Midland Park Mall theater closes its curtain

By Matt Josefy
Staff Writer

A sign in front of a cage curtain was the only entertainment offered by the Midland Park Mall theater Friday night.

"As of last night, Hollywood theaters in our mall closed," read the official statement from Simon Properties, owner of Midland Park Mall. "We will continue to add quality stores to provide a high quality shopping experience for our customers."

Wallace Theaters refused to comment on the closing, though local managers have said employees will be offered jobs at other Hollywood Theatres. The loss of four screens leaves Midland with 18 screens, the least since November of 1996 when Tall City 10 was opened.

Odessa, in comparison, boasts 30 screens.

Tall City 10 is now the only theater offering first-run movies. All Midland theaters — Tall City 10, North Park, and Cine 4 — are owned by Wallace Theaters.

Last week, David Lyons, director of marketing and advertising for the company, refuted rumors that the closing was about to occur. His assistant Heather Wright had said, "We are not closing."

Perhaps hurt the most by the closing was Feature Films for Family, a group that produces G-rated movies for family viewing.

Jeff Straley, public relations director for the organization, has expressed concern that the movies no longer will have a home in Midland, though Hollywood promised him they would look into the matter.

The family feature "No More Baths" had been playing at the mall, with the release of "Who Gets the House" scheduled soon.

"I was surprised," said mall customer Joy Irving. "I think they should have made it a dollar movie. I would go to Hollywood 10 if I'm going to pay full price, but this one wasn't any different than North Park or UA," referring to the discount-rate theaters in

Bishop calls for renewed commitment to overturning 1973 Roe vs. Wade ruling

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

On the eve of the 25th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion in America, Bishop Michael Pfeifer of the Catholic Diocese of San Angelo minced no words at a prayer service in Midland Friday night.

"We as a nation have allowed the killing of the unborn to become a legal right," Pfeifer told a sympathetic audience of about 400 at Midland Center. "Because of this, America's conscience has been aborted as well."

Pfeifer admonished pro-lifers of all faiths to use the beginning of a new century for a renewed commitment to overturning the Jan. 22, 1973 Supreme Court ruling in Roe vs. Wade.

"Just because something is legal, doesn't make it moral," the bishop told his audience.

DEA agent names Herrera Law Firm office manager in court testimony

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

The government's case in the largest narcotics investigation in West Texas history took a new turn Friday, during a detention hearing for Jesus Raymond Lucero, one of the suspects indicted and arrested Dec. 9.

For the first time, courtroom testimony linked the government's investigation to senior management of The Herrera Law Firm, in this case to Ishmael Herrera, a paralegal and office manager of The Herrera Law Firm in Odessa and uncle of the firm's principal partner, Jesse Herrera.

The government has contended that former and current employees of The Herrera Law Firm and some Herrera family members operated an illegal narcotics operation and that much of the operation was run out of the firm's offices in Midland, Odessa and elsewhere.

Lucero was ordered detained by U.S. Magistrate Judge L. Stewart Platt in the original round of arrests. Lucero has obtained a new attorney, Gary Hill of El Paso, who appeared before Platt Friday on behalf of his client and requested reconsideration for bail for Lucero.

The government opposed bail for Lucero with U.S. Assistant District Attorney John Klassen arguing that the detention order should remain valid because the government views Lucero as a high-level member of the suspected drug-trafficking organization.

Supporting the government's opposition to Lucero leaving jail was DEA Special Agent Mike Keene, who testified about a wiretapped telephone call between Ishmael Herrera and Lucero during which Ishmael Herrera provided Lucero with the identity of a suspected government informant, someone the government did not acknowledge was in fact an agent.

Keene also testified that in subsequent phone calls, Lucero passed on the information obtained from Ishmael Herrera, confirming the identity of the supposed government informant.

Secondly, Keene gave testimony about intercepted telephone calls between Lucero and other individuals concerning the collection of outstanding narcotics debts. At least one of these phone calls, according to Keene, was

Consultant discusses goals of mass transportation study update

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

LKC Consulting has begun an update of its 1996 study on the feasibility of a mass transportation system in the Permian Basin. Friday marked the first day of the study as LKC consultant Linda Cherrington discussed the goals of the study and listened to feedback from audience members.

Following the 1996 study, mass transit never materialized because there was "no sense of public urgency and local caution about public investment," said Ms. Cherrington. Currently, Midland and Odessa are the only two cities with populations of more than 50,000 in the state of Texas with no mass transit systems.

Ms. Cherrington described the previous study as one heavily focused on demographics with predictions on what the Permian Basin population would look like by 2020. The study encompassed age groups, disabled people, large households, minorities and a variety of other demographic components — all of which is used to outline the best transportation system for each city.

There are four transportation options:

- Fixed route — a bus route with bus stops throughout the city.
- American Disabilities Act (ADA) Paratransit — door-to-door pickup for those who can't physically walk to the bus stop. ADA Paratransit is automatically included under the fixed route system, as required by law.
- Flexible route — regular route with a schedule that can go off-route to pick up those who qualify under ADA requirements.
- Demand response — door-to-door pickup arranged at least one day ahead of time.

The study also showed that employers expressed no interest in mass transit. The city is growing away from the downtown area, making mass transit a bigger challenge than if large numbers of workers were drawn to the same area every day. There is some doubt as to whether mass transit would be widely utilized.

Faye Russell of Concerned Citizens for Public Transportation says a public transportation system will be essential in attracting businesses to the community and diversifying the economy. Until there is public transportation, she said, there won't be diversification.

"It's time we stopped living in a glass house and woke up to the concerns of the people in this city," Ms. Russell said.

Members of the audience expressed concern over a variety of issues including the need for mass transit for the elderly, disabled and those with health problems. Midland retiree Gene Lewis said there was definitely a need for public transportation but was worried about the increase of taxes to pay for it.

"There's definitely a need for public transportation," Lewis said. "It would take more cars off the road. But, you have to be careful about taxes."

Lewis also pointed out that Midland rises and falls with oil prices

Car bombs explode in Madrid; police blame Basque separatists

By Mar Roman
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Hopes for an end to Basque separatist violence in Spain vanished Friday when two car bombs exploded in a Madrid neighborhood, killing an army officer and ending a 19-month lull in such attacks.

Police immediately blamed the bombings on the Basque separatist group ETA, which ended a cease-fire last month after failing to win government concessions. Investigators said the attacks had all the hallmarks of the ETA.

Although there was no immediate claim of responsibility, police reported last month that they had intercepted two ETA-linked cars carrying 3,300 pounds of explosives to Madrid. The group often waits weeks before claiming responsibility for an attack. The last attack attributed to the ETA was the killing of a governing party official on June 25, 1998.

Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar condemned Friday's attack and vowed the government would not yield in its fight against ETA.

"When ETA announced it was ending the pause in its terrorist activity, I said ETA was making a mistake," Aznar said in a television broadcast. "Now is the time to show ETA the consequences of its error."

As darkness fell, more than 3,000 people gathered in downtown Madrid's Puerta del Sol plaza to protest the bombings. The rally was supposed to start with a silent vigil, but there were spontaneous outbursts as some in the crowd shouted "ETA are murderers!" and "We want justice!" Protesters carried banners that read, "Basques, yes; ETA, no".

Similar rallies drawing several thousand people were held in the Basque cities of Bilbao, San Sebastian and Vitoria, and smaller ones took place in Valencia, Seville, Zaragoza and Valladolid. A major rally is scheduled for Sunday in Madrid.

The party seen as ETA's political wing, Euskal Herritarrok, did not condemn the attack, saying only it "lamented" the killing and blamed both sides for failing to achieve peace.

The party held rallies attended by several hundred people in San Sebastian and Vitoria Friday night. Riot police with shields and clubs deployed to separate them from those attending the peace demonstrations.

Less than a week ago, tens of thousands of Basque citizens in Bilbao attended the latest in a series of rallies to demand that the ETA not break the cease-fire. Many Basques want more autonomy, but oppose the ETA's methods and wanted talks to continue.

The nationalist president of the Basque country, Juan Jose Ibarretxe, condemned Friday's bombings.

"I express my most complete, unequivocal condemnation of the crime," Ibarretxe said. "Unfortunately ETA ignored once again the call of Basque society that has shown itself overwhelmingly in favor of peace."

The first car blew up shortly after 8 a.m. outside an apartment building in a neighborhood full of military families. About 30 minutes after police and rescue workers arrived, a second car exploded about 400 yards away.

"I am very angry," said Josefa Espinoza, 65, who works in a nearby bakery. "I had a bad feeling that the people of this neighborhood were going to be the first victims."

National Police chief Juan Cotino said the car bombs were set off by remote-control and that the victim, Col. Pedro Antonio Blanco Garcia, 47, was the target. He worked in the economic section of army headquarters in Madrid and was married with two children.

Defense Minister Eduardo Serra visited the officer's wife, who reportedly learned of her husband's death by watching television news with her son. "She is as can be expected after a killing like this," he said.

Three people were treated for shock after the bombings, and a 14-year-old girl suffered cuts.

The ETA wants to establish a Basque nation in northern Spain and southern France, where the Basques have a separate language and cultural identity. The group's initials stand for the Basque words for Basque Homeland and Freedom. In its campaign for independence, the ETA has killed nearly 800 people since 1968.

Aznar himself narrowly escaped an assassination attempt in 1995. After his conservative Popular Party came to power in 1996, the ETA changed strategy and began targeting the party's town councilors.

The ETA called a cease-fire in September 1998. But while the government wanted peace talks limited to disarmament and possible early releases or lenient treatment for some 500 ETA suspects in Spanish jails, the ETA demanded negotiations for a separate Basque nation.

The government has said it will not negotiate with the group until it renounces violence. On Dec. 3, the ETA declared the end of a 14-month truce, citing lack of progress in the talks.

Spain received condolences from several European governments Friday, in messages that uniformly condemned the bombings.

In Paris, the French government noted that it has traditionally worked with Spain to root out ETA operatives. "It's clear, now more than ever, that cooperation between our two countries is indispensable," Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Anne Gazeau-Secret said.

French teachers strike to protest violent students

PARIS (AP) — Junior-high school students accused of attempted murder for throwing an 11-year-old boy over a railing. A vocational school student who claims three classmates tortured him for months.

More and more brutal attacks by children against children are being reported in French schools, where fear has traditionally kept students silent about such violence.

Concerned parents in Venisseux, a working-class suburb of Lyon, occupied schools on Friday where teachers were striking to protest growing abuse from pupils. In Bondy, a blue-collar suburb east of Paris, junior-high teachers said they could no longer handle the threats and walked off the job.

And two major teachers' unions are demanding more adult staff to face the growing violence.

But it is the alleged Jan. 13 attack on an 11-year-old boy in Mantes-la-Jolie, a quiet, middle-class Parisian suburb, that has thrust the issue into the spotlight.

Judicial sources said Friday that a judge in Versailles charged three ninth-graders at the Jules Ferry Junior High School with attempted murder and extortion.

The students, aged 16-18, had allegedly been forcing their victim, whose mother is from Spain, to do their Spanish homework for them since September, the sources said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Ecuadorean military calls for new government

By Monte Hayes
Associated Press

QUITO, Ecuador — The military asked President Jamil Mahuad to resign Friday after Indian protesters, joined by midlevel officers, stormed an empty Congress building. Mahuad refused to step down, saying anyone who wanted to overthrow him would have to do it by force.

Military guards stepped aside when hundreds of Indians stormed the building, seized the podium and announced that they had created their own Congress, "The Parliament of the People."

While downtown Quito was in chaos — with Indians armed with rocks and clubs paralyzing traffic and menacing pedestrians — most of the country and much of the city seemed unfazed and Mahuad said he had no intention of stepping down.

"I am not going to abandon you," Mahuad, 50, said in a nationwide television broadcast Friday, his only public appearance of the day.

"If you want to take power through force, gentlemen, take power through force," he said, directing his comments to the military high command, which only a few minutes before had asked him to resign.

In the broadcast, he characterized the Confederation of Indigenous Nationalities — which led the rebellion — as a small minority among 12 million Ecuadoreans. Other government leaders said the protesters were attempting to exploit discontent caused by the Latin American nation's deep economic crisis.

AP Photo

Students throw stones in the direction of police at "Politecnica University" in Quito, Ecuador on Thursday. Workers, students and Indian groups marched in the streets to protest measures taken by the government of President Jamil Mahuad as a result of the nation's economic crisis.

"What future awaits the country, the next president? Will he be a hostage of this kind of movement? The next time that he makes a decision, whatever it is, that the Indian movement does not like, will it announce a march on Quito and take control of the city?" Mahuad said.

Later, Mahuad left the national palace with close aides and was being protected by several military officers. His destination was not known.

With no real agreement between the military and the Indian confederation, which claims to represent Ecuador's 4 million Indians, it was unclear who would take power even if Mahuad agreed to resign.

The Indians appointed a new governing council, made up of an Indian, an army colonel and a former Supreme Court chief.

However — despite the military's call for Mahuad's resignation — it was not clear whether most military leaders would support the triad.

Military leaders said 120 officers were involved in the rebellion, along with an undetermined number of troops.

The participation of the armed forces seemed more a result of their growing impatience with Mahuad's inability to handle the Indian rebellion, which was part of a month of broader protests. They backed the attempted takeover mainly to prevent "a social explosion," said Gen. Carlos Mendoza, who was joint military commander until becoming defense minister last week.

"We are conscious that we must maintain order and discipline in the country," he said.

