Senators ratify new arms accord

Reagan says rights goals still fall short

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — President Reagan, underscoring a key theme for the superpower summit, said Friday reforms championed by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev are "new and good" but that the Kremlin still falls short of meeting international standards on human rights and freedom.

Two days before his arrival in Moscow, Reagan said, "Soviet practice does not — or does not yet — measure up to Soviet commitment" under the 1975 East-West agreement known as the Helsinki Final Act.

The Senate gave Reagan a big pre-summit boost Friday when it ratified by an overwhelming 93-5 vote the treaty outlawing medium-range nuclear missiles which the president and Gorbachev signed at their Washington summit last December.

Reagan issued a statement saying he was "very pleased" with the Senate vote, which he said "clearly shows support for our arms reduction objectives."

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., who telephoned the president in Helsinki with the news, accepted Reagan's invitation to fly to Moscow on Tuesday to witness a ratification ceremony the following day.

Reagan made his human rights speech before an invited audience of about 1,200 people in the austere marble auditorium of Finlandia Hall, where the Helsinki accords were signed by 35 nations, including the Soviet Union and United States.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Friday ratified, 93-5, a treaty to abolish medium-range nuclear missiles, enabling President Reagan to present the pact to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev at their Moscow summit next week.

It was the first major U.S.-Soviet arms control accord ratified by the Senate since 1972. Leading up to the ratification vote, the Senate rejected four minor amendments offered by Republicans. That brought to 14 the number of amendments proposed by GOP conservatives and rejected during two weeks of floor consideration of the treaty.

The Senate's consent to ratification, which required a two-third majority, had long been assured because only a handful of conservatives opposed the pact.

Senators voting against the treaty were Republicans Jesse Helms of North Carolina, Steve Symms of Idaho, Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire and Malcolm Wallop of Wyoming and Democrat Ernest Hollings of South Carolina.

Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., and John Glenn, D-Ohio, did not vote.

Spectators crowded into galleries overlooking the Senate floor gave a standing ovation after the vote tally was announced.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., and GOP Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., quickly informed Reagan of the outcome in a telephone call to Helsinki, Finland, where the president was resting in advance of the summit.

The two leaders accepted Reagan's invitation to come to Moscow next Tuesday and bring the ratification documents with them.

In a statement issued by the White House, the president said he was "very pleased" by the vote, which "clearly shows support for our arms reduction objectives."

He added, however: "I continue to have concerns about the constitutionality of some provisions of the resolution of ratification, particularly those dealing with interpretation, and I will communicate with the Senate on these matters in due course."

Byrd told Reagan, "Bless your heart. We're just delighted that we're going to send you a treaty and it was almost a unanimous vote...we'll have a little blue ribbon tied around it."

An all-plastic airplane — a prime forerunner of military "stealth" technology — has been donated to a Lake Jackson museum by its Midland owners and designers.

Designed by Drs. Leo J. and Fairfax Windecker, the craft is the first of its kind to receive Federal Aviation Administration "type" certification, meaning that it may be manufactured and marketed.

"That makes it comparable to the Wright Flyer and the Spirit of St. Louis," said Ted Windecker, an aeronautical structural engineer and son of the Windecker couple. "It is a major milestone in aviation history," he said of the composite aircraft. "It has been 19 years since we did that (gained FAA approval), and no one has done it since."

Some, such as Bill Lear of Lear Jet fame, have tried but failed, he said.

The Windecker couple, whose engineering background came by way of their schooling in dentistry, provided the genius behind the aircraft, the Windecker Eagle. "Dentistry is about half engineering and half medical," Dr. Leo Windecker said. The airplane is a four-place 285-horsepower streamlined low-wing monoplane that cruises about 200 mph.

The craft, which was manufactured in Midland in the late 1960s and early 1970s, currently is out of production due to the slump in general-aviation economics.

But the historical importance of the Eagle, made of molded epoxy resin and continuous fibers of fiberglass, is witnessed by its inclusion in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., and the U.S. Air Force Museum.

Nine Windecker Eagles were manufactured in Midland: three prototypes, five production models, and the 1973-built YE-5 "stealth" version for the U.S. Air Force and Army.

Energy experts can't even agree on potential for oil crisis

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Oil and national security experts met here this week to map strategy to fight off the next energy crisis.

Not only did they disagree on its size, shape, cause and solution; they also failed to agree on whether one is coming any time soon.

As Scott T. Wiley, president of Copeland, Wickersham, Wiley & Co., a sponsor of the conference put it: "The next energy crisis already is here. The problems are not going to go away." He added that he fears citizens and politicians lack the political will to solve them.

But Secretary of Energy John S. Herrington painted a brighter energy picture. He declared that, despite the negative impact of the worldwide oil-price drop on U.S. oil production, the nation's energy security is stronger after seven years of President Reagan's leadership.

Herrington said the U.S. has bolstered its strategic oil reserves five-fold since 1981, and allies have doubled their stockpiles. He said the potential exists for a politically motivated oil supply interruption — like the one that resulted in long lines at gasoline stations in 1973 and 1978 — but that "vast strategic stocks" would ease the pressure of a future disruption.

The argument came at the second of what promises to be a yearly conference. Besides Wiley's Houston and New York-based investment firm, which works with troubled oil companies, the session was sponsored by the Department of Energy, the United States Global Strategy Council, and the standing committee on law and national security of the American Bar Association.

During the conference, Herrington's optimistic assertion was disputed by Senate Energy and Environment Committee Chairman J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., who denounced what he said was the Reagan administration's "laissez-faire energy policy" that has endangered America's security and failed to shield the domestic energy industry from devastating effects of the 1986 drop in world oil prices.

Johnston said that under Reagan, U.S. energy policy has gone from the extreme of excess regulation to one of near-total indifference.

"We will have a new energy policy. The only question is whether it will be forced on us by trial and travail, or whether we will use the technology and the resources that we have in abundance," Johnston added.

Wiley, in predicting trouble ahead, said he sees no big price jump coming. "So the reliance on imports, which now are about 40 percent, will grow to 50 percent by 1990 and perhaps to 65 percent by 1995."

The goal of the Oil Producing and Exporting Countries (OPEC) is to increase their share of the market by raising oil prices gradually, Wiley said. Such a pricing policy will not dampen the growth in demand nor cause prices to jump enough to stimulate rig activity in the U.S. oilfields or trigger a call to action by consumers and politicians, he added.

Texas' top Democrats endorse Dukakis at holiday weekend barbecue

AUSTIN (AP) — Top Texas Democratic officials endorsed Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis for president at a Friday barbecue attended by a crowd estimated at more than 2,000.

Anti-abortion groups had threatened to picket the Democratic candidate's appearance at Waterloo Park near the Capitol, but the only obvious evidence of a protest were two signs raised from the crowd in front of the stage where Dukakis spoke.

"I love Texas, and I love Texans, because this is where it all began, and I thank you all very, very much," Dukakis told the audience, who had listened to a country music band, ate from plates piled with free barbecue and fixings and drank iced tea or beer.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, House Speaker

Gib Lewis, Treasurer Ann Richards and Land Commissioner Garry Mauro praised Dukakis in speeches. Comptroller Bob Bullock did not attend the event but sent a message with his endorsement. The Dukakis campaign said the candidate also has the support of former Gov. Mark White.

Dukakis said his Texas victory in the Super Tuesday election March 8

"gave this campaign of ours the kind of momentum, the kind of energy, the kind of movement that makes it possible for me to be here today leading the pack, and I hope, with your help, on the way to the nomination and on the way to the White House."

Dukakis won the Texas primary, but with less than 50 percent of the vote in a multiple-candidate race and without broad backing.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower has endorsed presidential candidate Jesse Jackson.

Hobby and Lewis earlier endorsed U.S. Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, who has stopped campaigning. Before endorsing Gore, Hobby backed former U.S. Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, who dropped out of the race after newspaper reports that he was having an extramarital affair.

"The third time's the charm," Hobby joked as he endorsed Dukakis.

"Greeks are big on oracles ... I've seen the future, and I'm pleased to report that it looks Greek to me," Hobby said. In a swipe at Republican presidential candidate George Bush, Hobby added, "Voters across this country won't tolerate a Bush-league president."

Video renter pleads guilty; Four arrested for wire fraud

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 56-year-old Andrews businessman who operates a mom-and-pop television video-movie store pleaded guilty Friday in federal court in Midland to infringing on copyrights by illegally making video copies of motion pictures and then renting out the video tapes.

"I'm sorry," the defendant, Lonnie Fred "Doc" Rogers, told U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton of his making the "pirate" video copies, "and I hope the court will consider my application for probation."

In another federal case, the Federal Bureau of Investigation arrested four people in Midland and San Antonio on Wednesday and Thursday for bank wire fraud in Stanton.

At noon on June 28, Bunton is to sentence Rogers for criminal infringement of copyrights and could order him imprisoned up to two years without parole and fined $250,000. Severity of the sentence partly would depend on Rogers' background, the judge said. "I can go over or below" sentencing guidelines but not beyond the two-year maximum sentence. Bunton said.

Rogers pleaded guilty to reproducing copies of the movies "La Bamba," "No Way Out," "Return of the Jedi," "Spies Like Us," "Raw Deal," "Lady Beware," "Dragnet," and "Steele Justice" in February 1988.

Bunton, who noted that Rogers was charged with making the copies for "commercial advantage and financial gain," asked him if he had made any money off of his scheme.

"We were renting them, sir," Rogers said.

The FBI had probed the case. Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery noted that government agents had seized 300 "pirate" video tapes in Rogers' store, found reproducing equipment and said that a Motion Picture Association of America representative verified that the suspect tapes were counterfeit.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Partly cloudy skies expected

Skies will be partly cloudy, temperatures warm and the rain chance slight in the Permian Basin through the Memorial Day weekend, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport.

Saturday will be partly cloudy with a less than 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms. The high will be near 90, with winds from the southeast 10 to 20 mph and gusty.

Sunday night will be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 60s.

Sunday will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of evening thunderstorms. The high will be near 90.

Friday's high of 87 was 13 degrees cooler than the record of 100 set for that date in 1945. The low of 59 was nine degrees warmer than the record low of 50 set in 1973.

STATE

Skies were mostly sunny Friday, with temperatures in the 80s and winds mostly from the south and southeast at 10 to 20 mph.

An exception was a band of scattered clouds stretching from the Red River, across the low, rolling plains into parts of the Hill Country and the Edwards Plateau.

Low-level clouds were scattered across extreme South Texas and the coastal bend, with widely scattered showers over deep South Texas north of Brownsville and in the lower coast of the Gulf of Mexico east of Brownsville.

An isolated thunderstorm developed in far west Texas, near Fort Davis. Winds gusted as high as 25 and 30 mph in the Panhandle and South Plains. While high temperatures in most parts of the state reached only the lower 80s, a few spots in West Texas climbed into the 90s, with El Paso reaching 92.

Lows Friday night reached into the mid 50s in the mountains and the lower 70s along the lower coast.

The National Weather Service said skies would be fair to partly cloudy Saturday over most of Texas with highs in the 80s and 90s, except in the Big Bend region, where temperatures were expected to hit 100.

Widely scattered showers are also expected in the western third of the state, with early-morning cloudiness hanging over parts of North Texas.

NATION

Sunshine and mild temperatures covered much of the nation Friday afternoon, heralding what is expected to be a pleasant, sunny holiday weekend for the central and eastern United States.

Skies were clear from the central Appalachians across the middle and lower Mississippi Valley to the central and southern Plains, while partly cloudy skies covered the Northeast, Florida, the northern Plains and much of the West.

Temperatures approached 90 degrees over western portions of the northern and central Plains, while afternoon readings were well into the 90s in the desert Southwest.

Cloudy skies covered much of the Carolinas, keeping temperatures unseasonably cool in the 60s and 70s. Asheville, N.C., set a record low for the date with a reading of 38 degrees early in the day.

A few showers dotted the upper Mississippi Valley, and showers and thunderstorms hit parts of Colorado and southern Florida. Rain also fell on parts of the Pacific Northwest.

A wind advisory was in effect for southern Nevada, with gusts to 40 mph expected.

At 3 p.m. EDT, temperatures ranged from 55 degrees at Astoria, Ore., to 99 degrees at Tucson, Ariz.

The forecast for Saturday called for widely scattered thunderstorms from the Rio Grande Valley of Texas across the Rockies to portions of Idaho and Utah, from northern Michigan to the Dakotas, and in southern Florida. Scattered showers were predicted along the Canadian border from Maine to New York State.

The Pacific Northwest is the only area expected to get much wet weather this weekend. A strong cold front is headed for the region and rain and mountain snows are forecast across the Pacific Northwest on Saturday and in northwest Nevada by early Sunday.

Fire damages famed Redondo Beach Pier

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A spectacular fire destroyed restaurants and shops on the popular Redondo Beach Pier on Friday, chasing away thousands of people and destroying much of the structure.

Three firefighters suffered minor injuries battling the blaze, said fire Battalion Chief Pat Aust. Damage was estimated at more than $1 million.

Aust termed the fire "completely accidental," based on a eyewitness account, but he would not elaborate.

The fire, reported about 1:40 p.m., sent plumes of smoke and flame billowing into the sky over this resort city 25 miles south of downtown Los Angeles. The smoke was visible for 10 miles.

Richard D. Schwein, special agent-in-charge of the FBI's El Paso Division, said that Robert B. Bowers, 51, of Dallas; Dave Mattox, 59, of Fort Worth; Robert Lee Boggs, 48, of San Antonio, and Shari Dawn Fox, 27, of San Antonio.

The foursome between May 23 and 26 had "intended to devise a scheme to defraud Stanton National Bank ... and certain prospective customers of the bank" by obtaining money under false pretenses, according to the FBI's Schwein.

If convicted, each of the defendants could be imprisoned up to five years and fined $250,000, Schwein said.

Money raised to repair memorial

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than $60,000 has been raised to repair scratches made by vandals on the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, thanks to the efforts of veterans organizations and radio stations nationwide, a fund-raising official said Friday.

"People have been exceedingly generous," Jan Scruggs, founder and president of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund, said.

Scruggs, whose struggle to get the memorial built will be portrayed Sunday in the NBC-TV movie "To Heal A Nation," said he was surprised that so many people were interested in contributing money to repair the memorial, which has become the most heavily visited monument in Washington since it was dedicated six years ago.

The National Park Service on May 2 said it had discovered 8-inch scratches, including one resembling a swastika, on two of the memorial's 140 polished granite panels. Scratches also were found later on a third panel on the 493-foot wall, which contains the names of those killed in the Southeast Asian war.

Scruggs said neither the fund nor the Park Service solicited contributions. Instead, the money, which he called "gratifying," was raised by groups and individuals who decided on their own to make donations following news accounts of the vandalism — the first ever reported at the memorial.

A Vermont granite expert has been studying ways to remove the scratches from the polished granite, Scruggs said. The cost of repairs was not yet known.

In the meantime, a stone expert has been hired to make temporary repairs by filling the scratch marks with synthetic resin that matches the mirror-like surface of the panels, according to Park Service spokesman Earle Kittleman.

"After the repairs are made, we will use the extra money to buy more granite so we will have panels ready to make replacements if the need arises," Scruggs said.

Officials at the Park Service and the veterans fund still are hoping to find out who vandalized the memorial. U.S. Park Police have been patrolling around the clock since the damage was revealed, Kittleman said.

On Monday, the Park Service and the fund will hold their traditional Memorial Day ceremony at the memorial, with speeches by military leaders and a wreath laying.

PLANE

The experimental YE-5, which is undetectable by radar, was used by the U.S. Army and U.S. Air Force in research into stealth military aircraft.

"The idea of the stealth airplane was ours," Ted Windecker said. "We proposed it to the Air Force unsolicited."

With its petroleum-based epoxy resin and the fiberglass, the Windecker Eagle "is stronger than aluminum," he said. "It doesn't corrode. And it is resistant to fatigue." The load-bearing material, likewise, is plastic.

"In terms of performance, the airplane is significantly faster" than comparable aircraft such as the Beechcraft Bonanza because of its aerodynamic sleekness, said the son. It has a better climb rate than (aluminum) airplanes even though they have the same engine and same weight," he said.

In addition, the Windecker technology inspired Boeing Aircraft Co. to use the composite material in many of its aircraft in its airliner series, including the 747, 757, and 767.

But the concept has not appealed to the general-aviation industry.

The general-aviation use has been "limited" because of the conservative nature of engineers, Ted Windecker said.

"There is a strong NIH factor — Not Invented Here — among engineers," who are reluctant to "adopt new technology," he said.

Dr. Leo J. Windecker, who began his research into composite more than 30 years ago, developed the first prototype in Midland in 1967 and got the aircraft FAA certified in 1969.

His and his wife's research was backed by Dow Chemical, an important contributor to the Lake Jackson economy. The company remains interested in expanding technological uses of petroleum, such as in epoxy resins.

But the senior Windecker said he can understand why general-aviation companies, such as Cessna, Piper and Beechcraft, did not scrap their aluminum technology to delve into composites.

A Cessna official, Windecker said, explained: "We would have to retrain all of our employees, build new plants, scrub every bit of tooling that we've got." And Cessna then was turning a profit in its general-aviation aircraft.

Leo Windecker was director of research for the Midland-based Windecker Industries, whose principal stockholder, founder and "guiding light" was Midlander Bill Blakemore.

"Bill has played a very important role in the development of the technology," Windecker said.

Windecker today is doing research into metal-matrix and ceramic composites, in which fiberglass is embedded into base materials to produce "super strong" material that is "very light" and resistant to high heat, Windecker said.

He noted that the Windecker Eagle's continuous-fiber composition is far stronger than "chopped" fiberglass used in manufacturing some cars and boats. "It's kind of like the difference between felt and woven fabrics," he said.

Research suggests that by the year 2000, "We will have all-composite airliners," Windecker said.

The senior designer said that his interest in composites was whetted when while taking an anatomy class in 1949 at The University of Texas at Houston. His professor cited the amazing strength of the human skeletal system — the bones — and particularly the hip bone.

"Man has never been able to make any structure that is that strong and light," Windecker said.

The Windeckers were enticed to Midland in the early 1960s by the Midland Development League, which was interested in diversifying the Midland's economic base, and League leader, the late Stanley Moore, who was founder and president of Drilco, said Dr. Fairfax Windecker.

"Leo was always interested in transportation," she said, "and the hardest thing in transportation is to build airplanes, which have to be very light and very strong."

She noted that her husband has obtained 27 patents on composites.

Windecker Industries was ready to go into full production when "the oil (economy) just dropped out underneath," Dr. Fairfax Windecker said.

About $5 million in venture capital had been pumped into the airplane.

Dow Chemical's chief pilot, Frank Hale, who flew the Windecker Eagle to Lake Jackson from Midland Friday afternoon, said that the airplane is "so stable" after it is trimmed out that "you really don't need an autopilot. It will go about its business quite naturally."

The Windeckers officially will present the Windecker Eagle to the Lake Jackson Historical Association Museum June 18.

"It flies as good as it looks," Hale said of the Eagle. "This airplane was the beginning of structural-composite technology."

OIL

The biggest risk to the United States, if it becomes 65 percent or more dependent on imported oil, is that OPEC could then make demands that the U.S. could not refuse, Wiley said.

The U.S. and its trading partners would "live in fear that something would go wrong...in the volatile Middle East," Wiley added. He said he fears the U.S. could lose political flexibility and independence.

"The balance of trade deficit will be staggering as we cumulatively add to the volume of imports and prices move up," Wiley said.

Another conferee, Michael Daniels of the United States Global Strategy Council, a former government official and adviser to several administrations, warned in an interview afterward: "My feeling is, the weaker the domestic energy sector becomes, the greater the danger to national security."

Participants offered a variety of solutions to U.S. energy security.

Harrington stressed diversification of energy sources and suggested increasing coal consumption and a greater dependence on nuclear power.

He said the administration favors filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve — storage facilities carved out of salt beds on the Texas and Louisiana coasts — to 750 million barrels by the middle 1990s.

The administration also is asking Congress to create tax incentives to expand oil production and to repeal the windfall profits tax, enacted in the late 1970s.

In addition, the administration is urging Congress to allow exploration in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, a proposal that is stuck in a congressional committee.

While he agrees with most of those suggestions, Wiley said he believes citizens could be educated to the potential dangers to their economy and national security and be persuaded to prop up oil prices with subsidies if prices dropped to, say, $10 a barrel from the current $17.50.

Without such a guarantee against a "disaster scenario," Wiley said, it will be impossible to find capital to invest in oil production.

New Hampshire Gov. John H. Sununu, a Republican, said if the country has an energy policy, it needs to be clarified. "We need to decide whether we want high oil and gas prices and a strong domestic industry, or low oil and gas prices and no domestic industry. My feeling is, the general public would like something in between those two extremes."

Conservative Republican critics mounted several attacks, but all their attempts were easily turned back.

Dole told the president, "We are very pleased to be able to give you this (ratification) in advance of your stepping on Soviet territory in Moscow."

