West Elementary becomes new MAP site

Trustees approve move for alternative school to residential neighborhood

By Meredith Moriak
mmoriak@mrt.com

MISD trustees unanimously voted to move the Midland Alternative Program from its current location downtown to the West Elementary building Tuesday, despite concerns from Missouri Avenue homeowners.

"Placing MAP into West is the most efficient thing for the taxpayers' money," said MISD Superintendent Ryder Warren. "We will get the most investment for our money with MAP at West."

Warren began discussing in February the possibility of moving MAP out of MISD's downtown Mashburn Building and into the vacant West campus, citing too many students and too little space.

The vacant West campus, located at 2101 W. Missouri Ave., has a 13-classroom floor plan ideal for MAP, Warren said.

MAP serves high school students in the short-term Disciplinary Alternative Education Programs and the long-term District Disciplinary Alternative Education Program.

Homeowners in central Midland's museum district became aware of the plan in July and immediately contacted Warren's office for a meeting. Speaking at board meetings and with Warren, they expressed concern over the effect an alternative school would have on their property values and overall safety of the neighborhood.

"Doing this will bring our property values down," homeowner Lillian Reynolds told the board Tuesday. "You're going to do what you do, but you need to know it distresses us to have it in our yard and have it harder to sell. You've said yourself no one wants it in their neighborhood."

The board looked for other sites and building project costs, and ultimately determined West made the most sense for MAP because the renovation would cost only $4.8 million.

"This is the only go-to property we own, and I don't know where else to go," board President Jay Isaacs said to homeowners at Tuesday's meeting. "I wish there were

A Midland police officer was involved in a car crash Tuesday afternoon that resulted in a one-vehicle rollover.

Midland police and fire departments and emergency medical services responded to the crash at 3:27 p.m. at the intersection of West Ohio Avenue and North Colorado Street.

It was there that the driver of a silver Chevrolet Tahoe, traveling west on Ohio, is believed to have run a stop sign, said Lt. Ray Leible. The police officer, who was heading south on Colorado Avenue, crashed into the passenger side of the Tahoe, causing it to roll over, Leible said.

No one was injured in the crash. The two passengers in the Tahoe were wearing their seat belts and refused medical transportation, he said.

Midlander Kenneth Phillips said he heard the car crash while on Loraine Street and went to the scene.

"I didn't hear no brakes or nothing," he said.

The investigation continues; citations are pending for the driver of the Tahoe.

Council grants permits to drill two wells in northwest neighborhood

By Sara Higgins
shiggins@mrt.com

RSP Permian will be permitted to build two out of five wells planned for a northwest Midland neighborhood after an unusual series of five split votes from the City Council on Tuesday.

The wells will be drilled on a 50-acre area near Briarwood Avenue and Roadrunner Trail just east of the Midland Independent School District bus barn, the same location where the council previously denied the company a vertical drilling permit for a single well. It also was a split vote, with some members citing safety concerns.

The new requests included permits for five directionally drilled wells from one single tract of land, which allowed RSP Permian to eliminate four additional sites it already had permitted with the Railroad Commission. The company had allowed the permits to expire, said Steve Gray, co-CEO of RSP.

The first two requests, each for one well, brought to the council on Tuesday were granted. Jerry Morales, Vicky Hailey and Michael Trost voted against the first, and John James, Hailey and Trost voted against the second. The other three failed with votes of 3-4, with Morales, James, Hailey and Trost voting in opposition.

Gray said in a statement after the meeting that RSP Permian representatives were disappointed and surprised by the vote.

"We appreciate that two permits were approved, but since our development plan required all five to be approved, we will have to consider all of our options — from immediate drilling to legal action — to recuperate lost revenue from the wells that were denied," Gray said. "It may also mean that we have to consider drilling in other parts of the neighborhood since we won't be able to use the island development plan we proposed."

Residents in the area spoke out against the first permit for a single well that was requested in April and have continued to ask that wells not be drilled in their neighborhood because of safety concerns related to increased

Perry, Dewhurst advocate drug tests for welfare

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Gov. Rick Perry and Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst made a rare joint appearance on Tuesday to advocate drug tests for Texas residents seeking welfare or unemployment benefits.

A bill filed before the Texas Legislature reconvenes in January would mandate drug-testing for "high-risk" welfare applicants while banning them from using public funds to buy alcohol, tobacco and lottery tickets. But Perry and Dewhurst, who controls the flow of legislation through the state Senate, said a top priority should be expanding such rules to include Texans applying for unemployment assistance too.

"This will prevent tax dollars going into the pockets of drug-users and drug dealers," Perry told a news conference at Austin Glass and Mirror, a small business that says it successfully drug-tests its employees.

Dewhurst said that under the current proposal, anyone failing drug tests would be barred from participating in welfare programs for one year — unless they enter a drug rehabilitation program paid for Medicaid, the government health care program for the poor.

"A lot of recipients are, we think, Medicaid-eligible," Dewhurst said when asked about who could get such treatment. Perry added that he believes drug-testing will mean less money paid out in benefits.

"This isn't all about punishing," the governor said. "This is also an incentive to get people off these drugs."

The American Civil Liberties Union of Texas condemned Perry and Dewhurst's calls Tuesday.

"How sad that our state's highest elected officials have embraced this mean-spirited measure that would punish innocent children for their parents' conduct," ACLU of Texas Executive Director Terri Burke said in a statement. "This proposal is a costly, ineffective, inhumane and punitive effort by state government based on stereotypes about our state's neediest Texans."

In Florida, Republican Gov. Rick Scott championed a law that required welfare applicants to pay for and pass a drug test from July through October last year, when a federal judge temporarily halted it. Roughly 4,000 adults did not have drugs in their system and 108 tested positive — about 2.5 percent — though nearly 2,500 people refused to take the drug test for reasons that weren't always clear.

Texas Education Agency seeks $1M for exam security

The Texas Education Agency will ask the 2013 Legislature for $1 million to help investigate potential irregularities in student testing results.

Officials say the funds would bolster the second year of the new standardized test called STAAR, for the State of Texas Assessments of Academic Readiness.

The Dallas Morning News reported Monday that the money would also help fund audits of random districts. Such audits were discontinued due to funding cuts. Education Commissioner Michael Williams says the money would help create a special investigations unit in case of STAAR irregularities or other security violations.

More than 40 teachers and administrators across the state have been sanctioned over the past five years. TEA spokeswoman Debbie Ratcliffe said the agency is continuing to aggressively prosecute teachers or administrators who cheat.

EL PASO

Texas lawmaker wants more done to protect students

A West Texas legislator has filed a bill that could lead to prison time for manipulating and falsely reporting education data to state officials.

Sen. Jose Rodriguez, of El Paso, filed the bill Monday in Austin in the aftermath of the El Paso Independent School District testing scandal.

Former superintendent Lorenzo Garcia was sentenced last month to more than three years in prison for fraud. Prosecutors said Garcia participated in a conspiracy to improve test scores by removing low-performing students from classrooms.

Manipulation of data provided to the Texas Education Agency could lead to a sentence of up to 10 years in prison.

The El Paso Times reported another bill would give the TEA expanded powers to subpoena records and testimony from witnesses.

DALLAS

Dallas schools use own funds for boys-only movie

The Texas Education Agency has found no financial wrongdoing by Dallas schools in a boys-only field trip to see the Tuskegee Airmen movie "Red Tails."

The Dallas Morning News reported that Dallas Independent School District officials, after the field trip, decided to use local funds and not federal money.

DISD officials initially said last February's movie trip for about 5,000 fifth-grade boys was paid for with $57,000 in Title I money. Such funds are used to educate disadvantaged children.

DISD spokesman Jon Dahlander said Monday that interim superintendent Alan King later opted to use local funds to avoid any conflict with federal money.

TEA investigators on Friday concluded their review after DISD forwarded documents indicating local funding was used.

Expert: Texas' bilingual ed needs have skyrocketed

An expert on bilingual education has told Texas' sweeping school finance trial of the state's dramatic growth in students considered English-language learners.

Delia Pompa is senior vice president of the National Council of La Raza. She testified Tuesday that from 1998 to 2008, the number of English-language learners jumped 38.4 percent.

That's compared to overall enrollment growth of 17.4 percent over the same period.

But Pompa said funding for bilingual and English as a Second Language programs fell from $1.2 billion in 2009-10 to $949 million in 2011-12.

Mexico state uses tortilla wrapper ads for missing

CIUDAD JUAREZ— A border state in northern Mexico is trying something it hopes will be more effective than photos on milk cartons to help find missing women and children. It's using advertisements on tortilla wrappers.

At least three dozen tortilla shops have joined in the Chihuahua state campaign to print appeals for help on the thin paper wrappers that shopkeepers use to wrap up a pound or two of hot tortillas at a time.

The campaign started this week, and has been welcomed by shopkeepers and customers in the violence-wracked border city of Ciudad Juarez.

Saudi man gets life in prison in bomb plot

Associated Press

AMARILLO — A former Texas college student from Saudi Arabia was sentenced to life in prison Tuesday for trying to make a bomb for use in a religious attack, possibly targeting a former U.S. president.

Khalid Ali-M Aldawsari was sentenced in Amarillo, where jurors convicted him in June of attempting to use a weapon of mass destruction. Prosecutors said he had collected bomb-making material in his apartment and researched possible targets, including the Dallas home of former President George W. Bush. A handwritten journal found in his apartment included notes that he believed it was time for "jihad," a Muslim term for holy war.

Although the 22-year-old Aldawsari apologized Tuesday for "these bad actions," Judge Donald E. Walter said the evidence against him was overwhelming. Walter acknowledged he was conflicted because of to Aldawsari's youth and signs that outside influences had led him astray.

"But the bottom line is that but by the grace of God there would be dead Americans," Walter said. "You would have done it. In every step, it was you all alone."

Aldawsari stood silently in shackles as the sentence was read. The formerly clean-shaven, close-cropped man now had a full beard and long hair, and appeared to have lost a lot of weight.

MPD: Man arrested for choking woman

From staff reports

A Midland man remained in custody Tuesday after being arrested for allegedly choking a household member, according to his arrest report.

Brian Paul Siverson, 49, is being held on a $20,000 bond for a third-degree felony charge of assaulting a family or household member by impeding breath.

Midland Police Department officers responded to a call Monday at the 4300 block of South County Road 1298.

The alleged victim told police that while she was cooking, Siverson grabbed her by the throat and attempted to strangle her.

The woman said Siverson then proceeded to press his thumbs against her windpipe. The alleged victim said she blacked out at one point and the choking lasted around two to three minutes, according to the report.

After Siverson threatened to kill her and threw her on the floor, the alleged victim said she was able to escape to her car, according to the report.

Siverson was arrested Monday night. If convicted, he could face up to 10 years in prison.

LCRA could withhold more water from farmers

By Matthew Tresaugue
Hearst Newspapers

Key figure

The amount of water needed to sustain two to three typical families for about one year:

326,000 gallons

FREDERICKSBURG, — A Central Texas river authority will consider an emergency plan today that could cut off irrigation water from rice farmers for the second year in a row if drought conditions worsen.

The Lower Colorado River Authority's staff has proposed that the combined storage of the Highland Lakes, two large reservoirs near Austin, must hold more than 750,000 acre-feet of water on Jan. 1 or March 1 before one drop would be made available for downstream farmers next year.

The lakes now hold 860,507 acre-feet of water, or 43 percent capacity, but the river authority is concerned that the reservoir levels will not improve and may worsen in the coming months.

The plan is a sharp turn from a month ago, when staff advised against asking for the emergency order because of forecasts showing a stronger-than-usual El Nino would bring a cool, wet winter.

The weather pattern, however, has shifted, and the state could see below normal rainfall.

With the new forecast, public officials, residents and business owners from the Austin area and lakeside communities urged the river authority during a hearing Tuesday to take a harder stance with the rice growers, the largest water users in the lower Colorado basin historically.

The two sides have clashed repeatedly in recent years, as more and more people rely on the Highland Lakes for drinking water and recreation.

The state projects the population of the lower Colorado basin to double to 2.8 million people by 2060, and it is clear there is not enough water to meet everyone's needs. One acre-foot, equal to 326,000 gallons, is enough to serve two to three typical Texas families for a year.

"These lakes need to be revived before any non-life preserving water is released," said Donna Klaeger, the elected judge of Burnet County, northwest of Austin. "You don't want to be the board that manages the Highland Lakes into worse than drought-of-record conditions."

Rice farmers, meanwhile, said they may not be able to withstand a second year without irrigation water. Many stayed afloat financially this year with the help of crop insurance, but it is unclear whether that money would be available again.

"Help us survive," Ronald Gertson, a fifth-generation farmer in Wharton County, told the river authority. "If we could make money growing other crops in the soils we have, we would grow them. And we don't have other water supply options, just like the city of Austin doesn't have other water supply options."

The river authority withheld water from rice growers in Colorado, Matagorda and Wharton counties for first time this year after the driest 12 months in the state's history. Farmers in the three counties typically produce 5 percent of the U.S. rice crop.

For decades, farmers received an unlimited supply of water once the river authority had met its obligations to cities and industries when the lakes are above a trigger point. Their supply, however, is interruptible during dry times, unlike the shares for cities and industry, which pay significantly more per acre-foot than agricultural users.

The river authority, which manages the Colorado from above Austin to Matagorda Bay, provides water for more than 1 million people, as well as industry, recreation-related businesses, commercial fisheries and farmers.

The proposed emergency order calls for the river authority to release 121,500 acre-feet to rice farmers if the lake levels reach the trigger point.

It had planned to provide about the same amount of water this year, but reservoirs did not reach the required height.

This time, however, the river authority's staff is recommending a lower threshold of 750,000 acre-feet. Even with the lower trigger point, farmers would only receive about a third of the water of past years if drought conditions worsen.

State Sen. Troy Fraser, whose represents 21 Central Texas counties, asked the river authority to use last year's mark before releasing water to rice farmers. "If doesn't rain, and we continue to drink water every day, which I assume we will, and we have evaporation, then we will be in drought-of-record conditions," he said.

The plan, if adopted by the river authority's 15-member board, all appointed by Gov. Rick Perry, would go to the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality for final approval by the end of year.

Water worries

Based on limits set by the Colorado River Municipal Water District and the amount the city can take from the Paul Davis water fields, city officials expect water delivery to be limited to 18.5 million gallons. Using more than that figure consistently could result in the city halting outdoor watering.
Monday's total: 13.888.000 gallons (CRMWD 10.991.000, Paul Davis field 2.897.000)

Today in history

Today is Wednesday, Nov. 14, the 319th day of 2012. There are 47 days left in the year.
On this date:
In 1851, Herman Melville's novel "Moby-Dick, Or, The Whale" was first published in the United States.
In 1922, the British Broadcasting Co. began its domestic radio service.
In 1969, Apollo 12 blasted off for the moon.
One year ago: Former Penn State football assistant coach Jerry Sandusky, in an interview with NBC News' "30 Rock Center," denied allegations he'd sexually abused eight boys.

traffic, construction and the proximity of the rigs to their homes.

The original well site still is part of the plan and would have been drilled 40 feet to the west of the other four newly proposed wells that are located in a line. Before voting, council members voted to amend the permit for the original well so its site would be moved in line with the others. There were no other clear differences between the wells other than their location, representatives of RSP Permian said.

Morales said he wanted to vote to approve two of the five permits in order to make sure they were spaced apart, and voted against the rest of the permits after the first two were approved.

"Five wells to me was really pressing the quality of life for the homeowners and what they've established out there," Morales said. "At the same time, I was never really opposed to drilling within the city limits. I was trying to find a fine balance between the mineral owner and the surface owner, so that's where my vote went."

James, who provided another swing vote, said he wants to give the company access to "all the minerals they can get" while minimizing danger for the neighborhood and its residents.

"What I'm more comfortable with is the original proposal for one well," said James, who voted against the original permit request for the single well. Also opposing the single well were Morales, Trost and Hailey.

"That consolidated approach to me has more health and safety risks than just that one well," James said.

The city's oil and gas ordinance requires wells to be 500 feet or more from any occupied structures. While the proposed wells would fulfill that requirement — seemingly within inches in some cases — neighbors argue it's simply part of the application process. Residents contend that the City Council's job is to focus on the additional aspects of public health and safety issues or whether a requested permit would cause a detriment to public welfare or injury to the use or value of property in the vicinity, as stated in the ordinance.

"This is in the heart of an already existing development," Trost said. "I think it will adversely affect the value of the investment these homeowners and landowners have."

City Councilman Jeff Sparks said the issue has been an emotional one but that the council needs to depend on the ordinance already in place.

James said "nobody's going to win" in difficult decisions like those made Tuesday, but that he was comfortable with the balance he saw between the two entities at stake.

"I think RSP probably still believes they don't have complete access to all their minerals, which is bad thing, the neighborhood still believes their kids are in danger," James said. "Did either of them win? No, but we do our best and use our best judgment."

