Bush assures marchers he's against abortion

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush assured anti-abortion marchers today of his "deep conviction" against the Supreme Court ruling 17 years ago today that legalized abortion and his steadfast opposition to abortion on demand.

Bush, speaking by telephone to marchers gathered outside the White House before their annual march past the Capitol and the Supreme Court, said the anti-abortion movement reminds Americans "of the self-evident moral superiority of adoption over abortion."

Bush also addressed the March for Life last year on his third day as president, continuing the tradition of his predecessor, Ronald Reagan.

Even as he spoke, pro-choice forces led by the Planned Parenthood Federation were urging Americans to call the White House switchboard to register their support for legal abortions.

Bush, in remarks that lasted just 90 seconds, said, "Before you begin the march, I want to take a minute to share my deep personal concern about abortion on demand, which I oppose.

"For 17 years the March for Life has served as a poignant reminder to all Americans that human life in all its forms must be respected. And I think all of you know my deep conviction on Roe vs. Wade," he added.

■ Related stories — 7A

The protest movement "also reminds Americans, especially young Americans, of the self-evident moral superiority of adoption over abortion. We should all be grateful to the families that adopt babies, giving them care and love and a chance for a wonderful life," said Bush, two of whose 12 grandchildren are adopted.

Leaders of the National Right to Life Committee praised the president and said they had no differences with Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater's statements that the party can support candidates on both sides of the abortion debate.

"We don't believe he's signaled any change in the Republican Party's position," said David O'Steen, executive director of the anti-abortion group. "Of course the Republican Party contains and is big enough to contain people with both points of view, as is the Democratic Party."

Barry goes to treatment center

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry, facing a misdemeanor cocaine possession charge, left the nation's capital today to check into a residential treatment facility, city government sources said.

Barry, who has turned over the daily control of the local government to City Administrator Carol Thompson, did not speak to reporters before leaving his home.

ABC Radio reported that Barry was going to a Hanley-Hazelden Clinic in West Palm Beach, Fla. Clinic spokeswoman Patricia McRae said confidentiality rules forbid the clinic from revealing the names of patients.

Meanwhile, NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks questioned whether Barry's arrest was part of a pattern of harassment of elected black officials and "the rising tide of racism in this nation."

"I'm not trying to justify any wrongdoing" or condone use of cocaine, but "I am opposed to selective enforcement of the law," the civil rights leader told reporters after meeting with President Bush about recent racial bombings in the South.

Barry, his political career in shambles following his drug arrest, said in an emotional 15-minute speech Sunday he will take steps "to heal my body, mind and soul."

Barry offered no clue during his speech as to what kind of assistance he is seeking, except to say that social activist and self-described nutrition expert Dick Gregory was helping him explore his options.

The Washington Post today quoted unnamed sources as saying that while Barry had initially decided to seek treatment at the Betty Ford Clinic in Rancho Mirage, Calif., he now was leaning toward an alternative program with Gregory.

The Post also said some of Barry's longtime political allies are beginning behind-the-scenes moves to shift their alliance to Jesse Jackson rather than lose their own influence in city government if Barry's political career is over.

The Washington Times, meanwhile, said an agreement was reached Friday for Barry to throw his support to Jackson in this fall's mayoral election.

"You are going to see politicians, preachers, businessmen come out in public in the next few days, if not weeks, calling for Jackson to get off the fence for the good of this city," the Times quoted as unidentified source as saying.

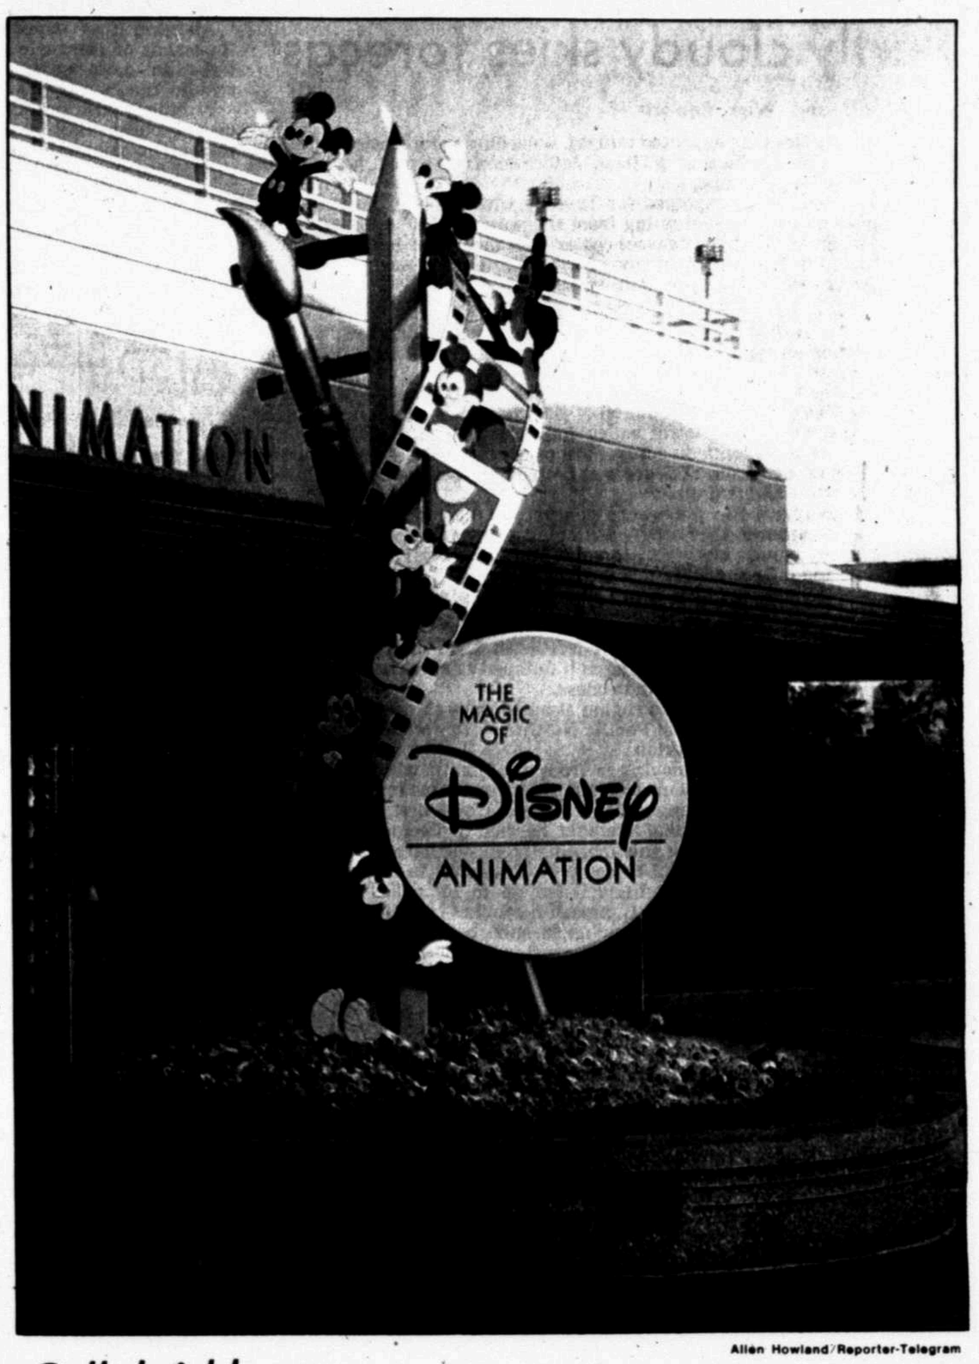

A Jackson spokesman, Eric Easter, told the newspaper, however: "That kind of discussion is inappropriate at this time. His (Jackson's) concern right now is very personal, for the mayor, his family and the city. Our focus continues to be statehood for the city."

Barry said Sunday that the events of the past several days had been "more difficult than fighting my way out of poverty" or struggling in the civil rights movement, because "I spent so much time doing for others that I have not worried enough about ... caring for myself."

Sources told the AP that while Barry has been persuaded for now to abandon his re-election bid, get treatment and temporarily turn over his government to a deputy, he has not mentioned resigning.

"That issue just never came up," said one aide who talked to the mayor on several occasions between Friday and Sunday. "These things just come one at a time, and getting him to agree to treatment and turn over control of the government were key for how. The bit about resigning — that's not even under consideration right now."

MISD Personnel Director Tom Holland hopes a slide show and brochures will help the district attract quality teachers during the upcoming spring recruiting season. MISD especially needs speech therapists, bilingual and special education teachers, Holland said.

Recruiter to praise MISD to attract new teachers

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

Karen Mosley has been a speech pathologist with the Midland Independent School District since August 1989.

Midland's parched and featureless terrain is a far cry from the wooded Arkansas hills from whence she came, but Ms. Mosley said she has no regrets about taking the job here.

"I'm a long way from home, but I really like Midland," she said.

MISD officials are hoping to parlay Ms. Mosley's affinity for West Texas into a recruiting boost.

In February she will travel with MISD recruiters to her alma mater, the University of Central Arkansas, to tell graduating teachers there about the benefits of working in Midland.

"I'll tell them that it's a nice place to work," she said. "Midland schools are really interested in doing what's best for the child."

MISD Executive Director of Human Resource Services Tom Holland said this is the first year MISD will use teachers who already work here to lure more teachers.

"We're going to utilize people in the community to help us recruit," Holland said.

Consumer advocates will fight for reduction of Bell's rates

AUSTIN (AP) — Consumer advocates will fight to reduce Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.'s rates by hundreds of millions of dollars in a case that opened today at the Texas Public Utility Commission.

But the telephone company is hoping to win PUC approval of its own plan — dubbed "Texas First" — to freeze rates for five years, upgrade service and win some regulatory flexibility from the commission.

In the case, the PUC staff is recommending a $392 million annual decrease in revenues for Southwestern Bell, saying the company is earning more than authorized in its last rate case. Southwestern Bell disagrees.

The proposed reduction is the largest ever recommended by the commission's staff for any telephone or electric company, according to agency General Counsel Bob Rima.

But it's not the biggest proposed reduction for Southwestern Bell in this rate case, which some have predicted will last six months or longer.

The state-paid lawyer for residential and small commercial electric customers has called for a $595.5 million decrease, and a coalition of cities served by the company has proposed a $702 million annual rate reduction.

The telephone company says even a $400 million rate reduction would require the elimination of 3,900 jobs and cancellation of $300 million in construction projects.

Instead, Southwestern Bell is pushing Texas First, which it says would boost economic development.

Under the plan, the company would invest $344 million in a modernization program to install digital switching equipment in 195 communities; eliminate four-party service and mileage charges in rural Texas; and offer toll-free calling to suburbs in such urban areas as Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth and San Antonio.

Local rates would be frozen for five years. Southwestern Bell also would reduce by 16 percent its charges to long-distance companies for using the local telephone network.

Ex-speaker now makes jewelry

AUSTIN (AP) — When he's not crafting legal arguments, former attorney general and House speaker Waggoner Carr relaxes with a more artistic endeavor: crafting jewelry from "Texas diamonds" he gathers at his ranch.

"When I was attorney general, I never did think I'd be a jeweler," said Carr with a chuckle, wearing one of his own quartz bolos with a black Western shirt, pants and boots.

At his downtown law office, Carr showed off a hinged wooden box full of polished quartz, flint and pink granite stones with gold-and silver-colored settings.

A card attached to the pieces when they're sold identifies the native rocks as Texas diamonds and invites the buyer to enjoy "a little bit of Texas."

Carr began making jewelry about four or five years ago, after he started collecting pretty stones at his 23-acre spread between Mason and Llano, about 100 miles from Austin. He says of his place, "Among Texans, it's nothing. Among Yankees, it might be called a Texas ranch."

His wife, Ernestine, gave him a machine to smooth the rocks as a Christmas present. He now has three machines holding several pounds of rocks that tumble day and night in the garage of his Austin home.

It takes five weeks for the machines to polish each group of stones, said Carr. "Then on the weekends, I just have a ball making pretty things out of nothing."

McCrary says citizen input vital for Objective 2000

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

The Objective 2000 community planning initiative currently being organized under the sponsorship of the Midland Chamber of Commerce will depend on citizen input.

"The success of Objectives 2000 is a function of citizen involvement in the process," explained the project's executive director Guy McCrary.

Input will be garnered from citizen discussion "focus groups."

Focus group research involves a group of five to 12 participants and an interviewer/moderator.

McCrary expects the sessions to begin by late February and run through June.

The purpose of Objectives 2000 is to identify, define and establish goals for the Midland community to aspire toward achieving during the 1990s.

The objectives will be documented in a final report and distributed for review and reference by planners and decision makers involved in all aspects of life in Midland.

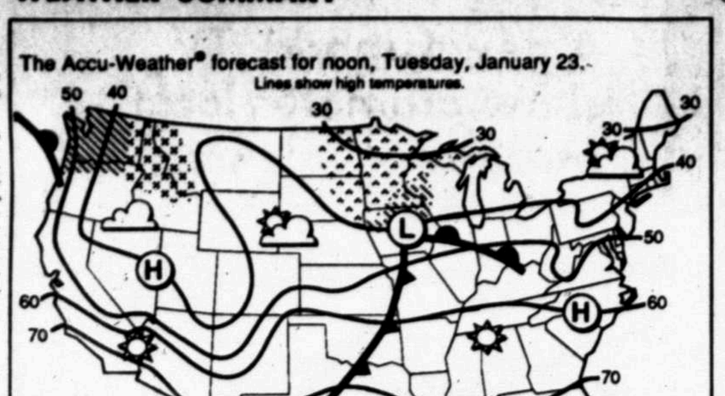

"At this point, we are looking for volunteers to participate in the discussions," McCrary said.

"We are not necessarily looking for people involved in the leadership of community affairs; if you are a citizen in this community, you are a stakeholder and have an interest in our collective future."

He invited participation with a single warning. "These meetings will not be grievance forums. We need forward thinkers, not complainers. It will be an interesting process for every participant, and it will be a challenging experience."

Partly cloudy skies forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies are expected tonight, according to forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with winds from the west at 5-15 mph.

Variable cloudiness is expected for Tuesday with the high ranging from 65-70 degrees and winds continuing from the west at 15-20 mph and gusty.

Sunday's high of 60 was 24 degrees cooler than the record high of 84 set or that date in 1974. The overnight low of 29 was 27 degree warmer than the record low of two set for this date in 1966.

STATE

Clear skies prevailed over much of Texas today, except for a few bands of high thin clouds across the South Plains and patches of mid-level clouds over the lower coast.

Temperatures were in the teens in the northwest Panhandle, the 20s in the central Panhandle and mountains of the far west. Temperatures reached into the 50s in the lower valley and Coastal Bend. Readings in the 30s and 40s were most common across most of the state. The 4 a.m. temperature extremes ranged from 17 degrees at Dalhart to 58 at the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station and McAllen.

Breezes throughout the state were generally light and variable.

Expect fair weather in the north — with mostly cloudy skies over the deep south and partly cloudy elsewhere tonight. Mostly cloudy Tuesday. Expect patchy dense fog over the coast late tonight and early Tuesday. There is a slight chance of showers over East Texas late Tuesday afternoon.

NATION

Light snow fell today in parts of the Northeast from the remnants of a storm that hurled occasional lightning as it dumped as much as 10 inches of snow. Some airports were forced to close.

Parts of the Upper Great Lakes region also had snow this morning, while rain and freezing rain fell in the Pacific Northwest. Dry weather prevailed throughout the rest of the nation.

The clash of a warm front moving in from the Atlantic with a cold front coming from the west Sunday created the right conditions for a Northeast snowstorm that sometimes sounded like a summer cloudburst, said forecaster Charlie Foley of the National Weather Service in Boston.

Light snow continued falling this morning from northern New York to Maine, while rain was changing to snow on Cape Cod in Massachusetts.

Snowfall totals by Sunday night included up to 10 inches in central, southern and coastal areas of New Hampshire; 9 inches in coastal communities north of Boston; and up to 8 inches in suburbs of Albany, N.Y.

The snow forced Logan International Airport in Boston to close for nearly two hours. The commercial airport in Manchester, N.H., also was closed temporarily.

Police throughout the region reported many minor accidents because of slippery roads.

Operators of ski areas rejoiced.

"I just wish it had happened Friday," said Sabrina Patenaude of Pat's Peak in Henniker, N.H.

In the Northwest, a small but energetic Pacific disturbance brought freezing rain to Spokane, Wash., and rain to Seattle this morning.

The same system was expected to bring high winds to parts of the north central United States later today. A high-wind watch was issued for the mountains of northwestern Wyoming.

Strong Santa Ana winds, meanwhile, developed in Southern California on Sunday.

Clouds and light snow were over parts of the Upper Great Lakes region, with snow falling this morning in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

Dry weather prevailed across the rest of the nation, with clear skies over much of the south central and southwestern United States.

Temperatures remained below freezing Sunday across parts of the Upper Mississippi Valley, the Upper Great Lakes region, and the northern Atlantic Coast region, with highs only in the teens and single numbers in Northern New England.

RALLY

Earlier, backers of legal abortion raised the specter of Romania's former communist repression today in warning against a rollback of abortion rights.

The head of the National Abortion Rights Action League told a gathering on Capitol Hill that legalizing abortions was one of the first steps Romania took after overthrowing its hated dictator last month.

"Romanians know firsthand what most Americans can only imagine — the deadly impact of government bans on abortion," said Kate Michelman, executive director of the abortion-rights lobbying group.

"It would be a travesty if the United States, the beacon of democracy in the world, applauded Romania's reforms while adopting repressive anti-choice laws here at home," she said.

Activists on both sides of the issue — sensing 1990 will be a pivotal year in the political debate on abortion — held competing events marking the anniversary of the high court decision that legalized abortions.

Abortion foes expected tens of thousands of marchers in Washington, and more at smaller events around the country.

President Bush promised to speak over a loudspeaker by telephone to the anti-abortion crowd gathered on the Ellipse, a park behind the White House. It was the same method he used at a similar rally last year, when the new president called abortion an "American tragedy."

After hearing Bush and a handful of congressmen and other speakers, the crowd planned to march up Pennsylvania Avenue to the U.S. Capitol and the Supreme Court.

Abortion-rights advocates also gathered on the Mall outside the Capitol where a temporary memorial was erected in tribute to all women who have died from illegal, botched abortions — including Becky Bell, a 17-year-old Indianapolis girl who died in September 1988 after a self-induced abortion.

Bill Bell, her father, said his daughter died because Indiana law requires minors to obtain parental consent before they can get a legal abortion.

"Our daughter was punished," he said. "She was denied a reasonable and safe choice because she loved her parents and died not wanting to disappoint them. ... How many more young women will share Becky's fate if we allow our government to deny them a safe choice?"

Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon, a leading Republican supporter of abortion rights, said his party is being damaged by the strongly anti-abortion platform and position of Bush, who vetoed abortion-rights bills passed by Congress last fall.

He predicted the anti-abortion plank in the Republican Party platform will be removed in 1992.

Activists on both sides of the abortion issue rallied Sunday in cities across the country, from Albany, N.Y., to Sacramento, Calif.

Leaders of the anti-abortion movement planned to meet with Bush's chief of staff, John Sununu, and other administration officials, but there were no plans for the president to see them, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Friday. Sununu is a strong opponent of abortion.

A group of women on Sunday leave a memorial constructed by the National Organization of Women near the Capitol. Thousands of demonstrators are holding a rally at the White House today to mark the 17th anniversary of the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision permitting abortions.

Others planning to speak to the anti-abortion rally included Republican Sens. Jesse Helms of North Carolina and Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire.

Abortion opponents have held their "March for Life" every year since the court's decision.

But this year's events had a new significance: it was the first since the high court's Webster decision in July 1989, which opened the door for states to impose some restrictions on abortion.

"Most of the time this is a sad occasion," said Nancy Myers, spokeswoman for the National Right to Life Committee. "But there's a sense of hope this year because for the first time since 1973 the Supreme Court has said it will allow some reasonable limits on abortion."

The march came as political debate on abortion has intensified.

MISD

He predicted that this spring the district will hire about 180 new teachers for next year. The first recruiting trip of the year is slated for Feb. 5.

MISD hired 248 teachers last year after creating 65 new positions to meet state-mandated 22-to-1 teacher-student ratios in elementary classrooms, Holland said.

"We're not solely dependent on college recruiting," Holland said. "I don't want to hire all first-year teachers — I want a mix of first-year teachers and experienced teachers."

Nevertheless, MISD administrators will travel to 34 college campuses this spring, 12 of them out-of-state, seeking new graduates.

"Fifteen years ago, it wasn't necessary to recruit for Midland," Holland said. "People came to you. That's no longer the case, because we have fewer and fewer people going into education while at the same time there is an increased demand for teachers."

Holland said school districts from as far away as New York City and Guam sent representatives to a job fair at North Texas State University last year.

"We're not just competing with people from Texas anymore," Holland said.

Math and "hard science" teachers, bilingual teachers, special education teachers and speech therapists are especially in demand, he said.

"The turnover rate in special education is pretty high," Holland said. "It's a very intensive type of teaching. The burnout rate, frankly, is very high."

Holland said his biggest recruiting problem is finding enough minority candidates.

Long range plans call for the percentage of minority teachers to eventually equal the percentage of minority students in MISD, but Holland doubted the feasibility of the plan.

"The reality is that if there were a larger number of minority college graduates who wanted to teach, we would come a lot closer to meeting that goal," Holland said.

Minorities comprise about 40 percent of MISD enrollment, district demographic figures show. Minorities, meanwhile, make up only about 13 percent of MISD's 1,253 teachers, figures show.

Holland said the district will spend $16,200 on recruiting this year, up from $4,000 four years ago.

"The school board has drastically increased the amount of money for recruiting," Holland said, because qualified teachers are getting harder to find.

He cited a Texas Education Agency report which showed Texas colleges producing about 5,700 teachers in 1986, 4,900 in 1987, and 3,900 in 1988.

Larry Hovey, Associate Dean of the Texas Tech University College of Education, said the slump may be over.

"Nationwide, there has been a real uspsurge in people returning to school to get teacher certification," he said. "The last few years have seen a more positive view of teaching. Salaries are not the best, but they have gone up."

The starting salary for MISD teachers is $20,250. The TEA reports an average MISD teacher salary of $25,378, compared with a statewide average of $24,179.

Hovey said the minimum teacher starting salary in Texas is $17,000.

Relatively low pay may be the biggest hurdle to teacher recruiting. Hovey asked: "Why go for $17,000 when you could take a few more hours in biology and go to work for business or industry?"

BARRY

But in interviews, U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens has hinted that he might look favorably on Barry's resignation when deciding whether to pursue other phases in an ongoing probe of the mayor's activities.

After refusing to comment directly on whether Barry's resignation would lead to a dismissal of the misdemeanor charge against the mayor, Stephens said: "I'm very sensitive to the concerns of this community, to the people in this community and the need to have an effective government in place..."

"There are a broad range of considerations as United States attorney that I would consider beyond the simple issue of holding Mr. Barry accountable for his criminal conduct," Stephens said.

However, the prosecutor said on NBC's "Today" show this morning, "In a system that requires fairness, I think it is appropriate that we go forward with the charge that has been lodged here."

Barry's brief statement was the latest chapter in an unfolding drama that has riveted the nation's capital since the mayor was arrested on a drug charge Thursday night.

While the mayor did not say whether he is suffering from drug or alcohol abuse, others indicated he was.

