Christmas ends at church door for most Cubans

HAVANA (AP) — The sweet soothing tones of "Silent Night" floated through Havana's cavernous cathedral last week. But Christmas in Cuba stops at the church door.

Up and down the tired old streets of this communist capital, the lights, carols and cheer of Christmas a generation ago have disappeared.

The only public symbol of the great Christian holiday is a tree glowing above the seaside Malecon Boulevard — from atop the six-story U.S. diplomatic mission.

Last Sunday in the weather-pocked, 279-year-old cathedral, volunteers hung tiny bells and ornamental balls dating from before Fidel Castro's revolutionary triumph 25 years ago. A plump, middle-aged choir mistress practiced Christmas hymns on an aged Hammond organ.

Waiting for Mass in a cathedral pew, a 23-year-old woman's eyes lighted up as she told a visiting American what she had heard from her father, a Miami resident, about Christmas in the United States.

"I have a little Christmas tree," she whispered. "He sent me a green artificial tree."

She asked that her name not be used, saying she might be questioned by the authorities for talking to a foreign journalist. Around Havana's churches, other Catholics expressed similar fears.

Like Christmas, religion itself is subdued in today's Cuba.

The Havana communists have not tried to stamp out the churches. But as atheists, they seek to discourage them. As a result, the Roman Catholic Church in Cuba, never as potent a force as in other Latin American countries, survives under Castroism, but in a shrunken form.

The government allows no religious activities outside church buildings; religious instruction in the schools was ended after the revolution, and churchmen complain they have difficulty getting their Bibles and other materials printed.

'Mother Church' needs help

BALTIMORE (AP) — The pastor at the Lovely Lane Methodist Church fears this year's nationally televised Christmas Eve service could be the last for the home of the denomination's founding congregation in America.

Only 10 percent of the more than $9 million needed to renovate the 100-year-old, five-story-high granite building has been raised despite frantic efforts by the Rev. Emora T. Brannon and volunteers during the past two years.

"One of the problems with the restoration is that the whole guts of the church must be redone. We're still using the 1880s heating system and it's just not adequate anymore," Brannon said.

"The fund-raising is at its most critical stage — if it doesn't take a clear change for the better, it's not impossible our congregation won't be here in another year," he added.

Brannon said he hopes tonight's midnight service, telecast by CBS, will be the turning point he seeks, possibly motivating the nation's Methodists whose donations are necessary to save the Mother Church.

It was in the Lovely Lane congregation's original meeting house on Dec. 24, 1784, that a conference of ministers organized the American Methodist church, and elected Francis Asbury as their first bishop.

Stained glass windows bear the names of each pastor who has served at Lovely Lane, beginning with Asbury's appointment in 1774 prior to his election as bishop.

The present church is the first designed by famed architect Stanford White.

Koreans observe Christmas with all-night celebration

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — With most of their families thousands of miles away, Koreans from the Permian Basin meet with others of their nationality for an all-night celebration of Christmas.

The Korean Mission, which holds services in First Baptist Church in Odessa and Crestview Baptist Church in Midland, will be observing Yule Time at their Odessa location tonight.

The event will feature a fitting mixture of American and Korean customs. A large meal will start off festivities including a special church service, games, contests and caroling.

Those overhearing the Korean carolers will recognize melodies of Christmas songs and hymns, but the verses have been translated to Korean.

Among those invited are about 80 members of the Korean Mission directed by the Rev. Sung R. Park and other Koreans living in the area. Because of the distance between family members remaining in their homeland and those that have moved to the U.S., these celebrations are even more significant to the participants.

"Everybody has that situation, so they really like to stick together," explained Unju Park, Rev. Park's daughter, "That's why we meet on Christmas Eve all night."

Rev. Park, who holds degrees at three Korean colleges and a master's degree in theology from the Berean Christian College and Seminary in Wichita, Kan., was ordained a Baptist minister at First Baptist less than three years ago.

After sharing in a potluck meal with the group, Park will lead the group through a midnight service. Singing contests will separate the aspiring men from the choir boys.

Groups from Midland and Odessa will square off in the 5,000-year-old Korean game, called "Yute Play". Everyone from toddlers to oldsters will be sharing in good-natured competition.

Players in turn throw four sticks, round on three sides and flat on the fourth, into the air. The number of sticks landing flat-side-up determines how many spaces the player can advance his or her token.

Yute, a game of chance, plays no favorites. "Older folks, they love to play. Everybody enjoys it," said Ms. Park, her father's translator.

Once the crowd has had its fill of Yute, they'll pile into a First Baptist bus and go caroling at area Korean residences.

While many young Texans are asleep in their beds dreaming of sugar plums and new toys, the carolers will be crooning the night away in Korean. "We go everywhere in Midland and Odessa," she said.

Not everyone in attendance will be Oriental. "International couples," which Park estimated make up half of the group's married folk, usually consist of a Korean wife and a native American husband.

"They (the husbands) enjoy it," observed Ms. Park, "Even if they don't understand, they seem to have fun."

Wedding these couples is a trick for Park. He must alternate English and Korean at the appropriate time, although he admitted knowing "not much" English.

A fun-loving people, the Koreans also have planned a special New Year's Eve service — this one at their Midland church. A meal, a service more elaborate than Christmas Eve's and more Yute will help the Koreans welcome the new year.

Specially made rice cakes, of a concoction including eggs and meat, will feed the New Year's revelers. They toast with a non-alcoholic, sweet rice wine.

Ancient custom is followed when the young of the congregation honor their elders with a visit. Prayers of health and prosperity are shared.

"Han-bok's," the traditional holiday dressing gowns, add color to the occasions. Each gown is made of silk and is decorated with ornate embroidery.

The Korean Mission offers weekly church services, Fridays in Midland and Sundays in Odessa.

Christmas paper planned

In a change from tradition, the Reporter-Telegram will publish on Christmas Day this year. The Christmas edition will be distributed Sunday morning as on any other Sunday.

Although most of the newspaper's offices will be closed Monday, the Reporter-Telegram will be published and delivered as an afternoon edition that day.

The Classified Advertising Department will be open from 8 to 10 a.m. for placing, correcting or canceling ads and should be called at 682-6222. The Circulation Department will be open to receive calls from 8 a.m. until 7:30 p.m. That number is 682-5311.

Regular hours for all departments will be resumed on Tuesday.

Hunger real problem for elderly

Part Four

EDITOR'S NOTE: The subject of hunger in America made recent headlines when Edwin Meese III, presidential counselor, gave his views on how little hunger the Task Force on Food Assistance has documented. This is the fourth in a series of articles on hunger with contributions from Hearst newspapers across the country.

By PETER PICHASKE
Hearst Feature Service

On a typical day, Virginia Mayes has a cup of soup for lunch and a few string beans and instant mashed potatoes for dinner.

That's it.

"Once in a while, hot dogs or hamburger meat," said Mrs. Mayes. "But I have to be careful. I have to buy the very cheapest I can get. There's not much money to go around, you know."

Dundalk widow Mrs. Mayes, 63, is as likely as anyone to be hungry.

Why? She is elderly, she lives alone and she is on a fixed income — specifically, $376 a month in Social Security benefits.

"THERE ARE two groups for whom hunger is a continuing problem," said Ann Miller, who has run the Maryland Food Bank since it opened four years ago. "Single-parent households headed by women and the elderly.

"So many elderly are out there trying to live on Social Security. The money is minimal and they have to pay rent, heat, medical bills. It is a real problem."

"Hunger doesn't just affect the elderly poor," said Janette Martin, chief of the Community Services and Nutrition Division of the Maryland Office on Aging. "It affects the elderly living alone, the elderly who've lost a spouse, those who have ailments or can't get out.

"We see malnutrition in all classes of elderly."

Area social workers brim with horror stories about hungry senior citizens.

In western Baltimore County, they talk of the woman they discovered living on toast and tea. In the city, they talk of the elderly, lonely and afraid, who refuse to leave their rooms at the St. James Terrace Apartments for two weeks at a time and subsist on whatever is on hand.

IN GOVANS, they talk of the 83-year-old widow who existed on bread and milk. In Essex, they talk of a woman in her 70s who walked one mile to and from a senior citizen center every day for the only meals she ate.

Though stories abound, the extent of hunger among the elderly is difficult to measure. There are, the experts say, so many factors.

Pope condemns 'war mentality'

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Warning that men and not missiles kill, Pope John Paul II called Friday for world leaders to free themselves from the "slavery" of power worship and a war mentality.

While calling for a fundamental change in heart for man, John Paul criticized "pacifism which is cowardice" in the face of injustice, the arms race and rich countries that spend millions on arms while poor countries starve.

"The contemporary world is, as it were, imprisoned in a web of tensions between what is commonly called East and West," he said in a special message commemorating the Roman Catholic Church's 17th World Peace day on Jan. 1.

The pontiff said the world today is plagued by "implacable wars," "fanatical terrorism" and widespread violations of basic human rights.

BUT HE added, "It is man who kills and not his sword, or in our day, his missiles."

In his appeal to world leaders, which was released in English, German, French, Italian, Spanish and Portuguese, John Paul condemned ideological systems and leaders that enslave people in the name of progress and that "shut themselves up within a war mentality."

"Sometimes their unconditional attachment to these systems becomes a form of power worship, the worship of strength and wealth, a form of slavery that takes away freedom from the leaders themselves," he said in the 16-page document, titled "From a New Heart, Peace is Born."

Without dealing in specifics, John Paul said world leaders must avoid "political opportunism" and "dangerous adventures."

The "dreadful risk of the arms of massive destruction must lead to the working out of a process of cooperation and disarmament which will make war in practice unthinkable," he added.

THE POLISH-BORN pontiff has frequently criticized both capitalistic and communist systems of government during his five-year pontificate.

But John Paul said he was not advocating passive acceptance of injustice just for the sake of peace.

"The person who deeply desires peace rejects any kind of pacificism which is cowardice or the simple preservation of tranquillity," he said without elaborating.

He also warned that those who suppress basic human rights will always be opposed by those who have "the courage to intercede for others who suffer (and who) refuse to surrender in the face of injustice."

John Paul also said that the East-West conflict has tended to overshadow an equally serious rift between North and South, signifying developed and underdeveloped nations.

HE CRITICIZED wealthy nations which ignore the plight of poor countries "locked in a condition of underdevelopment" while "the arms race continues to absorb unjustifiable resources that could be better used."

"In the final analysis, therefore, the fact of recourse to violence and war comes from man's sin, from his blindness of spirit and the disorder of his heart, which invoke the motives of injustice in order to spread or harden tension or conflict," he said.

"It is in the face of these enormous problems that I propose the theme of a renewal of heart," he said.

"It is the heart of man that must be renewed, in order to renew systems, institutions and methods," he said, adding that no lasting peace is possible "if there were not a true change of heart."

"In a word, the new heart is the heart which allows itself to be inspired by love," John Paul said.

He called for a true "freedom of spirit...in order to become conscious of the sterile attitudes of the past" and ideologies that reduce "man and history to a closed system of materialistic forces, which rely on nothing but the force of arms and the power of the economy."

Marines get gifts, cards from home

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Santa Claus dashed through the dust in a military ambulance Friday and handed out thousands of presents to the U.S. Marines at Beirut International Airport.

"The reindeer had to cover quite a distance to get to you guys this year," said Marine Chaplain Thomas Falkenthal. Dressed in a red, padded suit and a white beard, he shouted over the blare of "Silent Night" from the tape deck beside him.

The Marines eagerly lined up for the brightly-wrapped packages as Falkenthal, a Roman Catholic priest from Chicago, made his rounds at the bunkers and gave out packages from the back of the camouflaged ambulance.

"It makes you feel good that the people back in the states are thinking of you," said Cpl. Matthew Collins, 23, of Lexington, Ky., as he opened a box filled with pretzels, cheese crackers and foil-wrapped chocolate Santas. "This will give me something to munch on later."

The Marines in Beirut have received more than 20,000 packages and thousands of holiday cards and letters from schools, church groups, families and individuals in the United States, said Marine spokesman Maj. Dennis Brooks, 38, of Detroit.

Santa's visit was one of several events for the 5,600 Marines assigned to Lebanon as part of the multinational force. Comedian Bob Hope is giving a series of performances for the Marines on ships offshore, and weekend religious services and a turkey dinner are planned.

Marine volunteers have been sorting through 15,000 pounds of incoming mail a day to get it ready for distribution to the troops, Brooks said. Often it comes addressed simply: "The Marines, Beirut."

AP Laserphoto

Navy Chaplain, Thomas Falkinthal of Chicago hands a care package present to Marine at the base in Beirut.

Falkenthal said he thought the Marines symbolized the Christmas spirit of giving and self-sacrifice. "I think each and every one of them realizes that, in spite of the personal danger, what they do means peace for others," he said.

Cpl. Garrett Tatum, 21, of Charlotte, N.C., got a 14-inch plastic Christmas tree. On his knees in the red clay of the base, Tatum quickly decked the tree with the red beads and a gold garland that had been enclosed. "Everything but snow," he said.

Staff Sgt. Edward Peerenboom, 27, of Milwaukee, Wis., agreed: "Things like this really make it feel like Christmas." Peerenboom added, though, that the little tree also reminded him "that my kids, my three kids back in Jacksonville, N.C., get the job of trimming our family tree."

Lance Cpl. Edward Monroe, 21, of Sacramento, Calif., got shampoo, a nail clipper, peanut candy and a note pad and pen. "I won't have any excuse not to write letters home," he said, "or to write to the family in Florida that sent this box to thank them for thinking of me."

Lance Cpl. Jay Savage, 20, of Atlanta, holding a box of homemade cookies from the states, said he'd share them with the other Marines in his unit. And he reminisced:

"If I was home, I would be sitting around the tree with my parents looking at the fireplace and talking about old times. Next Christmas, I will be doing that and I will be telling them all about Christmas here."

Christmas ends at church door for most people in Cuba

Believers are banned from Communist Party membership — and hence from a key avenue to advancement in Cuban society.

The harassment can be petty: The highly detailed tourist map of Havana points out movie theaters and popular bars, but not the city's historic churches.

Exiled Cuban churchmen say that before the revolution more than 90 percent of Cubans were baptized, but this has dropped to under 50 percent. The number of priests on the island has declined to about 200, down from a pre-revolution clergy of 720, they say.

Stubborn remnants of Cuba's Catholic tradition cling to the island, however.

A 70-foot statue of Christ erected by pre-Castro dictator Fulgencio Batista still stands on a harbor hillside. Lovely colonial churches, though fraying for lack of upkeep, still dominate Old Havana. And pangs for a less secular past still pain some Cuban hearts.

Devout Catholics told a reporter that on Christmas Eve — "Nochebuena," or "The Good Night" — they would try to scrape together the makings of the traditional meal of roast pork with black beans and white rice, and nougat candy.

Some food items either are scarce, such as the traditional suckling pig, or are out of many Cubans' financial reach.

After the meal, as midnight approaches, families planned to walk to church for the "Misa del Gallo" — "Mass of the Rooster."

"Some would like to decorate their houses, but what's the use?" a Cuban journalist said. "There are no lights, or ornaments or trees available in the stores."

Cubans who adopted American Christmas customs once bought natural trees shipped from the United States. But U.S.-Cuban trade has been frozen for more than 20 years.

A few blocks from the cathedral, at La Merced church, a jewel of 18th-century frescoes and soaring columns, the Rev. Alfredo Enriquez said he expected about 500 people for the Christmas Eve midnight Mass.

"In the old days we would get 1,500," he said.

The silver-haired priest, sitting in his office off a leafy, peaceful inner garden, reflected on his church's plight.

"...The church here lives poorly but we live. You can see we can't keep up all the things we need," he said. "The religious education of the young is a very serious problem. There is no example in the home, no example by the parents."

On this day, fourth Sunday of Advent, about 50 people gathered for 10:30 a.m. Mass in a small bright chapel in a corner of the cathedral. A dozen were teen-agers. About half were elderly. In its song and prayer, the congregation showed the fervor of a small band of true believers.

The vast majority of Cubans, meanwhile, slept late, strolled or visited on this warm Sunday morning.

"Yes, Christmas was nice in the old days," said passer-by Roberto Gonzalez, a retired brewery mechanic. "All the old customs, the big meals. But times change, things change....The revolution is marvelous."

Methodists' church needs help

"It would be tragic if, in the Methodist bicentennial year, the building erected during our centennial and the congregation that is known as the Mother Church to all Methodists should fade away. That's no way to celebrate a bicentennial," Brannon said.

Despite a call to the 9.6 million members of the United Methodist Church for $1 contributions to the restoration, only $430,000 has been raised. A similar amount has been donated by members and local supporters of the congregation.

"I hope that rather than people deciding to do nothing, it's just that they know nothing (about the church)," Brannon said.

"If we can save this building with all its history and beauty, it will be a rallying point for our rebirth," he said. "But if we fail, the problems of the building will crush whoever tried to use it."

Belfast's Christmas 'brightest' in years

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Battle-weary Belfast is quietly celebrating one of its brightest Yule seasons in 14 years of sectarian "troubles." Sales are booming, the streets are ablaze with color.

And many in Belfast say that best of all, there have been no bomb blasts like the one at Harrods department store in London.

"It has been phenomenal — busy shops, bright lights, the carol singers," said Lord Mayor Alfie Ferguson. "This is a city where the traditional spirit of Christmas can really be seen. Indeed, I would say that this is our brightest Christmas in every respect."

Christmas lights and decorations adorn Belfast's usually grim streets. There is a huge tree in front of City Hall, where more than 10,000 people gathered Tuesday for the annual Yule season fireworks display — a cascade of light and color with a military band providing background music.

EVEN WITH unemployment above 21.5 percent, the tills have been ringing in the city-center shops.

"Business is well up on last year," said Sandy Brown, president of the Belfast Chamber of Trade. "A big spending spree started right at the beginning of September — and it just got stronger and stronger."

Goods in Northern Ireland are up to 25 percent cheaper this year than in the Republic of Ireland, because of differences in the inflation rate and sales tax. Hundreds of people from the Republic have journeyed north for holiday shopping.

James Prior, Britain's Northern Ireland Secretary, and his wife Jane did their Christmas shopping in Belfast this year.

"My wish for 1984 is to find ways for the divided community to learn to live together — even if they cannot agree with each other," Prior told reporters after buying a deerstalker hat and a turkey.

"I'M DELIGHTED to see the shops so busy. A degree of normality does exist, you know, in Belfast."

Another Londoner visiting the province was Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, flying over on Friday and doing her bit to keep up morale among the 10,500 British troops in Ulster.

Gerry Adams, head of the Irish Republican Army's political arm, Sinn Fein, warned in his Christmas message there would be no peace until the troops go home. The Catholic IRA is fighting to drive the British from this predominantly Protestant province and unite it with the mostly Catholic Irish Republic.

But Adams sent Christmas greetings — "to Irish people at home and abroad, to political prisoners and their families and all those who have been bereaved as a result of the ongoing war" — and a hope that "all parties to the conflict" could work out a peaceful solution to Ireland's woes in the year ahead.

There's been no formal Christmas truce this year in Northern Ireland. The last such agreement was five years ago. But a cease-fire of sorts seems to have held throughout the province in the days leading up to Christmas.

THE LAST sectarian killing was Dec. 12. Last week, 10 firebombs caused extensive damage to shops in Newry, 40 miles south of Belfast on the Irish border. But Belfast itself has been free of incidents — unlike London, where an IRA bomb ripped through a streetful of Christmas shoppers outside Harrods department store, killing five people and injuring 95.

"We had intelligence reports that predicted a new terror campaign in the pre-Christmas period, and we asked all shopkeepers to be on the alert," said Supt. Bill Wilson, chief spokesman for the Royal Ulster Constabulary. "The response has been excellent. The people of Belfast have through experience learned to be vigilant."

Said the chamber's Brown: "Belfast traders are counting themselves lucky...We had no Harrods."

But police cadet training was canceled and 400 more officers were deployed on street patrol, bringing the total in Belfast to 1,200. But the heavy security presence didn't seem to have dampened the Christmas spirit.

"Apart from the security gates in the city center, Belfast is just like any city at Christmas — busy and expensive," said Paula Bryson, an 18-year-old dental assistant.

None of this, of course, makes it any likelier that after 14 bitter years, the "troubles" that have claimed 2,300 lives will vanish overnight from this city's sad streets.

INDEED, FOR many, Christmas is the most poignant reminder of all that the fighting has cost.

"It does not take a great deal of imagination to picture the anguish of the empty chair in many a home this Christmas," said Lord Mayor Ferguson. "Our thoughts and prayers are with the families so cruelly bereaved."

Study: Soviets serious about colonies in space

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the Reagan administration weighs ambitious plans for a U.S. space station, a congressional study of the Soviet Union's Salyut program has focused renewed attention on Moscow's long-range goal of permanent Soviet colonies on the moon and Mars.

"The Soviets take quite seriously the possibility that large numbers of their citizens will one day live in space," said the report released Wednesday by the Office of Technology Assessment.

The agency, a research arm of Congress, noted that Soviet cosmonauts orbiting aboard the Salyut stations — on missions of several months' duration — have logged more than three times the total number of hours spent in space by U.S. astronauts.

The Salyut missions "are providing the data, information and experience required to design habitats and equipment which will allow individuals to reside for the long-term in space," the study said.

Administration officials have indicated President Reagan may seek $100 million to $200 million in his fiscal 1985 budget as initial financing for a permanently manned U.S. space station — a program that could cost more than $8 billion by 1991.

Also, George A. Keyworth III, Reagan's science adviser, has publicly challenged the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to think beyond the space station to "revolutionary new ventures" such as a manned lunar base or mission to Mars.

"The Soviets take quite seriously the possibility that large numbers of their citizens will one day live in space."
— Office of Technology Assessment report.

Fred Whiting, a spokesman for the American Space Foundation, a pro-space Washington lobbying group, said he hopes the technology office's largely upbeat appraisal of the Salyut program will help strengthen American public support for a U.S. space station.

"The OTA study proves once again that the Soviet Union has been making full use of space, in marked contrast to our own efforts over the past decade," Whiting said. "We need to push vigorously for an aggressive space program — not just because the Soviets are doing it, but because we can't afford not do do it."

The congressional agency's 69-page report was prepared as part of an overall assessment of civilian space stations, to be completed next April.

Philip Chandler, deputy director of the space study, told a news conference that "the Salyut space station program is the clearest public manifestation of the long-term Soviet goal of establishing permanent settlements off-planet — first in orbital stations, later on the moon and eventually Mars."