Improved test scores indicate school reforms working

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Significant improvements in student scores on standardized reading, writing and math tests indicate that Texas public school reforms are working, state officials said Friday.

Since the first administration of the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills in 1986, the percentage of students passing the test in grades three, five and seven has jumped by an average of 16 percentage points to 71.3 percent. The gap between white and minority students narrowed by an average of 5.3 percentage points.

"We have yet to reach our goal of having a truly excellent education system in Texas, however the impressive gains exhibited in TEAMS scores over the past three years are proof positive to the citizens of Texas that their faith and commitment to education reform is well founded," State Board of Education Chairman Jon Brumley said at his first news conference since assuming the chair in 1984. "Student achievement is improving."

Vice chairwoman Rebecca Canning called the results "splendid," and Gov. Bill Clements said they are "proof that teachers, parents, administrators and students, all pulling together, can make significant progress."

The lone dark spot in the report came among ninth graders, where the percentage of students passing the exam rose just 3 points from 1986's 55 percent. Brumley and Canning offered several possible explanations — the difficulty of making the transition to high school, a larger number of students taking the test — but said they would appoint a special committee to investigate the question.

Both Brumley and Canning said they would not worry about some educators' complaint that teachers are "teaching to the test" as long as the tests fairly represent what the state expects students to learn. "If you do not have identifiable skills that every student should be equipped with," Canning said, "then you have a student body that may or may not be equipped to perform in the job market in the most minimal ways."

Bush to 'spell out' women's issues

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

Republican George Bush, conceding that women's negative views are hurting him in the polls, promised Friday he would spell out "what I feel on certain women's issues."

Democrat Michael Dukakis said his own positions are evident from his record on pay equity, child care and affirmative action.

Bush said his "gender gap" problem — the difficulty he and some other Republicans have had in drawing votes from women — would be discussed during the coming week of meetings with GOP governors and other party officials at his Kennebunkport, Maine, retreat.

Dukakis, the Democratic front-runner, continued to blast the Reagan administration for its dealings with Panamanian military leader Manuel Noriega, talking of alleged $200,000 payments by the CIA as well as the failed negotiations to get him out of power.

"We've been paying that guy what we pay the president of the United States," Dukakis said Friday in Albuquerque, N.M. "You can't be serious about waging a real war against drugs when we have an administration that can't say no to Noriega."

The vice president, though saying he has not agreed with some administration policies dealing with Noriega, said the U.S. goal remains the same despite the breakdown in talks designed to remove him from power.

"If we can find some way to get him out and bring him to justice, that would suit me just fine," Bush said in a news conference on the lawn in front of his vacation retreat in Kennebunkport, Maine.

Dukakis, grinding toward a nominating majority expected in ten days, met briefly with remaining party rival Jesse Jackson at the Albuquerque airport. The men emerged smiling from the session that lasted about five minutes. Aides would not discuss the substance of the meeting.

Earlier, Jackson reached out to American Indians, saying they have been ignored by the federal government. "It's not too much to ask for a summit with the American Indian leadership," Jackson told Indian leaders at the All Indian Pueblo Council. "Hispanics in the barrios, blacks in the ghettos, ranchers on ranches, Indians on reservations...there's a tendency of these people to be abandoned by law."

The Democratic candidates planned Memorial Day weekend campaigning in New Jersey, which joins New Mexico, California and Montana in the final round of presidential primaries on June 7. Dukakis has more than 1,700 of the 2,081 delegate votes he needs to win the party's nomination, with 466 at stake June 7.

Bush, spending a week in Maine during the superpower summit in Moscow, said he is getting recharged for a combative stance as the underdog against Dukakis in the fall campaign for the White House.

"I like fighting back," he declared. "It's the Maine air," said the GOP nominee-to-be. "When I get up here I feel — it's not feistiness — but I feel very relaxed about it. I don't feel troubled by somebody pointing out I'm behind in the polls... I'm coming out of 10 points down in these polls and I've got five months to fight back."

The latest ABC News-Washington led among men by four percentage points. Other polls have also showed a gender gap, although not as large as this one.

"What I've got to do is more clearly define what I feel on certain women's issues. One of them will be day care," Bush said.

Dukakis also noted the polls during his appearances in Albuquerque, where he, too, talked about women's issues.

NATION

"We Democrats have the best chance to win the presidency in years and we're going to do it," he told the Federation of Democratic Women. "I've never seen our party so united... I've never seen our party so together."

The Massachusetts governor emphasized the family during that speech prior to an outdoor rally, saying his record demonstrates his commitment to affirmative action, pay equity, child care and welfare reform. He said he and his wife, Kitty, are committed to strengthening the family, calling it "the single most important institution in our nation and our world."

Bush said he is angered by constant criticism from Democrats.

"We're going to put it a little more in focus," Bush said. "The frustration level (is) going up, in terms of sitting around and listening to Jackson and Michael Dukakis dump all over me and the administration. So I'm beginning to get a little more combative."

He denounced what he said were polls saying Americans view Dukakis as more conservative than he.

"That, by any stretch of the imagination, is hard to believe," he said.

Teachers find theirs 'risky business'

NEW YORK (AP) — After a week in which New York City teachers were bludgeoned, slashed, pummeled and blasted, their union leader called Friday for increased security and tougher sentences for teacher assaults.

"One attack against a teacher is outrageous and to have four in one week is just intolerable," said United Federation of Teachers President Sandra Feldman. "And we're afraid that this is just the tip of the iceberg."

Though schools officials insisted the number of attacks on teachers had actually decreased in three years, Mayor Edward I. Koch said the city was concerned about teacher safety and he called a "summit meeting" Tuesday of the chancellor, union leaders, the five district attorneys and police commissioner to discuss the problem.

The latest act of violence occurred Thursday afternoon when a physical education teacher came upon an intruder rifling through students' gym bags outside a Bronx school and was beaten unconscious with a baseball bat.

Gary Smith, 37, who remained unconscious Friday, was the fourth teacher assaulted. Douglas De Marco was knifed more than a dozen times by a mugger in the bathroom of a South Bronx grammar school.

The other incidents included a teacher who was beat up by a student, the student's brother and sister, and a 71-year-old teacher who was injured when an M-80 firecracker was tossed into her classroom.

"There's something seriously wrong here," said De Marco, who added that the attack on Smith made him even more "angry and frustrated."

The need for increased security has long been evident to De Marco who said he teaches in "a neighborhood that's known for two things: heroin and crack."

De Marco, speaking from his hospital bed, said his attacker was "some young crazed guy, looking to make a quick score."

The assailant got a few subway tokens and a couple of dollars; De Marco got kicked in the ribs, abdomen and groin and stabbed in the ear, neck, shoulder, side and back.

"A few more inches and it could have been my eye or an artery and we wouldn't be having this conversation," said De Marco, who is expected to recover.

Yet the Board of Education said the number of assaults in city schools have decreased, mainly because of an increase in security guards in elementary schools.

There were 1,322 assaults in the city's 1,000 schools in 1985-86 and 969 this year, said board spokesman Bob Terte.

That included 337 teachers assaulted in 1985-86 and 198 so far this year, he said. The rest were on students or other personnel including custodians and cafeteria workers. An assault could be anything beginning with a shove against a wall, Terte said.

In addition, Terte said 350 security guards have been added in the last two years, and the operating budget for school safety increased from $31.8 million to nearly $43.2 million. There are currently 2,061 guards in schools.

But the UFT insists there were about 1,000 physical attacks against teachers both last year and this year. Edward Muir, chairman of the UFT School Safety Committee, said about 20 percent required emergency-room treatment.

Though Ms. Feldman acknowledged a decrease in teacher assaults and a rise in security personnel, she said "it's obviously not good enough."

"If we have four incidents in one week and if we have a situation where a teacher can be bludgeoned this way in a school yard while he's teaching kids, then obviously the effort, and I do acknowledge the effort, isn't enough."

She praised new schools Chancellor

Richard Green for his proposal to put metal detectors in five violence-prone schools this fall and said she felt he was anxious to stem violence. But she said the changes can't come quick enough.

The UFT wants guards in every school and police officers in troubled neighborhoods. The union also is pushing for legislation to make any physical attack on a teacher a felony offense, no matter how minor. A bill is pending in the state Senate.

Ms. Feldman said that too often if the defendant is a minor "nothing is done."

"It's already difficult to get teachers into the school system" without adding problems like these, Ms. Feldman said. She said about half the system's 63,000 teachers are eligible to retire and these incidents are likely to prompt some to say, "Look, I've had it."

Douglas De Marco, however, is not one of them.

Afghan children taught two conflicting ideologies

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — Fourteen-year-old Noorieh Mazloun-poor has had two educations in her young life — one Moslem, the other Marxist.

She got her Marxist education in her homeland, Afghanistan.

As a refugee with her family in Pakistan for the past two years, her education has been based on Islam, her religion.

She is typical of Afghan children who have been taught two conflicting ideologies over the past decade of war in their country.

Now with the Soviet military withdrawal from Afghanistan, the children who have had an Islamic education in Pakistan will be returning home to join those whose education was wholly Marxist.

The gap may be wide, but students interviewed here were confident it won't deter them from reuniting their country in the long run.

Noorieh went to school in Kabul, Afghanistan's capital, until she was 12.

In Pakistan, she enrolled in a Moslem school run by the guerrillas fighting the Soviet-backed Afghan government.

Like many of her classmates, she has had to switch from courses that taught Communist doctrine to interpretations of the Koran, the Moslem holy book.

In Kabul, she said, she was taught that it was her "duty to serve the country, the masses, the revolution and the fruits of history."

At her refugee school in Peshawar, the blue cover of her Persian language text book has a map identifying her country as "Moslem Afghanistan." Another map in the book carries the Koranic verse, "There is no god but Allah. Mohammed is his prophet."

Refugee books published by the guerrillas' Afghan education council also teach: "The future of Afghanistan should be reconstructed on the principles of Islamic culture."

"Eventually we will have to reconcile the two," said Ehsanullah Poopal, 17-year-old 10th grader.

"It's going to take a lot of effort, patience. They have their reasons and we have ours."

Poopal, however, said he will not accept the Communist teachings and will try to explain to his classmates back home why his beliefs are different.

Another refugee student, 15-year-old Mehrafza, said he thinks it is going to be difficult in the beginning. "We are going to suffer first, especially to see our friends are led toward a corrupt path, taught bad values. But I don't think it will be too long before we understand each other. I don't think the gap will affect the country in the long run."

Wassimeh, 24, a teacher at one of the refugee schools, believes Moslem education will continue when the children among the 3 million refugees in Pakistan return home.

Malihah Malekzad, 28, an mathematics teacher, said she taught at a Kabul school until two years ago. She added that unless a teacher was a member of the Communist Party, there was no hope of promotion.

"It is very difficult for a Moslem not to be able to express her religious viewpoint and to be taunted for her belief," she said.

Schools in Afghanistan, according to the teachers and students here, have their own party recruitment bodies — the scouts, the first stage of Communist "indoctrination," and the youth organization, where Russian culture and language are taught, and where some are given scholarships to study in the Soviet Union.

Coastal town 'what Lebanon used to be'

RMEILEH, Lebanon (AP) — In the chaos and intolerance that is Lebanon, Rmeileh is an oasis of liberty, a haven for people fleeing political and social persecution and assassination.

This coastal town, 19 miles south of Beirut, is what Lebanon used to be before 13 years of civil war, sectarian hatreds and religious fanaticism turned it into a wilderness.

Leftists and other refugees from Beirut and the south have fled to Rmeileh following a campaign of assassinations by Shiite Moslem fundamentalists against communists, pro-Iraqi Baath socialists and other leftists.

One of the things that makes Rmeileh different from just about everywhere else in south Lebanon is that alcohol is sold openly at the side of the road.

Alcohol is banned in most areas of the region, dominated by Shiite Moslem factions, and in Beirut's southern slums, the Shiite stronghold in the capital.

Islamic religious laws also ban mixed parties, mixed bathing and the consumption of pork.

But in the summer, Rmeileh's eight restaurants and three miles of Mediterranean beaches and hillside picnic areas are packed with males and females having a good time. Pork also is sold.

Hamza, 35, comes from the staunchly Shiite town of Nabatiyeh in the south.

"We can't buy drinks in Nabatiyeh any more, so we come to Rmeileh," he said. "In summer women have to come here to swim because it's the one of the very few places they can do that."

Because he lives in a Shiite area, where such activities are forbidden, Hamza declined to disclose his full name.

Rmeileh was a mainly Christian town, with about 5,000 Maronite Catholics, until 1985, when Moslem forces overran the coastal plain. Now only about 60 Maronite families are left.

But Rmeileh now is protected by Communist Party militiamen, most of them Christians, who are allied to neighboring Druse and Sunni Moslem forces who help keep the Shiites out.

The Syrian army also has a checkpoint just south of Rmeileh on the Awali River which also acts as a deterrent for Shiite gunmen.

Abu Rim, a leftist official in the town, said 500 refugee families — Moslems, Christians and Palestinians — live in Rmeileh with the local Christians.

"Our aim is to get rid of the sectarian atmosphere and implement co-existence," he said.

Elias Tabet, director of the town's government school, said ethnic mix gives Rmeileh a non-sectarian nature, where people from different areas and religions "feel safe and free."

Samih Germanos, 57, a Christian who fled Beirut's Shiite-controlled southern slums, said: "We're very happy and hope things will stay this way."

Acting Mayor Halim Kleib, said the tourist influx last summer was even better than pre-war times. "People in the south prefer Rmei-leh to other places because it's the closest resort to them that provides restaurants and private beaches as well as drinks," Kleib added.

Ali Hujeri, 40, a father of nine, who works at a Pepsi Cola plant in a nearby town, said he sells alcohol on the street to earn extra money and that most of his customers are from the Shiite south.

"I'm the only one to sell pork in this area," said Abu Elie, a 32-year-old shopowner. "I started bringing it from Mount Lebanon last week and in four days, I sold around 40 kilograms (88 pounds)."

Justice Minister Nabih Berri's Amal movement and the Iranian-backed Hezbollah (Party of God) have been blamed for many of the assassinations of leftists in south Lebanon.

But since many of those who have fled to Rmeileh — "self-deportees," Amal calls them — are skilled or professional people, the Amal recently asked them to return to their villages.

Study indicates shyness related to nervous system

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Building on previous findings, a new study presents strong evidence that some children are born with a nervous system that predisposes them to shyness and that the tendency stays with them as they grow.

The study involved children who were followed from the age of 2 until they were 7½. Researchers previously suggested that shyness was an inborn trait but had not followed children long enough to see whether the shyness lasted into childhood. The new study also shows that the underlying biological tendencies also persist.

Infants who were shyer at 2 years, the new study shows, had physical differences that seemed related to social inhibition. For example, they had a higher heart rate than outgoing children while taking simple tests or even while sleeping. The higher the child's heart rate in the early years, the more likely the child would still be shy at 7½.

The shy children also reacted to the testing with a greater pupil dilation, increased muscle tension and a rise in norepinephrine, a brain chemical secreted by people under stress.

These results suggest that there is a distinct, identifiable category of about 10 percent of infants, the shyest, who from birth are more easily aroused physiologically by novelty and unexpected changes, according to the report, published Friday in the Journal of Science. The research was done by Jerome Kagan and J. Steven Reznick, psychologists at Harvard University, and Nancy Sridman, a psychologist at Yale.

Researcher says recent retirees more 'comfortable' than older generations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Recently retired Americans generally are facing the future with more money and assets than their elders, according to a Florida researcher.

Nearly 60 percent of retirees aged 55 to 64 are financially "comfortable," compared to just over half of those 65 to 74 and only 38 percent of the 75 and over group, reports Charles F. Longino of the University of Miami.

Longino, director of the Center for Social Research in Aging, reports his findings in the June edition of American Demographics magazine.

"The World War II GIs who reaped the financial rewards of a 20-year economic expansion are now retiring," he said, producing "an expanding number of upscale retirees."

The World War II veterans, Longino points out, reaped the benefits of government programs that provided education and home loans, cost-of-living escalators for their Social Security benefits and federal laws protecting private pensions. In addition, many were able to invest in stocks and bonds during a booming economy.

Longino's study was based on an analysis of 1980 Census data, the most recent available in sufficient detail for the study.

Just over half — 51.1 percent — of those in the middle group, aged 65 to 74, were listed as comfortable, which he defined as having income double the poverty level. In addition, 12.3 percent were "pension elite," with income from three sources: Social Security, pensions and assets.

For the younger group, 59.1 percent were comfortable but only 4.7 percent fit into the elite class. They were less likely to qualify as elite since few were receiving Social Security in addition to other retirement benefits.

The oldest group included 37.5 percent listed as comfortable and 8.5 percent as elite. Few in this group had income-generating assets and most completed a large share of their working lives before World War II, when pension benefits were less common and lower.

Elderly affluence isn't spread evenly across the nation, Longino noted.

"There are a cluster of states with a large share of the comfortably retired," he said.

These states include Connecticut, Florida, Hawaii, Nevada and New Jersey for those listed as comfortable, while the so-called pension elite made strong showings in Connecticut and Washington, Longino found.

Longino found the comfortably retired of the 65 to 75 age group in such resort and retirement states as Florida, Nevada and New Jersey; in Connecticut where many New York executives have retired, and Hawaii. The Aloha state has a large Asian population in which extended families are more common, an arrangement that boosts the household income measure used in the study, Longino noted.

For the pension elite, Connecticut and Washington placed well, as did Florida, Maryland and New Jersey. Longino also found clusters of affluent elderly in some metropolitan areas.

He cited as examples Fort Lauderdale and Palm Beach, Fla., San Diego and Palm Springs, Calif., and along Mobile Bay, Ala.

Longino's work was partially funded by the American Association of Retired Persons. American Demographics concentrates on population matters.

Here is a state-by-state rundown of the percentage of Americans aged 65 to 74 who are considered comfortably retired, or among the pension elite.

NATION in brief

Air Force watching Eastern Airlines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force has placed Eastern Airlines under increased scrutiny after considering, but then rejecting, a suspension of the carrier's right to fly military passengers.

The Military Airlift Command said Eastern became the object of a "commercial carrier survey" in March and Air Force inspectors "reported performance deficiencies which, if not corrected, could affect the safety of the half-million DOD (Department of Defense) personnel who annually fly on Eastern aircraft."

Eastern, which handled roughly $87 million worth of military travel business in fiscal 1987, was notified April 11 of the survey findings and told that suspension proceedings were being started.

Eastern officials then met with the Air Force on April 25, however, and convinced the service they were addressing the problems. Lt. Col. Nick Lacey, chief of the Air Carrier Survey Office, said Friday.

Eastern, a unit of Texas Air Corp. that is locked in bitter dispute with employee unions, last month was the focus of an unusually broad safety investigation by the Federal Aviation Administration that involved inspections of all of its airplanes.

Dukakis makes comments

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Democratic presidential front-runner Michael Dukakis said Friday the Reagan administration "can't say no to Noriega," and he said the CIA once was "paying off" Panama's military leader to the tune of $200,000 a year.

"We've been paying that guy what we pay the president of the United States," Dukakis said.

"You can't be serious about waging a real war against drugs when we have an administration that can't say no to Noriega," he said, referring to Gen. Manuel Noriega, who is under U.S. indictment on drug charges.

The Massachusetts governor hammered away at the issue of drugs and U.S. foreign policy as he campaigned across the Southwest on a trip designed to close out the Democratic primary season on a winning note and begin pointing the party toward the fall campaign.

New Mexico holds its primary on June 7 and Dukakis is expected to win enough Democratic National Convention delegates here and in primaries the same day in California, Montana and New Jersey to clinch the party's nomination over Jesse Jackson.

Most pass readiness test

ATLANTA (AP) — Results of a controversial first-grade readiness test administered to 90,434 Georgia kindergartners last month show that 92 percent passed, education officials said Friday.

The test, criticized by some as being too stressful for 5-year-olds and 6-year-olds, is required under the Quality Basic Education Act, enacted in 1985.

This year, for the first time, passing the test is generally a prerequisite for entering the first grade. The rules give districts the opportunity to make exceptions for children who fall if the teacher believes they should be promoted.

Teens' deaths probed

BENTON, Ark. (AP) — The Saline County grand jury investigating the deaths of two Bryant teen-agers believes the deaths were not due to the train that ran over them, a deputy prosecutor said.

A preliminary report issued by the grand jury Wednesday said the boys, who were hit by a train in August, died of a "probable homicide."

Deputy Prosecutor Richard Garrett tried to clear up the meaning of the phrase Thursday.

"The grand jury meant by the statement of probable homicide that they probably suffered death as a result, or in connection with, some force other than the train," Garrett said.

Under Arkansas law, criminal homicide can mean capital murder, first-degree murder, second-degree murder, manslaughter or negligent homicide, Garrett said.

Beef issue supported

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cattle producers and cattle and beef importers voted overwhelmingly to support a $1-per-head marketing checkoff to finance a national beef promotion and research program, the Agriculture Department said today.

