Basin's weather could get sticky

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Humid, sticky weather more representative of Houston than Midland will persist for at least the next three days, but temperatures should refrain from approaching the century mark, according to weather forecasters.

"We can expect the humidity to be very high in the mornings — up to 90 percent," said Rick Davis, a meteorlogical technician with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

The high moisture content should drop back to 40 or 50 percent in the afternoons, he said, adding "that would just about be normal conditions for the Gulf Coast area."

Over the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. this morning, the weather service recorded a little more than a half-inch of rain, mostly falling before noon Monday, Davis said.

Weathermen fielded calls, however, that reported as much as 1½ inches in virtually all sections of Midland County.

But even the larger amount won't quench thirsty county cotton crops that are parched from a growing season of less than average rainfall, Earnest Kiker, Midland County Extension Agent, said today.

Will recent rains make difference?

LUBBOCK (AP) — With harvest two months away, area growers hope recent crucial rains will mean they'll be taking healthy crops to a market where prices have risen due to a drought scorching much of the Farm Belt.

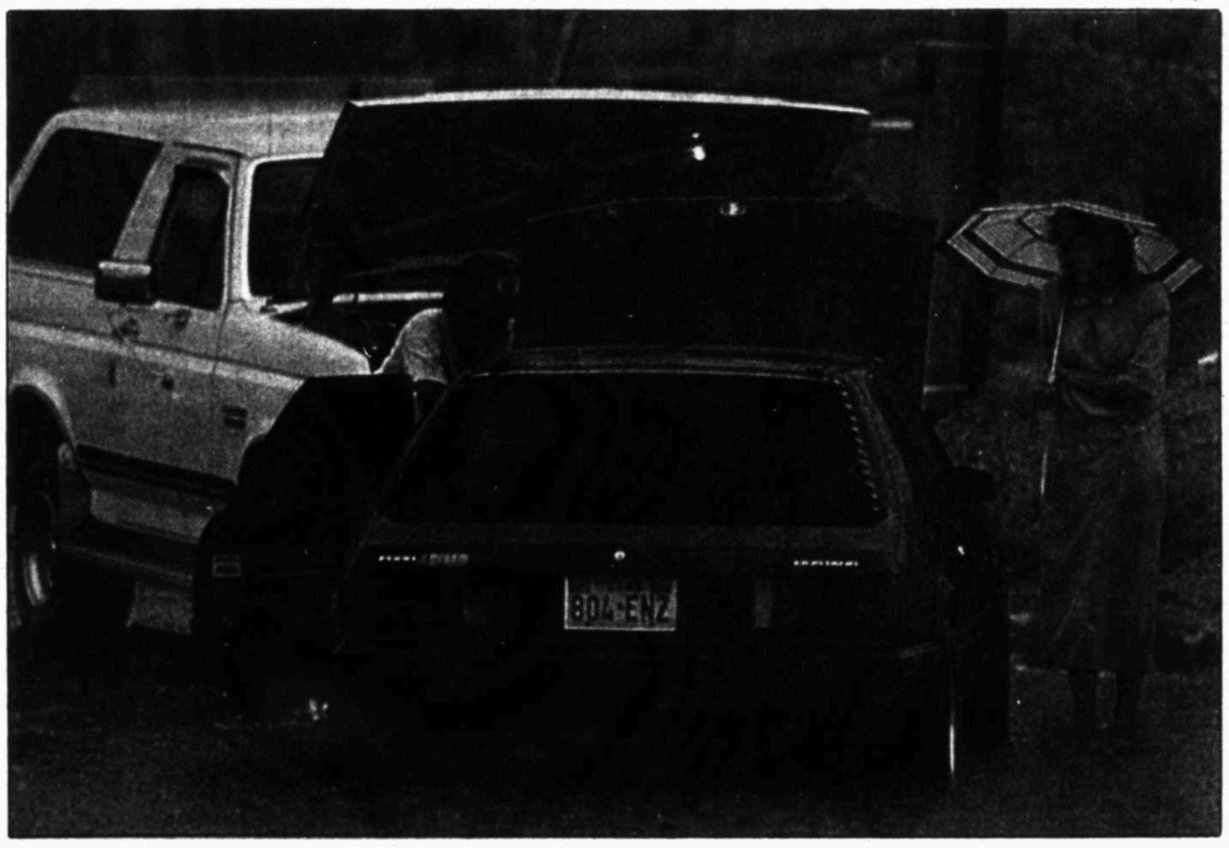

The croplands of the South Plains and Panhandle were sprinkled Monday and over the weekend, providing rainfall just when things were beginning to dry out, said county agents. Most of the area received 1-2 inches of rain Sunday and Monday, said the National Weather Service.

"We were approaching the critical stage for cotton moisture," said NWS meteorological technician Jerry English on Monday. "We got the rain we need at just the right time."

But in the Midwest and Tennessee Valley, suffering the nation's worst drought since the Dust Bowl, fields of corn, grain and soybeans are disaster areas due to lack of rainfall and high temperatures.

Shriveled crops have caused commodity prices to jump sharply, which is good news to farmers with healthy crops.

MISD targets tract for new primary school

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The area where the school district superintendent proposes the construction of a new primary school is in the heart of the fastest-growing quadrant in Midland, city planners said.

Midland Independent School District hopes to purchase a 10-acre inner Loop 250 tract of land west of Midland Drive and either north or south of Wadley Avenue by July 14, Superintendent Joe Baressi said at a public forum Monday night.

A 15-classroom primary school will be built in that northwest Midland area to house overflow kindergarteners, first-, second- and third-graders from Parker and Rusk elementary schools, school district trustees explained.

As populations increase at Santa Rita Elementary, located north of Loop 250 between Garfield and Midkiff Road, students will be housed in five portable buildings, Baressi proposed.

Scharbauer Elementary, located west of Andrews Highway and Loop 250, will continue to receive rural students as well as the students who move into far-west Midland areas such as the currently developing Grassland Estates.

The new primary school is a facet of the district's $11.8 million expansion plan passed by voters May 7.

Over the past five to six years, about $10 million has been spent on expanding facilities at Rusk, Parker, Santa Rita and Scharbauer elementaries, Baressi said.

According to the city of Midland's "Centennial Comprehensive Plan," Rusk and Scharbauer Elementary schools were to serve the area between Midland Drive and Loop 250 until the demand for a school site occurs with the further development of the Wydewood and Fairmont Park neighborhoods.

Integrating the proposed primary school into the district's elementary "cluster" system likely will be done via two ways, explained Larry Lusby, MISD director of computer services.

Students attending the new primary school — slated for opening in September 1989 — will either attend Lamar, Rusk and Crockett elementaries or Parker, Houston and DeZavala elementaries for grades four, five and six depending on whether they would have attended Parker or Rusk elementaries for their primary grades.

According to the Centennial Plan, elementary schools should be developed next to neighborhood parks in order to provide shared land area and equipment.

Discipline policy due another debate

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The school district's 24-hour drug, alcohol and tobacco policy for students in extracurricular activities may come under fire tonight as trustees review the all-encompassing "Discipline Management Plan."

According to the Midland Independent School District's agenda, plan revisions can be passed on first reading at the 7:15 p.m. board meeting tonight, but an MISD official said the board is looking at technical revisions of disciplining handicapped students.

However, in the open meeting, the public can speak to any issues relating to the discipline plan, district spokesman Ted Miller explained.

The 24-hour policy came under fire when it was passed in September 1986 because of its sweeping surveillance policies.

The 24-hour policy prohibited students involved in extracurricular activities from using drugs, alcohol or tobacco products at any time.

Bomb kills diplomat in Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The U.S. military attache to Greece was killed today on the small street where he lived by a car bomb that blew his armor-plated car off the road as he was driving to work, police said.

Navy Capt. William E. Nordeen was just 100 yards away from his home when the blast hurled his car across the street, lodging it in a steel fence, a police spokesman said on condition of anonymity.

The officer's decapitated body was found a few yards away in the front yard of an abandoned house.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Maj. Alan Frietag would not release the name of the victim pending notification of next of kin.

But he said the senior military officer assigned to the U.S. embassy in Athens, a Navy captain, was killed this morning in a bomb blast near his home.

The explosion occurred at 8:06 a.m. (1:06 a.m. EDT) in the northern Athens suburb of Kifissia, where many American and foreign diplomats live.

According to the semi-official Athens News Agency, Nordeen, 52, was married and had one daughter.

No group claimed responsibility for the blast, but senior Greek police officials believed it to be the work of November 17, a left-wing urban terrorist group.

November 17 has claimed credit for 11 assasinations since 1975, including the 1983 shooting of U.S. Navy Capt. George Tsantes and the 1975 assasination of Richard Welch, CIA station chief in Athens.

Some Pentagon secrets shared freely, testimony reveals

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — Long-forgotten courtroom testimony reveals that private defense consultants and contractors didn't need an underground operation to obtain classified information from Pentagon employees. They could get it simply by asking.

The open-door system apparently operated alongside the clandestine arrangements between consultants and Pentagon employees that are the subject of an intensive federal investigation.

Investigators believe consultants using the secret system may have bribed Defense Department officials to obtain top-secret information, including plans of one contractor that could be sold to another.

Tucked away in a court reporter's records in Baltimore is a 1984 description — and a defense — of the more open cooperation between some consultants, contractors and Pentagon officials.

The information obtained in the open was important to contractors seeking to bid on Pentagon projects. But private lawyers familiar with the system said the information usually was secret rather than top secret, and only consisted of Pentagon documents, not those of contractors.

The up-front system came to light in January 1984, when lawyers for a private defense consultant summoned Caroline A. Chewning to the witness stand in U.S. District Court in Baltimore.

Then and now involved with writing programs for the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, Ms. Chewning testified that consultants and contractors with security clearances routinely asked for key documents at offices such as hers — which writes "wish lists" for futuristic military technology.

Bribes were not necessary, she testified, because the information was "made available to them for free."

Why? Because, she testified, contractors could not possibly submit a thorough bid for a major Pentagon project within the required 45 days after an official notice was published.

Richards' blunt style draws party praise

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Ann Richards, tapped as the keynote speaker for the Democratic National Convention, is known for using blunt rhetoric tempered with wicked humor to get her point across.

At a recent Democratic Party fundraiser in Houston, one man after another — none of them minorities — came to the podium to speak. Finally it was the turn of Ms. Richards, the Texas state treasurer and potential 1990 gubernatorial candidate.

"Now are there any other white men who haven't spoken yet?" she said sweetly. "God knows we don't want to leave any of you out."

The audience roared with laughter, as Ms. Richards' audiences usually do. And, as usual, her audience got the message.

On Monday, her stump style was praised by Democratic Party chief Paul G. Kirk as he announced her selection as the speaker whose address will open the party's convention next month in Atlanta.

The 54-year-old Ms. Richards, Kirk said at a Washington news conference, "has the ability to tell it like it is."

She will be the second woman in party history to deliver the convention keynote speech. Kirk said Michael Dukakis, the Democratic nominee-apparent, had urged the selection of a woman keynote speaker.

"He was very hopeful that we might make a selection of a woman," the party chief said, "not only because of the importance of the family concerns, the issues of stress and struggle that women are going through in the daily work lives and family lives, but I think it is symbolic of the importance of women to the American family and the realities of all of that."

Ms. Richards, the first woman in 50 years to hold statewide office in Texas, is the divorced mother of four grown children.

In 1976, her first attempt at elected office, Ms. Richards defeated an incumbent Travis County commissioner. In 1982, the state's incumbent treasurer, under indictment for official misconduct, withdrew from a Democratic runoff against her. She won the general election and was re-elected without opposition in 1986.

Local CAP to join Santa Fe-based search for Midlander

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Civil Air Patrol personnel waited for thick clouds to lift today to launch a search for a Midland man believed lost Monday when his single-engine airplane hit a wave of thunderstorms.

"We are deeply involved" in the search, Ralph Lang, Midland CAP squadron commander said today from the Schlemeyer Field mission base. "We will be sending aircraft as soon as possible."

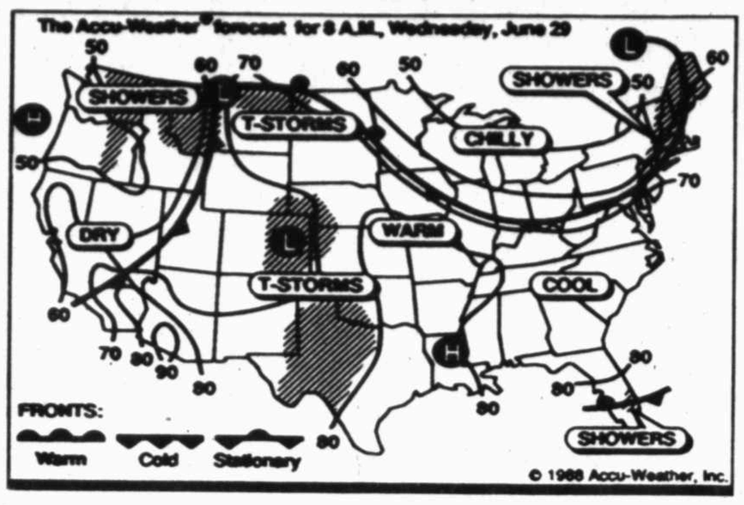

The pilot left a Santa Fe, N.M., airport about 9 a.m. Monday and was bound for Midland, New Mexico CAP spokeswoman Madge Harrah said. CAP crews based in Santa Fe resumed their search this morning after seven aircraft failed to locate any wreckage before dark Monday.

"Right now we are setting up the mission here at Schlemeyer," said Anthony Flores, CAP public affairs officer. "As soon as the ceiling rises, we will send out two airplanes, and possibly a third."

Two Piper low-wing aircraft owned by CAP members were scheduled to search an area between Clovis and Roswell, N.M., Flores said. A pilot and at least one observer would be on each plane, he said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

HUMIDITY

Kiker estimated that crops need an additional 1½ inches in the next few days to contribute to a successful harvest.

"It was a real spotted rain," said of Monday's moisture.

While any amount of rain "is going to benefit us," the extension agent remained pessimistic on the crop's prospects. Monday's rain "is going to prolong the plants dying," he said.

"We're in a critical stage now," he observed of county cotton plants. The stalks are "squaring," he said, speaking of a growing stage before cotton blossoms appear.

"It's up," he said. "We've got a real good crop started. We've got an excellent potential of getting a good cotton crop — if it rains enough."

Chances for rain over the next three days remain at 20 percent in the mornings and 30 percent in the afternoons and evenings, Davis said. The weather service is predicting that high temperatures will reach above the 80s into the 90 or 92-degree range.

Tonight's low temperature will dip into the mid-60s, and winds should be light and southerly.

The unusually humid weather is the product of two weather systems, Davis said. A high pressure zone that sits above the Texas Gulf Coast is feeding moist air into West Texas with the help of a low pressure area located above the Permian Basin.

According to a city of Midland traffic engineer, Monday's rain has delayed completion of one section of the Wadley Avenue reconstruction project, but work as a whole remains on schedule.

Gary Saunders, assistant traffic engineer, said that construction on the north side of Wadley between I and Garfield streets now is scheduled to wind up about a week past its original July 4 target completion.

The street between I and Garfield will remain open only to one-way eastbound traffic until the section is finished he said.

To make up lost time, construction crews are starting work on the northern portion of the avenue between Whitney and Garfield streets even while work winds down between Garfield and I, Saunders said.

With the opening of the second work front, the entire stretch of Wadley between Whitney and I will be open only to one-way eastbound traffic, he said.

Completion of the project is scheduled for mid-September, he said.

STATE

A flash watch was in effect through tonight for Southwest portions of South Texas after flash-flood producing rainfall drenched the San Antonio area.

Officials at Randolph Air Force Base at San Antonio reported that 2½ inches of rain fell in about one hour, producing some flash flooding in the area.

National Weather Service forecasters said there were indications that some areas in the area covered by the flash flood watch got 3-5 inches of rain during the night.

The flash flood watch covers southern portions of the Hill Country, Edwards Plateau and the Rio Grande plains.

The watch area was bounded by a line from Del Rio to Kerrville to Laredo. It did not cover the metropolitan areas of Austin and San Antonio.

The flash flood watch was prompted by the heavy rainfall during the night and heavy rains of the past two days that have left the ground saturated. Forecasters said moist, unstable air in the area was expected to trigger additional heavy, slow-moving showers and thunderstorms across the watch area through tonight.

Scattered showers were reported early today, a few with heavy rain, over portions of South Central Texas and the middle Rio Grande plains. Other showers and a few thunderstorms are scattered along the Guadalupe Mountains, over northern and eastern sections of the Panhandle and western portions of the South Plains.

Task force hears testimony on farming

LUBBOCK (AP) — A task force created to make recommendations on improving Texas' agricultural industry heard several hours of testimony at its first hearing Monday.

The task force formed by Republican Gov. Bill Clements will hold three more hearings before presenting recommendations to Clements by Sept. 7.

"I've heard strong support for rural economic development," said task force chairman Jerry Harris, a ginner from Lamesa. "And we'll have to move quickly so the governor will be able to act on it in the Legislature."

Much of the testimony Monday focused on whether the Texas Department of Agriculture should continue its agenda or whether the agriculture commissioner's post — currently held by Democrat Jim Hightower — should be changed to an appointed rather than elected post.

Several people at the hearing were TDA supporters.

Foy Mitchell, a Fisher County farmer, said TDA is the producer's "voice in state government," adding "not only did TDA tell us what to do; they led the way."

Minnie Lou Bradley of Childress, a rancher and meat packer, acknowledged that she often disagrees with TDA philosophy, but the agency helped her family company enter the market.

But State Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who sat on the task force panel, countered that much of the credit TDA is taking for improvements stems from the work of other entities such as the Texas Agriculture Extension Service.

Texas Cattle Feeders Association executive Richard McDonald of Amarillo said the TDA should be changed from having an elected commissioner to having a governor-appointed commission which would hire a professional executive director.

McDonald said such a structure would enhance long-range program planning, remove the politics from the regulatory functions of TDA, provide a constant review of the programs with more direct input from agriculture and consumer leaders, and provide a director who would not spend time campaigning every four years.

FARMERS

"The way these commodity prices have gone up on corn and soybeans, if you're going to have something to sell, it looks pretty promising right now," said Bob Benson, Hale County Extension Agent.

Although county extension agents said anything could happen between now and the fall harvest, the corn and soybean crops are thriving at the same pace as prices.

In the past month, corn prices have doubled from $1.70-$1.85 in May to $3.52½ a bushel, for July delivery, at Monday's closing on the Chicago Board of Trade. Soybeans closed at $10.59 a bushel for July delivery. Wheat prices, which hit $4 a bushel Monday, are up about $1 from last year's level.

"If that dry weather continues (in drought regions) so that their crops are expected to be reduced, particularly in the feed grains ... that would mean substantial improvement for prices for farmers here if they do make a good crop," said Kary Mathis, head of Texas Tech University's agricultural economics department.

The healthy progress of the sugar beet and feed corn crops in Deaf Smith County has sparked keen interest in agricultural marketing firms, said county agent Dennis Newton, with marketing representatives calling frequently to check conditions.

"It's a shame that somebody else has to suffer before someone else makes a crop," said Benson. "A few years ago we were in a drought and the Midwest was laughing off with good prices. But that's just the cold, hard facts of farming."

One group of Panhandle farmers wasn't able to capitalize on higher, drought-driven prices.

With harvesting about 80 percent completed, wheat yields are down by almost half on dryland crops due to disease and dry conditions in the early spring.

"If we'd have had the yields of the last four years, our farmers really could have paid off some debt," said Newton. "We had a situation where prices were up, but the crop's just not that good."

POLICY

A citizens' group, Parents Against the 24-Hour Surveillance Policy, has been formed to elicit changes in the plan.

According to an advertisement that appeared in the Reporter-Telegram Monday, the parents' group feels students are parents' responsibility during non-school hours — not the MISD's; the policy is unequally enforced; the policy singles out extracurricular activity students and has created "witch-hunts" in the schools, turning students against students.

Under the 24-hour policy, a student caught using or possessing drugs or alcohol is suspended from extracurricular activities for two weeks on the first offense.

A second violation results in the student's loss of extracurricular activity privileges for the remainder of the year.

If after the second violation, however, the student and family successfully complete a six-week chemical dependency program, the student may be reinstated in his activities.

Students caught using or possessing a tobacco product off campus would be required to serve a three-hour work detail on the first offense.

A second tobacco violation will result in the student being suspended from extracurricular activities for five days.

On the third offense for any of the three substances, a student will be suspended from all activities for the remainder of the season or term of office.

BOARD

The school district will continue to hold onto its far-northwest Midland tract on the corner of Mockingbird Lane and Oriole Drive, Baressi said, for future possible construction plans.

"I hope no one thinks we're making random decisions off the top of our head. We have put some time into this," said trustee Jim Builta, after the meeting.

Trustees explained they have little time, however, with which to study and decide the matter because they inherited the expansion concerns from the prior school board.

"We are very limited on our choices. This should have been addressed three years ago," trustee Ken Marks said. "We're going to try to do what's best for the children."

Bentsen's name bandied about as running mate considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, who moved into the congressional forefront over the past three years in the Democratic drive to sharpen the nation's edge in global trade, is once again in the spotlight as Michael Dukakis mulls over his vice presidential options.

A Southwestern conservative, a Protestant, a Washington insider — Bentsen chairs the powerful Senate Finance Committee, and sports a record on defense that is hawkish but not stridently so — what more could likely Democratic nominee Dukakis ask if a balanced ticket is his goal for the fall campaign?

No Democrat has been elected president in this century without carrying Texas, and Bentsen would be a formidable opponent in one of the states all-but-certain Republican nominee George Bush calls home.

In fact, the Texas senator knows all about defeating Bush — he did it in the 1970 senate race.

Bentsen, an elegantly tailored, silver-haired patrician, is the scion of a wealthy landed family from the Rio Grande Valley.

Friends describe Bentsen's way with a speech as "not incendiary." Actually, his carefully qualified, never overstated commentaries on the nation's foreign trade outlook have been known to draw yawns and glazed eyes.

Bentsen mounted a 1976 run for the Democratic presidential nomination but excited little interest. In 1984, he was on Democratic nominee Walter Mondale's list of possible running mates — one of the few white males in a field that included former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein and eventual pick Geraldine Ferraro.

On the negative side, Bentsen created a furor in February 1987 when it was revealed that he had asked lobbyists to pay $10,000 apiece to join him for breakfast once a month.

The breakfast club, called the "Chairman's Council," held one meeting and was quickly disbanded with Bentsen promising to return the money collected from an estimated 40 lobbyists.

Bentsen was born Feb. 11, 1921, in Mission, Texas, the son of "Big Lloyd" Bentsen, who migrated to the Rio Grande Valley after World War I and made himself wealthy as a rancher and by buying land and reselling it, largely to Midwest farmers who wanted to become citrus producers.

He received a law degree from the University of Texas in 1942 and joined the Army Air Corps, earning his pilot's wings and flying bomber missions over the Third Reich. He served as a Hidalgo County, Texas, judge from 1946 through 1948, when he was elected to the U.S. House.

Bentsen was a member of the House until 1955, when he retired to go into business and enhance his family's fortunes. He took over the operation of a small insurance company and transformed it into a financial holding company, increasing its size several times in the process.

He also kept his hand in Texas politics, serving as state finance chairman for Lyndon B. Johnson's campaigns. Content with his business achievements, Bentsen reentered politics in 1970, defeating liberal incumbent Ralph Yarborough in the primary and broadening his appeal in the general election to defeat Bush.

Bentsen could be of as much value off the ticket as on it. He is up for re-election this year and his much-vaunted organization could make Dukakis competitive in Texas if Bentsen leads the state office ticket.

Ann Richards

RICHARDS

After the 1982 election, Ms. Richards moved quickly to change operations in the state treasury. She also made staff changes, boosting the number of women and minorities on the job in the 170-employee agency. She now claims the agency payroll has an ethnic and sex balance reflecting the state's general population.

Ms. Richards said Monday that women's issues are "the same issues that affect all other human beings" — but with a twist.

"The difference is the role, sociologically, that women have played. That is we are the caretakers, the nurturers," she says. "It usually falls to us when any time hard times and bad times hit."

It's a message often repeated by Ms. Richards. If you can make a household work, she says, you can succeed in government.

"Most homemakers don't know what enormous skills they have. Putting three meals on the table each day is a pretty big job in itself, much less doing the laundry and car pooling," she once told a reporter.

Her professional success has come despite personal challenges. In 1980, after being confronted by family members, she sought treatment for alcoholism. She says she has not had a drink since then, and she has been active in helping others battle alcoholism.

Shortly after her treatment, she and husband David Richards separated, and in 1984 the two obtained what they both said was an amicable divorce.

Ms. Richards said she is not certain what effect her half-hour in the political spotlight in Atlanta will have on her gubernatorial race.

DEFENSE

So officials simply handed out the information to security-cleared consultants and contractors to give them a head start.

"It's in the government's best interest that contractors have this information. If they had to go to 'official channels,' it may take them six months. ... You're on a tight contract award basis, and you don't have time for that," she said in defense of the system.

"The government and private industry must cooperate in order to get contracts awarded and material developed."

The Defense Department would not say Monday whether the system has been changed. But in a speech, Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci cautioned against any hasty reforms of the defense contracting system.

While Carlucci said the government may terminate contracts found to be tainted, he said "the last thing we need now are hasty, piecemeal changes that despite good intentions ultimately may make matters worse."

Carlucci said "no system can offer perfect protection against the human factor. There is simply no way to devise a system that is greed-proof."

The contracting system will undergo congressional scrutiny Wednesday when the House Armed Services Committee holds the first formal hearing on procurement practices since the fraud investigation became public June 14.

The first witness will be Robert Costello, undersecretary of defense for acquisition policy.

Also Monday, sources said 90 percent of the defense contractors checked in a Pentagon study last year were sloppy in handling classified documents, despite assurances given Congress by former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that the program had few problems.

The study was done by the Defense Investigative Service but was withheld from Congress by Weinberger.

Correction

An article in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram about a $12,500 matching challenge for tree-planting at Midland International Airport mistakenly attributed a quote from businessman Cy Wagner to his partner, Jack Brown.

According to a press release, Wagner said: "We hope our challenge and contribution will motivate others to get involved and make this project possible for Midland and the entire Permian Basin."

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

PLANE

"His normal route would have been from Santa Fe to Clovis, then to Midland," Flores said. "When he left, there was a thick wall of embedded thunderstorms too thick for any plane to pass between Clovis and El Paso.

"Even if he took an alternate route, he couldn't have gotten through that," Flores added.

The officer confirmed the pilot was from Midland, but he declined to identify him.

A third plane would be sent up today if it is deemed necessary. Meanwhile, the two planes will search until the pilot is found, Flores said.

"They will come back at a certain point to refuel," he said. "It depends on a lot of things, including the weather. But they will search until someone finds him, or until it has just been too long, and the search is called off."

CAP members from San Angelo, Lubbock and Lamesa were expected to travel to Odessa to aid in the search, Flores said.

According to the New Mexico CAP, the man was an experienced pilot who had flown the Santa Fe to Midland route frequently.