As night fell in Guayaquil, 165 miles southwest of the capital, rioters took to the downtown streets, burning two vehicles, beating a bystander and hurling rocks at passing vehicles.

Earlier in the day in Guayaquil, a group of leftist-led unions, student organizations and neighborhood associations seized the provincial government building.

Foreign Minister Benjamin Ortiz accused the protesters of exploiting Ecuador's grim economic situation. Last year inflation reached 60 percent, the highest in Latin America, and the economy contracted 7.5 percent. Only one in three in the labor force has full-time work.

The protesters are also upset about Mahuad's plans to scrap Ecuador's currency for the dollar.

In becoming the first South American country seeking to adopt the greenback, Ecuador was hoping to curb inflation and borrow money at lower, U.S. interest rates, thereby shoring up its battered image with foreign investors.

Rio de Janeiro oil spill hits ecological preserve

By Peter Muello
Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Biologist Mario Moscatelli sat on the bank of the Surui River and cried. Black scum from a massive oil spill covered the rocks, sand and mangrove roots of an ecological preserve deep in Rio de Janeiro's Guanabara Bay.

"The Surui River is practically dead," said Moscatelli, who works for the Rio de Janeiro state Environmental Affairs Department. "If this isn't an environmental crime, I tear up my biologist's certificate," he said Friday.

Three days after a pipeline at the Reduc refinery belonging to federal petroleum giant Petrobras spilled more than 300,000 gallons of crude oil into the bay, the ecological disaster continues to grow.

By Friday, the oil slick spread through the Guapimirim mangrove swamp, a protected area and an important spawning ground for fish, birds and crustaceans. The swamp is home to endangered species such as the yellow-throated alligator and the blue egret. Dead sea birds coated in oil floated in the tide. Many of them were diving cormorants, but the carcasses also included a rare marabu egret.

Moscatelli said it would take decades for nature to undo the damage. Environmentalists call it the worst ecological disaster to hit Rio de Janeiro state in a decade.

The company could face a fine of up to $2,750 per animal killed, according to the Environment Ministry. State environmental officials said the leak was caused by an old and poorly maintained pipeline. They are still investigating the exact cause of the accident.

Winds and tides carried the oil toward the mouth of the bay and the open sea. The beaches of Paqueta Island, a popular tourist resort, were covered with black muck.

Despite the drift seaward, the state environmental office said it was unlikely the oil would reach ocean beaches such as Copacabana or Ipanema.

As the spill widened over 16 square miles, hundreds of workers with rakes and pitchforks took to the beaches of Mage, hit directly by the spill, and other affected areas. They mopped up the oil with hay and dumped it into steel drums, while biologists washed off oil-blackened birds and crabs.

Petrobras published an ad in major newspapers Friday admitting its responsibility for the disaster. The company also estimated Friday that 338,000 gallons of oil had spilled — not 130,000 gallons, as it had been saying since the disaster occurred.

"Petrobras has no excuse," the newspaper ad read over a picture of an agonizing, oil-covered egret. "It has an obligation to recover the confidence of Brazilian society."

Still, many think that's not enough.

Environment Minister Jose Sarney Filho, who flew over the bay with Petrobras President Henri Philipe Reichstul on Friday, said the company could be fined up to $27.5 million.

"We will be rigorous," Sarney Filho said. "As a state company, (Petrobras) should set an example. They will be punished in exemplary fashion."

The minister said he would require all oil refineries to present plans for preventing environmental damage. Rio state authorities said the Reduc refinery had presented a similar leak in 1997 and was operating without a required license.

The Inter-American Development Bank reportedly offered to provide funds and a U.S. specialist in environmental disasters to help in the cleanup.

Scientist disputes fossil is 'missing link'

BEIJING (AP) — A fossil hailed as an important find for the theory that birds evolved from dinosaurs is really a composite of fossils from different creatures, a Chinese scientist says.

Xu Xing, an eminent paleontologist in Beijing, said he has found fossils that prove the fossilized turkey-sized creature unveiled last year may not be the evolutionary link some thought it was.

Xu's claim has forced paleontology circles, which greeted the find with some fanfare, to take a second look. And the controversy has highlighted the pitfalls of international research projects involving fossils that are often smuggled out of China and sold overseas.

Scientists have other evidence that birds evolved from dinosaurs, and Xu's finding doesn't overturn the theory.

The National Geographic Society convened a press conference in October to announce the discovery of the dinosaur, dubbed Archaeoraptor liaoningensis, which lived 120 million to 140 million years ago.

Unlike feathered dinosaurs discovered earlier, the Archaeoraptor showed evidence that it could fly, they said.

The Archaeoraptor fossil, however, included specimens that had been smuggled out of China and thus are of uncertain provenance.

Now National Geographic magazine plans to publish a note in its March issue saying that CT scans of the fossil appeared to confirm Xu's observations and had "revealed anomalies" in the reconstruction, said National Geographic Society spokeswoman Barbara Moffet. She added that more information was needed.

Xu contends the Archaeoraptor is a combination of two fossils: one of the body and head of a bird-like creature and the other of the tail of a different dinosaur. He said he has found another fossil, in a private collection in China, that contains the mirror image of the supposed tail of the Archaeoraptor.

Fossils often break in two when the rocks containing them are split in excavation.

"This is a completely new dinosaur. It's nothing like the Archaeoraptor," Xu, of China's Institute of Vertebrate Paleontology and Paleoanthropology, said in an interview.

Paleontologist Stephen Czerkas, who bought the Archaeoraptor fossil at a gem and mineral sale in Utah, said Xu may be right.

"No one has been able to actually compare the two fossils side-by-side. Research is still ongoing. But that is what we are all tending to believe."

Still, Czerkas said the Archaeoraptor, even without its tail, remained a very important find.

"It's still totally one of a kind, first time anyone has seen anything like this before," said Czerkas, who with his wife, Sylvia, runs the Dinosaur Museum in Blanding, Utah.

He said Xu's dinosaur, a dromaeosaur that could not fly, was also "very exciting."

"We've never had a tail with feathers," Czerkas said. "We're getting new information about the dromaeosaur we've never had before."

Xu said he could not disclose further details about his find until he finished a research article for Nature magazine to be published later this year. He has invited U.S. scientists to visit Beijing to examine his find.

The fossils were unearthed in western Liaoning province, a barren, semi-desert region about 260 miles northeast of Beijing that is a treasure trove for paleontologists.

The region, which in prehistoric times was a humid lake area with abundant vegetation and wildlife, has yielded spectacular fossils of ancient birds and of dinosaurs with birdlike characteristics that some scientists say are evidence that birds evolved from dinosaurs.

But as with other antiquities, China lacks the means to protect such treasures. Theft is such a problem that in another fossil-rich area, in southern Guangdong province, authorities offer rewards of up to $12,000 for tips on poachers, according to the Xinhua News Agency.

"Lots of specimens have been smuggled out for commercial purposes," Xu said. "For science, this is a disaster.

"When pieces are stolen and smuggled out, sometimes blocks of fossils are matched together mistakenly. That can be a big mistake, and it misleads the public."

Czerkas said he planned to return the Archaeoraptor fossil, which was illegally taken out of China, within several months.

"It is one of their natural treasures. Ultimately, it comes down to doing the right thing," he said.

Digging for graves ends, but questions remain in Juarez

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — The only signs that La Campana ranch was recently a focus of world attention are discarded foam coffee cups, spent batteries and a few bored soldiers standing guard outside.

The digging has stopped, and there is no more talk of finding the bodies of 100 Mexicans and Americans in mass graves just over the U.S. border.

What remains are questions: Were the expectations of finding so many bodies in mass graves overblown? And, if the 100 people missing in the Juarez area aren't in the mass graves, where are they?

The end of the digging was casually announced Thursday by Mexican Attorney General Jorge Madrazo during a news conference. The two-month, joint Mexican-FBI investigation had turned up nine bodies and a drug laboratory at three sites.

It was an anticlimactic ending to a sensational story that grabbed headlines worldwide, with talk of a killing field right across the border from El Paso.

"It's the titillation factor of wanting to see the border as a grade-B movie about the drug trade," said John Amastae, director of the Center for Inter-American and Border Studies at the University of Texas-El Paso.

The news broke Nov. 29, with U.S. law enforcement officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, telling reporters that an informant had said as many as 100 bodies might be buried in Ciudad Juarez.

Yet the head of the Mexican attorney general's organized crime unit, Jose Larrieta Carrasco, told The Associated Press on Thursday that no informant had ever used that figure to either Mexican or U.S. officials.

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ Son of cult guru kidnapped

TOKYO — Intruders believed to be cult followers on Friday abducted the 7-year-old son of the former guru of the doomsday group behind the 1995 gas attack on Tokyo's subway.

The kidnapping, which reportedly involved the former guru Shoko Asahara's daughter, was likely a sign of infighting in the Aum Shinri Kyo as it faces increasing pressure to disband, Japanese media reports said.

Several people broke into a cult facility in Asahimura, 60 miles northeast of Tokyo, and assaulted those who tried to stop them by choking and beating them, TBS TV said.

One of the intruders, Satoshi Nagayama, 37, a former cult member, was later arrested nearby and charged with breaking into the facility, police said.

The kidnappers fled by car, Kyodo News service said. Police were looking for the boy, whose name was not released, and Nagayama's suspected accomplices, they said.

■ 400 child soldiers released

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone — Former fighters in Sierra Leone's brutal civil war have released more than 400 child soldiers this week, aid officials and West African peacekeepers said Friday.

The releases followed charges that the former rebels of the Revolutionary United Front and the former junta soldiers of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council, both of which fought the nation's civilian government, had reneged on promises to free thousands of captive children under a peace deal signed last July.

The rebels and the junta soldiers are now both part of a fragile power-sharing government.

The first group of 300 child soldiers, held by AFRC soldiers in the northern town of Kabala, were released to the Catholic relief agency Caritas last Saturday, said Ibrahim Sesay, the agency's director in Sierra Leone.

The group, all of them boys between 7 and 18 years old, would be transferred to a Caritas-run care center in the Port Loko district, 60 miles west of Freetown, to receive counseling, Sesay said.

■ Leaders inducted into corps

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — Dozens of former rebels were inducted Friday as the first leaders of the Kosovo Protection Corps, a group charged with conducting rescue missions and helping rebuild the province's tattered infrastructure.

The first 44 members of the Corps — many of whom were members of the formally disbanded rebel Kosovo Liberation Army — were sworn in by the top international civilian and military officials in the province.

NATO set up the corps last fall, hoping that a multiethnic organization would help heal the divisions in the province by bringing together representatives of all of Kosovo's ethnic groups working together for a common purpose.

The first group of inductees was made up of ethnic Albanians, including one woman, but Gen. Agim Ceku, who heads the corps, appealed to ethnic minorities to join.

"Their participation in KPC at this moment shows an act of maturity and it is the only proof for them to show that they are ready to take the responsibility for the creation of peace and stability in Kosovo," Ceku said.

with Sandra Herrera, talking about narcotics debts owed by her husband, Juan Michael Navarette. Sandra Herrera is a niece of Ishmael Herrera and sister of Jesse Herrera.

In his third point, Keene testified that, during an intercepted phone call, Lucero was asked by his daughter "if he was still involved with the Mafia because she wanted someone taken care of."

In another wiretapped conversation, said Keene, an individual the government would only identify as J.D. advised that he "needed someone rubbed out" and asked Lucero if he knew someone who could take care of the job. Keene testified that Lucero responded that "if he couldn't find someone to do it, he would do it himself."

During the hearing, defense attorney Gary Hill argued that "the government just wanted his client to stay in jail so that he would cooperate with their investigation into the people at that law firm."

Platt took no action and said he would consider Lucero's request for release.

Bush: High court's abortion ruling 'usurped legislatures'

COLFAX, Iowa (AP) — Republican presidential front-runner George W. Bush said Friday "it should be up to each state legislature" to decide what limits to place on abortions, adding that the Supreme Court erred by issuing a ruling on the issue 27 years ago.

But Bush, an anti-abortion two-term Texas governor, did not directly call for the outright repeal of the 1973 Roe V. Wade decision that legalized abortions, and his comments, in the closing days of the Iowa caucus campaign, drew a taunting reply from GOP rival Steve Forbes.

"Come on, even if people disagree with you, they'll respect you for having a firm stand and believing in principle," Forbes said. "But he ducked it."

The volatile issue has flared in recent days, as anti-abortion forces gird for their annual march in Washington on the anniversary of the court's ruling, and as Iowa prepares to inaugurate the 2000 presidential campaign with its kickoff caucuses.

Bush, who is campaigning as a compassionate conservative, opposes abortion except in cases of rape, incest and where the life of the mother is at stake. But he doesn't emphasize the issue. Forbes does, and hopes to parlay his stand into a second-place finish in next Monday's caucuses.

Fielding questions on abortion for the second day, Bush was asked to clarify his statement Thursday that the 1973 decision legalizing abortion "was a stretch." The Texas governor and GOP presidential front-runner replied: "I felt like it was a case where the court took the place of what the legislatures should do in America."

Asked further what he thought the state legislatures should do, Bush said, "It should be up to each legislature."

His answer remained basically the same each time Bush was asked if he thought Roe vs. Wade should be overturned. "This is a case where the court stepped across its bounds and usurped the right of the legislatures."

Aides later said Bush believes states should have the right to impose strict anti-abortion laws, as they could before Roe vs. Wade. Here in Iowa, Roe vs. Wade overturned just such a law.

