

"In order to decrease the possibility of excessive radiation exposure," the doctors wrote, "we suggest that only newer color television receivers be used."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Japanese school children, by international reputation, are among the best in mathematics and science. How does that nation's educational system achieve those results? Here's a look at how their system works — and how it differs from others.

By DEBORAH SMITH
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO — To some educators here, the uniformity of Japan's school system is the secret of Japanese children's high math and science scores in international testing and a key to the nation's economic success. Others think it stifles creativity and breeds sameness.

The subject attracted wide attention earlier this year when a psychologist's study showed that Japanese children's scores on standardized intelligence tests averaged 11 points higher than those of Americans, and that 10 percent of Japanese have an above average IQ of 130 compared with 2 percent of Americans.

NEWSPAPERS HERE GAVE extensive display to the findings, but they triggered debate among scholars, some of whom said it is difficult to compare such scores internationally.

Japanese regard their educational system with much pride and often describe themselves as the world's most literate people. The government claims the official literacy rate is 99.7 percent, but concedes that this figure includes everyone who can read and write the simplest words.

Unlike the United States, where each state and school district sets educational standards, Japan's Ministry of Education determines curriculum and chooses textbooks nationwide. But it leaves the teaching style to the teachers and their schools.

Education is compulsory from ages 6 to 14. Most children attend free public elementary and middle schools, the rest private schools or special facilities for the handicapped.

Some schools have relaxed the requirement for uniforms, but they remain the order of the day in many, especially in private schools. Few sights in Japan are more familiar than schoolboys in high-collared black tunics, trousers and caps, and girls in dark blue dresses or middy blouses, carrying identical briefcases.

THE PASSION FOR learning also means most Japanese hit the books longer than the required nine years. About 97 percent of students go to high school or technical institutes and 37 percent to college.

"Japan has no natural resources. Educated children are our future. We must import natural resources and make good products to sell abroad. We have to use our heads," says Isamu Ogawa, principal of Seinan Elementary School in Tokyo.

Junji Sasaki, a Ministry of Education official, says, "rather than emphasizing special individual talents, the purpose of elementary and middle schools is to prepare the student in the things which are important to the future of the nation — to read, to write and to use the abacus. The main purpose of education is to teach all the children to attain a certain level of proficiency in these areas."

Moeko Tawara, a board of education member in Tokyo's Nakano Ward, says she worries about the stress on uniformity.

"American schools are more varied and the competitiveness between the districts is very impressive," she says. "When I ask Japanese teachers to describe what they are most proud of in their schools, they answer with satisfaction, 'We're just the same as the others.' The schools and teachers don't compete with each other. Only the students compete through test scores."

MS. TAWARA, WHO has visited U.S. schools that allow students to progress at their own pace, is concerned that Japanese students may be too restricted.

"Not only must education be standardized, but the students' personalities must be uniform," she says. "Teachers therefore neglect the slow learner, which gives him a sense of inferiority."

There are no special classes for gifted or slow learners. Parents prefer that teachers treat all children alike, educators say, and have opposed attempts to separate them by intellectual ability.

In addition, schools do not promote students ahead of their age group nor hold back those who can't keep up. To repeat a grade would be "too great an embarrassment" for a child and his family, says Ogawa.

Ministry officials point out that Japan's classrooms are crowded — 40 or more children per class — and teachers may not have time for individual instruction. Japan's group-oriented society also makes it hard for a student to call attention to himself, they say.

THOSE WHO FALL behind often go to "juku," or cram schools, which help younger students catch up and prepare older ones for arduous high school and university entrance exams. Japanese children, including first-graders, have homework — even during vacation periods in the middle of the school year.

Learning to read and write is particularly time-consuming. A student spends nine years learning the more than 2,000 characters in daily use, memorizing strokes by copying them over and over.

Math classes include instruction in the centuries-old abacus, or "soroban," which develops understanding of mathematical concepts. Basic geometry also is taught in elementary school.

The fifth-grade math class at Seinan Elementary followed this pattern of repetition. The 43 boys and girls sat in wooden desks, two to a row, facing the chalkboard where the teacher had drawn two triangles — one marked with angles and lengths, the other unmarked — and asked the children questions. After writing the answers to the oral questions, the students would raise their hands and wait to be called on.

"IN JAPANESE SCHOOLS, teachers do the talking and students do the listening. They only respond when asked a question," says Ms. Tawara. "That's a big difference from American schools. Therefore, Japanese have trouble expressing themselves."

One reason for this reticence is Japan's "vertical" society. Ministry official Sasaki says, "The traditional attitude has been that the teacher is a great person. He doesn't make mistakes."

While there has been an increase in violence at middle schools, students rarely disagree with teachers at the elementary level, teacher Kazuo Kamiyama says, because "children believe what the teacher says."

Coloradoan finds cap business heading up

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Seed company hats, feed company hats; even anti-weed company hats. On any given day, there were more people wearing baseball caps at the Indiana State Fair than in a big-league ballpark during the World Series.

The caps plug everything from beer and radio stations to motorcycles and camera companies. Some even celebrate baseball teams.

The genuine article, however, is a cap that bears the name or trademark of a farm implement or fertilizer company. The more faded and dusty they look, the more genuine they are.

While most of those commercial hats are given away to farmers, Mike Redmond sells his for $5 apiece, but he'll print anything you want on the hats for free.

"People want all sorts of crazy things," says Redmond, 33, who operated a hat and novelty stand recently outside the Fairgrounds Coliseum. "Everybody's gotta have something different."

Redmond estimates he travels 50,000 miles a year in his van. He's been riding the hat circuit for two years after spending 10 years as a manager for United Parcel Service.

On high school band day, Redmond was happily besieged by teen-agers who wanted their schools' nicknames printed on his white caps with red, black or blue trim.

"Now that they've started the trotters, people are asking for the names of their horses," said Redmond.

Teacher promises to make algebra easier for students

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — John Saxon's blue eyes flash with visionary zeal as he promises to lead high school students from the mathematical wilderness where results on standardized tests continue to decline.

He blames "the mathematics establishment" for the dismal state of the so-called "Queen of Sciences" in the country's schools. "These people have totally destroyed mathematics education," says the 58-year-old junior college algebra teacher.

His solution: His new Algebra I textbook, which he says is now in use in more than 500 school systems although it was published only last year.

Some studies in Oklahoma have suggested that Saxon's book can make a remarkable difference in student performance, but some academics are skeptical.

Dan Yates, supervisor of academic programs at the Math and Science Center in Richmond, Va., has read everything he can find on Saxon and his method. He is not yet convinced: "We would like to see more evidence and a little less rhetoric."

SAXON, A former combat pilot, says the experts who prepared most algebra texts now in use "have left the real world. They hold themselves aloof from the ninth-grade classes, where a teacher might get hit occasionally by a spitball."

As a result, he says, their texts are "inadequately conceived and abominably executed" to the extent they are full of abstract terms that beginning algebra students can't understand and then move from subject to subject so rapidly that retention is impossible.

Also, he says, after one year of algebra, students are thrown into geometry and don't get another taste of algebra — Algebra II — until the following year.

"Geometry interferes," he says. "It should be postponed until the 12th year, when it can be truly appreciated."

Algebra is termed the watershed in mathematics, dividing those who can make it into the more esoteric forms of math — and into science — from those whose low scores have produced anxiety and, ultimately, a hatred of the subject.

It is here that the 1949 West Point graduate departs from standard texts. Where the others "intimidate and frighten" students, Saxon says, his book will make algebra an enjoyable subject for even below-average students.

"EVERYBODY LIKES to work problems they can solve," he says. "And with my book, they will be able to solve the problems."

The result will be a "50-60 percent increase in SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test) points, an increase in enrollment in science and third-year algebra — and this will give its due rewards," he predicts.

Saxon says the main difference between his "Algebra I, An Incremental Development" and the other texts currently in use is constant reinforcement. "It's not review," the ramrod-straight Saxon says. "I don't ever review. I never drop it."

As a result, a ninth-grade algebra student on the last day of the term will do at least one homework problem on the topic he studied on the first day.

"We start with signed numbers, the function that makes algebra different from all the math the students have had before," Saxon says. "These are the positive and negative numbers.

"There will be at least one signed number problem included in every homework assignment during the term."

THE SAME follows for every other major function of algebra — finding the volume or the perimeter of various figures to changing exponents and adding, multiplying and dividing fractions.

"In algebra, as it is taught now, the teacher goes through one subject on one day, and all the homework problems that night are just alike. The next day they move on to another subject, and all the homework that night will be the same.

"There will be a review section in the textbook eventually, but by the time there is, the kids have forgotten everything that went before."

Since his thrust is on incremental development, building on what has gone before with constant reinforcement, his text has no chapters. Each topic is introduced gradually as a natural outgrowth of the preceding sections.

And instead of being told that one basic property of real numbers is "commutative," Saxon writes simply that four and two always equal six, regardless of the order in which they are added.

AFTER BEING turned down by major textbook publishers, Saxon brought out his book himself, mortgaging his home in this college city to help pay the costs. He then was able to get 20 teachers in various Oklahoma schools to run a test during the 1980-81 term using a prototype of his textbook and the one they regularly used.

The test was overseen by the Oklahoma Federation of Teachers. There was a control group of 841 pupils who used the regular textbook and an experimental group of 519 used Saxon's book. Each teacher taught one section using Saxon's and one or more using the regular text.

A battery of 16 tests showed that students using Saxon's text had an overall gain of 159 percent compared with the control group. In addition, the students in the lowest ability group as classified by California Achievement Tests outscored their control counterparts by 246 percent — and even outscored the high-medium control students.

But Yates said he has trouble with the methods used in testing Saxon's book, and adds that literature on it leaves many questions unanswered.

"There are a lot of specifics that are omitted that are important, such as exactly what he has covered, did he water down the course, how were the kids selected that he experimented with, did he ever test the kids by conventional means, both the control students and the ones who used his book," he said.

Yates is not urging that Saxon's concept be abandoned. Instead, "Let's get an independent evaluating team or device that we know is not biased that we can get to report objectively" to test the method, he said.

SAXON SAID he also discovered before he wrote his text that standard algebra books did not teach scientific notation, "so the kids were being thrown into chemistry without the slightest idea of what they were supposed to do." This led to a mass exodus from both science and math, he said.

Saxon teaches scientific notation, and students who used his book in the 1980-81 test outscored Algebra II students — most of whom had had chemistry — by a whopping 253 percent in this field. The ninth-grade Saxon students also outscored the Algebra II students by 204 percent on the integral exponent test.

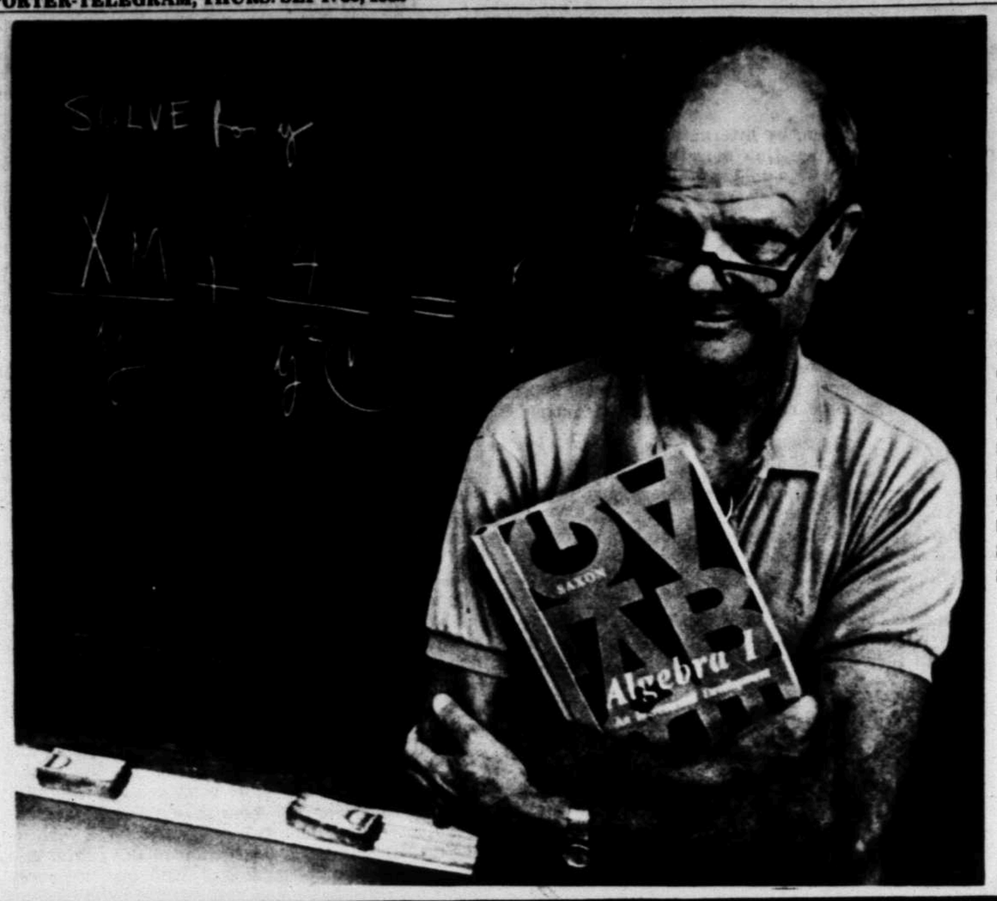

The test results were so impressive that William F. Buckley had Saxon write two articles in his "National Review" and college textbook publisher Bob Worth saw that the book got printed.

Perhaps more interesting was a study conducted in the Oklahoma City public schools, a study in which Saxon played no part.

Superintendent Tom Payzant said the Oklahoma City students who used Saxon's book showed a 50 percent increase in test scores — a showing that so impressed school administrators they decided to use their own funds to buy the Saxon book for all beginning algebra students this year instead of using state money to buy the texts on the approved list.

Saxon, whose Grassdale Publishers spreads through his kitchen and dining room, is working on more algebra books. He says big textbook publishers will have to pay attention to what he has done.

"This is more than one man lighting his candle," he says, "because when they see the brilliance of this candle they're going to have to light their own or be overpowered."

John Saxon poses in his junior college classroom with a copy of his algebra text he says will teach the subject better to high school students. But some members of the academic profession aren't so sure.

Commerce releases batch of bad economic news

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main gauge of future economic health turned down in August, and initial claims for unemployment benefits soared to a record level in mid-September, officials reported today in a new batch of bad economic news.

The decline of 0.9 percent in the Commerce Department's Index of Leading Economic Indicators followed four monthly gains, which had built hopes of recovery from the lingering recession.

The 703,000 initial claims for state jobless benefits for the week ending Sept. 18 — as reported by the Labor Department — seemed to indicate that things weren't improving much in September.

Commerce's report also said a separate measure of current conditions indicated the economy hit the lowest point of the recession last month.

Officials had said last week the leading indicators index probably had dipped in August, so today's news was not a shock. But it still was bound to be read as a discouraging economic sign.

The index is designed to forecast future trends in the economy.

Today's report said five of the 10 leading indicators showed worse performance in August than in July.

They included a decline in the average workweek, an increase in initial claims for unemployment benefits, a drop in factory orders for consumer goods, a big decline in building permits for future construction and a drop in prices for sensitive crude materials.

Five indicators rose, but not enough to balance the big drops in the five that fell.

Those rising included delivery performance and increases in orders for new plants and equipment, stock prices, total liquid assets and the money supply.

Today's Labor Department report on initial unemployment claims showed that that important component of the leading indicators index had continued deteriorating in September. Initial claims had averaged 597,000 in August.

Labor officials said the Sept. 18 figure was the highest since they began keeping track of the numbers in the present seasonally adjusted form in 1967.

The Commerce report also included the Index of Coincident Indicators — a current-conditions gauge that showed the economy was still declining in August, 13 months into the recession.