90 percent of contractors sloppy with secrets, report says

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite assurances by then-Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that there were few problems, 90 percent of the defense contractors surveyed in a Pentagon study last year were found to be sloppy in handling secrets.

The study was done by the Defense Investigative Service but was withheld from Congress by Weinberger because he didn't like the conclusions of the report, according to sources who spoke Monday on condition they not be named.

The report dealt with the way Pentagon contractors handle highly classified information known as "special access programs."

It was ordered by Congress in 1986 after an investigation by a House subcommitee into allegations that Lockheed, a major defense contractor, couldn't find a number of classified documents on its highly secret "stealth" airplane program.

The DIS study was not directly related to the current criminal investigation of the Pentagon and defense contractors. That probe centers on allegations that defense contractors and consultants, many of them former military men, bribed Pentagon officials for information which could be vital in winning contracts worth billions of dollars.

The DIS review of hundreds of contractors contradicts a statement by Weinberger to Congress that "the vast majority" of defense contractors did a satisfactory job of handling classified material.

The 80-page DIS report is itself classified and has not been publicly released. But its contents were described Monday by sources who had access to the document.

The study reviewed 101 different programs at 603 contractor locations around the nation, the sources said. Many of the facilities were working on more than one classified Pentagon program.

The study set up five grades for the way contractors handled classified information, the sources said. The worst was unsatisfactory; the next lowest was "major deficiencies;" followed by a "letter of requirement," which meant problems were found that needed to be corrected later. The second-best category was "corrected on the spot," while the top was no deficiencies at all, the sources said.

The study found that only 10 percent of the contractors had no deficiencies, the sources said.

Six percent were rated unsatisfactory, 47 percent had major deficiencies, 34 percent had "letter of requirement" deficiencies, and 3 percent had problems that were corrected on the spot, according to the sources.

The study was finished by April 1987, but Weinberger refused to send it to Capitol Hill, the sources said.

Instead, Weinberger sent a letter on June 17, 1987, noting that the study had been done and outlining what Weinberger said were its contents.

Weinberger told Congress that the security of classified information "was outstanding in some (contractors), satisfactory in the vast majority, and unsatisfactory in a few contractor locations."

But the study painted a different picture. Attempts to reach Weinberger on Monday for an explanation were unsuccessful. He did not return two telephone calls to his law office.

However, Weinberger has defended his Pentagon tenure, saying he was not responsible for any abuses which occurred while he was defense secretary.

"I don't have any basis whatever for saying I didn't do enough, and I certainly don't feel culpable," Weinberger said Sunday on an ABC-TV show.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, said on the same show that "we warned Mr. Weinberger" there were problems in the way the Pentagon was buying weapons and also in the methods used by contractors to handle classified information.

Between 1984 and 1986, the Energy and Commerce investigations subcommittee held 17 public hearings on defense contractors, many of them focusing on specific weapons and contractors, subcommittee records show.

The DIS study was required by a proposal which originated with Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., ranking Democrat on the subcommittee. His proposal was adopted in August 1986 as an amendment to the Pentagon budget bill for fiscal 1987.

Wyden said he wasn't satisfied by Weinberger's June 17 letter because "our subcommittee had been investigating this issue and his letter just didn't feel right. I felt it was a whitewash. And then we heard from some people over in the Pentagon that Weinberger's letter was far different from what the DIS report said."

Weinberger didn't send the DIS report to Capitol Hill until last Oct. 2, the day the subcommittee had scheduled a meeting to vote on whether to try to subpoena the report.

The panel went ahead anyway and voted for the subpoena, but the action was never ratified by the full committee or House because the report had already been sent, Wyden noted.

"At that point, there was no point in pursuing it any more to try to get the report," Wyden explained.

Surrogate parenting in Michigan to be illegal

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Middlemen who profit from surrogate births risk up to five years in prison and $50,000 in fines under a law that makes Michigan the first state to attach criminal sanctions to pregnancy-for-pay deals.

Gov. James Blanchard on Monday signed into law a bill that makes arranging such deals a felony beginning September 1. Advertising or otherwise "inducing" a woman to become a surrogate also will be a felony.

"It's a major victory," Jeremy Rifkin, co-chair of the National Coalition Against Surrogacy, said in Washington.

"Michigan will be leading the way with this legislation," said state Sen. Connie Binsfeld, leader of a five-year drive to outlaw surrogacy.

"I believe the Legislature and the governor have carried out a very strong moral obligation to protect children from becoming commodities under commercial contracts," said the Republican senator.

The executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union's Michigan chapter said he was contemplating a legal challenge against the law.

"It's hard to understand how a governor who's pro-choice would criminalize the process when a surrogate mother and a couple wish to bring life into this world," said Howard Simon.

In announcing his decision, the Democratic governor said he signed the law despite reservations because he believed it was better than none at all.

"By taking the profit out of childbirth, it stands firm against the buying and selling of human life," he said.

Also under the law, those who contract for a birth and women who agree to bear a child for money will risk misdemeanor penalties of up to 90 days in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Typically, infertile couples pay $10,000 to be matched with a would-be mother. They pay another $10,000 to the woman who agrees to be artifically inseminated, carry the child, then give up custody. They also pay for the hospital bills and pregnancy-related expenses.

The law would still allow a woman who wants to bear a child and then give up the baby to another couple to do so, while having pregnancy-related bills paid. But the mother could get no fee and any middleman would have to work for free.

The law doesn't address the legality for a Michigan couple to sign a contract in another state and carry out the agreement in Michigan, said Noel Keane, a Dearborn attorney, who has arranged 228 surrogate births, including New Jersey's "Baby M."

"Maybe the arrangement of a contract could be anywhere outside Michigan, and the insemination, the birth, the payment, everything else take place inside Michigan," said Keane.

Keane said a constitutional challenge probably would be based on a 1972 U.S. Supreme Court decision establishing as part of the right to privacy the right to beget children without unwarranted governmental intrusion.

The mother of "Baby M," Mary Beth Whitehead-Gould, sued Keane when she decided to keep her child. She won an out-of-court settlement for an amount reported at between $30,000 and $40,000.

But in a landmark custody battle over the girl she bore under a $10,000 contract, Mrs. Whitehead-Gould won only visitation rights. On Feb. 3, the New Jersey Supreme Court granted custody of the 2-year-old girl, now legally known as Melissa, to the child's father, William Stern.

The court, in overturning part of a lower court ruling, also outlawed surrogacy for pay and restored Mrs. Whitehead-Gould's parental rights to the child.

Michigan is the first state to attach criminal penalties to surrogate-parent contracts, but not the first to address the issue.

Kentucky and Louisiana have enacted laws declaring such contracts illegal, but don't impose criminal penalties. Nebraska doesn't recognize the legal validity of surrogate-parenting contracts. Indiana has put enforcement of such arrangements on hold while the issue is researched, and proposed regulations were vetoed in Arkansas.

Harold Cassidy, Mrs. Whitehead-Gould's attorney, said states generally have not have not enforced those statutes "out of apparent confusion as to whether such enforcement would represent the will of the people," he said.

He said many states will follow Michigan's lead, and "prosecutors will no longer have a choice" in bringing charges against surrogacy brokers.

Under the law, those who contract for a birth and women who agree to bear a child for money will risk misdemeanor penalties of up to 90 days in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Dukakis touts Massachusetts housing record

Associated Press

Dukakis

Republican George Bush was traveling to California today to visit a NASA research center and a neighborhood safety program as Democrat Michael Dukakis was touting his Massachusetts record on housing issues before focusing again on the search for a running mate.

While the presidential candidates were out stumping, the Republican National Committee prepared today to announce its "major speaker" for the GOP's convention August in New Orleans.

The announcement follows the Democrats' selection on Monday of Texas State Treasurer Ann Richards, a fiery populist orator, to deliver the keynote speech and "set the tone" for the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta next month.

Richards, 54, will be the second woman in party history to deliver the convention-opening address.

Jesse Jackson, meanwhile, says he is weighing which of a dozen issues left out of the party platform to bring up at convention. His comments came after Democrats, meeting in Denver and Washington over the weekend, agreed to a platform draft and an overhaul of party rules in a rare atmosphere of unity.

Jackson was part of the sellout crowd of 21,785 in Atlantic City, N.J., who watched Mike Tyson knock out Michael Spinks in the first round and retain the undisputed heavyweight crown.

Dukakis will travel on Wednesday to Washington to meet with several dozen senators, including some who have been mentioned as possible running mates.

Among them is Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn, although he said Monday he was not providing the Dukakis campaign with background and financial information it has requested of prospective running mates.

Nunn said he had told Dukakis and campaign chairman Paul Brountas that a spot on the Democratic ticket is "not on my agenda." Brountas is heading the search for a running mate.

Another prominent senator, New Jersey's Bill Bradley, last week said he had informed Dukakis that he did not want to be considered.

Those under consideration, according to sources, include Jackson, Sens. Bob Graham of Florida, Nunn, John Glenn of Ohio, and Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, and Reps. Thomas Foley of Washington and Lee Hamilton of Indiana.

Sen. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas and Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt also reportedly have been asked to provide information to Brountas.

Aides said there was no timetable for making or announcing the choice for the second spot on the ticket.

Jackson has continued to talk about his own qualifications as a running mate for Dukakis. And although he says he's happy with parts of the platform, he is indicating that some points of disagreement will be brought up at the convention.

"By and large, we got many of our campaign priorities in the platform," Jackson said Monday. But he noted that his forces had "protected our right to...protest or raise other issues in Atlanta."

One of those issues might be a call for the creation of a Palestinian homeland — rejected by the Dukakis forces for inclusion in the platform.

"Reasonable discussion on this matter should not alienate anyone," Jackson said in Rosemont, Ill.

"Tips for Tops" (Devyn Press, 224 pp, paperback. Available from Bridge World, 39 W. 94th St., New York, N.Y 10024 at $9.95 post free) is the latest book by George Rosenkranz. It consists of articles published in the ACBL Bulletin, many of them expanded. It is loaded with sage advice, and each chapter ends with a tip summarizing the author's thinking on that section. This hand is from the chapter entitled Making Sure Partner Does the Right Thing.

North-South reach a normal four-spade contract after a limit raise by North. You lead your singleton ace of hearts, and partner plays a discouraging deuce. You shift to the two of clubs, and give yourself a pat on the back when partner's jack wins the trick. Partner continues with the ace of clubs as declarer follows with the eight and ten to these two tricks. Do you foresee any danger and, if so, what do you do about it?

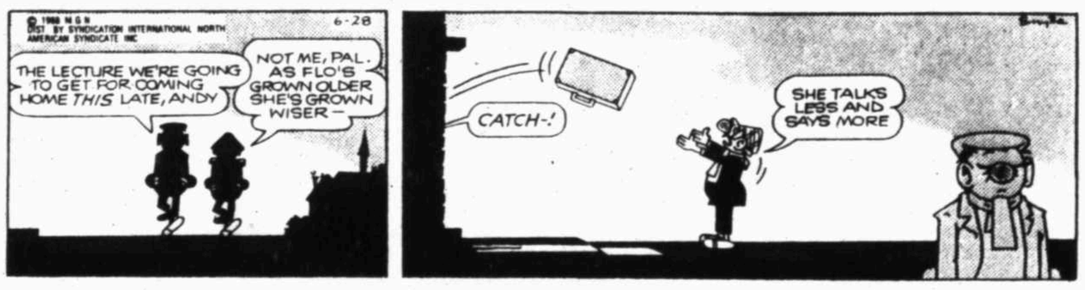

Obviously, there is a grave risk that partner will try to cash a third club rather than give you a heart ruff. A third club might live, but you know that a heart ruff will defeat the hand. You can direct partner to the sure-trick defense by dropping your king of clubs under the ace! Since you would have led the king from a doubleton, partner knows that a club continuation is futile and will revert to hearts.

The tip: If you are defending and you know how to beat the contract, take charge and stop partner from making an error in the clearest way possible.

We could not have put it better ourselves.

35-year-old Lauper gets diploma

NEW YORK (AP) — Quoting a line from her grandfather to the effect of "the more you learn, the more you earn," Cyndi Lauper picked up her honorary diploma from Richmond Hill High School.

The 35-year-old singer, whose hits include "Girls Just Wanna Have Fun," dropped out of the Queens public school "years ago," according to her publicist, Robin Riggs.

She does, however, have a high-school equivalency diploma.

At the commencement ceremonies Monday at Queens College, Lauper stressed the importance of education in her speech to the 400 graduating students.

But, she admitted, "I was never good at formal education."

NEW YORK (AP) — Convicted murderer Jean Harris' new book gives a first-hand look at how women were treated in prison recently.

The book's title, "They Always Call Us Ladies: Stories From Prison," is derived from how the prison refers to its inmates.

This is the second book by Ms. Harris, who is serving a 15-year-to-life sentence for murdering Scarsdale Diet author Dr. Herman Tarnower. Her first, the autobiographical "Stranger in Two Worlds," was a best seller in 1986.

"They Always Call Us Ladies" is a history of the Bedford Hills Correctional Facility since its founding as a women's reformatory in 1901. It also contains anecdotes about current inmates and prison life, and is scheduled for publication Aug. 17 by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Ms. Harris and Tarnower were lovers. She shot the 69-year-old diet doctor to death in his home on March 10, 1980, because he was supposedly leaving her for a younger woman. While Harris contends she shot Tarnower four times by accident as he tried to stop her from committing suicide, jurors concluded she deliberately killed him because he was ending their relationship.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Duchess of York has been preparing for motherhood by writing children's stories, according to her publisher.

Two chidren's books by the 28-year-old former Sarah "Fergie" Ferguson are scheduled for publication at about the time of her own child's first birthday, Simon & Schuster said Monday. She and her husband, Prince Andrew, are expecting their first child in August.

The two children's stories, about a helicopter named Budgie, will be aimed at very young children and will be illustrated by one of Britain's top children's book illustrators, according to the publisher.

The American company is planning to publish the books in August 1989 in association with Simon & Schuster Ltd. of London.

The duchess has been working on the books with an editor in London for the past few months, according to the publisher. A portion of the proceeds will be donated to charity.

NEW YORK (AP) — Tonight's "Late Night with David Letterman" will be the the first original program since the Writers Guild of America strike forced the talk show into reruns three months ago.

Letterman

As of Monday, Letterman was expecting to come back without his writers, though the show's producers were trying to work out a guild waiver that would allow the writing staff to work.

Head writer Steve O'Donnell stressed last week that whether or not they were at work, Letterman was going on the air with the writers' blessings and in no way was trying to disadvantage the guild, of which Letterman is a member.

"We've been having meetings all week and we've decided the best thing is to get the show on the air," O'Donnell said.

Letterman is not violating the strike as long as he writes his own material, which he will do if his writers aren't allowed back to work.

Johnny Carson, host of NBC's "Tonight Show," returned to the air last month with Carson writing his own monologue.

Sellers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Victoria Sellers, daughter of actress Britt Eklund and the late Peter Sellers, was ordered to undergo counseling for violating probation imposed for her role in a cocaine ring.

U.S. District Judge David Kenyon told the 23-year-old actress Monday that any more violations of her 1987 probation would result in prison.

"The judge made it clear that he was at the end of his rope and she was at the end of her tether," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Werksman.

Miss Sellers was on probation after pleading guilty in federal court in New Jersey to one count of failing to report a crime as part of her role in a cocaine ring headed by Reed Wallace, her agent and housemate.

Miss Sellers was ordered to undergo 600 hours of community service by a judge who said the actress fell victim to a hedonistic lifestyle.

This month, she admitted to violating probation by testing positive for cocaine, failing to report for drug testing, missing her $75-a-month payments on a $500 fine and leaving the Los Angeles area without permission.

Kenyon decided against a prison term, but ordered her to attend four Alcoholics Anonymous or Narcotics Anonymous meetings a week and enter a special therapy session with a psychologist, in addition to the terms of her probation.

Hall

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Arsenio Hall's first movie role is based on a character he plays in real life: a friend of Eddie Murphy.

In "Coming to America," Hall plays the role of Semmi, a confidante of Murphy's Prince Akeem, who has come to America from a mythical African nation to find a bride.

Hall, who shot to fame and a contract with Paramount Pictures after his stint as a host of the Fox Television Network "Late Night" show, said he and Murphy first met backstage at a Los Angeles comedy club.

"Eddie's mom saw me on the tube," Hall said recently. "She told him, 'I thought I saw you, but it was some guy who looks like you or acted like you. His name was Arsenio Hall.'"

Murphy, who was on the West Coast after signing for his first movie, "48 Hrs.," went to see Hall at The Improv.

"He came up afterward. I knew who he was from 'Saturday Night Live,'" Hall said.

"And he said 'You don't look like me.' I looked at him and laughed. 'Who said I did?' And then he said his mother did, and I guess he was kind of embarrassed, because he said, 'Hey, let's hang out.' And we did, and we've been buddies ever since."

OK, Mr. Sickie! Start laughing

It's no laughing matter, by any means, but if you'll just loosen up and try to find the humorous or light-hearted aspects of life, you'll feel better and have less chance of becoming ill or more chance of getting well if you're already sick. Really.

In fact, the power of laughter and its medicinal value have been known for centuries, although social mores in regard to laughter have varied with time.

Consider that any number of greeting card companies publish humorous get-well cards. The implied lesson: A good laugh will help you feel better faster and, perhaps, even help you recuperate quicker.

Now stop chuckling. As we said earlier, this is no laughing matter. To underscore that fact, we'll note that a number of hospitals already have established what they call "humor rooms," sort of operating rooms wherein no cutting or stitching takes place — except the kind of stitches that a good joke can sew. The rooms are places where patients, their families and members of the hospital staff can gather to enjoy funny videos, joke telling, even live performances by either professional comedians, would-be comedians or the patients themselves.

Apparently the medical profession is sold on the value of a good laugh. Nuns at St. Joseph's Hospital in Houston actually are required to tell each patient a funny story every day. And don't misinterpret it; that isn't "sick humor."

There's no question about it, a good sense of humor is every bit as beneficial as an apple a day — and you don't even have to peel it.

What's even funnier is the thought that if this "get funny" trend in the health field continues, at some point nurses may be wheeling surgery patients into the surgical ward while laughing hysterically. And just think of the poor patient — what will he think, "The joke's on me?" If that isn't enough to make you start laughing out loud, we don't know what is. Laughing out loud, that is, in hopes of staying out of a hospital.

So go ahead and loosen up. Put a smile on your face and a chuckle in your heart. You'll be healthier as a result. No joke!

Countdown to future gridlock beginning

The annoying delays many people will experience at major airports all over the United States this summer will be no more than a minor foretaste of the really serious congestion likely to occur within a few years. With ever-increasing alarm, aviation experts are warning of the inability of airports to cope with rapidly increasing numbers of travelers on commercial airlines. T. Allan McArtor, chief of the Federal Aviation Administration, even warns seriously about airport gridlock.

Mounting evidence suggests that, within four or five years, fully loaded planes will be grounded at airports until a space is cleared at the destination airport by a plane taking off. Experts predict a grim game of aerial musical chairs from coast to coast. "We are getting very close, closer than anyone realizes, to commercial aviation gridlock," Mr. McArtor asserts. A similar warning has come from the California Commission on Aviation and Airports, which shares the FAA's views on airport gridlock.

These warnings underline the gravity of a situation that has been escalating for many years. Airport gridlock, or even the drastic slow-down of air movements that must occur when the saturation point of airport facilities is reached within a few years, will threaten the airline industry and hamper the nation's economy to an extent never before experienced.

Present-day delays cost the nation $5 billion a year in wasted time and fuel, according to government studies. The cost of "rationing" flights between cities will be almost incalculable.

Airport facilities everywhere have been strained by the rapid growth in air travel stimulated by the deregulation of airlines in 1978. The resulting competition between commercial carriers drove down the price of fares, and attracted a multitude of new customers. In the year 1977, for example, 240 million passenger flights were recorded in the U.S.A. The forecast for 1990 is 800 million.

The congestion resulting from this explosion in air travel is vastly compounded by the startling fact that not one new major airport has been built in the United States during the last 14 years. The Dallas-Fort Worth Airport, opened in 1974, was the last major facility of its type to be completed.

Furthermore, planning for new airports has run into serious problems almost everywhere. A report issued by the California Commission on Aviation and Airports stated that it can take as long as 20 years to build an airport, and recent attempts at airport construction have been stalled by tightened controls relating to the environment and excessive noise from aircraft. No matter how pressing the problem, it seems, nobody wants a new airport in his back yard.

The solution to the problem is stated easily enough: We need national commitment to an airport-building project on a hitherto unheard-of scale, something proportionately as grand in concept as the completion of the interstate-highway program. Whether or not that can be attained is another matter entirely. But the threat of gridlock will not disappear of its own accord.

Public attention, which has for many years been focused narrowly on the safety aspects of air travel, must be broadened to include the looming gridlock crisis. In addition, more emphasis must be placed on local solutions to what many have previously regarded as a federal problem.

We support the California Commission's view that state and local government bodies must take a more aggressive role in planning and building airports, as well as taking responsibility for the planning of adjacent land, the impact on the environment and security matters. All these are areas in which the FAA allows local governments broad discretion. If gridlock is to be avoided, coordinated planning must start now. It will be too late in the very near future.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 28, the 180th day of 1988. There are 186 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 28, 1914, Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, Sofia, were assassinated in present-day Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, by a Serbian revolutionary — the event that triggered World War I. Exactly 5 years later, the Treaty of Versailles was signed in France, officially ending the international conflict.

On this date:

In 1491, England's King Henry VIII was born in Greenwich.

In 1778, Mary Ludwig Hays gained the name "Molly Pitcher" and a place in U.S. history by aiding American forces at the Battle of Monmouth in New Jersey during the Revolutionary War.

In 1836, the fourth president of the United States, James Madison, died in Montpelier, Va.

In 1838, Britain's Queen Victoria was crowned in Westminster Abbey.

Disabled vet fights for rights with VA

WASHINGTON — The war began for Johnny Alvin White Jr. after he was discharged from the Air Force in 1950.

For the past 38 years, the veteran from North Carolina has been fighting the Veterans Administration for disability payments because of crippling arthritis he claims was caused by injuries suffered in the line of duty.

Jack Anderson

White wasn't downed by the enemy. He was bounced out of a weapons carrier in an accident while he was delivering laundry. The VA maintains there is no connection between the injuries from that accident nearly 40 years ago and White's arthritis today.

The VA admits that White was injured in 1949, but White had to scrape to get that admission. Like a legion of other veterans, he was forced to reconstruct his military records on his own. The originals were destroyed in a 1973 fire at the National Personnel Records Center in St. Louis. White even had to produce proof that he had been in the Air Force.

Now, at age 57, he is so disabled by arthritis that he can't hold down a job. He has had about 40 positions in the last 32 years. Today, White spends most of his time in a makeshift office in his home coordinating his private war with the VA. The amateur sleuth is dwarfed by piles of correspondence from people helping him rebuild his service record.

An advertisement White placed in a veterans' magazine brought him his most important clue from the past — the supply sergeant who was with him on the laundry run in Germany in 1949. Walter Gordon saw the ad and answered White's plea for help. The two had not talked since White was discharged from the Air Force in 1950.

Gordon gave White an affidavit describing how they were both knocked unconscious when they were thrown from the weapons carrier in the accident. While White was recovering, he was knocked down a flight of concrete stairs when he tried to stop a drunken GI who was breaking windows in a supply warehouse.

White was so badly banged up that his commanding officer put him on the first ship stateside, according to Gordon's affidavit.

"I have no question that his problems are a direct result of the wreck and fall," Gordon wrote. White has more than just Gordon's hunch to prove that his arthritis is service related. He has the opinion of a top arthritis expert, Harold W. Clark, vice chairman for research at the Arthritis Institute of the National Hospital, a private institution in Arlington, Va.

"In view of my 35 years' experience in arthritis research and the statistically significant data now available, there should be no question that Mr. White's arthritis has continued since being precipitated by his military injuries in 1949," Clark wrote in a letter to the VA last year.

Despite White's detective work, the VA maintains he lacks evidence to prove "continuity," or that his arthritis was caused by the crash.

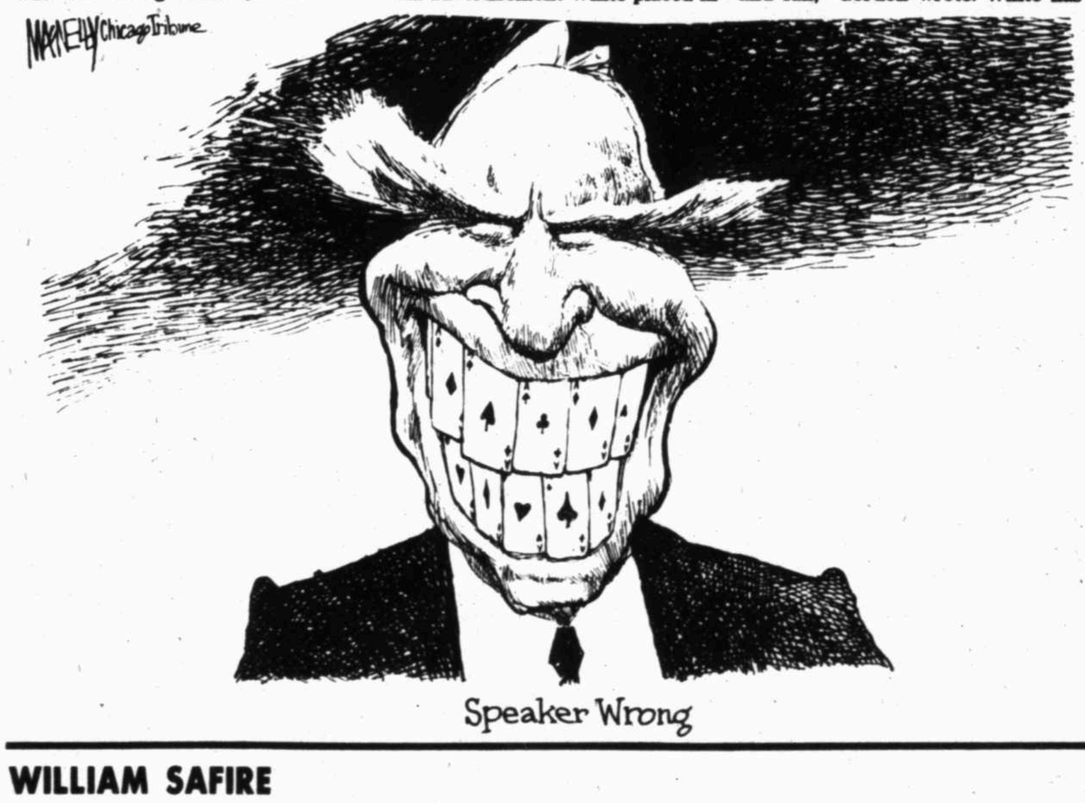

White told our reporter, Dawn Larsen, that he started making claims to the VA in 1950 when he was discharged. But the VA has no record of any claim before 1975. White said he threw away the copies of his early claims when he was too new at the VA game to imagine he would need them.

Along with White's service record, medical reports about his injuries also were burned in the St. Louis fire. Normally the VA would scrutinize those records to determine whether a veteran qualified for medical benefits. In some cases, the VA has appointed medical experts to examine the veteran and reach an independent conclusion. But in White's case, the VA has not done so.

