Panic trading devastates stock market

NEW YORK (AP) — Waves of panic devastated the stock market today in one of the most frantic days in the history of Wall Street as the Dow Jones industrial average dived more than 200 points, then quickly regained about 65 points.

The Dow average was down 135 points to about 2,111 at about 11:20 a.m., a sharp recovery from its low point of a 208-point decline a few minutes earlier.

The decline left the average 22 percent below its peak of 2,722.42 on Aug. 25.

The Dow's 200-point plunge came just one trading day after the Dow posted its first decline of more than 100 points. The decline dwarfed Friday's record point drop in which the Dow industrials fell 108.36 points.

Trading was extraordinarily heavy. About 171 million shares changed hands by shortly after 11 a.m. as computer programs automatically sold stocks into a market in which there were few traders brave enough to buy. The tape that reports transactions was running 42 minutes behind.

The pace of trading was enough to easily break Friday's volume record of 338.48 million shares.

The sell-off on Wall Street echoed plunging prices earlier today on exchanges around the world. The dollar sank and interest rates and gold prices leaped.

Markets continued to be battered by the same concerns about inflation, interest rates and dollar weakness that helped spark last week's steep decline.

Pessimism was so strong in New York that the opening of trading was delayed for most of the stocks in the Dow industrials because of an excess of sell orders.

Earlier, share share prices had taken a beating on exchanges in Tokyo, Hong Kong, London and elsewhere.

Money continued to pour out of stocks and bonds into gold and short-term Treasury securities, which are considered safe havens in times of crisis.

"Unless you can make a case for a major recession or World War III we cannot really justify such a severe decline," Suresh Bhirud, an analyst for Oppenheimer & Co., said today.

In New York, gold jumped to a bid of $489.75 an ounce as of 10:30 a.m.

The price of the benchmark 30-year Treasury bond with a face amount of $1,000 plunged more than $15 as its yield rose to nearly 10.4 percent as of 10:30 a.m.

But money flowing into three-month Treasury bills pushed down their yield to 6.745 percent.

The dollar fell to 1.7710 West German marks from just under 1.7975 late Friday, and dropped to 141.15 Japanese yen from 142.45 late Friday.

U.S. attacks Iranian oil platforms

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The United States destroyed an Iranian offshore oil platform in the central Persian Gulf today in retaliation for a missile attack on a U.S.-flagged tanker, U.S. officials announced.

Iran and shipping sources in the Persian Gulf said two platforms had been attacked. Shipping sources said the platforms were ablaze after being attacked by aircraft, but U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said only one was raided and that four U.S. warships carried out the attack.

Gulf-based marine salvage executives, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Iranian tugboats were seen rushing to the Sassan and Rostam platforms, 30 miles apart, east of the Qatar peninsula and 60 and 75 miles south of the Iranian coast.

In Washington, the Pentagon said no Americans were injured in the attack and that most of the 20 to 30 Iranians on the Rostam platform abandoned it after being warned an attack was imminent.

The oil platforms, like other Iranian facilities in the gulf, are used as bases for Iranian helicopters and speedboats that attack neutral commercial shipping as part of the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war.

Radio monitors said they heard an Iranian voice saying, "U.S. warship, U.S. warship, let me evacuate the injured before you shoot again." The monitors spoke on condition of anonymity.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, in the first Iranian confirmation of the attack, said only that two platforms were raided by the U.S. Navy. The report did not report on casualties.

The U.S. Navy broadcast radio warnings for all ships and aircraft to stay clear of the area around the Rostam platform.

One diplomatic source said "anti-missile teams" were on the alert in the northern gulf in anticipation of Silkworm missile attacks from Iran. The source, who asked not to be identified, did not elaborate.

Today's attack was in reprisal for Friday's missile attack that injured 18 people on the tanker Sea Isle City. The attack, which involved Chinese-made Silkworm missiles, was launched from the Faw peninsula, more than 300 miles north of the Rostam platform.

■ President Reagan calls shelling of Iranian oil platforms "lawful exercise of the right of self-defense" — 2A

In a statement, President Reagan said the attack was "a prudent yet restrained response to this unlawful use of force against the United States and to numerous violations to the rights of other non-belligerents."

He described the one-time oil drilling facility as "a military platform" and said it had been "used to assist in a number of attacks on non-belligerent shipping."

Weinberger told reporters in Washington: "We do not seek further confrontation with Iran but will be prepared to meet any further militaty escalation by Iran with stronger retaliation."

He said 1,000 rounds of five-inch shells had been aimed at the platform.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, who read Reagan's statement, said the purpose of the attack "was to avoid casualties, not to cause them — but at the same time to make the important political and military point."

Flames shooting into the sky and black smoke billowing from the Rostam and Sassan platforms were reported by independent salvage tugboats heading for the scene, the salvage sources said. Shipping sources said one of the two platforms may have been more severely damaged than the other.

Chip and Reba McClure, both 18, played with their weary but medically stable daughter, Jessica, Sunday at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Dead tissue to be removed from Jessica's foot

Two surgeons this morning were to remove dead tissue contained in Jessica McClure's right foot and begin cosmetic surgery procedures on the tot's forehead, a Midland Memorial Hospital spokeswoman said.

The 18-month-old toddler was listed in stable condition today prior to her second surgery in three days, MMH spokeswoman Megan Pause said.

"They will be cutting away the dead tissue and evaluating the status of the foot tissue," Ms. Pause said.

"The doctors had not thoroughly examined the foot tissue in the first surgery," said another MMH spokeswoman Sue Reston today. "Her foot had been wrapped and all they have been able to see are her toes."

Surgeon Shelton Viney said Sunday during a 1 p.m. hospital press conference that the tissue evaluation was necessary because her foot had been deprived of blood circulation while trapped in the well.

He described Jessica as "very lively and vivacious."

"We are going to take her to surgery to re-evaluate," Viney said. "To see if the foot is still viable, to assess our progress."

A 90-minute surgical procedure known as a fasciotomy was performed Saturday to decrease the swelling around the foot caused by increased body fluid levels.

The doctor called the rise in body fluids a positive indication that dehydration Jessica suffered was abating.

The girl was trapped in an abandoned water well for 58 hours before emerging Friday after a massive rescue effort.

Viney said that a skin graft would be performed later — possibly Friday — using donor tissue from the girl's thighs to place on her foot.

If today's surgery reveals positive tissue findings Midland plastic surgeon Terry Tubb was expected to insert skin expanders in the child's forehead.

The procedure is considered "world-class," and would stretch the deeply wounded area injured while the girl's forehead was pressed against the well casing, Ms. Reston said.

Officials said they hope the surgery will leave only a tiny vertical scar in place of a silver-dollar sized pressure sore.

Dr. Debbie Reese, a local pediatrician, told reporters that dehydration was no longer a problem for the girl.

However, she conjectured that the 18-month-old Jessica may be emotionally affected by the ordeal.

The toddler may have "stranger anxiety" and nightmares "for months to come," Dr. Reese said.

"She has a much better chance today than she did yesterday," not to lose her foot, another physician, orthopedic surgeon Charles Younger, told reporters.

The 18-year-old parents of toddler Jessica met with reporters for the second time Sunday after doctors reported her continued improvement.

Chip and Reba "Cissy" McClure, with arms around each other, said they would preserve the memory of the success of the 58-hour rescue effort for their daughter.

"We're going to try and keep it is a good memory — that she survived," McClure said. "We're not going to concentrate on the time that when was in the hole."

Cissy McClure recalled the first moments of the ordeal, when she realized her daughter had fallen 22 feet down into an abandoned water well in the backyard of her sister's house.

"I was very panicked, very scared," Mrs. McClure said. "I thought she was going to suffocate."

Her parents expressed their appreciation to rescue workers, volunteers, and everyone who helped in the rescue effort, including the press.

"Thank you; thank you again for everything," McClure said.

Reagan: 'It is a great happy day'

From Staff Reports

President Ronald Reagan told parents of Jessica McClure in a telephone conversation Sunday that it was a "great happy day nationwide" when the 18-month-old girl was rescued Friday night from an abandoned water well in Midland.

The president and first lady Nancy Reagan talked to the teen-age parents, Chip and Cissy McClure, from the Bethesda, Md., National Naval Medical Center Hospital where the first lady is recovering from an operation.

Reagan said all of America became "godfathers" and "godmothers" during the 58 hours in which the girl was trapped in the well.

Following is a transcript, released by the White House staff, of the Sunday morning Reagan-McClure telephone conversation. The president had tried to talk to the McClures Saturday afternoon, but the couple had left Midland Memorial Hospital, where Jessica is hospitalized, for a private dinner when the president called.

Ronald Reagan: "Hello?"
Chip McClure: "Hello?"
Ronald Reagan: "This is Ronald Reagan; and Nancy's on the other phone."

Jessica sleeps through visit from vice president, his wife

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland's most famous former resident paid an impromptu visit to its most famous current resident Sunday in the circular first-floor intensive care unit at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Vice President George Bush said 18-month-old Jessica McClure slept comfortably through most of his 15-minute appointment with the toddler.

Jessica was in stable condition this morning and was undergoing exploratory surgery on her injured right foot, which had regained a healthier pink color Sunday, Midland Memorial Hospital spokeswoman Laurie Johnson said.

Bush said he and wife, Barbara, met with Chip and Reba "Cissy" McClure "just to wish them well, congratulate them on their spirit. We talked about her health because they now see some circulation (in the foot). They were just as sweet as they could be."

After visiting with the McClures, both 18, he traveled to Midland Civic Center for a press conference, where he said that the story of Jessica's rescue Friday was not what Midland residents did for the 18-month-old but what she did for them.

The vice president gave a certificate to Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas in recognition of the outstanding performance of residents in the rescue.

"This is what America is," said Bush.

"The rock was hard and they couldn't get through, but they heard the voice and they wouldn't give up, and for 60 hours and they dug," he said. "They blasted that rock and risked their lives and pushed on into the ground; and they found that child and held her close and pulled her out of the darkness."

Bush said, "Everyone held their children a little bit closer the past few nights and all of us felt the warmth that comes from prayers that are both heart-felt and answered."

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, who accompanied Bush, said, "I guess Jessica McClure has been the recipient of more prayers in the last four days than any other human being on earth."

Bush talked for about five minutes with paramedic Robert O'Donnell, who was the first to reach Jessica in the well. Bush presented O'Donnell and Steve Forbes, another paramedic who aided in the rescue, with small pocket knives embossed with the vice presidential seal and Bush's signature.

The vice president told O'Donnell and Forbes that, on a scale of one to 10, the rescue effort was an "11 on technique and an 11 on spirit."

Bush also talked with some of the people who used a drilling rig to dig a rescue shaft to Jessica. He thanked the workers for their work and gave them lapel pins with the vice presidential seal.

Cissy McClure: "Hello, Mrs. Reagan. How are you feeling?"

Nancy Reagan: "I'm fine; how are you? What's more important — how is Jessica?"

Cissy McClure: "Oh, We're fine and Jessica is feeling better. They're really hopeful with her foot because she has pink in her toes this morning."

Nancy Reagan: "Ahh, that's nice. Well, I want you to know that I couldn't — I was supposed to get ready for the operation the next morning — and I couldn't do it until I sat there and watched her come up. I was so pleased to see how well she looked and everything."

Ronald Reagan: "Can I join in and say that I think that you must be aware by now that everybody in America became godfathers and godmothers of Jessica while this was going on. It is a great happy day nationwide for the outcome of this now. And we just — Nancy and I wanted to call you and congratulate you on this and tell you how much we have all been praying."

Chip McClure: "Mr. President?"
Ronald Reagan: "Yes?"

Chip McClure: "I would like to say that we are sorry for the delay and everything, and I personally apologize because I was not here yesterday. I understand you tried to make a connection yesterday, and I was not able to get in touch with you."

Ronald Reagan: "Well, we can understand that. As a matter of fact, I take it that you are there at the hospital. Well, we are here at the hospital at Bethesda, Md., with Nancy. So we kind of understand where some things can interfere with a phone call."

Nancy Reagan: "Well, your priorities are right. I am sure, Cissy — knowing one mother to another — I know how happy you must be."

Cissy McClure: "Oh, yes ma'am, I'm very happy. We really appreciate all the support and love that everyone has given us. We really have."

Nancy Reagan: "She must be quite a little girl to go through that."

Cissy McClure: "Oh, yes she is. She's a fighter."

Chip McClure: "She certainly is. The main thing was the men — it was wonderful. You have never seen people put together and work for one purpose in such a way."

Nancy Reagan: "Nice the way we do in times of trouble, isn't it."

Cissy McClure: "It really is; it is very nice. The neighbors — if we hadn't, we would never have gotten that baby out of there."

Nancy Reagan: "Seems to be an American trait, I think. You know, when somebody is in trouble, everybody gathers around."

Chip McClure: "It really refreshes your faith in men, too."

Nancy Reagan: "Yes, it does. Yes, it does."

Chip McClure: "Texas, and all over the world."

Nancy Reagan: "I know how happy you are. When she's aware, why, give her a big kiss."

Chip McClure: "We will."
Cissy McClure: "Oh, we will."

Ronald Reagan: "Just know that you are still in our thoughts and prayers."

Chip McClure: "And you're in ours."

Cissy McClure: "You really are."

Nancy Reagan: "Thank you, and you take it easy. I know everything will be all right."

Cissy McClure: "Okay. Well, thank you."

Nancy Reagan: "All right."
Ronald Reagan: "Bless you both."
Chip McClure: "We appreciate it."
Nancy Reagan: "Thank you."
Chip McClure: "Thank you all."
Nancy Reagan: "Bye-bye."
Ronald Reagan: "Bye."

Soviets assess lessons of 1962 missile crisis

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG

MOSCOW (AP) — With the superpowers brought to the brink of war by Soviet missiles in Cuba, the president of the United States falls to his knees to pray for guidance.

"They're demanding the impossible of me," John F. Kennedy exclaims. "Some are demanding in the name of America, others — in the name of humanity."

Finally, in this Soviet theater version of the October 1962 Cuban missile crisis, Kennedy vetoes a risk-laden Pentagon plan for a U.S. air strike on the Carribbean island and opts for compromise with the Soviets.

"Nuclear might has its limits," declares the young U.S. president, the protagonist in Fyodor Burlatsky's "Burden of Decision," a play that finds a moral for the thermonuclear age in the Cuban crisis.

A quarter-century ago this month, the superpowers came closer to open war than ever before. The reason was Nikita S. Khrushchev's decision to secretly ship medium-range nuclear missiles to Fidel Castro's Cuba, 90 miles off American shores.

After days of tension heightened by Kennedy's Oct. 22, 1962 decision to enforce a quarantine on Cuba-bound arms shipments, Moscow and Washington reached a compromise. The Kremlin would withdraw its rockets in exchange for a formal U.S. pledge not to invade Cuba.

According to official Soviet thinking, the events known here as the "Caribbean crisis" marked a watershed in superpower relations because the superpowers then clearly realized the need for peaceful coexistence.

"For the first time, the sides saw there could be crises they could not completely resolve to their advantage, and that they would have to live with them," historian Viktor A. Kremenyuk said in a interview.

"The Caribbean crisis showed the essence of the danger. It gave a mighty impetus to the realization that we cannot afford a luxury like nuclear war," said Kremenyuk, an expert in regional conflicts at Moscow's U.S.A.-Canada Institute, a Kremlin think tank.

Kremenyuk said the brinkmanship of October 1962 led to superpower machinery for crisis prevention and management, including the Moscow-Washington hot line and the creation of "nuclear risk reduction centers" agreed to this year.

Official Soviet publications lay the blame for the Cuban crisis solely on the Americans, but give Kennedy some of the credit for arriving at a compromise that prevented war.

The Diplomatic Dictionary, a reference work published in 1986, says the Kremlin decision to send missiles to Cuba was "fully in accordance with the norms of international law."

According to Kremenyuk, the Cuban crisis may have marked the first time in Soviet history when Moscow found it absolutely indispensable to reach a compromise with the Americans.

"Although Khrushchev might have banged his shoe in the past, he arrived at that compromise, and the problem was solved," he said.

Khruschev's memoirs remain virtually the only Soviet insider account of the crisis. Despite the current policy of "glasnost," or openness, Khrushchev's reminiscences have not been published in his native land, and are only available in foreign editions.

The former Soviet premier, years after his 1964 ouster from power, recalled that the defense of Cuba's fledgling socialist regime became his constant worry after the abortive U.S.-backed Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961.

Nuclear missiles, Khrushchev said, were the "logical answer" to deterring U.S. aggression in the Caribbean. If installed secretly, the Americans would face an existing threat and would think twice about attacking them.

"If a quarter or even a tenth of our missiles survived — even if only one or two big ones were left — we could still hit New York, and there wouldn't be much of New York left," Khrushchev said.

As the tension reached its peak, the premier spent one night on a couch in the office, sleeping in his clothes. "I was ready for alarming news to come at any moment, and I wanted to be able to react immediately," Khrushchev recalled.

In the official Soviet view, the Cuban missile crisis had no winner or loser, but Khrushchev's decision to ship the missiles and then recall them added to a widespread impression that he was a mercurial, unreliable leader.

Burlatsky's popular "Burden of Decision," a play written in 1986, claims the Cuban crisis also sealed Kennedy's fate.

Throughout the play, Kennedy is warned that powerful business interests, and perhaps even the FBI and CIA, oppose any compromise with the Soviets, and that a deal could cost him his life.

Despite the danger, the president compromises, and speaks his final line before the closing curtain.

"Today I'm going to the theater, like Lincoln," Kennedy says. "And I hope the same fate that befell him is not waiting for me."

Adding to the surge in gold was the announcement by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that the United States destroyed an Iranian offshore oil platform in the central Persian Gulf today in retaliation for a missile attack on a U.S.-flagged tanker.

"We seem to be raising the stakes here with the Iranian situation, and nobody's comfortable with that," said Daniel Weissman, vice president of trading operations for Manfra, Tordella & Brookes Inc.

On Friday, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell a record 108.36 points to close at 2,246.73, capping a week in which the market's best-known indicator fell a shocking 235.48 points, or 9.49 percent of its value.

■ "Caution" proper reaction to market plunge, related stories — 6,8C

Losses occurred throughout the market, with broader market indexes showing heavy declines as trading hit all-time highs on the New York Stock Exchange.

Last week's stock market declines paled in comparison to the setbacks during the Great Crash, when the Dow industrials plummeted by 12.8 percent and 11.7 percent respectively on Oct. 28 and 29, 1929.

But pessimists, pointing to rising interest rates and market perceptions of rising inflation, say the sell-off signals a coming long-term decline, or "bear" market.

Last week's report of a larger-than-anticipated trade deficit for August discouraged many investors who had been betting that the dollar's two-year decline, which makes U.S. products more competitive, would improve the nation's trade performance.

That prompted speculation the United States would let the dollar weaken further, which is seen as raising the possibility of high inflation.

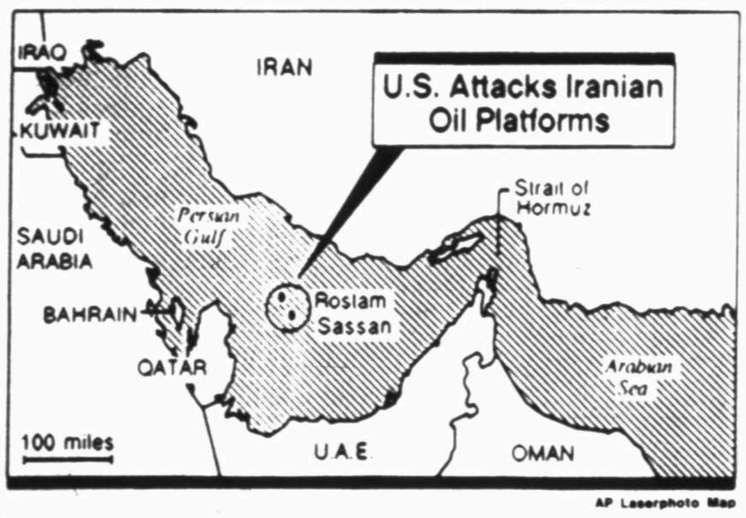

Helping fuel speculation of further dollar declines is friction between the United States and West Germany over recent rises in key German interest rates.

On NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III hinted Sunday the United States might allow the dollar to fall against the West German mark rather than allow U.S. interest rates to keep pace with rising German rates.

The inflationary danger from a weaker dollar raises speculation that interest rates, which recently have soared to levels unseen since late 1985, would climb further as investors demanded higher returns to offset anticipated inflation.

Further, Chemical Bank's decision last week to raise its prime interest rate to 9.75 percent from 9.25 percent, the second hike in a week, is seen as a possible forerunner of similar moves by other major banks.

Early today, rumors swept the gulf that the U.S. Navy had carried out military actions against Iranian targets. Shipping industry executives and diplomats said some of the rumors referred to Iraq's Faw peninsula as a probable target.

The tanker Sea Isle City was struck in Kuwaiti territorial waters Friday by a Chinese-made Silkworm missile fired from the Iranian-held tracts of the Faw peninsula to the northeast.

Friday's missile strike was the first direct attack on a U.S.-flagged ship in the gulf since the Reagan administration began its program of reflagging and providing military escorts to 11 Kuwaiti vessels to prevent attacks by Iran. Iran accuses Kuwait of aiding Iraq in the Iran-Iraq war.

U.S. military sources in Bahrain said today that pieces of Chinese-made Silkworm missiles recovered from the Sea Isle City and the U.S.-owned tanker Sungari removed any doubt that Iran fired the missiles. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

The 275,937-ton Liberian-flagged Sungari was attacked Thursday. It sustained minor damage.

