Texas Solons Vote School Money Bill

Differing Versions Face Compromise

AUSTIN (AP) — The House and Senate each passed a $1 billion school finance bill Friday, including 7 percent cost-of-living raises for teachers, but vast differences remain to be compromised.

The Senate passed its version, 28-1, with only Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, dissenting. A few hours later the House, with virtually no debate, approved its bill, 125-8.

Rep. Hamp Atkinson, D-New Boston, chairman of the House Public Education Committee, attributed easy passage to acceptance of the bill by the Texas State Teachers Association as well as by school administrators.

Despite Gov. Bill Clements' objections to giving teachers more than a 5.1 percent cost-of-living increase, Republican legislators made no effort to cut the raises in the House bill.

"We would have been lucky to get 25 votes to cut the teacher pay schedule. If he (Clements) wants to get out front and show us the way, maybe we could get a few more votes," said Rep. Milton Fox, R-Houston.

A House-Senate conference committee probably will be appointed Monday to seek a compromise that majorities in each chamber and — hopefully — Clements can accept.

The big difference is the fact that the Senate bill includes $452 million that had been earmarked for covering school districts' revenue losses from the 1978 Tax Relief Amendment.

House members made reimbursement part of a separate bill implementing the amendment. The result is the House version of the school finance bill, taken together with the tax relief bill, is more generous to the school districts.

Atkinson said the Senate bill, in effect, gives no tax relief while the House bill does.

"I personally think we've got to get to the taxpayers something they can see and hold in their hands as tax relief," Atkinson said.

Bills Compared

The Senate bill totals $1.03 billion for 1980-81 while the House bill amounts to $1.1 billion. Atkinson said the House bill spends $25 million to $30 million more than is available and "we'd love to have an updated projection or an increased projection from the comptroller."

Before passing the bill, senators argued over just how much extra money teachers deserved.

"I know you'v heard a lot of talk about a 5.1 percent pay increase and why teachers should not be treated differently from state employees," said Sen. Pete Snelson, D-Midland.

Snelson successfully urged a 7 percent cost-of-living raise for teachers, saying they get smaller fringe benefits than state employees. The Senate Education Committee had gone along with Clem-

Bentsen Warns Tech Grads Of 'Tough, Competitive World'

By RUTHANNE BROCKWAY
Avalanche-Journal Staff

U.S. SEN. Lloyd Bentsen didn't promise the 2,000 Texas Tech graduates of 1979 a rose garden future at baccalaureate ceremonies Friday night.

Instead, he warned them the world is "tough and competitive" and that a diploma is no guarantee for success or happiness.

But he also noted that graduation is the mark of a person with perseverance who has succeeded in accomplishing a long-term objective and that quality can serve as a "springboard to opportunity."

Bentsen, who was suffering from laryngitis, began his graduation address light-heartedly, telling graduates, "I bring you in a commencement speaker what all graduating classes want — a speaker with laryngitis."

His brief address noted that graduates can no longer say, "I'm a student" and must instead establish a new identity.

For those wondering, "What am I going to do for the rest of my life?" Bentsen reassured them that he has had several careers — as an Army Air Corps member in World War II, a county judge at the age of 25, a U.S. representative at age 27 and a Houston businessman — and that changing careers can be an asset.

He recommended that graduates make perhaps a five-year plan for their lives, but he said, "If you lock yourself in, you may miss opportunities."

While Bentsen said graduation speakers typically laud a class as the smartest ever and tell students "the world hungers for your talent," he declined to do so.

"I don't intend to do that," he said. "I don't believe all that rhetoric and I don't think you do either."

Some 996,000 students will be graduating from colleges and univerities in the United States this month, he said, and all will be seeking a finite number of jobs. He also noted the problems of inflation and energy today.

But he said that "We are at peace with the world and ourselves." And he said there is no Vietnam war to mar the lives of today's graduates.

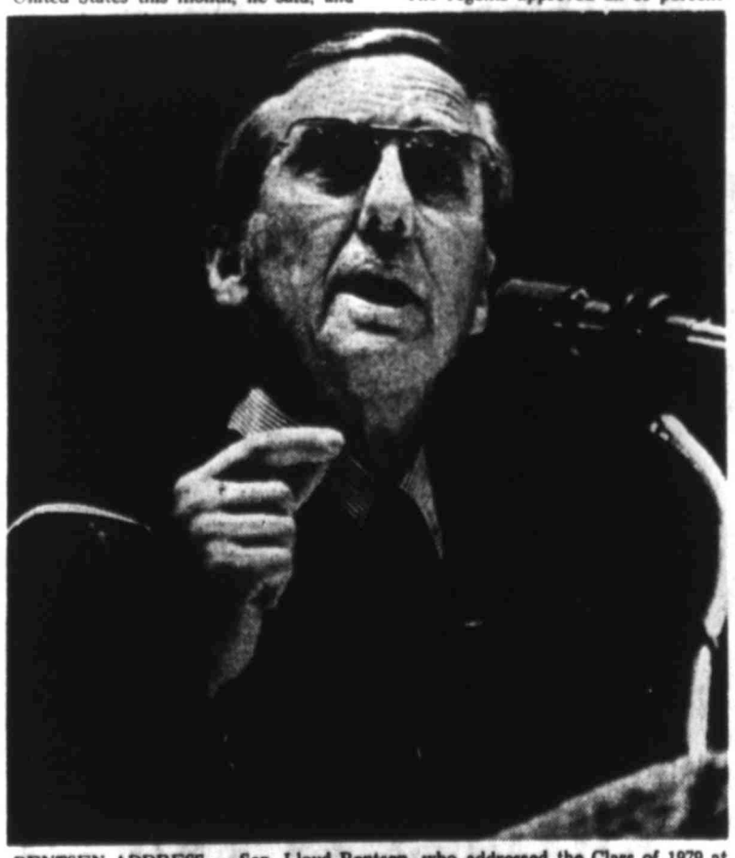

Despite the problems that do exist today, Bentsen said, the committment of Americans challenged by adversity can overcome any obstacles.

Although May 11, 1979, will remain an important day in the lives of graduates, Bentsen said the date should not mark the end of one's education.

"The day you cease to learn, you cease to grow," he said. And he also noted the philosophy of Mark Twain, who once wrote, "I never let my schoolin' interfere with my education."

U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, a Tech graduate, introduced Bentsen and drew applause from the audience in Municipal Coliseum when he said Bentsen is chairman of the Joint Economic Commission, which recently pointed the finger at the

Tech Dorm Residents To Face Higher Tab Next School Year

By RUTHANNE BROCKWAY
Avalanche-Journal Staff

RESIDENTS of high-rise dormitories at Texas Tech will be paying almost $200 more in the 1979-80 school year and other dormitory residents will be paying higher rates as well following action Friday by the university's Board of Regents.

In addition, all students, living on campus or off, will be assessed higher student service fees.

The regents approved an 11 percent increase in dorm rates for non-air conditioned residence halls and a 14 percent increase for air conditioned dorms.

The board also appointed new directors to the Texas Tech University Foundation and heard a report on what was called "very dangerous" legislation pending in Austin forbidding state employees from serving on foundations.

The school's three high-rise dorms, Chitwood, Weymouth and Coleman, which cost $1,365 this year, will cost $1,545 for the 1979-80 academic year. The rate applies to a double occupancy room and 20 meals per week. The cost of single occupancy will be an additional $140 per year, an increase of $20 over the previous single occupancy rate.

Dr. Cecil Mackey, university president, said increases in food, utilities and the minimum wage contributed to the higher cost of operating residence halls.

The student service fee, which was $2.25 per credit hour with a maximum of $27 per student per semester, was increased by 10 cents, raising it to $2.35 per credit hour with a maximum of $28 per student per semester.

State law sets a ceiling of $30 on such fees, which cover Tech's campus transportation system, KTXT-FM, The University Daily, counseling service, cultural events, band, chorus, recreation services such as intramurals, symphony orchestra and other student service items.

Regent Don Workman of Lubbock expressed concern over the increase, saying that married students or those working their way through school may be paying more for these services but having less time to participate in the programs sponsored by the fee.

"I had to work my way through school," he said, adding that he didn't participate in campus events as much as some of his peers. In his concern for students today in similar situations, he said, "I worry about pricing him (the working student) out of the market."

Board members requested that Mackey give a report to the board at its next meeting in August regarding the participation of students in activities funded by the student service fee. There also was discussion of making certain service fees optional.

The board also hiked the towing charged for vehicles illegally parked on campus from $12 to $20, due to increases in fees charged by the towing service.

Cranston Urges Carter To Dump Schlesinger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the Senate's No. 2 Democrat, said Friday that Energy Secretary James Schlesinger has bungled his job and that he and his principal lieutenants should be fired by President Carter at once.

Cranston, the assistant Democratic leader, called Schlesinger the president's "greatest political liability." He said the refusal of Congress to ratify the administration's standby gas rationing plan is a vote of no-confidence in Schlesinger.

At the White House, deputy press secretary Rex Granum declined comment on Cranston's statements.

Cranston is the seventh senator to call for Schlesinger's resignation or firing. All are Democrats.

"If anything, government credibility is less, public doubt and anger is greater and the oil and gas problem is worse than before this monstrous, costly, inefficient and terribly run bureaucracy was created and placed in the hands of Mr. Schlesinger," Cranston said.

He said Schlesinger has been unable "to deal with the incredibly difficult gasoline problem we face in California."

"Schlesinger has failed to carry out his primary responsibility to establish a system which permits the public to know with confidence whether oil companies are hiding supplies in the distribution system ...," the senator said.

Cranston, who is up for re-election in 1980, was asked to comment on Carter's complaint that the House members who voted to kill the standby rationing plan had put aside the needs of the nation and had been moved by purely parochial concerns.

"My first interest is the people of California on an issue like this," Cranston said. He said the Schlesinger plan would have hurt Californians and added, "I have to represent the people of California first."

He said that under Schlesinger, the Energy Department has been "ineffective, insensitive, and at times an embarrassment to the president and Congress."

Cranston cited Schlesinger's actions during the present gasoline shortage, and what he called the energy secretary's "over-commitment to nuclear fission, his neglect of the solar alternative, and his bungling of negotiations with Mexico for additional supplies of natural gas."

"It's time for President Carter to admit that we are losing the struggle that he called the moral equivalent of war —

Vegetable Fats' Link To Cancer Mulled Here

By FRANCES LOWE
A-J Family News Editor

MEDICAL RESEARCH by a team of scientists at Texas Tech indicates that some commonly held theories about heart disease and diet may actually promote cancer.

According to Dr. Shiang P. Yang, a nutritionist in the College of Home Economics at Tech, the polyunsaturated fats recommended to Americans as a preventative for heart disease may promote the development of certain kinds of cancer.

In his research with laboratory rats, Dr. Yang has found indications that a diet low in saturated fats, which frequently is recommended as a means of lowering the risk of heart disease, is related to a higher rate of cancer, especially breast cancer in female rats.

Yang, along with Dr. Ira Felkner, associate professor of biological sciences at Tech, and Dr. Harry F. Sproat, chairman of the pathology department at the university's school of medicine, have been researching the effects of diet on heart disease and cancer for the past four years.

Their research has been funded by the National Cancer Institutue, Best Foods Corp. and Texas Tech.

Dr. Yang noted that among the highly developed nations of the world, cancer and heart disease have become the primary causes of death, replacing such diseases as tuberculosis, influenza and pneumonia, which were widespread early in this century.

Among the underdeveloped nations of the world, the latter diseases continue to be leading causes of death. It is commonly assumed that the increase in incidence of cancer and heart disease are the result of the diet and lifestyle of the people of the more advanced nations.

Yang believes, however, that the relationship is more complicated than this, and that cancer and heart disease may be more directly related than previously has been thought.

His interest in the subject grew out of a report published in 1971 as the result of research conducted among veterans in hospitals on the West Coast. Researchers there set out to discover whether a diet higher in vegetable content would reduce the chance of heart disease.

The experimental group in this test was given a diet which consisted of half as much cholestoral and twice as much polyunsaturated fat as the control group.

At the end of 10 years, the researchers found that the experimental group had a much higher rate of cancer than the other group, indicating that the diet believed helpful in preventing heart disease seemed to have the opposite effect on cancer.

Some scientists felt that the results indicated the need for a change in recommended diet, but others felt that the findings were not sufficiently documented to

Cold Front To Depart Area; Warming Trend Predicted

Cool nights and mild days are forecast for the weekend on the South Plains, with a general warming trend expected Sunday through Wednesday.

The slow-moving cold front which produced sprinkles and an early morning chill Friday on the South Plains continued its eastward movement early this morning, and was expected to be out of the area by Sunday, when highs should near 80.

Temperatures should range into the 90s by Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service.

Lows should be in the mid 40s tonight climbing to the mid 60s Wednesday night.

No precipitation is expected until Tuesday and Wednesday, when scattered thunderstorms are possible for the eastern portions of the area.

Winds should be variable in direction at 5 to 15 mph through Sunday.

Friday's high was 70 in Lubbock, after an early morning reading of 46 degrees as the cold front moved through.

Showers, thunderstorms and hail accompanied a cold front across a big chunk of Texas Friday as North Texans shivered through another nippy springtime week.

The front was moving southeastward from a Longview-Laredo line and touched off the cool and rainy weather in Central, East and South Texas.

Forecasts called for more thunderstorms, ending across North Texas by nightfall. West Texas was due for partly cloudy skies and cooler temperatures, with scattered showers in South Texas.

A cold front stretching from the Great Lakes region to eastern Texas produced thunderstorms throughout the eastern half of the nation on Friday and caused some flooding in Texas.

Much of extreme eastern Texas was placed under a flash flood watch as the heavy rains continued.

Flooding was reported along the Navasota River east of Waco, Texas. Nearly 5 inches of rain fell on Lake Mexia in Texas, pushing water 7 feet over the spillway. The heavy rains are expected to bring the Navasota into flood stage on Saturday.

Thunderstorms developed near the cold front in Michigan, producing 70-mph winds that knocked down trees and power lines south of Kalamazoo. East of Kalamazoo, in Burlington, wind gusts of 90 mph were reported.

Heavy winds caused by the thunderstorms also caused damaged Thursday night in west-central Wisconsin. In addition, authorities reported that a tornado blew off the roof of a house in Tomah, Wis. No injuries were reported.

Meanwhile, a late-spring heat wave continued over the northeastern quarter of the nation. Readings in the 80s covered New York and southern New England and much of the lower Great Lakes.

Dry and cool air covered the western half of the nation. Temperatures remained in the 30s in a few places in northern Minnesota and North Dakota but most areas in the Plains had temperatures in the 50s.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 37 in Warroad, Mont., to 91 in McAllen, Texas.

Saturday's forecast calls for scattered thundershowers over most of the nation east of the Mississippi, with a few lingering over southern Louisiana and the Texas coast. Sunshine is expected over Florida and the rest of the nation.

Diesel Shortages Threaten Dire Economic Shortages

Diesel-fuel shortages are spreading across the country, endangering farm operations from Georgia to the Dakotas, coal mining in Montana and commercial fishing off the coast of Washington state.

Although not as visible as the long lines at gasoline stations in California, the diesel shortage could have a staggering economic impact.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland responded Friday by announcing that the Department of Energy would guarantee farmers 100 percent of their diesel-fuel needs. It necessary, he said, the government will order refineries to move diesel into agricultural areas.

"Any shortage of diesel fuel could significantly reduce the size of harvests, create a tight supply situation and result in serious market disruptions," Bergland said.

Farmers and farm organizations had been warning for weeks that diesel shortages could have a major impact on farm production. "We could have a real foul-up of our food production and distribution system," the agriculture commissioner of Georgia, Tommy Irvin, said before Bergland's announcement.

Farmers use diesel to run tractors and other big farm equipment. Excellent planting weather has compounded the problem in Georgia, one of the hardest-hit areas. Rain and cold weather have delayed field work in much of the Midwest, taking the pressure off diesel supplies.

However, there have been spot shortages attributed to distribution programs throughout the Midwest, and diesel suppliers have warned that the real crunch will come later, when farmers fire up irrigation pumps, which use up to 800 gallons of diesel a day.

The American Petroleum Institute, an industry group in Washington, said the diesel shortage, like the gasoline shortage, is rooted in reduced inventories of crude oil, said to be down 15 percent from last year.

Diesel fuel and home heating oil are distillate fuels. Earl Ross, a spokesman for the institute, said distillate supplies now stand at an "exceptionally low" 117 million barrels, down 14 percent from 1978.

The Carter administration has asked refiners to push distillate production now to build supplies of heating oil for next winter. "Obviously, this makes the gas situation worse, but diesel will probably improve markedly within the next couple of months," said Ross.

Diesel-fuel shortages are producing problems in several other areas, too. By guaranteeing diesel for farmers, the Department of Energy might be aggravating those problems.

There have been no reports of disruptions in the trucking industry, but the California Energy Commission reports a rash of complaints about truck stops refusing to sell fuel to drivers of diesel-powered automobiles.

The operators of the Colstrip Mine in eastern Montana, one of the nation's largest coal mines, said this week they are faced with immediate production cutbacks because of a lack of fuel for giant trucks and earth-moving equipment. "We have managed to find a few thousand gallons here, a few thousand gallons there. We need 10,000 gallons a day," said Chat Oliver, general manager at the mine.

In Washington state, Gov. Dixie Lee Ray said a critical shortage of diesel could endanger the commercial fishing industry in the Pacific Northwest. Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., went further. "We have fishing boats sitting idle out in Ballard and no prospects for obtaining fuel," he said Thursday.

And with mass transit ridership going up as gasoline becomes scarce, municipal and private bus systems also face a diesel crunch.

Robbery Charged Against City Men

Burglary charges were filed against three Lubbock men Friday.

Elbert Charles Whitewide, 29, of East Broadway Avenue and Quirt Avenue, No. 10, was charged with burglary of a habitation in a break-in at a 2701 22nd St. apartment in which firearms, a stereo and jewelry worth $900 were stolen.

Randall Eugene Wilson, 17, of Route 5, Box 161E, and Jimmy Lee White, 18, of 1629 16th St., No. 222, were charged with burglary in a March 4 break-in at Radio Shack at 8203 Indiana Ave. in which $1,200 worth of stereo equipment was stolen.

Ramiro Talamantez, 41, of 139 Emory St. was charged with theft in the reported April 25 theft of a truck in the 2100 block of Baylor Drive.

Adam Villesca, 19, and Marcus Villesca, 23, addresses unavailable, were charged with theft in the reported April 27 theft of a car from a Lubbock man.

Five People Killed, Three Wounded In Gas Explosion, Fire

SEARCH FOR MISSING — Firemen search rubble while others direct a hose Friday at the scene of a Philadelphia gas explosion and fire that leveled a tavern and a nearby building, killing five persons. (AP Laserphoto)

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Five persons died and three were seriously injured Friday afternoon in a gas explosion and fire that destroyed a tavern and a rowhouse, fire officials said.

City Fire Commissioner Joseph Rizzo said the body of an unidentified woman was removed from the debris of the collapsed buildings shortly after the explosion at 3:05 p.m.

A man's body was recovered shortly before 7 p.m. and the bodies of three people were brought out about 30 minutes later, witnesses said.

Firefighters continued to search the rubble with the aid of a giant crane and other heavy equipment.

An employee of the Philadelphia Gas Works was among the missing, said PGW spokesman John Kenley.

Eighteen persons were taken to area hospitals after the explosion leveled George's Bar and Restaurant in the city's Bridesburg section about two blocks from Interstate 95. George Martin, the owner of the tavern, was transferred to St. Agnes Burn Center in serious condition.

"All I saw was that big building and boom, then another big shot after it," said former state Rep. John Pisak, 65, who lives 10 houses from the corner tavern.

"Then the owner came out — George Martin. He's an ex-cop. He was all banged up, and they took him to the hospital," Pisak said.

A spokeswoman at Frankford Hospital said two victims, Gregory Williams and Donald Scott, were admitted in critical condition and taken to surgery.

Two gas mains meet in front of the tavern, Kenley said. "The question at this point is what caused the break. We feel certain it was not a leak. It had to be a break to release that much gas," he said.

Pisak said his wife was sitting on their front step about 2:45 p.m. when a bus driver stopped and told her to "hurry up and call the gas company." The driver apparently smelled gas.

Kenley said a gas company crew that had been working nearby was at the scene when the explosion occurred. The three-story building including the tavern and the rowhouse next door collapsed, while a second rowhouse was badly burned and windows were broken on most homes in the block.

Kenley said high-pressure grease was shot into the two mains to shut them off. Service in the area was expected to be restored by Saturday, he said.

"The explosion was tremendous. It sent glass and bricks flying all around," said Joseph Mesaros, who lives behind the tavern and was returning home when the blast occurred.

"I was outside with my husband, and suddenly, there was this big terrible noise and the bricks were falling in the garden," said Anna Dembeski, 63, who lives next to the wrecked rowhouses.

Mrs. Dembeski and Mesaros both said they smelled what might have been gas Friday morning.

Four men and a woman were hospitalized besides the bar owner and the two men most critically injured, officials said. Ten others were treated and released at area hospitals.

Municipal Workers Ticketed Most Often

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — In a crackdown on parking ticket scofflaws, the city government is finding that one of its frequent culprits is its own workers.

The city has compiled a list of 36 city officials and employees wo have not paid accumulated parking fines.

Illinois Village Launches Shabbiness Campaign

BOLINGBROOK, Ill. (AP) — This thriving village founded 14 years ago in cornfields southwest of Chicago is worried about premature aging. So officials are cracking down on property owners who fail to keep their new homes looking new.

Starting Monday, residents who keep an unworkable clunker in the driveway, let debris pile up in the back yard or don't fix peeling paint will be prosecuted.

Two police officers and four special assistants will issue warning tickets to anyone found violating housing ordnances dealing with debris, broken windows, general maintenance, garbage storage, peeling paint, stagnant water, tall weeds and stored vehicles.

The ordinances have been in effect since August 1973, but enforcement never was taken seriously, said Marianne Kozlik, the village's ordinance supervisor. This year, she promises, it will be.

"In the past," she said, "if you had a notice to appear in court and you didn't, then it was just dismissed. This didn't help the attitude."

The program is not unique. The village of Oak Park has had a similar, successful program for about six years, according to a housing inspector there. But Oak Park and Evanston, another Chicago suburb with an enforcement program, are old-line communities with much older housing stock.

Bolingbrook — current population 36,000 — wasn't even a village until 1965. Mrs. Kozlik said Friday that warnings will be issued first, allowing up to three weeks to correct deficiencies. After that, failure to comply will result in a daily ticket. And the village will start documenting its cases with photographs after the second ticket, she said.

Fines will range from $10 to $30 per violation, although the law allows for a charge of up to $500, she said. Court appearances will follow, and the village will prosecute if the violations aren't corrected, she warned.

Rose Crosier has lived for 17 years in one of the oldest homes in town and she says that for 12 of those years has had next-door neighbors with back, front and side yards that "constantly looked like a junkyard.

"When you have a lot of debris laying around it's a health hazard," she said. "On cleaning up things like this, I think it's great."

U.S. Air Force Secretary Resigns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The resignation of John C. Stetson, secretary of the Air Force, was accepted Friday by President Carter. Stetson, former president of A.B. Dick Co., has said he will return to private industry.

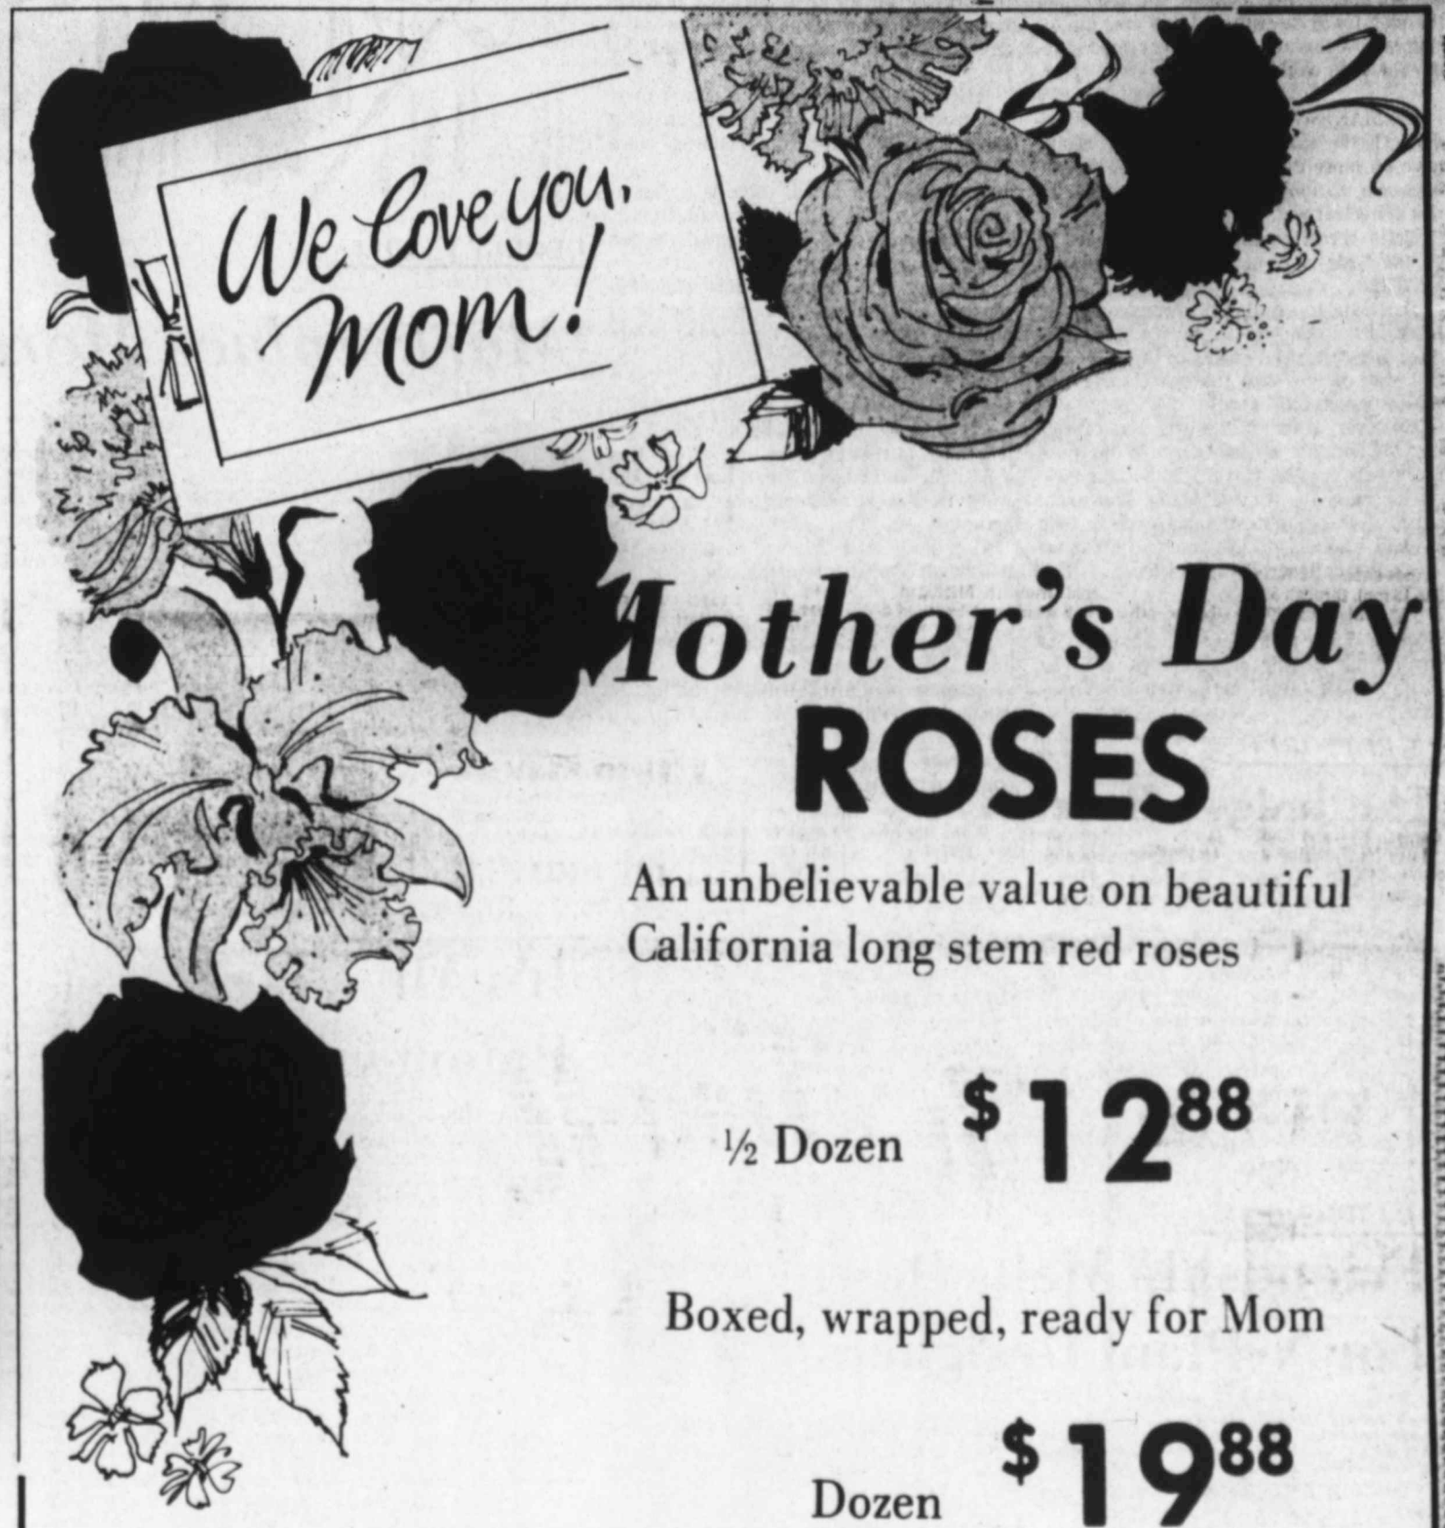

Although this was the first formal announcement, Stetson's decision to resign became known recently through a letter he sent to Air Force commanders.

An Air Force source, who does not want his name used, said Stetson had no single reason for resigning, but that he was generally dissatisfied with the role of service secretaries in the Defense Department's decision-making process.

Stetson was named to the top Air Force job by Carter and assumed the post April 6, 1977. He is 58.

There was no word whether Stetson will return to A.B. Dick, a manufacturer of office machines. He also is former president of the publishing division of the Houston Post Co.

SALT II--Beyond A Doubt?

ONE OF THE great debates of U.S. foreign policy is about to be joined as the U.S. Senate takes up the proposed SALT II agreement between the United States and Russia.

After almost seven years of negotiations, seven years in which the world has changed greatly, it was announced this week that President Carter and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev would hold a summit meeting soon to sign the treaty.

Before any such treaty can be implemented, it must be approved by the full U.S. Senate. And before that happens, the nation and the world will be witness to an epic discussion of how the two superpowers stand in today's nuclear world.

IN MAKING the announcement, President Carter said: "The American people have no more deeply felt wish than to enhance our nation's security and reduce the risk of nuclear war."

Quite correctly, the President zeroed in on the basic issue of the whole concept of SALT II.

It is safe to say that all Americans want to avoid the dangers of a nuclear war at almost any cost, short of loss of their freedom and way of life. And the chances are that most Russians feel likewise.

However, in that desire, we should recognize the fact that we have peace in the world today between the two major nuclear powers because the United States has maintained a strong military stance—one to keep Moscow "honest," and that in so doing we have taken certain calculated risks.

SALT II IN its primary objective, that of reducing current nuclear armaments and slowing the making of new ones, is to be recommended. But, not without reservations.

And it is here that the epic debate will center. Has SALT II assured the U.S. an equity role, a military balance in the future which fully, completely and "without reservations" assures this nation's safety?

Does SALT II, in its middle and later stages, give Russia a "first strike" capability which could prove tempting to a new, more militant breed of Soviet leaders, who assuredly will be coming onto the scene?

And last—and most important—are there ways and means of checking and verifying that Russia is living up to the SALT II agreement, verification beyond a shadow of a doubt as far as U.S. security is concerned?

THOSE ARE the questions which must be answered as the Senate takes up what easily is the most important challenge since World War II ended.

As things now stand, there is no assurance that SALT II will be approved. In fact, with the approach of a presidential election year, odds are against it.

However, the Carter administration has made SALT II one of the cornerstones of its policy, a major goal to be reached before next year's elections.

Mr. Carter and his aides assert that SALT II should not become "a political football." To the degree that the debate should not bog down in rhetoric, they are correct. It is a position with which GOP Leader Sen. Howard H. Baker, of Tennessee, and others agree.

How successful they are in keeping the matter out of politics remains to be seen.

IN THE MEANTIME, in addition to the basic questions already posed, one other item needs clarification.

Proponents of SALT II like to cite figures which they claim show the American people are in favor of such a strategic arms limitation treaty. The latest Associated Press-NBC poll shows 68 percent of Americans backing such a pact.

What they fail to note is that in the same or similar polls, a majority of Americans also say they do not trust Russia to keep its agreements.

With that in mind, whatever the Senate does must be based on one final conclusion: The basic self interests of the U.S. and American people must be assured beyond any shadow of doubt. The security of the United States must not be compromised, no gamble, no guesswork, no "intents" or pledges. If those assurances can be given, then SALT II might be acceptable. If there is one iota of doubt, SALT II should be rejected or changed.

The Judge's Race

IT'S NOT AT all unusual for someone to blast President Carter for breaking a campaign promise but now and then the criticism is open to question.

Benjamin Aranda III, president of La Raza National Bar Association, criticized the President last week for not increasing minority appointments to the federal judiciary.

"It seems to me that the President wasn't really thinking minority," Aranda said.

Well, frankly, we hope that the President was thinking qualifications, not race. A federal judge should be picked without regard to race, not because of.

ART BUCHWALD:

Friendship Melts Down For N-Plant Designers

(Messrs. Babcock and Wilcox, the founders of the nuclear design and construction firm that today bears their names, both died in the last century. If they were alive today, here's what might have happened.)

WASHINGTON—As the builders of the Three Mile Island nuclear energy complex, Babcock and Wilcox have become household names.

The question people are asking is, who was to blame for the Three Mile Island incident—Babcock or Wilcox? Rumor has it that Babcock and Wilcox aren't talking to each other.

They used to work in the same office, with their drafting boards facing each other, singing and joking all day long.

But after the Harrisburg flap the friendship chilled and the men had a bitter fight, at which time each pointed the finger of guilt at the other.

"I TOLD you we should have put in an automatic valve in case the primary cooling system failed," Babcock said.

"I did have an automatic cooling system, but you vetoed it because you said a manual valve was less expensive," Wilcox retorted.

"When did I say that?"

"When we were eating in the cafeteria. I remember it well because you said if we were going to bring it in for $100 million, there was no sense throwing money away on a redundant valve."

Babcock bristled. "I never said any such thing. I told you to do anything you wanted to as long as it made you happy."

Wilcox said angrily, "While we're on the subject, how come you didn't know anything about the chance of a hydrogen bubble forming when the coolant was turned off?"

"I KNEW ABOUT the hydrogen bubble problem. I told you about it at your daughter's wedding, and you said 'Don't bother me with such details. I'm having a good time.'"

Wilcox said, "You told me there was one chance in a million that a hydrogen bubble could form if the reactor overheated. You were always lousy at figuring odds."

Babcock retorted, "Next you're going to tell me I was responsible for all the radioactive water being dumped into the auxiliary building."

Wilcox said, "You were in charge of radioactive water. I was in charge of pumps."

"Your pumps didn't work, Wilcox. That's why my radioactive water spilled all over the place."

"MY PUMPS worked perfectly. It was the gauges you designed which made it impossible for the Three Mile engineers to guess that the reactor wasn't getting any water."

Babcock said, "You never complained about my gauges before. You told the Three Mile Island people I was the best gauge designer in the business."

"When you weren't drinking," Wilcox replied.

"Oh, so now we're getting personal. Where were you the day we put in the fuel rods? At the Holiday Inn with your secretary, watching the Stanley Cup playoffs."

"That's a lie, Babcock, and you know it. I was at the Holiday Inn working on the vent valves which, incidentally, worked where we needed them."

BABCOCK FUMED. "I never told you this before, but I hated every moment I worked with you. You're a slob, Wilcox. You leave blueprints all over the place, you can't even draw a containment structure without blotting half the paper, and not once in all the years I've known you have you ever hung up your raincoat."

Wilcox shouted, "I'm a slob? Who kept dropping uranium pellets on the floor, which I was always slipping on? You make me sick."

"Okay, I think it's time we take separate offices. It's obvious we can never design another nuclear plant together again."

"It suits me," Wilcox said. "I won't be here when you get back. You can have custody of the Three Mile Island plant, but I get weekend visiting rights."

"Here's the gold Geiger counter you gave me for Christmas, Wilcox. You know what you can do with it."

GEORGE F. WILL:

Marketplace Morals

WASHINGTON—Spies are Russia's principal export. Dissidents represent a dreaded import—Western thought. So by bartering dissidents for spies, Russia expels nuisances (and potential embarrassments during the Moscow Olympics), and recycles espionage resources.

Russia diligently seeks release for its captured spies in order to sustain the morale of its espionage apparatus. The importance of this apparatus was illustrated by a timely news story the weekend of the latest barter.

The New York Times reported that two years ago Soviet agents obtained sensitive information about U.S. satellites that are crucial for monitoring compliance with strategic arms agreements.

Twelves months ago President Carter decided not to produce neutron weapons, and asked for comparable Soviet restraint in Europe. Now the Soviets are deploying in Europe new short-range nuclear-armed missiles, SS-21s.

Nine months ago, in response to Soviet trials of dissidents, Carter blocked the sale of a computer system and placed under government control the export of oil and gas technology to Russia.

But the administration soon approved all 74 pending applications for exports of energy technology, and three weeks ago it approved the computer sale.

Trade—especially the transfer of U.S. technology—is vital to the Soviet economy, which must support a ravenous military machine. The Soviet workforce is larger than that of the United States, but produces about half the GNP.

It would be even less productive without technology supplied by capitalist countries.

AS CARL GERSHMAN writes in "Commentary," it is hard to find any important Soviet industrial process that has not benefited significantly from Western technology.

Soviet gains from such transfers are immediate and economic—which, in a garrison state, means military, too. U.S. gains are hypothetical.

A U.S. computer firm admits that the Soviets gained 15 years in research by spending just $3 million. The Soviets bought for just $150,000 space suits that American taxpayers spent $20 million apiece to develop.

After a Soviet "trade" delegation, ostensibly considering purchases, toured Boeing, Lockheed and McDonnell Douglas plants, a member of the delegation admitted privately that no purchases had ever been contemplated.

The aim was industrial espionage. Some members' shoes had heels and soles made of a substance that picked up metal filings which could be returned to Moscow for metallurgical analysis to reveal the alloys used in U.S. aircraft.

GIVEN THE economic barrenness and political disagreeableness of U.S.-Soviet trade relations, it is remarkable that people invest much hope in trade. For example, Henry Kissinger has argued that trade may "leaven the autarchic tendencies of the Soviet system."

And as Gershman says, Soviet leaders "avoid the choice between reform and stagnation precisely by turning to the West for totalitarianism's 'missing dynamic'."

Furthermore, the Soviets will exploit against the West the potential for political leverage through trade.

In his March 1 "election" speech Premier Kosygin made clear that Soviet trade may, when useful, be made contingent upon the political and military "good behavior" of trading partners.

THIS STATEMENT coincided with a debate in West Germany about replacing short-range nuclear missiles capable of reaching the USSR. Germany is Russia's principal trading partner among developed capitalist nations.

What the Soviets especially want from the United States are increased credits, which involve subsidies from U.S. taxpayers. Soviet-bloc debt has ballooned from $8 billion in 1970 to $55 billion, and is growing.

This debt gives the Soviet Union the sort of leverage over creditors that it has over all Western investors.

As Gershman says, "The knowledge that their investments have made them hostage to political circumstances could well turn Western businessmen into fervent defenders of appeasement."

That probably is what some Western political advocates of increased trade hope will happen. They have reason to hope.

IN THE 1930s, businessmen in the American-Russian Chamber of Commerce, like the intellectual fellow travelers, insisted that the Soviet Union was not using forced labor.

In 1945 a Fortune magazine poll showed business leaders to be the "most friendly" toward the Soviet Union of all American groups. There are always leaders of commerce who have the morals of the marketplace, and whose political convictions are as flexible as the stockmarket tape.

Regarding the Soviet Union, they lack even the redeeming realism of the young lady from Kent,

Who said that she knew what it meant
When men took her to dine,
Gave her cocktails and wine;
She knew what it meant—but she went.

