

Nugent says federal regulations obstructing oil

By DEBORAH BRIDGES
Staff Writer

Highly critical of the "those damyankees," the windfall profit tax and federal restrictions on the oil and gas industry in Texas, State Railroad Commission Chairman James E. (Jim) Nugent says only a strong free enterprise system will halt the rapidly declining production of the state's natural energy resources.

Nugent was in Pampa as guest speaker at a meeting of the Desk and Derrick Club at the Pampa Country Club Tuesday evening.

In an interview with The Pampa News late Tuesday, Nugent did not deny that the Texas Railroad Commission — the regulatory agency for most aspects of the state's commerce — is probably the most politically powerful agency in the state.

"How can we help it? We (the railroad commission) are intimately involved in the total economy of the state. It is one of the reasons the economy has remained as good as it has," he said.

"Unfortunately, this good economy is also bringing in a bunch of damyankees into the state," he added, almost in a kidding manner.

In a thumbnail sketch of the commission's responsibilities, Nugent said the agency regulates the exploration and production of natural gas and crude oil; the laying of pipelines, all transportation, including railroads and trucks, strip mining, and liquid propane gas — at the retail and wholesale level and including all safety facets.

The main thrust of the commission, he said, is to regulate the oil and gas industry in Texas in such a way to get the most effective and economic oil and gas recovery.

Nugent indicated production charts for crude oil and natural gas in Texas over the past decade. The charts showed a sharp downward slope.

"Expect this for the future," Nugent said, pointing to the chart.

"In the eventual picture, there will continue to be a reduction in the oil and gas production, unless there are some big changes in governmental policy," Nugent added.

The railroad commission head said inflation, the increasing allied costs of drilling and the windfall profits tax are all contributing factors to the declining production rates.

"This windfall profits tax is sapping the money from the state," Nugent said.

He said a repeal "or at least a part" of the windfall profits tax "right now" would be shot in the arm to Texas' natural energy resources production.

Nugent conceded, however, that such a repeal is a "pipe dream."

"Do you realize that 50 to 55 percent of the windfall profits tax paid to the federal government is on Texas natural resources?" he said. "And did you know that the states receiving the majority of the money after it has gone through the federal mill are in the northeastern part of the country?"

When asked what he thought would most help the falling production, Nugent said, "The free enterprise system."

"Let the fellow take the money out of the bank and put it out into the field where it belongs. If he makes it, then applaud him. If he doesn't, give him a pat on the back and let him try again. Let the man who wants to gamble, do it."

"Quit giving the damyankees all our money," he said, vehemently.

Nugent said the eastern states are paying 30 to 35 percent of the total natural gas market value on Texas natural gas. "That's a mean average value of a little over 70 cents," he said.

Turning to a different aspect of the commission's responsibilities, Nugent spoke encouragingly regarding petroleum waste disposal in Texas.

Nugent said his agency regulates the disposal of oilfield - related liquids and fluids and the injection of highly poisonous gases into wells to flush out residual oil and natural gas.

"Even with 600 wells drilled per year in Texas, there is less subsurface pollution than most other states, a direct result of our watchdog actions," he said.

Nugent began his career with the Railroad Commission on an appointment by former Governor Dolph Briscoe.

Reagan prescribes quick passage of economic program Classroom construction okayed by school board

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, returning to action with a pronouncement that he is "much improved" but the economy is as sick as ever, is on the verge of getting Congress to fill his prescription for the nation's economic ills, Republican leaders say.

In his first public appearance since last month's assassination attempt, Reagan told a joint session of Congress on Tuesday night that it should move quickly on his proposed spending and tax cuts. Voters are getting impatient, he said.

Inactivity "will delay even longer — and more painfully — the cure which must come," he told lawmakers in the nationally broadcast, 20-minute address on the eve of his 100th day in office, the traditional time for the first assessment of a new president.

Congressional leaders said the speech helped put much of the president's program back on the right track.

Democrats and Republicans planned to meet today to assess what effect the speech will have on House floor action on the budget, which begins Thursday.

"If we didn't have the votes before, we sure ought to have them now," said House Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois.

"We're in the seventh inning and three runs behind," House Democratic leader Jim Wright of Texas said of Democratic attempts to block or modify the Reagan program.

"I always said he would get most of it, and I still think that," said Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston of California.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said he believed Reagan did what he set out to do: "increase popular support for his economic program and reassure Americans that their president is back in full command."

Reagan told the House and Senate that they risk public wrath unless they act quickly on his economic program.

"The American people now want us to act and not in half measures," he said. "They demand — and they've earned a full and comprehensive effort to clean up our economic mess."

The president, greeted in the packed chamber by thunderous, sustained applause from Republicans and Democrats alike, compared his own recovery from a bullet in the lung to the health of the U.S. economy.

"Thanks to some very fine people, my health is much improved," he said, showing no signs of the gunshot wound inflicted by a would-be assassin 29 days ago. "I'd like to be able to say that with regard to the economy."

"Because of the extent of our economy's sickness, we know that the cure will not come quickly," he said. "That cure begins with the federal budget."

Reagan's speech was interrupted 13 times by applause, although when he got down to specifics of his program, much of it was restricted to the Republican side of the chamber.

The president's economic plan appeared to be regaining momentum both in the House and the Senate even before his speech. Afterward, GOP leaders jubilantly predicted victory, at least for the budget-trimming part of the package.

"President Reagan drove a velvet steamroller through Congress tonight," claimed Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa.

But Michel said that while victory on the president's budget proposals seems near, the vote may "be a cakewalk" compared with other, tougher votes on his program further down the road, especially on Reagan's proposed three-year, across-the-board, 30 percent tax cut.

Many members of Congress fear the president's tax proposal runs too great a risk of worsening inflation. Thus, there is considerable support, especially among Democrats, for a one-year tax reduction, with further installments after spending is reduced and a balanced budget is assured.

Reagan said his tax-cut proposal is an "integral part" of his economic package, which he called the "only answer we have left."

Unless Congress acts, he said, "a gigantic tax increase" will be imposed on taxpayers.

"We are proposing nothing more than a reduction of that increase," Reagan said. "The people have a right to know that even with our plan they will be paying more in taxes, but not as much more."

Reagan formally endorsed a slightly modified version of his budget-cutting plan written by Reps. Delbert Latta, R-Ohio, and Phil Gramm, D-Texas, and backed by House Republicans and many conservative Democrats.

He said it would accomplish all his "essential aims."

Construction plans for 11 classrooms and two music rooms for two Pampa elementary schools, costing an estimated $636,000, were approved by the Pampa Independent School District Board of Trustees in an early morning emergency meeting here today.

Meeting at 7:15 a.m. in Carver Educational Center, the board first heard Herbert Brashear, the district's architect, report on preliminary plans.

Brashear said construction plans would allow for five classrooms and a music room for Stephen F. Austin Elementary and six classrooms and a music room for William B. Travis Elementary.

In addition to the extra classrooms, Brashear said the total cost would include remodeling of two center classrooms in each school for a large, centrally-located library.

Brashear described a wider addition built on to the south end of each school, sloping slightly from the main level of the building. He said the slope will offset the one long corridor, and help keep the roof from leaking.

The architect said the estimated cost for Austin elementary will be $385,000 and $251,000 for Travis. The difference in cost for the two schools is due to different types of foundations and Austin has more square footage than Travis, he said.

Board member Dr. Robert Lyle expressed his concern about using rooms that will be vacated in the transition.

Austin principal Bill Jones said he needed the extra space to provide offices for special education teachers, school nurse and counselor, and for storage of visual aids and textbooks in the summer.

Jones said, "If we had had another room this year, we would have put another kindergarten teacher in for a half day."

Lyle said, "Well, that's my main concern. I don't want any classrooms that will be used for just a couple hours a week."

District Superintendent Bob Phillips asked if the two bathrooms included facilities for the handicapped.

Brashear said they would be built with provisions for handicapped persons.

At the Austin principal's suggestion, the board agreed an exit with double doors should be built into the additions.

Brashear told board members the bid for the construction would not be ready for award until about the first of July. He said it would be impossible for the construction to be completed before the 1981-1982 school year.

With the exception of board member Curt Beck, all members of the school board were present at today's meeting.

Head-on with train injures Higgins man

A 51-year-old Higgins man narrowly escaped certain death early today when the truck he was driving crashed head on with a Santa Fe freight train on the railroad tracks one mile west of Higgins.

Texas Highway Patrol Trooper John James identified the man as Leroy Boughan, 51, of Higgins. James said Boughan suffered internal injuries and severe lacerations as a result of the accident.

Newman Memorial Hospital officials in Shattuck, Okla. said at press time today that Boughan was in satisfactory condition.

Trooper James said the accident occurred at 12:20 a.m. today. He said a 1972 pickup truck, driven by Boughan, was traveling west on the railroad tracks off of U.S. 60.

Frank Patterson of Amarillo, engineer of the oncoming eastbound train, saw the truck traveling towards it and attempted to stop. James said. He said the train was traveling 7 miles per hour at the time it collided dead center with the truck.

"If it would have been going 50 miles per hour, he (Boughan) would have been dead," James said.

Letter writer was asleep during speech

ROCKVILLE, CENTRE, N.Y. (AP) — Eight-year-old Peter Sweeney was excited to learn that his get-well letter was quoted by President Reagan in his speech to Congress and the nation but he said today he hoped "this celebrity stuff gets over."

