American abducted in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An underground group today claimed it kidnapped a 56-year-old American and alleged he worked for the CIA and the Israeli secret service. The United States denied the charges.

The Revolutionary Justice Organization, a group believed made up of Shiite Moslems loyal to Iran, identified the hostage as Edward Austin Tracy of Vermont.

If Tracy's abduction is confirmed, he would be the seventh American missing in Lebanon. The Revolutionary Justice Organization claims to hold one of the previous American kidnap victims.

The group made its claim in a handwritten note in Arabic delivered to the Beirut office of a Western news agency. The statement was accompanied by a photograph of Tracy and a photocopy of his passport.

The white-haired Tracy writes illustrated children's books. He was one of the fewer than a dozen Americans who remained in west Beirut after the latest exodus of foreigners in April prompted by a series of politically motivated kidnappings.

Tracy's mother, Doris, 78, said in a telephone interview from South Burlington, Vt., that her son has "been gone from Burlington for more than 20 years, and I didn't hear from him for about 10 years, but then he began writing to me about a year ago."

She said she is worried about her son being in Beirut, "and the fact that I don't know what he's doing. He never says what he's doing."

The underground group did not say when or where Tracy was abducted.

"The Revolutionary Justice Organization announces the arrest of Jewish American spy called Edward Austin Tracy after he was definitely proven to be...feeding the (Israeli secret service) Mossad and the CIA with information (and)...spying for the CIA," the group said in its statement.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Tracy "has no connection with the U.S. government. Allegations of his kidnappers that he works for the CIA are totally without foundation."

In Tel Aviv, officials in the Foreign Ministry and the office of the prime minister declined comment on the allegations Tracy was linked to Mossad.

A U.S. Embassy official said Tracy had been living in west Beirut for a long time. The official said he could not confirm that Tracy was kidnapped.

OPEC moving toward agreement?

GENEVA (AP) — OPEC oil ministers today were moving toward a breakthrough in marathon negotiations to restrict oil production for another two months, sources said.

A flurry of new compromise proposals emerged during a series of private meetings between key oil ministers, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The sources said there were indications that Kuwait — the main obstacle to an accord — would accept one of several new offers of a higher production quota.

There was no official word that Kuwait had accepted any of the offers, but the state-run Kuwaiti news agency reported an agreement was at hand.

James Audu, a spokesman for the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, declined to comment. He said there were no formal meetings scheduled at which the oil ministers could conclude an official agreement.

"I don't know about any agreement. If there had been an agreement it would have been announced," he said.

Belkacem Nabi, the oil minister of Algeria, told reporters that even if an agreement were achieved it would have little effect on the oil market, since the proposed accord would have to be reviewed by the cartel barely six weeks from now.

"An agreement makes no sense now," he said, adding he has no plans to leave Geneva yet.

OPEC is trying to curb production to boost prices which currently range from $14 to $16 a barrel. In the summer, before a production accord was reached, prices fell below $10 a barrel.

On Monday, the 13 oil ministers failed to end the stalemate, which centers on Kuwait's demand for a bigger share of OPEC's total oil production.

The Saudi government issued a statement saying King Fahd had initiated contacts with the leaders of neighboring states on the Arabian Peninsula to attempt to help in "finding a way out" of the bitter dispute in Geneva.

The statement did not say the king had a compromise proposal, but it appeared to indicate the Saudis were increasing pressure on Kuwait, their close ally, to soften its bargaining stance.

Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the other OPEC members on the Arabian Peninsula — Qatar and the United Arab Emirates — usually act as an alliance in cartel negotiations.

A group of non-Arab OPEC members, led by Venezuela and Iran, has rejected the Kuwaiti demand, which they saw as unjustified.

Industry 'permanently altered' by oil events, report reveals

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The oil and gas industry is not simply in a down cycle, but it has been markedly and permanently altered by an increasing dependence on imported oil, according to a new report released Monday.

"The excessive supply of oil worldwide, the depressed demand for energy, and the challenges caused by deregulation have led to this situation," said Richard Adkerson, managing director of Oil & Gas Services Industry for the Houston firm, Arthur Andersen & Co.

"A realistic appraisal provides no evidence that a significant economic recovery will occur in the near future, particularly for the U.S. oil and gas producing industry," Adkerson said in a statement released with the report, "Oil and Gas Reserve Disclosures: 1981-1985."

Little movement noted in unemployment rates

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Unemployment conditions in the Petroplex during September showed little movement as the jobless rate for both Midland and Odessa continue at about double year-ago levels.

The September unemployment rate for Midland stands at 12.3 percent, up marginally from 12.2 percent in August. A 100-worker decrease in total employment was compensated by 100 jobseekers dropping out of the labor force to keep total unemployment steady at 6,500 both months.

Odessa data shows 100-worker growth in total employment from 49,500 in August to 49,600 in September. The number of available workers in Odessa remained at 60,100 during the month, nudging the jobless rate down a tenth of one percent to 17.5 percent.

In September 1985, unemployment stood at 5.6 percent in Midland and 6.7 percent in Odessa.

The stagnant local employment picture mirrors the statewide rate which has remained at 9.1 percent the last two months, according to Joe Hatcher, Midland office manager for the Texas Employment Commission.

Signs of improvement in the employment situation are hard to come by, Hatcher says, but some encouraging trends are being seen:

— Although there are no solid commitments, several businesses have shown interest in the area for possible expansion;

— The Sam's Wholesale Club start-up in early December will employ 120 to 140 area workers, with hiring done through the local TEC office;

— Over the past two months, first time claims for unemployment benefits have declined by about 20 percent, to the 500 to 550 range this month, Hatcher estimates; and

— The commission has received a few calls for start-up teams for drilling crews, giving some indication of a possible turnaround in oil field employment if OPEC can extend its production agreements, he says.

The dark side of current conditions is that an increasing number of workers are exhausting their six-month maximum benefit period. Six months ago, in April, the TEC office handled its peak first-time claim load, processing more than 1,000 initial benefit requests.

'Tune in,' Susan Baker tells Midland parents

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

If parents don't start tuning in to rock 'n' roll music, children will continue to be exposed to explicit lyrics and the industry will win by default, Susan Baker, wife of Treasury Secretary James Baker, told Midlanders Monday.

"Parents, the crucial thing is to tune in to your child's music," she said. "If you all don't do something in your local communities, not much is going to be done."

Mrs. Baker, co-founder of the Parents' Music Resource Center and mother of eight children, has gained public attention for her national campaign against rock music that she claims glorifies sex, violence, rebellion, substance abuse and the occult.

On Monday Mrs. Baker gave an hour-and-a-half presentation to Midlanders, citing examples of explicit lyrics and cover art available to children today.

She prefaced her presentation, noting the PMRC has three messages:

— There is a new trend in excesses;

— The PMRC has no interest in censorship, but believes parents have a right to consumer guidelines; and — The PMRC wants the recording industry to voluntarily label records and cassette tapes with explicit lyrics.

Mrs. Baker spoke of the powerful influence rock music wields in the lives of teen-agers who listen four to six hours per day, as well as what she called the "alarming and unprecented proliferation of vulgar and violent songs."

"There is definitely a frightening trend fueled by a few powerful musicians," she said. "We keep asking, how can things get worse? Yet they do."

The PMRC grew out of a parental concern shared by Mrs. Baker and three other Washington D.C. area mothers whose children were becoming consumers of rock music.

She said she first became concerned when her 7-year-old daughter approached her and asked, "Mom, what does it mean, 'You make me feel like a virgin, touched for the very first time'?"

McCright sentenced to 12 years in prison in FNB-related cases

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton Monday sentenced William "Hoyle" McCright Jr., former executive vice president and director of First National Bank of Midland, to 12 years in prison and a $20,000 fine. McCright, 61, faced a maximum of 20 years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

McCright's sentence stemmed from his September 26, four-count conviction of embezzlement and misapplication of funds, fraudulently participating in a $1.925 million bank loan and making false bank reports and entries.

McCright was also president of the Midland Junior College District board of trustees.

An appeal was filed shortly after the sentence was handed down. Ted Kerr, attorney for McCright said late Monday afternoon.

"We filed a notice of appeal this morning which was sent to the Fifth District Court of Appeals in New Orleans," Kerr said.

"The testimony must be transcribed and then sent to New Orleans. As you know, it was a lengthy trial, so that in itself should take some time. The court will respond and then (if it accepts the appeal) we'll present our side," Kerr said.

Kerr said the appeal will be based on several different grounds. "Namely, that the evidence presented didn't justify the findings of guilty on some of those counts."

Despite rumors, land commissioner's race still low-profile

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In the age of multi-million dollar media campaigns, even a few potential scandals can't draw much attention to a down-ballot, low-profile race.

This year, rumors have spread back and forth between the campaigns of Land Commissioner Garry Mauro and of his opponent, Republican Marion Dudley Anderson of Seven Points.

Mauro maintains that his opponent has spiced up his name by using initials on the Nov. 4 ballot — his name will appear as M.D. Anderson, the same name as a world-known cancer hospital in Houston. By confusing voters, Anderson hopes to receive votes through name recognition, Mauro charges.

Anderson says he entered the race at the encouragement of two Dallas Republican activists, Ron Hines and former Congressional candidate Tom Paukin. He accuses Mauro of everything from smuggling whiskey into the state from Mexico to using his influence to get into lucrative land deals.

None of the charges has stuck, and Mauro shakes it off as political mudslinging. Democrat Mauro's campaign even did a little digging of its own into Anderson's dealings and found an arrest for marijuana possession and allegations that Anderson allowed police officers to watch X-rated movies after hours at his Henderson County night club.

"I've got a hospital as my opponent this time," Mauro told a group at the Capitol. "And if you don't know his name, I'm not going to burden you with that information."

Mauro has spent most of his time spreading the word that Anderson is not related to the hospital and instead runs a honky tonk. He has outraised Anderson by almost 30-to-1 and is banking on blowing away Anderson with television advertisements during the last two weeks before the general election.

That media blitz "scares the devil out of" Hines, Anderson's campaign treasurer and chief organizer. "There's no question it (TV spots) will hurt. It'll have an impact. But I think he (Anderson) has a legitimate 50-50 shot."

Anderson will spend the rest of the campaign traveling across the state and meeting with local political groups and newspaper editorial boards.

Mauro "is trying to use all this stuff against me to keep from answering the question about why his budget has gone up so much and why he's got all that luxury furniture in his state office," Anderson says.

In reply, Mauro says that the Land Office is more efficient than ever, that more veterans are receiving loans for homes and land and that the his staff is returning a huge profit off state lands.

One newspaper linked Mauro — as well as Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Congressman Mike Andrews and others — to a federal investigation concerning Houston-area land deals in which the men were involved. The story — offered for months to Texas newspapers and refused — appeared last week in The Washington Times. Mauro and the others called the story "sleaze" and denied any wrongdoing.

Crash that killed Machel claimed lives of 33 others

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — Thirty-four people, including four Soviet airplane crew members, died in the plane crash that killed President Samora Machel, the government said today.

The toll in Sunday night's crash earlier was placed at 29. But an official list of casualties issued today said 33 people in addition to Machel were killed when the plane slammed into a rainswept hillside in South Africa.

In Zimbabwe, thousands of youths who apparently blamed South Africa for Machel's death rampaged through Harare, attacking diplomatic missions, including those of the United States and South Africa. There were no immediate reports of any casualties.

The 53-year-old Machel, who led Marxist Mozambique since its independence from Portugal in 1975, was among 44 people on the Soviet-made jet which was returning from a regional summit meeting in Zambia.

Officials earlier said a total of 39 people were aboard. Ten people survived the crash, the government said today.

Machel's death took up the entire edition of Noticias, the capital's daily paper, which carried an emotional front-page editorial titled, "A Luta Continua," (The Struggle Continues), the traditional rallying cry of Machel's Frelimo party.

In the Zimbabwean capital of Harare, police fired tear gas to disperse rampaging students as they firebombed offices housing the diplomatic missions and state-run airlines of South Africa and Malawi. Malawi is the only African country that has diplomatic relations with South Africa.

Some shoppers and journalists who fled for safety into department stores and office blocks were chased and beaten, witnesses said. Vehicles were overturned.

Mobs of youths later marched on the U.S. Embassy in nearby suburbs and flung rocks at the high-walled building, smashing a few windows before police firing tear gas drove them off.

In South Africa, newspapers posed different theories on why the presidential jet, apparently flying in stormy weather, crashed into a hillside just a few hundred yards across Mozambique's border with South Africa.

Business Day, a Johannesburg paper, said early evidence indicated bad weather and pilot error were to blame, but it joined The Citizen, another daily, in reporting that the Soviet pilot claimed from his hospital bed that the plane was shot down.

The paper quoted a top South African government source as saying, "Our guys had the plane on their radar even when it was still over Zimbabwe (to the north). It was coming down the border between South Africa and Mozambique in virtual zero visibility."

"The pilot apparently mistook the lights of Komatipoort for Maputo (about 45 miles away), because he told the passengers to buckle up for landing. Then, instead of turning east to Maputo, he turned west into South African airspace. He was low and touched the crest of a hill before crashing."

The paper said aviation sources in Maputo said the pilot told air traffic controllers he had the Maputo runway in sight and was "positioned right-hand down for runway 23 (Maputo's main runway)."

Shortly afterwards, he reported he "had lost it," the Maputo sources were quoted as saying. His last radio message was that he could not pick up the twin radio beams for an instrument landing, Business Day said.

Attention also focused on a survivor's reported statement that he heard a sound like "a bang or a shot" in the plane before it went down.

Mozambican officials made no new comment on the cause of the crash.

In announcing Machel's death to the nation Monday night, Marcelino dos Santos, the ruling Frelimo's No. 2 man, said the plane had gone down "in circumstances not yet clarified."

There was no immediate word on a temporary successor to Machel. The constitution stipulates that the party central committee takes over the president's functions on his death, and then name a successor.

Prime Minister Mario Machungo, dos Santos and Foreign Minister Joaquim Chissano were considered leading candidates for the presidential post, which carries with it leadership of FRELIMO, the nation's sole political party.

Other Mozambican officials killed in the crash included Transport Minister Luis Maria Alcantra Santos, Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Carlos Lobo and Aquino de Braganca, a professor regarded as a key intellectual force behind Machel's government.

All had been with Machel at a summit of four African presidents in Zambia to discuss guerrilla wars in the region.

ROCK

Mrs. Baker told the audience she was alarmed by those lyrics from a song by pop artist Madonna and decided to investigate further.

What she found was "explicit lyrics, glorifying permissive sex, profanity, violence, suicide and drugs and alcohol," she said.

Mrs. Baker told the audience that many of today's rock stars have "exceeded the bounds of decency by singing about incest; sadomasochism, bisexuality, bondage, even necrophilia.

"It's something that's happened because we, as parents, were not tuned in to it."

She added that "All too often, people think if it's music, it must be OK. It's not OK. When music delivers pornographic, violent and destructive messages through charismatic rock stars to vulnerable young people whose values and character are not yet formed, it becomes insidious."

In September 1985, the PMRC founders tesified before the U.S. Senate Commerce Committee, calling for voluntary self-restraint from the music industry. The group also proposed consumer labeling based on a uniform set of standards and that lyrics to be provided to the consumer before they purchase a recording.

Rock stars Frank Zappa and Dee Snider, as well as John Denver, condemned the concept of labeling as censorship and touted parental guidance as a substitute for industry or government intervention. Zappa advocated lyrics be printed on the outside of albums at government expense.

Last November, the two sides reached an agreement whereby recordings, with explicit lyrics referring to sex, violence or substance abuse, will contain a warning label.

That warning reads, "Explicit Lyrics — Parental Advisory." As an alternative, record companies may print the song lyrics on the album jacket or print the lyrics on a separate sheet under the plastic cover of the album.

Mrs. Baker said the PMRC will continue to monitor the industry policy and educate consumers on the meaning of the warning label.

It also will work to encourage other record companies to subscribe to the policy, she added.

SENTENCE

"We have some legal issues we'll bring out in the appeal, as well," Kerr said. Questions arose in Kerr's mind concerning the illegality of McCright's failure to disclose various business dealings he was involved in when conducting bank transactions, he said.

"We feel optimistic about our chances for appeal," Kerr said, adding he guessed the appeal phase would be wrapped up in seven to nine months.

"I disagree with Mr. Kerr. I think the evidence clearly supports the sentence," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Blankinship, who led the prosecution in the case.

"Even Bill Kerr (brother of Ted Kerr and also part of McCright's counsel) said during the closing statements, 'There are some things (McCright has done) that might turn your stomach...,'" Blankinship said.

"This man (McCright) was part of a three-man partnership and loaned himself and his partners a lot of money over the years. His defense put on no evidence (defending the charges) on any of this," Blankinship added.

Blankinship added that all but one of the crop of convicted Midland bankers have put on appeals and that he was not surprised at this action by McCright.

Some time ago, McCright sent a letter of resignation to Jess Parrish, president of Midland College, relinquishing his position as president of college district's board of trustees, Parrish said this morning.

"We've had the letter for about two or three weeks. There isn't really a question of us accepting it — he is an elected official. We will discuss the matter today at our board meeting," Parrish said.

He said there is no replacement on the boards for McCright's position right now.

A federal indictment was handed down July 22, 1986, after an FBI investigation alleged McCright's possible involvement in the crimes, Ron Butler, FBI supervisor said.

If the appeal fails, Kerr said McCright would most likely be sent to a federal "reception area" where he would await assignment to a federal prison which "suited his background."

"But we have not heard of him lately. This guy had not had any contact with the embassy in recent months," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Tracy often was seen sitting in sidewalk cafes in west Beirut's Hamra commercial thoroughfare. Lebanese waiters who know him said they have not seen him in two months.

He speaks some Arabic and frequently visited U.S. news agency offices in Beirut to seek help in marketing his books. Sometimes he carried copies of the Bible and the Koran which he said were for sale.

He was said to be a friend of Yasser Arafat before the Palestine Liberation Organization chairman was ousted from Beirut in Israel's 1982 invasion.

Tracy graduated from Burlington High School in 1948. Former classmate Shirley Meacham said he did not attend the 30th reunion in 1978. She said that at the time he was listed as living in the Canary Islands off northern Africa.

Trial looks at U.S.-Nicaragua relations

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government opened its case against Eugene Hasenfus, the first American captured in the Washington-backed rebel war, with a scathing review of the history of U.S.-Nicaraguan relations.

No details of the government's evidence against Hasenfus were revealed in the 14-page accusation read Monday in a "People's Tribunal" that specializes in judging those charged with counterrevolutionary acts.

In a sweltering courtroom packed with reporters, Hasenfus sat stonily at a table with court president Reynaldo Monterrey. He listened as he was formally charged with terrorism, criminal association and violating the public order and security on behalf of the U.S. government.

"I have nothing to say until I talk with my lawyer," Hasenfus, dressed in a black T-shirt, dirty blue jeans and combat boots without laces, said after the accusation was read first in Spanish, then in English.

The 45-year-old American from Marinette, Wis. was captured Oct. 6 after Sandinista soldiers shot down a C-123 military transport plane carrying supplies to rebels fighting the leftist Sandinista government. Two other Americans and a third man, still unidentified, were killed.

Hasenfus, who met for the first time with defense attorney Enrique Sotelo Borgen after the session, has two days to enter a plea. The lawyer said he would ask permission to talk with his client again today.

Justice Minister Rodrigo Reyes gave the court a four-page document identified as Hasenfus' confession, as well as a recommendation that the American be sentenced to 30 years in prison, the maximum penalty for the charges.

"In flying over Nicaraguan territory with the object of supplying forces financed and directed by the North American government who act against the legally constituted government of Nicaragua...(Hasenfus) is carrying out acts that impair the independence, the sovereignty and the integrity of the nation," said the accusation read by Monterrey.

The document recounted the United States' military occupation of Nicaragua from 1926-33, its support for the 34-year Somoza family dictatorship and its attempts to undermine the Sandinistas since they ousted Anastasio Somoza in 1979.

"We will demonstrate that the actions imputed (to Hasenfus) are indissolubly linked to the official policy of the government of the United States towards the Republic of Nicaragua," the accusation read.

Eugene Hasenfus listens as the president of a revoltionary tribunal reads the Nicaraguan government's charges against him. The reading, in Spanish and English, took more than two hours.

Hasenfus calmly listens to charges

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Eugene Hasenfus is on trial in a one-room courthouse that barely holds the scores of foreign reporters attracted by Nicaragua's first prosecution of an American in the U.S.-backed Contra war.

Hasenfus, 45, was one of the few in the room who appeared unaffected by the heat Monday as he sat for more than two hours at a 20-foot-long conference table and heard the charges read against him, first in Spanish, then in English.

With him at the table were attorney Reynaldo Monterrey, president of the People's Anti-Somocista Tribunal, and an interpreter and a court clerk.

Occasionally, Hasenfus turned to smile at his wife, Sally, who stood about 15 feet behind him surrounded by about 100 journalists.

The tribunals were formed in 1983 to try individuals suspected of counterrevolutionary activity. The word "Somocista" in their name refers to the late dictator Anastasio Somoza, who was ousted in the 1979 revolution.

On the front wall of the courtroom, a mural shows a group of women carrying a banner that reads, "For the dead, our dead, we swear to defend the victory."

Monterrey, wiping his face with a handkerchief, read a 14-page document stating the charges against Hasenfus. By the fifth page, Hasenfus, who is not known to understand much, if any, Spanish, began impatiently tapping the arm of his chair.

Besides Monterrey, the panel trying Hasenfus has two lay members, identified by tribunal administrators as Luis Perez and Domingo Matute. Nothing more is known about the two men and, in the crush of reporters, it could not be determined if they were in the courtroom.

Outside the building, which stands behind a wire fence on Managua's western outskirts, curious Nicaraguans waited with journalists throughout the day for Hasenfus' late-afternoon arrival.

One bystander approached the reporters and began shouting, "Think about all of the widows in Nicaragua. Think about all the orphans. That gringo should be executed." A few people applauded the suggestion.

Hasenfus was transported to the building in a green paddy wagon. A Sandinista soldier unlocked its rear door, then unlocked an interior wire gate and Hasenfus, squinting in the glare of TV lights, was led by several soldiers into the building.

Security appeared light. Journalists were allowed to enter the building without the examination of their equipment that is standard at government events.

OIL

At the same time, the American Petroleum Institute in Washington reported total U.S. petroleum imports (crude oil plus products) continued to rise in September as did domestic deliveries of petroleum products, an indication of increased demand.

According to API's "Monthly Statistical Report," petroleum imports, which in August had already reached the highest level since 1980, rose to a level of almost seven million barrels a day in September, 42.7 percent higher than the level of the same month in 1985.

Alarming declines in several key economic indicators and sustained poor results in others demonstrate the severity of the current environment and forecast increased reliance on imported oil, the Andersen report states.

Adkerson said these changes are stimulating major restructuring activities among individual companies, as each attempts to position itself as an economical and efficient producer. Moreover, current conditions raise important questions about the continuing viability of domestic oil and gas development in the U.S.

The survey reports results of 375 public companies for the past five years, the survey also monitors current economic conditions and trends in the oil and gas industry.

Adkerson pointed to sharp drops in capital expenditures, with U.S. exploration and development expenditures falling 11 percent in 1985 to the lowest level in five years. Reinvestment levels also dropped to a new low, as survey companies reinvested only 60 cents of each dollar of net production revenue into exploration and development. This decline was particularly severe for smaller companies.

The survey illustrates how several years of depressed exploration and development activity have led to a pattern of deteriorating reserve replacement. Oil reserve additions in 1985 fell nearly 30 percent from levels in 1984, and more significant losses were avoided only on the strength of the performance of the larger companies.

Likewise, Adkerson said, U.S. gas additions were down 27 percent from the year before.

These declines resulted in only 59 percent of oil production and 69 percent of gas production being repiced by new reserve discoveries according to the survey.

"The industry is further threatened by previously reported proved reserves that are no longer economically recoverable at current price levels," Adkerson said. Stripper oil wells are especially sensitive to price changes because of their relatively high per unit production cost.

A special analysis in "Oil and Gas Reserve Disclosures" reveals that 14 percent of aggregate U.S. oil production, or approximately 8.9 million barrels per day in 1985, was produced from stripper wells.

Contributing to this assessment of industry conditions is a predicted natural decline in Alaskan production beginning later in this decade, according to the report. The reduction, combined with the declines from the abandonment of wells in the lower 48 states, will further erode the U.S. reserve base, significantly adding to the negative impact on U.S. oil and gas reserves from falling prices.

"Falling oil prices will also lead to the loss of certain proved underdeveloped oil reserves through downward revisions to previous reserve estimates," Adkerson added. More than 20 percent (5 billion barrels) of the total proved oil reserves held by companies surveyed and outlined in the report are undeveloped.

JOBS

Hatcher says it is difficult to estimate how many of those 1,000 workers have remained on the jobless roles for the entire six months and will be losing their benefits this month.

He also notes that applications by several hundred former oil field workers for benefit extensions under the federal Trade Readjustment Act, designed to help workers displaced from their jobs by foreign competition, have been rejected. However, the TEC is encouraging the workers to appeal the claim denials, Hatcher says.

Outlying counties in the Permian Basin showed similar stagnation in jobless conditions, with less than 1 percent fluctuations. Reeves County continues to have the highest unemployment rate in the region. In September, the rate climbed to 19.4 percent from 19.1 percent in August.

TEC unemployment figures for other area counties are: Dawson, 15.6 percent (up .3); Winkler, 14.7 (down .8); Pecos, 12.9 (same as August); Howard, 12.6 (up .1); Ward, 12.0 (down .4); and, Andrews continues as the only Permian Basin county below the 9.1 percent state average at 8.8 percent (up .1 from August).

Odessa still has the second highest unemployment rate of the 28 metropolitan areas in the state, trailing McAllen's 19.9 percent, the state's highest. Midland ranks 20th of the 28. Austin and Dallas hold the top two rankings, with jobless rates of 5.8 and 5.9 percent, respectively.

KERA cancels Thursday gubernatorial debate

DALLAS (AP) — Public television station KERA canceled Thursday's gubernatorial debate between Democratic incumbent Mark White and GOP challenger Bill Clements.

A statement Tuesday from the Dallas-Fort Worth-Denton station cited a decision by the Clements campaign not to participate. The station also reported an impasse between White on a workable format, since Clements did not plan to appear.

Mauro, an attorney and businessman, learned much of his politics and administrative skills from Comptroller Bob Bullock and former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger, twice a candidate for the U.S. Senate. He was executive director of the State Democratic Party before running for land commissioner in the 1982 Democratic sweep.

Anderson was on the Seven Points City Council and was in the construction business besides running his bar, The Cedar Creek Plowboys.

Billy Rogers, Mauro's campaign manager, said during the summer that he thought at least one statewide-elected Democrat would lose. But as Gov. Mark White has pulled up in the polls to a virtual dead heat with Republican challenger Bill Clements, Rogers says Mauro will come through with a solid win. "Our TV will take care of that."

On the other side, Hines has not given up on his man. "Sure, it's a tough, tough task," he says. "But it's possible."

White says Clements TV ad about early paroles 'misleading'

AUSTIN (AP) — Responsibility for paroling too many criminals is the latest point of contention between Gov. Mark White and his Repubilcan opponent, Bill Clements.

White, campaigning for re-election in Palestine on Monday, said Clements is misleading voters with a television commercial that suggests White is to blame for the mugging of a woman featured in the ad.

In the commercial, a woman tells of the incident and suggests that policies of the White administration might be responsible.

"It's a shame Susan Key was the victim of a crime. What is also a shame is the hypocriscy of Bill Clements. It's a shame Bill Clements failed to tell Susan Key, and fails to tell the people of Texas, that he vetoed prisons — prisons that could have held criminals like the one who attacked Susan Key," White said.

"It's a shame Bill Clements didn't tell her about the 28,000 inmates he personally paroled, including 19 criminals who committed murder and are now sitting on death row," the Democrat added.

Responding, Clements said Ms. Key volunteered to appear in the commercial because of her strong feelings that something needed to be done "to help bring attention to an unjust criminal justice system."

Clements said he wasn't surprised by White's reaction.

"Susan Key's story is not an isolated incident. Unfortunately, her plight has become an all too familiar occurrence as our citizens are plagued by an increasing number of felons as the result of Mark White's early release program," Clements said.

White said that under his administration, prison capacity has been expanded by nearly 10,000 beds and that plans for another 6,500 have been approved.

"We're doing something about criminal justice and the problems Bill Clements left us. Bill Clements' approach was to cut — to veto needed prison space. Our approach is to build more prisons," White said.

Clements said White is trying to "dodge the facts" about paroles.

"White's administration has paroled 42,656 inmates since becoming governor, an increase of 54 percent more than when I was governor," Clements said.

Grand jury may soon get bugging case

AUSTIN (AP) — Results of an investigation into alleged bugging of a Bill Clements campaign aide should be presented to a grand jury soon, says the agent in charge of the Austin FBI office.

Agent Byron Sage said he is "very confident" the case can reach the grand jury before the Nov. 4 election.

"We're still plugging along in a very specific direction," Sage said Monday.

Clements is challenging incumbent Gov. Mark White, the Democrat who ousted him after a single term in 1982.

Both candidates have denied any knowledge of the bugging.

Authorities questioned aides in both campaigns, along with at least one newspaper reporter. Sage said authorities have begun giving lie detector tests to some people.

The investigation began Oct. 5, when an electronic listening device was discovered behind a picture in the office of Karl Rove, an Austin-based political consultant working as chief strategist for the Clements campaign.

While Clements' campaign officials didn't blame anyone specifically for planting the match book-sized bug, they did say their opponent would have the most to gain.

But Mark McKinnon, press secretary for White, said the Democrat's campaign is blameless. He voiced hope Monday that the case is solved quickly.

"We know that nobody associated with the Mark White campaign had anything to do with the matter, and that would leave only one other conclusion," McKinnon said.

He said the bugging has distracted attention from the real issues of the White-Clements race.

"There's no question about it. We were extremely concerned when this whole matter came up because it distracted from the issues. We were pleased with the direction of the campaign and our momentum. We hope there is an immediate resolution of this (bugging) matter," McKinnon said.

John Weaver, a Clements campaign official, said the Republican side also wants a quick resolution of the affair.

Group: Urban areas will get bank franchise taxes

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Branch banking in Texas will withdraw bank franchise taxes from suburban school districts and other governments and deposit them in urban areas, a group of independent bankers said Monday.

Independent Bankers for Texas said suburban school districts, along with small municipalities, hospital districts and other local units of governments, will lose tax receipts if voters on Nov. 4 approve a constitutional amendment authorizing branch banking.

If the legislation is approved, holding companies will convert their independent suburban banks into branches, depriving local governments of the bank franchise taxes that were levied on those suburban banks, the group said.

"It appears that this money would be paid to the taxing authorities of the lead bank (usually located in a major urban area) rather than to the taxing authorities of the suburban banks," said Gary Tongate, chairman of the group.

The group, which represents between 300 and 600 mostly rural bankers, is fighting branch banking on a small budget using public forums and limited radio, newspaper and magazine advertisements, Tongate said. About 1,800 banks operate in the state.

Tongate provided figures showing the tax-loss impact at various suburban school districts in four of the state's metropolitan counties, but was unable to provide local figures. For example, he said, the Spring Branch school district in Harris County could lose $409,000 in annual bank franchise taxes, while the Irving school district in Dallas County could lose $129,000 annually.

"The main bank in Dallas would still be paying the tax, but the money would be coming back to Dallas taxing authorities rather than suburban taxing authorities," Tongate said. "The suburbs and municipalities would adversely be affected by this, and very greatly so."

About $71 million a year is paid in bank franchise taxes in Texas, said Tongate, president and chief executive officer of City National Bank in Whitehouse, near Tyler.

The group also opposes interstate banking, which becomes law Jan. 1, and is challenging the legislation's constitutionality.

UT files charges against protesters

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The University of Texas filed charges against protesters who took over the UT president's office Monday morning and barricaded themselves inside before campus police kicked in a door and arrested them.

The group demanded that the University of Texas System board of regents sell all of its stock in companies that do business with South Africa. Police arrested the protesters about 20 minutes after they occupied the office, and campus officials charged them with disruptive activity, a Class C misdemeanor.

Of the 16 protesters, 12 were students, two former students and two not affiliated with the university, the UT News and Information Service reported.

Later in the day, campus police arrested two more students for criminal mischief after an anti-apartheid rally. The students dipped their hands in red paint and left handprints on the walls of the Main Building. The president's office is in that building.

