Bill Clements wins tough governor race

DALLAS (AP) — Oilman Bill Clements climaxed a long, expensive battle today and defeated Attorney General John Hill to become the first Republican governor of Texas in more than a century.

With 250 of 254 counties reporting, 219 complete, Clements had 1,161,847 votes and Hill had 1,142,983.

Clements called newsmen together in Austin, cracked a wide grin and said: "I am satisfied you are looking at the new governor."

Clements told a late morning news conference that a survey of his campaign offices over the state convinced him he would be able to maintain his 19,000 vote margin over Hill that he had for almost 12 hours.

Hill, who had pitted his political expertise against Clements' business skills, refused to throw in the towel, however.

"I'm not trying to be difficult in terms of a concession," Hill told reporters before leaving the Driskill Hotel in Austin shortly before noon.

"I would very much like to join him (Clements) in feeling that we have the race finished, but I don't see how he could make that statement unless he has more information than I do," Hill added.

Hill dispatched a campaign aide, Steve Vann, to the Texas Election Bureau in Dallas to check final tabulations.

"I'll be happy to offer my congratulations to Mr. Clements if I thought the race was over," Hill said. "I didn't seek the office for any purpose other than to serve the people, and if I'm denied that opportunity I'll certainly be supportive of whoever is in that office."

Hill blamed poorer-than-expected showings in Abilene, Fort Worth and Midland-Odessa for Clements' lead. He said his opponent's direct mailing was possibly Clements' strongest campaign tactic.

Power swings to Midland County Republican Party

The pendulum of power on the Midland County Commissioners' Court has swung in favor of the Republican Party for the first time in 10 years as a result of Tuesday's local election.

Three GOP candidates, including one unopposed, were swept to victory in the general election.

"There's going to be a change next year," Win Brown, the lone Republican on the court for the past eight months, said Tuesday night following the election.

He was one of the victors.

"We (GOP'ers) will get the vote and will be looking out for the county employees for a change. The Republicans (on the court) fought to pay a living wage," rather than accept a heavy turnover by low paid workers, Brown said.

He added a Republican leaning on the court would be more "equitable" than that by the Democrats.

However, Durward Wright, a Democratic commissioner since 1969, essentially said the court would remain the same conservative.

"I think the people who won the election will continue to guard the taxpayers' dollar in the same manner it has been guarded in the past."

The GOP, which was outnumbered on the court by a 4-1 margin prior to the election, will hold a 3-to-2 majority if the results are valid.

Brown was re-elected without opposition to his post he has held for eight years. Sam Snoddy appeared early today to have won by a narrow margin over 10-year incumbent com

An abandoned or just forgotten campaign hat and a man's coat at Bush headquarters Tuesday night symbolize a Wednesday morning reality. The campaign trail for Midlander George W. Bush, who was the Republican nominee for the 19th U.S. Congressional District seat, has ended for awhile. Although he resoundingly carried Midland County, the home-town candidate lost to Democrat Kent Hance of Lubbock in a grueling fight for Congressman George Mahan's soon-to-be-vacated spot. John Tower wins a fourth term

Tower, a 17-year veteran, took an early lead, and although returns that trickled in this morning cut into his margin, they couldn't offset the margin the Republican took early in Texas' largest cities.

With 250 of 254 counties reporting, including 203 complete, Tower had 1,122,401 votes to 1,105,416 for Krueger.

Tower held a 11:45 a.m. news conference in Wichita Falls to express his appreciation for the victory.

"Based on results we have now, I believe I have been re-elected to another term in the U.S. Senate. I'm grateful to the people of Texas for the confidence they have once more reposed in me," Tower said.

"Recognizing the closeness of the race, I will double my efforts to make sure I reflect the views and the concerns of a majority of Texans over the next six years."

Tower took note of Bill Clements' victory in the governor's race also.

"I'm delighted, too, that we have elected a Republican governor," Tower said. "Bill Clements will do a splendid job. This is the harbinger of a two-party system in Texas."

All through the night Tuesday, Krueger and Tower watched the ballot tallies show first one and then the other taking thin, temporary leads in the hotly contested race. Tower, with his wife and three daughters, holed up in a Wichita Falls motel room to monitor returns.

Krueger, weary and suffering from laryngitis, vanished into an Austin hotel suite from where he said he would not emerge until "something conclusive" was determined by slow-moving ballot counters at the Texas Election Bureau.

Despite the uncertain nature of his position at the ballot box, Krueger remained optimistic throughout the long night and his campaigners expressed full support that it would, indeed, be the Shakespearean scholar from New Braunfels who would next go to Washington as Tower's replacement.

Krueger is a former Duke University professor, a Shakespearean scholar with impeccable academic credentials whose leadership as a House freshman on natural gas deregulation won him raised eyebrows among his colleagues.

But the Krueger-Tower battle, a big money event in which both men blitzed the state with airport tours, produced little in the way of definitive issues for voters to handle.

Instead, the campaign quickly settled into a mud-slinging, back fence

One man's right is another's prerogative.

That seems to be how a witty fellow, who discreetly covers his trail with the initials "HR," views a certain, distasteful situation dividing Midland and Odessa.

It's the gift of the Ector County effluent, with which Odessa seems bountifully blessed, that is flowing on to Midland's territory.

"It occurs to me that if Ector County has the right to enhance a natural watershed, then surely we should have the right to channelize this flow within the bounds of Midland County," says Midland's friend, HR.

"The considerable bulk of federal law pertaining to the Mississippi River would seem to bear me out," says this inventive, but, surely not, devious, fellow.

He suggests the building of a dike or levee ("It need not be very high") in Midland County, and the lay of the land would spell (and smell) revenge for certain partisans.

"This should create a pretty good, er, ah, 'water hazard' more or less directly across the middle of the Odessa Country Club."

The flow would create a stench heretofore directed toward Midland,

Midland voters holding true to GOP form

By LINDA HILL
R-T Staff Writer

Midland County voters lived up to their reputation Tuesday, giving the entire Republican slate of candidates for statewide office large margins.

The turnout was heavy, with 18,939 votes cast in the county.

But County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry said it was an "amazingly good day." No major problems were reported at the polling places, she said.

Strongest among the statewide Republican candidates was gubernatorial nominee Bill Clements.

Clements garnered 13,798 ballots to Attorney General John Hill's 4,632 in the close race for the governor's mansion.

Minor candidates received a total of 110 votes locally in that race, with 79 going to Raza Unida candidate Mario C. Compean and 31 to Socialist Worker candidate Sara Jean Johnston.

Sen. John Tower, in his bid for re-election, received 12,672 votes, while challenger Bob Krueger got 5,448 in that race.

Raza Unida candidate Luis A. Diaz DeLeon got 114 votes for Senate, with 20 ballots cast for Socialist Worker candidate Miguel Pendas.

Although Republican Gaylord Marshall lost his bid to become lieutenant governor by a large margin statewide, Midland County gave him its support by 9,702 to 7,256 for Hobby. Socialist Worker candidate Andrea Doorack received 53 votes.

In the race for attorney general, Republican Jim Baker lost the state, but he carried Midland County by almost two to one. Baker received 11,559 votes, compared to 6,101 for Democrat Mark White. Fifty-five ballots were cast for Socialist Worker candidate Agnes Chapa.

Midlander Jim Lacy, candidate for Railroad Commission, carried his home county by 11,986 votes to 5,181 for victorious incumbent John Poerner.

Lacy, an oilman, contended the oil and gas industry needed representation on the commission. He lost by a large margin statewide.

Absentee voting this time around set a record for a non-presidential year as 2,870 persons cast their ballots early.

That early vote also was among the most strongly Republican, with the closest race showing that party's

Carter's election influence debated

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — At the White House, they're boasting of President Carter's achievements in support of Democrats in the mid-term elections. Such beneficiaries as Wendell Anderson and William D. Hathaway, soon to be former senators, presumably do not share this enthusiasm.

By the same token, Senators-elect Carl Levin of Michigan and Paul E. Tsongas of Massachusetts, and Governor-elect Robert Graham of Florida probably do.

Carter campaigned for them all, with totally predictable results. The Democrats who got his personal campaign help won some and lost some.

Nationally, the numbers indicate that Carter's impact on the election returns was negligible.

"It's one of the best off-year elections that any president has ever had," said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, assessing the outcome while the votes were being counted Tuesday night. "No president in recent history has been so involved in the re-election of Democratic candidates."

That involvement didn't do much for Anderson of Minnesota, Hathaway of Maine, or for Sens. Floyd K. Haskell of Colorado or Dick Clark of Iowa. They all lost.

So did Republican Sens. Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts and Robert P. Griffin of Michigan.

In terms of overall party strength, the story of the 1978 elections is that there isn't any. Senate and statehouse incumbents suffered some surprise defeats. But the Democrats are only slightly less dominant than before.

An analysis

The Republicans picked up two Senate seats, and could wind up enlarging their minority by three.

Their House gains were modest, a pickup of eight seats with the possibility that the final net change could vary a seat or two either way.

But a 60-40 Senate split isn't that much different from the 62-38 count in the last Congress.

And if the Democratic margin isn't two-to-one in the new House, it is still vast.

By gaining governors in at least five states, the Republicans strengthened their position going into the 1980 presidential campaign.

They picked up one of the big electoral vote states with the election of Richard Thornburgh as governor of Pennsylvania.

And William Clements held a narrow, nonetheless surprising edge in a Texas gubernatorial contest that probably won't be settled for sure until the official vote is tallied. He and Democrat John Hill were that close.

The real movement wasn't national. It was in the upheaval that occurred in states like Minnesota and New Hampshire.

Republican Rudy Boschwitz beat Anderson, for what used to be Vice President Walter F. Mondale's Senate seat. Republican David Durenburger won the seat once held by the late Hubert H. Humphrey. Republican Rep. Albert Quie was leading for governor. And overnight, Minnesota was a GOP state again, as Humphrey found it years ago.

None of that has much to do with Carter or national issues. Anderson arranged as governor to have himself appointed to the Senate, and only once has a man who gained the office that way managed to gain it by election. Democratic division helped open the way for Durenburger. Quie led a Democratic governor who had a reputation for being amiable but rather disorganized.

New Hampshire ousted its ardently conservative Republican governor, Meldrim Thomson, in favor of a Democrat named Hugh Gallen. Gallen taught Thomson that two could play the campaign game of opposing a state income or sales tax, and denounced an electric utility rate increase the governor had approved.

Scratch one conservative, but don't try to read it as a trend, even in Thomson's state. For Republican Gordon Humphrey bows to no man's conservatism. And the airline pilot from Sunapee beat Democratic Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre.

The Kansas voters who elected Republican Nancy Landon Kassebaum, Alf's daughter, to be the only woman senator also turned out their Republican governor, Robert Bennett, in favor of John Carlin, Democrat, dairy farmer and speaker of the state House.

For the record, Carter campaigned personally this fall in 19 states. In those states, as elsewhere, there was no clear pattern in the outcome.

Gerald R. Ford claimed he had "a better batting average" than the president in campaigning for winners. He struck out in the effort to elect his old friend Griffin, who retired, then changed his mind, then got retired. "He regrettably said he was tired of being a senator," Ford said. "Those words came back to haunt him."

That scorekeeping system doesn't work in mid-term elections. In an Associated Press-NBC News survey of voters outside their polling places, three out of four said Carter had no impact on their election decisions. Among those who said the president was a factor, about half said it influenced them toward voting for Democrat and about half said they were swayed to vote Republican.

Next election, the national figures won't have to debate about their relative impact. They'll measure it in presidential competition. Carter will have no shortage of would-be opponents. Republican Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee won as expected and nourished his prospects as a likely candidate for 1980 nomination. So did Gov. James R. Thompson and Reps. Philip M. Crane and John Anderson, all of Illinois. Crane is the only declared candidate for the GOP nomination, but the list will be a long one by primary time.

And in California, Gov. Edmund G. "Jerry" Brown Jr. won big, promised frugality and austerity in government, and kept his Democratic options open. He isn't saying that he will or will not challenge Carter for the nomination in 1980. "I have locked nothing in and nothing out," said Brown.

A sizeable margin of victory enables William B. "Bill" Ahders to smile gleefully late Tuesday night. Election day tallies gave Republican Ahders a victory over Democrat Blake Hansen for the position of Midland County Judge. Midland's municipal court judge, Ahders unseated incumbent appointee Hansen by a margin of 11,323 to 6,258. (Staff Photo)

Totals in uncontested races point to strong vote by city Republicans

Judging by the results of local uncontested races in Midland, it appears many Midlanders hit the Republican straight-ticket lever Tuesday.

For example, Democratic state Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, unopposed in his bid for re-election, received 9,610 votes in the county.

But Republican state Rep. Tom Craddick, also running unopposed for re-election, got 13,564 votes.

Barbara Culver, 318th District Court judge, got 13,197 votes in her bid for a four-year term in the post to which she was appointed.

The only other Republican on the local ballot was Win Brown, seeking re-election as commissioner from Precinct 4. He received 5,314 vote from residents of his precinct.

Other uncontested candidates received the following vote totals.

— Judge, 238th District Court, Vann Culp, 8,437.

— Judge, County Court at Law, Willie DuBose, 8,885.

— County clerk, Rosenelle Cherry, 10,069.

— County treasurer, Dee Thompson, 9,099.

— Justice of the peace, Precinct 1, Place 2: Robert H. Pine, 9,249.

On the statewide ballot, Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace had only token opposition from Socialist Worker Jana Pellusch. Wallace received 8,853 votes in Midland County, to 138 for Pellusch.

State Treasurer Warren G. Harding also had a Socialist Worker opponent. Harding got 9,048 votes in Midland, to 184 for Derrick Adams.

A number of statewide candidates were entirely unopposed, yielding the following vote totals in Midland County:

— Comptroller of public accounts: Bob Bullock, 8,673, in Midland County.

— Commissioner of Agriculture: Reagan V. Brown, 8,610.

— Chief justice, Supreme Court: Joe R. Greenhill, 8,512.

By PAUL STEVENS

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Being the only woman in the U.S. Senate is "kind of scary," admits Nancy Landon Kassebaum, "but I'm hopeful that there will be other women coming along."

The daughter of 1936 GOP presidential nominee and former Kansas Gov. Alf Landon coasted to victory Tuesday in her first try for major office, defeating former congressman Bill Roy, a Democrat.

Mrs. Kassebaum became the first woman to represent Kansas in the Senate and only the second woman to be elected a senator. Former Sen. Margaret Chase Smith of Maine, also a Republican, was the first.

Mrs. Kassebaum, 46, is the mother of four children and has been legally separated for two years from her husband, Wichita attorney Philip Kassebaum.

"I am proud and happy, and I especially compliment her on the smart campaign she made," her father said.

The Landon name, Republican strength in Kansas and a gutsy campaign played roles in her victory.

Early in the campaign, Mrs. Kassebaum told American Agriculture movement members she could not support their goal of full parity for farm products because it would be inflationary.

She went before a teachers' group and said she opposed a separate department of education. Before a women's group, she said she opposed extension of the time limit to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment.

"I suppose there was some resentment," she said of some of her stands. "You'd really welcome the support of friends and groups you're speaking to. But I also think there is a great respect and willingness to listen to other points of view."

Mrs. Kassebaum's only Washington experience was a one-year stint as an aide to retiring Sen. James Pearson, the man she will replace.

Race relations minister resigns from South African Cabinet

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — Connie Mulder, this white-ruled nation's race relations minister, resigned from the Cabinet after being implicated in a scandal involving a $15 million slush fund to establish a pro-government newspaper.

The fund reportedly was used to start the Citizen newspaper in 1975. The paper still publishes six times a week. Mulder, 53, was minister of information when the paper was started.

Mulder, announcing his resignation Tuesday, said, "I have no pangs of conscience about the entire matter because everything I have done I did in the conviction that I was serving my country."

Mulder has been under pressure to quit since evidence of foreign exchange violations in the secret fund showed up in an investigation by government-appointed Judge Anton Mostert.

Minutes before Mulder announced he would resign, Prime Minster P.W. Botha ended Mostert's inquiry, apparently to try to keep more information about the scandal from becoming public.

Botha set up a new three-man investigative panel last week after Mostert published his initial findings about the fund, but Mostert said he would continue his own investigation.

Botha said he suspended Mostert's inquiry because of possible "overlapping and duplication" between Mostert and the panel. He hinted that Mostert exceeded his instructions.

The judge said there was evidence that the fund was set up through Mulder's defunct Information Department to bankroll the paper, and that the money was funneled to the paper through a Swiss bank but never repaid to the state.

Press reports claim the Information Department under Mulder made an abortive attempt to buy control of the Washington Star.

Nicaraguans flee to refugee camps

By TOM FENTON

CAMPO LUNA, Honduras (AP) — Some 10,000 Nicaraguans, many ill with malaria, dysentery and other diseases, are crowding Honduran refugee camps such as this one, living in misery but afraid to go home.

A Honduran camp volunteer said they fear reprisals in Nicaragua because of their support for a guerrilla uprising against President Anastasio Somoza. The refugees started crowding in during September as guerrillas battled against the Nicaraguan national guard.

"The children are full of parasites and nearly all have diarrhea. We estimate 80 percent of the people here have malaria," said Frances Crawford, 49, a nurse-midwife from Farmington, Mo., who runs a small clinic at the camp.

Near the dirt-floor clinic, 450 blue-and-white tents are spread in long lines across a field, each tent able to shelter up to 10 persons.

The camp, about 30 miles from the Nicaraguan border, is near Cholutecaand is the largest of several tent communities housing refugees who fled the guerrilla war in Nicaragua. Honduras tried to maintain a neutral stance in the conflict.

Outside the clinic, a crowd of mothers silently craddled half-dressed children as they waited their turn to see Ms. Crawford.

"This little fellow's got three strikes against him," she said, taking a 6-week-old baby from its mother.

She gave the baby an injection in the leg and as the infant whimpered she turned him to show a cleft palate.

"His stomach is bloated by parasites and he's got some other illness as well," Ms. Crawford added. "I'm just trying to keep him alive until we can find a way to get him to a good hospital."

The woman said several persons at the camp exhibited symptoms of typhoid and dengue fever, but she said blood samples had not yet been returned which could confirm the diseases.

"A Nicaraguan doctor who was here diagnosed the typhoid, but he was afraid he might be killed (by Somoza supporters) and fled to Costa Rica," said Ms. Crawford, who runs the clinic for the Southern Baptist Convention's Foreign Mission Board.

The Honduran Red Cross administers the camp.

On this day, it was being run by a 19-year-old volunteer, Manual Ismale Flores. He said many people in the camp are afraid to return home for fear of reprisals because they sympatized with the guerrillas — led by the Marxist-organized Sandinista National Liberation Front — who are fighting to topple Somoza.

Flores interrupted a tour of the camp briefly to talk to two rifle-bearing Honduran soldier who he said were there to protect the refugees from Somoza supporters.

Flores said 15 babies had been born in the camp since it was opened in late September. He proudly showed one 13-day-old infant that had been named for him.

"We're giving the people three meals a day, but were not certain how long the food will last," he said. "We're also short of medicine."

The camp has one kitchen where workers using three-foot-long spoons stirred caldrons of Stew that simmered on a wood fire. One woman cooked tortillas on an iron sheet that had been placed atop the grill.

"They line up with their plates behind these wooden railings. It only takes a few minutes," Flores said.

The tents were surrounded by trenches to drain off rainwater. Volunteers with shovels and wheelbarrows picked up litter and kept the trenches clear.

Flores said the occupants receive mail at the camp, but there is no telephone service. A loudspeaker at the center of the camp was blaring the rock record "Staying Alive, interspersed with a few announcements.

Flores said most people slept on the floor and there was an urgent need for blankets and clothing. He said many children had respiratory ailments from sleeping on the tent floor, which he said got cold at night.

Some of the tents were supplied as emergency quarters by the U.S. government for use after Hurricane Fifi struck the north coast of Honduras in 1974, Flores said.

Luis Aguirre Rodriguez, area Red Cross commander based in Choluteca, said the camp was intended to be in existence only three months when it was set up.

"Now were looking into the possibility of setting up prefabricated buildings," he said. "Those tents won't last forever."

Honduras, with an annual per capita income of less than $400 in contrast to more than $7,000 in the United States, is the poorest country in Central America.

"The refugees are severely taxing our resources," said Herman Allan Padgett, spokesman for the military junta that governs Honduras.

"But what can we do? Many say they are afraid to go home. We can't send them back under those conditions. We know that many of them will never go back."

Bush concedes in 'well-run' race

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
R-T Staff Writer

Amid red, blue and white crepe paper streamers and balloons dangling from the ceiling of the headquarters on West Wall Avenue, George W. Bush publicly conceded at 11:20 p.m. Tuesday to his opponent, Kent Hance, in the closely contested 19th Congressional District race.

Dressed in a navy blue suit, Bush stood before a roomful of supporters and said, "We ran a good race and we can hold our heads up high because we ran well."

Bush carried Midland County by a 10,000 vote margin over Hance, a state senator from Lubbock. But that margin was not enough to offset heavy rural voting in favor of Hance.

"It's hard to say where the turning point was," Bush said, referring to voting returns coming in throughout the evening.

"In the rural boxes we just didn't hunt," he said, adding that "people in the rural areas of the 19th District are a little suspicious."

Ending his statement on an optimistic note, the Midland oil and gas producer said, "Life is not lost," and a loud round of applause burst from the crowd.

Bush said he has no other plans at this time for the future other than to return to life in Midland as a normal citizen and "become a businessman again."

Only a few tears were shed among the supporters as they congratulated Bush and his wife, Laura, on their campaign.

Spirits in the headquarters had been high earlier in the evening as Midland County's returns came in with Bush far in the lead. Ector County also came out in support of Bush.

But as totals from precincts in the rural counties slowly trickled in, supporters and campaign staffers took on somber expressions.

Lubbock County results were needed early in order for Bush campaign workers to determine if their candidate had enough votes to offset the pro-Hance trend in the rural counties of the 19th District.

Totals from Lubbock began to flow in at last, but stopped about 10 a.m. when, reportedly, the computers broke down.

election 78

Even though a supporter reported NBC television was predicting the race would go in favor of Bush, other backers of the Midland oilman did not accept that word in view of the fact that Lubbock County figures and rural area tallies still were out.

By 10:30 p.m., early rural returns were giving Hance a whopping edge over Bush and the Republican apparently decided there was no way to pull out a last minute victory.

He called Hance from his house before going to his Tall City headquarters for the formal announcement.

Bush flew to Lubbock after the Midland announcement for a news conference at his headquarters there.

Looking tired at the end of a 16-month campaign for the 19th Congressional District seat, George W. Bush of Midland sits on his bed Tuesday night at his home, taking early results by phone. By this time in the evening, it was becoming apparent that Democratic opponent Kent Hance of Lubbock had taken over the lead in the fiercely contested election. (Staff Photo)

GOP gains commissioners' posts

missioner Charlie Welch, and William B. "Bill" Ahders, 62, overwhelmed County Judge Blake Hansen, 29, a Democratic appointee who was seeking his first elected term.

There has been a "trend" toward a Republican majority commissioners court since 1962, when Barbara Culver was elected county judge and became the first Republican Party member elected to Midland County government.

"I ran a hot race and beat the incumbent Democrat, Noel Cason," said Judge Culver, who now is 52.

The Republicans briefly gained control of the court in 1967, when Judge Culver appointed Republican J.R. "Dee" Long to fill a vacancy on the court created by the death of J.C. Brookes, a Democrat. That appointment gave the Republican Party a 3-2 majority.

However, the following year, Welch defeated Long, and the Democrats regained control. The Democratic majority increased last March, when Judge Culver was appointed district judge, and Blake Hansen, who aligned himself with the Democrats, was named to succeed her. That gave the Democrats a healthy 4-to-1 margin.

The Republicans, who have never had an elected majority on the Commissioners' Court, will control the court for at least the next four years.

Democrats Jack Leonard and Wright will be up for re-election in 1980.

Brown, who has been flanked on his right by four Democrats for eight months, Tuesday night said the new majority should be able to establish a better relationship with city government, headed by Republican Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr.

"It will be the best it has ever been. There has been some dissension on the court. We ought to have an extremely good relationship between the city and the court now," Brown said.

Other than that, Brown said, the commissioners' court will be more fair than one ruled by the Democrats.

"I really think a Republican court will be more equitable," said Brown, a landman. "We have actually been more attuned to the individual" than the Democrats have.

Brown expressed disappointment that in the eight years he has been on the court, "I have yet to be elected to fill in (as presiding judge) in the absence of the judge."

As a rule, Wright, a senior member on the court and now in his 10th year as a commissioner, presides in the absence of the judge.

Wright said he foresees no major changes, philosophically or practically, on the traditionally conservative commissioners' court.

"I feel, I think, the commissioners' court has been conservative" even under a Democratic majority, "and the people who have elected the commissioners have been conservative," Wright said.

"I don't think there are going to be any major changes," Wright said. "In Midland County, the commissioners' court has been conservative and has attempted to balance the budget, and I am quite sure that will continue."

"I don't want to talk about that (politics in the court)," Ahders said Tuesday night. "I want the commissioners' court to work for the good of the people of Midland County."

Ahders said politics should not rule the court.

"We want to do what is good for all the people — Republicans, Democrats, whatever."

Brown said Ahders would be fair.

"Bill Ahders is one who does abide by the rules and regulations regardless of who comes before him. I do believe he will be fair...a very good judge."

Bill Shaner, chairman of the county Republican Party, said Ahders and Snoddy won on "their merit" and that the "George Bush charisma" had nothing to do with races.

Ahders beat out the incumbent, Hansen, by a 2-to-1 margin. But the apparent Snoddy-over-Welch victory was so close — by 21 votes — that Welch is considering calling for a re-count.

"Well," Shaner said, "I shouldn't have to say it, but it's the city folks (pro-Snoddy) against the rural (the Welch element), but that's the way it looks. It's unfortunate that the outcome is that close."

Shaner said he was pleased that, for an off-presidential election year, a relatively high number — almost 19,000 — of Midland County's 34,843 registered voters turned out for the general election.

The official turn-out was 18,939, which is a record for a non-presidential election year. The closest to that was in 1970, when 16,831 voted. The high for a presidential election year was 24,290 in 1972.

"We did real well in getting out the vote. And we feel real proud," he said, "of Midland people in getting on to vote and exercising their right."

Democratic County Chairman Darrell Smith characterized as "highly significant" the "pluses of George Bush" on the voter turn-out and in the GOP victories on the commissioners' court and judgeship."

"His was a well organized, well financed campaign," Smith allowed. "He is completely attractive as far as political candidates go. I think George Bush was 'the factor' locally."

Smith said the Bush's kind of politicking may bring "a kind of moderation" to politics in the county and will help "shake off the ultra-conservative tinges" of the Republican Party.

nominee getting more than three times his Democratic opponent's vote total.

Midland congressional candidate George Bush carried the absentee vote by more than five to one — 2,316 to 426.

Heaviest voting took place Tuesday in north-central Midland. Precincts 8, 14 and 26, which are adjoining, each voted more than 1,200 persons.

In Precinct 15, just west of Precinct 8, the vote total passed the 1,000-mark.

All four of those precincts were heavily Republican, turning in margins of between three to one and six to one.

Precinct 26 probably takes the award as the most Republican, posting margins of five to one or better in all the statewide races.

Low turnouts, generally less than 400 per precinct, were found in southeast Midland and in rural portions of the county.

But Precinct 10, one of the most heavily minority-populated areas of Midland, passed the 600 mark. A strong vote for incumbent County Commissioner Charlie Welch indicates that race may have drawn out the vote in that area.

The lightest turnout was in the Midkiff area, Precinct 3, where less than 30 cast ballots.

Only precincts 5, 10 and 24, all in east and southeast Midland, voted generally Democratic. And, at that, Midland Repubican George Bush carried Precinct 24 by a six-vote margin.

Those three, along with Precinct 23, were the only ones which gave Railroad Commission candidate Lacy less than a majority of their votes for that office.

The Greenwood community, Precinct 2, was Republican by substantial, but not overwhelming, margins.

Republicans double strength in Texas' House delegation

DALLAS (AP) — Republicans have doubled their strength in the Texas delegation to the U.S. House — winning two new seats — but Democrats won most of the congressional races Tuesday as expected.

Republicans cheered the victory of rancher-attorney Tom Loeffler who defeated Democrat Nelson Wolff in the 21st District of Southwest Texas, which rambles from San Angelo to the Big Bend and is the state's largest district. The incumbent, Bob Krueger, vacated the seat to run for the U.S. Senate.

The other Texas Republican to win a new seat was Ron Paul, who won a close battle after a bitter campaign against Democratic incumbent Bob Gammage in District 22, which includes part of Houston and the Texas coast. The final unofficial count was Paul 54,246, and Gammage 53,190.

Loeffler was exuberant over his win as he spoke with a reporter over the noise of a victory party in his hometown of Kerrville.

"I want to control inflation, give us a real reduction in our taxes, balance our budget, and take away unnecessary regulatory controls," he said.

But Democrats took comfort in the key District 19 win of State Sen. Kent Hance, 35, of Lubbock, who defeated Republican George W. Bush, son of the former national GOP chairman and CIA director. The seat is being vacated by George Mahon, 77, dean of the U.S. House, who has held it for the past 44 years.

Hance, who was born and reared in West Texas, portrayed the Connecticut-born, Ivy League-educated Bush as an "outsider" in the hard-fought campaign.

Bush, conceding defeat, said, "I'm proud of my family and my background. I'm not going to abandon it."

In other congressional races, Democrats prevailed as expected, winning all but the two seats held by Republican incumbents.

Both campaign camps, however, denied they were responsible for any low-brow campaign dirty tricks.

The race with Krueger represented for Tower the most serious threat ever to his senate seat.

Krueger went to the House in 1974 in a stunning victory and it seemed inevitable that he would eventually reach higher. And Tower became the target.

Krueger has described himself as an independent Democrat while Tower is considered a hawkish, conservative Republican. Krueger's team prided itself on the way it courted the Mexican-American vote although Tower was strong in many rural, South Texas areas.

Tire and uncertain of his political future, Tower went to bed around 2 a.m. and issued no statement on the vote count. Krueger, surrounded by a somber and hopeful campaign staff, relaxed in solitude in his Austin hotel suite while votes continued to trickle in.

Overnight frost, freeze not in Permian Basin forecast

A hard freeze which kills vegetation has yet to strike Midland this season, though frost — patches of freezing moisture — has been evidenced, particularly on windows and windshields in early mornings.

But Midland should be far from both today and Thursday, as the low for tonight is to drop to the mid-40s, following a high today in the low 70s. Thursday's high is to be in the upper 70s.

The earliest recorded freeze in the Midland area was 32 degrees on Oct. 31, 1949, said a weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The latest freeze was 32 degrees on Dec. 6, 1954.

But the average freeze date, which precedes winter by more than a month, is Nov. 11. Winter officially falls on Dec. 22.

Today's overnight low of 40 degrees was far off the record low — 22 degrees in 1938 — for a Nov. 8. And Tuesday's high of 58 degrees was well below the record high — 88 degrees in 1963 — for a Nov. 7.

Winds today and tonight are to be southwesterly at 5 to 10 mph hour.

Sunset today is to be at 5:54 p.m. Sunrise Thursday is to happen at 7:12 a.m.

(that hurt), it was that direct mailing," Hill said.

Hill told supporters early today, "I know we're going to win." But he stopped short of claiming the office. "We may have to have a victory breakfast," he told late-staying workers at an Austin hotel.

Computer problems at counting agencies caused tabulations to trickle in. They were inconclusive at best, evidenced by optimistic comment from both camps.

Both Hill and Clements brought big money to the campaign, with Clements pouring in some $6 million and Hill not too far behind.

Prior to the election, each cited polls showing him in the lead and each claimed victory in a series of televised debates.

Fires claim lives

By The Associated Press

Early-morning fires in homes in New York City and Washington, D.C., killed two women and eight children today, fire officials reported.

The New York fire started in the cellar of a three-story wood-frame dwelling in the South Bronx, and killed a woman and five children, authorities said. Four other persons were hospitalized with injuries and three escaped serious harm.

largely by way of Monahans Draw.

"This is the moral equivalent of war!"

Midland's friend has other suggestions to redirect the current until Odessa corrects its waste overflow and error:

Midland could build a "bigger and better" sewage treatment plant across from the Odessa Country Club estates.

"Since gravity would be against us, I would suggest a massive and high inclined-plane (earthworks) to enable us to get the angle on 'em."

The earthworks would be coupled with a "gigantic holding basin on top of this hill" and would employ "quick-release" flood gates.

"This (basin) is important," says the satirical comic, HR, "because Ector (County) has the population advantage, and this sort of installation would enable us to sort of save up!"

"Then, periodically, when we had a full load, we could send a regular tsunami of effluent directly to their affluent."

It's a project the whole of Midland could share in.

"Frankly," HR says in self-praise, "a more democratic idea has never been thought of..." in that every Midlander could contribute in his or her own fashion to the cause.

"Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition," says HR.

In the background, you can almost hear the flush of victory and the agony of reciprocally treated Odessans.

But over that, even, you can hear HR echoing the outrage of many who live "downstream" in Midland County. His satire may speak louder and stronger in the long flow than those in the Tall City who would settle the matter with a lawsuit or a bomb.

NEW YORK — Yul Brynner, who confesses that "the real weakness I have is for spareribs," says he's had a weakness of stomach — along with general pain and distress — since downing a double helping of the goodies four years ago at Trader Vic's.

Brynner wants $3 million for his pain and is due to take his suit against the restaurant into Manhattan Civil Court today.

The actor, now starring on Broadway in "The King and I," says his doctors told him his meal of spareribs eaten the evening of Nov. 3, 1974, gave him trichonosis poisoning. Brynner says his sickness forced him to miss rehearsals of the show in which he was then appearing, "Home Sweet Homer," and to suffer pain while on tour with "The King and I."

His lawyer, Harry Lipsig, says Brynner has been told he "will never fully recover from the effects of said infection and poisoning."

LONDON (AP) — Rock star Elton John, reportedly exhausted and overworked from weeks of promoting his latest record album, today is "resting comfortably" in a London hospital after collapsing at his Windsor home with chest pains.

John, 31, was rushed 20 miles to the exclusive Harley Street Clinic in West London Tuesday. He was admitted to the coronary care unit, but doctors said he had not had a heart attack.

"He was admitted in a conscious condition as an investigative case. He is comfortable and sat up tonight to watch television," said a clinic spokesman.

A statement issued by the clinic and Rocket Records, the recording company owned by the singer, said: "Elton John has definitely not had a coronary. Tests are being conducted, and he will be staying in the clinic overnight."

When he collapsed, John was preparing for a trip to Paris and a widely publicized final hair transplant.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — For the time being, Patricia Hearst will stay put — in prison serving a seven-year sentence on a bank robbery conviction.

U.S. District Court Judge William Orrick Jr. refused on Tuesday to set aside Miss Hearst's conviction or modify her sentence. She had alleged her trial was "reduced to a mockery, a farce and a sham because of ineffective assistance of counsel."

In denying all Miss Hearst's motions, Orrick said "none of the evidence offered in her behalf ... would entitle her to relief."

Orrick also said her allegations of inadequate representation by famed trial lawyer F. Lee Bailey were "speculative, unfounded assertions completely unwarranted by the record."

Miss Hearst has already served 20 months of her sentence and will be eligible for parole July 11. She was charged with the April 15, 1974, robbery of a San Francisco bank with Symbionese Liberation Army members who had kidnapped her Feb. 4, 1974.

"We played 14 holes, and he didn't hit a single soul," Nicklaus joked Tuesday after an exhibition round with the Philippines' chief executive. "Mr. Ford would have killed four or five."

Wayward shots by Ford struck spectators in at least two exhibitions he played while president.

By JIM STEINBERG
R-T News Staff

Perhaps he had been stalking Tuesday night's victory all his life.

He was one of what turned out to be five contenders for the office of U.S. Congressman, 19th Congressional District of Texas, in the May 1978 primary.

And early this morning in Lubbock, Kent Hance of that city basked in the glow of his election to the coveted congressional seat formerly occupied by George Mahon, who retired after a distinguished 44-year career.

Hance, 35, an attorney who became one of the youngest members of the Texas Senate in 1974, said his "prior legislative experience" was the most important of several factors contributing to his warding off of rival George Bush, a Midland Republican.

Throughout his campaign, Hance hammered away at the experience he gained in Austin as his platform for higher office.

Athough he received little support from the Permian Basin area — and until the final weeks of election countdown, did little to seek that support — Hance vowed Tuesday night "to be a good Congressman for the Permian Basin and a strong area advocate for the oil and gas interests of the area.

"I enjoyed having a worthy opponent like George Bush. He was good for the district," Hance noted.

"We got to be friends during the campaign. Sure we did disagree, but you can differ and disagree without being disagreeable."

Hance credited his volunteers with getting out the winning vote and overcoming any disadvantage created by Bush's superior campaign funding.

Some political observers charged Hance's campaign lacked the sustained intensity of Bush's, and there had been speculation before Tuesday's showdown that perhaps he waited too long to really get his own campaign into high gear.

But amid the jubilation of 400 well-wishers and friends at the home of campaign treasurer Mike Higgin in Lubbock, the Dimmitt native said in a telephone interview that because of his experience in the 19th District area as a state senator, and because he and his wife were natives of another part of the district and still had relatives there, he had an unshakable public following.

During the final weeks of the campaign, Hance focused his campaign strategy on what he described as better "credentials" as a West Texan than those of Connecticut-born Bush.

Although conceding Tuesday night this strategy might have had a payoff at the polls, Hance reaffirmed his belief that his legislative experience was what people really voted for.

A touch of weariness edged the excitment of Hance's voice on Tuesday. He late last week had quipped that his campaign was the longest in the history of the 19th Congressional District. Now, at last, it was over.

Kent Hance

Rural districts key for Hance

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

Kent Hance won the 19th Congressional District race Tuesday in what might be termed a very handy manner.

It was the rural districts that pushed him over the edge in Tuesday's general election to make Hance only the second person to serve the 19th District as its U.S. representative.

Unofficial vote totals, with three boxes out, showed Hance with 52,890 votes over Bush's 46,922.

The figures break down to 52.3 percent of the vote for Hance and 47.7 percent for Bush.

Although Bush conceded to Hance before 11 p.m. Tuesday, final votes from Lubbock and throughout the district still were not in by noon today.

The Lubbock tally was slowed by computer breakdowns, and the rural districts have a reputation for not sending in swift reports because of paper balloting.

The 19th race was viewed by political authorities as one place a Republican had a good chance of grabbing a heretofore Democratic House seat. But the rural people came in off the farm to cast their ballot for "good ol' boy" Hance.

The 35-year-old attorney will continue the tradition of the district's congressman being a Democrat from the Lubbock area.

He replaces veteran legislator George Mahon, who has served as the district's only representative since the position was created about 44 years ago.

This left the field wide open for competitors, and Hance threw his hat into the ring in September 1977. His opponent in the primary was Morris Sheats, a Lubbock minister, whom Hance soundly defeated.

Bush, 32, a local independent oil and gas producer, announced his candidacy for the office, back in July 1977. This was Bush's first try for a political office.

In the Republican primary, he eventually faced Joe Hickox of Shallowater, a retired military man, and Jim Reese of Odessa, a businessman and veteran of the district race. Reese had opposed Mahon in the 1976 election.

In the general election, Bush carried Midland County, 14,159 to 4,287.

Hance campaign workers had projected the Democrat would win if the margin of defeat in Midland was less than 14,000 votes.

While Bush was favored to carry the Midland vote by a heavy margin, he still lost a couple of precincts to Hance, these being on the south and east side of Midland.