Spokeswoman Karen Hughes said Bush's remarks were consistent with his longstated view that the Supreme Court should strictly interpret the Constitution in all cases including abortion, and that such issues should be left to state legislatures and Congress to decide.

Bush's ultimate goal is a constitutional amendment banning abortion — except in cases of rape, incest or danger to the mother's life — which state legislatures as well as Congress would have to approve. Bush has said the country is not ready to pass such a sweeping amendment.

Abortion is a critical issue in the caucuses in Iowa where social conservatives will make up a large chunk of the vote Monday night. One in 10 Republican likely to attend the caucuses say a candidates' "pro-life" views are most important.

Seeking a politically safe way to couch his views, Bush has settled on criticizing the Supreme Court ruling without directly saying that Roe vs. Wade should be overturned.

His challenge is to appease conservatives in the primary campaign without alienating swing voters before the general election in November.

Bush got some unexpected support from rival John McCain. The Arizona senator said he opposes abortion but would accept it in cases of rape, incest or where the mother's life is in danger. Bush holds the same view.

"I believe that Roe v. Wade was a flawed decision, yes, and overreached and that's why I think it should be repealed," McCain said in Greenville, S.C.

With the first voting of the 2000 election set to begin Monday, Bush and his rivals are crisscrossing Iowa in search of votes.

"We've got a good chance, but people should not be complacent," Bush said as he strolled down the street in Grinnell. "That's why I'm working so hard right now, to make sure people hear the call."

In other campaign developments Friday:

—Bush toured the Teen Challenge of the Midlands in Colfax, a center sponsored by religious groups that provides alcohol and drug counseling.

After hearing three men talk about their efforts to overcome their problems, Bush stood before the entire group and said: "I used to drink too much. I quit drinking, and I believe it was because (the Rev.) Billy Graham planted a seed in my heart. ... I want you to know that your life's walk is shared by a lot of other people — even some who wear suits."

—The 30-member Republican Governors Association endorsed Bush's tax-cut plan. The same group recently endorsed Bush's candidacy.

—New Hampshire Sen. Judd Gregg began appearing in an ad praising Bush's tax plan. Gregg said: "Now some say Bush's plan to cut taxes is too much. They believe if you leave money in Washington, it will not be spent. We know better."

PRAYER: Holeva stands by view that abortion is personal choice

(From 1A)

"We are here to pray for an end to abortion and that abortion will end here in the city of Midland as well," apparently referring to the Planned Parenthood of West Texas clinic on East Texas Avenue in Midland.

"He is a very nice man and I respect his views," Planned Parenthood Community Affairs Vice President Carla Holeva said, "but being pro-choice and working for an agency that is pro-choice, I stand by the view that abortion is a personal and private decision that is between a woman, her doctor, and her God.

"I was at the clinic (Friday) morning and … it is amazing the harassment that is put on these women and staff members. They were yelling at me this morning. I was judged and harassed and they didn't know if I was staff or if I was there to get a pap smear. I believe I have a right to (go into the clinic) without harassment and violence. No woman should be yelled at and called names."

Ms. Holeva hoped the inevitable disagreement wouldn't ruin any chance of working together on important issues that can be agreed upon.

"There are many issues out there we are not going to agree on and abortion is one of them. Whether it is religion or personal, you make your own decision if you ever have to make that (abortion) decision. There are things we can agree on such as the end of unintended pregnancy rates, including natural family planning, which is a form of birth control, a respected form of birth control among many religions," she said.

"We need to look at why we are having abortions. How can we address that?"

Pfeifer took a different view.

"Abortion is a crime against humanity," the bishop said, launching a verbal offensive against Roe Vs. Wade, "and thus it is a human rights issue as well as a moral issue."

Pfeifer reminded the crowd that pro-lifers "working to overcome the evil of abortion are to refrain from violence," but he reminded them they "are also to refrain from silence because to know the truth and not speak up is irresponsible," he said.

That abortion is legal and abortion rights are apparently supported by a majority of Americas did not impress Pfeifer either. " … for many people, the difference between good and evil is determined by the opinion of the majority and even the time honored havens of human life — the family, the law and medicine — are sometimes made to serve the culture of death. Bad laws and defective moral reasoning produce the evasive language to justify the evil of abortion."

The bishop also had some tough words for public officials who are of the Catholic faith and have refused to enter the abortion debate because "they cannot force their religious views on the wider society."

Pfeifer said "that is mistaken (because) the point of the beginning of human life is not a religious belief but a scientific fact." He also said that the sanctity of human life is not just a Catholic Church doctrine, "but part of humanity's global, ethical heritage and our nation's founding principle."

Pfeifer said elected officials could not state that "While I am personally opposed to slavery, racism or sexism, I cannot force my personal views on the rest of society."

He insisted that no political leader can avoid accountability for his or her exercise of power "Those who justify their inaction on the grounds that abortion is the law of the land, need to recognize that their is a higher law, the law of God and no human can contradict the commandment 'Thou shall not kill.'"

Unemployment drops to 6.2 percent

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Area unemployment continued to fall in December, according to figures from the Texas Workforce Commission Friday.

For the commission's Odessa-Midland metropolitan statistical area (MSA), the unemployment rate dropped to 6.2 percent from 6.5 percent in November and is below the December 1998 rate of 6.5 percent.

For the city of Midland, the rate dropped to 5.2 percent from 5.6 percent in November but remains above the 4.6 percent reported last December.

"In comparison to last year, this year is off to a faster start," said W.C. Wilson, area manager for the Texas Workforce Center of Midland, who said he saw 750 customers come through the center in early January.

"Everyone made that New Year's resolution to go out and get a job" or a better job, he said, adding that the center is receiving more job orders and he is optimistic for Midland job seekers this year.

James Hughes, branch supervisor with Manpower, said that his office's activity has "definitely" picked up and the corporation's quarterly hiring outlook survey for Midland forecast is for continued increased activity.

"There doesn't seem to be any areas lagging," he said. "We've placed clerical, we've placed professional, we've placed some industrial workers."

He said that the businesses he has talked to have indicated "if oil prices remain steady or continue to rise, job opportunities will be there."

Bob Crawley, labor analyst with the commission in Austin, pointed out that unemployment in Odessa-Midland fell during 1999, "but employment is also down."

The number of employed residents fell to 117,846 from 118,090 in November and is below the 120,722 a year ago. The labor force fell to 125,663 from 126,267 in November and is well below the labor force of 129,120 in December 1998.

"The area is currently doing well," he said, "but is still experiencing effects from the mining industry" which includes the oil and gas industry

In December, the mining sector lost 200 jobs, dropping to 11,300 from 11,500 in November and is 1,100 jobs or 8.9 percent below the 12,400 jobs a year ago.

Odessa-Midland also lost 100 construction jobs, but those job losses were offset by increased hiring in the retail sector as merchants hired for the Christmas season.

Crawley said the area's employment statistics for 1999 held no surprises in light of the downturn in energy prices and the dominance of the mining sector in Midland and Odessa.

"The loss of 200 jobs in mining indicates the industry is still going through some belt-tightening," he said. "If prices remain stable, we should see gains in jobs early in the year to mid-year. I've seen moves to stabilize oil prices, which will allow the industry to reset itself. It will take awhile for the industry to adjust to current price levels."

Statewide, the unemployment rate held at 4.2 percent in December and represents the lowest rate in 20 years.

Gasoline additive poses cruel choice: Clean air or clean water?

By John Howard
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — It smells like turpentine and spreads through water so quickly and thoroughly that a scant spoonful can foul an Olympic-sized swimming pool.

MTBE, a widely used gasoline additive that makes cars burn cleaner, has posed a cruel dilemma: It's making the air cleaner, but it's polluting the water.

A suspected animal carcinogen with unknown health effects on humans, MTBE has become the curse of water officials from California to New England.

Leaking from gas stations' underground fuel tanks, it has forced wells to close, run up millions of dollars in cleanup costs, sparked lawsuits and prompted state, local and federal investigations into a petrochemical that is still something of a mystery.

"It's a diabolical chemical. It moves up, it moves down, it moves everywhere. Our feeling is that as long as MTBE is in gasoline, our groundwater is in jeopardy," said Dennis Cocking of the South Tahoe Public Utility District, where 12 of 34 wells were closed because of MTBE.

MTBE has two critical characteristics — its ability to spread quickly, caused by its high solubility, and its permanency. Even in its tiniest proportions, five parts per billion, MTBE has an easily detectable smell.

"The stuff moves like wildfire. It increases exponentially. Once you find out you have a problem, you have a big problem. And once it's in, how do you get it out?" said Doug Marsano of the Denver-based American Water Works Association, a consortium of water agencies that has urged President Clinton to ban MTBE.

According to Marsano, the chemical has been detected in varying amounts in all 50 states. Significant MTBE contamination also has been found in such pastoral areas as Ronan, Mont., and Spring Green, Wis., as well as in major cities like Dallas, Denver and Las Vegas.

"You can see it in a contiguous line from California to the East Coast. One of the great questions here is why a chemical that we don't have a lot of information about is being used in such a widespread manner," Marsano said. "At this point, we think it is a problem in every state, but just how significant a problem we don't know."

A European study in the mid-1990s linked MTBE to liver and kidney tumors in mice. The danger to humans is unknown.

"At the levels we're seeing in drinking water, there is no direct human study that shows cause and effect. The studies being used to assess risk are essentially studies being done on animals," said California's top drinking water official, Dr. Dave Spath of the Department of Health Services. "But the problem with MTBE is whether there is a significant future threat because of all these tanks that have leaked over many years."

As a result, California — the nation's No. 1 user of MTBE, with about 11 percent of all fuel containing the substance — has banned it by the end of 2002, and other states are expected to follow suit. Eight Northeastern states from New Jersey to Maine joined to ask Congress to allow them to decide whether MTBE or similar clean-air additives should be put in their gasoline.

And an Environmental Protection Agency panel has recommended strengthening programs to reduce MTBE's presence in drinking water.

The MTBE industry defends the additive.

"Because of cleaner-burning gasoline with MTBE, cities like Los Angeles are enjoying their best air quality in 50 years," said Terry Wigglesworth, executive director of the Oxygenated Fuels Association. "MTBE has not only met, but exceeded expectations."

MTBE, called an oxygenate because it adds oxygen to gasoline, was developed by oil companies in the 1970s to boost octane and replace lead. Smog fighters noticed that MTBE improved gasoline combustion and dramatically reduced tailpipe pollution, in some cases up to 40 percent.

Following the passage of the Clean Air Act in 1990, federal authorities ordered the phase-in of oxygenates in gasoline sold in the nation's smoggiest urban areas.

MTBE became the oxygenate of choice. The other best-known oxygenate, ethanol, is a type of alcohol made from corn and is used widely in the Midwest. Supporters of ethanol see it as safer; MTBE backers dispute that.

MTBE, or methyl tertiary butyl ether, is now found in the fuel consumed by 70 percent of the nation's cars. About 4.5 billion gallons of the additive are manufactured annually.

In Santa Monica, hit first and hardest by major MTBE contamination in 1995, the substance leaked into the water supply from the underground tanks of at least a dozen gas stations.

The city of 92,000 has shut down at least half of its wells and is now importing most of its water from Southern California's main wholesaler. The city believes the cleanup could cost $100 million.

"It was quite astounding," said Assistant City Attorney Joe Lawnce. "It went from a low of 20 ppb to a high of 600 ppb. Once it leaked out, it created havoc with the drinking water."

Glennville, a scenic mountain town of 300 in the Sierra Nevada, was devastated by the MTBE that spread into its water supply from a single leaking underground tank. The contamination registered 20,000 ppb.

"Even the ice had a strange odor," Lori Jauch said. "In the very beginning, when they came up and told us what was happening, I think everybody in the community was shocked. They had one meeting, and everybody was upset."

Voting group seeks to block Internet primary

PHOENIX (AP) — A Virginia-based voting group filed a federal lawsuit Friday in an attempt to block Arizona's Democrats from holding the nation's Internet presidential primary.

The lawsuit, filed by the Voting Integrity Project, alleges that voting by computer would hurt minorities and the poor.

"A large number of voters, especially minority voters, lack computers or access to the Internet," said one of the plaintiffs, Arizona Democrat Olivia Lizarraga-Bussey. "Our voices will not be heard like others."

Arizona Democrats are scheduled to hold their presidential primary March 11.

Online voting from personal computers at home, work or elsewhere is planned from 12:01 a.m. March 7 until 11:59 p.m. March 10.

Traditional paper ballots and computer terminals will be available at each of the 50 polling places statewide.

Deborah Phillips, president of the Voting Integrity Project, said people who don't have access to a personal computer may have to travel long distances to vote because so few polling places will be available.

Arizona Democratic Party Chairman Mark Fleisher said he has worked with minority legislators and the state's Indian tribes regarding polling place locations to make sure those groups can participate. Fleisher said the party will fight the lawsuit.

Teen boy faces adult charges in baby's death

ROCKFORD, Ill. (AP) — A 14-year-old boy accused of sexually assaulting his 13-month-old niece and feeding her a bottle poisoned with windshield washer fluid was transferred to adult court Friday to face murder and other charges that could put him in prison for life.

Juvenile Court Judge Steven Nash cited Braxton Bowers' history of arson and the "fundamentally brutal, vicious crimes" he is charged with in the Dec. 6 death of Amber Bauer.

"I don't know that rehabilitation is possible for this young man if he did these crimes," Nash said.

The chubby-faced boy bowed his head during much of the hearing and left without comment. He remains held in a juvenile facility. His parents and Amber's parents left without comment.