Ed Sharpe, UT vice president for administration, said the doors on UT President Bill Cunningham's office are locked until 8 a.m., but that several employees were working early. One of the protesters knocked on the door. When an employee opened the door, the other 15 charged inside, he said.

A group of people protesting the University of Texas' investments in South Africa are escorted by campus police after their arrest Monday.

"It is a disconcerting situation to be at your desk at 7:50 on Monday morning and have a group of individuals come in and say they're taking over your office," Sharpe said. "They said they were taking over and started immediately to barricade the various exits and entrances that are in that area.

"There were no weapons or anything like that," he said. "They indicated they didn't want to harm anyone."

No injuries were reported.

The protesters brought a letter containing their demands, which included that the board of regents sell by Wednesday afternoon all stock in companies that do business in South Africa.

Student rallies against Pretoria's apartheid system of racial segregation are an almost a daily event on the UT campus and have led to several arrest in the past for violating disturbance rules.

To enter Cunningham's office, police had to kick down one door that the protesters had barricaded with desks. Cunningham arrived at his office as police were arresting the protesters. UT officials notified all UT regents about the incident.

"We obviously asked them to leave, especially when they started stacking desks on top of each other," Sharpe said. "I attempted to identify the leaders and tell them if they left right now, they would not be in as severe a poblem as they may be if they proceeded with this action."

Sharpe said the students involved could face university disciplinary action along with the criminal charges. "It's within the university's power to discipline students for severe enough reasons up to and including expulsion," he said.

Otwell followers picket in front of Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — "God is head of the church, not government," said a picket sign carried by followers of the Rev. W.N. Otwell, who has refused to get a state license for his church child care schools.

The signs were paraded up and down in front of the Capitol Monday and were due back today for a scheduled rally of fundamentalist followers from throughout the state.

About a dozen local supporters of Otwell, who fled the state to escape a contempt of court order, appeared Monday, led by Hank Thompson, minister of the Capital City Baptist Church.

"Repent, retire or be removed," said another picket sign in obvious reference to Otwell's trouble with Attorney General Jim Mattox.

Mattox and Otwell are engaged in a dispute over the licensing of a boys' home in Fort Worth run by Otwell's Community Baptist Church. Last Friday, law officers raided the home Friday to take custody of any boys at the home but failed to find any.

"Mattox said when he raided the home he was going to take everyone on that property, take our kids and put them in foster homes and going to take all of us and put us in jail," Thompson said.

"We'd don't want confrontation like that. We didn't want trouble like that so we got all the women and kids off the property," Thompson said.

A court hearing is scheduled Wednesday in Austin on Mattox's motion to permanently close the home because Otwell will not get a state license.

Thompson said the ministers coming for the rally planned to stay over for the Wednesday hearing.

"I have no idea how many ministers will be here tomorrow," Thompson told reporters at the Capitol. "I hope 50, maybe 100."

He said Otwell would not be present.

Otwell fled the state earlier this month after he was cited for contempt of court for failing to appear at a state district court hearing in Austin.

Houston man faces life in prison in abuse case

HOUSTON (AP) — A 26-year-old man faces up to life in prison after being convicted of forcing ground pepper down the throat of his girlfriend's 2-year-old son, who later died.

Prosecutors say the May 7 death of Christopher Kalmbach is one of the cruelest they have seen.

The punishment phase in the trial of Raymond Edward Coffey was scheduled for today.

Jurors in State District Judge Mike McSpadden's court took about 3½ hours Monday before convicting Coffey of injury to a child.

The two-day trial ended Monday with the defense resting its case without calling any witnesses.

In a police statement read to the jury, Coffey told police he often used pepper to discipline the boy, but contended that the child took the pepper himself the night he choked to death.

Coffey told police he left the pepper shaker with the boy after he had repeated a bad word. Upon returning, Coffey told police he found brown and gray stuff coming out of the child's mouth. The boy's face was purple, the statement said.

Emergency room personnel at Parkway General Hospital testified that the child was not breathing when Coffey brought him to the hospital.

The judge held the boy's mother, Patty Ann Kalmbach, 21, in contempt of court for refusing to identify her son in one of the photos shown to jurors.

She also refused to testify against Coffey, despite the judge's ruling that her testimony would not be used against her in her upcoming trial. She also is charged with injury to a child.

"She knows the legal ramifications. I've explained those to her as best I can," her attorney Jim Seabolt said. "And whatever else is in her mind personally I'm sure is something she considered as well. I'm sure she made a decision she felt she had to make."

Bank faces fines for not reporting fund transactions

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A Lower Rio Grande Valley bank has pleaded guilty to seven counts of failure to report currency transactions allegedly involved in a money laundering scheme for a group of alleged marijuana smugglers.

In a related case, a federal judge Monday sentenced a Valley man to 35 years in prison on racketeering and conspiracy charges in connection with the so-called "Cash Crop" marijuana smuggling ring that operated in South Texas for several years.

The Metropolitan National Bank of McAllen pleaded guilty to seven counts of failure to file currency transaction reports with the federal government and faces up to $3.5 million in fines. James Fox, who was president of the bank at the time, faces trial here later this week on money laundering charges.

The charges the bank pleaded guilty to accused the financial institution of failing to report transactions of over $10,000 each.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Charlie Lewis told U.S. District Judge Ed Prado that two leaders of the conspiracy, who are fugitives, deposited $500,000 in the bank on two occasions in 1983.

Lewis said the men took a loan on that $1 million and placed the money in another account. They then began to withdraw the money in amounts of more than $10,000. The transactions were not reported, Lewis said.

Bank officers said they reported that the reports were not being filled out on the transactions and were told by Fox that reports should not be filled out, Lewis said.

Prado sentenced Delfino Pena Chavira, 30, of Pharr, to 35 years in prison on his convictions in September on charges of racketeering, conspiracy and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute it.

Hico man believes Billy the Kid died of heart attack

HICO (AP) — Forget the legend. Billy the Kid died in 1950 of a heart attack.

Downed not by bullets, but by old age, right in front of the old Hico News Review in downtown Hico.

Bob Hefner, justice of the peace in this Hamilton County town of 1,375, will tell you so.

Ollie L. "Brushy Bill" Roberts dropped dead on Dec. 28, 1950, three days shy of his 92nd birthday. Some Hico residents remember his claims that he was Billy the Kid, Hefner says, but most just wrote it off at the time as "talk."

Hefner, who returned to his roots in Hico nine years ago to escape the Dallas bustle and become the only elected Republican in the county, said his curiosity was piqued the more he heard talk around town about the man who claimed to be the Kid.

He talked to Hico folks who had known "Brushy Bill" and pored over newspaper clippings and the few documents he could find. The result is a booklet Hefner published in his tiny print shop entitled "The Hico Legend of Billy the Kid" just in time for Hico's 100th Old Settlers Reunion earlier this year.

"They preach to you (in JP school) to decide a case on the preponderence of the evidence," Hefner said. "At this point, if all the evidence is in, it's in 'Brushy Bill's' favor. I believe the old boy's who's he said he was."

He said the Kid's granddaughter in Missouri wrote him after receiving his booklet and asked "What's the big deal? We knew this all along."

The legend of Billy the Kid's death goes like this: Billy escaped from a Lincoln, N.M., jail in April 1881, killing two deputies. The Kid's former friend, Pat Garrett, sheriff of Lincoln County, N.M., and two deputies tracked him to the home of Pete Maxwell in Fort Sumner, N.M.

On July 14, 1881, legend says, Garrett shot Billy the Kid dead in Maxwell's bedroom. But Hefner quotes one of the deputies as saying, "Pat Garrett, you have killed the wrong man."

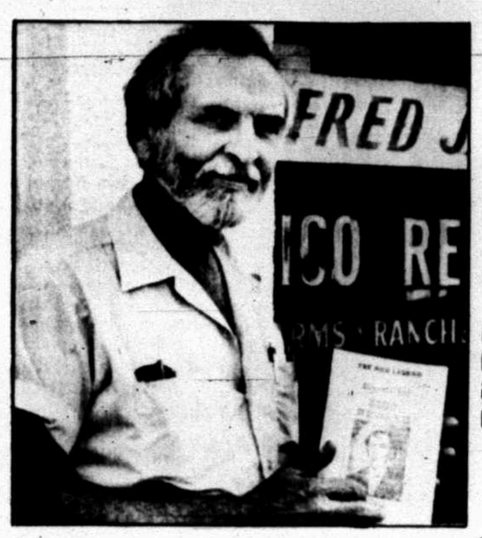
Billy was buried in Fort Sumner cemetery the next day, ultimately bringing a tourist goldmine to the New Mexico town. But is it really Billy the Kid, buried in that grave?

Hefner believes not. He's more inclined to believe that the death was a ruse, designed to allow Billy to escape from the public eye. It's more likely, he says, that a derelict was buried in the Kid's place.

No birth certificate for Billy the Kid has been found.

Within a year after his "death" at the age of 21, the Kid was romanticized into an outlaw hero who had killed at least 21 men, Hefner said.

He says the legend of the Billy the Kid was just a romantic farce designed to sell dime novels and movies.



Justice of the Peace Bob Hefner stands on the spot in Hico where he believes Billy the Kid dropped dead from a heart attack in 1950. Hefner is holding a booklet he has published detailing the famed outlaw's last days.

AP Laserphoto

"The Kid was not an outlaw. He didn't rob banks or stagecoaches," Hefner contends. "He never had a stand-up shootout. He didn't fast draw his gun. In the biggest shootout he ever had, he stood behind an adobe wall."

Hefner said his research shows the Kid may have been guilty of cattle rustling and the slayings of two deputies as he escaped from jail in Lincoln, but little more.

Whether or not "Brushy Bill" was Billy the Kid, Hefner acknowledges that he wants the Kid's mystique to turn a spotlight on this tiny community 180 miles northwest of Waco which relies on ranching and dairy farming.

"I'm practical enough that I'd like to bring this around to where Hico could enjoy a little tourism off this," he said. "I kind of daydream about a museum and maybe a statue in the park."

Hefner also envisions a local play about the life of Billy the Kid and-or "Brushy Bill," as an annual event to help celebrate the town's history.

"That's what tourism is all about — each town telling its own story in its own way."

Man finds gold mine in Texas foods

AUSTIN (AP) — A childhood experience can become a powerful force in your life, Dan Jardine will tell you.

"The oldest memory I have is of my grandad, of going with him to barbecues in the fall," Jardine said.

Now let's move ahead about 25 years, to 1975.

Dan Jardine, grown man of 35, enters the second annual World Barbecue Cookoff Championship in Houston and wins.

Today, that tall silver trophy sits in Jardine's office across from a cupboard displaying jars and packages of barbecue and hot pepper sauces, seasonings, spices, chili "fixin's," mustards and dips as well as jellies, jams, salad dressings and relishes.

All with the label of Jardine's Texas Foods.

MANY OF those specialty foods can also be found on the shelves at Neiman Marcus, Macy's, Marshall Field's, Foley's and Scarbroughs department stores, in supermarkets and gift and gourmet shops in 40 states. Even at the General Store in Paris, France.

Mail orders are taken from throughout the country. To name drop, Gene Autry and Dick Cavett regularly order the Special Edition Texacante salsa and dip, and Anthony Quinn requests the 1839 Pepper Seasoning, Jardine said.

"We currently have his products on central display with other Southwestern specialty items," said Sue Simpson, food buyer for the Oakville Grocery in the Napa Valley of California.

"We sell all we can get," says George Singer, manager of Foley's at Barton Creek Square.

The lesson here is not necessarily that a childhood inspiration or a winning recipe in a cook-off contest can lead to fame and fortune, although in Jardine's case, it all seemed part of his destiny.

"Every year someone wins a chili contest, and they go into the chili business," Jardine said. "They soon find out there's more to it."

To those people who are dreaming about opening a business, the advice might be to throw away all those how-to books, forget about enrolling in a few college business courses and cancel plans to attend a series of workshops that discuss cash flow, marketing and management techniques.

INSTEAD, CAREFULLY study Dan Jardine and his hot sauce. Study them from a modest and hectic beginning through a steady, controlled growth to the success and prominence that his business enjoys today.

"Many people in small gourmet food companies aspire to grow and expand, but not many are capable of succeeding," said Ms. Simpson of the Oakville, Calif., store. "He (Jardine) is one of the few who stands apart in that respect with an enormous product line and versatility."

As it turned out, the easiest thing for Jardine to overcome were his roots. There may have been some vague references to the Red River and San Jacinto in high school history books, but Jardine grew up proud of Stone Mountain and where eyes welled up at the burning of Tara as only Hollywood could do it.

The man who has given the world perhaps the widest selection of specialty Texas foods was born and reared a Georgia Cracker and educated a Georgia Bulldog.

It wasn't until his mid-30s that Jardine and family moved to Austin from his hometown of Douglas in rural southern Georgia. And it wasn't until he was nearly 40 that he launched his specialty food business.

The reason for coming west was to operate a Hardee hamburger restaurant franchise for Texas and Colorado, with financial backing of partners in Houston. Jardine said his partners turned out to be more interested in investing in oil and gas during the boom period than starting a chain of fast-food stands.

He lost his patience and sold back his interest. By 1979, he was out of a job and income.

"WE WANTED to stay here, and I liked the food business," Jardine recalled. "But we rejected the concept of doing a restaurant because a restaurant never closes — it runs you."

Jardine became infatuated with the regional food and saw it as a business opportunity with a lot of growth potential.

"No one at that time had put together an entire collection of Texas foods," he said. "Some were making picante, some chili, barbecue sauce, jellies and preserves. But no one was offering retailers a complete line of regional Texas food."

"So not knowing any better...," he can now joke.

Typically, everybody told Jardine he would never make any money with his little venture.

"But I didn't start the business to make money," he said. "It was something I wanted to do."

First he researched the evolvement of the regional foods, going back to the chuck wagons on the cattle drives and the influences of the land and the people — the Mexicans, who were here and the Germans and Scots who would come.

"THEY ALL helped created the Austin flavor, something that has evolved and continues to evolve," he said. "We wanted the concept to be authentic and tied to the Austin area. This is a very unique place on the planet."

Starting out, it was just Jardine; his wife, Lisa, and their kitchen, where they perfected recipes while she continued to hold down a sales job in a gift shop. To this day, he and his wife have created the recipes for every product they have marketed, he said.

The first foods out of the Jardine kitchen were the barbecue sauce, chili seasoning, picante sauce, jalapeno jelly and hot sauce which is labeled "Texas Champagne."

They made their debut at the Junior League's Christmas Affair in 1979. It was quite a scramble right up to the last minute.

"We had a rented van outside Palmer Auditorium, and we were putting labels on and folding the gift boxes," he said laughing.

Their first customers were Richard Jenness gift shop, where Lisa worked, and Frost Bros. The first food store to buy Jardine's products was Whole Foods Market.

Jardine's business has grown over the years, one step at a time. He concentrated on the Texas market until 1983, aiming primarily at the small, independent groceries and gift shops which he describes as the "bread-and-butter customers" but also adding some of the supermarkets and department stores in the state.

THEN CAME the expansion and the need to build a national network of sales representatives.

"We were growing pretty fast," Jardine said. "That's the good part. But you have to face the realistic problems of financing an increased overhead."

At that point, Jardine made two important decisions.

"We wanted to grow as fast as we can but not beyond what we can properly handle," he said.

The other decision was whether to bring in outside investors to finance the expansion.

"But I decided I didn't want that. Too many cooks spoil the chili."

To this day, the Jardines own 100 percent of the company. The first employee outside the family was hired four years ago. Today that employee, Emilio Herrera, is production and shipping manager but is better known for the package of tortilla chips that bears his name.

Last year, annual sales passed a small-business milestone — $1 million. For this year, Jardine will say only that sales will be between $1 million and $5 million.

MRS. JARDINE has her own product line, including the preserves, jellies, corn relish, salad dressings and pralines. Jardine calls them the "new generation," reflecting Austin's more cosmopolitan nature and changing tastes.

"The Hill Country is still evolving, is not frozen in time," he said.

The company now has nearly 50 products that include a choice of four picante sauces, jalapeno-flavored ketchup, relish and mayonnaise, New Braunfels mustard, Hoffbrau steak house salad dressing, fajita meat marinade and seasonings.

Two years ago, Jardine introduced another line of foods under the name Shotgun Willie's. The company also offers five gift box combinations ranging from $10 to $35.

The company this fall is doubling its space. It has signed a lease for more than 10,000 square feet of new office, kitchen and warehouse space next to its current facilities in a business park in southeast Austin.

Jardine intends to consolidate all food processing there, after years of farming out that work to commercial kitchens and small producers in places such as San Antonio and Dallas-Fort Worth.

STATE IN BRIEF

Veteran dies from injuries suffered when hit by ball

KINGSVILLE (AP) — A highly decorated soldier who served with the U.S. Army Special Forces in Vietnam has died of injuries he suffered when he was struck in the face with a softball.

Master Sgt. John R. Brisson, 38, who served as an instructor of military science at Texas A&I University, was hit in the face during an intramural softball game Oct. 14, a university spokesman said.

"Apparently he was on first base and running toward second base when he was hit in the face," said university public information officer Ron Hamm.

Brisson was first treated at Spohn Kleberg Memorial Hospital here, but was transferred to Memorial Medical Center in nearby Corpus Christi, where he died early Monday.

Brisson, a native of Plainfield, N.J., served in the U.S. Army for 18 years. He returned from Vietnam combat highly decorated, Hamm said. He had been an instructor in A&I's ROTC program since 1985.

Girl vanishes from fair

DALLAS (AP) — A North Carolina girl is missing from a private boarding school outing to the State Fair of Texas, and her father says he can only hope that she ran away.

"It's a strange thing to wish for," Robert Snider of Greensboro, N.C., said Monday. "Anything less than that is a far lesser choice."

Melissa Snider, 14, vanished Saturday while visiting the fair with other students at the Selwyn School in Denton.

After seeing an exhibit on Chinese art and culture, Melissa and some other girls asked to take a later bus back to Denton. When she failed to catch the last bus at 9:30 p.m., school officials notified authorities.

The headmaster of the Selwyn School, John Doncaster, said Melissa had a boyfriend back home, but was not the type to run away.

Her parents flew to Dallas on Sunday to assist in the search.

Firefighters battle tire fire

BAYTOWN (AP) — Firefighters were battling today a large blaze that erupted in a stack of tires near Baytown and created a black cloud of smoke over parts of the area, officials said.

Flames broke out at the Waste Recovery Inc., just outside of Baytown, shortly after midnight, said a Baytown Fire Department dispatcher who declined to give her name.

By 7 a.m., the fire was enough under control that some of the units could leave, but the blaze probably would burn for several hours more, officials said.

"It was a huge stack of tires," the dispatcher said. "Tires are extremely hard to put out." The tires were stacked 30 feet high in a 2,000-square-feet area, officials said.

The firefighters also had problems with gathering water, officials said. There are no fire hydrants near the company and the departments were having to truck water into the area, they said.

The cause of the fire has not been determined and there were no injuries, they said.

Mattox OKs medicine plan

AUSTIN (AP) — The attorney general approved Monday a proposed change in the way the Texas Department of Human Services furnishes drug products to those on Medicaid.

Under current policy the Medicaid recipients may receive a number of free prescriptions each month. The repartment reimbursed the providers of prescriptsion for the cost and pays a dispensing fee.

Under the new plan, the department would contract with distributors of frequently prescribed products to provide the products to pharmacies for use in filling Medicaid prescriptions. The depatment would continue to pay pharmacies a dispensing fee.

Marlin W. Johnston, DHS commissioner, said the new plan would result in lower drug prices under the direct state contracts as opposed to the prices usualy paid by retail pharmacies

Johnston said wholesale supplier alleged the state would be illegally supplanting them in the market in violation of anti-trust laws.

Attorney General Jim Mattox's legal opinion held that the new plan would not put the department in competition with private enterprise.

Authorities concerned by increased attacks on officers

DALLAS (AP) — Authorities are concerned by the growing number of attacks on police officers by criminals who were released early from prison.

A sniper attack on a squad car Friday night marked the 21st time this year that shots have been fired at a Dallas officer, compared to 12 such incidents over the same period last year, statistics show. Six officers have been hurt by gunfire, one more than last year.

"It is almost a sure bet that the next assault on an officer is going to be done by someone on parole, or fresh out of the pen," Deputy Police Chief Marlin Price said. "I would take that bet right now."

The number of assaults on officers rose from 239 last year to 269 in 1986, an increase of about 13 percent.

Another 43 officers have been threatened with a deadly weapon, up 10 from 1985.

Friday's sniper attack appeared to be a random act, Price said. A small-caliber bullet shattered the windshield of the squad car just as the officer pulled into a parking lot.

Police have no suspects, and all the officer could do is fill out a report and return to patrol, authorities said.

Price said the department is trying to reduce the risks to officers. Officers are being extensively trained in self-defense and in the use of a more sophisticated police baton.

"Hopefully, the PR-24 will reduce officer injury in scuffles and assaults," Price said. "However, there's not much we can do about outside influences, the predators of the city out there to do harm."

U.S. mulls retaliation for diplomats' expulsion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is nearing a decision to retaliate for the expulsion of five U.S. diplomats from Moscow on spying charges, U.S. officials say.

A meeting was held Monday at the White House. Among the measures considered was the expulsion of Soviet diplomats from their embassy here, said U.S. officials who declined to be identified.

An announcement is expected shortly, perhaps as early as today.

Another 25 Soviets who were working at the U.N. mission in New York were identified as intelligence agents last month and ordered to leave. The Soviets responded Sunday by accusing the five Americans of "impermissible activities" and giving them until Oct. 31 to depart from Moscow.

Usually, the two sides cool down after a round of expulsions. But the Reagan administration considers kicking out the Soviets in New York a separate issue.

Administration arms specialists also met Monday at the White House to put the finishing touches on a new package of proposals to present to Soviet negotiators in Geneva.

The proposals include a ban on U.S. and Soviet intermediate range nuclear missiles in Europe and a pledge to uphold the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty for 10 years, U.S. officials said.

The administration is proceeding on the basis of diplomatic hints from Moscow that the Soviets are willing to work out weapons reduction agreements despite their objections to "Star Wars," the U.S. strategic defense program.

Discussion of nuclear arms control measures broke down at the Iceland summit meeting Oct. 12 after Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev tried to limit Star Wars research to the laboratory.

His position was that testing and deployment of lasers, X-rays and other exotic technology is prohibited by the treaty since the intent would be to mount a defense against missiles.

The treaty severely limited radar and other defenses on the theory a potential aggressor would not launch a first strike if the nuclear response was likely to be devastating.

Since Reykjavik, however, some Soviet statements have indicated a more lenient stand on the U.S. anti-missile program.

"They will go on saying it must be a total package but that in the meantime we can negotiate," said a U.S. official speaking only on condition of anonymity.

When completed, the package will be put in the form of new instructions for Max M. Kampelman, the chief U.S. negotiator in Geneva. He would take the proposals to the Soviets at a meeting of the full delegations.

"There's still some sorting out, particularly on ballistic missiles," an official said. "But I don't know of any surprises."

Reagan proposed to Gorbachev that they ban ballistic missiles within 10 years. The issue is complicated by differences over definition and the fact that the two leaders did not discuss many details.

"There's no big hangup," another U.S. official said. He said American negotiators also would renew Reagan's proposed 50 percent reduction in long-range nuclear bombers, missiles and submarines over five years.

Gorbachev adopted a strict view of SDI at the summit because he thought Reagan might yield.

Ozone thinning linked to chemical process

WASHINGTON (AP) — Whatever is causing protective ozone to disappear over the South Pole, it probably isn't the sun and the wind, according to scientists on the frozen continent.

They said Monday they believe a chemical process is behind the puzzling, recently discovered drop in ozone concentrations every October. But they are not ready to blame man-made chemicals yet.

The Antarctic discoveries, confirmed earlier this year, set off a flurry of scientific and governmental activity because ozone is necessary to support life as we know it, and the "hole" was the first concrete evidence of damage to the ozone layer despite more than a decade of warnings from some scientists.

The ozone dropoff also appears to be occurring over the North Pole, another study has shown.

The formation of ozone — a pollutant at ground level — by ultra-violet rays high in the atmosphere keeps most of those rays from reaching the surface of the Earth, where they could be deadly to some life forms. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that each one percent decline in ozone at high altitudes means 200,000 more skin cancers around the globe every year.

In a telephone hookup from the U.S. base at McMurdo Sound to a news conference sponsored by the National Science Foundation, Susan Solomon, leader of a special expedition to study the October ozone drop in Antarctica, said she was "more concerned" than she had been before the expedition, because science has been "unable to come up with an explanation."

But she said her group believes it can rule out two theories put forward to compete with the chemical theory.

One of those two theories proposes that the 11-year solar cycle is somehow responsible, through triggering chemical reactions that have a cumulative effect. This would explain why the Antarctic "hole" did not appear before the mid-1970s.

The other postulates that slight changes in wind patterns resulting in an upward movement of air masses could be responsible.

The leading competitor of these two theories states that chlorofluorocarbon compounds used as refrigeration fluids are deleting ozone around the globe, through the release of chlorine from these long-lived molecules when they reach high altitudes.

AP Laserphoto

Dr. David Hofmann, left, and Jerry Harder, both of the University of Wyoming, prepare a balloon for launch during an ozone experiment at McMurdo Station in Antarctica recently. They are part of an expedition investigating the annual disappearance of much of the protective ozone layer over the South Pole.

However, none of the several computer models used by scientists who believe this theory predicted the October Antarctic "hole" — which is actually about a 40 percent decline in ozone concentration over much of the continent.

If the solar cycle were driving ozone down, large amounts of nitrogen dioxide should be found at altitudes where the ozone is disappearing — but "the nitrogen dioxide abundances inside the ozone hole are the lowest we have observed anywhere in the world," said Ms. Solomon, a chemist at the Boulder, Colo., lab of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

If changed wind patterns and rising air masses were the cause, nitrous oxide should be found in abundance. But that substance also is "extremely low inside the ozone hole." In addition, tracking of fine particles in the atmosphere by a University of Wyoming team on the expedition shows no evidence of the upward movement of air that would support the wind theory.

Though winds may play a role, "We believe that a chemical mechanism is fundamentally responsible for the formation of the hole."

"I am definitely not saying" that chlorofluorocarbons or man-made chemicals are the cause, she said in response to a question.

In December, major producing nations are meeting in Geneva to consider control measures for chlorofluorocarbons. Other nations refused to go along with a U.S. regulation that banned the chemicals as aerosol propellants in 1978.

Some findings suggest "that the ozone depletion may be associated with the springtime evaporation of polar stratospheric clouds," the scientists said in the consensus statement read by Ms. Solomon.

The fine ice and water particles in those clouds could provide sites for the complex chemical reactions involved in some theories of ozone depletion, some scientists have suggested.

Last month, a researcher with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said a preliminary study indicates an ozone dropoff also is occurring at the North Pole, although on a much smaller scale than in Antarctica.

The scientist, Don Heath, said his unpublished study shows ozone concentrations are declining 1.5 percent to 2 percent per year in the Artic, based upon satellite observations made from 1978 to 1984.

Military measures part of massive spending bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — From major actions such as a pay raise to narrower details such as wearing a yarmulke, Congress' new fiscal 1987 spending plan rules on a variety of issues affecting military personnel.

On the more sweeping side, Congress approved an across-the-board 3 percent pay hike starting Jan. 1, authorized the start of voluntary dental insurance coverage for dependents and ordered a change in regulations that will allow soldiers leaving active duty to join the National Guard and Reserves even though they are single parents.

It also ordered a 1 percent cut in the number of officers in the armed services and slashed by half the president's request to increase overall active-duty strength.

On the other hand, Congress weighed in with decisions on what day of the month soldiers should be paid, whether they can escape jury duty and whether they can wear religious items while in uniform.

The legislative branch also agreed to repeal a fiscal 1986 law governing the manner in which the Pentagon purchases alcohol for resale in military liquor stores. The Pentagon maintains repeal will increase the level of store profits used for military recreation programs.

These decisions are contained in the Defense Department's budget authorization bill or in the Pentagon's section of a massive $576 billion catchall government spending bill that provides money for the next year's operations.

Congress agreed to provide the Pentagon with budget authority totaling $291.9 billion in fiscal 1987, significantly below the $320.3 billion sought by President Reagan. But in scrutinizing big-ticket items to reduce the president's budget, the House and Senate also immersed themselves in a variety of personnel issues. For example:

— Religious items. The House had proposed authorizing servicemen to wear "neat and conservative" religious items such a yarmulkes while in uniform. The Senate balked, however, and the House retreated. The decision thus leaves intact a Supreme Court ruling from March 25 upholding the Pentagon's authority to ban a Jewish officer from wearing a yarmulke indoors while in uniform.

— Jury duty. The Congress heeded a plea from the Navy that military commanders be given the right to excuse military personnel from serving on juries in state or local courts. The Pentagon already had the right to exempt active-duty personnel from being called to federal court juries. Navy Secretary John F. Lehman told Congress in February the new authority, if granted, would be used only in cases in which a military unit's readiness would be adversely affected by a call for local jury duty.

— Pay dates. Next fall, the pay date for military personnel will shift from the last day of the month to the first day of the month. The change will take effect when the Sept. 30, 1987, pay check is moved to Oct. 1, 1987. The change offered Congress a one-time gimmick to save almost $3 billion by shifting salary payments from fiscal 1987 to fiscal 1988, which begins on Oct. 1, 1987.

The change will also provide a one-time tax break to military personnel, however, when it comes to reporting income to the Internal Revenue Service for calendar 1987. The paycheck that servicemen would normally receive on Dec. 31, 1987, won't be distributed until Jan. 1, 1988, reducing 1987 taxable income by that amount.

As for basic salary levels, Reagan had proposed a 4 percent pay hike for military personnel in fiscal 1987, but the House balked at that figure. A House-Senate conference committee compromised on 3 percent, making it effective Jan. 1. The hike also will apply to basic allowances for quarters and subsistence and drill pay.

Congress also refused to accept the president's request to increase active-duty strength by 13,730 individuals, cutting that figure back to 6,880. Virtually all of the increase — 5,700 — is for the Navy to help man new ships.

On the other hand, Congress ordered the Pentagon to reduce the cadre of active-duty officers by 1 percent — or about 3,100 — during fiscal 1987.

The new dental insurance coverage for dependents is not expected to become available until next summer. But the plan calls for a monthly premium of no more than $10 to cover the cost of preventive, diagnostic and emergency dental services for the children and other dependents of servicemen.

The new provision involving single parents will reverse current policy by making such individuals eligible to join the National Guard and Reserves.

Although single parents are not recruited for active duty, the Pentagon allows a man or woman to remain on active duty if he or she subsequently becomes a single parent. Once out of the active force, however, the individual was not allowed to join the Guard or Reserve.

Congress has now ordered a pilot program for the next two years allowing such enlistments, as long as the individual signs a written statement specifying that child care is available in the event of a mobilization.

Studies: AIDS spreading by 'ordinary sex'

By PHILIP J. HILTS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Health officials are growing more concerned about the spread of AIDS by male-female sexual relations because of a series of new studies showing that it is an easy and increasingly frequent way to transmit the deadly virus.

Their concern is a change from several years ago, when the major mystery of AIDS was whether it would spread beyond the "high risk" groups — chiefly homosexual men and intravenous drug users. Now researchers say the question is how far it will spread among heterosexuals.

The new worry about heterosexual spread stems from a variety of recently completed studies:

— The proportion of cases in the United States that could be conclusively demonstrated to have come from heterosexual relations has risen from 1 percent a few years ago to 4 percent.

— In Haiti, the disease has shifted away from homosexuals and drug abusers, and 89 percent of the new cases are attributed to sex between men and women, according to Warren D. Johnson, chief of the division of international medicine at Cornell University Medical College. Two and a half years ago 71 percent of the cases reported were in people classified in high-risk groups.

— In a study of 22 military families in which one spouse is infected with AIDS, in eight of the cases, or 36 percent, the infected spouses passed the infection on to their mates, according to a study by Major Robert Redfield of Walter Reed Army Institute of Research.

— A study in Florida found AIDS passed from one infected spouse to his or her uninfected partner in about 58 percent of the 45 couples studied.

— A study by the federal Centers for Disease Control of the spouses of people who got AIDS through blood transfusions found that 13 percent, 9 of 70, passed it on to their partners.

— A study in New York of spouses of AIDS patients showed that 37 percent, 21 of 57, became infected through ordinary sex with their partners.

Finally, a mysteriously high occurrence of AIDS in Belle Glade, Fla., is no longer a mystery. The 79 AIDS cases reported in the area is an incidence 30 times higher than the national rate. An extensive study by the CDC showed that the high rate there can be attributed chiefly to transmission by ordinary sex.