"Soviet acceptance of what can be characterized only as a long-range space goal contrasts sharply with the absence of such formally recognized goals for the U.S. program," Chandler said.

The Soviets' next major initiative, he said, is expected to be construction of a "much larger, modular space station," using either a cluster of Salyut-size sections or "larger, next-eneration modules."

Since April 1971, the Soviets have launched a series of Salyut orbital stations, each 43 feet long, 13.9 in diameter and weighing approximately 41,800 pounds. Salyut 7, the latest in the series, has been in orbit since April 19, 1982.

The congressional study cited reports that the Soviets may be developing a reusable shuttle with twice the payload capacity of the U.S. space shuttle. Also, it said, Moscow already has conducted tests for "a 1-ton prototype of a 10 to 20-ton space plane."

Once these spacecraft become operational, the report said, "the Soviets would possess both a 'space truck' and a light-duty ferry vehicle to provide routine service to an expandable infrastructure in space."

"With this infrastructure as a hub of operations, extension of human activity to geostationary orbit, the moon and even Mars becomes technically feasible," the study said.

Zoo makes panda plea

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The San Diego Zoo is about to make a panda plea — asking presidential counselor Edwin Meese to pass along its request for one of the crowd-pleasing animals to China through President Reagan.

Sheldon Campbell, president of the San Diego Zoo's board of directors, is writing a letter to Meese, a former La Mesa, Calif., resident, asking his help in getting Reagan to hint that pandas would be a welcome gift from his Chinese hosts when he visits Peking next spring. President Nixon got such a gift in 1972.

San Diego Zoo spokesman Jeff Jouett said Wednesday that the Chinese might be willing to loan the zoo two pandas because of the bamboo shortage in Chinese panda preserves.

"We have 60 different species of bamboo here, including the type found in the wild in China that is the staple of the pandas' diet," Jouett said.

Elderly hunger for more than food

HURON COUNTY, Mich. — In Huron County, a number of elderly residents participate in nourishment programs but, like many other senior citizens in the nation, they long for more than just food.

Take Mona Bowman, 69, of Caseville, a homebound widow, or Harold Richards, 75, of Harbor Beach, a retired production worker.

They hunger for companionship.

Bowman said that before her husband died, the Thumb Commission on Aging, which serves seniors in Huron County, used to deliver meals for them both from the Caseville American Legion Hall, where they are prepared and served.

"I don't know what I'd do without them. I get around with my brace, and I drive when the weather is not bad. The meal site is the nicest thing put on Earth. They got a heart. They alway ask if everything's all right," Bowman said.

Huron County, about 120 miles north of Detroit, rests at the tip of Michigan's lower peninsula, known as the Thumb. It is surrounded by Lake Huron and Saginaw Bay.

Hundreds of Huron County widows, widowers and shut-ins are served by the commission daily. There are four meal sites in the county for the elderly to go for a balanced meal and social activities.

"We are trying, through these programs, to lengthen the time these senior citizens stay at home (as opposed to an institution). We are maintaining their independence and preserving their dignity while lessening the amount of money society contributes for their support," said commission director Bob Brown.

"We try to do some things maybe a family member would have done in the past," Brown said.

In Huron and two neighboring counties, more than 60,000 meals are served to 380 individuals, Brown said.

Marion Fournier, who manages the Caseville center, said one woman had told her she was ready to walk in the lake because of loneliness.

"When she came to the American Legion Hall she said that it was the nicest thing anyone has ever done for her. We encourage people to come here. Participants come here for a well-balanced meal and for friendship," Fournier said.

"Most of our delivered meals are for the homebound persons who have come from the hospital or just unable to prepare their own meals," she said.

Maryann F. Tenczer, resource program analyst for the Huron County Department of Social Services, said as a result, there was no evidence of malnutrition in the area.

"There's no reason anyone should be starving in this county. I don't think there is any malnutrition in Huron County. Food is the thing that will bring people to them. The elderly are lonesome and frightened of growing old," Ms. Tenczer said.

Ms. Tenczer said supplement food baskets are available on a weekly basis and proof of need is not necessary.

"The food we distribute is not as important as the visiting that takes place. I do feel a lot of people have an emotional need that needs to be met. This is what we are about. We're human services and we care," she said.

Hunger affects all classes of elderly citizens

Income is the most important. Senior citizens generally have lower incomes — most live on Social Security and pensions — than other age groups. Census data show that 14.4 percent of Marylanders 65 years and older live below the poverty line, compared to 10.5 percent of other Marylanders.

Senior citizen centers that serve hot, low-cost meals to the elderly report sometimes dramatic drops in the number of elderly coming in for meals near the end of each month — when the Social Security money runs out.

But money is only one factor. Generally poorer health makes the elderly feel less like eating and more likely to be on a special diet. As many as 10 percent wear dentures, which make eating more difficult.

ACCORDING TO experts, the two biggest factors contributing to hunger among the elderly, after lack of money, are an inability to get or prepare the food, and isolation.

"Getting food is a two-pronged issue for the elderly," said Marjorie Richmond, a social work supervisor in the Baltimore County Department of Aging. "First, they need the money to get it. Second, they need a way to get it. And that is very often the real problem."

Few senior citizens drive cars. Local governments in the area run a network of buses for the elderly, but most take seniors to medical appointments, not to stores.

Local governments also serve and deliver low-cost meals to the elderly — an average of 12,000 a day in Maryland.

But the meals are served mostly in churches or senior citizen centers and home delivered to only the handicapped and shut-ins.

ANN NORMAN, outreach coordinator at the Govans Senior Center in the city, said one neighborhood elderly widow, who could not leave her home because of her weak heart, existed largely on the bread and milk she would trust neighborhood boys to buy for her.

"You can trust someone with a dollar for bread, but you can't trust someone with $20 to go out and market," said Ms. Norman.

Isolation is another factor. Many elderly — especially women, who usually outlive their husbands — live alone. Preparing meals for one person is not an enjoyable task, especially after a lifetime of preparing meals for a group.

"Loneliness is a very, very great factor among the elderly," said Mimi Iacone, nutritionist for the Baltimore County Department of Aging. "You take a woman who's been married, raised a family, lived with people around all her life. Then she loses her mate, her family's gone. That woman is almost more likely than someone in poverty to be at nutritional risk. She has simply lost the motivation to shop and prepare food."

Loneliness drives some seniors to the government-sponsored meal sites even when they can more than afford to eat at home.

ACCORDING TO MS. IACONE, one well-to-do widower in northern Baltimore County eats his noon meal at the local senior center and regularly pays two or three times the asking price — just for the pleasure of eating with company.

Often, however, the elderly remain isolated.

When a hot meal program was set up by the St. James Episcopal Church in the city in 1981, the church surveyed the seniors who would be served.

The surveyors soon found that many of the elderly stayed in the warm comfort of their room for weeks at a time.

"You could look in their eyes, see they were dead," recalled Robert Dawson, who runs the program. "They were so frustrated, from loss of family, from living alone. They had become recluses. We don't know what they were eating."

SUCH BEHAVIOR makes counting — and finding — the hungry elderly difficult.

"Loneliness is a very, very great factor among the elderly...more likely than someone in poverty to be at nutritional risk..."

— Mimi Iacone, nutritionist

"I'm sure that with all the agencies in the world working in tandem, there will be some people who would slip through the cracks," said Iacone. "You're always going to have a nucleus of people you don't reach — who don't want to be reached."

But hunger also forces many elderly to accept aid their youthful pride would have balked at: such things as food stamps, church food baskets and surplus cheese and butter from the government.

Organizers of the food-distribution programs sponsored by the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimate that a third to a half of the people they give food to are senior citizens.

For instance, when volunteers from the Human Resources Development Agency handed out cheese, butter, cornmeal, dry milk and honey in eastern Baltimore County last week, a large portion of the people who lined up were elderly.

THEY CAME by cab, by car, by bus or on foot. They came with friends or alone. They came bitter, grateful or resigned. But they all came because they were hungry.

Outside the Middle River Boy's Club on the day of the distribution, two elderly women, pulling a cart loaded with four bags of surplus government food, picked their way slowly across a field to the waiting car of a friend. The trip was perhaps 50 yards. It would take them about 10 minutes.

One woman was 87, had white hair and a cane; her companion was 75 with a pink kerchief and sneakers. Like many elderly in the same plight, they were ashamed to reveal their names.

"Why did we come here? Because we need the food, that's why," said the younger woman. "You get $360 a month Social Security and pay $118 in rent and more for doctors' bills, that doesn't leave much for food, now, does it?"

"I didn't want charity," added her friend. "But this is charity, yeah." She looked at her companion, who repeated: "We wouldn't be here if we didn't need it."

THE NEXT morning, a sea of Dundalk's neediest swarmed into the gym of the Merritt Point High School to receive their free food.

Outside it was cold and rainy. Inside, it was warm and close, and people waited for two hours and more.

Lula Samas, 81, was one who waited, leaning on her cane. As she waited, she talked of her home on Dundalk's Graceland Avenue, where she has lived since 1928. Her two children are grown and gone. Her husband, who worked at Sparrows Point, died in 1969. She lives alone.

She said heating and maintaining her five-room house eats up most of the $428 a month she receives from Social Security.

She buys most of her groceries on sale, depending on friends to take her to the supermarket.

SHE HAS a garden in her yard and cans the tomatoes to last through the winter. "Older people stretch it like that," said Mrs. Samas, her face a friendly mask of wrinkles. "Younger people throw it away.

"This," she said, motioning to the food being parceled out ahead, "will be something I can keep on hand. You can do so much with cheese."

Did she ever think, 30 years ago, that she'd be waiting in such a line? She stared straight ahead. "I never thought I would do this, no."

Nearby, Ruth Reynolds, 76, waited with two friends. All three lived in separate apartments at the senior citizen high-rise complex in Dundalk's Center Place.

"A lot of people say they won't get this (food), but I'll do it. It helps out," said the easy-going Reynolds. "I've waited in lines before. When my kids were little I was in line and now I'm still in line. It's a hard world."

Reagan asks for funds to help state agencies distribute food

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan formally asked Congress on Friday for the $50 million it already had appropriated to help state and local agencies distribute surplus food to the poor.

Reagan's failure to ask for the money earlier, which Congress had made a condition for release of the funds, touched off a political squabble last week when House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., accused the president of foot-dragging while people go hungry.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes replied that Reagan hadn't asked for the money because it wasn't clear he could do so while Congress was out of session. He noted that $6 million of the money already was "in the pipeline" and that there was no special urgency for the balance of $44 million because the states hadn't used up what they had.

For reasons that remain obscure, only $90,000 of the first $6 million had been spent as of last week. Some state officials claimed the money hadn't been released to them yet, but federal officials insisted it was available for the asking.

Speakes claimed the congressional demand for a formal presidential request before releasing the money was highly unusual, and he accused O'Neill of playing politics.

After it was pointed out that such letters had been required and submitted on other occasions, the spokesman backed off, saying the White House would ask for and distribute the money as quickly as possible.

Troops to stand guard at Bethlehem events

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Busloads of armed Israeli troops poured into Bethlehem Friday to protect Christmas celebrations against the twin threat of disruptions by Palestinians and by Jewish extremists.

The weather for Christmas promised to be cold but clear.

The troops arriving Friday included anti-terrorist squads, women soldiers to conduct body searches on females, and explosives experts with bomb detection equipment.

An Israeli colonel, who declined to be identified, told a reporter security was heavier than at any time since Israel occupied Bethlehem and the rest of the West Bank in 1967.

In the past, security measures have focused on possible Palestinian demonstrations and terrorism — nightmares which did not come true.

This year, a spate of violence and harassment directed against Christians and Moslem shrines has raised the added fear that a Jewish underground is at work avenging recent Arab terrorist actions.

Paul M. Platanitis, a security officer at Westover Air Force Base, Massachusetts, looks over the wreckage of a Royal Canadian Air Force jet trainer which lies in a snowbank after skidding 1,000 feet during landing on an icy runway. The pilot, Capt. Mark Leeson, an exchange pilot from the U.S. Air Force, was assigned to the Canadian 419th Tactical Fighter Training Squadron. He suffered two broken legs. The mishap occured Thursday.

Cranston suffering from pleurisy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Alan Cranston, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, has been admitted to Bethesda Naval Hospital suffering from pleurisy of the right lung, a spokesman said Friday.

The California senator, who is 69, was admitted Thursday for diagnostic surgery, which confirmed a mild inflammation of the lung lining, said John Russonello, Cranston's campaign press secretary.

"His doctors expect him to have a swift, speedy recovery," said Russonello.

Doctors said the inflammation was caused by old scar tissue from a previous illness and that the inflammation will subside on its own, Russonello said.

Oklahomans argue over county seat

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahomans have been arguing over seats of government ever since Oklahoma City replaced Guthrie as the capital in 1910. Now they're at it again, with tempers flaring over an attempt to move the Dewey County seat from Taloga, pop. 446, to Seiling, pop. 1,103.

In petitions circulated in November, the Dewey County Relocating Committee argued that Taloga's small size hinders commerce and heightens the danger that the county might be consolidated with one of its far western Oklahoma neighbors.

"The bottom line is this: Seiling has a chance and Taloga does not," said Seiling banker Allen Culliver, one of the circulators. "And if we leave it in Taloga, we're going to strangle the rest of the county."

Kevin Pisacka, mayor of Taloga, dismisses the petition as "a bunch of malarkey" circulated "by a handful of idiots." He argues that the energy-rich county, hard-hit by the recession in the oil industry, cannot afford to build a new county courthouse nine miles away in Seiling.

"I just don't think (supporters of the petition) did their homework to find out how much a new courthouse would cost," Pisacka said. "They're talking about 5,000 square feet — why, you can't even put a record vault and restrooms in that kind of space."

Culliver says the county "could rent or lease in the area."

So far, the petition for a referendum on the subject has 230 of the needed 577 signatures — 25 percent of those who voted in the last governor's election. If an election is called, the issue must be approved by two-thirds of the county's voters.

Culliver says that although Taloga was once a crossroads for railroads, Seiling — "at the cross-section of five highways" — attracts more traffic. "And some of that is bound to rub off and stick."

Seiling is on the northern edge of the county while Taloga is in the middle, with only one highway through town, on a bend of the Canadian River.

Pisacka says the move would ruin Taloga.

"It'd also raise everybody's taxes, and take the county seat just that much further away from residents," Pisacka says. "Times are hard around here ever since the oil patch folded up and the farming community got depressed."

When Oklahoma's economy began going sour a year ago, there was talk of consolidating some of its 77 counties to cut costs.

"If they begin to consolidate county offices, with Taloga the smallest county seat of 77 counties, where do you think they'll look first?" asked Culliver.

Pisacka says the relocation move is backed mainly by a few businessmen.

Director of FAA offers his resignation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Aviation Administrator J. Lynn Helms, who directed the recovery of the nation's air traffic system after 11,400 controllers were fired 2½ years ago, resigned on Friday.

President Reagan accepted the resignation, effective Jan. 31, "with regret." He credited Helms, a one-time test pilot and aviation executive, with making the airways "the safest and most efficient in the world."

Helms offered no explanation, except to say "the time is at hand" for him to return to the private sector.

Helms has been given high marks by the aviation community, particularly for his handling of the air traffic controller crisis in 1981 and for directing the development of a $10 billion plan to modernize the air traffic system over the next decade.

But Helms, 58, has had his critics, too.

A year ago, some members of Congress assailed him for using the FAA's jets — usually handling the controls himself — on numerous trips they said could have been taken on commercial flights at much lower cost to the taxpayer.

"I don't fly on FAA airplanes for personal transportation," Helms snapped back at one Senate hearing. "I only fly for the evaluation of the (air traffic control) system."

Helms joined the Reagan administration in April, 1981, with credentials as a former Marine test pilot, aircraft design engineer, and industry executive. He had become wealthy by rescuing ailing companies, including Piper Aircraft Co., where he had been president.

But more recently, Helms has been under investigation by the Transportation Department's ethics office, in connection with alleged business activities that put him in a different light.

An October article in the Wall Street Journal alleged that Helms and an associate had been involved in a string of business dealings over an eight-year period in which small companies were purchased, syphoned of assets and liquidated, prompting a number of lawsuits by angry creditors.

While the Journal cited no illegality, the detailed article fueled speculation within the aviation community that Helms, who in the past had shied away from publicity about his private affairs, was considering resignation.

In his letter to the president, Helms said he had decided early last summer "to leave government service no later than February, 1984."

"The time is at hand to implement my decision to return to the private sector in order to resume an active role in strategic consulting and business planning," Helms wrote Reagan.

Helms has refused to comment about his business affairs, saying the matter was in the hands of his lawyers.

Parents convicted of negligence

HAVERHILL, Mass. (AP) — A couple who locked their 6-year-old son in a dog's cage and their 7-year-old daughter in her bedroom to discipline them were convicted of neglect Friday.

Haverhill District Judge Frederick Gilgun found Manuel Rosa, 28, and his wife Iraida, 25, of Lawrence, guilty of two counts each of failing to provide care, maintenance and support for their children.

The judge ordered them placed on two years of probation on condition they undergo psychiatric counseling.

In an interview at the time of her arrest in June, Mrs. Rosa said she had asked God for guidance on how to discipline her children.

Youth saves girl whose body on fire

David Ricketts

MARSHALL (AP) — A 12-year-old boy whose mother had drilled him on fire-safety techniques may have saved the life of a young girl when he rolled her in the snow to douse flames that had engulfed her body, authorities say.

The girl, Theresa Armstrong, 5, panicked and ran from her house Thursday after her billowy cotton dress caught fire as she was standing beside a space heater to keep warm, said Assistant Fire Marshal Bill Elliott.

The youth, David Ricketts, said he was walking by her house when she began running toward him, picked her up "real fast" and rolled her in the snow, a technique he learned from his mother.

The girl was listed in critical condition Friday at Shriners Burn Institute in Galveston where she was taken with burns over about 85 percent of her body, a hospital spokesman said.

"I was walking to the store and saw a little girl running to me," David said. "I saw she was on fire, so I started running toward her as fast as I could in my cowboy boots."

His first impulse, he said, was to roll her on the ground.

"I guess I rolled her a few feet, then another man came by and covered her with a blanket."

After the youth had put out the flames, a neighbor, John Mulholland, saw that the girl was severely burned, and helped take her to the hospital with a friend who had happened by in his car, Elliott said.

She was later driven by ambulance to Nacogdoches and flown by helicopter to Hermann Hospital in Houston, where she arrived early Friday morning.

Elliott told the Marshall News-Messenger that David "definitely saved" the girl's life. "The more she ran, the more she flamed. Because he rolled her, it (the fire) didn't get to her face too bad," Elliott said.

Elliott said the child had been left home with her older sister, 9, while her parents went shopping.

David's mother, Linda Ricketts, said he didn't tell her about the incident, but that her constant reminders about fire safety had paid off.

"I'm so proud of him," Mrs. Ricketts said. "I've always been afraid of fire and have tried to teach the children an awareness of them."

Officials need to know who bit slain man

RICHMOND (AP) — A judge ordered a woman charged with killing her husband to let officials take an impression of her teeth to determine whether they match a bite mark on the slain man's body.

State District Judge Reagan Clark on Wednesday granted a prosecutor's motion to make molds from the teeth of Frances Turner, a 38-year-old Bay City woman.

Mrs. Turner has previously refused to make the impressions.

Robert Turner, 46, was found dead March 18 at a rest stop south of Richmond, 25 miles southwest of Houston. He was stabbed more than 60 times and bitten on the back of his shoulder.

The state is seeking the death penalty for Mrs. Turner, who is charged with capital murder. Her trial is set for Jan. 4.

She and her 22-year-old daughter, Sherri Frank, are accused of hiring Michael Hunter, 24, to kill Turner, an oil consultant, for his $100,000 life insurance policy.

Lawyers will advise Geter against taking test

DALLAS (AP) — Attorneys for Lenell Geter now say they do not think the black engineer should take a polygraph test that could spare him a new trial on robbery charges.

The attorneys say they may offer alternatives to the test, including the administration of truth serum. But District Attorney Henry Wade said he intends to hold to an agreement worked out last week for Geter's release from prison where he was serving a life sentence.

"We plan to try him now in early February," Wade told the Dallas Times Herald.

Authorities said Geter denied the robbery charge while under the influence of sodium Amytal, or truth serum, but was shown to be deceptive during a lie detector test given last May.

Geter's attorneys, Ed Sigel of Dallas and George Hairston of the NAACP, predict that prosecutors will drop the case before trying Geter again.

"We figure that when they prepare it a little better than they have in the past that they'll come to the same conclusion that we have," Sigel said Friday.

In the negotiations for Geter's freedom, prosecutors agreed to dismiss the robbery case if he passes a polygraph examination administered by police.

But Hairston, who was not involved in the negotiations, said he did not feel bound by the agreement, and Sigel said he now feels a police officer could not be impartial in administering the test.

"We're having second thoughts on having a police officer giving it," Sigel said. "He is going to have pressures on him that are going to make it very difficult for him to be objective."

Hairston and Sigel claim Geter was the victim of racism and shoddy police work and say that new evidence will prove he couldn't have committed the robbery.

'I am operating on the assumption that he will be vindicated in trial," Hairston said in a telephone interview from his New York office.

The case won national attention on a recent broadcast of CBS News' "60 Minutes."

Exotic animals to have new lives

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — More than 400 exotic animals, including zebra, giraffes and buffalo, will soon be leaving their home at a South Texas ranch for new lives as subjects of wildlife research by Texas A&M University scientists.

The animals were donated to A&M by New Orleans Saints owner John W. Mecom Jr. and his wife Katsy.

A number were then purchased from the university by Louis A. Waters of Houston, who is responsible for the animals' capture and removal from the ranch, near Laredo.

The herd consists of a dozen zebras, nearly 20 giraffes, more than 40 bison and ostriches, various deer, some wildebeest and more than 200 exotic antelope.

Under the terms of the gift, Texas A&M will always have access to the animals, but six female giraffes and four female kudus will be kept by Texas A&M's veterinary school for breeding and research.

Millions saved by recycling

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Farai Moyo rummages through the trash at Harare's municipal dump and unearths two prizes — a soiled but uncracked bottle that once contained cooking oil and an old tire.

This treasure will earn the 70-year-old scavenger 60 Zimbabwe cents (60 U.S. cents), enough to buy a meal of rape (greens) each day for a week.

Zimbabwe, an African leader in recycling junk, provides a ready market for these and other discarded items, such as old newspapers, tin cans and scrap metal.

