Trade deficit declines 25 percent

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — The nation's foreign trade deficit narrowed a sharp 25 percent in November, to $13.2 billion, its best improvement in seven months, the government said today. Financial markets rallied on the report.

The $4.4 billion decline, produced by a $2.4 billion drop in imports and a $2 billion rise in exports to a record level, was far better than had been expected by most analysts and clearly cheered jittery financial markets.

The Dow Jones industrial average leaped 53 points in the first minutes of trading, with some of the heaviest buying reported since the October crash. The dollar surged in European markets.

The shortfall between imports and exports tumbled from the record $17.6 billion merchandise trade deficit reported by the Commerce Department for October.

"It is no longer accurate to say that we are on the verge of an export boom. We are already in the middle of one," said U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter.

■ Markets take off in response to report — 5C

Analysts predicted that the stock market and bond markets would also rally on the news.

"Last month we had a hurricane and this month is a breath of fresh air," said Jay Goldinger, an economist with Cantor, Fitzgerald, a Los Angeles bond house. "This is the best news we have had in the market in at least a year."

Exports, benefiting from declines in the dollar that have made U.S. goods more competitive overseas, surged to $23.8 billion in November, their highest level ever. October exports had totaled $21.8 billion.

Imports, meanwhile, fell to $37.0 billion, down from $39.4 billion in October.

In advance of today's report, analysts suggested figures below $15 billion would be well received by financial markets while anything over $16 billion could have sharp negative implications.

The report on the record October deficit, released on Dec. 10, triggered a 47-point drop in the Dow Jones industrial average and helped drive the dollar to its then-lowest levels since the 1940s.

Some narrowing in November had been anticipated. "The trade deficits usually show some improvement, on a seasonal basis, in November and December," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for the Boston Co. Economic Advisers.

It was the smallest monthly trade gap since last April, when the deficit was $13.0 billion.

Despite the dramtic improvement, the trade deficit for 1987, with just one month in the year remaining to be reported, was at an annual rate of $173.43 billion, far surpassing the previous record $156.2 billion for 1986.

In the critical category of manufactured goods, the deficit eased to $12.2 billion from $15.5 billion in October.

Showing some of the sharpest declines were imports of foreign clothing, textiles and communications equipment.

With peak rush hour traffic traveling west on Wadley sometimes backing up to A Street, city officials are recommending a signal at I Street and Wadley Avenue be transformed into a signal that would change to red only when vehicles or a pedestrian is waiting on I. Hillander School officials are opposed to the proposed change.

School opposes change

By RAMONA NYE

Contending a change would endanger their students, Hillander School officials said Thursday they are "firmly" opposed to a city recommendation that would transform a traffic light at I Street and Wadley Avenue into a "demand" signal.

"I think the basic posture is that child safety considerations are paramount," said Randal Kirk, a Hillander board member and attorney for the school at 1600 W. Wadley Ave.

"The time it takes motorists to get from point A to point B is a secondary consideration," Kirk said.

After conducting traffic counts last November at the intersection, the city staff is recommending 10 "loops" at about $300 apiece be installed on I Street and Wadley to turn the light into a "demand signal," said Public Works Director Fred Baker.

The City Council will hold a public hearing on the change at 10:30 a.m. Jan. 26 in City Council Chambers at Loraine Street and Illinois Avenue.

The loops buried underneath the road's asphalt will activate a red light on Wadley only when a car pulls up on I Street or when a pedestrian pushes a button, Baker said.

Rookie finds boss was there for his birth

By VIRGINIA BYRNE

NEW YORK (AP) — Since the day Adam Croom was born in a police car 21 years ago, the force has been with him. This week he became a police officer, only to find his first boss is the man who brought him into the world.

Robert McLaughlin, then a patrol officer, delivered Helen Croom's baby in the back seat of his cruiser when they couldn't make it to the hospital in time.

As time passed, the memory was consigned to a notebook McLaughlin kept in a shoe box in his closet.

But this week, McLaughlin, a lieutenant who operates the Field Training Unit in Broooklyn's 90th Precinct, noticed Croom's name on a roll call list and it rang a bell.

"Where were you born?" he asked the rookie Thursday as he stood in front of a class of about 40 new officers.

"My mother always told me I was born in the back seat of a police car," came the reply.

"And I'm the one who delivered you!" McLaughlin said.

"It's an unbelievable coincidence," the 49-year-old lieutenant said. "You never find out what happens. It's really nice to see that the boy turned out really well; that he became a cop."

Croom said he was startled when McLaughlin paused at his name as he was reading the roll call.

"He was like, um...Croom," he recalled. "I was scared. I thought, 'What did I do wrong?'"

Opinion may force new look at hospital decision

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

One hospital district director feels a recent Texas Attorney General Office's ruling could ultimately result in the district's rescission of its Dec. 17 move to regroup into seven single member districts.

"Things have arisen that definitely make us take a second look at our decision because of the Attorney General's opinion," said Midland County Hospital District director Barry Williamson Thursday. "This adds new criteria and evidence to the ball game."

Williamson adamantly opposes the hospital district's 7-0 plan for a number of reasons, he said, and was the sole dissenter in the Dec. 17 vote on the matter.

MCHD Board President Frank Cahoon said this morning he was unsure that the Attorney General's opinion would change what the board has already decided on.

But the letter will be an item on the hospital district's Jan. 28 board meeting agenda, Cahoon said.

"We'll discuss the opinion because we asked for it, but I still feel the majority of the board will not change its mind," the board president said.

The Dec. 18 letter from the Attorney General's opinion committee stated the bill authorizing the hospital district to choose a redistricting plan composed of a partial or total amount of single member district representatives could withstand a challenge in federal court.

The Attorney General's office statement mirrored that of the U.S. Justice Department's opinion that the bill's outline for district reorganization didn't conflict with the Federal Voting Rights Act — a rule safeguarding the strength of a community's minority voice.

By law, the district had to submit the plan to the Justice Department, Cahoon has said.

Hospital district directors asked for the state opinion during the planning stages of their redistricting efforts because minority community members asserted the statutes laid down in the school district's redistricting court battle applied to MCHD, as well.

Teen-agers asked to forge signatures on ballot petitions

HOUSTON (AP) — Teen-agers were recruited by a partner in a political consulting firm to forge signatures on state presidential candidate filing forms, two newspapers reported in today's editions.

Travel agent Penny Harmening told the Houston Chronicle her two children Jay, 18, and Stacy, 19, were hired in late December through a temporary employment agency by a man representing Southern Political Consulting.

The firm collected signatures for Sen. Bob Dole, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig and former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont.

Meanwhile, the Dallas Morning News also reported in Friday's editions that Jay Harmening and another unnamed youth said they forged signatures at the request of a partner in Southern Political Consulting.

The teens, both 18, said Rocky Mountain, a partner in Southern Political Consulting, instructed them to sign other people's names for petitions for du Pont.

■ Related story — 1B

Mountain did not return telephone calls Thursday to The News. Allen Blakemore, another partner in Southern Political Consulting, declined to comment.

Kevin Burnette, president of Southern Political Consulting, told the Chronicle he had no knowledge of such activity, saying: "I don't believe it happened."

Calls by The Associated Press Thursday night to a listed Houston telephone number for Mountain were answered by a telephone company tape saying the number was no longer in service.

Petitions of the three candidates have been impounded by the FBI due to reports of forgeries of voter's names.

Ms. Harmening said Mountain allegedly bought beer for her children and told them to sign voters' names on the du Pont petitions.

Ms. Harmening said she had been contacted by the Harris County District Attorney's office.

Central Americans silent on U.S. funding, congressman says

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Central American leaders remained silent on the issue of whether the United States should fund Nicaraguan guerillas opposing the Sandanista government, the leader of a congressional delegation returning from the region said.

U.S. Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn. said, "They all made a significant effort to not be recommending what the American Congress or people ought to be doing on that issue.

Speaking at a news conference at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport after a four-day visit to Central America, Dodd blasted the Reagan Administration for "bullying" tactics in the region.

Dodd said, "Our administration spent the better part of the last two weeks down there bullying small democracies who are struggling to make democracy work," said Dodd.

He said the countries, whose leaders signed a regional peace plan devised by Costa Rican president Oscar Arias, resent pressure from the White House to support funding for the Contras or face possible loss of economic aid.

— U.S. Sen. Christopher Dodd

"These presidents are getting annoyed with outside forces telling them how they should run their lives. They don't like having people coming down from the administration treating them as if they were, as someone said, banana republics and illiterate little peasants running around down there," Dodd said.

Dodd said Congress will consider next month whether to fund the Contras. He said he believed the White House would ask for $50 million to $100 million in aid, which would include some military assistance.

Dodd said the United States needs to give the peace plan a chance to work. Arias won the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize for creating the plan, which seeks to end civil wars in Nicaragua and El Salvador and a persistent insurgency in Gautemala that together have claimed the lives of more than 100,000 people.

Compliance with the plan has varied, but none of the three warring nations has achieved a cease-fire.

Dodd said there hasn't been enough progress on the plan, but he noted there has been some achievement.

He pointed to the amnesty granted to about 1,000 political prisoners in Nicaragua, but said he was disappointed that country hasn't lifted its state of emergency.

But he said the leaders that he visited had positive attitudes about the peace plan.

Leaders of El Salvador, Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua and Guatemala will meet this weekend in San Jose, Costa Rica, to assess compliance with the peace plan.

'Password' winner arrested for fraud

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The biggest winner in the history of TV's "Password" game show was arrested after he was spotted on the air by Alaska bank officials who wanted him in a $25,000 credit card scam, authorities said.

"The guy's a real flim-flam artist-...who perpetrates frauds all over the country," said Ron Williams, assistant to the agent in charge of the Los Angeles Secret Service office.

Kerry Ketchem, 36, was arrested Thursday when he went to the Los Angeles office of Mark Goodson Productions to pick up a check for $58,000 he won in four appearances on "Password," which aired last week and earlier this week.

Williams said the Secret Service was alerted after employees of the Anchorage, Alaska, bank saw Ketchem using the alias Patrick Quinn on the NBC television show. Williams said he didn't know the bank's name.

"He got false applications and then he got credit cards under the name Patrick Quinn and then the bills came back to the bank unpaid. They did a little research and determined somebody was using the bank and then they saw the guy on TV," he said.

Two Secret Service agents were waiting for Ketchem when he arrived at the production company, said "Password" producer Robert Sherman.

"He noticed what we think were the dark suits and ties of the Secret Service guys and smelled something federal about them and just took off as fast as he could," said Sherman.

The agents pursued and found him standing atop a toilet in a men's room.

After his arrest, "he acknowledged who he was and acknowledges he perpetrated the credit card fraud in Anchorage," Williams said.

Ketchem, who lived most recently in nearby San Bernardino, was held without bail today while the FBI, Secret Service and Indiana State Police pursued a variety of fraud charges against him, officials said.

Ketchem, who once was fired from a job as a sheriff's deputy in Ohio, faces extradition to Indiana, under a warrant issued Aug. 5 accusing him of fraud involving a bank in Odon, Ind.

"He bought a BMW vehicle under a fictitious name utilizing fictitious identification and drove away with it," Williams said. "It was recovered in North Pole, Alaska."

He said the FBI also was seeking a warrant for his arrest in another fraud case involving more than $100,000, but declined to provide details.

Williams said Ketchem gave the false name and said he was a government employee before he taped the shows last month in Burbank.

Ketchem racked up his winnings in appearances with celebrity guests Audrey Landers, who has appeared on "Dallas," and comedian Bruce Baum.

Williams said Ketchem called the show's producers and asked whether he could pick up his prize money Thursday. He reportedly said he was being transferred to Turkey.

Sherman said that as Ketchem was being taken away he asked the agents if he would still get the $58,000 he won.

"He said he needed it for a lawyer," Sherman said. "They commented, 'You're going to need a lot more than that.'"

NBC, which supplies the prize money, was to decide today if Ketchem would receive it, Sherman said.

"Mark Goodson Productions is preferring that he not receive it on the basis that the contestant release he signed does explicitly state that a contestant must give an accurate name and occupation, and we know those to be false," he said.

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States, after months of fruitless negotiations with Spain, has decided to accede to Spanish demands and withdraw 72 F-16 jet fighters based in that NATO country, Defense and State Department officials said Thursday.

State Department officials said that Reginald Bartholomew, the U.S. ambassador to Spain, told the Spanish Foreign Ministry in a meeting about 10 days ago that the United States would remove the three squadrons stationed at the air base at Torrejon de Ardoz, near Madrid. At the same time, the United States emphasized to Spain the importance of a new accord on other areas of military cooperation.

Despite the insistence of the Socialist government of Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez that the F-16s be taken out of Spain, the government in Madrid is willing to negotiate a new defense treaty that will allow continued access by the United States to the naval port at Rota, near the Strait of Gibraltar; to two smaller air bases, at Moron in the south and Zaragoza in the north; and to nine communications installations, the officials said.

Gonzalez pledged in 1986 to reduce the American military presence in Spain in return for a referendum endorsing Spanish membership in NATO, which it did. He has been adamant in the negotiations on renewing the 35-year-old treaty that the F-16s had to be removed to carry out his pledge.

The United States and Spain are expected in the next few days to issue a joint statement outlining the new situation, as well as affirming the strength of the Spanish-American bilateral relationship and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, in remarks to reporters on a plane from Washington to Ottawa last Monday, hinted that the United States would have to sacrifice the 401st Tactical Air Wing in removing the F-16s. The 401st is the largest U.S. air unit in the Mediterranean region and the primary backup force for Italy, Turkey and Greece. They are assigned to NATO's southern flank and form a crucial part of the United States's front-line striking power in Europe.

Reagan schedules visit to Brussels

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor
The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — President Reagan plans to travel to Brussels just weeks before his planned trip to Moscow for a meeting at the end of April or in early May with the leaders of the 16-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

A senior White House official disclosed the planned Brussels visit and said Reagan's trip to Moscow for his fourth summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev probably will take place during the last week of May.

Reagan's Moscow itinerary will parallel Gorbachev's during his visit here last month. He will only visit Moscow and limit his stay to four days.

On the earlier NATO trip, the White House aide said, Reagan is likely to stop in at least two other western European capitals and may also visit Hungary or Poland, which would be the first time Reagan has visited Eastern Europe since becoming president.

Secretary of State George Shultz will visit Moscow during the last week of February in an effort to get a head start on the key summit issues — the likely conclusion of a strategic nuclear arms reduction pact, Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan and human rights.

Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, in an unusual move, have agreed to meet at least once every three weeks before the late May summit. Shevardnadze plans to come here in March and the two men will meet again in April in Geneva.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher Wednesday publicly called for a NATO summit before Reagan visits the Soviet Union.

"It is of the highest importance, particularly in an election year in the United States that we should underline the unity and solidarity of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization," Thatcher told a meeting of the London Foreign Correspondents Association.

West European leaders have publicly supported the U.S.-Soviet treaty to eliminate medium- and shorter-range nuclear missiles.

Sandinistas blamed for hostilities

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Nicaragua's Sandinista government bore the brunt of blame for ongoing hostilities in Central America on the eve of a five-nation summit to tally the achievements of a regional peace plan.

Today's meeting, in the San Jose suburb of Alajuela, was seen as a time of reckoning not only for the plan but for the future of U.S. policy in Central America and the fate of Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

In Washington, critics and supporters agreed that further U.S. aid to the Contras depended largely on actions taken by the presidents of Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala, El Salvador and Costa Rica, who signed the peace plan last Aug. 7.

President Reagan has vowed to seek $270 million more in Contra military aid, with a congressional vote expected the first week in February.

Reagan has put off asking for the money since last fall, largely at the request of Democratic congressional leaders who asked him to give the peace plan time to work.

In news conferences Thursday, presidents Oscar Arias of Costa Rica, Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, and Jose Azcona Hoyo of Honduras — all firm allies of the United States — either directly or indirectly accused Nicaragua of being the peace plan's spoiler.

Presidents Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua and Vinicio Cerezo of Guatemala were scheduled to arrive in San Jose today.

Arias, winner of the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize for devising and promoting the plan, said only the Central Americans are to blame for the plan's failure.

HOSPITAL

Edia Hernandez, president of the Permian Basin chapter of the League of United Latin American Citizens, threatened to sue the hospital district in the same manner her group and the Black Advisory Council had sued the school district.

It was a successful move for the minority groups and forced the implementation of seven single member district representatives on the school board by the May 1988 election.

Williamson said there are four reasons — in his opinion — a redistricting plan composed of a mixture of single member districts and at-large positions is better than a 7-0 plan.

He noted that in the hospital district's 1986 election, 728 Midlanders voted.

Taking that number and (hypothetically) dividing it by seven single member districts, Williamson explained it would have taken just 104 votes (in an uncontested race) to put someone on the hospital district board.

If it were a contested race, the director said, it would have taken just 53 votes — a majority — to put someone in office.

"That's dangerous," he claimed. "In that case, you're diluting everyone's vote."

Secondly, Williamson asserted that the Permian Basin LULAC attorney's platform that the MISD case could be applied blanket-like to the hospital district is "attorney mumbo-jumbo hogwash."

"And the attorney general agrees with me on that," asserted Williamson.

The attorney general's office letter, written by Rick Gilpin, chairman of its opinion committee, said the MISD case was not controlling in the hospital district's matter and didn't apply specifically.

But it did warn, "...the Hospital District would be well advised to consider the Fifth Circuit's analysis of Midland's demographics and voting statistics in any attempt to draw single-member districts."

Williamson maintained there are no similarities between the school and hospital district cases.

The hospital district has never been accused of being a party to the dissolution of the minority vote as the courts found with the school district.

The dissolution of the minority vote was a fault of the school district's found not only by Bunton, and upheld during the appellate phase of the case in the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Thirdly, Williamson claims the LULAC's support of a 7-0 plan "lacks the support of the people of Midland."

"There is no evidence that the people of Midland want this change," Williamson said, calling for LULAC to present the hospital district with a petition signed by 10 percent of the county's residents who are in favor of a 7-0 plan.

"What you have here is a small group of very liberal people who are attempting to make a change in how we elect our public officials in the county," Williamson said. "The silent majority in Midland needs to become better motivated."

Another reason he is against a 7-0 plan is because he feels it polarizes the voters by neighborhoods.

Although there is just one district hospital, there stands the chance that single member hospital district representatives could operate in a "give and take" manner with other county taxing entities, Williamson believed.

"I'm not against minorities being on the board...but I don't want to create a situation that hurts all the groups," Williamson claimed.

Mrs. Hernandez said this morning that she didn't agree with Williamson's notion that the Attorney General's opinion would create a new situation resulting in a rescission of the hospital district's vote.

"I feel confident that the federal court's ruling (as outlined in the MISD case) would apply to all the voting in the county," Mrs. Hernandez said.

Should hospital district directors change their mind and elect to go with a plan other than 7-0, the LULAC representative warned. "We would most definitely take them to court."

Dorothy Smith, president of the BAC, said she felt "the MISD litigation should be an incentive for the other taxing districts to bring in equality" on taxing entity boards.

"I do feel we represent the majority of the city in that the people of Midland realize that those who live in southeast Midland pay taxes also."

"I just don't think Midland is used to seeing citizens on boards that are representative of that area," Ms. Smith said.

But she said she didn't think Midlanders would be averse to the notion of having Hispanics or blacks on the boards.

"I think they would get used to it and seek out this change," Ms. Smith said.

Under the hospital district's current redistricting plan — which could change — four single member district representatives will be elected to the board's two-year term in the May 1989 election.

Three at-large directors will remain on the board, however, because they will have been elected in May 1988 under the at-large system.

Therefore, the full thrust of seven single member district representatives will not be felt on the hospital district board until the May 1990 election.

Rolando Rios, the Southwest Voter Registration Project attorney for the Permian Basin LULAC chapter, could not be reached for comment in San Antonio this morning.

i don't agree with williamson and the ag - the fed courts can overrule state law - the voting rights act is the fed act - so should they do that we most certainly take them to court -

ROOKIE

"It's just such a coincidence that out of all the precincts, they would station him at that one," she said Thursday. "It's a one-in-a-million chance."

Croom said he thought he'd never run into the policeman who delivered him, thinking he probably had retired.

McLaughlin, who will supervise Croom until July, also was skeptical when he saw Croom's name.

"At first I said, nah, I doubt it," the lieutenant said. "But it was an unusual name."

The maternity call came at 3:55 a.m. on July 3, 1967, in the Jamaica section of Queens, according to McLaughlin's 1967 memo book, which he brought to work Thursday from his Westbury home. The mother was already in labor, and the two young officers decided to drive her to the hospital in driving rain.

Croom was delivered in the back seat after the car pulled over at 164th St. and Hillside Ave., the address listed on his birth certificate, Mrs. Croom said.

The grateful parents wanted to name the boy after McLaughlin, but they already had a son named Robert. The officer told them the name of the sector he patrolled was Adam.

STREET

Also left turn signals on Wadley only will be activated when a car is waiting in those lanes, he said.

Currently, the signal is timed to change green for 22.5 seconds on I Street — even if no cars are waiting — and for 57 seconds of green on Wadley, said Traffic Engineer Fred McGary.

Ninty-three percent of the traffic at the intersection travels on Wadley and is delayed by the lights. During weekday rush hour at 5 p.m., traffic traveling west on Wadley is sometimes backed up all the way to A Street, Baker said.

"People grab me and ask why does that thing turn red and no vehicle is on I street," Baker said.

However, Hillander school officials said they fear any change with the light could endanger children crossing Wadley.

Hillander Principal Betty Sides said many of the school's 352 students ranging from 3-year-olds to sixth graders may not understand how to use a pedestrian button when they need to cross the street.

"Some of them are not old enough to know how to handle it," she said.