Iran warned the United States today that its actions in the Persian Gulf could lead to another Vietnam.

Tehran Radio, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, quoted a spokesman at Iran's War Information Headquarters as saying "Any American action against Iran, which would exacerbate the tension and crisis in the Persian gulf, will definitely endanger American interests.

"Thank you, thank you again for everything," McClure said.

"I've never seen anybody do anything like that before," Mrs. McClure said of the struggle to free her daughter. "They pulled together like that to save Jessica."

In related matters, a MMH employee was suspended Sunday for taking unauthorized photographs of Jessica's initial hours in the hospital's emergency room.

The photos later were sold to the New York Times.

A Midland Memorial statement said the employee's actions were in violation of hospital policy and that administrators will make a claim for the photographs and negatives to be returned.

Reagan calls U.S. naval shelling 'lawful exercise'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today called the U.S. naval shelling that destroyed two Iranian platforms in the Persian Gulf a "lawful exercise of the right of self-defense" but Vice President George Bush suggested Iranian terrorists might strike back.

If Iran retaliates, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said, the United States is prepared to again attack Iranian targets.

For his part, Bush said, "Nobody thinks that this will end it."

Reagan said the attack underscored American determination "to protect our ships and our interests against unprovoked attacks."

In a statement read to reporters by his spokesman, the president said the target was a former oil drilling facility that was had been converted into "a military platform" and "used to assist in a number of attacks on non-belligerent shipping."

Pentagon spokesman Fred S. Hoffman said no Americans were injured in the attack, which began at 7 a.m. EDT. At least some of the 20 to 30 Iranians on board abandoned the platforms after the U.S. forces radioed 20 minutes' warning.

Bush, speaking to reporters as he and Crown Prince Abdullah of Saudi Arabia met privately, said he hoped that Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini, "irrational as he may be, will get the message."

"I wouldn't count on it totally," however, he added. "I think he would have gotten the wrong response if nothing had been done."

Asked whether there might be counter-responses from Iran, the vice president said, "They have been responding in terroristic ways for many years, ever since this crowd came to power. So nobody thinks that this will end it, but at some point maybe they will realize they are going to have to pay a price."

Abdullah commented, "I believe what the United States has done is their responsibility as a superpower," but declined to answer a question as to whether he approved of it.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, briefing reporters on the raid, said gunfire from four U.S. destroyers demolished "the two platforms at one location." He added: "They both collapsed." The ships pounded them with about 1,000 five-inch shells at the platforms.

"The Iranians indicated they had heard the warning because they reported it to their headquarters," Fitzwater said.

Said Reagan in a statement read by Fitzwater: "It is a prudent yet restrained response to this unlawful use of force against the United States and to numerous violations to the rights of other non-belligerents. It is the lawful exercise of the right of self-defense enshrined in Article 51 of the United Nations charter and is being so notified to the president of the United Nations Security Council."

Fitzwater indicated the shelling lasted about 90 minutes, but Hoffman said preliminary reports from the scene indicated the attack was completed in about 45 minutes.

Fitzwater said the Iranians were seen leaving the platforms on boats before the five-inch guns on the destroyers Kidd, Hoel, Young and Leftwich opened fire.

Hoffman said a search of nearby waters failed to locate "any dead or injured."

At a Pentagon briefing, Weinberger said the destroyers carried out the attack on the Rostam facility, which he said had not produced any oil in at least a year.

Fitzwater said he wanted to emphasize "the restrained nature of this action. The precision with which we tried to identify a target was proportionate to their attack by a Silkworm missile" on Friday of the Sea Isle City, a Kuwaiti tanker flying the U.S. flag.

"Our purpose was to avoid casualties, not to cause them — but at the same time to make the important political and military point," he said when asked why the United States had not attacked the missile sites in occupied Iraqi territory.

Fitzwater said the attack should not be taken to mean the United States was "on the side of Iraq" in the seven-year war between Iran and Iraq.

"We certainly believe we have not done anything to expand the war or change our position there," he said.

Weinberger said: "We do not seek further confrontation with Iran but will be prepared to meet any further military escalation by Iran with stronger retaliation. We consider this matter is now closed."

Hoffman told reporters that the cruiser William H. Standley had positioned itself between the platforms and the Iranian coast during the attack in case any Iranian planes attempted to interfere. Weinberger said U.S. surveillance and fighter planes also flew over the area to protect the ships.

Weinberger said Saudi Arabia and Kuwait had been informed in advance of the attack and had been "cooperating very well."

Hoffman said the Soviet Union and Iran were notified of the action as the attack began.

"What is important is...for Iran to realize that they cannot make unprovoked attacks on neutral, non-belligerent, legitimate shipping in the gulf without some cost to them," Weinberger said.

Both Weinberger and Fitzwater insisted the action should not trigger the War Powers Act which would require the president to withdraw U.S. forces after 60 days unless receiving approval from Congress to keep them in the region.

"I expect Congress to be supportive of this action," said Fitzwater.

The White House spokesman insisted that the action represented no widening of U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf war.

The destruction of the platforms, Weinberger said, "will contribute materially to the future safety of American operations in the gulf."

The platforms were about 120 miles east of Bahrain and about 75 miles South of the Iranian coast.

According to Weinberger, the destroyers Young, Hoel and Leftwich had been steaming in the Gulf of Oman with the battleship Missouri and the aircraft carrier Ranger before today's attack.

It was not immediately clear when those three vessels entered the Persian Gulf, but Hoffman said they were sent in after military officials decided to use five-inch guns to pound the platforms. Most of the ships assigned to the Persian Gulf at the moment are frigates which do not carry five-inch guns.

The facility attacked today is known by two different names, Rostam and Rashadat. According to a Pentagon statement, the Navy warships broadcast the following warning: "Rashadat, Rashadat. This is the U.S. Navy. We will commence firing on your position at 1400 hours (2 p.m. local time). You have 20 minutes to evacuate the platform."

The Pentagon said the facility consisted of two different platforms mounted on piles about 65 feet above the water. One was about 89 feet by 79 feet and the other about 69 feet by 69 feet.

New bankruptcy judges hope to end overload

HOUSTON (AP) — Three new bankruptcy judges hope to make a dent in the overload of pending bankruptcy cases in Houston and Corpus Christi, and the trio already has set hundreds of hearings.

The new bankruptcy judges — Margaret Mahoney, Bill Greendyke and Richard Schmidt — were sworn in just six weeks ago.

Before the new judges arrival it was hard to schedule hearings to close cases. Houston's three veteran bankruptcy judges — Manuel Leal, Letitia Clark and R.F. Wheless Jr. — were too busy putting out fires on their emergency dockets, said 5th U.S. Circuit Court Judge Carolyn Randall. For the past three years the veteran judges have had almost 10,000 cases each.

Ms. Mahoney on Friday called in about 80 debtors and asked them why their cases shouldn't be dismissed.

Greendyke, 33, has set about 200 cases for hearings in one day at the end of October.

"It was something that needed to be said," the former San Angelo attorney explained. "I know things have changed since that opinion. It's as if judges received the OK to aggressively handle their dockets."

In six months, Ms. Randall predicted, "people will think this thing has completely turned around."

Ms. Mahoney, who said she thinks a year may be more realistic, finds the timetable optimistic.

But the question foremost in the minds of a jaded and disillusioned public is whether the added judge power has come in time.

Faced with near breakdown in the clerk's office and overwhelming caseloads, Chief U.S. District Judge John Singleton and the 5th Circuit in New Orleans two years ago ordered reforms for Houston and Corpus Christi bankruptcy courts.

Despite strides in bringing mountains of paperwork under control and the addition of new judges, observers say the system still must combat deepening cynicism in the business community.

"Everyone kind of forgets about it once they are filed," Houston businessman Jonathan Parker said of bankruptcy cases. "You just write them off.

"Trustees come in to sort through the affairs to protect the creditors, and they draw money on the assets until they're gone. It's a real crummy system."

Under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, debtors may seek protection from creditors while they attempt to reorganize and save their companies. But many observers say the system has been abused.

It's a belief that seems substantiated by statistics, directions about case management issued to bankruptcy judges by the 5th Circuit and the observations of courthouse personnel.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher chats with 84-year-old Margaret Cox Sunday morning during a walk in a Dallas park.

British prime minister thrills son's neighbors with stroll through park

DALLAS (AP)— British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher thrilled her son's neighbors when she strolled through a suburban park, stopping to chat with bystanders.

Mrs. Thatcher and her husband, Denis, were in Dallas Sunday to visit their only son, Mark, and his wife, Diane. Mrs. Thatcher made the trip after a Commonwealth meeting in Vancouver, British Columbia.

She was warmly received by residents in the Highland Park community as she walked through Flippen Park in the morning, stopping to talk to about a dozen residents of the stately homes around the park.

The visit was a pleasant surprise to Mary Alice Stell, who was walking her 3-month-old grandson in his stroller.

"I was just taking the baby out for a walk," Mrs. Stell said after Mrs. Thatcher paused to chat with her and young Samuel Stell. "She wanted to know how old he was. She said the sun might be too bright for his eyes."

Mrs. Thatcher walked through the park with her son and daughter-in-law, admiring the flowers along the paths as photographers snapped her picture.

Although British and American security agents were in the area, security was relatively light and bystanders were able to move freely around the park and approach Mrs. Thatcher.

One bystander asked Mrs. Thatcher when she thought the United States would have a woman president.

"It's hard to say when the U.S. would have a woman president," she replied. "There are a number of people who could be. It just depends on the person."

Margaret Cox, 84, who was seated nearby in a wheelchair, said she was excited to have talked with the prime minister. "She just told me she was glad to meet me and asked how long I'd been here."

Brooke Altane, 12, shook Mrs. Thatcher's hand. "I can't believe I met her," she said.

Mrs. Thatcher said she was happy to see her son, who has a reported $60,000-a-year job representing the British Lotus sports car company in Dallas.

"We telephone quite often," she said. "I just wanted to visualize the house and see the house where he comes from."

Late Sunday afternoon, the Thatcher's immediate neighbors were invited over to the two-story red brick house to meet the prime minister, said Highland Park police officer J.B. Causseaux.

Ex-Eagles band member aids hometown fight

LINDEN (AP) — Former Eagles band member Don Henley has joined forces with a group trying to stop a toxic waste incinerator from being placed in his hometown.

Henley, who now lives in California, sent $5,000 and words of support to Citizens Opposing Pollution, a group spearheading the fight against Thermal Kinetics Inc., a firm that has proposed building the plant in nearby Lone Star.

Henley could not be reached by The Associated Press for comment by telephone. But his mother, Hughlene, said her son visited Linden in September and decided to oppose the project.

"Since his daddy had a business in Daingerfield for many years, he decided to get in touch with the group and make the donation," Mrs. Henley told the Texarkana Gazette.

Henley has fought against a similar problem in Beverly Hills, Mrs. Henley said.

The donation raised the opposition's legal fund to $13,000, said group member Martha Spurger Moore. But Ms. Moore said the group needs to raise $250,000 to pay for anticipated lawyer fees.

She said Henley's donation has been put in a special fund because Henley has said he believes the donation could best be used for an environmental study or attorney fees.

"Don is aware that the battle against Thermal Kinetics will be long and expensive, and he supports the efforts being made to keep our area environmentally clean," Ms. Moore said.

Henley is working on his third solo album since the Eagles disbanded. But Mrs. Henley said the album is yet to be named and is expected to be released this spring. His last album, "Building the Perfect Beast," was released in 1985.

In the past, Henley has made political donations to state Sen. Richard Anderson, D-Marshall, and U.S. Rep. Jim Chapman, D-Texas, both of whom were opposed by Republican Edd Hargett, a Linden high school classmate of Henley's in the 1960s.

The Lone Star-based citizens group has set up booths at three festivals in the area — the Yamboree in Gilmer, the Caddo Indian Summer Arts Festival in Uncertain and Founders Day in Jefferson.

COP activists also have obtained about 7,000 individual signatures of those opposing the plant from Morris, Titus, Cass, Camp, Upshur, Marion, Gregg, Harrison and Bowie counties, Ms. Moore said.

The group has garnered donations from as far away as the Texas Panhandle.

Two UT students killed in freak hunting accident

BRADY (AP) — Two University of Texas students were killed and a third injured on a ranch near Brady when a hunting seat attached to a vehicle broke loose and pinned them underneath, authorities said.

"It was just a freak accident — a real tragic thing," said Joseph Barekman, the justice of the peace who pronounced the students dead.

"I've been here 15 years, and I've never seen anything like it. It always bothers you when they're so young and have their whole lives ahead of them," Barekman said.

Killed in the accident, which occurred about 11 p.m. Saturday, were Ramona Moorman and John McWilliams, both 19, the Department of Public Safety said.

Miss Moorman, of San Antonio, was the niece of the owner of the ranch, the Moorman Brady Creek Ranch, where the accident occurred. It is about 120 miles northwest of Austin.

McWilliams, of Austin, was taken to Heart of Texas Memorial Hospital in Brady and then transferred to a San Angelo hospital, where he died early Sunday.

The third student, identified as Perry George, 19, of Austin, was listed in stable condition at Heart of Texas Hospital with broken ribs and abrasions.

Funeral services for Miss Moorman, granddaughter of U.S. District Judge John Wood who was slain in 1979, are scheduled for Tuesday. Services for McWilliams are pending.

The accident occurred when a hunting carriage mounted to the front bumper of a 1976 Chevrolet Suburban broke loose, throwing Miss Moorman and McWilliams off the vehicle.

Miss Moorman was belted into one of the seats in the carriage, and McWilliams was sitting on the hood of the vehicle with his feet near the carriage rack, officials said.

Authorities said the two dead teenagers were thrown to the ground and the metal carriage and the Suburban rolled on top of them, trapping them underneath.

George, who was sitting in the other seat in the hunting carriage, also was thrown off the vehicle, but was not pinned underneath.

Nine other students, six on the roof, one on the hood, and two inside the Suburban, escaped injury. Authorities said the students attempted to pull Miss Moorman and McWilliams to safety.

1987 Rice freshmen's SAT scores second only to Yale University

HOUSTON (AP) — Entering Rice University freshmen averaged a score of 1,335 on their Scholastic Aptitude Tests to place the school in second place nationally behind Yale University, a survey shows.

The Rice freshmen SAT average is up from 1,321 last fall. The highest possible SAT score is 1,600.

The national average SAT score for college-bound seniors in 1987 was 906.

Aptitude tests are regarded as indicators of student's ability to succeed in college, and many schools use the score as one measure of freshman class quality.

"We always think we have the best academic crop," said Ann Worrel, an assistant admissions director at Rice. "We just feel we've got the best students available, and their SAT just turned out to be top scores this year."

Sally Reed, co-editor of College Bound, a newsletter for admissions directors, said 128 schools responded to an August survey of the 1987 freshmen class.

Ms. Reed said SAT scores are increasing for many top schools in the nation, but the survey did not include some schools such as Harvard University.

Yale had the highest score in the survey at 1,360, followed by Rice and Brown University at 1,316, she said.

At Houston Baptist University, the average scores jumped from 897 to 992, said Don Byrnes, dean of admissions and records.

My heartfelt appreciation to all the wonderful, caring, unselfish volunteers for such a magnificent, stupendous accomplishment in the beautiful rescue of little Jessica McClure.

I have never been to Midland, Texas but I will never hear the name and not think of how terrific it would be to live in a place with so many wonderful, compassionate people. All of America is appreciative and proud of you!

Nancy Reagan 'feeling fine' after operation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan, recovering from the surgical removal of her cancerous left breast, is "feeling fine" and is anxious to return to the White House with President Reagan and resume her public activities.

Doctors told the couple Sunday that final laboratory tests showed Mrs. Reagan's cancer had not spread and her prognosis for full recovery is excellent.

"Mrs. Reagan is recovering remarkably well from surgery," Reagan's physician John Hutton said in a statement released by the White House. Hutton said Mrs. Reagan's medical team is "completely satisfied with her progress in every respect."

A 12-doctor team removed the first lady's left breast and several lymph nodes from under her arm on Saturday in a 50-minute operation. The surgery followed a biopsy that revealed a quarter-inch malignant tumor.

The first indication of the lesion came Oct. 5 during Mrs. Reagan's annual mammography.

"She's feeling fine," Reagan told reporters Sunday after spending six hours with his wife at Bethesda Naval Medical Center. Reagan said the doctors told him "she's ahead of schedule" in her recovery and might return to the White House "sooner than we think."

The president plans to visit his wife regularly during her expected five-to seven-day stay in the hospital, said Reagan spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

After the first couple was informed of the test results, Hutton released a statement saying, "Final laboratory analysis of tissue and lymph nodes removed during surgery confirm there is no further malignancy or evidence of other disease."

The lymph nodes are crucial because they act as filters for foreign matter. Doctors analyze them to determine whether the cancer has spread elsewhere in the body.

"No further treatment is expected, other than normal routine examinations. Mrs. Reagan's prognosis for full recovery is excellent," the statement added.

Hutton said Mrs. Reagan was feeling "very little pain" and was given a mild analgesic medication.

Mrs. Reagan's reaction to the news was "just total relief," said her spokeswoman, Elaine Crispen. She quoted the first lady as saying, "Just fine. I feel great."

Playboy quote no 'party' for college

MACON, Ga. (AP) — These are strange times at Mercer University, a Southern Baptist college whose unexpected depiction by Playboy magazine as a "party school" has touched off a holy war for control of the administration.

Since the article appeared, some fundamentalist Southern Baptists have branded the school's moderate president a heretic and called for Mercer to be taken out of the hands of its board of trustees.

Student reaction has been swift, and angry. Last Wednesday, hundreds of clean-cut students packed Mercer's student center for a hurriedly called appearance by Raleigh Kirby Godsey, a former Southern Baptist minister and the 17th president in Mercer's 148-year history.

Cheers erupted when the soft-spoken Godsey vowed, "This university will not be taken over by anybody!"

Earlier this year, when Playboy magazine ranked the college the nation's ninth best "party school," many here figured that someone was pulling Playboy's leg.

The 6,000-student school is an unabashedly Southern Baptist institution. Beer isn't permitted on campus even if students are old enough to drink it.

The Playboy article was followed by another issue containing a nude pictorial featuring women from the "party" schools, including two Mercer students.

Then, earlier this month, Lee Roberts, a suburban Atlanta businessman and Baptist layman, mailed a 16-page "open letter" to Baptist pastors, Mercer faculty members and the parents of Mercer students.

The letter contained "dramatic evidence of filthy language, lewd photographs, heresies, student drunkenness and sexually explicit material."

Roberts included photocopies of the Playboy photos and a student newspaper ad in which someone seeks a backpack lost "in a drunken frenzy Saturday night."

He listed R-rated movies on campus, including "M*A*S*H" and "Rosemary's Baby," and 33 instances of profane words and phrases found in a book published by the Mercer University Press.

He quoted from Godsey speeches on theology, including one in which the president said that "any historical search to validate the deity of Christ is likely to fail."

Roberts called for an overhaul of Mercer operations to permit a panel of the Georgia Baptist Convention, not Mercer's Board of Trustees, to nominate new board members.

And he noted "strong rumors" that the Georgia Baptist Convention, at its meeting next month, might strip Mercer of its $2 million allocation, call for the replacement of all 45 trustees or sever church ties to Mercer.

In reaction, Atlanta's First Baptist Church, home of fundamentalist leader and former Southern Baptist Convention President Charles Stanley, said it would no longer contribute to Mercer's $2 million allocation.

However, Augusta's First Baptist Church, where the denomination was founded in 1845, backed Godsey and said it would lend the school financial support.

"It makes me mad," said Karen Jacobs, a senior from Monticello who edits the student newspaper. "(Roberts) has made attacks that cannot be substantiated."

"We are not a party school," said Holly McCorkle, a senior from Jacksonville, Fla., and student government vice president. "Mercer's always had rules. And it's always been strict."

The struggle reflects a larger one between fundamentalist and moderate factions in the nation's largest Protestant denomination since the fundamentalists took control of the Southern Baptist Convention eight years ago.

In an interview last week, Godsey called the takeover attempt "political fundamentalism."

"This whole matter has galvanized the university community," said Godsey, who dismissed Roberts' charges of heresy as "simply nonsense."

"What we have going on here is a movement of...wanting to take control of the affairs of the university in order to dictate what is taught, in order to control who teaches it, in order to control the textbooks that are used and the books that we publish."

To defuse the situation, Godsey recently wrote a letter to The Christian Index, a Georgia Baptist newspaper, in which he stressed, "Jesus is the center of my faith."

Godsey said Roberts' "takeover" attempt will fail because Mercer's charter gives the board of trustees power to nominate future trustees and the charter cannot be changed unless the trustees themselves vote to do so.

"We will not compromise our commitment to religious freedom, religious diversity, the tolerance of religious differences. That's the heart of a Baptist university," he said.

As for the Georgia Baptist Convention's $2 million, Godsey said that if Mercer has to live without it, it will. He said the school could go directly to Baptist churches and their members for support.

Baptist association may kick out church which hired woman pastor

Sehested

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The status of a Southern Baptist congregation that hired a woman as pastor rests on the findings of an inquiry into whether the church violated a policy that has bitterly divided the denomination.

The Shelby (County) Baptist Association, representing 120 Southern Baptist churches in the Memphis area, promised to release results today from the investigation into the church's "doctrinal soundness," which was conducted by an all-male group.

Prescott Memorial Baptist Church offered its senior pastorship to the Rev. Nancy Hastings Sehested on Aug. 23.