IN OTHER BUSINESS, THE COUNCIL:

■ approved an ordinance on first reading to eliminate the multiplier on water bills for residential customers using between 10,000 and 25,000 gallons of the city's water per month. The charge is currently $23 per thousand gallons for users in that tier, in addition to the base rate of $14.71 for the first 2,000 gallons each month, and would be reduced to $4.60 per thousand gallons per month under the suggested new rates.
Residences using more than 25,000 gallons per month or less than 10,000 gallons per month wouldn't see a change under the proposed changes.
The possible changes to water rates come as city officials said the Colorado River Municipal Water District has considered lifting its water restrictions to member and customer cities. Possible motives behind the move could be the significantly increased levels at its reservoirs following heavy rains at the end of September and the ability to determine changes in winter-time water usage in the midst of the area's booming population, officials said. The council will have a second reading on the ordinance at a future meeting before it could go into effect.

■ awarded $500,000 in additional funding from the city's water and sewer fund for the interlocal agreement for long-term water supplies with the cities of San Angelo and Abilene that was approved in April 2011.

■ authorized the implementation of flow-based sewer rates that will become effective Oct. 1, 2013. The highest water usage month for each residence among December 2012, January 2013 and February 2013 will be discarded and the remaining two will be averaged.
The total of the values will be utilized to calculate a rate to generate necessary revenue and then be applied to each customer's bill. Residents will receive a unique fixed water rate generated according to their individual water usage, and the rate will be mailed to each customer in April to notify them of the fixed rate that will be charged starting in October.

■ approved a $80,000 agreement with Vandergriff Group Architects for architectural and engineering services to determine the current and future needs of the City Hall facility.

■ voted to approve plans and specifications and advertisement for bids for expansion of the maintenance building, construction of an indoor batting cage and storage area at Scharbauer Sports Complex. There is currently $250,000 available to complete the maintenance building expansion and $370,000 in the current budget to complete the batting cage and storage building, according to an interoffice memorandum from the Community Services department.

Safe Place may lose federal funding

By Joseph Basco
Staff Writer

Domestic violence shelters and counseling agencies across the country, including Safe Place of the Permian Basin, will participate in a "day of action" today to get Congress to renew legislation that funds for such programs.
Agencies encourage people to call or email their representatives in Congress and ask them to renew the Violence Against Women Act.
The act expired Jan. 5, 2011. Since then, separate forms of the bill have been introduced in the House and Senate, but none have passed.
"It is unacceptable that the services VAWA provides are at risk for more than two years now," said Rick Gipprich, communications director for the Texas Association Against Sexual Assault.
The stalemate in Congress may affect Safe Place, a local domestic violence shelter that also provides legal advocacy and counseling. It, along with other organizations, would have to find alternate funding sources if the act is not renewed again.
Carole Wayland, executive director of Safe Place, said although the shelter received a new grant for $80,000 on Sept. 1, she is unsure if the grant will be available next year.
Safe Place, which has been in Midland for 30 years, helps 250 to 300 adults and 300 to 400 children a year. Its non-emergency services help about 900 people a year.
Gipprich said there are about 80 rape crisis centers in Texas and most, if not all, get funding from the act.
Safe Place and the Texas Association Against Sexual Assault both plan to use social media to raise awareness during today's "day of action."
On the Facebook page of the Leadership Conference on Civil and Human rights, users posted photos holding "Pass VAWA" signs with the hashtag "#PassVAWA2012."
In Washington, lobbyists try to reach to members of Congress on a daily basis to get the act renewed.
"Every day is 'day of action' day, in Washington, D.C.," said Juley Fulcher, director of policy programs at domestic violence advocacy group Break the Cycle.
She said the Violence Against Women Act, when compared to other federal aid, provides a small but significant amount of funding, which is about $670 million.
Fulcher is also a member of the National Task force to End Sexual and Domestic Violence against women, a group that conceived the idea of the "day of action." She said the lame-duck period of Congress is a good time to get legislation passed.
"With the (presidential) election over, it changes the dynamics of Congress dramatically," Fulcher said.
Gipprich said the Senate version of the act remains mostly unchanged from its previous version, but the House version removes provisions for the LGBT community, immigrants and Native Americans, among other groups.
He said there is a lack of understanding about sexual assault.
Wayland said if the act is not renewed again, she will look toward fundraising to keep Safe Place in operation.
"We are fortunate Midland has a generous community," Wayland said.

more creative options, but frankly I don't see them. We have taken the input and heard you, but I don't know what else there is to do."
Missouri Avenue resident Eddie Klatt said he's disappointed the board couldn't find another location for MAP and fears his property value will decline.
"Our homes are our biggest investment, and to have a school district yank a piece of wealth out of your hands is sad," said Klatt, who has lived on Missouri Avenue for 22 years.
MISD plans to use $4.8 million in capital funds to renovate the building, which most recently was used as an early childhood development center that closed in May 2011.
Though he doesn't think it will be necessary based on student behavior, Warren said he will assign a permanent police officer to MAP as a way of easing homeowner concerns.
"(The principal) has never asked for a police officer or indicated we need one, but I would like to put one there as a safety issue," Warren said.
According to the MISD code of conduct, students can be placed in DDAEP for several reasons, including robbery, retaliation against a MISD employee or volunteer, assault, possession of a controlled substance, criminal street gang activity, creating a false alarm or terroristic threat or engaging in conduct punishable as a felony.
Rather than looking at the school negatively, trustee James Fuller challenged museum district homeowners to visit MAP and learn about it before drawing conclusions.
"We were dealing with these same misconceptions 20-some-odd years ago when we built Coleman High School, and I think people need to actually visit the schools before they form their opinions," Fuller said.
MAP is one of four programs currently housed in the Mashburn building, 300 N. Carrizo St., next door to Concho Resources. Warren said MISD ultimately would like to move the athletic, technology and police departments out of the building and sell it to someone in the private sector, reducing the district's administrative footprint.

MISD to hire construction manager-at-risk

By Meredith Moriak
mmoriak@mrt.com

Just one week after Midlanders passed a historic $163 million bond for the public schools, Midland ISD trustees voted on two methods of project delivery.
Trustees agreed with the suggestion of James Riggen, executive director of school plant and construction services, to hire a construction manager-at-risk for all substantial and major construction projects, and to use a competitive bid process for all minor construction, maintenance and technology projects.
"When you work with a CMAR, you're guaranteed your project won't run over bids, because they maintain all risk and liability with costs," Riggen said. "Construction managers-at-risk ensure you are within budget and allow you to work as a team with architects and owners to select subcontracts who offer the best value."
The manager-at-risk will be responsible for overseeing the construction of the three new schools and classroom additions at 13 campuses, Riggen said. While a CMAR may charge higher fees for their services than other construction managers, Riggen said it is likely to pay off because that person assumes all risk and liability for costs.
"A construction manager-at-risk is becoming the favored method for schools and large entities completing building projects," Riggen said. "They assume all risk for inflation and rising construction costs."
Riggen's department is working to create the request for qualifications and request for proposals for the CMAR position. He said the requests should be released by the end of the month.
MISD staff will review proposals and short-list qualified manager-at-risk candidates and bring them before the board in January.
"You bring the construction manager on board early and create a team where they work together with the architect," Riggen said.
RFQs for the purpose of underwriting the bond authorization were sent out to more than 10 companies Monday, said Chief Financial Officer David Garcia. It is expected the board will be able to select an underwriter at the Dec. 11 board meeting, though the first issuance of debt is not likely to happen until February or March, Garcia said.
Also at the meeting, board members discussed the possibility of live-streaming board meetings in the future as a way to promote transparency.
Based on an evaluation of existing board room cameras, Tom Holly, executive director of technology, said about $1,000 in upgrades would need to be completed before meetings could be live-streamed.
Additionally, MISD would need to use a video-hosting provider for $999 a month to broadcast events to its website. MISD is unable to do this because the website does not have that bandwidth capability, Holly said.
Trustees all seemed interested in exploring this option and Superintendent Ryder Warren asked Holly to continue looking into the issue so it could be presented to the board for action at a future meeting.

ALSO AT THE MEETING, THE BOARD:

■ Renewed two elective courses for Early College High School @ Midland College and submitted approved paperwork to the Texas Education Agency.
Path to Success teaches students to recognize and analyze their personal learning styles, while simultaneously teaching them about state attendance requirements and earning high school credits.
College Transition provides students with the skills needed to be successful in high school and college level courses, including time for and assistance with college and scholarship applications.

■ Approved mandated school, campus and district improvement plans for the 2012-13 school year.

- Awarded a $168,264.50 bid to Petro Communications Inc. for an upgraded communications system in the transportation department. The change is necessary by January to be in compliance with FCC regulations for the 12.5 kHz narrow band.

■ Approved 10 personnel appointments and seven resignation notices.

■ Held an executive session to discuss personnel and real estate matters.
The board will hold a special meeting at noon Friday for the purpose of canvassing election returns and results from the Nov. 6 bond and District 2 trustee elections. It will be held in the MISD board room, 615 W. Missouri Ave.

Ohio executes killer who repeatedly stabbed woman

Associated Press

LUCASVILLE, Ohio — Ohio on Tuesday executed a condemned killer who calmly went to his death still claiming he was innocent of stabbing a woman 138 times, slitting her throat and cutting off her hands.
"I'm good, let's roll," Brett Hartman said in his final words.
He then smiled in the direction of his sister and repeatedly gave her, a friend and his attorney a "thumbs up" with his left hand.
"This is not going to defeat me," Hartman then said to warden Donald Morgan, who didn't respond.
Hartman was the 49th inmate put to death since Ohio resumed executions in 1999.
Hartman acknowledged that he had sex with Winda Snipes early on the morning of Sept. 9, 1997, at her Akron apartment. He also said he went back to Snipes' apartment later that day, found her mutilated body and panicked, trying to clean up the mess before calling 911.
But Hartman said he didn't kill her, a claim rejected by numerous courts over the years.
A former co-worker and friend of Snipes who witnessed the execution said afterward that the family was relieved the case was over and that the continuous rounds of appeals and media reports about the case were at an end.

Woman who drove on sidewalk holds 'idiot' sign

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — A Cleveland woman puffed on a cigarette, wore headphones, and ignored passers-by and crowds of reporters as she stood for an hour Tuesday under a judge's order holding a sign that said, "Only an idiot would drive on the sidewalk to avoid a school bus."
A Municipal Court judge had ordered 32-year-old Shena Hardin to serve the highly public sentence Tuesday and Wednesday for the Sept. 11 citation after she was caught on camera driving on a sidewalk to pass a Cleveland school bus that was unloading children.
She arrived bundled up against the 34-degree cold at the intersection.

Facts, fiction for Texans who favor secession

By Richard S. Dunham
Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — More than 65,000 people have signed an electronic petition to the White House asking President Barack Obama to allow Texas to "withdraw from the United States of America."

In other words ... secession. "To do so would protect its citizens' standard of living and re-secure their rights and liberties in accordance with the original ideas and beliefs of our founding fathers which are no longer being reflected by the federal government," the online petition states.

Texas patriotism, perhaps. But this secession business is not simply a social media exercise. It takes blood, sweat and tears — emphasis on the blood.

Here are some facts and frequently believed misconceptions about Texas secession:

■ Fact or fiction: As a condition of its admission to the Union, Texas was given the unilateral power to return to its former Lone Star Republic status if it so chose.

FICTION: Gov. Rick Perry is responsible for spreading this widely held misconception. Three years ago, he declared, "When we came into the Union in 1845, one of the issues was that we'd be able to leave if we decided to do that."

That's just plain not true. Texas has no right to secede. The bottom line is that any state can illegally secede from the Union. But the result, as we discovered in 1861, is Civil War.

■ Fact or fiction: Texas is permitted to divide itself into five states.

FACT: The 1845 Joint Resolution for Annexing Texas affirms Texas' right to divide itself into five states if it chooses. Texas has never tested the treaty of annexation. But it is possible that 10 U.S. senators could, at some point, represent the territory of Texas.

■ Fact or fiction: Rick Perry favors secession.

FICTION: At a 2009 Tea Party event in Austin, Perry made news when he said he would understand why some people in Texas might want to leave our "great Union."

"If Washington continues to thumb their nose at the American people, you know, who knows what may came — what may come — out of that," he said. You know where that was leading. But the governor has never — ever — endorsed secession. And after the secession petition took off, Perry's press secretary, Catherine Frazier, underscored his opposition to secession.

"Gov. Perry believes in the greatness of our union and nothing should be done to change it," she said. "But he also shares the frustrations many Americans have with ... our government."

■ Fact or fiction: There is widespread support in Texas for secession.

FICTION: Secession fervor south of the Red River? Not quite. More like a loud but small minority.

There hasn't been any recent polling, but a 2009 Rasmussen Reports survey found that 31 percent of Texans say the state has a right to secede but just 18 percent of Texans would vote to secede from the U.S. if given a choice. Three-fourths of Texas citizens said they oppose secession.

That 18 percent figure is identical to the percentage of Americans who say they favor allowing their state or region to secede from the nation, according to a 2008 Zogby poll. So Texas is no more secessionist than, say, Alaska. Or Rhode Island.

■ Fact or fiction: Rick Perry is already the commander-in-chief of Texas Armed Forces.

FACT: Although Perry is almost the only governor to describe himself that way, he is in fact the commander of the Texas National Guard, which includes 25,500 members of the Texas Army National Guard, the Texas Air National Guard and Texas State Guard. He also is the commander of the Texas Rangers.

But, as President Dwight Eisenhower proved when he integrated Little Rock's Central High School more than five decades ago, the commander-in-chief in Washington can nationalize National Guard forces and require them to follow orders from the president, not the governor.

■ Fact or fiction: The Texas Legislature has the authority to nullify federal laws it dislikes.

FICTION: Like secession, nullification is one of those extra-legal concepts that were hotly debated during the decades leading up to the Civil War. Today, some states are effectively nullifying federal drug laws by legalizing marijuana for medicinal or recreational purposes. And Republican legislators in states such as Texas are threatening to block enforcement of Obamacare.

OPINION

America needs President Obama to make a deal

■ There's no reason to fight, so the president, GOP need to put everything on the table and make a deal.

DAVID BROOKS
New York Times News Group

During his first term, President Barack Obama faced a wicked problem: How do you govern in a highly polarized, evenly divided country with House Republicans who seem unwilling to compromise? Obama never really solved that one, and he was forced to pass his agenda on partisan lines (during the first two years) or not pass it at all (the final two).

Now re-elected with Republicans still in control of the House, Obama faces the problem again. You might say the success of his second term rests upon his solving it.

Some on the left are suggesting that he adopt a strategy of confrontation and conquest. The president should use the advantages of victory to crush the spirit of the Republican House majority, they say. Reject the Grand Bargain approach. Instead, take the country over the fiscal cliff. Blame it on the Republicans who are unwilling to even raise taxes on the rich. Wait until they fold, and then you will have your way.

The first thing to say about this strategy is that it is irresponsible. The recovery is fragile. Europe may crater. China is ill. Business is pulling back at the mere anticipation of a fiscal cliff. It's reckless to think you can manufacture an economic crisis for political leverage and then control the cascading results.

Second, it's terrible politics. Obama could probably triumph in a short-term confrontation, pushing through higher tax rates on the rich that wouldn't even produce enough revenue to cover a tenth of the deficit. But he'd sow such bitterness that it would be the last thing he'd pass for the rest of his term. The Republican House majority isn't going to magically disappear.

Finally, it misunderstands the state of the GOP. This is not the Republican Party of 2010. Today's Republicans no longer have an incentive to deny Obama victories. He's never running again. Most of today's Republicans understand that they need to decontaminate their brand. They're more open to compromise, more likely to be won over with dealmaking than browbeating.

The liberal left wing, like the tea party types, has an incentive to build television ratings by fulminating against its foes. But Obama and John Boehner have an incentive to create a low-decibel businesslike atmosphere.

The opinion-entertainment complex longs for the war track. The practitioners should long for the dealmaking track.

Before he gets lost in the mire of negotiations, the president could step back and practically describe the task ahead. Between 1947 and 2007, the U.S. economy grew an average of 3.3 percent a year. But over the next few decades, according to forecasts from the Congressional Budget Office, it's projected to grow only at 2.3 percent per year. The task ahead is to make the sort of structural changes that will get America back on its old growth trajectory.

Then the president could remind everyone that there's lots to do. Some of the things on the to-do list are things Democrats relish doing: investing in infrastructure and basic research; reforming immigration to attract global talent; investing in student loans and community colleges; trimming the annual $1.1 trillion in tax loopholes, many of which go to corporations and the rich.

Other things the Republicans will surely relish doing: simplifying a tax code that has bloated to 74,000 pages; streamlining the Code of Federal Regulation that has metastasized to 165,000 pages; slowing entitlement spending.

But the point is the only way to get things done in a divided polarized country is side by side — an acceptable Democratic project paired with an acceptable Republican one.