The coincident indicators dropped 0.6 percent in August to 132 percent of the 1967 base of 100, dipping below the July level of 132.8, which had been the recession's low point. The leading indicators index fell to 128.6 percent of the base but remained above the 125.1 percent March low point.

President Reagan himself made it a point in his Tuesday night news conference to try to take the edge off today's expected bad news.

"We think August has been kind of in the doldrums and it may show a dip," he said of the index. "But that'll be a glitch," he added.

In a speech Wednesday, he said the pattern leading to recovery was firmly established although "there may be an occasional blip."

While they haven't dismissed it is a mere "glitch," economists inside and outside the government agree that one month's change of direction in the leading indicators should not be read as a trend.

The economy seemed to revive a bit in July, but then apparently declined again last month, leading many private economists to sum things up with the same phrase: that the economy was "bumping along the bottom" of the recession, neither falling rapidly nor recovering.

For example, industrial production was down for the 11th month in the past 13 after rising in July; retail sales followed a 1.2 percent July increase with a 0.9 percent August decline despite hopes that the mid-summer tax rate cut would encourage spending; housing starts were down 16 per cent after rising nearly twice that much in July, and unemployment stayed at 9.8 percent, the highest level in 41 years.

Inflation and interest rates are down from last year, as the president and other officials frequently note. But those declines have accompanied the decline in the economy rather than stopping it.

"We still have a long way to go," Reagan also said Tuesday night, a statement that would receive wider agreement than his talk of an indicators glitch.

Still, he said, "We're heading toward a good recovery."

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan took much the same tack on Wednesday when he told reporters that he expected the national economy to grow at an annual rate of 3 percent to 4 percent in the October-December quarter, after adjusting for inflation.

That would probably be an improvement over the still-unfinished third quarter. But it would also be only about half the 7 percent to 8 percent annual growth rate that has typically followed past recessions.

According to Commerce figures, the economy — as measured by inflation-adjusted gross national product — rose at an annual rate of 2.1 percent in the April-June period after declining at rates of 5.3 percent and 5.1 percent in the previous two quarters.

Commerce's "flash" projection for the current quarter — computed long before final figures are in — estimated growth at a very modest 1.5 percent annual rate.

On the subject of unemployment, Regan told the reporters that things would get better but that it would probably take three to five years for the economy to reach "full employment," which he defined as a jobless rate of 6 percent to 6.5 percent.

Bankers say they were concerned about Penn Square

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several bankers who dealt with Penn Square Bank say they were concerned about poor documentation on some loans, but they still did business with the failed Oklahoma bank.

The bankers, testifying before a House Banking Committee hearing Wednesday, said officials at Penn Square, on occasion, failed to supply adequate records to back up loans it sold to larger banks.

Savings and loan and credit union officials are scheduled to testify today at the hearings. About 160 credit unions and S&Ls were caught with more than $100 million in the bank above the $100,000 insurance coverage provided by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

When Penn Square failed, several large banks, including Continental Illinois in Chicago, Seattle-First and Chase Manhattan, held $2 billion worth of oil and gas loans originated by Penn Square. Continental alone had $1.1 billion worth of the loans.

Richard Jaehning, Seattle-First's president, told the panel Wednesday that he made a trip to Oklahoma City to discuss the documentation problem with Penn Square.

He said Penn Square chairman Bill Jennings and president Eldon Beller reassured him that "documentation was improving."

But Seattle-First still sent another bank official, Arland Hatfield, to make a further check, Jaehning said.

Jaehning also told the panel he wished the comptroller's office, which had been examining Penn Square and had warned it about certain deficiencies, had alerted Seattle-First to Penn Square's "serious inadequacies in the lending, credit and documentation policies of that institution."

Jaehning did say that Seattle-First stopped buying loans from Penn Square early this year because of concern about its concentration of loans from the Oklahoma bank.

John Lytle, who was ousted from his post as a Continental vice president as a result of Penn Square, said documentation and reporting problems developed in 1981.

He said Penn Square failed to supply adequate records to back up the loans that the Chicago bank had bought from it. But he said the bank eventually took action to correct the problem and did provide the needed papers.

Shearson hosts 'All-Savers Day'

Shearson/American Express Inc. will host a nationwide "All-Savers Day" Saturday. As a service to its clients and the general public, the more than 320 Shearson offices, including the Midland office, will remain open for the day.

Shearson investment executives will provide interested parties with professional guidance in reinvesting the proceeds from All-Savers certificates that mature from October through December.

In addition, Shearson investment executives will outline ways investors may "roll over" these assets for maximum advantage.

All-Savers certificates, which were made available under the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, are one-year tax-exempt savings certifciates allowing an individual to exempt up to $1,000 of interest earned from federal taxes. Married couples may exempt up to $2,000. Purchases of All-Savers began in October, 1981, and can be made until December 31 through banks and other qualifying institutions, including Shearson.

Texans speak out for steel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas congressmen have written President Reagan that an East Texas steel mill's troubles were caused by the unfair trade practices of European countries who subsidize their own plants.

Sens. John Tower and Lloyd Bentsen signed the letter, along with all but two of Texas' 24 congressmen, which was initiated by Democratic Reps. Sam Hall of Marshall and Ralph Hall of Rockwall.

"The intent of this letter is to show the president that his administration must exert every possible influence on foreign trading partners to stop unfair trade practices that can virtually shut down productive industries like Lone Star Steel," Sam Hall said.

About 4,000 employees of Lone Star Steel were laid off last month. The company makes pipes and other tubular products for oilfield use.

"I have always been a supporter of the free and open marketplace, but I will not close my eyes to the damage done by foreign subsidies which put Americans out of work," Ralph Hall said.

Sam Hall said he hand-delivered the letter Monday to Reagan's chief of staff, James A. Baker.

The congressmen said equipment used for energy exploration, development and delivery should be produced in this nation. They complained that while domestic shipments were falling by 31 percent in the first six months of 1982, imports of tubular goods from other countries increased by 51 percent.

The letter said unfair competition "has taken the form of tremendous subsidies to foreign countries by their respective governments."

"It is not a question of free trade. It is the reality of uneven and unfair trade," the congressmen wrote. "We ask that this administration give its highest priority to impressing upon our trading partners that these practices will no longer be tolerated."

Lone Star Gas settles for half a price hike

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Lone Star Gas Co. has agreed to accept less than half of what it had sought from its natural gas customers, with one company officer saying the firm did not want to get tied up in a long hearing.

Lone Star filed a request with the Railroad Commission for an additional $90 million in gas revenue, but cut that figure to $42.9 million after negotiations with customer representatives.

The company serves 536 cities and has more than 1.1 million bill-paying customers.

"Lone Star and the cities recognize the importance of time and want to avoid long regulatory processes," company vice president Douglas Williams said Wednesday.

The proposed settlement — signed by representatives of Lone Star, Dallas and the Texas Municipal League — would increase Lone Star's total revenue by 8.63 percent.

The settlement still must be approved by the commission, which will act on the advice of hearing examiner Michael George, who took testimony Wednesday.

George said his concern was whether the proposed settlement "is in the public interest."

The settlement would raise residential customers' monthly charges by 6.6 percent, and Williams said this was substantially less than the inflation rate since Lone Star's last rate increase nearly three years ago. Commercial customers' bills would increase by 7.1 percent.

Company figures showed a residential customer using 6,000 cubic feet of gas a month would pay $1.92 more a month, and a commercial customer using 37,000 cubic feet of gas would pay an extra $12 a month.

Austin lawyer Don Butler, representing the Municipal League, said the cities' major concession was to drop its opposition to Lone Star's request to pass on to customers 100 percent of its gas cost increases. Lone Star now passes on 95 percent of those costs.

W.F. Weidler, director of gas purchases and sales, told George the pass-through "has nothing to do with the price of gas. We have to pay what the competition is willing to pay."

"In the last six months we've seen a softening of the market. It's more of a buyer's market," Weidler said. By comparison, he said the previous year or two had been a "regular dog fight" to obtain gas.

Forecasters see different economic futures

By The Associated Press

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan predicts the economy will bounce back from recession this fall with the fastest rate of growth in nearly two years, but some private economists say they see few signs of this recovery.

In comments to a group of reporters on Wednesday, Regan said he expects the economy to grow at an annual rate of 3 percent to 4 percent in the October-December quarter, after adjusting for inflation. That is lower than his earlier forecasts and would be only half the 7 percent to 8 percent annual growth rate that has followed past recessions.

Regan also said it would probably take three to five years for the economy to reach "full employment," which he defined as a jobless rate of 6 percent to 6.5 percent.

But Arthur Levitt Jr., chairman of the American Stock Exchange and head of a group of high-growth corporations, said in a bleaker forecast Wednesday, "I don't think the economic recovery will get under way until early 1983."

"I don't think we will have a meaningful recovery until interest rates get down to single-digit levels" and the government makes significant progress in cutting future budget deficits through spending cuts," Levitt said.

Investors seemed to share Levitt's gloomier outlook, as the stock and bond markets slumped Wednesday while interest rates rose moderately.

As the nation awaits recovery, businesses continue to fail.

Dun & Bradstreet Corp., a private credit-information service, reported that failures last week totaled 579, a decline from the week before but a 69 percent rise from the comparable week last year.

Rowena Wyant, a Dun & Bradstreet economist, said the dropoff in the week ended last Thursday was due mainly to a decline in failures of retailing, construction and service companies. The previous week's total of 657 failures was the second-highest of the year, surpassed only by the 696 recorded for the last week of August.

In other economic news Wednesday:

—Pollster Louis Harris told Congress most Americans are so fed up with what they view as a complex and inequitable federal income tax that they are willing to trade most deductions for a simple system.

—Congressional Republicans said that with another record harvest keeping market prices at depressed levels, the Agriculture Department is thinking about reviving a decade-old plan to purchase grain on the open market. Spokesmen for about two dozen GOP Farm Belt House and Senate members said they would urge Agriculture Secretary John Block to implement such a program.

—Congressional negotiators agreed on major banking legislation that would provide a big aid package for weak savings and loan associations. The measure, which must clear both houses of Congress, would let savings and loan associations operate more like commercial banks, phase out the interest rate advantages that S&Ls enjoy over banks and require creation of a new high-paying money market account.

Individuals play big role in tax-exempt market

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — With income-tax rates in the process of being cut by almost 25 percent, it might seem logical that individual investors' enthusiasm for tax-exempt investments would wane.

But just the reverse has happened, according to government and industry statistics. Over the last couple of years, individuals have played an increasing role in the tax-exempt securities market.

And observers believe this year's tax bill could give that trend some extra impetus in the future. It provides for 10 percent withholding on most taxable investments, beginning next summer — and experts say savers put off by that requirement may well turn to tax-exempt investments instead.

The evidence to date: Assets of mutual funds investing in short-term securities of state and local governments, which are exempt from federal income taxes, surpassed the $10 billion mark in September. According to data compiled by Donoghue's Money Fund Report of Holliston, Mass., about 60 percent of that money is in funds available to the general public.

At the same time, the investment firm of First Albany Corp. says, Federal Reserve reports show that the largest buyers of tax-free municipal bonds over the past two years have been "households" rather than banks or insurance companies.

Years ago, municipal bonds were considered almost the exclusive province of financial institutions and the wealthy few in the highest tax brackets. But lately inflation, fluctuations in bond prices and changes in the tax laws have combined to change that image.

Inflation pushed more and more people into relatively high tax brackets. At the same time, yields on municipal bonds grew more and more attractive in comparison with taxable bonds issued by corporations and the federal government.

Since last fall, municipals have offered yields ranging from 80 to 90 percent of the payouts available on taxable bonds. So even people with moderate incomes began to find that they could come out better after taxes with municipals.

When interest rates declined, pushing prices of municipal bonds higher, investors reaped an added benefit. The Wiesenberger Investment Companies Service reports that mutual funds investing in municipal bonds averaged a 13.5 percent rise in net asset value over the 12 months ended Aug. 31, against a 2.6 percent gain for the fund industry overall.

Where there is the potential for that kind of reward, there obviously is risk as well. Should interest rates turn upward again, prices of long-term municipal bonds would decline.

And personal-finance experts note that for absolute safety, taxable Treasury securities still rank No. 1.

The reductions in income-tax rates enacted in 1981 — 5 percent last October, 10 percent last summer, and another 10 percent at mid-1983 — have some mitigating effects on the appeal of tax-free investments.

Furthermore, the recent rally in the municipal market has lowered tax-free yields considerably. In late September, money funds investing in short-term municipal securities were yielding a little more than 6 percent, against an average of 7.8 percent for the last 12 months.

According to the Bond Buyer, a newspaper that covers the municipal market, the average yield on an index of 20 long-term general-obligation revenue bonds has fallen from 13.44 percent in January to 10.58 percent as of Sept. 23.

Nevertheless, argues First Albany, when prevailing yields of tax-exempt bonds are considered against the backdrop of an inflation rate running at about 5 to 6 percent, they still provide "a strong incentive for individuals to invest in municipals."

Lame ducks leave bills behind, returning to solve problem

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — If you accept New York Republican Rep. Barber Conable's definition, a "lame duck" is an official defeated in an election or due to retire, who is still in office. In Britain, where the term originated, "lame duck" was a reference to bankrupt businessmen.

The phrase "lame duck session" is also applied to a congressional or state legislative session that is called after an election but before newly-elected lawmakers are sworn in. The Congress, which is getting out of town this weekend without taking action on hundreds of bills of interest to business and industry, will be coming back for such a session in November.

There have been six such special sessions of Congress since 1945, with widely varying accomplishments. In 1948, after President Truman's historic upset victory of Thomas E. Dewey, the special session lasted only two hours and disposed of minor bills. Two years later, in 1950, Truman got a special session to sit until the successor Congress convened.

In 1954, only the Senate met to condemn Senator Joseph R. McCarthy for his behavior. In 1974, a special session approved the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller as vice president.

President Reagan is expected to ask the 1982 special session to act on a long laundry list of things. How Congress reacts is uncertain. Congressional leaders are not happy about coming back at all. They have told Reagan, for example, they have no intention of taking up the bailout of a soon-to-be bankrupt Social Security System.

Conable, who is considered to be one of the smartest congressmen around, feels the least desirable aspect of lame duck sessions comes from the manner in which legislation is manipulated by schedulers, in advance, to avoid accountability.

"It is the time of lowest political sensitivity: the departing cannot be called to account, unless they intend a comeback, and those who are returning to the next Congress will have a full two years of insulation before they have to face the electorate again," Conable wrote in his recent "Washington Report" column.

The congressman said that since the high point of political interest by the time of the session will be the already-held election, the atmosphere of anticlimax and "holiday good cheer will lead the politicians to think they can do pretty much what they want."

For the business community the warning has to be: "don't be caught napping. Keep a close eye on what's happening. If you don't you just might find yourself hurt badly."

TRADE PROTECTIONISM

The American Retail Federation, in a move intended to turn back rising protectionism, has gone on the offensive in Congress.

Its president, Loyd Hackler, is personally leading an attack against proposed bills aimed at requiring the U.S. to set up "mirror image" barriers equivalent to those levied on American goods and services in countries such as Japan.

In a recent strongly-worded statement to each member of Congress, Hackler said retailers supporting a "freer trading system" have become increasingly alarmed by the growing demands for protection in many parts of the world."

Hackler said a recent Japanese study showed that industries most heavily protected by the Japanese government — agriculture and small retailing — had the poorest records of productivity growth in the country.

"American retailers know from careful studies that they and their customers benefit from access to world markets," Hackler wrote. "A shutting off of imports on almost any goods would almost immediately result in higher prices for comparable goods in American stores."

A major attempt now is being made in Congress to protect the embattled American automobile industry by requiring that foreign auto manufacturers buy materials in the U.S. for the cars they manufacture.

Several bills would require as much as 90 percent of the materials to be purchased in the U.S. before a car could be sold in this country.