The possibility of the association excluding Prescott Memorial and its 235 members threatened to heighten tensions between fundamentalists, who believe only men should be pastors, and moderate factions in the Southern Baptist Convention.

"It's just a shame this had to happen," Ms. Sehested said last week, as she prepared to leave her Decatur, Ga., home to take over the pulpit at the Memphis church.

Ms. Sehested, 36, is a Texas native whose father and grandfather also were Southern Baptist ministers.

Adding to the drama was the proximity of the denomination's national leader, the Rev. Adrian Rogers, pastor of the 17,000-member Bellevue Baptist Church in Memphis. Rogers, who was twice elected president of the Southern Baptist Convention with the support of fundamentalists, has not spoken publicly about the pending decision.

"It could have been a wonderful celebration had he welcomed me to Memphis, but he has chosen not to," said Ms. Sehested, who has served as associate pastor at Decatur's Oakhurst Baptist for the past eight years.

The Southern Baptists, with 14.5 million members across the country, remain bitterly divided over the decision two years ago that women were unfit to be senior ministers because Eve was at fault in Adam's temptation and fall from grace.

Recently Beth McGhee, a proponent of women ministers, died of a heart attack in Atlanta during an emotional meeting of the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board as it debated whether to continue withholding funds from small churches that hire women ministers.

Ms. Sehested, who will assume her new post Nov. 1, is one of 450 women who have become ordained Southern Baptist ministers in recent years. She also holds a master of divinity degree from Union Theological Seminary in New York.

"But only about 10 of us have found pastorates and most of those are at small churches that do not pay their ministers," she said.

Betty Dawson, chairwoman of the search committee that selected Ms. Sehested, said Prescott Memorial, which has a racially integrated congregation and a history of social action, did not set out to hire a woman.

"We took our time and spent nearly a year looking for the best candidate. The Reverend Sehested is a wonderful minister and was overwhelmingly approved by our congregation," she said.

Panel sought to try Waldheim for war crimes, paper says

CHICAGO (AP) — A United Nations commission determined in 1947 that it had enough evidence to try Austrian President Kurt Waldheim for World War II "crimes against humanity," a newspaper reported.

The Chicago Sun-Times reported Sunday that it obtained access to a secret U.N. file labeled "Kurt Waldheim — Murder and Other War Crimes," which contained photographs, captured documents and statements from witnesses linking Waldheim to war crimes.

The U.N. file identifies Waldheim as a key German army intelligence officer in and around Salonika, Greece, during World War II, the newspaper reported.

It said that in 1947 the U.N. War Crimes Commission determined it had sufficient evidence to try Waldheim.

Waldheim was never tried, and a request by the Yugoslav War Crimes Commission to have him extradited to that country was never pursued.

A duty officer answering the telephone at Waldheim's office in Vienna Sunday said no spokesman would be available to comment on the Sun-Times report until this morning. A secretary said this morning that no spokesman was available yet.

Waldheim, who has denied any wrongdoing, maintained for years that he had been discharged from the German army in December 1941 after a grenade splintered his ankle on the Russian front. Later he admitted he stayed in the army, but maintained he was a rear-echelon supply officer and low-level translator.

Waldheim was secretary-general of the U.N. from 1972 to 1982 and was elected president of Austria in 1986. Revelations about his wartime activities emerged during the election campaign.

The 17-nation U.N. War Crimes Commission has been meeting recently to decide whether to allow public access to the files of Waldheim and about 8,000 other individuals. Some authorities oppose releasing the files because they contain many unproved allegations.

The Sun-Times reported that the file stored at the U.N. contains captured Nazi records and Yugoslav intelligence reports showing that Waldheim had been classified as an intelligence officer with a Nazi unit in charge of security in the southern Balkan region from 1943-45.

Iran will win land war, congressional report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq appears increasingly likely to lose its land war against Iran, an outcome that would be "catastrophic for Western interests" in the Persian Gulf, a congressional report says.

"In the worst-case scenario, the United States could face the choice between permitting Iran to dominate the West's oil supply in the Persian Gulf and direct U.S. military intervention on behalf of the conservative Arab gulf nations," says the report, which was released Sunday.

The report was prepared by three staff members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who visited Iraq and other Arab states and interviewed U.S. Navy officers in the gulf to gather their information.

They concluded that "Iraq can no longer win the war against Iran. But Iraq can lose it."

Committee Chairman Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., has been highly critical of the Reagan administration decision to reflag and provide U.S. Navy escort to 11 Kuwaiti tankers, and the report echoed Pell's call for a United Nations effort to stem the flow of arms to Iran and Iraq and end the war.

Administration policies are viewed by Arab officials as confusing and incoherent and contributing to prospects for an escalating war, the report said.

The main threat lies not in the highly publicized "tanker war" in the gulf, it said, but along the 900-mile Iran-Iraq border, where a worsening situation in the north and center may ultimately lead to an Iraqi defeat on the highly contested and critical southern front.

"An Iraqi defeat would be catastrophic for Western interests," the report said. "Unfortunately, there may not be much the United States can effectively do to keep Iraq from losing."

The administration has justified the reflagging as an effort to bolster Kuwait, which although neutral in the war, allows its ports to be used for the transport of war supplies to Iraq. Most recent Iranian attacks have been against ships using Kuwaiti harbors.

"The U.S. is perceived by Iranians and Arabs alike as having sided with Iraq, and the expanded U.S. naval presence is likely to invite more Iranian attacks of increasing severity," said the report, which was prepared before an Iranian missile damaged one of the reflagged Kuwaiti tankers last week.

The reflagging decision was "shaped as much by a short-term desire to restore credibility lost in the Iran-Contra affair as by any careful assessment of U.S. interests and objectives," it said.

Of the 314 shipping attacks in the gulf from 1981 until March of this year, 219, or 70 percent, were by Iraq.

And "the greater the Iraqi assault on Iranian shipping, the greater the likelihood of Iranian retaliation against U.S. forces," the report said.

Panel probes Contra-drugs link

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Congress' major Iran-Contra investigation winds to a close, a House panel is expanding its look at possible drug- and gun-running by the Nicaraguan rebels and charges that U.S. officials condoned the crimes.

Rep. William Hughes, D-N.J., chairman of the House Crime subcommittee, said Friday that the panel is widening its year-plus probe of crimes by and for the Contras.

"We're developing some very troubling information," said Hughes.

Hughes said the investigation continues to focus on "narcotics trafficking and gun-running." He declined to elaborate.

The crime panel also continues to track allegations that federal officials, possibly including Attorney General Edwin Meese III, discouraged prosecution of the crimes, Hughes said. Meese has strongly and repeatedly denied the allegations.

The quiet investigation by the crime panel has been overshadowed by the nationally televised investigation of Congress' Iran-Contra panel. The joint House-Senate committee is expected to release its final report late this month.

Hughes said the crime subcommittee, meanwhile, will add full-time investigators to join one Florida-based investigator already on staff. Like him, at least one of the new staffers will be an agent be borrowed from a federal law-enforcement agency, Hughes said.

Hughes said the subcommittee has uncovered some "evolving issues...evidence that needs to be pursued more agressively." He has previously acknowledged receiving some "wild" allegations as well.

He said some of the allegations are likely to be the subject of public hearings by the subcommittee before the end of the year.

Man with AIDS puts himself before public

Bill Travis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bill Travis is placing himself and his affliction with AIDS before America as an example of an impending national loss, and painfully pulling a reluctant family behind him.

It wasn't his initial intention to become something of an "AIDS poster boy."

"Some of my family members can't understand," he told a small group of Public Health Service workers last week. "They say, 'Why don't you just stay quiet? Why are you dragging us through this? We have to live with this. You're going to die anyway.'"

Travis, the homosexual son of a Southern Baptist minister, had stopped by the Public Health Service offices to thank the workers for their efforts. Instead, they threw him an impromptu party in honor of his 26th birthday today.

A design student before he got too sick to hold down two jobs and attend classes at the same time, Travis agreed to tape spots distributed to television stations nationwide by the PHS as a part of the federal government's October AIDS Awareness and Prevention Month.

"I've been fortunate enough for inner strength and my higher power and good sound teaching from my mother to find the courage to fight and that's why I'm open," he said in an interview. "Not everyone has that. I'm fortunate. And I do think people with AIDS are going to be able to teach the world how to love."

Herewith, then, the philosophy of Bill Travis, not necessarily in order of importance:

— "When people (medical people) came after me they wanted to dope myself up and my mother on Valium. My God, it seems like everybody's answer. Sometimes it helps, I'll be honest with with you. Sometimes Valium will calm me down. But I just can't walk around in a daze. I really want to experience being alive, both ends."

— "I have a pride problem. I cannot go on food stamps. I can't do it...Simply because something inside of me said, 'You've made a living for yourself. Hang in there a little bit longer. Go without a few meals. Fine. But remember: Stay hungry.' There's something inside me that I knew I could pick myself up out of that bed and get out the door. Somehow."

— "My job now is to be public. It thrills, it feeds me. But there are thousands of others who may not have the strength or be in a position to be able to. I don't particularly enjoy being photographed, but it's something I've learned to tolerate. If I become the AIDS poster boy, that's OK."

— "I want to open other people up, to make them feel. That's what I want. I can't be everything to everybody, I suppose, but there will be people out there whose shell will crack. And just a little bit, just a little bit of my love will seep in and maybe a little bit of theirs will seep out. Once it gets in there it's just like the AIDS virus. It multiplies."

A few people with AIDS virus receiving liver transplants

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the nation's hospitals are transplanting livers or kidneys into patients with the AIDS virus, raising ethical questions because of the shortage of such organs and the recipients' uncertain life expectancy.

Medical centers struggling with the issue stress the vast difference between patients who test positive for the AIDS virus, and those who have actually contracted the disease.

Transplants are not done on people showing symptoms of the disease because AIDS patients are not likely to live long enough to justify such use of the scarce donor organs. However, studies have shown that people may carry and spread the so-called HIV virus for as long as 10 years or more before contracting deadly AIDS, which breaks down the body's immune system.

"We know it is possible for people who are HIV-positive not to get it (AIDS) for seven or eight years," said David H. Van Thiel of the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine, which has given liver transplants to patients testing positive for the virus.

"No one is a prophet. Let's say they get it in two years. That still beats the heck out of dying in six months because of liver disease," Van Thiel said.

There were 924 liver transplants in 1986, and more than 300 people waiting for livers as of last month, according to government statistics. The figures for kidneys were much higher — 8,980 transplants last year and nearly 10,000 people waiting.

A federally-funded agency matching donors with recipients urged the nation's 41 liver transplant centers and 190 kidney transplant centers in August not to refuse organs to people solely because they test positive for the AIDS virus.

Are women with AIDS dying faster?

NEW YORK (AP) — Studies in three states have found that some women with AIDS are dying more quickly than men with the disease, a finding that is puzzling researchers, The New York Times reported today.

No national data are available, and researchers said further study must be done before any conclusions can be drawn from the differing survival times, the newspaper reported. But some experts called the indications disturbing.

"We see a dramatic difference in the survival of women with AIDS," said Dr. Margaret Fischl, of the University of Miami. "The reason may be hormonal. AIDS in women may be a different disease."

However, other factors may be at play, such as later diagnosis of the disease in women; a large number of sickly drug addicts among women victims; or poverty among female victims that prevents them from obtaining good care.

The 119 women with AIDS seen by Fischl survived an average of 6.6 months after diagnosis, compared with an average of 12 to 14 months for men, the Times reported. In California, 128 women with AIDS lived an average of 40 days after diagnosis, while nearly 7,000 men lived an average of more than a year.

In New York, approximately 1,000 women with AIDS lived fewer than two years after diagnosis, while 10,000 men lived about 2½ years, on average.

NATION IN BRIEF

'Mouth of south' shuts up

ATLANTA (AP) — Ted Turner, the outspoken entrepreneur once labeled "Mouth of the South," has lowered his voice.

He has given up America's Cup sailing to steer his three 24-hour cable stations into the mainstream of television.

He skips games by his Atlanta Braves baseball club and Hawks basketball team to attend business meetings around the world, a sharp contrast to the days when he coached from the dugout, substituted as a bat boy and led cheers.

But his Cable News Network no longer fights for credentials to cover the president. And he owns a library of 3,650 films such as "Casablanca" and "The Wizard of Oz," many of them being "colorized" despite objections from Hollywood stars.

Robert Edward Turner III, a Cincinnati native who turns 49 years old next month, and the television empire he launched 17 years ago have matured and changed.

Bork backers make case

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supporters of Robert H. Bork should get their chance this week to go before the Senate's television cameras and make their case for the embattled Supreme Court nominee.

Senate Republican Whip Alan K. Simpson of Wyoming has been organizing a response to the effective anti-Bork campaign that has left the nominee's supporters trying to make up lost ground. Fifty-four members of the 100-member chamber have said they will vote against the appellate judge.

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., tried to give the pro-Bork forces some momentum as the week began with his complaint Sunday that a pro-Bork witness had been intimidated into canceling an appearance before the Senate Judiciary Committee. He called for an investigation by the committee.

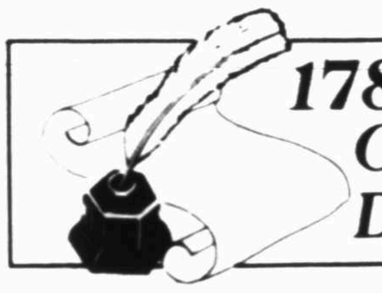

But John T. Baker, an Indiana University law professor who withdrew the evening before his scheduled appearance before the committee Sept. 28, told The New York Times that he had not been intimidated.

Agronsky quits news show

WASHINGTON (AP) — After nearly half a century of meeting deadlines, Martin Agronsky wants a change of pace.

He is quitting as moderator of the news analysis show that bears his name, "Agronsky & Company," and with him goes an era that one television critic calls "a wine and cheese party that's been going on for years."

"Eighteen years is enough," Agronsky said in a recent telephone interview.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Friday, Oct. 19, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

On this Friday, diarist Christopher Marshall recorded a typical Sunday's activities. "Sunshine and Cool. Wind N. breakfast with our family. Kindled fire. reading. Came on cloudy like for rain. tea at home. to Baptist meeting where John Murray played the part of a Minister. Singing and praying. Then took for his text 18:4 Ezekiel, and as the trumpeter calls the Martial Man to attend upon and obey the commands of his office, so he endeavors to call all people in his audience to obey the Commands of Christ."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress again lacked a quorum and was unable to meet. One of the absent members, John Langdon of Portsmouth, N.H., had returned home to take care of his business interests.

Today, Tobias Lear, a friend from New Hampshire who also happened to be George Washington's secretary, wrote Langdon to bring him up to date on the Virginia reception to the Constitution. Most of the people in northern Virginia favored ratification. Lear had been fearful that George Mason's influence would turn people against the Constitution. Instead, it appeared that Mason was losing much of his popularity because of his opposition.

He had heard that Gov. Edmund Randolph would not oppose ratification and that rumors suggested that he might even support it. Neither Lear nor Washington had heard whether or not former Gov. Patrick Henry would support the new Constitution. Lear hoped "that this general advantage which is held up to view in this Constitution will reconcile him to the adoption of it."

RATIFICATION TODAY

Tobias Lear had no way of knowing that Patrick Henry was writing a letter to George Washington that very day, offering his opinion of the new form of government. "I have to lament," Henry wrote, "that I cannot bring my mind to accord with the proposed Constitution." Although he added that "mature reflection" might change his mind, he was informing Washington that he would likely remain in the anti-federation camp.

DELEGATES TODAY

Benjamin Franklin spent the day writing letters of introduction for Charles Pinckney who was preparing to travel to Europe. Franklin informed four acquaintances that Pinckney was "a gentleman of excellent character," a member of Congress from South Carolina, and a delegate to the Constitutional Convention. To his friend the Duke de la Rochefoucauld, Franklin added that Pinckney would be happy to explain in some detail the new federal Constitution.

LOOKING BACK
Letters of Introduction

Letters of introduction were an important and interesting 18th century custom. If someone were traveling to an unknown area, letters often were beneficial for expediting business matters, meeting important people, or finding employment. Franklin was held in such high esteem in France, his letters almost guaranteed that Pinckney would be welcomed by the most important people.

In some cases, influential individuals would be requested to write letters even if they personally did not know the subject. For example, in May 1787 the Marquis de Lafayette sent a letter of introduction for the Charties de Lotbinieres, who was traveling to the United States. Although Lafayette did not know the French gentleman personally, he was requested by several friends to write the letter to Washington.

Occasionally someone would try to pass off a fraudulent letter of introduction to gain favor from an important person. Benjamin Franklin was afraid that a Mr. O'Conner was using this ruse when he was presented with a letter from Francis Childs in January 1787. He wrote Childs on Jan. 15 to ask if the letter was genuine. Three days later Childs confirmed that the first letter was legitimate and that the subject, Mr. O'Conner, seemed to be a fine upstanding gentleman who deserved Franklin's attention.

Landowner should remove well danger

The case of Jessica McClure, who spent two and a half days in an abandoned water well in Midland last week, spotlighted a danger that should be addressed quickly. According to a number of knowledgeable Midlanders, numerous abandoned water and oil wells are present throughout the city and this entire region. Jessica's case graphically illustrates the inherent dangers in that fact.

The situation is complicated by the fact that codes relating to the wells are often nebulous. For instance, a state water well act indicates that responsibility for plugging abandoned wells rests with the individual landowner. But, apparently, enforcement is far from rigorous. The city now has no safety code relating to water wells, but city officials indicated following the recent accident that the matter will be reviewed and some action possibly taken.

That action certainly is in line. Midland hydrologist Joe Reed said a large number of similar wells exist in the city. Although the prospect might be remote that an event like the one experienced last week could be repeated, the possibility exists and it might conclude with more tragic results.

For now, all individual landowners or residents should take it upon themselves to investigate their property carefully and to study plats of the property to determine whether wells are present. If they are — and if they are open like the one in which Jessica was trapped — they should be plugged with concrete or covered with a welded metal plate.

Jessica's well, as it has come to be called, already has been covered with a metal plate to prevent it from ever threatening another child. But other wells in this area could create similar life-threatening situations.

It takes very little time or expense to render wells safe. As the experience of last week shows, that expense and effort could be greatly magnified if an accident occurs again.

Market reaction

The significance of America's foreign trade deficit has finally jolted Wall Street — but not, alas, Washington.

When the Commerce Department reported that the August deficit was smaller than July's record level, but not by as much as expected, the stock and bond markets went into a dizzy dive. The bellwether interest rate on long-term government bonds leaped above 10 percent and, with interest rates so high, the Dow Jones index of stock prices tumbled. Wednesday's record one-day drop of 95 points was followed by Thursday's 58-point decline.

The message is simple: The balance of exports and imports is now crucial to the U.S. economy. The administration and Congress, by dawdling on a trade law and the budget deficit, only invite trouble.

It is wrong to emphasize one month's erratic figures. Wall Street may have overreacted; it often does. But the August report confirmed that, even with a sharply devalued dollar, the deficit hasn't shrunk significantly; the trade problem runs deeper. The administration, having forecast substantial improvement this year, now preaches patience, unconvincingly. But an impatient Congress is shaping protectionist trade legislation that would make matters worse. And both the president and Congress have relaxed their attacks on budget deficits.

The nation's foreign trade got out of whack in the early 1980s, when the value of the dollar soared, impelled by foreign eagerness for dollar investments and the government's huge deficit borrowing. Finally sensing trouble two years ago, Washington joined with other governments to push the dollar down, and keep it there.

This was expected to close the gap by boosting exports and curbing imports. Exports are expanding considerably but America's taste for imports remains strong despite higher prices; and now, rising consumption of higher-priced imported oil adds to the problem.

The administration still counts on further export improvement and diminished imports. But for that to happen depends on faster growth in Japan and West Germany. With the persistent American trade deficit and dim prospects for sufficient cuts in the budget deficit, foreigners are less attracted to dollar investments, unless these pay higher interest rates. The risk is that higher borrowing costs could push the economy into recession.

This dilemma cannot be resolved easily or quickly, but a nervous world needs solid evidence that Washington understands the problem. Untamed budget and trade deficits and a protectionist trade bill signal the contrary.

Young Astronauts preparing for future

WASHINGTON — Three years ago, President Reagan began one of his most ennobling projects. He established the Young Astronaut Program to prepare America's children for the greatest of all adventures: the conquest of space.

Jack Anderson

At no cost to the taxpayers, the program has introduced space-age education to 450,000 school children across America. In the affluent suburbs and the inner cities alike, the children have responded to the lure of space exploration. Science classes have been transformed into space adventures, with children eagerly pursuing the science and math they used to shun.

Beginning today, the Young Astronaut Council will also offer the program to the nation's preschool children. A special, year-long program has been tested in Florida; it will permit parents and teachers to start early, preparing their children for the 21st century. The text presents fun-to-do activities that will introduce "astrotots," as they'll be called, to the basics of space-age education before they start school.

The federal Head Start program which helped develop this course, will use it in its 25,000 classrooms. Some other nurseries and day schools also plan to adopt it. There is no similar curriculum for 3- to 5-year-olds.

The Young Astronaut Council will also announce plans to construct a multimillion-dollar Young Astronaut headquarters building near Washington's Dulles airport. It will be the centerpiece for a proposed National Space Park. The power behind these plans is John Herrity, the Fairfax County, Va., board chairman, who has already brought several high-tech firms into his county and seeks to make it a national technological center.

The building will also become world headquarters for Young Astronauts/Young Cosmonauts International, which was formed in Tokyo earlier this year. Nearly 100 nations have inquired about the program, which has already been adopted by several countries. It was introduced, this year for example, to the Chinese mainland.