Assistant Secretary Kenneth A. Gilles said that about 79 percent of the 256,505 valid ballots cast in the May 10 referendum, or 202,408, favored the program, while 21 percent, or 54,097, were opposed.

Only a simple majority of those voting was needed for approval.

The program is paid for by a fee of $1 per head on all domestic and imported cattle and an equivalent fee on beef imports. It was established under federal legislation approved in 1985 and began operations on Oct. 1, 1986.

The law required that a referendum be held to determine whether producers and importers wanted to continue the program.

Shamrock school closing

SHAMROCK, Okla. (AP) — The tiny Creek County community of Shamrock, where all the buildings once were painted green, has heard its last school bell.

The school in the former oil boom town closed out a 74-year history with the final classes Friday.

Cooper departure 'unrelated' to Meese troubles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Charles Cooper, a top aide to Attorney General Edwin Meese III, handed in his resignation Friday, but said his decision to join the exodus of officials from the Justice Department was "wholly unrelated" to Meese's legal troubles.

Cooper, the assistant attorney general who heads the office of legal counsel, said he is "just now beginning" to look for work with a private law firm. But he said his decision to leave was not based on the fact that independent counsel James C. McKay is expected to issue a report in several weeks raising questions about Meese's ethical conduct.

Cooper, whose resignation is effective July 8, praised Meese as being "almost exclusively responsible" for advancing a number of issues on the Reagan administration's conservative agenda by focusing debate on interpreting the Constitution and the principles of federalism and non-discrimination.

In an interview, Cooper said he has "an extraordinary admiration" for Meese's "ability to withstand the controversy that prevails at this time" in connection with McKay's year-old criminal investigation of Meese.

Cooper said "I have not formed any judgments" about Meese on the matters McKay has been examining. Meese thanked Cooper in a letter for his "loyalty, support and special vote of confidence."

The independent counsel launched an investigation on May 11, 1987, that has focused on Meese's ties to scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp. and a $1 billion Iraqi oil pipeline project.

Cooper acknowledged he had doubts briefly about remaining at the department two months ago when the No. 2 department official, Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns, and criminal division chief William Weld resigned in protest over Meese's continued tenure as attorney general.

Cooper said he at first thought Burns and Weld might know something about the "circumstances surrounding Ed," such as a possible determination by McKay that Meese had engaged in wrongdoing. But three days after Burns and Weld resigned, McKay announced he had insufficient evidence at that time to seek an indictment of Meese.

In a letter to Meese, Cooper said he long ago decided to leave this summer and that "I am carrying through with plans formed in a calmer time and based on a host of personal and professional considerations wholly unrelated to the controversy of today."

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said that in terms of staffing, the department "is in better shape than most agencies around town at this point in an administration," with many officials returning to jobs in the private sector as the Reagan administration comes to an end.

Korten said the department "fully expects" to have a replacement for Cooper by the time he leaves.

Cooper, 38, took the legal counsel post in November 1985 after serving as deputy assistant attorney general in the department's civil rights division, where he worked closely with William Bradford Reynolds.

Cooper played a leading role in trying to win a Supreme Court seat for federal Judge Robert H. Bork last year. But the Senate rejected Bork, a vocal conservative, by a wide margin.

Cooper recently traveled to Panama to participate in negotiations to try to remove Panamanian Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega from power. He also was among a handful of political advisers chosen by Meese to conduct a weekend inquiry in November 1986 into the administration's secret arms sales to Iran.

Beaumont man invites people to stop and smell the roses

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Kenny Sanderfer's shoes become damp with dew as he walks through his "office" each morning.

The sound of bird calls greets him instead of ringing phones and clacking typewriters, and Sanderfer begins another day making rounds through the well-manicured gardens and lawn of the McFaddin Ward Home.

As building and grounds supervisor, he is responsible for keeping up 200,000 square feet of flowerbeds and 400,000 square feet of lawn — and that's just around the main building. He also has the grounds at the nearby carriage house and visitors center of the historic home-turned-museum to take care of.

And in the spring, when the 200 rose bushes that face North Street explode with color and fragrance, he starts each day by cutting a couple dozen roses for flower vases in the sprawling home and for offices in the visitors center.

The softspoken gardener who grew up in Groves says spring is also the time when people stop on the street and get out of their cars to take pictures of the roses, "and I get as much pleasure out of that as anything."

But while some might think he's inspecting the rose bushes, which range in color from yellow to purple, for the various insects or ailments that can plague them, "what I do most is enjoy them. Every one is a little different."

Sanderfer describes himself as a simplistic gardener, saying it's "not as complicated as we try to make it — we cheat ourselves sometimes by getting too technical."

He admits he had a head-start over most gardeners when he came to work at the McFaddin Ward home in September, because the groundwork was already laid. "Someone put a lot of thought into the selection of roses for this kind of climate," he said, in addition to having constructed raised flowerbeds complete with an irrigation system.

Book blames murders on conspiracy

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When two bankers were gunned down in a 1983 ambush on an abandoned southwest Minnesota farm, some speculated that bitterness about the farm crisis was behind the violence.

But a new book contends that a conspiracy between a failed dairy farmer whose marriage had crumbled and his militaristic teen-age son — not the rural economic crisis — triggered the killings.

"I look at the killings as being the final outcome of a broken family and broken identities," said Joseph Amato, 49, the book's author and a history professor at Southwest State University in Marshall.

Amato

"When Father and Son Conspire: A Minnesota Farm Murder" concentrates on the relationship between James Jenkins and his 18-year-old son, Steven, and discounts the farm crisis of the 1980s as a major factor in the murders.

Amato said in an interview that he became intrigued by the case because "it just seemed to be very peculiar that a father and son would get together and ambush a man." His journalistic account of the killings took 2 1/2 years to research and write.

Published in March by Iowa State University Press, the 226-page book is now in a second printing of 3,000 copies after selling out a first run of 2,500, according to Neelum Chaudhry, the publisher's advertising and publicity manager.

As former director of Southwest State's rural studies program, Amato said he was familiar with the problems facing farmers. He also knew the terror that swept the Minnesota prairie the night of the killings.

"Doors that hadn't been locked in memory were locked. People who really didn't like neighbors slept over at their house that night," he said.

On the morning of Sept. 29, 1983, Rudolph Blythe Jr. and Deems "To-by" Thulin were shot to death on a 10-acre abandoned dairy farm near the small town of Ruthton in the southwest corner of Minnesota.

Blythe was president of Buffalo Ridge State Bank in Ruthton, which had taken over the farm abandoned by James Jenkins in 1980. Thulin was Blythe's chief loan officer. The two were lured to the deserted farm by a telephone caller who said he was interested in the property.

Two men were seen fleeing the farm in a white pickup truck, and a search began for James Jenkins and his son. Three days later, Steven Jenkins surrendered to authorities in Paducah, Texas. He led authorities to an abandoned farm where his 46-year-old father was found dead of a shotgun blast. The death was ruled a suicide by Texas authorities.

Amato portrays the two men as frustrated by lost dreams, working each other into a rage.

The elder Jenkins' marriage had recently collapsed and he had declared bankruptcy. Amato speculates that the younger Jenkins, a high school dropout, was upset that a spleen injury suffered in an accident might end his dream of joining the military.

"This father worked this son up and this son either used his father or exploited his father," Amato said. He maintains that tension between the two men was the cause of the killings. "I think this father brought out the aggression in the son."

For the two, Amato said, the crime may have been the "last lie they shared together. And the lie was, 'I'll have a farm and you'll be a soldier.'"

Amato argues that the farm crisis played a minor role. He notes that James Jenkins failed as a farmer in 1980, several years before the farm crisis reached its peak. Though a hard worker and clever handyman, Amato said, the elder Jenkins failed "when just about anyone would have made it farming."

Amato's theories differ markedly from those of a previous book on the killings.

"Final Harvest: An American Tragedy," published in 1986, links the killings to the farm crisis. That book's author, Andrew H. Malcolm of The New York Times, declined to comment on Amato's book.

Steven Jenkins' mother, Darlene Abraham, and sister, Michele Schewe, issued a statement about the book:

"Mr. Amato did a fairly credible job of gathering the facts available, along with opinions and misinformation and weaving them into 'a story' to support his Greek tragedy."

"In the 'conspiracy' chapter he tells us in detail and depth of Steven and James' innermost thoughts and feelings. How can an accurate description of either be possible when he's never met nor spoken to the father or the son? We strongly disagree with the portrayal of Steve. Steve is innocent."

Steven Jenkins himself declined to be interviewed about the book.

Amato speculates that James Jenkins lured the banker to the farm to either kidnap or terrorize him. The bank president and his loan officer apparently surprised the father and son by arriving earlier than expected.

According to the prosecution's scenario at Steven Jenkins' 1984 trial, the teen-ager fired his M-1 carbine at Thulin, killing the loan officer, then chased Blythe across the yard and cut him down with a second volley.

The prosecution argued that Steven Jenkins, who liked Marine-type haircuts, camouflage fatigues and tattoos, was the triggerman. The younger Jenkins was obsessed with guns, explosives and the military, and slept with the murder weapon in his room.

Enthusiasts fall out of sky to be in contest

By TARA PARKER POPE

AUSTIN (AP) — When Ray Garren jumped out of an airplane for the first time 20 years ago, something terrible happened.

He had a great time. "The worst thing that can happen is you can love it," said Garren, a Dallas resident. "Your weekends are shot and all your old friends disappear."

Since that first jump, skydiving has become a way of life for Garren, who has worked as an instructor for the past six years. On Sunday he and 100 others with the same addiction were literally falling out of the skies over San Marcos, competing in a dual-conference skydiving meet.

During the competition, four or eight divers crowded into a small Cessna plane, which took off from a gravel runway and flew 10,000 feet in the air. On a count of three, the divers hurled themselves from the plane, falling at a rate of about 120 mph.

For about the next 30 seconds, with nothing between them and the fast-approaching earth but the certainty that their parachutes would open, the divers twisted and turned, making various formations by holding onto another diver's arm or leg.

"Fools and bird (droppings) are the only things that fall out of the sky," Garren said. "Skydivers don't have a fear of dying. I think they have a fear of living without being alive. If I was afraid of dying everytime I jumped, I wouldn't jump."

"If you can imagine flying, literally flying your body, that's what we do in free fall," he said.

Dawn Ford, a second-grade school teacher from Fort Worth who made her first jump 1 1/2 years ago, agreed that skydiving is addictive.

"I wanted to do everything in life at least once. Jumping out of an airplane is something I've always wanted to do, and I fell in love with it," Ford said. "The first time, I was scared to death. The first couple seconds of the fall I could feel the drop, my breath kind of hung in my throat."

"Then I realized I was alive after all, and it was just a lot of fun from there," she said.

Sunday's competition between the Gulf and Southwest skydiving conferences attracted divers from Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. Skydive San Marcos Inc., a skydiving drop-zone and training facility, was host for the meet.

"The people that used to skydive were more hardcore," said owner Steve Van Buren. "Nowadays you see husband and wife teams, yuppies, elderly businessmen and a lot of middle-aged people just looking for something new to do."

"It's like taking a two-week vacation in an hour, you're on such a high afterwards," Van Buren said.

Many of the divers competing Sunday will take part in national competition in Oklahoma next month. Others said they were just there for the thrill of it.

"If it wasn't crazy, we wouldn't be interested in it," said Jim Dunn of Seminole. "It's kind of like standing on the edge of a cliff kicking dirt off of it. If it didn't have a big thrill, people wouldn't do it."

Mavs down Lakers, 106-94

Aguirre, Tarpley combine for 44

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — Dallas coach John MacLeod realized it was either get back on defense or get run over by the Los Angeles Lakers in the NBA Western Conference finals.

The Mavericks got back — and got themselves back into the series in the process.

Mark Aguirre scored 23 points and Roy Tarpley had 21 points and 20 rebounds as Dallas defeated the Lakers 106-94 in Game 3 Friday night.

"I think this is the first time in seven games against these people that we've outrebounded them this year," MacLeod said. "When you play the Lakers, it's get back or get cracked."

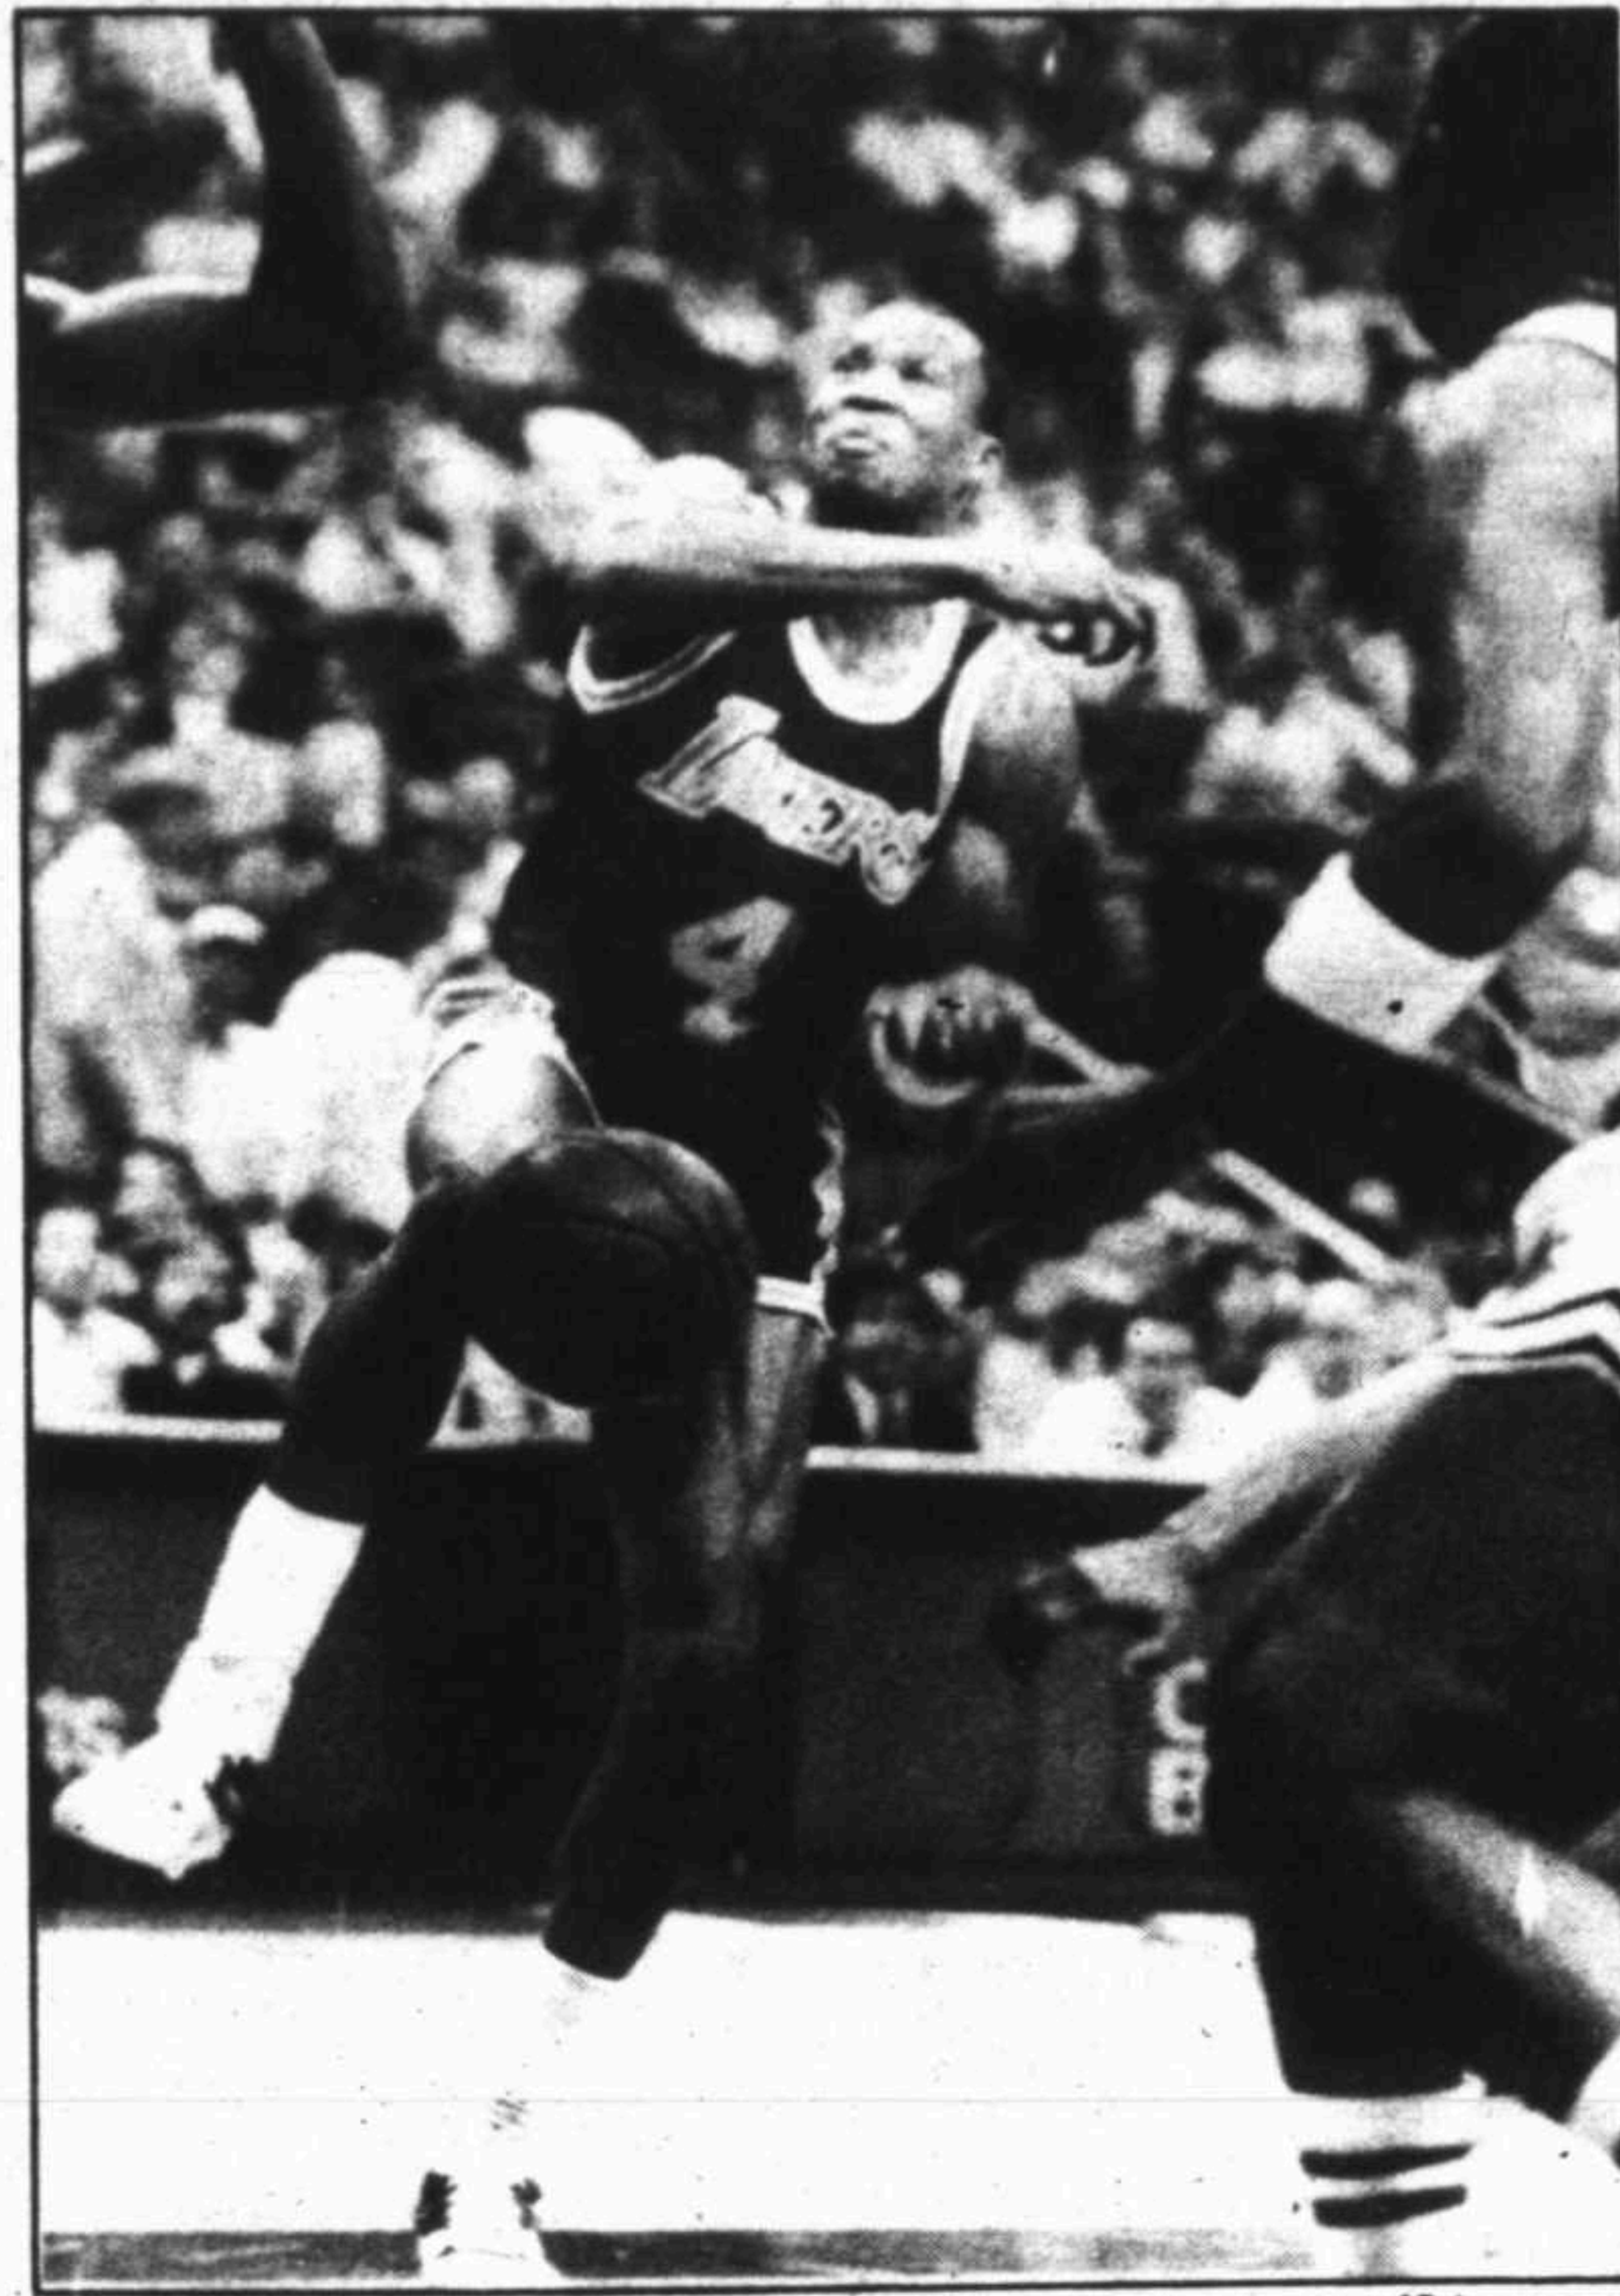

The Mavericks, the NBA's top rebounding team during the regular season, outrebounded Los Angeles 62-40.