The most serious punishment he could have gotten as a juvenile was incarceration in a juvenile facility until age 21. If convicted as an adult, he could be sent to a juvenile facility until age 17, then serve the rest of his life in an adult prison.

According to prosecutors and police, the teen was baby-sitting Amber and her 4-year-old sister for several hours when the baby scratched him while he was changing her diaper. He allegedly mixed windshield washer fluid with juice in a bottle and gave it to her.

Defense attorney Adam Brenner argued the boy did not know the fluid would kill Amber.

Bradley's irregular heartbeat makes for difficult campaign

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Bill Bradley's latest revelation about his heart condition is one more setback for an underdog campaign that can't afford to skip a beat.

His medical condition — which is not life-threatening — flared up as polls showed him far behind just before Iowa's caucuses and slipping in New Hampshire, New York and Massachusetts. Those early voting states are central in Bradley's strategy to upset Vice President Al Gore.

"He's having a rough time, and it's a bad time to have a rough time," said Democratic consultant Ray Strother of Washington.

His hand forced by a reporter's question, the former New Jersey senator confirmed days before Iowa's caucuses that an irregular heartbeat had recurred four times since he first revealed the condition in December.

Bradley said the condition would have no impact on his campaign and tried to change the topic to his get-out-the vote effort. "You can't control what a heart does, so the timing is irrelevant," said spokesman Eric Hauser.

The timing was relevant to Iowa Democrats who were talking about Bradley's health — not his health care plan — three days before the first contest of the presidential race.

"If he has a problem and it's something that won't go away, I think maybe in the long run he ought to say, 'I've got other things to do. I don't need the stress of being president,'" Joyce Brown, a 59-year-old Democrat, said between sips of coffee at a Colfax diner.

The issue consumed Bradley's campaign Friday. Reporters shouted questions at a jam-packed news conference and during a walking tour of heavily Republican Muscatine.

Even a friendly audience of 50 backers yielded a question that went right to the heart of the matter: What's this we hear about your health?

"Several million Americans have it," Bradley replied. "It's a common condition. It's a nuisance for me and it shouldn't be a concern for you."

"I wanted him to reassure me," said crowd member Bonnie Weeks. "I feel reassured."

Bradley's advisers and non-allied Democrats said they expect most voters to shrug off the news — but only after the campaign takes another hit. "I still think it's a one-day story," Strother said. "But he's got other problems."

In Iowa, Bradley's campaign has little chance of winning Monday's caucuses and aides now fear a blowout. Polls have consistently shown him 20 points or more behind.

In New Hampshire, a tracking poll gave Gore a nine-point lead and the vice president's own surveys showed him leading Bradley for the first time in weeks. A Time/CNN poll showed Gore ahead by 7 percentage points.

Both campaigns still expect the Feb. 1 primary to be a tossup, but Bradley doesn't want Gore to leave Iowa with momentum.

In the political community, activists who glowed about Bradley's insurgent campaign weeks ago are now wondering whether his team can handle the pressure of a national campaign.

Bradley himself has yet to prove he can retain his political base in New Hampshire — a state that traditionally takes a second and third look at the field in the frenzied final week of campaigning.

"I think he may be suffering from overexposure," Strother said.

Some analysts, including Bradley backers, trace his political troubles to a string of attacks on Gore that seemed out of character for a candidate who pledged not to play by the old rules of politics. A fumbled debate question about agriculture also staggered his Iowa campaign for several days.

Though still professing confidence about New Hampshire, Bradley's campaign is hedging its bets by looking ahead to a batch of March 7 primaries — several of which are in Northeast states that could favor the former New Jersey senator.

Elian's grandmothers fly into New York, appeal for his return

NEW YORK (AP) — Elian Gonzalez's grandmothers flew to New York from Cuba on Friday to appeal for his return, saying the boy's late mother will not "rest in peace" until the 6-year-old boy is back in his homeland.

"Respect the memory of my daughter," said the boy's maternal grandmother, Raquel Rodriguez.

She and the boy's paternal grandmother, Mariela Quintana, flew with a church delegation that has supported Elian's return over the objections of Cuban immigrants and the boy's relatives in Miami.

The women chose to avoid Miami, at least for now, and take their message to the nation's media capital. It was not immediately clear how long they were staying in the United States; people who organized the trip said it will only be a few days.

Attorney General Janet Reno and her aides were considering a request that she meet with the grandmothers, Justice Department spokesman Myron Marlin said. The boy's relatives in Florida invited the grandmothers to visit.

Elian was found clinging to an inner tube off the coast of Florida on Nov. 25 after the boat on which he was heading for the United States capsized, killing his mother and 10 other people. He has been living with relatives in Miami, who say he would have a better life in the United States. They are challenging a government ruling that he must go back.

"I know that many say that it was Elian's mother's will that the child remain here," Ms. Rodriguez said in Spanish. "I speak for her because I was her mother, I know what she thought and how she acted. She came here because her husband was very violent and threatened her.

"I ask and beg those who are interested in helping us, to do everything possible so that the child will be handed over to us, his grandmothers, so that my daughter may rest in peace."

The two women, greeted by a small party of Customs officials and police, winced as they endured a whipping wind and 16-degree cold for their short walk into a terminal at Kennedy Airport.

"I came here to tell you all and to ask you to finish this tragedy that has been so hard for us as a family, and to ask you that our grandson can return as soon as possible," Mrs. Quintana said.

"Nobody has a right to make him an American citizen. He was born in Cuba. He is a Cuban."

Mrs. Quintana also said that Elian, in telephone conversations with her and with his father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, had expressed a desire to return to Cuba. The boy's Miami relatives claim the boy has said he wants to remain in the United States.

The Miami relatives' lead attorney, Spencer Eig, said he was not impressed by the grandmothers' emotional appeal. Eig said the women's information about the case came almost entirely from the communist government.

Eig repeated the Miami relatives' invitation to the grandmothers to come to Miami for a reunion and said his clients would not go to New York to meet with the women.

"We're concerned that they're being taken advantage of to some degree," Eig said. "If they got a chance to see how well he is doing, it might relieve all their anxiety."

The Immigration and Naturalization Service has ordered Elian returned to his father. But attorneys for the family in Florida have asked a federal judge to prevent his return before he has an asylum hearing.

A senator from Florida is sponsoring legislation that would allow Elian to have U.S. citizenship. The bill by GOP Sen. Connie Mack will be filed Monday and could come up for a vote as soon as Wednesday, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said.

"It will be a custody issue, not an immigration issue, and that's the only intent," Lott said during an interview on "John McLaughlin's One on One" to be aired Sunday on PBS. "It would not allow the administration to blow back and forth depending on what Castro says, but it would allow the courts to determine custody."

Also Friday, the federal judge who was to hear the lawsuit by the boy's Miami relatives withdrew from the case.

Judge James Lawrence King's son, Miami-Dade County Judge Lawrence B. King, once hired Armando Gutierrez — a man now working as spokesman for the boy's relatives in Miami — to help in his re-election bid. King also has a daughter who is a federal prosecutor in Miami.

The case was reassigned to Judge William M. Hoeveler, who presided over the trial of Manuel Noriega and declared the ex-Panamanian dictator a prisoner of war.

Train fire forces mass evacuation

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — A train car caught fire in a rail yard and spewed burning propane Friday, closing schools and forcing hundreds of people to evacuate their homes for fear of an explosion.

There were no immediate reports of injuries.

It wasn't known what sparked the fire. The train was passing through the CSX yard when a railroad employee spotted flames shooting from a valve used to relieve pressure in the tankers.

At least 500 people were evacuated within a mile of the yard, Fire Chief Theron Wiggins said. A stretch of Interstate 475 was closed.

Fire officials said initially they feared the fire threatened a half-million gallons of propane in nearby freight cars. But crews managed to uncouple the others from the burning tank, which contained about 33,000 gallons of liquid propane.

It was unclear whether authorities would let the propane burn itself out or whether they would attempt to extinguish the blaze.

Prison releases FBI's former most-wanted hacker

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After five years behind bars, one of the nation's most notorious computer hackers was released Friday under the requirement that he keep his hands off computers, modems, cell phones and anything else that could give him Internet access for the next three years.

Kevin Mitnick, 36, allegedly caused millions of dollars of damage by hacking into corporate and university computers. He was once the FBI's most wanted hacker.

Shortly after driving away from the Federal Correctional Institute in Lompoc with family members, Mitnick stopped at a park and read a statement, accusing prosecutors and the media of exaggerating his crimes and hindering his ability to present a legal defense.

"My crimes were simple crimes of trespass," Mitnick said. "My case is a case of curiosity. I wanted to know as much as I could find out about how phone networks worked, and the ins and outs of computer security."

His lawyer said Mitnick wants to enroll in college and study — what else? — computer technology.

That won't be easy under the terms of his parole — he must stay away from any electronic devices that would give him access to the Internet.

"If you read it literally, he would probably have to stand in one place for three years," attorney Donald Randolph said.

Randolph said he would try to persuade probation officials to allow Mitnick enough access to computers to let him pursue his studies. Mitnick initially plans to live with his father in Los Angeles.

Mitnick allegedly caused companies and institutions millions of dollars by stealing their software and altering computer information. Victims included such companies as Motorola, Novell, Nokia and Sun Microsystems, and the University of Southern California.

Prosecutors said he sometimes gained access to computers by impersonating company employees in order to obtain codes and passwords.

His expertise and punishment made him an icon among hackers. One Web site has counted the days and hours until his release.

Mitnick violated probation on a hacking charge in 1992 and went underground. Authorities finally caught up with him in 1995 in a Raleigh, N.C., apartment.

Mass killer set for execution amid protests

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press

HUNTSVILLE — Larry Robison, convicted and condemned for a 1982 rampage that left five people dead, headed to the Texas death chamber Friday despite protests that he is not competent enough to be executed — a debate that involved Texas Gov. George W. Bush.

However, the 42-year-old Air Force veteran has said for months that he is ready to die so he can get off Texas death row.

"I've never denied my part in it, or tried to excuse myself or avoid the responsibility," he said in an interview last summer.

Robison's death by lethal injection would be the fourth this year. Three more are scheduled in January, which would make it the second busiest month in the Texas death chamber since eight convicted murderers were killed in June 1997.

His mother, anti-death penalty activist Lois Robison, has been backed by a chorus ranging from the Vatican to the European Union to mental health activists in saying that Robison's history of mental illness should preclude him from execution.

"This is why so many mentally ill people are executed. They are easy to execute because they don't understand even their own illness so many times," Ms. Robison said. "There is so much stigma in this country about the mentally ill."

Greg Pipes, the Tarrant County assistant district attorney who convicted Robison in his second trial, counters that Robison is an intelligent man who brought any mental problems upon himself with reckless drug use.

"The fact that a person can be identified as being mentally ill doesn't mean he can't function," Pipes said this week. "A lot of paranoid schizophrenics, if he is one, function in society without giving in to the urge to decapitate, emasculate and cannibalize, then go next door and kill four more people."

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1986 that the mentally ill may be executed if they understand the punishment and know why they are receiving it. Robison has said he comprehends both questions.

"I'm real excited about it (execution) and glad to be leaving hee," he said in the days before a postponed death date last summer.

Robison came within 4 1/2 hours of execution on Aug. 17 when the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals called it off to study his competence one last time. That spared Bush from having to decide whether to delay the execution.

The condemned man's relatives and death penalty opponents had earlier demanded that Bush, running for president as a "compassionate conservative," show his compassion by postponing the punishment.

Robison was found fit for execution a few weeks later and the date was rescheduled.

The Abilene native has forgone any remaining appeals. The Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles voted unanimously on Wednesday to deny his clemency petition, meaning Robison's last chance would be a one-time, 30-day pardon by the governor's office.

Lt. Gov. Rick Perry is acting in place of Bush, who was on the presidential campaign trail. Perry had taken no action as of midday Friday.

Robison never denied having committed the shooting and stabbing deaths that littered two rural Lake Worth cottages with bodies.

Robison's homosexual lover and roommate, 31-year-old Rickey Lee Bryant, was shot twice in the head, decapitated, slashed eight times and stabbed 49 times. Bryant's genitalia were found in the kitchen sink; Robison is thought to have ingested some of the tissue.

Robison, allegedly in search of a getaway vehicle, went next door and mutilated, shot or stabbed Bruce Gardner, 33; Georgia Ann Reed, 34; Earline Barker, 55; and Ms. Reed's 11-year-old son, Scott.

"This obviously was the act of a deranged person," Ms. Robison said.

Robison pleaded innocent by reason of insanity but a jury found him guilty of capital murder for Gardner's slaying and sentenced him to death. The conviction was overturned because of a jury-selection error.

In 1987, Robison was retried, convicted and again sentenced to die.

Houston toads get $1.64 million wetlands home

AUSTIN (AP) — It's should be easier being green after the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission voted to spend $1.64 million to help save the endangered Houston toad.

The two-inch, brown and green toads will get another 1,000 acres of wetlands next to Bastrop State Park in a land purchase from the nonprofit Nature Conservancy of Texas.

"This purchase is a major step in providing long-term protection for the Houston toad," said Lisa O'Donnell, biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. "We are losing habitat at an unprecedented rate. Within a few years, we might not have this opportunity."

The land purchase is part of the service's plan to assemble 15,000 acres in Bastrop County for the toads. The existing park and the new land make up about 4,000 acres.

The Nature Conservancy bought the land this winter at the request of the Parks and Wildlife Department. The department did not have the money at the time, said Mike Herring, who coordinates its land deals.