Herbert O. Reid Sr., one of the mayor's closest personal advisers, said he hoped that from Barry's travails "we can all learn something about drug addiction."

"He's doing the right thing," Reid said. "I am — we all are — relieved, because many of us have suspected for some time that he has had a problem."

"The most serious problem is alcoholism," Barry spokeswoman Lurma Rackley said. "The mayor has acknowledged that he has a health concern, and the details are his private matter."

The mayor's wife, Effi, said in remarks that followed her husband's, "For you to admit that you have a problem ... that you need to make yourself whole again is truly a burden lifted from our souls. For our family it is just the beginning."

Barry, surrounded by clergy in a broadcast appearance in St. Timothy's Episcopal Church near his home, clasped his wife's hand and said he has come "face to face with my deepest human failures."

Barry said, "these ministers have helped me to keep the strength I need ... I'm going to find a way to heal my body, mind and soul."

One Barry cabinet member suggested that prior grand jury testimony — in which the mayor has said he denied ever using drugs — prevented the mayor from making specific references to drug abuse.

"If he had said he had a cocaine problem or some other form of drug abuse, then he could possibly face a perjury charge," said the aide, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The mayor did not take questions and turned the podium to Mrs. Barry following his brief statement. Attention has been focused on Mrs. Barry in part because the mayor was lured to his arrest by a woman with whom the mayor has been friendly.

Barry, 53, faces a cocaine possession charge after testing positive for cocaine in blood and urine tests administered following his arrest.

Barry had been poised to announce his bid for a fourth term as mayor on Sunday.

Soldiers injured in chopper crash

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — Two soldiers were injured when the helicopter they were flying at treetop level crashed at Fort Chaffee early Sunday, officials said.

Warrant Officer James Heer, 24, was in stable condition at St. Edward Mercy Medical Center with back injuries and Chief Warrant Officer John Rohrbeck, 37, was treated at the hospital and released, said Maj. Frank Theising, public affairs officer for Fort Chaffee.

He said a safety inspection team from the Army Safety Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., arrived in Fort Smith before noon Sunday to investigate the accident.

Theising said the men were participating in a Joint Readiness Training Center exercise when the crash occurred about 1:35 a.m. He said the helicopter, an AH-1S Cobra, was about 100 feet from the ground and was circling in preparation for landing when it crashed. The pilots were wearing night vision devices, he said.

The accident occurred about 200 feet from a group of soldiers involved in the mission, Theising said.

Staff Sgt. Jim Ward said the inspection team would spend one or two days combing the scene of the crash. A final report from the team is not expected for a couple of months, he said.

Some 2,200 soldiers of the Paratrooper 2nd Squadron of the 17th Calvary, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), from Fort Campbell, Ky., arrived at Fort Chaffee on Wednesday for 10 days of exercises, officials said, and about 3,000 soldiers are participating in the exercises. The AH-1 Cobra, a single-engine, two-place attack helicopter, was among 60 helicopters and 12 Cobras being used in the exercises.

"The mission continued and the training remained on schedule," Theising said.

TEXAS

Carr said he gives jewelry to friends, and his pieces are sold at the Texas Capitol gift shop, the airport and a store in a downtown hotel lobby. The law office where he works shares the hotel's lobby.

"So I'm going into a little business at my age in life besides a law practice," said Carr, 71. "It's very interesting and very satisfying."

It's a different sort of diversion for Carr, who was House speaker between 1957 and 1961, and attorney general in 1963-67.

He lost a 1966 U.S. Senate race, and a 1968 race for governor, then watched his political career come to an end when he was charged in connection with the Sharpstown scandal. Carr, one of a number of public officials accused of illegally influencing the passage of banking bills and manipulating stock, was acquitted.

In explaining his hobby, Carr said, "Everyone needs something to get them away from work and worry."

And it's more a matter of pleasure than profit: "I'm just paying my expenses, really, is what it amounts to right now."

At the hotel lobby shop, called Amy's, his pendants range from $6.50 to $8.50, earrings are $14 and bolos, $20. Polished "lucky rocks" — shopkeeper Amy Davis' substitute moniker for the more negative "worry stones" — are $4 apiece.

"People are fascinated with them (Carr's pieces) because Waggoner Carr is the one who's doing them ..." Ms. Davis said.

Azerbaijanis bury countrymen killed in Soviet assault

MOSCOW (AP) — Factory whistles wailed in mourning today and hundreds of thousands of Azerbaijanis massed in Baku to bury scores of countrymen killed when Soviet troops stormed the city to put down a nationalist uprising, witnesses said.

A general strike took effect to protest the assault and demand an end to the Soviet occupation. In an overnight session, the southern republic's legislature demanded Soviet troops leave the Azerbaijani capital.

The official Tass news agency said 83 people, including 14 soldiers and members of their families, were killed Saturday in an assault by Soviet troops in the capital, Baku, or in skirmishes the previous day.

That brought the toll to 155 dead and more than 500 wounded since Jan. 13 in fighting that was originally sparked by anti-Armenian riots in Baku, a oil-producing center of 1.7 million people on the Caspian Sea.

Tass reported 12 new deaths when Armenian militants opened fire on an Azerbaijani village on the border between the two Soviet republics in the Voichy Vorota area. Internal security troops prevented further bloodshed, Tass said.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev sent the troops to the southern region last week to try to halt fighting between the Moslem Azerbaijanis and Christian Armenians, the worst ethnic unrest since he became Communist Party chief in 1985. Gorbachev, whose fostering of greater freedoms led to the surging nationalist unrest, also faces conflicts in the Baltics, Moldavia, Georgia and in parts of Soviet Central Asia.

Iranian radio said today that armed forces had been deployed along Iran's border with Soviet Azerbaijan to prevent people from crossing. Tass said "Azerbaijanis and Iranians continue to cross the border en masse in both directions" on some parts of the border but Soviet and Iranian border guards have "stabilized" other sections.

In Baku, witnesses said throngs of mourners numbering as many as 2 million bore coffins of Azerbaijanis killed in the weekend assault down streets to Lenin Square, now renamed Freedom Square in honor of the Azerbaijani nationalist cause.

Soviet troops and police did not interfere in the funeral, said Leila Yunusov, a spokeswoman for the Social Democratic Group, an informal Azerbaijani political organization.

She estimated more than 1 million people took part. But Askan Askerov, a department chief at the Azerbaijani Communist Party daily Kommunist, said the mourners were believed to total 2 million, exceeding the entire population of Baku.

"All the people of Azerbaijan and Baku are in tears and mourning," official Baku Radio said in a broadcast monitored by the BBC in London.

The dead were buried in Kirov Park, overlooking the Caspian, the radio said. The number of people buried was unclear, but Ms. Yunusov said 119 individual plots were dug.

Another Baku resident, Azad Mula-Zade, reported by telephone that factory whistles had been blowing since early morning to honor Azerbaijanis killed in the military assault.

On Sunday, mutinous military cadets in Baku reportedly fired on Soviet troops patrolling the city, but an announcement by the local military commander, Lt. Gen. Anatoly Dubinyak, said the night had been peaceful.

However, 43 people were detained for violating the 11 p.m. curfew or not having proper identity papers, said the statement, which was read on official Baku Radio and monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp in London.

A political scientist who teaches at the Azerbaijan Academy of Sciences, Jahun Mulazade, reported scattered gunfire early today but said Soviet military forces generally appeared in control of the city.

Azerbaijani activists claimed the death toll in the military assault was much higher than the official figure. Yusif Bagirov, an attorney and member of an independent investigatory commission created by Baku lawyers, asserted that 1,000 civilians were killed in the district that encompasses Baku.

He said at least 94 bodies were in coffins borne through Baku's streets for burial today.

An emergency overnight session of the Azerbaijani legislature demanded the withdrawal of Soviet army and Interior Ministry troops from the republic, with the exception of border districts with Armenia, said another Baku lawyer, Viliyad Mamedov, who attended the 11½-hour meeting.

Lawmakers also demanded the lifting of the curfew in Baku, along with the state of emergency Gorbachev declared in much of Azerbaijan one week ago. Mamedov said.

Savili Perets, an editor at the republic's official Azerinform news agency, said the issue of Azerbaijan's secession from the Soviet Union was not broached during the session as some Baku activists had predicted.

In Baku, radio, television and means of public transport except the city's metro were not working today due to the general strike, Mula-Zade said.

India prime minister rejects settlement in Bhopal gas disaster

BHOPAL, India (AP) — Declaring India will cut no deal "over human corpses," Prime Minister V.P. Singh has rejected the $470 million settlement with Union Carbide in the Bhopal gas disaster and vowed to pursue $3 billion instead.

The new prime minister also said Sunday that his government would press criminal charges in the case.

The 1984 gas leak, the world's deadliest industrial disaster, killed more than 3,500 people. The $470 million settlement was accepted last year by the Indian Supreme Court and by Singh's predecessor, Rajiv Gandhi.

Singh was greeted Sunday by surging crowds when he arrived at the Jaiprakash Nagar shantytown, where many of the victims had lived.

Some people draped garlands of flowers around Singh's neck or knelt to touch his feet as he walked through the narrow lanes of huts just across the street from the now-closed Union Carbide plant.

At a public rally attended by an estimated 100,000 people, one-tenth of Bhopal's population, Singh declared: "We have decided to do away with the settlement and pursue the $3 billion suit against the company and also the criminal suit against UCC (Union Carbide Corp.) officials."

He promised that his government would provide interim relief to all people living in affected areas. The amount of money to be paid will be determined within one month, he said.

The prime minister, who took office Dec. 2, did not spell out how his government would revive the legal case.

India's Supreme Court on Feb. 15 accepted the $470 million deal as "full and final settlement" of the government's suit, which had been dragging through a maze of Indian court procedures for about four years.

The Gandhi government originally sought $3 billion in damages and later filed criminal negligence charges against top officials of the Danbury, Conn.-based Union Carbide Corp. and its local subsidiary.

When Union Carbide and the Gandhi government agreed on the $470 million, the Supreme Court absolved the company of further civil or criminal liability.

However, under Indian law, the decision is subject to review if challenged. Gas victims and activist groups filed petitions with the court challenging the settlement on two grounds: that the Gandhi government had no right to declare itself the sole representative of all claims arising from the Bhopal gas disaster; and that the compensation of $470 million was inadequate.

The Supreme Court declared Dec. 22 that the Gandhi government did, indeed, have the right to be the claimants' only representative.

The second challenge is still pending, and the Singh government announced Jan. 12 it would support the challengers.

Modrow agrees to rebuild government

EAST BERLIN (AP) — Communist Premier Hans Modrow bowed to pressure from opposition groups and agreed today to rebuild the East German government to include pro-democracy groups.

Modrow's concession came one day after the Communist Party's No. 2 leader quit and called for the party's dissolution.

The resignation followed an emergency meeting of the embattled party leadership, which made other moves to placate the populace by expelling ousted leader Egon Krenz and 13 other former Politburo members.

The leadership, which replaced Communist hard-liners last year during a peaceful popular revolt, has been trying to appease an opposition movement that is upset with the pace of promised reforms.

Modrow and opposition leaders also showed rare agreement in denouncing a report today by the mass-circulation West German newspaper Bild, which claimed army and secret police agents were jointly planning a coup.

Ibrahim Boehme of the influential opposition Social Democratic Party told politicians a coalition with Communists and other established parties was possible "if all parties and groups are prepared to enter the government on an emergency basis, without weeks-long negotiations."

He made the comment at a session of weekly talks on reform between the government and opposition groups.

East Germany's first free elections are to be held on May 6, but broad differences between the Communist-dominated government and opposition groups have delayed economic reform measures and hindered the transition to democracy.

Modrow today proposed that the fractious political forces meet Wednesday to consider a new Cabinet.

"It is my intention to give a new quality to our cooperation," Modrow told representatives of more than a dozen fledgling parties and reform movements during today's talks between the government and the opposition. "Our expectation of your constructive advice underscores this intention."

Krenz Berghofer

"I appeal to the representatives of the new parties at the round table ... to enter the government as Cabinet members in order to form a broad coalition," Modrow said.

With his offer, Modrow has made clear that the Communists are willing to give up some of the ministerial posts they control to allow groups such as New Forum, the Social Democrats and other unofficial parties to gain a role in government.

Communists now dominate the 27-member Cabinet led by Modrow, with 16 ministerial posts compared with four for the officially approved Liberal Democrats, three for the Christian Democrats and two each for the National Democrats and the farmers' party.

Opposition groups have indicated they would take part in running the government only if they are offered ministerial posts.

The Communists' attempt to keep their party from collapsing were compounded by Sunday's announcement that their No. 2 official, Wolfgang Berghofer, had abandoned the party with an "urgent demand" for the party's dissolution.

Berghofer, 46, the party's deputy chairman since December and a leading popular reformer, resigned along with 39 other prominent party members from Dresden, of which he is mayor.

The moves were expected to trigger mass defections from the party. Its membership in the country of 16.3 million people has plunged to 1.2 million from nearly 2.3 million in 1987.

In a statement broadcast on West German's ARD television, Berghofer said: "The citizens of the German Democratic Republic need trust and courage for the future, since tens of thousands are still leaving their homeland."

About 30,000 East Germans have moved to West Germany this year, following an exodus of more than 340,000 in 1989.

In his statement, Berghofer said he and the other party defectors would support "social democratic" principles. He is widely reported to be moving to the opposition Social Democratic party.

Government television said Berghofer's move put the party's future in "extreme danger."

Modrow also announced the resignation of Communist Finance Minister Uta Nickel, the target of a criminal inquiry into alleged financial irregularities. Ms. Nickel has denied wrongdoing.

The Hamburg-based Bild newspaper, in contending a coup was in the works, said a general strike could be used as the pretext for an armed takeover.

"I must decisively reject as provocation a report in today's Bild newspaper," Modrow said at the government-opposition talks today.

Boehme of the Social Democratic party said the Bild report undermines public confidence in the government. New Forum delegate Ingrid Koeppe also criticized the report.

Marcos' mother entombed

BATAC, Philippines (AP) — The body of Ferdinand Marcos' mother was entombed Sunday 20 months after she died, ending a bizarre vigil by supporters of the late president who had hoped mother and son would be buried together.

Marcos supporters used the entombment of Josefa Edralin-Marcos, who died May 4, 1988 at age 95, to denounce the government of President Corazon Aquino.

About 1,000 people gathered as the body was placed in a glass and wood structure behind the family home.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Some of the things you do will be both controversial and financially rewarding. Let your conscience be your guide. Retirees could get unexpected assistance in March. Pinpoint your main goal and use all your resources to attain it. Those in sales will record the greatest gains in August. Do not try to rush what could develop into a permanent romantic alliance. Partner needs time to think things through.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: writer Virginia Woolf, Philippine leader Corazon Aquino, actor Dean Jones, singer Anita Baker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your mate or business partner gives you some excellent inside information. You could be in line for a glamorous job. Your skill at communicating is a big plus.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your writing skills are a valuable asset. A subtantial raise or promotion is in the works. Partnerships are going through positive changes. Spreading yourself too thinly could prove costly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Meetings with business contacts will be productive today. Be open to suggestions. Your life takes off in an unusual but rewarding direction. Guard against extravagance if entertaining at home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Those who aim too high could get shot down. Avoid speculative ventures. Changing your work routine boosts productivity. Winter vacation trips enjoy favorable influences. Join forces with a friend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Those who are self-employed do brilliantly, especially if involved with the arts or advertising. Financial gains depend on your special talents. An influential person admires your originality.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An excellent day for making sweeping changs. Your ideas could meet with some resistance. Hang in there and you will get wonderful results! A social event brings more affection your way. Avoid flatterers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be alert to gossip that can hurt your reputation. Real estate ventures bear careful investigation. Cope with contrary co-workers in a positive manner. A sense of humor and genuine smile will help.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An easygoing attitude will serve you best today. Welcome an opportunity to mix business with pleasure at lunch. You can let your hair down. Show your romantic partner more appreciation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Use your time and energy judiciously. Make allowances for last-minute changes. Punctuality will impress higher-ups. An employer asks tough questions; be straightforward. Candor is essential.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your relationship with an older coworker improves. Accept this person's help without looking for ulterior motives. Keep a close eye on your money. Come to grips with postponed household chores.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Give others the room they need to make changes and a financial sacrifice may not be necessary. A business venture sounds lucrative but bears further investigation. Ask for help in solving a family problem.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day to ask for and receive favors. Count your lucky stars! Religion begins to play a stronger role in your life. Act and dress conventionally when you deal with conservative customers.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠106 ♡K1063 ◇QJ92 ♣Q92
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—When you have a ruffing value and a four-card major, it is usually better to look for a 4-4 fit in that suit than to play in no trump—after all, opener also might have a doubleton. So bid two clubs to investigate.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠106 ♡K1063 ◇QJ92 ♣Q92
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Whether partner has or has not not yet denied a heart suit (with both majors some pairs agree to show spades first, other hearts), all you can do for the moment is return to two no trump. That shows a balanced hand of 8-9 points.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold
♠106 ♡K1063 ◇QJ92 ♣Q92
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You have too much to pass, but not enough to jump to game in hearts. Raise to three hearts. That invites partner to go to four hearts if he has a maximum one no trump opening bid.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q98532 ♡K4 ◇J42 ♣95
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—We can understand your desire to rebid your six-card major suit, but consider for a moment. Partner has shown nine or 10 cards in the minors, and he rates to have a couple of hearts at least. Therefore, he is almost surely short in spades. The sensible bid is a preference to two diamonds.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡KQJ1085 ◇K5 ♣J832
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	?

What is your opening bid?
A.—Because of your spade shortage, you can't even be sure this is your hand. Since chances of slam opposite a passed hand are virtually nil, we would opt to make life as difficult as possible for the opponents by opening four hearts.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠72 ♡KQ109542 ◇954 ♣6
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—You are interested in playing four hearts, and nothing else, so don't waste any time—bid it. Or, if you are playing transfer bids, transfer into hearts and then raise to game.

Heiress still wants to help shipyard

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Polish-born Barbara Piasecka Johnson, who has offered to save the bankrupt Polish shipyard that gave birth to the Solidarity trade union, is still interested despite reports of the deal's demise, an aide said.

Mrs. Johnson, heir to the Johnson & Johnson fortune, offered in May to invest up to $100 million in the Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk if certain conditions were met. Her letter of intent set a deadline of Dec. 31 to complete negotiations.

John Peach, an aide to Mrs. Johnson, dismissed the deadline set in the letter of intent: "December 31 was just not a practical deadline, as complicated as the deal was."

"Mrs. Johnson is still very interested and enthusiastic about the shipyard," Peach said Thursday in a telephone interview from Princeton, where Mrs. Johnson lives. "We plan to be over there as soon as the government says, 'Come on over.'"

Poland's then-Communist government decided in October 1988 to close the shipyard as an austerity measure.

Mrs. Johnson's offer initially heartened the economically distressed port city, but the enthusiasm of shipyard representatives cooled as the details of her bid became clearer.

She sought a 55 percent interest in the shipyard, a five-year ban on strikes and a wage contract of 50 cents an hour, according to Solidarity and shipyard officials.

NEW YORK (AP) — Two decades of movie-making have left Richard Dreyfuss at a comfortable level of fame.

"I have the right-size celebrity," the 42-year-old actor said in February's Fame magazine. "Not as much as some and a lot more than others. And I'm known but not worshiped.

"I can always get a good table at a restaurant, but when I get to the table they let me eat in peace," said Dreyfuss, star of the current film "Always."

In the 1970s, Dreyfuss starred in such blockbusters as "American Graffiti," "Jaws" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," and won an Academy Award for "The Goodbye Girl."

NEW YORK (AP) — Ex-drug addict David Crosby is helping alcoholic teen-age actress Drew Barrymore stay straight.

Barrymore

Barrymore, 14, lived with Crosby and his wife, Jan Dance, for three months as part of her program of recovery from alcohol and drug abuse, according to this week's People magazine.

"I'm an old Hollywood kid and I knew her story. I felt she had been dealt a short deck, you know, a fifth-generation alcoholic, and I didn't want to see her go down the tubes," Crosby told People.

Crosby, 48, of the rock group Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young, has a well-documented history of cocaine addiction, hitting bottom in 1983 with an 11-month prison term on drug and weapons convictions. But now he's straight.

Barrymore, the lovable moppet of the movie "E.T.," announced last year that she had struggled with drugs and alcohol since she was 9. When she left a clinic in October, the Crosbys took her in.

Barrymore has rejoined her mother, Ildiko Jaid, is back in school and is free of drugs and alcohol, People reported.

BARTLETT, N.H. (AP) — White House Chief of Staff John Sununu and his wife, Nancy, returned to their home state to lead a field of 75 sports and media celebrities in a ski event to benefit children.

Proceeds from Saturday's ski-in at Attitash Ski area went to the Genesis Fund, which provides money for special care for children with birth defects, genetic diseases and mental retardation.

Sununu, a frequent skier when he was New Hampshire's governor, said he enjoyed the trip back.

"We like it in Washington," Sununu said, "but we really miss it in New Hampshire."

NEW YORK (AP) — Former "Mayflower Madam" Sydney Biddle Barrows has apologized for a paragraph in her new intimate etiquette book that suggests dinner guests be told if s eone with AIDS is at the table.

The publisher, Doubleday, said in a press release Saturday that many have complained that the passage in the book "Mayflower Manners" is insensitive.

"Most people will know that they cannot contract the disease by being seated at a dinner table with a carrier," Miss Barrows wrote. "But it is a courtesy to all to let them know ahead of time."

Miss Barrows said in the release, "My advice was intended to protect the feelings of such a guest from the ignorance of those who might inadvertently bring up a subject, causing discomfort to the guest. I intended no other meaning or inference."

She said the passage would be deleted in future printings.

The book by Ellis Weiner and Miss Barrows is described by the publisher as "a satirical and tongue-in-cheek advice book."

Miss Barrows, a member of a prominent socialite family who ran a high-price escort service, pleaded guilty in 1985 to a misdemeanor charge of promoting prostitution and paid a $5,000 fine. She was dubbed the "Mayflower Madam" because she traces some of her ancestors to the group that came over on the Mayflower.

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Michael Landon, who played Little Joe Cartwright in the long-running TV series "Bonanza," can kick up his cowboy boots at his new ranch that took a decade to build.

Landon, who also starred in "Little House on the Prairie" and "Highway to Heaven," traded an ocean-front residence at celebrity-saturated Malibu Colony for a ranch estate in bucolic Bonsall Canyon.

The actor-director-producer bought the property 10 years ago as a place to relax with his family.

Landon, 52, has seven grown children from two previous marriages and has two young children with his current wife, Cindy.

"They didn't anticipate that it would become their home, but as we designed the plans, it developed from a ranch to an estate that has the old Bel-Air or Pasadena look," said architect Robert Earl.

Industry sources estimate the value of the ranch at $7 million, the Los Angeles Times reported.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — No joke, the Mississippi Senate has named a state highway for humorist Jerry Clower, a native son.

"I'm overwhelmed, stunned — it just elates me," Clower said from his Liberty home after the Senate voted Friday to name a stretch of Mississippi Highway 24 between Liberty and McComb for him.

"I was raised on Highway 24 when it was a dirt road. I saw them pave that road in the '30s and '40s. I've hitchhiked on it. I've rode the school bus on it," Clower said.

Texas' political star still shining

A year ago, as George Bush was being sworn into office as president, Texans in Congress were enjoying tremendous clout, the fruit of decades of service, hard work, and political maneuvering. But 1989 wasn't favorable to the state for the maintenance of that impressive sway and it slipped away to a degree.