Kirk said, "I don't know how you can have a traffic actuated light that satisfactorily protects children."

"If it's traffic actuated, you don't have the predictability — you don't have the traffic awareness of there being a light," he said.

Some motorists would prefer the light's removal, but Baker said there is enough traffic on I — almost 1,400 cars each day — to justify the signal.

Kirk said after a move to take down the light was defeated in April 1986, Hillander officials thought they had "put the issue to rest."

"We were very satisfied with the status quo of the light at intervals," he said.

Nebraska boy to undergo bone marrow transplant

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — When Mark Gudgel was told two years ago that he had leukemia, the Nebraska youngster tried to ignore it.

Even while people in his hometown of Bayard and nearby Scottsbluff and Gering raised $31,000 to help offset his medical costs, Mark remained silent and shied away from the attention.

"Every time the words 'bone marrow transplant' were mentioned he would hide his eyes, turn away," said Mark's father, Jack Gudgel.

Today, Mark, 12, will receive healthy bone marrow from his 18-year-old brother, Sean, in a three-hour procedure at Wilford Hall Air Force Medical Center, where doctors are using a different procedure to treat leukemia victims.

"He's just had a mental block to tune it out and now that he's in that room he's had to face it and he's having a hard time dealing with it," his father said.

Gudgel, a retired Army sergeant, said the family chose Wilford Hall because physicians use chemical chemotherapy instead of total body radiation in their bone marrow transplant treatment.

Mark has been receiving chemotherapy treatments the past week in preparation for the transplant. Sean's bone marrow will be extracted today, filtered and later given to Mark intravenously, said Dr. Mary Daly, Mark's physician.

Because of the strength of the chemotherapy and its side effects, Mark was unable to speak to reporters earlier in the week and only nodded when his father asked him questions.

"He's been very cooperative and it's hard to see him feel sick because he is a sweet boy," Ms. Daly said about her patient. "He has a close-knit family and they have been very supportive of him."

Sean Gudgel said the family has pulled together during Mark's illness.

"The most painful part is it being him instead of me. I don't like to see that," Sean said.

After news of Mark's deteriorating condition was publicized in late October, people in the Nebraska Panhandle raised $31,000 to to help offset the family's $120,000 medical costs.

The family's insurance is expected to pay about 75 percent of the treatment.

ABILENE (AP) — Air Force officials are modifying the B-1B bomber to make the aircraft less vulnerable to bird strikes, which are believed to have caused a fatal crash.

Two B-1Bs assigned to Dyess Air Force Base are already being modified in the $40 million program to protect some sensitive areas on the aircraft and officials hope to have the changes complete within a year.

On Sept. 28, a B-1B based at Dyess crashed in Colorado killing three crewmen, while three others parachuted to safety. Although the investigation of the crash is not complete, the Air Force believes it was caused by birds being sucked into the engines of the $280 million aircraft.

Technicians from Rockwell International, the prime contractor, already are working on one of the B-1s at Dyess, while another has been flown to Rockwell's Palmdale, Calif., plant for modification, said Lt. Monica Taliaferro, public affairs officer for the 96th Bomb Wing at Dyess.

Low-level training flights of B-1Bs have been suspended since the accident, Taliaferro said.

Mike Wallace, a public affairs specialist with the Aeronautical Systems Division at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, said the modification program is related to the fatal crash.

The Air Force hopes to have 20 B-1Bs modified by April and the remaining 79 aircraft by December, Wallace said. Rockwell will handle the first 20 planes and Air Force technicians are expected to do the rest, he said.

The modification project involves the installation of deflectors under the skin of the aircraft to protect vital hydraulic, fuel and electrical lines from damage caused by striking a bird at a high rate of speed, he said

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Implement your plans without fanfare and success is assured. The loyalty of those nearby is questionable. Rely on someone who you know will sacrifice to help you. You and partner need to cooperate more. Do favors willingly, but refuse to be used by people who like to toss your good name around. You are ready for a solid new love relationship. Choose carefully.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: pitching great Dizzy Dean, dancer Debbie Allen, slugger Steve Balboni, singer Ronnie Milsap, auto racer A.J. Foyt, singers Marilyn Horne and Ethel Merman, author Norman Podhoretz.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The pressure is off. Relax and unwind with old friends. Social activities take precedence over family obligations. Loved ones will not mind. Hobbies can be lucrative. Consult an expert.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Intellectual endeavors could be more rewarding than physical pursuits today. Treat the views of your loved ones with respect. Be careful not to risk what you value the most. Avoid being domineering.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Loved ones are congenial and cooperative. A romantic relationship can be strengthened if you take the lead. Travel requires extra caution. It might be better to stay home if the roads are slippery.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Steer clear of anyone who likes to gossip. Some interesting changes are in the wind. Take heart. They will benefit you both financially and emotionally. Share your joy with loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep your promises to loved ones. Some sacrifices are necessary. A family business venture could result in a real windfall. A romantic relationship requires careful nurturing. Show your sentimental side.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Mingle with people who possess information you need. You may have to push harder to gain the approval you want from your loved ones. Travel is best postponed. Use the phone instead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The weather could affect your plans for today. Do not fret if you have to cancel travel or social arrangements at the last minute. Enjoy relaxing at home with family members.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You find it easier to get along with a difficult neighbor or relative now. A business venture you are about to launch could add substantially to your family's income.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You enjoy new freedom of thought and action. Ignore a neighbor's envy. Try to limit credit card use. A good weekend to get together with old friends. Host an informal gathering.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not be afraid to stand up for your rights. Creative, original thoughts flow freely today. Jot them down on paper before they are forgotten. Avoid going overboard when entertaining.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Resist the temptation to act on impulse. Member of opposite sex has a fascinating tale to share. Do not believe everything you hear. Guard your reputation. Do nothing that could be misconstrued.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Avoid all forms of gambling. Car travel should be postponed if road conditions sound hazardous. An older person's problems should be dealt with tactfully and generously. Avoid issuing ultimatums or sounding pompous.

Most bridge players are reluctant to give up a trick. The expert, however, is more concerned with how many tricks he can make than with how many he must give up. That attitude made for a swing on this deal from a team event.

At both tables the final contract was three no trump, reached on similar auctions. At both tables the opening lead was the two of hearts, and at both tables declarer won the first trick because he could not afford a spade switch.

With only six fast tricks, declarer needed to establish three more. One declarer decided to go after the club suit, where he needed a 2-2 break to establish three long-card tricks. He cashed the ace-king, but when his 40 percent chance failed to materialize, he had no way to recover.

The second declarer chose to take the opening two of hearts lead at face value as indicating that the suit was splitting 4-4. That meant that he had to lose only two heart tricks, and that he could afford to give up two more tricks and still make his contract. Now it was easy to decide which suit to establish. He went after diamonds.

East won the first diamond and knocked out declarer's remaining heart stopper. But South persevered with his plan, forcing out West's ace of diamonds. The defenders came to two heart tricks and two diamonds, but that was all.

Note that declarer would go down if he ducked the first heart and the defenders found the spade shift. And when he chose to go after clubs rather than diamonds, that set up a club as the fifth defensive trick.

H-bomb developer celebrating his 80th birthday at laboratory

Teller

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Edward Teller, the father of the H-bomb, said he would mark his 80th birthday at work today, after a trip to the nation's capital to promote the "Star Wars" defense system.

Since his semi-retirement in 1975 as associate director of the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, he has served as an elder statesman of science, lobbying for the Strategic Defense Initiative with staunch anti-Soviet views.

"The Soviet Union has been working on strategic defense with great concentration and great amounts of money," Teller said in an interview Thursday from Washington.

"Thirty years ago I thought such strategic defense wouldn't work and I advised against it. But as time went on and I realized more and more, I saw a real possibility," the physicist said.

Teller said he would spend his birthday working at the Livermore lab, about 40 miles east of San Francisco.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Irish rock band U2 has been nominated for four Grammy awards from its platinum "The Joshua Tree" LP, while surprising Suzanne Vega received three mentions with a song about child abuse, "Luka."

Mega hit-maker Michael Jackson has four nominations for "Bad," his first album since the historic "Thriller" LP. Three nominations were announced Thursday for song stylist Whitney Houston.

U2, which took the United States by storm last year, was nominated for record of the year, album of the year and song of the year — their first-ever Grammy mentions. The band, which also received a best rock vocal performance nomination, scored three hit singles off their album "The Joshua Tree" and played to sold-out stadiums nationwide.

"I guess these Paddies did all right for themselves," said Larry Mullen, drummer and founder of the Irish rock band, through his publicist, Paul Wasserman.

Their competition for record of the year — the best single — includes a pair of veterans who earned Grammys last year: Paul Simon for "Graceland" and Steve Winwood for "Back in the High Life Again."

Simon won in 1987 for the album "Graceland," Winwood for his single "Higher Love."

Keaton

NEW YORK (AP) — In a business that demands high visibility from its stars, actress Diane Keaton says she prefers a low profile.

"I figure that less is better. I think the more you keep yourself private, the better it is, because, personally, I just don't like seeing it myself that much — seems like an overload of me," the actress says in an interview in Sunday's Parade magazine.

Miss Keaton, 42, said she doesn't like to talk about the people in her life "except in a professional way." But she had no problem discussing Woody Allen, with whom she once was romantically involved, because, she said, "work is the key to Mr. Allen."

"I think that Woody's just remarkable. There's nobody like him. He's unique and gifted, an artist," said Keaton, who appeared in six of Allen's movies between 1972 and 1979, including "Annie Hall," for which she won an Oscar.

Miss Keaton, who has no children, says she loved working with the babies in her latest film, "Baby Boom," a movie about a career woman who inherits a baby.

Carter

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer-dancer Lynda Carter, who played the title role in the "Wonder Woman" television series a decade ago, has become a mother.

Miss Carter, 36, gave birth to her first child, a 7-pound boy named James Clifford Altman, Thursday in a Washington, D.C., hospital, publicist Carla Schalman said.

The baby's middle name honors former Defense Secretary Clark M. Clifford, who is the senior law partner of the child's father, Robert A. Altman. Altman, 40, is also president of First American Corp., a multi-state bank holding company.

Miss Carter has headlined song-and-dance acts in Las Vegas and Atlantic City and serves as beauty and fashion director for Maybelline Cosmetics.

The couple, who married in 1984, have homes in Los Angeles and Washington.

BOSTON (AP) — Three grandchildren of imprisoned South African nationalist leader Nelson Mandela have come to Boston to live.

Mandela's eldest child, Zenani Mandela Dlamini, and her husband, Prince Thumbumuzi Dlamini of Swaziland, had left their children in South Africa when they came to Boston University in May to pursue marketing and law degrees, according to their publicist, Armstrong Williams.

He said the couple missed the children and recently returned to South Africa to retrieve Zaziwe, 10, Zamaswazi, 8, and Zinhle, 7. The children arrived in Boston Thursday with their parents and Mrs. Dlamini's nephew, Zondwa Sekamela, 4, and niece, Zoleka Sekamela, 7, and her husband's niece, Gomondie Dlamini, 15, who will baby-sit the youngsters.

"I hope they experience what other kids experience here," said Mrs. Dlamini. "I hope they experience another kind of life in America and go back and teach kids in South Africa about the American way of life."

She disputed a comment by Williams that there were reports the children were in danger in South Africa.

In response to questions about her parents, Mrs. Dlamini said: "My father's fine; my mum's all right also."

Her mother, Winnie Madela, has become an internationally known anti-apartheid activist since Mandela, 69, was imprisoned in 1962 for opposing white-minority rule in South Africa.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Poet Lawrence Ferlinghetti has won a city council committee's support for a proposal to honor cultural figures with street names.

Ferlinghetti, one of the original "beat" writers in the 1950s, said he was pleasantly surprised Thursday when the Public Works Committee went along with 13 of his 15 recommended street name changes, rejecting two only because the people to be honored are still alive.

Idolizing King won't end hatred

Martin Luther King Jr. would have been 59 today, if he had not fallen victim to an assassin's bullet. And it's virtually a foregone conclusion that if he had not been felled, King would have continued to lead the fight against prejudice and bigotry.

King was a fighter, an idealist and a controversial figure. But more than anything, he was a man who had an uncommon knack for pinpointing social ills and calling them to the attention of all Americans.

A black educator who was quoted in David Garrow's biography of King pointed out that "by idolizing those whom we honor, we do a disservice both to them and to ourselves. By exalting the accomplishments of Martin Luther King Jr. into a legendary tale that is annually told, we fail to recognize his humanity — his personal and public struggles — that are similar to yours and mine. By idolizing those whom we honor, we fail to realize that we could go and do likewise."

That is an appropriate sentiment to use in King's honor on the occasion of the federal holiday Monday marking his birth in 1929. Undoubtedly, it is the way King would want to be remembered — as a catalyst for social betterment and justice. He dreamed of a society in which the color of a person's skin was not a measure of the depth and breadth of his character, a society in which all individuals could compete on a footing of equal opportunity and in which hate and prejudice were not practiced. He did not live to see that society come to pass.

Neither does that society exist today. But it can exist. If each and every person would resolve to do away with hate, prejudice and injustice the golden era of which King dreamed could become a reality. But such takes dedication, courage and selfless devotion, the traits so exemplified by the civil rights leader.

King should be honored for what he did attempting to bring about that society. But he should not be idolized. As the educator quoted by Garrow noted, idolizing King could cause us to fail to realize that we, too, can and should be fighting social injustice and bigotry.

Poland's bleak future

The courageous people of Poland have entered the New Year armed with another weapon they can use to protest the oppression of their Communist dictators. They have formed a political party ideologically associated with the outlawed anti-government labor union Solidarity.

Founders of the Polish Socialist Party are not giving out any signals about what they plan to do. They have not even issued a statement of policy. They are making it clear, however, that they are not planning to sit idly by while the Warsaw dictator, General Wojciech Jaruzelski, runs the Soviet-backed government his own way.

A key instigator of the new party, historian Jozef Lipski, had this to say: "We are at a turning point in our country and our region. What is behind it all we cannot yet see. But we must be prepared for action."

That simple phrase "prepared for action" packs a powerful message, as does a statement by another founder, Jozef Pinior. "This is a party of young people," said the Wrocaw lawyer. "There is a young angry generation in Poland with a bleak future, and we want to offer a political path for this young generation. We have to secure a political influence for these young workers."

The young people of Poland have heard their government leaders promise more democracy on several occasions, but those promises have not been kept. It is good they now have a vehicle from which to launch their protests.

Warsaw's puppet of the Soviet Union can suppress Solidarity, the labor union that fought for freedom, but they cannot suppress its spirit. Poland's future will be less "bleak" because of it.

Fool for president?

Vince Johnson will not be the next president of the United States.

Johnson of Twin Falls, Idaho, recently cancelled a scheduled April 1 announcement to declare his intention to run for the highest office in the land.

Not losing the significance of the April Fools' Day, Johnson intended on using the campaign slogan, "Only a fool would vote for Vince."

His contention was that this country was founded by fools who crossed the ocean in fragile sailboats; developed by fools who coped with disease, Indians and starvation; and eventually liberated by fools who challenged the greatest military force in the 18th century.

He also claims the country has always been full of fools who flew kites in thunderstorms, invented electric lightbulbs even though not a single house in the country was wired for electricity and made airplanes and flew them.

All of this, Johnson said, came to an end when politicians decided to stop fooling around and spend our money more wisely, eventually telling us the only way to reduce our national debt was to increase spending and revise our tax laws.

Johnson carried his philosophy one step further with a proposed rewriting of the Pledge of Allegiance. His version goes:

"I pledge allegiance to the Debt of the United States of America and to the payments for which it requires, one burden, bigger than God, indisputable, with accounting fees and simplified taxes for all."

Johnson decided to bow out of the presidential sweepstakes, however, because of insurmountable odds.

"We Americans aren't the fools we used to be," he said, "and without the support of fools, I don't have a chance."

No, Vince Johnson won't be the next president, but let's hope there are a few fools left in the country who will venture forth into space, defy the predominant notions and build better mousetraps. Vince knows the value of being foolish and so should we.

Bond 'robbery' calls for new leaders

I warned readers when the foreign debt crisis first surfaced that the bankers would figure out a way to shift their losses onto the backs of American taxpayers.

Charley Reese

The deal is this. The U.S. Treasury will issue special bonds with a face amount of $10 billion, payable in 20 years. The Mexican government will buy these bonds at a huge discount, paying the U.S. only $2 billion.

Then the Mexican government will use the bonds — backed by the sweat and labor of the U.S. taxpayers — as collateral to issue its own otherwise worthless bonds and use these to buy part of its debt to commercial banks, hopefully at 50 cents on the dollar.

Now if you were a banker, which would you rather have? $20 billion worth of debt the Mexicans will never pay off in a million years or $10 billion worth of U.S. bonds?

This dirty scheme so outrages me that I am hard put not to resort to profanity. The loans to Mexico by private commercial banks were private business conducted for private profit. Ye olde free enterprise system, remember?

The American taxpayers were not part of the deal. We were not to be cut in on the profits. We were, as long as things looked rosy, to keep our noses out of private business. Now, however, the Reagan administration and the big bankers propose to stick the American taxpayers with $8 billion worth of debt.

And what shall we have purchased for $8 billion? Nothing. The corrupt and arrogant Mexican government benefits. The private for-profit commercial banks benefit. The American people don't gain one thin dime's worth of benefit. They are getting the shaft. They are being cheated. They are being robbed by their own elected officials who have sold their souls to the damned banks.

I have long felt that the American government, as a whole, is insane. The Soviets spit in our faces and the government calls it dew. Now the banks rob the American people in as plain and obvious a stick-up as anything Bonnie and Clyde ever pulled, and it's being called a humane way to handle the foreign debt crisis.

Well, it's humane to Mexico and to the banks all right, but it is outrageously inhumane to the American taxpayers, not to mention immoral, nauseating, vile, and an insult to our intelligence.

This is one more example of why Americans should not be taken in by the high-faluting free enterprise propaganda that finance capitalists pay lackeys and academicians to churn out. This scheme to transfer $8 billion worth of losses from banks to taxpayers is socialism with a vengeance.

In real free enterprise, of which banks are not a part, you take your chances and you make your profit or you eat your losses. Free enterprise, the finance capitalist way, is for the financiers to make the profits and the people to eat the losses.

I want the proponents and applauders of this scheme to explain to the American people why their taxes and credit are being used to bail out corrupt Mexicans and arrogant bankers while American family farmers are being forced out of their homes and off their land.

What's the difference between a Mexican and an American that the Reagan administration and the Federal Reserve are so all-fired keen on helping Mexicans pay their debts while they ignore American farmers?

American farmers can't pay their debts. Why is the U.S. Treasury not announcing a program to help them? Why are we not issuing bonds and using them to buy the debt of American family farmers at 50 cents on the dollar?

I'll tell you how mad I am. I am voting against every incumbent on every ballot in 1988 regardless of party label. I want a new government.

Hardliners fear U.S. 'loss' in Afghanistan

WASHINGTON — The helping hand of the Reagan administration, aimed at sparing Mikhail Gorbachev more anguish from the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, has angered congressional hardliners and a few high officials who fear the U.S. might even end up a net loser after a Soviet exit on Soviet terms.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

What agitates these officials most are continuing suggestions from Secretary of State George Shultz that U.S. aid to the anti-Soviet Mujahedin will stop long before final withdrawal of the 115,000 Soviet occupation force. "As withdrawal proceeds ... you don't have the need for that continued support and it would cease," Shultz said last Friday.

In fact, however, neither Shultz nor anyone can prove anything about the "need for support" or whatever else may happen if and when Soviet troops withdraw. Instead of rosy scenarios, his critics insist that the U.S. make no commitments on aid until the Soviets actually pull out, instead of just talking about it. Ending U.S. aid would remove the one prod that has driven Gorbachev to decide his country can no longer hack it in Afghanistan.

The original U.S. commitment to cut its aid when Soviet withdrawal begins was made two years ago when the Mujahedin was far more vulnerable than today. But there is nothing automatic about the cutoff. It is conditioned on U.S. acceptance of a "satisfactory" agreement for a fair and just political settlement guaranteeing self-determination — thus ending forcible communist control. That gives the U.S. leverage that should be used.

The unhappiness of President Reagan himself with the Soviet pullout agreement made two years ago by administration diplomats is manifest. Just before his summit with Gorbachev, Reagan told the four television networks in an interview that he would do nothing to "facilitate" Soviet withdrawal. Asked whether he would agree "not to supply" the Mujahedin "if the Soviets committed to get out of Afghanistan," Reagan's reply was unambiguous: "I don't think we could do anything of that kind."

"The elegant dandies of diplomacy seem to have put the old cowboy in his place once again," said Sen. Gordon Humphrey, a Republican gadfly on Afghanistan whose unremitting counsel has sometimes been highly effective even within the State Department. Humphrey told us that he found it hard to stomach the contradiction between Reagan's words and what the U.S. appears actually committed to do.

The prospect of a U.S. aid cutoff before the installation of a new, non-communist government in Kabul is redolent of what happened to the U.S. in the Vietnam nightmare. That is a Vietnam-Afghanistan analogy quite different from the usual mirror-image comparison of the Soviet predicament in Afghanistan and the U.S. failure in Vietnam.

The U.S. accepted apparently ironclad guarantees from Soviet-backed North Vietnam in agreeing to the Paris Accords. The Accords were supposed to end the Vietnam War while protecting Saigon's independence from North Vietnam. Within months Hanoi, backed by the Soviets, broke every one of the Paris Accords.

As far-fetched as that analogy may seem, administration critics of a premature U.S. agreement to cut off aid to the Afghanistan freedom-fighters see deadly parallels: the geographic proximity of ready communist power in both Vietnam and Afghanistan; the far-away distance of the U.S.; the political difficulty for the U.S. to start up a major military aid operation once it has been stopped, vividly demonstrated with the Contras in Nicaragua; and, perhaps most important, the lack of proof that Soviet promises in Afghanistan are more credible than Hanoi's promises at Paris.

