China, U.S. reach textile export quotas

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — China and the United States have agreed on quotas for Chinese textile exports to America, well-placed sources said Saturday. An agreement would end a trade battle that sharply reduced China's purchases of American farm products and strained political ties.

"The two countries are expected to exchange notes and officially sign the new agreement in the near future," the Geneva correspondent of China's official Xinhua news agency reported.

Other sources, who declined to be identified by name or nationality, said there were still differences over language and other technical points. However, like Xinhua, they said the question of quota amounts had been settled.

Details were not immediately available, but China had been pressing for a 6 percent annual growth rate in its share of the U.S. market and the United States had been offering 1.5 to 2 percent, industry sources said.

Conclusion of an agreement during the seventh round of talks, which began here Monday, was expected to ease significantly the economic sparring begun when the United States imposed unilateral quotas after previous agreements expired in January.

The dispute with the Chinese, and parallel talks with the Soviets, had left those two major U.S. grain export markets in jeopardy. Both the Soviets and Chinese had trimmed or halted their purchases of U.S. farm products to bolster their bargaining position, according to financial analysts.

Agreement with the Chinese follows a five-year accord reached Friday in Vienna under which the Soviets agreed to buy about 9 million tons of U.S. wheat and corn a year, 3 million more than the minimum under an expiring 1975 pact.

The Soviet Union, the world's largest single grain importer, has reportedly purchased only slightly more than the 6 million-ton annual minimum this fiscal year, hurting U.S. farmers who already are languishing from overproduction and declining demand.

At the same time, the Chinese, thought to have contracted to buy 6 million tons of U.S. corn and wheat annually, have sine january halted imports of grain as well as U.S. cotton, soybeans and chemical fibers, at least partly due to the textile quotas, according to industry analysts.

U.S. officials contend the declining purchases are due to better Soviet and Chinese harvests rather than trade disputes. But the decline hit hard and U.S. agricultural exports are expected to fall to $34.5 billion during fiscal 1983, 12 percent below 1982 and 21 percent below the peak of $43.8 billion in 1981.

The importance of the textile talks for the U.S. clothing and textile industry was underscored Tuesday when U.S. manufacturers and retailers, who were advising government negotiators, walked out. Manufacturers argued the U.S. position was too soft, and retailers said it was too hard.

The manufacturers are vying for Amerian market shares now held by imports.

Bank may sell soon

Worried customers of the insolvent Metro Bank waited for word from federal banking authorities on the fate of their money Saturday.

Meanwhile, representatives from the Federal Deposit Insurance Cooperation who were at Metro late Saturday night, said there was to be a press release issued today about the status of the bank.

Texas Banking Commissioners in Austin were also waiting, ready to issue a new bank charter if a buyer for the $36.3 million bank could be found over the weekend. If so, the bank could re-open early this week, possibly Monday, under a new name.

Authorities said Saturday several bids for the bank had been received and were under review.

"I think we're looking at a very early date next week," to determine whether the bank is sold or liquidated, said State Banking Commissioner Robert E. Stewart Saturday.

"I understand one bid is looking very good and we hope to get this accomplished by Saturday evening."

The bank closed Friday at 3 p.m. following a majority vote of the board of directors, who said in a written statement the bank was in failing condition.

Stewart, citing Metro Bank's excessive loan losses, immediately turned the bank over to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. He estimated Friday the losses were between $6.5 million and $7 million — far exceeding the $1.9 million in equity capital on hand in the bank.

The bank was closed because of its lending practices, he said.

The FDIC has the option to either liquidate Metro Bank and issue a check to each depositor, up to the $100,000 insured amount, or sell the bank to a new management group. It can reject bids if they do not meet specific guidelines, Stewart said.

If the bank re-opens under new ownership, customers would have a choice — either continue business with the bank with no interruption in service, or change banks, officials said.

A FDIC team spent Friday and Saturday in the bank going over its assets and liabilities and accounting for all $30.9 million in deposits.

The State Banking Commission's role is to judge any bidder(s) on banking merit. "We make sure the applicants have sufficient banking and business experience, are acting in good faith, and have adequate capital," Stewart said.

Adequate capital should be about 5 percent of a bank's total resources, he said.

In the case of Metro Bank, that would mean a successful bidder would have to come up with at least $1.5 million in capital. Normally, that amount would be too little to start a bank of Metro's size, according to Stewart, but the buyer would be assuming the liabilities (deposits) of the old bank.

Metro Bank opened for business in 1978 at Midland Regional Air Terminal. It offered a new concept in area banking, trying to attract customers from both Midland and Odessa. Citizens of each city sat on its board of directors.

Eddie Thomas, who had been president since Metro Bank's inception, resigned July 14. No reason has been given.

Astroworld cites 'error'

HOUSTON (AP) — Human error and "a violent, blatant violation of procedure" led to an Astroworld rollercoaster accident that killed one employee and injured three others, officials at the amusement park said Saturday.

The accident occurred late Friday night when three of four cars being installed on the ride plummeted 14 feet from their tracks during a safety check, officials said.

The dead man, identified as Frank Wamble, 22, of Deer Park, was trapped under one car after the apparent accident at 11:15 p.m., a Houston Fire Department spokesman said.

Two of the three injured, who suffered head lacerations and a fractured clavicle respectively, were released from Hermann Hospital Saturday morning, said spokesman Brian Roper. The third injured worker, Johnny Westbrook, was in stable condition at the hospital Saturday with a dislocated shoulder, Roper said.

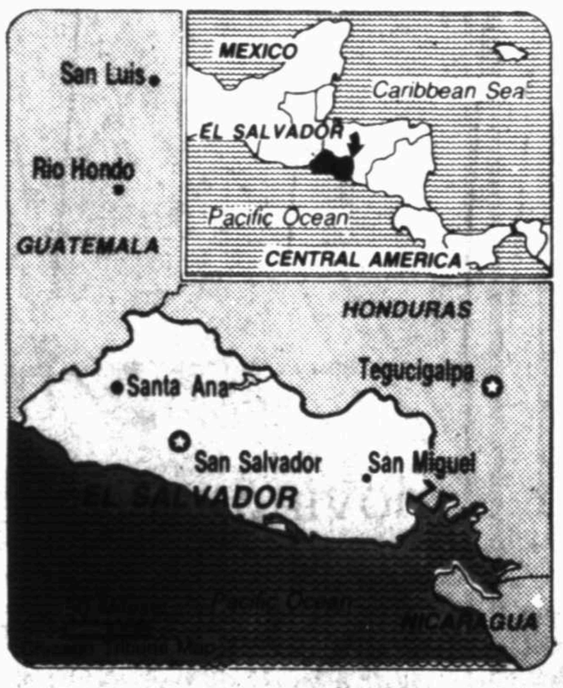

Neither the hospital nor Astroworld would identify the two employees who were released from the hospital.

The four were among 15 employees who were about to begin a test run of a new train on the Texas Cyclone, the largest ride at the park, Ms. Smith said.

She said two ride supervisors gave the "clear to dispatch" signal. But the track had not been returned from the "load" position to the "run" position, she said. When the train was dispatched, it rolled backward into a storage shed and off the track.

"It's hard to understand" why the track position was not switched, Ms. Smith said.

Salvadoran voters will wait until 1984

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — El Salvador's nationwide elections have been postponed until 1984 despite U.S. pressure for a vote this year.

President Alvaro Magana told reporters Friday night that he was disappointed in the postponement of the elections. But he said the Constituent Assembly will not finish a constitutional draft until October, four months behind schedule.

The constitution and an electoral law must be adopted before an election can be called, Magana said. A presidential aide, Luis Lagos, said the elections may be held in February.

The delay was announced as President Reagan's special envoy in Central America, Richard Stone, sought a meeting with Salvadoran leftists to ask that they take part in the election process.

The Reagan administration believes early elections will help stabilize this nation of 4.5 million, torn by a 3½-year-old civil war between the U.S.-backed government and a coalition of leftist rebels.

Members of the Central Elections Council blame the delay on U.S. congressional hearings that were blocking a $3.4 million appropriation to finance the balloting.

The hearings, scheduled this week in Washington, were sought by congressional Democrats who questioned the funding, which would pay for computers and other sophisticated election equipment.

But Washington congressional sources said Friday the hearings are expected to be brief and approval is expected in August, in time for elections at the end of the year.

Salvadoran politicians, expressing some resentment at being pressured to set early elections, also have been seeking an elaborate revision of the nation's electoral rolls. The outdated rolls have not been updated in 10 years and the government seeks a new registration of voters.

Leftist parties refused to take part in March 1982 elections, saying the safety of their candidates could not be guaranteed. So far, they have rebuffed overtures that they participate in the new round of balloting.

Magana took office as caretaker president after the 1982 elections, under an agreement among the nation's political parties. The agreement called for a caretaker government while a new constitution was written.

But the government has fallen behind in a projected June 1983 deadline for completing the constitution. The parties have set a March deadline for the new elections.

The interim president has pledged to return to private life as soon as new elections are held. During a papal visit in March, he told Pope John Paul II the elections would be held before the end of 1983.

Meanwhile, a court in Sonsonate, 42 miles west of the capital, ordered the release of Fermin Garcia, a 52-year-old Indian leader who was arrested after he said he witnessed an army massacre of 18 peasants Feb. 22 at the Las Hojas farming cooperative.

Magana told reporters he had taken a special interest in the case and that he will remove the commander of Sonsonate province from his post because of his role in the case.

"Thank God I'm free," Garcia said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

Midlander reports seeing missing man

City police are awaiting confirmation that missing geologist Banks Campbell spent last Wednesday night in a New Mexico motel and may be on his way to Alpine, Ariz.

Det. Sgt. Jeff Haile said a Midland motorist contacted police at 3 a.m. Saturday and told them he stopped and gave Campbell a ride after seeing him walking along a road near Silver City, N.M., about 4 p.m. Wednesday.

The motorist, who did not want to be identified, said he knows Campbell but didn't know the geologist had been reported missing until he returned to Midland early Saturday morning.

The motorist dropped Campbell off in Glenwood, N.M., about 6 p.m. Wednesday. He said Campbell — who appeared to be in good health — told him he was on his way to Alpine, Ariz., but would probably spend a few days in Springerville, Ariz.

Campbell did not indicate why he was going to Alpine, according to Haile, who said the geologist has no known friends or relatives there or in Springerville.

A clerk at the Lariat motel in Glenwood told police a man matching Campbell's description checked into the motel under the name Banks Campbell about 6 p.m. Wednesday.

Haile said Saturday afternoon that he was awaiting receipt of the signature to compare it to Campbell's handwriting and that law enforcement authorities in New Mexico and Arizona had been alerted to the latest development in the mysterious case.

Campbell, who is also a weather spotter for the city-county civil defense program, was reported missing last Sunday night when his key ring, street clothes and other belongings were found on his desk at the Permian Basin Sample Lab on North Colorado Avenue.

He left a friend's house on his bicycle shortly after 9 p.m. Sunday and was wearing shorts, a T-shirt and sneakers at the time. Yet when the motorist picked him up in New Mexico on Wednesday, he was wearing blue jeans and a work shirt, according to Haile.

Campbell's bike also was found in his office and his pickup truck was parked on the company lot. His wallet containing $300 to $400 was gone, however, leading police to believe he was the victim of foul play. But there was no sign of a struggle at the office or his home.

A widower, Campbell lived alone. He had dinner with his son and his son's family Sunday and did not appear worried about anything, according to the son, Pete Campbell.

"He was so regular about everything," Campbell said Tuesday. "This is totally out of the ordinary."

The son could not be reached for comment Saturday. But a family friend, asked why the elder Campbell might be in Arizona, said: "I have no idea. This has been a helluva mystery to me."

Soviet, Cuban ties 'indestructible'

By GEORGE GEDDA

SANTIAGO, Cuba (AP) — President Fidel Castro inaugurated a huge textile plant here the other day that is expected to employ almost 8,000 workers and eventually produce enough cloth daily to fill 11 five-ton trucks.

Like a number of other ambitious projects around the island, the plant could not have been built without the help of the Soviet Union.

Over 100 Soviet technicians helped make the sprawling blue and white structure a reality. A top Soviet expert in textile plant construction was present for the inauguration and was welcomed warmly by Castro and the thousands assembled for the occasion.

The Soviets also are assisting in the construction of an oil refinery in Cienfuegos, a nuclear plant not far from that south coast city, a thermoelectric plant outside Havana, and a nickel plant in Camarioca.

According to Castro, some 9,000 Cubans are studying in the Soviet Union. The State Department says there are 6,000 to 8,000 Soviet civilian advisers in Cuba.

A generation ago, the Soviet Union and Cuba were barely aware of each other's existence. Nowadays, their friendship appears to be — as a giant sign posted at the inauguration proclaimed — "indestructible."

Seldom have the interests of two countries been as mutually reinforcing as those of Cuba and the U.S.S.R.

Cuba, shut off from U.S. markets for more than 20 years, badly needs outside help and the Soviets are only too willing to oblige.

In return, Cuba has emerged as one of Moscow's most valued allies. Castro, aside from being an eloquent spokesman for socialism, is willing to send his troops to such distant lands as Angola and Ethiopia, enabling the Soviets to establish a tacit presence where they had none before at little or no risk to themselves.

A western diplomat said Castro's importance to the Soviets stems from his ability "to drive the U.S. nuts." Pro-Cuban regimes have been established in recent years in Nicaragua, Grenada and Surinam and a rebel movement sympathetic to Cuba is threatening the El Salvadoran government.

And while Castro hinted last week that under some circumstances, he would stop sending military supplies to Central American countries, for now at least — much to Moscow's delight — the United States finds itself faced with a perceived threat from within its own hemisphere, thus diverting its attention from other areas.

The intimate ties between Moscow and Havana have led to American charges that Castro is little more than a Soviet puppet. As an example, U.S. officials cite Cuba's support for the 1979 Soviet invasion of Afghanistan despite powerful opposition from most other Third World countries.

The generosity of the Soviets toward Cuba appears to be linked to the degree to which Cuba is willing to lend itself to supporting Soviet strategic purposes. Analysts believe that if Castro were to abandon that role, Moscow would be less willing to assist Cuba economically. The Soviets are far more tight-fisted with their aid to other friendly countries.

According to unpublished CIA estimates, Soviet assistance to Cuba has reached $4.7 billion annually, making Cuba one of the most heavily-subsidized countries in the world. Previously, Soviet aid reportedly had held steady for several years at some $3 billion.

Militarily, the Soviets have supplied Cuba with advanced MiG jet fighters, heavy artillery, tanks, surface-to-air missiles, submarines, surface attack vessels, strike weapons, and air and sea assault forces. A Soviet ground force brigade in Cuba said to number about 2,600 men is backed up by 2,000 Soviet military advisers.

According to State Department figures, the Soviets delivered some 66,000 tons of equipment to Cuba in 1982 alone, more than triple the average level of the preceding five years.

The Reagan administration sees the increased deliveries as evidence of stepped up Cuban adventurism. Cuba maintains the aid increase is the result of Reagan administration threats to the island.

Whatever the reason, the State Department says Cuba now has the best equipped military establishment in all of Latin America, with significant offensive capabilities.

On the surface at least, the Cubans claim they are not intimidated by Washington's hostility. A huge neon sign deployed a few yards away from the American diplomatic mission in Havana, boasts, "Mr. Imperialist, We Have Absolutely No Fear Of You."

Sri Lankan officials stamp out opposition

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Sri Lanka's government moved to stamp out the opposition party of the minority Tamil population Saturday following a week of ethnic violence that left more than 100 dead — most of them Tamils.

It also banned three small left-wing parties — the Communist Party of Sri Lanka, the People's Rights Front and the New Equal Society Party. The Communist Party holds one seat in Parliament, and the other two parties none.

The government radio announced all three parties were outlawed immediately. It reported later that the curfew had been extended until 5 a.m. Monday.

A constitutional amendment proposed by the government also bans parties or organizations that advocate "a separate state within the territory of Sri Lanka," an island nation off India. The dominant population is the Sinhalese.

The Tamil United Liberation Front, the main opposition party, advocates a separate Tamil state. Once the amendment becomes law, the 16 members of the Tamil United Liberation Front will lose their seats. The government party holds an overwhelming majority.

The amendment goes before the Supreme Court for review Monday, and before Parliament Thursday. It is expected to pass.

Under the measure, individuals who preach separatism would be subject to loss of all property and suspension of their civil rights for as long as seven years.

The amendment, which requires a two-thirds approval of the 168-member Parliament to become law, follows closely what President Junius Jayewardene said the government planned. Jayewardene's United National Party holds a five-sixths majority in the legislature, ensuring the amendment's passage.

Cuban government says 'no' to T-shirt

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Cuban government has complained to American officials over a Marine guard at the U.S. diplomatic office in Havana who was seen wearing a T-shirt emblazoned with "Cuba si, Fidel no," the State Department said Saturday.

Press officer Sue Pittman said the guard, Cpl. John Baerwald of Baltimore, "is going to be leaving Cuba tomorrow, but it is at the end of his normal tour of duty." She said the normal tour for Marine guards at the Havana post was about six months.

Ms. Pittman said Baerwald had been wearing a T-shirt with "Cuba si, Fidel no" on it.

Describing the reaction of Cuban authorities, Ms. Pittman said: "They raised the issue with us, but I don't know that it was actually a protest.

Soviet minister warns of retaliatory action

MOSCOW (AP) — Defense Minister Dmitri Ustinov said Saturday the Soviet Union is not seeking nuclear superiority, but warned again that it would take retaliatory measures if U.S. missiles were deployed in Western Europe.

"The Soviet...missiles are only a counterbalance to the nuclear potential of the NATO countries in Europe, including to their missiles," Ustinov told the official Tass news agency.

He said "in conditions of the growth of the military threat it would be absolutely inadmissible for us to expose to a risk the peaceful labor of the peoples of the countries of the socialist community.

"We are duty bound to...take such countermeasures that will make the military threat to the territory of the U.S.A., and the countries on whose territories American missiles will be deployed, the same as the U.S.A. is trying to create for the Soviet Union and our allies."

Warden leads search, rescue of game from African drought

CHIREDZI, Zimbabwe (AP) — Game warden Clem Coetsee knelt on the barren earth, aimed his rifle at a white rhino bull 40 yards away and squeezed off one round.

At 3,000 pounds, the animal was 500 pounds underweight, hide hanging loosely from his ungainly frame.

The bull was a prime candidate for the search-and-rescue operation Coetsee was leading to save wild game from the ravages of drought across southern Africa.

The shot sent a barbed dart, loaded with 10 milligrams of morphine derivative, a full two inches into the rhino's rump. Startled, the bull and the rhino cow and calf with him began a two-mile trot through the bush to evade the men pursuing them.

Twenty minutes later, the bull slowed dizzily, then slumped over. Two dozen men rolled the rhino onto a pallet and winched him aboard a truck for the trip to pens on Lone Star Ranch.

There, the rhino was injected with a stimulant. He awoke, staggered to his feet and joined seven other rhinos captured by Coetsee's National Parks team. The rhino cow and calf left behind were to be the next day's targets.

Operations like this could mean salvation for the white rhino and three other severely threatened species in southeast Zimbabwe, where a two-year drought is devastating one of southern Africa's richest wildlife areas.

GAME RANCHERS and parks officials plan to capture 28 rhinos, 300 of the region's 600 rare and stately sable antelope, 60 giant Lichtenstein hartebeest and a breeding herd of 30 snorting, playful wildebeest. The captures are taking place on 11 private ranches in a 100-square-mile area, home for a major portion of Zimbabwe's wildlife.

The rescued animals will wait out the drought in pens on the ranches, fed on sugar cane tops and horse feed. They will be released in March at the end of the southern hemisphere's summer, if it rains and the grass grows again.

The bush is bare now, with nothing for grazing animals to eat in the landscape of mopani trees and enormous baobabs. The only sparse grass is gray, two years old and unpalatable. None grew this year. Rainfall totalled only four inches, compared to 20 inches in an average year.

The game ranches have won acclaim from wildlife groups for successfully cropping impala, kudu and other buck for local sales of venison, while maintaining a stock of animals for tourist and hunting safaris. Owner Tommy Warth said 40 impala were killed weekly for the butchery on his 34,000-acre Sarvo Estates ranch.

Colin Saunders, head of the National Parks Advisory Board, said game ranching and safaris earned Zimbabwe well over $1 million last year. Civil turmoil elsewhere in the country has caused numerous tour cancellations this year, although the troubles have not touched the southeast of the country.

A more serious problem in this region along the Mozambican border is poaching. Lone Star owner Ray Sparrow said he has counted up to 20 poachers on his 100,000-acre property on a moonlit night, some of them armed with bows and arrows, snares and dogs.

NEVERTHELESS, populations of most species had increased on the ranches until the drought.

"Up to now we've lost about 20 percent of our animals. It hasn't reached its worst proportions yet. I'm sure we'll lose 80 to 90 percent of our game by the end of the (Southern Hemisphere) winter," Warth said.

Dissidents appeal to U.S.

MOSCOW (AP) — In letters received by Western correspondents Saturday, five imprisoned dissidents appealed to the U.S. Congress to fight what they called the "evil" of Soviet labor camps.

Copies of the letter distributed to the correspondents in Moscow were titled "Telegram from Perm Camp No. 35" and carried the address, "To the Congress of the U.S.A.."

Referring to themselves as "residents of the many-million communist gulags," the dissidents said they were writing about "slave labor in the U.S.S.R.

"Only a resolute struggle against evil, and not ephemeral successes in diplomacy and trade, can guarantee the normal existence of our people. Be firm," the letter said.

It was signed by Ivan Kovalev, a biologist sentenced to five years in a labor camp in 1982; Valery Senderev, a mathematician sentenced to seven years last March; writer Anatoly Marchenko, serving a 10-year term that began in 1981, and Andrei Shilkov and Stepan Khmara. Their sentences could not be determined.

A separate unsigned document said Senderov was refusing to work and had ripped the prisoner's number from his uniform to protest the seizure and destruction of mathematical works he had written while in the labor camp.

It said officials took away Senderov's Bible, a crucifix and a prayerbook.

They also confiscated and destroyed letters to Senderov's mother and other relatives containing mathematical treatises, and told him he was imprisoned for "re-education and not mathematical studies," the document said.

Senderov was convicted of "anti-Soviet propaganda and agitation."

PLO factions call for cease-fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — PLO rebels and Yasser Arafat's loyalists called a cease-fire Saturday after eight days of fighting left 42 people dead and 75 injured in east Lebanon, police and local reporters said.

One stray shell struck a Syrian army position near the embattled town of Taanayel in the Bekaa Valley overnight, wounding a colonel and four soldiers, reporters said in dispatches telephoned from the scene.

The cease-fire took effect at daybreak. In the final eight hours of battle, loyalists of Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization faction captured all positions they had lost to the Syrian-backed mutineers the last two days in the strategic town of Jdeita, 20 miles east of Beirut, the dispatches said.

In Taanayel, leftist political parties allied with the PLO met with Syrian army intelligence officers in charge of the Bekaa and proposed a truce in which warring guerrillas would simultaneously withdraw from five embattled towns in central Bekaa, reporters said.

The plan suggests that Arafat's loyalists and the mutineers under the command of Col. Saed Mousa withdraw all their fighters in phases from Jdeita, Jlala, Taanayel, Saadnayel and Kfar Zabad, except for a few administrators in each town, reporters said.

Leftist groups would form militia to oversee the proposed pullout and patrol the five towns and their outskirts, according to the reported plan.

The towns run along nine miles of the Beirut-Damascus highway near the Syrian border.

Local commanders of Arafat's and Abu Mousa's followers were informed of the plan.

The rebels say Arafat and his dominant Fatah PLO faction are too soft in their dealings with the United States, and they want a bigger say in the decisions made by Fatah, plus administrative and financial reforms in the organization.

Arafat has accused Syria of masterminding the mutiny, which broke out May 7. He charges that Syria wants the PLO under its control.

The PLO Central Council, which makes policy, will hold an emergency meeting in Tunis on Wednesday to discuss the split. In its report on the scheduled meeting, the PLO's official news agency did not say if rebel leaders were invited.

In northern Lebanon, police prepared a 500-man force to take control of the port of Tripoli, the nation's second-largest city, from warring Moslem militiamen. Two days of talks with militia commanders failed to persuade them to call in their gunmen from the streets and allow police to patrol the city, police said.

Pro- and anti-Syrian militiamen seized seven key positions in the city's densely populated Kubbeh seaside neighborhood and the hilltop Kalla district last Thursday after Syrian soldiers pulled out without warning to the outskirts of the city. The move kindled fears of more street battles in Tripoli, a city of 500,000 people, 50 miles north of Beirut.

In Beirut, President Amin Gemayel was reported making private contacts in hopes of reconciling Christian and Druse militia in the central, Chouf Mountain region before the Israelis pull out of the area.

The Voice of Lebanon radio of the rightist Christian Phalange Party said the president hoped the Lebanese army could move in without trouble when the Israelis leave.

Rivalries may yet kill planned troop pullout

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — Unless Syria does a surprising about-face and pulls its troops out of Lebanon, the Israeli-Lebanese withdrawal agreement appears just about dead, another casualty of deep-seated Middle East rivalries.

"Obviously, we have got a problem," a senior State Department official told reporters after meetings here last week with Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Defense Minister Moshe Arens.

Although the meetings focused on Israel's controversial troop redeployment plan, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and other officials sought assurances that Israel wasn't entirely disregarding its agreement with Lebanon.

The agreement was reached with Shultz' help last May 17 after months of painstaking effort. Although approved by both Lebanon and Israel, it has never gone into effect because of what is proving to be a crucial omission — Syria.

Although Syria is not even mentioned in the document itself, the Israelis say they won't pull their troops out of Lebanon as long as Syrian troops remain. The United States has recognized the Israeli position on this point in a so-called side letter to the Lebanese-Israeli agreement.

The Syrian government of President Hafez el-Assad opposes the agreement and says it won't withdraw. An estimated 50,000 Syrian troops occupy about half of Lebanon.

As the agreement provides that Israeli troops must completely evacuate the country in an 8- to 12-week period after the agreement goes into effect, the Israelis are not anxious for it to go into effect fully — but they do want it to go into effect in part. Israel wants to realize the political benefits.

Arens told reporters here that "the agreement as written cannot be implemented as yet. But we are trying to implement pieces and parts of the agreement and we see our redeployment as in the context of an eventual implementation of this whole agreement.'"

The Lebanese say that as Syria is not mentioned in the agreement, Israel is obliged to pull out regardless of what the Syrians do, once the agreement is in effect. But as the government of President Amin Gemayel knows full well it is too weak to compel Israel to do anything, it isn't pressing to put it into effect. Lebanon opposes partial implementation.

The Reagan administration is in the middle. It supports Israel's position on Syria, as outlined in the "side letter" recognizing that Israel shouldn't have to leave unless Syria does. Lebanon is not a party to the side letter.

But the Americans also are opposed to partial implementation. One State Department Mideast expert, who insisted on anonymity, complained, "The Israelis want half-a-loaf — the good half."

Officials also say privately that Shultz, Shamir and Arens were stretching the point when they agreed after the talks here that Israel's troop redeployment was within "the context" of the withdrawal agreement. Gemayel has opposed redeployment, charging it will lead to permanent occupation of southern Lebanon where the Israeli troops will concentrate.

There is nothing in the agreement itself that provides for anything less than a complete Israeli withdrawal. But the administration has decided against opposing the redeployment — partly because the Israelis would do it anyway and partly because the issue isn't considered serious enough to justify a new strain in U.S.-Israeli relations with a U.S. presidential election looming next year.

Reagan's special Mideast envoy, Robert C. McFarlane, was en route to the Middle East this weekend to make another try at getting Syria to engage in a coordinated pull-out with Israel, but officials said privately that they were not optimistic.

A senior official said in an interview that the feeling is growing within the State Department that Syria won't withdraw because it wants to permanently dominate Lebanon — even at the cost of a major armed clash with Israel that Syria knows it would probably lose. The official insisted on anonymity.

Reagan said at his press conference last week that Syria apparently wants to "grab off some territory for themselves" in Lebanon, a remark that brought an angry retort from Damascus.

All this bodes ill for the agreement, which was hailed as a major diplomatic success for Shultz and the administration when it was approved. With the Israelis withdrawing to southern Lebanon, and the Syrians sitting tight in eastern Lebanon, the stage is set for an indefinite partition of Lebanon.

Israeli officials said Shultz erred in not involving Syria in the negotiations. But it isn't clear whether the outcome would have been any different if Syria had been consulted.

Shultz has said he didn't consult Syria because he trusted previous assurances from Damascus that it would withdraw its troops when the Israelis left. But the Syrian assurances were based on an unconditional Israeli withdrawal, and the May 17 agreement contains several conditions, including steps toward normalization of relations between Israel and Lebanon.

Democrats pursue CIA's funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, having won a vote against CIA backing for rightist Nicaraguan rebels, are now taking aim at the money needed to pay for that covert support after Oct. 1.

House Intelligence Committee Democrats have discussed not only eliminating the $19 million specifically earmarked for the aid but drastically reducing the CIA director's secret "contingency fund" that has been drawn on heavily to pay for the Nicaragua program, congressional sources said.

Maneuvering in Congress over the CIA's classified budget began in earnest after the House voted 228-195 Thursday to stop an estimated $30 million in covert U.S. aid to the 10,000 "contras" — or counter-revolutionaries — fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government.

The bill now goes to the Republican-controlled Senate where it is given little chance of passage. But even if the Senate rejects the bill, the $30 million only carries the program until the start of the next fiscal year, Oct. 1.

Both supporters and opponents of the bill agree that the House vote will stiffen Democratic determination to fight President Reagan's efforts to obtain new funding for the covert action — a key part of his Central America policy — after Oct. 1.

"That's exactly where the battle will be," said Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., an opponent of the covert action on the Senate Intelligence Committee.

One State Department official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said he doubted the legislative battle would "end up in any serious erosion of the administration's flexibility," but added that the House vote was "an expression of the House will" that could cause complications.

The official said an eventual conference between the House and Senate on their differences might lead to a compromise that would cut off the CIA aid if Nicaragua is found to have halted support for leftist guerrillas in El Salvador — language similar to that unsuccessfully pushed Thursday by House Republicans and some conservative Democrats.

But the official said he doubted Congress would actually "fool with the financial mechanisms" for the intelligence agencies because that could damage the president's ability to respond to foreign crises.

Without approval by the House and Senate, the administration will be without authorization to pay for the Nicaraguan covert action after Oct. 1, the start of the federal government's new fiscal year. That means action must be taken by then or the program will die.

In an interview, Durenberger said the CIA exceeded this year's budget for the covert action in March or April — only halfway through the current fiscal year — and has been funding it since then out of the contingency fund.

The size of that contingency fund is a closely held secret, and one congressional official, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said that even if Congress eliminates all money earmarked for the Nicaraguan covert action, the administration could get around such an action by using the contingency fund.

Another source said House Intelligence Committee Democrats have discussed preventing such a possibility by reducing the fund to about $2 million and requiring the administration to obtain specific approval for other expenditures.

Such moves, however, would be unprecedented challenges to the president's current wide discretion over intelligence activities.

The battle over the funding will be fought out in a little understood and normally highly secret budget process for U.S. intelligence activities.

Under U.S. law, a president can order a covert action — an attempt to secretly influence the politics of another nation — simply by making a "finding" that the effort is in the interests of national security.

According to sources familiar with the process, a new program is paid out of the contingency fund until the start of the next fiscal year when it is then included in the CIA's budget as a separate line item.

At that time, the House and Senate Intelligence Committees can reduce, increase or eliminate funding for a specific covert action. But the administration can circumvent any restrictions by again returning to the contingency fund, the sources said.

Like other spending bills, the intelligence budget must be approved by the full House and Senate.

Cold front spawns Midwest storms

By The Associated Press

A cold front pushed thunderstorms across the upper Midwest to the Great Lakes region and the Ohio Valley on Saturday, and thunderstorms also were scattered across the Gulf Coast to Florida.

Strong thunderstorms moved rapidly across the central Plains into the upper Mississippi Valley.

A tornado touched down west of Springdale, Iowa, near Moline, Ill., and Jackson, Mich., got 1.12 inches of rain.

Along the Gulf Coast, New Orleans got 0.40 of an inch of rain and West Palm Beach, Fla., got 0.47 of an inch.

Widely scattered thunderstorms developed over the Great Basin.

In the Northeast, showers moved through New England, dropping 0.60 of an inch at Houlton, Maine.

Warm weather continued over the southern Plains, with temperatures in the upper 90s scattered from southern Kansas to northern Texas, but most of the Midwest was cooler with temperatures in the 80s.

At the same time, parts of the Southeast had cool weather, with a record low for the date of 66 at Meridian, Miss., and record-equaling lows of 63 at Augusta, Ga., and 62 at Columbia, S.C.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 64 degrees at Duluth, Minn., and Arcata, Calif., to 110 at Palm Springs, Calif. The low for the day was 42 at West Yellowstone, Mont.

Technology launches arms race into space age

WASHINGTON (AP) — New technologies like lasers and improved spy satellites are driving the arms race into space and could lead to a war between the United States and the Soviet Union unless the superpowers share their discoveries, a report warned Saturday.

The report, prepared by Worldwatch Institute, a think-tank that has been critical of the administration's arms build-up, comes amid a growing concern over weapons in space.

The major danger arises from improved information-gathering technologies such as satellites and super-computers that are making weapons vulnerable to attack, said the report.

"Non-weapons such as sensors, communication systems and computers have become as important to the strategic balance as weapons improvement," the report by Worldwatch researcher Daniel Deudney said.

"As a result, the measure of military strength has shifted away from the power and speed of weapons to the ability to detect and target the enemy's forces and to hide and communicate with one's own," Deudney said.

According to Deudney, the so-called "transparency revolution" is highlighted by the fight over the MX missile, the new nuclear-tipped weapon Congress authorized last week.

Both defenders and critics of the missile agree that it might be vulnerable to a first strike by increasingly accurate Soviet missiles. The Pentagon has backed recommendations to build a new "Midgetman" weapon that would be mobile and thus easier to hide from attack.

As earth-based weapons are becoming vulnerable, the two nations are looking to space to defend themselves, Deudney said, noting President Reagan's "Stars Wars" speech endorsing research into futuristic technologies as a way to protect the United States from nuclear attack.

The Soviet Union already has a crude, but operational, anti-satellite (ASAT) system designed to attack U.S. satellites, which the Pentagon heavily relies on for surveillance and communication.

Later this summer, the United States is set to begin testing its own ASAT weapons, a sophisticated system involving small rockets fired from the noses of high-flying F-15 jets.

Two weeks ago, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved a resolution urging Reagan to seek negotiations with the Soviets aimed at a treaty to eliminate ASAT weapons.

Deudney endorsed that proposal, warning that attacks on satellites "could lead to one side concluding that such strikes are the prelude to a general attack that could touch off a pre-emptive nuclear strike."

Advances in seismic detection, accoustic devices, and satellite observation have made most weapons vulnerable, Deudney said.

"Because of these little-noticed military applications of information technologies and natural sciences, almost any weapon that can be detected and targeted can now be destroyed, making the superpowers vulnerable as never before," he reported.

Instead of competing, the two sides should be cooperating, he proposed. He suggested that research into particle beams and high-energy lasers should be shared, which would give neither side an advantage.

Europe sizzles under thrall of record-breaking hot spell

LONDON (AP) — After one of the wettest springs in memory, this month's spell of hot, dry weather is breaking records from Italy to Amsterdam and across the English Channel in Britain.

"Barring a snow blizzard" on the last day of the month, a spokesman for the British Weather Center said, "we should get higher average temperatures than any other month since records began 82 years ago."

He said temperatures have topped 80 degrees for 16 consecutive days compared with the previous record of 12 days in August 1975.

It hit 104 degrees last week in Ihringen, West Germany — the country's hottest day in 200 years of record-keeping — and Spain is having its worst drought in more than 150 years.

West Bank Arabs stone car

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Arabs in the occupied West Bank town of Qalqilya stoned a car Saturday, slightly injuring the Israeli driver, the military command said. Several youths were arrested, Israel Radio reported.

The command said the stones were thrown during a break in the curfew imposed last Thursday after a shooting rampage in Hebron left three Arabs dead.

Earlier Saturday, Israeli troops reimposed the curfew on the marketplace in Nablus after stones were thrown at Israeli vehicles, and the curfew in Hebron was still in force, the command said.

The Arabs blame extremist Jewish settlers for the shooting spree at the Islamic University in Hebron but no suspects are known to have been arrested despite an investigation of the violence.

Taiwan seizes banned recorders

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Customs officers have seized 1,640 smuggled Japanese video tape recorders, worth $1.9 million, in Hualien port, 150 miles southeast of Taipei, officials said Saturday.

The recorders, made by the Sony Corp., were seized Friday when officers inspected 40 wooden crates stored in the port's warehouse.

Officials said a Taipei trading company was allegedly involved in the smuggling operation. They declined to give the name of the company pending further investigation.

The Taiwanese government banned all imports of video tape recorders in February to protect domestic manufacturers. Demand for the contraband Japanese models has been great, officials said.

Dutch Radicals announce plans

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — The Dutch Radical Party on Saturday announced plans to field a slate of Dutch environmentalist candidates — modeled upon the West German Greens movement — to run in next year's European Parliament elections.

Ria Beckers, the Radical Party's parliamentary leader, said candidates will be drawn from progressives of other Dutch parties as well as Radicals to run in the June 1984 elections.

The Radicals' initiative is part of a strategy to form a Europe-wide alliance of environmentally minded political parties, according to Ms. Beckers. The Dutch Radicals and the German Greens conferred in Bonn recently.

U.S. pledges aid to Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The United States on Saturday pledged a $13 million increase in aid to Pakistan under a $1.62 billion package to be spread over six years, officials said.

The first aid payment of $30 million is to help Pakistan become more self-sufficient in energy.

Officials said an eight-member congressional team, led by Clarence D. Long, D-Md., would visit Pakistan on Aug. 23. Long is chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee for foreign operations.

Also visiting Pakistan during the congressional summer recess will be Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., who heads the House Foreign Relations Subcommittee for Asian and Pacific Affairs, officials said.

Wife saves husband from bull

SHOTTLE, England (AP) — Brenda Wigley, trying to save her husband from a rampaging bull, rammed her car into the animal 20 times as it gored him at their farm in this English Midlands town.

Howard Wigley, 46, suffered chest injuries and was in the intensive care unit at Derbyshire Royal Infirmary, where a spokeswoman said Saturday his condition was "poor but stable."

Earlier this week, Wigley was leading the young Holstein bull when it turned on him, knocking him to the ground. His wife, hearing his cries for help, dashed to the farm's tractor, which wouldn't start. She then jumped into the car and sped toward the bull.

"She rammed it 20 or 30 times before it turned its attention away from dad to the car," the Wigleys' daughter Sarah said.

When the bull turned its rage to the car's radiator, Mrs. Wigley helped her husband into the back seat and drove to the hospital, where she was treated for shock.

Chinese complete power station

PEKING (AP) — Construction of the first hydroelectric power station on China's longest river, the Yangtze, has been completed, the official Xinhua news agency reported Saturday.

The 965-megawatt Erjiang station — which will serve Shanghai and developed areas of east China — is one of two stations at the 8,255-foot-long Gezhouba Dam in Hubei province. The 1,750-megawatt Dajiang station there is expected to go into operation in 1986, Xinhua said.

The National Weather Service forecast for Sunday predicts rain stretching from the Great Lakes through New England and from the western Great Lakes into parts of the northeastern Plains. Rain is expected in the Central Gulf and southwestern parts of the country.

Clouds leave cooler temperatures

Clouds which promised a few drops of moisture begged off Saturday, but left cooler temperatures for today and Monday.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it should be fair and cooler through Monday with temperatures settling in the mid- to upper 90s.

Today is expected to in the upper 90s, cooling to the low 70s tonight. Easterly winds are expected to travel 5-15 mph. Monday should be sunny with temperatures reaching the mid-90s.

Saturday's high of 99 missed the record high of 106 set in 1937, and the overnight low of 71 was warmer than the record low of 60 set in 1971.

Cold front spawns Midwest storms

By The Associated Press

A cold front pushed thunderstorms across the upper Midwest to the Great Lakes region and the Ohio Valley on Saturday, and thunderstorms also were scattered across the Gulf Coast to Florida.

Strong thunderstorms moved rapidly across the central Plains into the upper Mississippi Valley.

A tornado touched down west of Springdale, Iowa, near Moline, Ill., and Jackson, Mich., got 1.12 inches of rain.

Along the Gulf Coast, New Orleans got 0.40 of an inch of rain and West Palm Beach, Fla., got 0.47 of an inch.

Widely scattered thunderstorms developed over the Great Basin.

In the Northeast, showers moved through New England, dropping 0.60 of an inch at Houlton, Maine.

Warm weather continued over the southern Plains, with temperatures in the upper 90s scattered from southern Kansas to northern Texas, but most of the Midwest was cooler with temperatures in the 80s.

At the same time, parts of the Southeast had cool weather, with a record low for the date of 66 at Meridian, Miss., and record-equaling lows of 63 at Augusta, Ga., and 62 at Columbia, S.C.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 64 degrees at Duluth, Minn., and Arcata, Calif., to 110 at Palm Springs, Calif. The low for the day was 42 at West Yellowstone, Mont.

PLO factions call for cease-fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — PLO rebels and Yasser Arafat's loyalists called a cease-fire Saturday after eight days of fighting left 42 people dead and 75 injured in east Lebanon, police and local reporters said.

One stray shell struck a Syrian army position near the embattled town of Taanayel in the Bekaa Valley overnight, wounding a colonel and four soldiers, reporters said in dispatches telephoned from the scene.

The cease-fire took effect at daybreak. In the final eight hours of battle, loyalists of Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization faction captured all positions they had lost to the Syrian-backed mutineers the last two days in the strategic town of Jdeita, 20 miles east of Beirut, the dispatches said.

In Taanayel, leftist political parties allied with the PLO met with Syrian army intelligence officers in charge of the Bekaa and proposed a truce in which warring guerrillas would simultaneously withdraw from five embattled towns in central Bekaa, reporters said.

The plan suggests that Arafat's loyalists and the mutineers under the command of Col. Saed Mousa withdraw all their fighters in phases from Jdeita, Jlaia, Taanayel, Saadnayel and Kfar Zabad, except for a few administrators in each town, reporters said.

Leftist groups would form militia to oversee the proposed pullout and patrol the five towns and their outskirts, according to the reported plan.

The towns run along nine miles of the Beirut-Damascus highway near the Syrian border.

Local commanders of Arafat's and Abu Mousa's followers were informed of the plan.

The rebels say Arafat and his dominant Fatah PLO faction are too soft in their dealings with the United States, and they want a bigger say in the decisions made by Fatah, plus administrative and financial reforms in the organization.

Arafat has accused Syria of masterminding the mutiny, which broke out May 7. He charges that Syria wants the PLO under its control.

The PLO Central Council, which makes policy, will hold an emergency meeting in Tunis on Wednesday to discuss the split. In its report on the scheduled meeting, the PLO's official news agency did not say if rebel leaders were invited.

In northern Lebanon, police prepared a 500-man force to take control of the port of Tripoli, the nation's second-largest city, from warring Moslem militiamen. Two days of talks with militia commanders failed to persuade them to call in their gunmen from the streets and allow police to patrol the city, police said.

Pro- and anti-Syrian militiamen seized seven key positions in the city's densely populated Kubbeh seaside neighborhood and the hilltop Kalla district last Thursday after Syrian soldiers pulled out without warning to the outskirts of the city. The move kindled fears of more street battles in Tripoli, a city of 500,000 people, 50 miles north of Beirut.

In Beirut, President Amin Gemayel was reported making private contacts in hopes of reconciling Christian and Druse militia in the central, Chouf Mountain region before the Israelis pull out of the area.

The Voice of Lebanon radio of the rightist Christian Phalange Party said the president hoped the Lebanese army could move in without trouble when the Israelis leave.

Rivalries may yet kill planned troop pullout

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — Unless Syria does a surprising about-face and pulls its troops out of Lebanon, the Israeli-Lebanese withdrawal agreement appears just about dead, another casualty of deep-seated Middle East rivalries.

"Obviously, we have got a problem," a senior State Department official told reporters after meetings here last week with Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Defense Minister Moshe Arens.

Although the meetings focused on Israel's controversial troop redeployment plan, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and other officials sought assurances that Israel wasn't entirely disregarding its agreement with Lebanon.

The agreement was reached with Shultz' help last May 17 after months of painstaking effort. Although approved by both Lebanon and Israel, it has never gone into effect because of what is proving to be a crucial omission — Syria.

Although Syria is not even mentioned in the document itself, the Israelis say they won't pull their troops out of Lebanon as long as Syrian troops remain. The United States has recognized the Israeli position on this point in a so-called side letter to the Lebanese-Israeli agreement.

The Syrian government of President Hafez el-Assad opposes the agreement and says it won't withdraw. An estimated 50,000 Syrian troops occupy about half of Lebanon.

As the agreement provides that Israeli troops must completely evacuate the country in an 8- to 12-week period after the agreement goes into effect, the Israelis are not anxious for it to go into effect fully — but they do want it to go into effect in part. Israel wants to realize the political benefits.

Arens told reporters here that "the agreement as written cannot be implemented as yet. But we are trying to implement pieces and parts of the agreement and we see our redeployment as in the context of an eventual implementation of this whole agreement.'"

The Lebanese say that as Syria is not mentioned in the agreement, Israel is obliged to pull out regardless of what the Syrians do, once the agreement is in effect. But as the government of President Amin Gemayel knows full well it is too weak to compel Israel to do anything, it isn't pressing to put it into effect. Lebanon opposes partial implementation.

The Reagan administration is in the middle. It supports Israel's position on Syria, as outlined in the "side letter" recognizing that Israel shouldn't have to leave unless Syria does. Lebanon is not a party to the side letter.

But the Americans also are opposed to partial implementation. One State Department Mideast expert, who insisted on anonymity, complained, "The Israelis want half-a-loaf — the good half."

Officials also say privately that Shultz, Shamir and Arens were stretching the point when they agreed after the talks here that Israel's troop redeployment was within "the context" of the withdrawal agreement. Gemayel has opposed redeployment, charging it will lead to permanent occupation of southern Lebanon where the Israeli troops will concentrate.

There is nothing in the agreement itself that provides for anything less than a complete Israeli withdrawal. But the administration has decided against opposing the redeployment — partly because the Israelis would do it anyway and partly because the issue isn't considered serious enough to justify a new strain in U.S.-Israeli relations with a U.S. presidential election looming next year.

Reagan's special Mideast envoy, Robert C. McFarlane, was en route to the Middle East this weekend to make another try at getting Syria to engage in a coordinated pull-out with Israel, but officials said privately that they were not optimistic.

A senior official said in an interview that the feeling is growing within the State Department that Syria won't withdraw because it wants to permanently dominate Lebanon — even at the cost of a major armed clash with Israel that Syria knows it would probably lose. The official insisted on anonymity.

Reagan said at his press conference last week that Syria apparently wants to "grab off some territory for themselves" in Lebanon, a remark that brought an angry retort from Damascus.

All this bodes ill for the agreement, which was hailed as a major diplomatic success for Shultz and the administration when it was approved. With the Israelis withdrawing to southern Lebanon, and the Syrians sitting tight in eastern Lebanon, the stage is set for an indefinite partition of Lebanon.

Israeli officials said Shultz erred in not involving Syria in the negotiations. But it isn't clear whether the outcome would have been any different if Syria had been consulted.

Shultz has said he didn't consult Syria because he trusted previous assurances from Damascus that it would withdraw its troops when the Israelis left. But the Syrian assurances were based on an unconditional Israeli withdrawal, and the May 17 agreement contains several conditions, including steps toward normalization of relations between Israel and Lebanon.

Democrats pursue CIA's funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, having won a vote against CIA backing for rightist Nicaraguan rebels, are now taking aim at the money needed to pay for that covert support after Oct. 1.

House Intelligence Committee Democrats have discussed not only eliminating the $19 million specifically earmarked for the aid but drastically reducing the CIA director's secret "contingency fund" that has been drawn on heavily to pay for the Nicaragua program, congressional sources said.

Maneuvering in Congress over the CIA's classified budget began in earnest after the House voted 228-195 Thursday to stop an estimated $30 million in covert U.S. aid to the 10,000 "contras" — or counter-revolutionaries — fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government.

The bill now goes to the Republican-controlled Senate where it is given little chance of passage. But even if the Senate rejects the bill, the $30 million only carries the program until the start of the next fiscal year, Oct. 1.

Both supporters and opponents of the bill agree that the House vote will stiffen Democratic determination to fight President Reagan's efforts to obtain new funding for the covert action — a key part of his Central America policy — after Oct. 1.

"That's exactly where the battle will be," said Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., an opponent of the covert action on the Senate Intelligence Committee.

One State Department official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said he doubted the legislative battle would "end up in any serious erosion of the administration's flexibility," but added that the House vote was "an expression of the House will" that could cause complications.

The official said an eventual conference between the House and Senate on their differences might lead to a compromise that would cut off the CIA aid if Nicaragua is found to have halted support for leftist guerrillas in El Salvador — language similar to that unsuccessfully pushed Thursday by House Republicans and some conservative Democrats.

But the official said he doubted Congress would actually "fool with the financial mechanisms" for the intelligence agencies because that could damage the president's ability to respond to foreign crises.

Without approval by the House and Senate, the administration will be without authorization to pay for the Nicaraguan covert action after Oct. 1, the start of the federal government's new fiscal year. That means action must be taken by then or the program will die.

In an interview, Durenberger said the CIA exceeded this year's budget for the covert action in March or April — only halfway through the current fiscal year — and has been funding it since then out of the contingency fund.

The size of that contingency fund is a closely held secret, and one congressional official, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said that even if Congress eliminates all money earmarked for the Nicaraguan covert action, the administration could get around such an action by using the contingency fund.

Another source said House Intelligence Committee Democrats have discussed preventing such a possibility by reducing the fund to about $2 million and requiring the administration to obtain specific approval for other expenditures.

Such moves, however, would be unprecedented challenges to the president's current wide discretion over intelligence activities.

The battle over the funding will be fought out in a little understood and normally highly secret budget process for U.S. intelligence activities.

Under U.S. law, a president can order a covert action — an attempt to secretly influence the politics of another nation — simply by making a "finding" that the effort is in the interests of national security.

According to sources familiar with the process, a new program is paid out of the contingency fund until the start of the next fiscal year when it is then included in the CIA's budget as a separate line item.

At that time, the House and Senate Intelligence Committees can reduce, increase or eliminate funding for a specific covert action. But the administration can circumvent any restrictions by again returning to the contingency fund, the sources said.

Like other spending bills, the intelligence budget must be approved by the full House and Senate.

Technology launches arms race into space age

WASHINGTON (AP) — New technologies like lasers and improved spy satellites are driving the arms race into space and could lead to a war between the United States and the Soviet Union unless the superpowers share their discoveries, a report warned Saturday.

The report, prepared by Worldwatch Institute, a think-tank that has been critical of the administration's arms build-up, comes amid a growing concern over weapons in space.

The major danger arises from improved information-gathering technologies such as satellites and super-computers that are making weapons vulnerable to attack, said the report.

"Non-weapons such as sensors, communication systems and computers have become as important to the strategic balance as weapons improvement," the report by Worldwatch researcher Daniel Deudney said.

"As a result, the measure of military strength has shifted away from the power and speed of weapons to the ability to detect and target the enemy's forces and to hide and communicate with one's own," Deudney said.

According to Deudney, the so-called "transparency revolution" is highlighted by the fight over the MX missile, the new nuclear-tipped weapon Congress authorized last week.

Both defenders and critics of the missile agree that it might be vulnerable to a first strike by increasingly accurate Soviet missiles. The Pentagon has backed recommendations to build a new "Midgetman" weapon that would be mobile and thus easier to hide from attack.

As earth-based weapons are becoming vulnerable, the two nations are looking to space to defend themselves, Deudney said, noting President Reagan's "Stars Wars" speech endorsing research into futuristic technologies as a way to protect the United States from nuclear attack.

The Soviet Union already has a crude, but operational, anti-satellite (ASAT) system designed to attack U.S. satellites, which the Pentagon heavily relies on for surveillance and communication.

Later this summer, the United States is set to begin testing its own ASAT weapons, a sophisticated system involving small rockets fired from the noses of high-flying F-15 jets.

Two weeks ago, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved a resolution urging Reagan to seek negotiations with the Soviets aimed at a treaty to eliminate ASAT weapons.

Deudney endorsed that proposal, warning that attacks on satellites "could lead to one side concluding that such strikes are the prelude to a general attack that could touch off a pre-emptive nuclear strike."

Advances in seismic detection, accoustic devices, and satellite observation have made most weapons vulnerable, Deudney said.

"Because of these little-noticed military applications of information technologies and natural sciences, almost any weapon that can be detected and targeted can now be destroyed, making the superpowers vulnerable as never before," he reported.

Instead of competing, the two sides should be cooperating, he proposed. He suggested that research into particle beams and high-energy lasers should be shared, which would give neither side an advantage.

Europe sizzles under thrall of record-breaking hot spell

LONDON (AP) — After one of the wettest springs in memory, this month's spell of hot, dry weather is breaking records from Italy to Amsterdam and across the English Channel in Britain.

"Barring a snow blizzard" on the last day of the month, a spokesman for the British Weather Center said, "we should get higher average temperatures than any other month since records began 82 years ago."

He said temperatures have topped 80 degrees for 16 consecutive days compared with the previous record of 12 days in August 1975.

It hit 104 degrees last week in Ihringen, West Germany — the country's hottest day in 200 years of record-keeping — and Spain is having its worst drought in more than 150 years.

West Bank Arabs stone car

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Arabs in the occupied West Bank town of Qalqilya stoned a car Saturday, slightly injuring the Israeli driver, the military command said. Several youths were arrested, Israel Radio reported.

The command said the stones were thrown during a break in the curfew imposed last Thursday after a shooting rampage in Hebron left three Arabs dead.

Earlier Saturday, Israeli troops reimposed the curfew on the marketplace in Nablus after stones were thrown at Israeli vehicles, and the curfew in Hebron was still in force, the command said.

The Arabs blame extremist Jewish settlers for the shooting spree at the Islamic University in Hebron but no suspects are known to have been arrested despite an investigation of the violence.

Taiwan seizes banned recorders

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Customs officers have seized 1,640 smuggled Japanese video tape recorders, worth $1.9 million, in Hualien port, 150 miles southeast of Taipei, officials said Saturday.

The recorders, made by the Sony Corp., were seized Friday when officers inspected 40 wooden crates stored in the port's warehouse.

Officials said a Taipei trading company was allegedly involved in the smuggling operation. They declined to give the name of the company pending further investigation.

The Taiwanese government banned all imports of video tape recorders in February to protect domestic manufacturers. Demand for the contraband Japanese models has been great, officials said.

Dutch Radicals announce plans

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — The Dutch Radical Party on Saturday announced plans to field a slate of Dutch environmentalist candidates — modeled upon the West German Greens movement — to run in next year's European Parliament elections.

Ria Beckers, the Radical Party's parliamentary leader, said candidates will be drawn from progressives of other Dutch parties as well as Radicals to run in the June 1984 elections.

The Radicals' initiative is part of a strategy to form a Europe-wide alliance of environmentally minded political parties, according to Ms. Beckers. The Dutch Radicals and the German Greens conferred in Bonn recently.

U.S. pledges aid to Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The United States on Saturday pledged a $13 million increase in aid to Pakistan under a $1.62 billion package to be spread over six years, officials said.

The first aid payment of $30 million is to help Pakistan become more self-sufficient in energy.

Officials said an eight-member congressional team, led by Clarence D. Long, D-Md., would visit Pakistan on Aug. 23. Long is chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee for foreign operations.

Also visiting Pakistan during the congressional summer recess will be Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., who heads the House Foreign Relations Subcommittee for Asian and Pacific Affairs, officials said.

Wife saves husband from bull

SHOTTLE, England (AP) — Brenda Wigley, trying to save her husband from a rampaging bull, rammed her car into the animal 20 times as it gored him at their farm in this English Midlands town.

Howard Wigley, 46, suffered chest injuries and was in the intensive care unit at Derbyshire Royal Infirmary, where a spokeswoman said Saturday his condition was "poor but stable."

Earlier this week, Wigley was leading the young Holstein bull when it turned on him, knocking him to the ground. His wife, hearing his cries for help, dashed to the farm's tractor, which wouldn't start. She then jumped into the car and sped toward the bull.

"She rammed it 20 or 30 times before it turned its attention away from dad to the car," the Wigleys' daughter Sarah said.

When the bull turned its rage to the car's radiator, Mrs. Wigley helped her husband into the back seat and drove to the hospital, where she was treated for shock.

Chinese complete power station

PEKING (AP) — Construction of the first hydroelectric power station on China's longest river, the Yangtze, has been completed, the official Xinhua news agency reported Saturday.

The 985-megawatt Erjiang station — which will serve Shanghai and developed areas of east China — is one of two stations at the 8,255-foot-long Gezhouba Dam in Hubei province. The 1,750-megawatt Dajiang station there is expected to go into operation in 1986, Xinhua said.

U.S.S.R. economy lagging

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union will have to improve its lagging economy if it hopes to maintain its position as a military superpower in the 1990s and beyond, a Pentagon intelligence official has told Congress.

"The slowing of economic growth because of low productivity, among other reasons, endangers the long-term objective of maintaining a military force capable of providing a base for Soviet international legitimacy," said Maj. Gen. Schuyler Bissell, deputy director of the Defense Intelligence Agency.

Bissell's testimony, which was given to a closed hearing of a Joint Economic subcommittee on June 23, was released to reporters Saturday by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., the panel's vice chairman.

"Unless the Soviets are able to improve the economic system, their ability to sustain growth in the defense sector will be undermined, particularly in the long run," the Air Force officer said.

Since coming to power last November upon the death of Leonid Brezhnev, Communist Party leader Yuri Andropov appears to have fostered a new "willingness to acknowledge the nature of the economic problems and to discuss a range of possible changes" included limited decentralization, Bissell testified.

"Some actions taken since last November, albeit relatively minor, appear to be having positive results."

"Nevertheless, debate on major economic strategies and structural changes continues, and it will probably be some time before any decisions are made, and even longer before any possible changes could be implemented."

One thing unlikely to be changed, Bissell added, is the first call that military spending has on the economy. Soviet defense spending, which includes civilian space activities and internal security, consumed 14 percent to 16 percent of the nation's gross national product in 1981.

Number of lawyers may rise to 1 million

ATLANTA (AP) — The number of lawyers in America may hit 1 million by the mid-1990s, a statistic that led some lawyers attending the American Bar Association's national convention to wonder aloud Saturday about their profession's future health.

"We are perhaps reaching a point where the numbers are becoming more than we can handle," said Gary Huckaby, a Huntsville, Ala., lawyer and ABA official.

The explosion in numbers the past two decades has been dramatic. As traced in a statistical study submitted by Barbara Curran of the American Bar Foundation in Chicago, the number of U.S. lawyers has increased from 250,000 in 1960 to about 622,000 today.

"By the close of 1987, there will be 750,000 licensed lawyers," Ms. Curran said. And if law school admissions and the mortality rate among lawyers remain constant, she said, "We may expect that the legal profession will reach the 1 million mark by the mid-1990s."

In 1970, one of every 572 people in the country was a lawyer. Now, one of every 375 Americans is a lawyer, Ms. Curran said. In the nation's capital city, one of every 65 residents is a lawyer in private practice.

Several years ago, Chief Justice Warren Burger warned about "hordes of lawyers" descending upon society, hungry for work.

Burger, the nation's top-ranked judge, took another jab at lawyers this week. Speaking at the University of Notre Dame's London Law Center, he said too many American lawyers do not try to resolve conflicts but "act more like warriors eager to do battle than healers seeking peace."

Commenting on that theme, University of Wisconsin law professor Ted Finman said Saturday that the increasing numbers may bring to bear on lawyers "more pressure to create a demand for their services."

"That makes it more important for lawyers to concern themselves with the public good," Finman said. Lawyers of the future may have to be more concerned "about the virtue of what their clients want them to do ... consider the ethics, morality and social good" of such acts.

The "lawyer glut" is the topic of numerous programs being attended by some 10,000 ABA conventioneers.

ABA President Morris Harrell, a Dallas lawyer, said that while his 280,000-member organization was studying the ramifications of such growth, he was not unduly concerned. "The market place will take care of the situation," he said.

Huckaby, participating in a program originally entitled "Are There Too Many Lawyers?" but later renamed "The Legal Profession in the 1980s," agreed with Harrell.

"Statistics don't always tell us what they appear to say. I know of no nation, no civilization that has set about to exact such precise justice," Huckaby said.