The fiscal-cliff talks are just the first chapter in this long process. In this first episode, the Democrats should get higher revenues from the rich (elections have consequences) and the Republicans should get some entitlement reform. But the main point is to lay the predicate for the bigger deals to come.

This is about horse-trading. It's about conducting meetings in which people don't lecture each other; they deal. It's about isolating those who want an economic culture war. It's about making clear offers and counteroffers.

If you want a great example of how these deals might work, check out a new paper at Third Way (thirdway.org/publications/613) called "The Bargain." It offers a perfect model of how you might structure a series of big trades to move the country back on the growth path — on innovation policy, tax policy, spending policy and so on. The more you put on the table, the more trading is possible, the better the atmosphere and the more you might get done. If you only put one idea on the table at a time, then everybody gets gridlocked and nothing gets done.

The economic crisis interrupted him last time, but Obama still has a chance to build a great middle-class economy. It'll take a dealmaker, not a warrior.

OUR VIEW

Leadership needed as America heads toward 'fiscal cliff'

We're not asking Democrats or Republicans to give up any moral stances, but we are growing weary of this brinkmanship game that has the nation teetering on a global financial abyss.

We are now left with a seven-week deadline to reach agreement on scheduled tax hikes and budget cuts that threaten to trigger another recession. In our opinion, that is a pretty serious consequence to deal with just so two political parties can play games on deadline. While the budget cuts and tax hikes are not formally linked, they have become intertwined politically because of timing: both take effect at the beginning of 2013.

Democrats are trying to rally support for raising taxes on the wealthy as part of any deal, and Republicans say that would devastate "job creators" across the country. In other words, the so-called "fiscal cliff" is shaping up as an extension of the political campaign.

The Bush-era tax cuts end with the dawning of the new year, and this isn't the time to be following campaign rhetoric.

Our nation's lawmakers have to find a solution that does not come from two gunmen looking at each other in the face while waiting for the first one to blink. In our view, letting the Bush tax cuts expire without proper revision would be a drastic mistake. It could tip the scales to recession. There is no choice but to find common ground and save the battered American public from a massive tax hike.

But our lawmakers can't seem to get past the campaign talk. Both sides are at odds, as they were during the campaign, over how to get over the immediate crisis, with the main disagreement focusing on whether to extend tax cuts for everyone, as Republicans want, or just for those earning below $250,000, as the president wants.

Again, we insist that leadership must begin at the top. We think that when President Obama meets with congressional leaders on Friday, he will have an excellent opportunity to get the ball rolling with ideas about increasing revenue and decreasing spending. How he handles this meeting of the minds probably will go a long way in determining what happens in the next seven weeks.

If President Obama is interested in formulating his legacy with a second term, he can start here by showing leadership in a time of real crisis. Washington just can't afford to let the nation, intentionally or unintentionally, roll over this recessional cliff.

Generals provide sad reality show

■ It's an unfortunate break from our politics.

KATHLEEN PARKER
Washington Post Writers Group

NEW ORLEANS —

It is tempting, oh so tempting, to unleash the snark as the script unfolds: Real Housewives of Tampa. Or is it Real Generals of Kabul?

But recent events are too sad for snark. With so much at stake, schadenfreude has taken a vacation. Here is what we know:

Retired Gen. David Petraeus abruptly quit his job as CIA chief when it be came clear that his long-running affair with his biographer, Paula Broadwell, would become public.

The investigation that turned up incriminating emails between Broadwell and Petraeus was spurred by Broadwell's allegedly harassing emails to another woman, Jill Kelley in Tampa, whom Broadwell apparently viewed as a threat to her liaison.

A PowerPoint laser and a map would be helpful at this point. Next we learn that Kelley has had a lengthy, "potentially inappropriate" email exchange — between 20,000 and 30,000 pages — with another four-star general, John Allen, the Marine who replaced Petraeus as the top commander in Afghanistan last year.

Meanwhile, the FBI investigator who was looking into Kelley's complaints about harassing emails allegedly sent shirtless photos of himself to Kelley. If true, at least we can be grateful it was only his torso. The agent, who had not been identified at this writing, is now under investigation by the Office of Professional Responsibility, the internal-affairs arm of the FBI.

Oy.

This is good soap opera, but bad everything else — and so sad for our country. What is wrong with these men? I know, I know. It takes two to tango. But when you're head of the Central Intelligence Agency — or lead Americans in war — your tango matters more than her tango.

That's all the snark I can muster. Otherwise, this seems like so much tabloid lather.

Is it really a national security matter that Petraeus apparently fell in love with someone not his wife? Maybe. If his paramour is a spy or a blabbermouth. Already, there are signals that Broadwell was talking out of school during an Oct. 26 speech in Denver, where she suggested that the attacks on a U.S. diplomatic compound in Benghazi, Libya, were an attempt to free Libyan militants being held there by the CIA.

That would be a news item, wouldn't it? The CIA denies it, given that President Obama ended CIA authority to detain prisoners, while critics wonder whether Broadwell might have had access to classified information.

This mess reads like a spy thriller with all the requisite components — sex, clandestine communications, high-ranking generals and the CIA, beautiful women, including the fittest cadet (Broadwell) at West Point. What a bonanza for the campaign weary. But what a horror for our self-respect and our standing in the world. How does one wage war against terrorists and peddle the Great American Experiment when we are so obviously flawed and out of control?

The end of this story may be less scintillating than it now appears. Perhaps it is nothing but a simple love story that got found out. But before we know what happened — and whether there is any legitimate concern about security breaches — we'll hear plenty of spin from both sides of the political divide.

It is some consolation that the chair of the Senate intelligence committee calling for an investigation is a Democrat, Dianne Feinstein. This isn't a Republican political attack on the president, in other words. Feinstein called "unacceptable" the blocking of a report detailing a trip Petraeus made to Benghazi weeks before his resignation.

The suspense will torture the insatiable, but matters so potentially grave — and so destructive in both personal and public ways — demand restraint on the part of the media. As more facts surface, others will be proven false. As rumors circulate, and tidbits of information are blown out of proportion, we should be wary of issuing judgments.

"Warte!" was the word Franz Kafka had over his bed. "Wait." I can't guess why he had it over his bed. Perhaps this is where he worked. Studio apartment? Walker Percy, the writer, took this word as his own and hung it over his desk. I have copied them both and added a similar sign above my desk.

We can't wait for the news because it's the journalist's job to uncover it. But we can and should wait for judgment. Let the investigations proceed. Let the facts be verified. Let these people survive the humiliations they are certain to suffer.

'Fiscal cliff' is unescapable for most in US

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Everyone who pays income tax — and some who don't — will feel it.

So will doctors who accept Medicare, people who get unemployment aid, defense contractors, air traffic controllers, national park rangers and companies that do research and development.

The package of tax increases and spending cuts known as the "fiscal cliff" takes effect in January unless Congress passes a budget deal by then. The economy would be hit so hard that it would likely sink into recession in the first half of 2013, economists say.

And no matter who you are, it will be all but impossible to avoid the pain.

Middle income families would have to pay an average of about $2,000 more next year, the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center has calculated.

Up to 3.4 million jobs would be lost, the Congressional Budget Office estimates. The unemployment rate would reach 9.1 percent from the current 7.9 percent. Stocks could plunge. The nonpartisan CBO estimates the total cost of the cliff in 2013 at $671 billion.

Collectively, the tax increases would be the steepest to hit Americans in 60 years when measured as a percentage of the economy.

"There would be a huge shock effect to the U.S. economy," said Mark Vitner, an economist at Wells Fargo.

Most of the damage — roughly two-thirds — would come from the tax increases. But the spending cuts would cause pain, too.

The bleak scenario could push the White House and Congress to reach a deal before year's end. On Tuesday, Congress returns for a post-election session that could last through Dec. 31. At a minimum, analysts say some temporary compromise might be reached, allowing a final deal to be cut early next year.

Still, uncertainty about a final deal could cause many companies to further delay hiring and spend less. Already, many U.S. companies say anxiety about the fiscal cliff has led them to put off plans to expand or hire.

A breakdown in negotiations could also ignite turmoil in financial markets, Vitner said. It could resemble the 700-point fall in the Dow Jones industrial average in 2008 after the House initially rejected the $700 billion bailout of major banks.

Since President Barack Obama's re-election, nervous investors have sold stocks. The Standard & Poor's 500 index sank 2.3 percent last week, its worst weekly drop since June. The sell-off resulted in part from anxiety over higher tax rates on investment gains once the fiscal cliff kicks in.

Last week, Obama said he was open to compromise with Republican leaders. But the White House said he would veto any bill that would extend tax cuts on income above $250,000.

Republican House Speaker John Boehner countered that higher tax rates on upper-income Americans would slow job growth.

Boehner argued that any deal must reduce tax rates, eliminate special-interest loopholes and rein in government benefits.

The U.S. government has run annual budget deficits in excess of $1 trillion in each of the last four fiscal years. A report Tuesday showed the government started the 2013 budget year with a $120 billion deficit in October, suggesting a fifth $1 trillion annual deficit is likely.

That adds pressure on Obama and Congress to reach a budget deal.

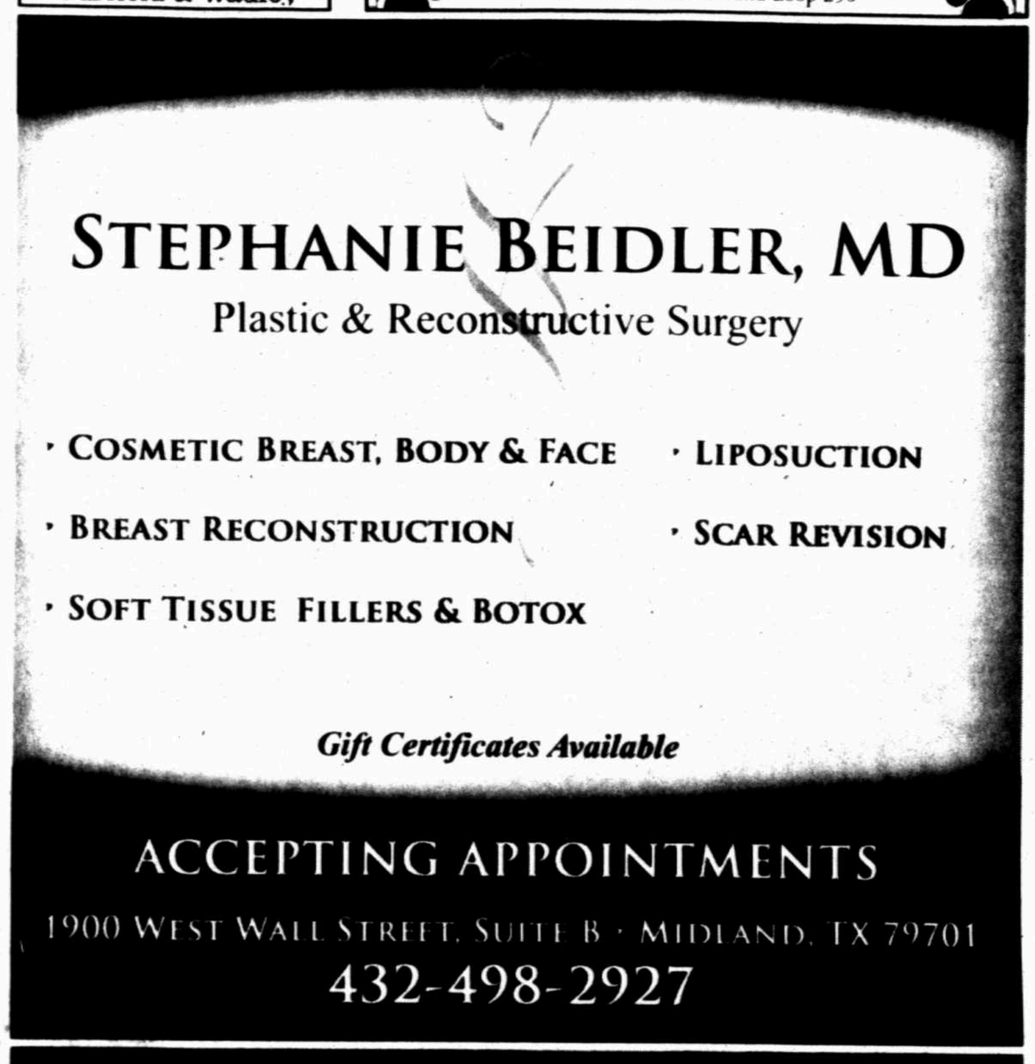
Still, most economists want an agreement that would lower the deficit gradually over several years, rather than a sharp cut that could rattle the still-weak economy.

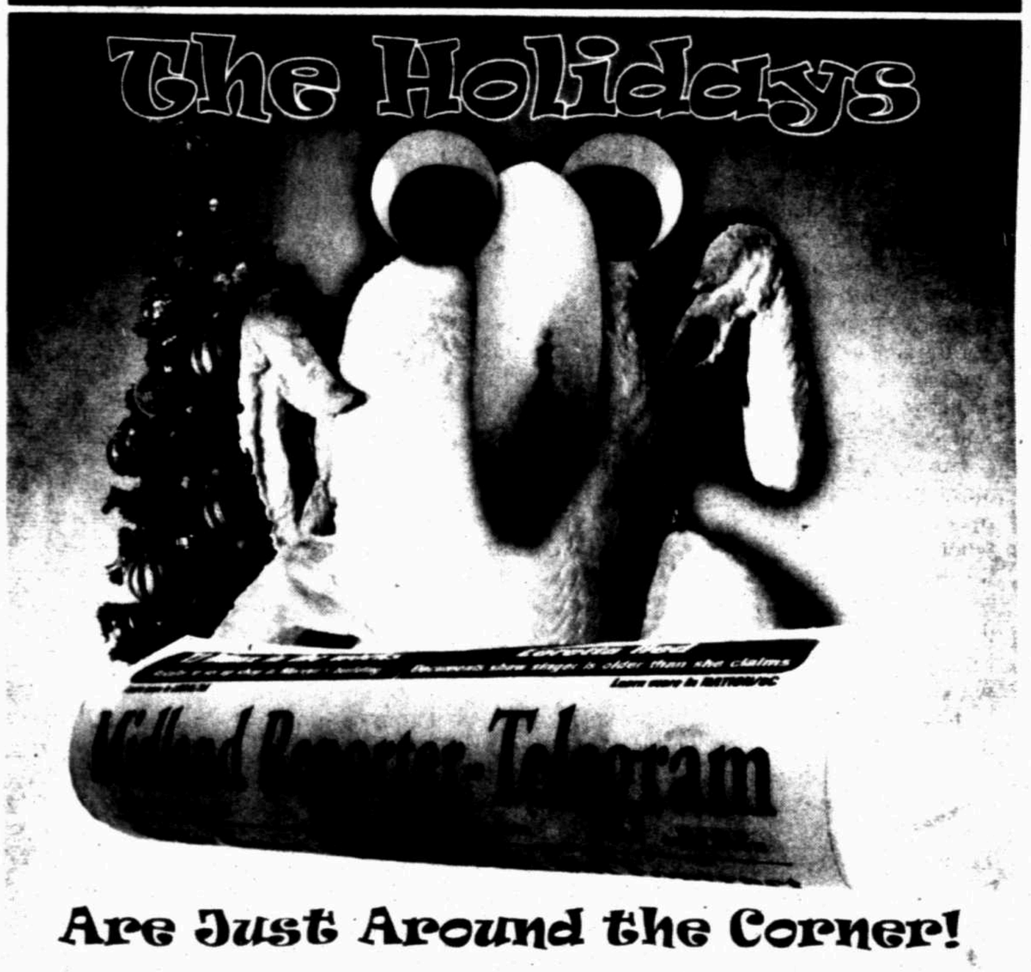
More than 50 percent of the tax increases would come from the expiration of tax cuts approved in 2001 and 2003 and from additional tax cuts in a 2009 economic stimulus law.

The first set of tax cuts reduced rates on income, investment gains, dividends and estates. They also boosted tax credits for families with children. Deductions for married couples also rose. The 2009 measure increased tax credits for low-income earners and college students.

About 20 percent of the tax increase would come from the expiration of a Social Security tax cut enacted in 2010.

This change would cost someone making $50,000 about $1,000 a year, or nearly $20 a week, and a household with two high-paid workers up to $4,500, or nearly $87 a week.





AAA: Thanksgiving travel should increase

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Slightly more Americans will hit the road this Thanksgiving, according to AAA. That includes people who are choosing to drive instead of fly as household budgets remain tight.

In its annual Thanksgiving travel forecast released Tuesday, AAA predicts 43.6 million Americans will travel at least 50 miles from home over the holiday, up just 0.7 percent from last year.

But while more people are traveling, it appears that the pent-up demand seen following the recession has largely dissipated. Demand grew a healthy 8 percent and 6 percent, respectively, in the two previous Thanksgiving holiday periods even though economic growth was moderate.

Now, AAA said it will take a stronger economy to spur a significant jump in travel demand going forward.