ANDREW TULLY:

It's All Baloney

WASHINGTON—Two days after Jimmy Carter and Ted Kennedy exchanged such juicy, peoplelike remarks as "throwing in the towel" and "That's just a lot of baloney," the President favored one of his favorite aides-de-camp with another biting comment.

"Teddy's running for my job," said Carter. "But he's not going to do it over my dead body. I'm not going to let him get away with anything."

Good. Carter and Kennedy finally are talking a language the voters understand. They have admitted there is a war on between them, a fact of political life that was plain long ago to any grown-up of basic intelligence.

It was bound to happen. It was only coincidence that Kennedy set off the firecracker by telling a convention of newspaper editors the oil industry has "intimidated the administration into throwing in the towel before even entering the ring," and describing the President's windfall tax proposal as "a transparent fig leaf."

CARTER'S INSTANT and contemptuous reply that Kennedy was talking "a lot of baloney" showed that he had prepared himself to challenge his challenger for the offensive.

As it turned out, Carter won the first round on points. He told his press conference he'd be delighted to support a Kennedy proposal for "more stringent windfall tax proposals."

Kennedy preferred to respond only that Carter's plan was bad economic policy and bad energy policy.

That figured. Carter had put Kennedy on the spot by extending an olive branch, and Kennedy was not about to join the President's team, not after all the florid rhetoric he had loosed in denouncing the de-control of oil prices.

CARTER KNEW that. But he was fed up with Kennedy's periodic sniping at his policies.

A man with a celebrated but seldom revealed temper, it must have done Carter good to break out of his accustomed cool and toss a haymaker at his tormentor.

Carter has a right to be apprehensive as well as irritable. He knows about that write-in campaign for Kennedy in New Hampshire, and the flurries of pro-Kennedy activists in Ohio and Iowa.

He jokes about it, as he did at the White House Correspondents Association dinner when he said someone would have to be as naive as his 11-year-old daughter, Amy, not to consider Kennedy a candidate.

THAT'S GRAVEYARD humor when the polls show Kennedy as the choice of most Democrats for the party nomination in 1980.

Kennedy, of course, continues down the path of a candidate who refuses to admit it. He avoided the unequivocal answer when asked after his speech to the editors if he wanted to take himself out of the race.

"I expect (Carter) to be a candidate," he said. "I expect him to be renominated. I expect to work for his election. I expect him to be re-elected."

That statement and 95 cents will get Jimmy Carter a cup of coffee anywhere in Washington.

VIRGINIA PAYETTE:

A Queen Of 'arts

OKAY, PEASANTS, let's hear it for poor old Queen Elizabeth. She's having an attack of the sticky wickets these days.

Listen, life isn't always beer and skittles in the palace, even for the richest woman in the world. Royalty has its bad days, too.

Take her royal highness' recent automobile accident, wherein her royal Rover collided with an un-royal Ford driven by one of her subjects. Turns out, it was Her Majesty's fault.

She wasn't doing the driving, of course, but it's hardly likely her chauffeur was speeding through traffic with the queen cringing in the back seat, nagging him to slow down.

"She likes to go fast," an English businessman explained. "It runs in the family, you know. They all drive like madmen."

So here's the queen, off to Windsor Castle for a long weekend after a hard day at Buckingham Palace, zipping in and out of traffic. And there's poor John Smith, coming around a curve and finding himself fender to fender with the royal coach. A nasty crash was unavoidable.

WELL, YOU CAN imagine the consternation when the gathering crowd tumbled to the fact that the lady in the back seat of the crumpled Rover was the royal majesty herself. In person.

She sent her "regards" to the occupants of the battered Ford, expressed her pleasure that they were not injured, and told them to send the bill to Buckingham Palace. Then she picked up her dogs, stepped into a waiting police car, and was whisked away to Windsor.

Near head-ons may leave her unflappable, but there's a bigger crisis brewing that, if you can believe the local whispers, can't be solved by sending the bill to Buckingham Palace.

The United Kingdom, believe it or not, is "running low on royals," as they say in Picadilly Circus. The ranks of the royal family could use a few mere ship-launchers, bridge-openers and ribbon-cutters.

Not just any old body can perform these little ceremonies, you understand. It has to be someone with a royal pedigree, and there just aren't enough of them to go around these days.

SEEMS THERE'S a revolt brewing among the young royals who want no part of the queen business. They'd rather have careers of their own than go around laying cornerstones and opening charity bazaars.

And Queen Elizabeth prefers not to put the royal screws on any of them. The truth is, she can't even make her own daughter do her duty, to what's left of the Empire.

Princess Anne would rather muck around the stables at her $1.5 million estate in the Cotswolds than be nice to a gaggle of stuffy dignitaries—and says so every chance she gets. As a public charmer, the lady is a great horsewoman.

Princess Margaret isn't much help, either. She pleads poor health as an excuse, and she is careful never to overtax herself. She also makes it clear her children have her blessing to lead non-royal lives.

Teen-age son David, or Viscount Linley, wants to become a professional photographer like his father, Lord Snowdon. And 15-year-old Lady Sarah prefers a private career.

THAT LEAVES the queen, Prince Philip and Prince Charles to carry on. Waiting in the wings are Prince Andrew and Prince Edward, but they are still schoolboys and away most of the time.

Actually, the two hardest-working members of the court circle are the Queen Mother and HRH Princess Alice, Duchess of Gloucester, but they're both 78, with not too many hand-shaking years ahead of them.

The Duke of Kent does his bit with the Overseas Trade Board, but his popular duchess is recovering from surgery and a miscarriage and won't return to the rigors of the royal round for months.

Prince Michael of Kent would rather stick to his duties as a full-time army officer. And his wife is too busy with a new baby to do much ribbon-cutting.

The "young royals" have already dropped out. George, the teen-age son of the Duke of Kent, wants to be a diplomat. His 16-year-old sister, Lady Helen, has her eye on a career as a linguist.

THE EARL OF Harewood has three sons in their 20s, but they prefer producing TV films and running rock bands to launching ships. And the 16-year-old son of Princess Alexandra wants to be a banker.

Even if Prince Charles got married this year (and court circles say he has his bride picked out), his heir wouldn't be ready to carry out any royal engagements until well into the 21st century.

Maybe Elizabeth II should reread her ancestral history. Somehow, Elizabeth I muddled through, and she didn't have any descendants.

HUMOROUS GARTERS were as much of a fad 75 years ago as tricky T-shirts are today. One firm, for instance, put out a ladies' garter with a thermometer sewn into it.

Americans Studying Emergency Fuel Measures

Car owners prepared on Friday for another weekend of gasoline hunting, as the Carter administration — unsuccessful in efforts to get standby rationing authority — reportedly worked on a plan for a national, odd-even sales system like the one in effect in California.

State energy officials across the country also drew up their own emergency plans for use if the gasoline shortage gets worse.

President Carter accused the House of Representatives of "political timidity" for turning down a bill that would have given him the power to ration fuel if necessary. Sources said that while the president would not submit another rationing plan, officials were working on a proposal for an odd-even allocation system.

An Associated Press spot check showed that some motorists will find it almost impossible to get gasoline this Sunday. Other drivers will find it relatively easy. It all depends on where you live.

In California, where gasoline purchases in many areas already are limited under an odd-even sales system, weekend closings appear to be the rule rather than the exception. The Automobile Club of Southern California said 92.5 percent of all metropolitan service stations will be closed on Sunday; almost two out of three will be closed on Saturday.

In Colorado, officials of the Automobile Association of America said they didn't expect any real problems. Spokesman Doug Damerst said about 75 percent of the service stations in the Denver area would be closed Sunday, but added that those in the rest of the state would be operating normally.

And less than half the stations checked by the AAA in Wisconsin planned to close Sunday and only a few said they were limiting sales.

Among Friday's gasoline developments:

—Carter said the rejection of the rationing plan caused him to be "shocked and ... embarrassed for our nation's government." He challenged Congress to come up with its own rationing plan in 90 days, promising to give the lawmakers "every possible assistance."

—The Justice Department said it will investigate the possibility of antitrust violatons in connection with the gasoline station shutdown that has been threatened for May 17 through May 20. The drive for a shutdown is being led by California dealers who want to protest Energy Department regulations that limit their profit margins.

—State officials urged voluntary conservation of gasoline, but said they were ready to impose mandatory measures — including rationing in some cases — if necessary.

Chuck Clinton, energy planner for the District of Columbia, said the district's mayor and the governor of Maryland had agreed on an odd-even sales system that could be implemented on 48-hours notice. Virginia officials were discussing the possibility of joining the agreement.

Pennsylvania officials also said they had a standby rationing program ready. "We do not anticipate that we would need it, but we're ready," said Nat Goldhaber,executive assistant to Lt. Gov. William Scranton III. "Our supplies are tight, but adequate. e feel there are sufficient supplies to get us through the summer, but we are urging voluntary conservation at every possible step," he said.

Gov. Ella Grasso of Connecticut said earlier this week she believed conservation would work. "We've got to start thinking in these (conservation terms). If this would not be sufficient, we could have to go to some distribution problems."

In neighboring New York and nearby New Jersey, officials said there was no no talk about rationing. New York authorities said there was no serious shortage in most of the state and New Jersey spokesmen urged conservation.

Jerry Ferrara, executive director of the New Jersey Gasoline Retailors Association, estimated that almost all of the state's 5,000 gas stations would be open on Saturday, but 60 percent would close Sunday.

"Generally, you will find stations open in the tourist areas and along major thoroughfares. Basically, your neighborhood stations will be closed."

Tourist areas were particularly concerned about gasoline. The Las Vegas Chamber of Commerce urged local residents to buy their gasoline between Monday and Thursday, leaving the weekend supply for visitors.

There have been predictions that the real crunch will come during the Memorial Day weekend, both because of increased travel and because dealers will be near the end of their monthly allocations.

Next weekend also could pose a problem if the call for a service station shutdown picks up steam. So far, the picture is mixed. The 400-member Iowa Gasoline Dealers Association put off for a week a decision on whether to join the shutdown. Larry Blixt, the association director, said many members "think it's selfish to do something like that to consumers."

The AAA in Colorado said its survey showed 10 percent of the dealers in that state want to shut down, while 90 percent are either undecided or against the idea.

Eight-Mile-Long Gas Line Forms At Closed Station

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline lines spilled onto freeways and caused traffic backups up to eight miles long Friday, as California's new rationing plan was tested in the pre-weekend gas rush.

The eight-mile whopper outside Oxnard, 60 miles northwest of Los Angeles, was caused by a spillover onto Highway 101 from a line at a Mobil station that turned out to be closed, officials said.

It was one of the more spectacular tales of woe told by increasingly desperate drivers on the third day of the rationing scheme, which permits motorists to buy gas based on the last digit in their license plate.

With automobile club officials predicting nearly two-thirds of the Los Angeles-area gas stations would be closed Saturday — and nearly all closed Sunday — the ration scheme put a new wrinkle in the weekend gas hunt.

Drivers with odd-numbered license plates flocked to gas stations Friday knowing, that for all practical purposes, they would not get another crack at the gas pumps until Tuesday.

In a spot check Friday, only a fifth of the gas stations in downtown Los Angeles appeared to be open. Lines appeared to be a minimum eight blocks long.

Ramps to and from the Santa Monica, Santa Ana and Hollywood freeways in Los Angeles and Orange counties were clogged by the lines, the longest so far in Southern California.

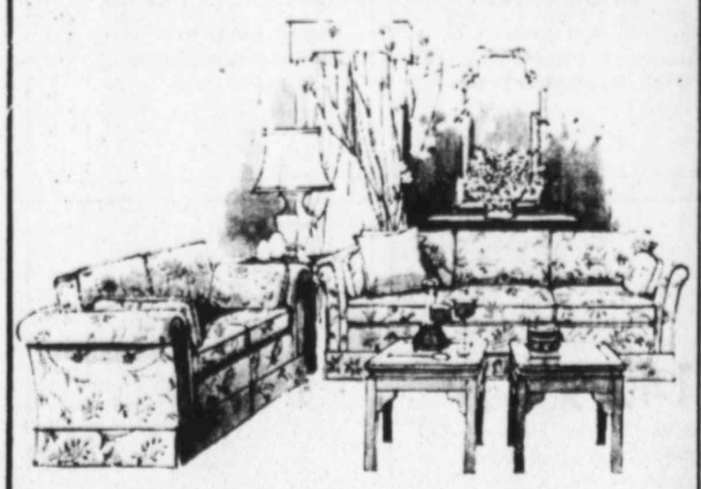

Throughout California, hardest hit of any state by the gasoline panic, gas was a main topic of conversation. Drivers swapped horror stories and "inside information" on the location of the shortest lines.

In the Los Angeles suburb of Eagle Rock, several waiting drivers on one line at dawn were supplied free coffee by the owner of a nearby restaurant. "I feel sorry for you people," he said.

The rationing plan, begun Wednesday, has been adopted by 13 of the state's 58 counties, but those 13 contain about 12 million of the state's 15 million motorists.

Nuclear Arms Treaty Signing Set For Vienna

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev will sign a new arms treaty next month in Vienna at a conference that U.S. officials hope will pave the way for more frequent summits between U.S. and Soviet leaders.

The June 15-18 summit conference will be the first between the U.S. president and the ailing Soviet leader.

The conference plans were announced at the White House by Carter's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, and in Moscow.

Shortly after the simultaneous announcement was made, Carter continued his battle to win Senate ratification of the pact by arguing that its rejection would be devastating to the U.S.-Soviet relationship and to efforts to control nuclear arms.

While the treaty will be the central theme of the meeting, the talks are also expected to deal with subsequent arms negotiations, the possibility of regular summit conferences, and the overall scope of U.S.-Soviet relations, a U.S. official said.

The administration official, who addressed reporters in the White House press room on the grounds that he not be identified by name, refused to comment on the state of Brezhnev's health or what impact it would have on the Vienna meetings.

But he said the conference, which would last 2½ to 3 days, would include joint meetings of the U.S. and Soviet delegations, "some private time for the two leaders to get together and have private discussions on a one-on-one basis," and more social occasions.

Brezhnev, 72, has appeared markedly less vigorous and mentally alert in recent weeks than at any time during the past year. A French-Soviet summit held late in April had to be postponed for three weeks while he recovered from what was called a lung ailment.

The summit conference will be the first between the United States and the Soviet Union since Brezhnev and President Gerald R. Ford met in Vladivostock in late 1974.

Agreement on the treaty, and some of the pact's details, were revealed Wednesday. During the five weeks leading up to the weekend conference, U.S. and Soviet officials will complete work on an agenda for the talks and work on approved translations of the pact.

It has not been determined whether the treaty will be signed at the start or conclusion of the talks.

While briefing reporters, the administration official was asked whether the United States had complained to the Soviet Union about Soviet missile tests in which data was coded in such a way that the test could not be monitored by this nation.

Declining to characterize U.S.-Soviet discussions on this point as a complaint, the official said told the reporter "matters of the sort that you raise were discussed" in a number of recent meetings.

He said American officials are satisfied that under the new agreement such coding would be prohibited.

The coding of missile test data was reportedly a key question in the final talks in Geneva and Washington leading up to the treaty agreement. It bears on the ability to verify compliance with the treaty, which is expected to play a central role in the Senate debate on the pact.

The Senate must ratify the treaty by a two-thirds vote before it can go into effect. The final outcome of the Senate voting, which may not take place until next year, is far from certain.

Speaking to visiting editors at the White House Friday afternoon, Carter said that "rejection of this treaty would have a devastating adverse effect on our nation's relationship with the Soviet Union and the control of nuclear weaponry."

Carter reportedly had hoped to complete final negotiations on the treaty with Brezhnev at the summit, but the Soviet leader's health dictated that all substantial work on the pact be completed before the meeting.

But, said an administration official, "it is unavoidable that some issues will have to be either reviewed or clarified by them."

At the same time, he said, the two men will begin discussions of the course to follow in moving from SALT II to a third strategic arms agreement.

Recession Risk Seen In Fuel Shortage

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — A gasoline shortage, which is likely to spread across the nation this summer, "increases the risk of recession," Federal Reserve Board Chairman G. William Miller said Friday.

Miller discussed his views of the economy with the Business Council, a prestigious group of 100 top corporate leaders whose own analysts are predicting a mild recession starting at mid-year.

The council meets four times a year to exchange views with government officials.

Miller forecast a slowdown, not a recession. He added, however, that the tight world oil market and the gas shortage already in evidence on the West Coast are putting pressure on the economy.

"I think we have more risk now of a recession than we had two months ago," Miller conceded.

Either a slowdown or recession should help dampen the rapid price increases that have pushed the annual rate of inflation to more than 13 percent so far this year. At the same time, a business downturn could throw thousands out of work.

Miller and Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal — who also predicted "a slowdown" — made their comments after the Business Council released a dreary quarterly report on the economy.

The report, prepared by corporate economists, foresees a "pronounced, although mild, recession."

A one percent drop in the nation's output over two or three quarters, it says, would make the recession among "the mildest of the post-war period."

Although the corporate consultants expect inflation to taper to a 7.5 percent annual rate by the end of the year, they predict that "little further progress is expected in 1980." And they expect unemployment to rise and corporate profits to be "squeezed" as President Carter's voluntary anti-inflation guidelines prohibit businesses from raising prices to cover rising raw material costs.

The Business Council's economic forecasts are more negative than those provided thus far by the Carter administration, which has argued that monetary and budget restraints and the guidelines can help check inflation yet not push the economy into recession.

However, the administration's forecasts were made before Iran suspended, then cut back, its oil production and before the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) raised prices more than nine percent in April.

An update, due in July, also will have to take into account increased American demand for gasoline at a time the administration is pushing oil companies to divert supplies for non-gasoline purposes, such as home heating oil.

The nation's dependence on foreign oil, now in short supply, prompted Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., to tell the businessmen, "it is absolutely necessary that we get on with producing more energy."

Carter has promised to begin decontrolling the price of domestic oil, with higher prices expected to encourage exploration while discouraging consumption.

Asked if Congress will pass Carter's proposed tax on the so-called "windfall profits" oil companies likely will reap, Long said, "I would guess yes." But he added, "that could prove to be entirely wrong."

The Business Council's meeting concludes Saturday with further discussions on the economy and debate on the U.S.-Soviet strategic arms limitation treaty.

Experts Ponder Slowing Of Economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inventories held by the nation's businesses surged ahead by 1.3 percent in March, with particularly heavy accumulations at the wholesale merchants' level.

The rise in March was 50 percent higher than February's 0.9 percent increase in inventories, the Commerce Department reported Friday.

The Commerce Department characterized the March rise as large, but William Cox, a top department economist cautioned that the "buildup does not in itself auger a slowdown."

Such a slowdown could occur, however, if retail sales continue to decline in real terms. They have fallen for three straight months.

Wholesalers' inventories rose 1.9 percent in March while manufacturers registered a 1.1 percent increase. Retail stock, meanwhile went up a more modest 1 percent, the department figures show.

Meanwhile, sales of all businesses jumped 3.8 percent in March, compared to a much smaller 0.7 percent rise between February and January.

The inventory-to-sales ratio fell from 1.41 in February to 1.37 in March, reflecting that businesses could not quite keep their stocks up with demand. Retailers did manage to keep their stocks level with sales, the department reported.

Changes in inventory investment can show how the general economy is faring. During periods of decline in economic growth, inventories accumulate because production cannot be curtailed quickly enough in reaction to decline in final sales to consumers.

In contrast, periods of economic upswing are often characterized by underaccumulation of inventories — because production cannot expand fast enough to meet demand.

On Thursday, the Commerce Department reported that retail sales rose in April by a modest 0.5 percent, as compared to a 1 percent increase in March.

Total inventories for March were a whpping 12.3 percent above the same month a year earlier, department figures show. Total sales, meanwhile, were 17.2 percent higher than in March, 1979.

Despite the overall large increase in March inventories, Commerce officials were reluctant to point to an economic slowdown.

Retailers, in particular, appear to be keeping inventories relatively lean, particularly in light of a February drop in stocks.

The Commerce official said retailers are reflecting caution that consumer demand may subside after months of heavy buying. A newly-released private survey reports that consumers plan to cutback purchases of major durable goods such as cars, home appliances and home furnishings in the next six months.

The high level of wholesale inventories in March could be partly attributed to the Teamsters strike that occurred in early April, the Commerce official said.

Worried that they couldn't get supplies from manufacturers if trucking was paralyzed, wholesalers could have decided to stock up in March. However, the Teamsters strike was short-lived.

Short's Foreign Student Measure Passed

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Sen. E.L. Short of Tahoka won Senate passage Thursday of his bill to allow colleges to expel foreign students for rioting and other offenses.

The bill now goes to the House for consideration.

The bill was prompted, a Short aide said, by rioting by Iranian students in California.

The legislation allows expulsion of foreign students for disorderly conduct, rioting, disrupting a meeting, or desecration of the American flag.

At present, the aide said, colleges may expel American students for such violations, but are not allowed to take such action against foreign students.

The Senate also passed a bill sponsored by Short to reduce the fee regarding the length and width of vehicles taking farm produce to market. The bill was sponsored in the House by Rep. Mike Ezzell of Snyder.

Chinese Geologists To Visit America

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department says a group of leading geologists from China has been meeting here with U.S. government and university scientists and representatives of the American business community.

The three-week visit by representatives from the State Bureau of Geology of the People's Republic of China, which concluded late last month, resulted from a visit to Peking last July by a U.S. delegation headed by Frank Press, President Carter's chief science adviser.

The department said the recent visit by the Chinese delegation "marks the first high-ranking official agency-to-agency visit between the PRC and the United States in the earth sciences." It said the objectives of the Chinese scientists were "to have a look at the geology in the United States, to observe the development of geoscience, to meet with American geologists and to work on an agreement for exchanges."

LETTERS FOUND

BERGAMO, Italy (AP) — Police stopped a car for a routine check and discovered 10 apparently authentic letters written by Napoleon, Marie Antoinette, King Louis XIV and other historic French figures. The letters were marked with the seal of the French government's archives, but the two Italians in the car were released after questioning. Police said they claimed they got the letters from a friend who got them from another person who claimed to have inherited them.

Couple Kills Priest, Commits Suicide

LITTLETON, N.H. (AP) — A man and a woman armed with handguns and claiming to be the "king and queen of the church," shot and killed a Roman Catholic priest Friday before taking their own lives, police said.

THE REV. SANDS

The grim drama was played out in the rectory of the St. Rose of Lima Church in this small northern New Hampshire community of 5,400 persons.

Police negotiated in hopes of freeing the Rev. Joseph John D. Sands, 46, director of a home for delinquent boys. But he was killed by his captors about five hours after he was taken hostage. A state trooper was wounded slightly during negotiations.

The priest's captors, who police said took their own lives, were identified by police as Peter J. Linsley, 35, and Jane D. Linsley, 28, both of Concord.

Officers at the scene aid the man and woman caimed to be "king and queen of the church" and said theytook the church "in the name of God."

Four shots were fired inside the church rectory, police said.

"We heard shots at 5:22 and 20 minutes later, we sent in the SWAT team and found them all dead," said state police Major Richard Campbell.

The wounded state trooper, Sgt. Benjamin Mozrall, was hit by a shot fired from the church just seven minutes before the gunfire that killed Sands and his captors, police said.

"They couldn't have seen him, they shot through two doors," said Campbell of the wounding of the trooper. Mozrall received a minor wound in the arm and was treated at a local hospital. His condition was not immediately available.

Campbell said police fired no shots during the incident.

People at the scene said Father Sands was called to the church when the couple demanded to see a priest. After he was taken hostage, police tried for nearly five hours to convince the couple to give up.

Gov. Hugh Gallen, who is a member of the parish, flew to Littleton and was at the church during negotiations.

The Most Rev. Odore Gendron, bishop of the Manchester diocese — which includes all of New Hampshire, said he "prayed throughout the ordeal that the outcome would be diffferent.

"Now I ask all citizens of New Hampshire to join our Catholic community in praying that God will reward Father Sands for his zeal and dedication and that God will have mercy on those who in their confusion were led to this tragic act," the bishop said.

Earlier, dozens of people had been removed from schools and houses near the church.

Police said Father Sands was taken hostage at noon. The 46-year-old priest was founder and director of Alpha House, a home for about 180 delinquent boys from northern New Hampshire.

Church officials said Father Sands was filling in at the church for the pastor, the Rev. Stephen Scruton, who is on vacation in Ireland.

Father Sands had been a priest since 1958. A native of Dover, N.H., he was formerly a Trappist monk at St. Joseph's Abbey in Spencer, Mass., where his Trappist name was Brother John.

Gulf Divers Seek Eight Lost In Oil Rig Collapse

GALVESTON (AP) — Divers entered a mostly submerged oil drilling platform in the Gulf of Mexico on Friday to search for eight men believed trapped when the rig toppled over on a collapsed support leg.

Coast Guard and private vessels plucked 26 men from the dark Gulf waters 12 miles off the Galveston coast. Four required hospitalization, including one with an arm sheared off and others with burns.

Divers had waited for the go-ahead from officials worried that the three-fourths submerged platform could sink further and endanger would-be rescuers.

They temporarily withdrew from the water late Friday afternoon when it became apparent that they would need more air hoses to allow them to get into the wreckage, said Tommy Clemmons, Coast Guard operations duty officer.

But Coast Guard officials said diving operations would resume and continue into the night despite the steady rain and heavy seas that have hampered the rescue effort.

"Since it is dark inside there it doesn't make any difference if it is day time or night time," said Clemmons, adding that he did not know when the needed equipment would arrive.

Another Coast Guard spokesman said 700 barrels of diesel fuel were on the platform. He said the fuel was leaking, affecting diving operations but not posing any serious threat of fire.

There were 34 men aboard the rig, which was being prepared for drilling when one leg of its tripod stand gave way late Thursday, tilting the platform at a 45-degree angle.

"I was just standing there when all of a sudden there was a 'boom' and there was water coming in everywhere," said Timothy Stout, 21, who escaped with nothing more than a finger injury.

Coast Guard Lt. Gabriel Kinney, operations officer for the Galveston base, said there were reports some of the men may have been welding on the platform and were electrocuted.

Survivor Paul Fromberg, 26, an employee of IMCO Service Co., was in the galley of the crew quarters when the rig sank.

"I didn't hear any crash, there was a sensation of dropping," he said. "I was in the galley when it suddenly dropped and we were up in the air with the furniture flying."

He said he could not get out of a door because of the water pushing against it but managed to escape through a galley porthole that was not under water and found a floating raft.

" I dragged another guy into the raft, Fromberg said. "He was complaining about his arm and when I got him into the raft, I saw that it was gone, just cut off."

The eight missing men are employees of five different companies doing offshore drilling and consulting work, the owners and operators of the rig said.

The platform and its housing separated from its legs holding it 58 feet above the ocean floor and was floating, Kinne said.

"One of the reports we got from survivors was that there was some motion to the rig early in the evening. Then the rig just collapsed all of a sudden," Kinney said.

The rig is a jack-up type. It functions like an automobile jack to lift platform and drilling equipment to change the position of the platform relative to its underwater legs, said Frank Forrester of the U.S. Geological Survey. He said a survey team from Metairie, La., will investigate.

The Coast Guard cutters Point Hope and Point Monroe, as well as private vessels, stayed on the scene Friday. Three Coast Guard helicopters aided rescue and search operations initially but only two stayed later, the Coast Guard said.

Legislative Action At A Glance

Dallas Seeking 1980 Demo Convention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dallas representatives left a meeting to choose the site for the 1980 Democratic National Convention on Friday with their mission to prove that up to $3 million can be raised privately without running afoul of federal election laws.

Their deadline is June 13 and 14, the dates the convention site selection committee will visit Texas.

The field visit will follow the committee's trips to Dallas' competitors — New York City, Philadelphia and Detroit.

Dallas' bid is different because its host committee is the only group proposing to bear the costs of the convention without help from public funds.

The other bids are spearheaded by the city governments.

"It's a real test here of whether the private sector can compete with the public sector for the world's greatest political convention," said Ron Kessler, Dallas County Democratic chairman.

The site selection group will decide June 28 where to hold the August 1980 convention.

The group was scheduled to narrow the field to two Friday, but strong presentations by all four prompted the decision to make four field trips.

"There are restrictions on the amount of money that corporations or unincorporated businesses like labor unions can give the host committee for local commerce," Cecil Cheves, the Democratic National Committee's legal counsel, said.

Questions must be resolved on how individual donations can be made to the Dallas Host Committee as well, he said.

Ted Strauss, the host committee's chairman, said "rich Republicans, rich Democrats" are among its members trying to bring the convention to Texas.

The committee can raise as much as $3 million if necessary to allow the Democrats to enter the 1980 presidental campaign clear of convention debts, he said.

A national political convention has not been held in Texas since 1928 when the Democrats nominated Al Smith in Houston.

Woman Wants To Cancel Trips

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Millicnt Fenwick, R-N.J., says there's one way her colleagues in Congress could convince their fellow Americans the gasoline crisis is real: cancel their political speechmaking trips.

Mrs. Fenwick, in a brief House speech, called on "Republicans and Democrats alike to stop jetting all over the country to give political speeches," and said that as long as they continue such trips the American public won't believe a real shortage exists.

TEXAS DEPARTMENT OF HUMAN RESOURCES

PROPOSED TITLE XX SOCIAL SERVICES PLAN

Public Comment Invited May 11-June 25

The proposed 1980 social services program for Texas residents has been prepared by the Texas Department of Human Resources in cooperation with citizens throughout the state.

Comprehensive Annual Services Program Plan for Texas (CASPP)

October 1, 1979 to September 30, 1980

The Texas social services program helps residents support and take care of themselves; adjust to independent living, and offers them protective care.

SERVICES OFFERED—The services include day care and protective services for children, services for adults (including homemaker and chore services, and family care for aged and disabled persons), family planning, and employment services.

Most of the services will be available throughout Texas, but some may be limited by available funds. Some services may be expanded as funds become available.

WHO IS ELIGIBLE?—Recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Supplemental Security Income (SSI), are eligible for services. Some services will be provided to people in need whose incomes are below 55 percent of the state's median income adjusted for family size. (For example, the monthly income must be less than $867.43 for a family of four.) Some services for aged, blind, and disabled adults will be provided to persons whose income is up to 80 percent of the state's median income. These income levels are described in the proposed plan.

Protective services and information and referral will be provided, regardless of a person's income.

Standards for Facilities Serving SSI Recipients

The plan includes information about standards for residential facilities (other than those certified for Medicare or Medicaid) which service SSI recipients. This includes the names and addresses of the standard-setting agencies which will respond to requests for information on: standards, their enforcement, waivers, and the identity of deficient facilities.

ESTIMATED FUNDS—Total budget for 1979-1980: $214,288,432. Sources: Federal $153,370,198; Non-federal $60,918,234.

GETTING COPIES OF THE PLAN—The complete plan may be read or reviewed in the DHR offices listed below, or obtained at no cost by writing to the Title XX Information Center. (See address below.)

QUESTIONS AND COMMENTS—Questions about the plan can be directed to the DHR offices listed. Written comments are encouraged and should be sent to the Title XX Information Center, Texas Department of Human Resources, John H. Reagan Building, Austin, 78701. These must be received no later than 5 p.m. June 25, 1979. A suggested format for comments is included in the plan.

A public hearing on the proposed plan will be held at the John H. Reagan Building in Austin at 9 a.m. on June 12, 1979. Public hearings will also be held across the state during the comment period. For further information regarding the dates and places for these hearings, contact any of the offices listed below or write to the Title XX Information Center.

Addresses are for DHR offices. Where there are no offices, the address of the county judge is given.

Clements Says State 'Wants Primary'

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says the Texas Legislature will make a "terrible mistake" if it does not provide a presidential primary for voters in 1980.

"The people of Texas want a presidential primary," he told a news conference Friday. "There is no question about that."

CLEMENTS

Clements added that if the Legislature is waiting to hear his stand on a presidential primary bill "they'll just have to wait."

"I'm not going to give them any direction. If they are waiting on me, they are in deep trouble ... and if they are waiting on me on this it's the only thing they're waiting on me for. On everything else they just go ahead."

A Senate bill calling for a presidential primary in March before the May primary elections has been approved by committee but has not been brought up for full Senate debate.

The House Elections Committee has not been able to agree on a presidential primary bill for House debate.

The governor said he could "guarantee" the Texas Republican Party will have its own presidential primary. "I don't know what the Democrats will do."

The state Republican convention voted earlier to hold a presidential primary in connection with its May primary election.

State Democratic Party leaders oppose a presidential primary on any other date than the regular May primary election but have made no move toward ordering a presidential primary poll in the Democratic primary.

Clements also said:

•He is "reasonably certain" the Legislature will leave "close to the $1 billion I have been looking for," so it can be returned to taxpayers.

•He generally approved of the usury bill that passed the House increasing home loan interest rates from 10 percent to a cap of 12 percent. He said he saw no need of a two-year automatic "sunset" or cancellation provision.

•He had not changed his mind in recommending only a 5.1 percent salary increase for public school teachers.

•He thinks the failure of President Carter's gas rationing plan in the U.S. House "is just another sign that the Congress and the people have lost confidence in his handling of the oil crisis." He said it would be at least another week before a plan for allocation of supplies in Texas is ready. "We are not in the rationing business," he said.

Deceptive Trade Practices Changes Pass

AUSTIN (AP) — Business-supported changes to the state's law against deceptive trade practices passed the House Friday on an 89-40 vote.

Critics claim the bill would hurt a consumer's chances of collecting damages against deceptive and fraudulent businessmen.

The measure returns to the Senate. The Senate sponsor, Bill Meier, D-Euless, said Friday it was too early to decide if he would accept House changes or request appointment of a conference committee.

The House tentatively approved the bill Thursday on an 80-32 vote following five hours of debate.

Representatives took out some provisions of the Senate-passed bill but not enough to stop critics claims that the measure will hurt a consumer's chances of winning a deceptive trade practice lawsuit.

Among the House changes in the bill were:

— Mandating tripling of the first $1,000 in actual damages in all cases, unless a defendant showed proof of an effort to settle out-of-court for "substantially" the same amount as actual damages. If the defendant's conduct was knowingly deceptive, judges and juries could decide whether triple damages should be imposed past the first $1,000.

— Elimination of a ban on consumer-filed class action suits.

— Revising the definition of actual damages to include physical pain and mental anguish — as in current law.

Joe Longley, an Austin attorney and former chief of the attorney general's consumer protection division, decried the House-passed bill.

"Stick a fork in it. It's done," Longley said. "Where was (Attorney General) Mark White when that was going on? He should have been in there fighting."

Senate opponents of the bill staged two filibusters a week apart, one lasting 15 hours and concluding at 3 a.m. one day. Another filibuster is likely when the bill returns for senators to consider House amendments.

Meier said he does not agree with all the House amendments but is optimistic about finding a version both houses can approve.

"It's not something I feel real comfortable with," Meier said of the House version.

"There's some middle ground we can work on," he added.

Meier said he was disappointed that representatives decided not to inform juries that the first $1,000 in damages would be tripled in most cases. But he said that was not critical.

He added he was pleased that House members agreed to shield defendants from mandatory triple damages if they show evidence of an offered out-of-court settlement.

Anything in the Senate runs the risk of provoking a filibuster, Meier said. "If people want to kill it by filibuster, that's their privilege," he said.

House Tables Gasohol Or Whiskey Bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The House refused Friday to force committee action on a bill variously described as a "gasohol bill" and a "whiskey bill."

Rep. Bill Keese, D-Somerville, said the House Liquor Regulation Committee was sitting on his bill (HB2068) creating a class of alcoholic beverage permits for manufacturers of industrial alcohol.

He moved to instruct the committee to report the bill to the floor, but his motion was tabled, 78-50.

Keese maintained that the bill was necessary to enable Midwest Solvents, a Kansas firm, to build an alcohol plant in the lower Rio Grande Valley, using Texas farm produce as raw materials.

Part of the alcohol would be blended with unleaded gasoline into "gasohol" but some of it — beverage quality — would be exported to states that manufacture liquor.

Rep. Bill Coody, D-Weatherford, committee chairman, said the House already had passed the only two genuine gasohol bills before it.

" If you want to vote for a distillery, then do it. But quit calling this a gasohol bill. We are not talking about gasohol. We are talking about a whiskey still," Coody said.

TRUE STORY

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jill Eikenberry and Kevin Dobson star in the three-hour CBS movie "Orphan Train," based on a true story of a woman who in 1854 got 19 homeless children out of New York and onto a railroad boxcar headed for the Midwest. It was the first of many orphan trains sponsored by the Children's Aid Society of New York. Between 1854 and 1900 more than 100,000 children were relocated with families across the country.

Conferees Eye Budget For Potential Cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — Writers of the 1980-81 state spending bill agreed Friday to take individual bites out of the multi-billion dollar measure but no broad across-the-board cuts.

After a short first session of the House-Senate conference committee on general appropriations, the 10 members recessed until Monday morning.

The committee is attempting to iron out the differences between the $20.67 billion House bill and the $20.79 billion bill passed by the Senate.

"The Senate is not going to agree on specific figures then come back later and make a broad percentage cut," said Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, head of the Senate conferees.

"I don't think we are ready to give up any rider (special provision) at this point," said Rep. Bill Presnal, D-Bryan, head of the House group.

The negotiators finally agreed to a motion that would "dispense with the 4 percent cut except when conferees adopt a resolution on individual items."

After the House passed its bill, a provision was attached cutting all appropriations in the measure by 4 percent, across-the-board.

The 4 percent cut was one of four major differences to be settled between the House and Senate versions.

The other major differences include the 7 percent salary increase given most school teachers and the 5.1 percent increase by the Senate, and the $269 million difference in the Senate bill for school financing.

Conferees agreed to aproach those two problems after completion of debate in both houses on school financing.

The fourth main difference is the 7 percent salary increase for state employees in the House bill and the 5.1 percent in the Senate.

The first state agency considered was the Texas Commission for the Blind. The Senate version was taken on all issues, for a total $397,194 above the House bill.

The conferees accepted a House provision that all funds received by the commission from operations of food vending stands must go in the State Treasury. About $500,000 woud be transferred from present private bank accounts.

The conferees agreed to give the Commission on the Deaf about $27,000 for moving expenses but cut out $14,000 for a new accountant.

Texans To Vote On Farm Loan Plan

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans will get a chance this November to vote on a state farm and ranch loan program similar to the Veterans Land Program.

The Senate approved 25-3 Friday House amendments to a proposed constitutional amendment for long-term, low-interest loans, if approved by voters. The loans would be financed by a $10 million bond program, administered by the state agriculture commissioner.

The 20-year loans would carry a maximum of 6 percent interest.

"This puts the fate of the family farm and ranch in Texas into the hands of the people of Texas," said Rep. Luther Jones, D-El Paso, the House sponsor.

Lubbock Man Shot As Argument Turns Violent

A man who said he helped subdue a pistol-wielding woman in a Lubbock cafe early Friday ws shot in the head by a man who was handed the woman's weapon, police said.

Artis Nathan, 29, of 1810 E. 27th was discharged from Health Sciences Center Hospital Friday afternoon after being treated for his wounds.

Police found the blood-drenched Nathan sitting in a wheelchair in West Texas Hospital emergency room. He said he had been shot by a bearded, tall, thin black man at a cafe on Idalou Road about 3 a.m. Friday.

He said that before he was shot, a woman armed with a .22-caliber pistol entered the restaurant and threatened to shoot one of the patrons.

Nathan, along with others, reportedly took the gun away from the woman, and then the weapon was handed to a man. Nathan said he got into an argument with the man and as he was walking away, the suspect shot him behind the ear.

In other criminal activity Friday, a teller at the First National Bank, 1500 Broadway St., told police she found two holdup notes on a table in the bank.

Pearl Herman, 43, told police she found two plastic envelopes, one containing a savings withdrawal slip and one containing a savings deposit.

Written on the back of the withdrawal slip was "Put $30,000 in small bills in a bag, lay it in front of you, and leave. Don't press the alarm and none will get hurt."

A note written on the back of the deposit slip read, "This is a holdup. Put $25,000 in the bag and no one will get hurt."

One note was signed by a Slaton man, and the other by a Lubbock woman. Police said both persons denied knowledge of the threatening notes.

Police said the incident was "probably a prank." But they added that the idea for the notes could have come from a recent movie, "Silent Partner," in which these type of notes were used in a holdup.

A 19-year-old Lubbock man was arrested Friday by police for stealing two cans of cold beer.

The house burglary occurred at 11:15 a.m. Friday at 1508 Ave. O.

The reporting party told police he had gone to the address to check on Mary Louise Low, 69, who lived there. When he arrived, according to reports, he found the front door unlocked and unlatched.

In the house, the reporting party found a man sitting in the living room. He held the man there until police arrived.

The arrested man told police he was sent to the house by the Texas Employment Commission to do maid work. Police checked with TEC and found the man had been there Friday, but had not been assigned work.