An investigation of House Speaker Jim Wright's personal finances caused him to abandon his 34-year career in the House. U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland of Houston was killed in a plane crash in Ethiopia in August. Illnesses caused Rep. Jack Brooks of Beaumont to be hospitalized for six weeks and Rep. Marvin Leath of Waco to not seek re-election. Suddenly the state's political leverage has been placed in jeopardy.

As a result, 1990 opened with Texas facing a period of diminished political clout in the Congress, although remaining politically influential. In a recent Associated Press article, Texas Sens. Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm assessed the state's standing and pronounced it good.

"We still have a lot of power there," said Bentsen, while Gramm noted that, "Before all this happened, Texas had the greatest degree of influence in Washington of any state in the union.

"Texas still has the most influence of any state in the union," Gramm added.

That's good because while, with President Bush getting high marks from the American people for his performance in office, Texas is facing challenges for the future that also will require as much political muscle as the state can muster.

Texas continues to enjoy one of highest population growth rates of any state in the union and will need to stay in the forefront of industrial diversification. In fact, in terms of the environment, energy, and science and technology, Texas needs to take a leadership role. To do so, the state must play its political cards wisely in Washington.

The current Texas congressional delegation shows respectable stature. Bentsen is chairman of the Finance Committee in the Senate, while in the House Brooks heads the Judiciary Committee, Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez is chairman of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, and Rep. Kika de la Garza is chairman of the Agriculture Committee.

This year will be a year of political strengthening for Texas. With the state's political influence still strong in the Congress, 1990 should prove to be a much better year for Texas.

Another View:

Dim peace prospects

The United Nations Security Council's proposal for a U.N. presence in Cambodia raises fresh hopes for progress toward peace. Realistically, however, those hopes cannot be translated into action until agreement is reached between the Phnom Penh government of Hun Sen and Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge guerrillas. And at this stage, there appears to be little likelihood of such an accord.

It is particularly encouraging that both China, which supports the Khmer Rouge, and the Soviet Union, which backs Hun Sen, have overcome their aversion to a major U.N. role in Cambodia. What is not yet clear, however, is whether China will follow through by cutting off military aid to the Khmer Rouge. This step is crucial to the balance of power in Cambodia and essential to the success of any peace initiative.

The U.N. plan proposes an international force of thousands of peace-keeping troops who would oversee general elections, verify the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops and monitor a cease-fire.

The new spirit of cooperation in the Security Council augurs well for the accomplishment of the first two of these goals. But a voluntary cease-fire will be far more difficult to arrange. The 50,000-strong Khmer Rouge guerrilla force, infamous for its genocidal rule which claimed a million civilian deaths between 1975 and 1978, is in no mood to sacrifice the gains it has made in recent action against Hun Sen's troops.

Furthermore, China may no longer be able to control the Khmer Rouge completely or curb its ambition to regain power. Even if all Chinese military assistance were stopped, the Khmer guerrillas would still constitute a dangerous threat because they have stockpiled arms and ammunition and have vast experience living off the land.

Meanwhile, Premier Hun Sen is justifiably alarmed at the battlefield successes of the Khmer Rouge in western Cambodia during the last three months. He remains adamant that his administration not be dismantled to make way for an interim government. He also insists that the Khmer Rouge have no role in Cambodia's future.

Despite the Security Council's new spirit of determination to find a settlement, it is sadly obvious that prospects for a quick end to Cambodia's misery are very bleak. The council's priority, therefore, should be to seek a cease-fire. Until that is achieved, all other plans are largely irrelevant.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Jan. 22, the 22nd day of 1990. There are 343 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 22, 1917, President Wilson pleaded for an end to the war in Europe, saying there had to be "peace without victory." (By April, however, America was also at war.)

On this date:

In 1788, the English romantic poet Lord Byron was born in London.

In 1881, an ancient Egyptian obelisk known as "Cleopatra's Needle" was erected in New York's Central Park.

In 1901, an era ended in England with the death of Queen Victoria at age 82.

In 1905, thousands of demonstrating Russian workers were fired on by Imperial army troops in St. Petersburg on what became known as "Red Sunday" or "Bloody Sunday."

In 1936, Thornton Wilder's play "Our Town" was performed for the first time, at the McCarter Theater in Princeton, N.J.

In 1944, during World War II, Allied forces began landing at Anzio, Italy.

In 1955, the Pentagon announced a program to develop intercontinental missiles armed with nuclear weapons.

In 1970, 20 years ago, the first commercial flight of the Boeing 747 began in New York and ended in London some 6½ hours later.

In 1973, the U.S. Supreme Court legalized abortions nationwide.

In 1973, former President Johnson died at his Texas ranch at age 64.

In 1979, a car bomb exploded in Beirut, Lebanon, killing Ali Hassan Salameh, who was believed to have helped mastermind the massacre of Israeli athletes at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

In 1987, Pennsylvania treasurer R. Budd Dwyer, convicted of defrauding the state, proclaimed his innocence before shooting himself to death in front of horrified news conference spectators.

Ten years ago: The Soviet Union, accusing Nobel laureate Andrei Sakharov of "subversive work," sent him and his wife, Yelena Bonner, into internal exile in the industrial city of Gorky.

Iran celebrates new year with barbarism

WASHINGTON — The medieval government of Iran celebrated the New Year by beheading homosexuals.

This is the government headed by Hashemi Rafsanjani, whom both George Bush and Ronald Reagan have called "moderate" in closed-door meetings of White House officials.

Jack Anderson

In fact, both Reagan and Bush have had secret communications with Rafsanjani about the American hostages who are held by pro-Iranian terrorist groups in Lebanon.

This is moderate Rafsanjani's idea of justice:

On New Year's Eve, Iran's Chief Justice Morteza Moghtadai held private discussions with lower judges and court officials to outline a new policy toward homosexuals.

"The religious punishment for the despicable act of homosexuality is death for both parties," Moghtadai said. The judge presiding over the case, has five options for execution of homosexuals:

They are either to be "beheaded by a sword"; "stoned to death"; "thrown down from a height such as a mountain or tall building"; "die under the rubble of a wall demolished on their head"; or "burned alive."

Moghtadai added: "It is even permitted that in punishing such a despicable act, one of the first four punishments be implemented and then have their corpse burned."

On New Year's Day, three accused homosexual men were publicly beheaded in one of the city squares of Nahavand, and two accused lesbians were stoned to death in the city of Langrood, according to our Iranian sources.

This is a new practice that should come under the scrutiny of the United Nations Special Representative, Reynaldo Galindo Pohl, who has received an unusual invitation to visit Teheran to investigate human rights abuses.

Pohl has already spoken with former political prisoners of the Rafsanjani regime who have told him horror stories few could stomach. Homosexuals are not the only ones who are persecuted.

One woman told Pohl she knew of another woman who was imprisoned for wearing "inappropriate clothing." Another had the right clothes, but she was thrown in prison because she rode in a taxi, unescorted.

This witness told of numerous women who cracked under the torture and either went mad or committed suicide. She knew of one who died drinking cleaning fluid, another who hanged herself and a third who cut her wrists.

Another woman told Pohl she had witnessed the killing under torture of three different women, whose names she knew, as well as the torture of a 10-year-old girl in a wheelchair, whose name she did not know.

The Iranian government has not admitted to Pohl that tens of thousands of political prisoners, but opposition groups to the Rafsanjani regime claim the prisoners exist.

Iran has admitted to a number of executions — most of them by hanging — including 900 between January and May of last year. The Rafsanjani government claimed that most of the executions were for "drug trafficking." But our sources say that's a euphemism for political executions of supporters of the People's Mojahedin, the largest opposition group in Iran.

Iranian officials have also admitted to at least 26 executions by stoning last year. Fourteen were women "convicted of adultery or prostitution." In one case, 12 women and three men were stoned to death on a soccer field by spectators who had come for the soccer game.

Iran's law spells out the rules for stoning — the rocks must be small enough so they don't kill the victim instantly, but large enough so they can properly be called stones.

Rafsanjani's regime, in official communications, has taken a tough defensive posture with the United Nations.

"Under no circumstances will the Islamic Republic of Iran ever give up the practice of such divine laws and standards which constitute the fundamental tenets of the belief system among 1 billion Moslems in the world and which must duly be regarded as a credible legal system in the world."

PEACETIME ARMS: Iraq is bolstering its armed forces as if its war with Iran was about to resume. Last year, Iraq imported $5 billion in military hardware — as much as the country purchased during the heat of the war. The Iraqis are buying and making everything from missiles to bullets. A high priority has been assigned to developing poisonous gas, biological warheads and nuclear weapons.

MINI-EDITORIAL: The surest way to put drug traffickers out of business is to go after their cash, not their drugs. Greedy bankers around the world are laundering drug money with full knowledge of where the dirty dollars come from. They absolve themselves of responsibility by saying it's not the banker's business to think about where money comes from. These bankers pose as respectable citizens, but they are the drug lords' silent partners.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

My father truly was unforgettable character

When you write a book, they make you travel and do call-in radio shows. Publicity is my life.

It was December and we were in the second hour in the call-in show. A lady had complained about something I'd written about Oral Roberts, somebody else wanted to know if I planned to get married again, and then a man called and said he knew my late father.

Lewis Grizzard

"He taught me in high school in Atlanta," the man said. "He was an unforgettable character."

Indeed. A number of people have contacted me over the years and said they had come across Lewis Sr.

One such person called and said, "Your daddy owes me three hundred dollars. I let him borrow it in Kingsport, Tennessee, in 1962."

After informing the individual of my father's demise, I asked him, "How long did you know my father before you lent him the three hundred dollars?"

"About an hour," was the reply.

"My good man," I said, "you are one of many with the same experience."

My father was a lot of things, but more than anything else, he was a soldier. He served in World War II and in Korea. The Purple Hearts and the Bronze Star he earned hang on my office wall.

In Korea, his outfit was overrun by the Chinese communists. He survived by hiding under dead comrades and later by hiding for 16 days in a cave, as the enemy walked about him.

When he finally made it back to the American lines, his feet were severely frostbitten, he was suffering from malnutrition, and he would never again be the man who went off to war a second time in 1950.

He returned home to Fort Benning. I was 4. He drank heavily. He screamed out in the night. Eventually, he left my mother and went AWOL and spent the rest of his life roaming, drinking, and living off his considerable charm.

I have no idea how many different jobs my daddy held between the time he left the Army and his death in 1970, but somehow he always managed to be able to get a teaching position whenever he wanted one.

"Your daddy," the man on the radio told me, "would make us laugh with all his carryings-on, and he would tell us about what happened to him in the war.

"And the thing I remember most was how he used his experience to teach us never to give up no matter how bad things looked.

"He said there were times in Korea he felt it would just be easier on him to die than to live in the situation he was in.

"He told us how his feet were swollen and bleeding and how he was afraid to move in that cave because the enemy might find him. But he said he just made up his mind he wasn't going to die out there, and that's what pulled him through."

We'd been on the line a long time. I thanked the caller, but he had more.

"I was in Vietnam," he said. "I was wounded and was left behind in a hot landing zone.

"I didn't know if anybody was coming back for me or if the enemy would find me. But I hid myself and I held on and I got out of there.

"I wanted to give up, too, but I kept thinking about your father. If Captain Grizzard could make it, I told myself, so could I. I give him credit for my being alive today. He was a great man."

I thanked the caller one more time — for perhaps the best Christmas gift I've ever had.

CHARLEY REESE

Women aren't equipped to stand up to combat

I believe in equality, but if there is an argument against equality of the sexes, it is Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo. The lady congressperson rarely seems to run on all cylinders.

Her latest absurdity, prompted by misreporting from Panama, is legislation that would provide for a four-year test of women's ability to serve in combat, after which the results will be evaluated and a final decision made.

Charley Reese

There's just one problem with Ms. Schroeder's bill. It makes no provision to provide the war. Most people, though obviously not her, would understand that you cannot test women's ability to serve in combat without combat.

Perhaps she intends to introduce a companion bill, declaring war on Nicaragua or some other country she thinks suitable for a testing ground. She could write the Nicaraguan dictator another Dear Commandante letter. Ordinarily, she could write, we would not invade your country but we need to find out how well women can serve in combat and so we are going to make war on you. In the interest of objective test results, please, Dear Commandante, instruct your soldiers not to make any distinction between male and female invaders.

Women, of course, have no business in combat. It is not a matter of courage or intelligence. It is simple biology.

We have recorded history going back about 8,000 years and no where in it are there any instances where women successfully competed with men on the battlefield. Only the modern urban neurotic would discount 8,000 years of human experience as male prejudice.

Feminist ideologues really should file their complaint with God, not with men. The Deity did it, not us. If you believe Genesis, we were asleep while it happened.

However you wish to ascribe the origin of humankind, basic biology remains a fact. Women are put together differently, have less upper body strength, less bone density, a different set of hormones, some of which affect behavior and thinking, and about 30 percent more fat content in their muscles. Their arms are constructed differently, being connected at the elbow at a greater angle, thus making arm motions used in throwing grenades or spears or punches much more difficult than for the male.

One modern superstition, akin to chanting over a dead cat in a graveyard to get rid of warts, is that women will become as physically capable as men provided the girl babies are conditioned at an early age.

Whatever ideas you put into a girl's head may alter her personality or give her an identity crisis, but it will not alter her genes, endocrine glands, and the rest of her physiology. The world's champion woman power lifter, spending 15 years developing her body to its genetic maximum, is still no match for a male power lifter.

Another absurdity in this debate is the notion, quite evident, that many advocates of women in combat roles are assuming the Army will never fight or else they suppose that war is the dainty, delicate dance depicted on television and in movies. Don't forget that all heroines which feminist-pandering screenwriters have created are fiction, not real. If you check the complaints in police departments anywhere, I don't think you will find any instances where a woman has called and said, "Some jerk tried to rape me and I beat the heck out of him — come get him."

Granted, guns are equalizers but infantry combat in true wars is more akin to stevedore work with violence, horror, fatigue, and extreme stress thrown in for good measure. In modern times, Israel and the Soviet Union tried women in combat roles and abandoned it. Does Ms. Schroeder think this was mere male prejudice or could the idea find her brain that perhaps Soviets and Israelies learned something from the hard experience of war that she, who has never heard a gun fired in anger, missed. Ms. Schroeder is barely qualified for peace, much less war.

Thousands rally on eve of abortion ruling anniversary

Associated Press

Tens of thousands of demonstrators carried the battle for the hearts and minds of Americans on the abortion issue into the streets of cities across the nation on the eve of the 17th anniversary of the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade ruling.

An estimated 25,000 to 30,000 people joined dueling rallies in Phoenix Sunday, while supporters of legalized abortion sang and chanted in Albany, N.Y., and opponents held "baby showers" for poor women who choose to have children in Provo, Utah.

Demonstrations also were held in Boston, Raleigh, N.C., and Spokane, Wash.

Speakers called for renewed action by state legislatures following a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision modifying Roe vs. Wade, which legalized abortion in this country. The summer decision, Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services, allowed states to regulate abortion in some cases.

"Some political candidates have slid down the slippery slope of accommodation, changing their positions from pro-life to pro-abortion in order to gain votes," Mary Ellen Bork, the wife of rejected Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork, told a rally in Boston.

But, she told opponents of legalized abortion, "this is not a time to wallow in discouragement."

Other rallies were held Saturday. For abortion opponents, the weekend of activity was to culminate today with a march on the U.S. Capitol and other demonstrations around the country. President Bush was scheduled to address the Washington "March for Life."

Demonstrators Sunday were peaceful. In Phoenix, both sides displayed hundreds of American flags and invoked the spirit of the late civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. Shouts were exchanged, but police and rally marshals from both groups kept the peace.

In Southern California, 5,000 people linked arms to line the sides of Beach Boulevard along parts of a five-mile stretch through the cities of Anaheim and Westminster to dramatize their opposition to abortion.

Bagpipes played in Little Rock, Ark., where an estimated 10,000 to 17,000 demonstrators marched in opposition to abortion.

In Provo, Utah, a right-to-life group sponsored several "baby showers" to gather donated maternity clothes and baby gifts for needy women who spurned abortion.

Several thousand demonstrators opposed to abortion gathered for a day of speeches and song at the state Capitol in Oklahoma City.

In Albany, N.Y., abortion-rights activists, some of whom arrived on cross-country skis in a heavy snowstorm, chanted, sang and shouted a pledge to lobby their view in the statehouse. As they met in the legislative office building, about 60 people demonstrated against abortion.

"I pledge not to vote for or support with my money or my time any candidate for any office who does not fully support and work for women's equality and the right to safe, legal and accessible abortion," the crowd shouted out in response to Marilyn Fitterman, president of the New York State chapter of the National Organization for Women.

Quayle faces possible chilly reception

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle, facing a possible chilly reception in Latin America as he offers to explain the U.S. invasion of Panama, would not be the first presidential emissary to run into trouble in the region.

Such esteemed former Latin America travelers as Nelson Rockefeller, Richard Nixon and Rosalynn Carter were sent by presidents on goodwill trips and all encountered stormy receptions — in some cases violence.

Quayle leaves Saturday on a mission to try to quell the resentment left in Central and South America by President Bush's Dec. 20 military invasion of Panama.

None of the countries in the region has officially rebuffed Quayle, but some officials have let it be known his visit would be less than welcome so soon after the invasion. Many are upset that U.S. invasion troops remain in Panama.

Instead of receiving Quayle at home, some leaders plan to meet with him at three presidential inaugurations — on Saturday in Honduras, and in Chile and Brazil in mid-March.

Quayle himself acknowledged "there's a matter of timing" involving "diplomatic sensitivities" over when he should go.

Past efforts by Washington to be chummy with Latin America have encountered problems stemming from a variety of sources, including Latin resentment over the historical U.S. pattern of manipulating the region's internal political and economic affairs.

The most volatile trips in recent history were that of Vice President Richard Nixon in 1958 and a series of trips by New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller in 1969.

In contrast to those times, when most of the region was under dictatorship and military rule, Quayle will visit a region that has turned overwhelmingly to democratic government.

On an 18-day goodwill mission for President Eisenhower, Nixon was the target of violent, anti-U.S. demonstrations in Peru and Venezuela, and lesser outbursts and heckling by university students in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Colombia.

Rock-throwing mobs confronted Nixon in Lima and Caracas. Rioters shattered the windows of his limousine in Caracas and tried to drag him and his wife from the car before their motorcade managed to escape.

Eisenhower ordered U.S. military troops to stand by in Puerto Rico and the Guantanamo Bay base in Cuba in case Nixon needed protection.

In Lima, shouting demonstrators threw rocks and fruit at his speaker's platform. In Bogota, police broke up several anti-Nixon demonstrations.

When Nixon became president, he dispatched Rockefeller to help formulate a new policy toward Latin America.

Voicing sentiments much like those stated by Bush in the first year of his presidency, Nixon talked about the region's importance and U.S. hopes for cooperative ties with its hemispheric neighbors.

But Rockefeller's mission was marked at nearly every stop by violence — riots, bombings, gunfights or terrorism. Eight people were killed in incidents directly or indirectly connected to the visit.

The first trouble signs came in Guatemala where newspapers blasted his visit as useless, and in El Salvador where placards read "Rockefeller go home."

In Nicaragua, students burned a U.S. flag. Peru then canceled Rockefeller's trip to Lima, annoyed that the United States had suspended arms sales to Peru following seizures of U.S. fishing boats.

Following violence in Ecuador, Colombia and Honduras, word came that Venezuela and Chile wanted to be stricken from Rockefeller's itinerary.

In Montevideo, Uruguay, rampaging students, protesting both Rockefeller's visit and their government's economic austerity program, smashed car windows and threw firebombs.

After returning home, Rockefeller submitted to Nixon 83 recommendations on how to improve hemispheric cooperation and help solve the region's social, political and economic problems.

All but a few were ignored.

When Rosalynn Carter toured seven nations as her husband's emissary on a 13-day trip in 1977, the dissension was mostly less overt.

Tanker runs aground near Alaska

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Coast Guard officials have decided to let nature clean up the estimated 57,600 gallons of gasoline that gushed into Alaska's island-studded Inside Passage from a grounded tanker.

The Canadian-owned tanker Frank H. Brown struck Burnt Island Reef on Saturday night. The captain, who was not identified, blamed the grounding on "a judgment error," Coast Guard spokesman Ed Moreth said.

The agency said it took blood and urine samples from crew members to test for drug or alcohol use.

The 400-foot ship was refloated at high tide Sunday and continued under its own power about 15 miles up a narrow channel to Scow Bay, just south of Petersburg. There, divers found a 2-foot hole in one of its tanks.

Coast Guard and state environmental officials said amage to fish and wildlife appeared to be minimal. The decision not to clean up the spill was made Sunday as the gasoline quickly broke up into several thin sheens, the largest a mile long.

"It's just not recoverable," Moreth said. "The stuff seems to be evaporating quicker than anyone could pick it up, and it's only in small patches scattered around."

The spill was a fraction of the size of the Exxon Valdez disaster, in which nearly 11 million gallons of heavy crude oil spilled into Prince William Sound last March in the nation's worst oil spill. The Valdez captain, Joseph Hazelwood, goes on trial next week.

The site of Saturday's spill is about 135 miles south of Juneau in a channel called Wrangell Narrows.

fabric (noun) — Today we probably most often use the word "fabric" to mean soft materials such as cloth to make a dress or shirt. Surprisingly the "official" dictionary of the Spelling Bees, Webster's Third New International, first defines fabric as a product of building, such as a house or ship, or as an underlying structure, such as the fabric of society. "Fabric" derived from the Middle French word "fabrique," which in turn is based on earlier Latin words including "fabrica," meaning "artisan's workshop, skillfully wrought object, or building."

Top AIDS researcher questions AZT experiment in children

NEW YORK (AP) — A leading government AIDS researcher has questioned an experiment in which more than 300 young victims are not getting the drug AZT, despite the government's conclusion that it is safe and effective in children.

"I questioned that many, many months ago," Dr. Anthony Fauci said in an interview Sunday. Half of the children are getting an experimental drug called intravenous immunoglobulin, or IVIG, and half are getting only a placebo, lacking any beneficial ingredients.

Fauci also has set up a trial to test intravenous immunoglobulin, but in his trial the children receiving IVIG and those receiving a placebo also are receiving the anti-AIDS drug AZT.

"I made sure in our own institute that a trial was done which included an AZT arm," said Fauci, who was in New York to address the New York-Italy Medical Symposium.

"I don't feel comfortable with a placebo-controlled trial at this stage," Fauci said. In October, Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan acted to make AZT widely available to children, saying there was enough preliminary evidence the drug was effective and safe.

Fauci is the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases in Bethesda, Md., which operates the national AIDS drug-testing program.

The director of the experiment he questioned, Dr. Anne Willoughby of the Bethesda-based National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, has emphasized that children in her trial were not being denied AZT. In fact, however, few are receiving it.

Of the 347 children in the trial, 113 are seriously ill, and 26 of them are getting AZT. Five of the remaining patients also are getting AZT. The children are being treated at more than two dozen centers across the country, Willoughby said.

"There is a legitimate difference of opinion about the status of this study," Willoughby said in a telephone interview. She said she would like to see more data on the trials of AZT in children before she was convinced of its effectiveness.

Several researchers interviewed by The Associated Press were critical of W lloughby's study, agreeing with Fauci that children should be given AZT. The most vocal of them was Dr. Philip Pizzo, chief of the pediatrics branch at the National Cancer Institute.