The child was fast asleep at 9:10 p.m. Tuesday when Reagan read the letter, and his father, also named Peter, wouldn't wake him up.

When the boy rose this morning, he said, "My dad told me I was famous, a celebrity... I didn't even hear it!"

He added that he wanted things to get back to normal "so I won't have to take so many telephone calls."

The get-well letter was written as a project for his second-grade class at Riverside School to wish Reagan a quick recovery from the wound he suffered in the March 30 attempt on his life.

The line Reagan quoted said, "I hope you get well quick, or you might have to make a speech in your pajamas." A postscript added, "If you have to make a speech in your pajamas, I warned you."

Reagan wore a blue suit as he addressed a joint session of Congress and read the note.

Where did Sweeney get the idea about the pajamas?

"Well, I thought that if he didn't get better he might get embarrassed, so if he got embarrassed he might want to get better soon so he won't have to make a speech in his pajamas," he said.

The boy's father, a New York City police sergeant, said his son had been very upset when Reagan was shot.

"I don't know how anyone could get so close to the president," young Sweeney said today.

Peter is the eldest of three children. He has a sister, Anne, 6, and a 3-year-old brother, Edward.

The letter was forwarded to Reagan from the White House correspondence office. The office sends the president a select few from among the thousands of letters it receives.

Tax cuts in trouble, despite speech

WASHINGTON (AP) — As President Reagan declares that his economic program "is the only answer we have left," his tax-cut proposal remains a question in Congress. And there are signs it is in trouble.

In an address before a joint session of Congress on Tuesday night, Reagan pictured his economic program, built around tax cuts and reductions in the growth of federal spending, as the courageous and creative solution demanded by a public he said is growing impatient.

"The one sure way to continue the inflationary spiral is to fall back into the predictable patterns of old economic practices," Reagan said. "Isn't it time that we tried something new?"

But many members of Congress seem willing to stick with the "old economic practices" of modest tax cuts and a balanced budget. They fear the president's plan for a three-year cut in personal taxes runs too great a risk of worsening inflation.

Thus, there is considerable support, especially among Democrats, for a one-year tax reduction, with further installments after spending is reined in and a balanced budget is assured.

"He'll get his entire program except he's not going to get all his tax program," Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said after the speech. "The person in the street has difficulty reconciling a big tax cut at a time of high inflation."

A one-year tax cut is the heart of a budget blueprint drawn by the House Budget Committee for fiscal 1982, the bookkeeping year that begins next Oct. 1. Reagan would have no part of it.

"It adheres to the failed policy of trying to balance the budget on the taxpayer's back," Reagan said. "It would increase tax payments by over a third (from 1982 through 1984) — adding up to a staggering quarter-trillion dollars."

Reagan said a "giant tax increase" already is built into the system. "We propose nothing more than a reduction of that increase," he said.

"The people have a right to know that even with our plan they will be paying more in taxes, but not as much more as they will without it," he said.

Reagan's proposal would result in a $120 billion increase in taxes between 1982 and 1984.

In a new effort to woo conservative Democrats, House leaders lofted a trial balloon Tuesday that would produce a balanced budget in 1982 — two years ahead of Reagan's schedule — but only at the cost of delaying any personal tax cut until Oct. 1, 1982.

"Oh, no," Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told reporters. "I wouldn't agree to that at all."

Reagan apparently is assured at least a temporary victory on spending reductions, with indications that both the House and Senate are ready to approve target budgets for 1982 that are close to what he recommended. And, while those targets would accommodate his three-year cut in personal income-tax rates, they would not assure it at all.

The leadership of the Democratic-controlled House opposes Reagan's tax plan. And while most Republicans are siding with Reagan, Democratic opposition in the Senate is enough to make an impact when a conference committee attempts to work out a compromise tax reduction later this year.

The key lawmaker in the tax debate is Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee who rejects Reagan's tax plan as test-tube economics.

In a speech earlier this month, Rostenkowski conceded it might be helpful to give investors the certainty that would come from a multiyear tax cut. "In a perfect world, I would vote for a 10-year tax cut," Rostenkowski said. "But we're not living in a perfect world."

Israeli jets blast guerrillas again

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes blasted Palestinian guerrilla strongholds in southern Lebanon today, a day after shooting down two Syrian helicopter gunships near the Christian city of Zahle, 30 miles east of Beirut.

There were no immediate reports of casualties. The governor's office in the port of Sidon, provincial capital of southern Lebanon, said the Beaufort Castle, Jarmak Mountain and the town of Aishieh were the main targets of the midday air raid in the Green Valley area.

A military spokesman in Tel Aviv confirmed the planes attacked bases near the Beaufort Castle, about four miles north of the Israeli border. Pilots reported accurate hits and all Israeli planes returned safely to base, he said.

The jets drew barrages of anti-aircraft fire from Palestinian guerrillas in Beirut and the southern port cities of Sidon and Tyre as they made several morning reconnaissance flights before the strikes.

Israel shot down the two Syrian helicopter gunships Tuesday as a warning to Syria to stop its campaign to wrest control of central Lebanon's mountaintops from the Phalangists.

Israeli Deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori said his government was "making it clear that in Lebanese skies there will be no Syrian air activity."

Latest victim had criminal record

ATLANTA (AP) — Jimmy Ray Payne, the 26th victim in Atlanta's string of slayings of young blacks, had a criminal record and tried to change his identity shortly before he disappeared, perhaps to elude police, a newspaper reported today.

The Atlanta Constitution quoted sources close to the investigation of the killing as saying that Payne apparently tried to get an identity card under another name several days before his disappearance. The newspaper reported today that police believe Payne was trying to elude authorities by assuming a new identity.

Payne, an unemployed 21-year-old, was found in the Chattahoochee River Monday. Medical examiners ruled Tuesday that he probably died of asphyxiation, the same as 14 other young victims since July 1979.

In another development Tuesday, an attorney for Larry

The Israeli intervention Tuesday — its first since the Syrians attacked the Christians on April 1 — brought Syria and Israel closer to the brink of war than at any time since the 1973 Arab-Israeli war.

Syria vowed to meet "this grave escalation" with "utmost firmness." Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin promising more strikes to help the Lebanese Christians, said, "We will not suffice ourselves with this action."

The Lebanese government of Christian President Elias Sarkis and Moslem Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan denounced the Israeli intervention as an attempt to "sabotage current efforts to bring about national reconciliation in Lebanon."

The Phalangists withheld comment on the intervention. But their leader, 76-year-old Pierre Gemayel, was optimistic about the outcome of his lengthy talks with Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam at the Lebanese Presidential Palace.

His statement kindled hopes in the Lebanese press that a durable cease-fire would soon be proclaimed to halt the Syrian-Phalangist hostilities along Beirut's Moslem-Christian Green Line and around the east Lebanese Christian city of Zahle.

Marshall, who police want to question in connection with the killings, said one of the victims — 13-year-old Timothy Hill — showed two threatening letters to Marshall before Hill was killed.

The attorney, Sharman Meade, said Marshall was told the letters came from the killer, who feared Marshall knew something about the string of slayings. Meade said Marshall does not have the letters.

Marshall, jailed here on an armed robbery charge, has refused to talk to a special task force investigating the slayings until he is promised immunity from prosecution on the robbery charge. Fulton County District Attorney Lewis Slaton has refused to meet the demands.

Authorities have repeatedly said Marshall is not a suspect in the slayings.

'Lion of Desert' shown here first

Pampa will be one of the four cities in Texas where a film rivaling the scope of "Lawrence of Arabia" will be viewed within one week of its grand opening in New York and Chicago.

"Lion of the Desert" is the name of the spectacular $30 million epic. It features such venerable stars as Anthony Quinn, Rod Steiger, Oliver Reed, and John Gielgud and internationally known actors Irene Papas, Eleonora D'amico, Raf Vallone and Gastone Moschin.

The film opens Friday at the Cinema III in the Coronado Shopping Center here, and in theatres in Amarillo, Lubbock and Abilene.

The historic saga centers around the final confrontations between Omar Mukhtar (Quinn), the Libyan patriot who struggled 20 years to free the Bedouins from Italian occupation, and Italian General Graziani (Reed).

Producer Director Moustapha Akkad (Ride the High Country, The Message, Halloween) spent four years preparing the film. He chose a remote desert location in Libya for the dramatic battle sequences which took a grueling six months to shoot.

The spectacular combat sequences filmed in Libya include one scene in which a vintage nine-ton armored car is blasted 12 feet into the air, landing on its top in the midst of a charge of 300 horsemen, sending animals and riders flying in every direction.

Key sequences were also shot in Rome, Italy — Graziani's meeting with Mussolini (Steiger) and Omar Mukhtar's trial.

"Lion in the Desert" begins in 1929 when Mussolini, infuriated by the 20-year war waged by Bedouin patriots against Italian colonization, assigns General Graziani to crush the resistance and capture its leader, Omar Mukhtar.

Following a Bedouin skirmish in which 20 Italian troops are killed and 50 wounded, Italian reprisal is swift and savage. A Bedouin village is ravaged, women and children carried off or killed.

Graziani declares open war with Mukhtar's guerrillas and herds civilians into concentration camps. A reign of terror follows. The only respite from Italian domination are the scattered victories of Mukhtar and his guerrillas.

Harry Craig, (Airport 77) was writer of the screenplay. However, he did not live to see the completion of his film. Working with Moustapha Akkad on "The Message" kindled Craig's interest in the Arab world and Islam, and in Omar Mukhtar he found a subject which would combine this interest with his knowledge of Italian history. Four years later, he presented the script for "Lion in the Desert" to Akkad, which many will consider his finest memorial.

