EL SALVADOR DEMONSTRATION. Thousands of demonstrators protesting U.S. intervention in El Salvador Saturday stormed through downtown streets of Frankfurt, West Germany, smashing windows and shouting "Yankees go home." The phot shows demonstrators who demand with their banner "No second Vietnam in Central America." The organizer of the event was the Munich based El Salvador Information Bureau.

Panic, uncertainity of those affected 'can rip your guts out'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The callers can be counted by the thousands, from Anchorage, Alaska, to San Juan, Puerto Rico. Some are crying, others cursing, many begging.

They are the people who were promised federal jobs only to be left out in the cold by President Reagan's hiring freeze.

"The panic, the uncertainty can rip your guts out," says a government official on the answering end of many calls. He requests anonymity, saying, "We've literally had threats on our lives."

Reagan's hiring freeze, backdated to Nov. 5, is designed to symbolize the administration's intent to cut federal spending. It also is the opening move in a promised campaign to reduce the government's size.

But for thousands of potential employees, the freeze is proving an agonizing shock. And for bureaucrats who must administer the program, it is creating turmoil.

"Officials are still trying to figure out how this all will operate," says an Office of Personnel Management spokeswoman.

"We have to sit here and tell these people, 'Gee, I don't know,' when we're asked about jobs," says another official.

Even the number of people affected by the freeze appears uncertain, with officials offering only an estimate of about 20,000.

Almost immediately after the hiring freeze was signed last weekend, court challenges were filed, congressional offices began to protest and personal horror stories materialized.

—A young woman in Tulsa, Okla., came here with the promise of a job as a key-punch operator at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, a federal institution. She put most of her money toward a security deposit on a new apartment and had enough left for two weeks of groceries. Suddenly, she didn't have a job.

—A middle-level bureaucrat working for the federal Bureau of Land Management in Utah quit for a higher-paid post in another agency. He sold his home, loaded his family into a motor home and took off for the Lake Tahoe region on California's border. Half-way there, he received word that his job was gone.

"When he called (us), he was hysterical, alternately screaming and crying," recalls a government official. "We were sympathetic, but he said, 'God damn it, I don't need sympathy, I need help.'"

—Thirty-year-old Bruce Merchant of Fort Wayne, Ind., is a recreation specialist who plans to get married next month. On Jan. 21, he received a letter instructing him to report for work Feb. 2 at a federal prison in Oxford, Wis. He and his fiancee, who had quit her job, drove the 200 miles to Oxford last Sunday. They rented a house, installed a telephone, enrolled her 10-year-old child in school and even changed their mailing address.

On Wednesday, the couple returned to Fort Wayne only to be informed that the position was frozen.

"I have no job, neither does my fiancee," Merchant said. "We're at the government's mercy."

The freeze, which is much tougher than one imposed by former President Carter last year, applies to "all departments and establishments and to all types of appointments, temporary as well as permanent, except for certain exempted positions."

It will not affect people who actually have begun new jobs; only those promised positions and others who anticipate federal employment. Nor will it impact the U.S. Postal Service, executive-level jobs or non-career positions in the government's Senior Executive Service.

People like Merchant probably are not covered by the exemptions, which apply to jobs that protect life and property, and for medical, hospital and other health-care operations.

Demonstrators in West Germany protest U.S. aid to El Salvador

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Thousands of demonstrators protesting U.S. military aid to El Salvador stormed through central Frankfurt on Saturday, smashing windows and shouting "Yankees Go Home!".

Demonstrators also attacked American-owned autos, slashing their tires or throwing plastic bags of paint at them, witnessess said.

The Munich-based El Salvador Information Bureau, organizers of the demonstration, had predicted 2,000 people would show up to protest U.S. support for El Salvador's ruling civilian-military junta, which is under attack from leftist revolutionaries as well as rightists.

But witnesses and police estimated the crowd at about 15,000. Some carried signs and banners reading "Americans out of El Salvador!" and "No Second Vietnam in Central America!"

One banner, similar to those seen during the Vietnam war years, said "USA — SA — SS," likening the United States to the Nazi stormtrooper organizations. The slogan also was painted on streetcars and subway cars.

More than 10,000 U.S. military personnel are stationed in the Frankfurt area, many of them driving cars distinguished by green license plates. Extra guards were stationed at the gates of U.S. installations.

Some demonstrators threw stones through windows of banks and auto dealerships, but no injuries or arrests were immediately reported.

Most of the demonstrators were West Germans, and many of them appeared to be young people or students, witnesses said.

Officials said the large turnout was not unusual for Frankfurt, a university town with a strong leftist movement which often voices support for international revolutionary causes.

The officials said the El Salvador Information Bureau was a private group of Salvadorans and West Germans sympathetic to the leftist movement in the violence-torn Central American nation.

The El Salvador Human Rights Commission reported more than 13,000 people killed in 1980 by the bloody power struggle between leftists and rightists in El Salvador.

The United States has offered $5 million in military aid to the ruling junta in El Salvador to help it fight leftist guerrillas.

Joyous receptions for returning hostages reach Main Street, U.S.A.

By DAVID L. LANGFORD
Associated Press Writer

Echoes of the joyous receptions given the 52 liberated hostages in Washington, D.C., and New York reached Main Street, U.S.A., on Saturday as the homefolk welcomed back the neighborhood kid who became a hero by way of captivity in Iran.

The bands played on in such places as Homer, Ill.; Culpeper, Va.; Johnstown, Pa.; Balch Springs, Texas, and San Diego as Americans with something finally to cheer about refused to let the party end.

But a sour note was sounded as Vietnam veterans who got a cold shoulder on their return from the war marched in protest to the disparity in the way they were treated.

"I was as proud as anybody else when the hostages got off that plane in Algiers," said Greg Steele, an Air Force veteran who organized a two-mile march of about 300 ex-servicemen and their families from the Veterans Administration Hospital to the downtown War Memorial in Indianapolis. "But this all has to be put into perspective."

Steele, a 33-year-old personnel worker, told the crowd at the War Memorial that the purpose of the march was to "honor the memory of the eight commandos who died in an aborted rescue mission in Iran," and also to "to reiterate the need for employment benefits and better medical care for Vietnam-era veterans."

In Los Angeles on Friday, while 22 of the returning hostages were being honored with a ticker-tape parade in New York City, Ron Kovic, 34, a Vietnam veteran confined to a wheelchair from wounds that cost him the use of both legs, told a news conference that "Americans should widen their perspective from those 52 to the millions of kids who have problems today because they didn't get that kind of reception when they got home."

At the largest park in San Diego, California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., Mayor Peter Wilson and other dignitaries joined the homecoming fete for Richard Morefield, 51, former U.S. consul general in Tehran, along with his wife, Dorothea, and their four children.

Marine Sgt. Paul Lewis, 23, was honored in his hometown of Homer, Ill., a farming community of 1,400 where he was a football star and a homecoming king. Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson was in the reviewing stand as Lewis rode in a parade on a 1939 fire truck led by an American Legion color guard, a detachment of Marines and the Homer High School Band. At the end of the ceremony, 1,000 helium-filled balloons were released into the air.

In New York City, after two days of Manhattan high life and a tumultuous ticker-tape parade witnessed by an estimated 2 million people, 22 hostages were given a buffet breakfast farewell.

Barry Rosen, a Brooklyn-born hostage, said he was "flabbergasted" by the reception in his hometown.

"I just thought we would come back and it would be a very quiet return," Rosen said. "I am very grateful to New York and all Americans."

Union compromise on workweek, wins concessions on information

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's independent labor leaders threw their full support Saturday behind the unionization effort of private farmers after the government made clear it would not permit registration of the so-called "Rural Solidarity" union.

The deadlock set up the possibility of another round of confrontations this week between government and labor leaders.

The two sides held 12 hours of negotiations overnight in an effort to halt a wave of wildcat strikes protesting the government's failure to honor immediately all the provisions of settlements that ended last summer's nationwide strikes.

At the conclusion of the talks early Saturday, union spokesmen announced they had failed to resolve the issue of the farmers' union and that they had backed off from union demands for an immediate five-day workweek. But union leaders said the government had agreed to allow them access to the news media.

In an interview over Warsaw Radio Saturday night, Lech Walesa, leader of the 10 million member Solidarity labor federation, said the farmers "should not be impeded" in their efforts to unionize.

"As far as we are concerned ... we shall always be with them and give them maximum assistance," he added.

Earlier, in an interview with The Associated Press, government Presidium member Andrzej Cierniewski and several of his colleagues said they saw "no chance" the government would be ready to compromise on the farmers' issue.

Cierniewski claimed that Polish Premier Jozef Pinkowski was "not authorized" to give a clear answer on the Rural Solidarity issue, but did not elaborate.

Some checking accounts give bonus of interest

BY SHEILA ECCLES
Staff Writer

They may look like a checking accounts and may be used like checking accounts, however, there may be an added plus to these accounts, in the form of 5¼ percent interest compounded monthly.

Pampa banks and savings institutions are now able to offer customers another way to look at the way they withdraw money for daily transactions.

The NOW accounts, as they are called nationally, are actually negotiable orders of withdrawal.

"The NOW accounts are technically a form of a draft, but they act just like a checking account that draws 5¼ interest monthly," Security Federal Savings and Loan President Aubrey Steele said.

"In 1980 the U.S. Congress passed the legislation necessary to allow states the power to offer the NOW interest bearing checking accounts," Steele said.

"Each banking institution has its own name for the NOW account type of checking. Security Federal is using the term Security Checking," Steele said.

"The only federal regulation on the accounts is that the account cannot pay more than the 5¼ percent interest," Senior Vice President of Security Federal Ed Sweet said.

"The local interest in the NOW checking accounts has greatly exceeded our expectations," Steele said.

"We are currently using $200 as a base minimum necessary to receive interest from the accounts. If a customer maintains a balance of $200 there will be no service charge and no charge per check, plus the 5¼ interest," Sweet explained.

The Security Checking brochure from Security Federal claims the $200 balance is a way to free checking. If a customer balance drops below the $200, a service charge of $4 will be added to the monthly statement. Citizens 65 or older receive free checking services regardless of monthly balance.

"Although we in savings and loan institutions are just starting to work with checking accounts, we have been preparing for over two years for the NOW accounts," Sweet said.

Security Federal has hired one extra person, one extra banking terminal and a customer information service counter to speed up the process of the added checking business.

"No increases in costs have been made in any other services at the bank. We have many of our previous customers and many new customers involved in the NOW accounts," Sweet said.

"The concept of the NOW accounts started in the early 1970s in New England and we have found that the New Englanders did not use their checking accounts as much as the people in Pampa do," Steele said. "As a matter of fact we are now in mid-January, where we felt we would be at the end of the year with these accounts," Steele said.

According to Sylvia Porter's New Money Book for the 80's, "The NOW accounts could both hurt and help investors, depending on several factors - check-writing habits and how much money kept in a checking account. If a customer is accustomed to writing many checks while holding low balances, they could end up paying more in service charges than received in interest.

"In short, if institutions offering NOW accounts decide to charge more for the services they provide a customer could receive pennies in interest while spending dollars in service fees."

Luther Robinson, executive vice president of First National Bank explained, "We have offered the Checking Plus Interest, accounts and we have had good response from our customers to the NOW accounts."

In the brochure from First National Bank the 5¼ percent interest will be paid on accounts if a $800 minimum balance or a $1,600 average balance is maintained. If the required balances have not been maintained, all interest will be forfeited and a $3 service charge plus $.12 per check will be charged.

"We pay the same interest for savings account as for the NOW accounts," Robinson said, "So many are combining the two accounts, thus saving the checking service charge and making the same interest."

"There is one good way to look at the NOW accounts, a checking account is actually the cheapest bookeeping system available to the average customer.

"Many customers have small savings accounts through the bank, below $100 and we are now charging a $1 service charge on them monthly," Robinson said.

"The First National Bank computor is operated through Amarillo and each savings account is computed at a cost to the bank, thus the service charge on the smaller savings accounts," Robinson said.

"The paper load is stifling the banking business," Robinson said, "and we are looking at a time when the banking business will move toward charging for services rendered."

"The debit card type of banking may be the way of the future," Robinson said.

The debit card is a part of the computer technology changes of the financial habits of America.

"With electronic funds transfer (debit card) allows the shopper to pay for goods and services at retail stores by using a plastic card inserted into an electric terminal. Savings or checking accounts are charged electronically. Thus, shoppers carry less or even no cash," according to Sylvia Porter.

"It may take some time for that type of futuristic banking to arrive in Pampa but not actually that long," Robinson said.

"It is now being used in the Houston area," Robinson said.

Centennial Savings Checking Account also a form of the NOW account offers customers, the 5¼ annual interest compounded every day.

Minimum balance for the Savings Checking Account is $1,000 for free, no service charge or an average balance of $1,500 or more. For accounts with less than the $1,000 minimum a service charge of $4 is levied. However, 5¼ percent interest is paid on any checking balance.

Offering NOW accounts has drawn new customers to Centennial Savings and added some convenience for previous customers, bank employees said.

"The elderly like to keep more in their checking accounts for any emergencies that may arise, so the NOW account is better for them," Centennial employees said.

Citizen's Bank also has offered the NOW accounts and has experienced, "Moderate interest in the service," Bank Vice President Steve McCullough said.

"The checking accounts with interest is actually a situation where the banks will have to charge the customer for the service by hiking service charges and interest rates on loans made at the same bank."

"We, as banking officials do not want the situation to cause the higher charges in other areas. For years, banks have held down the interest payments on savings accounts in order to hold down loan interest rates.

"So now, interest rates to borrowers will have to ultimately increase," McCullough said.

"It ends up that banks are rewarding savers at the expense of the borrowers. It takes today, five savers to equal the interest paid from the borrowers," McCullough said.

McCullough explained that it takes a minimum of $1,000 in a checking account for the bank to break even.

The sentiment from McCullough echoes those made by other banking officials, customers will eventually pay for service rendered by the banking industry.

"Banks are a business, just like any other business, when our cost of goods goes up, in this case money, our cost of service must therefore follow by going up."

"It seems that at this time, for the ecomony, it would be better to keep costs of money, by paying lower interest costs, down. Thus allowing money to the borrowers to be available at moderate costs. If money can be availble to the borrowers they can go forward with several projects, thus aiding the economy both local and national," McCullough said.

The cheering stops, problems go on

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cheering stops. Problems do not, memories do not, life must not.

The 52 Americans now exhilarated by freedom at last from Iran will find that, each in his or her own way. So say men who should know: the POWs who returned from Vietnam almost eight years ago to like cheers and adulation.

"There's going to be some personal letdown," says Michael Christian, six years a prisoner in North Vietnam. "There's the feeling of being free, the exhilaration. But somewhere down the line, they're going to have to slow down and just be normal."

Christian and the hundreds of others held for years in Vietnamese prison camps have been reminded in recent days of their own deliverance from exile. They came back to applause, to a changed society, and ultimately to daily routine.

Many had problems. There were suicides, broken marriages, anger at Americans trying to forget a war that divided a nation.

Not all the POWs had serious troubles, of course, and the hostages' experiences were different. They were not away as long. They return to an America changed perhaps but not transformed in turmoil. Their plight united, not divided.

Still there are similarities.

Last week when Marine Sgt. Johnny McKeel of Balch Springs, Texas, returned to the United States he said he first wanted to get back to "chasing women."

In 1973 when Aig Force pilot John Nasmyth came back from Vietnam he told a reporter all he wanted was "a steak, a martini and a good woman."

In Iran as in Vietnam, there was deprivation, isolation, torture and the real possibility of death.

And, says John Flynn of San Antonio, as a colonel the highest-ranking American imprisoned in Vietnam: "You can have as much trauma in one or two years as you can in seven."

Whether the hostages face the most serious problems of the POWs — divorce, suicide, disillusionment — can't be foretold. But the former prisoners in Vietnam feel the hostages will share at least the problem of readjustment and the lessons learned from Vietnam could help them through it.

As with the hostages, the POWs' return was filled with emotional reunions, parades, greetings from the president, reporters' questions. They don't remember all of it fondly.

"You appreciate the acclaim and everything else that goes on but it wears thin," says Ernest Brace, who spent eight years imprisoned after being captured in Laos while a civilian pilot for the government.

Alfonso Riate, a Marine sergeant six years a prisoner, says of the hostages: "I don't really think they should be going through what they're going through right now with the press, similar to what the POWs went through.

"We weren't ready for it," he says. "These people are being hit with this ... and that's not good in my opinion."

Adds Edison Miller, captured as a Marine, "Any of them who are prone to any depression, that will sift in after all the whoopin' and hollerin' slows down."

Miller, of Santa Ana, Calif., recalls his first problem as getting over isolation.

"You're in an environment where the guards tell you not to make any noise and all of a sudden you get home and everybody's shouting and hollering and talking at the same time," he says. "Even now the din will just be driving me nuts and I just want to walk away and say, 'Everybody quiet down!'"