"Despite mild improvements in unemployment, the housing market and greater consumer optimism, the economy is still struggling to keep its head above water," AAA said in its forecast.

The number of travelers forecast to drive, fly or hop on a train or bus this holiday is still 26 percent below the peak in 2005 and 14 percent below 2007.

Air travel is expected to decline, one sign that many households continue to feel financially pinched. AAA expects 3.14 million people to fly, down from 3.2 million a year earlier. Even with gas at a current national average of $3.44 per gallon, driving the family from New England to the Midwest to see the relatives is still cheaper than flying.

And filling up the tank will take less money than people expected when the survey was conducted in early October. That's because of a dramatic drop in gas prices.

The national average has declined 35 cents per gallon in the last month, AAA expects further declines through the holiday. Still, the price of gas on Thanksgiving Day should be around last year's record of $3.32 per gallon.

Airlines for America, the main trade group for U.S. airlines expects a mild increase in flying over Thanksgiving. The group's prediction covers the 12 days starting Nov. 16. AAA defines the Thanksgiving holiday travel period as Wednesday, Nov. 21 to Sunday, Nov. 25.

AAA's forecast, which is produced from a combination of a traveler survey and economic analysis, was done before Superstorm Sandy hit the East Coast. AAA said it doesn't yet know the full impact the storm will have on travel in the region, but it expects it will be significant.

Museum director dedicated to preserving ranching culture

ED TODD'S PROFILES

J.P. "Pat" McDaniel is well-versed in the ways of ranching, horsemanship, story-telling.

He is at home in his day job, befitting his penchant as an "admirer of history." He sits well in the saddle as director of the 1976-established Haley Memorial Library and History Center in Midland's Historic District.

At age 62, McDaniel is more than a casual teller of tales and legends. He is a discerning listener and collector of lore of the American West embracing West Texas, the Texas Panhandle and beyond.

His inspiration stems from his own background, and especially from J. Evetts Haley (1901-1995), the library-museum's founder and cowman-rancher-historian whose vast collections of interviews, tales, books, essays, dairies, manuscripts, maps and black-and-white photographs form the core of the venture.

Perhaps Haley's defining work is his classic biography of Charles Goodnight (1836-1929), the celebrated "father of the Texas Panhandle" and legendary Southwest cattle

CARVED IN STONE

Limestone carver from Oregon finds work in Midland

Tim Fischer\Reporter-Telegram

Peter Andrusko carves the names of donors into stone in the Healing Garden outside the new front doors of Midland Memorial Hospital.

It was the last thing he wanted to do. Growing up, his father had worked as a bricklayer and stone mason and Peter Attila Andrusko toyed with ideas of being a pilot, a scuba diver, a computer tech — anything but working with bricks.

So when he graduated from Portland State University in Oregon with a degree in information systems and quantitative analysis, he wanted to work as far away from the stone industry as possible.

Or so he thought.

For a few years, he worked with his father's construction business doing small projects. Then he discovered stone carvings and it changed the course of his career.

Armed with a steel chisel, Andrusko now travels around the country as one of a few in the industry who still hand-carves engravings into limestone. With Garden City being one of the largest limestone quarries close to West Texas, two projects within the past year have brought Andrusko from his native Portland to Midland.

Last fall, he was commissioned to carve names into pieces that could be on display at the new Wagner-Noel Performing Arts Center. This month, Andrusko has spent time at the Abell-Hanger healing garden soon to be open at Midland Memorial Hospital.

For the Wagner-Noel, he carved the pieces in his studio in Oregon and had them installed after he completed them. But for the MMH project, he's been staying at a nearby hotel and working on site for several weeks carving the names of donors into the walls.

"There really aren't very many professional letter cutters," he said.

It takes Andrusko time to carve the letters and he averages engraving only about three to four lines of text per day. A stencil that is attached to the wall allows him to move through the process easier rather than hand-drawing each line.

He still uses his computer graphic background by using technology in the studio to plan out the design before he begins. About 80 percent of the work, he said, is spent in studio before going out to the field.

With his work at the Wagner-Noel, there was a concern the letters and names of the donors would not be readable on the natural stone with which he worked. For a couple of weeks, Andrusko worked on site hand painting the letters, a process he said can be tedious and time-consuming.

But it's something he said produces a uniqueness and finesse for his clients.

"It's special," he said.

When organizations or companies are looking for a way to recognize those who have given generously, many look for the most elegant way of expressing their gratitude. For him, it is in carving names and text into something that will last thousands of years.

Andrusko is self taught and said he's lucky to have something he's good at and passionate for. He's learned the trade by watching other skilled carvers and studying architectural sites all over the world.

He started his business, the Andrusko Group, in 1990 and said he plans to keep adding to it and evolving the work that he does. Different commissions take him around the world. He is a consultant or

Kent Companies to be honored for philanthropy

■ Association of Fundraising Professionals to present Outstanding Business Award as part of National Philanthropy Day.

By Audrie Palmer
apalmer@mrt.com

When his father E.L. "Buck" Kent first started the Kent Cos. 55 years ago, generosity was ingrained into the business' culture.

"My father was a big believer in supporting your local community," said Bill Kent, current president and CEO.

"We're very big believers in giving back to the communities we're in. It's more of our core belief that we have to support the communities that support us."

This year so far, the business has donated more than $100,000 to area organizations and nonprofits through its continued support of MARC and the Buffalo Trail Council of the Boy Scouts of America, along with other projects.

Thursday, the Kent Cos. will be recognized by the Association of Fundraising Professionals with the Outstanding Business Award for the year as part of National Philanthropy Day.

"I'm still in shock. I'm really honored and flattered," Kent said last week. "I shouldn't be getting it. All of our people should be getting it. They're the ones whose hard work allows us to make some money to be able to give back."

There are approximately 800 employees of the Kent Cos. with businesses in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Arizona.

Program offers respite for Alzheimer's caregivers

■ The Patio provides games, food, programs for seniors every Thursday afternoon.

By Megan Lea Buck
mbuck@mrt.com

November is Alzheimer's Awareness Month and one local group is hoping to help Alzheimer's patients and their caregivers.

The Patio caregiver respite program provides adult day care for seniors from 1-5 p.m. every Thursday at Midland Lutheran Church. The volunteer-run program marked its fifth anniversary with an open house last month. The program currently serves three clients, but can accommodate up to 10.

The Patio program accepts seniors 60 and older and Alzheimer's patients of any age. Cost is $15 and includes the program and a snack consisting of a sandwich, fruit, dessert and drink.

"We have a program, we serve a snack, we have an exercise program, we play games and have a musician come by," said program founder Anneliese Hyde. "When the weather is nice we sit on the patio. It's very pretty out there."

Hyde, a nurse who volunteered at an assisted living facility for more than 20 years, went to her church's council with the idea for a caregiver respite program.

"I said I would love to claim some space in our church and open up a respite for people who are shut it. So, the congregation considered it and supported

Texas madam dies without revealing clients

By Eva Ruth Moravec
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — For years, stories about madam Theresa Brown and her cringe-inducing "trick list" of 3,000 customers dominated local and national headlines.

But the woman whose classy North Side brothel attracted politicians, athletes and lawyers until it was raided in 1981 had faded from the public spotlight, and her recent death went unnoticed, save for an obituary and a story in a local magazine.

Brown, who once ran against one alleged client for the City Council, died Sept. 18 of natural causes at a San Antonio hospital. She was 78, and according to the short obituary, had the last name Burquette.

She'll "always be remembered for her adventurous nature and love of travel," it read.

San Antonio police, acting under a court order in 1985, torched the client list they confiscated from her bordello at 315 Northtrail Drive, but the whereabouts of her back-up list, which was the subject of a First Amendment court battle, remains unknown.

Rick Casey, who hosts KLRN's Texas Week and covered the story for the San Antonio Express and News, said Brown was a character who would stand up to anybody.

"Years later, she called me," he said, but Casey didn't remember why. "She had become a Christian."

Brown, born in San Antonio, had moved to Kyle and was an advocate for women in need, her obituary said.

Her relatives declined to comment.

According to an interview published in Texas Country magazine in May 1981, Brown had two children then and worked as a bookkeeper and clerk before opening her brothel, next to her home, in the 1960s.

"I was getting $50 a month for both kids, and we lived in a project," she said. "I decided to better myself in the grand tradition of free enterprise. ... I'm a woman who has come up the hard way."

Word of Brown's bordello spread quickly through the local nightlife scene, friend Sam Kindrick said.

"We met in the 1960s. I saw this good-looking woman and asked someone who she was, and was told, 'That's Theresa Brown, the biggest whore in town,'" Kindrick said. "She told me that I couldn't afford her, and she was right."

But Brown wasn't for hire and she left that work to her girls, some 800 over the 16 years she was in operation, she told Texas Country.

Brown's bordello had strict rules, confiscated along with her client list when she and two girls were arrested Oct. 2, 1980: The girls had to be healthy and off drugs, they had to keep the house clean and they made their own appointments.

In 1984, she registered "Madame T's Panache," a bric-a-brac store that she ran temporarily and held on to three homes she owned on Northtrail for another decade.

Brown sold the bordello last, in 1998, for $67,065, and then disappeared from public records.

"She wasn't too happy with her past life in recent years, and she was trying to, more or less, change her life around," Kindrick said. "One of her sons wouldn't talk to her. But she always had a heart of gold."

Tradition means 8 family members join US military

By Alex Branch
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

> "Drove my mother a little crazy for a little while because a lot of us were on active duty serving overseas at the same time. She got a lot of gray hairs wondering if we were all OK. When she heard from us, she said, 'Well, we made it through another day.'"
> Charles Braun, 86, whose family accumulated 146 years of active-duty military service in the Air Force, Army and Marines

NEWARK — Seventeen-year-old Charles Braun quit high school in 1944 and surprised no one with what he did next.

His father, Lt. Col. Joseph F. Braun Sr., was a career military man who fought in World War I, and Charles and his six brothers spent most of their youths on military bases.

His two older brothers, James and Frank, had already enlisted to fight World War II.

So, Charles joined the Air Force. Then, his younger brother, Harry, signed up. Then, his brother Joseph Jr. Then, his brother Donald. Then, his brother Richard.

From 1917 to 1970, the eight Braun men accumulated 146 years of active-duty military service in the Air Force, Army and Marines. At least one Braun man stepped into the battlefields of World War I and World War II, the foxholes of Korea and the jungles of Vietnam. Somehow, everyone always came home.

"Seems kind of like a miracle now," said Charles Braun, 86, who lives in Newark, a small city northwest of Fort Worth. "But we were all really proud to go and fight for our country. Family tradition is what it amounted to, I guess."

That's a tradition too rich to be forgotten. Braun is methodically documenting his family's service, hunting down official military records on his father and brothers, their assignments and the medals, stripes and ribbons they earned.

He displays the awards in shadow boxes that bear each family member's nameplate.

He is building the same boxes for a granddaughter and nephew who later boosted the family's military service to 154 years. And he is still gathering documentation on a second nephew who served.

Braun, whose own military career spanned 26 years until he retired as an Air Force master sergeant, is a member of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 4443.

In December, he traveled to Austin to display his shadow boxes for a national VFW commander. His arranges the boxes among miniature American flags.

Eventually, he would like to submit the display to an archive for safekeeping.

The Brauns' service to their country has drawn attention over the years. The family's picture appeared in a March 1951 issue of Life of the Soldier and the Airmen with a story titled "Brauns in Blues."

"Meet the Brauns — all seven of them!" the story reads. "It's not unusual these days for a family to have three or four members in Army or Air Force Service, but the Brauns top this."

The Braun boys grew up on military bases, spending most of their time "running around and agitating each other," Braun said. But after they made military commitments, time together became rare and precious.

"We were practically separated all the time," Braun said. "One would come home and before he got there another would be transferred out somewhere else. That's just kind of the way it went, and you just hoped everyone was doing OK."

Braun's service took him to the Republic of Panama during World War II, where he patrolled for Japanese submarines.

He did aircraft maintenance on B-29 bombers during the Korean War and, during Vietnam, flew in the back seat of a 0-1 Bird Dog looking for targets on the ground.

Although some brothers fought in the same conflicts, they never actually served together, he said.

The deaths of the five Sullivan brothers from Iowa after a Japanese submarine torpedoed the USS Juneau at Guadalcanal during World War II weighed on everyone's mind.

The Brauns' mother, Bertha Mae, did the most worrying. During World War II, families of U.S. servicemen displayed Blue Star Flags, with each star representing a family member at war.

"Drove my mother a little crazy for a little while because a lot of us were on active duty serving overseas at the same time," Braun said. "She got a lot of gray hairs wondering if we were all OK. When she heard from us, she said, 'Well, we made it through another day.'"

Four decades have passed since Braun retired from the military. His mother, father and three brothers have died. Those who are still alive have settled in Texas, Washington and Colorado, and overseas in Italy.

The brothers stay in contact on their computers using Skype.

Braun chats with them from his Newark home, where an American flag waves in the front yard. A "Support Our Troops" decal adorns the front door.

Veterans Day has special significance to his family.

"It means a lot to me. It's kind of hard to put it into words," he said. "But I am very proud of my dad and all my brothers for serving. It's just an honor to give that much time fighting for your country."

Travel Texas for holiday celebrations

By Helen Anders
Cox Newspapers

AUSTIN — Draw your droll little mouth up like a bow and dig out your calendar and a map. It's time to plan a road trip to see what other Texas towns and cities are doing for the holidays.

Yes, we know. You're still picking Halloween candy out of your teeth and haven't yet decided who's making the pies for Thanksgiving. Yet, it's time to don your gay apparel, because some of the state's holiday events start this very weekend. Others jingle all the way to Dec. 31. You'll find parades, visits with Santa, shopping opportunities, music, lights fantastic and even cavorting whales.

This isn't a comprehensive list of Texas holiday events, by any means. It's just a cross-section of ho-ho-ho and fa-la-la-la-la, with a little oom-pah thrown in. If your favorite Texas town isn't here, visit its website and see what chestnuts it has planned.

Brenham

The home of Blue Bell Ice Cream is every bit as down-home folksy as it's portrayed in commercials. Events start with the 22nd Poinsettia Celebration at Ellison's Greenhouses, 2107 E. Stone St. on Saturday and Sunday. Check out the 6-foot-tall poinsettias.

Then, join locals in a strolling the historic downtown, decked out in lights, Nov. 30 from 5:30-10 p.m. The Parade of Lights starts at 6 p.m. Learn more about these, along with Gingerbread Tour of Homes and other festivities, at visitbrenhamtexas.com.

Comfort

Have yourself a comfy little Christmas in this little German town 20 miles south of Fredericksburg, where Santa Claus is sometimes called Der Weihnachtsmann. Christmas in Comfort on Nov. 24 offers more than 100 vendors in the streets, along with photos with Santa and a parade starting at 7 p.m. Find out more at comfortchamberofcommerce.com.

You can also visit Santa, or whatever you call him, and see a magical village created for the season at an 1890s stone farmhouse at Muleshoe Farm and Ranch Trust, 302 U.S. 87 north of Comfort from 6-8:30 p.m. on Nov. 30, Dec. 1 and Dec. 7-8, 14-15 and 21-22.

Dallas

Big D's biggest seasonal event is the Children's Medical Center Holiday Parade Dec. 1 at 10 a.m. downtown. The highly popular free parade is as close to Macy's as you'll get in Texas, with cartoon balloons, floats, Santa and marching bands. It runs from City Hall to the Adolphus Hotel, which helped found the parade. More at childrens.com/parade.

Fort Worth

Myriad merriment in Cowtown includes the Chesapeake Energy Parade of Lights Nov. 23 in Sundance Square as well as Christmas in the Stockyards Dec. 1 with a tree, pony rides, chicken roping (cluck!) and caroling as fa-la-la-la-la takes on a bit of yee-ha. The city offers a good many symphony and ballet performances, as well. Check them all out at fortworth.com.

Fredericksburg

Always-festive Fredericksburg launches its holiday season Nov. 23 with the lighting of its tree and 26-foot German Christmas Pyramid at 7 p.m. at Main Street's Marktplatz. A skating rink opens at the same time. Fredericksburg Trade Days Nov. 23-25 will feature holiday shopping, and there's a Holiday Wine Trail Nov. 30-Dec. 16. Find out more about all of these at visitfredericksburgtx.com.

Galveston

Starting with its Lasers, Lights and Magic in the Park Celebration Nov. 24 in Saengerfest Park, Galveston offers hundreds of events through the end of the year, among them Dickens on the Strand, the yearly historic district festival featuring 19th century characters (look out for the ghost of Jacob Marley), Dec. 1 and 2 ($14 at the gate for adults; $8 for kids). Find out about its activities (parades, performances, twilight dinners, home tours and more) at galveston.com.

At Moody Gardens, the Festival of Lights continues this weekend from 6-10 p.m. ($6.95) with dazzling light displays and performances. Snow-tubing, meals and markets are also available. Learn more at moodygardens.com/seasonal(underscore)fun/.