City residents asked to help with cleanup

Due to the small 14-member sanitation force, Pampa city officials are enlisting the help of residents in the city's 1981 "Pride - Up for Pampa" spring cleaning campaign scheduled to begin May 4.

Due to lack of extra labor for the annual clean-up program, city officials request residents to clean up their yards, alleys and areas around their premises.

Officials said the joint-use trash containers should be used only for household refuse, grass clippings, and hedge trimmings.

Heavy materials such as dirt, grass sod, concrete and building materials should not be placed in the container and should be disposed of by the owner or occupant of the property from which the items came.

In 1980, there was some confusion where bulky items (ice boxes, stoves, furniture) should be placed in the alley for pick-up.

City officials ask that this type item be placed in the alley behind the house of the person it belonged to, not beside the trash container.

Since this type refuse is collected on special occasions, it is unfair to the person who has the container behind his house and makes it difficult for the collection truck to get to the container for pick-up.

The city pick-up program is scheduled to be conducted in the following manner: Ward 1 - May 4, 5, 6, 7, 8; Ward 2 - May 11, 12, 13, 14, 15; Ward 3 - May 18, 19, 20, 21, 22; and Ward 4 - May 26, 27, 28, 29.

Highland General observes national week

A full slate of community service projects has been planned by Highland General Hospital officials to celebrate National Hospital Week in Pampa.

Nick Kupferle III, the interim administrator said the 1981 theme is "Looking Well into the Future." The aim of the celebration is to encourage the public to play a greater role in developing their own better health patterns, he said.

"For us, the theme this year is very special, since we are particularly proud of our forthcoming move into our brand new hospital scheduled for Aug. 1."

Many of the programs scheduled in the coming weeks are open to the public. More information on the programs will be available at a later date.

Program topics include: a senior citizen's health forum; a five-part Community Health Education series; an awards banquet for Ladies Auxiliary volunteers; and employees service award banquet; a special luncheon for area businessmen discussing the future health care services in the community; high blood pressure testing in shopping center; employee appreciation programs; an active speakers bureau; and a patient appreciation package.

"We want to use this time to spotlight community services we are undertaking and demonstrate our desire to assume a more active role in all facets of community health," Kupferle said.

Initiative and referendum measure fails

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has angrily conceded his initiative and referendum proposal is dead for this session and warned of political repercussions for legislators who voted against it.

"I think for this session, initiative and referendum is finished," Clements said after I&R failed by 14 votes in the House on Tuesday. The vote was 86-56 for I&R but 100 votes are needed for constitutional amendments.

Clements had given I&R — direct lawmaking power for the people — a high priority in his legislative program.

Before taking a final vote on I&R, the House changed the proposal limited to tax cuts and spending limits to a sweeping measure allowing voters to pass laws on any subject.

The 110-30 vote to "purify" the I&R proposal threw a scare into opponents.

"Once more, the Legislature has not responded to the will of the people," Clements said, citing polls that show a majority of Texans favor I&R.

"It's unfortunate that a segment of the House of Representatives decided to play games with us. Some representatives tried to get on both sides of the issue by putting forward a 'purist' theory of I&R by 110 votes, then shooting it down," he said.

The governor predicted I&R would pass in 1983. "I think some of those members who voted against it this time and played the game of charades with us will regret it. I am sure initiative and referendum will be a significant issue in the elections of 1982," Clements said.

Clements became interested in I&R after Californians cut their property taxes by means of the Proposition 13 referendum.

Rep. John Sharp, D-Placedo, sponsor of the proposal, said in the next session the Senate — not the House — should move first on I&R, since representatives stuck their political necks out and voted on it both in 1979 and 1981.

Sharp voted for Rep. Carlyle Smith's amendment that changed Sharp's limited I&R proposal to a broad one. "This simply puts the clothes back on the emperor, so to speak," Sharp said of Smith's amendment.

A number of representatives who voted to broaden the I&R proposal later voted to defeat the measure itself.

Sharp attempted to answer fears that I&R would lead to a Proposition 13-type vote to strip schools and state government of funds.

"I think the people of Texas are eminently more sensible than the people of California," Sharp said.

Rep. Bob Bush, D-Sherman, said the legislative system had worked well, as shown by the many bills that initially look good but whose flaws show up only after hearings and close scrutiny.

"We would be fundamentally changing the system. ... Why? ... Because one man (Clements) ran two or three years ago and promised to give initiative and referendum. ... If he were right, everyone of us would have letters on our desks from our constituents," Bush said.

Liberals and conservatives were found on both sides of the I&R vote in the House.

Nevadans negative on MX plan

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Air Force representatives were pummeled by a generally negative audience Monday during two hearings to gain public response to the draft environmental impact statement on the MX missile system.

Most of those who spoke expressed concern over the potential impact of the huge defense system on the Reno area.

The attitude that Reno would not feel the impacts of the MX "is like saying in Alaska there would be no impact in Anchorage because the pipeline is several hundred miles away," said Allen Bruner of Reno.

Reno Mayor Barbara Bennett asked the Air Force to reply to a list of questions about possible economic effects the MX might have on the Reno area and for assurances the city would not have to absorb the cost of future MX related growth. Two people spoke in defense of the MX while other speakers questioned security for the huge system, its effect on tribal Indian lands and its hunger for land and thirst for precious Nevada water.

The state Cattlemen's Association said putting the MX in Nevada would ruin their rangelands. They said they would take the matter to court over the matter within two weeks.

Ranching representatives told a news conference outside the hearing that alleged non-compliance with the national environmental law is one issue over which they would sue.

Stronger drug trafficking bill passes house

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Bills that would provide maximum life sentences for adults who give or sell dope to minors and $1 million fines for people who bankroll the illegal drug trade have won final House approval.

Triple slayer given death sentence

DUNCAN, Okla. (AP) — A 35-year-old man convicted of a triple slaying near Velma last June has been sentenced to die by lethal drug injection.

Stephens County District Court officials say. District Judge George Lindley on Tuesday set a July 17 execution date for Randle Robison, who was found guilty of killing a Velma man and two British women. State law requires an automatic appeal.

A second man, Johnny Glen Gillum, convicted on evidence that pointed out he was a "getaway man," was handed three consecutive life sentences, Lindley said.

The two men were convicted of the June 12, 1980, fatal shootings of Robert Swinford, 41, Velma; Averill Bourque, 42, South Wales, and Julie Shiela Lovejoy, 38, London.

The measures, recommended by H. Ross Perot and his Texas War on Drugs Committee, were sent to the Senate Tuesday on a voice vote.

Gov. Bill Clements appointed the War on Drugs Committee and endorsed its drug legislation.

One bill conceivably could result in a life sentence for an 18-year-old who gives drugs to a 17-year-old, and the House refused by lopsided votes to soften it.

Rep. Paul Elizondo, D-San Antonio, attempted to raise the age that would trigger the potential life sentence from 18 to 21.

He said it would be "kind of tragic" for an 18-year-old to draw a life sentence for passing a marijuana cigarette to a 17-year-old.

Elizondo's amendment failed, 28-105, and a subsequent attempt to raise the age to 19 failed, 38-97.

Current law imposes a maximum 10-year prison sentence on anyone who delivers marijuana, and a life sentence could be imposed only for delivery of cocaine, heroin, opium or LSD.

The other bill passed Tuesday would provide increased prison sentences and devastating fines, including up to $1 million for those who finance the drug trade. A heroin, opium, cocaine or LSD pusher caught with 400 grams or more could get a minimum of 15 years and a maximum of life, plus a fine up to $250,000.

Maximum sentences of life imprisonment and a $100,000 fine could be assessed persons who deal in hallucinogenic drugs and "speed." Life imprisonment and a $100,000 fine could be given in cases involving stimulants, barbiturates, valium, codeine, depressants, quaaludes and peyote.

Possession of more than 50 pounds of marijuana could get a person life imprisonment and a $50,000 fine, and if the amount exceeded 2,000 pounds, the maximum fine would escalate to $250,000.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Covering Commandment.

Sakharov in Gorky

The famed Russian scientist Andrei Sakharov is probably the Soviet Union's most celebrated prisoner. A year ago he was sentenced to forced detention in the provincial town of Gorky for his opposition to the communist regime. The only person allowed to have contact with him is his wife, Yelena. She recently gave the following description of his detention to the French Weekly, "L'Express."

"We are always followed in the streets of Gorky by two or three persons. If we go to the movies, a black Volga automobile with three people inside tails us. Because of these 'guardian angels,' Sakharov can't even use the telephone, one of the guards in civilian clothes hurries to the long-distance switchboard and the inter-city lines are immediately cut.

"Once Sakharov was able to outfit his shadows and telephone to the institute in Moscow where he used to work to ask his colleagues to send him scientific books he needed for his work in Gorky. The result was that they cut off the institute's telephone for three days. The same thing goes for letters. Only a part of our mail arrives, and we found out recently that the authorities often sign the receipts for registered letters addressed to us.

"For Andrei, there is no question of emigrating. What he wants from the West now is some material help for our adopted daughter Liza, who has been refused a visa for the United States where she wants to rejoin her fiancé.

"After an American scientist who visited Moscow expressed anxiety about Sakharov's living conditions, my husband received a visit from three of his colleagues. The KGB thus wanted to make the West believe that he could maintain normal relations with the scientific community.