One Bush staffer remarked that Hance supporters had concentrated their energies in Midland.

And the results were: Precinct 5, 325 to 62, and Precinct 10, 422 to 217.

Among the strongest areas in Midland for Bush were Precinct 8 with 1,217 to 186, Precinct 14 with 1,108 to 142, and Precinct 26 with 1,326 to 140.

Absentee votes also favored Bush heavily with the count being 2,316 to 424.

Final tally for Lubbock County showed Hance with 20,777 with Bush 15,399.

Hance had campaigned on his experience as a state senator and his knowledge of the agriculture business. The Dimmitt native told audiences he was raised on a farm and owned a farm. Therefore, he understood the problems farmers are facing.

Rural counties who showed they understood Hance by giving him their strong support were Parmer, 1,665 to Bush's 663; Castro with 2,099 compared to 438 and Bailey with 1,041 to 486.

Andrews County, with its large supply of oil and gas, shied away from the rest and went with Bush, 1,147 to 994 for Hance.

Bush had been campaigning in the 17-county district for six days a week every week since he won a runoff against Jim Reese. The headquarters had been moved to Lubbock in the summer to give Bush a central base for the campaign and to concentrate on those areas known to favor Hance.

While the two men agreed the main issues in the campaign were inflation, government spending, oil and gas and agriculture, each disagreed over the effectiveness the other would have. Bush had said he would not have to "go toe-to-toe" with the Democratic as Hance would in order to get his policies accepted.

Both men also conducted campaigns longer than many presidential campaigns.

In addition to the normal primary and general election races, Bush also had to fight Reese in a runoff for the Republican nomination.

But the Midland man said at the time of the runoff the extra race was serving to give him additional expoure to the public.

In the primary and runoff, Bush received few votes in the rural nothern districts. But he did pick up some votes in the general election.

Cochran County cast no votes for him in either election, but 305 favored him in Tuesday's race. Martin County only reported four people voting for Bush in the runoff, but 385 went for him Tuesday.

The same applies to Bailey County, where only six people voted for Bush in the primary, but 486 cast their ballot for him in the general election.

Ector County voters elect appointee as county judge

Ector County Judge Gary Watkins, a Democrat, racked up nearly a 5,000-vote margin over challenger Republican George Schlemeyer to win voter approval for the job he was appointed to more than one year ago.

Appointed to the Ector post when Joe Connally resigned to become district judge, Watkins, 31, wrestled the impressive margin from Schlemeyer, a real estate broker who campaigned to place a non-lawyer in the county judge post.

The final vote was 11,711 to 6,738.

The GOP, however, was able to crack one spot open on the otherwise solidly Democratic Ector County Commissioner's Court.

Bill Hicks, Ector County auditor, unseated Joe Johnson, the Democratic incumbent county commissioner for Precinct 2, with a 4,427 to 2,424 vote.

McGee tallied 2,355 votes while his opponent Franklin "Frank" M. Nicholson received 1,450 votes. Incumbent Peace Justice Harold Sligar, who was unseated by Gee in the primary, received 692 write-in votes.

In the contested race for Precinct 4 constable post, Harry Boucher overwhelmed his write-in challenger, Leonard Garcia, by a 1,885 to 85 vote margin.

DAWSON COUNTY

Although write-in candidates didn't fare well in Ector County, their fortunes were considerably better farther north.

Voters in Lamesa and the rest of Dawson County did more than their share of writing in candidates names for the justice of the peace post at large.

John F. Parchman was the victorious write-in candidate with 1,534 votes. Nelson received only 158 votes.

Other write-in candidates and the vote tallies are: Fernando Vera, 1,373; Richard W. Meador, 765; R. F. Sprayberry, 140, and Shirley H. McGlaun, 152.

In the race for county commissioner Precinct 2, the write-in candidate, A.B. Furlow, lost to Kenneth Pearson, whose name appeared on the ballot, by a 490 to 527 vote margin.

GLASSCOCK COUNTY

Alex Fry upset Precinct 2 Commissioner candidate G. R. Pearce by a write-in vote of 59 to 55.

ANDREWS COUNTY

Duey Braswell, a write-in candidate for Precinct 4 constable, defeated E. G. Pritchard in Andrews County's only contested race. The vote was 1,068 to 989.

UPTON COUNTY

In the only contested race in Upton County, C. T. Fletcher defeated Willie D. Brown, a write-in candidate, by a 251 to 79 vote margin.

County favors Bill Ahders in 2-to-1 vote on judgeship

By ED TODD
R-T Staff Writer

Midland Municipal Court Judge William B. "Bill" Ahders beat Midland County Judge Blake Hansen by a 2-to-1 margin Tuesday night in the race for the four-year county judge term, reclaiming the judgeship for Republicans in the process.

"Great," said Republican Ahders, 62, of his 11,323-to-6,258 win over Democrat Blake Hansen.

"I am just pleased. I am very happy with all of the people who have worked for me" in the campaign. "I have never been in politics before. I'm overwhelmed."

Ahders carried 20 of 28 voter precincts in the election, which attracted more than 18,000 voters to the polls.

Ahders, municipal court judge since his retirement in 1968 as a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, ran against the 29-year-old Hansen, who was appointed to the judgeship last March in a 3-0 vote of the Midland County Commissioners' Court.

"We've lost," Hansen conceded even before the returns had been finalized. "I think the George Bush vote definitely got the people out. And because of it, I think a lot of people...voted straight (Republican)...just pulled the Republican lever (on the voting machines)."

Hansen was an assistant district attorney in 1976 under former District Attorney Jim Mashburn. He was appointed by the three Democratic county commissioners after County Judge Barbara Culver, 52, was named a state district court judge by Gov. Dolph Briscoe. She succeeded Joseph Mims who resigned his post as judge of the Domestic Relations Court.

Hansen expressed disappointment in his defeat.

"You work so long for something, you got to feel disappointed," he said. "When you have two candidates, one is going to have to lose."

Though Ahders outspent Hansen by about 3-to-1 in the campaign, Hansen said he doesn't think "money had anything to do with it. It may have helped," he said.

Ahders will take office Jan. 1, when the commissioners' court apparently will lose a Democratic commissioner, Charlie Welch, and will gain a Republican, Sam Snoddy, in the Precinct 2 race.

Ahders said he would, if asked by the Midland City Council, recommend a successor to the municipal judgeship.

"If they ask me, I certainly will (suggest a successor)," Adhers said. "I'm most pleased to have worked with the city" for 11 years. "I appreciate that."

Though now in his eighth month as county judge, Hansen said he has benefited from his courthouse experience and that he has no second thoughts about accepting the judgeship appointment last March. The post pays $24,000 annually.

"(I have) none (misgivings) whatsoever," Hansen said. "I'm sorry that I don't have the chance to serve Midland for the next four years."

"I enjoyed serving the people as county judge and wouldn't take for the experience."

Hansen said both he and Ahders ran "a very nice race and everyone ran on his merit."

In his campaigning, Ahders had focused on his maturity, judgment, "proven leadership, administrative experience and judicial responsibility."

Hansen, too, had pointed to his leadership, and to his holding "the line on taxes by keeping the county's budget within its means," by getting "the maximum benefit out of each tax dollar," and with fighting crime by the court route.

Hansen said he wishes Ahders the "best of luck" and that he would lend his expertise in county government in assisting Ahders in his transition to county government.

Judge Culver, who became Midland County's first Republican elected official and judge in a "hot" race in 1962 against incumbent Democrat Noel Cason, Tuesday night said she was "delighted that two such fine people sought this job.

"And I did encourage Judge Ahders

Lacy fails in bid for railroad post

By GUY SULLIVAN
R-T Staff Writer

"You always want to win. But it's too big a state to try to run a statewide race on less than $100,000," said Midland's James W. Lacy, Republican who lost to Democrat John Poerner in a race for a seat on the Texas Railroad Commission Tuesday.

Unoffical returns show Poerner leading Lacy by a margin of 304,549 to 112,973 statewide, with 200 of 254 counties reporting, according to The election 78

Associated Press. Only 145 of those counties have complete returns.

"The major reason I lost was because I was running on the Republican Party ticket in a Democratic state and you combine that with the lack of name identification and you've got real problems," Lacy said.

The West Texan did carry Midland County, tallying 11,986 to his opponent's 5,181 votes, according to official results.

The former roughneck congratulated his political opponent by telephone about 11:30 p.m. Tuesday after listening to election results at home.

That's about when Lacy said statewide totals showed he had approximately 95,000 votes to Poerner's 195,000.

"It appeared that he was going to win handily," said Lacy. "It's just the name identification problem."

Lacy said his opponent was supported financially by political action groups from both the oil and transportation industries.

He credited Poerner with spending at least $500,000 through the runoffs compared to his own expenditures amounting to about $85,000.

"He was nice and very complimentary," said Lacy of Poerner regarding their phone conversation.

The Midlander said Poerner told him, "we had both run as clean a race as has been run and that it was a direct reflection upon my character and integrity.

"I did say that if he needed someone as a sounding board on some of his problems that he could call me and I'd be glad to visit with him," said Lacy.

The Midland businessman said there will be "some real problems with this national energy bill passed by Congress recently. If I can give him some guidance, perhaps it will be best for the state and the oil industry, also."

Lacy specifically warned of "problems" connected with the natural gas pricing aspects of the federal energy bill.

"There are some 17 different pricing formulas within this law. I don't believe it's a good bill because it puts intrastate gas under federal control and provides for allocation of Texas natural gas to other states," he said.

He termed the bill a potential "regulatory nightmare" when it comes time to try "to determine which price will the gas wells be entitled to. With 23 different prices, you've got problems."

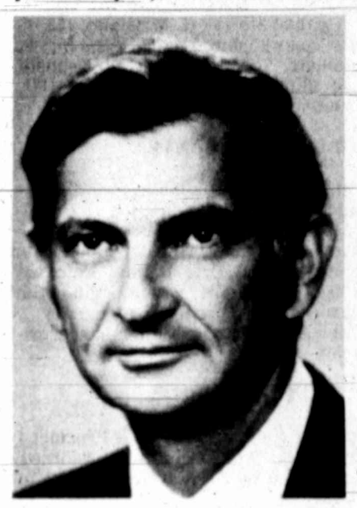

Lacy said he is certain he "probably will not try to run again."

He said he was "recruited" for this race by Polly Sowell of McAllen, former Republican Party state vice-chairman.

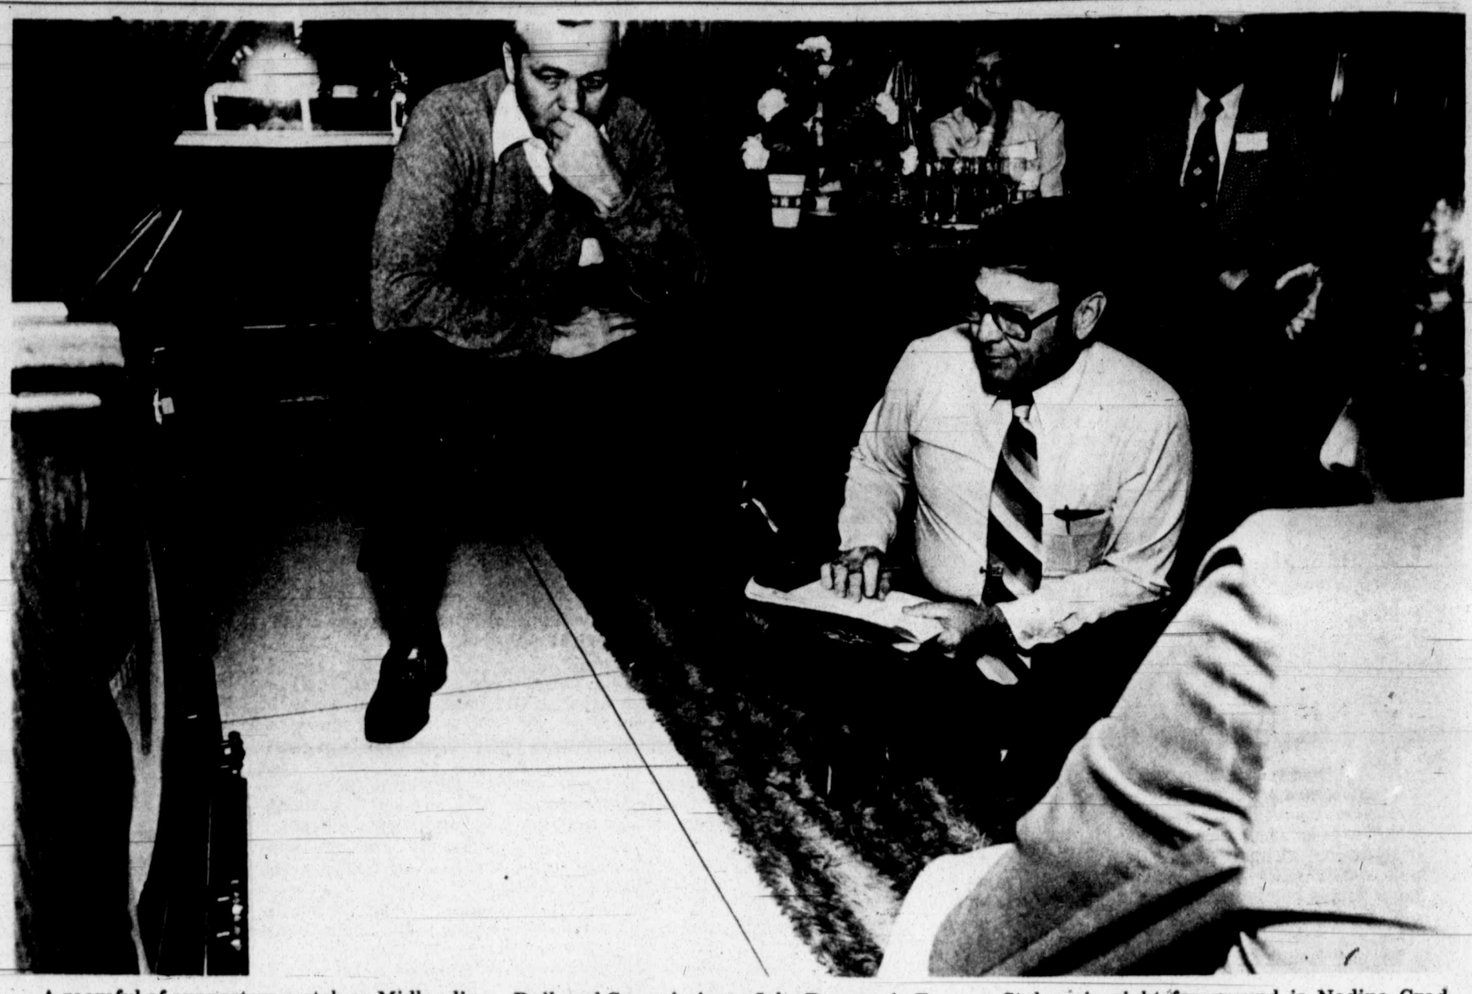

The job of railroad commissioner in Texas "is an important office," said Lacy.

However, from a political standpoint, he said his loss "isn't going to be critical. Had I won, we would definitely have a two-party state.

"Once we elect a Republican to the state Railroad Commission, why the two-party system will have arrived in Texas," he said Tuesday night.

Busing, gambling draw most referenda interest

By The Associated Press

Voters in 38 states spoke their mind when they marked their ballots: they don't want school children bused, they don't want gambling legalized, they want the most vicious criminals put to death. And more.

Citizens of these states voted on some 200 referenda, constitutional amendments and initiatives — issues that ranged from whether they would restrict construction of nuclear power plants to whether they would buy their dentures from makers as well as dentists.

Here is how key issues on ballots around the country did Tuesday:

ABORTION: In Oregon, a measure to prohibit using state money to finance abortions for women on welfare was narrowly rejected, with 52 percent of voters opposing the prohibition.

BUSING: Massachusetts voters, undeterred that their decision could not alter Boston's federally-ordered busing program, emphatically endorsed a prohibition on assigning children to schools based on race. With 25 percent of the vote counted, they favored the prohibition nearly 3-to-1.

In Washington state 67 percent of voters endorsed a proposal intended to dismantle Seattle's busing program. The plan bars transferring children to any but the nearest school; its approval was expected to provoke a court challenge.

CRIME: California voters approved 3-to-1 a measure to expand the list of crimes punishable by death. Oregon voters by a vote of 2-to-1 favored a measure reinstating the death penalty for certain crimes.

GAY RIGHTS: Homosexuals didn't make any gains in Dade County, Fla., but they were holding their ground in California and Seattle.

In Dade County, nearly 60 percent voted down a local gay rights provision like one they repealed last year. Fifty-seven percent of California voters opposed requiring school boards to fire or refuse to hire teachers who commit or advocate homosexual acts. In Seattle, with 33 percent of the vote tallied, an effort was failing that would repeal a local ban on housing and job discrimination against homosexuals.

SMOKING: A plan that would bar or restrict smoking in almost every public place was rejected by 55 percent of California voters.

BOTTLES: Nearly 60 percent of Nebraska voters said no to a plan to impose a 5-cent deposit on all beverage containers. An Alaska proposal to impose a similar 10-cent deposit was also failing in early tallies.

NUCLEAR POWER: Montana voters approved by a wide margin a measure imposing such rigid restrictions on building nuclear power plants that its passage was considered tantamount to a ban on such projects.

EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT: In Florida, where the legislature has refused to ratify the federal ERA, voters resoundingly rejected a state amendment. The tide flowed against the federal ERA in Nevada, where voters were polled to "advise" the state legislature, which also has not ratified ERA.

RIGHT-TO-WORK: Missourians rejected an angrily fought right-to-work measure to outlaw Contracts that require employees to join a union. In Michigan, 56 percent of voters accepted a plan to allow state troopers to bargain collectively.

GAMBLING: Only Missourians said yes to gambling: They approved a wording change that would permit them to take part in games like the Readers' Digest Sweepstakes.

But Virginia voters refused to legalize pari-mutuel betting at horsetracks. New Jerseyans declined to legalize sports betting on jai alai and, in Florida, voters refused to allow casino gambling along Miami Beach.

DENTURES: In Oregon, despite a $410,000 campaign by the American Dental Association, a tooth-rattling 78 percent of the electorate ruled that they should be able to have their false teeth fitted by denture makers instead of only by dentists.

HEALTH COSTS: A plan to drop a lid atop health costs in North Dakota died when 76 percent of the voters rejected the proposal. The measure would have authorized the state health officer to hold public hearings, then set maximum fees for all medical services. The state medical profession orchestrated an expensive media campaign in opposition to the proposal.

Garrahy reelected in Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Democratic Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy has been returned to Rhode Island's highest office. And Sen. Claiborne Pell overwhelmingly defeated his Republican challenger.

Garrahy, who pulled in 54 percent of the vote two years ago, swamped former U.S. Attorney Lincoln C. Almond, a Republican, and Joseph A. Doorley Jr., an independent and former mayor of Providence.

Pell, chairman of the Senate Rules Committee, won his fourth six-year term, soundly defeating Republican challenger James G. Reynolds by a margin of 221,942 to 73,006.

The 59-year-old senator's winning margin of 75 percent was the largest of all major Democrats. Garrahy was returned to the Statehouse for another two years by a 63 percent margin.

In the 2nd Congressional District, incumbent Democrat Edward P. Beard rode the coattails of Pell and Garrahy to beat environmentalist Claudine Schneider, a political rookie running as a Republican.

Midland votes generally like state on issues

By SUSAN TOTH
R-T Staff Writer

Midland County voters gave a resounding yes to the Tax Relief Amendment to the Texas constitution Tuesday, but said no to the idea of allowing cities and counties to issue bonds to create jobs or redevelop blighted areas.

Midlanders also rejected the notion of expanding the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace courts.

Statewide, voters agreed with the Midland view with the exception of the proposed increase in justice of the peace jurisdictions. That amendment passed statewide, but lost by a slim 52 percent margin here.

The fate of Amendment No. 3 to allow cities to issue bonds for redevelopment of run-down areas was undecided this morning, but it seemed to be going down to defeat statewide.

The Tax Relief Amendment got the approval of 82.6 percent of the Midland voters, 11,855 to 2,489. The amendment was designed to give tax relief to the elderly and disabled and to redefine the tax base in several areas.

One important clause in the amendment will allow the Legislature to remove intangible assets — paper values such as money in bank accounts, stocks, bonds and insurance values — from the tax base. The measure will save the Midland schools district some $1 million in state aid it would have lost had the amendment not passed.

The amendment also will limit an increase in state spending to the rate of growth of the Texas economy.

Carrying the spirit of the tax revolt forward, Midlanders and state voters rejected two proposals to allow cities to use their credit for major projects by issuing revenue bonds without voter approval.

Amendment No. 2, which was defeated in Midland by a 55.6 percent margin, would have allowed cities or counties to issue revenue bonds to develop employment opportunities.

The amendment was not expected to have a large effect on Midland's industrial recruitment program because financing was available from private sources within the community, according to Doug Henson, head of First National Bank's ecomonic development department.

Midlanders also rejected the proposal to allow cities to issue bonds to redevelop blighted areas in the city and repay the debt with the tax increase from the redeveloped property.

The amendment would have allowed cities to appropriate the increase in tax revenue from any other taxing district, such as a school district, to help pay for the bonds.

Amendment No. 1, to allow the state to buy certain items from the handicapped without competitive bidding, passed both here and statewide. The measure passed in Midland with a 67.1 percent margin.

Amendment No. 4 to exempt solar- and wind-powered energy devices from taxation also passed with a 58.9 percent margin in Midland.

The amendment to increase the number of associate judges on the courts of civil appeals passed with a 58.4 percent margin. The measure is designed to speed up the appeals process.

The only expansion of the bonding power granted by voters was to allow water districts to issue bonds or otherwise lend their credit for fire-fighting services where none were available. The amendment passed with a 60.4 percent margin here.

The State Building Commission and the State Building Fund will be abolished with the passage of Amendment No. 7.

Most area counties were in the same camp with Midlanders on the amendments.

All gave sound backing to the Tax Relief Amendment and downed the amendments to allow bonds for job development and redevelopment of blighted areas.

Howard and Ector county voters apparently felt the same way Midland voters did, rejecting three of the proposals and approving six.

Dawson County went further and turned down measures to exempt solar- and wind-powered energy devises, to expand the JP courts' juridiction and to increase the size of the courts of civil appeals.

Upton County voters chose to turn down both the expansion of the courts of civil appeals and the jurisdiction of the JP courts, while Martin County voters approved both those measures.

Boren wins U.S. Senate seat in history-making campaign

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Democratic Gov. David Boren made history once and almost did it twice Tuesday with an overwhelming victory in the race to succeed ailing Republican Dewey Bartlett in the U.S. Senate.

Boren, 37, became the first sitting governor to win election to the Senate with his landslide victory over Republican nominee Bob Kamm and four independents.

His victory margin also was the second largest in an Oklahoma Senate race, ranking second only to the late Josh Lee's landslide win 42 years ago.

With 2,548 of 2,830 precincts reporting, Boren had 432,854 votes, or 65 percent, to 215,651, or 32 percent, for Kamm.

The independents split up the remaining small share of the vote. Glenn Hager had 4,342 votes, followed by Riley Donica with 3,199, Paul Trent with 2,822 and R.K. Carter with 2,110.

Boren carried 74 of the state's 77 counties in regaining for the Democrats the Senate seat Bartlett has held for six years.

Bartlett's recurring bouts with lung cancer prevented him from seeking re-election and Kamm, pressed into service as a late replacement, simply was no match for Boren.

More than 100 Lee students made honor society members

PBGC to host Rotary Club

Members of the Midland Downtown Rotary Club will hold their Thursday noon meeting in the Permian Basin Graduate Center at the corner of Main and Illinois streets, J. Rudolph Wright, Rotary president, announced today.

Secretary R.O. Smith said it will be a "box lunch" session.

A tour of the new Graduate Center is on schedule for the visitors.

Hosts for the session will be Dr. Jack Elam, president of the Center, and Patricia Beck, executive director

Deputy resigns

LAMESA — Dawson County Sheriff Guy Kinnison has resigned, effective Nov. 15, citing "economic reasons."

Kinnison said he has accepted another position outside of law enforcement but will continue to live in Dawson County.

Kinnison became sheriff eight years ago when he was appointed to fill a vacancy created by Shorty Hancock's resignation. The current sheriff was chief deputy at that time.

County commissioners now will have to appoint Kinnison's successor.

Bandsmen to compete

Midland bandsmen are preparing for the Nov. 18 University Inter-Scholastic League marching contest to be held in Andrews.

Grades 7 through 12 are participating in the UIL Region 6 marching competition, announced Bill Cormack, fine arts coordinator for the school district.

Lee and Midland high schools will be in competition with other AAAA schools while Edison and Austin freshman schools will vie with the AAA schools, Cormack said.

The junior high schools will compete in the CC class.

Board to name textbook panel

BIG SPRING — Members of the Big Spring school board will appoint the textbook committee to review new books for the coming school year at a board meeting Thursday night.

Trustees also are scheduled to review administrative suggestions on student suspensions at the 5:15 p.m. meeting at the senior high school.

Snoddy edges Welch by 21; Recount possible

By MARK VOGLER
R-T Staff Writer

The votes are in, but no victor has been declared in the race for Midland County commissioner, Precinct 2.

Results indicate Sam H. Snoddy tallied a slim 21-vote margin over his opponent, incumbent Charlie Welch.

But today, everyone seemed to be taking a wait-and-see attitude before claiming victory or acknowledging defeat.

Snoddy, a political novice who campaigned for county commissioner because he opposed the policies of the man in office, said he was unprepared to declare victory Tuesday night after posting the narrow win over the 10-year-incumbent Democrat.

Snoddy conceded the possibility that the battle of 53-year-olds to represent Precinct 2 may be decided on a recount.

Darrell Smith, Democratic chairman of Midland County, said Tuesday night he would recommend a recount, but "it will be up to Mr. Welch."

Welch said this morning he does not know whether he will seek a recount.

"It seems to me it might be an insult to those good people who worked their heads off on the election all day and half the night," said Welch.

County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry today checked official return sheets against the tally sheet compiled Tuesday night from telephoned results and found no discrepancies.

Official canvass of the votes will take place Monday afternoon when Midland County commissioners meet.

In the meantime, Sheriff Dallas Smith said he will post a deputy at the voting machine warehouse "so no one would have any questions about security."

That decision was made by the Election Board, consisting of Smith, Mrs. Cherry, County Judge Blake Hansen and the Democratic and Republican county chairmen, Smith said.

Snoddy jumped out to a big lead early, taking the absentee votes by a 677 to 306 margin. But after all the ballots were counted, the tally stood at 2,496 to 2,475 — too close for comfort.

Welch polled 776 more votes than when he defeated Ed Harris back in 1974 (1,699 to 1,147).

But this time he was badly beaten in the absentee ballots, was outspent in campaign finances by more than 2 to 1 ($8,950 to $4,236) and was basically "out-Bushed," because of a large voter turnout in support of Midland's Republican congressional candidate George Bush.

election 78

"It's still too close to call. Before making any comments, I think I'll wait until somebody says 'you're it' or 'you're not'," said Snoddy in a telephone interview from his home moments after the votes were counted.

Welch, meanwhile, had little to say about the results.

"I have no idea what I'll do. I haven't requested a recount and I haven't decided whether I will have one. I may not know until tomorrow (Wednesday) or a few days," Welch said.

"All I've got to say at this point is that I'd like to thank all the people who voted for me and worked hard for my campaign."

Welch said he expected the contest to be close and added that Bush "pulled a tremendous amount of votes" for the Republican ticket, contributing to Snoddy's overall total.

Snoddy remarked "I didn't know what to expect.

"This is my first time in politics. I wrote everything I could think of, put it on campaign literature and just took care of my own business."

Snoddy, who had been conducting a door-to-door campaign two hours a day since Sept. 17, drew nearly one third of his votes from his own neighborhood in Precinct 14, where he outpolled Welch 776 to 455.

Welch ran strongest in the heavy minority 10th precinct, winning by a 541 to 104 margin.

Snoddy took Precinct 23 (301 to 177) and Precinct 12 (440 to 311). Welch claimed the 2nd (252 to 74), 16th (344 to 85) and 25th (89 to 39) boxes.

Welch, a farmer and rancher prior to becoming commissioner, ran well in the rural districts and pulled the minority vote.

Snoddy, a Midland oil man for 27 years, seemingly attracted the white collar urban vote.

Welch said that if the votes are certified as official, he plans to "go back to making a living." He said he has no future political plans.

The incumbent commissioner has lived in Midland since 1934 and has a farming background. He lists his educational background as graduation from Midland High School and "the school of hard knocks."

Snoddy, who was born and raised on a farm in Gilliam, Mo., is an independent oil operator. He received a bachelor degree in economics from Central College in Fayette, Mo.

If the votes are upheld as official, Snoddy said his first action would be to recommend a $3,250 reduction in the salary of county commissioner. The current salary is $13,144.

"My first priority is to decrease the commissioners' salary. When I first found out what the school board and city council get for managing budgets that are much higher, I decided that this would be proper," Snoddy said.

He sees county commissioner as only a part-time job.

"I'll continue to be an oil operator. I'm just a businessman, not a politician. I'm not going to be a career politician," he said.

Snoddy, during the campaign, had accused his opponent of being a politician rather than a county commissioner.

Welch, who oversees a farm and ranch east of town, said the commissioner's salary is adequate since the task takes three quarters of his time.

Snoddy, who had charged the Democratic-controlled commissioners court was responsible for wasting county funds, said he got "upset" over the fiscal policies of Welch, and decided to run for office.

"I've always been of the opinion that if you don't like something, you do something about it or you keep your mouth shut. So, I decided to run for office," he said.

Other policies the Marine Corps veteran hopes to implement as a freshman commissioner include redistricting of the county commissioner precincts, adoption of a zero-based budget and withdrawing the county's endorsement of the Midland Community Action Agency.

Welch credited himself with being responsible for keeping taxes down in Midland County. He said he is proud that Midland County is still using 1967 property values, with new construction being placed on the rolls at what its 1967 value would have been.

Man behind Shiite Moslem revolt in Iran living in exile in Paris

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

PARIS (AP) — The man who may shape the future of Iran, a country ravaged by political violence and crippling strikes, smiles gently as he speaks of his followers cutting Iranian policemen to pieces.

There is no visible sign of the firebrand fanatic in the Ayatullah Khomaini. The old man sitting cross-legged on the floor of his suburban home rarely raises his voice. But that gentle voice, exiled from Iran since 1963, has aroused revolt among Shiite Moslems, who constitute more than 90 per cent of Iran's population.

The embattled government of Shah Mogammad Reza Pahlavi has accused Khomaini of masterminding a campaign to impose an anti-Western regime on one of the West's crucial suppliers of oil. Khomaini rejects the accusation that he is anti-Western.

"I am neither anti-Western nor anti-Soviet," he told an interviewer. "I am pro-Iranian, and I am against allowing American interests to rob Iran of its natural wealth."

Khomaini makes no secret of his hatred for the shah and has said in interviews that he wants to depose him and form an "Islamic republic." If the present effort fails, he said, he will call for all-out civil war.

He said he would reject any alliance with Iran's communists — even to overthrow the shah — because they are "against God." But he never has concealed his admiration for the late Prime Minister Mohamed Mossadegh, whose seizure of Iran's Western-run oil industry in 1951 threw the West into its first oil crisis.

Ayatullah means "sign of God." Iran's Shiite Moslems regard the 78-year-old Khomaini as one of the imams, or religious leaders, temporarily chosen by God to replace the promised "12th Imam," the bringer of ultimate salvation.

The crisis in Iran was sparked by orthodox Moslems demanding an end to the shah's westernizing reforms, which they say are contrary to the Koran, the Moslem holy book. They were joined by the political opposition and hundreds of thousands of strikers. It is estimated that more than 1,000 persons have died in civil strife since January.

The gray-bearded Khomaini was expelled from Iran in 1963 after he refused to stop inciting his followers against the shah, the Americans and Israel. For 15 years he lived in Iraq. Early this month, Iraq expelled him too and he came to France, joining hundreds of Iranian students and exiles here.

Khomaini found a temporary home in Neauphle le Chateau, 20 miles west of Paris, in a prefabricated home heated by an old-fashioned pot-bellied stove. The walls are covered with flowered wallpaper. Cracked plates — presumably left by the former occupants — are on display on an old sideboard, the only piece of furniture in Khomaini's room.

Wearing a jet black turban and a black cloak, Khomaini is surrounded by his followers in a corner of the room.

In accordance with Islamic custom, all visitors leave their shoes outside the door. No one dares interrupt him, but occasionally his monologue stirs them to laughter as he speaks with scathing sarcasm of the shah.

He generally avoids mentioning that the shah's police killed one of his sons years ago. But he constantly accuses the shah of ordering the police to murder the regime's leading opponents.

His statements assume that the collapse of the shah's government is imminent, and that the future revolutionary government will put the shah on trial and sentence him to "a minimum of life imprisonment."

Ahders wins with 2-to-1 margin

to run because I knew of his qualifications and his experience.

"I am delighted that Ahders won, and I think that he will make an outstanding county judge," Culver said.

County Commissioner Win Brown said Ahders will "make an excellent county judge. And he probably will be bending over backward for the minority and other groups that might (have felt) left out in this particular race."

It was Republican Brown who abstained from voting when Democratic commissioners Wright, Charlie Welch and Jack Leonard voted to name Hansen to the judgeship. Brown had recommended a non-candidate to serve as interim county.

Darrell Smith, county Democratic chairman, said "Judge Ahders is a fine man, and so is Blake Hansen."

However, Smith, who said he personally found "no great burden to support all the Democratic Party candidates," said the George Bush "charisma" was a "highly significant" factor in attracting votes to Ahders.

Bush, the Republican Party's congressional candidate, carried Midland County by a 3-to-1 margin but lost the 19th District to Democrat Kent Hance, who will succeed U.S. Rep. George Mahon.

Smith's Republican counterpart, Bill Shaner, however, said "the George Bush charisma" didn't have "anything to do with the race."

Shaner said Hansen's acceptance of the commissioner's court judgeship appointment abetted his defeat by Ahders.

"It's unfortunate that he got himself in this position," the GOP county chairman said. "It just came down to the people that the county judgeship is for the people to determine, and not the county commissioners. I think that hurt him (Hansen) more than anything else."

Clements, Tower most popular among Permian Basin voters

If all Texas had voted the way of the Permian Basin, Democrats John Hill and Bob Kreuger would have been run out of Texas.

Gubernatorial hopeful John Hill would have gone without capturing a county beside a meteoric Bill Clements, while senate-seeking Bob Krueger would have taken only two counties (Crane and Reagan) compared to John Tower's eight (Andrews, Dawson, Martin, Ector, Glasscock, Howard, Reagan and Upton) counties.

None of the winning Republican luster would have rubbed off on attorney general candidate Jim Baker who, in the 10-county area, was victorious only in Ector County against Democrat Mark White.

Dollar under heavy selling pressure in Tokyo, losing strength in Europe

LONDON (AP) — The dollar came under heavy selling pressure in Tokyo today and started with losses in Europe, stalling for a second straight day President Carter's currency rescue hopes.

Gold bullion prices headed upward for a second day.

Following Carter's announcement a week ago of a tight money policy dollar rates clawed their way back to levels last seen a month or two ago but far short of where they were at the beginning of the long slide more than a year ago.

For example the dollar's bottom against the West German mark last week was 1.7625 marks per dollar. At midmorning tody the dollar was being quoted in Frankfurt at 1.8888 marks, down from 1.8970 Tuesday and 23 per cent lower than in August 1977.

Despite help from the Japanese central bank the dollar fell more than a yen at Tokyo, closing at 1.88.40, compared to 189.125 Tuesday. The dollar has lost 22 percent against the yen this year.

One currency dealer said today's dollar-selling indicated banks are testing Carter's stated resolve to defend the U.S. currency.

The British pound, afflicted by worries over big labor wage demands, eased in London. At midmorning it was traded at $1.9680, compared to $1.9725 Tuesday.

Paris—4.2975 French francs, down from 4.3175.

Amsterdam—2.0410 guilders, down from 2.0475.

Milan—838.65 lire, down from 840.70.

In Zurich, gold bullion was quoted at $219.875 per Troy ounce, and in London the price was $219.625. Bullion closed Tuesday in both markets at $216.375.

Armed Forces News

Several Midland-area servicemen have been in the news recently. They include:

Air Force 2nd. Lt. David A. Pribyla, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond A. Pribyla of Tarzan, recently completed an officer rotary wing aviator course and received the silver wings of an Army aviator at the U.S. Army Aviation School, Fort Rucker, Ala.

Pribyla received a bachelor's degree in 1977 from Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

Students receiving training in helicopter flying techniques, including tactical instrument flying, maintenance, navigation and radio procedures.

Sgt. Willie K. Williams, son of Mrs. Bertha M. Williams of Big Spring, has graduated from the Air Force Training Command Noncommissioned Officer Leadership School at Sheppard AFB.

Sgt. Williams graduated from high school in Sulphur Springs, and attended Howard College in Big Spring.

Staff Sgt. Fernando G. Martinez son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Martinez, of Big Spring, recently was named the Outstanding Drill Sergeant of the basic trianing cycle for Company B, 5th Battalion of the 1st Basic Training Brigade at Fort Jackson, S.C.

The award is given to the individual who has made the most outstanding contribution to the training mission during the eight-week cycle.

Senior Airman Debra Hartsfield

Sgt. Martinez, who entered the Army in July 1972, attended the University of Hawaii at Honolulu.

Airman Jerry R. Riley, son of Mr. and Mrs. B.D. Riley of Lamesa, has graduated from at Sheppard AFB from the U.S. Air Force technical training course for heating systems specialists.

He is being assigned to Rhein-Main AB, Germany, for duty with a unit of the Military Airlift Command. Completion of the course earned him credits towards an associate in applied science degree through the Community College of the Air Force.

Airman Riley attended Klondike High School.

Senior Airman Debra K. Hartsfield, daughter of Mrs. Cleo Penny of Big Spring, was promoted to her present rank recently in the U.S. Air Force. She is serving at Shaw AFB, S.C., as a personnel specialist.

Airman Hartsfield attended Big Spring High School.

Sgt. Clifford J. Fields Sr. recently completed annual service practice at Sea Range, Korea.

He is a squad leader with the 2nd Infantry Division at Camp Mosier, Korea. He entered the Army in November 1976.

Sgt. Fields' father, Nelson Fields Jr., lives in Klondike.

Times microfilm service maintained

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Times microfilm service for libraries will have news articles for all 88 days the paper was shut down by a strike, the Times said in its first post-strike edition.

It said the paper had kept up with events for libraries and other research institutions and they will be receiving the stories on microfilm in manuscript form. The articles will be listed in the New York Times Index and abstracts stored in the computer terminals of its information bank service.

Mother charged in tot's death

DALLAS (AP) — Murder charges have been filed against the mother of a 3-year-old,lice-infested boy who died of starvation.

Kathy McLean, 26, was arrested Monday and placed in Dallas County Jail after Justice of the Peace Tom Naylor set her bond at $50,000.

The boy's twin sister, Christie, whose body also was emaciated and covered with lice-infested sores, remained in serious condition at Parkland Memorial Hospital. Doctors said she was suffering from malnutrition and dehydration.

Each child weighed about 25 pounds and their arms and legs were said to be "about the size of a quarter."

James McLean was dead on arrival Sunday at a Dallas hospital. A medical examiner Monday ruled the boy's death a homicide. An autopsy indicated he had been physically abused, a homicide investigator said.

Police had questioned Mrs. McLean on Sunday, but released her pending the autopsy. She refused a police request to investigate living conditions inside the family's residence.