President Reagan personally intervened with Soviet Chairman Mikhail Gorbachev to establish ties between the Young Astronauts and Young Cosmonauts who one day will explore space together. This resulted in the first official youth exchange in the history of Soviet-American relations. Young Astronauts and Young Cosmonauts toured one another's space facilities and exchanged dreams of space travel. Afterward they adopted a joint resolution of only three words: "To Mars Together."

The Young Astronaut Council is also crusading to improve the educational standing of American school children. Americans put up more school buildings and hand out more diplomas than any other people. But the quality of education has declined.

Graduates coming out of American schools, for example, are less qualified than their Japanese counterparts. This has reduced the productivity of American workers, restricted their technological skills and lowered their wage-earning ability. To put it bluntly, they have lost their competitive advantage.

But the most urgent need is for teachers. Four million Americans certified to teach aren't in the classroom, because they can't afford the low salaries. Twenty years ago, 22 percent of all college freshmen planned on teaching. This has now fallen, according to the latest available figures, to an alarming 6 percent. As a consequence, a massive teacher shortage is looming in America. The reason is simply that the classroom offers no financial incentive.

But the Young Astronauts' executive director, Wendell Butler, has adopted the optimism of his children. "If the pessimists had been right," he said, "nothing much would have been invented, nothing would have been discovered, nothing would have been improved."

TRADE WITH TEHRAN — Despite the administration's long and loud assurances that its arms-for-hostages fiasco was the only major breach in its embargo of trade with Iran, the fact is that the White House has been unable to enforce any meaningful ban on trade between Tehran and U.S. companies. In fact, the government's own figures show that Iran posted a $578 million trade surplus with the United States last year. This included $460 million worth of Iranian oil bought on the world spot market and imported into the United States.

In the other direction, sophisticated computer hardware was bought by the same Iranian government telecommunications agency that had a hapless American engineer thrown in jail as a spy. The Iranians also bought American scuba-diving equipment for use by their frogmen in the Persian Gulf. U.S. officials discovered that there were no regulations to block the sale — but they managed to stop it anyway by routing the shipment through Canada, where cooperative officials seized the gear.

Turning on woman's tears is sobby maneuver

We are facing one of the most important political questions of the day:

Because Rep. Pat Schroeder, who is a woman, cried when she announced she would not seek the presidency, does this mean women are too weak to hold that office?

Grizzard

I would like to offer my opinion on that subject, but first I'd like to say I am not attempting to stereotype the entire female population.

My opinion is based strictly on my personal experience in dealing with women.

Although I've been married on a number of occasions (July 17, 1966; April 8, 1973; February 10, 1980), I haven't married even half of the entire female population despite the fact I often felt I had while writing out alimony checks.

If the women I have dealt with over the years can be used as examples, I would say then that when women cry, it certainly doesn't mean they are weak.

It means they are cunning and know how to get exactly what they want.

Crying has been the ultimate weapon women have used against me in an effort to get their way.

I can't handle a crying woman. There is something deep inside of me, likely put there by my mother, or a girl in my third-grade class who cried until I agreed to share my grape popsicle with her, that causes me to turn weak and lily-livered the moment a woman begins to cry in my presence.

All my ex-wives were outstanding criers. They could summon tears in a heartbeat and render me helpless.

"It's time you got dressed," would be her opening line.

"Dressed for what?" I would reply.

"We're going to dinner at mother's."

"I'm not going to your mother's for dinner. She always serves that green soup that looks like pond scum and asks me how much life insurance I have."

"You promised you would go."

"I promised I'd go if hell froze over."

Breaking into tears now. "You don't love me."

Beginning to weaken now. "Of course I love you. I just don't like green soup."

Sobbing now, "How could you be so cruel to my mother?"

Defeated, I give in. "OK. I'll go to your mother's but I'm going to hide in the bathroom during the soup course."

The tears dry up immediately and the next thing I know, I've got pond scum soup in my mouth discussing with my mother-in-law how much insurance I would get if one of my arms got cut off.

If any of my ex-wives became president, she could get Jane Fonda confirmed for the Supreme Court with a bit of timely bawling.

But don't worry. None of my ex-wives will ever occupy the Oval Office. Two are busy with careers far outside of politics and the other is a liberal Democrat who cried when I refused to vote for George McGovern.

Actually I finally did tell her I would vote for McGovern if she stopped crying. I lied. The secret ballot is an essential foundation of democracy.

Gore gambling on bucking Democrats' trend

WASHINGTON — In the trench warfare between Democratic presidential contenders competing for liberal special interest groups, Sen. Albert Gore Jr. has made a strategic breakout that has revived his fading campaign and could transform the ideological climate of the fight for the nomination.

When Gore and the five remaining presidential candidates took the stage in Miami Oct. 5 for a debate on national security issues, the 39-year-old freshman senator's campaign was barely breathing. When he left, he had become a common target of his competitors by the simple tactic of marginally but clearly moving right on defense and foreign policy.

Democratic insiders agree Gore has scored a ten-strike. From a low base of public and party support, since Miami he has been treated by his opponents as if he were the front-runner. He has done it by reversing the pattern, set by Edmund Muskie in 1972, of relatively moderate Democrats turning left once they announce for president.

The immediate motive is to keep Tennessean Gore, running poorly in Iowa and New Hampshire, alive long enough for Southern-oriented Super Tuesday primaries March 8. But more broadly, he is appealing over the heads of ideologized party activists to rank-and-file Democratic voters who are scarcely more liberal than the national consensus. The real significance of the move is whether he pulls his opponents at least part of the way with him.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Gore has not gone all that far himself. He still opposes military aid to the Nicaraguan contras, which remains the litmus test on national security. He is no Scoop Jackson and is not even a Sam Nunn. But he does not have to be to set himself off from the field, as was shown in the Miami debate.

Not only did the other five Democrats persist in ritual flailing of America's role in the world, unwittingly mimicking Communist propaganda (as when Gov. Michael Dukakis referred to Honduras as "practically a client state of ours"). But Rep. Richard Gephardt, competing with Gore for moderate white Southerners, suggested the U.S. might arm the African National Congress (ANC) fighting the white South African regime.

How could a supposed moderate be drawn into a position where he unalterably opposes aid for anti-Communist insurgents in Nicaragua and Angola but supports Communist-backed insurrection in South Africa? Because Gephardt has been sensitized by ceaseless courting of party activists in Iowa and New Hampshire.

Drawn by moderator Ted Koppel into equating the ANC with the Afghanistan freedom fighters (whose struggle has been deemed uniquely acceptable by liberals), Gephardt swallowed the bait. If "you're going to have bloodshed in South Africa" and a "full-blown revolution," he said, "I can envision the United States helping people fight for their basic freedom."

Nearly as startling was the posture of Dukakis, a neophyte on the national stage but an unmistakable McGovernite in foreign policy, suggesting this policy for the Gulf War: "Rather than driving the Iranians into the hands of the Russians, we will back away from our support of the Iraqis or, alternatively, twist their arms to make them stop the tanker war that they started."

Gore's response that "if we had not held firm" in the Gulf no progress would have been possible at the United Nations toward a cease-fire is language heard far too seldom by Democratic presidential candidates the past five campaigns. Indeed, he struck no such posture last July in Houston at the first debate, when he appeared as a Southern-accented liberal.

But not very Southern, considering the fact that Gore has spent most of his life in Washington as the son of a senator. In many ways, he seemed the least authentic and least prepared of the candidates. Financed by the coterie around Washington real estate mogul Nathan Landow who would have preferred Gov. Mario Cuomo, Gore's candidacy was described by malicious political gossipers as the attempted fulfillment of his father's frustrated dreams.

Even his campaign manager, Fred Martin, was belittled by insiders as a wordsmith (he wrote speeches for Walter Mondale, Geraldine Ferraro and Cuomo) out of his depth politically. But Martin has devised the most imaginative tactical gambit of the plodding Democratic struggle.

Whether or not it succeeds, Al Gore has opened a door back to reality by rejecting Ann Lewis, director of the Americans for Democratic Action, as arbiter for what is acceptable in the world's oldest existing political party. After Lewis declared Gephardt unacceptable, the Missouri congressman promptly moved left on a broad front of issues and squirmed last summer when Dukakis challenged him on past national security votes. In going the opposite way, Gore is bucking his party's 20-year quest for oblivion.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak are columnists for North American Syndicate.

Shultz ends Israel talks with no apparent progress

WORLD

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz began a round of meetings in Egypt today after talks in Israel that did not produce any apparent headway toward negotiations on the Arab-Israeli dispute.

"I cannot point to any particular thing and say we've gone from here to there," Shultz told reporters in Jerusalem on Sunday. He urged Arabs and Israelis to "dig in" and try to find a path to direct negotiations.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid greeted Shultz today at Cairo International Airport, where veteran reporters said security was the tightest ever for a secretary of state.

Shultz and Abdel-Meguid left for talks at a nearby hotel. The secretary of state was to meet Prime Minister Atef Sedki and have a working lunch with President Hosni Mubarak.

After talks in Cairo, Shultz was scheduled to fly to London to see Jordan's King Hussein.

Shultz said Sunday he would like to see Hussein meet with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir so they could "come to grips directly" with their differences.

"But we all realize there are impediments, and we try to deal with those impediments," Shultz said at a news conference in the bar of a Jerusalem hotel.

Earlier, in a speech to 300 academics at the Weizmann Institute at Rehovot, Shultz called on the parties to the Middle East conflict to take risks in exploring peace.

"Those who are reluctant to explore new ideas or even revisit old ones have an obligation to offer something different as an alternative to the status quo," Shultz said.

Shultz later denied he was referring to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Shamir opposes an international Middle East peace conference, which has won the endorsement of the Arabs, the Soviet Union, and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, Shamir's coalition partner. Shamir has said he fears that the international format would force Israel to return all land captured in the 1967 Middle East War.

Shultz sharply criticized eight prominent Palestinians from the occupied West Bank who boycotted a planned meeting with him on Sunday.

"They have missed something," Shultz said. "It's sort of contradictory for them to say they need to be heard but then when they are offered a chance not to take advantage of it."

Shultz said he thought some of those invited did not attend because they feared reprisals.

Mustafa Natshe, former mayor of the West Bank city of Hebron, told The Associated Press that the Palestinians rejected the invitations because they believed the Palestine Liberation Organization should represent Palestinians, and because they were angry at the closure of a PLO office in Washington.

"We consider the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of Palestinians inside and outside the occupied territories," Natshe said.

The secretary of state gave no hint he brought any new ideas to Shamir or Peres. Instead, he suggested the parties should be willing "to take a look at the old ones again."

Yossi Ben Aharon, director general of the prime minister's office, confirmed Shultz had not come with new proposals.

"We didn't learn new things from Mr. Shultz, but that was not his goal," Ben Aharon said in an interview on Israel army radio. "His goal was to try to examine our position, then to examine positions of other parties to the peace process, and to see if it was possible to move the cycle another step ahead."

Violent protests continued Sunday in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza City against Shultz's visit, the Arab-owned Palestine Press Service said. A 14-year-old boy was wounded, the agency said.

Laurel says Aquino may not finish term

Vice president to join forces with opposition leader

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Vice President Salvador Laurel said today he was joining forces with an opposition leader for local elections and said President Corazon Aquino may not serve her full term if she "makes mistakes left and right."

Laurel made his remarks a day after the government said it foiled a possible new coup attempt in which rebel troops stole an armored personnel carrier from army headquarters and abandoned it about a mile from the presidential palace.

Meanwhile, unidentified gunmen ambushed a vehicle Sunday near U.S.-run Clark Air Base, killing two Filipino civilians and injuring two government troops, police said. The identity of the assailants was not known, but the communist New People's Army operates in the area.

Laurel told foreign correspondents that he and Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile were forming a "tactical alliance" to support candidates in the Jan. 18 local elections, but said they were not opposing the president.

Reports of an alliance between Enrile and Laurel fueled speculation that conservative groups were organizing an "alternative government" in case Mrs. Aquino is toppled in a coup.

Her term expires June 30, 1992 and she is barred constitutionally from seeking re-election.

"I think a great deal will depend on how she handles the situation right now," Laurel said. "If she makes the right decisions, decisive moves, I think she will last the measure of her term. But if she makes mistakes left and right, she may not."

Laurel said he hoped Mrs. Aquino succeeds because "any failure on the part of this government will affect everybody."

The vice president refused to go into detail about his criticism of Mrs. Aquino's decisions. But he said the most pressing problem was dissent in the military, which has led to a series of coup attempts.

The administration is trying to restore public confidence after an Aug. 28 coup attempt in which 53 people died and hundreds were wounded. It was the gravest threat to Mrs. Aquino since she was swept to power in a February 1986 civilian-military rebellion that ousted President Ferdinand Marcos.

On Sunday, rebel troops believed linked to renegade Lt. Col. Reynaldo Cabauatan stole an armored personnel carrier from army headquarters and drove it to Santo Tomas University.

Troops and tanks rushed to the presidential palace and university area, and security was increased at military installations in the capital.

Acting Manila Gov. Jejomar Binay said Cabauatan planned to launch an attack on the presidential compound from a campus staging area.

"The president was happy to know that the attempt was aborted," Binay said.

An opposition source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said rebels planned to mount a "military operation" but it failed after someone tipped off pro-government forces.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Cabauatan denied any role in the theft of the personnel carrier. But the renegade leader, sought since a coup attempt in January, said the incident points to widespread military opposition to Mrs. Aquino.

"What happened this morning must be a group of individual soldiers whose sentiments could not be stopped any more. And I'm sure there are lots of this kind in the armed forces," he said in a hideout in central Luzon, the island that includes Manila.

The incident began early Sunday when the V-150, a light, wheeled vehicle with a machine gun mounted on the turret, drove out of Fort Bonifacio, the headquarters of the Philippine army in suburban Makati.

Brig. Gen. Alexander Aguirre, capital regional commander, said despite the coup alert, guards allowed the vehicle to leave with an unauthorized marine driver. They alerted commanders only after he had left, Aguirre said.

The six-man crew later abandoned the vehicle, taking a machine gun and ammunition, witnesses told police.

Defector says he's ready to return to U.S. to stand trial

MOSCOW (AP) — An American soldier who defected to the Soviet Union six months ago said Monday he is ready to return home to stand trial on charges of desertion.

Wade Roberts, 22, said he is unrepentant but prepared to come back to the United States, "because things have been hard enough on my family since I've came here."

He told The Associated Press that his mother, who lives in Apple Valley, Calif., had been under attack by people angry at what he did but said "she thinks I'm wrong" and never supported the defection.

"I am going to face the charges as soon as I have civilian legal representation and I am guaranteed a fair trial," Roberts added.

Roberts, an Army private who left his unit in West Germany and was spirited across the border into East Germany by his girlfriend, faces charges of desertion under the uniform code of military justice. He said he believes he could be sentenced to up to four years in prison if convicted.

He said his West German girlfriend, Petra Neumann, 24, is expecting a baby this month and wants to go with him to the United States.

Roberts said he had been in touch with an official at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and was told the embassy would help him return to the United States if he is prepared to face trial.

He has also been assured by Soviet authorities that "if I would like to go, I can have the exit visa immediately," Roberts said.

He said his first step would be to apply for an American passport. He currently has only a military identification card and needs a passport to travel across international boundaries.

"I never renounced my citizenship," Roberts said.

He first indicated last week that he was having some second thoughts about what he had done.

He said then he was seeking permission to leave the Soviet Union and resettle in East Germany, where Ms. Neumann has relatives. He added that he was having difficulty learning Russian and was disenchanted with his state-assigned job as a snake catcher in the Central Asian Republic of Turkmenia.

Roberts and Ms. Neumann traveled to Moscow nearly six weeks ago and have been living in a hotel while waiting for action on their application to go to East Germany.

Shortly after midnight Sunday, Roberts telephoned the AP to say he had spoken to his mother in California and was upset to hear about the abuse to which she and other members of his family had been subjected.

"It's not my parents' or my family's fault that I am here," he said. "I wish the public to respect my mother's feelings because it is hard enough on her already. She has had no part in what I have done."

Roberts has said he defected because he disliked army service. He left the Rivers Post Army Base in Giessen, West Germany, and rode in the trunk of a rented car across the border to East Germany, defecting at the Soviet Embassy in East Berlin.

Church envoy visits Syria, Lebanon

LONDON (AP) — A representative of the archbishop of Canterbury has visited Syria and Lebanon in an effort to win freedom for a British television newsman held hostage in Lebanon, the archbishop's office said Sunday.

The announcement from the archbishop's Lambeth Palace headquarters said the trip also was an effort to bring Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite out of Lebanon. He vanished there in January while on a mission to win freedom for foreign hostages, but no group claims to have abducted him.

Television newspaper John McCarthy was kidnapped April 17, 1986 near Beirut.

Palace spokeswoman Eve Keatley said John Lyttle, public affairs secretary of the Most Rev. Robert Runcie, visited Syria and Lebanon on Oct. 12-14. The announcement followed reports that the Syrian government offered to help in negotiations for the release of British hostages.

"John Lyttle's purpose was to try to further the release of British hostages in Lebanon," a palace statement said.

It quoted Lyttle as saying: "I have no doubt that the Syrian government would like to see the release of hostages."

Lyttle traveled to Syria at the invitation of Syrian Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Defense Gen. Mustafa Tlass.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Belgian government resigns

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — King Baudouin accepted the resignation of the center-right government today after four days of talks among political leaders failed to resolve a dispute over language.

The royal palace said in a brief statement the monarch asked the government of Prime Minister Wilfried Martens to stay on in a caretaker capacity and to form a new government.

Martens offered the resignation of his coalition government Thursday in a dispute over a mayor who insists on speaking French in Dutch-speaking Flanders.

Belgium is divided into French-speaking Wallonia in the south and Dutch-speaking Flanders in the north. But there is some overlap in towns along the frontier.

Belgium has had 33 governments since World War II, many of them felled by the language issue. The country has 5.5 million Dutch speakers and 4.5 million French speakers.

One year ago, Martens offered to resign in a similar crisis over the mayor, Jose Happart. Baudouin waited four days, and Martens worked out a temporary solution.

British jet avoids collision

LONDON (AP) — A British Airways jet carrying 114 passengers and seven crew members screeched to a halt to avoid a collision with a light aircraft on a Heathrow Airport runway, British Airways said. There were no injuries.

The Boeing 737 jet bound for Stuttgart, West Germany, was cleared for takeoff Sunday night and was picking up speed when a German-owned turboprop with 10 people aboard taxied across its path, British Airways said.

The pilot aborted takeoff and applied the brakes so hard they overheated, said an airline spokeswoman, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"It stopped perfectly safely and the matter is being investigated by air traffic control," the spokeswoman said.

Because of the damage to the jet's brakes, passengers were transferred to another aircraft.

Paper says 'wild men' exist

BEIJING (AP) — Scientific tests on strands of hair prove China's "wild man" exists, a newspaper says.

Tests on six strands of hair found in central and southern China, where numerous sightings of the "wild man" were reported, showed the hair did not belong to humans or scientifically known animals, reported the Wenhui Daily in its Saturday edition.

The paper quoted a recent edition of Nature magazine that carried the report by Li Mu, Zeng Xianzhou and Hua Tianwei. It said Li collected the strands of hair over four years in Hubei, Hunan, Sichuan and Guizhou provinces.

The "wild man," or "yeren," known in the West as the "abominable snowman," is said to live in the Shennongjia Mountains of Hubei.

The Chinese say records of such wild men date back 3,000 years in China.

This is a small sampling of the 24 fiddles Reed Johnson has made over the past two years.

Fiddlin' Around

What began as a childhood interest has developed into an adult hobby and a full-time occupation for Midlander Reed Johnson.

During his 68 years of life, Johnson has progressed from playing guitar in his family's band to collecting old fiddles and, finally, to making and repairing fiddles in his own shop.

Johnson's interest in fiddles stems from his like of country music. "I'm a country musician and I just like stuff like that," he says.

Although he has a great interest in the instrument, he says he doesn't play the fiddle much himself. "I play a little bit of fiddle, but not enough to brag about," Johnson said adding he prefers to play electric bass and mandolin guitar.

His main interest is not in playing, but in collecting old fiddles and making new ones. "I just love the old violins," Johnson said.

He has been collecting and repairing the instruments for 20 or 25 years, but only started building his own two years ago after retiring from Superior Oil. In those two years Johnson has crafted 24 fiddles.

Many of his creations adorn the walls of his shop at 3118 Franklin in Midland. The shop is lodged in a house Johnson bought in 1951.

At that time, he and his family lived in the house. Then, in the early 70s, Johnson and his family moved, but he retained ownership of the home as rental property. Later, the area was re-zoned for commercial use, and in August of 1985 he moved his fiddle repair business back to his old home and christened it "Fiddles Unique."

Not only is the shop unique, but so are the fiddles. These creations range from simple, unadorned instruments to works of art made of unusual wood and intricate carvings. One of Johnson's favorite fiddles has a neck carved in the form of a bobwhite quail. Another instrument is carved in the shape of a ram's head. He has also made a five-string fiddle — a cross between a violin and viola — which has won awards in fiddle competitions.

Of the 24 fiddles Johnson has made, he uses "Daisy," the third fiddle he made, as a standard to judge the others by. Constructed of hard-spruce and maple and carved with a Daisy pattern, this fiddle has a very fine sound, Johnson said. If a fiddle sounds as good as "Daisy," he said, it's a pretty good fiddle.