"I think the world has become more and more conscious of recycling as natural resources become scarcer and more expensive," said David Parsons, owner of Recycling Containers Pvt. (Ltd), which converts discarded plastic bags and containers into anything from garbage buckets to toothbrush handles.

"But for any country with foreign currency problems like ours, recycling is a blessing rather than just a conservation method."

As in most African and Third World countries, falling prices for exports like copper and sugar and increased import bills for machinery and parts have drained Zimbabwe's foreign cash coffers.

Zimbabwe has long been conservation conscious, however. Paper has been recycled since the 1950s.

But the need for recycling was heightened during years of United Nations-ordered international sanctions from 1965 to 1979, when former Prime Minister Ian Smith's white-minority Rhodesian government was in rebellion against Britain. Zimbabwe won independence from Britain in April 1980 after a seven-year guerrilla war.

People all over the country recycle things for their own use. In modern bungalows and in mud huts, women carefully wash the plastic packages their vegetables came in and smooth down pieces of used tin foil.

They use them to pack sandwiches and or store meal left-overs.

Glass bottles are so precious that deposits from 20 cents to $1.50 are charged on bottles of soda pop, wine, beer and cooking oil.

To save on paper cartons used for traditional African corn beer one company recently introduced take-away minibuckets made from recycled plastic which can be refilled again and again.

Scavenger Moyo's car tire went to a street craftsman who makes crude but serviceable sandals from discarded rubber.

At Parsons' Recycling Containers, Zimbabwe's biggest glass and plastic recyclers, Moyo's bottle will be washed and packed along with hundreds of others for ketchup, syrup concentrates, spices, medicines and a host of other uses by glass-starved manufacturers.

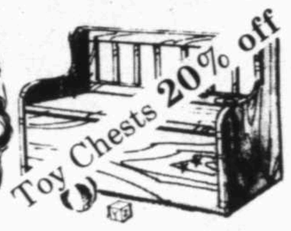

"Our recycled plastic (40 tons a month) is used for just about anything the virgin material makes," Parsons said.

Bomb crumbles wall of French restaurant world

PARIS (AP) — A bomb blew out a window and crumbled a wall in one of France's best-known restaurants late Friday, wounding 10 people, officials said. One of the victims was in critical condition.

The French secretary of state for public security, Joseph Franceschi, said the explosion at the Grand Vefour restaurant, near the Palais Royale, was caused by a bomb placed underneath a grating at sidewalk level outside the restaurant.

No one had claimed responsibility for the 10:30 p.m. attack as of early this morning.

A woman in her 20s or 30s was listed in critical condition at a Paris hospital. One was in serious condition, and eight were released after treatment for minor injuries.

"The bomb went off outside the restaurant and blew away a wall," said Bruce Hager, 29, a Paris-based writer originally from New York City. "One woman had her leg split open and was bleeding profusely.

"It took everybody by surprise and it took about two or three seconds for people to react and then everybody started heading for the exits."

Police said the explosion was "suspected to be of criminal origin," but did not elaborate.

"All I could think of," Hager said, "was the Islamic Jihad (holy war), which announced Thursday that all American and French troops should get out of Lebanon or the earth would tremble.

"The earth certainly trembled under us tonight."

Islamic Jihad has claimed responsibility for the car and truck bombings of U.S. and French troops in Lebanon, the U.S. embassies in Lebanon and Kuwait and the French Embassy in Kuwait.

Hager, who said he was not hurt by flying glass, said a section of the restaruant's outside wall, about 15 feet by 4 feet, had crumbled under the force of the explosion.

The Grand Vefour is listed as a two-star restaurant by the Michelin Guide. The loss of its third star earlier this year created a stir in French culinary circles.

Official seeks Goodman's release

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — The head of an American-Arab friendship group said Friday that Syrian officials have promised an answer before Christmas to his request that they free American airman Robert O. Goodman.

M.T. Mehdi of New York City, the president of the Federation of American Arab Associations, said he met Thursday with Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul-Halim Khaddam and Defense Minister Mustafa Tlass.

He asked, Mehdi said, that Goodman be released on Christmas Eve "as a gift to the American people."

The Syrian response, Mehdi said, was that "this matter is being discussed" and a precondition was "stopping U.S. aerial provocations against Syrian forces in Lebanon, such as the reconnaissance flights."

Mehdi said he told the Syrians that Goodman, 26, of Virginia Beach, Va., should be released without conditions. He said the Syrians promised him a response today.

Goodman was captured when his plane was shot down during U.S. air raids on Syrian positions in central Lebanon on Dec. 4. He was the navigator-bombardier.

Thatcher: Britain, Irish Republic determined to beat IRA

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Ringed by armed detectives, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher paid a six-hour Christmas visit to this strife-torn province Friday and declared that Britain and the Irish Republic are determined to beat the IRA.

In London, police for the third straight day interrogated an unidentified Irish Republican Army sympathizer held in raids after the outlawed organization last Saturday bombed Harrods department store, killing five people and injuring 95.

Although police sources professed optimism in the hunt for the IRA unit responsible, Scotland Yard police headquarters reported no new leads.

Mrs. Thatcher was nearly mobbed by enthusiastic shoppers in the mainly Protestant town of Newtownards before going on to tour British army checkpoints in the "bandit county" of Armagh, an IRA guerrilla stronghold.

"We (Britain and Ireland) are in the business to see that bombs, bullets and terrorists do not prevail," Mrs. Thatcher told reporters after visiting an army checkpoint at Aughnacoly, just 200 yards from the Irish Republic.

World figures depicted in Rome nativity scene

ROME (AP) — President Reagan and Soviet leader Yuri Andropov appear prepared for a friendly handshake beside the crib of the infant Jesus in a "Christmas of Peace" nativity scene put on display Friday at a Rome chapel.

The painted clay statues, each about 16 high feet high, are flanked by images of American first lady Nancy Reagan and a pipe-smoking Italian President Sandro Pertini.

Other world figures depicted, all gathered around Jesus and his parents, are Pope John Paul II and Libya's leader, Col. Moammar Khadafy.

"We wanted to represent here the hopes for peace without any discrimination," said one member of the Roman Catholic charity organization Caritas, which organized the display.

Seahawks make first NFL playoff show

SEATTLE (AP) — Chuck Knox of the Seattle Seahawks believes in meeting one challenge at a time and keeping his goals realistic.

Maybe that's why he's a success. In his first season in Seattle, he's now preparing for his eighth playoff appearance in 11 seasons as a National Football League head coach.

The Seahawks, in their first-ever playoff appearance, will be four-point favorites against the Denver Broncos in an American Football Conference wild-card game at the Kingdome today.

The game starts at 11 a.m. CST and matches a pair of 9-7 clubs from the AFC West. The Los Angeles Raiders won the division at 12-4.

"A lot of coaches are looking back and saying this game or that game got away and was the difference of not going to the playoffs," Knox said. "The losers' lament is if we had done this or if we had done that and so on and so forth.

"Some coaches around the league start off from day one talking about the playoffs. We don't. We talk about the upcoming opponent because if you don't win these games, you're not going to be in position to be in contention in December."

Knox, 51, arrived here in January and took over a franchise that was 39-62, a .386 winning percentage, in its first seven seasons. The Seahawks had losing seasons in 1980, 1981 and 1982.

Seattle clinched its playoff berth by winning its last two games, including a 24-6 victory over playoff hopeful New England here last Sunday. Knox called the Seahawks' effort against the Patriots their best game of the season.

"I didn't really think about it (the playoffs) all year," he said. "I just knew if we worked hard and became a better football team week in and week out that we had a chance."

The Seahawks will be led by AFC rushing champion Curt Warner, their prize rookie from Penn State. Warner rushed for 1,449 yards and 14 touchdowns on 335 carries in 14 regular-season games.

Seattle's defense will feature Pro Bowl selection Ken Easley, a strong safety, and quick Jacob Green, who set a club record with 16 sacks this season.

"This is our finest hour," said Green, Seattle's first-round draft choice in 1980 and one of professional football's smallest defensive ends at 6-foot-3 and 248 pounds.

"It's not how big you are," he challenged. "It's how much you've got in your heart."

Denver needed only to win its regular-season finale in Kansas City last Sunday to nail down the home-field advantage this week. But the Broncos were blown out by the nowhere-to-go Chiefs 48-17 as Denver's John Elway threw four interceptions.

Denver Coach Dan Reeves activated seven-year veteran Steve DeBerg, out six weeks with a separated left shoulder, on Thursday and will start him in place of Elway.

Flea-flicker lifts Cougs over Tigers

SAN DIEGO (AP) — All-American quarterback Steve Young, who set a bevy of passing records this season, combined with running back Eddie Stinnett on a flea-flicker that resulted in Young catching a 14-yard touchdown pass with 23 seconds left to give ninth-ranked Brigham Young a 21-17 victory over Missouri in the Holiday Bowl football game Friday night.

Young, who suffered one of his poorest nights of the season, rallied his team 94 yards inside the last four minutes of play after the BYU defense shut down a Missouri scoring threat.

ERIC DRAIN, Missouri's workhorse fullback, failed on a fourth-and-one run with 3:57 left, and Young and the Cougars took over.

Young completed six passes during the hectic final drive, the last an 11-yarder to Casey Tiumalu on fourth down that gave Brigham Young a first down at the Missouri 16.

The drive appeared to stall, however, when Young was sacked on the next play.

Then, lightning struck. Stinnett took a pitchout from Young, ran toward the right sideline, then stopped and threw back to Young on the left flank.

An adept runner throughout his career, Young used a couple of fancy moves to break away from tacklers and then dove into the end zone for the winning score.

The victory gave Brigham Young, champions of the Western Athletic Conference, an 11-1 record this season.

Young threw for one touchdown and ran for another, but was intercepted three times and sacked on five occasions. His chief tormentors were Missouri defensive ends Bobby Bell and Taft Sales. Bell was credited with four sacks and he pressured Young into an interception that set up Missouri's first touchdown. Sales intercepted a pass, recovered a fumble and had a sack.

MISSOURI, WHICH finished 7-5, drove 80 yards early in the fourth quarter behind reserve quarterback Warren Seitz for a 17-14 lead. Seitz, pressed into action when Tiger starter Marlon Adler suffered a severe ankle sprain, completed three passes for 42 yards in the drive, which was capped by Drain's second 2-yard touchdown run of the evening.

The Tigers appeared ready to clinch the upset when, with 8:44 left, Sales recovered a fumble by Tiumalu at the BYU 47.

Missouri, however, was unable to drive in for a clinching touchdown and Young and the Cougars then launched the game-deciding march.

In his last game, Young completed 24 of 36 passes for 314 yards.

With beaming Minnesota athletic director Paul Giel at his side, Lou Holtz discusses his acceptance of the position of head football coach of the Golden Gophers. Holtz was given a 5-year contract worth $100,000 per year to coach a team that has lost 17 straight Big 10 games.

Lou Holtz sings swan song

Minnesota coach gives up politics

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Lou Holtz, Minnesota's new football coach, took to the radio waves Friday to deliver his political swan song and to start recruiting players.

In a conversation with Gov. Rudy Perpich broadcast by WCCO-AM in Minneapolis, Holtz told the Democratic governor, "I'll assure you this, I will have nothing to do with politics."

HOLTZ, 46, resigned under pressure as coach of Arkansas on Sunday, after seven winning seasons. Some insiders say two commercials in which Holtz endorsed ultra-conservative Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., may have contributed to his leaving.

"I understand the governor (Perpich) is a Democrat and he's definitely popular and I'm not a Democrat," Holtz said. "I'm probably a Republican, but I'm sure the governor would agree that as a citizen we have the obligation to get involved in government and be heard."

But Holtz said that as a public figure, he will "under no circumstances, get involved in controversial issues."

Orville Henry, long-time sports editor of the Arkansas Gazette, said Holtz's endorsement of Helms "was the straw that broke the camel's back."

Helms led the fight against making Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday a national holiday and critics said Holtz's support of Helms would hurt when recruiting black players.

ARKANSAS ATHLETIC Director Frank Broyles denied that Holtz's departure had anything to do with his involvement with Helms. University of Minnesota officials also played down the Holtz-Helms connection.

"It was never a concern of mine," said C. Peter McGrath, president of the university. "I was aware of Lou Holtz as a football coach. I didn't even know he had made any controversial endorsements."

Helms' name wasn't brought up, McGrath said, until Holtz had all but agreed on a five-year contract worth $500,000.

"It was mentioned after we had made him an offer," McGrath said. "His relationship (with Helms) was a personal one from his time at North Carolina State."

Perpich wasn't bothered by the Helms' relationship and promised Holtz the state would build "the finest physical facilities in the Big Ten."

"You've warmed the hearts of all Minnesotans," Perpich told Holtz. The governor also invited Holtz to go fishing in Toivola, on Minnesota's Iron Range, where Perpich was raised.

HOLTZ, MEANWHILE, appealed to any football players listening on the radio to come try out for the Gophers.

Fans not buying Cowboy tickets

DALLAS (AP) — After spending the week wondering why they were badly beaten in their last two games, the Dallas Cowboys found another puzzling question to ponder Friday: Why are there 7,000 tickets unsold for their first playoff game?

The National Football League office in New York Friday granted the team a 24-hour extension of the deadline for avoiding a local television blackout. The team had requested the extension of the 1:30 p.m. Friday deadline because of severe weather.

But the players realize there is more at stake these days than box-office receipts. The Cowboys have limped into Monday's wild-card playoff game with the Los Angeles Rams.

"If we don't go to the Super Bowl this year, there will be a general housecleaning," said wide receiver Butch Johnson. "They (management) aren't going to wait any longer.

"A lot of guys aren't going to be kept around here just because they signed a contract," Johnson continued. "I think management will be very inclined to bring in fresh material. If we lose Monday, it will be the last hurrah for this team as you see it now."

THE COWBOYS lost two weeks ago 31-10 to Washington and then were routed Monday night in San Francisco, 42-17.

In the two losses, Dallas rushed 43 times for only 95 yards.

"We're not doing the little things to make big things happen," running back Tony Dorsett said Thursday. "I'm not going to criticize anybody, but football is a game of basics and we're not doing some things."

Coach Tom Landry has refrained from pointing the finger at his offensive line.

"In our offense, you should be able to get more than 33 yards with no blocking at all," said Landry, apparently alluding to some unhappiness with Dorsett's running. "You should be able to do that by just stepping on the field."

The team was scheduled to return to Dallas after a brief trip to Houston to practice in warmer weather.

Cowboys spokesman Greg Aiello said he could not recall a Cowboys' playoff game that had been blacked out on local television, and added that it was likely that Monday's game would be.

"It's a long shot" to sell out before 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

"We've sold a couple thousand this week," he said.

"Weather is the number one reason. Number two is that a playoff game at Texas Stadium is not unusual. In some cities it would be a big event but here it's no big deal. We've been in more playoff games than any team in NFL history," Aiello said.

"And a third reason may be that we have played poorly in our last two games. Some people may have written us off."

ADVERSE WEATHER caused the Dallas Cowboys to practice in the Houston Astrodome for the second straight day.

The Cowboys, preparing for Monday's National Football Conference wild-card playoff game against the Los Angeles Rams at Texas Stadium in Irving, Texas, were forced to go to Houston for their workouts because of sub-freezing and icy field conditions in Dallas.

The tarp at their practice field in north Dallas was frozen, as was the tarp in Texas Stadium.

The team also practiced in the Astrodome Thursday, and club officials said that if the weather remained bad in Dallas, the Cowboys would work out again in Houston Saturday.

Sun Bowl's best pair gear attacks

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The Sun Bowl celebrates its 50th anniversary Saturday with what is being touted as its best pairing ever — sixth-ranked Southern Methodist vs. traditional power Alabama.

Not only is 10-1 SMU the highest ranked team ever to play in the game — which began with a 25-21 victory by the El Paso All-Stars over Ranger Junior College on Jan. 1, 1935 — but 7-4 Alabama is making is 37th bowl trip and 25th in a row. Both are national records, although this is Alabama's first postseason trip under Coach Ray Perkins.

BOTH TEAMS will be trying to end the season with some more respect than they have been given. SMU, the first team in Southwest Conference history to post three consecutive 10-victory seasons and whose 31-2-1 record is the best in the nation over that stretch, is miffed at being bypassed by the New Year's Day bowls. And Alabama is seeking to wind up back in the Top Twenty after dropping its last two regular-season contests.

"I think it's true that for the football team there is very little left to do," says Coach Bobby Collins, whose 1982 club finished second to Penn State in the Associated Press national championship poll although it was the only team in the country without a loss. "I don't have a lot of answers for some of the situations. Still, the responsibility lies with us to continue to keep our program in front of people with winning, rankings, TV appearances. I think if we can keep it there on a consistent basis, it's a situation where we basically can't just keep being denied."

Alabama comes in with the nation's 10th best offense (424.1 yards and 30.7 points a game) led by quarterback Walter Lewis, the Crimson Tide's all-time total offense leader. SMU, on the other hand, is second nationally in total defense, yielding only 256.1 yards a game, and the Mustangs are fourth in scoring defense at 9.9.

ALTHOUGH PERKINS scrapped Bear Bryant's familiar Wishbone in favor of a pro-style attack, Alabama still had more yards rushing (2,656) than passing (2,009). The top ground-gainers are fullback Ricky Moore (947 yards) and freshman tailback Kerry Goode (693).

Perkins' philosophy is that "you try to do the things your quarterback can do best in relation to the passing game." He comes by his love for the passing game naturally since he holds Alabama bowl records for most passes caught in a game (nine in the 1966 Orange Bowl) and most reception yards (178 on seven catches in the 1967 Sugar Bowl). In three bowl games, he caught 21 passes for 422 yards and three touchdowns.

SMU is a ground-oriented team. And even having lost last year's great tailback tandem of Eric Dickerson and Craig James, the Mustangs' production hasn't fallen off too drastically. Reggie Dupard led the SWC with 1,249 yards, most ever by a sophomore, and freshman Jeff Atkins' 937 yards was the best ever by an SWC rookie. All told, SMU rushed for 2,859 yards and threw for 1,305.

At the helm is Lance McIlhenny, the winnigest quarterback in SWC history with a 34-4-1 record. However, even more publicized than McIlhenny and All-American free safety Russell Carter — this week anyway — is cornerback Fred Nichols, whose crack of "El Paso, pitiful town" when SMU was bypassed by the major bowls stirred up some controversy in this border city.

"I'd like to apologize to everybody in El Paso," Nichols said earlier in the week. "We were kind of down and out (at the time). A lot of quotes slipped out."

EVEN THE weatherman is on the ball this time. Last year, when the game was played on Christmas Day, a snowstorm hit El Paso and kept the crowd under 30,000, with a resultant $150,000 deficit.

Saturday's forecast is for mostly fair skies and 63-degree temperatures and a crowd of at least 40,000 — the break-even figure — is expected.

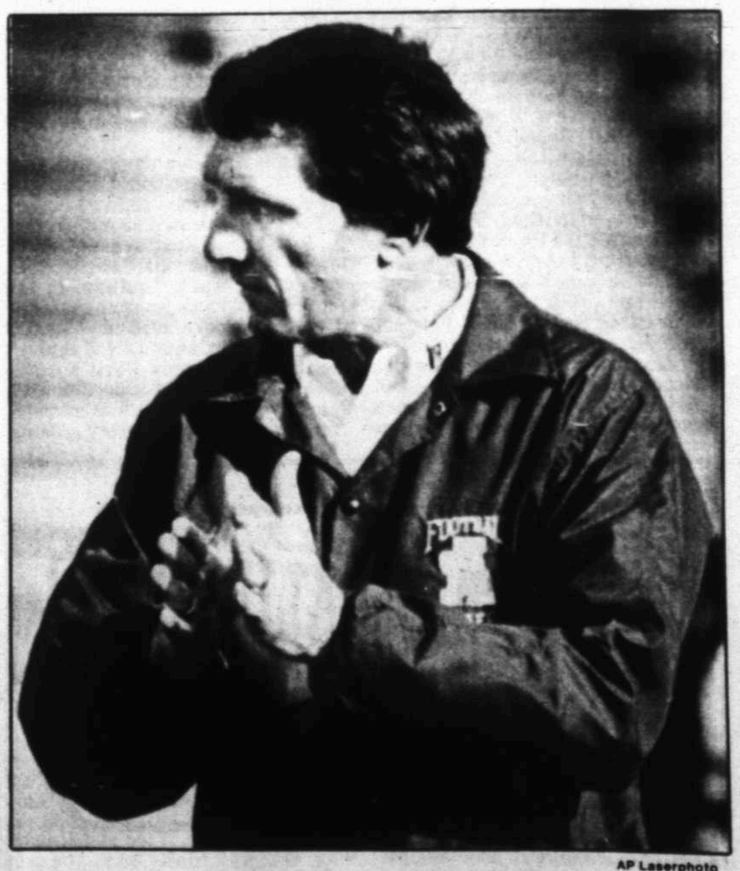

CBS expects between 10.9-13.4 million people to watch on television (2 p.m., CST).

"It's a very good day to be playing," says CBS spokesman Mark Carlson. "Everybody will be home getting ready for Christmas Eve. A lot of sets will be on."