Looking at Haiti and Africa, where AIDS is predominantly a heterosexual disease, "we have to ask, could we be seeing the pattern of the future here?" said Thomas Quinn of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. "Now, we have to raise our eyebrows, and say maybe. Maybe we are. We must educate heterosexuals about how to avoid getting this infection," he said.

"We have no recent experience of a deadly infectious disease epidemic," said Major Robert Redfield, who did some of the earliest and most influential studies on heterosexual transmission for the Army. "Because we don't remember what it's like, we want to deny that it's possible, deny that it could reach us."

One researcher, Robert L. Stoneburner, of the city health department in New York City, said that he does not expect to see a major spread of the disease among heterosexuals.

Relatively few cases of heterosexual transmission have been found in New York, he said. The disease is passed more readily among heterosexuals in Haiti and Africa because of factors, possibly ill health or infection with another virus, that makes the disease move differently than in the U.S.

If heterosexual transmission was easy, he said he would expect the partners of drug abusers to have a high rate of infection by now. This has not been the case, he said.

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome is a viral disease that attacks the body's immune system, leaving patients vulnerable to numerous other infections. It is almost uniformly fatal. It is passed by sexual intercourse as well as by oral and anal sex and through infected blood.

Most researchers interviewed believe the difference among countries is accidental. In Africa, there is relatively little homosexuality and relatively little drug abuse, so the disease has been transmitted widely by the another main path — heterosexual sex.

Wiesel leaves for Soviet Union

BOSTON (AP) — Nobel Peace Prize-winner Elie Wiesel says he hopes his visit to the Soviet Union will give him an opportunity to try to persuade that nation's leader to allow Jews and dissidents to leave.

Wiesel planned to leave for the Soviet Union today, one week after he was awarded the Nobel for his writings on human rights issues. He said he has asked for a meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, but that Soviet authorities "keep you waiting until the last minute to let you know."

The purpose of the weeklong trip is to invite the Soviet Union to a conference in Washington on non-Jewish victims of the Holocaust and to talk to Gorbachev about human rights abuses, Wiesel said Monday.

"I would like to see if it's possible to find a common language."

Among the dissidents he plans to lobby for are Vladimir Slepak and his wife Maria, and Andrei Sakharov, whom Weisel called a hero.

Sakharov, a nuclear physicist who won the the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975 for his work in human rights, lives in internal exile in Gorky, a city 250 miles from Moscow.

Ex-IRA member to face charges in England

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A former Irish Republican Army member was flown to England on Monday to face charges of murdering a London constable, U.S. authorities said.

William Joseph Quinn left Travis Air Force Base aboard a Royal Air Force plane after the British withdrew bombing conspiracy charges that would have delayed his extradition, officials said.

Quinn, a San Francisco resident and U.S. citizen, is charged with the shooting death of police constable Stephen Tibble on a London street in February 1975. British officials said Tibble was shot three times while pursuing a suspect.

Last week, the Supreme Court denied a hearing on Quinn's contention that the shooting was a political offense, exempt from extradition under U.S. law and a treaty between the United States and Great Britain.

Important offices

In addition to the positions of governor and U.S. representative of the 21st Congressional District, Midland County voters also will be electing a number of other state officials when they go to the polls Nov. 4.

Among those officials to be elected will be lieutenant governor, attorney general, comptroller of public accounts, treasurer, commissioner of the General Land Office and commissioner of agriculture.

Lieutenant Governor

This is an extremely important position since this individual acts as governor when the elected governor is absent and otherwise serves as president of the Senate. This election pits Democrat William P. Hobby Jr. against Republican David Davidson and Libertarian Bill Howell. Hobby has performed the job effectively for the past 14 years and should be re-elected to another term.

Because of the important day-to-day governmental functions of this office, it needs to be filled by someone with the stability and quiet effectiveness Hobby has shown over the years. Some of his detractors have claimed that Hobby is out of step with public sentiment and that he has become too powerful. The concerns may be justified to a degree. After the length of time Hobby has been in office, any official faces the danger of forgetting the concerns of the people who put him in office.

Hobby should keep that in mind, but his background and experience undeniably make him the logical choice in this race.

Attorney General

Republican nominee Roy Barrera Jr. says that the state's residents should be able to look up to their attorney general. He also says that incumbent Democrat Jim Mattox's record of defending the state in court is questionable enough that a change is needed. We agree. After all, that's essentially what Texans do when they elect an attorney general — they hire a lawyer whose personal demeanor and legal abilities they like and respect.

Barrera is young, articulate and obviously qualified for this important position, currently serving as a state district court judge in San Antonio. He also faces a difficult uphill battle, being one of the first two Hispanic-surnamed candidates seeking statewide election in Texas.

Mattox's tendency to play everything stemming from his office for political effect is tiresome. Only one example is how he used his campaign to track down fathers who were negligent in paying their child support and then played it for media effect. A good cause without doubt, but he obviously wanted to play it to the limit. He's obviously a grandstander.

Barrera gets good marks from the local legal community and from the Dallas Bar Association poll, which picked him over Mattox 1,395 votes to 598. That should be indication enough that he has respect among his peers for his professional activities. We believe he deserves the chance.

Land Commissioner

Incumbent Democrat Garry Mauro has been doing all the right things in his first term — following up on his campaign pledge to operate the land office like a business, looking after the interests of veterans, keeping in touch with the public he is serving.

A lot has been made of his Republican opponent's name identification — M.D. Anderson, same as the Houston hospital. But we believe the issue is in doing the job right, which is what Mauro has been doing. We believe he should be re-elected because with management of the state's 22.1 million acres of land at stake, we're in favor of having someone with proven ability in this position.

Agriculture Commissioner

The agriculture industry is in a state of change and in that regard it will be important to keep a commissioner in office who can direct the future of the industry in this state. Incumbent Democrat Jim Hightower has received mixed reviews during his first term, but his interest in finding new markets around the nation and the world must be pursued as must his efforts to find and develop new high-value crops. That seems the only logical way out of agriculture's dilemma.

Republican nominee Bill Powers, executive vice president of the Texas Poultry Federation, hasn't offered any proposals significantly better, in our opinion, than what Hightower has been advocating. We believe Hightower should be given another term.

Comptroller, Treasurer

Comptroller of Public Accounts Bob Bullock and Treasurer Ann W. Richards, both Democrats, face token opposition from Libertarian Party candidates George Meeks and Robert F. Reid, respectively. We believe the two incumbents should each win another term.

Bullock has handled the duties of his office in outstanding fashion, providing the Legislature and Gov. Mark White with important information relating to the state's financial crisis as it approached and developed — even if the information was not seized upon and used in the best possible fashion. Bullock's job, of course, only goes so far.

Still, it's important to have as comptroller an individual who can issue crucial financial data as it is needed and Bullock has proven more than able in that regard.

Mrs. Richards also has performed the duties of state treasurer in a capable manner. While the position of state treasurer is far from the most visible, it is an important position that needs capable, qualified service. Mrs. Richards obviously has been offering that kind of work.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1797, the U.S. Navy frigate Constitution, also known as "Old Ironsides," was launched in Boston Harbor.

In 1805, the Battle of Trafalgar took place off the coast of Spain. A British fleet commanded by Adm. Horatio Nelson defeated a combined French and Spanish fleet, destroying Napoleon's plan to invade England. Nelson, however, was killed.

In 1917, members of the 1st Division of the U.S. Army training in Luneville, France, became the first Americans to see action on the front lines of World War I.

In 1944, during World War II, U.S. troops captured Aachen, the first large German city to fall to the Allies.

Ten years ago: Saul Bellow won the 1976 Nobel Prize for Literature, the first American so honored since John Steinbeck in 1962. And the Cincinnati Reds completed their sweep of the New York Yankees in the World Series, winning the fourth game 7-2.

Thought for today: "Mediocre men often have the most acquired knowledge." — Claude Bernard, French physiologist (1813-1878).

VOA update already proving wasteful

WASHINGTON — The Voice of America, which transmits news and opinion around the globe in 42 languages, has barely begun a $1.3 billion modernization program, but investigators are already sniffing out waste and mismanagement.

Jack Anderson

Only about $11 million has been spent so far on the wide-ranging modernization, but the U.S. Information Agency's inspector general has expanded his investigation from the engineers' designs for the improvements to include the improvements themselves.

One investigator said auditors have uncovered "major problems with the management of the VOA modernization project ... a messy, nasty problem (that reflects) a management approach which is not effective."

Few would deny the need for modernizing the radio network's crumbling facilities. Most of the equipment in the Washington, D.C., studios broadcast President Eisenhower's messages 30 or more years ago. In Europe, some of the Voice's hardware was captured from the Germans in World War II.

Acoustical tiles made of asbestos line the walls and ceilings of broadcast booths. The main building in Washington smells musty because of poor ventilation. In the central recording and master control rooms, toxic PCBs drip from the wires, forming puddles on the concrete floor.

The question is not whether the money is needed, but whether it is being wisely spent. Hundreds of pages of internal VOA documents obtained by our reporter David Davis make clear that it is not. For example:

— The design of news broadcasting studios was contracted out, even though the agency recently hired engineers to do the work in-house.

— Expensive equipment was paid for without being tested — and was later found to be faulty. In some cases, the equipment was stored for so long that when it was finally determined to be defective the warranties had expired.

— On the other hand, VOA spent thousands of dollars repairing equipment that was still under the manufacturer's warranty.

— Major purchases were made from companies that later went out of business and sold off their spare parts inventory in the process of liquidation. In one case as a result, technicians had to be called more than 60 times in a single month to repair high-speed tape-duplicating machines purchased from a company that is now defunct. In fact, the machines break down so frequently that the old ones they replaced are kept on standby in another room.

— Installation of the computerized master switching control system — the heart of the modernization effort — is more than six months behind schedule. The equipment for this vital project sat unused for more than three years; meanwhile, the agency loses $1 million a month because of the delay.

— A $185,000 mobile studio van elicited this complaint from the crew following one recent assignment: "The equipment in the van proved inadequate for dubbing and for reel-to-reel editing and cutting-in inserts. The wall-mounted playback equipment proved unmanageable. The broadcasters ended up editing cassettes in their (hotel) rooms. ... The generator malfunctioned, bringing everything to a stop."

— VOA spent tens of thousands of dollars correcting contractors' mistakes. For example, after a contractor had supposedly completed four radio studios and two production booths for $1.5 million, two agency administrators asked for an additional $69,000 to $94,000 worth of equipment (not counting labor costs), saying it was work "which must be done before these facilities can be considered fully operational and ready for program and recording use."

STOP THE WORLD ...: Economy-minded Senate Foreign Relations Committee staffers have dreamed up a novel solution to the costly process of trying to make American embassies safe from terrorist attacks. Essentially, they recommend throwing in the towel. Since they believe there's no guaranteed way to keep determined terrorists at bay, they suggest reducing the number of embassies in dangerous areas of the world and making do with "regional" outposts. One senator has even proposed — jokingly — that dangerous embassies be closed and diplomatic relations be conducted by periodic, unannounced visits. Foggy Bottom is not amused.

'Mushy' campaign greets Tarheel voters

ALBEMARLE, N.C. — Republicans gathered here for barbecue and oratory by appointive Sen. James Broyhill delivered their first and only spontaneous cheer 17 minutes into his speech when he derided critics of the Reykjavik summit as the "blame-America-first crowd."

Rowland Evans

"They're blaming the wrong man," he declared. "They need to blame Gorbachev." But Broyhill's Democratic foe, former governor Terry Sanford, supports Ronald Reagan's summit performance (citing long-ago bipartisanship by Sens. Tom Connally and Arthur Vandenberg) and does not oppose his Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). Nor did Broyhill's comments here upbraid Democratic opposition to SDI or even mention the new weapons system that the president wants to make a national issue.

Robert Novak

So, Reykjavik has not energized this Tarheel campaign that even by the tepid standards of 1986 is extraordinarily soporific — a Democratic advantage in a close race that could determine Senate control. A North Carolina trending Republican and conservative must choose between two candidates who project paid television images of bloodless moderates. Given that choice, Carolinians could revert to ancestral Democratic habits.

The cause goes beyond national Republican mushiness to the split inside the state GOP as North Carolina has become a two-party state: traditional Republicans (now led by Governor James Martin) vs. the right-wing Congressional Club of North Carolina, sponsor of Sen. Jesse Helms's rise. The Club could not block the governor's men from nominating longtime Congressman Broyhill to replace Sen. John East, a Club product who first retired because of illness and then committed suicide.

The soft approach by Broyhill and Sanford is a reaction against personal invective in 1984 when Helms was re-elected. But Republican strategy roots run deeper. The Broyhill campaign has not asked the Conservative Club for help with the "Jessiecrats" — white conservative Democrats — of East Carolina. "They want to drive a spike through the Club's heart," one non-Club Republican told us.

The result: Issues and ideology have been ignored on paid television. Both candidates come across as pleasant, elderly gentlemen claiming exemplary public service — over 23 years in the House by Broyhill, 59; a faintly remembered (1961-'65) term as governor, followed by a long stint as Duke University president, by Sanford, 69.

Sanford's TV spots depict his past as a young FBI agent (photographed with J. Edgar Hoover) and decorated (Bronze Star) World War II paratrooper. Broyhill's commercials show him helping aged and handicapped constituents and advising Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole.

The mush helps Sanford. In his long, fruitless quest for national Democratic leadership (for president in 1972 and 1976, for national chairman last year), Sanford was a Southerner calling himself a mainstream Democrat. Today he runs for the Senate as a Democrat calling himself a mainstream Southerner unhappy with George McGovern, Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro on the national ticket.

One batch of Broyhill commercials — no longer being aired — did show voters-in-the-street branding Sanford as a McGovern-Mondale "liberal." But curiously, the one issue they raised was antique: Sanford's sponsorship as governor of a sales tax on food. Sanford vigorously defended the "food tax" as necessary to finance the state's schools — a decision justified by polling data.

Broyhill's current commercials astound politicians of both parties. Five spots show portions of a Broyhill campaign speech in Hickory, N.C., with cutaways to a predominantly elderly audience applauding him. Although Broyhill has more money and air time, he has no more message than Sanford's call for "courage."

The few voters who actually see the candidates get a little more action. Speaking in Gastonia to a small Democratic crowd, Sanford complained about Broyhill's revival of the "Food-Tax Terry" label: "He had to look back 21 years to find anything he could pick on me about .... His record is what ought to be examined. The only trouble is I didn't find any record."

At the Albemarle dinner two hours later, Broyhill spanked Sanford for a high school commencement speech this year calling the U.S. "one of the bullies" in the "world schoolyard" and not "setting a moral example." But such research on a lifetime of liberal Sanford utterances does not find its way into the real campaign of TV spots.

Broyhill leads, but maybe not by enough to offset Democratic turnout. SDI is Broyhill's chance to seize a transcendent issue, and his managers are considering last-minute commercials. But if the mellow moderation of this campaign persists, voters will just see Reykjavik turned into more mush.

CHARLEY REESE

Freedom requires responsibility for actions

Watching the flap over the alleged U.S. disinformation campaign against Libya, I couldn't help recalling the words of Lev Navrosov, a Soviet dissident who came to America in the 1970s.

Charley Reese

Lev stood before a group of doctors and their guests, peering through thick glasses, and said, "You must not try to defeat the Soviets bureaucracy to bureaucracy. Their bureaucracies are better than your bureaucracies. You must use your strength: freedom."

Lev is right, of course. Our strength is our freedom. It is the one thing the Soviet regime fears more than our missiles, certainly more than the CIA. The United States should never practice, has no need to practice disinformation. The only real reason people ever lie about anything is because they fear the truth and we must not ever fear the truth.

There are people in our government, and not just in the Reagan administration, and there are people in business, in universities, in think tanks and in foundations who think remarkably similar to the men in the Kremlin. They think it is nothing more than a contest of power, that the way to win is to beat them at their own game. Like the men in the Kremlin, they think man can do anything and must do everything because there is no God.

That's why, when you look at the world since 1945, you see that communism has been generally successful and the democracies have been generally unsuccessful. When the people who run the democracies share the same basic premise as the people who run the communist governments, victory for communism is certain. Of the two, the communist has the greater conviction, the greater willingness to live and die for his convictions.

The man who says America is better than the Soviet Union because we have more refrigerators and cars is no different than the man who says we are better than the Soviets because we can build more sophisticated weapons. In both instances, the men are seeing the contest as nothing more than a contest between two materialistic systems.

This is what leads men to think we can protect our national interests by engaging in subversion and propaganda. To argue that freedom can only be defended by manipulating other people with bribes, lies, and spy tricks is to confess that you really have no faith in freedom or in human beings.

This same lack of faith in freedom is what leads politicians to think they must win elections by manipulating people with deceptive campaign ads. This same lack of faith in freedom is what leads others to shrug off what the politicians are doing or even condone it.

The messages are the same: The people are too dumb to understand so they must be tricked into doing what is right; if you leave it up to the people to decide, they won't do the right thing. Such thinking is the foundation of totalitarianism no matter on which side of the Iron Curtain you find it.

The people should consider a lie as a heinous political crime and should be intolerant of liars. We should hold that as a base minimum qualification for everyone in public life. We cannot all be wise. We cannot always know what the truth is. We cannot always agree on the right course of action. But we can all be honest, we can all disavow any conscious effort to manipulate each other by withholding the truth or distorting it.

Distrust of the people and the lying and manipulation such distrust breeds is a cancer that will kill freedom just as surely as a salvo of SS-18 missiles.

Do we really believe in human freedom or do we believe in maintaining our privileged position? Do we really believe in self-government or do we believe the people are so incompetent they must be cared for by elites? Are we willing to accept risks of free people making mistakes or are we Utopians convinced that there is only one right answer and no one must be allowed to disagree?

Are we brave enough to be free because to be free means to accept the responsibility for our own lives? President Reagan should ask himself and his Security Council people these questions.

Conservative senior citizens' group draws fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — When 86-year-old Claude Pepper asks Miami voters to return him to Congress next month, the legendary Florida Democrat will have to overcome the stigma of a 20 percent rating from the National Alliance of Senior Citizens.

Twenty percent? From a senior citizens group? For "Mr. Senior Citizen"?

Has the dean of Capitol Hill changed his stripes?

Hardly.

Neither has the arch-conservative National Alliance, which for the past 12 years has been giving liberal politicians and rival elderly groups fits with its congressional ratings.

To score with the National Alliance, it does no good to vote for Social Security cost-of-living increases, lower Medicare premiums or similar stands that usually win points from lobbyists for the aged.

Instead, the National Alliance uses a litmus test that rates lawmakers on such issues as confirming Edwin Meese as attorney general, eliminating operators on congressional elevators, financing "Star Wars" and providing aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Pepper, who has gotten zero ratings from the Alliance in the past, scored a 20 this time because of his votes for research on President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative and for aid to the Contras.

But he asks, "What's that got to do with senior citizens? The subjects they chose as the criteria seem to be totally irrelevant. I don't think they in any sense of the word represent or are spokesmen for the senior citizens of this country. It is generally the antithesis of the senior citizen organizations."

Pepper is a strong favorite to win re-election, with or without the approval of the National Alliance.

But its endorsements have proved controversial in other races, particularly where incumbents have touted their high standing with the National Alliance as a sign of concern for the elderly.

In Washington state, where freshman Republican Sen. Slade Gorton is fighting for re-election against Democrat Brock Adams, the former congressman and Carter Cabinet member, Gorton issued a press release last month to trumpet his 90 percent rating from the Alliance. He also cited it in a televised debate.

Adams counters that Gorton got a zero rating last year from the National Council of Senior Citizens, a group with ties to organized labor that takes a far more liberal view about aging issues.

The council was created in 1961 to lobby for passage of Medicare and draws most of its 4½ million members from the ranks of blue-collar unions that urge retirees to sign up. The council is a Washington-based group of senior citizen's clubs with a $54 million annual budget, most of it from a federal contract to run a jobs program for low-income older Americans.

For years, its leadership has been charging the National Alliance is a "sham" that does little more than rate the Congress and confer "Golden Age Awards" on its favorites.

"They are a group that only surfaces during election years," said Eric Shulman, the council's legislative director. "Its main purpose is to confuse senior citizens as to...who the legitimate representatives of their interests are."

Curt Clinkscales, director of the rival group, dismisses the allegations as "flat lies" and "smut" and says, "It's open season on the Alliance."

He has grown accustomed to answering such charges ever since a Jack Anderson column in 1976 described the National Alliance as a "political sideshow" run on a shoestring budget out of the back of a tailor shop in Georgetown.

"We started off with humble beginnings. We didn't have any money," acknowledges Clinkscales, 39, who founded the organization in 1974 when he was fresh out of Georgetown University.

But today, he said, its budget is "in the range of $4 million" and it claims a membership of more than 2.2 million people 55 and older, who pay $1, $2 or $5 a year in dues. It has offices in suburban Arlington, Va.

Its membership has rocketed upwards in recent years, thanks to television commercials for a Medi-gap insurance policy available only to Alliance members. The ads' pitchman is actor Harry Morgan from the television show "MASH."

Clinkscales says he draws no pay as the alliance's national director. He makes his living with a direct mail firm, CLCO Inc., and other activities, including selling mailing lists. He formerly was on the executive committee on the National Conservative Political Action Committee.

The Alliance has a staff of five. Its president, Virginia Aubrey, used to run the bookstore at Georgetown. One board member, Philip A. Guarino, 80, is special assistant to the chairman of the Republican National Committee for senior citizens.

Von Bulow : Wife drinking before coma

NEW YORK (AP) — Claus von Bulow, in his first sworn testimony about his heiress wife's illness, said she was drinking and argumentative the night before she first fell into a coma, but he denied trying to kill her.

"Did you, on that occasion, on that evening, or the next day, administer drugs or insulin in an attempt to harm your wife?" an attorney for von Bulow's stepchildren asked.

"I did not," von Bulow replied.

Von Bulow was acquitted in Rhode Island last year of trying to murder his wife, Martha "Sunny" von Bulow. He had been convicted in 1982 of attempting to kill her by injecting her with insulin, but the conviction was overturned.

Mrs. von Bulow's son and daughter by a previous marriage, Alexander Auersperg and Annie Laurie Auersperg Kniessl, have filed a $56 million lawsuit against von Bulow, charging that the Danish socialite tried to defraud and kill their mother for her money.

Von Bulow has filed a $20 million federal countersuit against the Auerspergs.

Von Bulow, 59, did not take the witness stand at either of his two trials. His first testimony under oath came Monday in a sworn statement to his stepchildren's attorney, Michael Armstrong.

In the statement, von Bulow denied causing the first of two seizures that rendered his wife comatose in 1979 and in 1980. She recovered from the first coma, but doctors say the second is permanent.

Reporters were not admitted to the daylong questioning at Armstrong's office, but copies of the transcript were obtained by The Associated Press and other news organizations.

Responding to Armstrong's questions, von Bulow described the events at his wife's Newport, R.I., home Dec. 26, 1979, the night before she slipped into her first coma.

He described holiday festivities of gift-giving and dining on turkey, caviar and eggnog that were marred by tensions among his wife, the heiress of a Pittsburgh utilities fortune, her daughter and himself.

He said his wife had as many as a dozen servings of eggnog.

"Was it a matter of routine for Mrs. von Bulow to drink 10 or 12 eggnogs in the course of an afternoon?" asked Armstrong.

"Certainly not," said von Bulow. "My wife drank very rarely in the course of any given year."

He described his wife as noticeably uncoordinated and slurring her words by evening when he and and Auersperg helped her to her bedroom.

"Is that a customary reaction that she had to taking liquor, that her voice would become slurred?" the lawyer asked.

Von Bulow said it was, and added that anger was too.

"Anger, yes, combined with aggravation in her expression of what she felt was wrong with her and her own life and those in her immediate surroundings, including certainly myself," said von Bulow.

LaRouche supporters plead innocent to charges

BOSTON (AP) — Ten supporters of extremist Lyndon H. LaRouche face a December trial on charges they helped finance his long-shot presidential bids with $1 million in fraudulent credit card billings.

Six defendants pleaded innocent Monday to the charges contained in an Oct. 6 indictment. The four others remain fugitives, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel I. Small.

According to the 117-count indictment, the defendants and five LaRouche-affiliated fund-raising groups were linked to a scheme in which more than $1 million was billed to the credit card numbers of more than 1,000 people who had been solicited for donations.

LaRouche political committees and corporations in Boston, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Chicago, Houston and Los Angeles illegally raised money for LaRouche's 1984 presidential race, the indictment charged.

Entering innocent pleas before U.S. Magistrate Robert Collings were Jeffrey Steinberg, 39, and his wife, Michelle, 36, of Leesburg, Va.; Richard Black, 37, of Quincy; Elliot Greenspan of Ridgefield Park, N.J.; Michael Billington, 31, of Hamilton, Va., and Roy Frankhouser, 47, of Reading, Pa.

The Steinbergs have been detained on the orders of a U.S. magistrate in Alexandria, Va., and the others who entered the plea are free on bail.

The four at large are Richard Sanders, 44, Michael Gelber, 35, Charles Park, 36, and Paul Goldstein, 37.

Sanders, Gelber, Park and Billington, identified as fund-raisers in LaRouche's Boston office, were charged with 115 counts of wire fraud.

Gelber, Sanders and Park also were charged with conspiracy to obstruct justice.

NATION in brief

Board to find 'neutral' site for Hasidic students

NEW YORK (AP) — The Board of Education has promised to find a neutral site for remedial classes for Hasidic pupils after officials removed doors that had kept the religious students separate from others.

Parents of Public School 16's pupils said the doors, which blocked access to classrooms that would be used to teach students from the nearby Beth Rachel religious school, resulted in racial segregation. Most students at the Brooklyn public school are black or Hispanic.

Board President Robert Wagner and Schools Chancellor Nathan Quinones said in a statement Monday that the corridor doors were removed during the weekend because they "have unfortunately become a legal and symbolic barrier."

Despite the difficulties for all parties "we still have an obligation, both moral and legal, to offer these remedial services to all the children who need them," they said. "We intend to do all that we can to fulfill that obligation."

Wagner and Quinones said there was a possibility of a neutral site for the Beth Rachel program that "would be more convenient for the students involved," but they did not name the location.

Owner thought he'd die

MAYWOOD, Ill. (AP) — A gas station owner on trial for violating a Chicago suburb's ban on handguns testified he thought he was going to die when armed robbers held him up at gunpoint.

Don Bennett, 43, told jurors he thought "it was all over" when one of two robbers forced him to lie on the floor of his Oak Park service station and stuck a gun in his ear.

"The guy laid him on the ground and said if he moved, he'd blow his head off," said defense attorney Michael Goggin.

Bennett was robbed of $1,200 in cash and jewelry during the March holdup. He followed the gunmen through an alley and fired at their car with a .45-caliber handgun, but they escaped. No one was hit by gunfire.

Bruno Graziano, assistant village attorney for Oak Park, told the jury Monday, the opening day of the trial, that Bennett had violated the town's ban against private citizens owning or carrying hand guns.

AIDS affecting transplants

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Organs from homosexuals will not be used for transplant because of concern about spreading AIDS, officials at Michigan's three organ and tissue procurement agencies say.

"A homosexual could still donate, but we would not utilize the tissue for other than research purposes," said Richard Fuller, chief executive officer of the Michigan Eye Bank and Transplantation Center in Ann Arbor.

He added that the center may reject a donation for research if there is a risk to medical technicians removing the organ.

Officials of the Organ Procurement Agency of Michigan in Ann Arbor and the Michigan Tissue Bank in Lansing said although they have no formal policy, they would reject donor organs from homosexuals, The Grand Rapids Press reported Monday.

None of the agencies plans to screen the lifestyles of donors.

Mets have backs against The Wall

World Series

BOSTON (AP) — If ever there was a home-field advantage in the World Series, the Boston Red Sox have it tonight at Fenway Park.

They have a 2-0 lead, the fans on their side and designated hitter Don Baylor back in the lineup.

All the New York Mets have are their backs against The Wall.

"Now we can play with our lineup, the club that got us here," Boston Manager John McNamara said. "We don't have to mess around with things like having our pitchers bunt."

BAYLOR, WHO hit 31 homers and drove in 94 runs, did not play in New York, the victim of a new rule that does not allow the DH in games played in the National League park.

But he will be back in the No. 5 spot tonight as the series moves to the American League site.

"It'll be nice to get back in there and do my job," Baylor said before hitting a few balls over the imposing 37-foot left-field wall at Fenway Park during a Monday workout.

The Mets were supposed to practice Monday, but did not. Pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre, whose staff got racked for 18 hits in a 9-3 loss Sunday night, said the team wanted a day off "to evaluate the position we're in."

"I think maybe we've under-evaluated the Boston Red Sox a little bit," he said.

The Mets, the winningest team in baseball this year, now find themselves in a situation that is serious and getting close to desperate.

New York Manager Dave Johnson, who said before the series started that he would not rush his young pitchers back on three-days rest, has changed his mind.

After left-hander Bob Ojeda pitches tonight, Ron Darling will make a rare start on three-days rest in Game 4. Dwight Gooden is then scheduled to work on three-days rest for the first time in his major-league career in Game 5 — if that one is necessary.

"It might be a bit of a gamble with Dwight," Stottlemyre admitted.

McNamara, meanwhile, has done the opposite with his rotation, pushing everyone back a day.

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd will pitch tonight, and Al Nipper, who has not started since Oct. 4, will pitch Game 4 Wednesday night. Bruce Hurst, the Game 1 winner, would follow on four-days rest, and then it will be Roger Clemens, also with four days off.

"The decision was based on being up 2-0," McNamara said. "We can do what we want now."

What the Red Sox want to do is bury the Mets, and Boyd thinks they have a good chance against Ojeda, who did not enjoy the close confines of the "Green Monster" when he pitched for Boston.

"We used to talk in the outfield. I remember 'O' saying he didn't throw sliders down-and-in to righties," Boyd said of Ojeda.

"That kind of thing broke him down a bit. He wasn't afraid to say it."

Ojeda said the wall used to intimidate him, but "you can't dwell on it."

"The main thing is you can't walk people. If you give up a walk, then a bomb and then a wall-ball, you're in trouble."

OJEDA SAID he had not talked to many of his teammates about playing in the cozy ballpark.

"Nobody has really asked me too much," Ojeda said. "They're more worried about winning."

Tonight, the Mets will have to contend with an unfamiliar ballpark, Baylor and some rabid fans.

Boston's victories, along with cold weather, helped take the home crowd out of the games at Shea Stadium. But that won't be the case tonight as the Fenway Park throng greets its team, trying to win its first World Series since 1918.

The Mets will use left-handed hitting Danny Heep as their designated hitter. Heep hit five home runs with 33 runs batted in in part-time duty this season, not much compared to Baylor's production.

"I'm already late to school," Baylor said. "I'm ready."

Denver quarterback John Elway (7) tries to escape the grip of New York Jet Mark Gastineau without success Monday night in NFL football game. Denver fell from the ranks of the unbeaten in a 22-10 loss.

Denver finally joins beaten mortals

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — From the very beginning, it was clear that the New York Jets were ready to do something special.

What they did was shut down the NFL's highest-scoring team, ram the ball forward on the ground against the league's best rushing defense, and generally dominate the Denver Broncos in a 22-10 victory Monday night.

The win upped the Jets' record to 6-1 for the first time ever and kept them two games ahead of New England in the AFC East. It was the first loss for Denver, the NFL's last unbeaten team, which leads the AFC West by one game over Seattle. The Broncos host the Seahawks Sunday.

"You get out quick and get some points and you can control the game," Jets quarterback Pat Ryan said.

So does an unyielding defense. The Jets struck for all of their points in the first half and allowed the Broncos a mere 24 yards of total offense and two first downs in the first 30 minutes.

"It was awfully close to perfect," defensive end Barry Bennett said of the opening half. "We'd get them 1-2-3 and punt, then our offense took it and scored."

Denver ran nine plays, including two punts, in the first quarter. The Jets marched 65 yards in 12 plays to a 1-yard touchdown dive by Johnny Hector and 56 yards in 10 plays to a 27-yard field goal by Pat Leahy in the opening period.

"I've got to take my hat off to the Jets," Broncos Coach Dan Reeves said. "They did a great job, controlled the tempo of the game, jumped out to an early lead and put it to us."

The second quarter wasn't much better for Denver, which fell behind 22-0 when Leahy added a 25-yard field goal following a 14-play, 49-yard march. Ken O'Brien replaced an injured Ryan and hit Wesley Walker with a 23-yard scoring pass, and Bobby Humphery sacked Denver quarterback John Elway in the end zone for a safety.