He acknowledged, however, that the nation's legal system often does not live up to its aspirations. "The system will have to plead guilty to being inefficient," Huckaby said, adding that lawyers have a duty to lead efforts to improve the quality of justice.

Increasingly, that duty will fall to women. In 1960, there were about 7,000 women lawyers in the United States, about 2.6 percent of all lawyers. By 1980, the nation had more than 44,000 women lawyers.

Driver plows into food line killing one, injuring seven

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A car driven by an allegedly drunken driver plowed into a line of elderly and handicapped people waiting to receive surplus food Saturday, killing a woman and injuring seven others, police said.

The accident occurred at the Fifth Street Baptist Church, where people had gathered for distribution of government surplus food.

Police said a motorist, approximately three carlengths from the line, began gunning his motor and the car unexpectedly moved forward. The vehicle struck another car, which jumped the sidewalk and pinned three people against the side of the church, police reported.

They said the first vehicle continued moving and struck several more people before stopping.

Police identified the driver as Lawrence T. Briggs, 48, and said he was charged with driving on a revoked operator's license, failing to have insurance and public intoxication.

The name of the dead woman was withheld pending notification of next of kin.

Investigators to re-open case on forgotten body

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — Ten years after an unidentified body was sent to a morgue and forgotten, investigators have been reminded of ft and say they'll look for fresh leads in the death, which might be linked to an Indian or cult ritual.

"We had no idea of the case and naturally we're going to go ahead and re-open it and try and identify the person," said Eagle County sheriff's investigator Bill Bachman.

Bachman said the sheriff's department didn't know the body was still at the morgue until a reporter inquired last week.

He said a new investigation is feasible because new forensic methods might allow anthropologists to reconstruct a face from the skull for possible identification.

The decomposed body of a white male was found Sept. 16, 1973, buried in a cinder pile near the foot of Dotsero Crater, an extinct volcano five miles west of Gypsum.

Lumps of grass had been piled at the foot of the body, which was clothed in only an orange, hooded robe. On the corpse's fingers were nine rings representing serpents, fertility, love, peace, and great magic and power, Bachman said.

"There's something here that nobody looked at 10 years ago," he said. "So now we're looking at cults, and probably a cult that was in the Taos, New Mexico, area at that point in time."

He said an expert told investigators the rings were made in Taos or the Four Corners area of Arizona.

There were no signs of violence and an autopsy failed to establish a cause of death.

Anchorwoman's lawsuit exposes bias

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A TV anchorwoman's complaint that she lost her job because a station survey suggested she was not attractive or deferential enough toward male colleagues has exposed a subtle form of bias in which the viewer seems to be an unwitting accomplice.

"We have to face the fact," said Steve Murphy, news director at WOWT in Omaha, Neb., "that viewers do make judgments on what newscast they will watch, based on the newscaster and the perception they have of that newscaster, right or wrong.

"We don't go out and look at pretty faces and make judgments on that," Murphy said. "It is a happy development when you can find a pretty face who has a brain, and can report."

THE DEMAND for viewer acceptance has been demonstrated dramatically in Kansas City, where Christine Craft, 38, complained she was demoted at KMBC, a Metromedia, Inc., station, because a survey of viewers found her "unattractive, too old and not deferential to men."

Ms. Craft said in the opening stages of her $1.2 million federal trial, entering its second week Monday, that she was dropped as anchor Aug. 14, 1981, solely because she is a woman, that her male co-anchor was paid more for doing the same job and that station management fraudulently misrepresented the co-anchor's job to her.

None of a half-dozen news directors surveyed informally by The Associated Press listed age and appearance as primary considerations in choosing an anchorman or woman, but all agreed that audience perception could make or break a program.

"WHEN I SIT down to look at a tape," said Jeff Rosser, news director at WNEV in Boston, "the first thing, my first impression, is, do I feel this person is very strong? Appearance might have something to do with that."

"You put people on the air," said Dennis Herzig, news director at KSTP in Minneapolis, "and people look at them. That doesn't mean someone has to be beautiful. If you look at the most successful anchors in the country, many of them do not fit the pretty-boy, blow-combed stereotype. Appearance is a factor, but it's not the most important factor."

An employment survey released in April by Vernon A. Stone, director of the school of journalism at Southern Illinois University, showed women had made significant strides in broadcast news in recent years, and were working in 97 percent of the country's newsrooms, compared with 57 percent a decade ago.

THERE IS A pervasive feeling, nonetheless, that despite changing attitudes in recent years, an anchorman's career will be secure longer than his female colleague's.

"I don't know if we'll be allowed to grow old and wrinkly," said Connie Chung, 37, who takes over as anchor of "NBC News At Sunrise" on Monday. "Men are allowed to be bald and fat. People are very picky about women on the air.

Family sues after bridge falls

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — The family of one victim of the Interstate 95 bridge collapse has sued the state, claiming the span over the Mianus River was not properly designed or built and the state should have known it needed repairs.

Three people were killed and three were injured when the Connecticut Turnpike span collapsed June 28. The suit was filed Friday on behalf of the family of Luis Zapata of Stamford.

Assistant Attorney General Arnold Shimelman denied the suit's claims but declined to discuss its specifics.

Woman dies after firebombing

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A 27-year-old woman has became the fifth fatality of the July 2 firebombing of a supermarket, two weeks after her teenage niece died of burns suffered in the blaze.

Melody Darlington, burned over her entire body, died Friday, said Tampa General Hospital spokeswoman Tito Gaw.

A drifter, John William Ferry Jr., is accused of walking into the store, spreading gasoline in a crowded checkout area and igniting it. Thirteen people were injured. Ferry, 30, was charged with first-degree murder and arson, but was found incompetent to stand trial and has been sent to a state mental hospital.

Hearing dates set on lawsuits

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A judge has set 1984 hearing dates on some 180 lawsuits claiming more than $5.5 billion in damages stemming from the 1982 Pan Am airliner crash in suburban Kenner that killed 154.

U.S. District Judge Adrian Duplantier told lawyers Friday he wanted to deal with the death cases first. He set Jan. 16-27 and Feb. 13-24 as trial periods for the first batches of suits.

Pan Am's Boeing 727 took off from New Orleans International Airport during a heavy rainstorm and never got more than 200 feet high. It crashed into a residential area near the airport, ruining 15 houses. The victims included eight people on the ground.

Insolvent bank to reopen

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn. (AP) — First Peoples Bank of Washington County, the ninth Tennessee bank to be closed and sold this year, will reopen Monday as part of First American National Bank-Eastern.

Billy Adams, state commissioner of financial institutions, declared the bank insolvent Friday, citing "excessive loan losses." The bank, with 40,000 depositors, was the eighth to fail that was linked to the financial empire of brothers Jake and C.H. Butcher Jr.

Guards suspended for escape

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Eight guards at East Baton Rouge Parish Prison have been suspended in connection with an inmate's escape.

Sheriff Fred Sliman said Friday that the inmate could not have escaped Tuesday unless at least four officers fell short in performing their duties.

And he said the escape wasn't detected until the man was arrested for allegedly robbing a bank the next day "because at least another four corrections officers performed their duties in a haphazardous and inefficient manner."

Shoving match breaks out near women's peace camp

WATERLOO, N.Y. (AP) — A shoving match broke out Saturday when about 300 townspeople blocked several hundred demonstrators who were marching toward a women's peace camp at the Seneca Army Depot, authorities and witnesses said.

No injuries were reported.

The women, whose numbers were estimated between 200 and 500, had received a permit from the Seneca County Sheriff's Department to make a 15-mile march to the camp from Seneca Falls.

The women are part of the Women's Encampment for a Future of Peace and Justice, a summer-long camp designed to protest nuclear weapons. The protesters say the depot is a weapons arsenal.

The shoving broke out after about 300 townspeople and Vietnam veterans massed on the New York 96 bridge over the Seneca Canal to prevent the women from crossing, witnesses and a sheriff's dispatcher said.

Sheriff Kenneth Greer asked the women to turn back, regroup at the sheriff's department and find a different route to the camp. But instead, the women sat on the road waiting for the crowd to disperse, witnesses said.

The marchers included a group from the Women's Pentagon Action in Washington. Some protesters wore colored costumes and carried a giant puppet.

As many as 3,000 women from across the country were expected for a major demonstration and civil-disobedience action Monday at the depot.

Workers renegotiate contract

NEW YORK (AP) — Waterfront employers and the unions representing some 50,000 longshoremen in 36 Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports renegotiated their contract Saturday to tighten union control over container shipments.

The accord followed two days of intensive bargaining among the International Longshoremen's Association, seven major port management organizations and the Carriers Container Council, which represent more than 200 vessel operating companies.

ILA President Thomas W. Gleason issued a strike threat June 30, four months after the National Labor Relations Board reversed itself and said the union could legally restrict the packing of containers by others outside the ports.

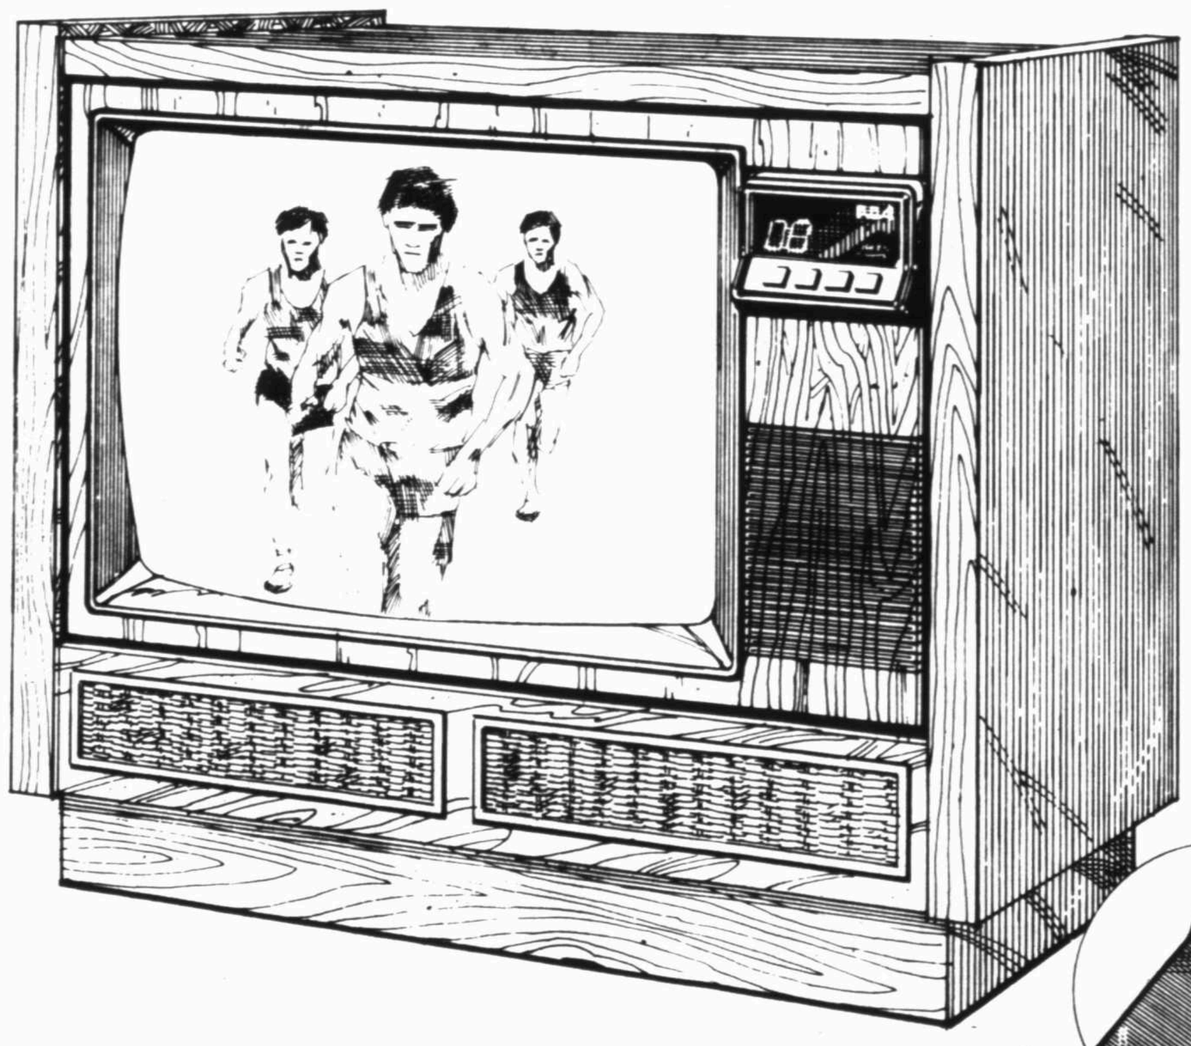

Shippers load the metal boxes as large as semi-truck trailers so they can be placed directly onto ships without further handling of the cargo. But the union has sought to restrict their use because it reduces the number of workers required on the docks.

The labor board, reversing a 1979 ruling, said union restrictions on containers were not a so-called secondary boycott, prohibited by federal law.

The union had required containers loaded within 50 miles of port cities to either allow the boxes to be reloaded by longshoremen or to pay a fee to the union to provide a guaranteed income to union members.

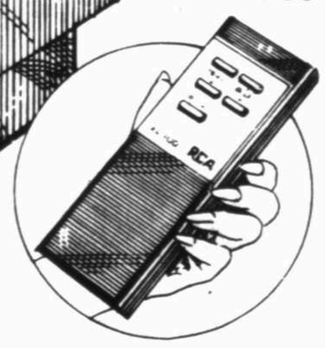

The agreement contains new language to improve enforcement of the container rules in the current three-year contract, but details were not immediately available.

The management associations and the union are involved with about 70 percent of United States seaborne commerce.

Bentsen among richest congressmen

By The Associated Press

Rep. Charles Wilson, a Lufkin Democrat, reported assets of between $197,000 and $505,000 in 1978. By last year those assets had increased to between $416,000 and $1 million, largely due to increased investments in real estate.

However, Wilson also reported a sizeable increase in liabilities, from between $255,000 and $630,000 in 1978 to between $605,000 and $1.56 million last year.

Rep. Charles Wilson, a Lufkin Democrat, reported assets of between $197,000 and $505,000 in 1978. By last year those assets had increased to between $416,000 and $1 million, largely due to increased investments in real estate.

However, Wilson also reported a sizeable increase in liabilities, from between $255,000 and $630,000 in 1978 to between $605,000 and $1.56 million last year.

On the other hand, there is Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, a Democrat from San Antonio, who over the years has regularly scrawled, in big black letters, the word "none" in the disclosure report blanks that call for a listing of assets, transactions and liabilities.

Usually, his only income, apart from his congressional salary, is interest from savings accounts.

On his report for 1979, Gonzalez wrote: "I have no other sources of income, property (tangible or intangible) corporeal or incorporeal, or hereditaments and neither does my spouse or any relative to the 10th degree of consanguinity. I am — as I have always — consecrated full time to the discharge of my duties as the elected representative of the 20th District."

However, among the 29 members of the Texas delegation, only two, Gonzalez and Kika de la Garza, a Democrat from Mission, listed no reportable assets last year.

Six others listed minimum assets of under $100,000. But seven listed assets of at least $1 million. Of the House members from Texas, Bill Patman, a Ganado Democrat, appeared to be the wealthiest. His assets last year totaled at least $3.9 million and possibly more than $6.6 million, up from at least $3.1 million and possibly more than $5.6 million in 1980, the year before he took office.

However, though it is not reflected in last year's disclosure forms, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat, appears to be the wealthiest member of the Texas delegation. Bentsen reported assets of at least $2.4 million and possibly more than $3.7 million last year.

Bentsen may beat Reagan on border issue

WASHINGTON — Senator Lloyd Bentsen, D–Texas, may be beating the slow-moving Reagan administration to the punch by scheduling a hearing here Monday before the Economic subcommittee on the U.S.-Mexican border depession in business and its effect on the local economy.

The White House has had for some weeks a report from its Working Group on Southwestern Border States. The report is still being studied by the White House staff to see what can be done to alleviate conditions. The fact that there is a report in the White House has not been publicly addressed by the President. So far, the staff has not completed its recommendations for the President's eyes.

Bentsen, member of the Joint Economic Committee, has called for a review of the effect of the ...border depression on business and local government. He has summoned two county judges and two bank presidents from the Texas border who will testify Monday morning.

THIS HEARING WILL explore steps which can still be taken to deal with the economic disaster along our border, said Bentsen.

Last Spring, Senator John G. Tower, R., Texas held hearings on the situation in Brownsville at which time citizens of a number of border cities testified. At that time, Tower brought in the Reagan-named head of the Working Group, Robert G. Dederick, to listen.

Later, Dederick and a number of officials visited border areas from Texas to California to collect information and to see what local, state and federal officials were already doing to help the area. Then Dederick sent his report to the White House to the office of the executive secretary, Robert Carleson, assistant to the President.

INFORMED OF THE upcoming Bentsen hearings, Carleson said that The Border report has a high priority here as we put it through the process.

I think that within a month we should have some information on action to follow up this report.

As you know, our group visitd many border cities during a field trip and gathered a lot of information. We got a number of federal departments to work onthe problem. I think that we have already accomplished much good for the area by getting these federal offices to looking at the problems and trying to solve them and some ideas about how we can help have been discussed.

Witnesses who will testify before the Senate subcommittee on Economic Goals and Intergovernmental Policy are: Bob Duffey, president, Texas Commerce bank, Brownsville, Merriman Morten, president, El Paso National bank, El Paso, Pat O'Rourke, county judge, El Paso county, and Moises Vela, county judge, Cameron county, Brownsville.

Industrialist selling renowned mansion

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A close friend of multimillionaire industrialist T. Cullen Davis says he is selling his 16,000-square-foot mansion because of the bad memories it has brought him.

The mansion was the focal point of Davis' highly publicized murder trials and a bitter issue in his divorce from the woman for whom he built it.

A spokesman for Davis and Chuck Wilson, president of Cambridge Companies of Dallas, says that the development company is buying the mansion and the 181-acre estate that surrounds it, the Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

Wilson would not disclose the price to be paid by the Cambridge Companies, which plan a commercial and residential development on part of the estate. But the friend told the News that the sale figure was near $60 million.

"It's just a fabulous piece of property," said Wilson. "It has a lot of potential."

Telephones at the mansion were continually busy Saturday, but Davis' friend, who asked not to be identified, said Friday that Davis decided to sell the mansion "because of the bad memories and unhappiness in that house.

"Since he's become a Christian, he wants to put all that behind him and start a fresh new life," said the friend. "It took a lot of courage to sell that place. ... When I talked to him about it yesterday, he had tears in his eyes."

The friend said Davis is unsure of his plans for a new home, but has an option to buy a large tract of land west of Fort Worth where he is considering building a $33 million mansion.

Wilson said he has not decided whether he will move into the Davis mansion or sell it.

Davis was charged with murder in 1976 after his 12-year-old stepdaughter, Andrea Wilborn, and Stan Farr, 31, the boyfriend of Davis' estranged wife Priscilla, were shot to death at the mansion.

Davis was acquitted of murder in 1977, and acquitted of murder-solicitation charges in 1979 that stemmed from an alleged plot to hire the killing of the presiding judge in his divorce trial.

The industrialist built the mansion for Priscilla in the late 1960s at a cost of $3.9 million. He moved out in 1974 during the couple's divorce. After the divorce he moved back in and has lived there with his third wife, Karen, since 1979.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Mattox in the center of political controversy

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Just when it appeared it would be a dull summer, along comes the Jim Mattox affair.

Texas' attorney general is providing most of the political conversation around the Capitol, and is managing to stay on the front page of most of the state's newspapers.

What started all the furor were reports in June regarding loans made by Mattox to his campaign and questions as to whether those loans were properly reported.

The reason those loans have been of such interest is that Mattox lent his campaign $125,000 less than a week after his brother and sister obtained a loan for the same amount from Seattle-First National Bank.

That bank also has made some $40 million in loans to South Texas rancher-banker Clinton Manges and is currently involved in a lawsuit with Manges for alleged non-payment on some of those loans.

Manges, during the 1982 campaign, gave contributions to Mattox and to candidates in all or nearly all major races in the state (atrracting national attention with his largess).

Mattox also is involved with Manges in that the attorney general is on Manges' side in a lawsuit against Mobil Oil Corp. over some mineral rights, a lawsuit authorized by Mattox' predecessor, now-Gov. Mark White.

And the latest round of events include charges by an attorney for Mobil that Mattox threatened to destroy the municipal bond business for his firm, Fulbright and Jaworski, if Mattox' sister were subpoenaed by Mobil to discuss the campaign loans.

Such is the general outline of the current affair.

Mattox added to the media's not-inconsiderable interest in the matter by refusing to answer questions from some reporters at a press conference.

He wouldn't, he said, answer questions from "unethical reporters," some of whom he purports to believe to be agents for Mobil.

Mattox is hardly the first attorney general to be piqued with the press, and it's not the first time in Mattox' career that he's been involved in controversy.

In fact, controversy has been pretty much the hallmark of Mattox' career and the 1982 election campaign wasn't a model of decorum, restraint and reasoned argument.

Mattox and Republican nominee Bill Meier, former State senator from Euless, continually blasted one another and ended up in court over Mattox' use of "attorney general" in his campaign literature.

Mattox charged Meier, among other things, with attempting to cover up the source of campaign contributions through use of a campaign committee; Meir charged Mattox with reporting irregularities, including failure to disclose the names of persons who had co-signed a $100,000 loan (Mattox amended his report to include those names).

That Mattox wouldn't necessarily get along with a Republican is understandable, but Mattox also has run into problems with Democrats.

Mattox attacked Democratic turncoats for the dismemberment of his congressional district in Dallas, an action which led to his decision to make the race for attorney general.

But Mattox' abrasive style while a member of the Legislature probably also was a factor with some members, who weren't willing to battle on his behalf.

Mattox has always been willing to battle, it seems — even taking on the U.S. House of Representatives in an attempt to break its tradition of coats and ties for gentlemen in the name of energy conservation.

He lost his attempt to change the dress code but gained considerable publicity.

For Mattox, as for most politicians, publicity is a necessary element, like food, water and oxygen.

Of course, there's not much question the attorney general would prefer notice of a more favorable nature than what's he's been receiving of late.

Mattox and other politicians have noted, and with justification, that the laws on campaign finance and reporting are difficult to understand and to comply with, and that some changes are needed.

The idea behind the laws is simple enough, however, and that is to allow the public (if the public is interested) to know who is providing the money which is needed to elect someone to public office.

And the question at the bottom of the current controversy isn't so much where Mattox' loans came from but whether he complied with the law in obtaining and reporting them.

At least, that was the first question. But it seems there will be a lot more before the Mattox affair is ended.

Ex-congressman convicted on cattle theft charges

SULPHUR SPRINGS, Texas (AP) — Jurors deliberated just 25 minutes Saturday before convicting former state Rep. David London on cattle theft charges.

London sat quietly and showed no emotion when State District Judge Lanny Ramsey read the verdict Saturday afternoon, but said later that he was "shocked" at the decision and mistaken not to have testified.

The seven-man, five-woman jury will return to the courtroom at 9 a.m. Monday to deliberate London's punishment. He could be sentenced to as many as ten years in prison and fined as much as $5,000.

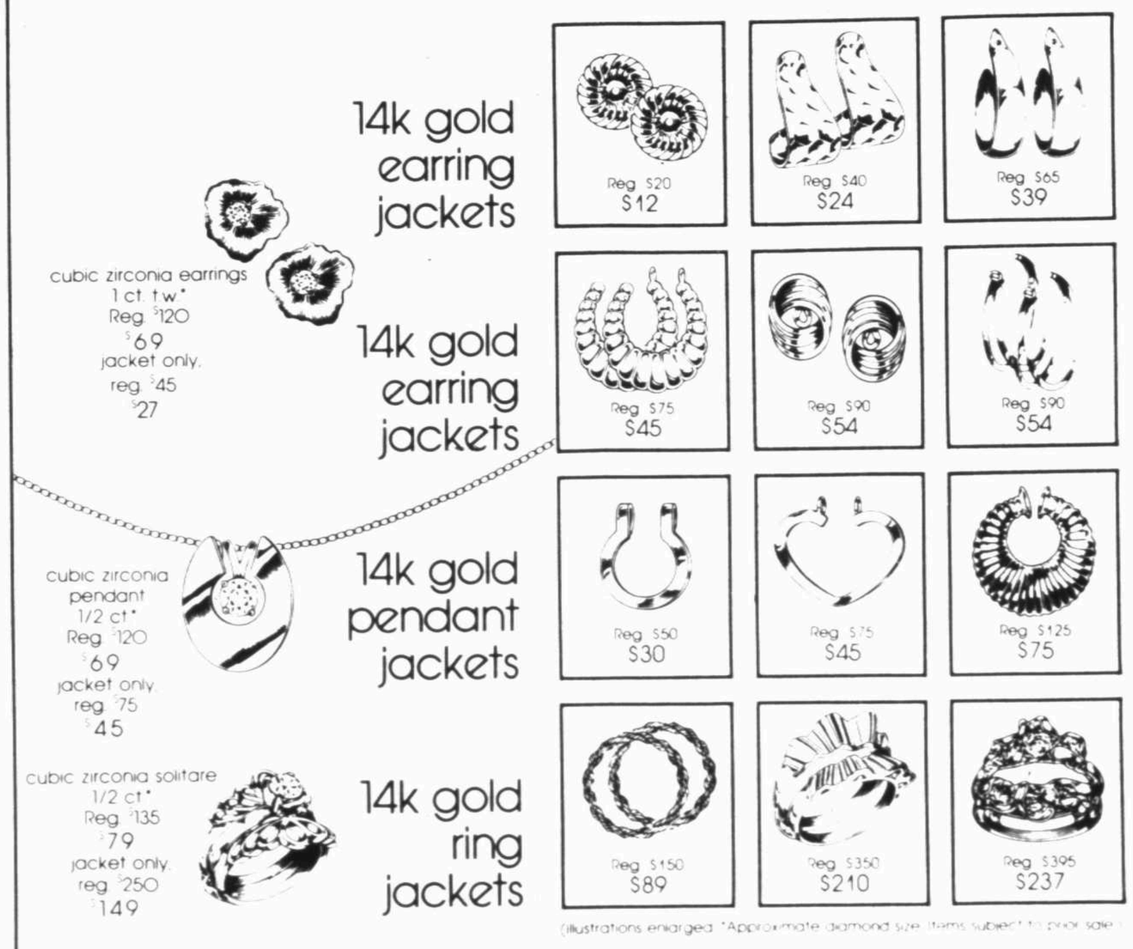

"I'm shocked" London said as the courtroom began to clear Saturday of spectators who had gatheried to hear the final arguments of District Attorney Jim Chapman and London's lawyer.

"I may have made a big mistake when I didn't take the stand in my own defense," London said. "My lawyers talked me out of taking the stand. They said it would end up being a character assasination rather than cross examination."

Prosecutors said London, who says he will appeal the conviction, turned to cattle rustling to pay off a gambling debt.

Fire damages high school

GALVESTON (AP) — An early-morning fire Saturday caused about $175,000 in damage to Ball High School in Galveston.

The blaze severely damaged five temporary classrooms and did minor damage to another, said Fire Marshal Willie Wisko. The cause of the fire is under investigation, he said.

The fire in the temporary classrooms, which are detached from the main school building, was brought under control within an hour, Wisko said. No injuries were reported.

Union officials re-elected

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas AFL-CIO Convention closed Saturday with the re-election of their top officials — President Harry Hubbard and Secretary-treasurer Joe D. Gunn.

Neither had any opposition.

Vehicle theft...an epidemic

HOUSTON (AP) — More than 90 vehicles were stolen on an average day in Houston last year, insurance figures show.

Motor vehicle theft here has soared slightly more than 90 percent in the past five years, compared to 51.6 percent at the state level, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

Nationwide, the figures for 1978 through 1981, the latest available, show an 8.3 percent increase.

"It's truly an epidemic in Houston and there is no place that a car is safe," said Jerry Johns, president of the Southwestern Insurance Information Service in Austin.

Mattox turned down on request

AUSTIN (AP) — Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle says he has refused to meet privately with Attorney General Jim Mattox to discuss Mattox's 1982 campaign finances and allegations under investigation by a grand jury.

Earle said, he and his staff met with representatives of Mattox — defense lawyer Bob Jones and Assistant Attorney General Arthur Mitchell — for slightly more than an hour late Friday.

"They just wanted to dicuss their side of some of the allegations that have been publicized in the media," Earle told the Austin American-Statesman.

"We did not discuss any agreements."

Sheik's estate cited as hazard

GOLDEN BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The pleasure palace of a Saudi sheik, fashioned with extravagance that once set even affluent Golden Beach on its heels, is now a stinking, fly-infested, million-dollar derelict, Dade County health officials say.

Sheik Tarek al Fassi returned suddenly to Saudi Arabia late last year. Since then, the $1.3 million complex, actually two homes on this island of 700 people, has been unattended.

On Friday, county officials cited it as a health hazard.

Two health inspectors found the kitchen of one of the houses swarming with flies drawn to rotting food left on counters.

Two swimming pools were half-filled with blackish-green, stagnant water that neighbors complained was a mosquito breeding ground. The water also has a foul odor, neighbors said.

The once immaculately groomed lawn is nearly a foot high in spots, and the Arabian shield at the entrance is rusty.

"It is unconscionable that people could show total neglect for millions of dollars worth of property," said George Bergmann, chairman of the town's code enforcement board.

The complex is the focus of legal action, so the county Health Department gave Golden Beach a week to clean it up.

Town Councilman Joe Hartigan plans to remove the chains on the gold-tipped, wrought-iron gate Tuesday, admitting a work crew to mow the lawn, empty the pools and clean the kitchen.

"It has to be done. That sort of property sitting around in any community is bad," said Hartigan. "This is not your routine house. There's such a tremendous bad feeling there."

Officials who once accepted a $3,000 donation from Fassi for the town beautification fund say they'll place a lien against the property to recover expenses for the cleanup.

The main house now belongs to attorney Stephen Avrach, according to tax assessment records.

"I'm willing to cut the grass if I can get on the property. There's a lock on there and I can't get in," Avrach said.

Acme Commercial Security is responsible for that. The firm locked the place up in January, after winning a $55,900 court judgment for unpaid guard services at the complex, as well as the residences of his older brother, Mohammed al Fassi, and Prince Turki bin Abdul Aziz, the Fassis' brother-in-law.

City National Bank of Hallandale is attempting to foreclose on the second house, but that case is tied up in the courts.

Prince Turki and the Fassis returned suddenly to Saudi Arabia late last year. Afterward, Mohammed al Fassi was declared in contempt of court for taking his four children out of the country during a bitter divorce and custody battle.

'No direct tie between benzene, leukemia'

HOUSTON (AP) — Shell Oil Co. officials say they have found no direct tie between benzene and a relatively high incidence of deaths from a certain type of leukemia in Texas and Illinois plants that handle the chemical.

But the officials say they are continuing the study.

Preliminary results of the Shell study released last week showed eight deaths from acute myeloid leukemia among employees at the company's Wood River, Ill., facility and three deaths at its Deer Park, Texas, plant between 1973 and 1982.

Based on U.S. population statistics, only two such deaths per plant would be considered normal for that time period, said R.E. Joyner, Shell's corporate medical director.

However, at both locations total cancer-related deaths were normal, Joyner said, "and we have no reason to conclude that a leukemia risk currently exists at any of our refinery locations."

Company officials say they do not know yet if there were any leukemia deaths at three other plants under study — at Wilmington, Calif.; Martinez, Calif.; and Norco, La.

All five plants have been involved in the recovery of benzene, a component of crude oil linked to acute myeloid leukemia, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday. Benzene is used in the manufacture of detergents, insecticides and motor fuels.

"A systematic program has been under way for many years to reduce benzene exposure," Joyner said.

Tenor to perform at Trinity Presbyterian

ENTERTAINMENT

Tenor Kip Wilborn performs today at 4 p.m. at Trinity Presbyterian Church, W. Louisiana Avenue and Andrews Highway.

A native of Odessa, Wilborn began his musical studies at the age of six when he began taking piano lessons. He began his vocal training in the 9th grade and was the first student from Nimitz Junior High to receive a first division rating on a vocal solo at the state UIL competition.

While a sophomore at Permian High School, Wilborn was a member of the Texas All State Choir. During his junior year, he was first chair in this area's All State choir auditions.

Since high school, Wilborn has attended Houston Baptist University and Odessa College. He was a semi-finalist in the 1982 National Association of Teachers of Singing freshmen men competition in Austin.

At OC Wilborn was the choir's student conductor.

In September of last year he began vocal studies under Janice Archer of Midland. Before beginning his studies with Mrs. Archer, Wilborn sang baritone.

Wilborn was selected as alternate soloist for the Texas Junior College Choral Festival Choir in October of 1982. Last December he was guest soloist for Odessa's First United Methodist Church presentation of Bach's cantata "For Unto us a Child is Given."

In January of 1983 Wilborn was selected to receive one of only four awards given at the West Texas-New Mexico Metropolitan Opera Auditions.

Wilborn has also directed church music programs in Houston and Odessa as well as teaching elementary music and piano in two private schools. He was selected to direct the combined 1,500-voice finale of the 1982 Houston Baptist Church School Association Festival.

Wilborn will continue his education at Kansas City Conservatory of Music and will study under Dr. Paul E. Sommers.

Sunday's program will include selections from works by Donizetti, Gustav Mahler, Hugo Wolf, Mozart, Bizet, Duparc, Gabriel Faure, Douglas Moore, Roger Quilter and John Alden Carpenter.

The public is invited to attend. A reception will follow the performance.

Play finds life in midst of death

A Review

THE SHADOW BOX

Shadow box: "A shallow, enclosing case usually with a glass front in which something is set for protection and display."
—Websters Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary

Death is a fearless tracker; one which haunts our shadows from the time of birth until its time has come.

It seems only natural that anyone going to see Midland Community Theatre's production of Michael Cristofer's "The Shadow Box" might feel slightly uneasy. This Pulitzer Prize winning play, which takes place in a hospice setting in Northern California, centers around the lives of three terminally ill patients and their immediate families.

But, as the two-act play unfolds, it becomes apparent that in centering on death it tells of life, exploring its wonders which we all take for granted and asking once again — Why do we waste what we cannot replace?

Time. For Joe, Brian and Felicity time has run out. They know it. Their families know it. All are in different stages of denial, anger, frustration and acceptance. The lines mix humor and pathos, making the play quite humorous at times.

"Shadow Box" opens with Joe (Glen Thomason) talking with the interviewer (Mark Wilkins), who we hear but never see, about his condition and the imminent arrival of his wife, Maggie (Arlene Jara) and their son, Steven (Scott Inness).

Joe becomes upset with Maggie when he discovers she has carried among her many suitcases a large, not boneless, cooked ham 3,000 miles across the country. She explains to him she didn't carry it, she put it under her seat on the plane.

While the three are rediscovering one another, we meet Brian (Carl Yowell) as he is asking the interviewer in a telling tone, "People don't want to let go, do they?" When the interviewer indicates they have plenty of time to talk, Brian says, "Some of us are on a tighter schedule."

Next we see Brian's friend, Mark (Don Stroud), and his former wife, Beverly (Elizabeth Hewlett), meeting for the first time when she arrives unexpectedly at the cottage and Brian is out.

Both have a romantic interest in Brian, making their first encounter awkward and lively. She informs him after what is best referred to as Round I, "I think we've got it all straight. He's dying, I'm drunk and you're pissed off."

Brian returns to discover Beverly and, as the happy reunion progresses, we meet Felicity (D.A. Plumlee). Felicity informs the interviewer, when he refers to her as the patient, "Patient hell, I'm the corpse." Her daughter, Agnes (Robyn Rose), who never moves fast enough to suit Felicity, is her retriever. Felicity's thoughts are not centered on herself or Agnes, but on the daughter who is not there.

The flow of action onstage worked smoothly and effectively opening night, especially when the lights were timed properly.

Although the cast did an outstanding job of portraying their respective roles and working as an ensemble, Ms. Plumlee stole the show. She did not play Felicity; she was Felicity.

The others had their stellar moments, including the Act II confrontation between Miss Hewlett and Stroud, the arrival of Miss Jara, Yowell's oral treatise on the jacket episode, Thomason's opening remarks, Miss Rose's talk of not being able to remember the good times and there being no light outside the windows, and Innes' closing lines in Act II.

Directed by Ted Strickland, MCT's assistant director, this production rides the tide with full sails. And, as is true of sailing, while the wind is invigorating, the salt stings the eyes.

Buffalo Philharmonic rises from its economic ashes

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The Buffalo Philharmonic, one of the top 25 symphonies in the United States, almost folded 20 months ago. Today there are signs of economic health.

Earned income has risen close to 19 percent this season and subscriptions are up to almost 20 percent. The orchestra may have a balanced budget for only the second time in 15 years when the fiscal year ends Aug. 31.

"What we're trying for is a dramatic turnaround to restore people's faith in the orchestra," said executive director Gary Good, who was hired last September from the Baltimore Symphony as part of a general administrative housecleaning.

The 87-member philharmonic, noted for its versatility and brass section, has been an artistic success under conductor Julius Rudel and predecessors Michael Tilson Thomas and Lukas Foss.

Surrealistic filmmaker dies

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Relatives and close friends paid their final respects Saturday to Spanish-born filmmaker Luis Bunuel, whose often grotesque, surrealist vision shocked six decades of moviegoers.

He died Friday at the age of 83 at the American-British-Cowdray Hospital of "biliar cirrhosis," following his hospitalization for a metabolic disorder, a spokeswoman said.

Bunuel had spent his last years quietly with his French wife of 50 years, Jeanne.

His body was cremated at Los Lomas Cemetery, according to a spokesman at the funeral home in charge of arrangements.

"For a long time the thought of death has been familiar to me," Bunuel said in his autobiography, "My Last Breath," published shortly before his 83rd birthday on Feb. 22.

"After everything, there is nothing," he wrote. "Nothing awaits us, but decay, the sweet smell of eternity. Perhaps I will have myself cremated to avoid that."

Mexican television devoted long programs to Bunuel's life and work Friday and Saturday, but the government said a public vigil in his honor at the downtown Palace of Fine Arts was canceled at the family's request.

Bunuel, who fled his native Spain after the 1936-1939 civil war, lived briefly in the United States and then moved to Mexico, becoming a citizen in 1949. He made 20 of his 32 movies here. Always publicity shy, he rarely appeared in public.

He made his first film, a silent, short movie called "The Andalusian Dog," with Salvador Dali in 1929. The film contained one of the most horrifying scenes in movie history, an eye being sliced by a razor blade.

That movie and his final film, "That Obscure Object of Desire," in 1977 probably epitomized his interest in scandal and the bizarre.

"I can establish my diagnosis easily," Bunuel wrote in his autobiography. "I'm old. That's my principal illness. I only feel good in my house, loyal to my daily routine."

Henry Moore celebrates 85th birthday in bed

PERRY GREEN, England (AP) — Sir Henry Moore, Britain's greatest living sculptor, celebrated his 85th birthday Saturday in bed nursing a sore back.

An artist friend, Gemma Levine, who was with Moore at his estate 20 miles north of London, told callers, "He has many friends and relatives at his bedside and many flowers have arrived. He is hoping to get up later."

Moore twisted his back Thursday, she said. He suffers from arthritis in his back and legs but continues working.

The prolific sculptor — whose works are characterized by their smooth, rounded, abstract forms — logged 34 exhibitions last year alone. A 60-year retrospective of his work currently is being displayed at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art.

John Longstaff, a director of the Marlborough Gallery, which has been dealing with Moore's creations for 25 years, said, "He is unchallenged as the world's greatest sculptor."

Moore, the son of a miner, was born in Castleford, Yorkshire, on July 30, 1898. He decided at the age of 11 that he wanted to be a sculptor.

Actress Lynn Fontanne dies of pneumonia at age of 95

GENESEE DEPOT, Wis. (AP) — Lynn Fontanne, an English printer's daughter who with Alfred Lunt rose to fame as one of the greatest husband-and-wife acting teams of stage and screen, died Saturday of pneumonia. She was 95.

"This was just a gradual slowing down of old age," Dr. Edward Bigg, Miss Fontanne's physician, said in Winnetka, Ill. "She was really in quite good health until the last two or three weeks," but then pneumonia set in, he said.

Alfred Lunt
Lynn Fontanne

Miss Fontanne was found dead by a maid at the 110-acre estate, Ten Chimneys, where the acting couple spent spare moments at the height of their careers and retired full time around 1967, said George Bugbee, who lived next door and was a trustee of Miss Fontanne.

"The last six weeks, her energies were reduced," Bugbee said.

Lunt died in 1977.

Miss Fontanne began her career with an appearance in a "Cinderella" pantomime in 1905, and eventually performed in more than 60 plays and several films.

She and Lunt acted together in 27 stage productions, including "Pygmalion," "The Doctor's Dilemma," "Reunion in Vienna," "Design for Living," "Idiot's Delight," "There Shall Be No Night," "I Know My Love," "Elizabeth the Queen," "The Sea Gull" and "Arms and the Man."

In 1958, they starred in "The Visit" on Broadway at the Lunt-Fontanne Theater, which had just been renamed in their honor.

The couple received special Tony Awards in 1970 in recognition of their many triumphs.

Among their most noted films was "The Guardsman" in 1931.

Unlike Lunt, who set out from a Wisconsin boyhood to be an architect, Miss Fontanne from her earliest years set her heart on acting.

She was born Dec. 6, 1887, in Woodford, England, the daughter of a prosperous printer. Her ambition was nurtured by a friend of her mother, and her reading of Portia's lines in "The Merchant of Venice" impressed Ellen Terry, one of the theater's reigning grand dames who gave acting lessons to a select group of students.

Miss Terry made the decision to thrust Miss Fontanne directly into London theatrics, rather than spend time with a provincial company.

Miss Fontanne acted in many plays and went to the United States at the invitation of American actress Laurette Taylor, who had seen her perform. She met Lunt during a summer stock tour in 1919.

They were cast together in roles that quickly developed the skills for urbane, brittle portrayals that became their hallmarks.

In 1922, they were married. Telling no one, they took a subway to New York City Hall and got a few bystanders as witnesses. They even had to borrow the $2 fee.

Lunt had just scored his first big triumph in "Clarence" and Miss Fontanne was starring in "Dulcy."

Petroleum Museum gets new director

Homer T. Fort, executive vice president and director of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, has resigned from these two positions effective Oct. 1 of this year.

Fort will be succeeded as museum director and acting executive vice president by Ed Rowland, who has been serving as the museum's assistant director since May of 1978. Rowland's appointment was announced by Russell J. Ramsland, president of the museum, after a decision by the executive committee of the Board of Trustees and acceptance by Rowland.

Fort is being named to a new museum position titled "projects specialist" which will permit him to work on special projects the museum has accumulated.

The decision by Fort to step down after more than 14 years in the day-to-day management of the museum was his own and is a matter for regret on the part of the board and his colleagues, Ramsland said. He added that Fort's new job was proposed by Fort and adopted by the executive committee as a way to secure substantial amounts of his time and experience.

Fort is expected to be involved with special projects for the museum for about two years.

Rowland, a native of Abilene, came to Midland from the directorship of the Big Thicket Museum in southeast Texas. His previous experience also includes establishing the post museum at Fort Jackson in South Carolina when he was a captain in the United States Army.

Rowland holds a master's degree in museum science from Texas Tech University. His bachelor's degree, also from Texas Tech, is in zoology.

Ed Rowland

He has served on the board of the Texas Association of Museums and as president of the Permian Basin Museums Institute. He and his wife, Clarice, have two children, Jeffrey, 5, and Beth, 3.

As assistant director, Rowland is in charge of the museum's exhibits, education programs and gift shop. He has also assisted with the management of the museum and fund-raising.

A native Texan and graduate of the University of Texas, Fort came to Midland in 1969 to help raise funds for and organize the proposed Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame. Earlier, Fort was associated with Magnolia Petroleum Company, Beaumont and Dallas, and with Mobil Oil Corporation, N.Y.

Raymond Massey dies from pneumonia complications

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Raymond Massey, a gaunt-faced, courtly actor who brought Abraham Lincoln to life on screen and later won over TV audiences as no-nonsense Dr. Gillespie on "Dr. Kildare," has died at the age of 86.

The Canadian-born actor, who appeared in more than 70 movies and 80 stage productions, died at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center at 8:30 p.m. Friday. He had been hospitalized for 3½ weeks suffering complications of pneumonia, his son Geoffrey said Saturday.

Massey, once described as "the man who took Abraham Lincoln off the penny" and made him a living image for millions, retired from acting more than a decade ago and lived in Beverly Hills. He had just completed filming an autobiographical television program to be shown in Canada.

Among his most noted films were "The Prisoner of Zenda," with David Niven, who also died Friday, "Arsenic and Old Lace," "East of Eden," "Dangerously They Live," "Seven Angry Men" and "The Naked and the Dead."

Massey, who directed 35 of his stage productions, made his final stage appearance in 1970 in London, saying he lacked stamina and was disenchanted with modern theater.

"To me theater should be enchantment, make-believe, pretend," he once told an interviewer. "Today it's sex, obscenity and squalor."

Niven was 'definitely ill'

From Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — David Niven, the debonair British screen star, died in a Swiss hospital Friday at age 73. Niven's death was caused by a neuromuscular condition he reportedly had developed during the last year.

Jess Morgan, Niven's financial adviser of 30 years, confirmed that for the past several months Niven had been suffering from "a disorder which had to do with the nervous system's inability to work with the muscles."

Morgan, who had visited Niven in Europe six weeks ago, added that the actor was then "definitely ill. He has been ill for some time...and was not in the best of health when I saw him."

Niven's failing health was even evident in a cameo role he had last year in a Pink Panther film, Morgan said.

"He was struggling a bit then. He was very frail and not the David Niven you've seen in hundreds of films."

Indeed, for the past two years Niven, who lived with his wife Hjordis in Switzerland, had been plagued by a number of health problems. Though his agents and managers downplayed Niven's health difficulties, the actor had been hospitalized for two serious conditions. A week before turning 73, Niven was admitted to a private London hospital for treatment of a digestive disorder. A month later he returned to the hospital, this time for treatment of the muscular disorder which had partially paralyzed his left hand and impaired his speech.

But when rumors spread last year stating that Niven was dead, the actor quipped that he had asked his doctor about it "and in his opinion I am not."

Niven, one of film's legendary leading men who appeared in more than 85 movies over the course of several decades, cut a dashing cinematic figure with his aristocratic bearing and trademark pencil-thin mustache. In 1958, Niven's acting skills earned him the Oscar for best actor in "Separate Tables."

'Vacation' parodies American transcontinental trek

A Review

Summertime for the American family has always been a call of the wild, where mom and dad load up the Woody with Bubba and Sissy and head across the vast expanse of this country like their forefathers did in covered wagons. But that pioneering spirit has changed somewhat. Now, dad plots the family's route by home computer, taking into account the Stuckeys and KOA campgrounds along the way.

"National Lampoon's Vacation," starring Chevy Chase, is about that fearless transcontinental trek in search of the great American landmark, Wally World (something like Disneyland, only with a moose for a mascot), and what happens is a parody of every family trip by automobile ever taken.

It is everything we remember with amusement and pain, like singing in the car, taking the wrong turn, driving out of the way to see relatives you don't want to see, having your hubcaps stolen and car wrecked, and falling asleep at the wheel while driving "straight through" in the name of fun.

Chase as Clark Griswald plays the kind of guy he formed in skits on TV's "Saturday Night Live" - the nerd who has grown up. A role that comes naturally to him, Chase is the father of two adolescents and a sensible wife (played by Beverly D'Angelo of "Paternity" and "Coal Miner's Daughter") he no longer listens to. And this cross-country trip is more his obsession than theirs, his fantasy than theirs.

"Vacation" has some very funny moments particularly at the beginning of the trip when the luggage is packed on top of the car, but the car is still inside the garage — you guessed it, off come the bags like fleece from an unsuspecting lamb. And Chase does some hysterical mugging for model-actress Christie Brinkley who plays every man's fantasy of "the blond in the sports car on the highway."

But there are some sick moments too, like when Aunt Edna (a wacky relative picked up along the way) dies in the back seat and Griswald decides to leave her body at her son's home. The only problem with that is the son isn't home, so Aunt Edna gets deposited like last week's garbage in a lawn chair at the back door.

"Vacation" like Chase's "Modern Problems" and "Under The Rainbow" is a movie trying to be funny by just being and although the situation is already loaded with potential, the overiding feeling is of silliness.

Rated "R," "Vacation" bears its breasts and bad taste occasionally and unnecessarily, but it is one way to get the feeling of a four-wheeled vacation without having to take it. And if your "discover America" trips are like the Griswald's, it is worth the price of admission to remind you to stay home this summer or take a plane.

Putting to sea in "Yellowbeard" should be one "yo, ho, ho" after another with the talents of Graham Chapman, Peter Cook, Eric Idle, John Cleece, Richard "Cheech" Marin, Tommy Chong, Madeline Kahn, Marty Feldman, Peter Boyle, and Kenneth Mars. Only this high seas adventure is more like a ship of fools whereon the writers (Graham Chapman, Peter Cook, and Bernard McKenna) and the director (Mel Damski) force the actors to walk the plank.

About a search for treasure that the imprisoned pirate Yellowbeard (Graham Chapman) buried in 1687, "Yellowbeard" is a host of conspiracy, father against son, husband against wife, country against citizens, captain against crew and so on. And they all are after the buried loot.

At times "Yellowbeard,"rated PG, is smooth sailing, especially early on in scenes at the prison with Chapman, Feldman, and Miss Kahn (whose Brooklyn accent fights for dominance over her Cockney one). But once the sails are flying and everyone is in pursuit of the cache, the plot gets stalled on a calm sea. Going off in many directions that converge in anticlimax, "Yellowbeard" fails to use the talents it has garnered and by its end is decidedly unfunny.

Filmed on location in England and New Mexico, "Yellowbeard" is dedicated to Marty Feldman (who died at the end of filming), a true comedic talent who is probably best remembered in his role of Dr. Frankenstein's hump-backed man servant, Igor, in "Young Frankenstein."

Burglary like rape, victims say

An ounce of prevention encouraged — Page 2B

EDITOR'S NOTE: Burglaries continue to rise in Midland and the reaction from victims ranges from fear to outrage. The following Reporter-Telegram interviews are with burglary victims, whose names have been changed to protect their identities.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Mary Jones is afraid to go into her own house.

When she returns from errands, she won't allow her young children to walk into their northwest Midland home with her. She leaves them in the car.

Cautiously, she opens the front door. Mrs. Jones' heart pounds with fear.

She watchfully tours the rooms. She checks each closet and under every bed.

When her heart settles and she feels secure, Mrs. Jones goes back to her car and lets her children enter their home.

Mrs. Jones has been burglarized — twice this year. The last time was this month.

She's disgusted and afraid.

Joe Smith is also disgusted, but he's not afraid. He is angry and filled with rage.

Smith's fury prompted a $4,000 purchase for a burglary alarm system that will be installed in his northeast Midland home. Steel bars will encase the windows. His guns are loaded.

If he is violated again, Smith said the burglar "will leave on a stretcher."

The Smiths have been burglarized six times during the last 14 years. The most recent break-in was this month.

Mrs. Jones was gone 1½ hours before returning to find her door open. A thief took money and jewelry.

"They opened my door with a plastic credit card," she said. "I worry they will come back. I've been trying to get new locks on the door, but they took all the bill money."

Now Mrs. Jones lives in terror.

"My husband calls me from work at least six times a day. I'm frightened. What if they're watching the house?"

As in other neighborhoods, the Joneses are looking out for their neighbors. Everyone is watching each other's homes. But Mrs. Jones said she still worries.

Her husband has taught her to use a gun.

For Texas, it's a vine life

EDITOR'S NOTE: This week officials of the University of Texas' University Lands invited the press to spend Wednesday touring the experimental and commercial vineyards east of Fort Stockton on Interstate Highway 10. The trip included the opportunity to talk with principals of Gill Richter Cordier Corp., which has leased the commercial vineyard; Guy J. L' Huillier, attache to the commercial counselor, consulate general of France; and University representatives.

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Rows of vines are seen in this aerial view of the vineyard.

Walking through the dusty West Texas vineyard, Guy J. L' Huillier cocked his head slightly as he turned a quarter circle at a time surveying the vines, the cloudless sky and the mountains in the background.

"I'm very glad to see what you can do. You have the land, you have the knowledge and you have the wishes to do something," the French government's representative said, his arms conveying as much expression as his voice.

"Everything is possible in Texas. Texas is big so the wine industry will be big in Texas."

Is a wine industry possible in Texas?

Two acres of grapes planted near the tiny Pecos County town of Bakersfield in 1976 laid the foundation for The University of Texas' 660-acre commercial vineyard leased to the Gill Richter Cordier Corp. in June of this year. By 1988, the commercial vineyard will produce grapes sufficient to make 1.5 million gallons of wine.

This project began in 1975 when UT, assisted by Texas A&M University, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, Texas Tech University and the USDA Soil Conservation Service, started its first experimental vineyard. But the history of wine-making in what is now known as Texas preceeds that date by at least 300 years.

In the 1600s Franciscan missionaries brought European vine-stocks with them to this area. Since the European plants could not withstand the harsh climate and insects, the missionaries replaced them with native stock for making their sacramental wines.

The Texas-French connection in wine-making predates the UT-Gill Richter Cordier one by at least 96 years.

During the latter half of the 19th century, European vineyards were being ravaged by phylloxera, a parasitic vine disease. Two accounts exist of how the French government saved its vineyards.

In one, Pierre Vialas, a French minister, was sent to America in 1887 in search of a solution. His meeting with T.V. Munson, a hybridizer experimenting with native vines near Dennison, and their subsequent tour of Texas, may have provided the answer.

But a popular account tells of wild grape cuttings from Texas being shipped to France between 1876 and 1878 by François Guilbeau, French vice counsel to Texas.

By either account, one fact is evident. Texas grapes, which were immune to phylloxera, helped save European vineyards.

Wine-making was established in Texas in 1883 with Del Rio's Qualia winery, but, because of Prohibition and economic conditions, Texas vineyard profits waned during the first half of the 20th century. Texans' interest in viticulture (the art and science of grape growing) stayed alive, however, and in 1953, near Lubbock, another vineyard saw its beginnings. The Texas Tech professors who developed the vineyard secured a license in 1971 to make experimental wine.

In 1976, this project became Llano Estacado (Staked Plains), the first 20th century Texas winery, opening the doors for this century's Texas-French connection. This year, Llano Estacado winery has contracted for the entire 1983 harvest from the UT vineyard.

Texan Richardson B. Gill, who has been active in the management of Llano Estacado, leads the Gill component of Gill Richter Cordier, the corporation which has just leased the UT vineyard. The Gill group owns 51 percent of the operation as is required by Texas law.

The two French parties are Cordier, Inc., based in Bordeaux, and Richter S.A., based in Montpellier.

Cordier is the leading exporter of wines and spirits, except Champagne, and the leading exporter of brandy in France. Founded in 1914, 10 chateaux wines carry its label. Cordier also handles the exclusive distributorships for approximately 100 other chateaux.

Richter, founded in 1882, specializes in viticulture. It's U.S. customers at the turn of the century included Wente Brothers, Italian Swiss Colony, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the University of California. Two universally used rootstocks are named after the company — Richter 99 and Richter 100.

The reasons for choosing Texas were explained by Henri Bernabe, president of Richter.

"The climate is dry, which inhibits the development of fungus and also premits the production of the best Vinifera varieties. There is also a warm climate which produces a high sugar content and the cool summer nights permit slow maturation and the creation of the flavors which give fruitiness and balance to the wine."

Construction on the winery will begin in January-February and the hoped-for completion date will fall in July of 1984. In October of 1984, Gill Richter Cordier will be totally in charge of the commercial vineyard (UT will still be operating its experimental vineyard) and the winery.

UT's investment at the close of the first phase in 1984 will be approximately $7 million. Gill-Richter-Cordier's investment for the first phase, which includes UT supplying Gill-Richter-Cordier with 1,000 acres by 1984, the construction and operation of the winery, and marketing the product, is expected to run in the neighborhood of $14 million, Jacques Teze, said, pointing out, "After that it grows by increments. This is a 60-year undertaking."

Teze is president of Teze Development Corp. of New York City and the man who, along with San Antonio consultant John L. Collet, brought the Gill Richter Cordier consortium together and handled the negotiations with UT.

Studies are being conducted to discover the best way of marketing the finished product and the best name for it. As Teze said, "We cannot rely on the French marketing system. We will combine French expertise to American expertise."

Pausing he added, "Everywhere where you have wine you have civilization. Consequently you have culture, philosophy of life and hence you have joy of living — that's what wine means. It means a certain way of life and that's what we are selling."

The Great American Fantasy — financial security

Sitting around the poker table recently — it was about midnight, after all the beer had been consumed and the only thing left to smoke was snubbed-out cigarette butts — the boys and I got around to discussing our favorite fantasies.

As you can imagine, the opinions shot forth in rapid succession, most of which are unsuitable for a family newspaper. There was a great deal of giggling and general silliness before the dealer interrupted the laughter with his succinct, though intriguing, comment.

"All I want is financial security," he said.

"Sure, sure," replied the player to his immediate left, who at the time was holding a Queen high flush and, as a result, was in a rather playful mood. "What you really mean is that you want to be independently wealthy so you'll never have to work another day of your life."

"Not true," countered the dealer. "I have no desire to be rich. Wealth often breeds corruption. It's just that I'm tired of living from paycheck to paycheck.

"Just once I'd like to sit back and relax without worrying about hot checks and overdue bills. It's really very frustrating. I have decent job, make what should be a liveable salary, yet I can't seem to make ends meet."

He had more to say.

"And what you said about me not wanting to work is wrong. I like working. I think people should work. But there ought to be more financial rewards. Instead, all the average guy can do is pay for the necessities and hope he has a little bit left over for entertainment.

"I mean, I'm not asking for the moon. It's just that it would be nice if I could afford a long weekend somewhere without going into severe debt. That's all I want. Just to be able to enjoy a few simple pleasures without begging for a loan at 18 percent interest. Is that asking too much?"

The rest of us stared at our shoes and offered a few token words of sympathy.

This did not satisfy the dealer.

"Think about it," he continued. "Figure $300 for rent, $150 for utilities and the phone, another $100 or so for food and maybe a car payment and there's nothing left. I try to be conservative with my money and not waste it, but at the end of the month, it's the same old story...peanut butter sandwiches.

"It's really embarrassing. A friend comes by, wants to grab a quick bite to eat and maybe a late movie and I have to beg off. We're talking 15 lousy bucks and I can't afford it. It's ridiculous.

"I see other people out spending money and I don't see how they do it. Maybe they make more than me or I suppose they could be living outside their means. I don't know. But they do seem to have more extra cash than me.

"I know this sounds like sour grapes, but it's not. If others can afford to spend money, great. More power to them. It's just that I'm tired of being broke. I'm tired of having to count pennies. I'm tired of finally saving a couple hundred dollars and then have the car break down. There's no end to it."

An awkward hush filled the room. One player glanced at his watch and nervously shuffled his feet. Another began exploring the ashtray for the longest butt. No one was comfortable.

Finally the dealer, who was ultimately responsible for this uneasiness, broke the ice.