Ex-POW Christian, now manager of an "urban cowboy" bar in Virginia Beach, Va., also remembers what seemed a burst of activity, what he called "many stimuli that can cause you to have extremes of emotion."

"Everything is great," he says. "Then there are terrible depressions."

He warns the hostages: "When you're on a real high, don't go jumping off buildings because you think you can fly. In the lows, don't slit your wrists."

New administrator at Leisure Lodge

More community involvement is a primary objective of the new Leisure Lodge Administrator, Marie Martin. Mrs. Martin assumed administrative duties of the nursing home Jan. 5 of this year.

"I would like to see Leisure Lodge become more active in the community," the dimunitive woman with peppered gray hair commented.

"I think the community here is marvelous as far as involvement goes," she added.

Mrs. Martin was transferred to the Pampa Leisure Lodge from another home owned by the chain in Rotan. She was also administrator of the Rotan Leisure Lodge.

Trained in Pampa and Childress for administrative position, Mrs. Martin said her expertise is more in the business end of caring for residents of Leisure Lodge.

"I let the nurses do the nursing," she said.

The administrator said she sees that the home runs smoothly, working closely with the nursing and dietary staffs. She interviews residents and their families, as well as serving as a liaison between the nursing home and the community.

Mrs. Martin said she tries to be personally involved by seeing each resident on a daily basis.

"I just heard we have 13 residents in their 90s here in Pampa," she said, smiling.

Although, the Lodge currently has no century age patients, the age span of the 76 Leisure Lodge residents ranges from the 50s to the 90s, she said.

As a note in passing, Mrs. Martin remarked that she and the residents are preparing for the upcoming "Rock and Roll Jamboree" fund raiser scheduled for Feb. 14.

Mrs. Martin and her husband, Harry Martin, moved to Pampa two years ago from Colorado. The couple have two children, Vickie, 21, of Colorado and Mark, 20 of Pampa.

Lions give $10,000 to Borger Girlstown campus

AMARILLO — The Lions Club International Foundation (LCIF) has approved a $10,000 grant to Girlstown, U.S.A. to assist in the rebuilding and refurnishing of the administration building at the Borger Girlstown campus.

The building was destroyed by fire the morning of March 22, 1980. It was described by officials as a total loss.

The grant will be used to supplement donations from persons throughout the Panhandle and South Plains which have already been given to the organization.

Past Lions District Governor Larry Fuller, District 2T - 1 LCIF Chairman, presented the $10,000 check to Robert Wilson, Borger Girlstown superintendent, during the noon luncheon of the District's mid - winter conference at the Ramada Inn, Saturday.

Also present for the award were Girlstown Board of Directors members, Mrs. Peg Anthony of Borger and Ernie Houdashell of Amarillo.

Last Vietnam battle in courtroom

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — The last battle of the Vietnam war will be won or lost this week in a tiny courtroom echoing with tales of torture and death, and of insanity, betrayal and the survival of the fittest.

The U.S. government argues that Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood, 34, who spent nearly half his life in Vietnamese captivity, deserves to spend the rest of it in an American military prison because he collaborated with the communists.

His defense lawyers contend the tall, darkly handsome Marine was driven insane in captivity. Final arguments in the court-martial will be heard Monday and the case will go to a five-man jury.

Fellow prisoners of war, both American and Vietnamese, have traveled to this Marine base in the Carolinas to testify at the only jury trial of a Vietnam POW. They have vividly recreated in testimony the cruel life of captivity in the jungle prison camps of South Vietnam where 35 percent of all American captives died.

Garwood, a Marine jeep driver, 19 years old when captured near Danang in 1965, was first seen by living American POWs in 1967. By then, according to Army enlisted man Gustauve A. Mehrer, Garwood was living with the Vietnamese ca0 in my opinion he was a White Vietnamese."

Judge R.E. Switzer, a Vietnam veteran, has dismissed charges that Garwood deserted in time of war, solicited American troops to throw down their arms, and maltreated a fellow prisoner by verbally abusing him. But the Marine magistrate let stand the key charge of collaboration, and another that Garwood struck a fellow American POW.

One of the most effective government witnesses was Capt. Harold Floyd Kushner, an Army doctor who shared a Quang Ngai POW camp with Garwood in 1968. He testified the Marine apparently overheard a remark the doctor made comparing the Vietnamese with Japanese captors, and informed on him to the camp commander, resulting in punishment. But under cross-examination Kushner admitted another prisoner also had an opportunity to inform on him.

Throughout the trial, suggestions have surfaced of duplicity and betrayal involving others than Garwood. Published accounts of life in these camps indicate a breakdown in leadership and discipline because of cruel treatment.

But defense lawyers decided not to rake across these raw wounds, and declined to put their man on the witness stand. Faced with serious charges the moment he stepped into the free world in 1979.

DWAYNE L. SMITH, son of Mr. and Mrs. Irl Smith of Pampa, was recently honored with the "Employee of the Year" award by the Rotary Club of Spearman, during the annual Spearman Chamber of Commerce. Smith has been employed as an announcer and engineer with the KBMF-FM radio station in Spearman since 1966, handling most of the sports broadcasting. He is actively involved in the Masonic Lodge, having served in most of the offices.

Officials fear rabies outbreak

LEAKEY, Texas (AP) — An increasing number of confirmed cases of rabies in a six-county area of South Texas has Texas Health Department officials fearing another epidemic of the deadly virus.

While no human deaths have been reported, the number of confirmed animal cases is "alarming," said Dr. Elmer Herndon, a Camp Wood veterinarian who operates the only animal clinic in three counties.

"This is the worst outbreak of rabies I've seen in this part of the country," he said. "I would have to call it an epidemic."

Herndon said about 30 cases had been confirmed by his clinic and that he knows of "some 30 to 44 cases not tested for one reason or another. I suspect there are about that many more unreported cases as well."

Last year, 18 animals were found to be rabid in Edwards and Uvalde counties, and the Health Department reported additional cases in Val Verde, Kinney, Bandera and Real counties.

A cold winter or a drought-plagued summer can bring on a high concentration of rabies in wild animals because they must do more to find food, Herndon said.

"There is about a six- to eight-week period during both summer and winter when reported rabies cases filter in, but not usually that many," he said. "...We have been confirming cases every month for almost a year now."

A number of domestic animals also have contracted rabies in recent months, he added. He said he knows of at least 12 people taking painful serum injections because of bites by rabid animals.

Moore not reappointed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Richmond rancher Hilmar Moore said Saturday he is not surprised that Gov. Bill Clements is looking for a new chairman for the Board of Human Resources.

Moore's six-year term on the board was marked by two recent controversies: his suggestion that able-bodied welfare recipients be sterilized, and his involvement in an ongoing scuffle over the state Medicaid contract.

Clements said Friday he would replace Moore within 30 days. Moore's term expired Jan. 19.

"It doesn't particularly surprise me," Moore said of Clements' decision. "I'd like to finish some things, but I'll sure shed no tears over it."

In a telephone interview from his home, Moore mentioned the Medicaid contract as one of the things he had hoped to clear up before he left office.

A few days before his term ended, Moore led the three-member board in voting to extend H. Ross Perot's contract for the state's $2 billion Medicaid program. Last July, Moore and the board voted to give the contract to Bradford National Corp., a move that a consultant said would save the state up to $41 million.

After Perot visted Moore in Richmond, Moore changed his mind and decided Perot's bid was better.

That decision spawned an uproar that probably will end in a courtroom.

Moore attracted protesters to board meetings after he suggested sterilizing some welfare recipients. The comment brought national attention and an apppearance on national television.

Trooper assaulted, suspect sought

LAWN, Texas (AP) — Law enforcment officials have called in a helicopter and started a house-to-house search in this West Texas town in search of a man who reportedly beat a DPS trooper and took his patrol car.

"We're bringing in a helicopter," a DPS spokesman in Abilene said early today. "We feel like we got the area sealed off. We are doing a house-to-house search."

The small town is located about 25 miles south of Abilene.

Trooper Jay Moses, 31, of Coleman, was found lying alongside U.S. 283 south of Santa Anna shortly before 10 p.m. Friday night by deputies who had been sent to search for him after he failed to check with a DPS dispatcher.

His patrol car was found about two miles away. The trooper's .357 magnum service revolver was also take.

Moses was treated at a Lawn hospital Friday night for a mild concussion and released, hosptial officials said.

Officials said the were searching for a 33-year-old man believed to be the owner of a pickup Moses had stopped shortly before the incident occurred.

The vehicle was spotted at a roadblock Friday night, but its driver managed to escape after fleeing on foot. DPS officer Wendall Reahm said shots were fired when the pickup was stopped, but said no one was injured.

He said Moses was beaten, disarmed and his patrol car taken from him after he began chasing a pickup truck about 9:30 p.m. Friday on U.S. 283 south of Santa Anna.

Warm, enthusiastic welcome given former Texas hostage

BALCH SPRINGS, Texas (AP) — Thousands lined the streets of this Dallas suburb in chilly, damp weather Saturday to give a warm, enthusiastic welcome home to former hostage Marine Sgt. Johnny D. McKeel Jr.

The parade wound through Balch Springs for several miles past McKeel's parents' home and ended at a discount store parking lot. There, an official welcoming ceremony was attended by several thousand people who braved near-freezing temperatures, a brisk wind and light mist to honor McKeel.

It was a typical Texas parade, complete with marching bands, beauty queens, politicians, equestrian units, clowns and celebrities.

Politicians attending the parade included U.S. Rep Jim Mattox, D-Dallas, state Rep. Ted Lyons, D-Mesquite, Dallas County Judge Garry Weber, Balch Springs Mayor Billy Wood and representatives of the governors of Texas and Louisiana.

The Dallas Cowboys cheerleaders, Cowboys running back Tony Dorsett and defensive end Ed "Too Tall" Jones also took part in the parade.

High school bands from several cities, including Dallas, Mesquite and Seagoville, marched in the parade.

One of the leading units of the parade was a Marine Corps band.

Many units represented veterans organizations, the Hella Shrine and various other civic organizations.

Some of the loudest applause was for an entry from the Dallas AMVETS organization, a veterans group.

On the back of a pickup was a gallows, complete with a rope tied with a hangman's knot. A sign on the gallows read, "Reserves for Ayatollah Khomeini," referring to the leader of Iran's revolution.

Some people lined up three hours before the parade started, and stores along the route were doing a land office business selling blankets, stocking caps and coffee.

"I don't even like coffee. I'm just using it to warm my hands," one woman said.

The cold weather that blew in Saturday followed several days of temperatures in the 70s. Police said the drizzly cold apparently deterred about half the 50,000 they had expected at the parade.

McKeel, who rode in a convertible with his mother, Wynona, was presented with an American flag from Mattox and a Texas flag from Alan Clark, who represented Gov. Bill Clements' office. He was made an honorary citizen of both Louisiana and New Orleans by Linda Keeton, who represented Gov. David Treen.

The former hostage also was given the key to the city of Balch Springs by Wood and was honored by the Balch Springs Chamber of Commerce as citizen of the year.

For McKeel, perhaps, one of the high points of the day came in an award from the Dallas Cowboys cheerleaders.

McKeel, who drew a great deal of attention at earlier news conferences when he said he wanted to resume "chasing women," was hugged and kissed by each of the cheerleaders.

The cheerleaders also presented him with a T-shirt autographed by all of them and a Dallas Cowboys jersey with his name and the number "1" on it.

After all the presentations were made, McKeel simply said, "Thank you and God bless you."

Policewoman claims policemen are petty

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sandy Slater, a five-year Austin Police Department veteran, says she's had enough of her male cohorts' complaints about earrings, hair and bell-bottom pants.

Office, Slater, tired of male pettiness, hung up her badge Saturday.

"We've (women) been down there five years now, and I can't see myself doing that when I'm 50. It wasn't the place for me any more. I'm tired of the fight. I don't think in my lifetime I'll see the sexist attitude eradicated," she said.

Mrs. Slater, 30, was one of the first females on the Austin police force.

"If someone else wants to come in and take up the fight, fine. I'm all for it. But I don't need that kind of stuff any more," she said.

That "stuff" included incessant sexist remarks, Midol jokes and lack of confidence in a female's ability to do the job.

"You always feel you're being stared at. You keep hearing about sergeants who don't want women on their shift. People are always making cracks about your appearance. When the dress and grooming code came out, and women could wear earrings and their hair longer than the men could, the guys just screamed," she said.

"When women finally got pants issued that were made for women, they turned out to be bell-bottoms, and the guys on the force had a fit. I never knew men could be so petty," she said.

Mrs. Slater's husband joined the force the same time she did.

"I remember waiting in the office after we got accepted. All the guys would walk back and forth, talking to themselves and staring. It was the biggest farce you'd ever seen," she said.

Her husband supported her decision to resign.

"I thought I'd thought of out all the disadvantages there could possibly be," she said. "But when we got in, we were so happy just to be there I guess we overlooked all the sexism."

That was the reaction when she made the jump from street patrol to officer training school after a year.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

Local opinion

What's at stake in vehicles ordinance

With the welcomed and long - awaited release of the hostages and their return home, we've heard a lot of talk about "freedom." But from comments made by Pampans during the week, in response to last Sunday's editorial opposing the city's proposed abandoned vehicles ordinance, we've discovered a lot of people don't really know what freedom is — or what it's all about.

When you really stop to think about it, all these "rights" that we humans have boil down to two things: our physical bodies and what we can do with them, what behavior we are allowed to display without being jailed; and our private property and what we can do with it without being jailed. All these civil and human rights we hear about are based or derived from these two factors. After all, what else do we have to be "free" with?

This is why we are concerned about the city's attempt to enter private property and remove inoperable vehicles — it infringes on a man's rights to his private property. It decreases even more what a man can do with his private property and on his private property.

We are not arguing that "junk" cars, as they have been called, are beautiful. We agree with all comments that they are "unsightly" and unpleasant to look at. We agree that they detract from the "looks" of some neighborhoods.

But what is at stake here is more important than the dangers posed by the vehicles.

Ideally, a man should have the right to do anything he wants with his private property or on his private property.

If an individual owns a beautiful desk, he has full control of that desk and can do with it exactly as he wants. He can chop it up for firewood, if he desires, or polish it with lemon oil till it shines. He can carve his initials in the desk top or splash red paint on it. Although some of these actions may not be what we would call "wise," it's his desk — he paid for it — he can do with it whatever he chooses. What he chooses to do with it is none of our business.

The same, ideally, would apply to a piece of land or real estate. But in not so recent years, the human animal has decided he can best decide for another what he can and cannot do with his private property. Thus, we have seen the common practice of zoning laws come into effect unquestioned, which tells a man what he can and cannot do with or on his property.

In the abandoned vehicles ordinance, what we have is one group of people legislating a standard of "attractiveness" for another group of people. The ordinance "defines," or sets a standard for what shall be an "abandoned" vehicle, and thus, subject to removal by police without compensation or permission of the owner.

Not everyone can meet this standard.

What if this group decides to outlaw old chairs? There's very little difference between allowing the police to "trespass" on a man's private property and remove an old car than allowing the police to come into a man's home and remove an old chair.

What about an "ugly" child? Are we going to allow people to call the police department and have the child removed — merely because he's unattractive to look at? It's an exaggeration, but the principle is the same.

Where does it stop?

This is why we're concerned.

What's at stake in the city's proposed abandoned vehicles ordinance is our private property rights — the foundation of American freedom.

Our rights to our own property are much more important to all of us than the dangers posed by the view from our living room window or out our back door. We can live with that.

It's more important than the dangers posed by rats or mice said to reside in some of these autos. We can live with that.

But we cannot live with an ever - encroaching, expanding government, which continually thinks it can decide what is best for us.

We hear a lot of people say they want government off their backs. In the next sentence, they say, "The city should pass a law to get rid of those junk cars."

Now, what do we really want? Government off our backs, or government going around doing our bidding — removing "ugliness" — and freedom — from our lives?

No phony emergency

There's an urgency about tax cuts, budget cuts and reducing government regulation, and we have urged and will continue to urge the Reagan administration to act quickly and decisively on these matters.

But urgency doesn't necessarily mean emergency.

Some members of the Reagan transition team are reportedly suggesting that Reagan declare a national "economic emergency" and clear the decks for concentration on emergency economic reform proposals. Subsequent dispatches and leaks have suggested that Reagan wouldn't want to assume new powers, simply use the idea of an emergency as a PR device to get quick action from Congress.

Either way, it's not a very good idea. Our objection goes a little further than semantics. National emergencies have too often been used as the pretext for government assumption of power. The creation of artificial crises often leads to hasty, ill - considered action.

Will cold shock man to action?

By Oscar Cooley

To only a slight degree does man control his environment. Witness his helplessness in the face of the current cold wave which has all eastern United States in its grip.

Florida, normally the state of sunshine and flowers, has suffered disastrous loss due to freezing of its chief crops, citrus fruits and vegetables. One - fifth of the oranges, a main source of the nation's vitamin C, are said to be gone. The trees on which oranges grow are sensitive to a hard freeze and many have to be replaced. Tomatoes, peppers and beans have been blasted.

