Austin — Adequacy of planned public school education programs on the dangers of drug abuse drew a challenge last week from Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes as the war on narcotics increase in tempo.

Barnes told newsmen he feels the program can be "redeemed" and straightened out by the beginning of the next school year. He suggested that bona fide authorities on drugs and former addicts should be included among teacher-resource personnel.

Meanwhile, the Lieut. Governor told a narcotics seminar for law officers and prosecutors that Texas is spending far too little money on drug law enforcement.

Gov. Preston Smith, in the opening address to the conference, said the primary obligation of law enforcement is to rid society of pushers who traffic in narcotics for profit. Smith also said education is the key weapon in fighting drug abuse by addicts and experimenters.

Barnes said the new school course on narcotics should be made as "personal" as possible. Both Smith and Barnes agreed that teaching must be done by those who know what they are talking about.

Lieutenant Governor believes that lowering of penalties for first-offense possession of marijuana to misdemeanor would end the reluctance of juries to convict. He reported heavy response to his suggestion, and said that correspondence is running four-to-one in favor of lighter sentences. Pushers, he emphasized, should get tougher punishment than at present.

Spending for enforcement, the Lieutenant Governor claims, could be increased "200, 300 to 400 per cent" without undue burden on taxpayers — by "reevaluation of priorities."

Licensed nursing homes not only have broadened their potential for service and have taken on an increasing role in the health care of the chronically ill, the aged and the convalescent of all ages.

The Texas Nursing Home Association and its members have provided leadership and made important contributions to raising the quality of care with modern facilities and new techniques, the dedication of its people has earned this progressive and rapidly growing profession our confidence and respect.

Therefore, I, as Governor of Texas, do hereby designate the week of May 10-17, 1970 as Texas Nursing Home Week and urge our citizens to visit a nursing home and acquaint themselves with the patients, the staff, the facilities the services rendered and the progress and potential for the future."