The Reagan administration opposes "local content" legislation. It has argued that it would in effect establish a subsidy for U.S. manufacturers at th expense of the consumer and would damage the world trading system. Administration officials have also argued that such laws would be inflationary, would restrict American industry flexibility in seeking low-cost sources of supply, would impose a new regulatory burden on the domestic industry and would hinder industry efforts to become more competitive in the world market.

What is Congress likely to do? The piece of legislation most likely to be approved is a measure that was reported by the Senate Finance Committee. The bill is an administration-supported plan that would strengthen the powers of the president to negotiate lower foreign trade barriers. The bill would modify the reciprocity element by requiring the U.S. to demand "fair and equitable" market opportunities before considering retaliation against another country's exports.

BUT A RECENT GAO REPORT ...

A recent General Accounting Office (GAO) study confirms the view shared by the American international insurance industry that many foreign countries maintain barriers to U.S. insurance investment and operations and that such restraints are widespread.

Released by Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, the report did not hold out any prospect for significant new overseas business. It showed, however, that many countries maintain highly restrictive barriers to U.S. operations and held that diplomatic pressure may be necessary to even keep the existing markets open.

CETA REPLACEMENT

Congress' compromise job training bill, replacing the expiring Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA), is likely to earmark 70 percent of its funds toward direct training, including limited work experience, and a retraining program for dislocated workers. The remaining 30 percent will go to pay for supportive services, wages, and administrative costs. Unlike CETA, the bill will provide no funds for public service jobs. Funding for the program will probably be governed by the terms of the continuing resolution, currently wending its way through Congress at $3.4 billion for fiscal 1983. President Reagan is supporting the program.

UNEMPLOYMENT TAX

Six state legislatures will have to act quickly to amend their unemployment tax wage base and 33 states will have until 1985 to change their maximum unemployment compensation tax rate, in both cases to insure that employers receive the maximum amount of credit against the federal unemployment tax. Provisions in the recently-enacted tax package mean that New York, Texas, Virginia, Indiana, Delaware and New Hampshire will have to increase their taxable wage base to at least $7,000 effective Jan. 1, 1983 to conform to federal laws.

AIRPORTS

A government plan for modernizing the nation's air traffic control system may be significant and bold but it is flawed as well, a study by the Office of Technology Assessment (OTA) has found. The plan, released earlier this year, "lacks a clear sense of priorities and provides no contingencies in case of delay or problems." OTA further said that "there is little apparent advantage in seeking to move en route traffic more expeditiously only to have it encounter delays in terminal areas."

NATURAL GAS DEREGULATION

In the past several months congressional committees have been inundated with conflicting testimony about a need to deregulate all natural gas prices by 1985. In the latest assault, the industry mobilized 43 witnesses to appear before a hearing of the House Fossil and Synthetic Fuels Subcommittee in an attempt to prove that the nation would gain significant benefits from deregulation, including an increase in gas reserves equal to as much as 1.5 million barrels of oil per day.

Nicholas J. Bush, president of Natural Gas Supply Association, said the current law, with its "maze of 28 different pricing categories, has led to favored groups of consumers who are subsidized at the expense of other consumers, favored pipelines whose average cost of gas is less than half that of other pipelines, and favored producers who receive up to 20 times more for their gas than other producers."

AROUND AND ABOUT

More than 30 scientists and policymakers from around the world will debate causes and effects of acid rain, along with future governmental policies on this highly controversial subject, at an Oct. 6 and 7 symposium sponsored by the Greater Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce in Pittsburgh ... With the virtual collapse of the housing market, the timber industry has experienced unemployment rates in excess of 30 percent ... The Senate Appropriations Committee has voted to deny funds for most government officials to be chauffeured between home and work at government expense. The committee claims at least 12 Defense Department officials, five State Department executives and three Transportation officials are currently being driven by government drivers ... Beginning Oct. 1, The Export-Import Bank will assist American companies to meet officially-supported foreign competition for export sales with credit terms of one to five years. The program will assist commercial banks to provide competitive fixed-rate loans for U.S. export sales ... Researchers at the Commerce Department are patenting an idea for a promising new chemical process that could be the basis for an improved method of removing the noxious pollutant sulfur dioxide from industrial gas streams such the flue gas from fossil fuel power plants ... The U.S. Geological Survey reports recent reconnaissance studies of submarine slopes in the north-central Pacific suggest that the slopes may well contain significant quantities of cobalt-rich deposits that may warrant commercial operations in the future as technology develops.

One family's getaway from the Livingston, La. area following Tuesday's train derailment and subsequent evacuation of the town included towing the family pet. One of the Baham family daughters was very upset at having to leave her home and belongings behind but cheered up somewhat when the family agreed to bring Honeybun, the girl's pony, along.

Soil, water in derailment area contaminated with toxic chemicals

LIVINGSTON, La. (AP) — Workers wearing air masks and protective suits have found toxic chemicals in soil and streams near derailed tanker cars that were burning today for the third straight day, authorities said.

The town of Livingston remained empty, although about 500 to 600 of the 3,300 residents evacuated after the railroad accident Tuesday were allowed to return Wednesday night to their homes in "a rural area of a rural area" outside the danger zone, said Sgt. Stephen Campbell, a Louisiana State Police spokesman.

Early Tuesday, 43 cars of a 101-car Illinois Central-Gulf train derailed on the eastern edge of the town, triggering fires and three major explosions over two days and forcing evacuation of residents within a five-mile radius.

Even state police and emergency personnel were ordered to stay two miles away from the tank cars, many containing vinyl chloride and other toxic chemicals.

On Wednesday, workers in protective clothing found chemical contaminants in the ground and small streams — but not in underground drinking water — within a half-mile of the fire, said Lt. Ronnie Jones, a state police spokesman.

Gus Von Bodungen of the department's air quality division said monitors at the edge of the evacuated area had detected quantities of dangerous hydrogen chloride and other chemical gases.

"The problem is we're not getting a 100 percent burn," he said.

Officials are letting the fire burn itself out over the next few days as the toxic fumes rise into the sky and dissipate. Although the fire was somewhat less intense Wednesday, its billowing black smoke was visible for 10 miles.

"There have been no more explosions or anything else unusual this evening. It's been quiet," Campbell said just before midnight.

There have been no arrests for looting or violating a state judge's order threatening intruders with contempt of court citations.

"We've had no problem with that whatsoever," Campbell said. "Our roadblocks are such that it's almost impossible for anybody to get in. About 30 troopers were patrolling the area, he said.

Gov. Dave Treen toured the area in a helicopter Wednesday.

"As long as people stay out, there is no danger to human life," Treen said. "We were fortunate that it did not occur in a heavily populated area."

Firefithers said a tank car filled with sodium metals, located in the middle of the wreckage, prevented them from hosing down the derailed cars because sodium burns violently when it touches water.

The most recent of three explosions occurred at 12:05 a.m. Wednesday. The fireball apparently came from one of seven tankers containing poisonous vinyl chloride, Campbell said.

The first explosion occurred when the cars derailed and the second happened Tuesday afternoon when a tanker containing tetraethyl lead blew up in a colorful column of flames and smoke.

Man's best friend comes through

BORREGO SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — An injured farmer stranded by a car accident in a desert ravine was rescued after his dog made a two-day trip home and the family realized something was wrong, officials said.

The dog, a black Queensland heeler named Dooley, was bedraggled and barely breathing after the seven-mile trek that ended up saving his owner, Brooks DeKock.

As soon as Dooley arrived home, "We knew something was wrong," said DeKock's mother, Bea Costa.

DeKock, 26, was rescued Wednesday after his mother and fiancee, Janelle Schepe, found his car in the deep ravine and notified authorities.

DeKock, a jalapeno pepper farmer, was listed in fair condition late Wednesday after being flown by helicopter to University Hospital in San Diego, 90 miles southwest of Borrego Springs.

A hospital spokeswoman said he suffered a broken collarbone, facial lacerations and several cracked vertebrae in his neck and lower back, but no paralysis.

He was "fairly coherent when we found him although he was somewhat dehydrated," Fire Chief Jack Hansen said.

Mrs. Costa said she was sure her son would have died if he had been left in the desert another day.

"I will credit the dog," she said. "He came out of that canyon and he came home. Animals, how do they know? Dooley always stays with Brooks, always, but this time he left...It took him from Sunday night to Tuesday night, but he came home."

DeKock's car plunged off the desert road Sunday night and rolled 300 feet down a rock-strewn ravine off Montezuma Road just west of the winter resort community of Borrego Springs, said Debby Russell, a dispatcher for the California Highway Patrol.

"He was found about 200 feet from his car," she said. "We think he crawled from the vehicle. How the dog ever found its way home is amazing."

The 2-year-old Dooley climbed out of the wreckage and made his way to the family home in Ranchita, seven miles to the west, Hansen said.

When the dog showed up, Mrs. Costa and Ms. Schepe telephoned a friend in Borrego Springs and learned DeKock had left there Sunday. The two women drove along the steep, winding road between the two towns "and we looked at everything to see if he had gone over the side," Mrs. Costa said.

"They weren't able to find him Tuesday and stopped looking after it got dark," said Kirby Beyer, a dispatcher for the hospital's Life Flight Helicopter. "But they started looking again this morning and saw the car down the ravine."

It was "a miracle" that anyone survived the crash, Hansen said.

"His car bounced all over these boulders that line the ravine," said the fire chief. "There was no visible evidence of an accident so most people going by the road would never have known there was an accident.

"It's a pretty well-traveled road because it's the main artery between San Diego and Borrego Springs, but there was no skid marks or anything like that to indicate there had been an accident," he said.

USC student hero did what was necessary

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A University of Southern California student praised as a hero in an apartment fire says he just did what anyone would do in that situation.

But campus police said Wednesday that Michael "Mick" Lynch, 18, was the only person who had the courage and concern to go into a darkened burning building to help evacuate the 40 people living there last Friday.

"I just think anybody who saw what was happening would need to do it. I just did what had to be done," Lynch said.

Two campus security officers on patrol early Friday reportedly noticed smoke pouring from a second-floor unit in the two-story apartment building adjacent to the campus a few miles south of downtown Los Angeles.

"He went down the hallways, knocking door to door, to help evacuate the residents," said Jim Gates, manager of USC's Housing Protection and Safety Office.

"The fire had knocked out the building's electricity, so he did it all in the dark," Gates added.

Bobcats corner wounded Rebels in Must game

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

SAN ANGELO — The Midland Lee Rebels, licking its wounds from a 10-7 upset loss to Odessa High to open the District 4-5A season last Friday, must get mentally well in a hurry here this Friday against the No. 4 state-ranked San Angelo Bobcats.

With San Angelo and Odessa Permian the two favored teams to win the district playoff berths this year, the Lee Rebels find themselves in a crucial position. They nearly have to win here Friday to keep real playoff hopes burning. And it won't be easy, but Lee coach Spike Dykes is optimistic about his "No Name" unit rising to the occasion.

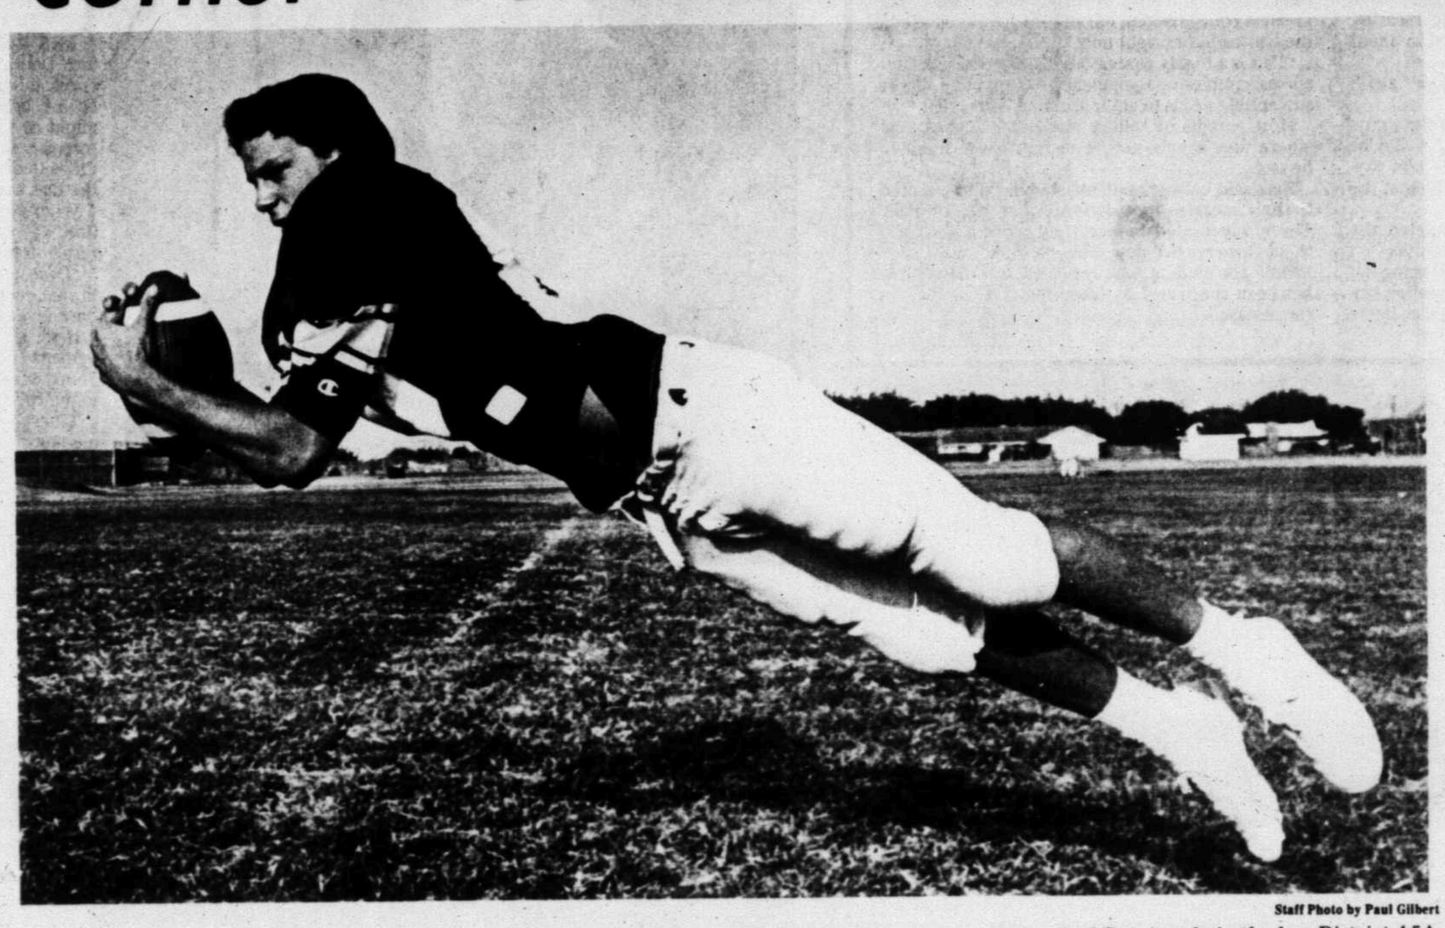

"OUR BACKS are to the wall," Dykes notes. "We've got to win here to have a chance at winning the district championship. That was our goal at the beginning of the year and that is still our goal.

"Our kids are enthused about playing one of the ranked teams in the state and I think they are ready to give a great effort. We will have to play one of our best games, or we won't have a chance."

San Angelo is 4-0 on the year, but is coming off a narrow 21-14 win over Abilene Cooper, a game they were fortunate to win. The Bobcats won it on a 90-yard kickoff return and Cooper had a TD called back on the last play of the game for lining up offside. San Angelo had only seven first downs in the game.

"We've managed to survive so far," says Bobcat coach Jimmie Keeling. "We are in the crucial part of our schedule. There is no doubt about that. You have to say Lee is a major contender in this district and Cooper is a tough team. We have Odessa Permian next week, but we can only think about Lee at this point.