But Reagan's advisers seem befuddled. At the senior White House staff meeting last Friday, John Negroponti, the deputy national security aide, claimed that if Soviet forces withdrew from Afghanistan within six months, Kabul's puppet communist regime could not possibly survive. But if the Soviet armies remained for another year or 18 months, he said, the communists might be able to hang on to power after Soviet troops leave.

Negroponti was a major but reluctant U.S. player in the Paris Accords ending the Vietnam War. He was conspicuously absent at their signing. If his healthily skeptical view now about Afghanistan is correct, other administration officials tell us privately, why in the world is Shultz even talking about the U.S. having to end all aid to the Mujahedin? The far better U.S. course, these officials say, would be an immediate escalation of military aid. That should add new pressures on the Soviets and give Gorbachev new reasons for a quick withdrawal.

Instead, the dominant theme in administration policy today seems to be eagerness to get Gorbachev off the hook, despite those nightmare memories of Vietnam and despite the certainty that once U.S. aid ends, no miracle will reinstate it no matter what the Soviets do.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

When you're acting, experience never hurts!

BURBANK, Calif. — It doesn't matter how I got here, but here I am about to make my television dramatic debut on CBS's "Designing Women," which will air Monday night, Jan. 18, at 9:30.

Grizzard

The comedy is written by Arkansas native Linda Bloodworth-Thomason and is directed by David Trainer.

It stars Delta Burke, Dixie Carter, Annie Potts and Jean Smart as four women who run an interior decorating business in Atlanta. Meschach Taylor is their gofer. The show is in its second season after a stormy beginning in which CBS bounced it hither and yon and nearly dropped it.

An outcry by its fans saved it, however, and it has become a critical success, featuring as one critic put it: "A sense of humor with a wallop of mint julep."

Despite the fact that most Southerners have never tasted a mint julep, what I like most about the show is its authentic Southernness.

The accents are correct (nobody says "Shut yo' mouth," or uses "you all" in the singular) and the set has indoor plumbing.

I arrived at Burbank Studios at 9 Monday morning and met director Trainer.

"How much acting experience have you had?" he asked me.

"A great deal," I said. "I played a tree in the second grade, I was Joseph in a live nativity scene at church when I was 12 and I've been married three times."

He made a funny face, as if he had just been stricken with gas.

I learned a great deal about television acting Monday. Mainly, I learned I wouldn't want to do this for a living.

First, everybody reads his or her part out of the script-book until his or her head is spinning.

Then, you run through each scene for hours upon hours. The next day, the script changes completely, so nothing you did Monday matters anymore.

Tuesday, I learned even more. For example:

- You never walk until you have begun your lines.
- You keep one eye on the person to whom you are speaking and the other on the camera at all times. That is why most television actors and actresses are cross-eyed.
- You make certain you go to the bathroom before the scene begins.

Wednesday, I began to feel a little more comfortable. I had memorized most of my lines by then. I had learned to sit up straight and not to hang my head down so the camera could get more than a shot of my hair.

What made me feel best, however, was the realization that all this would be over in just 24 hours.

I play Clayton Sugarbaker, half brother to Dixie Carter's Julie Sugarbaker and Delta Burke's Suzanne Sugarbaker.

I've just been released from a mental hospital and I have landed back in Atlanta with my sisters, who aren't certain what to do with me now that I have decided to become the first standup comic majoring in mental hospital humor.

It is Thursday now. Tonight we do it for real in front of a live studio audience.

"Make sure your fly's zipped and you'll do fine," one of the stagehands told me.

Renovator thinks he's found blocks from first Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — Two limestone blocks beneath the floor of the Municipal Building are thought to be the only remnants of the first Austin-based Capitol of Texas.

The blocks, possibly carved by stonemasons within three years of the fall of the Alamo in 1836, were discovered recently by John Timmons, whose business of renovating buildings has prompted him to study several local historical sites.

Timmons thinks the squared stones were part of the foundation of a wooden building erected in 1839, soon after Austin — then the village of Waterloo — was selected to be the state's capital city.

"Right now, this is just a theory," he said.

"By 1989, the year of Austin's Sesquicentennial, I want to remove the stones and examine them for any kind of marking that can link them to 1839," he said. "It's possible someone carved a date on the stones or left some other indication that they came from that time."

The one-story wooden building, which was divided into two rooms that served as chambers for the House of Representatives and Senate, was the initial Republic of Texas Capitol and later the first state Capitol when Texas joined the Union in 1845.

The building was used by legislators until 1853, when a new building was erected at the site of the present Capitol.

After the legislative halls were moved to the current building on Congress Avenue, the 1839 structure at Eighth and Colorado was used by area farmers, who rented stalls to sell produce and other farm products. During the Civil War it was occupied by military officials of the Confederacy.

In 1870, the old building was demolished, and the Legislature deeded the property to the city of Austin with the stipulation that the city build a city hall and marketplace.

That building stood until 1907, when the City Council authorized construction of the present Municipal Building.

Simulator will take children on 'spaceflight'

HOUSTON (AP) — A prototype spaceflight simulator for schoolchildren, built in connection with the Challenger Center, will be constructed at the Houston Museum of Natural Science.

"This museum is the beginning of a grand scheme," said June Scobee, whose husband, Dick, was a member of the Challenger crew. "I think the crew would be proud of what's grown out of a terrible tragedy," she said Thursday.

The project, paid for with a $150,000 private grant, will serve as a model for dozens of similar projects at science museums throughout the country. Construction is to begin immediately.

It will work in tandem with the Challenger Center Space-Life Station, to be built in Washington, and similar "mission sites," training and research centers for teachers.

The program is meant to be a memorial to the seven astronauts killed two years ago when the space shuttle Challenger exploded shortly after takeoff.

Mrs. Scobee is chairman of the board of The Challenger Center. Also present at ceremonies Thursday were Jane Smith and Cheryl McNair, whose astronaut husbands perished aboard Challenger.

The simulator will carry the name "2061 Simulator" and give children the impression they are on a mission in that year.

The year is significant, according to Kerry Joels, director of educational facilities for Challenger Center, because it marks the 100th anniversary of spaceflight, the 75th anniversary of the Challenger, and the next visit to our solar system of Halley's Comet.

For about 90 minutes, about 30 children and their instructors in the simulator will be facing problems and performing experiments astronauts likely would encounter aboard a space station.

"We know that under the stress of the moment, these teachers and students will forget this is a museum and they will be in space," Joels said. "These students are working toward a specific goal."

"For children, this is not just a case of having a good time, but they study before they get here and once here, make them think," said Frank Hughes, flight training chief at Johnson Space Center. "We want to make it as much as astronaut training as we can so it will leave a lasting impression on children."

The first Houston simulator is scheduled to be open for students in May. Initially, it is intended for children in the fourth through sixth grades.

The Houston affiliate center, and others built from it, each could handle about 10,000 children a year, Joels said.

"If we have to run all day and all night, we'll do so," Carolyn Sumners, the museum's director of astronomy and physics, said.

ABC News doesn't have right to Railey messages

DALLAS (AP) — Taped telephone messages by former Methodist minister Walker Railey on the night his wife was attacked do not fall under public information statutes and do not have to be released to ABC News, a judge ruled.

The network had sought the tapes for a story on the April 1987 near-fatal choking of his wife, Margaret "Peggy" Railey, who remains comatose.

State District Judge Frank Andrews ruled Thursday that the Dallas County district attorney's office does not have to provide ABC with a copy of the taped telephone messages on the night Mrs. Railey, 39, was attacked and left unconscious in the garage of the Railey home.

ABC plans a segment on the Railey case on its "20/20" program, tentatively set for Feb. 5.

Andrews ruled the tapes, from Railey's answering machine at his home, are not considered public information, but are evidence in the ongoing criminal investigation.

Limited quantities on some items; selections vary by store. Interim markdowns may have been taken.

Founder of several Panhandle towns dies at 93

STINETT (AP) — L.A. "Pete" Borger, who along with his brother "Ace" founded several towns in Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle, including the one that bears the family name, has died. He was 93.

Borger managed to survive a bounty on his head in the wilder days of the towns that bears his family name.

Borger, a native of Sarcoxie, Mo., moved to Hutchinson County in 1925.

In 1926, he and his brother started lot sales for the city of Borger. In 1927, they started the cities of Stinnett and Gruver.

Borger, who died Wednesday, told the Amarillo Globe-News in 1984 that he had heard there was a bounty on his head in the early days of the Borger township.

In those days, he said, Borger was known as much for its crime as for its booming oil business.

His brother, "Ace," founder of the Borger township, was shot and killed by a Hutchinson County treasurer in 1934.

The Borger brothers began developing towns in Oklahoma, establishing Bristow, Slick, Picher and Cromwell. They moved to the Texas Panhandle in early 1926.

"Our sole purpose was to make a town possible," Borger was quoted as saying, "not just promote it."

The secret, he said, was to be ahead of the crowd.

That was not always easy in the Panhandle's oil boom days as the area was flooded with people rushing to make their fortunes. Many were criminals or undesirables, hundreds of which found their way to Borger during the 1920s.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texas tops twister death list

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas topped the list in tornado deaths in 1987, accounting for more than half of the nation's total from a single storm that obliterated the small community of Saragosa.

Tornado deaths jumped to 59 in the United States last year, almost quadruple the toll of 1986, but still below the long-term average of 90 fatalities, the National Weather Service reported Thursday.

Texas suffered the most from tornadoes last year with 42 fatalities.

Boosting that total were 30 deaths in the storm that struck Saragosa in West Texas on May 22. Many of those victims were attending a preschool graduation ceremony at the community center.

UT school gets $20 million

DALLAS (AP) — A donation by billionaire H. Ross Perot's foundation to the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School will be used to train medical scientists and aid biomedical research, officials said.

The Perot Foundation gift will provide $20 million over the next 10 years, officials said Thursday.

"I am making this gift to enable Southwestern to achieve greatness in broader areas of medical research and enable it to train the next generation of medical scientists," Perot said.

The gift will be used with other public and private funds to support the school in specific areas: Nobel laureates Michael Brown's and Joseph Goldstein's research on cholesterol metabolism and genetics; genetic approaches to other medical problems; training for outstanding post-doctoral researchers; and training for outstanding post-doctoral and pre-doctoral researchers.

Off-duty officer killed

DALLAS (AP) — An off-duty officer was shot to death in a gun battle with two men suspected of burglarizing an apartment in the complex where the officer lived, Dallas police say.

Police Cpl. James Joe, 35, of the department's identification, was shot once in the chest and pronounced dead at Presbyterian Hospital Thursday night, police said.

Officers said one of the burglary suspects sped away in a car, but a second man was found minutes later in the area of the apartment complex after being spotted from a police helicopter. He had been shot in the right arm and left leg.

Weekend events honor King's legacy

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Celebration of the birth of civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., 59 years ago today, is a reminder that "the brighter days" which King envisioned from the mountain top "are still ahead," said Midland minister the Rev. Hadley R. Edwards.

King was born Jan. 15, 1929, in Atlanta, Ga. Monday is a national holiday honoring King's birthday.

In Midland, a Jubilee and King Celebration will be held at 3 p.m. Sunday in Hollowell United Methodist Church, 400 S. Marshall St., where Edwards is pastor. Sponsoring the program are the Midland Branch of the NAACP — National Association for the Advancement of Colored People — and the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc.

The event also will include restatement of the three Rs:

— Remembering the suffering of black slaves.

— Recounting the experience of segregation.

— Reshaping strategies for equality and justice.

In addition to the Sunday event, the Negro Business and Professional Women's Club will sponsor a Candlelight Vigil in honor of King at 6 p.m. today in Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Park near Scharbauer Drive and Butternut Lane. Speaker will be the Rev. Clara Reed, associate minister of Hollowell United Methodist Church.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

King was a leader for all people, who could count themselves among the downtrodden in life, Edwards said.

"I think that he opened the door," said Edwards, who was 10 years old when King was assassinated on April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn. U.S. President Lyndon B. Johnson declared a national day of mourning.

King's life "proved that the door was open for everybody's rights," Edwards said.

"He showed that human rights and civil rights weren't so farfetched — that they can be reached within our lifetime, within our generation. We didn't have to wait into the Bye and Bye."

King's dream was for the equality that black people "sang about, preached about, and dreamed about," Edwards said.

And those dreams come about "as a result of our reshaping our goals and transforming our lives."

Edwards recalled King's death in 1968. King was 39.

"The impact was great in my life," Edwards said. "I have been able to feel what he went through."

Edwards said that it is important that "Dr. King's dream be kept alive, because it is the closest thing that oppressed people have to Christian freedom."

King, a Baptist minister, began civil rights crusades in 1955, led boycotts of buses in Montgomery, Ala, to protest racial discrimination against black passengers and helped establish the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. In 1957, he became the SCLC's first president.

King's work in the 1950s and 1960s made great strides in progressing toward equality by way of nonviolent protests and resistance and marches, such as the 1965 Selma-to-Montgomery, Ala., march to guarantee voting rights for blacks.

The United States Congress enacted the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

In 1963, King said in his march from the Washington Monument to the Lincoln Monument in Washington, D.C., "I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal.'"

King based his program of nonviolence to achieve equality on the teachings of Christianity, social ideas of Henry David Thoreau of "Civil Disobedience" note and on the methods of Mahatma Gandhi, who used non-violence to free India of British control.

Grand Prairie students will make up snow day on holiday honoring King

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — Students in this Dallas suburb will have to attend classes on Martin Luther King Jr. Day despite protests from a local NAACP official, the school board ruled.

The board Thursday night affirmed an earlier decision after adjourning the meeting for about 10 minutes after Lee Alcorn, president of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, disrupted the meeting with repeated outbursts.

Officials had said earlier that in February or March they would make up the time students missed from school during last week's ice storm. But they changed their minds, making Monday a regular school day. Although King's birthday is today, Monday is being observed nationally as a holiday honoring King's birthday.

"That is a blatant racist decision on the part of the school board," Alcorn said. "There is no valid reason or urgency for school to be scheduled on Monday."

The outbursts began when Alcorn left the podium and board member Terry Anderson responded to his comments.

"I think from time to time Mr. Alcorn likes to resort to showmanship to get his point across," Anderson said.

In Texas, school districts are required by state law to insert two bad-weather days in their schedules. Grand Prairie originally scheduled two Saturdays, Feb. 20 and March 5, as the makeup days.

Alcorn said he would not have raised the issue if school officials initially had scheduled Monday as a bad-weather day rather than the two bad-weather days listed on the 1987-88 calendar.

Bonham Elementary School student Erika Bucy poses with the new 10-speed bicycle she received for collecting $2,442 in the Multiple Sclerosis Society's annual Read-a-thon. This is the second year in a row that the second-grader took home first place honors. She also won a trip for two to Disneyworld in Orlando, Fla., for her efforts.

Local girl turns words into winnings

Call it kismet that Bonham Elementary School second-grader Erika Bucy wore a Mickey Mouse necklace Thursday when she claimed her grand prize in the annual Multiple Sclerosis Read-a-thon — a 10-speed bicycle and a trip to Disneyworld.

Erika won the overall title for the second year in a row after she read 162 books and collected a total of $2,442 in pledge money from at least 30 contributors. In addition, her school earned the top money honors for the fourth consecutive year, said Bonham Principal Carl Pirkle.

"I was going to read 200 books, but one man said he wouldn't pay me if I read more than 150," the second-grader said.

Erika presently reads at the fourth-grade level and frequently meets her classmates after school to practice her skills.

"When I was about one year old, my mommy started reading to me. And when I was about two or three I started reading books by myself," she explained. "Actually, I read sixth grade words, but I'm in a fourth grade reading group that meets at 3 o'clock."

The youth collected about $1,500 in Read-a-thon pledges last year as a first grade student.

Erika's mother, Vicky Bucy, said her daughter's interest in reading has helped to "increase her vocabulary and make her aware of lots of words."

"She reads everything and she has an interest in all sorts of things like dance and music," Mrs. Bucy said.

Erika said she plans to share her winnings with her family and is especially looking forward to visiting dinosaur exhibit at Disney's Epcot Center.

Because Erika already owns a bicycle, she said she will let her mother borrow the new 10-speed until she grows taller and is able to reach the peddles.

"Then we can ride together," Erika said.

Trial of motel clerk for murder continues

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Testimony in the trial of a 24-year-old motel clerk accused of gunning down another man after an argument was scheduled to continue today in Judge Pat Baskin's 142nd State District Court.

Todd Herbert Stephens is on trial for killing Bernard Balero Jr., 25, of Midland, who was found dead near a pool area at the Sandpiper Motor Inn on Wall Street on Sept. 6, 1987.

According to testimony before the seven-woman, five-man jury, police were dispatched to the motel after several shots were fired. When the first officer arrived shortly after 4 a.m., the defendant walked out of the motel and said "I just killed a man."

Officer Rickey Benton then followed the defendant to an office area, where he turned over a five-shot, .38-caliber revolver used in the slaying, Benton said.

Dr. David Schneidmann, a local pathologist who peformed the autopsy, told District Attorney Al Schorre that Balero was shot three times — in the back, side, and arm. Schneidmann agreed with Schorre that it was possible Balero could have been shot in the back while he was lying on the ground.

But, the pathologist also agreed with defense attorney Jeff Blackburn of Amarillo, who suggested that the victim could have been in another position when he was shot in the back.

During cross-examination by Blackburn, Schneidmann told jurors that Balero had a blood alcohol content of .22 percent, more than twice the level considered intoxication under state law.

Benton testified that the defendant was "excited and very talkative" at the scene, but did not try to escape, and cooperated with investigators.

Under cross-examination by Blackburn, Det. Sgt. John Ingram told the jury that witnesses had told him Balero instigated several confrontations with Stephens, and at one point Stephens tried to reason with the victim. Then, when the defendant followed him into the pool area, the victim reached for what appeared to be a weapon. Stephens then shot him, Ingram said the witnesses told him.

The "weapon" turned out to be a rolled-up sock, according to testimony.

But Ingram told Schorre that all of the witnesses were friends of the defendant, and that none of the witnesses were friendly with the victim.

Bishop College facing critical deadline

By EVAN RAMSTAD

DALLAS (AP) — Bishop College has been on the brink of financial collapse many times before.

"Ever since I arrived here, I've been hearing Bishop was going to close and it hasn't happened yet," says Robert Paul, a 39-year-old senior majoring in religion.

But it may now.

The 106-year-old predominantly black institution, which has educated hundreds of students who had no chance for a college education elsewhere, faces a critical financial deadline today, the last day of its fall 1987 term.

Bishop has been fighting the U.S. Department of Education for $400,000 in financial aid it expected but was denied last month. A federal rule requires that a school be certified to receive aid during the term for which the funds are to be applied.

Bishop's attorneys have said the school may be forced to close if it doesn't get the money, but trustees say the outcome of the financial-aid squabble won't be the sole factor that determines the school's future.

Bishop attorney Michael Goldstein met with Department of Education officials Thursday, and planned to meet with them again today. The lawyer says he presented agency representatives with fund-raising plans.

Bishop interim President Levi Watkins talked Thursday with officials of several national foundations about making donations.

"I don't have a commitment, but I am very encouraged," Watkins said.

The trustees decided Tuesday to keep the school open for the spring semester, which begins Jan. 25, but chairman Rev. William Shaw said there are still questions over where the school's money will come.

"Every dollar now is very important," Shaw said.

Trustees have launched a $1 million fund-raising drive and an anonymous Dallas resident placed $300,000 in escrow to be turned over to the school if Bishop raises an equal amount by Tuesday.

Bishop is now millions of dollars in debt, reorganizing in Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code, and has not met its December or January payrolls. But administrators, faculty and students, some of whom wear "I support Bishop" sportswear, have an intense spirit of survival.

"We are like a family," said Rochelle Hart of El Paso, a 22-year-old junior majoring in elementary education. "The teachers and instructors are the best."

"My candid opinion is that this school will make it," Watkins said. "We'll make it on a shoestring, but we'll do it."

The school's financial problems can be traced back at least 20 years, a short time after backers brought the school from Marshall to a cotton field south of Dallas in 1961, Watkins said.

The problems grew serious in 1979, when a scandal resulted in the conviction of a vice president for misappropriation of funds, and acute in 1986, when the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools cited Bishop's financial mess as reason not to renew its academic accreditation.

The action marked the first time since the 1940s that the 11,000-member accrediting organization had removed a school from its membership.

Without accreditation, Bishop lost its qualification for federal financial aid, support from the United Negro College Fund and nearly 600 students. The school's already sullied reputation took its worst beating.

"Everybody is watching Bishop," says Harriet Schimel, vice president of the United Negro College Fund. "Any perception of a problem at a historically black school brings people's antennas up that these schools are not dedicated to the excellence that predominantly white schools are. And that's not true."

Watkins ended Bishop's deficit spending when he arrived in the fall of 1986 and has slashed the budget by more than $5 million to $3.1 million for the 1987-88 school year.

Bishop turned away about 100 students because it could only afford a student body of 300 this year, down from more than 900 in fall 1986, Watkins said. Many students transferred. The size of the faculty is down from 40 to 28. Library acquisitions have all but ceased.

Sessions says he's never smoked dope

WACO (AP) — FBI director William Sessions says he's never smoked marijuana, and thinks anyone seeking political office should be asked the same question.

"You know what the law requires," Sessions said. "We choose to govern ourselves by law and it's important we follow the laws and enforce the laws."

The former federal jurist from San Antonio was here Thursday to address the annual banquet of the Greater Waco Chamber of Commerce.