The man was arrested, and police found a cold can of Coors in one front pants pocket and a cold can of Pearl Light in the other front pants pocket.

The suspect told police he had brought the beer from home. Police put the beer back in the refrigerator, where they found other cans of beer.

When Mrs. Low arrived home, she told police the beer was hers. The suspect was taken to Lubbock County jail.

In other news, two juveniles were arrested by police after they received a report of a house burglary at 1809 E. 2nd St.

Three officers responded to the call. They arrested one youth in the house's backyard and caught another as he ran down an alley. A window in the house was broken.

City information officer Vaughn Hendrie told police more than $800 in camera equipment was stolen out of his City Hall office between the time he left work Wednesday afternoon and about 9 a.m. Thursday.

Mark Alan Johnson of 8603 Jordan Drive said $750 in camera equipment, including one camera and three lenses, was stolen out of his car while the vehicle was in a repair shop between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. Thursday.

Johnson said he had taken the car to the shop in the 1600-block of 50th Street, and when he went to pick it up the items were missing from the floorboard.

Bluegrass Pioneer Lester Flatt Dies

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer-guitarist Lester Flatt, who teamed with banjo-picker Earl Scruggs to spearhead the rise of bouncy bluegrass music, died Friday. He was 64.

Flatt, a soft-spoken man who usually wore a white cowboy hat, died of heart failure at Baptist Hospital at 1:20 p.m., hospital spokesman Paul Moore said.

Flatt was hospitalized April 23. He suffered a brain hemorrhage late last year and had undergone open heart surgery in 1975.

Flatt and Scruggs teamed up in 1948 and called their group "The Foggy Mountain Boys." They were best-known for "Foggy Mountain Breakdown," which they played during a chase scene in the movie "Bonnie and Clyde," and for "The Ballad of Jed Clampett" from "The Beverly Hillbillies."

Music historians credit the pair with preserving pure bluegrass music and with leading the music to new popularity in the 1960s.

And Flatt, in an interview in February, described his music as his most cherished accomplishment:

"We should be proud of being able to accomplish what we set out to do," he said. "We wanted to be in a field to ourself. We had a sound all our own."

Flatt and Scruggs broke up in 1969 in an apparent dispute over musical direction. Scruggs reportedly favored a more rock-flavored music while Flatt was said to favor more traditional bluegrass.

"He was very talented," Scruggs said in a telephone interview Friday afternoon. "His record speaks for itself as far as his playing and singing. He's going to be missed for a long time by a lot of people.

"He just had a talent that people enjoyed. He was blessed with a good following. We had a lot of good memories together," Scruggs said.

Country music entertainer Johnny Cash said, "He was one of my favorite country singers of all time."

And Chet Atkins said Flatt "will be remembered as one of the important performers in the genesis of country music. He was a very dedicated musician and entertainer."

Flatt, a native of Overton County, Tenn., had appeared on the Grand Ole Opry since 1944. One of his first jobs was playing with "The Bluegrass Boys" with Bill Monroe, known as the father of bluegrass music.

After Flatt and Scruggs broke up, Flatt formed a band called "The Nashville Grass."

After a brain hemorrhage last November, Flatt was sidelined for a time. But in March, he returned to the Grand Ole Opry stage.

"It sure feels good to be back," he told the audience. "I've been on the puny list lately."

Flatt said in February that bluegrass music will never die.

JULIAN BALLEJO

City Man Dies Of Injuries In Car Crash

Julian Ballejo, 23, of 3001 Dartmouth St. died Friday afternoon at Methodist Hospital from injuries he suffered when he drove his car through a building in Lubbock earlier in the day.

Ballejo was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Wayne LeCroy at 1:33 p.m. Friday.

The one-car accident occurred at about 12:45 a.m. Friday. Police said Ballejo was driving east on Erskine Street when he crossed railroad tracks and then lost control of his car. The car skidded broadside about 80 feet, police said, hit a pole, overturned and then slammed into the Jack Fry Wholesale Lumber Co. building.

The fire department's "Jaws of Life" rescue equipment was dispatched to the scene to free Ballejo from his car. He was the only occupant.

Fire engines also were called to the scene because officials initially thought the building was on fire.

Ballejo's death was the city's seventh fatality this year.

He was a graduate of Lubbock High School and was serving in the U.S. Army, stationed at Ft. Sill, White Sands, N.M.

Survivors include his wife, Janie; a daughter, Michelle of the home; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Julian Ballejo of Lubbock; eight brothers, Lupe of Dalhart, Enrique of Amarillo, Emilio of Chicago, Ill., Jose of Lockney, Tony of Houston and Savas, Albert and Ramon, all of Lubbock; and four sisters, Lela Salas of Charco, Edubina Garcia of Lubbock and Janie Cantu and Connie Ruvulcado, both of Houston.

Utility Grants Approved

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Department of Community Affairs has approved 33 grants totaling $371,864 for assistance to low-income persons in paying utility bills, including $10,000 to South Plains Community Action Association, Inc., Levelland.

The grants are being funded through the economic opportunity act and are to be used for utility bills incurred in the Jan. 1, 1978, through June 30, 1978.

NRC Reports On Three Mile Island

WASHINGTON (AP) — Operators of the Three Mile Island nuclear powerplant inadvertently turned what could have been a minor accident into a major one because they could not tell what was really happening inside the reactor, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission staff reported Friday.

The staff recommended improvements, in addition to those already ordered, at most of the nation's nuclear powerplants.

The staff report said the reactor's radioactive core could have escaped severe damage despite mechanical failures, but the operators, by incorrectly diagnosing the problems, took actions which only made matters worse. They also missed chances to make the right moves, the NRC staff said.

The report listed at least half a dozen human errors which apparently contributed to the March 28 accident, which released some radioactivity into the environment and threatened for several days to force evacuations around Harrisburg, Pa.

Most of the operator errors cited by the staff had ben disclosed previously, but the Friday report for the first time sought to explain why they were made and suggest corrective measures for the future.

The report pointed out that the Three Mile Island plant and the eight others designed by Babcock & Wilcox are harder to control than other designs, and nuclear control rooms in general are often poorly designed and make it hard for operators to figure out what's going on during an abnormal event.

The NRC staff said its report was neither final nor complete and "it is quite certain that other actions will be required as the overall review of the (Three Mile Island) accident progresses."

But it recommended improvements in reactor instruments and control displays so that plant operators can read quickly and accurately such important information as the level of cooling-water in the reactor core and how close its temperature-pressure conditions are to the boiling point.

It also recommended equipment improvements, such as better pressure relief valves and controls to reduce the valve-sticking problem that contributed to the Three Mile Island accident.

The report now must be acted on by the five-member Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which will decide what orders should be issued to the country's nuclear powerplants.

The staff report urged further studies of nuclear plant design features, operating characteristics, and accident hazards, and told the NRC that it should improve its own habits.

On at least three previous occasions, it recalled, pressure relief valves stuck open and triggered high pressure emergency injections of cooling water.

The NRC requires reports of abnormal reactor incidents, but the staff said the commission should check them more systematically so that such repeated incidents as the past valve-stickig problems would be spotted as warnings of the possibility of more serious accidents.

King Ranch Chairman Eulogized

KINGSVILLE (AP) — Richard Mifflin Kleberg Jr., board chairman of the giant King Ranch, was eulogized Friday as a "deep-dyed cowboy."

Several hundred persons attended the memorial service held on the 823,000-acre spread run by his family for five generations.

In a eulogy written by ranch biographer Tom Lea, Kleberg was remembered as a man who had run the ranch equally well "from a saddle, a car seat, a cutting chute, or a desk."

During the Mass celebrated in both English and Spanish and sung in part by a mariachi group from nearby Corpus Christi, 14 horsemen flanked a riderless horse in a line by the swimming pool behind the Kleburg house.

The sad-eyed vaqueros, the Mexican-American cowboys who for generations have known no other home than the King Ranch, and no other employer than Klebergs, sat solemnly on the horses in their work clothes, including chaps and red bandanas.

Kleberg, who was 62, died Tuesday in a Corpus Christi hospital where he had been undergoing treatment for two months.

"Little Dick" Kleberg was born on the Laureles division of the ranch. His father, U.S. Rep. Richard M. Kleberg Sr., was first board chairman of the ranch when it incorporated in 1935, serving until his death in 1955, when he was succeeded by his sister, Mrs. Thomas R. Armstrong, granddaughter of the ranch's founder.

In 1968, Little Dick, a graduate of the University of Texas and UT Law School, succeeded his aunt as board chairman.

He is survived by his wife, Mary Lewis Scott Kleberg; three sons, Richard M. Kleberg III of San Antonio, Stephen J. Kleberg and Scott M. Kleberg of Kingsville; one daughter, Sally Espy of San Antonio; two sisters and eight grandchildren.

Honorary pallbearers were Harvey Weil, Richard Reynolds, James Clement, W.B. Yarborough, Leroy Denman, Lawrence Wood, Tobin Armstrong, Greer Sugben, Frank Otterweich, L.A. Walker, S.C. McFarland, Tom Lea, Robert Douherty, John Armstrong, Tom East, Robert East, J.C. Wakefield, Otis West, Charles Cattel, Belton Johnson and Robert Shelton.

There hadn't been such a funeral since October of 1974, when the Kleberg clan, ranch hands and officials and friends gathered to honor Kleberg's uncle, Robert Justus Kleberg Jr., president of the ranch corporation, who died at the age of 78.

"Bob" Kleberg and his brother, Richard M. Kleberg Sr., are credited with developing the hemisphere's first unique breed of cattle, the Santa Gertrudis.

Their father, Robert Justus Kleberg Sr., son of a German immigrant who fought in the war for Texas independence, had been the attorney for the founder of the sprawling spread, steamboat captain Richard King.

King started the ranch that bears his name by purchasing 54,000 acres of the "Santa Gertrudis grant" in South Texas. That was in 1853.

Tech Grad's Father Dies In Dormitory During Ceremonies

A Floydada father died Friday night in a Texas Tech dormitory while his daughter was graduating across the street.

Austin Garrett, 80, and his wife had driven from Floydada Friday to attend the graduation of their daughter, Bravada, 21.

Garrett, however, did not attend the ceremonies with his wife. The elderly father had a history of heart trouble, and decided to wait in his daughter's dorm room in Gaston Hall, his wife said.

Elisa told police she left her sister's dorm room briefly. When she returned about 7:45 p.m., she found her father dead in a chair.

Bravada received her bachelor's degree Friday in psychology from the Texas Tech College of Arts and Sciences.

The body was taken to Resthaven-Singleton-Wilson Funeral Home and will be transferred to Moore-Rose Funeral Home in FLoydada.

CHEMICAL FIRE

ELKTON, Md. (AP) — A fire raged out of control for about two hours Friday night at a chemical company storing an agricultural fungicide, authorities said. The blaze, which broke out at the Central Chemical Co. plant, was brought under control by fire fighters wearing oxygen masks, officials said. There were no reports of injuries.

Lobby Work Heats Up On Rate Move

Common Cause Friday urged the Texas Senate to hold firm for rate payers against a utility company juggernaut it claims is "trying to buy its way with the Texas legislature" in the closing days of the session.

"The utility company concordium is trying to take away the rate payers ability to hold city councils accountable for utility rates and services," said Shelia Cheaney, a lobbyist for the consumer group.

"The Public Utility Commission has to have its feet held to the fire by someone representing the consumers, and right now the cities are the only ones able to do that," Miss Cheaney said of a move by the utility companies to assume control of rate-setting procedures.

"The companies are willing to stuff their monthly statements with lime pie recipes," she continued. "Why are they afraid to give their customers notice of rate increase requests?"

Common Cause is pushing hard against the utility lobby, which Wednesday opposed an amendment requiring utility companies to give their ratepayers written notice of any request for rate increases.

Attorney General Ponders Lubbock Food Ordinance

By NANCY ALLEN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The status of Lubbock's proposed food sanitation ordinance remained unchanged Friday pending resolution of a constitutional dispute between the Lubbock Board of Health and the Texas Department of Health.

The dispute centers on the power of a home rule city such as Lubbock to pass ordinances different from those enacted by a state agency.

According to City Attorney John Ross, when Lubbock City Council began discussing the new ordinance, TDH passed rules its officials said had the effect of state statutes.

If the state-initiated regulations do have the force and effect of statutes, it would be futile for Lubbock to adopt a new food ordinance becauseit would have to duplicate the state rules, Ross told a March meeting of Lubbock City Council.

The matter — which was duscussed during a closed se-ssion of Lubbock Baord of Health Friday — now is in the hands of the Texas Attorney General's office, which has not yet acted. The attorney general serves as legal counsel for TDH.

In other business, the board of health learned from inspector Millard Bruce that that this is a "lean year for rats" around Lubbock, but mosquitoes and flies are posing as big a problem as ever for city and county vector control.

The health department has opened two new distribution centers for rat poison. One is fire station no. 10, at t he corner of 50th and Quirt Streets; the other in the Posey Community Center located at 16th and Vanda Streets.

The centers distribute rat poison and instructions on how to use it, to anyone who needs it.

Since flies breed on organic matter, they are hardest to control, said Bruce. Trash dumpsters, residue from the city's 100,000-some dogs, feedlots jus t outside the city and sour grain from local grain elevators were blamed for the problem.

Bruce said chemical control would be able to "knock the peaks off" the worst months for flies, which are July, August September and October. The city also is trying to keep trash dumpsters cleaned and sprayed, but Bruce explained that is a slow process. He suggested people try to keep the lids closed on the dumpsters as a means of controlling Lubbock's fly population.

Board members also heard suggestions for the improvement of public from Dr. Marjorie Orr, director of the health department.

Dr. Orr was concerned that a high instance of salmonella and shigella indicate ,ublic awareness of the hazards of poor sanitation is low.

Hospital Staff Gets Shot At Cutting Costs

By KIM COBB
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Financial problems at Lubbock County's Health Sciences Center Hospital have become more than just a management concern, as evidenced by recent entries in an employee cost containment contest.

Suggestions for cutting the hospital's spiraling costs range from general suggestions of "cutting down" on unnecessary supplies — to specific plans for reducing accrued employee leave payments.

Recent Lubbock County Hospital District (LCHD) Board of Managers meetings have focused on the teaching hospital's growing financial crunch. Administrators are predicting a cash shortfall of almost $1 million by the end of the year if the trend continues.

The contest was the brainchild of a group of hospital administrators, department heads and auxiliary members who met to make plans for National Hospital Week, which concludes today.

Gerald Bosworth, LCHD executive director; George McGowan, associate executive director of operations for the hospital; and Mary Lemmons, director of nursing services, will review the entries to determine if any of the suggestions can be used.

McGowan reviewed the entries before the contest winners were announced Friday afternoon (with the awarding of several cash prizes donated by the auxiliary). He said he was pretty optimistic some of the suggestions could be applied, though others were "too general" to be of much help.

Perhaps the most detailed entry was submitted by employment manager Robert W. Smithee. Smithee suggests that current hospital policy be changed so that accrued (added by growth over a regular period of time) paid leave benefits would not be paid upon termination of employees either discharged for cause or who resign without notice.

Smithee estimates the change in policy could save the hospital as much as $43,560 a year. His calculations are based on such statistics as past termination histories and the minimum number of accrued leave hours accumulated in six months.

Helen Medlock, a clerk specialist, made a similar suggestion in proposing the paid leave plan accumulate for 90 days before time can be taken off for any reason.

Fred Kirkland, a charge nurse in pediatrics, suggests that since the hospital is having some trouble filling its beds, administrators should allow families with relatives staying in the hospital to stay overnight in empty rooms on a rental basis. He said families with children staying in the pediatrics intensive care unit are already allowed to stay in extra rooms on the floor.

"I suggest, for additional income to the hospital, to use rooms on 3-west (surgery is located on the third floor) as temporary hotel rooms for families throughout the hospital to stay in," Kirkland says. "These rooms are idle now and generate no income to us at all.

"It's obvious the hospital is not growing as rapidly as first projected, so these rooms are costing us now," he continued.

Kirkland listed a few reasons why his plan could be implemented under existing conditions. The rooms are already patrolled by the Tech Campus Police, he said, and housekeeping service is already extended to all rooms — whether in use or not. He added that the rooms could be charged for in advance through the admitting office, but kept separate from normal hospital functions.

Other cost-cutting suggestions include:

—Appointing one person per floor or department to be designated each shift to do all the ordering for their department or unit. The contestant believes this plan could cut down on some duplication of orders.

—Cutting down on the campus mail. The contestant responsible for this suggestion thinks money could be saved by posting one memo per department rather than mailing individual copies.

NO LINES FOR HER — At first glance, this would appear to be one motorist's solution to California's gasoline shortage, but in reality the scene is San Angelo and the occasion was Mary Meacham taking an old storage tank and gas pump to a supplier who had installed new units at the service station she and her husband own. Ration Rejection Lashed By Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, his nearly 2½ years in office marked by fierce confrontations with Congress over energy policy, lambasted the House Friday for "political timidity" in rejecting his standby gasoline rationing plan.

"I was shocked and I was embarrassed for our nation's government," Carter said in challenging the lawmakers to write a plan of their own within 90 days.

But while the president said he won't submit another standby rationing plan, White House planners reportedly were considering a less drastic gasoline-conservation plan for possible use this summer.

Odd-Even Studied

Officials were at work on a proposal for a national odd-even rationing plan like the one now being used in California, administration sources said.

Reacting to Thursday's bruising 246-159 House defeat of his twice-revised standby plan gasoline rationing, Carter accused members of Congress of bowing to "local and parochial interests."

Speaking to reporters and photographers in the Oval Office, the president said House members who voted against the plan "apparently put their heads in the sand" in refusing to give him the tools needed to cope with a major oil shortage.

"If we should have a serious interruption of gasoline and oil supplies, our nation would be unprepared to deal with it," Carter said.

Challenges Congress

"I challenge the Congress within the next 90 days to develop their own rationing plan, fair, equitable and balanced," Carter said, adding:

"Obviously, I will give them every possible assistance if and when they are willing to exhibit the willingness to take this necessary action in the interest of our country."

A law passed in 1975 required the president to send a standby rationing plan to Congress. That was the plan that has been rejected. Carter indicated Friday he has now complied with the 1975 law and is not required — nor does he intend — to submit another plan.

"I wasn't shocked and I wasn't embarassed. But I think the vote was a bad thing," Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House energy and power subcommittee, said in response to Carter's remarks.

Doubts Expressed

Dingell expressed doubts that Congress could produce a rationing plan with any better chance of adoption, but he said it was an option that will be considered.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Energy Committee said earlier in the week that Congress would be unable to write a rationing plan on its own and that the attempt would be futile.

A Jackson aide, Mike Harvey, said Friday that the senator's views on the subject have not changed.

A number of congressinal energy aides claimed Friday that there was little real chance that Congress would take the president up on his challenge.

"Not Back Into Swamp"

"There's no way Congress is going to walk itself back into that swamp," said one Senate aide who declined to be identified publicly.

Dingell said the president currently has broad powers — short of actual rationing authority — to deal with gasoline shortages under the Emergency Petroleum Act and other laws. He could do quite a bit to ease gasoline shortages without seeking congressional approval, Dingell said of Carter.

The congressman said he wasn't certain the administration could order a national odd-even gasoline sales plan, but said it is the type of step the administration should consider.

"I assume he's going to have to do something to bring order to the major shortages that are going to occur this summer, particularly for no-lead gas," the House energy leader said.

While the rejected standby plan was intended to be held in reserve for a major emergency like another Arab oil embargo, the odd-even plan now said to be under consideration is designed for more immediate use.

The plan is still being "toyed around with" by officials of the Office of Management and Budget and the White House Domestic Council and has not been formally submitted to the president, said one source.

Under the plan, the sale of gasoline would probably be restricted to vehicles with even-number license plates on even-numbered days of the month and to vehicles with odd-number plates on odd-numbered days.

California instituted such a plan earlier this week. And a number of other states and metropolitan areas are considering similar plans.

A national plan would provide for a uniform system so that a motorist from one area would know ahead of time what the rules would be when trying to get gas in another area, backers of such a proposal say.

If administration officials determine that the president does not have the authority to invoke such a plan on his own, he has several other options, congressional energy experts suggested

One would be to call on the nation's governors to voluntarily put such a system into effect in their states, they said.

Carter struck a partisan note in his denouncement of congressional critics of the rationing plan by noting that 95 percent of House Republicans compared with 40 percent of the Democrats voted to reject his plan.

Only 7 of the House's 159 Republicans approved the plan.

However, Republican support for the plan in the Senate on Wednesday has generally been credited with allowing the proposal to pass that chamber.

$1 Billion Texas School Finance Plan Advances

ents in recommending a 5.1 percent teacher pay raise.

The raise would be in addition to automatic increases of about 4 percent a year during the early stages of a teacher's career.

"I hope that he (Gov. Bill Clements) will look at the full range (of benefits)," he said when asked about Clements' opposition to the higher figure.

Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, education committee chairman, lost an attempt to spend more money to equalize rich and poor districts and less on teacher salaries.

"The bill as finally passed did not do as much toward equalization as the bill that came out of committee," said Mauzy. "The House bill as it came out of committee is more disequalizing than the Senate bill."

Senators scrapped important sections of Mauzy's bill and opted instead for Snelson's amendments.

In addition to raising salaries 7 percent, Snelson's changes would raise minimum teacher pay to $9,388 a year compared with $8,560 in the Mauzy bill.

"I believe that is psychologically important to the future of education in the state of Texas," Snelson told reporters later.

He won votes to reduce Mauzy's figures for educationally disadvantaged students and maintenance in order to balance the higher teacher salaries.

Both Mauzy and Snelson said a comptroller's estimate shows there will be enough money to fund the school spending bill as finally passed. An estimated $67 million would be left to the Legislature for other spending.

The Senate bill would raise state expenditures on public schools by $457 million for teacher salaries and benefits; $117 million for maintenance and operation; $173 million for equalization aid; and $256 million to hold local costs of the Foundation School Program at approximately today's level.

The House bill provides slightly more, $264 million, to keep local fund assignments from rising.

Other provisions include $427.8 million for increased salaries; $152 million for equalization; $117 million for maintenance and operation costs other than salaries; $10 million to help fast-growth districts cover rising enrollments and $24 million to subsidize full-day full-year kindergarten.

federal government as a major cause of inflation.

The highest-ranking students of six colleges of the university were called to the podium for recognition. They were James L. Cromer, College of Agricultural Sciences; Carla Jean Clark, Sheryl Ann Haler, James Russel Hughes and Gary Michael James, College of Arts and Sciences; Nancy Thomas Rogers and Elizabeth Travis Wood, College of Business Administration; Karen Louise Bailey, College of Education; Jeffrey Scott Greenwood and David Lloyd Roberts, College of Engineering; and Betty Splawn Lowder, College of Home Economics.

Today, individual colleges will confer diplomas in separate ceremonies.

Sarah Weddington, special assistant to President Carter and the daughter of a Lubbock couple, will address the School of Law graduates at a hooding ceremony at 4 p.m. in the University Center Theatre. Approximately 100 students will receive doctor of jurisprudence degrees.

Other college graduation ceremonies will be: 8 a.m., College of Engineering, Municipal Auditorium; 8:30 a.m., College of Arts and Sciences, Municipal Coliseum; 8:30 a.m., College of Agricultural Sciences, University Center Theatre; 9:30 a.m., College of Business Administration, Municipal Auditorium; 10:30 a.m., College of Home Economics, University Center Theatre; and 11 a.m., College of Education, Municipal Auditorium.

Tech Fees Increased By Regents

board to the Texas Tech University Foundation were Vernon Clem, Buddy Forbess, Bob Rawls, Bob Schuster, Anne Snyder, Don Tusha and Nelda Laney. The board also approved the reappointment of 23 directors.

Legislation in Austin regarding university foundations was termed "very dangerous" by Tech's director of public affairs, Bill Parsley, who gave a legislative report to the board.

"Our records are fine," Parsley said, but added that because one university in the state had "problems" regarding state money and foundation money, legislators are considering forbidding state employees (such as school presidents) from serving on foundations.

Although no school was named by Parsley, the situation he described occurred at North Texas State University in Denton. Its school president, C.C. "Jitter" Nolen, resigned April 12 before testifying before a House committee investigating alleged mishandling of funds at the school. He was questioned about the relationship between the school and NTSU Education Foundation Inc., a private fund-raising organization.

Allegations charged that checks originally made out to NTSU were altered to make them payable to the foundation.

Parsley called the provision to eliminate state employees from foundations a "punishment" rider, but added that it is a popular measure with legislators.

In other Austin news, Parsley reported that three bills concerning Tech have passed both houses and have been signed by the governor. They include provisions for malpractice insurance at the School of Medicine, a separate recreation fee for Tech students, and the sale of Tech property on 19th Street.

A bill to appoint two students to the board of regents, sponsored by Rep. Froy Salinas, has no Senate sponsor and Parsley speculated that it has dim prospects for becoming law.

Legislators are still working on appropriations. Parsley noted that so far the Tech School of Medicine has gained $3.5 million over the amount recommended by the Legislative Budget Board.

"Whether we can keep that amount in conference committee, I don't know," he said as he urged regents to use their influence in Austin to fight any cuts in the budget.

Parsley said the extra money will be needed by the school's health facilities in Lubbock, Amarillo and El Paso for operating funds because of an expected increase in students and residents during the next bienniem.

Reactor Leaks On Carrier

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Coolant leaked from a nuclear reactor aboard the aircraft carrier USS Nimitz, apparently through a crack in the compartment surrounding the reactor core, the Navy said Friday.

There was no release of radioactivity, no damage to the core and no danger to the ship's crew or area residents, Lt. Cmdr. Jim Lois told Portsmouth television station WAVY.

The Nimitz was on a flight training operation off the Virginia coast Thursday when the coolant was discovered leaking, Lois said. He said there appeared to be a minor crack in the wall of a compartment surrounding the core, but what caused the crack was not known.

Lois said there are two reactors aboard the Nimitz.

Gasoline Ration Plan Backed By Connally

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The House should have given President Carter standby authority to ration the nation's gasoline, Republican presidential candidate John Connally said Friday.

"The very idea that you don't give a president the power to deal with the situation...We're going to have a crisis...I think he has to have the flexibility of action to deal with it," Connally told a news conference following a speech to the American Cotton Shippers Association.

The House turned the President down by a 246-159 vote after the Senate had approved an amended gasoline rationing plan.

"I agree with the Senate," Connally said.

Connally, 61, former governor of Texas and former secretary of the Navy and Treasury, said the nation's leaders should have started preparing for an energy emergency five years ago.

"...We should have been encouraging greater exploration and development of oil and gas in this country, we should have been shortening the time it takes to build nuclear power plants from 12½ years down to a reasonable time — at least in the range of eight years — we should have been developing solar energy...it was obvious we were extremely vulnerable."

He predicted the California gasoline shortage is going to spread across the country this summer.

In a speech earlier, Connally criticized the Carter administration's handling of the revolution in Iran.

"We've run the Shah of Iran off of his throne over civil rights. Where are civil rights now?"

He said the Unied States should grant the Shah permission to enter this country and called him "a friend for 35 years."

Connally told reporters he believes former California Governor Ronald Reagan is the Republican frontrunner, but he said Reagan might well lose considerable support in the coming months. He said he believes Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., will try for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1980.

Asked what Kennedy was doing to make him believe that, Connally said, "Everything. Every thing he does, every place he goes, every move he makes, the staff that he's assembled, the statements he issues, the work of his committees, everything he does."

He said he thought he could defeat Kennedy but "it would be an extremely difficult race."

Asked whether he would prefer to run against Kennedy or President Carter, Connally quipped, "Neither one. I wish they would both withdraw and I could get elected by acclamation."

Schlesinger Dismissal Demanded

and that it's time to find a new general," Cranston said.

"Obviously it's time for a change," he said. "I don't usually call for people to be ousted. I had hoped Mr. Schlesinger would learn from his mistakes and become more effective. I have lost faith in his ability to do so."

Cranston's view was shared by Rep. Herbert Harris, D-Va., and James Flug, director of Energy Action, a lobby group that focuses on energy issues.

"I think Secretary Schlesinger has blown it as far as gauging what the Energy Department is all about," Harris told an afternoon news conference. He said the Energy Department has been too slow to develop sources of information independent of that offered by the American Petroleum Institute, an oil industry group.

"The president should recognize that the House vote against his rationing plan was essentially a referendum on Schlesinger and (Deputy Energy Secretary John) O'Leary and a reflection of the public's belief that the gasoline shortage has been contrived by DOE and the oil industry," Flug said.

Canal Treaty Changes Hit

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — President Aristides Royo arrived home Friday from Washington and told several thousand cheering supporters in a drenching rainstorm they would never accept U.S. changes in the Panama Canal treaties.

"This shows our people can put up with with a downpour," Royo told the crowd that had waited at Paitilla Airport for more than an hour. "But what they won't put up with is the United States not living up to its treaty obligations."

Royo, 38, drew cheers when he stepped bareheaded onto the speakers platform, shed his soaked coat, loosened his tie, and spoke through a hand-held bullhorn. The rain had fouled the public address system and electronic gear that was to have carried his statement on the national radio network.

In Washington he received assurances from President Carter that the U.S. administration would work for implementing legislation that would comply with the treaties giving the Panama Canal to Panama by the year 2000.

Royo has said he believes legislation now before the U.S. House violates the spirit of the treaties, and has singled out two clauses.

One would place the U.S. agency supervising canal operations until 2000 under the U.S. Defense Department and the other would allow the U.S. president to appoint a U.S. military officer to run the canal in the event of war.

Florida Ruling On Radar Produces Little Concern

By TRAVIS BROWN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock judges and law enforcement officials aren't worried about a Florida judge's ruling that radar isn't reliable enough to measure traffic speed.

"There are 15,000 judges who have ruled the other way," said Justice of the Peace Wayne LeCroy.

The Florida case involved a group of 80 accused speeders who asked that radar evidence against them be suppressed.

LeCroy and other officials doubted the ruling by Dade County Judge Alfred Nesbitt would be felt in Lubbock. They did agree, however, that more people might be prompted to contest speeding tickets.

"We operated for years without radar, and I guess we could do it again," said Sgt. O.C. Guthrie, Department of Public Safety supervisor for Lubbock. "But I would rather receive a ticket by radar than by a patrol unit pacing me," Guthrie said. "There's simply less chance for error with radar."

So far, neither Judge LeCroy or Muncipal Court Chief Judge Drew Littleton have heard a ticket contested because of faulty radar.

"I don't recall anyone ever questioning the validity of a radar reading," LeCroy said. "Most of the cases contested argue that they had a good reason for speeding."

The Florida county judge ruled radar unacceptable as court evidence after he heard expert witnesses testify that errors in clocking can be caused by telephone paging systems, two-way radios or people whistling into citizen band radios.

The judge also saw a television broadcast that appeared to show radar units clocking a tree at 86 mph and a house at 28 mph.

But Sgt. Guthrie said he has never known of a radar unit malfunctioning without the trooper operating it being aware of a faulty reading.

"Our men have a pretty good idea by their own observation of how fast a car or truck is going," Guthrie said. "We use radar primarily to back up our own judgment, as verification of our observations."

The Lubbock police employ eight radar units to check traffic. "We've never had any inaccuracies reported with radar," said Police Chief J.T. Alley.

The chief said radar is the officers' main tool in determining which vehicles are speeding.

Radar readings are the primary evidence considered by both Judge LeCroy and Judge Littleton in determining the guilt of persons ticketed for speeding.

Littleton said police officers must check the operation of their radar units before and after they clock a vehicle they think is speeding. This can be done with the aid of a tuning fork, which produces a certain reaction on the radar.

"Even when contesting tickets, most people will admit, 'I just didn't realize I was going that fast,'" Littleton said.

News Search Bill Advances

AUSTIN (AP) — Newspaper, news magazine, radio and television offices could not be searched for evidence of crimes under a bill that gained preliminary House approval Friday.

The bill (HB2091) advanced on voice vote. A final vote remains necessary to send it to the Senate.

Police could obtain and execute search warrants only if they had reliable information that "fruits of a crime" had been placed in a news office. But judges could not issue search warrants for "mere evidence," such as notes, photographs and the like.

Vegetable Fats May Encourage Cancer, Say Tech Researchers

Yang then teamed up with Felkner and Sproat to study the subject further. Laboratory rats were used in their research.

The rats were fed an adequate diet containing either 2 or 20 percent beef tallow, corn oil or coconut oil. Beef tallow, Yang explained, is the most important source of fat in this country. Corn oil is the most important vegetable oil. Coconut oil is highly saturated.

The rats were also exposed to N-2-fleurenylacetamide, a chemical which causes liver cancer in male rats and breast cancer in females.

At the end of the research phase, the Texas Tech team found significantly more liver tumors in the male rats fed diets containing corn oil than those fed either coconut oil or tallow oil. The higher the fat content of the diet, the greater the effect.

The findings were even more significant for the female rats. Those fed the 20 percent fat diet formed cancers at the same rate with tallow as with corn oil. But at the 2 percent level, corn oil was associated with far more tumors than was beef tallow, while coconut oil seemed to have the least effect.

"Our findings suggest," Yang commented, "That cancer is not one disease, but a family of diseases.

"Fat is very detrimental for the development of cancer," he said, "and the more fat that is eaten, the more detrimental the effect."

The effect on females is even greater than on males, probably because hormones play a significant role in the development of breast cancer. In females, animal fat is as bad as corn oil in producing cancer; the more animal fat injested, the greater the incidence of breast cancer."

Yang pointed out that it would be unwise for anyone to entirely eliminate fat from the diet, because it is necessary for the normal functioning of the body. But he said that his findings indicate that Americans should eat less fat than they do.

The initial research project indicates that the polyunsaturated diet widely recommended in this country as a means of preventing heart disease may have a detrimental effect on the cancer rate.

And Yang adds that he personally is doubtful the diet is even beneficial toward preventing heart disease. "I do not believe that changing saturated to unsaturated fats will reduce the incidence of heart disease," he said.

Yang and his associates hope to shed more light on the relationships between diet and cancer by continuing their animal research. An immediate project is to study the effect on rats of the same diets, but with the addition of Vitamin C to determine whether this produces any change in the cancer rate.

Legislator Alleges Misinformation Effort

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, asserted Friday that an unnamed Texas Education Agency official and other educators had endangered a back-to-basics bill by spreading misinformation.

She made her complaint in a personal privilege speech to the House.

Teachers and administrators are lobbying against the bill, spurring children and parents to oppose it, "and I have become the worst thing since Attila the Hun," Mrs. Delco said.

When one legislator suggested sending Mrs. Delco's remarks in writing to Education Commissioner Marlin Brockette, Speaker Bill Clayton replied, "I expect he's already gotten the message."

The bill repeals most statutory curriculum requirements and specifies that the total number of instructional hours given in a school system include a mix of both "basic skills" and "work skills." In high school, at least 20 percent of the hours would have to be "work skills" and 60 percent "basic skills."

Mrs. Delco says she introduced the bill because some high school students take so many electives that they graduate without having a firm grasp of basic skills.

After passing the House without debate, the bill suddenly ran into trouble when educators and parents noticed the list of "basic skills" omitted fine arts, including such activities as band and drama.

She told the House she was willing to accept amendments including fine arts in the basic skills category.

Mrs. Delco told the House a Texas Education Agency staff member had called a number of people and told them the bill would "basically destroy fine arts programs" because they were not listed as basic skills.

"The Texas Education Agency is charged with supporting us and not supplanting us," she said.

She said that in some school districts, principals had used loudspeaker systems to urge efforts to kill the bill and had even sent mimeographed notes home to parents.

Mrs. Delco said there is widespread misinterpretation of the bill as dictating the kind of courses individual pupils must take.

"There is no attempt to allocate student time or to affect the student's right to exercise freedom of choice in personal curriculum or extra-curricular activities," she said.

Legislators have been so "deluged with misinformation" that "this fine piece of legislation stands in danger of not becoming law in this state," Mrs. Delco said.

ARRIVES FOR DIVORCE HEARING — Bianca Jagger, wife of rock star Mick Jagger arrives at a Los Angeles court Friday for a hearing in her divorce suit. She has filed in London and Los Angeles but seeks a trial in Los Angeles. Jagger wants the trial in England, and did not appear for the hearing. Bianca Jagger Wants California Divorce

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Wiping away tears, Bianca Jagger told a judge Friday that she hoped even after she had filed for divorce that she and rock star Mick Jagger would reconcile.

"There was always a possibility I would go back with my husband," Mrs. Jagger testified. "That was always in the back of my head, your honor."

Superior Court Judge Harry T. Shafer noted that Mrs. Jagger had claimed that her husband, lead singer for the Rolling Stones, was having extramarital relations with another woman.

"Still you thought that you would go back with your husband?" the judge asked. "Yes sir," Mrs. Jagger said, fighting back tears. "We had very serious conversations during this time, and there was always a hint we would go back together."

For that reason, Mrs. Jagger said, she did not pursue the divorce petition she had filed in England in 1978.

She was called to the witness stand in an effort to determine whether the divorce case should be tried here or in London.

Jagger declined to appear at Friday's hearing. But the judge said he felt Mrs. Jagger should testify anyway since she holds the burden of proof in seeking to transfer the case to Los Angeles.

Jagger seeks to have the case tried in England, since California's liberal community property laws would probably work in Mrs. Jagger's favor. She is seeking half of an estimated $25 million she says Jagger earned during their years together. His lawyers say his net worth is about $4 million.

Mrs. Jagger's attorney, Marvin Mitchelson, presented to the judge three passports issued to Mrs. Jagger in England and her native Nicaragua.

She testified that the passports showed she had spent 1977 and 1978 traveling to Spain, France, Turkey, Greece and the West Indies and had not spent 12 consecutive months in England — the period required for a divorce there.

When she does stay in England, Mrs. Jagger said, she occupies a house owned by her husband in the Chelsea section of London. But she said Jagger has threatened to evict her from the home, which she described as being "in a very poor condition of disrepair."

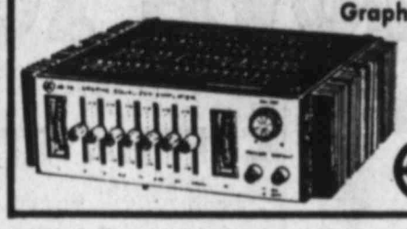

The Jaggers have a daughter, Jade, 7, who is attending school in England. They were married at St. Tropez, France, in 1971 and separated in 1978.

Tougher Tax Pledged By Administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under pressure from liberal members of the House, President Carter's chief economic adviser promised Friday the administration will seriously consider toughening a proposed tax on the oil industry.

"The problem we face," said first-term Rep. James Shannon, D-Mass., "is that many of us feel the president's high-water mark (maximum tax) is only about four inches off the ground."

At a House Ways and Means Committee hearing on Carter's tax, Shannon told Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, "We are going to need more from you ... than saying you are willing to talk with us."

"We don't claim all wisdom," Schultze replied. "But we took a lot of time putting this together." He agreed that administration representatives will meet with congressional aides to discuss a tougher tax before the committee resumes hearings on the tax next Wednesday.

In an effort to reduce U.S. dependence on imported oil, Carter has announced plans to begin removing federal price controls from domestic oil starting June 1. He has asked Congress to approve a "windfall-profits" tax that would take away part of the increased revenues flowing to the oil industry because of decontrol.

A third stage of the Carter program would spend revenues from the tax to help the poor pay their fuel bills, aid mass transit and finance development of alternative energy sources.

Schultze estimated Carter's proposal would allow the oil companies to keep about 29 cents out of each $1 of revenue resulting from decontrol. Shannon and other liberals want to cut below 29 cents.

Shannon's concerns about the toughness of Carter's tax proposal echoed sentiments expressed by other, liberal members of the committee in three days of hearings this week on the plan.

Rep. Charles Vanik, D-Ohio, said Carter put Congress in a bind "by creating this windfall and then asking us for (the tax). You've created a conflagration," he told Schultze.

Rep. Frank Guarini, D-N.J., urged the administration to delay decontrol by a year or two to give the nation time to develop an energy policy. "It's the blue-collar worker — the forgotten American — who can't afford the extra" cost of decontrol, he said.

Schultze said the Carter plan tries to draw a balance between the demands of oil-industry backers, who want the oil companies to be able to keep all the tax, and liberals, who want the government to take a greater share.

The Treasury Department estimates decontrol will raise oil-company revenues by a total of $15.4 billion through 1981. Royalty payments to owners of land where oil is produced, state and local taxes and federal income taxes will leave the industry with $8 billion.

Carter's proposed tax would reduce the total to $6 billion.

Schultze conceded that decontrol will increase inflation slightly — by about 0.1 percent this year and 0.2 percent a year in 1980 through 1982. Because the action will increase fuel prices, it also is expected to slow economic growth by 0.1 percentage point a year, he added.