"Lee has such great speed that they scare you to death. Their loss to Odessa High doesn't take away from this game at all because Lee can beat anyone it takes the field against and we know it."

Midland Lee tight end Mike Barton has caught six passes for 95 yards this year, including two for touchdowns. Lee needs a big night from him Friday when the Rebels take on No. 4 state ranked San Angelo in the key District 4-5A game of the week.

DYKES IS at a loss in efforts to explain what happened last week against Odessa High. "There is nothing you can really put your finger on. We had some breakdowns along the way and there are some coaching decisions I would like to have back, but the kids played hard. We just lost and we have to put that behind us now."

And in a hurry. San Angelo features what can be an awesome offensive unit with two of the top six rushers in the league so far, including sophomore running back Bevins Hoffman, who has rushed for 383 yards to rank third in the district while becoming the talk of the league. There is also veteran tailback Trey Wright, who ranks sixth in rushing with 280 yards with lightning speed.

Lee's "No Name" attack is led by halfback Clarence Smith, who has 191 yards to rank eighth, but Lee uses a lot of people in the skill positions, which has fostered the "No Name" nickname. Quarterback Paul Cox has gained 172 yards this year to follow Smith and he has done it with limited playing time.

LEE HAS used as many as five quarterbacks in a game. Mike Mercurio is the leading passer, completing nine of 14 passes for 137 yards and three TDs. The main receiver has been Luther Johnson, who has caught seven passes for 126 yards, and tight end Mike Barton, six for 95 yards and two TDs.

The San Angelo passing game has not been awesome behind quarterback Jeff Schkade, who has completed only eight of 29 aerials for 153 yards.

Dykes figures that San Angelo may be well on its way to one of the 4-5A playoff berths if they can win two of their first three district games, and the Bobcats have one win under their belts. "If we beat San Angelo, there is no telling how this district is going to turn out. Cooper may be the best team of the lot and they are 1-3. They are going to beat someone and Abilene High can beat anyone. Permian still has its schedule ahead of them. There is no telling what might happen," Dykes said.

The loss to Odessa High might not ruin the Rebels if they can beat the real contenders, but they must start here Friday night.

When Crane meets McCamey

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

It will be a classic confrontation of the irresistible force meeting the immovable object when the McCamey Badgers host the Golden Cranes Friday night.

McCamey, a class AA school, has averaged 23 points per outing this season while Crane has yielded but one touchdown in four games. In a 29-28 losing effort against class AAA Ozona last week the Badgers rushed for more than 300 yards and tacked on an additional 148 yards in the air.

Crane on the other hand held Van Horn to 121 yards in total offense and surrendered its' first touchdown of the season in a 24-6 win.

It will be the first time Crane has faced a triple option team this year which is one reason coach Ricky White expects a tight ball game.

IN 1981, White's first year at Crane, it was a disaster as the Golden Cranes had a worse than tarnished 0-10 season. But the 4-0 record so far this season doesn't seem to surprise White as much as it does most people.

"I think the main reason for the turnaround has been our kids' work habits," he said. "They work harder than anyone, and that has made the difference."

A portion of the reason for the shift of the zero column can be attributed to White's system being in place and understood by all his players and coaches. The Golden Cranes keep it simple running out of the I-formation and using a 4-3 defense.

"We base our offense around our tailback Gilbert Ramirez," White said, "and he has been good for us."

White also said each team has an edge over the other in this contest, "McCamey's got the speed and we've got the size."

MCCAMEY HEAD mentor, Larry Nabors, agrees that the Cranes outweigh his Badgers, and he said it's not just in the line.

"We've scouted most of their games and they have a big club, lineman and backs," he said.

That quarterback can run and pass," Nabors said. "He's the most dangerous person in their backfield."

Morris is a transfer from Odessa Ector where the 5-foot-10, 140-pounder started at quarterback for the Eagles.

"I'm not too sure what to expect. We'll just have to execute our offense and take what they give us," he said.

THE TRIPLE option offense employed by the Badgers involves a intricate blocking scheme and relies heavily on the players to make necessary changes.

"We (the coaches) help a little but we don't do much during the game," he said. "Our people on the field pick up the adjustments."

Besides being a contest between two fine football teams, the game should give district fans a preview of the anticipated clash between the only two undefeated teams in district 6-AAA, Crane and Ozona.

Most 6-AAA teams will be on the road in this, the final week before district play, as Ozona travels to Eldorado, Ballinger invades Menard and Coahoma journeys to Denver City. Colorado City will host Clyde and Sonora will welcome the Mason Punchers.

After a week off, district 2-AAAA teams begin their district race with Lakeview (3-0) at Monahans (1-2), Andrews (1-2) at Pecos (2-1), Lamesa (1-2) at Snyder (0-3) and newly-ranked (10th by Associated Press) Sweetwater (3-0) will host Fort Stockton (2-1).

District 7-A got a jump on the rest of the area districts, opening last week. Sterling City and Bronte, both 1-0, will square off in Bronte, while last week's other winners, No.5 ranked Eden and Garden City, will travel to Irion County and Water Valley respectively. Someone will win their first district game of 82' when Robert Lee host Greenwood.

The new season begins in district 6-A as Balmorhea (0-2) travels to Wink (3-0), Rankin (2-1) host Buena Vista (2-1), Fort Davis (0-3) invades Sanderson (1-0-1) and Iraan (2-1) entertains Grandfalls (1-2).

Dodgers left for dead

By Associated Press

"I think we have to feel good now, like we're in the driver's seat," said Terry Harper after leading the surging Braves to a 4-3, 12-inning victory over the Dodgers Wednesday night. "We're playing good baseball now, and when we're playing well, we can beat anyone."

The victory, Atlanta's sixth straight, put the Braves two games up in the NL West race with only four games to go. In losing for the eighth straight time, the Dodgers dropped into a second-place tie with the San Francisco Giants, who beat the Houston Astros 6-1.

Harper, reflecting on a long losing streak that cost the Braves a hefty lead earlier in the season, empathized with the Dodgers.

"I'm sure they're doing the same thing we were, just going out there and trying to win each game," he said. "They're not snakebitten, these things just happen."

Added Braves Manager Joe Torre, "I sure understand what they're going through. But I'm glad it's them and not us. We had ours in July, when we had time to recover. They still have time, too. But I hope we won't let that happen."

In order for the defending world champion Dodgers to make a comeback, they'll have to play near-perfect baseball the rest of the way — and hope the Braves don't.

Harper, who homered earlier, singled home the tie-breaking run in the 12th for the Braves and Jerry Roster's base hit brought in the eventual game-winner.

Giants 6, Astros 1

Home runs by Jeff Leonard and Chili Davis powered San Francisco over Houston. Leonard hit his eighth homer after a leadoff single by Reggie Smith in the second inning, accounting for the game's first runs. Davis led off the fifth with a homer, his 19th, off Joe Niekro, 16-12, giving the Giants a 3-1 lead and all the runs they needed.

Pirates 7, Cardinals 3

Jason Thompson's two-run double sparked a four-run first inning that carried Pittsburgh over St. Louis. Thompson's two runs batted in gave him 101 for the season and made him the first Pirate with 100 RBI since Dave Parker drove in 107 in 1978.

Phillies 4, Expos 0

Steve Carlton pitched his sixth shutout of the season and 18th complete game as Philadelphia beat Montreal. The left-hander allowed only Joel Youngblood's single with two out in the fifth inning and Tim Raines' leadoff single in the ninth.

Carlton, 22-11, struck out three to boost his league-leading total to 273. The 37-year-old would be the oldest pitcher to lead the NL in strikeouts. Dazzy Vance fanned 200 to lead the league at the same age for the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1928.

Cubs 4, Mets 1

Bill Buckner cracked four hits, including a two-run homer, as Chicago beat New York and snapped the Mets' four-game winning streak. Mike Proly, 5-3, got the victory in his first start for Chicago, beating the Mets for the fourth time this season with relief help from Lee Smith, who gained his 16th save.

Padres 3, Reds 2

Terry Kennedy's two-run single in the 10th led San Diego over Cincinnati. Trailing 2-1, the Padres loaded the bases on singles by Broderick Perkins and Alan Wiggins and a walk to George Hinshaw. Brad Lesley, 0-2, struck out pinch-hitter Rick Lancellotti, but Kennedy followed with his game-winning hit that gave him 97 RBI for the year.

"I guess when you've got a .310 lifetime average, this has to be considered an off year. It's taken me a long time to adjust to hitting second ... my whole philosophy has always been to be agressive, but I've taken so many pitches this year. I think I've lost some of my agressiveness." — Pete Rose, of the Philadelphia Phillies, hitting just .273.

NFL Strike Update

By The Associated Press
Day: 9
Games Lost: 14

PROGRESS OF THE NEGOTIATIONS: The talks will resume Thursday at 1 p.m. (EDT) in Washington.

CHANCES FOR SETTLEMENT: Almost impossible that an agreement could be reached in time to salvage this weekend's 14-game schedule, in view of Commissioner Pete Rozelle's statement over the weekend that a settlement would have to be reached by Thursday in order to do so.

DIFFERENCES: Management says it would guarantee the $1.6 billion it has offered the players if the players agree to drop their demand for a wage scale and keep the present system of individual negotiations. The players said they would not.

Measles worry Baylor fans

WACO, Texas (AP) — Baylor University officials have urged students attending the Bears' football game this weekend to receive measles inoculations in hopes of stopping the spread of a campus outbreak.

More than 4,000 Baylor students already have been inoculated on campus against red measles, symptoms of which have been diagnosed in about 70 students, health officials said Wednesday.

More inoculations will continue at Baylor again today.

"They admitted six more that showed the symptoms, and more are appearing hourly," a Baylor spokesman said Wednesday. "So they're now saying 80 is a good estimate. But they're looking at the possibility of it rising to 100."

A makeshift vaccination clinic also is being set up on the University of Houston campus for students who will attend Saturday's Cougars-Bears game.

"We're trying to get the word out to the Houston area or anyone that might come to the game, to have them check their records and get inoculated before they come to Waco," the spokesman said.

Dr. Tom Betz, an epidemiologist with the Texas Department of Health in Austin said, "This is the greatest concentration of red measles anywhere in the United States right now."

"This is a highly contagious disease that will find all susceptibles in a population, so anybody that is susceptible needs to get inoculated," Betz said.

Most parents of college students are at an age where they should not be susceptible to measles, he said.

Betz said college students should be vaccinated if their measles inoculations were before 1968. Those vaccinated before they were a year old should also receive new shots, he said.

Only the student who returned from Honduras has been confirmed by laboratory tests as having the disease.

Reader disputes figures

Briefly, it showed the pro football player ($95,000 salary, $400,000 career earnings, 4.2 years longevity), pro baseball ($240,000, $1,560,000, 6.5), pro basketball ($215,000, $800,000, 4 years), hockey ($120,000, $600,000, 5 years).

K.P.'s observation: "Your comments on football strike and averages is in error in that you have failed to show the number of games played. Football is way ahead—16 games, $5,937.50 per game; baseball, 151 games (ed note: season's are now 162 games), 1,589.40; basketball, 151 games (ed note: oops, that's high) $1,423.04 per game. You should show the total exposure."

The comments are interesting, but in the case of the chart, we believe the figures were meant to stand on their own, information with which the fan could do with what he wished, as Mr. Walker did.

The per game figures shows the pro football players are the best paid of all athletes. Still, it doesn't tell the entire story. Pro footballers spend a week in preparation. Preparation in baseball and basketball, after preseason, is in the almost daily games, which do not take the same physical toll as football.

THE TIME each athlete spends in his sport is comparable. Baseball begins with spring training in March and ends, barring playoffs, at the start of October. Basketball goes from September to early April. Football starts in July and ends in December.

The crowds are another factor that could enter into salary considerations. Football outdraws all others per game, but does it outdraw a week of baseball? At the season's end, baseball's longer schedule shows up in overall attendance. Basketball players, on the basis of attendance, are the most over paid of all...but the number of players on a squad is smaller than football, baseball or hockey, hence the seemingly irrational salary ratio.

Football has the advantage of one-game, one-trip a week. Travel and odd hour schedules exact a dreadful toll on baseball, basketball and hockey players...but does it equal the physical pounding a football player takes?

Welcome to the Wonderful World of Sports, where the arguments stirred up are sometimes more fun than the games...especially, at the moment, in the case of pro football...

FROM PHYLLIS Speight, whose son Paul attends Oklahoma State University, plays in the offensive line on the Cowboys' football team and was subject of a feature article, depicting the hectic existence of the scholarship athlete trying to keep up with his sport and graduate in four years.

"Thought you might like to know we had many, many calls on this article. Most commented on the "different approach" text. Well, OSU's won/lost record is not impressive at this point. (Good grief, What happened?) One bright spot is Ernest Anderson, NCAA rushing leader to date. He gives a lot of gredit to his offensive line, where Paul Edmond is starting at right guard. Hopefully, the W/L will improve as they start conference play."...

NO LETTERS, but the R-T sports department was, for some reason, the recipient of an inordinate number of calls inquiring as to the outcome of the Slippery Rock-Catawba game last Saturday. Don't panic, Slippery Rock won 17-13.

The score was never carried on the AP wire.

That frequently happens with the small school game-of-the-week. One year, it wasn't bad enough that we had two west coast teams, Occidental and Redlands, on the Forecast board, but they were playing a night game. In desperation, the president of Redlands had to be contacted for the score.

NCAA fight could cost 60 rankings

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — As many as 60 schools could face eviction from the top division of the NCAA in what promises to be a bitter floor fight at the group's January convention.

NCAA President James Frank confirmed Wednesday that new rules are being drafted to toughen the entrance requirements for non-football playing members of Division I.

THE RESULT could be that as schools are forced into Division II, it would force some smaller conferences to surrender their automatic invitation to the NCAA basketball tournament. Conferences which might be affected include the West Coast Athletic Conference, the East Coast Conference, the Midwestern Cities Conference, the Trans-America Conference, and the East Coast Athletic Conference.

What Frank called a "working paper" on the legislation was unveiled this week to a meeting in Kansas City of school presidents and chief executive officers.

"I can tell you from the amount of debate that was in that room, that there will be very heated debate at the convention," Frank said.

Having a conference champion or post-season tournament champion automatically invited to the NCAA Tournament brings a minimum of more than $100,000 to the conference members.

"There will be a real right," said Cecil Coleman, commissioner of the Midwestern Cities Conference. "We will not take this lying down. We will fight this to the bitter end."

THERE HAS been nearly a 20-percent increase in Division I membership in recent years. In many instances, schools with relatively small programs have jumped from Division III all the way to Division I by joining a Division I conference.

Newspaper calls for ouster

OU's Switzer under fire

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma's largest newspaper questioned whether Sooner Coach Barry Switzer should keep his job after his team record fell to 1-2, but he lumps the editorial outcry with that of other disappointed fans.

An editorial in Tuesday's edition of The Daily Oklahoman complained of Switzer's business dealings and raised the question that the time he devoted to them hurt his management of the Oklahoma football team.

OKLAHOMA had a 7-4-1 season last year and has lost two of its first three games in 1982.

"As a winner, Switzer was tolerable to many. As a loser, perhaps it is time for him to move on," the editorial said.

"I just knew that that would be the first thing that came up when we stubbed our toe," Switzer said in a regular Tuesday press conference.

"My reaction to that is I can't win in competing against (Oklahoman Publisher Edward L.) Gaylord. You can't win that battle."

He said the issue of his business dealings "have been on the sidelines. We won and we won, and now that we stubbed our toe, it's time for me to go."

But the 10-year veteran Oklahoma coach also became philosophical about his job and the prospect of some day losing it, telling reporters, "Coaching is a terminal disease ... it's going to hit you sooner or later. You just don't know when. You win or lose, and some day you're going to get fired."

SWITZER SAID his mail becomes more negative when the Sooners lose but "I don't have time to read all those. Half of them don't even sign their names."

Calls to Oklahoma Athletic Director Wade Walker and interim President J.R. Morris were not returned Tuesday.