Willoughby said he has more experience than anyone else on the use of AZT in children.

"The issue of immunoglobulin alone might have been timely three or four years ago," Pizzo has said. "But in 1989, not having AZT ... means that the potential benefit of the drug, particularly to children's nervous systems, is being lost."

Pizzo's studies have shown that AZT can stop or even reverse damage to the brain and central nervous system in children. As a result, some children who had lost the ability to speak or walk have recovered those abilities, Pizzo has reported.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is caused by a virus that damages the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to infections and cancer.

NATION IN BRIEF

Controversy sparks racial discussions

CONWAY, S.C. (AP) — Five months after a high school football coach replaced a black quarterback with a less-experienced white player, a chain of recriminations has embittered race relations in this small town.

Racial problems generally had stayed hidden in this bucolic town of 14,000 residents. But the largely black protesters say the boycott of the team, picketing of the school and weekly marches that began in August are partly the result of long-standing grievances.

"Conway very definitely has a problem with racism. America has a problem with racism," said the Rev. H.H. Singleton, a former science teacher who was fired by the all-white school board after becoming a spokesman for boycotting black players. Conway's population is 41 percent black.

"While these kinds of incidents have been happening all along, the white community thinks it's nothing to get excited about," said Dr. William Gibson, a Greenville dentist and chairman of the NAACP national board of directors. "Yes, it angers them because they're not used to it. They blame the person who is the victim every time."

Said Mayor Ike Long, who is white: "I don't think that Conway had a racial problem as such until this thing came up. I don't know that we have so much of a racial problem now."

The demonstrations began after Conway High's white football coach, Chuck Jordan, switched quarterback Carlos Hunt, who is black, to defensive back. Jordan replaced Hunt with Mickey Leland Jr., a less-experienced player and the son of an assistant coach.

Jordan later said he made the change because Hunt refused to follow his instructions on the field.

Plea raises questions

MIAMI (AP) — The U.S. government's acceptance of a plea bargain by subsidiaries of the world's seventh-largest private bank for laundering millions in drug money is being called a joke by some critics.

But other observers say the deal with the Bank of Commerce and Credit International may be justified if it helps win a conviction against deposed Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega.

"It seems like a light hit, but it depends on what the government is going to get out of them. It could be they are sitting on a wealth of information," said Robert Powis, a former U.S. treasury official.

The divisions of the Luxembourg-based bank pleaded guilty Tuesday to about 30 charges, including tax fraud, money laundering and failing to report currency transactions of more than $10,000.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said he was seeking an explanation about the arrangement from the Justice Department and may initiate a congressional investigation.

"I don't believe that the entire criminal justice system in America, nor all of our efforts to eliminate drugs in America, revolves just around Noriega," Metzenbaum said.

Comeback considered

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — The dome of his former haunt, the U.S. Capitol, looms seven miles up the Potomac River as Lowell Weicker, his 6-foot-5-inch frame a little thinner than when he patrolled the Senate, ponders returning to politics.

Weicker, the Nixon antagonist and maverick Republican from Connecticut, has dropped off the radar screen of politics in the year since his upset loss to Democrat Joseph Lieberman.

He has been quietly building a public outreach group, Research! America, an association of universities, hospitals and philanthropies devoted to promoting biomedical research, where his job is "to sell the priority of biomedical research to the American people in the same way you sell a hamburger or a can of beer."

But the 58-year-old millionaire says he misses the political battlefield and is considering a run for governor of Connecticut.

Insurance unaffordable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five out of six older Americans can't afford a basic nursing home insurance policy, a private advocacy group reports today in a study it says bolsters the case for a government long-term care program.

The Families USA Foundation issued a report concluding that an average nursing home policy is out of reach financially for 84 percent of Americans aged 65-79. Most companies will not sell policies to people 80 and older, it said.

"Private insurance that claims to protect older Americans from the high cost of nursing homes is itself so expensive that only the very richest elderly can afford the premiums," said Ronald Pollack, executive director of the foundation.

With the costs of nursing home care averaging about $2,000 a month, older Americans and their families have been voicing increasing concern about the need for protection against such staggering costs.

Private long-term care insurance was virtually non-existent before 1980 but the market has grown rapidly in recent years, with more than 100 companies now offering policies and more than 1.3 million policies sold by mid-1989.

Families USA studied the average cost of basic policies issued by nine leading insurance companies and found that annual premiums averaged $1,255 when purchased at age 65. At age 79, premiums averaged $3,860.

Policies were considered unaffordable when annual premiums pushed health care costs to more than 10 percent of a person's yearly income and annuitized assets.

Bush, Hooks to meet

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is conferring for the second time this month with the head of the NAACP and again lending support to anti-abortion activists' "March for Life."

The Rev. Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP, also visited the White House on Jan. 9 to discuss the wave of bombings and threats against civil rights targets in the South.

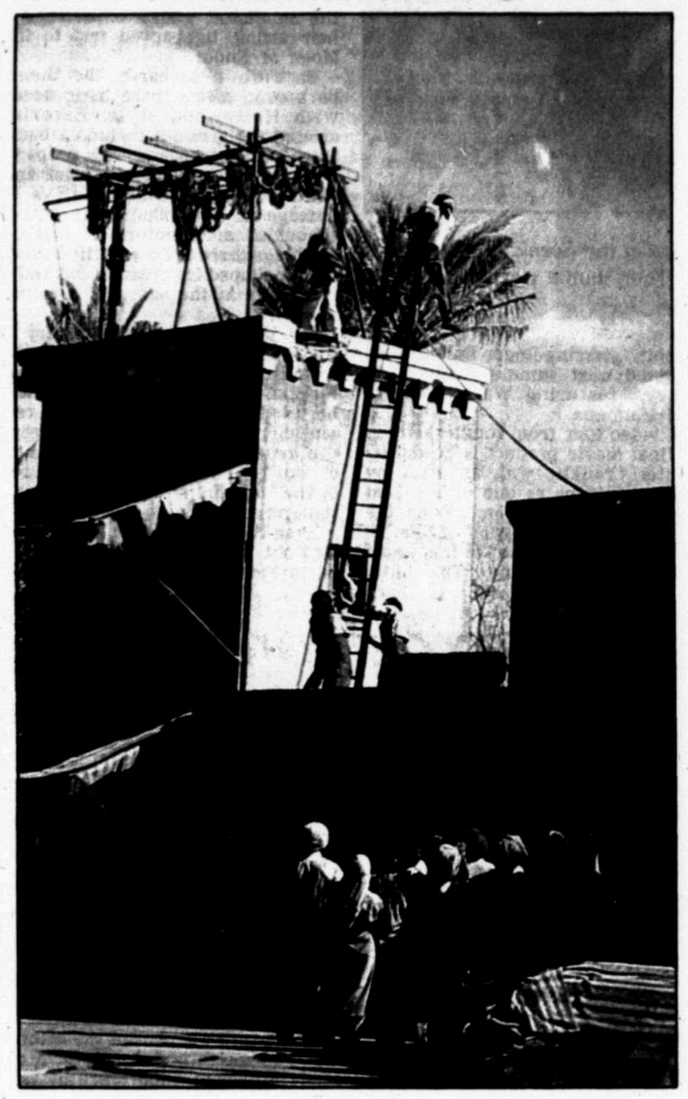

Bush vowed then to "bring to justice the bigots" responsible for the mail bombs that killed a federal judge in Birmingham, Ala., and a civil rights lawyer in Savannah, Ga., as well as others mailed to the federal courthouse in Atlanta and the NAACP office in Jacksonville, Fla.

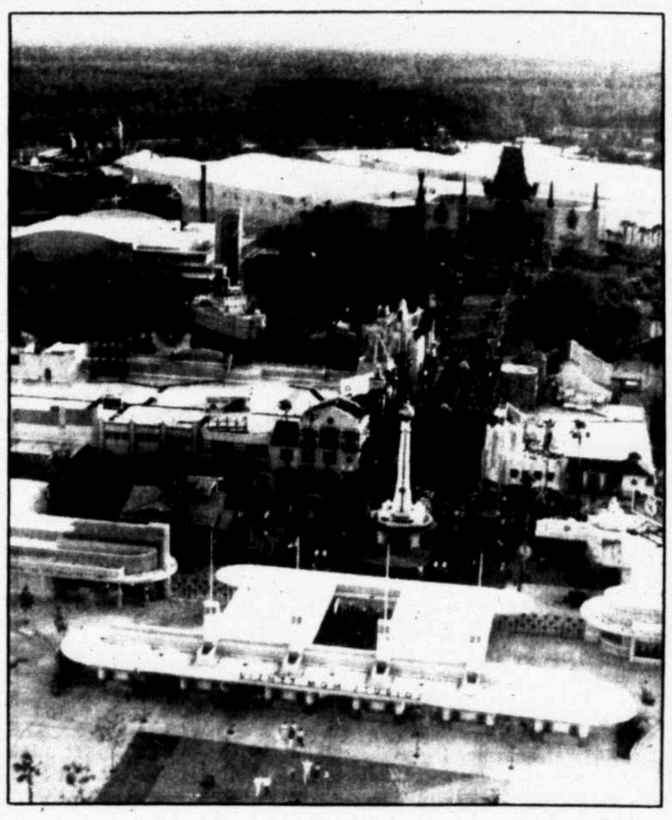

Today's meeting was scheduled for a general discussion of civil rights issues with Hooks, longtime leader of the nation's largest civil rights group.

WALT DISNEY WORLD, Fla. — When it comes to entertaining kids of all ages, probably nobody does it as well as Disney.

Throw in a complete movie studio with working sound stages and you have the newest link in Walt Disney's coast-to-coast legacy of amusement.

The Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park 25 miles southwest of Orlando in central Florida is a dreamland for movie and television buffs.

Since opening on May 1 last year, the park has transported hundreds of thousands of vacationers back to the Golden Age of Hollywood on their way to a behind-the-scenes peek at the cinematic magic of today and tomorrow.

Behind the Art Deco front gates of the park lies Hollywood Boulevard, circa 1935. Lined with period storefronts, authentic automobiles and other artifacts, the famed highway of broken dreams leads visitors from a spire copied from Sunset Boulevard labeled the "Crossroads of the Universe," to a circle drive in front of a convincing recreation of Sid Grauman's famous Chinese Theater.

Inside, visitors waiting to experience The Great Movie Ride, which Disney calls "its most elaborate ride-through attraction ever," can view movie memorabilia ranging from one of the pairs of ruby slippers worn by Judy Garland in "The Wizard of Oz," to the piano from Rick's Cafe American in "Casablanca," and models used in designing "Aliens," with Sigourney Weaver.

Inside the theater's recreated auditorium — the last stop before getting on the ride — guests are treated to coming attraction trailers for many of the all-time great movies. Once inside, patrons are seated in giant cars which travel right through the sets of many of the same silver screen classics.

Populated by nearly 60 of Disney's amazing Audio-Animatronic figures and some live characters, sets from "Mary Poppins," "Raiders of the Lost Ark," and "Aliens" are among the stops during the ride. A robotic Humphrey Bogart is saying farewell to a lifelike Ingrid Bergman in front of the actual plane used in the filming of 1943's Best Picture, Casablanca.

Other vignettes feature John Wayne, James Cagney, Judy Garland and Gene Kelly in famous movie roles. The ride concludes in a theater with a montage of images of great moments on celluloid with more than 60 years of movie greats from Charlie Chaplin to Tom Cruise.

Next door in an outdoor amphitheater, hourly shows excite crowds of up to 2,000 at a time by recreating great movie stunts. Currently on display is the Indiana Jones and Temple of Doom.

The stars of the show are characters who portray stunt doubles for Harrison Ford and Karen Allen. Along with a handful of audience volunteers, who play townsfolk, and other stunt actors, the group stages several of the dramatic fights, chases and fires, with time built in to give glimpses of how the stunts are pulled off.

Across the way at the Monster Sound Show, sponsored by Sony, visitors waiting outside the theater are entertained on videotape by late night talk show host David Letterman, who presents a guest shot by Disney sound effects wizard Jimmy MacDonald.

Inside the show, guests watch a two-and-a-half minute comic horror movie starring Chevy Chase and Martin Short. The first showing features the correct sound effects. The second time through, a group of four audience volunteers operate the myriad of foley devices that studio hands use to make a convincing soundtrack, while an engineer records their efforts.

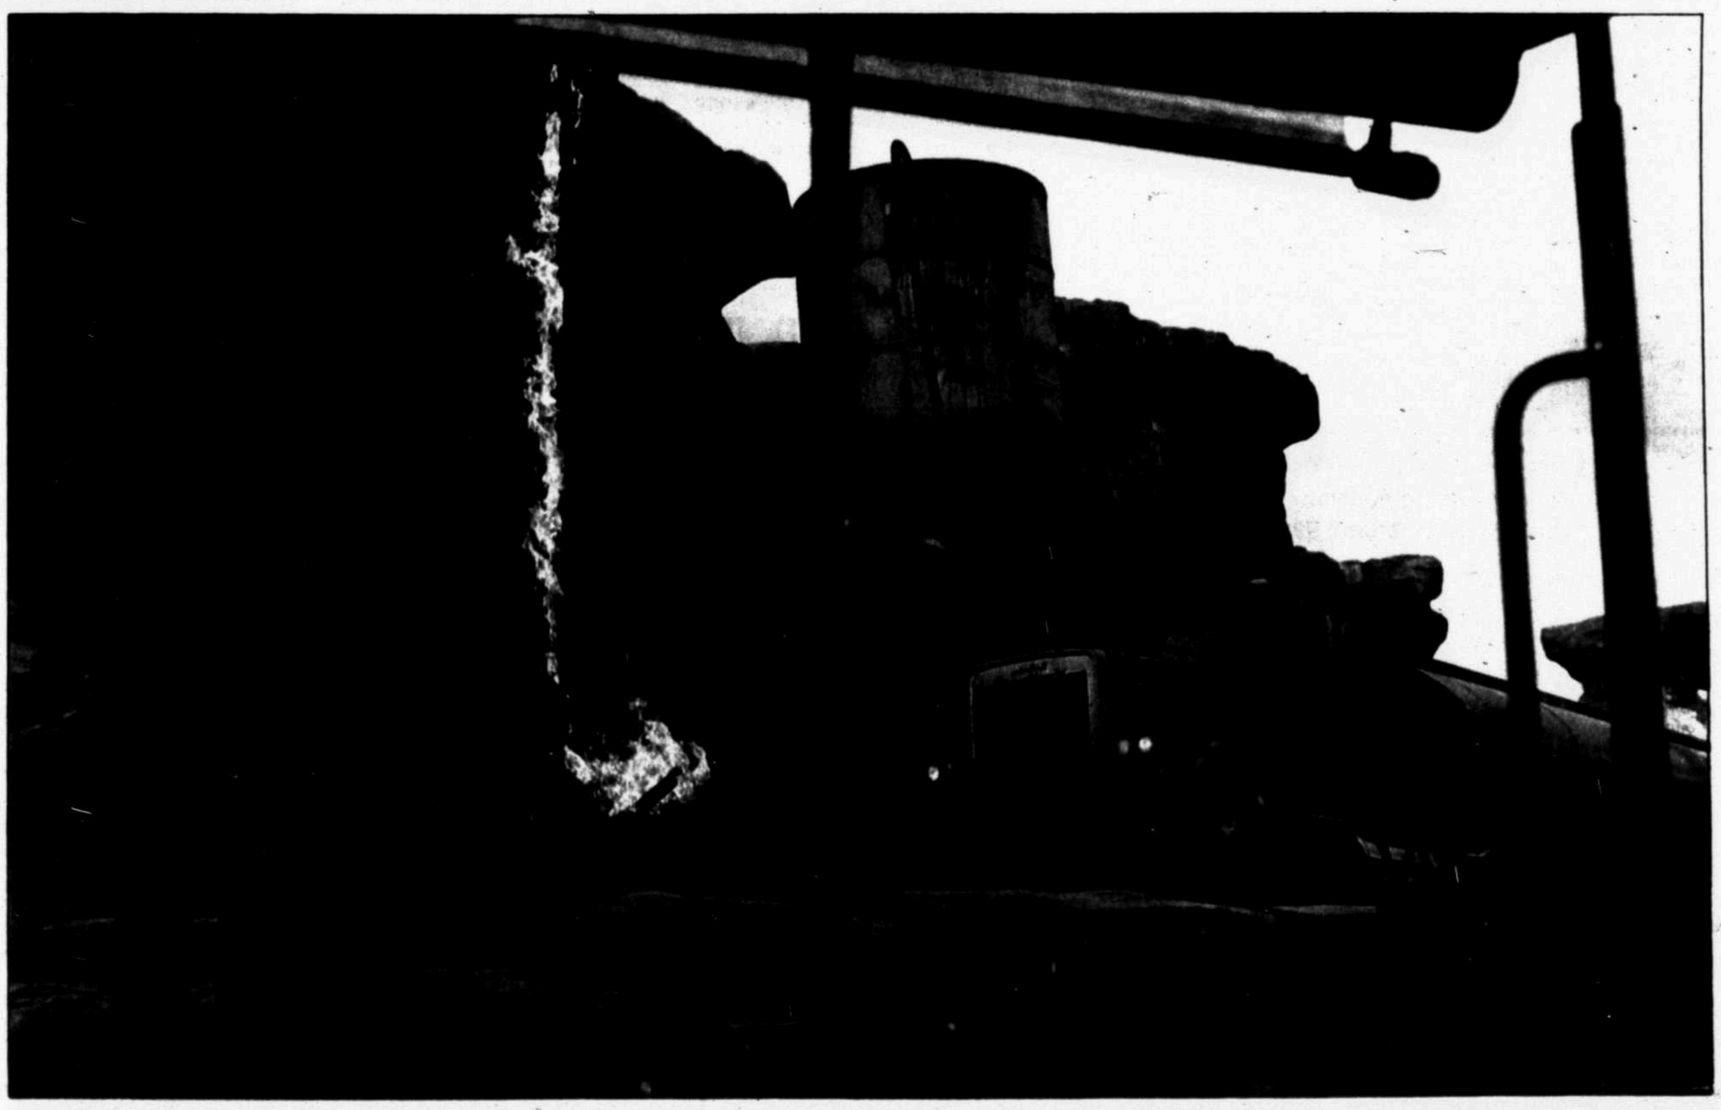

The third viewing presents the hilarious results, including a surprise ending.

These attractions and others — including the SuperStar Television Theater and live performance amphitheater where a "Star of the Day" performs are all located in the open access portion of the theme park. But that's only half the story at Disney-MGM.

The backstage tour portion of the park is the real eye-opener.

Please see TOUR, Page 2B

Even the signature water tower from the original MGM backlot in Los Angeles gets a Disney touch in Florida, above. The tram ride through Catastrophe Canyon includes Hollywood's version of an oilwell fire and explosion.

DEATHS

Floyd J. Maxwell

Funeral services for Floyd J. Maxwell of Midland are set for 11 a.m. Tuesday. Officiating the services at Westside Church of Christ will be the Rev. Eli Borden of Greenwood Church of Christ and Don Mitchell, associate pastor of Westside.

Maxwell

Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Maxwell died Saturday at a local hospital.

Born Nov. 16, 1908, in Overton, he was raised and attended schools in East Texas. He moved to Midland in 1939. He married Viola Flemming on May 9, 1942, in Midland. Maxwell was a Midland police officer for several years. He later worked for Kent Oil Co. He worked with them until his 1974 retirement.

After retirement, he worked for several years with the Midland County Library. He was a charter member of the Westside Church of Christ and a member of the Downtown Lions Club.

Survivors include his wife; one son, Phillip Maxwell of Midland; sisters, Beatrice Guytine of Henderson and Isabelle Cook of Jacksonville; and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the Allison Cancer Center, 2200 W. Illinois, Midland.

Four injured in drive-by shootings

HOUSTON (AP) — Four people, including a 4-year-old girl, suffered minor injuries when two men in a van opened fire as they drove by a convenience store.

The child and her mother were walking in front of the store when two armed men slid open the door of a green van and began firing, police said. Two teen-age boys were shot as they left the store.

Police continued to look for suspects today and were investigating whether the Sunday night drive-by shootings were gang-related.

"We have a lot of people who saw what happened, but nobody who wants to talk to us about it," said police officer M. O'Connell.

The 32-woman was shot in ankle, and the child was hit in the left leg. Both were in good condition at Memorial Northwest Hospital.

The other two victims, ages 18 and 19, were in stable condition at Ben Taub Hospital. The four victims' names have not yet been released.

TOUR

The first half of the two-hour tour is a tram ride through the Disney backlot, including the wardrobe and prop departments and the exterior sets.

Along the lot's residential street lie house facades used in the Golden Girls television show, among other productions. Around the corner is a two-sided church — one side a bucolic country clapboard, the other a traditional, brick urban building.

But the highlight of the tram ride is the trip through Catastrophe Canyon, a pure Hollywood concept of a Southwestern oil well. One earthquake, a blowout fire and a flash flood later, riders find themselves catching their breath after three believable, thrilling disasters.

The second half of the backstage adventure is a walking tour of Disney's four Florida soundstages, with some sidetrips tossed in for good measure.

Among those is a journey to the water tank where ocean battles and high seas storms are convincingly staged.

Also on the way is the special effects lab where a couple of young tourists find themselves in the middle of a scene from "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids."

On the soundstages, visitors may catch a glimpse of a working television or movie crew. This week the syndicated Wheel of Fortune is taping shows in Florida. Next door, the new Mickey Mouse Club tapes its daily shows. Short taped visits with such cinematic luminaries as George Lucas, Bette Midler, Mel Gibson and Pee-Wee Herman offer insights into post-production.

Carpenters create scenery and props in the Scenic Shop as park visitors aboard the Backstage Studio Tour shuttle pass through the building.

The tour concludes with a coming attraction preview introduced by Disney's most famous mouse and company chairman Michael Eisner.

Next door are the animation laboratories where Mickey and his friends are brought to life. The tour through the labs where armies of Disney artists are currently working on the short subject "Roller Coaster Rabbit," starring Roger Rabbit to be released next summer with "Dick Tracy," featuring Warren Beatty and Madonna.

A video tour from rough sketches to final movie product is hosted by Walter Cronkite with an assist by Robin Williams as one of the Lost Boys from "Peter Pan." From the earliest classic animation of "Fantasia" and "Snow White" to this year's Golden Globe-winning "The Little Mermaid," the secrets of animation come to life.

Open less than a year, Disney-MGM is already adding to its roster of top- flight attractions. And with Star Tours, the emphasis is on flight.

A new generation thrill ride was launched at the park Jan. 13. Using the technology of a flight simulator used for training military and airline pilots, Disney and Star Wars creator George Lucas have created a ride that doesn't rely on tracks, wheels or rocket engines for its propulsion.

Synchronizing futuristic film with the virtually limitless gyrations of the simulator, guests experience a hair-raising, light-speed trip to the Moon of Endor.

Back down to earth, the theme park even meets more basic needs with Hollywood style. Eateries around the grounds include a backstage canteen stocked with props to a '50s diner complete with black and white reruns on the tableside TVs. In homage to the "California crazy" school of architecture of bizarre buildings there are also a life-size dinosaur-shaped ice cream stand and a snack bar in the shape of a tramp steamer.

But the most ambitious eatery is the Brown Derby restaurant copied from Hollywood and Vine to central Florida. The chic atmosphere of Herbert Somborn's original 224-seat restaurant has been duplicated from the teak and mahogany accents, crystal chandeliers, ink caricatures of the stars lining the walls and the signature brass derby hat lamps.