"A small although unwelcome increase in today's inflation rate is the price we have to pay for a moe rational and effective energy policy," Schultze said. "Over the longer term, however, the actions taken by the president will work in the direction of reducting inflationary pressures."

On the other side of the Capitol, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce praised Carter's decision to decontrol but complained that the new tax would discourage the search for new oil.

Jack Carlson, chief economist for the Chamber, told the Senate Finance subcommittee on energy that while decontrol would boost U.S. oil production by 1 million barrels a day by 1985, the tax would cut that back by as much as 200,000 barrels a day.

Brokerage Houses In Negotiations For Possible Merger

NEW YORK (AP) — Two of Wall Street's largest and oldest brokerage houses — Shearson Hayden Stone Inc. and Loeb Rhoades, Hornblower & Co. — are discussing a possible merger, spokesmen for the two firms said Friday.

Should the two companies join forces, it would create one of the brokerage industry's largest firms. Just how large the combined company would be is unclear, because Loeb Rhoades is privately held. But it is believed by analysts to be the nation's fourth-largest brokerage firm, while Shearson Hayden Stone is ranked sixth.

A combination of the two would probably create a firm whose size would be second only to industry giant Merrill Lynch & Co. Inc.

Spokesmen for both firms confirmed reports that they were negotiating, but would not elaborate. "They are talking, but we have no details," said Bob Frost, a spokesman for Loeb Rhoades, who indicated there might be further news over the weekend.

Senior officials of the two companies could not be reached for comment.

The merger, if consummated, would apparently push the combined company past No. 2-ranked E.F. Hutton Group Inc.

Investment houses, which are often the agents for mergers of other companies, have themselves been one of the main areas for merger activity in recent years.

Shearson Hayden Stone and Loeb Rhoades themselves are both the products of mergers. Shearson Hayden Stone was created five years ago when Hayden Stone merged with Shearson Hammill. Loeb Rhoades Hornblower gained its present form last January when Loeb Rhoades acquired Hornblower Weeks Trask & Noyes.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q. About five years ago, I trusted a "friend" who is a stock broker and invested $20,000 in an "income" mutual fund. She told me I would receive 8½ percent on my investment but I did not know she would get a huge commission. I paid $11.02 a share and the shares are now worth $10.05 each.

I have been to three other brokers. Two say "hold." One says "sell." I am a widow, 64, receiving $239.10 a month from Social Security and $213 a month from a civil service disability pension. What do you advise? I have some other investments.

A. My advice is in line with the two brokers who say "hold." Although the mutual fund you named in your letter has never paid 8½ percent, its current yield — annual dividend divided by market price — is now 8.1 percent.

For almost all the time you have held that investment, its yield has been quite good — better than you could get most other places. That fund is well-suited for a retired person.

If you redeem those fund shares, you could get a higher yield on six-month savings certificates, U.S. Treasury bills and some other investments — right now. But, for the long run, you should do just as well keeping what you have.

Your only real complaint is the commission your broker friend collected when you put your money into that income fund. Without being too hard on you, I have to say that you could have learned about the commission charge by reading the very first page of that fund's prospectus.

By studying the prospectus, you would have learned that the value of the fund's shares can rise or fall. To date — after taking the commission into account — that value has declined only moderately. Meanwhile, the dividends paid by the fund have provided a good yield.

Q. You wrote that the new Series HH, U.S. Savings Bonds will go on sale beginning in January 1980 and will pay interest by check at a straight 6 percent a year. You explained that the owner of a $1,000 HH bond will receive a $30 check every six months.

This seems to be an improvement over the present Series H bonds, on which the early interest checks are small and the later ones larger, so that the interest averages out to about 6 percent over 10 years.

But does this mean that a Series HH bond will not be redeemable before its 10-year maturity?

A. No. As is the case with the present H bonds, you will be able to redeem an HH bond for cash anytime after six months from the bond's issue date.

There will, however, be a penalty for redeeming HH bonds purchased with cash. So, if you buy a $1,000 HH bond for cash and redeem it before it reaches its 10-year maturity, you will get less than $1,000 back.

Meanwhile, of course, you will have been collecting 6 percent a year interest. The redemption penalty will have the effect of reducing the total interest you receive during the less than 10 years you hold the HH bond.

That penalty will not be applied to any HH bonds you acquire in exchange for Series E bonds or the new Series EE bonds which go on sale in January.

Complicated? You know it is. This is but one sideshow in the three-ring circus caused by the recent changes in U.S. Savings Bond rules.

Are you ready for the kicker? Although Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal announced changes in the savings bond program — amid much fanfare — on Jan. 10, there has been no disclosure of what the penalty will be for redeeming HH bonds before maturity.

Forbes In Arabic Opens New Markets

NEW YORK (AP) — When the quadrupling of oil prices in 1973 sent shock waves around the world, business magazine editor Malcolm Forbes saw the handwriting on the wall — only this time the writing was in Arabic and it read "petrodollars."

Forbes knew Arabic-speaking members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were intensely interested in U.S. products and technology. He also was aware there was no business publication in Arabic to give them the lowdown on the United States and U.S. companies.

The result was Forbes in Arabic — a yearly compendium of articles appearing in the domestic Forbes, plus pieces of special interest to Arab countries as well as a directory of U.S. companies doing or interested in starting business in the Middle East.

In September, more than 23,000 government officials, technocrats, educators and journalists in 20 countries in the Middle East and North Africa will get the fifth annual edition of the magazine.

"When OPEC first formed and oil prices quadrupled, the enormous consequence of all this became apparent for U.S. companies, Forbes said recently in an interview in his Manhattan office. "I Knew Business Week and Fortune had their overseas editions. But we had never gone much into overseas circulation because our market is basically U.S. business. So this whole thing was like a virgin territory."

Editorial and ad copy are written and translated in New York, then flown to Cairo for typesetting. The paste-up in Arabic is filmed there, and the film is then flown to the Netherlands, where the magazine is printed, packaged and shipped back to Egypt by sea. Distribution is handled through Al Aqbar, a Cairo daily.

Although the magazine is distributed free of charge to a select list of readers, Forbes in Arabic is by no means a philanthropic endeavor.

The countries in which it circulates represent what Forbes senior editor Jeff Grigsby calls "a vast new market for advertisers." Although he declined to reveal the profits on the first four editions, he said the effort "is definitely worth it."

The 190-page 1978 edition contained more than 40 full-page ads ranging in price from $4,080 to $2,740 each. In addition, firms pay for a listing in the company directory at the back of the book.

Grigsby who, along with Egyptian-born Yassin El-Ayouty, oversees the production of the magazine, said an unforeseen obstacle has been the difficulty in working up an effective and accurate circulation list.

"We want to make sure the magazine is going to the right people, and we want to make sure their names and addresses are correct — in Arabic," Grigsby said. The original lists were purchased from outside sources, and Forbes now has a representative in each country responsible for updating and checking.

Another problem, Grigsby said, was the quality of the ad copy in Arabic. Much of it was grammatically and stylistically incorrect — Although translated at fees he said amounted to "highway robbery."

"In the beginning, we didn't really look closely at the ad copy — that's the advertisers' business," he said. "But then we started to get feedback from readers who assumed we were responsible for every word in Arabic in the magazine, and they had a lot to criticize."

El-Ayouty, a journalist and political science professor, advises on style and content in Arabic. Although spoken Arabic varies widely in lexicon and pronunciation from Iraq to Tunisia, written — or classical — Arabic remains the same.

Although at least 16 Arab states have severed formal ties with Egypt in protest over Cairo's peace treaty with Israel, El-Ayouty said his information was that the day-to-day business of the Arab world with Egypt — which bears directly on Forbes' distribution system — would not be seriously affected.

"The boycott is mainly theoretical and psychological," he said. "These decisions do not affect functional aspects of the League of Arab States like the Arab Postal Union and other agencies."

Only "Forbes" appears on the Arabic edition.

"It's really a play on words that is very American," El-Ayouty said. "How could it be explained in countries as economically diverse as Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Libya?"

Decline In Dollar Influence Predicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — A gradual decline in the role of the dollar in the world economy was predicted Friday by Anthony M. Solomon, undersecretary of the treasury for monetary affairs.

"The dollar's present role is itself the product of an evolutonary process — a process that will continue, and that may bring a reduction in the dollar's relative role in the future," Solomon said.

"Indeed, some of the main factors in the evolution of the dollar's role would appear to suggest some gradual reduction."

—The size of the U.S. economy has declined, compared with the rest of the world, over the past 20 years. In 1960, the United States produced 30 percent of all the goods and services in the world. In 1978 that was down to 23 percent.

"I would expect the trend to continue to some extent during the 1980s," Solomon said, "as developing nations continue to grow faster than the world's average, and the spread of technology enables other nations to move closer to the high levels of production and living standards enjoyed by the United States."

—More credit has become available in other countries compared with the amount available for lending in the United States. In 1964, the U.S. market provided about $80 billion dollars in new credit, while Japan and West Germany combined provided only about half that much. By 1977 the figures were $400 billion for the United States and $250 billion for Japan and Germany.

But he noted that it is still a lot easier to borrow large sums of money in the United States than in other countries.

"Given the large volume of international credit that will be needed in coming years," he said, "a reduction in the role of the dollar in practical terms implies willingness of other countries to open their money and capital markets to match their heavier weight in the international economic system.

"Some progress has been and is being made," he added. "More is needed." At a conference sponsored by the weekly National Journal, Solomon spoke favorably of efforts to put international controls on the estimated $700 billion that now exists outside the United States in what is called the Eurodollar market.

Denis Healey, the former British chancellor of the exchequer, once described this money ominously as an "atomic cloud of footloose funds." Solomon was less apprehensive, saying the Eurodollar market has performed services for the world economy and was not a source of inflation.

But he said some controls would be helpful, those requiring Eurodollars be kept in reserve, for example.

Broker Sentenced For Fraud

NEW YORK (AP) — A commodities broker who was accused of defrauding investors of almost $6 million through phony gold purchase schemes was sentenced Friday to 10 years in prison.

U.S. District Judge Kevin Thomas Duffy imposed the penalty on Steven Arabatzis, 43, who pleaded guilty last February to four counts of mail fraud involving fraudulent schemes.

Before being led away, he embraced his wife in the courtroom and, amidst tears, repeatedly cried, "I'm going to jail for 10 years!"

The case against Arabatzis marked the first prosecution in the nation for fraud in the sale of contracts for deferred delivery of gold, according to U.S. Attorney Robert B. Fiske Jr.

The broker's activities also involved fraudulent means to sell options on the London commodity exchange and contracts to participate in commodity pools.

Arabatzis operated two Wall Street firms, using 60 salesmen. He relied on the addresses "to create an impression of respectability with out-of-state residents," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Audrey Strauss, who prosecuted the case. The case involved some 1,300 victims around the country.

"Behind the false impression conveyed by long-distance telephone and mail was no more than a high-pressure telephone sales operation, in which Arabatzis and his salesmen used fraudulent representations to induce people to send money for commodity investments which, in almost all cases, resulted in a total loss for the investor," the government claimed.

Helena Rubenstein Sale To Japanese Firm Off

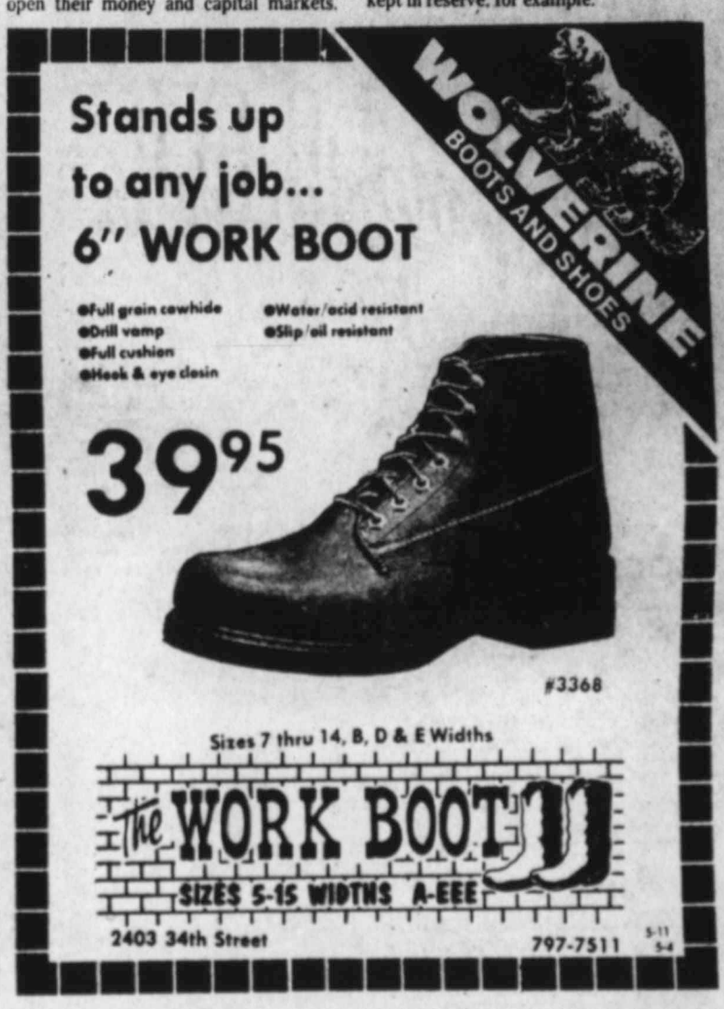

NEW YORK (AP) — Helena Rubenstein is not going to Japan.

Colgate-Palmolive Co. and Kao Soap Co. said Friday they have broken off negotiations for Kao, a major Japanese producer of household products, to acquire Helena Rubenstein Inc., the cosmetic maker.

The two companies said on April 6 they had reached an agreement in principle for Kao to acquire Helena Rubenstein for $75 million, payable over four years.

Historical records show ice skating was a popular pastime in England as early as 1015.

U.S. Soldier Killed By Terrorists In Turkey

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Leftist terrorists fired at a group of U.S. servicemen in suburban Istanbul on Friday, killing one and slightly wounding another, police said. An anonymous caller said an underground Marxist group that killed a U.S. soldier last month in Izmir claimed responsibility.

The servicemen were waiting for a bus to reach a NATO ammunition depot at nearby Cakmakli when gunmen fired from a passing car and sped away, authorities said.

The dead soldier, identified by Turkish police as Thomas Mosley, died on the way to a hospital. In Washington, the Pentagon declined further identification of Mosley until next of kin were notified.

The wounded soldier, identified by a Pentagon spokesman as Ronald R. Andrade, 23, of Ypsilanti, Mich., suffered light wounds, police said. Turkish police had identified the wounded man as Dwight Muir.

A Pentagon spokesman, Lt. Col. Larry Joyce, said Muir was one of five soldiers waiting for the bus, but was not injured. Joyce did not further identify Muir or the other servicemen.

An anonymous caller to a daily newspaper said the attack was the work of the "Turkish People's Liberation Army-Front and Marxist-Leninist Armed Propaganda Squad."

The caller said their targets were "mercenaries serving at U.S. installations in Turkey" and pledged "the struggle will continue until we phase out imperialism in our country."

The U.S. State Department in Washington said the attack was a senseless act of terrorism.

Thomas Reston, a department spokesman, said U.S. and Turkish authorities were discussing additional security. Reston said the Turkish government had expressed condolences.

American Embassy officials refused to give further identification of the victims before next of kin were notified.

Official sources in Istanbul said the servicemen were attached to a NATO munitions supply depot jointly run by Turkish and American military in Cakmakli, north of Istanbul and close to Atakoy.

A month ago Master Sgt. Edward E. Claypool, 43, was slain in a similar attack in the Aegean port city of Izmir. His companion, Staff Sgt. Jeffrey P. Vail, was wounded.

Violence between rightists and leftists in Turkey claims about five lives a day despite four months of martial law.

In March, a bomb was thrown into the garden of the American Embassy in Ankara. Some diplomats said at that time that they feared the incident might indicate a new confrontation between right and left over the presence of allied troops in this NATO nation.

During such a showdown in 1972, 10 members of the leftist Turkish People's Liberation Army and three British NATO tehnicians they had kidnapped were killed in a shootout with security forces in eastern Turkey.

Some government leaders blame the domestic violence on foreign provocateurs, alleging, without supplying evidence, that the CIA, Soviet Union, Greece and Arab organizations are involved.

Other leaders say political terrorism exists in Turkey because the country is undergoing rapid change. They note that large numbers of the poor are moving to cities, while an unemployment of 20 percent foments unrest.

The violence in Turkey has spread from campus riots of the 1960s to protests by a broad sector of workers, jobless youths and rival ethnic groups. At the end of last year, bloody fighting between minority Shiite and majority Sunni Moslems in southeast Turkey claimed 111 lives and led to the imposition of martial law in 13 provinces.

Five persons were killed in three incidents Thursday. On Friday leftist fugitives engaged in a shootout with police in a suburb of Istanbul. Two terrorists were killed, another terrorist and a policeman were wounded.

Turkey has its first taste of political violence in late 1960s when rebellious youth movements were sweeping Europe and the United States.

Leftist gangs, made up mostly of university students, disrupted the nation with kidnap murders, huge demonstrations and bombings.

A two-year martial law crackdown in 1971-72 put many terrorists in jail.

Released through a 1974 amnesty, they reorganized. In the meantime rightist political groups, primarily the National Movement Party, trained and equipped rival para-military groups of youths.

A war between rightist and leftist youths has been escalating.

Helpful Magazine Editor Aids Befuddled Spelling Victims

B DIMENSIONS
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal May 12, 1979

NEW YORK (NEA) — Misspellings and related errors are estimated to cost U.S. companies $3.2 billion a year.

That figure includes only the secretarial time spent consulting reference books and correcting mistakes. It does not even take into account the embarrassment of learning too late of the misspelled word in that crucial report.

"Misspelling is a ceaseless, continuing problem," says Alan Lloyd, founder of Today's Secretary magazine and director of career advancement for The Olsten Corp.

It is more of a problem today than it was years ago, Lloyd adds.

"Children are reading fewer books and watching more television," he explains.

That means youngsters see fewer words in print. And because words are frequently misused or mispronounced on television, they have trouble using those words in their writing.

That's not to mention the problems caused by television advertisers who persist in coining new spellings, such as "kwik" and "nite."

Lloyd sees no easy solution to the nation's poor mark in spelling-short of switching to an all-phonetic system. But he does have a method of mastering common spelling demons.

And his program does not require memorizing exception-fraught rules, such as that one about "i" before "e".

"First you have to learn to what kind of misspelling you are error-prone," Lloyd says. For example, you may have trouble distinguishing between words ending in "tion" and "sion" or "able" and "ible."

To help identify spelling difficulties, Lloyd has compiled a list of the 100 "most threatening" words, based on their frequency of use and likelihood of being misspelled. Some of the words-like "too" and "their"-are more usage problems than spelling problems.

Lloyd suggests testing your spelling by having the entire list dictated to you. The average person will miss about 15 words, he says.

Attack your mistakes one at a time.

"Teach your fingers to spell by writing the word over and over until you're not spelling it to yourself," Lloyd advises. Start slowly and gradually build up speed.

This writing can be done with a typewriter or pencil and paper, whichever you use more frequently.

"Then write a sentence using two or three of the words," LLoyd says. Taking the top three words on the list, you might come up with, "If the occasion occurred, I would recommend him."

Continue composing sentences until all your spelling words are used. (The sentences don't have to make perfect sense.)

Practice the sentences until you can write them without hesitation. Repeat them once each Monday morning, adding any new spelling demons you encounter.

"The likelihood is that you will now be vaccinated (against those misspellings) for the week," promises Lloyd.

Here is Alan Lloyd's list of 100 "most threatening" spelling words. To become more confident (80) and avoid criticism (22) too (67), immediately (31) proceed (10) to separate (18) the words you can spell from those you cannot.

Childless Woman's Grief Led To Special Day

Anna Jarvis (1864-1948) never had a child of her own — except, of course, for the holiday she founded in 1907.

Still grieving two years after the death of her own mother on the second Sunday of May in 1905, Miss Jarvis persuaded a church in her West Virginia home town to mark the sad anniversary with the first Mother's Day observance.

The traditional association of the holiday with flowers began that day when Miss Jarvis provided 500 carnations for the mothers in the congregation. The carnation had been her mother's favorite flower.

Mother's Day caught on quickly, sparked by thousands of letters written by Miss Jarvis to public officials.

The governor of her state issued the first Mother's Day proclamation in 1910, urging citizens to "attend church on that day and wear white carnations." Other states followed suit.

The holiday was first proclaimed nationwide in 1914, with President Woodrow Wilson calling for "a public expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of this country."

In later years, Miss Jarvis denounced as "profiteers" those who cashed in on the day's commercial potential. That included florists after the price of a carnation went up to $1.

More to Miss Jarvis' liking were religious services, letters home and other simple acts to — as she put it — "enable poor and rich alike to keep the day dedicated to the being whose name is first lisped by a little child and the last whispered by the dying soldier — Mother."

The custom that Miss Jarvis started will be recognized again Sunday.

Utah Woman Named 44th Mother Of Year

NEW YORK (AP) — Frances Davis Burtenshaw, a 63-year-old mother of eight from Logan, Utah, was named Friday as the 44th National Mother of the Year by the American Mothers Committee.

"If people would have handed me a million billion dollars it would have not meant to me as much as being the American Mother of the Year," Mrs. Burtenshaw said as she accepted the award during a luncheon at the Waldorf-Astoria attended by about 430 people.

Mrs. Burtenshaw, who was selected from a field of 50 mothers — one from each state — was shaking with excitement as she was kissed by her husband of 37 years, Claude, and her son Bruce, 31, and his wife, Cathy, who came from Layton, Utah, for the event.

Asked why she thought she received the award, Mrs. Burtenshaw said, "I just guess because I love people and I love children." She has 17 grandchildren.

The new Mother of the Year said she has never worked outside of the home.

Call Mom Before 5 p.m.

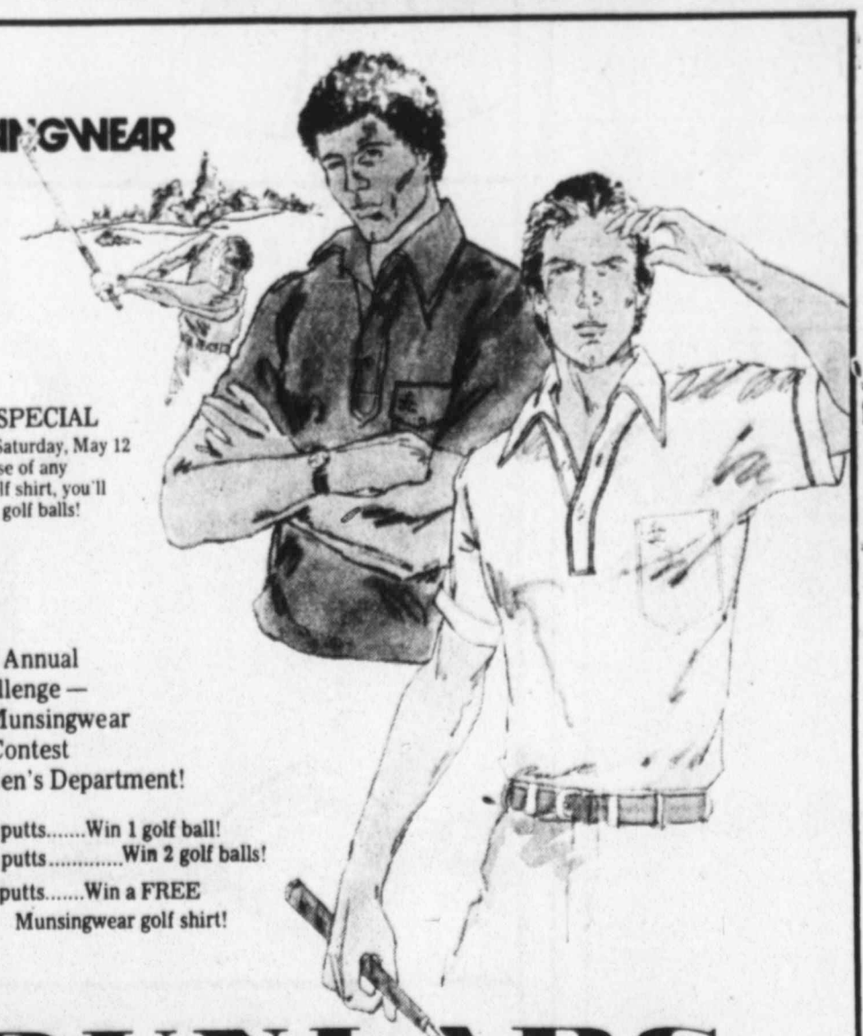

If you want to save money and time this year when you call on Mother's Day, the best time to call is before 5 p.m. on Sunday, according to Bob Dunbar,Southwestern Bell division manager in Lubbock.

Out-of-state long distance calls placed before 5 p.m. Sunday get a 60 percent discount. After 5 p.m. the discount drops to 35 percent, Dunbar said.

Dunbar also added that most people place their Mother's Day calls between 9 and 11 a.m. and 7 and 11 p.m.

Antique Show Attracts Many

By BEVERLY O'BRIANT
Family News Staff

Antique dealers from all over Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Colorado have gathered in Lubbock for the Lubbock Antique Show which began Friday and will run through Sunday. The show, which is being held in the Texas National Guard Armory, features exhibits of furniture, jewelry, dolls, cut glass, art glass, clocks and children's furniture.

Present for the show is Mrs. Marge Baum of Midwest City, Okla., president of the National Association of Dealers in Antiques. Mrs. Baum has held all offices in the organization, a total of 16 years experience with the group.

The national organization serves the United States, Canada, Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Some of the tenets of the association are honesty of the dealers, holding to firm pricing which reflects the true value of the antiques, and being willing as a dealer to back up the merchandise they sell. In fact, a bill the group has been trying to pass in Congress will help protect the consumer against fraud.

The bill, which is still in committee, would require that glass companies mark their glass with permanent markers to indicate age. At present, the companies are willing to mark their glass every ten years, which would be of great value, noted Mrs. Baum. This action would enable consumers to distinguish antique from new glass.

Approximately 24 dealers are represented at the Lubbock show. This antique show is the oldest continuous show in the state of Texas, according to Mrs. Baum. Some of the dealers who have exhibits in the Lubbock show have an "open shop," that is, they have an antique shop and go to shows. Other dealers do nothing but attend shows with their merchandise.

Mrs. Baum pointed out that according to the Wall Street Journal, the three most sound investments are in land, precious gems and antiques. However, she said, "the time will come when it will all be gone. All of the antiques will be in private collections."

For the time being, antique collecting has something for everyone. Whole family are known to collect various things, with such things as sheriff badges and tobacco tins becoming of interest to men. The type of people buying antiques has changed according to Mrs. Baum. Many collectors today are young people, especially couples, who are trying to furnish a new home.

Young people have found that antique furniture is of a higher quality than new furnishings and retains its monetary value as well. Mrs. Baum noted that antiques never go below the value paid and often increase in value if well cared for.

MRS. MARGE BAUM

An important thing to remember, said Mrs. Baum, is to buy good quality antiques. If a person buys a piece that is chipped or cracked because it is less expensive, he will never be able to get rid of it. That piece will not retain its value.

In the world of antiques, there is something for everyone. People in various parts of the country prefer different types of antiques. Antiques can be an investment or a frequently used and cherished part of a home. At the Lubbock Antique Show, a wide sampling of the variety of objects found in the world of antiques are on display.

Children's Theatre Registration Set

The Pied Piper Players (Children's Theatre) will be holding registration for the coming year at the Lubbock Theatre Center, 2508 Avenue P, today from 9:30 a.m. to 12 noon.

Workshop classes are conducted at the Theatre Centre each Saturday during the year (excluding school holidays.) Times for the classes are: Grades 1-3, 9:30-10:30 a.m.; grades 4-6, 10:30 a.m.-12 p.m.; grades 7-9, 12-1:30 p.m.; and high school, 1:30-3 p.m. All classes are limited to 20 students.

Four productions are given each year, which include three productions performed by workshop students and a dance production sponsored by the Pipers, who provide the technical staff.

DEADLINES

Any information for a daily edition must be in our office two days in advance of publication.

Sunday edition deadlines are 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday for articles with pictures and noon the preceding Wednesday for articles only. Only Friday and Saturday weddings will appear on Sunday; wedding announcements must run within five days of the event.

Engagement announcements must be submitted at least five weeks prior to the wedding date.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY
DR. PAUL E. RUBLE

Dear Dr. Ruble: I am a 58-year-old man. About 18 years ago I had a cerebral hemorrhage and was hospitalized for a month. I recovered with no ill effects. Recently I had an opportunity to take a scuba diving course. One doctor says I must be out of my mind, and my personal physician refuses to clear me for the diving, although he says he doubts it would cause another damage to others as well as myself should I have a sudden hemorrhage. So far I have made two dives, one to 85 feet, with no ill effects. Can you give me some advice? — J.C.S.

What are you trying to prove? Certainly, at 58 and with your history of cerebral hemorrhage, there are more suitable sports to occupy your time than scuba diving. You beat the mortality odds in recovering from you hemorrhage and should feel fortunate.

The driving-diving analogy doesn't hold water, either. Driving a car does not involve the depth pressures and blood gas factors involved in scuba diving. Finally, what advice are you seeking? You've had some sensible advice and are going ahead on you own despite it.

No one can quote odds of your chances of having another cerebral hemorrhage, because there probably are very few divers around with you medical history. What do they say down at the school? What does your insurance agent have to say? My advice — hang up the tank and fins.

• • •

Dear Dr. Ruble: Do you recommend hot baths for a person with arthritis? — Mr. P.R.

Certainly, if it helps, and it often does. Many people find them relaxing. It may help relive pain from the inflammation and relax muscles. I also recommend soaking the hands in a bowl of hot water for the same reasons. A nice, reasonably hot bath never hurt an arthritic. Whirlpools may give increased benefit, if available. For a fuller outline of a therapy program for arthritics, see my booklet on "How You Can Control Arthritis." Other readers can obtain a copy by sending 50 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to me, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill., 60611.

• • •

Dear Dr. Ruble: What do you think of a man in his early 70s with a slight case of diabetes who has six shots of scotch and water in the afternoon, then maybe nine to 12 more about 10 p.m.? In between he has a good supper. He goes to bed about 1:30 a.m but says he is up every two or three hours. Could this cause a heart attack? What could happen to a man with this lifestyle? — Mrs. E.M.

A lot of things might happen, none of them good.

Even mild diabetics must avoid excess alcohol beoause of its high carbohydrate content. The combination of diabetes and the diuretic effects of the scotch (and the water) is enough to keep anyone running to the bathroom all night. He may have the idea that all this alcohol acts as a sedative. Not true. In his case whatever mild sedative effect there might be is more than cancelled out by the others. The liquor might not cause a heart atttack directly, but it could cause damage to his liver. Blood vessel problems and kidney disease would be aggravated by the uncontrolled diabetes. When was that last evaluated?

• • •

Dear Dr. Ruble: Can you explain why cold air can bring on an attack of angina pectoris? — J.J.

Because cold constricts the arteries, including the vessels leading to the heart, which is the cause of the heart pain.

Dear Dr. Ruble: Can you tell me about the drug "Bellergal" and what it is used for? My doctor gives it to me to ease my menopause symptoms. I need to know how it works. — Mrs. O.P.

Bellergal is a combination of three drugs — phenobarbital (a sedative), belladonna and ergotamine — which act on the blood vessels. Its chief use is to relieve recurring, throbbing headache of the non-migraine type. Because the ergot tends to constrict blood vessels, the medicine must be used cautiously by persons with blood vessel disease (angina, for example). The belladonna may cause moouth dryness, although probably not in the amount used in this preparation. The phenobarbital makes this medication subject to abuse. It may help combat certain menopause symptoms, such as sweating, restlessness and insomnia.

• • •

Is angina pectoris dangerous? Is there a cure? If you would like to learn more about this heart condition, write to Dr. Ruble, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill., 60611, for a copy of his booklet, "How to Handle Angina Pectoris." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 35 cents.

Dr. Ruble welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

Chicks Hatch In Classroom At Stubbs Elementary

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
Family News Staff

"Do you want to see our chicks?" asked an eager bunch of kindergarten students at Stubbs Elementary School of a visitor at the school one day recently.

"You're not the person who's going to take the chicks away, are you?" was the next question that greeted the visitor.

Once the class was reassured that the visitor (1) would very much like to see their new chicks and (2) was not going to take them away, the class, taught by Mrs. Erna Taff, relaxed and returned to the lesson at hand.

For 21 days the class had watched the eggs in the specially designed incubator and talked about what would happen when the great day finally came. A colorful bulletin board over the incubator depicted the development of the chicks throughout their growth in the eggs.

Finally the great day did arrive — with a flurry of activity and lots of excitement.

During the morning, the kindergarten class wrote a group story about the new chicks and the teacher ran off on the duplicator enough copies for each child to take one home.

The story said:

"The chicks hatched today. We put the eggs in the incubator on April 12. It took 21 days for the chicks to hatch. The chicks were wet when they hatched. They must stay warm. We will give them food and water."

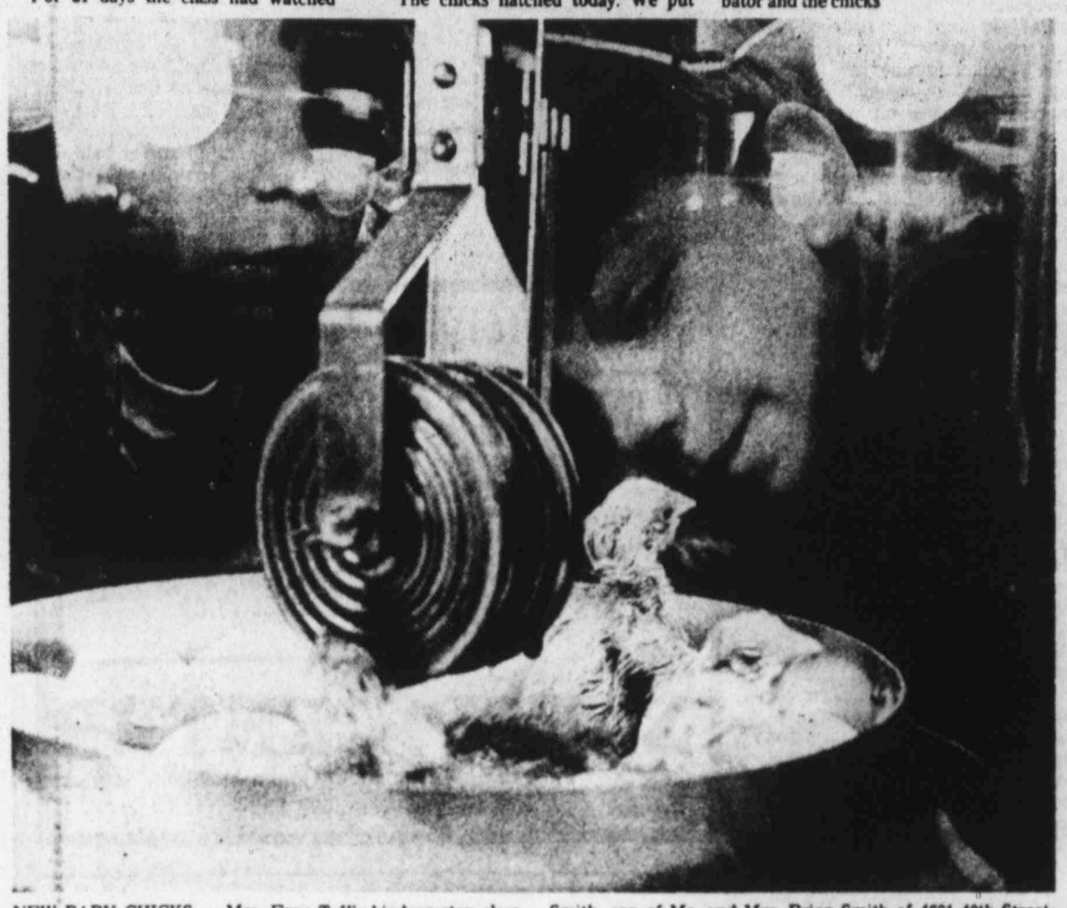

For a combined art and science project, the children drew four stages of development of the chicks in the eggs on large white paper. As each step was drawn, Mrs. Taff asked the class to recall what the inside must have looked like and then to draw it as accurately as possible with crayons.

As the children prepared to leave school that day, each student was allowed to have one last look at the incubator and the chicks

Mrs. Taff admits that such a project takes quite a bit of planning and arranging. But the appreciation and pride the children expressed as the chicks hatched were sufficient reward for any extraordinary effort. One thoughtful parent even wrote Mrs. Taff a note and thanked her for what this project had meant to her child.

Now each day at the close of school, Mrs. Taff takes the box with the very lively young chicks home with her and brings them back for the next school day. She reports that the children continue to be just as fascinated with the chicks as they were the first day.

Not only are such projects signs of spring, but they also open a wide spectrum of learning opportunities for children like those of Mrs. Taff's kindergarten class.

NEW BABY CHICKS — Mrs. Erna Taff's kindergarten class at Stubbs Elementary School anxiously awaits the arrival of another chick. Mayor Declares Special Day

By official proclamation, Mayor Dirk West has declared May 11 Delta Kappa Gamma Society International Day in Lubbock in recognition of 50 years of leadership in education in Texas.

The Delta Kappa Gamma Society, founded by ten women educators from major cities in Texas, now has over 16,000 Texas members in 261 chapters. Alpha Sigma chapter has been active in the Lubbock area since 1933. All five local chapters will be present at the Founders' Day Luncheon Saturday at the Lubbock Women's Club.

Since 1929, the society has worked toward better professional preparation, fairer recognition of women's work in the teaching profession, and more scholarships for those who need aid in improving their professional preparation.

In July, members from all over the world will convene in Dallas for regional conferences and the Golden Anniversary Celebration.

Social Club Aids Hospital

Local members of Epsilon Sigma Alpha International, a leadership-service organization, will raise funds to support St. Jude's Hospital in Memphis by painting faces for children at the South Plains Mall Saturday.

All members of the local chapter, along with Wendy's Girl, will be on hand at the Mall Information Booth to paint faces for children or others to benefit this worthy cause.

The charge will be $1 for a full face and 50 cents for a small picture. All proceeds will go toward the support of the charity.

St. Jude Children's Research Hospital was established to care for children stricken with catastrophic diseases and to conduct medical research on those diseases. Children are admitted without cost and without regard to race, creed or religion.

The hospital is the national project of Epsilon Sigma Alpha, which encompasses 30,000 women in more than 1,700 chapters around the world.

Local chairman is Louise Nixon.

Finally, North hit upon winning action. He went to five spades. His purpose was to tell South that he, North, didn't want to use Blackwood because he held a worthless doubleton in one of the red suits, but that otherwise his hand was rather sound.

South went on to six, but then proceeded to blow the slam because he couldn't refuse a gift at trick one.

East couldn't beat dummy's nine of hearts, so South let it hold the trick. Later on the combination of the 4-2 club break and the misplaced ace of diamonds left him one trick short.

South should have won the first trick with his ace of hearts, led a club to dummy at trick two, ruffed a low club at trick three, entered dummy with the king of spades at trick four, ruffed another low club, drawn trumps, entered dummy with the king of hearts and discarded three diamonds on the last three clubs.

Of course, if he were a hog he could have made seven. He would take the heart finesse and get four diamond discards.

A Kansas reader asks if it is ever worthwhile to risk a slam contract in an effort to score an overtrick.

Today's hand is a possible example. Playing in a match point game, South might well take the heart finesse to pick up a match point or so, but in rubber bridge he would be downright silly. The slam is hard to bid and no cinch to make.

Hints from Heloise

DEAR FRIENDS:
Have you ever tried to give playing cards a fast shuffle only to discover they're sticky from overhandling? Is anything more annoying?

What to do about it? Here's a really helpful hint from Marie D. Gattuso. She uses quality cards made of pure cellulose acetate and, she says, a tip we had on cleaning plastic cards will work for vinyl ones but not for the type she uses. So, if your cards are goodies made of pure cellulose acetate, here's how to get them unstuck, shiny, clean and good as new again:

Use cold water, mild soap and a soft cloth (never hot water). Clean only a few cards at a time, rubbing very lightly on both sides and rinsing quickly. Or you can just wipe them off with a damp cloth. Dry immediately and thoroughly with a clean, soft cloth, then spread out on a table (out of direct sunlight and not near heating elements) and allow at least one hour on each side to dry. Never put the cards away damp.

Bet you didn't know there was a difference in playing cards...and a difference in how they're cleaned. We do now, and you know what's in the cards for Marie Gattuso? A great big thank you. — Hugs, Heloise

HINTS FROM HIM

DEAR HELOISE:
As you know coffee prices were going up so high that my wife and I switched to tea.