When asked at a news conference if he ever smoked marijuana, Sessions, who took the FBI job in 1987, said he never had, but he said it was valid question.

"All of us have violated the law at one time or another in one or more ways — you and I — and we all know we've done it," he said. "When you systematically pursue a course, knowing that you're violating the law, it then becomes willful...whether it's relevant, I think the American public will have to decide that for itself."

The FBI's war against drugs was the main thrust of Sessions' message Thursday.

National attitudes, which currently have a widespread acceptance of illegal drug usage, must change, he said.

Physicists hope state's pullout from SSC doesn't hurt effort

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Two physicists seeking to boost nationwide support for a proposed atom-smasher say they hope New York's withdrawal from consideration for the federal project won't harm the national effort.

"All I can say is I'm very disappointed, and I hope this doesn't hurt the national effort to get the SSC built," said Marvin Goldberg of Syracuse University, who had attended a meeting earlier Thursday to lay the foundation for broad national backing for the basic research program.

The superconducting super collider is designed to accelerate and smash subatomic particles at great speeds to help learn about the origins of matter.

Late Thursday afternoon, New York Gov. Mario Cuomo asked federal Department of Energy officials to withdraw a site near Rochester that was among eight named as recommended finalists by a national scientific advisory panel. He did ask that a second, previously rejected New York site near the Canadian border be reinstated for consideration, something considered unlikely. Cuomo acted in the wake of considerable opposition from area residents and members of the state's congressional delegation, including Sens. Alfonse D'Amato and Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

"I hope we can still maintain the kind of support from the Northeast that I think is necessary," said Goldberg. "It's the national picture we have to concentrate on."

With New York's withdrawal, seven states remain on the advisory list, pending the DOE's announcement next week. They include Arizona, Illinois, Texas, Michigan, North Carolina, Colorado and Tennessee.

But representatives from Wyoming, California and Washington, which didn't make the advisory final cut, also attended Thursday's promotional meeting as an expression of their states' view of the project's importance.

They said they "agreed to support the SSC as a national priority" and pledged to keep working together to accomplish it.

The superconducting super collider is expected to require some 4,500 construction jobs and create 3,000 permanent scientific and technical positions, a $270 million annual budget and little pollution.

"This accelerator facility is more than just another unusually large and expensive facility," said Peter Carruthers, chairman of the Arizona SSC technical committee.

He called it "a symbol — a symbol that the United States is committed to being first in one of the most fundamental fields of science, and one in which we are used to be being first."

Later, reached at his Tucson home, Carruthers first learned of Cuomo's request but said he was not surprised, given the extent of in-state opposition. "It's too bad not to have a powerful regional bloc" from the East Coast still in the running, he added.

At the meeting, Dale Heydlauff of Washington state said he had attended because "our governor felt very strongly that we need to demonstrate to the states that are left in the competition as well as those members of the Congress and members of the scientific community that our support for the SSC transcends our own parochial interest."

Those attending issued a statement with approval from their states noting construction of the accelerator is "absolutely necessary for the United States to maintain and expand its world leadership in science and technology."

They said without basic scientific research and development, "this nation will fall behind and jobs will be lost to overseas competition."

The statement noted that basic scientific research through similar projects had led to communications, computer and medical technology advances, and that it also affects the gross national product.

In addition, "the SSC is the next technological step in taking control of our own destiny, maintaining and increasing our competitiveness and insuring future jobs and the quality of life for our children," the statement said.

Carruthers noted that those in attendance had "united for the purpose of seeing that this project become a reality in the United States."

He said at least three follow-up meetings are be planned in the next three months, the first likely in February in conjunction with the National Governors' Conference in Washington.

John Hanieski, executive director of Michigan's SSC Commission, said the superconducting super collider "is the mechanism to get knowledge fundamentally of how things work at the subatomic level" that in turn will provide the undergirding the nation's economic development and progress for the next century.

And Bil Tucker, chairman of Wyoming's SSC Task Force, said his state will remain strongly committed to the SSC regardless of its placement because it will enhance pride of America, quality of public and higher education, technology development, manufacturing capability and productivity.

Group to help black troopers fight bias

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas State Troopers Association has offered to help black troopers at the Department of Public Safety investigate discrimination claims, says a lawyer for the group.

Attorney Lucius Bunton, son of Midland federal judge Lucius D. Bunton, said Wednesday that the 1,200-member group, which includes some black troopers, has not yet been asked to investigate the discrimination claims. He said the association has no authority to change DPS procedures or decisions but can give the troopers legal help.

"The association stands by legitimate concerns of its members," Bunton said.

The Austin chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Rev. Melvin Easiley of Denton County charged Tuesday that the DPS wrongfully denies blacks promotions to supervisory positions and has kept blacks out of the elite Texas Rangers.

Easiley is an advocate of the rights of black DPS officers.

Gary Bledsoe, president of the Austin NAACP, asked the department to act on the allegations within 10 days. He threatened to sue if the agency fails to "negotiate in good faith" on the issue.

Bledsoe said he acted on behalf of about 30 black troopers who claimed they had been passed over for promotions and subjected to various other discriminatory acts.

The NAACP also asked that the DPS improve its hiring and personnel practices for blacks throughout the agency.

DPS records show blacks make up 5.6 percent of the department's 2,583 law enforcement officers. Fourteen percent of the 2,340 DPS employees in non-law enforcement positions are black.

The NAACP has asked that the department give preference to black job applicants until 15 percent of positions are filled by blacks.

Also Wednesday, Bledsoe said 10 black janitors at the DPS are claiming that they were discriminated against when they were dropped from full-time to part-time employees.

Austin attorney Lydia Gardner, who is representing the group, said a lawsuit against the DPS is probable because negotiations with the department have not been successful.

John West, DPS general counsel, disagreed with the black employees' claims. He said the case is closed.

The state Human Rights Commission investigated the janitors' allegations but found no evidence of discrimination, West said. The all-black night crew's work week was reduced as a result of statewide budget reductions, he said.

BISHOP

The school's supporters, citing the school's history and its role as Dallas' only historically black college, present a compelling case why Bishop deserves to survive.

"Bishop over the years took a lot of high-risk students," said Dr. John Mangram, chair of the school's four-person religion department, its largest. "I know of at least one student who came here who didn't even know his ABCs. We have, at times, probably done a job that is beneath the dignity of other schools."

While the United Negro College Fund's Ms. Schimel warns against comparing Bishop's problems to other historically black colleges, she said that Bishop, like other historically black schools, has always educated a larger proportion of disadvantaged students than traditionally white schools.

"They're (students) financially struggling and they're struggling educationally," Ms. Schimel said, adding the success rate of black students at historically black schools is much greater than at predominantly white schools.

In any given recent year, she said, approximately 20 percent of the blacks enrolled as first-year college students attend predominantly black schools. But approximately 40 percent of the blacks in any recent year who graduate from a college are leaving a historically black school.

"Bishop might be the case that arouses a reaction where people rise up and say 'Hey, what's happening to our black colleges?' but we hope not," Watkins said.

Police union fights city hall with billboards

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The first of 30 Houston Police Patrolmen's Union billboards warning that citizens' lives and property are in danger went up Thursday in northeast Houston to protest the transfer of 65 officers from the northeast substation, low police morale and pay and hiring freezes.

Union President Tommy Britt said Mayor Kathy Whitmire has been unresponsive on issues of officer morale, pay and attrition, and the billboards are also to protest the disbanding, by April, of the police school task force and the cantina squad.

The first billboard, which went up on the Eastex Freeway, gives a telephone listing for the mayor's office and advises citizens to phone. The other signs will also be posted on inbound freeways, Britt said.

He said morale is so low that some officers have left HPD for lower-paying jobs. About 2,000 officers have been hired since Whitmire took office, he said, but 850 to 900 have left.

"The billboards," Britt said, "are a cry for help from the community."

"We think it's terribly ironic that the ones that have rewarded Mayor Whitmire with her resounding victory are going to be hurt the most," said Britt, referring to support the mayor has received from northeast area residents. "We have gotten nothing from the mayor except a weak handshake and a half smile."

The 25 to 30 billboard ads will be in place by Jan. 28 at a cost of $15,000 to the union, Britt said.

Mayor's spokesman Paul Mabry said the signs are a war of rhetoric that will hinder economic development and efforts to attract new business to the city, and the posting of the mayor's office phone number amounts to harassment.

Andrews man jailed on drug charges

From Staff Reports

MARFA — A 29-year-old Andrews man is in federal custody after he was arrested Wednesday near Van Horn with a load of marijuana, authorities said.

Fidel Bejarano-Contreras was arrested by agents of the Van Horn U.S. Border Patrol station after 110 pounds of marijuana with an estimated street value of $88,000 was found in the 1978 Oldsmobile he was driving on Farm to Market 2017, Lewis Reynolds, spokesman for the Marfa sector Border Patrol said.

Bejarano-Contreras was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate J.M. Preston in Pecos on charges of possession of marijuana with intent to deliver. He is being held in Reeves County Jail in lieu of $150,000 bond, Reynolds said.

During a six-day period, from Jan. 8 through Jan. 13, Marfa sector Border Patrol agents have seized more than 315 pounds of marijuana with an estimated street value of $251,200, Reynolds said.

Lubbock housing project to be demolished

LUBBOCK (AP) — This city's oldest public housing project will be demolished and its tenants relocated within seven to eight months to make way for an interstate highway, housing officials said.

Lubbock Housing Authority officials Thursday approved an application to the Department of Housing and Urban Development for a demolition and relocation permit for the 130-unit Hub Homes project, built in 1940.

The project's tenants will be given the choice of relocating to other city housing projects or receiving a voucher to rent from a private landlord, said D.C. Fair, executive director of the housing authority, Thursday.

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation will be responsible for relocating tenants of units directly in the right of way for an extension of Interstate 27.

DEAR ABBY

Woman's ex welcome to visit her parents' home

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please help me. I divorced "Marvin" with hard feelings and I do not wish ever to see him again. I recently married a wonderful man who my parents agree is a "real nice guy." However, Marvin still visits my parents, who welcome him with open arms.

I can't understand this, as they know how lousy he treated me. When my husband and I are at my parents' home, Marvin drops in knowing perfectly well we are there because our car is out in front.

I finally told my parents it wasn't my place to tell them who they could have in their home, but if I had to worry about bumping into Marvin, I just wouldn't visit them anymore.

My parents just said they couldn't help it if he dropped in. Well, I think they could help it if they wanted to. Marvin knows I am very uncomfortable, but he insists on coming in when I'm there.

Is there a solution? — TORN

DEAR TORN: Yes. You could ask your parents respectfully — but firmly — to instruct Marvin not to drop in when he sees your car out in front.

If, as you say, your parents know how "lousy" he treated you, yet they welcome him with open arms, you have the right to ask them why. And I suggest you do.

DEAR ABBY: I have read in your column so many times about agencies that help adopted children "find" their biological parents, but since I am not adopted, I never gave the subject much thought, until now.

I would like to know my grandfather. My situation may be a little different because I already know who he is and where he is. I have his city, address and phone number.

What I actually need is someone to make the initial contact. You see, he doesn't even know I exist, and just surprising him would be kind of tacky.

I don't know if his family knows anything about me or not, so I'd hate to just ring his doorbell and say, "Hi, I'm your grandson." By the way, I am a grown man, and I don't "need" anything. — KEEP ME ANONYMOUS

DEAR ANONYMOUS: You are wise to have decided not to just "ring his doorbell." Break the ice by writing to him. Tell him who you are and express a desire to meet him. Then leave the rest to him.

DEAR ABBY: I am writing this letter to thank you and your readers from the bottom of my heart.

Today, USS Ranger mail call was saturated with cards, letters and baked goodies from virtually every state in the union, and I must admit that this salty old master chief petty officer with more than 30 years of service had a fairly large lump in his throat.

Receiving mail from home while at sea is especially warming, but to have folks from all over this great land wish these men a "Merry Christmas and Godspeed" is overwhelming.

Thank you, Dear Abby, and thanks to each and every one of your readers for their incredible response to Operation Dear Abby III and America Remembers. — A.V.C.M., BILL BRICKEN, USS RANGER, FPO SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: It was with great amusement that I read the letter from the father suggesting each of his daughter's bridesmaids wear one of their own dresses at her wedding instead of each girl having to buy a new gown.

My father feels the same way about shoes. According to him, I have so many I should never buy another pair in my life. (I'm only 33 years old), and, furthermore, I don't need all those different colors. As long as I have a brown pair and a black pair, I should be happy.

All I can say is, "Thank goodness for mothers." — R.E. IN TORONTO

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage and handling included).

FAMILY MATTERS

Honest communication necessary

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: My husband and I both work. We have prestigious, well-paying professional positions. I have found myself feeling resentful toward the way he conducts himself when we are at home. We both work long hours and yet he expects to come home and do nothing. I am expected to prepare dinner while he "relaxes" and reads the paper, mail, etc. My job is every bit as demanding as his job and I need to be able to relax too.

We don't have any children, but I am approaching the age where my biological clock is running out. While I really want children, the thought of having to do everything for the child and my husband too is terrifying. Why should he be able to do nothing just because he is a male? Does that seem fair to you? FUMING

DEAR FUMING: No, it isn't fair. Have you told him how you feel? Sometimes we expect others to know how we feel, even though we haven't told them.

Tell him how you feel, and soon. I encourage you to tell him when and where you both have time for a long discussion, which is vital to a successful outcome. ("Success" may only mean that you agree to disagree, but you do agree on that.)

DEAR FAMILY: My wife never seems interested in me anymore. She is always too tired or too busy for anything, especially sex. I don't know what is wrong. Every time I bring the subject up, she says everything is fine. She says that she needs time to be alone and think about things.

I let her go and stay at her parents' lake house most of the summer, but all that did was let her tell her parents how bad of a husband I am. I am prepared to do anything to keep our marriage together, but it takes two to tango. Do yo have any suggestions? FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Relationships that are in turmoil often go too long before something is done. Couples often wait too long to discuss their problems, and just go through the motions of being married. Sometimes secret feelings make it difficult for one spouse to discuss issues with the other.

Honest communications are vital to a relationship. I encourage both of you to seek marriage counseling before it is too late.

DEAR FAMILY: I really enjoyed your Christmas column. You should write more columns like that. I get tired of being told how wasteful and stupid we all were during the boom. Maybe some people were, but most were not. I appreciate your standing up for us. GRATEFUL

DEAR GRATEFUL: Thank you for your kind words. I think we all have learned a lot about ourselves, our families, our colleagues and our God as a result of the boom and the bust.

DEAR FAMILY: Why do people continue to smoke when it is clearly bad for them and those around them? I have a particularly dear friend who smokes continously and laughs at all our attempts to get her to stop. She says she likes to smoke and that it's her business. I just wish that I could get her to stop. Do you have any ideas? CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED: I used to think smoking was just a matter of choice, but I am now convinced it is an addiction. And like any other addiction, it is difficult to stop, even though smokers know how their habit affects their bodies.

Continue to try, in a loving and concerned way, to encourage her to stop smoking, to give up something she enjoys because others love her.

Stars share some secrets of staying slim

Associated Press

Brooke Shields bikes 30 miles a day, Joan Collins doesn't believe in dieting and Diane Sawyer just panics — that's how the stars stay slim and sleek.

Most of the famous women with fabulous forms really work at it, according to a survey in a recent issue of Cosmopolitan in which they were asked how they stay so thin.

"I exercise, take ballet classes, do low impact aerobics," said Mary Tyler Moore. "I try to exercise five mornings a week. But basically, it's my genes; my mother and father look like aged Barbie dolls."

For Diane Sawyer, staying thin comes with the job. Her secret: "Deadlines and panic," she said.

Joan Collins has a simple answer: "I don't overeat. Diets are silly. I don't believe in diets and never go on them."

More typical was Brooke Shields, who said:

"I cycle 30 miles a day and do other exercises. When I have to diet, I eat half portions."

Cybill Shepherd's regime goes like this: "I eat five or six small meals a day and concentrate on healthy food. Once in a while I allow myself to splurge and have a hot fudge sundae or a donut. I work out for an hour three or four times a week, and 10 minutes five days a week. I also bicycle, racewalk and swim."

Raquel Welch does it this way: "I do yoga every day, which has a cleansing effect on the system and helps digestion. I eat grains in the morning with fruit and no sugar. I have four ounces of protein at each of the other two meals."

Lena Horne said: "I try to watch not only what I eat but how much I eat. And to do as much walking as I possibly can, with a little bit of voodoo thrown in."

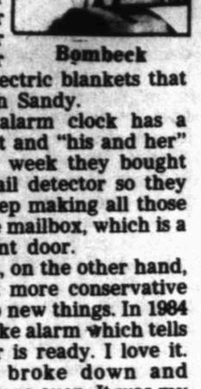
AT WIT'S END

Technology not always marvelous

By ERMA BOMBECK



Bombeck

Our friends Sandy and Ben are technology junkies.

They buy every new product that comes down the pike. Cordless phones, watches that measure their cardiovascular workouts, radar detectors for their car, and electric blankets that are smarter than Sandy.

Their digital alarm clock has a built-in flashlight and "his and her" alarms, and last week they bought an electronic mail detector so they don't have to keep making all those futile trips to the mailbox, which is a slot in their front door.

The Bombecks, on the other hand, tend to be a bit more conservative when it comes to new things. In 1984 we bought a smoke alarm which tells me when dinner is ready. I love it. Last week we broke down and bought a microwave oven. It was my husband's idea.

Every morning he would pull a two-quart saucepan off the rack, put a half cup of skim milk in it and set it on the stove to warm for his coffee. Sometimes he would forget about it and the milk would scorch or the pan would burn dry. It seemed reasonable that the solution to his problem was a 700- watt oven with five pages of precautions to avoid possible exposure to excessive microwave energy and 27 pages of operating instructions.

I think that is primarily what has kept us from joining the 21st Century all these years. Neither of us has the patience to sit down and read before we start pushing buttons. Bombeck's Law has become legend: "WHEN YOU COME TO THE BRINK OF BASHING THE APPLIANCE WITH A BLUNT INSTRUMENT — READ THE MANUAL."

My husband said the microwave would be a real time-saver.

Time to read the manual: 20 minutes.

Time arguing about whether my good china should be put in an atmosphere that could explode eggs: 10 minutes.

Heating time for ½ cup milk: 30 seconds.

Time to treat finger for burns when I stuck it in the milk to see if it was hot enough: 5 minutes.

Time to heat the coffee which had now turned cold while we messed around heating the milk: 1 minute.

I'm not critical of Sandy and Ben. Once when we didn't see him for three weeks because he was barricaded in his home trying to set his new runner's watch, I told my husband I thought they were two of the most courageous people I had ever met.

Having gotten milk to boil in 30 seconds is nothing short of a miracle to my husband. Now he wants to buy an answering machine so we can sit and listen to hear who's calling before we answer the phone.

I told him, "First things first. When I get a cute message to put on the machine, we'll think about it."

Some ordinary plants poisonous

Associated Press

Many common, popular houseplants are poisonous and should be avoided as ornamental foliage in houses where young children are present, report emergency medical specialists at New York University Medical Center.

"Between 5 and 10 percent of all poisonings involve ingestion of plants — and 85 percent of these reported instances occur in children under 6," said Dr. Lewis R. Golfrank, director of emergency medical services at both Bellevue Hospital and the center's University Hospital.

An article in the Center's Health Letter identifies as toxic such common houseplants as those in the Arum family — which includes dieffenbachia (dumb cane), caladium, monstera (Swiss cheese plant), and philodendron — as well as asparagus fern, bird of paradise, boston and english ivy, and umbrella plant. Holiday season plants, such as mistletoe, holly and poinsettia, also pose a danger if ingested.

"Symptoms of plant poisoning include blistering and inflammation of the lips, gums and tongue; skin rashes; nausea, vomiting and cramps," said Goldfrank. He noted that a young child may be unable to explain the cause of distress, so parents should be alert to circumstantial evidence, such as a handful of crushed leaves coupled with these symptoms.

"If you suspect poisoning has occurred, call your regional poison control center or hospital emergency department immediately," said Goldfrank. "Be prepared to describe or identify the suspected plant and the child's symptoms. Based on this information, you will be advised either to visit an emergency department or to use a home remedy for poisoning, such as syrup of ipecac, to induce vomiting."

To prevent houseplant and flower poisonings, Goldfrank recommends identifying all potentially toxic foliage, and keeping it out of children's reach. Since the bulbs of poisonous plants and flowers are also toxic if eaten, store them, too, where youngsters cannot get at them.

Palestinian youth dies; Curfews affect 250,000

GAZA CITY, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — Israeli troops today shot and killed a Palestinian youth after he stabbed a soldier in the Gaza Strip, the military command said, as security forces and Arab protesters clashed in the occupied lands.

The death brought to 36 the number of Palestinians killed in nearly six weeks of anti-Israeli unrest in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. More than 200 Palestinians have been wounded.

The soldier suffered moderate injuries, the military command said.

Troops sealed off at least one mosque and clashed with Arab protesters at a second mosque after Moslem noon prayers. In Arab east Jerusalem, soldiers fired tear gas to disperse protesters near the Temple Mount, holy to Jews and Moslems alike, Israel radio said.

The clashes came after the PLO and Arab fundamentalists on Thursday urged a day of mourning today for Palestinians killed in rioting.

Curfews remained in force in a dozen refugee camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, affecting about 250,000 residents, or one-sixth of the population in the territories captured by Israel in the 1967 Middle East war. All stores were shuttered in a complete commercial strike in Arab east Jerusalem and Gaza City.

At Al Amari Mosque, the largest in Gaza City, more than 300 Arab youths threw stones at Israeli troops and shouted "Allah Akbar," Arabic for "God is Great."

Many held photographs of Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat. Loudspeakers atop the mosque blared the message: "The army is surrounding you. Be ready."