White feels trapped in the VA's vicious circle of appeals and denials. His latest appeal is in the hands of the Traveling Section of the Board of Veterans Appeals. He is asking for disability payments of about $750 a month in the future and back payments totaling about $90,000.

But White doesn't hold out much hope. He thinks he has been marked as a trouble maker because of his numerous appeals and because he has enlisted members of Congress to help him.

Tax issue helps clarify basic differences

WASHINGTON — We are now vividly presented with evidence of the deep difference between George Bush and Michael Dukakis on the central issue of taxing and spending.

"We've run into a rather modest unexpected shortfall," said Governor Dukakis about a $200 million deficit in the Massachusetts budget, which by law must be balanced.

William Safire

His solution in his state was as clear a signal as we will get about his future actions if elected president: He went both ways. He trimmed spending plans slightly and — calling it a "last resort" — signed a new 5 percent sales tax on cigarettes. Tax hikes have been, are now, and would continue to be central to the Dukakis approach.

George Bush takes a contrary view. "I am not going to raise your taxes, period," he says with all the finality he can muster.

G'wan, scoffs Dukakis, that's what Reagan promised, and his administration raised taxes four times in the past six years.

That's a most revealing dodge. The first tax increase snookered out of Ronald Reagan was part of a deal with Tip O'Neill to cut spending three dollars for one, and Congress double-crossed the administration on the spending end. The most recent tax increase was demanded by Democrats in another spending-reduction trade to reassure financial markets after the October crash.

The federal deficit (or "rather modest shortfall," if you prefer) is not the result of the Reagan tax cuts, as liberals insist; revenues have gone up in an era of non-inflationary prosperity, as promised by the supply-siders years ago. The red ink was caused by the shameful, bipartisan unwillingness to curb spending.

Begin with a couple of givens. 1. Facing red ink, most Republicans resist tax increases, preferring to reduce the growth of domestic spending and to increase economic growth with its attendant revenues. 2. Facing the same red ink, most Democrats resist spending cuts (except in defense); when the moment of decision arrives, they prefer to increase taxes.

Liberals can face that fact honestly, as Walter Mondale did; or with deceptive painlessness, as Jesse Jackson does with his soak-the-rich tax schemes; or grudgingly, as Dukakis does with his "last resort" protestations. But increased taxation is a basic tenet of liberal philosophy; the ideological difference with conservatives cannot be denied.

Now we come to how that real difference is evaded. Liberal editorialists will condemn Bush's pledge as irresponsible pandering to the selfishness of voters. They will hail Dukakis for making the "tough choice" against cutting popular services. Not many are willing to assert a philosophy of using government power to redistribute income in the name of fairness or compassion, or even standing on fiscal responsibility.

Liberals evade that issue because they know that most wage earners would like to believe that tax cuts, not tax hikes, are good for the country — as the current prosperity suggests. But perhaps these worker-voters can be reached by skepticism; if Reagan weakened despite his pledges, wouldn't Bush cave in too? In that case, goes the non-argument, what difference would a Democrat in the White House make?

Therein lies the shrewdness of the Dukakis dodge. His repeated point about four tax increases in the past six years is his way of saying: There's no real difference in the parties on this. Whichever way you vote, in the end you'll get a tax increase. It's not an issue at all. Forget it.

That message is a deception. If Bush is elected, he would engage the Democratic Congress in a series of budget battles. Because the president is not a dictator, he would be forced to cave in from time to time, causing rightwingers to grump about compromises. But his no-tax-hike pledge would surely be a brake on the congressional urge to tax and spend.

If Dukakis is elected, he would act next year as he acted last week: trim here and there, but then take a frequent flyer to the last resort. He would accelerate rather than brake the spending urge in Congress.

Thus, we have a genuine ideological conflict in prospect, which is what campaigns are for. Debate on the wisdom of more taxation is intellectually respectable; the attempt to smear it as making no difference, or as vote-buying, is political cowardice.

Bush should press the point because the voters' choice will affect tax policy. Dukakis should be encouraged to defend his tax philosophy on whatever grounds he chooses — including the weakest defense of a last resort.

Reagan would enjoy bout with Dukakis

WASHINGTON — Restive in the Oval Office and not happy with George Bush's presidential campaign, President Reagan has alarmed political aides by saying he can hardly wait to take the gloves off and slug it out with Gov. Michael Dukakis.

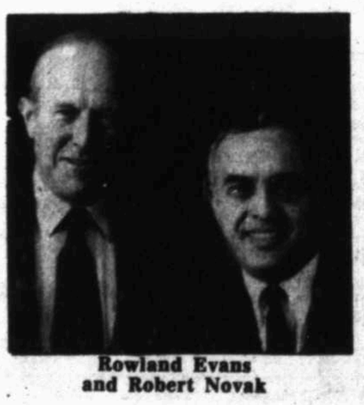

But one adviser has warned the president against supplementing Bush's attack strategy. Instead, this aide wants Reagan to "paint a rosy picture" of where the U.S. is today and show how it would be "undermined" by Dukakis as president. Reagan, he says, should not join an outright personal attack.

The president has neither agreed nor disagreed. But his closest friends will be very surprised if, in his last campaign as president, he does not come out swinging hard against the Massachusetts governor on crime, taxes and defense.

• • •

PLUG BUSH! White House aides hit the roof when Budget Director James Miller took more credit for forming the Interagency Drought Policy Committee than he gave to Vice President George Bush.

"What are you running for?" a vexed Nancy Risque, secretary of the Cabinet, asked Miller. His Office of Management and Budget (OMB) had sinned by issuing a handout saying the drought committee was "recommended" by Miller. As an afterthought, the OMB news release noted near the end that Bush "indicated in Washington he has very strong interest in this problem."

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

The line at the White House is to give the vice president considerably more credit than that for every policy initiative. Even President Reagan's speech at the economic summit in Toronto included a Bush commercial, claiming he helped put drugs on the agenda during an April breakfast meeting in Washington with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

• • •

NO DOUBLE BENTSEN? While many insiders believe Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is Gov. Michael Dukakis' first choice for running mate, feeling is rising among national Democratic leaders that he would be a sitting target for Republicans if he runs for both the vice presidency and re-election to the Senate in the same year.

But Texas Democratic leaders insist that if Bentsen is tapped by Dukakis, he must run for both offices (utilizing the never-repealed state law that permitted Lyndon B. Johnson to be a double candidate in 1960). Otherwise, they fear, the Senate seat could be captured by Republican Rep. Beau Bolter's aggressive campaign.

Bentsen never has ruled out a vice-presidential offer, but came close to it at a recent Washington fund-raiser. He could not absolutely predict who would be the next president of the United States, he told his supporters, but could say with certainty who would be chairman of the Senate Finance Committee next year: Lloyd Bentsen.

Sheila Tate's Pay Cut

It took Hill and Knowlton CEO Robert Dilenschneider to pointedly remind a Bush-for-president staffer that the huge public relations firm could not legally continue paying Sheila Tate while she took a leave of absence to work as the vice president's campaign press secretary.

Lawyers at Hill and Knowlton were surprised that the Bush campaign seemed unaware that keeping Tate on the payroll would amount to an "in-kind" contribution to Bush, illegal for a corporation and limited to $1,000 for an individual.

Bush's campaign, strapped for pre-convention funds, is paying Tate $5,000 a month, a pittance of her reported $200,000 a year salary at the P.R. firm. One source told us the Bush campaign may have been looking for some way for Hill and Knowlton to pick up the tab, but Bush aides denied any such intention. Had such an arrangement been consummated and then leaked, it would have become an instant scandal.

No Travel Ron

President Reagan, no great lover of long-distance travel, was discreetly noncommittal at the Toronto summit when Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita privately and unexpectedly invited him and Mrs. Reagan to visit Japan after he leaves office next year.

Takeshita's invitation was an unscripted add-on to an otherwise formalistic one-on-one session between him and Reagan in Toronto. The prime minister said that he and his predecessor, Yasuhiro Nakasone (who had grown close to Reagan during four years of meetings), would jointly host his visit as a private citizen.

Reagan was duly grateful, but neither said yes or no. Friends say Reagan lists as one of the dividends of leaving office that he no longer will have to make those interminable journeys around the world.

Virginians plan to aid Ohio farmers

Associated Press

A Virginia man who organized a haylift from Ohio to his drought-stricken state two years ago plans to reciprocate, while Fourth of July fireworks displays in Wisconsin were jeopardized by the worst U.S. dry spell in 50 years.

Parts of the parched South and southern Plains received rain during the past few days, but except in Texas, it was not enough to aid thirsty crops. Today's forecast called for more showers and thunderstorms from the southern High Plains into Texas.

Eugene Morris of Charlotte County, Va., said Monday he had contacted farmers in the southern Virginia county in an effort to help Ohio farmers who lack hay to feed their animals due to the drought.

"We've got some hay lined up and we plan on doing what we can to help the situation (in Ohio)," said Morris, who works for the soil conservation service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Morris said the current drought was not as severe in southern Virginia, and many growers had surplus hay. Alice Walters, a spokeswoman for the Ohio Department of Agriculture, said about 6,000 bales had been lined up.

Four tractor-trailers and their drivers, donated by Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., will leave Akron on Wednesday to pick up the hay, Ms. Walters said.

In Wisconsin, Gov. Tommy G. Thompson said Monday he would ban private fireworks displays, open fires and even sparklers because of tinder-dry conditions that have led to fires over thousands of acres.

Under the ban, which Thompson planned to sign today, local governments and the state may make exceptions where conditions allow. Also exempted will be community fireworks displays, but only where adequate fire prevention measures are taken.

Some officials in Iowa also planned to restrict fireworks.

"It wouldn't be a popular move. A lot of people say let's take a chance, but I don't know who would take the responsibility if anything happened," said Dennis Ballou, fire chief of Exira, Iowa.

Texas' South Plains and Panhandle received 1-2 inches of rain over the weekend and Monday, providing relief just when the ground was beginning to dry out, said county agents.

"It's a shame that somebody else has to suffer before someone else makes a crop," said Bob Benson, Hale County's extension agent. "A few years ago we were in a drought and the Midwest was laughing off with good prices. But that's just the cold, hard facts of farming."

In Alabama, weekend thunderstorms gave parched crops a temporary boost, but officials said steady rain was needed.

Rep. Bill Dickinson, R-Ala., toured farms that had received a soaking, but he said the fields were still the worst he'd ever seen.

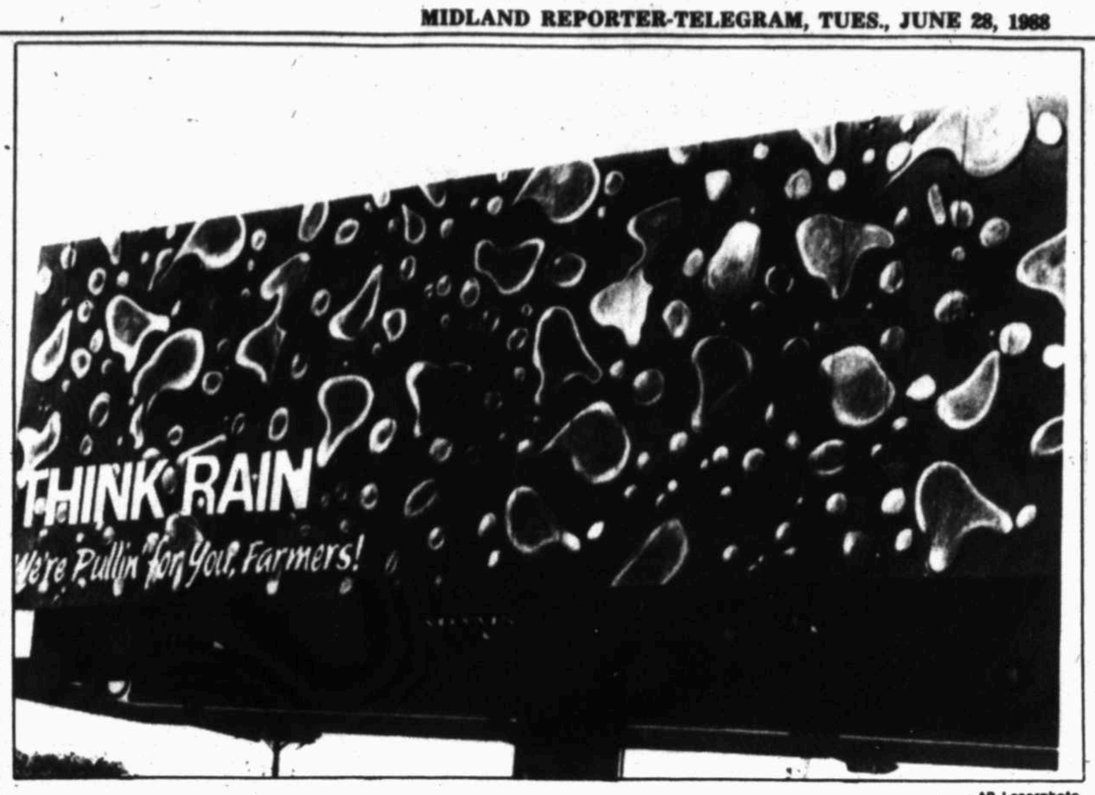

Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus toured drought-stricken areas of his state Monday and called for greater government relief efforts.

Asked if President Reagan was moving too slowly, Mabus said, "I wish he would come down and see the things I have seen."

Cool weather moved into parts of the upper Midwest on Monday, but officials said that would do little to alleviate drought damage.

Hot weather continued in the Plains and the South.

Highs in the 80s and 90s were expected to continue across the nation's midsection and South, except for the upper Great Lakes region and the upper Ohio Valley, where 60s and 70s were expected.

U.S. bishops to write new AIDS paper

COLLEGEVILLE, Minn. (AP) — The nation's Roman Catholic bishops decided to revamp their stand on fighting AIDS to quell a division within the church, but stopped short of condemning a paper that tolerates teaching about condoms.

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops concluded Monday by unanimously approving a decision to appoint a committee to draft a new AIDS paper. The updated document would be drawn in closer consultation with the Vatican and acceptable to the entire conference, church leaders said after a closed session at St. John's University.

"The division among ourselves, the teachers, is reflected among the people," said a statement released by Cardinal Joseph Bernardin of Chicago, who made the motion for the new paper. "We cannot allow it to continue festering. Our unity must be restored so we can get on with our business."

"The Many Faces of AIDS — A Gospel Approach" was approved by the conference's administrative board and released last December but stirred controversy with the portion about condoms.

While stressing abstinence from sex outside marriage and fidelity within marriage, the statement noted that many in society reject church teachings on sexuality and said education programs could include "accurate information about prophylactic devices" as a means of preventing transmission of the deadly disease.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is spread mainly by the exchange of blood or semen during sexual contact or by intravenous drug use.

A Vatican official charged the authors with causing confusion in the church, which objects to birth control.

Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, head of the Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, also chastised the administrative board that approved the paper for not consulting with the Vatican.

Bernardin told the news conference that when the administrative board approved the "Many Faces" paper, "we sincerely felt it was based on sound theology.

"Now some questions have risen whether the document does have some ambiguities. Those points have to be discussed," he said.

Bernardin said the new policy paper can "put to rest any doubts which might exist regarding the church's teaching on sexuality and how that teaching applies to the current crisis."

But conference leaders did not retract the paper as some critics urged. Rather, they said it should be a foundation for the still-to-be appointed authors of the new paper.

"We're not replacing it. The first document stands," said Archbishop John May of St. Louis. "This new document will be a document of the whole conference, all the bishops together."

An outright scrapping of the paper, Bernardin said, also would have sowed dissension among bishops.

"Withdrawal could give the impression that the entire document is flawed and that the entire administrative board was in serious error," he said. "Such action could reopen the debate with greater intensity."

May apologized for the administrative board's "mistake" in releasing the AIDS document before the full conference of roughly 300 bishops could review it.

On the other hand, he said, "Many bishops were clamoring for something to use in their general communities."

May said he hoped a new policy could be drafted for consideration at the next conference, to be held in November in Washington, D.C. He said some of the authors of the first paper might be appointed to work on the second.

In previous business at the four-day conference, the bishops approved a a report about the morality of U.S. nuclear policy, opposing arms build-ups but stopping short of taking a strong stand on disarmament.

The bishops also approved a campaign to raise $20 million to help orders support their retired members.

California quake causes little damage

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Attorney Anthony Smith was delivering closing arguments in court when a strong earthquake shook a 160-mile stretch of coastal Northern California, swaying skyscapers, shattering glass and dumping store shelves.

"As you can see, my argument is reaching the powers that be," Smith deadpanned Monday, according to his associate, Reid Dworkin, who said spectators ran out of the courtroom and the judge briefly recessed the trial.

The temblor, the second to rock the state in two days, registered about 5.7 on the Richter scale, according to University of California seismologists.

No injuries or serious damage was reported.

Pat Jorgenson, a spokeswoman with the U.S. Geological Survey in Menlo Park, said the epicenter of the 11:43 a.m. quake was 16 miles south of San Jose, near Loma Prieta Mountain on the San Andreas Fault.

The quake was one of the strongest in the San Francisco Bay area on the San Andreas Fault since the "Great Earthquake" of 1906, said Robert Uhrhammer at the University of California Seismographic Stations at Berkeley. That quake, which started fires that destroyed much of the city, had an estimated magnitude of 8.3 on the Richter scale, which had not yet been devised.

Water from 1987 flooding keeps crops from withering

MOUNT GILEAD, Ohio (AP) — Eric Anthony looked over his farm one year ago and saw his fields soaked with water from a summer flood.

This year, he's thankful some of that water held in the ground, for it may mean the difference between survival and disaster brought on by the nation's worst drought in more than 50 years.

Anthony grows soybeans and corn on his 1,400-acre farm west of this north-central Ohio community in Morrow County.

"The flood seemed devastating last year, but it gave us a lot of retained moisture," Anthony says. "For every hole it drowned, it made the others so much better."

Last July, the area was hit by flooding after up to 6 inches of rain fell during 24 hours. The floods caused more than $20 million in damage. The Ohio Disaster Services Agency estimated crop losses at $5.4 million.

Crawford, Marion, Morrow and Richland counties were declared eligible for federal disaster aid.

A much bleaker picture faces farmers this year. Rainfall totals since April 1 are as much as 6 inches below normal, and agricultural officials have warned of heavy losses from the drought.

Ohio's soil moisture is 93 percent short, and less than 20 percent of the corn and soy crops are rated as good or excellent, state officials said Monday.

Anthony said that although last year's flooding devastated the area, it may have helped this season's rain-starved crops more than is believed.

Steve Ruhl, agricultural extension agent for Morrow County, agreed.

"Our wells would be in a little better shape because of that last year," Ruhl said Monday. "At least, the ground was saturated at one point last summer."

This season's sparse showers have done little more than keep corn and bean plants alive. What rain the state has received hasn't been enough to get much height out of crops, Anthony said.

Corn stalks should be 8 feet by July 4, but most of his stalks range from 5 inches to 1½ feet. He is not as worried about his soybeans because he said they will sit until August and still grow to their full height.

Anthony said although the corn will mature despite its small size, the ears will be smaller and the quality not as good.

Anthony, a farmer for 18 years, said this is the worst drought he has seen. He said many of his neighbors are depressed over the loss of their crops.

"Wheat yields are going to be down significantly," Ruhl said. "It looks like hay yields are down about a third of what we normally would have."

Alabama NAACP leader to be arraigned on federal charges

Reed

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Rep. Thomas Reed broke the color barrier in the Legislature, helped integrate the state police and recently made a high-profile bid to remove a Confederate flag from atop the Capitol. Now, he faces bribery charges and criticism of his tactics.

The 60-year-old black legislator, who is president of Alabama's NAACP chapter, was scheduled to be arraigned today on federal charges that he accepted at least $15,000 in cash and restaurant equipment to try to secure the early release of a murderer. He also was indicted on related state felony charges. Reed has denied any wrongdoing.

Reed, a Tuskegee businessman who operates two fried chicken restaurants, is one of the first two blacks elected to the Legislature since Reconstruction. "He's a pioneer in that progressive political process made by blacks in the early 1970s," says Tuskegee Mayor Johnny Ford. "He was a role model and a great inspiration to many."

As head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People chapter, Reed has moved to the center of controversy in the Confederate battle-flag dispute.

The NAACP says the flag represents racism and oppression. It mounted a campaign last year to remove the banner from state capitols here and in South Carolina and from state flags in Georgia and Mississippi.

Reed vowed to try to remove the flag himself from atop the building in which Jefferson Davis was sworn in as president of the Confederacy in 1861 if Republican Gov. Guy Hunt would not.

In February, Reed was among 14 black legislators arrested when they made a symbolic attempt to scale a fence that surrounds the Capitol.

The demonstration led many to criticize Reed for his tactics.

"I was out speaking to different groups about the pressing problems of the state and all anybody wanted to talk about was the flag," said House Speaker Jimmy Clark. "I'm not much on issues that attract public attention but are really not that serious."

Attorneys for the 14 legislators maintain that the misdemeanor trespass charges they face should be dropped. Meanwhile, the flag still flies atop the Capitol.

A few weeks before the aborted climb, Reed told a rally that God allowed former Gov. George C. Wallace to survive an assassination attempt so Wallace could suffer as "a message to whites."

The comment prompted some local NAACP leaders to say Reed should be removed as state president. Reed later apologized to Wallace.

When Reed was indicted, some blacks suggested the charges were related to the flag dispute.

Reed has not alleged a direct link, but said Monday that "it is difficult for me to believe that there is no connection there."

In 1977, Reed was convicted of offering a bribe to a white lawmaker who opposed Reed's efforts to gain approval for a dog track in rural, mostly black Macon County. The misdemeanor conviction was overturned by the state Supreme Court, and Reed was able to maintain his legislative seat. The track later was approved.

In 1970, Reed and Fred Gray became the first two blacks elected to the Legislature this century, after a court-ordered reapportionment created two mostly black House districts.

Two years later, Reed sued the state because it had never hired a black state trooper. Blacks now make up about a fourth of the trooper ranks.

The state and federal charges allege that Reed, a member of the Legislature's Joint Prison Committee, accepted at least $10,000 in cash and $5,000 in restaurant equipment from an uncle of convicted murderer Anthony Dennis Chesser.

In return, Reed allegedly attempted to use his position to persuade the parole board to give Chesser an earlier date for parole consideration and a work-release assignment.

Chesser, serving a 40-year sentence, initially was given an earlier date for parole consideration at Reed's request, but the parole board later revoked that change and refused Reed's request to give Chesser a work-release assignment.

On June 16, a federal grand jury in Montgomery indicted Reed on two counts of violating the Hobbs Act through extortion and three counts of violating the Interstate Travel Act to obtain the $10,000 in cash. Reed faces up to 55 years in prison and up to $1.25 million in fines if convicted.

A Montgomery County grand jury indicted Reed on two related felony bribery counts June 20, each carrying a penalty of 1-to-10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine. His arraignment on these charges is pending.

Reed has remained free on bond.

NATION IN BRIEF

Leaders push for quick vote on plant closings bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate turned back another Republican attempt to scuttle legislation to make companies give their workers advance notice of plant closings, and Majority Leader Robert Byrd is pushing for a final vote this week.

Byrd, D-W.Va., made it clear on Monday that he wants a vote on plant-closing measure before lawmakers leave town to spend July 4th on the hustings.

The same urgency was expressed on the House side, where Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said his chamber would vote in fairly quick succession Wednesday on the plant-closing legislation and then on the 1,000-page omnibus trade bill.

Byrd said he had hoped for a Senate vote today but to be on the safe side he took steps to invoke cloture, or halt debate, if that were needed to bring the matter to a vote later in the week.

The plant-closing measure, newly detached from the trade bill, would require companies with at least 100 employees to provide advance notice of large-scale layoffs and plant closings. President Reagan singled it out for special criticism in his May 24 veto of the trade legislation.

Oyster bill introduced

WYE MILLS, Md. (AP) — Maryland watermen are backing an oyster research bill introduced earlier this year by Rep. Roy P. Dyson, D-Md., that would pump $68 million in 10 years into determining ways to mitigate the effects of two oyster diseases.

"We're on a crash course with disaster if something doesn't happen," Larry Simns, president of the Maryland Watermen's Association, told members of the House Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment subcommittee here Monday, as he and others pressed for a coordinated federal effort to save their industry.

"Oystering has always been the backbone of the waterman. He may be a fisherman or a crabber at other times of the year, but he always falls back on oystering," Simns told Dyson and Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

Experts from Virginia, Maryland and Texas suggested adapting techniques commonly used in animal research to help find the cause of MSX and Dermo, diseases that have decimated bivalve populations in the Chesapeake Bay, Gulf of Mexico and on the West Coast.

The diseases contributed to a 1987-88 Chesapeake Bay oyster harvest of fewer than 400,000 bushels, the lowest recorded in Maryland.

Needle plan rejected

BOSTON (AP) — A legislative committee rejected a proposal to distribute clean hypodermic needles to drug addicts in Boston to curb the spread of AIDS.

"I'm disappointed," Mayor Raymond L. Flynn said after Monday's vote. "But I can't afford to be disappointed and upset very long — not when you look at babies and people dying of AIDS."

The measure received an unfavorable report after an emotional debate during a joint committee on Health Care hearing. After the 10-3 vote against the bill, it proceeds to the House floor, where supporters said they had no hope of reversing the committee's negative recommendation.

"The band is playing on and on," Larry Kessler, director of the AIDS Action Committee, said after the vote.

Four dead in accident

AUBURN, Ind. (AP) — An industrial accident involving cyanide poisoning left four people dead at a northwest Indiana plating company today, officials said.

A spokesman at Bastian Plating Co. said the accident occurred at about 5 a.m. Bastian Vice President Dennis Fry said four workers died and several more were taken to DeKalb County Memorial Hospital.

Fry said he did not know what chemical was involved or how many workers were in the plant at the time of the accident.

"There was no explosion. It was an industrial accident," Fry said.

Lt. Ken Hollingsworth of the Indiana State Police said the accident involved cyanide poisoning. State and Auburn police had no other details.

Pets obedient in service

HONOLULU (AP) — Except for one unruly mynah bird who whistled catcalls, the pets who lined the pews at an annual animal-blessing church service were obedient.

Dogs, cats, birds and other animals coexisted peacefully Sunday during the St. Francis Festival and Blessing of the Animals service at St. Clement's Episcopal Church.

The Rev. Brian Nurding, pastor of the church, blessed each of the animals and spoke about St. Francis of Assisi, the humble saint known for his warmhearted treatment of animals.

Nurding said the sixth-annual service was not intended as a stunt, but served to remind that all creatures sing praises to God.

Many critical of advisors

NEW YORK (AP) — A majority of New Yorkers surveyed said Tawana Brawley's mother and advisers have not handled her case responsibly, a poll has found.

In New York City, 55 percent of black respondents and 84 percent of whites surveyed also said the three advisers to the black Dutchess County teen-ager are using her case for their own "personal advantage," according to results of a New York Times-WCBS-TV News Poll in Tuesday's editions of the Times.

Boeing says it urged inspection before Aloha Airlines' accident

WASHINGTON (AP) — Boeing Co. had urged Aloha Airlines to make a "complete structural inspection" of four aging jets just a few months before the roof of one of the planes peeled off in flight, federal investigators have been told.