Aloha teams square off for first time

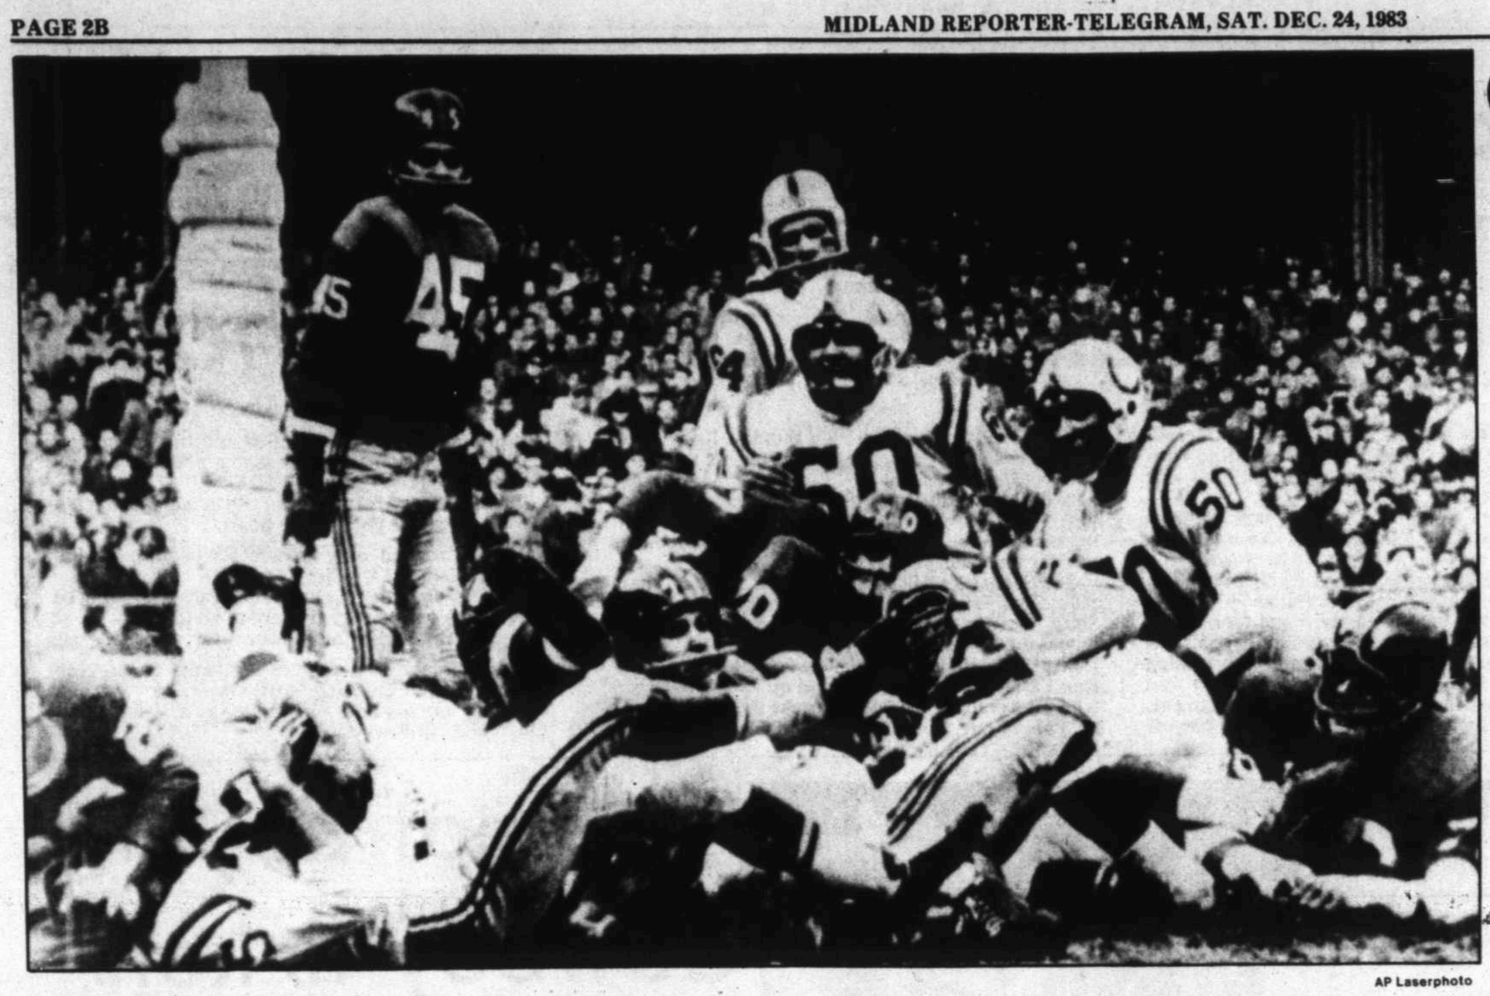

HONOLULU (AP) — Washington and Penn State, two teams which have done well in postseason play in recent years, square off for the first time in more than 60 years Monday in the second annual Aloha Bowl.

The Nittany Lions have won their last four bowl games under coach Joe Paterno, who has been to a postseason game in 16 of his 18 years at Penn State. This will be the 13th straight year the Lions have been to a bowl game. The most recent victory, last year's 27-24 victory over Georgia in the Sugar Bowl.

Baltimore Colts fullback Alan Ameche (on ground, left) lies in the end zone at Yankee Stadium after an overtime touchdown defeated the New York Giants, 23-17. The play capped what many consider "the greatest game ever played."

Ameche's TD may be biggest ever

Colts' overtime win brought pro football into 20th Century

NEW YORK (AP) — Lat^ one winter afternoon 25 years ago, under a cold, darkening Bronx sky, Alan Ameche carried a football across the New York Giants' goalline and professional football into the 20th Century.

Ameche's touchdown gave the Baltimore Colts their first National Football League championship and climaxed what some still consider to be "The Greatest Game Ever Played."

Their 23-17 overtime victory, before a sellout crowd of 64,185 at Yankee Stadium, brought the sport into the television age and planted the seed for the what would become the enormous popularity of the NFL.

"If you were going to point to one game that gave the NFL momentum to accomplish some of the things that the league has been able to do, it would have to be the 1958 championship game," said Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who was general manager of the Los Angeles Rams at the time.

"EVERYBODY STARTED getting interested in the game," said the Colts' Art Donovan, one of 11 Hall of Famers who played that Sunday afternoon of Dec. 28, 1958. "I think that was the start of something big."

"That really was the thing that kicked it off," echoed Frank Gifford, who wore No. 16 at running back for the Giants that day. "Pro football had just started to take off. And it was just getting the attention of the New York media which, by and large, is baseball-oriented and was much more so then."

As fate would have it, all the New York newspapers were on strike. But an estimated television audience of 50 million Americans watched the game on NBC — less than half the number that watched last year's Super Bowl, but a record for the NFL at the time.

"It gave us a tremendous boost with television," Rozelle said. "It was our first overtime postseason game and the fact that it was played in New York and involved a New York team proved to be very important to the television networks and to the New York-based sponsors and advertisers who support the telecast."

In Baltimore, a recording of the WBAL radio broadcast of Bob Wolff's play-by-play sold 50,000 copies. Through film, books and word-of-mouth, the memories of the 1958 game endure today, when nine postseason games are the norm instead of one.

NFL Films has portions of the game and sells it on video cassettes. Yet, there is neither a tape nor kinescope of the full live telecast of the game that consummated the marriage between pro football and TV in the archives of the networks or the Museum of Broadcasting here.

"It is in the top five on our most wanted list," said Museum curator Ron Simonds. "It is one of the great games people expect to be in our collection. But sports are the least-saved events on television."

The durability of the Colts-Giants clash has impressed Ameche.

"After 25 years," the ex-fullback said, "I'm sometimes amazed that the game is talked about so much — not only in and around Baltimore, but by so many other people."

Gifford, who now calls the play-by-play on ABC's Monday Night Football, is one of several participants who staunchly disagreed that it was "The Greatest Game Ever Played." The phrase was coined by the late Tex Maule, then with Sports Illustrated.

"I THINK it's far from that," said Gifford, whose two fumbles were converted into Colt touchdowns. "It was dramatic only in the sense that (the championship game) went into overtime for the first time."

"I can't judge for anybody else, but it's the greatest game I ever played in," said Ameche, who now manages three indoor tennis facilities in suburban Philadelphia. "I don't think, from a technical standpoint, that it was such a great game. It just turned out to be a very exciting finish."

"How can anybody say ANY game was the greatest game?" asked halfback Lenny Moore, who was held to just 23 yards in eight carries but provided one of the blocks that sprung Ameche. "You admire it and you take it for what it is."

"I don't think it's the greatest game WE ever played," Donovan added. "I guess, with the overtime and everything else, it had to rate up there. But the greatest game the Baltimore Colts football team ever played was the game (four weeks earlier) when we clinched the Western Conference against the 49ers in Baltimore."

These days, Donovan owns and manages a country club in Towson, Md., specializing in tennis and swimming. Twenty-five years ago, he made a triumphant return to the ballpark where he spent his youth cheering the Yankees. When he emerged from the team bus outside the stadium, his old high school cronies gave him a verbal working over.

"The guys were hollering at me, saying they hoped I was better now with the Colts than I was when I was at Mount St. Michaels," said Donovan. "Being born and raised in The Bronx (he was the only Colts player from New York City), it was especially great.

"To go back there and play that game in front of my family and friends meant a lot to me personally."

Donovan's immediate family, all of whom rooted for the Colts, weren't disappointed.

The Giants' Pat Summerall, who now does play-by-play for CBS, began the scoring with a 36-yard field goal in the first quarter. In the second period, Ameche, who carried 14 times for 65 yards, dived in from the 2 for his first TD. Raymond Berry, who set NFL championship game records with 12 receptions and 178 yards, then caught a 15-yard pass from Johnny Unitas for a 14-3 halftime lead.

The Giants received a break in the third quarter when, after Kyle Rote caught a pass at midfield and fumbled at the Baltimore 25, teammate Alex Webster scooped up the ball on a bounce and advanced it to the 1-yard line. Moments later, Mel Triplett ran it in to make it 14-10.

Charlie Conerly connected with Gifford on a 15-yard TD pass in the fourth quarter, as the Giants regained the lead and surprised a few people.

"If you looked at the statistical breakdown, we were pretty doggone lucky to even be in the game, much less be ahead," Summerall pointed out.

"I thought we should have beaten the Giants real good," Donovan said, "But we got ourselves in a bind and we had to fight for our lives."

Baltimore's Steve Myhra tied the score 17-17 on a 20-yard field goal with 10 seconds left in regulation, forcing the first overtime period in NFL history.

"I was kneeling down watching Myhra line up the field goal," Summerall said, "and as soon as I saw it go through, I thought, 'Hey, this thing's tied up. What are we gonna do now?' And nobody really knew what to do. If I had to go back and time it, I'll bet it took 12 minutes to get things organized and started again."

THE GIANTS won the toss and advanced the ball to their own 44-yard line, where they were faced with fourth-and-inches. To the dismay of the players, Coach Jim Lee Howell ordered a Don Chandler punt. It gave the Colts the ball on their own 20, where they began the game-winning drive.

"We all felt we should have gone for the first down," Summerall said.

Unitas, who completed 26 of 40 passes for 349 yards, including a 60-yarder to Berry, directed the Colts to the Giants' 1 in 12 plays. A key to the drive was a quick trap play that Ameche ran 23 yards to the Giant 20. On the 13th play, a third-and-goal, "The Horse" burst through the right side of the Giants' line behind Moore and tight end Jim Mutscheller at 8:15 of overtime.

The principals of "The Greatest Game Ever Played" have become quite chummy during the past 25 years. Most of the players from both squads will assemble Wednesday night in suburban Baltimore on the game's silver anniversary for a reunion benefitting the Maryland Shock Trauma Center. There will be a dinner followed by a showing of the game film.

It will be the first such reunion since 1978, when the retired players engaged in a nationally televised "rematch" touch football game here in Central Park.

"It was a lot of fun," Gifford said. "I don't remember the score, but it came out about the same way."

Chaminade adds top cage powers

HONOLULU (AP) — Take two teams from last year's Final Four. Mix in the National Invitation Tournament winner. Add the nation's best-known small college giant killer. And invite them all to Honolulu for the holidays.

What do you have? Perhaps, a recipe for the finest college basketball tournament this Christmas season.

Chaminade University, Hawaii's NAIA powerhouse which knocked off Virginia and Ralph Sampson last Dec. 22, has brewed up a tournament this year that should be an eye-stopping show.

"It's going to be something," said Mike Vasconcellos, Chaminade's athletic director. "The lure of Hawaii can be very, very great, especially when the rest of the country is in the grips of a very cold winter."

The Silverswords, who have had their pick of basketball prospects since their stunning upset of the then No. 1 Cavaliers, are 8-1 this year and ranked No. 3 in the NAIA national rankings. The only loss has come at the hands of Missouri.

But Chaminade will be the decided underdog in the first ever Western Airlines Chaminade Classic.

That's because No. 3 Houston and No. 10 Louisville will open the tournament on Christmas Day with a rematch of their semifinal battle at the NCAA championship last March in Albuquerque. Houston won that shootout 94-81. Chaminade will take on Fresno State, last year's NIT champion, in the second game of the double-header on Christmas Day. The winners will meet Monday night for the championship.

Chaminade's three-year association with Virginia Coach Terry Holland proved to be the genesis for the tournament, Vasconcellos said.

After the Silverswords' much-publicized upset of Virginia, Louisville Athletic Director Bill Olsen called and asked about playing in Hawaii. Then Houston called. Virginia wanted to come back, too. When the idea of Lousiville and Houston meeting on a neutral court came up, the tournament jelled.

The Houston-Louisville game will be televised nationally at 4 p.m. EST by NBC.

"It will be another tremendous boost for our program," Vasconcellos said.

When no one was interested in televising a Chaminade-Virginia rematch, the Cavaliers dropped out and the NIT champion Bulldogs were in. Houston is 9-1; Louisville 4-2; and Fresno State 7-2.

Clovis Hale joins Texas Tech grid staff

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Clovis Hale, the former offensive coordinator at Rice, is joining Texas Tech as offensive line coach, Red Raider Coach Jerry Moore said Friday.

"I feel fortunate to have hired an offensive line coach of the caliber of Clovis Hale," Moore said. "It's even more of a plus for us since he has a West Texas and a high school coaching background."

Hale, 41, coached for several years at West Texas high schools before becoming offensive line coach at North Texas State in 1978. He later was an assistant coach at Iowa before going to Rice earlier this year.

Moore, who still has one opening on his staff, also hired former Texas A&M coach Tom Wilson and Midland Lee High School coach Spike Dykes since the season ended.

Pirates 'pen' Tekulve, eye Goose Gossage

PITTSBURGH (AP) — With submarining relief ace Kent Tekulve safely back in the bullpen, the Pittsburgh Pirates remain "interested" in former New York Yankees reliever Rich "Goose" Gossage.

Manager Chuck Tanner said Thursday he would be happy with both players on his team. But General Manager Harding "Pete" Peterson admitted the Pirates may not be able to afford to pay them.

"Let's be honest about this, this is a business . . . The bottom line is that we're losing money now," Peterson said. "We know it's going to take a substantial amount of money to sign (Gossage) him."

Peterson said the Pirates must draw more than 1.5 million fans to Three Rivers Stadium yext year to help pay Tekulve's new four-year contract, signed Thursday.

To pay for Gossage, Peterson said, the Pirates would need more than 1.7 million fans.

"But then if we could sign Gossage, maybe that could bring the people in," Peterson added.

The Pirates drew 1.23 million fans in Pittsburgh last season, third lowest in the National League. Peak attendance was 1.7 million in the Pirates' 1960 championship season.

Peterson spoke at a news conference called to announce Tekulve's signing. The terms were not disclosed, but Peterson said Tekulve's fourth-year salary was in part conditional on his third year's performance.

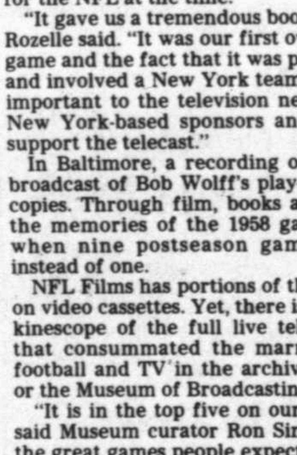

Tekulve reportedly was seeking a multi-year contract providing about $1 million a year. His previous contract reportedly paid about $400,000 a year plus a $10,000 bonus for appearing in more than 70 games.

"Christmas has come three days early as far as we're concerned," Peterson said.

Tekulve, who will be 37 next season, was 7-5 last year with 18 saves and a 1.64 earned run average. He appeared in 76 games, second in the National League. He joined the Pirates organization in 1969 and was called up to the majors in 1974.

The 6-foot-4 Tekulve is best known for his slinky side-arm pitching style.

In the 1979 World Series against the Baltimore Orioles, Tekulve picked up saves in the second, sixth and seventh games.

Steve Howe files for bankruptcy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steve Howe, the Los Angeles Dodgers' cocaine-troubled pitcher who has been suspended for the 1984 season, filed for bankruptcy Friday.

Howe and his wife, Cyndy, who live in suburban Agoura and have an infant daughter, listed $340,000 in debts and $267,600 in assets in the bankruptcy petition filed in federal court.

The petition said Howe earned $325,000 last season.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn last Thursday announced that Howe was being suspended without pay for 1984. Kuhn said Howe had been tested three times for cocaine use last month, and each time the tests revealed the Dodger reliever was using the drug.

"It's sad, isn't it?" Howe's agent, Tony Attanasio, said of the pitcher's filing for bankruptcy just two days before Christmas. Asked if Howe's financial situation is desperate, Attanasio said, "One dosn't go through a bankruptcy unless one is insolvent."

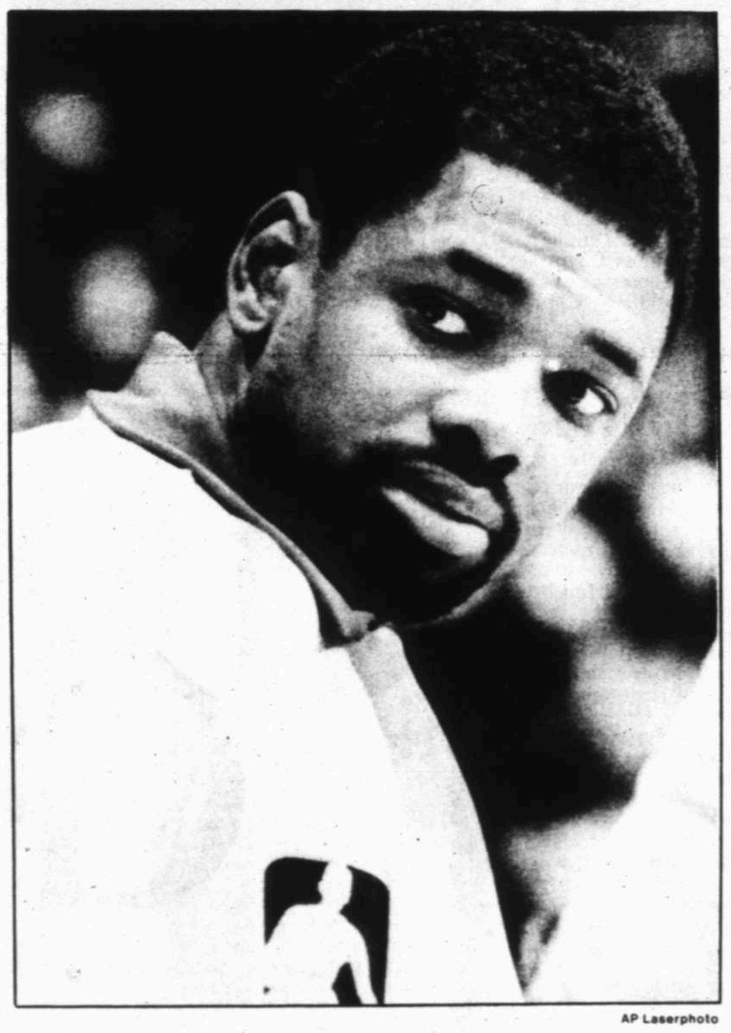

Dodgers owner Peter O'Malley has said the organization will stand behind Howe, and Attanasio said it was possible Howe can get a loan from the club if the commissioner's office will allow it.

In the bankruptcy petition, Howe listed $71,000 in fines to the Dodgers, although a spokesman for the National League team said it was only $54,000.

Howe, 25, first acknowledged his drug problem last winter and spent a month in a rehabilitation center. Last May, he missed a home game and admitted that he had resumed cocaine use. At the time, he was among the major league leaders in saves and hadn't allowed an earned run.

He spent a month in another treatment center and was fined $54,000 by the Dodgers, roughly a month's salary. He was put on probation, then later suspended for one day when he arrived late for a game and refused to be tested for drugs. The Dodgers suspended him for the rest of the season after he missed a team flight to Atlanta, then refused to be tested when he arrived there later.

Howe had a 4-7 record, with a 1.44 ERA and 18 saves in 68 2-3 innings in in 1983.

After a year plagued with personal problems, Chicago Bulls' Quintin Dailey begins to turn his life around.

Henderson draws attention

SEATTLE (AP) — Four teams are interested in Seattle Mariners free-agent outfielder Steve Henderson while his negotiations with the American League baseball club are stalled, says Henderson.

He said Thursday that Oakland, Montreal, Toronto and Milwaukee have contacted his agent Dick Moss to express interest.

"I don't want to talk much about it because I still really want to come to Seattle," said Henderson, 31, who led the Mariners last year with a .294 average.

The Mariners offered him a three-year guaranteed $1.5 million contract in October but warned it would decrease if he became a free agent.

Henderson became a free agent anyway, and the Mariners countered with a two-year, $850,000 contract with an option year worth $550,000. In response, Henderson's agent two weeks ago walked out on negotiations.

Oakland is the most serious of the four teams because it needs right-handed hitting. It already signed former Mariner free agent Bruce Bochte.

Montreal could use Henderson's consistent bat to complement Andre Dawson and Tim Raines.

Toronto is even with Montreal as a candidate for getting Henderson. Milwaukee may have been a leading candidate, but Tuesday it traded pitcher Jim Slaton for Califonia outfielder Bobby Clark, a player much like Henderson.

Peach Bowl could die

ATLANTA (AP) — The executive director of the Peach Bowl said Friday he is optimistic that the bowl will retain NCAA accreditation by selling another 4,800 tickets by game time next week.

George Crumbley said the bowl must sell a total of 40,000 tickets to meet the $400,000 minimum payment to each team required by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, and thus retain NCAA accreditation.

If enough tickets are not sold, "it means that the bowl would not be certified. It would be the last game the Peach Bowl would play," Crumbley said.

North Carolina and Florida State square off in the 3 p.m. game Dec. 30 at the 60,000-seat Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. The game will be televised by CBS.

"I feel that they'll pull it out," Crumbley said. "The thing that hurt more than any other one thing is the one-sided contest of the Florida-Florida State game ... Florida State lost 53-14.

"We sort of went into a tailspin at that point, as if they weren't going to have a good game," he said. "But Florida State is favored to beat North Carolina by three points.

"The pros can have a bad day and you'll say, "Maybe next week.' But when a collegiate team does it, it's different. I don't know why."

The two teams sold a total of about 15,500 tickets, leaving the bowl with having to sell about 24,500 to satisfy the NCAA rule. On Tuesday, the bowl still needed to sell about 6,000 tickets.

Quintin Dailey turns life around

CHICAGO (AP) — On his way to the top, Quintin Dailey forgot that the law of gravity was his law, too, and that talent begets money but does not cushion all of life's falls.

He hit bottom in December 1982, seduced on one side by drugs, cut deeply on the other by personal problems. Dailey had plunged from the top of the college basketball world to the brink of despair, and all the talent in the world couldn't make him whole.