Dr. Linda Norton of the medical examiner's office said the starvation of the child apparently occurred over a period of several months.

She said the boy was covered with lice and dirt, was extremely emaciated with just "a bit of skin over his skeleton" and had what seemed to be 15 cigarette burns in various stage of healing on his hands, feet, arms and buttocks.

Mrs. McLean was divorced last May from her second husband, who said he has been paying $225 a month in child support.

Police investigators said Mrs. McLean apparently had been leaving the children in the house unattended while she worked as a saleswoman for a real estate firm. Officers said Mrs. McLean told them she had a babysitter, but refused to give them a name.

Ohio River bridge failure makes real ferry problems

By JOE McKNIGHT

SOUTH SHORE, Ky. (AP) — Maynard Fitch kicked gravel and fumed at the line of cars as he waited for a ferry to take him to work across the Ohio River in Portsmouth, Ohio.

"What gripes me," said Fitch, 45, "is that both these sorry states knew 20 years ago they needed a new bridge."

The U.S. Grant Bridge, the only link in 25 miles between Kentucky and Ohio, closed in August when structural defects were found. Car and pedestrian ferries are bridging the gap until the bridge is repaired and reopened, now scheduled for January 1980.

"We left home at 11 this morning to get to work at 3 o'clock. It used to take 10 minutes each way and now we have to give it three hours minimum," Fitch added.

More Kentuckians work in Ohio than vice-versa, and residents say it is normal for 100 or more vehicles to be in line at peak periods for the two car-ferries that haul no more than 20-25 vehicles per trip. The pedestrian ferry can take 80 persons per trip, but Fitch and Lyons, who work the evening shift, say it's best to take a car. When fog halts ferries, motorists must drive 25 miles up river to a bridge at Russell, Ky., near Ironton, Ohio.

"You got the four-lane U.S. 23 coming into the bridge in Kentucky plus two state roads funneling traffic into this two-lane bridge," said Jim Everman, 67, of South Shore. "And you got four highways feeding it on the other side. We need another bridge."

"The worst thing is when someone needs to come over in an emergency," said Andrew Sexton, 65, of Garrison, Ky., who was waiting on the Ohio shore for a passenger ferry, heading home after an eye examination.

In the first weeks after the bridge closed, Kentucky provided a National Guard helicopter for emergencies. Gov. Julian Carroll discontinued it because of the $1,000 per day cost.

Donna McMurray, a widow, was crossing to Kentucky to take her four children to a doctor. Three were ill with flu, she said.

"When I pay ferry and taxi rides both ways for all of us it costs me $7.50 to $10.00 for a trip," she said. "I work with some girls who live in Kentucky and they ride this ferry every day. I don't know what they are going to do when the river ices over."

Forty one cars waited in line on the Kentucky side one noon for the ferries. Nearby, more than 200 parked cars gave evidence of pedestrians who rode the passenger ferry.

"The best thing you can say about this whole situation," said Lyons, 36, "is that it's a big joke on the working man and the taxpayer. They said 12,000-13,000 cars used the bridge every day and they bring two dinky little boats in that can take only a few cars at a time."

"When the river freezes I suppose a lot of us are going to get fired," Fitch said. "If the snow is too deep to drive around and the barges and tugs are froze in the river, we just won't make it. Nothing moved on this river last January."

"We'll just have to cross that bridge when we come to it," commented Claude New, 50, tug boat pilot on a car ferry.

His employer, a Virginia firm, has a one-year contract to operate the car ferries for $3,800 a day. It is funded by a $1.3 million federal grant.

Lloyd Clausing, Portsmouth's utilities director, sympathized with residents who complain of the service.

"We had to very quickly set up a system to get from one side to the other," he said. "The ferries are not meant to replace the bridge. They are meant to alleviate the problem somewhat. It would be difficult to get enough ferries on the river to handle the same volume of traffic as the bridge.

"Operating a ferry service is something new to us and we learn a lot every day."

The passenger ferry is run by a local firm under a 60-day contract at $1,700 a day, paid for by the Ohio Department of Transportation. He said the 25-cent passenger fee discourages sightseers, making more space for people who cross on business.

Bids have been taken for a 15-month passenger ferry operation. If federal funds are made available for the passenger operation, the fare would be dropped under federal rules.

He also said there are plans to increase the car ferry service.

"The scheduling is difficult right now due to fog on the river," Clausing added. "What we need and what we are going to get is a dependable schedule on departures and arrivals."

Benji rebuffed

LONDON (AP) — Benji, the dog with a fan club in the United States, won't be coming to Britain to make a planned $5-million movie or $750,000 television show.

British authorities, fighting to keep rabies out of the country, say the celebrated dog would have to spend six months in quarantine as any other dog would.

Species Act slows animal transfers

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — An Ohio zoo wants some flamingos from Texas, but runs into some federal red tape.

The same zoo has a young bald eagle and faces more paperwork to send the bird to another zoo where it would be with a mate.

The Columbus zoo wants to transfer a couple of flamingos from Texas and awaits approval from the Endangered Species office, which is under the federal Interior Department.

Hanna praises the intent of the Endangered Species Act, passed in 1973 to protect rare animals.

But he objects to the nearly three months it takes to get approval for interstate transfer of animals under the act.

"It's like moving gold from Fort Knox," he said. "Six weeks may be critical. We're talking about live animals."

The Columbus zoo is one of only a few where a bald eagle hats been hatched.

The young bird, hatched last April, is maturing and, Hanna said, nearing the age when it would, if wild, fly away from it's parents. He wants to send the bird to a zoo where it would have a mate.

Such transfers usually take about 11 weeks from the time paperwork begins if all goes smoothly, said Larry LaRochelle, who works in the wildlife permit office in Washington.

But around the first of October the Interior Department, like some other federal offices, ran low on money as its accounting year drew to a close. It developed a backlog of applications due to lack of operating funds, LaRochelle said in a telephone interview.

President Carter signed funding for the office. But because of the backlog, LaRochelle said the time for approving transfers may jump to 120 or 130 days.

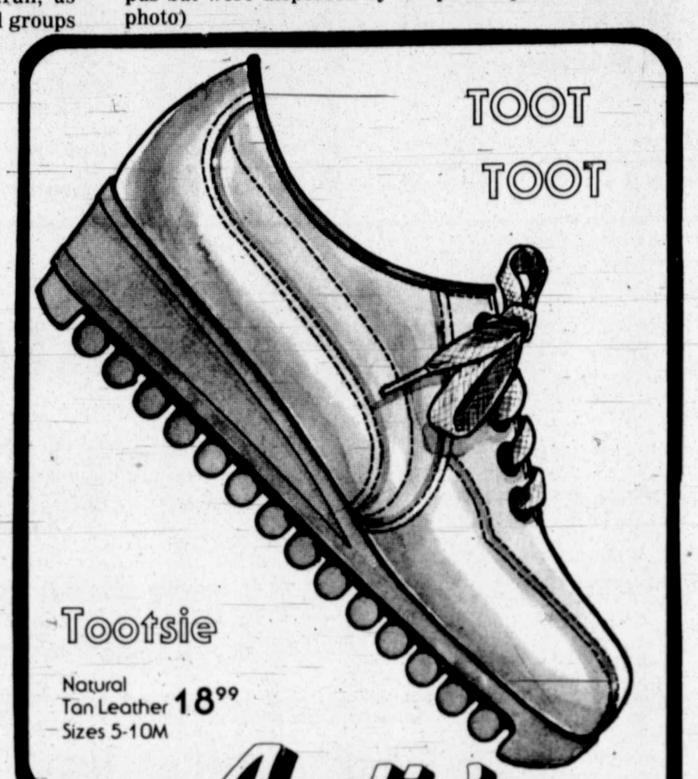

The procedure for selling or relocating an animal of endangered species calls for the request to be published in the federal register and await public comment for 30 days. Officials of the Endangered Species Office also review the application, LaRochelle said.

"In 99 percent of them there is no serious contest," he said.

Robert Baudy, operator of the "Rare Feline Breeding Compound" near Bushnell, Fla., contends there should be no regulations on sale or transfer of rare or exotic animals raised by man.

Lord Grade of British films plans American move

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The American film industry recently caught a glimpse of a British brother act that could present a real threat to the movie establishment.

Lord Lew Grade, chairman and chief executive of Associated Communications Corp., and Lord Bernard Delfont, who holds the same titles with E.M.I.'s Theater and Leisure Group, appeared at a press conference to announce a new film distribution company for the United States and Canada.

It's called Associated Film Distribution Corp. Lord Grade will be chairman, and younger brother Bernie vice-chairman. Until now, their companies have been releasing films through the U.S. distributors.

Lords Grade and Delfont announced that AFD would release a minimum of 12 major films a year, which is about average for the American companies.

Among the forthcoming releases: "The Muppet Movie" with Jim Henson's puppets and an all-star cast; "Raise the Titanic," based on the best-selling adventure; "The Story of Maria Callas," Franco Zeffirelli directing; "Saturn III," Farah Fawcett-Majors and Kirk Douglas in outer space; "Firepower," Sophia Loren, James Coburn, O.J. Simpson; "Escape to Athena," Roger Moore, Telly Savalas, David Niven; "The Lone Ranger," new version of the masked rider.

Before departing for Tokyo, Hong Kong and other potential markets, Lord Grade sat down for an interview in his suite at the Beverly Hills Hotel. He is type-cast as movie magnate: stubby, bald, cigar-smoking and ebullient.

"Why are we starting our own distribution company?" he mused. "So we can control our own destiny. Supposing we give two pictures to Warner Brothers and one to 20th Century-Fox to release. Both companies have done very well by us. But it is only natural for them to concentrate on the releases that they themselves have produced.

"It's better for us to have our own releasing company so we can know that we are getting the best distribution, advertising and publicity that it's possible to get."

Grade said he and his brother already have plans for 18 films to cost more than $10 million apiece — "and that's more than any other major company can boast."

Hollywood skeptics have watched Lord Grade's foray into international filming with scorn, dismissing him as "the Picadilly Plunger." Indeed, his early films failed: "The Domino Principle," "Voyage of the Damned," "March Or Die."

"But the film division has been a successful operation," he insisted. "'Cassandra Crossing' did not do well in theaters here, but it will on television, and it cleaned up abroad. 'The Eagle Has Landed' was cut to pieces in its American release, but it still made $6 million.

"I did very well with the two 'Pink Panthers' — I'm not involved with the current one. 'Capricorn One' was a great success, and 'The Boys from Brazil' looks like a real winner."

As if to prove that he doesn't merely sponsor outsized adventures, Lord Grade also backed the Ingmar Bergman film, "Autumn Sonata" and "Movie Movie," two films in one starring George C. Scott.

The film magnate admitted his movies reflect his own personal taste. Like the moguls of old, he can make snap decisions: "I decided to buy 'The Gemini Contenders' after reading the front and back cover flaps and the forward."

He also believes in the star system: "My wife will admire an actor on television and suggest, 'Why don't you sign him? You probably could get him for $200 a week. My reply is: 'I'll wait until he's worth $10,000 a week.'"

How did the brother lords end up with different names?

"Our name was Winogradsky. We came to England from Russia when I was five and a half years old and Bernie was three. When I was a Charleston dancer, I was billed as Louie Grad. Then I appeared at the Moulin Rouge and they made my name Lew Grad. I decided not to tamper with that.

"My brother teamed with another performer as Grade and Sutton. Because they were confused with me, they changed it to the Delfont Boys."

Lord Grade and Lord Delfont may have joined for mutual distribution in the new world, but the elder brother assured that they remain "fierce competitors" on their home turf.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON
Outer leaves richer

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: Is it true that the outer leaves of a head of lettuce have more nourishment than the ones inside? My daughter always throws them away—she says they are too coarse.--D.L.

DEAR D.L.: The outer leaves are richer in a number of nutrients such as calcium, iron and vitamin A. So use them whenever possible—especially with prices where they are.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: I understand that losing weight is a matter of reducing calories. How many calories must I cut out in order to lose one pound?--R.S.M.

DEAR R.S.M.: You must cut out 3,500 calories to lose 1 pound of fat, or you need to move around and exercise to the point that you are burning up 3,500 calories more than you are taking in. Everytime you either take in 3,500 calories less than you burn up, or burn up 3,500 calories more than you eat, you will lose 1 pound of fat. Remember, water has zero calories. Good luck.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: Why does your diet emphasize drinking water? Isn't most weight loss actually water loss?--A.T.

DEAR A.T.: In the early days of weight loss program, the major weight loss is esentially water, but such water loss cannot be continued to the point of dehydration. Water contains no calories and is as essential as fats, carbohydrates, proteins, vitamins and minerals. It is fat loss you are trying to achieve during a reducing diet and water intake does not interfere with loss of fat.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: Isn't it natural to get fat as you get older?--T.C.

DEAR T.C.: It's easy to get that impression because many people grow fatter after age 30. However, weight gained after age 30 is generally essentially fat and therefore undersirable. During childhood and youth, a certain amount of extra weight is desirable to meet the demands of the growing years. As a person grows older, metabolism and physical activity often decrease faster than the appetite. When more calories are consumed and less expended, undesirable fat begins to accumulate.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: I used to take a sedative called Doriden. Can you tell me something about it?--N.C.

DEAR N.C.: When glutethimide (Doriden) was first introduced in 1954, it was believed to be a safe barbiturate substitute without an addiction potential. But experience has shown glutethimide to be another CNS (central nervous system) depressant with no particular advantage over the barbiturates. The sedative effects of glutethimide begin about 30 minutes after swallowing it and last for 4 to 8 hours. Glutethimide is marketed as Doriden in 125, 250, and 500 mg. tablets. Because the effects of this drug are of long duration, it is exceptionally difficult to reverse overdoses, which often result in death.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: Isn't it true that Mexican marijuana is stronger than U.S. marijuana.--R.R.

DEAR R.R.: Yes. Marijuana, the popular name of the cannabis plant, also denotes the drug that is prepared by drying the leaves and flowering tops of the plant to make a tobacco-like material. Marijuana produced in the United States is considered inferior because of the low concentration of psychoactive ingredients, which varies between 0.2 and 2.0 percent. Marijuana of Mexican origin is known to be slightly stronger. The variety known as Jamaican ganja, which consists primarily of the flowers and bracts, has a THC (Tetrahydrocannabinol) content of 4 to 8 percent.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: On Your Weight Control Plan, we can have one slice of whole-wheat bread. IS it better to have it as toast? Would toasting reduce the calories.--W.F.

DEAR W.F.: Toasting does not reduce calories. Whether you have your whole-wheat bread toasted or untoasted is a matter of personal preference.

Members of the post and its auxiliary will be stationed all over Midland through Nov. 18, asking for donations in exchange for the symbolic flower.

The Midland post buys the flowers from the national VFW organization, then is allowed to keep all donations received. All funds are used to help Midland disabled veterans and needy families, according to post commander Phil Bustamante.

The poppy symbol was chosen after a poem by Col. John McCrae, who wrote:

"In Flanders fields the poppies blow, between the crosses, row on row; that mark our place...and in the sky the larks — still bravely singing — fly; scarce heard amid the guns below."

Bustamante said no set donation is required, "just what people want to give."

Also, Midland Beta Sigma Phi Sorority members Thursday will participate in the observance of National Veterans Week, which began Monday, by selling "buddy" poppies throughout the Tall City.

Police rescue whites from attacks

LUSAKA, Zambia (AP) — Police say they rescued several whites from attacks by gangs of blacks apparently angered by recent Rhodesian raids into Zambia.

A witness said Tuesday he saw a crowd of about 100 black youths attack and beat three white men. Another group of white men was seen being dragged from a car in the center of the city.

Diplomats from the Vatican, Britain and Sweden lodged protests with the Zambian government, complaining of indiscriminate attacks on whites.

Who was that generous, big-spending stranger?

DALLAS (AP) — Texans pride themselves on being pretty unflappable, but drawling, diamond-studded folks here were outdone and undone by a big spending stranger who dropped about $3.5 million for baubles, furs, wine and tips.

But the millions were on paper — in checks and credit club receipts — and the astounded people holding the paper are checking out his story.

"It's either the most fantastic thing that's ever happened or it's the biggest hoax in history," Craig Stultz said Tuesday. "Things are checking out on him. If he were passing bad checks, you'd think he'd get the hell out of town."

The mustachioed man, who said he was F. Masood Kahn and was related to a high-ranking Pakistani government official, on Monday night waltzed into "elan" — an exclusive restaurant-club Stultz manages — flanked by two towering bodyguards.

He ordered champagne for everyone in the house. When the management poured every guest a glass of its best, he was offended and insisted every person be given a bottle of Dom Perignon — at $75 a bottle. The club had only 29 bottles on hand. That had to do.

The man then demanded a dance contest and awarded the two winners a check each for $500,000.

"I just grabbed a girl, more or less at random," said one winner, Mike Christensen, a 26-year-old wine salesman. "We just boogied for a couple of songs."

The stranger also tipped his personal waitress $1 million — like the dance prizes, with a check. All three checks were drawn on the First Union National Bank of Washington, D.C., and bank officials there could not be reached for comment.

American Express officials refused comment about Kahn's $2,365 bill at "elan" and the $10,000 tip he tacked on for the club's employees.

Stultz said the "benefactor" had asked recipients of the money not to identify themselves or the tipper.

On Tuesday afternoon, Stultz said, the visitor telephoned him to complain when reports of his philanthropic antics became public.

The telephone call followed reports of his stomping out of a jewelry store when the manager refused to sell him the store and of a shopping spree at a north Dallas mall.

Kahn supposedly bought a fistful of diamonds and a closetful of clothing from one department store, then his entourage strolled down to Neiman-Marcus.

There, according to some observers, he bought every precious jewel, every fur in size 12 and all the Wedgewood china in stock. The more conservative of the observers said that the man with a red carnation only spent $1 million at Neiman-Marcus.

Wyoming Republicans fail to oust governor

Herschler, 61, won re-election with 51 percent of the vote Tuesday over GOP challenger John Ostlund, a 51-year-old investment banker.

Davis' daughter on alleged 'hit list'

HOUSTON (AP) — Testimony in the murder-for-hire trial of millionaire Cullen Davis disclosed Tuesday that the defendant's adopted daughter Dee was among those on an alleged "hit list."

Dee, 20, is the daughter of Davis' estranged wife Priscilla by the first of her three husbands.

The judge was not harmed.

According to testimoney Tuesday, the list also contained the name of Fort Worth businessman A. J. Paschall and an unidentified "Mexican friend" of Paschall.

An FBI informant said previously the list included three state witneses who testified last year in Amarillo, where Davis was acquitted in the slaying of his young stepdaughter.

The fact that Dee's name was on the list points up the "absurdity" of the whole case against Davis, contended defense lawyer Steve Sumner of Dallas.

"Three's absolutely no rhyme or reason for Cullen to have Dee on a hit list" Sumner said. "We just learned about it when we got Jannings' notes."

Jannings, meanwhile, refused Tuesday to answer Haynes' questions regarding a mystery figure the defense has injected in the case.

"When was the last time you saw David Binion?" Haynes asked.

"I respectfully decline to answer...," Jannings replied.

"Did you meet with David Binion....?" Haynes continued.

Prosecutors objected, the judge overruled them and Jannings then asked to speak privately with Ray Woods of the U.S. attorney's office.

After a brief meeting outside the courtroom, Woods told the judge the questions posed by Haynes were not germane to this case. He said if Haynes intended to pursue the Binion matter he must file an affadavit with the U.S. attorney's office.

Defense lawyers have identified Binion only as a car salesman with a Houston firm and "apparently an FBI informant."

In response to newsmen's questions, defense lawyer Phil Burleson said: "We contend David Binion is the person Priscilla Davis tried to hire to kill Cullen."

The defense contends Davis was framed by Mrs. Davis and others. He is accused of soliciting a gunman to kill the presiding judge in his lengthy and bitter divorce case.

At one point, State District Judge Wallace Moore sent the jury out and permitted Haynes to ask two questions concerning Binion, neither of which was answered.

Haynes wanted to know if Jannings accompanied another FBI agent and a representative of the district attorney's office to Binion's "place of business" to talk with him.

Haynes also asked if Jannings attempted to find out from Binion what the man had told a defense representative in connection with this case.

A short time later, the judge ordered a recess. When newsmen asked prosecutor Tolly Wilson about Binion he replied, "Ask Haynes."

Said Haynes, with a grin, "I'm not telling you and if my troops tell you, I'll kick their shins."

Sterilizations for poor now under rigid rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Regulations tightening standards for funding sterilizations for poor women were issued on Tuesday by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The major change will be to require a 30-day waiting period instead of the current three days between the time a woman consents to be sterilized and the operation. The only exceptions will be in cases of premature delivery and emergency abdominal surgery.

HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. said the new rules are intended to ensure that no one is pressured into a sterilization decision she may later regret.

They continue to bar federal funding of sterilizations for anyone under age 21, anyone who is mentally incompetent or in prison, a mental hospital or otherwise institutionalized.

The regulations, which were to be published in Wednesday's Federal Register and take effect in 90 days, also rule out paying for hysterectomies performed solely for purposes of sterilization.

HEW paid for 100,000 sterilizations in 1975 through Medicaid, family planning and other programs. An estimated 1.3 million Americans, mostly women, are sterilized each year.

Experts say consumers increasing debt load

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers went more deeply into debt in September, increasing their outstanding installment credit by $3.28 billion in September, the Federal Reserve said Monday.

The growing consumer debt has worried Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller and some economists, who say consumers may be taking on more debts than they can handle.

A recent Louis Harris poll found that about 58 percent of Americans surveyed are extremely worried about their growing debt load. They said they are forced to borrow money because prices keep rising.

However, their demand for products can also add to the inflation problem.

The $3.28 billion increase is smaller than the $2.99 billion gain in August but well above the average $2.61 billion increase during the last half of 1977.

In the third quarter, installment debt rose at an annual rate of 16 percent, down from the record 20 percent level of the second quarter.

Consumers took out $22.5 billion in new loans during September, a decrease from the $22.6 billion in August. However, they paid back only $19.2 billion in previously borrowed money, a decline from $19.6 billion in August.

Auto credit outstanding increased by $1.4 billion, about the same as in August. However, bank card credit rose by $349 million, a sharper increase than the $280 million gain in August.

Americans were borrowing at annual rates equal to 18.4 percent of their disposable income for new loans in the third quarter and spending 15.8 percent to pay off old loans.

Services available now to deaf

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Darlene Mullin is helping to plug more than 10,000 Dayton area deaf persons into the web of community services that was previously unavailable to many of them.

As head of a new program, she is using her sign language skill to help many of this city's deaf residents fill in applications or by counseling them on what services are available.

"The beauty of it is, if I can't make a referral to one of our agencies, I can make a referral to the appropriate place," she said. "I do the calls and the legwork and let the people know a deaf person is coming in. You just can't send a deaf person in cold."

If she is contacted by a deaf person who needs low-income housing, she said she can contact an agency such as Dayton Metropolitan Housing Authority, schedule an interpreter and let the housing authority know that the deaf person might need extra help in applications.

"What I have done is make this program accessible to the deaf person," Ms. Mullin said. "And it works the other way. If the agency knows about me, and a deaf person comes in, I can run over there and act as an intepreter."

Counseling the deaf in personal, marital, family or employment matters will also be a function of her office, she said.

And she plans to help as an advocate for the deaf, handling tenant landlord, consumer and employment problems.

Funding for this program is provided by a federal grant administered through the Ohio Rehabilitation Services Commission. The grant provides 90 percent of the cost the first year and slightly less in the next two years, after which United Way will pick up the full cost of the program.

The total annual budget is $58,000 for a staff of three: Ms. Mullin, a counselor and a secretary who will help clients with applications and paperwork.

"Most deaf people have difficulty with written language and are ashamed of their abilities," she said.

Greece displayed in slides

Dorothy Perkins presented a program on "Echoes from Greece" for the Book Review Unit of the Midland Woman's Club meeting in the clubhouse.

Introduced by Mrs. F. D. Breedlove, president of the unit, Miss Perkins showed color slides she made during three trips from 1965 to 1977, showing changes in Greece in that time span. She quoted from books of three women, Edith Hamilton, myths research; Mary Rennault, history, and Mary Stewart, mystery writer. Also Irvin Stone, archaeologist; Lawrence Durrell, living in Greece, and Robert Stone, poet.

Slide pictures shown included Rhodes Stadium of the late 3rd century, B.C., excavations in Corinth, theaters, temple of Zeus and an ancient stadium where the first Olympic games were held in 776 B.C.

In closing, Miss Perkins exhibited watercolor sketches she made in Greece.

Mrs. Earl Chapman decorated the table with pumpkins, pheasant feathers, pine cones and lighted candles. The invocation was given by Mrs. Martin Neill. Mrs. Joe Birdwell was in charge of hospitality.

Guests introduced by Mrs. J. R. Emmons were Peggy McFadden, Mrs. Fred Middleton, Laverne West, Mattie Pope, Esther Hodge, Clara Vanderpool, Ruth Rhodes, Alta Mae Powledge, Nova Graham, Aida Dunlap, Blessie Watkins, Catherine McGinley, Velma Gist, Virginia Hoffman, Ada Phillips, Lena Wyatt, Ruth Mallory, Mrs. Frank Key, Earl Chapman, Mrs. W. O. Canton, Florence Young and Reese McDonald.

New members introduced were Mrs. Harvey B. Rhoads, Mrs. Robert Watson, Helena Gaston, Miss Perkins and Nova Graham.

Mrs. Jack Samples reported on the ways and means project for the Woman's Club. A gift certificate will be awarded Jan. 22.

Mrs. George T. Abell, right, longtime member of the Texas Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, presents a check to Georgia B. Edman of Houston, center, state regent of the TSDAR, during the society's Division 8 workshop held in the Midland Hilton. DAR holds workshop on policies, rulings

The Texas Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, had a Division 8 workshop Monday in the Midland Hilton.

Georgia B. Edman of Houston, state regent, presided. Mrs. John E. Cross, state chairman of Division 8, was in charge of workshop arrangements. Assisting her were Mrs. W. C. Hubbard III, regent of Col. Theunis Dey Chapter, DAR, and Mrs. E. H. Judson, regent of Lt. William Brewer Chapter, DAR. Mrs. K. R. Hughes was in charge of tickets and reservations.

Purpose of the workshop was to instruct officers and members of local chapters in the work of the DAR and to bring to them any changes and new rulings concerning their work.

During the workshop's luncheon, Mrs. George T. Abell of Midland, longtime member of the TSDAR, presented a check to Mrs. Edman to clear the cost of publishing a four-volume "Roster of Texas Daughters." Mrs. F. Hastings Pannill, immediate past state regent, and Mrs. Edman were named by Mr. and Mrs. Abell as the honorees of this gift to the TSDAR. This valuable addition to genealogical research material, now available for public and private use, was begun and completed during the six years covering the administrations of Mrs. Pannill and Mrs. Edman. The lineage material in the four volumes covers the service during the American Revolution of the ancestors of some 12,000 Texas members of the National Society, DAR. Mrs. Pannill promoted the compilation and publishing of Volumes I and II, and Mrs. Edman sponsored Volumes III and IV as her project. Mrs. Ernest Brainard of Amarillo, state vice regent, was editor of the publication.

Group can help singles cope with loneliness

By CAROLYN COIL
Copley News Service

You're single again after the end of a long-term marriage — and you're lonely.

Maybe you think that all you have to do is to meet the right person and your life will be complete.

But Don McGaughey and Marilyn Mellott, who both have been divorced and who are licensed marriage and family counselors, disagree. They believe that a newly single person needs to find himself before rushing into a new relationship, or he could make the same mistake again.

It's a time for learning to deal with your aloneness and coming to realize that it's OK to be alone, says Mellott.

There's a desperate need among singles to find someone, anyone, she says. But, she cautions, it is wiser if you don't choose someone simply because you are so needy for companionship.

"Some of the most real growing experiences for me have been those times when I was frantic to be with someone," says McGaughey.

"Then, after a couple of turndowns, I'd say, 'Hey, I can learn that I can be an interesting person to myself.'

"I find that if I get through an evening like that, there's a strength that comes over me and I don't feel clingy or needy."

"That clingy and needy person in you can turn people off," says Mellott.

You need to develop new interests and outlets, she says. And you need to learn to feel good about going out to dinner or a concert by yourself.

One of the newly single's biggest problems, say the counselors, is where to go to meet people — the kind you'd like for long-term friends.

"Unfortunately most bars tend not to be good places to find people," says McGaughey.

"The assumption is that a man there is on the make," says Mellott.

"Let me give you an example. I met a man in a bar who asked me out, but I wouldn't go with him. I felt there were sexual overtones."

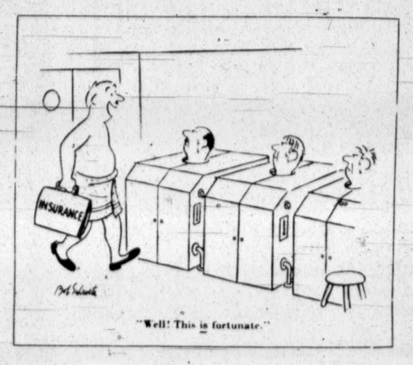

Later, when she met the man again at a "more suitable place" she did date him. It was the meeting place, not the man, which turned her off at the first meeting, she says. McGaughey believes that most people are looking for a committed one-to-one relationship. He says singles groups can provide help. There, he says, people can learn about themselves and develop intimate relationships in a safe environment. "At singles groups you meet some nice people. I have," McGaughey says.

"One of the feelings of being single," he says, "is that you don't belong anywhere. One of the most whole-making aspects of a group is 'I belong.'"

Meeting someone in a group as opposed to meeting someone in a bar is better, he believes. There's less superficiality and game playing.

"In the singles scene, he says, "it's always put your best foot forward. Maybe in the group you can put your worst foot forward."

DEAR ABBY

Alter lifestyle for kids

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I think your advice to ME IN MALIBU was way out of line. Six years ago I met Bill. We fell in love and became roommates. Between us we have a total of eight children ranging from 9 to 19. We've never tried to hide our lifestyle from them. They accept us and we accept them. The two youngest live with us. (One mine, one his). They go to a private Christian school nearby, and the school authorities have never made a fuss over our lifestyle.

We teach our children morals and values and let them know that the ultimate choices are theirs to make.

If my honey ever told me to "get lost" for a while so his children wouldn't learn the realities of our relationship, he would never see me again.

When we are ready, we will marry. No pressure, no coercion or ignorant comments from others will hasten our decision.

As Christians, it's our consciences we must live with—no one else's.—I'M WITH YOU IN MALIBU

DEAR I'M: I hear what you're saying, and I respect the candor and sincerity of your views. Perhaps I'm bending over backwards to preserve the time-honored institution of marriage, and to urge parents to set good examples for their children to follow.

Mature people understand that living together isn't always raunchy, and because they have a profound respect for marriage, they don't rush into it hastily. But I fear that very young children may feel that marriage is not really important to a family. And that disturbs me.

DEAR ABBY: Please print my letter so other mothers won't make the same mistake I made. After 19 years, I realize the error of naming our son "Junior," after his father.

When he was a baby, it was no problem. We called him Billy and his father was Bill.

When he got older he decided Billy was too babyish, so he asked us to call him Bill, which wasn't too bad—we called one Big Bill and the other one Little Bill. That worked our fine until Little Bill soon got bigger than Big Bill.

Now it's worse. It's Young Bill and Old Bill and you can imagine how thrilled father is to be Old Bill at 44.

Not only that, but their voices are identical, and they are constantly being mistaken for one another on the telephone. And their mail gets mixed up, too, when there is no "Sr." or "Jr."

It's a pain in the neck. I should have named him Lawrence, like I wanted to. I've always loved that name. Phooey on these Juniors —TOO LATE NOW

DEAR TOO: Thanks. New mothers, take note.

Hilarious book examines weight loss, sex relation

By JEANNETTE BRANIN
Copley News Service

It is the most outrageously funny book ever written about dieting, or weight loss, or sex.

It is not difficult to locate it in book stores: It is down that aisle where a knot of people are reading and cracking up, shrieking, howling with laughter.

It is "The Dieter's Guide to Weight Loss During Sex," written by Richard Smith.

It has surpassed in sales the Runner's Handbook, the Audubon Society Field Guide to North American Birds, and even The Joy of Sex (which has illustrations).

It was due to be issued mid-April, but the book covers disappeared at the print shop. A new supply was ordered, and disappeared. It was May before enough security was attained to be able to keep the covers from being stolen, bind the books and ship them out for sale.

You can tell a book by its cover. Read the blurbs on the back cover and you know immediately this is a good-natured, hilarious spoof.

"Is sex robbing you of essential nutrients?" asks the author. "Why is it crucial, during sex, to avoid okra, creckera, pamsiey, watercress, Spam and codfish cakes?"

And another promotional statement: "Answers to more than 1,275 intimate questions most frequently asked by dieters, complete with tips on how to deal with sexual disappointment."

It is not necessary for someone to whisper, "Turn to page 70. That's the best chapter." Turn to any page, read any line, and prepare for hysteria.

Smith (his real name, he swears it is) said during an interview that he read all the popular sex manuals before he started his spoof.

"It was like reading an owner's manual for a Mercedes-Benz," he said. "Turn on this switch and this light goes on; push this button and that happens.

"People reading such stuff are bound to think, 'I did that, but it didn't happen. Am I human, or am I a cross between an ape and an eagle?'

"So I decided to do a book on sexual activities and how many calories they burn, but it had to be funny. People are progressively more receptive to humor, that's been happening ever since Watergate.

"Sex is a universal activity. So is trying on shoes. But sex is more interesting."

Smith said he never planned to be a best-selling fiction writer. He was a farm boy, first of all, and then, in New York, a busboy, a waiter, tractor-trailer driver, a buyer of ladies' underwear (the job he hated most) and then an employee in a public relations firm.

Then one day he went to a wine-tasting where people swirled the wine, sniffed it, tasted it and then went into reverie. He wrote a humorous article about it.

"That article sold for what I thought was an astonishing fee," he said. "Whatever the counterpart of 'stage-struck' is, that hit me. I was 'writer-struck.'"

Smith admits he doesn't face things head on. "I see everything just a little bit bent, a little off center," he said.

"My theory is that women like the book better than men, they have a better sense of humor, they slide into childishness more easily, more quickly, they deal with things more emotionally.

"Women come in and buy the book and say, 'I have to have that for my aunt, my uncle, my husband, my boyfriend.' For Mother's Day, my book was the biggest selling item that Workman Publishing has had in its 23-year history."

Smith, who has signed a contract for two more books (The Son of The Dieter's Guide to Weight Loss During Sex? The Grandson of ...?) believes that people should put more humor into their sex life.

"You're not going to make a marriage work when all you do is talk about it," he said. "Sexual attraction is one of the great wonders of the world. No one has any idea what causes that delicious sexual tension between a man and a woman. Sometimes it happens after a lifetime of knowing each other, sometimes after four hours on a bus.

"No sex manual is going to create that attraction. It's either there or it isn't. The only self-help book that works is the one that tells you how to build a shelf in your garage."

Apartment bathrooms can be luxurious spots

By CAROLE EICHEN
Copley News Service

For years, the most neglected room in any apartment condominium has been the bathroom.

Traditionally, apartment bathrooms have been small, dull and usually clinical. However, today that all seems to be changing with new designs which are turning the bathroom into a center of recreation and activity.

It has changed from a strictly functional area to one where you can garden, exercise and do your grooming in comfort.

Now, almost anything goes in the bathroom from tubs, which are nearly the size of swimming pools, to saunas, stereos and hanging gardens. Some baths are designed with all the facilities of a gym, while others even offer fireplaces.

Most apartment residents can't go that far to redesign the bath, but there are numerous things you can do to make it a more luxurious and enjoyable place to be.

If the bathroom is small, install mirrors to open it up and make the room seem lighter and larger. Make sure that there is enough lighting to illuminate the area where you apply makeup or where the man of the house can see to shave. Most hardware stores have a variety of light fixtures which can be installed quite easily for a little amount of money.

Grow plants or have flowers constantly in the bath. Even though the room may be dark there are a number of plants that do very well in the humidity of a steamy bath.

Set aside a small area to grow therapeutic herbs like lemon balm that fill the room with a pleasant fragrance. If the plants won't grow, place scented candles around the bath both for their color and fragrance.

Much can be done with accessories, thanks to the variety and shapes of different perfume and cosmetic bottles, tissue holders, guest towel racks and other useful items.

Decorate the bath in colors that are pleasing and relaxing. Cool whites, greens, blues and peaches are peaceful and can be enjoyed while you relax in a warm tub after a hard day's work.

The bathroom may not become the showplace of your apartment, but if decorated the right way, it can be a relaxing oasis and your own special hideaway at the end of the day.

Stepping out to sell candy are these Midland Camp Fire girls. Members of the local council will be selling the candy door-to-door through Monday. They will offer peanut crunch, chocolate covered mints and nut-caramel clusters for $1.50 a box. Benefits from this annual sale will go toward special activities and will help the youth earn special awards. On their way with several boxes of candy are, left to right, Brenda Drake, Jennifer Burgard, Amy Casbeer and Kelly Wester.

Oriental dance workshop slated in Midland Hilton

The art of Oriental dance will be the subject of a workshop to be conducted by Ayesha Gamal(Karen Gillis) Nov. 18-19 in the Midland Hilton.

Advance registrations are being taken through Nov. 14. Information can be attained by contacting Karen Sharma, P. O. Box 7251, 694-2891.

Registration will be held from 9 to 9:30 a.m. Nov. 18. There will be a warm-up session from 9:30 to 10 a.m. Ayoub instruction will be from 10 a.m. to noon, followed with a luncheon. At 1 p.m. there will be poem dance instruction, followed at 2 p.m. with floor work. Beledi will be taught from 3 to 5 p.m. At 8 p.m. there will be a show in Theatre Two.

The schedule for Nov. 19 is as follows: Registration and breakfast, 9:30 to 10:30 a.m.; warm-up, 10:30 to 11 a.m.; beledi, 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.; tribal dances, 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., and a review of routines and rhythms, 4:30 to 6 p.m.

The instructor has a dance background in modern ballet, classical and flamenco. She began studying Middle Eastern dances more than 10 years ago and has performed professionally nine years from coast to coast. She has written a book, "A History of the Belly Dance," and has appeared in a documentary film, "Dance of Life,."

HOROSCOPE

By CARROLL RIGHTER

(Thurs., Nov. 9)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The morning is not good for any forceful actions but you can plan the afternoon's activities in a sensible manner and make rapid progress. Secrets come to light later in the day.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Think of the best possible way to spend this day and then follow through in a positive manner. Improve your health.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Try not to be forceful with anyone today and then all goes well with you. You can easily gain personal aims now.

GEMINI (May. 21 to Jun. 21) If you are more cooperative with an associate, you can gain the support you need. Handle a business matter wisely.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Study a plan whereby you can advance more quickly in your career. Try to be less critical of others.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Figure out a better way of handling present responsibilities. Let those of whom you are fond know of your devotion to them.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Showing consideration for associates now will be appreciated. Evening is the best time to have a long talk with mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Be sure to schedule your time and activities well so you can accomplish more. Use tact in dealing with associates.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Making early arrangements for the recreation you want to enjoy later is wise. Take no chances where your reputation is concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Morning is the best time to handle an important business matter. Try to establish more harmony at home tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan 20) Stay away from arguments today and you keep out of trouble. Take time to improve your health and appearance.

AQUARIUS (Jan.21 to Feb.19) Make long-range plans to improve your monetary affairs. Use care in motion to day and avoid possible mishap.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Morning is not ideal for going after personal goals, but afternoon is fine. Sidestep one who could be detrimental to your progress.