When the orange growers set out their trees, when the market gardeners planted their tomatoes, they had no hint of the temperatures these would have to endure in January, 1981. They took a chance. Farmers always are taking chances. Dealing in the stock market is mildly speculative compared to agriculture. Yet, 225 million Americans eat and eat well because men have the nerve to invest their savings in land, tools, seeds, labor to grow these crops that may be snuffed out in a few hours of freezing weather.

(I once had a taste of it. As a 4-H boy in Vermont, I had an acre of beans one summer as a project. I planted them in early June. They came up and looked beautiful. But on the night of June 21, the thermometer dropped below 32, and my beans were no more. Before the sun was hardly up, I planted them over. Again they grew - and so did my hopes. But alas, in late August, when only part of my beans were mature, Jack Frost struck again! That's why I am not a farmer.)

Not only farmers in Florida but fishermen in New England are victims of the unforeseen cold. Fish that are accustomed to live and feed near the shore find the shallow water too cold this winter and move further out into deeper water, where it is harder to catch them. Lobsters and scallops, too, have left their accessible habitat. And fishing fleets are penned up in ice - blocked harbors.

Because of the unusual cold and the threat of fuel shortage, people are living in colder homes than they are used to. This is especially hard on old folks. As many as 50,000 persons, mostly elderly, are expected to go to hospitals with hypothermis, or body temperature below 95 degrees. Better insulated homes and more efficient heaters need to be devised.

As though the cold is not enough grief to the easterners, the entire New York area is suffering from a water shortage, due to lack of rainfall last summer and fall. Communities from southwest Connecticut to eastern Pennsylvania have water emergencies. The Delaware River is at a 15 - year low.

If we had extreme drought and frost more often, we would adjust to them. Why should New York City be short of water when it is located on the Atlantic Ocean? Scientists have not concentrated enough on developing methods of desalting and purifying sea water. They will when the demand for fresh water becomes great and the supply small enough.

As to the frost problem, we need frost - proof orange trees, tomato plants, beans. Why do citrus trees perish from cold while apple, pear, plum, and even peach trees do not? Is development of a cold - hardy orange tree beyond the talents of modern plant breeders?

We can look forward to great discoveries in this area. The University of California at Davis is one institution that is doing pioneer work in the development of better strains of plants such as wheat, barley and tomatoes that will stand so much salt they can be irrigated with sea water. The recent advances in genetic engineering open up vast possibilities in the creation of more useful animals as well as plants.

Have all the species known to be useful to man been discovered and domesticated? Of some 300,000 known species of plants, only about one percent have been put to use. Surely, more wait to be found.

If a cold winter is necessary to stimulate these efforts, blow, ye winds, blow.

Letters

Editor,

As the "hostages" return from Iran, with all the pomp and ceremony of the last week, I'm reminded of another group of "hostages."

These "hostages" were held for periods of from two years to fourteen years and in some cases longer. These men were held hostage by their own country's government, the government of the United States.

These men I speak of are the veterans of Vietnam. Many of these men were drafted against their will and had their lives interrupted much more seriously than the people in Iran. Many were held prisoner of war for many years. Others never returned. Still others are still missing.

And those who did return? What was their thank-you for being forced to take part in an illegal war?

In case you don't remember, some of them were spit on. Others came back physically or mentally disabled. The public and of course "The Media" tended to ignore them. They had trouble finding jobs. And some of them are still having problems related to their being held "hostage."

What I am trying to say is that the people held in Iran had it easy compared to the draftees who were forced into military service in Vietnam. I also feel that enough is enough. It's time to quit giving so much publicity to these 52 and maybe a little belated publicity to the thousands of draftees who were held hostage by the United States military.

Thank you

The honeymoon is on

by ART BUCHWALD

WASHINGTON — "I would like to see President Reagan," I told the man in the frock coat and striped pants behind the desk.

"I'm sorry," the man replied. "The president is on his honeymoon."

"Who is he on his honeymoon with?" I demanded.

"The American people, Congress and the press. Every president is entitled to a honeymoon after he is sworn into office."

"That's ridiculous," I said. "The President of the United States doesn't have time for a honeymoon. There is too much work to be done."

"He's working in the honeymoon suite, but he is not to be disturbed."

"For how long?"

"It depends. Some presidents have had a honeymoon period for as long as six months. Others have had one for as little as a month."

"I can't wait around for the president to have a honeymoon with the American people for six months. I've got a job to do."

The man behind the desk said, "We're sorry, sir. But our orders are the president is not to be disturbed until his honeymoon is over."

"Can't I speak to him on the phone?"

"What do you want to speak to him about?"

"The economy, inflation, the state of the world, and the price of heating oil which people can't afford.

"We couldn't let you speak to him about those things or you'd spoil his honeymoon. We have instructions to only let him speak to friendly members of the press, congressional leaders and influential friends, who think he's a wonderful person. Every president is entitled to that. Even President Carter had a honeymoon with the American people when he was first sworn in."

"And so I'm supposed to cool my heels in the lobby while President Reagan is drinking champagne and cuddling up to the American people?"

"You can sit over there on the couch if you want to. He might come down, but I doubt it."

"I think there is more going on upstairs than meets the eye. I believe you're keeping something from me that the American people should know about."

"I told you. The president is on his honeymoon with the American people. You should know, sir, that on a honeymoon you can't believe anything bad of the person you're with. That's why it's called a honeymoon. You've got four years ahead of you. What's the big rush in writing about him now?"

"He's the only president I've got. I owe it to my readers to point out what he's doing wrong."

"But he's only been president for two days. What could he possibly do wrong in two days?"

"That's what I'm trying to find out. Couldn't I just peek in the honeymoon suite and see what they're doing?"

"It's out of the question. The American people would never stand for it. If you busted in on the president's honeymoon, they would have your hide."

"I'll bet you anything that if columnist George Will came in right now, you would let him go up to the suite."

"Yes, we would. But that's because he's part of the honeymoon party."

"I thought this was a free country!"

"It is, sir. That's why presidents are permitted honeymoons."

"I don't suppose if I slipped you 20 bucks you could overlook the rules."

"I'm afraid not, sir. The presidential honeymoon suite is off limits to people like yourself, and there is nothing you can do to persuade me to let you go upstairs."

Political cartoonists Herb Block, Oliphant, Conrad, and columnist Jack Anderson all came into the lobby at the same time.

"Is the honeymoon over yet?" Block asked me.

"Heck no," I said. "As far as I can tell, it's only just begun."

"Oh, boy," said Anderson, "are we in trouble."

"I gave Nixon a week," said Oliphant. "I'm afraid this one could be a lot longer."

"Well," I said, "might as well sit in the lobby and relax. Did anyone bring a deck of cards?"

Donovan's first mission

By Robert J. Wagman

WASHINGTON (NEA) - Labor Secretary - designate Ray Donovan will be a man with a mission when he arrives here.

The New Jersey builder will attempt something that conservatives have been urging for years: the repeal of two federal laws that require the U.S. government and its contractors to pay sky - high wages.

Business groups and conservative economists have long argued that no two federal laws are more inflationary than the Davis - Bacon and the Service Contract Acts.

Under these laws, the Labor Department must determine the highest prevailing wage in a given geographic area. The federal government and its contractors then must pay wages at or above that level even if people in that area will work for less.

The Reagan Labor Department will begin its repeal effort by trying to solve a mystery held over from the Carter administration. That mystery could be titled "The Case of the Missing Task Force."

After extensively examining both laws early in the Carter administration, the General Accounting Office flatly declared them "inflationary" because they resulted "in federal and federally assisted construction costing more than other contracts."

The GAO attack on the laws caused a split within the Carter administration. The Office of Federal Procurement Policy and the Office of Management and Budget wanted them modified; the Labor Department did not.

On Oct. 6, 1978, a meeting took place at White House to resolve the dispute. It was chaired by chief inflation fighter Robert Strauss, who later headed the Carter re - election campaign. Those attending the session agreed to the formation of an "inter - agency task force" to review both laws and to recommend any changes it found necessary.

But that task force appears to have faded into the sunset without ever having issued a formal report.

What is being called a final "working draft" of an initial report did leak out, however. That document suggests a number of changes — including the elimination of the "30 - percent rule," which permits the Labor Department to decide that a certain wage rate prevails even if only 30 percent of an area's workers earn that much or more.

In the two years since the task force was established, the Carter administration has been anything but supportive of watering down Davis - Bacon. In fact, the Labor Department last January announced a series of proposals to "strengthen" both the Davis - Bacon and the Service Contract Acts. Those proposals seemed in direct opposition to the task force's draft report.

OMB insiders say they do not expect the task - force report to surface formally in the waning days of the Carter administration despite repeated queries from important congressmen and, apparently, from Reagan transition staffers.

The administration is arguing that there is no "report" per se. The leaked document is being referred to instead as an internal "working paper" of possible options." As such, it does not have to be released.

However, Reagan transition staffers have vowed to release the report officially as soon as they come to power. They say they will use its recommendations in modifying Davis - Bacon as a first step toward its repeal.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, a leading spokesman for business on this issue, says it "could live with Davis - Bacon if the task - force modifications are implemented."

Organized labor, meanwhile, has called the leaked report "a major threat to Davis - Bacon" and has vowed to fight to the end to prevent the law from being changed.

With Republicans controlling the Senate, the main fight on this issue will occur in the House. It is a battle that the incoming labor secretary says he is determined to win.

Look for Davis - Bacon to become one of the first big issues before the new Congress.

STATE REPRESENTATIVE FOSTER WHALEY

By Foster Whaley

AUSTIN -- On Tuesday, Jan.13, the Texas House of Representatives and the Senate had swearing - in ceremonies. Representative Bill Clayton was sworn in for the fourth time as speaker. No one has ever served more than two terms before Speaker Clayton. About 45 representatives out of the 150 would have voted for Representative John Bryant from Dallas but Bryant withdrew his name after several nominative speeches on his behalf.

There was a lengthy debate on revising the rules to give less power to the speaker but the Clayton forces turned back any changes on a two - to - one basis.

On Thursday, Jan. 15th, most of the day was spent hearing a contested election of a state representative.

A three - time elected state representative Al Brown, a Democrat from District 57C, San Antonio, had been defeated at the polls by a margin of 1,038 votes. Brown, a conservative Democrat, contested the election on the basis that many of the absentee ballots were from military personnel who were not actually residents of District 57C. Allen Schoolcroft, a Republican, had a very able female lawyer representing him.

A majority report made up of five Democrats and and Republicans recommended that Republican Schoolcroft retain his seat. Schoolcroft had previously been sworn in. The committee vote was four Republicans and one Democrat for letting Schoolcroft retain the seat.

But when the House voted on the issue, they went against the majority report of the House by a vote of 74 to 55. This meant, in effect, that a new election would be called and that Brown will now be sworn in until the election is held. There are 36 Republicans on the floor of the House. The vote was described by the news media as partisan since over 30 of the Republicans voted for Schoolcroft and only 20 Democrats voted for him. All of the Panhandle delegation including Representatives Simpson, Buchanan, Stansiwallis and Whaley, voted to retain Schoolcroft as the duly - elected representative. I was proud of our group because I believe we voted right.

If all of the mailed - in absentee votes were thrown out, Schoolcroft would have still won by 238 votes. I, personally, like Brown. He is a solid conservative and I had met Schoolcroft only one time, but it will be most difficult to determine, after a second election, who is eligible to vote based on residence. Military personnel have a great deal of liberty in claiming residence.

In a new election, public opinion will tend to go in favor of Schoolcroft in the San Antonio area. He had been declared the winner by over 1,000 votes and the committee recommended by a five - to - four decision that he retain his seat. By what the press described as a partisan vote, the members of the House of Representatives overturned the decision of the voters and the committee.

SAVED FROM RUIN. Our Lady of Visitation chapel owes its future to a Methodist lady who took over the Roman Catholic building when the community of Santa Maria was assigned to a new church. The century - old structure is one of the finest examples of Victorian architecture in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Abandoned Catholic chapel saved by Methodist woman

SANTA MARIA, Texas (AP) — The small, century-old chapel of Our Lady of Visitation appeared destined for decay eight years ago when this small town was assigned to a new Roman Catholic church in a nearby town.

Weeds had grown up around the neo-Gothic brick structure located on a bend of U.S. 281 several miles east of this farming community.

The town itself slowly had moved west from the chapel after the nearby Rio Grande changed course and made access to water easier a few miles away.

The chapel's salvation came from a Methodist woman who was angry at seeing one of the area's finest examples of 19th Century architecture ignored and left to ruin.

"I got tired of looking at it growing neck high with brush and weeds," said Eddie McNail of LaFeria, another small town 10 miles north.

"I knew the only way to preserve it would be to get the keys to the church. I went and talkd to the bishop and arranged it," said Mrs. McNail.

Due to Mrs. McNail's efforts, the chapel has been cleaned, the lawn mowed and the building reopened during the winter months when tourists flock to the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Although regular Sunday services no longer are held here, the chapel is used for weddings and quinceaneras, traditional Mexican-American celebrations marking a girl's 15th birthday.

On the last Sundays in January and February, a priest celebrates Mass in the chapel for visitors and sentimental natives.

The town of Santa Maria is one of the oldest in the area. It is located on part of a 1777 Spanish land grant.

Rancher L.J. Hynes donated five acres from his Rancho de Santa Maria to the Catholic Church in 1870 to build a chapel here, across the road from his ranch.

It was built with adobe bricks made at the ranch. Local historians say a French priest of the Oblaŏe order designed the chapel.

A rare snowstorm blew through the area Dec. 29, 1880, when the cornerstone was laid. Local children, 0ho had never seen snow, thought it was raining cotton.

A steeple once adorned the building but blew down twice during hurricanes. Mrs. McNail wants to restore it.

Original to the church are the pine altar with a statue of the Virgin Mary, two kneelers and a statue of a guardian angel.

Mrs. McNail is more interested in the historic chapel than any former parishioners, said the Rev. Francic Schoutteten, the last priest assigned here.

Oil price decontrol shouldn't see dramatic reserve increases

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — No quick and dramatic increases in domestic crude oil reserves and production can be expected from President Reagan's termination of price controls eight months ahead of schedule.

But oilmen are confident the action, like former President Carter's phased decontrol actions of 1979, will stimulate explorations and encourage development of some production that had been marginally economic.

And they contend further stimulation will result from further decontrol of natural gas price controls in 1985 and 1987.

The federal government has controlled the price of natural gas sold across state lines since 1954 when a Supreme Court decision upheld the right of the old Federal Power Commission to do so.

The Natural Gas Act of 1978 extended federal controls into the intrastate gas market the first time. It created more than 20 categories of gas wells and set different prices and spelled out special rules for each category.

Some categories of "high cost" gas such as production from below 15,000 feet became exempt from the controls in late 1979 and deregulation is to follow for such categories as "new" gas and intrastate gas in 1985 and 1987.

Last August, the American Petroleum Institute made a study of early progress made since the 1979 decontrol actions.

It reported that gradual decontrol and increased revenues being earned despite the windfall profits tax were encouraging expansion of the search for oil and gas. It cited significant increases in capital and exploration budgets, seismic crews and drilling rigs at work and the number of wells completed.

"The sharp rate of decline in proved reserves has begun leveling off, and production figures for both oil and gas show a slight increase over those of a year ago," the report said.

The API said higher prices, besides stimulating exploration for new fields, are making it economic to keep some older fields producing longer than would have been possible under lower price ceilings.

"And every barrel produced in the United States is a barrel we do not have to buy from foreign producers," the API said.

The report said drilling, reserves, and production had been on downward trends most of the decade.

"Therefore, a dramatic turnaround could not be expected overnight," the API said.

"But in a little more than one year, partial decontrol of oil prices and higher prices for some categories of gas have contributed to a sharp acceleration in the search for more domestic oil and gas."

Between 1970 and 1979, proved domestic crude oil reserves dropped from a record 39 billion barrels to 27 billion. Crude production dropped from a 1970 record 9,637,000 barrels a day to 8,132,000 in 1976 before Alaska's North Slope output led a rebound to a 1980 level of about 8,623,000 a day.

The API said that in the eight-year period of 1971-1978 the United States used up its proved oil reserves almost twice as fast as new supplies were found. A similar trend was evident in gas reserves.

The report said, however, the API and American Gas Association annual estimates of reserves at the end of 1979 gave indication that year may have marked a turning point.

"Although oil and gas reserves continued to decline, the rate of decline slowed down," the API said.

"Additions to oil and gas reserves that year equaled approximately three-fourths of domestic production. As a result, the net decreases in oil and gas reserves in 1979 were the smallest since the Prudhoe Bay discovery more than a decade earlier."

The 1980 year-end reports on oil and gas reserves have not been released as yet by the Department of Energy which last year took over the compilation responsibilities from the API and AGA.

Oilmen believe the 1980 reports will show further progress. The industry completed a record 64,000 wells last year, including about 13,000 wildcats.