The Lakers' 7-foot-2 Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was held four rebounds. Magic Johnson led Los Angeles with eight.

"Tonight the total difference was simple effort," Tarpley said. "It wasn't necessarily adjustments."

"THE KEY was to be aggressive, and we were totally different than the first two games. I could sense that, they were frustrated."

The Lakers led 76-75 entering the fourth quarter, but the Mavericks worked their way to an 85-84 lead, then used a 17-3 spurt to put the game out of reach. The Lakers still lead the best-of seven series 2-1, with Game 4 scheduled for Reunion Arena Sunday afternoon. "They killed us on the boards," said the Lakers' Byron Scott, who scored 30 points in Game 2 but was held to 11 points Friday. "That was the key. They were getting second and third shots, something that wasn't happening in the first two games. They showed tonight why they were the best rebounding team in the NBA."

Los Angeles coach Pat Riley said he could find no fault with his team's effort.

"They (Mavericks) were committed tonight," Riley said. "They got up on us and did a good job denying the ball."

"They just took over physically. I had no problem with my team's effort. Hey, Dallas is a great team. They didn't get here by chance."

AGUIRRE BEGAN the game-clinching spurt when he was awarded a basket on a goaltending call. Derek Harper's 3-point basket with 2:19 to go put the Mavericks in front 100-87.

James Worthy led six Lakers in double figures with 19 points.

Although the Mavericks slowed down the Lakers' fast-breaking attack, which led to victories in the first two games, Dallas led only 52-51 at the half. Both teams came out running in the third quarter, with the Lakers taking the lead on Worthy's basket to start the quarter.

The Lakers led going into the final period after the fast-paced third quarter that included six lead changes and six ties.

Aguirre scored 11 first-quarter points as Dallas took an early lead. Tarpley took over in the second quarter with 10 points.

The Lakers moved ahead 35-34 lead with 7:34 to go in the second quarter, but Tarpley scored three straight baskets to give the Mavericks their slim halftime lead.

Mets down Angels

Manto hurt in Game 1 loss

From Staff Reports

Jackson shortstop Craig Shipley drove in all six runs with a three-run homer and two singles Friday night as the Mets defeated the Midland Angels 6-5 in the first game of a doubleheader.

The Mets swept the twinbill by winning the second game 5-0 on journeyman Virgil Conley's second career shutout in eight years of professional baseball.

Shipley who was also credited with the game winning RBI, blasted his shot in the third inning to put the Mets on top 5-2.

sponded in the bottom of the third with a solo shot and the Halos attempted a comeback in the sixth only to come up a run short.

In the sixth, Midland's Jim McCollom drew a walk and was followed by a Stevens single. Tom Alfredson drove in McCollom with a single and Norm Carrasco flew out to score Stevens as the Angels drew to within one.

With two outs in the sixth, the Angels had the bases loaded, only to have to leave the field when second baseman Jim Thomas flew out to end the inning.

PARIS — The French Open tennis tournament rolled along predictably Friday with comfortable victories by the top-seeded players, including Martina Navratilova, Helena Sukova and Stefan Edberg.

Perhaps the most exciting battle of the day, a summit of sorts between the popular American teen-ager Andre Agassi and Andrei Vysand of the Soviet Union, was called because of rain and darkness.

The two young men, both clad in faded denim shorts and white shirts, were trading powerful ground strokes that whistled along the baselines.

No ball was abandoned as they ran down seemingly impossible shots for breathtaking exchanges, to the ooohs and oo-la-las of the crowd. Agassi was leading, 7-5, 5-2, when the match was called.

Mats Wilander's match against Slobodan Zivjovic of Yugoslavia was also called because of the rain.

Edberg of Sweden, seeded second, defeated a fellow Swede, Jan Gunnarsson, 6-3, 6-4, 7-6. Yannick Noah, seeded sixth, managed to shake off Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland in four challenging sets, 6-4, 6-4, 6-7, 6-3. With the vocal support of the home crowd, Noah sharpened his game and serve to take the final set. Emilio Sanchez of Spain, seeded 12th, used his boxer's footwork to run down the power game of Guy Forget of France, winning, 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4.

Navratilova, seeded second, beat Barbara Paulus of Austria in 54 minutes, 6-2, 6-2, although Navratilova described it as "a tough match." Paulus, she said, "is a better player than the ones I had had until now, so I had to play well."

Nicole Provis of Australia, ranked 53rd in the world, provided an upset late in the day, defeating seventh-seeded Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany, 1-6, 6-4, 7-5. It was a difficult match that lasted almost two hours. On the attack, the Kohde-Kilsch, 24, looked unbeatable in the first set, but her opponent turned the match into a baseline battle of attrition.

Moving back and forth from side to side, Kohde-Kilsch eventually started to wilt. The 18-year-old Provis, who prefers playing on clay, broke the West German at 5-5 in the final set, then breezed through the final game at love.

Martina Navratilova

Sukova defeated Mercedes Paz of Argentina, 6-4, 6-4.

People were waiting with excitement for Saturday's match between the 29-year-old John McEnroe and the tournament's youngest player, Michael Chang, 16, of Placentia, Calif.

Playing McEnroe at a Grand Slam event was something Chang said he used to "imagine in my head in my boyhood." In those dreams, he said, "I kill him of course."

"It's always one of those dramatic matches, 7-6 in the fifth," Chang continued. "I always come out with the great shots."

Chang, who turned professional last February, became interested in tennis through his father, whom he described as a "tennis nut." His parents came to the United States from Taiwan as college students. Chang was born in Hoboken, N.J., and grew up in the suburbs of Los Angeles. His father, a chemist, has provided most of his coaching. The teen-ager is looking for a full-time coach, and people are taking numbers.

One of Chang's hopes is to grow. He is 5 feet 8 inches and 131 pounds, the smallest player in the men's draw. "My parents are short; they're real short," he said. But he thinks he will top his older brother, who is two inches taller.

NEW YORK (AP) — Hall of Famer Ted Williams, who was the last man to hit .400 — Ted batted .406 for the Red Sox in 1941 — has always contended hitting a baseball is the most difficult thing in sports.

According to Discover Magazine, an average 90 mph pitch reaches the batter in just .41 of a second. A conclusion was drawn that a batter has slightly more than one-tenth of a second to decide whether he will swing at the pitch. Then, he still has to make contact.

Dublin Ohio's Rick Mears takes some pit practice in preparation for Sunday's running of the Indy 500.

Penske has front row seat

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS — When the gentlemen start their engines for the start of Sunday's Indy 500, the front row will look like a Penske team meeting.

Rick Mears on the pole, Danny Sullivan in the middle and Al Unser outside, represent the first team sweep of the front row in 72 Indy races. They are not surprised that Roger Penske's attention to detail created this small slice of racing history.

"In February, I was in Daytona and I called Rick, who was testing in Phoenix," Sullivan said Friday. "He said, 'We've got ourselves a race car.'"

The car is the Penske PC-17, designed by Nigel Bennett, who makes a living finetuning automobile technology. Unser calls it "a happy car," racing slang for a machine that handles well and responds to the driver.

"In a crowd, you can predict what it will do," Unser said. "There's leeway to play with. It's comfortable to depend on."

"The car just feels good," Sullivan said.

"You do what you want with it and it responds."

Unser won this race last year when he got a late ride from Penske as a replacement for injured Danny Ongais. That victory guaranteed him a ride this year and made the month of May less stressful for him.

"Mentally, it's a lot easier to come here with a ride," he said. "And starting from the front row makes it much nicer. So many things can happen in back."

Much of what happens in front depends on Mears, the pole sitter for the record-tying fourth time in 11 Indy races. He has won this event twice and came tantalizingly close in two other races, finishing second to Gordon Johncock in 1982 and third to Bobby Rahal in 1986. Mears has never so much as spun on this speedway, even in a practice run.

To Celtics fans, if Boston is struggling then Bird must be sick

By SAM GOLDAPER
New York Times News Service

BOSTON — A cabdriver outside Boston Garden said he had heard reports that Larry Bird had undergone tests for mononucleosis.

A bellhop at the hotel said, "Do you notice how tired Bird looks? I haven't seen him looking this way since the Celtics were swept by the Milwaukee Bucks in the 1983 conference semifinal."

What prompted such speculation among Celtic fans was Bird's second successive poor shooting performance Thursday night in the Eastern Conference final against the Detroit Pistons. Bird was 8-for-20 from the floor in Game 1 Wednesday night, and the Celtics suffered a rare home loss, 104-96. On Thursday, he shot 6 for 20, and the Celtics needed two overtimes to pull out a 119-115 victory and send the series to Detroit tied, 1-1.

Before the Celtics won, they set up Bird twice to try to win the game. Most times, Bird, one of the best clutch shooters in basketball, comes through. But he failed on a 17-foot jumper with 10 seconds remaining in regulation time and was called for traveling in the first overtime with the score tied, 109-109.

SO IT took a rare 3-point basket by Kevin McHale with five seconds remaining in the first overtime and 6 successive points by Dennis Johnson in the closing seconds of the second overtime to ball the Celtics out. The next two games will be played Saturday and Monday afternoons at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich., where the Celtics have an eight-game losing streak.

"I don't know what Larry's problem is," said K.C. Jones, the Celtic coach, after the game Thursday night. "His arm motion does not look familiar to me when he's firing it up."

Boston officials upset with Pistons

By JOHN KING
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — Boston airport officials threatened legal action Friday against the Detroit Pistons, saying the NBA team deliberately violated noise regulations when their jet took off from Logan International Airport after a playoff loss to the Boston Celtics.

"They try to intimidate you on the basketball court and they basically have the same attitude toward rules and regulations at the airport," said Patrick Moscaritolo, Logan's acting aviation director.

Airport regulations prohibit noisy jets from taking off from or landing at Logan between 11 p.m. and 6:45 a.m. The Pistons' plane, which took off at 12:30 a.m., was a BAC-111, "literally the noisiest jet in the skies today," Moscaritolo said.

deny any health problems. But Bird has never made excuses for poor games. After several poor-shooting games in the series against the Atlanta Hawks, Bird was repeatedly asked if he had a head cold. He denied it, although it was obvious that he had one.

When asked again Thursday night if anything was troubling him, Bird said: "I feel great. I played hard on the defensive end. I was just second-guessing my shots. I was getting my usual picks but I was thinking whether I should shoot or pass."

EVEN THOUGH the real Larry Bird has been missing for the last two games, the statistical Larry Bird has been around this postseason. His 47 percent shooting average in this year's playoffs equals that of his nine-year regular-season career. He shot 48 percent in the four-game series with the Knicks, averaging 28.1 points, and made 51 percent of his shots, averaging 26.4 points, in the seven games against the Hawks. He has scored 38 points in two games against the Pistons.

"Maybe it's because we're having trouble winning," said Jimmy Rodgers, the Celtic assistant coach, "that people are expecting more from Larry. But take tonight's game. So he shoots poorly and comes up with 12 rebounds, 8 assists and 3 blocked shots. Doesn't that count?"

Yet, the thinking among cabbies and bellhops is that if the Celtics are to get by the younger and deeper Pistons, they are going to have to get more points and heroics from Bird. They could easily have gone to Detroit down, 2-0, which Johnson said "seemed frightening several times during the game."

The Celtics are not going to get as lucky as they did when McHale tied the game at 109-109 with five seconds left in the first overtime on a 3-point basket off a pass to Bird that went awry. The 6-11 McHale gets his points inside and on short fallaway jumpers, not on 24-footers.

Legendary pilot prepares to pace brickyard

By GERALD ESKENAZI
New York Times News Service

INDIANAPOLIS — Chuck Yeager was strapped in, gunning the throttle, his narrow eyes seeing things that are hidden from most people.

The retired Air Force general, the first pilot to break the sound barrier, is a 65-year-old driver now. He was tooling an Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme around the track, practicing for his role Sunday as the pace-car driver in the Indianapolis 500.

It is demanding, he explained as he rehearsed looking in his rear-view mirror. It is not merely ceremonial, not at more than 100 miles an hour, and Yeager loves it.

In fact, he volunteered for the job again after driving the pace car in the 1986 running.

When the cars roar out of their last practice lap for the start of the race, Yeager will gun the Cutlass to 140 miles per hour — faster than the first 45 winners of the Indy — and head for the pits. No problem.

"I've had experience with an accelerator and the edge of performance," he said. "So doing this was only a question of learning something and what to do when."

On race morning, Yeager will meet for 45 minutes with the drivers in the first row: Rick Mears, Danny Sullivan and Al Unser Sr. "It's like a fighter wing," he said. "You have to go over contingency plans. They have to know what I'm going to do in certain situations."

As Yeager drove the open car around the track, he went through the turns and explained just what he'll be doing Sunday morning.

"You see the black marks on the track; that's where the cars put down rubber. Your inclination is to follow that. But I want to be in the middle of the track so that it looks good from the stands."

"After two warm-up laps I'll be hitting 110 miles an hour. I've already let the celebrities who go along for one lap get off. I'm wearing a headset and if it's OK, the tower will tell me to turn off the strobe — that's the lights we have on — and I'll cob it. That's fighter-pilot talk to hit it. When that strobe goes off, I go into Turn 3 and accelerate. Now they're starting to catch me. I'm watching them in the mirror. If they get to me before I get to the infield, they're going to run over me."

"Now we start picking it up to 140 miles an hour. The important thing is to know what's going on behind you. I know what's ahead."

He has a HUD on the windshield: a heads-up display that projects the speedometer onto the window so he won't have to take his eye off the road.

"We've had them in fighter planes for 15 years," said Yeager, who has logged more than 10,000 hours in fighter aircraft.

Now, approaching Turn 3, he said: "Up ahead there are three signs. I can see them. You can't. I've got extraordinary eyesight. And at this point I turn the strobes off, and they tell me from the tower, 'OK, it's a race.' I'm watching, and adjusting. I know where they are. I head for the yellow line."

The broken yellow line led him to the pit area and he eased into the pits.

"You've got to be careful when you come in, especially if something happens behind you on the track, because people are always running to see if something happens," he said.

"This is a mental track, a fine line track," Mears said, knocking wood when he was reminded of his success at Indy. "Maybe the track suits my style."

This will be Penske's 20th race at Indianapolis. His team won here in 1972 with Mark Donohue; 1979 and 1984 with Mears; 1981 with Bobby Unser; 1986 with Sullivan; and last year with Al Unser.

"Roger goes after it first class," Unser said. "If there's a weak link in the stable, he'll replace it. He wants to be competitive. He's a determined man who wants to run up front and tries to win. Others get sick of it and they want to outrun him. That's good."

Sullivan said other teams have to take note of the Penske success here.

Irwin takes slim lead at Memorial Open

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
New York Times News Service

DUBLIN, Ohio — Hale Irwin, who won the 1983 and 1985 Memorial Tournaments at the Muirfield Village Golf Club and finished second in a playoff with Roger Maltbie at the first Memorial in 1976, said Friday he did not have a love affair with this 7,104-yard course.

"It's not a love affair," Irwin said. "You could call it a like affair. I just like this kind of course just as I like and do better on the difficult courses."

Like it or love it, the 42-year-old Irwin skillfully handled this magnificent but dangerous course to shoot a four-under-par 68 and take the second round lead in the Memorial by a stroke over Tom Kite, David Frost and John Huston, a rookie.

With an unusual birdie 3 when he holed out with a wedge from 105 yards at the 14th hole, Irwin got his two-round total down to six-under 138.

"Certainly in that instance I picked up one or two strokes," Irwin said. "But I go back to the fact that difficult courses in the past seem to bring out the best golf in me. We're seeing a different course than it was five or six years ago. The greens are very firm."

KITE, WHOSE 70 got him within a stroke of that lead, said, "It's certainly not the same course we had for the Memorial in the last two years."

Both men compared the much softer greens of recent Memorials with the hard surfaces this year caused by near-drought conditions in this region of Ohio: bright sun and wind for the last three days that have dried out the greens and conditioning designed to make fast putting.

Jack Nicklaus's Muirfield Village Golf Club has not been nearly as trying a test since the first two or three years of its existence in the late 1970s.

Recent Memorials have been dart-throwing contests by comparison because heavy rains softened the greens at the time of the Memorial in those years. Approach shots Friday were generally aimed to the front of greens in hopes the ball would roll toward the pin and stop in the vicinity. No one shot directly at the stick with much hope of back-spinning balls to a halt by the flag.

Scott Hoch set a 36-hole record score of 131 on the dartboard course last year. Kite, who has scored 69-70 — 139 this year to be a stroke back of the lead, shot the same first two rounds of 69 and 70 last year and was eight strokes off the halfway lead on the much softer track.

LANNY WADKINS had no trouble with the trying conditions Friday as he shot the low second round of 66. But that came after his 79 of Thursday so he was still at one over par 145 at the midway point.

The field was cut to those who shot 149 or better, three shots higher than the cut in 1987 and 1986. Nicklaus failed to make the cut by one stroke, marking the first time in the 13 Memorial Tournaments he has not played four rounds of his own tourney. It also postponed his chance to become the first golfer to earn $5 million on the PGA Tour. He is $2,450 short of $5 million on tour.

Tom Watson also failed to advance, shooting 152.

Charles goes ahead before rains fall

ALBUQUERQUE — Defending champion Bob Charles fired a 3-under-par 69 Friday to move into a five-way tie for the lead after the first round at the $275,000 Sunwest Bank Senior PGA Tour tournament.

The tightly-bunched field had 14 players within two shots of the lead heading into Saturday's second round of the 54-hole event.

Most of the low scores were posted before thunder, lightning and rain forced a 50-minute suspension of play. Player still on the course when conditions worsened generally struggled home in the wind and wet conditions.

Charles, a left-hander from New Zealand who earned his first Senior Tour victory this year by winning last week's Commemorative Tournament outside New York, had four birdies and one bogey over the par-72, 6,722-yard Four Hills Country Club course.

Charles, 71, in money winnings a year ago, was joined at 69 by the foursome of Orville Moody, Australian Peter Thomson, Ben Smith and Lou Graham.

Most of the leaders complained about the bumpy Four Hills greens.

"These greens are awfully tough to putt, but everyone is missing short putts," Charles said. "If I had had last week's greens here, it would have been a 63 or 64."

Charles earned his share of the lead with three birdies on the back nine.