Herring said the Parks and Wildlife Department paid the same price, $1.64 million, that the Nature Conservancy did. The agency's board announced approval of the deal on Friday.

The Houston toad was first discovered near Houston, hence the name, but has not been seen there since the 1960s. It has been on the endangered species list since 1970.

The largest population in Texas is in Bastrop County, about 2,000 animals, according to Parks and Wildlife officials. Small groups of toads live in seven other counties.

"There are toads there," Herring said the newly purchased land, which will soon have hiking trails. "We are going to manage it and improve it so there will be even more there in the future."

The toad needs wetlands and sandy soil to survive, two conditions that are in short supply as cities continue expanding.

Andy Price, a toad expert with the Parks and Wildlife Department, said the animals cannot reproduce when wetlands are drained to make way for suburbs.

Turning the wetlands into permanent ponds and lakes does not help. The permanent water attracts fish and snakes that eat the toads. "Other species invade," Price said.

Even small amounts of construction in the toad's habitat can attract one it its new enemies, fire ants. The ants move in when then ground is disturbed, spread out and sting young toads to death.

Price concedes that spending a million dollars to the save the toads might not pass muster in a strict cost-benefit analysis. But that is not the point, he said.

Stream in the Desert

Vacant store to be site of spiritual retreat

■ Golf Course Road Church of Christ to rent Builders Square for annual event.

By Johnnye Montgomery
Religion Writer

Stream in the Desert, sponsored by Golf Course Road Church of Christ, has all the best elements of a spiritual retreat, an old-fashioned revival, a family reunion and a Christian music concert all in one weekend.

Spokesman Kyle McGraw says this will be the fifth year Golf Course Road has staged the event and will be the largest, thanks in large part to the generosity of Kmart Corp., owner of the Builders Square facility where Stream in the Desert will be presented Feb. 4-6.

"We have always had the weekend at our church, and last year, with 2,600 attendance, we were probably straining the fire code, so we had been looking everywhere for a larger facility," McGraw explained.

"Friday two weeks ago, we had already received 3,150 registrations, and we'd decided that on Monday, we'd have to return any further applications. (Then) we received word from Kmart Corp. that they were going to let us rent Builders Square.

"This was a difficult thing for (Kmart) to do, when it would have been easier just to say no. We'd been trying for months and months to get this facility, and God provided it."

McGraw said the 108,000-square-foot building will allow for attendance of approximately 4,000, and will be divided by 500 linear feet of 22-foot-high curtains to arrange for a large worship area at one end, with tables for small group meetings at the other end.

Named for the Isaiah 35:6 passage that states "Water will gush forth in the wilderness and streams in the desert," the concept is similar to Walk to Emmaus, or to Cursillo, where participants are given a 2 1/2 day loving immersion in the principles of Christianity. The difference is that in Golf Course Road's event there is more flexibility of scheduling, and entire families may attend.

"When I went on my Walk to Emmaus, I came home just walking on air," said McGraw. "Here I'd had this wonderful experience, and my wife had been staying home taking care of the kids. With this spiritual weekend, husbands and wives go together, and we'll bus the kids to Golf Course Road Church of Christ, where they'll have programs provided by a group from Texas A&M, called Aggies for Christ, along with about 40 college students from Abilene Christian University. This is all being coordinated by Lavica Anderson of Midland."

There will be a nursery at Builders Square for the convenience of parents who have babies and very small children.

Registration fee for the three-day event is $15 and children need to be registered to attend the programs at the church.

The program, which this year features Abilene preacher Mike Cope, will begin the evening of Feb. 4 with registration and a praise session, followed by

Church offers hope to abandoned babies

By Pat Reber
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Door of Hope. He wore only a diaper marked "Johannesburg Hospital."

His slight weight on a cushioned metal box triggered a buzzer. Staff quickly fetched the live parcel, wrapped him in warm clothing and put him firmly on life's uncertain path.

In a city where about a dozen infants a year are found dead after being left in a garbage bin or out in the open, one church has turned to the baby chute as a way to save lives.

Since August, four newborns have been dropped anonymously through the oversized mail slot cut in the security wall at the Berea Baptist Mission Church in Hillbrow, a rough, downtrodden neighborhood where gunshots echo even in daylight.

South African law calls for up to five years imprisonment for child abandonment. But police say they tolerate the Door of Hope operation because it's preferable to risking a baby's life.

"It is traumatic enough giving up your baby without feeling the police are coming to get you," said Cheryl Allen, a nurse-midwife and pastor who heads the Door of Hope.

"We try to put them up for adoption," she said. But if the babies are not adopted, the church and its members intend to raise the children.

"To me it is a sacred trust. When they bring the baby to me, they're giving it to the church," Ms. Allen said.

Welfare officials question Ms. Allen's approach because it complicates adoption procedures by failing to get mothers' release of adoption rights.

"I have mixed feelings about the Door of Hope," said Kay McCrindle at the Johannesburg Child Welfare Society. "While I admire their efforts to protect children who are literally being left, I think in the long run it's not the best option for the child."

Ms. Allen said an additional 10 infants have arrived at the Door of Hope since August either in the arms of their mothers, who usually signed over adoption rights, or with hospital workers. An 18-month-old girl also was dropped off for temporary care while the mother sorted out her life.

Door of Hope has room to care for six babies. Ms. Allen enlists friends and others in the religious community to provide temporary places for excess numbers until their adoption status can be sorted out. She would like to build an orphanage for 200 children, but the government's emphasis is now on foster care.

Area churches plan Souper Bowl on Super Bowl Sunday

By Johnnye Montgomery
Religion Writer

How do churches deal with Super Bowl Sunday? Start services early? Shorten the sermon? Or hitch their ecclesiastical wagons to a star-studded event to benefit the needy?

Several area churches will be doing just that in conjunction with Souper Bowl of Caring. Parishioners wil be asked to give a little on their way out the doors of their churches on Super Bowl Sunday.

The seeds of the Souper Bowl of Caring were planted in 1988 when Brad Smith, a seminary intern at Spring Valley Presbyterian in Columbia S.C., was preparing a pastoral prayer to be delivered on Super Bowl Sunday.

"Lord, as we enjoy the Super Bowl football game, help us be mindful of those who are without even a bowl of soup to eat," Smith wrote. Later he found that he couldn't get the prayer out of his mind. He thought how good it would be to use the occasion of the Super Bowl to help the hungry, perhaps by making an appeal to parishioners of churches to give $1 each for the hungry as they left the church on Super Bowl Sunday.

When he completed seminary and was called back to Spring Valley Church as associate pastor in 1990, Smith approached the Senior High Youth of the church with the idea.

They contacted other church youth groups in the area, and began to spread the word. On Super Bowl Sunday, youth group members were stationed at the exits of their churches with soup pots to hold the dollars. They collected $5,700 from 22 local congregations of seven different denominations and from local businesses interested in furthering the cause. The money collected was given by each participating congregation to a charity of its choosing.

News of the event spread through church newsletters and community newspapers, and in 1991, 146 churches across the state participated. In 1993, the first national Souper Bowl took place, with 885 congregations from 30 states raising $144,000.

The 1999 Souper Bowl generated $2.5 million. This year's goal is to collect $3.5 million to be given to charities throughout the United States.

Pam Morgan, of Big Spring's First Presbyterian Church, said their youth group has participated for the last four years.

"For two Sundays prior to Super Bowl, our kids do a 'Minute for Missions' during the worship services, and then on Super Bowl Sunday, they do the collection," she said.

First Presbyterian asks that parishioners bring either a can of soup or a dollar, or both.

"At first, we gave it to Northside Community Center, and then last year we gave to the Salvation Army," Ms. Morgan said."It's something that's easy to do, and it's really a good experience for the kids."

LESLIE WILLIAMS

Plan on living it up until time comes to move from this life to the next

The lice epidemic that swept through Texas playgrounds three summers ago brought new meaning to phrases I'd used carelessly, flippantly, ignorantly. That was before I spent much of that summer under a shadeless lamp scouring my daughter's scalp, hair by hair, with an instrument to garner eggs smaller than the human eye can see (even with high-powered bifocals).

Williams

"Nit-picking.

"Fine-tooth comb."

I will never use these phrases again without recalling my daughter's sobs, my own frustration and the peculiar smell of lye or whatever nasty stuff that shampoo contains to kill the little critters.

The millennium and all the accompanying hoopla gave new meaning to another cliche I've bandied about without thinking: "This is the first day of the rest of your life."

First of all, for those who stayed up until 12:01 Jan. 1, we realized that the rapture didn't whisk all the holy away. My family spent the first few moments of the new millennium at church, and surely someone among our crowd would have disappeared.

Second, it means that we're the second generation since Jesus that has ushered in a unit of time as big as a millennium. On the eve of the first one, the Anglo-Saxons had just finished writing "Beowulf" (scourge of American 10th-grade English classes), and those warriors and maidens probably spent New Year's Eve swaying glasses of mead in their great halls. They had nothing to fear but the night and the marauding Danes.

This go-round, our fears are more sophisticated. Even though most computers made it through Y2K, we still suffer the threatening possibility of a worldwide shut down with just one truly effective computer glitch.

Not to mention marauding teens.

As a child, I calculated that I would turn 49 in the year 2000. Forty-nine! People that old might as well be dead.

Perspective changes, thank goodness. Though I'm creakier, blinder and deafer, the days still bring gifts. Not the smell of bacon I used to wake up to, but a strong cup of vanilla nut coffee to get me going; not the challenge of learning fractions and long division, but the more difficult challenge of helping a fourth-grader with math homework already beyond my capabilities.

A milestone as big as a millennium gives us pause. On the one hand, we simply moved from one moment into the next as we always do in the grand march of time. On the other hand, it was a grander moment than most. We wondered , "Is this the moment? Will Christ choose this moment to come back?"

Not this go-round. Oh, well. Back to the routine. I'm almost used to writing 00 on all my checks, but a part of me doesn't want to lose the pre-millennium wonder. As the days parade by in all the cock-eyed glory life offers us, haunting us with tunes that linger long after the crowds have dispersed, it is well to watch carefully.

We do not know the moment we will step from one side of the street to the other, from this life to the next. The millennium posed the possibility of a mass exodus into paradise instead of the one-by-one passage we must now otherwise make.

"This is the first day of the rest of your life." The good news is that whether we live or die, we are the Lord's. Like the moment between 1999 and 2000, we, too, will have a moment when we move from life to life.

In the meantime, I plan to live it up, hugging my children, laughing until my face hurts and eating black-eyed peas every chance I get. Those who love Jesus Christ can't lose, no matter what.

a message, reflection and prayer, and end by dividing into small groups for more intimate discussion. The Feb. 4 session is designed as a leadership conference, with discussions on the needs of clergy and other church leaders.

McGraw said the leadership conference was added with the 1997 weekend.

"We had a lot of preachers and church leaders from small churches in outlying areas who wanted to come at a time when they could have some time one-on-one with the speaker."

The Feb. 5 schedule begins with a sunrise family devotional time, followed by breakfast and fellowship, then praise, the message by Cope, reflections and prayer, and a subsequent series of breakout discussion. These sessions by sharing groups will be around tables adjacent to the worship area.

"Some people are intimidated by the small group sessions and we wanted to make this transition as easy as possible," McGraw said.

" In the past, we had to arrange for people to go to different rooms for the sharing, and for some, it was just easier not to go, but this year, we'll just raise the curtains and they can go right to their preassigned tables.

"If people will just go, the small groups can be very healing. They get a lot of benefit, and form lasting bonds. My wife and I still exchange Christmas cards with members of our small groups. We've received some wonderful comments. ..."

Participants will have a two-hour break for lunch, followed by a session that will follow the same general format as the morning's.

After supper, participants will reconvene for a special address, "In the Footsteps of Jesus," by actor Bruce Marchiano, who played Jesus in "The Gospel According to Matthew."

Contemporary Christian pianist George Roe will perform after the communion service until about 11 p.m.

The finale Feb. 6 includes praise and worship led by Ken Young and the Hallal Music teams to augment Cope's final message.

McGraw said the curtain walls will be moved back to accommodate the 4,000 or more expected to attend the Sunday service.

"This could very well be the largest worship service ever held in Midland," he said.

Over the years, the weekend event has grown to become a once-a-year destination for church groups from 21 states and 150 Texas cities, including the Ulysses, Kan., congregation of 15 families who were flown in on a charter plane in past years and the 13 families from Nacogdoches who come on a bus every year.

There have been some logistical problems in staging Stream in the Desert 2000.

McGraw said that in order to accommodate the crowd, Golf Course Road has gone to outlying towns as far away as Lubbock.

"There weren't 5,000 chairs available in Midland," he explained. "There weren't near enough restrooms at Builders Square. We're bringing in additional Porto-Potties, and we're hoping to get additional curtains from the Chamber of Commerce."

Then there is also the problem of how to follow an act like this.

"I know that we won't be able to make this arrangement with Kmart next year," said McGraw. "The Builders Square will be sold by then, and I don't know what we'll do.

"But God provided, through the generosity of Kmart, this year, and I know that when all's said and done, he's going to provide next year."

BOWL: Souper drive supplements other fund-raisers

(From 1B)

Church of Midland, said Memorial began the program last year.

"The funds we raise, we keep at Memorial for our weekly food pantry, which helps about 50 families each week," he said. "We're open each Wednesday, and clients can come once a month if need be. We spend about $25,000 on our food pantry annually, and our only fund-raiser other than Souper Bowl is our annual 'Beans and Jeans' dinner in September.