Even the menu, including the classic Cobb salad, has been transplanted to Florida.

Defense, SSC priorities of Texas senators

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — While their national agendas reflect far different goals, the top state priorities in 1990 for Texas' two U.S. senators are much the same — defense, energy, drugs and the super collider.

When Congress reconvenes Tuesday for the year, Sens. Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm say they'll be pushing for more money for the super collider, fighting for tax incentives for the oil and gas industry, and looking for ways to cushion the state's military establishment from a slowdown in defense spending.

Both also support more spending to fight illegal drugs along the Texas-Mexico border and to create more federal judgeships in the region. They'll be looking, too, for ways to protect Texas hospitals from potentially devastating reductions in Medicare spending and to curb illegal immigration along the border.

Much of their job in the year ahead will be protecting the state's share of the federal spending pie — including such high-dollar projects as Sematech, a Pentagon-industry semiconductor research consortium in Austin, the $5.9 billion super collider for Ellis County, and the space station, which is being built in part in Houston.

Both expect challenges to those projects, especially if the super collider's pricetag rises to $7 billion, which is what scientists say it would now take to build the particle accelerator as large and as powerful as originally envisioned.

> "The whole defense effort across the board will be re-evaluated with what's happened as far as the Russian challenge. Obviously, some cuts have to be made and should be made and Texas projects will have the same kind of scrutiny."
>
> — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen

President Bush is expected to ask Congress this week for about $395 million for the collider, up from the $225 million appropriated last year to begin construction at the Waxahachie site.

The Energy Department will also announce, possibly this week, whether it agrees with a panel of leading physicists that the collider should be built as planned, despite the increase in cost.

The higher pricetag, however, could give opponents the ammunition they've been looking for to kill the project. Some say the collider will rob worthy scientific projects of funding as more money is spent each year to build the world's biggest scientific instrument.

"It's going to be tough his year," Bentsen, a Democrat, said of the fight over collider spending. "You can bet it's going to be tough."

Bentsen is also wary of challenges from the administration and Congress to Sematech and the space station, as well as a host of Pentagon projects with important links to Texas — the V-22 Osprey aircraft, the B-2 stealth bomber and the rail-based MX missile.

"The whole defense effort across the board will be re-evaluated with what's happened as far as the Russian challenge," Bentsen said. "Obviously, some cuts have to be made and should be made and Texas projects will have the same kind of scrutiny."

Texas fares better than all but California and Virginia when it comes to military procurement, according to a Census Bureau study of 1988 federal spending.

Overall, Texas received $49.5 billion in federal money — for programs ranging from farm subsidies to welfare payments — in 1988. Of that, $9 billion was for military contracts, the Census Bureau said.

Gramm, a Republican, recently met with the secretaries of the armed services to discuss Texas' role in the future of the nation's defense as it shifts priorities in response to the changes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

"As we beat swords into plowshares, some of those swords are swords in Texas," Gramm said.

But by planning now years ahead, Gramm said he believes Texas can continue to "preserve our leadership position in providing for the nation's national security.

"If we do a good job, we will be affected by some defense cuts, but we'll be less affected than most states that have a similar degree of involvement," Gramm said.

That's because the state's defense contractors, he said, are involved in the high-tech weapons of the future, while its posts and bases have already grown in importance by taking on the missions of several others outside the state that will be closed under a national military realignment.

Nationally, Gramm will be looking for ways to turn the "peace dividend" into lower taxes while Bentsen will be pushing hard for tax deductions on individual retirement accounts, which he believes would boost savings and result in lower interest rates.

Gramm said the country could be saving $40 billion to $50 billion by the mid-1990s in lower military spending.

"What I will be calling for in the decade of the 1990s is a perestroika tax cut — to give this money back to the taxpayer and to empower American families to spend their own money on feeding, clothing, housing, educating and raising their children.

Outcry over immigration ads prompts radios to cancel spots

HOUSTON (AP) — Six radio stations selected to preview anti-immigration ads for a national conservative group have cancelled the spots after an uproar from minority groups who said the ads were discriminatory.

"It's a blow for democratic ideals in Houston," said Dan Stein, executive director of the Washington-based Federation for American Immigration Reform. "We're going to work to get the ads back on."

The series of three radio commercials that began airing Wednesday linked immigrants to such problems as homelessness, drug smuggling and traffic congestion.

Outraged minority groups, including the League of United Latin American Citizens and Catholic, Jewish and Chinese groups, said the ads were racially divisive. They threatened to boycott the stations and their sponsors.

"In human history, it is not unusual for some to look for a scapegoat when problems cannot be adequately solved," said the Most Rev. Enrique San Pedro, auxiliary bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Galveston-Houston. "Homelessness, drugs and other social ills are due to our failure to confront their root causes, which is not immigration."

In the ads, actors complain about the millions of immigrants pouring into the country each year, and warn that problems like traffic jams, homelessness and drug smuggling will get worse if the tide of immigrants isn't stemmed.

All six stations stopped airing the commercials by Friday. FAIR had planned to broadcast the ads until Jan. 31 and then survey listeners before offering the spots to other markets.

DEAR ABBY

Needlepointer wants happy home for picture

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago, I made a beautiful needlepoint picture for my niece's Christmas gift. It took a long time to make, and I knew she'd love it. As I was getting ready to mail it, my husband said it would make a lovely housewarming gift for his sister, who had just bought a condo.

I doubted that she would appreciate it because the picture was an old-fashioned country scene, and my sister-in-law furnished her condo in "modern." Nevertheless, I gave the picture to my sister-in-law and bought a last-minute Christmas gift for my niece.

Well, my sister-in-law must have it stuck away in some storeroom because she never hung it anywhere in her home.

I am very hurt. Do I dare ask her for it back? Or should I make another picture for my niece and forget about the one I gave my sister-in-law? — NOT EXACTLY IN STITCHES

DEAR NOT EXACTLY: Take a leap of faith and good-humoredly tell your sister-in-law that since she isn't using the picture you gave her, you'd like to exchange it for something more contemporary, in keeping with her condo. Also, tell her that the "country scene" would be an ideal gift for your niece's home.

It's possible that your sister-in-law has been feeling a little guilty for not hanging your picture, and she may appreciate getting rid of it — unless, of course, she already has.

DEAR ABBY: I am a kindergarten teacher. Recently I began my annual task of teaching my pupils to memorize their addresses, telephone numbers and the 911 emergency number. When every child could recite them easily, we felt very proud, and celebrated.

However, one sharp little guy brought us all back to reality with his wry announcement: "This would work a whole lot better if I was sure what a 'nine' looked like."

Parents and teachers, wouldn't it be awful if a child couldn't place a 911 call because he wasn't sure what a nine looked like?

Thanks for letting me reach out and touch someone. — JANE FUNK, POMPANO BEACH, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for your answer to "Ashamed" — the hot-tempered mother of five who lost her temper and then regretted it. You said: "There is not a mother alive who has not done or said something in anger; words can cut as sharply as a knife."

I am a pediatrician, and also a mother of three children. I appreciate your pointing out the universality of anger, and especially stating that words can hurt as much as physical abuse. Whenever I hear a mother say to her child, "You are bad!" no matter how busy I am, I always take the time to explain, "Your child trusts you and believes you — so never tell him that he is bad, or clumsy, or anything that will make him feel inferior. Tell him that he is good, but he sometimes may do something bad."

May I add a suggestion to your list of things a parent may do as an alternative to hitting a child? Say a little prayer. If you believe as I do that every child is a child of God, you will know that God cares about you and will help you parent your child. He knows your stresses and can help you handle your feelings of anger so that they do not erupt in violent words or acts. — KATHRYN H. LEWIS, M.D., TYRONE, PA.

DEAR DR. LEWIS: Thank you for a valuable addition. Now, why in heaven's name didn't I think of that?

The facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Local talent gets 'big break' in TV

Lubbock program promotes area musicians

LUBBOCK (AP) — Lubbock and the surrounding plains have, for decades, been a breeding ground for songwriters and musicians. Paying tribute to those musicians and, in the process, spreading the word has proved to be a difficult task.

Not that well-meaning fans haven't tried. Interviews with a variety of local singers and songwriters were quietly videotaped under the auspices of Dennis Harp at Texas Tech University and the West Texas Music Association, but that project appears to have stalled. There also is, of course, an annual induction ceremony at the West Texas Walk of Fame near the statue of Buddy Holly. And a limited number of local bands even have been granted air time on local radio stations.

Unfortunately, home grown talent too often has been forced to leave home to be discovered. Musicians from Lubbock often find themselves revered in Europe, especially England where Lubbock is known as the home of Buddy Holly — and indeed to many as the home of rock'n'roll. In Austin, one nightclub continues to hold a "Lubbock Or Leave It" night every week, attracting packed houses to hear a plethora of musicians with Lubbock ties. What makes this all the more ironic is that the same musicians had trouble attracting audiences to clubs in Lubbock.

ONE OF the most impressive, and certainly far-reaching, efforts ever made to pay homage to West Texas musical talent will debut in February on KLBK television.

The station's new locally produced program, "West Texas," will be dedicated solely to promoting the music and musicians of Lubbock and the surrounding area.

The weekly program, inspired in part by the syndication success of "Austin City Limits," was created by four fans of West Texas music: music promoter Mike Burk; Jimmy Blakley, creative director at KLBK; Don Caldwell, owner of Caldwell Stations; and David Tarpley, co-owner of Tarpley Music.

Burk is considered the project's brainchild.

"I guess it all started back at the (Panhandle South Plains) Fair in September," he said in a recent interview at Caldwell Studios. "It hit me that a live music show is something that could really go over in this area. The idea at first was to film bands at different nightclubs, different places, every week, but we realized later that wouldn't work.

> "I would hope that the people in this area would support this show. Some people just don't realize how much musical talent is working in this town right under their noses."
>
> — Don Caldwell

"But we were really lucky to come up with Tommy's Place, which, by the way, is owned Joe Ely's brother-in-law (Tommy Thompson). This place is absolutely perfect for live music. It's got three separate levels where you can sit and still see the stage, and that's where we plan to film all of shows. Actually, we're hoping to get enough material from every concert to come up with four to six programs; that way we can create a quick backlog if we need them."

CALDWELL INTERJECTED. "There are no guarantees, of course. We may only get one half-hour show from a 2½-hour concert. But we'll be trying to get as much high-quality footage as possible every time."

Tarpley said his company will provide mixing consoles, monitors, a public address system and technical advice. Caldwell will be situated in a booth designed to mix audio and video. "We'll be using multi-track recording and feed it into the video," he said, "and that way we can go back to the studio and re-mix the audio."

Blakley, who plans to operate a four-camera format with one camera locked down and three more mobile, will set up what he calls "a live unit, a mobile television station. Basically, what this program will be is live television."

"West Texas" will be aired first on KLBK, but Blakley added, "Obviously, we're looking to syndicate it in Europe first of all, because we feel it will be easier to market Lubbock music overseas than in the United States."

He said that he is certain that the show also will be aired on television stations KLBK's parent corporation owns in Springfield, Mo., Monroe, La., Dothan, Ala., and Evansville, Ind.

The first three programs were filmed in early January. Once the show starts airing on Sundays in February, live concerts will be filmed on the first two Tuesdays of every month at Tommy's Place. Two bands will be filmed at every concert.

Only slight limitations have been placed on musical genres that will be covered, as Blakley said, "I really doubt that we'll film any heavy metal bands. We're trying to sell the program, too, so we'll try to shy away from songs with objectionable lyrics."

Burk added, "A lot of people think of West Texas and immediately assume that all there is out here is country music. We'll feature country bands at times, but what people outside the music industry apparently fail to realize is that Lubbock is the home of rock'n'roll. And we plan to start the show with some of the best rock'n'roll bands from the area, just to make sure people realize that."

Blakley smiled. "Really, the only restriction is that the bands play all original material. They can't perform any copy tunes."

The show's producers also hope to film an occasional "Songwriters' Roundtable format, with a group of four or five songwriters seated on the stage and taking turns playing original acoustic music. No doubt there will be times when the occasional touring recording act may also perform for the cameras.

Like "Austin City Limits," the proposed "West Texas," program always will be filmed in front of a live audience. No admission charge will be in effect for any of the concerts, and admittance will be on a first-come, first-served basis.

ASKED ABOUT financing, Blakley said, "The financing for all of this comes from the sweat of our brows. All of us are contributing time and personnel and equipment. If there's money to be made, it will be later, through syndication.

"But this is a volunteer effort. Even the camera operators will be volunteers."

"And that's the way I like it," said Burk. "Because you can't buy what we want to buy. The people working on this don't see it as a job. The people working on this program are all die-hard fans of West Texas music."

Caldwell explained, "Let's face it: The Maines Brothers already have proven to people that music production can be done in Lubbock. This show is an effort to keep Lubbock talent active in Lubbock. Yes, we want to give the bands exposure. But just as important, we also want to give the people in the community a chance to know what's going on here.

"I would hope that the people in this area would support this show. Some people just don't realize how much musical talent is working in this town right under their noses."

Pet massage helps healing, reduces stress

By CECILIA GOODNOW
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Here's what happened when one of Selma Sholes' best friends went in for a massage:

"Her eyes were slightly closed. Her nose went down. Pretty soon her front legs were crumpled and she was lying on the floor, this expression of ecstasy on her face."

Sholes' friend was a wire-haired dachshund, one of many canine clients referred to Martha Jordan, a massage therapist in Snohomish, Wash.

A wildlife biologist, Jordan applies her 1,000 hours of massage training to a clientele consisting largely of dogs and trumpeter swans. She also sees a small number of human clients such as Sholes, a veterinarian at Ballard Animal Hospital.

Jordan uses massage to reduce stress and promote healing in sick and injured dogs, to establish a bond between pet owners and their pooches, and to improve the gait of show animals.

"I've had her do some of my own dogs because I show them and want them at their best," Sholes said.

Jordan works out of her home, charging $20 an hour for her canine clients and $30 for humans. She has worked with dogs for more than 15 years, training them in obedience, herding and the show ring. She was a professional groomer for two years, specializing in dogs with behavior problems.

Kathryn Seitz, a Seattle veterinarian, refers some of her clients' injured animals to Jordan for therapeutic massage.

"Usually when there's soft-tissue injury, the only thing I've got to offer is pain killers and anti-inflammatory drugs," Seitz said.

Jordan said her work with animals has sharpened her massage skills because the critters, unlike her human clients, let her know immediately if she is pressing too hard or going too fast.

"I've really learned to dance with the animals," Jordan said. "You have to form a rapport with them."

Jordan, an international authority on swans who has the only licensed swan shelter on the West Coast, also massages sick and injured trumpeter swans she takes in.

She said destruction of wintering habitats is depleting the ranks of trumpeter swans, which number less than 14,000 nationwide.

Jordan, who has sheltered about 30 wild swans, recently began working with a frostbitten bird that was rescued by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Alaska. The bird apparently became trapped in ice while feeding.

GEMS FROM THE EAST

With political changes taking place so rapidly in Soviet Russia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, and other Eastern countries, it may interest you to add to your understanding of gems associated with the region.

Alexandrite, that incredible phenomenal stone which changes from green to red, depending on the light source, was discovered in Russia in 1830. In fact, it was named for Czar Alexander II whose birthday it was on the discovery date, and in part because red and green were the colors of the Russian Imperial Guard.

Amber has historically come from Poland and from the shores of the Baltic Sea. Amethyst has Russia as one of its sources, as does aquamarine. Some citrine hails from Russia as well.

Diamonds also come from Russia. In previous years, in fact, the release of Russian mined diamonds has had an impact on the world diamond market. Emeralds have also been mined in Russia.

Pyrope garnet, the name given red garnets, have Czechoslovakia as one of their major sources. Two green colored garnets, one with high dispersion and luster which is called demantoid; and another with a green reminiscent of emerald which is call uvarovite, both occur in Russia.

When you consider gemstones, geography matters. Russia, with such a large land mass, has added to the riches of the world with the gems it has available.

We would be glad to show you some of these gems if you are interested in making some changes in your life.

STATE

Mattox, Richards call for attack on environmental crime

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Jim Mattox on Saturday said state agencies should be consolidated "to lead a coordinated attack on environmental crime," while state Treasurer Ann Richards called for better training for appointees to boards and commissions that supervise existing agencies.

The Democratic rivals for governor spoke at a candidates' forum on environmental and consumer issues.

Richards said she would appoint an environmental director in the governor's office to act as an ombudsman for public interests and she would support creation of an independent office of public counsel to represent individuals at agencies that regulate environmental issues.

But she also proposed the governor's office train appointees on budget, personnel and specific policy goals, to give them some independence from agency staff, "who usually are the problem in the first place."

Mattox said the problem is not with well-meaning but ill-informed board members at the regulatory agencies, as Richards suggested. "There are a lot of people on those boards that do exactly what they were meant to do when they were put there," Mattox said.

With the right attorney general and governor, "you can have a major impact," Mattox said, as he pointed to his record of doubling the size of the environmental division and prosecuting offenders.

"There is a big distinction between rhetoric and record," Mattox said.

The conference, organized by 14 consumer, environmental and labor groups, drew 215 activists who heard from candidates for governor, lieutenant governor and attorney general.

Former Gov. Mark White, another Democratic candidate, did not attend, but the governor's forum drew two other Democrats, a Republican, a Libertarian and an independent.

Richards said she would require proof of the clear need for new reservoirs before she would support their construction, and said she would rely on environmental and consumer groups for advice.

Mattox said he would call together statewide elected officials to plan for the state's future. Such a meeting has not occurred in the seven years he has been attorney general, he said.

Election of regulatory boards and commissions would be "relatively unruly," but a possibility if they were split into districts, he said.

Tom Smith of Public Citizen of Texas, a conference organizer, said the response from candidates showed a growing awareness of environmental problems.

Only two Republican candidates, Rob Mosbacher for lieutenant governor, and Royce Owens for governor, attended the conference, but J.E. "Buster" Brown, for attorney general, and Richard McIver, for agriculture commissioner, returned questionnaires.

Most of the Democratic candidates agreed that global problems such as the greenhouse effect, acid rain and decline of water quality, were issues the state should face with stricter regulations and tougher enforcement of existing laws, Smith noted.

"We're real heartened by this," Smith said. "They represent a real commitment to cleaning up the environmental mess we're in, and protecting consumers."

He said the interest of political candidates follows polls that show more than 70 percent of Americans support stronger efforts to clean up the environment.

In the governor's race, "It's almost like they're trying to out-strengthen each other in terms of environmental issues," Smith said. "It's a refreshing change and one we've needed to have for a long time."

In the forum of Democrats for attorney general, Dan Morales, a San Antonio state representative, cited toxic air, land and water emissions as major priorities and proposed a "prevention-based strategy to reduce the amount of dangerous substances dumped into our air, land and rivers."

Morales supported prison sentences for corporate officials who ignore environmental laws or who recklessly endanger lives.

John Odam, a Houston lawyer, cited hazardous waste disposal and beach cleanup as environmental priorities and said his experience as a former executive assistant attorney general under John Hill makes him qualified for the job.

Odam added that he would personally prosecute environmental offenders and would maintain an aggressive environmental division.

Mosbacher, a Houston independent oilman and chairman of the Texas Department of Human Resources who is unopposed in the GOP primary, got high marks from organizers just for showing up.

Other Republican candidates may have passed up the conference because the groups sponsoring the conference "might not normally be assumed to be Republican groups," Mosbacher said, but he wanted to tell the environmentalists he was open to their point of view.

The environment is important to everyone and does not belong to the Democrats or Republicans or liberals or conservatives, he said.

"There's no doubt that it's a sensitive issue and I think the 1988 presidential campaign made that pretty clear. And I believe Texas has major problems that it has to come to grips with," he said.

In most cases, he said, the state should defer to federal government on environmental matters.

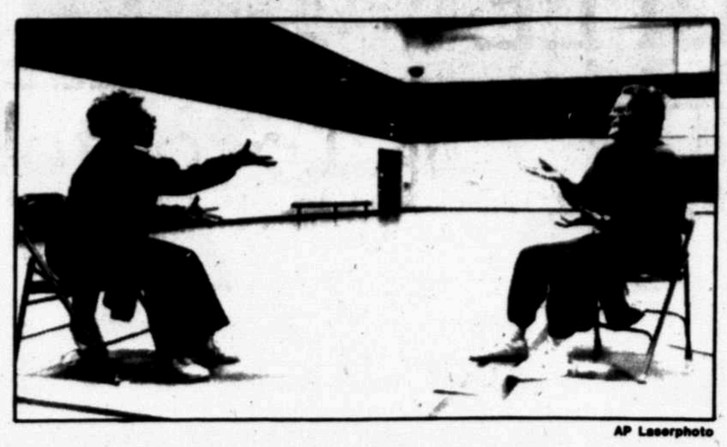

Senior exercise class offers alternatives

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Some are from nursing homes. Others are retired teachers. But they all want to rock to the beat instead of the constant motion of their rocking chairs.

The half-dozen women at the YWCA Seniorcise class are newcomers to the exercise movement. But they have realized the benefits of workouts even though they are in the final stages of their lives.

Their exercise guru is a senior citizen herself — 62-year-old Edy Bavousett — who didn't discover exercise until three years ago. At that time, her employer at a Lubbock nursing home told her to lead the home's residents on some simple exercises.

And the woman who described herself as a non-athletic, skinny girl who was always chosen last for team activities became an exercise nut. But her enthusiasm didn't stop at the boundaries of her own body. She was driven to involve others in her exercise plan.

AP Laserphoto

Bertha Derr, left, and Eileen Border throw rubber balls to each other to help improve hand-eye coordination as part of the YWCA Seniorcise class.

Several seminars and workshops later, she's heading up a senior's program at the YWCA that eventually will include social events, speakers and a walking club. This new emphasis on getting seniors active will keep them alive longer with fewer medical problems, according to research.

Many of the problems senior citizens experience is not due to disease but to deconditioning. As people age they lose muscle fibers at a rate of 3 to 5 percent every 10 years. By age 60, an individual may have lost 30 percent of his or her muscle. Regular exercise slows the loss of important muscle fibers.

So, as the senior women softly move their arms in circles to the soft tunes of Christopher Cross' "Sailing" and begin stamping their feet and swaying to the side to the up-tempo "Locomotion," they increase their heart rates and stretch muscles they had forgotten about.

"You know, when you're lugging kids and pushing a mop and cleaning windows you didn't realize that you used them," gasped 64-year-old Dorothy Hall, during the hourlong exercise program.

Until the first week of exercise class, the retired Social Studies teacher never had participated in an organized exercise class. But a former colleague, Frances Butler, persuaded her to take the class. If nothing else, it would give them time to socialize.

Most of the exercises are performed from a sitting position. The women stretch and strengthen arm muscles by stretching a thick rubber band and improve their hand-eye coordination by tossing a small, rubber, pink ball.

Although the exercises look too simple to derive any benefit, the women do see some improvement in their conditions.

"I'll tell you, it looks easy. But you use muscles you didn't know about," said Mrs. Hall. "When I would see the senior citizens on TV sitting in chairs (exercising), I would think 'big deal.' But don't knock it till you try it."

For days after her first exercise session she moved her body a little slower than usual. "I used muscles that were in misuse," she said.

Mrs. Hall enjoys the social aspect of the exercise program in addition to increasing flexibility, burning calories and reducing stress. Between breaks in songs, the women talk about organizations they're involved in and how they're feeling.