Moody, who finished just before play was halted, played the day's steadiest round with three birdies and no bogeys.

Thomson birdied two of the first five holes and four in a row on the back nine before finishing bogey-bogey to lose sole possession of the lead. Thomson birdied Nos. 13 through 16 to go 5-under before coming back to the pack with closing bogeys on the par-3 17th and tough 427-yard par-4 18th.

Smith, a former auto mechanic who joined the Senior Tour four years ago, birdied four of the last six holes to get a share of the top spot. He struggled early in the round, but turned it around with an eagle on the par-5 fourth hole, where he holed out a 25-foot chip.

Birdies sing sweet song for Korean

By JOHN F. BONFATTI

CORNING, N.Y. — Korea's Ok-Hee Ku had nine birdies Friday to take a one-stroke lead over hot-shooting Sherri Turner after the second round of the $325,000 LPGA Corning Classic.

Ku, who has 15 birdies in the first two days of the tournament, finished with an 8-under 64 for a two-round total of 11-under 133 — the best 36-hole score in the 10 years of the tournament.

Ku, who opened the tournament with a 3-under 69, earned her first LPGA victory two months ago by winning the Turquoise Classic.

She speaks little English and an interpreter was not available, but Ku did say she had "a very good feeling today."

HER AFTERNOON charge into the lead overshadowed a remarkable round for Turner, who came within a shot of tying the LPGA's all-time best round with a 9-under 63.

Turner opened with a par before making six straight birdies. She added four more birdies on the back nine before three-putting on the 17th for her only bogey.

Her 63 — one shot short of the single-round record of 62 held by Mickey Wright and Vicki Ferguson — tied Patty Sheehan's single-round record for the tournament. Turner's two-round total is 10-under 134.

"It's hard to explain what happened because I was just kind of out there today," said Turner, a fifth-year pro who captured her first tournament victory last week by winning the LPGA Championship, the second of this year's four majors.

"I didn't really even start thinking about what was going on until I almost finished."

SHEEHAN, WHO shared the first-round lead with Sherri Steinhilber at 67, fired a 2-under 70 and was one stroke behind Turner at 7-under 137.

Rosie Jones and Betsy King were tied for fourth at 138, followed by

LPGA

Kathryn Young and Patty Rizzo at 139.

Ku had only 27 putts during her round and sank four 13-footers for birdies. The round was her best since coming in America in 1986.

Sheehan offset two bogeys and a double bogey with six birdies on the 6,062-yard Corning Country Club course. She was the leader among the early finishers, but predicted her score wasn't good enough to stay on top.

"I guess I could say I'm real fortunate to be where I am after the round I had," said Sheehan. "I don't think 7-under is going to be leading after the day's over but if it is, I'm lucky to be there."

Steinhilber shot a 3-over 75 to drop to 2-under 142.

Cathy Morse and Lauri Peterson, who shared second place going into the round, both shot 73s Friday to drop to 3-under 141, along with Jerilyn Britz and Jan Stephenson.

Rangers hand Royals another loss

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jose Guzman pitched a seven-hitter Friday night and the Texas Rangers beat Kansas City 3-2, the Royals' sixth straight loss.

Guzman, 5-3, struck out seven and walked four in his third complete game. Floyd Bannister, 6-4, took the loss for the Royals, who have dropped 12 of their last 14 home games.

Mike Stanley's two-run double broke a scoreless tie in the sixth inning. Bannister had allowed only two hits through five innings before Scott Fletcher and Ruben Sierra hit one-out singles. Stanley followed with a drive that caromed off third baseman Kevin Seitzer's glove and went down the left-field line.

The Royals scored in the bottom of the sixth inning on consecutive doubles by Seitzer and Bill Buckner. Frank White followed with a single, but left fielder Pete Incaviglia easily threw out Buckner at the plate to end the inning.

Jerry Browne tripled with one out in the seventh and scored on Fletcher's single off reliever Gene Garber for a 3-1 lead.

Danny Tartabull tripled with one out in the Kansas City eighth and scored when Seitzer reached on Guzman's error.

Kansas City had loaded the bases in the fifth inning with one out on a single and a pair of walks, but Willie Wilson popped out and George Brett grounded out.

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 3

TORONTO — Pinch hitter Juan Beniquez and Nelson Liriano hit run-scoring singles in the ninth inning, rallying the Toronto Blue Jays over the Chicago White Sox.

Fred McGriff met reliever Rick Horton with a single to open the ninth and advanced on a sacrifice. Bobby Thigpen replaced Horton and Beniquez singled, making it 3-3. After Lloyd Moseby walked, Liriano singled to right-center field.

Duane Ward, 1-0, went 2-3 in innings for the victory. Thigpen, 1-5, took the loss.

The White Sox lost for the 10th time in 11 games. Toronto has two of its last six.

Jeff Bittiger, 1-1, gave up two runs on six hits in six-plus innings. Bobby Thigpen, the fourth Chicago pitcher, got the final two outs for his eighth save.

Mike Flanagan, 4-4, retired the first nine batters before Gary Redus opened the fourth with his first home run of the season, Chicago's first homer since May 17.

The White Sox went ahead 2-1 in the fifth when Ozzie Guillen doubled with two outs and scored on Steve Lyons' single.

Ivan Calderon hit a routine fly ball to lead off the seventh but right fielder Rick Leach did not see it. The ball landed 20 yards behind Leach and rolled to the fence as Calderon circled the bases.

Bittiger walked McGriff and Ernie Whitt to start the seventh. Rick Leach failed to sacrifice, then hit an RBI single that made it 3-2. Long relieved and retired pinch hitter Moseby on a fly and struck out Liriano struck out as Whitt was thrown out trying to steal third.

Tony Fernandez hit an RBI double in the Toronto third.

Indians 6, Brewers 3

CLEVELAND — Joe Carter hit a solo home run and sacrifice fly as the Cleveland Indians beat the Milwaukee Brewers.

The victory was the Indians' third straight and eighth in the last 10 games, putting them 14 games over .500 for the first time since July 1986. The Brewers lost their third in a row.

Scott Bailes, 4-4, gave up six hits in eight-plus innings. He issued his lone walk to start the ninth and Doug Jones relieved for his 10th save.

Julio Franco started Cleveland's two-run first inning with a leadoff single that extended his hitting streak to 15 games, longest current string in the majors. Willie Upshaw then tripled home Franco and scored on Carter's sacrifice fly off Mike Birkbeck, 2-4.

Twins 7, Tigers 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Frank Viola won his eighth straight game and Kent Hrbek hit his major league-leading 12th home run Friday night as the Minnesota Twins beat the Detroit Tigers 7-1 for their sixth consecutive victory.

Viola, 8-1, won his 14th straight decision at the Metrodome in 19 starts since last May 22. He gave up one run on eight hits in seven innings and struck out eight.

Jack Morris, 4-6, lasted only 5-2-3 innings. He had won his previous eight regular-season decisions in Minnesota.

Western Carolina second-baseman Rob Gordon applies the tag to Aggie runner Scott Livingstone.

Aggies get lucky

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Mike Easley and Chuck Knoblauch each homered to highlight a five-run fourth inning as top-seeded Texas A&M avoided an early exit with an 8-6 victory in the NCAA South Regional baseball tournament Friday afternoon.

Third-seeded Cal-State Fullerton and fourth-seeded Mississippi were scheduled to play in the final opening-round game of the double-elimination tournament Friday night. Texas A&M lost its opening round game, 3-1, to Middle Tennessee State Thursday.

Western Carolina took a 4-2 lead with a four-run rally in the top of the fourth inning, paced by doubles from Mark Poarch and Robert Gordon.

In the bottom of the inning, Easley drove in two runs with his homer, and Chuck Knoblauch put the Aggies ahead, 7-2, with his three-run clout.

Nick Felix, a last-minute replacement for scheduled starter Fred Riscen, earned the win, striking out 10 to raise his record to 9-6.

NCAA Baseball

Loyola 8, Arkansas 3

STILLWATER, Okla. — Don Sparks drove in four runs with three hits, including a home run, as third-seeded Loyola, Calif., beat Arkansas in the first round of the Midwest Regional.

Sparks had a two-run double in the Lions' four-run first inning, then added a two-run homer in the fifth. He also had a single.

Travis Tarchione added three hits including an RBI single in the first for Loyola, 47-16. The Lions had 12 hits in the game.

Arkansas, 39-22, got two solo homers from Greg D'Alejandro, one in the second inning and another in the seventh. Troy Eklund drove in the Razorbacks' final run with a single in the eighth.

D'Alejandro and Eklund led Arkansas' seven-hit attack with two hits apiece.

Dave Righetti rides a rough road

By MIKE GEFFNER

For The Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Righetti, the New York Yankees' No. 1 reliever since 1984, might still be wondering whether he should've signed this winter with the Tokyo Giants.

His manager, Billy Martin, didn't pitch him for an 11-day stretch in May. The New York crowds booed him. Garbage was thrown on him. And the hate mail was flowing in at a disturbing rate.

All because he blew four straight save chances.

Things have improved recently. He got five saves in a row and lowered his earned run average to 2.05.

The pains of his problems, however, are still fresh.

"It's terrible," he said last week, shaking his head. "Lately, I've walked with my head down in the bullpen — not because I'm embarrassed with the way I've pitched but because I don't want to get hit with anything in the face."

Righetti, sitting by his corner locker in the Yankees clubhouse, talked with restrained emotion about a rocky start to the season. But, as bad as things have gone, he said he's not ready yet to throw a baseball 300 feet over an outfield wall, as he did at Toronto's Exhibition Stadium in June of his record-setting 1986 season.

"I haven't been very happy," said Righetti, whose 46 saves two seasons ago were a major-league record. "I've been lost. I've felt like I wasn't even part of the team at times. I wouldn't say I've been depressed but I've not been in the mood to do a lot after games. When you've done what I've done this year, you tend to not want to do anything. You don't want to go out for dinner, or go to a movie, or even go to the grocery store."

Righetti saved just six games in his first 11 appearances, allowing 16 hits and two homers in 17 1/3 innings. After blowing his fourth consecutive save opportunity (the Yankees lost two of those games), he disappeared from May 3 until May 14, the result of being the cold hand playing for a hot-hand manager.

The last time Righetti sat out for so long, he was on the disabled list. "You're only as good as your last game," he said. "The longer I didn't pitch, the more anxiety I felt. It felt like a month. I just wanted to get out there and do something positive."

Martin went to two right-handers, Cecilio Guante and Charles Hudson, as his late-inning stoppers, while maintaining all along that "Rags is still my main man."

"It was heart-wrenching to watch him," said bullpen coach Jeff Torborg. "You could see his disappointment every time he didn't get the call. This is a guy who wants the ball when it counts."

The speculation began quickly that something was wrong with Righetti. Martin maintained he was resting Righetti because of a tired arm, although Righetti said he felt fine.

Chaps hope to finish fourth

From Staff Reports

TYLER — Trying to keep their heads above water after Thursday's catastrophe, the Midland College tennis team placed two singles players in the National Junior College Athletic Association championship, to be played today at Tyler. The Chaps lost a three-set heartbreaker in their remaining doubles match Friday, and they will likely finish fourth in 1988 tournament following when play concludes today.

Two South Carolina teams — North Greenville, with 32 points, and Anderson JC, with 30 — are still contending for the national title. Host Tyler is third with 29.

Midland is currently fourth, with 26, going into the championship round. The Chaps only hope is to overtake Tyler for third. They also have to watch their heels, though, as Abraham Baldwin JC (Ga.) trails MC by only one point.

Midland's No. 2 singles player,

Gilles Ameline, needed two tough sets to defeat Scott Stewart of Tyler 7-5, 7-5, in one of the semifinal matches. Ameline broke strings in two of his racquets, and the butt-plate came off his third. He was forced to finish the match with a racquet borrowed from roommate, Johan Dysholm.

Ameline will play Harouo Nakano of North Greenville today in the singles championship.

Midland's No. 6 single, Robert Antoun, defeated Peter Hagar of Palm Beach Fla., 5-7, 6-4, 6-2, and will face No. 1 tournament seed Rene Gomez of North Greenville in the finals.

The Chapparals No. 1 doubles duo, Johan Dysholm and Luke O'Loughlin, lost to Strandeus-Ruiz, of Abraham Baldwin, 6-2, 4-6, 7-6, (7-2) in their semifinal match-up.

Plenty of castoffs performing well in the majors

By PHIL COLLIER
Copley News Service

It's no wonder some major-league teams are reluctant, if not downright afraid, to make trades or drop players. All too often, the moves blow up in their faces.

The Angels dropped veteran Bill Buckner recently, and he responded by hitting two homers in one game after being picked up by Kansas City.

The struggling Atlanta Braves, sorely lacking in pitching, let veteran right-handed reliever Gene Garber, now 40, go to Kansas City on Aug. 30, only to watch him convert 14 successive save opportunities before the two-year streak finally was broken.

The San Diego Padres let utility man Luis Salazar become a free agent last winter. He hooked on with Detroit and was batting .365 (31-for-85) through May 20. And was third among the Tigers in homers (five) and RBI (15). Salazar has played first, second, short, third and left field this spring and has committed only one error.

"I'M NOT exaggerating," said Manager Sparky Anderson, who is known for overstatement, "but without Salazar, we'd probably be under .500."

The Padres waited five years for some production out of Ray Hayward, the left-hander they chose in the first round of the 1983 June draft. He had persistent arm problems, went 0-2 with an 11.81 earned-run average in his brief San Diego trials and was traded last winter to the Cubs. They dealt Hayward to the Rangers for two minor-league players after injuries kept him from pitching in spring training. Called up from Oklahoma City on May 3, Hayward was 3-0 with a 1.63 ERA, allowing only five earned runs in his first 27 2/3 innings of American League competition through May 20.

"When the Rangers brought me up, they said I'd get a long look," Hayward said. "It's nice to know you don't have to throw a no-hitter every time out to stay in the major leagues. That takes the pressure off."

The Padres are operating this season without a left-hander in their rotation.

THE ANGELS and Padres aren't alone in their mistakes.

Tom Candiotti, 6-1 with six complete games for Cleveland, is a right-handed knuckleballer who has won 29 games in the two and a fraction seasons since Milwaukee gave up on him in 1985. Dave Stewart, off to an 8-2 start with Oakland after going 20-13 in 1987, was released by the Phillies two years ago and was traded away by the Dodgers in 1983.

The Angels need time to rebuild their pitching staff after disposing of four aged veterans after a combined 12-8 through May 20.

Finally ... some homers at Wrigley

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Greg Maddux and Rich Gossage combined on a five-hitter Friday and Jody Davis and Rafael Palmeiro hit the first Chicago home runs at Wrigley Field in 97 innings as the Cubs beat the Houston Astros 3-2.

Maddux, 8-3, allowed four hits, struck out five and walked two as he tied Dwight Gooden for the most wins in the National League. Gossage, who relieved in the ninth with none out and runners on first and second, allowed a two-out RBI single to Kevin Bass, but then retired Jim Pankovits on a groundout to earn his sixth save.

Houston took a 1-0 lead in the fifth when Pankovits doubled, the Astros' first hit of the game, and Rafael Ramirez singled him home. Palmeiro's homer, his third, tied the game in the bottom half of the inning. The hit came on a 1-1 pitch from Danny Darwin, 2-4, and was the Cubs' first home run at home since May 8 when Vance Law homered.

Davis hit his fourth homer in the sixth inning and his fifth off reliever Larry Andersen in the eighth.

NL Roundup

Cardinals 5, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Bob Horner's sacrifice fly broke a 2-2 tie in the eighth inning and pinch hitter Tom Pagnozzi followed with an RBI single as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Atlanta Braves.

The loss spoiled the home debut of Russ Nixon, who replaced Chuck Tanner as manager of the Braves on Sunday night.

Tom Brunansky started the Cardinals' eighth with a single off reliever Jose Alvarez, 0-1, and went to third on Terry Pendleton's single. Horner, who spent nine seasons with the Braves and was making his first appearance in Atlanta since 1966, drove in Brunansky with a fly to deep left.

Brunansky took second on Tony Pena's grounder and, after Luis Alcega was intentionally walked, Curt Ford batted for pitcher Steve Peters. Paul Assenmacher relieved Alvarez and Pagnozzi batted for Ford and hit a run-scoring single.

The Cardinals added a run off Juan Eichelberger in the ninth.

Phillies 5, Giants 2

PHILADELPHIA — Kevin Gross blanked San Francisco until the eighth inning and Lance Parrish homered as the Philadelphia Phillies snapped a four-game losing streak.

Loser Kelly Downs, 2-5, retired the first 11 Philadelphia batters, striking out five, before Parrish hit a 1-2 pitch for his eighth home run of the season.

Padres 2, Mets 0

NEW YORK — Mark Grant, winless in his four previous decisions, and Mark Davis combined on a four-hitter as the San Diego Padres beat the Mets.

The Mets became the last National League team to be shut out this season.

Grant, 1-4, hadn't won since pitching his only career shutout against Atlanta last September. He allowed three hits, struck out four and walked three in 6 2-3 innings as the Padres snapped an eight-game road losing streak. The Padres also had dropped eight straight to the Mets, including four in San Diego earlier this month.

Reds 5, Pirates 3

CINCINNATI — Jeff Treadway hit two run-scoring doubles as the Cincinnati Reds defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates.