"They did a lot of things right," Broncos linebacker Tom Jackson said, "especially in the first half. Sometimes you run into a good football team and they play better than you. That's what happened tonight."

Nothing good happened for Elway, who left the game in the fourth quarter after being hit on a scramble and suffering a possible concussion. He finished 13-for-28 for 145 yards and was sacked five times.

"It's frustrating to play against him because he can hurt you by passing or running," Bennett said. "He's a two-dimensional player and we tried to get after him. You don't let a guy like him get out there because he's tougher than nails when he's on the run."

The only effective running being done Monday was by Hector and Freeman McNeil, who returned from a dislocated elbow which cost him four weeks on the injured reserve list. Hector ran for 76 yards, 19 more than the average yield per game for Denver. McNeil added 44.

"It's a great help having Freeman back there with me," Hector said. "The defense has to respect both of us. They couldn't load up on just one of us."

"The first half was ours," McNeil said. "To be able to run as well as we did against Denver, which has a great defense, is a credit to our offensive line."

But Denver also finished with five sacks, the most damaging of which was by Karl Mecklenburg on Ryan late in the second period. Ryan suffered bruised ribs and did not play again, winding up 9-for-10 for 73 yards.

O'Brien, the regular starter who missed last week's win over New England with a knee injury, took over. On his second play, he found Walker streaking past safety Dennis Smith down the right sideline for a 23-yard score.

"The pass was all arm," said O'Brien, who was disappointed in his 5-for-12 for 52 yards showing. "I just threw it up there. All I did was lay it up there and Wesley made the play."

Autopsy set in grid death

PALACIOS, Texas (AP) — Officials hope an autopsy report will clear up questions on the death of a high school football player who collapsed on the sidelines during a Friday night game and later died at a Houston hospital.

Christopher Arvid Loff, 17, a defensive back, received a head injury in the third quarter of a game played Friday night in Sweeny. He was transferred by helicopter to Hermann Hospital where he died Saturday.

PALACIOS School Superintendent Bill Reaves said details remained sketchy about the fatal play.

"There are still so many things that we don't know," Reaves told the Bay City Daily Tribune on Monday. "All we do know is that he came to the sidelines, complained of a headache and became unconscious."

Results of an autopsy performed Sunday were not yet released, he said.

Student trainer Houston Herlin said he was working on another player when Loff walked off the field.

"He went over by the coaches and kind of collapsed... He seemed like he was in terrible pain. I tried to make him comfortable," he said.

Loff suffered a concussion playing football last year but Reaves said it did not appear that injury was related to his death. The superintendent said Loff had received a medical release stating he was fit to play.

Loff's coach, Pat Walker, declined to comment.

Teachers and students gathered at the school's gymnasium Monday for a memorial service.

REAVES, WHO refused to allow reporters on the high school campus, said he told students Monday the player's death would be a difficult and painful time.

"We told them we understand the feelings that could occur with the loss of a friend or a loved one," he said. "We told them that we knew that Chris would want us to get on with the business of living and that we need to pull together to help each other through this time."

George D. Holst, retired Palacios school superintendent, said he believed the fatality was the first for the school's football program, which has been operating since about 1916.

Ditka, McMahon fuss rises with Flutie in wings

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — There's a growing mystery in the Chicago Bears' football camp involving quarterback Jim McMahon and Coach Mike Ditka.

McMahon did not play in Sunday's 23-7 loss to the Minnesota Vikings and it's beginning to appear he will not play next Sunday against the Detroit Lions.

There also was an indication that Ditka wants to get quarterback Doug Flutie signed soon. Flutie, the 1984 Heisman Trophy winner, was acquired last week from the Los Angeles Rams.

"I don't know," Ditka said at his press conference Monday when asked if McMahon could practice this week. "I haven't written anybody off, but I have to know something.

"He says he's hurt and he can't practice," Ditka said. "I have to know. Can you play this week? Can you play next week? When's the guy going to play?"

McMahon injured a shoulder in the Sept. 7 opener against Cleveland and missed the next two games which Mike Tomczak started. McMahon came back for two more starts as the Bears went to 6-0, before Steve Fuller was given the starting assignment against Minnesota.

In addition to the shoulder injury, McMahon has been troubled by a bad back.

Asked when he could play, when he could practice and how he felt, McMahon said, "I don't know to all the questions."

Walter Payton, the NFL's all-time leading rusher, dashed through the lockerroom and said, "Don't say a word, Jim."

"I ain't," McMahon said, and with that comment he departed.

There was some thought that the distractions arising from the acquisition of Flutie and the reaction of some players in general and McMahon in particular led to the loss to the Vikings.

"I don't have all the answers," Ditka said. "I thought we had some good practices last week. What happened realistically is, we underestimated how good they'd play.

"Sometimes you grope without finding the answers."

As for Flutie, Ditka said earlier on a radio show that he wanted to sign him this week and that he wanted him in a Bears' uniform this year so that he could learn the system.

Pressed on the statement, Ditka said, "I don't retract anything. We need insurance at that position now. Yes, we could carry four quarterbacks."

General Manager Jerry Vainisi said he was close to signing Flutie for 1987 and 1988.

In Boston, Flutie's attorney, Bob Woolf, said the quarterback and the team had reached agreement on a contract for the next two years, adding that Flutie still might play this season.

"It's up to Chicago to decide," Woolf said. "We don't want to shake up anybody in Chicago."

Woolf gave no details of the contract.

Buffs smiling from 6-2A top

It wasn't the most graceful win Dale Ruth has ever coached in his four years at Stanton, but it was good enough to vault the Buffaloes into sole possession of first place in District 6-2A.

The unlikely 13-13 tie between Reagan County and Forsan left Stanton the only undefeated, untied team left in the six-team district. So with the meat of the Buffs' schedule slated in the next two weeks, Ruth's upstarts will make or break their season.

It's the first time the Buffs have been in playoff position this far into the season in more than five years, so it's a new feeling for Ruth and his staff. And they like it. They like it so much they want more.

Starting with Reagan County, 1-0-1, 5-0-1, on Friday night, the Buffs are going to get all they can handle in the next two weeks. As if the Owls, angry for blowing a 13-point fourth-quarter lead at home to Forsan, aren't enough, there will be a meeting of the Buffaloes Oct. 31 in Stanton. A win in either or both games would almost assure Stanton of a playoff berth.

A pair of losses and the Buffs can forget about post-season play until 1987.

In that 13-all tie in Big Lake, it was Forsan which came out with the edge, 4-3 in penetrations. Should each team win all their remaining games, Forsan would advance as the district champ and Reagan County would be runner-up. If both teams should wind up with one loss and Stanton is undefeated, the Owls will be shut out again.

AREA RUMBLINGS: Greenwood didn't wear well after its seven-hour bus trip to Fabens, suffering a 21-8 loss. Now with powerhouses Crane and Kermit coming up in the next two weeks, the Rangers playoff path has been thrown a critical stumbling block...

McCamey returns to action this week with a well-healed lineup including both first-string tailbacks Rodney Terry and Emmit Brown — both hurt in the Badgers loss to Reagan County.

The Badgers are still favored to take the 5-2A title, though Iraan and Van Horn, each with a tie, could still sneak in...

Crane's Gerald Mitchell has reentered the contest with Charles Thompson of Monahans for West Texas' most impressive running back since having a thumb cast removed at the start of district play. The 6-2, 195-pounder ran for more than 200 yards for the second consecutive week.

Included were touchdown runs of 2, 70, 44 and 87 yards to raise his total to eight in two district games for 500 plus yards...

Thompson, the junior whiz kid for the Loboes, is just short of the 1,000 yard mark this season with 967 yards on 91 carries in just six games. Oh yes, in those 91 carries, he has run for 21 touchdowns...

Andrews takes a week off in District 2-4A to lick its wounds after a 28-13 licking at the hands of previously winless Snyder. The Mustangs, 2-3, 2-5, have effectively eliminated themselves from the race with district leader Big Spring and Sweetwater still to come...

Lamesa, 1-3, 2-5, with its open date under its belt, returns to action against Fort Stockton, 1-4, 3-4. The Tors have shown some offensive spark on occasion this season and will need it against his tough defense.

The Panthers, while still struggling for wins in the district, have played the contenders tough in coach Ken Herring's first year, holding scoring machines Sweetwater and Big Spring to 18 and 16 points.

Fort Stockton's nemesis has again been a lack of offense this season. Herring's team has suffered three straight shutouts and has scored just two touchdowns in five district games...

Rankin, with losses in its first two district games, will start playing for pride this week at home against Eldorado. The Red Devils will play without Bruce Hooker and Michael Rojas, both out with separated shoulders.

Hooker had worked his way into the starting QB job after sharing time with Doug Braden in the first five games. Braden will move back to signal-caller from his split end slot...

Baseball's World Series in for dramatic changes

By SCOTT OSTLER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"We now join the broadcast of the opening game of the 1996 World Series, in progress, with Brick Burns and Rip Sock at the microphone...."

Brick: Well, Rip, old buddy, it's a great day for baseball here in Moscow, despite the chill in the air — 6 degrees at game time, with heavy snow flurries. But the weather hasn't dampened the enthusiasm of this fine crowd here in Lenin's Tomb Stadium, a dandy little ballpark smack dab in downtown Moscow.

Rip: Right you are, Bricker! And can you believe it? Here we are at the first world World Series. As you know, old pal, baseball commissioner Al Davis opened up the Fall Classic to the entire world this year, which revived baseball's popularity and led to the bankruptcy of the National Football League and the sacking of Pete Rozelle. Anyway, after a long elimination tournament, we're down to the final two — the Cleveland Indians and the Moscow Burlap Sox.

BRICK: Right-o, Rip. The Burlap Sox got here by smoking the Havana Cigars in a best-of-seven series, while the Indians narrowly defeated the powerful Taiwan Little League team.

Rip: This Soviet team is quite a story. The Russians took up baseball 10 years ago when it became an Olympic sport. They formed their own big league, the USSBC — Union of Soviet Socialist Baseball Collectives. And now they've got a team in the World Series.

Brick: Yes, indeedy, Rip-o. Of course, this is the latest World Series in history, what with Christmas just a week away. All that means, though, is more baseball for you fans, and a couple extra undershirts for the ballplayers. We're heading into the bottom of the fifth with the Indians leading, 5-4. Ripper, as we wait for the grounds crew to groom the infield with the Zamboni machine, let's talk baseball. How about them Indians?

Rip: What can I say, Brickster? Cleveland is the team of the '90s. Ever since Reggie Jackson took over in 1987 as owner, general manager, manager, public address announcer and right fielder, the Indians have been a perennial powerhouse, or should I say power-teepee?

Brick: And what's the word on the Burlap Sox, pard?

RIP: This Moscow ballclub, according to CIA scouting reports, is the epitome of Soviet baseball. Big, tough, hardy, fundamentally sound, but not a lot of finesse. The team didn't steal a single base this season, but they did have four players who hit 70 or more home runs. Their star pitcher, working today's game, is Alexy (Comrade K) Kaputski, a rangy right-hander who checks in at 7-4 and 280 pounds, and has a 130-mile-an-hour heater. Speaking of heater, old buddy, how about turning ours up a notch or two!

Brick: Sure thing, compadre. I guess a good illustration of the Sox size is their leadoff batter, Pee Wee Perry, 6-5 and 305. American sports fan will-remember him as Refrigerator Perry. When the Los Angeles Lakers signed Soviet basketball star Arvidas Sabonis in 1987, the Russians retaliated by persuading The Fridge to switch teams, sports and countries. Perry said that he was looking for a way to get a little further away from Buddy Ryan. And you know, Pee Wee Perry has turned out to be a pretty good little leadoff hitter.

Rip: And a very decent shortstop, I might add.

Brick: While we're waiting for the Indians trainer to chip the ice off his catcher, I'd like to say what a bang-up job the local folk have done, Rip. This Series will not be lacking in pomp and pageantry. For pregame entertainment, we had the parade of tanks and missiles around the ballpark's warning track. The first balls were thrown out by the 12 members of the Communist Party Politburo. And, as part of the cultural exchange aspect of the Series, Sammy Davis Jr. sang the Russian national anthem.

RIP: That song can be a bit ponderous, old partner, but I think Sammy's dancing livened it up nicely. In fact, I'd like to say a word about worldwide peace and brotherhood, if I may, sidekick. I think we all believe in our hearts that this meeting of global powers on the field of athletic strife will do a heck of a lot to foster greater communication and understanding.

Brick: I couldn't have said it better. I think both countries are learning a lot about the other out here, even from the mascots. The famed San Diego Chicken is here, making fun of the umpires and players. And we've also seen Moscow's Chicken Kiev, who did some hilarious routines mocking capitalist decadence.

Brick: All in the spirit of fun and sportsmanship, old pal.

Rip: And we've seen some lively interplay between the teams. There was the bench-clearing brawl in the first inning. Then the Indians accused the Sox of using corked bats, stealing signals and bugging the clubhouse. The home club counter-accused the Indians of using sandpaper, illegal pine tar and heat-seeking devices in their bats.

BRICK: Looks like a dandy rivalry developing. All right, we're ready to play ball, Rip. The leadoff batter digs in, adjusts his batting mittens. I'll tell you, that snow is really coming down now, pal.

Rip: In fact, we can't even see the field, fans. We've locked horns with an Arctic blizzard here. The heater has gone out and it looks like the Brickster and the Ripper are trapped in the old broadcast booth. Old pal, I think it's time to break out those signal flares and emergency rations you brought.

Brick: I brought? I thought you had that stuff, amigo.

Rip: No, it was my day to bring the pencils and cigars. Thanks to you, we'll never get out of here alive, old buddy.

"Please stand by. Due to technical difficulties, our baseball broadcast has been interrupted."

Cannon sues Cowboys

$9.6 million asked for back injury

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys linebacker Billy Cannon Jr. has filed a $9.6 million lawsuit, claiming that the career-ending back injury he suffered eight games into his rookie season was the result of negligence by the National Football League team.

Cannon, the Cowboys' No. 1 draft pick in 1984, played collegiate football at Texas A&M and is the son of Billy Cannon Sr., who won the Heisman Trophy while playing football at Louisiana State University. He later played professionally for the Houston Oilers and the then-Oakland Raiders.

COWBOYS PRESIDENT Tex Schramm said he was not aware of the suit, but said he was not surprised.

"It's the typical plaintiff lawsuit that is causing all our insurance rates to soar," Schramm told the Dallas Morning News. "It comes out of nowhere, as far as I'm concerned. It doesn't surpirse me; it's typical of our times."

Cannon's attorney claims the suit, filed in U.S. District Court here Monday, is the first of its kind in the nation and could change player-safety rules.

"There's going to be a lot of intriguing legal questions that have to be hurdled," Ross Brupbacher of Lafayette, La., said. "It could set some standards on duty and care concerning the health of players."

The lawyer acknowledged football is a dangerous sport, but he said more should be done to protect players.

"Everyone that plays knows it's a dangerous game, but there are significant numbers of players who are playing with risk of injury they need to be made aware of," he said.

The suit says Cannon was signed in May 1984 to a series of six one-year contracts worth $1.9 million, excluding performance bonuses.

Cannon aggravated a spinal condition known spinal stenosis when he tackled New Orleans Saints running back Wayne Wilson during a game on Oct. 28, 1984, the suit alleges.

After doctors told Cannon that if he continued to play football, he risked permanent paralysis, Cannon retired from football and returned to Baton Rouge.

A Dallas Cowboys spokesman said Monday that Joe Bailey, vice president for administration, who is handling the Cannon case, was out of town and could not be reached for comment.

Cannon claims in the suit that he complained to the Cowboys before the Saints game of numbness in his upper body and upper extremities after making tackles.

Dr. Pat Evans, a member of the team's medical staff, said he did not recall Cannon having any complaints at all before the injury. He would not comment on the suit.

THE SUIT also claims the Cowboys failed to diagnose the risk that Cannon was taking, failed to coach him properly in tackling methods that would have minimized his risk of injury, and failed to provide equipment that would have reduced the injury risk.

The lawyer said Cannon underwent several physical exams by the Cowboys and the NFL scouting combine and that the spinal condition should have been discovered.

Cannon was later diagnosed as having a spinal column that is too narrow and pinches against his vertebrae.

Nipper gets Game 4 call

By MARK KREIDLER
Copley News Service

BOSTON — After watching Roger Clemens struggle in Game 2 of the World Series, Boston manager John McNamara said Monday that Al Nipper, who hasn't pitched to one batter since the regular season ended, will start Game 4 Wednesday night.

McNamara dismissed the suggestion that he made the decision because of Clemens, who gave up three runs in 4⅓ innings against the New York Mets on Sunday. It was his third straight start on three days' rest.

The effect of his announcement, however, is that Bruce Hurst (scheduled to start Game 5), Clemens (Game 6) and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd (Game 7) all will have four days between starts.

"We'll give Hurst, Clemens and Boyd their full complement of rest," McNamara said. "The decision was that being two-up (the Red Sox have a 2-0 lead in the Series), we can do what we want to do now."

NIPPER, A right-hander, started 26 games for Boston, going 10-12 with a 5.38 earned-run average. McNamara passed up his spot in the starting rotation during the playoffs, sending out Clemens for Games 1, 4 and 7.

A few Can-isms from Boyd, Boston's starter tonight:

— On his eyesight: "Unfortunately, I'm blind out there. I can't wear glasses because the frames distract me on my windup. I got fitted for contacts, but they had to send them back. I got soft lenses and need hard lenses. The doctor said my stigmatism is so bad, he doesn't see how I was getting the ball across the plate at all."

— On his uniform appearance, which includes all-black shoes and stretch pants pulled down as far as possible: "I'll be Satchel (Paige) again. I'll go out in my low riders and my shoes, even though I won't get the endorsement from Mizuno because I won't wear the stripes. I'm slightly superstitious about my dress code. There's an old-timey thing that comes into me and sort of possesses me a little bit. It sends me way back into the 1930s and '40s."

— On the advice he got from Paige, whom he met in 1980: "He said, 'Just keep the ball down, move the ball in and out, and drop that yellow hammer, and you'll be all right.' " The "yellow hammer" is Boyd's overhand curveball.

— On missing the All-Star Game — which he ranted about, eventually drawing a fine — but making the World Series: "Well, I knew that was going to be mentioned (laughter). One's an individual goal. You have to tend to put it aside. The other is a big team effort, where a lot of love and unity comes about, and right now you have to think that you enjoy that the most."

The Mets will use Danny Heep as their designated hitter. Manager Davey Johnson also plans to start Ray Knight at third base and Mookie Wilson in left field. Both were out of the lineup in Game 2, and Knight took offense, making public his disapproval ... Johnson canceled his team's scheduled workout Monday afternoon. He sent pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre to represent him at a press conference. Pitcher Bob Ojeda said: "If we're not in shape and not ready by now, we're not going to get ready" ... The Mets' Ron Darling, on whether the emotion of the playoff against Houston has spent his team: "If it sapped us emotionally, then maybe we aren't as good as we think we are" ... Boston's bullpen, the most suspect component of the team, has a 1.83 ERA in 19 2/3 innings of post-season work ... The Red Sox have struck out a total of 20 times.

World Series Notebook

THOUGH THEY'RE ahead in the series, the Red Sox are developing some animosity toward the Mets, just as National League teams did during the regular season.

"We went to Shea Stadium to work out (the day before the series opened on Saturday)," McNamara said.

"We didn't need to work out today, we're accommodating you people (the media)," McNamara said. For the first time, he seemed to be relishing his first World Series and writers he isn't familiar with remarked that he seemed less curt and defiant than he had been at Shea Stadium.

"I think most of the fans in this country are pulling for us," said Clemens, a 24-game winner, "and I can see why National League teams are, too." He wouldn't elaborate.

Red Sox outfielder Dave Henderson disagreed with those who thought the Mets should have worked out to accustom themselves to the Green Moster and the rest of Fenway Park's strange configurations.

"I never thought it was that tough, coming in here (as a player with Seattle)," he said. "All you gotta know is math and geometry. The ball comes off (the left field wall) at angles. I played here five years and never had a problem."

AL batting champion Wade Boggs has worked so hard on his fielding that he thinks his improvement is overshadowed by his hitting. "I've been one-two in every fielding category every year and nobody writes about it," said the fielding star of Game 2 Sunday in New York. "I would like to be considered a complete ballplayer." ... The Mets lounged around their downtown hotel Monday.

"Even if they (the Red Sox) were to come out here and beat out brains out, four in a row, there's no way I would have any more respect for them than I do Houston," said Knight.

Autry takes loss in stride

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gene Autry, whose California Angels came within one strike of reaching their first World Series before collapsing, said Monday he didn't blame anyone for what happened.

"I've always said that the easiest thing to do at the racetrack is pick the winner after the horse is back in the barn," Autry, the owner of the Angels throughout their 26-year history, said by telephone from his home in Hollywood. "I kind of feel that way about baseball.

"The easiest thing to do is to second-guess after the game is over. I'm not going to second-guess after the game is over. I don't get down or anything like that. Even though we lost the (fifth) game, I felt we had a good chance to win it (the playoffs).

"It just wasn't in the cards, that's all there is to it," said the 79-year-old Autry, the former movie cowboy. "I don't expect to quit. Look at Boston, they haven't won the World Series in 68 years."

The Angels held a 3-1 lead over Boston in the best-of-seven American League Championship Series, and led the Red Sox 5-2 in the ninth inning of the fifth game at Anaheim Stadium on Oct. 12.

But a one-out, two-run homer by Boston's Don Baylor made it 5-4. After California starter Mike Witt retired Dwight Evans, Manager Gene Mauch brought in left-handed reliever Gary Lucas to face the left-handed hitting Rich Gedman.

Gedman was hit by a pitch. Right-hander Donnie Moore relieved Lucas to pitch to the right-handed-hitting Dave Henderson, and Henderson homered on a 2-2 pitch, giving Boston a 6-5 lead.

The Red Sox eventually won the game 7-6 in 11 innings and whipped the Angels 10-4 and 8-1 in the sixth and seventh games at Fenway Park last week to earn their World Series berth against the New York Mets.

What was Autry thinking when Henderson hit his homer?

"The only thing I could think of is perhaps they made a bad pitch, that's all there is to it," Autry said. "I thought of the same thing with the Mets last night when Henderson hit one out (off New York's Dwight Gooden).

"It looked like they threw him the same pitch that he got over here, an inside pitch. It reminded me very much of the pitch he got from our pitcher."

Speaking of the World Series, Autry said he has watched both games played so far, both Boston victories.

"I just put the whole thing (what happened to the Angels) behind me," he said, saying that he's already looking ahead to 1987.

Iowa takes poll plunge after loss

Associated Press

Iowa's last-second loss to Michigan caused the only Top 10 shakeup in The Associated Press' college football poll this week.

The first seven teams — Miami, Alabama, Nebraska, Michigan, Oklahoma, Penn State and Auburn — maintained their positions Monday.

Iowa, No. 8 last week, lost 20-17 to Michigan and fell to 11th, opening the way for Washington, Arizona State and Texas A&M to move up one place to eighth, ninth and 10th, respectively.

With their 45-13 victory over Cincinnati, the Miami Hurricanes remained No. 1 for the fourth consecutive week. They received 55 of 59 first-place votes and 1,174 of a possible 1,180 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Meanwhile, Alabama crushed Tennessee 56-28 and received three first-place votes and 1,111 points. Last week, Miami led 56-2 in first-place votes and 1,175-1,099 in points.

Nebraska held onto third place with 1,024 points by trouncing Missouri 48-17. Michigan stayed fourth with 997 points.

Fifth-ranked Oklahoma blanked Oklahoma State 19-0 and received 937 points. The other first-place vote went to No. 6 Penn State, which routed Syracuse 42-3 and received 902 points. Seventh-ranked Auburn trimmed Georgia Tech 31-10 and polled 861 points.

Washington swamped Bowling Green 48-0 and climbed from ninth to eighth with 704 points, Arizona State jumped from 10th to ninth with 695 points by downing Southern California 29-20 and Texas A&M rose from 11th to 10th with 606 points by edging Baylor 31-30.

After Iowa, LSU, Mississippi State, Arkansas, Arizona, Clemson, UCLA, Stanford, Southern Methodist and North Carolina State finished the Second Ten.

Last week, it was Texas A&M, LSU, Mississippi State, Arkansas, Southern Cal, Arizona, Clemson, North Carolina and UCLA, with Baylor and SMU tied for 20th.

Southern Cal, which had been in the Top Twenty the last four weeks, suffered its second consecutive setback against Arizona State and dropped out of the rankings. North Carolina's 35-34 loss to North Carolina State cost the Tar Heels their ranking and enabled the Wolfpack to move back in after a one-week absence. Baylor's one-point loss to Texas A&M knocked the Bears out of the Top Twenty for the first time this season.

Daingerfield sets 3A streak record

Associated Press

Class 3A Daingerfield has been the No. 1 ranked team in The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll since preseason, dominating their division like no other team.

The Tigers set a state Class 3A record last week with a 58-0 victory over Prairieland for their 44th straight regular season victory. It broke the previous mark of 43 games by Denver City in 1959-63.

Daingerfield was a unanimous No. 1 choice this week and joins San Antonio Holmes in 5A, McKinney in 4A, Refugio in 2A and Valley View in A in retaining top billings.

Daingerfield's victory, coupled with Class 5A defending champion Houston Yates' 22-20 loss to Houston Sterling, gave the Tigers the state's longest winning streak at 23 straight.

Yates had won 22 straight games.

AP Prep Poll

Yates, one of two ranked 5A teams to lose last week, dropped from No. 4 to No. 10 and Port Arthur Jefferson, making its first appearance last week, dropped out again after a 47-0 loss to Beaumont West Brook.

Converse Judson, 7-0, is the newcomer at No. 9.

McKinney gained 20 of the 23 first place votes cast in 4A and maintained a solid 227-192 point edge over runner up Corsicana.

All 10 teams on the 4A list were winners last week.

Fifth ranked Mexia lost a 20-19 decision to Crockett and dropped to No. 10 among the 3A ranks.

Cuero defeated Yoakum 42-6 and remained Daingerfield's closest pursuer.

Refugio defeated Benavides 65-0 and had no trouble keeping its 2A lead, polling 19 first place votes and a 224-199 point margin over runnerup Eastland.

No. 9 Olney was a 9-8 loser to Holliday, but hung onto the No. 10 spot in the rankings with Seymour edging up to No. 9.

Valley View's 91-0 victory over Prosper was the most lopsided game among the ranked teams and good enough for a 227-193 point lead over No. 2 Meridian.

Other teams receiving voter consideration included: 5A, Wichita Falls High 26 points, Midland Lee 13; 4A, Cleburne 19, Gregory-Portland 13, Everman 11, Monahans 10, Athens 10 (first place vote); 3A, Jefferson 12, Cameron Yoe and Springtown 10 each; 2A, Eustace 10 (first place vote) and A, Valley 12.

Pampa's Barry Terrell reacts to a putt during Monday's North Texas Chapter Assistants golf championship at Green Tree Country Club.

Birdie gives McMillan title

From Staff Reports

After one day of 36 holes at Green Tree Country Club Monday, the North Texas Chapter Assistants golf championship was decided on a birdie putt on the last hole of the day.

Lance McMillan of the San Angelo Country Club birdied the 36th hole to take a one-stroke victory over the field. McMillan finished at 145 after rounds of 72 and 73.

And the field was bunched behind him as Mark Range of Mission CC (72-74), Chad Davis of Odessa CC (75-71), Barry Terrell of Pampa CC (76-70) and Jim Tidwell of San Angelo's Bentwood CC (72-74) all finished with 146, a meager stroke off of McMillan's pace.

Amarillo Tascosa CC's Keith Bumpas followed with 148 as did Tascosa partner Noble Watson. Finishing at 150 were Jody Richardson of Pampa CC, Randy Kahn of Green Tree CC and Shaun McDonald of Ranchland Hills CC.

Six cities make pitch for NBA expansion teams

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — NBA Commissioner David Stern says he favors expansion, but it's up to the league's Board of Governors to decide if any of six cities will get a new franchise.

Representatives from Minneapolis, Toronto, Miami, Fla., Charlotte, N.C., Orlando, Fla., and Orange County, Calif., each made 30-minute presentations to the board's advisory and finance committee Monday.

The 23-team league, which hasn't expanded since 1980, is expected to make its decision today. Eighteen votes are needed for final approval.

"I think that expansion would be a good idea. But if it was next year, I think one (team) would be all I would recommend," Stern said. "I'm supporting the issue of expansion. We hope to have a firm and positive response to the subject of expansion before we close these meetings."

Board members said they will examine each city's strength of ownership, playing facilities, population growth, market area and projected fan support before casting their votes.

Toronto has NBA Hall of Famer Wilt Chamberlain as one of its financial backers and plans to play in Maple Leaf Gardens, which seats 16,182 for hockey.

The Toronto Huskies hosted the first NBA game in 1946, but the city's team folded after the 1946-47 season and league officials are skeptical of competing again against hockey.

Nick Mileti, who owned the NBA's Cleveland Cavaliers from 1970-80, heads the Orange County group that hopes to build a 20,000-seat Westdome Arena in Anaheim.

League officials, however, said they are hesitant to add a third NBA team to the Southern California area. The Los Angeles Lakers and Los Angeles Clippers are already there.

Former Philadelphia 76ers player and coach Billy Cunningham is a partner in the Miami group, with ex-76ers General Manager Pat Williams involved with Orlando's bid.

Miami already has its nickname of "Heat" chosen, has started construction on a 15,300-seat arena and has down payments on about 8,000 season tickets. Orlando has the nickname "Magic," down payments on about 14,000 season tickets and is ready to break ground for a 16,930-seat facility if it gets a franchise.

The Charlotte group, backed by business magnate George Shinn, has started building a new 23,500-seat arena and has sold more than 7,000 season tickets. But with a population of about 300,000, Charlotte is the smallest of the six cities seeking an expansion franchise.

Minneapolis hopes to have an 18,000-seat downtown arena built in two years while its team plays in the Metrodome.

Harvey Ratner and Marvin Wolfenson are trying to bring the NBA back to Minnesota after unsuccessfully trying to buy the Utah Jazz last summer for $25 million. The two businessmen once owned about 3 percent of the Minneapolis Lakers in 1957-60.

Penquins roar at start with six straight wins

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh was once known as the City of Champions, but local sports fans haven't had much to cheer about with the Pirates finishing last for the third season in a row and the once-dominant Steelers heading for their worst record in nearly two decades.

But thanks to the surprising Pittsburgh Penguins, all does not appear lost in a town that once boasted Super Bowl and World Series champions in the same year.

The Penguins, the team with the worst record in the NHL only three seasons ago, have won their first six games and are closing in on the league record of eight consecutive season-opening victories, set in 1934-35 by the Toronto Maple Leafs and tied in 1975-76 by the Buffalo Sabres. Edmonton (1983-84) and Quebec (1985-86) won their first seven games.

"It's mind-boggling," said Penguins Coach Bob Berry.

Especially considering that the Penguins haven't made the playoffs since the 1981-82 season, had the NHL's worst record in both the 1982-83 and 1983-84 seasons, and had only the 15th-best record in the 21-team league last season.

"Our start is a combination of smart play and hard work," left wing Terry Ruskowski said. And, he might have added, Mario Lemieux.

Lemieux, 21, established himself as a star last season, and he's playing exceptionally well again this season.

Lemieux scored three goals and had two assists in the Penguins' 7-3 victory at Buffalo last Friday night, then collected five assists Saturday night in an 8-4 victory over the New Jersey Devils. It was the only game this season in which he didn't score a goal.

"He was great his first year, better last season and now he's awesome," Berry said.

"If God put anybody on this earth to do anything, he put Mario Lemieux here to play hockey," Ruskowski said.

Lemieux has eight goals and seven assists in six games and is well on his way to substantially bettering the impressive statistics of his first two seasons. He had 43 goals and 100 points his rookie season and improved to 48 goals and 141 points last season despite playing on a 34-38-8 team.

"I'm just glad he plays for us and not somebody else," defenseman Rod Buskas said. "Some of the things he does are unbelievable."

Against Buffalo, Lemieux scored one goal by shooting the puck between his legs with his back to the goal and another by putting a stunning move on baffled Sabres goalie Tom Barrasso.

Berry also credits the best start in the Penguins' 20-year history to goaltender Roberto Romano, who has started five of the six games and "has been just spectacular," he said.

"We played the six games in 10 nights, so it's not like we've had a lot of time and have had things spaced out," Berry said. "We've played a lot of games and come up with a great start. Unfortunately, that's all it is, a start. We've got to go from here."