"As for the future, I am pessimistic, as I have always been. I am convinced that our rulers always carry out to the end what they have undertaken.

We can't think of much to add.

Producing new machines smarter than humans are

Several years ago, a prescience movie entitled "2001: A Space Odyssey" spellbound audiences with a plot about an extended space voyage. The spacecraft's master computer known as "Hal," who possessed the power of speech and was making most of the technical decisions, staged a murderous mutiny to take charge of the space mission.

Thanks to computer technology advancing at an incredible rate, some primitive, conversational prototypes of "Hal" are already functioning out there in certain advanced U.S. industries, not only taking orders spoken to them, but frequently talking back.

According to the Wall Street Journal, a Ford Motor Company worker in Teterboro, N.J., picks up a package at the loading dock and tells the computer where to store it. With unerring accuracy, the package is carried by conveyor belt and unloaded at the proper storage shelf.

Meat inspectors at six Wilson Foods Corporation packing plants dictate all necessary data on each hog carcass to a computer, which prints a complete record on each farmer's hogs and later writes a check to the farmer.

Texas Instruments Inc. has developed a $3 silicon chip that can recite a vocabulary of up to 200 words. Soon computers will be able to provide telephone directory assistance and make hotel and airline reservations. International Business Machines Corporation has been working for eight years on a word-processing system that could take dictation.

A talking chess board manufactured by Fidelity Electronics Ltd. of Miami is a big hit, even at $360. And a flood of speaking toys is predicted by next Christmas. Toys for grownups are promised by Toshiba Corp., a Japanese electronics firm — voice-controlled television sets will be available by 1983.

Some computers are programmed to respond only to certain individuals who have "trained" them. Others recognize a prescribed number of words no matter who speaks them.

Cars, we are told by General Motors, will be able to speak out and warn of low oil pressure, for example. The makers of appliances envision washing machines that will complain about overloads and ovens that call out when something is about to burn. The possibilities are endless.

The capacity of computers to solve mathematical problems in split seconds or remember everything indefinitely is, in a way, terrifying. It is even more so when speech is added to the computer's mechanical genius, giving it the ability to rebuke its human master for the smallest error, and to rebel as well at anything less than perfection.

Still, we shouldn't be too intimidated. If and when these talking computers get too big for their silicon and too sassy, we can deal with them just as the astronaut did in "2001." We can pull their plugs.

Letter to the editor

Dear Editor: I am compelled to sound a note of deep concern with reference to the cartoon on the editorial page of the Pampa News, Monday, April 20.

The cartoon purported "Johnny couldn't learn" as a result of exposure to competent teachers.

I suspect, as in any profession, or in any vocation, some incompetence prevails, within the ranks of our nation's teachers. I do submit, however, the incidence of incompetence is negligible.

It is regrettable when cartoonists have to offend a segment of our society with degrading innuendos, unfounded and scurrilous in their origin.

Our American educational system, parochial and public, produces scholastic achievers, whose numbers far outweigh those who cannot perform. If Johnny cannot read, it is perhaps a result of Johnny's indifference, lack of motivation parentally, or his own innate choice.

I am aware some legislators would require competency tests pre-requisite to the granting of a teaching certificate. I might question the ability of many of their counterparts should they be subjected to a parallel requirement, prior to assuming their legislative roles.

Teachers... you are admired! Do not be intimidated!

Sincerely,
John D. Davey

By EDWARD J. WALSH

With the end of the spring semester fast approaching, we are in the season for free-wheeling discussion of "social issues" at American colleges and universities. At Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn., recently, the subject was El Salvador, at an afternoon symposium arranged by the University Ministry. As is to be expected in the consideration of such an explosive issue, the speakers displayed the unmistakable bias of their own views. But unfortunately, one of them had more to offer than that.

Professor Barbara Weinstein, a member of the Vanderbilt faculty who teaches Latin American history, was recruited to speak on the history of U.S. policy in Central America. She began her talk with a disclaimer, saying that she was opposed to U.S. aid to the anti-communist Salvadoran government.

The gist of her presentation was that American policy in the region has been little less than Evil Incarnate. In her view, the U.S. has done nothing but prop up dictators who repress their people in order to protect American investments. She defended the "so-called communist" government of Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala, who was

Disinformation at work

"freely elected" in 1950 by the communist-controlled National Workers' Political Committee. She went on to praise the Marxist Sandinista regime in Nicaragua, which seized power in July 1979 and said that it was understandable that they sought aid from the Soviet Union, since they couldn't expect it from the United States.

On El Salvador, Professor Weinstein asserted that there were only two factions in the country, the "repressive" military dominated junta with Jose Napoleon Duarte as a respectable civilian puppet head of state, and the "people's movements."

If a listener got the impression through all this that Professor Weinstein was supporting Marxist revolution in Central America, he would be more than right. In response to a question, the professor said that yes, she opposed American military aid to the Salvadoran government, but doesn't object to Soviet aid to the guerrillas. "None of us is perfect, there are inconsistencies in all arguments," she added. She continued that she supports "socialism" in Cuba, but not "Soviet socialism." When asked about Nicaragua's abstention on the United Nations' resolution condemning the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, she suggested that it was understandable.

Professor Weinstein's speech was an expression of open support for Soviet policy in Central America: an agglomeration of misinformation, distortions and propaganda, the point of which was that Marxist state "socialism" is a very good idea. She accepted the possibility of repression by leftists as "necessary," while accusing the Salvadoran government of the same thing.

In fact, the Guatemalan government under Arbenz was the only legislative body outside the Soviet bloc to declare a moment of silence at the death of Stalin in March 1953.

In fact, the Sandinistas' request for Soviet aid was turned down; the Soviets suggested that, instead, they seek aid from the United States. Last spring they were granted $75 million in aid by the U.S. Senate, which has been cut off because of Nicaragua's efforts to funnel weapons to the Marxist forces in El Salvador. In fact, arms have been flowing in huge quantities to guerrillas via Cuba and the Warsaw Pact nations, until recently. American automatic weapons that were abandoned six years ago in Vietnam have turned up in El Salvador.

Miss Weinstein, at least, is no hypocrite. Her presentation, which began as a leftist revision of history, ended with an endorsement of Marxist terrorism, with a side helping of moral indignation for the anti-communist governments of Central America.

In hearing all this, one couldn't help get the feeling that this roomful of college students, interested in the burning issue of El Salvador, were witnessing the effects of Soviet disinformation at work. They probably didn't come to Vanderbilt for a dosing of Marxist apologetics from the faculty. But that is what they got that afternoon.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, April 29, the 119th day of 1981. There are 246 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 29, 1945, American soldiers in Germany liberated 32,000 Nazi victims at a concentration camp in Dachau during World War II.

On this date:

In 1429, Joan of Arc led French troops into Orleans and won a victory over the English.

In 1639, the colonial settlement of Newport, R.I., was founded.

In 1862, New Orleans fell to Union forces during the Civil War.

In 1967, President Lyndon Johnson gave the go-ahead to begin the construction of two prototypes of a giant supersonic transport plane.

Ten years ago: President Richard Nixon said a residual force of U.S. troops would remain in South Vietnam indefinitely if North Vietnam refused to release American prisoners of war.

Five years ago: The civilian head of the Soviet military-industrial complex, Dmitri Ustinov, was named minister of defense, succeeding the late Marshal Andrei Grechko.

One year ago: Film director Sir Alfred Hitchcock, the master of suspense, died at the age of 80.

The great chain letter

by Paul Harvey

Chain letters are illegal, but let me remind you how they work.

You receive in the mail a letter with a list of 10 names on it.

You are invited to send $1 to the person named at the top of the list — then add your name at the bottom of the list. Then send copies of the letter to 10 other people.

"Don't break the chain," you are warned, "and when your name comes to the top you will receive a jillion dollars!"

That's the way a chain letter works. Chain letters are illegal.

That is also the way Social Security works.

Social Security has been described as "a time bomb slowly ticking away within the American society."

However, Social Security is a major source — and often the only source — of income for millions of retired and disabled Americans.

Spawned in the Great Depression of the '30s, Social Security has grown enormously — both its benefits and the taxes required to pay those benefits.

It has become the second largest item in our federal budget, transferring $100 billion a year from younger Americans to older ones — with the promise that when the younger get older it will be their turn to collect.

The Great Chain Letter. The problem — as with most chain letters — is that the pay-in never keeps up with the promised pay-out.

Three things have happened to snafu the system: More Americans are living longer. Inflation has driven higher and higher both the income from Social Security and the taxes required to keep up with it.

And even more significantly, the original purposes of Social Security have been expanded, broadened, increased — with generous politicians figuring they could pass along the bill to youngsters still too young to vote.

There are indications the present Congress recognizes the economic reality of what we face — but will need the understanding support of constituents.

The National Federation of Independent Business affirms that the increasing tax burden is as great on small businesses as it is on taxpayers; and it urges that Social Security be restored to what it was in the beginning; to replace income lost at retirement and to provide minimum income for the aged.

That means eliminate payments to students.

Eliminate payments to government workers who have worked only briefly in private industry and are otherwise pensioned.

Eliminate Social Security payments to emigrants and convicted criminals in prison.

Eliminate abuses of survivor benefits. Eliminate medical treatment. And gradually over the coming years extend retirement age to 68.

The alternative is a 70 percent increase in the ratio of retirees to workers; and overload which can bankrupt the system NEXT YEAR.

The Sagebrush Rebellion makes sense

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN

People in the East, South and Middle West have only the foggiest notion of the extent to which land in the Far West is owned by the federal government.