I am the weekend breakfast cook and I did not want to go through all that boil water, heat pot, strain tea leaves jazz, so I thought, why not perk the tea, same as coffee.

I took the glass percolator, put a level teaspoon of loose tea for each cup of water and one for the pot in the percolator basket and perked for five minutes instead of steeping for the same time and the tea was great. — Reed Schlademan

• • •

DEAR HELOISE:
This morning, I was dreading having to water outside plants in hanging baskets with the watering can as I always end up getting drenched.

Then the siphoning hose my husband bought for the car, but didn't use, came to mind.

I stuck one end in the water can and pumped away with the other. I stayed dry and had more control of the amount of water the plants received.

For plants at ground level I didn't even have to pump. It's a good investment if you don't already have one of the hoses for this purpose. — Norma Hock

• • •

DEAR HELOISE:
I hope this is a tasty hint for denture wearers.

I love peanut butter but it was always sticking to my upper plate. Finally, I came up with this solution!

I put the peanut butter on the cracker, and turned the cracker (with peanut butter) facing down on my tongue.

This way the tongue gets all the flavor, and the upper plate smashes the cracker. No more peanut butter sticking to my upper plate. I can really enjoy it now. — S.S.

DEAR HELOISE:
I had to peel some onions and garlic this morning and I hate that odor on my hands.

I noticed the baking soda on the shelf just above my head so I dumped a generous amount in one hand and ran water in the other hand, then I rubbed them together vigorously. When I rinsed them off, all of the unpleasant odor had disappeared. — A Retired Office Worker

DEAR HELOISE:
Please help me!

How can I keep the salt in my salt shaker from getting damp? It sticks together and simply won't come out. — V.G.C.

The best thing that we have found is uncooked rice. Put a teaspoonful or so in your salt shaker and it will absorb all the moisture and keep the salt free-flowing.

I live where moisture is a real problem and this trick is faithfully used and it hasn't let me down so far. — Heloise

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann: I am a 23-year-old male who works for a well-established fast food chain. I'm a person who wishes to be left completely alone. I don't want to be bothered for any reason, whether it's "Good morning," "Good night," "How are you?" or "Have a nice day." (I often wonder what lunkhead thought that one up.)

A certain girl I work with is from the South and has been brought up to be overly friendly. Every morning she says, "Hi, there! How are you?" or, "Good morning. Isn't it a beautiful day?" I don't answer simply because I don't want to get into any conversations with her. She takes my silence to mean I don't like her. Actually, I treat everybody the same. I don't dislike her any more than anyone else.

It bothers me that I might be hurting this girl's feelings, but I am the way I am and I'm not going to change. Do you have any advice for me? — Philadelphia

Dear Phil: If this is the way you are and you don't intend to change, why do you ask for advice? I feel sorry for anyone who can't respond to a pleasant "Good morning" or a "How are you?" I suspect you were bitterly rejected as a child and have built a wall around yourself to keep from getting hurt again. Please consider counseling. That wall needs to come down or you will be forever a prisoner of loneliness.

• • •

Dear Ann Landers: What is a mother to do? I have a nine-year-old daughter who will be ten years old in May. She has been nagging me for months to let her have her ears pierced for her tenth birthday. It seems all her little friends have pierced ears and she talks of nothing else.

I don't like to see young children with earrings and was able to hold my ground fairly well until Amy Carter was allowed to have her ears pierced as a gift for her tenth birthday.

Now I haven't a leg to stand on. What do you think about pierced ears for ten-year-olds? — Old-Fashioned Mother In Vermont

Dear Vermont Mother: It's what the little girls want today and I see nothing wrong with letting them have it. Don't sweat the small stuff, Honey.

• • •

Dear Ann Landers: I am 35 and my husband is 57. We now have a daughter eight years old. I wanted another child, but my husband did not because of his age. He said he wouldn't live long enough to see another one grow up. The man is young at heart, has more patience than I and is a wonderful father and husband.

I got pregnant anyway and decided if he couldn't accept this child, at worst he would leave me and if he did that, he wasn't worth having in the first place.

I told him last week I was PG — when I went into my third month. He became furious. I thought of leaving him but decided against it because I do love him very much.

Do you think I was devious to get pregnant against his wishes? What can I do to change his attitude? — Before Birth Blues

Dear B.B.B.: Yes, you were devious, but now that you are pregnant, hang in there and don't look back — look ahead. I'm betting he'll calm down after the baby is born. When he (or she) says, "Da da," your husband will probably melt like an ice cube on a red-hot stove.

• • •

Dear Ann Landers: I would like to respond to the person who wrote, "I know what I want to say, but when I begin to talk, even in small groups, my brains turn to jelly and my tongue leads a life of its own."

Your answer suggested that "someone else do the presentation" since not all people are talkers . . . some are doers.

May I make another suggestion? Sign up for a public speaking class. This will give you the know-how, confidence and experience that will enable you to handle the speaking part of your job without fear and worry. Thousands have done so — and you can, too. Even students who start out shaking with stage fright often end up enjoying the experience of speaking before an audience. I've seen it happen. — Natalie Selibar, Speech Instructor, Roosevelt University, Chicago

Dear Natalie: Your suggestion was a great deal more positive and constructive than mine. Thank you for the assist.

Social Worker Honored By Group

Inez Baucum was honored by the Family Service Association Board of Directors for her contributions to the agency and family life. She was honored Thursday at the annual meeting of the organization.

The Family Service Association, in its 25th year of operation, is a non-profit agency which provides counseling and education in areas that affect family life. The agency is located on the 14th floor of Metro Tower. It is affiliated with the United Way, Lubbock Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center, and Family Service Association of America.

Five social workers are currently employed by the agency. Early in the history of the agency, donated services by ministers and social workers was relied upon in order to maintain counseling services. As one of those volunteer counselors, Miss Baucum contributed significantly to the establishment and growth of the agency.

Miss Baucum is currently employed as Social Worker for the Children's Home of Lubbock. She has previously been honored as Social Worker of the Year by the Lubbock Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers.

Mark Bass is the current president of the Family Service Association Board of Directors. The executive director of the agency is Margaret Elbow.

Cause Of Sinking Remains Mysterious

By TOM TIEDE

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich. (NEA) — More than 12,000 vessels a year pass through the locks of this Great Lakes community, but one came in recently that was of more than casual statistical interest. It was a slow-moving freighter with the name "Edmund Fitzgerald" plastered to its forepeak.

A ghost ship? It was in fact merely hocus pocus. The boat was a replica of the legendary steamer that vanished in Lake Superior in 1975. It had been rented by a Canadian producer, and was taken over the locks as part of the filming of a movie based on the last hours of the real Edmund Fitzgerald.

But if the presence of the replica ship was handily explained, the mystery of its namesake continues to baffle people along the shores of the big lake they call Gitche Gumee. More than three years after the fact, and two investigations of it, nobody knows what caused the wreck of the Edmund Fitzerald.

Milions have heard of the wreck, of course. An account of the incident was recorded by folk singer Gordon Lightfoot in 1976. "The captain wired in he had water comin' in," according to Lightfoot, "and the good ship and crew was in peril:

"And later that night/When is light's outta sight/Came the wreck of the/Edmund Fitzgerald."

Though haunting, Lightfoot's rendition of the events is substantialy fiction. The captain did not wire in a distress that November night in 1975. And that's part of the persisting mystery. How could a durable old boat, skippered by a veteran master, sink with all hands without a solitary note of protest?

Coast Guard officers who have investigated the wreck guess that the Fitzgerald was simply and suddenly overwhelmed by the maritime elements. After all, the ship was caught in a howling gale at the time it sank; the winds were blowing at up to 80 knots and the waves in Lake Superior reached heights of 30 feet.

Indeed, the storm was the worst on the lake in more than a half-century. Snow was falling. So was frozen rain. I was so bad that the skipper of the Fitzgerald, Capt. Ernest McSorely, radioed to a following freighter that he had not "seen anything like it" in 40 years of Great Lakes experience.

But McSorely did not despair. Nor did he give any radio suggestion that he had storm-related problems he couldn't handle. His ship contained 26,000 tons of taconite pellets, it was downward bound from Superior, Wis., for Cleveland, and all communications indicated that McSorely expected to make it.

MYSTERIOUS SINKING — The arrow indicates where the Edmund Fitzgerald went down with all hands on a stormy night in November, 1975. The wreck has become the stuff of folklore, but it remains a mystery. Despite two investigations, no one has figured out why the big freighter sank. (NEA Photo)

The Coast Guard believes, however, that the Fitzgerald was in trouble for hours before capsizing. The official report of the wreck concludes that the ship probably took on great amounts of water through its hatch covers, and the resulting flood in the hold led to a loss of buoyancy, then to calamity.

The Fitzgerald went down sometime after 7 p.m. Capt. Jessie Cooper, the skipper of a following ship, says the Fitz disappeared from the radar track, "and there were no lights where it was supposed to be." An air and water search was thereafter initiated, and it continued for much of the evening.

By daybreak only an oil slick and some lifejackets were found. The Fitz had gone under in what is known as the graveyard of Gitche Gumee. In three centuries of Great Lakes shipping, more than 50 boats have been lost on the lake's eastern end, near Sault Ste. Marie, and some 200 crewmen have perished.

Twenty-nine of the 200 were aboard the Fitz. None have ever been found. Underwater cameras have located the wreck (it lies in 530 feet of water, split in three sections), but no bodies have been seen. Moreover, most of the boat's lifesaving equipment is apparently still in place on the vessel.

Where are the sailors? Why was the emergency gear not used? How could a big ship go down without a call for help? Many Great Lakes sailors insist that the Coast Guard investigators have not yet provided answers to the lingering questions. The critics say the Coast Guard findings have been inadequate.

No one has raised the possibility of foul play. But the Seafarers International Union has asked Congress to convene an inquiry. The union also wants Coast Guard divers to explore every inch of the wreck. The union says the mystery must be solved so that similar tragedies can be avoided in the future.

Meantime, while the doubts continue, there are some here on the Gitche Gumee who believe they are supposed to continue. They say, as does Gordon Lightfoot, that Superior never gives up its dead. Neither does it easily yield its mysteries, such as that which still confounds the wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald.

Tenants Angry Over Threat

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI) — Tenants at the Rolling Green apartment complex are angry about a management threat to evict them if they don't "stay the hell off the grass."

The threat, contained in a letter slid under tenants' doors this week, said walking or playing on the grass violates not only their leases, but federal and state orders as well.

"So stay the hell off the grass, or move to one of the many 'projects' in this fair city whose owners could care less about lawn traffic," read the letter from manager George J. Burgess. "We care and will help you move."

"A lot of us are raising our children not to use language like that," one woman said. "What right do they have to send a letter like this?"

"I like the grass," another woman said. "I like to see it. But the kids don't have any other place to play."

Federal and state officials say there are no grass-walking regulations.

Burgess said he informs the tenants each year that the grass is off limits.

"Let's face it," he said. "That's all Rolling Green has going for it — nice lawns. I'm going to keep it that way."

Passenger Trains Collide In Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Two passenger trains collided near Mexico City on Friday and about 20 persons were injured, nine seriously, a police official at the scene said.

Police magistrate Hilario Sanchez said the "accident occurred around 9 a.m.—11 a.m. EDT— at the San Juan de Teotihuacan station but there were no dead, only about 20 lightly injured."

San Juan de Teotihuacan is near the famous pyramids some 40 miles north of the Mexican capital.

Council Of Churches Rejects Nuclear Power

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Protestant and Eastern Orthodox church representatives Friday took a stand against U.S. reliance on nuclear energy, viewing it as an unethical danger to the earth and future generations.

It was the first nationally based moral assessment of nuclear power, a matter of widespread controversy since the March accident at the plant in Pennsylvania.

However, the action by the National Council of Churches came after five years' research and preliminary hearings, culminated by three days of intermittent debate at this meeting of its governing board.

By a vote of 120-26, with several abstentions, it called for a "national energy policy which will not need to utilize nuclear fission" and added:

"Secure handling of nuclear waste over thousands of generations and safe operation of nuclear plants require that humans and their machines operate without endangering human beings or the environment.

"Human beings are not infallible; they will make mistakes. The result may be irreversible to the environment and to the human genetic pool."

However, the 2,500-word policy statement stopped short of demanding a shutdown of present nuclear plants, although delegates rejected a move to say so specifcally.

Most major Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations, 32 of them totaling more than 40 million members, are represented in the council.

They cited the Biblical mandate to humans as "persons in nature," dependent on it and with responsibility for its care, adding that this role often has been perverted into "license to exploit the material world and weaker persons.

"This perversion of dominion into domination is a sin and is one of the underlying causes of the energy crisis," the statement says.

It concedes that a "just energy policy is difficult" in present circumstances, involving balancing "some ethically desirable goals" against other good objectives, but that it must be sustainable within the "earth's limited capacity" without depleting or poisoning it.

"The greater the risk, the less moral justification there is for its use," the statement says, adding that it should not require "infallibility or error-free performance from humans or machines" — a quality they don't possess.

Instead of nuclear power, the delegates advocated greater energy conservation and major, government-backed steps to develop "renewable energy sources" including solar, wind and water power. Also, a short-term increase in coal-burning power was "reluctantly accepted" to avert severe economic repercussions.

However, using more coal also could eventually "cause irreversible damage to the world's atmosphere" and to large areas of land, the statement says.

The churches have been studying the issue since 1974, when they set up a special commission headed by the late anthropologist Margaret Mead, an Episcopalian, and including numerous top scientists as well as theologians and other specialists.

The present policy statement was drawn up by a successor commission chaired by the Rev. Joel K. Thompson, a Church of the Brethren official and also including a cross-section of academics, technical experts, economists, environmentalists and church scholars.

Methodist Conference To Meet In Amarillo

The United Methodist Church's Northwest Texas Annual Conference will be in session May 29-31 at Polk Street United Methodist Church in Amarillo.

Bishop Alsie H. Carleton of the Northwest Texas-New Mexico Conferences will preside at the meeting.

The guest preacher for the event will be Dr. Barry Bailey, pastor of the First United Methodist Church in Fort Worth.

He has been senior minister of the Fort Worth church since Oct. 1, 1976. The church has 6,100 members.

He preaches live over television every Sunday morning to a potential viewing audience of more than 2,500,000 people. By means of Community Antenna Systems he is seen in six states: Texas, New Mexico, Colorado, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma. Each week more than 1,500 copies of his sermons, both printed and audio cassette, are mailed out at the request of viewers.

He has recently published two books, "Especially For You," and "We Are Not Alone."

An ordained United Methodist minister and a member of the Central Texas Annual Conference, Dr. Bailey has been guest preacher at numerous churches and community organizations in the south. He also has been the guest preacher for the New Mexico Annual Conference; Little Rock, Ark., Annual Conference; Carlton-Willson Lecturer at McMurry College in Abilene; 1979 United Methodist Series of the Protestant Hour radio program; and Willson Lectures at Lon Morris College in Jacksonville.

Dr. Bailey has received a bachelor of arts degree from Hendrix College in Conway, Ark.; a master of theology degree from Perkins School of Theology in Dallas; a doctor of divinity degree from Centenary College in Shreveport, La.; and a doctor of letters degree from Southwestern University in Georgetown.

He also has done special study at the Union Theological Seminary in New York; the University of Edinburgh, Edinburgh, Scotland; Jerusalem, Irsael; and Frankfurt, Germany.

Dr. Bailey is a member of the board of trustees of Harris Hospital (Methodist), board of Texas Wesleyan College in Fort Worth, board of directors of the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce and Fort Worth Rotary Club.

His previous pastoral experience includes serving churches in Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas, including Broadmoor United Methodist Church in Baton Rouge, La., 1962-1972; and First United Methodist Church in Richardson, 1972-1976.

Dr. Bailey is a native of Sheridan, Ark., and he and his wife, the former Joan Kessler, have a daughter and a son.

His sermon topics for the annual conference will be "Outside," "The Lord's Prayer," "How To Accept Help," "What About Suffering" and "How To Help Someone Who Needs You."

The annual conference will elect four lay and four clergy delegates to the denomination's General Conference, which convenes in Indianapolis, Ind., in 1980.

LCC Students Schedule Gospel-Witnessing Trips

Twenty-eight Lubbock Christian College students are traveling to Ireland, England, Spain, Portugal, Germany and Switzerland this month and in June on gospel-witnessing campaigns.

The students have already raised approximately $50,000 in the name of LCC and Broadway Church of Christ, cosponsors of the Campaign 1979 venture, through presentations in area churches.

Three professors of the LCC Bible department are sponsoring trips. Jack Nadeau took a group to Germany and Switzerland May 9, Gary Sorrells' group will leave Thursday for six weeks in Spain and Portugal, and Dr. Foy Kirkpatrick's group will depart Thursday for six weeks in London and Dublin.

Each student was responsible for raising the money to pay for his personal campaign trip. The funds cover the cost of air travel, food allowance for the field host, a $10 weekly spending allowance and a general medical fund. The Spain-Portugal trip cost each student approximately $1,500. The other two costap proximately $1,100.

In preparation for the summer campaign, the students met one hour per week during both the fall and spring semesters. At these orientation meetings campaigners were trained in such areas as language, culture, fund raising, soul winning, singing and group dynamics.

Nadeau's group traveled to Cologne and is spending three weeks with a local church there. His son-in-law, Bill Wilson, is minister of a local church in Cologne. Concluding their stay there, the group will take a tour of the Rhine River to Koblenz and take the train to Zurich, where they will be met by LCC Dean of Students Dick Laird for the final two weeks before a week of touring will conclude their summer's work.

Students accompanying Nadeau, who has been a missionary in Germany for a number of years prior to coming to LCC, are Larry Sullivan of Placentra, Calif.; Bob Mills of Houston; Nadeau's son, Phillip Nadeau; Maggie Orr of Golden, Colo.; Becky Lucas of Levelland; Patti Ayers of Aledo; Dena Goen of Anton; Rhonda Brunson of Downey, Calif.; Sharon Malone of Borger and Kathy Gossett of Portales, N.M.

Sorrells' group will travel to Madrid, where the students will stay for two weeks before going to Barcelona for a week and then to Porto, Portugal, for three weeks.

The LCC students making the trip to Spain and Portugal are Peter Anderson of Abernathy; Lana Derryberry of Big Spring; sisters Melody and Wendy Jo Huffman, whose father is a missionary in Brazil; Selma Martinez of Mason; Silvia Veracruz of San Antonio; and Becky Walker of Austin. They are being joined by five students from Freed-Hardeman College in Tennessee and one from Abilene Christian University.

Dr. Kirkpatrick's group will spend its first two weeks abroad in London, before heading to southern Ireland for the last four weeks at the Dublin Church of Christ.

Students participating in this trip are Debbie Sayne of Glasgow, Ariz.; Randy Coleman of Carlsbad, N.M.; Mike Ford of San Antonio; Gay Hedges of Roswell, N.M.; Julie Hollingsworth of Thailand; Maggie Lindsay of LaCrestcenta, Calif.; Tonya Moore and Gay Zumwalt of Bloomfield, N.M.; Diane Norrell of Cherokee; Sally Pelmecky of Dripping Springs; and Lisa Sorensen of Saratoga, Calif.

Pair Given Honorary Degrees

Two members of St. John's United Methodist Church will receive honorary doctorate degrees Sunday from McMurry College in Abilene.

W.B. "Dub" Rushing is receiving a doctor of humanities degree and Sarah Ragle Weddington is being awarded the doctor of laws degree.

Rushing, a native of Plainview, moved to Lubbock in 1925. After attending Texas Tech University, he went into business and now devotes most of his time to the management of his personal investments.

He serves as chairman of the board of directors of Briercroft Savings and Loan Association and is past chairman of the board of Security National Bank. He is an executive board member of the Methodist Foundation, executive board member and past chairman of Methodist Hospital, past chairman of the board of trustees at McMurry, the President's Board of Lubbock Christian College, Lydia Patterson Institute board and a longtime leader in St. John's United Methodist Church, where he has served as chairman of the trustees and in many other positions of responsibility.

Mrs. Weddington, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Doyle Ragle of Lubbock and a special assistant to President Carter, is the commencement speaker for the McMurry College graduation ceremonies where she will receive her honorary degree.

She graduated magna cum laude from McMurry in 1965. She received her doctor of jurisprudence degree from the University of Texas Law School.

LOTS OF PEOPLE

The United Nations predicts Mexico City will be the world's most populous urban area in the year 2000, with a population of 31 million.

WBC President To Address Services

Dr. Roy C. McClung, president of Wayland Baptist College in Plainview, will be the guest speaker for the 8:15 a.m. and 10:45 a.m. worship services Sunday at the First Baptist Church, Broadway and Avenue V.

The Rev. Doug Tipps, First Baptist Church university minister, will speak during the 7 p.m. service Sunday at the local church.

McClung, a Frederick, Okla., native, is a graduate of Manutou, Okla., High School. He also has received a bachelor of arts degree from Oklahoma Baptist University and master's and doctoral degrees in theology from Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

He served as a trustee at Wayland from 1960 to 1963. He has pastored the First Baptist Church in Plainview, the First Baptist Church in Ada, Okla., the Ninth and O Baptist Church in Louisville, Ky., and other pastorates in Oklahoma, Kentucky and Indiana during his college and seminary years.

He is a member of the First Baptist Church in Plainview, Plainview Lions Club, Masonic Lodge, Plainview Chamber of Commerce, Texas Baptist School Administrators Association, board of directors of the Western Information Network Inc., Haynes District Council of Boy Scouts, chairman of the Texas Foundation of Voluntarily Supported Colleges and Universities, Coordinating Board Texas College and University System, and Central Plains Health Care Foundation.

He and his wife, Genelle, have a daughter and two sons.

A look at life

The little boy follows her finger, and she is warmed and gratified by his smile of appreciation.

It seems as if mothers are eternally anxious to make sure that their children get all there is to get out of life—that they miss nothing.

Mothers would, if they could, show their children all that there is to see and give them everything—time for fun, time for play—new clothes, new toys, a television to watch cartoons, endless red kites and bright yellow balloons and, later, skis and sports cars.

Yet, in this eagerness to show and to give, aren't they in danger of overlooking some of the most important things of all? What of beauty, of serenity, of joy—the knowledge of God's goodness, His love, and familiarity with His house on earth . . . the Church?

Television's pie piper

With the exception of a few newsmen, Soupy Sales is the only television personality who has been on the tube since before the Korean War. Thousands of cream pies have come and gone into the faces of hundreds of famous faces but Soupy's remained the same.

In an interview in Feature magazine, Soupy recalls his beginnings in Cincinnati, where in 1949 he hosted the first TV teen-age dance show. This was before the dawn of rock 'n' roll, which he later encountered at WJW radio in Cleveland in the person of Alan Freed. Says Soupy of the man who claimed to have coined the term rock 'n' roll itself, "He was whacked out of his skull every night. He was the unhappiest man in the world."

Even on his kiddie shows, Soupy's attachment to rock was strong. He introduced both the Everly Brothers and Bobby Darin on his show. And The Soup's TV cancelation in 1965 resulted in a benefit concert that shattered a box-office record held by Frank Sinatra, another of Soupy's pals.

Soupy Sales

So it was not unusual that a modern-day rocker, Alice Cooper was the first guest on the new syndicated "Soupy Sales Show." "When I was a kid growing up in Detroit I'd always race home to catch Soupy," Alice recalled. "How could I pass up an opportunity like this." Alice was still beaming when a pie hit him in the face.

IS THAT YOU PAUL? Even die-hard Beatles' fans would have a hard time recognizing this crooner in tux, starched shirt and slicked-back hair as Paul McCartney. McCartney adopted his '20s look for a British TV show during which he performed the new Wings' single, "Goodnight, Tonight." The guitar doesn't exactly match his get-up, but the mike does.

BIRTHDAY ALMANAC

Compiled by the editors of The World Almanac

May 13 — Joe Louis (1914-), the boxer who is one of the most beloved sports figures of our time. He was the heavyweight champion of the world for 12 years, from 1937 to 1949. In his career, Louis fought 71 bouts, winning 68.

May 14 — Robert Owen (1771-1858), the Welsh manufacturer turned reformer. He was one of the most influential utopian socialists of the early 19th century.

May 15 — Katherine Ann Porter (1890-), the novelist and short-story writer. Her books include the short-story collections "Flowering Judas" and "Pale Horse, Pale Rider" as well as the novel "Ship of Fools."

May 16 — Henry Fonda (1905-), the actor whose career has spanned five decades. His films include "The Grapes of Wrath," "The Ox-Bow Incident," "Young Mr. Lincoln," "My Darling Clementine" and "Twelve Angry Men."

May 17 — Zinka Milanov (1908-), the Yugoslavian-born soprano who made her Metropolitan Opera debut in 1937. She appeared at the Met more than 500 times, always in lyric-dramatic roles.

May 18 — Frank Capra (1897-), the director of several film classics of the 1930s and 1940s. His films include "It Happened One Night," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," "Lost Horizon," "You Can't Take It With You," "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" and "Meet John Doe."

May 19 — Johns Hopkins (1795-1873), the Maryland-born financier and philanthropist. He helped finance Baltimore's famed hospital and university.

Doctor Claims Cursing Helps

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (UPI) — A researcher who studied verbal agression for 14 years says cursing can help prevent hives, headaches, and heart problems.

Dr. Reinhold Aman, president of the International Research Center for Verbal Aggression Inc., said Thursday that swearing, cursing, insulting and other forms of verbal aggression are emotionally and physically healthy.

In an "X-rated" address at Youngstown State University, Aman praised the "safety valve" effect of cursing.

"If aggressive anger does not find release," he said, "it will be left to explode and if pent up habitualy could lead to sickness and death.

Refusal to release verbal aggression can lead to tension headaches, hives, heart ailments and other problems, he said. "A swear word a day keeps the doctor away."

RACEHORSES LOSE WEIGHT

New Telescope Contains Six 'Eyes'

By DONALD J. FREDERICK
National Geographic News Service

WASHINGTON — The romance and mystery of astronomy are symbolized by giant telescopes perched atop solitary mountains, their cyclops-like eyes fixed heavenward.

Now a new telescope has joined the ranks, a colossus with six eyes that has claimed its own mountaintop site, the Mt. Hopkins Observatory in Amado, Ariz.

Called the Multiple Mirror Telescope, or MMT, it represents the first major departure from conventional telescope construction in more than a century. It is the result of a joint Smithsonian Institution-University of Arizona project.

Most giant reflecting telescopes use a single large mirror to gather and focus light from distant objects. The larger the mirror, the farther the telescope can gaze into space.

The MMT has six separate mirrors to gather light. Together, they are comparable to a 176-inch mirror. A unique optic system uses lasers to align the mirrors and computers to process their observations.

During astronomical observations, the entire 500-ton facility at Mt. Hopkins — including four stories of labs, offices, and work areas — turns slowly with the telescope as it rotates to search the heavens. Even at top speeds, however, the motion is barely noticeable to the people inside.

"The 176-inch MMT marks the beginning of a new era in optical astronomy," Dr. Neville Woolf, acting director of the MMT, told the National Geographic News Service. "We went as far as we could go with a conventional instrument such as the 200-inch Hale telescope at Palomar Observatory in California.

"Now if the MMT works out — and we should know its full capabilities in a year or so — anything seems possible. Conceivably, in the years to come we could have a 500-inch telescope with 50 mirrors that could give us an unprecedented view of the heavens from earth."

Like its powerful Palomar cousin, the MMT will be able to pick up objects 10 million times fainter than those visible to the human eye.

A whimsical astronomer put it another way, "You take 200,000 people with their eyes closed up to the top of a tall mountain on a starry night. Then if they all opened their eyes at the same time, they would collect about the same amount of light as the MMT does at any given moment on a good viewing night."

Light gathering ability isn't the only thing that will delight astronomers visiting Mt. Hopkins. The whole MMT system is compatible with infrared devices that will enable scientists to make observations of far-flung galaxies and stars even during the daytime.

'Atomic Man' Suffered Contamination In Worst Nuclear Accident

By TOM TIEDE

PROSSER, Wash. (NEA) — Harold McCluskey is a sick man. His eyes are bad, he can't hear very well, and he's taking medicine prescribed by three attending physicians. Since the first of the year alone the 66-year-old retiree is said to have been hospitalized on at least four occasions.

Naturally, his family is worried. But the rest of the nation also has cause for concern. McCluskey is a one-time nuclear processing worker who received unprecedented amounts of radiation in a job accident; his health is therefore an important element in the continuating debate over atomic energy.

If McCluskey lives out a normal lifespan, it will be an indication that readiation contamination may not be the lethal absolute popularly imagined. If he dies, however, and the death is related to his contamintion, America will have its first direct fatality from a mishap in the age of the atom.

Certainly the odds seem to be against McCluskey's long-term survival. Even today, nearly three years after his accident, McCluskey was then working for the Atlantic Richfield Company at the nearby Hanford nuclear reservation. His job at the time was a stand by a glove-box enclosure and monitor the extraction of americium 241 from second-hand plutonium.

Americium is a daughter product of plutonium. And it's thought to be almost as dangerous. Its half-life is similar, its toxicity is similar, and the government strictly limits its absorption. The maximum allowable lifetime exposure for plutonium is .04 microcuries; for americium it's .05.

McClusky was apparently taking all precautions. He was wearing protective clothing, and he was separated from the radioactive material by a HPlexiglas window. That morning, however, something went wrong, and the sealing glass broke under pressure; actually, the Plexiglas virtually exploded.

McCluskey was caught squarely in the blast. He was showered with radiactive glass, flecked with nitric acid, and literally drenched with two accumulated gallons of americium. McCluskey's eyes quickly burned shut, his face began to bleed, and he inhaled prodigious and he inhaled prodigious amounts of alpha radiation.

It was the worst contamination incident in U.S. history. Authorities believe McCluskey's face was imbedded with 300 microcuries ohf americium. His lungs received a 40-microcurie dose, his bones 40 more and his liver 30. The water used to wash him contained nearly 3,000 units of poison.

The exposure was so severe that no one knew if McCluskey would even survive the initial decontamination process. When he did his doctors were quick to call his recovery miraculous. He went on to spend 10 weeks in intensive care, and was kept an additional two months in an isolated trailer.

On discharge, McCluskey's physicians said he was in good condition. To that time the americium contamination growth, and the radiation had stopped moving from his body organs to his bones. His poor eyesight was blamed on the nitric acid trather than the radioactivty.

HAROLD McCLUSKEY

Shortly after his release, McCluskey retired. Then he filed suit against the federal government for $975,000 in damages. He said he was not bitter, and he held no grudges, yet he believed he deserved a proper compensation. ath the end of 1977 he accepted a "timely" settlement of $275,000.

Today McCluskey lives modestly and in seculsion. His face is pockmarked with scars from the accident, and his right eye has not completly reopened. He refuses to talk with reporters; he thinks they're "obnoxihous." But his wife conceded that "he hasn't been feeling good since last Christmas."

Evidently, McCluskey's immediate problem is a heart condition that predates the events to 1976. But none of the physicians who regularly examine the Atomic Man will comment further. Dr. Bryce Breitenstein, a Hanford Specialist, says the patient has a right to privacy and medical confidentiality.

McClusky does not have the right to keep his condition secret in perpetuity, however, as a condition of his claim settlement, he must provide federal officers with all records concerning his health. Therefore, Dr. Breitenstein says the public will be fully informed in the event McCluskey dies.

If he dies soon, though, the public information may not be conclusive. Authorities say they won't be able to measure precise radiation injuries unless the Atomic Man lives for several more years. And so McCluskey's doctors hope for another decade or two of life; so does McCluskey, no doubt.

'Hair' Showing Opens Cannes Film Festival

CANNES, France (AP) — In a setting of hype and celebration, the 32nd International Film Festival opened Thursday in this Mediterranean resort city brimming with tourists and film representatives.

The two-week film extravaganza began with the showing of the American musical "Hair," directed by Milos Forman, who won an Oscar for "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest."

The film, which opened in the United States a month ago and is not vying for the festival award, is based on an off-Broadway play of the 1960s and looks at the Vietnam War protests and long-haired hippies with warmth and humor.

Forman arrived in sunny Cannes, surrounded by a bevvy of young starlets from his cast, saying, "I feel like a pasha in a harem.

"Distance gave us the freedom to see the era in perspective and made us able to laugh at things considered sacred," said the Czech-born director at a news conference attended by many of the 2,000 film critics and reporters covering the festival.

Forman said some sequences, such as the song "Black Boys, White Boys," could not have been treated as humorously during the racially-conscious 1960sand the Army woud not have cooperated and allowed the filming of war-related scenes.

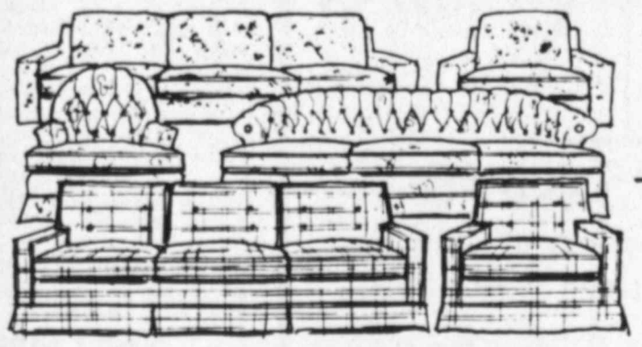

The director said he preferred to use non-actors and had hired a real judge, prison psychiatrist, army sergeant and captain for the film. "But it was difficult to get a real general," he added.

"Hippies may have aged, but the themes are still contemporary," said the 47-year-old Forman. "Contradictions and confusion are part of our world and 'Hair' cannot ignore them."

TV 'Divorce Game' Offers Strange Fare

IN AMERICA

CLEVELAND (NEA) — Four couples, all divorced, have gathered at the television studio to take part in a new quiz show called "The Divorce Game."

There they will be kidded about their failed marriages and quizzed about their feelings for each other now that they have split.

It is one hour to show time. You would expect the atmosphere to be tingling with tension as people who have decided they can no longer endure each other are thrust together in a bizarre showbiz adventure.

As a matter of fact, they are, for the most part, as relaxed and casual as they might be at a family reunion — which is sort of what this is.

Roberta Thomas is here with her new husband, Robert, and her former husband, Arthur Grossman. She has also brought along her two sons — Jason Thomas, 3, and Aaron Grossman, 5.

Denis Gorges, a psychologist, has arrived with former wife Linda, a nurse. He will leave with her too. In fact, they have lived together since their divorce six months ago after two years of marriage.

"So why the divorce?" he repeats the question. "Well, we only got married to please our folks. And it didn't work. We fought too much."

"You better believe it," Linda chimes in. "We're saving money living together. We still have outside dates, though. I'm more jealous than he is."

"What a great place to study human behavior," says Denis, looking around the room with professional enthusiasm.

"There are eight divorced people in this room and four of them are Tauruses," notes Betty L. ("use the initial, please") Varga. "That proves what they say: People born under the sign of Taurus have trouble making their marriages work.

"I'm a Taurus. So is my former husband. We almost killed each other, but we stuck it out for 11 years. We've been divorced now for seven years. I'ts great to be free. One child — a son, 16. We share him."

Little is heard from Timothy R. Tolley, 19, and former wife Pat, who is 18 and five months pregnant. They have been divorced for three months.

"We started when we were pretty young," says Tim, a rookie steelworker. "I was 17; Pat was 16. It just didn't work..."

"I'm very nervous about this television show," says Pat. "It was mostly his idea."

"Well, it's a new experience," Tim says. "That and the money. We'll each get $25."

Gene Norris is the producer, the man who thought up "The Divorce Game" and hopes to sell the series in syndication.

"The outfit that distributes Chuck Barris' 'Dating Game' is interested in the show," he says. "We'll send them the tape and a half dozen cassettes, which they'll pass around to stations around the country to see who's interested."

Norris reports getting a call from a young man who thought he and his ex-wife would make good contestants. The trouble was that he hadn't spoken to her since the divorce. He asked if Norris could call her.

"So I called her," Norris continues. "And the wife said 'sure' and called the guy and I guess they started talking again, because I got a call from him the other day.

"He said he and his ex-wife wouldn't be on the show after all. He said it looks like they might get together again."

Emcee John Lanigan, a local disc jockey, arrives and chats briefly with each couple. Pretty soon it is show time.

"The Divorce Game" is played like "The Newlywed Game," with the men predicting how the women will answer and the women predicting how the men will answer. Questions include:

"If your ex-wife were a dessert, how might she expect you would describe her? As a cream puff? Or a layer cake? Or a strawberry tart?"

"What kind of man does your ex-wife prefer? An intellectual with a pipe in his mouth? A Madison Avenue type in a designer suit? Or a stud with a fig leaf?"

They are won by Denis and Linda Gorges. The two exchange an exuberant kiss and depart with the sets for their shared home.

Radioactive Gas Discharge Rated Not Significant

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A small amount of radioactive gas was released this week at the Carolina Power & Light Co. nuclear power plant near Southport, N.C., a spokesman for CP&L confirmed Friday.

First report of the release came from Gov. Jim Hunt's press secretary, Gary Pearce, who said Hunt had been notified of the incident by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Washington, D.C.

B.J. Furr, manager of generation for CP&L, said the radiation — released Tuesday night or early Wednesday — represented no threat to public health or safety.

Furr said the release was detected by automatic sensors which triggered alarms.

He said the leak occurred when air used to agitate a tank of radioactive water was mistakenly discharged to the plant's ventilation system.

The incident was reported to federal and state authorities, Furr said.

Dayne H. Brown, chief radiation officer for the North Carolina Department of Human Resources, said that after consulting with CP&L he had decided that the incident probably was so minor it didn't require immediate notification to the NRC.

He said the release was not significantly different from normal radiation levels around the plant.

CULTURAL EXCHANGE TO PICK UP

ROME (AP) — The United States and Italy plan to intensify a cultural exchange program started last year, U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Joseph Califano Jr. said in Rome Friday. The plan, announced by both the American and Italian governments, means Americans will have more chance to study Italian language and culture at the university and middle-school level. The countries began an exchange program last year, with about 50 American language teacher trainees studying in Italy and the same number of Italians studying in the U.S.

Cronkite Earns Award

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — It was a homecoming of sorts for Walter Cronkite, who grew up in St. Joseph and once sold newspapers on a Kansas City street corner, and he took the occasion to renew his crusade for freedom of the press.

CRONKITE

The 62-year-old veteran anchorman of the CBS Evening News was honored at a dinner here Thursday night where he was awarded the 1979 Citation from the Midwest Research Institute "for his devotion to the people's right to know."

Cronkite told a news conference there is "a growing tendency to bar access by reporters to official, and presumably public, events, institutions and records."

A common theme of critics of the press, he said, is that journalists are due no special rights or sanctions that are not granted to every citizen.

"Fair enough, one might say, but can we not see that this means that the public has left to it no agent, no representative, to challenge the special rights or sanctions that the government and its servants, honestly or dishonestly, reserve unto themselves?" he asked.

Baker's Son Graduates

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Sen. Howard Baker, a 1980 candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, was in town Friday to deliver the commencement address to the graduating class at Middle Tennessee State University, which includes his son, Derek.

BAKER

"That's the second and last child that I will put through that education career," Baker said. "It's a big moment in my life and I trust it's a big moment in his."

On other subjects, Baker said he is reexamining his long-time support of nuclear power following the Three Mile Island plant accident in Pennsylvania.

"Things happened at Three Mile Island that I had been assured could not happen," he said.

Partly because of the expected debate, he has called off plans to make his formal announcement for the presidency at his home in Huntsville on July 4, postponing it until fall.

Baker said he expects Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., to challenge President Carter for the Democratic nomination in 1980 and this could cause Carter problems, but he does not expect this would affect his own race either way.

Queen Wins Medal

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization on Friday presented the agency's Ceres Medal to Queen Sirikit of Thailand for her work to advance the status of rural women.

Dr. Edouard Saouma, director-general of the organization, presented the medal at the Grand Palace in a ceremony presided over by King Bhumipol Adulyadej.

The medal, named for the Roman goddess of agriculture, has been awarded female leaders around the world for the past eight years.

Among recent Ceres recipients have been Mother Teresa for her work among the poor in the slums of Calcutta; Mrs. Lillian Carter, mother of the American president, for her Peace Corps service, and the deceased American anthropologist, Dr. Margaret Mead.

Shines Through Cloudburst

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas cloudburst that flooded the parking lot failed to spoil the fun as Beverly Sills sang her farewell to Dallas with the touring Metropolitan Opera.

BEVERLY SILLS

The State Music Hall was sold out Thursday night even though many of the opera-goers had to wade through ankle-deep water to hear Miss Sills playing Norina in Donizetti's "Don Pasquale."

After this year, the famous singer goes into management with the New York City Opera and will sing only one rare occasions.

From her first appearance in a garden chaise lounge, reading a novel and smoking a cigarette from a long holder, Miss Sills as the frolicsome widow held the audience in her hand. She received a standing ovation at the final curtain.