"We also do an in-kind food drive the first Sunday of every month," Tuck said. "But this drive could help a lot. One of our members is arranging a competition among our Sunday school classes to help in this effort."

Trinity Presbyterian Church of Midland has participated since 1996. Two United Methodist Churches in Odessa, Highland UMC and Asbury UMC, and Means Memorial UMC in Andrews also have participated.

Independent of the Souper Bowl of Caring, yet akin to it, and with the identical goal of ministry, is the local Souper Bowl pledge drive staged by participating member churches of Area Missions Outreach Services.

Parishioners are asked to pledge either $1 or one hour's volunteer time per week in support of AMOS.

AMOS director, Mary Helen Metts, said the pledges range anywhere from a flat amount, paid immediately, to weekly amounts that church members bring by in cash.

"We are supported in so many ways that it's hard to say what an average pledge is," she said. "Often, people will bring in the blank pledge card along with a check and say, 'you can use this again next year, so you won't have to spend money on printing,' and we do. We do everything we can to use our dollars for our clients."

The Souper Bowl of Caring Web site, which contains posters to download and relevant information, is kept up to date.

The address is www.souperbowl.com.

DOOR: Church distributes posters

(From 1B)

To spread the word about the Door of Hope, the church distributed pamphlets and posters with a large X over a garbage can. The paper shows how to tie off the umbilical cord and guarantees anonymity.

South Africa has nearly 1.8 million abandoned children of all ages, a 75 percent increase over 1990, the South African National Council for Child and Family Welfare says.

Decades of apartheid laws forced men to leave their villages for jobs and ate away the traditional African extended family. Further erosion has come from Africa's AIDS epidemic, with nearly 10 percent of the country's 42 million people estimated to be infected with the AIDS virus.

Andrew, the baby who arrived in the slot in late November, is HIV positive. Babies infected with the virus usually are transferred to special shelters since they are hard to place in foster homes.

But Andrew miraculously found a temporary home in Pretoria.

Pam and Bill Rapier, American missionaries from Colorado Springs, Colo., had for years resisted pleas from their grown children to adopt a baby, saying grandchildren would fulfill that need someday.

Then they heard Andrew needed a home. It was a message from God, Mrs. Rapier said.

"We said all along that God would really have to bring a baby to us," she said.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, Jan. 22, 2000:

Go with the flow and take advantage of opportunities this year. Many possibilities are put on your plate. Pick and choose carefully. You have a naturally appealing manner; others gravitate toward you. Communication is pleasant, though at times the activity can be excessive. You might buy a new vehicle and spend more than you intended. You will love it, though! If you are single, romance surrounds you. You'll enjoy having so much of it in your life, but you could choose someone who disillusions you. Be selective. If attached, you enter one of the most romantic years of your life. You see each other in a brand-new light. LEO adores you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Be spontaneous. You'll add zest to your life as well as another's. Your laughter adds a lot to the moment. Make a long-distance call. Reach out for others. Invite a loved one to join you on a day trip and do some midwinter exploring. Tonight: Play the night away.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Emphasis is on family and the pursuit of happiness. Be willing to share more of yourself. A partner or close relative adds his personal touch to your life. Making an extra effort counts for a lot, in your book. Let feelings flow. Tonight: Cozy at home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Reach out for friends. Make plans, but they don't have to be complicated. You love browsing and chatting together. Catch up on news and bond your relationship even more deeply. You don't have to work for togetherness. Tonight: Out and about.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ You tend to go to extremes, and right now you are in the mood to indulge and live life to its fullest. Spending can get out of whack. You seem willing to do more than your share to get where you need to be. Pace yourself. Tonight: Enjoy the moment.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Invite others to join you and take off for an escape. Whether you hop in the car or go to the movies, you'll recharge in a different environment. Another reaches out to you. Be responsive. Find out how life is treating someone close. Tonight: It is your call.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Take the day off. Make time for an important partner in your life. In a quiet environment, you can relax together. You have a great time on your own as well! You can come up with many ways to amuse yourself, whether solo or with another. Tonight: Do your thing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Aim for what you want. Allow another to give you important feedback. Understanding is enhanced because of an important conversation. Naturally, you put your best foot forward. Another responds in kind. Tonight: Make the most of the moment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Accept others' attention. You could be very busy taking care of everyone else. Responsibilities might feel heavy, but in many ways you enjoy making others happy. Consider a new exercise and health plan now that the holidays are over. Tonight: Bring others together.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Your efforts gain another's appreciation, and you feel well-rewarded. Plan an outing doing something you both love. Indulge in a favorite pastime or a special hobby. You feel like a kid again when you're together. Enjoy the moment. Tonight: Share a dream.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ One-on-one relating brings a lot of happiness and caring. Build on what you have together. Family and home life bring rewards. Check out an investment or a piece of property. If single, you could be thinking about making a commitment. Tonight: Let it all hang out.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Let others discuss what is on their minds. A whole new panorama spills out in front of you. You enjoy getting to know others in a new and vital light. Recharge your relationships by getting to know those close to you again. You feel renewed. Tonight: Out together, but it feels like a first date.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You cannot seem to refrain from living the good life on your terms. Be careful with spending unless you have done some unusual planning. Everything is possible if you plan. Talk about goals with a dear friend whose judgment you respect. Tonight: Whatever you do, make it easy!

DeMille to get his own museum at cemetery

LOS ANGELES — Epic filmmaker Cecil B. DeMille is getting his own museum at the cemetery where he's buried.

"It's small but it does preserve many of the significant artifacts from the history of film, which after all is the art form of the 20th century and basically the American art form," Charlton Heston said Friday before the project was announced.

Heston, Betty Hutton and other stars of DeMille films were invited to the Hollywood Forever cemetery for announcement of the project. A former chapel will be restored to house items from his films and show a biography about the director. There also will be a garden.

The museum will open in about four months.

LOS ANGELES — Ron Howard wanted to do something special for his alma mater. He decided on a $750,000 donation.

The money will pay for a new screening room at the University of Southern California's Robert Zemeckis Center for Digital Arts, part of the film school.

"The school was such an influential part of my training as a filmmaker that I feel overjoyed at being able to afford future filmmakers the most innovative and cutting edge opportunities," Howard said Thursday.

Howard's credits as a director include "Cocoon" and "Apollo 13."

LOS ANGELES — A tentative trial date of Oct. 3 was scheduled for an exotic car designer's $150 million slander suit against Jay Leno.

Auto designer Claudio Zampolli accuses the "Tonight Show" host, who's a car and motorcycle collector, of calling Zampolli "a crook" during a 1998 car show in Los Angeles.

Zampolli also claims Leno discussed rumors that Zampolli promised cars but never delivered them, according to the suit.

Leno wouldn't comment Friday.

LAS VEGAS — Wayne Newton put his own name in lights by turning on a $2.5 million sign marking his long-term deal with the Stardust Hotel-Casino.

Asked to throw the switch Thursday night, a worried look creased his face and Newton asked: "Are you sure this won't implode the place?"

Newton, 57, who began performing in Las Vegas as a teen-ager at a lounge in the Fremont Hotel in 1959, opens at the Stardust on Monday. His contract has options stretching over the next decade.

"It hit home when I put my luggage down and felt for the first time I could unpack," Newton said.

The 188-foot-tall Stardust sign has been a fixture on the Las Vegas Strip since 1958 and was at one time the world's tallest electric sign. It was renovated for Newton and includes the designation "The Wayne Newton Theater" for the showroom.

LAS VEGAS — Known for its showgirls, pop singers and white tigers, the Las Vegas Strip seems the least likely place for the American debut of a hit musical from Paris.

But "Notre Dame de Paris," which opens Saturday, drew cheers from a preview audience on Thursday night, eliciting a sigh of relief from producer Wayne Baruch.

Baruch picked the new Paris Las Vegas hotel-casino, a French-themed resort, over New York City or Los Angeles for the debut.

"I'm excited about the response," he said. "I never dreamed the audience would react this way."

The musical, based on the story of the Hunchback of Notre Dame, opened in Paris in 1998. Within less than a year, it became the most successful musical in French history, selling more than 2 million tickets and 7 million CDs in Europe.

BERMUDA DUNES, Calif. — Golf fans and celebrity-watchers already in the presence of Bill Murray, Joe Pesci, Alice Cooper and Rush Limbaugh were awestruck when Bob Hope showed up on the 10th hole.

The 96-year-old entertainer wasn't playing a round, but pulled up in a golf cart Wednesday to pose with players in the celebrity portion of the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic golf tournament.

After posing for photos, Hope drove off in his cart with fans yelling, "We love you, Bob."

Other celebrities in the round included Glenn Frey, Kevin Sorbo, Yogi Berra, Roger Clemens, Tom Glavine, Don Sutton, John Elway, Emmitt Smith and Jerry Rice.

First-time participant Murray said he showed up for one reason.

"I feel like I can finally beat Bob Hope," he said.

✔ Bill would mandate moment of silence

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A bill before Virginia's General Assembly this year would mandate that every public school classroom hold a moment of silence each day.

The measure, introduced by state Sen. Warren E. Barry, would require "a period of silent meditation, prayer or reflection, not to exceed one minute." Teachers would not direct students during the minute except to make sure they are seated and quiet.

"I'm not real religious, but when we took God out of the schools, we saw moral decay and an increase in school violence," Barry said, adding that last year's school shootings in Littleton, Colo., figured into his move.

"The idea is not so much whether they pray or not," he said. "It's to give them time to think and realize they have to be accountable for their actions."

State law now makes a moment of silence optional in public schools.

✔ Bishop to serve as intern in U.S. House

BOSTON (AP) — The Right Rev. M. Thomas Shaw, the Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts, is trading the Lord's house for the U.S. House of Representatives, become an intern there for one month.

The 54-year-old Shaw said, "I want to go discover something of what the role of the church should be in public life."

The bishop will work for a longtime friend, Rep. Amo Houghton, a New York Republican and active Episcopalian.

Shaw may be the first sitting bishop to serve as an intern. Congressional internships and fellowships are dominated by students. Unlike other interns, Shaw will get a desk with a window, unrestricted access to the congressman and invitations to meetings with top officials.

"I've heard of scientists, psychologists, statisticians and lawyers doing internships, but I've never heard of a clergyperson," said Rick Shapiro, executive director of the Congressional Management Foundation.

Churches move to spot, help treat depression among farmers

By Vicki Brown
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — As farmers head to banks to arrange loans for spring planting, some will be turned down following losses during last season's drought. Some will become depressed again and will need help. Farmer Richard Jameson has been there, and he knows.

As week after week went by last summer without any rain, Jameson saw his crops wither and felt his spirits decline. He sank into a depression that was exacerbated by the death of his father and a close friend's serious illness.

"I was at the bottom of the barrel. And one of the keys for me was our minister," he says, adding that medication and support from his family and doctor also helped.

Now he wants to make sure other farmers who are depressed as they try to scrape together money for seed and fertilizer have a place to turn for help.

With the help of the Methodist Conference Program for Ministries, Jameson and his minister, the Rev. Stan Waldon of Brownsville First Methodist, have assembled three meetings with pastors from churches in western Tennessee and Kentucky. The idea was to alert pastors to the seriousness of the drought and give them ideas for providing pastoral care to farmers.

"We try to instill hope, try to help them recognize that the problems are not the fault of poor farming," Waldon said.

They invited farmers, bankers, mental health professionals and agriculture specialists, to educate the ministers about how the drought and failing crops could hurt families and communities.

"There's not really much that we can do as pastors to put money in their pocket," Waldon said. "What we're trying to do is say the church is here."

Similar efforts have been organized in other states where farmers are in crisis.

"Farmers were feeling they had failed to do their work properly. ... They were really hurting," said the Rev. Gene Handwerk, a Lutheran pastor who coordinated efforts to reach out to farm families in Pennsylvania.

Handwerk, a staff member for the Northeastern Pennsylvania Synod near Allentown, Pa., and a partner in a family farm, helped get hay donated by Nebraska and Wisconsin farmers to drought-stricken Pennsylvania farmers.

The synod also ran a series of workshops for farmers about how to deal with crisis and gave pastors and rural congregations specific suggestions on how to reach out to farm families.

"We've gotten quite a bit of both verbal and written feedback that people have finally listened to their plight. ... It's been a spiritual lift to farmers who have been open to it," Handwerk said.

He sees worse times coming.

"It's going to be like the aftershock of an earthquake when farmers need to come up with money for seed and fertilizer. I don't know that banks are going to be very liberal," he said.

Sandra A. LaBlanc agreed. She is director of Rural Ministry Resources and Networking for the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America in Des Moines, Iowa.

"A freight train is coming down the pike and it's going to hit in March," said LaBlanc, who is developing a national program for clergy awareness of the farm crisis. "What I've been told is that March is when operating loans to farmers will be refused."

The Catholic-Lutheran Rural Life Commission of Northwest Minnesota developed an outreach program after a flood in 1993, said the Rev. Milo Mathison, a retired Lutheran pastor in Mentor, Minn., and vice chairman of the commission which serves the northwest corner of Minnesota. The outreach arm was eventually incorporated and receives federal funding.

"We have pockets of the state now that after years of crop losses may lose 30 percent of the farmers," he said. That's despite good crops last summer. "The crops were decent, but the prices were low," he said.

Outreach workers help farmers plan an orderly transition out of agriculture, with job training and direct assistance for such things as utility bills, child care and counseling.

The commission runs workshops for ministers and priests on depression so they can spot farmers who need help.