New gas zone found by Cities Service

TULSA, Okla. -- Cities Service Company has announced discovery of a new gas producing zone in the South Richland Center Field, located in the Oklahoma Panhandle.

The 100 - percent - owned Cities Service well, Interstate A-15 in Texas County, has been dually completed from Lower Cherokee perforations between 5,118 and 5,132 feet at a calculated absolute open flow rate of 11,528 MCF per day and from Morrow perforations between 5,949 and 5,956 feet at a calculated absolute open flow rate of 5,604 MCF per day.

This is the sixth natural gas producer Cities Service has completed in the South Richland Center Field, and the Lower Cherokee is a new discovery zone for the field.

The South Richland Center Field was discovered in 1975 by Cities Service, which has 6,500 net acres under lease in the immediate area.

Canada asks Texas oilmen to delay abandoning exploration

DALLAS (AP) — Government officials from the province of British Columbia have asked Texas oilmen — leery over Canada's new national energy program — to delay any plans for abandoning oil and gas exploration in Canada.

Robert H. McClelland, minister of mines and resources for the province, told about 25 key oil and gas industry officials at a luncheon Thursday that British Columbia and Alberta expect to win their battle against "onerous" higher taxes annnounced three months ago.

The oilmen — whose group included billionaires Herbert and Bunker Hunt — lent a sympathetic ear but expressed their alarm. McClelland said over a "Canadianization" program.

"The meeting was pretty free-wheeling. And pretty candid, I might add. I hope it helped us," McClelland said.

The Canadian government announced last Oct. 28 that in order to keep the oil industry in Canadian hands, it planned to acquire "one or more" multi-national oil and gas companies, financing the purchases by a tax against producers of 30 cents per thousand cubic feet.

"Unless Canada's national energy policy is withdrawn, that's going to be the end of American investment in energy resources in Canada," said Herbert Hunt, who is involved in some oil and gas investments in western Canada.

Hunt Energy Corp. and American Quasar Petroleum hosted the luncheon to give McClelland and two other British Columbia officials an audience they requested with Texas oilmen.

Another oil official observed, "It's damn close to nationalization. That's the bottom line. The taxes they're imposing ... means it just would not be economical to drill for oil and gas in Texas. You can't ask a company to go to Canada and invest in oil and gas when he could get more by putting it into CD's here."

Ashley Priddy, head of Sabine Corp., one of the largest independent oil and gas companies, asked McClelland what would keep Canada from applying its "Canadianization" in other industries, such as the extraction of silver, gold, uranium or coal.

McClelland was accompanied by Don Phillips, minister of industrial development; Roy Illing, deputy minister of energy, mining and petroleum; and Don Rawlyk, B.C. Petroleum Corp.

Pampa holds off stubborn Caprock for district win

AMARILLO—Pampa's Jimmy Barker came off the bench to play a hero's role in preserving the Harvesters' 54-50 win over upset-minded Caprock in a District 3-5A opener for both clubs Friday night.

Barker led all Pampa scorers with 14 points besides pulling down five rebounds, but it was his big play on defense with the final seconds ticking away that gave the Harvesters some air.

With Pampa in front by two, 52-50, the Longhorns tried working the ball into their 6-6 pivot Phillip Platt for a final shot. But Barker, a 6-1 junior, foiled the plot by leaping in front of Platt to intercept the pass.

Terry Faggins added some insurance points with a fast break layup just before the final buzzer.

Pampa is now 15-9 overall and 1-0 in district play. Caprock, 9-10 and 0-1, didn't play like a team that had lost four straight games.

Although Caprock trailed the entire game, the Longhorns, never allowed Pampa to gain more than a six-point advantage.

It got much closer the second half when Caprock cut the lead to one point three times in the closing minutes of the fourth quarter.

After Platt scored to pull Caprock within one, 51-50, with 29 seconds left, Barker gave the Harvesters a two-point edge three seconds later when he sank a foul shot.

The first four minutes of the opening quarter produced a 6-0 lead for the Harvesters as Caprock missed its first six shots from the floor. Caprock nibbled away at the lead and moved within one, 10-9, when Pampa hit only two of its next eight shots.

Pampa repossessed its shooting touch in the second quarter to hit eight of 12 shots and pull away to a six-point bulge, 30-24, at halftime. Meanwhile, Caprock could down only seven of 21 field goal tries.

The Longhorns narrowed the margin to one again, 43-42, on Greg Ewing's steal and layup, but Faggins countered with a twisting layup to give the Harvesters a three-point edge, 45-42, after three quarters.

Faggins and Kirt Crouch followed Barker with 12 points apiece. Faggins also led the Harvesters on the boards with 10 rebounds.

Mike Nelson added four points and Ray Condo two for the Harvesters.

Platt led the losers with 20 points, a dozen markers coming in the second half.

Pampa continues district play Tuesday night, traveling to Tascosa for a 7:30 p.m. game.

Pampa JV's were also victorious, 49-45.

Grady Norris led Pampa with 19 points while Jeff Parsons paced Caprock JV with 13.

Palmer leads Deer Creek Tournament

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Sandra Palmer had to shake off some unexpected pressure, but the Ladies Professional Golf Association veteran was able to stretch her lead to three strokes after two rounds of the $100,000 Whirlpool Championship of Deer Creek.

Palmer carded a 4-under-par 69 Friday, which, paired with her opening-round 66, gave her a 36-hole total of 135, eleven strokes under par.

But first she had to get from her home in nearby Boca Raton, Fla., to the golf course by her 8:25 a.m. EST tee-off time. When her car wouldn't start, the 18-season veteran hitched a ride with a neighbor. Nonetheless, she was calm on the course.

"I don't think I've ever been 11-under after two rounds," gloated Palmer, 41, who hasn't won a tournament since 1977. "But I'd be a lot more excited if I had the lead after four rounds."

Janet Coles hit a 70 Friday for a two-round total of 138, and Carolyn Hill and defending champion JoAnne Carner were another stroke back at 139.

Palmer stayed in control with sand shots from three bunkers and her ability to leave herself short putts, her longest in two days being a 15-footer on the first green.

Her only bogey came Friday on the second hole, when she hooked a drive into a grove of palm trees. She pitched to the fairway, but eventually missed a 5-foot putt for a par 5.

Coles missed short birdie putts at the sixth and eighth holes, but saved pars at four other holes and culminated a 20-minute wait for a ruling at the par-three 11th by chipping in from 30 feet.

Her tee shot had rolled over the green to the edge of the back fringe and stopped next to a ball mark on the green. She was not allowed to smoothe the mark because the ball was off the green.

Pampa swimmers place in Amarillo Invite

AMARILLO—Pampa boys placed fourth with 115 points in the Amarillo Invitational Swim Meet Saturday.

Eastwood of El Paso racked up 237 points to outdistance the 16-team field and take home the first-place trophy.

Amarillo High was second (188) and Irving of El Paso was third (123).

In the girls' division, Pampa finished sixth with 99 points, only two points away from fifth-place finisher Midland Lee.

Tascosa and Amarillo High battled it out for top honors with the Rebel gals winning by a slight 195-194 margin.

"I was surprised with some our performances," Pampa coach Jackie Stephens said. "At this point in the season the swimmers are very tired because they're doing 9,000 yards a day. They did better than I expected."

Cindy Raymond, who won the 200 individual medley with a time of 2:17.3, was the only first-place winner for Pampa. She also took second in the 500 freestyle with a 5:31.2.

Pampa enters District 3-5A competition Feb. 10 in Amarillo.

"We'll start tapering off for district now, so the kids should start feeling a lot better this week," Stephens said.

Pampa and Amarillo High share the favorite's role in the boys' division.

"It should be a very close race," Stephens added.

Amarillo High and Tascosa are expected to fight it out for the girls' title.

"There was only a point difference between them in this meet, so that's a pretty good indication of how close these two teams are," Stephens pointed out.

Pampa's results in the Amarillo Invitational are listed below:

Cook takes lead in Crosby Pro-Am

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — John Cook slogged over rain-drenched fairways to a 6-under-par 66 and the lead Saturday after the twice-delayed first round of the $225,000 Bing Crosby National Pro-Am golf tournament.

Cook, a 23-year-old former national amateur champion, played his round at Cypress Point, which often yields the lower scores of the three courses used for this storm-plagued event that was two days late getting started.

Tom Kite had a 68 at Pebble Beach.

Blanda named to football hall of fame

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — George Blanda, who played professional football an unprecedented 26 seasons, has been elected to the Hall of Fame in his first year of eligibility.

Joining Blanda in the 1981 class are Morris "Red" Badgro and two members of the Green Bay Packers' dynasty of the 1960s, center Jim Ringo and defensive end Willie Davis.

Blanda is the only 1981 enshrinee who was elected immediately after the mandatory five-year waiting period following his retirement. The quarterback-placekicker's career spanned 1949-1975 with the Chicago Bears, Houston Oilers and Oakland Raiders.

Formal enshrinement ceremonies here will be Saturday, Aug. 1, prior to the 1981 season's first exhibition between the Cleveland Browns and the Atlanta Falcons.

The four were chosen by the hall's 29-member board of selectors, made up of media representatives in each National Football League city.

Their election brings the total to 110 members in the Hall of Fame.

Blanda's career was the longest of any pro football player ever. During that time he became the NFL's all-time scoring champion. His 2,002 points, built on nine touchdowns, 943 conversions and 335 field goals.

West favored to win NBA All-Star contest

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Julius Erving, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Larry Bird and 19 other stars will be in action Sunday when the East entertains the West in the 31st National Basketball Association All-Star Game at the Coliseum.

It's a showcase for the NBA, with many of the league's top players competing in the nationally televised event. With the Super Bowl out of the way, this is the chance for pro basketball to make its bid to move out of football's shadow.

The East leads the series 19-11 and won last year's game 144-138 in overtime, but the West shapes up as the team with more explosive firepower this year.

The five leading scorers in the league all are on the West squad — Adrian Dantley of Utah, Moses Malone of Houston, George Gervin of San Antonio, Otis Birdsong of Kansas City and Abdul-Jabbar of Los Angeles. Together, they are averaging 139.8 points per game.

"It will be a real pleasure to coach in a situation where it's virtually impossible to make a bad substitution," said John MacLeod of the Phoenix Suns, who will be guiding the West squad. "It's a great honor to coach in this game, but I wouldn't be able to get there if my ball club didn't have the best record in the West to give me the opportunity."

The West starters, as picked in fan balloting, are Dantley and Walter Davis of Phoenix at forward, Abdul-Jabbar at center and Gervin — the Most Valuable Player of last year's game, when he scored 34 points for the East — and Paul Wesphal of Seattle at guard.

The West reserves, picked by conference coaches, are forwards Jamaal Wilkes of Los Angeles and Len "Truck" Robinson of Phoenix, centers Malone of Houston and Jack Sikma of Seattle, and guards Birdsong of Kansas City and Dennis Johnson of Phoenix.

Philadelphia's Erving, the leading vote-getter in the fan balloting, heads the starting lineup for the East team. He is joined by Bird of the Celtics, Artis Gilmore of Chicago at center and Eddie Johnson of Atlanta and Reggie Theus of Chicago at guard.

Bird originally was named to the reserve squad but moved up to starter when Atlanta's Dan Roundfield pulled out due to an injury. reserves include center Robert Parish and guard Nate Archibald of the Celtics, guard Michael Ray Richardson of New York and forwards Bobby Jones of Philadelphia, Marques Johnson of Milwaukee and Mike Mitchell of the Cleveland Cavs, who replaced Roundfield on the roster.

To The General Public:

I have become aware of the increasing number of strays and household pets with unwanted pregnancies and subsequent surplus of puppies and kittens. Many people would like to have their pets neutered, but feel they can not afford the increasingly higher cost of veterinary care.

If I can provide a service to our community at a lower cost and if the public will take advantage of it, I feel that it will benefit the general public and will help secure the health of our pets. Therefore, I have decided to make my contribution to this cause in the following way until June 15, 1981.*

LONDON (AP) — Leicester City, last in the English Soccer Championship standings, upset Liverpool 2-1 Saturday and snapped the defending champion's string of 85 home games without a defeat.

It was the biggest surprise of the English season. Leicester had beaten Liverpool at home in August and became the first team to complete the double over the defending champions in six years.

Ipswich, with a 4-0 victory over Stoke, and Aston Villa, with a 1-0 triumph over Manchester City, remained tied for first place. Each has 40 points — Ipswich in 27 games, and Villa in 28.

Liverpool remained in third place with 36 points.

ATLANTA (AP) — Although the Montreal Alouettes have University of Georgia tailback Herschel Walker on their "negotiation list," the Canadian Football League team has no plans to lure the freshman away from college, a spokesman said.

"If you like somebody, you protect yourself and put them on your list," said Alouettes public relations director Fred Roberts. "That doesn't mean you're going to sign them, but if he ever decides to play in Canada, you've got first crack at him."

ATLANTA (AP) — Pitcher Tommy Boggs and the Atlanta Braves have reached agreement on a one-year contract, a team spokesman said.

Boggs, interviewed from his home in Texas, said he was "very happy" with the contract but would not disuss the details.

Boggs had a 12-9 record last year and was reportedly asking for $100,000 to $130,000 a year.

Six other Braves remain unsigned. They are first baseman Chris Chambliss, outfielders Brian Asselstine, Dale Murphy and Ed Miller, pitcher Rick Matula and infielder Rafael Ramirez.

RUHPOLDING, West Germany (AP) — Olympic champion Frank Ullrich of East Germany won the 10-kilometer leg of the World Cup Biathlon on Saturday with a time of 34 minutes, 29.76 seconds and no penalties.

Peter Angerer of West Germany finished second after an error-free run of 34.47.03, ahead of Norway's Erick Kvalfoss in 34.59.58 with one penalty round.

Vladimir Alikin of the Soviet Union, the 20-kilometer winner here, finished fifth behind Matthias Jung of East Germany.

Kentucky slips past Georgia

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Freshman Jim Master put seventh-ranked Kentucky ahead to stay with a shot out of the corner early in the second overtime period and then hit two clinching free throws with 18 seconds left as the Wildcats trimmed Georgia 71-68 in a televised Southeastern Conference basketball game Saturday.

Master's first basket with 3:14 left in the second extra period broke a 63-63 deadlock and Kentucky led the rest of the way.

Kentucky, now 15-3 overall and 8-2 in the SEC, trailed by 13 points during a sloppy first half performance when the Wildcats had 11 turnovers.

Kentucky trailed 50-40 with 14:06 left in regulation before Sam Bowie led a charge that gave the Cats a 53-52 lead six minutes later.

He's a winner

What Al Davis is really like

By Murray Olderman

OAKLAND, Calif. (NEA) - The clothes in Al Davis' closet reflect his simple tastes. He has nothing in burgundy or beige or any exotic pastel color. There is one red turtleneck, but that's only because it came with a full outfit he bought. Al Davis' wardrobe is limited to black and white and some silver, which corresponds with the way he views the world around him.

He is the most intriguing, enigmatic and frequently misunderstood person in sports today. He is especially the cynosure of national attention because of the way he has taken the NFL Oakland Raiders — a team generally picked to finish last in its division, one that should have been distracted by the swirl of controversy when he tried (and he is still trying) to move it to Los Angeles — and directed it in almost miracle fashion to the Super Bowl.

Many adjectives have been used to describe him: clever, scheming, devious, secretive, aloof, shady, egotistic. None of them hit the mark completely. Some expletives have been applied, too. They overstate the case as well.

The natural conclusion is to categorize him as a most complex man. That would be wrong, also.

The Al Davis that I have known for at least a quarter of a century — back to when he was a hustling young assistant coach at Adelphi College, trying to find a niche in sports — is not complex at all. He is, in fact, a man with simple tastes and a simple direction in life. He wants to be a winner, an ambition that consumes him in whatever capacity he works.

He has never said it as the late Vince Lombardi did — that "winning isn't everything, it's the only thing" (which really originated with Gen. Douglas MacArthur). But he very well could have. In fact, Davis doesn't just want to win. He wants to dominate.

To achieve that dominance, he isolates himself completely in his job. For his entire adulthood, football has been his total absorption, with one brief respite of six weeks a year ago, when his wife, Carole, suffered a severe heart attack.

"I told Caroli when we were married 25 years ago," he relates, "the only thing that would take me away from football is life or death." He grins slightly. "And she put me to the test."

Even in nursing her back to health, he demonstrated that intense, insular drive that is the key to his personality. He never left Carole while she was in a two-week coma.

Al Davis doesn't smoke. He doesn't drink. He has simple eating tastes — steak and potatoes, with an occasional diversion to a delicacy like baked clams. You'll never find him in a night club. His one diversion might be the reading and study of history.

He stays in shape by lifting weights and once was stuck with a monstrous duty tab when they were mistakenly shipped to Mexico.

Yet with the single-minded ardor that has pushed the Oakland Raiders to the best winning record in football since he joined them in 1963, there is also a boyish naivete and flashes of charm when he is away from the public. They say that Al Davis doesn't have many friends. That's because he doesn't choose to have many.