VAN sets sale

Visual Aids Newsmobile (VAN) will have a sale of items made by handicapped clients of the service from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday in Dellwood Plaza.

Art Greer, an internationally known social psychotherapist from Houston, Texas, and popular author will be in the Midland-Odessa Area November 9, 10 and 11th. He will be presenting two programs open to the general public on "Exploring the Myths of Leadership". One will be Thursday evening from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. Another will be Saturday, November 11, from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Both programs will be conducted at the Hospitality Lodge, just east of Odessa. Interested people can call Bob Avary & Associates, Odessa 332-4139, or Midland 694-5953, for information and reservations. The fee for Thursday is $10.00, and the fee for Saturday is $50.00

Make cool stand for hot gun

By AL CARRELL

When you have to put down the soldering gun while working, there's usually no problem if you don't accidentally touch the hot tip. If you want to be sure, there's an easy way to make a holder for your bench top. All you need is a threaded piece of pipe and an appropriate-sized floor flange. (This is a plate that attaches to a floor and is threaded to accept pipe.) Select a pipe with a diameter big enough to accept the metal arms that hold the tip. Most will require an inch or more. Cut the pipe to length so the body of the gun rests atop the pipe but without the tip touching the bench. With the floor flange mounted to the bench top, the stub of pipe sticking up is now ready to hold the soldering gun well out of the way with no chance that you'll brush a finger against the hot tip and get branded.

DEAR AL:

I finally had to use my jumper cable from the trunk of the car. It took about 15 minutes to unsnarl the cables, and since it was a very cold day, it was a real pain. The man who stopped to help me jump start the car showed me his cables. (Unfortunately, after I had finished fumbling with the mess.) He had placed the cables out flat side by side and taped them together at several points but left the ends free so the clamps would reach the terminals. He had stored the cables in a plastic trash bag so they were coiled but not tangled, and so the trunk was protected from them. Mine are now this way too. — U.R.

DEAR SUPER AL:

You have several times suggested the use of kerosene for cleaning. (Such things as soap scum from shower walls and lime deposits from shower heads.) The odor of kerosene, however, isn't all that great. I have discovered that there is scented kerosene made for use with kerosene lamps. While it's a little more expensive than regular kerosene, it can be used for your handy ideas and leaves a pleasant after-odor. — Mrs. F.A.A.

Super idea. Wonder if anybody has a home recipe for adding scent to kerosene?

A SUPER HINT — As the metric system continues to close in on us, I like to continue to pass along ways to help you think metric. The liter (L) is going to replace the gallon-quart-pint-cup-bucket-fifth way of measuring liquids. You can really zero in on how much a liter is by knowing that a one pound coffee can will hold just about exactly a liter. In fact, many coffee cans have grooves around the side of the can that divide it into four parts so you could easily use it to measure out 250 milliliters (ml), etc. And that's another reason to save those coffee cans instead of tossing them into the trash can. If you'd like a free metric conversion table, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request to Super Handyman here at the paper.

DEAR AL:

Our group repairs old toys to be passed along to a juvenile home. The hard plastic used for many toys is a problem to drill into because the drill bit skids away from the spot where you want to drill. We have found that a hot ice pick will leave a dent in most plastic so there will be a starter place that will not let the bit move away. I thought this might help others who are working with plastics, since a skidding bit will scratch the surface. — F.T.

QUICK ANSWERS FOR HARRIED HANDYPERSONS: Q: You have told us that having the proper humidity in a home during the heating season will give more comfort than dry air at the same temperature. What should the relative humidity be for this comfort?

A: Actually, there's a fairly wide comfort range from down around 30 up to 50 percent. Below 30, you feel chilled, your nose and throat dries up, and your furniture may start to dry up and fall apart. Above 50 percent, you can have bad condensation problems.

Parliamentarians schedule meeting

"Ladders of Motion and Uses" will be the topic at the regular monthly meeting of the Permian Basin Unit of the National Association of Parliamentarians at 2 p.m. Saturday at Midland College.

Mona Deland of Odessa will present the program. Program Chairman Vyola Stroman of San Angelo will introduce Mrs. Deland. President Mrs. W.F. Johnson of Hobbs, N.M., will preside over the business meeting.

Persons interested in parliamentary procedures can obtain application for membership in the organization from Mrs. W.F. Shepherd, membership chairman. She is available at 684-8583.

Ways to keep your cool when home freezer stops

By MARJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

One morning a few weeks ago I opened the freezer door and got this sinking feeling.

The ice cream had softened and the frozen strawberries weren't.

Some time, apparently the previous evening, the circuit breaker for the refrigerator and freezer had been tripped, and they'd been without power about 12 hours.

We were lucky. The softened food was in the refrigerator's freezer. We also have a large freezer, and the food in it came through still frozen solid.

But it was an experience that left me cold.

And got me to thinking. What happens in a blackout, or an emergency where the power goes off for more than overnight?

The U.S. Department of Agriculture published a booklet called "What to Do When Your Home Freezer Stops," and it contains some good hints.

The first rule for keeping food frozen when the power goes off is to keep the door shut.

"Open the freezer only to take out the food for moving to a locker plant, or to add dry ice," the booklet says. "Don't worry if you know you can have the freezer running again in a few hours."

If the power is off, check circuit breakers or fuses. Try to find out how long a blackout might last. If the power is on, but your freezer isn't, check your freezer's instruction book to see if there's something you can do to get it running again.

If you have to have a repair, ask the service agent how long it will take.

Try to estimate how long the food will stay frozen.

"With the freezer closed, food will usually stay frozen in a fully loaded cabinet two days; in a cabinet with less than half a load, not more than a day," the USDA booklet says. The frozen food acts as its own "freezing element," keeping itself cold.

How long the food stays frozen depends on:

— How much food is there.

— What kind of food is there (a freezer full of meat won't thaw as fast as one full of baked food such as bread).

— How cold it was to begin with (food frozen at 0 degrees Fahrenheit will stay frozen longer than that stored at higher temperatures.)

— Freezer insulation (here's where paying extra for more insulation at the initial freezer purchase pays off).

— Size of the freezer (the larger the freezer, assuming it's full, the longer the food stays frozen. That's why food in our refrigerator-freezer thawed while the big freezer didn't.)

If you know the freezer will be off for longer than the food will stay frozen, you still have some alternatives.

Check with local locker plants to see if they have room for your food. In a widespread blackout, you may have trouble finding room, but if it's just your freezer on the fritz, this can be a money saver.

If you can get the food into a locker, wrap it in layers of newspaper, or put it in insulated boxes, and hotfoot it to the locker.

If you can't get the food into a locker, and the freezer is going to be off more than a day, use dry ice.

The USDA says 25 pounds of dry ice should hold the temperature of a half-full 10-cubic-foot cabinet below freezing for two or three days.

Food in a fully loaded cabinet will stay frozen three or four days if you put the dry ice in soon after the freezer goes off. Use 50 pounds of dry ice in a 20-cubic-foot freezer. Put a layer of heavy cardboard right on the food, and the ice on the cardboard.

Chapter meet held

Xi Epsilon Epsilon Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi met in the home of Lois Heath, 3327 Fannin St.

President Carolyn Hartzoge announced that donations had been sent to the International Endowment Fund, the Exemplar Fund and the Loan Fund.

Jean Wilson, service chairman, reported that Christmas gifts and a monthly allowance will be sent to the chapter-sponsored girl at Girlstown, U.S.A. Chapter members will assist with the Veteran's Day Poppy Sale, and a game party will be held for Trinity Tower residents Nov. 16.

Myrtle Russell and Jo Beverley reported on forums attended at the recent area convention in Abilene. The chapter scrapbook won honorable mention at the convention judging.

Rio's Museum of Modern Art to be rebuilt at once

By EDUARDO GALLARDO

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Rio's Museum of Modern Art, devastated by fire in July, will be totally rebuilt within a year, cultural leaders here claim. No one knows for sure, however, which paintings and sculptures it will have.

In fact, much of the museum reconstruction effort so far has been characterized by complaints of lack of funds and arguments about who should be on the museum's board of directors.

A predawn fire of undetermined origin on July 8 reduced the modernistic, bay-front museum to a blackened concrete shell and deminished its collection of some 1,000 works of art to fewer than 100. Restoration experts say they think they can recover about 50 of the damaged pieces — including a sculpture by Brancuse — but not much more.

Hugo Gouthier, the head of the museum reconstruction drive, told The Associated Press the rebuilding is progressing at "a satisfactory pace." But very few new important works have been acquired and major physical repairs to the building are not yet evident.

The museum's collection was not exceptional, in international terms. But its losses included paintings such as Picasso's "Dora Maar" and "Cubist Head," Dali's "Egg on a Plate. Without the Plate," Miro's "Persons in a Landscape," plus works by Max Ernst, Diego Rivera, Alfaro Siqueiros, Paul Klee and renowned Brazilian artists Di Cavalcanti and Portinari.

Many Brazilians have donated paintings to the museum and have pledged to give even more. But those that have true artistic importance and which could be included in serious exhibitions "can be counted on the fingers of your hands," according to one museum informant. These included:

—An abstract painting by French modernist Pierre Soulages, donated by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France during a recent visit to Brazil. It already has been placed in the museum's cellar, awaiting the building's reconstruction.

—A drawing by Picasso, donated by Brazilian businessman Paulo de Farias. It waits in the Brazilian Embassy in Paris.

—A painting by Alfredo Volpi, donated by a local insurance company.

Because of a shortage of money, the museum has not purchased a single new painting.

The museum, which is a private institution (its titular president is Dr. Ivo Pitanguy, the famous Brazilian plastic surgeon), suffered about $3.2 million in physical damage. There has not yet been a reliable estimate of the cash value of the works of art that were burned.

So far, the state of Rio de Janeiro has allocated $980,000 for the museum reconstruction drive, and insurance company payments have amounted to around $410,000. The federal government has pledged $1.5 million, and the city of Rio has promised $250,000. Private donations have amounted to only $9,000 so far.

Reconstruction was slowed by a dispute among members of the museum's board of directors over who should determine policy. Executive Director Heloisa Lustosa wound up being fired, as did board member Alvaro Americano. Both referred to their dismissals as "acts of violence" but now the word is that the two have rejoined the museum rebuilding effort — but in less influential capacities.

"We don't talk about that," Gouthier said when pressed for more details. "Everything is going fine."

The man in charge of renovating the museum's collection, Simeon Leal, said the refurbished Museum of Modern art will "give priority to Brazilian and South American art," but he did not go into detail.

Leal also said he was not worried about the current lack of internationally famous works of art for the museum.

"When the building is restored, the art will come," he predicted.

Hanoi, Taiwan major problems for U.S., China

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Teng Hsiao-ping, the Chinese vice premier, gave a Western-style news conference the other day in Tokyo.

It was his first ever. And he made some news.

Teng believes China eventually will have normal relations with the United States, but only after the Taiwan issue is settled on China's terms.

"We are waiting for the United States to make up its mind," he said.

In other words, as Henry Kissinger insisted in the face of considerable disbelief, China is not pressing the United States.

Since breaking military and diplomatic ties with Taiwan isn't all that popular among the American people, there could be a long delay.

It's a decision for President Carter to make — obviously after the elections.

China is in no hurry. But Carter is getting a lot of advice to "play the China card" — to move closer to Peking as a way of balancing the power of the Soviet Union.

Trade between the United States and China could reach $1 billion or more this year, a new high. Cultural and other contacts have increased. China offers a tempting source of oil.

There is a basis for a mutually beneficial relationship.

The United States is one of only 23 countries that recognize Nationalist China. Only 12, including the Vatican, maintain embassies at Taipei.

Despite all the increasing isolation, the little island country has made itself the world's 22nd largest trading nation and the 12th largest trading partner of the United States.

Presumably that trade could continue with a break in U.S. relations, but the 17 million people on Taiwan could suffer a sense of isolation devastating to their morale.

With the 1954 mutual security treaty abrogated and the remaining 1,000 or so American troops removed Taiwan's defenses would be weakened.

China's influence is growing. Teng's visit to Tokyo, formalizing a treaty of friendship with Japan, revives the kinship between the two countries. It also closes the book on memories of the bloody Japanese occupation of the 1930s.

The main feature of the treaty is an "anti-hegemony" clause that is sure to be read in Moscow as being aimed at the Soviet Union.

The new regime in Peking is clearly more Western-oriented than China in the last days of Chairman Mao. But it is probably even more hostile to the Soviet Union than its predecessor.

If the United States decides to upgrade its relations with China it risks some rocky days in dealing with Moscow. Those kind of "atmospherics" are unlikely to contribute to completion of a U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms limitation treaty or to resolving other disputes between Washington and Moscow.

And even as China seals its friendship with Japan, tensions are high along the border with Vietnam.

The Foreign Ministry in Peking has charged Vietnam with a series of armed intrusions into China's Kwangsi and Yunnan provinces. In its Oct. 26 note, the ministry claimed heavy losses to Chinese border inhabitants caused by land mines planted inside Chinese territory.

Vietnam, looking for U.S. friendship, has dropped its demand for $3 billion in "reparations" as a condition for establishing relations.

Quiet discussions are now under way between the United States and Vietnam. In the chess game of diplomacy, Carter will have to weigh whether balancing Soviet influence in Vietnam is worth irritating China.

Diamond anniversary

A most significant anniversary in Texas agriculture is being observed this year, and it would be well for all Texans to take note of it.

We are all inclined to take too much for granted, and when it comes to agriculture, all too many of us never take the time or trouble to even consider what has made it all possible.

Many Texas consumers, for instance, may never have heard of Dr. Seaman A. Knapp, but if it hadn't been for his keen insight and vision 75 years ago they would be paying even higher prices today for food and fiber.

Knapp, a U.S. Department of Agriculture special agent and plant scientist, was invited to Terrell in 1903 by Kaufman County citizens to investigate the possibility of establishing a demonstration farm in the area to improve farm income. As a result of this effort, Texas' first demonstration farm came into being, featuring new crop varieties and better methods of growing corn and cotton. The project was so successful that soon the state was heavily dotted with demonstration farms. These expanded into informal education programs in agriculture and, after passage of the Smith-Lever Act of 1914, led to the creation of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, which functions today as a vital part of the Texas A&M University System.

And it was in 1906 that the first county agricultural agent was hired in Smith County and headquartered at Tyler. Agricultural production in Texas has come a long way since then, much to the benefit of all residents.

Through the years, the Extension Service has earned a reputation of dealing with major issues and concerns of the people, and in being in the forefront during times of emergencies.

And right here at home, the Midland County Extension Program Building Committee Thursday is celebrating the Diamond Anniversary of the First Cooperative Farm Demonstration with a special program planned for its annual meeting. The celebration is scheduled at 7 p.m. in the Valley View Community Center.

Congratulations are in order for the Texas Extension Service, its Midland County affiliate and to all persons involved therein, particularly Midland County Extension Agents Charles W. Green, Mrs. Judy Germany and Travis Harney. Thanks to all for a job well done.

'Mahon Day' upcoming

Midlanders Saturday will have the opportunity of expressing appreciation in a direct, personal manner to a great statesman for all that he has done for Midland and its residents, both city and county, through ths years.

The occasion is "George and Helen Mahon Day" in the Tall City.

It is a community-wide event sponsored by the Midland Chamber of Commerce as a means of letting Congressman and Mrs. Mahon know the high esteem in which they are held by Midland and area residents.

It would be impossible to thank them sufficiently for all they have done for Midland and West Texas, but we can and should at least try. And this particular occasion presents a marvelous opportunity to do this very thing.

The congressman is retiring this year after 44 years on the Hill. He is the only representative this district has ever had.

The informal, open to the public, observance will be held in the new Chaparral Center on the campus of Midland College. It is hoped that as many as 2,000 to 2,500 persons will attend the function, beginning at 11:30 a.m.

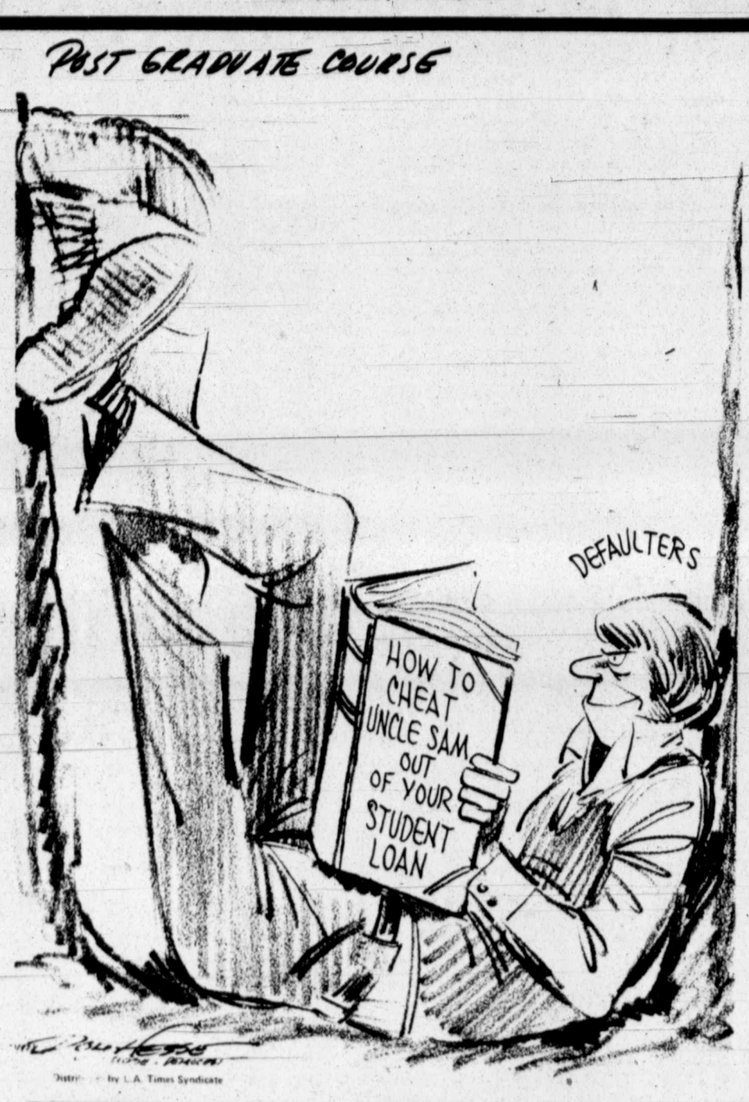

A barbecue lunch will be served from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., when the program will begin. Tickets to the event,priced at $1 each (and this includes the lunch) are on sale at the Chamber of Commerce office. They also will be on sale Thursday at the four Midland banks — Commercial Bank & Trust, The First National, The Midland National and Western State — Gibson's, Albertson's and Furr's (North Big Spring Street.).

The Midland College Choir and the college's "Chaparral Brass" will highlight the musical program.

Brief talks and special presentations to the honorees will complete the program, which will conclude by 2 p.m.

This should be one of the "biggest and best" events of its kind ever in Midland's history.

You surely will not want to miss it. Better make your reservations today.

ART BUCHWALD

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — It was in the Sakowitz Christmas Catalogue under the title, "The Ultimate Gift." Sakowitz is a Houston department store that caters to the VERY rich, and when it comes to thinking up wild Christmas presents, the store obviously is trying to outdo Neiman Marcus, which this year featured a "His and Her Atomic-Proof Vault" in the side of a mountain, where people can store valuables safely from World War III.

Sakowitz is advertising many wild Christmas presents to play catch-up with Neiman's. But the one that really caught my attention was an offer to provide "21 celebrities for your special dinner party, LIKE Walter Cronkite, Neil Armstrong, Sen. Henry Jackson, Uri Geller, Gloria Steinem, George Allen, Arthur Ashe, F. Lee Bailey, Bruce Jenner, Dr. Joyce Brothers, Dr. Milton Friedman, Ruth Gordon, Minnesota Fats and Buckminster Fuller," among others. The price listed in the catalogue was $94,125.

As soon as I received the booklet I called Cronkite and said, "Hey, I didn't know you were renting yourself out for Christmas parties these days."

The usually unflappable Walter sounded really flapped. "There is nothing funny about it. I'm suing those expletives deleted. I wasn't asked about this, I didn't give my permission, and as far as I can find out neither did anybody else who's listed in the catalogue. The whole thing is outrageous."

"What did Sakowitz say?" I wanted to know.

"They said, legally, they're protected because the copy for the dinner party has the word LIKE in it. They said they weren't promising me, but someone LIKE me."

"But there's only ONE Walter Cronkite," I said.

"You may take it lightly," Walter said bitterly, "but CBS is not, and we intend to make Sakowitz desist from pulling this kind of stunt again."

"Well, I'm glad I called you first," I told him, "because I was just about to send in my check for $94,125 so my wife would have a Christmas party with real live celebrities for a change."

After I finished talking to Walter I got to thinking about what would have happened if I had sent in my $94,125, and had invited all our neighbors over for a Christmas party to meet this covey of overachievers.

This is what I envision might have happened:

The doorbell rings. There is a man with sandy hair and a mustache standing there.

"Hi there. Is this where the party is?"

"Who are you?"

"I'm LIKE Walter Cronkite."

"You mean Walter isn't coming to my party?"

"If you read your catalogue carefully, Sakowitz did not promise you Walter Cronkite but only somebody LIKE him."

"Why are you LIKE Walter Cronkite?"

"Because I'm an excellent sailor, a 'C' tennis player, a well-dressed man, and I anchor the evening news in Waco, Texas. Your guests will really flip out when I say, 'And that's the way it is.'"

Just then a woman arrives. She has long, brownish hair and smoldering eyes.

"And pray tell," I say, "who are you?"

"I'm LIKE Gloria Steinem, and if you light my cigarette I'll knock your teeth out."

"You're not the real Gloria, then?"

"That's a terribly sexist thing to say. You wouldn't ask that question of a man." Another chap comes up and joins us. "Is this the Sakowitz Gift Party?"

"Who are you?"

"I'm LIKE Neil Armstrong."

"Then you're not the fellow who got to the moon first?"

I get angry and decide to take the 21 "celebrities" down to Sakowitz to get my $94,125 back.

The lady behind the Christmas exchange counter says, "We're sorry, but there are no cash refunds on people LIKE Arthur Ashe, F. Lee Bailey, Joyce Brothers, Minnesota Fats or Ruth Gordon. Once they leave the store they're all considered used merchandise."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Nicaraguan rebels plan battle

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — Within the next few months, Nicaraguan rebels will launch a major offensive which they hope will topple Anastasio Somoza from the pinnacle of power his family attained 46 years ago through the courtesy of United States Marines.

Bloodied but unbowed, the Sandinista guerrilla learned a lesson from their abortive effort against Somoza last September: Even with overwhelming support from the Nicaraguan people, no revolutionary movement can succeed without taking on Somoza's 7,500-man National Guard in orthodox military battle.

The National Guard, equipped and trained by the United States, is more than able to keep 2.3 million Nicaraguans under control unles it is confronted with a reasonably profesional army prepared to conduct a reasonably professional war.

For this reason, the Sandinista National Liberation Front is training a small but dedicated military force at underground camps in remote areas near the Honduran and Costa Rican borders. Although it numbers no more than 1,000, the rebel army is confident that the support of the populace will more than make up the difference when the full-scale war on Somoza's regime is launched.

Since their emergence as a national force in the early 1960s, the Sandinistas have operated as a rag-tag guerrilla outfit which specialized in hit-and-run raids on rural National Guard posts and isolated attacks in Nicaraguan cities. They almost succeeded in ousting Somoza with an attack on the National Palace last summer and an offensive in the fall. But they were unable to prevail against the National Guard's tanks and other superior armaments supplied by the Pentagon.

"Women and children fought with nothing but their hands and fingernails," Danile Ortega, a member of the Sandinistas' national directorate, told our reporter Bob Sherman. "So now we will build an army and arm those people."

Sherman recently spent two weeks with the guerrillas. He visited their training camps and interviewed their leaders.

Although the democratic governments of Nicaragua's neighbors are sympathetic to the rebel cause, they tend to observe international niceties by deporting guerrillas found operating in their territory. But Costa Rica, for example, deports captured Nicaraguan rebels to Panama instead of Nicaragua, and the Panamanians make it relatively easy for anti-Somoza rebels to slip the leash. Some Nicaraguan guerrillas have been deported three and four times.

The need for secrecy, however, is still unquestioned in Nicaragua. Our reporter went underground to meet with Ortega and Victor Tirado, another member of the rebels' national directorate.

In a scenario straight out of an old Humphrey Bogart movie, Sherman was instructed to take a taxi to an out-of-the-way restaurant in San Jose, Costa Rica. After a wild ride through the city's teeming streets, he got to the restaurant and was approached by a young man who drove him via a circuitous route to a "safe house" where he met Ortega and Tirado.

"The world thinks our offensive was a failure because Somoza didn't leave power," Tirado said. "But we gained military experience and emerged as a political power. The enemy was weakened and Somoza lost credibility. Had our offensive been a failure, we would have been destroyed and eliminated. If the victory was theirs, it was a short one."

Said Ortega, "The timing wasn't ours. It was determined by the people. We didn't do anything but put ourselves in front of them."

The Sandinistas initially were a tight, closed group which screened adherents carefully. Under the pressure of time and events, recruits are now being accepted without the diligent scrutiny that used to prevail. The leaders evidently feel that the Sandinistas' support is so strong, and Somoza's so weak, that they have little to fear from infiltrators.

The rebels have divided Nicaragua into four military "fronts" — North, South, Central and Occidental. The main attack will come from the north, which includes the cities of Matagalpa, Jinotega and Esteli, and from the south, which includes the cities of Benjamin, Zelector, Granada, Rivas and San Juan.

The obvious target of the twin attacks is the capital, Managua, in the central front, and the heavily populated cities to the northwest. The military commander is Eden Pastora, the now-famous "Commender Zero" of last summer's attack on the National Palace.

When rationality loses, one might as well laugh

WASHINGTON — Democracies are inherently confusing—and deserve equal quantities of laughter and serious consideration. How else to find relief from the dilemma wherein the public wish for a more diverse, improved educational system is stopped by a blend of nativist bigotry and the inconsistency of the Carter Administration?

Everyone who can read knows that the public school system in our land is in a mess these days. So proposals were made in Congress to make it possible for nearly all parents to financially afford the freedom of choice in education by sending their children to non-public schools.

This legislation, called Tuition Tax Credit, passed the House in June, and included allowances for elementary and secondary school tuition. The Senate, however, got into a nasty debate over its version, the Moynihan-Packwood Bill, and resolved it by allowing aid only for college tuition.

Though the Pope or the Vatican were not flayed explicitly in the debate, there is no question in the minds of Sen. Robert Packwood (R-Ore.) an Oregon Protestant, or Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) born a Roman Catholic in Tulsa, Okla., and reared the same in New York's West Side and adjoining waterfront docks, that institutional anti-Catholicism played a major role in the defeat of elementary and secondary aid.

Even after the election of John F. Kennedy as President, the era of warm ecumenical feeling flowing from the Papacy of John XXIII, and the generally liberalized trend in the Catholic Church, there is still a strong residue of bigotry toward anything which smacks of Rome.

Sen. Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.), in debating the bill, acknowledged that college (presumably including Notre Dame) have "tremendous diversity," but added: "You will not find that in the little parochial school of the Catholic Church."

"Fritz" Hollings, a good soul, should visit the classrooms of some Catholic schools, or for that matter, some Lutheran schools. He would discover them to cover the same sort of material that the run of public schools do and would encounter no strange rites or exorcisms. He would likely find a great deal more discipline than in public schools, and certainly more sense of purpose.

Another argument being mustered against non-public schools is that they are elitist havens of segregation. Well, Catholic schools were integrated in the District of Columbia, to name one place, long before public schools were compelled to do so by court order.

Any citizen visiting Catholic schools in inner-city neighborhoods, say, in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia or other large cities, would find they were not only integrated, but that black children, many of them Protestants, were in the majority. Most of these inner-city schools operate on budgets with per-pupil costs one-half or one-third of those of nearby public schools.

Now comes that warm, friendly octopus, the Internal Revenue Service, responding to political pressure from the Carter White House, by proposing regulations which force all non-public schools to impossible contortions for the well-intentioned goal of greater integration.

If non-public schools do not demonstrate significant minority enrollment, the IRS is prepared to remove their tax-exempt status, meaning that people who contribute to their upkeep cannot claim these contributions as tax-deductions.

According to George Reed, counsel for the U.S. Catholic Conference, the IRS proposal defines "significant" as 20 percent of the minority school population in the community. In Washington, D.C., that would mean that non-public schools would have to have around 18 percent minority enrollment.

As it is, the total enrollment in all Catholic schools in D.C. is estimated to be about 70 percent minority (black and Hispanic). But each school isn't 70 percent. Nor can all Catholic schools in other major cities conform to what the IRS wants because these schools are set up according to parish boundaries, not public school district lines.

For that matter, it would be equally difficult for other non-public schools — Lutheran, Episcopal or Hebrew — to name three — to meet the IRS regimen. The real target of the IRS on this score, should be the "segregation academies" which flourish in certain parts of the country, and are outside the pale of an organization like the Council for American Private Education, whose members are all non-discriminatory.

It seems that the IRS is firing a shotgun and missing the rabbit. Yet, IRS chief counsel Stuart T. Siegel protests that, "The service is not attempting to establish social policy or to regulate private education."

The American people, according to surveys, favor tuition tax credits for non-public schools, and if informed about the IRS' latest proposed police action, would give it thumbs-down. But wait a minute. Wasn't that candidate Jimmy Carter, who, facing an uncertain vote in Catholic areas in 1976, promised administrators of Catholic schools that he would work for aid to parents of children in non-public schools?

Yes it was. But Carter reneged. Indeed, he has not even acknowledged requests from the National Catholic Education Assn. to meet with him. However, his HEW secretary, Joseph Califano, and his education commissioner, Ernest L. Boyer, were happy to meet with the National Coalition to Save the Public Schools, an organization formed to defeat the tax-credit legislation.

Congratulations to Sadat and Begin for winning the Nobel Peace Prize. When they accept the award, here's hoping they are on speaking terms with each other.

Sadat and Begin will split the prize money which won't amount to much — hardly enough to buy one jet fighter.

The Nobel Peace Prize is named after the inventor of dynamite. This year, unless the recipients live up to the prize, it will self-destruct.

Wasteful discard costs in long run

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Frugality embraces all the other virtues, said a philosopher of ancient Rome. Frugality is misery in disguise, said one of his contemporaries. Take your choice. Just avoid the kind of wastefulness that destroyed East in today's hand.

West led his top clubs in a match between Germany and Great Britain some 20 years ago. East signaled violently with the nine of spades at the second trick. His friends still remind him of this wasteful play.

South ruffed the second club, cashed the king of diamonds and led his spade, losing dummy's king to the ace.

East returned a heart to the king and covered dummy's eight of spades with the ten. South ruffed, led a high trump to dummy's ace and led the six of spades.

SETS UP THREE

East covered with the seven, and South ruffed again with a high trump. Declarer led his low trump to dummy's seven and led the four of spades. East covered with queen, and South ruffed again.

Now South led a heart to the ace and led the three of spades. East had to follow suit with the deuce, his only remaining card in the suit; and South triumphantly discarded his heart loser, making five diamonds.

Willful waste makes woeful want.

DAILY QUESTION

As dealer you hold: S K 8 6 4 3; H A K 4; D A 7 6; S Q 2. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid one spade. If your spades were headed by the queen and your clubs by the king, you might well open with one notrump. However, you tend to avoid notrump with only Q-x in one suit; and you prefer to bid a major with a decent suit of five or more cards. With both tendencies going in the same direction, bid the spades.

Former astronaut to address teachers

Col. James B. Irwin, former Apollo 15 astronaut, will be featured speaker at the general session of the Texas State Teachers Association convention at 10 a.m. Friday.

The District XVIII convention general session will be in the Chapparal Center at Midland College.

The two-day convention will open Thursday afternoon with check in at the credentials booth in the Lee High School auditorium lobby.

The House of Delegates meeting for representatives from the 26 school districts and counties in the district will be Thursday night in Chapparal Center.

Printus O. Burkhart, district president and principal of Rusk Elementary School in Midland, will preside at both the delegates meeting and the general session.

Following Col. Irwin's speech at the general session, representatives from the schools will attend specialized section meetings dealing with topics from kindergarden and early childhood to food services to teaching homebound pregnant students.

Group challenges judges closed hearing authority

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawyers for the nation's largest newspaper group are asking the Supreme Court to cut back judges' authority to close pretrial hearings. They argue that open hearings are not only a defendant's right but the public's right as well.

The nation's highest court was to hear arguments today in the appeal of a New York ruling by the Gannett news organization.

The justices set the stage for what could become a landmark ruling when they agreed last May to study what New York's highest court called "a recurring and delicate issue of concrete significance both to the courts and the news media."

The case centers on two young men arrested in connection with the summer 1976 death of a Rochester, N.Y., area policeman.

Three days after Wayne Clapp of the Rochester suburb of Brighton was reported missing, Kyle Greathouse, 16, and David Jones, 21, were arrested in Michigan in connection with the disappearance.

News reports in Rochester said both young men had made incriminating statements to police. After both were indicted by a Seneca County, N.Y., grand jury on charges of second-degree murder and robbery, their arraignment and extradition to New York were heavily covered by the local news media.

County Judge Daniel DePasquale held a Nov. 4, 1976, pretrial hearing to consider a request by the two defendants that certain evidence not be used at their trial.

Acting on a request by defense lawyers, DePasquale ordered all spectators out of the courtroom.

The Gannett Co., headquartered in Rochester where it owns two newspapers, objected to the judge's ousting one of its reporters. DePasquale refused to reconsider, however, ruling that he had acted to minimize prejudicial publicity and ensure a fair trial for the defendants.

Four children found dead in Oklahoma trailer home

RUSH SPRINGS, Okla. (AP) — Four children were found dead and their parents were in critical condition Tuesday after a faulty ventilation system apparently allowed unburned natural gas from a heater to accumulate in their mobile home.

Police Chief Carl Burke said Herb Miller called the police station at about 8:45 a.m. to report the deaths of the four children. He was identified as the children's grandfather.

He told officers he was summoned by Mrs. Joyce Baggett, a neighbor who had gone to the trailer to awaken the children for school.

When Miller couldn't arouse the family he kicked in their door and immediately smelled gas fumes.

Burke said James Pate, 23, and his wife, Carrie, 20, were outside the mobile home when officers arrived, and the bodies of their four children were still inside.

Mr. and Mrs. Pate were reported in critical condition at Baptist Medical center in Oklahoma City.

The dead children were identified as Misty Dawn, 5, Charlotte, 3, and twin boys, Shane and Shawn, 2.

"It's a terrible accident. One of those things that happens every year when it first gets cold," Burke said.

Doctors retains status

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dr. Homer B. Johnson of Midland has completed continuing education requirements to retain active membership in the American Academy of Family Physicians, the national association of family doctors.

Requirements call for members to complete a minimum of 150 hours of accredited continuing medical study every three years.

IRA and KEOGH Retirement Plans at First Savings are the sure way to build for a secure retirement, and get a tax break at the same time.

With an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) at First Savings you can save for the future at the impressive rate of 8% (effective annual yield 8.33%). Deduct whatever you save - up to $1500 - from your gross income. And defer every penny in taxes on your IRA until you withdraw it, normally after retiring. Then, you'll probably have less income and possibly be in a lower tax bracket.
(NOTE: There are severe penalties for early withdrawals.)

Here's an example of what an IRA can do for you. If you start an IRA at age 30, and deposit the maximum of $1500 per year until age 65, at the current interest rate, your IRA will be worth over $300,000. That's a tidy sum to start retirement, if you want to retire that young. By the way, your IRA is in addition to standard social security benefits. But remember, the deadline is the date your tax return is due in order to get your full tax deduction.

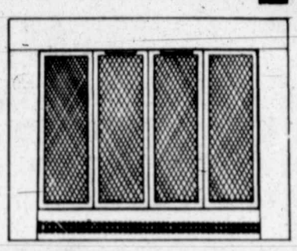

A Keogh Plan works much the same as an IRA except that it is designed for the self-employed individual, whereas the IRA is designed for the individual not covered by a pension or retirement plan. A Keogh Plan permits an annual deposit of up to $7500. With a Keogh Plan, you get the same tax advantages and interest rate as an IRA. However, the deadline for starting a Keogh is December the 31st, and you can make your final deposit on the day you file your taxes.

So stop by the First Savings offices downtown or San Miguel Square and let the "FISCAL FITNESS PEOPLE" show you the sure way to save for your retirement. It's getting later than you think . . .

Mary's life of crime baffling

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — She is attractive and intelligent, a university teacher close to her Ph.D. But 34-year-old Mary Ellen Corning is also a convicted bank robber, now awaiting transfer to a federal prison after a year of crime.

Mrs. Corning pleaded guilty in September to the July 19 robbery of the Bank of Minneapolis and was sentenced to up to five years in prison. Charges of robbing two other banks were dropped.

Her story is baffling. One person who knows her well says she is "a sweet, dear woman ... more honest that your average doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief. But she did all of these illegal things."

Yet nothing about her situation seems to bother Mrs. Corning.

"In prison, I'll have time to write a book," she says. "Nothing about prison — people have written about that, there's nothing to say. But creative writing. I may end up teaching when I get out. Maybe somebody will hire an ex-bank robber who's written a book."

She led a conventional life as Mary Ellen Beatty in Boulder, Colo., the daughter of a college professor. She earned bachelor's and master's degrees at the University of Colorado and married Hobart Corning III, a fellow graduate student. Late in 1973 they were divorced.

If there was a turning point in her life, she says, it probably came soon after, the night she met Larry Kohout, 27, who lived in the apartment across the hall. He had just gotten out of prison in Washington, where he had stabbed a guard.

"Education aside, I never met anyone who was more intelligent," Mrs. Corning says. "The lessons he'd learned hadn't come out of books and that made them somehow more real. I'd been living life second-hand, playing intellectual games that got boring ..."

In the spring of 1975, Kohout went back to prison for robbing a laundromat. Mrs. Corning lost her job as a University of Minnesota teaching associate. She worked in a bank, then as a secretary until March 1977. Then came a string of rejected job applications — she said she was turned down because she was over-educated.

Kohout was released from prison in the fall of 1977. Her criminal life began in November.

She says he kidded her about being a straight arrow. "He was right. I always assumed I would get paught if I tried anything," she says.

On her first outing, she was busted for shoplifting and was sent to jail. When she was released, Kohout was gone. She says she hasn't seen him since.

Broke and hungry, Mrs. Corning lived in an old hotel catering to transients. Poring through the garbage of an elderly woman one day, she found outdated bank records indicating her neighbor had savings certificates in almost every bank in town.

Mrs. Corning says she used the old woman's name and withdrew $200 about 30 times before she was caught. She was sentenced to 18 months at a treatment center but walked out after 13 days.

A few days later, she used a holdup note to steal $650 from the Marquette National Bank. She says she was broke in a few days and used the same tactics to steal $1,100.

She was broke again in two weeks and on Aug. 4 robbed the First Federal Savings and Loan of $2,260. But that time a hidden camera snapped her picture and it was printed in a newspaper.

Four days later, a reporter at a radio station where she once worked spotted her at a downtown restaurant and notified the FBI.

"She was more cooperative than any suspect I've ever seen," said FBI Agent John Williamson.

She was arrested in a sandwich shop. At first she denied the bank robbery accusations, police said, but she confessed when taken to headquarters.

Woman recalls life as a Pinkerton private eye

Norma Hills painted a bathroom nine times and rode buses up and down the West Coast for a month.

Like her fictional companions in detection, Norma Hills was a private eye.

From 1929 through World War II, in fact, Ms. Hills was the lone female operative in the Seattle office of Pinkerton's National Detective Agency.