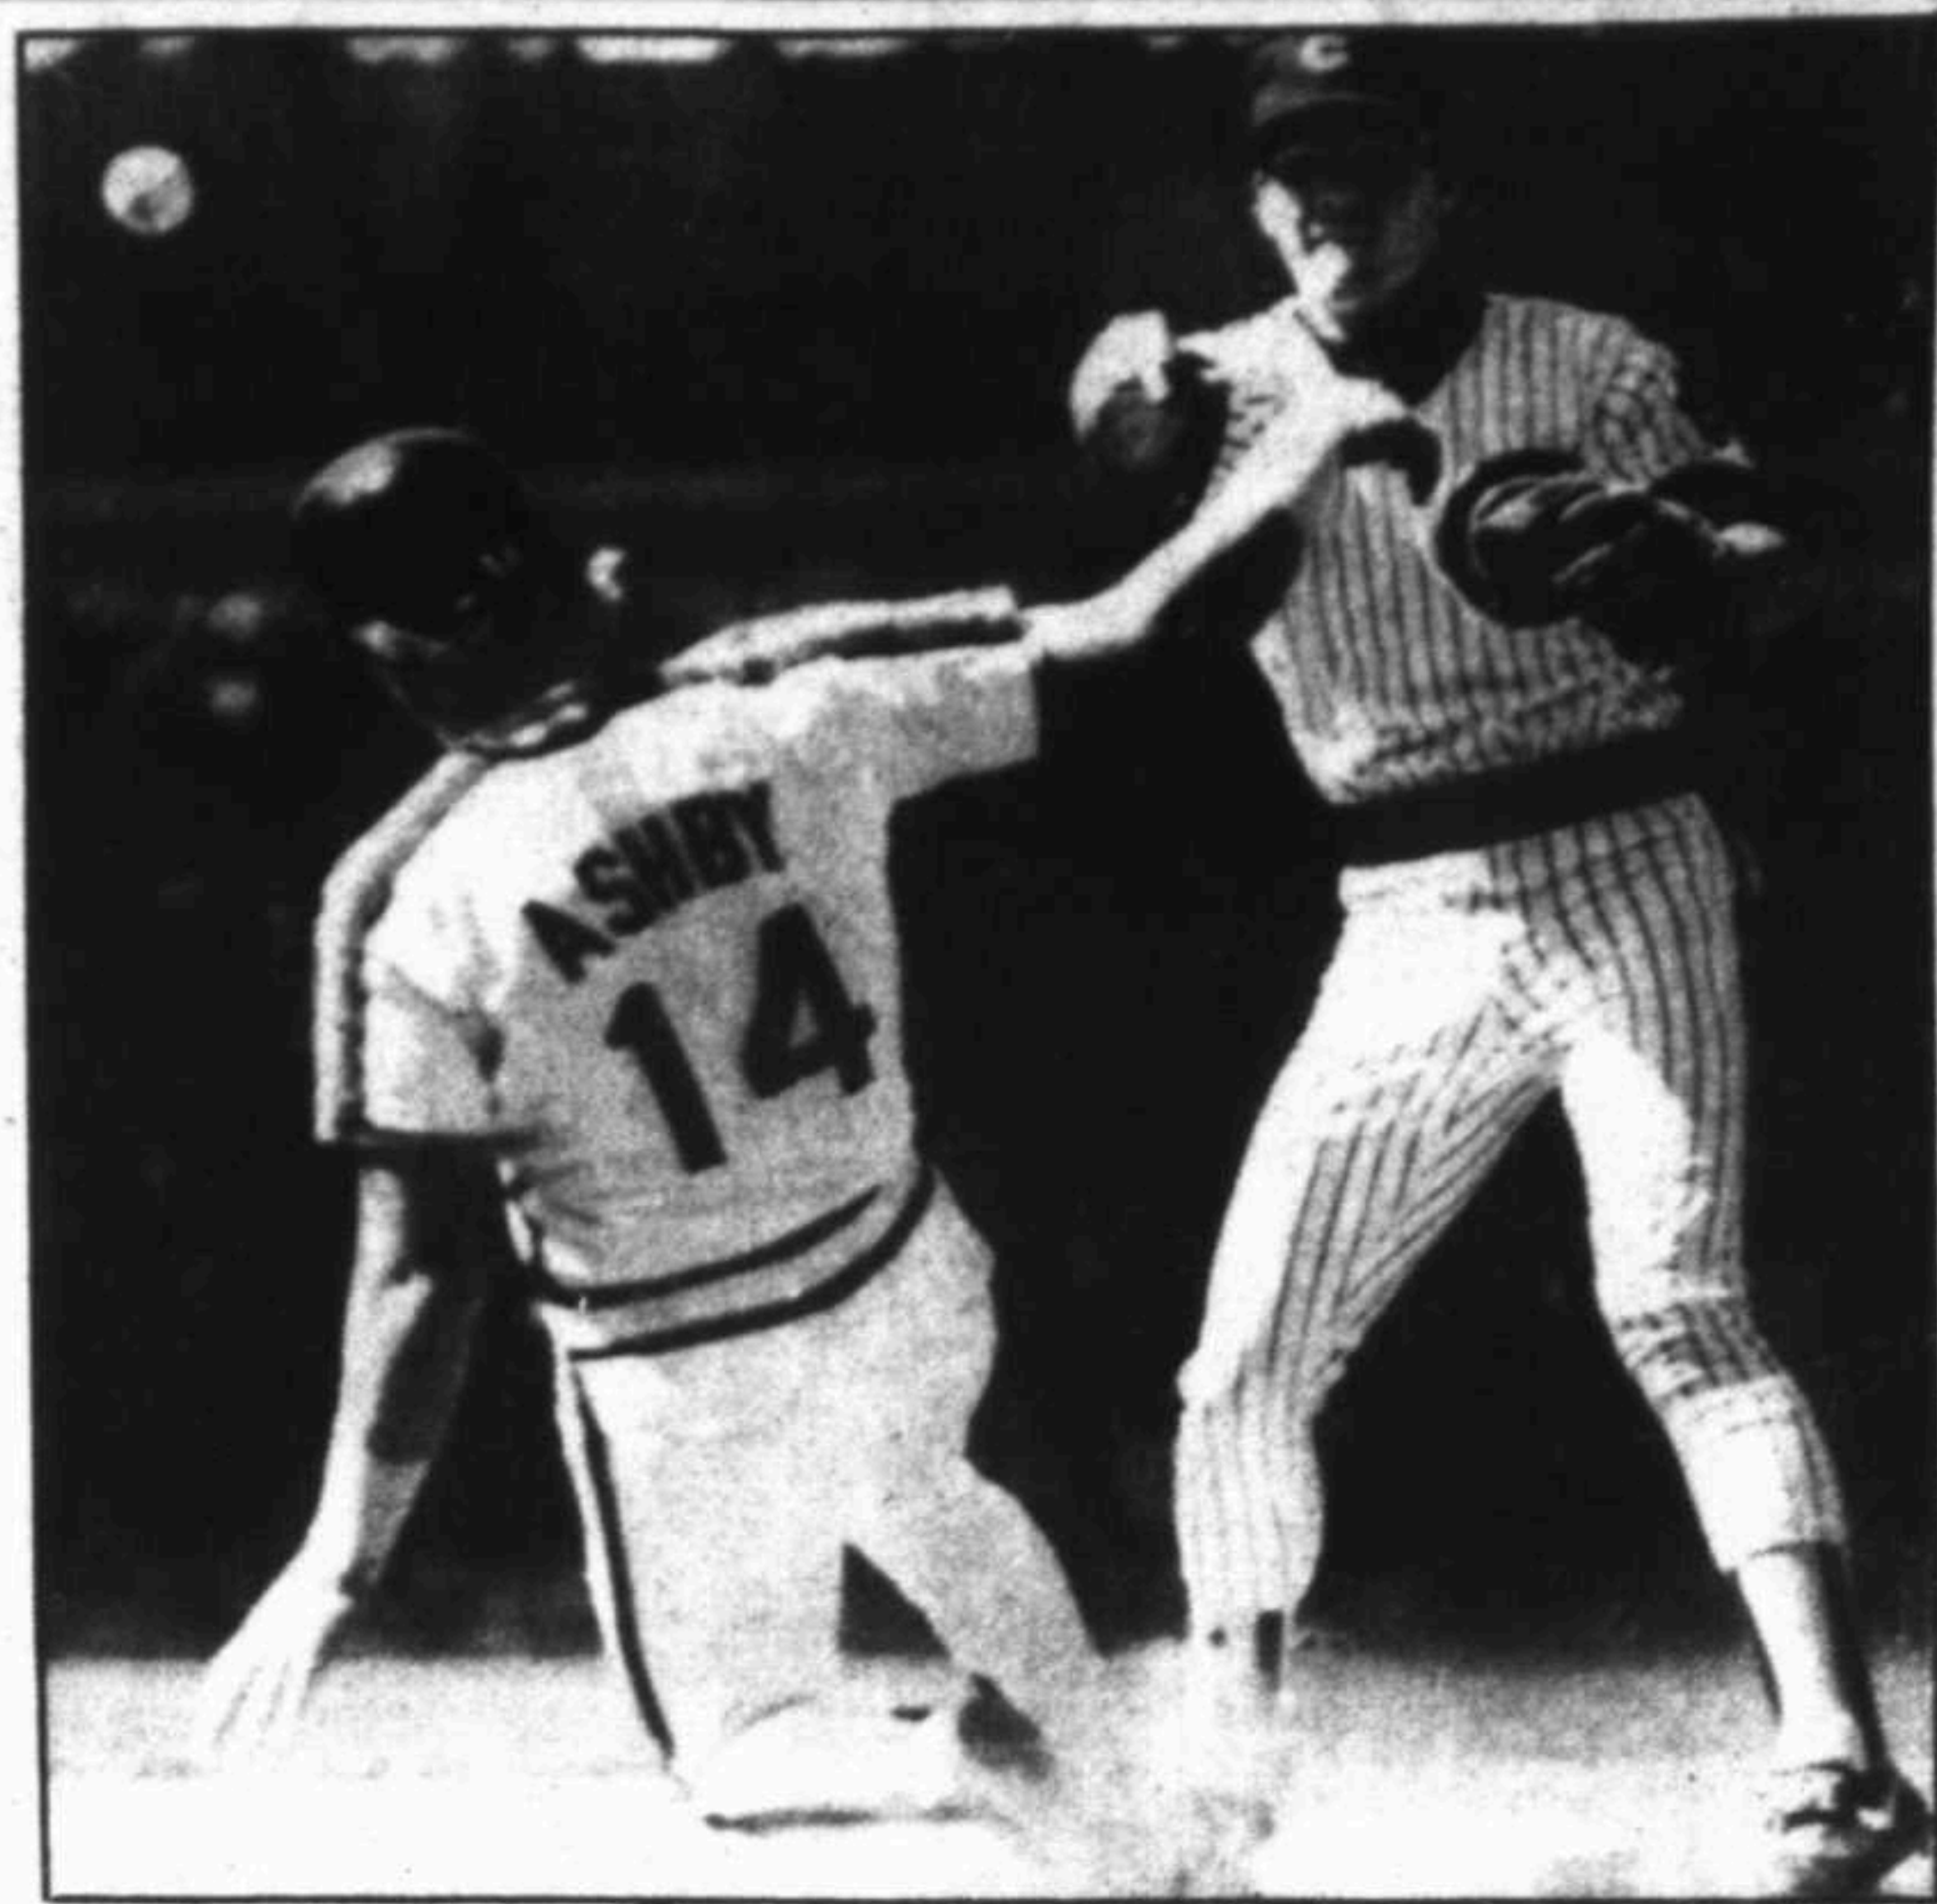

Pat Pacillo, 1-0, who pitched a scoreless fifth inning after starter Danny Jackson pulled his left hamstring running to first on a bunt, got the victory and Rob Murphy and John Franco each went two innings. Murphy allowed the three Pittsburgh runs and Franco pitched two hitless innings for his sixth save.

Doubles by Paul O'Neill and Treadway gave the Reds a 1-0 lead in the second inning off Brian Fisher, 4-1, who allowed four runs and eight hits in 5 1-3 innings.

Dodgers 5, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Kirk Gibson's single broke a 1-1 tie in the eighth inning and he doubled a run home in a three-run ninth as the Los Angeles Dodgers won their fourth straight game.

Tim Lincecum of the Dodgers and Floyd Youmans of the Expos were locked in a scoreless duel until the seventh inning when the Dodgers took a 1-0 lead on singles by John Shelby and Mike Scioscia plus Dave Anderson's sacrifice fly.

Houston's Alan Ashby is forced at second during the Cubs' 3-2 victory Friday.

The problem with really good baseball movies? There aren't many

By ALLEN BARRA
Copley News Service

All the prerelease publicity for "Eight Men Out" and "Bull Durham" — both of which are being called the best baseball movies ever made (but then again, so was "The Natural" before release) — has sparked a brand-new chorus of "Why aren't there more good baseball movies?" They should simply ask: "Why aren't there more good movies?" There's no indication that baseball movies are any worse than other kinds of movies. Bert Sugar, "The Isaac Asimov of Sports," tells us that 37 movies have been made that feature baseball prominently.

Using expertise derived partly from film critic Pauline Kael and partly from baseball "Sabermetrician" Bill James, we'll call our method "Cinemetrics." We've selected 10 — nine, plus one designated hitter — that won't displace anyone's All Star team.

"Bang the Drum Slowly" (1973, John Hancock) The excellent reputation enjoyed by this adaptation of Mark Harris' novel puzzles us. Its premise (which probably seemed valid in the late '50s when the book was popular and when a crumbling inner-city environment and declining attendance helped move the Brooklyn Dodgers and New York Giants out of New York) is that baseball was a dying game.

Robert DeNiro's hayseed catcher, dying of Hodgkin's disease, walks around drooling tobacco juice and generally acting more doltish than Lenny Dykstra. But Michael Moriarty, in perhaps the last role where he wasn't playing to the 18 people from his acting class, does a surprisingly accurate turn as a slick right-hander who reads catchers' signs with one eye and counts the paid attendance with the other (had to be modeled on Tom Seaver). Moved up half a notch for some excellent baseball scenes. (B)

"Fear Strikes Out" (1957, Robert Mulligan) Excellent film biography of Jimmy Piersall, the pressures that led him to the big leagues and, finally, to a nervous breakdown. The way Karl Malden drives poor Anthony Perkins, you wouldn't have been surprised if the kid quit the game and took up hotel management, or something. (B+)

"The Natural" (1984, Barry Levinson) After a second look, it's not as bad as we initially thought. It's just that Robert Redford so completely distorted the point of Bernard Malamud's novel that you wonder what drew him to it in the first place. Best cast (Redford, Glenn Close, Robert Duvall, Kim Bas-singer, Wilford Brimley, Darren McGavin, Richard Farnsworth) assembled for a baseball movie since "Safe at Home" (1961, Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris, William Frawley).

You know a baseball movie is on the wrong track when they hire Rick Cerone as technical adviser (wasn't Dave Kingman available?). Baseball is portrayed as a home run derby with seven faceless fielders standing around waiting for someone to strike out or hit the ball over their heads — sort of like watching baseball at Fenway Park. One unadulterated gem: Joe Don Baker is right down the middle with his portrayal of "The Whammer," the best celluloid impression of Babe Ruth ever. (B)

"The Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars and Motor Kings" (1976, John Badham)

For some reason — probably because it's about the largely unheralded Negro barnstorming teams, which even rabid baseball fans know little about — this movie almost never gets mentioned when good baseball movies are discussed (Vic Ziegler, who really ought to know better, recently did a piece for Premiere on Hollywood and baseball that never mentioned it).

But it's just one of three or four best baseball movies ever, full of color, humor and period (pre-World War II) atmosphere. In his first and best film, John Badham (who grew up just a couple miles from the most historic site of Negro League baseball, Birmingham's Rickwood Field), got terrific performances from Billy Dee Williams, James Earl Jones, and Richard Pryor as a Mo-hawk-coiffed infielder trying to crack the big leagues as an Indian. (A)

"Casey At the Bat" (1927, Ford Stirling)

It's probably not fair to include this silent film version of the poem; we can't find anyone who has a copy and we can't even find it listed in catalogs. But damn, though we haven't seen it in almost a quarter of a century, we know it exists and that it stars Zasu Pitts and Wallace Beery, who plays the immortal Casey as a kind of road-show carnival version of Babe Ruth. Note to Bob Costas: Surely you could get someone to dig this out of some library in time for a pre-All Star Game or World Series show? (A)

"College" (1927, James Horne)

One of Buster Keaton's best and least discussed silents. As a college egghead determined to be a jock, Keaton did all his own stunts except a pole-vaulting sequence. The baseball sequences are, predictably, the funniest ever filmed. (A)

ANGELS

The game was marred by a beaning incident when Jackson starter Kyle Hershorn hit Angel third baseman Jeff Manto in the eye with a pitch.

Manto, who is believed not to have suffered any long-term injuries, was taken from the game to receive stitches on the injured eye.

Angel manager Max Oliveras, was visibly unhappy with the pitch that struck Manto.

"Only the pitcher knows if he threw at him or not," Oliveras said. "If he did, he's messing with a guy's career."

Jackson connected for five extra bases hits, including four doubles. Shipley's homer was his fifth of the season.

Second Game

Conley, 2-1, bamboozled the Angels in his second start in 15 appearances this season. The 26-year-old veteran allowed only five hits, walked three and struck out with all my pitches," Conley said. "In this park, you need that or you'll get hit."

The Angels loaded the bases on Conley in the first inning on two walks and a single, but Conley induced Jesus Alfaro to fly to center to end the threat.

Midland left two runners on base in both the fourth and sixth innings, but Conley worked out of trouble both times.

Angels starter Todd Eggertsen, 3-5, shut out the Mets for three innings but Shipley got Jackson started in the fourth with a triple. Kurt DeLuca then smashed his third double of the night to score Shipley and pick up his first RBI since April 12. The Mets then got consecutive runs on an error by Craig Gerber and a groundout.

The Mets added two runs in the fifth to seal the win.

Mets full on farm

The Mets are so well-stocked with young minor-league prospects and in such good shape at the major-league level that it's believed they will try to put together an attractive package deal for one of the Padres' prize farmhands, Las Vegas catcher Sandy Alomar Jr., as an eventual successor to 34-year-old Gary Carter.

PISTONS

Moscaritolo said airport officials were preparing to file a criminal complaint against the team in District Court. He said the Pistons would first have an opportunity to explain whether there was an emergency or other factor that justified the takeoff.

"But I doubt they'll be able to do that," Moscaritolo said. "We are compiling documentation that shows they checked out of their hotel and came to the airport despite the late hour. The intent was clear. This is just typical of the Pistons' slam-dunk attitude."

Violating the noise regulations carries fines up to $10,000, although the fine for first offenses generally is $300, airport officials said. Moscaritolo said it could take up to two weeks to compile the evidence necessary to seek a complaint.

The air traffic control tower at the airport is not involved in enforcing the noise regulations and cleared the Pistons' plane for takeoff, Moscaritolo said.

Coffee house focuses on disarmament

NEW YORK — Discussions of issues surrounding disarmament are planned when Plowshare Coffee House opens Tuesday in the United Methodist-owned church center for the United Nations here.

The coffee house, which will continue through June 24, coincides with the United Nations' third special session on disarmament, according to Mia Adjali, executive secretary for UN/International Affairs for the Women's Division of the United Methodist Board of Global Ministries.

As one of eight co-sponsors of the coffee house, the Women's Division "made the space available for the volunteers to put together the program," she said.

The second floor coffee hours will be open between the hours of 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays. Food will be available, and the program will offer briefings, films, discussions and arts-related events.

The agenda of the UN special session includes a review of the current international situation regarding the arms race; consideration of a comprehensive disarmament program, including an extension of the test ban treaty; and discussion of the UN role in this process.

The coffee house program will link disarmament with other issues, such as Third World development and racism, said the Rev. David Schilling, a United Methodist minister who is national program coordinator for the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Eudaly to present concert

Jean Eudaly will present a concert of sacred and contemporary gospel music at First Baptist Church, 2104 Louisiana Ave., at 7 p.m. Sunday.

Mrs. Eudaly, the daughter-in-law of Dr. and Mrs. Hoyt Eudaly of Midland, lives in Fort Worth with her husband Nate.

"She has been a Christian since the fall of 1975, when she surrendered her heart and her musical talent to the Lord after having been involved in secular theater and music endeavors for several years," says a news release from First Baptist Church.

Mrs. Eudaly was involved in staff leadership in the music department of a church in Fort Worth for seven years, assisting in choral direction, ensemble work and solo ministry.

She has ministered on radio and television, including four years as co-host with Paul Dillen on the "Ordinary People" radio show on KTVT-Radio in Dallas.

In the spring of 1984, Mrs. Eudaly recorded a solo album "Great is the Lord."

Mrs. Eudaly sings for civic groups, in churches.

In 1986, she sang for the Annual Prayer Breakfast in honor of Israel, sponsored by the Religious Roundtable. The event was held in Washington, D.C., in conjunction with the National Religious Broadcasters Convention.

Jean Eudaly

She has sung in seminars and meetings featuring such Christian leaders as Tim LaHaye, Dave Wilderson and Pat Robertson.

The Rev. Daniel Vestal, pastor of First Baptist Church, invites the public to attend this free concert.

Covenant Players Playhouse to perform at local church

First Christian Church will be hosting the Covenant Players Playhouse at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the church sanctuary, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave.

"The Covenant Players will present a myriad of insightful plays pertaining to 'The Family in Relationships,'" says a news release from the church. "These short plays will encompass all aspects of family life and should be pertinent to singles, single parent families, two parent families and grandparents."

The Covenant Players began in 1983.

"They are a group of dedicated Christians who travel the world spreading their beliefs through a repertoire of hundreds of skits and plays on various topics," the release says.

Based in Oxnard, Calif., the group is serving such diverse areas as West Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, Great Britain, Italy, Greece, Poland, Guam, Japan, the Philippines, Taiwan, China, Korea, Australia, Panama, Peru and Africa.

"Covenant Players provide a special ministry, fighting the peer pressure against 'religion' and yet filling the overwhelming stream of needs that arise in today's mobile and sometimes precarious lifestyle," the release says.

No admission will be charged. A free will offering will be collected on behalf of the Covenant Players.

National puppeteers group to have 14th annual meeting

The fellowship of Christian Puppeteers, an interdenominational, non-profit organization, will be holding its 14th annual national conference June 21-25 at Alderson-Broadbent College, Phillippi, W.Va.

The conference is designed to instruct and train Christian leaders in the use of the various art forms for teaching children effectively. Different styles and techniques of puppets will be shared, as well as clowning, mime, acting and ventriloquism.

A new workshop series "Just for Teens" has been developed for teenagers in ministry from across the United States. The teens will have morning workshops which are designed for fun, fellowship and training geared to their needs.

A staff of professionals from across the United States has been selected to teach and perform so that participants may have examples of excellence in the various art forms and also be exposed to a variety of ministry possibilities.

The staff members include, among others, The Sunshine Gang, Pennsylvania; Family Festival, New York; Doug Berk, North Carolina; Calvary's Rascals, North Carolina; The Magic Puppet Theatre, Illinois; Prince Puppets, Michigan; Ellen Hardy, New Mexico; Hand in Glove Puppet Theatre, Ohio; Bev Cipperly, South Carolina; New Life Puppeteers, Washington; Buttons & Bows, Pennsylvania; and One Way Street, Colorado.

Kelview Junior Choir to present musical

The Junior Choir of Kelview Heights Baptist Church will present "Miracle After Miracle" at 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

"This delightful musical takes a trip back in time to express the feelings of typical children to the greatness of a miracle working God," says a news release from the church. "They struggle with the promises of God; they believe the promises were true in the past, but will they be true now, in the present?"

The church's pastor, the Rev. Frank Johnson, invites the public to attend the musical drama. The church is located off N. Big Spring Street at Scharbauer Drive.

New ministry begins

The United Methodist churches of the Midland community have begun a new ministry to the needy.

"We are perhaps entering a period like the world has not seen before," says a news release from the Businesswomen's Downtown Bible Study. "It is a new day. Some of the urgent questions that must be addressed during this time are: How may I walk daily in the fullness of the holy spirit? How do I effectively fight in spiritual warfare? How may I appropriate the promises God has made in his covenant?"

The seminar will be conducted by Betty Isaacs, Linda Chaffin, Paula Ramsey and Eddie Lue Hunter. All are associated with the BDBS which meets at noon Wednesday at 312 E. Illinois Ave.