Hotel Galvez, always engaged in the holiday seasons, lights its tree Nov. 23 at 6 p.m. with music and dance performances, photos with Santa and, inside the hotel, a gingerbread display. The hotel has special holiday rates starting at $159, too, at wyndhamhotelgalvez.com).

Grapevine

Bunches of fun await in the city of grapes, including a huge lighted parade — the city says it's the largest lighted parade in North Texas — Dec. 6 at 7 p.m. A boat parade floats around Lake Grapevine Dec. 1 from 6-9 p.m. at Twin Coves Marina.

The North Pole Express, an hourlong train event with caroling, ornament making and more, takes place at the Grapevine Vintage Railroad, 705 S. Main St. ($18) on Nov. 23, 24, 15 and 30 and Dec. 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22 and 23.

Downtown Grapevine twinkles with a light show nightly from 6-11 p.m. starting Tuesday. There are plenty of holiday performances, too, from ice shows to concerts.

Houston

New this year is a winter wonderland at the Houston Zoo in Hermann Park with colorful lights, music, animated sculptures and hot chocolate to sip as you hang out with the animals.

A passel of other Houston activities includes the H-E-B Holiday Parade Nov. 22; Uptown's Holiday Lighting Nov. 22 along Post Oak Boulevard; a Holiday Home Tour Nov. 30-Dec. 1; the Mayor's Holiday Celebration at City Hall Nov. 30; ice skating at the downtown Discovery Green, Nov. 22-Jan. 22; a gingerbread build-off Dec. 8 sponsored by Architecture Center Houston; the Chevron Jingle Bell Run and Walk Dec. 9; a German Christmas market and Festival Dec. 7-9 and much more.

Port Isabel

The big event in this town on the Laguna Madre is the Christmas Lighted Boat Parade on Dec. 1. After dark, boats festooned in lights float from Port Isabel to South Padre Island, with crowds cheering from both banks.

Rockport

Go coastal with Rockport's Tropical Christmas at Rockport Harbor starting at 10 a.m. Dec. 1 with entertainment, a parade and a 6:15 tree lighting followed by fireworks. Find out more at rockport-fulton.org.

San Antonio

Few places can boast the magic of San Antonio's River Walk during the holiday season, when walking the Walk becomes a trek through a forest of lights — 1.8 million of them. River Walk events include a Nov. 24 parade and the Fiesta de las Luminarias Nov. 30-Dec. 16, with caroling on barges.

Family vacations on covered wagon

By Tumbleweed Smith

'I've spent most of my life horseback. I worked at the prison five years. After I quit there I've been punching cows ever since, catching wild cattle, throwing 'em, worming 'em, castrating calves, that kind of business.'

Carroll Langham lives near Latexo in Houston County. In addition to his regular cowboy duties, he has caught wild hogs by hand and performed rope tricks for large crowds of people. He roped a couple of deer.

"I roped an eight-point buck one time while horseback. The deer was in a water hole. A dog was after him. I just threw my rope over him and pulled him up that bank. Our kids were raised on meat from deer and wild hogs," he said.

Langham likes the western way of life.

"Our vacation every year was a trip in a covered wagon to the Neches River. We'd take all the kids and try to make it around the Fourth of July when the sale barn was closed. We'd take those young 'uns and go down there and stay three or four days. The kids swam in the river."

The trip was not just for his kids. Other youngsters went along, too. They wanted the rare experience of taking a trip in a covered wagon.

His wife, on the other hand, was always asking why they were taking a wagon to a campground 32 miles away. He told her he was building those youngsters some memories.

"I guess some of it rubbed off. Some of them are 40 years old now and they'll ask me, 'Mr. Langham, when are we gonna go on another wagon trip?'"

Langham's wife made the cover for the wagon out of some ducking material she found in an old hardware store at Elkhart. It was a rare find. Langham said the covered wagon made a great traveling motel.

"We had a tailgate on that wagon where you could let it down and my wife would make a table out of it. That's where she did her cooking. We'd eat lots of fish. We had plenty of groceries, but we caught fish and she'd cook them," he said.

Langham said it was peaceful riding through the woods in a covered wagon, just jingling along listening to the trace chains. Sometimes they traveled at night because it was hot that time of year. Occasionally, they surprised people.

"I never will forget one night just before midnight we were going through the woods and I heard some little ol' beagle dogs runnin' around out there. An old boy who owned some land nearby liked to run rabbits at night. We don't have any lights on that wagon and we went over a little hill there and we met that guy chasing rabbits on a four-wheeler. He was looking for his dogs. He just shut that four-wheeler down and said, 'my goodness, I thought I was dreaming. Who would ever think of running up on a covered wagon in these pine trees at midnight?'"

"The Haley collections are evidence of culture and society that have purpose and determination toward creation — creation of life, culture, society, facilities or buildings. We still have an obligation to look after the things of the past. You don't spend your life on the back of a horse out in the middle of a range, pasture or farm without understanding that there was a grand design. It wasn't just happenstance or random occurrence. It is our place to find in this world what our place is in that grand design."

Pat McDaniel, director of Haley Memorial Library and History Center

TODD

rancher. He was lauded by Texas historian-folklorist J. Frank Dobie (1888-1964) as one who "approached greatness more nearly than any other cowman of history."

The Haley research collections include works of cowboy-photographer Erwin Smith (1886-1947), who recorded the cowboy's storied place in history.

And within the stately quarters of the library-museum are artifacts such as saddles and other tack, spurs, garb and six-shooters and predating those, the 1722 sand-cast bronze Alamo mission bell.

The artifacts, McDaniel said, are "representations of the archives, ... tangible assets that depict the archives" just as the ornate 1929-built 12-story T.S. Hogan Petroleum Building and the Yucca Theatre represent Midland's claim as capital of the Permian Basin petroleum empire.

To McDaniel's delight, there recently appeared a fluke, a bona-fide gem, for the Haley collections of artifacts: a 1967 custom-made pair of boots hailed as "an old-timey boot" by 85-year-old Midland rancher Ted Johnson.

The classic Western pair, with pointed toe and slanted heel perhaps designed for riding but well-suited for square-dancing and Texas two-stepping, showed up in the culling and salvaging stages of the 2012 Midland Community and Senior Services' Texas Size-Garage Sale to benefit Meals-on-Wheels.

Cathy Smith, a Haley Library and CSS volunteer, told McDaniel of the vintage pair. Upon checking out the boots, McDaniel offered $100 cash for the artifact.

Sold, benefiting Haley and Meals-on-Wheels.

As it turned out, the pair of size 7B chocolate-hued kangaroo boots were hand-crafted by Midland boot-maker Harold "Butch" Norris for Dollie McAlister for $60 plus $1.50 tax.

Johnson and McDaniel figured that a custom-made comparable pair would cost about $1,000 today.

"He was an artist, a perfectionist," said Norris' daughter, Kathleen "Kathy" Jones, who works with her brother, Michael Norris, in their father's Main Street boot-shoe repair shop.

From start-to-finish, Butch Norris, who learned the craft and art of boot-making from his boot-making San Angelo cousin, J.L. Mercer, could make a pair in a week without interruption. However, the order-to-finish time normally spanned from six months to two years.

Norris built the Dollie McAlister pair in five months. The exactness of the decorative green-orange-white stitching and the precision welting are indicative of the boots' original quality. Forty-five years later, the boots appear in almost brand-new condition — museum quality.

McDaniel, born in 1950 into a ranching family, was riding horseback with his grandfather, pioneer oilman-rancher J.P. "Bum" Gibbins, as soon as he was "out of diapers."

After graduating from Midland High School in 1968 and from Texas Christian University in 1972, McDaniel returned to Midland in 1974 to work for Ted Johnson in his tire business. McDaniel also promoted the Midland Ranch Rodeo of the late 1900s.

In 1995, though not looking for a job, McDaniel as an admirer of history eagerly took on directorship of the Haley library-museum and found his niche.

"The Texas Panhandle was the strongest beginnings of the Western range cattle industry," said McDaniel, who is dedicated to preserving "the flavor" of the traditional Midland culture.

Meanwhile, McDaniel said he fears that culture is threatened by "all the outside influences" and the "changing face of the Midland populace" in boom times and "the insidious nature of instant gratification."

"The Haley collections are evidence of culture and society that have purpose and determination toward creation — creation of life, culture, society, facilities or buildings," McDaniel said. "We still have an obligation to look after the things of the past.

"You don't spend your life on the back of a horse out in the middle of a range, pasture or farm without understanding that. There was a grand design," McDaniel said. "It wasn't just happenstance or random occurrence. It is our place to find in this world what our place is in that grand design."

me," she said, noting a generous donation from Lynette Kestler and the late Marshall Kestler helped get the program started.

Though The Patio meets at Midland Lutheran Church, Hyde said there isn't a religious element to the program.

"All we want to do is give a safe place with some fun and entertainment for the people who come and for the people who take care of them," she said.

Seniors who attend have an opportunity to play games and interact with other seniors and the seven volunteers. A short concert is provided each week by guitarist David Fisher from Church on the Journey.

"We have something going all the time," Hyde said. "We play games, we try to engage them."

On the second Thursday of the month, the Patio offers a caregiver support group led by Susan Frederickson with Area Agency on Aging of the Permian Basin.

Hyde described caring for a loved one with Alzheimer's as a "monumental job" and hopes the program will give caregivers a much-needed break.

"For the caregivers of Alzheimer's, it is a 24-7 job to take care of these people. I mean it's literally day and night, and for them to have just four hours for themselves, whatever they want to do, is just like a gift," Hyde said.

"Those four hours — it is not a whole lot, but it is something — they can get their hair done, they can go shopping, or go to the movies. It's kind of a little gift to the community."

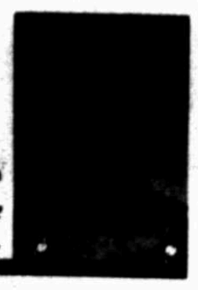
Save time on Thanksgiving Day with make-ahead dishes

Thanksgiving is a prelude to the hustle and bustle of Christmas. I had a panic moment while writing this article — I could not find the folder where I keep some of my favorite Thanksgiving recipes. This recipe folder has become a lifesaver. It was a suggestion by Siri Langston, a member of the Tasting, Testing and Talking group that occasionally gets together to try out recipes.



FOOD ETC.

Email Joan Huff at foodetcmrt@aol.com. See more recipes at mywesttexas.com.

She suggests when you plan your menu, make copies of the recipes and keep them together in a binder so you are not pulling out numerous cookbooks and trying to remember page numbers.

The recipes are all handy where you can make notes and keep a list of what you made in previous years. I found mine, and I can see what I cooked last year and the year before for various meals when visitors were here. I add new ideas in the weeks before the holidays in case I want to throw in some new favorite recipes.

Other members of the Tasting, Testing and Talking group shared recipes they make at least a day ahead of Thanksgiving that saves them valuable time in the kitchen. The rest of the recipes are some of our family favorites that I can make before Thanksgiving Day. Make breakfast breads and cakes now and freeze them while you have some extra time. Thanksgiving is one of the days we really want to spend with our family, and not with our appliances.

Green Pea and Bean Salad

Submitted by Beverly McClatchy

1 (14-ounce) can green peas
1 (14-ounce) can whole green beans
1 stalk celery
1 green bell pepper
1 medium purple onion
1 small jar pimiento

Dressing:
1/4 cup salad oil
1 teaspoon salt
1 Tablespoon water
3/4 cup sugar
1/2 cup cider vinegar

Dice vegetables very fine and combine in bowl. Combine dressing ingredients and pour over vegetables. Let stand overnight in refrigerator.

Refrigerator Mashed Potatoes

Submitted by Carmen Edwards

5 pounds russet potatoes (about 9 large)
1 teaspoon salt
2 to 3 ounce packages cream cheese
1 cup sour cream
1 teaspoon onion salt
1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
4 tablespoons butter, divided
Sprinkling of paprika (optional)

Peel potatoes and chunk into large pieces. Cook in boiling, salted water until tender. Drain. Mash until smooth, using an electric mixer, if desired. Add the cream cheese, sour cream, onion salt, pepper and 2 tablespoons of butter. Mix until light and fluffy. Butter a 2 quart casserole dish. Spoon potatoes into dish. Cover and refrigerate at least 6 hours or up to 2 days. When ready to heat, sprinkle lightly with paprika, if desired, and dot with the remaining 2 tablespoons of butter. Bake at 350° for 30-35 minutes. *I use regular, not low fat, cream cheese and sour cream and real butter for best results.

Cornbread Dressing

5 cups cornbread
3 cups crumbled biscuits
1 cup chopped celery
1/2 cup chopped onion
1/2 cup butter
2 cups chicken stock
2 eggs
1/2 teaspoon poultry seasoning
1/2 teaspoon sage

Make your favorite recipe of cornbread. After it has cooled, finely crumble so there are 5 cups of crumbs. From day old biscuits, crumble them so you have 3 cups of crumbs. Combine crumbs in a bowl and set aside. Sauté chopped celery and onion in butter until vegetables are tender, stirring occasionally. Stir in stock, poultry seasoning and sage and cook until mixture begins to simmer. Pour mixture over breads in bowl. Add eggs, combine and put in a 9x12-inch baking dish. Bake at 350 for about 15 minutes. Cool. Dressing can be frozen at this point and when ready to use, defrost and bake at 350 until browned. Sometimes I dot it with additional butter before baking.

Sweet Potatoes with Cranberry Sauce

4 pounds sweet potatoes (about 6 small)
1 (16-ounce) can whole-berry cranberry sauce
1 cup fresh cranberries
3/4 cup orange juice
1/2 cup firmly packed brown sugar
2 Tablespoons butter or margarine
3/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg

Wash sweet potatoes; prick several times with a fork. Microwave on High about 20 minutes; check for doneness. Cool potatoes to touch; peel and cut into 1/2-inch slices. Arrange slices in an overlapping spiral pattern 1 to 2 layers thick in a 12-inch round baking dish; set aside.

Combine cranberry sauce and remaining 6 ingredients in a saucepan; bring to a boil. Reduce heat; simmer, uncovered, 5 minutes. Pour cranberry mixture over sweet potatoes; cool. Cover tightly and chill overnight. When ready to serve, remove from the refrigerator, let stand 30 minutes. Uncover and bake at 350 for 30 minutes or until thoroughly heated and bubbly.

Cran-Horseradish Sauce and Cream Cheese

1 (16-ounce) can whole-berry cranberry sauce
1/2 cup sugar
1/3 cup minced onion
2 Tablespoons prepared horseradish
1 (8-ounce) package cream cheese

Stir cranberry sauce, sugar, onion and horseradish together in a medium saucepan. Bring to a boil, stirring often. Remove from heat. Cover and chill 1 hour or up to 3 days. When ready to serve, spoon sauce over cream cheese on a plate. Serve with crackers. Can also be used as cranberry sauce for turkey or on sandwiches. Make ahead and store up to a week in an airtight container in the refrigerator.

Sock-it-to-Me Cake

1 Duncan Hines Butter Recipe Golden Cake Mix
1 cup sour cream
1/2 cup vegetable oil
1/4 cup sugar
1/4 cup water
4 eggs
1 cup chopped pecans
2 Tablespoons brown sugar
2 teaspoons cinnamon

Preheat oven to 385. Blend cake mix, sour cream, oil, sugar, water and eggs in a large mixing bowl. Beat 2 minutes at high speed. Pour 1/2 of the batter into a greased and floured 10-inch tube pan. Combine pecans, brown sugar, and cinnamon and sprinkle over batter in pan. Spread remaining batter over filling mixture. Bake at 375 for 45 to 55 minutes or until cake springs back when lightly touched. Cool right side up for about 25 minutes. Gently run a knife around the edges and remove the cake from the pan. National Philanthropy Day honorees

- Outstanding Philanthropic Family: Saulsbury family
- Outstanding Philanthropic Organization: Atmos Energy
- Outstanding Business: Kent Cos.
- Outstanding Volunteer Fundraiser: Kenye Kay Butts
- Outstanding Youth in Philanthropy: Trinity School senior girls
- Outstanding Fundraising Professional: Violet Singh

Under the Kent Cos. umbrella are businesses including the Kent Kwik convenience stores and gas stations, Avis Lube and Fast Oil Change, Mr. Payroll Check Cashing and Baskin-Robbins.

There are organizations and charities the business has supported for years, and Kent said the company believes in those organizations and will continue to support them. Other donations this year have been one-time gifts such as to the Midland Memorial Hospital and the new Bush Tennis Center.

In April, Kent Cos. wanted to give back to the town of Kermit and purchased 14 street lamps for the downtown area and around the square. This is the first time lamps have been installed around the downtown square. They will be decorated in the coming weeks for the Christmas season.

Each lamp has a small plaque on the bottom of the post that states, "In honor of E.L. 'Buck' Kent."

"This is something they (the Kent Cos.) wanted to donate. They opened a truck stop here a few years ago and wanted to do something else for the community," said Kermit city secretary Gloria Saenz.