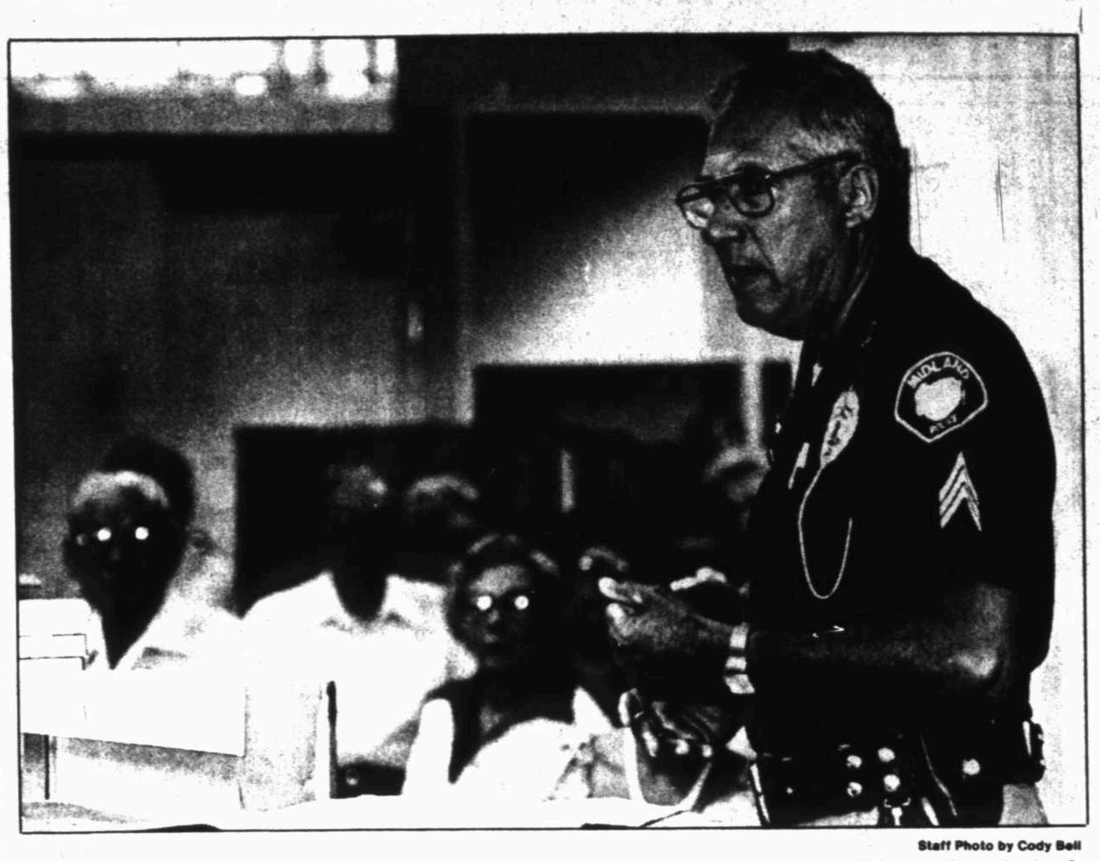

"What the hell?" he said, "I guess this is what they mean when they say you gotta be tough. Whose deal is it anyway?"

Of course, he would have gained much more sympathy from the rest of us had he not won $50 that night and cleaned out our meager entertainment savings.

Crime prevention methods stressed

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Sgt. Lalo Camarillo, an officer with the Midland Police Crime Prevention Unit, offers local residents tips on how to avoid being burglarized. Awareness, he says, is the key.

If burglars are not given an open door, chances are they won't use it.

"Don't give a burglar an opportunity to get into your property — reduce the chances of someone breaking in your home," said Sgt. Lalo Camarillo, of the Midland Police Crime Prevention Unit.

Camarillo met with about 40 Midlanders Thursday afternoon to discuss how neighborhood residents can reduce or avoid burglaries.

Although Camarillo said burglaries cannot be stopped, they can be reduced — if the public helps.

"We cannot keep a burglar from going into a home, but if we don't give these people an open door, their chances are limited," he said.

He said many people feel that their houses are being watched — they are.

"Chances are nobody is going to break-in to your home when you're home," he said. "Somebody is watching you all the time. Change your habits. There was a lady, recently, who left for 12 minutes to go to the Post Office. When she returned, she had been burglarized. That's how fast it can happen."

Camarillo said residents complain about increasings rates of burgalry, vandalism and crime in Midland, but they won't take the proper measures to reduce it.

In a message from Chief Wayne Gideon, Camarillo read: "...How many times do you hear people say they don't want to get involved? When it comes to crime you are involved...when you fail to report a crime of burglary, robbery, rape or murder, you help to create an atmos phere where people accept crime.

"All citizens must aid the police. We are asking and seeking your support."

Camarillo told the group "that just a phone call would help let us know what's happening in your neighborhood.

"Security is something that's not too easy to live with," he said. "What do you want? Easy living? A chance that someone will rip you off?"

The Crime Prevention Unit advises all Midlanders to have dead bolt-key locks on their doors, locks on windows, well-lit entry ways and alert police when something looks suspicious.

Camarillo said Midlanders can be aware — aware of their neighbors and suspicious people in the neighborhood.

"That's what we're here for," Camarillo said. "Sometimes I hear people say: 'Well, I don't want to bother the police late at night.' The police are out there in the patrol cars. They'll welcome that call.

"When do you call us?" he asked the group. "Whenever you observe suspicious events. Even if you think someone else has called, call us.

"And what is suspicious? Strangers entering your neighbor's home when he's away. People carrying TVs or stereos late at night, the sound of broken glass or anybody offering goods at a low price."

According to police statistics there were 946 residential burglaries in 1982. In July 1982, the Crime Prevention Unit counted 109 burglaries. As of July 26, 97 burglaries have occurred, and according to Camarillo, this month's final tally will probably be higher than last year's.

Camarillo said 68 percent of burglaries are committed by juveniles, under 18. More than 80 percent happen in the daytime, and 60 to 70 percent of the homes are broken into by breaking windows.

"Call us when you hear your neighbor's window being broken," he said. "Don't wait for someone else to call."

One person at the Crime Prevention meeting asked: "Can you use a gun when a burglar enters your home?"

Camarillo said: "I'm not going to say yes. The law says no one should use excessive or deadly force, unless they are protecting his own life or someone else's.

"If someone comes at you with a screwdriver and you can satisfy 12 people on a jury that you shot him in a life-threatening situation, then do what you think best."

The best way to reduce or even stop a burglary, is to prevent it, Camarillo said. The following are tips prepared by the Midland Police Department:

— Be suspicious of that man you never saw before.

— That person (young or old) taking a shortcut through your backyard may have broken into your neighbor's home — call the police.

— At night burglars hide. Trim shrubbery near doors and windows.

—Install front and backyard lights — use them.

— Know your neighbors and their cars. Obtain their phone numbers.

— Write down license numbers and descriptions of strange cars. That moving van may not have been ordered by your neighbor.

— Lock all doors and windows. Install dead bolt door locks. Place broom handle in lower track of sliding doors.

— Leave a radio playing and different lights burning every time you go out at night. Purchase an inexpensive timing device.

— Padlock the garage door.

— Don't advertise that you're on vacation. Cancel all home deliveries.

— Leave a key wth your neighbor. Don't put a key under the door mat.

— Change position of your blinds.

— Record the description and serial number of your property.

— Notify police when you're on vacation.

— If you have reason to believe that a burglary was committed while you were away, DO NOT ENTER. Call the police from a neighbor's house.

— Barking dogs could mean prowlers.

— Take that extra minute to check your home before leaving.

Victims of burglary feel property 'raped'

The Smiths left town this month for a relaxing weekend. They returned to a nightmare.

"When I opened the front door, I knew somebody had been here," Smith said. "We've been robbed several times before. This is the first time in Midand.

"You feel like somebody has personally violated you," he added. "They tossed our clothes around; drawers were left open."

The intruder broke a window at the Smith home, reached in and opened it.

Apparently, he walked through the living room to the steps at the foot of the front door. He climbed a 14-step two-tier staircase to the Smiths' bedroom.

He broke open the locked bedroom door.

The Smiths returned to find Mrs. Smith's clothes and shoes rummaged. Her jewelry box was left open. Several thousand dollars in jewelry was gone.

"A person is going to take cash or something they can turn into cash," Smith said. "I can't replace that jewelry — it's sentimental. I couldn't even begin to duplicate the feeling she (Mrs. Smith) had when I gave her those rings.

"It's a bad feeling when someone takes your stuff. If a man came to me...if he had babies and needed money, I would give him food out of my house.

"A person who steals is a low-life. He's like a rapist. Instead of asking like a man ought to, he just takes it."

"We've got dead bolt locks," Smith said. "But, they'll find a way to get in, if they want. Locks aren't made to keep thieves out.

Mrs. Jones and Smith's feelings are not uncommon among most burglary victims. Many of them compare the violation to rape.

"My wife describes it (being burglarized) like being raped," Smith said. "No matter what you've done to protect yourself it happens.

"They've (burglars) violated my rights. This is never justified. It's the same as being raped. Their taking something without consent that doesn't belong to them."

In almost every burglary, the thief has watched the victim's home, according to police statistics. He knows their patterns and habits. And in some instances, the thief knows the contents of the victim's home.

"I feel like the house was cased," Smith said. "We're taking measures to refine the house, but if I ever find someone in my house, he's dead meat. I am well armed and I guarantee if I ever catch anyone in my house, I'll blow them away."

'Kidnapped' restaurant manager arrested

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A restaurant manager who appeared to be the victim of a robbery-kidnapping has been arrested and accused of stealing $1,500 from the restaurant, authorities said.

Richard Macias, 22, who had been missing since an apparent robbery-kidnapping late Tuesday night, returned to El Paso Friday and was arrested and later released on a $10,000 bond set by County Court at Law Judge John Fashings.

The arrest warrant accused Macias of theft over $200 and under $10,000, a third-degree felony that carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Macias was spotted by a motorist about noon Friday in Orogrande, N.M., hitchhiking toward El Paso, said police Lt. John Lanahan. Police later stopped the truck carrying Macias.

"He was headed back to El Paso ready to tell everybody his big story about being kidnapped," Lanahan said.

Lanahan said police believe Macias, the night manager of Heins Restaurant here, "is responsible for the crime" and probably worked alone. He said none of the money had been recovered, but probably would turn up before long.

There were signs of a struggle at the restaurant when a security guard discovered the side door open late Tuesday night. Macias' Jeep was parked outside, the office appeared to have been ransacked and money was missing from the safe, the guard said.

Four 'township' members won't accept attorneys

CONROE, Texas (AP) — A state district court judge told four members of a self-styled township government he will not allow their unlicensed legal advisers to represent them in his court.

The four "people's court" officers refused to accept a court-appointed attorney in separate appearances before Judge Lee Alworth Friday. They also said they would not hire licensed attorneys and refused to enter pleas.

Alworth then entered "not guilty" pleas to charges of tampering with government records on behalf of Daniel Lee Swank, 42, an unemployed machine repairman, and his wife, Karen Ann Swank, 31, a housewife

Alworth also had "not guilty" pleas entered for Harold "Ed" Blake, 42, and Robert E. Jeanes, 50, both unemployed, who are charged with impersonating government officials and tampering with government records.

The two men acted as judges in the "people's court" of the township, which meets in a garage apartment at the Swanks' home in Porter.

The Swanks, Blake and Jeanes and about 50 others are members of the Christian Heritage Freedom Township, which formerly was known as the Southern District of Texas Township.

The four township members first were charged in May when they issued summonses to several Montgomery officials to appear in their court and later sent notices that the officials had been convicted in their absences of constitutional crimes.

The group contends the present state and federal courts are in violation of the U.S. Constitution, and believes gold and silver are the only lawful tender.

The four will represent themselves in court. None have formal training.

Man's condition 'fair' after mishap

A 26-year-old Big Lake man was listed in fair condition Saturday night, following an accident near Loop 250 on the south service road of I-20.

Steve Stout suffered injury to both of his ankles about 9 p.m. Saturday after he fell out of the back of a pickup truck, driven by Paul Akin of Big Lake, according to police.

Apparently, Stout was riding in the bed of the truck when a box began to slip. Police reported Stout reached for the box and fell off and was run over by a trailer, which the pickup was pulling.

Stout was taken by ambulance to Midland Memorial Hospital, where he was being treated at presstime.

Success celebrated with food giveaway

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Morris Breslau celebrated 60 years as an American on Saturday by giving free food to 60 families he said are as needy as he was when he arrived in Texas a poor Russian immigrant on July 30, 1923.

"I just felt like it. I feel it's a necessity for me to do it," said Braslau, 83, who now is vice president and treasurer of Breslau Furniture Stores.

"God and others helped me to get here," he said. "I had nothing to live for in Russia. I found everything here. I just wanted to help somebody else in some small way."

Mrs. Horacio Galvan, one of the recipients of the $1,200 in groceries, said her husband is going blind with glaucoma and has not worked for a long time.

"God bless Mr. Braslau," she said, her voice choked with emotion. "I don't speak English good and I couldn't thank Mr. Braslau at the store, but I want to thank him now."

Braslau and his brother, Frank, who died in 1976, built the home furnishings business from a meager investment in the 1920s.

At the store on Saturday morning, Breslau, his son, Irving, and members of the store's staff passed out bags of groceries to 40 of the 60 families chosen by the Nueces County Department of Human Service as most in need of the goods.

Welfare officials planned to deliver the groceries to the remaining 20 families.

"Some of the people did not have a way to get here to pick up their groceries," Braslau said. "One woman called saying her car broke down. But they don't have to worry, everyone on the list who couldn't get here today will get their groceries Monday."

The sacks of food, personally purchased by Breslau, contained canned meats, sugar, potatoes, flour, shortening, rice, salt, spaghetti, macaroni, cheese and canned fruits and vegetables.

Mr. and Mrs. Emeterio Garcia are both out of work, Mr. Garcia since last November, and Mrs. Garcia since the spring. They have four children.

"It means real food for us. We can't thank Mr. Braslau enough," Mrs. Garcia said. "There are a lot of people out of work like us and it would be wonderful if more people like Mr. Braslau helped out this way."

Tired Abilene resident returns from third fruitless Titanic search

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Jack Grimm estimates he has sunk $2 million in three expeditions to find the Titanic beneath the North Atlantic.

He returned to Abilene weary Saturday after an eight-day search thwarted by bad weather, but he said he was buoyed by the expedition's new sonar scannings that may have found the ocean liner's hull.

In an interview with the Abilene Reporter-News, the 58-year-old oil millionaire would not rule out a fourth voyage into the area where the Titanic is suspected to be resting on the ocean floor, but said it would be October at the earliest.

"We're talking about going back, but we haven't decided," he said.

On this trip, he said, sonar picked up "three new targets that looked suspiciously like the Titanic hull, but we couldn't film them because the ocean was so bad."

Drought conditions in Rankin leave gardens and yards dry and brittle.

Rankin's water problems affecting lawns, gardens like farms, ranches

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

RANKIN — Check the pastures around Rankin and find — if you're lucky — only brittle, grey grass, the byproduct of devastating drought.

It's nothing new. It began months ago. But now, the color grey has swarmed plague-like into town, where lawns are growing crisp, gardens are yellowing, and dust rises in little clouds with every step beyond pavement.

Water.

It makes or breaks a town.

Right now, it's doing a sizeable role in breaking Rankin, or at least, in bringing it to its knees.

All outside watering has been prohibited. Conservation is not just recommended; it's a critical necessity.

City water superintendent Mike Gruben and Mayor Allen Moore sent word out seven days ago that the water supply was at rockbottom, and that utter disaster could result without the cooperation of the residents.

They responded. They had little choice.

"They'd rather have it inside than not at all — that's what it amounts to," said Gruben.

Since Allen's request, the water level has risen in the city's storage tank just north of town. But not enough.

"We are improving on it right now," said Gruben, "but I still want to stress to citizens that it's something that could change around just overnight. We're still not out of the woods by any means.... What reserve we've got right now — if people went back to normal usage — we'd lose in a matter of two or three hours."

Gruben is new to Rankin — he's only been in the city a year — but water woes are old hat to the natives. "We've had this problem for years and years and it just gets a little bit worse every year 'cause the city's growing some and it takes more water," he said. "But this year, with the drought as it is and as hot as it's been, it's extremely worse.... We can have a cloudy, cool afternoon and we'll gain two or three feet in our tank from that alone...due to lack of evaporation and people cutting back on their (water-cooled) air conditioners."

A primary concern of city officials, he said, is making sure enough water would be available should a major fire occur.

The city of Rankin purchases its water from Upton County, which owns wells two miles east of town. "It's not that their wells are all running dry; it's just that this time of year we're using more," said Gruben. "They're pumping, I'd say, approximately as much water as they have been."

The lawn of Rankin schools was the first to suffer a lack of water, as Gruben and Moore asked school officials in early July to halt sprinklers. Now, however, Gruben makes daily rounds in the city to enforce the "no-watering" order.

Even with outside taps remaining off, a portion of the city suffered a two-hour dearth of water for house use last week.

Rankin's water problems and the potential of such difficulties in McCamey resulted in the formation of Upton County Water District by the 1977 state legislature. An $18 million bond issue for development of a water system to both cities failed in May, 1982, but hopes still loom with some that the District eventually will become reality.

"We've discovered excellent water about 13 miles northeast of (Rankin) ...on university land where we have a lease on 13,000 acres of land," said Upton County attorney John Menefee, who also serves as attorney for Upton County Water District. "We have drilled four wells that are producing wells."

The proposed district would pump water from those wells to overhead storage tanks in Rankin, from which it would flow to McCamey by gravitational forces. Underground storage tanks of 6-7 million gallons capacity would serve as emergency two-three day supplies.

"It would cost $18 million and they think we would have a supply of 70 years," said Menefee.

The bond issue passed in Rankin, but failed in McCamey, while a lawsuit by 200 landowners challenging the district's formation failed in appellate court and was denied a hearing by the Supreme Court.

"So now we have a viable water district," said Menefee. "We've already been upheld by the courts — if we ever want to use it."

Menefee is optimistic that such someday will be the case.

"I think eventually the people will find out that the water would be so much cheaper, and it would be a pleasure to go to the tap for drinking water."

Currently, he said, many Upton County residents rely on bottled supplies for drinking water.

Taxes, meanwhile, would average $41 per household a year — "less than three months Ozarka water bill," he noted.

Library patrons asked to park in 'new' lot south of building

Patrons of the Midland County Public Library will be in for some more car shuffling beginning Aug. 8. That's when patrons and library staffers will be assigned a new and re-topped parking lot.

Instead of to the immediate east of the library, patrons and librarians will be parking in the 89-spaces just south of the library. The new lot is the combined site of the razed American Legion building and the library's former parking lot behind the library at 301 W. Missouri Ave.

The new parking arrangement is courtesy of The First National Bank of Midland, according to library director John Deats.

Entrance to the lot will be from Missouri Avenue and through the former alley which was between the library's westside and the boot shop, which was razed.

A wife does not elect to receive her full pension or annuity upon retiring. She chose to receive less so that her surviving husband, at her death, would receive a lump sum in cash and a small monthly check for life. Are both amounts fully taxable? — W.H.G.

ANSWER: After repeating your question six times while going through the bureaucratic red tape with the Internal Revenue Service, Answer Line was told that W.H.G. should call their toll-free number and provide more information as to the type of retirement plan or annuity involved. This information is needed because of the various types of retirement plans, interest paid by employee and employer, etc.

This toll-free number is 1 800 424-1040. Request the retirement division.

The IRS also suggested you might want to contact a tax accountant, Certified Public Accountant or tax adviser.

A life insurance policy I've owned for many years has a disability income provision under which I would be paid a monthly income if I become disabled — but apparently this coverage expires when I reach age 60.

Does this mean that if I should become disabled at, say, age 50, my income would stop when I reached my 60th birthday? — M.G.

ANSWER: The American Council of Life Insurance says, "not at all." It means that if you should become totally and permanently disabled before you reach age 60, premium payments on your policy would be waived and the monthly income, unless you should recover from your disability, would continue for the rest of the benefit period in that policy, which often is to a specified age such as 65. You stop paying for this coverage at age 60, however.

ATTENTION J.D.: Would you please inform J.D., who has incurable cancer, to please try the Macrobiotic Diet. I have a friend who has cancer of the liver (which is supposed to be incurable). He has been on this diet six months and the cancer cells in his blood when he started the diet were 110, and now they are down to 46. He is doing great, looking good and works quite a bit around his house. He is 68 years old.

J.D. can call Mrs. Travis Dunn, 915 646-2297. She can tell him everything he needs to know about the diet. They are going through the same experience and illness. Hope he will try it as it has been proven successful.

The diet is simple and easy to fix, mainly grains and fresh vegetables. Paul Harvey has told of this diet on his newscast.

Dear Answer Line:

Would you please publish in your column the following information, in the event that some readers may not be aware that a telephone in Midland only rings 10 times in a minute. It used to be that a caller would let a phone ring about five or six times, thinking that would be long enough to see if anyone was at home. However, with the elderly, handicapped or someone living alone, five rings does not give them time to answer sometimes. This information was obtained through a study made by the League of Women Voters. Thank you. — Midge Erskine

Consider it done Midge.

What is a Keogh plan? — J.W.

ANSWER: H.R. 10 (Keogh) plans are one of the tax-deferred retirement plans. The Keogh plans allow self-employed persons and proprietors of small businesses to set up individual retirement plans for themselves and their employees. The self-employed person can deduct up to the lesser of $15,000 or 15 percent annually of earned income.

Other tax-deferred retirement plans include Individual Retirement Accounts and the Tax-Sheltered Annuities.

Man pleads no contest

CAMERON, Texas (AP) — Norris Moss, charged with arson in the burnings of six East Texas churches, entered a plea of no contest at his arraignment Saturday and was ordered to undergo a competency examination at Rusk State Hospital.

Moss, a Houston used car salesman, claimed to reporters and police after his arrest on July 6 that he was Jesus and Julius Caesar.

At the quietly convened arraignment hearing, Moss appeared with a Bible in his hands and addressed State District Judge Don Humble only in response to questions and legal warnings, and to say "no contest" when asked how he would plead on the four arson charges.

Humble said later that when he asked Moss his name, Moss asked "You mean in this life or the other life?"

"He finally did tell me he is Norris Moss," Humble said.

Arena a monument to community

LUFKIN (AP) — It was built on a foundation of pride and supported by the pillars of the community.

Lufkin's new $2 million Angelina County Exposition Center looks like just another arena for rodeos, horse shows, concerts and high school graduations, but it is more than that.

In this hard-working manufacturing community where unemployment is above 10 percent, the 90,000 square-foot facility was constructed almost completely with private donations.

Nestled in the piney woods of deep East Texas about 120 miles from a major city, Lufkin is a place that believes in taking care of itself.

"I would think that (President) Reagan ought to come here because this is what he's been saying for years — do it yourself and get off the back of the federal government," said George Henderson Jr., a leader behind the fund-raising for the Expo Center. The first $1 million was collected in three months.

Lufkin planned to dedicate the Expo Center July 4th as a way of expressing its independence from outside help. But the facility, opened this spring, has been used so many times that the dedication was scrapped.

After a decade of discussion and pipe dreams, business leaders in Lufkin decided in 1981 to build an arena that would attract top-quality events and visitors to the community. Without publicly selling government-backed bonds and without grants from Washington, Henderson and his friends scratched their way to $2 million.

"It was a practiaal decision. How can we do it? This community likes to think we're not dependent on the federal and the state government," Henderson said. "The first turn is not to the federal government. The first turn is to ourselves."

Henderson and his roundtable of business leaders boast that the structure is thought to be the largest clear-span, pre-engineered buildiing in the United States — no support posts block any views.

They also will tell you that Merle Haggard will perform in the Expo Center Thursday, that each pair of beams weighs 40 tons, and that they already raised $30,000 for a children's rehabilitation center at a rodeo held in the center.

And, they might add with pride, 300 different companies or individuals in Angelina County contributed to the project — so they paid for it themselves.

"One little girl in our 4-H program robbed her piggy bank of $5.36," said Jerry Huffman, executive vice president of the Lufkin Chamber of Commerce. "She said she wanted to be a part of it."

"One of the amazing things is that all this happened during a period when our economy was somewhat recessed," Huffman said. "Our unemployment is running 13 to 14 percent — the highest in our history. I guess one benefit was that this kept some people working."

The largest contribution came from Lufkin Industries, the city's largest employer and a leading manufacturer of oil field pumps. The slump in the oil industry has hit hard there, but that did not deter Bob Poland, president and chief executive officer, from donating more than $200,000 in money, manpower, materials and moral support.

"We're like the bumble bee," Poland said. "You know, according to the laws of nature, the bumble bee is not supposed to fly. If we had talked about raising $2 million from the start, we probably would have thought we couldn't do it."

The original estimate was $1.2 million. Henderson said that when in-kind donations of time and materials are added in, the Expo Center may be worth as much as $3 million. The city and county governments kicked in $300,000 each.

Donations were taken in the form of 5-year pledges. In order to pay off the bills right away, First City National Bank of Lufkin and RepublicBank-Lufkin agreed to buy non-rated, very low interest bonds — backed only by the pledges — from the Angelina County Exposition Center Board as a way of inexpensively financing the project.

The financing was not exactly orthodox.

"There are a couple of people in this town who are tough to say no to — like Bob Poland and George Henderson," said Bill Prince, head of First City of Lufkin.

"Bob Poland got us going and from that point forward there as no backing up. It was not 'Can we do this?' It was 'How can we do this?' It was a matter of getting on the bandwagon or getting left behind, and I think the banks realized this.

"We have a tremendous investment in this community."

Lufkinites hope that the Expo Center stimulates growth in their community of 30,000. Already, they say, 350 new motel rooms are under construction.

"I think we've just scratched the surface so far with this thing," said Prince. "Many of these events are planned two and three years in advance."

The center, a simple yet elegant structure, already has been visited by representatives from Austin, Killeen, Jefferson and Belton.

Lufkin also has its own zoo, a forestry museum and its own civic center — most all of which were built with private donations.

"It's always been that way in Lufkin," Huffman said. "The city here has accepted government funds for water and sewer projects. But for the things that we feel like are amenities to our community — the pride here says just do it yourself."

"We're not suggesting this is a 'holier than thou' community. There are just folks here that want to do things," echoed Henderson. "I'm a Democrat but I believe that Reagan is right when he says people ought to get off the back of the federal government. And this is not to flaunt our community. I say this with a lot of pride."

Prairie Lee reunion scheduled

Homecoming for former students and their parents, teachers, trustees and friends of the old Prairie Lee Common School District will be held at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, Aug. 6, in the Greenwood School Cafeteria, according to Alvey Bryant, an ex-student of Prairie Lee and former trustee.

The school opened in 1912 but was consolidated in 1949 with the Stokes and McClinic CSDs east of Midland. From that union emerged Greenwood Independent School District.

Those coming to the Homecoming may bring cover-dishes for the noon feast. Information on the reunion may be obtained by calling 684-7043 for Bryant or 689-0070 for Nora Casbeer Stanley, another Prairie Lee ex-student.

Bryant, a Greenwood community farmer and former Midland County commissioner, was a Prairie Lee trustee at time of the consolidation.

Earlier in the 1900s, eight common school districts were in the county: Cotton Flat, McClintic, Pleasant Valley, Prairie Lee, Stephenson, Stokes, Valley View and Warfield. Those were in addition to the schools in Midland.

Year of Fulbright research completed

Dr. David E. Clapham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eldon E. Clapham of 2501 Learmont Drive, is completing a year as a Fulbright research professor at the Max Planck Institute for Biophysical Chemistry in Gottingen, West Germany, this summer.

He is on leave from his residency in internal medicine at the Brigham and Women's Hospital of Harvard Medical School in Boston.

Clapham, who attended grade school in Midland before moving to Monahans and Littleton, Colo., received his bachelor's degree in electrical engineering from Georgia Tech. He received his master's degree and doctorate from Emory University in Atlanta. The author of more than 20 abstract and research articles, he is a member of the professional honorary societies Tau Beta Pi, Sigma Xi, Alpha Omega Alpha, Biophysical Society and the American Heart Association.

His research involves the study of fundamental events underlying cellular action potentials, or the fast electrical signals which regulate contraction and communication between cells.

City Council, MISD officials still studying school-park plan

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

A meeting Monday between city and school officials is planned to iron out differences which have been delaying installation of playground equipment at two new schools.

Santa Rita Elementary, north of Loop 250, and Quanah Parker Elementary, in Trinity Estates north of Wadley Avenue, will be opening their doors Aug. 29 without playground equipment even if the council approves the items at its next meeting Aug. 9.

The differences center on who's liable for what and who pays for what.

Starting in June, the city agenda has listed an item for the council to approve a lease proposal with the Midland Independent School District concerning property at Santa Rita and Quanah Parker and for joint development of the land. A second item would appropriate funds for development of both parks, including purchasing the equipment.

Since June, the council has deferred a decision.

Wayne Kohout, who was director of Parks and Recreation Department until Friday, said the City Council several years ago agreed to follow a policy of trying to purchase park land adjacent to a new school site. The city wouldn't have to buy as much land and would lease additional land from the school to develop a park to be used by school children and the neighborhood.

PARKS AT THESE two school sites would mark the first time the two were planned as one package, rather than duplicating efforts. But it's not the first cooperative project undertaken by the two.

Leasing the school land, said Kohout, didn't involve money. The trade-off called for the city to purchase and install playground equipment.

"In exchange for improvements made on the land, the school offers its property," said Kohout. MISD usually buys 10 acres for a school site; the city has only to buy four to five acres, said Kohout of the cooperative arrangement. Without the school land, the city would have had to buy more acreage, at a cost of $13,000 to P$16,000 an acre, he said.

The parks were designed by J.T. Dunkin and Associates of Dallas. In summary, playground equipment would be placed next to the school and close to the section that houses the younger children. Practice ballfields and soccer fields would be carved into the outer edges of the park and school land. And rimming the site would be a walkway of asphalt made in the same style as the Petro Parcourse.

The school district would be putting in parking lots which would be used during the day by teachers. At night, they would be utilized by citizens wanting to use the walkway for jogging, walking, bicycling or skating, according to Kohout. In addition, the city would set up a multi-use exercise station, known as Fitness Cluster, near the parking lot.

SANTA RITA also would have a shade remada that could be used during the day as a teacher station. Next to it would be a berm, or small hill covered with grass, to serve as an amphitheater for an outdoor class.

Berms also would be piled up at Quanah Parker, said Kohout.

The ideas were put on hold when the bids came in too high, according to Kohout. A third park was to be included — Sage in the Crestgate addition — and it was dropped, since a school wasn't involved, to lower the cost.

Today, the cost of two parks — with berms and landscaping eliminated — is down to $133,775. The department has scraped together cash amounting to $130,700. "Maybe the school district can come up with the rest," added Kohout.

"Initially, they (MISD) said they would help us. But they've had cost overruns on the two schools."

This development is only Phase I, noted Kohout. "Gosh knows when funds will be available for Phase II."

The spartan Phase I has cut out picnic tables, trees and shrubs, leaving the parks in their original "flat" state.

At last week's meeting some questions were raised by the council about the cooperative effort and why the city had purchased land next to the school site.

"I just hope the cooperative effort doesn't get pushed aside," said Kohout. "We've leased school sites before."

Dr. James Mailey with MISD will be meeting with city officials Monday. He acknowledged school officials are getting worried about the playground equipment and the shortening time frame.

"WE'VE BEEN WORKING on this project for a long time. I was hoping to get at least the playground equipment in," he said.

The school district already has planted grass on its site, and that may cut part of the cost out of the city's proposal. But the plan called for the park and school site to be developed together, Mailey said.

"Well, that's the intent we've been working on," he said, then laughed.

Other areas where the two governments cooperate include Lee and Midland high schools with the city leasing part of the tennis courts — constructed by the school district — and lighting those areas.

Another problem being worked out involves leasing the land to the city and who is held liable for accidents on the city's equipment, said Mailey.

The $3,000 difference, he said, should be no problem.

Mayor G. Thane Akins said the problem is "a matter of negotiating with the school system. Some of it's on city-owned property and some of it's on school-owned property."

He agreed the concept of both governments working together on developing a packaged site is better for the people and cheaper for the taxing bodies.

"But there needs to be a sharing of costs. Some of its on our land, some on theirs. The asphalt track, for example goes on school property as well as city property. School kids will be using it more. The school should share the cost."

AKINS SAID an agreement should be reached by the council's Aug. 9 meeting. If bids are accepted then, getting the playground purchased and installed will take another four to five weeks, according to Kohout.

But, noted the former director, "for the past eight weeks it's just been sitting there. It could have been started in June. It all smacks of 'it's not a good deal for the city; we're giving them something for nothing.' They're losing sight of the big picture — it's the taxpayer."

"I'd like to have the playground equipment in by the time the kids get there," Mailey said. "If not, we (school district) have to take some other action."

Cotton producers to gather for Las Cruces conference

COLLEGE STATION — The annual Western Cotton Production Conference dealing with farmers' concerns from government programs to boll weevils will be held in the Holiday Inn in Las Cruces, N.M., Aug. 9-11.

"The conference is the largest annual event for Western cotton growers," says Dr. Bob Metzer, cotton specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Sessions will deal with the worldwide cotton supply, the payment-in-kind (PIK) program, results of a field comparison between cotton strippers and pickers in Oklahoma, irrigation techniques, and controlling root rot and pests, including the boll weevil.

Roundup begins Monday

SAN ANGELO — Ranchers from 25 states and several nations will convene here Monday through Friday for the Third Annual International Ranchers Roundup in the San Angelo Convention Center.

The Roundup, which will be keyed to the theme "Innovative Management," will feature general sessions of interest to ranchers and landowners plus three days of intensified concurrent sessions on beef cattle, sheep and goats, grazing managemnt, wildlife, marketing, business management for the ranch family, and on computers.

Keynote speakers will include Dub Waldrip, president of the National Cattlemen's Association; U.S. Congressman Tom Loeffler; Cas Maree, South African rancher, and Dr. Arthur G. Hansen, chancellor of the Texas A&M University System.

Ranchers at the conference may choose from four ranch tours to be conducted Friday. Tours will be to West Texas ranches noted for innovative management practices in beef cattle, sheep and goats, grazing systems and to the scenic wildlife Texas Hill Country near Kerrville.

Altogether, 85 ranching experts are to address the Roundup, which is to be attended by up to 750 ranchers and other landowners.

Labor regulations reviewed

LUBBOCK — As the demand for crews and migrant hoe hands increases in some farm areas, a corresponding increase in the need for farmers to be aware of minimum wage, unemployment compensation and other labor-related regulations rises, according to Ed Dean, field service director for the Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers Inc.

Some of the regulations are "brand new," said Dean. Others are carryovers from previous years.

Unchanged is the $3.35 per hour minimum wage applicable to employers who use as many as 500-man days of labor per calendar quarter.

The Federal Unemployment Compensation law requires every employer who employs 10 or more individuals on any day in each of 20 calendar weeks in 1981 or 1982 or who had a cash payroll of $20,000 in any quarter to pay unemployment compensation tax on the earnings of those workers.

Employers must keep for three years records on wages, hours worked, earning and net pay of their workers.

Agricultural agents to meet

COLLEGE STATION — The Texas County Agricultural Agents Association's annual meeting Aug. 7-10 in Wichita Falls will be keyed to the theme "TCAAA Western Heritage and Growth."

The meeting will include the recognition of the organization's seven recipients of the "Man of the Year Award in Texas Agriculture" and the presentation of the Distinguished Service Award to eight outstanding county agents.

Plant pathologist named

COLLEGE STATION — Dr. Roger K. Jones has been named plant pathologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Jones, who formerly was plant pathologist for TAEX's Southwest Texas area headquartered in Uvalde, succeeded Dr. Walter Walla, who was named assistant director and leader of TAEX's state agricultural programs.

He is a native of Charles City, Iowa.

Pork panel opposes diversion

DES MOINES, Iowa — The National Pork Producers Council, acutely aware of "burdensome red meat supplies, is opposing the proposed paid dairy diversion program which would pay dairymen to cut their milk production.

"After careful analysis, it appears that the dairy proposal could increase dairy cow slaughters by as much as 60,000 cows per week, as producers cull their herds to reduce production," says Wayne Walter, NPPC president.

"This means we could see substantially increased red meat supplies and competition in the meat case."

The proposed dairy program would have a severe impact on the hog industry anytime, says Walter. But this fall will be especially critical, as the pork industry tries to reduce its numbers and to stimulate demand to get producers back in a profitable position.

"When we've been faced with oversupply, we haven't gone to the government asking to be bailed out with taxpayer dollars," notes Walter. "We've done exactly as we are doing now — made the adjustments ourselves."

Support level may be cut

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, worried that grain price supports are interfering with an already depressed market, will probably cut the basic support level by 10 percent for next year's wheat and corn crops.

"I believe the odds favor lowering it," says Dawson Ahalt, deputy assistant secretary for economics.

Declining demand due to the global recession and increased production in other nations encouraged by rising U.S. support levels is the reason Agriculture Secretary John Block will likely invoke the limited administrative discretion he won from Congress in 1981, Ahalt says.

Such a step, if taken, would drop basic price support loans — which farmers needn't repay if they choose to give their harvest to the government — to about $2.30 per bushel for corn and $3.20 per bushel for wheat. Farmers have traditionally used the nine-month loans for operating cash until they decide the time is right to sell their crops on the open market.

"It's an extremely tough issue to face, but I believe the fundamentals argue for lowering" the loan rates, Ahalt recently told the House Government Operations agriculture subcommittee.

"We have a system today that's out of tune with the economic realities, and we want to take the steps to get it back in line," he said.

Without the reduction, the loan rates would be $3.55 a bushel for wheat and $2.55 a bushel for corn. USDA's five-day moving average put the price of wheat last Friday at $3.43 a bushel and corn at $3.11.

Details of the government policy for wheat must be announced by Aug. 15 and for corn by Nov. 15.

A loan-rate reduction would be only the latest in Block's drive to rein in the cost of the government's farm support programs. This year taxpayers will shell out $21.2 billion for supports, five times the amount spent just two years ago.

If that price tag isn't drastically lowered, Ahalt warned, "These programs are in jeopardy."

Block wants Congress to change the dairy price support program, preferably by cutting the support level 8 to 10 percent. That program has been costing taxpayers $2 billion a year.

Plant now for spring blooms

What would Texas be like without bluebonnets? Not nearly so lovely in the spring.

Each April, thousands upon thousands of acres of the Lone Star State burst forth with loyal bluebonnets to proclaim spring.

Bluebonnets are our state flower, of course, and their simplistic beauty returns year after year, from border to border, to greet 12 million Texans and scores of visitors alike.

If you are one of the many Texans, native or transplanted, who love bluebonnets, perhaps you would enjoy adding them to your landscape or garden. If so, then now is the time to plant for next spring's bloom.

Seed must be sown in late August or early September if blossoms are wanted next spring. Later sowings are almost useless.

Late summer planting is essential because bluebonnets are actually winter annuals. They germinate in late summer and exist as a small rosette of leaves through the winter, while developing a good root system. They then grow rapidly during the spring rainy season to produce sheets of blue flowers.

Unfortunately, many seeds are wasted each year due to improper planting. Just tossing the seed into a grassy area along the road or in the corner of the yard does little else than provide expensive food for birds.

Poor germination also is a problem. This usually occurs unless something is done to soften the hard seed coat to allow moisture to penetrate.

The often-recommended practice of puncturing each seed with a needle or ice pick will work, but is rather time consuming, as well as hard on the hands if large quantities are being prepared. It also can damage the embyro.

Scratching the seed boat between two layers of sandpaper glued to two boards also will work.

The most often recommended method of softening the seed coat, however, is soaking the seen in warm water for several days, changing the water daily. Changing the water is necessary to prevent oxygen depletion and "souring" of the seed.

Excellent success also has been achieved by placing the seed in a cement mixer with coarse sand, tumbling to 15 minutes and planting immediately. For small amounts, a rock hound's tumbler would be excellent.

When you are ready to plant, broadcast the seed on tilled soil, cover with ¼ to ½ inch of soil, firm the soil and water.

Keep the soil moist until the tiny bluebonnet seedling appear. Germination of the seed usually takes from a week to ten days.

Once established, bluebonnets seed themselves year after year, provided the seed has been allowed to mature, grass or weeds haven't become too thick and there has been sufficient rain in July and August to soften the seed coat.

It would be advisable to water your bluebonnet stand several time to assure good germination due to the extended drought in our area.

Once established, bluebonnets prefer to be left alone. Fertilization should be avoided, as bluebonnets are weak competitors to lush stands of grass.

Because of excellent spring rains, bluebonnet seed supplies should be abundant. Small packets of seed can be purchased at local nurseries and garden centers.

Drought takes toll in Far West Texas

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — The drought continues to worsen in Far West Texas, as well as parts of South, Southwest and Central Texas, while some scattered rains have brightened the crop outlook in other areas of the state.

Dry, hot weather is causing severe problems in the Far West District where rainfall has been short for the past year. Producers are reporting death losses of sheep, cattle and wildlife in a number of counties due to poor pasture and range conditions, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System.

Among hardest hit counties are Reagan, Upton, Crane and Winkler, where no measurable rain has been received this year; but all counties of the district are suffering severe drought stress.

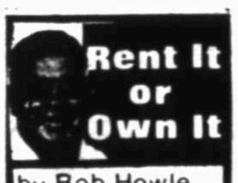

West Texas ranchers are still providing supplemental feed for their livestock, after culling foundation herds sharply and marketing calves and lambs much earlier and at a lighter weight than normal. In addition, Carpenter said, the poor nutrition available to cows and ewes may well be reflected next year if animals do not rebreed on schedule, and calf and lamb crops may be reduced by as much as 30 to 40 percent.

Dryland crops in that area — along with those in South and Southwest Texas — are under severe stress due to lack of moisture, and below normal yields are expected. Irrigation systems throughout the dry areas are operating at full capacity around the clock as producers try to compensate for lack of rainfall, Carpenter added.

High temperatures, ranging from just under to more than 100 degrees, are hastening maturity of cotton and sorghum crops in southern portions of the state. The sorghum harvest is well under way in the South District with fair yields being reported, and is advancing in the Coastal Bend. Corn is mature and drying down for the harvest in South Texas and a fair crop is in prospect in the Coastal Bend and on irrigated fields of Southwest Texas. Replanting of some 2,000 acres of hail-damaged cotton has been completed in Zavala County, in the Winter Garden area.

Sugar cane is making good progress in the Rio Grande Valley under heavy irrigation, Carpenter said. Okra and tomatoes are in fair volume there, and melons and bell peppers are in the final stages of harvest.

Home gardens are still producing vegetables, but some have been hurt by the hot, dry weather as well as hail in a few areas.

The price of wallpaper is high enough. If you have to pay a contractor to remove the old wallpaper and/or hang the new, the cost of redecorating a room can have you climbing its walls. Actually, each aforementioned step can easily be done yourself with the proper equipment. Rent a wallpaper steamer to help remove the old wallpaper at a fraction of the cost of hiring someone to do the job. If the old paper has been covered with a layer of paint, it is necessary to scratch the painted surface before steaming. This will allow steam to pass through to the paper and make removal easier.

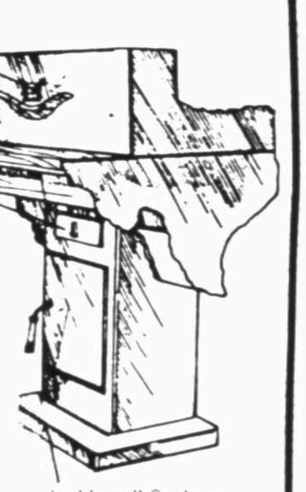

A workman is only as good as his tools and the final result of any job displays the quality and knowledge of such a person. Now you can do the job using the same equipment that the professionals do. San Jacinto Monument gets facelift

SAN JACINTO BATTLEGROUND, Texas (AP) — When fist-sized chunks of limestone began flaking off the San Jacinto Monument, state officials decided it was time to recondition the 570-foot structure.

The monument, which marks the site of the battle of San Jacinto, is only 44 years old, merely the middle teens for most monuments, but architect Ken Marak said it has aged much more rapidly than expected.

"It's an old man now and we've got to do surgery," explained Marak.

That surgery is now underway. It involves a massive refurbishment that is costing the state about $3.5 million, three times the original cost of the monument.

Many of the problems stem from an error in judgement when materials for the monument were selected in the 1930s.

A soft Texas limestone filled with fossilized shells was chosen for use on the facing of the monument. Weather and pollution have caused the stone to slowly crumble. Rainwater penetrating the porous stone has seeped into the interior of the shaft and cascaded into the museum at its base. And walls supporting the two-tiered monument terrace are bulging from the water-logged clay fill used in the construction.

Marak, supervising repairs, said the renovation should restore the monument's youth and keep the star-topped structure young for many more decades.

The monument, which stands 15 feet taller than the Washington Monument, marks the coastal meadow on Buffalo Bayou near Houston where Texas won its independence from Mexico.

On April 21, 1836, just a few hundred feet from the base of the monument, some 1,200 Mexican soldiers were jolted awake from an afternoon siesta by the battle cry of a 927-man Texas army in full charge.

THE BATTLE lasted only 18 minutes and the Mexican army was decisively beaten. Nine Texans were killed and 630 Mexicans were killed, 208 wounded and the rest taken prisoner.

The battle assured Texas of its freedom and established the colony as an independent Republic.

Less than 10 years later, in 1845, Texas became a part of the United States. This annexation triggered a war with Mexico and America's victory in that conflict resulted in the U.S. acquisition of almost a million square miles of territory — the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast areas — and increased the size of the nation by a third.

The Texas leader, Gen. Sam Houston, may have picked a good place for a decisive military battle. But it's a lousy location for a monument.

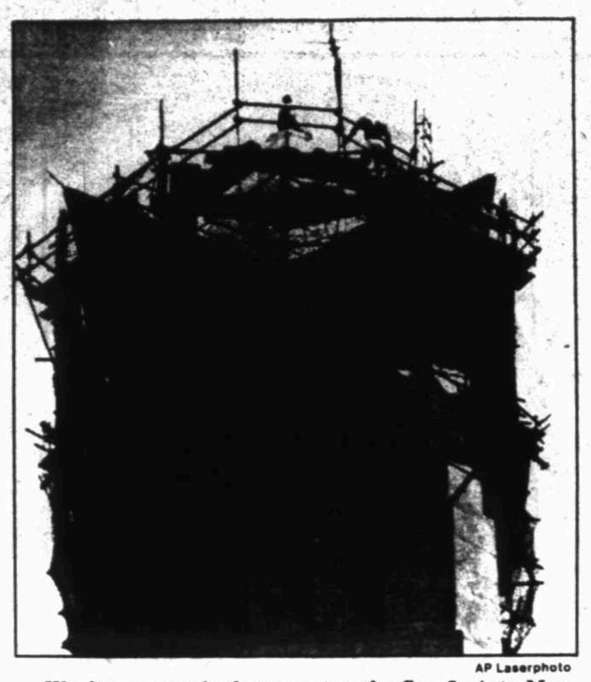

Part of the 327-acre battleground park is a soggy, estuarine swamp that has slowly subsided about six feet in the last 50 years. Some park roads have been covered with water and other roads have been rerouted or removed.

Some areas where decisive action in the battle took place are now under water, prompting the observation that if Gen. Houston were to fight the battle again he would need a navy.

Marak said the subsidence has had little effect on the monument.

"Our study shows the monument is not sinking or tilting," he said. "It would take only a tilt (lean) of two inches for the elevator to stop working and it continues to work fine."

The monument was built by Works Progress Administration labor and used construction techniques that were considered daring in the 1930s.

Workmen repair the star atop the San Jacinto Monument on the San Jacinto Battleground. Scaffolds and nets surround the top of the 570-foot structure.

A MASSIVE, 124-square-foot concrete foundation that is 15 feet thick was laid down in a single continuous pour that lasted two and one-half days. The concrete core of the monument was made using a slip form, the first major use of a technique that is now common in construction of tall structures.

The 220-ton star atop the monument required a handmade steel skeleton and scores of small stone pieces cut to fit. Concrete forms also had to be made for each part of the star.

All of the concrete work, said Marak, is sound and stable.

The mistake came when the monument builders put the porous limestone on top of the concrete.

Marak said the fossils embedded in the linestone collect water. The water freezes in the winter and expands, causing the limestone to crack. This, in turn, allows more water to seep in.

The water has caused structual steel in the star to rust through in some places.

Rainwater seeps between the concrete and the stone on the tower shaft. It then runs down the tower and seeps into the museum.

To correct these problems, workmen have reinforced the rusted steel and are coating the star with a plastic material tinted to match the old stone.

"It will look the same," said Marak, but will be impervious to rain.

On the stone facing of the shaft, workers will apply a watercoating material. This will protect the stone, said the achitect, but will have to be reapplied every seven years.

San Angelo judge computes answer to traffic ticket problems

By The Associated Press

A San Angelo judge, proud of the way his courtroom operates, is entertaining dozens of inquisitive colleagues this summer.

They pepper J. Allen Gilbert with questions and enthusiastic comments concerning his municipal court procedures, and many of them try to emulate him when they return home.

It isn't Gilbert's performance on the bench that has them enthralled, however — it's his computer program.

"He has done a marvelous job with it," said Jean Jones, chief clerk of the Midland Municipal Courts.

"It's a tremendous program," added Breckenridge Municipal Court Judge Conrad Keys.

Gilbert said the program handles all traffic-ticket processing, the biggest single task in most city courts. The program took 1½ years to develop and is now for sale to any other city that wants it — for $15,000.

"Believe me, the $15,000 is not unreasonable," said Keys, who can hardly wait to buy. "We can't afford it right now, but it is in the future for us. Probably next year."

"It's a very simple program," said Ms. Jones, "but it does everything. We are usually three or four days behind in preparing our dockets. They do theirs every day, in about an hour."

Gilbert, 30, and data processing manager Sandy Boatright — who actually wrote the program — have no formal computer training.

"I started with the school district here," Ms. Boatright said. "That's where I learned how to program. So far it hasn't been too difficult."

Gilbert's first exposure to computers was even more recent.

"I had never seen a computer until the day ours came in," he said. "Thirty days later I drew up all the 'screens' (layouts) for the program. If I can do it, anybody can."

Gilbert said he simply saw a need and filled it.

"I've had tons of people ask me where they could get a computer program that would handle their courts," he said. "We did a lot of research and just couldn't find one...so we made one up."

San Angelo is the first Texas city prepared to market computer programs it has developed, according to Dick Brown of the Texas Municipal League in Austin. But it seems to be an idea whose time has come.

Officials in 10 cities are interested in the software, and the San Angelo city commission is preparing a contract with a marketing company to handle sales.

The reason for the interest is simple — the program saves time and money.

"What it does over there, and what it would do for me if we could afford it, is cut the workload and raise the efficiency," said Keys in Breckenridge.

"We're so antiquated here," Midland's Ms. Jones said. "We still do our processing like they did in the 1930s. I've been screaming for it (program) — it would make everything so much faster and easier."

Gilbert said that's exactly what he had in mind.

"We have been averaging 250 (traffic) complaints a day," he said. "Three girls were working six hours a day on complaints — that's 18 hours. Our program prints 250 complaints in 57 minutes.

"It saved us three salaries. It has already more than paid for itself."

Gilbert's staff did not share his vision, at first.

"Computers scare people," he said. "It took a long time for some of our employees to get over being scared of it."

"I still have some fear to overcome," Ms. Boatright added, only partly in jest, noting she will have to learn a completely new system when the city updates its computer system next year.

"People tend to fear what they don't understand," Keys agreed. "But if some of your personnel are willing to hustle and get things working, they realize that the computer takes the load off the people and puts it on the machine."

'Ghost' scares guards

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Reports by "terrified" security guards of a mysterious strolling woman in a white dress and blood-curdling "ghost" screams in the night at a south Bexar County industrial plant have left investigators baffled.

The two guards reported separate incidents on Thursday and Friday, said investigators.

One of the guards reported seeing a mysterious young woman in a white dress walking in the bushes near Ellis Industries as he sat in his car, deputy Bill Stanley said.

Stanley said Ray Agosto refused to return to his car even though Stanley "checked the area for any suspicious spirits" and found none.

On Friday night, a second security guard called in an officer-in-trouble report after hearing a scream, said deputy Eddie Tijerina.

Tijerina said when he arrived at the scene, the security guard, Gabriel Contreras, "was scared half to death."

"He was standing close to the office area," Tijerina said. "He said he heard what sounded like a woman being stabbed. There were terrible screams according to him, but we couldn't find anything.

"He heard something. I don't know what it was. He was terrified and shaking like a leaf on a tree," Tijerina said. "When we left, he left. He said that he wasn't going to work there anymore."

Tijerina said Contreras told investigators he believed the screams came from the ghost of a murdered woman seeking revenge on her killer.

The deputy offered the theory that the screams and ghost sighting might be part of a teen-age prank, but said, "I don't know what's going on."

A spokesman for TIS Security, which employed the two men, said the guards had been instructed not to talk to reporters.

A spokesman for the Ellis plant said no similar incidents had been reported.

Soiled Congress

Just whose best interests are the members of Congress and their ethics watchdogs representing?

In light of the admitted sexual conduct of Reps. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., and Daniel Crane, R-Ill., the House Ethics Committee recommended only a reprimand.

Is that just punishment for two men who have admitted to engaging in sex with teenage pages? Is that the punishment the American electorate would assess. We hardly think so.

Now it's true that the House voted July 20 to censure the two men, a move which strips Studds of his chairmanship of the House Coast Guard and Navigation Subcommittee and condemns both men in the eyes of their colleagues, so to speak. But what does that translate into? A slap on the wrist.

When a man or woman is elected to Congress, that person traditionally has possessed a high level of intelligence, common sense, courage and high moral fiber. That's because the members of Congress, besides constituting the greatest political body in the world, serve as role models for American society — or should.

By their actions, Crane and Studds have shown they did not possess the high moral fiber demanded by Americans. They violated a public trust with their constituents, the American people and the parents of the involved pages. They have written another ugly chapter in the history of congressional misconduct and disgraced the office of the fine men and women who served respectfully before them.

The House Ethics Committee chose not to expel the two men, which is indicative of the fact that body is not performing as Americans would have it. That disgraceful situation should be remedied quickly, because as recent years' scandals have all too graphically demonstrated, this probably will not be the final soiling of Congress.

As for Crane and Studds, they would best serve their constituencies now by resigning. If they do not, their constituents should make it clear through recall elections that their actions are not condoned by voters in their districts and will not be tolerated.

Wayward words

Everyone, or nearly everyone, has at one time or another slipped on a wayward word, or a mixed metaphor.

The lexicon of wayward words was enhanced the other day by a few quotations contributed to the New York Times by David Diefendorf. An actual living New Yorker, he said, once made the following remark: "I feel like a babe in the wool!" And another: "It's cold enough outside for polo bears!"

As for mixed metaphors, we have always liked this one: "Let us put our shoulders to the wheel and take the bull by the horns."

Then there is the one about the secretary of state, identity unknown, who is supposed to have said that he was "going to drive the ship of state squarely down the middle of the road." It is just as well that his identity is unknown, for Foggy Bottom seems to be run that way some days.

That's enough for today, waywardwise.

Another View:

Avoiding mischief

It's difficult to find the thread of philosophical consistency in the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court in the term that recently ended. However, the court's apparent lack of an orthodox viewpoint is not all bad.

The justices' refusal to adopt the kind of relentless "conservatism" desired by some citizens meant that the tribunal didn't overturn some earlier "liberal" decisions of genuine merit. Yet, in some instances, the court put on its liberal and conservative faces simultaneously. On the troubling issue of abortion, for example, the court reaffirmed its 1973 decision and further strengthened protections for women who want abortions. The court reached its liberal result by the conservative path of "stare decisis," that is, standing by a previously announced decision.

Similarly, in striking down the "legislative veto," the court strengthened the hand of the president (historically, a liberal objective) but the court based its ruling on a fairly strict interpretation of the Constitution (historically, a conservative approach).

On criminal justice matters, the court continued its generally rightward drift. It gave federal appellate courts the power to expedite the handling of appeals of death sentences. Police got greater leeway on some searches of persons suspected of crimes and of property believed to be involved in criminal activity.

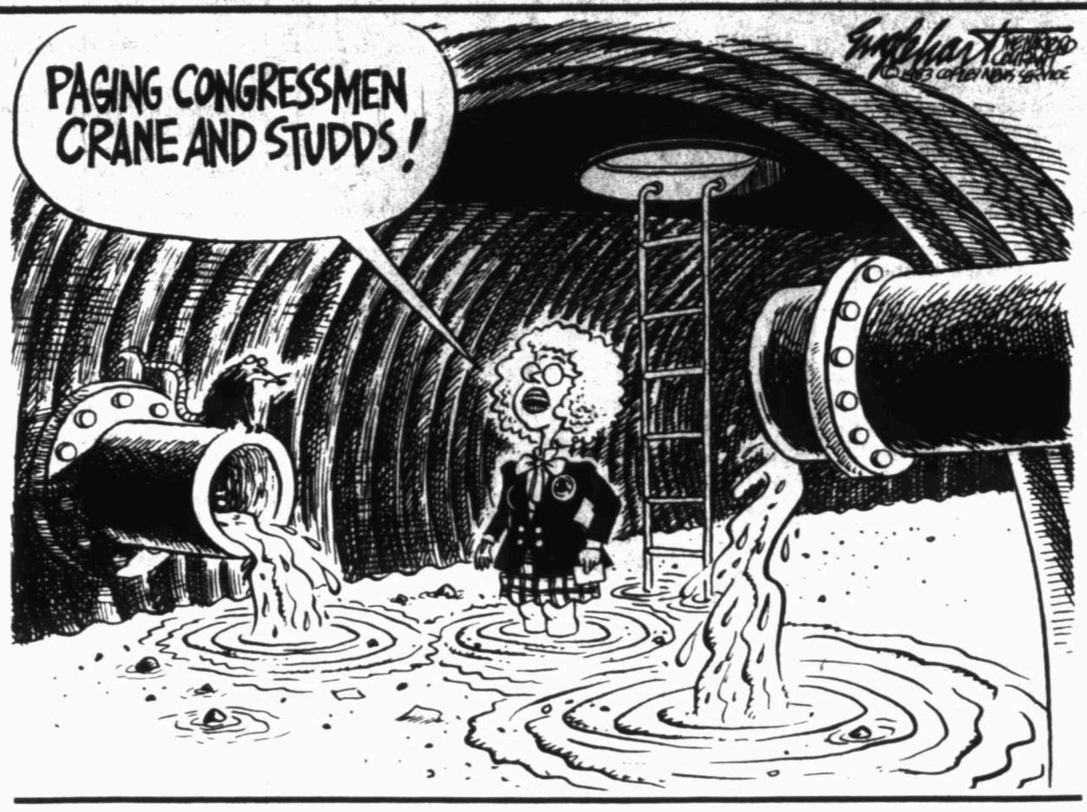

The broadened power to search was troubling. The Fourth Amendment protects citizens against "unreasonable searches and seizures." The latest Supreme Court decisions seem to say that when that protection collides with the government's interest in efficient law enforcement, the Fourth Amendment increasingly will have to yield.

Even so, the court did not go as far as some observers feared it might on issues of search and seizure. And the court found a majority to say that the sentencing of a petty, non-violent criminal to life imprisonment without possibility of parole constituted cruel and unusual punishment, in violation of the Constitution. The court also denied the right of Georgia to jail a defendant too poor to pay a fine.

The justices confronted some thorny questions of church-state relations. The court sanctioned Minnesota's system of tuition-tax deductions for parents of students in private and religious schools. And seemingly treating the practice more as a tradition than as religion, the majority said that Nebraska (and other states) could continue to pay chaplains to pray over their legislators. Yet, those decisions gave no clear picture of how this rather meandering court might rule if confronted with a school-prayer case.

In sum, the court's case-by-case approach has the practical value of avoiding a sweeping upheaval of past decisions. Many citizens still want a clearer sense of the court's core philosophy. And lower courts could profit from more constitutional guidance than the court seemed to give in this term. On balance, though, the court's non-doctrinaire approach avoided much mischief.

— The Milwaukee Journal

ART BUCHWALD

Summer's show is in El Salvador

Ronald Reagan was sitting in his back yard with his pals the other day, when suddenly he said, "Hey, guys, let's put on a show."

Art Buchwald

"Gosh, Ronnie, what a great idea! What should we do it on?" someone asked.

"What about Central America?" Ronnie said.

"That would be neat. What do we need, Ronnie?"

"We need military advisers and ships and airplanes and U.S. Marines."

"Gee whilickers," someone said. "This is going to be fun."

"Who we going to fight, Ronnie?"

"The Nicaraguans. They're being supplied with guns and equipment by the Cubans and the Soviets."

"Oh boy, it will be like old times going into Nicaragua again."

"I didn't say we'd go into Nicaragua," Ronnie said. "I thought we'd quarantine them for awhile to make sure they know we're not just a bunch of kids putting on a show."

"Heck, Ronnie, I thought you were talking about a real production with war songs and parades and everything."

"I can't put on a real war show until the people say they'll all come to see it."

"How do you propose to do that?"

Ronnie thought hard as everyone looked towards him. Finally he got a big smile on his face. "I've got it. I'll appoint a committee."

"That's going to take time. I thought we were going to have a show this afternoon," someone said.

"No," Ronnie said. "This one has to be thought out carefully. I'll get Henry Kissinger to head up the publicity."

"Henry Kissinger?" everyone said in disgust. "Why would you want Henry Kissinger to get involved?"

"Because he has a lot experience in show business. If he reports to us on how we can justify this one, we could rehearse the bombing of Managua by Christmas."

"Anything you say, Ronnie. What should we do now?"

"We're going to write a script. We have to prove the Nicaraguans are getting all their arms by sea, to supply the rebels in El Salvador."

"Is this going to be a comedy?"

"No, it's going to be a musical, but it's going to have a message in it for the Cubans and the Soviets."

"What should we call it?"

"How about 'Babes in Arms'?"