Israeli troops responded first by throwing back stones and then by firing tear gas canisters to disperse the crowd before sealing off the area.

Terrified residents fled from the soldiers, and a boy about four years old was seen running down the street screaming, holding a toddler in his arms.

Abed Ashrami, a nurse at Gaza City's Ahli Arab Hospital, said several Palestinians were brought in with beating injuries, among them mosque's sheikh, Khalid Dardoni, who suffered a fractured leg.

Ze'ev Schiff, a respected military commentator, wrote in the daily Haaretz that the camps were under economic and military siege.

He said the army hoped this pressure would motivate storekeepers and workers to appeal to the leaders of the resistance to call a truce.

Schiff warned, however, that the siege could "boomerang into a bigger explosion as the populace's frustration mounted."

In other incidents, on Thursday, a 30-year-old Arab was shot and killed when he wandered onto an army firing range in the West Bank, the army said. A military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the event was an accident and was unrelated to the protests.

Israel also detained 10 prominent Palestinians, including Hanna Siniora, editor of the Arabic-language Al-Fajr newspaper, in a clampdown on Arabs suspected of inciting resistance to the Israeli occupation. Several detainees were released after questioning, two of them on bail.

Islamic fundamentalists distributed leaflets in the occupied territories calling on residents to commemorate Arabs killed in the riots with mock funeral processions at mosques after today's noon prayers, Israel television reported.

Soviets present new START plan

GENEVA (AP) — The Soviet Union today submitted new proposals for cutting the superpowers' intercontinental nuclear forces, a U.S. spokesman said.

Citing confidentiality rules, spokesman Terry Shroeder declined to elaborate on the proposals but said that they "will be studied carefully as are all of their proposals."

He said the meeting at the Soviet mission, the second since the talks resumed Thursday after a 7½-week break, featured a "substantive exchange." It lasted an hour and 40 minutes.

The two sides are working to conclude a draft treaty on reducing their strategic arms arsenals by 50 percent.

Gazan children replace toys with war weapons

JABALIYA, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — With schools in this seaside strip shuttered because of unrest, the latest lesson many Palestinian children have learned is that toilet paper soaked in perfume works best against tear gas.

Gasoline-filled bottles are replacing toys for many Gazan children. Instead of fairy tales, bedtime stories are of Arab "martyrs" who died fighting Israeli troops.

Childhood ended for many in the Gaza Strip as quickly as the latest cycle of persistent violent unrest began Dec. 8.

After at least 35 Palestinian deaths and sometimes harsh Israeli measures to quash Arab riots, impressionable Gazan children are forming hard impressions about Israel.

"I don't know their names, but I hate those Israeli soldiers I see on our streets. I would be proud to die for my country fighting the Israelis," said Ashraf, a serious, soft-spoken 12-year-old whose father would not allow the use of his last name.

"But sometimes," Ashraf added wistfully, "I wish I could have a normal childhood."

Ashraf, along with other children in this refugee camp of 60,000 at the outskirts of Gaza City, said he was proud of his part in what the Palestinians call "al intefada," Arabic for "the uprising."

Teen-agers and children have played a key role in nearly daily demonstrations in the Gaza Strip and West Bank, captured by Israel in the 1967 war against Egypt and Jordan. Children as young as five are almost always found among the knots of protesters.

During a recent riot, a reporter saw an Arab teen-ager show a boy of about 8 how to properly throw a firebomb by flicking his wrist.

Five-year-old Mohammed has never taken part in a demonstration, according to his mother Tarid, but he nodded firmly when asked if he knew what tear gas was.

Sitting on his mother's lap one recent night in the family's makeshift home, as rain fell on the tin roof and Israeli soldiers speaking Hebrew were heard patrolling outside, Mohammed said tear gas made him cry twice in the past week.

His parents brought out his 2-year-old brother, Hamid, whose eyes were running and infected — due, his mother said, to the gas.

Sniffing an onion slice is the traditionally accepted way to cut down on coughing and tears after the gas is released, but children said the up-to-date, preferred method is smelling cheap perfume.

Scientists sink teeth into research using chocolate as cavity-fighter

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — Parents have always warned their kids about chocolate causing cavities, but scientists are now sinking their teeth into a research project that could show chocolate is a cavity-fighter.

The nation's big chocolate manufacturers — Hershey's, Nestle's, M&M Mars, and others — have funded a $99,000, two-year study for the research at the University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio.

But Dr. Alan Elbein, a professor of biochemistry, said chocoholics shouldn't be humming a few bars of Nestle's Crunch or begin dreaming of living in Willie Wonka's Chocolate Factory. For now, a trip to the dentist and not chocolate overdose remains the best bet to combating cavities.

"This is just the beginning," Elbein said about his chocolate research. "We don't hope to accomplish everything in two years. We don't even know if there is anything at this point."

Elbein, aided by researcher Joe Tropea, will grind cocoa beans, add water and other chemicals until they find a compound that inhibits an enzyme that breaks down sugar and leads to tooth decay.

They are following up on other research in the past 20 years that indicated chocolate could fight tooth decay.

In the 1960s, researchers added cocoa to the diets of hamsters and found they developed fewer cavities. A later study found that young people developed less dental plaque following a week-long diet of chocolate skim milk.

"If there is an inhibitor in there and if you can you determine what it is, then you could synthesize it," Elbein said. "It would be valuable to use by making it into large quantities in toothpaste to help prevent dental cavities."

Dr. Rona Applebaum, a researcher with the Chocolate Manufacturers Association, said Elbein was sought because of his experience in breaking down other plants in search of inhibitors.

"We can no longer suppose and suggest what it might be. It's time for us to completely identify what is causing these dental cavities," Ms. Applebaum said. "But until we know, we don't know how it works and we feel we can have a stronger story to tell on the positive effect of it."

The chocolate industry is now a $4.8 billion business that has been rising since the early 1980s. In 1986, the latest figure available, more than 2 billion pounds of the sweet stuff was shipped to retailers across the United States.

The chocolate industry saw a dip in the mid-1970s when health food junkies traded candy bars for granola and other nut bars. In 1978, the chocolate industry had its worst year, shipping only 1.7 billion pounds of chocolate across the country.

Texas law nukes quickie nuptials

PECOS (AP) — New Mexicans, who formerly trekked to Texas when they just couldn't wait to get married, will have to cool their heels for three days under a new Texas state law — or else hold the wedding in New Mexico.

The new law, which went into effect Friday, stipulates that couples must wait 72 hours from the time the marriage license is issued until the wedding takes place.

The law probably will discourage some New Mexicans from traveling to West Texas for quickie nuptials, county clerks from both states agreed.

"As soon as they find out that you're not going to hand out the license so they can get married right then and there, they won't bother to come," said Ruth King, Eddy County, N.M. county clerk.

Up to one-quarter of the average 16 marriage licenses issued monthly in Reeves County, Texas, are issued to couples from New Mexico, County Clerk Catherine Ashley said.

Reeves County's seat of Pecos is just a two-hour drive from Carlsbad. About half the New Mexicans who get licenses in Reeves County plan to wait at least three days anyway, Mrs. Ashley said. The rest want to tie the knot on the spot.

"Under the new law, they'll either have to wait around or come back to Texas to be married," Mrs. Ashley said. "It's really going to stop this New Mexico business."

SMU's Gregg has warning for boosters

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist's new head football coach says he's eager to resurrect the school's scandal-wracked program and has a blunt message to any overzealous boosters who might offer improper aid.

"I'll smack 'em right in the mouth," warned 240-pound Forrest Gregg.

A pay-for-play scandal prompted the NCAA to inflict the "death penalty" on SMU for repeat violations, cancelling the 1987 season. SMU volunteered to skip the 1988 campaign while it cleansed its program.

Gregg, 54, of Birthright, Texas, the captain of the 1955 SMU team, signed a four-year contract on Thursday for an estimated $100,000 a year base salary. SMU has an option for a fifth year.

HE WAS on the fourth year of a five year contract with the Green Bay Packers. Gregg also was an All-Pro nine years at Green Bay as a guard under Vince Lombardi.

"I played 15 years and coached 14 years, so I've been in the NFL most of my life," Gregg said. "I always thought that if the opportunity presented itself I'd like to come back to my school."

The move to SMU cost Gregg about $200,000.

"I'm not here to talk salary. I'm here to talk opportunity," Gregg said. "I'm pleased to be home."

He said it is time for SMU to bury its problems, which included the most NCAA football penalties in history.

"We're ready to put the past behind us," Gregg said. "I hope we're in the Cotton Bowl in less than a decade."

Integrity is the most important thing, he said. "We have to restore that to the program."

SMU can sign 15 players to scholarships on Feb. 10. Gregg will have to recruit by telephone as NCAA rules prohibit SMU from visiting recruits until next fall.

GREGG SAID recruiting for SMU "will be easy. I'll just look 'em right in the eyhand tell them to come to SMU and get a great education."

He said he answered SMU's call "to put something back into the game. I've been drafted three times in my life, by the Army, by the Green Bay Packers and now SMU. I answered all three calls."

Colorado Coach Bill McCartney was SMU's first choice but turned the Mustangs down.

Gregg said he wasn't even in the running at the time.

"I was just serving in an advisory capacity," he said. "I was a little shocked when SMU called and said it wanted me."

Gregg received a standing ovation when he was introduced by Athletic Director Doug Single at a press conference Thursday.

"I'll give you about an hour to stop that," Gregg said. "I'm very pleased to be the head football coach at SMU. I'll start to work first thing tomorrow. I'm really pleased to be home."

SMU can hire five assistant coaches. Gregg said he would talk soon with Tim Edwards, head coach of L.D. Bell High School in nearby Hurst, who was among others that SMU considered for the head coaching job. Gregg said he wasn't certain whether any Packer assistants will follow him.

Gregg said he doesn't think the switch from the NFL to college will be a problem.

"Football is football," Gregg said. "The field is the same length and width. Only the hash marks are different."

Gregg said he can't understand alumni paying players.

"I never believed you could motivate anybody with money," he said. "It takes desire to play this game."

He said an athlete choosing SMU will have to think academics first.

"I want all my student athletes to graduate," he said. "That should be the bottom line of any program."

Gregg is the only person who has both played and been the head coach in a Super Bowl. He played for Green Bay in a Super Bowl and coached Cincinnati in the 1981 Super Bowl.

Lombardi once called Gregg the best player he'd ever coached.

Chaps survive Howard

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

BIG SPRING — Midland College escaped from the Dorothy Garrett snakepit with a 76-71 victory over Howard College Thursday night as play resumed in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference.

Don't let the final score fool you. This was a tenacious, gruelling skirmish. If they had been carrying sticks, it could have passed for hockey. If they'd used goalies, it probably would have ended 3-2.

But a win is a win and this one put the Chaparrals on the happy side of .500 with a 3-2 conference record and upped the season's record to 14-4.

After the easy win over the Hawks in the Big Spring tournament early in the season, the general feeling was that it would be easy again.

"That last one wasn't easy," corrected MC coach Reggie Franklin. "We won by 15, but most of it came in the final few minutes. They were tough then, too.

"I was proud of the way we played tonight," he added.

THIS WAS A game in which Midland spent most of the first half trying to catch up and the second half trying to stay ahead. Neither was easy.

"They (Howard) are coming together as a team. Everybody is getting better and the days when anyone runs away with the Western Junior College Conference are over."

MC trailed 18-12 and staged an eight-point run to take a 20-18 lead, but it wasn't for long. Stewart Barnett hit the tying basket on a driving layup and Charles McCovery's 17-foot jumper gave the Chaps the lead. But it wasn't for long.

The Hawks, killing the Chaps with the three-point field goal, were soon ahead 28-23 when 6-8 Alex Stanwood and 6-7 Herman Henry went to work. Stanwood hit two baskets from inside and Herny converted a pair of free throws to make it 29-28.

At 31-31, Billy Ray Smith hit a free throw and then David Martin scored a two-pointer from the paint for a 34-31 lead.

THE CHAPS LED 51-43 at one point, but Howard inched back to 49-51 and even led 61-60 with 5:54 remaining. But in a quick flurry, Smith struck from under the iron, Henry's steal resulted in a solo layup and then Smith's backcourt deflection to Henry and the return feed from Henry made it 66-61 with five minutes to go.

It was a game of frequent midcourt turnovers and under the basket combat.

"The key to the second half was defense and patience on offense," Franklin explained. "That's something we've worked on and will be depending on."

League favorite visits Bulldogs

It may be too early in the District 4-5A season for "must" games, but a pair of games tonight will certainly have an impact on the look of the loop's standings.

Second place Midland High at 2-1 will host preseason favorite 1-1 Abilene High at 8 p.m. at Chaparral center in one key game, while league-leading 3-0 Odessa High hosts 1-1 San Angelo, another title hopeful, also at 8 p.m.

"Anytime you face the team that is favored to win the district, you have what you might call a big game," said Midland High coach Jack Stephenson. "This is the critical time of our first half schedule and we need to win when we have Abilene High at home. As even as the teams appear to be in this league, there aren't any real easy ones, but a victory over a team picked to win it all has to give your team a lift. It would be a nice win."

Abilene High should be fresh after an open date while Midland High is coming off an emotional loss in San Angelo. The Eagles defeated San Angelo by an 80-79 margin at home in their last outing. However, MHS defeated Odessa Permian and Abilene High has lost to the Panthers. It makes for an interesting matchup.

The game should also produce a battle of Gregs. MHS junior Greg Lewis is leading the district in scoring average with 19.3 points per game. Abilene High's Greg Denman is averaging 18.5 points per game.

But it won't be a two-man show. Abilene High also has Cornell McGee, averaging 13 points per district outing and Cory Lockridge at 11 ppg. Midland High counters with Varrick McDonald, 12.7; Kyle Lusby and Eric Boyt, both at 10.7 ppg.

Odessa High, off and running with a perfect 3-0 district start, will have the home court edge against a stout San Angelo team in a game that features five of the league's Top 10 scorers.

Odessa High's Lester White ranks third in the league with a 16-point district average while San Angelo's Bill Hollis is averaging at a 15.5 clip.

In the only other district game tonight, 1-2 Odessa Permian will be at 0-2 Abilene Cooper.

Midland Lee, fresh off its first district win over Cooper Tuesday after absorbing two narrow losses to MHS and OHS, hopes to get fresher still with an open date. Lee will travel to Odessa Permian Tuesday.

"I'll go to Abilene and watch Permian play Cooper," said Lee coach Paul Stueckler. "I'm giving the kids off Friday and we'll start working on Permian Saturday."

Lee's Damon Clay will not play next Tuesday due to scope surgery on a twisted knee Wednesday. It isn't known when he will be able to return to the Rebels.

Cooper and San Angelo, both at 4-0, have taken the early startch out of the girls 4-5A basketball race. Lee, now 3-2, lost to Cooper Tuesday and MHS, now 1-4, lost to San Angelo, leaving the two leaders headed for a first half showdown next week.

Lee is off today while the MHS girls travel to 1-3 Abilene High. San Angelo, facing Odessa High, and Cooper, squaring off against Permian, should both stand at 5-0 after tonight's games.

Horner signs with Cardinals

By MICHAEL MARTINEZ
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Bob Horner, the former Atlanta Braves infielder who spent last season playing in Japan, reached agreement with the St. Louis Cardinals Thursday on a one-year contract for a base salary of $950,000.

He is expected to fill the void created by the Cardinals' loss of Jack Clark as a free agent to the New York Yankees.

Andre Dawson, the former Montreal Expos outfielder who won the National League's most valuable player award last season with the Chicago Cubs, submitted his name for arbitration and should lead a parade of more than 100 players who will seek to have their 1988 salaries decided by an arbitrator.

Six New York Mets — including Dwight Gooden, who has been asked to take a salary cut — and six Yankees are likely to file for arbitration by midnight Friday night, the deadline. Salary arbitration hearings are scheduled to begin Feb. 1 and continue for three weeks. Players who file for arbitration can continue to negotiate with their teams.

Mike Boddicker, the Baltimore pitcher who has been sought by the Yankees, was eligible for arbitration but signed a one-year contract with the Orioles for $850,000. The signing would not prevent the Yankees from pursuing a trade for the right-hander.

Horner, who has a history of injuries, could earn an additional $450,000 if he plays in a maximum of 140 games. His contract also calls for $140,000 in award bonuses. He is 30 years old, has hit 215 home runs in nine major league seasons and is expected to play first base for the Cardinals, replacing Clark.

Road travel hazardous in 4-5A

Williamson

"When is Odessa High better than Odessa Permian?"

It sounds like the start of a joke, needing a punch line, but the Panthers of Permian aren't laughing and neither is the rest of District 4-5A in this "strange" basketball season.

Anytime the Bronchos are perched at the top of the league standings, you have to classify that season as a bit "strange" — or at least "unusual."

Well, the Bronchos are sitting pretty in the 4-5A basketball race, learning the lesson that no other team in the loop has been able to conquer. OHS defeated Permian in the Panther gym Tuesday night and that's the punch line to the question above.

Odessa High is the only team in the league that has won a game on the road. District favorite Abilene High couldn't turn that trick against Permian, Midland High failed in its road bid against San Angelo, San Angelo failed at Abilene High and Midland Lee stumbled at Odessa High.

In fact, in nine district games this year, the visitor has won only twice with Odessa High claiming both of those victories over Permian and Abilene Cooper.

Sure, it's a young season yet, but if this trend doesn't change soon, Odessa High will walk into the playoffs uncontested while the loop runnerup will enter the playoffs with about six losses. It could happen, too.

Basketball is one of those sports where the home court advantage is supposed to be a real factor. It seems this district is out to prove the point. Throw up the ball, give 10 points to the home team and go home.

From this point of view, the league is weaker than anytime I can think of. But that also has a positive point in the fact that the league is balanced from second through seventh places.

At least, that's the case right now. Some team may come to the front and join the Bronchos in the race for league supremacy. Any team can win at home and lose on the road.

One fan at a recent game at Chaparral Center told me, "It doesn't seem to be a question of who will win these games, but who doesn't lose them."

It's a point well taken. Tuesday I saw Lee play Cooper. The first half was probably the worst basketball I've seen in this district in 15 years. Neither team could find the basket with a flashlight.

Lee assistant coach Bill Jordan says that 15 years doesn't do justice to that first half. "We probably set high school basketball back 100 years," said Jordan.

But if you like close games and biting your nails all day on each Tuesday and Friday, you're going to love this season before it's over. And you're probably going to see the home team win a lot of games.

Just don't put any gas in the tank for a car trip. It might not be worth it.

Sleepless Rockets get needed boost from Leavell

Associated Press

With Sleepy Floyd serving a suspension, the Houston Rockets needed another guard. Allen Leavell was a perfect replacement.

Leavell shot 12-for-12 from the foul line, including four in the final 40 seconds, as the Rockets beat the Portland Trail Blazers 103-98 Thursday night in the NBA.

Robert Reid's two free throws with 48 seconds remaining put Houston ahead 99-97. After that, Leavell kept the Rockets in front and he finished with a team-high 20 points.

"Sleepy and I both could go down and we'd still be all right," Leavell said. "My game is the same even if he's in. There's no more pressure. We have six capable guards."

Leavell took the place of Floyd, who sat out a one-game suspension for fighting with Phoenix's Jeff Hornacek on Wednesday night. Floyd also was fined $5,000.

NBA Roundup

While Leavell filled in for Floyd, Reid took over when Portland contained Akeem Olajuwon, who had 17 points. Reid made the go-ahead foul shots and was 5-for-6 from the line.

"When you hold down a big fellow like Akeem you expect to win," Portland's Clyde Drexler said. "But Robert Reid came through for them in the clutch."

Drexler scored 25 points. He got 13 in the third quarter and gave the Trail Blazers a 78-73 lead going into the final period.

Cavaliers 91, Bulls 88

Ehlo made two free throws with five seconds left in overtime and the Bulls' Michael Jordan missed a 3-point shot with two seconds remaining.

Jordan, who scored 28 points, made a foul shot with 18 seconds left in regulation that tied the score at 82. The Cavaliers then missed a flurry of short shots, forcing the overtime.

Nuggets 115, Hawks 112

Lever's jump shot broke a tie at 110, Bill Hanzlik then stole the ball and Dunn made his free throws.

Alex English scored 27 points and Lever and Danny Schayes had 20 each as the host Nuggets ended a three-game losing streak.

Bullets 136, Bucks 107

Moses Malone scored 36 points and moved into 11th place on the NBA's all-time scoring list as Washington continued to play well for new Coach Wes Unseld.

The Bullets are 3-1 since Unseld took over. Milwaukee's loss was its most lopsided this season.

Malone, who shot 14-for-16 and grabbed 14 rebounds, moved past George Gervin on the scoring list with 20,743 points. Malone is 137 points behind Bob Pettit.

Bernard King scored 25 points and Jeff Malone 22 for the host Bullets, who shot 63.8 percent. Jack Sikma had 23 points for the Bucks.

Nets 90, Kings 87

Buck Williams had 21 points and 18 rebounds as New Jersey beat Sacramento in a meeting of last-place teams.

The Nets are 7-26 in the Atlantic Division, with all of the victories coming at home. The Kings are 9-24 in the Midwest, including 1-13 on the road.

New Jersey led 63-48 midway in the third quarter before Sacramento got within 86-84 with 2:39 remaining. Both John Bagley and Dwayne Washington, each of whom finished with 14 points, got two points late to hold off the Kings.

Reggie Theus scored 20 points for Sacramento.

MC also limited the Hawks to one three-pointer in the second half after HC had hit four in the first half. "We just told our kids to keep an eye on 5 (Larry Pettigrew), 32 (Chris Miller) and 24 (Bernard Williams)." Apparently, they did the job, since the only second half three-pointer was by Tony Smith.