"Not only does it give the downtown area a better look, but we have annual festivities in the square with as many as 18,000 people attending and this just makes it more attractive to the people who come to visit."

Kent said his business encourages employees to give back. Employees can choose to have a certain amount of their paychecks taken out to support charities.

The company is also looking to develop its own internal charity, to which staff can designate funds to their own employees.

"We do a lot of donating things we don't ever make public, such as taking care of an employee who may have lost their home in a fire. It's things of that nature that doesn't always hit the radar on the philanthropy trail," he said.

"We try to take care of our people and our communities as we can afford to do so."

The Kent Cos.' award is one of six being presented today at the 19th annual National Philanthropy Day luncheon. The event is put on each year by the AFP Permian Basin Chapter to recognize outstanding philanthropic endeavors, the people involved and the importance of philanthropy.

The keynote speaker for this year's luncheon is Vicki Clark. Clark serves as a senior governance consultant for BoardSource, a trainer for the Leader to Leader Institute's (formally the Peter F. Drucker Foundation) international training team and a featured facilitator for the Association of Junior Leagues International.

For 12 years, Clark was the vice president for the Points of Light Foundation and on the steering committee for Colin Powell's Summit for America's Children. She has devoted the past 20 years to developing the capacity of organizations, congregations and community-based groups.

The luncheon will be 11:30 a.m. Thursday at Midland Country Club.

GARDENING

NEIL SPERRY

"Neil Sperry's Texas Gardening" can be heard 11 a.m.-noon Saturdays on KCRS (AM 550). Email him at mailbag@sperrygardens.com.

White patches on cactus likely mealy bugs

Dear Neil: I have a medium-sized cactus I've had on my patio since 2007. In the middle of this past summer, it began developing little white patches on a couple of its leaves. The patches look like small shredded Styrofoam, and they have spread to the entire plant. I've used a houseplant insecticide, but with no results. What are they, and what can I do?

Answer: It sounds like your plant has a dose of mealy bugs. (You can confirm that by looking up "photo mealy bugs" online.) They're a particularly obnoxious type of soft-bodied scale insect, and you're going to have to be very persistent to get rid of them. Systemic insecticides offer good help. Local retail garden centers will be able to show you several. (They're not commonly sold in national chain retailers.) You can also use a cotton swab dipped in rubbing alcohol to remove them physically. While it's boring and tedious, it's very effective. If you see them showing up on other plants, address them immediately.

Dear Neil: How much cold can Gold Star esperanza tolerate? When, and by how much, can I prune mine? They have started to get rather leggy.

Answer: Gold Star esperanzas are winter-hardy in the southern half of Texas, but they'll survive farther north in mild winters, and they'll be killed in South Texas in severe winters, so it's all relative. It's best to grow them in protected locations (against the house, in alcoves, atriums, etc.). Pruning should be done as needed, rather than a large amount at any one time. However, if you do need to do major pruning, late winter would be the best time, so you can take full advantage of the flush of spring growth. If your plants are getting lanky, be sure they're getting full, or nearly full sunlight.

Dear Neil: Now that my red oak leaves are falling, I'm seeing tons of what look like bright red acorns (along with the regular acorns). They seem to have been stuck to the leaves. What are they, and do I need to worry about them for next year?

Answer: Those are insect galls. There have been tons of reports of them this year (more than most years). The adult female insect stings the plant's leaf or twig and inserts eggs. The red growth you see is all plant tissue that forms as a response to the sting. The insect's larvae are developing within the swollen area. There is no effective spray for them, but that really isn't critical, because they really don't do any measureable harm to their host trees. You'll see hundreds of different types of galls on oaks alone, and they're common on hackberries, cottonwoods, pecans and other shade trees. No cause for concern.

Dear Neil: I've tried your suggestion of hand-digging my briars, and it has worked. It wasn't much trouble, either. However, now I'm faced with getting rid of trumpet vine. Is there any way short of digging it? You know how it spreads everywhere.

Answer: If the mother plant still exists, and if you want to save it, begin by putting a root barrier around it. Dig a trench 20 inches deep four or five feet away from its trunk and insert a heavy vinyl pond liner. Use a broadleafed weedkiller spray on the sprouts as they begin to grow actively in the spring. If you want to eliminate the entire planting, cut the mother plant off at the ground. Leave its stump in place. In early spring, just before new buds sprout, drill into the stump with a quarter-inch bit to make a "reservoir" for the herbicide, then pour the same type of broadleafed weedkiller in at full strength. You'll still have to spray some of the rootsprouts as they continue to grow, but you'll generally be able to kill the mother plant out with one treatment.

Dear Neil: When I bring tropical plants into the house for the winter, most of their leaves fall off. Is there any good way to prevent that?

Answer: That's caused by a change in the lighting. The plants have become acclimated to outdoor conditions. When they're suddenly thrust into darker spots, the leaves respond by yellowing and dropping. All the fertilizer and water you might add won't make any difference. It's a lack of light, pure and simple. Make the changes gradually, and try to give them the same amount of daylight they were receiving outdoors.

RE-LEAF BY DEBBIE FROST

With the arrival of freezing weather to the area, you may be tempted to prune and trim all the dormant and dead plants. Leaving freeze-dried plants, limbs, stems, leaves and seed pods intact does several good things for the home landscape.

First of all, standing plants will provide habitat for many birds, beneficial insects and other critters through the winter months. Seed pods, seed heads and various fruit provide food for many beneficial critters. The standing plants also provide a home for many critters. Not all critters are bad, most of them are beneficial and add a delightful element to the garden.

Another benefit of leaving plants in place, even warm-season annuals that are dead, is soil conservation. They reduce water runoff and help channel winter rain or snow melt into the soil. They also help hold soil in place so it doesn't blow away in one of the many high-wind events we may experience between now and spring growth.

Another really important reason to allow these plants to stand is visual relief during the winter months. They give you something to look at, when most plants are dormant. Ornamental grasses, structural plants such as autumn joy sedum, plants with showy seed heads are great for shape, form, texture, and shadow and light play in the dormant garden.

One more advantage is protection. Standing freeze-dried plants will shade the soil and slow water evaporation from the soil, conserving soil moisture conservation. Standing plants also can insulate and protect tender roots, crowns, tubers and other root structures from temperature extremes and freeze injury.

Give yourself some Re-leaf, wait until February to prune and cut your garden back.

Master Gardeners plan training class

JEFF FLOYD

Jeff Floyd is a horticulturist with Texas AgriLife Extension Service. Email him at jeff.floyd@ag.tamu.edu.

If you're interested in learning about local horticulture and sharing your knowledge with others, then you'll be happy to hear Texas A&M Agrilife Extension and the Permian Basin Master Gardeners are about to start training a new class of volunteers.

Each January, 20 to 30 new Master Gardener trainees begin receiving classroom instruction and practical demonstrations toward certification as a Master Gardener in the Permian Basin. Certified Master Gardener volunteers provide support to Texas A&M Agrilife Extension programs across the state by assisting with the development and production of educational programs that improve the lives of Texans.

The entire state of Texas is served by the activities of these energetic volunteers as they help develop scientifically sound programs designed to meet local needs. For example, one reason Texans are beginning to understand the precious nature of water is because of the promotion of conservation practices the Permian Basin Master Gardeners have taught for many years. Master Gardener education impacts all 254 Texas counties as the knowledge of these programs filters through the network of volunteers within the 54 Master Gardener organizations across the state.

As a Permian Basin Master Gardener trainee you'll learn about horticulture topics such as botany, pest identification, soil basics, vegetable gardening, landscape design, plant selection, tree maintenance, plant propagation and rainwater harvesting. Master Gardener classes are taught by Extension specialists, local professors and certified Master Gardeners.

Once a Master Gardener trainee completes their coursework, they are considered a Master Gardener intern with an expectation of completing 60 volunteer hours within a year. Volunteer hours are documented by working in local demonstration gardens, sharing knowledge with residents and any other activity that assists Texas A&M Extension in its mission of improving the lives of Texans.

Each Master Gardener program is as distinctive as the region it is located in and the personalities that make up its volunteers. The Permian Basin Master Gardeners are a family of friendly characters with an eclectic mix of ruggedness and culture that defines West Texas. Members join for a variety of reasons from wanting to give back to the community they live in to simply learning more about gardening.

The orientation for the Permian Basin Master Gardeners will be held from 9 a.m.-noon Jan. 9, at the National Guard Readiness Center located at Midland International Airport. Required successive classes will be held from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Wednesdays through April 17, except during the week of spring break. Membership is open to all adults. The cost for the training is $250, which covers speakers' fees, a background check and the Texas Master Gardener Handbook. Annual dues to the Texas Master Gardener Association historically have been paid by the Permian Basin Master Gardeners. For registration and orientation information, call the Ector County Extension office at 498-4071.

Texas' Royal remembered as humble champion

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Former Texas coach Darrell K. Royal was remembered Tuesday as a humble champion who built a powerhouse football program and a Longhorn brand known around the world.

About 1,500 people attended a campus memorial service for the coach who led Texas to national championships in 1963 and 1969 and a share of a third in 1970. Royal also revolutionized college football when he introduced the wishbone offense in 1968.

Royal died in Austin on Nov. 7 at the age of 88. He was buried at the Texas State Cemetery in a private service on Monday.

Royal grew up chopping cotton in Dust Bowl-era Oklahoma and was a standout player for the Sooners in the 1940s. It was Royal who determined Texas would wear not wear "just orange" but burnt orange, and put the Longhorn logo on the players' helmets, Texas President Bill Powers said.

"The rarest of creatures: an Oklahoma Sooner who brought glory and unprecedented success to the University of Texas," Powers said. "He was the real creator of the Longhorn brand that defines our institution around the world today."

Royal was just 32 when Texas hired him before the 1957 season. Over the next 20 years, Texas won 167 games and 11 Southwest Conference titles and played in 16 bowl games. Royal, who never had a losing season, retired in 1976.

The 90-minute service drew dozens of Royal's former players and coaching friends and rivals, including former Arkansas coach Frank Broyles, a close friend, and former Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer, a fierce rival toward the end of Royal's career. Former Heisman Trophy running back Earl Campbell, who Royal recruited to Texas, former Texas A&M Heisman winner John David Crow and former Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum also attended.

"It didn't matter if you were a starter or on the fifth team, he loved you," said James Street, quarterback of Texas' 1969 national championship team.

CLASS 2A/3A REGULAR SEASON WRAP-UP

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

Greenwood's Kam Williams beats the Snyder defense down the sideline for his second touchdown Friday night at J.M. King Memorial Stadium. The Rangers begin the Class 3A Division II playoffs against Clint this week.

Area teams make light of overcoming obstacles

By Oscar LeRoy
oleroy@mrt.com

It was an up-and-down year for area football programs in Class 3A and 2A as injuries probably grabbed most of the headlines away from standout performances.

Greenwood, Big Spring, Andrews, Stanton and Coahoma all suffered injuries along the way, but only Greenwood and Andrews overcame them to make the postseason.

Whether a team made the playoffs or not, each coach said they were proud of their team's efforts. While two will look forward to playing at least one more game, three more look forward to next season. Let's take a look at each team and review their season.

GREENWOOD

Record: 7-3, 3-2 in District 4-3A (3rd)
Key wins: Sweetwater on Oct. 19; Big Spring on Nov. 2; Snyder on Nov. 9
Key players: QB Kam Williams (2,077 yards passing, 20 TDs; 1,050 yards rushing, 18 TDs; RB Braydin Moreland (494 yards rushing, 9 TDs; 274 yards receiving, 4 TDs); LB Logan Day (98 tackles, 4.5 sacks); DE Rickey Harcrow (62 tackles, 7.5 sacks)
Coach Shad Hanna on the 2012 season: "I was really pleased. Coming into this district was really tough, and I knew we would have to play really good to have a shot at the playoffs. I think we got better every week and had some stumbles along the way, but we learned from them. Besides one half of football (against Monahans), I thought we played pretty dang good."
Wrapping up 2012: The season began with two consecutive shutout victories against Kermit and Fort Stockton before losing to state-ranked Shallowater by 28 points. The Rangers bounced back to win the next two to close out non-district play on a good note. Along the way, the Rangers suffered a few injuries and some personnel changes, but the team kept it together enough for district play, that included losses to No. 2-ranked Abilene Wylie and perennial 3A power Monahans, while getting key wins at Sweetwater and Big Spring, and then clinching a playoff spot last week with a 53-39 home victory.
Looking ahead to the postseason: The Rangers begin the Class 3A Division II playoffs against Clint this week, and Hanna likes where his Rangers are on the bracket. If the Rangers get by the Lions, they would face either Perryton or Lubbock Estacado. They would also avoid playing either Shallowater or Monahans again until the state quarterfinals if they get that far. Hanna said the key for his Rangers is to play well and play like they know how.

ANDREWS

Record: 6-4, 3-2 in District 2-3A (Tied for 2nd)
Key wins: Lubbock Cooper on Oct. 12; Seminole on Nov. 9
Key players: QB Jase Hammack, WR Tadarius Ridge, LB Garrett Bawcom
Coach Ralph Mason on the 2012 season: "You would like to see your team improve one week to the next, get better as a team and all those clichés you hope for as a coach. But these kids have really done that week by week. Each week, I have seen them buying into what we're doing as a team. The injury to Shane (Dolgener) set us back, but our kids rallied around Jase. It took a little

Hammack helps Andrews overcome slow start to put team in playoffs

By Oscar LeRoy
oleroy@mrt.com

Jase Hammack wasn't too surprised when his team fell behind 27-0 to Seminole last Friday. After all, Andrews has been a slow-starting team this year and Hammack knows that the Mustangs are very capable of making a comeback.

As it turns out, the sophomore starting quarterback for the Mustangs was right as Andrews finished the first half strong and then scored 35 second-half points to leave Seminole's Wigwam Stadium with a 49-33 victory and a playoff spot in hand.

"We had to get into the playoffs," Hammack said. "We had been down before in games, and there was no doubt we could win the game. We were down 21-0 against Lubbock Cooper and came back. We always start off dead and then come back."

Hammack

But Hammack was not only a prophet in the way his team came back; he was a big reason for it as he was 15-of-18 passing for 256 yards with four touchdowns and no interceptions. Hammack also added 92 yards rushing and two touchdowns on 14 carries.

For his performance, Hammack is the Reporter-Telegram's Area Football Player of the Week.

"He played big on Friday night," said Andrews coach Ralph Mason of his young quarterback. "He grew up as a quarterback and made some nice plays. I think he realized his importance on the field and that he needed to make some plays on the field to get the team going, and he did."

Hammack has come a long way from that late September evening in Big Spring when he was thrust into the starting position when Shane Dolgener went down with a season-ending knee injury. It was an unenviable position for Hammack and his inexperience showed at times.

But as he got more varsity game experience and the team began to rally around him, Hammack grew as a quarterback and his confidence also began to grow.

"Everything has slowed down for me. It's amazing how much," Hammack said.

So when it came down to winning a game and making the playoffs, Hammack knew what he

Garrett's emphasis on ball security makes its mark on Romo

By Tom Orsborn
San Antonio Express-News

IRVING — As a former NFL quarterback, Dallas Cowboys coach Jason Garrett has a unique appreciation for Tony Romo's uncanny ability to turn what should be a loss into a gain.

"Having played the position; I know what a melee that whole thing feels like," said Garrett, referring to a collapsing pocket. "These guys are all around you, and you're thinking, 'Where the hell am I?' You feel like you're going the wrong way.

"But he just has this great poise where he can feel what the heck's going on, keeps his eyes up and can see down the field. It's pretty unique."

It can also be pretty dangerous. Far too often early in his career, Romo's improvisation would lead to turnovers. But thanks in part to Garrett's constant emphasis on ball security, he's been able to dart, dodge and duck his way through defenders recently while protecting the ball.

A great example occurred late in the third quarter of Sunday's 38-23 win over Philadelphia.

With his team trailing by seven and the season on the line, Romo escaped Eagles pass rushers Fletcher Cox, Jason Babin and Cullen Jenkins in tight quarters to hit Miles Austin for a 25-yard gain on third-and-five from the Dallas 39-yard line.

Three plays later, Romo threw a 30-yard touchdown pass to a diving Dez Bryant to tie it 17-17.

None of it would have been possible if Romo had carelessly held the ball away from his body as he did earlier in his career.

"We harped on it a lot with him," Garrett said. "You practice how you hold the ball. You can make that part of who you are. He's really gotten good at that."

It showed Sunday.

"That play everyone talks about (against the Eagles), twice he climbed the pocket and protected (the ball by holding it close to his body)," Garrett said. "That's really a of Royal's sang "Healing Hands of Time." Nelson sang the same song for the Royal and his wife Edith in their home after their daughter Marian died in 1973.

Texas coach Mack Brown, who became very close to Royal since taking over the Longhorns program in late 1997, recounted the lessons Royal taught. The first came when Brown was coaching at Tulane and Royal was among a group of advisers brought in to evaluate the program.