Sports Information Director Mike Treps said his office has received mail from disheartened fans, but quipped, "Being a Cubs fan, I'm used to it."

Switzer said his outside business interests are no different than any other major football coach's, but he asserted that he works at them in the off-season, unlike the others.

"I work at football. When football season's over and school and spring practice are finished, I don't go play golf every day like some coaches," he said.

Saw strike coming in '74

ATLANTA (AP) — Georgia Tech football Coach Bill Curry says the National Football League players knew after their 1974 strike that it would take a walkout during the regular season to apply "real pressure" to the owners of the professional football teams.

Curry, who was president of the National Football League Players Association during the 1974 preseason strike, was asked this week if he thought the professional football players learned how to run a strike from last year's walkout by professional baseball players.

KC Royals delay California clincher

By Associated Press

The Kansas City Royals have been their own best life-support team the last two nights. Now they need outside help to stay alive in the American League West.

"When your backs are against the wall, when you know if you lose there's no tomorrow, you have to give it all every game," said George Brett, after his Royals again staved off elimination by rallying past the California Angels 6-5 Wednesday night.

California could have wrapped up the division by beating the Royals either Tuesday or Wednesday. But Kansas City rallied for one-run victories both nights, and as a result, California's magic number remained at two while its lead over the Royals dropped to 2½ games.

California returns home to for a three-game series against Texas starting Friday night, while Kansas City will entertain Oakland in a four-game set beginning tonight.

"All this means is we have a little more work to do," said California Manager Gene Mauch, who has never won a flag in his 23 years in the dugout — the longest any major-league skipper has ever gone without winning some title.

The Angels, backed by Reggie Jackson's 37th home run and Don Baylor's 24th, took a 5-2 into the bottom of the seventh.

But starter Bruce Kison ran into trouble when Frank White doubled, Jerry Martin singled and Cesar Geronimo followed with a run-scoring single. Luis Sanchez, 7-4, came in and promptly hit Willie Wilson with a pitch before U.L. Washington stroked a two-run single to tie the game.

Brewers 6, Red Sox 3

Ned Yost's first homer of the season, a two-out, three-run blast in the top of the ninth inning, enabled Milwaukee to move closer to the AL East title. The Brewers' victory, combined with Baltimore's loss, trimmed Milwaukee's magic number to two.

Boston reliever Mark Clear, 14-10, intentionally walked Cecil Cooper to pitch to Yost.

The Red Sox took a 2-0 lead in the first on Jim Rice's 23rd homer. Gary Allenson also homered for Boston. Don Money hit his 16th homer for Milwaukee.

Tigers 3, Orioles 2

John Wockenfuss' pinch-hit homer leading off the bottom of the ninth inning dealt another blow to Baltimore's pennant hopes. The homer came off Tippy Martinez, 8-8, who relieved Jim Palmer with one out in the seventh.

Cal Ripken Jr. hit his 22nd homer for Baltimore while Mike Laga and Chet Lemon homered for Detroit, which beat Baltimore Tuesday night and topped the Orioles twice last week.

Yankees 13, Indians 6

Ken Griffey went 4-and-4 to knock in five runs and Jerry Mumphrey doubled twice and tripled to drive in four, highlighting New York's rout.

Mumphrey's three-run double keyed a five-run fourth inning as the Yankees took a 7-3 lead.

Twins 8, Blue Jays 0

Rangers 5, A's 3

Larry Parrish singled in the lead run as Texas scored twice in the seventh inning, thanks to two of Oakland's four errors. Tom Henke, 1-0, won his first major-league game. Pat Putnam gave Texas a 3-0 lead in the fourth with a bases-loaded double.

White Sox 6, Mariners 5

Harold Baines' 24th homer and Greg Walker's two-run triple paced Chicago's attack. Winner LaMarr Hoyt upped his record to 18-15. Todd Cruz hit his 16th homer for Seattle.

KENNY REDIN'S
Fin & Feather

Public deer hunts to be held on the Walter Buck Wildlife Management Area near Junction have been carefully planned to avoid disturbance to a major turkey roost site. Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. officials said gun and archery hunts will be held on portions of the 2,123-acre tract away from the traditional rooster...

Discovery of an ugly yellow grub in the body of a largemouth bass being filleted for the table should not cause alarm, say TPWD biologists. Ernest Simmons, director of the TPWD inland fisheries, said grubs are often found in fish caught in late summer and early fall.

"In most cases, these parasitic grubs are harmless to fish populations and actually don't render the fish inedible." According to Simmons, the grubs usually are imbedded in the flesh, just below the skin, and can be trimmed out.

The grub lives in the throat of a wading bird, such as a heron. As the bird feeds, the eggs of the grub escape into the water where they hatch into swimming larvae. The larvae finds a snail and penetrates the mollusk's shell, where it forms a sporocyst. The sporocyst, in turn, produces another swimming larval form which leaves the snail and penetrates the skin of the fish.

SEPTEMBER AND October are excellent months for catching catfish in East Texas reservoirs, says TPWD biologist Joe Toole. "In the early fall, catfishes' appetites hit a peak in preparation for the winter when they become relatively dormant. The theory applies to the three main species, channel, blue and flathead.

"Every serious catfisherman knows channel and blue cats will take a variety of dead or live bait, including blood bait, cut shad, minnows, and worms. Flatheads go almost exclusively for live food such as shad, shiners or sunfish."

Toole says a popular way to increase catfish catches is with "soured grain or dry dog food placed in a good area. It will start drawing catfish in a day or so." and it's legal...

OAK CREEK Lake near Sweetwater is experiencing increased activity, according to Ike Pate, owners of Sportsman's Lodge. "The crappie have got it going and even some of the folks that had their rod and reels put up for the past few years are out on the lake catching fish. The best crappie are ranging up to 1 1/2 pounds with strings of 30 commong."

Ike says the bass are doing just as well. Arthur Ray Boyd, Sweetwater, caught a six-pound, nine-ouncer to take honors for the week, but bass at 5-7, 6-6, 4-13 were taken.

The Sweetwater Bass Club will hold its Open Tournament at Oak Creek Oct. 16. Cash prizes over $1,500 will go to winnes of the two-fish one-day tournament. Headquarters are at Sportsman Lodge.

Since the football strike is in full swing, you might now venture away from the tube for some exploring, hunting, fishing or camping in Texas' outdoors.

Mourning dove season is underway, largemouth bass are striking topwater lures, varmints are on the prowl and archery season for whitetailed deer is coming up.

Don't count out channel and blue catfish, feeding in shallow waters. From now until mid-November, cats will accept baited holes in large reservoirds. Bait a hole in about 15 to 30 feet of water with soured grain. Fish the next day and be surprised.

White bass and stripers begin popping up to forage on shad. Most big reservoirs now have stripes and fall fishing for stripers can be fantastic. Good striper lakes in the next few weeks include Amistad, Falcon, Toledo Bend, Texoma, Possum Kingdom and Canyon.

If fall fishing isn't your bag, take to the woods in search of mourning dove are to call up a varmint. Predator calling is also a good way to sight in rifles for the upcoming big game seasons. There's not much better target practice than a scraggly-looking coyote standing 50-yards in the distance.

On Oct. 13, 1978, I was varmint calling the canyonlands east of Sivlerton. After several hours, I had only enticed one half-grown raccoon. As it neared dark, I decided to make one last stand.

Just as I moved from my bush, I felt a nudge at my back and heard a short bark. My gun hit the ground and my camera flew off my neck. As I wheeled around, I saw this half-grown coyote pup high-tailing it out of my presence.

I don't know who was the most scared. I galloped to my pickup after retrieving my camera and gun.

That incident is the most hair-raising and unforgettable in my lifetime and it probably was for the coyote too.

I've spent a lot of time outdoors. All seasons, and in all types of weather, but I've never gone wrong by venturing into the wild in the fall. Whether you bag a bird, catch a fish or see a fleeing deer, something wonderful and memorable will happen to you on that cool, autumn day in the great Texas outdoors.

Floydada's Weeks tops Texas prep Honor Roll

By Associated Press

Floydada Coach L.G. Wilson must be congratulating himself on his decision two weeks ago to move Donnell Weeks to tailback.

Weeks fit comfortably into his new position by rushing 137 yards on 16 carries and scoring two touchdowns, kicking a 32-yard field goal and three of four extra points, punting twice for a 45-yard average, catching two of two passes thrown to him, intercepting a pass and making seven tackles as a defensive safety.

Weeks' performance earned Floydada a 3-1 record and netted the senior tailback mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll.

"From our point of view, he's equally good on offense and defense but the thing that really makes him valuable is his kicking," Wilson said. "He can punt us out of a hole or put the other team in one with his punting."

Weeks has punted 16 times this season for a 40.1 average and is capable of kicking field goals in the 45-yard range, Wilson said.

Weeks also sparked Floydada two weeks ago against Muleshoe with an 83-yard interception return for a touchdown in a 20-6 victory.

"He's not real fast. He's more of the glider type, real smooth," Wilson said. "He just kind of glides up into the hole and make it look so smooth."

Lockney's Tony Rodriguez got his day's work done in the first half in a 32-0 victory over Ralls. He made nine tackles as a strong safety, rushed 80 yards on seven carries and scored on runs of 54 and two yards. He returned a punt 60 yards for a touchdown and took the second-half kickoff 75 yards for a touchdown before leaving the game.

—Granger's Johnny Dorn rushed 268 yards on 24 carries and scored on runs of 63 and 80 yards to rally his team to a 27-19 victory over Holland. Dorn's touchdowns put Granger ahead to stay.

—Moody's Kelvin Thomas had a near perfect passing performance, hitting nine of 10 passes for 260 yards and touchdowns of 75, 36, 72 and 5 yards in a 36-15 victory over Frost.

—Tracy Holmes rushed 108 yards on 16 carries and scored two touchdowns in Texarkana's come-from-behind 20-13 victory over Tyler Lee. Holmes returned the second-half kickoff 90 yards to rally Texarkana from a 13-0 halftime deficit.

—Quarterback George Moore scored by running, passing and catching in leading Nixon to a 41-8 victory over Wiema. Moore rushed 126 yards on 15 carries and scored on runs of 3, 2, and 33 yards, completed eight of 14 passes for 124 yards and a 2-yard touchdown pass and caught a 45-yard touchdown pass to account for 295 total yards.

—Defensive back Mark de la Rosa returned an interception 56 yards for a touchdown to highlight Cleman's 29-0 shutout of Ballanger. A week earlier, de la Rosa returned an interception 102 yards for a touchdown.

—Although it was in a losing cause, Abilene Cooper fullback Michael T. Royls gained 188 yards on 18 carries and scored on runs of 65 and 69 yards in a 21-14 loss to No. 4 ranked San Angelo.

—Beaumont West Brook's Gerald Landry specialized in the dramatic in a 15-7 victory over West Orange Stark. Facing second and 43, Landry threw a quick pass to Darryl Colbert for a 56-yard touchdown pass play. He later field a punt at his own 15, fumbled it to the 12, then picked it up and ran 88 yards for a touchdown.

—Kedrick Williams bulled 239 yards on 20 carries and scored on a 45-yard run as Anahuac edged Warren 26-22.

—Freddie Tijerina was the workhorse, running 32 times for 182 yards and one touchdown for Laredo Martin in a 17-8 victory over San Antonio Harlandale.

—Pharr-San Juan-Alamo tailback Gilbert Salinas scored four touchdowns and gained 170 yards on 34 carries in a 26-12 victory over Brownsville Hanna.

—Mike Garza rushed 212 yards on 13 carries and had touchdown runs of 48, 38 and 14 yards as Edcouch-Elsa cruched Tuloso-Midway 55-28.

More trouble for Mercury

MIAMI (AP) — Already accused of cocaine trafficking, former Miami Dolphins running back Mercury Morris now faces charges of writing a worthless check to buy a $498 gun.

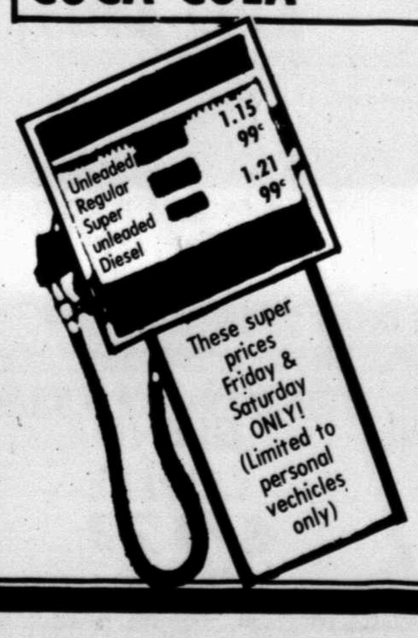

Morris, a star on the Dolphins' Super Bowl teams in the 1970s, surrendered last Thursday after he was notified by mail that an arrest warrant had been issued, Metro-Dade police said Wednesday.

California's Grich changes the image

The Washington Post and Los Angeles Times

When major league managers select a second baseman, first they give him a glove, hit fungoes to his right and left, and watch to see he doesn't step on himself making the turn on the double-play. They time him to see how fast he gets rid of the ball, see if he can get something on the throw even if he's standing on his head, or being flattened by some nine-second sprinter who hates infielders. They try to see if he's scared of spikes.

After that, they don't care if he votes Communist, eats peas with a knife, speaks English or leaves the spoon in when he drinks coffee.

When it comes to batting, they just hand him a 33-ounce bat, sigh, wish him luck and hope he can bunt.

Second-basemen are supposed to hold a bat up by the label, work for a walk, hope they get hit in a soft spot, hit behind the runner. As they say in golf, he has to learn "the short game." No one ever wrote "hard-hitting second-sacker." Second-sackers are "heads-up" or "smooth." "Gutty," maybe.

Bobby Grich was a second-sacker. Or thought he was. He was drafted in the first round out of high school by the Baltimore Orioles who gave him $40,000 and just hoped he didn't have to kneel down to stop ground balls. They had Mark Belanger at short which meant that anything hit to the left of second needed a visa to get through.

So, Bobby tried to be the perfect second baseman. He chocked down on the bat, he punched holes in the infield, and he batted .383. He was a regular Wee Willie Keeler.

You would have thought Manager Earl Weaver would be ecstatic. A second-sacker who knew his place. A guy to keep a rally going. A tough out. A 6-2 Eddie Stanky.

EARL WEAVER is not John McGraw. "If you can hit .383 with half a bat, why wouldn't you want to see what you could do if you hold it down on the end?" he challenged.

This is heresy. Managers spend half their lives telling hitters "to just meet the ball, don't try to be no hero." They know pitchers love those big free-swingers in the batter's box. They'd be out in front of a moving train if it changed speeds on them, their swings start so soon.

But, Bobby Grich remembers Earl Weaver's philosophy of managing was to take a hitter and tell him "Go on up there and hit me a three-run home run. It's the best play in baseball. Next to the four-run homerun."

A LOT OF managers consider free-swinging infielders society's main problem. But Earl Weaver figured there were a lot worse things than strikeouts. A triple play, for example.

Bobby Grich went back down to the minor leagues (Rochester) and struck out 96 times. But, when he wasn't striking out, he was hitting homeruns and triples, 32 of the former to lead the league. Weaver was right. "The only time you should ever choke up is at sad movies," he told him.