COMING OFF the bench, Barnett scored seven points, but mostly kept the ball moving on offense, finding someone open, even if it wasn't to set up a basket. The way these teams were causing turnovers, that was a big plus.

Four Chaps scored in double figures, led by Stanwood and Smith with 15 each. Martin had 12, eight coming in the last half, and Henry supplied another 13.

For Howard, Pettigrew's 16 points and 15 by Tyrone Greer led the way.

This was a good win since a loss last year at Dorothy Garrett cost MC any hope of winning the WJCAC, following as it did a loss against NMJC at Hobbs.

HORNER

At a news conference in St. Louis, Horner said he had rejected a much more lucrative offer to return to Japan. "It would have taken just one phone call," he said. "But I'm satisfied and happy to be back in the States playing ball. That's what I wanted to do."

After Clark left and Horner's name came up last week, Manager Whitey Herzog of the Cardinals said: "I don't like Horner. Of his lifetime homers, about 70 percent were hit in Atlanta. He never could hit in St. Louis. He can't hit and he can't field."

Herzog could not be reached for comment Thursday, but Horner said he felt good after talking with Herzog Wednesday night. "Hearing what he had to say, I was very convinced he wanted me," Horner said. "All I wanted was a high sign he would be happy to have me on this team, and I got that."

Dawson has been unable to negotiate a new contract with the Cubs. He had been expected to seek arbitration after negotiations between his agent, Dick Moss, and the Cubs did not produce a contract last month. The Cubs reportedly offered Dawson a one-year deal for about $1.5 million; Moss was asking for a four-year pact for around $10 million.

Dawson, who hit 49 home runs and drove in 137 runs last season for the last-place Cubs, earned $500,000 in salary and $200,000 in incentive bonuses after signing with Chicago last spring. He had actually signed his name to a blank contract, allowing Cubs management to fill in the salary later. Moss has said several times this winter that the team should give Dawson a blank contract to fill in.

Among the players who joined Dawson in seeking arbitration Thursday were Darrell Evans of Detroit, Mike Marshall of Los Angeles, Dick Schofield of California and Mark Gubicza of Kansas City.

Besides Gooden, the Mets who will probably submit for arbitration are Sid Fernandez, Roger McDowell, Kevin McReynolds, Howard Johnson and Tim Teufel.

Gooden is attempting to win a modest salary increase from the Mets, although his agent, Jim Neader, said Thursday that the team was holding firm on a pay cut. Last season, when he won 15 games but missed two months of the season after entering a drug-rehabilitation center, Gooden was paid $1.5 million.

"We're looking for a slight increase, they're looking for a slight decrease," Neader said. "Right now, I'd say we're fairly close."

Seven players eligible for arbitration reached agreement on one-year contracts with their teams. The Dodgers signed John Shelby, Tim Leary and Mariano Duncan. Mike Young signed with Baltimore, Matt Young with Oakland, Bud Black with Kansas City and Jay Tibbs with Montreal.

UIL sends reprimands to several high schools

AUSTIN (AP) — The University Interscholastic League on Thursday publicly reprimanded Port Arthur Lincoln High School for an incident after a boys' basketball game in which a mob threw bricks, stones and other objects at a bus carrying Beaumont Central cheerleaders.

Twelve cheerleaders were treated for injuries at St. Mary's Hospital in Port Arthur. Port Arthur Superintendent Joe Pitts said 17 arrests had been made since the Nov. 24 incident.

— Suspend from UIL competition or practice a Sinton High School student who, with a former student, allegedly fired a gun or guns at a school bus carrying 22 Tuloso-Midway boys' basketball players.

Six bullet holes were found in the bus, but no one was injured. The shooting occurred 3.5 miles south of Sinton following Dec. 8 varsity, junior varsity and freshmen basketball games.

— Publicly reprimand and place on two years' probation varsity basketball coach Brian Katt of Saltillo High School.

Game official James Wood said Katt repeatedly bumped and cursed him after the official called a flagrant foul on a Saltillo player in a Dec. 4 basketball game at Mount Pleasant. Katt was ejected, Wood said, and the game was stopped with 1 minute 17 seconds to play. Mount Pleasant was declared the winner 106-61.

Katt also was suspended by the Saltillo Independent School District board for two home basketball games. Saltillo ISD was publicly reprimanded by the UIL committee.

— Publicly reprimand and placed on two years' probation athletic director-football coach Chris Cavazos of Port Isabel High School for allegedly violating UIL practice rules.

Cavazos said in a letter to the UIL that of all the allegations brought against the athletic program, he would admit only one — conducting off season 11 on 11 football workouts.

The UIL staff report said eight Central bus windows were broken, and five Lincoln students and two Port Arthur Austin students were arrested after Lincoln's 73-70 basketball victory at Lincoln's gym.

Port Arthur police estimated that 20-24 people were involved although earlier reports had implied that up to 150 people had thrown rocks and bricks at the bus, the UIL staff said.

THE GAME was free of incident on the court, according to Lincoln Assistant Principal Melvin Getwood's written report, but one spectator was charged with disorderly conduct.

The bus attack occurred at an intersection about three blocks from the gym, school officials said.

In addition to additional security at games and squad cars to clear the parking lots after boys' varsity games, Lincoln plans to provide a police escort to the city limits of Port Arthur for buses leaving the Lincoln gym, Getwood said.

"If competition has deteriorated to rock throwing, I don't know whether we need it or not," UIL Director Bailey Marshall said.

"But how far does a school district's responsibility extend in time and distance?" committee member Mike Day asked.

"I share your concern," committee chairman Lynn Anderson said. "But it would be simplistic to say that once you leave the school ground everybody there is on his own."

Superintendent Pitts said, "Even a police escort doesn't mean a person can get back safely to home."

"Not for a minute do I blame you or criticize you," Day said.

The committee, in fact, commended both school districts for how they had handled the situation.

The Tuloso-Midway bus shooting occurred on a foggy night about an hour after the game, and coaches said they first thought the noise was firecrackers or the bus engine.

No. 1 Wildcats rumble, 70-48

Associated Press

Arizona's Steve Kerr is finding his legs and with it his shooting touch.

The senior guard hit all seven of his field goals, including five 3-pointers, and led all scorers with a season-high 21 points as the top-ranked Wildcats whacked Oregon State 70-48 Thursday night.

"I was due," said Kerr, who missed all of last season with a knee injury and had been mired in a deep shooting slump. "I think it was just a matter of getting my legs under me. I found it tonight ... I think it was just a matter of hitting a couple."

Arizona, 15-1, moved into first place in the Pacific-10 Conference. The Wildcats have swept their five Pac-10 games by an average of 28 points.

It was the worst home court defeat for the Beavers since 1978 when they lost 96-58 to UCLA. Oregon State fell to 8-4 and 2-1.

No 2 N. Carolina 71, Maryland 65

J.R. Reid scored 16 of his 24 points in the second half as the Tarheels extended their winning streak to eight games.

North Carolina improved to 12-1 and 3-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Maryland is 9-4 and 2-1 in the ACC.

No. 4 Temple 59, La Salle 56

Freshman Mark Macon scored a field goal with 18 seconds remaining to put Temple ahead to stay as the Owls used a 12-2 rally in the final four minutes to beat the Explorers.

College Basketball

Mike Vreeswyk, who had 10 points, was 0-11 from the field before connecting on three field goals, including a 3-point shot, in the last four minutes. Vreeswyk's 3-pointer and short jumper tied the game at 56-56 with 2:06 left and Macon hit the shot that put the Owls ahead.

No. 7 Duke 69, St. Louis 53

Quin Snyder scored 18 points as Duke struggled to its fourth straight victory. Snyder hit four of nine 3-point shots, three in the second half.

Duke hit only 22 of 57 from the floor for 38.6 percent. The Blue Devils also committed 22 turnovers, seven more than their average. But St. Louis committed 26 turnovers and shot 39.6 percent on 19 of 48 shooting.

No. 8 Purdue 80, Northwestern 64

Troy Lewis scored 12 of his 20 points on four first-half 3-point baskets as the Boilermakers jumped to an 11-point halftime lead and ran away.

Purdue, 14-1, won its 13th game in a row and moved to 4-0 in the Big Ten. Northwestern, which upset Indiana on Monday, fell to 6-7 and 1-2.

No. 10 Michigan 90, Michigan St. 72

Gary Grant scored 18 of his 27 points in the first half in leading the Wolverines past Big Ten and state rival Michigan State. Grant hit seven of 10 shots to help stake Michigan, which led by as many as 10 points in the first half, to a 41-37 lead at the intermission.

Michigan raised its record to 13-1 and 3-0, while Michigan State fell to 5-8 and 0-3.

No. 15 Indiana 55, Wisconsin 53

Dean Garrett converted a three-point play with nine minutes remaining to give Indiana its first lead, then hit four free throws down the stretch as the Hoosiers held off the Badgers in a Big Ten game.

Garrett had 18 points, 11 rebounds and five blocked shots as Indiana improved to 9-4 and 1-2. Wisconsin, losing to Indiana for the 16th consecutive time, dropped to 8-5 and 2-1.

Ohio St. 87, No. 17 Iowa 83

Grady Mateen scored Ohio State's last four points, including two free throws with four seconds remaining, as the Buckeyes beat Big Ten rival Iowa.

Ohio State, 8-5 and 1-2, led 83-78 with 1:28 left, but 10-5 and 2-2 Iowa's B.J. Armstrong hit a 3-point basket to make it 83-81. Mateen then tipped in a Jerry Francis miss with 31 seconds left for an 85-81 Ohio State lead.

SDSU 64, No. 18 New Mexico 59

Mitch McMullen scored the last of his 19 points on two free throws with 1:07 to play as San Diego State snapped New Mexico's 10-game winning streak.

San Diego State, a 27-point loser in each of its previous two Western Athletic Conference games, led 60-58 when McMullen went to the line. The Lobos got a final opportunity when San Diego's Bryan Williams missed the front end of a bonus with 26 seconds left.

John Niland sentenced to two-year prison term

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys football player John Niland was sentenced Thursday to two years in prison for making false statements on a loan.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders ordered Niland to appear at a federal institution Feb. 11. Niland also was sentenced to five years' probation and was ordered either to pay $384,000 or forfeit his Dallas house to Darwin Deason, a Dallas businessman who bought the house in a foreclosure sale but was unable to take possession of it.

Niland's attorney, Cheryl Wattley, said she would appeal the case to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Before sentencing, Niland, who professes to be a born again Christian, said, "If I'm guilty, I'm guilty of naivete or maybe a little stupidity on my part. Whatever happens, from here on out, I think I could be an asset to the community."

In September, Niland was indicted on charges of making false statements about his residence on a 1983 application for a $300,000 business loan from Continental Savings Association near Houston.

He had said in the application that he was living in a condominium on High Hollows Drive in Dallas and was renting out a Dallas home he owned on Miron Drive.

Niland was granted the loan, but Continental sold the Miron Drive home in a foreclosure sale to recover losses after Niland failed to make payments. The Dallas businessman who bought the home filed a lawsuit to have Niland evicted when he refused to leave.

Niland filed for bankruptcy in 1984, saying that the Miron Drive home was protected from the Continental lien because it was his homestead and that the foreclosure sale was therefore invalid.

He was awarded possession of the Miron Drive house in a ruling by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which noted that the Texas Constitution prohibits an individual from waiving his right to homestead.

Pate taking up where he left off

"I had a pretty good last half of the season last year; won, oh, about $200,000 in the last four months.

He took a big step in that direction with a no-bogey round of 6-under-par 66 on Thursday that staked him to a one-shot lead in the first round of the first tournament of the season, the prestigious Tournament of Champions.

"A nice way to make my debut. I could get used to this," said Pate, 26, one of 10 rookies in a field of 38 in this winners-only tournament.

Playing in what he called "perfect conditions, warm and sunny," he did not miss a green and did not come close to making a bogey.

"It was a pretty easy round to play. I didn't have to work particularly hard at any time," said Pate, starting his fourth season on the PGA Tour.

"I only hit one fairway on the front," Barr said. But he also one-putted six times on those nine holes and reached the turn in 34.

"It was a little more solid after that," Barr said after finishing with a 67.

PGA title-holder Larry Nelson led a group at 68, two shots off the pace. Also at that figure were 1987 Player of the Year Paul Azinger, Payne Stewart and veteran Johnny Miller.

British Open champ Nick Faldo of England had a 70, and Tom Watson, who broke a three-year non-winning string late last season, had a 71 in his return to the tournament he has won three times.

In the starry group at 73, one over par and seven off the pace, were 1987 leading money-winner Curtis Strange, Masters champ Larry Mize and U.S. Open title-holder Scott Simpson.

"That's about as high as I could have shot," said Hill, who missed only one green but failed on six birdie putts from 12 feet or less.

Casper, on the other hand, said he had "one of the best putting rounds I've had in a long time," and holed a 55-foot bunker shot for a birdie.

They shared a one-stroke lead over Miller Barber and Orville Moody, tied at 69.

Packer job open to all applicants

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — With Forrest Gregg gone, the job of head coach of the Green Bay Packers is wide open to all applicants, the president of the NFL club says.

"I have a completely open mind; I have nobody specific in mind at all," Robert Parins said after Gregg left the Packers on Thursday for SMU, his alma mater.

"He had high hopes of doing something great. It's a dream that just didn't turn out," Packers fan Rose Phillips said as she sipped coffee at Martha's Coffee Club not far from downtown Green Bay.

Gregg had hoped to return the Packers to a consistent winner when he came back to Green Bay for the 1984 season, three seasons after taking the Cincinnati Bengals to the Super Bowl.

But the former Packers' offensive tackle, called by Vince Lombardi "quite simply the finest player I have ever coached," fell short when he left Thursday with one year to go on a five-year contract.

The Packers were 8-8 his first two seasons, slipped to 4-12 in 1986 after a housecleaning of veteran players and were 5-9-1 (3-8-1 in non-strike games) this past season.

Rebels, Bulldogs split dual swim victories

From Staff Reports

Midland High and Midland Lee had split results as expected Thursday in a dual swimming meet with the Lee boys taking a 56-29 victory and the MHS girls beating Lee by a 54-30 margin.

The meet ended the dual district season for Lee with a 4-2 record for the boys and a 2-4 mark for the girls. MHS is now 3-2 in boys competition and 5-0 in the girls. The Bulldogs, however, still have a dual meet left with San Angelo on Feb. 9.

Both teams will see their next competition on Jan. 29-30 in the Midland Invitational.

Baugh in at Snyder; Steers still searching

From Staff Reports

While Big Spring has set a Jan. 25 deadline to replace the departed Quinn Eudy as head football coach of the District 2-4A Steers, Snyder has settled on Iowa Park's David Baugh to guide the Tigers.

Baugh was chosen over 51 applicants for the Snyder job and he will replace Dennis Tomlin, who was fired Nov. 25 after producing a four-year record of 11-29. Snyder was 2-8 this past season.

Baugh, the son of former professional and college star Sammy Baugh, has posted a 21-5-1 record the past two seasons at Iowa Park, a team that always seems to find its way into the state playoffs.

Dalton Moseley, Snyder superintendent, said the Snyder school board was impressed with Baugh's record and interview. "We feel certain that Coach Baugh can develop our overall football program into a winning one. I think this is a good decision for us. We're happy to get someone of his stature."

Moseley said interviews were held with "about" 10 candadates, who were pared down from the list of applicants. Baugh's salary was not released.

In Big Spring, Ron Logback, the school's athletic director, said that the interview process is complete and he expects to narrow the applicants to three or four finalists before making a final decision, which he hopes will come by Jan. 25.

Eudy resigned his position as head coach in Big Spring in November. Eudy took the Steers to the state playoffs in 1986, the first year Big Spring had moved into Class 4A from the highly competitive District 4-5A.

Soil sampling, analysis 'necessary' in county

Kiker

There are two major reasons why good soil sampling and analysis is necessary in Midland County. A primary reason is so the producer can apply the proper amounts and grades of fertilizer to his cropland. The second major reason is that following last year's crop yields, soil test levels may be much lower for the 1988 crop. A good soil sample and a soil test then reduce production costs.

The proper tools for this task are soil sample probe, auger, sharp shooter shovel and a two-gallon plastic bucket for mixing the sample to prevent contamination of the soil sample.

Normally, the soil sample probe is best suited for sampling in Midland County. The sandy soils are easily cored and sampled; however, with clay foam soils, the core frequently get stuck inside the probe. The remedy to this problem is to cut the nipple off the probe and sharpen the edge on a grinder.

Prior to going into the field, the overall appearance of the land should be inspected and aerial maps studied if they are available. Note the unusal areas and terrain features that will help locate problem sites and identify the farm for future reference.

Prior to sampling, consider how the land is irrigated — sprinkler or furrow — and how it is fertilized — broadcast or band fertilized.

If the land is furrow irrigated, the best sample site is about three-fourths of an inch down on the side of the bed. The sample on the bed prevents one from getting into high salt levels that form on the tops of beds during dry spells. If stand problems due to salt have occurred, the top of the bed should be sampled to determine salt levels and the intensity of this problem.

Sampling time is a good period to make notes on soil compaction and plow pans. If the soil prevents the probe from penetrating the soil, it is doubtful crop roots will penetrate. A good figure to keep in mind: A soil test probe will exert about 12,000 pounds per square inch if pushed into the soil by an individual weighing 200 pounds. If the probe does not penetrate, it is comparable to the penetration of a growing root on a vinyl tile floor.

Normally, a soil sample at plow depth is adequate which is about six inches deep. If a subsoil sample has never been taken, then take samples from several sites to look at the status of nutrients. Subsoil fertility status is important in deep-rooted crops such as cotton.

If a field is uniform, 10-15 sub-samples per 100 acres should be adequate for a good soil analysis. Few subsamples and a larger area are possible if the field has never been fertilized.

Prior to taking samples, scrape the litter from the surface, then use a spade, soil auger or soil sampling tube. To use a sharp shooter, dig a V-shaped hole and take a one-half inch slice of soil from the smooth side of the hole. Repeat in 10 to 15 different places.

For aid in interpreting the test and getting recommendations, fill out the Form D-575, "Soil Sample Information Sheet for Field Crops" and submit it with your samples.

Each soil sample should be marked with your name and sample number which corresponds with the data on the information sheet. The forms are available at the county extension agent's office.

Labor groups say pesticide revision poor

AGRICULTURE

By GUY DARST

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency is preparing to revise its rules governing farm workers' exposure to pesticides, but its draft proposal is already under fire from labor groups.

A major grower organization said it is pleased EPA has backed off from inflexible, overly specific "feet and inches and degrees" requirements. Farm worker organizations say the regulations need just those specifics.

"It's weak in almost every area," though "anything would be some improvement," said Shelly Davis, a lawyer with the Migrant Legal Assistance Project.

American Farm Bureau Federation pesticide specialist Mark Maslyn said, "We've been somewhat successful" in persuading EPA to avoid using "specific numbers and feet and so forth."

Louis True, director of program management and support for EPA's pesticides office, said the agency agonized in "trying to make this not overly intrusive on small farming operations."

EPA is re-writing all of its specific pesticide regulations, chemical by chemical, but says that task will take decades. In the meantime, it is proposing a general regulation applying to all pesticides as a minimum in states that have no rules of their own. Federal law permits state regulations to govern if they are more restrictive than federal provisions.

The new regulation will be reviewed by Congress and other government agencies. EPA says it is not likely to take effect until 1989.

Hoping to minimize legal challenges, EPA in 1985 assembled a "regulatory negotiation" group of 25 state agencies, worker groups and industry organizations to try to agree in advance. But in February 1986, labor groups walked out and EPA has been doing the drafting since then.

The new regulation could potentially affect 2.3 million workers. It would succeed an existing regulation that is little more than a page long and deals mostly with re-entry intervals — the period in which fields are supposed to be closed to unprotected workers after pesticide use. The new draft, with its explanation, takes 237 pages.

Caesar Chavez, president of the United Farmworkers Union, frequently cites an estimate that more than 300,000 poisonings occur each year. Grower groups scoff at the figure. EPA did not discuss that estimate, but said many incidents go unreported.

Among other things, the new regulation would:

— Extend coverage to 300,000 workers in nurseries and greenhouses and an undetermined number in commercial forestry, and to labor contractors.

— Require blood monitoring among the most exposed professional applicators to check an enzyme attacked by the most toxic pesticides, cholesterinase. The enzyme is necessary for proper functioning of the nervous system. Blood monitoring would not be required for other applicators — three-quarters of the total, though perhaps exposed only a few weeks of the year.

— Require training of all applicators, not just those handling the so-called "restricted use" chemicals.

— Impose new notice requirements. Warning placards for closed fields will have to show an upraised hand and stern face. The agency rejected use of the skull-and-crossbones symbol after growers objected, according to Ralph Lightstone of California Rural Legal Assistance.

— Require a re-entry interval of 48 hours for the most toxic pesticides, unless the specific product regulation requires longer, and a 24-hour interval for the next most toxic. Labor groups wanted longer intervals, but EPA said "a significant disruption of agricultural production" would result from a 72-hour restriction.

"They have not taken into account any of the data on chronic illness like cancer and birth defects," said Ms. Davis. But True said, "We just don't have the data" to justify the longer interval.

— Require all workers entering a field during the re-entry interval to wear protective clothing. Currently, only workers entering the field for hand labor must wear protective clothes.

— Revamp clothing requirements. If an impermeable suit is required for re-entry and temperatures are high enough to make it unlikely that the suit will be worn, the field can't be entered.

But since no temperature is specified, "this strikes me as vague," Ms. Davis said.

However, Earl Spurrier, vice president of the National Agricultural Chemicals Association, said the rule as written will "add to (farmers') frustrations."