Using a caliper, Johnson checks the graduation of a fiddle top.

And good fiddles are hard to part with, according to Johnson.

"I make them to sell, but then I get attached to them and don't want to let them go," he said.

Please see FIDDLE, Page 2B

Although Johnson buys pre-made bridges, they must be cut and sanded to fit each fiddle.

Once Johnson completes a fiddle he gives it a play to see how it sounds.

Johnson marks a piece of doweling for a fiddle's sound post.

Two recent lion attacks anger Houston official

HOUSTON (AP) — Two recent attacks by lions have angered the head of the city's bureau of animal regulation and care who says owners should be more responsible.

Lions, tigers, jaguars, cougars, lynxes — all have been found caged, chained or, at times, loose in the city and many are now housed with a city facility.

The latest was a lion that had to be killed after it attacked an 8-year-old girl in a shopping center and was shot by police last weekend. In Galveston on Tuesday, a 20-year-old man was scratched by a lion when he fell on the animal's head.

For Dr. Robert Armstrong, chief of Houston's bureau of animal regulation and care, his biggest complaint is not the number of animals or their species, but their owners.

"For many of them, their main qualification for owning a big cat is that they have one tattooed on their arm," he said. "Right after I got here I began counting (in late 1983) the number of exotics were handled and, to date, there have been 1,350."

"And I'm ticked. That's too damn many in that short a period."

Armstrong said his facility handles as many as exotic animals as a small zoo would.

"What we have basically is a dog kennel, and it's not equipped for big cats, much less something like snakes. We've got a cobra in here right now. It's not defanged, it's lethal and we're not equipped to deal with that."

Some say exotic animal owners are lax because of a lenient city ordinance.

The "ordinance they've got in Houston is stupid. They say an animal like that has to be kept 300 feet from a building, but they don't specify what sort of pen. You could keep one in chicken wire," said W.A. Marshall, who raises tigers, cougars, leopards, panthers and bobcats in nearby Brazoria County near West Columbia.

"They ought to be kept in a half-acre. They ought to be in a cage with three-quarter inch bars and a three-foot barrier so no child can reach in and touch them and their owner ought to be required to get a license from the USDA (United States Department of Agriculture) like the rest of us."

He also suggests a fine of $2,000 to $3,000 for violators.

Houston City Councilwoman Eleanor Tinsley last week called for an ordinance banning lions and other such wild animals from the city.

Mrs. Tinsley said Wednesday she would like to see the council adopt an amendment that would ban wild animals from Houston entirely, except for circuses and zoos.

Marshall, who has been raising the animals commercially for about 25 years, agrees with Armstrong that they should not be kept in populated areas.

"The fellow who took that cat to that shopping center on a leash is just not right," Marshall said. "Kids and cats don't mix. He should have had it in a cage. You just never take one into a busy area like that on a leash."

In Galveston, a hearing was scheduled today concerning the fate of the pet lion that scratched the 20-year-old man a week ago. The lion's owner had obtained a temporary court order last Thursday restraining Galveston County officials from having the animal killed within 24 hours so its brain could be tested for rabies.

Under state health regulations, the lion is considered a wild animal and cannot be quarantined for rabies observation as are domestic animals, said Joe Vickery, Galveston County Health District chief sanitarian.

Although a new hearing had been set for this Thursday, State District Judge Ed Harris Friday granted an assistant county attorney's request to advance the hearing to today.

Four fugitives still at large after escapes from TDC units

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Four fugitives are at large after escaping from two separate units of the Texas Department of Corrections, authorities said.

Edward Fields, 25, and William Tutson, 24, escaped from the Wynne unit in Huntsville about noon Sunday, said TDC spokesman David Nunnelee.

Fields is serving a 42-year sentence for a Travis County burglary. Tutson is serving a 25-year sentence for a Harris County robbery, he said.

The two men cut a hole in a fence that leads to the food services division, where they hot-wired an unmarked state car, Nunnelee said.

Later Sunday, two men were discovered missing from the Jester I unit near Richmond, the spokesman said.

The fugitives were identified as Gilberto Trevino, 22, serving 10 years for his conviction on a charge of burglary of a habitation in Hidalgo County and Henry Gonzales, 33, serving four years for burglary of a building in Harris County, Nunnelee said.

The two inmates were last seen in the recreation yard about 7:30. They apparently climbed over the fence and ran off, he said.

Search for convicted killer to be scaled down

AMARILLO (AP) — The search for a convicted killer believed to be hiding in Texas Panhandle ranchland with his girlfriend will continue to be scaled down somewhat today, a Texas Department of Public Safety trooper says.

Officers have been searching for several days for Daniel Juan Revilla, 19, and Carrie Medrano, 17, on a ranch since they learned they had been taken there by a relative after Revilla escaped from the Jackson County Jail at Altus, Okla.

Revilla had been convicted in the Jan. 26 death of 13-month-old Mark Gomez, Medrano's son, and was awaiting sentencing when fled from the jail last Tuesday.

The search was called off over the weekend.

DPS Sergeant James Powell, a trooper stationed in Pampa who helped with the manhunt, said officers are "cooling off" their sweep for at least a couple of days so the terrain can settle.

So many people have been in the area recently that whatever scents tracking dogs might be able to discover would be disturbed, Powell said. He said the dogs would have a better chance of finding the convict once the dust settles.

But Powell believes the fugitive may have already left the area.

Collingsworth County Sheriff John Rainey thinks Revilla is still in the area and plans to re-institute the search in a couple of days as a precautionary measure.

If new clues are discovered, the manhunt would be on again in full force, a Collingsworth Sheriff's spokesman said.

If no new evidence is found, Revilla's search status would be reduced to a routine lookout, the spokesman said.

Authorities found three strips of cloth late Saturday in Collingsworth County.

New material eliminates heat from metals, firm claims

LUBBOCK (AP) — A chemist has invented a substance that virtually eliminates heat from drilling and milling metals, claim officials of a company that plans to market the invention.

Potential uses for the mystery fluid range from filling electrical transformers to cooling the shields of a space craft re-entering the earth's atmosphere, Endotherm Inc. officials said.

The substance was invented in 1982 by a Austin-area chemist who was working with with some metal in his garage when he ran out of drilling fluid, said Kenneth Sanders, who will direct the establishment of the new products' national sales headquarters in Lubbock.

The chemist mixed some chemicals to produce what he believed to be an adequate substitute, said Sanders, founder of an auto service chain and a Lubbock investor.

But the new fluid had interesting properties not associated with traditional drilling fluids — almost no heat was produced when drilling, he said.

"Think about the implications of that — no heat from drilling or milling," Sanders said. "That will mean a reduction of production costs for almost any metal product."

Because the inventor is employed by another firm, Sanders wouldn't identify him. But the chemist's name and other aspects of the secret project will be revealed soon, he said.

Sanders also declined to provide further details on the substance except to note that the product is an organic compound, not a petroleum distillate.

Endotherm has signed non-disclosure agreements with Lockheed-Georgia and Alcoa to test the product, Sanders said. As part of the agreement, Endotherm has tested the substance as a successful heat-reducing drilling fluid on extremely hard and exotic metals such as carbide steel and titanium, he said.

Endotherm officials know that an endothermic or heat-absorbing reaction is taking place, but they know little else about the process, Sanders said. "We are not sure why it does it," he said.

Testing will cost about $100,000 and will have to wait until the research facility is completed, Sanders said.

Endotherm wants to reserve the rights to the product for the widest range of uses possible, and therefore have been hesitant to patent the product, Sanders said.

Because of its potential national defense uses, Endotherm arranged for the Department of Defense to test the substance, Sanders said. Studies are being conducted at an Air Force Base in Ohio, he said.

Production of the substance will require mostly blending products, so a plant could be located nearly anywhere, Sanders said. A facility could be assembled in two to three weeks in time for a Jan. 1 introduction date, he said.

Device which keeps drunks from starting auto stirs controversy

FORT WORTH (AP) — A new device that stops people who have been drinking from starting their cars is winning approval from some judges but drawing opposition from defense attorneys.

The device, developed by a Colorado company, has been used under a new law as a condition of probation for people who have been convicted of driving while intoxicated but are allowed to drive for work purposes.

"Nothing is perfect, and that includes this device," Tarrant County Criminal Judge Jake Cook said. "But I think anything that can ensure public safety, I'm going to use."

Critics object to its cost — about $500 — and contend that it could be misused.

The gadget is about the size of a citizens band radio, and is mounted under the dashboard. Before starting the car, the driver must blow into a tube that leads to a breath analyzer.

Most are set at .02, about the equivalent of drinking a single beer. If the driver's blood-alcohol limit meets or exceeds the setting after the breath test, the car won't start. Under Texas law, a driver is considered drunk if his blood alcohol level exceeds .10.

Although the law — which went into effect Sept. 1 — still is so new the Department of Public Safety hasn't issued regulations for it, judges in Tyler, New Braunfels and Dallas already are using the device.

"It's an excellent stumbling block for offenders," said Tyler Judge Cynthia Kent, who used the device before it was specifically provided for by law.

Sewage threatens health of border residents, Gramm says

Raw or improperly-treated sewage is dumped directly into the Rio Grande at 14 different locations there, the commission reported.

EL PASO (AP) — The health of U.S. citizens and Mexicans living beside the Rio Grande is being seriously threatened because raw sewage is being dumped into the river, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm says.

"The river is almost an open sewer," Gramm, R-Texas, said at a news conference at the International Boundary and Water Commission headquarters Sunday. "We've got to come up with a plan (to clean it up) that will work."

If the river is allowed to deteriorate, he said, future economic growth and job creation in the region will be stifled.

The senator said he has submitted a bill in the Senate that would set up an international committee to study and document the river's increasing contamination. The boundary and water commission would oversee the study.

Gramm's plan calls for a yearlong technical survey, estimated to cost $1 million, as the first step in a multinational river cleanup that could take years and cost tens of millions of dollars to accomplish.

Sewer lines and sewage treatment plants could be built at critical points along the mutual border. Such facilities in Nuevo Laredo, Texas, alone would cost between $30 and $50 million, George Baumli, the commission's principal engineer, said.

River pollution isn't as big a problem in El Paso, officials said, but it reaches alarming levels downstream from Nuevo Laredo.

Raw or improperly-treated sewage is dumped directly into the Rio Grande at 14 different locations there, the commission reported.

In Juarez, the 30 million gallons of sewage created there each day is channeled into canals, mixed with groundwater and used for irrigation, Baumli said.

"Small discharges" into the river at Juarez occur from time to time, but those are mostly accidental releases and are quickly corrected, he said.

The International Boundary and Water Commission is a semiautonomous international agency led by one U.S. and one Mexican commissioner and their staffs who work out of separate headquarters in El Paso and Juarez. The U.S. section has about 280 employees, 80 of them in El Paso, and has a $14 million annual budget. There are field offices along the border from San Ysidro, Calif., to Brownsville, Texas.

The federal government should take a lead role, morally and financially, in cleaning up the Rio Grande, Gramm said. But he said Mexico and international funding agencies also should pick up part of the costs.

Symbol for Texas' retarded may leave state for services

SUGAR LAND (AP) — John Leisz Jr. is like thousands of other retarded Texans who have won guarantees of better services from the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

But as the original plaintiff in the 1974 class-action suit that challenged state services for retarded people, Leisz is the symbol for the rest of Texas' retarded.

His name is on thousands of legal documents filed in federal court, including last week's much-heralded settlement of the 13-year-old case.

But the 34-year-old blind and severely retarded man may have to move to another state to get proper services for his special needs, his family and attorney said.

"It's a travesty. It's inexcusable," Philadephia lawyer David Ferleger, who represents all the retarded plaintiffs in the case, told the Austin American-Statesman.

"It would be terrible to think we have to emigrate as refugees to another state," said John Leisz Sr., a 64-year-old retired building manager who lives in Galveston.

The settlement doesn't include specific provisions for Leisz; it requires reforms for all retarded people in the 13 state schools as well as those in community programs, including Leisz.

Leisz lives in a community home operated by Richmond State School in Sugar Land, west of Houston. He has been in similar homes since 1984, when he moved out of Austin State School after residing there for 22 years.

His mental age is between 2 and 6 years, his father said.

Leisz usually gets along well with his family and the workers and professionals at the home — he helps prepare his own meals and can dress and bathe himself, his family and doctors said.

But he also exhibits aggressive behavior that includes biting himself and others, his father said. He can destroy furniture, clothing and other objects.

A stalemate has developed over which services he needs, both his family and state officials said.

A year ago, the state proposed to control Leisz' behavior by squirting water in his face or strapping him down when he behaves wrongly, but the man's family and attorney have opposed such measures as too painful and barbaric.

Halloween festivities not just for children anymore

Hearst News Service

Halloween has become more of a family affair than ever before.

With safety in mind, many parents are limiting children's Halloween festivities to at-home parties.

Much of the fun revolves around choosing costumes. Some dress to scare; others outfit themselves as fantasy characters.

Some adults also don costumes for entertaining children. Recently, two women stood at a costume counter discussing witch outfits they might wear when grandchildren came calling for treats. One preferred a fetching witch costume (with tinsel hair and glittery hat). The other came down on the side of tradition (black hat, gray wig and ugly nose).

The "wicked witch" or "good witch" are only two of many choices for children of any age. There are clowns, princesses, pirates and pumpkins. You can even choose to be a scratch-and-sniff raspberry in costume sets that cost from $5-$6 at costume outlets, variety, drug and grocery stores. Other styles are available at Hallmark Card shops and J.C. Penney.

Especially for children, look for costume sets created with safety in mind. Some are in flame-retardant fabrics. Masks should have no sharp points but should have large eye openings for good visibility. Some children's styles are made of non-toxic materials.

If you prefer a more creative approach — but time is limited — you can create a costume with a pair of basic black pants and T-shirt (or tights and leotards) and pour on accessories.

There are many choices to get the effect you want. There are headbands shaped like bones, giant screws, lightning bolts and devil horns, among others.

Don't forget about special makeup. There is everything from professional greasepaint to glitter creams and glow-in-the-dark formulas in all price ranges. Or tie on an adjustable waistband with tails that represent a demon, a rat a skunk or dragon.

If you don't have a black T-shirt you like, you can get one with a pumpkin face, a spider web, or some other eerie motif.

The Hallmark styles are targeted to a young-adult market, but many of the accessories would work for anyone. J.C. Penney Co. also has set up special Halloween sections. The costumes in adult sizes run from $19.98-$49.98 and $17.98-$24.98 in children's sizes. The masks ($21-$25) and accessories are separate.

If you want to spend more time to enter the land of make-believe, pattern companies have the latest styles. With a Butterick pattern you can appear as a French maid, with fashionable touches such as off-the-shoulder tops and short pouf-skirt for her. For him, try G.I. Joe or Superman styles; most are available for all ages.

Childhood's 'cheap thrills' memorable

Editor's note: This is part two of a two-part series on the forgotten joys of childhood.

By RON WIGGINS
and PAT CROWLEY
Copley News Service

Most of us, when we were kids, operated on a bare-bones entertainment budget and became connoisseurs of the cheap thrill.

Your very first cheap thrill was so much fun that you threw up. We refer to tossing, which was done to you by dads and uncles while your mom screamed like a wounded thing.

All thrill-seeking, whether it be skiing, surfing, skydiving or stock car racing, are but futile quests to recapture that thrill you knew when your daddy tossed you 3 feet above his head and caught you by the simple act of impaling your armpits with his thumbs.

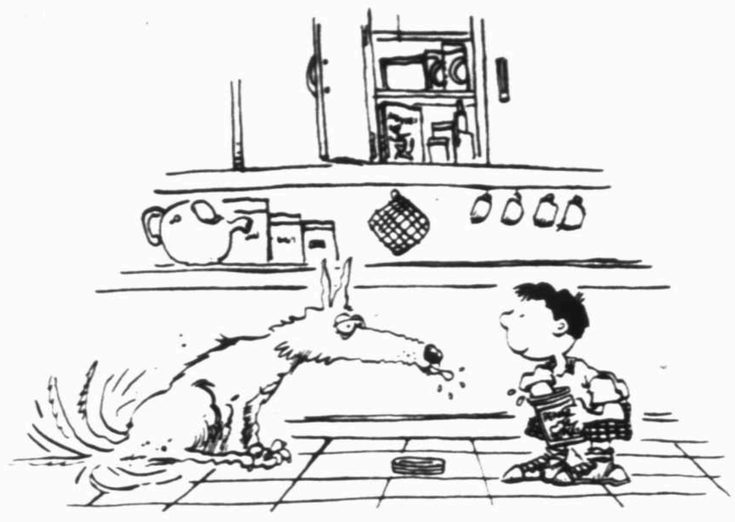

The second cheap thrill you knew was upsa-daisying or curb-swinging if you want to get technical about it.

Upsa-daisying worked like this: while crossing the street, your parents walked on either side of you, grasping your hands. As they neared the curb, they stepped out smartly ahead, and then with perfect timing, swung you up to the curb, achieving a perfect parabolic arc that gave you that elevator-dropping sensation in your stomach as you lighted on the sidewalk.

YOUR MOM said, "Upsa-daisy." Your dad said, "Alley-oop."

Now "that" was a cheap thrill and unless you are under 35 pounds, you have been upsa-daisied for the last time.

Do you still try to jump the instant before the elevator drops, hoping to extend that wild moment of free-fall? No? Well, then how about piano stool spinning or rubbing peanut butter on the roof of the dog's mouth or challenging a buddy to a butter cookie nibbling contest?

CNS Graphic

You don't remember store-bought butter cookies with the scalloped edges and the hole like a doughnut and how you took turns nibbling the same cookie trying not to be the one who broke the ring? Then you probably don't remember sniffing gum wrappers.

Instead of scolding you for acquiring too much dignity to pick up a Juicy Fruit wrapper for the sheer pleasure of inhaling its aroma, or for being too grown up to walk backward on the escalator, why don't we double back and pick up the trail of what having fun on a zero budget was all about.

You came into this world naked but not stripped of accessories. You could smell, hear, taste and feel. Of course, for that first year your world was deucedly out of reach and you could only lay on your back and snatch at things as they chanced by.

Once you could crawl and walk and grab, you had it made. If something needed listening to, the dog's asthma, for example, you could go to that dog and tilt your head right against its mouth for the last word in high-fidelity monaural dog breathing. You could taste your way around the yard, bury your face in the laundry hamper, look at a lily until your nose turned yellow.

INDEED, THAT first decade of your life was dedicated to taking your body around and showing it a good time. We here at the Last Times Retrieval Institute understand that when you're with your friends you never say, "Let's go out in the yard and spin around until we get dizzy and fall down."

Ane yet we wonder: is this why people drink too much — because they associate dizziness and nausea with the happiest times of their lives?

We suggest that if you will try hard to remember the last time you availed yourself of the cheap thrills of childhood, you can recapture a few of them when nobody else is in the house and there's no danger of the authorities coming and taking you away to an insane asylum. Go back with us now to those golden and economy-minded days of yesteryear when:

- Using powdered sugar, a dab of milk and Bosco chocolate syrup, you made a bowl of icing which you licked off your fingers while listening to "Sky King."
- You built a fort in the woods, a secret fort that nobody else knew about until it occurred to you that nobody would raid it unless you more or less gave directions.
- You sat in a swing while a friend twisted it as far as it would go and let you spin.
- Your mom let you stand up on the bus seat so you could pull the bell for your stop.
- You played crack-the-whip and were on the end and were flung to kingdom come.
- You camped out in a tent in the back yard and read comic books with a flashlight.
- You made a Pepsi-drinking friend laugh at just the right moment so that foaming Pepsi gushed out of his nose.

■ YOU WAITED until someone had set up the dominoes and then pushed the end domino and laughed like a loon while the outraged architect pummeled you half to death.

- You sucked a Tootsie Pop to the core, a triumph of will.
- You secretly stashed the last piece of the jigsaw puzzle. Come to think of it, aren't you the same creep who knocked over our dominoes? Why you dirty rat, I oughta. ...

Parents' memories affect their own parenting styles

WASHINGTON (AP) — When people have good memories or feelings about their childhood they try to repeat the experience for their own children, says Vivian Boul, director of The Catholic University of America's Center for Child Services.

"If they have had negative nurturing experiences, parents will try to raise their children differently. People move toward pleasure and avoid pain — as Freud maintained," she explains.

She has found that parents who were read to as children will enjoy reading to their children and those who remember taking leisurely walks with their parents will enjoy doing the same with their own children on weekends.

"Good times are not related to money, but are simple, ordinary shared experiences," she points out.

Mrs. Boul observes that parents who received harsh unjustified punishment as children often maintain they will not do the same to their children.

"People who were not able to negotiate with their parents, or whose parents did not appreciate their ideas, vow not to be that way as parents," she says.

She points out that today it may not be the mother, but rather the stepparent or parent with primary child-rearing responsibility, who tries to repeat or re-create the good memories and the past joys experienced as children.

"When Benjamin Spock wrote his first child care book, he said mothers needed to stay home and raise their children," she says. "Today, with increased numbers of working mothers, he's readjusted his thinking."

Working "moms" shouldn't feel guilty if they can't duplicate the full-time mothering their own mothers may have provided, she suggests.

"Time may be shorter, but the essential ingredients in loving relationships don't change with the times. There's sufficient evidence that quality, not quantity, of mothering is what counts," Mrs. Boul says.

She defines quality as times when parent and child enjoy each other and take pleasure in the give and take.

"In a sense the giving is one-sided — it's the parent's responsibility. There should be no strings attached, but unqualified unselfish giving in meeting the child's needs."