His break with Wayne Valley — the brusque, gregarious man who plucked him from obscurity as a receiver coach with the San Diego Chargers and made him the Oakland head man and general manager, then later a part-owner — was due primarily to the fact he didn't want to be around Valley, who can be garrulous socially.

There is an arrogance in the way Davis conducts his business. The one quality he seeks and demands in subordinates is total loyalty.

He doesn't surround himself with brilliant, innovative assistants. He feels he can do enough thinking and devising of strategy for all of them.

He looks for mechanics who can implement his philosophy. That covers both the playing and business side of the Raiders.

You don't find head coaches for other teams coming out of the Oakland organization. There was one a few years ago, and he was an abysmal flop.

Davis is so confident that he chose to take on the entire National Football League when he strove to move the Raiders last summer to Los Angeles. He remains convinced that it will happen, despite his being labeled an anarchist, because the anticipated jump in revenue is too great for him to overlook as a businessman.

He's not above flattering and using some writers to propagandize his side of a story. But counter to the general belief, I have never found him to lie. He will evade if it suits his purpose.

Rozelle worried about inflation

HONOLULU (AP) — Pete Rozelle's chief worry these days is Al Davis and his lawsuit, but the National Football League commissioner is also concerned with things such as inflation.

Asked about the rising cost of attending games in most NFL cities, Rozelle said: "I think you can price yourself to the point you're going to lose interest. I'd like to see the entire economics of the spot level off.

"Everything has been skyrocketing in recent years: television revenue, player salaries."

Rozelle, in Honolulu for Sunday's Pro Bowl game, said the 1980 season was the league's best during his 21 years as commissioner, at least on the field.

"From almost every barometer this was the league's best year," he said. "We had the highest average paid attendance, just under 60,000 per game; our television ratings were up; teams were very competitive and we had tight divisional races.

"But it's depressing to have off-field things diluting somewhat what was done on the field."

He was referring to Davis' attempt to move the Oakland Raiders to Los Angeles in contempt of the league and the rest of the club owners.

Davis, general managing partner of the Raiders, has filed an antitrust suit seeking to have ruled invalid an NFL rule requiring three-fourths of the league's 28 owners to approve any franchise move. The owners earlier voted 23-0 not to allow Davis to move the Raiders to Los Angeles. The case is scheduled to go to court Feb. 9 in Los Angeles.

On another subject, Rozelle said the site of the 1982 Pro Bowl would be announced sometime before Sunday's game. Honolulu, which also hosted the game last year, is the obvious choice again and quite possibly could become the permanent site of the NFL All-Star contest.

Asked about additional television coverage of games next season, Rozelle said there would be no additional televised games and that the league's philosophy has always been to go slowly to avoid overexposure.

He also commented on the league's game officials who — unlike previous years — made it through postseason play with hardly a controversy, saying: "The officiating was very good and we were very lucky."

Harvester track squads lack depth this season

Pampa High boys' and girls' track teams may not win many meets this season, but it won't be because of a lack of effort.

"The kids are working hard and doing everything possible to improve themselves," says Wendall Palmer, who takes over coaching duties this year. "We're not going to have much speed, so we're going to have to scratch for everything we get.

The boys' team opens the 1981 season March 13-14 in the Deaf Smith County Invitational at Hereford.

The girls' start two weeks earlier on Feb. 28 by hosting the Top O' Texas Invitational.

The Harvesters lose out in the numbers game when compared to the opposition.

"We're going to be very thin," Palmer said. "We'll only have about 24 boys and 17 girls out. "I may have to move some freshmen up."

Joe Murray and Ray Mendoza off Palmer's cross-country team give the Harvesters a pair of solid distance runners. James Borchardt in the sprints and Jeff Allan (discus and shot put) are two others Palmer will be counting on.

On the girls' side, Oklahoma transfer Jessie Marcum may win some ribbons in the shot put.

"She's not very big, but she's strong," Palmer said. "Coach Pinckard (Ron) has been working with her and he likes the way she's been throwing the shot."

Palmer said the girls' basketball team should produce some good track athletes once their season is finished.

"Hopefully, I'll pick up some good girls from there," Palmer added. "We're just going to try to be competitive."

The schedules are listed below:

BOYS

March: 13-14 Deaf Smith Invitational; 20-21, Plainview Invitational; 28-Top O' Texas Invitational.

April: 4, Dumas Invitational; 10-11, Amarillo Relays; 18-Canyon Invitational; 25-District, Amarillo.

May: 2, Regional, Lubbock; 15-16, State, Austin.

Chandler retains WBA championship

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jeff Chandler, a spindly legged one-time street fighter, peppered Jorge Lujan with a variety of head shots and retained the World Boxing Association bantamweight championship on a unanimous 15-round decision Saturday.

In his first title defense and the first bantamweight championship bout in Philadelphia in almost 40 years, Chandler had too much hand and foot speed for the former champion from Panama.

Even before the decision was announced, Chandler's corner was chanting "We want Pintor, We want Pintor," and the hometown fans in the Franklin Plaza Hotel ballroom were cheering Chandler as the winner. Lupe Pintor of Mexico is the World Boxing Council champ.

Judge Samuel Conde scored it 148-143, judge Luis Guzman 146-143 and referee Roberto Ramirez 146-142, all for Chandler, who did most of his fighting on the streets of South Philadelphia before taking up boxing five years ago at the age of 19.

Most ringsiders thought the fight was not as close as it was scored by the three officials from Puerto Rico. The Associated Press favored Chandler 149-137.

Chandler, winning for the 25th straight time against a draw in his pro debut in 1976, set the tone of the fight from the outset, darting in to score with jabs, hooks and right hands and then darting out before Lujan could counter-punch him. As the fight wore on, Lujan had to give up attempting to counter-punch and start being aggressive. He landed some good hooks but Chandler was much the sharper puncher.

In the sixth round, Chandler backed up Lujan, who weighed the class limit of 118, with a right hand, then hurt him with two more rights, one of them knocking him sideways. After the fight, Chandler said he hurt his hand in the sixth or seventh round but it was not apparent to the public.

Chandler got $70,000 for the first defense of the title he won by stopping Julian Solis in the 14th round last Nov. 14 in Miami. It was Solis who took the title on a decision from Lujan on last Aug. 29. Lujan, 26, who got $25,000, now has a 22-4 record.

New stars turn into NFL All-Pros

By Murray Olderman

NEW YORK (NEA) - This was a transitional season for the stars of the National Football League. The change is reflected in the 1980 NEA All-Pro Team.

Half a dozen men on offense and four on defense broke into the All-Pro ranks for the first time. They threaten to remain on that glory plateau for a long time because the majority of them are 25 years old or younger.

Tab these names: James Lofton, Kellen Winslow, Mike Kenn, Herbert Scott, Brian Sipe and Ed Murray; Art Still, Gary Johnson, Lester Hayes and Nolan Cromwell.

Their ability was recognized by the most qualified jury of all — the NFL coaches, team captains and player representatives who are polled for this mythical squad by Newspaper Enterprise Association.

And they're not all necessarily with winners. Lofton, the Green Bay wide receiver, and Still, the towering defensive end for Kansas City, prevailed on teams that did not achieve winning records.

For first-time All-Pro Sipe, the honor came at age 31 after seven years in the league. It signified the ultimate acceptance of his talents as a leader and passer for the Cleveland Browns.

On the other end of the scale, Murray was the only rookie on the squad — for his placekicking exploits with the Detroit Lions.

There was also a dramatic return to the All-Pro heights by Ted Hendricks at the age of 33, coming off his finest of a dozen seasons in the National Football League. He had been away from such honors for the last half of his career, until his big-play linebacking this fall paced the powerful defense of the Oakland Raiders and demanded recognition.

Dan Dierdorf also returned from serious knee surgery a year ago to reclaim, in his 10th season, a post at offensive tackle despite a discouraging campaign by the St. Louis Cardinals.

The top vote-getters on offense were Earl Campbell of Houston, left off only one ballot after compiling the second-highest rushing total in the history of the NFL; wide receiver Jefferson of San Diego; and guard John Hannah of New England. The leaders on defense were tackle Randy White of Dallas, safety Cromwell of Los Angeles and Hayes of Oakland.

The closest competition came at the other wide receiver position, where Lofton edged Harold Carmichael of Philadelphia, Stanley Morgan of New England and Ahmad Rashad of Minnesota; at offensive tackle, where Dierdorf was a narrow victor over Marvin Powell of the New York Jets; at guard, where Dallas' Scott squeaked by Doug Wilkerson of San Diego and Dave Scott of Atlanta; at corner back, where veteran Lemar Parrish of Washington nosed out Pat Thomas of Los Angeles; and especially for the punting job, where Dave Jennings of the New York Giants was a one-vote victor over Oakland perennial Ray Guy.

Repeaters from NEA's 1979 All-Pro team were Jefferson; Hannah; center Mike Webster of Pittsburgh; Campbell; running back Walter Payton of Chicago; defensive end Lee Roy Selmon of Tampa Bay; White; middle linebacker Jack Lambert of Pittsburgh; linebacker Robert Brazile of Houston; Parrish; and safety Donnie Shell of Pittsburgh.

The San Diego Chargers and the Pittsburgh Steelers were the only teams to put three players on the All-Pro roster, indicating a good dispersal of top talent throughout the NFL.

Devin D.'s plight may bring better care for mentally ill

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Devin D. is mentally retarded and suffers from epilepsy. He is so disruptive, his father says, that the downtown church the family used to attend asked them to go elsewhere.

The demands Devin put on his parents pushed them "to the limit," his father added. So they decided to put him in a 24-hour care facility.

That action triggered a controversy that officials say may bring about better care of mentally retarded children.

Devin is now in a private 24-hour facility, with the Austin Independent School District paying part of his expenses. The district wants him moved to a day-care facility, with his parents housing him at night.

His parents appealed to the Texas Education Agency, which urged the school district to consider sending Devin to a state-run 24-hour facility.

The school district says it doesn't have the authority to assign students to a state institution. The Education Agency says it can be done. A court ruling may be needed to resolve the dispute, officials say.

Residential care for a severely retarded person such as Devin costs up to $40,000 a year.

State Education Commissioner Alton Bowen has instructed the Austin district to consider whether Devin should be placed in a state institution operated by the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

Bowen described his order, mild as it may sound, as "probably precedent-setting."

The order accompanied his November decision to allow Devin's parents to keep their 12-year-old son in a 24-hour facility for the 1980-81 school year.

The Austin ISD argued Devin could be treated better in a six-hour, five-day-a-week program at the district's St. John's Habilitation Center, which would be less expensive.

The State Board of Education upheld Bowen's order in January.

Devin, a victim of Lennox-Gastaut syndrome, which affects approximately nine of every 10,000 children, was placed in the San Marcos Treatment Center in December 1977 on the recommendation of a school district committee.

On June 3, 1980, however, the committee recommended withdrawing Devin from the center and placing him at St. John's.

Dr. Thomas Zion of the Baylor College of Medicine testified at an August public hearing that Devin's prognosis is "miserable," with chances that his seizures will ever be completely controlled "virtually nil."

Had 24-hour care not been secured for Devin, said Zion, "in the vernacular, he would be down the tubes by now."

An official at the treatment center said Devin couldn't count or read, doesn't know the alphabet and can't write his name.

The boy's father said that while Devin was at home "We had been driven to the limits of our physical and mental strength. ... Every day it was like a battle for survival."

The father testified about the church asking the family to go elsewhere because of Devin.

That prompted Bowen to say, "Society cannot solve these problems by driving the child and his family into the streets."

Placing Devin at the center was the "hardest decision I ever made in my life," the father said, but he added:

"My wife and I just don't have the physical and emotional strength to follow through with the structured-type program that is needed ... I would love to have Devin home, but not at the expense of him and the family deteriorating."

At the center, the father said, "I feel like he (Devin) has found a home. All the kids there like him, and they recognize him every time he walks across the campus."

Jacquelyn Pack, psychologist at St. John's, said, "I feel very strongly that we can do a better job and that we would be doing a disservice to Devin by not bringing him to St. John's."

School district supervisor Marianna Stump was asked what made her think the parents "could handle the situation 18 hours a day and on weekends."

She replied the parents had been able to control their emotions so they could talk about Devin's future "without bursting into tears."

"I believe that the parents can probably do more than they think they can in terms of Devin's behavior," she said.

Bowen said, "When state public education becomes over zealous in its denial of residential educational placements, a real possibility exists that some students will fail to be properly educated to at least the minimum level of self-sufficiency desired by the state and mandated by the (Texas) Constitution."

Fred West, director of special education for the Austin school district, said district lawyers "think we're on solid legal grounds" in arguing the district has no authority to seek placement of Devin in a state institution.

West said 16 children as severely retarded as Devin are enrolled at St. John's.

He said contracts with private facilities to care for mentally retarded children would cost the district more than $350,000 this year and also would reduce federal funds to hire special education teachers.

The district has asked the State Board of Education to reconsider Bowen's order.

"We are responsible for a child's educational needs," said West, "but we're not responsible for 24-hour care and the emotional well being of the parents."

Gardening by moon signs

By Lois Boynton

The moon will be decreasing: 1-4; 19-28. The moon will be increasing: 5-18. The fruitful sings are: 6-7 (Pisces); 14-15 (Cancer); From 2:00 p.m. the 23rd through the 25th (Scorpio).

The semi - fruitful signs are: 1st through 3rd until 12:00 noon (Capricorn); 10 - 11 (Taurus); 21st through 23rd until 2:00 p.m. (Libra); the 28 after 2:00 p.m. (Capricorn).

The barren signs are: 19-20 (Virgo); 26th through 5th (Aquarius); 8-9 (Aries); 12-13 (Gemini); 16-18 (Leo); 19-20 (Virgo); 26th until 2:00 p.m. the 28th (Sagittarius).

Many people prefer not to believe in lunar planting, but the ancient tradition of planting by the moon has not only been proven by experience, but by rigorous scientific tests. One of the first such experiments was made by Sir Francis Bacon, the father of modern scientific testing methods, which proved the effectiveness of planting by the moon. As a result we that plant by the moon need not be apologetic about doing so. We may be considered superstitious only by those who refuse to acknowledge proven facts.

The rule we follow in lunar planting is to plant all crops that produce their yield above ground in first and second quarters of the moon, and crops that produce their yield below ground in third and fourth quarters, the third preferred. This is simple to follow, yet we need to know the difference between annuals, biennials and perennials.

Annuals are plants which produce their harvest the same growing season they are planted. Those annuals that yield above ground crops are planted during the increasing moon, and those that produce their yield below ground are planted during the decreasing moon.

If the plant is harvested after two growing seasons it is a biennial. The biennial must over - winter its root system in the ground, therefore it will develop the best root system if planted in the decreasing moon. Biennials such as fall planted grains when planted in the decreasing moon give the plant a stronger root system and growth to resist severe storms and dry weather.

Perennials are plants which grow from the same root year after year. These include flowers, fruit and nut trees, berries, rhubarb, asparagus, shade trees and shrubs. These give best results when planted during the decreasing moon, third quarter preferred.

Transplanting can be done with success either in the increase or decrease of the moon during a fruitful sign.

January has given us some beautiful days. Even the robin is mixed up, singing his spring song. The trees and plants are budding out, roses are putting on new leaves. But it is a false spring. We know that February will bring us some real winter weather.

The warm days have been good for working in the flower beds, the soil is easy to handle. Freezing and thawing weather helps to make the soil tillable. So it is the time to remove weeds from the beds. You may be surprised at how much growth has been made, even though it seems so dry. When that task is done, water the beds well.

If lawn edges were left ragged last fall, a good edging now will improve the appearance and may help inspire you to do other improvements.

It is time to fertilize the lawn. We are using horse manure. It can be put on in a fresh state at this time and will not be to offensive to your neighbors.

If you are using commercial fertilizer, it should have a high percentage of nitrogen. Note the analysis printed on the bag. There will be three numbers on the label separated by dashes, such as 21-0-0; 16-20-0; 12-8-4, etc. The first number always indicates the percentage of nitrogen. The second number the percentage of phosphorus, the third the percentage of potassium. Percentage simply means that there are that many pounds of that particular nutrient in 100 pounds of total fertilizer. The remainder of the fertilizer material is a non - nutrient material that may have some soil conditioning benefits.

Our soil is most frequently deficient in nitrogen. This is the growth stimulator, and so it is used more rapidly. It is also very soluble and consequently more subject to leaching or washing out of the plant root area by irrigation or rain. It should not be used excessively. It may burn plants, or stimulate excessive growth and weaken the plant to diseases and insects.

Phosphorus is not so soluble and needs to be mixed into the soil. However, our soil is not generally deficient in phosphorus. It is helpful in a new seed bed. It is recommended for alkaline soils as it may help iron and zinc to be available to the plant roots. Our soil may show a shortage of iron and zinc.

Potassium is usually adequate in our soil. It is water soluble and moves into the soil with the water.