Under the guise of repainting the bathroom, she took telephoto movies of a man across the street. He told his insurance company he'd been totally disabled by an accident, but Ms. Hills was able to prove that wasn't so.

"My cover was that I was painting the house inside," she recalls. "I painted that bathroom about nine times. He was painting his bathroom at the same time."

On another occasion, she says, she was told to keep tabs on a bus line's drivers to make sure they were honest and courteous. One night the assignment landed her in San Francisco with no place to stay.

It was during World War II and innkeepers "didn't want single ladies in their hotels," she says. "I walked the streets of San Francisco all night long because I couldn't find a hotel room.

"I learned to my dismay that an all-night movie isn't an all-night movie. They turn on the lights at four in the morning."

Her most memorable case, she remembers, left her sitting for long hours by the potted palms in a hotel lobby.

The divorced husband of a Seattle heiress took his son across the Canadian border where he was immune from a court custody order. Because the child stood to inherit millions, Pinkerton agents were hired to watch over the youth's welfare.

"Night and day we had to see where they (the man and his new wife) went and what they did," says Ms. Hills.

For two months, she dashed out of their hotel to tail them on their trips. When she learned the man was shipping his car East, she alerted other agents, who nabbed him when he crossed the border into New York. The boy was returned to his mother.

Getting hired by Pinkerton's wasn't easy — and job security was nil.

"You had to be dependable, loyal. You almost had to take an oath of allegiance," says Ms. Hills. "You couldn't have had a traffic ticket they didn't know about.

"You had no identification," she adds. "The company could fire you and say they'd never heard of you if you blew your cover."

Despite the hardships, she says, "it was tremendously interesting.

"You had to be able to interview a coal miner or a lawyer or a doctor."

In the best detective tale tradition, she married her supervisor, Wilbur Hills. At the end of World War II, they bought a motel in southern Oregon and ran it for 10 years, until the motel was cut off by a freeway.

These days Ms. Hills works as a volunteer in Seattle, coordinating monthly fashion shows for Goodwill Industries' Memory Lane Museum.

The Invicta 715 is quality crafted by the world's leading electronics professionals. Built with the latest circuitry and finest materials, each set must pass rigid inspection to assure the consistant high quality standards that Toyomenka is noted for throughout the world.

Streamline-designed, the 715 is lightweight and durable. You can carry it anywhere and everywhere — for enjoyment at any time -- indoors or out, at home, in the car or at sea.

This versatile system operates at full power from four different sources: standard AC current; 9 D-Cell batteries; plug-in car boat cord; or optional rechargeable battery pack.

You'll have the pleasure of clean, clear reception under total control. With a signal-pulling, telescopic monopole antenna, the 715 delivers a brilliant picture and sound. VHF or UHF viewing is sharp — even in broad daylight — with the unique glare protector built in around the screen. External antenna terminals provide viewing for fringe areas.

Radio reception is "clean" — tune in AM or FM with pinpoint accuracy, with slide controls for tone and volume — and enjoy dynamic response.

With normal care and by following the instructions in this manual, you will have many years of pleasure from your TMK 715.

DEATHS

Minnie Little

KERMIT — Services for Minnie Little, 81, of Kermit, sister of Mrs. Neal Pinkston of Andrews, were to be at 2 p.m. today in First Baptist Church in Cross Plains with burial in Cross Plains Cemetery directed by Cooper Funeral Home of Kermit.

Mrs. Little died in a Kermit hospital Monday morning after a lengthy illness.

She was born in Liberty Hill Jan. 7, 1897. She moved to Kermit eight years ago from Cross Plains. She was a Baptist.

Other survivors include two daughters, two brothers, two sisters, six grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren.

Lois Myrl Burke

ANDREWS — Services for Lois Myrl Burke, 50, of Andrews will be at 10 a.m. Friday in Singleton Funeral Home here with Levon Z. Hallmark, branch president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, officiating.

Burial will follow in Andrews Cemetery.

Mrs. Burke died Tuesday in an Andrews hospital following a lengthy illness.

She was born Feb. 14, 1928, in Ohio County, Ky. She was married April 3, 1941, in New Albany, Ind.

Survivors include her husband Joe W. Burke of Andrews; a sister, Bonnie Allen of Marengo, Ind.; three brothers, Guy Fraime and Troy Fraime, both of Marengo, Ind., and O'Neal Fraime of English, Ind.

J.D. Bodkins

J.D. "Jack" Bodkins, 87, pioneer West Texas oil operator and a 42-year resident of Midland, died Tuesday in a Lubbock hospital of a "massive stroke." He had undergone surgery there last week.

Funeral services were to be at 4 p.m. today in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home. The body will be forwarded to Denver, Colo., for placement in Fairmont Mausoleum.

Bodkins, who resided at 1511 W. Holloway St. here, was born June 24, 1891.

He moved to Midland from San Angelo in 1936 and had engaged in the oil business here since that time. He had extensive holdings in and outside of Texas.

He was a long-time member of the Texas-Midcontinent Oil & Gas Association.

Survivors include three grandchildren, Mark Mourne of Colorado Springs, Colo., and Tina Bodkins and J. Dean Mourne, both of Bellevue, Wash.

Honorary pallbearers include all of his Midland friends.

Lamb was born July 21, 1901, in Fort Worth. He married Pearl Davis Aug. 18, 1923, in Fort Worth. He was retired from Continental Oil Co.

A Forsan resident since 1935, Lamb had been mayor there since 1961.

He was a member of the First United Methodist Church in Big Spring. He was a veteran of World War II.

Survivors include his wife; a daughter, Betty Heideman of Forsan, two grandchildren and three great-great grandchildren.

Carter signs tax cut bill but doesn't tell a soul

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter signed voter-pleasing bills to give a break to millions of taxpayers, help the handicapped and improve the nation's roads, then let America go to the polls Tuesday without saying a word about it.

Carter had promised at a recent political rally he would approve the $18.7 billion tax bill that will cut income taxes for about 65 million American couples and individuals.

White House spokesman Claudia Townsend confirmed today that Carter signed the tax cut bill on Monday, when he was at Camp David, Md.

But the president vetoed a bill that would have authorized special federal payments to Guam and the Virgin Islands to offset local revenue losses from the tax cut bill through 1982.

In a statement, Carter said the bill "is simply another attempt to manage territorial deficits without addressing the underlying economic and financial problems which have led to those deficits." He said he has directed a study of the situation to find a plan to help those governments achieve financial stability.

Carter signed a bill authorizing $333 million in fiscal year 1979 for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and requiring it to study the possibility of licensing federal radioactive waste storage and disposal activities not currently licensed.

His signing of the $53.8 billion transportation bill and a measure to provide up to $5 billion for rehabilitation of the handicapped had been in doubt. In fact, handicapped demonstrators in front of the White House had said this week they feared he was purposely waiting until after the election to announce a veto.

White House sources, who asked not to be named, said Carter also signed a bill over the weekend at Camp David to overhaul the nation's bankruptcy laws.

Still silent on the bills, he returned to the White House Tuesday night to monitor election results which showed Republicans making slight gains in Congress and in the nation's statehouses.

The White House usually takes great pains to publicize the signing of bills it considers popular, but a high administration official said today that if — just before the election — "we announced just good bills, people would say it was all political."

He also said there were logistical problems in notifying campaigning congressmen who would have wanted to share in the announcements. However, reporters first learned of Carter's actions from several of those congressmen.

No further explanations were offered.

Although the tax legislation will reduce income taxes for millions of Americans next year, many of them will have about the same or even higher total tax bills because of an increase in Social Security levies voted by Congress last year.

The new tax bill also will slash the capital-gains income tax and give a new break to older Americans who sell their homes.

The new law reduces individual tax rates and makes other changes which should result in personal reductions of roughly $12 billion.

Key features include a $250 increase in the $750-per-person personal tax exemption. And the standard deduction will be increased for single persons from $2,200 to $2,300 and for married couples from $3,200 to $3,400.

The current individual tax credit of $35 a person, or 2 percent of the first $9,000 of taxable income, will expire this year.

The bill also increases the "earned income" tax credit that rewards poor working families for staying off the welfare rolls. The previous $400 top credit was raised to $500.

The bill to aid the handicapped authorizes federal payments of up to $5 billion over the next four years to states for rehabilitation programs. It also extends a program authorizing the Department of Labor to provide jobs for about 20,000 handicapped persons.

Administration spokesmen also had indicated Carter might veto the $53.8-billion transportation bill — $5.3 billion more than Carter asked.

Brooke defeated after 2 terms

BOSTON (AP) — He was the first and only popularly elected black senator since Reconstruction. For a dozen years, two terms, Republican Edward Brooke had served in the U.S. Senate.

He stood in the glitter of lights from seven television cameras, forcing smiles, impeccably dressed in a dark blue suit with a light blue shirt and a blue striped tie. His 80-year-old mother, Helen, ailing with high blood pressure, stood at his side.

He had come to concede the election to Democratic congressman Paul Tsongas and to tell several hundred campaign workers and supporters that there would be no party tonight, despite a band and four bars.

"Though I have wished Paul Tsongas well and he is the winner tonight," Brooke said, "in my book you are the winners and shall always be. You are the ones you really took the fight and I wish that we could have given you that grand and victorious celebration tonight that would have rocked not only this old Copley Plaza Hotel but that would have rocked this city."

At 59, Brooke was tired. Two investigations of his personal finances and a bitter divorce from his wife of 31 years, Remigia, had taken their toll. His smiling facade, his "Hi, how are you, so nice to see you," his "Thank you very, very much," his "I'm very, very grateful" to supporters who came up to shake his hand masked the moisture in his eyes.

He said in near tears that he did not cry when he was down.

"When we were down in the valley," he said in an apparent allusion to his personal problems, "I did not cry. I cried out and you answered that cry. And you have shown your faith and your confidence and it has given me great strength to carry on and to conduct this campaign.

"Now that this campaign has concluded, I trust that there will still be those who will continue to fight in the United States Senate for our senior citizens, for our minorities, for our blacks, for our Hispanics, for the handicapped, for the poor, for the middle income people who are becoming the poor, for peace on this earth, for full equality for all women and for equal justice for all people."

The crowd roared with applause. The band struck up.

"I'm going to get a rest," Brooke said. "I want to go to bed. I haven't slept for a long period of time. I want to get back my physical, my spiritual and my emotional strength and then I'll make a decision."

Ed Brooke was going to bed, uncertain about his future. The party was over. The band played "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

China worried about Vietnam, Soviet links

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Chinese Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping said today the Soviet Union and Vietnam are attempting to encircle his country and he warned the non-communist nations of Southeast Asia to beware of Soviet and Vietnamese attempts to gain influence.

Teng, speaking at a news conference, described the 25-year friendship and cooperation treaty signed between Moscow and Hanoi as "a military pact that clearly shows that those two countries have tried to expand their hegemonistic policy."

The 74-year-old Teng leaves Thailand Thursday for Malaysia and Singapore, where he also is expected to sound a tough anti-Soviet and anti-Vietnamese line. He is trying to win friends in the five-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations, which includes the three countries on his itinerary plus Indonesia and the Philippines.

"We are not afraid of being surrounded," Teng said. But he said China would wait to see how far Moscow and Hanoi would go before it decides how to react.

The vice premier said Peking would be especially wary of Vietnam's moves against Cambodia. The one-time communist allies are engaged in a bitter border war. China is siding with the Phnom Penh regime.

Teng reiterated China's long-standing policy of separating government-to-government relations from those between China's Communist Party and other "fraternal parties." Peking has providing aid to communist insurgencies in the region, including those in Thailand, Malaysia and Burma, while seeking closer ties with those governments.

"This is not only a question between China and Thailand but a universal one," Teng said. "I have repeatedly said that party-to-party relations and government-to-government relations are two separate things."

Midland man satisfactory

A Midland man was listed in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital early today with facial cuts received Tuesday night during an unusual accident, said Midland City Fire Department staffers and a hospital spokesman.

Wayne Powell, 35, of 1009 W. College Ave. was rushed by ambulance to the hospital about 6:36 p.m. after a barbell with an undetermined amount of weight apparently fell on him as he was lifting it, according to authorities.

Firemen said someone at a health studio in the 200 block of West Missouri Avenue notified them the accident had occurred there.

Alaska wants to try economic experiment

By WILLIAM GREIDER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Alaska, a state where pioneering is still a daily reality, wants to launch a grand experiment in economic democracy — distributing new wealth to all its citizens, giving each an owner's share in Alaska's bountiful energy development.

If the scheme works, every Alaskan — men, women, children — will hold stock shares in huge capital investments such as the Trans-Alaskan oil pipeline or the proposed natural gas pipeline or a future petrochemical complex. Every year, citizens would each receive dividend checks of several hundred dollars or more and, every year, their share of equity interest would grow.

In addition to spreading cash among the citizens, the idea might produce political benefits for the oil companies. If people have a personal stake in the profits, the public may be more sympathetic when private enterprise complains about government regulation and taxation.

Is the capitalist revolution upon us?

The "general stock ownership plan" (GSOP) is the brainchild of Sen. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, who derived the idea from the economic philosophy of Louis Kelso, a prophet of broadened capital ownership for workers. Last week, without any fanfare, the federal tax-law changes necessary for the venture were enacted by Congress in its omnibus tax bill, now awaiting the president's signature.

"This idea has floated around for years and nobody has taken it seriously," Gravel said. "But wait until the day when the first dividend checks go out to every citizen of Alaska. When the long green touches their hands, you will see a revolution begin."

Gravel, his enthusiasm getting somewhat ahead of events, predicts the Alaskan venture will alter American politics and economics in profound ways, as other states rush to copy the model. The senator sells it as the alternative to welfare-state liberalism, as the way "to build a constituency forTcapitalism."

The potential political effects are almost as intriguing as the presumed economic benefits. Gravel's plan would make all citizens into minority partners with the major oil companies, a fact that could greatly alter public opinion on issues such as state taxation of energy ventures. If a citizen holds a personal stake in energy profits, albeit a small one, he or she may not like the idea of the state government increasing its taxes on those profits in order to finance public programs.

The legislature has placed Louis Kelso's San Francisco investment firm under a $180,000 contract to draw up the blueprint for this economic creature — a state-chartered corporation owned by everyone, empowered to borrow money, perhaps with a credit guarantee from the state, and to invest the money in private business ventures. Earnings from the venture would pay off the loan and the leftover profits would be distributed every yearSas dividends to each of the 405,000 citizen stockholders.

For starters, Gravel thi8nks the GSOP corporation might buy out British Petroleum's 16 percent share in the oil pipe line. Owned jointly by eight oil companies, the pipe is already carrying North Slope crude oil south for distribution. BP has expressed an interest in selling its investment, valued at $1.5 billion, and the senator's staff calculates that, when the pipeline is at full capacity, BP's share of the revenue would run about $406 million a year.

This would be enough for the GSOP corporation, according to Gravel, to cover the operating costs plus the annual debt payments and still leave about $158 million a year for distribution in dividends.

That means about $390 per person. Nobody will get rich on $390, but a family of four would have four dividend checks coming every year, of $1,560. This could make a real difference to a poor family, Gravel reasons, offsetting some of the government obligations to provide welfare and subsidized services.

Since the value of an oil pipeline depreciates as it ages, the citizen stock would presumably be worth considerably less than $1.5 billion when the debt is finally paid off in 15 or 20 years. After five years, however, a citizen could sell his or her share for the going price.

To avoid concentrated ownership, nobody could hold more than 10 shares.

Each share of stock would have a single vote to elect the officers of the GSOP corporation, who in turn would have 16 percent worth of influence over thepipeline company itself.

Among other things, the Alaska legislature has to decide who qualifies as a "citizen.," One idea is to set a cutoff date of last Jan. 1, so the state would not be flooded with new immigrants seeking a share of stock.

Down the road a way, Gravel envisions several layers of citizen investment in a grander scale — another stock issue to help finance the multi-billion-dollar gas pipeline expected to be built in the 1980s, another to share in a vast petrochemical complex envisioned for the Kenai Peninsula. If Gravel's wish list were to become reality over the next decade, Alaskans would be drawing modest second incomes in addition to their wages — a collection of dividend checks.

At this point, the reader of normal intelligence is probably rolling his eyes and wondering if Sen. Gravel and the Alaska legislature have gone bonkers, not to mention the U.S. Congress, which has authorized the experiment. It all sounds too good to be true. Where is the hidden catch? And who pays the bill for this redistributon of wealth?

That is approximately the reaction that Gravel encountered last March when he first proposed the scheme to the state legislature and, again, this summer when he tried it out on the Senate Finance Committee. With a little persuasion from Sen. Russel B. Long, D-La., the committee chairman and an advocate himself of broadened ownership, the Congress decided to let Gravel try out his mini-revolution.

Long has said privately that, if Gravel's idea works, and it may or may not, it would become the most significant item in the 1978 tax legislation.

. The heart of the scheme is credit, the power to borrow money. As Gravel and Kelso see the world, ordinary people, even poor people, could accumulate wealth in the same way that well-to-do people make their assets grow, if the government will intervene. A person who has sufficient assets or earnings to guarantee his or her credit can borrow mney to make investments, pledging to pay back the loan with the new income expected from the investments.

If the venture is a success, the person winds up with new capital that paid for itself, but nobody calls this process a "giveaway." It's called "risk-taking" in the free enterprise system.

Gravels notion is that government, which in effect aggregate the assets of all citizens, can provide a mechanism for extending a share of credit to everyone — a chance to buy something based on its anticipated future earnings.

That concept is the essential novelty of Gravel's scheme. Beyond that point, the proposition works more or less like ordinary business transactions, with the same tax benefits, the same risks. The citizen-owned corporation would enjoy the same tax treatment as a partnerhip or a certain corporation with a limited number of stockholders (known as " Sub-chapter S" Corporations). The GSOP would be exempt from paying corporate income tax on it own earnings, but it would have to distribute at least 90 percent of its profits every year to shareholders who would each pay individual income tax on the money. The GSOP could not, however, pass through losses, so its shareholders could not use it as a tax shelter.

The Treasury Department objected to Gravel's original version because he had tucked in additional, more exotic "tax benefits." When the tax experts studied is final proposal, however, they concluded that the U.S. Treasury would lose little or nothing.

Gravel contends the federal government will actually collect more revenue under his plan because the profits now collected by British Petroleum, for instance, are "sheltered" from taxation by various provisions of the tax code. If some of that profit goes dirctly to individuals, it could yield as much as $40 million in income taxes, Gravel claims.

If the GSOP decided to buy BP's share, it would have to go to a friendly banker somewhere, presumably on Wall Street, and ask to borrow the $1.5 billion needed. The banker would make a calculation on whether it is a good risk or not. If the pipeline looked as if it wouldn't "pay out" as handsomely as the company's projections, then the GSOP would either be turned down or be forced to pay high-risk interest rates that might kill the whole idea.

But, if the Trans-Alaska, pipeline is such a good deal, how come British Petroleum wants to get out of it? That question leads into arcane subjects where only experts tread with confidence — pipeline economics, corporate debt structure and optimum rates of return for oil companies.

British Petroleum, which has expressed no more than an informal interest in selling, has complained about its low earnings from the pipeline so far, which suffered from an explosion and shutdown last year. It is the only major partner that doesn't also own a share of the North Slope oil field. The state of Alaska, like Exxon and Arco and the others, do own production shares in the oil field.

China clinches first deal

ROME (AP) — China has clinched its first oil deal in Western Europe with the sale of 634,900 barrels of crude to an Italian firm.

The Garrone refinery said the oil will arrive in Genoa in two equal shipments next month.

Garrone officials declined to say how much they were paying but said the Chinese are "very willing" to make additional sales.

The refinery plans to test the oil to determine if its quality is acceptable for commercial use.

China has exported oil to Japan, but the oil has been found to have a high content of paraffin, or wax, which makes it more difficult to refine.

China also has exported oil to Romania.

Many major West European and U.S. petroleum companies have expressed interest in China's oil, including the Italian state energy group, Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi, and Pennzoil Co. of Houston, Texas.

Explorer sites staked

Willial Perlman of Houston No. 1-6 Marjorie Canon Brown has been spotted as an 8,000-foot wildcat in Terrell County, 20 miles south of Sheffield.

It is 1,592 feet from south and 1,028 feet from east lines of section 6, block 1. TCRR survey.

The site is 3,250 feet southwest of the same oeprator's No. 2-5 Majorie Canon Brown, active wildcat drilling below 3,000 feet on an 8,000-foot contract.

The new project also is 1.5 miles north of Ellenburger production in the Brown-Bassett multipay field.

RUNNELS TEST

Hamco Exploration & Development Co. of Dallas No. 1 H. B. Edmonson is a new 4,000-foot wildcat in Runnels County, six miles northeast of Ballinger.

The drillsite is 1,500 feet from north and 880 feet from east lines of J. H. Wilson survey No. 144, abstract 1287.

It is one location north of the depleted Beddo, eAst (Serratt) field and 5/8 mile southwest of the Loco Rico (Dog Bend) pool.

Gas gauges announced

Morris R. Antweill has reported four-point gauges on its No. 1 Landlady, wildcat operation in Lea County, N. M., eight miles south of Caprock.

The zone tested is in the Chester sand from 11,120 to 11,171 feet.

The project flowed gas at the rate of 750,000 cubic feet per day and condensate at the rate of 10 barrels per day, through a 1/4-inch choke, with tubing pressure of 930 pounds.

It flowed at the rate of 930,000 cubic feet of gas and 12 barrels of condensate per day, through a 20/64-inch choke. Tubing pressure was 720 pounds. The third flow was at the rate of 1,000,000 cubic feet of gas and 11.8 barrels of condensate, through a 22/64-inch choke. Tubing pressure was 640 pounds.

The fourth flow was at the rate of 1,100,000 cubic feet of gas and 12.4 barrels of condensate per day, through a 24/64-inch choke.

Potential test is being calculated.

The project is 660 feet from north and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 8-12s-32e and eight miles south of Caprock. It is a west offset to an 11,900-foot dry hole.

No affect predicted

KUWAIT (AP) — Sheikh Ali Khalifa al Sabah, Kuwait's oil minister and president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, predicted today the cutoff of Iranian oil will not affect the world's oil supply.

"The cutback in Iran's production constitutes no danger to the supply of oil to world markets," Khalifa declared in an interview with Kuwait's daily newspaper Al-Anbaa.

"Industrialized states can use their strategic stockpiles to compensate for their reduced imports from Iran, until the Iranian production returns to its normal level..." he added.

Consequently Kuwait is not going to increase its own daily output of two million barrels per day, Khalifa said. Kuwait's maximum capacity is about three million barrels per day.

Iranian production has been cut off by the current wave of strikes and political agitation against the shah. Iran is the world's fourth largest oil producer and the second largest exporter after Saudi Arabia, with nearly 20 percent of OPEC exports.

Thompson appointed

LOS ANGELES, Calif. - Occidental Engineering Co. of Irvine, Calif., has announced the appointment of Rovert G. Thompson as vice president.

Thompson is responsible for the firm's business development. He joined Occidental Engineering in 1976 from James McDonald Associates where he was vice president-Operations. His experience includes 31 years of international engineering and construction in the areas of oil production, refining, pipelines, terminals, telecommunications and heavy civil projects.

Discoveries, wildcats reported in WT areas

Morris R. Antweil of Hobbs, N. M., No. 1 Rios-State has been staked as a 9,900-foot wildcat in Eddy County, N. M., five miles southwest of Lake Wood.

The project is 1,980 feet from south and 2,310 feet from east lines of section 11-20s-25e and one and three-quarters miles northwest of the Bubbling Springs, West (Morrow gas) pool and two miles southwest of a 9,758-foot dry hole.

STRAWN WELL

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 1-GZ Eddy-State Communitized has been completed from the Strawn 1/2 mile northwest of Strawn production in the Millman multipay field of Eddy County, 17 miles southwest of Loco Hills.

The extender completed for a calculted, absolute open flow potential of 1,199,000 cubic feet of gas per day, through perforations from 9,717 to 9,742 feet after a 6,000-gallon acid treatment and a 7,000-gallon fracture job.

The total depth is 10,957 feet and the plugged back depth is 10,914 feet. Operator set 5.5-inch casing at total depth.

MORROW STRIKE

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 1-E-GR Eddy State has been potentialed as a Morrow gas discovery 1/2 mile southeast of a recently opened undesignated Atoka area two miles northeast of Lovington in Eddy County, N. M.

The strike finaled for a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 3,089,000 cubic feet of gas per day, through Morrow perforations from 12,257 to 12,364 feet. The pay was acidized with 7,750 gallons.

The hole is bottomed at 12,710 feet and plugged back to 12,669 feet.

CHAVES DISCOVERY

Read & Stevens, Inc., of Roswell, N. M., No. 1 Calumet Ranch Unit has indicated discovery production in the Strawn in Chaves County, N. M.

It finaled for a daily flowing rate of 338,000 cubic feet of gas, through a one-inch choke and perforations from 6,651 to 6,657 feet after 10,000 gallons of acid.

Testing continues.

Total depth is 7,200 feet and the plugged back depth is 6,8900 feet.

WOLFCAMP STRIKE

I. W. Lovelady, Inc., of Midland No. 2 Virgil J. Powell has been completed as a Wolfcamp discovery in Schleicher County, 26 miles east of Eldorado.

The operator reported a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 943,000 cubic feet of dry gas per day, through perforations from 2,973 to 3,981 feet.

Total depth is 4,450 feet.

The well is 4,448 feet from north and 990 feet from west lines of Richard Douglas survey No. 1504.5 and one mile south of the Tillery (Strawn line gas) field.

WOLFCAMP WELL

Amoco Production Co. No. 1-P Ela Sug has been completed in the Ela Sugg (Wolfcamp) field of Irion County, 14 miles north of Barnhart.

The operator reported a calculated absolute open flow potential of 2 million cubic feet of gas per day, with a gas-liquid ratio of 149,000-1. The gravity of the liquid is 54 degrees.

Total depth is 8,251 feet and 4.5-inch casing is set at 8,172 feet.

PENN STRIKE

Sayers Operating Co. of Midland No. 1 Hinson has been completed as a Pennsylvanian discovery in the Mound Lake (Fusselman) field of Terry County, nine miles northeast of Brownfield.

Operator reported a 24-hour flowing potential of 265 barrels of 42-gravity oil, from open hole at 9,378 feet, where 5.5-inch casing is cemented, and total depth of 9,405 feet. Gas-oil ratio is 327-1, and completion is natural. The choke size has not been learned.

SPRABERRY WELL

MGF Oil Corp. of Midland No. 1 Brown is a new oiler in the Spraberry Trend Area of Martin County.

It finaled for a daily pumping potential of 47 barrels of 35-gravity oil and 83 barrels of water through perforations from 8,174 to 8,306 feet and from 8,754 to 8,912 feet. The upper set was fractured with 60,000 gallons and the lower set was fractured with the same amount.

Gas-oil ratio is 957-1.

Total depth is 9,050 feet and 4.5-inch casing was landed on bottom. The plugged back depth is 9,011 feet.

Wellsite is 1,320 feet from north and east lines of section 15, block 36, T-2-N, T&P survey and four miles north of Lenorah.

CROCKETT WELL

Cumming Oil Co. of Oklahoma City No. 3 West has been completed in the Tom T (Ellenburger) field of Crockett County, 15 miles north of Ozona.

Operator reported a daily flowing potential of 110 barrels of 40-gravity oil, through an 8/64-inch choke and perforations from 8,146 to 8,162 feet. The gas-oil ratio is 2,274-1.

Total depth is 8,650 feet and 55.5-inch casing was cemented at 8,637 feet. The plugged back depth is 8,548 feet. Location is 467 feet from south and west lines of section 23, block AB, R. Adams survey.

Committee hosts officials

Officials of The Superior Oil Co. from Houston are being welcomed to the Tall City this afternoon by members of The Midland Wildcat Committee at a reception being given in honor of the Houston visitors.

With election finished, it's time to see 'Doctor'

By JAY SHARBUTT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With America's election business done, we suggest you now cast a ballot for good television. Tune in Neil Simon's "The Good Doctor" on public TV tonight.

Originally on Broadway in 1973, it's a nifty 1½-hour collection of seven playlets, two by Simon, the rest based on the wry, often edge-of-sadness stories of Anton Chekhov, the Russian scrivener.

They study life, love and lunacy among Russia's middle and lower-class citizens in the latter part of the 19th century. The yarns are threaded together by observations of "The Writer."

He's played by Richard Chamberlain, whose better-known good doctor show, the Kildare thing, is well behind him. Now he has a beard, a few Shakespeare credits and what I'd call a Sir Richard accent.

The other star players: Edward Asner, Lee Grant and Marsha Mason, the last Simon's wife. Supporting thespians are Gary Dontzig and Bob Dishy, the latter quite gifted in scene-stealing.

You'll like him in "The Drowned Man." He essays a waterfront bum "in the maritime entertainment business" who, for three rubles, tells The Writer he'll imitate a drowned man. Fine madness, all of it.

But Dishy is tops in the show-starting "The Sneeze," cast as a minor bureaucrat who goes to the theater one night, accidentally sneezes on his harrumphing boss (Asner) and sees his career blown away.

He even sees his nostril misfire rerun in horrifying slow-motion. But Asner later tells the profusely apologetic flunky to forget it, as "I am too busy to hold grudges against noses."

But in time, Dishy's apology becomes a sneezer-rights fight followed by more apologies, then the bum's rush and a sad ending in which went home, lay down on his sofa and died."

Fortunately, The Writer has second thoughts about this finale. He proposes an alternative: "He went home, lay down on his sofa and inherited five million rubles."

("Not much point to it, but it is uplifting," he notes.)

Uplifting best describes most of the show, particularly a sprightly chapter, "The Seduction," about the sly way a bachelor playboy goes about seducing the wives of successful men.

Although a bit too Sir Richard as The Writer, Chamberlain is dandy as this cad, likewise as a father hiring a shady lady to initiate his 19-year-old son in matters of amour in "The Arrangement."

He and Lee Grant also score in "The Defenseless Creature," a local-loony-visits-the-bank caper. And Ms. Mason may take home an Emmy for her depiction of an aspiring actress in "The Audition."

The only slow spot is a tale called "The Governess." But the rest — well, it's all grade-A goods, and we should throw in a cheer, too, for Jack O'Brien's tasty, unobtrusive direction.

The proceedings come from WNET-TV in New York.

Summation: If your brain cries for sustenance after a diet of sitcoms, un-special specials and awful TV flicks, we prescribe "The Good Doctor" tonight. It's the best kind of nourishment.

Thousands of smoke detectors could turn into blow torches

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of defective smoke detectors could turn into "blow torches" and burn down houses instead, the government says. The manufacturer, which has recalled many of the devices, now has agreed to pay a $100,000 fine.

Pittway Corp. of Northbrook, Ill., facing the alternative of federal legal action, has agreed to pay the monetary penalty in connection with the smoke detectors, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said Monday.

The commission ordered the penalty concerning the BRK Series 749 smoke detector, saying the devices are fire hazards and that Pittway violated the law by failing to tell the commission about a defect. Pittway's agreement to pay the fine does not mean the company admits violating any law.

A Pittway subsidiary, BRK Electronics, made 115,000 of the smoke detectors, and they were sold by BRK, AMF, I-T-E and Sears, Roebuck & Company.

A recall, begun after the commission learned of the problem from other sources, has resulted in 60,000 of them being returned, the commission said.

The commission alleged that the firm deliberately failed to notify CPSC of a design error in the Series 749 smoke detectors, as required by law.

The defect could cause a resistor failure, the commission alleged. "The failure of the resistors could be accompanied by a short, but intense flaming condition, referred to as the 'blow torch effect'," the CPSC said.

The commission said that an official of the company, after learning of fires caused by the detector, tried to order a recall a year before the smoke detectors were recalled. But the commission said this official was overruled by King Harris, executive vice president of the BRK divison.

Harris said in a telephone interview that he acted because he was not certain then that "it was a generic problem with the resistor" that could cause fires in any of the 115,000 units.

He said that when the recall was announced in January 1977 the company carried it out in a way that resulted in more than half of the units being returned, an unusually large percentage.

"Pittway-BRK should have informed the commission immediately upon learning of such a defect," CPSC said. "Instead, the commission learned of the defect from other sources and contacted Pittway-BRK."

The smoke detectors were made between March 1974 and September 1975.

Allen back to the water again in 'Beyond Poseidon Adventure'

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Undaunted by a swarm of perverse bees, film maker Irwin Allen is continuing his topsy-turvy way of capitalizing on human fears.

Allen discovered a bonanza by frightening audiences with water ("The Poseidon Adventure") and fire ("The Towering Inferno"), but he stumbled when he tried to employ insects ("The Swarm"). The irrepressible producer-director is back to water again with "Beyond the Poseidon Adventure."

Next, "Beyond the Towering Inferno"? Negative, His project for 1979 is "The Day The Earth Ended."

Allen's latest project is scattered over Stages 15 and 20 at the Burbank Studios, where he is filming "Beyond The Poseidon Adventure" for Warner Brothers. Everything is upside down, including a half-dozen new automobiles that are chained in a cargo hold. Allen was shooting a scene in which the hold slowly descended into a tank of water — warmed to 92 degrees for the comfort of the actors.

Mobile homes outside the stages bore the names of the cast: Michael Caine, Sally Field, Telly Savalas, Peter Boyle, Jack Warden, Shirley Knight, Slim Pickens, Shirley Jones, and Karl Malden.

"I believe in the star system," proclaims Allen.

Obviously. He also believes in putting his stars through the ringers, as Caine can attest.

"Every night, I go home with a fresh supply of bruises and cuts," he remarked. "Because the ship is upside down, the surfaces are irregular, so you're always stumbling, especially when you're waist-deep in water. Also, you encounter chandeliers and other objects and you have to step up four feet to pass through any doorway.

As he prepared to dunk his stars in the tepid water, Allen discussed the new project:

"This story begins seconds after the 'The Poseidon Adventure' ended. I commissioned the new book from Paul Gallico; it was the last thing he wrote before his death. He was kind enough to dedicate the book to me, and he explained in his forward that the new story starts not where his first book ended, but where the movie ended.

"Gallico sank the Poseidon in his book; I kept it afloat."

National Arts head searching for bigger budgets, horizons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Livingston L. Biddle, finishing his first year as chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, says he is "trying to look to the future to increase responsiveness to bigger budgets and broader horizons."

Biddle made the point in an interview that every dollar appropriated by the federal government for arts organizations "is invested in the quality of life — an old cliche. I see a building constituency for the arts, not only in the quality of life, but in jobs and increased property tax income and other tangible benefits."

The endowment, established by Congress in 1965, has had a phenomenal growth, although it is still tiny by federal standards, with a payroll for about 250 persons.

Its budget was nearly doubled in several years, and in the current fiscal year it is just under $150 million, an increase of more than 20 percent from the $123.5 million in the previous year. There have been larger percentage jumps, but none as large in dollars.

Federal officials are forbidden to talk about their discussions with the Office of Management and Budget until the White House makes decisions. Biddle adhered to the code. Presumably, he has sought another increase.

"I am not discouraged," he said, "but I think we need to present our case for an increase more vigorously than ever before."

He stressed that he supports President Carter's policy of holding down on federal spending, but said he thinks the endowment is unique in stimulating personal income and tax benefits.

Biddle took over as endowment chairman last Nov. 7, succeeding Nancy Hanks, who held the post for eight years. He said he is happy with progress in his first year.

"I've trid to make the agency as responsible as possible to the increased demand," he said. "I am delighted that President Carter supported our budget request. I am tryng to look to the future to increase responsiveness to a bigger budget and broader horizons."

One of his first acts was to name three deputy chairmen rather than a single one, which had been in the structure. One is responsible for administration, one for programs, a third for federal-state relations.

"It seemed to me the chairman should have the broadest possible horizon from a number of viewpoints," he said.

There have been complaints in the past that the federal grant-making authority treated the states, which have vastly increased their support for the arts, as junior partners to be brought in only when decisions have been made. "Exactly," Biddle said. "They need to be treated as full partners."

He has established a joint committee made up of three state representatives and three members of the National Council on the Arts, the presidentially-appointed body that advises the endowment.

In addition, he said, the endowment is placing renewed emphasis on minority concerns and increased coordination with other federal agencies becoming increasingly interested in arts programs.

He mentioned "Livable Cities," a program designed to upgrade urban life funded largely by the Department of Housing and Urban Development in which the endowment is cooperating; the Labor Department, providing funds for unemployed artists in useful jobs; and the Transportation Department, seeking to beautify highways and bridges.

CBS cancelled 'Mary' but not Mary Tyler Moore

By WAYNE WARGA
The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — "I've learned some lessons. You cannot just do an interesting character. You've got to do a character with which people can empathize and sympathize. That's one of the rules for keeping going in television."

Sunny, bright Mary Tyler Moore is in her sunny, bright dressing room on Stage 33 at CBS. She is talking about her recent experiences in television, the abrupt cancellaton of her lavish variety series after only three shows were aired, the sudden switch from seeming invincibility to off-the-air.

Images are odd things, having as much to do with the person as the observer. We all think of Mary Tyler Moore as Mary. She is sweet, smiling, accessible, nonthreatening and nondemanding. She is the mass-media version of the girl next door. She is ours.

To be sure, some of these things she is, but somewhere, at some indeterminate point, the image leaves off and the person begins. We have placed a great many of the things we'd like to believe into the image of Mary Tyler Moore. The person is not the same as the image. Mary Tyler Moore is a smart, very resilient, highly motivated woman. She has to be, or she would never have lasted in television. She is also talented. Performing is her particular addiction.

"IT'S THE ONLY THING I've ever worked hard at. The only thing I've ever loved was performing. The only thing that has ever really given love back to me was performing. I started at 10; I've been at it ever since."

Her determination just now — and it is fierce — is to expand her horizons as a performer. That was the reason for "Mary," the big stretch which CBS snapped off the air last month. It was a very expensive and very difficult decision. Mary is not sunny and bright when she talks about it.

"CBS did a lot of research, ran tests and, of course, there was mail. The mail was 70 percent critical. The audience response was not good and there was a big drop-off in the audience after the first half-hour. We had taped 11 shows but CBS canceled us after three. I think in this instance they did the right thing. The result of all this seems to be that the audience liked me in variety, doing the monologues, singing and dancing. But they didn't respond to the comedy — it was too off the wall and wasn't what people expected of me. I had marvelous writers, I wanted bite and I got it. But that isn't what the audiences want."

Mary Tyler Moore is a smart, very resilient, highly motivated woman. She has to be, or she never would have lasted in television. She is also talented.

ONE SUGGESTS THEY wanted more of Mary Richards, the character she played with such great success for so many years.

"If people are never going to let me be anything but Mary Richards, I'd just as soon pack it in."

Strong statement. She stops, lights a cigarette, thinks about what she's just said and then continues.

"And there is no other major interest in my life other than performing. I don't have any outside interests."

A major move in the disappearance of Mary Richards and the emergence of Mary Tyler Moore, dramatic actress, is on the air Wednesday night. It is Mary proving just how good an actress she is in "First You Cry," based on Betty Rollins' book about mastectomy, a candid exploration of the emotions, both before and after, of a woman who finds she has breast cancer. Nor is it a notably sympathetic role, for the Rollins character is ambitious, a bit tough and dumps her husband to take a lover. It isn't sweetness and light, any of it.

"WE ALL LIVE WITH the fear it will happen. And we all love women. When I read the book I came away feeling I would survive such an experience better for having read that book. That's one of the reasons I wanted to do it on television — so many more people would see it. Women are constantly bombarded to be young and beautiful. Television and magazines drive us crazy a little earlier than we should be driven crazy. So, when breast cancer is discovered, the impact is even more devastating."