The federal government owns 90.1 percent of Alaska, 87.3 percent of Nevada, 65 percent of Utah, 63.7 percent of Idaho. In the other states west of the 100th meridian — roughly west of Texas — the federal government controls from 29 to 52.4 percent of the land.

Though the Western frontier was closed by the turn of the century, federal bureaucrats continue to hold onto the vast public lands. By controlling these lands, they control the economic development of the region.

The domination of the federal government may not last forever. Today, there is a growing "Sagebrush Rebellion" by Westerners who believe there ought to be an orderly transfer of the federally controlled lands to productive ownership.

Many citizens in other parts of the country will look with favor on this rebellion. No reason exists why one-third of the land area of the United States continues to be controlled by officials in Washington. Americans believe in the private ownership of property.

An organization has been formed to develop legal, economic and educational data in support of the divestiture of the public domain from the federal government. It is the League for the Advancement of States' Equal Rights — LASER, headquartered in Salt Lake City, Utah.

The chairman of the board of trustees of LASER is Dr. Alex Oblad, an internationally known scientist in the field of metallurgy and fuels engineering. Advisory board members include Senators Ted Stevens of Alaska and Orrin G. Hatch of Utah and John L. Harmer, former lieutenant governor of California.

One purpose of LASER is to acquaint Americans in other regions with the fact that the Far West is dominated from 2,000 miles away. "The problem," it says, "is the rigid and coercive bureaucracy that dictates to supposedly free Americans the denial of their property rights."

In recent years, the problems of the Far West have been intensified by the environmental extremism of the government, which wants to lock up precious natural resources in wilderness areas.

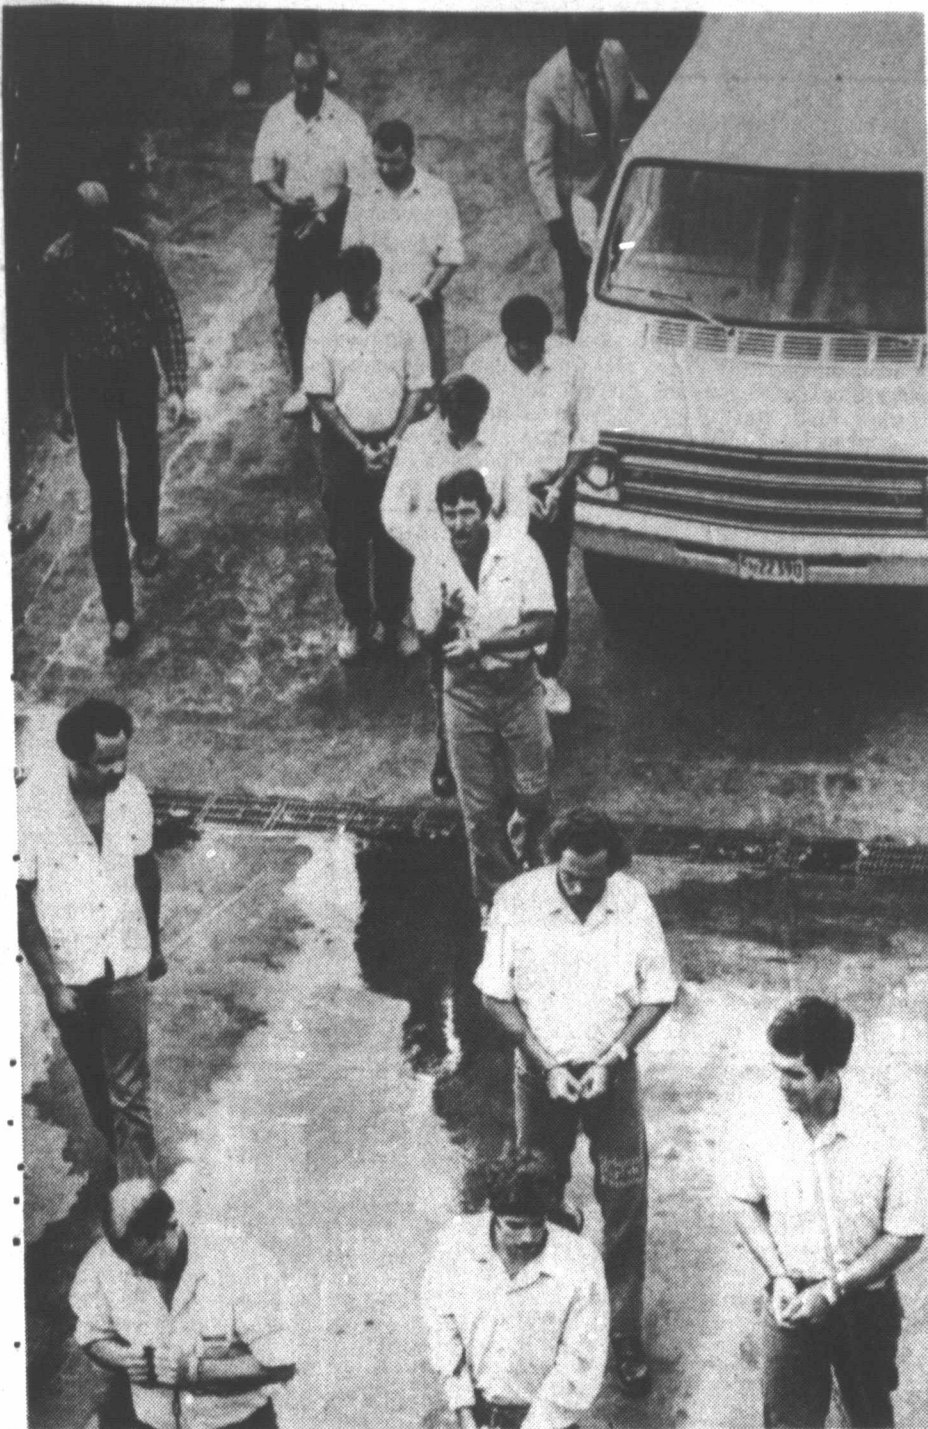

The American people in the lower 49 states need full development of Alaskan oil resources. But the administration has blocked development of vast areas where there is good reason to believe oil is located. At the same time, federal officials have made it enormously difficult to mine coal in the Western mining regions. The American people must gain access to this coal if they aren't to be dangerously dependent on Middle East oil throughout the 1980s and 1990s.

In short, the Sagebrush Rebellion makes sense for most Americans. The U.S. needs to strive for self-sufficiency in energy and raw materials. The only way that can be done is by tapping the resources of the energy and mineral-rich states of the Far West. If LASER can help get rid of the dead hand of government on the Far West lands, it will have performed a great service for all Americans.

Reagan convinced voters on his side in budget cuts

An AP News Analysis
By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) — In a setting and a situation Hollywood couldn't have matched, President Reagan crowned his first 100 days — and his comeback from a bullet wound — by telling Congress it is time to adopt his spending and tax prescription as the one and only cure for a sick economy.

Reagan is convinced the voters are on his side, and he made sure nobody forgot it.

The words were familiar, but the situation made them special as the president renewed his personal campaign for the economic program he insists is "the only answer we have left."

The performance was a guaranteed hit, with the leading man making his first address since the attempt on his life on March 30. The scene was standard: the House chamber, before a joint session of Congress, in the glare of television lights for the cameras that beamed the nation its first real look at Reagan since the shooting. There was no outward sign of the chest wound he suffered four weeks ago. He grasped hands, clapped backs along the aisle as he came and went from the 27-minute appearance.

In circumstances like those Tuesday night, an amateur would have been a star. And Reagan is a pro.

While he is likely to gain congressional backing for his budget cuts, the House and Senate votes just ahead do not necessarily foretell the final outcome.

He probably will have to compromise later on his three-year, 30 percent tax reduction plan, although there is no sign of that now. Compromise is not the mood at the White House, not with a recovered Reagan riding high in the polls, and with leading Democrats conceding that the voters want his budget bidding done.

Reagan underscored that mood, dismissing Democratic alternatives as just about useless.

"The American people now want us to act, and not in half measures," Reagan said. "They demand — and they have earned — a full and comprehensive effort to clean up our economic mess."

Not many days ago, Reagan lieutenants were worried that the drive for his economic program was slowing if not stalling. They said the absence of the convalescing president was a serious setback in the effort to sell his proposals.

They don't think so now. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. has virtually conceded that the Democrats cannot stop Reagan's budget cuts even in the House they control.

Reagan's personal popularity has soared in the public opinion polls since the assassination attempt that wounded him.

For all of that, for all the drama, and despite the signs of an administration victory in the first major votes on the budget, there is a long legislative road ahead for Reagan and his lobbyists.

Valley radar system hopes dampened

WASHINGTON (AP) — A disappointed delegation from the Rio Grande Valley returned to Texas today, their hopes dampened for a radar surveillance system to serve airports in Harlingen, Brownsville and McAllen — as well as Mexican airports in Reynosa and Matamoros.

"Although your increase in air traffic may seem to you to be great, we hear from other airports whose increase is even greater, and they're just under the cutoff line, just like you are," Lawrence C. Fortier Jr. of the Federal Aviation Administration told them Tuesday afternoon.

None of the three Texas airports meets FAA criteria, but mayors Randy Whittington of Harlingen, Cesar Gonzalez of San Benito and Emilio Hernandez of Brownsville had come to Washington in hopes of having the three grouped for consideration.