We may have deficient iron and zinc. They will probably only be minor. Chelated forms of these may be obtained. They should be used with caution. As we understand it, the chelated forms are stronger and more available to the plants than in the sulfate forms. However, the sulfate forms may be safer to use. They are less likely to burn when using too much.

Manures are our favorite fertilizers. They give a double bonus. First the soil is benefited by their organic content and their contribution to soil fertility. Second, the soil chemical and physical balance is improved for good plant gowth. Applications as a surface mulch on established plants are best used in the winter season.

Rare seed and unusual plants are difficult to find at local garden shops. Many of these items are available through mail - order catalogues. Keep these; they will form a good library for future reference.

There are many fine bulletins and pamphlets published by the state agricultural extension service which are available at the agriculture extension office on East Frederic. Some are free. Some may cost a nominal sum.

It is often difficult to tell which is the top or bottom of the gloxinia or begonia tuber. The gnarled, dried coverings look the same on all sides. Maybe this will help: the top is somewhat flat, the bottom rounded or concave. There may be a hint of pink coming from the bud, which is always the top.

Gardeners should form the habit of using sand on icy sidewalks and steps, rather than salt. The salt melts down into the soil and seeps to the roots of grass, trees and shrubs. This causes considerable damage which appears as yellow foliage in the spring.

Keep water out for the birds. This is very important when we are having such a dry time.

Yellow Delicious apples are available in most supermarkets all year round and are best to bake with because they retain their shape.

Genesis House Administration Building opens

Mrs. Lois Still

Text by Deborah Bridges

NEW ADMINISTRATION OFFICES, much needed by the growing Genesis House program, are ready for use at 615 W. Buckler.

The new Administration Building of Pampa's Genesis House for boys and girls will be open to the public's view from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. today at the 615 W. Buckler location.

Through the support of Pampa citizens, $30,000 has been donated towards the building of the new facility. Lois Still, administrator, and her staff would like to take the opportunity to show the Genesis House supporters what their efforts have brought about.

The new building will provide the necessary office space for the growing program, she said. Also, rooms for individual and group counseling, in service training for the staff, conferences with state social workers and state moniters, board meetings, food storage, clothing and extra furnishings will be housed under the roof of the administration building.

During the past decade, since the beginning of the Genesis House program, these services have been handled in the home of Mrs. Still.

However, with the growth of the facilities, the space Mrs. Still could provide was not adequate for the needs.

Seeing the need, Pampans responded with donations of time and labor. The light brick building on West Buckler is the result.

"Community support has made it possible for us to erect this much - need administration building," Mrs. Still commented. She said with an additional $32,000 the building will be completely paid for.

Visitors at today's open house will be given tours through the new building, including the carpeted and paneled offices, the kitchen area, and the storage rooms.

Mrs. Still was enthusiastic about the new food storage room where a large freezer has been placed to keep meat. Shelves along the walls store canned goods, and soft good items, too numerous to be stored in the boys and girls homes.

The nucleus of the original Genesis House for girls was formed in 1971 when a Presbyterian minister picked Mrs. Still's name from a list of "Hotline" volunteers. He called her and asked if she could house a homeless teenage girl in her trailer house for a few days.

Her trailer soon swelled with the troubled girls. Girls were spilling from an apartment, when the tan brick home at 321 Starkweather was converted to the girls' home.

In 1975, the Genesis House for Boys was opened at 612 W. Browning. It had formerly been the St. Vincent de Paul Catholic Church's rectory.

Mrs. Still, a licensed child care administrator, said she is seeking to help troubled teenagers through intensive counseling and a highly structured living program for personal and social adjustment.

She said young people learn work and social skills which will aid in their becoming responsible citizens as they mature.

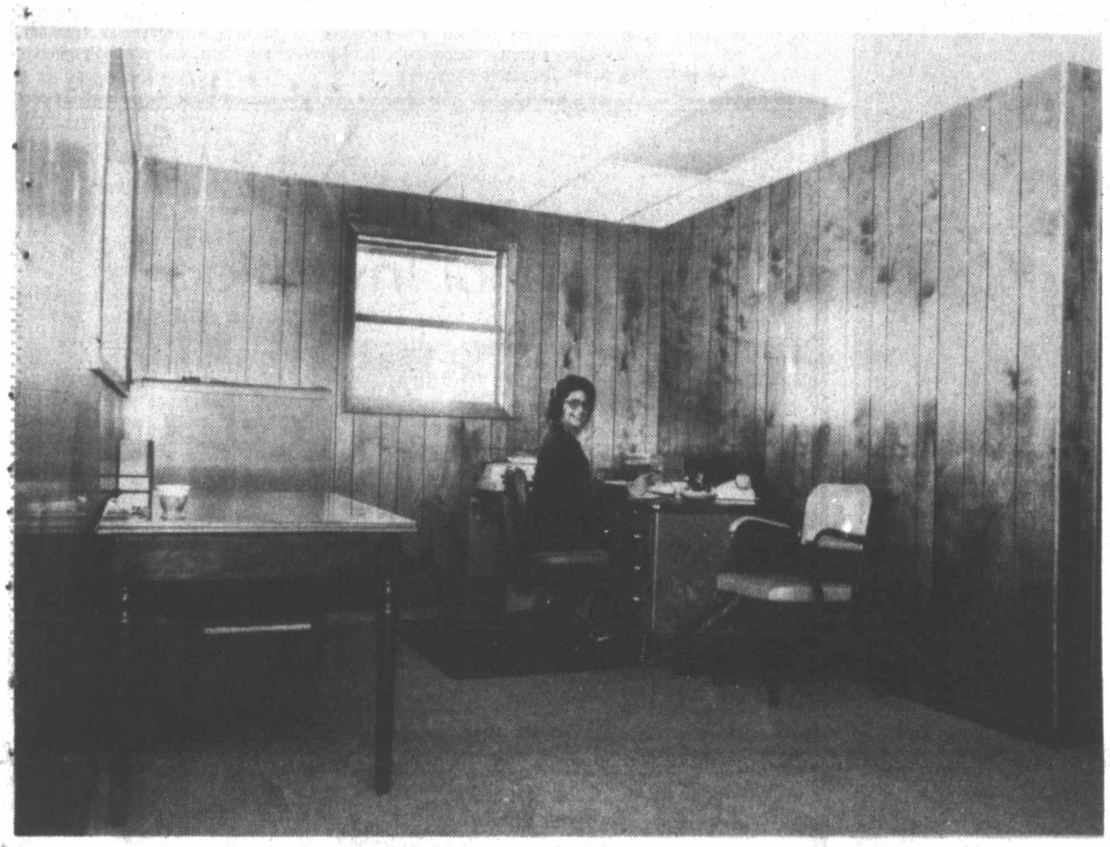
Last year, Genesis House helped 36 young people. Of the number, 25 were reunited with their family, school and community — 11 remained in the program for further help.

During the 10 year period the program has been in existance, more than 300 troubled youngsters have found their way to Genesis House.

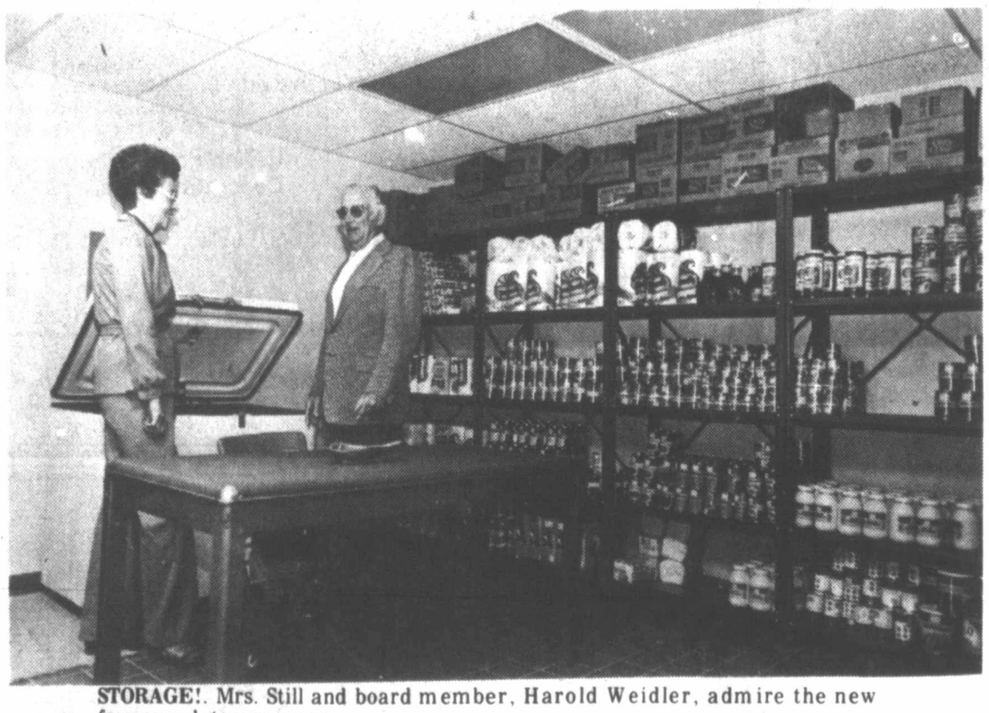
Many half - way house programs like Genesis House are supported by government grants, operating on state and federal funding.

In Pampa, however, 75 percent of the total cost of the two homes comes from local pocketbooks. The Genesis House is funded through the United Fund, civic groups, churches and local individuals.

A board of directors oversees the half - way houses. Board members include Nadine Arney (chairman), Harold Weidler, W. A. Pershall and Mrs. Still.



MARY DADE, receptionist at the new building, greets visitors with a smile.



STORAGE!. Mrs. Still and board member, Harold Weidler, admire the new freezer and storage space.

A CHEERY KITCHEN, featuring a new microwave oven, is ready for use at conferences and coffee breaks.

ADMINISTRATOR, Mrs. Lois Still, admires her new office from behind her desk.

AZTEC. By Gary Jennings. Atheneum. 754 Pages. $15.95.

The Aztecs are an American Indian people who ruled in the Valley of Mexico in the 15th and early-16th centuries. They had one of the most advanced civilizations anywhere on earth at that time. And they practiced those famous religious ceremonies involving human sacrifices at temple-topped pyramids.

They would certainly make an intriguing subject for a novel, and it is with much hope that one turns to Gary Jennings' "Aztec," which proposes to resurrect the glory of the lost empire.

The hope is quickly dashed. Jennings has chosen to tell the story through one man, an Aztec named Mixtli. The result is rather like looking at the Taj Mahal through a straw.

Mixtli is a nice enough fellow. He was born the son of a quarrier, but he has the luck and ambition to rise to be a courtier, scribe, warrior, merchant and finally a nobleman. When he is an old man, the Spaniards come and conquer his country. Deciding to learn more about Aztec history and customs, the Spaniards recruit Mixtli as an oral historian of sorts.

Rising to the challenge, Mixtli tells the Bishop of Mexico, the representative of the King of Spain, what he has experienced and witnessed during his life, ranging in subject matter from cannibalism to carnality. What we have between the covers here is this massive narrative, purportedly written down by the bishop's scribes.

Mixtli speaks lucidly, but he is a very self-defeating storyteller. The moment things get a little exciting, he stops his narrative and cries to the bishop: "Please, Your Excellency. I am recounting the way things seemed then to my still untutored mind" or some such thing, shattering all the magic he has managed to create up to that point.

"Aztec" is a novel which doesn't make it despite its potentially good material.

THE CRATER. By Richard Slotkin, Atheneum. 558 Pages. $14.95.

Richard Slotkin's first novel, "The Crater," fills a big void in the canon of books about the Civil War. It is more than just a piece of fiction, and a very good one — it is an eye-opener.

The setting is just outside Petersburg, Va., in the summer of 1864. The Union and Confederate armies are like punch-drunk fighters, reeling, waiting for the next clash. What results is a dark moment in American history.

Slotkin traces the forces leading to the moment, relying heavily on military dispatches. He re-creates the pressure of the Pennsylvania miners digging the longest — at that time — military tunnel under an enemy fortification.

'Power dressing' helps women executives choose their style

By ILONA ROSS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — "My wife needs help," pleads the voice over the telephone. "But don't tell her I gave you her number. Just contact her."

Sound like a call for psychiatric help?

Susan McCone of Jonal Associates, a firm that promises to revamp women's wardrobes, says she receives such calls frequently from men concerned with the appearance of their wives and female employees.

At least four such companies have sprung up around New York, aimed mainly at ladies with at least $1,000 to spend on "power dressing."

These companies say how you look can influence, to a greater or lesser degree, whether you get the job, the promotion, the contract.

Their owners share a classic, quiet taste and try to eliminate, in varying degrees, the dowdiness and severity that sometimes marks the professional woman.

Miss McCone, who gave up a six-year career in law to form Jonal, attributes her company's success to the absence of a dress code for executive women.

"There are no clearly established formulas, like the gray pinstriped suit for men," she says.

Susan Dresner of Successful Ways and Means recommends that women dress for one position ahead of the one they hold.

Miss Dresner, 36, says her previous jobs in publishing and banking gave her the knowledge to launch her company several months ago.

Emily Cho, who runs Images, has been in business for 10 years. She sees "a tremendous need" for the service as women enter the job market in greater numbers than ever.

"Women have pressures they never had before," she said. "They're very confused about the question of professionalness versus femininity... To be as efficient as men and as sexy as models, plus look young. It's a hopeless task."

They all deny they're in the business of selling good taste, and they maintain there's no one correct look.

However, each has a personal peeve with American style.

Miss Cho, an elegantly polished woman of Chinese birth, feels the most common mistake is to buy clothes that look stupendous on tall, lithe models but that are unflattering to the larger-hipped figure.

Brigitte Nioche of Total Image Plus cites color coordination.

"I see women on the bus with six or seven different colors. It's worse in winter, when there's more to wear, she says."

Miss Dresner criticizes the "mass merchandising of designer lines" which she says makes it difficult to dress distinctively and recommends "the little-known designer, small boutiques and better-made imported things."

Miss McCone wants to wean professional women away from "gray suits and beige blouses — unnecessarily boring clothes which they probably don't even like."

Prices are classy at Jonal, which has its own line of custom-tailored designs, but so are its clients — the professionals as well as "women with a busy social life like chairwomen of charity boards," says Miss McCone.

Miss Cho, who spends at least four hours scouring department stores for clothing to suit each client, says the minimum price for a season's wardrobe is $1,000, "which goes in half an hour."

Mrs. Nioche concentrates on teaching group classes and working on her book, "The Sensuous Dresser," to be published next year.

The four women say their businesses are doing well. Miss Cho has logged 300 private clients in 10 years and has mailed away her computer questionnaire to several thousand women.

The form, which costs $25, lists 150 questions on job, taste and physical characteristics. A computer spits out pictures of suggested outfits predicated on the client's style of life and would-be image.

There is a gentle contradiction in this woman-owned-and-operated business that caters to the liberated woman and yet seeks to please the men in her life.

"Most of the women are pretty savvy," says Miss McCone. "They realize that how they appear is one of the most important, if not the most important, factor."

Miss Cho's assessment is more qualified.

"I am not a clothes horse, but I do believe you can somewhat control people's responses to you through your clothes," she says.

What about the target of all these messages, the men who still hold most of the power when it comes to hiring, firing, and promotions?

CUT FOOD COSTS "TO THE BONE"

Nearly six of ten American families have reported that coping with the high cost of food is a major cause of stress, according to General Mills' American Family Report 1978-79. We can help relieve some of that stress on the mind and the pocketbook by cutting food costs to the bone.

—Save those coupons for items that will be needed. Many dollars can be saved through the use of coupons.

—Develop a filing system for saving (and maybe trading) coupons. A shoe box may be used for filing. A good time to assemble them is when the market list is being compiled or made. Place all coupons to be used in an envelope in your purse to save time at the grocery store check-out counter.

—Check the date on the coupon to be sure it is still good before reaching the store. Do this when sorting through the coupons while compiling the market list. This saves time at the check-out counter.

—Compare costs of serving size rather than just buying the lowest price per pound or can.

The food budget is greatly affected by the choice of the main dishes for the family since about one-third of every food dollar goes for meat, poultry, and fish. Consider cost per serving (rather than just cost per pound) of meats.

When TV dinners are considered for convenience, look at their cost versus the cost of home-prepared foods. Generally a homemaker can prepare a much better and less expensive TV dinner with a little planning. Time is often considered to be worth money, and she can bank her time in this way.

Even though nearly 35 percent of the American food dollar is spent at fast food outlets or other away-from-home eating places, food costs can be "cut to the bone" by preparing food at home. In a recent survey, the cost of meal in a restaurant was $1.61, at home it was 83 cents.

You can help keep food costs down by saving energy too. "Double-up" with several items and bake them at the same time to save oven energy. Match pan and burner sizes, cover pans when cooking if possible, avoid preheating the oven unnecessarily and turn off lights when they are not needed.

Save money by learning what foods are tax-exempt and which ones are taxable since five cents are added to each dollar spent for a taxable item. For example, no tax is paid on pwdered tea bu there is one on tea with sugar added.