She has just come from her daily ballet class — she loves exercise and claims she is compulsive about it — she's fresh out of the shower and she's wearing a plaid shirt and tailored jeans.

"I may want to change what image people have of me, but there are things I worry about. I hate people to see me after my class, all sweaty and disheveled. I am concerned about cleanliness and tidiness. Not because of show business but because my folks always expected me to be neat, clean and tidy. It's an expectation of my upbringing that I have with me at all times.

"I arrive here for my glamorous job. I park in the back and walk up the loading ramp. That way nobody sees me. I go to my ballet class.

"I THINK IT ALSO HAS to do with an expectation people have of me. But I'm careful not to carry it to an extreme. I hardly ever wear any makeup, for instance."

Lunch is a chef's salad which she consumes down to the last shred of lettuce. She is diabetic, injects insulin daily and watches carefully what she eats and drinks. Her major vice is cigarettes, and if her career ever calms down enough she intends to give them up.

She is discussing many things this day, trying to speak candidly on a number of subjects. It isn't easy, nor is it her custom. "My life has its tragedies, and it isn't my nature to speak much about them," she says.

One particularly painful tragedy was the death last February of her 21-year-old sister Elizabeth, a part-time news assistant at a Los Angeles television station and a college student.

"Elizabeth was the best of people. She was dependable, bright and pretty. She was involved in a relationship which was going badly and the man wanted to end it. She sedated herself. She took too much Darvon. Darvon is not a known killer. And she may have had a drink. She did not commit suicide. It's a terrible loss. For me, doubly so, because she was my sister and because she was only 3 1-2 months older than my son she was also like my daughter. I haven't been able to speak about it much.

SHE IS BLINKING BACK her tears and looking directly at her questioner. One gets the impression she could face anything, that she looks on both the good and bad as a sort of challenge. That she has a great deal of character, that she is made of very strong stuff.

CBS has canceled "Mary" but not Mary. She'll be back in January in what she says "is not a new version — it's a whole new show. Perry Lafferty, who did the Danny Kaye show so very well, is going to produce it.

"And Perry has the new format. It's an hour show with music about Mary Tyler Moore who stars in a variety show but who has relationships and problems of her own. He calls it a sitvar, since it's both situation comedy and variety. I'm going to sing, dance and do monologues, but I'll also walk off the stage and become involved in a story. It's a blend of what I've done and what's expected of me, plus my own desire to do different things.

"There'll be a producer, an authority figure who'll give me trouble and cause me to fret and worry. We'll also refer to Grant."

GRANT TINKER IS HER husband, the man many consider to be her Svengali, and certainly someone to whom she defers frequently. Right now the Tinkers are building a new house — their 12th in 16 years of marriage.

"We're nomads. We like change. And one of the big reasons is between us we've got four kids. One or another of them is always moving in or out and the size house we need seems to change every year. Now they're all getting older and are pretty much on their own. And I think this time we may stay put.

"You know what I liked best about doing a variety show? Well, for one thing it's very hard work and I thrive on hard work. For another, it's a world I never knew. There I am, speaking right into the camera, directly to the audience. It's me, and no character is interfering with us. Sure, what I say is written — but I get my opinions in, too, and it is a very real feeling of communication, one you don't get playing a character.

Mary Tyler Moore

"I want to be a performer as well as an actress. I want to branch out and do something new. I think there's still a chance."

TO KEEP UP THE PITCH at performing, she'll soon be announcing a special, "Starting Here, Starting Now," in which she'll costar wth her good friend Carol Burnett and Alan Alda, an actor-writer-director she admires greatly.

"He does comedy with character and he does it beautifully. Of course, so does Carol. So much of television is just surface comedy. You don't have to know the people, you just listen to the jokes.

Book ranking top 100 humans starts arguments

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Dr. Michael Hart is a slight, mild-mannered astronomer, hardly a wild-eyed rabble-rouser. But he's responsible for countless arguments with his new book ranking his choices as history's Top 100 humans.

"My book doesn't finish any arguments. It starts arguments rather than finishes them," said the Trinity University professor. "I'm getting a variety of letters about it. Some compliment me and others object that I left so-and-so out because he did this-and-this and should be included."

The key to Hart's selections is an individual's total influence on history and total impact on the everyday lives of other humans.

Using that criteria, Muhammad got the nod as mankind's Numero Uno, because, said Hart, "He is remarkable for not only founding a major religion, but for his secular accomplishments as a political leader."

Isaac Newton, who defined gravity, is No. 2, and Jesus Christ came in third.

"I'm getting a fair number of letters objecting to Jesus' ranking, saying he should be first," said Hart, 46. "The credit for the founding of Christianity has to be divided between Jesus and St. Paul, whom I ranked sixth.

"Newton played a central role in the rise of science," Hart added. "He set science on its present course."

Hart's list of two women and 99 men — the Wright brothers are listed together as No. 30 — hails 37 scientists, most from the last 200 years, compared to only 30 military and political leaders.

Hart, himself a scientist, explained, "The scientists and inventors changed the way we actually lived. We just have to look around us to see the impact of science."

Hart's book, which includes brief biographies, has sold more than 20,000 copies since April.

"Some of the ideas that have been percolating in my mind began in dorm discussions," said the amateur historian. "Much of the book is taken from discussions with fellow scientists on the most important scientists. Then it branched out and somebody suggested a book."

Asked if any of the objecting letters made him question his own choices, Hart replied, "As I was in the course of writing the book, I was constantly changing the list. No name has been mentioned that I didn't consider. There were several borderline cases. Franklin Roosevelt, for example. If I had extended it a few more, he would have made the list. Even now, I sometimes wonder if maybe he shouldn't be 95th instead of 115."

Rounding out the Top 10 are: No. 4 Buddha; No. 5 Confucius; No. 7 Tsai Lun, an obscure Chinese eunuch who invented paper in the first century; No. 8 Johnann Gutenberg, who invented moveable printing type; No. 9 Christopher Columbus and No. 10 Albert Einstein.

Since Hart doesn't include Einstein as a native American, George Washington at No. 27 is the top American on the list. Thomas Edison (38); Thomas Jefferson (70) and John F. Kennedy (80) are among other Americans on the list.

The only two women are Queen Isabella I of Spain — No. 68 — and Queen Elizabeth I of England — No. 95. "They had both the ability and the opportunity to exert influence," Hart said. "I've gotten very little objections from feminists. Most just write and say this proves the point that women haven't had much chance in history."

Julius Caesar ranked 65th; Hitler, 35th; Napoleon, 34th, and Joseph Stalin, 63rd.

Hart said he left off Abraham Lincoln because emancipation of the slaves in the United States was inevitable. He included Kennedy, he said, because Kennedy started the U.S. space program that put a man on the moon.

Among the more obscure figures on the list are No. 61 Nikolaus August Otto, the German inventor of the internal-combustion engine; No. 90 Menes, the king of the first Egyptian dynasty, and No. 99 Mahavira, the leading figure in the Jain religion.

Kremlin writer rips New York discos

By NIKKI FINKE

MOSCOW (AP) — A Kremlin journalist is denouncing New York discos as havens of decadence and loneliness where dancers snort cocaine in the bathrooms and "spend a whole night shaking with the lights and dreaming of fame, success and money."

America's young people are stupefied by these distractions, a sort of "nirvana for lonely people who don't want to have contact with anyone and who couldn't anyway," Genrikh Borovic of the official Soviet news agency Tass wrote in Monday's edition of Literary Gazette.

The journalist claimed clever disco operators are exploiting the special sound and light systems, the allure of talentless movie stars and an exclusive admissions policy in order to make a fortune off the unsuspecting young.

"How many lonely people are there in America? Very many!" Borovic said. "In any case the numbers are sufficient that in two years' time the multibillion-dollar disco industry founded on loneliness has spread rapidly through the country."

Discotheques are practically non-existant in the Soviet Union, and those that do exist bear little resemblance to their Western counterparts aside from the ever-present dance floor and rock music.

Moscow's underground disco, the Blue Bird, attracts young sons and daughters from among the Soviet Union's government elite. They enter at 5 p.m. leave by 10 p.m. and feast on such goodies as cucumbers, tomatoes, fruit juices and other non-alcoholic drinks.

Studio 54, therefore, was quite an eyeful for Borovic.

Calling it "the most famous discotheque in New York," Borovic ridiculed the huge crowds waiting anxiously outside hoping to be noticed in their "outrageous clothes" or let in to dance.

Only a "privileged few" can enter, the journalist said. "Long black limousines with tinted windshields pull up and the golden fishes of both sexes come out and go serenely through the doors."

Borovic said he got inside because he was accompanied by Rod McKuen, the American poet-singer who recently visited the Soviet Union to record an album.

Borovic did have praise for the "first-class" audio system that cost $300,000, and the electronic lighting effects synchronized with the music.

But the lounges were a different matter.

"...in the men's toilet on the second floor a man in a bright red velvet smoking jacket was attentively looking at his features in the mirror," Borovic wrote. "Unhurriedly he poured out of a yellow box a pinch of white powder, placed it on his thumbnail and snorted it. Everything was done calmly, without any hurrying, without looking at any doorways, very openly, in front of everyone."

Visiting another Manhattan discotheque called Eternity, Borovic said he was disturbed by the multitude of mirrors around the dance floor that permitted young people to have themselves as a partner.

"Seeing yourself in the surroundings of a crowd, the colorful lights, it is easy to forget a dull job and to feel yourself the star of some gigantic Broadway musical costing thousands of dollars," Borovic wrote. "One can spend a whole night hallucinating."

Bankruptcy petitions fall

CHICAGO (AP) — Bankruptcy petitions declined again in the fiscal year ended June 30, according to the Commerce Clearing House.

The agency said the total of 202,951 case filings for the year marked a 5 percent drop from the 214,399 recorded the previous year. The all-time high was the 254,484 recorded in 1975.

California topped the state-by-state listing for the latest fiscal year, with 36,330 cases pending. New York, Illinois, Ohio and Alabama followed in that rder, the clearing house said.

Americans will set new liquor record

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans will consume an all-time high 450 million gallons of liquor this year, according to an estimate by the Wine and Spirits Marketing Bulletin.

The forecast is based on analyses of the first five months of 1978 which showed a consumption increase of 4 to 5 percent over 1977.

A Lifelong Education!

Your hometown newspaper, The Reporter-Telegram, is read in elementary school classes where the Newspaper In Education program helps teachers motivate students to more eager learning efforts. This "real life" textbook is exciting to them and makes the learning process INTERESTING. This means they learn about math, social studies, geography, history, government and other subjects more quickly and thoroughly.

Teenagers accustomed to reading the newspaper in lower grades use the "life situation" textbook to speed up learning, acquire more knowledge and earn higher grades, through their better comprehension of the wider range of subjects and deeper involvement at high school levels.

Young adults have learned to use the newspaper to buy to their greater advantage through retail and classified ads and through the vast source of consumer information offered in newspapers. The same medium provides daily news on more of the subjects in which they are interested: sports, recreation, amusements, lifestyle, travel, health, beauty, fashion and dozens of other areas of concern.

Parents rearing and educating families use newspaper ads, cash-saving coupons, and household tips to help stretch budgets. Child guidance articles help them become better parents. Mini-Page and other children's features entertain and instruct their offspring.

Women's pages and features are a continuing source of help for the housewife in the home and out.

Men and women in business, the professions and all walks of life, find in the newspaper a real treasury of information on business, industry, finance, politics, the economy, local, state, national and international developments in almost every field of human activity.

Senior citizens have in the newspaper a daily companion, bringing news of acquaintances, community events, peer activities, and ever so many helpful articles on coping with their particular concerns. The newspaper helps them keep abreast of Social Security changes, medical and health advice, recreational and social opportunities, shopping advantages and ways to help fight inflation on a fixed income. The Reporter-Telegram's more readable type and clear reproduction is of special importance to them because it is EASIER TO READ.

Chandelle is a Nice Place to Call Home...*

WHY BUY A CONDOMINIUM?

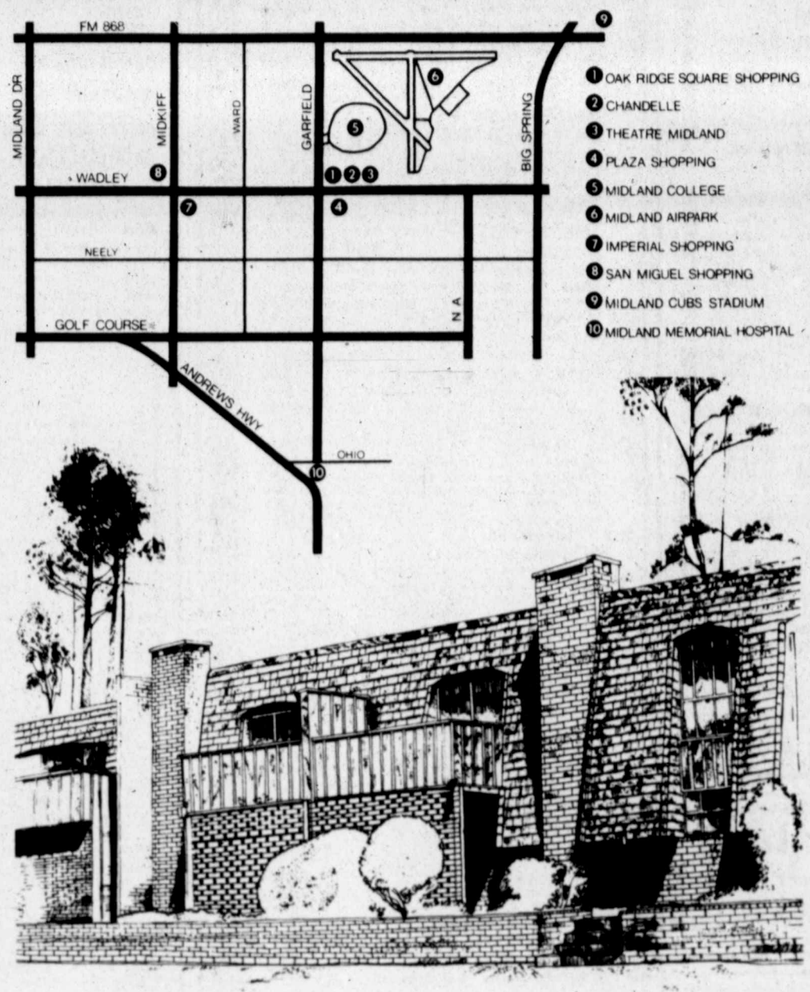

Condominiums afford quality living in prime locations. They allow the owner all the financial and tax advantages of owning a home without the headaches.

Condominiums are designed for a more flexible lifestyle. Most important, you have greater control over your housing costs when compared to renting.

WHY BUY A "CHANDELLE" CONDOMINIUM?

"CHANDELLE's" location at 2100 West Wadley is within minutes of downtown, theatres, recreational areas, shopping, restaurants, schools, churches, the college, and Airpark. At "CHANDELLE" you get an equity investment, the same tax breaks as a home owner, and greater control of your housing costs. "CHANDELLE" is the only real alternative people have to get away from the maintenance problems of home owning, and doing it with style.

Come out to 2100 West Wadley or call 684-7884 to find out why "CHANDELLE" is a nice place to call home. Models are open from 12:00 noon until 6:00 p.m. seven days a ~~week~~.

Boston slugger shakes Guidry in AL's MVP race

NEW YORK (AP) — Forced to choose between two awesome statistical seasons, the Baseball Writers Association of America chose slugger Jim Rice's numbers and named him the American League's Most Valuable Player over pitcher Ron Guidry.

Rice received 20 of the 28 first place ballots cast and finished with 352 points. Guidry took the other eight first place ballots and totaled 291 points. Larry Hisle of the Milwaukee Brewers finished third with 201.

BECAUSE OF the way they had dominated their individual departments, Rice at bat for the Boston Red Sox and Guidry on the mound for the New York Yankees, there was speculation that the MVP battle would be a tight one. But the suspense hardly interfered with the routine activities of the two stars.

Rice, in Las Vegas for a tribute later this week to former heavyweight champion Joe Louis, spent the afternoon playing golf. When he returned to his hotel, he learned of the MVP vote.

"I just got back from shooting 79. That's more important," he said. "The MVP vote was a month ago. I couldn't change anything. I'm thrilled about it, but I couldn't just sit around and wait to hear."

Guidry, the unanimous winner of the AL Cy Young Award last week, spent the day hunting near his home in Lafayette, La.

"My congratulations go to Jim Rice," he said. "Definitely, his statistics were worthy of the MVP. To finish second in the vote to a player like Jim Rice is not disappointing and by not receiving this award this year gives me something to gun for in 1979.

"To all the sports writers who voted for Jim Rice, I congratulate them on naming a deserving individual, and to those writers who voted for me, I thank them for their support."

RICE EARNED the MVP award with a spectacular season at the plate. He led the major leagues with 46 home runs and 139 runs batted in. He also had 406 total bases, becoming the first American Leaguer in 41 years to go over 400. He also led the majors in hits with 213 and in triples with 15. He finished with a .600 slugging percentage and batted .315, third in the AL.

Guidry was the master of mound. The slim left-hander posted a 25-3 record with nine shutouts and a 1.74 earned run average. His winning percentage of .893 was the highest for any 20-game winner in baseball history. The nine shutouts tied Babe Ruth's record for an American League lefthander, and Guidry's ERA was the lowest for an AL southpaw since 1914 when Dutch Leonard had a 1.01.

Guidry's MVP bid was probably hurt by the Cy Young Award. Since 1956 when the BBWAA introduced the Cy Young to honor the best pitcher in each league, only five hurlers have swept both that honor and the MVP. They were Don Newcombe in 1956, Sandy Koufax in 1963, Bob Gibson and Denny McLain in 1968 and Vida Blue in 1971.

RICE AND Guidry were the only players named on all 28 ballots.

Following Hisle were Amos Otis of Kansas City, who had 90 points, Rusty Staub of Detroit, 88; Graig Nettles of New York, 86; Don Baylor of California, 51; Eddie Murray of Baltimore, 50; Carlton Fisk of Boston, 49, and Darrell Porter of Kansas City, 48.

Carew finished 11th with 46 points.

Under the point system used for the MVP voting, a first-place ballot was worth 14 points, with second place worth 9, third place 8, etc.

Rice's outstanding production helped Boston build a huge lead in the American League East, and even when the Red Sox slipped back, the muscular slugger continued to pound the ball at a frightening pace.

HE REACHED the 400 total base plateau in the season's final week, an impressive accomplishment that may have sealed the MVP verdict for him. He was only the sixth player in the history of the American League to break that barrier. Ironically, when DiMaggio had his 418 total bases in 1937, the AL MVP award went to Detroit Tigers' second baseman Charley Gehringer.

Guidry's chances for the MVP probably were damaged by the existence of the Cy Young Award. Since 1956, when the baseball writers added the Cy Young to honor the best pitcher in each league to their post-season awards, only five hurlers have won both that award and the MVP. They were Don Newcombe in 1956, Sandy Koufax in 1963, Denny McLain and Bob Gibson in 1968 and Vida Blue in 1971.

Rice was the sixth Boston player to win the MVP award. Teammate Fred Lynn was the 1975 winner, when he also captured the AL Rookie of the Year Award. Other Red Sox winners were: Carl Yastrzemski in 1967, when he won the Triple Crown; Jackie Jensen in 1958; Ted Williams in 1949 and 1946, and Jimmy Foxx in 1938. Foxx also was the winner in 1932 and 1933 when he played for the Philadelphia Athletics.

Isaac Newton had the answer to Cowboys' woes long ago

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

The biggest problem with the Dallas Cowboys is:

(a) they're trying too hard,

(b) they're not trying hard enough,

(c) both of the above.

The answer, of course, is (d) neither of the above.

THERE'S NOTHING wrong with the Dallas Cowboys. They're simply rediscovering what Don Shula, Chuck Noll, Joe Namath, Isaac Newton and various and sundry other celebrities (Tom Landry among them) had already discovered ... what goes up must come down.

"Our problem is we forget that we're ex-world champions," says Preston Pearson. "We were the 1977 world champions. That's over now. We have to remember that."

What the Cowboys should remember is that they were Super Bowl champions not only one season ago but six seasons before that — and in both cases they were unable to maintain that championship pace.

Green Bay, Miami and Pittsburgh, like Dallas, were two-time champions — and the Packers, Dolphins and Steelers also bellied out after a while, too. "You have to have a goal you are hungry for and are willing to fight for," says Landry. "When you have the goal on both fingers (a pair of Super Bowl rings), motivation is different."

Performances like Dallas' last two, against Minnesota and Miami, aren't something to be proud of — but they're hardly indications that the Cowboys are about to go on the critical list. Aftev all, they're still 6-4, they're only one game behind Washington in the National Conference East (with a Thanksgiving Day game against the Redskins in Dallas on the schedule) and, with four wild-card berths available, they're still very much in the running for one of the two berths available in Super Bowl XIII.

"THE CHALLENGE is there right now," says Tony Dorsett, who has absorbed a lot of the blame for Dallas' so-called downfall. "If we don't rise to it now, if this isn't the incentive, then something's wrong."

What may be wrong is the lack of incentive at the moment. Only three times since the inception of the wild-card in 1970 (16 runner-up berths ago; two per season) has a team made it into the playoffs with a winning percentage under .700 (a 10-4 record under the old 14-game schedule). This year a 10-6 mark (.625 percentage) or even 9-7 (.529) may be good enough to put a team in the playoffs.

Somehow it's one step closer to the pro basketball and pro hockey system of playing out the season only to have less-than-worthy teams reach the playoffs.

The point is, the Cowboys — simply because they won the Super Bowl — were viewed before this season even began as a Super team.

"Things came so easy last year," said cornerback Mark Washington. "We had little adversity last year. Everyone's expecting us to duplicate last year ... What a lot of people forget is this is a young team that really hasn't reached its full potential."

LANDRY HAS acknowledged that last year's team actually shocked him. He didn't think it'd be nearly as good as it was. But it hit a groove when it hit the playoffs, shoved Chicago and Minnesota aside and trampled Denver for the title.

The superteam idea was reinforced when the Cowboys looked so awesome against Baltimore in their Monday night season opener. The question, 15 games away from the end of the season, was: can anyone beat this machine? Two weeks (and one loss to Los Angeles) later the question was: what's wrong with the Cowboys?

"The worst thing that could have happened to us was beating Baltimore in the first game," Landry said. "It came so easily, it looked like we could beat the world. The players felt that way. The press felt that way, too. But I didn't. Baltimore was a crippled team."

Now people are starting to talk as though the Cowboys are crippled. It's ridiculous. The Cowboys are a money team. Put 'em in the playoffs — as a wild-card team, even as the worst runner-up team — and it's a pretty good bet they'll be an even-money bet to win the whole thing.

Gunfight tension rises

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — The gunfight is scheduled and tension is mounting as two historic rivals prepare to find out which is the quickest and most deadly.

Both the nation's No. 1 college football team, the Oklahoma Sooners, and their Big Eight enemies, the fourth-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers, are coming to the fight packing potentially explosive weapons.

The weapons, which take the form of the nation's most prolific running back, Billy Sims of Oklahoma, and Nebraska back Isaiah Moses (I.M.) Hipp, claim to be well oiled and fully loaded for the upcoming faceoff.

Hipp has gained 846 yards on 148 attempts, averaging 94 yards a game.

Sims, on the other hand, leads the nation in the rushing category with a whopping 1,397 yards on 175 tries and an average of 155.2 yards per game and is currently on a string of three consecutive games gaining in excess of 200 yards.

The spread between the two in the yards per carry category is also weighted in Sims favor. he has an impressive 7.9 yards per carry to 5.7 yards for Hipp.

Placed side-by-side, the pair reveal a number of similarities, with Hipp weighing in at 200 pounds and Sims at 205 and both standing at 6-feet even.

They also resemble each other in the time it takes them to cross a distance of 40 yards, with Hipp claiming a 4.4 timing and Sims boasting a 4.5.

Yet, there are some obvious differences.

"We do a lot of things differently," Sims said. "I run a lot lower than Hipp. I try to stay low to the ground and move and twist more than he does. He runs over people."

Hipp, a native of Chapin, S.C., and the runner from Hooks, Texas, also agree on the benefits of running out of the I formation.

"You can set up and come out of the I quick," Hipp said, and Sims, despite the fact Oklahoma primarily uses a Wishbone offense, agrees.

"I think it has really helped me this year since we started using the I some," he said. "It lets me mix it up some and keep the defenses busy."

A primary difference between the two is revealed in the statistics for last season.

Hipp, probably one of the most successful walk-ons in collegiate history, gained 1,353 yards on 215 carries after missing the first two games of last season.

Sims, on the other hand, picked up a meager 406 yards on 65 carries, losing most of the season to an ankle injury sustained in the third game of the season when the Sooners squeaked by Ohio State 29-28.

"This is the best year of my career," Sims said. "And I think I am going to be able to stay healthy. But you can never really predict injuries, so I'll have to be lucky."

Hipp, a junior, should see Sims again next year, since the senior gained a year of eligibility after being red-shirted.

Cougs don't fear crowd

HOUSTON (AP) — Sixth-ranked Texas has won 53 of its last 56 home games, including an NCAA record 42 straight, but Houston Coach Bill Yeoman said Tuesday his eighth-ranked Cougars are just happy to be playing before a crowd.

"You talk about home field advantages, we've never been in a situation where that meant very much," Yeoman said. "Our kids are just excited about playing before a crowd and they don't care whose crowd it is."

A sellout crowd of 80,000 is expected for the Southwest Conference showdown in Memorial Stadium Saturday with the winner taking a giant step toward the Cotton Bowl.

The game cannot be televised because the Cougars are on probation until the end of the regular season.

Yeoman made similar statements in 1976, the Cougars' first year in the SWC, when they shocked the Longhorns 30-0 in Austin. His opinion of the home field advantage hasn't changed.

"A good example was down at Florida State this year," Yeoman said. "We had about 110 people there and they had about 45,000 and our kids loved it. I thought it was super that 64,000 saw us play at SMU. Our kids did too and they didn't care who they were cheering for.

"And I'm sure there will be a good crowd in Austin Saturday and it gives an indication of being a pretty good football game."

Houston will go into the game with a 7-1 record and a seven-game winning streak since losing its season opener to Memphis State. The Longhorns are 6-1 losing only to No. 1 ranked Oklahoma.

"I'm very appreciative of the concentration this team has shown so far this year," Yeoman said. "This is one of the best groups I've had of going about its job day by day."

Yeoman said the Longhorns played great defense and had offensive personnel capable of making the big play, primarily Olympic speedster Johnny "Lam" Jones.

"I don't know how many times they've had third and 20 or more yards to go and wound up scoring," Yeoman said after studying Texas game film. "As you can see, field position doesn't mean much to someone who can run as fast as that kid (Lam Jones) on the flanks."

MC opens cage campaign

Midland College opens its 1978-79 basketball season against McMurry College JV in its beautiful new home, the Chaparral Center on the MC campus, at 7:30 p.m. today.

Coach Jerry Stone, beginning his second season as the Chaparrals' coach, loses some height from last year's 16-14 team, but hopes to make up for it in quickness.

Stone's club this year will be built around returning lettermen led by 5-9 Cullen Mayfield, the point guard; 6-7 Luis Alvarado; James Hicks, 6-3 forward from Midland High; 6-3 Ricky Murdock, guard-forward from Lubbock Coronado; Krieg Curry, 6-3 forward from Dallas Carter; and Henry White, the 6-3 from Chicago who arrived on campus last fall unannounced and quickly became a big contributor to the Chaps' cause.

In addition, the Chaps have added a promising group of freshmen to the roster, including Kerry Bennett, 6-5, post-forward from Houston Lamar; 6-3 Chris Clayton, from Detroit; 6-1 Fred Jones, Houston Lamar; Kenneth McGill, 6-5 post-forward from Dallas South Oak Cliff; Tim Shelby, 6-4 forward from SOC also; Robert Tate, 6-2 guard from Chicago and Kenneth Young, 6-5 power forward from Houston Wheatley.

"Our players are really excitd about playing in the Chaparral Center," Stone said. "The sophomores watched it being built last year and the freshmen saw it being finished up this spring and summer when they visited the campus. The building is going to be excellent for basketball."

The Chaps play Wayland JV next Wednesday and then play in tournaments in Odessa and Scottsdale, Ariz.

Gene Tunney takes long count

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — For many years after he had retired from boxing, Gene Tunney, who died Tuesday night at the age of 80, had to live down the stigma of his famous "Long Count" match with Jack Dempsey.

But he always was a good counterpuncher when it came to defending himself from criticism.

"I know I was the beneficiary of the long count, but it wasn't my idea," Tunney would say. "I was down, but I wasn't out. I first heard the count at 2, and I could have gotten up any time after that. But I preferred to take the benefit of the full count.

"That was the only round he (Dempsey) won. Everybody forgets that I knocked him down with the first punch of the next round. After the long count, which couldn't have been more than 14 seconds, I had a chance to exhibit my ring generalship."

Tunney got off the canvas to beat Dempsey for the second time in two confrontations and later retired as the undefeated heavyweight champion of the world.

The death of the onetime "Fighting Marine" Tuesday night came more than a half-century after that legendary "Long Count" fight on Sept. 22, 1927.

Tunney's son, former U.S. Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Cal., said in Los Angeles that his father died at Greenwich Hospital of blood poisoning after suffering for some time from circulatory trouble. The younger Tunney had been appearing on a Los Angeles television program as an election night commentator.

Gene Tunney had seen combat service as a Marine in World War I, thus his nickname as the "Fighting Marine." He won 56 fights, 41 by knockouts, had one draw and lost only once.

A New York native, Tunney began fighting professionally in 1915 and seven years later outpointed "Battling" Levinsky in 12 rounds for the American light heavyweight championship, a title he lost later in the year on a 15-round decision to Harry Greb. He later beat Greb twice and fought two no-decisions with him.

In 1925 Tunney concentrated on heavyweights and on Sept. 23, 1926, he won boxing's biggest title by outpointing the great Dempsey over 10 rounds in the rain in Philadelphia. It was Dempsey's first title defense in three years.

Then came the notorious "Long Count" battle at Chicago's Soldier Field before 104,943 fans.

In the seventh round, Dempsey cornered Tunney and smashed him to the canvas with a series of blows. Dempsey sensed victory and in his eagerness, didn't to go to a neutral corner. Referee Dave Barry refused to begin the count until Dempsey did go to a neutral corner.

After a delay of about five seconds, Barry began to count and when he reached 9, Tunney got up. Whether Dempsey's failure to obey the rule cost him the title has since been a matter of dispute.

Bullpups face powerful Cooper

The Midland High Bullups take on the powerful Abilene Cooper junior varsity at 7 p.m. Thursday in Memorial Stadium while on Saturday, the Midland Lee Stonewall Brigade travels to Abilene for a 1:30 p.m. contest with the Abilene High JV.

Midland sports a 3-5-0 mark compared to Cooper's 8-0-0 reading. Abilene, meanwhile is 5-3-0 and Lee 2-4-1 on the year.

In last week's games, Lee lost to Odessa Permian, 33-6 and Midland dropped a 42-0 decision to the OHS JV. Cooper tripped Big Spring, 39-12 and Abilene disposed of San Angelo, 42-18.

Permian stands 5-1-1 while OHS is 7-1-0 and Big Spring is 0-8-0.

In games Saturday, Permian entertains San Angelo and OHS is at Big Spring.

Joe Louis should have a national holiday

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

They're calling it "A Night With the Champ." It's a fancy soiree Thursday evening in the lavish ballroom of Caesars Palace in Las Vegas — black tie, dinner $500 a plate, celebrities up to your eyebrows and gorgeous women in slinky satin sashaying to the tune of ringing slot machines.

Nice. But even that is not sufficient tribute to Joe Louis. They ought to declare a national holiday.

AS TIME passes, as heavyweight boxing champions come and go, as the nation's mores and social structure continue to undergo radical change, the image of the Brown Bomber grows in stature.

He was one of the greatest — if not the greatest.

His life shall always stand as a beacon for those who come after him — a quiet, simple man who faced up to the severest pressures of an ugly era in American history, degraded by fans, betrayed by associates and ultimately abandoned by many of his friends.

The world's champion, he gained a fortune, then lost it through his own naivete and bad advice. He was harassed by the Internal Revenue Department. His once staunch heart began to give way under strain and his health deteriorated.

He never publicly complained. Throughout his trials and the turbulent civil rights uprisings of the 1960s, he never lost his national pride. "Don't do it, you ought to compete for your country," he told black athletes, threatening an Olympic boycott in 1968.

JOE LOUIS Barrow was born in a sharecropper's cabin in Lexington, Ala., May 1914. He was a strapping teen-ager when his mother, Lillie, and a second husband threw the family of 18 into an open-bedded truck and headed for a new life in the thriving auto capital of Detroit.

Young Joe fought as an amateur, winning the Golden Gloves light heavyweight title, and worked on the Ford assembly line to help keep bread on the table of the burgeoning Barrow brood. He turned pro in July, 1934.

This was not the most propitious time for a young black heavyweight with thunder and lightning in his fists to appear on the boxing scene.

As Gerald Aster, Louis' biographer, points out, the country still had a bitter taste in its mouth over the experiences of Jack Johnson, the black man who won the heavyweight title and married a white woman.

Booker T. Washington had said, "I have never seen the colored people so discouraged and bitter." President Wilson had segregated government agencies. A bill even had been introduced in Congress to ban mixed marriages.

Louis, a marvelous athlete 6-2 tall and 201 pounds with skin the color of coffee with plenty of cream, conducted himself impeccably. He never made waves. He shuffled from one fight to another — cold, phlegmatic, destructive with one of the most lethal punches the game has known.

In 1936 when he was stopped in the 12th round by Germany's Max Schmeling, a product of one of the world's most oppressive systems, people in the Jim Crow South rolled into the streets and celebrated wildly.

Two years later Louis crushed the beetle-browed German in 2 minutes, 4 seconds of the opening round. Sentiment began to change.

Joe Louis went on to become a magnificent champion, loser of only one fight before his retirement in 1949. Money pressures forced an ill-fated comeback but the Brown Bomber's popularity began to soar.

Caesars Palace put him on the payroll as a sports consultant. When the Brown Bomber's 64-year-old heart began to sputter less than a year ago, singer Frank Sinatra and other true friends rallied support.

Thursday night they add the dressing. "Hail to the Champ — you're terrific."

Lou Holtz to test one-liners

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas football Coach Lou Holtz will get an opportunity to lay his one-liners on a national television audience when he appears on the Johnny Carson Show Dec. 14.

Holtz was called by an executive of the television show Monday night.

"I understand you're the Johnny Carson of the football coaches," the executive said.

"No, I don't take off as much as he does," Holtz responded.

Holtz said he first thought it was a joke. He has often said: "Would you like to see me on the Johnny Carson Show. You would, then if you know somebody associated with the show..."

Holtz said he was asked if he could appear during November and explained that his football team plays through Dec. 2.

He then asked about the first week in December and was told that Carson wanted to be the host when he was on the show and that Carson would not be available during that week.

Finally, the appearance was set for Dec. 14.

Martina Navratilova wins first round match

OLDSNAR, Fla. (AP) — Top-seeded Martina Navratilova defeated Zenda Liess 6-1, 6-3 in first round play Tuesday night in the $75,000 Florida Women's Tennis Tournament.

In another first round match, Ann White of Bradenton, Fla., defeated Glynis Coles of England 6-2, 6-3.

Second-seeded Evonne Goolagong will make her first tournament appearance since Wimbledon on Wednesday when she faces Marlier Buehler of Darrington, R.I., in a first round match while third-seeded Virginia Wade of England will play Caroline Stoll.

Texas-Texas A&M game to be on Friday

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)—The Texas-Texas A&M Southwest Conference football game has been switched to Friday night Dec. 1 from Saturday Dec. 2 so it can be nationally televised, it was announced Tuesday.

The game will be televised at 8 p.m. CST over ABC-TV.

Kicking game looms important

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Elections have been won and lost on the basis of a single vote and closely matched football games have also been decided by a single point.

If the upcoming meeting between the No. 1 Oklahoma Sooners and the fourth-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers is decided by a mere point, the two teams' kickers may find themselves in the limelight.

The Sooners have grown to depend on the accuracy of a young German with a soccer style who is now in the midst of an amazing string of point after completions, while Nebraska can pin its hopes on senior Billy Todd.

So far this year, Todd is the Cornhuskers' top scorer with 60 points, having completed 36 of 38 point after attempts. The Arizona native has also booted eight of 11 field goals this year and booted a 55-yarder against Kansas last year.

If statistics tell anything, Todd's kicking opponent this Saturday should be the greater threat.

Uwe Von Schamann, who was born in Berlin but reared in Fort Worth, Texas, is trying to continue a national record string of 115 consecutive PATs.

He also has scored 71 points, which ranks him 11th nationally.

Field goal kicking is also a Von Schamann speciality, as he has booted seven of nine this year for a team that doesn't resort to the field goal too often.

Also, the Sooners shouldn't feel too nervous about calling on Uwe a crucial times in the Nebraska contest since he has proven himself under pressure.

In 1977, Von Schamann kicked a 41-yard field at Ohio State University that eventually won the game.

"I used relaxation mediation that day," he claimed. "It took my mind off things that I didn't want to think about.

"When we called that first time out I did my meditating. My mind drifted to other things. Then when Woody Hayes called the second timeout, my mind was free by then."

Then Von Schamann, who came to the U.S. as a high school sophomore, surprised many observers by turning around and leading the noisy crowd in cheers.

"I just don't worry about things," he said. "Things aren't going quite as well in my kickoffs this year, but I just don't worry about things."

Simpson injury could aid 49ers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — O.J. Simpson came to the San Francisco 49ers with a great attitude and a questionable left knee. Now he has a separated shoulder, but Coach Fred O'Connor says that the new injury could help the 49ers.

"Maybe this injury is a blessing in disguise because now he's going to rest that leg," Coach Fred O'Connor said Tuesday. His star running back, who was injured last Sunday in a game against Atlanta, will miss at least three games, perhaps the rest of the season.

Simpson, the San Francisco native who spent the first nine years of his National Football League career with the Buffalo Bills, was traded to the 49ers last March and said then, "I always dreamed of leading the 49ers to a championship." When he reported to training camp, he said the knee which required surgery last season seemed fully healed, and he predicted the young team he was joining "can win and win big."

Instead, it has lost — and lost big. The 49ers' 1-9 record is the worst in the National Football Conference.

But O'Connor, named interim head coach when Pete McCulley was fired last week, expects Simpson to be back in uniform late this season.

"He has some personal goals. He wants that NFL rushing record, and he also wants to help us win some games this year," said O'Connor, alluding to the NFL career rushing mark of 12,312 yards held by former Cleveland Browns great Jim Brown.

Simpson has 10,766 yards in 10 seasons, including 593 this year when his blockers, as well as his left knee, did not live up to his preseason expectations. So he's at least another year away from breaking Brown's record.

Will Simpson be playing in 1979?

Simpson, who won't be practicing for a week or so, hasn't said. Speculation is sure to arise soon, especially if Simpson doesn't play again this season, that this is his final year as a player.

But O'Connor said that rest, including another off-season of it, could bring Simpson's knee back to full strength and that, "He'll probably make a determination based on how the leg feels."

"People forget, because he's such a celebrity, that first of all O.J. is a football player. He loves to play and enjoys being around his teammates."

The enjoyment was dulled considerably, of course, by the 49ers' losing ways and the fact that, as he admitted, "I'm not at full strength."