Boeing says that Aloha, after first agreeing to begin the inspections in early 1988, postponed them until the end of the year or possibly later.

Only after a meeting in mid-April between Boeing and Aloha officials did the airline agree to reinstate the stepped-up maintenance program for its four oldest Boeing 737s including the one that broke apart during flight on April 28, according to Boeing.

The manufacturer's assertions were outlined in documents made public Monday by the National Transportation Safety Board, which is investigating the accident in which a flight attendant was swept to her death after a 20-foot section of the plane's roof tore away.

The plane then landed safely on the Hawaiian island of Maui.

Aloha, in separate documents filed with the NTSB, denied that it had delayed the stepped-up inspection and maintenance program.

"Boeing's continued reference to delaying the repair and maintenance of the high-cycle airplanes is simply incorrect," the airline declared.

Earlier, Aloha had asked the NTSB not to make the Boeing documents public.

The claims and counterclaims are likely to be a major focus of formal NTSB hearings next month in Seattle on the Aloha accident. The Washington Post had disclosed the existence of some of the Boeing documents last Sunday.

In a summary of its dealings with Aloha since October, Boeing maintained that it repeatedly warned the airline in letters and informal discussions that its older aircraft — especially the four aging Boeing 737s — had extensive corrosion that if not corrected could make them unsafe.

After inspecting two Aloha planes, a Boeing consultant called them "among the most corroded in the 737 fleet."

Boeing said its manager of maintenance, Robert Oldani, told Aloha officials that the four oldest 737s might become unsafe if the corrosion problem were not corrected. As a result, Aloha promised to speed its maintenance program and begin a series of structural inspections of the four oldest aircraft, Boeing said.

Commissioners want to lower budget

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

It's official.

County Commissioners' second budget study session of the year Monday sent a clear message to Midlanders that the five-member court is intent on keeping spending at a minimum.

After reviewing the budget requests of 25 department heads and, in some cases, slashing various line-item expenditures, commissioners made no promises to accept budgetary requests for increases during the 1989 fiscal year.

Of particular concern to commissioners was an increase in the cost of office supplies, which averaged about $500 per month for the county court-at-law and county judge's office.

The increase was based on the proposed hiring of a county court reporter to serve County Court-at-Law Judges Willie Dubose and James Fitz-Gerald.

Other budgetary requests for increases came from Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, who wants an additional $2,500 to hire a temporary employee if necessary; and from Lorraine Miles, who requested an $8,000 increase to continue a counseling program now under way at Culver Youth Home.

In other action, commissioners received cost proposals from five companies eager to design and build the voter-approved Midland County Law Enforcement Detention Center. Bids ranged from less than $3.8 million to more than $5 million.

Midland architect Walter Pate, whom commissioners hired to oversee construction of the 192-bunk facility on the so-called Downtown South Superblock, estimated that the selection of a design-build team would be announced within 60 days.

The final selection will follow a review by a committee charged with studying the various bids. The committee, comprised of local architects, contractors and county officials, will make their recommendation to commissioners in about two weeks, Pate said.

"At this point, we think the bids are good and we're pleased with them," said Pate, observing that should commissioners not find the bids acceptable the county would then advertise for new proposals or consider some cost reduction measures associated with the present bids.

"I think each one of these proposals uses some local workers or subcontractors. It is a priority to the county, although not a definite or mandatory requirement," he noted.

Construction of the jail, which voters approved last January, is expected to begin later this fall and should be ready for occupancy by October 1989.

Commissioners ordered the completion of the jail by October 1989 after it agreed to begin taking in city prisoners on that date, said Pate.

Also, commissioners postponed the selection of a new centralized voting system after opening bids from Business Records Corp. of Berkeley, Calif., and Hart Graphics Inc. of Austin.

The delay is to give the court time to view demonstrations of both systems at work. Commissioners plan to make a final selection by the July 11 meeting.

Three Odessa men arrested on robbery charges

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A month-long investigation involving the Texas Department of Public Safety, and Midland and Ector County law enforcement agencies ended Monday with the arrest of three men on aggravated robbery charges.

Ector County District Attorney Eric Augesen said Arthur Lee Powell Sr., 47, George W. Hilger III, 40, and Donald O. Vaughn, 40, were arrested early Monday afternoon in connection with the robbery of the VFW Post 6717 Southside, 1507 Sargent St.

The three men were arraigned before Municipal Judge Otis Moore who set bond on the charges at $250,000 each. Hilger, 45 Knoll Circle, posted bond shortly after being arraigned and was released. Powell and Vaughn were transferred to the Ector County jail and remained jailed in lieu of bond this morning.

In addition to being charged with armed robbery, Powell, 902 Matamoros, was indicted Monday by the Ector County grand jury on a charge of attempted armed robbery in connection with a failed armed robbery of the same VFW Post about two weeks ago.

District Judge Gene Ater set Powell's bond on the three-count indictment at $50,000. The arrest warrant issued in connection with the indictment was served on Powell at the police department late Monday afternoon by Ector County sheriff's deputies before he was transferred to the county jail.

In a brief news conference Monday afternoon at the police department, Augesen said the investigation involving the Midland County Constable's Office, DPS intelligence agents, Odessa police and the Ector County District Attorney's office began when information was received from an anonymous tipster.

Augesen declined to say if any money was taken, but said the robbery was supposed to involve stopping a man from the VFW Post on the way to the bank with a deposit. He declined to say if the man was actually stopped, saying he'd have to preserve that information for presentation to the grand jury.

The district attorney stopped short of saying police had "staked out" the southside VFW based on information received, but he did say, "The departments that were involved in the investigation, in the arrests and covering the people from the southside VFW, did an absolutely amazing job. It was beautifully coordinated. They worked together extremely well and did their jobs perfectly. The whole thing came down without a hitch, without anyone being hurt or even placed in danger."

According to Odessa police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon, Powell was arrested about 1:06 p.m. Monday near the intersection of Clements Street and South Grant Avenue.

Hilger was arrested about 1:36 p.m. near the intersection of West Loop 338 and Interstate 20.

Vaughn was arrested about 1:56 p.m. near the intersection of West Loop 338 and Interstate 20, near Mile Marker 113.

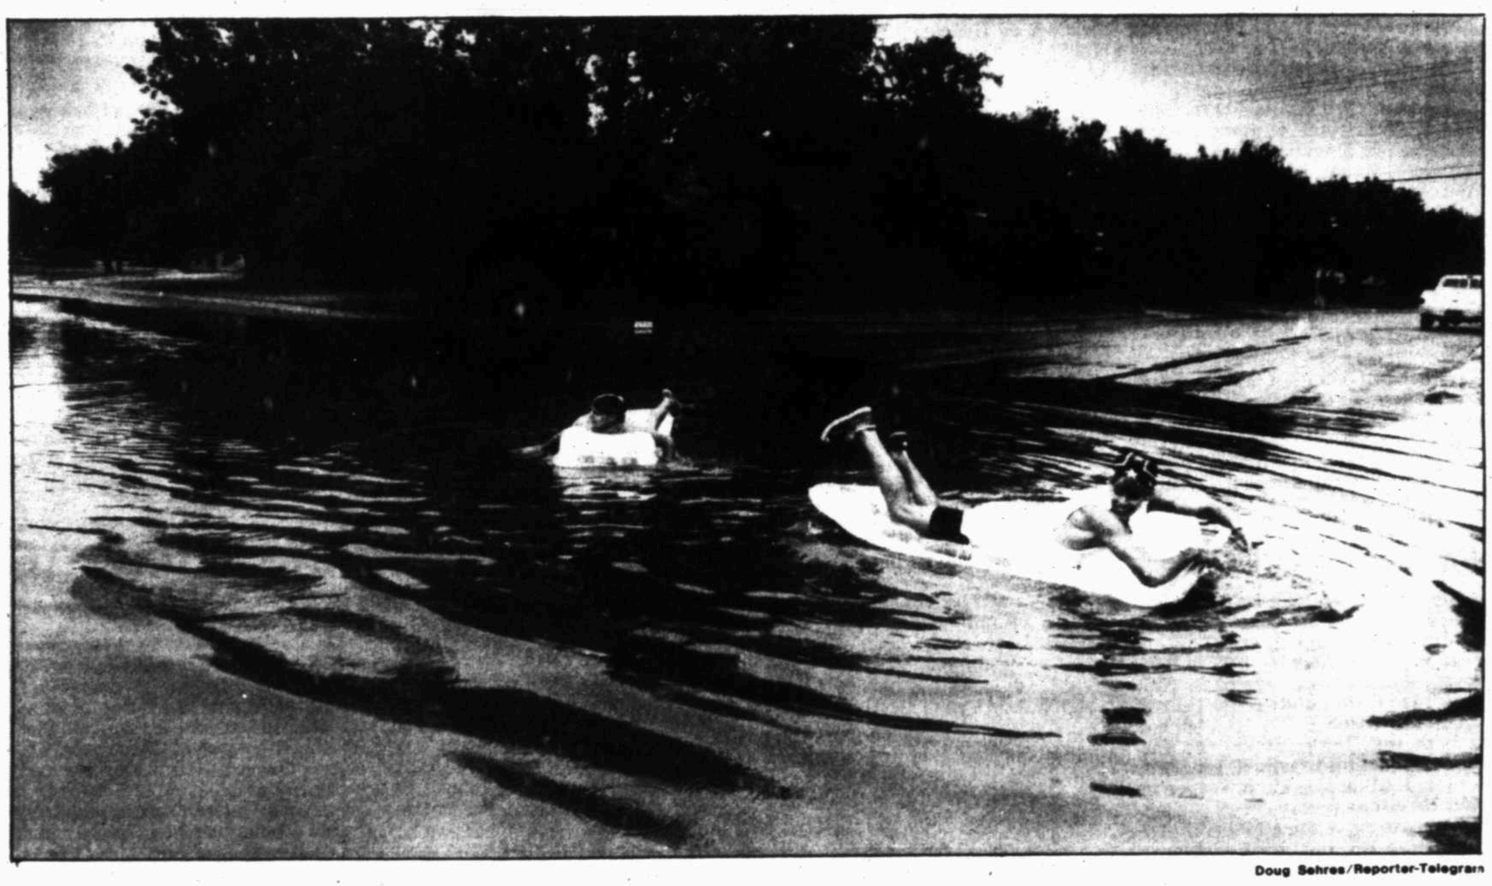

Augesen said arresting officers confiscated a handgun apparently used in the robbery, as well as toy pistol that was not used.

When asked if Powell's arrest had anything to do with the fact Augesen has tried and convicted three of Powell's sons on charges of murder over the past two years, Augesen said, "I don't see how it could. This is a completely separate incident...vendettas don't exist, in this situation or through my office."

Powell's three sons, Arthur Lee Powell Jr., 24, Carl A. Powell, 22, and Bertram Lamar Powell, 20, were accused of the March 17, 1986 shooting death of Fred Richardson, also known as Frederick Rose.

Arthur Powell Jr. was convicted in November 1986 and sentenced to 45 years in prison. Carl Powell was convicted in January 1987 and received a 50 year prison term.

On a raft

Farmers', ginners' wives promote cotton goods

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A campaign to make West Texas consumers increasingly "cotton conscious" when they buy clothing and other textile products is being carried out by farmers' and cotton ginners' wives while their husbands tend to the land and gins.

"Texas is the largest cotton-producing state in the United States," and cotton has a strong bearing on the state's economy, said Sharon King of Midkiff.

Ms. King, whose husband is a cotton ginner, along with farmers' wives will be in Midland Park Mall Thursday, Friday and Saturday to tout American-grown cotton.

Ms. King is coordinator of the National Cotton Council's St. Lawrence-Pecos Region for promoting cotton-made goods.

The wives are asking consumers to "read labels" before they buy clothing, sheets, towels, yarn and other material to ensure that what they are buying is wholly or predominantly cotton.

Labels on goods containing 60 percent or more cotton will bear the symbol of a cotton boll flowing out of the word "Cotton." Labels also may bear a circular cotton logo which reads, "Grown and Made in the USA — It Matters."

Ms. King noted that many cotton or cotton-blend products are woven with foreign-grown cotton.

In a 16-county West Texas area, 600,900 bales of cotton were produced in 1987, she said.

"These were 480-pound bales," Ms. King said, "and that's a lot of cotton. If you buy apparel made in the USA, and it is cotton, chances are it is West Texas cotton."

Ms. King suggested that "Buy West Texas" and "Grown and Made in the USA" just go together.

The National Cotton Council said that "escalating imports of foreign-made textiles and apparel pose one of the most serious threats in recent years" to United States farmers, ginners and other cotton-related industries.

"Jobs are being lost, and U.S. textiles and apparel firms are being forced out of business," the National Cotton Council noted.

The result of that is "sharply reduced demand" for United States cotton.

Lawyer says DA 'abdicates responsibility' by OK'ing extradition

FORT STOCKTON (AP) — The Odessa attorney for a man wanted in the slayings of six people in five states says the district attorney "abdicated his responsibilities" by allowing the defendant's extradition to Tennessee.

William Scott Day faces charges in two Texas slayings authorities say he committed during a 39-day flight from a mental institution.

Day will be extradited Thursday to be tried in Tennessee, where the first in the string of killings took place, authorities said.

State District Judge Alex Gonzalez granted 83rd District Attorney Phil Pollan's request Monday to have Day moved to Tennessee from Texas, where he had been in custody on a capital murder charge since his arrest Jan. 12, 1987.

Day faces a first-degree murder charge in Tennessee, where he is accused of killing Nashville social activist Mary Catherine Strobel.

Day's attorney, John Smith of Odessa, fought the extradition on the grounds Day's constitutional rights were violated following his arrest.

Pollan, who was defeated in the Democratic primary by Richard Barajas of Fort Stockton, said he would not be able to bring the capital murder case against Day to trial by Jan. 1, when his term expires.

He said Barajas, a defense attorney, would have to excuse himself from the case because Barajas' law partner had briefly represented Day. Furthermore, Pollan contended the trial would cost too much for sparsely settled Pecos County, especially because publicity forced officials to change the venue to San Angelo, 100 miles away.

Smith told the court those reasons weren't good enough.

"There is no nice way to say it except to say the DA has abdicated his responsibilities," Smith said. "Texas just rolled over and said, 'Take him.'"

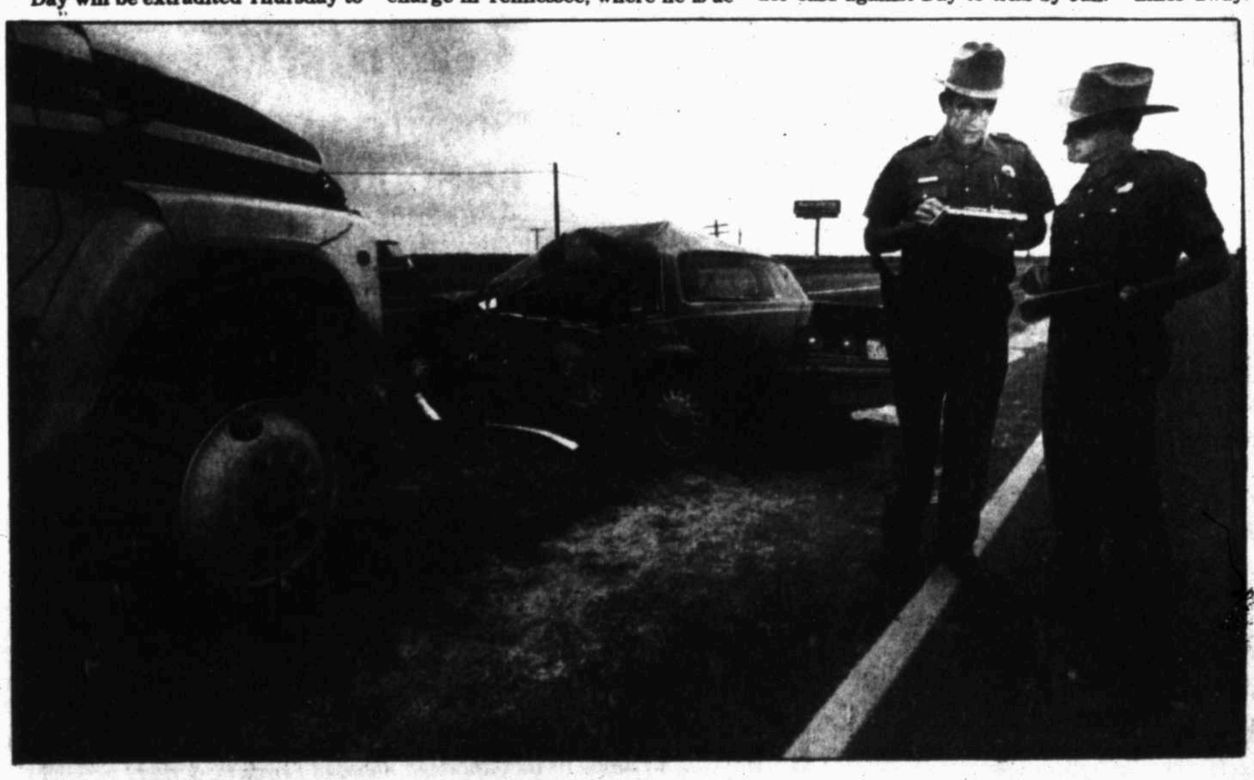

But Smith said he would not appeal the extradition ruling.

"Day will stand a better chance in Tennessee," Smith said. "The state of Texas will snuff out your life in a heartbeat, so I must let him go."

Tennessee has not executed a prisoner since 1960, and Texas has killed 27 prisoners since executions resumed in 1982.

Pecos County Sheriff Bruce Wilson said Day will be taken to Tennessee on Thursday.

Collision

A 49-year-old Brenham man was injured in this two-vehicle accident early today. According to the Department of Public Safety, the two-door sedan he was driving collided with a tractor-trailer about 9 a.m. in the 7000 block of U.S. Highway 80. The driver of the car was undergoing treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital and his condition had not been determined by 11 a.m., a hospital spokeswoman said.

Lubbock couple killed when plane breaks up in air, crashes

NOODLE (AP) — A single-engine plane came apart in the air and crashed about 20 minutes after taking off, killing a Lubbock couple and their two grandchildren, authorities said.

The plane took off from Abilene Municipal airport Sunday afternoon. The crash occurred shortly after the pilot radioed for directions around severe weather, according to flight controllers.

"It was an in-flight breakup, which means he came apart in the air," said Armond Edwards, a senior safety investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board. "The left wing failed in flight while he was deviating around the weather, but we don't know yet how severe that weather was."

Killed were pilot William McKay Harr, 64, of Lubbock; his wife, Gladys Stelzer Harr, 61; their grandson, Jonathon Harr, 9, of El Campo and his sister, Christa Harr, 6, said Department of Public Safety spokesman Mike Cox.

The victims were pronounced dead at the scene by Jones County Justice of the Peace Tom Isbell after the plane's wreckage was found in a grassy field early Monday. The wreckage was found one mile north of Noodle, 28 miles northwest of Abilene, officials said.

The Harr's plane was traveling to Lubbock, but air traffic controllers at Abilene Municipal Airport lost radio and radar contact with the craft about 10 to 15 minutes later, said Rody Mauldin, air traffic manager.

Mauldin said thunderstorms were reported in the area about the time radio contact was lost, but air traffic supervisor Bruce Blair said there was no rain in Abilene at the time Harr left the airport.

Blair said Harr had called the Federal Aviation Administration's automated flight service in Fort Worth for a weather report before takeoff. FAA spokeswoman Geraldine Cook said the contents of that report now fall under the jurisdiction of the investigating NTSB and could not immediately be released by her agency.

Jacinto was at a stop sign at the intersection with K Street, according to the police report.

ROBBERY

Bertram Powell was indicted by an Ector County grand jury in February 1986 on a charge of murder in the death of Richardson-Rose. He was freed after posting a $25,000 bond. He left the area before he could be brought to trial.

Odessa police later received a tip he was in California. He was arrested last July and returned to Ector County after waiving extradition. District Court Judge Gene Ater increased Betram's bond from $25,000 to $100,000.

The younger Powell was tried, convicted and sentenced to 35 years in prison.

Richardson-Rose was found dead in the front yard of a home a 309 S. Hancock Ave. Autopsy reports showed he had been shot at least six times.

Police reports indicated two men had chased him several blocks before fatally shooting him.

Smith contended Day's constitutional rights were abridged because he was questioned without counsel following his Jan. 12, 1987, arrest near Van Horn, Texas. He had said earlier that he wanted Texas to prosecute his client or drop charges.

Day is charged with capital murder in the Jan. 6, 1987, death of Billie Smith Taylor, owner of Billie's Lounge, a Fort Stockton bar. She was abducted from the tavern and her body was found in a ditch five miles north of Fort Stockton. She had been struck in the head and had been stabbed.

Authorities have said Ms. Strobel in Nashville was the first person killed after Day's Dec. 4, 1986, escape from a psychiatric detention center in Ypsilanti, Mich. The 74-year-old advocate for the homeless was strangled Dec. 9, 1986.

Police suspect Day rode buses and drove stolen cars on a murder spree that stretched from Tennessee to Arizona to Florida to Louisiana to Texas.

Day is suspected next in the beating death of Roberto Arzabalo-Alcoser, 76, of Mexico City, polic say. His body was found in December 1986 behind a bus station in Tucson.

Police believe Day's next victim was Evans Johnson, 55, who was found, throat slashed, in a jewelry store in Mariana, Fla., on Jan. 2, 1987.

Ms. Taylor was killed Jan. 6. Police say they believe Day then killed 28-year-old Andrew McClelland, whose brutally stabbed body was found in a hotel room in Gretna, La., on Jan. 8, 1987.

PLANE

Edwards said he did not yet know what information Harr received before taking off.

"During our last contact with the plane, the pilot said he was in clear weather but saw some bad weather ahead of him," Blair said. "We gave him permission to go around the weather, and then we lost contact."

Edwards said the wing breakup that led to the Sunday crash may have been caused by severe wind turbulence.

Harr was a retired executive with Southwestern Public Service, a utility company.

Scout troop marks its 75th anniversary

Hodges

DALLAS (AP) — When the Boy Scouts of Troop 1 gathered this weekend to celebrate their 75th anniversary, a few stomachs peeked out of khaki shirts and some badges looked the worse for wear. But those who assembled for the event, ages 10 to 80, recited the Boy Scout pledge in unison.

Since its founding in 1913, hundreds of young men have passed through Troop 1 of Dallas County's Circle 10 Council. Troop 1 is one of the oldest scout troops in the nation, founded three years after scouting began.

And for the 40 past and present members who gathered at the Red Bird Lane headquarters in southwest Dallas Sunday afternoon to mark the birthday, the lessons learned in Troop 1 have remained true through life.

"Almost everything I do reflects on what I learned as a Boy Scout," said Greg Altenhofel, 29, an advertising executive from Oklahoma City, and the former scout who traveled the greatest distance for the anniversary.

Altenhofel brought his family to celebrate the founding of the troop he joined in 1969.

Today, Troop 1 has 29 members from Duncanville, Grand Prairie and Dallas. They are known as the traveling troop, raising the funds to travel around the United States by running a haunted house in Red Oak every year.

The youngest member of Troop 1, Kyle Coroneos, 10, joined from Cub Scouts last month. He said he is a member of the long-lasting troop because he likes the idea of traveling.

"I like to go on camping trips," Coroneos said. "In a couple of weeks, we're going to Colorado. I'm looking forward to that."

The oldest former scout to attend the festivities was 80-year-old Mel Orman. He received his Eagle Scout award in 1928.

The troop is supported by an active adult council, said Tom Thebeau, council chairman. He said many of the council members are men who came up through the troop themselves.

One of those members is Jim Hodge, who started his scouting experience with the troop in 1930. He became assistant scoutmaster in the '60s.

The troop has an illustrious past, including 73 Eagle Scouts to its credit. And during the troop's 75 years, it has been under the leadership of only seven scoutmasters. The founder and original scoutmaster, T.A. Hord, led Troop 1 for over 50 years.

A sorely missed member of the reunion was Eddie Gaines, scoutmaster for over 15 years, who died three weeks before the gathering. He was represented by family members, who said he had been eager to attend the celebration, despite being confined to a wheelchair. Gaines took over the troop from Hord in the early '60s.

Many scientists alarmed by severe drought

By Mark Carreau
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — This year's severe drought, coming on the heels of hot, dry weather in the Southeast last year, is sounding an alarm in the scientific community that promises to make the term "greenhouse effect" a household word before the summer is over.

The phrase, which many have probably heard a few times in passing, is borrowed from the glass enclosed structures that produce hot, humid conditions conducive to plant growth.

On a global scale, the greenhouse effect is a gradual warming of the entire planet caused by human-produced pollutants that trap heat in the atmosphere rather than allowing it to radiate naturally into space. The consequences are anything but nurturing, and some experts believe a greenhouse effect on neighboring planet Venus turned it into a cloud covered hothouse hostile to life.

Last week, NASA scientists who have studied global climate changes discarded their customary caution before Congress and drew some of the strongest connections yet between this year's drought and the greenhouse phenomenon.

Others are coming to the same conclusions.

Last year, when the southeastern United States had that terrible drought and hot spell, "I didn't think that much of it as being directly connected to the greenhouse effect," said Ralph Cicerone, an atmospheric chemist with the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo.

"Now look at this year. We've got another extensive summer drought in the U.S, and I think you have to start taking it seriously. So if, say, three of the next five years are like this, then it's going to be a strong warning to us."

Statistics tell scientists that the Earth has been warmer over the first five months of this year than in any comparable period since measurements began 130 years ago. And sophisticated computer models of weather patterns and the greenhouse effect predict the patterns of hot, dry extremes that are beginning to emerge.

Police think triple slayings stem from religious dispute

HOUSTON (AP) — Police believe a religious dispute spanning two countries may be the cause of the execution-style shooting deaths of a man, his 8-year-old daughter and his brother.

The three were fatally shot in two separate shootings Monday. Police have not yet made any arrests in the slayings.

Duane Chynoweth and his daughter Jennifer were found shot to death in a pickup truck parked outside a vacant house, Houston police spokesman Dan Turner said. The shootings occurred shortly after 4 p.m.

Duane Chynoweth was shot several times in the head, while the girl was shot once in the face, Turner said.

The father apparently was delivering an appliance to the vacant house, and police were trying to determine who called him about making the delivery.

At around the same time, Duane's brother, Mark Chynoweth, was found shot to death at a business about 10 miles away, he said.

Turner did not have the ages of the two men.

A neighbor of the Chynoweth family said Lillian, Mark Chynoweth's wife, explained the cult connection after the killing.

"Apparently, Lillian told my wife they tried to break away from a cult, and there was a death list," the man, who did not want his name used, told the Houston Chronicle.

Turner said he could not confirm reports that the Chynoweth brothers were ex-followers of the late Ervil LeBaron, a polygamous cult leader whose current followers operate from Mexico.

In Irving, Eddie Marston, 32, identified by the Chronicle as a former LeBaron follower and one of Ervil's stepsons, was shot to death shortly after 4 p.m. Irving police Officer Richard Gilmette said Marston was found shot in the head and upper body.