The others told him everything would be fine. Royal told him "Boy, get out of here as fast as you can." Brown listened and soon bolted for North Carolina.

When Brown took the Texas job, Royal told Brown he had to repair a fractured support base, develop new ties with Texas high school coaches and to learn to shrug off criticism.

"One other thing," Brown said Royal told him. "You've got to win all the damn games."

Brown led Texas to the 2005 national championship, its first since Royal retired.

Broyles, whose top-ranked team lost to No. 2 Texas in the "Game of the Century" in 1969, called Royal a great friend. The coaches both announced their retirement after facing each other in the 1976 season finale, a Texas win. Broyles said the families often vacationed in Mexico together.

"We never talked football. It was always golf and family," Broyles said. "He was one of the greatest coaches of all time."

Switzer, who had a bitter rivalry with Royal in the final seasons before Royal retired, attended the service with current Oklahoma athletic director Joe Castiglione.

Switzer recalled how Royal had Texas assistant Emory Ballard call him in 1970 to help the Sooners install the wishbone offense.

"Darrell did something for us no other coach had ever have done and I don't think I would have done," Switzer said. "I was surprised at the time that he did it ... I was an assistant coach at that time and I hadn't (made him mad) yet. That goes back to what kind of guy he was and person he was."

Royal also was a veteran of the Army Air Corps and his widow was presented with a U.S. flag by the University of Texas Army ROTC. When the Longhorn band struck up "The Eyes of Texas" for Royal for the final time, Edith Royal stood clutching the flag with her right hand raised in the "Hook 'em Horns" salute.

It marked the first time the Bobcats have won two straight since taking the final game of the 2010-11 season and the first of last season.

Trevor Ariza scored 19 points for the Wizards, who fell to 0-6.

George Hill scored 18 points and Paul George had 12 points and nine rebounds to lead the Pacers, who have lost four of the last five.

Indiana went on a 9-0 run in the fourth and pulled to 74-72 with 1:02 left in the game. Neither team scored again.

NETS 114
CAVALIERS 101

Brook Lopez added 23 points for the Nets, who opened a 20-point lead at home for the third straight game, but this time barely let up.

The Bobcats beat the Cavaliers for the sixth time in eight meetings after losing nine in a row, mostly during the LeBron James era.

Anderson Varejao scored a career-high 35 points and grabbed 18 rebounds for the Cavaliers.

The Cavs wrapped up a six-game, coast-to-coast trip and played much of the game with the urgency of a team that wanted to be home.

They haven't played there since Nov. 2, their second game of the season.

Cleveland dropped the final four games of the trip to finish 1-5.

'Basic' paying off for Aggies on 'O'

By Brent Zwerneman
San Antonio Express-News

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M receiver Malcome Kennedy's game-winning catch on Saturday in a 29-24 upset of then-No. 1 Alabama gave A&M fans a sense of déjà vu.

"Just a basic corner route," Kennedy said Tuesday in snagging a perfectly arced pass from Johnny Manziel.

A little more than a month earlier at Ole Miss, Manziel had connected with Ryan Swope for a game-winning touchdown — also on the left side of the end zone.

"He hit me on the same play," Kennedy said, grinning. "It's just a basic play."

Through 10 games, "basic" has been part of the beauty of the No. 8 Aggies' offense under first-year coach Kevin Sumlin and coordinator Kliff Kingsbury, compared to the previous West Coast offense of then-coach Mike Sherman, who arrived at A&M in 2007 after a decade in the NFL.

"Coach Sherman had a very, very complex system — he used the NFL system," said Kennedy, whose Aggies play host to nonconference foe Sam Houston State on Saturday. "It would take (some) players years to learn the schemes and how to fit places. Coach Sumlin and coach Kingsbury explained their system and we got it in, I promise you, about three or four days."

The no-huddle Aggies are on pace to smash the Southeastern Conference total offense record in A&M's first year in the league. The 1995 Florida Gators under Steve Spurrier hold the current mark at 534.4 yards per game. The Aggies are averaging 545.4, and Manziel is among the leading candidates for the Heisman Trophy.

"Half the time we didn't cover the gaps right or cover the right man," Alabama linebacker C.J. Mosley said of combating A&M. "When you do that, they're going to make plays."

Sounds complex — but in reality the Aggies keep it simple.

"That's by design," Sumlin said. "We're better off having 11 guys knowing what to do on offense and the guys we're playing against knowing what we're going to do, than having two or three guys (on offense) knowing exactly what we're going to do, and it being real fancy or complicated."

Sumlin also cited the NCAA rule limiting coach and player interaction to 20 hours a week.

"In the NFL there's a lot more time," Sumlin said. "You have to use your time wisely ... and it's hard to do that with a real thick playbook."

In fact, the Aggies don't even own a playbook.

"It's something for someone to pick up and put on the Internet," Sumlin said.

Kingsbury added that such a philosophy also stems from playing under former Texas Tech coach Mike Leach, who sharpened the Air Raid offense with head coach Hal Mumme at Kentucky in the late 1990s and later brought it to Lubbock.

"It's a belief that if you can get them to play faster and not think as much and let them use their natural abilities the best they can, then you're going to have a better product," Kingsbury said. "We'd have so many repetitions and (Leach) would say, 'They're going to know it's coming and they're still not going to be able to stop you.'"

A&M linebacker Jonathan Stewart knows the feeling from every day of practice.

"Their play calls and terminology are a lot shorter compared to the West Coast offense coach Sherman had," Stewart said. "That's what allows them to go so fast, because the signals are so much shorter and everything is so much more simplistic."

But that simplicity doesn't cross the line of scrimmage, Stewart said.

"They're going so fast you can't really listen to what they're saying on offense, you just have to make sure you're communicating your calls," Stewart explained. "If you're focused on what they're saying and not what your guys are doing, you're going to be giving up a lot of points on defense."

And receivers like Kennedy are loving every second of all the scoring.

"You don't have to think as much," Kennedy said. "Thinking slows you down. This offense helps us to clear our thoughts, and just go out there and make plays."

Jason Day lifts PGA Tour to victory

Associated Press

HENDERSON, Nev. — Jason Day beat Stacy Lewis with birdie on the second hole of a playoff to lift the PGA Tour past the LPGA Tour on Tuesday in the Wendy's 3-Tour Challenge.

Day's drive stopped on a cart path, and the Australian hit a 95-yard approach to 5 feet to set up the winning birdie.

"Actually, I had no idea where it finished," Day said. "And I was very fortunate to finish on the cart path."

Lewis missed an 8-foot birdie putt.

"I thought it was pretty straight," said Lewis, the LPGA Tour player of the year and a four-time winner this season, "but it kind of moved a little left on me."

After the teams finished at 19 under in regulation at Rio Secco Golf Club, Nick Watney and Cristie Kerr — coming off a victory Sunday in Mexico in the Lorena Ochoa Invitational — parred the par-4 18th hole to force a second extra hole.

Watney holed a 45-foot birdie putt on the final hole in regulation to force the playoff.

Davis Love III also played for the PGA Tour, and Natalie Gulbis completed the LPGA Tour lineup.

The Champions Tour trio of Bernhard Langer, Fred Funk and Tom Lehman finished six strokes back.

Only the two best scores on a hole from the three-player teams counted in the total.

Kerr helped the LPGA rally, birdieing Nos. 14-17.

"The women went 14 under on the back nine, but Nick holed a great, great putt to tie it," Day said. "Nick and I birdied the 18th and Davis birdied the 17th. Everybody won this as a team."

Day led all players with nine birdies, while Watney and Lewis each made eight, and Kerr had seven. Lewis and Kerr each had five of their birdies on the back nine holes for the LPGA team, which trailed the PGA Tour team by five shots after nine holes. Gulbis had the lone eagle, holing a 30-yard chip on the par-5 15th.

"Stacy started making a lot of birdies and Natalie had that chip-in on the 15th, and that got them going," Love said. "They got hot on the back nine."

The PGA Tour team earned $500,000, the LPGA Tour got $270,000, and Champions Tour $230,000.

The PGA Tour won for the ninth time in the 21-year event. The Champions Tour has seven titles and the LPGA five. The event raised $3,442,300 for the Dave Thomas Foundation for Adoption.

NO. 21 MICHIGAN ST. 67
NO. 7 KANSAS 64

ATLANTA — Keith Appling scored 19 points, including a brilliant drive with 13.5 seconds left, and No. 21 Michigan State rebounded from a season-opening loss with a 67-64 upset of No. 7 Kansas on Tuesday night.

The Jayhawks (1-1) led 59-54 with 5 minutes remaining, showing signs of taking control in a game that was tight all the way. But Michigan State (1-1) rebounded behind its brilliant guards.

Freshman Gary Harris scored 18 points, including back-to-back baskets that sparked an 8-0 run. Down the stretch, it was all Appling.

He confused the Kansas defense playing off a screen, winding up with an open 3-pointer with 1:35 remaining that pushed Michigan State to a 65-61 lead. Ben McLemore converted a three-point play, but Travis Releford missed a potential tying 3 at the buzzer.

Elijah Johnson led Kansas with 16 points.

Kansas center Jeff Withey, who played so well in last season's NCAA tournament, wasn't much of a factor. He was held to eight points and seven rebounds, along with four turnovers.

NO. 5 MICHIGAN 77
CLEVELAND STATE 47

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Tim Hardaway Jr. had 17 points and six rebounds, and Michigan advanced to the semifinals of the NIT Season Tip-Off with a victory over Cleveland State.

It was the third straight victory by at least 30 points for the Wolverines (3-0), who shot 51 percent against a Cleveland State (2-1) team coming off an overtime win the day before.

Nik Stauskas scored 15 points, and Trey Burke added 12 points and seven assists for Michigan, which broke off a 29-5 run to finish the first half for a 42-14 lead at the break.

Anton Grady led the Vikings with 15 points.

Michigan was 25 of 40 from 3-point range in its first two games but only 9 of 24 Tuesday.

NO. 14 MISSOURI 91
ALCORN 54

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Phil Pressey scored 21 points and Laurence Bowers added 14 — all in the second half — to help Missouri rout Alcorn State.

After a rough first half, the Tigers (2-0) pulled away from the Braves. Missouri made just nine of its 39 attempts before the break and held a seven-point halftime advantage thanks to Pressey's deep 3-pointer with three seconds left.

Bowers hit three 3-pointers in the second half to help Missouri take command. The Tigers used an 18-3 run after the half to blow the game open.

LeAntwan Luckett scored 14 points and Anthony Nieves added 13 for Alcorn State (1-1).

NO. 23 CONNECTICUT 67
VERMONT 49

STORRS, Conn. — Shabazz Napier scored 13 points and freshman Omar Calhoun added 12 to lead Connecticut over Vermont.

Holy Cross transfer R.J. Evans added 11 points and Tyler Olander had nine points and nine rebounds for UConn (2-0), which was playing its home opener after returning from Germany and an upset win over Michigan State last Friday in the Armed Forces Classic.

Luke Apfeld led Vermont (1-1) with nine points.

UConn's smothering defense made the difference in this one. The Huskies held Vermont to 30 percent shooting and just 15 baskets after limiting the Spartans to 37.5 percent on Friday.

NO. 24 CINCINNATI 102
MVSU 60

CINCINNATI — Sean Kilpatrick scored 20 points and Cheikh Mbodj had four of Cincinnati's seven blocks to help lead the Bearcats over Mississippi Valley State.

The Bearcats (2-0) took control with a 23-4 run in the first half that featured a pair of 3-pointers by Cashmere Wright. The point guard had all of his 11 points in the take-control half.

JaQuon Parker added 13 points for the Bearcats, who shot 53.7 percent and dominated the boards 51-25. Cincinnati had its highest point total since a 105-69 win over North Carolina A&T on Dec. 30, 2005, under interim coach Andy Kennedy.

Davon Usher and Darryl Marshall scored 13 points apiece for MVSU (0-2).

NO. 9 DUKE 75
NO. 3 KENTUCKY 68

ATLANTA — Seth Curry scored 23 points and No. 9 Duke held off a furious comeback by No. 3 Kentucky, beating the defending national champions 75-68 Tuesday night in the first matchup between the storied programs since 2001.

Duke (1-1) appeared to be in control, even with Mason Plumlee on the bench in foul trouble. The Blue Devils ripped off a 13-3 run, capped by Rasheed Sulaimon's 3-pointer that made it 58-44 with 9 1/2 minutes remaining.

But Kentucky (1-1) wasn't done, rallying like the defending champ even though this is essentially a whole new team. The Wildcats outscored Duke 17-6 over the next six minutes and actually had a chance to tie it.

Julius Mays missed a 3-pointer with the Blue Devils clinging to a 64-61 lead.

Curry made sure youthful Kentucky didn't get any closer. He schooled freshman guard Archie Goodwin on a drive that essentially clinched the win.

NORTHWESTERN 79
TEXAS SOUTHERN 49

EVANSTON, Ill. — Northwestern senior guard Drew Crawford's hot start sparked the Wildcats, as his game-high 20 points, all in the first half, propelled them to a 79-49 win in their season opener against Texas Southern on Tuesday night.

Crawford scored 5 seconds into the game off the opening tip and never let up, hitting 8 of 9 shots in the first half including four 3-pointers.

The Wildcats' defense pressured Texas Southern (0-2) the entire game, aided by five players 6-foot-8 or taller which limited the Tigers' effectiveness in the post. Texas Southern failed to crack double digits until forward Aaron Clayborn's layup with 3:15 left in the first half, but that barely put a dent in Northwestern's 40-11 lead.

Ten players scored for Northwestern, led by Crawford and freshman Kale Amrahamson, who added 15 points including two deep 3-pointers that brought the fans at Welsh-Ryan Arena to their feet.

NORTH TEXAS 74
LAMAR 59

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Tony Mitchell had 18 points and 10 rebounds, and North Texas used a big second-half run to beat Lamar 74-59 on Tuesday night in a consolation game in the NIT Season Tip-Off.

The Mean Green led just 45-41 with 14:49 remaining, but Mitchell's 3-pointer keyed a 12-0 run, and North Texas eventually pushed the lead to 70-48 before coasting the rest of the way.

Alzee Williams added 17 points, and Chris Jones had 15 points and seven assists for the Mean Green (1-2), who lost to Division II Alabama-Huntsville in the tournament's opening round.

Donnell Minton-scored 15 points to lead Lamar (0-2), which lost to Kansas State in the opening round. Rhon Mitchell added 13 points as the defending Southland Conference tournament champions committed 23 turnovers and made only one 3-pointer.

WOMEN

NO. 1 BAYLOR 85
NO. 6 KENTUCKY 51

WACO — Brittney Griner scored 27 points with eight rebounds and No. 1 Baylor overwhelmed sixth-ranked Kentucky 85-51 on Tuesday night.

Odyssey Sims added 18 points and Destiny Williams had 14 points and 12 rebounds for the defending national champion Lady Bears, who have won 42 games in a row. They play fourth-ranked Stanford in Hawaii on Friday.

After unfurling their 2012 national championship banner before the game, the Lady Bears (2-0) went on to build a 46-19 halftime lead against the defending SEC champions who returned four starters.

A'dia Mathies, the reigning SEC player of the year, had 12 points on 3-of-18 shooting for Kentucky (1-1).

Griner missed her first two shots, but the 6-foot-8 All-American then made 11 in a row. She also had five blocked shots and three steals.

From 1C

had to do. It all started with a 50-yard touchdown pass to Yahir Cuevas midway through the second quarter to get Hammack and the Mustangs jump-started.

"As soon as we scored that first touchdown, we knew we were ready to play," Hammack said.

Not only were the receivers getting open and making plays for him, but Hammack said the offensive line was doing a great job of blocking and protecting for him.

"They really blocked for me," he said. "No one from Seminole even touched me back there, and everyone was able to make plays on offense."

Hammack knows that he still has plenty of room for improvement, but after overcoming an early learning curve, he's ready to help lead the Mustangs (6-4) into the Class 3A Division I playoffs against Borger (2-8). The bi-district game is set for 1 p.m. Saturday at Lubbock's Jones AT&T Stadium.

"It's an honor to be able to play as a team in the playoffs as we didn't get to go last year," Hammack said. "Borger is going to be a tough team and their record doesn't say how good they are. They want this as much as we do. We need to have a great start. We're a great second-half team but we've got to come out ready to play and hit harder than they hit us."

Even if Hammack and the Mustangs fall behind early, they've got the confidence to bounce back. After all, they have done it before.

Other notable performances from last week:

■ Greenwood QB Kam Williams had another big-time performance to lead the Rangers to a 53-49 victory over Snyder as the senior had 228 yards passing with a touchdown and an interception, to go with 216 yards rushing with five touchdowns.

■ Midland Christian RB Justin Fender rushed for 262 yards and three touchdowns on 29 carries in a 46-21 victory over Waco Reicher. Teammate Jade Tamplin added 117 yards and one TD on 13 carries.