"That's a neat name, Ronnie."

Our plot will be that if we don't stop the Nicaraguans in Central America, everyone from El Salvador will start marching toward Texas in their bare feet."

"That's a big number."

"It's only the first act finale."

"What do we do for a second act?"

"When the naval quarantine doesn't work, we send in American troops."

"Congress won't let us put on that kind of show."

"They'll have to if the audience buys it."

"Suppose we bomb out like we did in Vietnam?"

"Vietnam was different. This time our national security is at stake."

"So what do we do now?"

"We start building the scenery. We'll have a carrier force on one side of the stage and another carrier force on the other side of the stage and construct a jungle in the middle.

"Okay everybody, let's go to work. Wait until the grownups see what we've done."

"Gosh, Ronnie, I don't know what we would have done this summer if you hadn't thought of putting on a show."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Briefing caper reveals ethics need

WASHINGTON — All but lost sight of in the flap over the "pilfered" Carter briefing documents is the House legislative inquiry that almost accidentally started the whole ruckus. Michigan Rep. Donald Albosta's subcommittee unearthed the briefing-book caper while investigating whether the 1978 Ethics in Government Act needed strengthening.

Jack Anderson

If the conduct of top Reagan administration officials is any yardstick, the answer is a resounding "yes."

Consider CIA Director William J. Casey. Until recently, Casey had stubbornly refused to put his considerable stock portfolio into a blind trust. He was playing the stock market with enthusiastic success for two years while he was privy to secret intelligence information on world economic trends. He was also a founding investor in a company that's in line for $450 million in subsidies from the publicly-funded U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp.

Casey insists there was no conflict of interest or ethical misbehavior in his active stock dealing while he had access to inside information. Albosta sees a potential danger, though. An amendment to the ethics act may be introduced this summer that would require the directors of the CIA, FBI, National Security Agency and Defense Intelligence Agency to put their stock holdings in a blind trust if they amount to more than $100,000.

But Casey isn't the only Reagan appointee who has tiptoed along the edge of the ethics act. My associates John Dillon and Corky Johnson gathered several examples of dubious ethical conduct that illustrate the need for strengthening the law:

— Attorney General William French Smith, the nation's top law enforcement official, took questionable tax write-offs after he was nominated. He also failed to report an unusual $50,000 severance payment from a firm which he had served as a director. After consulting with the ethics office, Smith returned the $50,000. Albosta proposes to change the law so that Cabinet nominees will have to update their financial disclosure before confirmation hearings.

— Navy Secretary John Lehman promised the ethics office he would break contact with a defense consulting firm he had worked for. But he didn't — nor did he inform ethics officials he was still dealing with the firm. Albosta would require such promises to be made in writing.

— Members of the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, headed by industrialist J. Peter Grace, reportedly examined federal agencies that regulate their own companies. For example, a vice president of Diamond Shamrock, a chemical manufacturer, was assigned to identify bothersome Environmental Protection Agency regulations. And the chairman of Armour and Co., the meat packer, looked at Agriculture Department regulation of the meat business. The ethics office said members of the commission would voluntarily disqualify themselves in the event of a conflict; Albosta wants to make the disqualification mandatory.

— The Interior Department is riddled with potential conflicts among its high officials. For example, companies that benefitted from the department's sales of coal leases were contributors to the Mountain States Legal Foundation, which Secretary James Watt headed before coming to Washington. Inspector General Richard Mulberry's old accounting firm was awarded a $387,525 contract by his office a few months after he joined the government; Mulberry still has $250,000 due him under the firm's retirement plan.

— Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger draws a pension from the state of California — as does President Reagan. Weinberger received $93,583 for past services when he left his old company, Bechtel, a major contractor.

— Charles Z. Wick, head of the U.S. Information Agency, placed relatives and friends of administration officials on the agency's payroll.

— E.S. Savas, former assistant secretary of Housing and Urban Development, used government employees to work on a book he was writing — ironically titled, "Privatizing the Public Sector: How to Shrink Government."

— A special assistant to the president for national security affairs, Thomas Reed, was appointed despite being the subject of criminal investigation for possible illegal stock deals.

Obviously, no law, however carefully written, can prevent every conceivable breach of ethics if a government official is determined and skillful enough to skirt the rules. But Albosta's committee hopes to make it at least more difficult for government big shots to abuse their public trust.

In general, the committee's proposed amendments would put more teeth in the law by giving the ethics office greater independence and more power to go after high-ranking offenders. The committee also recommended explicit warnings be given to federal appointees on the rules that cover their conduct — depriving them of the alibi that they didn't recognize any ethical problem.

GEORGE F. WILL

Central America: Ghost of 'Nam

WASHINGTON — Strange, is it not, how different persons are haunted by different specters. Concerning Central America, some persons say they see the ghost of Vietnam. I see the thin, austere ghost of Woodrow Wilson. However, come to think about it, that ghost, too, seems like a ghost from Vietnam.

George F. Will

Wilson was an exceptionally complex tangle of admirable and disagreeable qualities. Certainly he was not at his best regarding hemispheric problems, which in his day meant, primarily, Mexico.

Mexico today is governed by an oligarchy so secure that it can export its overflowing moral energies, principally in the form of disapproval of the United States. In Wilson's day, Mexico was barely governed at all.

Announcing that "my passion is for the submerged 85 percent who are struggling to be free," Wilson said he was "seeking to counsel Mexico for her own good." Lord Bryce, Britain's learned ambassador to Washington, warned that "the best thing that can happen is to get as soon as possible a dictator who will keep order and give a chance for material and educational progress." But Wilson said: "I am going to teach the Latin American republics to elect good men!"

Wilson had a secretary of state, William Jennings Bryan, who thought Pancho Villa was an "idealist" because he neither smoked nor drank. (Villa was, however, a live wire. Barbara Tuchman writes: "On one occasion, angered by the yells of a drunken soldier while he was being interviewed by an American journalist, Villa casually pulled his pistol and killed the man from the window, without interrupting the conversation.") And for Wilson, problems with Mexico were serious. They spilled into the American Southwest. And the "Zimmerman telegram," revealing German meddling in Mexico, helped pull the United States into World War I.

Eventually Wilson quit preaching and sent Gen. Pershing into Mexico. But the Wilsonian dimension of today's events concerning Central America is not the sending of the fleet. Rather, it is the universal and ritualistic insistence that the primary U.S. aim is to spread democracy and prosperity. In the Vietnam era, this Wilsonian aspiration was called "nation-building."

In Central America, as it was in Vietnam, U.S. policy is like a Lionel electric train. It is a "three-track policy." It is to deal with the military problem, negotiate, and build free institutions and economic vitality.

Lionel trains have one too many tracks. U.S. policy may have two too many.

Of course the United States must be ready to negotiate — ready, but not eager. Eagerness produces a willingness to treat a guerrilla force as a party on an equal footing with the legitimate government. Eagerness produces a willingness to negotiate absurd arrangements, such as "power sharing" among mortal enemies.

"Power sharing" is the standard proposal made by movements that believe in a monopoly of power, but are out of power. In the United States it is considered daring when a president includes a member of the other party in his Cabinet. Yet many Americans casually suggest that foreigners who have been shooting each other should form coalition governments. Experiences in Eastern Europe between 1945 and 1948 are forgotten.

Furthermore, eagerness for negotiations makes the United States susceptible to what the Sandinistas are doing. They are using rhetoric about negotiations the way the Soviet Union uses arms-control negotiations: to buy time and sow irresolution in U.S. policymaking. Of course the United States should — to the extent that it is consistent with security objectives — use what leverage it has to nudge friendly nations toward democratic values. But in this "age of democracy" — since the late 18th century — there have been relatively few democracies. And almost all the durable ones have been durable because traditions of civility have made economic growth possible, and because economic growth has moderated disputes about distributive justice.

Yet many Americans — and sometimes American policies — seem to suppose that democracy is the natural condition for all societies, and can be planted even in the soil of economic backwardness, even during the social monsoon of war.

In Britain during the Second World War, when not a single enemy soldier was on the island, the electoral process was suspended cooperatively, by the parties in Parliament. Yet with a war raging in El Salvador, the regime is expected, and coerced, to hold various elections and impose fundamental social reforms. This may be necessary to rally support in El Salvador and in the U.S. Congress. But it will be worse than futile if it is considered a substitute for military success.

The United States force-fed elections and other reforms on Saigon. Saigon is now Ho Chi Minh City.

Central American friends 'shielded for democracy'

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

EDITOR'S REPORT

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — President Reagan tackled the Central American and Caribbean region problems head-on with an emphatic assertion that the U.S. wanted nothing but to preserve freedom. He supported fully military maneuvers around the ticklish areas, wondering why critics made such an outcry when they have been staged regularly there for years.

Hearst

Fleet battle groups shortly will take up positions in international waters where they are entitled to be and land maneuvers are planned with friendly Honduras adjacent to communist Sandinista-run Nicaragua. The president declared that we didn't covet an inch of Central American territory which Soviet-sponsored surrogates actually seek.

But the U.S., President Reagan told a White House televised press conference, must provide our embattled Central American friends as El Salvador with a "shield for democracy," meaning our intent and power to enable them to do their job. They haven't asked for U.S. forces and President Reagan didn't forsee a scenario where they would, if they themselves are adequately trained and supplied.

I wholeheartedly agree with his position, told frankly and fully to a national audience. The president detailed specifics of Soviet and Cuban clandestine military aid to the Sandinistas last spring. After an initial favorable national response, congressional and media critics clouded up the issues which involve our own national interests.

THE PRESIDENT made a number of other comments in his wide-ranging press conference that I think should be emphasized.

One of them was about that phony comparison between Vietnam and Central America. Over and over again in recent weeks we have all read and heard that phrase, "another Vietnam," in connection with the news about Nicaragua and El Salvador. In the first place, Vietnam is thousands of miles away whereas Nicaragua and El Salvador – and communist Cuba – are right on our country's front doorstep.

Secondly, Ronald Reagan is not just talking through his hat when he says that on that doorstep are Cuban soldiers, and installations financed by the Soviet Union. President Reagan referred the other night to the "constant drumbeat" of confusion on this issue. He has every right to be annoyed when his critics, be they politicans or members of the press, draw parallels between countries just south of Florida and a country in far-away Asia.

He responded in a statesmanlike manner to a question about Henry Kissinger's qualifications to head a study of Central American problems, adding that the record shows that Henry Kissinger is one of the nation's ablest diplomats and his service in this present crisis is invaluable.

PRESIDENT Reagan asserted that above all, he wants peace and that the Americans are probably the greatest peace-lovers on earth. In his lifetime, the president noted, he saw four wars. He added: "I agree with General Eisenhower that war is man's greatest stupidity."

Yet peaceful pursuits are not the intention of the Soviet Union nor of their chief honcho in Central America, Castro. The president remarked that a Soviet freighter loaded with helicopters and guns was heading for a Nicaraguan port. Other knowledgable sources tell me that the Russians have sent over 6,000 tons of military hardware to Nicaragua already this year.

Contrast the Soviet-surrogate kind of gunmanship with President Reagan's determination to achieve peace. He just sent a letter to the "Contadora" group, composed of the presidents of Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela, which seeks a settlement of conflict in Central America. President Reagan congratulated the group on its efforts and hopes it will find a solution though the Organization of American States (OAS). I thought the Contadoras were a little wishy-washy myself but President Reagan obviously has more inside information than I.

I can't help feeling that the Contadoras believe that the Sandinistas will ultimately follow results of the ballot, not the bullet. It's a long-held democratic principle that evolution at the polls count and not what the other side does through the barrel of a gun.

CASTRO HAD a 90-minute speech read for him at Santiago in Cuba, charging that the U.S. was trying to create an atmosphere of terror in Nicaragua. At the same time, the bewhiskered Cuban dictator seemed to rule out a withdrawal of Cuban military advisers from Nicaragua. The Contadoras have asked for withdrawal of all foreign advisers from the Central American arena.

Castro has been in for 25 years but look at what he has done in that time: By agreeing to installation of Soviet nuclear-tipped missiles in Cuba, Castro nearly plunged us into World War III until the Soviets removed the danger. Then to pay back the Russians for their more than a billion dollar annual subsidy, he sent Cuban legions to Africa and the Middle East where they suffer ever-increasng casualties.

Having become the chief stooge for the Soviets in this hemisphere, Castro uses the color of his shirt as do his masters in the Kremlin to denote revolution. In earlier times, there were black shirts for Mussolini's Fascists, brown shirts to show off Hitler's Nazis. Castro and the Russians display crimson shirts which brands them for what they are: "Red Fascists."

TODAY Castro's gunmen who helped the Sandinistas betray the revolution overthrowing the Somoza dictatorship instruct, mind you, their communist disciples in Nicaragua on "human rights." As a result, Sandinistas have jailed or driven out thousands of Miskito Indians, Baptists, Mormons, many of the majority Catholics and all of the small Jewish community. Quite a record in a short time.

Besides accelerating repression of critics and opposition which the Sandinistas vowed to uphold originally, they undertook to export with Cuban and other Soviet bloc help guerrilla de-stabilization of next-door El Salvador. They learned the Soviet-Cuban slogan fast: "Peace means war."

President Reagan continues to hope for the best, which is peace but not at any price.

Government makes changes in schools

By ALAN D. LIVINGSTON

Alan D. Livingston came to Midland two years ago from Oklahoma where he had been employed as a school teacher and administrator. In Midland, Livingston is a consulting geologist.

The federal government has again researched our public schools and recommended to the local school district several changes. The changes include such items as increasing the length of the school day and the length of the school year. Besides the above, they recommend increasing the amount of reading, science, math and English. This is just another "back to basics" approach and it is hard to disagree or argue against better education, nor do I wish to do so. What I do disagree with is the inferred charges against local schools that they can't or don't do their jobs.

The charges of poor quality education they say is due to poor teachers, too little time and effort spent on the three "R's" and teachers inflating student grades. The committee points to the fall in ACT scores for approximately 20 years as proof against local school districts and their staffs.

I am in entire agreement with the generally poor quality of the school's product but adamantly disagree with the cause of this predicament. The results we live with today are directly proportional to the massive amount of state and federal legislative interference. I could list pages of legislation that has been passed to correct a sectional problem, only to find the laws have devastated other sections of the country instead.

I am not against higher teachers' salaries, longer school days and tri-semester terms, but that will not solve the problem. The problem is that the local school districts employ administrators that are not given the power to inact sound educational policies of standards of curriculum, let alone implement these policies without some or all governmental and judicial agencies counteracting them.

We hire teachers and then complain to school boards because the teacher is too hard, too soft, too technical, not technical enough, too demanding and too strict on poor little Johnny and Susie. If the school board won't listen to them, you can bet your last dollar that some lawyer will, or a special interest group will begin massive lobbying.

"You can lead a horse to water and if he's not thirsty, he won't drink." I have heard this all my life and in education it is just as true today as it was a hundred years ago. We have, in education, changed the water for the horses, changed the trough, the location of the trough and our little horses still aren't drinking. This leads to the conclusion that we have three choices open to us: First, don't change anything. Secondly, go with federal guidelines again and every 20 years repeat. Third, we might try changing the horses. If the horse has his way, he's going to stay in the pasture and never pull the plow. Give the administrator and the teacher the power to harness the horse and I'll bet that the horse will be thirsty by the end of a work day.

We can no longer be allowed only individual student rights. They can no longer be allowed to bring drugs and alcohol into school activities, refuse to do homework or not participate in a positive manner in the public school society. We must demand that our public school institutions and their staffs be given the right and power to do their jobs. Until back to basics means back to total student responsibility, we will see a continuance of the poor educational product.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sponsor thanks

To The Editor:

For the past two years I have served as supervisor of the Parks and Recreation Department's Summer Fun Day Camp. I would like to take this opportunity to publicly acknowledge my appreciation to the various organizations and citizens who have helped sponsor our camp. A special thank you is in order for the director, staff and other employees of the Midland Parks and Recreation Department. They were extremely helpful in developing a very successful program.

This program would be of no value to the children of Midland without the leadership and guidance of the counsellors. Throughout the eight weeks of summer camp they did an excellent job of supervising their groups and were also considered by the children to be good friends. Serving the camp as counsellors for the 1983 day camp were Waide Allen, Ozzie Ausburne, Pam Cannon, Melinda Hagar, Karen Ihry, Eddie Faye Lane, Cindy Major, Richey Maley and Norma Ruiz. In addition to these, my personal gratitude is extended to assistant supervisor, Deb Thalken for her versatility and efficiency throughout this summer. The activities at the summer camp were highlighted by the good leadership qualities shown by those mentioned.

Even with good leadership, this program could not exist without the various organizations, businesses and individuals who contributed their facilities, time and effort. I wish to thank all of them for demonstrating their generosity and concern for the welfare of the children of the community.

As a community effort, on the last day of camp we held a special recreational event. Contests were conducted, free refreshments were served and entertainers performed during the morning. I wish to thank the entertainers who contributed their time and talent to make the day a tremendous success. It was enjoyed by all.

Most important of all was the enjoyment derived by the children from the program. They enjoyed making new friends, playing various new games and becoming aware of their community by visiting and learning more about the businesses and organizations which help contribute to a growing and developing community. The children enjoy having a place during the summer to come and associate with their peers, and the parents feel confident in leaving their children for a morning of supervised play. It is hoped that by participating in the Parks and Recreation Department's Summer Fun Day Camp, children will develop into outstanding members of the community.

In conclusion, I feel that by participating in an organized environment children will grow in their knowledge of the feelings for others, thus, will grow into reliable and dependent adults who will be admired and respected as leaders of the community. Parents, I encourage you to begin planning now for your children's future by deciding to enroll your child in the Parks and Recreation's Summer Fun Day Camp. You (and your child) will be glad you did!

It's been a great learning experience for me too!

Contest illegal?

To The Editor:

On July 30 at Midland Park Mall there was a contest whose prize was a trip to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico. That's a nice prize. The competition judged was the quality of suntan achieved by the contestants.

Anyone was able to enter. But was anyone able to win? If someone is black does he have a good tan? If so, then white people would have been excluded from the contest — not very likely. If, then, a black man is said not to be tan then we are left with a contest to see who can come the closest to imitating a black without actually being black. This is a country which supposedly has laws against racial discrimination.

If this contest was not illegal, it should have been.

To The Editor:

I had to look twice at the front page of Wednesday's (July 27) edition of your newspaper to make certain I wasn't reading the "Boston Globe."

When did the Reporter-Telegram initiate a policy of carrying editorials as front page news? Your headline news item ("Reagan Calls Military Maneuvers 'Routine'") is not news reporting at all. It is a totally biased editorial commentary on Mr. Reagan's Tuesday night news conference on Central America written by a non-reporter looking to exploit an obviously delicate situation faced by both the president and the country. In my opinion it has no place on the front page of a newspaper.

Where, on Page 1, is there a contrary view? A second article details the predictable response of Mondale, Cranston and Kennedy — do you call that news? The clear impression is that no one, including the Reporter-Telegram, is supporting the president on this one. How about a second editorial on how it used to be considered American and statesmanlike for the opposing party's candidates to support the president on matters of national security — the kind of restraint exhibited by George Bush and Mr. Reagan toward President Carter during the Iranian situation in 1979-1980?

If readers want your editorial comment on the major news stories of the day, they can look for it in the appropriate section. Since you chose to publish a commentary from Hearst's Washington Bureau on Page 1, the obvious assumption is that the Reporter-Telegram supports the position taken therein.

Space wanted

To The Editor:

This is in reference to your article, "Midland needs new courthouse, attorney says," published in the Tuesday, July 26, 1983, edition. I agree with Mr. Kerr that our courtrooms have "phoney paneling" and they "make you feel like it's a second-rate place." But, the one office you failed to mention in your article is the county attorney's office.

Having worked for the county attorney for a little over a year now, I know how tight our office space is. We have two attorneys sharing one office. Our receptionist area barely fits three chairs and a small table. The county judges' receptionist area is just as large, if not larger, than my boss's office. My own working space is also the jury room of the county courtroom, which prevents me from working whenever county court is in session. I file on people who write hot checks, but our hot check office is in a completely different building. Whenever I need anything from that office, it takes at least a day to get it. This slows down the process, and keeps me from serving the public as adequately as I should.

And the county commissioners wonder why my boss keeps asking for more?

To The Editor:

Sheriff Dallas Smith has again proposed a new county jail to be built because of overcrowded conditions of the jail now in operation.

It is time for the residents of Midland to realize that we do need a new jail in our county, one large enough to accommodate the growing criminal population.

Don't kid yourselves people, crime is on the upswing. You require the law enforcement officials to arrest the offenders responsible for crime but where do you expect officials to place the criminals? Start a Rent-A-Criminal program? Put them back on the streets because there is no room for them in jail? Do you realize that criminals have legal recourse in federal courts because of overcrowded conditions?

There are several cases pending now in which the offenders have claimed that their civil rights have been violated because of overcrowding in the jail! If these cases are found in their behalf, the criminal will go scotfree to burglarize your home, rape your wife and kids, murder your best friend, rob your local convenience store! This is happening now — and it could happen to you.

It is time for the residents of Midland to stand up for our rights. We don't want the criminals on the streets; let's build a place for them away from downtown, a facility where they cannot claim their rights were violated due to overcrowding! Call your county commissioners. Let them know that the jail is needed. Unite Midlanders. Let's build that new jail and keep the criminals off the streets.

BILL MODISETT

Overall concept of criminal rehabilitation...a farce

Bill Modisett

Texas legislators passed a package of bills earlier this year that has been heralded as the most revolutionary prison reform in the state's history. Revolutionary has become synonomous with beneficial in recent times, but I'm not so sure this package of bills will only benefit Texas society.

There's no argument of the need for prison reform in Texas. The state puts more people behind bars and keeps them there longer than most other states. Of each 100,000 Texas residents, 214 are put behind bars for sentences of six years average. The typical inmate stays behind bars only 28 months, though.

In the summer of 1982 overcrowding even caused the prison system to stop accepting prisoners from county jails for a short time. And the problem isn't over yet. Jim Estelle, director of the Texas Department of Corrections, has said conservative estimates indicate the prison system's population will expand by 6,000 over the next two years. More than 4,000 inmates are now housed in tents.

You foot the bill for keeping those people behind bars. And the cost isn't cheap, either. But then, when criminals are behind bars they aren't stealing your TV set or threatening your life.

The state's burgeoning prison population — like that in other states — is a powder keg. A lot of hate for society and the rules of society is concentrated in prisons. A lot of that hate will never disappear. Some will.

That's where the Legislature scored a coup this session. Legislators recognized that certain criminals can be "reformed." So they worked out a system whereby those who deserve to be released can be sent back into society to build new lives. They even worked out a method for criminals to work in restitution centers and repay their victims.

That's a great step forward in criminal justice. It allows criminals to repay their victims in one sense and to rejoin society through a careful, gradual and structured program.

But overall the concept that prisons can rehabilitate criminals and mold them into productive members of society is a farce. Call it a flaw in humans, if you will, but there are those individuals whose moral fiber is so thin that they cannot exist in a structured society. They're mad dogs who only learn tricks of the trade from their cellmates and wile away the hours until they are turned back onto society.

To the mad dogs, prison time is "down time" — an occupational risk. No amount of down time is going to rehabilitate them. Turn them loose on society once too often and what you wind up with is a civilian victim or two.

That's where Sen. Ray Farabee of Wichita Falls did you no favor. Farabee's bill cut the bottom out of the state's "habitual criminal" statute. Before the bill was enacted, a three-time loser received an automatic life sentence on conviction regardless of the crime — murder or hot check writing. The purpose of that measure was simple. A criminal was given two chances to reform. The third time, he was considered too much a risk to society. If that criminal could not be reformed to refrain from writing bad checks or drinking too much before operating a car, he or she might not find anything wrong with knocking off a convenience store and killing the clerk.

Maybe the liberalization laws passed by the Legislature will be beneficial. Maybe all the criminals released back into society will be clean-cut Texans who will walk the straight and narrow. Maybe all the child-rapists and grandmother-killers will be kept behind bars where they belong.

And maybe the cost of running the state's prison system will be cut in half and society won't have to suffer the consequences of failing to pay for just punishment.

But please don't hold it against me if I'm not overly optimistic. I never even believed in Peter Pan.

Soiled Congress

Just whose best interests are the members of Congress and their ethics watchdogs representing?

In light of the admitted sexual conduct of Reps. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., and Daniel Crane, R-Ill., the House Ethics Committee recommended only a reprimand.

Is that just punishment for two men who have admitted to engaging in sex with teenage pages? Is that the punishment the American electorate would assess. We hardly think so.

Now it's true that the House voted July 20 to censure the two men, a move which strips Studds of his chairmanship of the House Coast Guard and Navigation Subcommittee and condemns both men in the eyes of their colleagues, so to speak. But what does that translate into? A slap on the wrist.

When a man or woman is elected to Congress, that person traditionally has possessed a high level of intelligence, common sense, courage and high moral fiber. That's because the members of Congress, besides constituting the greatest political body in the world, serve as role models for American society — or should.

By their actions, Crane and Studds have shown they did not possess the high moral fiber demanded by Americans. They violated a public trust with their constituents, the American people and the parents of the involved pages. They have written another ugly chapter in the history of congressional misconduct and disgraced the office of the fine men and women who served respectfully before them.

The House Ethics Committee chose not to expel the two men, which is indicative of the fact that body is not performing as Americans would have it. That disgraceful situation should be remedied quickly, because as recent years' scandals have all too graphically demonstrated, this probably will not be the final soiling of Congress.

As for Crane and Studds, they would best serve their constituencies now by resigning. If they do not, their constituents should make it clear through recall elections that their actions are not condoned by voters in their districts and will not be tolerated.

Wayward words

Everyone, or nearly everyone, has at one time or another slipped on a wayward word, or a mixed metaphor.

The lexicon of wayward words was enhanced the other day by a few quotations contributed to the New York Times by David Diefendorf. An actual living New Yorker, he said, once made the following remark: "I feel like a babe in the wool!" And another: "It's cold enough outside for polo bears!"

As for mixed metaphors, we have always liked this one: "Let us put our shoulders to the wheel and take the bull by the horns."

Then there is the one about the secretary of state, identity unknown, who is supposed to have said that he was "going to drive the ship of state squarely down the middle of the road." It is just as well that his identity is unknown, for Foggy Bottom seems to be run that way some days.

That's enough for today, waywardwise.

Another View:

Avoiding mischief

It's difficult to find the thread of philosophical consistency in the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court in the term that recently ended. However, the court's apparent lack of an orthodox viewpoint is not all bad.

The justices' refusal to adopt the kind of relentless "conservatism" desired by some citizens meant that the tribunal didn't overturn some earlier "liberal" decisions of genuine merit. Yet, in some instances, the court put on its liberal and conservative faces simultaneously. On the troubling issue of abortion, for example, the court reaffirmed its 1973 decision and further strengthened protections for women who want abortions. The court reached its liberal result by the conservative path of "stare decisis," that is, standing by a previously announced decision.

Similarly, in striking down the "legislative veto," the court strengthened the hand of the president (historically, a liberal objective) but the court based its ruling on a fairly strict interpretation of the Constitution (historically, a conservative approach).

On criminal justice matters, the court continued its generally rightward drift. It gave federal appellate courts the power to expedite the handling of appeals of death sentences. Police got greater leeway on some searches of persons suspected of crimes and of property believed to be involved in criminal activity.

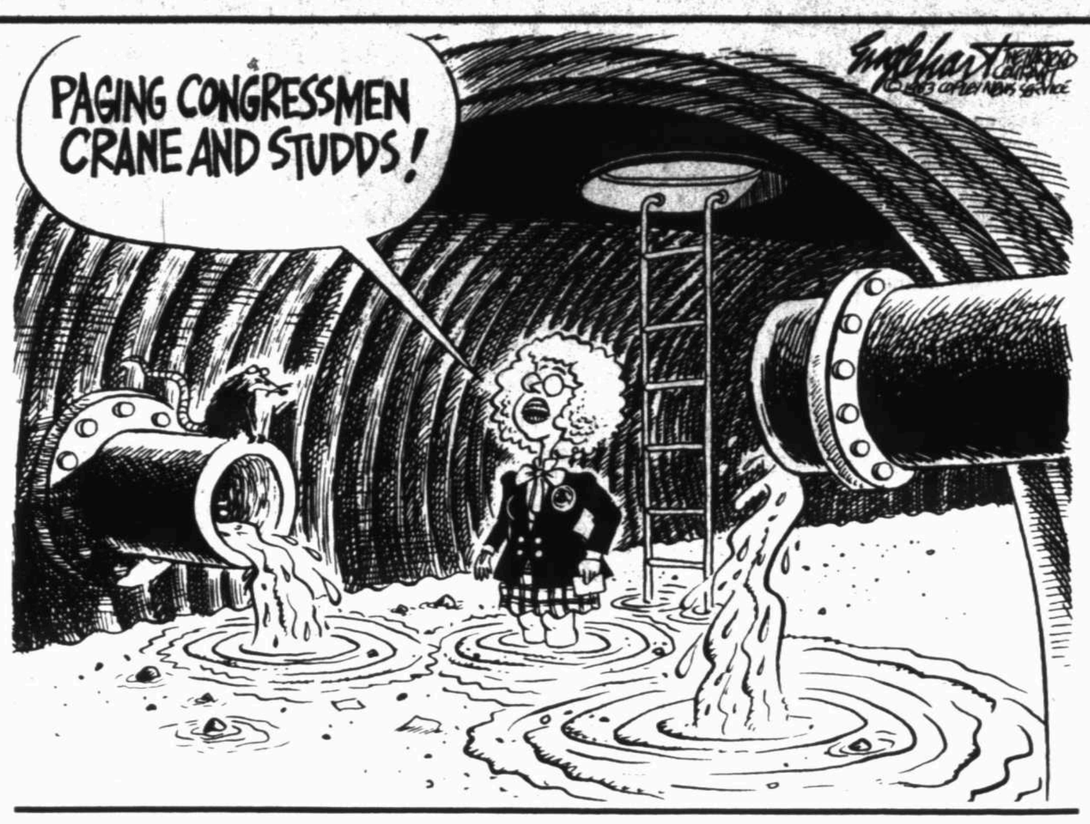

The broadened power to search was troubling. The Fourth Amendment protects citizens against "unreasonable searches and seizures." The latest Supreme Court decisions seem to say that when that protection collides with the government's interest in efficient law enforcement, the Fourth Amendment increasingly will have to yield.

Even so, the court did not go as far as some observers feared it might on issues of search and seizure. And the court found a majority to say that the sentencing of a petty, non-violent criminal to life imprisonment without possibility of parole constituted cruel and unusual punishment, in violation of the Constitution. The court also denied the right of Georgia to jail a defendant too poor to pay a fine.

The justices confronted some thorny questions of church-state relations. The court sanctioned Minnesota's system of tuition-tax deductions for parents of students in private and religious schools. And seemingly treating the practice more as a tradition than as religion, the majority said that Nebraska (and other states) could continue to pay chaplains to pray over their legislators. Yet, those decisions gave no clear picture of how this rather meandering court might rule if confronted with a school-prayer case.

In sum, the court's case-by-case approach has the practical value of avoiding a sweeping upheaval of past decisions. Many citizens still want a clearer sense of the court's core philosophy. And lower courts could profit from more constitutional guidance than the court seemed to give in this term. On balance, though, the court's non-doctrinaire approach avoided much mischief.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Briefing caper reveals ethics need

WASHINGTON — All but lost sight of in the flap over the "pilfered" Carter briefing documents is the House legislative inquiry that almost accidentally started the whole ruckus. Michigan Rep. Donald Albosta's subcommittee unearthed the briefing-book caper while investigating whether the 1978 Ethics in Government Act needed strengthening.

Jack Anderson

If the conduct of top Reagan administration officials is any yardstick, the answer is a resounding "yes."

Consider CIA Director William J. Casey. Until recently, Casey had stubbornly refused to put his considerable stock portfolio into a blind trust. He was playing the stock market with enthusiastic success for two years while he was privy to secret intelligence information on world economic trends. He was also a founding investor in a company that's in line for $450 million in subsidies from the publicly-funded U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp.

Casey insists there was no conflict of interest or ethical misbehavior in his active stock dealing while he had access to inside information. Albosta sees a potential danger, though. An amendment to the ethics act may be introduced this summer that would require the directors of the CIA, FBI, National Security Agency and Defense Intelligence Agency to put their stock holdings in a blind trust if they amount to more than $100,000.

But Casey isn't the only Reagan appointee who has tiptoed along the edge of the ethics act. My associates John Dillon and Corky Johnson gathered several examples of dubious ethical conduct that illustrate the need for strengthening the law:

— Attorney General William French Smith, the nation's top law enforcement official, took questionable tax write-offs after he was nominated. He also failed to report an unusual $50,000 severance payment from a firm which he had served as a director. After consulting with the ethics office, Smith returned the $50,000. Albosta proposes to change the law so that Cabinet nominees will have to update their financial disclosure before confirmation hearings.

— Navy Secretary John Lehman promised the ethics office he would break contact with a defense consulting firm he had worked for. But he didn't — nor did he inform ethics officials he was still dealing with the firm. Albosta would require such promises to be made in writing.

— Members of the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control, headed by industrialist J. Peter Grace, reportedly examined federal agencies that regulate their own companies. For example, a vice president of Diamond Shamrock, a chemical manufacturer, was assigned to identify bothersome Environmental Protection Agency regulations. And the chairman of Armour and Co., the meat packer, looked at Agriculture Department regulation of the meat business. The ethics office said members of the commission would voluntarily disqualify themselves in the event of a conflict; Albosta wants to make the disqualification mandatory.

— The Interior Department is riddled with potential conflicts among its high officials. For example, companies that benefitted from the department's sales of coal leases were contributors to the Mountain States Legal Foundation, which Secretary James Watt headed before coming to Washington. Inspector General Richard Mulberry's old accounting firm was awarded a $387,525 contract by his office a few months after he joined the government; Mulberry still has $250,000 due him under the firm's retirement plan.

— Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger draws a pension from the state of California — as does President Reagan. Weinberger received $93,583 for past services when he left his old company, Bechtel, a major contractor.

— Charles Z. Wick, head of the U.S. Information Agency, placed relatives and friends of administration officials on the agency's payroll.

— E.S. Savas, former assistant secretary of Housing and Urban Development, used government employees to work on a book he was writing — ironically titled, "Privatizing the Public Sector: How to Shrink Government."

— A special assistant to the president for national security affairs, Thomas Reed, was appointed despite being the subject of criminal investigation for possible illegal stock deals.

Obviously, no law, however carefully written, can prevent every conceivable breach of ethics if a government official is determined and skillful enough to skirt the rules. But Albosta's committee hopes to make it at least more difficult for government big shots to abuse their public trust.

In general, the committee's proposed amendments would put more teeth in the law by giving the ethics office greater independence and more power to go after high-ranking offenders. The committee also recommended explicit warnings be given to federal appointees on the rules that cover their conduct — depriving them of the alibi that they didn't recognize any ethical problem.

GEORGE F. WILL

Central America: Ghost of 'Nam

WASHINGTON — Strange, is it not, how different persons are haunted by different specters. Concerning Central America, some persons say they see the ghost of Vietnam. I see the thin, austere ghost of Woodrow Wilson. However, come to think about it, that ghost, too, seems like a ghost from Vietnam.

George F. Will

Wilson was an exceptionally complex tangle of admirable and disagreeable qualities. Certainly he was not at his best regarding hemispheric problems, which in his day meant, primarily, Mexico.

Mexico today is governed by an oligarchy so secure that it can export its overflowing moral energies, principally in the form of disapproval of the United States. In Wilson's day, Mexico was barely governed at all.

Announcing that "my passion is for the submerged 85 percent who are struggling to be free," Wilson said he was "seeking to counsel Mexico for her own good." Lord Bryce, Britain's learned ambassador to Washington, warned that "the best thing that can happen is to get as soon as possible a dictator who will keep order and give a chance for material and educational progress." But Wilson said: "I am going to teach the Latin American republics to elect good men!"

Wilson had a secretary of state, William Jennings Bryan, who thought Pancho Villa was an "idealist" because he neither smoked nor drank. (Villa was, however, a live wire. Barbara Tuchman writes: "On one occasion, angered by the yells of a drunken soldier while he was being interviewed by an American journalist, Villa casually pulled his pistol and killed the man from the window, without interrupting the conversation.") And for Wilson, problems with Mexico were serious. They spilled into the American Southwest. And the "Zimmerman telegram," revealing German meddling in Mexico, helped pull the United States into World War I.

Eventually Wilson quit preaching and sent Gen. Pershing into Mexico. But the Wilsonian dimension of today's events concerning Central America is not the sending of the fleet. Rather, it is the universal and ritualistic insistence that the primary U.S. aim is to spread democracy and prosperity. In the Vietnam era, this Wilsonian aspiration was called "nation-building."

In Central America, as it was in Vietnam, U.S. policy is like a Lionel electric train. It is a "three-track policy." It is to deal with the military problem, negotiate, and build free institutions and economic vitality.

Lionel trains have one too many tracks. U.S. policy may have two too many.

Of course the United States must be ready to negotiate — ready, but not eager. Eagerness produces a willingness to treat a guerrilla force as a party on an equal footing with the legitimate government. Eagerness produces a willingness to negotiate absurd arrangements, such as "power sharing" among mortal enemies.

"Power sharing" is the standard proposal made by movements that believe in a monopoly of power, but are out of power. In the United States it is considered daring when a president includes a member of the other party in his Cabinet. Yet many Americans casually suggest that foreigners who have been shooting each other should form coalition governments. Experiences in Eastern Europe between 1945 and 1948 are forgotten.

Furthermore, eagerness for negotiations makes the United States susceptible to what the Sandinistas are doing. They are using rhetoric about negotiations the way the Soviet Union uses arms-control negotiations: to buy time and sow irresolution in U.S. policymaking. Of course the United States should — to the extent that it is consistent with security objectives — use what leverage it has to nudge friendly nations toward democratic values. But in this "age of democracy" — since the late 18th century — there have been relatively few democracies. And almost all the durable ones have been durable because traditions of civility have made economic growth possible, and because economic growth has moderated disputes about distributive justice.

Yet many Americans — and sometimes American policies — seem to suppose that democracy is the natural condition for all societies, and can be planted even in the soil of economic backwardness, even during the social monsoon of war.

In Britain during the Second World War, when not a single enemy soldier was on the island, the electoral process was suspended cooperatively, by the parties in Parliament. Yet with a war raging in El Salvador, the regime is expected, and coerced, to hold various elections and impose fundamental social reforms. This may be necessary to rally support in El Salvador and in the U.S. Congress. But it will be worse than futile if it is considered a substitute for military success.

The United States force-fed elections and other reforms on Saigon. Saigon is now Ho Chi Minh City.

ART BUCHWALD

Summer's show is in El Salvador

Ronald Reagan was sitting in his back yard with his pals the other day, when suddenly he said, "Hey, guys, let's put on a show."

Art Buchwald

"Gosh, Ronnie, what a great idea! What should we do it on?" someone asked.

"What about Central America?" Ronnie said.

"That would be neat. What do we need, Ronnie?"

"We need military advisers and ships and airplanes and U.S. Marines."

"Gee whilickers," someone said. "This is going to be fun."

"Who we going to fight, Ronnie?"

"The Nicaraguans. They're being supplied with guns and equipment by the Cubans and the Soviets."

"Oh boy, it will be like old times going into Nicaragua again."

"I didn't say we'd go into Nicaragua," Ronnie said. "I thought we'd quarantine them for awhile to make sure they know we're not just a bunch of kids putting on a show."

"Heck, Ronnie, I thought you were talking about a real production with war songs and parades and everything."

"I can't put on a real war show until the people say they'll all come to see it."

"How do you propose to do that?"

Ronnie thought hard as everyone looked towards him. Finally he got a big smile on his face. "I've got it. I'll appoint a committee."

"That's going to take time. I thought we were going to have a show this afternoon," someone said.

"No," Ronnie said. "This one has to be thought out carefully. I'll get Henry Kissinger to head up the publicity."

"Henry Kissinger?" everyone said in disgust. "Why would you want Henry Kissinger to get involved?"

"Because he has a lot experience in show business. If he reports to us on how we can justify this one, we could rehearse the bombing of Managua by Christmas."

"Anything you say, Ronnie. What should we do now?"

"We're going to write a script. We have to prove the Nicaraguans are getting all their arms by sea, to supply the rebels in El Salvador."

"Is this going to be a comedy?"

"No, it's going to be a musical, but it's going to have a message in it for the Cubans and the Soviets."

"What should we call it?"

"How about 'Babes in Arms'?"

"That's a neat name, Ronnie."

Our plot will be that if we don't stop the Nicaraguans in Central America, everyone from El Salvador will start marching toward Texas in their bare feet."

"That's a big number."

"It's only the first act finale."

"What do we do for a second act?"

"When the naval quarantine doesn't work, we send in American troops."

"Congress won't let us put on that kind of show."

"They'll have to if the audience buys it."

"Suppose we bomb out like we did in Vietnam?"

"Vietnam was different. This time our national security is at stake."

"So what do we do now?"

"We start building the scenery. We'll have a carrier force on one side of the stage and another carrier force on the other side of the stage and construct a jungle in the middle.

"Okay everybody, let's go to work. Wait until the grownups see what we've done."

"Gosh, Ronnie, I don't know what we would have done this summer if you hadn't thought of putting on a show."

Central American friends 'shielded for democracy'

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

EDITOR'S REPORT

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — President Reagan tackled the Central American and Caribbean region problems head-on with an emphatic assertion that the U.S. wanted nothing but to preserve freedom. He supported fully military maneuvers around the ticklish areas, wondering why critics made such an outcry when they have been staged regularly there for years.

Hearst

Fleet battle groups shortly will take up positions in international waters where they are entitled to be and land maneuvers are planned with friendly Honduras adjacent to communist Sandinista-run Nicaragua. The president declared that we didn't covet an inch of Central American territory which Soviet-sponsored surrogates actually seek.

But the U.S., President Reagan told a White House televised press conference, must provide our embattled Central American friends as El Salvador with a "shield for democracy," meaning our intent and power to enable them to do their job. They haven't asked for U.S. forces and President Reagan didn't forsee a scenario where they would, if they themselves are adequately trained and supplied.

I wholeheartedly agree with his position, told frankly and fully to a national audience. The president detailed specifics of Soviet and Cuban clandestine military aid to the Sandinistas last spring. After an initial favorable national response, congressional and media critics clouded up the issues which involve our own national interests.

THE PRESIDENT made a number of other comments in his wide-ranging press conference that I think should be emphasized.

One of them was about that phony comparison between Vietnam and Central America. Over and over again in recent weeks we have all read and heard that phrase, "another Vietnam," in connection with the news about Nicaragua and El Salvador. In the first place, Vietnam is thousands of miles away whereas Nicaragua and El Salvador – and communist Cuba – are right on our country's front doorstep.

Secondly, Ronald Reagan is not just talking through his hat when he says that on that doorstep are Cuban soldiers, and installations financed by the Soviet Union. President Reagan referred the other night to the "constant drumbeat" of confusion on this issue. He has every right to be annoyed when his critics, be they politicans or members of the press, draw parallels between countries just south of Florida and a country in far-away Asia.

He responded in a statesmanlike manner to a question about Henry Kissinger's qualifications to head a study of Central American problems, adding that the record shows that Henry Kissinger is one of the nation's ablest diplomats and his service in this present crisis is invaluable.

PRESIDENT Reagan asserted that above all, he wants peace and that the Americans are probably the greatest peace-lovers on earth. In his lifetime, the president noted, he saw four wars. He added: "I agree with General Eisenhower that war is man's greatest stupidity."

Yet peaceful pursuits are not the intention of the Soviet Union nor of their chief honcho in Central America, Castro. The president remarked that a Soviet freighter loaded with helicopters and guns was heading for a Nicaraguan port. Other knowledgable sources tell me that the Russians have sent over 6,000 tons of military hardware to Nicaragua already this year.

Contrast the Soviet-surrogate kind of gunmanship with President Reagan's determination to achieve peace. He just sent a letter to the "Contadora" group, composed of the presidents of Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela, which seeks a settlement of conflict in Central America. President Reagan congratulated the group on its efforts and hopes it will find a solution though the Organization of American States (OAS). I thought the Contadoras were a little wishy-washy myself but President Reagan obviously has more inside information than I.

I can't help feeling that the Contadoras believe that the Sandinistas will ultimately follow results of the ballot, not the bullet. It's a long-held democratic principle that evolution at the polls count and not what the other side does through the barrel of a gun.

CASTRO HAD a 90-minute speech read for him at Santiago in Cuba, charging that the U.S. was trying to create an atmosphere of terror in Nicaragua. At the same time, the bewhiskered Cuban dictator seemed to rule out a withdrawal of Cuban military advisers from Nicaragua. The Contadoras have asked for withdrawal of all foreign advisers from the Central American arena.

Castro has been in for 25 years but look at what he has done in that time: By agreeing to installation of Soviet nuclear-tipped missiles in Cuba, Castro nearly plunged us into World War III until the Soviets removed the danger. Then to pay back the Russians for their more than a billion dollar annual subsidy, he sent Cuban legions to Africa and the Middle East where they suffer ever-increasng casualties.

Having become the chief stooge for the Soviets in this hemisphere, Castro uses the color of his shirt as do his masters in the Kremlin to denote revolution. In earlier times, there were black shirts for Mussolini's Fascists, brown shirts to show off Hitler's Nazis. Castro and the Russians display crimson shirts which brands them for what they are: "Red Fascists."

TODAY Castro's gunmen who helped the Sandinistas betray the revolution overthrowing the Somoza dictatorship instruct, mind you, their communist disciples in Nicaragua on "human rights." As a result, Sandinistas have jailed or driven out thousands of Miskito Indians, Baptists, Mormons, many of the majority Catholics and all of the small Jewish community. Quite a record in a short time.

Besides accelerating repression of critics and opposition which the Sandinistas vowed to uphold originally, they undertook to export with Cuban and other Soviet bloc help guerrilla de-stabilization of next-door El Salvador. They learned the Soviet-Cuban slogan fast: "Peace means war."

President Reagan continues to hope for the best, which is peace but not at any price.

Government makes changes in schools

By ALAN D. LIVINGSTON

Alan D. Livingston came to Midland two years ago from Oklahoma where he had been employed as a school teacher and administrator. In Midland, Livingston is a consulting geologist.

The federal government has again researched our public schools and recommended to the local school district several changes. The changes include such items as increasing the length of the school day and the length of the school year. Besides the above, they recommend increasing the amount of reading, science, math and English. This is just another "back to basics" approach and it is hard to disagree or argue against better education, nor do I wish to do so. What I do disagree with is the inferred charges against local schools that they can't or don't do their jobs.

The charges of poor quality education they say is due to poor teachers, too little time and effort spent on the three "R's" and teachers inflating student grades. The committee points to the fall in ACT scores for approximately 20 years as proof against local school districts and their staffs.

I am in entire agreement with the generally poor quality of the school's product but adamantly disagree with the cause of this predicament. The results we live with today are directly proportional to the massive amount of state and federal legislative interference. I could list pages of legislation that has been passed to correct a sectional problem, only to find the laws have devastated other sections of the country instead.

I am not against higher teachers' salaries, longer school days and tri-semester terms, but that will not solve the problem. The problem is that the local school districts employ administrators that are not given the power to inact sound educational policies of standards of curriculum, let alone implement these policies without some or all governmental and judicial agencies counteracting them.

We hire teachers and then complain to school boards because the teacher is too hard, too soft, too technical, not technical enough, too demanding and too strict on poor little Johnny and Susie. If the school board won't listen to them, you can bet your last dollar that some lawyer will, or a special interest group will begin massive lobbying.

"You can lead a horse to water and if he's not thirsty, he won't drink." I have heard this all my life and in education it is just as true today as it was a hundred years ago. We have, in education, changed the water for the horses, changed the trough, the location of the trough and our little horses still aren't drinking. This leads to the conclusion that we have three choices open to us: First, don't change anything. Secondly, go with federal guidelines again and every 20 years repeat. Third, we might try changing the horses. If the horse has his way, he's going to stay in the pasture and never pull the plow. Give the administrator and the teacher the power to harness the horse and I'll bet that the horse will be thirsty by the end of a work day.

We can no longer be allowed only individual student rights. They can no longer be allowed to bring drugs and alcohol into school activities, refuse to do homework or not participate in a positive manner in the public school society. We must demand that our public school institutions and their staffs be given the right and power to do their jobs. Until back to basics means back to total student responsibility, we will see a continuance of the poor educational product.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sponsor thanks

To The Editor:

For the past two years I have served as supervisor of the Parks and Recreation Department's Summer Fun Day Camp. I would like to take this opportunity to publicly acknowledge my appreciation to the various organizations and citizens who have helped sponsor our camp. A special thank you is in order for the director, staff and other employees of the Midland Parks and Recreation Department. They were extremely helpful in developing a very successful program.

This program would be of no value to the children of Midland without the leadership and guidance of the counsellors. Throughout the eight weeks of summer camp they did an excellent job of supervising their groups and were also considered by the children to be good friends. Serving the camp as counsellors for the 1983 day camp were Waide Allen, Ozzie Ausburne, Pam Cannon, Melinda Hagar, Karen Ihry, Eddie Faye Lane, Cindy Major, Richey Maley and Norma Ruiz. In addition to these, my personal gratitude is extended to assistant supervisor, Deb Thalken for her versatility and efficiency throughout this summer. The activities at the summer camp were highlighted by the good leadership qualities shown by those mentioned.

Even with good leadership, this program could not exist without the various organizations, businesses and individuals who contributed their facilities, time and effort. I wish to thank all of them for demonstrating their generosity and concern for the welfare of the children of the community.

As a community effort, on the last day of camp we held a special recreational event. Contests were conducted, free refreshments were served and entertainers performed during the morning. I wish to thank the entertainers who contributed their time and talent to make the day a tremendous success. It was enjoyed by all.

Most important of all was the enjoyment derived by the children from the program. They enjoyed making new friends, playing various new games and becoming aware of their community by visiting and learning more about the businesses and organizations which help contribute to a growing and developing community. The children enjoy having a place during the summer to come and associate with their peers, and the parents feel confident in leaving their children for a morning of supervised play. It is hoped that by participating in the Parks and Recreation Department's Summer Fun Day Camp, children will develop into outstanding members of the community.

In conclusion, I feel that by participating in an organized environment children will grow in their knowledge of the feelings for others, thus, will grow into reliable and dependent adults who will be admired and respected as leaders of the community. Parents, I encourage you to begin planning now for your children's future by deciding to enroll your child in the Parks and Recreation's Summer Fun Day Camp. You (and your child) will be glad you did!

It's been a great learning experience for me too!

Contest illegal?

To The Editor:

On July 30 at Midland Park Mall there was a contest whose prize was a trip to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico. That's a nice prize. The competition judged was the quality of suntan achieved by the contestants.

Anyone was able to enter. But was anyone able to win? If someone is black does he have a good tan? If so, then white people would have been excluded from the contest — not very likely. If, then, a black man is said not to be tan then we are left with a contest to see who can come the closest to imitating a black without actually being black. This is a country which supposedly has laws against racial discrimination.

If this contest was not illegal, it should have been.

To The Editor:

I had to look twice at the front page of Wednesday's (July 27) edition of your newspaper to make certain I wasn't reading the "Boston Globe."

When did the Reporter-Telegram initiate a policy of carrying editorials as front page news? Your headline news item ("Reagan Calls Military Maneuvers 'Routine'") is not news reporting at all. It is a totally biased editorial commentary on Mr. Reagan's Tuesday night news conference on Central America written by a non-reporter looking to exploit an obviously delicate situation faced by both the president and the country. In my opinion it has no place on the front page of a newspaper.

Where, on Page 1, is there a contrary view? A second article details the predictable response of Mondale, Cranston and Kennedy — do you call that news? The clear impression is that no one, including the Reporter-Telegram, is supporting the president on this one. How about a second editorial on how it used to be considered American and statesmanlike for the opposing party's candidates to support the president on matters of national security — the kind of restraint exhibited by George Bush and Mr. Reagan toward President Carter during the Iranian situation in 1979-1980?

If readers want your editorial comment on the major news stories of the day, they can look for it in the appropriate section. Since you chose to publish a commentary from Hearst's Washington Bureau on Page 1, the obvious assumption is that the Reporter-Telegram supports the position taken therein.

Space wanted

To The Editor:

This is in reference to your article, "Midland needs new courthouse, attorney says," published in the Tuesday, July 26, 1983, edition. I agree with Mr. Kerr that our courtrooms have "phoney paneling" and they "make you feel like it's a second-rate place." But, the one office you failed to mention in your article is the county attorney's office.

Having worked for the county attorney for a little over a year now, I know how tight our office space is. We have two attorneys sharing one office. Our receptionist area barely fits three chairs and a small table. The county judges' receptionist area is just as large, if not larger, than my boss's office. My own working space is also the jury room of the county courtroom, which prevents me from working whenever county court is in session. I file on people who write hot checks, but our hot check office is in a completely different building. Whenever I need anything from that office, it takes at least a day to get it. This slows down the process, and keeps me from serving the public as adequately as I should.

And the county commissioners wonder why my boss keeps asking for more?

To The Editor:

Sheriff Dallas Smith has again proposed a new county jail to be built because of overcrowded conditions of the jail now in operation.

It is time for the residents of Midland to realize that we do need a new jail in our county, one large enough to accommodate the growing criminal population.

Don't kid yourselves people, crime is on the upswing. You require the law enforcement officials to arrest the offenders responsible for crime but where do you expect officials to place the criminals? Start a Rent-A-Criminal program? Put them back on the streets because there is no room for them in jail? Do you realize that criminals have legal recourse in federal courts because of overcrowded conditions?

There are several cases pending now in which the offenders have claimed that their civil rights have been violated because of overcrowding in the jail! If these cases are found in their behalf, the criminal will go scotfree to burglarize your home, rape your wife and kids, murder your best friend, rob your local convenience store! This is happening now — and it could happen to you.

It is time for the residents of Midland to stand up for our rights. We don't want the criminals on the streets; let's build a place for them away from downtown, a facility where they cannot claim their rights were violated due to overcrowding! Call your county commissioners. Let them know that the jail is needed. Unite Midlanders. Let's build that new jail and keep the criminals off the streets.

Overall concept of criminal rehabilitation...a farce

Bill Modisett

Texas legislators passed a package of bills earlier this year that has been heralded as the most revolutionary prison reform in the state's history. Revolutionary has become synonomous with beneficial in recent times, but I'm not so sure this package of bills will only benefit Texas society.

There's no argument of the need for prison reform in Texas. The state puts more people behind bars and keeps them there longer than most other states. Of each 100,000 Texas residents, 214 are put behind bars for sentences of six years average. The typical inmate stays behind bars only 28 months, though.

In the summer of 1982 overcrowding even caused the prison system to stop accepting prisoners from county jails for a short time. And the problem isn't over yet. Jim Estelle, director of the Texas Department of Corrections, has said conservative estimates indicate the prison system's population will expand by 6,000 over the next two years. More than 4,000 inmates are now housed in tents.

You foot the bill for keeping those people behind bars. And the cost isn't cheap, either. But then, when criminals are behind bars they aren't stealing your TV set or threatening your life.

The state's burgeoning prison population — like that in other states — is a powder keg. A lot of hate for society and the rules of society is concentrated in prisons. A lot of that hate will never disappear. Some will.

That's where the Legislature scored a coup this session. Legislators recognized that certain criminals can be "reformed." So they worked out a system whereby those who deserve to be released can be sent back into society to build new lives. They even worked out a method for criminals to work in restitution centers and repay their victims.

That's a great step forward in criminal justice. It allows criminals to repay their victims in one sense and to rejoin society through a careful, gradual and structured program.

But overall the concept that prisons can rehabilitate criminals and mold them into productive members of society is a farce. Call it a flaw in humans, if you will, but there are those individuals whose moral fiber is so thin that they cannot exist in a structured society. They're mad dogs who only learn tricks of the trade from their cellmates and wile away the hours until they are turned back onto society.

To the mad dogs, prison time is "down time" — an occupational risk. No amount of down time is going to rehabilitate them. Turn them loose on society once too often and what you wind up with is a civilian victim or two.

That's where Sen. Ray Farabee of Wichita Falls did you no favor. Farabee's bill cut the bottom out of the state's "habitual criminal" statute. Before the bill was enacted, a three-time loser received an automatic life sentence on conviction regardless of the crime — murder or hot check writing. The purpose of that measure was simple. A criminal was given two chances to reform. The third time, he was considered too much a risk to society. If that criminal could not be reformed to refrain from writing bad checks or drinking too much before operating a car, he or she might not find anything wrong with knocking off a convenience store and killing the clerk.

Maybe the liberalization laws passed by the Legislature will be beneficial. Maybe all the criminals released back into society will be clean-cut Texans who will walk the straight and narrow. Maybe all the child-rapists and grandmother-killers will be kept behind bars where they belong.

And maybe the cost of running the state's prison system will be cut in half and society won't have to suffer the consequences of failing to pay for just punishment.

But please don't hold it against me if I'm not overly optimistic. I never even believed in Peter Pan.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Alarm system may end bed-wetting

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a seven-year-old boy who still wets the bed. I have spoken with a lot of people who have had the same problem. Some say they found drugs to be helpful in getting their children to stop wetting at night, and others say that they used an alarm system. Would you have any recommendation along this line? — Mrs. J.C., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Mrs. C.: The results of one study suggest that a urine alarm system is preferable to drug therapy in the treatment of bed-wetting. The researchers studied children who were at least six years of age and of normal intelligence. Treatment was carried out over a period of 14 weeks.

At the end of that time, more than 80 percent of the children who had used the urine alarm no longer wet the bed, compared with about one-third of those who had taken the drug (imipramine). However, one-half of the children who had used the alarm, and all the children who had received the drug, began wetting again.

There may be specific reasons why one method or the other — or neither — might be most appropriate in a particular case. The child's pediatrician is usually the person in the best position to make this determination.

Dear Dr. Solomon: After eating out over the weekend, I began having some really strong pains in my chest. I didn't think I was having a heart attack, buy my wife reminded me about what you had written about not taking chances, so she drove me to the emergency room of a hospital. The doctor asked me some questions and seemed to know right away that it wasn't a heart attack. Am I wrong that strong pains in the chest usually mean a heart attack? — Adrian, Birmingham, Ala.

Dear Adrian: It is not necessarily the severity of the pain but the quality that often indicates its cause. For example, a person who experiences a myocardial infarction may be relatively pain-free.

Very often better clues as to the origin of chest pain may be whether it is heavy and aching or sharp and sticking, whether it is steady or intermittent, and whether it is affected by the patient's position or activity.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My fther lives a distance away. He phoned me the other day to say that his doctor has recommended an angioplasty, and he wanted my opinion. I don't even know what an angioplasty is. Can you help? — Ms. E.K., Detroit, Mich.

Dear Ms. K.: Angioplasty simply refers to the repair of a blood vessel.

For Stuart, Orlando, Fla.: A person who cannot touch the floor when bending from the waist with the knees locked has tight hamstrings. That person should be particularly conscientious about warming up and stretching muscles before exercising. The exercises should be slow and gradual; abrupt movements may strain the hamstrings, causig injury.

A severe hamstring tear may never recover completely. In addition, the hamstring may be more susceptible to reinjury.

POSITIVE THINKING

Man 'positively rethinks' marriage

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

One of the results of positive thinking has been its effectiveness in difficult marital situations. When people who are having trouble with their marriage begin to apply positive attitudes, new appreciation, esteem and regard come ito the relationship.

Not long ago I was making a speech on the West Coast. When the talk was over a man came up to me and said he wanted to tell me how positive thinking has affected his life.

He said that he had been married for nine years. Two weeks after his wedding he began to realize that he had not chosen his mate wisely.

"That marriage was a mistake," he said. "Right away both of us knew it. It had been a case of physical attraction, but my wife turned out to be just plain dumb. She was selfish, too. I had to face the fact that I wasn't ever going to get along with her, and I had to make up my mind whether or not to stick it out."

This man chose to stay with his wife. He told me that he decided to make the best of a bad situation and endure the marriage. He said that as soon as he made this decision he stopped griping and tried to get along as well as he could with a woman he did not love.

Things went along this unhappy course for five years and then this man began to study the techniques of positive thinking. He began to use the principles outlined in various books on this subject in his business life. They worked very well. One day it occurred to him that if the principles of positive thinking worked in business, perhaps they would also work in his personal life.

"What would happen," he asked himself, "if I applied the power of positive thinking, idea by idea, to my home and marital situation."

He began to do this. He began to analyze his wife, asking himself why to him she seemed selfish and why she appeared to be stupid. The thought came that perhaps his marriage had been a form of guidance to a happier life. He started to picture his partner as an entirely different person: as a stimulating, attractive life partner. He even began to pray for her and eventually out loud with her.