What children experience in quality situations is having their needs met in a full way. "That's essential for growing healthy children," she says.

Researchers study separated twins

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — University of Minnesota researchers studying twins who were separated at birth have found striking similarities among the siblings — even when they were raised in totally opposite environments, reports Discover magazine.

In one striking example, one twin, a Jew, lived in Israel, Trinidad and California, while the other twin grew up as a Catholic in Germany, where he was a member of the Hitler Youth movement.

Despite their dramatically different backgrounds, the twins showed surprisingly similar personalities when they were tested in the Minnesota study.

The twins even shared the same eccentricities: both flushed the toilet before and after use, and both thought it was funny to fake a sneeze in a crowded elevator.

DEAR ABBY

Caution can take horror out of Halloween

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Don't tell me it's time to prepare for another Halloween again! Well, it is, which means it's time to remind you that:

■ Somebody's child will be seriously injured or killed in a Halloween-related traffic accident.

■ Somebody's child will be badly maimed or fatally burned due to a flammable costume.

■ Somebody's child will become violently ill or die after eating poisoned candy or an apple containing a razor blade.

■ Somebody's child will be coaxed into an automobile or lured into a secluded area and sexually assaulted.

To make sure that child isn't yours, here are some tips to ensure the safety of your children:

■ Use flameproof costumes only. If costumes are made at home, treat the fabric with a flame-resistant solution.

■ Because masks, floppy hats, wigs and veils often interfere with a child's vision, use makeup instead.

■ Accessories such as swords, broomsticks, hatchets, wands, etc., should be made of cardboard rather than plastic, metal or wood. Sharp items are dangerous.

■ Provide youngsters with flashlights to prevent falls on sidewalks or porch steps. (Positively no lighted candles should be carried!)

■ Decorate your child's costume and trick-or-treat bag with reflective tape to make them highly visible to motorists.

■ Remind children that they should never enter the home of a stranger or accept rides.

■ Adults can help by keeping their yards well-lighted.

■ Parents should check all "treats" before allowing children to eat them.

■ Very young children should never be out after dark unless accompanied by an adult.

So, make it a safe Halloween, and come Thanksgiving, you'll have more to be thankful for.

DEAR ABBY: This concerns the issue of the "Boxer Rebellion": First, a 14-year-old girl wanted to know your thoughts on the new fad of girls wearing men's boxer shorts. You said it was "harmless" or words to that effect. Then a Mr. Griffith wrote to say he thought the fad was gross and pointed out the fact that there was an opening in front large enough to stuff a grapefruit through.

I'd like to tell Mr. Griffith that we young ladies either use a large safety pin to close the gap — or we stitch it shut. — LIKES BOXER SHORTS

DEAR LIKES: The mail has been running 2-to-1 in favor of boxer shorts for girls. However, one mother had this to say:

DEAR ABBY: I have two daughters, ages 13 and 15, who have taken to wearing their father's boxer shorts. They sewed up the opening in front, but a pair of their stitched-up shorts got into their father's underwear drawer by mistake and he didn't discover it until he wore it one day. Thank heavens Daddy has a sense of humor. — OREGON MOM

DEAR ABBY: This is for your fidelity survey. My husband and I have been married for 51 years and neither one of us has ever cheated. In fact, we are more in love today than we were before we were married.

Our 48-year-old son is getting his third divorce. Abby, how do you explain these crazy liberated women who do not appreciate a good husband and provider? — PUZZLED IN PETERSBERG

DEAR PUZZLED: I can't. But with three strikes on him, perhaps you should stop blaming the ladies he's liberated.

Children ready for school

CINCINNATI (AP) — The time has passed when children, accustomed to spending most of their early years at home with parents, cry profusely in their first days at school, a child development specialist says.

Today's children are more socialized and accustomed to outside influences because of television, preschool instruction and play groups that some parents place their offspring in as early as 18 months, says Earladeen Badger.

"I disagree with the concept that kids are anxious about going to school today. I think they're excited," she said. "What we find now is nary a tear as kids go into kindergarten. There may be some apprehension ... but this is just another school to go to.

"We're finding that in most schools in the United States, kindergartens are teaching school skills like reading and writing. In the last 10 years, we're finding that children are socialized much earlier than they were before."

In previous years, when fewer women worked, young children who frequently spent most of their time at home found it harder to adjust to leaving the home for school classrooms, Ms. Badger said.

"Kids who went to school cried because, essentially, they were raised by the parents at home and did not have any other separating influences," she said. "Kids aren't raised in the back yard any more. Now it all goes on outside the home. So school is another place. It's no big deal."

Ms. Badger, a developmental psychologist at the University of Cincinnati Medical Center and Children's Hospital Medical Center, has been devising child development programs for parents since 1966.

Children's "cognitive abilities" are already in place at age 4, earlier than the average of years ago, she said.

These abilities include thinking in abstract concepts and being able to assign words to one's experiences.

'Monster under bed' childhood tradition

By ANNA QUINDLEN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The monster under the bed finally arrived at our house the other night. I've been waiting for him to show up for four years. "Peter Rabbit" had been read, discussed, analyzed and placed nearby for easy access. The little brother was coiled under his blankets, waiting to leap out and seize forbidden tow trucks and alphabet blocks as soon as the sound of the parents' footsteps had faded to a faint thump. The bathtub faucet was drip drip dripping in the next room. The drinks of water had been parceled out, demanded again, refused. The overhead light was off. The night light gleamed.

"Mom?"

"Yes."

"I have something very important to tell you."

"What?"

"There is a monster under my bed."

Do you have any idea how close I came to replying, "Well, it's about time"?

IT SEEMS that the monster showed up under my bed just the day before yesterday. I always thought he was a hairy beast with a lot of teeth, a cross between Godzilla and a Gahan Wilson drawing. He never got me, but that was because I was quick and brave and careful. After I finished reading in bed, I would go across to the switch next to the door and turn out the light. Then I would hoist my nightgown up to my knobby knees, take a deep breath, run three steps and leap up onto the mattress. Don't break stride, don't look down — those were my rules of survival. I knew that if I had eyes in my chin I'd see a long nasty arm whipping out to grab me by the ankle and pull me under. Beneath the bedspread I was safe. One more night alive.

What did I tell my son about his monster? Something lame, I think, like, "Would Daddy and I let monsters in this house?" Followed by a rambling discussion of things that are there and things you only think are there and their relative dangers and merits.

(The last time we had this discussion it was because he didn't want to sleep in the top bunk. "The things on the ceiling go in my ears," he said. "Honey, those are shadows," I replied. Long explanation about shadows, how shadows form, the benign nature of shadows. The next night he still did not want to sleep in the top bunk. "The shadows on the ceiling go in my ears." Fast learner.)

I knew what I was supposed to say and do. I was supposed to say there aren't any monsters under the bed and then get down on my hands and knees and peer underneath and get him to join me for confirmation and solace. That doesn't do a bit of good, because monsters come back as soon as the lights are doused, as any child knows. And anyway, I couldn't bring myself to flatly deny the monster.

I HAVE a lot of trouble with those rare times when, for good reason, I lie to my children. I've been tormented, for instance, by Santa Claus. In every other case, I speak the truth: do all people die? Will the needle hurt? Do you love Christopher? Yes. Yes. Yes. Then one day, in the service of centuries of tradition, I unequivocally confirm that a fat man is coming down the chimney to leave toys, eat the cookies, drink the milk and get to Cousin Kate's house 40 miles away before daybreak.

I understand why I do this: I'm not one of those modern moms with angular etchings on my walls who thinks Santa is an irrational vestige of anachronistic religious festivals. But it feels funny, telling my son that Santa is real when he isn't, and knowing that my son will find out someday that he isn't.

That's why I can't deny the monster, why I can't tell him that nothing is under the bed. I believe in monsters, and someday my son will believe in them even more surely than he does now.

Like most mothers, my mother lied. My mother once even put a dust ruffle on the bed. Can you imagine? Giving aid and sustenance to the monsters! That lasted three days.

When you grow up, you realize that there isn't any Santa, but the monsters are still around. If only they were still big and hairy; now, they're dark and amorphous, and they're no longer afraid of the light. Sometimes they're the guy who climbs in the window and steals your television. Sometimes they're the guy who walks out the front door with your heart in his hand and never comes back. Sometimes they're the job or the bank or the wife or the husband or the boss or that dark, heavy feeling that sits between your shoulder blades like a backpack.

YOU LEARN that there are always terrible things waiting to grab you by the ankle, to pull you under, to get you with their long, horrible arms. And you lie in bed and look at the shadows on the ceiling and feel, under the covers, just for a moment, that you're safe. One more day alive.

I'm feeling my way with my son's monster, now that the beast has finally arrived. I should have had an answer for this one all cooked up, but then I wouldn't be a mom — I'd be a magician. Maybe I should make a game out of it. Tame the monster. Give him a name and some habits and maybe even a family. Leave a Tootsie Roll pop on the floor to buy the monster's friendship. (The little brother, wild as a punk haircut, will be out of bed and unwrapping that sucker before the parents make it to the first landing.) Or maybe this is one of those times when I should leave the boy to his own devices. After all, some things you get taught. And some things you just learn.

Twins third baseman Gary Gaetti, MVP of the AL Playoffs, homers in the second inning off Danny Cox of St. Louis for an early Minnesota lead. The Twins scored six times in the fourth inning and won 8-4.

Twins bounce to St. Louis with two games in pocket

By JOHN NELSON

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Holler "Four!" and head for cover.

The Minnesota Twins are on their way to St. Louis, two games up in the World Series and coasting along like no other postseason team in history.

"We're on a roll now," Twins shortstop Greg Gagne said. "Hopefully, we can carry it through. ... We've got some confidence going into St. Louis."

The Twins won the first two games of the World Series, 10-1 Saturday night and 8-4 Sunday night — scoring a total of 13 runs in the fourth innings of the two games. They had seven runs in the fourth inning of Game 1, six in the same inning of Game 2.

"When I go to the racetrack tomorrow, I'm going to play '4,'" Twins Manager Tom Kelly said.

With this victory, the Twins not only backed the Cardinals into a corner, they also became the first team in major-league history to score five or more runs in seven consecutive postseason games.

Minnesota's Bert Blyleven got the win, allowing two runs on six hits through seven innings and striking out eight. The Twins, meanwhile, sent 11 men to the plate and chased St. Louis' starter, Danny Cox, in the fourth inning.

Tim Laudner, a .191 hitter during the season, had a two-run single in the big inning, then hit a 420-foot homer two innings later.

"They look pretty good to me," Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog said of the Twins. "I saw them play Detroit, and they are a hot ballclub. We haven't had many big innings against us all year, and we've given up 13 runs in the fourth inning of the last two days."

Bert Blyleven puts Twins up, 2-0...

Of the 37 teams that have gone down 2-0 in the World Series, only 10 have come back to win. That is the task facing Herzog's Cardinals.

THIS WAS an intimate little party of 55,257 whistle-blowing, hanky-waving, rock-and-roll singing fans, the largest crowd to ever see a baseball game in the state of Minnesota.

These fans are one of the reasons the Twins have baseball's best home record of 29-23 this year. Now they must leave their shelter.

The Twins were the worst road team ever to win a pennant, 29-52, but after beating Detroit twice at home to start the AL playoffs, the Twins won two of three in Detroit. Those were only the 10th and 11th road victories for the Twins since the All-Star break.

Game 2 was a matchup of the clubs' two "big game" pitchers. Blyleven, 15-12 for the Twins during the season, was making the third World Series appearance of his career. His Series record now is 2-0, the first victory coming in 1979 with the Pittsburgh Pirates, and he has a 3-0 record in playoff action, two of those earned this year against Detroit.

In this game, Blyleven allowed singles in each of the first two innings but did not give up a run until the fifth. He also gave up a run in the seventh before yielding to Juan Berenguer and Jeff Reardon, who each worked an inning. Berenguer gave up two runs in the eighth.

Cox, 11-9 for the Cards this year, was 1-1 in the playoffs against San Francisco, including a 6-0, eight-hit shutout in Game 7. He started two World Series

NFL strike score still reads: Owners 28, Fans 0

By DAVE ANDERSON
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Now that all the real pro football players are expected to return to work, the heart of the National Football League season is about to resume pumping. Its soul, however, has been lost.

Because of the Players Association's newly-filed antitrust suit, the final score of the strike won't be known for several years. But until all the court rulings come down in this three-tiered travesty, it's Owners 28, Players ?, Fans 0. And no matter what happens in court, the fans are doomed to a shutout.

As in any sports strike, the fans were the big losers. But unlike previous strikes in the NFL and other sports, pro football fans can't even trust this year's standings.

To the shame of the 28 owners who decreed unanimously that the three replacement games would count, some teams will make or miss the Super Bowl XXII playoffs because of what their replacement teams did or did not accomplish. In pretending to maintain the "integrity of the game," the owners demeaned the integrity of the standings. For the rest of the season, the owners won't be able to check the standings with a clear conscience.

It's even conceivable that a team that would not have made the playoffs without its three-game imposters will somehow go on to win the Super Bowl.

DURING THE strike, either Washington or Dallas will be 3-0 by Monday night, barring a tie. San Francisco and San Diego each were 3-0, while the Giants, Minnesota, Philadelphia and Kansas City each were 0-3. The Jets, now 3-2 over all, are tied with New England for the American Conference East lead. The Giants are 0-5 over all but maybe the urgency of needing to win their 10 remaining games will wake the real Giants from their sleepwalking 0-2 start.

The owners, meanwhile, may have outsmarted themselves in the negotiations. In a new collective bargaining agreement, the Managment Council would have presumably retained the "no litigation" clause that existed in the previous agreement. But when negotiations collapsed without an agreement, the Players Association was free to file an antitrust suit against the structure of pro football, notably restraints on free agency and the draft of college players.

Although the NFL was found to be a monopoly in the U.S. Football League antitrust case last year, that jury's verdict will not provide a premise for the Players Association case. According to legal sources, the Players Association complaint is based on different issues, which will require different arguments.

Despite free agency in baseball, the NFL's history in free-agency court rulings is worth noting now. Especially since the new litigation was filed in Minneapolis, where the Eighth Circuit Court resides and where the Players Association's law firm, Lundquist and Vennum, not only has its offices but also filed previous antitrust litigation. Ed Garvey, the previous executive director of the Players Association, was once a member of that law firm.

IN 1975, Judge Earl Larson of the Eighth Circuit ruled that the Rozelle Rule was illegal, that a compensation system for player movement could not be developed under a collective bargaining agreement. But the next year the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled for the NFL that "the Rozelle Rule constitutes a mandatory bargaining subject within the National Labor Relations Act." It also ruled that all restrictions on player movement were to be negotiated in collective bargaining.

When a new collective bargaining agreement was signed in 1977, it contained a $13.75 million settlement of what was known as the Kermit Alexander case, a class-action suit seeking damages regarding the Rozelle Rule.

When several NFL players objected to the settlement and argued that they were now free agents, they claimed they should not be bound to the collective bargaining agreement. But the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled against them. In its ruling, the three-judge panel did not agree with "unrestricted freedom" of movement from club to club.

"While some freedom of movement after playing out a contract is in order, complete freedom of movement would result in the best franchises acquiring most of the top players. Some leveling and balancing appear necessary to keep the various teams on a competitive basis without which public interest in any sport quickly fades."

That ruling, of course, came down a decade ago. Two NFL strikes ago. The court climate might be different now. But no matter what the outcome of the antitrust case, the Court of Appeals opinion regarding "public support" was disregarded by the NFL club owners in decreeing that the replacement games count in the standings.

NFL regulars dash doubts

Associated Press

If there were ever any doubts about the difference between a real NFL player and a strike irregular, Steve Largent, Joe Montana and a bunch of backup quarterbacks have dashed them forever.

As replacement games mercifully dwindled down to a precious one — tonight's Redskins-Cowboys game at Texas Stadium — many of the regulars who reported this week had an immediate impact Sunday.

But there was no rush back by the fans to see them on the third week of strike football.

The average attendance Sunday was about 26,500, 38 percent of capacity, with just 8,310 watching a near-record performance by Largent at the Pontiac Silverdome and three other gatherings of less than 20,000.

But at least, most of the heroes were familiar names — Largent, Montana, Dwight Clark, Jeff Kemp, Gary Danielson, Pat Ryan and Lawrence Taylor. But despite two sacks and a forced fumble, Taylor couldn't prevent the New York Giants from losing again, 6-3 in overtime to Buffalo, dropping them to 0-5, the worst start in history for a defending Super Bowl champion.

In other games Sunday it was, Pittsburgh 21, Indianapolis 7; Seattle 37, Detroit 14; New York Jets 37, Miami 31 in overtime; New England 21, Houston 7; Cleveland 34, Cincinnati 0; Green Bay 16, Philadelphia 10 in overtime; New Orleans 19, Chicago 17; Tampa Bay 20, Minnesota 10; Atlanta 24, Los Angeles Rams 20; San Diego 23, Los Angeles Raiders 17; Denver 26, Kansas City 17, and San Francisco 34, St. Louis 28.

NFL Attendance

NEW YORK (AP) — A chart of this week's NFL attendance compared with the average for any pre strike games (Detroit and San Francisco had no pre strike home games)

Home Team	Actual	Average	Capacity
Atlanta	15,813	50,982	59,643
Buffalo	15,737	66,626	80,290
Chicago	46,813	64,627	66,030
Cincinnati	40,179	53,498	59,754
Detroit	8,310		80,638
Green Bay	35,842	52,803	57,081
Houston	26,294	33,186	50,599
Kansas City	20,298	56,940	78,067
L.A. Raiders	23,541	50,300	92,516
N.Y. Jets	18,249	70,847	76,891
Pittsburgh	34,627	55,735	59,000
San Francisco	38,084		61,891
Tampa Bay	20,850	51,250	74,315
Totals	344,645	606,794	896,725
Averages	26,511	55,163	68,979

THE GIANTS were just one example of the way the strike skewed the standings.

Kansas City and Minnesota, two other contenders, also went 0-3 with replacements while a 2-1 strike record left Houston and Tampa Bay at 3-2, the best start for each team since 1981.

Largent, who extended to 142 his record for consecutive games with receptions and needs just 36 catches to become the top pass-catcher in NFL history, was by far the most impressive player Sunday.

He caught 15 passes for 266 yards in Seattle's victory before being benched with 5:36 gone in the second half, three receptions short of Tom Fears' 37-year-old record for catches in a game.

But he seemed to have no desire for a mark that many would have denoted with a mental asterisk if not an actual one.

"The only record I was concerned with was getting a win," said Largent, who spent the day playing catch with Kemp, who was 20 of 27 for 344 yards and four touchdowns.

Most of the Sunday's heroes took the same attitude.

"I don't take any personal joy in this day at all," said Danielson, Cleveland's 36-year-old backup quarterback, who completed 25 of 31 for 281 yards and four touchdowns as the Browns the Cincinnati "B" team. "It's just a team victory. The statistics don't really mean that much."

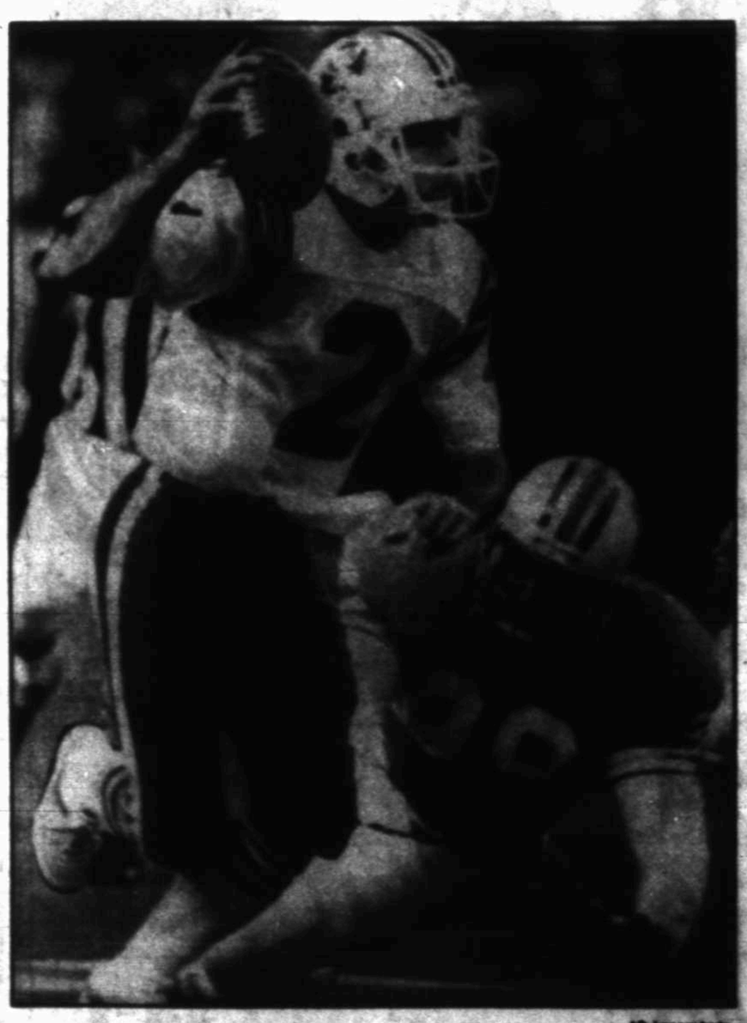

Montana and Clark, meanwhile, teamed up as in championship days of yore. Montana completed 31 of 39 for 334 yards and four touchdowns in a victory over St. Louis, with Clark catching two of the touchdown passes and nine in all.