Turner said Duane Chynoweth was a polygamist, but he did not know how many wives he had. He did not have any other information about Mark Chynoweth.

"We are trying to put it all together, but it looks like it's going to be a religious cult deal," Turner said. "We're trying to figure it all out now.

"This (dispute) thing started in Salt Lake (City), went to Mexico and ended up in Houston," Turner said.

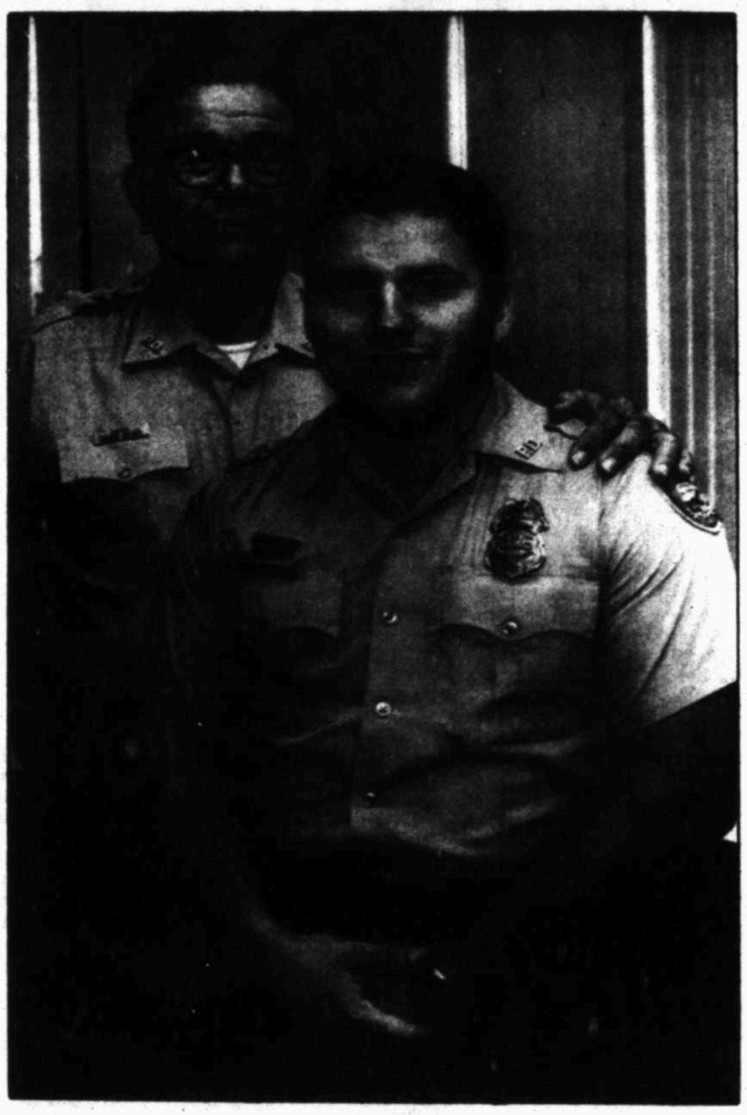

LeBaron's Church of the Lamb of God split into several groups after his death in 1981. LeBaron died of a heart attack at Utah State Prison after being convicted of ordering the 1977 murder of rival Rulon Allred in Murray, Utah.

In October 1987, polygamist leader Daniel Ben Jordan was shot several times while camping in a canyon near Mayfield, Utah. Officials has originally suspected it was a hunting accident.

Jordan, who had been leading a church in Bennett, Colo., had been LeBaron's right-hand man for decades. He was charged with, but never tried for, the death of LeBaron's brother Joel, who rivaled Ervil LeBaron's leadership.

A similar leader, Leo P. Evoniuk, never returned from a business meeting on May 27, 1987, near Santa Cruz, Calif.

Another former LeBaron follower who has disappeared is Arturo LeBaron, Ervil's son. There were reports from former LeBaron followers that he was killed in a gunfight in Mexico about five years ago.

Capt. Ernie Galvan, left, head of the Criminal Investigation Division, and his son, Tim, a patrolman, both are members of the Galveston Police Department.

Police captain worries about dangers his son faces on force

GALVESTON (AP) — Tim Galvan and his father share the same employer, the Galveston Police Department.

Capt. Ernie Galvan is head of the Criminal Investigation Division and his son is a member of the patrol division. They don't see much of each other, but Tim says he gets some ribbing about the relationship when his father is on the police radio.

"Oh, they'll say 'Tim...your daddy's talking,' " the younger Galvan said.

But Tim Galvan takes it in stride.

He says his father never wanted him to be a police officer because of the risks to his personal safety.

His dad never came home with police stories, either, Tim Galvan says.

But Tim had his mind made up from the time he was on the safety patrol in grade school and a lifeguard in high school. He became a reserve sheriff's deputy and went on to the Galveston Police Department Academy.

While his three years on the force may seem few compared with his father's 34 years of service, he said he has had a wide range of experiences and does it "not for the money ...but because I enjoy excitement and the difference divisions."

Capt. Galvan said he used to worry about his son, but has faith in him and the department and worries less now.

Another Galveston police captain, Dale Rogers, in charge of administration, says he also worries about a son on the force.

"It's not a good feeling with your son out there. You worry about all your officers, but when it's family you worry more," Rogers said.

Officer David Rogers, who has been on the force eight years, was working elsewhere when he decided to take the police exam. When his former employer found out about it, he was fired.

Rogers says he once had to supervise his son, and probably was harder on him than any other officer.

Rogers says he never encouraged his son to be a police officer. But the family is proud of their involvement in law enforcement and his grandsons, Christopher Alcala, 2, and Tony Hand, 4, have authentic police outfits and toys. Christopher's father is a police officer with the University of Texas Medical Branch.

The Galveston County Sheriff's Department also has father-son officers on the roster.

Pepper Harvell Sr., a former League City police officer, works in the warrants division. Pepper Harvell Jr. works in electronic security in the county jail. He has been with the department five years; his father is a veteran of 23.

"I never said a word about his being a police officer and I never encouraged him," Pepper Sr. said.

"My mother is proud because I followed in my father's footsteps," Pepper Jr. said.

New airline will be flying out of Laredo

LAREDO (AP) — Beginning today, it will be a little easier to get to this border city, with the inaugural flight of a locally based airline.

"Its niche is that it will be devoted solely to Laredo," said Bob Karns, operations director for Laredo Air Inc.

While it is not the major airline with wide-body jets local officials hope to attract, the new company, with its 50-seat Convair 440 planes is seen as a step in that direction.

The city has not had service from a major airline for more than five years, said Frank Leach, executive director of the Laredo Development Foundation.

Leach said some companies that might have located border twin plants in the area chose not to do so because of the difficulty of getting to Laredo by air.

Laredo's only other commercial air service consists of commuter flights to Houston via the 30-seat Continental Express aircraft, and to San Antonio on the 17-seat American Eagle line, said Jose Flores, director of the Laredo International Airport.

Laredo Air begins service with two round trips daily between Laredo and San Antonio, Karns said.

That will be followed about three weeks later by flights between Laredo and Monterrey, Mexico, and about two months later by service to Dallas-Fort Worth.

Leach said the Dallas and Monterrey flights in particular will help attract industry.

"The corporate executives like their people to come in directly," Leach said.

Airport Director Flores said he thinks the new airline is what Laredo needs to cure its transportation ills."Once the market has been developed, I'm fairly sure that they (other airlines) will follow suit," Flores said.

Adriana Martinez, an industrial development specialist with the Laredo Development Foundation, said she thinks the new airline will add competition to the market, and make the city more attractive for major airlines.

"Everybody knows it is one of our downfalls that we don't have a major airline down here," Ms. Martinez said.

Karns said fares to San Antonio and Monterrey will be $49 one way and $78 for round trips.

The Dallas flights will cost $99 one way and $187 for round trips, he said.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen...described the appropriation as a "down payment" on construction and renovation projects started last year.

Drug dealer's jewels, cash on auction block

HOUSTON (AP) — An emerald necklace with the gems in the shape of marijuana leaves and a gold cocaine spoon are among items to be sold at an auction this week of property seized from a convicted Florida drug dealer.

About $2 million worth of jewelry and other goods seized by federal authorities will go on the block at Hart Galleries, which is more accustomed to handling auctions of antiques and art objects of Houston blue bloods.

Most of the jewelry doesn't highlight the former owner's profession and gallery owner Jerry Hart is expecting some 500 bidders for the auction, scheduled for Wednesday.

"I doubt anyone ever seized jewelry of this quality in this amount," J. Keith Gary, U.S. Marshal for the Eastern District of Texas, said Monday of the nearly 200 items that once belonged to Bruce Emery "Pee Wee" Griffin.

Gary described Griffin as a Florida drug dealer who used a ranch in Aubrey — north of Dallas — to launder drug money.

Griffin, convicted of marijuana possession, is now on parole.

The items on display at Hart Galleries, which earlier this year handled the bankruptcy auction of former Texas Gov. John Connally, offer a glimpse of the wealth amassed by people like Griffin, who told authorities he was making $20 million to $25 million a year.

Included are such things as gold-plated and monogrammed tape measures and a gold toothpick that slides out of its own gold holder.

A showpiece item is an 18-karat gold ring emblazoned with a 9.49-carat emerald-cut diamond surrounded by 56 other diamonds. The ring is estimated to be worth $130,000.

"You've got to understand this man had just a tremendous amount of money and he could buy whatever he saw," Hart said. "It appears he was very selective about what he purchased. He bought nothing but investment quality stones and diamonds."

Other jewelry includes gold dice with diamonds marking the spots, loose diamonds and emeralds — many of them authenticated with certificates from the Gemological Institute of America — and dozens of gold rings, chains and bracelets, some carrying Griffin's initials "BEG" or the name "Bruce" spelled out in diamonds.

Money raised from the auction will go into the federal fund to combat dealers of illegal drugs, Gary said.

Federal agents who raided Griffin's DKG Ranch also found nine gold bars worth $1.6 million in the trunk of a Mercedes parked there. All but two of the bars have been sold to a smelter in Amarillo with the proceeds also being returned to the government, he said.

Also in the auction are $500 and $1000 denomination bills and rare currency of smaller denominations.

"Because some guy got caught dealing coke doesn't mean anything to me," said Ernest Klein, a Houston collector who was among dozens of people getting their first look at the items Monday. He wants a $500 bill.

"I would buy one just because you can't go to the bank and get one," he said.

One item not in a jewelry case but parked outside the auction house is a white 1981 Rolls Royce with only 2,815 miles on the odometer.

On Sunday, Gary drove the car — which sold for $111,411 when bought new from a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., dealer — from his office in Tyler to Houston.

He stopped for lunch in Huntsville, about 80 miles north of Houston, and emerged from the restaurant to find a crowd of people curiously eyeing the vehicle.

"It was the ride of a lifetime," Gary said. "It drives different than the Fords we normally drive."

Ruling allows Rainbow Family to set up camps

ZAVALLA (AP) — Rainbow Family members can start setting up campsites on federal land in preparation for a massive gathering July Fourth now that a federal appeals court has decided to lift a temporary injunction against the back-to-nature group.

As many as 300 family members can go to each of five campsites the group has designated to get the area ready for the thousands of campers expected to come to the annual "Gathering of the Tribes."

Preparations include building kitchens and latrines, said Carl Gidlund, spokesman for the U.S. Forest Service. Each site must be approved by the U.S. Public Health Service before more than 300 people can camp in any one area, he said.

The 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans cleared the way for the July Fourth gathering on Monday when it announced it would vacate a temporary injunction it had issued while considering an appeal of a ruling by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice.

The court's ruling, which takes effect this morning, means that members can hold their event but they must abide by Justice's order limiting the number of people who can camp in one place.

Justice had ruled that the group didn't need a permit to camp in a national forest. The appeals court injunction that was vacated had prohibited more than 25 family members from gathering in any one place without a special use permit.

Justice ruled last week that the group can hold its annual gathering but only if no more than 5,000 people camp in any one place and if campgrounds meet health standards.

Between 12,000 and 20,000 people are expected to attend the gathering. About 500 people already are camping out in scattered areas in Angelina National Forest.

Rainbow Family members have said that they will abide by Justice's order, but said they plan to get together July 4 to pray for world peace. Justice's order doesn't address the proposed July 4 mass gathering.

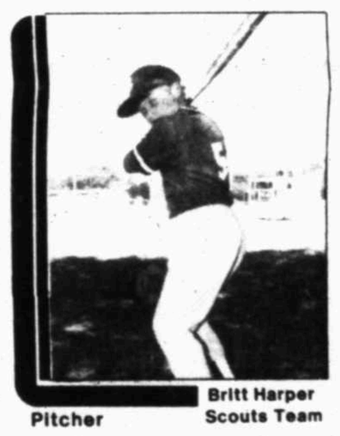

Justice also ordered the health service to monitor the camps. If any camp doesn't meet health standards, the group will have 24 hours to bring the camp into compliance. If standards still are not met, the Forest Service can close down the camp.

Forest Service spokeswoman Gay Ippolito said Monday that there will be no more roadblocks set up to limit the number of people going into the forests.

Don't be dazzled; wear good sunglasses

By TERSHIA d'ELGIN
Copley News Service

While you're gearing up for the great outdoors, don't forget proper eye protection. It's not just sunshine you'll be soaking up this summer.

Sunlight reaches us along with its less desirable cohorts, ultraviolet and infrared radiation.

They are known as "UV" and "IR" in the sun business. More insidious than sunlight, UV and IR are invisible.

Research has concluded that exposure to ultraviolet radiation contributes to cataracts, pterygia, and macular deterioration.

An estimated 10 percent of all cataracts are caused by UV exposure.

Pterygia is a red fleshy growth on the white of the eye. Roughly one out of 10 people living in the southern part of the United States has some evidence of this disease.

Fortunately, these circumstances are less a cause for panic than for preparation. The sunglasses industry is responding to this research with dazzle-proof technology.

Retail sales of over-the-counter sunglasses last year amounted to more than $1.3 million, according to a study by the Sunglasses Association of America. But not all buyers were discriminating.

Some people are still living in the "dark ages," literally. Glasses that are simply "dark" used to be considered adequate. These "dark" glasses do cut down on glare. We know now that sunglasses without high percentages of UV and IR protection are actually more hazardous than no glasses at all.

Dr. Michael Colvard of the Los Angeles Institute for Ophthalmic Surgery explains: "When a person is in bright sunlight without sunglasses, the pupil of the eye normally constricts, reducing the total amount of light entering the eye.

"Dark sunglasses which do not filter UV light may allow unacceptable exposure to these rays by preventing pupil constriction."

The American Academy of Ophthalmology stresses that the color of the lens and darkness are not always good indicators of the glasses' ability to filter harmful light.

Ordinary plastic lenses provide 65 percent to 75 percent UV protection whereas ordinary glass lenses provide only 9 percent.

Look for manufacturer's specifications or ask your optician to test the UV filtering capabilities on any pair of sunglasses.

Other factors to look for are enhanced contrast, true color and high optical quality.

There is an easy way to check the surface quality of a potential purchase. Turn the glasses in your hand to catch the reflection of an indoor light fixture.

Move the glasses slightly so the reflection travels across the lens.

Any waves in the lens will be easily noticeable in the reflection. Check areas away from the lens center, too, particularly the corners.

Ray-bans, Vaurnets and Carreras are old standbys for maximum protection and good quality. Look for amber or amber-mirror varieties in these brands. Carrera's Everest sport glasses even have a detachable leather nose guard and leather side blocks to keep out incidental light if need be.

They are ideal for mountain climbing and activities near the water. Polaroid, Corning Ferengeti, Saint Cloud and Rolle are also excellent brands.

For those who tend towards techno-chic, Revo's iridescent eyewear purports to use a lens-coating technology based on the telescope and camera lenses used in U.S. satellites.

The "blue light syndrome" is the newest focal point for optical scientists and sunglasses cognoscente.

Blue light scatters more than red or yellow light and reduces contrast. It has been referred to as "visual noise."

Particles of dust and moisture in the atmosphere diffuse this blue light, interfering with the eye's ability to see clearly, especially at distances.

GFX Dimension-4 sunglasses, new amber optics distributed by RBM Ltd. sporting equipment, claim to protect against this blue light, as do Revos.

Protection from the sun's ruinous rays may not be your only concern. Other than sunbathing, most outdoor activities involve motion.

You may want to check into no-slip silicone nose pads and the endless array of elastic glasses straps.

Or perhaps you're somewhat of a speed demon. High-velocity sports like sailboarding and speedboating require wind protection.

Oakley is the premiere brand for this kind of eye protection. Their EyeShades are similar to ski goggles but smaller with better air flow.

This is an absolute must for hot summer workouts when perspiration produces goggle fog. Oakley's one-piece lens has a flexible plastic frame.

Some modern sunglsses are designed to react to light in ways that rival the sophistication of a camera.

Shades: Protection is more important than appearance

Associated Press

New performance sunglasses have become sophisticated optical instruments in which protection is more important than appearance.

Researchers have discovered, according to an article in the current issue of Popular Mechanics, that ultraviolet or UV rays — the band bordering the visible spectrum of sunlight with the shortest wavelength — damages the eye faster than any other kind of light.

Exposure to UV light can cause pain, temporary loss of day vision often referred to as snow blindness, and temporary loss of night vision. Cumulative effects can be more serious, such as cataracts, pterygium (a sight-reducing growth) and even blindness.

Modern sunglsses do more than cut down glare and squinting. They protect the eye and react to light in ways that rival the sophistication of a camera.

The first thing to look for is 90 percent or better UV blockage. Here are some other things to keep in mind.

Sunglasses can be made with either glass or synthetic lenses. Glass lenses are scratch resistant, nonwarping and can be distortion free. Synthetics are light, virtually shatterproof and generally less expensive. The most common synthetics are polycarbonate and Lexan.

Lenses also can be constant density or polychromatic. Constant density lenses have a uniform, fixed color. Polychromatics have the camera-like ability to adjust automatically their density in relation to the sun. In full sunlight they darken. Removed from sunlight, they fade.

Lenses also can be mirrored with a thin metallic coating that reflects some light as a buffer against glare.

Double gradient lenses offer two different filters within the same lens. The darker, blue filter appears strongest at the top and bottom of the lens, to absorb direct glare from the sun, while mid-lens is a lighter, green filter to allow nearly true colors to be seen.

Polarized lenses filter out the intense glare of reflected light.

DEAR ABBY

Some folk still welcome friends who drop in

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Whatever happened to old-fashioned hospitality? Nowadays people are writing to you asking how to discourage drop-in company.

Abby, not all folks feel imposed upon if friends drop in. I am one of them. I love company! Please don't tell me I'm the only person in the world who feels this way. — LOVES COMPANY IN BEND, ORE.

DEAR LOVES COMPANY: You're not. Read this from my book "The Best of Dear Abby":

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from a 28-year-old mother of four who tacked a poster on her door with "rules" to keep visitors away.

Well, I'm a 38-year-old mother of six, and I'm amazed that anyone would want that much privacy. We're newcomers who live in the country, and I'm stuck out here with six kids, two dogs and three cats. I'm so hungry for company, I'm ready to go out on the road and flag down some strangers.

Please print my "poster" in the paper for all to read:

■ You may smoke inside, outside, on the roof or anywhere you wish. Just don't burn the house down.

■ If you're hungry, help yourself to anything you can find. And if you can't find anything, ask one of the kids. They'll fix you a peanut butter and brown sugar sandwich.

■ If you're here around at mealtime, grab a chair and join us.

■ If you want to stay overnight, bring a sleeping bag, and we'll move some clutter from the corner to make room for you.

■ Bring your kids. We have so many, a few more won't make any difference.

■ We can't lend you any money, but go ahead and ask anyway. It will make us feel good to know we appear that prosperous.

■ Tell us your troubles and we'll tell you ours. One of our kids can play the violin for background music, and we can all cry together.

■ If you can stand us, we can stand you, so drop in anytime and stay as long as you like. We're people who like people. — MIDGE IN WATSONVILLE, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: All those letters in your column lately about people who resent being told by total strangers to smile rang a bell with me.

I, too, have been told to smile when I was quite content with my natural expression. In addition to being ordered to smile on command, I have been criticized for not talking enough to please certain people.

I am quite capable of talking when I have something of importance to say, so I hope you print this, Abby, for those clods who say, "My, but you're quiet!" — ONE OF THE QUIET ONES

DEAR ONE: Quiet people are frequently shy, so drawing attention to them because they are "quiet" only amplifies their embarrassment. One wouldn't presume to ask a non-stop talker why he talks so much, so why ask a quiet person why he's so quiet?

DEAR ABBY: I noticed that item in your column about the nurses who made ribald comments about one of the male patients who had a prosthesis (penile implant).

I have had a prosthesis for seven years, and one thing the nurses may not know is that it really works. Sign me — LAUGHING ALL THE WAY TO THE BEDROOM

Mortarboards, seat belts need to be designed better

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

There are two inventors I have always wanted to meet. The first is the one who designed mortarboards — those little hats that graduates balance on their heads at commencements. The second is the man or woman who engineered seat belts.

There is nothing wrong with either of these creations. It is just that neither has anything to do with the human anatomy. Mortarboards are seasonal. You can survive them by implanting bobby pins into your skull and spearing them into the cap in 17 places. With luck you'll wear a mortarboard two or three times in your entire life. But seat belts, that's another story. Something has to be done about them before they really hurt someone.

First, I wear them, so don't write me letters or send me clippings on the lives that have been saved by seat belts. I know all of that and I respect it. What I am saying is that they are engineered by the same people who made pantyhose with pouches for feet.

In many cars, seat belts are inaccessible when the door is shut. To find them, you must open the door and hang your head outside to feel around for it. I have a car that never shuts up. A little voice nags me when my lights are on, the door is open and the brake is set. Wouldn't you think one of those voices would open its mouth and tell me where the seat belt is?

The most effective belts are designed to cross your chest and hook into a stationary buckle. On the drawing board it must have looked terrific. And when they hired Arnold Schwarzenegger to be fitted for the prototype, there must have been champagne for everyone. But what happens when "normal" people climb into a seat and fasten their belts? I'll tell you. The strap constricts their windpipe as well as all major pressure points to their knees. They don't know pain until they lean forward to insert their keys in the ignition.

I ran into the newest challenge to invade the seat-belt industry a few weeks ago when I rented a car in Ohio. As I opened the door, I saw a long strap extending across the door. To enter the car, you had to duck down and crawl in under the strap. Now I sensed the strap was going to do something, but I didn't know what. Cautiously, I leaned forward and put the key in the motor. At that moment, the seat belt sprang into action and zipped along the track across my chin, pinning me to the seat and sucking the breath out of my body.

The belt wasn't finished with me yet. When I reached my destination, I stopped the car and turned off the engine. Cautiously I slid out of the seat belt and cowered in a heap down near the brake pedal. As I slipped the key out, the entire process happened in reverse, with straps flying around uncontrollably through the air.

Wouldn't an inflatable bra make more sense?

Yarborough, Price honored for work on behalf of tribe

AUSTIN (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough and former Gov. Price Daniel were given bronze busts of Chief Kina, Fulton Battise, by the Alabama-Coushatta Indians for the men's work on behalf of the tribe.

"Your devotion and service has helped to shape our history and our destiny," says the inscription on the busts presented Monday to the former political foes by Emmett Battise, whose title is second chief.

Yarborough and Daniel donned feathered headdresses at the news conference where the busts were awarded.

The busts were given for congressional and legislative work to benefit the tribe, and for work on a federal court case involving state aid and oil royalty tax exemptions for the tribe.

Yarborough and Daniel said in accepting the busts that the Texas Indian Commission should not be dismantled, as recommended by the staff of the Texas Sunset Advisory Commission. The sunset staff said the work of the state Indian agency was being done by the federal government.

Daniel said doing away with the state agency would be "a great mistake."

Boy's body found under house

ROCKWALL (AP) — The body of a 10-year-old boy who had been missing for a week has been found under the house where he was last seen, authorities say.

Rockwall Police said the body of Jason Daniel Powell was found about 6 p.m. Monday.

An autopsy was ordered by Justice of the Peace Ron Gist. Police would not speculate on the cause of death.

Rockwall Investigator Terry Garrett said the Dallas County medical examiner will conduct the autopsy.

Garrett said the body was in the clothing that the boy was wearing when he was last seen.

"Jason has been missing since Monday, June 20, when he supposedly left the" home where the body was found, Garrett said. "The investigation will continue with interviews of friends of Jason."

Several police and community searches had been made for the boy, whose bicycle was found in a wooded area about two blocks from where the body was found.

El Paso woman dies in wreck

SEVERY, Kan. (AP) — Three people died and two were injured Monday when a car collided head-on with a motor home in southeast Kansas, authorities said.

Killed were the driver of the motor home, Ruth P. Stockton, 61, of El Paso, Texas; the driver of the car, Vawn Loomis, 76, of Wichita; and the only passenger in the car, Orland W. Erickson, 74, of Wichita.

Two other people in the motor home were hurt, the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Gladys Page, 88, of Chanute, was transferred from Greenwood County Hospital in Eureka to Wesley Medical Center in Wichita, where she was reported in critical condition. Seven-year-old Shani Hawkins of El Paso was slightly injured.

The accident occurred at 1:40 p.m. on Kansas 99 about four miles north of Severy, a town about 55 miles east of Wichita. The patrol said the Loomis vehicle was eastbound and the Stockton vehicle was westbound.

Mexican officials expected to deport American accused of burning body

EL PASO (AP) — Authorities expected Mexican officials to deport a man accused of burning a body near his home in New Mexico before he fled through El Paso into Mexico.

Juarez Police spokesman Fernando Motta Allen said Sammy Chavez, 27, of Mesilla, N.M., was arrested in downtown Ciudad Juarez, Mexico Monday and placed in preventive detention.

Mexican authorities usually forego extradition formalities and deport a suspect as an undesirable alien, delivering him to U.S. authorities, officials say.

In New Mexico, Dona Ana County sheriff's investigators late Monday said they were seeking arrest warrants charging Chavez with strong-armed robbery, armed robbery and kidnapping. He also is wanted for questioning about the burned body.

Dona Ana County Undersheriff N.R. Chavez said the incident began Monday morning in Mesilla when a firefighter spotted smoke, approached a man standing next to a burning trailer and saw the body. He went to radio for help, but the man took his radio and keys, Chavez said.

The man then fled in his pickup truck, which was found minutes later stuck by the side of an irrigation canal, the unidentified charred body in the back, the undersheriff said.

The man then went to a nearby house and took a car at gunpoint, the officer said. The gunman drove south.

He later abandoned that car, took another at gunpoint, got rid of that car and took another vehicle at gunpoint in Carlsbad, N.M., this time taking a teen-age boy as hostage, the undersheriff said.

Officers said the teen-ager escaped when the kidnapper stopped for gas in Canutillo, Texas, about 10 miles north of downtown El Paso.

The man then drove into downtown El Paso, where he sped by bridge police and into Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, authorities said.

U.S. Border Patrol and U.S. Customs officers hastily set up a roadblock at the Stanton Street bridge across the Rio Grande, but the man didn't stop for it.

"The truck was coming fast and when he saw the roadblock, he just went around it," said Claudia Torres, a Pinkerton security guard on duty at the bridge. "All the agents were just looking, and no one did anything. They thought he was going to stop."