$3,000 raised in walk

Chilly weather didn't dampen the spirits of the walkers in the Midland "CROP Walk for the Hungry," held Saturday at the Midland College Circle.

More than 100 walkers of all ages participated in the 10 kilometer event. According to walk coordinator, Sue Holmer, more than $3,000 was raised.

Funds raised through the walk will assist a variety of projects aimed at helping the hungry in Midland and Odessa and overseas.

Church World Service will use 75 percent of the total in overseas relief and development work and 25 percent will remain here to be used by the Permian Basin Food Bank. The Food bank supplies many social service agencies, including Casa de Amigos.

The outstanding fundraiser was Dayle Sillerud who raised $321. In addition, 25 walkers raised more than $50 and six raised more than $100. Hope Lutheran Church, with 14 walkers participating, had the highest group total at $873.

Also, three local firms provided a valuable service by donating supplies for the walk. Those firms were Alpine Drinking Water, Furr's and West Texas Welders Supply.

Walkers who still have pledges to collect are asked to do so and turn in their sponsor envelopes and money to their recruiter as soon as possible.

The program includes campouts, swimming, softball, tennis, fishing, field trips as well as personal tutoring in school work.

"Happy memories from a summer of fun will help our children overcome the past pain in their lives," Daniels says. "Please send whatever you can."

Employers will be open to technological changes and you must be, too. Financial hardships can be overcome more easily than in the past.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: entertainer Bob Hope, orator Patrick Henry, 35th U.S. President John F. Kennedy, journalist G.K. Chesterton, actor Stacy Keach Sr., entertainer Beatrice Lillie, racing champion Al Unser, actor Tony Geary.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A small thing could inspire you to work at putting a relationship back on the right track. You dislike exercise, but recognize its importance for good health. A relationship warms up.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today should bring the phone call or message you have been hoping for. Perform home repairs only if you have the skills to do them right. Reserve some quiet time for yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stop scattering your energies. Slow down and do some things for yourself. Children and parents find common ground for a serious discussion. A talented young person could change your life. Offer encouragement.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get in touch with your deepest feelings. Give up member of opposite sex who is incapable of making a commitment. You deserve a partner who shares your emotional courage. Look around.

that lies ahead. Romance sizzles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Loved one asks your advice about a problem. You are likely to do more listening than suggesting! Your social life accelerates in a welcome way. Spend more time alone with your mate.

Quintuplets given names

MALLEN, Texas (AP) — They are no longer called "Babies A through E."

The 28-year-old mother of quintuplets born Tuesday in McAllen came up with names Friday for the infants.

Maria Esther Chavez said she named her two girls Anamer and Vanessa, and named the boys Aron, Baldeemar Jr. and Cristobal.

Since birth, the Chavez quintuplets have been in the neo-natal intensive care unit at McAllen Medical Center, where nurses dubbed the area they occupy "Chavez Boulevard."

Two of the quintuplets remained on respirators Friday to aid their underdeveloped lungs, said Judy Gomez, the hospital's marketing director.

But she said all of the babies are considered in good condition.

Mrs. Chavez, a resident of the border city of Reynosa, Mexico, was 7 1/2 months pregnant when she went into labor Monday while visiting her parents in the Lower Rio Grande Valley city of Pharr.

The quintuplets were delivered by Caesarean section.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Academy Award winners Shirley MacLaine, Sally Field and Olympia Dukakis will come to terms with life, death and marriage in a small Southern town in the movie version of "Steel Magnolias."

The film, based on the acclaimed off-Broadway play about six women in a small Louisiana town, also will star Dolly Parton and Daryl Hannah, the movie's producer, Ray Stark, said. One of the six major female roles is yet to be cast.

Shooting is to begin July 12 in Natchitoches, La., and should be completed by early September, said Stark.

"Steel Magnolias" focuses on life at a small-town beauty shop owned by Ms. Parton's character.

BALTIMORE (AP) — If this is New York, it could be Baltimore to Tom Selleck.

His new movie, "Her Alibi," is to begin shooting June 27 in Baltimore, though it's set in New York and Connecticut.

Location crews won't reveal much about the Marty Elford movie, but Selleck, 43, is expected to be here for much of the eight to 10 weeks of shooting, said Drew Friedman, international account executive for the film commission.

Except for a few establishing shots in New York, much of the movie will be filmed in Maryland, he said.

"If we just waited for every Baltimore script to come down the pike, we'd be sitting here, collecting dust, I think," said Friedman.

LONDON (AP) — A visitor who regularly waddles into the garden at No. 10 Downing St. won't leave without a swim and a drink in the future if Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has her way.

Mrs. Thatcher said Friday she plans to build a pond for a duck from a nearby park that has turned up at the back door of her official residence and laid some eggs.

Mrs. Thatcher, whose cat-in-residence died last week after 14 years as the No. 10 mouser, told patients at Papworth Hospital in Cambridgeshire, northeast of London, of her plans.

"We are going to have a little bit of water put in, because we have a duck that comes across from St. James's Park and lays her eggs," said the prime minister.

Popularity of morels spurs new company

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — As thousands take to the woods of the upper Midwest in their annual hunt for morel mushrooms, a company is on its way to stocking grocery store shelves year-round with the elusive delicacy.

Morel hunting has become a tradition in the Midwest from April to June, with many communities sponsoring morel festivals — complete with mushroom queens — in honor of the fleeting fungus.

The fascination with the morel lies not only in its unique flavor, which devotees say is as different from the common button mushroom as its appearance, but in the hunt as well.

"Someone I spoke to once called it morel fishing rather than morel hunting," said Gloria Anderson, executive director of the Chamber of Commerce of Boyne City, which hosts the community's 28th-annual morel hunt, Michigan's oldest.

One of the most common spots to find the morel is under a dying elm tree, but it also can be found in apple orchards, "and almost everyone says not to walk past a mound of leaves because there's probably a morel or two underneath," Anderson said.

The novice simply must keep an eye out for the unique features of the morel, especially its pitted cap resembling a sponge.

Morel hunting can be hazardous because of the false morel, which is often more plentiful and conspicuous than true morels. When cooked, the false morel, with a wrinkled cap that looks more like a brain than a sponge, can release a potentially deadly toxin.

"Most of the trouble comes in when people start experimenting," says Nancy Weber, a University of Michigan mycologist.

Guidebooks or searching an experienced morel hunter could make the job safer and easier, she advises.

A Lansing-based company also hopes to make it easier for morel lovers by enabling them to satisfy their cravings at gourmet shops rather than in the hinterland.

Neogen, an agricultural biotech company, has found the secret to cultivating the morel indoors.

It claimed a patent in 1986 for morel cultivation, and can grow the mushroom indoors 365 days a year by providing the environment that triggers its sex cycle, company Vice President Brinton Miller said.

Plans for commercialization of the domesticated morel are under way, and Miller predicts morels will be on shelves — probably only in gourmet shops — in the United States and in Switzerland next year. He said licensing agreements for morel production are being negotiated with companies in the Far East and Europe.

"There will be production capabilities to make morels available to anyone who wants them," Miller said.

Scientists solve mystery of stars' evolution

Hearst News Service

Like plants and animals, stars evolve. And a puzzling hole in theories of stellar evolution apparently has been plugged by astronomers from NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif. Their achievement should soothe lingering doubts about our understanding of the births, lives and deaths of stars, they say.

Their research was conducted in an "observatory" that would have stunned Galileo: a four-engine, C-141 aircraft. There, more than eight miles above Earth, they found a reassuring match between astronomical theories and the chemical components of huge gas clouds hundreds of trillions of miles from Earth.

Their research appeared in The Astrophysical Journal. The astronomers are Robert Rubin, Janet Simpson, Michael Haas and Edwin Erickson.

For decades, astronomers have believed stars go through life stages. First, stars are born after condensing from giant clouds of gas. Then the stars burn for billions of years, fueled by fusion energy — the same energy source that detonates H-bombs.

After billions of years, most stars swell, then shrink into pitiful "white dwarfs." According to theory, dying stars eject their matter into the cosmic void, like smoke expelled by a fading campfire. Indeed, space is filled with huge clouds of gas known as nebulae.

One of the most famous is the Orion nebula, a fuzzy patch of light just below the three-star "belt" in the constellation Orion. This nebula is about 1,600 light years away; humans now see light that left it about the time of the fall of the Roman Empire. In the nebula, baby stars are being born from the condensation of gas clouds.

Here's the puzzle:

Stars are chemical "factories." Within their nuclear furnaces are forged the heavier elements (anything heavier than hydrogen or helium, such as nitrogen, oxygen, carbon and sulfur) that later form into other stars and planets, and ultimately evolve into life forms.

And theory indicates that as stars age, their ratio of two elements — nitrogen and oxygen — should increase. For example, astronomers reasoned that since the sun is 4.5 billion years old and has a nitrogen-oxygen ratio of 0.12 — i.e., about eight oxygen atoms for every nitrogen atom — then the nebulae, being much younger, should have a higher ratio (i.e., more nitrogen atoms per oxygen atom.)

But it didn't work out that way. Rather, past astronomical observations indicated the ratio was 0.07 — which is lower than 0.12. In other words, there was less nitrogen per oxygen than would have been expected.

The discrepancy made astronomers uncomfortable. They wondered: Why wasn't the ratio greater as predicted? Could the theory of stellar evolution have holes in it?

But they can breathe easier now. In the Kuiper Airborne Observatory, the NASA-Ames team found that the nebulae have a larger ratio of nitrogen and oxygen — just as theory predicted.

Bea Thompson of Vernon applies a final stitch to a star quilt she created from a 100-year-old quilt top she found at a rummage sale.

North Texas quilter's art spans 75 years

VERNON, Texas (AP) — With careful stitches, she weaves a bit of magic through the face of colored cloth. Tulips, wedding rings, Irish roses, fans. Bea Thompson has quilted them all for about 75 years.

Like generations before her, Mrs. Thompson began her career as a quilter at her mother's side, working from the same queen-sized quilt frame that now nearly fills her living room.

Back then, the heavy wood frame was mounted on the ceiling, attached to rollers that allowed the quilt top, batting and backing to be pulled down each night for an evening's work. Young Bea would quilt the layers using a machine, while her mother pieced the next pattern.

Three-quarters of a century later, metal C-clamps have replaced the old wooden posts that once held the fabric tight, and stands built by her late husband hold the frame at just the right height for the slight woman who has used it for so long.

And the machine, of course, has long been discarded as hand quilting has again become popular among modern quilters.

"It's easy if you can use a thimble," Mrs. Thompson said, as she wove her needle through a star quilt. The quilt, which Mrs. Thompson proclaims as "my prettiest one ever," looks brand new, but the top is actually over a century old.

"I bought the top at a rummage sale. The edges were all rotten and tattered, but the star in the center was intact. So I took it home and had it cleaned and started to work."

In a stroke of luck, Mrs. Thompson was able to exactly match the bright blue and red pieces in the star to form a new border. And she found a pattern book with just the right stitch design to fill the white corners.

But she had to settle for polyester batting for the quilt. "You can't get cotton batting anymore. I wish it would come back. That polyester, it just ruins your fingernails."

Like most of the patterns she creates these days, the star quilt will eventually go to someone else. Mrs. Thompson's son declared the star quilt to be his even before it came off the frame.

She also quilts tops made by friends and neighbors, who pay for her handiwork in the finished product.

Zoos find ways to stop breeding programs

Hearst News Service

It's May, just the time when you would expect Mother Nature to produce big new batches of cute baby lions, frisky baby wolves and other adorable infants at the world's zoos.

But this year, Mother Nature has been fooled. Zoo breeding programs have been so successful in getting endangered species to reproduce in captivity that the zoos now are having to find ways to turn the breeding programs off.

Mother Nature will be making only a token stop at Seattle's Woodland Park Zoo. The gray wolf males have had vasectomies. So have all the male lions. Females of many species have had tubal ligations. Some of them, like the orangutans, are taking birth control pills.

"It used to be that zoos were consumers of wildlife," says Woodland Park spokesman Hank Klein. "The wilds were full of animals, so if one of the zoo animals died you simply got another one."

Emphasis shifted from consuming to producing about 20 years ago, when worries about the continued availability of wild animals — along with questions about the morality of trapping endangered animals for zoo display — led most zoos into breeding programs. After the successes, it became necessary to establish non-breeding programs.

"Part of the problem is that all of the zoos in the world would fit into the Seattle city limits," says Klein. "There just isn't room for any more animals."

Breeding animals in captivity for release in the wilds usually is impractical, he adds, "because most endangered animals are endangered because there are no habitats left for them."

Kodiak bears, gray wolves and lions are among the animals in oversupply. Llamas, mountain goats, elk and other hooved animals are in greater demand, so they're still allowed to breed. The zoo can sell surplus domestic animals, so birth control isn't practiced in the Family Farm area.

Lee Werle, the zoo's curator of mammals, has watched the movement toward planned breeding programs over the past 20 years and believes that "the days of indiscriminate breeding are long over."

Overpopulation is not the only concern. Werle explains that to be able to display endangered animals in the future, zoos throughout the continent have formed a kind of computerized birth control to prevent in-breeding and assure a proper population of breeding stock for the future. A central computer keeps track of all the endangered species' ancestries, so that only unrelated animals may be bred.

Now that most zoos use the program and can acquire new animals through breeding loans and swaps, the prices of many animals have dropped.

Woodland Park, for example, has been particularly proud of its ability to breed snow leopards.

"Fifteen years ago, a pair of snow leopards was worth about $12,000," says Werle. "Now, it would be hard to give them away."

The leopards now aren't allowed to breed unless some other zoo needs one and the breeding would meet the North American zoo organization's genetic-pool requirements.

The mammal programs have a parallel in the reptile house, where curator Frank Slaven's 15-year career spans the time when nothing was bred, to today, when almost everything is bred.

Much of his early career was spent trying to figure out what turned the various reptiles on. He learned that some breed after going through an artificially induced hibernation. Some are inspired to reproduce by simulated changes in the daylight cycle, others by being given lots of food after a simulated monsoon which had been preceded by a simulated drought. Even hormone injections have been used to encourage procreation.

When an Argentine horn frog is injected, says Slaven, "within 12 hours you get 800 eggs. You have several frogs each doing that, and that's a lot of frogs." Thus, in recent years, he's watched the price of the once-rare frog drop from $150 down to $10 or less.

With the demand for many reptiles now satisfied, reptile breeding has been slowed. Slaven is the bookkeeper for the worldwide catalog of which zoo has which reptiles, which are in demand and which are not.

Judge halts Nethery's execution

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A federal judge Friday halted the scheduled execution of a Tennessee man convicted of killing a Dallas police officer in 1981.

U.S. District Judge A. Joe Fish of Dallas issued the stay for Stephen Ray Nethery about 10 hours before Nethery was slated to receive a lethal injection.

Nethery expressed relief, said Texas Department of Corrections spokeswoman Shelly Zent.

"He was smiling and he said 'Thank you, praise the lord,'" Ms. Zent said.

Nethery's attorneys appealed to Fish Thursday after their request for a stay was rejected by a state district judge and the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

State attorneys had expected Nethery's execution would not be carried out before dawn Saturday.

No Texas death row inmate has been put to death since January as the U.S. Supreme Court considers a case filed on behalf of condemned inmate Donald Gene Franklin, who is challenging the state's death penalty law.

Nethery's appeals included the Franklin issue and also raised questions alleging bias on the part of the trial judge.

Fish said that besides granting the stay based on the Franklin issue, it was difficult for him to evaluate the case because he had not received the lengthy trial record.

Nethery, 27, of Daisy, Tenn., was convicted of the fatal shooting of Dallas police officer John McCarthy in February 1981.

According to Texas Department of Corrections records, Nethery was raping a woman in his car at White Rock Lake when McCarthy and his partner discovered him. Nethery fired three shots at McCarthy, killing him. The officer's partner, Philip Brown, captured Nethery after a foot chase.

In death row interviews, Nethery, who now is active in a religious group called Prison Fellowship, has acknowledged the shooting.

"I've always maintained I'm responsible for a man's life," he said. "For some reason, I just got up and started shooting."

Nethery, who was 20 at the time of the slaying, said he had been drinking all day and also had been taking codeine. He said he was visiting Dallas after spending time in Arkansas.

"I'm a classic case of a country boy going to the city," he said. "I drank. I smoked grass. My whole concept of life was to get high, get drunk and put notches on my belt by getting as many girls as I could. But I wasn't violent."

Millionaire to stay in care of guardian

HOUSTON (AP) — A millionaire recluse will stay under the care of a guardian after a probate court jury decided he is still incompetent to handle his own affairs.

"The verdict of the jury is 'yes,' that Mr. di Portanova continues to be a person of unsound mind," Probate Judge John Hutchinson said Thursday.

The decision — which came after a one-day trial and 10 minutes of jury deliberation — was expected to end years of litigation over di Portanova's fortune. The 13-member Caribbean Community, or Caricom, said at the conclusion of a meeting last week in Trinidad that they "re-affirmed the sovereign right of the Panamanian people to determine their own destiny free from external pressures."

Colombian Foreign Minister Julio Londono Paredes said Thursday: "The (Panamanian) problem must be resolved by Panamanians themselves...without foreign interference and with the objective of re-establishing democracy in Panama."

Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo may have offered the most significant response to the collapse of U.S.-Panamanian talks.

Cerezo said he is willing to mediate a plan "aimed at finding a space for dialogue in Panama in order to consolidate a democratizing process."

Cerezo said early this month that Panama had reacted favorably to his offer and that he would pursue the idea with representatives of the Panamanian opposition and with other Central American leaders.

"We believe Panama is drifting toward confrontation and violence, toward radicalization against the United States, which is dangerous for the region and is also causing great damage to Panama," he told journalists Thursday night.

Survey shows parents don't have much influence on movie choices

DALLAS (AP) — Some parents may have the wrong idea thinking they have a big influence on what movies their children watch, according to a 28-state survey released Friday.

When questioned in a parent-child poll, 58 percent of the adults said they determine what movies their children see all of the time, but only one-third of the children felt adults exercised that much control.

The poll surveyed almost 8,000 adults and children — 2,941 adults and 2,972 children chosen randomly in shopping malls in 250 cities across the United States.

Conducted May 21 as part of National Research Day, the survey poll was coordinated by Dallas-based M-A-R-C Inc., a research and marketing information services company.

Despite the parent-child differences, the survey found that children clearly understand what their parents object to their watching.

Five of every eight parents — 63 percent — identified horror movies as being unacceptable viewing for their children, while 57 percent of the children said they recognized that their parents felt that way.

Following horror films, the most opposed subjects were war and detective movies, a spokesman for the research firm said. The survey found little objection by adults to action-adventure, comedy, musicals, western or animated movies.

Animated features and comedy films clearly were the adults' preferred viewing fare for their children. Of the parents surveyed, 73 percent endorsed the choice, while action-adventure movies drew only 12 percent parental approval and horror movies had only 2 percent parental support.

Among the children surveyed, 50 percent preferred animated or comedy films, 17 percent favored action-adventure movies and 15 percent liked horror movies best.

Officials said the disparity between adult and children perceptions of viewing control might be explained by children's movie viewing partners.

Eighty-five percent of the adults seemed to feel their children watch TV movies most often with a parent or other family member, but more than one-third of the children said they usually watch movies alone or with a friend.

M-A-R-C executive vice president Pete Bogda said the survey's goal was to counter negative views of opinion and marketing research surveys by showing the key role that survey research plays in today's society.

Although the survey was not a technically valid probability sample, similar research could be used to determine the kind of films produced in the future, he said.

Molester charged in womens' deaths

FORT WORTH (AP) — A convicted child molester has been charged with capital murder in the deaths of two women, one of whom had filed a civil suit against him.

William Wesley Chappell, 52, of Fort Worth was held Friday in the Tarrant County Jail in lieu of $750,000 bond in connection with the May 3 shootings, police said.

Chappell was convicted in 1983 of molesting a 4-year-old girl. He was sentenced to five years in prison, but was free on an appeal bond at the time of the shootings.

Martha Lindsey, 50, grandmother of the molested child, and Alexandra Heath, 27, an aunt of the child, were killed by a masked gunman who burst into their Fort Worth home and began shooting.

Ms. Lindsey's husband, 62-year-old Lewis Sitton, was wounded in the shooting and remained in critical condition Friday at John Peter Smith Hospital.

Justice comments on election methods

AUSTIN (AP) — It would be tough to devise a less-effective way of selecting judges than the current Texas method of partisan elections, Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips said Friday.

Phillips reminded the Joint Select Committee on the Judiciary that in the 1982 statewide Democratic election sweep, 15 judges appointed by GOP Gov. Bill Clements were defeated.

But in 1984, when President Reagan and Republican U.S. Senate candidate Phil Gramm racked up big margins, the GOP won 35 of 36 contested judicial elections in Texas' four major counties.

"Many people are not willing to give up their law practices, take a cut in pay and then have everything they do in a year of campaigning wiped out by what George Bush may say to Dan Rather or how Michael Dukakis combs his hair one morning," said Phillips, a Republican.