Generally speaking, if an item is human food for home food preparation and is not already "made-up," it is tax exempt. This also include fruit drinks, ades and punches which include less than 70 percent natgural fruit juices whether they are purchased canned, powdered or as frozen concentrate. Foods or meals already prepared and ready to eat are taxable. Sugar or chocolate-coated nuts are taxable even though the sugar, cocoa and nuts when sold separately are not taxed.

Sales tax is charged on the full regular price of merchandise purchased with "cents-off" coupons issued by manufacturers. When the coupon is issued by the store, tax is paid on the price after the "cents-off" havce been deducted.

Since meats are about the most expensive part of a meal, you can cut food costs by serving only trhe amount needed for that meal or for that person. A two to three ounce serving is all you need for a meal but many of us will take more if it is placed in front of us. Remember that meat alternates and vegetable proteins can be served with meats to help extend them and provide complete proteins for a main dish.

When you combine all of this into a casserole, you are providing the meat, starch and vegetable for a meal. You are also saving energy by cooking one dish instead of three separate dishes.

Avboid making the garbage can another "mouth to feed". Do not let food go to waste in the refrigerator — and then in the garbage can.

—Plan to use leftovers.

Properly package, label and date leftovers to freeze for later use.

Grate the ends of heeses into as jar for seasoning casseroles or scrambled eggs, for example.

—Add leftover apples, oranges, pears or bananas into gelatin salads or desserts.

-Use leftover pieces of meats or vegetables into soups, stews or casseroles.

—Before cooking or shopping, always take time to check for usable leftovers before they spoil or get stale.

Other ways homemakers can cut food costs are:

—Always compare prices.

—Makme a shopping list.

—Buy extra food items to store when prices are lower.

—Read the labels for ingredients.

—Check food ads before buying.

—Shop at one store.

—Read labels for nutrition information.

—Plan menus before shopping.

The safety lamp, invented by Sir Humphrey Davy, was used for the first time in the coal mines in 1816.

Entertainer to keynote Knife and Fork meeting

Shearen Elebash, who has been an entertainer for more than 25 years, will appear at the Top O' Texas Knife & Fork Club Feb. 12 at 7:30 p.m. at the Starlight Room of the Coronado Inn.

According to reports, the likeable Elebash is no ordinary speaker. He uses the piano almost as much as the platform. His combination of speech and piano acompaniments have raised acclaim wherever and whenever he has appeared.

SHEAREN ELEBASH

A graduate of Yale University and a member of its famous Whiffenpoofs organization, Elebash is a man of many talents. In spite of his lightheartedness, he has a serious side. A native of Montgomery, Ala., he once ran for governor of Alabama and didn't do too badly considering the odds against him. He ran for office because he felt a change was needed and he thought he was the one who could bring it about.

He admits, however, that he is glad he lost.

"At least I'm happy," he remarked, "and have the opportunity to make others happy, also."

Although he is a veteran in the field of entertainment, Elebash has not always been a public speaker. He served as a flying officer in Europe during World War II. He was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for his combat missions.

PEEKING at PAMPA

If you don't know the Ernie Bill Terry family, you're missing a delightful acquaintance. They live in White Deer and have their business located between there and Pampa. Ernie Bill's parking space says "Boss" and his daughter "Tam" (short for Tanya) Freeman's spot says "Sec." She often has her adorable baby girl at the office.

Besides them, there is Ernie Bill's wife, Sue, always on call — and their son, "Tam;" I think his name is Franklin, but the nickname is preferred by the family. There's another boy whom they call "Bebow," who is away at college. It's a real family business and appears completely harmonious.

Ernie Bill is from a ranching family in the area. His mother, Cleo Tom Terry, still lives on the ranch. She is also a writer and was president of Panhandle Pen Women for a term.

On Freedom Day for the hostages, their 444th day of captivity, Ruth Osborn and her daughter, Betty Wilson (wife of Ben) were shopping for a tee shirt for Betty. The merchant said, "Since we now have our 40th president, we ought to put out something to honor him and the hostages." Betty said, "If you do, I want the first one — because this is my 44th birthday!" How's that for coincidence?

Socially minded people here are pleased that several of the dance clubs are planning to continue their good times in spite of the rising costs. Just heard that the Coronado Dance Club, organized 23 years ago, is planning a March party in the Heritage Room. Board members are Rue Hestand, Glynn Bell and Wayne Robinson. Executive secretary is Vicki Williams, wife of Sam.

Happy capacity crowd attended the monthly shrimp peel at the Pampa Club last week. With a seafood dinner (Chef Baker's best) and the famous Billie Williams trio furnishing music for dancing, the occasion was a gala. Billie plays for the Petroleum Club in Houston regularly but occasionally gets up here and makes the rounds of the clubs in the area. His charming wife comes along and is always a joy to see.

Heard that Reed and Bob Echols were at the shrimp feast, Reed looking lovely in red. Gay and Fred Ammeter also attended, smiling as always. Gay is so stately and attractive. And don't you love Freddie's bow ties?

Three of Pampa's newer doctors were present with their wives. Dr. Adolf Orina (he's a good golfer, his buddies report) and his wife, Dr. Rene Grabato and his wife, Dr. Teresita Grabato — plus Dr. Juan and his wife. Good to have these medical men and women among us.

Mary and W.D. Mitchell were there too along with relatives including her daughter, who looks so much like Mary that people often think they're sisters. Bill Wiley and wife of Miami were present, too.

Senie Coley of Pampa was the dinner guest of her daughter and son-in-law, Nancy and Morris Wilson of Canadian. Also with them were their younger son and his financee. Their older son recently was graduated from the Texas Department of Public Safety. Senie flew to Austin for his graduation. He's also a registered pharmacist.

Noted that 53 of our high school band students attended the All-Region Band at WTSU a week ago. (For names, see the Pampa News of Jan. 18.) By the time you read this, they will probably have come home showered with honors.

A couple who made friends quickly in Pampa are amiable Del Bosque, manager of the Pampa Club, and delightful wife, Lilli. The two of them have just returned from a club managers' meeting in Hawaii.

While they were gone, besides the Bakers ("Bake," Kittie and Patti), the place was kept tip-top by the younger Bosques (Evonne, Dolly and Abie) along with a capable staff, including Bobbie, Tiny, Laura and others.

Hasn't Bobbie Smith got one of the most appealing, disarming smiles in town? Suppose she inherited it from her great-uncle, Buffalo Bill Cody (Bobbie's maiden name was Cody), who, history, says, had a terrific personality and was perhaps our greatest showman ever?

See you later. PAM.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a female interior decorator in business for myself. About three months ago I made a contract to decorate a suite of offices for a very attractive unattached male. While working on this job, I started dating my client, which was against my policy, but I was strongly attracted to him and enjoyed his company immensely, so I made an exception. Now find myself in a very precarious position.

My first contract with him is completed, and he has asked me to do another decorating job for him. (His summer place.) But he wants a 40 percent discount, instead of the 15 percent discount I customarily allow repeat customers, friends, etc.

I would like to continue dating this man as well as maintain a business relationship with him. How do I separate business from pleasure without jeopardizing one or the other?

BUSINESS WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: Having already mixed business with pleasure, you're on the spot. If you don't give him the 40 percent discount, you can kiss his friendship, as well as his future business, goodbye.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I am 24 and have been married for seven years. We have three children. My husband is a responsible, hard-working man who works the swing shift all the time. (He likes it.) He also works weekends every chance he gets. If he's not working on weekends, he looks for spare jobs, and when he's not working, he's too tired for anything else.

We have no friends and he doesn't care to go anywhere. We are well-off financially because he has no hobbies, goes nowhere and saves his money.

Abby, there must be more to life than this. I am lonely and bored. I'm not asking for an exciting or glamorous life, but I'd like to have some friends over occasionally, or go dancing once in a while. (He danced some before we were married.)

I love my family very much, but does married life have to be so dull? He used to be alive once. He's only 25. What should I do?

MISSING SOMETHING

DEAR MISSING: One of the things you're missing is communication with your husband. You must have had something in common or you wouldn't have married each other. Let him know how you feel, and begin by inviting one couple to your home or out for dinner. It's usually up to the wife to make social contacts. Instead of bemoaning the dullness of your life, do something to liven it up. It's your move.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: What does one do when he sees a fellow employee robbing the company blind and getting away with it? The person doing the stealing happens to be my supervisor.

Almost all my co-workers here are aware of what's going on, but they're too afraid of losing their jobs to do anything about it. It has been the topic of conversation among us for a long time, but frankly, Abby, we are stumped. Any suggestions from you or others who have had to handle a similar problem?

BITTER

DEAR BITTER: The thief should be confronted by a solid front of all who know that he's been "stealing the company blind." Either tell him face-to-face or write him a letter advising him that you are aware of his unethical practices, and warn him that if it isn't discontinued at once, the boss shall be informed. And if he doesn't straighten up, the boss should be informed.

(P.S. If anyone out there knows a better solution, I welcome it.)

* * *

MENDING MATURE MARRIAGE

By Louise Pierce

"DEAR LOUISE: Do you like soap operas? I love them. They're so full of life and laughs and tears that they keep me excited and happy all day.

"I'm in a wheel chair since our car wreck two years ago and the soaps let me live the lives I see the characters living.

"My problem is my husband. He hasn't been well since the car accident either, but he gets around better than I do. He can walk.

"He thinks soaps are a waste of 'good mentality.' When he comes in and finds me watching, he turns off the TV.

"Sometimes he just happens to sit down and watch one with me — and I can tell he gets interested but won't let on he does.

"If I could convince him that soaps have real value for me (and possibly for him too), I think he's quit pestering me about them. I don't want to quarrel with him because we've been married almost 50 years. But I have to have something to do — and I enjoy the soaps.

"Do you know of any values I can relay to him? SOAP LOVER."

DEAR S.L.: Yes. This is not just my opinion. Several articles have appeared recently in this regard.

In the first place, you are one of millions of Americans who love the soaps. I know business men and women who have small sets in their offices and turn on their favorite serials every day.

The Alabama School of Communications' assistant professor, Carolyn Cline, says:

"Soaps give us a way of escape, a way of finding new realities, new situations, new friends. They make it seem like there's a solution to every problem.

"And, on soaps, there are only glamorous problems. Nobody ever has trouble with his mortgage or the bathtub drain."

Give your husband thos arguments. Explain that, since you are in a wheel chair, the soaps provide the release and pleasure that every person must have to maintain his good humor and happy personality.

Ask him to watch just one soap for a week with you. He could get hooked on the enjoyment and want to watch more of it. Men are often as avid soap fans as women.

Whatever keeps either of a couple happy, should be welcomed by the other. Tell him that — and offer to share whatever activity he may choose as an alternative, provided it is in the realm of the health of both of you. Then take turns.

That's what Otis and I do. I'm a fan of the detective yarns, love every one that comes along. I can forget everything but the foibles and frights of the people on the tube. It relaxes me.

On the other hand, Otis likes TV football — and basketball and soccer and golf, especially golf.

Se we divvie up. For the Super Bowl, he got priority — and I watched it with him. When Magnum P.I. comes on, Otis puts down his paper and sees it with me. We have a small, black and white set in another room — but who wants to watch TV alone? Not me. I watch it with my husband.

"DEAR LOUISE: My husband played football when he was in high school, and he never wants to miss a game on Friday night in our town. We're in our 60's and our children live three states away, so there's nobody on the team that interests me in any way.

"I'm bored stiff when I go with D, which I get out of as often as I can. Don't you have to have kids or friends or neighbors or somebody on a team to be interested? And do you think I should go when I don't care about the game at all? S.M."

DEAR S.M.: Indeed I do.

IT'S TIME TO BUNDLE UP

Winter is here and time to bundle up to be warmer and more efficient with the energy you use.

Here are some tips that will help you wrap up your home to use energy more efficiently.
*Add an extra blanket of insulation in the attic. *Secure ductwork joints with screws and wrap with tape to stop air loss. *Feel warmer by installing storm doors and windows.
*Change the heating unit air filter when dirty. *Caulk and weatherstrip air leaks and infiltration around all doors and windows.
That about wraps it up for the basics. It's good to know there are some things you can do and depend on to be more comfortable this winter.

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol

February 2, 1981

This coming year you will have opportunities to work out to successful conclusions several ventures which you've been unable to conquer in the past. Finish the old before starting the new.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Normally you're a gregarious and friendly type, but today you could step out of character and be a trifle too withdrawn and moody. Romance, travel, luck, resources, possible pitfalls and career for the coming months are all discussed in your Astro-Graph which begins with your birthday. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Progress will be made in your newest area of concern today because you are able to see things realistically and act on them in a practical manner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It will be important today to feel your work has been appreciated, so anyone who pays you a compliment will rate high in your book.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Although you project a philosophical attitude, you are still quite serious-minded about any involvements today. Pragmatism will take precedence over all other methods.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your strong suit today is in areas where you can be helpful in some manner, or where you share a joint involvement. Your pep primes the engines.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your need for companionship is likely to be accentuated today, but you must pick the right sort to pal around with. The wrong type will contribute to your malaise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Adhere to your industrious urges today, rather than your playful ones. Doing something worthwhile adds to your sense of well-being.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Even though it's early in the week, select activities today that give you fun and relaxation. Breaking up dull routine is its own reward.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You won't welcome challenges today, but you might even surprise yourself as to how well you perform when you are put to the test.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Being anchored in one spot today could cause you to become moody and irritable. Arrange your schedule so that you're free to move around a bit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you apply yourself, you have the ability today to take situations which appear to be of small promise and turn them into something more hopeful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) The ability to function independently will be important to you today, so try not to let others put you in a position where you can't call your own shots.

Actor Anglim anything but

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Early in his acting career here, Philip Anglim went to Joseph Papp's Public Theater to audition. He ventured a passage from Shakespeare's "Richard II."

"That's smashing, smashing," declared the lady running the audition. "But can you play the common man?"

Tough question. To date he's starred as:

—A young Charles Adams in public TV's "The Adams Chronicles."

—John Merrick, the grotesque freak with inner beauty, in Broadway's "The Elephant Man," for which got a 1979 Tony nomination and which he's taped for a showing on ABC-TV next fall.

—The guilt-ridden main man in "Macbeth," that bloodiest of Shakespeare's major tragedies (he opened in it Jan. 22 at the Beaumont in Lincoln Center, where it's playing through March 15).

This is quite a lot for a man who is only 27. But being a Yale man as given to modesty as to sentences that parse, he doesn't gloat or suggest that maybe the auditions lady goofed in rejecting him:

It's only now that he's making his New York debut in a Shakespearean role. His "Macbeth," co-starring Maureen Anderman, is the first play ever staged by Sarah Caldwell, the famed opera director.

After Yale and the Public Theater turndown, Anglim started making his way here in regional theater. Ironically, his first New York acting job was in TV, in "The Adams Chronicles."

His real breakthrough began in 1976 when he did a 12-performance showcase piece for a young producer, Richmond Crinkley, now the head man at the Beaumont and producer of "Macbeth."

It was Crinkley who not only gave him his start, but with whom he later co-produced "The Elephant Man" and "Tintypes," a musical revue that despite good notices recently closed on Broadway after only 93 performances.

"I enjoyed working with him, still do," he says. "He was the first producer I'd ever met who loved actors. He had a notion that the theater is an actor's medium, that everything should revolve around the performance."

After the showcase, the two stayed in touch. In 1977, Crinkley, an avid reader of the London Sunday Times theater section, noticed a tiny article about a new play opening in a small theater.

"He told me, 'It looks interesting. It's about a freak in society and it's done without makeup,'" Anglim recalls. "We got some more reviews and it became more fascinating.

"Finally, I decided to see it and took a flight to London. I thought the production was flawed, but that it was an extraordinary play."

He got a copy of the script, flew home and showed it to Crinkley. Over a year's time, they formed a partnership and negotiated U.S. rights for the show.

In January 1979, "The Elephant Man," Anglim starring, opened off-Broaday in a 200-seat theater at St. Peter's Church. It's a bit off the beaten path, but word-of-mouth about the play spread rapidly.

"The reviews were kind but not stratospheric," says Anglim. "But suddenly, that little basement theater became this incredible social nexus for the high and mighty of New York. Every night it was Nureyev, or Jackie Onassis, or Mayor Koch. ...

"And it was more on the strength of the public response than the reviews that we transferred it to Broadway (in April 1979), where the reviews were out-and-out raves."

The play's still going strong, the box office boosted several months ago when rock star David Bowie — he left he show last month — took over the starring role.

Strauss finds demand for his work

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "This is a disease, this business." Actor Peter Strauss takes a breath and the weariness shows on his lean, handsome face.

"I came home at 4 in the morning," he says. "I'd shot the previous night for 18 hours, from 2 in the afternoon until 8 in the morning. Spent the day in between in the editing room.

"And as I was driving home I recognized the fact that my future wife was asleep and hadn't seen me for two days, and I suddenly realized that I had to make it very clear to her that this business is a disease. It gets into your blood. I'm not talking about the Gucci part of it. I mean the joy of creating something."