Research is finding that those who socialize more live longer. A study group of men at the University of California indicated that those with the fewest social contacts had twice the death rate. It tripled for women.

The simple chair exercises have helped the men and women she taught in the nursing home with their arthritis and breathing, according to Mrs. Bavousett. "It's more than aerobic," she said. "It's stretching to get flexibility and tone up the body. You have a problem being flexible if you don't work out."

A study of a group age 72 and older showed an increase in range of motion and flexibility by nearly 48 percent after three months of simple stretching exercises. And exercise lowers the risk of developing premature coronary artery disease.

Trying to convince people to exercise is often difficult, according to Mrs. Bavousett. "A lot will say they have arthritis or that they already did their exercise — that they went to the store," she said. "When they've got their minds set on things, it's hard to change."

"It is tempting to be sedentary," said Mrs. Butler. "But I really believe that exercise is good. It's hard. And, except for the fatigue, I feel better."

Census workers to count Houston homeless residents

HOUSTON (AP) — Central Houston census workers will crawl through freeway underpasses, probe local parks and hang out at abandoned buildings to get an accurate count of the homeless population in nation's fourth-largest city.

Sandra Ellison, director of the Central Houston Census Bureau said "S Night" — Street and Shelter Night — is scheduled for the overnight hours between March 20 and March 21.

"If a street person is walking around and seems to have relatively intact faculties, they will be interviewed," Ms. Ellison said.

"But census workers will not be allowed to disturb anyone who seems disoriented or wake anyone who is sleeping," Ms. Ellison said. "In those cases, they must estimate the most basic information."

Census takers are not only trying to get an accurate count on the nation's homeless, but also attempting to determine such demographics as their sex, age and ethnic background.

A recent study revealed there are about 10,000 homeless people in Houston each night, including about 1,500 children. But those figures do not include another 120,000 adults and 30,000 children classified as "marginally homeless," or those temporarily doubling up with friends and relatives.

On S Night, some census takers will work the streets, while others will hit the shelters. Working with the Houston Police Department and homeless advocates here, Ms. Ellison's crew has spent months pinpointing shelters, hotels, motels, underpasses, parks, benches, and even abandoned buildings.

"There are pockets throughout the city where apartments have shut down but where people have continued to live," said City of Houston Planner Peg Purser.

Freeze blamed for death of 24 dolphins, expert says

MATAGORDA (AP) — An expert says the Christmas freeze may be responsible for killing at least 24 bottlenose dolphins who were found floating or washed ashore in Matagorda Bay over the weekend.

The kill is the worst on the Texas coast in a decade, officials said.

Volunteers Sunday helped pull the carcasses from Matagorda Bay about halfway between Galveston and Corpus Christi on the Gulf Coast, using airboats to bring both adults and calves ashore.

Experts from the Texas Marine Mammal Stranding Network planned to examine the carcasses today to determine what killed the animals, said Mike Carvan at the organization's office in Galveston.

Tests could take months, however, and the exact cause of death may never be known, officials said.

Game Warden Arthur Lawrence said the large kill led investigators to believe the freeze that killed thousands of fish along the Texas coast may be to blame for the dolphin kill as well. The cold may have caused illness that weakened the animals, and ice apparently made it hard for some to surface and breathe, he said.

"There was a considerable amount of ice out here," Lawrence said of three-day record-breaking freeze that plunged temperatures below zero, ruined most of south Texas' citrus crop and brought a rare snow to Houston just before Christmas.

"In fact, several acres of this bay was covered with ice, a slushy-type of ice material — and apparently it made it hard for these dolphins to breathe," Lawrence said. "Some of them probably became disoriented and stunned as a result of this cold and icy weather and they can suffocate and suffer pneumonia just like a human."

Officials said 24 carcasses had been spotted along a six-mile stretch of shore, and most had been hauled ashore by Sunday night.

"It's never happened before," said H.F. Fuselier, a seasoned Matagorda fisherman, as he watched Coast Guard members hoist a 7-foot male dolphin's carcass into the bed of a pickup.

"It ain't fair. It ain't right."

Rose Folmar, a bartender at Allen's Landing in Matagorda who was helping monitor the recovery effort, said some volunteers doubted the freeze theory because it's been so long since the cold snap.

Razorback cap didn't fit Hatfield

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Ken Hatfield is an Arkansas native who played for the Razorbacks and helped them claim the 1964 national championship. Six years ago, he became head coach at his alma mater.

Hatfield ended that seemingly perfect match Sunday when he was named the head coach at Clemson — a program as troubled as Arkansas' is clean in a scandal-ridden Southwest Conference.

"Everybody thought when I came back to Arkansas this was the job I had dreamed of my whole life," Hatfield said. "That's not true. I've enjoyed 19 years of coaching when I was away before I ever came back to Arkansas ... Nothing stays the same."

During an hourlong news conference Sunday, when he was formally introduced as the Tigers' new coach, Hatfield said he was not concerned about the NCAA investigation, the threatened boycott or the fans who continue to support former Coach Danny Ford.

Hatfield said he and his wife, Sandy, felt it was their destiny to come to Clemson — although he did not make his first trip to the school until Sunday afternoon.

"I think more than anything else, each person in your time has to decide what's important to you," Hatfield said. "Sandy and I both felt right now this was the right thing to do to be part of the continued success of Clemson's fine tradition and heritage.

"We felt led here," Hatfield said. "We understand it's a very difficult situation in time. But I promise you that things will work out."

Hatfield comes to a program under the cloud of an NCAA probe and a revolt by Clemson players and some fans, who were upset over Ford's resignation. Ford, 41, quit Thursday — less than two weeks after the NCAA told Clemson it had uncovered 14 alleged rule violations.

One day after Ford resigned, his players called on the university to bring him back or hire one of his assistants to replace him or they would boycott the 1990 season. The threatened boycott was called off after the players were told Sunday morning that Hatfield would be their new coach.

Meanwhile, outside Memorial Stadium, where Hatfield's hiring was announced, about 200 Ford supporters called for the resignation of university President Max Lennon and Athletic Director Bobby Robinson.

"Max must go," the fans yelled. "Max must go."

Some of the fans carried signs supporting Ford. One sign read, "Bring Danny Back — Fire Robinson and Lennon."

At one point, Hatfield walked into the crowd asking them for their support. Those in the crowd said they didn't blame him for what had occurred in the past week at the premier football power in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The 46-year-old Hatfield compiled a 55-17-1 record at Arkansas, guiding the Razorbacks to a bowl game in each of his years as coach. His bowl record at Arkansas, however, was 1-5, including Cotton Bowl losses to Tennessee (31-27 in 1990) and UCLA (17-3 in 1989).

The choice of Hatfield, 27-31-1 at Air Force from 1979-1983, could have created more controversy at Clemson because of the threatened boycott.

"We decided as a team in dedication to all of our assistant coaches and Coach Ford, the best thing for us and our future would be to reconsider playing for the upcoming football season," team spokesman Stacy Fields, a tight end, said. "We're not 100 percent satisfied, but we felt a little better knowing that everyone out there knows we did our best to get what we wanted."

Defensive back Dexter Davis said players were mulling over what to do next.

"Some people are ready to transfer," Davis said. "Others don't know what they're going to do. We're not happy. That's the bottom line."

Hatfield met with the team for about 10 minutes before his news conference.

Local swimmers dominate meet

From Staff Reports

The City of Midland Swim Team dominated the 1990 Winter Invitational meet this weekend at the Mabee Memorial Swim Center, coming out of Sunday's finals with a whopping 1,219.5-point advantage over the next closest team.

The event, which brought in nine teams and several unaffiliated individuals from out of town, saw the Lewisville Aquatic Club take second with 938 points. Lewisville was followed by the Lubbock Swim Club (545.5) and the West Texas Aquatic Club (239.5).

Also competing in the meet were teams from Abilene, Monahans, Plano, Fort Stockton, San Angelo and Plainview.

Midland's swimmers comprised six of the 10 individual age group champions, with Matthew Houston taking top honors in the senior boys division, and Carrie Henry placing second in the senior girls competition.

Other first place individuals from COM were Anne Cirkovic (8-under girls), Amber Goodwin (10-under girls), Stacy Fennell (13-14 girls), Gregg Strauss (8-under boys) and Cody Marcum (10-under boys).

Perles has inside track to Jets job

NEW YORK (AP) — George Perles, who has four Super Bowl rings and wants a fifth, is expected to become head coach of the New York Jets, who haven't even won a division title since the 1970 merger of the NFL and AFL.

Dick Steinberg, the Jets' newgeneral manager, was quoted Sunday as saying he had completed the interview process and a new coach would be named soon. Published reports have said the 54-year-old Perles, who has been the head coach at Michigan State for the last seven years, is the Jets' choice.

"All I can say is that something is going to happen soon, real soon," Steinberg was quoted in Sunday's New York Newsday. However, Steinberg denied that an offer actually had been made as of Saturday.

And today's New York Times said Perles was to fly to New York to finalize his contract. The Times quoted a source familiar with the negotiations as confirming that Perles had accepted the job pending the contract discussions.

The Detroit News quoted a source close to the Michigan State program as saying the Jets have offered Perles $6 million over five years.

Perles, the architect of Pittsburgh's "Steel Curtain" defense that led the Steelers to four Super Bowl victories in the 1970s, would replace Joe Walton, fired after the Jets' 4-12 season, third worst in the NFL.

Besides Perles, Steinberg interviewed 10 other candidates.

Perles was an assistant on the Steelers' four Super Bowl teams, serving first as defensive line coach and then moving up to defensive coordinator under Chuck Noll. He became Michigan State coach in 1982 and his record is 46-33-3.

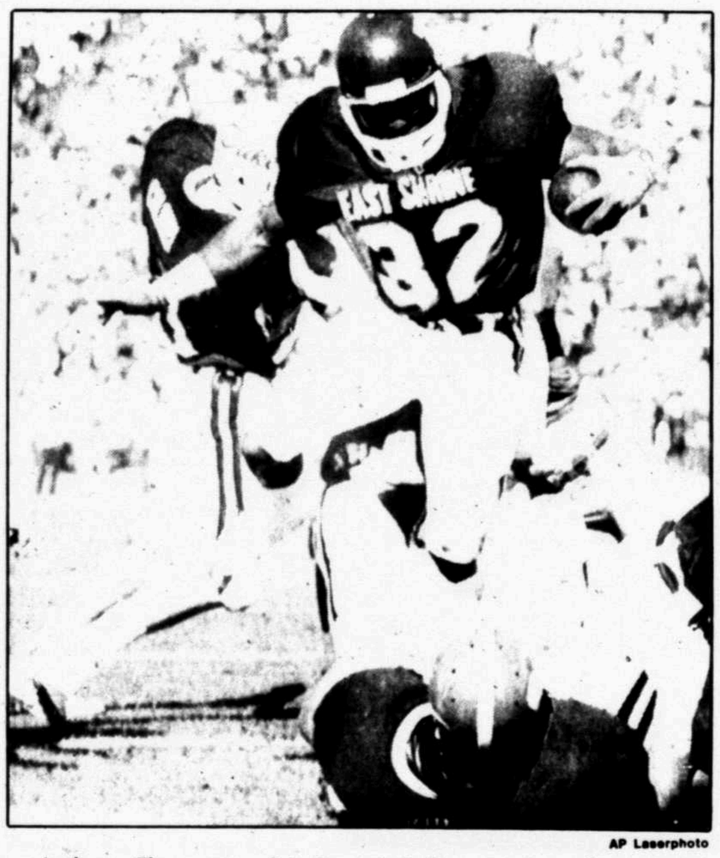

Two years ago, Perles reportedly agreed to and then turned down a five-year, $2.25 million offer to coach the Green Bay Packers and signed a 10-year contract extension at Michigan State, his alma mater and said he would never leave East Lansing even if Michigan State fired him.

"There were all kinds of reasons (for considering Green Bay)," he said. "We won the Rose Bowl a little bit early (his fifth year) and I love challenges. I have four Super Bowl rings and I wanted a fifth one so bad I could taste it. My interest was for that reason, not money.

"When it was offered, I thought about it. But between my wife and myself, we decided this is the best place to be. I didn't use it as a hammer or in any way to help myself."

When he was named Michigan State's coach, Perles said:

"For myself and for my family, I look at the Michigan State job as the finest coaching position in America.

Anthony Thompson of Indiana led the way for all runners in Sunday's East-West Shrine All Star game with 68 yards in 13 carries.

West kicks East, 22-21

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Just for kicks, the East-West Shrine Game had about everything the organizers, a record crowd of 78,000 and a nationwide viewing audience could have wanted.

It had a game-winning field goal with 10 seconds left, a come-from-behind victory for the home team — the West, 22-21 — standout performances by marquee players Tony Rice of Notre Dame and Anthony Thompson of Indiana, and a couple of local heroes — Troy Taylor of California and James Williams of Fresno State.

It was a made-for-TV ending to the college football season, so compelling that even the losing coach enjoyed himself.

"I thought it was a great game," said East coach Jack Bicknell of Boston College. "I saw some real good players out there. Everyone played an equal time. And most of all, we all had fun."

The players, of course, were there more to impress the dozens of NFL scouts and executives than to have fun. Among those who boosted their reputations was Arizona kicker John Nies, a punting and kickoff specialist who had to handle field-goal duties as the West's all-purpose kicker and showed he's pretty good at it.

Nies was 3-for-3, hitting from 43, 30 and then 37 yards for the game-winner.

Niner win would tie two records

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Don't mention the number 4 to the Denver Broncos. Mention it as often as you want to the San Francisco 49ers.

Although neither of the Super Bowl teams cares to admit it has any bearing, each is on the verge of setting some history. If the Broncos lose Sunday, they will tie Minnesota' unenviable mark of four failures in as many trips to the big game. And the 49ers will tie Pittsburgh's record of 4-0 in the Super Bowl.

"You don't have to look around at those things to get the players motivated," Broncos coach Dan Reeves said Sunday, when his team arrived here. "If you have any competitive nature at all, you see those things written (about being 0-3) and it should get you up.

"We realize we've had two disappointing games in the Super Bowl," added Reeves, in charge when Denver was routed by the Giants in 1987 and the Redskins in 1988. Red Miller handled the Broncos when they lost to Dallas in the 1978 game.

"We realize why people perceive us the way they do."

They also understand why the 49ers are perceived as a Super team, a heavy favorite that should have no trouble equaling the Steelers' achievement.

"They certainly are coming into this game hotter than any team we've played in the Super Bowl," Reeves said. "We realize that. But we haven't played badly this season and we've responded to challenges."

This clearly is the biggest challenge the Broncos have faced and their tr ck record — not only in the NFL title game but against NFC teams this season — is not encouraging. The Broncos, as Reeves noted, "were 2-2 against the NFC," but the losses came against the only NFC playoff teams they faced, the Giants and Eagles. And they came at Mile High Stadium.

The 49ers beat New York, Philadelphia and anyone else standing in their way this season. They are so close to being ranked with the greatest teams ever.

Not that such an historic achievement is driving these 49ers.

"From the standpoint of repeating, that's not it," 49ers coach George Seifert said. "It would just be nice to win the Super Bowl. You're not going to get too many opportunities in a lifetime.

"This team has responded well to expectations. In the locker room last year, after the Super Bowl, the players were talking about repeating. It was a theme that carried into training camp. They were saying, 'We've accomplished a lot, but the one thing we haven't done is repeat.'

"It was something the players expected, to get to this point. Now, we want to attack this game and come away with the prize."

For the fourth time in nine years.

"That kind of measures you against the best," 49ers Pro Bowl safety Ronnie Lott said. "The Steelers dominated the '70s and won four times. You can't argue, if we win, that we're not in the same class with four Super Bowls of our own."

It will be Seifert's first try as a head coach after serving as secondary coach and then defensive coordinator under Bill Walsh.

"Walsh people won't like it when I say it," linebacker Matt Millen said, "but I think Seifert has done a great job of just letting his players play. Walsh left a great nucleus, but this is a George Seifert team."

Seifert, of course, knows he owes plenty to Walsh, who left coaching and worked as a commentator for NBC this season.

"This is a real tribute to what he left and built," Seifert said. "He certainly is a part of it and should enjoy part of the success."

Tantrum costs McEnroe

Australian Open

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — John McEnroe's cursing, racket-smashing tantrum in the Australian Open wasn't his worst, but it cost him a shot at $200,000 and put into question his future in tennis.

McEnroe, the first player thrown out of this Grand Slam event in its 85-year history, plans to continue his comeback but still has to prove he can play tough matches without losing his temper.

He flew home to Malibu, Calif., today, brushing silently past reporters with his wife, actress Tatum O'Neal, and their two sons, their trip to Australia cut short and spoiled by McEnroe's costly outburst.

The $6,500 fine he was slapped with was minor, though it cut a big chunk out of the $14,000 he won for reaching the fourth round.

Had he gone on to win the match Sunday against Mikael Pernfors after leading 6-1, 4-6, 7-5, 2-4, McEnroe would have won at least $24,000 for reaching the quarterfinals.

More important, McEnroe's default cost him a real chance at his first Grand Slam title since he won Wimbledon and the U.S. Open in 1984.

Upsets rule cage weekend

Associated Press

It was a lost weekend for college basketball's elite.

Top-ranked Kansas lost. So did No. 2 Georgetown and No. 3 Oklahoma. Fifth-rated Syracuse, sixth-rated Michigan and seventh-rated Illinois also fell.

So who's No. 1?

Missouri might be when the new ratings are released Tuesday. The fourth-ranked Tigers beat Kansas 95-87 on Saturday and, with everyone else losing, will move up — whether Coach Norm Stewart likes it or not.

"Rankings are for players," Stewart said. "I don't have much respect for the polls, but they are good for the players and the fans."

Missouri last held the top spot in 1982 and stayed there two weeks.

Kansas and Georgetown began the weekend as the nation's only unbeaten major college teams. After Kansas lost in the afternoon, Georgetown blew its chance to take over when it lost hours later, 70-65 at Connecticut.

"The number one ranking is the least of my concerns," Hoyas coach John Thompson said. "The only positive thing about the loss is we can get away from that stuff."

On Sunday, Virginia beat No. 11 Georgia Tech 81-79 in overtime, No. 25 Alabama upended No. 13 LSU 70-55 and No. 16 UCLA defeated California 106-97.

On Saturday, No. 23 Arizona beat No. 3 Oklahoma 78-74, Providence stopped No. 5 Syracuse 87-86, Iowa defeated No. 6 Michigan 78-76 in overtime and No. 24 Purdue downed No. 7 Illinois 81-68.

Also, it was No. 8 Duke 97, Wake Forest 69; No. 10 Louisville 86, Memphis State 69; No. 12 Arkansas 100, Texas A&M 84; No. 13 LSU 87, Notre Dame 64; No. 15 St. John's 65, Boston College 59; No. 17 La Salle 84, Holy Cross 81; No. 18 Oregon State 70, Washington 63; North Carolina 91, No. 19 North Carolina State 81; No. 20 Xavier, Ohio 83, St. Louis 74; No. 21 Loyola Marymount 131, Portland 106, and No. 22 Minnesota 83, Ohio State 78.

No. 4 Missouri 95
No. 1 Kansas 87

Anthony Peeler and Doug Smith combined to score 17 of Missouri's last 18 points as the Tigers won the Big Eight showdown and increased their home winning streak to 26. Peeler finished with 24 points, including 14-for-14 from the foul line, and Smith scored 19 points in the second half.

Missouri (17-1) trailed by nine points in the first half and took the lead for good with 17 minutes remaining. Kansas (19-1) got 18 points from Mark Randall.

Connecticut 70
No. 2 Georgetown 65

Connecticut held Georgetown scoreless for the first seven minutes and raced to a 14-0 lead, then outplayed the Hoyas in the stretch.

Nadav Henefeld's 3-point shot with 3:46 left broke a 60-all tie and put the Huskies ahead for good. He finished with 21 points, including five 3-pointers.

Connecticut (15-3) made seven of its eight free throws in the final 1:04 for the Big East victory at the Hartford Civic Center. Alonzo Mourning scored 23 pointsfor Georgetown (14-1).

No. 23 Arizona 78
No. 3 Oklahoma 74

Sean Rooks and Jud Buechler scored 18 points apiece as Arizona stretched the nation's longest winning streak to 41. The Wildcats (11-3) gave Oklahoma a final chance, but the Sooners threw away the ball with four seconds left and Rooks made two foul shots.

Oklahoma (12-2) had been leading the nation with a 122-point average before scoring a total of 125 in two straight losses. The Sooners had not dropped two in a row for two seasons.

Providence 87, No. 5 Syracuse 86

Eric Murdock's jump shot from the foul line with four seconds left gave Providence its first-ever Big East victory over Syracuse. The Friars had lost 21 straight to the Orangemen since the league was formed in 1979.

Murdock had 25 points and 16 assists for host Providence (11-4). Syracuse (12-3) led 83-77 with 2:36 to play.

Iowa 78, No. 6 Michigan 76

Les Jepsen led a second-half rally and made two foul shots with six seconds left in overtime as Iowa ended a five-game losing streak. He scored 13 of his 19 points after the intermission.

The Hawkeyes (9-6) trailed by 15 points with 11:24 remaining. Rumeal Robinson scored 28 points for Michigan (13-3), which blew a 20-point lead earlier this season to Indiana.

No. 24 Purdue 81, No. 7 Illinois 68

Chuckie White sparked a 17-2 spurt that helped Purdue (13-2) stay unbeaten in the Big Ten. Illinois (13-3) trailed by 22 points midway through the second half.

No. 8 Duke 97, Wake Forest 69

Phil Henderson and Christian Laettner scored 18 points apiece and Duke led 48-23 at halftime. The Blue Devils (13-3) rebounded from a 19-point loss at North Carolina.

No. 10 Louisville 86, Memphis St. 69

Felton Spencer scored five of his 25 points during a 12-4 spurt that put Louisville (14-2) ahead 48-35 with 13:50 left.

Virginia 81, No. 11 Georgia Tech 79

Kenny Turner's only points of the second half came on a 10-foot shot with six seconds left in overtime as Virginia (10-5) won at home.

Bryant Stith added 30 points and John Crotty had 21 for the Cavaliers. Turner finished with 13 points and 11 rebounds.

Freshman Kenny Anderson scored 29 points for Georgia Tech (12-2). Dennis Scott, the ACC's leading scorer, had a season-low 17.

No. 12 Arkansas 100, Texas A&M 84

Todd Day got 21 points and Arkansas (14-2) pressed Texas A&M into 21 turnovers. Day had four of the Razorbacks' nine blocked shots.

No. 13 LSU 87, Notre Dame 87

An NCAA-record 68,112 bought tickets, although a steady rain held the actual crowd to 44,233, as LSU beat Notre Dame. Chris Jackson scored 21 points for the Tigers (12-2), and all proceeds from the game at the Superdome went to the homeless.

No. 25 Alabama 70, No. 13 LSU 55

James Sanders scored 21 points and helped hold Southeastern Conference leading scorer Chris Jackson far below his average. Sanders and Keith Askins combined to hold Jackson, averaging 28.3 points, to only 11 before he fouled out with just over a minute left. Melvin Cheatum scored 20 points for Alabama (13-4, 4-2 Southeastern Conference). Maurice Williamson with 12 points led LSU (11-3, 4-2).

No. 15 St. John's 65, Boston Coll. 59

St. John's led by 12 points with 12 minutes left and held off Boston College. Jayson Williams, Malik Sealy and Greg Harvey made two foul shots each in the final minute for the Redmen (16-3).