The Penguins have been outstanding even though high-priced rookie right wing Dwight Mathiasen flunked a preseason test as Lemieux's linemate and wound up at Baltimore of the American Hockey League.

Montreal loses to Caps

NHL Roundup

MONTREAL (AP) — The Montreal Canadiens had a boffo start and a socko finish. But it was the middle act that shot them down in Monday night's 5-4 loss to the Washington Capitals.

The Canadiens raced out to a 2-0 first-period lead over the struggling Capitals before Washington found the range — and for the next 25 minutes, the Capitals had everything their own way.

Bobby Carpenter made it 2-1 at 17:02 with a flip shot over goaltender Patrick Roy, finishing off a 2-on-1 break and putting some life back into the previously dormant Caps.

"That first goal was a really big one for us," said Washington captain Rod Langway. "We felt we could turn it around after that."

The second period was all Washington, as the Capitals outshot Montreal 12-2 and scored four times.

"It helps when you spend most of the period in their end like we did in the second," said Dave Christian, who tied the game for Washington by banging home a rebound at 4:37 of the second period. "That took a lot of pressure off our defense."

After Christian tied the game, John Barrett put Washington ahead at 11:05 by stealing the puck from Montreal defenseman Chris Chelios behind the Montreal net, skating in front and stuffing it past Roy.

The Canadiens seemed to be still shaken by that goal when Craig Laughlin increased the lead only 34 seconds later with his fourth of the year.

Just before the period ended, Washington got what proved to be the winning goal, as rookie Michal Pivonka fired home loose puck after a scramble in front of the net.

The Canadiens then mounted a rally with a pair of goals by Mats Naslund in the final 20 minutes, but it was not enough to overcome the disasterous middle period.

Canadiens' Coach Jean Perron gave the Capitals credit for the second-period surge, while absolving his defense of the blame.

"How can I blame the defense when we had only two shots in the second period," Perron said. "That was the difference in the game.They had the momentum because they worked hard in our end and they were aggressive."

Despite the 5-2 lead, Washington goaltender Bob Mason knew the Canadiens weren't going to roll over during the last 20 minutes.

White reminds crowd electric bills have been lower

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

ATHENS — Gov. Mark White told Democratic supporters rallying here last week at the Spanish Trace Hotel, that four years ago the hotel lobby was "the hottest room in the state."

In 1982, White implied, Texas Power & Light Co. electricity rates were so high that the hotel management could not afford to keep the air conditioning running at a comfortable temperature. The crowd this year enjoyed the cool surroundings, the governor went on to say, because his appointees to the Public Utility Commission have turned up the heat on power companies, making electricity affordable.

True to form in the Great Utility Debate of 1986, White's comments hit target, but only by the slimmest of margins. PUC records show that monthly commercial electric bills for Texas Utilities Electric Co. — the utility that merged with TP&L in 1984 and today serves Athens — run about $20, or 2.5 percent, below the 1982 rates for 10,000 killowatt-hours of power.

Four years ago, White rode the utility reform horse to an upset victory over then-Gov. Bill Clements. White charged that Clements' appointees to the PUC "sided with the big utility companies against the average Texan." He promised to appoint a consumer-conscious housewife to the commission and do away with the law allowing electric utilities to automatically pass changes in fuel costs on to customers.

Clements accused White of "trying to sell a bill of goods," but voters apparently bought it as they elected White by a 230,000-vote margin. Within six months of taking office, White had replaced Clements' commissioners with three of his own — including "housewife" Peggy Rosson of El Paso — and had convinced the Legislature to do away with the automatic fuel adjustment clause.

Consumers, however, saw little immediate benefit from the change. Average monthly residential electric bills increased steadily through 1983 and 1984, peaking at $77.06 for 1,000 killowatt-hours in August 1985. In West Texas, summer rates for Texas Electric Service Co.'s customers topped out at $78.54 in July 1985.

Largely following the declining price of the natural gas that fires the power-producing boilers, electric bills have dropped since then. The PUC reports average residential bills hit $68.29 this month, 27 cents less than the October 1982 cost.

Clements says that's not good enough for him and lists the failure to reduce utility bills as among White's "litany of broken promises" to the voters. The utility issue could prove as lucrative to the former governor in the 1986 race as it was for White in 1982.

Clements claims, correctly, that average monthly electric rates during the first six months of this year exceeded the 1982 rates by 13.3 percent. Extending that through October reduces the margin to 9.9 percent. Clements maintains — but won't produce the figures to prove it — that his own power bills have increased by 23.6 percent since White took office.

Shooting back, White says his commissioners are doing what he and they promised to do. "The PUC will give you a certificate and give one to Ole Bill over here too, showing that 94 percent of the people of Texas have lower rates today because of actions they have taken to lower those rates," he said during the Oct. 6 televised debate.

Phillip Diehl, the commission staffer who prepared that report, says it shows that 94 percent of the ratepayers served by the "big eight" electric utilities in the state had lower monthly bills for 1,000 killowatt-hours of power this summer than during the summer of 1983. Looking back at the summer of 1982, however, shows the four-month average for all utilities $4.14 lower then than now.

Don Butler, an Austin attorney who represents cities before the PUC, says White had a valid point during the 1982 campaign but has allowed "politics and deception" to keep the commission from making the most of it.

"Regulation is in worse shape now today than it was four years ago," Butler says. "It has been all rhetoric and no follow-through with the White commission."

Consumers Union attorney Carol Barger says she isn't certain whether White's look-what-I've-done campaign on utility regulation will play any better with voters than Clements' you-haven't-done-enough response. "It's not nearly as clear cut as it was in the initial (1982) race," Ms. Barger says.

One set of numbers does show that the White appointees have been less generous to electric companies than their predecessors. From 1979 to 1982, commission figures show, major electric utilities received 56.1 percent — about $1.6 billion — of the $2.8 billion in rate increases they requested. Since January 1983, the PUC has approved $316 million — 21.3 percent — of the $1.5 billion the companies wanted.

Fred Ritts, a Washington attorney who represents major industrial power users at utility commissions in Texas and four other states, says the regulatory issues have changed since White took office. Under Clements, Ritts says, "most of the companies were in the middle of their construction programs," and the PUC correctly "had to look at the ability of those utilities to raise capital to finance those huge construction programs."

Most of those big power plants are on-line or almost completed today. "Now the balance can properly shift toward the customers," Ritts says.

Tylenol purchased in Monahans may be tampering case

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Possible Tylenol tampering has made its way to West Texas leaving in its wake bottles containing 30 extra-strength tablets, not capsules, as it has in the past.

A Midland man traveling through Monahans Friday night purchased a bottle of 30-count Extra-Strength Tylenol tablets, David Mills, Monahans chief of police said.

"We received a teletype message from the Midland Police Department Friday night reporting the bottle of Tylenol the man purchased in Monahans appeared to have been tampered with," Mills said.

"The protective seal was missing and there was a puncture in the foil," Mills added.

Mills said they contacted the M-System grocery store in Monahans which took its supply of Tylenol off the shelf and sent it to the Food and Drug Administration office in Dallas for testing. They have not yet received word on the status of the Tylenol, he said.

Mills added there had been no reports of illness in Monahans resulting from the ingestion of Tylenol.

In Midland, Midland Police Department Lt. Hank Norton said he believed the bottle of Tylenol purchased by the Midland man had been sent to the crime lab for testing but said he was sure that no word was back on the its status.

Terry Little, manager of the M-System grocery store at 400 Midland Dr., said upon hearing of the Monahans incident, all 30-count Extra Strength Tylenol tablet products were removed from the shelves of the three M-System stores in Midland.

"However, we went back and searched through them all and then just held out the bottles which had the same lot number as the bottle found tampered with in Monahans," Little said.

The manager of the M-System store on Rankin Highway said his store has not put any of the 30-count Tylenol products back on the shelf.

At the M-System on Avenue A at Scharbauer, all 30-count Extra Strength Tylenol tablets had been removed initially, but probably today those bottles not sharing the lot number of the bottle possibly tampered with would be put back, Mark Sedden, manager of the store, said.

"We pull all of the bottles in question off the shelves at first and then put the ones not sharing the same lot number back a few days later. We are usually slow to put them back on the shelf," Sedden said, explaining the difference in status between the Midland Drive and Rankin Highway stores.

The lot number of the Tylenol bottle possibly tampered with is BCA 868, an M-System Corporate spokesman said.

Former Big Spring detective charged in death of son

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — A 23-year-old Big Spring man, whose father is being charged in his shooting death, was sent back to prison twice for probation and parole violations, a parole officer said today.

Parole officer David Harman, said Dell Cantwell was sent to prison twice after an aggravated assault arrest and for unlawfully carrying a weapon during his probation and parole.

Cantwell's father, Richard Cantwell, a former Big Spring police detective, is being charged with the Sunday shooting death of his son.

According to parole files, Dell Cantwell was sent to the Texas Department of Corrections after serving four months of a 10-year probation for car theft.

His probation was revoked with an aggravated assault arrest in December 1981.

Cantwell was then released from prison on parole in April 1984, but returned in July 1985 after being arrested in Odessa for unlawfully carrying a weapon.

Cantwell, had been living with his parents in Big Spring since his release on parole July 15, 1986, Harman said.

Dell Cantwell was killed around 3 a.m. Sunday after an apparent argument with his father, said Howard County Sheriff A.N. Standard.

He died from a single gunshot wound to the heart, said Justice of the Peace Willie Grant.

Harman said he was shocked by the death.

"I was kinda shocked. They had typical father-son disagreements like everybody does, but nothing I knew was serious.

"When they told me about it Monday morning, I was stunned," Harman said.

Richard Cantwell, 45, worked as a detective on the Big Spring Police Department for 10 years from 1966-77.

Stanley Bogard, who was police chief when Richard Cantwell worked on the force, said Cantwell retired in 1977 to go into his own carpentry business.

"He just wasn't making enough money and he just wanted to get into carpentry," Bogard said.

Bogard said the detective was a "good man."

"I'm sure there's a lot of things we don't know that prompted it (the shooting). I do know that Richie was a good man," Bogard said.

Richard Cantwell was released from the Howard County Jail Monday on a $60,000 bond.

"I was kinda shocked (about Del Cantwell's death). They (Cantwell and father Richard Cantwell) had typical father-son disagreements like everybody does, but nothing I knew was serious. When they told me about it Monday morning, I was stunned."

Rule affects more than 400 students, school officials say

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The controversial no-pass, no-play rule has sidelined more than 400 students in Midland's secondary schools, officials said today.

The figures released are preliminary and unofficial.

Larry Lusby, director of Midland Independent School District computer services, said a total of 58 Midland High School students, who participate in theatre arts, football, boys and girls basketball, golf, band, cross-country and boys and girls tennis, are ineligible to play for six weeks because of failing grades.

A total of 55 Lee High School students also are ineligible, he said.

The no-pass, no-play rule — a critical element of public school reforms enacted in 1984 — prohibits students from participating in extracurricular activities if they fail a course.

Grades for the first six-week period were released Oct. 10. The rule went into effect Friday.

Lusby said about 40 percent of the student population participate in one or more extracurricular activities at each of the two senior high schools.

At Lee Freshman High School, 63 students who participate in extracurricular activities failed courses and, therefore, are ineligible, Lusby said.

Midland Freshman High School reported 47 students were declared ineligible due to failing grades.

The numbers vary at the MISD's three junior high schools where there are fewer activities in which students may participate.

In assessing the results, Lusby said 94 of the San Jacinto Junior High School students who participated in either band or girls and boys athletics failed at least one course.

At Goddard and Alamo Junior High Schools, the numbers were 89 and 31 respectively.

Big Spring woman undergoes surgery after pit bull dog attack

BIG SPRING (AP) — An 81-year-old woman underwent surgery Monday after an attack by a pit bull, authorities said.

Police Lt. Jerry Edwards said Carmen Abreo was hospitalized Friday after one of five dogs chained in her yard attacked her. He said police don't know what provoked the attack.

The woman was in stable but serious condition at Scenic Mountain Medical Center for massive tissue destruction to her right arm, Edwards said.

Edwards said Mrs. Abreo's husband, Jim Abreo, 84, also was attacked while trying to rescue her, but he was treated and released.

Edwards said the dogs belong to the couple's son, Sam Abreo, and that the dog believed responsible for the attack was quarantined in an animal shelter.

Ector commissioners will hold hearing on fire district petition

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners have set Nov. 10 as the date for a public hearing on a petition calling for a vote by county residents on establishment of a fire district.

The issue of creating a fire district with taxing authority to serve county residents outside Odessa city limits arose when commissioners balked at renewing a joint city-county contract for fire protection that expires in October 1987 because of escalating costs.

The cost of providing fire protection and ambulance service to county residents outside the Odessa city limits in 1985, according to city figures, was about $1.5 million. Ector County paid less than $350,000 of that amount.

Under the current contract, the county increased its contribution to $525,000.

In addition to that amount, the county allocated just under $79,000 in operating funds for the county's five volunteer fire departments, plus nearly $80,000 in federal revenue sharing funds.

A fire district approved by voters would be allowed to levy a maximum tax of three cents per $100 of assessed valuation.

At that rate, with the county's decreased tax base, the fire district would receive about $500,000.

That amount would be used to operate the five volunteer fire departments and to established an ambulance service for residents outside the city limits.

A fire district tax of three cents would add about another $18 to the taxes levied on a home in the fire district with an appraised value of $60,000.

Commissioners will decide Nov. 10 after a public hearing if an election on the question of forming a fire tax district should be called and whether all areas outside the city limits should be included.

Mother proud to be called 'Mrs. ZZ'

By BRUCE WESTBROOK

HOUSTON (AP) — She's a rock 'n' roll momma, and she couldn't be prouder.

She's Lorraine Gibbons, mother of ZZ Top guitarist Billy Gibbons, who has seen her son's band become the highest-grossing rock act on the road this year, with more than $15 million in earnings.

That's a long way from the days in 1969 when Billy, bassist Dusty Hill and drummer Frank Beard formed ZZ Top at the Gibbons' Tanglewood home shortly after Gibbons graduated from Lee High School.

"Their first rehearsal hall was in our garage," Mrs. Gibbons said. "At first they were in the den, but there was hardly room for a coffee pot in there with all the drums and guitars. Billy's father told the boys they could use the garage if they soundproofed it, so they did."

His father, Freddie Gibbons, who died in 1981, was a prominent pianist here for many years. He met his future wife in the '40s when she was a model at Sakowitz and he was perfoming for a style show. They also have a daughter, Pamela Bray, 33, who is married, has a daughter and is curator of education at the High Museum of Art in Atlanta.

"We're a pretty independent family as individuals," Mrs. Gibbons said. "But we're still a family."

She denies having musical talent — "just a musical ear." But Mrs. Bray took piano lessons, young Gibbons took guitar lessons, "and the house was filled with music all the time, because Freddie was either playing piano in the living room or playing organ in the den. Music was part of our life."

Gibbons was more interested in studying guitar than books, and soon he was giving lessons himself. When he decided to pursue a rock music career, his parents backed him.

"I told him, 'We have no failures in this family. If that's what you want to do, then go after it,'" his mother says. "And Freddie was supportive. But he'd have been just as supportive if Billy had become an Episcopal priest."

Gibbons played in local bands — the Coachmen and the Moving Sidewalks — and briefly attended the University of Houston before getting Hill and Beard of Dallas to join him as ZZ Top. Since then they have made their climb to the top.

The band's last album, "Eliminator," sold 8 million copies, and the current "Afterburner" has sold more than 4 million so far. The trio is at its poplar peak, and there is no end in sight.

"They have no plans to retire," Mrs. Gibbons said. "Heavens no! They're almost cloned to each other. They'll probably still be playing in their late 50s. As long as they are having as much fun as they're having, there's no reson not to do it."

Mrs. Gibbons isn't about to quit her job, either. She is administratve assistant to Augie Erfurth, executive athletic director at Rice University. She's also a member of the governing council of the Shepherd School of Music.

She started working at Rice 17 years ago — the same time ZZ Top was formed.

"I think the young people of this country are great," she said, "and I thought the best way to find out about them and see what's going on is to be where they are." When the Rice students learn who she is, they call her "Mrs. ZZ."

Mrs. ZZ doesn't let her grandmotherly status stop her from enjoying rock 'n' roll. She listens to some pop and classical music, but mostly ZZ Top.

"I love it," she said. "I have all of ZZ's records, and I play them all the time. And the louder the better. I have to keep the house closed up when I play their albums."

She's also a fan of ZZ Top's music videos, which she tapes off television. Last summer she flew to Los Angeles to watch production of the band's latest clip, "Velcro Fly."

"They're all so fun," she said. "But my favorite is "Rough Boy." It's not ony a great tune, but the video (with an outer-space car wash) has incredible ingenuity."

"Rough Boy" ends with the message "Stay clean." Mrs. Gibbons isn't sure if that's meant literally or has a deeper meaning.

"For them, it certainly doesn't mean clean-shaven," she laughed, referring to Gibbons' and Hill's belly-length beards. Those beards and dark sunglasses are the band's trademarks.

"It took Billy five or six years to grow that beard," his mother said. "It doesn't bother me. I've gotten used to it. It always amazes me when people ask me if it's real."

Fake beards are a common joke at ZZ Top concerts, and Mrs. Gibbons admits wearing one herself. That was at an MTV awards show in New York, when beards and glasses were given to the audience when ZZ Top performed.

Gibbons isn't home often — he's usually touring or recording in another city. But when he is here, his mother likes to join him for dinner with his friends.

"He has a lot of friends," she said. "He doesn't seclude himself. And he'll always sign an autograph.

Iowa takes poll plunge after loss

Associated Press

Iowa's last-second loss to Michigan caused the only Top 10 shakeup in The Associated Press' college football poll this week.

The first seven teams — Miami, Alabama, Nebraska, Michigan, Oklahoma, Penn State and Auburn — maintained their positions Monday.

Iowa, No. 8 last week, lost 20-17 to Michigan and fell to 11th, opening the way for Washington, Arizona State and Texas A&M to move up one place to eighth, ninth and 10th, respectively.

With their 45-13 victory over Cincinnati, the Miami Hurricanes remained No. 1 for the fourth consecutive week. They received 55 of 59 first-place votes and 1,174 of a possible 1,180 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Meanwhile, Alabama crushed Tennessee 56-28 and received three first-place votes and 1,111 points. Last week, Miami led 56-2 in first-place votes and 1,175-1,099 in points.

Nebraska held onto third place with 1,024 points by trouncing Missouri 48-17. Michigan stayed fourth with 997 points.

Fifth-ranked Oklahoma blanked Oklahoma State 19-0 and received 937 points. The other first-place vote went to No. 6 Penn State, which routed Syracuse 42-3 and received 902 points. Seventh-ranked Auburn trimmed Georgia Tech 31-10 and polled 861 points.

Washington swamped Bowling Green 48-0 and climbed from ninth to eighth with 704 points, Arizona State jumped from 10th to ninth with 695 points by downing Southern California 29-20 and Texas A&M rose from 11th to 10th with 606 points by edging Baylor 31-30.

After Iowa, LSU, Mississippi State, Arkansas, Arizona, Clemson, UCLA, Stanford, Southern Methodist and North Carolina State finished the Second Ten.

Last week, it was Texas A&M, LSU, Mississippi State, Arkansas, Southern Cal, Arizona, Clemson, North Carolina and UCLA, with Baylor and SMU tied for 20th.

Southern Cal, which had been in the Top Twenty the last four weeks, suffered its second consecutive setback against Arizona State and dropped out of the rankings. North Carolina's 35-34 loss to North Carolina State cost the Tar Heels their ranking and enabled the Wolfpack to move back in after a one-week absence. Baylor's one-point loss to Texas A&M knocked the Bears out of the Top Twenty for the first time this season.

Daingerfield sets 3A streak record

Associated Press

Class 3A Daingerfield has been the No. 1 ranked team in The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll since preseason, dominating their division like no other team.

The Tigers set a state Class 3A record last week with a 58-0 victory over Prairieland for their 44th straight regular season victory. It broke the previous mark of 43 games by Denver City in 1959-63.

Daingerfield was a unanimous No. 1 choice this week and joins San Antonio Holmes in 5A, McKinney in 4A, Refugio in 2A and Valley View in A in retaining top billings.

Daingerfield's victory, coupled with Class 5A defending champion Houston Yates' 22-20 loss to Houston Sterling, gave the Tigers the state's longest winning streak at 23 straight.

Yates had won 22 straight games.

AP Prep Poll

Yates, one of two ranked 5A teams to lose last week, dropped from No. 4 to No. 10 and Port Arthur Jefferson, making its first appearance last week, dropped out again after a 47-0 loss to Beaumont West Brook.

Converse Judson, 7-0, is the newcomer at No. 9.

McKinney gained 20 of the 23 first place votes cast in 4A and maintained a solid 227-192 point edge over runner up Corsicana.

All 10 teams on the 4A list were winners last week.

Fifth ranked Mexia lost a 20-19 decision to Crockett and dropped to No. 10 among the 3A ranks.

Cuero defeated Yoakum 42-6 and remained Daingerfield's closest pursuer.

Refugio defeated Benavides 65-0 and had no trouble keeping its 2A lead, polling 19 first place votes and a 224-199 point margin over runnerup Eastland.

No. 9 Olney was a 9-8 loser to Holliday, but hung onto the No. 10 spot in the rankings with Seymour edging up to No. 9.

Valley View's 91-0 victory over Prosper was the most lopsided game among the ranked teams and good enough for a 227-193 point lead over No. 2 Meridian.

Other teams receiving voter consideration included: 5A, Wichita Falls High 26 points, Midland Lee 13; 4A, Cleburne 19, Gregory-Portland 13, Everman 11, Monahans 10, Athens 10 (first place vote); 3A, Jefferson 12, Cameron Yoe and Springtown 10 each; 2A, Eustace 10 (first place vote) and A, Valley 12.

Birdie gives McMillan title

From Staff Reports

After one day of 36 holes at Green Tree Country Club Monday, the North Texas Chapter Assistants golf championship was decided on a birdie putt on the last hole of the day.

Lance McMillan of the San Angelo Country Club birdied the 36th hole to take a one-stroke victory over the field. McMillan finished at 145 after rounds of 72 and 73.

And the field was bunched behind him as Mark Range of Mission CC (72-74), Chad Davis of Odessa CC (75-71), Barry Terrell of Pampa CC (76-70) and Jim Tidwell of San Angelo's Bentwood CC (72-74) all finished with 146, a meager stroke off of McMillan's pace.

Amarillo Tascosa CC's Keith Bumpas followed with 148 as did Tascosa partner Noble Watson. Finishing at 150 were Jody Richardson of Pampa CC, Randy Kahn of Green Tree CC and Shaun McDonald of Ranchland Hills CC.

Six cities make pitch for NBA expansion teams

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — NBA Commissioner David Stern says he favors expansion, but it's up to the league's Board of Governors to decide if any of six cities will get a new franchise.

Representatives from Minneapolis, Toronto, Miami, Fla., Charlotte, N.C., Orlando, Fla., and Orange County, Calif., each made 30-minute presentations to the board's advisory and finance committee Monday.

The 23-team league, which hasn't expanded since 1980, is expected to make its decision today. Eighteen votes are needed for final approval.

"I think that expansion would be a good idea. But if it was next year, I think one (team) would be all I would recommend," Stern said. "I'm supporting the issue of expansion. We hope to have a firm and positive response to the subject of expansion before we close these meetings."

Board members said they will examine each city's strength of ownership, playing facilities, population growth, market area and projected fan support before casting their votes.

Toronto has NBA Hall of Famer Wilt Chamberlain as one of its financial backers and plans to play in Maple Leaf Gardens, which seats 16,182 for hockey.

The Toronto Huskies hosted the first NBA game in 1946, but the city's team folded after the 1946-47 season and league officials are skeptical of competing again against hockey.

Nick Mileti, who owned the NBA's Cleveland Cavaliers from 1970-80, heads the Orange County group that hopes to build a 20,000-seat Westdome Arena in Anaheim.

League officials, however, said they are hesitant to add a third NBA team to the Southern California area. The Los Angeles Lakers and Los Angeles Clippers are already there.

Former Philadelphia 76ers player and coach Billy Cunningham is a partner in the Miami group, with ex-76ers General Manager Pat Williams involved with Orlando's bid.

Miami already has its nickname of "Heat" chosen, has started construction on a 15,300-seat arena and has down payments on about 8,000 season tickets. Orlando has the nickname "Magic," down payments on about 14,000 season tickets and is ready to break ground for a 16,930-seat facility if it gets a franchise.

The Charlotte group, backed by business magnate George Shinn, has started building a new 23,500-seat arena and has sold more than 7,000 season tickets. But with a population of about 300,000, Charlotte is the smallest of the six cities seeking an expansion franchise.

Minneapolis hopes to have an 18,000-seat downtown arena built in two years while its team plays in the Metrodome.

Harvey Ratner and Marvin Wolfenson are trying to bring the NBA back to Minnesota after unsuccessfully trying to buy the Utah Jazz last summer for $25 million. The two businessmen once owned about 3 percent of the Minneapolis Lakers in 1957-60.

Penquins roar at start with six straight wins

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh was once known as the City of Champions, but local sports fans haven't had much to cheer about with the Pirates finishing last for the third season in a row and the once-dominant Steelers heading for their worst record in nearly two decades.

But thanks to the surprising Pittsburgh Penguins, all does not appear lost in a town that once boasted Super Bowl and World Series champions in the same year.

The Penguins, the team with the worst record in the NHL only three seasons ago, have won their first six games and are closing in on the league record of eight consecutive season-opening victories, set in 1934-35 by the Toronto Maple Leafs and tied in 1975-76 by the Buffalo Sabres. Edmonton (1983-84) and Quebec (1985-86) won their first seven games.

"It's mind-boggling," said Penguins Coach Bob Berry.

Especially considering that the Penguins haven't made the playoffs since the 1981-82 season, had the NHL's worst record in both the 1982-83 and 1983-84 seasons, and had only the 15th-best record in the 21-team league last season.

"Our start is a combination of smart play and hard work," left wing Terry Ruskowski said. And, he might have added, Mario Lemieux.

Lemieux, 21, established himself as a star last season, and he's playing exceptionally well again this season.

Lemieux scored three goals and had two assists in the Penguins' 7-3 victory at Buffalo last Friday night, then collected five assists Saturday night in an 8-4 victory over the New Jersey Devils. It was the only game this season in which he didn't score a goal.

"He was great his first year, better last season and now he's awesome," Berry said.

"If God put anybody on this earth to do anything, he put Mario Lemieux here to play hockey," Ruskowski said.

Lemieux has eight goals and seven assists in six games and is well on his way to substantially bettering the impressive statistics of his first two seasons. He had 43 goals and 100 points his rookie season and improved to 48 goals and 141 points last season despite playing on a 34-38-8 team.

"I'm just glad he plays for us and not somebody else," defenseman Rod Buskas said. "Some of the things he does are unbelievable."

Against Buffalo, Lemieux scored one goal by shooting the puck between his legs with his back to the goal and another by putting a stunning move on baffled Sabres goalie Tom Barrasso.

Berry also credits the best start in the Penguins' 20-year history to goaltender Roberto Romano, who has started five of the six games and "has been just spectacular," he said.

"We played the six games in 10 nights, so it's not like we've had a lot of time and have had things spaced out," Berry said. "We've played a lot of games and come up with a great start. Unfortunately, that's all it is, a start. We've got to go from here."

The Penguins have been outstanding even though high-priced rookie right wing Dwight Mathiasen flunked a preseason test as Lemieux's linemate and wound up at Baltimore of the American Hockey League.

Montreal loses to Caps

NHL Roundup

MONTREAL (AP) — The Montreal Canadiens had a boffo start and a socko finish. But it was the middle act that shot them down in Monday night's 5-4 loss to the Washington Capitals.

The Canadiens raced out to a 2-0 first-period lead over the struggling Capitals before Washington found the range — and for the next 25 minutes, the Capitals had everything their own way.

Bobby Carpenter made it 2-1 at 17:02 with a flip shot over goaltender Patrick Roy, finishing off a 2-on-1 break and putting some life back into the previously dormant Caps.

"That first goal was a really big one for us," said Washington captain Rod Langway. "We felt we could turn it around after that."

The second period was all Washington, as the Capitals outshot Montreal 12-2 and scored four times.

"It helps when you spend most of the period in their end like we did in the second," said Dave Christian, who tied the game for Washington by banging home a rebound at 4:37 of the second period. "That took a lot of pressure off our defense."

After Christian tied the game, John Barrett put Washington ahead at 11:05 by stealing the puck from Montreal defenseman Chris Chelios behind the Montreal net, skating in front and stuffing it past Roy.

The Canadiens seemed to be still shaken by that goal when Craig Laughlin increased the lead only 34 seconds later with his fourth of the year.

Just before the period ended, Washington got what proved to be the winning goal, as rookie Michal Pivonka fired home loose puck after a scramble in front of the net.

The Canadiens then mounted a rally with a pair of goals by Mats Naslund in the final 20 minutes, but it was not enough to overcome the disasterous middle period.

Canadiens' Coach Jean Perron gave the Capitals credit for the second-period surge, while absolving his defense of the blame.

"How can I blame the defense when we had only two shots in the second period," Perron said. "That was the difference in the game. They had the momentum because they worked hard in our end and they were aggressive."

Despite the 5-2 lead, Washington goaltender Bob Mason knew the Canadiens weren't going to roll over during the last 20 minutes.

White reminds crowd electric bills have been lower

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

ATHENS — Gov. Mark White told Democratic supporters rallying here last week at the Spanish Trace Hotel, that four years ago the hotel lobby was "the hottest room in the state."

In 1982, White implied, Texas Power & Light Co. electricity rates were so high that the hotel management could not afford to keep the air conditioning running at a comfortable temperature. The crowd this year enjoyed the cool surroundings, the governor went on to say, because his appointees to the Public Utility Commission have turned up the heat on power companies, making electricity affordable.

True to form in the Great Utility Debate of 1986, White's comments hit target, but only by the slimmest of margins. PUC records show that monthly commercial electric bills for Texas Utilities Electric Co. — the utility that merged with TP&L in 1984 and today serves Athens — run about $20, or 2.5 percent, below the 1982 rates for 10,000 killowatt-hours of power.

Four years ago, White rode the utility reform horse to an upset victory over then-Gov. Bill Clements. White charged that Clements' appointees to the PUC "sided with the big utility companies against the average Texan." He promised to appoint a consumer-conscious housewife to the commission and do away with the law allowing electric utilities to automatically pass changes in fuel costs on to customers.

Clements accused White of "trying to sell a bill of goods," but voters apparently bought it as they elected White by a 230,000-vote margin. Within six months of taking office, White had replaced Clements' commissioners with three of his own — including "housewife" Peggy Rosson of El Paso — and had convinced the Legislature to do away with the automatic fuel adjustment clause.

Consumers, however, saw little immediate benefit from the change. Average monthly residential electric bills increased steadily through 1983 and 1984, peaking at $77.06 for 1,000 killowatt-hours in August 1985. In West Texas, summer rates for Texas Electric Service Co.'s customers topped out at $78.54 in July 1985.

An Analysis

Largely following the declining price of the natural gas that fires the power-producing boilers, electric bills have dropped since then. The PUC reports average residential bills hit $68.29 this month, 27 cents less than the October 1982 cost.

Clements says that's not good enough for him and lists the failure to reduce utility bills as among White's "litany of broken promises" to the voters. The utility issue could prove as lucrative to the former governor in the 1986 race as it was for White in 1982.

Clements claims, correctly, that average monthly electric rates during the first six months of this year exceeded the 1982 rates by 13.3 percent. Extending that through October reduces the margin to 9.9 percent. Clements maintains — but won't produce the figures to prove it — that his own power bills have increased by 23.6 percent since White took office.

Shooting back, White says his commissioners are doing what he and they promised to do. "The PUC will give you a certificate and give one to Ole Bill over here too, showing that 94 percent of the people of Texas have lower rates today because of actions they have taken to lower those rates," he said during the Oct. 6 televised debate.

Phillip Diehl, the commission staffer who prepared that report, says it shows that 94 percent of the ratepayers served by the "big eight" electric utilities in the state had lower monthly bills for 1,000 killowatt-hours of power this summer than during the summer of 1983. Looking back at the summer of 1982, however, shows the four-month average for all utilities $4.14 lower then than now.

Don Butler, an Austin attorney who represents cities before the PUC, says White had a valid point during the 1982 campaign but has allowed "politics and deception" to keep the commission from making the most of it.

"Regulation is in worse shape now today than it was four years ago," Butler says. "It has been all rhetoric and no follow-through with the White commission."