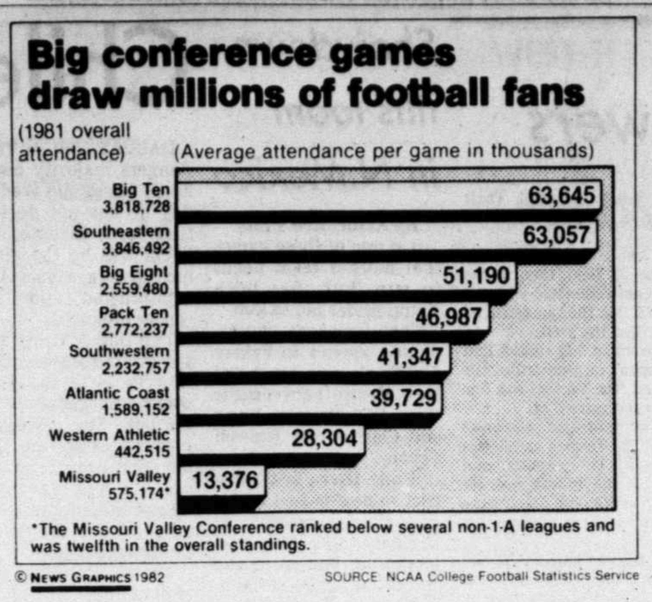

Bobby Grich ran Davey Johnson right off second base in Baltimore. Nor did he need a butcher's apron in the infield. In 1973, he became only the third second baseman in major league history to make only five errors in a season. Some guys make that in an hour and a half. Roger Peckinpaugh commmitted eight in one World Series. Somebody named George Grantham once made 55 in a season.

But, what Bobby Grich did best was hit for distance. Last year, in the truncated season, he became only the second-baseman ever to lead the American League in homeruns. You have to go all the way back to 1901 and the storied Napoleon Lajoie to find a second baseman who did that. Not since 1925 did any second baseman lead the league in home runs. Rogers Hornsby did that in the national league. Clearly, Bobby Grich is keeping some heady company.

ORDINARILY, TO paraphrase Teddy Roosevelt, second basemen speak loudly and carry a small stick. The most homeruns ever hit by a second baseman was by Rogers Hornsby, 289. The most ever hit in the American League was by Joe Gordon, 253. The great Charlie Gehringer, "Mr. Second Base," totaled 184. "Power" second baseman like the famous Tony Lazzeri, he of the famous 1926 Series strikeout, hit 178. Frankie Frisch of the Hall of Fame Frisches had 105. Bobby Doerr had 223.

It's not impossible Bobby Grich will be the league's all-time home run hitter from second base before he's through. He hit 52 home runs in his last two full seasons, and 14 last year in 100 games. He has 17 so far this season and more than 160 for his career.

If so, he'll be the Grich who Stole Hornsby, and Earl Weaver will deserve a lot of the credit for taking the banjo off his shoulder. But, if this Grich breaks the record against Weaver's Orioles, we can expect Earl to slam his hat down on the ground and chase his one-time player around the bases shouting "You lousy, blankety-blank expletive! You're a lousy second-baseman! Why don't you hit like one?!

Rozelle makes appeal for antitrust exemption

WASHINGTON (AP) — Commissioner Pete Rozelle is making another appeal to Congress to give the National Football League a limited exemption from the nation's antitrust laws.

Rozelle and Gene Upshaw, president of the NFL Players Association which opposes the proposal, were to testify today before the House Judiciary subcommittee on monopolies and commercial law.

Last month, Rozelle testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee and said the nation's antitrust laws, as they apply to professional sports leagues, remain "confused, unsettled and unpredictable after over 30 years of almost ceaseless litigation."

An NFL aide said Rozelle was to make similar arguments before the House committee.

HE SPECIFICALLY asked the Senate to adopt legislation, introduced by Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., which would authorize the leagues to decide that a member may not abandon communities in which clubs have been operating successfully.

A major effect of the bill would be to return the Raiders to Oakland from their new home in Los Angeles, despite a court decision paving the move.

The measure also provides for revenue sharing among the league's club without being subjected to antitrust challenge.

As under the Senate version, the House bill would allow professional leagues to require member clubs to obtain league approval "before abandoning communities in which they have been operating successfully."

The House bill was introduced by Reps. Fortney H. (Pete) Stark and Don Edwards, California Democrats, and Henry Hyde, R-Ill.

The bill is a revised version of legislation that had been sought by the NFL for more than a year. The earlier legislation was withdrawn several months ago amid vociferous complaints from the NFL Players Association, which contends that it could have an adverse effect on the association's efforts in collective bargaining.

THE NEW bill specifies that the antitrust exemption would not affect collective bargaining, ticket prices or television policies.

John Bassett, owner of the now defunct World Football League franchise in Memphis, told a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing Wednesday that the NFL's proposal should be rjected.

"The NFL is the smallest, richest club in North America," said Bassett, who now owns the Tampa Bay franchise of the new United States Football League. "If enacted, (this bill) would vest in this private industry group an absolute, unreviewable, subjective discretion to enforce 'rules' prohibiting relocation of a franchise."

He said the legislation would give the NFL owners power "not even the Robber Barons of the 19th Century ever dreamt.

"It seems to me that these 28 owners of a multi-billion dollar industry do not represent the public interest when they appear before Congress seeking protective legislation," he said. "No less than myself, they represent only their own private business interests. They seek to advance only their own gripping control of the professional football marketplace."

Wild card games may be eliminated

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

While both sides in the National Football League players strike continue to snipe at each other for failing to make progress in negotiations, league officials are contemplating ways to recoup the season once the walkout ends.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle said Wednesday that the elimination of wild-card playoff games might be the most painless way to salvage a weekend of regular-season games.

The wild-card round, with one game in each conference between teams that did not win their divisions, is scheduled for Jan. 2. If the decision is made to drop that round, Rozelle said, the league would move the slate of games from one of the weekends lost to the strike to that date.

Each NFL team has already missed one game and Rozelle has said that if the strike is not settled by today, a second round of regular-season games would be wiped out.

NO ONE is predicting that today's negotiations in Washington will bring the end of the 10-day strike.

"We will have no new counter-proposals," Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said of today's scheduled resumption of talks, which last were held Sunday in Hempstead, N.Y. "We have 10 items on the table and not only haven't they agreed to one single item, they are trying to get takebacks for disabled players."

"This works two ways," responded Jim Miller, public relations director for the NFL Management Council, the owners' negotiating unit. "They (the union representatives) haven't accepted anything we have put on the table. Their idea of collective bargaining is to reject everything we suggest. We will have nothing new. We are still awaiting a response for our offer of last Sunday to guarantee the $1.6 billion."

Miller said the talks would resume despite the two sides' stances because "There is no hope for progress unless we are talking." And Garvey observed: "At some point they (the owners) are going to negotiate. At some point the weight of events will trigger a decision to negotiate ... Every development takes significance although it is hard to measure immediately."

TEX SCHRAMM, president of the Dallas Cowboys and chairman of the NFL's competition committee, said Wednesday the league would not necessarily have to make up the games lost to the strike.

"We are not ready to abandon the current schedule," said Schramm, "but I think people will accept a 12-to 14-game schedule without further hindrance. We were playing 12 games as recently as 1960."

Schramm said that a number of factors would come into play before the league decides what to do with the lost games.

"We have to look at the situation on a week-to-week basis," Schramm said.

Rozelle said the league has not determined how many games would have to be lost before it would become pointless to resume the season.

"It's a subjective decision," he said. "The owners would have to decide."

Bulldog Booster seeks answers

To the editor:

Suppose that here in Midland there were two oil companies. In their search for oil, one company would hit a few good wells and then have a period of dry holes; but the other oil company repeatedly, year after year, was successful in drilling really good wells. This goes on for 23 years. During that time, the oil company whose record was not as good would occasionally hire some of the successful oil company's engineers, geologists and landmen, but to no avail. Their record did not improve, and the other oil company continued to be more and more successful.

Before long, a comparison of the two companies became the object of much discussion in the oil field, then in the business sector, and finally by people not connected with the industry. It was apparent to one and all that the successful oil company did not depend on who drilled the wells, or even where they were drilled. It was apparent to one and all that the successful oil company did not depend on who drilled the wells, or even where they were drilled. The success was due to a certain system that was practiced and carried on.

Yet, as the years went by, the least successful oil company's board of directors either failed to ask the former employees that they had hired from the aggressive oil company what system was, or if they did learn, what the system was, for unexplained reasons, they failed to implement it—hoping year after year to increase production by an old method that no longer worked.

Now, if this happened in real life, the stockholders of the oil company whose drilling program was not consistent would eventually sell out and the company would be taken over by another company. Constant losing in any business can not be tolerated for long. A company either sells or makes changes to be successful.

Apply the above parable to our city-wide football program (the least successful oil company) and the Permian High School football program (the consistently successful oil company). Permian has had good teams for 23 years—good enough to reach district and bidistrict playoffs, and many state finals. A Midland school has beaten them three times in the last 23 years.

While Permian's Coach Wilkins is a good coach, Permian had good teams before he came to the school and will have good teams when he leaves. Why? Because there is a system that Permian has used successfully over the years. Regardless of the coach, Permian always rises, like cream, to the top. The system is begun in the seventh grade in the junior high schools that feed into Permian.

The Midland high schools, on the other hand, have had some outstanding players and some years, one or the other of our high schools, will do well, but not consistently. We have no system.

Continually firing coaches and hiring new ones has not been the answer to the problem. Our coaches are given three-year contracts and expected to defeat an absolute machine 20 miles away. Our coaches need help, not criticism. We are all aware that the coaches are not paid large salaries—not large enough to compensate for the tension and abuse they and their families are subject to. As a member of the Midland High Booster Club and a daily observer of football practice, I can personally attest to the hard work and grinding strain that Coach Pat Culpepper faces each day of the week.

We have an athletic director (Gil Bartosh) who was a former successful Permian coach, and at Midland High there are three assistant coaches (Larry Morris, Rick Wood and Randy Quisenberry) who were former Permian players. Why don't we attempt to try the Permian feeder school system? Is it political, impossible, or a refusal to face facts? Is it the school board? Why can't we flat-out copy a winning system?

As a father of two Lee High School graduates and a junior at Midland High School, and on behalf of Midland football fans, I am asking the school board and the athletic director to begin to implement such a system of feeder schools, whereby our athletes can compete with Permian and other area schools. The success of such a system can not be denied, and while it will not involve money or cost to the taxpayer, it will require hard woork from everyone involved. Let's compete on an equal basis.

System upsets supporter

To the editor:

Having been a former Midland athlete, and later coaching in the Midland Independent School District, and for the past several years being an interested observer, it upsets me to see our kids cheated by such a poor athletic system.

I am so tired of seeing our coaches criticized and kids ridiculed because all of the talent is on the West side of the Midland County line. It's amazing how that line divides a winner from a loser.

Midland Independent School District must decide whether they want an intramural program or a winning athletic program. For the past several years we have had a fine intramural program.

Midland has had numerous fine coaches and athletes, however, they will never build a winner under the present system.

We must teach a winning attitude beginning in the seventh grade. Our system from the seventh grade through the ninth grade divides the talent among the best several teams at each school, therefore creating mediocrity. The eleven best players never played together, which makes winning twice as tough.

I recently witnessed the Midland Freshman games against Odessa Nimitz in which both Midland teams lost. Nimitz had approximately 70 kids sutied up, and you can bet the best eleven played. Midland had approximately 35 on each team with the talent split. No wonder the coaches cannot compete.

When our kids lose to Odessa from the eighth grade on, it's no wonder that by the time they're seniors they don't feel they can win.

I believe if Midland Freshmen had played their best eleven against Nimitz last Thursday evening, the score would have been much closer. At least, we could say we did our best.

I take my hat off to the coaches and kids, as they are doing a superb job under these conditions.

Obviously, the system is at fault, or surely we would have produced at least one district football champion at Midland High in the past 30 years.

I am tired of seeing coaches and kids criticized and humiliated by such a system.

If an intramural program is what we want, then let's get off the coaches and kids back, and let them play. Let's quit firing coaches every three years. Maybe we can convince Mojo, Cooper, Angelo and the others this is the way to go. However, if we want a winning program, let's support our coaches and our kids and give them the proper tools to build a winner.

Money glad he didn't quit Rice

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice University quarterback Phillip Money had a moment of truth last season as a sophomore when he discussed with roommate Richard Gray the possibility of transferring to another school.

Money, an all-everything athlete at Edinburg High School, came to Rice for a chance to play early in his college career and because he liked the open, friendly atmosphere on the small, ivy-covered Rice campus.

Instead, he found that sitting on the bench while junior college transfer Michael Calhoun held the spotlight was lonely and unfriendly.

Money eventually decided to remain at Rice and today he's glad — Coach Ray Alborn has decided to start Money at quarterback for Saturday's Southwest Conference opener against the 15th-ranked University of Texas Longhorns.

"It was hard for me," Money said, discussing his first two seasons of nonplaying for the Owls. "Your hopes are so high when you first come in. I was frustrated at times. If you've been successful in high school, you expect to go to college and nothing will change."

"I thought 'This guy is coming in and it might be my senior year before I get to play,'" Money said. "I guess I decided to stay because of the school and my friends here. Richard told me to look at all aspects of it and make the best decision for me."

While Money was discovering the cold realities of college football last season, Calhoun threw 21 touchdown passes to tie a SWC record and ran for another touchdown to account for all of Rice's 1981 touchdowns.

But when the Owls got off to an 0-3 start this season, Alborn decided he had to make a change.

Showdown tilts loom in N.Mexico

By Associated Press

It is one of those games that neither team needs to win, but that both would prefer not to lose.

That apparent contradiction applies to Friday night's clash in southeast New Mexico between the Class AAA Portales Rams and Class AAAA Roswell Coyotes.

While there is no district value attached to this one, the importance of the game lies with that intangible known in the sports world as momentum. Both Roswell and Portales have plenty of it going into their collision Friday night in Portales and neither wants to lose it.

Portales, the defending Class AAA state champion, has run off three straight wins since losing its opener to Muleshoe, Texas, and for the first time this year is ranked No. 1 in AAA.

ROSWELL, at times overlooked in that mountain of muscle known as District 4AAAA, is unbeaten with a 4-0 record. And like Portales, the Coyotes are on a prestige roll, having climbed this week into the No. 2 spot in the Class AAAA rankings — behind defending state champion Clovis.

In a telephone interview this week, Portales Coach Tommy Gruber said his club is looking forward to playing Roswell.

"We have a lot of momentum, but in predistrict you have to play as many good people as you can," said Gruber. "We haven't beaten a real strong team yet this year but we are going to get a good test Friday night. All we are asking the kids is that they not be intimidated."

Chiles still undecided

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Rangers majority owner Eddie Chiles said Wednesday he has not decided that farm director Joe Klein will be the club's next general manager, as a published report had earlier indicated.

The Dallas Times Herald quoted unidentified sources as saying Klein was being groomed for the post. The newspaper said that Chiles was making final preparations to name a new executive vice president and a new manager for the American League club.

Chiles disputed that report, but would not elaborate. He said after a closed-door meeting with the team Tuesday that he did not know who the Rangers' next general manager or manager would be.

The Times Herald also reported that interim manager Darrell Johnson will remain with the team as pitching coach in 1983.

The newspaper's sources said Chiles already has decided on his choices for the two jobs and an official announcement will be made as soon as the team's board of directors can meet and approve the recommendations.

Klein would be named vice president-general manager and be in charge of personnel decisions and roster moves, the Times Herald quoted sources as saying.

Chiles also is planning to hire an executive vice president for baseball operations, the newspaper said.

The report also said Johnson will replace current pitching coach Jackie Brown, who will not be rehired, and veteran baseball executive Paul Richards will remain with the Rangers as an executive assistant.

The announcement was not expected before the end of the regular season Sunday in Anaheim, Calif., the Times Herald said.

Walton returns

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Bill Walton, the 6-foot-11 center who led the Portland Trail Blazers to the National Basketball Association championship in 1977, will play part-time for the San Diego Clippers this fall, General Manager Ted Podleski said Wednesday.

"We don't want him to play that much," Podleski said in a telephone interview with The Oregonian newspaper. "We want to go slow and hope that in January he can play three times a week."

Walton, who has suffered a rash of foot injuries since the 1977-78 season, was in San Diego Wednesday undergoing team physicals.

After injuries forced him to miss the entire 1978-79 season with Portland, Walton played in just 14 games for the Clippers in 1979-80. He has not played in a regular season NBA game since then.