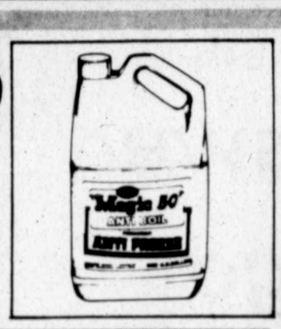

O'Connor says, "O.J.'s great ability is his acceleration. When a cavity appears in a defense, he takes advantage of it. But he hasn't had that explosion this year, because of the injury.

"I think he has played as well as he could. I'm sure he played as hard as he could."

Pro football bettors have to be very, very good

The Los Angeles Times

Gerald Strine, former Washington Post handicapping writer and co-author of "Covering the Spread — How to Bet Pro Football," explains that a bettor must hit on 53 percent of all his picks in order to break even. If he wins exactly half his bets, he will be paying a 4.55 percent service charge to the bookmaker.

Many bettors, like Dave, have a credit limit, or "settle-up," with their bookies. When either the bettor or the bookie reaches losses totalling that limit, there is an agreement that a payoff will be made before any more wagering is transacted. It may be that the limit is never approached by either during the entire season.

But for some bettors, it comes too swiftly and at times when they are short on cash. And, in the past three years, the incidence of violence in connection with gambling debts has risen dramatically.

BUT FRED, the bookie, argues that those incidents are the exception, not the rule, and that most betting is handled as gentlemanly as a legitimate business.

"In all my 20-odd years playing and as a bookie, I've never once heard of a single threat being made," he says. "It just doesn't happen the way they say it does. If it did, they'd come up with that stuff on their little wiretaps. All they ever hear is betting going on. That's it."

Any Ray argues that the bookmaking profession is made up of people "more honorable than some of your clergymen and bankers."

"I've got some friends who are bookmakers and I think they're really fine, fine people. And, for the most part, they are more interesting than those you meet in the rest of society," Ray says.

But law enforcement officials say a bettor who gets badly behind with his bookie may end up with a broken arm or nose, if he isn't killed. Other times, they say, the harassment comes in the form of threats.

Police trying to make a case against a bookmaker have a formidable adversary on their hands. An agent almost invariably must catch the suspect with hard evidence in his possession. As a result, it generally takes from 360 to 400 man-hours for investigators to make a case strong enough to bring into a courtroom or to a grand jury.

FOR THEIR part, bookies have become more sophisticated. They do most of their work by phone, and, unless agents are able to obtain wiretap recordings, a solid stock of evidence is hard to build. Twenty-two states and the District of Columbia currently have state wiretap laws.

Most of the smart bookmakers write down anything incriminating on "flash paper," which can be destroyed instantly at the stroke of a match. Or they use water-soluble writing material that can be tossed into a nearby tub of water in the event of a raid.

"They play hide-and-seek with us," Curtis says. "They use alias names. People go rent apartments for them and have someone get a telephone for them. They borrow somebody else's apartment. They might have two or three different locations.

"And, bless their hearts, the phone company developed a system out here called ESS — electronic switching, call forwarding. That has been the best thing ever for bookmakers," he says. "They can punch in a number for wherever they're going to be. You could have three or four phones lined up in different locations."

THUS, OFFICERS might find themselves raiding an apartment they know is receiving incoming betting calls only to find a solitary phone sitting in the middle of a barren room.

"That slows us down," Curtis says, "you can say that."

In view of the obstacles that law enforcers face, it is also usually necessary to have an undercover investigator inside the bookmaker's operations to obtain the kind of information necessary to sway juries.

Even though sports wagering has boomed in the past decade, the more sinister and burgeoning illicit narcotics trade has absorbed more of the law enforcers' time.

In addition to a lack of manpower, and the absence of state wiretapping statutes, light sentences from the courts also are cited by those who deal with bookmaking cases daily.

BUT THE biggest hurdle law enforcers say they must overcome is the same factor that has sent illegal sports wagering profits soaring higher than a Ray Guy punt: citizen apathy.

Curtis has a favorite story to illustrate just how people have come to react to law enforcers' attempting to bring bookmakers to trial.

He and his squad had run search warrants on a bookmaking operation that had been handling between $50,000 and $70,000 per week in season. They arrested three men, confiscated a quantity of marijuana and brought all three to trial.

"We though we had a pretty good jury and a good case," Curtis recalls. "I spent all day Friday on the stand as an expert witness. All forms of gambling were talked about, including horse racing.

"Monday morning we came in there and evidently the defendants had conferenced over the weekend and decided they wanted to plead guilty.

"The main person in the operation got five years' probation and the other two got two and three years' probation. . .The judge dismissed the jury and we all walked out.

"There was one juror who walked up to the defendant and said, 'I don't know why ya'll did that. We had talked and we were going to find ya'll not guilty.'

"I overheard it and went up to talk to that juror and he told me that we needed to clean up government before we started talking about gambling.

"And then a woman came up to me and said, 'Mr. Curtis, I appreaciate your testimony so much. My husband has been taking me down to Louisiana Downs nearly every week, but I just didn't understand all those daily doubles, the exactas, the perfectas, betting to show and all.

"But the way you explained it, I could do it now. I'm looking forward to this weekend when we go down there.

"I'm ready to bet."

Wahoo returning to Coliseum card

ODESSA—Wahoo McDaniel, Midland's all-time football great, returns to West Texas tonight in the Ector County Coliseum.

McDaniel will tangle with the National Wrestling Association's world heavyweight wrestler Harley Race in the main event that features a classy card starting at 8 p.m.

In addition to the McDaniel-Race bout, the Funk Brothers, Terry and Dory, Jr. will meet the Von Erics, Kevin and David in a battle for the American Tag Team belt.

Jay Mehaffey is the promoter and is pleased with the card set up for tonight.

McDaniel was an all-state player at Midland High School and had great seasons at Oklahoma University and with the New York Jets.

Hood, Bonham face shootout

Odessa Hood (7-1-0) battles Odessa Bonham (7-0-1) for the championship of the Midland-Odessa 9th grade football league at 6:55 p.m. Thursday at the Permian practice Field in the final weekend of action.

Odessa Nimitz (6-2-0), knocked Hood from the unbeaten ranks last Saturday, 27-8, and the Admirals wind up their season against Austin Orange of Midland at Austin Saturday. Orange sports a 3-5-0 mark after losing to Midland Edison Purple, 20-6, at Edison Monday in a makeup game. Purple (4-3-1) also winds up its season on Saturday when it squares off with Odessa Ector (0-8-0) at Ector; Austin White (2-4-2) tries Odessa Bowie (1-7-0) in Odessa while Edison Gold (4-3-1) meets Odessa Crockett (3-4-1) at Edison Saturday.

Last week, Gold whipped Ector, 30-0, while Austin White battled Bonham to a 14-14 tie.

In 8th grade action, Hood also fell from the unbeaten ranke, losing to Odessa Blackshear, 15-7. Hood is now 4-1-1 while Blackshear is 6-1-0. Blackshear is opem this week, but Hood takes on Nimitz (3-3-1) at Hood; Goddard (4-1-1) battles San Jacinto (2-4-0) at Midland Memorial Stadium Saturday; Alamo (3-2-1) faces Bowie (2-3-1) and Crockett (1-3-2) tries Bonham (0-6-0), in the next-to-last weekend of the season. The 8th grade teams started a week behind the 9th grade teams.

In 7th grade action Thursday, Alamo Scarlet plays at San Jacinto White; Goddard Red will be at Alamo Grey and San Jacinto Green at Goddard White. Games rained out the first weekend of Sept. 21 will be made up next week, according to Athletic Director Sam Cox.

'Screwy Dewey' bothers McClain

SUWANEE, Ga. (AP) — Some of the Atlanta Falcons refer to linebacker Dewey McClain as "Screwy Dewey." This bothers McClain like most everything else — not at all.

"Dewey is exceptionally crazy," says linebacker Fulton Kuykendall, himself known as "Captain Crazy." "That's why he gets so many penalties, but that's also why he makes so many big plays."

Sunday's 21-10 victory over the San Francisco 49ers was a relatively routine day for McClain. He recovered a fumble, got a face-mask penalty — and accidentally hit official Charley Musser during a first-half melee.

"The referee got knocked out for five minutes, but there were no yellow flags," McClain said after the Falcons' workout Monday. "It was beautiful."

McClain didn't mean he was glad the official got hurt. He meant he was glad there was no penalty. A happy-go-lucky type, McClain spewsWout words machine-gun style, and although he means what he says, sometimes he doesn't say what he means.

McClain, a third-year pro from East Central State University in Ada, Okla., is the Falcons' fourth linebacker in their 3-4 defense. He also plays special teams and always figures in a disproportionate amount of big plays, both pro and con.

In the Falcons' 14-0 victory over Detroit, with the Lions on the Falcons 12 and only trailing 7-0 in the fourth quarter, McClain recovered a fumble to get Atlanta out of danger. But earlier he was cited for unnecessary roughness against the Lions center on a punt, nullifying a 52-yard punt return by Billy Ryckman that might have put the game out of reach sooner.

"Every time I get over the center now," McClain said, "I look at the official and he's always looking right at me. So I hit the center real lightly now."

During Atlanta's victory over the New York Giants, McClain sacked quarterback Joe Pisarcik for a safety and also caused a fumble.

But he kept the Los Angeles Rams' touchdown drive alive last week in the Falcons' 15-7 victory when he roughed quarterback Pat Haden.

"I was up in the air," McClain said. "What was I supposed to do? I don't have wings. I couldn't fly over him. The referee said I came down too hard on him. I said, 'How do you want 230 pounds to come down?'"

McClain says his piling-on penalties are the result of "undereagerness" as much as overeagerness. "If I wasn't undereager, I wouldn't be hitting late, would I? I'd already be there."

Celtics deserted by fast break

By The Associated Press

Throughout their glory years, the Boston Celtics lived by the fast break. Tuesday night, they died by it at the hands of the Milwaukee Bucks.

The young Bucks ran the struggling Celtics ragged in breaking a three-game losing streak with a 125-108 National Basketball Association victory. At a team meeting before the game, the Milwaukee players decided to open up the offense and Boston couldn't keep pace. The Bucks scored 19 points from the free throw line in the fourth quarter as the beleaguered Celtics kept fouling when beaten down the floor.

"This was the best basketball we've played since last year," said Bucks guard Brian Winters. "When you run a lot, you use a lot of people. We had some injuries and so a couple of guys had to go 40 minutes a game instead of 32.

"We're pretty healthy now and I think we'll run more because of it. This is the way the game is supposed to be played."

Elsewhere in the NBA, Los Angeles edged Chicago 112-111, Washington slaughtered Portland 143-103 and San Diego beat New Orleans 121-115.

Milwaukee got balanced scoring, with Winters and Marques Johnson contributing 19 points each, Kent Benson and Ernie Grunfeld scoring 18 apiece. Benson had 12 rebounds and held Celtic star Dave Cowens to four points and nine rebounds.

Lloyd Walton keyed the offense with 10 assists, the second straight game in which he was in double figures in assists.

"I'm having a ball out there because we're ready to get on the winning track," Walton said of the 5-9 Bucks. "We're going to put on our track shoes ... we're going to get these guys running."

The Celtics fell to 2-8.

Lakers 112, Bulls 111

Los Angeles won for the first time on the road and the sixth time in a row overall. Norm Nixon's steal and subsequent layup with 15 seconds to go accounted for the Lakers' margin.

Adrian Dantley had 27 points and Nixon scored 24 in helping the Lakers overcome a seven-point Bulls lead in the last quarter. Nixon had seven points in the final 3½ minutes.

The loss dropped Chicago's record to 2-11.

Bullets 143, Trail Blazers 103

Washington bolted to a 20-4 lead in the first six minutes and cruised home. The Bullets built a 72-44 halftime lead as the defending NBA champs snapped Portland's five-game victory skein.

Bobby Dandridge scored 24 points and Wes Unseld had 21 and 15 rebounds for Washington.

Clippers 121, Jazz 115

Lloyd Free led San Diego scoring with 29 points, but Coniel Norman, who finished with 21, and Nick Weatherspoon, who added 25, came off the bench to spark the Clippers offense.

Leonard Robinson had 32 points and 17 rebounds in a losing effort while Pete Maravich added 28 points.

Johan Cruyff ends reign

AMSTERDAM (AP) — Dutch soccer ace Johan Cruyff hung up his boots and retired Tuesday night but his reign as the world's top player ended on a sour note.

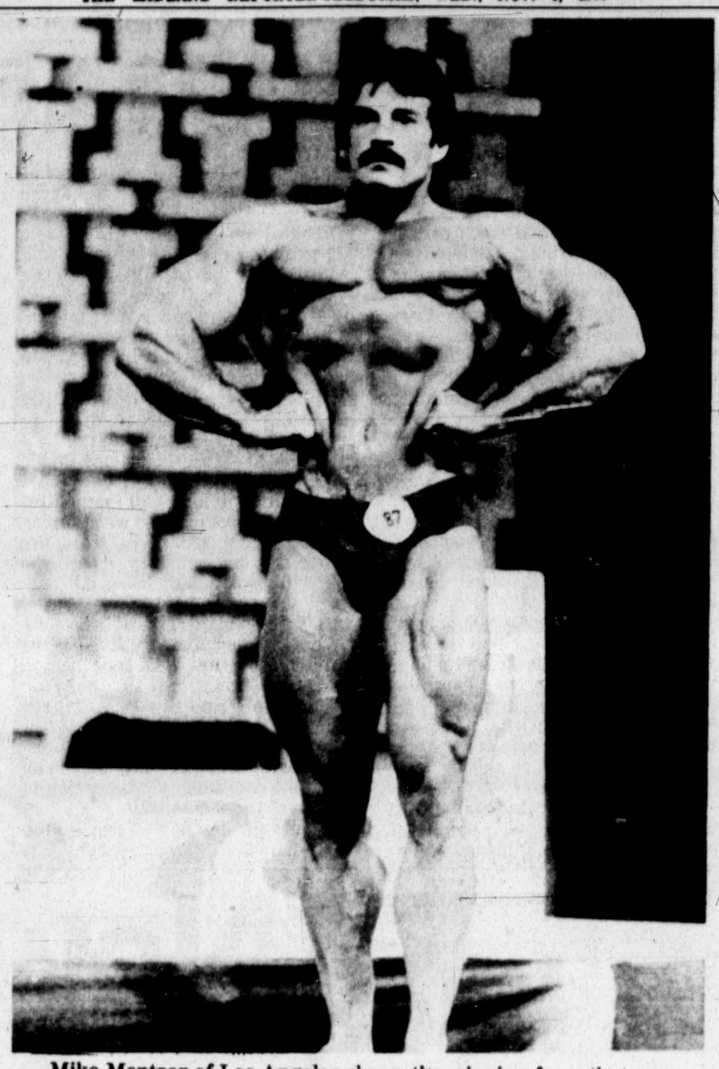

In a farewell appearance against Bayern Munich of West Germany, Cruyff and his Ajax teammates suffered a humiliating 8-0 defeat which dampened the night's celebrations.

Chaps place 9th in Ladyjack tourney

NAGCADOCHES—Houston Baptist College shot a 318 to wind up with a winning 951 total in the three-day, 54-hole Ladyjack Women's Golf Tournament at S.F. Austin College. Texas A&M finished 10 strokes behind with a 961 while Oklahoma was third with 975.

Midland College took ninth with a final-round 354 for a 1,065 total. On the final round, Sheryl Guthrie had an 83; Wendey Goodwin 87, Maria Haasch 89 and Jamie Gossett 95. There were two junior colleges in the 11-team field.

NHL suspends two players

MONTREAL (AP) — The National Hockey League has fined and suspended Colorado forward Wilf Paiement and Philadelphia forward Paul Holmgren for disorderly conduct in games earlier this season.

Paiement was suspended for 15 games and fined $500 for a stick-swinging incident during an Oct. 25 NHL game with the Detroit Red Wings. Holmgren was handed a three-day suspension and fined $500 for kicking Boston's Terry O'Reilly in a game on Nov. 4.

NHL Executive Vice President Brian O'Neill announced the actions Tuesday.

Paiement received a match penalty for striking Detroit forward Dennis Polonich in the face. The Colorado forward has missed six games since then, awaiting further disciplinary action from the league. O'Neill said the suspension would be retroactive to the incident.

Atlanta Flames crank up again

ATLANTA (AP) — Rebounding from their first loss of the season at the hands of the Montreal Canadiens last weekend, the Atlanta Flames believe they are on the way to another National Hockey League winning streak.

"We didn't lose any confidence at all in that (Montreal) game," said Atlanta's Bobby Lalonde, who scored one of four Flames goals Tuesday night in a 4-2 victory over the Vancouver Canucks. "We're the type team that doesn't want to lose two games in a row."

The loss to Montreal, which game after the Flames had won 10 consecutive games, is history, Atlanta Coach Fred Creighton said. "It's out of the way. I thought it was important to get another win right away."

In other NHL games, the Toronto Maple Leafs blanked the St. Louis Blues 5-0 and the New York Islanders downed the Minnesota North Stars 5-2.

Bob MacMillan led off the scoring for Atlanta with a shot through the legs of Vancouver goalie Glen Banlon early in the second period. The goal, MacMillan's ninth of the season, broke a scoreless tie.

Just 37 seconds later, Atlanta's Eric Vail scored from deep in the slot.

Tom Lysiak's 10th goal of the season, a deflection of a shot from the point by David Shand, and a 25-foot shot by Lalonde gave the Flames a 4-0 lead late in the second period.

But Vancouver defenseman Jack Sedleauer stopped Atlanta's hopes for a shutout late in the period when he fired a shot from just outside the crease past Atlanta goalie Dan Bouchard.

Creighton said he decided against replacing Bouchard with Yves Belanger — as he had said he would do once Bouchard suffered his first loss — because "we're getting as good goaltending as anybody in the league right now. With a few days rest, I didn't want to change."

The victory tied the Flames' longest home winning streak of seven games and their longest home unbeaten streak of 16 games. The win improved Atlanta's record, already the best in the NHL, to 11-1-2.

Vancouver's record fell to 5-8-1.

Maple Leafs 5, Blues 0

Lanny McDonald and Walt McKechnie scored two goals apiece while Paul Harrison blocked 16 St. Louis shots, carrying Toronto to victory and extending to 10 games the Blues' winless streak.

The loss was the seventh straight to Toronto by St. Louis, which last defeated the Maple Leafs on Nov. 7, 1976.

Islanders 5, North Stars 2

Jones finds a soft spot

BALTIMORE (AP) — There is little love lost between the Dallas Cowboys and Bert Jones, but now the Baltimore Colts' quarterback knows there's a soft spot for him in some of the hearts in Texas.

Jones came back from another injury to his right shoulder Monday night to lead Baltimore to a 21-17 victory over the Washington Redskins in a nationally televised National Football League game.

The Redskins' loss kept them just a game ahead of the struggling Cowboys in the NFC East, and the comeback performance of Jones and his Colt teammates resulted in a telegram delivered here Tuesday.

"To (Coach) Ted Marchibroda, Bert Jones and the Baltimore Colt team," it read. "Last night's victory was one of the finest performances by any team in pro football history.

"Bert Jones' performance was perhaps the best we will ever see by one man.

"The way the Cowboys have been playing, they may not deserve the life you gave them, but we in Dallas thank you and wish you the very best.

"Maybe we will meet in the Super Bowl."

It was signed, "Thousands of Cowboy Fans."

Brown makes splash

NEW YORK (AP) — Ted Brown, who stands sixth on college football's all-time rushing list, has come a long way since his freshman year when he almost quit North Carolina State because he wasn't seeing much action.

The only ground-gainers ahead of Brown are Tony Dorsett, Archie Griffin, Ed Marinaro, Terry Miller and Earl Campbell and the 5-foot-10, 199-pound senior from High Point, N.C., has a good chance at finishing his career No. 3 on the major college charts.

With three regular-season games left, plus a possible bowl appearance, only Dorsett with 6,082 yards and Griffin with 5,177 seem out of reach. Brown has 4,304 heading into Saturday's game against second-ranked Penn State, a team he shredded for 251 yards last year.

After four varsity games as a freshman, Brown had exactly one carry from scrimmage and zero yards rushing. But since that time he has been extremely durable, never missing a game and even leading the Wolfpack in receiving the last two seasons while becoming the top rusher in Atlantic Coast Conference history.

"I don't like to think about personal goals because of what happened to me as a freshman when I didn't play much," Brown said Tuesday at the weekly luncheon of the New York Football Writers. "Since then I haven't set any personal goals."

In fact, he had to be talked into staying at N.C. State.

"At one time, I decided to stop playing," he said. "My stuff was packed and I was ready to come home. I didn't like what was going on. I wasn't used to not playing and I couldn't take all the stuff the coaches were telling me.

"I thought about getting away and playing basketball at another school (he was a high school hoop star and admits basketball is his first love) but I thought that might happen in basketball, too, and I decided to stick it out. I talked to my mother and she told me that there isn't anything that comes easy."

Brown's 251 yards against Penn State last year, a North Carolina State record and also the most ever against the Nittany Lions, didn't come easy, either, and Brown expects to be a target for revenge come Saturday.

Penn State tackle Bruce Clark said last Saturday after the Lions held Maryland to minus 32 yards rushing that "one of our goals is to hold Ted Brown to minus yardage."

"Nothing's impossible," Brown said, "but if our offensive line is doing a great job I don't think that will happen. And I've been fortunate to have great offensive lines in my four years at N.C. State. I don't have any fear of Penn State, but I respect them. They'll come to play and it will be a hard ballgame. I think they have a better defense than they had last year."

Penn State obviously thinks a lot of Brown, too. Linebacker Rick Donaldson calls him "better than Tony Dorsett."

"You can't say one back is better than another," said the soft-spoken Brown. "That's just his opinion. Maybe Dorsett didn't have good games against Penn State or maybe he just doesn't like Dorsett."

And maybe by the end of the season Ted Brown will be No. 3 on the all-time rushing list.

Pardee likes position

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite three loses in the last four games, Coach Jack Pardee still believes the Washington Redskins are still in position for a playoff spot in the National Football League.

"We're in good shape," Pardee told newsmen Tuesday after the Redskins lost 21-17 to the Baltimore Colts. "We just have to figure a way to beat the Giants.

THE REDSKINS, with 7 victories and 3 losses, still hold a one-game edge over the second place Dallas Cowboys, 6-4, in the NFC East.

However, they must now face three consecutive divisional foes --the third place New York Giants, 5-5, the resurging St. Louis Cardinals, 2-8, the following week and then the Cowboys on Thanksgiving Day. The Giants defeated the Redskins earlier this season.

"If we come out of the next three weeks with victories, we'll be helping ourselves," said Pardee. "We've lost four in the row to the Giants and we'll be playing at home, so we have a lot of things in our favor."

Pardee, although complaining about several calls by the officials, made it clear about the Colts loss.

"Bert Jones beat us," he said. "We had an opportunity to win ourselves. We just didn't get it done and they did."

He did call the loss frustrating. "It was a close game and it could have gone either way. We just have to figure out what we could have done to win."

PARDEE SAID he had not made up his mind yet which quarterback --Bill Kilmer or Joe Theismann - he will start against the Giants.

"We have to thoroughly study last night's game and look at the Giants," he said. "A lot of input goes into it before a final decision is made."

He said he switched from Kilmer, who started his second game of the season against the Colts, in favor of Thiesmann, who opened up the first eight games, because "we could see they (Baltimore) were hot and moving.

"We were going to have to get some offense generated and some points scored and also some ball control," he continued. "We wanted to keep the football from Bert Jones and that group of receivers of his. We were just struggling a little bit.

"We felt that by changing quarterbacks, we could get something going, whether through a scramble or a completed pass or anything. We were searching, really."

Joe Restic heads scholar list

NEW YORK (AP) — Notre Dame's Joe Restic, Jr., son of the Harvard football coach, and 10 other collegiate football players were named Tuesday as National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame Scholar Athletes for 1978.

The announcement of the 11 seniors was made by Vincent dePaul Draddy, the Foundation's chairman of the board. The players qualify for $1,000 graduate fellowships if they pursue advanced degrees.

In addition to Restic, a free safety for the Fighting Irish, the other scholar athletes are: Robert Bookmiller, an offensivetackle from Virginia Military Instutute; Charles Correal, a center from Penn State; William Crowley, a linebacker from Yale; Jeff Delaney, a strong safety from the University of Pittsburgh; Robert Dugas, an offensive tackle from Louisiana State University.

Trojans face very tough slate

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Robinson, playing amateur oddsmaker, said he rates all three games a tossup. The coach of fifth-ranked Southern California no doubt wishes that weren't the case, since the three games in question are his Trojans' upcoming contests.

The first "tossup" comes Saturday, when USC meets Washington in a crucial Pacific-10 contest at the Coliseum. The next — if the Trojans beat the Huskies — is another "must" game against UCLA the following week. The third game has no significance in the Pac-10 race, but matches Southern Cal against Notre Dame in a traditional rivalry.

In order to win the conference title and Rose Bowl trip, USC (4-1 in the Pac-10) must beat both Washington (5-1) and UCLA (6-0).

Washington still has a faint chance, but would have to whip USC and Washington State while UCLA was losing to both Oregon State and the Trojans.

Facing instant elimination from the Rose Bowl race is nothing new for the Trojans, who "survived" with victories over Oregon State, Cal and Stanford the past three weeks.

"This has been an exciting season for us, and the next three games are going to be very, very exciting," said Robinson.

Cain, the Trojans' top runner out of the fullback position in recent years, has rushed for 608 yards on 112 carries this season, and Robinson said he's one of the better blockers the team has had.

Of the quarterback, the coach said, "McDonald has had an outstanding year. He rates right up at the top of the conference in passing, and has done everything else we've asked of him."

White, a junior, has gained 1,211 yards on 220 carries this season, scored nine touchdowns, caught 10 passes for 115 yards, and averaged 24 yards on kickoff returns.

"I'm really getting amazed with the things Charlie does," Robinson said. "He's so doggone durable. He's just about the best football player I've been around."

Fort Stockton zips opponents

By The Associated Press

Fort Stockton football coach John Blocker says his team isn't paying much attention to the fact that the defense hasn't been scored on in eight games this season.

The fact has been rather prominent, however, among opponents of the Panthers, who moved up another notch to third this week in The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll.

Fort Stockton's record is even more noticeable after a look at the record book which shows only six teams in Texas schoolboy football history have completed unscored on regular seasons.

"We're more interested in what our side of the score is than theirs," said Blocker, whose Panthers have outscored the opposition 239-0. "We never even talk about it."

While the Panthers were moving up this week on the AAA list, Farmersville dropped from its No. 1 rank in Class A after a surprising 32-27 loss to Southlake Carroll.

DeLeon, ranked No. 2 last week, took over the Class A lead and joined Temple in 4A, Brownwood in AAA and Newton in AA among the top ranked teams.

Fort Stockton has held off three serious scoring threats this season. The Panther defense held Kermit four straight downs from the four-yard line, repelled El Paso Canutillo four downs from the one foot line and last week recovered a Pecos fumble at their one yard line.

"I've been in coaching 20 years now and I know somewhere, somehow, someone will score on us," Blocker said. "We don't have any secrets, we just play hard."

Midland Lee and Greenville, ranked No. 8 and No. 10 last week, suffered losses to higher ranked teams last week. Greenville dropped out of the top 10 after losing to defending state champion Plano and Midland Lee fell to 10th after losing to No. 6 Odessa Permian.

Angleton, 8-0, moved into the No. 10 position.

Pecos, No. 5 last week, and Kerrville Tivy, No. 7, dropped from the AAA list after losses. Pecos was decked by Fort Stockton 21-0 and Tivy lost to San Antonio Southwest 40-6. Belton and Gregory-Portland moved in as the Nos. 9 and 10 ranked teams.

Idalou, No. 9 in Class AA last week, was replaced this week by Hondo following its first loss of the season.

Grapeland dropped off the Class A list after its second loss of the season and was replaced by Holliday.

Cleveland bends toward 3-4 setup

BEREA, Ohio (AP) — If the wave of the future in the National Football League is the 3-4 defense, the Cleveland Browns are going to be right near the crest of that wave.

Browns Coach Sam Rutigliano and his staff are bending more and more toward the defense with three down linemen and four linebackers — a setup noted for its effectiveness against the run and its lack of an effective pass rush.

But, as Rutigliano has said in characterizing his own team's sometime ineptitude on offense, "You can't win in this league by just passing unless you have a prototype thrower, and there aren't very many of those around. You have to have a balanced offense."

In last Sunday's 14-10 loss to the Houston Oilers, the Browns used the 3-4 extensively for the first time, employing young Mickey Sims and veteran Jerry Sherk alternately as the important nose guard — the man in the middle.

Sims, a hulking 282-pounder who stands 6-foot-5, could be an ideal nose guard, but Sherk, a former All-Pro defensive tackle at 6-2, 250, admits he doesn't like the duty much.

"I prefer the standard pro 4-3 defense because I rely more on my quickness," Sherk said. "Playing the middle on the 3-4, you need to have more bulk and strength, like Mickey."

Sherk was forced to play the middle a lot more than he wanted to against the Oilers because of a groin pull that felled Sims before the half. Houston's long fourth-quarter scoring drive that won the ballgame ground out a lot of yardage right up the middle at the tired Sherk.

"I've never been so tired. Playing in the middle every other series wouldn't be so bad, but that was tough," Sherk said.

"The thing is, those guys (the Oilers) have been playing it (the 3-4) a lot longer than us, and their linebackers really know how to slant and help out on the run," noted Earl Edwards, who played defensive end on the Browns' three-man front.

Rutigliano expects that aspect of the Cleveland 3-4 to pick up in a hurry, since the reason he went to that defense was to take advantage of the Browns' deep and talented linebacking corps.

"We wanted to play Robert Jackson and Dick Ambrose in there together and that was the way to do it," said the coach. "Both of them are middle linebackers and they are just made for the three-man line setup.

"Jackson did very well, too. It's time now for him to be playing more. He's growing into the position and into our system, but he's still a rookie in experience," Rutigliano added, referring to the fact that the 1977 No. 1 draft pick missed that entire season because of knee surgery.

Arizona provides majors school of fundamentals

By ROSS NEWHAN
The Los Angeles Times

MESA, Ariz. — Bob Welch closed his eyes, raised his head and let the sun bake his face.

Only two weeks before, Welch had been facing heat of another type: World Series heat. The heat of late-inning situations in Games 2, 4 and 6.

Now, however, the Dodger right-hander was far from the madding crowd, virtually alone as he sat in the steel stands at a city-owned park here, seemingly disinterested in the game being played in front of him.

HE LOWERED his head, opened his eyes and allowed a mischievious grin to play at the corners of his mouth.

"I'm here to learn the spitball," he said. "I'm here to learn the best way to load it (the ball) up."

A school of fundamentals for the youngster on the way up. A graduate course for the player who has made it. A remedial program for the man seeking to hold on.

It is 30-year-old Ken Brett, the Angel left-hander whose career may be at a crossroads, learning the screwball from Warren Spahn, whose screwball took him to the Hall Of Fame.

It is Bob Welch working on a curve, Terry Forster on a slip pitch and instructor Ron Perranoski on the confidence and mental approach of the Dodgers' top young arms.

IT IS 27-year-old Stan Wall, a former Los Angeles relief pitcher, attempting to rebuild his career following a hand injury that cost him the entire 1978 season. He ultimately gained relief only through a method of acupuncture and then — desperately, perhaps — signed with a team in the Mexican League, from which he defected when invited to report here by the Milwaukee Brewers.

It is Maury Wills delivering a base-running lecture to a group of wide-eyed rookies, the former Dodger captain and shortstop appearing out of place in the orange jersey of the team he now works for, the San Francisco Giants.

It is a jaggedly cut cardboard sign on the entrance to the clubhouse reading "L.A. Dodgers," a station wagon serving as the team bus, an attendance total of 21 and a woman in the concession stand saying that she gets more business during American Legion games.

It is Bert Wells, a Dodger scout for several decades and an annual visitor to the Arizona Instructional League, contorting his face as he watches what had seemed to be a harmless fly to center fall untouched for a double.

"That," says Wells, smiling, "is why we're all her."

The Dodger roster includes people born in '58 and '59 and 1960. It includes people not yet shaving, not yet eligible to vote. Terry Forster scanned the roster and said, "I suddenly feel very old."

Forster is 26. He saved 22 games last summer with a slider and fastball. The Dodgers invited him here to work on a breaking pitch, an off-speed pitch. In Forster's case, a palm ball, a slip pitch.

"I've thrown one for four or five years," he said, "but never in a game. If I can get it down, I should be devastating."

FORSTER HAD surgery this week for relocation of a nerve and removal of bone chips from his left elbow. The inflammatory condition did not keep him from having a successful season and did not prevent him from testing the slip pitch during a one-inning assignment against the Milwaukee Brewers.

He threw 22 pitches, only one of them a slip pitch, and said later that despite the low-key atmosphere, he had fallen victim to competitiveness.

"When they got the tying run to second base," he said, "I had to go to my heat."

"If you believe that," Bert Wells, the scout, said, "then you never saw Tom Lasorda manage over here. He was being ejected so often one winter that his players would have a pool on which inning he'd get it."

The season is from early October to mid-November, 45 games. Six organizations are sponsoring teams in the league: the Dodger, Angels, Brewers, Giants, Cubs, Padres and Mariners. The cost per organization is between $50,000 and $70,000. The players receive only $19 per day, which is expected to cover meals, housing and any other expenses.

Each team brings in 25 to 35 players, and no one is forced to come, though most first- and second-year players regard an affirmative response to their club's invitation as mandatory.

SCOUT GUY Wellman, who is managing the Dodger team here, said, "This is the most important part of our whole program. These people get six weeks of concentrated coaching on one or two phases of the game. This process allows most of them to jump at least one league."

"What it is," scout Goldie Holt said, "is the equivalent of two years in the minors."

"Really," said Maury Wills, "it's fantastic. The kids that come here are the kids that want to be here, that want to learn, that want to accelerate their careers. They are in awe of people like Warren Spahn. It's not only rewarding for the youngsters, but it's rewarding and flattering for instructors like myself."

It is an eight-hour day, stretching from 9 to 5, from a morning of specialized drill through an afternoon game for which there is no charge.

It was here that the Dodgers first moved catcher Ted Sizemore to second base and center fielders Davey Lopes and Bill Russell to their current infield positions, a move that helped produce a world championship this year, albeit for New York.

It was here that the Dodgers made switch hitters of Bill Sudakis and Bob Stinson and attempted to do the same with Russell, who hit the first pitch thrown to him as a left-hander for a home run.

CONFUSED AS to where his team was playing, Stinson and three teammates drove to the wrong park, where their arrival created consternation among the umpires, who decided that they must be the ones in error.

The umpires gathered their equipment and left for another park, where they were told that they had been right in the first place. Both groups spent the rest of the afternoon passing each other on the freeway, resulting in cancellation of both games.

The late afternoon sun was still bright and warm as Bill Swiacki completed his running in the outfield. A 6-7, 225 pound righthanded pitcher, Swiacki is typical of many first year players in the Instructional League.

Typical, in this case, being a college graduate who in all likelihood will be forced-fed through the diluted minor leagues. Swiacki, 21, graduated from Amherst with a degree in history. He was signed by the Dodgers in June and struck out 76 batters in 13 appearances at San Antonio, going 4-4.

Swiacki said he is happy to be in Arizona. "This has been an opportunity for me to do some intensive work on my curve. I'm trying to develop the confidence to use it in any situation. When it's on, I'm on," he said.

Asked if he feels pressure here, if he knows that the organization's scouts and front-office executives comprise almost the entire crowd, Swiacki said, "I always want to perform to the best of my ability, but the emphasis here is on development. I don't feel the game pressure I did at San Antonio."

HE PAUSED and then said, "Welch showed it can be done. He proved that it's not that big a step between college ball and the major leagues. He did it within a year after first coming here."

There are others who would also like to follow in Welch's footsteps. The hopes and dreams have kept Bert Wells in business for many years.

The scout was sitting behind the plate, talking about the young man in the batters box, a 6-5, 215-pound first baseman named Mike Marshall, an 18-year-old right-handed hitter who drove in 70 runs in only 253 at-bats in the Rookie League.

"Here's a boy who might hit a ball as far as Frank Howard," Wells said. "Not as often yet. He's a little green. He's just out of high school. It might take him a year or two longer, but he's got the power."

The next pitch was in on Mike Marshall, but he opened his stance and drilled a double into the left-field corner. Wells turned to the man sitting next to him and smiled.

"What did I say?" the scout asked. "A year or two or a month or two?"

Montgomery made NFL despite mamma's wishes

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Gladys Montgomery didn't want her son to play football. "Craziness," she called it. "A lot of fools ripping each other's arms and legs off."

So young Wilbert played on the sly during his high school days, dancing past tacklers and breaking records. And all the time his mother thought he was over at a friend's house.

These days he dances past tacklers for the National Football League's Philadelphia Eagles — and he may break a few of their records before this season ends.

"My other brother, Alfred, separated both shoulders playing in junior college and my mother swore none of her sons would ever play football again," Montgomery recalled the other day.

"I wanted to play for the (Greenville, Miss.) high school team, but I knew my mother would be against it. Before you were allowed to play, your mother had to sign this paper giving her permission. I got a girl in my class to forge my mother's signature and I made all my friends promise they wouldn't tell her what was going on.

"After practice I'd come home and she'd ask me where I was. I'd say I was at a friend's house. We played our games Friday night, so I'd say, 'Momma, I'm goin' out for a while. I'll be home by 10:30.'

"If I came home limping, I'd say we did it fooling around. She'd always say, 'Wilbert, you know I don't like it when you play so rough.'"

For almost two years Gladys didn't know the Greenville Democrat-Times had a sports page. Wilbert ripped it out every night before she came home from work. He won dozens of trophies, but he stashed them all in a closet at his grandfather's house.

As you might expect, Wilbert's fame couldn't be hushed up forever. After all, he was playing both ways, making All-State as a defensive back, rushing for 100 yards a game, scoring touchdowns in bunches.

"I can remember the night Wilbert told me," Mrs. Montgomery recalls. "He said his conscience was bothering him. I can understand that. Wilbert was always a truthful child. I know football must have meant a whole lot to him, 'cause he never lied to me before."

Much to her dismay, Gladys Montgomery has raised nothing but running backs — Alfred, Wilbert, Cleotha, Jerry, Leonard, soon to be followed, quite quickly, by John and Willie.

"Why," she asks, "do they all have to play a position where they get tackled on every play? Out of seven boys, wouldn't you think I'd have one punter? Even a quarterback wouldn't be so bad."

Twice this year, she's watched Wilbert on television. "The other boys tell me not to worry," she says, "but all I can think is, 'That's my Wilbert down there, with all those giants jumping on top of him.' I think, 'Oh, Wilbert, why couldn't you have been better in basketball?'"

Fred Washington, football coach at Greenville High School, says Montgomery is an inspiration to the student body. "Wilbert is someone the kids can identify with. He's not real big. He didn't go to a big school (Jackson State, then Abilene Christian). He just worked his butt off and now he's up there with the Paytons and Dorsetts."

Montgomery, hampered by injuries in recent weeks, has piled up 754 yards this season, the league's sixth leading ground gainer. He has a shot at Steve Van Buren's Philadelphia record of 1,146 yards in a season.

Gladys Montgomery smiles when a visitor tells her about Wilbert's superstar status in Philadelphia. She shakes her head when she thinks about her son facing dozens of sports writers after every game.

"Of all my children, I was probably closest to Wilbert," she says softly.

"He stayed around the house more than the rest. He'd sit with me while I cooked the dinner. He was a wonderful influence on his younger brothers. He worked (as a bricklayer) to help pay for his school clothes.

"I still remember the day he left for Abilene. Lord, how the two of us cried.