RYAN, THE Jets' backup quarterback, threw four touchdown passes in the Jets' overtime victory over Miami.

One notable replacement was Erik Kramer, who threw for 335 yards and three second-half touchdowns as Atlanta overcame a 17-0 deficit for a 24-20 victory over the Rams, who had 11 veterans back.

"All I can say is that I had the best day of my life. It was a dream come true. If it all ends today, it was great, but I hope to stick around the NFL," said Kramer, who had been helping coach the football team while working for his degree at North Carolina State, where he played in college.

New England's newly-acquired Doug Flutie threw a TD to Midland's Larry Linne in the Pats 21-7 win over Houston Sunday.

Flutie passes Pats by Oilers

HOUSTON (AP) — New England regulars Doug Flutie, Raymond Clayborn and Andre Tippett made the difference in the Patriots' 21-7 victory over the Houston Oilers.

Meanwhile, the Oilers' regulars who mingled with the previously unbeaten replacement team had the opposite effect on their team's performance Sunday.

Flutie, making his debut with New England, completed 15 of 25 passes for 199 yards, including a 27-yard touchdown pass to Midland's Larry Linne, and rushed for 43 yards on 6 carries for 262 yards of total offense.

Tippett had three quarterback sacks and blocked a field goal that Clayborn picked up and returned 71 yards for a touchdown shortly before halftime.

Obtained in a trade with Chicago last week, Flutie crossed striking picket lines to play in the final replacement game.

Oilers first-round draft choice Haywood Jeffires dropped three passes and kicker Tony Zendejas missed two field goal tries, ending a string of 12 in a row.

Zendejas and Jeffires were booed by the crowd of 26,294 fans who came to see the final game of the replacement team. The fans gave the replacements a standing ovation as they left the field for the last time, despite their loss.

It was a different kind of game for Houston quarterback Brent Pease, who completed 21 of 40 passes for 250 yards.

Houston's only score came on Pease's 36-yard pass to Oliver Williams in the first quarter.

SWC sorts out muddled race

Associated Press

The Texas Longhorns take the week off to celebrate their newly acquired Southwest Conference football leadership while preseason favorite Arkansas tries to recover from shock.

Texas' last-second victory over Arkansas on Saturday puts the Razorbacks in a must-win situation on Saturday when the Houston Cougars travel to Fayetteville.

Baylor, which lost to Texas A&M on Saturday, must also recover from its first conference loss before meeting improving Texas Christian in Waco this weekend.

David McWilliams is developing a reputation as a Razorback killer in his short head coaching career.

McWilliams's Texas Tech team shocked Arkansas 17-7 in Fayetteville last year. When Fred Akers was fired, he left Lubbock for Austin.

On Saturday, the Texas Longhorns scored on the last play of the game to upset Arkansas 18-14 and seize leadership of the SWC football chase.

In other games, defending SWC champion Texas A&M stayed alive with a 34-10 victory over Baylor, the Aggies' first triumph in Waco since 1977; Texas Tech crushed Rice 50-7, Texas Christian got revenge over North Texas with a 19-10 victory, and hardluck Houston lost 37-35 to Wyoming.

The SWC's non-conference mark is 14-13-1.

0-2 means little to Whitey

By HAL BOCK

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Philosopher Whitey Herzog offered some solace for those folks who are wringing their hands today over the plight of his St. Louis Cardinals.

"Two things mean nothing in baseball," he said. "Last year and yesterday."

It's a good thing. Last year, the Cardinals spent October watching other teams play in the World Series. On Sunday, they looked like they ought to be doing the same thing this year.

The Cardinals are down 2-0 in the best-of-seven World Series against Minnesota strictly on merit. They have not pitched very well and they have not hit very well and they have not run very well. That equation is fatal and Herzog knows it.

Until St. Louis scored three late runs, Sunday night's 8-4 loss was reminiscent of Minnesota's 10-1 opening-game blowout. The Twins scored seven runs in the fourth inning of the opener and six runs in the fourth inning Sunday.

What's more, the Twins have kept the Cardinals off the bases. Herzog's team led the majors with 248 stolen bases this season. Their first steal in the Series came in the eighth inning of Game 2, when they were trailing 8-2.

ARE THE Twins that good, or are the Cardinals that bad?

"They look pretty good to me," Herzog said. "They're a hot club."

The fact remains, though, that this hot club, this club that blew Detroit out of the American League playoffs in five games and has Herzog's Cardinals on the ropes, won just 85 games all season. Eight other teams, including the departed Tigers and the reeling Cardinals, had better records. Much better records. So what's going on here?

"What we are doing now is not that complicated," explained Minnesota manager Tom Kelly. "We are getting good pitching, catching the ball in the field and getting the chance to score some runs. That is the perfect formula."

See how simple baseball can be?

HERZOG, HOWEVER, suggests something a trifle more sinister is involved.

"You're not seeing their team," the Cardinal manager said. "If they're so good, why didn't they win more? During the season, depth wins. In the playoffs, you don't use it."

Because of the built-in off days in the playoff and World Series schedule, a team can get by with thin pitching, which describes Minnesota's condition perfectly. If the Cardinals and Twins play seven games, St. Louis will see Frank Viola and Bert Blyleven, winners of the first two, five times.

If you don't think the formula works, Herzog has evidence to the contrary.

In 1985, when his team hit .185 in the Series, Herzog nearly finessed the Cardinals to the championship with two pitchers, Danny Cox and John Tudor, combining to start eight of the 13 playoff and Series games.

That year, St. Louis won the first two games of the Series on the road and still found a way to lose to Kansas City in seven. Last year, Boston won the first two in New York and lost to the Mets in seven. So Minnesota's 2-0 lead is not insurmountable, a fact that has not escaped Herzog the historian.

"WE NEED a well-pitched game," the manager said. "And if we score some runs, we might be all right."

They might be all right, too, if they had their team. Without Jack Clark and with Terry Pendleton ailing, the Cards are trying to fly on one wing.

SERIES

games in 1985 against Kansas City, and although he had no decisions, he gave up just two earned runs in 14 innings.

This time he was gone in 3⅔ innings, having given up seven runs on six hits and a pair of walks.

GARY GAETTI, MVP of the playoffs, homered off Cox with one out in the second inning to give Minnesota a 1-0 lead. Two innings later, Cox fell apart.

With one out in the fourth, Kirby Puckett and Kent Hrbek hit consecutive singles. A wild pitch advanced the runners and Gaetti walked, loading the bases. Randy Bush hit an 0-2 pitch into the right-field corner for a double, scoring two runs. Tom Brunansky was walked intentionally, loading the bases again.

The runners held on a flyout to shallow left by Steve Lombardozzi, but Laudner singled home Gaetti and Bush, sending Brunansky to second. Dan Gladden then singled home Brunansky, sending Laudner to second and chasing Cox in favor of Lee Tunnell.

"Hitting is contagious," Laudner said. "We've spent all year long picking each other up. When one guy's not swinging well, the other guy picks him up — and so forth, all the way down the line."

Gagne, who made the first out of the inning, hit a bloop double into right, scoring Laudner, and the Twins led 7-0.

The Cardinals know only too well what can happen to teams that get behind.

"In 1985, we were down 2-0 in the playoffs and came back to beat the Dodgers," Cox said. "The same year, we led Kansas City 2-0 in the World Series and lost. How can you tell? They're on a roll. They're hot.

"We just have to win in our ballpark."

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Be optimistic in your dealings with the opposite sex and wonderful things will begin to happen. This can be one of the most productive years of your life! Money worries disappear. Indulge a desire to do more socializing. Attend and host parties. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences. Forget past disappointments and enjoy the good times coming your way.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: architect Sir Christopher Wren, actor Jerry Orbach, humorist Art Buchwald, psychologist Dr. Joyce Brothers, actress Arlene Francis, Yankee great Mickey Mantle.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep an important business deal on the back burner until later in the day. Good timing is the secret of your success. Make small but beautiful additions to your home; its value will increase.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Morning is the best time to negotiate real estate deals. Later today, someone shows affection for you. If you are interested in this person romantically, show it. Be receptive to friendly overtures.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Friendships are rather sensitive today. Expenses could be higher than usual. Those who are self-employed will do particularly well, however. A happy romantic experience is indicated. Wear your heart on your sleeve.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your great sense of humor will serve you well when dealing with tense people or situations. Unresolved conflicts must be handled with tact. Stay away from unconventional financial entanglements. Get promises in writing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Channel your energies wisely, devoting yourself to practical projects. Trust your judgment in financial and emotional matters — you are right on target. A windfall is possible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not be afraid to give away some of your ideas in order to interest influential people in your projects. Someone who has helped you in the past needs a favor now. Reciprocate!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): People who work in a background position are vital to your success. Keep your temper in check and choose your words carefully. You can improve your financial security through home improvements or property investments.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make an all-out effort to achieve your goals. Short business trips and letters bring good luck. Old friends want to hear from you. Get in touch with them as soon as possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Diplomacy is an important tool in re-establishing contact with former clients. Hosting social events can be useful for business, but you must not be too obvious. Romance sizzles. You feel very tempted.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New beginnings are favored. Spend more time on intellectual pursuits. You can accomplish more by working away from the public eye. Contact people who operate on the same wave length. New alliances are favored.

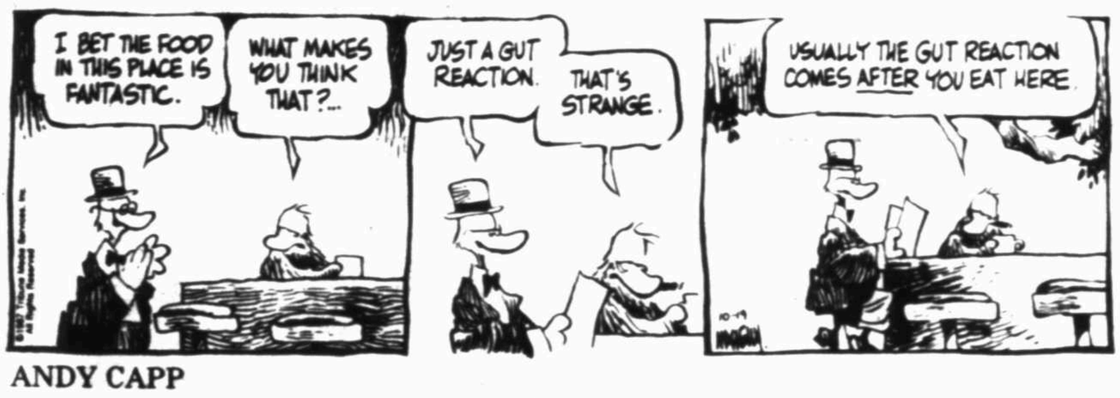

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Not a good day to force career issues. Put your plans on the drawing board and review them. Afternoon brings news that will both astound and please you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day for contacting influential people and bankers about financial backing. A pet project receives new attention. Any friends you make now will be around for a long time.

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—It looks as if partner has a good hand but couldn't act because he has heart length. You don't win money or tournaments by letting the opponents play at the one-level. Balance with two clubs.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q3 ♡Q84 ◇AKQ107 ♣1065
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—With both black suits virtually unstopped, no trump is out. So it's a choice between two diamonds and two hearts. While rebidding your suit in this sequence tends to show six, we would accept that bid because of your suit quality. However, we feel it would be wrong to suppress your three-card support to a top honor, so our vote goes to a raise to two hearts.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠9652 ♡J3 ◇852 ◇AQ73
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Dbl	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have trump support and some defensive values. The modern style in this case is to ignore the double and make the bid you would have made had East passed—a raise to two spades.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J932 ♡3 ◇852 ♣KJ762
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Dbl	?

What do you bid now?
A.—On offense your hand is worth quite a bit, but defensively you have little and your spade length detracts from partner's defensive potential. Jump to three spades. Over an opposing takeout double, that is a preemptive raise.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠5 ♡K108752 ◇952 ♣873
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	Pass	2 ◇
Pass	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—It looks as if the strength is fairly evenly divided between the two sides. The fact that you have some length in diamonds makes it look as if partner doesn't have too many, so there's a good chance he has a few hearts. Since you've already limited your hand with your pass, compete now with two hearts.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K8 ♡532 ◇AKJ92 ♣943
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—There is one way, and only one, to show a good hand after partner's opening bid has been doubled for takeout. Redouble. Any other bid by you at the two-level or higher denies the strength for a redouble.

Taylor in 'gastronomic performance' trying to gain 9 pounds for film role

BARI, Italy (AP) — Elizabeth Taylor has arrived in Bari to begin shooting Franco Zeffirelli's "The Young Toscanini," but the Italian media say she is also starring in a "gastronomic performance."

According to news reports, Zeffirelli asked the American actress to gain 9 pounds for the $14 million film set in Italy and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1988.

On Saturday, Taylor, who last year shed 60 pounds, reportedly dined on prosciutto, fettuccine with wild mushrooms, a lobster rice dish and spaghetti.

Newspapers said that for breakfast on Sunday, the actress requested sweets. Lunch was pasta with turnip, mashed beans and chicory and artichoke parmigiana, followed by fish, baby shrimp and other local specialties.

Taylor arrived in the medieval port city of Bari on Saturday by private jet from San Francisco, along with two bodyguards, four secretaries and 59 suitcases, reports said.

Zeffirelli directed Taylor and her former husband, the late Richard Burton, in Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew."

GLEN ELLEN, Calif. (AP) — The only surviving daughter of adventurer-author Jack London is living near her father's ranch, doing what he did best: telling stories.

"It's wonderful to be here," said 84-year-old Becky London-Fleming, who moved from Oakland to a small house outside Jack London State Historic Park about 60 miles north of San Francisco four years ago following the death of her husband.

"I don't do anything except talk. So many people are interested in Daddy, and I love to talk about him," she said. "When I was a little girl, he was always my age."

London, born in Oakland in 1876, died in a ranch-house near here in 1916 after publishing 51 books, 200 short stories and hundreds of articles. His novel "The Call of the Wild" was published in 1903.

Her father didn't like to be called a writer, she said recently.

"'I'm merely a teller of tales,' he would say. Then he would give a grin and add, 'Also I'm a darn good listener.' And he was. He got people to talk, and he always listened to my sister and me. He wanted to know about our friends and our school."

Her sister, Joan, who died in 1971, was a successful writer, publishing a biography of her father, a mystery and a book on California farm labor organizer Cesar Chavez.

MIAMI (AP) — "Miami Vice" star Don Johnson was having a picnic with a little gunfire mixed in for fun when police got a complaint of illegal dove shooting.

Metro-Dade police officers responded to a call from Linda Jennings about dove-shooting in the sanctuary on property adjoining her home in rural Dade County.

"They were shooting out there with the permission of the owner, but we could not determine if they were dove hunting out there or not," said Sgt. Ed Hafner.

Sunday's complaint, Hafner said, was handled much like the other 40 to 50 calls officers receive each day during dove season.

Hafner described Johnson's group as "more like a family thing, cooking chicken and having like a family-type of picnic."

Officers left without issuing any complaint "because nobody saw him actually pull the trigger and a bird fall," Mrs. Jennings said. "Don Johnson got in his helicopter and left."

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — Reggie Jackson, the major league slugger who said at the end of this season he will retire from baseball, has purchased a car dealership.

"This is our first store together," said Bill Boggs, Jackson's partner, adding that the deal for the Nissan dealership was completed in September. He said they plan to buy other dealerships in the San Francisco Bay area.

Jackson, who played for the Oakland A's last season and was in Minneapolis this weekend working for ABC-TV during its coverage of the World Series, already owns an interest in a Buick dealership in Pleasanton.

Jackson owns about 100 cars, including older model Pontiacs, Chevrolets, Mercedes-Benzes and Porsches. He also has written columns for car magazines.

"This is just a natural extension to his love of cars," Boggs said.

PALATINE, Ill. (AP) — Science fiction writer Frederik Pohl says his latest novel, "Chernobyl," was a difficult undertaking because it blends fact with fiction.

"Chernobyl" is based on the April 1986 disaster, when the No. 4 reactor at the Soviet Union's Chernobyl nuclear plant exploded and burned.

"Of course, the disadvantage of writing about Chernobyl is that if I write about Mars, nobody can call me a liar," Pohl said in a recent interview at his suburban Chicago home. "If I write about the Soviet Union, I've got to try to get the facts straight."

Pohl, author of more than 30 novels and winner of six Hugo and two Nebula awards for science-fiction writing, visited the evacuated zone near the disaster site in the Ukraine and drew from technical reports.

Some of his earlier efforts include "A Town is Drowning," about a hurricane striking the eastern seaboard, and "Presidential Year."

"In both of those, as in "Chernobyl," the characters were all fictitious, but in "Chernobyl" the events are not fictitious, which is the big difference," Pohl said.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Miss America 1944, Venus Ramey, says that a lifetime of public scrutiny goes along with the crown of the nation's best-known pageant.

"Once a Miss America, always a Miss America. Me included. I've decided I'll be a bathing beauty until I'm 80," said Ms. Ramey, now 63.

Ms. Ramey was critical of Bess Myerson, the 1945 Miss America who last week was indicted by a federal grand jury for allegedly trying to coax a judge into reducing the alimony payments of Ms. Myerson's boyfriend.

"When you voluntarily move into a glass house — because that's where all Miss Americas live, for all their lives — you should live accordingly," she said in a recent interview.

After turning her title over to Ms. Myerson, Ms. Ramey sold war bonds, tried running her father's truck farm in Kentucky, made unsuccessful bids for the Kentucky Legislature and Cincinnati City Council. Nine years ago, she took up renovation work in Cincinnati's Over-the-Rhine neighborhood.

Gold soars

LONDON (AP) — Gold soared to its highest levels in nearly five years and the dollar plunged to six-month lows against some currencies today as markets responded to falling stock exchanges and fears of a U.S.-West German fiscal war.

Gold changed hands at close to $480 an ounce in London and Zurich, trading in an unusually wide range of $8. In Hong Kong it topped $480. Dealers said tension in the Persian Gulf and sharp falls on the New York and London stock exchanges strengthened gold.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $475.60 a troy ounce, compared with late Thursday's $466.

At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $479.50.

In Zurich, the bid price was $479.50, up from $467.50 on Friday.

In both cities, it was the highest price recorded since Feb. 22, 1983, when gold fetched $488 in London and and $497.75 in Zurich.

MONEY

In Tokyo, the dollar fell one yen to a closing 141.35, its lowest in nearly seven weeks. Later, in London, it was quoted at 141.35 yen.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Friday:

—1.4720 Swiss francs, down from 1.4930

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $8.06 a troy ounce, up from Friday's $7.83.

Caution, not panic, proper plunge reaction

By ALISON LEIGH COWAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — Last week's spectacular drop in the stock market has led many investors to search for ways to hedge their bets. And people who own homes financed with adjustable-rate mortgages are contemplating how to reduce spending to meet higher monthly payments that will inevitably follow as interest rates jump.

Yet the Dow Jones industrial average's tumble last week of 235.48 points or 9.49 percent, should be no cause for panic, members of the financial community said on Sunday. Rather, they suggested, it should serve as a warning for certain policy steps that are much needed.

"I don't think there is reason to be alarmed, but one has to be concerned," said David Rockefeller, the retired chairman of the Chase Manhattan bank.

H. Ross Perot, the Dallas entrepreneur and founder of Electronic Data Systems, suggested Wall Street's tumble could be constructive if it seizes the attention of business executives and policymakers. "Maybe it will help us realize that there's a big one out there waiting to happen," Perot said.

Several business leaders said Congress and the administration should take the stock market activity last week as a warning to address the deficits in the federal budget and the balance of trade, as well as the poor coordination of Western international economies.

"We really haven't had any significant action in Washington on the issues of the deficits," said Richard L. Sandor, a senior vice president of Drexel Burnham Lambert. "It has really caused a confidence loss by everybody."

The precipitous drop in the value of stocks and bonds and a corresponding surge in interest rates has already caused some investors to re-examine investment decisions. Among their choices are new financial instruments that allow them to hedge their positions.

Recent indications by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III that the United States would tolerate a lower dollar against the West German mark confirmed the market's apprehension that a breakdown of international cooperation could fuel inflation, raise interest rates, and further depress the stock market.

And the drop in buying by foreign investors is worrying the credit markets. Financial advisers said rising interest rates in West Germany and Japan were helping to drive up American interest rates.

Members of the financial community stressed that a reduction of consumption levels and an increase in savings are much-needed adjustments.

"We're going to find that in this era of the twin towers," said Peter G. Peterson, who served as commerce secretary under President Nixon, referring to the trade deficit and the budget deficit, "the need for economic adjustment is going to be given a new kind of urgent meaning. There is going to be pain and sacrifice of some sort, and part of that sacrifice is going to be changing our previous patterns of consumption."

"There is the appearance that each of these countries is pursuing different policies and directions and the immediate implication of that is for a lower dollar and higher interest rates," said Lawrence N. Leuzzi, managing director of Warburg Securities Inc., who predicted the dollar could drop another 5 percent to 10 percent in the next 6 to 12 months. Yet Leuzzi said he was not worried about inflation, but rather that interest rates could go higher, with a stifling effect on economic activity.

Jack Treynor, a professor of finance at the University of Southern California, said he was less worried about a tightening in monetary policy than about a lower dollar igniting inflation in the next six months.

Baker blames tax bill for Dow's drop

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democrats' work on a tax increase package aided the stock market slide last week, according to Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, but the head of the Senate Finance Committee says Baker is "living in a dream world."

Baker, in a television interview Sunday, said tax increase bills approved by House and Senate committees last week helped fuel the market fall in which the Dow Jones industrial average suffered its largest weekly decline since World War II.