Podleski said he changed his mind in deciding to let Walton play. Walton had told the Clippers he would try to play one game a week during the 1982-83 season, but Podleski balked at that.

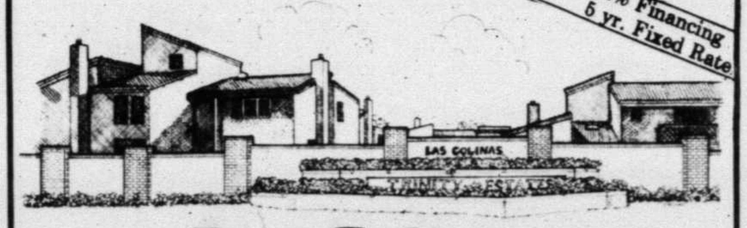

"Then I spent more time with Bill and we debated it," he said. "One day my wife saw how I was laboring over it and said, 'Are you thinking about Bill as a person or as a player?'

Hoffer in finals

Hoffer, a 33-year-old plastic company vice president, defeated Robert Young Jr., of Atlanta, Ga., 2 and 1 in the quarterfinals on Wednesday afternoon. In a semifinal matchup later, he defeated Barry Terjesen, of Akron Ohio, 2-up, on the 6,834-yard, par-70 course, with the short putt on the 18th hole making the difference.

Interest rate optimism tempered by consumer use of credit

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

Most interest rates have plunged to two-year lows, but the slide has yet to trigger a long-awaited buying spree that would revive the economy.

Rates are still high compared to a few years ago and the decline has not spread to consumer borrowing charges.

Some consumer rates have even risen, including a recent move by several banks to boost the annual interest rate on credit card purchases to 19.8 percent from 18 percent.

BUT OPTIMISM HAS increased among merchants and economists that lower rates will become widespread in the months ahead and improve prospects for sustained economic growth.

"We're looking for a positive change in (consumer) attitudes, brought on partly by lower interest rates," says Jackie Bitowt, a spokeswoman for Sears, Roebuck and Co., the nation's largest retailer. But, she adds, "We haven't seen the upturn yet."

Last winter, hopes were high that a cooling off of inflation and another round of tax cuts in the summer would trigger a consumer-led recovery.

But with concern widespread over economic problems — such as the 9.8 percent unemployment rate, the highest since 1941, and the 17,502 business failures through mid-September, more than any full year since 1933 — private reports say consumers are not in the mood to rush to showrooms and spend.

"What we are seeing is evidence that tax cuts don't work quickly and interest rates don't work quickly," says Steven Dobson, a senior economist at the Bank of America in San Francisco.

FOR THE TIME being, business borrowers have received more relief from persistently high interest rates than their customers.

Banks are lending money to their best-risk corporate customers at 13.5 percent, down three percentage points from early July and the lowest level since October 1980. But many lending institutions are still charging the same interest rates that prevailed last spring on consumer loans.

In DeKalb, Ill., for instance, annual interest charges of 25 percent have not changed on loans to buy home entertainment systems.

"We're finding there is a lag between interest rates going down (in financial centers)...and what happens at the local level," says Michael Jaret, owner of Appletree Stereo Inc. in DeKalb and six other consumer electronic product stores in Illinois.

But if borrowing charges drop lower and stay down, Jaret says, he believes consumers will begin buying more television sets, stereos and home videotape recorders.

KAROL EMMERICH, TREASURER of the Minneapolis-based retailer Dayton Hudson Corp., says that even at 20 percent interest, department store charge accounts are not big moneymakers under current conditions.

Retailers borrow long-term at 13 percent to 14 percent to provide funds for charge accounts, cover bad debts and administrative fees and wind up earning less than if they put the money in an ordinary savings account at a nearby bank, she says.

Sears, based in Chicago, says the last time it had a profit on credit operations was 1979. It says it lost $25 million in 1980, almost $36 million in 1981 and $7.2 million in the first half of this year.

Sears says credit sales accounted for 56 percent of all sales in the first half of this year, up from 53.6 percent in all of last year, when the company reported overall sales of $18.2 billion and a profit of $352.3 million.

Mortgage rates already have started to come down from heady peaks, but the construction industry is far from revived from its depression.

THE FEDERAL HOME Loan Mortgage Corporation reports the average rate quoted by lenders for conventional mortgages slipped to 15.38 percent in mid-September from 16.93 percent in early July, well below its record 18.63 percent in October 1981. The rate applies to 30-year mortgages that are not backed by the government for 80 percent of the price of a new single-family home.

The Bank of America's Dobson says: "Every time mortgage rates go down, you see some stimulation to the housing market. But you will not see a big boom until you get to that magic level of 12 percent to 13 percent (mortgages)."

The struggling automobile and savings and loan industries also say they expect no overnight cures from their troubles.

"It will take a sustained interest rate drop — measured in months and years, not weeks — before savings and loan earnings problems are eased to any significant degree," says Roy G. Green, chairman of the United States League of Savings Associations, a thrift industry trade group.

John J. Ferron, executive director for industrial analysis and dealership operations for the National Automobile Dealers Association, says, "This is not going to be the year of the recovery for the automotive industry, but it will be the year the recovery begins."

GEORGE LYLES, PRESIDENT of Lyles Chevrolet Co. at High Point, N.C., is not so sure. He says the high price of cars, not high interest rates, is the major factor in the decline of new car sales and the growth of sales of used cars.

Lyles, who also sells Rolls-Royce cars that start at $111,000, says people who could afford the stiff price tag decided to invest that money instead when returns of over 15 percent were readily available. With returns from investments falling, business may pick up, he says.

But, some economists say, it is the economy's weakness that has reduced private credit demand, making it possible for interest rates to nosedive.

The Commerce Department estimates the nation's economy expanded at a 1.5 percent annual rate in the July-September quarter after growing at a 2.1 percent rate in the previous three months.

THAT IS BELOW the Reagan administration's estimate of a 4.5 percent average annual growth rate for the 18 months that began last June and well below the 6 percent-and-higher expansion rate that has been typical of a recovery in the post-World War II period.

Hearst Feature Service

Americans spent $43 billion on life insurance premiums last year, mainly to protect someone who depends on them for financial support — a wife, child or elderly parent. But life insurance is such a complicated business, most people don't know what they've bought.

"You can lose a lot of money fast by not knowing what you are doing," says James H. Hunt of the National Insurance Consumer Organization (NICO), a group started with the help of Ralph Nader in 1980. "Prices vary widely, almost unbelievably so. We recommend that you buy term insurance, specifically annual renewable term insurance (ART), the simplest and most understandable of all those sold by the life insurance companies. It provides the most life insurance coverage for the lowest cost.

"RECENTLY, IT HAS become a highly competitive form of life insurance," Hunt says. "Non-smokers can buy $100,000 worth of annual renewal term at age 30 for less than $200 annually, at age 40 for less than $300, and age 50 for less than $600, if you shop around. Smokers pay higher premiums."

Agents prefer to sell whole life insurance, also called level premium life insurance, which typically can carry a $1,500 annual premium on a $100,000 policy. Agents, who tout whole life as a savings plan as well as insurance, make six to seven times as much selling it as ART insurance, according to Hunt.

"Whole life is more of a protection than a savings," says NICO's Robert Hunter. "But if you know how to buy the right policy from the right company and assure yourself you'll keep it for 20 years, then whole life can be a modestly good investment."

However, NICO has recommended a whole life policy: the T-Plan of Transamerica Assurance, in which the interest credited to the cash value every month is linked to treasury bill yields. "It offers protection, a savings package with a good return and one does not risk large losses if the policy is terminated," Hunt says.

NICO does not recommend endowment policies, which Hunt says have not enjoyed good returns, nor family policies, where the husband may be insured for $25,000, the wife for $5,000 and the children for $2,000.

"EITHER YOUR SPOUSE needs a substantial policy, in which case you should buy cheap term insurance, or no insurance is indicated," Hunt says.

Q. Do you need life insurance?

A. If you're single with no dependents, you should think twice before buying. It may be better to purchase a first-class health insurance plan or disability health to provide for yourself if you become disabled. If you are married and have no children, your needs may depend on your savings amd whether your spouse works. If you have children or other dependents, such as aged parents, you probably need life insurance in fairly substantial amounts. Children do not need life insurance.

Q. How much life insurance do you need?

A. For most families with two young children, life insurance equal to about five times your annual income may strike a reasonable balance.

Q. Why does NICO recommend annual renewable term?

A. ART is simple, understandable and offers the most protection for the least cost. It is highly competitive. If you drop your ART policy after a couple of years, you lose less. It has no savings component, so you don't have to worry about the rate of return on your investment.

Q. Is whole life irrelevant for younger buyers at today's interest rates?

A. If you want insurance in force when you die and are willing to pay a lot for it now, then whole life is for you. But first ask yourself, "What will a $100,000 policy be worth in 30 or 40 years at today's inflation rates?"

Q. How do you compare prices of policies?

A. With term insurance, you can compare face values with annual premiums for your age, sex and smoking habits. Non-smokers usually get good discounts. To compare rates for later years, ask for a policy's interest-adjusted index, which reflects average annual payments over 10 or 20 years.

Texas League supporting proposed amendment

AUSTIN (AP) — The League of Women Voters of Texas is backing the proposed constitutional amendment that would raise the ceiling on state expenditures for aid to dependent children.

"Every Texas child deserves a decent standard of living," said Diana Clark, league president.

By BILL HAGEN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — One thing that can be said for "Inchon" — the mildly controversial movie bankrolled by the Rev. Sun Myung Moon and his Unification Church colleague, Mitsuharu Ishii, the producer — is that it's a pretty powerful argument for separation of church and show biz.

One thing that can be asked about it is where did all the money — reportedly something just shy of $50 million — go?

Based on the trimmed version now making the rounds, "Inchon" as an investment rates right up there with the purchase of beachfront property in Gila Bend, Ariz. More than a half hour has been excised since its one-time showing more than a year ago in Washington, most of the cutting apparently having been done by lottery.

All scenes involving the late David Janssen have been cut, as have, blessedly, all scenes involving Rex Reed, who had been miscast anyhow as a newspaperman. What remains is still pretty jerky, in any sense of the word.

"Inchon" supposedly is a dramatized rendering of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's militarily bold and brilliant operation that probably saved United Nations forces from being driven into the sea during the Korean War. What it was, basically, was an amphibious assault that trapped much of the North Korean army and launched an allied offensive that ultimately would drive the invaders almost to the Chinese border. Of course, a lot happened after that that wasn't so bold or brilliant, but "Inchon" tries to concentrate on Inchon.

She traipses over most of South Korea in a "woody" station wagon loaded with adorable Korean waifs. He keeps trying to catch up with her, probably to tell her there's a war going on. (With little else to think about during all this silliness, I thought of a possible television series for Gazzara, tentatively titled "Run for Your Wife." But I digress.)

Anyhow, between killing savage commies — lest anyone not know who the bad guys are, they're the ones rolling through defenseless villages killing priests and nuns and children, mostly — attending staff meetings and leading a suicidal commando raid, Gazzara is quite busy even without Bisset. And vice versa, which is probably just as well for both of them.

Most of the budget, less the stars' salaries — which, for some of the biggies, was reportedly $1 million — obviously was devoted to the battle scenes, which are pretty mundane. A lot of fireworks, a lot of extras flipping through the air, a few tanks and planes, and that's about it.

It's hard to imagine more than, oh, maybe a few hundred dollars being expended on such incidentals as writing, editing and directing.

If Sun Myung Moon, whose involvment with the movie was vehemently denied at first but who is now listed as "special adviser," intended to slip any subliminal religious message into his movie, it could only be that MacArthur, if not divine, was certainly divinely inspired.

As for Laurence Olivier's portrayal of MacArthur, the gentlest way to put it is that it's pretty embarrassing, particularly so for an actor of such stature. But, then the money was good, and the ailing Olivier has nothing more to prove as an actor. He's handicapped from the start by makeup that looks as though it were done by Madame Tussaud. There is, in fact, a waxen quality about the entire movie, including the acting.

Edict revoked

In 1685 King Louis XIV revoked the Edict of Nantes, which had been in force for 91 years, and ended the partial toleration of Protestantism in France.

Artist schedules portrait workshop

Portrait artist Carol Greenwood is conducting a pastel portrait workshop beginning Saturday at the Midland Pallette Building, 903 W. Wadley Ave. Workshop hours are 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, Sunday and Tuesday and 6 to 9 p.m. Monday and Tuesday.

Miss Greenwood has worked as a paste-up artist and draftswoman for many years, both in Midland and California. While living in California, she painted over 2,000 people the summer of 1976 at Disneyland, as well as painting portraits at Movieland Wax Museum.

Commission work she has done includes portraits of Crystal Gayle, Johnny Paycheck, Engleburt Humperdink and Sammy Davis Jr.

To register for the workshop, signup sheets are available at Windmill Hobbies & Crafts, Andrews Highway and Cuthbert Street.

Nation has more than 438,000 sworn law enforcement officers

At the end of October of 1980, over 438,000 city, county, and state law enforcement officers nationwide were employed full-time. The latest figures compiled by the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting Program show the national average of sworn personnel was 2.1 officers per 1,000 inhabitants in cities, and 1.5 per 1,000 in jurisdictions represented by sheriffs or county police. Ninety-five percent of the officers were males.

Quartet surprisingly pleasing to all

To say they have never played better would be going too far. In the last year, the members of the Thouvenel String Quartet (and this is only a partial list) performed on several occasions in New York's Carnegie Hall, played several concert dates at Vienna's music festival last May and conducted a music clinic in San Diego last summer.

Sally Chisholm

Perhaps they have never played better, but as a member of the quartet's Midland audience; I can't say that for certain because I have only had the opportunity to hear this extremely fine classical quartet perform here.

What I can say is that I have never heard the quartet sound better, an opinion held by many who attended Saturday's opening concert of the quartet's subscription season.

Edmund Stein

It was an exciting experience. Perhaps all the more so because the quartet has a new member. Teresa Fream resigned last spring; her last official performance with the quartet was in Vienna.

Although the newest member, Edmund Stein, performed with the other members when the quartet was filmed by The Eyes of Texas television crew in August for a segment on the Houston-based show this year, the concert was not an official one and much attention was given to the filming with those there providing the audience.

Other quartet members are Eugene Purdue, Sally Chisholm and Jeffrey Levenson.

The August performance was quite good, alerting the audience to promises yet to come, however, no one was ready for Saturday night's concert. When those promises came true so soon, the audience was stunned.

Saturday night clearly demonstrated that this season is not going to be the way some had imagined; and it would not take several concerts for the quartet to work out certain difficulties inherent in playing this type of precision work with a new member.

The four must play as one. And they did.

It was also apparent that the concern felt by some followers that it would take some time for the quartet to be as good as it was last season was unnecessary. Obviously we (meaning Thouvenel followers) have to regroup our thinking.

The evening was delightful from beginning to end. The quartet chose to open its season with a program of chamber music from the Classic period which included works by Boccherini, Mozart and Schubert.

Eugene Purdue

There was a certain tension in the air which only heightened the evening's playing. At the conclusion of Mozart's String Quartet in G Major, K. 387, Purdue could not help himself; he smiled. Actually it was more of a relieved grin. Almost laughing, he looked at Stein, who was also grinning. They had made it, and they knew it.

Jeffrey Levinson

It was during the third movement of this work that I was caught up in a sensation of time being suspended and the music actually playing independent of the musicians onstage.

As Miss Chisholm said of this sensation afterwards, "The air is alive and musicians feel that onstage. The music begins to filter through the players, rather than the players consciously creating the music. That's what musicians call 'the music getting off the ground,' which means the music is beginning to soar."

The quartet's performance of Schubert's "Death and the Maiden" was also exceptionally well done. (After hearing the Thouvenel Quartet's performance, I listened to the Stuttgart, Germany-based Melos Quartet's playing of this same piece and was struck by the less strident, much richer, deeper tone in the Thouvenel's playing, as well as by the more relaxed pace the Thouvenel Quartet established in its performance. The Melos Quartet plays this work in a very rapid, hurried manner, which is not as agreeable to the ears.)