THE CLIMB back up consumed nearly a year of his young life, beginning, he says, with the realization last summer "that only Quintin Dailey is responsible for Quintin Dailey."

"I felt like I'd lost myself," the 24-year-old Chicago Bulls guard said in a recent interview. "I feel like I have that back. But there's a long way left to travel.

"I can't have half of 'Q (his nickname)' together, and have the other half go off and do the same terrible things."

Basketball again is at the center of Dailey's life, after a period in which courtrooms, street protests, drugs and, finally, physical and emotional therapy made up his world.

Talent eased the first great hurt of Dailey's life — the death of his parents, within a short time of each other, when he was 14 — and he had every reason to believe it would do so forever. Because when Quintin Dailey wrapped his hands around a basketball he was invincible.

And the respect, the adulation, the gifts accorded Dailey the basketball star helped him forget the bitterness, the poverty and the loss Dailey the young man knew.

"Talent will change your mind like night to day," he said. "If you fly in an airplane and look down, you see little people. But if you're an athlete, always pampered, always noticed, always catered to, your thinking gets twisted."

"You get to thinking crazy things ... like all those people down there are looking up at you."

Yet, until the warm June day Dailey found himself alone in a Maryland clinic being treated for emotional stress and drug dependence, there had always been enough talent and hangers-on to support that line of thought.

"It's hard for someone outside our game to appreciate what 'Q' was going through," Bulls Coach Kevin Loughery said. "You see a young kid with money and you think, 'I'd like to have his problems.' But it's not that simple.

"A kid's maturity has a lot to do with his background. The really gifted ones like 'Q' grow up and little by little, somebody takes over everything for them. Then one day, they're on their own.

"And keeping your head in fast company isn't that easy. You look at the rest of the world and see that."

THE BULLS drafted him No. 1 — and made him a millionaire in the bargain — in the spring of 1982, shortly after his well-publicized guilty plea to charges of assaulting a University of San Francisco coed in December 1981.

Dailey never had a serious run-in with the law before, and the case left him reeling. The shy, handsome young man with a future suddenly was being portrayed as a monster with a past.

Dailey became the target of protests from women's groups, but started the season the same, self-assured athlete everyone recognized. He missed a few planes on the road, but it wasn't until he missed a home game that anyone guessed how deeply he hurt.

"I was running scared, missing the support that makes a person strong enough to face problems because I was fending those people off," he said. "I had the support ... but I couldn't see the forest for the trees."

Raised by an aunt, his skills and energy guided by a caring coach, Dailey earned All-America honors at Cardinal Gibbons High School in Baltimore, and then headed for San Francisco.

No one ever questioned the job, clothes, and other perquisities that went with being Quintin Dailey, All America — until the assault case.

A plea-bargaining agreement guaranteed his future as a pro, and three other charges, including attempted rape, were dropped. But the woman subsequently filed a civil lawsuit that cost Dailey an estimated $100,000 to settle out of court.

Around the same time, San Francisco dropped its basketball program, citing "multiple" NCAA infractions — at least one of which Dailey involved prominently. He admitted being paid for a job where he never worked and again saw his name in the wrong kind of newspaper clippings.

To get through it all, the Chicago Bulls' rookie kept telling himself he was still someone special.

"I was arrogant. I put up this front ... people could get this close to me and no closer," he said. "I wanted to stay away from bad people, but I ended up keeping the good people out, too."

After missing a home game in December 1982, Dailey received a leave of absence to undergo counseling and returned to the team the same stoic "Q." But he found himself a bad new habit — cocaine.

"Everyone's mind has a curiosity and this was something I found that I liked," he recalled. "But there comes a time when you've got to say you are stronger than it, or it is stronger than you."

He played well enough last season, averaging 15 points and four assists per game, to be named to the NBA's all-rookie team. And even then, wrestling with depression on one front and waging a losing war against cocaine on the other, he caught glimpses of the Quintin Dailey he wanted desperately to be.

It was there in the eyes of opposing players and in being treated as an equal by men he had looked up to his entire life, such as Julius Erving of Philadelphia and Bob Lanier of Milwaukee. In order to

Richardson is back

No margin left for drug error

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Michael Ray Richardson has "no margin of error" now that he is back with the New Jersey Nets more than two months after being waived amid drug-related problems, a club official says.

"This is where the tire meets the road. The next time he uses drugs he's banished from the NBA," Lewis Schaffel, the Nets' executive vice president, said Thursday. "There's no margin of error."

Richardson was allowed to return to the team under an agreement reached Wednesday at the urging of the National Basketball Association and the Players Association.

He will not be officially reinstated until the club learns whether he has passed a test for drug usage. He has agreed to submit to such testing four times a week.

Richardson, who twice led the NBA in steals, on Thursday underwent a physical examination that included a urinalysis test for drug use. Test results may be available today.

Should Richardson fail a drug use test, he would be permanently barred from playing in the NBA. Under the drug policy of NBA and the players association Sept. 28, athletes may be subject to permanent dismissal from the league for involvement with drugs. The policy includes an amnesty period through Dec. 31.

"He must pass every (test). The first one he fails, he's out of basketball," Schaffel said. "If he takes one drag of a joint, it'll show up. He's put a lot on the line."

Nets Coach Stan Albeck said Richardson will start at the "bottom bottom" once he returns.

"He has to earn the respect of his teammates and has to be willing to cooperate," Albeck said. "Those are the facts. If he does all those things and meets his obligations — great."

The Nets waived Richardson Oct. 11 because he did not comply with a league order to report to a drug counseling service after he missed practice sessions during preseason training camp.

"I hope that his problems are in the past," said New Jersey guard Otis Birdsong. "We've got to give him a chance. If he's ready and can play, he can help any ballclub."

The NBA announced Wednesday that the 28-year-old guard agreed to drop arbitration proceedings and submit to the provisions and penalties of the league's new anti-drug program, even though the circumstances arose prior to the Jan. 1 effective date of the program.

The NBA Players Association had filed a grievance against New Jersey on Richardson's behalf after the Nets refused to pay him the remaining two years of his reported $800,000 contract, saying he breached the agreement by using drugs. Richardson will forfeit his salary for the time he has missed this season.

Richardson, who has entered drug rehabilitation centers three times since last April and is an out-patient at New York's Regent Hospital, described during an emotional September news conference how cocaine abuse had been "killing" him.

No night for the timid

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — West Virginia's Mountaineers were glad to get away from the chilly weather and headed home Friday after a 20-16 victory over Kentucky in the seventh annual Hall of Fame Bowl.

West Virginia rallied in the second half to wrap up its third straight 9-3 season under head Coach Don Nehlen, who guided the school to three straight bowl appearances and victories in two of them.

"It was not a night for the timid," said Nehlen, whose team trailed the 6-5-1 Wildcats 10-3 at halftime Thursday night. "Even after the first half I always felt we would win. We had good enthusiasm all night."

The Mountaineers needed enthusiasm and a strong second-half effort from quarterback Jeff Hostetler to combat Kentucky and 30-degree temperatures with swirling winds. Crowd estimates ranged from 30,000 to 42,000 in attendance at 75,000-seat Legion Field.

"The wind was blowing and it really made your hands cold," said West Virginia tailback Tommy Gray, who gained 149 yards to lead all ball carriers. "Your body wasn't that cold but your hands were. I know that Jeff's hands were cold; I know mine were."

Hostetler misfired on all 10 first half passes before rebounding to hit 10 of 13 in the second half with touchdown passes to Rich Hollins and Rob Bennett. The 2-yard pass to Bennett, set up by Hostetler's 37-yard option keeper, was the go-ahead touchdown.

"I don't know if he was worried about the first half, but in the second half he just came out and hit everything," said Bennett, a 6-foot-6 tight end.

Hostetler needed a strong third quarter because Nehlen was ready to switch quarterbacks if his performance didn't improve. It did, and the 18th-ranked Mountaineers will finish in the top 20 for the second straight year.

"Their defensive backs did a pretty good job on the coverage," said Hostetler. "Luckily I was able to rebound in the second half. After I completed the first couple of passes, I felt pretty good and knew I could move the team."

Nehlen said a migraine forced Hostetler to miss practices last week and also kept the 4.0 student from taking all of his final exams.

The quarterback's father, Norman Hostetler, said his son suffered a concussion before leaving the game in the fourth quarter.

"He's had migranes once or twice in the past two years, but this is not a migrane, this is a concussion," the elder Hostetler said.

West Virginia trainer Greg Ott confirmed the injury, saying that Hostetler left the game with blurred vision.

"He came up dazed and with blurred vision," Ott said. "after the team physician examined him, we knew it was a concussion and not one of his migranes. He'll need rest and medication for the pain."

West Virginia kicker Paul Woodside, who booted two field goals, now has hit 63 of 77 field goal attempts and is 8 of 11 in West Virginia's three straight bowl appearances.

Huskers find the sun

MIAMI (AP) — The top-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers, fleeing unprecedented cold at home, found refuge Friday in record warmth as they stepped into the bright Florida sunshine at Miami International Airport.

The football team, which will meet No. 5 Miami Jan. 2 in the Orange Bowl, left Lincoln two days early because it has been too cold to practice outside.

The unbeaten Cornhuskers arrived at 2 p.m. EST, two hours behind schedule because one engine of their chartered L-1011 wouldn't start in the record 10-below-zero chill.

The players experienced a 93-degree swing in temperature by the time they arrived at their hotel in Miami Beach, where it was 83 degrees — three degrees warmer than the previous record for the day, back in 1953. Some of the players still were wearing wintry suits and sweaters, but one player came prepared in a short-sleeved, orange, tropical print shirt.

"We've had the coldest weather we've every had in Lincoln. It's never been like that," said Coach Tom Osborne. "We're just anxious to get some work in."

The Huskers, as Big Eight champions, are the official host team for the Orange Bowl, but Osborne ceded the home-field advantage to his opponents. The Hurricanes play their home games in the Orange Bowl, the city-owned stadium where the two clubs will meet.

"It's unusual (to be meeting the hometown team) in a bowl game," Osborne said. "That's certainly a little disadvantage for us. But if you're a great football team, you try to overcome those things."

He said Miami's heat and humidity might also be an advantage for the Hurricanes, but that he believed the Nebraska players would have adjusted in the 1½ weeks they have here before the game.

"They've got a great football team. Any time you win 10 straight, you're a great football team," Osborne said. "They have a great defense, their offense is good and they have great, skilled players."

Because the team arrived early, the Orange Bowl queen and princesses were not on hand to lob the traditional oranges to the disembarking players. Orange-jacketed bowl committee members filled in, saying the court members were in school or working at their regular jobs and don't begin filling their official duties until Christmas Day.

Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier wore earphones and listened to his portable stereo instead of reporters' questions. He smiled and held up an orange as he strolled silently to the team bus.

The plane was decorated with Nebraska pennants and posters, and the Eastern Airlines flight attendants had been issued Husker T-shirts and hats.

The Huskers were scheduled to begin practicing later Friday. All workouts will be held privately at Tropical Park, since the Huskers' usual Orange Bowl practice facilities belong to their opponents.

The temperature in Miami Beach broke a 3-year-old daily record of 80.

Since the Huskers began workouts for the Orange Bowl on Dec. 13, they have been able to practice outside only once.

UNLV, Georgetown game on

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Nevada Las-Vegas' nationally televised Dec. 30 game against Georgetown still is on after the two schools agreed to buy out next season's contract for a game with Wyoming.

Georgetown had refused to play the game if UNLV did not live up to an earlier agreement and play a return game with the university next season in Washington, D.C.

UNLV Athletic Director Brad Rothermel was rebuffed in his efforts to cancel already scheduled games to fit the Georgetown contest in, but the agreement to buy out the Wyoming game opened a spot on the UNLV schedule.

Under the agreement, both schools will split the $60,000 cost of buying out the contract UNLV had to play Wyoming on the road next season.

Rothermel had asked Nevada-Reno officials to cancel the UNLV game scheduled next year in Reno, but was turned down.

He said the Wyoming contract contained a clause allowing the university to buy it out for $60,000. Discussions with Georgetown officials ended with both universities agreeing to split the cost.

FCA to broadcast film Christmas

With major national headlines highlighting drug use in virtually all sports, the Fellowship of Christian Athletes will present a special film in the Midland-Odessa area at 5 p.m. Sunday on Channel 9 with some good news on the athletic front.

Ronnie Morris, former SMU basketball player and now a member of the national office of the FCA in Kansas City, was in Midland recently to plug the Sunday film, which is entitled "Sharing the Victory."

"This will be one of the first markets in the United States to see the film," said Morris. "Christmas Day was the only time we could air the show here, but the more we think about it, the more it seems like a good idea. It's a day where you would want to see something like this."

The film features Tom Landry, John Wooden, Tommy John, Randy Logan, Bobby Jones and Steve Bartkowski.

"We're looking for a full-time staff member for the Midland-Odessa area. It's one of our top priorities," said Morris. "We're also working to move our programs into the junior highs across the country. When I was a kid, important life decisions were being made in high school. Now it seems like those decisions are being made on the junior high level."

Oldenburg buys USFL's Express

More Sports on Page 8B

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — J. William Oldenburg's football background is limited to sandlot games in New York. But the new owner of the Los Angeles Express is banking on his financial skills to make up for any lack of football knowledge.

"Football is big business and I'm a businessman," Oldenburg said Thursday after purchasing the United States Football League franchise.

Oldenburg, president and chairman of the one of the largest property finance companies in the United States, purchased the year-old franchise from Colorado cable television executives Bill Daniels and Alan Harmon.

The sale price was not disclosed at the press conference, but Oldenburg said it was an "all cash" deal and "I own everything."

Published reports put the amount at about $7 million.

Daniels said he sold the club because "it is not practical to be an absentee owner in this day."

Oldenburg said he sees no problems running the Express and his San Francisco-based mortgage banking company, Investment Mortgage International.

"I think I can be in LA faster than you (reporters) can be back in your office," he said.

He wasted no time in firing his first shot at the more established NFL.

"I noticed the NFL (TV) ratings are down quite a bit. We're interested in seeing that not only continue, but our ratings go up even further," he said.

In one of his first moves, he turned over most of the football matters to Don Klosterman, a veteran pro football executive.

Klosterman, 53, was general manager of the Los Angeles Rams of the NFL from 1972-1980, but he had no apparent authority with the Rams in the last two years and his three-year contract with the NFL team expires Dec. 31.

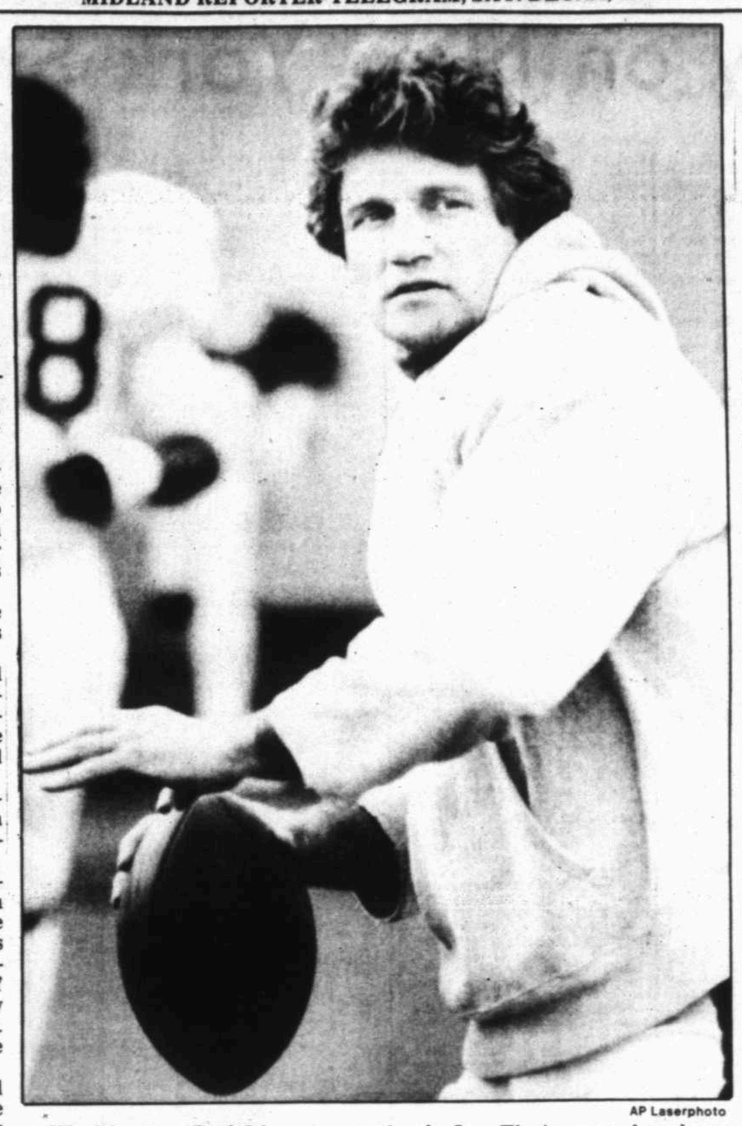

Under Klosterman's guidance, the Rams went to the NFL playoffs eight consecutive years.

The Express, 8-10 last year and troubled by low attendance, represent the latest challenge for Klosterman, who was a driving force in the success of the old American Football League.

"It's a tough market," said Klosterman, "but the only way you can win 'em (the fans) is give them a product."

During the news conference, Klosterman announced that Coach Hugh Campbell would remain with the Express. There had been reports that Campbell was under consideration to coach the Houston Oilers of the NFL. Campbell said he was busy preparing for the USFL draft Jan. 4-5 and had no plans to leave the Express.

Later, Campbell said he hoped Klosterman's arrival would reduce his front office duties, "yet a guy doesn't want to lose his say. It's a delicate subject we haven't approached yet."

UTEP's Haskins against new rule

By The Associated Press

Don Haskins, coach of 18th-ranked Texas-El Paso, says he could have waited another day before the controversial "last two-minute free throw rule" was abolished by the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee.

"I was definitely against it," Haskins said of the rule which was instituted beginning this season but rescinded as of Thursday night's games. "(But) I wish they started it (the old rule again) tomorrow instead."

Haskins' Miners missed the front end of three one-and-one foul shots in the final 1:45 of the game Thursday night and almost blew a 17-point lead to Arizona State. Texas-El Paso pulled out the contest 60-55 to raise its record to 8-0.

UNDER THE controversial rule which was rescinded, instead of shooting one-and-one free throws, there would have been two free throws in the final two minutes of the game for a common foul if the offending team was over the limit.

"I think we made some smart fouls down the stretch," said Arizona State Coach Bob Weinhauer. "I like the way the rule reads now."

The rule now reads as it did last season, before the controversial rule was installed.

"I'm glad they threw it out," said Nevada-Las Vegas Coach Jerry Tarkanian. "It was a silly rule. It didn't serve the purpose it was created for."

Tarkanian said the two-shot rule was making the game too physical.

"I really think what they should do is give the team one shot and the ball out of bounds," the Rebel coach said. "That way they will stop the fouling on purpose."

Other coaches agreed with the change.

"It's obvious something had to be done," said Penn's Craig Littlepage. "The residual effect was to cut down on fouls and speed up the games, but that just hasn't happened. I think the effect will be favorable.

"We had to do something to cut down on all the fouling, especially at the end of the games."

Canisius coach Nick Macarchuk said the two-shot foul rule "helped us win a couple of games. Otherwise, I never did like the rule. I thought it was a foolish rule. It had no merit to it.

"The only advantage for it was that the team who was ahead at the end of the game — they won with the free throws, which made a whole lot of difference. Otherwise, it was an awful rule."

Bill Frieder, coach of the 20th-ranked Michagan Wolverines, howevered favored the now-rescinded rule.

"I think it's stupid to eliminate it," said Frieder. "If you make a rule, stay with it for a year. Six or eight great coaches speak out and they change the rule."

NEBRASKA COACH Moe Iba said he has changed none of his strategy because of the rule.

"I really didn't think it was a bad rule," Iba said. "It took a lot of pressure off the officials."

Iba said he was "a little surprised" the NCAA eliminated the rule in mid-season.

Coach Hugh Durham of 14th-ranked Georgia said the intention of the rule was to cut down on intentional fouls late in a game when a team was trying to rally.

Instead, "everybody just immediately began fouling the worst shooter on the other team," Durham said. "At least last year you had to foul somebody with the ball for it not to be an intentional foul."

Theismann earns respect in NFL

Redskin quarterback still has fans to convince

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe Theismann may have convinced the rest of the National Football League that he's as good or better than any of his quarterbacking competitors. He's still working on some Washington Redskins fans, though.

Theismann, already the NFL's Most Valuable Player, was named the league's Offensive Player of the Year Friday by the Associated Press. But he remembers when he joined the Redskins in 1974 and enountered two Washington monuments named Sonny Jurgensen and Billy Kilmer.

"I came in here and bucked both of them," Theismann said recently. "To this day, people in Washington don't want to accept me. People still have feelings towards both Sonny and Billy. I was fortunate to work under both but there's no love lost, especially with Billy."

Jurgensen recalled Theismann as "a brash, cocky kid who felt he should play ahead of two overweight veterans." In 1978, after Jurgensen retired, Coach George Allen made Theismann his starter, then went to Kilmer halfway through the season.

"That was the hardest year of my life in football," said Theismann, who had opted to spend three years with Toronto in the Canadian Football League after being drafted No. 4 by the Miami Dolphins. "Billy didn't say a word to me for six weeks. He only started to talk me in quarterback meetings when he became the starter again."

Theismann believes he didn't begin to win acceptance from the fans until the Redskins won the Super Bowl last season. "It was like I closed the closet. If I had lost, the closet would still be open and I would have been the same as Billy again."

Theismann received 41 of 84 votes cast by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Running back Eric Dickerson of the Los Angeles Rams, who set a rookie record with 1,808 yards rushing and scored 20 touchdowns, was second with 29 votes.

Dan Marino, Miami's rookie quarterback, was a distant third with five. The remaining votes went to Redskin running back John Riggins (4), San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana (2), and rookie running back Curt Warner of Seattle, wide receiver Mike Quick of Philadelphia and quarterback Lynn Dickey of Green Bay (1 each).

In the MVP voting announced earlier this week, Theismann outpolled Dickerson 57-18 with the rest of the votes scattered among Marino and four others.