"He went up the curb and drove on the sidewalk," Torres said.

No one was hurt in the spree, officers said.

The burning victim was taken to Albuquerque for autopsy, he said. Authorities said late Monday they had determined that the victim was a man.

Senate appropriates funds for bridge

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Senate on Monday appropriated $6.1 million toward replacement of the Juarez-Lincoln border bridge facility in Laredo, a little more than one-third of the amount voted by an Appropriations subcommittee earlier this month.

The project was included in a bill that also appropriated a total of $36.3 million for continuation of Customs facilities, bridge and road projects at El Paso, Del Rio, Piedras Negras, Hidalgo, Presidio, Brownsville, Amistad Dam, Fabens, Falcon Dam, Progresso and Roma, as well as Laredo.

The Appropriations subcommittee had approved $65.8 for the work, but senators found it necessary to cut that amount almost in half because of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Reduction Act requirements, forcing the federal government to take steps each year to reduce the federal deficit.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, in making the announcement, described the appropriation as a "down payment" on construction and renovation projects started last year. "I want to make sure that work continues, and the Senate's action today is an important step in making that happen," Bentsen said.

The House earlier this year appropriated only $28.6 million for the projects, making it necessary for a conference committee from both houses now to reconcile the difference between the House and Senate appropriations.

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center suggests that you prepare now for July 4 car care

Plan now to get your car ready for July 4th weekend traveling with a wash, lube and oil change at Chaparral Wash & Lube Center, 2200 North Big Spring. To make things easy for you, Chaparral has introduced Midland to a popular new concept in auto care centers; a quality quick change lube service combined with Midland's best full service car wash.

"Our two-bay Lube Center is available to change your car's oil, filter, and lubricate the chassis," said owner Leon Jeffcoat. "Included in this package is a full service car wash (interior and exterior), at a price you'll find very competitive."

Prices for the package begin at $15.50, depending on the type of oil and filter used. Chaparral stocks a wide range of oils and filters to fit your car, as well as wiper blades, head and tail lights and other automotive parts you might need.

The lube center is located behind the main building which faces Big Spring Street, so just pull into the north driveway and follow the sign at the north side of the building.

Jeffcoat, a Texas Tech graduate and long-time Midland resident, emphasizes the quality job his employees do. "We stress quality in as little time as possible," Jeffcoat affirmed, "but we won't do a bad job just to get done."

"We also check belts and hoses and liquid levels during your lube job," Jeffcoat said. "Our service technicians have more than 15 years of combined experience, and many times they can catch minor problems that can save you time and money later."

C.C. Banks is one of Chaparral's service technicians whose well-earned reputation for quality work has kept customers coming back for years.

"While each manufacturer has their own set of specifications, I recommend a car owner have his oil and filters changed and chassis lubed every 3,000 miles," Jeffcoat continued. "Here at Chaparral, we have the facilities to maintain the complete car, inside and out."

The harsh West Texas summer sun can severely deteriorate your car without proper maintenance. The wash cycle at Chaparral begins with a thorough cleaning from the power spray gun that gets those hard to reach places.

The chamois brushes will gently wash your car clean of dust and grime. Then blowers take the excess water off before Chaparral's friendly workers bring your car to a shine inside and out.

"Our large water softening system helps to avoid water spots, and our equipment is safe enough for convertibles," Jeffcoat continued. "I run my convertible through twice a week, and it still has a showroom shine."

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center offers Texaco gasoline, and you can receive discounts on your car wash with each fill-up.

Generally open on rainy days, Chaparral's lube center and gasoline pumps are at your service. With the purchase of gasoline or an oil change, if the clouds are threatening, you'll receive a rain check for your next car wash.

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center is conveniently located at the corners of Big Spring and Scharbauer and for your convenience accepts Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover credit cards. Hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday. For more information call 682-8013.

ICS cuts problems in filing Medicare, insurance claims

Are you facing a stack of doctor's bills and Medicare form that grow bigger and more confusing each week? Can't tell which doctor has been paid by Medicare or your secondary insurance and which ones you have to pay? To most people, understanding Medicare and insurance filing rules and regulations is not an easy task. ICS Insurance Assistance, located at 1909 West Wall, Suite M, across from Langston Monarch Realtors, was created to take care of this for you.

Owner Cindy Bridges, and her assistant Nelle Drummond, have many years of medical office management experience, and are throughly familiar with insurance and Medicare.

ICS can handle all of the problems that may develop from incorrect claim filing. They make sure that every claim is followed through from Medicare to your private insurance companies, and then they organize it in a manner that's easy to understand.

Pat Jackson (left), full service aesthetician, and LaVerne Clark, facial specialist at The Skin Institute, suggest that now is the time to set up an appointment to get your skin in shape for summer fun in the sun. Call 697-8206 today.

Let The Skin Institute prepare your skin for sunny weather

With the onset of summer, The Skin Institute, in The Fountain Shopping Center, 2706 W. Cuthbert, has a great offer to help you keep your skin looking at its best. It's the "Sun Bucket," full of protecting skin products and outdoor summer fun goodies.

This special offer includes a pair of solar sun shades, perfect for water activities, and super safe because they cut out 100% of the sun's harmful ultraviolet rays. There's also a pair of sun thongs just perfect for the beach or for your backyard.

Most importantly, your skin will benefit from the Sun Bucket's sunblock formula 15, designed to combat the sun, so you can enjoy it longer. Also included are a bottle of The Skin Institute's total body care cream, and a tube of tan enhancer.

The bucket, skin protectants, and fun goodies are priced at just $37.95. Give your complexion the glow that comes from healthy skin and a conscientious care routine by treating yourself to "The Sun Bucket." It's just one more reason why The Skin Institute is "your skin's best friend."

"It is so important to avoid sun damage, and our products are designed with the harsh sun in mind," said LaVerne Clark, facial specialist. She has been associated with The Skin Institute for five months, and has had her facial specialist state license for twelve years. LaVerne can give you a relaxing facial and can help you select the skin care products to fit your needs.

Pat Jackson, with 25 years experience as a beautician, can also advise you on summer skin care, in addition to her services, which include manicures, pedicures, electrolysis, waxing and body massage.

Specializing in deep pore cleansing, facials are probably the most popular of services offered by The Skin Institute. If ingrown hair is a problem for you, the exfoliation that occurs during the cleansing cycle of a facial will allow the hair to grow normally.

And the good news doesn't stop there. The Skin Institute, and Sheets Eye Clinic, 155 East Loop 338 in Odessa, offers a complete line of services at more than competitive prices.

"Look your best for the summer with a facial," Pat said. "And don't forget a pedicure and to get your feet ready for sandal weather and waxing and electrolysis for the bikini season."

The Skin Institute also stocks a complete line of Mario e' Raquel cosmetics. Dr. Sheets of Sheets & Associates Eye Centers first began advising his patients about this line of skin care products and cosmetics after he discovered that many eye infections are caused by abrasive cosmetics. Mario e' Raquel make-up has no alcohol to dry your skin or mineral oil to clog the pores.

Call 697-8206 and set up your appointment today. Once you've felt the luxury and seen the results, you're sure to become a regular.

It's over: Tyson nails Spinks in 91 seconds

AP Laserphoto

Mike Tyson knocks out Michael Spinks in the first round of their world heavyweight championship fight in Atlantic City Monday night. The fight lasted only 91 seconds.

KO helps cement Tyson's stature as top fighter

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The fight with Michael Spinks was over with frightening ease. Mike Tyson's fight with his detractors goes on.

Tyson, casting aside his personal problems, needed only 91 seconds to dispose of Spinks on Monday night and retain his undisputed heavyweight championship in a bout that helped cement his stature as the top fighter of his time.

Afterward, he alternated between the ectasy of a win and the bitterness of a man who feels he has been wronged, blasting reporters who had questioned whether the personal turmoil in his life would affect his performance in the ring.

"After this fight I wasn't really appreciative of what you reporters did to me," Tyson said after ending boxing's richest fight ever by putting Spinks down twice in the first round.

"You try to embarrass me, you try to embarrass my family, you try to disgrace us."

TYSON, WHO turns 22 on Thursday, then hinted of retirement.

"As far as I know, this may be my last fight," he said.

If it was his last fight — and few believe it will be considering the tens of millions of dollars he still stands to earn — Tyson certainly went out with a bang.

With Spinks choosing a risky course of standing and trying to trade punches with the heavyweight champion, Tyson knocked the challenger down a minute into the fight, then finished him with a left-right combination that left Spinks sprawled on his back beneath the ropes, unable to get up.

"When I came into the ring and looked at him, I saw the fear and I knew it would be a first-round knockout," Tyson said.

Tyson landed only eight punches in the brief fight, but from the time the first left hook found its intended mark in Spinks' chin, the fight was as good as over. Spinks threw 10 punches, landing just two.

"The first punch I threw, he wobbled a bit," said Tyson. "Right there, I knew I had him."

Spinks, who had never been knocked down, much less out, in a professional career that spanned 11 years, tried to make it a fight. He went to Tyson and tried to throw an overhand right, but the champion responded with a right of his own that crashed into Spinks' left temple.

Tyson followed with a three-punch combination that sent Spinks backward into the ropes. Spinks bounced off the ropes and crossed part of the ring where Tyson met him and landed down a left to the head and a right to the chest that put the challenger down.

"I said I would come to fight," Spinks said. "I thought I would take my shot when I could and I tried."

Spinks was up at the count of three and, after taking the mandatory eight-count, went right back to Tyson. It was a mistake that proved fatal to his chances.

As Spinks tried to throw a right hand, Tyson crashed a short right uppercut that put Spinks down, this time for the count.

"I thought I would exchange right hands with him and catch him coming in," Spinks said. "Instead, I shot my load and he stepped back and caught me with a good shot."

Spinks tried briefly to get up, but collapsed back on his back as referee Frank Capuccino counted the fighter out. Spinks' longtime manager and confidant Butch Lewis rushed into the ring and put his arm around his fighter while the Tyson corner erupted in jubilation.

"He came out fighting hoping for a knockout or a cut," Tyson said. "I think he was too scared to do anything else."

The spectacular title defense — his seventh since becoming the youngest heavyweight champion ever at the age of 20, also was his quickest and one of shortest heavyweight title fights in history.

Only three heavyweight title fights have ended earlier, the shortest coming on April 6, 1900 when James Jeffries stopped Jack Finnegan 55 seconds into the fight.

"There's no fighter like me," Tyson said. "I can beat any fighter in the world."

TYSON MADE Spinks his 16th first-round knockout victim while scoring his 31st knockout in 35 fights.

"I knew he was serious, so I went out and finished him in the first round," Tyson said.

Spinks, fighting as a heavyweight for only the fifth time since moving up from the light heavyweight division, had figured to use his unorthodox style to try to frustrate Tyson and perhaps score a decision win.

But in strategy sessions with Lewis and trainer Eddie Futch before the fight, the three decided that Spinks had to make Tyson respect his power if he was to have a chance to win.

"I was going to fight back but it was tough with Mike's style to see what kind of fight plan you have,' Spinks said. "My plan was to get the respect I needed in the early rounds."

Midland sweeps, increases TL lead

From Staff Reports

WICHITA, Kan. — The Midland Angels put the broom to the Wichita Pilots here Monday night with a 5-2 and 10-2 doubleheader sweep, giving the Angels four consecutive road victories and increasing their second half Texas League lead to a full three games over first half champion San Antonio.

Lee Stevens had a pair of two-run homers and Erik Pappas added a solo homer to lead the Angels to victory in the first game.

Pappas went 4-for-5 in the second game, scoring two runs and driving in one and Tom Alfredson started the scoring for Midland with his sixth home run of the year in the second inning. Jim Opie scored three runs and knocked in two with a pair of doubles.

Tim Burcham was the winning pitcher in the first game while James Austin was the loser. Marty Reed picked up his first victory of the year in the second game with a route going performance in his first start while Kevin Brown absorbed the loss.

Midland is off to a torrid start in second half play, romping to an 8-2 record through the first 10 outings of the second half.

Midland's Jeff Manto has been named the Texas League batter of the week for the period of June 19-25. During the seven-game stretch, Manto had 10 hits in 23 at-bats for a .435 average and knocked in 10 runs with three doubles, a triple and two homers. Manto posted a .913 slugging percentage and a .594 on-base percentage. He also stole a base during the period.

In other Texas League action Monday night, Shreveport edged Arkansas, 1-0, Jackson blanked Tulsa, 7-0, and San Antonio defeated El Paso, 7-3.

Mike Benjamin's sacrifice fly brought John Skurla home with the winning run as the Shreveport Captains took a 1-0 victory over the Arkansas Travelers.

Skurt beat out an infield hit, went to third on a single by Romy Cucjen and scored on Benjamin's fly.

Dean Freeland, who struck out five and didn't give up a single walk, was the winning pitcher. He is 7-6. The loser was Dave Osteen, 6-6.

Freeland left the game in the ninth inning after the first two batters reached base. Stuart Tate came on in relief and picked up his sixth save.

Steffi Graf gets off the ground to reach a shot from Mary Joe Fernandez during fourth round Wimbledon match Monday.

Lendl survives five-set match

Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Get into a fifth set with Ivan Lendl at Wimbledon, and start saying your prayers.

The world's top-ranked player may not have enjoyed the ultimate success in the famed Grand Slam tournament in six tries, but when it comes to a battle of attrition, he's a survivor.

Mark Woodforde, a red-haired Australian, became Lendl's latest five-set victim, cracking under pressure after almost five hours to go down 7-5, 6-7, 6-7, 7-5, 10-8 on Monday.

Woodforde got closer than most to beating Lendl at his own game when he reached match point in the 14th game of the final set. But the Australian blew his chance and was made to pay as the tournament's top seed reached the quarterfinals for the fifth time in six years.

Lendl, who survived a five-setter in his previous match, said mental strength was the key on Monday.

"That's what pulls me through. Otherwise, I wouldn't still be here," the 28-year-old Czechoslovak said.

Once again, Lendl is still here, battling on in his quest for a first Wimbledon title. But the name of his quarterfinal opponent won't be known until today. That's because the fourth-round match on Centre Court between American Tim Mayotte and Henri Leconte of France was called off due to early-evening rain, with Mayotte leading 6-4, 7-6.

That match was to be completed today, after the first of the women's quarterfinals between American Chris Evert and Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia. Steffi Graf, the top-seeded woman, was next up against unseeded Pascale Paradis of France.

The other women's quarterfinal matched Americans Pam Shriver and Zina Garrison.

Another unfinished fourth-round match opened the program on Court No. 1. Defending champion Martina Navratilova of the U.S., aiming to win a record ninth Wimbledon singles title, trailed 4-2 in the first set against Larissa Savchenko of the Soviet Union.

West German Boris Becker's fourth-rounder against American Paul Annacone, which never got started Monday, was next on Court No. 1.

Jimmy Connors also had unfinished business on Court No. 2. The 35-year-old American was locked at 6-6 in the third set with West Germany's Patrick Kuhnen after splitting the first two.

The finish of the Lendl-Woodforde match, the longest of the tournament to date, beat the rain by a few minutes.

But it was almost dark when the Australian netted a backhand return to keep alive Lendl's dream of capturing the one Grand Slam title that has eluded him.

"It was not that draining physically but it was very tough mentally," said Lendl, a finalist the last two years. "I thought I played really well in the fifth set. I had a lot of break points, but I didn't make anything of them."

Lendl, who beat Michiel Schapers of the Netherlands in five sets during the third round, has now won his last eight five-set matches at Wimbledon, stretching back to 1981.

Even when he faced match point Monday in the 14th game of the final set, his concentration helped him through. A deep volley to the left-handed Woodforde's forehand was returned into the sidelines.

"I just thought about getting the first serve in," said Lendl, forced each time to come from behind in the final set. "When you're match-point down, you have to consider losing. But if you start thinking you're going to lose, you lose."

Manning secure in torture chamber

NBA Draft Day

NEW YORK (AP) — For most potential pro players, the days leading up to the NBA draft are a torture chamber of uncertainty.

For Danny Manning, it's just another day before the U.S. Olympic Trials resume on July 17.

Manning has known since May 21 that the Los Angeles Clippers would make him the No. 1 choice in the draft, and that knowledge took a lot of the excitement out of today's events.

"But on balance, I'm glad I know where I'm going," the college player of the year from national champion Kansas said Monday. "Some of these guys I was at the Olympic Trials with are on pins and needles wondering where they're going. In that sense, it's a relief for me."

Manning was quoted as saying after the lottery that the Clippers were the team he wanted to be drafted by all along, but he said Monday that wasn't completely true.

"I grew up in North Carolina and went to college in Kansas, so I thought it would be nice to play on the West Coast," he said. "I would have been happy with any West Coast team."

Manning said he also would have been pleased to play for Golden State or Phoenix, teams that also were in the lottery.

Like Ralph Sampson and Patrick Ewing in recent years, Manning is being asked to turn around a team with the worst record in the NBA. In the last two seasons, the Clippers have won a combined 29 games, including 17 in 1987-88.

But with five first-round picks this year and last, Manning said he shares the burden of rebuilding the Clippers with other young players.

"I don't think I personally can turn around a team, but with three first-round picks last year having a year under their belts and with two more this year, the Clippers could be a competitive team next season," he said.

Manning said it is too much to expect him to be a savior for the franchise, which hasn't been in the NBA playoffs in 12 years.

"I can't be a savior because there is too much talent in the NBA to do that," Manning said.

"Twelve years out of the playoffs is not nice to think about. In my career, I've always been on teams that have won. I'm not saying the Clippers will have a great team, but I'm sure we'll have a better team."

Manning is expected to join a front line that includes NBA rebounding champion Michael Cage and center Benoit Benjamin, a former third pick in the first round who has largely been a disappointment.

Marty Blake, the NBA's chief scout, said he expects Manning to be a great professional player, but he doesn't believe he can turn the Clippers around in one season.

"There are no more impact players," Blake said. "Larry Bird, Magic Johnson and Akeem Olajuwon are the only ones in the last 10 years who have made an immediate impact. By impact, I mean they turned a team around in one year," Blake said.

Pirates close in on Mets

Bucs learning how to play a big game

Associated Press

The Pittsburgh Pirates are learning what it means to play a big game. Learning very well.

After struggling for four years, the Pirates have put together a talented young club. Led by 25-year-old right-hander Mike Dunne and 26-year-old shortstop Rafael Belliard, they defeated New York 2-1 Monday night to pull within 3½ games of the first-place Mets in the National League East.

Dunne, 5-6, walked eight in 6⅓ innings and hit a batter, but scattered three hits and allowed only one run. Belliard hit a tie-breaking single in the fifth inning off Mets ace Dwight Gooden as the Pirates won their fifth straight game.

"We played great and pitched great in front of a great crowd ... it was a big night for the Pittsburgh Pirates," said manager Jim Leyland.

The Pirates finished last from 1984-86. But with the acquisition of Dunne, outfielder Andy Van Slyke and catcher Mike LaValliere from St. Louis and the emergence of prospects like second baseman Jose Lind and left-hander John Smiley, Pittsburgh improved to 80-82 last season.

The Pirates are 11 games over .500 this year and have made believers out of the Mets.

"I'm sure they are going to be around all year," third baseman Howard Johnson said. "They definitely have the talent to keep up."

Sid Bream led off the fifth with a double and took third when LaValliere flied out to center. Belliard, who entered the game with a career batting average of .228, singled up the middle to put Pittsburgh ahead 2-1.

I was just trying to make contact," Belliard said. "To me, Dwight Gooden was just as good as he always is. To me, he's the number one pitcher in the major leagues."

The Pirates' greatest challenge is maintaining their current intensity over the entire season.

"We want to be there when it comes crunch time in September," said third baseman Bobby Bonilla. "I think we showed at the end of last year we could contend, we just have to stay tough and battle."

National League

Cubs 2, Phillies 1

Shawon Dunston hit a two-run homer and left fielder Rafael Palmeiro threw pitcher Shane Rawley out at the plate in the seventh inning as Chicago won for the ninth time in 12 games.

Rick Sutcliffe, 6-5, gave up nine hits and in 6⅔ innings for the victory. He struck out five.

Rawley, 5-8, led off the top of the seventh with a single and one out later, Von Hayes walked. On a 3-1 pitch, Mike Schmidt singled but Rawley was nipped at the plate by Palmeiro's throw to hold the Cubs' 2-1 lead.

Giants 10, Braves 9

Bob Brenly and Jose Uribe had two-run doubles in a five-run second inning and San Francisco held on to defeat Atlanta.

San Francisco's Mike Aldrete had four hits. Kevin Mitchell had three hits, including a solo home run, and Brett Butler also had three hits to lead a 19-hit attack.

Atlanta had 18 hits, led by Andre Thomas' five singles, his first five-hit game in the major leagues.

Reliever Atlee Hammaker, 4-1, allowed five hits and three runs in 4⅓ innings. Scott Garrelts, the sixth pitcher for San Francisco, gave up an RBI single to Ron Gant with one out in the bottom of the ninth, but then struck out Gary Roenicke and Dion James to earn his fourth save.

Expos 6, Cardinals 3

Hubie Brooks hit a three-run homer with two outs in the 14th inning as Montreal snapped a four-game losing streak.

The Cardinals have lost 14 out of their last 17 games. The Expos are 9-3 in extra-inning games this season and have won 21 out of 25 over the last two years.

Jeff Reed led off the 14th with a walk and Brian Holman ran for him. Holman moved up on a wild pitch one out later and took third on a groundout by Mitch Webster. Andres Galarraga was walked intentionally before Brooks hit a 1-0 pitch to left-center.

Jeff Parrett, 6-2, was the winner despite allowing Tom Brunansky's game-tying homer in the bottom of the 13th. Bob McClure pitched the 14th and earned his second save.

Padres 9, Reds 2

A mixup in lineup cards thwarted a first-inning Cincinnati rally and San Diego's Tony Gwynn hit a three-run homer to spark a seven-run second.

The Padres' outburst came after the Reds batted out of order to scuttle a potential rally in the bottom of the first inning. The Reds made a last-minute lineup change that apparently wasn't reflected properly in the official lineup card.

California lowers 'Boone'

Catcher produces four hits, cripples Twins

Associated Press

Life as a hitter may be beginning at 40 for Bob Boone, who has caught a record 1,989 major-league games.

Boone's defense — he has won five Gold Gloves — rather than his lifetime .250 bat has kept him in the majors since 1972. And in the middle of his 16th season, he is enjoying the hottest streak of his career.

"I've just been seeing the ball real good. I certainly don't want to change anything," Boone said Monday night after going 4-for-5, including his second home run of the season and just the 101st of his career — and driving in four runs as the California Angels walloped the Minnesota Twins 16-7.

Each of Boone's hits accounted for a run — a third-inning single, his homer in the fourth, a double in the sixth and another RBI single in the seventh. In his last nine games, Boone is 18-for-32 with 11 RBI, raising his average from .209 to .269.

In matching their biggest scoring output of the season, the Angels rapped out 17 hits off four Minnesota pitchers before outfielder Dan Gladden pitched a perfect eighth inning. He retired Johnny Ray and Chico Walker on grounders and Brian Downing on a shallow fly ball.

"My career as a pitcher is over," Gladden said. "But I did manage to get some pretty good hitters out."

California scored five runs apiece off loser Fred Toliver, Jim Winn and Mark Portugal. Jack Howell also drove in four runs and he and Boone homered during a six-run fourth inning.

Minnesota led 3-0 after three innings, but California went ahead with five runs in the third, including Devon White's game-tying two-run single and RBI singles by Howell and Boone.

Howell hit a three-run homer in the fourth, an inning capped by Boone's solo shot. It was the Angels' first two-homer inning of the season. Kirby Puckett and Kelvin Torve homered for Minnesota. It was Torve's first major-league homer.

Mariners 6, Rangers 3

Seattle came from behind with five runs in the sixth inning on five straight two-out hits, including homers by Steve Balboni and Jim Presley.

Loser Paul Kilgus allowed only one hit and led 2-0 until the sixth. But after he retired the first two Seattle batters, Rey Quinones singled, Mickey Brantley doubled and Balboni's three-run homer put Seattle ahead 3-2. It was Balboni's fourth homer of the season and second as a Mariner.

Glenn Wilson continued the uprising with a single and Presley hit his eighth home run. The homers were the first off Kilgus on the road this season.

Seattle starter Scott Bankhead gave up two runs and seven hits in seven innings.

Tigers 6, Yankees 3

Gary Pettis had three hits and scored four times, Luis Salazar drove in three runs and Jack Morris and Mike Henneman combined on a seven-hitter as the Tigers beat New York for the fourth time in as many meetings and took a two-game lead over the Yankees in the American League East.

Morris went 6⅔ innings, yielding five hits and a run. Henneman pitched the final 2⅓ innings for his 14th save despite giving up Mike Pagliarulo's two-run homer in the ninth.

American League

Red Sox 9, Indians 5

Rookie Jody Reed's first major-league homer, a two-run shot, touched off a five-run sixth-inning rally. The Red Sox led 4-0 after three innings but trailed 5-4 when Julio Franco hit a tie-breaking home run on the first pitch in the Cleveland sixth.

Todd Benzinger opened the Boston sixth with a single and was sacrificed to second. Reed then homered off Cleveland starter John Farrell. The Red Sox added three more runs in the inning on RBI singles by Mike Greenwell and Ellis Burks off Jon Perlman and a run-scoring double by Jim Rice off Don Gordon.

Dennis Lamp replaced Boston starter Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd following a double by Joe Carter one out after Franco's eighth homer and earned the victory with 2⅔ scoreless innings.

Greenwell extended his hitting streak to 18 games and took over the AL lead with 61 RBI.

Athletics 5, Brewers 4

Dave Henderson singled Carney Lansford home from third base with one out in the bottom of the 14th inning. Lansford started the inning by drawing a lead-off walk from Milwaukee reliever Dan Plesac. Terry Steinbach struck out but Lansford went to second when the third strike also was a wild pitch. Lansford then stole third and scored on Henderson's single.

Oakland relief ace Dennis Eckersley was the winner after pitching out of a jam in the top of the 14th.

Orioles 6, Blue Jays 2

Jim Traber and Rick Schu hit solo home runs and Cal Ripken had a two-run single. Jeff Ballard, who didn't come up frfom the minors until May 19, allowed one run and seven hits in seven innings and became the first pitcher to win four games this season for the 21-54 Orioles.

Tom Niedenfuer went the final two inings and gave up a homer to Kelly Gruber in the eighth.

Royals 2, White Sox 1

Frank White led off the eighth inning with his sixth home run and Mark Gubicza held Chicago to four hits in eight-plus innings. White's home run was only the sixth hit off loser Jerry Reuss.

Harold Baines' RBI single gave Chicago a 1-0 lead in the third inning. Reuss held the lead until the seventh when George Brett doubled, took third on a wild pitch and continued home on a throwing error by catcher Mark Salas.

CBA's Savannah Spirits move to Tulsa

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Tulsa's Continental Basketball Association team will open the 1988-89 season as an affiliate to the San Antonio Spurs and New Jersey Nets of the National Basketball Association.

CBA officials approved Tulsa's purchase of the Savannah (Ga.) Spirits on Friday.