The mayors met Tuesday morning with new FAA administrator J. Lynn Helms.

Without specific legislative mandate, chances are slim for their airports getting the okay anytime soon for radar, the FAA officials added.

"We are sympathetic, and if it was up to us you'd have it. But economics dictates that you may not get it," said the FAA's Thomas Hamill.

The FAA rebuff came after the Valley officials had come to believe the agency was on the verge of approving a radar system. Their only remaining worry, they had speculated, was getting approval for the funding.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, who set up the meetings between his constituents and FAA officials, sensed the letdown of the Valley group.

"They're disappointed and somewhat frustrated because we've been working on this a long time," de la Garza said after the meeting.

"The FAA's handling of this matter is probably in accord with the time frame they're working under, but it doesn't fit ours at all. We're competing with several other airports in the same situation, and like any other competitive situation, you wait in line for available funds."

Several Chamber of Commerce officials, while attending a national meeting in Washington, also participated in the discussion with Fortier and Hamill.

Art Wendt and Bob Woodall, directors of aviation at Brownsville and Harlingen respectively, said the airports are a catastrophe waiting to happen because of increasing private and commercial air traffic in the area.

"Radar doesn't enhance safety," Hamill said. "The purpose of radar is to make better, more efficient use of air lanes. Time wasted is greatly reduced through radar. It does give an air controller a look at aircraft he's not controlling, so he can alert other aircraft, so there could be some degree of safety in that regard."

Woodall said that's precisely why a radar is needed. Many pilots fly into the United States from Mexico that the air controllers know nothing about until they gain visual contact of them, he said. Many of the pilots cannot speak English, he added.

Hamill and Fortier conceded that radar had been approved in the past for other airports that fell short of the criteria, but said the overriding consideration usually was a directive from Congress calling for the action.

De la Garza said he plans to research the other instances in which radar systems have been approved for airports not technically meeting the requirements "and go to work on it. We're going to look into the possibility of line item legislation."

Senate approves generic drug bill

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Senate has approved a bill consumer groups claim could save Texans millions of dollars a year in drug costs.

The bill would allow pharmacists to substitute lower-cost — or generic — drugs for brand-name products.

The measure was sent to the House on voice vote Tuesday, possibly the next-to-last step in what Sen. Chet Brooks called "six years of long, hard work."

He said the proposal should be particularly helpful to the elderly, who purchase 25 percent of the drugs in Texas.

Texas is one of two states that do not allow pharmacists to substitute a generic equivalent for a brand-name prescription.

The prohibition dates back to the 1950s when, according to a bill analysis, a large number of counterfeit drugs were sold to consumers.

Brooks, D-Pasadena, accepted an amendment worked out on the floor after stressing that the bill had been approved by major medical, consumer and pharmaceutical organizations.

The amendment specifies that the intent of the bill is "to save consumers money by allowing the substitution" of lower-priced generic drugs for brand-name drugs and says pharmacies should "pass on the net benefit of the lower costs" of the generic drugs to the purchaser.

Brooks said pharmacists need to make profits on generic drugs to cover the cost of extra paperwork and part of consumers for cost savings."

He said, however, two states that had enacted laws requiring 100 percent pass-through on savings had repealed those laws.

"The Board of Pharmacy will not only be responsible but will be obligated to see that the cost savings are carried out," said Brooks.

Brooks' bill prohibits a pharmacist from selecting a generic drug that costs more than a brand-name drug.

A physician could refuse to substitute a generic drug by signing the prescription on a line next to the preprinted words "dispense as written."

Also, the patient would have the "absolute right" to insist on a brand-name drug.

Consumer groups have said Texans could save up to 400 percent on drug costs if generics were routinely prescribed.

Dear Abby

Girl's dating request upsets mom

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a very pretty and bright 11-year-old daughter who for the past several months has been asking for permission to "go with" boys. Many of Debby's friends (her age) are forming such attachments, however temporary and innocent, and Debby wants to follow suit.

I told her I thought she was much too young to be going with boys, and she was very disappointed and resentful. Abby, if you agree with me, please tell me how to handle this without alienating my daughter. It is so important that Debby and I be good friends during this very important time in her life.

DEBBY'S MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: I'm not sure I know what "going with" means in this case, but don't panic. To some youngsters, a telephone conversation once a week means you're "going with" someone.

I agree, an 11-year-old girl is much too young to date boys, but as soon as children indicate that they want to socialize with the opposite sex, they should be allowed to do so in order to build healthy boy-girl relationships. Encourage well-chaperoned get-togethers, and make all Debby's friends welcome in your home. You will not alienate your daughter by refusing to let her go out with boys at her age. All youngsters need guidelines and rules. They feel more loved and secure when they know their limits.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow, middle-aged, still fit and attractive. I have many friends, divorced or widowed — all women. In seeking male companionship we have tried the singles clubs and find them abhorrent. We don't want to go to singles bars. Everyone says, "Engage in activities that interest you and you will meet men who are interested in similar things."

OK, I'm doing that, but, Abby, how do you know who is single and who isn't in big, general gatherings?

I'm considering starting a trend of having single people wear a button — maybe with an "S" or "Single" — so we can identify each other on trains, planes, walking on the beach, at an art gallery, whatever.

Is this a sound idea, or would such a button look like a come-on, or worse yet, solicitation? I'm desperate, but not that desperate.

M.

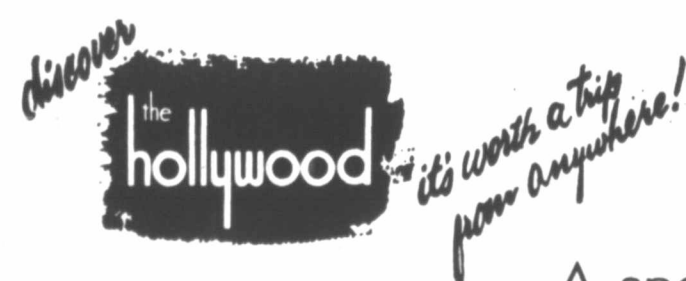

DEAR M.: It wouldn't work. Married folks who want to pass as singles would wear the button.

DEAR ABBY: In CONFIDENTIAL TO THINKING IT OVER IN SALEM, N.J., you wisely pointed out that "money isn't everything."

That caused me to recall the words of B.C. Forbes, the founder of Forbes magazine: "The money or place of fame that our endeavors may bring when crowned with so-called success will not yield all the joy we anticipated, such things may charm, may tickle our vanity, may effervesce a hectic sort of happiness for a little while, but we soon find our teeth grating at the core. The consciousness of the worthwhileness of the achievement itself can alone produce in us a state of happiness. Riches are mental, not material."

ARTHUR H. PRINCE

Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." A special invitation to become part of the Hollywood's...

"J.R.' Girls"

Hi! I'm Cristie Higgs and this is your invitation to become part of the Hollywood "J.R.' Girls."

What are the "J.R.' Girls?"

"J.R.' Girls" are a special group of girls in the 9th grade through Seniors in High School. They want to learn more about how to improve their own appearance and self image. In addition, they want to advise the Hollywood on the type of fashion trends they see as most appropriate for themselves.

What do they do?

They model for the Hollywood in style shows, attend monthly meetings on personal grooming, make-up, walking, fashions and fashion trends, poise, developing style, and other subjects selected by the group. These girls will also receive a special discount for Hollywood purchases.

How do I Join?

Come on down to the Hollywood any day or night and ask for a "J.R.' Girl" application. The number of applicants will determine how the group will be organized; i.e. class in school, interest, etc. Because of limited space, the Hollywood reserves the right to select those girls which it feels will benefit most from the "J.R.' Girl" program.

King Kong's perch celebrates 50 years

NEW YORK (AP) — King Kong swung from it. An errant B-25 bomber smashed into the side of it. Sixty million people have savored the view from the top of it, and 17 have jumped from it to their deaths.

The Empire State Building begins celebrating the 50th anniversary of its opening Thursday, no longer the world's tallest building but still the most famous tower in the Manhattan skyline.

Although Kong was only Hollywood illusion, and Fay Wray was never in peril high above 34th Street and Fifth Avenue, the great ape's exploits symbolized the skyscraper's siren call: Get to the top.

The Michelin guide to New York gives the building three stars, its highest rating, and recommends two visits: during the day for the view, which is 80 miles in clear weather, and at night for the city's spectacular lights.

Derisively called the "Empty State Building" when it opened in the midst of the Depression, it is said the Empire State Building relied on visitors for several years to help pay its taxes. Last year, almost 2 million people — a record for the building — took the trip to the top.

John Raskob, the Empire State Building's millionaire principal developer, posed one question to architect William Lamb:

"Bill, how high can you make it so that it won't fall down?"

Lamb's answer was 1,050 feet, or four feet higher than the spire on the new Chrysler Building eight blocks uptown. But Raskob was said to fear a trick — perhaps a pole popping out of the Chrysler Building's spire — so he added a 200-foot mooring mast for dirigibles, envisioning his building as the debarkation point for airship passengers from Europe.

Only one small dirigible ever moored there. Another managed to drop a bundle of newspapers while almost yanking assembled celebrities to eternity in a test in 1931. The top of the mast, 1,250 feet, is the building's official height, although a television transmitter added another 222 feet in 1950.

In 1970, the World Trade Center became the world's tallest building at 1,350 feet. Soon afterward, the Sears Tower in Chicago reached 1,450 feet.

Lamb's restrained Art Deco essay in Indiana limestone, granite and chrome-nickel steel was admired by Frank Lloyd Wright and Le Corbusier, the great French architect.