No. 16 UCLA 106, California 97

Don MacLean scored 27 points and Tracy Murray added 25, combining for 20-of-26 shooting. The Bruins (12-3, 6-1 Pac-10) shot 65 percent, with Murray going nine for 10 and MacLean hitting 11 of 16. Freshman Brian Hendrick paced Cal with 31 points.

No. 17 La Salle 84, Holy Cross 81

Lionel Simmons scored 28 points as La Salle (12-1) ended Holy Cross' six-game winning streak.

No. 18 Oregon St. 70, Washington 63

Gary Payton's 15 points, seven rebounds and eight assists led Oregon State (14-2) to its ninth straight victory.

N. Carolina 91, No. 19 N.C. State 81

The Tar Heels (13-4) won against a ranked Atlantic Coast Conference team for the second time in a week. The Tar Heels, conquerers of Duke, beat the Wolfpack behind Scott Williams' 27 points.

No. 20 Xavier 83, St. Louis 74

Jamal Walker and Derek Strong scored 20 points each as Xavier improved to 13-2. Walker got 18 points in the second half.

No. 21 Loyola Marymount 131
Portland 106

Hank Gathers scored 27 points and Bo Kimble had 26 for Loyola Marymount (13-3). The Lions led 76-53 with 13:28 to play before both teams picked up the pace even more.

No. 22 Minnesota 83, Ohio St. 78

Willie Burton got seven of his 19 points in an 18-5 surge early in the second half that led Minnesota (12-3).

TENNIS

McEnroe would have met Yannick Noah in the quarters, and probably defending champion Ivan Lendl in the semis, but might have beaten anyone the way he was playing. The winner gets $200,000, the runner-up $100,000.

McEnroe is the first player ejected for misconduct in any Grand Slam since pros and amateurs began playing together at the start of the open era in 1968.

Two other players, one in the 1950s at the U.S. Nationals, and another in the early 1960s at the French, were defaulted for bad behavior.

McEnroe's exit dominated talk at the Australian Open on Monday, overshadowing unseeded David Wheaton's 7-6 (7-5), 6-4, 6-3 victory over fellow American Aaron Krickstein, the fifth seed, who was playing with a groin injury.

No. 3 Stefan Edberg, who joined Wheaton in the quarterfinals by beating fellow Swede Jonas Svensson, said McEnroe "only has himself to blame" for getting thrown out.

"I think he's done worse things than he did yesterday," Edberg said. "He's got a bad temper and he can't seem to do anything about it. Tennis has always had its characters. But the game needs players like John."

Krickstein said "some of the guys in the locker room said they were glad" McEnroe was thrown out.

McEnroe let himself get rattled by missed shots, close calls and a baby's cries, and after his default he admitted, "I don't really have anyone to blame but myself."

It was a sad and bizarre chapter in a tempestuous career that has included five suspensions for misconduct.

Only two days before, after winning his third match and playing his best tennis in years, McEnroe talked about how important it is for him to keep his temper under control.

"It really bothers me when I get negative," he said. "I feel like my attitude has been good so far, so I'd like to keep it that way whatever happens. It's so much more enjoyable, and also obviously I play better."

He was cheerful and polite all week, smiling and telling jokes off the court and courteous to officials on court. He'd been in Australia for three weeks with his family and seemed relaxed and fit.

Yet all it took for McEnroe to revert to his old ways was a tough match against Pernfors, the Swedish-born two-time NCAA champion at Georgia.

McEnroe won the first set easily, but as Pernfors picked up his game in the second set, McEnroe became increasingly agitated. After netting a short drop shot, he smashed the ball on the ground as if it were an annoying bug.

He smacked another ball after a missed forehand and nearly hit a ballboy. He asked for new balls before serving the 10th game, complaining the old ones were dead, but was broken for the set — his third straight break — on Pernfors backhand volley of a shallow lob.

McEnroe slammed a ball in the air after a miss in the first game of the third set and almost hit Pernfors in the back, then stalled between shots by pacing angrily behind the baseline. Pernfors, bothered by the tactics, was broken.

McEnroe took a 2-1 lead after an exchange of breaks, but on the changeover he stood in front of a lineswoman he thought made a bad call.

Bouncing a ball on his racket and glaring at her in intimidating fashion, McEnroe was hit with a code violation for unsportsmanlike conduct by umpire Gerry Armstrong.

McEnroe argued with Armstrong, then returned to play, finally held service, and went on to take the set.

He seemed to be in control of the match and himself again, but suddenly became distracted by a crying baby while serving the sixth game, with Pernfors ahead 3-2.

"Give him a drink, the boy's hungry," McEnroe yelled, looking up in the section of the stands where the baby was crying.

Armstrong asked the parents to take the baby out of the stadium.

McEnroe fell behind 15-30 on a wide forehand, then bounced his racket on the court. At deuce, McEnroe hit another forehand wide, then smashed the court again with his racket, cracking the head slightly.

Armstrong called a code violation for racket abuse, and McEnroe responded by swearing at him and asked for Ken Farrar, the Grand Slam chief of supervisors.

Farrar came onto the court and talked with McEnroe, but the American continued complaining and swearing, his four-letter words audible to nearby fans and television viewers.

Armstrong, with Farrar's approval, called, "Code violation, further abuse, default Mr. McEnroe. Game, set match." McEnroe stood with his hands on his hips while the crowd of 15,000 whistled, booed angrily and chanted, We want McEnroe."

McEnroe packed his rackets and left. The crowd roared its disapproval for another 15 minutes.

McEnroe, composed and speaking softly before dozens of reporters a few minutes later, said his big mistake was in not understanding the rules.

Mario super in Wales win

NHL All Stars

PITTSBURGH (AP) — One of the world's most popular video games is called "Super Mario Brothers," but they play an out-of-this-world version in Pittsburgh.

The name is "Super Mario," and when it's plugged in, turned on and revved up, it's like no other game in existence. All you need to play are a goal, an open sheet of ice — and a player named Mario Lemieux.

"Does he surprise me? Nothing he does surprises me," Pittsburgh Penguins' teammate Paul Coffey said Sunday after Lemieux tied an NHL All-Star Game record with four goals in the Wales Conference's record-setting 12-7 shootout victory over the Campbell Conference.

Playing against the best players in the world, Lemieux was out of sight — and everybody else was out of his league. He scored his first goal a mere 21 seconds into the game, his second on a textbook slapshot and his third while falling to the ice with the Edmonton Oilers' Kevin Lowe draped around him, trying to prevent the unpreventable.

"You'll see that one on the highlights films for years to come," said the Los Angeles Kings' Luc Robitaille, who scored two goals.

Lemieux's fourth goal, which tied Wayne Gretzky's All-Star Game record, came just 1:21 into the third period, and Lemieux said he easily could have had a fifth and sixth if he had realized the record was within his incredible reach. He already has nine career All-Star goals, just one shy of the record held by Gretzky and Gordie Howe.

"I probably passed up a couple of shots I could have made," he said.

It would have been a once-in-a-lifetime game for any other player, and it earned Lemieux, only 25, his third Most Valuable Player Award in five years and a sports car. But, as Gretzky said, it might not have been Lemieux's best All-Star Game. Lemieux had three goals and three assists in the Wales' 6-5 victory in St. Louis in 1988.

"Mario's still a young man, and the best is yet to come," Coffey said. "If he keeps working hard, he's going to get a lot better. And that's scary to think."

It certainly is to Calgary's Mike Vernon, in goal in St. Louis and again Sunday as Lemieux scored the only first-period hat trick in the All-Star Game's 41-year history. The Wales Conference led 7-2 after the first period and never by fewer than four goals thereafter.

"I just kept looking over to the coach (Terry Crisp of Calgary) and saying, 'I'm sorry, I'm sorry,'" Vernon said. "You could tell just by looking at Mario how much he wanted it."

"There was a lot of pressure on me, because the fans have been so good to me and were expecting me to be the MVP ... and I didn't want to disappoint them," Lemieux said. "It turned out to be a special day ... a great day."

There was so much scoring that the Wales' seven first-period goals matched the previous record for both teams in a period. And the 19 goals were five more than the combined record of 14 set only last year in a 9-5 Campbell victory in Edmonton. Eight scoring and shooting records were broken, including most shots by one team (the Wales' 45).

"It's easy when there's nobody hitting you," said spectator Jack Lambert, the former Pittsburgh Steelers' linebacker and an expert on the subject.

But then Lemieux makes it look easy almost every time he steps on the ice. Wales coach Pat Burns of the Montreal Canadiens acknowledged there was little checking and infrequent contact, but said Lemieux seemingly was scoring at will.

Super Mario, indeed.

"You don't need a game plan when you've got number 66," Burns said. "The fans came here to see great things, and they saw it. I was excited ... I even saw Wayne Gretzky look over and smile when Mario scored one of his goals."

It certainly wasn't textbook hockey — "I'm sure a lot of hockey people would have rather seen a 4-3 game," Crisp said — but it probably delighted NBC-TV. A new generation of fans watching the first network hockey broadcast in nearly 10 years learned what the purists have known for years: Lemieux is a player for the ages.

"It was a lesson in craftsmanship," Crisp said. "He makes goal scoring an art form."

"It gave me a chance to show I'm a pretty good hockey player and can play with the best," Lemieux said in a classic understatement.

Lemieux's performance before a Civic Arena record 16,236 fans, who kept chanting "Mario, Mario, Mario," overshadowed some other superlative scoring as the 15 of the 18 Wales players who skated were credited with at least one point.

Pierre Turgeon, of the Buffalo Sabres, the youngest player in the game at 20, had two of the Wales' first-period goals, and Kirk Muller of New Jersey had two goals and an assist. Robitaille had two goals, Steve Yzerman of the Detroit Red Wings had a goal and three points and Joe Mullen of Calgary had a goal and an assist for the Campbell Conference.

Wales starting goaltender Patrick Roy of Montreal made some rally-stopping early saves, only to be upstaged by the Buffalo Sabres' Daren Puppa, who made three standout saves on breakaways.

"I felt sorry for the goaltenders — but, hey, they're the ones who wanted to be goaltenders," Robitaille said.

Meanwhile, the Wales Conference also won the first "Heroes of Hockey" old timers game 7-1 on Saturday. The Campbell Conference dominated the first skills competition, which was modeled after the NBA All-Star Game's three-point shooting and slam dunk contests.

Mike Gartner of Minnesota was the faster skater, Al Iafrate of Toronto had the hardest slap shot, Boston's Ray Bourque was the most accurate shooter and Kirk McLean of Vancouver won the goaltending competition.

Nellie gets 600th coaching win

NBA Roundup

Associated Press

Don Nelson has always been a winner.

As a player, he helped Red Auerbach become the winningest coach in NBA history. Now, Nelson is the 10th coach in league history to get 600 victories.

"I don't know what 600 means or what the magic is of the number 600," Nelson said after his Golden State Warriors surprised the Celtics 120-115 at Boston Garden on Sunday night. "I guess it's more important than 500 because it has some zeroes.

"But what it really means is that I've had a wonderful career filled with a lot of wins. Any time you win in sports, it's great. That's really why we play."

No. 600 didn't come easy. The victory snapped Golden State's four-game losing streak and a seven-game road losing string. It was the Warriors' first at Boston Garden since Jan. 29, 1978.

"Getting the 600th is a relief," said Nelson, who helped the Celtics win five NBA championships in 11 years. "When you get close like that, you sometimes wonder if you're ever going to get it."

Bucks 127, Heat 101

Ricky Pierce scored 11 his 22 points in the second quarter to lead Milwaukee to its fourth straight victory.

The Bucks led 63-41 at halftime after Pierce hit consecutive 3-pointers during a 21-6 run. Milwaukee expanded the lead to 89-61 late in the third quarter and went on to post its biggest victory margin of the season.

Jay Humphries and Alvin Robertson scored 19 points each for the Bucks. Robertson also had 15 rebounds and 10 assists.

Rony Seikaly led Miami with 26 points.

Lakers 107, Pistons 97

Byron Scott scored 12 of his 14 points in a third-quarter run as the Lakers snapped a seven-game losing streak against Detroit. The Lakers entered the game with the best record in the NBA but had lost three straight on the road and eight overall away from home.

Five points by Scott in a 9-0 run to begin the third quarter gave the Lakers their first lead, 55-53, and they never trailed again.

Bulls 117, Knicks 100

With Michael Jordan scoring 42 points, Chicago won its third straight and extended its home winning streak to 15. The victory also moved the Bulls back into first place in the Central Division.

Jordan scored 15 points in the first 10 minutes of the game and made all 18 of his free throws in the second half.

Trail Blazers 115, Hornets 100

Jerome Kersey scored 26 points and Kevin Duckworth had 23 to lead Portland over Charlotte. The victory was the Trail Blazers' 16th in their last 17 games.

Prep standouts make oral commitments

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Two of the state's top schoolboy quarterback prospects say they'll spend their collegiate careers in Texas.

Huntsville's Steve Clements made an oral commitment to the University of Texas, where his father was quarterback in the 1950s, while Orangefield's Jeff Granger said he'll attend Texas A&M.

A&M also received 10 other oral commitments Sunday, including Houston Lamar's John Richards and Weatherford's Todd Mathison, the state's top offensive line prospects.

Richards' teammates Ryan Matthews, a wide receiver, and defensive back Marcus Batts also made commitments to A&M.

Oral commitments are non-binding. High school players cannot sign national letters of intent until Feb. 14.

Clements, 6-3 and 180 pounds, chose the Longhorns over Brigham Young and Louisiana State.

Clements is the state's all-time leading passer. He passed for 3,712 yards and 35 touchdowns in 1989 and 8,204 yards and 74 touchdowns in his high school career.

Clements' father Joe was a quarterback at Texas in 1955-57, and his mother Jill is a former Longhorns cheerleader.

Granger, regarded as the second-best quarterback in the state behind Clements, was amused to hear that the Huntsville quarterback will sign with Texas.

"It'll be the battle of the lefties," said Granger. "We're really going to see who's good, but I wish him luck."

Sheehan overcomes troubles in LPGA win

MONTEGO BAY, Jamaica (AP) — It was a struggle for Patty Sheehan. It was a bigger struggle for the rest of the field.

Sheehan found a lot of trouble on the 6,191-yard, par-71 Tryall Club course Sunday, shooting a 4-over-par 75. But it was enough as she captured the LPGA Jamaica Classic by three strokes.

Sheehan began the day with a five-shot lead and won the 54-hole tournament with a 1-under 212 total. She earned the $75,000 first prize plus a bonus of $60,000.

Pat Bradley, Lynn Connelly and Jane Geddes tied for second at 215. Patty Rizzo and Muffin Spencer-Devlin were another stroke back at 216.

Sheehan, who shot 69 on the first day and 68 on the second, began the final day well. But after she birdied the par-5 fifth hole, she bogeyed four of the next six.

Sheehan, 33, recovered and parred the next six holes before finishing the round with yet another bogey. But by then, her victory was almost assured.

Bradley made a late bid with a 4-under 67 that included three birdies and six pars on the front nine.

Spencer-Devlin and Maggie Will finished with 68s and Geddes and Rizzo had final-round 69s.

Beth Daniel shot the best round of the tournament, a 6-under 65, on the first day. But she completed the tournament at 6-over 219. Defending champion Betsy King shot 77 Sunday and wound up at 224.

Gas prices up 2 cents

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices rose nearly 2 cents per gallon at the pump in the last two weeks, primarily because refiners cut back on gasoline processing in favor of heating oil during the cold weather, an analyst said.

The average price of gasoline, including all grades and taxes, rose 1.97 cents per gallon to 113.00 cents per gallon between Jan. 5 and Jan. 19, Trilby Lundberg said Sunday.

"That's the highest level since late July 1989," she said. "I'm attributing this to the effect that home heating oil price rises due to extreme cold weather had upon gasoline and other refined petroleum products."

The retail gasoline prices on Jan. 19, according to the biweekly Lundberg Survey of 13,000 gas stations:

At self-serve stations: Premium unleaded, 118.98 cents per gallon; regular unleaded, 101.65 cents and regular leaded, 100.19 cents.

Tough credit slows building

N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — Most housing analysts concluded months ago that fewer first-time home buyers, a slowing economy and rising land and development costs would curb home construction in 1990 and 1991.

But many builders are slashing operations even more deeply than they had planned, because of tough new lending policies Congress forced on savings and loan institutions in August.

The regulations came in response to past abuses and mismanagement in the savings industry, which has suffered hundreds of failures in recent years, prompting the government to undertake a rescue that may ultimately cost $300 billion.

Analysts have said that much of the fraud-related losses stemmed from lending for land purchases and development of housing.

As a result, a wave of caution has spread to hundreds of commercial banks.

In several interviews here, where the National Association of Homebuilders is concluding its annual convention, developers glumly recounted stories of bankers reducing or halting new lending for land purchases and housing development.

By all accounts, the most turmoil has stemmed from a new rule that bars savings institutions from making loans equal to 15 percent or more of their capital to a single borrower.

Before Congress approved the new laws, the limit was 100 percent of capital.

"The lending limit at the thrifts is pretty scary," said Alvin T. Schwartz, president of the Double S Companies, a home builder in northern Delaware.

Schwartz said he will build 150 homes this year, compared with 200 in 1989.

In other changes, savings institutions must raise their capital to 6 percent of total deposits by 1993.

Perhaps as many as 2,000 institutions expect to meet that standard, but many plan to do it by letting their deposits shrink and cutting back on new loans.

Savings and loans are also barred from investing any of their equity in real estate projects — a practice that became common in many areas after the federal government deregulated the industry in 1982.

That rule change has hit hardest in California, Oregon and Washington, where many large institutions with considerable capital often joined with builders to finance and develop home construction.

The Western states are expected to show the strongest demand for new housing in the next two years, and considerable demand is also predicted in the Midwest, economists told the builders.

Despite the mounting complaints of home builders, Congress seems unlikely to move quickly to ease the new lending standards.

Public opinion could, however, swing in favor of the builders after a few years if prices and apartment rents escalate, said Barbara Alexander, a managing director and housing analyst at Salomon Brothers.

A recession in the housing industry that could cut housing starts by 100,000 a year would either arrest price declines for existing homes or push prices higher in many parts of the country, Ms. Alexander said.

She said such a shift in prices would eventually be likely to persuade voters and Congress to heed the home builders' call for more liberal lending rules.

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas has more than $100 billion in real estate opportunities, but a real estate management company is warning investors of the continuing dangers and complexities of such investments.

Investors paid $6.6 billion during a one-year period in the four major commercial real estate markets — apartments, office buildings, retail and industrial — with a large percentage of the speculative sales from outside Texas, a study released Wednesday by Houston-based Duddlesten Realty Advisors Inc., and its sister company, Duddlesten Management Corp. shows.

"The collapse of the thrift industry was the major real estate story of the '80s," said Wayne B. Duddlesten, chairman of the Duddlesten companies. "The story for the '90s is how to create opportunity out of adversity in the forthcoming 'reconstruction' of the Texas marketplace."

Between Oct. 1, 1988, and Sept. 30, 1989, $6.6 billion of investor transactions were recorded in the four major markets in Texas' major cities, according to the study.

The Dallas-Fort Worth commercial real estate market accounted for $3 billion of investor transaction, followed by Houston at $2.6 billion, San Antonio with $584 million and Austin with $288 million, the study shows.

The $6.6 billion in transactions was composed of $2.88 billion, or 44 percent, for apartments; $2.09 billion, or 32 percent, for office buildings; $943 million, or 14 percent for industrial-warehouse; and $642 million, or 10 percent in retail, according to the study.

"Unquestionably, the best real estate opportunities in the country exist in Texas today, but positive economic indicators and bargain prices are not going to ensure successful investments in Texas. We are already seeing some second-tier foreclosures in the marketplace," said Duddlesten, whose companies operate more than $1.5 billion of income producing real estate assets in major Texas cities.

"While prospects are high for success in Texas real estate investment, failure can result from decisions made on instinct, cost comparisons with other markets, underestimation

Housing starts lowest since 1982

December decline drops eight percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing starts, slowed by record cold weather over much of the nation last month, declined 8 percent in December and ended the year at the lowest level since the recession year of 1982, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the December decline helped slow construction of new homes and apartments to 1.37 million units in 1989, compared to 1.49 million units the previous year, a 7.6 percent drop.

The 1.37 million starts last year were the lowest since 1982 when 1.06 million units were built. Both the Federal National Mortgage Association and the National Association of Home Builders are forecasting about 1.37 million starts in 1990.

Before the abnormally cold weather hit last month, the housing industry had been held back through much of this year by high interest rates, which have moderated recently.

Starts dropped from a high of 1.68 million units last January to 1.26 million units in September before rebounding to 1.43 million units in October. Starts fell again in November, to 1.34 million units, pulled down by a 15.3 percent decline in multi-family projects.

According to a survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., fixed-rate mortgages averaged 9.78 percent at the end of December after peaking over 11 percent last March.

The department said new homes and apartments were built at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.24 million units in December, down from a revised 1.34 million units in November.

Construction of single-family homes in December fell 10 percent to an annual rate of 904,000 units after falling 2 percent in November. That was the lowest since 862,000 units were started in December 1982.

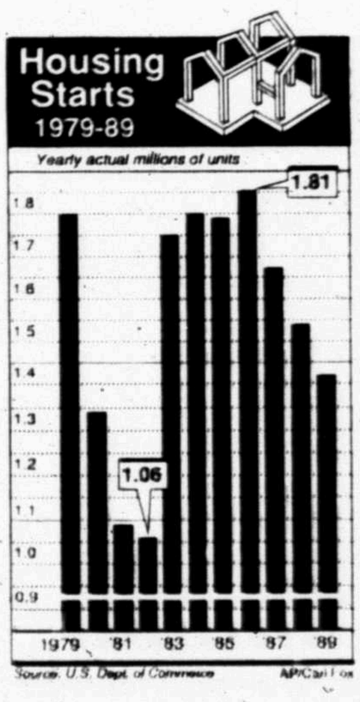

Apartment construction declined 2.4 percent to an annual rate of 331,000 units, compared to a 15.3 percent decline in November.

The Northeast posted the steepest decline, down 23.3 percent to 138,000 units. That was followed by a 10 percent drop in the South to 439,000 units and a 9.8 percent decline in the Midwest to 268,000 units.

Starts rose only in the West, where they gained 3.4 percent.

Applications for building permits, a barometer of future housing activity, bore potentially bad news for the New Year. They were down 0.4 percent from the previous month.

During all of 1989, 1.34 million permits were issued, the lowest amount since 1 million in 1982.

Does Super Bowl forecast the stock market

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — There are just five trading days until the Super Bowl is played, and unless share prices rise this week, the outcome could be bad news for San Francisco and for stock buyers.

Or it will be if two Super Bowl indicators work this year, as they did in 1989.

One uses the stock market to forecast the results of the football game. The other uses the results of the football game to forecast the stock market.

There is absolutely no reason to think a football game should have anything to do with the stock market.

But while there are thousands of market indicators, many of which make a lot more sense, few are better known on Wall Street than the Super Bowl theory.

And it is hard to find one with a better record.

The idea of using the market to forecast the football game is more recent.

First mentioned in this column a year ago, it prophesied that if the Dow Jones industrial average rises from the end of November until the game is played, the team whose city falls later in the alphabet will win.

Last year, it correctly predicted that the San Francisco 49ers would beat the Cincinnati Bengals.

That gave the indicator a record of being right in 13 of the last 15 years, failing only in 1982 and 1986.