Consumers Union attorney Carol Barger says she isn't certain whether White's look-what-I've-done campaign on utility regulation will play any better with voters than Clements' you-haven't-done-enough response. "It's not nearly as clear cut as it was in the initial (1982) race," Ms. Barger says.

One set of numbers does show that the White appointees have been less generous to electric companies than their predecessors. From 1979 to 1982, commission figures show, major electric utilities received 56.1 percent — about $1.6 billion — of the $2.8 billion in rate increases they requested. Since January 1983, the PUC has approved $316 million — 21.3 percent — of the $1.5 billion the companies wanted.

Fred Ritts, a Washington attorney who represents major industrial power users at utility commissions in Texas and four other states, says the regulatory issues have changed since White took office. Under Clements, Ritts says, "most of the companies were in the middle of their construction programs," and the PUC correctly "had to look at the ability of those utilities to raise capital to finance those huge construction programs."

Most of those big power plants are on-line or almost completed today. "Now the balance can properly shift toward the customers," Ritts says.

Tylenol purchased in Monahans may be tampering case

By JANE MARLER DEES

Possible Tylenol tampering has made its way to West Texas leaving in its wake bottles containing 30 extra-strength tablets, not capsules, as it has in the past.

A Midland man traveling through Monahans Friday night purchased a bottle of 30-count Extra-Strength Tylenol tablets, David Mills, Monahans chief of police said.

"We received a teletype message from the Midland Police Department Friday night reporting the bottle of Tylenol the man purchased in Monahans appeared to have been tampered with," Mills said.

"The protective seal was missing and there was a puncture in the foil," Mills added.

Mills said they contacted the M-System grocery store in Monahans which took its supply of Tylenol off the shelf and sent it to the Food and Drug Administration office in Dallas for testing. They have not yet received word on the status of the Tylenol, he said.

Mills added there had been no reports of illness in Monahans resulting from the ingestion of Tylenol.

In Midland, Midland Police Department Lt. Hank Norton said he believed the bottle of Tylenol purchased by the Midland man had been sent to the crime lab for testing but said he was sure that no word was back on the its status.

Terry Little, manager of the M-System grocery store at 400 Midland Dr., said upon hearing of the Monahans incident, all 30-count Extra Strength Tylenol tablet products were removed from the shelves of the three M-System stores in Midland.

"However, we went back and searched through them all and then just held out the bottles which had the same lot number as the bottle found tampered with in Monahans," Little said.

The manager of the M-System store on Rankin Highway said his store has not put any of the 30-count Tylenol products back on the shelf.

At the M-System on Avenue A at Scharbauer, all 30-count Extra Strength Tylenol tablets had been removed initially, but probably today those bottles not sharing the lot number of the bottle possibly tampered with would be put back, Mark Sedden, manager of the store, said.

"We pull all of the bottles in question off the shelves at first and then put the ones not sharing the same lot number back a few days later. We are usually slow to put them back on the shelf," Sedden said, explaining the difference in status between the Midland Drive and Rankin Highway stores.

The lot number of the Tylenol bottle possibly tampered with is BCA 868, an M-System Corporate spokesman said.

Rule affects more than 400 students, school officials say

By JULIE HILLRICHS

The controversial no-pass, no-play rule has sidelined more than 400 students in Midland's secondary schools, officials said today.

The figures released are preliminary and unofficial.

Larry Lusby, director of Midland Independent School District computer services, said a total of 58 Midland High School students, who participate in theatre arts, football, boys and girls basketball, golf, band, cross-country and boys and girls tennis, are ineligible to play for six weeks because of failing grades.

A total of 55 Lee High School students also are ineligible, he said.

The no-pass, no-play rule — a critical element of public school reforms enacted in 1984 — prohibits students from participating in extracurricular activities if they fail a course.

Grades for the first six-week period were released Oct. 10. The rule went into effect Friday.

Lusby said about 40 percent of the student population participate in one or more extracurricular activities at each of the two senior high schools.

At Lee Freshman High School, 63 students who participate in extracurricular activities failed courses and, therefore, are ineligible, Lusby said.

Midland Freshman High School reported 47 students were declared ineligible due to failing grades.

The numbers vary at the MISD's three junior high schools where there are fewer activities in which students may participate.

In assessing the results, Lusby said 94 of the San Jacinto Junior High School students who participated in either band or girls and boys athletics failed at least one course.

At Goddard and Alamo Junior High Schools, the numbers were 89 and 31 respectively.

Ector commissioners will hold hearing on fire district petition

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners have set Nov. 10 as the date for a public hearing on a petition calling for a vote by county residents on establishment of a fire district.

The issue of creating a fire district with taxing authority to serve county residents outside Odessa city limits arose when commissioners balked at renewing a joint city-county contract for fire protection that expires in October 1987 because of escalating costs.

The cost of providing fire protection and ambulance service to county residents outside the Odessa city limits in 1985, according to city figures, was about $1.5 million. Ector County paid less than $350,000 of that amount.

Under the current contract, the county increased its contribution to $525,000.

In addition to that amount, the county allocated just under $79,000 in operating funds for the county's five volunteer fire departments, plus nearly $80,000 in federal revenue sharing funds.

A fire district approved by voters would be allowed to levy a maximum tax of three cents per $100 of assessed valuation.

At that rate, with the county's decreased tax base, the fire district would receive about $500,000.

That amount would be used to operate the five volunteer fire departments and to established an ambulance service for residents outside the city limits.

A fire district tax of three cents would add about another $18 to the taxes levied on a home in the fire district with an appraised value of $60,000.

Commissioners will decide Nov. 10 after a public hearing if an election on the question of forming a fire tax district should be called and whether all areas outside the city limits should be included.

Former Big Spring detective charged in death of son

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — A 23-year-old Big Spring man, whose father is being charged in his shooting death, was sent back to prison twice for probation and parole violations, a parole officer said today.

Parole officer David Harman, said Dell Cantwell was sent to prison twice after an aggravated assault arrest and for unlawfully carrying a weapon during his probation and parole.

Cantwell's father, Richard Cantwell, a former Big Spring police detective, is being charged with the Sunday shooting death of his son.

According to parole files, Dell Cantwell was sent to the Texas Department of Corrections after serving four months of a 10-year probation for car theft.

His probation was revoked with an aggravated assault arrest in December 1981.

Cantwell was then released from prison on parole in April 1984, but returned in July 1985 after being arrested in Odessa for unlawfully carrying a weapon.

Cantwell, had been living with his parents in Big Spring since his release on parole July 15, 1986, Harman said.

Dell Cantwell was killed around 3 a.m. Sunday after an apparent argument with his father, said Howard County Sheriff A.N. Standard.

He died from a single gunshot wound to the heart, said Justice of the Peace Willie Grant.

Harman said he was shocked by the death.

"I was kinda shocked. They had typical father-son disagreements like everybody does, but nothing I knew was serious.

"When they told me about it Monday morning, I was stunned," Harman said.

Richard Cantwell, 45, worked as a detective on the Big Spring Police Department for 10 years from 1966-77.

Stanley Bogard, who was police chief when Richard Cantwell worked on the force, said Cantwell retired in 1977 to go into his own carpentry business.

"He just wasn't making enough money and he just wanted to get into carpentry," Bogard said.

Bogard said the detective was a "good man."

"I'm sure there's a lot of things we don't know that prompted it (the shooting). I do know that Richie was a good man," Bogard said.

Richard Cantwell was released from the Howard County Jail Monday on a $60,000 bond.

Big Spring woman undergoes surgery after pit bull dog attack

BIG SPRING (AP) — An 81-year-old woman underwent surgery Monday after an attack by a pit bull, authorities said.

Police Lt. Jerry Edwards said Carmen Abreo was hospitalized Friday after one of five dogs chained in her yard attacked her. He said police don't know what provoked the attack.

The woman was in stable but serious condition at Scenic Mountain Medical Center for massive tissue destruction to her right arm, Edwards said.

Edwards said Mrs. Abreo's husband, Jim Abreo, 84, also was attacked while trying to rescue her, but he was treated and released.

Edwards said the dogs belong to the couple's son, Sam Abreo, and that the dog believed responsible for the attack was quarantined in an animal shelter.

Mother proud to be called 'Mrs. ZZ'

By BRUCE WESTBROOK

HOUSTON (AP) — She's a rock 'n' roll momma, and she couldn't be prouder.

She's Lorraine Gibbons, mother of ZZ Top guitarist Billy Gibbons, who has seen her son's band become the highest-grossing rock act on the road this year, with more than $15 million in earnings.

That's a long way from the days in 1969 when Billy, bassist Dusty Hill and drummer Frank Beard formed ZZ Top at the Gibbons' Tanglewood home shortly after Gibbons graduated from Lee High School.

"Their first rehearsal hall was in our garage," Mrs. Gibbons said. "At first they were in the den, but there was hardly room for a coffee pot in there with all the drums and guitars. Billy's father told the boys they could use the garage if they soundproofed it, so they did."

His father, Freddie Gibbons, who died in 1981, was a prominent pianist here for many years. He met his future wife in the '40s when she was a model at Sakowitz and he was perfoming for a style show. They also have a daughter, Pamela Bray, 33, who is married, has a daughter and is curator of education at the High Museum of Art in Atlanta.

"We're a pretty independent family as individuals," Mrs. Gibbons said. "But we're still a family."

She denies having musical talent — "just a musical ear." But Mrs. Bray took piano lessons, young Gibbons took guitar lessons, "and the house was filled with music all the time, because Freddie was either playing piano in the living room or playing organ in the den. Music was part of our life."

Gibbons was more interested in studying guitar than books, and soon he was giving lessons himself. When he decided to pursue a rock music career, his parents backed him.

"I told him, 'We have no failures in this family. If that's what you want to do, then go after it,' " his mother says. "And Freddie was supportive. But he'd have been just as supportive if Billy had become an Episcopal priest."

Gibbons played in local bands — the Coachmen and the Moving Sidewalks — and briefly attended the University of Houston before getting Hill and Beard of Dallas to join him as ZZ Top. Since then they have made their climb to the top.

The band's last album, "Eliminator," sold 8 million copies, and the current "Afterburner" has sold more than 4 million so far. The trio is at its poplar peak, and there is no end in sight.

"They have no plans to retire," Mrs. Gibbons said. "Heavens no! They're almost cloned to each other. They'll probably still be playing in their late 50s. As long as they are having as much fun as they're having, there's no reson not to do it."

Mrs. Gibbons isn't about to quit her job, either. She is administratve assistant to Augie Erfurth, executive athletic director at Rice University. She's also a member of the governing council of the Shepherd School of Music.

She started working at Rice 17 years ago — the same time ZZ Top was formed.

"I think the young people of this country are great," she said, "and I thought the best way to find out about them and see what's going on is to be where they are." When the Rice students learn who she is, they call her "Mrs. ZZ."

Mrs. ZZ doesn't let her grandmotherly status stop her from enjoying rock 'n' roll. She listens to some pop and classical music, but mostly ZZ Top.

"I love it," she said. "I have all of ZZ's records, and I play them all the time. And the louder the better. I have to keep the house closed up when I play their albums."

She's also a fan of ZZ Top's music videos, which she tapes off television. Last summer she flew to Los Angeles to watch production of the band's latest clip, "Velcro Fly."

"They're all so fun," she said. "But my favorite is "Rough Boy." It's not only a great tune, but the video (with an outer-space car wash) has incredible ingenuity."

"Rough Boy" ends with the message "Stay clean." Mrs. Gibbons isn't sure if that's meant literally or has a deeper meaning.

"For them, it certainly doesn't mean clean-shaven," she laughed, referring to Gibbons' and Hill's belly-length beards. Those beards and dark sunglasses are the band's trademarks.

"It took Billy five or six years to grow that beard," his mother said. "It doesn't bother me. I've gotten used to it. It always amazes me when people ask me if it's real."

Fake beards are a common joke at ZZ Top concerts, and Mrs. Gibbons admits wearing one herself. That was at an MTV awards show in New York, when beards and glasses were given to the audience when ZZ Top performed.

Gibbons isn't home often — he's usually touring or recording in another city. But when he is here, his mother likes to join him for dinner with his friends.

"He has a lot of friends," she said. "He doesn't seclude himself. And he'll always sign an autograph.

Red tide may linger until December

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A toxic red tide that invaded the Texas coast in August could linger through December if temperatures do not drop below 60 degrees, officials said.

"It may be later than that, depending on the season," said Pat Patterson, a forecaster at the National Weather Service in Corpus Christi.

The red tide, an explosion of microscopic organisms, appeared in late August near Galveston and has moved into Mexican waters, leaving behind millions of dead fish.

Officials in this city of 250,000 closed area beaches to swimmers and state officials have suspended oyster harvesting, which was scheduled to begin Nov. 1.

Biologists and state officials said the red tide's existence along the coast depends on the concentration of organisms, wind direction and speed and the water temperature.

For now, they're hoping for a cold front.

The water temperature has been in the upper 70s and a temperature of 60 degrees or below is needed for the red tide to diminish, but that may not occur until mid-December, officials said.

Dr. Frank Judd, director of the Pan American University Coastal Studies Laboratory at South Padre Island, said the water temperature in far south Texas is still in the 80s.

"It needs to get below 60 degrees Fahrenheit and it also depends on what kind of cold front we get," Judd said. "We don't get any persistent cold weather until late November or December."

A pigmy sperm whale, about 9 feet long and weighing 500 pounds, was stranded on Mustang Island early Monday, but Dr. Tony Amos of the University of Texas Marine Science Institute said he doesn't know if it was caused by the red tide.

The whale died and will be sent to Texas A&M University for analysis, Amos said.

Hal Osburn, harvest program leader for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department's marine laboratory in Rockport, said Monday the red tide was about 1 to 4 miles wide from Port O'Connor to the Mexican border, a distance of about 170 miles.

"It could be up to 3,000 square miles of the Gulf of Mexico that has some red tide in it," Osburn said.

It has killed pinheads, hardheads, catfish, mullets and some large redfish, Judd said.

The red tide has stabilized off the coast, he said, but officials are concerned that it will enter the Laguna Madre, a nursery for shrimp, oysters and other fish located between Port Isabel and South Padre Island.

"There's really nothing to prevent it from moving in there," Judd said. "It can change overnight."

Merchants along the Texas coast have complained that national news of the phenomenon has hurt business.

Oysters, clams and mussels filter the toxin and retain it in their systems for weeks. Health officials have warned that eating contaminated shellfish could lead to nausea and diarrhea.

Joby Reed, manager of the Water Street Oyster Bar, located two blocks from Corpus Christi Bay, said residents "know that the restaurants around here are not going to sell (contaminated) fish to them. But tourists, they may be worried about it."

Dick Bushnell, spokesman for the South Padre Island Tourist Bureau, said the red tide has hit the resort and some tourists were cancelling their hotel accommodations.

He said, however, that the toxins were not as bad Monday as they were last week.

"Businessmen are concerned and I think they're a little bit upset about the fact that...the situation here is not what exists in the Corpus Christi, Padre Island area and South Padre Island tends to suffer," Bushnell said.

Folk music collector John Lomax researched songs of the Texas range, resulting ina 1910 publication, "Cowboy Songs and Other Frontier Ballads."

Music collector gathers scores of Texas songs

Associated Press

The buffalo had long since disappeared and the open range had been fenced when Texas music collector John Lomax, in 1908, sought out a black saloonkeeper in San Antonio who could recall cowboy songs from his days as a trail cook.

"Oh, give me a home where the buffalo roam, where the deer and the antelope play," he began to sing. And Lomax recorded all of "Home on the Range" for his collection of Texas folksong discoveries.

The song later became President Franklin Roosevelt's favorite, and Admiral Robert Byrd even took it to the South Pole.

Lomax's research for such Texas songs resulted in a 1910 publication, "Cowboy Songs and other Frontier Ballads." This collection made Lomax the most well-known person in the history of Texas folk music, asserts folklorist Francis E. Abernethy.

It was during his childhood in Bosque County by the Old Chisholm Trail that Lomax first heard and learned cowboy songs. In his teens, he began to write down a few of them.

From 1887 to 1897, he alternately attended college and taught school, finally graduating from the University of Texas. He worked for the university in Austin, then taught English at Texas A&M University for several years before receiving a scholarshp to study at Harvard University in 1906.

Two of his Harvard teachers encouraged him to return to Texas to gather and publish Southwestern folk ballads.

Folklorist James McNutt says Lomax headed for the field in 1907, packing an Edison cylinder sound recorder. He rounded up such cowboy classics as:

"I woke up one morning on the Old Chisholm Trail, With a rope in my hand and a cow by the tail, Come a ti yi yipee yipee yea, yipee yea, Come a ti yi yipee yipee yea."

The vibrant sentiments and references to trail life in the wide-open West heard in such cowboy favorites appealed to many Americans just as Western novels did. For factory or office workers crowded into the nation's cities, cowboy stories and songs offered vicarious adventure.

For Lomax, the next two decades involved academic service and ventures in the business world. He also helped found the Texas Folklore Society.

Then, in the 1930s, with his son Alan, he headed into the rural South, particularly isolated black towns and penitentiaries, in search of black folk songs. He hoped to find versions of songs less influenced by commercial music on the radio or phonograph records.

Lomax visited "the Walls," as prisoners called the state penitentiary in Huntsville, and stopped at prison farms in Texas and Louisiana, Abernethy says.

Among his notable discoveries was a Texas-Louisiana prisoner named Huddie Ledbetter, but known as "Leadbelly." Despite his repeat record of homicides, Ledbetter sang and played guitar so impressively that Lomax managed to have him paroled.

He chauffered for Lomax, helped him interview other black singers, and performed songs that are still a vital part of native Texas culture, such as "The Midnight Special":

"If you ever go to Houston, Boy, you'd better walk right; You better not gamble, And you better not fight. 'Cause the sheriff will arrest you, And throw you in jail. You can bet your bottom dollar, Ain't gonna be no bail. Let the Midnight Special shine its light on me..."

Later, critics questioned Lomax's interpretation of blues songs like "The Midnight Special."

He believed, for instance, that the blues were mostly expressions of self-pity and that "... the Negro's self-pity is based on feelings of race inferiority — a feeling of which he may well be only sub-consciously aware...he has grown to regard himself as a victim of hard luck, generally abused by everybody; and, at least in many instances, he seems not averse to nursing his gloom a little."

Yet folklorist Alan Govenar points out that despite Lomax's prejudiced assumptions, his collections of traditional black music — rural spirituals, field hollers and blues — are important Texas documents.

Indeed, Lomax's recordings provide one musical context for Texas culture that might have been lost forever.

Cisneros addresses North Carolina city officials

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — San Antonio Mayor Henry T. Cisneros urged North Carolina municipal officials Monday to keep up a "relentless, insistent pressure for results" as local government enters a period of change.

"Some cities are going to be victims — victims of unemployment and poverty, " Cisneros told delegates representing 474 cities, towns and villages in the North Carolina League of Municipalities. "Others will prosper because they have a plan...Today they must be catalysts — not reactive but proactive."

Cisneros, president of the National League of Cities, said change is becoming such a constant of modern life that public officials must not rest on previous accomplishments.

The national economy is depending much less on manufacturing than it once did, he said. The United States has lost 900,000 jobs paying more than $13 per hour since 1980 while gaining five million jobs paying $5 to $7 per hour, he said.

Meanwhile, he added, the gap between the technologically educated and the illiterate threatens to widen.

Foreign imports cut into U.S. production as they remind everyone that this country is now part of a global economy, Cisneros said. And by 1990 — for the first time in history — there will be more Americans over the age of 65 than teen-agers.

Women and minorities are playing an increasing role in public life. And government is becoming more decentralized — not only because the federal government can no longer afford the funding it used to provide but also because Americans prefer government closer to the people, Cisneros said.

"Municipalities have had a good defense" amid these changes and the "severe attack" of cuts in federal spending, he said. While federal funds for cities have declined from $67 billion in 1980 to $17 billion in 1986, and the revenue sharing program was lost, cities did succeed in winning the $2.4 billion clean water bill and other programs, he said.

Municipalities also succeeded in defending themselves against potentially harmful provisions of tax reform, he added. The result is that towns still have the power to issue bonds.

But Cisneros said defense is not enough. Municipalities must develop a strategy, decide what they want to do and act to achieve it, he said.

"The cities that succeed are not going to be those that pick up someone else's recipe book," he said. "Every city has to have its own way."

The strategies may include developing tourism, building small business incubators, expanding airports and starting programs to enhance world trade, he said.

Local governments must maintain a new infrastructure that includes education, research and financing as well as roads and bridges, Cisneros said. And local officials must try to include as many people as possible in their decisions, using consensus instead of authority.

"In a state this diverse and with problems this large no one can afford to leave anyone outside the door," Cisneros said.

DEATHS

Jennie M. Capron

LINCOLN, Neb. — Jennie M. Capron of Lincoln, Neb., mother of Mrs. Manton (Peggy) Jones of Midland, died Oct. 16.

Services were at 10 a.m. Oct. 18 at the Trinity United Methodist Church in Lincoln with the Rev. Jerry McInnis, pastor officiating. Burial was at Lincoln Memorial Park.

Mrs. Capron, 98, was born in Ord, Neb., and had been a resident of Lincoln since 1906. She was the oldest member of the Trinity United Methodist Church. As a 1910 graduate of the University of Nebraska, she was one of its oldest alumni. She had worked as a volunteer for the Retired Senior Volunteers Program in Lincoln until three weeks after her 98th birthday this past summer. She was also a member of the Wesleyan Educational Council and the United Methodist Women. She had served as a volunteer for the YWCA, Chautauqua, and the Red Cross.

Other survivors include a son, John Capron of Lincoln; another daughter, Mrs. Dwight (Evelyn) Jones of Burlington, Iowa; seven grandchildren; eight great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild.

The family requests memorials be directed to one's favorite charity.

Eddie Durrett

ODESSA — Eddie Durrett, 66, of Odessa died Sunday at a Dallas hospital.

Services were to be today at 2 p.m. at the Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home chapel. Burial was to be at Sunset Memorial Gardens.

Durrett was born Jan. 19, 1920, in Globe, Ariz. He married the former Jean Leese Aug. 4, 1951, in Jal, N.M., and they moved to Odessa from Kermit in 1952. He was the owner of Durrett & Associates.

He was a member of the Christian Church and was a veteran of the U.S. Army. He was also a member of the Independent Drilling Association and was a past president of the Odessa A&M Club. Durrett also served as president of the 1982 Oil Show.

Survivors include his wife; three daughters, Dana Jean Ashton and Bobbie Lou Halifax, both of Odessa, and Rosemary Durrett of Jacksonville, Fla.; and seven grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to the Lukemia Foundation.

Serena Jessen

STANTON — Serena Belle Jessen, 73, of Big Spring died Friday in Landers, Calif., following a sudden illness.

Graveside services will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday at the Evergreen Cemetery in Stanton with the Rev. Jerry Lewis officiating. Services will be under the direction of Gilbreath Funeral Home of Stanton.

Mrs. Jessen was born Dec. 1, 1912, in Centerhoma, Okla. She moved to Big Spring in July of 1985 from Prescott, Ariz. She married Herman George Jessen April 6, 1951, in Lordsburg, N.M. He preceded her in death on Sept. 15 of this year.

Survivors include one son, James C. Hovey of Landers, Calif.; five stepsons, Kenneth Leroy Jessen, Clyde Jessen and Jim Jessen, both of Everett, Wash., Lawrence Jessen of Meyer, Ariz., and Tommy Jessen of Ketchkan, Alaska; one sister, Jewel Cannon of Janesville, Calif.; 19 grandchildren; and 11 great-grandchildren.

Bill H. Alley

Bill H. Alley of Midland died early today at a local hospital.

BAND

At the band's shows Mrs. Gibbons likes to sit onstage, near the lighting technician. Often she sits with Cecile Ham, wife of ZZ Top manager Bill Ham. Or she may sit by the sound mixer's board in the middle of the crowd (once she even braved the floor crowd).

"Billy is having such a great time. They really do enjoy what they're doing. The three of them all go their separate ways when they're not working, but they all get along well."

Gibbons lives in southwest Houston, not far from his mother. Hill and Beard also live here, but their families live in Dallas.

Gibbons' uncle Ross Perricone also attends concerts. "He's just crazy about ZZ Top," Mrs. Gibbons said. "Billy made him a lifetime member of their fan club. He has all their records and T-shirts. This gentlemn is 60 years old."

Gibbons is the only ZZ Top member who has never married and had children. "He's had a lot of good-looking girlfriends," his mother said.

She would have preferred that Gibbons finish college, and she wouldn't mind if he brought her more grandchildren. But she respects her son's decisions and believes in what he's doing.

"Belief is synonymous with respect — respect for your fellow man," Mrs.Gibbons said. "If you don't give respect, you're not going to get it.

"Both the children got where they are on their own. I'm happy to be the mother of Billy, but I don't go around saying, 'I'm Billy Gibbons' mother.' What Billy has done he's done on his own. He is a self-made man."

In the home where she has lived since 1952, Mrs. Gibbons has converted her son's old bedroom into a sedate guest bedroom. There is no trace of the place here he strummed his first guitar and built model cars as a youngster. But there are plenty of photos in the hallway, including a shot of Gibbons and his dad, who had planned to make music together just before he died.

Freddie Gibbons came from another era and played another style of music. But he like to pick out ZZ Top tunes on his keyboards, Mrs. Gibbons said, "and he couldn't wait to get their latest tapes."

"I once asked Freddie, 'Is Billy good because he's good or because he's ours?' He said, 'I have 88 keys on my piano, and Billy has five strings on his guitar. Billy is good because he's great.' "

Murder trial witness arrested

ARLINGTON (AP) — A witness whose testimony helped convict a man in the pickax slaying of a convenience store clerk was arrested on a Bexar County murder warrant, authorities said.

Michael Jerome Coleman, 27, of Arlington, was in the Arlington jail today. Bond was set at $15,000. Coleman was arrested Sunday night, said police spokesman Dee Anderson.

Coleman is the cousin of Ray Anthony Jennings, who was sentenced to life in prison Oct. 8 after being convicted in the murder and robbery of James Henry Dudley Jr. Dudley's body was found Jan. 4, 1985 in a convenience store with a pickax embedded in his head.

Coleman testifed that he received $1,600 for turning in Jennings to Tarrant County Crime Stoppers.

Police arrested Coleman in connection with an offense unrelated to the murder warrant, Anderson said. A routine check turned up a similarity in Coleman's name and a man wanted on a warrant in Bexar County, Anderson said.

Arlington police have a birth date of Jan. 11, 1959, for Coleman, Anderson said. The man wanted in Bexar County is believed to have been born June 12, 1959, said John Causey, a Bexar County assistant district attorney.

"It may be the guy has a false ID, or it may be they have the wrong one," Causey said. "We can check through fingerprints and mug shots. We get guys in all the time with all kinds of names and dates of birth."

A man named Michael Jerome Coleman is wanted in San Antonio in connection with the March 7, 1982, shooting death of James Brooks, 19, of San Antonio, Causey said.

Dick Clark's son following father's footsteps

ENTERTAINMENT

"It (long-running "American Bandstand") was almost like a member of the family, sort of like a twin brother."
— R.A. "Rac" Clark, son of entertainer Dick Clark

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dick Clark had two babies in 1957: the national telecast of "American Bandstand" and his son Rac.

"It was almost like a member of the family, sort of like a twin brother," R.A. Clark said of the long-running dance program originally broadcast from Philadelphia.

Actually, "Bandstand" was seven years old when baby Richard arrived, but it had been only a local show until then.

The son is now producing two series for Dick Clark Productions, "Puttin' on the Hits" and "Puttin' on the Kids."

"I think of it as a family business," said Rac Clark. "If it was a hardware store I'd still want to be in the business.

"It's been easier for me to get in because I see my friends are having a tougher time. But people expect more of you. I'm just learning what it's all about. People expected me to know all about the entertainment industry when I was 18 or 19. But I was just starting out."

Clark was working as a stage manager for "The Half-Hour Comedy Hour" when Chris Bearde came up with the concept for "Puttin' on the Hits" and asked him to be the producer. The show allows people to act out their superstar fantasies by lip-synching hit records.

The show, now in its third season, is syndicated to 130 stations. "Puttin' on the Kids" is a pint-sized spinoff in which youngsters 5-12 perform numbers for Savings Bonds. The show is syndicated to 109 stations.

"We had a little Vietnamese boy do Elvis Presley," said Clark. "A little girl did Spike Jones' version of 'You Always Hurt the One You Love.'"

Clark and his people have sponsored more than 120 auditions around the country in the last three years.

"The auditions are usually held in a mall," he said. "There are local judges, and a local celebrity, usually a radio personality, is the MC. We try to make it a local version of the national show. A lot of people audition but only a few float to the top."

The top acts from the auditions are put on video tape, and Clark selects six for each weekly half-hour show. The contestants in "Puttin' on the Hits" compete for prizes and are judged on the basis of lip synch, appearance and originality. The kids are judged simply on an overall score.

"Puttin' on the Hits" was Clark's first major venture into producing. Before that he had produced some segments for "TV's Bloopers & Practical Jokes," the NBC show that starred his father and Ed McMahon.

"I started when I was about 13 or 14," he said. "I worked in the mail room during my summer vacations. As soon as I was old enough I became a messenger. When I got out of college I worked for a few other production companies to see how other people worked. I also worked as a talent coordinator for Chris Bearde," who is a partner with Dick Clark in some projects.

"I have an idea for another syndicated series and a special. But I really want to concentrate on making these two shows successful since they're my first shows."

Clark said his first ambition was to be an eye surgeon because he had had several operations while a youngster.

"But when I found out it took 14 years of study I thought I'd do something else," he said. "It was always fun to watch my father work. And it looked like the work was fun. It wasn't like going to an office every morning. I studied television production at Northwestern (University)."

The children's spinoff developed when Clark began to notice how popular youngsters who appeared on the show were with audiences.

One area where Clark has not followed his father is working as an on-the-air host. Allen Fawcett is the host of "Puttin' on the Hits" and Michael Young is host of "Puttin' on the Kids."

"I tried out a few times," said Clark, "but the chemistry wasn't right. I'll concentrate on the producing."

R.A. "Rac" Clark was born the same year his father, Dick Clark, began the national telecast of "American Bandstand." Rac Clark is now producing two series for his father's production company.

BUSINESS / INDUSTRY

Total contents paid advertising

Last week, during National Temporary Help Services Week, Olsten of Midland Owner Amy Stewart, was at the Oil Show letting people know how they can maximize their profits with temporaries. If you missed it, call 683-5677.

Olsten: something to celebrate

Olsten Temporary Services of Midland, along with many other temporary help companies, observed National Temporary Help Services Week last week. Activities were planned to salute temporary workers and to celebrate one of the nation's fastest growing industries - temporary services.

According to Amy Stewart, Owner of Olsten of Midland, "One out of every 200 jobs in this country is a temporary help job."

In fact, 5-million people are employed by the temporary help industry each year, with more than 700,000 workers assigned daily to temporary positions.

According to the Administrative Management Society, nine out of 10 businesses now use temporary help on a regular basis.

With both business and workers learning to depend on temporary employment, the U.S. Department of Labor has predicted that the industry will be one of the fastest growing through the 1980s.

It's no wonder that Olsten of Midland has so much to celebrate, when you consider the powerful management tool found in temporaries.

Today's personnel-related costs are approximately 75 percent of all business expenses. So controlling these costs has become the key to maximizing profits.

Olsten Temporary Services is the management tool that can effectively cut hidden personnel costs by increasing productivity, improving efficiency and lowering overhead.

Stewart explains that Olsten can help you maintain the right staffing level when work flow varies because of special projects, seasonal peaks or urgent deadlines.

Permanent overstaffing to meet these needs is exceptionally expensive since benefits and fringes have increased tremendously in the last two decades. Social Security, unemployment insurance, worker's compensation, disability insurance, administrative costs, vacation, holiday and sick pay, as well as company benefits drive the payroll costs up, up, up.

Overtime is also costly both financially and in terms of productivity. Long hours mean higher payroll costs, higher error rates, lower performance and less productivity.

With Olsten you avoid the expense of overstaffing AND keep your permanent people free of increased pressures that can cause morale problems when you need teamwork most.

Olsten provides temporary workers in the office/clerical, word processing, accounting, legal, marketing, records management, light industrial and technical fields to business and industry nationwide and throughout the Midland/Odessa area.

So, your business also has reason to celebrate one of the nation's fastest growing industries. Call Olsten of Midland at 683-5677 and begin utilizing one of your most powerful management tools.