"Farmers tend to be rather quiet and reserved. ... A lot of the pain is hidden," Mathison said.

In Tennessee, the drought began early last summer and stretched into the fall. West Tennessee, where farmers mainly grow cotton and soybeans, was hit hardest.

"There are places that went 60 to 80 days without rain," said Gene Danekas, state statistician with the U.S. Department of Agriculture. When rain did arrive, it was too late.

"It's not just poor quantity of harvest, it's poor quality," Danekas said.

Some agriculture officials estimate the drought will force up to 10 percent of the state's farmers to quit the business, he said.

The outreach program has been word of mouth, with no formal referral service or hotline. Mike Campbell, director of health and welfare ministries for the Methodist Hospital System, said farmers say they just need a place to turn to for help.

"They are asking for a sense of personal support," Campbell said.

Lee splits with Central

U. Frank Williams Jr./Reporter-Telegram
Midland Lee's Chris Packer (32) drives around San Angelo Central's Robert Rohlfs (14) Friday night during their District 4-5A game at Chap Center. The Rebels dropped a close one to the Bobcats in overtime.

Bobcats, not Lee boys, win another close one to move into 1st-place tie

San Angelo Central played another nip-and-tuck game at Chaparral Center Friday night, but when the smoke had cleared, the Bobcats owned a share of first place in the District 4-5A basketball race.

SA Central	70

The Bobcats defeated Midland Lee 70-65 in overtime to climb to 5-1 in the 4-5A race, tied at the top with both idle Midland High and Abilene Cooper, which defeated Odessa High. also in overtime.

All three of the league leaders are playing close games, but the difference in first place and the 2-4 Rebels has been the ability to win those close games.

"Winning another close one isn't anything new to us," said Central coach Kevin Pope. "We've been winning games late. We're thrilled to be 5-1 after the first half. I think everyone around felt we were a year away, but we keep winning the close games.

Simmons

"Winning the close ones is about the only difference from the top of the standings to the bottom of the standings. Every game is a war."

It came down to another tough loss for Lee, which fell to 2-4 to end the first half of the loop chase. It appears that the Rebels have to win out to get in the playoffs and the leaders must start losing some of those close ones.

San Angelo's Dante Randle and Brian Young, two young Bobcat warriors, came up big in overtime. Randle, a junior who was only five of 14 from the free throw line in regulation play, hit four consecutive free throws and Young, a sophomore, hit a big three-point shot, to give the Bobcats a 9-4 advantage over the Rebels in the extra period.

"I wasn't hitting my free throws, but someone had to step up and be a leader when it got to overtime," Randle said of his clutch free throw shooting when it counted.

On the three-point shot, Young said, "Actually, I didn't want to take that shot. I was looking to pass it off, but

Lady Rebs keep momentum going in victory over Central

By Lee Passmore

Sandwiched between a game in which they knocked the District 4-5A frontrunner out of first place and a crucial showdown with their crosstown rival next week, the Midland Lee Lady Rebels were primed to come out of Friday night feeling queasy.

LEE
Midland Lee	73
SA Central	39

"I was real worried today," said Lee coach Elise Kail after her team had ripped San Angelo Central 73-39 at Chaparral Center. "I was ready to throw up before the game. We had already beaten (Central) twice and it's tough to beat a team three times in one season."

But the Lady Bobcats were the only ones who felt the need to reach for the Maalox after the game. They gave the Lee faithful some nervous stomachs by cutting a deficit that had been as large as 12 points in the first half down to 29-27 early in the third quarter on a layup by Lacey Hohmann.

However, Hohmann got no help from her teammates the rest of the half. Central hit only four of 26 shots from the floor over the last two quarters, and all of those were made by Hohmann.

With so many missed shots by the Lady Bobcats, that gave the Lady Rebels (14-10 overall, 4-4 in district) plenty of chances to grab rebounds, and they obliged, out-rebounding

Mills is the Man

Sealy coach takes head coaching job at Permian

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — T.J. Mills will be the next coach of the Odessa Permian football team.

Mills accepted the job Friday just before boarding a private plane to fly back to Sealy.

Mills, one of the hottest coaching commodities in the state, spent the day in Odessa with his family and two members of the Sealy coaching staff. He came into Odessa thinking he would most likely accept the job; however, it wasn't until his final minute in the Permian Basin that he gave his verdict.

"There is a tremendous relief. That is how I feel," said Ector County Independent School District athletic director Don Wright of knowing the coaching search is over. "This is pretty big. I don't think there is any way to describe it."

Mills becomes the ninth coach in Permian history. In December, the ECISD reassigned Randy Mayes from his duties as head football coach. Mayes went 45-25-10 in his six seasons as Permian's head coach, but two losing seasons in the last three years had ECISD officials looking to make a change. After a long search, the school district got its man.

"Seeing the kids today and seeing the quality of people we would be working with and some of the people in the community, I felt like it was the right fit for me and my family," Mills said.

Still, it was not an easy one. Mills said Friday night that word of the decision had already spread through Sealy by the time he arrived home.

"It was a tough decision," added Mills, who is married and has three daughters. "There was a lot of back and forth. I have a good job and my family is happy here (in Sealy). Permian is a great job, but picking a family up and going somewhere after you have been there 15 years is tough on everybody. It is tough to relocate like that."

Getting Mills to take the job was big for two reasons. One, he is one of the hottest coaching commodities in the state of Texas. Mills, who already turned down one job this offseason, is the only coach in UIL history to lead his school to four consecutive state championships. Sealy won four straight Class 3A titles from 1994-97. Mills had a 148-27

Jacks return home, beat Buzzards, 3-0

By Ted Battles
MRT Correspondent

ODESSA — After posting his second shutout of the season, Odessa goalie Michael Tornquist suggested Friday's 3-0 win over the El Paso Buzzards not only gave the team a big lift, but was a relief as well.

"After losing 7-2 at El Paso as we did last night, it's tough to sleep on the bus coming home," said Tornquist, whose first shut out came against San Angelo earlier in the season.

Tornquist earned No. 2 star of the night honors, but John Bossio, the Jacks' leading scorer, got No. 1 star laurels, figuring in all three goals in the Jack Shack win, with two assists and the hope-smothering final goal t 11:03 of the third period.

Bossio's first point was the night's niftiest steal, poke checking the puck in Odessa ice and then soloing in on goalie Todd Laurin, who responded to the point of attack, but was in no position to stop Jacque Rodrique's quick shot over the shoulder after the pass. What made it more spectacular, it was a short-handed goal.

"I think the turning point was the second goal," reviewed coach Don McKee of the goal that made it 2-0 in the first period.

With 17:47 gone, Bossio fed Mark Smith for the score after a pass from Chris Morque.

"That gave us some breathing room, although we were hanging on at the end," McKee added. "After traveling for games Tuesday and Thursday we were a tired bunch."

A brawling first period didn't help, 13 penalties for 44 minutes with six five minute penalties for fighting. That picked up on the Thursday's finish in fights broke out.

However, after the first period, both teams settled down and played hockey.

"The stars tonight were spelled t-e-a-m," McKee noted. "Smith (the No. 3

Hingis keeps rolling

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

MELBOURNE, Australia — In the burning heat or under the roof during rainstorms, Martina Hingis rolls on unperturbed by the elements or her opponents in the Australian Open.

Hingis, the three-time defending champion, won her 24th straight match in the Australian Open on Saturday, repelling the fierce serves of rising star Alicia Molik to advance to the fourth round 6-2, 6-3.

In seeking to become the first woman in the open era to win four consecutive Australian Open titles, Hingis has lost only 14 games in three matches.

"Three in a row younger than me — I feel like I'm getting into middle age," the 19-year-old Hingis said.

Against Molik, an 18-year-old Australian who served at up to 116 mph, Hingis looked absolutely unruffled, as if she could stand there and swat back returns all day.

With the retractable roof closed because of rain midway through the first set, Molik did serve six aces. Hingis accepted those occasional balls flying past as inevitable, shrugged them off, and waited for others to take aim at. On her own serve, Hingis didn't try to match Molik's pace but nevertheless gave up only five points.

Molik tried rushing the net on her second serves, with mixed success, but was helpless when Hingis kept her back and rushed to the net herself.

Defending men's champion Yevgeny Kafelnikov followed on the covered center court and posted a 6-3, 6-3, 6-4 victory over Stefan Koubek to reach the fourth round.

In the only matches completed amid intermittent rain, the men's No. 4 seed Nicolas Kiefer beat Karim Alami 6-3, 6-4, 6-2; and Arnaud Clement downed Roger Federer 6-1, 6-4, 6-3.

Andre Agassi doesn't dwell on regrets, on or off the court, though there is one piece of advice he wishes he could tell his younger self: Cut those long, frosted locks.

Aussie Open at a Glance

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Highlights of play Friday and early at the $8.1 million Australian Open tennis championships at Melbourne Park:

Results: Men's singles: No. 1 Andre Agassi, No. 3 Pete Sampras, No. 4 Nicolas Kiefer, No. 11 Tim Henman and No. 16 Mark Philippoussis advanced; Women's singles: No. 1 Martina Hingis, No. 2 Lindsay Davenport, No. 4 Mary Pierce, No. 9 Julie Halard-Decugis and No. 11 Anna Kournikova advanced.

Stat of the Day: Moroccan Hicham Arazi has not lost a set through three rounds.

Quote of the Day: "I'd probably tell myself to cut my hair. Every time I see a picture of me with long hair, I want to burn it" — Andre Agassi, on what he might tell his younger self.

Another teen becomes a trauma in the making

By Bud Collins

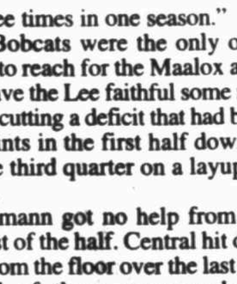
MELBOURNE — Not even John McEnroe in his cracked-pepper salad days of bizarre exploits hogged the front pages for three days running. Mac might salivate enviously, perhaps admiringly, at the stir-fry a mere child named Jelena Dokic is creating across her adopted homeland, Australia.

Childe Jelena, a 16-year-old tennis player seven years out of Serbia, has pushed Pete Sampras, Andre Agassi, Serena Williams, Lindsay Davenport, and Martina Hingis out of the way with bulldozingly sharp, black headlines — even though the kid didn't last much more than an hour in the Australian Open singles last Sunday.



Dokic

Unusual, but disturbing, too, because it isn't pleasant watching a juvenile unravel under the pressure of national attention and expectations, as well as the stress caused by the very wrong situation of being the breadwinner for her immigrant family of four.

You may recall Jelena's June '99 jump into the world's consciousness: an historic upheaval in which she beat No. 1 Hingis in the opening round at Wimbledon. A demure blonde qualifier ranked No. 129, she was a definite comer, ascending to No. 39 by the time this Open began. And then she began coming apart.

The unexpected first-round defeat of Australia's top female by a no-name Hungarian, Rita Kuti Kis, didn't appear to be tournament-quaking until hours afterwards. Five hours late for the mandatory press conference (and thus fined $2,500),

Midand Lee's Shandi Neatherlin, left, dives for a loose ball along with San Angelo Central's Kimmy Hocker Friday night during their game at Chap Center. Lee won the game to even its 4-5A record.

WIN: Lee beats Central

(From 1C)

Central 42-25. So dominant on the boards were the Lady Rebels that they had four players grab at least eight rebounds.

"We did a great job on the boards in the second half," said Kail. "We had freedom to do that because (the officials) weren't calling it as tight."

The Lady Rebels only needed output from two players to outscore Central (8-16, 1-7). It wasn't a surprise that freshman Adrianne Ross, the team's leading scorer, led the way with 26 points as she recovered from an off night Tuesday when she only scored eight in a win over Odessa High.

The bonus performance came off the bench from junior post Shandi Neatherlin, who usually provides defense and rebounding, but scored 16 points in the last three quarters.

"Shandi just played outstanding," said Kail. "She got the ball a lot more tonight and gave us a post game we hadn't had."

Many of Neatherlin's points came on transition baskets, which had been a rarity for her for most of the season, but at 5-foot-10, she was counted on to provide bulk against a big Central front line.

"I didn't think I'd be able to (get the ball a whole lot)," said Neatherlin. "(The Lady Bobcats) were really big and they were really rough.

"They pushed me around a lot. I was ready for a more physical game after already playing them twice."

Yet, Neatherlin, Andrea Long and Ross all grabbed eight rebounds, although 5-4 Shamera Bryson led the team with nine boards.

Beating the Lady Bobcats by such a huge margin after two much closer victories (one outside of district) is a sign of maturity for the Lady Rebels emerging at just the right time. Lee, who gave up only three points in the fourth quarter, didn't show much of a letdown after winning at former 4-5A co-leader Odessa High Tuesday night, and also avoided the danger of looking past Central toward next Tuesday night's crosstown showdown with Midland High.

The Lady Rebels haven't only pulled even in district, but are unbeaten in the second half of 4-5A play.

"It's like a whole new season for us in the second half," said Kail. "We've executed offensively and defensively. The best thing tonight was sticking it to (the Lady Bobcats) in the second half."

Hohmann led Central with 21 points while Nichole Ayana had 11.

Titans franchise left fans in Texas

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — Edward Gifford arrived during the oil boom of the 1970s, on the cusp of the Houston Oilers' fabled "Luv Ya Blue" years.

He agonized through two fruitless AFC Championship games against the mighty Pittsburgh Steelers. Gifford also has endured the countless other indignities suffered by the franchise.