But it is sheer height, not taste, which lures the sightseers and helps sell the souvenirs.

Some people have been married at the top, and a few have had their ashes committed to the winds there. In 1938, the Congo's Shogola Olaba dancers chose the observatory as an auspicious site for dispelling the evil spirits thought to be cursing their New York engagement.

Since 1978, a race up 1,575 steps to the 86th floor has been an annual event. The best time for a man is 12 minutes, 19 seconds; for a woman, 14:03.

Even before it opened, the Empire State Building also attracted desperate people. One discharged worker hurled himself down an elevator shaft. Eighteen months after the opening, a man jumped from the dirigible platform at the 103rd floor; 15 other people have jumped from the 86th floor.

One woman got over the fence in December 1979, but a gust of wind blew her back to the building. She landed on a ledge at the 85th floor, fracturing her hip.

The building's darkest day was July 28, 1945, when Lt. Col. William Smith, a veteran of 500 hours of combat flying in Europe, got lost in a morning mist and crashed his B-25 bomber into the north side at the 79th floor.

The building rocked. The B-25's fuel tanks ruptured in the 200 mph impact, and flame spewed as high as the 88th floor. Thirteen people were killed, 26 seriously injured. It cost $1 million to repair the damage.

The building has changed hands only three times. In 1961, when the building, 2½ acres of land and the operating lease sold for $65 million, the closing took four hours and 3,600 signatures.

By MACK SISK
Associated Press Writer
NEW BRAUNFELS, Texas (AP) — Much-traveled Jerome Nowotny has made a life's work out of chasing beer bottles and boasts that his international collection of more than 15,000 different brands is far and away the largest in the world.

The jolly Nowotny, bursting with humorous stories about his 48 years of compiling the collection, estimates it would take a person 13 eight-hour days plus one seven-hour day just to read the labels on all the bottles housed at his museum.

He doubts anyone else would have the time and money — much less the inclination — to match his collection on display at his museum situated in a German-style beer garden behind the Bavarian Restaurant, operated in the brick house where Nowotny was born in 1914.

"I'm 67 years old," Nowotny said, "and I'm continuing to do it. It's absolutely a way of life. Nobody could have had as much fun as I've had."

The reason Nowotny began his unusual collection — which contains about 9,000 bottles of brands no longer brewed — is steeped in his childhood in this German-American community where beer continued to flow throughout the great experiment with Prohibition from 1919 to 1933.

"It takes someone kind of childish to do what I've done for 48 years, especially when you have to fight for one like this," he said, fingering a newly acquired empty Negra Modelo bottle he located in Austin.

Nowotny said he has been financially stable since the age of 4½ and had saved about $6,300 by the time he was 14, much of it earned by guiding thirsty tourists in search of "home brew" readily available in New Braunfels during Prohibition.

"New Braunfels, Texas, from 1919 to 1933, had to have more bootleg joints than any city," he said. "In those days, I made $50 a day each day of the weekend as a guide to the bootleg joints."

Although extremely thrifty in his youth while acting as a bootlegger's guide and a car hop at his father's store, Nowotny decided in his later teen-age years that money was to spend — a theory he has lived his happy, vagabond life by.

"I've not scrimped and saved anything," he said.

At 14, Nowotny said he began taking yearly trips and spending every cent he'd earned, and he continues his yearly vacation trips, bringing back hundreds of new brands of empty beer bottles on each foray.

Having observed how hard it was to come by a beer during Prohibition, Nowotny said he was indelibly impressed when on April 7, 1933, at the end of prohibition, he walked into a store in New York and purchase a legal beer. "I was overcome with ecstasy at buying a legal beer," he said.

He kept the empty bottle of the Trammer's beer he drank that day and of every brand of beer he has encountered since that time.

For two years, he and a friend traveled the United States doing vaudeville routines and selling saltwater taffy while adding to his beer bottle collection, then went on his own hitchhiking through the country and selling monkeys he carved out of peach seeds for food, lodging and more beer bottles. "By 1936, I had been in every city in the United States that was on the map, hitchhiking all the time," he said. "I've never passed up a beer. I spent eight years fulltime at one stretch and never quit running. More and more breweries were coming into existence and several of them were going broke."

His travels have made Nowotny an expert on beer labels throughout the world and he puts on 30-minute presentations to civic clubs, telling funny stories in German and English, while showing off some of his prize bottles.

His collection includes bottles from defunct Texas breweries such as Grand Prize, Faust, Harry Mitchell, Magnolia, Monte Carlo, Rich Brew, Blue Bonnet, Buccaneer, Charro, and others that few people would think to save for posterity. He has the bottles from throughout the world stacked in his dusty museum by state, country and brand name.

Astro-Graph by bernice bede osol

April 30, 1981

This coming year you could meet someone who is very progressive and inventive. This individual may come up with some profitable ideas in which you can participate by helping to get them to the marketplace.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your friends will judge you today, not by what you have but by what you are. Affections and pretenses will turn them off rather than on. Romance, travel, luck, resources, possible pitfalls and career for the coming months are all discussed in your Astro-Graph which begins with your birthday. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Persons associated with you today will not be impressed by what you promise, only by how you perform. Be a doer. Let your accomplishments speak for themselves.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It's important to try to bring a little diversification into your work today. You could become too quickly bored when performing routine tasks.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Family financial matters should not be discussed today in the presence of gossip types. What you say will be distorted if it's repeated later.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's not likely you'll forget to fulfill promises made to friends today.

but you could do just that where your mate is concerned. Tie a string around your finger.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You work well today on things with a profit motive, but you may not be so eager in matters where there is nothing in it for you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You are enterprising and imaginative today, but there is a possibility you won't capitalize on your opportunities. Focus on the substance, not the form.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You're capable of handling responsibilities today, but your first inclination may be to duck them because you could lack faith in your abilities.

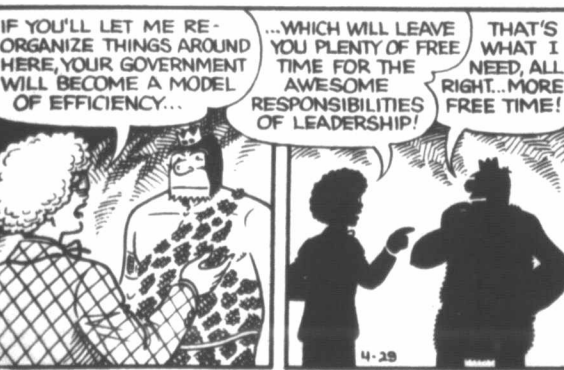

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Rather than discussing with others any grievances you may have with a friend, take it directly to the offending party. He or she is the only one who can ease your displeasure.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Finances may be a mixed bag for you today. A situation you're counting on might be delayed, while a windfall could come from an unexpected source.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Your possibilities for success are good today, provided you plan wisely. Situations where you act first and think later will fall flat.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Important matters should not be evaluated today on cursory information. A failure to probe deeper may later cause you regrets.

Harvesters fall to Tascosa

AMARILLO—Tascosa ran its record to 6-2 in District 3-5A play Tuesday afternoon with a 6-1 win over the Pampa Harvesters.

Pampa drops to 2-5 in district action and 6-9 overall. Rebel pitcher James Guerrero was troublesome for the Harvesters as he allowed only two hits while striking out eight and walking three. Guerrero went the full seven innings to notch his sixth win against only one loss.

Tascosa is 18-9 overall. Pampa's only run came with one out in the seventh inning when Chris Cook's double to rightfield scored Mark Case, who had reached first on an error.

Guerrero held the Harvesters hitless until the fifth inning when Andy Richardson singled. The Harvesters had loaded the bases in the fifth with two outs, but couldn't push across a run.

Tascosa scored three runs on four hits in the first inning and knocking sophomore starter Bryan Bowen out of the box in the process.

Richardson came on to hold the Rebels scoreless the final three innings after giving up a run in the second inning and two more in the third.

Richardson pitched five and two-thirds innings, giving up six hits while striking out two and not walking a batter. Bowen (1-2) was tagged with the loss.

Mike Powers paced Tascosa at the plate with three hits and two RBIs.

Each team was charged with three errors. Pampa visits Amarillo High Saturday for a doubleheader, starting at 1 p.m.

Tascosa trails league-leading Caprock by a half-game after the Longhorns slipped by Palo Duro, 7-5, yesterday.

Amarillo High, idle yesterday, has a 4-2 district mark.

Texas blanks Boston

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — In Arlington Stadium, baseball home of the Texas Rangers, the wind is a fact of life. It blows in from right-center field most of the summer at 15mph or better and has bested a platoon of left-handed Texas power hitters.

It almost bested Pat Putnam. "Last week, the left-handed first baseman vowed he would stop trying to be a power hitter in the big, windy stadium, would shorten his swing and would even choke up on the bat in certain situations."

But Tuesday night, Putnam crushed a three-run homer to dead center field into a 10-15mph wind, keying a 9-0 Texas shutout of the Boston Red Sox.

"That's the hardest I've ever hit one here," he said of his first home run of the season. "I've hit some farther — when the wind was blowing out — but not harder."

Putnam's blast was the key hit in a four-run Texas fourth inning that provided all the runs the Rangers would need, as Boston failed to score against Texas pitching for the second night in a row.

"I really didn't think I had it," Putnam said of his homer that also scored Al Oliver and Buddy Bell. Mickey Rivers had trotted home from third on a Johnny Grubb sacrifice fly just before Putnam cleaned the bases.