Peter Strauss has emerged as one of television's new creative forces, with a pervasive influence that few actors enjoy. Within the last year he's won an Emmy award as best actor for his role in "The Jericho Mile" and he tackled his first comedy, "Angel on My Shoulder."

His three-hour movie, "A Whale for the Killing," airs tonight on ABC and in April he stars with Peter O'Toole in the eight-hour miniseries "Masada." That series is scheduled to begin the day after his wedding to New York model Shana Hoffman.

It is to "A Whale for the Killing" that Strauss has devoted himself, body and soul. He has been involved in every aspect of the production, from the script — which went through 16 drafts and five writers — to the editing, to attempts to break down a whale's cries into music.

"It was a nightmare," he says. "There's a saying in this business, 'Never set foot off the dock.' The minute you're on water you can't keep a camera focused. It's impossible to shoot from a boat. Everything keeps changing — the weather, the tides, the currents, the water color and water clarity. We tangled with a contrary 44-foot mechanical whale. We had an actors' strike. We were in a barren, isolated location in St. John, Newfoundland."

The movie, taken from the book by Farley Mowat, tells of a whale that becomes trapped in a pond by a remote outport fishing village and Mowat's ill-fated attempts to rescue the animal. In the end the whale dies from abuse by the village people and from starvation.

Strauss says the biggest problem with the script was deciding which of many stories to focus on. "There's the sociological study of the town, the psychological study of men's actions and violence, there is a revenge story, a story of men and his environment, a story of a troubled family coming to terms during a crisis.

Heart disease and stroke will cause half of all deaths this year.

A WHALE FOR THE KILLING

Peter Strauss (right) is willing to fight an entire village alone if necessary when he makes a commitment to save the life of a marooned whale, but his honest determination brings him the aid and support of Kathryn Walker (left), a village doctor, in 'A Whale for the Killing,' a three-hour drama making its world premiere on 'The ABC Sunday Night Movie,' SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 1.

Strauss stars as a sophisticated New Yorker, stranded with his family while on vacation on the barren coast of Newfoundland, who takes a stand to prevent the slaughter of a whale doomed to die in shallow waters.

Also stars Richard Widmark, Dee Wallace and Bruce McGill.

Unseasonally warm weather aiding cropland preparation

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Unseasonally warm weather has allowed Texas farmers to press on with the work of getting cropland ready for spring planting, says Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Pfannstiel said much cropland, with the application of fertilizers and chemical weedkillers, is ready for planting in South Texas, but farmers are waiting for soil temperatures to warm up.

Rains have helped soil moisture in South and Southeast Texas, he said, but other areas remain extremely dry for this time of year. North, Central and Northeast Texas need rain to boost winter grazing and to build up soil moisture reserves for the crop season.

A few West Texas farmers are focusing on the past season's crop — still trying to harvest some cotton left when scattered rains and snow interrupted field operations in the Trans-Pecos area and West Central Texas. Some fields will go unharvested because of poor yields and weather damage, Pfannstiel said.

In the Rio Grande Valley, sugarcane, citrus and winter vegetables are being harvested. Harvesting of spinach, cabbage and onions continues in the Winter Garden area of Southwest Texas, he said.

Livestock feeding remains widespread over the state because of poor grazing, Pfannstiel said. Feeding has been lighter than usual because of mild weather in many areas.

Reports from district Extension agents showed the following conditions.

PANHANDLE: Farmers are busy getting land in shape for spring planting. Soil moisture is short and ranges are poor. Irrigated wheat is growing well but that on dryland is at a standstill. Range cattle are in good shape with supplemental feeding.

SOUTH PLAINS: Cotton ginning remains active because of considerable amounts field-stored in modules. Soil moisture has been adequate, but some areas are getting dry. Wheat is providing grazing for cattle. Cropland preparation is active.

ROLLING PLAINS: Small grains continue to suffer from lack of moisture and from greenbugs. Ranges and pastures are generally in poor shape due to lack of moisture so cattle feeding remains active. Hay supplies are short. Farmers are getting cropland ready for spring planting.

NORTH CENTRAL: The region remains dry despite a few light rains. Farmers are topdressing wheat with nitrogen fertilizer and hoping that rains will come soon too boost growth. Cropland preparation also is active, and livestock feeding continues due to poor grazing.

NORTHEAST: Farmers are getting land ready for spring planting. Pruning of fruit trees and spraying with dormant oil to control scale insects is about complete. Wheat and other small grains continue to make only limited growth due to lack of moisture. Livestock are in fair to good shape.

FAR WEST: Rains have boosted soil moisture, but have delayed completion of cotton harvest and damaged the remaining crop. Pastures and ranges are improving and livestock look good. Poisonous range plants are a problem in some counties. Farmers are getting ready to plant spring wheat.

WEST CENTRAL: A few, poor fields of cotton remain unharvested. Wheat is providing livestock grazing, but greenbugs and fungus are causing problems. Livestock are in fair to good condition with active feeding.

CENTRAL: Rain has helped the wheat crop, but most of the area remains dry. Wheat also is suffering from greenbugs and winter grain mites. Livestock are declining. Feeding is widespread.

EAST: Rains have boosted wheat, oats and winter pastures. Livestock feeding continues, with hay supplies ranging from short to adequate. Land for row crops and gardens generally is ready to plant. Some early spring vegetables are going in. Fruit trees are being pruned and sprayed with dormant oil for scale insects.

UPPER COAST: Rains have boosted soil moisture for spring planting and should add wheat and oats growth for additional livestock grazing. Cattle are fair, with supplemental feeding. Some early spring vegetables are being planted.

SOUTH CENTRAL: More moisture is needed. Stock water still is short in some areas despite some rain last week. Most cropland is ready to plant, and some early spring vegetables are going in. Livestock are doing well despite poor grazing, with active feeding. Most cows are calving.

SOUTHWEST: Rains have boosted winter forages and helped soil moisture. Farmers are busy getting cropland ready for planting while harvesting of spinach, cabbage and onions continues. Cattle feeding continues.

COASTAL BEND: Pastures, ranges, wheat, oats and flax got a boost from rains. Most cropland is ready for planting. Livestock are fair, with active feeding. Hay supplies are short in some areas.

SOUTH TEXAS: After recent rains, cropland is ready for planting cotton, sorghum, corn, watermelons, and other crops. Sugarcane harvesting continues, with harvesting of citrus, broccoli, cabbage, carrots and tomatoes. Supplemental livestock feeding continues in full swing, but rains should improve grazing.

Texas farmers cutting acreage

AUSTIN -- Preliminary estimates on planting for major crops in 1981 show that Texas farmers will be cutting back on acreage, Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown has reported.

Brown stressed that these preliminary estimates are reported to give farmers an idea of what the total state harvest could be. "These are not final figures; they are only intentions reported at this time. Weather, market, and economic factors could reduce or increase any of the totals."

The Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service surveys indicate the Upland cotton acreage will be down to 7.7 million acres, 2 percent lower than last year. American Pima cotton acreage is estimated to be 20,000 acres, down 9 percent. Sorghum and corn acreage is also expected to be decreased.

Sorghum producers intend to plant 4.4 million acres, 8 percent below 1980's crop. Brown said that there had been a trend of reduction of acreage in sorghum in the past few years. "Even though year - end prices were very good for sorghum, many dryland farmers lost their entire crop, and they will probably change to another crop."

Corn plantings could drop as much as 13 percent from 1980 if farmers conform to the intentions reported. That reduction would place plantings at a total of 1.3 million acres.

"The demand for corn will certainly continue; however, last year farmers even on irrigated acreage had problems producing profitable yields with the drought," Brown said.

Wheat has already been planted for the 1981 harvest, with a record number of acreage of 7.7 million.

Soybean acreage is also expected to be lower, with an estimated 650,000, which is 7 percent below 1980.

With the large demand for peanuts in 1980, Texas farmers will increase their plantings to 315,000 acres, 2 percent higher than 1980.

Oat and barley seedings are estimated to have increases with oats at 1.5 million acres and barley at 75,000 acres.

New vaccine may reduce incidence of shipping fever

LUBBOCK -- The incidence of shipping fever, a plague of the cattle industry and particularly feedlot operators, can be greatly reduced by a vaccine being developed at Texas Tech University.

Dr. Clarence L. Baugh, associate professor of biological sciences at Texas Tech, is doing research on a combination vaccine that combats the most common bacteria involved in the shipping fever and provides cattle a high degree of immunity against several dangerous bacteria species in one treatment.

San Angelo veterinarian Dr. W.H. Wohler is assisting in the project by providing Baugh with tissue and serum samples from feedlots throughout the state. Samples are taken from animals which have died from pasterellosis and salmonellosis, the two most common forms of shipping fever found in Texas.

Wolher often brings the samples personally from feedlots in Pecos, Hereford and other areas, travelling by plane. Baugh meets the veterinarian at the airport and quickly takes the sample to his Texas Tech lab, where he begins streaking for culture growth. By the next day he can have the shipping fever bacterium isolated.

"Wohler is getting the advantages of a laboratory, and I am getting the advantage of having somebody in the field," Baugh said.

The three main organisms the researchers are battling are Pasteurella multocida, Pasteurella hemolytica, and Salmonella typhimurium, bacteria which cause either death or significant weight loss in cattle.

Cattle become susceptible to infection by these organisms after stress, especially during shipping.

Baugh's combination vaccine contains these three bacteria, and others. Animals injected with small doses of the dead bacteria develop antibodies in their blood stream that produce immunity against later infection by those bacteria.

Field observtions showed that Baugh's combination vaccine, prepared as a water in oil emulsion and injected subcutaneously, was highly successful in preventing shipping fever. The treatment reduced the incidence of the disease from 30 or 40 percent to 4 percent or less, and reduced deaths from as high as 10 percent to 0.9 percent or zero.

Baugh and Wohler have not found significant differences in the occurrence of different types of shipping fever in different parts of the state.

IN AGRICULTURE

WHEAT INSECTS: Heavy infestations of greenbugs have been reported in isolated spots primarily in the north central portion of the Texas Panhandle. Temperatures have been cool enough to limit beneficial insect activity yet warm enough to allow greenbugs to increase. Individual fields need to be checked to determine if insecticide treatment is due, for as indicated, the heavy infestations have been very isolated. Be certain to check the base of wheat plants, for this time of year greenbugs will tend to be on the lower leaves or below the soil line. Heavy infestations of greenbugs will cause yellow spots in the wheat fields because they suck juices from the plant and at the same time inject a toxin. Fields with adequate moisture can withstand infestations better than drought stressed fields. Fields being grazed are less likely to have greenbug infestations. Check spots throughout your fields to see if you are having a build-up in greenbug numbers. If you notice considerable numbers of greenbugs, give me a call for further assistance in determining whether to spray.

Wheat producers need to be watchful for the army cutworm. We occasionally have damaging outbreaks of this pest from February through late March. Although it is a cutworm it feeds on the foliage. If you are lucky enough to have wheat and for some unexplained reason it seems to be disappearing, you might check for army cutworms. During the day, you will most likely find the army cutworm in the soil, under the wheat or old straw.

MANURE OR FERTILIZER: Research conducted at Bushland shows that ten tons of manure per acre are generally adequate to produce satisfactory yields of irrigated corn, wheat or grain sorghum. Ten tons of feedlot waste contain about 240 pounds each of nitrogen and phosphorous plus substantial quantities of minor and micro nutrients. Feedlot waste is especially useful in correcting iron and zinc deficiency problems on caliche soils or where residual phosphorus has accumulated from frequent application of commercial phosphorus. Early application prior to seedbed preparation helps to distribute the material in the top soil and reduces the possibility of an adverse effect on germination due to high concentrations of nitrate salts.

WINTER ANNUAL GRASSES IN WHEAT: The trend toward limited tillage and continuous cropping to wheat has resulted in the invasion of wheat fields by grassy weeds such as cheat grass, rescue grass and little barley. Unfortunately effective chemical controls have not been developed. Herbicide treatments on sandy soils generally kill the wheat as well as the weeds. Sencor or Lexone can be used on heavier soils but currently are labelled only for use on fields planted to TAM 101, which is tolerant to these herbicides. Rotation to summer crops and alternative year fallow are the most practical ways of keeping winter annual grasses out of winter wheat.

A&M ALCOHOL PLANT: As a part of an alternate energy production program in the Agricultural Engineering Department at Texas A&M University, a research and demonstration ethyl alcohol (ethanol) production has been set up and is now operational.

4-H CORNER

HOSTING OPPORTUNITY: Craig Wepprecht is a former Illinois 4-H'er and IFYE to France and is currently a student at the University of Illinois. Craig has a host brother and friend in France who would like to come to the United States to stay and work. They are both college age and are studying in the field of agriculture.

They would like to take time off from their studies and live with farm families in Texas, helping work on these farms, in order to learn more about our agricultural methods and hopefully earn money for expenses.

If you would be interested in hosting these young men or have any questions about their request, contact the County Extension Office.

GENEALOGY: Would you be interested in finding more about your family tree or distant relatives, - what native country your great - grandparents are from, their birth dates and other historical facts on them, - learn facts about your faminly that never occurred to you before? If you would be interested in participating in a project of this type call the County Extension Office - 669-7429.

AMARILLO STOCK SHOW: We would like to congratulate each of the Gray County 4-H members who participated in the Amarillo Stock Show and its related activities.

Gray County 4-H lamb exhibitors in the Suffolk breed class competed against more than fifty (50) lambs in each class. Kerri Cross received placings of 12th and 16th with her lambs. Tammy Greene and Sabrina Parker each placed 18th in their respective Suffolk classes. Jamie Greene placed 22nd with her Hampshire wether. Other lamb exhibitors included Amie Greene and Doug Devoll.

Tress Hess of McLean exhibited three Hereford heifers in the Junior Heifer Show and placed first in the Spring Calves class, third in the Junior Calves class, and sixth in the Senior Calves class.

Other livestock exhibitors included Heath Babcock and Doug Devoll exhibiting barrows. Tress Hess and Robin Rohde exhibited crossbred steers.

Laura Horne participated in the AQHA Youth Show on Saturday, January 24, in Amarillo. Laura placed third in Showmanship, fifth in Geldings at Halter, second in Western Pleasure, fifth in Western Horsemanship, and fifth in Trail.

Agricultural census users program set

COLLEGE STATION -- A program designed to help users of agricultural census data make the most of this information is slated for Thursday, Feb. 5, at Texas A&M University.

Speakers at the Census of Agriculture Data Users Conference will describe data available from the 1978 Census of Agriculture, agriculturally related data from the 1980 Census and other census data sources, and plans for the 1982 Census of Agriculture. They will also describe agricultural data availability and uses.

The day - long conference will begin at 8:30 a.m. in Room 601 of Rudder Tower. Sponsors are Texas A&M's Department of Rural Sociology, the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Joseph Horak, assistant chief for agricultural statistics with the U.S. Census Bureau, will be the featured speaker, points out Dr. Steve Murdock, head of the Department of Rural Sociology. Other national and regional census officials and state agricultural agency and agribusiness representatives will also be on hand.

Conference participants will have an opportunity to discuss agricultural data requirements and limitations and to make suggestions for improving such data, adds Murdock.

Chris Robinson stars as Rick Webber on "General Hospital."

It's strange the way people sometimes decide what it is they want to do in life. Take the case of Chris Robinson who plays Rick Webber on "General Hospital." Had it not been for the Nina, Pinta, and the Santa Maria, Robinson might have pursued previous ambitions which included being a fireman, policeman, or rocket scientist. "I was in the fifth grade," explains Chris, "and the teacher said we were going to do a skit about Christopher Columbus discovering America. I don't know why she picked me to play Christopher Columbus but she did." Following the skit something quite unexpected happened to Robinson. "There was applause," he recalls, "and everyone thought I was a great Christopher Columbus. So I thought, 'That's interesting. Maybe I want to be an actor.' I never thought about being an actor before that in my entire life. I never had any dream or intention of becoming an actor. It just came from doing an extra credit for school and it turned into something I enjoyed."

Following graduation from high school, Chris enrolled in Los Angeles City College as a theatre arts major. His first professional job was the title role in a low budget flick entitled "The Beast From Haunted Cave." His theater training convinced the producers of this movie to let him do all the special effects and make-up for the film as well. As he matured as an actor, Chris did guest shots on television series such as "Ben Casey", "The Virginian," "The Fugitive" and "Gunsmoke". He even played the lead for two years opposite Paul Burke in "12 O'Clock High". After that series Chris went back to his native Florida and almost destroyed his career by getting heavily involved in his own sailboat business.

Before he knew it ten years had gone by with Chris only having time to go back and accept an acting assignment once or twice a year.

After moving back to LA, Chris was offered the role of Rick Webber on General Hospital. Though he hesitated accepting a soap role at first, Chris has since become the art-form's fan. "To summarize the soap opera idiom," says Robinson, "it's probably the greatest training any actor can ever have."

Now a look at what's been happening and what will happen on all the afternoon dramas.