The crowning blow for most Houstonians came when owner Bud Adams uprooted the pioneer AFC club he founded in 1960 and headed for the hills of Tennessee. While the city sulked and has remained outwardly oblivious to its estranged team since the last game here in 1996, Gifford hit the road.

"I've been to every home game since they left," the suburban Houston truck driver said. "I went to all the games in Memphis and all of them last season at Vanderbilt. Plus, I usually go to three to five on the road."

Gifford, possibly one of the few Music City season ticketholders who knows Billy "White Shoes" Johnson from Billy Ray Cyrus, blames former Houston Mayor Bob Lanier for showing Adams the door.

Gifford sympathizes with Tennessee fans for their lack of enthusiasm before 1999. A Nashville team playing in rival Memphis in 1997 was doomed from the start, and he says the stadium at Vanderbilt "didn't feel right" in 1998.

"The first game played in Adelphia Coliseum was very noisy," Gifford said of this season's home-opener. "I remember those days of Bum Phillips, and actually all season it has felt the same."

Gifford's undying loyalty, described in an essay, earned him a spot along 30 other fans from each NFL team at an exhibit in the Professional Football Hall of Fame. He beat out several entries from Tennessee.

"Football was very good to me. We came close to the big game, but just quite never made it," his winning essay read. "But I still loved my Oilers, up or down."

Back in Houston at Griff's bar, the place would have been teeming with rowdy fans had Frank Wycheck and Kevin Dyson pulled off their famous game-winning lateral-kick return play in the Astrodome, with derricks on the helmets.

When Tennessee pulled off the improbable 22-16 victory over the Buffalo Bills on Jan. 8, much of the popular hangout was empty. One table filled with Titan jersey-clad Houstonians, however, kept the joint jumping.

Kim Berry, who proudly sports the old blue derrick on her left ankle, says she's enjoying riding the Titans wave while many other jilted locals ignore the old team.

"What they don't understand was, Bud Adams was a smart businessman," Berry said. "I hope they win and I hope all the people that hated Bud Adams will eat their words."

An unscientific Houston Chronicle telephone poll this week might show that the old wounds are healing in the nation's fourth-largest city.

About 66 percent of the nearly 15,000 respondents said they'd root for the Titans on Sunday, 29.5 percent said they'd cheer against and 4.5 percent were apathetic.

Then again, people who don't care usually don't vote in telephone polls.

Gifford, speaking by phone from the road this week in Arkansas as he pointed his rig eastward toward the playoff game in Jacksonville, admits he'll have some soul-searching to do when Houston's expansion team takes the field in 2002.

"Seeing as how I've committed myself so deeply to this organization, we'll probably have to wait and see," he said. "I'm still a hometown boy."

DOKIC: Youngster makes big mistakes down under

(From 1C)

Dokic read a rambling prepared statement, knocking her foe as "a player who can't play, never could play" and insisting she herself could still beat just about anybody.

That was only Act I in the Dokic daily drama that could be entitled "As Jelena's World Burns."

Act II was her Page 1 accusation in the tabloid Melbourne Sun Herald that a conspiracy was at work against her because of her Serbian origins. She asserted draws were being fixed so she played the toughest opponents. It was preposterous, as the draws are made publicly and professionally. If anything, the Aussie draw seemed rigged in her favor, presenting her with a cupcake, No. 86 Kuti Kis, who hadn't won a match on a hard court in 18 months.

Then came Act III the next day, when her papa, the burly, bearded Damir Dokic, a frequent troublemaker, assaulted a TV crewman outside their hotel.

Wednesday brought Act IV, following a doubles victory alongside Jennifer Capriati. Cooly, with fire in her blue eyes, Jelena stonewalled. She apologized for nothing and charged the Sun Herald with making up everything, saying she had demanded the tapes. An editor at the newspaper says the tapes confirm her published quotes.

If you squeezed into overflowing Court 3 with 3,000 others Wednesday, while 37,029 patrons flooded Melbourne Park, you had a very uncomfortable feeling: There, in short skirts, were a catastrophe-in-the-making next to one that had already occurred.

Rookie Little Girl Lost, Jelena Dokic, accompanying Veteran Little Girl Lost, Jennifer Capriati. The too-much-too-quick kids playing a duet, and you wondered whether Dokic would have to go through the shattering Capriati had taken, but from which she seems to be emerging at 23.

Where are the help and guidance Dokic so sorely needs as she flits about the world, a girl in a cut-throat occupation? Where were the agents and parents and the Women's Tennis Association when Capriati needed them? Where are they now for Dokic? And for the other teenies, who shouldn't be allowed into a professional sport before age 18?

Oh, I know I'm ultra-conservative, and that wouldn't stand up in court. But if these kids stayed home and finished high school, graduating legitimately before being cast out to fend for themselves, they and their sport would be better off for it.

Some are getting the proper care and counseling, of course (like Venus and Serena Williams). But not Dokic. Her old man is another member of the long-running IBDC (International Bad Dads Club) of tennis, along with Stefano Capriati, Peter Graf, Roland Jaeger, Marinko Lucic, and Jim Pierce — pushing their gifted daughters, oblivious to education, living off the proceeds.

"When a young kid is supporting the family, it's just too much pressure to win," says Chris Evert. "My dad had a job. He didn't let me turn pro until I was 18. But these are different times, and the money available is overwhelmingly tempting."

Damir Dokic did do well by steering his family away from Croatia when that country was at war, and then from Serbia before it exploded. But he believes father knows best about everything, including tennis coaching and dealing with a public for which he is ill-prepared. If Jelena is lucky, he'll hire a responsible coach who knows the ways of this tough and competitive business, stop telling her the world is against Serbs, and get a job.

MOJO: Mills to become PHS' 9th coach

record in 15 years at Sealy.

A second reason the acceptance was so big was that PHS' two-man finalist list was cut to one on Wednesday after Grand Prairie's Jerry Bomar withdrew his name. If Mills had said 'no,' then the coaching process would have started over again.

"The kids would be without a coach for a long, long time if Mills didn't accept it. We didn't want that," Wright said.

Mills will make $78,000 a year, plus a car allowance. That is $7,000 more than Mayes made last year, and $2,000 less than Mills was offered to take over at Dickinson.

Mills' assistants will make what every other teacher in ECISD make according to their experience plus a $5,760 stipend for being an assistant football coach. Wright said that there were no negotiations Friday to change any salaries.

As is policy within ECISD, Odessa High head football coach Jim Carson will receive a pay raise, so he will also make $78,000 a year.

That means the ECISD coaches, whose programs finished last and second to last in the district last year, will be the highest paid coaches in the district.

Abilene's two high school football coaches made $75,700 a year while Midland High's David Browning and Midland Lee's John Parchman make $73,500 a year, according to MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi. That makes MISD's coaches the lowest paid in District 4-5A.

"We will be watching (the Mills coaching situation) very closely," Baressi said.

Last year, MISD varsity coaches combined for a 22-3 record. ECISD coaches went 9-11.

Baressi has said that he will recommend a raise for the football coaches in a February MISD school board meeting.

Detroit Tigers sign Nomo

DETROIT (AP) — Hideo Nomo did well under Phil Garner last year in Milwaukee and he'll get another chance to pitch for the manager this year in Detroit.

Nomo, the 1995 National League Rookie of the Year, agreed Friday to a $1.25 million, one-year contract that gives him the chance to earn a addition $3.25 million in performance bonuses.

Nomo, 31, went 12-8 with a 4.54 ERA and 161 strikeouts in 176 innings last year.

JACKS: Team avenges Thursday loss

star) did a good job against the Martin Menard and David Bernier (104 points between them) line. And Tornquist made a good save in the second period, when El Paso had a 5-on-3 advantage, and two in the third period. He also played so well behind the net. Our defense didn't have to chase the puck down."

The 5-on-3 was Tornquist's fault. With El Paso on a 4 on 3 advantage, he flipped the puck out of rink and was assessed a delay of game penalty.

"You just can't do that," Michael admitted, "But tonight I think everybody had fun.

"It really wasn't that tough. The defense made it easy to see the shots and they took care of the rebounds."

The Jacks are back on the ice at 7:11 tonight against the Amarillo Rattlers, another important intra-divisional game.

"It's a four point game," McKee said. "Amarillo has been struggling, but they have a lot of new guys and they are young and fresh."

JACK SLAPS: More than 4,000 are expected tonight, but there are still tickets left....Tornquist went 11-9-1 for the season after the win, giving the Jacks five wins over the Buzzards this season, but El Paso still has a nine-point edge in the standings....Since a 2-7 record in October, the Jacks are over .500, 14-13-4....Friday's win came with Paul Vincent, the team's No. 2 scorer, out of action....

Beem leads in the desert

Associated Press

BERMUDA DUNES, Calif. — The desert is Rich Beem's idea of a working vacation.

Back from two miserable weeks in Hawaii, Beem tied the 54-hole record in the Bob Hope Classic on Friday with a 7-under 65 to take the lead over Nike Tour graduate Matt Gogel going into the weekend.

What a difference a change of scenery makes for Beem. In six rounds over two tournaments in Hawaii, he was 21-over-par. Through three rounds in the desert, he was 20-under — and he still hasn't played Indian Wells, the easiest of the four courses.

His 195 tied the 54-hole tournament record set by Andrew Magee, who was 21-under in 1998. Bermuda Dunes, which Beem played Wednesday, is a par 71 this year.

Gogel, who turned pro in 1994 but never played a PGA Tour event until last week in Honolulu, had four straight birdies at Indian Wells and finished with a 64 for a 19-under 197.

Defending champion David Duval may not need a 59 to win this year. On a day that finally feature some semblance of wind — a palm frond actually moved — Duval breezed through Indian Wells for a 63 that left him at 18-under.

Rugged & Dependable 2000 Toyota Tacoma Pickup

RoadWorthy!

By Ken Chester, Jr.

Stout. Hi-Lux. Compact Truck. Tacoma. These names and titles chronicle the history of evolution of Toyota's compact pickup truck in the United States.

In 1964, Toyota introduced the Stout pickup to American drivers. By the 1977 model year, the automaker had built over 1 million of the light-trucks which were gaining a toehold as an inexpensive, durable, dependable workhorse. An Xtracab model was introduced in 1984, providing additional storage space behind the seats. A new V-6 engine bowed in 1988. The Toyota truck received a name in 1995, concurrent with the launch of an all-new pickup truck – designed and built in America – the Tacoma.

Built by NUMMI, a joint venture of Toyota and General Motors in Fremont, Calif., the Tacoma was freshened in 1997 and the segment blurring PreRunner was introduced in mid-1998. The Toyota PreRunner is a two-wheel drive pickup which combines the rugged styling and off-road ability of the automaker's four-wheel drive pickups with the affordability of two-wheel drive.

The sixth generation Toyota Tacoma compact pickup is available in a number of configurations which include: regular or extended cab and two- or four-wheel drive. Engine choices include a 2.4L DOHC four-cylinder, 2.7L DOHC four-cylinder and 3.4L DOHC six-cylinder. Transmission selections are a five-speed manual or four-speed automatic. Models include: Tacoma, Xtracab, Xtracab V6 and Xtracab Limited V6.

On the road, the 3.4L six-cylinder turns in a good performance. The ride is smooth and sure at speed. An independent double wishbone front suspension with coil springs is standard for both two- and four-wheel drive models. A 1.02 inch stabilizer bar and hydraulic shock absorbers are featured on all two-wheel drive models. Four-wheel drive V6 models are outfitted with gas filled shock absorbers for additional ride control.

The ($340) optional locking rear differential aids the Tacoma in low-speed, off-highway maneuvering. When 4WD Low is selected, the driver may lock the rear differential by pressing a dash-mounted button. When engaged, the locking rear differential evenly splits torque between both rear wheels, forcing them to turn in unison. Goodyear Wrangler RTS 265/75R15 tires assist in keeping the Tacoma connected with the ground.

Inside the cabin, the driver has a good outward view of the road. Displays and controls are clearly marked and easy to use. Three dashboard mounted powerpoints facilitate the use of electrical appliances such as a notebook computer, cellular phone and other equipment needed to function away from home or office. Although the Tacoma Xtracab does not have the benefit of additional doors, the seats fold forward to provide a secure place to stow important cargo under lock and key – out of sight from prying eyes.

By the numbers

Engine performance ratings are as follow: 2.4L, 16-valve, twin-cam four-cylinder - 142 hp at 5,000 rpm and 160 lb/ft of torque at 4,000 rpm; 2.7L, 16-valve, twin-cam four-cylinder - 150 hp at 4,800 rpm and 177 lb./ft of torque at 4,000 rpm; 3.4L 24-valve twin-cam six-cylinder - 190 hp at 4,800 rpm and 220 lb/ft of torque at 3,600 rpm.

Underhood fluids are accessible, but not clearly marked. EPA fuel economy numbers range from 22 city/26 highway for the 2.4L/ two-wheel drive/manual to 17 city/20 highway for the 3.4L/four-wheel drive/automatic. All three engines use regular unleaded gasoline.

Standard safety/security features include: dual front airbags and side impact door beams. Four-wheel anti-lock brakes are available for an additional $630.

The base Manufacturer's Suggested Retail Price (MSRP) for the 2000 Toyota Tacoma compact pickup starts at $11,428 for the regular cab, two-wheel drive up to $25,178 for the Xtracab Limited V6. Destination charge adds $480. Toyota is having no problem selling this truck so be sure to check with the local dealer in order to secure one. There are no rebates.