Sewing Machine Supply extends sale

Sewing Machine Supply, located in the Village Shopping Center facing Wall Street near Folger's, is continuing their grand opening sale one more week. To celebrate their new location, all their machines are on sale. That includes many models of Singer, New Home and Viking! Now's the perfect time to put a Christmas present on lay-away at sale prices and register for a FREE Match a Patch.

The list of specials seems almost endless, but one of the best values being offered is on the Singer 6215. This machine, which features a stretch stitch, normally retails for $399.95. Sewing Machine Supply bought this model in quantity so they could offer it to you for the lowest price in the area - just $189. To make this an even more attractive offer, the shop is offering free first year maintenance on this machine, as they do on many new machines. (They offer in-store repair. Your sewing machine is never sent off.)

Owner Catherine Claggett says she is also offering the New Home 654 (regularly $399.95) for $189.

There are other tremendous values.

- This is a must to see. The New Home 372 with 15 stitches, regularly priced at $469, is now just $269.
- Buy a Viking 950 programmable machine and get a Viking 100 FREE.
- Select a top of the line machine, get FREE overlock or cabinet.
- Featherlite by Glaco weighs less than 12 lbs. This handy free arm has stretch stitches and is regularly priced at $349. Now, it is only $170.
- Take this ad in and receive $7.50 off repairs or have two pair of scissors sharpened FREE.
- You'll get $10 worth of fabric FREE at Walgreen's when you buy a machine at Sewing Machine Supply.

The bargains are tremendous, but the best part is you can expect service. Whether it's parts and accessories or in-shop repair you'll find it at Sewing Machine Supply.

Parts and accessories for most machines are kept in-stock, along with all-wood cabinets. Even some used Singer cabinets are available, now.

To better serve you, the store offers free mounting and delivery anywhere in the Permian Basin when you purchase a machine and cabinet. They also offer FREE Christmas gift wrapping, even on cabinets!

Moreover, "we want to help you learn your new machine. If you don't understand it, you won't use it and won't like it," Mrs. Claggett says.

Sewing Machine Supply accepts Visa and MasterCard, and other financing is available.

"Come see and compare what we have. We try to meet any price in town on same model machines in stock. We give service after the sale," says Mrs. Claggett.

Catherine Claggett, owner of Sewing Machine Supply, invites you to check out their tremendous bargains and register for a free Match a Patch. One of the best values at their new location, facing Wall Street in Village Shopping Center, is the Singer 6215, regularly $399.95, now just $188.

Alarm Systems Inc.: Our business is putting burglars out of business

Ask William A. Womack how he got into the alarm business, and he'll tell you, "I got burglarized." Womack, a security consultant with Alarm Systems Inc., knows the difference an expertly selected and installed alarm system can make.

The water color and oil works of local Artist William Schumpert will be featured in an art show at Midland Gallery, Western Park Plaza, on Saturday October 25.

Midland Gallery schedules Schumpert art show Oct. 25

Fern H. Crume and Floetta Stafford of the Midland Gallery, located in Western Park Plaza, announce that they will be holding an art show on Saturday, October 25, featuring the work of local artist William Schumpert. Schumpert, who works both with water color and oils, specializes in Southwest and Biblical art. He will be at the show from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. His work will be displayed all day.

This graduate of Midland High School says that his high school art teacher, Mrs. Barnett, taught him the basic drawing and painting skills that every artist must learn. Beyond that, Schumpert is self-taught.

"I have been painting since before I could write my name and sold my first painting at the age of 12. My mother always bought me watercolor paint because it was easy to clean up. I guess you could say I grew up with it," the artist says.

Today, water color is still his favorite medium.

Schumpert enjoys painting Plains Indians, but he also has a great love for portraying Biblical scenes. "Artists have been painting Biblical scenes for centuries. Through these paintings I try to show the historic events of the Bible. I take a verse and portray it as I visualize the event... I want it to be more meaningful for the viewer and a lasting treasure for collectors, as well as a spiritual boost when words seem out of reach," he explains.

Whatever he is painting, this local artist says, "I am trying to use the talent God has given me in producing quality painting... I want to make sure that God gets all credit for my ability to create and produce painting."

"I became a Christian about four years ago, and it has not only changed my painting but my life as well," Schumpert says.

His works are regularly displayed at the Midland Gallery and Artesian Gallery, Riudoso, New Mexico.

Schumpert's works are entered in two major upcoming competitions - The International Religious Fine Art Program in Tulsa, OK (November 1986) and Art Quest '87 in Los Angelos, California (February, 1987).

Schumpert describes his art career this way, "It's like being in a car. I've been on the dirt road a long time but feel my career has hit pavement this year... My career has a long way to go but I won't worry about it. I am going to sit back and enjoy the ride because I'm not drive'n, God is."

By Jeane Dixon
Wednesday, October 22, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Your way with words will bring you new social and romantic opportunities. You are able to do things you have only dreamed about in the past. Steer clear of emotional entanglements that you think will make you unhappy. An employment change may have you confused at first, but it will eventually put more money in your bank account. Some restrictions you have had to live with in the recent past will disappear.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Hungarian composer Franz Liszt, Sen. John Chaffee (R-R.I.), actress Annette Funicello, actresses Constance Bennett and Sarah Bernhardt, French actress-model Catherine Deneuve, actress Joan Fontaine, Cubs and BoSox slugger Jimmy Fox, author Doris Lessing, music's Dory Previn, hitting expert Harry Walker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A new business benefits from the advice of experts. Your business and romantic partner could be one and the same!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel offers a needed change of scenery. Making decisions is easier than ever before. Member of opposite sex tries to complicate your life. Protect your rights.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may have to work just a little harder to prove yourself. You gain greater visibility thanks to a community project. Romance sizzles!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Act on original ideas as soon as possible. Financial commitments come at the last minute. Improve your research techniques. A new romance makes former lover take notice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Seize an unusual employment opportunity. A new relationship is very positive. Take care of household chores instead of pushing them off on other family members.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use a positive approach with bickering colleagues. A relationship is put to the test. Strengthen your ties with family members.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You could get a raise or promotion. Communication with overseas clients is essential to business success. Keep in touch with a person who has special needs.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A loan or part-time job could be the answer to a temporary cash shortage. You get a chance to showcase your talents.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Postpone making a financial decision until you consult experts. Business and employment affairs go better following an important telephone call. Romance comes into the picture tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A prominent person shows interest in your finances and career. Pay attention to details. Watch out for arguments with your mate or partner. Keep a firm grip on your emotions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Recent fortunate business or financial trends resurface. Capitalize on an unusual opportunity. A brief encounter could lead to an exciting relationship. Be open-minded.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stick to routine tasks at work and tackle long-postponed chores at home. Seek new ways to develop untapped talent. Romance flourishes.

Opening lead: Ace of ♡

When responder makes a simple raise of opener's suit over an overcall, it is rare for the overcaller's partner to want to make a low-level penalty double. Dr. George Rosenkranz of Mexico City has suggested that, instead, the double be used to show a raise of partner's suit including an honor. This idea has caught on across the Atlantic, as this hand from an Italian tournament shows.

North-South were employing canape methods, where opener's first bid is in his shorter suit. East's double was, in effect, a raise to three clubs with one of the three top honors, and South arrived at four spades doubled after a competitive auction.

The play went quickly. West led the ace of hearts and continued the suit. A defensive heart ruff was in the making, and declarer did the best he could by winning in hand and leading a low spade, in the fond hope that West might duck and allow declarer the luxury of leading a second round of trumps.

However, the bidding had made the hand an open book. West was going to be quite happy with down one, and he decided that it was more likely that his partner held only two clubs than that declarer was missing the king of trumps. So he shot up with the ace of spades and underled his club honors. In with the king of clubs, East had no difficulty in reverting to hearts, and West's ruff with his low trump defeated the contract one trick.

Those foreigners are going to be hard to beat if we keep exporting our best ideas! But it is heartening to see that bridge shares a common language no matter where in the world it is played.

Miss America reunited with her father

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Kellye Cash flew by helicopter to a Navy cargo ship to meet with her father for the first time since she became Miss America.

Capt. Roy Cash Jr., commander of the amphibious ship El Paso, had been off the Norwegian coast for a NATO exercise called Northern Wedding '86 when his daughter was crowned Sept. 13. The ship was heading toward its home port at the Norfolk Naval Station after 2½ months at sea when Monday's reunion took place.

"This takes away all of the sadness of him not being there when I won," said the 21-year-old former Miss Tennessee.

"There She Is, Miss America" played over the ship's loudspeakers as Miss Cash walked through rows of sailors standing at attention. She accepted a dozen yellow roses from her father and signed more than 100 autographs.

"I had confidence in my heart she was going to win," said Cash, who watched the pageant on television.

Ford

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Former President Jerry Ford says Chevy Chase didn't consult him before deciding to seek drug treatment at the Betty Ford Center.

About two weeks after Chase's Sept., 20 appearance with Ford in Grand Rapids, Mich., at a symposium on humor, a spokeswoman for Chase announced he had entered the clinic because he had become addicted to prescription drugs.

Chase

The spokeswoman said the drugs were used to treat back pains that were the result of years of television and movie pratfalls and stunts.

At a news conference Monday during a Republican fund-raiser, Ford said Chase didn't discuss his drug problem during the symposium.

"There was absolutely no mention of that," Ford said. "As far as I know and as far as Betty knows, he made the choice totally on his own and without any consultation with either one of us."

Chase often spoofed Ford on NBC's "Saturday Night Live" as a bumbler.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The ACLU says charges of distributing sexually explicit material to minors should be dropped against the lead singer of the punk rock group the "Dead Kennedys" because they violate his First Amendment rights.

Jello Biafra, whose real name is Eric Boucher, faces a charge of distributing harmful material to a minor. The charge, which carries a maximum year imprisonment and $2,000 fine upon conviction, stem from parental complaints about a poster included with the group's 1985 album, "Frankenchrist."

City Attorney James Hahn has called the poster a close-up montage of 10 sex acts. The poster is no longer included with the album.

Documents filed Monday in Municipal Court say Biafra's First Amendment rights to free expression protect him from prosecution, said American Civil Liberties Union attorney Carol Sobel. A hearing was scheduled for Dec. 8.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Entertainer Wayne Newton says his good reputation and ability to draw crowds made him an attractive partner in the purchase of the Aladdin Hotel in 1980.

Newton, testifying Monday in his defamation trial against NBC, said he agreed to play up to 26 weeks at the hotel as part of the deal he and partner Ed Torres put together to buy it for $85 million.

"It was necessary, he (Torres) felt, that I play 20-26 weeks a year myself to get it (the Aladdin) off the ground," Newton said. "He was going to furnish the management and I would furnish the entertainment."

Newton, who later sold his share in the hotel and casino, said he was loaned $10 million by Valley Bank to buy a 50 percent interest in the resort as part of a deal proposed by the bank's chairman, E. Parry Thomas.

"Parry Thomas said my reputation was impeccable and it should go a long ways toward us getting licensed," he said.

Newton testified that the deal was made after comedian Johnny Carson failed in two bids with his partners to buy the hotel.

Earlier, a series of obscenity-laced wiretaps featuring two reputed organized crime figures were played for a federal jury as Newton sought to prove he was defamed when NBC linked him to the two men.

Attorneys for Newton spent more than an hour playing tapes of the wiretaps, which featured Guido Penosi and Frank Piccolo discussing how they solved a problem for the entertainer.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The miniseries "Tender Is the Night" and the movie "Murrow" dominated the nominations for the eighth annual ACE awards for cable television.

Showtime's "Tender Is the Night," based on the novel by F. Scott Fitzgerald, received seven nominations. Home Box Office's "Murrow," based on the life of television newsman Edward R. Murrow, got five.

HBO led the nominations Monday with 99, followed by Showtime with 77. Other multiple nominations went to Arts & Entertainment Channel with 18, ESPN 13, Cable News Network 12 and the Disney Channel 10.

Nostalgia hairdos hot for day, evening looks

By DEBRA COOPER
Copley News Service

The word is out — bangs and ponytails are in.

Hairstyle classics from the 1940s, '50s and '60s with a definite '80s twist to them this time around are complementing fall '86 fashion.

While designers this season are showing a luxurious array of fabrics from slithery knits to soft suedes — all in waist-whittling styles — the hairstylists are signaling that long hair is once again in vogue.

Longer hair today is silky, healthy and meant to be shown off. To keep that well-polished edge, hair should be meticulously trimmed every four to six weeks. In fact, frequent trims are the single most important factor in keeping split ends at bay and hair in healthy shape.

The ponytail — dressed down for day and up for night — is an all-American classic that has endured the style changes of the decades. The influence of sultry singer Sade's trademark ponytail has not gone unnoticed, and women everywhere are imitating her chic, slicked-back style.

A new trend for fall '86 is braiding the ponytail; many designers have had their models wear a sleek, single braid in their shows.

Before beginning any ponytail hairstyle, spokesmen at Goody Products Inc., manufacturer of hair accessories, suggest using a braided elastic band to prevent hair breakage.

For a daytime style that looks as good at the office as it does when you're cheering on your favorite football team, pull hair straight back and secure with a ponytail holder. Wrap a small section of hair around the elastic and secure from underneath the ponytail with a hairpin. Or, if you're feeling more festive, take a different colored elastic and secure the ponytail at one-inch intervals. Any errant hairs can be kept prettily under wraps with a fashion comb in either a tuck comb or larger size.

CNS Graphic

Nights demand a hint of mystique, so add some styling gel or styling mousse for a slicked-back ponytail that sizzles. With one of the new small-toothed combs, comb through gel, guiding hair away from face and secure a low and alluring ponytail at nape of the neck. Finish off this sophisticated style with an open weave bow that gracefully falls across the ponytail holder via an attached comb. This is a great look for a growing-out style as well, because the gel prevents shorter, uneven layers from straying.

You can even add an unconventional sparkle to your hair — blue, orange or metallic shine — with a mini-hairpiece or by applying colored mousse. Try a streak of one or several colors if you're a little hesitant about changing your entire hair color for the evening. If you've longed to see yourself as a redhead or blonde, try one of the more conventional temporary colors. Most wash out with just one shampoo.

As well as the ponytail, the "snood" or hair net, is a great tool for keeping hair out of the way in a clean, neat manner. Designers like Bob Mackie have even incorporated them into their fall fashion shows.

Bangs are the ideal complement to a variety of styles and are served up any way you like them. When you really want to leave an impression, a short layered cut combined with a fringe of spikey bangs is a sure knockout — and a real scene-stealer. If softer is your style, today's gamine cut, gently swept forward to frame the face, is chic and to the point.

There's a bang style to fit and flatter every haircut. Bangs, while drawing dramatic attention to the eyes, also serve as a frame for reshaping the face.

High foreheads call for long bangs, cut straight across, that work beautifully on long hair as well as short hair. An asymmetrical bang shortens a long face, while a full cut bang narrows a round face. Short foreheads look best with a layered bang, gently brushed to the side with a few light bangs across the front. A pixie cut calls for short fringe of bangs falling in playful wisps across the forehead.

Whether you're drawn to the newest ponytail looks or one of the many new looks in bangs, this season's hairstyles reflect a versatility that lets your own personality shine through.

AT WIT'S END

Experiences created

By Erma Bombeck

A few years ago, some enterprising educator discovered "Man does not live by the three R's alone," so he added a fourth R: Recreational Education. It is commonly referred to as the Field Trip.

The way it worked was simple. You joined 30 or 40 inquiring little minds to one another by weaving their hands together, getting a few mothers to chaperon and taking them to the inner city where they learned about life firsthand.

At first, it was a march through museums, public buildings and zoos. Then it got down to tours of power stations, fast food kitchens, watching paint dry on park benches and any place owned by a brother-in-law who would open his doors to kids for a learning experience.

As a front-line chaperon (Ret.) I once dragged through a steel foundry where my earrings melted down. Afterward I asked one of the kids what he learned about life and he said. "I learned you can lock the restroom door and crawl out under it and everyone else will think there's someone in there."

One begins to question the wisdom of the trips when you ride a train for 20 miles with 40 5-year-olds to a place no bigger than your coffee table and hear a child say the best part of the trip was the soft-drink machine.

What brought this up was the other day I was waiting for a plane at the airport and between people running an O.J. Simpson foot race to Gate 87, somber faces dragging luggage like pack mules, and a few people sleeping with their mouths open came a "learning experience" stumbling through the terminal. There were about 20 wee people with their names pinned to their coats, and they formed a human chain that snaked through the crush of travelers. Finally, one of them did the unthinkable. He DROPPED HANDS and raced over toward a table in the waiting area, where a paper cup had been abandoned. He gulped down a mouthful of ice and rejoined the "tour of life." There is no doubt in my mind that it was the most memorable part of the entire excursion.

It's getting tougher and tougher to perpetuate the Field Trip. Mothers who used to volunteer as chaperons are holding down jobs outside the home. Budget cuts in schools limit the use of buses to get them there. And face it, kids are getting harder and harder to impress or dazzle. You have to admire the dedication of those few teachers who organize trips to dairies and book binderies and especially the sainted ones who take classes to the nation's capital for a week.

I heard of one kid who borrowed his dad's camera to record his trip to the nation's capital of freedom and democracy. He forgot to take a single picture until the last day at Arlington.

It was a real "learning experience." He learned it takes three months of "busing dirty dishes in a restaurant" to pay for $80 worth of pictures of tombstones.

Maybe it's worth it.

DEAR ABBY

Last word about Lassie from trainer's son

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the questions about Lassie, I am writing to set your readers straight, as the information you received from the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences was not totally accurate.

I am Bob Weatherwax, son of Rudd Weatherwax (now deceased), who owned and trained the original Lassie. I am also a trainer and worked on the Lassie series for more than 10 years. I now have the seventh-generation Lassie and will possibly be doing a new Lassie series for TV next year.

Although there have been seven Lassies since 1942 (all males), there was only one Lassie at a time. While shooting, we used a stand-in and stunt double, but to say that there were "many" dogs portraying Lassie at the same time would be like saying there were many actors portraying Tony Curtis in the same movie.

As for Lassie being a mixed breed, anyone who watched "Lassie Come Home" on TV recently could see that Lassie was obviously a purebred collie. The dog was given to my father in lieu of payment for boarding and training, but Dad never received the papers. Although Lassie was bred to AKC collies, it was not important that Lassie have pedigree papers because my father never showed Lassie in AKC dog shows, nor did he sell the puppies.

I hope this clarifies the misconceptions about Lassie. — BOB WEATHERWAX, CANYON COUNTRY, CALIF.

DEAR BOB: It does, indeed, and thank you for writing.

DEAR ABBY: My mother had me while she was married to her first husband. They were divorced when I was 5. My mother remarried and her new husband adopted me. This man is the only father I have ever known and I love him very much. My mom told me she would answer any questions I had about my natural father. I've never had any.

Now that I am 17, my paternal grandparents, aunts and cousins have started coming into the place I work and telling me that they are my "family." Abby, these people are strangers to me. I have a family that I love and am very happy with. I just want to be left alone. How do I get them to understand this? I asked my mom to call them and ask them to please leave me alone. She did. She also told them that I was happy, and if I wanted to see them or call them, I could. My mother was told, "You don't know how she feels about us, but in a few months, when she is 18, her real father will look her up and then she can do what she wants to do about him and his family."

Abby, I can do what I want to do right now, and my mom and dad DO know how I feel. They know I am happy with the family I have, and want to be left alone.

Now I dread the thought of turning 18. I don't want to have these people bothering me. I hope they are happy, but I have a life of my own and all the family I want or need. How do I get them to leave me alone? — ANONYMOUS, PLEASE

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Since you and your parents have both made it clear to the family of your biological father that you want to be left alone, their constant "bothering" you is harassment in legal terms. If it persists, a lawyer should be consulted.

LONDON (UPI) — The dollar opened firmer in London today after the West German Bundesbank president signaled the American currency's fall had gone far enough.

The dollar was bolstered by a speech in London Monday by West German Bundesbank president Karl Otto Poehl reaffirming his view that the dollar's fall over the past 18 months had "gone far enough."

A further significant depreciation would run the risk of stifling growth in Europe and triggering higher inflation and interest rates in the United States, he told the Anglo-German Chamber of Commerce.

In Frankfurt, the dollar opened at 1.9915 marks up from 1.9788, but London dealers reported trading resistance just below the 2 marks barrier. In Zurich, the dollar opened at 1.6320 Swiss francs up from 1.6305.

In Paris, the rate advanced to 6.5220 francs from 6.4950, and in Brussels the rate was 41.58 Belgian francs up from 41.50. The dollar opened in Amsterdam at 2.2530 guilders up from 2.2475.

In Milan, one dollar bought 1,378.87 lire compared with 1,370.40 Monday night.

London presented the only exception to the firm dollar trend. The pound gained on the dollar as the recent interest rate increase prompted a recovery from its recent spell of weakness. Sterling opened at $1.4337 compared with $1.4295 at Monday's close.

The dollar rose in Canada Monday to $1.3916 Canadian from $1.3897 Friday.

Gold opened $1 lower in Zurich at $425 and $1.375 down in London at $425.50. Silver was unchanged in Switzerland at $5.75, and down just one cent in Britain, also at $5.75.

U.S. Eagle flying high

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Eagle is flying high and the U.S. Mint couldn't be happier.

The country's first general-circulation gold coin in more than a half-century went on sale Monday and demand exceeded expectations, officials said.

The Mint sold more than 320,000 ounces of gold in the first day, receiving orders from 24 of its 25 primary distributors.

Officials said if this pace continues, they will be forced to boost their estimates of first-year sales above the 2.2 million ounces now forecast.

"By the orders that are coming in, the interest is definitely there," said Donna Pope, director of the U.S. Mint. She said she hoped to capture the $1 billion American investors spent last year to purchase gold coins minted by Canada and other countries.

The coins have a face value of $50, $25, $10 and $5, but their sales price will fluctuate based on the market price of gold, which was selling in New York for $426.10 an ounce on Monday.

The coins, which feature Miss Liberty on one side and a family of eagles on the other, contain gold in amounts ranging from one-tenth of an ounce for the $5 coin up to a full ounce in the $50 gold piece.

The Mint is not selling coins directly to the public but is distributing the coins to 25 primary dealers worldwide who must place orders for a minimum of 5,000 ounces of gold. These dealers resell the coins to a network of coin shops, precious metal dealers, brokerage firms, banks and savings and loans.

Officials estimated that the coins will begin showing up in parts of the country for sale to the public as early as Thursday and should be in widespread distribution by the end of this month.

Tipperary reveals restructure plan

New partnership will infuse capital, avert Chapter 11

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Tipperary Corp. has announced that it has entered into preliminary restructuring agreements which will give Tipperary the capability of continuing to operate as a viable oil and gas company, and remove it from the threat of chapter 11 proceedings.

Deam Stoltz, chairman Tipperary, said an independent partnership composed of SDK Industrial Parks, an Illinois partnership, and Milmac, Inc., a Texas corporation, will make a significant investment in the company and otherwise assist the company in satisfying its outstanding obligations while acquiring 49 percent of the voting securities of Tipperary.

Stoltz said Tipperary had been working on the partnership agreement since May of this year, and that the deal had been structured by Milmac which brought the parties and financing together.

"We have another month to go to conclude the deal, but upon conclusion it should strengthen and expand our position. A near term goal of the newly restructured company will be to seek acquisitions of reserves and companies," said Stoltz, who added that Midland would remain the base of operations for Tipperary.

The board chairman said SDK Industrial Parks, whose primary business is real estate, was bullish on the future of the oil industry and saw the present as an opportune time to diversify into the oil industry.

In addition, an agreement in principle has been reached with the company's secured lender which, subject to successful consummation of the new investment and satisfaction of other company obligations, will provide improved terms with extended maturity in order to amortize the existing loan. Additional cooperation from holders of approximately 90 percent principal amount of the company's public subordinated debt and from trade creditors will be necessary to effect the contemplated loan restructuring and capital infusion into the company.

Said Stoltz: "This restructuring plan will be better for all concerned, than the chapter 11 alternative, and gives Tipperary a new optimistic, forward look. Consolidation is the name of the game today."

General Motors to pull out of South Africa

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — In a move hailed by anti-apartheid activists as the most important American withdrawal from South Africa so far, General Motors said Monday that it would pull out of that strife-torn country by year's end and sell its auto assembly operations there to local managers.

Acknowledging that it has failed in its well-publicized effort to foster change by remaining in South Africa, GM said that the South African government's unwillingness to dismantle its apartheid system of racial discrimination — along with growing pressure on corporations in this country to pull out — were major factors in its decision.

The deterioration of the South African economy and the fact that GM has been losing money on its operations there for at least three years is believed to have made the decision easier.

"We have been disappointed in the pace of change in ending apartheid," GM Chairman Roger B. Smith said in a statement. "This slowness of progress in ending apartheid has contributed importantly to the imposition of sanctions and other actions by governments at all levels in the United States."

He added, "The ongoing economic recession in that country, along with this lack of progress, has made operating in the South African environment increasingly difficult."

Eli Bitzer, first secretary in the South African Embassy in Washington, said his government did not have a comment on GM's announcement.

Opponents of apartheid in the United States applauded the action by GM, the world's largest industrial company and until recently the largest American employer in South Africa, as a major victory for the divestment movement in this country. GM has been a leader among those who have argued that American corporations should stay in South Africa in order to work for change from within. Anti-apartheid leaders viewed GM's announcement as a sign that the American business community is giving up on the South African government.

"It's the most significant U.S. corporate pullout ever, not only because GM is one of the largest employers there, but also because this is an admission that GM's efforts to work from within for change have been met by a stone wall from the South African government," said Timothy K. Smith, executive director of the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility, a New York-based coalition of religious groups that owns stock in corporations. "It is the push that will turn the number of U.S. companies pulling out into a flood."

Jennifer Davis, executive director of the New York-based American Committee on Africa, an anti-apartheid group, added that the recent passage by Congress of sanctions against the South African government may have finally forced GM to cut its losses in South Africa. "GM opposed sanctions very strongly, and I think the passage indicated to them that the pressure in the United States was going to grow, and not disappear," she noted.

IBM to sell South African subsidiary

NEW YORK (AP) — IBM said today will sell its South African subsidiary because of the deteriorating political and economic situation in the racially divided country.

The announcement came a day after General Motors Corp., the second biggest U.S.-based employer in South Africa after Mobil Corp., said it would sell its South African operations to local interests.

IBM said in a news release that it would sell the subsidiary, which accounted for less than 1 percent of the parent company's sales in 1984, to a new company established "for the benefit of the employees of IBM South Africa."

The sale is to be completed by March 1, IBM said. The new company will be headed by Jack Clarke, currently general manager of IBM South Africa.

"Unfortunately, the deteriorating political and economic situation in South Africa, and between South African and its trading partners, makes our action necessary," Chairman John F. Akers said in a statement.

Increased sales help Elcor to record quarter

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A 22 percent increase in sales and improved demand enabled Elcor Corp. to report its best ever earnings for the first quarter of its fiscal year, according to Roy Campbell, president.

Income for the quarter ending September 30, 1986 was $2.5 million or $.71 per share, compared to $579,000 or $.16 for the same quarter a year ago. Income before extraordinary item was $2.25 million or $.64 per share, up considerably from income of $323,000 or $.9 per share a year ago. Net income was $4.2 million or $1.20 per share, up from $624,000 or $.18 per share last year. Sales were $33.7 million, up from $27.7 million.

The company is benefiting from a rise in construction following passage of the tax reform bill, according to Richard Rosebery, vice president, treasurer and chief financial officer of Elcor. He added that, even though the local market is soft right now, the company is benefiting from stronger markets elsewhere in the country.

"We're seeing a stronger demand for our premium laminated asphalt shingles," which are shipped to 40 states, he said. He noted, also, that the company has seen an increase in demand for concrete roof tile. In fact, the company's board of directors recently approved capital expenditures to construct a new high-speed 'state of the art' concreate roof tile manufacturing plant in southeast Florida, which will double the company's production capacity. The plant should begin operation in the quarter ended Dec. 31,1987.

FDIC unloads more holdings, sets new sale

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Liquidation of real estate holdings by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) is continuing as results of the agency's most recent sealed bid auction were announced and details of another sealed bid sale were revealed.

Bids on two office buildings and one undeveloped downtown lot in Midland and a 130,000 square-foot warehouse and office property in Odessa will be accepted until Nov. 12.

Bids on two Colorado properties were opened Monday, with a guest ranch in the San Luis Valley, near Alamosa drawing more than the minimum required bid.

An office building in Denver attracted no bids and will be liquidated either through a traditional real estate broker or at auction at a future date, according to Betty Byrom, a section chief in the FDIC's owned real estate division.

A sealed bid sale on Texas properties, which concluded in September, yielded more than $4 million for the FDIC. Five holdings, including four multi-residential properties in Midland, were liquidated through the September bidding, Byrom says.

The properties sold were Las Colinas and Willow Tree condominiums, Lafayette Place townhomes and Casa Carrizo apartments in Midland and a farm in Maverick County.

The estimated $4 million in proceeds exceeded the minimum acceptable bid total on the properties by nearly $1 million.

A total of 14 properties were offered in the sealed bid sale and the nine unsold parcels — primarily undeveloped lots — will be offered at the FDIC's next public real estate auction, tentatively scheduled for early December.

Job seekers will have television forum

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

With the holiday season approaching, the Permian Basin's unemployed are looking for every opportunity to acquaint themselves with prospective employers.

One opportunity is a job telethon to air Thursday on KPEJ-TV, channel 24, from 6:00 to 7:00 p.m.

"This is an effort to help employ the jobless residents in the Permian Basin by giving them a forum to stress their skills and qualifications in front of a live viewing audience," says the station's promotion manager Rod L. McGehee.

The program, entitled 'People looking for Opportunities and Opportunities Looking for People', is strictly a non-profit venture in an effort to restore the available workforce in the area.

The Texas Employment Commission (TEC) is supplying the station with a list of available jobs in the marketplace. Says TEC Midland office manager Joe Hatcher: "The three TEC offices in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring are coordinating the program. We expect about 15 participants from each town."

McGehee says each person will have a one-minute spot in which to describe the kind of job they are looking for and list their qualifications and skills.

"We will have an open phone line, and encourage any employers who have an opening that might be available to call in, particularly if they see someone who has the skills they are searching for."

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Joint venture nets dual discovery

From Staff Reports

TEXACO, INC. and NIPPON CENTRAL U.S. OIL CO., LTD. report a dual Ellenburger and Montoya discovery in Dawson County, west and slightly north of the Felken field.

The No. 1 C.L. Rogers flowed, from the Montoya formation, 610 barrels of 40.5 gravity crude and 171 Mcfd on a 16/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 400 psi. Production is from perforations 10,381 to 10,394 ft.

From the Ellenburger, the well flowed 232 barrels of 59.5 gravity crude and 38 Mcfd on a 13/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 300 psi. Production is from perforations below 10,450 ft.

The well was permitted as a 10,550 ft. wildcat and was drilled to 10,540 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from north and 1,600 ft. from west lines of Section 14, Block 33, T-7-N, HE&WT survey, 13 miles northeast of Lamesa.

The well was drilled under a Texaco-Nippon joint exploration agreement finalized this past March. The companies hold over 5,600 acres of leases on the prospect, and a north offset is being drilled immediately as a confirmation of the new field.

This markets the second discovery drilled under the partnership. The earlier discovery was drilled in the Williston Basin of North Dakota.

Clayton Williams Jr. finals Louisiana offset

CLAYTON WILLIAMS JR. has completed his No. 2 Raymond R. Long as a confirmation to an earlier new field discovery in Pointe Coupee Parish, La.

Drilled to 11,436 ft., the well was completed from the Sparta B formation, flowing 420 barrels of crude and 194 Mcfd on an 8/64 inch choke. Flowing tubing pressure is 2,450 psi.

This discovery offsets the No. 1 Raymond R. Long, which was potentialed in June for 426 barrels of crude and 171 Mcfd.

Williams is the operator and owns a 45 percent working interest. Preliminary engineering data indicate recoverable reserves of 5 million barrels.

Dallas operator tests 188 barrel discovery

The DeRoen field of Dawson County gained a new Mississippian producer as MINERAL DEVELOPMENT, INC., Dallas, completed a project in the area.

On potential test, the No. 1-A Dugger flowed 188 barrels of 42.5 gravity crude and two barrels of water on a 16/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 140 psi. Production is from perforations 10,303 to 10,523 ft. Gas-oil ratio is 686:1.

Permitted as an 11,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to a total depth of 10,730 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 10,725 ft.