Simultaneously he examined his own personality objectively and honestly for the flaws which were making his wife unhappy. This was important to the process for he, too, had not a little selfishness and self-centeredness, as he readily admitted.

This process lasted for four years, but "the results were very good," he declared. A totally new and improved situation developed. From a marriage which was simply endured, the relationship between these two people became a warm partnership in which each tried to give more than he received.

"Positive thinking," this man told me, "was directly responsible for the remaking of our marriage. We made it work."

Scientists plan to dive onto wreck of U.S.S. Monitor

HATTERAS, N.C. (AP) — Scientists plan to dive to the wreck of the Civil War ironclad USS Monitor to photograph it and recover its anchor and other artifacts.

The information may lead to an attempt in 1986 to recover the ship's revolving, armored turret, say officials of the Maritime History and Underwater Research program at East Carolina University in Greenville and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Washington.

A five-day expedition to the sunken wreck 16 miles off Cape Hatteras will begin Aug. 21 — the first on-site examination in four years, said NOAA administrator John C. Byrne. The base of operations will be in the village of Hatteras.

Information from previous dives has indicated that raising the turret and constructing supports for the submerged hull are possible, he said.

"The recovery of the turret will provide an opportunity to return the most unusual feature of the warship to the American public," Byrne said.

Next year, divers will enter the turret for the first time, said Gordon P. Watts Jr., an East Carolina University underwater archaeologist and a member of the team that found the wreck in 1973.

Watts and William N. Still, a university maritime historian, are co-directors of the college's program and will lead the team of investigators.

Location and possible recovery of the anchor and a 10-foot section of anchor chain will provide "the first large-object conservation problem," Watts said.

Cubs defeat Travelers, 4-2

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland pitchers Ron Richardson and Bill Johnson teamed up on the mound Saturday night to snap a four-game Cubs losing streak. The two gave up eight hits enroute to a 4-2 Texas League victory over Arkansas.

Richardson, who has had poor luck this season — going into the game he was 1-7 with an ERA of 10.00 — gave up Arkansas' only runs in the first two innings (one earned) to pick up the victory and Manager Tommy Harmon called on Johnson to save the game (his eighth) in the ninth.

"He's had a rough year," said Harmon about Richardson. "He's coming off tendonitis and has had two good outings. I'm glad to see him stretch it out and get the win. He needed that one, we all needed that one.

"When we pulled him, he had thrown 111 pitches and that's the most he's thrown in a couple of months," continued Harmon. "He got a couple of pitches up high in the eighth but got away with it."

"Everything kind of came together tonight, coming off the injury and all," said Richardson. "I felt like I could have gone in the ninth but Bill's a strong reliever. I'd thrown a lot of pitches and I haven't thrown that many since I've come off the DL (disabled list). He (Harmon) felt I'd thrown enough."

THE CUBS added good fielding and timely hitting to their pitching efforts. A pair of double plays in the final two innings helped both Richardson and Johnson out of jams. On the night, Midland infielders handled 13 ground balls perfectly for the outs. Only five putouts were recorded by the outfield.

"That kind of defense helps a lot, it helps your confidence," said Richardson. "You feel like you can throw the ball over the plate all night."

The Cubs might have turned even more double plays in the game except for Arkansas' fondness of the hit-and-run.

"I can't believe how much they like to run," said Johnson. "It seems like they're running on every situation with less than two outs."

"Sometimes it helps you because you know it's coming," added Richardson."

It probably helped Midland in the ninth inning when second baseman Trey Brooks fielded Gotay Mills' grounder and threw to A.J. Hill covering second. Hill barely had enough time to get off the throw to first to complete the double play, throwing over the hard-sliding Darren Thomas.

The double play ended the game for "a win that we needed," said Richardson. "It'll help us turn things around now."

BILL HATCHER tied the game at 1-1 in the bottom of the first inning when he led off with a triple and scored on Rick Baker's single to right. It would have been 3-1 for the Cubs if Baker hadn't missed his 48th stolen base of the year. Arkansas catcher Randy Hunt threw to Rod Booker covering second for the put out.

With the bases empty, Cub Tom Lombarski hit his 13th home run of the year, easily clearing the center-field fence.

Hill picked up the Cubs' third and final extra-base hit in the third inning with his double to center, moved to third on Hatcher's ground out and scored on Baker's single to left for a 4-2 lead. Arkansas' second run tied the game at 2-2 in the second.

Midland scored its final run in the sixth inning with the help of a stolen base throwing error on Hunt. Hatcher, who led off the inning with a walk, stole second and advanced to third on the misfired throw.

When Baker followed with the second walk of the game off loser Jerry Johnson, now 6-12, Mike Barba gave up a sacrifice fly to Lombarski to score the final run.

CUB PRINTS — Midland has a new face coming to town: Jeff Rutledge from Class A Salinas, Calif., who is replacing Otis Tramble in the lineup. Tramble, who was called up from Salinas last week, went back for a little more work...Former Cub outfielder Joe Carter is getting his chance at the Majors. Saturday he was called up from Chicago's AAA team in Des Moines...Baker led the Cubs nine-hit attack against Arkansas with a 3-for-3 performance (all singles) while Hatcher added a single and triple in three attempts...The victory gives Midland a 15-22 record while Arkansas falls to 19-14...The Cubs have now won only six games out of their last 24 after starting the second half season with a 9-4 record...

Spencer takes aim at city golf title

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

Grant Spencer fired a 67 Saturday to take the lead after the opening round of the The Midland Reporter-Telegram's City Golf Tournament at Hogan Park.

Jack Bergeron was close behind with a 69, followed by Ernie Swart's 70.

Spencer, a senior general business student at McNeese State in Louisiana, attended Midland Lee. He recently completed his golf eligibility at McNeese and will graduate in December.

LAST YEAR in the City tourney he was the leader after the opening round and finished second.

"I got off to a great start," said Spencer of his opening round. Spencer birdied the first two holes and picked up another stroke on the fifth hole. After that, says he, "I lucked out and chipped in on number seven to go four under and then I flubbed up and bogeyed number nine." Nine, a par three, was one of Spencer's tougher challenges. "I had a little trouble on the par threes," Spencer said. "I didn't get to play a practice round last week and had trouble selecting clubs." Spencer had pars on the other Hogan par threes.

Spencer, who says his consistency off the tee is the strongest part of his game, will go to the PGA Tour qualifying school in the fall in hopes of joining the tour soon. Today, he could become one of the youngest city champions in the long history of the City Golf Tournament at the age of 22.

HOGAN PARK and The Midland Reporter-Telegram have hosted the City Championship since the mid-1960's. Originally the tournament was a four-day, 72-hole extravaganza. However, dwindling participants and the difficulties of staging a lengthy tournament in which all who wish to participate can actually do so have necessitated the reduction of the tournament's length to its' present 36 hole format. The championships have been 36 holes the past four years.

In all, 64 players are taking part in this year's tourney which has prizes totaling over $2,000 in merchandise for the top finishers.

The action started even earlier than Hogan Park pro Rex Worrell and his staff expected. Early Saturday morning, the Hogan golf shop was the victim of an attempted burglary, but Midland Police were alerted by the club's alarm and foiled the bungled burglary.

Initially, the Tournament was to have only four flights (Championship through Third), but the large field caused the creation of a President's Flight to level off the competition in the Championship Flight. Golfers entered in the top Flight had to post one of the top 16 scores to make the cut.

Defending champion Royce Woolard is not entered in the event this year.

The "sweet 16" Championship Flight golfers and first-round leaders in all flights are listed below.

CHAMPIONSHIP FLIGHT: Spencer - 67; Bergeron - 69; Swart - 70; Miller, Baker - tied at 71; Hubbard, Walker, Wampler - tied at 72; Delay, M. Haywood, Castillo - tied at 73; Workman - 74; Marburger, Valdez, Raney, Young - tied at 75.

PRESIDENT'S FLIGHT: Roberts, Loyd - tied at 76; Childers - 77; Montanez - 78; Hammel, Pyle, Word - tied at 79; Johnson, Gibb, Opperman - tied at 80; Schmidt - 82; R. Haywood, Minnix - tied at 83; Thompson - 85; Foster - 89; Scott - 94.

FIRST FLIGHT: Sikes - 74; Coffman, Schubarth - tied at 75; Higgins - 76; Hudgins, Butler, Langford - tied at 78; Milam - 82; Eisenbeis - 85.

Jan loses temper, but keeps lead

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Jan Stephenson lost her temper but kept the lead once she had it Saturday in the third round of the 31st U.S. Women's Open golf championship.

"I did some stupid things like 3-putting the 15th green and it made me mad," Stephenson said after she scrambled to an even par 71 over steamy Cedar Ridge Country Club.

Her 54-hole total of 3-over-par 216 gave her a 2-shot lead going into the final round.

"I got upset and I let my temper get away from me," she said. "It was hot and I was trying to keep cool and concentrate. But the two times I 3-putted really made me mad."

Stephenson said she finally regained her composure before she blew the slim lead she had built.

"I kept telling myself you have to have patience no matter what happens," she said. "Patience is not one of my attributes."

Asked if she felt secure going into the final round, Stephenson laughed, "Secure is not in my vocabulary. Not on this course, which is so treacherous."

Stephenson made her two 3-putts when she boldly tried to make birdie.

"I got greedy and it cost me twice," she said.

Stephenson, the 1982 Ladies Professional Golf Association Classic champion who has never captured the Open, led by two shots over Debbie Meisterlin and Patty Sheehan, who were at 218.

Sheehan, the current LGPA champion who led by three strokes when play began, blew to a 5-over par 76 while Meisterlin posted a 2-over 73.

"I knocked it in the water once and that will kill you every time," she said.

Meisterlin, who has never won an LPGA event, double-bogeyed the 16th hole but birdied the 17th and made a saving par putt on the final green to tie Sheehan.

"I'm happy I'm still in contention and I've still got a chance," Meisterlin said.

Temperatures around 100 degrees, 63 percent humdity and a late afternoon thundershower that delayed play 10 minutes turned the course into a stamina-sapping sauna.

Stephenson, a 32-year-old Australian who now lives in Fort Worth, Texas, went out in even par 36 then matched par 35 on the homecoming nine.

She knocked in a 20-foot birdie putt on the 14th hole but gave it back to par with a 3-putt 15th green. It was her second 3-putt of the day.

Stephenson bunkered her tee shot on the rugged 400-yard par 4 No. 17, drilled her second shot wide of the green and wedged to within 15-feet. She then slipped the downhill putt into the side of the hole for a saving par on perhaps the toughest hole on the course.

Pat Bradley, the 1981 Open champion, shot a record-tying 5-under-par 31 on the front nine, which included an ace, but she found grief on the homecoming nine.

Bradley knocked a 5-iron in the hole on the 145-yard par 3 No. 6 as she tied Judy Bell's U.S. Open nine-hole record. Bell set the record in 1964 at San Diego.

However, Bradley stumbled to a fat 5-over-par 40 on the back nine, including a 3-putt from 15 feet on the final green. Her even par round of 71 put her at 6-over 219 along with Lauren Howe, who had a 5-over-par 76.

Bradley was upset by someone in the ABC tower who shouted "play has been suspended" just as she tried to make a 5-footer for par on the 17th green.

"The siren had sounded for suspension of play but we decided to play out the hole. We didn't need anyone telling us play had been suspended," Bradley said. "It broke my concentration. Then I missed my putt for bogey and I bogeyed the final hole."

Stoudt gets morale boost

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Reserve Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Cliff Stoudt says his performance Saturday in a 27-14 National Football League exhibition victory over the New Orleans Saints provided a morale boost.

"It helps me a lot. I'm throwing the ball well. I just hope I can get some work," he said after passing for two touchdowns.

Stoudt's play followed a back injury he suffered playing golf earlier this year. The injury prevented him from taking part in the team's minicamp this summer.

Steelers Coach Chuck Noll liked the performance of his No. 2 quarterback, saying, "Cliff did well. He showed a lot of poise. He ran well when he had to."

But Noll preferred to talk about the six turnovers his defense forced. "If we do that when we have the opportunity, we'll win a lot of games," he said.

New Orleans Coach Bum Phillips asked a cluster of newsmen afterward, "It wasn't too good of a beginning, was it? I was disappointed, mostly in our mistakes. You can't give the ball away that much.

"I think they were were more ready to play than we were mentally."

George Rogers, the Saints' running star, dislocated his left thumb but is expected to play in New Orleans' next exhibition at Tampa Bay next Saturday night.

"I was trying to catch my balance. I put my thumb down, fell on it and bent it all the way back," he said. Rogers played briefly, running five times for 10 yards.

The Steelers, rolling to their sixth straight exhibition triumph over the last three seasons, were in control all the way after scoring 17 points in the opening quarter.

Before the nationally televised game, Sid Gillman, Bobby Mitchell, Bobby Bell, Paul Warfield and Sonny Jurgensen were inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Stoudt, a seven-year veteran from Youngstown State University, filled in for injured regular Terry Bradshaw, who still is recovering from surgery on his right elbow in March.

The seldom-used Stoudt responded with the longest touchdown pass play of his pro career, a 69-yard bomb to wide receiver Greg Hawthorne.

He also connected with rookie Gregg Garrity on an 18-yard play for another opening-quarter touchdown. Gary Anderson had opened the Pittsburgh scoring with a 34-yard field goal in the first six minutes.

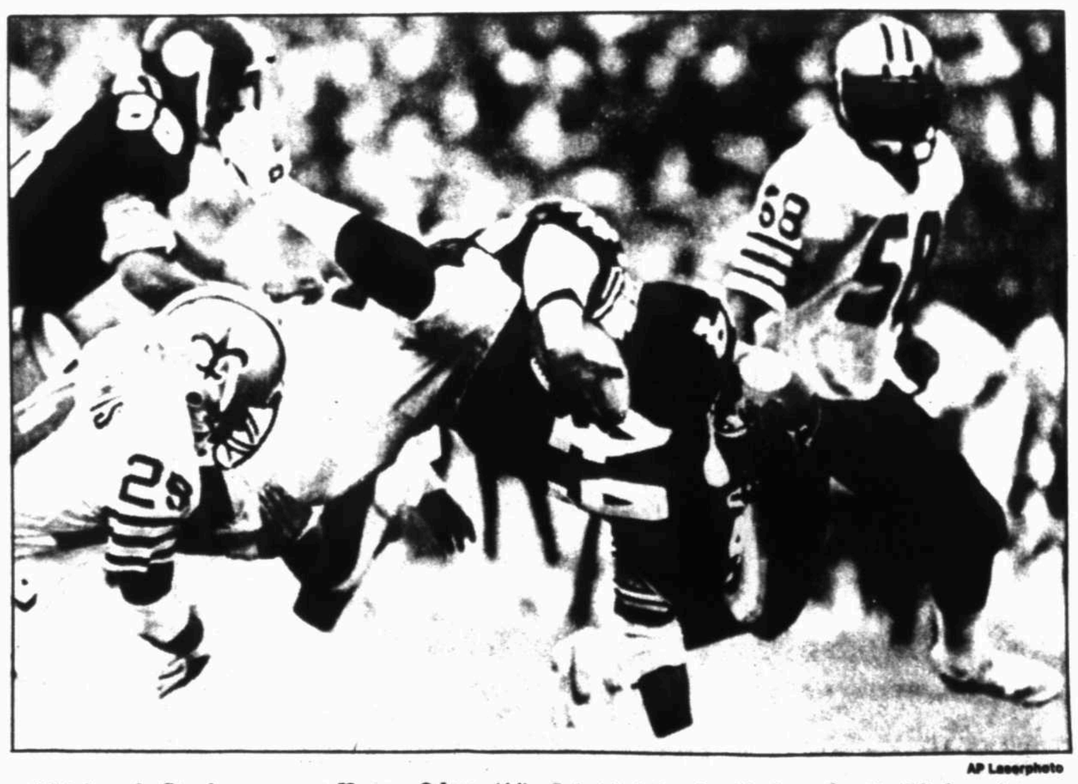

Stoudt connected on eight of 14 passes for 174 yards.

Quarterback Kenny Stabler appeared only briefly for New Orleans, playing the first three series. The left-handed veteran threw nine times, completing six of those passes for 59 yards.

The Steelers' secondary feasted on his replacement, Dave Wilson. They intercepted the second-year player from Illinois four straight times and picked one of Guido Merkens' throws off.

New Orleans scored twice in the last quarter. Jimmy Rogers plunged 1 yard with 13:10 remaining to cap a 78-yard Saints' surge, and Merkens hooked up with Marvin Dumas on a 38-yard scoring strike with 1:18 to play.

Quarterback Mark Malone wrapped up the Pittsburgh scoring with a 1-yard keeper with 2:10 left.

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — You can kid Larry Wansley but don't mess with him.

You are permitted to needle the former undercover FBI agent who is now the Dallas Cowboys' security chief about turning this serene California Lutheran College training camp into "Fort Landry" with his barricades.

"Where's the barbed wire, Larry?"

He has an excellent sense of humor and laughs hard.

Just don't hassle this guy TOO hard.

Try this resume:

He worked on the cases of Patty Hearst, ABSCAM, and the murder of federal Judge John Wood in his 10 years with the FBI. During this period of time he used five different identities, including everything from being a newspaper publisher to a jet setter.

He's been on S.W.A.T. teams. And, oh yes, when he was a policeman in Compton, Calif., he was assigned to handle a little rumble called the Watts riots in Los Angeles.

Wansley says, almost casually, "A few times my life has been in danger; a few times I thought it was over."

He won't get very specific about the cases except to poke fun at himself.

Example: Once as a Compton cop he cornered a suspect and tried to kick open a door — like they do it on TV. His foot went through the door but the suspect surrendered as the door swung open.

A giggling backup unit found Wansley with his gun trained on the suspect and his foot still jammed through the door.

(A "footnote": The suspect had fired a bullet from a window at Wansley. An attorney got the man off, claiming his client was test-firing his gun.)

Wansley hasn't been hired by the Cowboys to help Coach Tom Landry check curfew. That job will still fall to the assistant coaches.

"I've just had a feeling our security has been loose on the road and at home," Landry says. "There's just been too many people around."

Several Cowboy names have surfaced in recent drug investigations and Wansley is insurance that undesirable elements will have future trouble getting close to the team members and their families.

With Wansley's background, it's almost Lloyd's of London-style insurance.

Wansley has dealt undercover with drug dealers and says, "I've seen lives destroyed by drugs. My primary job is with the drugs — mainly as an advisor."

There have been very few grumbles on the team from the players; mostly just off-key jokes.

Wansley, who is black, is called "Our Sam Spade" in the camp humor of some of the players. Wansley just laughs.

He is in such top physical condition that he looks like one of the players and they have readily taken to his low-key, relaxed style.

Only Wansley has been used to been competing in a different league: It was called playing in The League of Keeps.

Birds hand Rangers another loss

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Scott McGregor won his 13th game of the season and Eddie Murray's tainted triple highlighted a four-run seventh as Baltimore won its fourth straight game with a 7-4 victory over the Texas Rangers Saturday night.

The triumph improved the Orioles to 58-40, moving them one-half game ahead of the Detroit Tigers in the American League East race. Texas, 49-52, lost its fifth straight and fell to 5-18 since the All-Star break.

After Dave Hostetler's second home run of the game provided the Rangers with a 4-3 lead, the Orioles staged the game-winning rally in the bottom of the inning.

Cal Ripken Jr. opened with an infield hit. Murray then lofted a liner to left that glanced off left fielder Billy Sample's glove and rolled to the wall. After Murray reached third on the hit, John Lowenstein followed with a sacrifice fly to give Baltimore the lead.

Ken Singleton then singled, prompting Texas Manager Doug Rader to remove starter Mike Smithson, 6-10, in favor John Butcher. Joe Nolan tagged Butcher's first pitch for a runs-scoring double, and one out later Al Bumbry capped the rally with an RBI single to right.

McGregor, 13-4, won his ninth game in his last 10 decisions with relief help from Tim Stoddard, who earned his fourth save.

After Texas had taken an early 2-0 lead, Baltimore went ahead with a three-run third inning that featured sacrifice flies by Ripken and Murray and a run-scoring single by Singleton.

White Sox 5, Yankees 1

CHICAGO — Tom Paciorek rapped out three hits and drove in two runs and Greg Luzinski knocked in a pair with a sacrifice fly and a double to lead the surging Chicago White Sox to a 5-1 victory over the New York Yankees.

The triumph was the fourth straight and fifth in the last six games for the White Sox, who opened a four-game lead in the American League West race.

Richard Dotson, 11-6, was the winner and Shane Rawley, 9-9, suffered the loss as the Yankees dropped into fourth place in the tight American League East, 2½ games behind first-place Baltimore. Dotson gave up six hits.

The Yankees took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Don Mattingly opened the game with a triple and scored as Butch Wynegar grounded out.

Chicago tied it in the bottom of the first. Carlton Fisk walked and scored on a double by Paciorek.

The Sox went ahead to stay with two runs in the fifth. Julio Cruz opened the fifth with a single and, one out later, Fisk drew another walk before Paciorek singled Cruz home. Fisk scored on Luzinski's sacrifice fly.

Red Sox 10, Brewers 5

BOSTON — Carl Yastrzemski and Glenn Hoffman drilled three-run homers and Dwight Evans smacked a two-run double and a solo homer as the Boston Red Sox overcame a 3-0 deficit and pounded the Milwaukee Brewers 10-5.

Yastrzemski's fifth inning blast snapped a 3-3 tie and made him the 17th major-league player to hit 450 career home runs. It also was the 43-year-old veteran's 47th homer after his 40th birthday, breaking a tie with Stan Musial for the major-league record.

Boston iced the game in the seventh when Evans led off with his 20th homer and Hoffman hammered his second home run after a single by Yastrzemski and a double by Rich Gedman.

Tigers 4-10, Royals 1-1

DETROIT — Larry Herndon belted a fourth-inning two-run homer and Juan Berenguer and Aurelio Lopez combined on a seven-hitter as the Detroit Tigers downed the Kansas City Royals 4-1.

Then the Tigers won the completion of a suspended game, 10-1.

Following the regular game, the two teams completed Friday night's game which was suspended after eight innings due to an American League curfew and the Tigers holding a 10-1 lead. Dave Gumpert got the final three outs for winning pitcher Jack Morris, 11-8.

Larry Gura, 8-15 was the loser.

Blue Jays 6, Indians 5

TORONTO — Pinch-hitter Ernie Whitt singled up the middle with the bases loaded in the 13th to give the Toronto Blue Jays a 6-5 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Reliever Bud Anderson, 0-2, the fourth Cleveland pitcher, walked Damaso Garcia to start the 13th. Lloyd Moseby laid down a sacrifice bunt but Anderson threw the ball past first base with Garcia advancing to third and Moseby to second on the error. Anderson struck out Rance Mulliniks and intentionally walked Cliff Johnson to load the bases before Whitt's hit.

Toronto reliever Joey McLaughlin, 4-2, came on in the 11th with one on and one out and allowed only one hit to earn the win.

Dan Spillner came on at the start of the ninth to relieve Neal Heaton with the Indians ahead 5-3.

But with one out, Spillner walked Garcia and consecutive singles by Lloyd Moseby, pinch-hitter Jorge Orta and Johnson tied the score. Jamie Easterly came on and pitched Cleveland out of a bases-loaded one-out jam.

Heaton went eight innings, walking two and striking out six while giving up 11 hits.

The Indians took a 1-0 lead off starter Dave Stieb in the top of the first when a sacrifice fly by Broderick Perkins scored Hargrove.

A's 13, Angels 8

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Carney Lansford drove in the tie-breaking run with an RBI double and Jeff Burroughs added a two-run single to highlight a five-run rally in the seventh inning as the Oakland A's stormed back for a 13-8 decision over the California Angels in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader.

The A's, who trailed 7-0 at one point, had 20 hits.

Luis Sanchez, 8-5, California's third pitcher, entered a 7-7 tie in the seventh inning and surrendered singles to Dwayne Murphy and Davey Lopes. Lansford then blooped his tie-breaking double into right field. Rickey Henderson was walked intentionally before Burroughs drilled his single up the middle and the A's added two more runs to cap their comeback.

Mariners 7, Twins 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Pat Putnam's three-run homer in the seventh inning helped Seattle to a 7-3 victory over Minnesota.

Putnam's blast, his 15th of the season, came with two outs and scored Domingo Ramos and Tony Bernazard, who both had walked. Putnam's three RBI gave him 26 in the last 25 games he has started.

Seattle starter Glenn Abbott, 4-3, went the first 6⅔ innings for the Mariners to earn the victory. Mike Stanton pitched 2⅓ innings of hitless relief to earn his third save.

Sampson adds one more wall plaque

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — University of Virginia basketball center Ralph Sampson was named Saturday the winner of the Anthony J. McKevlin Award as Atlantic Coast Conference athlete of the year.

Despite being named national player of the year three times in his career, it was the first time the Harrisonburg, Va., native had captured the conference's athlete of the year honor.

Previous winners during Sampson's career were North Carolina's James Worthy, who captured the award in 1982, and North Carolina State distance runner Julie Shea, who won the award the two previous years.

The award was presented during the opening day of the ACC football coaches meeting at Foxfire Village. The award is given by the Atlantic Coast Sportswriters Association.

Sampson received 51 votes of the 118 ballots cast. North Carolina swimmer Sue Walsh was second with 24, while Clemson's two-sport performer Mike Eppley was third with 13. N.C. State distance runner Betty Springs was fourth with 12.

Sampson was not on hand to receive the award. Cavalier Coach Terry Holland said the 7-foot-4 Sampson was at home with his parents and also was looking for an agent to represent him in contract negotiations with the Houston Rockets of the National Basketball Association.

"I think the one thing Ralph Sampson has stood for in college basketball is that of a true student athlete," Holland said. "I think he's done a great job in representing our conference."

Hall of Famer Willie Mays hufs his way to first base after a single during Saturday's Old Timers game at New York's Shea Stadium. The Met Stars beat the NL All-Stars, 3-0.

Cincinnati Reds defeat Ryan, 3-2

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Cincinnati shortstop Dave Concepcion drove in two runs with a double and two singles to pace the Reds past the Houston Astros 3-2 Saturday night.

Meanwhile, Houston pitcher Nolan Ryan struck out five to raise his career total to 3,596, one less than all-time leader Steve Carlton of Philadelphia. But he was outpitched by Mario Soto, 12-9, who struck out seven and walked five while racking up his league-leading 12th complete game.

Concepcion's double in the first inning, the 300th of his career, knocked in Eddie Milner, who led off the game with a single.

Houston's Dickie Thon tied the game in the bottom of the inning with a solo home run, his 14th of the year.

The Reds went ahead for keeps in the fourth. Alex Trevino singled to center and went to second when Ray Knight committed a throwing error on Soto's bunt. Milner walked to load the bases, and Concepcion's single to center off Ryan, 9-4, made it 2-1.

Cincinnati added a run in the sixth on Ron Oester's single, Soto's sacrifice bunt, and a single to right by Milner.

Houston matched that in the bottom of the inning. Jose Cruz singled, went to second on Milner's error, to third on Knight's groundout and scored on Alan Ashby's single to right.

Cubs 4-3, Phillies 3-4

PHILADELPHIA — Ivan DeJesus' two-run double in the bottom of the sixth inning snapped a 2-2 tie as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Chicago Cubs 4-3 in the second game of a twi-night doubleheader.

In the first game, Ron Cey lined a one-out double in the ninth to drive in the winning run as the Cubs pulled out a 4-3 decision, halting a four-game Phillies' winning streak.

Charlie Hudson, recalled on May 31, struck out five and walked only one in a strong eighth innings for Philadelphia. But Cey led off the ninth with his second homer of the game and Hudson, 5-3, was replaced by AL Holland, who got his 11th save.

Steve Trout, 8-9, was the loser.

Garry Maddox started the winning rally with a one-out walk and one out later advanced to second on Kiko Garcia's infield single. DeJesus then smashed his game-winning double down the left field line.

The Cubs took a 1-0 lead in the third inning when Tom Veryzer reached on an error by DeJesus, was sacrificed to second and scored on Ryne Sandberg's single.

The Phillies went ahead 2-1 in the bottom of the third on Gary Matthews' bases-loaded single.

Cey led off the top of the fourth with his 15th home run, earning the Cubs a 2-2 tie.

Bill Campbell registered his third win against six losses in the opener and Lee Smith pitched out of a bases loaded jam in the ninth to earn his 15th save. Willie Hernandez, 4-4, the fifth Philadelphia pitcher was the loser.

Hernandez retired Sandberg to open the ninth but Bill Buckner grounded a single to right, his third hit of the evening. Cey then cracked a 3-2 pitch down the left field line for his sixth game-winning RBI.

Giants 8, Dodgers 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Mark Davis scattered seven hits and Bob Brenly's three-run homer highlighted a four-run, third-inning rally as the San Francisco Giants shut out the Los Angeles Dodgers 8-0.

It was the first major league shutout and first complete game for Davis, 1-3 and his second major league victory as he walked three and struck out four. Davis, obtained last winter along with Mike Krukow for Al Holland and Joe Morgan, also had two singles.

The Giants jumped on Dodger starter Jerry Reuss, 6-10, for three runs in the first. Jeff Leonard drove in one with a single and Joel Youngblood's double drove in two more to make it 3-0.

Cardinals 3, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Dave LaPoint combined with Bruce Sutter on a four-hitter and Willie McGee scored a pair of runs, helping the St. Louis Cardinals defeat the Montreal Expos 3-2.

The Cardinals trailed 1-0 before scoring twice in the fourth against Montreal starter Charlie Lea, 7-8, who had retired the first 10 batters.

McGee and Ken Oberkfell hit one-out singles before George Hendrick singled to center, scoring McGee with the tying run. Darrell Porter followed with the fourth straight single to load the bases and Tom Herr drove in the go-ahead run by lofting a sacrifice fly to left.

Pirates 6, Mets 3

NEW YORK — Rick Rhoden's two-run single and a three-run error by right-fielder Darryl Strawberry on Bill Madlock's bases loaded fly ball highlighted a six-run fifth inning as the Pittsburgh Pirates to beat the New York Mets 6-3 for their sixth straight victory.

Rhoden was forced to leave the game after 4⅓ innings when he was hit on the left knee by a line-drive single by Mookie Wilson. Rod Scurry, 4-7, pitched through the sixth and picked up the win. Manny Sarmiento, who pitched the final three innings, picked up his third save in a game delayed 1 hour, 14 minutes by rain. The Mets were held to just three hits.

Earl Weaver's niche safe from invaders?

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

When Earl Weaver retired to his pedestal to raise his beloved tomatoes, his niche in history seemed fairly safe from invaders.

Especially to The Great Unwashed, Weaver was somewhat of a managerial genius, even though the opinion became rather diluted the closer you came to the baseball core. Several years ago, during a World Series seminar, some of us heard Sparky Anderson hail Weaver as the reigning brain of the business.

"Best way to judge a manager, look at his minor league record," Anderson said. "That's where you really have to manage." Anderson always praised Walter Alston for the same reason.

There was a certain curiosity when Weaver left the Baltimores because he didn't want "to wake up some morning dead in a hotel in Oakland." Picky, picky.

What, pray, would happen to the rudderless Orioles? Who would dare follow a genius? Joe Altobelli, you say? Nice enough chap, relaxed and all that. But not nearly as bombastic as Weaver. It was assumed the Orioles demanded a Weaver type, for maximum results.

First hint to the contrary came from Brooks Robinson during a wintertime chat.

The Hall of Fame third baseman didn't exactly collapse with holy respect. Instead, he grinned. "Oh, Earl gave me more laughs than anybody I ever played for," Brooks said.

Significantly, he chose that moment to insert a sentiment: "Paul Richards knew more about baseball than anybody I ever met."

Then, back to Weaver: "What Earl does best is when he chooses his 25 players in spring training. He plays all 25 guys. Everybody knows what he's supposed to be. Earl does a good job of choosing the guys and then using all of them." Platoon managing, that is, in baseball parlance.

Jim Palmer, the famous underwear model, was never one of Weaver's close pals. Through 14 seasons, the two kept up a spirited debate. Weaver thought Palmer a selfish hypochondriac. Palmer considered Weaver an egocentric fussbudget.

"I'm kinda glad we didn't change personnel. So now this season is going to be a laboratory test case of some new ideas," the pitcher said. "Nobody knows if Earl Weaver made us better than we were, or worse. We won 94 games last year, but would we have won 105 with some other manager, or 85? I don't know. Earl doesn't know either. We're all interested in finding out."

As of Friday, the Orioles are faring quite well, thank you.

And, mind you, the Oriole pitching has been besieged with injury. Palmer went eight weeks without a start, complaining of a bad back, came back for a few innings and threw another rod. Appendicitis felled Tippy Martinez. Mike Flanagan sprung a knee in a fielding mishap. Dennis Martinez wanders around in some sort of weird daze. And yet Baltimore has not only survived, but has improved over last season under Little Lord Highdome.

The key word, as you already have guessed, is Organization. The Orioles traded Doug DeCinces because he was so hot to get to the West Coast. But ordinarily, they change about as often as Barry Goldwater.

Football honors five greats

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Longtime coaching great Sid Gillman and former players Sonny Jurgensen, Bobby Mitchell, Bobby Bell and Paul Warfield comprised the Class of '83 inducted Saturday into the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Gillman called it his "greatest thrill," while Jurgensen was called the game's greatest quarterback. Mitchell was overcome by emotion, and Bell said he would treasure the moment forever. Warfield said it was a humbling experience.

"I have been blessed to have the stamina to coach 50 years," said Gillman, 71, who had 123 winners and guided six teams in the AFL and National Football League championship games.

"This has been fun for over the last 50 years, but now this. This is the greatest thrill, the greatest honor any football person could achieve," he said.

Joe Madro, assistant coach of the Los Angeles Raiders and Gillman's presenter, called Gillman the catalyst that gave the old American Football League class and credibility.

"Perhaps he is the finest passing coach ever," Madro said of Gillman, the only one of 119 enshrinees whose career bridged the AFL, NFL and the new United States Football League. Gillman was named general manager of the Oklahoma Outlaws, which enters the USFL next season as an expansion team.

Mitchell, 48, former running back and wide receiver for the Cleveland Browns and Washington Redskins, was overcome by emotion as he gave his acceptance speech.

"As you go through life and in this game, you go no where without family," said Mitchell, barely able to finish his sentence.

He paused for several seconds before regaining his composure in the ceremonies on the shrine's front steps, watched by several thousand fans in 90-degree weather.

Mitchell especially praised his wife, saying, "I had the glory. She had the strength. She's been a great partner."

Washington Redskins owner Edward Bennett Williams, who presented both Mitchell and Jurgensen, said of Mitchell, "He combined all of the skills like no one ever has."

Mitchell scored 91 career touchdowns and still ranks third in all-time NFL yardage with 14,078 all-purpose yards.

Williams called Jurgensen the greatest NFL quarterback of all time.

Jurgensen still holds the NFL record, with five seasons of 3,000 or more yards. He also threw for 255 touchdowns and had 25 games of 300 passing yards in his 18-year pro career. The first seven were spent with the Philadelphia Eagles and the last 11 with the Redskins.

"The quarterbacks get all the credit for victories and the blame for losses," said Jurgensen.

Warfield,

RHCC Blowout hits final round

The team of Adams, Adams, Peden and Turnbo blistered the Ranchland Hills Country Club course with a second-round 60 to take charge of the Championship Flight going into today's final round of the Blowout Tournament.

The team's amazing middle round gave them a two-day total of 122 and put them two shots ahead of the team of Hicks, Hicks, Huckabee and Snyder.

Five shots off the pace at 127 is the foursome of Bettis, Bettis, Woolard and Youngs. All three teams had been part of a four-way tie for first after the initial round of play Friday along with the team of Hull, Hull, Rowland and Upham. That team fell eight shots off the lead with a second-round 68 that wasn't enough to keep up with the fast-paced Adams team.

Elsewhere, only two teams in the remaining seven flights were able to hang on to the lead. In the third flight, the team of Johnson, Womack, Ranson and Lucius carded a 65 to go with their opening-round 68 and stayed tied for first with Hollis, Clark, Thornton and Morgan at 133.

In the fourth flight, Jenkins, Jenkins, Townzen and Roye stayed tied for first after the team of McGee, Talley, Hall and Metts evened up with a 69 for a 13 total.

In the fifth flight, where all seven teams were tied at 72 after day one, the Team of Hudgens, Pickering, Fisher and Clark turned in a 70 to take a one-stroke lead going into today's closing round.

Leaders by flight are as follows:

CHAMPIONSHIP FLIGHT: Adams, Adams, Peden, Turnbo - 122; Hicks, Hicks, Huckabee, Snyder - 124; Bettis, Bettis, Woolard, Youngs; Whiteside, Cromwell, Geiselman, Sledge - tied at 127.

FIRST FLIGHT: Winborn, Parker, Lackey, Rose - 129; Mays, Lindgrin, Griffin, Boudreaux - 131; Hall, Whatley, Heith, Arrick - 132.

SECOND FLIGHT: Watkins, Deweese, Woodfin, Jones - 131; Roan, Roan, Scott, Smith - 136; McDaniel, Carey, Franklin, Redden - 137.

THIRD FLIGHT: Hollis, Clark, Thornton, Morgan; Johnson, Womack, Ranson, Lucius - tied at 133; Thomas, Langford, Harless, Melzer - 136; Donaldson, Crenshaw, Boren, Kidd; Atyia, Wright, Riek, Bybee - tied at 138.

FOURTH FLIGHT: McGee, Talley, Hall, Metts; Jenkins, Jenkins, Townzen, Roye - tied at 139; Singleton, Motley, Motter, Renner; Bell, Bell, Clauss, Stickney - tied at 141; Varner, McKoy, McDaniel, Bigbie - 142.

FIFTH FLIGHT: Hudgens, Pickering, Clark, Fisher - 142; Wilson, McClatchey, Lyons, Watson - 143; McWilliams, Lowery, Logan, Goode; Hunnicut, Barnett, Tabb, Rogers - tied at 144.

SIXTH FLIGHT: Armour, Smith, Deallet, Skillern - 144; Beard, Franklin, Morgan, Clarke - 145; Estep, Pepper, Newman, Casey; Doan, Wilson, Scoggins, Green - tied at 146.

SEVENTH FLIGHT: Adkins, Smith, Garber, Allen; McClatchey, Dean, Wright, Nolan - tied at 147; Irons, Everett, Paulzer, Ely; Glasse, Witten, McBride, Holder - tied at 149; Wilkerson, Thomlinson, Countryman, Williamson - 151.

Fuzzy Zoeller had a hot driver Friday in the Canadian Open, but it deserted him Saturday as he lost the lead.

Andretti keeps pole; VDS qualifies fourth

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. (AP) — Mario Andretti, continuing to make gains with his balky but fast Lola T-700 racer, lowered his time Saturday and nailed down the pole position for the Provimi Veal 200 Indy-car race at Road America.

Andretti, who took the provisional pole in Friday's time trials, came back out Saturday in the first of two additional qualifying sessions and held off determined bids for the pole by Italian Indy-car rookie Teo Fabi and Bobby Rahal.

John Paul Jr., another Indy-car rookie who is driving for Midland's VDS Racing and won his first open-wheel race two weeks ago at Michigan, qualified a Penske PC-10 fourth at 1:59.699, 120.302.

Andretti drove his Cosworth-powered Lola, which was clocked Friday at 1:58.912, or 121.098 mph, to a fast lap of 1:58.898, 121.112, around the 4-mile, 14-turn course.

Neither Rahal nor Fabi, who turned in a fast circuit of 1:58.903, 121.107 before the engine in his March-Cosworth gave way, was able to knock Andretti off his perch in the 90-minute morning session.

Fabi, who already has won three pole positions this season, was unable to make a run at Andretti in the 75-minute afternoon qualifying round because his team still was installing a new engine. And an errant valve spring in Andretti's engine made the few laps he ran in the later session unmemorable.

That left it up to Rahal and his Cosworth-powered March. But last year's CART-PPG Indy-Car World Series Rookie of the Year was unable to overtake Andretti and Fabi, improving his time only enough to move from fourth after the morning session to third. He was clocked at 1:59.114, 120.893.

"I knew Teo wasn't going to be out there in the afternoon, but it was still tough having the problems with the car and knowing Rahal and a couple of other guys were coming after us and and I couldn't be out there defending myself," said Andretti, who also won the pole for the July 4 Budweiser Cleveland 500 road race.

The former Formula One world champion readily admitted that his road racing experience all over the world stands him in good stead at the Indy-car road circuits.

"Experience is experience," the 42-year-old driver said. "It's always to the good and I'd rather have it than not."

The Indy-cars ran at Road America, the scenic layout in the hills of central Wisconsin, for the first time last fall. Andretti, who has not won an Indy-car event since September of 1980, started fourth, moved into a big lead early but retired after 29 laps when his transmission broke.

"Last year, I was halfway in trouble in qualifying," he explained. "In the race, we found the right setup and I just ran off and hid. I was doing it easy. This time, we're better in qualifying and now I've got to get to the end (of the race)."

Four teams red hot in women's state meet

The Alcorn Ruffnecks of Victoria, the Lubbock A's, Ricardo's of San Angelo and Anchor Engine of Baytown were the only undefeated teams left late Saturday night in the Women's Class A State Softball Tournament at Hogan Park.

Midland's Western Transmission was still alive, but in the loser's bracket before Saturday night's play ended.

Alcorn had an 8-7 win over El Paso Wildfire to remain unbeaten while the Lubbock A's got past Odessa's Superior Engine, 4-0. In other key games Saturday night, Ricardo's beat the Black Angels of Kountze and Anchor Engine of Baytown beat the Diamondbacks of San Marcos, 6-5. The Diamondbacks were one of the tourney favorites, but are now in the loser's bracket.

Two Midland teams were eliminated early Saturday when the Zodiacs lost a second game to Western Transmission and the Misfits were eliminated by KPRO of Abilene.

Teams still alive late Saturday in the loser's bracket were Wild Fire, KPRO, Superior Engine, Western Transmission, Black Angels, Nick's Chicks of Amarillo, Diamondbacks and Texas Blue of Wichita Falls.

Action begins again today at 9 a.m. with finals set for 1 p.m. A 2 p.m. game will be played if necessary.

White's arm is on target

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Danny White completed five of seven passes in brief action for 138 yards and one touchdown, a 70-yard scoring pass to Tony Hill on the first play of the Cowboys intra-squad scrimmage Saturday.

Gary Hogeboom, who is trying to challenge White for the starting quarterback job, completed 11 of 15 passes for 172 yards and one touchdown, an 10-yard toss to Robert Newhouse.

Glenn Carano, working with a mostly rookie offense, completed four of nine for 74 yards and one interception by Ron Fellows.

"Offensively, we started out sharp," said Head Coach Tom Landry, "but then we slacked off. Our passing game looked good. Defensively, we didn't do as well as I had hoped."

Hill led all receivers with three receptions for 107 yards, while Butch Johnson caught three for 87.

Long shot Landrum back in lead

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Ralph Landrum, a rookie and admitted long shot, bounced back with a 4-under-par 67 and took a one-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $425,000 Canadian Open Golf Championship.

Landrum, playing in his first tournament as a full-fledged member of the PGA Tour, scattered seven birdies across his card as he rebounded from a 75 in Friday's second round.

The 25-year-old club pro from Florence, Ky., completed three trips over the 7,060-yard Glen Abbey Golf Club course in suburban Toronto in 207, six under par.

"I know I'm a long shot, not supposed to win the golf tournament," said Landrum, who won his tour playing rights by surpassing the money-winning minimum standard in the last month.

"But that does two things for you. The crowd gets behind you. They like a long shot. I never had people rooting for me like that.

"And, when somebody tells you that you can't do something, that you aren't capable of doing something, well, it kind of spurs you on."

Tom Purtzer, an experienced player with one tour title and four consecutive years as a $100,000 winner, was one shot back after a 70.

Defending champion Bruce Lietzke, a two-time winner on this course, and John Cook were another stroke behind at 209. Lietzke had a 70 that included 17 consecutive pars and a birdie on the 18th hole. Cook also had a 70.

Fuzzy Zoeller, the second-round leader, struggled to an erratic 74 and dropped back to 210, three off the pace. He was tied with Johnny Miller, Frank Conner and two Australian natives now living in the United States, Greg Norman and David Graham. Graham made an eagle-3 on the 18th hole for a 71. Norman shot 70, while Conner and Miller each had a 67 in the muggy weather.

Jack Nicklaus, who has won almost everything the game can offer but has yet to take this national title, dropped an 18-20 foot eagle putt on the 18th hole for a 70 that left him at 211.

Landrum, who made several unsuccessful attempts at the PGA Tour school, tied for eighth in the U.S. Open and was fifth last week in the Anheuser-Busch Classic in Williamsburg, Va., in which he won $13,300. That gave him more than $31,000 for the year and entitled him to his playing rights.

His first round as a card-carrying member of the tour was a 65, which gave him a share of the 18-hole lead here. But he blew 10 shots higher in the second round, then came back again with an effort that included six 3s on the front side, and a double bogey that failed to discourage him.

He bogeyed the first hole from a bunker, but got the shot back making a 15-foot putt on the second. He hit a 5-iron to within eight feet and made the putt on he fourth, 2-putted for birdie-4 on the next and lashed a second shot through tree limbs to within a foot of the hole on the fifth.

"When it's going good, it goes good," he said.

He also birdied the eighth, hitting a 5-iron shot to within four feet of the flag.

Landrum made double bogey on the 11th, where he caught the lip of a trap and took four to reach the green, but responded with birdies on the 13th and 15th.

All-Star break marks time for Ranger swoon

The dog days are supposed to be the time in late summer when it is the hottest and most strength-sapping.

However, anyone who follows the Texas Rangers baseball club knows it means it's time for the Rangers to do their thing. Typically, that means losing with such regularity that any hope for a decent season is shot.

If you've been treating yourself to the little masochism of watching the Rangers, you may have noted that Doug Rader's boys are right on schedule.

I'D LIKE to see a composite Ranger record for the first 50 games after the All-Star game. In any season that Texas has been in the race at any time, they usually begin their swoon immediately following the All-Star game. This year the Rangers have been true to form. You could set your watch by them - "Oh my, the Rangers have lost 10 of 13, and they were in first place...it must be close to August 1".

In seasons where Texas hasn't been in the race, then they just lose all the time, instead of just after the break.

It gets frustrating. I'm mad too, Eddie, but then again I don't have several million at stake. Although I may have a few hundred involved over the span of many seasons.

I've been asked if I had ever seen any minor league baseball prior to coming to Midland. The Cubs, of course, wear that brand. "No," I reply, "unless you count the Rangers."

THE CUBS remind me of the Rangers. They seem to do just enough to pique your interest. Midland started the second half of the Texas League season in first place after a good road trip and a 9-4 start. Then the Cubs started losing. They haven't stopped. Midland has since dropped 18 of 23 and has fallen into the cellar. Hmmm...better make that a dungeon.

The Rangers are the same way. They could play against the newspaper's softball team and get blown out. Well, maybe not blown out, but at least a good scare.

Texas will finish the season anywhere but first. The Rangers just don't have enough class to go to the top and stay there, but at least they are on the right track. However, they have been on the right track before and found ways to foul things up. For example, when Ranger management hired Billy Martin they went from the outhouse to the penthouse. Martin guided Texas to a second place finish in 1974 behind the world champion Oakland A's, Texas' best finish. Martin was canned the next year.

Before that, Ranger management fired Whitey Herzog to make room for Martin.

A couple of years after Texas fired Martin, his New York Yankees won the World Series. The Yanks had to beat West champ Kansas City to get there. The Royals were managed by Herzog.

Last year Herzog managed the St. Louis Cardinals to a Series victory.

Fortunately, Pat Corrales got canned just last week, or the Philadelphia Phillies might have gotten their house in order in time to make another fool out of Ranger management.

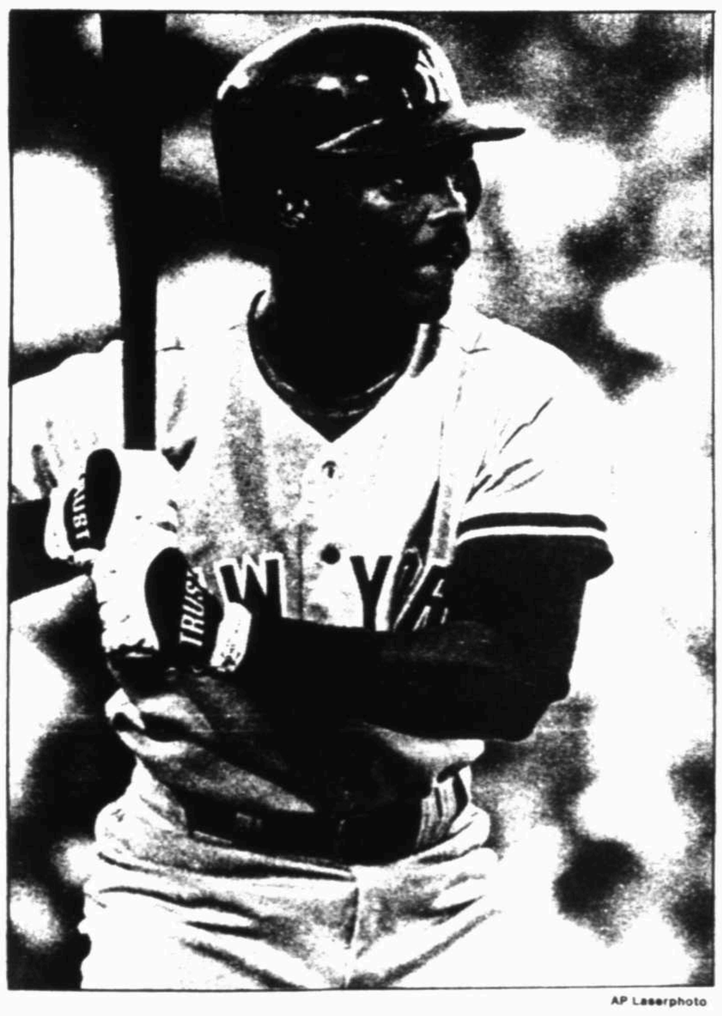

TEXAS HAS gone through 12 managers since coming to Arlington in 1972, including one, Eddy Stanky, who only lasted a day.

Some people, those wiseguys, think Stanky was the smartest of the Texas skippers.

In any event, look for Texas to continue stumbling long enough for California to win about five straight. The Rangers, meanwhile, have two alternatives ready. Plan A is to keep playing the same way until September. Lose about 40 games, and then be the hottest team in the American League once the pressure is off.

Plan B calls for a sudden awakening, and playing .500 ball or better. Of course, Kansas City, Chicago and the Angels will play at .650 or better.

The Texas Strangers...no place but Texas.

Andre Robertson, a former University of Texas baseball standout, now wears the Yankee uniform as he hits the major leagues.

Texan tries to crack the Big Apple

Andre Robertson puts Longhorn punch on the Yankees

By SCOTT McCARTNEY
Associated Press Writer

"If you can make it here, you can make it anywhere. It's up to you, New York, New York!"
—Liza Minelli

ARLINGTON, Texas — If Andre Robertson can make it in New York, as Liza Minelli would say, he can probably make it anywhere.

The former University of Texas standout from Orange is in the Big Apple and turning heads — becoming a defensive standout for the New York Yankees and a reliable hitter in his first full major league season.

ROBERTSON HAS clawed his way to a .266 batting average — about the same as teammate Graig Nettles — and is regularly a part of manager Billy Martin's lineup.

Phase One of his professional career is complete.

"I'm very happy because I'm playing in the major leagues," said Robertson, in town for the Yankees series with the Rangers.

"I accomplished what I wanted."

Robertson, soft-spoken, 25, and only 5-foot-10 and 160 pounds, is a man who continually sets goals for himself and achieves them.

He was the first black to play Little League baseball in his Southeast Texas hometown and in 1977 became the first black to win a baseball scholarship to the University of Texas.

He played baseball, football, basketball and track at West Orange High School. But at age seven, he decided major league baseball was where he belonged.

"I was watching a game on TV and decided that I wanted to play baseball in the majors. So my father got me into Little League and I went from there," said Robertson, who as a youngster was a fan of Willie Mays and the San Francisco Giants.

THERE WILL be new goals — but not until the end of the season.

"I don't have any goals yet. I can't set any goals until this year is over. I have to play a whole year to see what I'm capable of," Robertson said.

At Texas, Robertson played three years as a second baseman — not shortstop. During his junior year — his last year at UT — he had 48 hits in 58 games, 34 runs batted in and a .267 average.

"They already had a shortstop so for me to play at Texas I had to play at second base," he said.

He was drafted by Toronto in 1979 and was sold to the Yankees in the next off-season. In 1980 — his second pro season — he progressed from A ball to AA and finally to AAA with the New York organization. One year later, he was named an International League All-Star and played 10 games for the Yankees after Bucky Dent tore a hand ligament.

But 1982 was a tough year for Robertson, starting with the Columbus, Ohio, AAA farm club, being called to New York, sent back to Columbus and then recalled to the big leagues in August. His totals were not impressive: .203 for Columbus and .220 for the Yankees.

He blames the uncertainty of the situation for his poor showing at the plate.

This year, Robertson's role with the Yankees is certain, and he says he has never had more fun.

"I feel very comfortable. I like playing for Billy because he keeps me in the lineup. That was my goal," he said.

HE ALSO feels comfortable with the pressures of playing baseball in New York alongside George Steinbrenner's collection of big-salary, big-ego players.

"I don't worry about pressure," Robertson said. "I was in the minor league system and there was plenty of pressure there. It was almost the same thing.

"I didn't really know about the tradition of the Yankees and I wasn't really awed playing in New York," he said. "I grew up in Orange, Texas, and I didn't even hear about the New York Yankees until I was in college."

Robertson said his relatively low Yankee salary — about $45,000 — doesn't bother him at all.

"That's not a problem for me. It's my first year and I'm not going to be making a million dollars, or even $100,000," he said. "I can't say anything about being underpaid. And for a single guy like me, I'm making a lot of money."

Robertson is living in New Jersey during the season and will return to Orange in the off-season. This winter ,will be something special — a time to rethink career goals and savor some initial accomplishments.

"Playing my whole career here (New York) would be fine. It really doesn't matter where I play. All I want to do is play in the majors," he said. "Right now, I really have no idea about tomorrow."

Baseball shrine to honor four

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Twice before, Brooks Robinson has been here.

"I played in two Hall of Fame games," he recalled, "but we just flew in and flew out both times."

This weekend, the man many consider the greatest third baseman of all time returns to this baseball shrine, this time to stay.

Robinson will receive the highest tribute to his 23-year career with the Baltimore Orioles today when he, along with Juan Marichal, Walter Alston and George Kell, is inducted into the Hall of Fame.

"It's really hard to comprehend," Robinson said. "I'm just going to let it all sink in.

"I've talked to some players who have been through it before, and they all say it's an unbelievable feeling. Being inducted into the Hall of Fame is, well, it means immortality."

On Monday, the Orioles will play the St. Louis Cardinals in the annual exhibition game at cozy Doubleday Field.

Allen new man in new uniform

ST. LOUIS (AP) — It all began, Neil Allen said, the day he arrived at the New York Mets' training camp last spring.

"They were talking about what an improved club they should have," he recalled. "It was always, 'If Neil Allen does this, if Neil Allen does that.' I guess the pressure just built up."

The hard-throwing right-hander had trouble living up to the image of the Mets' bullpen ace, and he nearly cracked during the first two months of the season.

Things are different now. He's a starter for the St. Louis Cardinals, defending World Series champions, and last week was honored as the National League pitcher of the week. No longer does he feel the pressure of trying to lift New York out of the cellar in the National League East.

"What day is this?" Allen asked last week after pitching his second straight shutout for St. Louis, a six-hitter in 96-degree heat."Let's see, it's July 24. I don't want to belittle the Mets, but by July 24 you don't even look at the papers. We'd be at least 10 games behind."

Allen said he felt both elation and a sense of challenge when told June 15 he had been traded to the Cards along with Rick Ownbey in exchange for first baseman Keith Hernandez.

"I can talk until I'm blue in the face about the trade, but I won't," he said. "What it did was give me a new start. Not many guys in this game get the chance."

While with New York this spring, Allen traveled a path toward oblivion.

His control was not what it had been during three years as the stopper in the Mets' bullpen. Neither was life off the field. It led him to a scrape in a nightclub outside St. Louis. Soon afterward, Allen said he was having problems with alcohol.

"What it was was a conversation I had with a New York writer one day after I'd had it rough," said Allen."I told him I was going to get drunk. I told him I might stay drunk for 10 days. I told him I was an alcoholic and that I needed help. It was wrong, but I was unhappy."

A doctor who examined Allen request said the pitcher was not an alcholic, but had turned to drink because of depression.

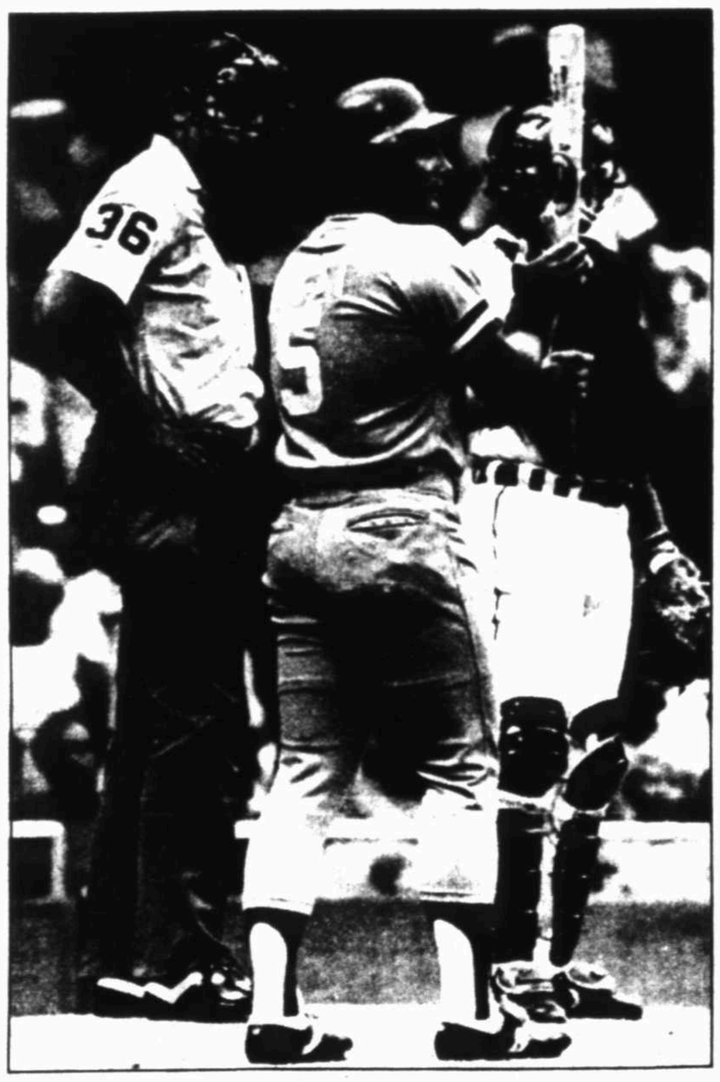

The Mets gave him four starting assignments in an attempt to put him back on track. One of them was a six-hit shutout May 20 against the Los Angeles Dodgers, the same club he blanked last week for St. Louis.

But soon the 25-year-old was shuttling between bullpen and starting rotation, and on June 15 — with his record 2-7 — came the trade.

St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog picked up quickly on Allen's success as a starter, however, and has not used Allen out of the bullpen. And the player who defies superstition by wearing No. 13 has responded beyond expectation.

"When it came right down to it, I had to go out and show the people what I could do," Allen said. "The only way you do that is with confidence. If you don't have confidence, you can't pitch in the major leagues. It's amazing, really. It's a whole different outlook. Maybe I had to hit bottom before I could come back up."

In his first eight St. Louis starts, Allen compiled a 5-1 record and 2.02 earned run average in 58 innings with three complete games.

George Brett was reunited with his famous pine tar bat Saturday in game against Detroit, but there was no homer in the bat this time as Brett went 0-for-3 at the plate.

Brett is reunited with bat

DETROIT (AP) — George Brett was reunited with his famous pine-tar bat Saturday, just in time for the Kansas City Royals' game with the Detroit Tigers, but he went 0-for-3.

Brett fouled out to Tiger catcher John Wockenfuss in the first inning. He later flied out, was walked intentionally and flied out again.