Except for his belief that he is vastly underpaid — his salary ranks 18th among NFL quarterbacks — this has been an exceptional season for Theismann, "the quickest one I've ever had." He threw 29 touchdown passes and was intercepted only 11 times as the Redskins posted a league-best 14-2 record.

High school cross country champion Janet Smith, 18, of Edison, N.J., displays a trophy she won for winning a national cross country race. The victory capped Smith's high school cross country running career that found her among the top school girl middle distance racers in the nation.

Janet Smith wants 'tough' image

EDISON, N.J. (AP) — Janet Smith says she wants to be known as "somebody who's tough and runs a hard race." Such a self-description is supported by the facts.

Smith, a senior at J.P. Stevens High School, has not lost a cross-country race in more than a year. She has won 60 of 65 races since her freshman year, when she captured the New Jersey State Interscholastic Athletic Association's All-Groups Meet of Champions.

HER TOUGHNESS and determination are not focused only on cross-country. The 5-foot-7, 105-pound runner also has waged a battle against dyslexia, a reading disability.

"I have to concentrate when I read and it's helped my concentration as a runner," said Smith.

She capped her high school cross-country career with her fourth straight All-Groups title and a 150-yard victory Dec. 10 in the Kinney Cross Country Race in San Diego, the meet that brings together the country's finest runners. She finished fifth in that race as a sophomore and junior.

"When she ran in her first dual meet as a freshman I said to my assistant coach, 'I think we have an outstanding runner.' She showed a toughness," said John Gundry, Smith's coach.

In meets, Smith runs against other girls, but her times are better than those of all but one member of the Stevens boys cross-country team, Gundry said.

At Gundry's urging, Smith has devoted herself to running, giving up snow skiing and other activities that could lead to injuries.

Smith, 18, began running when she was a second-grader, hoping it would get her in shape to play basketball when she got older. But she eventually gave up basketball to concentrate on running.

THIS SEASON, for the first time, she ran in practice with a four-pound pack strapped to her back to simulate the strain of an altitude of 7,500 feet. When she takes it off, she breathes easier and, she says, that makes it "a lot easier to run."

She said her biggest difference from past years, however, has been an air of self-assurance.

"I'm more confident in myself. I knew this was my last year and it was my last chance to do it," Smith said. "I believed in myself a lot more this year."

After winning the All-Groups Meet of Champions race as a freshman and sophomore, Smith finished second as a junior to Michelle Rowen of Washington Township. Rowen, now a freshman at the University of Virginia, also beat her in the 3,200-meter All-Groups championship race in outdoor track last year.

"It was probably the best thing that ever happened. It was enough to wake us up," Gundry said. "We got complacent. We were falling asleep. We realized the only way to win was to change her attitude."

NOW THAT the cross country season has ended, Smith is focusing on choosing a college — she has offers from every major running school in the country but has reduced her choices to the University of Arizona, North Carolina State, Nebraska and Tennessee — and running outdoor track, a sport she finds less appealing that cross country.

Smith, who won the All-Groups Meet of Champions title at 3,200 meters as a sophomore and is a two-time winner in the Group IV championship race at that distance, said she would like to "do really well on the college level."

As for a long range goal: "I'd like to run in the Olympics," said Smith, who worked out last summer at the U.S. Olympic Training Center at Colorado Spring, Colo.

Bettors ignore Mexico's new track

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — When a $20 million race track opened in this bustling border city, the locals thought it could be a sure-fire moneymaker.

The line was that Texas gamblers, unable to legally wager in their own state, would cross the International Bridges in droves to bet on the dogs and ponies.

It hasn't quite worked out that way.

The glistening track, about seven miles south of dusty Nuevo Laredo, usually draws only enough patrons to fill one-third of its 10,000 seats, said David Keiter, assistant director of racing.

"Despite the damage done by the peso devaluations, we're making just enough to cover expenses," he said. "Eighty percent of all new businesses fail in the first year, but I don't think that's the case here."

Nuevo Laredo sprawls just across the border from Laredo, Texas, and the sister cities long have fallen into a comfortable interdependence.

That's why three successive peso devaluations and Laredo's soaring unemployment rate — one of the highest in the nation — have gouged the heart out of both cities' economies.

The race track, everyone thought, would attract tourists. And those tourists would spread their money throughout both Laredos.

Tourists did flock to the track when it first opened in mid-March, but the numbers soon tapered off, hotel officials said.

"Everybody thought it would help business. They said the race track would change everything. But it didn't," said Gerald Rodriguez, assistant manager of La Posada hotel, which sits on the banks of the Rio Grande.

"All the properties were hoping it would bring in a lot of business, but that hasn't been what happened," added a desk clerk at the Laredo Hilton, who requested anonymity.

The track consciously caters to Americans, with races announced in English and all payoffs in U.S. dollars.

"We have that border flavor," Keiter said. "A lot of people come down to the border for the weekend, but the race track seems to be the main draw."

The thoroughbreds and quarter-horses run only on Saturdays and Sundays, but the greyhounds race Thursday through Sunday nights.

The track is closed only for a three-week period from late December to January and the usual balmy south-of-the-border temperatures seem to be another attraction, Keiter said.

An advertisting blitz currently in the works should help draw more racing aficionados — Texan or otherwise — to Nuevo Laredo Downs, many of whom may never have heard about the track, Keiter said.

The ad campaign will include radio and television spots, magazine promos and billboards, Keiter said.

"However," he added, "we know that the best advertising in the world is word-of-mouth."

It might be hard for some tourists to repeat the Mexican translation of the track's name: El Hipodromo y Galgodromo de Nuevo Laredo.

Keiter pointed out that Nuevo Laredo Downs already has weathered one major crisis — a Mexican labor strike that halted construction repeatedly and swelled the track's price tag from $8 million to $20 million.

"Think about it," said Conrad Cruz, head of the Laredo Chamber of Commerce. "They've been in operation for only a few months, not even a year. The timing of the opening had to be delayed because of the strikes and they needed to train their people. We're still optimistic.

"Besides, we still see the track as an added attraction — not the one savior to our economy."

Harvard kicker ignores pressure

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Harvard kicker Jim Villaneueva said he feels no extra pressure in the Blue-Gray All-Star Football Classic, even though 200 pro scouts will be watching to see if he is good enough to follow his father into the professional football.

Villaneueva's father, Danny Villaneueva, was place-kicker and punter for the Dallas Cowboys in the 1960s. He retired from the Dallas Cowboys in 1968 after helping the team win division championships in 1966, 1967 and 1968.

Like his father, Jim Villaneueva is a place-kicker and punter, and he hopes to impress the pro scouts with his skills in the Christmas Day game that pits college seniors from the North against seniors from the South.

Villaneueva said he is sure the scouts will make comparisions between him and his father, but he said, "That doesn't bother me the least bit.

"There's no undue pressure at all. People still remember who he was and they associate me with him, but that's fine with me. I was proud of him when he was playing, just as I am sure he's proud of me now that I'm playing."

In Danny Villaneueva's day, it wasn't unusual for someone to be a place-kicker and punter, but now, Jim Villaneueva said, "The combination kicker is a dying breed. There are few, if any, remaining in pro football, and there aren't even all that many left in college football anymore.

"If I'm fortunate enough to play pro ball, I'm sure I'll probably have to make a decision one way or the other. I'll worry about that when the times comes."

While wanting to play in the pros, Villaneueva said he has no strong desire to go to his dad's old team. Having grown up in Los Angeles, his ties to Dallas aren't that strong, he said.

"I'm not really a fan of any team now; I'm just a fan of good football games. Dallas usually provides good football games, so I guess you could say that, yeah, indirectly I'm a Cowboys' fan.

"But I don't really have any preference as to where I play — just warm weather if possible," Villaneueva said. "I'm tired of that New England weather."

Villaneueva won't have warm weather for the Blue-Gray game, which kicks off at 11:30 a.m. CST Sunday.

Football is now two-party race

By The Associated Press

Pro football became a two-party contest in 1983, and the older member of the pair lost some of its lustre of infallibility.

After nearly a decade without competition for the fans' dollar, after nearly half a season without games in 1982 due to a players' strike, the National Football League found a new league and fewer fans waiting when 19834 arrived.

The United States Football League made a big splash before it ever played a game with the signing of undergraduate Herschel Walker, the Heisman Trophy winner from the University of Georgia.

It was one of the few highlights of the USFL's inaugural season. For most of its 12 teams and most of its 18 weekends, empty seats and low television ratings were commonplace. Still, when its first season ended, it expanded, adding six franchises.

AS THE year began, the NFL engaged in a one-time-only "Super Bowl Tournament," an offshoot of the strike settlement in which an unprecented 16 of the league's 28 teams participated in the playoffs. For the first time in NFL history, teams with losing records (Detroit and Cleveland) were in postseason play.

The Washington Redskins and Los Angeles Raiders each finished 8-1 for the league's best record and survived the first round. The New York Jets beat LA in the second round, only to be shut out 14-0 by Miami in the AFC title game. Washington, with John Riggins picking up steam each week, defeated Minnesota in the second round and routed Dallas 31-17 for the NFC championship.

And on Jan. 30 — the latest date ever for an NFL championship — with Riggins setting a rushing record of 166 yards, the Redskins defeated Miami 27-17 in Super Bowl XVII for their first league title since 1942.

Although fans stayed away en masse when the 1982 season resumed, the NFL was confident they'd be back in '83. But in the six months before the opening of training camp, the league was stung several times.

THE LOS Angeles Raiders, who successfully challenged the league by moving from Oakland in 1982, and the LA Memorial Coliseum won nearly $50 million in damages from an Los Angeles jury. The league appealed.

Baltimore quarterback Art Schlichter admitted to running up gambling debts of $350,000. He was suspended by Commissioner Pete Rozelle for the season.

Four players — defensive end Ross Browner and fullback Pete Johnson of Cincinnati, nose tackle Greg Stemrick of Houston and linebacker E.J. Junior of St. Louis — were suspended for four games by Rozelle because of their involvement with cocaine.

SAFETY TONY Peters of the Washington Redskins pleaded guilty to taking part in a cocaine sale, received a suspended sentence in court and was suspended for at least one season by Rozelle.

The Dallas Cowboys were mentioned in a drug probe and "America's Team" became known derisively as "South America's Team."

According to published reports, Leonard Tose, owner of the Philadelphia Eagles, ran up hundreds of thousands of dollars in gambling debts. He also engaged in a costly battle to retain ownership of the franchise.

The USFL, scoffed at because of its "offseason" format, emerged with television and player contracts in hand. Along with some NFL has-beens and never-wases were a smattering of rookies projected as pro stars no matter where they played — Kelvin Bryant, Anthony Carter, Trumaine Johnson, David Greenwood and Craig James. And as the year progressed the USFL added a few NFL stars for the future — Cris Collinsworth, Joe Cribbs, Dan Ross, Doug Williams and Gary Barbaro.

During the year the leagues wound up briefly in court when Arkansas running back Gary Anderson signed with Tampa Bay of the USFL and then San Diego of the NFL. The court ruled Anderson belonged to Tampa Bay.

And in December, the two leagues collided again when the USFL's Houston Gamblers and NFL's Detroit Lions each insisted they had signed Billy Sims, a running back with the Lions, to a five-year contract.

The USFL gained or lost massive credibility — depending on one's outlook — with the signing of Walker. The new league, like the the NFL, had pledged to refrain from raiding college campuses. Then it pulled a reverse, Commissioner Chet Simmons saying Walker was a special case. Much of the publicity was negative — and Walker's impact was minimal. After some big crowds turned out to watch him early in the season, ticket sales and ratings dropped precipitously.

ON JULY 18, before a paid crowd of 46,535 in 75,123-seat Mile High Stadium in Denver, the Michigan Panthers defeated the Philadelphia Stars 24-22 for the first USFL title. In November, Toronto ended Edmonton's five-year domination of the Canadian Football League, defeating British Columbia 18-17 to win the Grey Cup.

Stanford quarterback John Elway, whom the USFL had wooed hard, long and unsuccessfully, was the NFL's No. 1 draft choice, by Baltimore. But he strong-armed the Colts into trading him to Denver and became a million-dollar-a-year rookie, to the consternation of some lesser-paid veterans. He was benched early in the season but later regained the starting job and led Denver into the playoffs.

Terry Bradshaw missed all but one game as Pittsburgh's quarterback and Dan Fouts missed most of San Diego's. Not one regular quarterback made it through the season without some bench time. Still, the offense took control with some unprecedented numbers, and that — along with the strike's aftermath, the drugs, the USFL and other factors — was blamed for a dip in NFL attendance and ratings.

As Franco Harris closed in on Jim Brown's all-time rushing record, the 47-year-old Brown said — not quite seriously — he'd make a comeback to keep it. George Blanda's only response was congratulatory when Jan Stenerud broke his all-time field-goal record.

Seattle, with Chuck Knox its new head coach, made its playoff debut, leaving hard-luck New Orleans the only team never to have a winning season or a postseason game. Other new head coaches had mixed results. John Robinson's Los Angeles Rams made into the playoffs, thanks in part to record running by rookie Eric Dickerson. But Kay Stephenson's Buffalo Bills, John Mackovic's Kansas City Chiefs, Bill Parcells' New York Giants, Marion Campbell's Atlanta Falcons and Joe Walton's Jets failed to do so. The Jets did make a move elsewhere, though — to New Jersey, starting in 1984.

Naturalized Japanese man bucks tradition

TOKYO (AP) — Tran Dinh Tong is one naturalized Japanese citizen who, bucking official pressure to become one of the crowd, decided that becoming Japanese should not mean giving up the name of his Vietnamese forefathers.

Tran, 30, is the first person in Japanese legal history to win a court case to regain his original name which he abandoned for a Japanese name when he became a citizen of this country.

Yet outside the legal pale the Justice Ministry acknowledges it still "advises" those applying for citizenship to take "appropriate" Japanese names. Resident aliens insist that this practice exemplifies the homogeneity of society which has contributed to Japan's economic success but earned it a reputation of excluding those who would be different.

Tran came to Japan in 1972 and studied at the Tokyo Mercantile Marine University. He applied for citizenship in October 1981 with an adopted Japanese name of Hideo Nakai, using his Japanese wife's family name. He was granted citizenship in September 1982.

In an interview by telephone from his home in Kobe, where he works as an inspector for a trading company, Tran said he wanted to use his own Vietnamese name from the outset — but was advised by authorities that it would be "impossible" to obtain citizenship with a foreign name.

LATER HE appealed to a family court to regain his name because "I felt as if I was lying to people, though the Japanese name was convenient for a lot of things in my daily life. Also, I wanted my child to carry my family name."

He said his Vietnamese name, written in the simplified "katakana" phonetic alphabet rather than Chinese characters used for Japanese, Korean and Chinese names, caused him some inconvenience, such as in getting credit cards. But he said someone had to take the initiative in changing Japan's "clannish society."

The policy on names "is of the prewar mentality that prevailed when Japan kept Korea as its colony," Kim Ho-joon, a welfare section official of the (South) Korean Residents Union of Japan, said.

Japan "annexed" Korea in 1910, and, in making Koreans imperial subjects, forced Koreans to adopt Japanese names in 1939.

"It is designed to assimilate resident aliens into Japanese society — not to recognize them as different minority people," Kim said.

There are about 670,000 Korean nationals living in Japan, constituting 83 percent of Japan's resident aliens. Many are Japan-born descendants of forced laborers who worked here before and during World War II.

NO OFFICIAL figures were available, but Kim estimated about 100,000 Korean nationals have been naturalized in Japan since the war, usually with their Japanese aliases.

There will be more Japanese citizens with "katakana" names if Japan's Nationality Act is revised to confer citizenship rights to children born in Japan of alien fathers, Tran said.

Under the current act — also cited by resident aliens as evidence of discrimination — people born in Japan of alien fathers and Japanese mothers have no citizenship rights. The government is considering revising the law to eliminate the sex of parents in determining citizenship.

Yasuaki Onuma, associate professor of international law at Tokyo University, said citizenship policies were based on the "myth" that the Japanese were a single race, and the insistence on Japanese names was a "very paternalistic" remnant of colonial policies.

"Historically speaking, the Japanese population in ancient times was made up of various races from both the south and north," he said in an interview. "For instance, the (Caucasian) Ainu race lived, and still exists, in northern Japan with cultural characteristics clearly different from others."

ONUMA SAID the myth began in Japan's more than 200 years of feudal isolation and was heightened by the 19th-century revival of the Imperial system, which defined the Japanese as a single "Yamato" (Japanese) race with the emperor as the center.

"Many things have been changed here since the end of World War II, but people's awareness of the single-race nation remains unchanged," he said. "Rather, it is positively affirmed as a key factor contributing to Japan's postwar economic success.

"It is partly true that homogeneity in society helped economic growth, but I don't think Japan can survive in future international society with that attitude. It's also unrealistic to think Japan can maintain 99 percent of its population with the Japanese race in coming ages."

The mass-circulation Asahi Shimbun said the Justice Ministry had recently instructed regional officials to let naturalized foreigners use their own names.

However, an official who asked not to be named said the ministry would continue to encourage citizenship applicants to take "appropriate" Japanese names, while making sure they understood it was not mandatory.

"We advise them to adopt family names with a sense of belonging to society, because their names will be used by their children, grandchildren and so on," the official said.

Old-fashioned fair survives modern times

NUREMBERG, West Germany (AP) — The brigades of rosy-cheeked nutcracker soldiers and the spicy lure of mulled wine on a frosty night beckon like the ghost of Christmas past.

Germany's most famous Christmas fair, for reasons as mysterious as winter's first snowflake, has somehow managed to survive in an age when Santa's sack is stuffed with home computers and yule trees come in hues like neon pink.

The Christkindlesmarkt, with its stalls of gingerbread men and handcrafted ornaments, has drawn crowds to Nuremberg's cobblestoned old town for four centuries now.

"We're not really sure exactly when or how it began," said fair spokesman Werner Frank, but written accounts of the fair date back "over 400 years."

"You'll find people whose families have traded here for generations," Frank said in an interview. "Unfortunately, there's not as many as there used to be."

GEORG HELTERHOFF recalled how his wife's grandmother ran the family's Zwetschgemaennla — prune people — stand 80 years ago.

This year, the Helterhoffs made around 3,000 of the six-inch dolls with prune limbs, fig tummies and painted walnut faces. Clad in the colorful costumes of chimney sweeps, milkmaids and other folksy characters, the comical figures sell for eight marks — about $3 — each.

"This stand was passed on from my wife's grandmother to her mother and now to my wife," Helterhoff boasted. But, he added sadly, "We aren't sure yet whether our children will carry on when the time comes."

Zwetschgemaennla, a Bavarian craft which residents of Nuremberg claim to have originated, populate several of the Christkindlesmarkt's 157 stands this year.

But the most popular stands seem to be the ones where piping hot sausage is served along with cup after cup of the warm, spiced brew the Germans aptly call gluehwein, or glowing wine.

CHILDREN BUNDLED against the December cold gaze in wonder at the sweet parade of Lebkuchen (gingerbread), Suessapfeln (candy apples) and other holiday treats as their parents admire the blown-glass baubles, carved nativities and tree angels swathed in elegant velvet gowns.

Carolers, puppeteers, dancers and acting troupes from around Europe perform for the crowd — free entertainment ranging from Handel's "Messiah" to a plump organ-grinder's wheezing rendition of "O Tannenbaum."

Woman governor general named

LONDON (AP) — Jeanne Sauve, a 61-year-old politician and former broadcast journalist, was named Friday as the first woman governor general of Canada.

The holder of the post is the personal representative in Canada of Queen Elizabeth II.

"It's a terrific opportunity to serve the country and I'm really quite delighted to have been asked to do it," Mrs. Sauve told reporters at a brief news conference in Ottawa after the appointment was announced.

WELCOME

Wonder what it's like down there? Then go on down. Why do you hesitate? You're being welcomed with love and warmth. The beautiful spirit of God beckons you. A wonderful experience awaits you.

Need a miracle today? What better place to find it than in the House of God. Inside you will feel the love and joy of being in the presence of the Lord. Sit down and relax; with poise, confidence and happiness at having made the decision yourself. Listen to the minister and give thought to his words and their meaning. Join in the singing and be glad. Shed your tensions. Meet your neighbors and make new friends.

Lonely? Unhappy? Fearful? You needn't be. The doors are open to you. Step in and create a miracle for yourself.

Belfast to Beirut: Religious banners fly over battle

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

Marx called it "the opium of the people." But religion today is more stimulant than sedative in much of the strife troubling the world.

Moslem vs. Christian, Catholic against Protestant, Hindu vs. Buddhist — the cross and crescent fly once again among the emblems of battle. Sectarian conflict bloodies Belfast's alleyways, Beirut's streets, Sri Lanka's village lanes.

Many of these confrontations, such as those in Lebanon and Northern Ireland, may be better described as ideological, ethnic or class struggles, not religious. But religion helped shape and nurture them, long ago by creating an "us-against-them" social system, today by feeding the fears and prejudices against non-believers.

Moorhead Kennedy, executive director of New York's Council for International Understanding, says religion is an underlying — and underestimated — element behind much of the world's violence.

"We Americans just don't understand religion as a force in international affairs," he says.

KENNEDY, A retired U.S. Foreign Service officer who is a longtime student of Islam, has first-hand knowledge of religion's political power. He was one of those held hostage for 444 days by Islamic militants at the Tehran embassy.

Even when religion is not on the front line, it can affect the conflict.

Because they believe in reincarnation, Lebanon's tough Druse militiamen are fearless in the face of death; Iran's Shiite Moslems embrace the idea of dying in battle, a martyrdom that guarantees entrance to heaven; India's Sikh terrorists are inheritors of a religion that glorifies the martial spirit, much as the Shinto creed inspired pre-World War II militarism in Japan.

The swift pace of modernization and Westernization in the late 20th century is stirring the soul of religious militancy, Kennedy said.

"In the Third World, one result of the penetration by the West is the likelihood of a religious reaction, because people won't take too much change," he said in an interview.

EDWARD SAID, a Palestinian-born Columbia University professor and leading American interpreter of Mideast culture, finds such an anti-West reaction behind Lebanon's sectarian agonies.

"The Maronites in Lebanon see themselves as the representatives of Christianity, Europe, the West — as opposed to the others, who are Arab, Islamic," he said.

"We've never really gotten over the Crusades," added Kennedy.

That age-old religious divide occasionally shows through even the technocratic surface of a modern superpower.