Scurry field extension tested for 118 barrels

A second Strawn producer and northern extension to the Shannon Ranch field of Scurry County has been completed by PATTERSON PETROLEUM, Snyder.

The No. 3 Bullard was tested to pump 118 barrels of 42 gravity crude, 77 Mcfd and 380 barrels of water from perforations 7,496 to 7,504 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 650:1.

Permitted as a wildcat, the well reached a total depth of 8,131 ft. and was plugged back to 7,750 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 8,129 ft.

Location is 1,860 ft. from north and 467 ft. from east lines of Section 303, Block 97, H&TC survey, Abst. 1931, 10 miles northwest of Snyder.

Winkler field gains 93 barrel producer

SHELL WESTERN EXPLORATION & PRODUCTION, INC., Houston, has added a new producer to the Monahans (Clearfork) field of Winkler County with completion of the No. 259 Sealy Smith Foundation.

Shell finaled the well to flow 93 barrels of 36.3 gravity crude, 110 Mcfd and 287 barrels of water on a 20/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 100 psi. Production is from perforations 4,776 to 5,075 ft., which had been acidized with 10,000 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 63,000 gallons of gel and 169,500 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 1,183:1.

Drilled to 5,300 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 5,252 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,787.7 ft., include the Redbeds at 808 ft., Yates at 2,355, Seven Rivers at 2,586, Queen at 3,050, San Andres at 3,640, and the Glorieta at 4,657 ft. Pay was topped at 4,776 ft.

Location is 10,540 ft. from northwest and 10,560 ft. from northeast lines of Section 46, Block A, G&MMB&A survey, four miles northeast of Monahans.

Midland firm reports 725 Mcfd producer

WTG EXPLORATION, INC., Midland, reports a new gas producer in the Payton field of Ward County.

The No. 3 Brandenburg "B" was potentialed for a calculated absolute open flow of 725 Mcfd from perforations 5,783 to 6,096 ft. The interval was acidized with 5,000 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 6,200 ft., where seven inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 6,142 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,425 ft., formation tops include the Glorieta at 3,840 ft., Upper Clearfork at 4,078, Tubb at 4,870, and the Wichita Albany at 5,500 ft. Pay was topped at 5,783 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from east and 2,700 ft. from north lines of Section 4, Block 32, H&TC survey, three miles south of Grandfalls.

Terrapet completes capital restructuring plan

DALLAS (SWN) — Terrapet Energy Corp. announced the successful completion of a capital restructuring plan resulting in the elimination of substantially all of the firm's long-term obligations.

As an integral part of the restructuring plan, Terrapet has established a major new thrust through the formation of Dawn Management Group. A private partnership with outside investors, Dawn manages oil and gas assets for third-party owners, and currently has more than 600 wells under contract. Terrapet holds a 60 percent interest in Dawn Management.

El Paso Hydrocarbons sells technology, patents

SAN ANTONIO — Advanced Extraction Technologies, Inc., Houston, has acquired the Mehra Process technology, including 42 pending and issued patents from El Paso Hydrocarbons Co. of Houston.

The technology is suitable for natural gas liquids, nitrogen rejection, olefin plant separation and refinery off-gas processing applications.

McDonald's names chief executive

CEO began as summer mail clerk

OAK BROOK, Ill. (UPI) — Michael R. Quinlan, who began his career as a summer mail clerk for McDonald's Corp. in 1963, was named chief executive officer of the giant fast-food chain Monday.

Quinlan, 41, now president and chief operating officer of McDonald's, will move upstairs on March 1, 1987, announced Fred L. Turner, chairman of the board and current CEO.

"I've been and chairman since 1968," said Turner, 53. "I feel it's time to pass the CEO baton to Mike. He's ready and I'm comfortable the timing is right.

"Our McDonald's system will benefit from this evolutionary change, and there's more than enough for everyone to do. McDonald's is and will continue to be a full-time commitment for me."

Quinlan joined McDonald's in 1963 as a summer mail clerk while attending Loyola University in Chicago. He has since worked his way through the ranks as store manager, supervisor, district manager, regional manager, vice president, senior vice president to his current status.

Turner began behind the counter of the first McDonald's restaurant in Des Plaines, Ill., in 1956, and he too worked his way through the corporation to his present post.

McDonald's has more than 9,000 stores in 43 countries with annual sales of over $11 billion.

COIN

Jerri Eskow, a vice president of Deak International in New York, said her firm has been taking orders from the public for the past month with demand exceptionally heavy in the past two weeks.

"I think people feel the price of gold is going up and they want to own the coins," she said.

Gold traditionally has been used as a hedge against inflation. But investors who bought gold when it was selling for $875 an ounce in 1980 know all too well that the price can fluctuate wildly.

Congress authorized sale of the coins last December after President Reagan banned imports of the South African Krugerand. The U.S. coin will compete with the Canadian Maple Leaf, currently the best selling gold coin in this country.

If the 2.2 million ounces of gold are sold, the U.S. Treasury would make about $6 million. That is figured on a government charge ranging from 3 percent to 9 percent for minting the coins. Wholesale and retail dealers will add similar amounts to the coins for handling.

The coins are being minted at a rate of 90,000 coins per week at West Point, N.Y., the site of the government's second-largest gold depository.

While the government has minted commemorative coins in recent years, the United States has not had a gold coin in general circulation since 1933, the year the country went off the gold standard, revoking the past practice of promising to redeem paper money in gold.

GM

"Now, I imagine this will shake up the whole American business community in South Africa — for some smaller companies that are still there, they will no longer be able to point to GM as justification for staying."

GM joins a growing list of American businesses that have recently announced plans to pull out of South Africa, including Coca-Cola, which last month became the first American company to express plans to sell its operations to local black investors. So far this year, 22 American companies have pulled out and six others have announced plans to withdraw from the country, according to the Investor Responsibility Research Center, a Washington-based group that monitors American investment in South Africa.

But because of its size and visibility, GM has been perhaps the biggest corporate target of the anti-apartheid movement in the United States. In 1971, GM became the first American company to be faced with a church-sponsored, shareholder resolution calling for divestment of South African operations, and its shareholders have voted on — and defeated — similar proposals every year since.

GM has responded by aggressively promoting itself as a force for reform within the country. Rev. Leon Sullivan, a black minister from Philadelphia who authored a code of corporate conduct for American companies doing business in South Africa, is on GM's board, and GM has received praise for adhering to the so-called "Sullivan Principles" that called for non-discrimination in business dealings.

GM, which has operated in South Africa since 1926, said it was now negotiating with a newly formed group of its South African managers for the purchase of its Port Elizabeth assembly complex for an undisclosed price. A GM spokesman said he did not know whether any of the company's black managers were involved in the buy-out talks. GM currently employs about 2,800 workers, 60 percent of whom are non-white, in Port Elizabeth, South Africa's automaking center and a stronghold of labor unrest on the country's southern coast.

While political pressure to pull out has been growing, the economic incentives for GM to write off its investment in South Africa have also been mounting. With the South African economy in a tailspin, car and truck sales have been plunging over the last few years, making it increasingly difficult for GM to justify remaining in the country.

SEEKERS

KPEJ's promotion manager says the idea evolved from a previous public service project in which the employment commission would supply a list of available jobs that the station ran at 6:00 and 10:00 p.m. daily.

"We decided to reverse it, and give those searching for jobs an opportunity to reach employers."

Hatcher hopes the telethon will make a difference in the Basin's rising unemployment picture. "If just a few people get a job as a result of the program, it will have been worth any effort on our part."

This is the Basin's first job telethon but organizers hope its success will lead to similar programs.

The car buyers dilemma: Buy now or hold out for new rate incentives

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Only days ago, financing bargains seemed almost universal, the automakers' lure to reel in car buyers and clear out 1986 inventory.

The deals aren't as commonplace right now but that doesn't mean they couldn't be wheeled out again some day.

Certainly they're proven salespushers. The slashed interest rates in effect for recent weeks were a key factor in pushing sales in U.S. built cars 23 percent higher in the first 10 days of October over the same period a year ago (when automakers didn't offer such deals).

But those deals were for '86 cars, not the '87s now coming on the market. Now most of the deals have ended and some top auto executives insist that they'd sooner cut production than use cut-rate financing for 1987 models any time soon. Not everyone is convinced.

Automotive News, a trade publication, marked the end of most of the programs with a headline that ended with this prediction for the '87 models: "Return Expected." If they come again, when will they appear and how good a deal will they offer? That's where all the experts disagree.

"I think right after the election we're going to see 4.9 to 5.9 percent ... We'll probably see some 2.9 on a product that's sticky," said Arthur G. Davis, senior vice president and auto analyst for the brokerage house of Prescott, Ball & Turben.

CHRISTOPHER CEDERGREN, senior analyst with the market research firm, J.D. Power and Associates, said he thinks GM will be unable to resist financing incentives, despite their statements to the contrary. So he, too, forecasts a return to them in late November.

But even if they return, there's no guarantee the deals will be as good as they have been. Cedergren said he does not expect the rates to fall as low as they had been: "If they come back, they'll be 5 or 6 percent."

The question then for consumers: To wait or to buy? Cedergren said new car buyers shouldn't stop their comparison shopping just because lower interest rates might be coming back. He anticipates sluggish sales in some segments of the market toward the end of the month. That could mean price discounting.

However accurate all the crystal-balling turns out to be, most manufacturers are bowing out of financing promotions for now. As a result, some new car dealers are likely to promote their own deals.

There are other things to look at aside from interest rates:

— Essentially, a particularly low interest rate can save but it's only one part of the bottom-line cost of a car and the overall value of the purchase.

— A car made more attractive by cut-rate financing, for example, may not be such a great buy if it comes loaded with options the consumer doesn't need or if it's not a very good car to begin with.

— Also, a low rate may entice a customer to make a trip to a showroom but it still may not be enough to make a car fit the family budget. That could be so, for example, if a substantial downpayment requirement or the combination of a maximum term and high monthly payment puts it out of reach.

LOW RATES really were low under automakers programs that prevailed earlier this month for the 1986 cars. In an action General Motors said was unprecedented for it, for example, the nation's largest automaker offered interest rates as low as 2.9 percent for its leftover 1986 models.

General Motors' 2.9 percent APR (annual percentage rate) was applied to 1986 cars and light duty trucks for loans of up to 36 months. In addition, the automaker offered a 4.8 percent APR on loans of 37 to 48 months.

Alternately, GM offered cash rebates ranging from $300 to $1,500, depending on the model. The rebate was paid entirely by the manufacturer, according to GM spokesman Harold Jackson, while the dealer contributed to financing by "foregoing a portion of his financing income" on loans arranged through GM's General Motors Acceptance Corp.

But, as of Oct. 8, General Motors ended its special incentive program. "At this point, we're back to business as usual," said John Andrews, a spokesman for GMAC.

That's true also for Chrysler Corp. which had been offering low interest rates or rebates — a program which expired Oct. 12. It's true, too, for Ford Motor Co. and its special incentive program.

Bill Carroll, a spokesman for Ford, said that interest rates on loans through his company's financing arm vary. But an executive at one dealership said he could arrange a loan through Ford's credit arm for 10.5 percent last week. He noted, however, that dealers don't depend on automakers alone and said he could arrange loans through local banks for less than 10.5 percent.

ABOUT THE SAME time, a sampling of four banks in metropolitan New York was offering a 9 percent rate on any new car for loans up to 4 years. For that loan, bank officials said in an interview, a 25 percent downpayment would be required and the minimum loan would be $7,500.

One automaker is still offering discount financing on selected 1986 models: American Motors. Its financing specials include the interest-free loan. It has extended its financing incentive through the end of this month for certain 1986 cars and Jeeps. Therefore, the interest-free loans it had made available on loans of up to two years can still be had.

For that to have relevance to the car buyer, however, the vehicles still on the lot have to coincide with what's wanted, and the consumer still has to be able to afford the monthly payment (on a two-year loan of $10,000 they're $417 a month). Most car buyers usually opt for a term longer than two years.

Geoffrey Banks, president of AMC's financing arm, American Motors Financial Corp., said that ordinarily the average term of a loan from his company is about 50 months. That, in part, is because AMC also offers loans of 49 to 60 months, but those aren't covered by its special financing program.

South African economy, pressure aid disinvestment

WASHINGTON (AP) — South Africa's tight economy combined with pressure from anti-apartheid activists in the United States has convinced a growing number of American companies to abandon operations in the white-ruled country, figures show.

General Motors Corp., the second-largest U.S. employer in the country with annual sales of about $300 million, on Monday joined 28 American firms that have left or revealed plans to do so this year, according to the Investor Responsibility Research Center.

The center, which tracks investment in South Africa, says 22 American companies have left in 1986, and six say they will, including the Coca-Cola Co., Procter & Gamble Co. and the Marriott Corp.

That compares with 39 companies which left in 1985, and seven in 1984. The number of companies totals 244, with investment totaling $1.3 billion, down from $2.6 billion in 1981, the center says.

Roger B. Smith, GM's chief executive officer, announced in Detroit that GM will sell to a group headed by the South African management at its Port Elizabeth plant. The price was not disclosed.

The "ongoing economic recession" and South Africa's "lack of progress" at ending the segregation, or apartheid, prompted GM's move, Smith said.

GM's decision was hailed by the Rev. Leon Sullivan, a black Philadelphia minister and member of the automaker's board of directors.

"I hope this will send a message to South Africa," Sullivan said in a telephone interview. "There will be other companies leaving, large and small."

Sullivan gained national attention for devising the so-called Sullivan Principles, a code of conduct by which many American firms operating in South Africa adhere. They spell out hiring, training and promotions for black workers.

"Roger Smith discussed this with me and we are in agreement on this action," Sullivan said.

Although he long believed that American companies are a strong force for change in South Africa, Sullivan has set a date of May 1987 for Pretoria to eliminate apartheid.

If the white government fails to meet the deadline, Sullivan wants firms to pull up stakes while the United States imposes a blockade on the country.

He said the Midland-based company is not only profiting from an increase in demand for roofing products but an increase in demand for recycling equipment. Elcor also makes hard chrome-plated cylinder liners and pistons for railroad and marine transportation.

Rosebery predicted the company would have "substantially higher earnings for the fiscal year, and that, in general, the company will spend on the order of $10 million in capital expenditures on improvements to all plants during the year."

The company has roofing products facilities in Dallas and Ennis, Texas, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, Boca Raton, Miami and Pompano Beach, Florida. There are industrial products facilities in Chicago, Cleveland, and Lufkin, Midland, Richardson and Waco, Texas.

The golf car has found a new use as a transportation vehicle on private roads in leisure and retirement communities. Yamaha Motor Corp., U.S.A., of Cypress, Calif., has introduced the Sun Classic, which is available in both gas and electric models.

Chrysler will spend $1 billion on truck facility

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — The Chrysler Corp. said Monday that it would spend more than $1 billion to build a truck assembly facility at a site in a crumbling section of Detroit where its Aries and Reliant cars are currently produced.

The existing factory predates the corporation, which was formed in 1925, and is spread on both sides of Jefferson Avenue, a major thoroughfare. Lee A. Iacocca, Chrysler's chairman, said Monday, "We're putting Detroit's newest auto plant right over Detroit's oldest auto plant."

The plant will be built in stages over five years with the first phase, construction of a paint plant, to begin next January. When complete, the factory will be reduced in size from about 3.6 million, to 2 million square feet. Richard E. Dauch, executive vice president for manufacturing, said the work force would also be reduced. "The employment today is around 4,500 or 4,600, and certainly the employment will not be that high," he said.

A supplier park will also be built on the site, and Detroit Mayor Coleman A. Young, who was present for the announcement Monday, said he hoped to develop the area, which is most of Detroit's east side, into an industrial park. The city has been buying up large parcels over the last few years.

Young has declined to comment on the number of families and businesses that will have to be relocated for the project.

The decision by Chrysler to pour more than $1 billion into the plant was made after the city, the state and Federal agencies agreed to tax abatements, financial assistance and other incentive packages and Local 7 of the United Automobile Workers union agreed to contract changes.

Rioters attack U.S., South African offices

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Thousands of rampaging youths who blamed South Africa for the death of Mozambique's president smashed offices, overturned cars, threw firebombs and attacked shoppers and office workers today.

The targets included the U.S. Embassy and diplomatic missions and state airlines offices of South Africa and Malawi, the only African nation that has diplomatic ties with South Africa.

But the violence, which erupted after a gathering at the Mozambique Embassy to mourn the death of Samora Machel, turned random as the estimated 5,000 rioters — nearly all of them black — rampaged throughout the downtown area and suburbs with cans of gasoline and rocks and tree branches.

Both blacks and whites caught in the melee were injured. There was no official report on the number of injuries or arrests.

Machel died Sunday night when his plane crashed 45 miles from the Mozambican capital of Maputo, just 200 yards inside South Africa.

The offices of Air Malawi and South African Airways were gutted by firebombs and the crowd tried to prevent firefighters from putting out the blaze. Windows were smashed at the two-story Malawi High Commission on the fringe of the city center, and a Malawi diplomatic mini-bus was overturned.

The South African Trade Mission, which serves as a consulate and commercial agency for the South African government, had windows smashed on five floors but metal security doors prevented the rioters from getting inside.

Witnesses said at least two middle-aged white women were punched and kicked outside the South African Airways. They apparently were not seriously injured.

The rioters flung rocks at the walled-in U.S. Embassy, breaking some windows, before police dispersed them with tear gas. The semi-official Zimbabwe-Inter African news agency reported a Marine guard had threatened to shoot if the mob tried to storm the embassy.

Several hundred protesters marched on the central police station, demanding the release of one of their leaders who had been arrested, but fled when riot police fired tear gas.

An undetermined number of shoppers and office workers caught in the melee were punched and kicked, and car windows were smashed.

Some shoppers and journalists who fled for safety into department stores and office blocks were chased and beaten, witnesses said.

"It's all a result of what is happening in South Africa," said Italian Romano Onorati, who watched helplessly as rocks were thrown through the plate-glass window of his Europa Cafe next door to Air Malawi.

Associated Press photographer Peter Winterbach, a white Zimbabwean, said he was punched twice by demonstrators after his car was stopped in the capital.

"There was screaming and shouting, my windows were being smashed and people were jumping up and down on my bonnet (hood)," he said. "It was a frightening experience. They just went crazy."

Truckloads of police equipped with riot gear were patrolling the city center as the youths huddled in scattered groups, singing militant songs and chanting slogans calling for the death of President P.W. Botha of South Africa.

The demonstrators said they were convinced South Africa was involved in the death of Machel, Zimbabwe's staunchest ally, and accused Malawi of supporting South African-backed guerrillas fighting Mozambique's Marxist government.

Prime Minister Robert Mugabe cut short a private visit to London and returned home a few hours before the demonstrations began. There was no immediate reaction from him or his aides to the violence.

The Herald newspaper, controlled by the state-owned Mass Media Trust and published in Harare, said in an editorial today that "despite all the denials — and Pretoria would hardly admit its guilt — the most likely cause of the crash remains a direct South African attack on the presidential plane."

Machel, 53, was returning to Maputo from Zambia when his plane crashed. There were 10 survivors.

In Johannesburg, the newspaper Business Day and The Citizen quoted the Soviet pilot as saying from his hospital bed that the plane had been shot down, but South African officials were quoted as saying the crash was due to bad weather and pilot error.

Afghan ruler's status mystery to West

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The fate of Babrak Karmal, who ruled Afghanistan for 6½ years, remains all the more mysterious to Westerners who witnessed a recent outpouring of adoration toward the Moscow-aligned Socialist.

At a Kabul ceremony marking the departure of some Soviet troops, young Afghan women rushed from the side of new leader Najibullah to kiss the hands of Karmal and try to touch his face.

Najibullah was named general secretary of the Afghan Socialist Party after he replaced Karmal in May. Karmal was said to have retained the title of president and a seat on the party's ruling Politburo, but the extent of his influence has never been clear.

Foreign journalists who spent the past week in Afghanistan on a government-organized tour frequently asked about Karmal. Such inquiries were usually deflected with vague responses about the benefits of collective leadership.

Western diplomats have speculated that Najibullah, a member of the Pashtoon Moslem majority, was appointed to replace Karmal, who is Tadjik, because Karmal was widely perceived by government opponents as a Kremlin puppet.

Karmal unexpectedly turned up Sunday on the official reviewing stand at a showy departure ceremony for a regiment of about 500 Soviet anti-aircraft troops.

It was the third such official sendoff attended by journalists invited to watch selected phases of the Soviet Union's withdrawal of less than 7 percent of its forces in Afghanistan. Moscow has never revealed the size of its force in Afghanistan, but Western intelligence sources estimate it at 115,000 men.

The Soviet Union sent troops into Afghanistan in December 1979 rather than see the Communist government it helped install the year before be defeated by the guerrillas.

Karmal was absent from the first two troop withdrawal ceremonies in the Iranian border area of Shindand and the northern city of Kunduz. But on Sunday he stood quietly on the reviewing stand, six places to the right of Najibullah, separated from him by other Afghan officials and visiting Soviets.

Medals awarded to Soviet soldiers for bravery during their Afghan service were issued in the name of the president, Karmal, but given out by Najibullah.

Karmal made no speech and stood by unobtrusively until Najibullah left the stand to chat with some Soviet soldiers assembled on the parade grounds at the 6th century Balakhasar fortress.

"I'm sure the sound of your steps scared those opposed to our revolution," Najibullah said to one group of soldiers, when about 20 girls wearing the uniform of the Peshakhad, the "vanguard" young Socialists group, let out cries.

They ran toward Karmal, who had descended from the platform and begun a slow amble toward the soldiers in the presence of two bodyguards.

Another 15 or 20 young women who had been standing beside the reviewing stand also ran toward Karmal to stroke his blue suit and kiss his hands.

A spice merchant in Kabul, Afghanistan, offers a rainbow of wares at the ancient market.

Panicked bodyguards pushed the young women away with their snub-nosed machine guns, but many clung to the man they grew up believing to be their salvation. Security forces from Najibullah's party eventually ran over to break up the mob.

Karmal wore an ironic smile when Western reporters asked him whether he was still active in the leadership.

"Of course I am," he replied in English.

Asked about his health, which was said by Afghan media to be the reason he stepped down as leader, Karmal replied, "I'm fine. Thank you for asking."

He joined officials on the reviewing stand while the Soviet troops paraded by, but refused to throw flowers at the procession.

At one point a Soviet officer moved part of his pile of flowers toward the idle Karmal, who pushed them back and returned his hand to his side.

Though there was no visible animosity between Karmal and other officials, his unwillingness to participate in the flower-throwing ritual appeared to be a deliberate attempt to demonstrate independence.

The seemingly minor signs of dissent in the presence of Western reporters could mean Karmal was trying to signal that he has been removed from any effective role in the leadership, or that he has not yet given up the fight for party control.

Business booms in U.N.-protected Lebanon

By MOHAMMED SALAM

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — The United Nations peacekeeping force, which frequently comes under attack in southern Lebanon, nevertheless is providing a windfall of $20 million a year to the 400,000 Lebanese it is here to protect.

Lebanon's economy is a shambles but business is booming in an area stretching from the Mediterranean in the west to Mount Hermon in the east — where troops of the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon are stationed.

"When we first deployed in the south in 1978, there were only 10,000 people in our area — now there are 400,000," said U.N. spokesman Timur Goksel.

"Our logistics and administrative departments spent about $5 million on purchases in the last six months, paying for food and fuel, salaries for the 400 Lebanese employees, retainers for the 300 local contractors and miscellaneous expenses."

UNIFIL officials said members of the 5,800-member, nine-nation force spent $15 million more on personal purchases in the same six-month period.

UNIFIL's estimated annual expenditure runs about $40 million, or 5.5 percent of Lebanon's $716 million budget.

"In normal times, a soldier spends at least $10 a day," Goksel said. "In rotation times, they spend enormously." Rotation is when replacements come in and soldiers finishing their tours buy up duty-free goods before going home.

"I spend more than half of my pay in Lebanon," said a French captain. "I buy everything here: clothes, perfumes for my wife, electrical appliances and even French products which are cheaper in Lebanon than they are at home."

UNIFIL is made up of units from France, Norway, Sweden, Italy, Ghana, Fiji, Nepal, Ireland and Finland. Five U.N. soldiers were killed and 44 wounded during August and September in a series of attacks. Lebanese security forces said radical Shiite Moslem militiamen were responsible for most of the attacks.

Near UNIFIL's headquarters at Naqoura, a southern Lebanese border town of only about 1,500 people, 90 shops and restaurants have opened since the U.N. personnel moved in.

"There were only six shops when we first arrived," Goksel said in an interview.

Business in Naqoura "totally depends on UNIFIL," said Ismail Sabrawi, a news reporter in Tyre who opened a sporting goods shop after the peacekeepers came to the area.

"UNIFIL soldiers directly buy 40 percent of what I sell," he added. "Naqoura merchants buy 50 percent and resell them to UNIFIL soldiers. Local customers account only for 10 percent of my business."

In addition to sporting goods, Sabrawi sells a variety of items ranging from luggage and souvenirs to electrical appliances and cameras.

He said troop-rotation time is the peak season.

"Soon before the rotation, they start buying bags, big bags, and they fill them up with whatever they can buy. They can afford to buy lots of things. During the latest rotation they cleaned out my camera stand."

Lebanese importers buy the goods abroad tax free and unload them duty free at illegal ports in Lebanon, where government controls are minimal because of the civil war.

In addition to paying no taxes or duties, the business have low overhead expenses because they are mostly family-owned. This permits them to sell foreign goods at prices that are lower than in the country of origin.

Some Lebanese have formed what Goksel calls "flying donkey markets" to reach U.N. soldiers in remote positions.

"They have all the stuff loaded on donkeys and they go to such positions regularly," Goskel said. "They even know the pay day better than the soldiers.

"We take the salaries by helicopter to such positions and every time salaries are to be paid, the flying donkeys are there."

Were French resistance fighters actually double agents?

By Bernard D. Kaplan
Hearst News Service

PARIS — For nearly four years, Klaus Barbie, the aging former SS officer accused of some of the most brutal crimes of World War II, has waited in a French jail cell for a trial that many suspect will never take place.

Now the shadow of Barbie, "the butcher of Lyons," hovers over a controversy here about whether the treachery of many French men and women during the Nazi occupation was covered up by successive postwar governments.

The war has been over for more than 40 years. Only a small proportion of French adults today remember the five years of German occupation that followed France's collapse in 1940.

But the pain of that period has faded only slowly. The shameful memory of French collaboration with the Nazis lives on, always ready to be rekindled.

This time, the spark was provided by the revelation of a former French secret police chief that confidential German archives on French collaborators have been in France's possession since 1947.

According to Alexander de Marenches, who headed the French intelligence service between 1969 and 1981, the 10 tons of documents seized from the Gestapo and the Abwehr, the German army intelligence, had lain hidden away from prying eyes in the knowledge they would "compromise" many prominent people.

De Marenches alleges that on examining the archives when he took over as chief of the secret service, he discovered a mass of incriminating evidence.

In particular, he claimed in a book of memoirs published last month, the German documents showed that many members of the French resistance were double agents.

Some had infiltrated the underground on German orders. But, in a majority of cases, they had turned traitor following their arrest by the Germans in order to save their own skins.

His charges have set off an emotional polemic here, full of potential political dynamite.

The key to this is the Barbie affair.

Even before Marenches's avowal, speculation had been rife about the reasons for the repeated delays in bringing Barbie to trial.

He is accused of a long list of crimes, including the deportation and deaths of at least three thousand Jews, many of them children, while Gestapo chief in Lyons.

French officials say he also ordered the torture and execution of scores of French resistance fighters who fell into his hands.

His best-known victim was the resistance leader, Jean Moulin, a French national hero.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Duarte will probe link between military, Contras, aide says

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — President Jose Napoleon Duarte will have to investigate possible involvement by El Salvador's military in supplying rebels fighting the leftist government of Nicaragua, an aide said Monday.

"The president is in a difficult position," said the aide, who insisted on anonymity because of the matter's sensitivity. "He asked the chiefs of staff and they said the military was not involved."

Duarte said recently that claims of his government's involvement with the Contra rebels were "absolutely false." The military high command issued a statement denying any of its installations were used as logistical support bases for Nicaraguan guerrillas.

"He maintained what the military said," the presidential aide said Monday. "It will be difficult to back off. We will have to act, to investigate, and that is very difficult at this moment."

The military, which ruled El Salvador until 1979, still has a strong behind-the-scenes role in running the country. Previous attempts by Duarte's government to probe controversial issues involving the military have been fruitless.

For three years, there have been rumors and reports that the government and military gave tacit consent to Contra use of facilities at the Ilopango air base on San Salvador's outskirts. Supplies were reported stored at a base warehouse and flown to Contra camps.

Quake aid's distribution criticized

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A leading businessman on Monday accused the government of needlessly delaying the distribution of international aid to the thousands of people left homeless and hungry by the Oct. 10 earthquake.

Carlos Borja, president of the National Association of Private Enterprise, said corruption, bureaucracy and politics had slowed the distribution of food, shelter and other aid to quake victims in this Central American capital.

Julio Rey Prendes, minister of communications, said the official death count had reached 1,100 Monday and could go as high as 1,500 when the last of the victims are recovered from mudslides, wrecked buildings and shattered homes. The quake injured more than 8,000 people and left an estimated 300,000 homeless.

"What has happened is that this national tragedy has been converted into a political situation by the goverment," Borja told The Associated Press in an interview.

Aquilino Duarte, minister of agriculture and a member of the government's National Emergency Committee, said there still were some distribution problems because of the magnitude of the quake, which severely damaged several areas of the capital. But he denied they were serious.

Borja said the government initially put the massive task of aid distribution in the hands of private enterprise, but then later took over the job itself "and thus increased the bureaucracy.

Aquino, Enrile meet briefly

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino met briefly Monday with her controversial defense minister, and an opposition politician warned that unspecified forces were out to topple her government by mid-December.

Presidential spokesman Teodoro Benigno said Mrs. Aquino talked briefly with Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel Ramos at Malacangang Palace. He said he did not know what they discussed.

Some of Mrs. Aquino's supporters have called on Enrile to resign over his criticism of her strategy for settling the communist insurgency on Mindanao island and her refusal to schedule new presidential elections.

Manila newspapers reported Tuesday that unidentified military commanders have pledged to support Enrile in the growing Cabinet crisis.

Buses slam into train, killing 35

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Two packed buses that were racing each other slammed into a moving passenger train today, killing at least 35 people and injuring 24 others, officials and witnesses said.

All those killed had been aboard the buses and it appeared no one on the train was injured, police said.

Police and witnesses said the buses were racing each other when they approached a train crossing that had not been blocked off even though an express passenger train was passing through.

The two speeding buses hit the train and were demolished, witnesses said. Many bus passengers were crushed beneath the wheels of the train, they said.

Crowds of onlookers gathered at the scene in Karachi's Landhi area as rescue workers and police tried to clear the wreckage and extricate the wounded and the dead.

The train consisted of a locomotive and a single passenger car with some police officers aboard who had been checking the line.

Most buses in Karachi and the rest of Pakistan are run by private bus companies.

The buses, commonly referred to as "yellow devils," are notorious for racing each other to try to pick up passengers and often are involved in accidents.

Nazis' Peoples Court members won't be tried

BERLIN (AP) — West Berlin justice officials announced today they have decided against prosecuting members of the Nazis' infamous People's Court, which sentenced more than 5,000 people to death during the Third Reich.

Rupert Scholz, West Berlin city justice minister, said evidence against the former People's Court officials was weak because of the passage of time, and that West German authorities were negligent in failing to prosecute them earlier.

Volker Kaehne, spokesman for West Berlin's Justice Ministry, said the main reason the investigation was being closed is that the surviving prosecutors and justices of the People's Court living in West Germany — who number about 20 — are "unfit for trial" because of illness or old age.

He told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that a lack of evidence was another reason.

He said the decision means none of the former court officials will be charged with Nazi crimes in West Berlin. Technically, another criminal investigation could be opened against them in West Germany, although that is considered unlikely.

Scholz issued a statement criticizing earlier handling of the case by West German officials.

"Partly because of negligence by (federal) justice authorities, there was never a valid judgment (against the People's Court) by a German court. This must disappoint everyone who believes in justice," Scholz said.

He added that when West Berlin prosecutors took up the prosecution in 1979 the evidence already was "full of holes."

"The prosecutors in (West) Berlin undertook intensive efforts on this darkest chapter of German justice history. But they faced considerable legal and factual difficulties," his statement said.

Robert Kempner, a U.S. lawyer and former deputy chief counsel at the Allied powers' Nuremberg trials convened after World War II, called the decision not to prosecute the former People's Court officials a "tragedy of justice."