Donald Gramm, whose last appearance here with the Met was marked by falling scenery, was Don Pasquale, while Nicolai Gedda sang Ernesto and the Swedish baritone Hakan Hagegard was the scheming Dr. Malestesta.

The Dallas Civic Opera's own Nicola Rescigno, whose father was a trumpeter in the Met orchestra for 30 years, conducted his first Met touring production.

City, State Want Interest

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It could only happen in the pennywise days of Proposition 13 — the city and state playing tug-of-war to squeeze the most interest out of a state aid check.

The city wanted to send a representative Thursday to pick up the $27.7 million check — part of a post-Proposition 13 bailout — for deposit in an interest-drawing bank account in Sacramento. Proposition 13, passed by voters last year, limits property tax to 1 percent of market value and has drastically reduced state revenues.

But the state also had interest interests and planned to mail the check so it could collect more than $7,000 in daily earnings for a few more days while the aid money was en route. Telephone calls by the city on the matter were not returned.

An aide to state Controller Ken Corey acknowledged the state wanted the extra interest but said also it didn't want to dispense aid checks by hand for fear imposters might someday be on the receiving end.

But Tony Miera, Los Angeles' chief deputy controller, rejoined: "The checks are for deposit only. Anyway, I don't know who would cash a $27 million check."

Sparereibs Suit Settled

YUL BRYNNER

Attorneys for the actor and the restaurant refused to comment on the amount of the settlement. Brynner had asked for $3 million.

The settlement came as the restaurant's trial was in its third week before a jury of three men and three women in Manhattan Civil Court.

The actor, perennial star of "The King and I," testified at the start of the trial that he contracted trichinosis from spareribs he ate at Trader Vic's on Nov. 3, 1974. Trichinosis comes from improperly cooked pork.

Atomic Activist's Murder Chills Texas Anti-Nuclear Community

By HARVEY WASSERMAN
(c)1979 PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

A double shooting in Houston that resulted in the death of anti-nulear activist Michael Eakin has sent waves of alarm through the Texas anti-nuclear community.

The April 14 assault coincided with a series of alleged acts of violence against other Texas anti-nuclear organizers.

Eakin, 28, former editor of the University of Texas newspaper, The Texan, the nation's largest college daily, was founder of the Austin Sun, a local weekly. He was an active organizer of anti-nuclear demonstrations and frequently wrote on the subject of nuclear power.

A colleague of Eakin's, Dila Davis, 42, was seriously wounded in the assualt. She is a technical editor at the Applied Research Laboratories in Austin, which shares facilities with the Balcones research center, which supervises with the Balcones research center, which supervises the only radioactive waste dump in Austin. Davis had helped organize two demonstrations at the Balcones facility, one on March 31, two weeks before the shooting.

Eakin and Davis were ambushed as they climbed into Eakin's car parked in a dark and quiet residential street near the Texas Opry House, where they had attended a concert.

According to Davis, the assailant(s) pumped four to six bullets through the driver's side window. Eakin was hit in the arm, chest and throat; Davis was hit in the jaw. "They must have been waiting for us," said Davis.

Eakin died six hours later in surgery. Davis was hospitalized, but doctors decided against trying to remove the bullet from near her spine.

Though there is no evidence to connect the assualt to the victim's anti-nuclear activities, Davis and other activists believe Eakin's death was a "nuclear murder." It is being compared to the 1974 death of nuclear worker Karen Silkwood, leading to a suit which is now being thrashed out in an Oklahoma courtroom.

"There is no doubt," said Jeff Jones, a longtime local activist and former president of the University of Texas student body, "that there is an organized campaign."

Houston police have theorized that the shootings may have been a case of mistaken identity or of random violence. There were seven murders in Houston the weekend of the shooting. Officer John Barnes of the homicide division said "all rumors" will be investigated.

But Eakin's fellow activists say that the context in which the shooting took place strongly suggests a nuclear motive. "We've been waging a very successful campaign down here," said Tod Samusson, a member of Austin's Citizens for Economic Energy and a friend of Eakin's. "I think the industry must feel threatened by us. Michael might well have been on to something, or it might have been an attempt to get us to lay off, but it's my definite opinion the shooting was related to nuclear power."

Austin anti-nuclear activists allege that a campaign of violence and intimidation has been waged against them since January. Samusson claims he was beaten in an Austin parking lot on January 22 by a man who had been peeling a "No Nukes" bumper sticker off Samusson's car. He says he was attacked another three times between February and April, and that his house was broken into in March. He claims he has also received anonymous threatening phone calls.

Other nuclear opponents in Austin, Dallas and Fort Worth claim there have been nearly a score of beatings, tire slashings, threatening phone calls and other acts of intimidation aimed against them.

At the time of the shooting, Eakin was researching a story on Mexican oil, according to Jim Hightower, editor of the Texas Observer. But according to other sources, he was also following up a rash of stories about alleged faulty inspection procedures at the South Texas nuclear project at Bay City, a twin 2,500-megawatt Westinghouse project being constructed by Brown and Root.

The South Texas project has been the subject of continued controversy, including allegations that plant inspectors have been harassed by their employers, and fired. One inspector was shot and killed in his rented home shortly after being fired. The asssailant proved to be the owner of the house, who said he thought the inspector was a burglar. No charges have been pressed.

However, the incidents and charges prompted Representative Henry Gonzalez of San Antonio to write a letter to U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell requesting an investigation of the shooting and other allegations.

German Says Margaret Thatcher No Soft Touch

LONDON (AP) — Margaret Thatcher, first woman to head a government in Europe, is no "soft touch," West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt told reporters Friday after two days of talks with her.

He added to laughter at a London news conference: "I guess she would not consider the Germans to be a soft touch either."

Schmidt, sitting alongside Mrs. Thatcher, said he didn't expect to have any problems dealing with the woman whose Conservatives ousted the Labor government in Britain's May 3 election.

He said the fact that he is a Socialist leader involved in talks with a Conservative prime minister "was not a problem in the slightest."

The chancellor was asked whether he would have the same personal relationship with Mrs. Thatcher that he had with James Callaghan, the former Labor prime minister whom he usually called "my friend Jim."

"In international politics," Schmidt replied, "it does not really matter so much whether you are Republican or a Democrat, Labor or Conservative, a Social Democrat or a Liberal or a Christian Democrat.

"What really does matter," he said, "is whether you are a reliable person and whether you have got judgment. I have no doubt that on that basis we will be able to get on with each other."

The ash-blonde Mrs. Thatcher, wearing a light-gray, two-piece suit with a blue enamel brooch, seemed very much in command at the news conference, choosing the questioners and calling some of them by name. She spoke in a relaxed voice, lacking the stridency of some of her campaign speeches, and some British reporters spoke of a "new Mrs. Thatcher."

On another question, Schmidt said today's rapidly rising oil prices are every nation's concern, and predicted some may soon be paying out 40 percent of their export revenues to pay for oil.

Sue Ellen Ewing, Linda Gray Not Alike

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — On television's "Dallas," Linda Gray lives on a ranch. In real life she also lives on a ranch. But that's about all Linda has in common with her fictional character, Sue Ellen Ewing, the adulterous, alcoholic wife of Larry Hagman's J.R. Ewing.

Miss Gray lives on a three-acre ranch 40 miles north of Los Angeles with her husband, Ed Thrasher, and her two children, Jeff, 14, and Kelly, 12. There the Thrashers ride their horses, Dusty, Annie and Granger, romp with their dogs, Michael and Gunnar, or with their cats, Orange Oliver and Tigerlily.

"It's so totally unlike the Ewing empire," the actress says. "I think that's what keeps my sanity. I run around in cowboy boots and bluejeans — no silk dresses. We have a vegetable garden that has periodic crop failure. And we drive a '55 Ford pickup, CB and all."

Miss Gray grew up in the shadow of the MGM studio, where she now works on "Dallas." She attended St. Ignatius School, opposite MGM's front gate, and after school she and her classmates would stand outside in their school uniforms and gather autographs.

LINDA GRAY

She longed to be an actress, but her parents, and later her husband, opposed it. She compromised by becoming a model. One day her agent got a call for a tall, beautiful model. He sent her to see Ed Thrasher, an independent photographer and art director and former studio art director. They were married two years later.

Miss Gray did TV commercials and took drama lessons, until her first break, a guest role in "Marcus Welby, M.D." She continued to do guest shots until Norman Lear selected her for the bizarre role of the transsexual, Linda Murkland, in "All That Glitters." She was in the TV movie "The Grass Is Always Greener Over the Septic Tank" and had a small part in "Fun with Dick and Jane."

Despite her new success, Linda prefers to live a quiet life far from the bright lights. She says, "It's my responsibility to keep things organized and to maintain some degree of normality between the family and my career."

Lynda Robb Sees No Problems In Post

HOPEWELL, Va. (AP) — Lynda Bird Robb says she doesn't foresee any problems in following Bella Abzug as chairwoman of the President's Advisory Committee for Women.

"We represent different constituencies," Mrs. Robb said.

Although Mrs. Abzug was fired after criticizing Carter, Mrs. Robb said she will not hesitate to do the same thing.

"I expect that I will not always agree with all the members of the committee ... and I'm sure that we will not always agree with the president. But we will feel free to criticize him when we feel that he is not doing enough and to praise him when he is."

She stressed that the committee is "just advisory and we can only hope that he will listen to us."

Mr. Robb, wife of Virginia Lt. Gov. Charles Robb and a daughter of the late President Lyndon Johnson, was here Thursday to participate in a children's reading program.

She considers herself a feminist, but Mrs. Robb said she is not a member of any particular women's movement group. She noted, however, that "a lot of good things have happened because of people who have been active in the women's movement."

She said she has no plans yet to change any of the committee's work, but she does plan to seek the support of homemakers and mothers — two groups she feels are sometimes overlooked by other branches of the women's movement.

"We need to encourage them to be involved because we need their support," she said.

Mississippi Man Sets Presidential Campaign

LITTLE ROCK (UPI) — A Mississippi architect who wants the federal Reserve Act of 1913 repealed announced this week he is a candidate for president in 1980.

Robert D. Ladner, 46, of Long Beach, Miss., said he made the announcement in Little Rock because he was in town to meet with a campaign consultant. He called a news conference at the swimming pool of a downtown motel.

He said he may run as an independent, a Democrat or in the National Conservative party.

Ladner said he wants repeal of the Reserve Act, which allows banks to charge interest on loans. He also wants all taxes collected at the local level and wants to relocate and disperse the branches of federal government.

The East, he said, has undue influence over the nation.

Ladner proposed to relocate the executive branch at Four Corners where Arizona, Colorado, Utah and New Mexico meet.

The judicial branch would be in Wayzata, Minn., where the Mississippi River originates, and the legislative branch would be at the juncture of Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Banning interest on loans, he said, would reduce the cost of goods and services 40 to 50 percent.

BANKS ON WHEELS PLANNED

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union will provide currency exchanges on wheels for the 1980 Olympics, the Soviet news agency Tass said Friday.

Montana Rustlers Stay Busy

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — The incidence of cattle rustling in Montana is increasing as beef prices continue to rise, according to a state official.

Les Graham, head of the brands enforcement division of the state Livestock Department, said the main target is calves, which are selling for about $1 per pound.

Since last June, Graham said, 20 felony cases have been reported in Montana involving altered brands, cattle theft and butcherings.

During that period, he said, 540 cattle have been reported missing; 25 people have been arrested in 11 of the cases, but the other nine cases are unsolved. Graham said about 300 cattle have been recovered.

"In the western part of the state, you run into butcherings or one or two head missing," he said. "But in eastern Montana, you run into big bunches — truckloads."

Officials in Montana, Wyoming and the Dakotas have banded together to investigate some of the thefts, he said. "The same rustlers who are causing problems in Montana are causing problems in neighboring states."

And, he said, officials believe the rustlers also have been burglarizing ranch houses and poaching deer and elk.

Rabies Epidemics Hit Eagle Pass, El Paso Areas

AUSTIN (AP) — Rabies epidemics have hit El Paso and Eagle Pass and cases of rabies in dogs and cats are appearing in other parts of Texas, the Texas Department of Health said Friday.

During the first four months of 1979, 391 cases of rabies were confirmed by state laboratories as compared to 183 cases for the first four months of 1978.

In El Paso, 12 cases of canine rabies have been confirmed while another two rabies cases have been found in Dona Ana County, N.M. The area had been free of canine rabies since 1975.

In the Eagle Pass area, 40 persons have been exposed to rabies, state health department statistics show.

"We've definitely had a breakdown in the proximity of wildlife to domestic animals," said Dr. William R. Bilderback of the health department. "This is what we've been trying to avoid."

Texas and Mexican authorities have begun an extensive media campaign encouraging rabies vaccinations for pets, including a door-to-door survey in the Eagle Pass area in an effort to locate non-vaccinated pets.

Authorities Seize Load Of Marijuana

FRANKLIN, La. (AP) — A shrimp boat loaded with $33.5 million worth of marijuana was seized and 11 Colombian nationals were arrested Thursday at a private dock on the Baldwin Canal near here.

The St. Mary Parish sheriff's office said the marijuana was packaged in 891 bales, totaling 66,000 pounds. It took 12 deputies and four trustees seven hours to unload it into five 22-foot vans.

The arrest followed a complaint from a caller who said an 80-foot shrimper was docked on private property along the canal.

Fellini Returns To Rome In Grand Style To Film 'City Of Women'

ROME (AP) — After a five-year respite, it's Fellini time in Rome again.

And eager hopefuls are rushing to the Eternal City in hopes that Federico Fellini — famous for using unknowns in his films — will pick them for his new movie, which the director says is about the current "surge" women are experiencing.

The carnival atmosphere has brought alive the back lots of the cavernous Cinecitta studio with the buzz of carpenters' saws and the chatter of 500 costume makers and artisans.

Fellini, or "Il Mago," the magician, as he is better known here, is rifling through his legendary photo collection — he once claimed he has more photos than the FBI — to cast the movie.

A new effort by the 58-year-old Fellini is not just a film but a three-month extravaganza. It launches debates, inspires fashions and brings out movie hucksters who try to beat the director to the punch.

The four-time Oscar winner's latest film, "City of Women," began shooting this week, taking over all eight sound stages and the back lot of Cinecitta, quiet since his semi-successful "Casanova" monopolized the studios five years ago.

The film reunites Fellini with Marcello Mastroianni, after a 16-year separation. The actor played the jaded journalist of "La Dolce Vita" and the befuddled film director of "8½."

Mastroianni and Ettore Manni, a now pot-bellied star of the 1950s, are pitted against more than 170 women, most to be played by unknown actresses, streetwalkers and extras.

"I am embarrassed to talk about a creature to which I am giving birth," Fellini said in sidestepping a question about the new film. "It's something very private, like a sickness, a delirium.

"But suffice it to say that Marcello is a professor of Greek mythology who tries to understand what is happening to female psychology through goddesses like Minerva, the hardened intellectual; Diana, the huntress; Juno; Persephone; Pomona, the fruit goddess... He sees this menacing magma of femininity, through his wife, his daughter, the concierge, his woman neighbors, and these turn into a new unified divinity."

In other words, it's all about women trying to escape the stereotypes into which they have been cast for so long.

"It is neither for or against feminism, it merely tries to understand the motives for this new surge," Fellini said.

"Marcello is an ideal companion for me in these obscure zones, and a natural choice following his portrayals in the other two films. He is a believable actor with whom the public identifies, yet whose outline is not too well defined," he said.

In a return to the scene of the crime, Fellini is shooting the few exterior scenes of the film at Ponte Lago Obscuro, the beach where the aimless Marcello-the-journalist appeared in the final scene of "La Dolce Vita."

Fellini's cost overruns, production delays and directorial wrangles have become legendary in the film world, and American film companies have avoided him.

But this time Fellini has found a benefactor in Europe's biggest production, distribution and exhibition company, Gaumont, which has given him a free hand and an open-ended bankroll.

Gaumont's president, Daniel Toscan du Plantier, says the film will open at Christmas, "but we're not saying what year." He refused to divulge the budget of the film, which involves thousands of props, floats and a giant half-mile toboggan slide in Cinecitta's back lot.

Fellini makes up most of the story as he goes along and has his usual clique with him. Mastroianni's brother Ruggero is doing the editing, and the executive producer is Renzo Rossellini, son of director Roberto Rossellini, who gave Fellini his start as a scriptwriter in 1946.

But Fellini says he has a problem with the music: Nino Rota, who scored all previous Fellini films, died last month while he was starting to compose for this one.

Today's FOCUS

ERUPTION SLOWS DOWN

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A volcano that has been spewing lava for nearly a month in the lake region, 500 miles south of here, is slowing its rate of eruptions, a vulcanologist says. Prof. Hugo Moreno of the geology department of the University of Chile said the volcano, Mirador, is sending out a smaller amount of lava than it did when it started erupting April 13, and that the lava is moving very slowly. The 150 peasants evacuated from the area have not returned.

Scripps Plays Role In Ocean Research

By DAVID HELVARG
(c)1979 PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Here in the most southwesterly corner of the United States, an unlikely collection of scientists, businessmen and military experts has developed an international capital for 70 per cent of the world — the oceans.

It's called the Scripps Institution of Oceanography, a branch of the University of California at San Diego. With its attractive campus nestled on the far side of La Jolla cove, it maintains the appearance of a pleasant academic retreat where some 1,300 students, faculty and guests work on projects ranging from the study of undersea manganese nodules to the search for organic anti-barnacle compounds.

But below the surface, Scripps has become as pivotal to the international battle for the seas as think-tanks like the Rand Corporation were to the land wars of the 1950s and 1960s. With $45 million a year in federal, state and private grants and a wide-ranging fleet of survey and exploratory vessels, Scripps is very much at the center of ocean resource development. More than 100 ocean-related companies are now clustered around the institution, feeding on the fruits of government-funded research.

A part of the University of California system since 1912, Scripps Institution is the largest single facility involved with basic research of the oceans. It is the administration agency for the National Sea Grant College Program and the International Deep Sea Driling Project. It works with state and federal marine agencies, international fishery associations, the Navy, NASA, the Air Force and the CIA. Only 12 per cent of its funds come from state sources. Most of the rest comes directly from the federal budget, although private sponsors include major oil companies and corporations from the nuclear industry.

While Scripps has managed to keep a low profile so far, the increasingly sensitive and strategic nature of its work promises to thrust it into the eye of a brewing storm. Among the emerging issues are the touchy subject of the social and political impact of university-sponsored basic research, the propriety of its corporate and military relations, and the basic issue of who benefits from the research: the public or the special interests who sponsor it.

"We don't do any classified work on campus," says William Nierenberg, the big, fast-talking physicist who's been director of Scripps since 1965. "We do some classified work at our Point Loma facility (near the Navy's Ocean Systems Center) — work with the Navy related to sonar, visibility, accoustics and that sort of thing, but nothing here on campus."

Nierenberg is no stranger to classified work. Prior to his tenure at Scripps he served with the Manhattan Project and worked at the University of California Lawrence Radiation Laboratory, birthplace of most of the nation's nuclear weapons.

Among Scripps projects of vital interest to the military is a deep-sea telescope related to top secret Navy work involving ultra-low frequency radio transmission systems for nuclear submarines. "The Navy can't afford not to watch programs like that," says Nierenberg. "There's a natural flow here between the research we do, industry and the nation."

The line between basic research and its military or commercial use is often hard to draw.

Scripps' Climate Research Group, for instance, uses oceanic-atmospheric interaction as a basis for long-range forecasting. Dr. Jerome Namias, head of the program, sucessfully predicted the unusually cold winter of 1976-77 in the East, and the break in the West Coast drought.

The CIA, which has funded some of the long-range forecasting research, has used weather analysis to predict econmic conditions of other countries and also as a basis for "weather modification" to generate storms over Cuba and Indochina.

Through its Sea Grant Program, Scripps conducts research that relates to coastal zone resources, aquaculture, fisheries and new marine products, including pharmaceuticals derived from marine organisms.

The social and economic consequences of such work are not usually part of the study program. "Our job is to supply the information and research," said James Sullivan director of the Sea Grant program. "How it's applied is up to the companies that show any interest."

As in the case of University-sponsored development of capital-intensive agricultural technology, some of the ocean technology developed at Scripps has served to give an advantage to large commercial interests. Partly thanks to work done at Scripps, for instance, the tuna industry has advanced technologically. But now smaller companies are being bought out by larger corporations, according to Wesley Marx, author of several books about the impact of man on ocean environments.

"One of the real oportunities in the marine environment is, when technology comes on line, to have a much better assessment about what it will do," he said. "There could be significant disruptions." But according to Marx the need for such studies is largely ignored. "I don't see public funding for this."

Marx observed that the federal government has "no department realy looking hard at the implication of the development of oceans, to the degree it will make victims or beneficiaries of coastal nations."

Asked whether some Scripps research might not lead to a negative impact on some ocean resources, Nierenberg responded that "some ocean technology is being used adversely, depleting fisheries, that sort of thing." However, he added, "we can't really do anything about this. Our research is open; we don't control its end use."

TERRORIST BOMBS DISARMED

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Terrorist bombs were found in a Jerusalem wholesale vegetable market and in the seaside resort of Netayana, Friday, and demolitions experts dismantled both of them, Israeli radio said. The Givat Shaul market was evacuated while the bomb was being disarmed, the report said.

Big-Spending Tourists Tempting Chinese Hosts

By CHRIS MULLIN
(c) 1979 Pacific News Service

PEKING — In the lobby of the Peking Hotel, a group of American tourists are taking leave of their Chinese guide. As a token of their gratitude, they offer a crisp new $100 bill.

The guide declines, but the unabashed Americans add another $100. Still the guide declines, though this time she hesitates slightly.

Another $100. The total now stands at around nine months' salary for a guide with the China Travel Service. This time her refusal comes only after a long pause. The offer is withdrawn, but next time she may accept.

The guide's dilemma highlights a serious problem facing Chinese authorities as tourists and businessmen flock into China. With their expensive clothes, cameras and cash, they are awakening in the Chinese people aspirations that cannot possibly be fulfilled.

The result has been the re-emergence of some habits not seen in Chinese society for many years. Evidence of bribery and prostitution — albeit on a very small scale — are among the symptoms to have surfaced within the last few months.

Ten years ago only a handful of foreigners visited China. By 1976 — when the Gang of Four fell — there were 30,000 tourists. This year there will be well over 100,000 and there is talk of half a million by 1985.

To help spread the load, almost all the major cities of China have been opened to foreigners. Even such remote provinces as Sichuan, Xinjiang and Tibet — which have seen scarcely any foreigners in 30 years — are now receiving their first trickle of tourists.

The difference between the lifestyle of the tourists and that of the Chinese who serve them is stark. A night in the 17-story luxury Peking Hotel costs the equivalent of more than one month's wages for the average Chinese. At the moment, waiters and taxi drivers stoutly refuse to accept tips. How long that will last is anyone's guess.

The businessmen, in particular, spend money like water. Hambro's, the British merchant bank, recently blew a mind-boggling 960 yuan — two years' salary for most Chinese — on a small dinner party for the officials with whom they were negotiating.

One British businessman resident in Peking estimated it would be "two years at the most" before the Chinese start taking bribes. But there is reason to believe it has already started.

An American travel agent who had just clinched a deal to bring American tourists to Tibet next year told me he had offered the Chinese negotiators two cassette tape recorders. Last year, these would have been rejected with derision. This year they were accepted as "a welcome gift," he said.

The last few weeks have also brought the first reports of prostitution. Chinese girls are reliably reported to have sold themselves to African and Arab students in Peking for about $6 a time. As a result, authorities in Peking have clamped down on single girls attending dances at the International Club and the Friendship Hotel.

Prostitution was widely believed to have been eliminated in China. A Chinese source confirms, however, that it has always existed on a small scale, in Peking at least.

The sudden influx of foreigners has produced other less startling symptoms, not the least of which is the craze for hair permanents now sweeping women in Peking and most other major cities.

Western films are also coming in. At first these were confined to such golden oldies as "Gone With the Wind" and Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," but now Peking cinemas are showing the American cops and robbers film "Convoy." Demand was so great that the first showing was at 6 a.m.

David Livingstone, the Scottish missionary and explorer, died in 1873.

Bluebonnets Need Help To Grow Despite Label As Wildflowers

By JACK DAVIS
Texas Certified Nurseryman

The bluebonnet officially became the state flower of Texas at the turn of the century. It grows abundantly throughout Texas and, along with other native wildflowers, helps brighten the Texas countryside. Bluebonnets can bring a touch of spring to any landscape.

Bluebonnets are actually winter annuals and should be planted in late summer. They germinate in late summer and exist as a small rosette of leaves throughout winter while developing a heavy root system and a sturdy plant which will produce an abundance of spring flowers. Bluebonnets first begin to bloom about March 15 in the southern part of the state and May 1 in the more northern parts of Texas. Seed must be planted from August through October if flowers are wanted in the spring.

When planting bluebonnet seeds, a little extra effort must be taken to insure quick seed germination and plant longevity. Just throwing the seeds into a grassy area along the road or in the corner of the lawn does not insure a good stand of bluebonnets. Selecting the proper site and preparing the seeds before sowing is very important.

Bluebonnet seeds look and act like pea gravel. They have a very hard seed coat which must be penetrated by moisture before the seed will germinate. To speed up this process and insure quick germination, the seed coat must be softened or scratched in one of the following ways:

1) Soak seeds in warm water for a day or two, changing the water at least daily until the seeds feel soft.

2) Scratch the seed coats between two layers of sandpaper.

3) Puncture the seed with a needle, ice pick or file.

Prior to planting, bluebonnet seeds should be inoculated with nitrogen fixing bacteria. The presence of this bacteria in the soil is essential for bluebonnets. This bacteria combines nitrogen in the air with plant carbohydrates, forming compounds that serve as food for the plants. The bacteria culture may be purchased at many nurseries. Inoculate the seeds by the following process:

1) Dampen seeds slightly with water

2) Place seeds in a jar and sprinkle with inoculant

3) Shake the jar until all seeds are thoroughly covered

4) Plant seeds soon after inoculating

After preparing and inoculating the seeds, broadcast them on tilled soil. The seed shoud be covered with about ¼-inch of soil and watered thoroughly. Keep the soil moist until the seedlings appear; usually in a week to 10 days.

Bluebonnets should be planted in a well-drained location that receives direct sunlight most of the day. If you wish to establish bluebonnets in a lawn area, the seeds should be planted in an area where the grass is sparse. Bluebonnet seeds have difficulty germinating and maturing in thatched turf areas. Plant the seeds thickly in large clumps. This thick planting will retard grass growth within the clump to give the young bluebonnet plants an opportunity to establish themselves.

Mowing should cease in early winter when the bluebonnets attain a height of three to four inches. Curtail mowing until the seed pods mature in April or May. Seeds mature about six weeks after the last flowers fade.

Once established, bluebonnets seed themselves each year, provided the seed has been allowed to mature, competing grass and weeds have not become too thick, and there has been sufficient rain in the fall to allow germination. In the event of a late summer drought, it would be advisable to soak the area several times to assure good germination.

Russian Airline Ignores Mothers Day Ploy

NEW YORK (AP) — Two city officials, their mothers and 25 other people left a Mother's Day message at the Fifth Avenue offices of the Soviet airline Friday to urge improved Russian emigration policies.

City Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin and his mother, Anna, and Assemblyman Sheldon Silver and his mother, Freda, and mother-in-law, Bertha Madelkern, put a basket of daisies and a satin mother's day card at Aeroflot's door to be sent to Evgeny Kalenderov, of Leningrad.

The airline closed its offices when the group arrived and its officials were not available for comment.

The message was one of support for Mrs. Kalenderov and her son, Boris, a 23-year-old student who was imprisoned three months ago for draft evasion after his family's 1973 attempt to emigrate to Israel. His trial begins Monday.

"On the eve of Mother's Day, we want to urge the Soviet Union to permit Jews who want to leave to get out of the Soviet Union," Goldin said. "This is to demonstrate the special visciousness of Soviet emigration policies."

Said Silver: "We're here ... because we want the Soviet airlines to fly all Russian Jews to freedom."

Silver chairs the Lower East Side Conference on Soviet Jewry and Goldin is honorary chairman of the Manhattan Chapter of the Greater New York Conference on Soviet Jewry. Demonstrators were members of both groups.

President Planning Deep-Sea Fishing Expedition Monday

The White House confirmed Carter's plans Friday, but said it had no details.

Last June, Carter joined his wife Rosalynn, daughter Amy and Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus for a day fishing offshore aboard the Gannet, a sport fishing boat owned by Norfolk lawyer Peter Decker.

Decker had no comment Friday on the latest presidential visit or whether Carter would use the Gannet again.

The Gannet, which rents for $246 for a six-person, day-long trip, is booked by its owner for Monday, and is to sail at 7 a.m., according to a marina spokesman at Rudee Inlet.

The White House spokesman would not say if Carter's wife or daughter will accompany him Monday, and a spokesman for Andrus said he had no details on any travel plans for the secretary.

About 85 percent of China's work force is engaged in agriculture.

Knock out Johnson Grass (Roots and all)...but it takes the Spray Sickle to REALLY DO IT!

Some ideas work and some won't! In 1978 over 2000 growers from California to Delaware and from Canada to Florida agreed that the Spray Sickle is one weed control idea that really works. The 1979 Spray Sickle is better than ever – (Over 35 New Improvements.) If you have Johnson Grass (or any other problem weed) the Spray Sickle is really the only sure way to eradicate it.

WANTED

Young Adult Businessmen and Women for...Delivery of the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

A young adult on a Avalanche-Journal route is a part-time business person. He/She is in business for themsel and will learn fundamentals of good business practice through actual experience.

The Avalanche-Journal carrier buys for wholesale and sells for retail, realizing a gross profit. He learns to operate his business as efficiently as possible to assure maximum profit. The A-J carrier builds his business by giving good prompt delivery service and through the use of good salesmanship.

It is important that he learns how to keep accurate records. The Avalanche-Journal carrier has the responsibility of keeping his accounts receivable in order so he can take care of his obligations promptly.

This early training will be useful to a child through his adult career. Many parents encourage their children to accept the challange offered an Avalanche-Journal newspaper route.

CHEVY CITATION

Citation goes a long way on a tank of gas. But that's just the start. Citation has the traction of front wheel drive, rack and pinion steering, front disc brakes, and a transverse mounted engine that's cradled in rubber cushioned mountings to reduce engine vibration. Sleek Citation is easy to park, yet big enough for five adults and lots of cargo. See Chevy Citation for yourself. And to really appreciate it, get behind the wheel!

EPA ESTIMATED MPG — CITY ESTIMATE 24
38 HIGHWAY ESTIMATE
With standard 4-cylinder engine and manual transmission.

Remember: Compare the estimated MPG to the "estimated MPG" of other cars. You may get different mileage depending on your speed, trip length, and weather. Your actual mileage will be lower in heavy city traffic, and your actual highway mileage will probably be less than the estimated highway fuel economy, the "estimated MPG" is more likely to reflect actual overall mileage than the "combined estimate".

TEST DRIVE THE ALL NEW CHEVY CITATION.

Texas Tech's Annual School Of Banking Scheduled May 20-26

The Texas Tech School of Banking, designed to help bank employees become more knowledgeable and professional, will conduct its annual weeklong session May 20-26.

The school has been divided into intermediate and advanced programs, each consisting of approximately 46 hours of continuing education.

"Both intermediate and advanced programs provide an excellent educational experience that is practical, relevant and designed for practitioners involved with the operational aspects and management problems of the banking industry," Ronald L. Schillereff, director, said.

The intermediate session has no educational or experience requirements as prerequisites. It provides an overview of important aspects of the industry. The intermediate program is recommended for new employees or those with limited experience who want to become more familiar with the general scope of the banking industry, as well as for experienced personnel with several years of service who seek update and review.

For the advanced program, an individual should have approximately three years' experience in banking. Emphasis will be on group decision making and participant interaction. Each participant will function as a member of a five-member management team. These terms will work together on a Stanford Bank Management Simulator and on a variety of case study problems involving bank performance, growth and profitability.

"Instructors and discussion leaders in both programs have extensive practicial experience that contributes to the effectiveness of course materials and overall program quality," Schillereff said.

Every student in the school will receive a comprehensive set of material in notebook form. Materials will contain course outlines and reference documents to be used in class sessions, case studies and workshops.

The school will open with a keynote address and reception on May 20 at the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center. Formal class sessions will begin the next day.

Daily class sessions will be held in the College of Business Administration Building on the Texas Tech campus

Single-occupancy dormitory space for participants is located a block from the college. Recreational facilities on the Texas Tech campus will be open to participants.

Approximately 260 banking professionals are expected to attend. For more information, persons should contact Schillereff or the Center for Professional Development.

Currier & Ives Prints Displayed At Museum

The Esmark Collection of 19th century Currier & Ives prints on display now at The Museum of Texas Tech University offers visitors humor, history and art as well as some of the finest examples of early American lithography.

The exhibit, 125 prints in mint condition, includes scenes of hunting, sailing, horse racing, fishing and everday life. Of special interest are the news prints of fires and other events, possibly the initial effort in this kind of journalism.

The pictures were drawn by some of America's most gifted artists. Although the firm attempted chromolithography about 1889, most of the prints were black and white. One of the firm's leading artists would be asked to color one print as a model. This was placed in front of a group of women, who, following that model, colored the run of prints by hand.

Dr. Leslie C. Drew, director of The Museum, said that most of the prints are particularly fine examples of the lithographer's art.

Lithography is based on the principle that grease and water repel each other. It was developed in Bavaria by Aloys Senefelder in the late 1700s.

By the printing methods the master image is drawn with a grease pencil or greasy ink on a specially selected stone, preferably Bavarian limestone which is soft and finely pored and can be sanded to an extremely smooth surface.

The stone then is treated with a bath of acid and gum arabic to take a slight bite into the blank areas and seal the pores. The stone is kept wet during the entire printing process. This water is repelled by the grease of the ink and stays only in the white areas. The greasy ink used for printing adhered only to the drawing and does not spill into the water film on the white areas. Currier & Ives prints were pulled on a hand press and hung to dry before they were colored.

Spurs Rip Bullets

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A stunned Washington coach Dick Motta figured explosive George Gervin must have had 50 points Friday night against his shell-shocked Bullets. It was absolutely no consolation when he learned Gervin had a "mere" 42 in San Antonio's 118-102 playoff rout.

With Gervin keying a crucial third-quarter surge with a near record 20 points, the Spurs put away the Bullets to take a commanding 3-1 lead in thebest-of-seven NBA Eastern Conference championship series.

"We weren't able in any way to contain Gervin. I don't know how many points he had, probably 50," said Motta. "We tried a lot of different people on him. I finally put (forward) Greg (Ballard) on him, but by then I think Gervin had gotten bored with it. It was so easy for him it was boring.

"That's intended as a funny," Motta added without a smile.

"This is just my job, and the job is not over yet," said Gervin, showing the calm demeanor that earned him the nickname "Ice Man."

"It was just one of those nights for me. You have one of those nights every now and then," he added.

"It was just an unbelievable performance," raved San Antonio Coach Doug Moe. "He got free and hit the shots. He's tough to stop when he's not hot."

Gervin hit 19 of his 32 shots from the field, but San Antonio could managed only 45 percent as a team.

With the Spurs nursing a 60-59 lead with 8:11 remaining in the third period, Gervin hit the Spurs' next 18 points. He single-handedly outscored the Bullets 18-9 in the next 5½ minutes to give the Spurs a 78-68 lead with 2:29 remaining in the quarter.

San Antonio extended its margin to 84-72 at the end of the period and led by as many as 20 points in the final quarter.

Gervin's third-quarter performance, coming two days after the birth of his third child, was only a point shy of the National Basketball Association playoff record of 21 points in a quarter, set in

Drivers Set For First Qualifying

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The first of four days of qualifications for the May 27 Indianapolis 500 is to begin this morning, weather permitting, and it's a safe bet that no one will approach Tom Sneva's one and four-lap track records.

Sneva, a former junior high school principal from Spokane, Wash., won the pole position — the inside starting spot on the front row — with record-breaking runs each of the past two years.

Last year, he toured the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's 2½-mile oval at 203.620 miles per hour for one lap, and he wound up with a four-lap average of 202.156. He also finished second in the race both years, behind A.J. Foyt in 1977 and Al Unser a year ago.

A controversial rule change by the U.S. Auto Club, one that fueled much of the dissension in the split by Championship Auto Racing Teams, lowered the allowable manifold pressure from 70 inches of "boost" to 50 inches for eight-cylinder engines, 58 inches for non-turbocharged stock block engines, and 60 inches for the four-cylinder power plants.

USAC's intent was to equalize the various engines, and it has done that. But it also led to a sharp reduction in horsepower and, obviously, speed.

In practice this past week, the big-name CART drivers such as Unser, Johnny Rutherford, Danny Ongais, Rick Mears and Gordon Johncock dominated the quest for speed, but no one got above the mid-190s.

A line of thunderstorms moved over central Indiana on Friday, and the National Weather Service said there was a 60 percent chance for rain early today, tapering off by the afternoon.

The top practice lap this week was at

Watson Slogs Home For Lead In Nelson

DALLAS (AP) — Battling miserable playing conditions, defending champion Tom Watson struggled to a 2-over-par 72 Friday to own the 36-hole lead in the clubhouse in the weather-battered $300,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic, with darkness catching almost a third of the field before play could be completed.

Watson, who started his long day at 8 a.m. to complete Thursday's rain-hampered round, lost two strokes to par over the swamped Preston Trail Golf Club after his opening round 6-under-par 64 to finish at 4-under-par 136.

Players with a chance to catch Watson when second round play resumes Saturday morning included Larry Nelson, who holed a 162-yard 4-iron shot for an eagle on the No. 2 hole and was 7-under-par for the tournament with two holes to play.

Others also in contention when play was halted were Lanny Wadkins, who was 5-under-par with two holes to play, George Burns, who was 5-under with three holes left to play and Calvin Peete, who was 4-under-par for the tournament with three holes to play.

Jack Tuthill, tournament director for the Professional Golfers Association, twice signaled a halt to play for delays totaling two hours and 45 minutes because of heavy rains which deluged greens and fairways. Winds gusting to 17 mph made the 55 degree temperature feel like it was in the low 40s.

"Our basic policy is to do everthing possible to finish on schedule," said Tuthill.

Finishing on schedule meant the players who did not complete play will have to tee off at 8 a.m. Saturday and come back for the third round that afternoon if they make the cut.

Watson was one of the biggest victims of the weather on the 6,993 yard par 70 course he knows so well as a dues paying member. The protege of Byron Nelson cruised into the 15th hole eight under par for the day when the rains came. He went bogey, double-bogey, par, bogey and finished with a 4-over-par 39 on the backside.

"It doesn't upset me," said Watson. "Golf is not a fair game.

"I had the best of it yesterday with an afternoon tee time. It's hard to keep your concentration for four hours let alone seven hours. But I still like my position."

Eight players withdrew, including Bobby Wadkins who had an opening round 70 but was floundering when he left the course and had some unkind words for Tuthill near the press tent.

Rains on Thursday forced 38 players to finish their rounds Friday morning. Numerous fairways and greens were beyond the saturation point.

Morris Hatalsky, who had a second day one-over ar 71, was at 138 and Rod Curl, who fired the best round of the day with a 69, was at 139.

At 141 were Gene Littler, who shot a 72 Friday, Alan Tapie, with a 70, and Hubie Green with a 70.

Green had a wild first round which he completed early Friday that included seven birdies and only four pars for a 71.

Devlin, who has been doing more television commentating than playing, said, "I feel I am playing better — and that's for the first time in a long while. I don't know why either. I wished I did."

Humphrey Sizzles; Mats Take Second

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

AUSTIN — Running in a pair of flip flops, Robert Humphrey still could have managed to win the 100-yard dash at the state Class AAA track meet Friday night.

The Estacado High School ace had absolutely no trouble capturing the gold medal, rocketing to a 9.5 wind-aided time, and his effort helped the Matadors to a second-place tie in the team standings. The Matadors finished second in a tie with Mount Pleasant with 30 points, behind favored Bay City's 54.

"I thought it was more like a 9.4," said Humphrey moments after capturing the race. "I looked up and saw a 9.3 (on the giant scoreboard in Memorial Stadiu,). That's what I thought I'd run."

But he added, he'd still take the 9.5 and the medal that goes with it.

"I knew I had it won at the 50," continued Humphrey. "I was really feeling good. I don't think anybody was even close."

They weren't.

Second was Willie Houston of Mount Pleasant at 9.7, with Sammy Moore of Mount Vernon back at 9.9. Jerry Isaacs of Dunbar was in the race but failed to place.

However, Isaacs came back to place sixth in the 200 meters with a time of 22.4. He also led the Panthers to fifth in the 440 relay.