What was disheartening about Saturday's performance was the three-fourths full house. Empty seats for such a sterling performance are a crime in an area whose residents consider themselves culturally astute.

Perhaps newcomers to this area are not aware we have a quartet of this caliber based here. There is no other Texas audience which can claim the same.

The Thouvenel String Quartet, sponsored by the Midland Symphony & Chorus Association, is one of only a dozen (some say five, others say under 20) in the United States of national and international magnitude. Most of the world-class classical quartets in the United States live in New York, with the majority of the quartets of this select status being from the United States.

Individual tickets, priced at $5, may be purchased at the door. Subscription rate for the next four concerts runs $20, with a student rate of $10. The next performance will be Nov. 14 at 3 p.m. in Theatre Midland.

Live telecast scheduled

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The next live telecast on NBC's series of drama will be "The Member of the Wedding," Carson McCullers' award-winning play about a young girl coming of age in the South.

Delbert Mann will direct the drama set for Monday, Dec. 20, live from the James K. Polk Theater at the Tennessee Performing Arts Center in Nashville. The cast will be announced later.

Charles, Diana make TV's No. 1

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The top-rated prime-time television show last week was CBS' "The Royal Romance of Charles and Diana," placing it well ahead of a version ABC rushed to the air in a bid to win viewers, figures from the A.C. Nielson Co. show.

The CBS movie finished atop the Nielsen ratings for the week ended Sept. 26 with a rating of 24.0. Nielsen says that means in an average minute of the show, 24 percent of the television-equipped homes in the nation saw at least part of the program.

"Charles & Diana: A Royal Love Story," the version ABC hastily scheduled a few days ahead of the CBS movie, was No. 28 for the week ended Sept. 19. The ABC move failed in its apparent bid to get the ratings by being first.

In all, CBS took seven of the Top 10. ABC had two and NBC had one.

NBC had the week's five lowest-rated shows: "Powers of Matthew Star," "CHiPs," "NBC White Paper: The Man Who Shot the Pope," the NBC Friday Night Movie, "The Martian Chronicles, Part III," and the Sunday Canadian Football League Game II.

The week wasn't the official premiere week but some new shows began to appear and many returning series had new episodes.

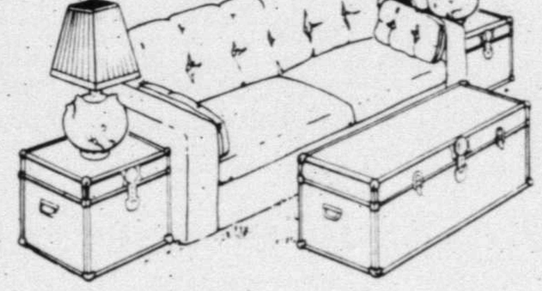

NBC's "Knight Rider" tied for fifth place with the season premiere of CBS' "One Day at a Time." CBS' "Gloria," with Sally Struthers playing the title role in the spinoff of "All in the Family," finished eighth.

Be careful when taking medication

Dear Dr. Solomon: I really get a lot out of your column from the practical advice you give. My whole attitude towards taking medicine has been changed because of what you've written about prescription drugs, how good they are but also how they can cause problems if not used in the right way. What I'd like to know now is whether what you've written about drugs also holds true for something like nose drops. Can these cause any problems? — Bertha, Reno, Nevada

Solomon

Dear Bertha: All medications should be handled with care. This includes all prescriptions and over-the-counter medications, drops, drugs that are applied to the skin, and all others. As I've written on a number of occasions, a product that is powerful enough to do good also has the potential for doing harm.

One possible adverse side effect of nose drops that has recently been reported is psychiatric symptoms. Even if such symptoms do not occur, however, the excessive use of nose drops can be harmful and should be avoided.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know a couple who are the nicest people and are very interested in art, music, and good books. I know that when it comes to education, their children are going to get the best, no matter what it costs. But they don't seem to have any patience with their 8-year-old son. To me, he's just an active kid like my own children were when they were that age. But his parents are always after him to slow down. Can't this sort of thing cause problems? — Mrs. W.G., Dallas

Dear Mrs. G.: Problems may arise in any child who is in continuous conflict with his parents. Apparently, the pattern of behavior of the child you describe is not in accordance with his parents' expectations.

From what you write, it seems it is not so much that either the child or his parents are exhibiting abnormal behavior, but that they are in disagreement about what is appropriate. I have found with my patients that brief, simple counseling including what to expect at that age can be very effective in such cases.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know there are heart transplants and kidney transplants and maybe other transplants that I never heard of. But what about pancreas transplants? Is such a thing possible? — Pattie, Duluth, Minn.

Dear Pattie: Pancreas transplants are being done on an experimental basis in the United States and Europe. Therefore, while the answer to your question is that such an operation is possible, it is not very common. As you might expect, the major problem is the tendency of the body to reject foreign tissue.

Pancreas transplants may become more common when appropriate drugs are developed to prevent tissue rejection.

For F.N., Kan.: My patients who were hypersensitive to tobacco and/or tobacco smoke, often had headaches, sneezing, tearing eyes, stuffed nose, and fast heartbeat. These symptoms appeared when they were exposed to people who smoked in their presence. I found that desensitizing these people helped their symptoms to clear.

This small, northern Thai village of 500 poor farmers, who were recently under control of Communist guerrillas, is now being lit up through the use of inexpensive solar panels in a pioneering effort authorities plan to introduce in other insurgency-rife areas.

The sun-versus-Communism philosophy is simple: electricity makes for happier villagers and happier villagers are less likely to be swayed by propaganda of the outlawed Communist Party of Thailand.

The 3rd Army, the key military force in northern Thailand, relocated the 500 villagers from a rugged, mountainous area where they were virtually controlled by the Communists to Rakthinthai village.

Depty 3rd Army Commander Maj. Gen. Prayad Rodphoothong said the military had helped construct the new village, provided agricultural tools, taught the farmers self-defense and allocated 130,000 baht ($5,600) for the installation of solar panels. Another 170,000 baht ($7,400) for the lighting project came from private donations.

Twenty-four solar panels — each measuring 3 by 1.5 feet — were mounted on rooftops to collect the sun's energy by day and charge storage batteries. They supply electricity to 51 homes, living quarters of local teachers and the village defense headquarters in this remote region of Thailand where electrification is rare.

The next "solar village" is to be Rom Klao in the northwestern province of Tak, a project sponsored by Thailand's King Bhumipol Adeulyadej who is a strong advocate of combating Communist insurgency through rural development rather than military force.

The country's chief anti-insurgency agency — the Internal Security Operations Command — says there are more than 8,000 armed Communist guerrillas in the country and that their ranks have been depleted in recent years in part due to the betterment of the lives of people in the countryside.

Solar energy will be introduced in nine other provinces if the pioneering efforts prove successful, according to Thanoo Vicharangsan, director of the office for machinery registration in the Ministry of Industry.

Thanoo said that while solar panels had a substantial initial cost they required no fuel, had an operating life of up to 20 years and needed little maintenance. Sunshine in Thailand — a tropical country — is plentiful.

Bangkok's Asian Institute of Technology is looking to other rural applications of solar energy. It has already come up with a prototype rice drier and an ice-making machine.

Meese says stories of staff conflict overblown

The Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Ed Meese is a man for this season. When he is pleased, his great round face suddenly is converted into a facsimile of a gently carved Halloween pumpkin, with crinkly eyes and slight, tentative smile.

It is not the face of a ruthless White House power broker like that of John Erlichman. Nor is it the face of a born-to-riches preppy like that of George Bush.

It is the face of the Great Jack-o-Lantern, as sculpted by a child whose dreams are inhabited by cherubs — oval, pink and kindly. It also is the face of a man of temperate disposition whose dedicated service to Ronald Reagan stretches back 16 years and who now enjoys the exalted title of counselor to the president.

After a year of frustration in his job and personal tragedy in his family life, Ed Meese may have little to be pleased about. Yet every so often that smile, which used to flash more readily, breaks across his face.

HAS THE press been fair, a journalist asks, in reporting news about White House rivalries involving him, Chief of Staff James Baker, National Security Adviser William Clark and Deputy Chief of Staff Mike Deaver? To Meese, the question deserves a serious answer served with a touch of levity.

"I would be hard pressed to tell you guys how to run your business, and I would hope that would be reciprocal."

But he is willing to talk about myriad newspaper, television and magazine stories that have chronicled his alleged ideological disputes with the other presidential aides and his slip from power in Reagan's White House.

First of all, he wants it understood that he knows of no impending changes on the White House staff, with the exception of the departure of Deaver, who is returning to private life for financial reasons.

Secondly, he wants to emphasize that reports of conflict among Reagan's top advisers have been overblown and that the "intensity of the conflict" has been greatly exaggerated.

THERE ARE differences among them on ways to accomplish the president's legislative objectives and other matters, Meese explains, adding, "I welcome a variety of opinion."

"The idea that there is philosophical pulling and tugging for the policy direction of the Reagan administration...is totally wrong...untrue," says Meese, whose conservatism is much in the mode of Reagan's and who rejects the new right's acid assertions that the White House staff has diverted the president to the left.

The tales of conflict and intrigue in the White House, he contends, have been spread not by Baker, Clark and Deaver, but sources below that top level. And, adds Meese without further explanation, "there are motives."

It is true that young, ambitious members of the White House staff disdain and mock Meese's quiet, somewhat disorganized professorial manner. They prefer the brilliant and decisive Baker or the witty Deaver.

Yet, there is no firm evidence that Meese has lost the confidence of Reagan. He is, after all, the prototype of the placid, intelligent assistant with whom Reagan feels most comfortable. He also remains a link between Reagan and Republican conservatives, who regard Baker as the the devil incarnate.

For Meese, who seldom raises his voice or shows anger, speculation about his fall from grace in the White House undoubtedly has hurt. But that upset pales beside the tragedy that befell the Meeses last summer when they lost their eldest son, Scott, in an automobile accident.

IN SUCH A period of sorrow, it may be of little solace for Meese to hear or read that his star is on the rise in the White House. Yet, that appears to be what it happening.

The task in the White House now, says Meese, is "accomplishing our legislative objectives," coping with international crises such as the one in Lebanon and planning for the next two years. He is an integral part of those operations. Meese also has played a major role in preparing Reagan's law-and-order initiatives to fight crime, a subject upon which he, a former law professor, can expound with eloquence.

Looking back at Reagan's first two years in the presidency, Meese concedes disappointment that the administration has not achieved "earlier and more extensive" economic recovery. But he tends to be bullish on the future.

Marines face possible combat involvement

By MATT YANCEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is saying the U.S. Marines were sent into Lebanon to lend an aura of stability to the Lebanese government and give it a chance to assume control of the war-torn city.

But U.S. officials openly admit that the 900 Marines who went ashore Wednesday to join a multinational peacekeeping force face a far greater chance of being involved in combat than they did when they helped oversee the evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas from Beirut last month.

"The potential for danger is probably higher," Assistant Defense Secretary Henry Catto said last week while the administration waited for Israeli troops to leave the city before sending the Marines in.

"We don't anticipate any violence, but it certainly is an unstable situation and the possibility is there," Catto said. "If they get into a situation where they have to fight, obviously they will fight."

While Israel has technically satisfied President Reagan's demand to leave Beirut, its troops have moved to an area immediately south of the city limits less than a mile from the sector the U.S. troops will patrol.

Asked Wednesday what the Marines would do to stop the Israelis if they decided to re-enter the city, Catto said has father once advised him never to answer an question "which begins with what if."

However, the area where the Marines are "interposed" lies directly between the Israeli forces and one of the two Palestinian refugee camps where hundreds of people were slaughtered two weeks ago by Christian militia while Israeli troops occupied the city.

When asked what the Marines' response would be if they learned that more mass killings were occuring in the Palestinian camps, Catto said, "Obviously, our policy would be to stop any kind of massacre that went on."

President Reagan agreed last week to a request by the Lebanese government to send the Marines back into Beirut following the massacre. And on Wednesday, he reiterated that they would remain there until all foreign forces, including Israelis and Syrians, are out of Lebanon entirely.

The leathernecks were expected to assume positions today at intersections to the immediate north and east of the Lebanese capitol's airport. Among their duties is to patrol all major avenues of approach to the Beirut from the south and southeast.

News Analysis

During the PLO evacuation, the 800 Marine infantrymen who went ashore were confined to the harbor area at the northern edge of the city and were not allowed to load their weapons with ammunition.

This time, Pentagon officials say, that kind of decision is being left up to the local commander, Col. James M. Mead, who also was in charge of the earlier mission.

The officials note that the Marines now have a broader responsibility and a much wider area to cover, even though their "presence" does not include acting as a police force between rival Moslem and Christian factions in Beirut.

That is why most Defense Department officials expected Mead to ask for 300 more troops along with up to five tanks, artillery and jeep-mounted antitank guided missiles as reinforcements after surveying the situation today.

"I think it will probably go to 1,200," Catto said when asked how many Marines will ultimately compose the U.S. force in Beirut. "Some tanks will be going in."

But one Pentagon official, asking not to be further identified, said that sending the M60 tanks ashore does not imply that any confrontation is anticipated.

The official explained that the tanks would give the Marines a night vision and communications capability, along with mobility, that they otherwise wouldn't have.

Cooperation in MIA issue linked to U.S. policy change

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four relatives of American servicemen missing in Indochina say Vietnam is willing to cooperate in accounting for the MIAs, but not without prior political concessions from the United States.

The four, members of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, returned Wednesday night from a two-week visit to Vietnam and Laos aimed at enlisting their cooperation in resolving the MIA issue.

League chairman George Brooks told a news conference Wednesday night the Vietnamese government is favorably considering allowing U.S. government or private American teams to engage in search and recovery missions in Vietnam.

There are an estimated 2,500 Americans still listed as missing in Indochina, most in Vietnam. Occasional refugee reports indicate some American servicemen are still alive, but the delegation said this was denied by both the Vietnamese and Laotian governments.

Ann Griffiths, sister of a Navy pilot shot down over Vietnam, said the Vietnamese government agreed to a U.S. proposal for quarterly meetings between American and Vietnamese technical experts on the MIA question.

The United States has been spearheading an international campaign to condemn the continuing presence of some 200,000 Vietnamese troops in Cambodia.

It also has accused Vietnam of using biochemicals against rebel forces in Cambodia. Mrs. Griffiths said Vietnam considers that allegation to be "slanderous" and is demanding that the United States silence its criticism as part of the price for Hanoi's cooperation in accounting for the MIAs.

The Vietnamese said it "would be difficult for them to cooperate to a large extent until the U.S. policy of hostility toward Vietnam is ended," Mrs. Griffiths said.

She added that Vietnam also is seeking American humanitarian aid, but she did not provide figures. The United States has no diplomatic relations with Hanoi and also has banned both trade and aid since the communist conquest of 1975.

When you buy a used car, you're really buying a lot more than just the steel, aluminum, and other materials that go into the construction of an automobile. You're also buying a pledge from the dealer to work for your total satisfaction.

That's why a car dealer's reputation is one of his most important products. But really, his reputation is not just made by his promises. A good reputation comes from hundreds of happy, satisfied customers...people who tell other people about being treated fairly.

Dodge Ramcharger

And it comes with a $1000 Rebate!

Just what is the difference between a 2 wheel and 4 wheel drive sport utility. Unless all terrain travel is important to you, consider these advantages in a 2 wheel drive. Less machinery in the 2 wheel Ramcharger means less on the sticker price and the cost of repair. 2 wheel drive uses normal highway tires for less cost and for a more comfortable ride. And the 2 wheel drive tows your boat, camper or trailer with as much ease as the 4 wheeler. Over all the 2 wheeler is a practical choice. But we of course, stock 4 wheel drive Ramchargers.