Here is a capsulized look at religion and conflict around the globe:

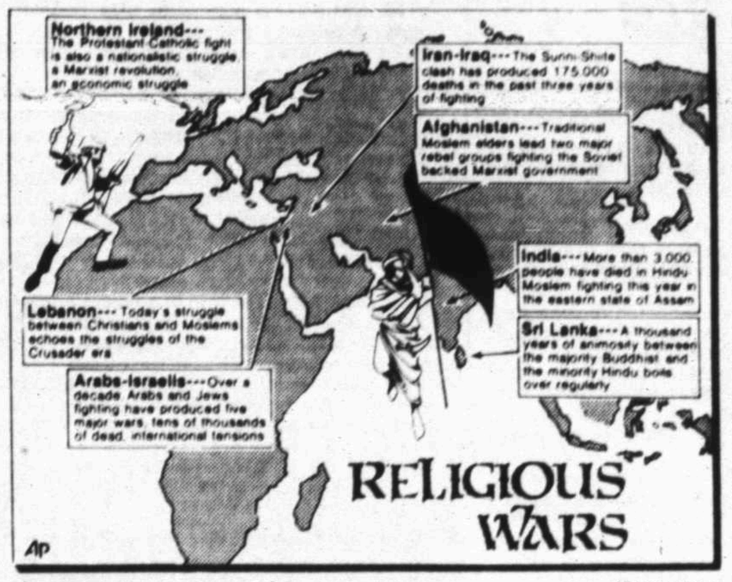

LEBANON

For centuries a mountain refuge for persecuted sects, Lebanon today is an ecumenical slaughterhouse.

Despite an overlay of superpower rivalry, the basic struggle still echoes the Crusader era — a clash between dominant "Western" Christians and poorer "Eastern" Moslems.

At least 17 recognized religious communities crowd this tiny land of 3.5 million people. They include about 1 million Shiite Moslems, almost as many Sunni Moslems, 200,000 members of the Islamic-descended Druse sect, and 1.4 million Christians, mostly members of the Maronite sect.

The legacy is bloody and old. A century ago, tradition says, 20,000 Christians were massacred by Druses in the Chouf Mountains. More recently — in the period from the 1975-76 civil war to the aftermath of the 1982 Israeli invasion — probably 70,000 Lebanese have been killed.

AP Laserphoto

Sectarian conflict rages in Belfast's alleyways, Beirut's streets and Sri Lanka's village lanes. Religious differences, although not always the primary cause, help keep the many confrontations around the world in flames.

IRAN-IRAQ

"This is not a conventional war," Iranian ground forces commander Col. Sayyed Shirazi has said. "It is a war of faith."

Iran's border conflict with Iraq is the world's bloodiest war — unconfirmed U.S. reports say at least 175,000 people have been killed over three years — and is probably the most "religious."

It mirrors the historic schism between the austere Shiite sect of Iran's Persians and the more pragmatic Sunni sect of most Arabs.

AFGHANISTAN

When rebel tribesmen banded together in 1979, they called themselves "Teiman Atahad-Islami" — "Those who have sworn to fight for Islam."

To the tribesmen, their Moslem fundamentalist struggle against Afghanistan's Marxist government and Soviet troops is a "jihad," a holy war, against godless communism and Western-style modernization. Traditional religious elders lead two major rebel groups.

ARABS-ISRAELIS

Five major wars, tens of thousands of dead, international tensions stretching over decades — all have grown from the clash of two peoples, Arab and Jew, over a strip of land each regards as their birthright.

In some respects, the conflict is ethnic, economic and ideological, but the religious element is ever-present.

Those who govern Israel cite Biblical "title" when they lay Jewish claim to the Arab-populated West Bank of the Jordan River. And generations of Arab leaders have summoned their people to a "jihad" to "liberate" Moslem shrines under Israeli control.

PHILIPPINES

The traditional Moslem credo divides the world into the "Land of Islam" and the "Land of War." The farthest frontier of the "Land of War" today lies in the jungles of Mindanao and the Sulu Islands, in the southern Philippines.

Separatist guerrillas among that region's 2.5 million Moslems have been fighting to end domination and encroachment by the Philippines' Roman Catholic majority of 42 million.

NORTHERN IRELAND

The guerrilla Irish Republican Army, overwhelmingly Roman Catholic, is waging underground war to remove Northern Ireland — Protestant population 1 million, Catholics 500,000 — from the United Kingdom and to unite it with the largely Catholic Irish republic to the south.

Star of Bethlehem center of controversy

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 2,000 years ago, the story goes, a light in the sky guided three men to the crib of a newborn infant. That beacon has become the center of faith, puzzlement and debate ever since.

The gospel of Matthew reports the event, with the three wise men saying they came to Bethlehem to see Jesus because "we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."

While theologians tend toward divine origin for the star of Bethlehem, scientists have proffered other possibilities.

If it was a natural phenomenon there are many possible explanations, said LeRoy Doggett of the U.S. Naval Observatory.

But Doggett added that, in addition to the scientific ideas, "two options have to be considered that would take it out of the hands of astronomers altogether. One would be for it to be a real miracle. The other is if the story, in some form or another, is a myth."

Otherwise, Doggett said, "there is a wild array of possible explanations."

One possibility is a conjunction of planets, an occasion when two or more planets appear to be close together in the sky, or even line up with one another, making them seem unusually bright.

The actual birth of Jesus is believed to have occurred sometime from 3 B.C. to 7 B.C., Doggett said. A conjunction of Venus and Jupiter, both bright planets, occurred in 3 B.C. Another, involving Jupiter and Saturn took place in 7 B.C.

"If wise men were systematically watching the sky and watching the motions of the planets, they might have inferred something significant" from such events, Doggett said.

And he noted that astrology was very popular in that era. "It was the science of the time."

Astrologers, who believe movements of the stars either foretell or affect Earthly happenings, might have seen significance in the appearance of the planet Jupiter near the star Regulus in 3 B.C., added Doggett.

Astrologers in Persia and Babylonia knew Jupiter as the "king" planet. Regulus was also associated with kings. And the constellation Leo, where Regulus is the brightest star, was the astrological sign for the ancient tribe of Judah in Israel.

This combination could have been interpreted by astrologers as meaning a king was to be born among the Jews.

Doggett did note, however, that that was not the only time the same conjunction has occurred. "I don't know if the other times stimulated" the same interest among wise men, he commented.

Other scientists have suggested a nova, the sudden brightness caused by an exploding star millions of miles away.

Records kept by the Chinese indicate a nova occurred in 5 B.C., and that too could have been the star seen by the Magi.

Gail S. Cleere of the Naval Observatory noted that a painting seen in a catacomb in Rome shows the constellation Aquila with what seems to be an extra star.

Gold most expensive item

NEW YORK (AP) — Gold would be the most expensive item on the Christmas shopping list of the Three Wise Men if they were buying gifts this year for the infant Jesus as described in the Bible.

According to the Biblical account, the Three Wise Men came to Bethlehem bearing gold, frankincense and myrrh.

Gold was quoted at $391 a troy ounce in New York on Monday. Frankincense cost about $2.40 a pound and myrrh $1.75 a pound.

Theives demand money, release of prisoners

PARIS (AP) — Thieves holding a tunic said to have been worn by Jesus Christ have reportedly demanded the release from jail of three members of a banned anarchist group and a $35,700 donation to Poland's outlawed Solidarity trade union.

Officials in the Bishopric of Pontoise, the diocese near Paris in which the church that housed the tunic is located, said they had no intention of interceding with police to get the prisoners released. The prisoners are members of a guerrilla group called Direct Action.

The officials also said they would be surprised if Solidarity leader Lech Walesa accepted money obtained by theft and blackmail.

The leftist daily Liberation said earlier this week the demands were delivered in three anonymous calls to the newspaper.

The maroon, seemless woolen robe was stolen late Monday or early Tuesday from a reliquary in the basilica of St. Denis. It had been enclosed in an iron frame.

The church officials pointed out that, technically, the Holy Tunic of Christ belongs to the people of Argenteuil, the northern Paris suburb in which the church is located. They cited a 1905 law separating church and state.

Bishopric officials said the basilica, where the tunic has been kept since the 12th century, was the guardian of the garment, believed by French Catholics to have been worn by Jesus Christ before his crucifixion.

Its authenticity has never been clearly established, but church authorities say it ranks in significance with the Holy Shroud of Turin.

The tunic was given to Charlemagne, emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, in the year 800 by the Empress of the East, Irene of Constantinople. Charlemange in turn gave the robe to his daughter Theocrate, abbess of Argenteuil.

The relic is the the object of an annual pilgrimage and is said to have curing powers.

It was stolen once before by the Normands in 882 and rediscovered in 1158.

'Conscience of Las Vegas' preaches gospel to gamblers

By the Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — "It's five minutes to midnight, brother, and the clock is ticking. Hurry up! It's getting late. The Lord wants you. You must get right with God..."

Brother Nelson stood outside his two-story shack in the middle of the desert on the outskirts of this gaming capital clutching his tattered Bible, warning his visitors to take heed.

Nelson C. "Brother Nelson" Goodwin, 79, has been, in his words, "the Conscience of Las Vegas" for 43 years, a street preacher distributing religious tracts, telling everyone he encounters to repent and accept the Lord.

"Las Vegas is the most ungodly place on the face of the earth," insists Brother Nelson. "Las Vegas is rotten to the core, crawling with sinners."

The desert shack he built in 1940 from scrap wood, corrugated tin and other materials salvaged from a dump, is a wraparound billboard covering a brief biography of the preacher and messages of warning: "The Wages of Sin Is Death," "There Is No Hope Outside Jesus," "What the World Needs Is Jesus," "I Am Not Ashamed of the Gospel of the Lord."

The billboard biography tells how Brother Nelson, "King of the Vagabond Preachers," saw the light, accepted the Lord and was saved on April 13, 1931, while serving time in a Santa Ana, Calif., jail for smuggling tequila from Tijuana to California.

Trouble is, Brother Nelson's home is so far out in the desert that the messages on the walls of his shack are visible mainly to sidewinders, pack rats and other varmints. He is a life-long bachelor.

But he spreads the word of Jesus every day up and down Fremont Street in downtown Las Vegas, along the busy sidewalks and in the gambling casinos.

"I'm the Lord's messenger, sending out his warnings against sin," explains Brother Nelson.

He passes out gospel tracts admonishing, "all gamblers are hellbound," to men and women playing slot machines, shooting dice and betting on 21 and roulette.

"Oh brother, I hate to repeat the filthy way I'm cursed in those gambling joints. I hate to repeat the blasphemy heaped on me because I'm preaching the gospel," sighs Brother Nelson.

"I've been cursed, threatened and thrown out of every gambling joint in town. But I keep going back because I'm doing the work of the Lord. Praise Jesus. Amen."

Ever since he first came to town, Brother Nelson has been warning, "Las Vegas is doomed. The Lord is going to put a horrible judgment on this cesspool.

"It gets worse with each passing hour. I don't understand it. The only hope is repentance..."

He finds his clothing — he wears three pairs of trousers and three sweaters even in the summer heat — in trash cans behind clothing stores and eats "what I dig from garbage cans behind the big supermarkets."

His two-story shack, festooned inside as well as out with religious messages, has no electricity or running water. He reads by kerosene lamp. His sagging bed is covered with soiled blankets.

He says he bathes at the most only twice a year.

All through the Great Depression years, Brother Nelson rode the rails from one end of America to the other.

"Freight cars and hobo jungles were my home. My ministry was the hobos of this nation," he recalls.

His hero is the late Billy Sunday. He was baptized by Aimee Semple McPherson in Angeles Temple in Los Angeles.

UMC approves language guidelines

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The governing body of the United Methodist Church has approved guidelines on biblical and theological language that suggest that fewer male nouns and pronouns be used in referring to Jesus.

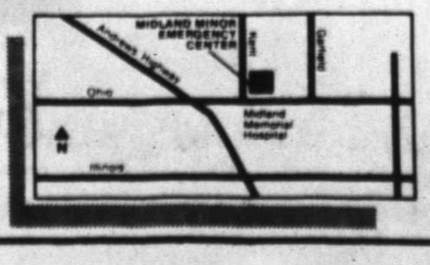

The document suggests the use of nouns such as "redeemer" and "savior" and pronouns such as "this person" and "such a person."

The report neither recommends nor eliminates the use of the word "Lord" in referring to God.

Astronaut: Upcoming shuttle mission will open new era

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Next month's space shuttle mission will open a new era in which crews routinely intercept and repair orbiting spacecraft, says the man slated to be the second black American in space.

Mission specialist Ronald McNair, a 33-year-old physicist from Lake City, S.C., says the space program is on the brink of repairing orbiting spacecraft.

"For years we have said we could repair satellites in space," he said. "Now we're about to do it."

But the commander of the planned Jan. 30 flight, veteran space traveler Vance Brand, said more hurdles must be cleared before America's reusable spaceplane is out of the development stage.

One hurdle is trying to make the first shuttle landing at Kennedy Space Center. If the weather cooperates, Brand will try to land in Florida, the newspaper TODAY in Cocoa reported Thursday.

McNair and Brand, 52, likened their impending flight, the 10th in the shuttle program, to a dry run for testing the tools and techniques slated for use on future satellite repair missions. The first such task is planned for the following shuttle flight in April, when astronauts hope to fix an ailing sun-observing spacecraft called Solar Max.

Two devices crucial to on-orbit repair operations — a daring new jet propulsion backpack and a special work station that can hold a space-suited astronaut at the end of the shuttle's 50-foot-long manipulator arm — will be tried for the first time.

The astronauts also will allow a small metallic balloon to drift into space, and then later attempt to rendezvous with the 2-yard-wide object from about 140 miles away.

Brand, who first flew on the Apollo-Soyuz flight in 1975, predicted that his approaching voyage aboard Challenger would be remembered as "the mission that got us ready to repair satellites."

But Brand, whose initial shuttle command — the fifth flight of Columbia in November 1982 — was billed by the National Aeronautic and Space Administration as the first fully operational flight, said the shuttle still hasn't met that goal.

"We like to think of development cutting off and operational flight beginning," he said at a press conference at Johnson Space Center in Houston televised to other space centers around the country. "I think we're largely operational, but there's a blending out of development. We're blending it out slowly."

He said he was still awaiting results of an investigation into problems that beset Challenger's sister ship, Columbia, on its last flight earlier this month. Depending on the probe's outcome, the Jan. 30 flight could be delayed.

NASA scientists said Thursday that computer problems that delayed Columbia's landing were caused by tiny bits of solder and gold that triggered short circuits.

Brand and Mission 10 pilot Robert "Hoot" Gibson said they will do whatever they can to land Challenger on the 3-mile-long shuttle runway at the Florida launch site.

Efforts to land at Kennedy could include staying in space an extra day and trying again if weather is bad on the initial approach.

"I think a strong possibility would be a day-after landing at KSC," Brand said. If Florida weather looks like it will stay bad, Challenger will land on the more familiar Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., runways.

In London,, meanwhile, the British government announced it would launch two satellites aboard the shuttle, one in 1985 and the other in 1986, raising the possibility that Britain will have its first astronaut within two years.

Motel owner finds use for caboose

STRASBURG, Pa. (AP) — In 1970, Donald Denlinger salvaged 19 cabooses destined for the scrap heap and converted them into a motel that boasts: "The end of the train was just the beginning for us."

Denlinger now wants to expand and to sell other refurbished units as adult playhouses because cabooses, considered obsolete or excess baggage by America's railroads, are a hot collectors' item.

"It's a nostalgic thing. You want to grab a piece of the best of yesterday before it gets away," said Denlinger, whose Red Caboose Motel is surrounded by corn fields between Strasburg and Paradise in Lancaster County.

"It's the only place like it in the world. We get a lot of honeymooners who want make sure their marriage starts on the right track," he said in a recent interview.

Denlinger plans to buy and refurbish a dozen more cabooses. Six will be resold to people who want them as getaway housing.

"So many people say they'd give anything to have a caboose as a summer home, we have a waiting list," said Denlinger, whose work garb includes a black conductor's hat, red pants, white shirt and black vest adorned with a gold watch chain.

A 25-ton scrap caboose costs about $4,000. They are usually rusting and smelly, and it takes plenty of money and elbow grease to refurbish them with plumbing, water lines and insulation.

"You'd probably have to spend another $15,000 fixing them up. But what size of a house can you buy for $20,000 that's ready to move in, turnkey?" said Denlinger.

In their heyday, cabooses served as rolling offices, but computers now handle a railroad's paperwork. And cabooses are no longer needed to ferry repair crews or carry tools.

So last year, America's railroads reached an agreement with the United Transportation Union to gradually phase out cabooses. The Florida East Coast Railway eliminated cabooses 20 years ago, and they became obsolete in Europe after World War II.

"It's the end of the line for the end of the train," said Chris Knapton, associate vice president of the Washington-based Association of American Railroads.

Jamie's father may enter politics

Charles Fiske

BOSTON (AP) — Charles Fiske, who conducted a successful appeal last year for a liver donor for his year-old daughter Jamie says he is considering entering politics.

Fiske, 37, of Bridgewater, a former Roman Catholic priest who married an ex-nun, told The Enterprise of Brockton that he may run for the state House of Representatives because of "what we've been able to do for our daughter."

He said in Wednesday's interview that his experience in lobbying for treatment for people needing transplants "has caused me to look at the quantity and quality of people running for office."

He said Jamie's case "showed me that you can change the system. Plus, I have a sense of obligation that I feel toward society."

Fiske, who said he would run as a Republican, is an administrator in the social services department of University Medical Center in Boston.

Fiske appealed for help in finding a donor for his daughter at a meeting of the American Academy of Pediatricians in September 1982. The publicity led to a transplant at the University of Minnesota Hospitals in Minneapolis and Jamie, now 2, has recovered and leads a normal life.

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Prince Claus, 58-year-old husband of Queen Beatrix, is taking flying lessons, the government information service said Friday.

The prince, who bowed out of many public events in the last year because of intermittent treatment for depression, has been taking lessons at a flying school run by Martinair, the nation's largest air charter company.

"The Prince is very enthusiastic and a good pupil," said chief instructor Martin van Erkel. "He said that he wants to take it easy in the beginning and not take too many lessons over a short period.

"He has been at the stick for a few times, and he has done very well," van Erkel told The Rotterdam daily Algemeen Dagblad.

Jack Ford

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The driver's license of Jack Ford, son of former President Gerald Ford, has been suspended for six months because he refused to take a chemical sobriety test after he was arrested for drunken driving.

Ford, 31, was arrested Aug. 16 in northern San Diego County after officers saw his car weaving on Highway 101. He was given a field sobriety test by the arresting officer — in which the officer examines a driver's physical coordination — and flunked, police said.

He later pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of reckless driving, but his license was ordered suspended because of his refusal to submit to the chemical test.

He appealed, but on Dec. 16, the Department of Motor Vehicles "reimposed that suspension," department spokesman Erwin Cooper said Thursday. Ford can reapply for his license June 15, he said.

Ford works as a television commentator and a political consultant in San Diego and lives in the beach community of Leucadia about 25 miles north of San Diego.

Evel Knievel

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has filed a civil tax lawsuit seeking $1.6 million it claims former motorcycle daredevil Evel Knievel and his wife Linda owe in back taxes, interest and penalties.

According to the documents filed Thursday, the Knievels, of North Royalton, Ohio, offered the government a compromise settlement, but it was rejected in November.

The money the IRS claims is due includes taxes from 1972 through 1976.

Knievel has said that although he made millions during his daredevil days, he spent more than he made and cannot pay the taxes.

TOKYO (AP) — Samantha Smith, the 11-year-old who went to the Soviet Union at the invitation of party leader Yuri Andropov, says children have much to learn of the world and "we are ready to start learning."

The Manchester, Maine resident, is in Japan with her mother at the invitation of a group promoting an international science and technology exhibition to be held in Tsukuba, northeast of Tokyo, in 1985.

She said Friday that she was excited to be in Japan.

"It's one of the best places you could possibly be," she said, "I've seen many beautiful new faces."

After a weekend of sightseeing, Samantha will go to Kobe in western Japan, where on Monday she will attend an international children's symposium on communications, science and technology.

Samantha went to the Soviet Union last summer after she wrote to Andropov saying she was worried about nuclear war.

Accidents may be consumer's fault

By The Associated Press

Those brightly wrapped presents under the tree can bring unexpected danger in the days to come.

Holiday-season accidents injure thousands of Americans, and the head of the Consumer Product Safety Commission says many problems are the user's fault.

"Very often people are injured because they have not read the instructions and that's true whether it's a toy, an appliance, a tool or almost any product," said Nancy Steorts.

To start, Mrs. Steorts said, "parents should keep toys out of the hands of those that are too young for them. Read that age labeling and adhere to it.

"The toys should be put away when they're not in use, which will prevent tripping and damage, particularly around the holidays when there are grandparents and senior citizens around."

Mrs. Steorts continued: "The play of a child should be supervised and all toys should be carefully maintained, and as soon as they're broken they should be taken away, repaired, or thrown away."

Grown-ups aren't exempt from danger. Many appliances and tools, for example, have safety mechanisms, and Mrs. Steorts said some people actually go out of their way to avoid the devices. That mechanism is "there for a purpose and it should not be defeated," she said.

If your Christmas includes a new television or audio-visual equipment, make sure it is installed with plenty of air around it. And don't put plants or any container with liquid on top of the set.

Electrical appliances should be kept away from water. "Even in the 'off' position, there is still electric current going through it," Mrs. Steorts said.

If you must have an appliance near water — a hair dryer in the bathroom, for example — unplug it immediately after use. "We have had many electrocutions because people have either been standing in water just after they've gotten out of a shower and have used it (the appliance) or the appliance has fallen into water and it's been in the 'off' position and then they'll go to reach (for) it and it's an automatic electrocution," the commission head said.

Cordless telephones, which the safety commission expects to be a big seller this year, pose the threat of unfamiliarity. When answering the phone, most people automatically put the receiver to the ear immediately. But the "ring" of a cordless telephone may be in the earpiece. Switch or push the appropriate button to "talk" before you answer or you "can get a very, very deafening ring," Mrs. Steorts warned.

Keep safety in mind as well when you're cleaning up after the holidays. Mrs. Steorts: "First, all of the Christmas lights should be thoroughly checked before they're put away for storage to make sure that they're OK and that they're going to be safe for next year.

"Secondly, the tree and all of the greens should be discarded outside. Never should it be put into a fireplace. A very, very serious fire could result. The same thing with gift wraps."

One thing you should not throw away, inside or out, are warranties with the presents. They can help if the product breaks after the holidays.

Last, but not least, Mrs. Steorts said, "If anyone has any complaints or problems...we'd like to hear about it."