Isaacs, who perenially finished second to Humprey all season in the 100, said Humphrey told him before the start of the race that he (Humphrey) would win the title. "He said, 'I really want to win it bad, real bad,'" commented Isaacs. "He certainly did, too."

The race was marred by a false start, but Humphrey said that it didn't bother him at all. In fact, it might have helped him.

"It was just like a warmup start," he said. "I knew it wasn't me that jumped so I wasn't scared."

Perhaps the day's top performance was turned in by Dallas Jefferson strongman Michael Carter. The 251-pounder broke the state record in the discus with a heave of 198. He will go after another state title today in the Class AAAA shot put.

The soft-spoken Carter's only comment about the record-setting discus toss, was: "I liked it."

Andrews sophomore Van Pearcy scored a total of 18 points by placing second in both the long jump (24-0) and the 400-meter dash (47.5) and fifth in the 200 meter dash.

Minutes later Humphrey was again standing on the winners stand recieving another gold medal. This one, though, came in the 1,600-meter relay, giving the Matadors a total of 30 points for the evening. However that wasn't enough to cop the AAA team title which was won by Bay City.

Needville won the AA title with 54 points.

Anchored by Humphrey, the Matadors rocketed to a 31.15.7 time in the mile;the team's previous best had been a 3:16.1. The time was good enough to set a new AAA record, breaking the previous mark held by Fort Stockton (3:19.6). Second place Marlin, at 3:16.5, also broke the mark.

Running on the mile-relay team were starter Jerry Cray, Preston Davis, Robert Gatewood and, of course, Humphrey.

Ellison Portis of Ballinger turned out to be the only double winner of the evening winning the 100 (9.6) and the 200 meter (21.4). He was the defending champion in both events.

Top performances turned in by South Plains athletes were by Jimmy McIntire of New Deal, third in the discus (153-4); Joe Reynolds of Frenship, third in the shot put (56-8½; Ray Smith, of Roosevelt, second in the long jump (22-7¼) and third in the 200 (21.9); and the Slaton mile relay team which finished third third.

Rain Halts LCC Short Of 5-3 Win

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

ARLINGTON — A heavy rain descended on Arlington Stadium just before the end of Lubbock Christian College's NAIA District VII tournament game with University of Dallas, leaving everything but the outcome of the contest in doubt.

The Chaps had a 5-3 lead with one out and a man on first in the top of the ninth inning when officials decided the game couldn't continue. Because of special tournament rules, the remaining five outs must be played and the game cannot be called as it usually would.

Therefore, the teams will set up the same situation this morning at 9 in an effort to finish this game and the other two contests that were rained out today.

Otherwise, the tournament will have to be extended to Monday, with the winner having to be on the field in Phoenix when the Area II tourney starts Wednesday morning.

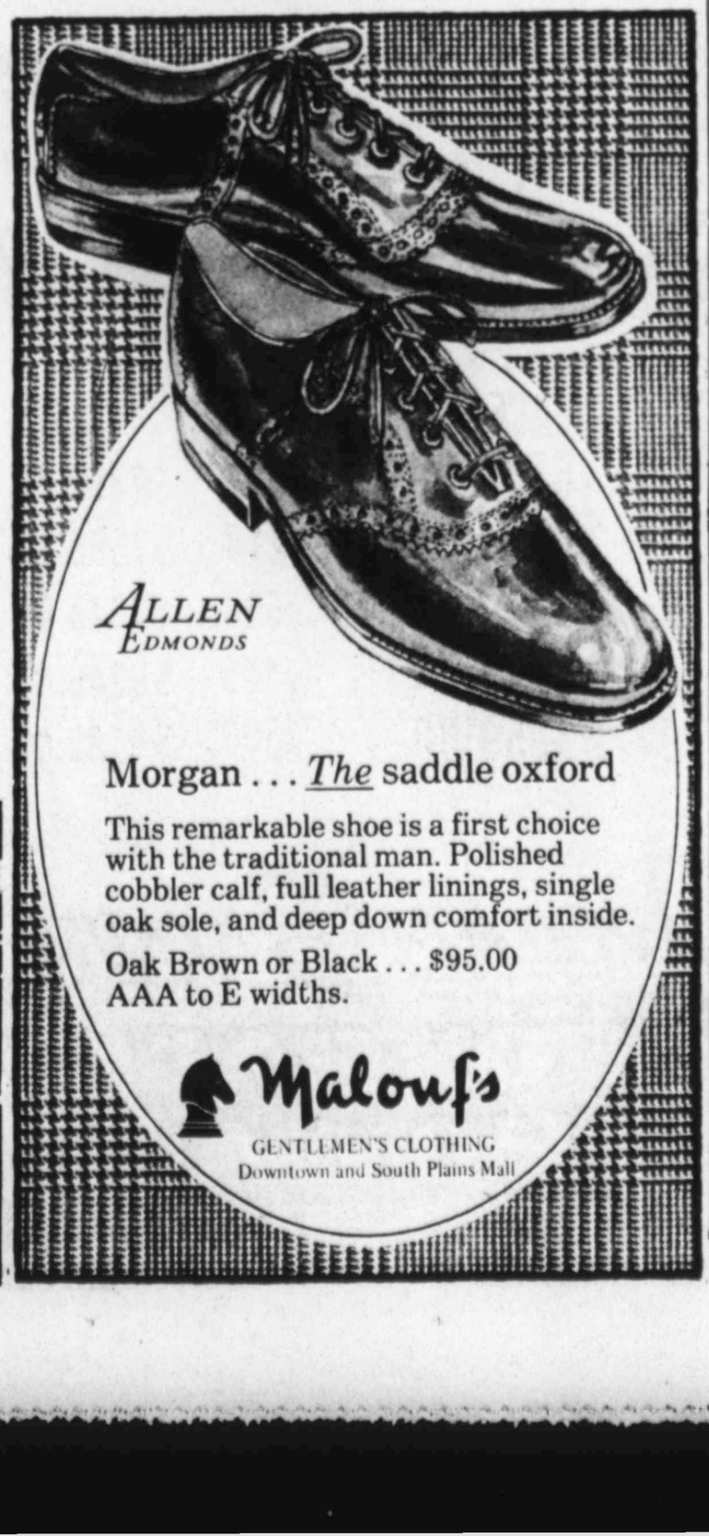

In the 8 1/3 innings played Friday morning, the Chaparrals practically had the game handed to them on a silver platter. Being gracious guests, they tried to turn it away, but Dallas would have none of that.

Of the five LCC runs, only 1 (the last) was earned.

The Chaps (and the UD penchant for generosity) started quickly. Tommy Inman, the game's first batter, reached first base on the first pitch. It was also the Crusaders' first error.

Steve Brigante, next up, belted the third pitch straight down the left field line for a double, moving Inman to third. Then with two out, pitcher Bruce

Mats, Dunbar Finish Year

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

As Vince Buffamonte reached in the ball bag while throwing batting practice Friday afternoon, the Matador baseball coach's eyes began to sparkle.

What Buffamonte had grabbed was an old wornout softball, which the Estacado coach held over his head and yelled out, "Hey, this looks like one of Parker's fastballs."

Yes, the Matadors were loose on the eve of the season finale with Dunbar Panthers. The two teams will close out the District 1-AAA season today at Mackenzie Park in a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m.

Chaps Delayed

Eisenberg threw the ball past batter Kenny Doe — and his catcher— as Inman scored on the wild pitch.

Doe walked, and the entire UD team went to the mound for a talk with Eisenberg. It did no good. Doe walked and got a good lead off first base. In fact he started walking to second. Eisenberg turned to throw him out, then remembered Brigante on third.

Stuck to the spot — like a jackrabbit in a car headlight — he held the ball just long enough before throwing home for Brigante to score.

Dallas had a chance to get even in the third. Designated hitter Mark Vahos singled, then went to second as Jose Fernandez was hit by a Gary Swann pitch. Greg Fisher sacrificed the runners to second and third with only one out and it looked like trouble for LCC.

No way. Jim O'Neill's attempted bunt popped high to Swann, who flipped the ball to third for the double play.

The Chaparrals got 1 more in the fifth but blew an opportunity for more. Brady Brashear singled, Bob Nottebart bunted him to second and he scored when Brigante lofted a high fly that the right fielder misjudged.

Dallas elected to walk Leslie and then loaded the bases by walking Kenny Toney. But Doe struck out to end the inning.

The Crusaders made LCC pay in the bottom of the inning. After striking out the first batter, Swann's control began to slip away probably in search of some place warm and dry. First he gave up a hit to Fernandez.

After a ground out, he walked Mark Ray and Jerry Haberkorn in quick succession, the last scoring Fisher. He then plunked catcher Keith Whitley in the shoulder, scoring another run.

Swann left in search of his control and in favor of Noel Delgado. Delgado struck out the next batter and then retired the next 10 with hardly a disturbance to keep UD in check the rest of the way.

But, the key loop doubleheaders will have Canyon (6-7) at Borger (10-3), with Dumas (9-4) at Levelland (9-4).

If Borger sweeps Canyon, the Bulldogs will win the district championship. However, if Borger and Canyon split, and either Dumas or Levelland sweeps its twinbill, then there will be a two-way tie.

But that's not all. If Canyon sweeps Borger and Dumas and Levelland split, there will be three-way tie for the championship.

Meanwhile, though all the important 1-AAA decisions will be decided up in the Panhandle, Estacado (5-8) and Dunbar (0-13) will be trying to lay the foundation of a future rivalry.

"The kids are too young and this is only the first year for both schools to return its baseball programs," said Buffamonte. "No, we don't have the intense rivalry that football and basketball have. But I suspect next year we will."

And Dunbar coach Kelly Rogers agrees.

"We're both just starting," said the Panther mentor. "When we build that competitive base, that's when the rivalry will begin."

Despite kidding about Parker's fastball, Buffamonte will throw the righthander in the first game. "Yeah, Parker throws two pitches: A curve and over the plate," said the coach.

But, the coach wasn't kidding about Parker's surprising success. Going into today's action, Parker sports a (10-5, 4-3) record.

The Panthers will counter with Johnny Ceja (0-1, 1-5) in the first game, with Daryl Green (1-7, 0-4) throwing the second. Estacado will pitch either Hector Limon (5-8, 1-4) or Kenneth Davis (1-1, 1-1) in the second game.

"I think the second game is going to be a lot closer than the first one," said Rogers. "That's because from our standpoint our best pitcher (Green) will pitch in the second contest."

Ending high school baseball careers today for the Matadors include first baseman Manuel Escamilla and second sacker Tony Gutierrez. Taking the field for the last time for the Panthers will be Green, Ceja and rightfielder Juan Mendoza.

"I feel really bad about losing Escamilla and Gutierrez," said Buffamonte. "Both have never missed a practice and have contributed to this club."

"For us — especially our seniors — today's games are a matter of pride," replied Rogers. "Our three seniors don't want to end the season without winning a district game. If we can split with them, then hopefully it will help us next year to stay on the same competitive level with the Matadors."

"Hey, that's why we're out here (practice) today," said Buffamonte. "When we start both games tomorrow, the score will be 0-0."

When the two teams met earlier in the season, the Matadors won 10-0 in a single game at the EHS field. This time the action will be held at Mackenzie Park, the home of Dunbar.

"I think that playing at Mackenzie will be a little bit to our advantage," said Rogers. "If the wind is blowing, the long ball won't reach our fences."

Buffamonte, on the otherhand, doesn't really care where the twinbill is played.

"Really, this late in the season, it really doesn't have that much of a bearing," said the Matador coach. "We'll get seven times up and they'll bat seven times."

Finals Set In Boxing Tournament

Golden gloves boxers from all over West Texas will square off tonight at the Fair Park Coliseum in the finals of the regional AAU Junior Olympics.

Fighters in the intermediate and senior divisions that are victorious tonight will advance to Alice to meet the winners from the South Texas area. Those winners then advance to the state AAU meet in Austin — and the Texas champions will go to Nashville, Tenn., for the nationals.

Tonight's card will have 29 fights, and ticket prices have been lowered to $2 for adults and $1 for children. The ticket money will be used to send the area winners to Alice.

Angelo Carrillo and Johnny Miller of the Lubbock are two of the city fighters with good chances at making the trip to Alice. Brian Martinez of the Lubbock Dragons is another Hub City fighter featured in tonight's matches.

Gilbert Castillo, Raymond Amalla and Roddy Blake, all former regional Golden Gloves champions, will be on hand to award the championship ribbons.

Several pee wee and junior boxers will also compete on tonight's card.

Rice Hurdler Breaks Own Mark In Prelims

AUSTIN (AP) — Defending Southwest Conference 110-meter hurdles champion Doc King of Rice broke his own meet record with a 13.97 clocking Friday to highlight qualifying in the rain-plagued 64th SWC Track and Field meet.

King, attempting to win his third consecutive hurdles crown, will be challenged in today's finals by Texas A&M's Mike Mosley, who gained the finals with a 14.39 time in his first competitive hurdles race of the season.

King, who established the SWC meet record of 14.0 last year, finished first in his heat ahead of Houston's Charles Whigham and Jesse James of Rice.

Mosley, who recently started working with the track team following spring football practice, burst out of the blocks in the second heat and was leading at the midway point before eventually finishing second to TCU's Jeff Matthews who qualified at 14.38.

The first day of the two-day SWC meet was hampered by morning rains that forced postponement of three final events, javelin, discus and long jump, until today.

King, who also qualified into the finals of the 400-meter hurdles, as one of 12 Rice athletes to reach today's finals. The Texas Longhorns qualified 13 athletes to the finals while Texas A&M and Houston had seven each, and Arkansas placed five.

Baylor, SMU and TCU each qualified four performers to the finals and Texas Tech had three.

Houston sprinter Rich Edwards led all qualifiers into the 100-meter dash finals with a wind-aided 10.31 clocking in his heat. Curtis Dickey of Texas A&M, the defending champion, qualified at 10.37.

"The guy I'm most concerned about tomorrow is Rich Edwards," said Dickey. "I haven't run my best race yet this year. I hope it's tomorrow."

Edwards, who also qualified for the 200-meter dash finals said, "If I'm within a yard of Dickey within the first 10 yards, I can beat him. He's got a good start and I've got a good finish."

Rice's Bruce Gingrich, who won the SWC 800-meter last year but was disqualified, finished second in his heat this year to gain the finals once again.

Texas Tech's James Mays, who has the fastest time in the SWC this year, led qualifiers into the finals with a 1:50.73 clocking.

Edwards was the top qualifier in the 200 meters with a wind-aided 20.6 clocking. His primary challengers in the finals will be David Walker of TCU and Texas A&M's Steve Willis.

In other preliminaries Friday, Raider Greg Lautenslager led 1500-meter qualifiers with a 3:52.0 time; A&M's Leslie Kerr led 400-meter dash qualifiers with a 47.47 time; and Whigham had the fastest 400-meter hurdles time at 52.15.

Durham Heads CTK's Honorees

Durham shared the John Meyer Memorial Award for Athlete of the Year with Randy Kitten and also picked up awards as the basketball and football MVP.

Shannon Washburn was honored as the outstanding girls basketball player and Sally Castillo was the track MVP.

Recognized for their football acheivements were Phillip Buescher, outstanding offensive lineman; Steve Gibler, defensive lineman; Luke Halsell, offensive back; Jatin Mehta, defensive back.

Basketball honorees were Sean Flynn, offense, and Randy Kitten on defense. The girl cagers cited were Carrie Mosser, offense, and Ronnette Walsh.

Mark Wood was the outstanding trackster and Phillip Buescher was named the outstanding field performer. Mary Boullion was the top girls field athlete.

Tigers Go Against Tors

SNYDER (Special) — The Snyder Tigers, champions of District 3-AAA, will host the Burkburnett Bulldogs, winners of 4-AAA, Tuesday in the first round of the bidistrict playoffs. The game will start at 4 p.m.

But, before that, the Tigers will take on Lamesa today in their final district contest.

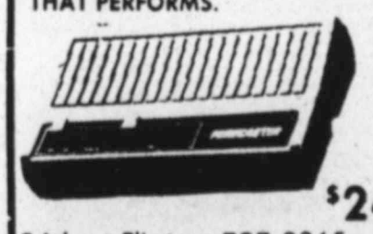

Snyder qualified for the best two-of-three game series last Saturday when it edged Brownfield 1-0 in eight innings to claim its third crown.

Snyder's pitching rotation for the bidistrict playoffs will have Sid Everton (8-2, 4-0) throwing in the first game. Mitch Mackey (6-3, 2-1) will be on the hill when the series moves to Burkburnett for a doubleheader if necessary, with either DeGrate or Everton pitching the third contest.

Perry Goes After Second High Jump Crown

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

AUSTIN — A floweredy shirt, bermuda shorts, white socks and sandals could have easily been Chuck Perry's uniform when he traveled to the state track and field meet a year ago.

The then Monterey junior looked on the trip simply "as a vacation, a way to get out of school."

But a funny thing happened to Perry on his way to the camera store for a few boxes of film. He upped and won the Class AAAA high jump title with a leap of 7-0, surprising not only himself but also one of the strongest high jump fields ever assembled at Memorial Stadium.

Perry will go after his second state title when the AAAA, AA and B portion of the two-day meet gets under way today at 11:30 a.m. And this time around, the lanky senior says it's more than vacation time.

"I've got a job to do this year," said Perry, "Last year I won it because I was lucky. I sort of sneaked up on everybody. But this year is different. Everybody knows who I am.

"This year I'm not going to win it because I'm lucky. I'm going to win it because I worked harder than the rest of them. It's not a vacation."

Perry will be joined at the prestigous meet by teammate Curtis Conaway, also a state-competitor a year ago. However, this time around, Conaway will compete in the halfmile and not the mile.

The only other AAAA competitor from the South Plains is Hereford sprinter Paul Bell. Bell is one of the state's best in the 220-yard dash with a top time of 21.5.

"I think Chuck has an excellent chance of winning the title," said Monterey coach Bob Gay. "He had a great week of workout. . .cleared 7-0 three times and just missed at 7-3. He's ready."

Perry echoed those same feelings. "It (last week) was probably the best week of workouts I've had all year. I really worked hard. I was clearing my practice heights and that gave me a lot of confidence."

Perry, who hasn't cleared 7-0 since he made that height at the state meet last year, feels it will take anywhere from 6-10 to 7-4 to capture the crown this time around.

"It's really hard to say," said Perry. "You really don't know what you're capable of doing when you start. Like last year, I came down just wanting to place in the top three. But things really clicked for me and I went 7-0."

Of the eight high jumpers, six of them are repeat competitors, including Ricky Thompson of Houston Jones and Don Jones of Nacagdoches. Perry feels those two will be his primary competition. John Paige of Killeen, who cleared 6-10 at the regional meet in Lubbock two weeks ago, should also be in the race, Perry said.

"It's really a great bunch of jumpers," said Perry. "And anyone of them is capable of winning it."

Perry's exploits in the high jump may be overshadowed somewhat because at the same time on the opposite end of Memorial Stadium, national schoolboy record holder Michael Carter of Dallas Jefferson will be tossing the shot put.

Carter is the drawing card of the meet. The 235-pounder set a new national mark last week in Abilene by tossing the shot 77-0.

"I may go over and watch him ," said Perry, "I'm not starting until 6-6, so that should give me plenty of time."

Conaway, who switched from the mile to the 880 this year, faces more than his share of tough competiton. Also entered in the race are Lynn Howe of Houston Waltrip (1:52.5) and Rick Raymond of Richardson Pearce (1:53.9), two of the state's top middle-distance runners.

Conaway qualified for the state meet by running a 1:54.5 at the region event. However, he has a best of 1:53.2.

Pampa Wins 3-AAAA Crown

PAMPA (Special) — Greg Koch had three hits in four times at the plate and knocked in the winning run with a sacrifice fly as the Pampa Harvesters defeated Amarillo High 5-4 in a District 3-AAAA playoff game Friday afternoon.

Steve Stout (8-1) got the win in relief, while Pat Hrncir (5-4) took the loss.

Pampa will now host Monterey in the first game of the bidistrict action. The two teams will play a single game here Tuesday at 4 p.m. The second and third games if necessary in the best-of-three game series will be played at Lowrey Field. The second contest of the series will begin at 2 p.m.

Spurs Take Bloody Win

1947 by Philadelphia's Joe Fulks.

At one point in the third quarter, Gervin, the NBA's scoring champion for two consecutive seasons, reeled off eight unanswered points.

The series moves back to Landover, Md., home of the defending NBA champion Bullets, for the fifth game on Sunday.

The Spurs shut out Washington's high-scoring Bobby Dandridge in the first half and Dandridge, averaging nearly 25 points a game in the series, finished with only six. Elvin Hayes, involved in an early fracas with San Antonio's Mike Green, finished with 23 points for the Bullets.

Less than four minutes into the game, the skinny, 6-foot-10, 200-pound Green, got into the heated shoving match with the 6-9, 235-pound Hayes. Blood streamed down Green's face from a cut in his left eyelid, apparently caused when he caught an elbow in the face.

Green, the San Antonio starting center, had three stitches taken in his eyelid in the locker room and returned to the game early in the second quarter.

But the game evolved into a brutal affair in the first half, with numerous shoving matches under the basket involving Hayes, massive Washington center Wes Unseld, and San Antonio's Green, Mark Olberding, Billy Paultz and Coby Dietrick. The four Spurs each picked up three fouls in that rugged first half.

Meanwhile, the Spurs and Bullets could each manage only 37 percent of their shots from the field, and San Antonio held a 50-49 lead at the half.

Lubbock Dragway Action Scheduled

First race will be at 7:30 p.m. as Super, Pro, Heavy and Street classifications run for points and cash prizes.

Competition also is slated in a motorcycle class and for Trophy Bracket cars, the latter event not open to money runners.

Gates at the track, two miles south of Idalou on FM 400, open at 2 p.m. Technical inspection ends at 6 p.m. and the time trials starting line closes at 6:15.

Admission for spectators is $3, with children 6 and under free. On the pit side admission is $5 and $2.

SO LONG, IT'S BEEN GOOD... — As Earvin Johnson looks on, Michigan State basketball coach Jud Heathcote expresses — verbally and visually — his disappointment at Friday's announcement that the all-America Johnson was turning pro after only two years with the Spartans. Heathcote said, however, that he would support Earvin's choice. (AP Laserphoto)

'Magic' Takes Challenge Of Pro Game

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Declaring the challenge of playing pro basketball outweighs even the millions of dollars he'll earn, Michigan State star Earvin Johnson decided Friday to cut short his college career and turn professional.

The 19-year-old sophomore, noting he's accomplished about everything possible in two years as a Spartan, said he would offer himself in the June 25 National Basketball Association draft.

The announcement came as no surprise, since Johnson led Michigan State to the NCAA championship this spring after two straight Big Ten titles. But the 6-foot-8 "Magic Man" maintained the decision still was not easy.

"It's been rough, you know — I've been going through a lot," the Lansing hometown hero told a packed news conference ablaze with television lights. "I thought it would be best for me. It'll be a challenge to me to go to th NBA and test my skills. We did a lot in college that I thought would take four years — but it took only two."

"So next season. . .I'll be turning pro."

The Los Angeles Lakers pick first in the draft, and have indicated they are keen on Johnson. He went to Los Angeles earlier this week to get a look at the city.

"It was nice — the only thing I don't like is the gas thing," Johnson said, referring to California's gasoline shortage.

In Los Angeles, Lakers owner Jack Kent Cook said the "chances are good we will draft him, but that decision I have not made. I believe Earvin Johnson will easily be the most exciting player to play in the NBA since Julius Erving."

Spartans coach Jud Heathcote had a predictable reaction to Johnson's announcement, which he said means the Spartans, "instead of a super club, will be just a good club" next season.

"I thought of two things, vomit and suicide," Heathcote said wryly. "And I might still do both." But he declared he was behind Earvin whatever his decision.

Johnson said he stayed up until 4 a.m. Friday making up his mind — and there were plenty of arguments pulling him toward home. Midnight was the deadline to announce.

"I'm giving up a lot — the students, my teammates, the chance to have a lot of fun," he said. "But I always want a challenge — every year I want something to strive for."

The lanky Johnson, who dazzled Spartan fans and opponents with his ball-handling wizardry, only touched on the importance of money in making his decision.

He said he expects "a nice contract," in the range of $600,000 a year in a four- or five-year pact, although he said he had "no commitment" from the Lakers. Published reports this week said Los Angeles proposed a four-year contract worth at least $2 million.

But Johnson stressed he does not have dollar signs in his eyes, despite a lot of advice to grab the money while he can.

"It's a job now — it's not a real big thing," he said. "I don't knock it, but I'm not going out and buy 50 cars or four or five houses."

Johnson led Lansing Everett to the state high school Class A championship his senior year, then strolled down the street to MSU, sparking the Spartans to their first national title. His statistics were not breathtaking — 17 points, 7.3 rebounds and 8.4 assists a game last season — but his court quarterbacking controlled game after game.

Johnson knew he could have two more years as the top campus celebrity, but there were few goals yet to conquer.

"I've got to go sometime — it might as well be now," he said. "It's going to be hard — I'd like to stay around, but I've got to go sometime."

Heathcote, meanwhile, saw his team lose its two top stars. Graceful forward Gregory Kelser, who turned so many of Earvin's lob passes into slam dunks, graduates and will go in the NBA draft, too.

"The program will endure," Heathcote said. "We'll slide a bit. . .into a semi-rebuilding year."

Matlack Gets First Victory As Rangers Nip Jays

By The Associated Press

Matlack, 1-2, scattered six hits in only his third start of the season after being plagued by floating bone chips in his pitching elbow.

Toronto starter Jim Clancy, 2-5, had only allowed five hits through 61-3 innings before straining his foot and having to leave the game. Reliever Jesse Jefferson finished the game for Toronto, giving up only two hits.

Sample led off the game with a bloop double to right. He was sacrificed to third and scored on a ground-out by Al Oliver to give Texas a 1-0 lead.

Texas scored two runs in the fifth inning on a run-scoring fielder's choice by Nelson Norman and an RBI single by Sample.

BRAVES 3, CARDS 0

Jeff Burroughs' leadoff home run in the seventh inning broke up Bob Forsch's no-hit bid and triggered Adrian Devine and the Atlanta Braves to a 3-0 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Burroughs' homer, his second of the season and second against St. Louis, came on a 2-0 delivery after Forsch had retired 16 of the first 18 batters he faced.

METS 4, PADRES 0

John Stearns hit a two-run homer to lead the New York Mets to a 4-0 victory over the San Diego Padres behind the combined six-hit pitching of Kevin Kobel and Skip Lockwood.

Stearns' two-out blow came off rookie right-hander Steve Gura, 2-1, in the fourth after Gura had walked Steve Henderson to lead off the inning. Both runs were unearned, as shortstop Ozzie Smith dropped the ball on an attempted double play.

Stearns also was the only member of the 1978 Mets to homer in cavernous San Diego Stadium. Kobel, 1-0, walked three and struck out two through eight innings, with Lockwood pitching the ninth.

BREWERS 5, TIGERS 1

Mark "The Bird" Fidrych of Detroit, making his first regular-season appearance at Tiger Stadium in more than a year, was victimized by three Milwaukee runs in the sixth inning — two on a double by Paul Molitor — and the Brewers defeated the Tigers 5-1.

Lary Sorensen scattered five hits for Milwaukee to raise his record to 5-3 while Fidrych, slowly coming back from arm injuries, lost his first decision of the year. The only damage off Sorensen was a leadoff homer in the fifth by Lance Parrish.

The Brewers' sixth began with a leadoff double by Ben Oglivie. One out later, Fidrych walked Gorman Thomas intentionally. Then Ray Fosse doubled home Oglivie. And that, to the anger of the crowd of 42,563, was the end of The Bird for the night.

RED SOX 11, A'S 2

Carl Yastrzemski and Butch Hobson had two hits apiece in an eight-run fourth inning as the Boston Red Sox breezed to an 11-2 rout of the Oakland A's.

Yastrzemski ignited the uprising against Oakland starter Matt Keough, 0-4, with a single to center. He later hit a two-run single and scored for the second time in the inning.

ANGELS 4, YANKEES 1

Don Baylor hit a three-run homer in the fourth inning and Jim Barr scattered eight hits for his first American League victory as the California Angels defeated the New York Yankees.

Baylor's fifth homer of the season was the Angels' only hit of the inning, but it followed right fielder Reggie Jackson's two-base muff of Dan Ford's fly ball and a walk to Rod Carew. The blast boosted Baylor's major league-leading RBI total to 34 in 32 games.

ORIOLES 8, MARINERS 3

The streaking Baltimore Orioles got home runs from Al Bumbry and John Lowenstein and a six-hit pitching job from Steve Stone to defeat the Seattle Mariners 8-3.

The victory was the 18th in the last 21 games for the Orioles and their fourth in a row over Seattle this season. The Mariners, who have never won in Baltimore, dropped their 11th straight game here.

REDS 8, PIRATES 4

Dave Concepcion drove in four runs with a homer and a triple, and reserve infielder Junior Kennedy rapped four hits and scored four runs to pace the surging Cincinnati Reds to an 8-4 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

TWINS 4, INDIANS 3

Pinch-hitter Bob Randall's double in the bottom of the ninth scored Ron Jackson and gave the Minnesota Twins a 4-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Jackson had doubled off Sid Monge, 1-3, with two outs. Then Randall's hit sailed over the head of Cleveland left-fielder Paul Dade, who was drawn in against the weak-hitting Randall.

Mike Marshall pitched the last two innings in relief of Twins' starter Paul Hartzell and raised his record to 6-1. The 36-year-old Marshall has appeared in 17 games and with nine saves, and had a hand in 15 of the 21 victories by Minnesota.

Cleveland starter Rick Wise had a 3-1 lead until the seventh when Minnesota tied it with two runs. Wise allowed only five hits in 72-3 innings and gave up two earned runs, one coming in the fifth on Ron Jackson's fourth home run of the year.

Paul Dade's run-scoring triple and an RBI double by Bobby Bonds helped Cleveland to a 2-0 lead after three innings. Jackson made it 2-1 with his blast, but Wayne Cage hit his first home run of the year in the top of the seventh to put the Indians back up by two runs.

CUBS 5, ASTROS 3

Barry Foote's run-scoring double highlighted a three-run second inning for Chicago and carried the Cubs to a 5-3 victory over the Houston Astros.

Foote's double followed a run-scoring single by Jerry Martin and preceded Ted Sizemore's RBI grounder as the Cubs handed the Astros their sixth loss in their last eight games.

Rick Reuschel, 2-4, scattered eight hits over the first 52-3 innings to pick up the victory. Willie Hernandez took over, then Bruce Sutter got the last five outs to pick his sixth save.

Chicago added a run in the third on a single and stolen base by Bill Buckner and Steve Ontiveros' single to center off Frank Riccelli, 2-2. The Cubs scored their other run in the fifth off reliever Gary Wilson on walks to Ivan DeJesus and Bobby Murcer and Buckner's single.

WHITE SOX 5, ROYALS 3

Bill Nahorodny and Ralph Garr cracked two-run homers to lead Ken Kravec and the Chicago White Sox to a 5-3 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Nahorodny's third homer of the seaso capped a three-run second. Garr's fifth inning homer, his fourth of the year, snapped a 3-3 tie after the Royals had scored twice without the aid of a hit in the top of the inning.

Kravec, 2-3, allowed only two hits in the 62-3 innings he worked, but he yielded eight walks and hit two batters. Steve Busby, 0-2, took the loss.

The Royals scored a run in the second when Joe Zdeb walked with two out and scored on a double by Fred Patek.

Rain Delays State Tournament

AUSTIN (Special) — Nazareth split two doubles' matches in Class B competition of the state tennis tournament here Friday.

Norman Gerber and Perry Brockman of Nazareth defeated Ronald Braswell and Joe Williams of Blue Ridge 6-2, 7-6. However the Rock Springs team of Keith Edwards and Gary Hatley knocked off Jimmy Huseman and Stanley Hoelting of Nazareth 6-4, 6-2.

Rains pounded Austin Friday and forced canellation of the singles matches, including the first-round game for Dunbar's Kevin Bryant. The entire tournament will be wrapped up today.

Black Gits Takes Race

Black Gits finished the 625-mile race in an average speed of 647 miles per hour and won the Outstanding Bird award. The time also betterred the one turned in by Big Red, which won the Lubbock Racing Pigeon Club's version of the identical course.

The Lubbock Homing Pigeon Club will fly four more races this season two from Austin, one from Houston and a 750 mile flight from New Orleans.

Indy 500 Qualifying Roars Off

194.9 by Foyt, an original member of CART who quickly came back to USAC and has since spoken bitterly of the new organization. And many CART people questioned whether Foyt's hot lap was legal, meaning whether he was running with the prescribed 50 inches of boost.

A survey of 27 drivers on Thurday showed they expected a four-lap average of about 191 mph would capture the pole. Estimates of the speed it would take to qualify in the 33-car field ranged from 181.2 to 176.1.

As usual the starting lineup of 11 rows of cars, three abreast, will be determined by the average speed on four qualifying laps. The qualification order will be determined by a blind draw, and once a car is presented to USAC as ready to make a run and then stays in line, it is guaranteed a chance for the pole position.

The fastest car among the first-day group will get the pole position, and all first-day qualifiers will start ahead of those who qualify on subsequent days.

A record 100 entries were received by the Speedway this year, but that doesn't mean 100 cars will attempt to qualify or that 100 cars are even garaged at Gasoline Alley. Many car owners submit "ghost" entries to get two or more adjoining garages for extra working space.

The drop in speeds this year halted a two-year rise, which in turn followed a three-year decline because of other USAC technical restrictions. After the 1973 race, in which two drivers and a track crewman were killed, USAC made several safety changes — including restrictions on manifold pressure and fuel capacity — which resulted in dramatically lower speeds.

But two years, ago, after the entire track was resurfaced and USAC eased the restrictions somewhat, the speeds soared to where a 200-mph lap seemed inevitable.

Gordon Johncock, the 1973 Indy winner an one of five former champions entered this year, was the first to hit 200 during tire tests in March 1977. Then, in practice for the 500 two months later, Foyt, Mario Andretti and Johnny Rutherford all reached 200.

Sneva Sees Slower Time For Pole Spot

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Tom Sneva says he won't become the first man to sit on the pole for the Indianapolis 500 three straight years if speeds reach the 190 mph range on today's first day of qualifying for the May 27 race.

"The car just won't go that fast under the 50-inch rule," said Sneva, who set qualifying records the last two years, when he won the pole and finished second in the race.

Sneva, the 30-year-old former school principal from Spokane, Wash., realizes five cars have topped 190 during the first week of practice at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway. But he's unconvinced that they've been doing it within the rules that will cut manifold pressure to 50 inches of mercury for the eight-cylinder racers during time trials.

"Sure, somebody has been running legal. But I don't know who," Sneva said. "I don't know how much they'll be able to get away with on qualifying day, however.

"It appears at this point that the valve which limits the car to the 50-inch rule isn't able to do that. It appears they need to do something if they want to keep it at the 50-inch maximum.

"It's obviously possible to override the valve. They're running the valve on the car with more speed and horsepower than people say you should have with the 50 inches."

All the fastest drivers in practice except A.J. Foyt, who isn't talking about his mid-190s runs, have said they are running within the limits. Sneva, who drove for Roger Penske the last two years and captured the U.S. Auto Club's national championship last year without winning a race, is driving a McLaren-Cosworth for Jerry O'Connell this year.

"I'm real excited about the car," he said. "We updated McLaren equipment which is good to start with."

He added: "As far as qualifying, I think they've taken the driver out of it. You just go out there full throttle the whole route. It all depends on how the mechanics set the car up and how it functions during the four qualifying laps."

Sneva has been running in the mid-180s this month, more than 15 mph slower than his qualifying speeds a year ago. But the reduction in speed doesn't really uset Sneva, who is one of the few drivers calling for a slowdown in recent years.

"We've needed to do something to make the races more competitive and keep the public interested," he said. "I'm not certain this is the right ratio of difference between eight and four-cylinder cars (50-60 inches of mercury), but at least it's an honest effort."

Sneva, like most of the big names in auto racing, is affiliated with the breakaway Championship Auto Racing Teams in its battle with USAC for control of the sport. But he says the sport can't survive with two competing organizations.

"We've got to get everyone going in the same direction. . .That's just common sense. You can't have two groups working against each other and expect the sport to grow.

"We need concessions on both sides. Then maybe we can improve our sport."

Auburn Accepts NCAA Ruling

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Auburn University will not challenge the probation ordered by the National Collegiate Athletic Association even though officials said Friday the punishment was too severe.

At a news conference, Auburn University president Harry M. Philpott asserted that "the sanction imposed for two years in football was too severe a penalty in the light of findings."

And attorney Morris Savage, who represented Auburn before the NCAA, said the school disagrees that some of the findings in the NCAA investigation are "established facts."

He acknowledged that "some penalty was justified," but to place the Auburn football team on probation for two years and the basketball team for one year, he added, was not.

Nevertheless, Savage insisted that it "would not be in the best interest of the program to contest the findings." He said, "The worst is behind us."

The NCAA announced Thursday that it has placed Auburn on probation because of recruiting violations. Under the terms of the probation, Auburn is barred from post-season and televised competition.

The NCAA also said that as a result of the investigation, Auburn will disassociate two former football coaches from its intercollegiate athletic program and not accept recruiting assistance from seven representatives of its athletic interests.

At Friday's news conference, Philpott refused to identify the former coaches and representatives, saying that "to name names would be to condemn."

But responding to persistent questioning, Savage interjected tht none of the allegations involved former coach Ralph "Shug" Jordan or Jordan's successor, Doug Barfield.

And Philpott pointed out that only two violations involved members of the Tiger football team, one a former player, the other presently enrolled. All the others, he said, involved students who did not accept an Auburn grant-in-aid.

The Auburn president finally acknowledged, however, that a current member of the Tiger football team, Marshall Riley, has been declared ineligible to participate in post-season competition.

That is "not so severe," Philpott added, because the probation prevents Auburn from competing in post-season bowls anyway.

Philpott noted that the NCAA's investigation has been "public kowledge" since it began in January 1977. Consequently, he added, "Auburn has, in one sense of the word, been on probation for three recruiting years.

"This has seriously impaired our ability to recruit many top quality athletes and to hire top quality staff at times to further our program."

Asked about player reaction to the probation, Barfield said he hoped his team would "band together and exert more effort" now that the probation is completed. As for himself, the coach said, "I'm so tired of this. I'm just ready to play."

The NCAA's announcement Thursday did not surprise the Tiger players. "We were prepared for it," George Stephenson said Thursday night. "It has been a pretty big subject around here."

Jim Skuthan, another junior tackle, echoed Stephenson, saying, "I really expected it, so it's not too much of a blow." And he predicted that Auburn will bounce back.

"We're like an animal that's been kicked around too much," he said. "There's not much we can do about it so we'll just have to play harder."

Skuthan criticized the way the NCAA handled the investigation, describing it was "very poor." He said he feels the NCAA is "taking it out on the wrong people — the players. It's a shame it has to happen."

New Yorker Ready To Buy Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — Execution of a substantive agreement to sell the Houston Asros to John J. McMullen, a New York naval architect and limited partner in the New York Yankee ownership, was announced Friday by the parent firm of the National League club.

No sale price was revealed but other sources indicated the transaction that would include operation of the Astrodome and its adjacent convention facilities would draw from $15 to $20 million.

Other club owners wil be asked to approve transfer of the ownership next Wednesday in Chicago.

W.E. Odom, president of Astrodomain Corp., made the Friday announcement. Without revealing the prospective buyer, Odom had said on Thursday the league might be asked next week to nsider an ownership transfer.

Odom said the agreement provides for McMullen to purchase Astrodomain's stock in the Houston Sports Association, which holds the National League franchise, the 40-year lease on the county-owned Astrodome, and the entertainment operations of the adjacent Astrohall and AstroArena.

Astrodomain has been operated since 1978 by Ford Motor Credit Co., which earlier had been co-owner of the properties with General Electric Credit Corp.

The two credit firms had taken over the crumbling empire of Judge Roy Hofheinz in 1976. It was Hofheinz, one of the organizers of the Astros when they took the field in 1962 as the Colt 45s, who conceived the idea of the Astrodome that opened in 1965.

Tal Smith, president and general manager of the Astros, said the sale to McMullen purchase will have a positive effect.

"I think we have a good environment at this time and I likewise think if this materializes it will be positive," Smith said.

County Judge Jon Linday said he believes McMullen will bring expertise not only to the baseball operations but to management of the county property.

Linday said he believes McMullen has been trying to find local people to participate in the ownership.

"I know he was trying," Linday said. "I think local partnership is essential."

Lindsay said McMullen, as the new owner, might also be acquiring a $3 to $4 million problem involving what he said were badly needed repairs to the Astrodome, Astrohall and the parking area.

"We're going to insist that the work be done regardless who takes over the lease," he said.

Lindsay said the county will not have to approve the McMullen transaction in that it is a stock sale and not the sale of the county lease.