The bat, the centerpiece of one of baseball's liveliest controversies, was delivered to Tiger Stadium about two hours before the start of of the 2:15 p.m. EDT game, said Nancy Beliger, a service agent at Emery Air Freight's Detroit-area office. It was packed in a cardboard tube and shipped to Detroit Friday, after spending the week in the New York City headquarters of the American League.

"It got a little special handling and some tender loving care," Beliger said.

The bat, an ordinary-looking Louisville Slugger, is the one Brett used to hit the controversial two-run home run at Yankee Stadium last Sunday — and then was called out because the bat had too much pine tar on it.

The Royals protested and, after studying the bat and various reports, American League President Lee MacPhail reinstated the homer even though the bat had too much pine tar on it. Baseball rules say the coating cannot exceed 18 inches.

The ruling turned a 4-3 Yankee victory into a suspended contest with the Royals leading 5-4 in the ninth inning.

Garvey streak finally falls

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A dislocated left thumb, which will sideline him at least three weeks, spelled the end of the consecutive-game streak Steve Garvey had nurtured for nearly eight years.

It left him with a "hollow feeling," he said, more for his San Diego Padre teammates than for himself.

"It's depressing knowing that I can't help this team just when we're trying to make our run," he said after his National League record consecutive-game playing streak ended at 1,207 Friday night in the first game of a doubleheader.

Garvey, 34, sustained the injury in the first inning when he attempted to score from third on a wild pitch by the Atlanta Braves' Pascual Perez. He was easily tagged out as he tried to beat the throw from catcher Bruce Benedict to Perez, who was covering the plate.

The last time the first baseman missed a game (he had the flu) was Sept. 2, 1975, while he was with the Los Angeles Dodgers. He ranks third on the all-time consecutive-game playing list behind Lou Gehrig with 2,130 and Everett Scott with 1,307.

"The record (Gehrig's) is not really that important to me," he said. "It's a very hollow feeling to know that I can't contribute (to the team)."

Garvey, who starred for the Dodgers for 12 years before signing with San Diego as a free agent last December, has the thumb immobilized in an elbow-length cast.

Dr. Paul Hirshman, an orthopedic surgeon at the Scripps Clinic in La Jolla, said Garvey will be sidelined for at least three weeks. Doctors were waiting for the swelling to subside before deciding if surgery was needed.

"It's just one of those things," he said. "We were both the same, played hard and every day. We were lucky (not to get serious injuries during the streak.)

Even without baseball, Fidrych is still 'The Bird'

NORTHBORO, Mass. (AP) — At 21, Mark Fidrych was "The Bird," a happy-go-lucky kid in a Harpo Marx hairdo who talked to baseballs and manicured the pitching mound on his hands and knees.

At 28, with efforts to rehabilitate his ravaged right arm and return to the majors ended in retirement, he's come home to this small town 40 miles west of Boston, still crazy — but lovably so — after all these years.

"It's amazing," said Bob Woolf, Fidrych's attorney. "He came out of nowhere and he's back to nowhere, and he's still happy."

IN THE month since Fidrych announced he was leaving the Class AAA Pawtucket Red Sox to return to his tumbledown Bluewater Ranch, the free spirit has:

— Climbed a 70-foot tree and felled it from the top down.

— Fed lobster and beer to "Big Daddy," a 700-pound boar, and cleaned up after him.

— Wondered aloud whether his future income might come from television commercials, odd jobs such as house painting, or growing Christmas trees on his 100-acre spread.

There also is the chance of a return to baseball — a remote chance at best, even The Bird concedes. If a team offered him a regular starting job on its top farm club, Fidrych said, "I might say OK ... But if someone would, they probably would have done that already."

The Bluewater Ranch is well suited to Fidrych. He seems at ease here with his pigs, cows and geese. And like its owner, the farm's name evokes thoughts of something greater than it is now.

IT IS overgrown and needs repair. Fidrych is good when it comes to fixing things, whether it's a hole in the mound, a pain in his arm or paint peeling off his garage.

But the echoes of headier times and the images of the comeback that could have been still bounce around in the one-of-a-kind mind beneath the reddish ringlets.

"If I just sat around and literally did not do anything, then it would get to me," said Fidrych, sitting beneath a weeping willow outside his five-car garage and workshop. "Well, here I go and scrape paint off the garage and get my frustrations out that way."

In 1976, Fidrych was a rookie with the Detroit Tigers who suddenly gained baseball's center stage. He had a 19-9 record, led the American League in earned run average (2.34), complete games (24) and crowd-pleasing exuberance, and was named AL rookie of the year.

HIS CAREER rapidly unraveled. In the next four seasons, he pitched in a total of just 27 games. His ERA exploded to 10.20 in 1979, and the following year was his last in the major leagues.

Last June 29, Fidrych, after battling back from a knee injury and arm troubles, left baseball. His parting numbers: A 2-5 record, 9.68 ERA and nearly two hits and one walk per inning with Pawtucket.

"What the heck. It's definitely a different life."

Democratic presidential candidates unite in criticizing Reagan's education policies

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Rivals for the Democratic presidential nomination united Saturday in describing President Reagan as anti-education and chastising him for failing to heed many of the recommendations of his own commission on the nation's schools.

Appearing at a forum on education sponsored by Democratic governors, former Vice President Walter F. Mondale maintained the Republican president was leading "one of the most anti-education administrations in American history."

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina said of Reagan, "All he does is run and find fault."

He also said Reagan was "frustrating the very report he produced," referring to the commission that Reagan appointed to examine American education.

Gov. Scott Matheson of Utah, a Democrat who also is chairman of the National Governors Association, asked the presidential candidates if they thought Reagan with his recent statements calling for upgrading education was taking that issue away from the Democrats.

Former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida said, "I believe he's helping us. He has literally helped to raise this as an issue."

Hollings said that on the education issue, Reagan "doesn't have an credibility whatsoever." That view echoed by Mondale and Askew.

Appearing at the forum with Mondale, Hollings and Askew was a fourth candidate for the Democratic nomination, Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado.

In describing their own plans for improving education, the four candidates all advocated greater expenditures by the federal government.

Hollings proposed spending $14 billion to raise the salaries of teachers in order to "pay them as professionals."

The South Carolina senator said the money could easily come from canceling Reagan's plans to spend $30 billion for the MX missile or $40 billion for the B-1 bomber.

"Surely, the children of America are worth at least one weapons system," he said.

Askew criticized proposals to institute merit pay for teachers, which Reagan has recommended, saying they were not "a substitute for a competitive pay system."

However, the former Florida governor cautioned the Democratic governors that "you better be realistic" in calling for greater spending by the federal governmet.

Hart outlined a series of proposals introduced in Congress including the American Defense Education Act that would commit the federal government to aiding local school districts to raise teachers' salaries and provide additional training, particularly in science, math and foreign languages.

Mondale advocated an $11 billion program to upgrade teachers' salaries and training and to assure that all young people would receive a secondary education regardless of how poor their parents were.

Education will be a major topic at the three-day annual meeting of the National Govenors Association, which begins Sunday. Among the speakers will be Vice President George Bush and Education Secretary T.H. Bell.

Pancoast to stand trial for murder of Morgan

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — After hearing from two Los Angeles police officers who testified that Marvin Pancoast confessed to killing Vicki Morgan, a Municipal Court judge today decided Pancoast must stand trial for the murder of the ex-mistress of the late department store heir and presidential confidant Alfred Bloomingdale.

Judge James Satt, who yesterday excluded the press from hearing testimony concerning alleged confessions made by Pancoast, today allowed reporters to hear the testimony as read from court records.

"I did it, I did it. I killed Vicki, I hit her with a baseball bat," detective William Welch testified Pancoast told him at the police station.

Officer Keith Wong, who was the desk officer at the North Hollywood station where the 33-year-old Pancoast turned himself in, gave testimony of a separate Pancoast confession.

"I asked Mr. Pancoast if I could help him....He said that he had just killed someone," Wong testified.

"He kept saying he killed her with a baseball bat and that she was lying on the bed in the upstairs bedroom," Wong said, adding that Pancoast advised officers to beware of Morgan's Doberman pinscher, which officers found lying peacefully beside the body.

Welch said that after Pancoast told officers of the murder he was detained at the station while investigators went to the condominium Pancoast shared with Morgan. There they found the body of the 31-year-old ex-model who had been clubbed to death in bed.

Pancoast's attorney Arthur Barens asserted there is no physical evidence linking his client to the murder.

"I think we should look at the evidence in this case rather than a statement by a man with a long history of mental health problems," Barens said.

Barens noted that at this point there is no murder weapon submitted in the case — the prosecution has removed as evidence the bat Pancoast allegedly used and is having further scientific testing conducted on the bat. No finger prints have been found on the bat, Welch said.

The Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, president of PUSH, John Thompson, center, head of Southland Corp. of Dallas, Tex., and Mario Obledo, right, president of the League of United Latin American Citizens join hands to sing in Atlanta Saturday. The ceremony came at the conclusion of the PUSH convention where they signed a fair trade agreement estimated by PUSH to be worth $500 million upon full implementation.

Southland signs agreement with black, hispanic groups

ATLANTA (AP) — The president of Southland Corp. signed a trade agreement Saturday with black and Hispanic groups, pledging a five-year commitment to raise the level of minority participation in the corporation to 23 percent.

One of the signers, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, president of Operation PUSH, called it a $600 million commitment by Southland to the black and Hispanic communities of the United States.

Announcement of the agreement came as Jackson's Chicago-based People United to Serve Humanity concluded its 12th annual convention, a week-long affair dominated by talk of Jackson's possible bid for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Calling the trade agreement with Southland "historic," Jackson said delegates to the PUSH convention resolved to expand their efforts to achieve similar agreements with other corporations who do substantial business in the black and Hispanic communities.

The Dallas-based company operates the 7-Eleven convenience store chain nationwide.

The agreement also was signed by John P. Thompson, chairman of Southland; Mario Obledo, president of the League of United Latin American Citizens; and Tony Bonilla, chairman of the National Hispanic Leadership Conference.

Bonilla said the agreement is the "first major initiative undertaken by the Hispanic community to become partners with corporate America.

The agreement calls for blacks, Hispanics and other minorities to represent 23 percent of Southland's workforce by the end of 1988, with that percentage goal also applying specifically to the job categories of officials and managers, professionals, technicians, sales workers and office and clerical workers.

Southland also pledged to expand its college intern program to include at least 23 percent blacks, Hispanics and other minorities and to provide $711,000 to establish a tuition scholarship program for minority college students.

In addition, Southland agreed to use minority vendors for 23 percent of its outside purchases and to increase its usage of minority companies in the areas of accounting, advertising, banking, insurance, legal services and real estate.

Woman vies for Mississippi votes

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Former Lt. Gov. Evelyn Gandy will test her new image against four Democratic primary rivals Tuesday in a second bid to become Mississippi's first woman governor.

Miss Gandy, 62, a veteran state official who lost a runoff to Gov. William Winter four years ago, adopted a more aggressive approach for this race, underscoring a shift from her gracious Southern lady image by talking about toughness and her 35 years of government experience.

However, she has sought to retain her traditional appeal by expressing concern for the elderly, disabled and disadvantaged.

Her opponents are Attorney General Bill Allain, who has run a consumer-oriented campaign; millionaire farmer-businessman Mike Sturdivant of Glendora, who has stressed education and economic development; state Rep. Lonnie Johnson of Pearl, who ran an anti-tax campaign; and farmer Billy M. Davis of Laurel, who has talked mostly of national economics.

Unless one candidate gets a majority in the primary, the two top vote-getters will enter a runoff on Aug. 23. The winner will meet Leon Bramlett, a Clarksdale farmer-businessman who is unopposed for the Republican nomination, in the November general election.

Secretary of State Ed Pittman's office forecast a turnout of 690,000, which would be less than half the estimated 1.5 million registered statewide. It would compare with the 737,131 who voted in the primary four years ago.

Voters also cast ballots on state and county races from governor to constable, except in about a dozen counties where contests for supervisor and constable were postponed by federal judges because redistricting plans were not approved in time.

New city election districts causing political confusion

BOSTON (AP) — Political confusion is unfolding over new city election districts in Boston, the birthplace of gerrymandering where blacks and Hispanics are challenging the old Irish and Italian political orders.

New districts for school committee and city council seats were thrown out last week — just two months before a scheduled election — by a federal judge who said they were unconstitutional because they didn't have similar population sizes.

"I was surprised along with everyone else," said Terrence McDermott, the city councilor who drew the districts. "I don't resent his decision, but I resent his timing."

One city council candidate, David Scondras from the Back Bay-Fenway area, said he sympathized with the minority plaintiffs who filed suit, but the ruling is a blow to his campaign.

"I think I'm a candidate. Maybe I'm not a candidate — I have to reapply," he said, adding that he now isn't sure who his constituents are or will be.

On Tuesday, 10 months after the suit was filed, U.S. District Judge Andrew Caffrey said the the differences in the districts' sizes violated the U.S. Supreme Court's "one-man, one-vote" principle.

McDermott has begun drawing a new political map. The city is seeking a stay of Caffrey's decision and may ask the Legislature to postpone the election.

A new map could be drawn "in a couple of weeks," McDermott said. "I don't think it has to be radically changed."

But lawyer Alan Rom, representing the minority plaintiffs, said a prompt solution is possible, but not likely, because two issues are involved in the case.

One is the relatively simple question of numerical balance among voters in the districts, explained Rom, of the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights. The judge said the city council erred by using 1975 state census figures rather than the 1980 count, which tallied more minority residents in Boston.

Glenn says he won't make extra efforts for straw polls

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, said Saturday he would not spend extra campaign money or assign additional staff to compete in straw polls, which he called "not representative."

However, he added he would still be a candidate in straw polls because he couldn't help it.

"It is not possible to withdraw from straw polls and, even if it were possible, I woud not want to take that action since it could discourage my supporters in states where such polls are held," he said.

Glenn's comments, issued in a statement from his campaign organization, follow some successes in straw polls by Sen. Alan Cranston of California, a rival for the Democratic nomination.

Cranston, not unexpectedly, won a straw poll among California Democrats. However, he surprised many by also winning such a contest in Wisconsin.

After those two polls, another contender for the Democratic nomination, Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, said he would not take part at all in straw polls. Cranston has also said he would skip some polls this fall, particularly one in New Jersey, because he does not have the resources for every such contest.

In his statement, Glenn said the significance of straw polls has been exaggerated. "They are not representative of the attitudes of the Democratic electorate ... and they drain the resources of the candidates," he said.

USED CARS WITH PLENTY OF USE LEFT.

Today's late model used cars are a better buy than ever before. They are built better, they get better mileage, and even the exteriors and interiors stand up far longer. Most important, of course, is the price. There's much more value for the money in today's late model used car. BUT, because cars are being driven for a longer time by the original owner, it's more important than ever WHERE you buy a used car. Our reputation for offering good value for the money is your best assurance... buying your used car.

Shopper saves $138 on shopping trip

Text by Lisa Gerlock

Mrs. Culpepper and the store clerk check the coupons against the itemized grocery receipt. The process took almost 30 minutes.

Joy Culpepper spent an hour loading a grocery cart with $138 worth of toilet paper, potatoes, chicken, onions, diapers, dog food and other items. She paid the check-out clerk 20 cents for the items. Cash. On the spot.

It took the checkout clerk 25 minutes to count the cents-off coupons Mrs. Culpepper used for the items.

"It's especially fun when you see how much money you have saved," said Mrs. Culpepper, who began coupon-collecting nine months ago.

The total bill was $138.32. With the coupon deduction, the bill was $10.20. She handed the cashier $10 worth of manufacturer refund checks. She paid for the balance with one dime and 10 pennies.

Though her hobby of collecting coupons saves her money, the 20-cent trip is not a frequent occurrence. "I won't be able to do this again for another six or nine months," she commented.

The recent outing wasn't the biggest savings Mrs. Culpepper has had since she began her coupon hobby nine months ago. "I save an average of 10-30 percent on every trip to the grocery store," she said.

Since she began using coupons, she has saved $930 on her grocery bills.

"When you first start you save less because you haven't saved many (coupons) yet. But it rebounds."

Shopper saves $138 on shopping trip

Mrs. Culpepper and the store clerk check the coupons against the itemized grocery receipt. The process took almost 30 minutes.

Joy Culpepper spent an hour loading a grocery cart with $138 worth of toilet paper, potatoes, chicken, onions, diapers, dog food and other items. She paid the check-out clerk 20 cents for the items. Cash. On the spot.

It took the checkout clerk 25 minutes to count the cents-off coupons Mrs. Culpepper used for the items.

"It's especially fun when you see how much money you have saved," said Mrs. Culpepper, who began coupon-collecting nine months ago.

The total bill was $138.32. With the coupon deduction, the bill was $10.20. She handed the cashier $10 worth of manufacturer refund checks. She paid for the balance with one dime and 10 pennies.

Though her hobby of collecting coupons saves her money, the 20-cent trip is not a frequent occurrence. "I won't be able to do this again for another six or nine months," she commented.

The recent outing wasn't the biggest savings Mrs. Culpepper has had since she began her coupon hobby nine months ago. "I save an average of 10-30 percent on every trip to the grocery store," she said.

Since she began using coupons, she has saved $930 on her grocery bills.

"When you first start you save less because you haven't saved many (coupons) yet. But it rebounds."

Biggest cents-off coupons loss comes from 'abusers'

By LISA GERLOCK
Lifestyle Editor

While the economy is in a slump, companies which offer consumers a savings are doing a big business. At the same time, manufacturers and retailers are losing money to the "abusers" of the system.

More than 300 coupons for new products are offered by manufacturers each month.

Customers redeem the coupons at grocers when they purchase the product specified. From that point, the grocer returns the coupons to the manufacturer for his redemption. The grocer is paid the full amount of the coupon. In addition to the coupon, he is paid a fee for handling.

Last year, the Texas Retail Grocers Association handled more than $20 million worth of coupons from its members, according to Charles Knapp, executive director of TRGA. This figure, large as it is, doesn't include the many coupons processed by other clearing houses for the large grocery chains in Texas.

TRGA processes the coupons to a coupon clearing house where the coupons are then counted, sorted and sent back to the manufacturer.

While the coupon industry is complex, it has taken its bumps and bruises during its growing process.

Illegitimate coupons cost manufacturers millions of dollars each year. "Cheating" and "clipping," coupons cost everyone money down the line. "Cheating" involves using expired coupons; using one for a product other than specified; using one to purchase quantities or sizes other than specified; or "clipping" and selling them for cash value.

Usually, in the end, the retail grocer is the one who pays for coupons termed "no good" by a manufacturer who refuses to pay what the grocer has already paid the customer.

However, illegitimate coupons are rapidly becoming easier for the industry to detect. New computers installed for processing them now can match products with coupons based on in-store sales of the retailer. This enables the manufacturer to account for his sales.

"Retailers and manufacturers encourage coupon traders to use the coupons, as long as the individual uses them as specified. As long as they are not using them to get around buying the items or take advantage of the grocer," said Knapp.

"Nearly all the stores in Texas check coupons against the purchased items to make sure they are applicable," Knapp said.

Manufacturers occasionally will use gimmicks to monitor the legitimacy of coupon redemptions. One of the industry's latest security monitors is a coupon offering 50 cents off a non-existent product, "Essent Shampoo."

The coupon is published in large advertisements placed near advertisements for a film company and a tampon manufacturer. The coupon was released by Blair Marketing in three major daily newspapers in Chicago and New York.

When retailers are presented with coupons for a product they do not carry, they often think the coupon may be for a new product they have not yet stocked. The grocer then allows the customer to exchange the coupon for another brand. In the "Essent" case, many grocers have thought the product is a new release by the Clairol company, as Clairol's Herbal Essence. Because the retailer's objective is to keep his customer happy, he redeems the coupon.

Retailers say that manufacturers who do not advise them of new products and accompanying advertising campaigns are a problem not new to the food wholesale and retail industries.

The Food Industry Association Executives, a professional trade organization, says it does not approve of "these types of cops and robbers" scams.

"This (Essent scam) is just setting people up," said Don MacManus, president of FIAE.

Confident there is a better way to promote the security of coupon redemption, association coupon centers and FIAE are now on opposite sides of the fence with American Society for Industrial Security.

ASIS is the organization responsible for pushing a coupon protection bill that would make coupon fraud a federal crime punishable by up to $20,000 or 10 years in prison, or both.

"We didn't like it (the proposal). We don't believe in coupon fraud either," MacManus said.

The legislation would affect retailers who try to defraud the manufacturer, more than consumers who try to pass off illegitimate coupons. The grocer has the right to refuse the coupons.

Coupon hobby has paid off for shopper

She became interested in collecting coupons last September when she saw the editor of a coupon magazine on the Phil Donahue show.

She spent $16 for a year's subcription to the magazine.

Since then, she has spent an average of 10-15 hours per week compiling more than 110 categories of coupons. She uses index cards to divide the categories and subcategories in a plastic shoe box. In a notebook, she lists coupons she wants to order from traders participating in the magazine's program. A big cardboard box is filled with file folders of labels from products she has recently purchased.

"I never throw anything away without taking the label off to save it."

She saves the labels for manufacturers refund requests. "That way I don't have to go to the store to buy three proof of purchases for $1 rebate. I just go to the file and pull out the labels I've already bought. If the product was purchased within a reasonable amount of time, I use it."

She saves all of her grocery receipts.

Coupons she uses for trading with other magazine subscribers are filed by expiration dates.

Coupons for meat, produce, bakery and other perishable items are often offered by a multi-company promotion. For example, she said she received a check for $2 off chicken from a refund offer by Green Giant, Ore Ida and Heinz.

"Sometimes they send products as refunds," she said.

It took 60 canned vegetable labels from one company for stuffed toys in the shapes of a peapod, a tomato, an ear of corn and a peach. She ordered these for her one-year-old son, Luke.

She obtained a t-shirt from Crest, a fever thermometer tape, a red wagon and sneakers using the same method.

Though she enjoys the savings, she stresses the responsibility of using coupons honestly.

She said her coupon hobby is all in fun and "I don't try to take advantage of the grocer," she said. She "weeds out" expired coupons from her file and shops for only the items and sizes listed on the coupons.

A former Lee High School teacher, Mrs. Culpepper, 27, has a master's degree in math. The new mother quit working temporarily when Luke was born and was able to devote more time to coupons.

Her husband, Ben, doesn't seem as enthusiastic as Mrs. Culpepper about coupon collecting.

Ben, an attorney-landman, said his wife started the coupon craze by organizing them in her spare time.

"One night she brought them into the bedroom and started counting. That's where I drew the line. 'You're not bringing those in here,' I told her," he laughed.

As she weaves through the aisles of her shopping expedition, she reads her list which itemizes coupons by brands, sizes and quantities.

"I used to think you had to buy in quantity to really save money," she said, "but it's not true when you use coupons. The smaller boxes save you more.

"If a box of detergent costs $1.05 and you use a 50-cents off coupon at store that offers double couponing, you only pay five cents for each box."

Most of Mrs. Culpepper's savings stem from quantity purchases of smaller sizes from stores which offer double couponing.

"And when you use coupons, you can buy all quality brand name products; you don't have to buy house or generic names."

In the coupon orders she sends to the magazine, she specifies she is interested only in coupons which offer a savings of 50 cents or more, have no expiration dates and describes what types of products she buys.

While most hobbies require spending money instead of making money, Mrs. Culpepper's does have an expense in postage.

"I figure I spend 20 cents per dollar savings for postage. But it's worth it."

The entire project has sparked ideas for her math classes and she plans to use a "coupon course" for exercises in subtraction and percentages for her students.

"The nice thing about it (coupon collecting) is that you can do it to any degree you want. You can spend any amount of time you want. Working people can't devote a lot of time to it, but they can still save a little."

Joy Culpepper reads her shopping list which itemizes the product brands, sizes and quantities as specified by coupons she collects. The 27-year-old math teacher says coupon collecting has become her hobby. She has saved $930 in groceries during the last nine months.

Mrs. Culpepper looks for coupons which offer 50 cents off and have no expiration dates. She trades coupons with members all over the country via a coupon trading magazine.

U.S. is big cheese

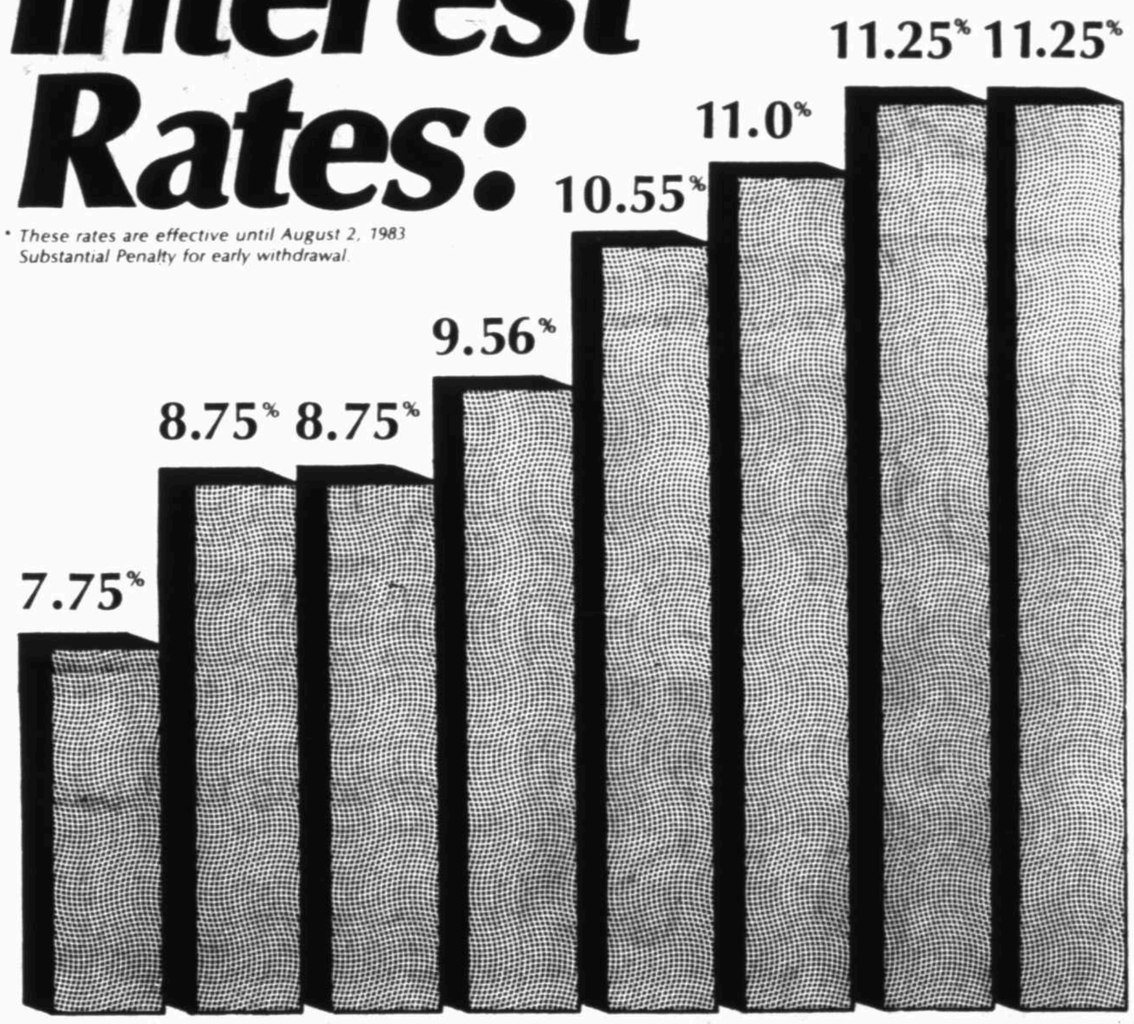

Some nine billion pounds of cheese are consumed annually throughout the world. Of this, Americans consume about 3.5 billion pounds.

More than 200 different types of cheese are manufactured in the U.S., and we import about 180 pounds annually.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Ron Hughes celebrated a milestone birthday (his big five-zero) on July 23 at a surprise party. Given by his wife, Brenda, at their home, the party featured a kiddie theme.

Entertainment included swimming, a greased watermelon contest, a seed spitting contest, "Pin the Tail," horseshoes and three-legged races, and cake and ice cream were served. A "nurse" (aka Susie Hitchcock) was in attendance in case of accidents, and belly dancer Laura Klauss made a surprise appearance. Bartender Eddie Mackey dispensed the liquid refreshments.

The back yard was gaily decorated with multicolored balloons and a huge "Happy Birthday" sign, while an arrangement of black balloons tied with a big black bow adorned the front door. Floral arrangements interspersed with miniature cowboy hats decorated the refreshment tables. The design of a small boy in cowboy regalia atop a rocking horse and the greeting: "Happy Birthday, Podner," were used on party goods and the cake.

Thanks to modern technology, the party's numerous high jinks have been preserved for posterity on video tape.

IT WAS GOOD to see former Midlander Myrtle Tool last weekend. En route from Houston to Oklahoma City for a family reunion, she detoured through Midland, where she was the house guest of Douthea and Bill Shaner and their son, Russell. Highlights of her stay here were a party given in her honor Saturday afternoon at the Shaners, a tour of the city and a performance of the Summer Mummers (long-time Mummers fans will remember Myrtle as a stellar performer during the Sixties).

Myrtle went to Houston in 1968 with Shell Oil Company. She took early retirement last year and moved to Chappell Hill, a small community north of Houston, where she is renovating an old house that predates 1850.

DESCENDANTS OF PIONEER Midlanders, the late Mr. and Mrs. M.W. Whitmire Sr., have gathered here this weekend for a reunion.

The Whitmires moved to West Texas from North Carolina before the turn of the century, as Mr. Whitmire wanted to become a cowboy. The couple's children, all born and raised in Midland, are Lenora (Mrs. Willis C.) Blackburn of Mobile, Alabama, Myrtle (Mrs. Ben W.) Golladay of Midland, Whitsel Whitmire of Longmont, Colorado, and Harwell C. Whitmire of Odessa.

Thirty-three family members spanning three generations have come in from California, Colorado, Alabama, New Jersey and points in Texas. Families still living in the Midland-Odessa area are Myrtle and Ben Golladay, Avalyn and Harwell Whitmire, Helen and Alan Spinks and son, Al, and Betty and Bill Sumner and children, Sara, Nancy and Whit.

Saturday's activities included a tour of Midland and dinner at the Spinks, and this afternoon there will be "Refreshments and Reminiscences" for relatives and friends at the Sumner home.

HELEN (MRS. JOHN) REID is home from a fabulous two-week trip to Brazil. She spent the first week as a house guest of Tania and Dr. Saul Couto and their children in the city of Goiania. Helen became acquainted with the family during their stay in Midland last year while Dr. Couto, an orthopedic surgeon, observed and studied under Dr. Thurston Dean.

Highlights of her visit in the Couto home were the meeting of the Association of Christian Women, where she was surprised with lovely gifts and an honorary membership in the statewide organization; the Rotary Club's churrasco (or barbecue) featuring ten different meats, and participation in Brazil's Juning Party, its largest national celebration. She also went with the Coutos to Pousada, a posh resort and health spa.

The second week found Helen and Tania traveling throughout Brazil and visiting the cities of Salvadore, Rio de Janiero, Petropolis and Brasilia, the capital of Brazil. Another highlight was a cruise to the islands of Itaparica and Frades, where they had a beach party and drank the milk and ate the meat from fresh coconut. The delicious native dishes, the colorful market places, the friendly people and the beautiful cities, both old and new, all made an indelible impression on Helen. She hopes to make a return visit there with her husband one of these days.

FORMER MIDLANDERS Doris and Ronnie Bumpus came in from Houston recently to make the acquaintance of their first grandchild, Charles Ryan. Born July 15 and weighing in at 10 pounds 5 ounces, he is the son of Karen and Glyn King.

Doris' parents, Odean and Joe Don Scott of Plainview and Possum Kingdom, also joined the family here for a visit and to meet their first great-grandchild. Mr. Scott is well-known in Midland through his banking interests and his Executive Fishing Service.

LUCILE AND MARVIN McCREE have had as recent house guests their daughter and son-in-law, Elise and Mike McCasland, and the McCaslands' daughter, Erin, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and their son, Allen McCree, and his wife, Lynn, and daughter, Meredith, of Austin.

Elise timed her visit to coincide with the 20-year reunion of her Midland High graduating class.

Food subject of superstitions for centuries

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

How much do you know about nutrition? Are you well-informed and able to choose your diet wisely, or are you confused and taken in by misinformation?

Food has been the target of myths and even superstitition for centuries. It is sometimes thought to cause certain illnesses, yet it may be given credit for curing others. Because of vast amounts of research in health and nutrition today, many old ideas have been discarded and new facts have been discovered.

One thing we know for sure is that it pays to keep informed and to take responsibility for keeping our bodies in the best possible health, if for no other reason than the astronomical costs of medical care. Today, we can't afford to get sick, and we know it's dollars in our pockets if we stay well.

Diet, nutrition and exercise are the most important factors in maintaining good health. To be misinformed on these vital subjects can compromise your health and seriously damage your bank account.

Nutrition quackery has, as yet, not been prohibited by law as it must be one day to protect people from its dangerous consequences. Fraud in other fields is punished — why should phony "nutritionists" and their highly questionable products be tolerated? To protect their right of "free speech," they cry. But does that right include defrauding and causing physical harm? No, and the sooner this horrendous problem is addressed by the law, the better off the public will be. We have the right of free speech, too, and the right to be better protected against any fraudulent practices.

The best way to keep your health and money intact is to keep up with current information from reliable sources, and if you are ever in doubt about a diet or nutritional question, you can call your local health department — free. Ask for a public health nutritionist, he or she will be glad to answer your questions.

Here is a little quiz that you might take to see if you are current in your thinking on some common nutritional topics: Are these statements, facts or myths? The answers may surprise you.

1. Rare meat is better for you than medium cooked. Overdone meat has no vitamins.

A: Myth — rare meat has about the same nutrients as medium cooked. Overdone meat still has vitamins, but some are lost with extensive cooking.

2. To get adequate protein every day, protein supplements are needed by most people.

A: Myth — Most supplements in pill form (even if 100 percent protein) contain less protein than 1 ounce of meat. The amount of protein needed daily is easily met by eating two servings from the meat food group — lean meat, fish, fowl, eggs, beans or 4 tablespoons of peanut butter.

3. Athletes need more protein than other people.

A: Myth — the old idea that hard exercise increases the need for more protein has been disproven. Carbohydrate foods for immediate energy and increased calories are the needs of athletes.

Huge rare steaks should never be taken before any athletic event.

4. Our food supply is so deficient in nutrition that we all need vitamin supplements every day.

A: Myth — American food supply is among the best in the world. We can get all the vitamins and minerals from our food if we eat foods from the four food groups every day.

They are: meat, fish, fowl, eggs, fruits and vegetables, breads and cereals, and dairy products. Extra iron is needed for children under four and women of child-bearing age. People who do not eat the well balanced diet from the four food groups probably need a single vitamin-mineral supplement daily, but not excessive doses.

Italy's cuisine enters another renaissance

By LOIS DWAN
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

ROME — First was misty talk of "nuova cucina." Then of the Renaissance. Los Angeles restaurant owners began returning dreamy-eyed from Italy, jettisoning menus and sending chefs for tours of study.

In January, an indignant group of Italian "ristoratori" and journalists met in New York with their American counterparts. What to do about the "image" of Italian food in this country? After all, where would anyone be if Catherine di Medici had not married Henri II of France, bringing along her chefs and her manners? We began hearing of Bergese, Marchesi, Morini....

Something is happening in Italy. What, is not entirely clear. Unlike the French nouvelle cuisine, the Italian happening has not been crowned in its swaddling clothes and clamped to a formula. "Nuova cucina" is a misnomer. Although there are French influences, and echoes of nouvelle thinking, it is firmly rooted in the Italian past. Evolution was the word we heard most often.

IT IS A scattered, individual, restless experiment, with little effect on traditional regional cooking. But it is not divorced from it. It is more philosophy — several philosophies — than technique. It is entirely and fiercely Italian, a defense of culinary honor — and quite undefinable.

We began our search in Rome, not with the new — the Roman example would have been Il Corsaro, which we missed — but perhaps more suitably, with the old; the basic, regional cooking of the Abruzzo as exemplified by Il Piccolo Mondo of Benito Caponeschi and the Maiella of Antonio Valentino. Piccolo Mondo is calmer, more sophisticated than the exuberant Maiella, where crates of tiny wood strawberries are carried through at midnight. Hard by the Piazza Navona, the blackened, hand-hewn beams and old bricks date from a 6th-century stable.

The menus of the two restaurants are reasonably similar, with displays of antipasto — prosciutto with peeled figs, baby artichokes, baby eggplant, ricotta, tiny mozzarellas in cream, roasted peppers and sweet, pale ham. Caponeschi, from Amatrice, served pasta amatriciana, because the bacon (pancetta) from there is especially fine. Herbs grow wild, so there was pigeon basted with sage, the orata (a cross between turbot and sole), with parsley, black olives and scotch, and, surprisingly, hot pepper in some of the dishes.

We detoured into the past of the Abruzzo through the forbidding granite heights of the Appenines, where the resistance fighters were headquartered during World War II. Every inch of scanty soil is used, villages step carefully down the steep slopes, women carry bundles on their heads. The Adriatic is their blessing, with no pollution and therefore marvelous seafood: gleaming, translucent clams, with red shells and red necks; panocchie, a delicious shrimp with a spine.

A REMARKABLE DINNER at the Illuminati winery was the ultimate ancient simplicity, composed entirely of seafood, caught that morning, boiled in sea water, grilled or broiled over wood fires, served with no adornment and no garnish, except a fine, herby sauce with the cold San Pietro. Scampi, appeared three times: boiled, grilled over wood coals and in the pasta. There was a simple green salad, but otherwise gloriously plain fish and shellfish — broiled baby cuttlefish, grilled sole, tiny fried shrimp.

It was a celebration of "ristoratori" (inevitably accompanied by the concertinas of Abruzzo). Valentino and Caponeschi had come along. Louis Schnelli (The Cellar, Fullerton, Calif.,), Emilio Baglioni (Emilio's, Los Angeles) and Giovanni di Saverio (Tre Scalini, New York) also were there.

Mauro Vincenti, Rex Il Ristorante, was my guide and interpreter.

The talk was of natural flavors, sauces to intensify rather than obscure those flavors, market cuisine, evolution, the 14th century, women in the kitchen.... It all began with Nino Bergese, chef to Victor Emmanuele II. When the king was deposed in 1948, Bergese opened a tiny restaurant near Bologna, seating only eight, known only to the chosen few; Bergese would not serve anyone he thought unready or unworthy.

IT IS THE theory of Gianluigi Morini, who has created his own legend at San Domenico, in Imola, near Bologna, that chefs who cooked for nobility had the great advantage of knowing how many they would serve and how lavishly, and therefore bought only what they needed for each day.

Japanese great savers

During 1980 Japanese workers saved an estimated 20 percent of their individual and family disposable incomes, according to figures published in "Reader's Digest."

This was more than three times as much as the comparable amount that Americans saved.

Wedding Notes
by Tony L. Corbell

FIRST THINGS FIRST

Most weddings are planned by blending the bride's dreams with her family's budget. It's usually a compromise at best.

The best way to approach the planning is to take first things first. And the first step is to see your pastor. He's probably a walking encyclopedia on weddings and when you announce to him your intention to marry he'll help you in many ways.

Your pastor will not only help you spiritually and legally but he'll explain the rites and traditions of the church in which you're to be married. He will also consider how formal or informal your wedding will be and make suggestions to help you plan a ceremony which will be beautiful and dignified and fit the budget within which you are working.

The people at TONY'S
STUDIO OF PHOTOGRAPHY
are also interested in having you get married in proper style. They are located at No. 5-B Dellwood Mall here in Midland. Call them at 689-0791.

Travolta endorses 'Staying Alive' line

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — John Travolta's dancing duds have spawned more fashion trends than any other star's in recent memory. First, there was the white polyester three-piece suit he discoed in for "Saturday Night Fever." Then, the '50s-ish skinny jeans and leather jackets he rock-'n'-rolled in for "Grease," followed by the Western outfits he Texas two-stepped in for "Urban Cowboy."

But it wasn't until the filming of "Staying Alive" that Travolta decided to cash in on his knack for trend-setting by endorsing his own line of workout wear, called Travolta by Carushka.

"After every film, I was asked to do clothes," the actor explained. "For the first time, I felt right about it. It feels much more appropriate to do active-wear than, well, white suits."

Travolta's collaborator is Carushka, the queen of designer bodywear, whose high-fashion styles cover the curves of such celebrities as Olivia Newton-John, Lynda Carter, Margot Kidder and Maud Adams.

At a reception to launch the line, Carushka, with her fuchsia-rinsed hair, pink leopard-print suit, black fishnet stockings and pointy stilletos, and Travolta, with his gray casual jacket, black-and-gray striped shirt and black Lee jeans, appeared to be fashion's odd couple.

Not so, advised the 29-year-old designer who was born Carushka Jarecka in Los Angeles to a Polish countess, a title the designer is entitled to but rarely uses. "John and I share the same energy," Carushka claimed. "We're similar in personality. We're the same age."

The two got hooked up about six months ago when Travolta asked his dance instructor, Sharee Lane, what she wanted as a present. "Three Carushka outfits," she replied. He was so impressed with the colorful bodywear that he had his legal advisers research the market potential for a men's line. Then he approached Carushka, whose four-year-old firm, Caruska Inc., does roughly $15 million in retail sales annually.

Public works building slow

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is slipping behind other developed countries in public works facilities and needs to increase spending from $56 billion to $160 billion to meet minimum infrastructure rebuilding needs, according to the Associated General Contractors of America.

The U.S. invests only 7.8 percent of its Gross National Product in infrastructure construction, the nation's system of water and water treatment systems, roads and bridges, locks and dams, airports, railroads and public buildings, the AGC said.

FABRIC SECRETS

BETTY MARTIN

Seam grading prevents a ridge on the outside of a garmet by trimming enclosed seam allowances to different widths. The seam allowance to the outside of the garment should be the longest. If you have set interfacing to a garment section, the widest seam allowance will be for the interfacing. As a general rule, the heavier and bulkier the fabric, the greater the need to grade. Some garments may be graded with a single cut. Position the garment so the layer, which will be the shortest, is on top. Hold the scissors so they are almost parallel to the upper layer. Then, trim through all the seam allowances.

Now is the time to begin sewing your fall and winter wardrobe. LEGGETTS FABRICS has a fantastic array of fabrics to complement the pattern you choose. Whether you stop by to purchase a spool of thread or everything you need to make a wedding gown you will find our staff very friendly and helpful. We are located at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No. 9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101 Visa and Master Card "Quality, Your Only Real Bargain."

HINT:

If the fabric is bulky, trim the seam allowances diagonally across the corner.

SENIOR PORTRAITS

It's time for Lee High and Midland High seniors to make an appointment for their yearbook portraits.

WE ARE THE OFFICIAL YEARBOOK PHOTOGRAPHER and you should come to us if you want your portraits to be compatible (and the same quality) with those of other seniors in the yearbook. If you go to another photographer, the school will accept the photographs provided they meet specifications.

THERE IS NO CHARGE TO THE SENIOR OR TO THE SCHOOL ..and.. THERE IS NO OBLIGATION TO PURCHASE PORTRAITS!

Some confusion may exist because of letters mailed recently to seniors by a new photographer in town.

DON'T BE MISLED BY PROMISES OF SLIGHTLY LOWER PRICES AND GIMMICKS! We have found over the years that seniors prefer the traditional senior portrait and our 24 years of experience in photographing seniors insures quality work ..especially when compared to that of some photographers who have been in business for LESS THAN FOUR MONTHS!

For years we have been providing services to the high schools at no charge as part of our working agreement. We also provide monetary support to activity funds and organizations thru advertising and commissions.

Older homes preferred

Older homes often come closer to being in line with what people prefer, said Dr. Jane Berry, a housing specialist.

"That is one reason why Americans spent over $46 billion on home remodeling and improvement last year," she said.

In spite of smaller families and higher housing costs, people still prefer single family homes, said Berry, of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A & M University System.

According to Berry, recent studies by the National Association of Home Builders and Remodelers show that people want plenty of space, three or four bedrooms, two or two-and-a-half bathrooms and open space planning in their homes.

Many people now remodel larger, older homes to achieve these features rather than purchase smaller and more expensive housing, said the specialist.

The least costly means of adding space to a home is to finish off unused space such as a basement or attic. Adding extra space outside the existing roof or foundation is more expensive, she said.

Simply updating the kitchen or bathroom tends to be the most common remodeling project.

Remodelers tend to borrow ideas for luxury items from new homes and add them to existing homes. "Probably the most desired luxury addition is a fireplace, which people want for esthetics rather than energy savings," said Berry.

Agency wants new models

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Next year's Brooke Shields or Cheryl Tiegs is probably living in your town. And John Casablancas is determined to find her.

The 40-year-old, boyish-looking president of Elite Model Management, one of the world's top modeling agencies, is conducting an international contest called "The Look of 1983." First prize is a $200,000 two-year modeling contract. The focus of the search is on the U.S., where there will be 30 regional semi-finals from Seattle to Portland, Maine.

"Fifty percent of the finalists will be from the U.S., because American models are favorites everywhere in the world," explains Casablancas. "They are outgoing and have very positive attitudes. There isn't just one 'look' any more. There are hundreds of American looks."

Austin holds major festival with water, fun for themes

Since its beginning in 1962, the Austin Aqua Festival has grown to be one of the five largest festivals in the nation, according to the Texas Tourist Development Agency.

The 22nd Annual Festival will combine more than 70 water, land and air events this year.

Having actually begun with pre-Festival events in early July, the Aqua Festival will officially begin on August 5 with a luncheon and the Twilight Land Parade in downtown Austin.

Held on Town Lake just a few blocks from the State Capitol Building, the Ski Tournament offering $25,000 in prize money should attract skiers from all over the world.

Mr. Gatti's $110,000 PBA Bowling Tournament should also draw the nation's top bowlers.

On a more eccentric level, the K-98 Great River Raft Race will have participants of all ages.

The Night-Lighted Water Parade will be complemented by fireworks visible along the banks of Town Lake.

In the air, the U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds will be return to the Festival bringing aerial thrills.

LIVING TODAY

Ingredients can be stored frozen

By SHARON A. HILLIS

Recipes often call for ingredients that must be chopped, grated, diced or minced before you can use them. It's impossible to do this time-consuming work ahead of time, then keep the various ingredients in your freezer until they're needed. Here are some examples:

Cheese can be grated a pound or two at a time. One pound makes about four cups of grated cheese. Measure the grated cheese in 1-cup units — or in the amount you will want most often. Put in air-tight containers or wrap in moisture vapor-resistant plastic wrap, and freeze. American process cheese freezes well.

Chop a pound or two of onions at a time, either with a knife or in your blender if you prefer finely chopped pieces. Wrap in ½-cup or ¼-cup units in air-tight plastic wrap. Place packages in a glass freezer jar that can be tightly closed. This is necessary to keep the onion odor from escaping. Freeze.

Bread crumbs can be kept on hand in the freezer, too. Save bread heels until you have several. Crumb them in the blender, or between two sheets of wax paper with your rolling pin. Store in an air-tight freezer container. If you like, you can lightly butter the heels before crumbling them to make buttered crumbs.

MAKE-AHEAD CHICKEN A LA KING

Here's a recipe for Chicken a la King that is tasty to eat and easy to fix. It makes 16 portions, ¾ cup each, so you can freeze some and have several weeks worth.

½ cup chicken fat, butter, or margarine
6 tablespoons chopped green pepper
3 cups canned mushrooms
¾ cup flour
2 teaspoons salt
3 cups chicken broth
3 cups milk
6 tablespoons finely cut pimiento
6 cups diced cooked chicken (one 5-pound chicken yields about 4 cups diced meat)

Melt fat and cook green pepper and mushrooms in it for about 5 minutes. Blend in flour and salt, then add broth and milk. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Add pimiento and chicken. Blend well.

To serve immediately: Heat throughly and serve on biscuits, hot buttered toast or on cooked rice.

To freeze: Cool food quickly. Pack in freezer containers, leaving head space. Pint containers work best for this dish. Seal and freeze immediately.

To prepare for serving: Without thawing, heat frozen Chicken a la King in the top of a double boiler for about 30 minutes for one pint.

Baby-sitting: The art, science

Text by Diane Booth

Course teaches babysitting responsibilities

Christie is in her high chair enjoying an afternoon snack of cookies and juice when the doorbell rings. Jennifer, the baby sitter, is heating a bottle on the stove for the infant sleeping in the next room. She exits the kitchen to answer the door, leaving the three-year-old unattended next to the hot stove.

If Jennifer had taken the baby-sitting instruction class through the American Red Cross she would have known to take the youngster with her to the door or to move her high chair away from the stove and kitchen counters, far from hazards.

"The class makes people they baby-sit for feel good. They (parents) are real thrilled the kids are taking this course," said Mary Sadousky, the course instructor.

Cindy Robertson

Cindy Wedel

Sarah Van Cott

Joel Van Cott

About 20 youths aged 11 to 16 are learning the art of baby-sitting in an 18-hour class at the American Red Cross, 2306 Elizabeth.

The class is designed to teach the fundamentals of baby-sitting, Sadousky said. "Hopefully this will give them enough basic background and make them think about things they would not have thought about if they hadn't taken the class."

Most of the students in the class are the youngest children in their families, Sadousky said, so they don't have much experience caring for children.

DiAnn Edwards, who will teach the next baby-sitting class, said the class helps kids feel they are "in control of a situation and can handle what comes up or know what to do if they don't know how to handle things."

The course covers the responsibilities of baby-sitting, characteristics of children according to age, growth and development, toys and games, supervision skills, baby sitter and child safety, accident prevention, basic first aid, infant care such as feeding, diapering and bathing and job hunting.

"Dial-a-sitter" connects parents with sitters

When parents call Virginia Johnson, operator of Dial-a-sitter, a 24-hour baby-sitting service, they know she will do her best to provide someone to care for their children or she will show up at the door herself.

Mrs. Johnson started the business last September with about a dozen baby sitters and has expanded to 35 baby sitters ranging in age from 18 to 60 years of age.

Her list of customers has grown to include 300 families, she said.

Mrs. Johnson works at her home on W. Storey Avenue. When a customer calls, she thumbs through her file box of sitters' names and finds the requested baby sitter or someone she feels will be compatible with the family.

"I try to line up families and sitters who work well together," she said.

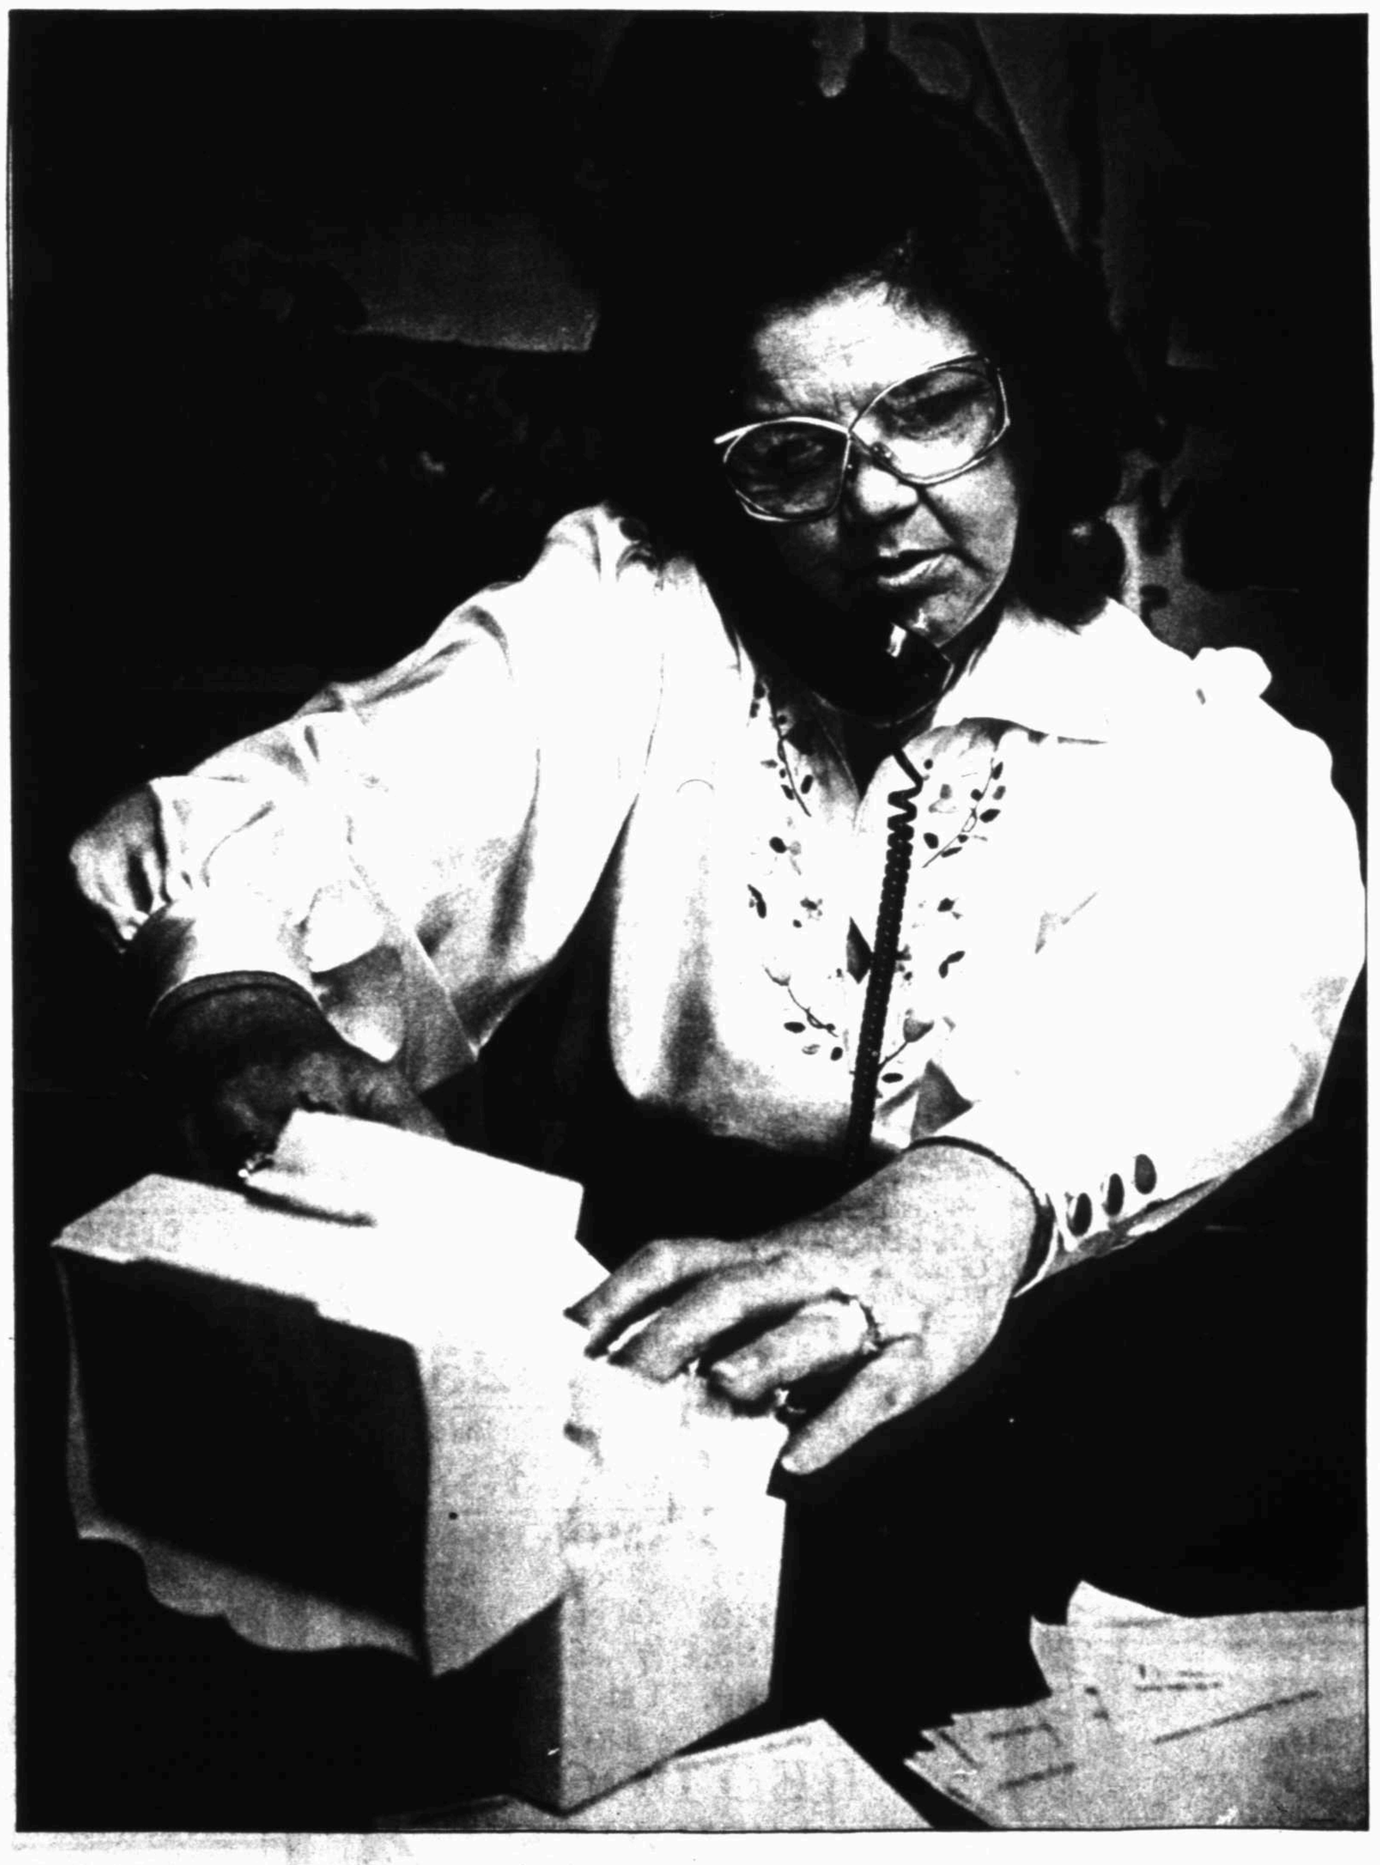

Baby sitters are carefully screened, Mrs. Johnson said, and their references are checked thoroughly. She regularly follows up on her sitters' performance with clients.

"It really takes a special type of person to do this type of work," she said. "I don't want sitters who don't like children.

"One sitter might not work well with one family but another family may fall head over heels for her."

Mrs. Johnson makes a point of meeting all her customers. "I definitely like to meet all the people. That way I can tell something about them. I have sat in some of the homes myself when I haven't been able to get a sitter or something happens."

Because she is selective about her personnel, Mrs. Johnson said her customers don't have to worry about the person in charge of their children. For those parents who need reassurance, she encourageses them to consult others who have hired the same baby sitter.

Virginia Johnson has built her own business by connecting parents with baby-sitters in Midland. She started with 12 sitters last September and now has 35 sitters who care for "about 300 customers."

Mrs. Johnson said one mother is particularly discriminating about the women who care for her children. "She wants to know the life history of the sitter. We have others who never ask a question and others who know me so they don't worry about it."

Of course, the children are the ones who spend time with the baby sitter so they can also be choosy. There are children in one family who only want to be cared for by a couple who works for the service.

Many of her customers are people who are "fairly well-off", said Johnson, although Dial-a-Sitter caters to all Midlanders.

Rates are based on the number of children and their ages. Mrs. Johnson is paid a percentage of the total earned by the baby sitter. It costs $4 an hour to care for an infant up to age three months. For one or two youngsters over three months, the rate is $3 an hour. For three or four children it is $3.50 per hour and a dollar an hour for each additional child. A minimum of four hours is charged and there is a $3 transportation fee.

"My customers like not having to pick up and take home a sitter," said Mrs. Johnson. "They call me up and know they're going to have a sitter there and that's the end of it."

Although she is satisfied with the number of babysitters at her fingertips, Mrs. Johnson is always looking for new ones because good baby sitters are hard to find, she said. "I wouldn't dare turn down a good sitter."

When she started her business, Mrs. Johnson said she had fewer potential sitters to select from. As a result, she had a handful of bad experiences where baby sitters did not show up to the assigned job. "I would get calls from people wanting to know where the sitter was. I would dash off and take the job."

Satisfied with a list of reliable baby sitters, Mrs. Johnson said, she doesn't have to put as much time into searching for baby sitters as she used to, since many people contact her.

From week to week, she has difficulty figuring how many sitters she will need.