Word processor differs from text editor

By DENNIS SEVER

Sever

Q. Can you explain the difference between a word processor and a text editor?

When the use of the video terminal was still new to computer scientists they recognized that there would be a need for some method to modify command files, program source files, documentation and messages.

After some development the first editors started appearing. These editors usually displayed a single line at a time and considerable mental prowess was required to become proficient in their use. Soon, these line editors were improved to provide full screen editing, or the ability to store large portions of the document in memory and display several lines at once.

In addition, their operation was generally simplified, and these screen editors became quite popular among programmers.

Eventually someone decided to add some features or some complimentary programs to the editors' capability and a generation of text formatters were provided.

These tools allowed for the centering of text, underlining, pagination, changing of font and pitch in mid document, and bold printing of text.

These test formatters were rapidly accepted by anyone who had an interest in publishing.

Shortly before the advent of the microcomputer, word processors were introduced. These programs allowed the author of the document to format his text as he composed or edited it. This effectively bypassed the test formatting stage.

Once the microcomputer invaded the American office, these word processors with a capability called WYSIWYG, (What You See is What You Get), became more and more important and more and more powerful, until today, they are often as important to a business as a telephone.

The difference in a text editor and a word processor is capability and complexity.

Text editors are used today mainly by programmers and such who are not in need of enhancing their text with underlining, double striking, or font-pitch changing. Text editors are normally much simpler to use and word processors usually incorporate all the capabilities of the text editors.

Text editors are correspondingly less expensive than word processors. Also, text editors produce simple ASCII TEXT files, whereas word processors must encode the text with special bits that make the file unreadable except through the word processor.

Wordstar, Word Perfect, Microsoft Word, PFS First Choice, PC Write, Samna, and Display Write are all word processors. EDLIN, vi, DFEDIT, and Borland's TURBO editor are all examples of text editors.

Oil futures decline

From Staff Reports

Futures prices for West Texas Intermediate crude oil February contract declined 29 cents from Friday's close to end at $23.36 per barrel this morning.

March contract price at midmorning was $21.87, down 21 cents from Friday's close.

The price of West Texas Intermediate crude oil for February contract surged 91 cents on Friday to end at $23.67 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

According to the Wall Street Journal, the news that OPEC had reduced oil production by 500,000 to 1 million barrels per day caused the price of oil to rise.

However, the March crude contract was up only 49 cents to $22.08, and the drive of the February contract may also be attributed to the fact that trading ended today.

Unleaded gasoline for February delivery was up 0.91 of one cent. February heating oil contract was up 1.81 cents per gallon to 63.66 cents.

Dollar trades calmly after forays

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was higher against other major currencies in Europe late this morning, boosted by the absence of central bank intervention.

Gold prices fell.

Foreign exchange traders said the dollar was trading calmly after earlier forays higher in Tokyo trading failed to bring out the central banks.

EXCHANGE RATES

- 1.7185 West German marks
- 1.5265 Swiss francs
- 5.8418 French francs
- 1.9366 Dutch guilders
- 1,278.50 Italian lire
- 1.1815 Canadian dollars

The dollar's rally is being fueled by continuing tensions in the Soviet Union and by increasing predictions that U.S. interest rates won't decline in the short-term as previously expected, dealers said.

"The certainty that U.S. rates are heading lower in the near term has disappeared," one Milan trader said.

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 0.09 yen to a closing 146.42 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a lower rate of 146.30 yen.

In London, the dollar gained against the British pound. It cost $1.6443 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6475 late Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $409.00 a troy ounce, down from $410.25 bid late Friday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $408.70.

In Zurich, the bid price was $408.65, unchanged from Friday's late bid.

Gold in Hong Kong fell $1.50 to close at a bid $407.85.

Silver fell in London to a bid price of $5.21 a troy ounce from Friday's $5.22.

Market closes zigzag week higher

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices closed out a zigzag week Friday with a moderate rise that analysts described as a technical rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials gained 11.52 to 2,677.90, reducing its loss for the week to 11.31 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 6 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 830 up, 656 down and 477 unchanged.

Stock prices began to stabilize late in Thursday's session, when buying of blue chips enabled the market to finish mixed after a broad early retreat.

Corporate earnings reports issued to date for the fourth quarter of 1989 have contained some even bigger disappointments than traders were expecting.

In addition, rising interest rates in Japan, West Germany and other industrialized countries have intensified speculation about the possibility of an international business slump in the months ahead.

Digital Equipment dropped 4¾ to 77¾ on top of a 5¾-point loss Thursday, when the company posted a quarterly earnings decline that was sharper than many observers had expected.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Court finds executives wrongly convicted

CHICAGO (AP) — Three former executives were wrongly convicted of murder and other charges in the death of an employee who suffered cyanide poisoning on the job, the Illinois appellate court ruled.

The 1985 case, believed to be the first in which corporate officials were convicted of murder in a job-related death, was sent back to Cook County Circuit Court. The appellate court ruling came Friday.

House to investigate Campeau bankruptcy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Judiciary Committee will investigate the bankruptcy filings by Campeau Corp.'s U.S. retail divisions and look into the consequences of leveraged buyouts, Chairman Jack Brooks announced.

The Texas Democrat said Friday the Judiciary subcommittee on economic and commercial law would hold hearings on the court-supervised reorganization of Federated Stores Inc., the renamed holding company of Campeau's U.S. operations.

The hearings also will examine the potential for a wave of new bankruptcies resulting from debt-financed takeovers in recent years, Brooks said.

New England bank expects $1 billion loss

BOSTON (AP) — Bank of New England Corp. said it expects to report a $1.05 billion loss for 1989 and said it was "actively pursuing" the sale of more than $6 billion in assets.

The company, New England's second-largest bank holding company after Bank of Boston Corp., issued a statement Friday that also said it expected to enter a consent order with federal regulators to reshape the company's operations.

Cable operator creates programming arm

DENVER (AP) — Tele-Communications Inc. stock rose in the wake of the announcement that the nation's lagest cable operator is considering spinning off a new company to handle its programming interests.

Industry analysts said the proposal will help the company deal with possible regulatory constraints and to continue to grow. In national over-the-counter trading Friday, TCI rose $2.37½ a share to $17.37½.

Mass transit employee drug testing denied

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court threw out a bid by the Urban Mass Transportation Administration to test local transit system employees for drug use, including random testing.

The U.S. District Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia said Friday the agency had exceeded its congressionally mandated authority in trying to impose uniform nationwide rules on local transit authorities.

American Federal head quits

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — William E. Gibson resigned unexpectedly Friday as chairman, president, chief executive and a director of the American Federal Savings Bank.

American Federal, a savings institution with $3 billion in assets, was created from the merger of 12 Texas savings and loan associations that had received $1.3 billion in federal assistance.

It is owned by Lone Star Technologies, which invested $48 million to acquire it when it was created in August 1988.

Gibson was traveling and could not be reached for comment.

Lawrence E. Huber, executive vice president and chief financial officer since last February, has been put in charge of the institution's operations, the company said.

Under Gibson's tenure, American Federal's branches were reduced to 26, from 69.

But that would probably not occur for at least three years, she said.

In a speech to the builders, Ms. Alexander estimated that housing starts, including single-family homes and apartment buildings, will average 1.2 million a year through 1994, or 500,000 below what the industry would have produced without the lending constraints.

Many economists had predicted that new starts would be flat to slightly higher in the next few years.

But some economists told reporters that they were likely to lower their estimates because of recent rises in interest rates and the financing difficulties of builders.

Ms. Alexander said a large company typically needs to borrow $140 million to finance a 1,000-unit development with an average sale price of $200,000 for each home.

Under the new rules, only about 15 savings institutions are large enough to be allowed to make a $50 million loan to a builder, she said.

"We are hearing increasing reports from builders, including some very large companies, that are having problems" obtaining loans, she said.

She said one California bank, which she did not name, will only make loans based on conservative appraisals set at 1987 prices.

Her remark drew gasps from some in an audience of more than 200.

That approach means builders must put more equity into new projects to keep pace with land costs, fees imposed by local governments and other expenses that have risen sharply since 1987.

With many private investors also wary of real estate financing, particularly in the Southwest and parts of the Northeast, some builders are looking to individuals and financial institutions in Japan, Britain, West Germany, France, Canada and elsewhere for loans and equity.

Publisher denies rumors of bankruptcy plans

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Rumors on Wall Street that heavily indebted publisher Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc. would file for bankruptcy sent HBJ stock plummeting Thursday and prompted a rare company denial.

HBJ "is not a candidate for Chapter 11" bankruptcy protection, William Jovanovich, the company's reclusive chairman, said in a statement released after the market closed.

Jovanovich made his statement to the Dow Jones Professional Investor Report, a New York news service, after the Orlando-based company sought to calm market jitters with another statement early in the afternoon.

The bankruptcy rumors, Jovanovich said, came in response to the publicized problems of other indebted companies, an apparent reference to bankruptcy filings Monday by Campeau Corp.'s Allied Stores Corp. and Federated Department Stores Inc.

Huge sales of HBJ stock early in the day fueled speculation surrounding the publisher.

HBJ stock, which traded at nearly $10 a share just three months ago, traded as low as $2 before finishing 12½ cents down at $2.875, a record low.

After the stock hit its low point, the company issued its first statement saying that operating income and cash flow in 1990 would be "significantly higher" than what HBJ will post for 1989.

HBJ is not due to release 1989 earnings until February or March. In 1988, the company posted a loss of $126.5 million because of high interest payments associated with its debt.

HBJ has about $1.6 billion of junk bonds outstanding. The company borrowed nearly $3 billion as part of a frantic recapitalization 2½ years ago to repell a hostile takeover bid by British publisher Robert Maxwell.

Last year, HBJ sold its six theme parks to Anheuser-Busch Cos. Inc. for $1.1 billion in an effort to pare its debt.

BOWL

The Dow was at 2,706.27 at the end of November, 28.37 points higher than its close last week.

Unless it manages to regain that lost ground this week, the market theory forecasts a win by the Denver Broncos over San Francisco.

The much more widely followed Super Bowl indicator holds that a 49ers victory would be a bullish market indicator, because the San Francisco franchise came out of the old National Football League.

A Denver win, on the other hand, would provide a bearish signal, because that team used to be in the American Football League.

Such ideas are, of course, nonsense.

Still, proponents of the theory note that in measuring market performance from Super Bowl to Super Bowl, the theory has failed after only 2 of the 23 Super Bowl games.

Those failures came after the games in 1970, when a Kansas City (AFL) win was nevertheless followed by a rising year for stocks, and after the 1987 win by the New York Giants, when the October market crash decimated stock prices.

It is, of course, a hallmark of the indicator invention game to change the indicator's rules to produce as good a record as possible.

Both of the failures of the Super Bowl theory can be finessed away by a simple June rule.

In each of the years it failed, it worked from the Super Bowl through the end of June.

In 1970, the market was down 14 percent from Super Bowl time through June; in 1987, there was a 15 percent rise over that period.

So the newest version calls for following the indicator and cashing out at the end of June if it worked, while waiting for the next Super Bowl if the market is down as of June.

If that does not work this year, no doubt someone will come up with another modification to prove that in retrospect it really worked again.

One reason for the popularity of the Super Bowl theory is that in recent years the old NFL teams have dominated the game, having won 5 in a row coming into this week's showdown, and 12 of the last 15.

For understandable reasons, Wall Street prefers bullish indicators that might persuade customers to buy stocks.

of the complexity of the marketplace and overestimation on the rate of return."

While the real estate assets held by the Resolution Trust Fund, which constitutes the bulk of the $100 billion figure, has been the principal focus of attention, it is not the sole holder, Duddlesten said.

More than $10 billion of unmarketed real estate assets are included in more than 200 savings and loans closed under the Southwest Plan. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. has a $16 billion real estate portfolio, regional and special asset banks hold another $20 billion to $30 billion.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

In 'street name' account interest credited to you

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have stocks and bonds in various companies. One day, I went to a brokerage office with a bond due to mature that month. The people there suggested I bring in all my holdings for them to review. I did and now all my investments are being transferred to the brokerage firm.

Did I do wrong? What are the fees for managing my investment portfolio? Am I losing interest because of this transfer?

Doyle

A. It's clear that you put your securities into a "street name" account, meaning they now are registered in the brokerage firm's name. The brokerage is your "nominee" — the owner of record. You are the "beneficial owner" — the real owner.

As a result, dividends and interest payments on your securities go to the brokerage and are credited to your account there. You'll receive statements, most likely monthly, listing the securities and money in the account.

If you want cash, you can get it from the brokerage. You might instruct the brokerage to send you a check each time a dividend or interest payment arrives. Or you can arrange to have that money sent to you monthly.

Most brokerage firms open money market mutual fund accounts into which customers' cash is deposited. If your street name account includes a money market mutual fund or a similar arrangement, you can write checks to draw money out of the account.

Whether you "did wrong" or right depends on your situation and preference. Lots of people have street name accounts for convenience. With such an account, you don't have to worry about losing stock and bond certificates. It's easier to sell a security, because you don't have to deliver a certificate to complete the sale. As a general rule, street name accounts are best suited for investors who buy and sell securities frequently and/or who like to turn paperwork and record-keeping over to others.

However, other folks prefer to have securities registered in their names and tucked away in safe deposit boxes. That eliminates delays in collecting dividends and interest, as well as receiving stockholder reports, annual meeting notices and other communications from the companies in which they have invested.

You shouldn't "lose" any interest or dividends with a street name account, but some brokerages are awfully slow sending that money to customers.

You might or might not have to pay a fee on your new account. Different brokerages have different fee arrangements. That should have been settled when you opened the account. If, as you indicate, the brokerage is going to "manage" the account, you can expect to pay a fee or frequent commissions. My advice is to go back to the brokerage office and have your specific account explained in far greater detail. If you don't like what you hear, cancel the street name arrangement, have the securities registered in your name and the certificates returned to you.

Q. In reply to a reader who was unhappy with a bank that wanted him to get a separate identification number for his revocable trust account, you wrote the following:

"The Internal Revenue Service confirms you must obtain a distinct taxpayer identification number — TIN, as it's called — for a trust. You cannot use your Social Security number on the trust. And you must file a separate federal income tax return — Form 1041 — for the trust."

I'm afraid the IRS misled you. That answer would be correct for irrevocable trusts. But U.S. Treasury Regulation 301.6109-1(a) (2) states the grantor's SS number is the appropriate TIN for a revocable trust. And Treasury Reg. 1.671-4 states income from a revocable trust is to be reported on the grantor's Form 1040.

Shouldn't you publish a correction?

A. Yes. Here it is. I'll do my mea culpas for all readers — especially the many lawyers, accountants, estate planners and others who spotted that goof and wrote to correct it — as you did. Thank you.

Haiti church leader criticizes military government

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A church leader today accused the military government of undermining democratic reforms by ordering a wave of arrests, beatings and the exile of political opponents.

"They have made rubbish of the constitution," said Roman Catholic Bishop Willy Romelus on the church-run Radio Soleil. He encouraged his listeners, however, to keep up their spirits.

Of Haiti's six main radio stations, only Radio Soleil, the Protestant Radio Lumiere and the state-run National Radio were broadcasting news this morning under a state of siege declared by military ruler Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril. Radio is the main source of news in the country.

In its toughest crackdown on the opposition since taking power in a September 1988 soldiers' revolt, the government arrested and forced into exile seven prominent political activists during the weekend. Dozens of others were arrested but were thought to have been released.

Port-au-Prince, the bustling capital of more than 1 million people, remained calm. Shops and schools opened as usual and traffic was normal.

Critics said the crackdown indicates Avril intends to renege on a promise to hold free elections in October.

At a news conference Sunday in Miami, newly exiled activist Hubert de Ronceray said Avril promised the elections only "to get help from foreign countries."

"There's no possibility of a democracy with Mr. Avril. He's a dictator," said the conservative leader.

The state of siege was declared after an army colonel, his wife and servants were killed Friday by unidentified gunmen just 100 yards from de Ronceray's home.

De Ronceray, deported Saturday, claimed he was the intended victim. Other opposition activists speculated Avril was using the killings as a pretext to derail the transition to democracy he promised after coming to power in a September 1988 soldiers' revolt.

De Ronceray, 65, said that after his arrest he was kicked, clubbed with guns, and had a cigarette jammed in his eye. The eye was red as he spoke to reporters.

The other exiles were also beaten before they were deported, according to the activists and other sources.

The government offered no comment on those reports.

In Washington, the State Department condemned the state of siege and arrests and urged the Haitian government to reiterate its commitment to free elections. The United States suspended $60 million in aid to the impoverished country after Haiti's last attempt at democratic elections was thwarted by armed thugs aided by soldiers who massacred voters in 1987.

Louis Roy, a prominent civic leader and an author of Haiti's 1987 constitution, "was carrying a small suitcase, kissed the ground two times and mounted the stairway to exile," a relative told The Associated Press.

Roy, 74, founder of the Haitian Red Cross, flew aboard a commercial flight to Miami. "I was hit in both ears and full in the face in front of the duty officer at the police headquarters," he said upon arrival.

Max Bourjolly, second-in-command of the Haitian Communist party, was arrested at his home and exiled, apparently to France, said party leader Rene Theodore.

Family members and sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said the others exiled Sunday were Aby Brun of the center-left Congress for Democratic Movement, Sylvain Jolibois of the small radical Jean-Jacques Dessalines Group, and radical activists Michel Legros and Max Montreuil.

They said Brun was flown to Miami and the others to the Dominican Republic, which shares the Caribbean island of Hispaniola with Haiti.

Popular radical leader Sylvio Claude of the Haitian Christian Democratic Party and Gerard Philippe-Auguste, head of the Movement to Organize the Country party, went into hiding.

De Ronceray and Roy are not new to exile. They spent several years in Montreal during the rule of the late dictator Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, whose son continued the 29-year family dynasty until fleeing to France in 1986 after a popular uprising.

In announcing the state of siege Saturday night, the government suspended a law forbidding forced exile and renewed an entry visa requirement for Haitians returning from abroad.

De Ronceray claimed the colonel killed near his house, Andre Neptune, was shot by attackers sent out to kill him. He said he had changed his own schedule because of a warning Avril wanted him "destroyed," and the officer was slain while in a car similar to his.

Human rights activist Jean-Claude Bajeux, who arrived in Puerto Rico from Haiti on Friday, said he suspected either army rivals or the drug mafia were behind the slayings.

"The coincidence is significant. For this killing to happen now and they immediately use it to round up (opposition leaders), it's a typically Duvalierist scheme."

He was referring to the network of Duvalier supporters left in this former French colony, where 80 percent of the 5 million people live in poverty.

Paul Latortue, a Haitian economist at the University of Puerto Rico, said the weekend crackdown indicates Avril "has allied himself with the Duvalierists," whom he accused of killing Neptune.

"The government will now either show its teeth and demonstrate there'll be no elections, or have elections without the opposition's participation, with controlled candidates," Latortue said.

East European royals want to return home

By ROLAND PRINZ

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The chants of Eastern Europe's pro-democracy protesters as they ousted former Communist overlords have been sweet music to members of long-deposed royal families.

The revolutionary changes of the past year have buoyed their hopes, nurtured during decades in exile, to reclaim their national stature and perhaps even return to the throne.

Stifled under decades of Communist rule, their aspirations have now even gained some support at home. When a crowd spotted Otto von Hapsburg on a street in Budapest, Hungary, in April, it chanted "Long Live the King!"

Romania's King Michael I waits for his people's call, and Albania's King Leka I would like to come home from South Africa.

Indeed, von Hapsburg and King Michael appear to have a chance at public office — if only honorary — in their homelands.

The prospect of restoring royalty, of course, is unthinkable to many citizens of Eastern Europe. Monarchists seem to be in the minority.

Hungary plans to establish a multi-party democracy this year, and Romania has tentative plans to follow suit.

In Romania, even the word "dynasty" smacks of repression, reminding most people of the clan of executed dictator Nicolae Ceausescu. He ruled like an absolute monarch, installing family members in key positions.

Bernd Posselt, von Hapsburg's spokesman, seemed to agree with public speculation that his boss might stand a chance to become Hungary's state president this year.

He said "all options are being kept open, and the matter is again under review."

The aide spoke to The Associated Press in a recent telephone interview from Strasbourg, France. Hapsburg, the eldest son of King Karl VI of Hungary — also Emperor Karl I of Austria — is now a Bavarian deputy in the European Parliament.

After the collapse of the Austrian Empire, the Hapsburg family had to leave Austria and settled in Switzerland. Two attempts by Otto's father to restore the kingdom in Hungary in 1919 and 1920 failed.

During his first official visit to Hungary in February, von Hapsburg, who is fluent in Hungarian, received a hero's welcome.

During the April visit, thousands of Hungarians cheered him again to chants of "Long Live The King!" as Otto and members of his family emerged from a church following a requiem for his mother Zita, the last queen of Hungary, who died in March at age 96.

In Romania, the return of 67-year-old King Michael is seen by some Romanians as a guarantee that the Communist Party will never again come to power.

On Dec. 22, the day Ceausescu was overthrown, the exiled king said he was ready to return to his country as head of a constitutional monarchy.

"I have been waiting for this for 40 years," he told a hastily convened news conference in Geneva, near his home in exile. "If people want me to come back, of course, I will come back."

Michael was forced to abdicate in December 1947 amid the prospect of civil war and pressure from the Kremlin and its Romanian Communist allies.

Two of King Michael's exiled daughters, Sophie and Margarita, were privately visiting Romania on Sunday.

Margarita was asked at a news conference whether she was surprised by being met at the airport Thursday by a group of Romanians shouting "Long Live The King!"

"I didn't know what to expect," she said. "We were Romanians coming home — that's the one thing that struck me."

She stressed, however, that she and her sister "have not come here in any bid to restore the monarchy — I want that to be absolutely clear."

"My father has waited for 42 years to come back to his country as a Romanian, but as to when or how — I don't think I can answer right now," she said.

King Simeon II of Bulgaria, where the monarchy was abolished in 1946, said Wednesday he believes his return to his homeland would be premature.

"I'm no one to dictate or to impose conditions ... It's not up to me ... Anyway, it's too early for this question," he said.

"And in another way I would at this point be much more useful abroad with my contacts and connections," the 52-year-old ex-king told the AP from his home in Madrid.

By contrast, the Albanian would-be king is eagerly waiting for his hour of triumph at his home in a suburb of Johannesburg.

King Leka, an exile for all his 50 years, believes political upheaval in the Soviet bloc will ignite an uprising among the people of Albania, the last hard-line Communist state in the region.

Reports in Yugoslav and Greek news media about recent unrest and casualties in Shkodra and other Albanian cities have been denied by Albanian officials.

If a revolution comes, Leka says, he would be proud to follow the footsteps of his father, King Zog I.

Harold Brooks-Baker, publishing director of Burke's Peerage, the British bible of Europe's bluest blood, said last week that "this upheaval in Eastern Europe is the last chance, in my opinion, that these contenders have to re-establish their thrones."

"The fact that King Michael and Otto von Hapsburg are immensely popular with political groups pushing for their restoration has moved this from fairy-tale stage to world stage," he told the AP in London.

Grand Duke Vladimir, 72-year-old head of the Imperial House of Romanov and heir to the Russian throne, has even urged restoration of the Russian monarchy.

On Friday, at a ball the Russian royal family held in London to raise funds for the Russian Orthodox Church there, Vladimir told a reporter: "Russian people would think quite seriously about a monarchial form of government."