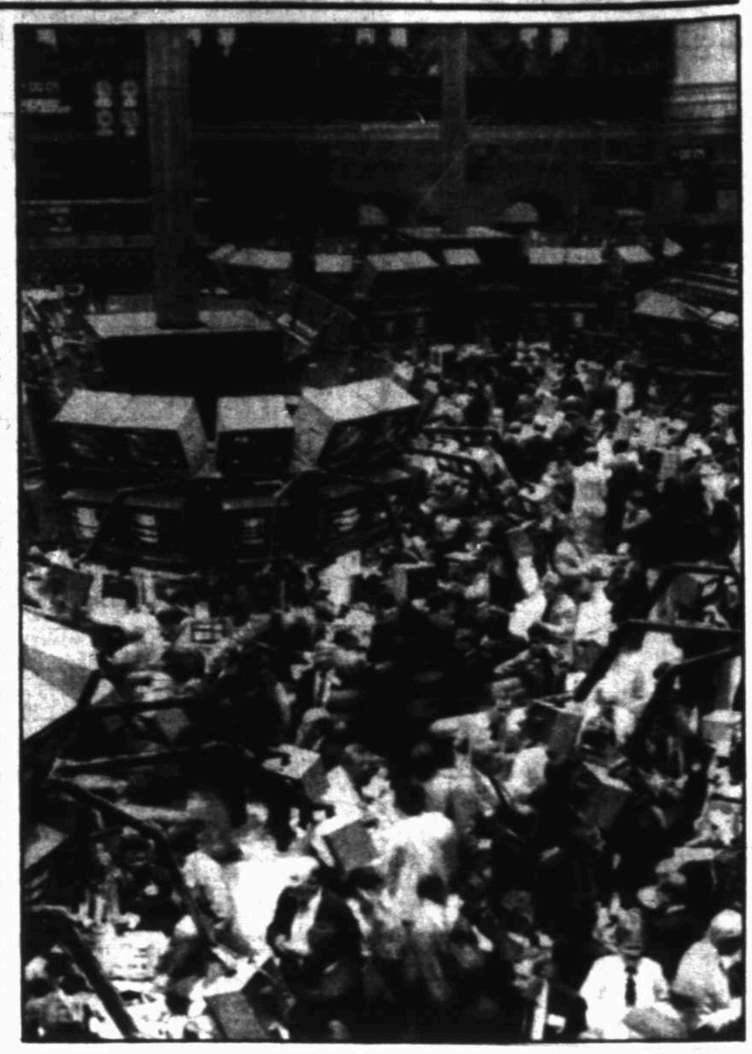

"I think that the writing of these tax packages had a major effect in what's happened to the stock market over the course of the past three or four days," Baker said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"They are raising the corporate minimum tax, they are eliminating the deduction on completed contract accounting, which hits the entire defense industry, they are doing other things in the area of business taxes that make business extremely nervous," he said.

"So it's not unusual — it doesn't seem to me — to see an adverse stock market resulting from what they're doing."

The Dow dropped 108.36 points on Friday, marking the first time the blue-chip index has lost more than 100 points in a single session. The total Dow drop last week was 235.48 points.

Report: Runaway S&L lending hindered recovery

DALLAS (AP) — A real estate lending binge by Texas thrifts generated jobs but also sent the state's economy reeling into a recession that cut those positions and probably won't fully end until 1991, an economic study shows.

The two-volume, 1,100-page study commissioned by the Dallas Morning News and reported in a copyright story Sunday, is the first hard evidence of the effects of runaway thrift lending in Texas during the early 1980s, the newspaper said.

The report, conducted by Baylor University economist and consultant M. Ray Perryman, shows the activity generated $28 billion in economic activity and created 92,105 jobs.

The lending softened the blow of the energy bust, but also prevented the state from making a smoother transition into a post-oil-boom economy, with fewer unemployed people and smaller inventories of excess space, Perryman said.

"The problem in Texas got started in 1982-83 when building started in a major way that could not be justified," he said.

The lending binge was caused by a variety of factors that created an unusually bullish outlook for Texas, including a history of robust growth, expanded lending powers for thrifts and changes in real estate tax laws, Perryman said.

The unlikely combination of so many economic events was as "rare as the mutual alignment of several planets," he said.

"For all of those things to happen at once sent a clear signal: 'Build real estate in Texas,'" Perryman said.

Among other findings of the report:

— Texas S&Ls fueled the state's economy with $11.2 billion in excessive commercial and residential lending, dollars that rippled through the economy another 2.5 times during the five-year period beginning in 1982 and touched virtually all Texans.

— The real estate boom protected much of Texas from the energy downturn that began in 1983. But the excesses have prevented the Texas economy from adding 180,000 jobs this year.

— In Dallas-Fort Worth, S&Ls poured $1.03 billion into commercial development and another $4.8 billion into residential construction during the five-year period. The lending boom created 44,248 jobs annually in Dallas-Fort Worth until the onset of the recession.

— Lending in Dallas-Fort Worth created $14 billion in economic activity and added $4.3 billion to area payrolls.

About 30 percent of the overbuilding financed by thrifts statewide was in Dallas, Perryman estimated.

The five-year flurry of lending left about 75 of Texas' 281 thrifts with negative net worth and prompted a bank fraud investigation by the U.S. Justice Department, the largest white-collar criminal investigation ever.

Federal regulators recently began selling notes to raise the first of a $10.8 billion refunding for the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. Industry experts believe it will take up to $40 billion to clean up the mess created after Congress extended expanded real estate lending powers to thrifts in 1982.

Perryman conducted the study using data provided by the News, Sheshunoff & Co. of Austin and the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas, as well as other university and government agencies. He has spent 10 years developing the computer-based, economic modeling system.

Details of the lending show that during the early 1980s, savings and loans lent $1.2 billion for office and professional buildings and $527.6 million for retail centers. Other major commercial outlays included $298.4 million for hotels and motels, $60.4 million for industrial buildings and $275.4 million for schools, hospitals and other public structures.

Similarly, the thrifts lent $6.2 billion during the period for single-family homes. Another $2.7 billion was provided for multifamily housing, which included duplexes, apartments and condominiums.

As that spending rippled through the state's economy, it affected almost every industry. It also created an excessive number of jobs that were later lost to the recession.

In all, commercial lending generated $6.03 billion of additional spending in Texas during 1982-1986. Of that, $113.3 million went to restaurants, $287.8 million went to retailers and another $1.9 billion ended up in household or personal income.

Likewise, residential lending generated another $22.3 billion in economic activity.

Dallas-Fort Worth suffers lingering effects of excess

DALLAS (AP) — If state thrifts had followed a more prudent course of lending in the early 1980s the Dallas-Fort Worth area would be enjoying prime job growth this year instead of being a leader in jobs lost, a study shows.

That finding was one of many in a study commissioned by the Dallas Morning News and reported in a copyright story Sunday.

Baylor University economist M. Ray Perryman studied the impact of the thrift industry's liberal lending practices on the state's economy.

Without the excessive construction funded by state thrifts, the study concluded, the Dallas-Fort Worth area would be growing and adding 88,500 non-agricultural jobs this year. That would rank second only to Los Angeles, which expects a gain of about 100,000.

Instead, labor economists expect the area to actually lose about 40,000 non-agricultural jobs during 1987.

Most of the loss will be in Dallas, while Fort Worth stays about even with 1986.

Statewide, 180,000 jobs would be added this year if not for the excess lending, the report concludes. But statistics from the Texas Employment Commission instead show the state lost more than 70,000 jobs through the first eight months of 1987.

"The oil situation was unavoidable," Perryman said.

"But the real estate situation could have been avoided — or at least ameliorated a little bit."

Perryman said he was conservative in any of his study's assumptions, and noted that the effects on Dallas-Fort Worth jobs may be understated.

The Perryman study concludes that every employment sector was touched by the real estate lending.

Overbuilding financed by S&Ls created an average of more than 16,000 construction jobs a year between 1982 and 1986 in the state and more than 11,000 a year in D-FW between 1983 and 1986, Perryman found.

Most of those jobs are gone.

Bankers fret over economic outlook

By ERIC N. BERG
New York Times News Service

DALLAS (NYT) — Bankers, already nervous about encroaching competition from brokers, retailers, auto makers, and others, have a new worry: The outlook for the nation's economy.

In interviews, top bankers attending the annual convention here of the American Bankers Association said their theme this year was winning greater powers to take on the nonbank rivals. Many of them wore buttons saying, "Kill the Moratorium," a reference to a moratorium on new bank powers. The moratorium is set to expire March 1.

But at the dinners and receptions that most of the 6,500 participants have attended, conversations have focused heavily on more immediate economic issues: The next move for the stock market, which plunged last week, and prospects for the economy over all.

In general, the forecasts being made here are gloomy.

Most bankers, for example, seem to believe that interest rates have not peaked. A majority of those contacted said short-term rates will rise by anywhere from one to two percentage points by spring. The prime rate has already been raised to 9.75 percent by three banks and others may follow. The prime is the rate to which most loans to small- and medium-size companies are tied.

"If I had to make a guess now," said Alan S. Fellheimer, chairman and chief executive of Equimark, Pittsburgh's third-largest bank, "I could see a prime rate of 11.75 percent to 12 percent by the end of the first quarter."

Because the markets have been in such turmoil, the predictions are more tenuous than usual, and what such a rate increase in such a short time would mean is, of course, equally uncertain. But bankers said that in general, companies would find it more difficult to obtain loans as lenders become skittish about customers' ability to pay interest.

Beyond that, bankers said, a slowdown in economic growth would be inevitable. So far, no one seems willing to declare that a recession is around the corner. But bankers, noting that the two percentage-point rate increase since mid-April has already depressed commercial and

Bank consumer confidence off

DALLAS (AP) — Consumer confidence in the nation's banking and financial system is declining, mainly over worries about bad loans and the economy, according to a poll released Monday by the American Banker.

The survey by the daily trade publication found that of the 1,130 households questioned by telephone last spring, two-thirds thought the banking system was healthy. That compared with three-fourths of those polled a year ago.

Also, more than one in four consumers thought the system was unhealthy, up from one in five last year, the survey said.

Most who felt that way said they were uneasy over the increasing number of bad debts and defaults banks have incurred, the survey said. They also were concerned about the economy and the growing number of failing banks and savings and loans.

Among other findings in the poll:

— Forty-one percent said banks should be permitted to offer financial services such as selling insurance or real estate. Forty-nine percent were opposed.

— Seventy-four percent preferred to handle their banking transactions with people rather than machines.

— Fifty-nine percent preferred to shop for financial services among several companies, while 37 percent liked doing all their business with one firm.

"KEYS TO THE SELL"

Co—op and Color —one saves money —one gives clout

Retailers should take advantage of those $illion$ of co-op dollars being offered to help pay for their ads, and for using color in the copy. Co-op saves you money. And color adds clout to your message.

- Use of color increases sales of the advertised product by as much a 64%
- Use of color increases readership of the ad by 50 to 80%.
- Over $3-billion in offered co-op dollars were left on the table unspent in 1986.

IRA mandatory withdrawal rules available

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My individual retirement account has become quite large, thanks to my $2,000 annual contributions since 1982 and the fact that I rolled over a lump sum distribution from a company retirement plan.

I passed age 70 1/2 last year and know I will be required to start making withdrawals from my IRA. You explained that people who became 70 1/2 in 1984, 1985 or 1986 have been allowed to postpone their IRA withdrawals because the Internal Revenue Service didn't have the rules squared away.

Have those rules been published? If so, when must I begin taking money out of my IRA?

Doyle

A. To parody the old song: "At last, those rules have come along." They are spelled out in IRS Publication 930 "1987 Required Distributions from Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs)," fresh off the U.S. Government Printing Office presses. For reasons beyond my ken, the IRS calls IRA withdrawals "distributions."

You and all other IRA participants who reached age 70 1/2 in 1984, 1985 or 1986 must take your minimum required distributions by Dec. 31, 1987. If you miss that deadline, you'll be hit with a tax equal to 50 percent of the amount you should have taken out of your IRA.

IRS Publication 930 lists three ways to calculate the required distribution — the "regular method" and two transition methods, called "life expectancy" and "percentage."

With the life expectancy method, the amount you must take out of your IRA is based either on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary.

Those methods are far too detailed to be summarized in this column. By following the examples in Publication 930, you should have no problem figuring out how much you are required to take out of your IRA this year.

Copies of Publication 930 are available from IRS Forms Distribution Centers, P.O. Box 25866, Richmond, Va. 23260; P.O. Box 9903, Bloomington, Ill. 61799, and P.O. Box 12626, Fresno, Calif. 93778, or by making a toll-free phone call to 1 (800) 424-3676.

Q. Although I reached age 70 1/2 in 1985, I have not taken any money out of my IRA. I've been waiting for the long-delayed IRS regulations. Now that those rules are available, do I have to withdraw from my IRA an amount equal to the total of the three minimum distributions required for 1985, 1986 and 1987?

A. Yes. And you are required to take that money out of your IRA by Dec. 31, 1987.

To arrive at the amount you must withdraw, use one of the two transition methods explained in IRS Publication 930. For most people in your situation, the life expectancy method results in a smaller required withdrawal than the percentage method. But do your calculations with both methods and choose the one best suited to you.

Q. I became 70 1/2 this year. It is my understanding that I will not be required to take any money out of my IRA during 1987. Is that correct? If it is, when must I begin making IRA withdrawals?

A. Your understanding is correct. Any IRA participant who turned 70 1/2 in 1987 won't have to take a required minimum distribution from his or her IRA until 1988.

The rules on exactly when you and other IRA participants who reach age 70 1/2 in 1987 and later years must begin taking money out of your retirement nest eggs will be provided in IRS Publication 590 "Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs)," when that publication is revised and reissued.

While it's chancy to predict rules in advance, it's reasonably safe to say you will be required to make your first IRA withdrawal by April 1, 1988.

Santa Fe receives bids for Southern Pacific unit

NEW YORK (NYT) — The Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corp. received several bids last week for its Southern Pacific Transportation Corp., including one from the railroad's employees.

The Railway Labor Executives Association offered $750 million for the rail line. The employees group, which would also assume the line's long-term debt as well as other liabilities, placed the total value of the bid at $3.6 billion. The group also said Santa Fe would be able to retain some tax advantages.

The labor association submitted its bid as an agent for 17 unions of Southern Pacific, said Tom Conway, a spokesman for the workers group.

Late Thursday, a spokesman for Santa Fe said that the company had not seen the proposal from the employees group but that it had been expecting the bid. He declined to comment on the other bids.

"This proposal represents a fundamental change in the way railroad workers view the industry in which they work," Richard I. Kilroy, chairman of the employees group, said in a statement. "Our intention is to take over our own destiny."

The employees group said that Southern Pacific's management submitted a similar bid and that the group would allow the current management to join it. Thursday evening, the management of Southern Pacific said it had agreed in principle to work with the employees group. The joint offer would result in the company being owned by the current management, employees and certain investors, it said. The employees group also said that Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. would provide financing for the bid.

Arizona tops income gain since 1982

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arizona is enjoying the fastest income growth of any state during the current economic expansion, while the residents of the country's oil patch are lagging far behind, the government says.

For the nation overall, non-farm personal incomes rose 38 percent from the July-September quarter of 1982, considered the bottom of the last recession, to the April-June quarter of this year, the Commerce Department said Thursday.

Generally, states along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts fared the best in the past five years, while states between the two coasts suffered because of declining smokestack industries, depressed farm economies and a slump in energy production.

There were exceptions, however. While the Southwest region came in next to last in income growth, Arizona, one of four states in the region, enjoyed the fastest increase of any state in the country, a 57.6 percent advance that was propelled by large gains in service industries, construction and manufacturing.

Arizona was followed by Georgia, with an income gain of 54.4 percent, New Hampshire, up 53.8 percent, Florida, up 53.3 percent, North Carolina, up 49.7 percent, and Virginia, up 47.8 percent.

The five states with the poorest income gains all had strong ties to the oil and gas industry, which has fallen on hard times because of falling prices and cutbacks in exploration and production.

Residents of Wyoming actually had a 0.5 percent decline in incomes since the recovery began in late 1982. It was the only state to suffer an outright income drop, although several other energy states had increases that lagged far behind the national average.

Alaska ranked next to last among the states, with an increase of 10.9 percent, followed by Oklahoma, up 11.2 percent, Louisiana, up 11.3 percent, and Montana, up 18.6 percent.

New England ranked No. 1 among the eight geographic regions with the fastest overall increase, a gain of 46.5 percent that was aided by boom conditions for the area's high-technology and service industries, such as banking and insurance.

The Far West was No. 2 with a gain of 43.9 percent. Other regions which did better than the national average of 38 percent were the Southeast, with an income gain of 42.2 percent, and the Mid-Atlantic, with an increase of 39.6 percent.

Reflecting the hard times in the oil patch, the Rocky Mountain and the Southwestern regions had the weakest income growth, gains of 27.6 percent and 28.9 percent, respectively.

The Plains states, with an income gain of 30.8 percent, and the Great Lakes, with an increase of 33.2 percent, also lagged behind the national average because of depressed conditions in farming and manufacturing.

The new government figures supported findings of a study entitled "The Bi-Coastal Economy." The report, prepared last year by the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, said the nation was being divided between healthy economies on both coasts and problem areas in the nation's heartland.

Perryman said it was highly unlikely that so many economic, political and regulatory events could have coincided to attract so much investment to the Texas real estate industry.

When business historians assess the events of the 1980s in Texas, he said, they will probably cite excessive real estate lending. They also will note that the state was undergoing a fundamental change from a natural resources economy to a "value-added" economy.

"Perhaps the greatest comfort to be taken from the entire situation is simply the fact that the set of circumstances and their timing was so unique and so unusual that it is extremely unlikely that they will be duplicated in the foreseeable future," he said. "The planets don't make a habit of lining up very often."

Ford recalls 124,000 compact models

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. has recalled more than 124,000 Ford Escort and Mustang and Mercury Lynx and Tracer cars for potential emissions and suspension problems.

Ford said Thursday that it was recalling 85,000 1982 Ford Escort and Mercury Lynx models equipped with 1.6-liter engines and manual transmissions. The cars' exhaust systems will be inspected and modified to decrease emissions.

John P. King, Ford service engineering manager, said tests on some of the vehicles showed emissions higher than allowed by federal law. The cars will receive vacuum delay valves, repositioning of air-control hoses and resetting of ignition timing. Some valves also may be replaced.

Ford also is recalling about 33,700 1987 Ford Mustang models equipped with 5.0-liter high-performance engines for inspection and possible installation of a fuel vapor hose restrictor, which prevents excess hydrocarbon emissions.

Ford also is recalling 5,500 1988 Mercury Tracer models for inspection of nuts attaching rear suspension struts to the bodies of the Mexican-made vehicles.

UNESCO director nominee urges U.S., Britain to rejoin

PARIS (AP) — A candidate favored by Western countries won nomination as UNESCO director general, and he urged the United States and Britain to rejoin the organization they had accused of having an anti-Western bias.

Federico Mayor Zaragoza of Spain told reporters after getting the nomination Sunday that he would ask the United States and Britain to "join us in...some concrete projects" in some scientific and environmental areas.

He said he hoped the projects would lure both nations back to the Paris-based United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The United States and Britain pulled out in 1984 and 1985, alleging that under the leadership of Director General Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal, the agency was squandering money and exhibiting an anti-Western bias.

One plan M'bow backed was for a new world information and communication order that Western governments and news organizations said could lead to licensing journalists.

Mayor called his candidacy for the $170,000-a-year job "above all scientific, professional and technical" and pledged to reform and streamline UNESCO.

UNESCO's 50-member executive board chose the Spanish biochemist after M'Bow asked to withdraw from the race, which was characterized by a long and bitter battle between Western and Third World nations.

Federico Mayor Zaragoza...of UNESCOS...would ask the United States and Britain to "join us in...some concrete projects" in some scientific and environmental areas...hoped the projects would lure both nations back to the Paris-based...organization.

The general conference is virtually certain to approve Mayor in a vote Nov. 7.

Mayor served as Spain's minister of education, as M'Bow's deputy director general from 1978 to 1981 and as his special adviser from 1983 to 1984. He said he would focus attention on the needs of Africa and the Third World.

"My first concern will be for the developing countries, especially those in Africa," Mayor said at a news conference Sunday.

He said he was equally "the candidate of Africans" and all other UNESCO nations.

Canada, Denmark, Japan and the Netherlands threatened to withdraw from UNESCO or not pay their dues if M'Bow, director since 1974, was re-elected. In a letter announcing his withdrawal, M'Bow accused these countries of "perverting the democratic process."

Mayor won by a vote of 30 to 20. Most of those opposing him represented African countries. Mayor's supporters included most Western nations, many Latin American nations, Japan, China and four Soviet bloc countries.

Mayor, 53, also had been supported by 107 international scientists, including 11 Nobel prize winners.

The organization runs hundreds of programs such as health studies and art contests, primarily aimed at developing nations.

Delegates had hoped to avoid turning the nomination balloting into a confrontation between the West and the Third World, but one delegate called it the most politically charged meeting in two years.

"UNESCO is in a mini-crisis, surmountable, but all the effort and progress we have made over the last two years toward unity has been lost," said David B. Wilson, Canada's delegate on the board.

Pakistani Ambassador Niaz Niak said he regretted the board did not nominate Mayor "by a larger consensus that would demonstrate greater confidence in our new director."

But Iba Der Thiam of Senegal, a leader in the procedural battle to derail Mayor's nomination, pledged his "most loyal support" after the voting.