Larry Stone, president of the Tulsa team, said he was pleased with the selection of the affiliate teams, although owners had hoped to hook up with the Dallas Mavericks. With the transfer of the Biloxi, Miss., franchise to Wichita Falls, Texas, the league granted a tie with the Dallas team to the Texas city.

The Tulsa team is expected to play its 54-game schedule at the Expo Square Pavillion. No contract has been signed, but officials at the pavillion are negotiating with team owners.

Owners also are scrambling to find a general manager for the club.

"We've got a cursory list of people we are going to contact," said Neal Sweeney. "There are a lot of people we have talked to already, but until we had a team we really couldn't concentrate on that aspect. We're going to begin an earnest search Monday. It's going to be hot and heavy, and I would think we would have an announcement within seven to 10 days."

Reds' Rose fumbles lineup

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose didn't look at the lineup card he handed the umpires Monday night. He should have.

Rose handed in an incorrect lineup card that came back to haunt the Cincinnati Reds a half-inning later. The card didn't reflect a late lineup change, so the Reds were caught batting out of order in the middle of a first-inning rally.

The result — one thwarted rally, one bit of explaining to do by the manager.

"Yeah, I'll tell you," Rose sheepishly told reporters after the game. "Do I have to?"

Rose had made out his lineup before a 9-2 loss to San Diego, listing shortstop Barry Larkin, third baseman Chris Sabo and left fielder Kal Daniels as his first three hitters. Eric Davis was hitting cleanup.

When Rose got word from the team doctor 40 minutes before the game that Daniels would be sidelined by a stiff neck, Rose changed his lineup, batting replacement left fielder Dave Collins second and moving Sabo to third.

That's not what was on the card that Coach Tommy Helms handed Rose to take out to the umpires for the pre-game meeting. Rose got the card with the old order. He signed it, but didn't read it.

"He (Helms) handed me the card, but he handed me the one he originally filled out," Rose said. "He left the new one in there (the clubhouse).

"I didn't look at it on the way up. ... So we turned in the wrong one."

The umpires noticed the discrepancy. So did Padres manager Jack McKeon, who waited to spring his trap.

Larkin opened the Reds' first inning with a walk from Dennis Rasmussen, Collins batted second and popped out. Sabo then reached on an error, putting two men on for Davis. That's when McKeon strode out of the visitors' dugout, lineup card in hand.

"I had no idea what was going on," Rose said. "But after you see them confer like that, I took the card and looked at it and said, 'We're in trouble.' "

"I just waited for the right time," McKeon said. "It came with two men on base and Davis coming to bat."

Following several minutes of discussion with home plate umpire Gerry Davis, the umpires ruled that Collins' out stood, Sabo would be skipped for batting out of turn, and Davis — the next batter — was declared out because the team had batted out of order. Larkin also was sent back to first base because Sabo's at-bat was negated.

The umpires also ruled that Daniels wasn't available to play because he had failed to bat, even though his name was on the lineup card.

TV star Robin Givens holds hands with husband Mike Tyson after his quick victory over Michael Spinks Monday night.

Tyson quickly running out of ring challenges

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Just two days short of his 22nd birthday, Mike Tyson is running out of challenges.

Tyrell Biggs has been dispatched. Larry Holmes is in retirement again. Tony Tubbs was never in his class.

And Michael Spinks was battered in just 91 seconds Monday night at the Atlantic City Convention Center.

The fight goes on, though, with the media.

To the media, Tyson is no longer the troubled kid from Brownsville who Cus D'Amato took out of the slums and molded into a champion.

Mike Tyson has grown up and is now facing adult problems which have been scrutinzed almost daily for the past month in newspapers, magazines and television and radio broadcasts.

The problems are enough to make tabloids drool: his shaky marriage to actress Robin Givens, a meddling mother-in-law, concerns about his money, a potential breakup with manager Bill Cayton, talks about lawsuits.

"After this fight I wasn't very appreciative of what you guys, you reporters, did to me," Tyson lectured the media after his sudden first-round knockout of Spinks. "You tried to embarrass me. You tried to embarrass my family. You tried to disgrace us. And as far as I know this might be my last fight."

The family controversy is going to heat up before it dies down with an HBO television report that Givens has filed suit against Cayton.

Tyson was not asked about the latest controversy, but he was pointed in his answers about how the alleged other problems affected him.

"Regardless of the situation, I'm a fighter and I deal with those things later," Tyson said. "Like I said, I'm a professional and I'll do the job that has to be done."

The next job for Tyson will be on Sept. 3 when he fights Frank Bruno in England.

It also is expected he will keep up his fight with the media, as he did during his post-fight news conference.

In one sentence, Tyson told the media he was a much better fighter than Spinks, saying one of the things that made him better was his ability to land power punches to a specific target. Then came his kicker.

"He is very elusive and he was throwing punches," Tyson said, referring to Spinks. "He didn't hit me with one punch though. But nobody ever says that. I'm just a puncher, that's all."

Tyson, now 35-0 with 31 knockouts, believes he is much more than that.

"There is no fighter like me," Tyson boasted. "I was reading today where some fighters were quoted in the paper saying, 'I don't like Mike Tyson because he's cocky, arrogant.' So to all those fighters who said that, here's a message:

"There's no fighter like me," Tyson said. "I can beat any man in the world."

Bulls, Knicks get jump on draft

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Bulls got the jump on the National Basketball Association draft by trading forward Charles Oakley to the New York Knicks in exchange for veteran center Bill Cartwright.

The move announced Monday also means the teams will switch places in today's draft, with the Bulls getting the Knicks' 11th choice in the first round and New York taking Chicago's 19th pick in that round.

In addition, the Bulls, in the third round, will get the 62nd selection overall, rather than the 69th. Chicago has no second-round choice.

Oakley led the NBA with 1,066 rebounds last season, and the fact wasn't wasted on New York Coach Rick Pitino, who said he was "ecstatic" over the trade.

Oakley is "one of the top power forwards in the game of basketball and has strength and youth," Pitino said.

As for the Bulls, they had made no secret of the fact they were looking for a strong center who can help Michael Jordan with the scoring burden — and that they were unlikely to find someone for that role in the draft itself.

"We're happy to acquire the services of a proven low-post scoring center in Bill Cartwright," Bulls General Manager Jerry Krause said. "At 31, we felt he has a lot of excellent basketball ahead of him."

Oakley's departure means a bigger role for Horace Grant, a rookie last season.

"The development of forward Horace Grant enabled us to make such a trade. We feel Horace can be a quality player and do an outstanding job in replacing Charles Oakley," Krause said.

Coach Doug Collins said "in order to get quality you have to give up quality."

"One of our big needs was to get a low-post scorer. Bill Cartwright gives us a player we feel can get us anywhere from 15 to 20 points and provide us with a weapon we must utilize to make us a more versatile team," Collins said.

The 7-foot-1 Cartwright played all 82 games in his eighth pro year last season, his first full season since 1983-84. He fractured a bone in his right foot three times and has undergone surgery twice.

"We tested the right foot and it is stronger than it has ever been," Krause said.

Cartwright, a former University of San Francisco star, averaged 20 minutes, 11.1 points and 4.7 rebounds. In 537 pro games, he has scored 9,006 points.

He is among the all-time top 10 field goal percentage leaders in the league, with a .553 average.

Oakley, 6-9, finished his third year with Bulls this spring. He played in all 82 games, averaging 12.4 points and 13 rebounds.

First-round knockout Tyson's trademark

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The first-round knockout is boxing's grand slam, its slam dunk, its touchdown bomb.

And it's Mike Tyson's trademark.

In his first year as a pro, he had 12 knockouts inside of one round, including a head-turning seven straight. In his second year, there were four first-round KOs, including a 30-second wipeout of Marvis Frazier on July 26, 1986.

Then Tyson won the heavyweight championship, and although he continued to display knockout power, there were no more first-rounders.

Nine straight opponents made it past the first three minutes with Tyson; two — James "Bonecrusher" Smith and Tony Tucker — took him the distance.

That and non-boxing distractions involving his manager, wife and even his mother-in-law made Tyson seem almost vulnerable.

Until Monday night.

Supplied with some extra incentive by trainer Kevin Rooney, who made an off-hand remark about betting their purses on a first-round KO, Tyson went after Michael Spinks like a man on a mission.

"Where's my $45 million?" the champion asked after disposing of Spinks in 1:31 of the first round, the fourth-fastest finish in heavyweight championship history.

That's 91 seconds, about 1-30th the time it took to introduce the bevy of celebrities who were at ringside for this long-awaited, short-lived showdown. Tyson landed eight punches in that time, two of them explosive rights that dropped Spinks to the canvas for the first time in his career.

"When I came into the ring and looked at him, I saw the fear, and I knew it would be a first-round knockout," Tyson said.

"The first round is crucial for anybody," Spinks said. "I tried to do what I came to do. I planned to fight, not toe-to-toe, but when I saw a chance, I tried to take the shot.

"I came up short."

Trainer Eddie Futch said he didn't want Spinks trading leather with Tyson in those opening three minutes.

"I planned a strategy that entailed more boxing and moving," he said.

The only moving Spinks did was from vertical to horizontal.

For Spinks' part, he said he thought he would use the first round to learn some things about Tyson.

"You'd like to have a fight plan to nullify him and keep his respect," Spinks said. "My thing was to get the respect I needed in the early rounds."

He never had time for that.

"Everybody, if you carry two fists, it doesn't take a hard shot to knock anybody out," Spinks said. "You get hit in the right spot, you get light and your responses slow down."

Tyson did that, in a hurry.

Spinks was the 4-1 underdog in this fight. He is 10 years older than Tyson, at his heaviest almost 10 pounds lighter than the champion.

K-State names Steve Miller AD

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Steve Miller, a former coach and associate athletic director at Kansas State, was named the school's athletic director today.

Miller, 44, who left Kansas State last year to become president and chief executive officer of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics, was chosen to succeed Larry Travis, who resigned in April.

Kansas State president Jon Wefald said Miller, who was a football standout at Bradley and played briefly for the Detroit Lions, was selected from a field of 60 applicants and five finalists.

"We had five top-notch candidates from across the country. ... I think we have someone here who cares very deeply about Kansas State," Wefald said.

Miller takes over a program that has the lowest budget and some of the thorniest problems in the Big Eight Conference, but he said at a news conference that he was optimistic and excited about the future of the athletic program.

"It's like coming home," Miller said of his return to the school.

Citicorp studying First Republic

One of several interested in buying troubled bank

DALLAS (AP) — A team of officers from Citicorp, the nation's largest banking organization, is in Dallas studying a possible acquisition of ailing First RepublicBank Corp., officials of the Dallas-based company said.

The visit by about 20 Citicorp officials comes at the same time that First RepublicBank conducts its annual meeting of shareholders and management at 10 a.m. today.

First RepublicBank, the largest bank-holding company in Texas, received a $1-billion bailout earlier this year from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. The bank has been plagued by sour real estate loans.

A First RepublicBank internal memo distributed Monday indicates that Citicorp officials are in Dallas examining First RepublicBank's books and financial condition. Citicorp officials declined to comment.

The Citicorp visit was arranged by the FDIC, which says it is negotiating with a number of parties interested in acquiring First RepublicBank with federal assistance.

First RepublicBank Chairman Albert Casey told company employees in a June 27 memo that several banks have "expressed interest in First RepublicBank to the FDIC. One of those organizations is New York-based Citicorp."

But Casey told a meeting of The Dallas Morning News' editorial board Friday that one bank maintained a serious interest in acquiring First RepublicBank, the newspaper reported today.

Some First Republic insiders said to their knowledge Citicorp is the first potential acquiring financial institution to take an in-depth look at the bank holding company, the largest in Texas, the Dallas Times-Herald reported.

Bank analysts said the Citicorp review doesn't mean a merger bid is certain.

Along with the Citicorp team, 80 examiners from the FDIC division of liquidation are looking at First RepublicBank's books.

The FDIC says it expects to act shortly on the First RepublicBank rescue and has set a June 30 deadline for potential acquirers to submit their bids.

First RepublicBank on March 17 received a $1 billion advance on a bailout that could require as much as $5 billion of initial outlays and have a final cost of more than $2 billion. The company lost $1.5 billion during the first quarter of 1988 and finished the period with a negative net worth of $344 million.

First RepublicBank submitted its own reorganization plan June 9 and said Monday the FDIC could announce a final solution for First Republic by July 8.

Some industry experts predict that the FDIC will draw ideas from a number of sources and then fashion a First RepublicBank bailout that will closely resemble the rescue of Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co. The FDIC became the majority owner of Continental in a $4.5 billion transaction.

Citicorp, which held $203 billion of assets at March 31, earned $358 million during the first quarter of 1988. Citicorp lost $1.14 billion in 1987, largely as the result of large provision for possible losses on its $12.9 billion portfolio of Latin American loans.

Citicorp and First RepublicBank, if combined, would form the largest bank holding company in U.S. history. The merged institution would be among the 10 largest bank holding companies in the world.

A merger of Citicorp and First RepublicBank also would mark the largest interstate banking alliance involving a Texas bank holding company.

Braniff owners vow return to profitability

DALLAS (AP) — Braniff Inc.'s new executive team plans few major changes in the wake of an investor group's weekend takeover, but the managers foresee a major marketing push to return the airline to profitability by the end of the year.

"We think it has the potential. We think it has the people that can make that possible," chairman William McGee told a Monday news conference.

McGee led several other former Piedmont Airlines managers to Braniff, which was taken over on Saturday for about $111 million by a Paine Webber-led group.

"We are setting out to be sure that this company becomes a profitable venture," McGee said. "To whatever degree we have to move resources around to make that possible, that's what we'll do."

He said the new marketing effort would concentrate on routes where Braniff already is selling a high percentage of its available seats, but doesn't offer enough flights to attract additional business.

Also included are plans to try to attract more business travelers and enhance some in-flight amenities. But McGee refused to offer specifics.

As part of the plan, he said Braniff would continue to expand its hub operations in Kansas City and Orlando, Fla. The airline already this year has doubled its departures at Kansas City, where it competes directly with financially-troubled Eastern Airlines.

Fed expected to boost key interest rate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve will boost a key interest rate within the next month and then hope that credit-tightening move will be enough to keep inflation in check until the November election, many analysts believe.

These economists said they expect the Fed to increase its discount rate, th interest the central bank charges on loans to member banks, from 6 percent to 6.5 percent.

The Fed has already executed a series of three tightening moves beginning in late March, but it has held back from increasing its discount rate, which is the most dramatic move the central bank can make to demonstrate its intention to push interest rates higher.

The last change in the discount rate occurred last September, when it was increased from 5.5 percent to 6 percent. That hike has been blamed in part for precipitating the October collapse of stock prices.

The central bank's policy-making committee, the Federal Open Market Committee, meets Wednesday and Thursday behind closed doors to discuss the conduct of monetary policy. Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan will report on the panel's deliberations in an appearance before the Senate Banking Committee on July 13.

Many economists believe the Fed is ready to tighten credit conditions even further because of inflationary pressures in the U.S. economy.

Lyle Gramley, a former member of the Fed, said he believed the central bank probably would raise the discount rate in July, especially if the unemployment report for June indicates a surge in new jobs.

"The Fed's main concern has to be that the economy may be growing too fast and that pressure on wages and prices will be building as the year goes on," said Gramley, who is now chief economist for the Mortgage Bankers Association.

Gramley said he was looking for the increase in the discount rate to occur in July because he believes the central bank will want to get it over with well before the fall presidential election campaign.

"The Fed doesn't like to raise the discount rate if political criticism can be generated, but they also don't want the rate to get so far out of touch with the market that they are open to criticism that they are subsidizing banks who are borrowing from them," he said.

$5 million retirement center planned

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Groundbreaking could come as early as next month for a $5-million, 100-unit retirement residence in the Polo Park neighborhood of north Midland, according to the developer of the project.

Holiday Retirement Corp. of Salem, Ore. plans to begin construction of the three-story building near the intersection of Garfield Street and Castleford Road during July, said Robin Allen, advertising manager for the company. City plans show that the area is already zoning approved for construction of a retirement facility.

Ms. Allen estimated that construction of Polo Park Retirement Residence should take about six months and that the first renters will be moving in by early 1989.

The residence will offer studio, one- and two-bedroom apartments for rents ranging from $695-1,695 per month. Rents include three meals daily, utilities, maid service, cable television and transportation services, she said.

Construction contracts on the project have not yet been let, Ms. Allen said, but she anticipates that many of the contractors will hire on site once construction begins.

A total of 25 to 30 permanent jobs will be created by the new venture, she said. Holiday operates about 70 similar projects across the country, including retirement communities in Amarillo and Arlington, Texas.

Another 20 Holiday communities are currently under construction.

Securities analyst, businessman accused of reaping $19 million in insider trading

NEW YORK (AP) — The biggest insider trading case since the Ivan Boesky scandal has jolted Wall Street and implicated a trainee at a big brokerage and a Hong Kong businessman who allegedly reaped $19 million in illicit profits.

A Securities and Exchange Commission civil complaint filed Monday accused Stephen Wang Jr., a junior analyst in a training program at Morgan Stanley & Co., of giving secrets about impending corporate takeovers to Fred C. Lee, a client with homes in Hong Kong and McLean, Va., a swank Washington suburb.

"From at least July 1987 through at least April 1988, Lee placed long-distance telephone calls from McLean, Va., Hong Kong and elsewhere to Wang at his home and office in New York," read the SEC complaint filed in federal court here. "During these telephone calls, Wang improperly disclosed to Lee the material, non-public information."

Lee paid Wang at least $200,000 for the information, authorities said.

Thomas C. Newkirk, the SEC's chief litigation counsel, said an investigation was continuing and he did not rule out the possibility that others were involved.

SEC sources speaking on condition of anonymity, also said they expected federal prosecutors to seek criminal indictments against Wang and Lee, the same pattern that emerged in the Boesky case more than two years ago.

The SEC said Lee made $19 million by trading on the tips and shared at least $200,000 of the money with Wang. It demanded the pair return the money plus pay triple that amount in penalties, for a total of $76 million.

The amount is second only to the record $100 million in profit and fines paid in November 1986 by Boesky, who was at the center of a massive scandal in which Wall Streeters illegally used confidential corporate information to profit in stock transactions.

Boesky, a speculator who implicated other Wall Street professionals, was banished from the securities business for life and is serving a three-year federal prison term.

Morgan Stanley, which was an adviser in the proposed takeovers listed in Monday's complaint, said it suspended Wang last Friday after the SEC subpoenaed him.

The firm also said it had been cooperating with the SEC for some time in its probe and was considering separate but unspecified legal action against Wang and Lee.

The New York Times today quoted unidentified sources as saying that Morgan Stanley's compliance department had picked up suspicious trading in Lee's account as early as last year.

Newkirk said the SEC began the investigation in April but the probe did not break until Friday, when Lee admitted details of his arrangement with Wang to commission officials interviewing Lee in Hong Kong.

Morgan Stanley officials said Wang lived in New York but his whereabouts were unclear. Wang's lawyer, former SEC regional commissioner Ira L. Sorkin, declined to comment about the case.

Wang, 24, was only a few days away from the July 1 expiration of his two-year training at Morgan Stanley, which like other big brokerages uses an extensive recruiting system. He had spent the second year of the program in the mergers and acquisitions unit.

Trainees are expected to leave at the end of the program. Most usually go to graduate business school and some are invited back.

Higher prices send stocks retreating

NEW YORK (AP) — Rising interest rates and commodity prices helped send the stock market into a broad retreat Monday as traders cashed in on the market's recent gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 38.94 points last week, dropped back 34.50 to 2,108.46.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 428 up, 1,089 down and 441 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 264.41 million shares, against 179.88 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 291.96 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Fort Howard directors vote to go private

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Directors of paper-products giant Fort Howard Corp. have agreed to take the company private in a $4.08 billion leveraged buyout, one of the largest such transactions in corporate history.

The directors said Monday they signed a merger agreement with three top Fort Howard executives and The Morgan Stanley Leveraged Equity Fund II, an East Coast investment partnership formed late last year to acquire Fort Howard in a leveraged buyout for $53 a share cash.

Contractor immunity 'breathtakingly' broad

WASHINGTON (AP) — A sharply divided Supreme Court has ruled that defense contractors enjoy broad protection from lawsuits when defective equipment they sell to the government causes death and injury.

By a 5-4 vote, the court refused Monday to reinstate a $725,000 award to the family of a Marine helicopter co-pilot who died in a 1983 crash in the Atlantic Ocean near Virginia Beach, Va.

The dissenting justices denounced the ruling as a "breathtakingly" far-reaching grant of immunity to the nation's defense industry.

Aloha warned of serious corrosion potential

WASHINGTON (AP) — Boeing Co. warned Aloha Airlines last fall that unless serious corrosion on its oldest aircraft was fixed through a stepped-up repair program the planes might become unsafe, documents show.

Nevertheless, according to documents released Monday, Aloha in early March canceled plans for the speedier maintenance schedule, less than seven weeks before one of its aging Boeing 737s broke apart during flight on April 18.

The documents were released by the National Transportation Safety Board, which is investigating the accident.

Airbus crash may have psychological fallout

NEW YORK (AP) — The crash of an Airbus A320 jetliner during a demonstration flight in France could make potential purchasers of the plane wary and may be damaging for its manufacturer, some airline analysts say.

Sunday's crash of the ultra-modern Air France jet could inflict "psychological" damage on the highly touted A320 and prompt cancelled orders and lost sales. The incident also focuses attention on the trend toward more technology and fewer pilots, analysts said Monday.

Senate OKs fund shift from taxes to drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has voted to slash the proposed 1989 Internal Revenue Service budget by $241 million and use the money for the Customs Service's anti-drug program.

The anti-drug measure was part of a larger bill that also calls for a 4 percent pay increase in 1989 for all federal civilian employees except members of Congress, and 4.1 percent for military personnel.

The Senate on Monday approved an amendment requiring that no future pay increase for members of Congress take effect until voted on separately by the House and Senate.

Anadarko to take write-off on second quarter earnings

HOUSTON (SWN) — Anadarko Petroleum Corp. has announced that it would take a charge against 1988 second quarter earnings as a result of an unfavorable ruling by the Delaware Supreme Court which was issued on Thursday, June 23, 1988.

The one-time charge amounts to approximately $2.5 million (after taxes), which is equal to $0.05 per share of common stock outstanding. The possibility of such action and the amount of the write-off were disclosed to Anadarko shareholders in recent annual and quarterly reports. As a result of the charge, the company said it expects to report a loss for the second quarter of 1988.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Going public gives bank extra working capital

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Some months ago, I received a packet from a savings bank in which I have several accounts. The gist of this material, as far as I could understand it, was that the bank was "going public." What does that mean?

They wanted me to buy shares of bank stock, which I did not do. I may be wrong, but it is my understanding bank stock is not covered by government insurance. I am a woman, 77, alone and retired. I am financially comfortable with my savings, pension and Social Security benefits. I don't want to upset my situation or lose any money.

I am tempted to close out my accounts at that bank. What is the advantage to a bank going public?

Doyle

A. It's to raise money through the sale of stock. That's an advantage to the bank, because that additional money can be put to work in the bank's business and, hopefully, make the bank more profitable.

Many savings banks and savings and loan associations, which formerly were "mutual institutions," have gone public — sold stock.

A mutual savings bank or S&L is owned by its depositors. Before that savings bank converted from mutual ownership, the money in your accounts there made you a part owner of the bank.

After the stock sale was completed, the people who bought the stock became the bank's owners. In order for you to retain part-ownership in the bank, you would have had to buy stock. But there was no necessity for you to do so.

You are correct about stock not being covered by government insurance. The value of stock can rise or fall. The stocks of many banks have been good investments, but some have been duds. Summed up, there is risk in owning stocks. Given your financial situation, I'd say you were wise not to buy the bank stock or any other stock.

But that's no reason to close your accounts at that bank. Your money remains covered, up to $100,000, by federal deposit insurance and is as safe as safe can be.

Q. Some of my bank accounts are in joint names, mine and someone else. Some are in my name, as trustee for someone else. My will states that everything I leave is to go into my estate.

Upon my death, will the accounts in joint names and trustee form go directly to those named on the accounts?

A. When you leave this vale of tears, those accounts will be owned by those named. When one owner of a joint account dies, the survivor becomes the sole owner. You now are the sole owner of the accounts in trustee form and those accounts automatically go to the named beneficiaries after you breathe your last.

The joint and trust accounts will not be part of your estate for probate purposes, even though you will states "everything" is to be included. However, the value of those accounts will be counted in your estate for federal estate tax and/or state inheritance-estate tax calculations, if you leave enough for those levies to take bites.

Q. I opened a one-year certificate of deposit at a nearby S&L. It had a provision stating I could add money to it during the year. I just received a letter from the S&L saying, "additions between maturities will no longer be available for this account."

Is it permissible for the S&L to cancel the provision for additions before the year is up?

A. It is if the CD — a contract between you and the S&L — contains a clause permitting the S&L to change the CD's provisions. Chances are, you will find language to that effect in the CD's small print.

You had what is known as an "add-on" CD, which permitted you to put in more money on which interest would be paid at the rate stipulated when you obtained the CD. Many banks and S&Ls which sold add-on CDs have stopped selling them and are trying to cancel the add-on clause of unmatured CDs, because that arrangement sticks them with high interest payments on new money after rates have declined.

Enron completes sale of interest in Enron Cogeneration subsidiary

HOUSTON (SWN) — Dominion Resources, Inc. and Enron Corp. have announced the completion of the previously-announced sale of one-half of Enron Cogeneration Company, an Enron Corp. subsidiary, to Dominion Energy, Inc., a subsidiary of Dominion Resources. The sale price was $104.1 million cash.

Enron Cogeneration is a developer, owner and operator in the cogeneration industry with ownership positions in four projects: 100 percent interests in a 450-megawatt Texas City, Texas, cogeneration facility and a 377-megawatt Pasadena, Texas, plant; a 34 percent interest in a 300-megawatt Bayport, Texas, plant; and a 42 percent interest in a 165-megawatt Bayonne, New Jersey, project.

Including the Enron Cogeneration purchase, Dominion now holds ownership interests in non-regulated generating projects in operation or under development with about 2,300 megawatts of generating capacity.

Enron Corp. said proceeds of the sale will be used in its debt-reduction program, which is one of the corporation's top priorities. The sale also results in an after-tax book gain to Enron of about $40 million or about $.84 per share.

Tokyo remains most expensive city

GENEVA (AP) — The strength of the Japanese yen has made Toyko the world's most expensive city for expatriates for the third straight year, according to a survey of 103 cities worldwide released Monday.

The Japanese port city of Osaka was a close second, followed by the Iranian capital, Tehran, according to a bi-annual survey by Business International, a Geneva-based research and consulting firm.

The study uses a weighted index based on items including food, alcohol, household supplies, tobacco, utilities, clothing and entertainment, but excludes housing. It is aimed at helping international companies determine cost-of-living differentials for their expatriate employees.

Using New York as the base for the study with a value of 100, Tokyo had an index rating of 221, Osaka, 219, and Tehran, 192, the survey said.

New York was tied for 33rd place with Chicago and San Francisco. The most expensive U.S. city was Los Angeles, in 30th place, followed by Washington D.C. Houston tied for 35th place with Miami, Montreal, Toronto, Seoul, and Abu Dhabi.