She is able to fill most requests for baby sitters, the businesswoman said. "It makes me real angry when I can't find a sitter. If I'm available I will go rather than turn one down."

Dial-a-sitter already has booked baby-sitting engagements through October.

The class works with children who attend the day care center next door, to obtain "hands-on" experience, Sadousky said.

The training will help the youths who complete the course to find jobs baby-sitting in homes and day care centers, Sadousky said. The rate for baby sitters is $1.50-$2 per hour, she said.

The teens and pre-teens have learned play time is not only fun but necessary to a child's overall development. "Time will go a lot faster if you play with the kids," Sadousky said. "Sending kids away while you watch television is not a good way to baby-sit."

One class lesson consisted of selecting toys appropriate for various age groups. A teddy bear was determined unsuitable for children under four years because the eyes and other facial features could be removed and swallowed by a smaller child.

A one-piece rubber bath toy was given a vote of approval by the class because it had no sharp edges or pieces which could end up in young mouths.

The teacher suggested her students should always ask themselves, "Could something result from what I'm doing which will hurt the child?"

Some other pointers the teacher offered are to talk to a little child the way you would to an older child. Don't talk baby talk, she said. "But you're not going to quote Shakespeare either."

One of the most important things a baby sitter should remember is to maintain authority over the children. "The minute you become one of those kids, you have lost all control and you're probably not going to get it back. They're going to run all over you."

Mrs. Sadousky compared being a baby sitter to a substitute teacher to illustrate her point. "You're the substitute mother and the kids are going to try every trick in the book, like students do with substitute teachers.

"Dennis the Menace never has the same sitter twice," she said.

The teacher also advised students not to spank or hit youngsters they are responsible for. "It's totally out," she said. She suggested asking unruly children to sit alone quietly for awhile until they can behave.

Children should have the rules you follow spelled out to them, Sadousky said.

Mary Sadousky speaks to students of a course offered by the American Red Cross. The class teaches basics of baby-sitting.

Cindy Wedel, 11, hopes to get a baby-sitting job once she completes the Red Cross course. Although she has always enjoyed children, especially babies, she said she feels more confident about baby-sitting now. "I know a lot more about babies and children than before I took the class."

Eleven-year-old Cindy Robertson has cared for her nine-year-old twin brothers but she decided to take the class at her mother's suggestion to prepare her to baby-sit other children. "Before I was scared about what I would do if something happened. Now I will know what to do."

She is particularly interested in learning basic first aid. "It's real important to have," she said. "If a baby is choking, I won't have time to call for help."

Joel VanCott, 12, is the only male in the class. While he has already had some babysitting experience, the youth said, "My Mom said she would let me babysit all over town if I took the course, cause then she would know I would know how to handle myself."

VanCott thinks the training is a good idea. "I can take care of them but I will just feel a lot better if I finish the course."

Sarah VanCott, 11, Joel's sister, is not new to baby-sitting but she knows her experience is limited. "I am learning what to do and what not to do with kids."

The most important part of taking the class, she said, "is when I baby-sit people will feel more at ease when they leave their kids with me."

The next baby-sitting class will be offered through Campfire, Inc. on August 16-18 at St. Paul's United Methodist Church. There is no charge for the class.

Business provides 'sitter' service

Summer is a slow time, she said, because school is out and older children can take care of their younger siblings. In the fall, there is a surge in the demand for baby sitters as school and activities resume.

Most of her employees are homemakers and mothers who want to earn extra money. Mrs. Johnson said full-time sitters can earn from $200-$300 a week. How much a baby sitter makes, she said, "depends on how much they want to earn." She has sitters who work part-time, full-time, nights only and days only.

One baby sitter is a registered nurse, another older woman is employed fulltime during the day and takes baby-sitting jobs nights and weekends. A couple in their 50s picks up extra cash by watching children, she said.

She doesn't hire anyone younger than the age of 18. Several of the younger women had child care training in high school and have worked in church nurseries.

Each baby sitter and family is profiled in Mrs. Johnson's card file. Dial-A-Sitter keeps track of such details about families as children's allergies or other medical information, special rules and instructions, names of preferred baby sitters and whether smoking is permitted.

Not only do baby sitters go to residences but they also supervise children in hotels and motels. Baby sitters are available for live-in situations, overnight, weekends and vacations. Dial-A-Sitter baby sitters have cared for children of vacationing parents for up to 10 days, Mrs. Johnson said.

While the baby-sitting service advertises, she said, most of her business is generated by "word-of-mouth."

Mrs. Johnson decided to start her own baby-sitting service because of the success of her sister's business in Lubbock. Georgia Holmes matched baby sitters with families for a decade and then retired.

After working most of her adult life and raising three daughters, Mrs. Johnson, a 14-year Midland resident, decided she wanted to establish her own business. She saw the need for the service in Midland and she added, "I love children."

Dial-A-Sitter is an important service, she said because her customers prefer their children to be supervised in their own homes instead of in someone else's.

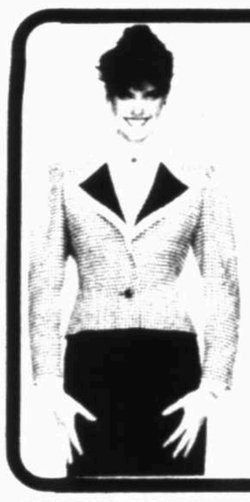

Mrs. Johnson usually spends most mornings on her living room sofa next to her telephone waiting for calls. She enjoys watching the morning movie while she books babysitting jobs. She usually moves to her office and returns to the living room in the afternoon to watch her soap opera, "Guiding Light."

In between phone calls she occupies herself doing needlepoint, crocheting and knitting. Although she uses a message recorder when she leaves the house, Mrs. Johnson said, "I didn't know until I did this what it meant to sit by the phone. I'm literally chained to it."

First moves often made by women

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A subtle nudge beside the video game. A seductive sway to jukebox music. A simple swivel of a bar stool. Such are the ways of flirting, and a biologist studying the phenomenon says women make the first move more than half the time.

"It's not pathological, and it's not voyeurism. It's genuine intellectual interest," said Timothy Perper, explaining how he began a two-year study that has taken him from Manhattan to Philadelphia.

Perper, 44, a former professor at Rutgers University, watched about 2,500 male-female encounters in 50 bars before reaching his conclusions. The study was funded by a $30,000 grant from the Guggenheim Foundation.

Perper said the grant let him do his research with a touch of class.

"We went to respectable places because we wanted to show that flirtations and pickups are in no way restricted to joints," he said.

At a bar in Philadelphia, Perper pointed out a female undergraduate from West Chester University standing next to a young man at a video game.

As they played, she leaned over and "accidentally" bumped into him. He failed to notice.

"Forget it," observed Perper. "That was a crucial escalation point."

From his post in the bar, Perper picks his "focal subjects," using techniques honed in the 1970s when he studied rats. He isolates and documents each step in the sequence of flirtation behavior.

"I learned how to observe watching the rats — to be objective and distant but not alienated. This is not a cold scientific pursuit that treats people like bugs."

During interviews, Perper found males were not as conscious of the signals used to initiate or escalate a flirtation as were women. He also found that men often were slow to respond.

"Women initiate more than half the time," he said in an interview published Thursday in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Perper was watching recently as Alice, an auditor from Texas, and Fred, a data-processing consultant, (not their real names) met in a dimly lit cocktail lounge in Somerset, N.J.

Alice and her sister chose a table next to one occupied by Fred and other men in three-piece suits.

"She's not pretty, but there's not a guy here who can resist her. She chooses, and Fred's been chosen."

Their shoulders touched briefly as he moved his elbow onto the back of her chair. As they exchanged business cards, their hands brushed.

"That's a reach," Perper said excitedly. "He's putting his arm into her body space. Conversation at this point is not about what they're doing. It's about business."

"Fred and I read each other, and for this minute, it was good," said Alice later. "We haven't promised each other anything beyond a dance later on. But dance is body language, a form of communication which may or may not lead to something else."

Midget pigs help study heart spasm

WASHINGTON (AP) — A small pig may take on an important new role in heart research now that scientists have found a way to make it the first animal model for a deadly type of human blood vessel contraction, researchers report.

Scientists should find it easier to look for the causes of coronary artery spasms, and ways to prevent or treat them, with an animal model to use, according to a report published today in Science magazine.

What spurs the violent arterial spasms is unknown, but the blood vessel contractions cause acute heart attacks and sudden death, as well as angina, a painful condition resulting from restricted blood flow.

Researchers at Kyushu University in Fukuoka, Japan, say they have discovered a way to manipulate the major blood vessels in the hearts of miniature swine to cause the destructive spasms at will.

Because the spasms are so similar to those suffered by humans, the animals could be used to test new drugs designed to prevent or control them, the scientists say.

The heart researchers wrote that they found a way to quickly cause atherosclerosis, a buildup of fatty deposits in the blood vessels, in the animals and then use chemicals known to cause vessel activity to trigger spasms at these sites.

Elderly make money off homes

If you are one of the 12.5 million Americans over the age of 65 who owns a house, that house is probably your largest asset.

After putting a lot of time and money into it over the years, you could be in an financial situation where it would be nice to get some of that investment back.

To assist elderly homeowners who want to convert the value of their house into a monthly income, the U. S. Senate Special Committee on Aging has published a booklet called, Turning Home Equity Into Income for Older Homeowners.

There are financing methods available that allow older homeowners to unlock the value, or equity, in their homes without having to move or repay loans right away.

One method of financing allows you to sell your house, but still stay in it. The arrrangement is called sale/leaseback. With this plan you sell your house and receive a lump sum payment or a monthly income.

Writer's hometown reunion reaffirms roots

By LEE CHILSON
Copley News Service

We have just returned from a trip into the past. A trip that took us back to our hometown, nestled in the green valley of the James River in North Dakota, and back some 40 years to our high school days.

It was a trip to a centennial celebration and high school class reunion in our hometown of Jamestown, N.D.

And it was really something.

My wife Gloria and I (she graduated in 1944; I was a 1940 grad) were in town three days before the reunion started, so we took long early morning walks on the same streets we knew as kids and teenagers.

We crossed the same footbridge into the park and skipped flat stones on the same slow-moving river.

We walked past all the places we once lived and discovered all these years later that we had once been neighbors — lived about a block apart — but that was long ago and I was a big kid of 9 and didn't even know the little red-haired girl down the street.

A fire in the '60s leveled an entire city block in the center of town and changed the looks of the downtown area completely. Lost in the fire were the hotel where I bellhopped while in high school, a bank, several other businesses and everyone's favorite bar — the Blue Blazer.

In its place is a massive motel-resturant-bar complex.

My dad's barbershop and the small cafe next door, once the home of the best hamburgers in town, were torn down years ago. We lived in quarters in back of the shop during the Depression and I remember how we set pans around the place when it rained or when the snow melted because the roof leaked. Now only a vacant lot remains.

They razed the old Grand Theater — Lloyd's Opera House in its heyday in 1893 — despite the protests of many of the town's oldtimers. Two other movie theaters — the State and the Star — were converted to other business uses when movie houses moved to outlying shopping centers. (Thank heavens, they saved the pool hall!)

The Stutsman County Courthouse, a grand red brick structure built more than 100 years ago, has withstood weather, time and controversy and still stands.

They also moved the county fairgrounds, tore down the Northern Pacific Railroad Depot, and what once was the classy Majestic Cafe in the center of the downtown area is now (can you believe it?) a pizza place!

They've also built over the years — a huge civic center building for high school and college basketball games, homes, commercial buildings and dams on both rivers that meander through the valley, each forming a fishing lake and spawning recreation areas.

But the highlight of the trip back was the reunion — seeing all the old high school friends. We stepped into the hall and tried to put names and faces together but it wasn't easy after all those years. They all looked so ...old.

It was a time for embraces, kisses, laughter — and a few tears. And it was a time for recalling the good times ... learning about old friends ... catching up with the years that have slipped by ... comparing pictures of kids and grandchildren.

After the war, the classes of 1940 and '44 went off in many directions and into many fields of endeavor. There was the doctor from Iowa back for the reunion ... an airline executive from San Franciso ... an insurance broker from Baltimore ... a civil engineer from Long Beach, Calif. ... a Boeing official from Seattle ... farmers, postal employees, a big California subdivider, plumbers, builders, real estate dealers, housewives and a newspaperman from California.

But a good share of the class of '40 came home after the war and stayed. Perhaps they had seen enough of the rest of the world and decided their own little piece of America was all they really wanted. And, in a way, I envy them that decision.

Engineering a change in professions

By DR. ADELE SCHEELE

Q. My husband is a chemical engineer with an architectural and engineering firm. Due to the recession, his firm has not been able to get many engineering contracts and he is in danger of losing his job.

He has been sending out resumes to various companies and employment agencies. But all this has been to no avail. Companies and employment agencies do not even bother to answer his letters.

By the looks of advertisements in the papers, engineering jobs are again becoming available in all the disciplines except chemical. We don't understand this and hope that maybe you canenlighten us. We realize that chemical jobs are not a dime a dozen, but there have always been some. Now it seems there are none.

Should my husband go back to school and change fields? We'd appreciate your advice.

A. First, chemical engineering is a fine profession with many opportunities, so don't question that. Working as a chemical engineer in an architectural firm probably offers the least opportunity of any, so I would urge your husband to consider firms that have to do with food processing, paper, pharmaceuticals, etc.

These are particularly evident in your region. So it's not the field that's the problem, it's access to the field that is.

I think that sending out letters and resumes to prospective employers and to agencies is generally a waste of time, particularly if you're a trained professional. Don't expect a job to come from it or even any answer whatsoever, as your experience proves.

You could help your husband by having him list who he already knows in other companies. Then he has to call for their advice, offer to take them to lunch, and think of some ways he could help them in return. He must enlarge his notion of how he generates business for himself.

Being a chemical engineer in a large company doesn't always ask for that. What your husband needs to enlarge right now is the interpersonal approach that will get other companies to appreciate who he is and believe that he can contribute to them. In order to do that, he has to learn to sell himself as a valuable employee. That is what he needs to practice now. He is lucky to have you on his side!

+ + +

Q. I need a typing job. I'm 61 years old and I have been away for the past five years. I came back last May and got a job but I was fired. I live in a trailer by myself. I have no phone or car. I need work bad, and I'm willing to correct my errors.

A. I can see by your handwritten note that you don't have a typewriter to practice on. Borrow one from someone. Get a book on how to build up your speed and make yourself practice three hours every day. In two week's time you will see improvement.

Then try the following places for employment: One, answer ads you find in the newspaper's classified section; two, go to an employment or temporary employment office and apply.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Money does grow in home flower gardens

By ELVIN MCDONALD

Last fall when I brought my potted tree standards of 'The Fairy' rose indoors, to winter over in a cold storage room, I pruned back all the extra long branches. Frost had already killed the leaves but the stems looked green and promising.

In a few minutes I had turned this mass of prunings into 40 cuttings 4 to 6 inches long and set them an inch deep in a moist mix of sphagnum peat moss and perlite. I then placed the flat in my little greenhouse in the country, which is cold — sometimes freezing — most of the winter.

By spring, swelling leaf buds on the cuttings suggested that roots were growing, and when I checked here and there, sure enough they were. Now, in midsummer, I have 36 5-inch pots of thrifty flowering 'The Fairy' roses, no doubt worth close to a hundred dollars at retail.

There are lots of seeds that can be planted in late summer, some of which I'll list here in case you'd like to grow a little money in your garden as well:

Pansy and Viola: These friendly "faces" for spring and early summer gardens grow from seeds started the previous year, usually no later than September. If you have a coldframe, sun-heated pit, cool greenhouse or sunny, airy plant room, sow seeds of winter-blooming types, listed by the Geo. W. Park Seed Co., Inc., Greenwood, S.C. 29647 (free catalog).

Calceolaria 'Anytime' and cinerarias, also in the Park catalog: Start these seeds in late summer for flowering pot plants from late next winter through spring. They're great in frost-free mild-climate gardens, or in any indoor growing space that is generally cool, airy and sunny.

In warmer indoor gardens, sow seeds of African violet, mini sinningia and amaryllis. If not homegrown, invest a few dollars and reap a prodigious return.

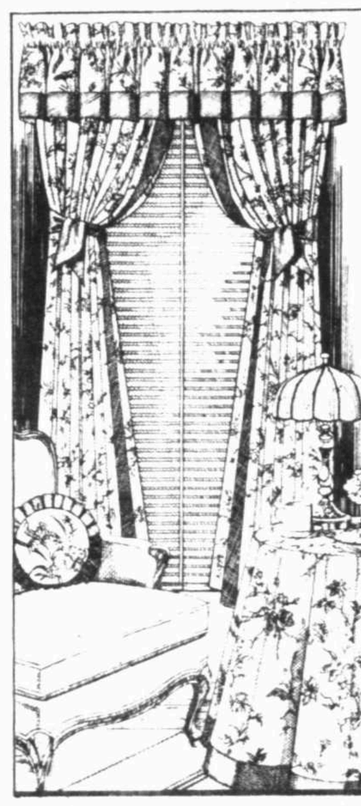

Q. I have good luck with African violets but what causes white fuzzy spots to grow on them, almost like bits on cotton?

A. Mealybugs! Clean off every trace, using a cotton swab dipped in alcohol. Work in good light and examine with a magnifying glass. Repeat once a week until your violets are absolutely clean.

Q. What care does the Rieger begonia need?

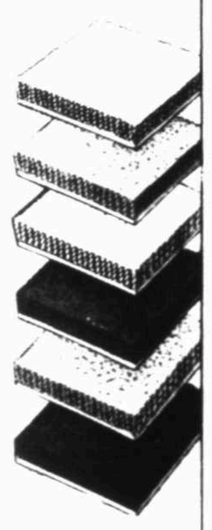

A. Set your plant in a half-sunny window, perhaps one facing east or west. Keep the soil watered so that when you feel the surface your fingers will tell you "nicely moist" or "damp."

Disappearing legacy: Colonial houses of Jamaica

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

To the poor African slave laboring in the broiling Jamaican sun, the house of the plantation owner must have looked like a palace. Crystal chandeliers hung from the massive wood-beamed ceilings. Imported silk covered the walls. Lace curtains hung in all the windows.

The massive oak furniture was imported from Europe where craftsmen carved the wood into exquisite shapes. The finest china and crystal graced the table.

This was truly a "great house."

The great houses of Jamaica are a disappearing legacy of the island's colonial period and provide visitors with a link between the fascinating history of the island and today's tourist haven.

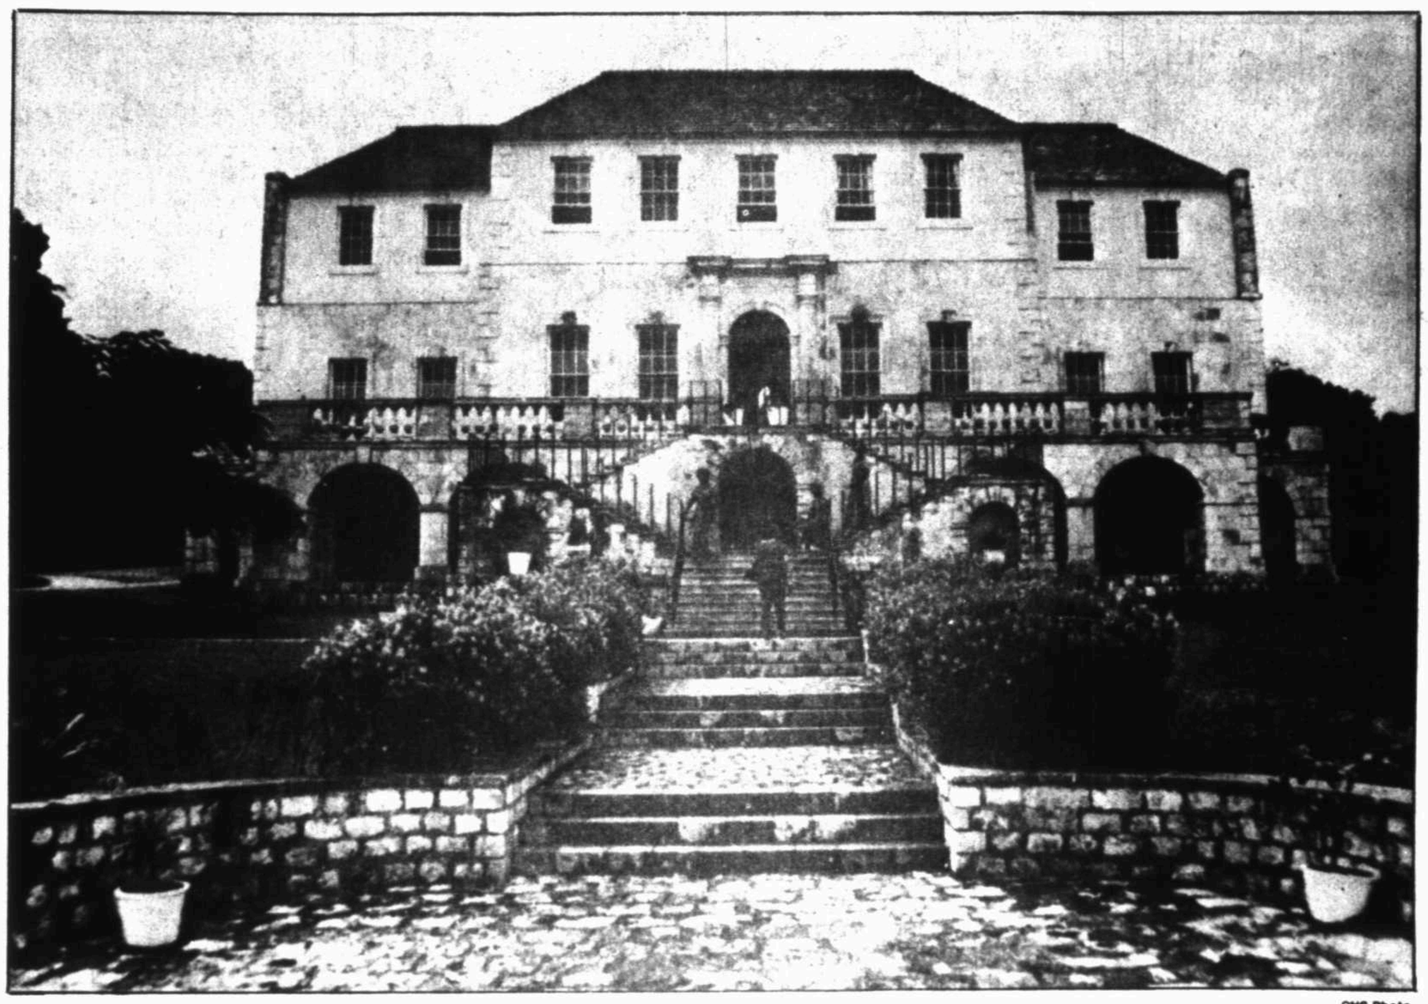

AT ONE TIME there were some 700 plantations in Jamaica, each with its own great house. The home of the plantation owner was always called the great house, even though it might be only a modest dwelling with a couple of rooms.

Today only 15 of these great houses remain and more than half are still occupied, mostly by plantation owners. But half a dozen others are open to the public, so visitors to Jamaica can get a glimpse of the plantation legacy of the island.

The greatest of these houses, both in splendor and in intrigue, is the Rose Hall Great House. This 200-year-old mansion stands on a hillside overlooking the Caribbean Sea and the sparkling north coast.

The palace was built between 1770 and 1780 by slaves who cut and hauled huge blocks of stone for its walls. They carved the basement out of limestone cliffs, not knowing that it would become dungeons to hold those who defied their master.

THE HOUSE HAS been restored magnificently. Its finely carved and hand-polished woodwork is of native mahogany, as are the floors. The walls are covered with French silk. Crystal chandeliers hang from the ceiling. The furniture is antique, similar to what must have been in the house when it was at the height of its glory in the 18th century.

CNS Photo

The great house of Rose Hall Plantation near Montego Bay in Jamaica is the grandest of them all. It is said to be haunted by the ghost of Annie Palmer, who killed her three husbands there.

More fascinating than the house is the legend of Annie Palmer, the White Witch of Rose Hall, whose ghost is said to haunt the house.

The home was built by John Palmer in the center of a 6,600-acre sugar plantation. Annie was the wife of his grandnephew, John Rose Plamer, who later inherited the plantation.

It was said that she practiced black magic and was a voodoo priestess. She terrorized and brutalized unknown numbers of slaves.

HER THREE HUSBANDS fared no better. Tour guides show visitors into successive bedrooms on the second floor of Rose Hall. In each of three bedrooms she killed one of her husbands, each in a different, horrible way.

In a fourth bedroom, it was said, she was preparing to wed a fourth time, when her slaves killed her, ravaging the house in the process. Workers in the house today say that sometimes, on a moonlit night, they feel the evil of Annie Palmer as she prowls the grounds of Rose Hall.

The former dungeons now house a quaint pub and small gift shop. The home, which is surrounded by beautiful flower gardens, is open daily for tours. It is located several miles east of Montego Bay.

A little farther to the east is the Greenwood Great House, built by the Barrett family of England, from whom poet Elizabeth Barrett Browning is a descendant. The first Barrett came with the English army of conquest in the 18th century, and was given an enormous land grant. The poet's father, Edward Moulton Barrett, The Tyrant of Wimpole Street, was born in Cinnamon Hill Great House, now a private residence near Rose Hall.

The Barretts amassed a fortune from their sugar plantation, which spread for 12 miles along the coast. Greenwood was built in 1790 and used extensively for entertainment. While the house is not as impressive as Rose Hall, the view from its upper veranda is every bit as good.

THE ANTIQUES IN this house include the Barretts' original Wedgwood china, rare books dating from 1697 and antique furnishings and musical instruments.

In Ocho Rios to the east, a small but ornate great house is Harmony Hall. Although its exact origins are unknown, it was apparently built in the 19th century as part of a small pimiento plantation. An original storehouse and barbecue for drying pimiento can be seen here.

The house's outstanding feature is the detailed hand-carved fretwork which graces the railings, balconies and roof of the stone house. It now houses an art gallery, boutique and pub.

Also in Ocho Rios is the Prospect Plantation, where visitors can see a working plantation close up. During a tour, a worker scurries up a coconut tree to knock down the fruit, then splits it open on a sharpened stick. He then slices the fresh coconut with his machete and offers his guests a piece.

The plantation also grows bananas, sugarcane, pimientos and a variety of other tropical crops. Its great house, still privately occupied, can be seen from Sir Harold's Viewpoint, a high ridge offering a magnificent view of the green jungle and blue waters of the bay beyond.

Old Salem restored to 18th century charm

By The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Our guide to the restored village of Old Salem, Candace Owens, is dressed in vivid red, her skirt a gay splash of color hanging to her ankles and the matchin,, vest laced in a sprightly blue. Only her starched white apron and matronly bonnet suggest this was once the Sunday church attire of a deeply religious sect that settled in the wilds of North Carolina two centuries ago.

Unlike other, more-austere immigrants in search of religious freedom, the Moravians — Protestants whose origins were in 15th century Bohemia — could hardly be considered drab. Church-goers they were, but, says Owens, they also enjoyed "good food, good music and good bedding." On last Easter Sunday morning, in a ceremony reaching back 211 years, a 500-piece Moravian brass band greeted the sunrise.

Amiable, peace-loving and industrious, the Moravians made their way from Europe via Bethlehem, Pa., to the hilly woods of western North Carolina in the mid-1700s, eventually founding the town of Salem (from Shalom, the Hebrew word for "peace") in 1766, a community dedicated to the arts of commerce.

THREATENED WITH DEMOLITION 34 years ago (to make way for a supermarket), the remnants of the original settlement have been preserved and restored as Old Salem, a dozen or more blocks of 18th-century homes, shops and gardens surrounded by the downtown heart of 20th-century Winston-Salem. The inevitable comparison is Colonial Williamsburg, but Old Salem is smaller, more a country village than a bustling royal capital. It charms in the quiet of its shaded streets and lawns.

Of the 111 separate properties acquired by the Old Salem Inc., organization, 60 have been restored and nine — including a functioning bakery — are open to the public. Guide Owens has a headful of fascinating history to serve our tour group, but there is no way we are going to pass by the bakery without a stop. Inside, the breads — thin cookies and sugar cakes baked from old Moravian recipes — make a lovely sight, and the costumed clerks are hard put to keep up with the demand. I choose a half-dozen pumpkin muffins, and on we go.

But almost immediately, there's another pause for refreshment, this time at the water pump on the edge of the town square, a grassy expanse crisscrossed by stone walkways. One person grabs the heavy wooden handle to pump, while the rest of us line up hesitantly to slurp up a drink as the water spills into our hands from a long metal spout. "It's all right," assures Owens, "it's city water."

The Moravians were avid diary keepers, and their thick journals provide an unusually detailed description of their lives on the frontier. Residents of Salem were divided into "choirs" (meaning place in life) according to age, sex and marital status. Boys of 14 were apprenticed for seven years to learn a skill in the Single Brothers House, a rambling log and brick structure built in 1769. Today, a major attraction at Old Salem, it houses demonstrations of colonial weaving and cloth dyeing, tin and wood working, cabinet making, gun making and other crafts.

IN A SMALL assembly hall upstairs where the Brethren gathered for evening vespers and song, Owens insists that our group of 14 sit for a moment as the Moravians did in church, the women (12 of them) on one side and the males (2 of us) on the other. The segregation of sexes and ages continued into death, and at God's Acre, the exquisite hillside cemetery, church members are still buried not by families but by "choir," male children in one section, female in another, single men here and married women over there. Simple stones, all the same for rich or poor, except in the wording, reflect a belief in the democracy of death.

A highly skilled people (a large percentage of the settlers were master craftsmen) with a reputation for honesty, the Moravians initially prospered selling crockery, household implements and other crafts goods to settlers flocking to the Carolina piedmont. Eventually, the very nature of their highly regimented, church-governed society doomed the community. Only a hilltop away, Winston, founded in 1849, thrived on the tobacco and textile industries. It's expansion ultimately overtook Salem, and they officially merged as Winston-Salem in 1913.

The Moravian church itself has grown, however, and today there are about 56,000 members in the northern and southern "provinces" of the United States (there are 17 provinces worldwide). Surrounding Forsyth County has 41 congregations alone, including Home Moravian Church in Old Salem, many of whose 1,800 members have been active from the beginning in the restoration work. (The church is off to one side of the town square in a less-prominent position than originally planned. Apparently, the Single Sisters Choir complained that its proposed walls would shade the green where they bleached their linen.)

AND THROUGH THE church, several old customs survive, including the Easter sunrise service, which draws crowds of up to 18,000 nowadays when the weather is favorable.

In the early morning dark between 2 and 4 a.m., brass bands representing 13 Moravian churches in Winston-Salem tour their neighborhoods, says the pastor of Home Moravian Church, the Rev. Dr. D. Wayne Burkette, "announcing the arrival of Easter Day." A service of readings and hymns begins at 5:30 a.m. in the square outside his church. The congregation then walks quietly up the slight hill to the cemetery, where the ceremony concludes with a triumphant concert of the brass bands, assembled in a mass.

On the Fourth of July, a 9 p.m. torchlight parade through Old Salem is the main event of the festivities, reenacted this summer in the manner it was observed for the first time 200 years ago in 1783. The day will begin with a church service at 8:30 a.m., a town meeting at 11 a.m. and a traditional Love Feast (a ceremony of singing and "a simple meal of buns and coffee") at 2:30 p.m.

OLD SALEM IS a pleasant place to spend a spring afternoon, with a few surprises. At one end, a small forest of native trees — scarlet oak, American beech, American holly and chestnut — has been planted to recreate the woods from which early Salem was carved. The woods were very important to Salem commerce, and the cutting in the early days was carefully managed.

At the northern end, a giant metal coffee pot, atop a slender perch, stands sentinel in a field. It is a city landmark, built by two Salem tinsmiths to advertise their business. There is a story that a Yankee soldier fleeing a band of Confederates shimmied up the side, popped open the lid and dropped inside to escape his pursuers. In Old Salem, they like to believe it.

And then there are the chickens, just a few of them, strutting unpenned across the brick sidewalks or fluffing their feathers in a little dust bowl they have worn for themselves on the sunny side of a weatherboarded log building. A rooster crows across the garden, and another responds. Some things in Old Salem haven't changed at all.

Change continents, change seasons down under

By JOHN KIERAN
Copley News Service

It was the first week in August and the sun beat down — an easy 85 degrees outside. People in shorts and sandals were seeking respite from the tormenting heat.

And there I was in a wool coat, lugging my skis through Los Angeles airport with a silly grin on my face.

Fourteen hours later I was grateful for the wool coat. We had boarded the plane in the sweltering throes of summer, but we stepped off into the clear, crisp chill of the New Zealand winter.

That's when it finally sank in.

"IT'S AUGUST AND I'm really going skiing.

"I don't have to wait another six months for the exhilaration of dropping down a mountainside, carving quick turns through fresh-fallen snow.

"I'm really here."

Not easy to believe.

New Zealand is divided into two long main islands. North Island is dominated by three towering volcanoes. Two of these, Mount Egmont and Mount Ruapehu, support ski areas (ski fields in Enzed), but this trip we headed to the South Island where the country's largest and most famous ski areas are.

THE CONNECTION IN Auckland from Air New Zealand to the local Mount Cook Line for the quick flight to Christchurch and then Queenstown was smooth. The flight took us southward along the ridge of the spiny Southern Alps with their snow-encrusted peaks and sharp cliffs falling quickly to the verdant green coastal plains. The farm-checkered plains spread lazily westward toward the great Pacific Ocean just barely visible in the distance.

This expansive view from seashore to mountaintop epitomizes the diversity that is New Zealand. Where else can you hike through a tropical forest in the morning and then go skiing after lunch?

The mountain valleys were flooded with sunshine and shimmering with fresh greenery. A piercingly blue long-fingered lake clutched at the base of the Remarkables, a very appropriately named range of snowcapped mountains. Queenstown nestled comfortably at the edge of Lake Wakatipu, reminding me of Lake Tahoe, Calif., as it used to be 20 years ago.

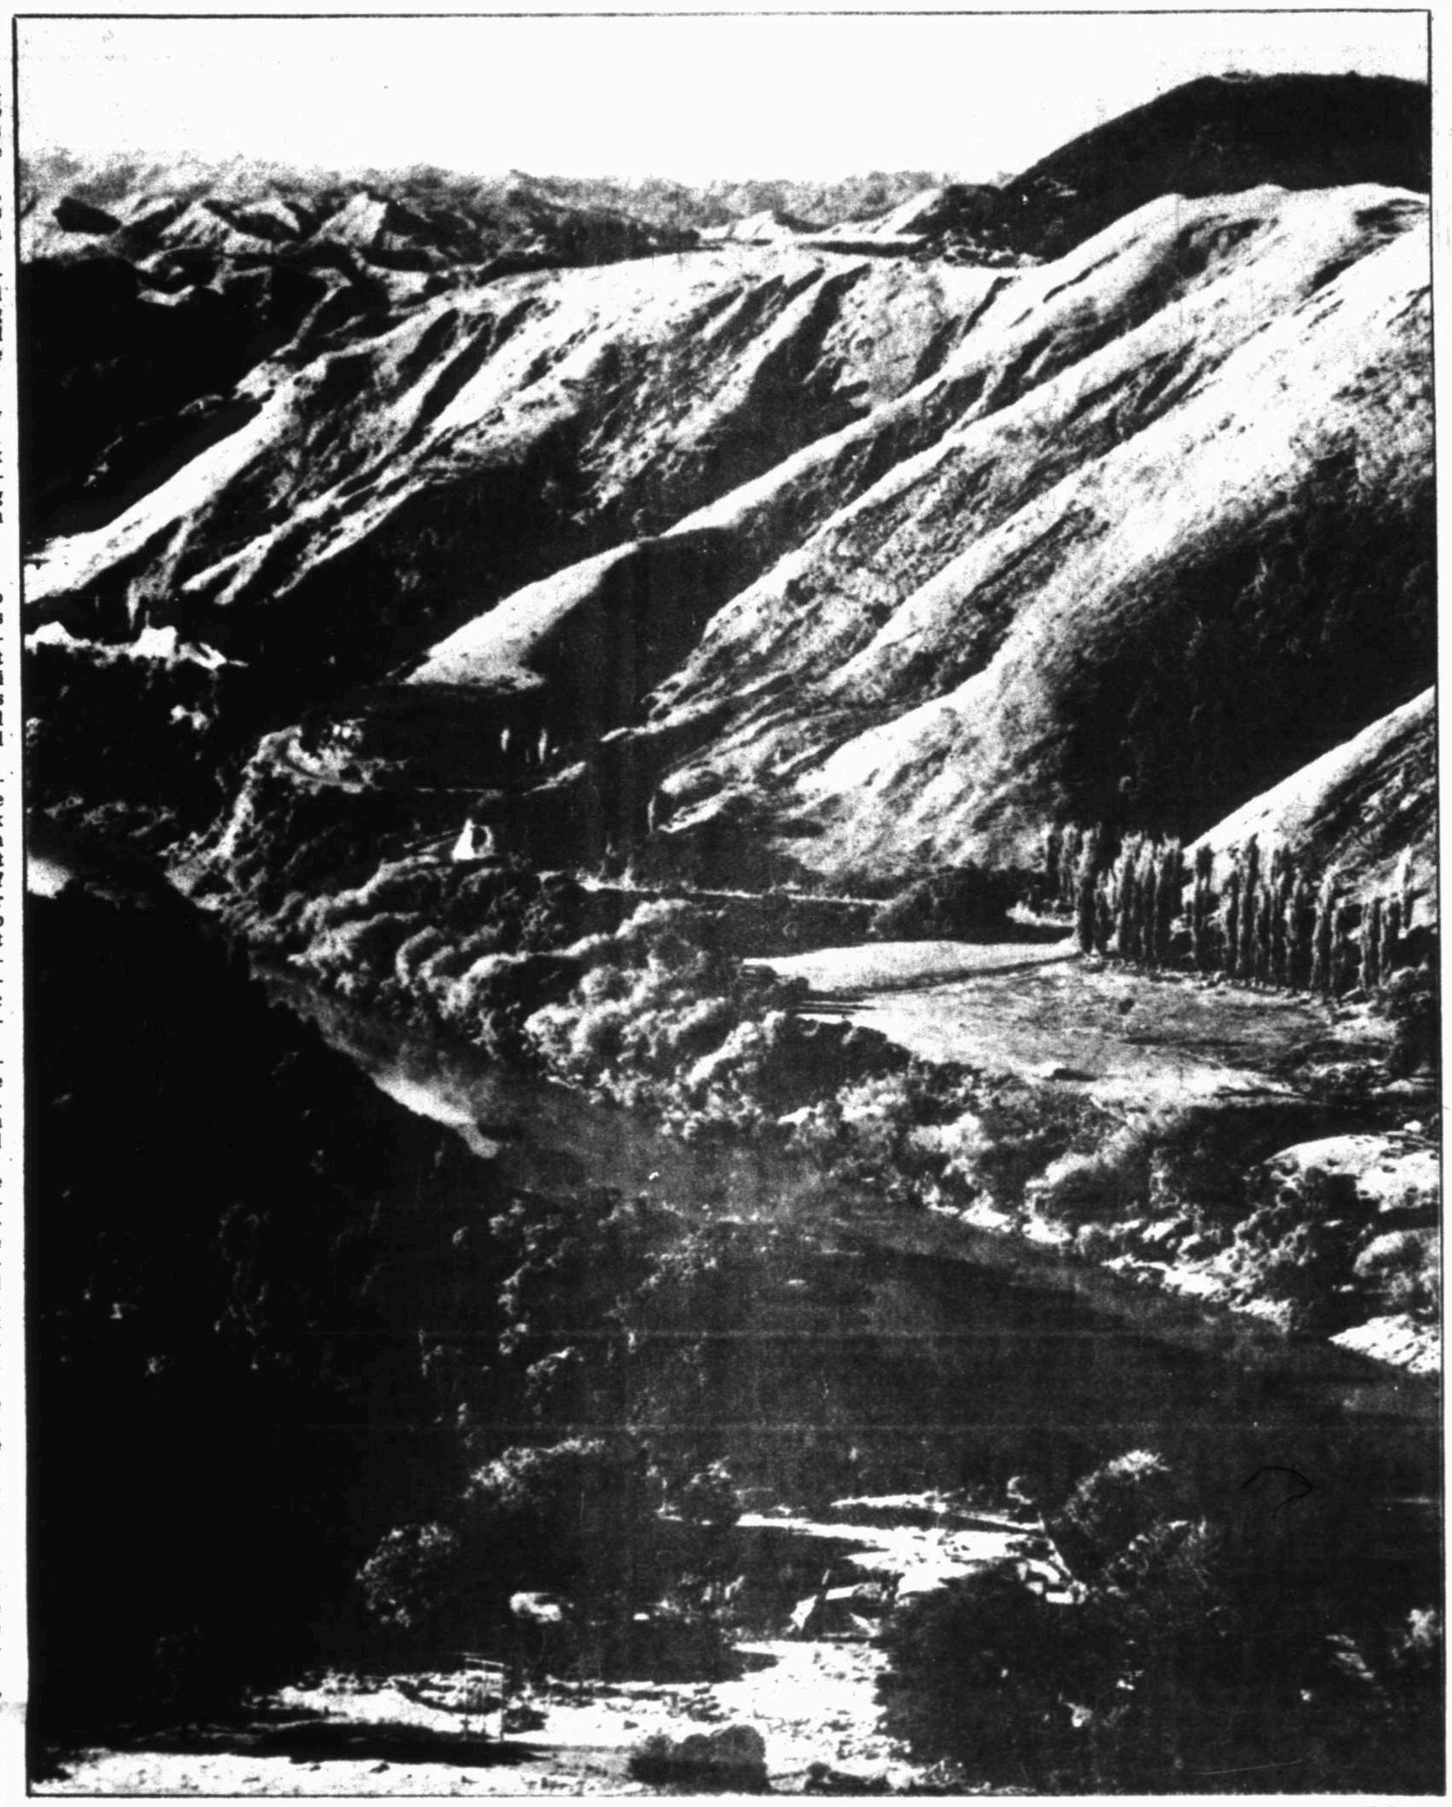

The Remarkables are soon to be host to New Zealand's newest and perhaps best ski area. Because of the high altitude and north-facing slope, this new resort should provide not only a longer and more reliable season, but also a more comfortable climate in which to ski.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS ARE a long and arduous process, so it is hard to say when this field may be open — hopefully by 1984. For those who just can't wait, guided heli-skiing trips are available now.

Just 10 miles from Queenstown, Coronet Peak rises abruptly from the valley floor. You can catch a bus from the Mount Cook Line terminal or rent a car and drive yourself up the snaking switchback road, trying to remember to stay on the left-hand side.

The base lodge, perched precariously about three-quarters of the way up the mountain, has all the amenities of a typical American ski resort — ski rental and repair, ski shop and good food and drink.

The ski school, headed by Weems Westfeldt of Taos, N.M., is the best in New Zealand, drawing its instructors from over a dozen countries.

CNS Photo

New Zealand's varied landscape ranges over its twin islands from such scenes as this typical pastoral setting through mighty fern forests, bubbling hot springs, deep fiords, Alpine views and spectacular sea coasts.

Coronet Peak is the mecca for Northern Hemisphere instructors who just can't hang up their skis for the long summer months.

Weems gave us a quick tour of the facilities that include one long double chair lift, one triple chair lift, three pomas and three rope tows, then he left us to explore on our own.

LIKE ALMOST ALL ski areas in New Zealand, Coronet Peak has virtually no trees on it. This means that you can ski down in almost any direction. There are all kinds of short ridges pitching off into narrow gullies, then opening again onto wider open faces. The fall-line permutations are innumerable. You can ski all day and never follow the same route.

And since there are no trees, there are no stumps to worry about in lean snow years or late spring — no rocks, either. The base of the mountain is covered in tussock, a thick New Zealand grass that is surprisingly easy to ski through when there is nowhere else to go. Just pretend it isn't there and you'll glide right over it.

We skied all day in the sunshine, constantly exploring new routes and varying snow conditions. Coronet Peak has it all — big bumps, little bumps, steep faces and mellow trails.

The snow ranges from corn to boiler-plate with everything in between. We even found a few untracked pitches where the snow was soft enough to give you that fresh-powder rush. It was heaven.

TO ROUND OUT this world-class ski area, nearby Queenstown offers the best apres ski life of any of the resorts in New Zealand. Queenstown is a favorite summer resort for the locals so it is rich in the amenities of any popular tourist area. Lively nightclubs, excellent cuisine and a variety of accommodations cater to all budgets.

You can spend a very pleasant day just wandering among the cozy shops enjoying the scenery or drinking and talking story with the local ski bums at Eichardts and O'Connells. For an added thrill take the Shotover jet boat ride over raging rapids and through the steep canyons of the Shotover River. Very exhilarating, but be prepared to get wet.

No ski trip to New Zealand would be complete without a run down the world-famous Tasman Glacier. It is located in Mount Cook National Park amidst New Zealand's highest and most spectacular peaks. The Mount Cook region has long enjoyed an international reputation for mountaineering and it is fast developing a similar one for its incredible skiing. The park has 21 peaks over 3,000 meters. Mount Cook, permanently enveloped in snow and ice, towers above the broad glaciers that eternally inch their way down the mountain valleys.

Since there are no ski lifts, and helicopters are forbidden in the park, skiers are flown to the top of the glacier in small Cessnas specially equipped with skis. After an exciting aerial tour of the Mount Cook area that includes a view all the way to the ocean, the plane swoops into a valley and makes a slightly uphill landing right on the glacier.

WE WERE LED by Gavin Wills, head of Alpine Guides, the sole guiding concessionaire in the park. Gavin is a remarkable fellow, locally born and raised, and he is as familiar with these mountains as most people are with their own back yards.

The snow was fresh from the night before, but it had been pretty well wind-packed. Gavin, however, knows every inch of this glacier and after leading us deftly around a few gaping crevasses he managed to find us a couple of very nice protected powdery pitches. The sun came out and we whooped and hollered for joy as we hopped our turns through the dazzling white snow.

Generally, the slope is gentle and long and any intermediate skier will be able to negotiate the terrain. Advanced skiers may find it a little too easy, but the spectacular scenery with its backdrop of towering peaks and crystaline-blue icefalls makes this trip truly memorable.

FOR THE REALLY serious (pronounced FANATICAL) skiers, heli-skiing is available in the nearby Ben Ohau range. The runs are long — 2,500 to 4,000 vertical feet — and on the right day the snow is sublime. Gavin likes to emphasize the total mountain experience, not just the skiing, so the pace is slow and easy and there is plenty of time to enjoy the spectacular scenery.

City offers more than history

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

There was a time when anyone who mentioned San Antonio received the instant reply, "Remember the Alamo." The names were almost synonymous in the minds of most Americans.

Every schoolchild listened to the tale of the heroic defense of the Alamo against the Mexican general, Santa Anna, with eyes wide and imagination running. Many cried when they realized that Davy Crockett, Jim Bowie and William Travis all died here, along with 185 others who valued freedom more than life itself.

A few weeks after the disgraceful massacre, Gen. Sam Houston led a meager force against the tyrant at San Jacinto, and his fierce cry, "Remember the Alamo," carried the Texans to victory. San Antonio was "The Cradle of Texas Liberty."

ALL THAT HAPPENED in the bloody year of 1835. Ten years later, the Republic of Texas was officially annexed to the United States. But the memory of the battle and, more importantly, the courage of the men defending the simple mission-fort, has remained as an important part of every American's heritage.

The city slumbered in its beautiful setting in the heart of what has become known as the Sun Belt for many years, looking to the military for its largest payroll. But recently all that has changed.

Concerned citizens have spearheaded a movement which is so successful that today, San Antonio, with a population of nearly 1 million, a rich Mexican heritage and a lot of careful planning, ranks 10th in size among U.S. cities, 11th for business and industry, ninth for high technology and second for light manufacturing.

It is also pulling high marks in tourist interest.

THE FIRST TIME I saw the historic city, I spent a few hours, wandered through the Alamo, walked along the Paseo del Rio, stopped for a light lunch, then got back in the car and headed for Houston, promising to come back another time — maybe.

This time, after several non-stop days, I wished only that I had at least another week to enjoy all the sights and the festivals of the city, and vowed I really would return.

San Antonio impresses with its cleanliness, its color and its light heart. Add to that some of the best food in the Southwest and the music that starts 5 miles out and goes on around the clock and you have a city that is bound to appeal to visitors. All this comes wrapped in some of the most colorful history in the West, is set down in a gentle, green countryside with the pleasant San Antonio River meandering all over the place and is served to the visitor with true Texas hospitality.

Purty, ma'am. Mighty purty.

WE CHECKED INTO the newly, beautifully restored St. Anthony Inter-Continental Hotel, right in the middle of downtown and joined the local people in celebrating the reopening of the great old classic. We listened to pleasant dowagers describe the big doings there in their debutante days, checked the table where LBJ gathered with his cronies to plan the future of the city, the state and the country and admired the fine restoration of some interesting antiques in the lobby and all through the house.

We stopped for some cooling refreshments on the great old front porch and talked about Texas history — past and future. Pleasant, indeed.

Then we headed out to see the town.

The Riverwalk, the Paseo del Rio, is where the action is. The river winds north, south, east and west some 20 feet below sea level. It is lined with lush greenery, pretty little parks, lots of hotels, sidewalk cafes and specialty shops. You can walk for miles or take any of a dozen little flat-bottomed boats and meander for even more miles.

ALMOST ANYTIME OF the year, the iver is in the midst of a celebration, perhaps it's the King's River Parade during April fiesta, the River Art show in the fall or Las Posadas during the Christmas season.

We sat at the restaurant, Little Rhein, one evening and watched a colorful performance of brightly costumed dancers and musicians on the nearby stage of La Villita, a lovingly restored original San Antonio settlement. Daytimes, you can watch local artists and artisans at their work here.

At street level, you can hire a horse-drawn carriage or take an open-air wooden trolley to tour downtown.

A visit to the Institute of Texas Cultures will put you in touch with a lot of the history of the area through fascinating dioramas and exhibits. You can talk with Indians who will tell you about the early days; listen to a blonde, Bohemian descendent of the powerful German community tell of its many contributions to the cultural life of the city. Thirty cultures in all are represented here. We found it fascinating.

YOU CAN VISIT the King William section of the city where the Germans first settled and admire the many fine stone houses which have been newly restored to provide elegant housing for yet another generation.

Or you can wander on out to the famed Lone Star Brewery and Saloon to inspect more than 3,000 buck-horn species — there's even a set from a 78-point white-tailed deer.

You can visit Roosevelt Park, where Teddy trained the original Rough Riders and drive through Fort Sam Houston where Dwight Eisenhower spent some of his happiest years.

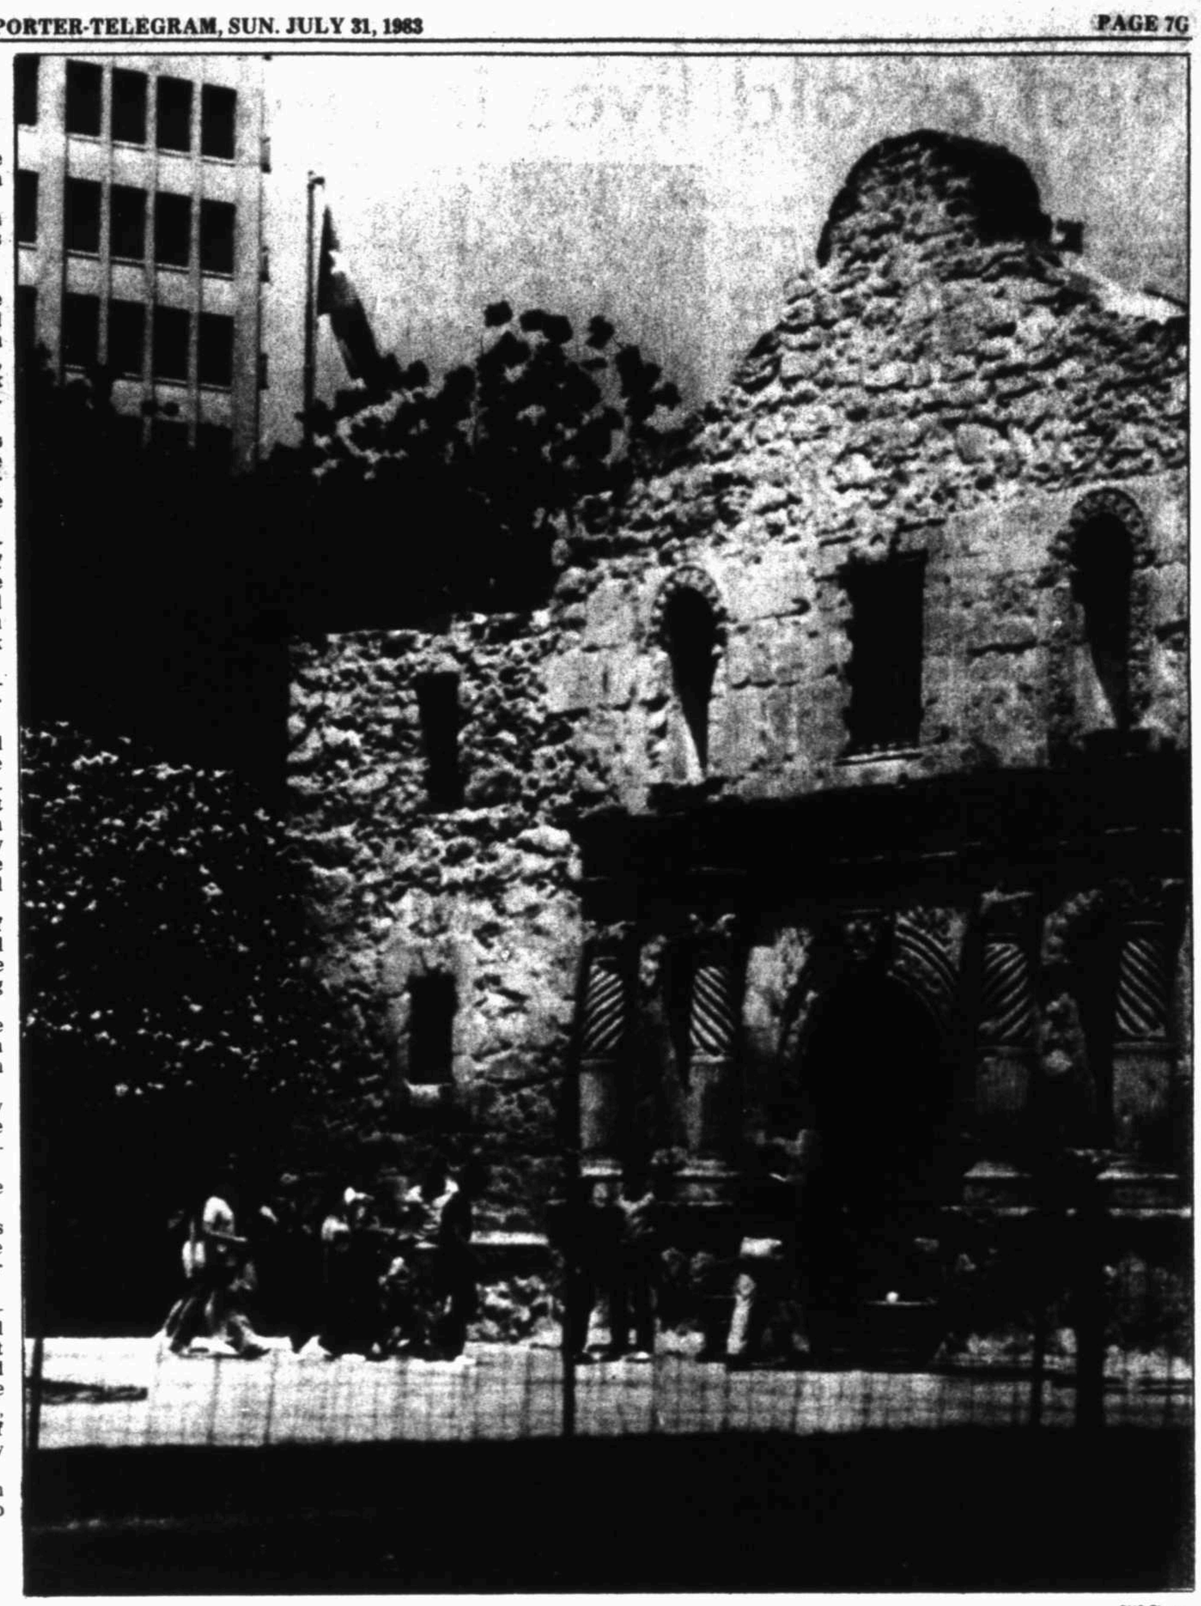

And you can wander thoughtfully through the Alamo, remembering brave men.

San Antonio's Museum of Art is winning prizes in art and architecture competitions all over the country, and its zoo and parks can entertain for days.

THERE'S ALMOST NO limit to diversions, distractions, music, food, fiestas. And if you need some help, there's a local group called, what else, Local Arrangements, to give advice and make arrangements. Meantime, you can write the San Antonio Convention and Visitors Bureau, Box 2277, San Antonio, Texas 78298, for lots of colorful brochures and ideas about how to enjoy the city and the famed Hill Country.

"Y'all hurry back, now, Y'hear?" they say when you have to leave. And they mean it. San Antonio needs more time to enjoy it all.

For years the Alamo was almost the only visitor attraction in San Antonio, but all that has changed recently. Now San Antonio is exciting for its vibrant present as well as its dramatic past.

Best of old lives in new Tijuana

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

TIJUANA, Mexico — Some fixtures seemed familiar. So much was different, though, I felt I had somehow wandered into a strange place.

There remained, for instance, the photographer behind a vintage camera the size of a suitcase. A staple of yore, he and his sleepy brown burro waited for tourists wishing to take home proof that they had spent time in the world's busiest border city.

"Tijuana 1983 Mexico" read a sign on the backdrop behind the little animal with its zebralike stripes. But of course this kind of instant souvenir-making has been around as long as the equipment that still produces it.

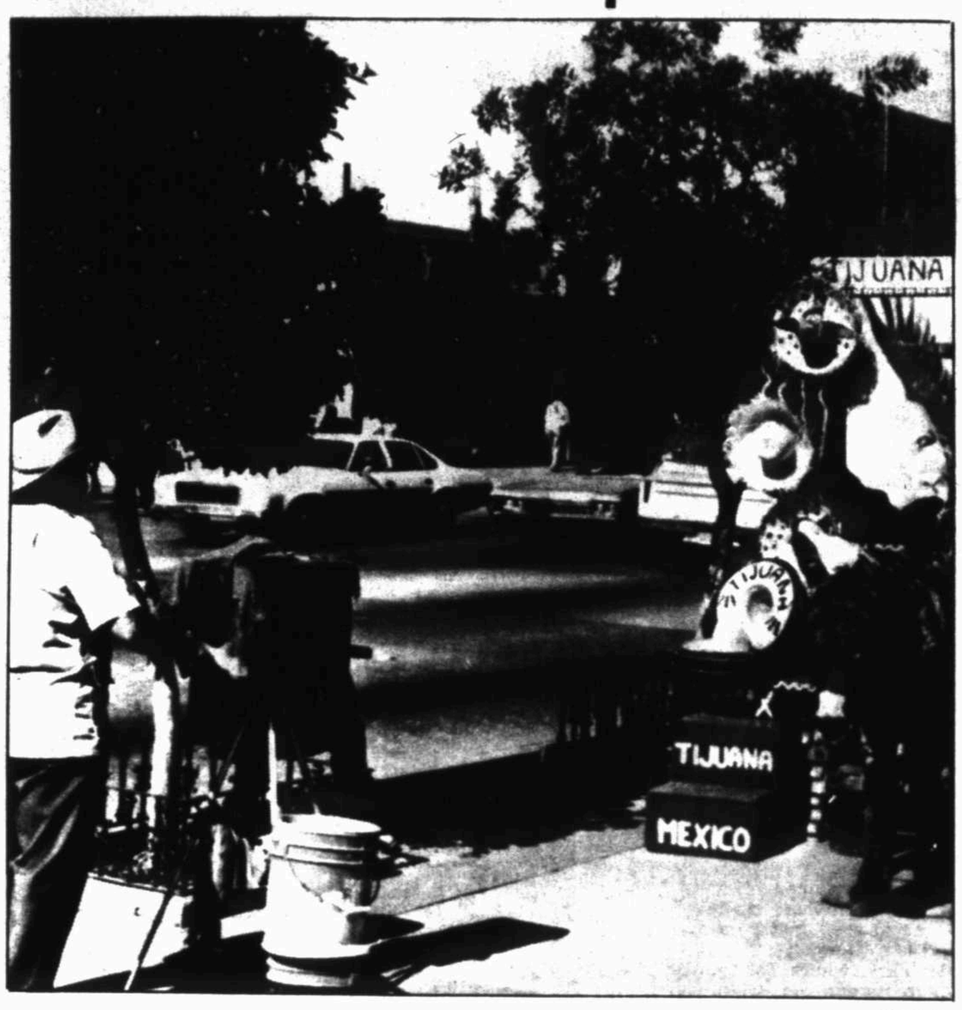

A smiling couple selling expertly made paper flowers of every hue in the rainbow also tugged at my memory, reminding me of similar vendors encountered long ago. And I wondered, could these two be their kids?