"It's going to be hard scheduling people to work in the field. You'll have to do your work early in the morning or late at night," he said.

— Require that drinkable water be available for washing in case of accidents. Spurrier said he thought it reasonable to require on-scene water but that the quality standard goes "a little far."

In an accident, "Who cares whether it's drinkable or not? All you want to do is get (the pesticide) off of you," he said.

Ms. Davis said the rule should go further, specifying amounts available and distances within which the water is available.

Citrus industry worried about trends in OJ

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The people who make one of Florida's most famous products are worried about a consumer trend toward ready-to-serve orange juice.

Frozen concentrated orange juice — for 40 years the mainstay of the billion-dollar Florida citrus industry — is being steadily replaced in America's refrigerators by the chilled juice that can be poured into the glass right out of the container.

Despite steady growth in overall orange juice sales, consumers are no longer buying the little cans of frozen juice to mix with tap water the way they once were.

FCOJ's share of U.S. orange juice sales has slipped from 77 percent in 1971 to 48 percent last year. And industry analysts say the continuing trend could affect the long-term health of this state's biggest agricultural industry.

Florida is known for the thick, syrupy concentrate packed into small cans, frozen and shipped across the nation and to several European countries. Brazil is the leading producer of bulk juice — the barrels and tankers that fill most of those ready-to-serve cartons, plastic jugs and food-service dispensers.

Brazilian prices for frozen concentrated orange juice are estimated to be about $1,800 per metric ton, more than double the 1986-87 price of $888 per metric ton. The Brazilian shortfall is expected to drive the average U.S. retail price of orange juice in 1988 to a record high of $3.92 per single-strength equivalent gallon — the measurement for reconstituted orange juice in the United States. That price is 16.6 percent higher than the 1987 price of $3.36.

But Florida is in the declining, retail-concentrate side of the business while Brazil serves the growing demand for bulk or chilled juice that supplies the ready-to-serve market.

"These are . . . disturbing trends," said Jerry Rice, director of the citrus juice division of Lykes-Pasco Inc. of Tampa.

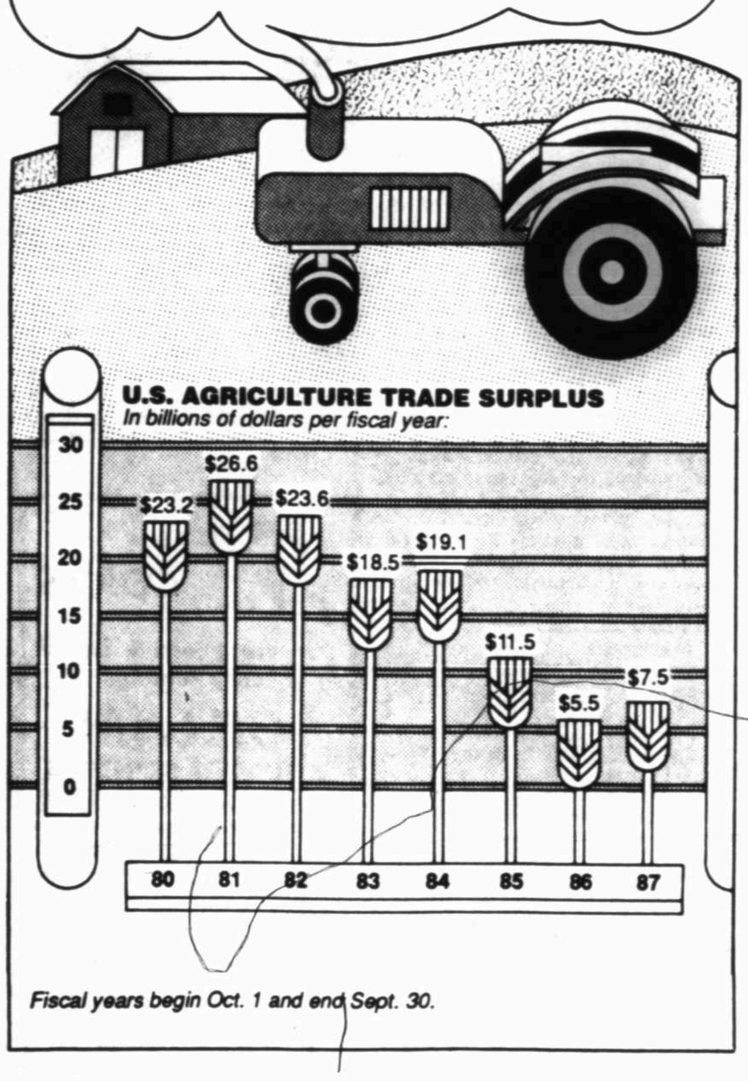
Some want more attention and money spent on bolstering advertising and marketing programs for FCOJ, emphasizing how easy it it to prepare in the home. Others oppose that idea.

U.S. agriculture trade surplus

The U.S. agriculture trade surplus for 1987 increased by $2 billion during 1987, to reach $7.5 billion. This is still far below the $20 billion level seen in the early 1980s, but economists predict the surplus will continue to rise in 1988.



Fiscal years begin Oct. 1 and end Sept. 30.

Winter pruning jobs now at hand

Minzenmayer

It's about that time to begin the winter pruning jobs. Don't prune spring flowering plants, however, early flowering plants bloom as stems that grew last year, pruning tham now would cut off all the flower buds. Instead it is better to prune spring flowering shrubs right after they finish blooming, that way, you will encourage the plants to send out new shoots which will then develop flower buds for next year's show.

Anytime you prune, however, be sure and use the right tools for the job and disinfect the blades between each plant to avoid spreading diseases. (A diluted mixture of household bleach and water can be used as a disinfectant). Small twigs can usually be cut with pruning clippers or shears. Bigger branches will require the use of loopers, while the largest limbs need to be carefully cut with specially designed pruning saws.

We have prepared some guidelines on pruning trees and shrubs, and they are available to you at our office.

We have experienced a very dry winter for the most part, and trees and shrubs need to be kept well-watered. Deeply watered plants are less likely to suffer cold damage than those which have become dried out. Keeping your plants well mulched will also help to conserve soil moisture.

Many of you will be planting new landscape additions soon. No matter what you plant, be sure to dig the planting hole large enough so that each plant's root ball can be surrounded by well-drained organically amended soil. The plants should be set in the ground at the same level they were growing in their containers, and then watered well to remove any air pockets around their roots. Continue watering newly planted shrubs on a regular basis until they become established and begin sending out new growth.

If your fruit trees did not bear like you hoped last season, now is the time to explore the possible causes so you will get better results this year. The location of your fruit trees, plants surrounding them, their age, and the general care they receive can all affect how much fruit they produce. While there are exceptions, it generally takes two to five years from the time apple and apricot trees are planted until they bear; two to four years for fig and peach trees. One way to cut one to two years off the bearing time for almost all trees is to choose dwarf selections, which usually start producing fruit sooner. The amount of cold weather our area has each winter can also affect the fruit bearing ability of your trees. Some plants, especially apples, peaches, and cherries, require a certain amount of cold weather (known as chilling hours) each year to produce fruit.

Markets elated by trade news

NEW YORK (AP) — A 25 percent drop in the monthly U.S. trade deficit propelled stocks, bonds and the dollar's value sharply higher in frenetic financial markets this morning.

The announcement by the Commerce Department that the November deficit fell to $13.2 billion from $17.6 billion in October electrified traders and incited some of the biggest buying waves since the October stock market crash.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which dropped 8.62 points Thursday, gained nearly 53 points to 1,969 within the first minutes of hectic trading on Wall Street.

"It's explosive on the upside. The markets took off," said Robert O'Toole, manager of over-the-counter trading at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. in New York. "A lot of guys were gambling it was going to go the other way. They only had a 50-50 chance of being right."

The markets have been obsessed with the monthly statistic because it is perceived as the one of the most visible measurements of American economic health.

Stocks also soared on the London Stock Exchange. The Financial Times 100-share index, down slightly just before the announcement, rose more than 38 points to the 1,777 level.

In early bond-market trading, the Treasury's key 30-year issue rose nearly 2 points or $20 per $1,000 in face amount. Its yield, which moves inversely to price and is an important signal of interest rate trends, tumbled to 8.85 percent from 9.02 percent late Thursday.

The most dramatic immediate reaction was in the foreign-exchange markets, where brokers scrambled to buy dollars. In New York, the dollar traded at 130.60 Japanese yen, up more than 4 yen from late Thursday. It also advanced to 1.6720 West German marks, up from 1.6295 late Thursday.

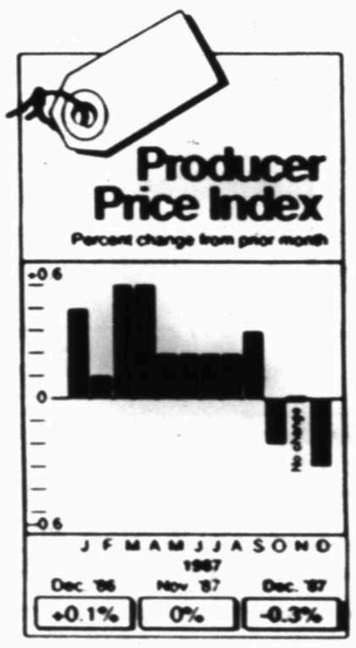
December takes edge off wholesale price increase

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer



WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices rose a modest 2.2 percent in 1987, but plunged 0.3 percent in December, the steepest one-month drop since July 1986, the government said today.

Last year's gain reversed a 2.3 percent decline in 1986. The December drop followed stagnant price activity in November and a 0.2 percent decline in October.

As 1987 ended, a selection of goods costing $10 two decades earlier would have cost $29.68. That compared to $28.89 at the close of 1986.

Spurring last month's decrease, the largest since the 0.8 percent drop in July 1986, were sharp declines in prices of gasoline and home heating oil.

Gasoline prices fell 5.2 percent last month after edging up 0.2 percent in November. Gasoline prices for the year were up 20.6 percent.

Heating oil costs fell 5.1 percent after two monthly gains and rose 24.4 percent for all of 1987.

Those declines reflected a 4.3 percent drop in crude oil prices, sending wholesale energy prices down 1.9 percent after a 0.9 percent November decline. Energy prices overall rose 10.2 percent in 1987.

Natural gas prices last month rose 3.0 percent after dropping by nearly 6 percent in October and November. Natural gas prices fell 4.1 percent for the year.

Analysts said that the December gas-price spurt could be short-lived now that energy prices are falling again.

Prices for new automobiles fell 1.6 percent last month after a 2.2 percent slump in November on pass-through rebates and other incentives offered to dealers by manufacturers.

New, 1988 models actually cost 3.1 percent less last month than 1987 models had in December 1986.

Food prices, meanwhile, fell 1.3 percent in December after rising 0.3 percent in November. For the year, food prices were down 0.2 percent.

The December food price decline was paced by a 23.7 percent drop in egg prices, a 12.6 percent drop in pork costs and an 11.0 percent fall for fruits and vegetables, which had skyrocketed 42.6 percent in the preceding month largely because the California lettuce crop had been devastated by mold and bad weather.

Lettuce prices last month rose 10.5 percent, but had almost doubled in November, rising 95.4 percent. Tomato prices fell 55.8 percent in December after skyrocketing 86.9 percent in the preceding month.

Dallas hosting builders' convention 'good sign'

By JEFF AWALT
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The nation's builders are holding the industry's largest convention ever in one of the most depresessed housing markets, and officials of the National Association of Home Builders hail that as a good sign.

"Even though things are not very good in Texas at the moment, what you're seeing here is the national economy reflected in the housing industry — and it's been pretty steady," spokesman Bill Ellingsworth said as the association prepared for the opening today of a convention expected to draw 60,000 people.

"What this is telling you is that there is a very optimistic group of people out there. Not only exhibitors, but builders and manufacturers," Ellingsworth said. "That's not a sign of anything but optimism. These people are bullish on housing."

More than 1,000 U.S. and foreign exhibitors will cover an estimated 370,000 square feet of space in the third year of Dallas' largest trade show. Many are first-time exhibitors, and some have returned to the annual convention after a long absence.

Rolscreen Corp., for instance, returned with the show's only outdoor exhibit — a 6,800-square-foot house built in sections and completed just outside the downtown convention center at a cost of about $1.5 million.

"It's the first time they've been in a show in 17 years and they wanted to make a big impression," said Jim Harrell of Heritage Display Group, a company that has worked since September on the exhibit for Rolscreen, which makes Pella windows.

When the show ends Monday, workers will begin unbolting the display, part of which will be used at next year's show in Atlanta, Harrell said. The other sections may be sold to a local builder.

"This would make a great site, but I think the price may be a little high," Harrell said. "Just to rent this piece of ground long enough for the show is going to cost more than $100,000."

Despite the optimism from association officials, there also is agreement that many builders and manufacturers are attending the convention because their business is not good.

"When business is real good, people have a lot of money to come in here and put up displays," Harrell said. "But when business is bad, people want to maximize their exposure in the show and sometimes they spend even more money doing it."

In the Dallas area, which ranked No. 1 in the nation's building activity in the early 1980s, the number of residential building permits issued has plunged from about 71,000 through the first 11 months of 1983 to 13,429 during the same time in 1987.

"A lot of people are coming into this show making a lot of money," Ellingsworth said. "But we've also got people coming in from areas that are not doing well, and they're coming in for the seminars. It's an interesting mix."

Whatever the reasons, the show is a boon for the Dallas Convention Center and the city's economy. Downtown hotels are booked solid through the convention, and restaurants and other businesses are looking forward to a windfall through the weekend.

NEW YORK (AP) — A 23-year-old, self-styled financial consultant faces prosecution for mail fraud after agreeing to turn over the fine art, fancy homes and luxury cars the government says he bought with his clients' money.

Federal prosecutors in Manhattan filed a one-count criminal complaint Thursday against David Peter Bloom, who parlayed a college investment club into a $10 million investment business within two years of graduation.

The boyish-looking Bloom was released on bond after an appearance before U.S. Magistrate James Francis IV. Bloom faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine if convicted.

His attorney, Peter H. Morrison, said the mail fraud charge encompassed all of the allegations in a Securities and Exchange Commission civil action brought against Bloom on Monday.

The SEC accused Bloom, who never registered with the agency as required, of diverting for his own use up to $10 million in funds that clients thought he was investing in securities.

According to the SEC complaint, Bloom used the money to buy nearly 40 works of art valued at $4.7 million, an $830,000 Manhattan condominium, a $1.9 million house on Long Island, a 1987 Mercedes-Benz, a 1988 Aston Martin and jewelry, and to pay business and personal expenses.

Bloom settled the SEC action late Monday without admitting guilt, and agreed to hand over all his assets to a court-appointed receiver. He also has been barred for life from the securities industry.

After Thursday's court session, his lawyer repeated his previous claim that Bloom was cooperating with the SEC and the receiver in returning investors' money. "David wants to see everybody made whole," Morrison said.

Bank failure near Abilene Texas' second of year

DALLAS (AP) — The Moran National Bank, which became the second bank in Texas and the third in the nation to fail this year, was plagued by poor management and adverse economic conditions, federal officials said.

Robert J. Herrman, senior deputy comptroller for the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency, declared the bank insolvent Thursday and appointed the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. as receiver.

"Over the past two years, the bank incurred very substantial loan losses which finally exhausted the bank's capital, resulting in its insolvency," he said.

The bank in Moran, 50 miles east of Abilene, had been a concern of the comptrollers office since late 1986, Herrman said.

The bank's problems included inadequate supervision by the board of directors, poor lending practices and a slumping area economy.

The FDIC's board of directors approved assumption of deposits and fully secured liabilities of the Moran bank by People's State Bank of Clyde, FDIC spokesman Bill Oicheski said.

The failed bank's sole office will reopen Friday as a branch of People's State Bank, and its deposits automatically will become deposits of People's subject to the approval of the appropriate court, Oicheski said.

The Moran bank had total assets of about $16.8 million, Hermann said.

People's State Bank will assume about $15.9 million in 2,000 deposit accounts and will purchase substantially all of the failed bank's assets at a discount of $5,789,475, Oicheski said.

Texas' other failed bank this year was the Commerce Bank of Plano on Jan 7. Fifty Texas banks were among the 184 that failed nationally last year.

NEW YORK — A late, heavy flood of buy orders bolstered futures prices for crude oil and oil-related products Thursday, despite reports of widespread price cutting by Middle East producers.

In the crude oil market, the spot February delivery closed up 62 cents a barrel, at $17.21. Frigid weather over large sections of the nation helped lift the spot heating oil contract by 0.61 cent a gallon, to 51.46, and the March delivery by 1.06 cents, to 48.95.

"But heating oil did not pull up crude, during the last hour of wild trading," said Steven Errera, president of Energy Futures Inc. "What may have was the growing confusion over what the cash price of oil is today."

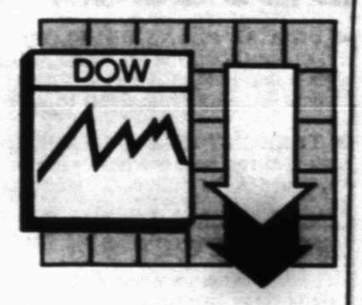
Stock prices slip some, mark time



NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were little changed Thursday, still marking time awaiting Friday's monthly report on the nation's balance of trade.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 8.62 to 1,916.11 after slipping 3.82 in the previous session.

But advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 8 to 7 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 783 up, 695 down and 465 unchanged.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Cap Cities/ABC tunes in to Satellite Music

DALLAS (AP) — Satellite Music Network has completed an agreement allowing Capital Cities/ABC to purchase up to 20 percent of its common stock.

The transaction, which permits Capital Cities to purchase up to 1 million shares of Dallas-based SMN at $4 each, could be the first step in the evntual takeover of the firm, an industry analyst said.

The agreement follows the launching of an advertising sales alliance between ABC Radio Network and SMN. The sales arrangement makes ABC the exclusive advertising sales agent of commerccial air time on SMN's eight music formats.

Navy award means 13,000 jobs for firms

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Navy awarded a team of General Dynamics Corp. and McDonnell Douglas Corp. $4.38 billion to develop the Navy's next-generation attack aircraft, the top-secret Advanced Tactical Aircraft.

GD's Fort Worth Division will perform the work on the contract, and St. Louis based GD and McDonnell Douglas are expected to evenly split the award, GD officials said. The team expects the award to provide about 6,500 jobs at each company.

Texans will see higher poultry prices

DALLAS (AP) — Texans will probably see a five to ten cent increase in poultry prices as a result of a winter storm that killed millions of chickens in Texas and Louisiana, industry officials said.

The Pittsburg-based Pilgrim's Pride — the largest chicken producer in Texas and the sixth largest in the nation — was one of the companies hardest hit by the storm. Officials say 128 of the company's chicken houses were destroyed when ice caused roofs to collapse, and about 500,000 chickens were killed.

COMING SUNDAY

Colder than normal December weather is heating up spot market natural gas prices. Tight seasonal supplies could be a preview of the end of the bubble.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Older home-sellers can cut taxes with exclusion

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I'm selling the house in which I lived until five years ago. I rented the house out to tenants for those five years. I bought my present home more than two years ago — three years after selling the other house. I'm 56 but am told I cannot take advantage of the tax break available to people 55 and older who sell their homes, because I did not live in that house for the three years prior to the sale.

If that is true, is there any way I can put the money into a rollover or something where I won't have to pay income tax on the money I make from the sale?

Doyle

A. It's true and you're stuck with paying tax on your profit from the sale of that house. Your profit is the difference between your "basis" and the proceeds of the sale. Your basis is the price you paid, plus the cost of all additions and improvements, minus any deductions you took on your income tax returns for depreciation during the years the house was rented out.

The rule on this says anyone 55 or older who sells the "principal residence" he or she owned and lived in for three of the five years before the sale can take a so-called "once-in-a-lifetime" exclusion and not pay federal income tax on up to $125,000 of the profit from the sale, providing no such exclusion has been taken since July 26, 1978. You didn't live in that house for three of five years before the sale. You can't use the exclusion.

If you had purchased and moved into a new home within two years before or after the sale of your former home, you would have deferred tax on the profit from the sale of the former home. But you didn't meet that time test.

There's no legitimate way you can get out of paying tax on your profit. No rollover or any other method of tax deferral is available to you. The Internal Revenue Service will get its bite.

Q. We bought our first home in 1951 for $20,000 and sold it in 1973 for $30,000. At the time of that sale, we took the exclusion from tax on our profit, which then was limited to $50,000.

The home we bought in 1973 can now be sold for at least double what we paid for it. If we sell, can we derive any benefit from the exclusion, which now is up to $125,000?

A. Sure. You haven't taken an exclusion since July 26, 1978, so you are eligible to take an exclusion from tax on the profit from the sale of your present home.

The old exclusion, changed by act of Congress on that date in 1978, was available only to homeowners 65 or older. Having used it in 1983, that means you're at least 80 now. For you, the exclusions can be a "twice-in-a-lifetime" thing.

Q. I am past 55 and have lived in my home for more than three years. If I sell my home, I will have a profit of more than $125,000. Can I use both the one-time $125,000 exclusion and defer tax on the rest of the profit by buying another home?

A. Yes. Let's say your basis on your present home is $50,000 and you sell it for $240,000, producing a $190,000 gain. By using the $125,000 exclusion, you reduce your gain to $65,000.

Now, let's say you buy a new principal residence for $200,000. You defer paying tax on the $65,000 by reducing the basis on your new home by that amount. That makes the basis on your new home $135,000 — $200,000 minus $65,000.

You have used the exclusion to eliminate tax on $125,000 of your gain and have deferred tax on the $65,000 balance of that gain.

Q. Can the exclusion and/or deferral of tax on the profit from the sale of a home be applied to the sale of a vacation or "second" home?