"I can't see Wilbert as a big celebrity. What does he say to all those reporters, anyway? Poor child, he must be scared half to death."

Wilbert Montgomery, his left ankle and knee badly sprained, was stretched out on a table in the Eagles' training room last week. His legs were sealed in two balloon-like, yellow hip boots that pumped a steady, throbbing current of cold water against his aching muscles.

"If my mother could see me now," he said, smiling. "All banged up, hooked up to this machine. She'd die, I swear.

"I call her every Sunday after we play. I have to tell her how I did and let her know I'm all right. When I got hurt (against St. Louis Oct. 29) ... I told her I sprained my ankle, but it wasn't anything serious. She kept saying, 'Oh Lord, Wilbert, are you sure you're all right?'

"When you see my mother, please don't tell her about this," he said. "Tell her the last time you saw me, I was fine.

"Tell her I was goin' dancing."

Landry gets plenty of theories

DALLAS (AP) — Tom Landry, a coach in the National Football League for 18 years, said Tuesday he doesn't have any idea why the Dallas Cowboys have been lackadaisical at the start of their games.

"We've been getting a lot of theories and I appreciate 'em," Landry said with tongue-in-cheek while glancing at a table of writers during his weekly press conference. "I just don't know specifically why we start out the way we do but I know one thing — we have to stop it."

The defending Super Bowl champions are 6-4 and trail Washington by one game in the National Football Conference East Division. Dallas has been outscored 55-14 by its opponents in the first quarter and last Sunday fell behind Miami 17-0 after one period before eventually losing 23-16.

"I was the most surprised guy in the stadium when Miami came out and scored 17 points on us," said Landry. "It's hard to explain."

Then Landry tried to explain.

"Our guys have been working hard," said Landry. "But just about everybody has what they want financially. You have to have a goal you are hungry for and willing to fight for. When you have it (the goal) on both fingers (two Super Bowl rings) motivation is different."

Landry said he had tried just about everything to get the Cowboys out of the blocks faster.

"I've cut down plays, meetings and workout times," Landry said with a laugh after being asked if he had been working the players too hard. Maybe I didn't work them hard enough."

Landry said he had decided that Dallas' 38-0 victory over a crippled Baltimore team in the Cowboys' opener was "the worst thing that could have happened. It just came so easy. It looked like we could beat the world.

"The players felt that way and the press did, too. I didn't feel that way. Baltimore was a crippled team and didn't have Bert Jones. Now, we are fortunate to be where we are within striking distance."

Landry again could thank Baltimore for that.

The Colts upset Washington 21-17 Monday night and Landry said, "That was a break. I didn't expect Baltimore to win. The division championship is back in our hands again. We still have a game to go with Washington."

It was noted that Landry no longer was wearing his 1977 Super Bowl ring and he explained: "The ring is too heavy. I don't like rings anyway — except my wife says I have to wear this one (his wedding ring)."

Six years ago, Landry took off his Super Bowl ring because of his team's poor performance.

Tacklers fear Billy Sims

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Tacklers have a devil of a time keeping up with Billy Sims, but words like remarkable, super, extraordinary and great do not.

The Oklahoma halfback gouged Colorado for 221 yards last week to become only the fourth player in NCAA history to crack the 200-yard mark three straight games.

For the past four games — 192 at Kansas, 231 at Iowa State, 202 against Kansas State and 221 at Colorado — the 205-pound junior from Hooks, Texas, has amassed 846 yards, averaging 211.5. This week he brought his season average to 155.2 yards per game and his per-carry average to 7.9, both tops in the nation.

Shocking nobody, he was named Monday the Big Eight offensive player of the week, the third time this year he's been so honored.

"I think you guys are smart," Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer told the voting panel. "What he's done, nobody else (in the Big Eight) has ever done."

What can Sims do for an encore this week in the Big Eight title showdown at Nebraska?

If he taps the tough Nebraska defense for 154 yards he will become the fifth back in major college history to hit 1,000 yards in five consecutive games. If he gets 200 he'll be the first back ever to go over 200 four straight games. A nearly unthinkable 240 yards would break the five-game record of 1,085 set by Ed Marinaro of Cornell.

Sims, a man of many moves but few words, was asked Monday who he would vote for as the best player in the Big Eight.

"Myself," he answered.

Several weeks ago when Sims was bursting into stardom, Switzer disclosed how he won the epic recruiting war for his services — by paying him what any high school kid would probably consider a supreme compliment and calling him at halftime of Oklahoma games.

Monday, Switzer was asked if he made any calls while Oklahoma was in Boulder, Colo., last weekend.

"I called one before the game," he said. "I sure did. "I'm not going to tell you who, but I was on the phone with one in the locker room. They shouldn't have a pay phoneTin there."

Inconsistent play hurts Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Alan Page is well qualified to determine what's wrong with the Chicago Bears, and the veteran defensive tackle says it has been "inconsistent play."

Page was with Minnesota when the Vikings started the Bears' seven-game losing streak and has been with Chicago for the past four games of the streak.

"We have played as well as any of the teams we've played," said Page. "Look at the scores. Against Denver (16-7) we were in the game in the middle of the fourth quarter. It was as much our game as it was theirs.

"Against Tampa Bay (33-19) we were still in the game with two minutes to go," recalled Page. "Against Detroit (21-17) it was the same thing and against Seattle (31-29) we could have won it with a field goal if they hadn't intercepted on the last play of the game.

"Everyone of these games have been as much ours as the other team but we just haven't been able to do it and that has nothing to do with talent, desire, ability or the coaches," said Page. "It is just inconsistent play which we have to overcome."

There are those who insist the defense is at fault, but Page disagrees.

"Look at what we've been doing," he said. "One series we hold a team to minus yardage, in another series we force a punt and then in another series we give up a touchdown. We've got the ability to stop people and that's what makes it so frustrating.

"We've been accused of a lot of things and some of them rightfully so," said Page. "But we've also done a lot of good things. It's too bad that when you take the field both teams cannot win.

"There are a whole bunch of guys with four years of experience or less," said Page. "There are a lot of young people around here who haven't had leadership from older players."

But the Bears reached the playoffs last season and won their first three games this season. What happened since then?

"To learn how to win takes winning over a period of years and not overnight or even one year," said Page. "Everyone makes mistakes but veteran people learn not to make mistakes at crucial times. That's where they are consistent."

The Bears will be at Minnesota Sunday, and Page will be playing against his former teammates for the first time.

Transfer rule is upheld

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — State District Judge Harley Clark rejected a suit Tuesday challenging the University Interscholastic League's one-year transfer rule.

Clark, according to UIL Athletic Director Bill Farney and lawyer John Buckley of the American Civil Liberties Union, held that the rule is constitutional.

Sports in brief

By The Associated Press

TENNIS

STOCKHOLM — Adriano Panatta and Tom Gullikson each fought off second-set match points and advanced to the second round of the $175,000 Stockholm Open tennis tournament night.

Panatta scrambled to a 3-6, 7-6, 7-5 victory over Dick Stockton, while Gullikson outlasted South African Johan Kriek 6-7, 7-6, 7-5.

HONG KONG — Defending champion Ken Rosewall, seeded fourth, beat Australian countryman Mark Edmondson 6-1, 6-3 in the opening round of the $75,000 Hong Kong tennis tournament.

In other matches, second-seeded John Alexander beat David Carter 6-1, 6-1; No. 8 seed Eliot Teltscher beat Peter McNamara 6-1, 6-1 and sixth-seeded Hank Pfister defeated Chris Kachel 6-4, 6-1.

OLDSNAR, Fla. — Top-seeded Martina Navratilova defeated Zenda Liess 6-1, 6-3 in first-round play in the $75,000 Florida Women's tennis tournament.

In other first-round matches, Ann White defeated Glynis Coles of Britain 6-2, 6-3, while Stacy Margolin defeated Laura DuPont 6-1, 6-3 and Regina Marsikova of Czechoslovakia eliminated Valerie Ziegenfuss 7-5, 6-3.

LOS ANGELES — The 1978 World Team Tennis champion Los Angeles Strings are folding, team owner Jerry Buss announced.

The New York and Boston franchises had already folded following the past season, leaving seven teams in the WTT.

GOLF

KAWASAKI, Japan — Nancy Lopez won the individual title and combined with Ernesto Acosta of Mexico to win the team title in an eight-team mixed doubles golf tournament.

Lopez carded a closing round 4-under par 68 for the best score among the women. She and Acosta combined for a 54-hole total of 274, beating second-round leaders Isao Aoki and Hisako Higuchi of Japan by 3 strokes.

HOCKEY

MONTREAL — Forward Wilf Paiement of the Colorado Rockies was given a 15-game suspension and fined $500 for a stick-swinging incident during an Oct. 25 National Hockey League game with the Detroit Red Wings.

Paiement received a match penalty for striking Detroit forward Dennis Polonich in the face. He has missed six games since then, awaiting further disciplinary action from the league. NHL Executive Vice President Brian O'Neill said the suspension would be retroactive to the incident, meaning that Paiement has to sit out his team's next seven games, as well as Colorado's remaining two games against Detroit Nov. 29 and Feb. 25.

AUTO RACING

Bagley, 38, finished in the top 10 in six championship circuit races. His best finish was fourth in the California 500.

HORSE RACING

Los Angeles fans greet McKay

I guess I've seen every Ram home game but a couple since they moved West in 1946 — and I've never seen anything like it.

In the third period Sunday, with the game still in doubt, the crowd was on its feet and began to cheer wildly for the visiting team! For the bad guys, for crying out loud!

IT WAS a first. I have heard Coliseum crowds boo the Rams. I have heard Coliseum crowds yell, "We want Wade!" when they had Waterfield or Van Brocklin. I have seen them hang out signs saying, "Goodbye Gabe!" But I never heard them root for the enemy before.

Part of it may be the putative desertion of the home team to Anaheim in 1979. But Anaheim isn't exactly El Paso. They're not leaving the Coast, just the city limits. Part of it may be the monotonous imperfection of the home team of late but, shucks! the Rams had teams that went 1-12-1 in the old days, and still nobody cheered for the Bears, or the Colts, or the Packers. So why cheer the Tampa Bay Buccaneers?

The answer lay, it seems, in the jaunty character in the faded orange sweater, the badly fitting glasses and the tousled white hair who stood on the sidelines directing the enemy attack. John McKay was back and, as usual, when he's around, the game on the field was just about the most exciting that's been played there in three years. John McKay never bores you. His teams never put you to sleep.

SOME YEARS ago McKay, an alert, dashing young halfback out of the university of Oregon, came into head coaching at USC, and it was like a breath of fresh air hitting the college game. Just about the same time, Ara Parseghian took the head job at Notre Dame, and, all of the sudden, the college game was full of I formations, riotous passing attacks, runners like O.J. Simpson, and 42-37 games.

John McKay won five Rose Bowls, a whole bunch of national championships, and he never sat on a lead or played to keep a score down. He never played for a tie, either. He'd rather lose — as he proved in the 1967 Rose Bowl game. When he had the dice out he went for sevens. If he had 18 showing, he'd say, "Hit me!" He never left a party early and he danced every dance. He lost 51-0 or won 51-6, with the same twinkle in his eye. He greeted success or failure with the same thing — a quip. Life was something to be one-lined to death, not cried over.

He ran into some undeserved misfortune Sunday. First, his quarterback left the game early with a broken jaw. Then, with a first down and goal to go on the Ram two, his backup quarterback, reading eight seconds on the time clock, put the ball in play with all due deliberation. A whistle blew — and Tampa Bay was penalized out of touchdown range, and, ultimately, out of field goal range. On another occasion the Rams got a reprieve on a fourth-down punt on their own 27. Tampa's Bill Kollar got called for running into the kicker. On the very next play, the Rams Pat Haden lofted a 68-yard touchdown pass, the longest of his Rams career.

MCKAY EVEN brings out the best in the competition. The Rams, usually as stolid as diamond-cutters going about their work on the field, came up with fake field goals, filled the air with footballs and actually moved 73 yards in 36 seconds to win the game at the end. The crowd seemed torn. It was the biggest crowd in weeks, and the best game in years, and Tampa had rolled up 341 yards on the Rams. Not even the Red Army is supposed to be able to do that.

"They're going to the Super Bowl and it took them to the last six seconds to beat us," boasted McKay out of a cloud of cigar smoke in the locker room afterwards. On the delay of game penalty with one clock showing eight seconds and the other hidden from view, He noted, "Dempsey would have beaten Tunney if they had this clock." On his quarterback gets hit above the shoulders there's a penalty. There was no penalty. So he must have bit himself in the lip and broke his jaw."

But the strangest tableau of all was the fan coming out of the tunnel at the end of the game with a Ram hat on, a Ram banner in hand and a blue-and-yellow carn

Something made him keep going

By ROBERT F. LEVEY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Jimmy was sick, then Johnny was sick, and Mary never quit crying. His wife was sure the babies needed milk more than he needed beer. And finding work was harder and harder. So one day in 1949, John Bjornvick, a painter, left his home in Arlington, Va., "and I just kept on going."

He never said goodbye — and he never came back. Some men are born to wander, and the one they call Whitey did a lot more than his share. He didn't forget his children, "and I started up to see them about a hundred times. Bu8t something in me made me keep on going. I just figured I was a bad apple."

James, the youngest son, now 30, was an infant when his father disappeared. He never searched for his father because he did't know where to begin. He never got any help from his paternal relatives because he didn't know who they were. But he wondered, and he fantasized, and he hoped. "Somehow I just knew that it would happen one day," said Bjornvick.

In August, it did.

Just a few weeks after James Bjornvick had moved here from Florida to take a job in the Washington office of the Veterans' Administration, providence appeared in the form of his supervisor. She was carrying the file folder of a VA pensioner, and sheAset it gently on James Bjornvick's desk.

"She had noticed the unusual last name, of course, and she said the file might be of interest to me," Bjornvick recalled. "I looked. I knew who it was instantly.

"All I could think was, 'Here it is. Here it is at last.'"

The record said John Burns Bjornvick lived in Havre de Grace, Md. Before the afternoon was out, James Bjornvick and his sister, Mary Quattro, of Rockville, Md., had driven there and found a certain 73-year-old man living in a basement apartment. In no time, they were calling him dad.

The father calls the chance reconnection with his family "unexpected . . . I'm just slaphappy about it." The son calls it "amazing. It's just been an amazing experience."

And more amazement is right around the corner. The Bjornvicks have located 94-year-old John Bjornvick Sr. Whitey Bjornvick hasn't seen his father "since I left to go off to World War II." James has never seen his grandfather. But they and other descendants+are flying to Minnesota in mid-November for a reunion that may redefine the word.

For now, however, the task before a long-estranged father and son is to re-establish a relationship.

James, a management analyst for the VA, is a three-piece-suited, devoutly religious man. His father favors floppy shirts+and pants, and never had much use for religion. The father can't count the number of fleabag hotels he has slept in, but his deeply-lined face does the counting for him.

To judge from a recent evening in James Bjornvick's Washington apartment, however, opposites—are attacting. "I cut right through at him, and he cuts right back," is how James Bjornvick explains things. But then the two men smile at each other, so the cuts clearly are not wounds.

Still, James Bjornvick feels "very sorry for him. He just drifted through time. He's been down and out as much as he's been up and at 'em. He missed a lot of life."

His father agrees. "Yep, that's the way the ball rolls. But it was kind of fun knowing I could hit any town in the country and find work. And when I was drinking, I always had friends."

Bjornvick attributes much of his inability to return to his family to his work. "Once you do danger work," he said, "you've got to blot everything out." But now at 73, "I think it might be time to stop that."

Pitfalls remain, however. James' brother John, 32, a Navy officer stationed in southern Maryland, has not jumped at the chance to see his father. "He might not do it," says his father. "You know how stubborn Norwegians are."

In a replay of "Roots," James is beginning to grill his father about his past and his family. He plans to do the same in Minnesota when he sees his grandfather, who came to the United States in 1903.

"This is my genealogy," James explained. "I figured they're 94 and 73, I better start asking now."

If they were named Smith, the Bjornvicks well know that they would not be getting a second chance. But they are determined to catch up for 29 years.

"I've felt like a jackass for so long," said Whitey. And then he clapped his son on the shoulder the way fathers can.

Dying cancer patient makes zoo a daily routine of love

By KAREN DINDER
The Los Angeles Times

SAN DIEGO — From a distance, gently petting the animals, he looks like any kid on his first visit to the San Diego Children's Zoo. Up close he looks more his age.

Robert Jones, 73, makes the zoo his second home and has been a regular there every day for the last three years, give or take a few days.

In fact, he is so well known and liked by the zoo's employees that if he doesn't show up for his daily rounds, someone calls his house to make sure he's all right.

Jones started visiting the zoo daily about three years ago, when he discovered he had terminal cancer and had only a few years to live.

"It's something very special to him coming here," said Pam Sturm, 35, an attendant at the Children's Zoo. "He's great with the children, explaining what the animals' names are and what they're all about."

Jones, nicknamed "Francis" after St. Francis of Assisi, the humble patron saint of animals, savors his mornings at the zoo, sharing coffee with the keepers, getting to know the employees and talking to the animals.

"We talk with Mr. Jones frequently, but we're careful not to infringe upon his privacy," Ms. Sturm said. "After all, it's the animals he loves most."

Jones who retired three years ago, arrives at the zoo by bus in time to have morning coffee with the keepers and learn the latest zoo news. He likes to keep up to date on all the animals and shares his news with the Children's Zoo attendants, who sometimes don't get a chance to venture from their area.

"It's such a shame about Albert," Jones said of a gorilla who died. "You get so used to the animals that it's such a shame when one of them dies."

Jones has been frequenting the main San Diego zoo since 1924, eight years after it was founded. And he has been a regular at the Children's Zoo since it opened in 1957.

"I remember when they first put up the sign saying that a Children's Zoo would soon be built," he said. I couldn't wait until it opened."

After a quick morning stroll around the main zoo, Jones heads for the Children's Zoo, where he visits his favorite spot, the petting paddock. He mingles with the herd of sheep, goats and antelope.

The animals sense his love for them.

"Hello, Barbara, you pretty little thing. How's my girl today?" he says, reaching to pet an African antelope. "What's the matter? Don't be afraid."

He walks over to another group of animals in the far corner of the paddock. Soon, several more animals flock to his side, begging for attention.

"Now don't start eating my pants, Bud," Jones says as he turns to find an overgrown sheep nibbling at his leg. Bud has been overlooked by Jones and wants him to know it.

"Baby, you want to be petted, too? Here we go," he says bending down to touch Bud.

His affection for the animals is apparent as he gives each one tender petting and praise.

The animals are not the only ones who are drawn to Jones. Children also flock to him.

"You know a lot about animals, don't you? asked a shy 10-year-old girl bending over to reach eye contact with Jones as he knelt to pet a goat. He nodded, smiled and talked to her about them.

"Look at that fella over there, Mary," a man said, pointing to Jones in the far corner surrounded by animals and children. "Now that's what I call happiness."

Californians watch weather

By ROBERT LOCKE

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Californians sweated through two years of ground-cracking, water-rationing drought. Then last winter, they slogged through record rains that produced devastating mudslides and ruined farm crops.

Now another winter's on its way and nervous residents are beginning to wonder what nature has in store this time around. So are most forecasters.

But the few weather-watchers willing to predict the winter — although they seem to be looking into different crystal balls — generally see better, more normal times ahead.

"It looks as if it's not going to be another drought year. And it's not going to be an extremely wet year either, although it will probably be a little above average," says A. Roger Byrne of the Univesity of California at Berkeley.

Byrne says he has noted in 100 years of records that California gets roughly the same weather conditions that occurred in central Mexico seven years earlier.

Mike Borowski, a UCLA meteorologist, forecasts "warm and wet weather in November and December ... then an extremely cold, dry spring."

Borowski — who bases the prediction on studies of global weather patterns — says, "November and December certainly have the potential to be above-normal months. Then we won't have much rain at all in the spring. The switch should come about Jan. 5."

Another prediction comes from Ken Levitt, a private weather statistician in Los Angeles.

"I anticipate much less rain, by far, than last year," he says. "As a matter of fact, I believe we'll have below normal rainfall through the 1978-79 season."

He says a century of weather records show that seasons with more than 25 inches of rainfall in downtown Los Angeles have been followed by below normal rainfall thoughout California the next year. Last season's total in Los Angeles was more than 33 inches.

The National Weather Service, meanwhile, says it won't predict in any detail more than four or five days ahead and offers no speculation as to how much moisture the winter may bring.

Ron Hamilton of the weather service's agricultural weather office in Riverside says California winters are determined in large part by the location of a high-pressure ridge that hovers near the West Coast. The ridge acts as a shield that arctic-spawned Pacific storms cannot penetrate.

"It's the position of this ridge or the amount of times it's absent that determines conditions from winter to winter," he says.

When the ridge refused to budge, California had two years of drought. When it moved north last winter, storm after storm charged into the state. A normal year is somewhere in between.

The high pressure ridge has been hanging near the California coast this fall but "that doesn't really say much. It doesn't tell us what's going to happen tomorrow or the next day," Hamilton says.

GOP wins in Nevada

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Republican Attorney General Bob List won an overwhelming victory in his bid for a four-year term as governor of Nevada, succeeding Democrat Mike O'Callaghan, who did not seek re-election.

With nearly all precincts reporting, List had 99,612 votes to 70,383 for his Democratic opponent, Lt. Gov. Bob Rose.

Feds charge 2nd man in record heist

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A 33-year-old free-lance photographer was free on $10,000 bond today following his arrest on charges of shielding Stanley Mark Rifkin, the computer consultant accused in the theft-by-wire of $10.2 million from a Los Angeles bank.

Daniel Wolfson, described as a former computer consultant whose friendship with Rifkin goes back to junior high school days, was arrested Tuesday at his Oceanside office and arraigned in San Diego on federal charges of harboring, concealing and trying to prevent the arrest of Rifkin, the FBI said.

Labor stoppages threaten British newspapers' future

By MICHAEL WEST

LONDON (AP) — An estimated 34 million of Britain's 54 million citizens read newspapers — when they can get them.

It doesn't matter whether they prefer the brash pages of Britain's top selling newspaper, the tabloid Sun with its daily circulation of 4.016 million and news reports interspersed with pictures of bare-breasted women, or the august columns of The Times of London, which has a more modest daily sale of 292,000. The Times has threatened to close down the end of this month unless its dispute with labor is ended.

Millions now find themselves frequently deprived of their favorite paper through labor stoppages, similar to those which halted publication of The New York Times and the Daily News in New York with a pressmen's strike beginning last August and running into November.

But among London's nine daily and seven Sunday newspapers, which are circulated throughout Britain, there reigns a state of "near total anarchy," according to Sir Richard Marsh, chairman of the Newspaper Publishers' Association.

In the first nine months of 1978 the 16 newspapers together lost a total of 121.5 million copies in labor disputes, many of them wildcat.

The papers affected by the stoppages say they are operating at a loss and find it difficult to meet demands of labor union members.

Most stoppages are about pay, while others involve preservation of manpower or operating new machinery. Many stem from what critics say have extremely trivial origins and many involve only a handful of workers, described by management as militants. The disputes can simmer for weeks or erupt within minutes before the printing of the day's editions.

Small labor groups can halt production of newspapers because other union walk out in sympathy with them.

Worst hit was the Daily Telegraph, This newspaper, which supports the Conservative Party and normally sells 1.35 million copies a day, lost more than 15 million copies over the first nine months of this year. The most recent stoppage lasted two weeks and ended on Oct. 20.

Lord Hartwell, chairman and editor in chief, said that during the stoppage the Daily Telegraph had been in danger of "bleeding to death" — having lost 1.5 million pounds, the equivalent at the time of about $3 million.

The stoppage originated with the management's rejection of a claim by just 24 union members demanding more money to operate wirephoto machinery. Publication resumed with a promise of fresh discussions with the workers, members of the National Graphical Association, on a new agreement.

The problems of the Daily Telegraph are typical in most respects of the rest of the industry.

Only the tabloid Sunday Mirror, which supports Britain's Labor Party government and sells 3.85 million copies each Sunday, and the Communist Party's 20,000-circulation Morning Star, so far this year have escaped the labor troubles in the industry.

The problem has been worsening year by year. In 1976, the 16 newspapers together lost 72.5 million copies through stoppages caused by labor disputes. Last year the figure was 101.2 million.

The Times, established 193 years ago, lost 3.73 million copies from January to September this year. The Times' management considers its continuing dispute so bad that it has said it would cease publication on Nov. 30 unless agreement is reached on unions' demands for new procedures to deal with the disputes themselves as well as such issues as production guarantees, wages, technology and staffing.

The ultimatum, issued Sept. 18, also covers The Times' sister newspaper, The Sunday Times, which lost 4.2 million copies in the first nine months of this year, and three Times weekly supplements devoted to literature, education and higher education.

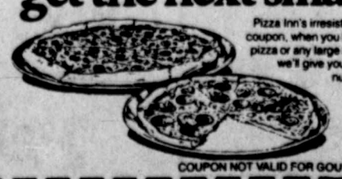

"We must not only have a new disputes procedure but also a guarantee that it will be honored," said Marmaduke Hussey, managing director and chief executive of Times Newspapers. "We cannot be held continually at ransom at short notice by small groups of workers."

On the union side, Barry Fitzpatrick, head of the Sunday Times branch of the National Society of Operative Printers and Media Personnel, accused the Times' management of forcing the pace of modernization.

"The damage that has been done to industrial relations is so deep-seated and resentment so high that even if agreement is reached it will be a long time, if ever, before morale can be restored and the papers can become happy places to work."

Lighthouse might be piece of moon

By DAVID LARSEN
The Los Angeles Times

TILLAMOOK HEAD, Ore. — Several years ago Max M. Shilock, hiking along a beach here with some college classmates, pointed to a structure more than a mile out at sea.

"See that?" he said. "I'll either end up in the lighthouse or the White House."

Well, for the time being, it's the lighthouse. He has one of his very own, built on a monolith that has withstood the pounding of the ocean for probably a million years.

Shillock owns a piece of the rock.

"Erecting a lighthouse out there at Tillamook Rock was considered one of the greatest engineering feats of its kind," reflected Katherine O'Neill, sitting back in an easy chair in her rambling Portland home. "My grandfather supplied the steel and iron."

It was exactly a century ago — 1878 — when the U.S. government decided to tame the huge basalt rock, tall as a 10-story building, whose presence had terrorized sailors for centuries.

The plan for building was to land an initial small force of men on the rock with provisions for a stay of six months, recounts the book, "A History of Lighthouses."

"These men were to erect living quarters for themselves and then to level and enlarge the area of the summit by blasting. On Sept. 18, 1879, a master mason...stepped onto the rock, slipped on its wet surface and as he did so a wave, as if it had been waiting for the opportunity, instantly grasped him and pulled him into the sea. He was never seen again."

However, a force of nine quarrymen did land successfully. Their first order of business was to string a rope from the mast of the supply vessel to the summit of the rock. A hook was vigged to transfer supplies and — for the men — a breeches buoy was made from a pair of trousers and a life belt.

The workmen, at first surviving the savage Pacific storms in nothing more than a tent, began blasting away the top of the rock, rounded like a turtle's back.

The crown was eventually removed and by February of 1881 a granite structure was completed comprising a group of keepers' dwellings around a square light tower 48 feet high. The cost of building the station was $123,493.

Its beacon would be seen for 18 miles at sea. But by 1957, the Terrible Tillamook, as it was known, was too costly to maintain. It was abandoned by the Coast Guard in favor of a modern radar buoy.

On Sept. 1 of that year, Oswald Allik, a keeper, tripped the switch and made his final comment in the station journal:

"An era has ended. With this final entry, and not without sentiment, I return thee to the elements."

The seagulls and the cormorants reclaimed exclusive rights to the ancient rock. They thought they had seen the last of humans on its menacing surface.

"I couldn't have found a more inaccessible acre of ground unless I had chosen to buy a parcel of the moon," Shillock said as a helicopter churned over the verdant Oregon coast and out toward the sea.

Shillock is a wiry 25-year-old who lives in Portland and inherited a trust fund from hs grandparents. He drives a Mark V Continental, makes a living as an investor and concedes that it would be accurate to call him wealthy.

For years one of his pastimes has been collecting Coca-Cola memorabilia. Now he has apparently started collecting lighthouses.

Two years after the lantern was darkened, the government decided to put the station up for sale. Its buyer, for a bid of $6,500, was a group from Nevada.

They reportedly had hoped to use it for gambling, but when they discovered, among other things, that it was not far enough out at sea to qualify, they sold it to an executive from Connecticut in 1974 for $11,000.

The Easterner did spend a few days with his family vacationing on the secluded rock, but he was eventually promoted in his job, found it more difficult to get away and let it be known that the property was on the market again.

As the helicopter settled down onto a flat area of the historic mass, he mused: "How many people get a chance to take something that is dying and make it live again?"

To climb to the private lighthouse, more than 100 feet above the crashing waves, there is a steep stone stairway up the side of the rock. It takes a visitor past a shed containing the rusting derrick machinery. Because of the choppy seas, boat landings were rarely possible and a boom would swing out from the rock to receive food, mail, drums of oil and men from the bobbing vessels.

The structure has hosted many storms. In 1894 a high sea broke over the station, destroying 13 glasslights in the lantern and flooding the premises.

Moss covers the side of the lighthouse. It has churchlike wooden doors and Shillock uses a hammer to knock away a two-by-four holding one closed. A seagull screeches outside. Far below, where the water is up to 240 feet deep, the waves send a pulse against the rock.

Joy Goolsby of Eugene, an aunt, is along on the trip with Shillock and she delights in pointing out the personalities of the four bedrooms: "You see, each one has a porthole window!"

There are such niceties as bumpers for the doors. Here and there in the various rooms are old cots, a rusting refrigerator, even a keg label for 50 gallons of cola syrup.

In the cobwebbed and dank interior, visible in the beam of a flashlight, are spools of cable, cans of nails, a calendar opened to September, 1957.

"That's just it," Shillock said on the way back to shore. "I bought it sight unseen and I don't really know what I can do with it."

There are many problems to be overcome if the historic structure is to accommodate human beings again. For one thing, considering the dirt that has accumulated, the new owner faces a massive job of lighthouse keeping.

Electrical connections are still in place, but a generator would have to be installed. The kitchen appears usable, as do the room radiators.

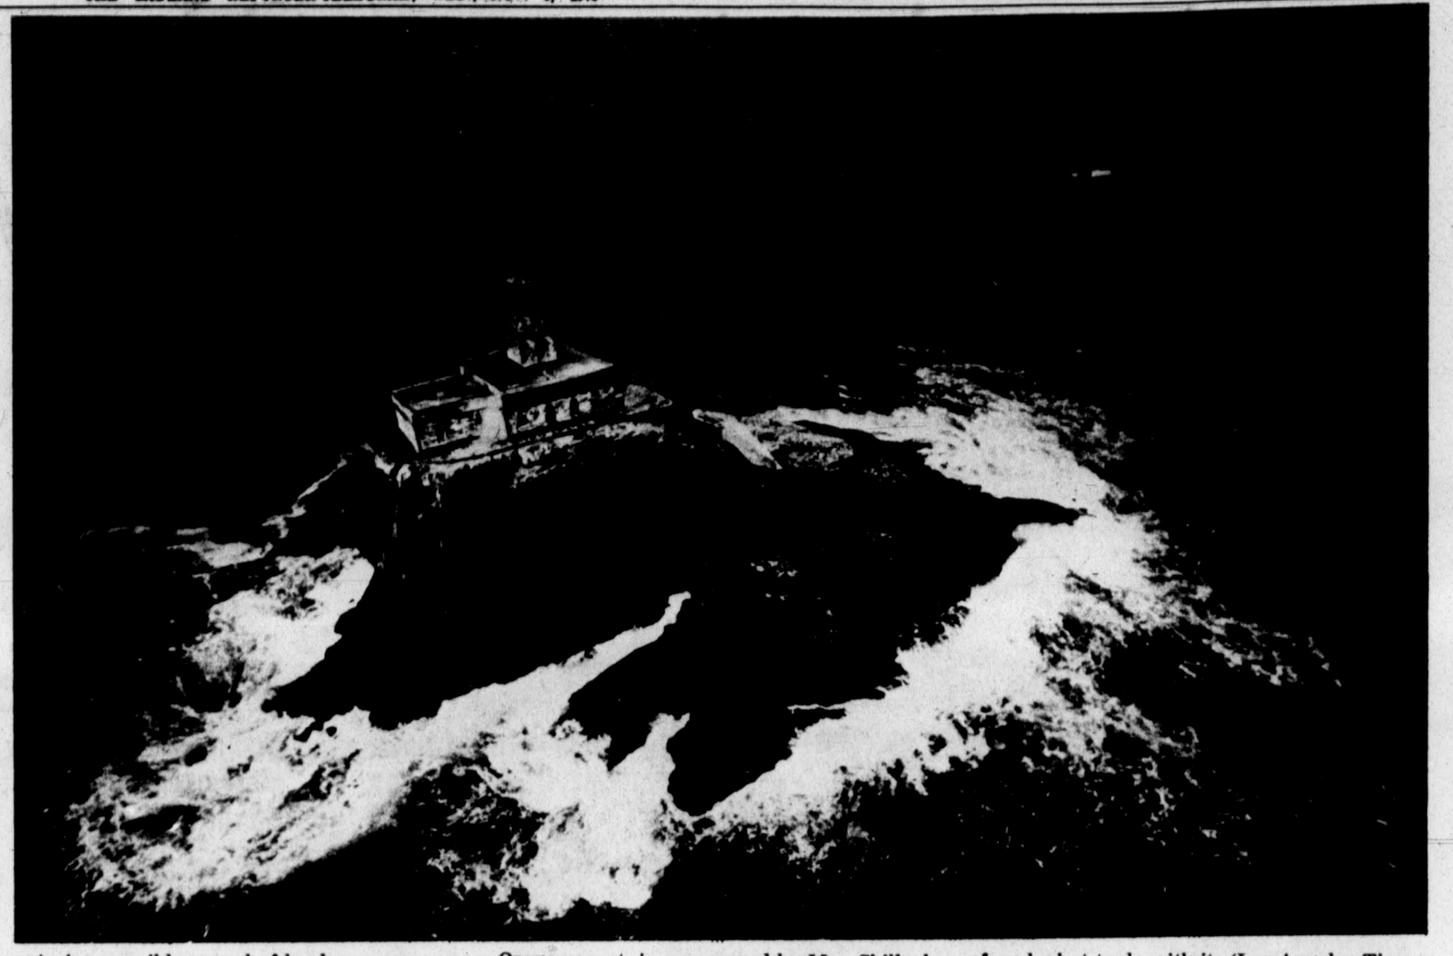

Foremost, though, is the challenge of transportation. Since guests might have hesitations about being hoisted from boats by a crane, helicopters would appear the only answer, and they are expensive.

"I feel as if I have a responsibility to the people of Oregon to preserve the landmark," Shillock said. "I have considered it as a restaurant or a vacation retreat, although I have to admit that if the right offer came I would sell it. I did get an offer from a funeral director in Portland who wants to convert it to a mausoleum."

For the time being, though, he is content to know that he is one of the world's few owners of a lighthouse.

Shillock homes.

His cathedral to include sky

By LAURINDA KEYS

GARDEN GROVE, Calif. (AP) — The Crystal Cathedral is taking shape, becoming the embodiment of the $14 million dream of a former roof-top reverend who wants to talk to his congregation under the skies again.

Because the new Garden Grove Community Church, about 30 miles south of Los Angeles, will be covered with glass panels, letting in the sunshine and starlight, it is being built from the inside out.

A massive pouring of concrete rises from the foundation to form three balconies, angled upwards like three points of a star. The balconies will seat 2,000, half the building's capacity, and will surround a bowl containing the rest of the congregation in a structure 150 yards long.

The pulpit will stand 12 feet up on a crimson marble platform, backed by seating for a 500-member choir and one of the largest pipe organs in the Western Hemisphere, brought from the Avery Fisher Music Hall in New York.

When the steel girders arrive early this month, the cathedral's architect, Philip Johnson of New York, will visit the embryonic structure and its godfather, the Rev. Robert Schuller.

The Reformed Church of America minister's flock has grown in 20 years from a handful of car-bound faithfuls in a drive-in theater lot to an international congregation bound by his "Hour of Power" telecasts. He doesn't preach, he says, but looks at the opportunity to "communicate" in the Crystal Cathedral as "coming back home."

"It will give me the feeling I've wanted and missed since I came into a building," Schuller says. "I began this ministry in 1955 with my wife as the only member. For want of money, for want of property, for want of a place, I spent six years on the rooftop of a snack bar at a drive-in theater. For six years there was nothing between my eyeballs and the continuous dynamic view of the shifting clouds in the sky."

Schuller expects Johnson to recreate that feeling in the cathedral, whose exterior will be made up of 10,000 glass panes, joined by a special process which makes the aluminum junctures almost invisible. Thin white-painted steel structural pipes, spaced widely, will form a web inside the glass.

"It's the closest thing to a nonbuilding any cathedral has ever been," says Schuller. "It depends entirely on the sky for ornament and color." He says traditionally designed church buildings have "blocked out the one element that the Bible declares is the glory of God; that's the heavens."

Schuller's current church building is not traditional either. It includes high glass panels that open next to his pulpit so that he can be seen by churchgoers who prefer to remain in their cars and listen to him via speaker phones, as in his old drive-in movie days.

To raise money so the cathedral can be dedicated debt free, each of the 10,000 windows has been sold for $500. Each will be inscribed in tiny letters with the purchaser's name or the name of a loved one. "They can't see it, but we'll be able to tell them in what area of the cathedral their window is, so that when they come to visit they can sit in that area," says Mike Mason, who handles advertising for Schuller.

The window sales produced $5 million, and another $3 million has come from donations. Mason says many people who may never see the cathedral have donated money for its construction, but he also notes that hundreds of people are planning trips to California when the cathedral is finished.

Another $5 million will be raised by the sale of 10,000 stars, part of a mobile that will hang from the 124-foot high ceiling like a canopy of stars over the chancel. Each of the stars will be inscribed with the name of its purchaser.

The building's completion date, Jan. 8, 1980, marks the 52-year-old Schuller's 25th year of ministry. But he says he's not sure the cathedral will bear a cross. "Most churches are by design controversial, pontifical or argumentative statements," he says. "This will be neutral. It's not to indoctrinate or educate, it's to communicate. There's no communication unless people relax."

FROSINONE, Italy (AP) — Terrorists killed a district attorney, his police driver and another man today, spraying their car with bullets outside this town south of Rome, police reported.

Calvosa is the seventh justice official slain in Italy in the past seven years and the third this year.

Police put up roadblocks on the Rome-Naples superhighway and other roads and sent up helicopters in a search for the killers.

Informed sources said they were looking for a beige Fiat 125.

It was the bloodiest assault since Red Brigades gunmen kidnapped former Premier Aldo Moro in a street ambush in Rome March 16 after killing his five bodyguards. Moro's bullet-riddled body was found in Rome 54 days later.

The Red Brigades, Italy's most feared terrorist gang, also claimed responsibility for the killings in Rome of Riccardo Palma, an official of the prison department of the Justice Ministry, Feb. 14 and Girolamo Tartaglione, a ranking Justice Ministry official, on Oct. 10.

Valley's sugar harvest under way amid protests

SANTA ROSA, Texas (AP) — The Rio Grande Valley sugar harvest is under way amid grower dissatisfaction about expected prices.

Harvesting began Monday, according to Jack Nelson, manager of the Rio Grande Valley Sugar Growers, Inc., mill here. Officials say this year's crop should produce 100,000 tons of raw sugar.

A defeat in Washington of a sugar support bill means that growers will continue to get the same price support protection as in past years.