Phillips, appointed by Clements in December and a candidate this year, set out three goals for selecting judges: increasing democracy — or "participation of the people" — enhancing accountability and encouraging independence.

Judge won't preside

DALLAS (AP) — A state district judge said because of information he learned since suspending Denton County Sheriff Randy Kaisner from office, he will not preside in a civil lawsuit trial against him, a newspaper reported Friday.

Judge Charles Chandler Davis, who suspended the sheriff on May 9, told the Dallas Morning News on Thursday he removed himself as judge in the trial because he could be called on as a witness.

Kaisner's suspension stemmed from charges of offering the chief deputy position to his opponent in the Republican primary runoff, Kirby Robinson, if Robinson agreed to leave the race. Kaisner lost to Robinson in the runoff.

Controls not effective

DALLAS (AP) — Ozone pollution controls in effect for Houston and the Dallas-Fort Worth area are not enough to meet federal standards, and the Environmental Protection Agency proposes extending the regulations to surrounding counties.

In announcing the expanded program Thursday, EPA Administrator Lee Thomas said it has not been decided what actions should be taken by the counties to curb ozone pollution.

He also said penalties for noncompliance had not yet been formulated, but among the penalties could be economic sanctions, including a ban on construction of industrial plants that are major polluters and a cutoff of federal highway aid.

The new list of so-called "non-attainment areas" includes in the Houston area Brazoria, Fort Bend, Liberty, Montgomery, Waller and Chambers counties, in addition to Harris and Galveston counties, which EPA already listed for not meeting the ozone standard.

TSTA sues commissioner

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas State Teachers Association on Friday filed a lawsuit alleging that State Education Commissioner William Kirby has taken too long to rule on grievances filed by educators.

Kirby countered with a news release accusing the teachers of failing to get the facts straight.

TSTA President Charles Beard Jr. said as many as 700 grievance appeals, dating back to 1985, are backlogged in the appeals process. About two-thirds of the cases involve appeals of local school district decisions in career ladder cases, according to Beard.

The career ladder is an evaluation system through which teachers obtain bonuses and raises.

Hearings can't be closed

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Medical Examiners can no longer convene informal, closed hearings to consider disciplinary actions against physicians, Attorney General Jim Mattox said in an opinion issued Friday.

According to Mattox, the closed hearings were only used in cases involving minor infractions or improper conduct involving sanctions voluntarily accepted by a physician.

'Flabby' generation needs fitness

DALLAS (AP) — A study released Friday bolsters fears that America is breeding a generation of fat, lazy children, but it says educators could reverse that trend with new physical fitness programs.

"We've got an alarming problem with the deteriorating state of fitness in American kids," said Donald F. Haydon, executive director of the American Health and Fitness Foundation. "There's no question that our kids are far more sedentary than 20 years ago."

The Austin-based foundation — which recently completed a fitness survey of 20,000 schoolchildren, primarily in Texas — presented its study at the American College of Sports Medicine annual convention. The conference of 3,000 fitness professionals continues through Sunday.

Haydon, former director of the Texas Governor's Commission on Fitness, said his group has developed a pilot program, called Fit Youth Today, to encourage young people to improve their cardiovascular fitness through regular exercise.

The program was tested last fall in 17 Texas school districts, the largest of them in Dallas. This spring, it is being used nationally and in 150 districts across the state, he said.

Previous fitness programs simply tested students once annually through programs such as the one sponsored by the President's Physical Fitness Council. But the FYT program includes an eight-week training program of running and calisthenics, followed by a four-part test.

Haydon said that of the 20,000 students participating in last fall's study, 29 percent reached the program's fitness standards after the eight-week regimen.

Specially trained police officers raise their hands to swear in as members of an Olympic Securing Unit in Seoul, South Korea.

Clubs, tear gas grenades used to quell Seoul rioting

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Riot police kicked and clubbed anti-government protesters Friday and fired tear gas grenades after President Roh Tae-woo ordered that all measures be taken to crush violent demonstrations.

Roh, presiding over a meeting of the National Security Council, said the dissident protests threaten the safety of the Olympic Games, which begin Sept. 17 in Seoul.

As part of tightened security preceding the Games, a Cabinet minister ordered police to maintain surveillance on foreigners spending long periods of time in South Korea without a definite purpose.

In downtown Seoul, angry passers-by shouted "Shame!" as some of an estimated 7,000 riot police fired tear gas and repeatedly charged about 3,000 radical students.

Police chased protesters into subways and tossed tear gas grenades at passers-by who protested. Several officers lifted a protesting businessman in a blue suit above their heads and carried him away.

Police broke up an attempted sit-in at City Hall and an attempt by about 500 students to march toward the U.S. Information Service library. They arrested dozens of students, beating and kicking many of the protesters and hitting them with clubs as they were dragged away.

There were no reports of injuries, and police did not give an overall arrest figure.

Some students hurled firebombs and rocks at police, but most just chanted anti-government and anti-U.S. slogans.

"Down with the military dictatorship!" "Punish Roh Tae-woo!" and "Drive out the Yankees!" they yelled.

Radical students claim the United States supports military rule in South Korea and enforces partition of the Korean peninsula, divided since 1945. The protesters demand the expulsion of the 42,000 U.S. troops based in South Korea.

Protesters have attacked U.S. diplomatic buildings during the protests, including the U.S. Embassy.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Hundreds of Syrian soldiers wearing bulletproof vests over combat fatigues moved into the south Beirut slums Friday, halting a three-week war between rival Shiite Moslem militias that killed nearly 300 people.

The intervention, under a Syrian agreement with Iran, is expected to increase pressure for the release of the 18 foreign hostages in Lebanon, who include nine Americans.

Most are believed held in the slums by extremists linked to the pro-Iranian Hezbollah, or Party of God, which gained control of nearly all of south Beirut in the battle with the Amal militia that began May 6.

Hezbollah and Amal, a mainstream group allied with Syria, stopped shooting as the soldiers began moving in at 11 a.m.

A few hours earlier, Syria's four top generals in Lebanon escaped harm in an ambush in a south Beirut neighborhood controlled by Hezbollah.

Dozens of bullets hit the generals' Mercedes, but its armor plating saved them. "Otherwise, there would have been no survivors," a police spokesman said.

About 900 Syrian infantrymen in three groups advanced on foot into the 16 square miles of tin-roofed huts and cement-block apartments next to the Beirut airport.

They carried machine guns and shoulder-fired grenade launchers. Following the first group of Syrians were 52 Lebanese policemen with automatic rifles.

Syrian soldiers set up five checkpoints along a disengagement line between the Shiyah neighborhood, held by Amal, and the Hezbollah-controlled Ghobeiri district, where the generals were ambushed.

The line stretched through two miles of gutted shops, smoldering wrecked cars and bullet-scarred cement-block shanties. Broken power cables dangled on streets littered with glass shards and spent cartridges.

Young Hezbollah fighters on the slum's fringes stared intently at a group of 20 American and British journalists, who traveled from Damascus with Syrian escorts to cover the deployment.

"I feel like a juicy T-bone steak in front of a hungry man," said one reporter.

Checkpoints also were established at key road junctions in the Hay Moawad and Mesharrafieh neighborhoods, controlled by Hezbollah.

Wailing women on sidewalks and balconies showered the Syrians with rose water and rice in a traditional gesture of welcome.

"Animals! They are all animals, animals killing animals!" a man shouted in English from in front of his shattered house when he saw Western correspondents covering the Syrian advance.

He said Hezbollah fighters seized his home from Amal militiamen in the final phase of the battle, which according to police killed a total of 296 people and wounded 1,000.

Hezbollah gained control of 90 percent of the area, which has long been a refuge for kidnappers, hijackers and assassins.

Reporters saw two bulldozers clearing mounds of earth and pushing sandbag barricades from the streets. Syrian specialists defused land mines and unexploded bombs.

The Appropriations Committee cleared for floor debate a $7.7 billion proposed budget that includes a $160 million deficit.

The measure, detailing day-to-day government spending for the new fiscal year beginning July 1, was before the committee for 4½ weeks.

After four hours of debate Thursday night, a majority of the committee members acknowledged having no real idea what is in or not in the bill.

"There was some criticism last night that everybody didn't know what was in the bill," Roemer said at an impromptu news conference Friday. "They've had it for weeks. We've only made two modifications in it. That amounted to less than $140 million out of a $7 billion bill. Anyone who wanted to know what was in the budget could know it."

"There's always a lot of turmoil. I'm proud of what (chairman) Robert Adley and that committee did. It was a big step."

The bill includes $3.7 billion in state tax dollars with the remainder in fees and federal funds. Steve Cochran, acting commissioner of administration, acknowledged after committee passage that the bill was in the red by $160 million.

However, the red ink will be erased and the bill will be balanced if the Legislature votes to continue a tax that is scheduled to end on June 30, Cochran said.

He referred to one cent of the sales tax in which exemptions on food and drug purchases and utilities were scrapped for this fiscal year. The exemptions will go back into effect in the new fiscal year unless the Legislature acts to continue them.

Roemer expressed confidence that the Legislature would pull the bill in balance and pass $320 million in taxes to help fund his education reform package and to aid local governments.

The tax vote will be in a measure separate from the appropriations bill.

"I can't have a budget out there without the funds," said Roemer. "We have to pass the appropriations bill conditional on moving on revenue, then move revenue."

To get revenue, Roemer said he is still considering scrapping all exemptions on two cents of the state sales tax. Items such as food and drug purchases now are exempt from most taxation.

"You're talking about $320 million," he said. "One way of doing that would be two cents clean (of exemptions). There are variations of doing that."

Panama's relation with U.S. 'practically non-existent'

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — The foreign minister said Friday that relations with the United States were "practically non-existent," and he indicated that military chief Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega should not be expected to resign.

"The commander doesn't abandon his ship in stormy weather," Jorge Eduardo Ritter told reporters.

He made the comments two days after U.S. officials announced that their talks with Panama to resolve the struggle over Noriega's leadership had fallen apart. Secretary of State George P. Shultz blamed the collapse on Noriega.

However, Ritter said relations were bad "because the United States maintains recognition of a government that doesn't exist."

Washington recognizes Eric Arturo Delvalle as Panama's legal president, even though he was ousted in February after he tried to fire Noriega as chief of the Defense Forces of Panama. Noriega then installed Manuel Solis Palma as president, and Delvalle has been in hiding ever since.

Delvalle, speaking from hiding Friday, said he warned the United States in vain against go-it-alone tactics in talks with Noriega. He also predicted violence if Noriega doesn't leave.

Delvalle said other Latin American democracies offered to help and that they and the Panamanian opposition should have had a role.

He met a small number of correspondents, including Associated Press correspondent Joseph B. Frazier, at a location they agreed not to disclose and told them:

"I have always thought that (the talks) were a ploy to delay matters, to give (Noriega) time to strengthen his inner circle within the ... Defense Forces and at the end, yes, to ridicule President Reagan and the United States," Delvalle said.

"I don't think (Noriega) was sincere, and I told the (Reagan) administration that what happened would happen. That wasn't very difficult. I told them about three weeks ago," he added.

Noriega on Thursday blamed the United States for the collapse of talks on his political future.

"The world must know that the conversation sustained with President Reagan's envoy broke down when he presented us with an ultimatum in which Panama had to accept immediately his last offer," he told a packed session of the National Assembly.

Ritter said the discussions with the United States were informal and did not involve the Foreign Ministry.

Afghan Moslem guerrillas inspect the wreckage of a Soviet-built Mi-17 helicopter gunship with Afghan markings they claim to have shot down May 14 near Alikhel, 10 miles from the Pakistani border.

Najib chooses new prime minister

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — President Najib chose a new prime minister from outside his governing party in an effort to widen his support base as Soviet troops withdraw, leaving the government to face Moslem guerrillas alone.

However, the president's choice, 62-year-old Mohammad Hasan Sharq, has been closely associated with the party. He has been a deputy prime minister in Najib's government for the past 11 months.

His promotion, announced late Thursday by official Kabul radio, must be approved by the National Assembly, which is expected to convene in a few days. Confirmation is virtually certain because the ally is controlled by Najib's People's Democratic Party and allied groups.

Sharq was entrusted with primary responsibility for repatriating an estimated 5 million refugees — one-third of the country's population — who have fled since Soviet troops entered Afghanistan in 1979 to help the government in its war with the guerrillas.

He would replace Prime Minister Sultan Ali Keshitmand, a ranking member of the governing party since its founding in 1965. Keshitmand, 52, was appointed to the post in 1981 by Najib's predecessor, Babrak Karmal. Keshitmand was named secretary of the central committee of the governing party.

Najib has repeatedly professed a desire to bring more non-party men into his government as Moscow withdraws its troops. However, the test of whether such a declaration will have real basis or be primarily cosmetic may come when Sharq's Cabinet is named.

"If they simply move to reshuffle the furniture, it's not going to be significant," a Western diplomat said Friday.

Most of the current 34 Cabinet members are either members of the party or closely tied to it. The exact breakdown is unknown because of the shadowy nature of Afghan politics.

Najib's declarations of plans to broaden his government has not ended guerrilla attacks.

From their bases in Pakistan, the guerrillas have announced they captured at least a dozen Afghan army border posts since April 15, when the Soviet Union agreed to start pulling out its troops.

Under the withdrawal agreement, the more than 10,000 Kremlin soldiers in Afghanistan are to leave by next February. Moscow says 9,000 already have crossed the Amu Darya River into the Soviet Union since the withdrawal began May 15.

Najib's choice of Sharq as prime minister also appeared to lessen the chances of former King Zahir Shah returning to Kabul to preside over any transition from the present Soviet-style socialist government to a more broadly-based government.

The restoration of the king, in a role ranging from figurehead to active player, has been a topic of speculation in both Eastern and Western diplomatic circles since the Kremlin decided to end its military intervention.

Sharq was Cabinet chief of staff when Mohammad Daoud, a cousin of the former king, served as prime minister from 1963 to 1963. However, during that decade, the king exercised little power.

Daoud resigned in 1963 at Zahir Shah's behest and then overthrew him in 1973.

WORLD IN BRIEF

NATO ministers discuss fair share

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — NATO defense ministers, seeking to quell U.S. concerns that it pays too much for Europe's defense, said Friday that all members are dedicated to bearing a fair share of the burden.

The ministers also declared that President Reagan had NATO's "full support and solidarity" as he prepared to meet Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev next week in Moscow.

U.S. Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci said after the two days of talks at North Atlantic Treaty Organization headquarters that the allies had committed themselves to sharing the cost of defense.

"It was quite clear that the ministers recognized that this is a serious issue," Carlucci told reporters.

The defense secretary later flew to the Netherlands for talks with Dutch government officials. He was to join the U.S. summit party in Moscow on Sunday.

Brazilians damage trains

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — Commuters set fire to one train, threw rocks at another and damaged three stations Friday after mechanical failures delayed service, a railroad official said.

Hundreds of riot troops took about four hours to disperse the angry commuters. Two policemen were slightly injured and no one was arrested, the Sao Paulo state police said.

A spokeswoman for the commuter train service said at least 1,000 commuters to Sao Paulo were in the three stations, but she had no estimates on how many joined the rock-throwing mobs.

Nine railroad cars of one train were "totally destroyed by fire, and the same number of cars of another train were partially damaged by rocks thrown by the mobs," spokeswoman Edith Villas Boas said.

She said mechanical failures caused delays for several hours. About 400,000 mainly low-income workers use the commuter service daily.

Drugs worry bishops

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Roman Catholic bishops expressed their concern about drug trafficking and the effects it can have on Mexican society, as well as the increasing consumption of drugs here.

"The consequences of all this clandestine production of drugs leap into sight," the statement from the Mexican Bishops Conference issued this week says. "They are insecurity, anguish, violence and family disintegration. An atmosphere is created of fear, of terror, of involuntary emigrations, of threats and of pressures."

It also said the consumption of drugs in Mexico represents a growing problem, "growing day by day in these past years."

Iraq turning the tables

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — In five weeks, Iraq has dramatically turned the tables on Iran with two major battlefield victories that have aggravated Tehran's military and political troubles.

The military defeats have badly jolted Iran, which was already beset by economic woes, a political power struggle between radicals and conservatives, and growing international isolation.

"There's a lot of confusion in Tehran now," said a Western diplomatic source with contacts in the Iranian capital. "But the Iranians will not take this lying down. They'll retaliate."

"They may be on the ropes, but they're not on their knees yet," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Heroin is confiscated

TOKYO (AP) — Authorities seized 9.4 pounds of heroin and arrested five men from Hong Kong in the second-largest heroin bust in Japan, police said Friday.

The heroin, with an estimated street value of $3 million, was discovered in two suitcases when four of the men arrived at Tokyo's Narita airport, a National Police Agency drug enforcement officer said.

The officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said four of the men were arrested Sunday. A fifth man, believed to be the leader of the group, arrived at the airport Monday and was arrested.

All five had entered Japan several times since July and were targeted by customs agents as possible drug smugglers, he said.

Japan's largest heroin-smuggling case was broken in December 1985, when 10.1 pounds were confiscated, the officer said. Last year, a total of 10.6 pounds of the drug was seized, he said.

Truce to be discussed

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Rebel leaders agreed Friday to discuss a truce extension proposed by the leftist government and officials revealed that one of the best-known rebel commanders turned himself in and accepted amnesty.

Felix Garcia Hernandez, known as Aldo Lima, told reporters Friday he had commanded more than 400 men in the Chontales region and had been in the rebel forces since the civil war began six years ago.

It said the arrest was made on the road between Salatierra and Celaya in the central state of Guanajuato, about 260 miles northwest of Mexico City.

The cargo was heading for Matamoros, across the border from Brownsville, Texas, the report said.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Federal Judicial Police found 346 kilograms of marijuana hidden in a truck's false bottom and arrested five people in the case, the government news agency Notimex reported.

It said the arrest was made on the road between Salatierra and Celaya in the central state of Guanajuato, about 260 miles northwest of Mexico City.

The cargo was heading for Matamoros, across the border from Brownsville, Texas, the report said.

Soviets say U.S. violating accord

MOSCOW (AP) — An adviser to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Friday that the United States is violating a peace accord by continuing to ship arms to Afghanistan's anti-communist Mujahedeen guerrillas.

"They are arming, quite openly, those who want to go on in their civil war," said Yevgeny Primakov, who has advised Gorbachev on arranging the Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Primakov, head of the Institute of the World Economy and International Relations, did not specify when the United States sent its most recent arms shipment to the Mujahedeen.

No did he say whether continued U.S. shipments might halt withdrawal of the estimated 105,500 Soviet troops who are still in Afghanistan.

"This means that the United States will jeopardize the situation," Primakov told a news conference for reporters covering next week's summit talks between Gorbachev and President Reagan.

"It means they will push Pakistan into a corner," he said. "It destroys the Geneva accords."

(In Washington, State Department spokesman Ben Waddell said in response to Primakov's charges:

"The turnover of large amounts of military supplies constitutes a continuation of military aid. The Soviets should take their military equipment out with them. We will watch Soviet actions in this area carefully and will follow symmetry in making our decisions."

The Soviet news agency Tass said Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and his Afghan counterpart, Abdul Wakil, met here to review implementation of the Geneva accords and urged Pakistan to stop supporting Moslem guerrillas in Afghanistan.

"Pakistan virtually does not take effective measures for the elimination from its territory of the infrastructure of interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs," the two foreign ministers were quoted as saying.

Marshal Sergei Akhromyev, chief of staff of the Soviet armed forces, told reporters Thursday that 9,500 of his troops have left Afghanistan since the pullout began May 15.

Under the peace accord, the Soviet withdrawal is supposed to be completed by early 1989.

Primakov's charge appeared to be part of a pattern of protests aimed at pressuring Pakistan and the United States to stop aiding the Mujahedeen.

On Thursday, the Afghan government lodged its fourth protest with a U.N. observer mission, accusing Pakistan of continuing to channel arms to the guerrillas.

The guerrillas have said they will continue to fight the Soviet-backed government in Kabul and will ignore the Geneva accords signed by Pakistan and the Kabul regime.

The United States and Soviet Union agreed to act as guarantors of the agreement. In an exchange of letters, each side agreed to stop arming its allies in Afghanistan if the other followed suit.

The letters, which have not been made public, also are reported to have specified that if either side continued to arm its Afghan ally, the other would provide a commensurate level of weapons to its side.

Moscow has halted its arms shipments, Western diplomats say, but is leaving Soviet military bases and massive arms supplies to the Kabul government as its forces pull out.

The United States has been supplying the Mujahedeen with an estimated $500 million annually in arms and military supplies channeled through Pakistan.

About 2.5 million Afghans have fled to Pakistan since the Soviets invaded Afghanistan in December 1979, and the Mujahedeen operate out of bases on Pakistani soil.

China and Saudi Arabia also have supplied arms to the Mujahedeen but have not signed the Geneva accords.

An additional 1.5 million Afghan refugees are living in Iran.