The commission's toll-free hotline is 800-638-CPSC.

Weather hasn't hurt Christmas sales

By The Associated Press

A week of arctic cold, ice and snow in much of the nation has taken some steam out of a hot Christmas sales season, but merchants said Friday the four-week season still should prove the strongest and most profitable in several years.

Retail store executives said the cold wave had helped sales of winter clothing such as sweaters and gloves, but it also was keeping some shoppers at home.

"The weather has hurt our business since the beginning of the week," said Paul Cavalli, vice president of sales promotion at Stix, Baer & Fuller department stores in St. Louis, where temperatures have been at 50-year lows this week.

Cavalli said the company, a unit of Associated Dry Goods Corp., had lowered its December sales estimate because of the cold snap. Stix, which operates 12 stores in Missouri, expects a gain of 5 percent to 7 percent from December 1982, compared with the 10 percent rise it had been forecasting earlier this month, Cavalli said.

Sales at Dayton Hudson Corp. are running "well over 20 percent better" than last December, said Tom Langenfeld, a spokesman for the Minneapolis-based retailer.

"This could be the best year in five years," Langenfeld added. "Sales have slacked off in the last week, and I think weather was a factor."

The weather's effect on sales has varied from city to city, but Monroe Greenstein, who follows the retailing business for the investment firm of Bear Stearns & Co., said sales industrywide will be slightly lower than previously expected.

Greenstein said the general merchandisers as a group should fall slightly short of the 12 percent to 13 percent sales improvement for December that he had predicted.

A year ago, when retailers were bemoaning the effects of a slow economy and the highest unemployment rate in 42 years, the weather was warmer than usual in much of the nation.

This Christmas season's double-digit sales increases mean retailers' pretax earnings in December and the fourth quarter may be the highest since 1978, before the U.S. economy fell into a pattern of recessions and short-lived recoveries.

The season is expected to produce between 50 percent and 65 percent of 1983's profits, instead of the normal 40 percent to 50 percent. Besides the positive effects of increased consumer spending, retailers are benefitting from Christmas falling on a Sunday, which means the shopping season is one day longer than in most years.

"It's going to be an absolutely excellent month," said Orren Knauer, a spokesman for Allied Stores Corp., a leading specialty retailer in Minneapolis and in parts of the Northeast, the Southwest and the Northwest. Knauer said one of the few areas where sales appeared to be hurt by the weather was Minneapolis.

Some retail executives said they believed the cold spell actually helped business.

"People seem to have a better feeling for Christmas shopping when the weather is more winterlike," said Phil Bradtmiller, director of investor relations at Associated Dry Goods, whose sales he said were 18 percent ahead of last December.

For the four weeks of holiday shopping since the Thanksgiving weekend, retail sales have been helped by consumers' increased confidence in the future of the economy, a steady drop in unemployment and the modest level of inflation.

The sales improvement from last year has been so great that retailers have found themselves in short supply of some items, particularly toys and some dolls. The shortages, which were not considered a major drag on sales, were caused in part by retailers' underestimation of how strongly consumer spending would rebound.

'Iowish' strange language of people from Iowa

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — "Bes twishis for a happy Chrissmus."

"Joo decorate the tree?"

"No, I'll duet when I git aroun tuet."

It's Iowish, specifically, "Soo Siddy Iowish," says Dana Wall, of Sioux City, coordinator of language arts for the Western Hills Area Education Agency.

He says it's "a die lekt of Mare kin Inglish" as spoken by people around the northwestern Iowa city.

Wall, who has written a pamphlet on the dialect, said the name "Iowish" came from the young daughter of a Canadian acquaintance who wanted to hear something spoken in Iowish.

Here are some examples:

—Cabba-dull: Des Moines is the cabba-dull of Iowa.

—Gobi Gred: "Go Big Red," motto of University of Nebraska fans.

—Nash-null: Pertaining to the nayshun — "The Nash-null Guard are wee kend sojers, defendun the nayshun."

—Resternt: A place to buy a meal.

—Yerp: The conninent across the Lantic Ocean.

—Jogger-fee: Study of the Earth's surface.

Wall said President Reagan, who was a radio sports announcer in Des Moines in the 1930s, still has Iowish traces in his speech. He said Reagan talks about the "gummint" and tells us he's working for "bedder innernashnull unnerstanding."

Card's been used 35 years

WINTER PARK, Fla. (AP) — This is an odd-numbered year, so it's Bob and Tillie Boylan's turn to send the same Christmas card they've been using for 35 years back to Betty Goodwin.

The yellowing card, showing two kittens snuggled inside a Santa Claus cap, was first sent to the Boylans by Ms. Goodwin in 1948.

The following year, the Boylans sent it back to her in Charleston, S.C., because that was a tradition Mrs. Boylan's parents had carried on with several friends.

"It's just not Christmas without it," Mrs. Boylan, 55, said Thursday. "Every year, we always look forward to either sending it or receiving it."

When Ms. Goodwin, also 55, first sent the card, a stamp cost 3 cents, and the card cost "about a dime." This year, the Boylans sent the card by certified mail to make sure it doesn't get lost.

Last year, Ms. Goodwin wrote, "1982 — Will this card make it into the next century? Tune in next year..."

This year, the Boylans wrote back, "1983 — Of course it will! It just needs someone to send it back & forth."

How to get telephones and how to get them repaired after the Bell System breaks up.

As the divestiture or breakup of the Bell System takes place, a lot of changes will also take place. Two major ones will affect telephones and repairs.

HOW TO GET TELEPHONES.

You can continue leasing your current phones and pay a monthly charge as you now do. Except your lease will be through AT&T Information Systems instead of Southwestern Bell Telephone. That means you'll see a separate leasing charge from AT&T Information Systems on your monthly bill from Southwestern Bell Telephone. We won't be leasing home telephones after divestiture. If you continue to lease, we'll handle the transfer, so you don't have to do anything.

Or you can purchase a new telephone from Southwestern Bell Telecom. Southwestern Bell Telecom is a separate company from Southwestern Bell Telephone and will begin selling home and business telephone equipment in 1984.

WHERE TO GET TELEPHONES REPAIRED.

Beginning at the first of the year, Southwestern Bell Telephone will no longer repair telephones leased from AT&T. We will continue to repair telephone lines at no charge, though. So when you have a problem it's important to determine if the problem is in your phone or on our line. And there's an easy way to do it. Just check a different phone at your home. If neither works, the trouble is probably in the line, and you should call us for the repair.

If one phone works and the other doesn't, the problem is probably in the phone. Then depending on the supplier of your phone you should either: 1) call AT&T Information Systems for repairs if you lease the phone or bought it from AT&T Information Systems or Southwestern Bell Telephone, 2) call Southwestern Bell Telecom if you bought it from them, or 3) call the original manufacturer or retailer if you purchased your phone from a source other than Bell.

MORE INFORMATION.

If you have any questions about the breakup of the Bell System and how it will affect your service, call us toll-free at 1 800 555-5000. We'll be glad to answer them and send you a special information booklet, too.

Or, if you have specific questions about your service, please call your Southwestern Bell Telephone Business Office.

Leroy Erwin chips on blocks of multi-colored ice, which may be transformed into sculpture for the holidays. With temperatures in Dallas well below the freezing point, the demand for ice has dropped.

Interest in ice cools down with cold weather

DALLAS (AP) — James Pierce owns an ice-making business that has done very well for him on Dallas' sweltering hot summer days. But as the temperature drops, so do his sales.

With temperature in the teens this week, business has been terrible, he said.

"In wintertime, we don't ever make enough (money) to meet expenses. But we make enough in the summertime to compensate," said Pierce, owner of the American Ice and Cold Storage.

A worker, Leroy Erwin, talked about his job as he worked in 15-degree temperatures, making 300-pound blocks of ice.

"I think it's the coldest job," Erwin told The Dallas Morning News.

"I can't say nothing warm about it," he said. "But I like ice. I like working in cold places."

Pierce said production is only about 10 percent of what it is in the summer. In August, American Ice bagged 120 tons of ice a day to keep up with demand, Pierce said.

Around Christmas, he has workers dye some of the 300-pound blocks red, green or blue to create a new market — sales to people who like the idea of colorful ice carvings. That's gone over well, he said, although there hasn't been much interest in ice for drinks.

Township clerk retires after 72 years in office

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP, Ohio (AP) — George Lynch says he hadn't planned back in 1912 to run for township clerk. But he ran and won — and kept on winning.

Now, after 72 years on the job and congratulations from President Reagan, he plans to retire.

"I never asked anyone to vote for me. The first time, they put my name on the ticket and voted, and that's how I got in. I just kept running and nobody could beat me," says Lynch, who turns 97 on Wednesday.

Lynch has missed only one meeting of the township trustees since 1912, and his grandson, Jim Lynch, banked on that record to get him to a recent retirement dinner. Lynch was told he was going to another trustees' meeting because "if we had told him about this, he never would have come," his grandson said.

Lt. Gov. Myrl Shoemaker spoke at the dinner amid accolades for Lynch from state and local offcials and the reading of a telegram from Reagan, which said, "Throughout your remarkable government tenure, you have served the citizens of Liberty Township with loyalty and dedication."

Lynch said he considered seeking one more term, but thought twice when he realized he would more than 100 years old when the term ended.

Until 1965, Lynch was a full-time farmer in the Seneca County community. He served on the township school board from 1912-1930 and assisted in the organization of the Maple Grove Elevator and served as its secretary from 1914 to 1958.

"I really liked being clerk, but I'm not retired yet," he said. "But now, I'm just ready to retire, so what am I going to do about it?

"I'll leave it up to the younger (folk)," he said.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Sunday, December 25, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: How very appropriate that you were born on this most special of days! Generous and idealistic, you search for ways to help mankind. Mathematician-philosopher Isaac Newton, American Red Cross founder Clara Barton and slain Egyptian leader Anwar Sadat were born on this date. Other Christmas babies: the late Humphrey Bogart, Cab Calloway, Barbara Mandrell and actress Sissy Spacek. Those in authority will be easier to reach in 1984. Look for your career to zoom ahead. Your chances for new, more rewarding employment have never been better. Back off a bit in romance. An eager attitude makes partner nervous.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Merry Christmas! Children make this a day you will long remember. Extend a helping hand to someone who seems to have given up hope. Family members draw closer together.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A visit to a familiar place makes this a very special Christmas. Call someone who could not make it home for the holidays. You find yourself among both old and new friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A fragile relationship becomes stronger thanks to a small gift. You enjoy talking with family members who are usually not present. Keep a promise you made to mate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A loved one's unselfishness makes this one of your best Christmases ever. You can be very helpful to mate today. Do not offend someone by being late. Romance is in full flower.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A desire to spend some time alone grows stronger. This is not the day to be anti-social, however. Get in the holiday spirit and socialize. Loved ones are eager for your company.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Merry Christmas, everyone! Life looks pretty wonderful after you discuss the past year with relatives. Share your good luck with someone less fortunate. Approach every task with a positive attitude.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): This could be the best day of the year. Put any troubles aside and concentrate on enjoying your loved ones. A small unexpected gift fills you with both pride and delight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Children are at center stage today. Step back and watch their fun. The best gift may not be under the the tree. Loved one expresses his or her deep feelings for you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Actions speak louder than words today. Enjoy yourself but avoid eating so much that you feel uncomfortable. A relaxed Christmas depends on everyone pitching in to clean up.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Merry Christmas! Something you thought lost forever could turn up under the tree. Share your hospitality. An invitation spreads good will. A loved one's entertainment ideas save you money.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be prepared for some unexpected disclosures at a family dinner. These revelations could lead to some very welcome changes. Someone shows his or her love in a special way.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A celebration gives you a chance to renew an old friendship. Cementing a family alliance puts you in a glorious mood. A potential romantic partner appears on the scene. Dress to impress.

Soap still going strong

NEW YORK (AP) — "Guiding Light" has been a daytime companion for millions since 1937, starting on radio and switching to TV after 15 years. Can anything new, really new, ever happen to the Bauers or the Reardons or any of the other folks in Springfield?

"I get really upset," says Pamela Long Hammer, principal writer for the CBS soap opera since March, "because I'll come up with this neat scenario and someone will say, 'That's like "Strangers on a Train.'"

"I think, 'They keep stealing my material.'

"The way I figure it," she says, "there are only so many stories in the world. It's the characters who keep the show new and exciting. All of our stories come from them: I don't come up with a plot, and then work a character into it."

Continuity is important. Someone out there surely knows all that's happened, to everyone on the show, in 46 years. How about Miss Long Hammer?

"NOPE. I care about what our core families have been doing," she says. "I'm always interested in what happened to Bert Bauer (played since 1950 by Charita Bauer) 20 years ago, but as far as going back and reading scripts, no.

"Others on the show keep track," she says. "I'll suggest something, and be told, 'You don't remember, but five years ago, they had this terrible fight. They would never speak to one another now.'"

Miss Long Hammer, a former Miss Alabama who came to New York as an aspiring actress in 1980, began writing for daytime television while playing Ashley on NBC's "Texas." She eventually wrote herself out of the story.

Her staff for "Guiding Light" includes nine writers, among them her husband, Charles Jay Hammer, whom she met while both worked on "Texas."

NBC dropped "Texas" after two seasons, and episodes from the serial currently are being rerun on the Turner Broadcasting System's cable-TV SuperStation, WTBS.

GAIL Kobe, who was executive producer of "Texas," now has the same job on "Guiding Light." And Beverlee McKinsey, who played Iris Carrington in "Another World" on NBC, and later in "Texas," will join the Light" cast of the CBS soap in February.

Miss Long Hammer is reponsible for the long-term story, which can mean looking ahead 18 months or more. Staff writers deal with specifics, including the scripts for individual episodes.

She says she draws on "imagination and instinct" for the "Guiding Light" story. Often, that involves inventing new characters.

"I look at Vanessa (Maeve Kinkead), one of our leading ladies," Miss Long Hammer says. "What could make the audience care more about her?

"Then I think, 'Why can't she find a man she can love, who will also love her?' Voila, here comes Billy Lewis (Jordan Clarke).

"Another example," she says, "is Alan Spaulding (Christopher Bernau). All of a sudden, he's got a sister no one ever knew about.

"THEY come complete," says Miss Long Hammer of the serial's characters, including the new ones. "We know who they are and where they came from long before the viewer gets all that information. That's one of the most interesting things about daytime, the complexities of the characters."

The writers make a big effort to keep the show contemporary, and four of the leading players are in their late teens or early 20s — Judi Evans, who plays Beth Raines, Kristi Tasreau (Mindy Lewis), Grant Aleksander (Philip Spaulding) and Michael O'Leary (Rick Bauer).

"Guiding Light," longevity notwithstanding, is a moderate success by that ultimate yardstick of the industry: ratings. The show is behind only "General Hospital," "All My Children" and "One Life to Live," all on ABC, and CBS' "The Young and the Restless," among soaps.

Boy who loves tractors recovering

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Will Vincent, the 4-year-old boy whose tour of the John Deere tractor factory brightened his fight against two kinds of cancer, is now recovering from meningitis and its 104-degree fever, his mother said Friday.

Beth Vincent said Will will have to spend Christmas at M.D. Anderson Hospital in Houston, but probably will be able to get out for a few hours that morning to open presents with his family.

"I think that'll be long enough for him. Because he's still pretty weak," she said in a telephone interview from Will's hospital room.

Mrs. Vincent said she felt that his recovery was helped by all the people they'd met or heard from since embarking on the trip to Waterloo, Iowa, earlier this month.

"I feel like so many people are sending up prayers for Will that they're being answered," she said, adding that she wanted to thank everyone.

The illness forced doctors to postpone a new type of chemotherapy for the brain tumor Will has had since he was 2 and the leukemia he developed about 18 months later.

Mrs. Vincent said Will was starting to come down with a cold just before the family left for a Dec. 9 tour of the John Deere factory — a gift from Wishing Well, formed by state police in southwest Louisiana's Troop D to give last wishes to terminally ill children in their district.

"I kept telling him all week, 'Don't you get sick before we go on that trip,'" she recounted. "I said, 'Just wait till you get to the hospital and you can get sick as you want to.'"

Will checked in Dec. 12 and almost immediately spiked a fever, she said. Doctors worried that it was fungal meningitis, which Will had come down with during the summer. The drugs needed to treat that had caused kidney damage, Mrs. Vincent said.

Hoping the meningitis was caused by a bacteria, they tried various antibiotics and finally found one that worked, she said. After a week of 104-degree fevers, Will's temperature came down to normal Monday.

"When we first planned the trip, we never even thought about who would be there. We were just going to go see the tractors. We never thought about the people who make them, and that they could have so much love in their hearts."

"He was even walking again yesterday," said Mrs. Vincent. "He'll be on the antibiotic another week or so and that'll be all."

She said she and her mother have been staying at the nearby Ronald McDonald house for families of critically ill children. Her husband and daughter were to join them Friday night, and her father and sister today, "so Sunday morning we can open presents together."

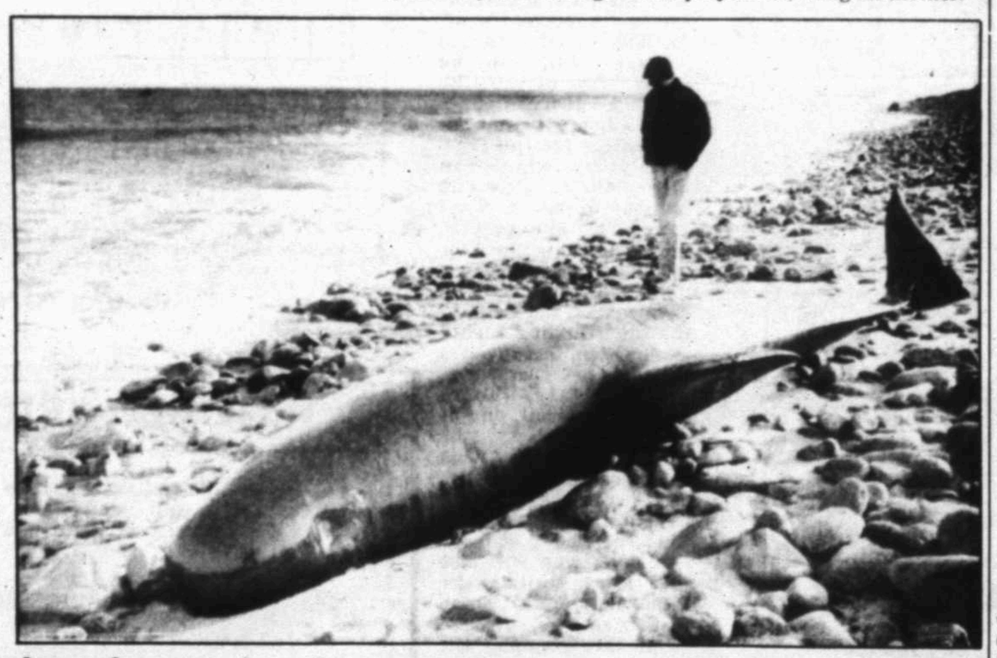

Meanwhile, Will can play with his tractors, including a remote control model and several others given him by John Deere employees. Company workers also gave the family $1,117 to help with doctors' bills, and Will got rides on several big tractors during his tour.

"When we first planned the trip, we never even thought about who would be there," said Mrs. Vincent. "We were just going to go see the tractors. We never thought about the people who make them, and that they could have so much love in their hearts."

She said Will's hospital room was decorated with about 30 cards from people who had read about him.

"One woman sent pictures of her dog in her John Deere, and pictures of her sons...It's just so touching to me — the response of perfect strangers.

"I never expected anything like it. I always thought he was a special boy, but I thought I was prejudiced, being his mother."

Block Island, R.I., resident Russell Grein eyes a dead pilot whale, one of 11 that beached themselves at North Point, a remote strip of sand on the island. Six of the whales died shortly after coming ashore and a federal fisheries agent shot and killed five others to end their suffering.

Pilot whales beach themselves on East Coast

EASTHAM, Mass. (AP) — About 50 pilot whales were stranded and many died on a 15-mile stretch of Cape Cod beaches Friday as rescue workers fought harsh winds and freezing temperatures to reach them.

"We have approximately 20 whales between First Encounter Beach and the Wellfleet line. The reports we're getting back say they are all dead," said Eastham police spokeswoman Regina Eldredge.

Ms. Eldredge said police and highway department workers found one surviving whale and were able to get the animal back into the water.

"He took off on his own," she said. She said rescuers braved sub-freezing temperatures to rescue the whale.

Ten dead whales were found along Wellfleet beaches, said police officer Art Parker said.

"There's about 40 or 50 of them between Wellfleet and Orleans," he said.

Authorities believe the strandings began sometime early Friday.

The whale deaths follow the strandings of seven pilot whales that washed up on Block Island beaches.

Liz Kaye, a spokeswoman for the New England Aquarium said members of the International Fund for Animal Welfare flew over the area to assess the extent of the beachings.

She said there was no indication of a connection between the beachings on Block Island and Cape Cod.

"We can't say there's a connection," she said. "It does appear that there are connections of weather patterns in these things. There has been rough weather and seas in that area.

Dallas won't lift ban on sleeping in park

DALLAS (AP) — The city of Dallas has decided not to lift a ban on sleeping in public parks during the Republican National Convention even though a group planning large protests said it can't afford motel rooms.

Assistant City Manager Levi Davis said Thursday that protesters will have to find accommodations in motels or private homes just like any other visitor to the city.

"They are visitors like any others, and they should make adequate accommodations for themselves, whether they be in homes or whatever," Davis said.

"The city has no responsibility to provide housing to visitors," he said.

The Association of Organizations for Reform Now plans to hold its 1984 convention in Dallas to coincide with the GOP event. ACORN organizers had applied for permits to camp in six city parks near downtown and the convention center.

The city had no plans to relax a ban on sleeping in public parks and would not go out of its way to help protesters find other accommodations, Davis said.

Janice Mason, an ACORN spokeswoman, said the group hoped to negotiate a compromise with Davis.

"It's our constitutional right to express our opinions about the Reagan administration," she said.

ACORN has said it hopes to have 50,000 people in Dallas during the convention, but city officials have said they expect far fewer.

Roger Kallenberg, a leader of a coalition of groups called the Dallas Demonstration Coordinating Committee, said he believed the city will have to give in.

"It's like the proverbial story about the 400-pound gorilla. It sleeps where it wants," he said.

"The city expects that if the Republicans can pay $150 a night for hotel rooms, everybody else should, too," Kallenberg said. "Not everybody has that kind of money."