The drop in value of the U.S. dollar against European currencies continued to make European cities expensive for expatriates who are paid in the U.S. currency, the survey said.

Oslo, Norway, remained the most expensive European city, in seventh place overall. Zurich, Switzerland, was in ninth, tied with Dakar, Senegal, and Geneva in 10th place.

Five African cities ranked in the top ten: Libreville, Gabon, 182; Brazzaville, Congo, 168; Lome, Togo, 154; Abidjan, Ivory Coast, 151; and Dakar, 143.

Latin American cities remained among the least expensive for expatriates despite massive inflation, since inflation in most cities was offset by regular devaluation of their currencies, the survey said.

Caracas, Venezuela, remained the least expensive city with an index value of 38. Buenos Aires, Argentina, was just slightly more expensive with an index rating of 43.

Survey results are based on exchange rates in effect on April 8, a press release said.

FED

In late March and then again in early May and late May, the Fed acted to tighten interest rates by restricting the amount of money banks have for making loans. The central bank's goal was to restrain credit and thereby restrain overall demand in the economy.

The moves have been followed by a general rise in a variety of interest rates. Major banks boosted their prime lending rate one-half percentage point in early May to 9 percent. Mortgage rates, which had dropped to 9.84 percent in February, began rising and now stand at 10.4 percent for fixed-rate loans.

Analysts said rates are likely to head higher for the rest of the year, propelled by the tighter-money policy being pursued by the Fed and by faster-than-expected economic growth.

"We think that sustained growth through 1989 will keep interest rates on a general uptrend," said Roger Brinner, senior economist at Data Resources Inc., of Lexington, Mass.

Analysts said while they expected further credit tightening on the part of the central bank, it might not come at this week's meeting. They said there is no pressing need to reassure financial markets of the bank's resolve to fight inflation.

Bond markets in the United States have rallied after being buffeted by inflation fears a few weeks ago and the dollar has been surging in value, in part because foreign investors have regained confidence in the U.S. economy.

The overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, grew at a brisk 3.6 percent annual rate in the first three months of the year, but many analysts believe that growth rate has slowed to a more sustainable 2.5 percent rate in the current April-June quarter, a pace less likely to raise concerns of overheating.

However, the recent good news is balanced against other pressures such as the drought in the Midwest which is expected to drive food prices higher.

"The severe drought conditions can change the whole psychology of inflation with higher prices at food stores putting pressure on wages as Americans find their purchasing power constrained," said David Jones, senior economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a government securities dealer.

CENTER

Ms. Allen said a number of investor and Realtor inquiries at the company's Oregon headquarters initially brought Midland to the company's attention.

"When we hear about an area, the principals of the company visit the market personally and decide whether to go ahead," she noted.

The residential community will not offer medical services, however each apartment will be equipped with emergency pull cords and an intercom system to provide peace of mind for residents living alone and their families, said Ms. Allen.

The community will offer a full schedule of activities for residents in the common areas of the building, which will include a craft room, library, exercise room, television and billiard lounges and a private dining room where residents can entertain guests.

The community sets no minimum age requirement for its residents, asking only that they "feel comfortable in a retiree atmosphere," she said.

The building is designed with extra-wide doors and hallways to be easily accessible, with several apartments fully equipped for handicapped residents.

The company expects to have a rental trailer office on-site within two to three months.

BRANIFF

"It will involve a repositioning of assets — in this case, resources in terms of equipment and personnel as needs be — to make the company as efficient as it can be," McGee said.

Braniff leases all but a dozen of its 52 jet aircraft and employs about 2,600 people systemwide. Workers under union contracts were promised no layoffs for three years as part of the takeover, McGee said.

The airline's future course also includes the possibility of expanding into cities which lack adequate airline service, McGee said, comparing the strategy to his experience with Piedmont.

Officials would not detail the airline's plans for its third hub, at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. Braniff retains only two gate positions at DFW after a $40 million sale of assets to Fort Worth-based American Airlines — a deal that McGee said was part of the takeover package.

He described the assets as gate positions and landing slots at several major airports. American spokesman Jim Brown said his airline would have no comment on the transaction.

But McGee said the Dallas-Fort Worth area would not be abandoned, and that the airline's maintenance base would remain in the area. Braniff's headquarters also are in Dallas.

Braniff reported a net loss of $8.1 million in the first quarter of the year on revenues of $93.9 million, compared with a $12 million loss and $63.1 million in revenues for the same period in 1987.

"The Braniff that was put together out of the bankruptcy has been in business for the past three or four years and has made considerable progress," McGee said of the airline's oft-troubled past.

The former Braniff International Airways filed for Chapter 11 reorganization in 1982, but resumed flying two years later after the Pritzker family of Chicago invested $70 million.

The Pritzkers' Dalfort Aviation Inc. sold an 80-percent interest in Braniff to the investment group, BIA-COR Holdings, which is controlled largely by Jeffrey R. Chodorow of Philadelphia and New York investor Arthur G. Cohen.

McGee, who spent 41 years with Piedmont, was joined on the new management team by chief financial officer W. Howard Mackinnon and Richard L. James.

INSIDER

An employee of Wang's rank generally made a salary and bonus that totaled around $35,000 a year, Morgan Stanley sources said.

Lee, 38, was described by Morgan Stanley and SEC sources as a wealthy member of a Taiwanese family who had several trading and bank accounts, interests in real estate, import-export operations and public utilities.

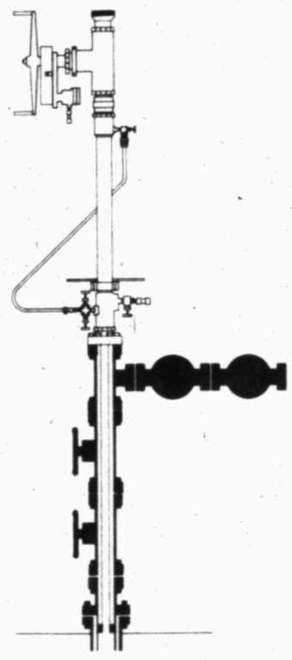

SEC investigators also asked that Lee's bank accounts be frozen, alleging in the complaint that Lee had attempted to move money out of the United States.

Gary Lynch, the SEC enforcement chief, said the trading on inside information involved stock in about 25 different companies, including E.F. Hutton Group Inc. Stop & Shop Cos., Utah Power & Light Co. and Impact Systems.

The complaint said, for example, Lee made $3 million in profit by trading the stock of Stop & Shop; $1.2 million in profits on the stock of E.F. Hutton; and $840,000 in profits on Utah Power.

GENERAL NEWS

Gorbachev outlines sweeping changes

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev called today for sweeping change in the Soviet Union, including creation of a full-time legislature with real power and election of a president with duties akin to those of some Western heads of state.

Gorbachev

He also proposed that farmers be made masters of the land in a program that would allow them to lease the soil they till to quickly increase production and end chronic food shortages.

It was not immediately clear how the legislative proposals would affect the post of Communist Party general secretary, the job that makes Gorbachev the most powerful man in the country.

Gorbachev spoke of an elected president of the Supreme Soviet who would appoint the head of government and oversee foreign and defense policy.

Addressing the party's first general conference in nearly a half-century, Gorbachev also:

— Called for guaranteeing peoples' right to privacy ostensibly granted by the 1977 Constitution.

— Served notice the party would not brook organized challenges to its authority.

— Said overhauling the state-run pricing system is "absolutely necessary" to encourage swift saturation of the market with high-quality foodstuffs. Many Soviets already worry that price reform will mean drastically increased food prices.

In a 3½-hour televised speech opening the conference, Gorbachev told the 5,000 delegates that farm policy had to be changed.

Stopping short of a call for dismantling the Soviet Union's system of collective farms, the reform-minded Gorbachev urged "the extensive, countrywide introduction" of a program to permit families to lease farmland from their collective and state farms and till the soil themselves, rather than as part of salaried farm brigades.

Gorbachev also told the 5,000 delegates that reform of state-set wholesale and retail prices "is absolutely necessary," despite widespread concern that the cost of food and consumer goods will increase drastically.

In a speech occasionally interrupted by brief applause, Gorbachev told the delegates gathered in the Kremlin's glass and marble Palace of Congresses that his policy of "glasnost," or greater openness, does not mean he will tolerate formation of new political parties that challenge the rule of the Communist Party.

Nor, he said, should glasnost be abused by those trying to redraw political boundaries, an obvious reference to Soviet Armenia's efforts to annex a region belonging to the neighboring republic of Azerbaijan.

Rejecting recent calls for more autonomy from delegates representing the Baltic republics, Gorbachev said, "Any obsession with national isolation can only lead to economic and cultural impoverishment."

Gorbachev called for an overhaul of the nation's legislative system to give the Supreme Soviet and the legislatures of the 15 Soviet republics real power. Now, they generally act as bodies approving decisions of the Communist Party.

The Supreme Soviet, the nominal parliament, would become a full-time standing body with fewer than a third of its present 1,500 deputies, and members would be elected — as early as next spring — by a new Congress of Deputies.

The congress would be a new policy-making body similar to the existing Supreme Soviet but expanded to include representatives of various workers' and special interest groups.

Gorbachev's address, broadcast live by Soviet television and radio, is expected to be the basis for discussion by the party delegates, who will meet behind closed doors to consider various resolutions setting party policy.

Delegates have cautioned against expecting great policy changes or shifts in the top party elite at the conference, the party's first since 1941. But they've said the forum would seek to redefine the role in society of the 20 million-member ruling party.

Gorbachev also told delegates that price reform, interpreted as meaning substantial price increases, "is absolutely necessary" despite widespread concern prices for food and other goods will increase drastically.

The Soviet leader endorsed experiments that let families farm their own land to increase production.

"We must overcome the estrangement between the farmer and the soil," said Gorbachev, himself the son of a Russian peasant and a former director of Soviet agricultural policy.

On the economy, he defended price increases for consumer goods as necessary to reduce heavy government subsidies. He said fairer pricing is needed to improve the quality of products and achieve "the swiftest possible saturation of the market with food products."

Soviet analysts have said a dramatic improvement in farm production, which has resisted traditional Communist management techniques, offers the best chance for quick and noticeable improvement in the standard of living. Gorbachev has made living standards a key measure of his modernization program.

In the political sphere, Gorbachev said strict demarcation of functions between the party and government organizations are needed to ensure the success of his economic reforms. But he made clear the Communist Party will not surrender its grip on power.

The Soviet leader also used the conference to ask delegates to help him consolidate his program of social and economic reform, known as "perestroika."

Soviet insiders shed light on Politburo sessions

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG

MOSCOW (AP) — Members of Mikhail S. Gorbachev's ruling Politburo engage in arguments during their closed-door meetings that sometimes render the body deadlocked, the editor-in-chief of the party daily Pravda says.

The editor, Viktor G. Afanasyev, was one of two Communist Party insiders to shine the light of glasnost on the Politburo, offering a rare glimpse of the privileges and rigors that come with membership in the inner circle.

Also discussing the party's pinnacle with foreign reporters Monday was Igor Shvets, an official on its policy-making Central Committee.

He acknowledged that Politburo members earn more than four times the average factory worker's pay, saying they don't stand in line for potatoes because "they are always on duty."

Despite Gorbachev's policy of "glasnost," which has opened many facets of Soviet society to scrutiny, little is known about how the country's supreme political institution functions.

The Politburo customarily issues a laconic statement following its regular Thursday meetings, but it never provides a detailed account.

Afanasyev said he has attended Politburo meetings under both Gorbachev and the late President Leonid I. Brezhnev. He said Gorbachev's Politburo bears little relationship to Brezhnev's, whose members "would talk for an hour, and they'd rubber stamp the decision, and that was that."

"Sometimes a session of the Politburo or Secretariat cannot resolve the issue in its entirety because there are different opinions. Then the question is looked into in greater depth, and only after it's analyzed in all its aspects is the final decision taken."

— Viktor G. Afanasyev, Pravda editor-in-chief

The editor disclosed that after the Chernobyl nuclear power plant explosion in April 1986, the Politburo met in emergency session for 1½ days to discuss the crisis.

"There aren't any basic controversies or contradictions up there," Afanasyev said of the Politburo. "The need for perestroika is not being questioned...But there is argument; there is discussion, there is sometimes heated discussion. There's been a lot of protracted argument sometimes."

Shvets suggested crisis management is not unusual for the Kremlin's top leadership. "There is no day or night for them," he said. "They are always on duty."

Dissenting views among members of the Politburo and of the party's second-most powerful institution, the Secretariat, have sometimes left the groups deadlocked, Afanasyev said.

"Sometimes a session of the Politburo or Secretariat cannot resolve the issue in its entirety because there are different opinions," he said. "Then the question is looked into in greater depth, and only after it's analyzed in all its aspects is the final decision taken."

Alluding to reports that Politburo members enjoy access to special stores that carry commodities not generally available in this country and that they have hard-to-find foodstuffs delivered to their homes, Shvets added, "It wouldn't make sense to have them stand in line for potatoes."

However, he insisted, "They have no special privileges. The only privileges they have are related to their protection," he said, citing secluded country retreats known as dachas as an example.

Shvets said the perquisites of Politburo members did not change when Gorbachev's came to power in March 1985.

He also said they earn about the same as a government minister, $1,350 to $1,700 a month. A typical Soviet factory worker makes about $340 a month.

Afanasyev said there is a formal 10- to 15-minute limit on how long each Politburo member can have the floor, but that members often get around the rule by seeking the floor several times.

He denied the Politburo is split into camps with some members following Gorbachev and others siding with Yegor K. Ligachev, the Kremlin's No. 2, who is seen as a conservative force in the ruling body.

He did say, however, that members display different outlooks depending on whether they are career Communist Party officials like Gorbachev or technocrats, people who rose from the ranks of administration or plant management.

Some people, he said, reached the Politburo or the Secretariat, which runs the party and nation from day to day, "from what you might call the technocracy. Others have been party functionaries all their lives, and, of course, the way various questions are discussed, the inflections, if you will, will be different.

Pope elevates 24 to cardinal, pleads for church unity

VATICAN CITY (AP) — With a schism in the church looming only two days away, Pope John Paul II elevated 24 churchmen from 17 countries to cardinal today and pleaded anew for unity in the Roman Catholic Church.

The 24 included two Americans, Archbishops James Hickey of Washington and Edmund Szoka of Detroit.

The pope used the occasion to appeal to followers of rebel French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, who appears set to provoke the first break in the church in more than 100 years.

Addressing members of the College of Cardinals during a closed-door ceremony to approve the new cardinals, the pope said the rupture with Lefebvre now seems inevitable.

Lefebvre, an ultra-traditionalist who rejects many of the reforms of the 1962-1965 Second Vatican Council, has threatened to consecrate four bishops Thursday without the pope's permission, a move which would mean excommunication for the 82-year-old prelate.

Without referring to the French prelate by name, the pope told the cardinals gathered in the frescoed Consistory Hall of the Apostolic Palace:

"We are very saddened by the news of which we are all aware that one of our brothers in the episcopate...wants to...ordain bishops and thus to break the principle of unity of the church, taking with him a large number of his followers into schism."

Addressing Lefebvre's followers, the pope added: "We pray and exhort them that they remain in the paternal home and that they see that it is there where the real truth of faith and correct behavior is found."

The remarks, made in Latin, were released by the Vatican.

The consistory, as the session is known, began with the pope and 58 veteran cardinals formally approving the papal nominees during the closed-door ceremony.

Then Vatican Secretary State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli read out the names of the new cardinals in front of an audience of about 10,000 people in Paul VI auditorium.

Large delegations of American pilgrims from Washington and Detroit vigorously applauded when Hickey and Szoka were named.

Each of the new "princes of the church," wearing crimson vestments and a golden cross, then went up to the stage to receive their certificate from Casaroli.

Next, the pope arrived and the new cardinals then again climbed the stairs to receive their three-cornered cardinal hats.

Each knelt in front of John Paul, who handed each of the prelates a scroll and embraced them.

The new cardinals bring to 160 the membership in the College of Cardinals, the church's most important governing body. Those under the age of 80 are eligible to elect the pope's successor.

The cardinals also act as advisers to the pontiff, serve on special Vatican commissions and often act as de facto spokesmen for the church in their countries.

Four of the new cardinals come from Italy, two each from the United States, Brazil, Spain and India, and one each from Canada, Mozambique, Colombia, Australia, Hungary, Cameroon, Austria, France, West Germany, Mauritius, Hong Kong and Lithuania.

Rescuers struggle to remove bodies from trains' wreckage

PARIS (AP) — Rescue teams today pulled more bodies from the crumpled steel of a runaway commuter train that slammed into a crowded train about to leave a Paris station. At least 55 people were killed.

A fire department spokesman said this was probably the final death toll from the scene of the Monday evening crash, the worst rail accident in Paris history. But the spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity, said some of those hospitalized were in grave condition.

Officials said 15 passengers were seriously hurt, another 17 were injured less severely and 14 more were treated at the scene.

Philippe Rouvillois, director general of the state-owned train company known as SNCF, said the company, the Transport Ministry and judicial officials had begun investigations into the cause of the crash at the Gare Lyon, the city's largest train station.

Another company official, Roger Gerin, said the "origin of the accident was in difficulties with the braking system, but we do not know the exact cause."

Authorities said the eight-car commuter train, coming into an underground track at the busy station in eastern Paris, split open the first of the stationary train's four cars.

The moving train was sliced open lengthwise and the stationary train buckled upward.

Two young riders, a man and a woman, were discovered early today trapped under a mound of steel. The woman, kept on an emergency life support system while rescue workers tried to saw her out, could not be saved.

The man's legs had to be amputated in order to remove him.

Gerin said the engineers of both trains were well qualified. He said both engineers jumped from the trains before the collision.

He said the engineer of the moving train, Daniel Saulin, realized the brakes were not working and warned passengers to move to the back of the train.

The engineer of the train in the station, Andry Tanguy, also had time to warn passengers. Announcements over loudspeakers told them to leave the train.

Gerin said trains undergo maintenance four times a year, in addition to routine checks. He said the commuter train had been checked three days earlier.

Gerin confirmed that the train entered the station traveling at 40 to 50 miles per hour.

Before the accident, Gerin said, the train had made 15 stops and the brakes worked normally at each of the stops.

He said a passenger pulled an alarm signal, causing the train to stop at a station five miles from Paris that is not normally a stop.

"During this 26-minute stop, the engineer experienced difficulty in trying to re-arm the brake system, but he resumed his trip," Gerin said.

As he approached the station, the engineer experienced more braking difficulties and alerted the stationmaster, Gerin said.

At midmorning, two diesel trains attached to an enormous steel cable were used to pull apart the trains. Rescue workers carried the dead away from the wreck on stretchers or in plastic bags.

Rouvillois said the moving train — coming from the southeastern suburb of Melun — went through a red signal light about 500-600 yards from the station.

Traditionalists challenge warning from Vatican

GENEVA (AP) — The traditionalist movement of Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre Monday challenged the Vatican's warning that Lefebvre will be automatically excommunicated if he consecrates four bishops without papal approval.

The consecration, scheduled for Thursday at a seminary in Econe, Switzerland, would lead to the first schism in the Roman Catholic church in more than a century.

In a letter to the media, the director of the Econe seminary cited a German expert on canon law that no sanctions can be applied by the church against the faithful who act in an emergency.

The Rev. Alain Lorans said in the letter it was "wrong to claim that the code inflicts this punishment automatically without taking into account certain cases of emergency."

Lorans cited passages from a book published in 1984 by Georg May, a professor at the University of Mainz, who wrote that "an emergency situation justifies emergency rights."

"Those rights can only be claimed if all possibilities to restore the normal situation by positive (valid) law have been exhausted," May wrote. "In an emergency situation, the pastors of the church can take extraordinary measures to protect or restore the activity of the Church."

The Rev. Roland Trauffer, secretary of the Swiss Conference on Bishops and an expert on canon law, confirmed that canon law provides immunity for those breaking it in an emergency.

Israelis shoot two Arab youths; Strike closes territories

NABLUS, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Israeli soldiers shot and wounded a 12-year-old and another Palestinian teen-ager today, and Arabs shut down east Jerusalem to protest the 21st anniversary of its annexation to Israel.

Israeli troops blocked Palestinians in the occupied territories from entering Jerusalem after an underground Arab leaflet ordered the the disputed city to be the target of today's general strike. Arabs shuttered shops and schools in east Jerusalem.

In the West Bank city of Nablus, two Palestinians were shot, both in the left leg, near the central marketplace, officials at Al Ittihad Hospital and one of the youths said.

Samer Wawi, 17, said he was surrounded by two Israeli patrols when he was shot. "They didn't speak to me. They only fired at me," he told The Associated Press from his hospital bed.

Hospital officials identified the second person wounded as Subhi Munib Saayeh, 12.

The army provided no details, saying it was checking the reports.

Since the uprising began Dec. 8, 211 Palestinians and four Israelis have been killed.

In Jerusalem today, heavy police forces patrolled the eastern Arab sector of the city and guarded the gates of the walled Old City.

Underground Leaflet No. 20, signed by the Palestine Liberation Organization and Arab leaders of the uprising, called for marches and a general strike "in affirmation of the Arab identity of Jerusalem."

At least 10 outlawed Palestinian flags were raised on utility poles this morning.

The status of Jerusalem is one of the most contentious issues in the Arab-Israel conflict. Israel captured east Jerusalem from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war, when it also seized the Gaza Strip and the West Bank.

Since then, Israel has declared Jerusalem its capital, but most foreign countries do not recognize that status and keep their embassies in Tel Aviv.

Jerusalem has 340,000 Jewish and 135,000 Arab residents. The city is considered holy by Jews, Moslems and Christians.

Members of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's right-wing Herut Party held a counterdemonstration with the theme "Jerusalem is Ours." About 20 cars formed a caravan and drove through parts of Jerusalem, with Israeli flags flying from the windows.

"We are going to show the Arabs the only flag allowed in Israel is the Israeli flag and the capital of Israel is Jerusalem," said a local Herut leader, Reuven Rivlin.

In the West Bank, cities and towns from Bethlehem south of Jerusalem to Nablus in the north were paralyzed by the strike.

Arabs who wished to reach jobs in Israel outside of Jerusalem were generally stopped by stone-throwing youths, who told them to stay home in keeping with the daylong strike.

A firebomb was thrown at a bus near Bethlehem carrying Palestinian workers to Israel and one woman was injured, Israel radio said.

Palestinians ranging in age from about 8 to 16 gathered in Nablus streets, building road blocks and setting fire to junk piles.

The strike also halted most activity in the Gaza Strip, where Israeli troops clamped curfews on two refugee camps after stone-throwing incidents.

Puerto Rican's release outrages U.S. officials

MEXICO CITY (AP) — U.S. Embassy officials say they are outraged by reports that a Puerto Rican separatist who is wanted in the United States for terrorist activities was released from prison and sent to Cuba.

William Morales was flown to Cuba Friday after completing five years of his eight-year sentence, Interior Department spokesman Octavio Campos said Monday.

The U.S. Embassy in Mexico City said the U.S. government was "outraged and surprised by reports that Mexican authorities may have released William Morales, whom we understand had several years left to serve on Mexican homicide and attempted murder charges."

The statement from Campos, which did not provide further details, was the first confirmation of Morales' whereabouts since reports surfaced this weekend that Morales, 37, had been released from prison.

Reports in the leftist newspapers La Jornada and Uno mas Uno, which have been following the Morales case closely, said Morales was released from prison Friday and turned over to the custody of federal Interior Department immigration agents.

The United States wanted him extradited to serve out a prison sentence on weapons and explosives charges. But Mexico decided earlier this month that his was a political case not covered by the extradition treaty prevailing between the two nations.

"The United States would be deeply disturbed that an individual with Morales' record of criminal behavior, a convicted felon in both countries, should even be considered for possible political refugee status," the U.S. Embassy statement said.

"The U.S. government already expressed our displeasure to the government of Mexico over the Foreign Ministry's decision not to extradite Morales to the United States," it said. "Allowing him to go free would be a serious blow to international efforts to combat terrorism and an affront to U.S.-Mexican relations."

State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said Morales was implicated in a 1975 bombing in New York in which four people were killed and 60 injured and has been sentenced to over 100 years in prison in the United States on weapons possession charges.

Morales was arrested in New York in 1978 after a bomb he was making detonated, blowing off most of both hands and disfiguring his face. He escaped from U.S. custody a year later.

U.S. officials say Morales is a leader of the Puerto Rican independence group, the Armed Forces of National Liberation, or FALN.

Morales escaped from the prison ward of Bellevue Hospital in New York City a month after he was sentenced to a 29- to 89-year prison term on state charges.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Austrian minister calls plot to assassinate pope a hoax

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The interior minister said today that two Turks had been arrested for claiming they wanted to kill Pope John Paul II and accused the two of perpetrating a hoax to gain publicity.

"During the papal visit, there was no attempted assassination," Interior Minister Karl Blecha told reporters following a Cabinet meeting today. On Monday, the pontiff ended a five-day Austrian pilgrimage.

A U.S. television network reported Monday that a plot to assassinate John Paul during the recent visit was uncovered and foiled in Vienna.

But Blecha, whose ministry oversees many police and security functions, said the plot was nothing more than a hoax to "to grab the attention of the world news media."

ABC News quoted unidentified sources as saying two Turks were the prime suspects in the alleged assassination attempt that was to have taken place last Thursday, the first day of the visit.

The network reported that the assassination attempt was to take place as the pope arrived at St. Stephens Cathedral in Vienna. It said it had learned that police believed shots were to be fired from a construction site across from the cathedral.

Rights group cites Irish deaths

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International said Tuesday existing rules are inadequate to prevent "unlawful killings" by security forces in Northern Ireland and demanded the British government set up a judicial inquiry.

Citing 25 deaths of unarmed people at the hands of security forces in disputed circumstances since 1982, the international human rights group said an inquiry was "vital to ensure that effective procedures and safeguards are instituted."

The report focused on six deaths in late 1982 that prompted accusations that police were then operating a "shoot-to-kill policy" against suspected guerrillas in the British-ruled province and that they subsequently covered it up and obstructed an independent official investigation.

Spokeswoman Fae Junaid said Amnesty believed the need for an inquiry had become more urgent because it said the government failed to deliver on promises made this year to hold inquests and disciplinary proceedings against officers allegedly involved in the 1982 incidents.

Vietnam withdraws some troops

KOMPONG CHHNANG, Cambodia (AP) — About 400 Vietnamese troops left central Cambodia Monday as part of what Vietnam says will be its largest troop withdrawal since it invaded Cambodia nearly a decade ago.

The Vietnamese troops boarded trucks and headed south from Kompong Chhnang toward the capital, Phnom Pehn, local officials said.

The officials said the pullout left only 200 Vietnamese soldiers in Kompong Chhnang, a central province away from the main battlefields along Cambodia's border with Thailand. They said the remaining troops would leave Oct. 25.

Vietnam announced in May it would withdraw 50,000 troops from neighboring Cambodia by the end of the year, beginning in June. It also said all of its estimated 120,000 troops would be gone by 1990, leaving the fighting to the forces of the Phnom Penh government it installed after the 1978 invasion.