"In other parks, you can tell when you hit them whether they are gone. Not here," Putnam said.

Veteran Boston hitter Carl Yastrzemski, munching on a plate of barbecued ribs after the game, said he was not yet concerned about his team's run shortage the past two games.

"You have to give credit where credit is due. The Rangers have had great pitching these last two games," he said. "Tomorrow is another game. We'll just have to come out here and try again. You can't sit and dwell on it or you'll go crazy."

Three Texas pitchers shut Boston down on five hits Tuesday. Starter Ferguson Jenkins took himself out of the game after three innings, blaming a respiratory problem.

Adcock-Haverlah win housewives' tourney

Ruby Adcock and Kay Haverlah defeated Elaine Eddins and Jeanette Gikas, 6-2, 3-6 and 6-2, Monday to win the Class A doubles title in a Pampa Housewives' Tennis Tournament.

Consolation winners were Betty Blake and Dot Stowers, who defeated Lori Franklin and Brenda McAdams, 6-2, 6-2.

In Class B, Marilyn Trollinger and Sharon Hurst downed Jodi Davis and Kathy Burgess, 4-6, 6-2, 7-5, in the finals.

Thermelda Moore and Retha Eubanks defeated Ginger Loeffler and Kathy Johnson, 6-4, 6-4, in the consolation finals.

In the beginners' division, Roberta Barnes and Cara Wilkens defeated Bennie Quillen and Janice Miller, 6-4, 6-2, in the finals.

Brenda Madison and Ann Lemons won the consolation title by defeating Vicki Taylor and Luann Nicholson, 6-1, 2-6, 6-2.

Pampa Tennis Club will meet at 3 p.m. Sunday at the high school tennis courts for a combined meeting and tournament. Refreshments will be served.

Rodeo results

Lena Stewart of Pampa won first and second-place honors in breakaway roping and goat tying last weekend at Claude.

Jo Linda Lowrey placed sixth in breakaway roping and fifth in goat tying.

Pampa High rodeo club members will compete in the Rollins Rodeo this weekend at Slaton.

Manager Sparky Anderson of the Detroit Tigers previously managed Cincinnati for nine years and won five divisional titles, four National League pennants and two World Series championships.

NFL clubs search for diamonds in the rough

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Football League draft entered the "who's he?" phase today as teams sought a diamond-in-the-rough to go along with the gems they picked up 24 hours earlier.

There were no George Rogerses, no Lawrence Taylors, no Kenny Easleys up for grabs — at least not visibly so. More than a few low-round selections stick in the NFL each year. Guard Tyrone McGriff, the last pick a year ago (No. 333), not only stuck with the Pittsburgh Steelers but thanks to injuries to his teammates he was starting by season's end.

But the bottom-round rookies, the free-agent catch-ons, they are the rarities.

The seventh-through-12th-rounders show up in training camp with high hopes and high odds against them. Often they are cut early and, as they tour the training camps, cut more than once.

Not so the blue-chippers, the instant millionaires, the college kids with agents in tow. They are all but guaranteed not only to make the roster but to start, and to be paid handsomely for doing so.

Rogers, for example, is as sure a thing as you can find in the NFL this year. Bum Phillips turned Houston into a year-to-year winner when the Oilers drafted Earl Campbell three years ago. If could happen once, why not again?

So, after being fired by the Oilers because they couldn't win playoff games, and after being hired to coach New Orleans, he went to the Heisman well again this year and picked Rogers with the Saints' No. 1 selection Tuesday.

The 6-foot-2, 220-pound Heisman Trophy winner says he's not a "franchise" the way Campbell has become (three rushing titles in three seasons in Houston), but he's as close to one you'll find in the draft.

"I don't think I'm an Earl Campbell," Rogers said. "I can't turn it around by myself. I'm not a one-man team. I play with a team. As an individual, I can't do it. It has to be the team that'll do it."

He was one of six running backs picked in the first round and one of 20 to go among the 166 players chosen in Tuesday's six rounds. Defensive backs led the first-day ranks with 27 being picked, followed by linebackers with 23. The first linebacker to go was Taylor, rated by many as the "best athlete available." The New York Giants got the North Carolina star with their No. 2 pick.

The first quarterback to go was Rich Campbell of California, selected by Green Bay, which has been looking for a really good one since Bart Starr, now its embattled coach, retired after the Packers' halcyon days of the 1960s.

Just before the Pack made its first-round pick (No. 6 overall), St. Louis chose Alabama linebacker E.J. Junior. It was a mild surprise. The Cardinals' fans have been wondering just how much longer Jim Hart can be their quarterback.

The last time St. Louis went for a quarterback in the first round, it was Steve Pisarciewicz. He never panned out and ultimately became the cause celebre over which Bud Wilkinson, the Cards' gentlemanly coach, was fired by boss Billy Bidwill.

If St. Louis made a calculated gamble this time, it paid off. When the Cards' choice in the second round came up, the other blue-chip quarterback, Portland State's Neil Lomax, was still available. They took him.

A third "name" quarterback, Purdue's Mark Herrmann, didn't go until the fourth round, when Denver selected him. His mobility is highly suspect — which makes the Broncos' pick even more interesting since their No. 1 quarterback, Craig Morton, also can't get anywhere very fast.

Easley, the UCLA safety far and away the star of the defensive backs, was picked by the defense-poor Seattle Seahawks. Hugh Green, the Pitt defensive end projected as a linebacker in the pros, was the favorite of man of the New York Jets' fans crowded into the draft headquarters at the Sheraton Hotel. But it was Tampa Bay which got him, four picks after the Jets had used their No. 3 selection to claim Freeman McNeil, the UCLA running back.

Perhaps the best offensive lineman to go was Keith Van Horne of Southern Cal, the tackle who led the Trojans' famous "student body right" sweeps. The Chicago Bears figure to put him to good use paying the way for Walter Payton to roam where he wishes.

Another top offensive tackle to go in the first round was Mark May of Pitt, winner of the Outland Trophy winner as the nation's best interior lineman in college. He was one of 11 Panthers picked in the first six rounds, the most any school lost to the pros.

The Washington Redskins took May shortly after they had swung a trade with Baltimore, giving away three draft choices in exchange for all-purpose back Joe Washington.

In the other trade of interest, Tony Reed, a fine blocker and 1,000-yard rusher three years ago but stopped in his tracks by knee surgery two seasons back, was dealt to Denver by Kansas City, also for draft picks.

The stamp of quality-2

Trouble at work in American industry

EDITOR'S NOTE: Who's to blame for the problems with American products? Is it sloppy workmanship? Poor management? Here, in the second of a three-part series, is a look at changing work ethics.

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

American workmanship and the American worker are under attack.

Imports are taking a bigger chunk of the U.S. consumer's dollar. Justifiably or not, foreign-made products have the reputation of being better.

When the Ford Motor Co. announced a year ago that it was closing its largest assembly plant, the one at Mahwah, N.J., it said the reason was the poor quality of the cars coming off the line. Harold A. Poling, executive vice president for North American automotive operations, said the failures were caused by a "combination of management and employee shortcomings."

Management and union officials in the automobile and other industries admit there are instances of sloppiness and even outright sabotage. But they insist that these are rare. They say the problem with quality is a problem with management and they are trying new techniques, some borrowed from the Japanese, to improve workmanship.

"Workers make mistakes because management didn't do a very good job of planning," said Jay W. Leek, president of the Society for Quality Control, an organization of professionals in the field of quality.

Leek said blue-collar workers "share" the responsibility, but he added: "There's just been too much blamed on them... Nobody goes to work to make a mistake."

American managers frequently look, with envy, at the Japanese. They see a picture of employees who are totally committed to their jobs and their companies. Their lives are centered on their work.

John Nevin, chairman of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., said people mistakenly assume the commitment of Japanese workers is due to the Japanese ethnic background. "Nonsense," he said.

The "Made in Japan" label was not automatically associated with high quality in the days before World War II, Nevin said, and the Japanese ethnic background has not changed since then. "What changed was the managerial quality," he said.

The Public Agenda Foundation, a non-profit organization founded by pollster Daniel Yankelovich and former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, is trying to find out what makes people work and, more importantly, what makes them work harder and better.

The first part of the study, just completed, involved in-depth interviews with blue and white-collar workers, 18 to 70, in Seattle.

"We found that people cared enormously about their jobs," said Carol Greenwald, one of the researchers in charge of the study. "But they want more personal rewards, more sense of involvement. They want to be appreciated. They feel that their caring about their jobs is not rewarded."

Ms. Greenwald said poor workmanship, particularly the deliberate mistake, comes "from employees who are turned off and angry."

Ray Calore, president of United Auto Workers local 664, which represents the more than 4,000 hourly employees at the General Motors assembly plant in Tarrytown, N.Y., agreed. "If you like what you're doing, then you perform better," said Calore. "There are frustrations built into any job." You can't take out those frustrations by hitting your supervisor, he said, so you strike back at the product. "Retaliation is human nature," added Calore.

Calore said most of those problems have been eliminated at the Tarrytown plant, thanks to the "Quality of Work Life" program started there by General Motors in the early 1970s. The program has since been expanded to other General Motors plants and similar efforts are under way in a variety of industries.

The program is designed to give workers the sense of fairness and responsibility which Ms. Greenwald said today's employees want. When new procedures are introduced, workers are asked their opinions. They are not told how long it will take to perform a particular job; they are asked.