HOMER FOR GARRETT

TOKYO (AP) — Former major leaguer Wayne Garrett collected his second homer of the Japanese season as the Chunichi Dragons posted a 6-2 victory over the Yomiuri Giants Thursday. American Leon Lee hit a two-run homer, his sixth of the year, in the Lotte Orions' 6-3 triumph.

Stanley Cup Pits Montreal, NY Rangers

MONTREAL (AP) — The New York Rangers joined the National Hockey League for the 1926-27 season, by which time the Montreal Canadiens were an institution.

The Canadiens have won 21 Stanley Cup titles since 1916 — including the last three — and have lost nine final series since that time. The Rangers, in contrast, have won only three Cup championships — the last in 1940 — and lost the final series five times.

But the best-of-seven final this year — starting here at 4 p.m. EDT Sunday — marks the first time the Canadiens and Rangers have met in a title showdown.

The clubs have staged 11 payoff series, with the Rangers holding a 6-5 edge over Montreal. Six were semifinal sets, and the other five were quarter-final enconters.

The most recent was in 1974, when the Rangers eliminated the Canadiens 4-2 in a best-of-seven quarter-finals. New York also won the previous series, a 1972 quarter-final, 4-2.

The last time the Canadiens beat the Rangers in a playoff series was 1969.

Walsh Given Two-Year Nugget Pact

DENVER (AP) — Donnie Walsh, an interim coach who guided a troubled team into the National Basketball Association playoffs, became the Denver Nuggets head coach officially Friday for at least the next two years. e

The 38-year-old Walsh took over the floundering Nuggets on Feb. 1 when Larry Brown resigned. At that time the Nuggets were 28-25 and struggling for a playoff berth.

He was reluctant at the time to accept the job and said he had no intention of coaching after the season was over.

But Walsh guided the Nuggets to a 19-10 record the rest of the season and into the mini-series with Los Angeles. The Lakers won the series 2-1, but Walsh's effort found favor with Denver fans and the Nuggets' management.

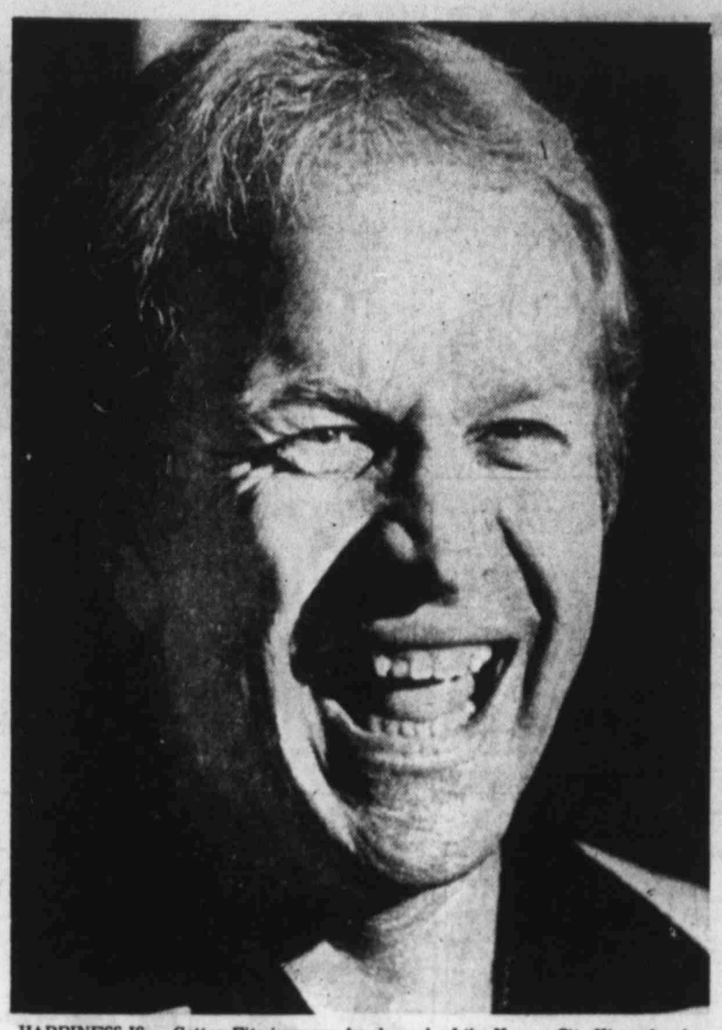

The Nuggets' president and general manager, Carl Scheer, announced at a news conference Friday that Walsh had signed a multi-year contract — "a coaching contract for more than one year."

No other terms of the contract were disclosed, but sources indicated it would be about $125,000 a year.

Scheer said Walsh "proved he was the best man for the job when he led the team to its strong finish at the conclusion of the past season.

"His rapport with the players was a major factor in the Nuggets' decision to seek Donnie's servies for the future, and with everyone working together, I'm confident the team will be able to continue to generate the enthusiasm and excitement it did in the final 29 games last year," Scheer said.

Walsh said he wanted to keep the Nuggets intact as much as possible; that he is "not contemplating any changes."

Cotton Fitzsimmons Named Coach Of Year

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Cotton Fitzsimmons, a former vagabond who transformed the Kansas City Kings from cellar-dwellers into the Midwest Division champions, was named Coach of the Year by the National Basketball Association Friday.

"I am deeply honored," said Fitzsimmons after being informed of the award in a telephone call from NBA Commissioner Lawrence O'Brien in New York.

"But as you know, a coach is only as good as his players, and my players were very, very good this year."

Fitzsimmons received 37 1/2 votes from a panel of 66 media members in the NBA's 22 cities, followed by Gene Shue of the San Diego Clippers with 11.

Atlanta's Hubie Brown, last year's winner, and Seattle's Lennie Wilkens tied for third with 5 1/2 votes apiece, followed by Portland's Jack Ramsay with 3 1/2, Washington's Dick Motta with 2 and New Jersey's Kevin Loughery with 1.

The award came a year and day after the much-traveled Fitzsimmons left the lowly Buffalo Braves to coach the Kings, a team that had just finished last in the Midwest Division with a 31-51 record.

In between, thanks to the addition of rookie standout guard Phil Ford and superb years from guard Otis Birdsong and veteran center Sam Lacey, Fitzsimmons and the Kings stunned the basketball world by winning their first division title in 27 years.

"My basic principles are the same as they've always been," said Fitzsimmons. "I believe you win with defense, rebounding and disciine. But you have to have the players to win."

Kansas City, no better than mediocre and often horrendous since their last playoff team in 1974-75 when then-coach Phil Johnson won coach of the year honors, had been relegated to another year in the cellar by most of the preseason experts.

But the Kings took advantage of a slow start by the Denver Nuggets to leap into first place Nov. 17, then overcame key injuries to Scott Wedman, Darnell Hillman and Tom Burleson to stay there for all but three days the rest of the season.

A five-game winning streak, including a title-clinching 107-101 victory over Indiana on the last day of the season, gave them a 48-34 record, their best nce moving from Cincinnati in 1972.

LeDoux, Lyle Tangle

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Scott LeDoux used psychological warfare early and aims to use his fists Satury afternoon to prove he's not a "token white" in his heavyweight bout against Ron Lyle.

LeDoux, who weighed in at 225 pounds Friday, claims he was robbed twice in previous bouts against black heavyweights — a loss to Johnny Boudreaux and a draw with Leon Spinks.

"I don't have to say I was cheated, everybody knows it," said the outspoken former University of Minnesota-Duluth athlete.

As he arrived for the weigh-in, the 30-year-old LeDoux went to the 37-year-old Lyle and said, "Just get used to being second, because I'm weighing in first."

Lyle, a ex-con making a comeback after being acquited of a murder charge, glowered and pushed his white foe. The pushing match quicky was quelled and LeDoux did reach the scales first and stepped on.

As he got off, he looked at Lyle and said, "You'll get your first pension check on Sunday morning."

Lyle, the 3-1 favorite, scaled 218. He has fought top-rated heavyweights and lost a title fight against Muhammad Ali in 1975 — via an 11th-round knockout after leading in points through 10 stanzas.

He made no answer to Leoux' second comment, remaining tight-lipped throughout the routine ceremony. But previously, he had said, "This fight means everything to me."

LeDoux said, "I think I got this fight as a token white, but this token white don't stumble and fall."

The fight is sceduled for about 2 p.m. PDT Saturday in the sports pavilion of Caesars Palace, which seats about 4,700. ABC will televise it as part of the "Wide World of Sports."

Promoter Don King claims the winner will get a heavyweight title shot in the fall, but that remains to be seen. It is known that King will pay Lyle $125,000 and LeDoux $25,000 for their 10-rounder.

"Do you think that's fair?" asked the Minnesota fighter, who is billed as the "Fighting Frenchman" because of his ancestry. He owns a 25-6-3 record, with 17 knockouts, while Lyle is 37-5-1 with 25.

However, before a tuneup victory against Fili Moali in San Diego on April 6, Lyle had not fought since June 3, 1978.

Asked if he actually will get a shot at the World Boxing Council title against the winner of the Larry Holmes-Earnie Shavers fight if he beats Lyle, LeDoux answered:

"I don't believe or trust anybody in this sport. The only thing I believe in is what I can do against Lyle."

In addition to the heavyweight fights and a junior welterweight scrap between Ruby Ortiz of New York and Rogelio Castaneda of Los Angeles, Holmes will box six rounds in exhibition.

Goolagong Wins, Goes To Semifinals

ROME (AP) — Australia's Evonne Goolagong moved with mechanical precision into the semifinals of the $100,000 Italian Open with a 6-3, 6-0 victory Friday over West Germany's Iris Riedel.

And top-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd battled to turn back spunky Argentine Ivana Madruga 3-6, 6-1, 6-4 in the quarter-finals.

Tracy Austin beat Romania's Virginia Ruzici 6-3, 6-2 Friday, and West Germany's Silvia Hanika upset fourth-seeded Dianne Fromholtz 6-3, 1-6, 6-2.

In Saturday's semis, Mrs. Goolagong will play Miss Hanika and Mrs. Lloyd must face Miss Austin, who beat her in the women's winter-tour championship in March. They have m-t once since then, and Mrs. Lloyd avenged that loss.

After a seesaw contest through the first five games of the opening set, Mrs. Goolagong reeled off 10 straight games to win the match. In the second set the Australian relinquished only five points to 25-year-old Miss Riedel.

Miss Riedel, a steady backcourt player ranked 125th in the world, had ousted second-seeded Virginia Wade of Britain and American Rosie Casals to reach the quarters.

Higgins Grabs Lead In LPGA Tournament

ATLANTA (AP) — Pam Higgins, a 10-year veteran fighting tendonitis in both elbows, fired a 6-under-par 67 Friday and surged into a 2-shot lead in the opening round of a $100,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Miss Higgins, who has only two victories to her credit, underwent cortisone shots Wednesday and opened the tournament with a career-high eight birdies.

Alone in second place at 69 was Pat Bradley, a three-time runner-up this season who ranks fourth on the 1979 money list.

"I wasn't bothered at all today," Miss Higgins said of her elbow problem that forced her to skip three tournaments in Florida earlier this season.

Higgins birdied the first three holes on the hilly, 6,353-yard, par 73 Brookfield West Country Club course, added another birdie on the sixth hole and made the turn at 4-under 36.

She also birdied the first three holes of the backside before running into her only trouble when she hooked her second shot into water and was forced to take a double bogey 6 on the 13th hole.

She came back with another birdie at 17 and narrowly missed a 20-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

She enjoyed an exceptional round of putting, sinking a half-dozen in the 10-to-20-foot range, and another from 35 feet.

There was a four-way tie for third place among two-time Atlanta winner Jane Blalock, rookie Beth Daniel, veteran Clifford Ann Creed and long-shot Amelia Rorer, who played early in the day.

Grouped at 71 were Alexandra Reinhardt, Alice Miller, Alice Ritzman and defending champion Janet Coles.

Mart Inches Higher

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market inched higher Friday in the slowest trading in seven weeks.

Gambling industry issues were among the gainers, but they were unable to regain most of the ground they lost a day earlier as worries over gasoline shortages and declining tourism drove prices sharply lower.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, off by nearly 10 points Thursday, closed ahead by 1.64 at 830.56. Gainers held a slim edge over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

NYSE volume slipped to 24.01 million shares from 25.23 million in the previous session. Friday was the slowest day on the Big Board since March 26, when 23.43 million shares changed hands.

Farmer Finds Compost Lucrative Item

JOLIET, Ill. (UPI) — Gorman O'Reilly, like most midwestern grain farmers, used to struggle to make an income in the winter months so he could feed his family and pay his field hands.

Then he discovered mushrooms.

O'Reilly now supplies a product to about a dozen mushroom growers in northeast Illinois that, in turn, provides many Chicago area restaurants and stores with fresh mushrooms and O'Reilly with a substantial new year-round income.

O'Reilly makes compost — a mixture of manure, hay and other ingredients — which is needed to grow mushrooms. He produces about 1,000 cubic yards of compost a month and sells it to growers at $20 a yard.

"This is a good sideline for us," said O'Reilly, who grows corn and soybeans on about 2,500 acres from spring to fall. "It fills in our year."

The compost processing business has done so well, he said, it has made the difference for him when he and other farmers have lost crops in recent years to drought and early frost.

Before he got into compost, O'Reilly, who has farmed most of his 51 years, worked in factories, kept livestock and sold hay — anything to bring in an income until spring planting. He found factory work boring and livestock proved to be more trouble than the animals were worth.

Campbell Soup Co. approached O'Reilly about eight years ago and began buying his hay for use at its compost processing plant and mushroom farm in West Chicago. Three years ago, Campbell was forced to move its compost processing plant to Michigan because the owner of a nearby outdoor theater complained about the odor.

"When Campbell Soups moved to Michigan, private growers heard of us and approached us about selling them compost," O'Reilly said. "They told me to figure out a price so I could make a profit and they'd buy it."

The 12 private mushroom growers in the Chicago area are family-sized operations, O'Reilly said, and they turned to him because they are located in residential areas where processing of compost would offend their neighbors' noses.

He thought about starting a mushroom farm himself but decided against it.

"It takes money and brains, that's why we don't do it," said O'Reilly, who has built a small family farm into one of the largest farming operations in northern Illinois.

"It takes a perfectionist to do it. The buildings (where the mushrooms are grown) have to be kept at 68 degrees at all times. It's really a full-time job."

O'Reilly began his compost operation with horse manure from Chicago area race tracks. The tracks, which used to pay people to haul it away, now sell manure because of the demand for it by mushroom growers.

But O'Reilly has not been able to buy horse manure since December because Campbell and another major mushroom grower, Ralston Purina Co., are buying it at inflated prices. So O'Reilly has turned to a synthetic compost, using the nitrogen in soybean meal to replace the nitrogen in manure.

"We're really in the experimental stage with the synthetic formula," said Reilly, who with three or four full-time helpers take about two weeks to make one batch of compost.

First, they mix together ground corn cobs, soybean meal, gypsum and potash, frequently water it and turn it every other day for a week. Then the mixture is blended with hay and formed into "ricks," bundles about 7 feet high and 4 feet wide.

Large machines are used to turn the ricks occasionally, allowing air, water and nutrients inside and permitting micro-organisms to grow. The ricks sit on a large cocrete slab, about half the size of a football field, and steam pours out of them.

"That stuff gets hot enough in the midde to burn your hand," O'Reilly said.

When the ricks reach a 72 percent moisture level, they are ready for marketing. Because of the high moisture level, O'Reilly said, a grower will buy the compost by volume instead of weight.

Private mushroom farmers use about 200-300 yards a month, said O'Reilly, who has invested about $100,000 in the operation but made $120,000 last year.

"Like any business, it's hard to determine a profit," he said. "It's money we couldn't have had otherwise."

Farm Equipment Maker Shows Profit

HESSTON, Kan. (AP) — Executives of the Hesston Corp. may not have popped champagne corks when they announed first-quarter profits of $2 million, but the mood at the beleagured farm equipment manufacturer's headquarters is cautiously upbeat.

"You ask some of the people in the organization and they'd say, 'We're very happy with it,'" said chairman Lyle E. Yost of the profit announced recently on sales of $54.5 million for the first three months of 1979.

The net profit of $2.1 million included tax benefits of $1.4 million, but it compared with losses of $2.4 million for the first quarter of fiscal 1978 and was only the second quarter in black ink for Hesston since 1976. The sales represented a 48 percent increase.

"You ask me, I say for 32 years I've never been satisfied with anything. You can always do better," continued the 66-year-old Yost, who founded the company in this small, predominantly Mennonite farm community 32 years ago.

But Yost made that statement with a smile during a recent interview and there has been little to smile about at Hesston for the past three years.

Hesston got into difficulty when its officials miscalculated demand for its machinery, primarily forage harvesters used by cattlemen, and the equipment began piling up at dealerships across the country.

The company has lost almost $20 million in the past three years. Dividends on common stock have not been paid since 1976. And employment declined from a high of 5,000 to just over 3,000. It now stands at 3,300.

Hesston is far smaller than such farm machine industry giants as Allis-Chalmers, Deer & Co., International Harvester and Massey Ferguson. But it concentrates on specialized farm equipment and made its name as an innovator — its Stakhand hay handling system and round baling system were industry pioneers. This spring, it brought out a new big-bale system.

According to analysts at Value Line, a Wall Street investment service, it was Hesston's Stakhand system which led the company to fast growth in the early 1970s. Bu the market proved smaller than anticipated.

"As a result, both Hesston and its dealers were caught with far too much inventory. It took three painful years for inventories to be reduced to their present balanced state," says a Value Line report which predicts improved profits and sales for the company this year.

Hesston pared its inventory of farm equipment at its 1,600 North American dealers from $78 million at the close of the 1976 fiscal year to $37 million at the close of the 1978 fiscal year last September, company officials said.

"I think we're reasonably satisfied with the position we're in, because it's pretty much the plan we set for ourselves. We're basically on target with the plan," Yost said.

There were other major changes along the way as well.

Kennedy Wants Aid Sanctions Imposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. aid to Nicaragua and El Salvador should be cut off because of human rights violations by those countries, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy says.

The Massachusetts Democrat also said Thursday economic sanctions should be imposed along with the aid cutoff since "our obligation is not to contribute to repression and dictatorship.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

NO ACTION WAS TAKEN ON CHANGING delivery terms of the No. 2 cotton futures contract by the Futures Contract Committee of the New York Cotton Exchange at a meeting this week in Memphis.

Small merchants and some mills have proposed excluding or putting stiffer penalties on Texas cotton of qualities which are now tenderable.

Some merchants last fall began certificating Texas cotton for delivery against futures, where it could bring at the time a higher price than in the spot market.

AS THE MARKET ADJUSTED ITSELF to remove this advantage, futures markets fell — while the basis for Memphis territory cotton rose.

The basis change took some smaller traders by surprise. They thought they had successfully hedged away price risk on the futures market but were caught on the short end of the basis change.

It is these traders, as well as some mills, who occasionally take delivery against futures but do not want to take Texas cotton who are pushing for contract changes.

The No. 2 contract has high open interest and good liquidity under current delivery terms, say those who favor keeping the specifications as they are. Retaining that liquidity is more important to hedgers than trying to adjust the contract for the oddities of individual crop years, they add.

THE ARIZONA CROP OF A FEW YEARS AGO was cited as an example of a similar phenomena.

It is not possible to predict what styles of cotton will be tenderable but less desirable in any particular year, some sources point out. Instead of trying to make such predictions, they maintain, the industry is better off sticking with what seems to be a popular contract.

By the time any contract changes could work their way through the necessary procedures and contracts now on the board, some sources add, the Texas situation could have long since changed.

The committee will discuss the matter again June 9 in New York.

LUBBOCK COUNTY AGENT RANDY UPSHAW said Friday about 25 to 30 percent of the county's cotton acreage has been planted.

The county probably will have around 360,000 acres in cotton, he said, up from 314,000 last year.

Farmers can plant 2 to 5 percent of the total acreage in a day, Upshaw said. With favorable weather, he said, around 70 percent or more of the cotton could be planted by the end of next week.

"We have enough moisture to plant virtually the whole county," Upshaw said. "I haven't heard of anyone holding off for lack of moisture."

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Wheat futures rose Friday on the Chicago Board of Trade after the government lowered its estimate of the size of this year's winter wheat crop.

The government said after the close Thursday that winter wheat production, based on conditions May 1, is likely to be 1.39 billion bushels, about 4 percent below the Agriculture Department's December estimate. The department reported heavy winter damage to the crop in the Pacific Northwest.

The news surprised traders, who generally expected the estimate to be about unchanged from December.

Corn futures drifted lower in preweekend booksquaring. Some traders took profits on speculation that next week would bring better corn planting weather to the Midwest.

Soybean futures declined as traders took profits, despite an industry report of continued heavy domestic usage of soybeans last week at 19.47 million bushels, compared to 19.26 million bushels the previous and 18.2 million bushels the same week a year ago.

At the close, soybean futures were 5½ to 9½ cents lower, May $7.13; wheat was 1½ to 8 cents higher, May $3.71½; corn was 1¾ to 6¾ cents lower, May $2.61¾, and oats were ¾ to 1¼ cents higher, May $1.52¼.

Cotton Futures

NEW YORK (AP) — Cotton futures No. 2 closed $2.45 to $3.65 a bale higher Friday.

The average price for strict low middling 11-16 inch spot cotton declined 24 points to 61.03 cents a pound Thursday for the 10 leading markets, according to the New York Cotton Exchange.

Trading on the Lubbock spot cotton market was slow on Friday. Supplies of cotton for sale were moderate to heavy and demand was moderate.

Cattle Futures Lower On Chicago Exchange

By Reuters

CHICAGO — Cattle futures closed 30 to 137 lower led by June Friday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Sales totaled 27,421 cars. The market recovered after tumbling the 150 limit in June through December. Earlier, distant October was up 37.

Prices fell to five week lows, more than six cents under recent highs, on aggressive selling by the cash connected commission house. Slighltly increased beef supplies were running into wide spread resistance.

Wholesale beef was unchanged at 108½ cents a pound. Cash cattle were steady to off 50 cents with the best top $76.50 per hundredweight. Slaughter was 114,000 head. The major markets are expecting about 16,600 head today.

Feeder cattle futures closed 65 to 125 lower led by March after earlier tumbling the 150 limit across the board. Volume was 4,165 lots.

Prices were forced to their lowest in five weeks, off 7½ from recent highs, before stiffening. Much of the selling spilled over limit lower live cattle futures. Traders also noted an easy tone to beef and slower demand for cash feeder cattle.

There have been 241 deliveries thus far. About 1,200 head are expected today at the major terminals.

Hog futures closed 20 to 122 lower paced by August on sales of 7,437 contracts. Earlier, July through October fell the 150 limit while February briefly gained 60.

October through February posted new lows for the season as prices tumbled to the lowest since July, 12 cents under season's highs. Heavy hog runs and lower prices brought pressure as did limit losses in cattle futures. Some support followed firmer pork product prices at noon.

Wholesale hams were unchanged to up 1½ at 69 to 74 cents a pound, f.o.b. river points. Cash hogs were off $1 to up 50 cents with the best top $47.50 per hundredweight at Peoria. Kill was 323,000 head. Receipts at the major markets today are expected to total 33,000 head.

Pork belly (bacon) futures closed 42 to 200 lower, with May limit down after July also fell a like amount. Sales totaled 5,262 cars.

July and August fell to new lows for the season and the lowest since March 1978. The market was pressured by weakness in cash hogs and bellies, more than ample slaughter and limit declines in cattle futures.

Deliveries total 173 thus far. Wholesale bacon was up 2 to off ½ at 40 to 46 cents a pound, f.o.b. river, which is a 1½ year low.

Defensive Driving Course Offered

The Division of Continuing Education at Texas Tech will sponsor a defensive driving course June 11-12 from 6-10 p.m. at the Department of Public Safety.

Students attending both four-hour classes will receive certificates entitling them to a 10 percent discount on automobile insurance costs if they are otherwise eligible.

Burt Sinclair, course instructor, is a safety education trooper for the Department of Public Safety and has taught defensive driving for eight years.

Enrollment is limited to 33 students and the fee is $7.50 per person. Tech students, staff, faculty and the general public are welcome. Interested persons should register in advance at the Division of Continuing Education on the Texas Tech campus.

Diesel Allocations Set For Farmers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government instituted a mandatory diesel fuel allocation program Friday to help farmers plant crops this spring, a critical season for the nation's future food supply.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland told a news conference that the Energy Department will guarantee the nation's producers "100 percent of their diesel fuel requirements."

"There is enough diesel fuel to supply agriculture," Bergland said. "There will be no shortage of fuel this spring that will cause any unusual delays in planting."

Many farmers have complained that they cannot get enough diesel fuel to run their tractors and other machines this spring and have urged the government to take action.

"Planting of corn, spring wheat and other grains is already several weeks behind schedule because of the wet weather in the Midwest, and serious problems have developed," Bergland said.

"Any shortages of diesel fuel could significantly reduce the size of harvests, create a tight supply sitution and result in serious market disruptions."

Bergland said diesel fuel is in short supply nationally for all purposes but that the allocation program "will simply reserve to agriculture" the amount farmers need to get through the planting season.

Weldon Barton, the Agriculture Department's energy chief, said farmers use about 2.7 billion gallons of diesel fuel a year, about 5 percent of the nation's total consumption of middle distillates, which include home heating oil as well as diesel fuels.

Farm gasoline use, mostly for trucks, is about the same as for diesel fuel, Barton said.

Bergland noted that President Carter pledged in Des Moines, Iowa, that he would not allow agricultural production to be disrupted by a fuel shortage.

Bergland said the Energy Department action means that wholesale suppliers of diesel fuel "will be required to provide local distributors and retailers with supplies sufficient to meet farmers' needs" and that "if necessary, major oil company refineries can be instructed to move fuel supplies to wholesale suppliers in agricultural areas."

The department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service will keep tabs on the situation through its network of county offices.

The county offices will report farmers' planted acreages and provide other information to help carry out the diesel allocations. He said the information will be made available upon request to fuel dealers and energy officials.

A previous authority allowing states to set aside 4 percent of their diesel supplies will remain in effect. Bergland said the Energy Department action goes beyond that and will enable diesel fuel to be shifted from one part of the country to another to fill farmers' demands.

If a shortage develops, the farmer "can simply notify his or her supplier that fuel is needed" and then the supplier will have top priority in getting it, Bergland said. Any problems should be brought to the immediate attention of local county offices, he said.

Wheat Cartel Fails To Develop

WASHINGTON (AP) — Talks in Canada among the world's four largest grain exporting countries included no mention of their setting minimum prices for wheat sold in world trade, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland said Friday.

Some farmers and others have advocated that the four countries — Argentina, Australia, Canada and the United States — form a wheat cartel and set prices much in the fashion the Organization of Petroleum Exorting Countries (OPEC) has followed in dictating oil prices.

Bergland said he and his counterparts from the three other wheat countries "didn't even discuss the matter of trying to set a four-way minimum price for wheat" because "it makes no economic sense, it makes no political sense" to try.

"We four countries have regularly faulted the OPEC countries for creating a cartel-like organization at the expense of consumers, and particularly the poor consumers of this world," he told a news conference.

Moreover, Bergland said, a wheat cartel would be virtually impossible to enforce because so many loopholes would exist and because more than 100 countries produce wheat, unlike the handful that produce most of the oil.

The meeting was held last week in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Bergland said the major accomplishment was an agreement that none of the four big wheat ountries would do anything to change policies without first consulting the others.

One objective, he said, is to avoid a wheat price war among the four countries, which account for about 85 percent of the wheat in world trade. The United States alone accounts for about 50 percent.

Bergland also rejected the idea of trading "food for crude" oil — a bushel of wheat for a barrel of oil, for example.

"We don't think that $18 (a bushel) wheat will sell, and that's what it's all about," Bergland said.

'Girl Without Fear' Recalls Exploits As Silent-Movie Stuntwoman

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — They called her "The Girl Without Fear" in the days of the silent movies, when it was nothing for her to crash locomotives and cars, ride horses over cliffs and tumble down stairs.

But now she doesn't dare challenge the few slippery feet of linoleum between her nursing home bed and the bathroom. Lillian Ward — "The Girl Without Fear" — is 95 and rarely leaves her wheelchair.

"Sometimes I step down on the slick floor around here and I slip. I say to myself, 'Lillian, don't be an old fool and fall all over yourself.' So I just don't try it anymore. I let the nurses help me when I try to walk," she said.

Sixty years ago, Lillian Ward was one of the most sought-after stuntwomen in the fledgling movie industry. One major producer of the era called her, "the best stuntwoman of the East."

She doubled for nearly all of the big stars, including a few men, and commanded $150 a day. "We made big money at the time. We thought it was big money, anyway," she remembered.

When the "Perils of Pauline" script called for star Pearl White to risk her pretty — and expensive — neck for a stunt, the director called in Miss Ward. You'd probably never notice it in the old movies, but that's Lillian Ward the diabolical villian has tied to the railroad tracks in front of the onrushing train. "It never came all that close," she said modestly.

Miss Ward dressed in cowboy garb and doubled for at least three male stars too frightened to perform dangerous horse-riding scenes. All three have been dead for many years, but she still won't tell their names. "I don't want to embarrass them, so I'll never tell who they were," she said.

For one silent thriller, she piloted a New York Central locomotive into another train, leaping to safety a split-second before the crash. Dressed as a man, she rode Burnester, her favorite trick horse, off a cliff for one of the cowboy movies. She tumbled down a flight of stairs after being shot by an imaginary bullet in "Ashes of Vengence."

As a crack pilot, she signed a contract in 1928 — a year after Lindbergh — to become the first woman to fly alone across the Atlantic. The deal fell through when a group of Paterson, N.J., businessmen couldn't raise the necessary $35,000, but it earned her the nickname "Miss Lindy."

To learn the whole story, one must turn to the cracked, yellowed scrapbooks Miss Ward prizes above all else she owns. Her own memory of her exploits is fogged by age, but she becomes more lucid when she sees the memorabilia.

And without the precious scrapbooks to support her stories, the officials at Friendship Villa Nursing Home would probably have dismissed them as the pitiful hallucinations of a senile old woman.

Miss Ward had been slightly ill the days before the interview, and Joyce Hultgern, recreation director at the Friendship Villa Nursing Home, was concerned she wouldn't be able to remember her past clearly. At first Miss Ward had trouble recalling the events, but her memory sharpened as she turned the pages of the scrapbooks.

She remembered always being fearless, from the time she rode wild horses as a teen-ager her faily's East Texas farm near Grand Saline. She told of going to New York before she was 20 to land a job in vaudeville as a trick rider. Movie producers noticed her there.

She broke her leg once trying to toro a creek as the double for June Grey in "Flower of Faith." She broke an arm falling off a horse while practicing in New York for her vaudeville debut.

"I have faced death a dozen times and have come through many narrow shaves with only a few minor injuries. Black eyes, bruised shins and sprained ankles have been frequent in my career," she wrote in a 1929 edition of "Live Girl Stories."

'Love At First Bite' Transplants Count Dracula To New York

NEW RELEASE

LOVE AT FIRST BITE (PG) — George Hamilton, Susan Saint James, Arte Johnson. Comedy. You'll hate yourself in the morning, but you'll laugh while you're watching this spoof of the Dracula story. This time, Drac is back as a crack lover in present-day New York, and it's all done for fun. Enjoy. GRADE: B.

GENERAL RELEASE

BOULEVARD NIGHTS (R) — Richard Yniguez, Marta DuBois, Danny De La Paz. Drama. Interesting but uneven character study of Mexican-American youths in East Los Angeles. Classic strong brother/weak brother story wrapped around gang warfare. Standout performance by newcomer De La Paz. Caution: some strong language, violence. GRADE: B-minus (Handler)

THE CHAMP (PG) Jon Voight, Faye Dunaway, Ricky Schroder. Drama. Director Franco Zeffirelli has dusted off the old classic about the ex-champ and his son and the rich lady who is also the kid's mother. He pulls out all the stops — no sob is left unsobbed — and it's a treat for the love-to-cry set. But it is overlong and very over-sentimental. Young Ricky Schroder is the best child actor in years, however. GRADE: B.

THE CHINA SYNDROME (PG) — Jane Fonda, Jack Lemmon, Michael Douglas. Thriller. This is a "what if" story — what if there was a malfunction in a nuclear power plant, and what if the gal TV news reporter sniffed it out, and what if the nuclear scientist didn't find it, and what if the power company brass tried to cover it up? It leaves you wondering — what if a real one had a flaw and blew up and left a hole in the sand clear down to China? GRADE: B-plus.

THE DEER HUNTER (R) — Robert DeNiro, John Cazale, John Savage, Meryl Streep, Christopher Walken. Drama. This is a powerful, memorable look at three Pennsylvania steel workers who go off to fight in Vietnam. Director Michael Cimino has created images you may never forget. It is too long and some of it is forced, but it remains a classic film. GRADE: A.

A LITTLE ROMANCE (PG) — Laurence Olivier, Arthur Hill, Sally Kellerman. Romantic comedy. This one will enchant you. A pair of teen-agers find each other, and find innocent romance, against a background of Paris and Venice. With lovely music and beautiful photography, this has fun, excitement and all those good things. GRADE: A.

MANHATTAN (R) — Woody Allen, Diane Keaton, Michael Murphy, Mariel Hemingway. Romantic comedy. Allen is back in his personal groove — writing, directing, starring — and back in the area where he functions most wittily. That's the man-woman, husband-wife, boyfriend-girlfriend continuing war. This is done in black and white, and it's beautiful, funny and crisp. Only flaw: a little familiar. GRADE: B-plus.

NORMA RAE (PG) — Sally Field, Ron Leibman, Beau Bridges. Drama. Forget the drab title, this is a grabber of a movie. It's about the attempts — by a union organizer from New York and his ally, a little Southern gal — to organize a tough textile mill in the South. Director Martin Ritt must be commended not only for what he did, but for what he didn't do — he didn't seize on the obvious cliches, and so he has a warm, surprising film. GRADE: B-plus.

(Film grading: A — superb; B — good; C — average; D — poor; F — awful)

Critic Describes Long-Sought Admission To Studio 54 Elite

NEW YORK (AP) — Well, gang, I guess I'm elite now. I got into Studio 54. The last time I try, the big bozo at the door who decides who gets in looks at me and my date. And says, "No way."

He apparently didn't see I had on my disco toupee, the one with the rhinestone part.

"I thought you had clout," my date grumbles. She is mad. She wants to see Liza Minnelli, Robin Williams, Bianca Jagger, Andy Warhol or somebody famous at this famous disco where all the swells go.

This is the big deal at Studio 54. Everyone goes there, even the jet set, to see the jet set get down and boogie. They all hope the big bozo at the door lets them pay $12 each to get in and do this.

They stand in the street for hours, even in driving rain, shouting, "Hey, I'm with the Mick Jagger party." But not everyone gets in. Sometimes entire families are separated at the door.

Well, after the big bozo doesn't let me and my date in, she goes and marries someone and now lives in Shaker Heights, Ohio. I Commence brooding. Then, out of the blue, my pal Maureen calls.

She often writes of disco matters, knows everybody. She wants me to fly wing with her to this gala party a big record company is tossing for one of its publicists at Studio 54. It is a good deal.

We don't have to put with the big bozo at the front door. We only deal with the bigger bozo at the back door where all the swells and famous people come in. My pal has clout. We swagger in.

I do not see Liza Minnelli, Robin Williams, Bianca Jagger or Andy Warhol anywhere. But a hearty named Meat Loaf is present. He is a rock star. He is loudly saying he wishes he were elsewhere.

There also are three young Englishmen in tattered jackets. Their hair apparently has been singed by a flash fire. They look mean. I Am told they are punk rock stars. No one knows their name.

The music is very, very loud. It goes boom-chacka-boom-chackadboom, or vice versa. I stand much too close to a loudspeaker. My cordoroy jacket throbs, important papers fall out.

Red, white, green, yellow and ultraviolet lights flash everywhere. A huge heart with shiny red sequins, attached to a pendulum, swings low over the dance floor. I meet this blonde lady.

She wears a tight red satin jumpsuit. Her name is Tinkerbell. I Shout, "Hello." " She shouts, "Hah?" I shout, "Hello." She shouts, "Hah?." They talk that way here all the time.

Later, a tall, blonde woman in sequined eyeglasses, a white evening gown and a bicycle horn around her waist whizzes by on roller skates. I am told she is a guy who likes to get dressed up Friday nights.

Millions of people are dancing now, waving their arms and legs to this boom-chacka-boom music. Lots of young guys who apparently can't get dates have resorted to dancing with other young guys.

The whole thing looks like a disco Dante's Inferno. My pal Maureen indicates she wants to plunge into all this and trip the light fantastic. So off we go.

I am doing the box step. It's the only step I know.

Volcano Emissions Tracked By Satellite

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — The volcano La Soufriere on the Caribbean island of St. Vincent is providing scientists with their first opportunity to track volcano emissions in the atmosphere by satellite, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Friday.

Researchers at NASA's Langley Research Center here are using the Stratospheric Aerosol and Gas Experiment satellite and ground equipment to track material spewed into the atmosphere by La Soufriere, which erupted in April.

Dr. M. Patrick McCormick of the Langley Research Center said the eruption may provide a rare opportunity for scientists to study the long-term stratospheric distribution of aerosols from a single point.

The satellite, launched Feb. 18, measures ozone and aerosols in the stratosphere, the part of the atmosphere that extends from about six to 15 miles above the earth. The data provides scientists with information to help answer questions about the effects of aerosols and ozone on climate and environmental quality.

Aerosols can act like a filter by reducing the amount of sunlight that reaches the earth's surface and the amount of reflected sunlight that eventually escapes to space.

New Electrode May Aid Serious Burn Victims

A Texas Tech University electrical engineering professor and two graduate students have been awarded $50 each for a technical innovation which could help severely burned people.

Granting the awards was the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Dr. William M. Portnoy, working with students Lawrence J. Stotts and Michael E. Griffith, developed and constructed an electrocardiogram electrode that can be used successfully with non-conducting burn ointment. The ointment used on burns ordinarily inhibits the function of electrodes placed on the body to conduct heart signals to a recording device.

"The results compare favorably with electrocardiograms obtained from the conventional conducting silver-silver chloride electrodes used on intact skin," Portnoy said.

He explained that his research began with an effort to provide electrocardiogram electrodes which could be used to monitor heart performance of space travelers. The result, expected to help in the care performance of space travelers. The result, expected to help in the care of burned patients, was a spin-off from the original purpose.

Stotts, who earned his doctorate in electrical engineering at Texas Tech, is employed by Motorola Inc. in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Griffith, who earned the master's degree, is employed by Bell Laboratories, Indianapolis, Ind.

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay (AP) — Uruguayans eat an average of 39 pounds of beef a year, and the country has tons left over for export. But the government is encouraging imports to bring the price down.

YOUR PERSONAL BIORHYTHMS

By Bernard Gittelson, Author of "Biorhythm: A Personal Science"

The personal science of biorhythm can tell you how your day will go. Now you can judge the highs and lows of not only yourself, but loved ones and friends, and celebrities and stars. Biorhythm, our newest scientific discipline, is the study of the built-in natural cycles that powerfully influence our behavior.

BIORHYTHMS FOR MAY 12, 1979

PHYSICAL
Criticals: 8, 19, 31, 42, 54, 65 ..... Drive your car with care
Highs: 9-18, 32-41, 55-64 ..... Sensations of vigor
Lows: 1-7, 20-30, 43-53, 66-75 ..... Enervating day

EMOTIONAL
Criticals: 7, 21, 35, 49, 63, 77 ..... Bad temper can hurt
Highs: 8-20, 36-48, 64-76 ..... At your convival best
Lows: 1-6, 22-34, 50-62, 78-85 ..... Don't lose your temper

INTELLECTUAL
Criticals: 9, 25, 42, 58, 75, 91 ..... Be guarded
Highs: 10-24, 43-57, 76-90 ..... Make decisions
Lows: 1-8, 26-41, 59-74, 92-95 ..... Tough decision day

Step 1: From the year chart, find the numbers corresponding to your year of birth. For instance, if you were born in 1947, your number for Physical would be 21, Emotional 17, Intellectual 19. Note whether your numbers are preceded by an A or B; this will be used for Step 2.

Step 2: Now find the corresponding number for the month you were born. If your month is February, and your year numbers were preceded by a B, your month numbers would be 8 for Physical, 3 for Emotional and 31 for Intellectual. Enter your own numbers in the figure chart for Step 2.

Step 3: In the figure chart, enter your day of birth three times, one each for Physical (P), Emotional (E) and Intellectual (I). (If you were born on April 3, for instance, place a 3 in each column.)

Add the three columns to derive your permanent biorhythm numbers for your Physical, Emotional and Intellectual cycles. Now you can refer to today's rhythms.