■ Rankin spread back Dalton Michum helped Rankin roll to an 88-42 victory over Garden City with 284 yards rushing and eight touchdowns on 30 carries, and he was 2-of-5 passing for two touchdowns and one interception.

time but we were able to get right back on track."

Wrapping up 2012: The Mustangs started the season very promising with three victories, but then they lost starting QB Dolgener to a knee injury in the first half of a loss at Big Spring on Sept. 21 and that set the team back. The Mustangs lost to Lubbock High the following week, but then after their bye they opened district with an upset victory at Lubbock Cooper. As Hammack started getting comfortable as the starter, so did the Mustangs, who clinched a playoff spot with a come-from-behind 49-33 victory over Seminole in the regular season final.

Looking ahead to the postseason: Mason said his kids need to realize that being in the playoffs is a special experience and should also realize the importance of what they've achieved. The Mustangs should be proud as many people picked Andrews to be in the bottom of the 2-3A standings at the beginning of the year. But despite a major loss in Dolgener, the Mustangs rebounded and will open the Class 3A Division I playoffs with Borger. If they get past Borger, the road gets extremely tougher as the likely opponent in the regional round would be No. 2 Abilene Wylie.

Key wins: Midland Christian on Sept. 7; Andrews on Sept. 21

Key players: QB Tobyn Tannehill, WR/S/K Devin Roberson, RB Michael Oliva

Coach Phillip Ritchey on the on 2012 season: "It was a lot better this year than last year. I think the level of football was much higher. It was a tough district, and we were playing with a lot of young kids because of injuries. Certainly don't want to make excuses but when you have Tobyn, Devin and a few of our linemen banged up, it certainly put us in a bind."

Wrapping up 2012: Through the non-district portion of their schedule, the Steers were playing about as good as any team in West Texas, especially in the wins over Midland Christian and Andrews. But then injuries started to creep in, especially after a very physical game against Abilene Wylie to start district play. Because of those injuries, that forced the Steers to play more younger players than originally intended. Ritchey said the team wound up playing with only three senior starters on each side of the ball at the end of the year. Unfortunately for the Steers, injuries and youth proved to be too much to overcome against some of the senior-laden teams in the district.

Looking ahead to 2013: With so many young players getting experience, and the return of standouts Tannehill and Roberson, Ritchey said he's excited about the future of the program. The Steers made a lot of improvement from an 0-10 season in 2011 and will look to take the next step forward in 2013.

STANTON

Record: 4-6, 2-3 in District 3-2A, Division II (4th)

Key win: Coahoma on Oct. 12

Key players: RB Tim Anderson, QB K.J. Glaspie, WR/DB/K Andres Chavez

Coach John Peterson on the 2012 season: "It definitely didn't turn out the way we wanted to because of injuries and other obstacles, but our kids performed very well and their heart, desire and their workouts were unmatched."

Wrapping up 2012: The Buffaloes suffered through inconsistent play at times, as well as key injuries along the way that derailed a promising season. The Buffaloes began district play on a good note with a close win over rival Coahoma, but then the Buffaloes lost Chavez for the year with a broken collarbone in the loss at Crane. They would lose two more district games before closing out district with a win over Reagan County.

Looking ahead to 2013: Because of the injuries, some young players got experience and that should bode well for the future. The Buffaloes also expect to have Anderson and Glaspie back next year. And with 2A adding a fourth playoff spot next year, Peterson said that extra incentive should motivate his team in playing in what should be another tough district schedule.

COAHOMA

Record: 2-8, 1-4 in District 3-2A, District 3-2A Division II (tied for 5th)

Key win: Sonora on Oct. 19

Key players: QB/RB Tanner Ruiz, RB T.J. White, QB/DB Braxton Iden

Wrapping up 2012: Injuries derailed what could have been a promising season for the Bulldogs. The injuries started even before the regular season began with the season-ending knee injury to Aaron Acevedo. As the season went on, it appeared like the Bulldogs were losing a player a week to an injury, which baffled and frustrated head coach Trey Gardner. But despite the injuries, the Bulldogs managed to stay competitive and even went on the road to beat preseason district favorite Sonora, 27-21 in overtime. Gardner frequently commented on how proud he was with the effort of his kids, who most were dealing with some kind of ailment at one point in the season. But the injuries proved to be too much to overcome in a very competitive district, forcing the Bulldogs to miss the playoffs for the first time in Gardner's three seasons at the school.

Looking ahead to 2013: The Bulldogs will lose a few seniors to graduation but the injuries forced younger players to get into varsity action before they were ready. Iden and promising young player Caige Miller should return, as well, which should help in the rebuilding process for next season.

practiced act, and it's really a tribute to him."

After a rough start in which he committed 15 turnovers through the first seven games, including a league-high 13 interceptions, Romo has been turnover-free the last two games — a first for this season — while posting ratings of 109.3 and 122.1.

"The ball matters, obviously," Romo said. "And if you turn the ball over the times that we did in (losses) to Chicago and New York, you're fighting a big uphill battle obviously."

Romo said there's a fine line between maintaining ball security and playing with too much caution.

"You can't play scared," he said. "You've got to be able to cut when you feel it and react."

Garrett understands this and doesn't want to stifle Romo's creativity, even though he knows the odds of turning the ball over increase when No. 9 improvises.

"It's a little bit of a balancing act," Garrett said. "We never want to stifle him to the point where he's not being who he is ... If you are strangling him and saying, 'You can't do that and you can't do this,' you're taking away the essence of what makes him a really special player."

Writing skills yield long-term dividends

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: I am delighted that you still offer the booklet "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." When I was in my early teens, I ordered this booklet from you. It taught me not only how to write letters, but it gave me confidence to write — letters and more.

I have continued to write letters throughout my life. My skills, honed at such a young age, helped me in completing the often required writing during college and in my working life. I am called upon to write many letters, reports and memoranda.

I am always complimented on my style and form, as well as the speed with which I am able to produce the needed documents. Although I often use email for communication, my writing skills serve me well. I now do some creative writing as well, having built on the skills I attained through your booklet.

Most important of all, it is a wonderful feeling to have stayed connected with friends and family over the years. A letter is an enduring reminder of love and friendship — one that exists far longer than a phone call. I owe so much to the booklet I ordered from Dear Abby years ago. Thank you! — KATHERINE IN STOCKTON, CALIF.

DEAR KATHERINE: Thank you for your beautiful letter and for letting me know how helpful my booklet has been for you. Letter-writing and emailing can be difficult for many people who aren't used to organizing their thoughts on paper or while viewing their computer screen.

Some don't know what to say, while others are afraid they'll say the wrong thing. But anyone can write a letter or email by following a few basic rules. My booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," contains not only the fundamentals, but also examples for almost every occasion. It can be ordered by sending your name and mailing address, plus check or money order for $7 (U.S. funds), to Dear Abby — Letters Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, IL 61054-0447. Shipping and handling are included in the price. With the holiday season upon us and people sending greetings and thank-yous through the end of the year, this is the perfect time to send a handwritten letter or a well-written email.

While letter-writing or emailing may always be a chore to some people, there are occasions when the most appropriate, sensitive and elegant means of communicating one's thoughts is by the written word.

DEAR ABBY: Why don't men wear their wedding rings? I can understand if they work in construction or something. But I see men at my medical office wearing suits, and while they wait for their appointments they talk about their wives, with no ring in sight. What gives? — SINGLE AND WONDERING IN KANSAS

DEAR SINGLE AND WONDERING: What "gives" is that some men are not comfortable wearing jewelry, and their wives don't insist upon it.

The bidding:

2♠	Pass	4♠	Pass

Opening lead King of ♣

Study the diagram above and decide — what card is key to successful defense against South's four-spade contract?

East's double of North's Stayman inquiry is lead-directing and is also a penalty double. Vulnerable, it promises at least a five-card suit headed by three of the top five honors, or two of the top three.

West obligingly led the king of clubs and East overtook so as to score three club tricks for the defense. Even if South had a dead minimum no-trump opening bid, all the high cards were now accounted for, so the only hope East had was that a trump trick could be set up. Therefore, after overtaking the king of clubs with the ace and cashing two more clubs, East continued with another club. West obligingly uppercut declarer's combined trump holding by ruffing with the seven, forcing dummy to overruff with an honor. Now as long as East covered a trump honor when led from the table, there was no way for South to prevent East from scoring a trump trick for down one, thanks to West's mighty seven.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Wednesday, Nov. 14, 2012:

This year you express how unusually savvy you can be with your finances, though you might want to be more willing to take risks. You brainstorm easily with others, and you always seem to come up with more ideas as a result. Express your concern for a child or loved one. Allow your imagination to flow, and you will express a more resourceful side. You seem to drop words like "impossible" and "no" from your vocabulary, which creates more possibilities than you could have imagined. If you are single, you might fuss a lot as you spruce up for dates. Toss yourself into the excitement of the moment. If you are attached, most of your problems stem from misunderstandings. SAGITTARIUS always encourages you to take risks.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ Communicate an unusual idea, yet be willing to accept suggestions. A brainstorming session could be fruitful. The unexpected plays a large role in how events unfurl. You will respond in what might be considered a startling manner. Tonight: Nearly anything is possible.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ You might keep pushing the limit with a partner. A discussion about ideas could be more important than you realize. A friend confuses plans without meaning to. Relax and work with the changes, if you can. Note a sudden insight. Tonight: Dinner for two.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Others seek you out; try to remain responsive. Your imagination could take you in a new direction. Share some of these thoughts with a close associate. You could be surprised by this person's reaction. You can't predict what he or she will do. Tonight: Go with the program.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★ You might be unusually focused on your daily life. Somehow, someone shakes up the status quo, and you'll realize how accustomed you have become to a tried-and-true routine. Allow yourself to be uncomfortable and let some new elements into your life. Tonight: Get some R and R.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★★ Let your mind expand to other ways of thinking. You will notice the difference and be more positive as a result. A partner could surprise you with an idea, which might be hard to grasp. Your fiery personality emerges when facing the unexpected. Tonight: Let your hair down.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★ Stay centered, and know what you want. Take some time to get grounded before heading into what could be an unusually busy day. A partner continues to be vague. This fugue state is authentic, but there really isn't a reason for it. Give this person some space. Tonight: Order in.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Stay on top of your work, an important situation or simply the day's events. A friend or associate inadvertently could confuse plans or a conversation. You might decide to go off and do your own research in order to confirm what you are hearing. Tonight: Talk up a storm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★ Know that you could change your budget and priorities if you so choose. You might not be sure as to what your expectations are with a creative option or dynamic personality in your life. Think less and enjoy more. Tonight: Treat yourself well.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ You are energized, and you zoom right through any confusion. You'll come out on top, no matter what. Your impulsiveness, mixed with your ingenuity, carries you easily through any hassles. Tonight: Let the fun begin.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ Your intuition tells you that more information is coming. Remember to assume a passive stance. Though this trait is not innate to you, it could work. Your resourceful mind cannot be turned off, so note the ideas that inevitably come forward. Remain positive. Tonight: At home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ Your immediate concern goes from others' evaluation of your work or performance to simply letting go and being yourself. You can't push to the extent that you have without integrating some lighter and easier interactions. Tonight: A friend makes life far more appealing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Pull back and examine what is happening. Be careful not to make judgments or become triggered. Your eyes will open up to a new perspective, especially if you can accept responsibility for your side of the issue. Tonight: In the limelight.

US stocks fall in uneven trading; Home Depot soars

Associated Press

NEW YORK — U.S. stocks closed lower after uneven trading Tuesday as fears about the "fiscal cliff" and Greece tipped major indexes between gains and losses. A surge in Home Depot's stock prevented a steeper drop for the Dow Jones industrial average.

The Dow closed down closed down 58.90 points, or 0.5 percent, at 12,756.18. It would have been lower without support from Home Depot, whose stock jumped 3.6 percent after the big-box retailer beat expectations for its fiscal third-quarter earnings. Home Depot is benefiting from the gradual housing recovery and rebuilding efforts after superstorm Sandy. Home Depot rose $2.22 to $63.38.

Stocks had opened lower after European leaders postponed the latest aid package for Greece. The Dow turned positive in the first hour of trading and rose solidly through the morning, gaining as much as 83 points. Starting around 2 p.m., the average slid steadily into the red.

Other indexes also closed lower. The Standard & Poor's 500 index lost 5.50 points, or 0.4 percent, to 1,374.53. The Nasdaq composite index fell 20.37 points, or 0.7 percent, to 2,883.89.

Investors are trading against the backdrop of the "fiscal cliff," a set of U.S. government spending cuts and tax increases that will take effect automatically at the beginning of next year unless U.S. leaders reach a compromise before then.

Worries about the fiscal cliff pushed U.S. stocks to one of their worst weekly losses of the year last week after voters re-elected President Barack Obama and a deeply divided Congress. Obama met Tuesday with labor leaders and others who advocate higher taxes on the wealthy and want to protect health benefits for seniors and other government programs. Obama will meet with business leaders Wednesday.

"The longer we sit and do nothing" about the nation's fiscal issues, "the more this market is going to oscillate between positive 40 and negative 60, until we know what's going to happen next with all this uncertainty," said Craig Johnson, senior technical research strategist with Piper Jaffray & Co. in Minneapolis.

Johnson expects the S&P 500 will reach 1,550 in the next six months as investors get over their lingering wooziness from the Great Recession and companies understand better how government policy on taxes, health care and spending will affect them.

European stocks had been lower but rose after trading opened in New York. Benchmark indexes in France, Britain and Germany closed modestly higher.

Traders in Europe are concerned because finance ministers postponed $40 billion in desperately needed aid for Greece. The news surprised investors. A day earlier, there was word that leaders had prepared a "positive" report on Greece, making it appear likely that the aid would be released.

"It's a little bit like Groundhog Day," said Nicholas Colas, chief market strategist at ConvergEx Group, referring to the classic Bill Murray movie whose protagonist must relive the same day over and over. Until there is decisive news from Washington or Brussels, neither of which appears imminent, markets will remain vulnerable to short-term swings caused by headlines, Colas said.

The next major catalysts for a market move, Colas said, will be gauges of spending by consumers on Black Friday, the traditional shopping rush on the day after Thanksgiving.

Greece's neighbors decided to give the country two more years to meet its economic targets. They still disagree with the International Monetary Fund, another key lender, over how to manage the country's debt over the long term. Until lenders reach an accord, they can't release the billions that Greece needs to make upcoming payments.

IMF managing director Christine Lagarde said Greece should reduce its debt burden down to 120 percent of its economic output by 2020, the original target of 2020. But Jean-Claude Juncker, leader of the euro zone's finance ministers, said that the deadline would likely be changed to 2022. The lenders will meet again on Nov. 20.

The yield on the 10-year Treasury note slid to 1.59 percent from 1.64 percent late Friday as demand increased for ultra-safe investments. The U.S. bond market was closed on Monday in observance of the Veterans Day holiday.

Market movers

Microsoft plunged 3 percent after it announced the departure of Steven Sinofsky, who ran its Windows division. The unexpected move comes just weeks after Microsoft launched Windows 8, its first major overhaul in years of the operating system used on most of the world's computers. Microsoft fell 90 cents to $27.09.

Weatherford International dropped 15.9 percent after the oilfield services company reported revenue that was lower than analysts had been expecting. The company did not report full results because of accounting problems that have led it to revise its results from numerous periods. The stock fell $1.73 to $9.15.

Apparel chain operator TJX Cos., the parent of TJ Maxx and Marshalls, rose 2.7 percent after raising its full-year earnings forecast and reporting third-quarter revenue that exceeded analysts' expectations. The stock added $1.09 to $42.06.

Oil prices fall

The price of oil fell slightly Tuesday after the International Energy Agency predicted demand will grow at a slower pace into next year because of the sluggish global economy.

Benchmark oil dropped 19 cents to end at $85.38 per barrel in New York. Brent crude, which is used to price international varieties of oil, fell 81 cents to $108.26 per barrel in London.

The Paris-based agency lowered its forecast for fourth-quarter oil demand by 300,000 barrels per day to 90.1 million barrels. Its forecast for 2013 dropped 100,000 barrels per day to 90.4 million barrels per day. Meanwhile, global oil supplies increased 800,000 barrels per day to 90.9 million barrels per day in October, the agency said.

The IEA blamed the weak European economy for slowing demand for oil and energy products. Another factor in lower fourth-quarter demand is Superstorm Sandy, which disrupted oil imports and gasoline deliveries on the U.S. East Coast by knocking out power and flooding fuel terminals and refineries, the agency said.

Euro slips

The euro fell against the dollar Tuesday after finance ministers delayed $40 billion in aid for Greece.

The euro fell to $1.2705 in late trading Tuesday from $1.2714 late Monday. The British pound fell to $1.5874 from $1.5882.

The dollar fell to 79.41 Japanese yen from 79.46 Japanese yen.

The dollar rose to 1.0013 Canadian dollar from 99.93 Canadian cents.

In December contracts, gold fell $6.10, or 0.4 percent, to settle at $1,724.80 an ounce.