A. Nope. Those provisions of the Internal Revenue Code can be used only with a "principal residence," which the IRS defines as "the one you live in most of the time."

PRICES—

Beef and veal prices fell 0.5 percent last month; poultry prices were down 2.4 percent; fish prices were off 0.7 percent.

Moderate increases were reported for cooking oil, rice and bakery products.

The wholesale price calculation excludes services and imports, areas of the economy where price increases have been much more rapid — partly because of the falling dollar — than those for U.S.-finished goods and commodities.

The Consumer Price Index, which includes both imports and services, is due out Wednesday for December and all of 1987. For the first 11 months of 1987, inflation at the consumer level was running at an annual rate of 4.7 percent, more than four times the tiny 1.1 percent increase in 1986.

—Alcoholic beverage prices were up 0.3 percent in December and 0.1 percent for all of 1987.

—Household appliance prices were down 0.2 percent last month but up 0.5 percent for the year.

—Home electronic equipment prices fell 0.3 percent in December and 1.4 percent for the year.

—Furniture costs were up 1.0 percent from November and 3.8 percent over December 1986.

The wholesale price index for consumer goods other than food and energy rose 0.5 percent in December after holding flat over the previous two months and finished 1987 2.1 percent higher than it was a year ago.

Donald Ratajczak, who runs his own inflation surveys as director of economic forecasting at Georgia State University in Atlanta, predicts wholesale price increases will slow to an annual rate of 2.1 percent this year before accelerating to 3.7 percent in 1989.

Bush wins in Michigan; Hart confronts rivals for first time

Associated Press

The Bush forces racked up a solid win in the Michigan caucuses, which were marked by bitterness and marred by walkouts. With 98 percent of the 124 conventions reporting, Bush had 57 percent; Robertson had 22 percent; and Kemp had 17 percent.

As the full Democratic field prepared for its debating debut in Des Moines, Hart seemed certain to be the target of some barbs. When four of the Democrats gathered earlier this week, the absent Hart came under fire from former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt.

Hart's re-entry into the race last month drew a chilly reception from some of the Democrats, once they got over their shock — especially since Hart said he felt compelled to get back in because no candidate of sufficient stature had emerged. Besides, he added, none of the others had adopted his ideas.

The Michigan gatherings were the final step before the state convention, starting Jan. 29, where Michigan's 77 national convention delegates will be selected.

In Wyandotte, Mich., supporters of Kemp and Robertson, meeting in a steakhouse, shut the door to a group of Bush supporters.

Among those barred was Bush's youngest son, Marvin, who said he came to thank those who turned out for his father and was instead kept out by a "couple of bullies."

Robertson charged that the Bush forces sought to "steal our delegation away from us, like trying to take a touchdown back after the game."

"It doesn't look like the tactics of a winner," he said in Laconia, N.H., as the caucuses were about to begin. A Robertson spokesman, Ben Waldman, said afterward some of the delegate selections would be challenged.

Hart Bush

Kemp, also commenting before the caucuses, criticized long, complicated delegate-selection processes — like the one in Michigan.

"It's too back-roomish," he said in Des Moines. "It was designed by Rube Goldberg."

Bush had previously said the Michigan caucuses were "vitally important."

Robertson and Kemp seized control of the state party's central committee a year ago and changed party rules to weaken Bush's chances. The Bush faction successfully fought those changes in court.

Three of the six Republican candidates — Dole, Pete du Pont and Alexander Haig — sat out the Michigan process. Dole quipped that it was the smartest thing he could have done.

But Dole had other complications Thursday. His campaign finance chairman, David Owen, stepped down amid questions about his financial dealings. The action came as Bush continued to pressure Dole about his finances.

Owen's announcement followed word from the Office of Government Ethics that it would look at a real estate transaction involving the blind trust of Dole's wife, Elizabeth. Owen served as a consultant to the trust.

"Dave Owen may have a problem, but that's his problem," Dole said in Iowa. The Doles say they do not know about transactions involving the blind trust.

Owen, for his part, blamed the Bush camp for making management of the blind trust a campaign issue.

Bush said this week he raised concerns about the Iran arms sales, but did not say to whom. He has refused to reveal what he told the president.

The Washington Post and The New York Times both said in today's editions that former White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan recalled Bush's objections to the secret arms sales. The Times quoted Regan spokesman Thomas C. Dawson as saying Bush expressed his concerns in President Reagan's presence.

All seven Democratic contenders were campaigning in Iowa today in advance of tonight's debate, including Albert Gore Jr. The Tennessee senator pulled his campaign out of the state last fall, attacking what he termed its undue significance in the political process.

He said Thursday he hadn't changed his mind about that.

"I have returned to Iowa to take my stand for independence," he said in the Iowa town of that name. "The Iowa caucuses are about as unrepresentative of the Democratic Party nationally as you can get."

In other campaign developments:

— Robertson, campaigning in New Hampshire, picked Hart as the Democrat he would most like to run against. "Too many moral flaws," he said.

— Rep. Richard Gephardt, in his home state of Missouri, said President Reagan's meeting on Wednesday with Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita produced only "more of the same mush this president has come up with on trade."

— Du Pont made campaign appearances in New Hampshire with Education Secretary William Bennett in tow, although Bennett said he isn't endorsing anyone now. The education secretary did say he supports du Pont's proposal to give drug tests to teen-agers getting driver's licenses.

— Jesse Jackson, at a rally in Iowa, said those who say he's not electable are wrong. "My race is self-evident," he said at Drake University. "My leadership is obvious."

— Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn, who decided last year against becoming a Democratic presidential contender, said he hasn't yet decided who to endorse. But he said Gore and Babbitt are "the two I'm looking at right now."

Japan's construction offer doesn't meet Reagan administration needs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Japanese proposal to open its public works programs to American bids falls short of Reagan administration demands, and the United States will consider retaliation if negotiations fail, U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter says.

Yeutter said Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, on his first visit to the United States since taking office two months ago, appears to want to resolve the issue. Yet the plan "is a bit vague in terms of which public works programs are going to be opened up," Yeutter said.

The proposal calls for U.S. builders to penetrate the multibillion-dollar Japanese construction market by forging joint ventures with Japanese companies. Takeshita's government also plans to increase public works spending by 20 percent, presumably fattening whatever share U.S. companies might win.

"Our preliminary judgment is that the proposal...does not meet our needs and that we're going to have some tough, hard negotiations ahead," Yeutter said in a National Public Radio interview Thursday. "We certainly are a ways apart and we'll have to make our own judgment whether retaliatory action will be needed to achieve that objective."

Yeutter's evaluation of the Japanese offer was in contrast to the vague but hopeful terms President Reagan used to describe the plan after meeting with Takeshita for three hours Wednesday.

The trade representative's comments differed even more radically with those of a U.S. official who said Tuesday the construction contract problem was heading for resolution during Takeshita's visit. The official had briefed reporters only on condition of anonymity.

Members of Congress also questioned whether Japan would take additional actions to back Takeshita's pledges to stabilize financial markets, pay more for defense and donate more to needy countries.

Noboru Takeshita

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said after a 40-minute meeting with Takeshita, "New efforts must be made to correct the imbalance of trade between our two nations."

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., a leading advocate of tough measures to trim the $60 billion annual trade deficit with Japan said of Takeshita, "I think he sees the problem."

"But the situation is that prime ministers in the past have made representations to our administration ... but nothing has really come of it," Danforth said.

Resistance to letting U.S. goods into Japan is so entrenched in that nation's economic system that "it takes more than a statement by a prime minister," Danforth said.

Officials of both sides had billed Takeshita's visit as a chance for him to get acquainted with Reagan and perhaps establish the kind of close relationship his predecessor, Yasuhiro Nakasone, was said to have had with Reagan over the past five years.

With that apparently in mind, the president and his wife, Nancy, issued an unscheduled invitation to Takeshita and his wife, Naoko, to have tea Thursday afternoon in the Reagan's private living quarters. The White House said the event would help the two couples get to know each other better.

Earlier, in a speech and question-answer session with reporters at the National Press Club, Takeshita outlined the economic and defense steps Japan is taking.

They include increased contributions to the maintenance of U.S. forces in Japan and to Japan's own defenses, the expenditure of $30 billion to help indebted nations, actions to stabilize the ratio between the dollar and the yen and budgetary measures designed to increase Japan's consumption of foreign goods.

These actions have been sought by the United States, but Takeshita said, "We are embarking on this course upon our own will and initiative, and not merely responding to the requests of others."

"The Japanese-American alliance is now entering a new age in which it must not only serve the interests of our two countries but must also contribute to a better future for the entire world," he said.

The world must be transformed from "a place of confrontation and conflict into a place of dialogue and cooperation," he said. "Let us create a global partnership of Japan and the United States dedicated to peace and prosperity on our planet Earth by combining our efforts to get things done."

Walkouts mark Michigan GOP county caucuses

By GRETEL WIKLE

WYANDOTTE, Mich. (AP) — They barred the doors, they hurled insults, they called the police, they walked out in protest. And — oh yes. They voted.

But even the son of the winner found himself out in the cold when he tried to thank those who turned out for his father.

Vice President George Bush beat out an alliance of conservative opponents Thursday night in the bitterly fought Michigan GOP county caucuses. The gatherings paved the way for selection of the first Republican presidential nominating delegates later this month.

Marvin Bush, Bush's youngest son, said a "couple of bullies" barred him from entering a steak house where backers of Rep. Jack Kemp of New York and former television evangelist Pat Robertson held sway.

Most of the evening's walkouts — at more than 20 caucuses — were staged by backers of Kemp and Robertson, who tried unsuccessfully to tailor party rules to freeze out Bush supporters.

At one point, police were called after pushing and shoving broke out when Bush delegates were left standing outside Elmer's Steak Pit restaurant in sub-freezing temperatures.

— Bob Evans, Bush supporter from Rockwood

"This is incredible," said Randy Barton, 22, of Dearborn. "They let me in other meetings."

Other Bush delegates complained loudly that the tactics were "like the Russians," "fascist," and anti-democratic.

On top of that, convention chairman Perry Christy wanted to charge news reporters $50 to $500 to cover the gathering. No one took Christy, a Kemp supporter, up on it.

Marvin Bush said he was amazed by it all.

"You would think that Jack Kemp, who was elected by the democratic process, would have respect for that process," he said. "Pat Robertson has never held elected office, but he should know better than this."

In East Lansing, backers of Robertson walked out of the GOP meeting in a 1950s-style diner across the street from the Michigan State University campus, after losing a key test vote.

James Muffett, Ingham County coordinator of Americans for Robertson, led about 120 people to a restaurant on the other side of campus to hold their own meeting.

"We declare this convention illegal and null and void," he told the Bush supporters. Then he and his group walked out.

Bork

WASHINGTON (AP) — The bitter debate surrounding Robert H. Bork's rejected nomination for the Supreme Court is about to ignite again, as he takes off his judicial robe to free himself of any restraints against attacking his critics.

The White House announced Thursday that President Reagan had reluctantly accepted Bork's decision to step down from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia after six years, effective Feb. 5.

Bork said that as a sitting judge, he could not respond to what had become "an essentially unanswered campaign of misinformation and political slogans" about his nomination.

"If, as a judge, I cannot speak out against this attempt to alter the traditional nature of the courts, I think it important to place myself where I can," he said in a letter to Reagan.

He said "constraints of propriety and seemliness limit the topics a federal judge may address and the public positions he may advocate." He said he wanted to "to speak, write and teach about law and other issues of public policy more extensively and more freely than is possible in my present position."

Bork's nomination was rejected by the Senate on a 58-42 vote Oct. 23. He insisted on forcing a vote, even though defeat was already certain.

Bork's critics argued that he was an extremist who would turn back the clock on civil rights and civil liberties. His supporters said he was a brilliant jurist and an advocate of reasonable judicial restraint.

"The unprecedented political attack upon you which resulted in the regrettable Senate action was a tragedy for our country," Reagan wrote in a letter accepting the resignation.

Speaking to reporters outside his home Thursday afternoon, Bork said he was "very grateful to the president for his letter to me." And, he said, "There is a lot of misunderstanding of the role of courts in this country and I intend to engage in the debate about what the role of courts is."

A hero of hardline conservatives, Bork was Reagan's first choice to succeed retiring Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. When Bork was defeated, Reagan turned to federal appeals judge Douglas H. Ginsburg, only to have him withdraw after it was disclosed that he had smoked marijuana in the past.

Reagan's third candidate is federal appeals judge Anthony M. Kennedy. He is expected to win Senate confirmation by a wide margin after Congress returns to work later this month.

pallbearer — (noun) A "pallbearer" is one chosen to carry a coffin or casket at a funeral. A "pall" is derived from a Latin word which describes a loose, sleeveless garment such as a robe or cloak. This robe was worn by the ancient Greeks and Romans. When a Greek or Roman emperor, general or statesman died, the "pall" was used to cover his coffin. "Pallbearers," thus, were those who served as helpers at the funeral — each of them holding a corner of the "pall" covering the coffin. Today in the U.S., pallbearer is sometimes an honorary designation, and individuals are chosen because of their friendship or relationship with the deceased.

Deportations make problems for Reagan

By BARRY SCHWEID

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel's deportation of four Palestinian Arabs to Lebanon is putting a crimp in U.S. relations with Jerusalem, but it is unlikely to become a serious problem if the violence in the West Bank and Gaza is contained.

Privately and publicly, the Reagan administration has made it plain to Israel that the United States concurs with the rest of the international community that the deportations were in violation of the Palestinians' human rights.

Administration officials sympathize with Israel's underdog status and admire its determination to live in peace and security and to "pursue its destiny," as Secretary of State George P. Shultz put it last week at a news conference.

But they question the legality of expelling people from their birthplace — all four Palestinians were born on the West Bank — and would prefer Israel use non-lethal means in dealing with violence.

White House and State Department spokesmen on Wednesday expressed "deep regret" over Israel's actions, but declined to pummel Jerusalem publicly.

They took their cue from Shultz, who described U.S.-Israeli ties as "unshakable" despite the disagreement. The spokesmen's relatively mild statements also reflected the overriding concern for Israel's security.

Except for President Reagan's short-lived Mideast peace plan in 1982, the administration has not launched bold initiatives to try to settle the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Shultz has made four trips to the area in his six years as secretary of state. Two of them, in 1983, dealt with the side issue of Lebanon. On the two others, in 1985 and last October, he found no basis for negotiations between Israel and Jordan.

Shultz favors an international peace conference only if it serves as a benign cover for face-to-face negotiations between the two countries and as long as it also involves the Palestinians. Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel and King Hussein of Jordan have been unable to agree on a framework, however.

Yasser Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, called Thursday for a peace conference under U.N. auspices. He implied he would be willing to recognize Israel's right to exist.

"It is a convenient time for an international conference, without preconditions from any party," he said in an interview in Iraq.

"I don't have any early appraisal," State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said. However, he said he was not sure U.S. Mideast policy "would be affected in any way by what I've seen thus far of Mr. Arafat's comments."

Redman said the U.S. approach was "to encourage direct negotiations as the means by which peace can be brought about" and "we have been working to find a way to get to that and that remains our objective."

Asked if direct negotiations would include the PLO if Israel were prepared to do that, Redman said, "I don't want to go into hypothetical or operational details when I don't know exactly what is at issue."

Shultz has supported an undramatic program to improve the "quality of life" for Palestinians on the West Bank. Cooperation between Israel and Jordan has helped raise living standards.

But it has not deterred violence. In the turmoil, and amid Israel's attempt to maintain order, 34 Arabs were killed on the West Bank and in Gaza in the past five weeks.

NATION IN BRIEF

Local governments grow

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of local governmental units has risen over a five-year period due to the creation of special districts organized for limited purposes, the Census Bureau says.

The bureau said Thursday that the United States had no fewer than 83,166 local governments as of 1987, up from 81,780 five years earlier. The 1987 figure includes 29,487 special districts, up 1,409 from five years earlier.

Special districts include those providing for such things as housing and community development, fire protection, drainage and flood control, water supply and soil conservation.

Enlisted Marines eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The commandant of the Marine Corps says every enlisted man and woman in his service should obtain a high school diploma or its equivalent.

Gen. Alfred M. Gray Jr., in a message to all Marine commands late last month and made available Thursday, said he felt strongly that "every Marine, regardless of grade or years in service, (should have) at minimum a valid high school credential."

Gray said all marines without a high school credential will be "identified and counseled regarding suitable education programs." According to the corps, it now appears only 2,239 of the roughly 179,500 enlisted men and women currently on active duty failed to finish high school.

Nofziger trial to begin

WASHINGTON (AP) — Opening arguments are scheduled for Tuesday in the conflict-of-interest trial of former White House political director Lyn C. Nofziger.

The day was set by U.S. District Judge Thomas A. Flanner, who on Thursday completed four days of questioning to pick a pool of 60 qualified candidates from which 12 jurors and six alternates will be selected today.

Nofziger, 63, is accused of violating the Ethics in Government Act by lobbying former White House colleagues within a year of leaving President Reagan's staff.

More students take exams

WASHINGTON (AP) — The College Board says a record 259,222 high school students took its advanced placement exams last year, with two-thirds scoring high enough to qualify for college credit.

Some 7,776 schools, or a third of the nation's high schools, offered advanced placement courses in 1986-87, the board said Thursday. That was 575 more schools than in 1985-86.

The students took 364,616 advanced placement exams in 15 subjects ranging from calculus to chemistry to history to Latin, and 68 percent scored high enough to qualify for college credit or placement in advanced coursework.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Opposition leaders called for a general strike Saturday and a boycott of Sunday's elections to choose a president and National Assembly to show that Haitians reject balloting under the governing junta.

Candidates who had been disqualified because they had ties to the 27-year Duvalier family dictatorship, which ended in February 1986, made a last-minute attempt to get back on the ballot.

The opposition leaders — Sylvio Claude, Marc Bazin, Gerard Gourgue and Louis Dejoie — said Thursday they hoped to disrupt market and transportation activity Saturday, then have a national day of protest Sunday.

"We see a climate of terror and intimidation. The election is based on terror...The Haitian people don't want that," said Claude, leader of the Christian Democrat Party.

Haiti will hold its first presidential elections in 30 years Sunday. An earlier vote, on Nov. 29, was canceled after bands of thugs, apparently with military backing, killed at least 34 people and terrorized polling stations throughout the country.

The military-dominated junta dissolved the independent Electoral Council and set up a new council to manage the vote.

"We want to show in a manner that is unequivocal the firm decision of the Haitian people not to participate in this charade election," said Bazin, leader of the Movement for the Installation of Democracy in Haiti.

The independent station Radio Metropole reported Thursday that dozens of people had been detained in northern and south-coast cities in "a wave of repression."

The radio said that literacy workers, Roman Catholic Church officials and young political activists calling on peasants to boycott the vote had been arrested.

Gourgue spoke at the news conference with Bazin and Claude. The three formed a coalition with Dejoie last month called the Committee for Democratic Agreement that demanded that the junta, led by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, resign and let a provisional government take Haiti to free elections.

The committee unsuccessfully has sought international support for its position, but Gourgue stressed Thursday that all four were opposed to foreign intervention.

"No country can come into another country like a fire department," Gourgue said. "It is clear that is the worst solution that could be considered. We don't want that."

Three days before elections, the government-appointed Electoral Council appeared unorganized and could not produce a list of polling stations. Council executive director Bruny Raphael said voters would not know until Friday afternoon where they should go vote.

Meanwhile, attorneys for pro-Duvalier candidates — including former Finance Minister Clovis Desinor and former army chief-of-staff Claude Raymond — appealed their clients' disqualifications.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Woman confesses to bombing Korean Air jet

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A young woman confessed today she was a communist North Korean agent who helped destroy a South Korean jetliner, killing all 115 people aboard, saying the action was meant to disrupt the 1988 Olympic Games.

Kim Hyon Hui told a nationally televised news conference that she and a male companion placed powerful bombs on a Korean Air plane that was destroyed Nov. 29 over the Andaman Sea near Burma.

"It is natural that I should be punished and killed a hundred times for my sin," the 25-year-old woman said in a barely audible voice.

Ms. Kim said she was ordered to destroy the plane by Kim Jong Il, son and heir of top North Korean leader Kim Il Sung, to scare other nations into staying away from the games, to be held in Seoul in September.

She said she tried to conceal her identity under interrogation to protect Kim Jong Il, who she called "dear leader," and that she took a personal oath of loyalty to him.

"I had denied being involved in the incident to keep secret the authority of the dear leader," she said, during the news conference arranged by the Agency for National Security Planning.

The South Korean government issued a statement demanding that North Korea apologize for the "barbarous" destruction of the plane and punish those involved in the plot.

Tanks called to aid arrest

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The leader of a military uprising last April said he would fight being returned to jail by troops dispatched in tanks and armored vehicles to the country club where he's under house arrest.

Army Chief of Staff Jose D. Caridi on Thursday ordered at least 30 tanks and other military vehicles to Los Fresnos country club, where Lt. Col. Aldo Rico is living.

Military Judge Hugo Beltramino was scheduled to go to the country club today with an order for Rico's return to jail.

The participants in that and subsequent uprisings in Cordoba and Salta demanded an end to prosecution of officers accused of human rights abuses during the 1976-83 military rule. The rebels eventually surrendered.

Rico was originally charged with rebellion, but the charges were reduced to insubordination and he was allowed to leave jail Dec. 30 and stay at the country club.

But the civilian court trying him decided to transfer the case back to a military court, and the military said Thursday it would try Rico.

Mexico to enter games

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico will send a team of athletes to participate in the Winter Olympics games for the first time.

Armando Ayuilar Ponce, president of the Mexican Ice-Skating and Winter Sports Federation, said the Mexican athletes will compete in skating and skiing events at the Feb. 13-28 Olympic Games in Calgary, Canada.