THE ITEMS FOR sale at nearby shops bore a familiar look as well: duty-free tequila and rum; pottery plant stands shaped as elephants; baskets of every size and shape; colorful serapes; hand-embroidered shirts and ceramic tiles; cheap trinkets and superb metalwork. This and more at amazingly low prices.

All this I saw along a single block from which I also spotted other sights long associated with Tijuana: an open-sided cafe full of visitors sipping Mexico's renowned brews, a tiny dental office, an equally small building with a sign, in English, that read "Law Office, Marriages & Divorces," and that arabesque landmark, the Fronton Palace where jai alai, the fastest ball game ever invented, is played.

My vantage point was a stretch of Avenida Revolucion, the main downtown artery. But frankly, it was not the dusty and potholed street stored in my mind's eye.

The fact is that dynamic Tijuana these days, emerging from a $100 million modernization effort, bears little if any resemblance to what it was a decade or even a few years ago. By and large, the transformation has been very positive.

CNS Photo

Tijuana's new look includes such refurbished buildings as the Palacio Fronton, below, recently redecorated both inside and out. Jai alai games are played here from May through September. Familiar scenes remain, too, such as the photographer and his zebra-striped donkey, above.

IF YOUR LAST visit dates to the 1970s or further back, you'll find it hard to recognize the place. I fit in this category.

Take Revolucion, for example. It's still a mecca for shoppers and others, but it's no longer the only street accessible to or favored by visitors. The pavement is smooth now. Well-kept trees and shrubs grace the spotless sidewalks. There are benches on which to rest feet tired from shopping or simply to pause and take in the startling changes. Lights control traffic at all central intersections. Large lamps loom above street signs on modernistic traffic light stands. The majority of the shops along the avenue are very clean, and the neatly arranged goods usually have easily seen labels with prices in Mexican pesos as well as U.S. dollars.

Moving around elsewhere in town I found numerous newly paved or resurfaced streets and highways; impressive new homes in Chapultepec, Lomas de Agua Caliente and other posh neighborhoods and, more significant, several well-kept, low-cost housing units built recently where hovels once sat; also, new private and public structures, such as gleaming office complexes, sports facilities, clinics and the spacious main bus terminal.

MANY ASSEMBLY PLANTS and factories have sprouted as well, primarily in the La Mesa district near Tijuana's bustling international airport. Though the roster includes a Belgian bicycle factory and a contingent of American enterprises, so many of these plants are owned or supervised by the Japanese that many stores and restaurants in town boast at least one employee familiar with that language.

From the broad plaza in front of the recently opened Tijuana Cultural Center you can capture at a glance a measure of this city's amazing transformation.

Across the street from the center stands the very modern Plaza Rio Tijuana shopping mall, one of Mexico's best. Beyond, down a wide avenue and amid lawns, trees and flowers, rise the new twin Agua Caliente glass skyscrapers; also government buildings, the city's new library and General Hospital, several fine restaurants and the first-class El Camino Real and Lucerna hotels — this and more on land which was often underwater before the massive Tia Juana River flood control channel project was started.

ON THIS VISIT I also was able to confirm something I had ample opportunity to observe during a recent two-week tour around Mexico's mountainous and balmy interior: For dollar-bearing visitors, the favorable currency exchange translates into very reasonable prices for locally manufactured goods as well as for accommodations, transportation, dining and other services. That and the country's proximity to ours make a Mexican vacation one of the best bargains anywhere.

Without a doubt, the most impressive sight and experience while getting acquainted with the new Tijuana is the Cultural Center — a dazzling mind opener that pleases the eye and even one's appetite.

An instant landmark after its opening last October, the center fills a void while giving Tijuana what few border cities elsewhere in the world have: a handsome complex where visitors can take a comprehensive and enlightening look at the country's outstanding cultural, social and scenic diversity.

DESIGNED BY PEDRO Ramirez Vaquez, the noted architect behind Mexico City's famous National Anthropology Museum, and his colleague, Manuel Rosen Morrison, the complex includes a very attractive and spacious restaurant offering very fine food at reasonable prices, a broad plaza for outdoor performances and attractions as well as several quality shops. A 1,045-seat concert hall may soon be part of the center.

Two other components — the most important at that — are also the most unusual and striking.

One is the Omnitheater, an 85-foot-high sphere held by a stylized hand that symbolizes the Earth housing a world of culture. Here a spectacular and literally breathtaking show called "The Land of the Sun" combines multi-image projection on a 180-degree screen with an Omnimax film to take viewers on a thrilling journey through some of Mexico's many outstanding old and new sights.

Similar to but, in my view, more dramatic than the old Cinerama movies, the film portion prompts such a realistic sensation of air and ground travel that gasps from the audience are heard at every one of the several performances scheduled daily; every day at 2 p.m. the presentation's superior sound track is in English. Admission, subject to currency fluctuations, is about $2.40 for adults and free for kids under 5.

THE OTHER STANDOUT is the museum on the second level of the center's main building. You reach it over a broad ramp that gradually climbs 23 feet to the exhibit area where displays span 3,500 years of Mexican art, music and crafts. Each of three sections devoted to northern Mexico, the central plateau and the south and the southeast regions has representative artifacts, photographs and pieces of art identified in both Spanish and English.

An adjoining reference library on the country may be consulted without charge and a gift shop on the ground floor has books and reproductions for sale. Temporary rather than permanent exhibits are being used so as to offer a larger sampling of Mexico's artistic variety and accomplishments. Admission to the museum is about 45 cents; as in the case of other Mexican and European museums, personable English-speaking guides gladly take families or a group of friends around the exhibits for a small gratuity.

Time changed Lake Tahoe

By JOHN MCCAFFERTY
By The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

SOUTH LAKE TAHOE, Calif. — Every time I see the name "South Lake Tahoe" I experience a disquieting time warp. Through the confusion of buildings and somewhere beyond the blare of horns I see the Tahoe of my youth, a mountain wonderland for a 15-year-old from the coast, the site of the most idyllic vacation of my life.

I was a guest of the Rose family, whose older son, Ron, was my best friend. We spent six nearly delirious weeks at a hillside cabin nestled among tall pines and craggy peaks that made the sun come up late and set early. Rather, we used the cabin — a bumpy drive up the road from Fallen Leaf Lake — as a jumping-off place for adventures.

After idling for a couple of days to adjust to the altitude, we took long hikes (seldom encountering other people) over mountains and through meadows to stunningly beautiful back-country lakes like Gilmore and Echo, which we had to ourselves for fishing, rock-throwing, or idle thoughts as we lounged on our sleeping bags, looked at the sky through pine needles and dreamed of our girlfriends at home. And we backpacked to more remote lakes, principally Lake Aloha, and caught trout by trolling behind a large inflatable boat that we rowed around the lake (our host, Dick, thoughtfully brought such heavy items on rented horses). We soaked up sun, marveled at the Teton-like crags that surround the lake and caught fish with an ease that I have not known since.

I stood on the granite rocks casting a lure into the icy water of Aloha and, amazingly, I hooked a very large trout. I reeled it in too hastily and, not having a net, soon had a fat German brown flopping all over the rocks. It was gorgeous!

On another excursion, Ron and I determined that it would be macho (although we didn't know the word, or even the concept, then) to hike the length of the forbidding and somewhat mysterious Rockbound Valley.

We ran through Mosquito Pass, a place so aptly named that we could scarcely draw a breath at the summit, there were so many of the little fiends in the air. Then we looked down the valley that lay before us and gained some understanding of what early Western explorers must have felt.

The scene was grand: the trail disappearing among big pines that gave way down the valley to smaller trees, many of them gnarly and blighted white, boulders strewn down the center of the valley as if dropped from the sky, bluish haze blurring the lower elevations in the direction of Tahoe.

The first day of hiking was ordinary, if pleasantly lonely, but in short order (1) I broke Ron's prized fishing rod while casting (no fish); (2) our Boy Scout cookware melted in an overly hot fire, charring our "biscuits"; (3) we nearly froze the first night in China Flats, shaking so hard in our sleeping bags that our teeth chattered; (4) we heard strange sounds throughout the second night from abandoned, bear-clawed cabins in Rubicon Springs, so that we got little sleep and were virtually zombies trying to hike to civilization on the third day, and (5) an old rancher picked us up in his truck and didn't mind at all taking the silver dollars we offered him for gas money — when he was going our way anyway.

A dedication to building it right

A day in the life of a construction superintendent

It used to be that a building grew from tape measures, plumb bobs and plans. Today, computers have not only infiltrated the office, but are present in the office construction scene, used to analyze and to itemize a detailed schedule.

"That's the Bible," Jim Lawson said of his 'critical path' programming, a computer model he uses to map out the jobs in completing a large office building — and when the jobs should be started or finished.

As construction superintendent at the $10 million, 16-floor Independence Plaza office site downtown, Lawson's day will be spent 'walking the site' with his project engineer, lending representative, coordinating architect, or project manager.

His job is to "make sure the right things are done in the right order" in completing the 157,000 square feet of lease space, lobby areas, and a set of two atriums extending in a 'V' on two top sides of the building.

Lawson is trying to run a "good, smooth flowing, and safe project." First, seven levels of garage space will be poured in concrete. Elevator walls are being installed, and last week the crew worked at an 'erector-set' job, putting up a 17-story tower crane.

THE LOBBY AND the top ten floors of Independence Plaza will contain offices. The first floor will be recessed so any custom flooring or computer conduits and other special wiring can be installed.

Native crushed limestone pre-cast panels to sheath the structure will be set with jewel-like bronze glass. The building's advances include one of Midland's first full sprinklering systems, electronic 'credit-card' access, a fire command station, parabolic lighting, and multi-zone heating and cooling.

Independence Plaza will add 157,000 square feet of 'deluxe' office space to Midland's current supply — which amounts to about 6.6 million square feet of space, reporting 82 percent occupancy. The Independence Plaza space will lease for $18 to $21 per square foot in the third quarter of '84, according to the Midland Chamber of Commerce Office Study.

On the job at 6:30 a.m., Lawson has crews working by 7:30. They stop at 4 p.m. and he works from then until 5 p.m. "It's a quiet time to work out problems, cheçk scheduling, and plan the next day's procedure after assessing our progress," he said.

WALKING THE jobsite about six times a day, with each trip a bit longer as more floors are added to the building, Lawson said he doesn't break for lunch, but picks up a sandwich and eats in the office.

He can't afford to take even 30 minutes off because something might go wrong. He rarely has left the job since since last Spring, when there were only four people working it.

Jim Lawson has broad experience in the construction field — 32 years of it. He worked for just three developers in that time. The crews he has worked with have been just as important in completing a building as any other factor.

He was the superintendent who built The Guest Quarters Hotel, Post Oak Central One, and Lummus Tower, all ultramodern Houston structures. He spent his first 20 years with one company, constructing banks, shopping centers, water treatment plants and academic buildings.

He built First City National Bank of Midland's second tower while employed by Harvey Construction, Houston.

WHEN HE LEFT Houston his crew had varying amounts of experience working for him, from five to 25 years. Lawson knew Houston's labor and its unions so he was a bit reluctant to leave in '79. He brought some crew members with him from Houston.

Lawson's not wasting any time in tearing into his latest challenge. He said Thursday, though, that drilling through rock under downtown Midland has put his Judwin Construction Co. crew 15 days behind its projected pace.

The drilling contractor spent eight hours drilling the rock for a pierhole, and only made three inches' progress. Under the site lies 17 feet of hard caliche, and below that, hard limestone conglomerate.

Lawson said he will get back on the right side of his computer-generated building schedule in the next few months.

He plans to beat the timetable and have tenants in Independence Plaza by September 1984. There were 393 days in the original completion schedule, set to end in October '84. Lawson wants to "beat that deadline by 30 to 60 days."

"I'M LOOKING TO pick up those 15 days between the second and third floors (in late August) and get back on the 'critical path,'" he said, of completion phases in the work. He has estimated the number of days required for each part of the job in making the computer model, and he can speed up certain parts of the process.

Speed, or lack of it, affects the budget on any project. "I was taught to get on a job — then get it over with," Lawson said, "because time and overhead costs money."

"A good crew makes a good superintendent; craftsmen aren't as readily available in Midland," he said.

Lawson has favorable comments on Midland and on his 30-man crew here. Two basic contractors, Mid-West Electric, Midland, and The Emde Company, Houston, are handling electrical and mechanical items on the building plans' call-out sheets. "Not having to look over their shoulder all the time," is the greatest advantage of competent 'subs,' he said.

THESE TWO COMPANIES' work, Lawson said, has been generally flawless. He also orders materials from Hirshfield Structural Steel, San Angelo, and Texas Featherlite, El Paso. And he ordered the tower crane — But the $400,000 machine took nine truckloads and parts were still arriving a few days ago, waylaid and overdue.

There is a lot of money involved in building a high-rise office structure. Lawson tries to keep his costs at a minimum, even though he is working on a 'negotiable' basis instead of a fixed bid. The project can go to a ceiling of $12 million from its base cost of $10 million, if the owner or architect decide to make any changes along the way.

The $10 million figure already includes overhead and profits as well as costs for materials, insurance, permits, building fees, taxes, et cetera.

Contrasting with the negotiable bid is a fixed-bid job. For this kind of bidding, there is no allowance for a cost overrun. The construction firm agrees to do the job for a set price.

"He (a superintendent) had better be real shrewd," Lawson said, "because he could miss 1,000 yards of concrete and be out half a million dollars."

AS THE GIANT CRANE swings by The Summit's mirrored-glass face, very close to it, Lawson notes that his company is heavily insured even in the unlikely event they damage a building nearby. "Contractors with inadequate insurance are driven out of business" by mishaps, Lawson said.

Lawson wonders whether the work will be here in Midland when he finishes this project. He was dismayed when the First National Bank's new tower, I. David Porras' skyscraper, and the MGF project at the old Petroleum Club site were all canceled.

He said he hopes "Judwin Construction continues to grow and increase its building capacity. If so, I will work for them again. If not, I'll throw my hat back in the ring."

Residential construction throughout Texas on rise

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Residential construction in Texas has taken an upward turn in recent months, helping to push the total of building permits for the January-April period above $5.8 billion.

Figures compiled by the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Texas at Austin show total non-residential and residential construction authorized for the January-April period at $5,861,508,000, up 22 per cent compared to the four-month 1982 period.

Value of non-residential construction fell during the period by 11 per cent, to $1,809,309,000 compared to 1982.

Total dwelling unit value rose 54 per cent to $3,338,617,000, with the number of dwelling units rising 52 percent, with a total of 933,820.

Single-family homes increased 58 percent, with a value of $2,087,672,000.

Real estate license applications have been increasing during fiscal 1983, the Texas Real Estate Commission reports, after a drop apparently related to economic conditions.

In the first three quarters (September-May) of fiscal 1983, TREC has received 6,361 applications for brokers' licenses, and 17,123 applications for salemen's licenses.

For the comparable period in fiscal 1982, the figures were 3,590 and 11,526.

State Board of Insurance has taken under advisement a proposal by the Texas Automobile Insurance Plan to allow premium payments on an installment basis, with insurance agents required to remit the gross, rather than net, premium on assigned risks placed in the pool.

Texas Premium Finance Association opposed the proposal at a hearing, with insurance agents' associations opposing the provisions regarding remittance of gross premiums (which they contend would delay receipt of commissions).

SBI had indicated it would approve the installment plan, but would delay action on the remittance of premium question; however, the attorney for the insurance plan argued SBI must approve both or neither, so both were delayed for further study.

Texas Industrial Commission is seeking clarification from Attorney General Jim Mattox regarding the effect of changes on industrial revenue bond issues due to amended language on such bonds.

TIC is moving to implement a bond program through the Texas Small Business Industrial Development Corp. to provide assistance to small businesses.

TIC Executive Director Charles Wood says the program's operation is "very technical," and is linked to the U. S. Small Business Administration.

But the effort is aimed at providing long-term financing to projects of $750,000 or less, Wood says.

"This is the first time we've done this," he adds.

TIC is reviewing approximately 80 requests for assistance; some of the projects aren't expected to qualify for the program.

Wood says quick action by Mattox is being sought since SBA will end its participation as a second lien holder in the program on Sept. 30.

Lenders throughout Texas are being informed by the Texas Housing Agency of THA's plans for a $210 million single-family home bond issue.

THA Administrator Earline Jewett says the agency hopes to sell the bonds, which are to provide loans for mortgages for low- and moderate-income families, at THA's August 24 bond issue.

THA also is working on a $25 million bond issue for multi-family housing, with that issue expected to be approved in August or September.

THA issued $40.8 million in multi-family bonds earlier this year, but hasn't had any single-family issues in the current calendar or fiscal year.

"Interest rates were too high until early in the year," Jewett says.

Texas Association of Business has asked the State Board of Insurance to delay action on using 100 percent of payroll for calculation of worker's compensation insurance premiums, to allow completion of a study of work on that subject by the National Council on Compensation Insurance.

NCCI contends SBI adopt unlimited payroll instead of the $300 per week maximum now in use; TAB contends such a change could result in increases and inequities for Texas employers.

NCCI estimated 87 percent of Texas employers would receive reductions — and 12 percent increases — under the change.

Tax Refunds

By DONALD J. MASSOGLIA

Did you pay an alternative minimum tax as a result of adjusted itemized deductions and a capital gain deduction? You may be entitled to a refund.

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS), in a private ruling, allowed an adjustment to be made to the tax preference items for the alternative minimum tax, where the tax treatment giving use to those items did not result in a reduction of the taxpayer's tax (tax benefit rule).

In this ruling, the taxpayer claimed a net capital gains deduction and various itemized deductions. As a result of these deductions, the taxpayer had no regular tax liability but did incur an alternative minimum tax liability.

In the case of a noncorporate taxpayer, the capital gains preference is equal to the net capital gain deduction (60 percent of the long-term capital gain) for the taxable year.

The preference amount of adjusted itemized deductions is equal to the amount by which all the taxpayer's allowable itemized deductions except certain ones exceed 60 percent of adjusted gross income.

The capital gain deduction preference item reduces the taxpayer's adjusted gross income and therefore increases the amount of his preference item for adjusted itemized deductions. This result occurs because the determination of adjusted itemized deductions is a mathematical function of adjusted gross income.

Thus, if a taxpayer has both the adjusted itemized deductions preference and the capital gains preference, a dollar of capital gains preference generates more than one dollar of alternative minimum taxable income.

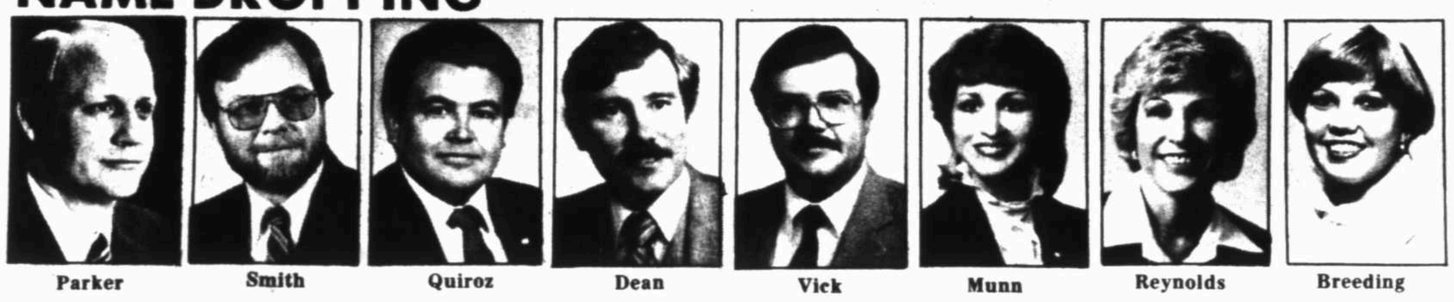

To avoid the tax increase resulting solely from the reduction in adjusted gross income caused by the net capital gain deduction, the IRS allowed the taxpayer to compute the adjusted itemized deduction preference without regard to the net capital gain deduction.

The preference for adjusted itemized deductions was eliminated for years beginning after December 31, 1982. Refund claims may be filed for open years (generally 1980, 1981, and 1982) if this situation existed.

Americans recycle 4.8 billion aluminum cans

PITTSBURGH, Pa.— American can collectors earned $47 million dollars for returning 4.8 billion used aluminum beverage cans to Alcoa for recycling during the first six months of 1983.

Ron Hawkins, president of Alcoa Recycling Company, said the 202 million pounds of aluminum cans recovered by Alcoa's national recycling activity were about equal to the annual production of one average—size aluminum smelting plant. Recycling programs operated by can makers, brewers, super—markets, soft drink bottlers and others will recover about 55 percent of the aluminum cans produced this year, Hawkins believes. "At this rate, recycling will soon help the aluminum can support its own growth without the addition of new smelters," he said.

Hawkins estimates over two million Americans recycle cans regularly, with millions more collecting cans part-time. Since 1970, can recycling has created about 30,000 new jobs at 6,000 recycling centers, at aluminum companies, and in the transportation and heavy equipment industries that tie the recycling activity together.

Alcoa melts the used cans and rolls them into new can sheet for sale to can makers and beverage firms. The recycling loop from used cans at a recycling center to new cans on store shelves is often closed within 120 days, Hawkins said.

"Can recycling is big business, and big public participation," Hawkins said. "It's becoming more important all the time. Recycling is here to stay for two good reasons. First, the public is demanding that business use resources wisely, and that we recover our used materials and put them back to work. The other reason is that recycling aluminum makes good economic sense.

"Recycling saves 95 percent of the energy required to produce aluminum from ore. Recycling fights litter, and eases the burden on municipal landfills. Dependence on foreign ore sources is reduced. Can collectors or their organizations earn cash for their efforts. Consumers get the package they want and aluminum companies recover the metal they need. Everybody wins and nobody loses."

FINANCIAL ENERGY AT WORK.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

It is a pleasure to announce that the meritorious performance of Petroplex Savings during the first half of 1983 has surpassed the record growth in deposits and revenues established in the last half of 1982. We are proud to have become the first savings and loan association in history to exceed one-hundred million dollars in assets during the first year of operation.

The future looks even brighter thanks to the depth and diversity of strengths displayed by Management and the reliability and determination of our employees. We will continue to follow the policy of sound financial planning that has proven successful since our beginning, as well as follow an aggressive survivor's approach to deregulation. Effective control of our net interest margin coupled with our demonstrated ability to generate non-interest income will allow us throughout the remainder of this year to attract additional investment capital, lendable funds and quality real estate lending opportunities.

All of us at The Petroplex Savings Banking Centers appreciate your support and invite you to be a part of our success. I assure you, we will spare no energy in meeting your financial needs.

Quality is the name of the game at Troy Davis'

Owner Troy Davis stands before storefront sign located directly across from Gibson's. Visit Troy Davis at 3102 West Cuthbert in Midland or phone 689-0761 for information.

Troy Davis' Quik 1 Hour Photo Service, located directly across from Gibson's, has several new additons to its' home-owned phototography lab. One recent addition is a refrigerator freezer. Mr Davis explains, "many people do not realize that film in a camera, closed in a car in the West Texas summer heat, will spoil. The refrigerator arrests the aging process of the film, keeping it fresh. Film which is nearing its' expiration date will remain fresh if Troy Davis offers film at cost at his photo lab through the purchase of a V.I.P. card. For example, the cost of one roll of Kodak film (24 exposures) is $3.59. With the V.I.P. card, the cost is reduced to $2.35: a savings of $1.24 per roll. All V.I.P. cards previously issued will be honored. Furthermore, each time the Troy Davis V.I.P. card is used, toward the processing of a 24 or 36 exposure roll of film, a complimentary mini-album is extended.

Passport pictures are now available which take "a whole three or four minutes", explains Troy Davis. Since the renewal of passports is now at ten year intervals this three or four minutes of time is wisely spent.

Midland's only home-owned lab is also offering reproductions of black and white photos. These reproductions are available when the original negative has been lost, misplaced or ruined. Antique photos can now be reproduced through a Kodak process at an affordable price.

Troy Davis' Quik 1 Hour Photo Service is the only lab in Midland which is open on Saturday until 6:00 p.m. This allows for "same day photographs" - one hour service. Processing is available six days a week: open from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

AT&T shareholders may be in for a mess

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Pity the 3.2 million shareholders who own the 930 million shares of American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

For years, they owned stock in a corporate empire with more assets than anybody in the world. Its price was fairly stable, and its dividends were generous. A person could count on it, even for retirement.

On the first day of 1984, however, the behemoth will be broken up into eight parts — AT&T and seven regional telephone companies. Most shareholders will get stock in them all. In the words of one analyst, "What's coming for them is a mess."

For AT&T shareholders — 95 percent of whom own fewer than 500 shares — the big question is what to do, and whether to do it now or later. And the advice they are getting provides neither solace nor solution.

In the sphere of general advice, for example, there is this from E.F. Hutton: "The wisest approach is to recognize the value of AT&T's national telecommunications network by holding all eight pieces of the AT&T pie — at least for six to 12 months after the divestiture has occurred."

BUT THERE IS also this from First Albany Corp., another brokerage house: "A strategy of 'hold and maintain' will not achieve traditional AT&T results."

AT&T stock is now selling at about $61, but the New York brokerage of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. says that the stock is really worth $85, based on projected earnings and dividend yields for each of the eight companies after the break-up.

Yet such calculations have their critics. Nothing more than "hieroglyphics," sniffs Harry Edelson, analyst at First Boston Corp. in New York. "It's absurd."

What's an AT&T stockholder to do?

Before guessing price movement and ruminating on which regional phone companies would be best, AT&T stockholders will need to know how the breakup will affect their holdings.

Upon divestiture, shareholders will continue to own the same number of shares in AT&T. In addition, for every 10 AT&T shares owned, they will receive one share in each of the seven regional telephone holding companies. Regional company stock certificates will be mailed in mid-February next year.

PEOPLE WHO OWN fewer than 10 shares will keep the same number of shares in AT&T. Because these shareholders are entitled to less than a full share in each of the regional companies, however, they will receive cash instead of fractional shares in the seven regionals.

The same principle on fractional shares applies to stockholders with larger holdings as well. Someone who currently owns 65 AT&T shares, for example, would retain 65 AT&T shares, receive six shares in each of the seven regional firms, and receive cash for the remaining fractional interests in the regionals.

The amount of cash stockholders get for their fractional shares will depend on what an agent for AT&T receives when selling them on the open market.

Stockholders who own at least 10, but fewer than 500 shares get special treatment. In January next year, they will be sent cards asking them to choose among several options. Those stockholders can choose whether to: hold their shares in all seven regional firms, receiving cash for fractional interests; or consolidate their holdings in certain regional firms by selling shares in one to buy shares in the other. AT&T shares, however, cannot be exchanged for more regional company stock. And regional company stock cannot be traded in for more AT&T stock.

AT&T will act as a clearinghouse for consolidating the holdings. People who choose to consolidate will pay 25 cents for every regional company share sold and another 25 cents for every share bought. The price for these shares will be determined by the average of each regional company's high and low prices on the New York Stock Exchange on the day the option card is received for processing. The option card must be returned by mid-April.

The option card will be sent solely to people who hold their own AT&T stock certificates. People whose AT&T shares are held in "street name" — meaning it is held by an investment company on their behalf — will rely on options determined by their brokerage.

LIKE AT&T, the regional companies will offer dividend reinvestment programs that allow stockholders to buy shares at a discount without paying brokerage commissions.

As for the important issue of taxes: AT&T has asked the Internal Revenue Service to rule that the distribution of regional company shares is not taxable. But stockholders will face tax consequences for any gain or loss in the sale of fractional shares as well as the sale of whole shares when holdings are consolidated.

In mid- to late-November this year, shares in the "new" AT&T and the seven regional companies will trade on a so-called "when-issued" basis on the New York Stock Exchange. That will allow people to either buy or sell shares in any of the eight companies before divestiture actually takes place. And it will allow investors to lock in a sales or purchase price before stock certificates in the various phone companies are actually distributed next February.

Cash settlement of these trades, however, won't occur until February. (Thus, stockholders who sell certain regional shares in the "when-issued" market must hand over to their brokers those regional company stock certificates after receiving them in February from AT&T.)

The AT&T stockholder has several choices, and the easiest one is obvious: sell out now and avoid the mess.

THE PROBLEM, say some analysts, is that so many investors have chosen the cop-out route that AT&T stock is artificially depressed. Confusion and fear of the future are the culprits.

"Uncertainty over the next several months is going to hurt the performance of AT&T," says Andrew Silton, analyst at First Albany Corp. of Albany, N.Y.

The optimism about AT&T and its spun-off parts rests primarily on two predictions: State regulators will allow rate increases sufficient to furnish the regional companies with healthy profits, and the telecommunications market — including the bread-and-butter telephone business — should continue to grow steadily.

But AT&T stock now sells significantly below its most recent high of $70.25 in late January this year and its all-time high (adjusted for subsequent stock splits) of $75 in July 1964.

Even an analyst such as Harry Edelson of First Boston, who warns against too much effusiveness about AT&T's prospects, contends that AT&T stock is "about as cheap as it's going to get."

THOSE PREPARED to stick with their AT&T stock for a hile face at least three choices:

—Simply accept and hold on to shares in the "new" AT&T and the seven regional companies. Some analysts recommend this course because they foresee an excellent future for all the portions of the current Bell System, even after divestiture. At least initially, holding on to all the shares will involve the least cost and will allow investors time to assess prospects for both AT&T and the regionals.

—Select stocks of those companies whose future looks best. Consolidation makes particular sense for small investors who want to compile a more sizable block in fewer companies.

Although consolidation through AT&T's clearinghouse operation probably will be the cheapest route, investors who wish to take action earlier can buy or sell in the "when-issued" market that begins in November. Investors with small blocks of stock, however, will find commissions for "when-issued" trading exceptionally expensive.

Choosing among the regional companies should prove difficult. Although there are rough estimates of how assets will be divided between regionals and AT&T — each regional will have between $14 billion and $20 billion in assets — balance sheets and dividend policies for each have not been announced. Such detailed financial information will be mailed to stockholders sometime in November.

Moreover, regionals with the best growth outlook may not prove to be the best stock values. After "when-issued" trading begins, prices for favored regionals may run up faster than warranted.

—Exchange AT&T shares for an interest in so-called "unit trusts" and mutual funds that will invest in AT&T and regional telephone company shares. Merrill Lynch early this month was the first to offer this investment option with what it has nicknamed the "Humpty Dumpty Fund" (because it puts the phone company back together again) and which is officially named "The Equity Income Fund, First Exchange Series — AT&T Shares."

Going this route offers simplicity and convenience. Investors who wish to invest in all Bell System companies need not grapple with eight stocks and 32 dividend checks a year. The unit trust will hold roughly 10 "new" AT&T shares for every one in each regional company.

The unit trust also is available through co-sponsors Dean Witter Reynolds, Prudential-Bache Securities and Shearson-American Express.

Rice paddy U playing important role

By The Los Angeles Times Washington Post News Service

URASA, Japan (DPA) — At first there was little notice when the Japanese alpine express Joetsu, which links Tokyo and Niigata on the Sea of Japan, began to stop here.

But this small rural community, 112 miles northwest of the capital, has recently begun playing a significant role in the future planning of large-scale Japanese industry. And the Joetsu express is shuttling some of Japan's brightest economic minds here for a bold venture in business education.

In the middle of rice and melon fields an elite university was opened here in April whose sole task is to prepare — scientifically, linguistically and psychologically — up-and-coming managers for international business.

"We need more specialists who are fully qualified for work at the international level," said the dean of the International University, Prof. Hiroshi Kitamura, who also said he deplored the fact that Japan's traditional eucational system was no longer up to this task.

The generous equipment of the university, whose president is the former foreign minister and noted economist Saburo Okita, is not the only aspect that distinguishes this institution from other universities. The university, which awards masters degrees in international relations after two-year graduate courses, is under the jurisdiction of Japan's Education Ministry, but it is fully financed by industry, which also determines the curriculum.

To date, 712 companies have donated the equivalent of some $32 million to the project, which is also backed by the Industries and Trade Ministry.

The language of instruction is mainly English, and the initial faculty of 28 professors includes five foreign lecturers from the United States and Britain, something highly unusual for Japan.

The students, who have already completed university studies in various subjects and years of practical work, were chosen for this exclusive program by their companies, which also defray the expense involved and continue to pay the students' salaries.

Thirteen foreign students are due to arrive here in September, mostly from Asian and developing countries, but also from the United States and Europe.

"We do not have any theoretical dissertation courses in the Harvard style. The knowledge acquired here is to be practically applied as soon as possible," said Ichio Ogawa, formerly a Mitsubishi executive and now a member of the university governing body.

In addition to lectures on international politics, sociology, linguistics, economics and management, each student must study one of three regions where Japanese trading interests are concentrated: North America, Asia and the Middle East. Foreign students study Japan itself.

Toshihiko Kano, 29, whom Nippon Steel selected for the first courses of the International University, is learning Chinese as his second language, in addition to the obligatory courses in English, and groans a little about the amount of studying he has to do each week.

Since Japan's expansion on the world market is facing growing resistance in countries eager to protect their own economies, there is a major demand for international specialists with a keen sense for political, social and economic changes in countries that trade with Japan.

Making Midland A Better Hometown
PRICE CONNECTED TO INTEREST RATE
It looks as though the nature of home loan interest rates has changed completely from the old days. No longer can we count on a level interest rate that will stay within a point or so year after year. It appears that interest rates will either be on the way up or on the way down with a little hestitation at the tip of each wave.
If there is one thing most experts CANNOT predict, it is exactly where interest rates will be a year from now. Crystal balls just don't work in this arena. There are just too many uncontrolled variables which affect the direction of interest rates.
So when, is it best to buy a home-when rates are going up or down? The answer is to buy when you have to and want to buy. The reason for this advice is that home prices and interest rates work in tandem. They tend to neutralize each other's directions/ When interest rates go up, more homes are available and home prices tend to level off. When interest rates go down, more buyers qualify for loans, demand increases, fewer home are available and prices inevitably increase, in most instances.

Smart drags brewery into the 20th Century

Beer Economics

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LONGMONT, Colo. — After three years of losing money as a privately-held concern, tiny Boulder Brewing Co. is offering to let the public in on the action.

Price: A nickel a share, or about one-fortieth what you would have to pay a bartender for a bottle of Boulder Beer.

In an underwriting offered by Centennial State Securities Inc. in Englewood, Colo., Boulder Brewing hopes to raise $1.8 million by selling 40 million shares.

If the stock offering is successful, it would be the first time a microbrewery (one producing less than 10,000 barrels annually) in the United States has sold stock to the public to raise capital, a Boulder Brewing spokesman said.

"I'm kind of dragging the brewery kicking and screaming into the 20th century," said Jerry Smart, president of Boulder Brewing.

A total of 79.78 million shares would be outstanding after the maximum offering, and present shareholders would then own 50 percent of the common shares.

The minimum limit for the pending sale is 30 million shares, which would raise $1.35 million for the company, not including the underwriter's commission.

All proceeds from the stock sale will be held in escrow by Fidelity Bank of Denver, which would return funds to investors if the minimum is not sold out in 60-day offering period or any extension.

Boulder Brewing is one of a handful of small brewing companies nationwide falling into the informal category of microbreweries, a homespun and not-too-well-known segment of the American brewing industry.

Though there are no official definitions of microbreweries, it is generally accepted that to qualify, a brewery cannot produce more than 10,000 barrels of beer a year — and most microbreweries produce far less. By comparison, in 1982 such giants as No. 1 Anheuser Busch Cos. Inc. of St. Louis produced 59 million barrels and No. 6 Adolph Coors Co. of Golden, Colo. produced 11.9 million barrels.

Smart, 43, a native Coloradan who has had a varied career as a Boulder, Colo., city planner, stockbroker and real estate salesman, has been president of Boulder Brewing since February and is heading up the company's attempt to become a profitable business.

To get an idea of the size of Boulder Brewing's brewery, consider this: When you total the floor space on all three levels, it still has only 1,200 square feet.

But, for now, that's home base for Smart and all three of the company's other employees. They are Michael Lawrence, a former rock and jazz musician, who is the full-time brewmaster, and two guys who manually bottle, label and case the beer.

"I don't think this is a business where you make money right away," Smart explained. "But with our present facility, we can't break even."

Boulder Brewing, Colorado's only licensed beer-maker other than giant Coors, presently is at capacity — about 600 barrels of ale, stout and porter a year. Each barrel equals 31.5 gallons, which means the brewery produces about 600 cases a month.

The brewery produces an English ale, extra pale ale, stout and porter, all of which sell for about $5.35 a six-pack. Case price is about $18. The company has quit using wooden cases and returnable bottles, which both required a deposit, and now uses shorter, non-returnable bottles.

Texas second in beer production

AUSTIN — Texas now ranks second in the nation in beer production and leads all states in the South in that regard, a new industry study by The University of Texas Bureau of Business Research reveals.

Producing 16.7 million barrels of beer annually, Texas is second only to Wisconsin, the nation's leading producer with almost 23 million barrels.

According to the report, the states that follow Wisconsin and Texas in beer production totals are California (13.7 million barrels), New York (13.5 million barrels) and Florida (10.8 million barrels).

The UT study, "Regional Change in the U. S. Brewing Industry," was prepared by Joseph Pluta, an economist with the Bureau of Business Research. It launches a new series of industry studies in which the bureau will focus on particular enterprises that have an important economic impact on Texas.

As an example of how the beer industry has been shifting to the South and West in the past decades, Pluta says California now has more breweries (nine) than any other state, trailed closely by Pennsylvania (eight), Wisconsin (seven) and Texas (six).

In 1952, he says, "California ranked only eight (in number of breweries) and Texas was not even in the top 10."

Pluta characterizes the U.S. brewing industry today as an "emerging oligopoly," a market dominated by only a few firms.

In noting how the beer industry has changed in the U.S., the economist points out that 2,685 breweries were operating in the U.S. in 1876. That figure had dropped, in 1982, to 79 breweries. In 1980, the five largest brewers (Anheuser-Busch, Miller, Schlitz, Heilman and Pabst) accounted for 75 percent of the beer market, with the top two producers (Anheuser-Busch and Miller) sharing more than 50 percent of the market.

Although 1982 figures were not available to Pluta at the time of his resarch, he estimates the six top firms for that year will be (in order) Anheuser-Busch, Miller, Stroh (which merged with Schlitz), Heilman, Pabst and Coors.

"If all mergers given Justice Department approval during 1982 are successfully consumated," Pluta said, "the top six firms will easily control over 90 percent of the beer market."

Growth in beer consumption in the South and West is the major factor cited by Pluta in the shifting regional impotance of the beer industry. "In 1940, per capita beer consumption in the South was about one-third that in the Northeast and less than 40 percent that in the North Central region," he said. "By 1980, the figures for the South and Northeast were virtually identical.

"Over the past 40 years," he continued, "the South has experienced a rate of growth in per capita beer consumption triple that of the United States as a whole, twice that of the rapidly growing West region, and over seven and one-half times greater than that of the Northeast. By 1980, the West region had the highest per capita beer consumption level of the four regions (Northeast, North Central, South, West).

"Put simply," Pluta said, "the vast regional differences in per capita beer consumption that existed 40 years ago have virtually disappeared today."

According to the figures in the study, the top six consuming states in 1980 and their gallons consumed per capita were Nevada (36.9), Wisconsin (34.3), New Hampshire (34.1), Montana (31.5), Wyoming (31.2) and Texas (30.1).

Reasons for the increased per capita consumption of beer nationally, said Pluta, are "the growing number of young people (as a result of the post—World War II baby boom), the lowering of age requirements for drinking in many large states, and a reduction in the officially 'dry' population in many states."

"Regional Change in the U. S. Brewing Industry" is available from the UT Austin Bureau of Business Research.

Hiram Walker will offer upscale wines

Wine marketing

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Hiram Walker Resources Ltd., already established in the wine industry through the purchase of Callaway Vineyards two years ago in addition to its ownership of an importing company and a French winery, is planning to buy at least two and possibly three more wineries to form a network loosely akin to Coca-Cola Co.'s Wine Spectrum.

But officials of the conservative Canadian company, a utility and energy giant better known in the United States through its Hiram Walker liquor interests, such as Canadian Club and Kahlua, make it clear that they have no intention of competing head-to-head with the mass production of Wine Spectrum's Taylor California Cellars or E&J Gallo, the United States' largest wine maker.

Rather, the company says it is seeking new opportunities in the market for more expensive, "upscale" wines.

Ian Wilson-Smith, Hiram Walker vice president and director of wines, says the company is looking for brand identities with good long-term development potential, such as Temecula, Calif.-based Callaway, to achieve a national wine presence.

Although Wilson-Smith will not name the winery properties the company has under consideration, he does say Hiram Walker will take its time and judge carefully before leaping. The company has been looking at California wineries off and on for almost a decade.

Americans showing more interest in gas guzzlers

By EDWARD NICHOLS
Copley News Service

Recently, the U.S. Department of Energy scrapped millions of pamphlets it had printed to advise car buyers of gasoline mileages. At the same time, to the consternation of conservationists, it cut the printing order for new gas mileage guide pamphlets drastically.

"There just wasn't the demand for them, the people are not interested," said Barbara Fleming, a spokeswoman for DOE.

Is the disinterest another sign that the American drivers' romance with the small car is ending — that his and her fickle attention is returning to six- and eight-cylinder gas guzzlers?

Other evidence seems to reinforce that idea. For example, the automobile industry reports that production of eight-cylinder cars in the five-plus liter category increased from 16.7 percent in 1981 to 21 percent in 1982.

General Motors is again manufacturing its big Bonnevilles; its large car plants are running at capacity and its small plants are half-idle. Overall, Detroit has twice the small car capacity it needs and half the big car capacity it could use.

ON THE SURFACE, it indeed appears that America indeed has forgotten the long gas lines of 1973-74 and the whopping price increase of gasoline in 1979.

However, a survey of a broad cross section of people dealing with energy efficiency matters suggests all is not lost yet. It is unlikely that the clock will be turned back a decade, but the uptick in purchases of big cars is causing problems for the biggest auto manufacturers and also Congress, which last week began to review the federal CAFE — Corporate Average Fuel Economy — law.

CAFE was enacted in 1975 when cars were getting about 13 miles per gallon, on the average. At that time, because of petroleum misallocations resulting from earlier Arab oil embargoes, Congress enacted a law requiring manufacturers to improve the automobile mileage performances of their fleets. This year cars must cover 26 miles for every gallon they burn. Next year the figure will be 27 miles per gallon and, in 1985, 27.5. If Congress does nothing, the 27.5-mpg performance will become permanent, although the national highway traffic administrator can hold the line at 26 if there is a compelling reason to do so. (The formula for computing fines is $5 per one-tenth of a gallon the manufacturer is over the mileage standard on his total production).

Reasons there might be. Ford was able to avoid a $163 million fine this year because of credits the firm earned in the last three years by bettering mileage requirements. It has no more credits to apply to 1984 and 1985. It has informed the government that it cannot meet the standards in the next two years. This year, Ford is estimating that its sales mix of cars will average only 24.3 miles per gallon.

By the same token, General Motors says if it sells 3.5 million cars this year, its CAFE probably won't be any better than 23.6 mpg. It also would have had to pay a $420 million fine in 1983 if the company hadn't saved credits from other years. But, also like Ford, it has no more credits left in the bank for 1984 and 1985. Only Chrysler among the large manufacturers is out of the woods; it has notified the government that it will meet the 1985 requirement this year. Other manufacturers say that Chrysler is able to achieve the record because it builds only medium-sized rather than large cars, a practice they cannot follow because of the complexities of their industrial and marketing problems.

AS A WHOLE, the auto industry is in a bind. After spending more than $30 billion in the 1970s to engineer and market small cars to fend off imports that were taking 30 percent of the market, American manufacturers were trapped when gasoline prices sagged and some Americans began to opt for larger cars.

The industry has lost more than $2 billion in income since sales collapsed four years ago. If stringent mileage standards prevent manufacturers from selling big cars, which are much more profitable than small, Washington would be seemingly putting a rope around the manufacturers' necks at a time when they are in deep trouble.

But Congress also faces a king-sized dilemma. The trade deficit is expected to surpass $60 billion in 1983, 50 percent higher than in 1982. According to the Department of Energy, oil imports already have risen from 3.4 million barrels a day in January to 4.3 million a day on July 1. An economic recovery now underway could aggravate the trend.

It clearly is in the national interest to nurture the oil conservation ethics so painfully developed in the last decade. The question is how — through government coercion, or by the private market? Opinions vary.

"I'm a great believer in the market economy. But I also do not believe that the market can do everything. That's why we have governments," said Grant P. Thompson, a senior associate at the Conservation Foundation in Washington, a non-profit educational group.

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA — Geophysical Systems Corporation, (NASDAQ—GSCOQ), announced recently it has been awarded a contract for additionl seismic services for a major oil company in the West Texas area. The project commenced last week. The gross revenues to the company for these services will be approximately $3 million. The project will make use of the company's proprietary GEOCOR IV System with its unique high multi-channel capacity in order to adequately record simultaneously both shallow and deep data.

Geophysical Systems Corporation announced further that it has recently completed a deep seismic survey for the United States Geological Survey across the San Joaquin Valley of Central California. The purpose of this survey was to reveal features far below the sedimentary section. The San Joaquin Valley was recently subjected to a major earthquake in the Coalinga area, and the origin of that earthquake is believed to be below the sedimentary section. The company also announced that its Australian subsidiary has contracted for an additional seismic party to commence immediately in that country on a project to last two or three months. The program previously announced in April, 1983 is continuing for Amoco Australia Petroleum Company.

Wandering oily unwelcome in Orient, coming home to Texas

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SINGAPORE — Wayne Ward, one of the hard-drinking, free-spending Texans who have ruled the oil rigs of the South China Sea, is saddling up and heading on to another strange, foreign place — Houston.

Ward, 34, has been overseas for nine years, splitting his time between two-week stints of monk-like seclusion on male-only drilling platforms in the Middle East and Far East and another two weeks of nonstop carousing and womanizing ashore.

Now the veteran "oily's" life as a well-paid gypsy has come to at least a temporary halt. The worldwide oil glut, high living costs and new nationalistic work rules imposed by Indonesia, the region's biggest oil producer, have made Ward's job expendable, along with those of many other expatriate American oilmen.

A few weeks ago, Ward was laid off. His only plans to date are to move in with a brother in his native Houston, buy a Corvette with his savings and fool around.

"I don't know what I'm going to do, exactly," he said the other day. "I guess I'll go home and goof off until I grow up."

THE GLOBAL TAILSPIN in the oil industry has finally caught up with Houston East, as this island city-state of 2.5 million people has been nicknamed. Singapore has no oil reserves itself but, through shrewd economic planning and a prime location near the oil fields of neighboring countries, it has emerged as the headquarters of the East Asian oil industry.

Despite its size, Singapore is the world's No. 3 oil refiner and No. 2 producer of rigs. It has also become regional home to hundreds of companies involved in exploration and drilling operations, and to many of their expatriate employees.

In the past decade, the petroleum industry here, like Singapore itself, has been booming. But in recent months that has started to change.

"The first year I joined this company I hired 100 guys," said the personnel manager of an American company that provides technical assistance to rig operators. "All I had to worry about was getting good people and keeping them happy and working. Now it's a matter of cutting costs wherever you can. Now I have to release guys with a lot of experience."

There is no trade organization or government body that keeps industry employment figures, but signs of a downturn are evident. For the first time, at least 20 offshore oil rigs are parked in waters off the island, idle and rusting.

SHELL, THE DUTCH conglomerate that runs the biggest of Singapore's five major refining operations, has announced plans to mothball half of its plant. One high-level executive predicted recently that Singapore's refinery industry could be running at half of capacity by next year.

With its industrial base widely diversified, Singapore's streets and shops are still teeming with tourists and other foreigners tied to hundreds of nonfuel-related industries. But in the bars and resturarants catering to the petroleum crowd, the backslide is obvious.

At the Jockey Pub, a popular hangout in the middle of the Orchard Road shopping belt, lunchtime table space was at a premium only a few months ago for oilies downing thick slabs of roast meat with several beers. Now, at noon, most seats in the house are vacant.

Over at Ginivy's, where the "ol' boys" gather to listen to country music, The Mavericks now dedicate their version of the popular "Take This Job and Shove It" to workers "who haven't been laid off yet."

Anticipating a drop in the number of oil workers, trustees at the Singapore American School, the biggest and most prestigious private school for foreign children, have relaxed previously rigid standards that required all students to be fluent in English before they could enroll.

THE OIL GLUT is partly to blame for the industry's setbacks here, but industry analysts point to two events involving Indonesia as bearing primary responsibility for the current disruption.

In the past, Indonesia, the region's No. 1 oil producer, sent much of its crude to nearby Singapore to be refined. But refinery expansion projects in Indonesia have begun operations, resulting in a loss of business here.

In 1982, Pertamina, the Indonesian national oil company, refined an average of about 200,000 barrels a day in Singapore, industry sources said. For the first half of this year, the figure had reportedly dipped to between 60,000 to 70,000 barrels a day.

The news from Indonesia has also been unsettling for people involved in exploration and drilling activities. Early this year the government began, for the first time, to enforce longstanding rules requiring that the more highly skilled technical positions on oil rigs be filled by native workers.

Out of 100 workers on an average-size rig at any one time, approximately 30 — generally those with the most sophisticated skills — would in the past have been expatriates. Now that number rarely exceeds 10 or 20. Additional regulations scheduled to go into effect next year should further reduce the number of non-Indonesians.

TO SOME EXTENT, the problems of the Singapore oil industry can be attributed to past success. The industry remained buoyant here long after it hit the skids elsewhere. Finding it difficult to make a profit in the United States, the Middle East or Europe, hundreds of companies involved in various aspects of drilling operations began moving into the Asia-Pacific market.

Editors at Petromin, a local trade magazine, say that their index of regional companies providing services, such as renting and repairing rigs and hiring crews for them, has grown by about 20 percent in the past year. The increased competition has led many of the once-fat companies to look for ways to trim costs.

The heaviest burden of those cutbacks has fallen on American workers who make the most money and get the best fringe benefits.

"The total number of expats here really hasn't fallen much," Evan Jones, Petromin's technical editor, said, "but other expats are cheaper. Some American companies hire a lot of non-Americans now. They're easier to move around from place to place and they make fewer demands."

A typical American rig engineer might make more than $3,000 a month in base pay, and his fringe benefits — for rent, transportation, schooling and medical care — might double or triple the amount, according to an executive of a major service company who asked that neither his name nor his company's be used.

IN THE PAST, engineers like Ward would normally work two weeks and then have two weeks off. They would spend 14 straight days living and working on a rig in waters off Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand or elsewhere. Then they would be flown home to Singapore or some other major regional city for two weeks off.

Lately, however, several large oil-related companies have changed the routine. Increasingly, workers are spending a month on the job and then being flown to the United States, Europe, Australia or wherever they come from rather than being subsidized in Singapore.

"It has become cheaper to buy someone a ticket for half way around the world rather than pay Singapore-size rents and school costs," Jones said.

Rents have skyrocketed here in recent years. A two-bedroom apartment might rent for $1,000 to $2,000 a month even in the face of a softening in the market as thousands of new units have been completed.

The cost of living in Singapore has become the chief complaint of the expatriate community. Despite its reputation as a duty-free port, store owners are increasingly reluctant to give substantial discounts since they must struggle to pay rising rents. Cameras, watches and other consumer goods once considered great bargains may be less expensive now in the United States.

THE AMERICAN personnel manager, who also requested anonymity, said his company has calculated food costs in Singapore at more than 50 percent higher than they are in the United States.

But possibly the biggest complaint concerns the price of alcohol. A beer at the cheapest of nightspots costs more than $2.50, and more than twice that at many places.

"In Houston, I can drink beer all night for $25, but here it costs me $100 to $125 to get blitzed," said John Barriault, a rig hand who was having a night on the town.

Although American oilmen are no longer welcome in many nations, there is still work for them to do at home in the Permian Basin. Experts predict a significant increase in drilling activity during the last half of 1983 and sustained growth ahead.

Industry leaders support decontrol bill

By SARAH MCCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Consumers as well as producers would benefit from passage of the bill to deregulate natural gas which the Senate Energy committee sent to the Senate this week, two industry leaders declared at a press conference here Friday.

Lloyd Unsell, vice president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, and Nick Bush, president of the Natural Gas Supply association, emphasized that the users of gas would be better served by Congress taking this first step towards passage of the bill, which they said would decontrol all forms of gas.

Saying he hoped the nation would not have to live through "another cold winter under regulated gas," Unsell said "when the housewife boils an egg in the morning, it makes no difference whether that gas she is burning comes from old or new gas or gas from deep wells."

Bush pleaded for "a more aggressive attitude on the part of the House subcommittee on Fossil Fuels which has the deregulation bill under consideration."

When some one asked how he viewed the "compromise in the House subcommittee," Bush said "I am not sure which one you are talking about — there have been several."

He added "it is very uncertain as to what will come out of the House subcommittee. We now support No. 1760 as the mark-up vehicle."

Both men criticized a letter handed out by Gov. John D. Rockefeller's representative to every reporter entering the press conference arranged by Bush and Unsell in Bush's office. It urged Sen. James McClure (R—Idaho) to withold support from the bill. It bore names of 83 national and regional organizations which the West Virginia governor said supported his views.

Unsell looked at the list and snortd, saying "I see here names of people who have been opposed to any form of oil or gas decontrol for decades." He described them as basically opposed to industry expansion or development.

Asked if they expected an amendment to the bill on the Senate floor in regard to imports of natural gas, both men pointed out that it would be unfair to domestic producers if their gas should continue to be restricted as to price like old gas is from the Hugoten field in Kansas, which now is sold under contract for 28 cents MCF and transported to the Northeast while Canadian gas is sold in the Midwest for $7 MCF.

House gas bill OKd

WASHINGTON (AP) — A natural gas bill that would keep federal controls on old supplies but, in effect, allow prices to rise above the government ceilings in a wide variety of circumstances cleared its first hurdle Friday in the House.

On a 10-9 vote the House Energy Committee's fossil fuels subcommittee approved a compromise bill that differs greatly from both the full decontrol wanted by the Reagan administration and a gradual decontol bill approved earlier this week by the Senate Energy Committee.

The House panel settled on a measure by Rep. Thomas Tauke, R-Iowa, that removes the price ceilings on incremental increases in old gas produced as a result of reopening abandoned fields, drilling new wells in old fields, or otherwise making new investments to enhance recovery of the gas.

Alta picks up working interests

Alta Energy Corp., Mildand, has acquired, in two separate transactions, working interests in 30 gross-producing oil and gas wells an Burleson, Fayette, Gonzales and Martin counties. Seven of the Texas wells are net producers of hydrocarbons.

Alta Energy will become operator for the the 30 wells. The producing properties, which cost the company $550,000, represent the first significant purchases it has made, said Alta President R.F. Bailey.

Proven reserves will increase by 90,000 barrels of oil and gas-equivalent.

The acquisition illustrates the company's policy of conservative spending and aggressive growth through exploration or purchase of proven reserves.

"The economic climate in the industry should be right for Alta to consummate a number of similar small acquisitions in the coming months," Bailey said.

"Alta's management is skilled at (evaluating) producing properties. We feel the company is ideally situated — from a standpoint of size, timing, and expertise — to take advantage of these opportunities," he said.

Since its birth in 1981, Alta has succeeded 81 percent of the time in completion of 59 wells.

Management says it drills only close-in prospects with a probability of success at 70 percent or higher. Its proven reserves increased — according to an internal study — from 256,677 barrels in July 1981 to 814,761 equivalent barrels today.

Alta's 1983 exploration budget of $10 million has been garnered through limited partnerships, joint ventures, and capital generated within the firm. From 10 to 15 wells should be drilled or participated in by the year's end, Bailey said.

Alta recently moved its headquarters to ninth-floor offices in HBF Corp.'s Heritage Center, 500 N. Loraine, Midland. Management says it intends to add qualified staff to more effectively exploit industry and economic conditions.

The exploration and production company operates in the Permian Basin, Central Texas, Central Oklahoma and Colorado's Piceance Basin. Its common stock is traded Over-The-Counter, under the symbol ALTE.

'Benji' pays for W1s, seminars to tell why

The Texas Railroad Commission will collect a $100 fee for every application for a permit to drill filed, beginning September 1, 1983.

The filing fee, to be collected for new or materially amended permits to drill (RRC form W-1), is the result of recent legislation enacted by the Texas Legislature.

It is anticipated the filing fee rule will raise $3.3 million between 1984 and 1988. The law authorizes the RRC to deposit the money in a special fund to be used for plugging abandoned wells.

The funds also can be used for general enforcement of state pollution prevention laws involving oil and gas operations.

Several Texas oil and gas associations have scheduled seminars around the state to explain the new process.

The West Central Texas Oil & Gas Association and the RRC will cosponsor a seminar Aug. 4 at 1:30 p.m at the Kiva Inn in Abilene.

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association will conduct a seminar Aug. 16 at Midland Center, beginning at 1:30 p.m. Representatives from the RRC will attend.

The new law requires some procedural changes in the way W-1s are filed with the Railroad Commission. Applicants must file the W-1 and fee with the RRC headquarters in Austin, rather than at the nearest RRC district office. Applicants must still send a copy of the application to the district office, however.

In addition, the RRC will no longer be allowed to authorize drilling permits over the telephone as it has done in the past. Applicants may speed up the process of filing, however, by "walking" the W-1 through the review process in Austin in person

The $100 fee will not be required for minor amendments or corrections to the W-1 form.

The RRC has sent a full explanation of the new rules to all oil and gas operators in Texas.

IPAA lauds gas decontrol bill

WASHINGTON — Natural gas legislation aproved for floor action by the Senate Energy Committee last week "represents a meaningful start toward solving a 30-year energy policy dilemma," the Inependent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) said.

Danny Conklin, an independent natural gas producer from Amarillo, chairman of the IPAA Natural Gas Committee, expressed hope that the committee's action "will generate a new momentum in Congress to complete action on comprehensive natural gas legislation in this session."

Conklin said the weeks of debate in the Senate Energy Committee "provide ample evidence of the complexity of the problems and market instability that have perplexed both producers and consumers of natural gas under existing law."

He commended the Senate Energy Committee and is chairman, Senator James McClure (R-Idaho) "for untiring tenacity in debating and trying to find workable answers to innumerable problems imbedded in one of the most perplexing regulatory systems ever devised."

The Senate bill (S—615), Conklin said, "represents an imperfect answer to a tangled web of law and regulation that defies quick and easy solutions."

"While there are no perfect answers," he said, "this legislation ultimately would return all natural gas to a competitive interfuel market — with sellers and buyers negotiating freely at arm's length. This is the system that has always been the most efficient and effective in meeting the needs of American's for all commodities.

Conklin added, "The Senate Committee has recognized by its action and determination that it would be irresponsible to 'do nothing' about this issue which has caused so many problems for all concerned. I am confident the leadership in the House of Representatives likewise will act affirmatively in the near future, in order that the nation can lay this long-standing problem to rest."

Conklin said that while natural gas is far from the public's mind when outside temperatures reach 100 degrees, the fact remains winter is around the corner. "Under the present system we are only asking for more instability and the risk of higher retail prices, something the consumer will understandably rebel against," Conklin concluded. "If we don't act collectively to solve this problem now, congress, producers and gas utilities will incur the public's wrath when the temperatures start dipping."

Nothing is better for a successful oil and gas business than being surrounded by other energetic, successful businesses.

And that's why so many independent operators and service companies are moving to ClayDesta Plaza.

Right now a lot of people are gloomy about energy. But we believe in those independent operators who are the backbone of this great industry. And we've got a business environment that reflects that positive attitude.

Even the majors are coming our way. Sohio, Southland Royalty, Cities Service, and Sun are already here. And Gulf will occupy their new headquarters in early fall.

In all, more than six thousand people will be doing business by the end of 1983 in West Texas' first totally planned business development.

ClayDesta Plaza has lots of room. Free parking close to where you work. An extensive Petroleum Information Log Library. And Midland's only high-rise private business and social club.

More amenities are planned, like more great restaurants, shopping, and a major hotel.

The excitement is building at ClayDesta Plaza.
