AWACS deal now winnable, Baker believes

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, finding hope in a narrow defeat, is promising a less-reluctant Senate to balance the sale of AWACS planes to Saudi Arabia by offering Israel additional radar-jamming equipment.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 9-8 Thursday to reject the $8.5 billion arms deal as two Republicans switched to support Reagan, who swayed one of them with a long-distance telephone call during the panel's debate.

"I'm gratified it was that close," the president said. "Of course, I wish it went the other way."

It was close enough, though, that an enthusiastic Senate Republican leader Howard H. Baker Jr. told reporters: "It's now winnable. Several weeks ago it wasn't."

Baker's optimism was based partly on the shift by Sen. Larry Pressler, a South Dakota Republican who had been among 50 co-sponsors of a Senate resolution to veto the sale of five Airborne Warning and Control System planes, Sidewinder missiles and new equipment for jet fighters.

Also swinging behind Reagan were Sens. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., who had been leaning against the sale, and Charles Mathias, R-Md., who had been undecided. That cut the Senate lineup, according to an Associated Press count, to 53-37 against the sale, with 10 senators uncommitted and the vote still a week and a half away.

Pressler, who only two days before had rejected Reagan's plea for support at the White House, said he was persuaded by the president's call from Philadelphia, where he was speaking to a foreign policy group.

"The president felt we would impede him in foreign policy if we vetoed the arms sale," Pressler said.

More important, Pressler said, Reagan promised to incorporate in a letter to the Senate an assurance that he would offer Israel new radar-jamming equipment to prevent the AWACS planes from being used to spy on Israeli air operations.

Earlier, Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, a deputy assistant secretary of defense, told the committee that "the Israelis have not expressed any interest in radar jammers. It is my judgment that because the AWACS threat is so small, the Israelis will not want additional jammers."

Asked about that later, Pressler replied: "Well, that would end the matter."

The administration also enlisted Maxwell Raab, U.S. ambassador to Italy and a prominent Jewish leader, to win Pressler's vote. Raab, described by Pressler as an old friend, had lunch with the senator to urge his support of the sale.

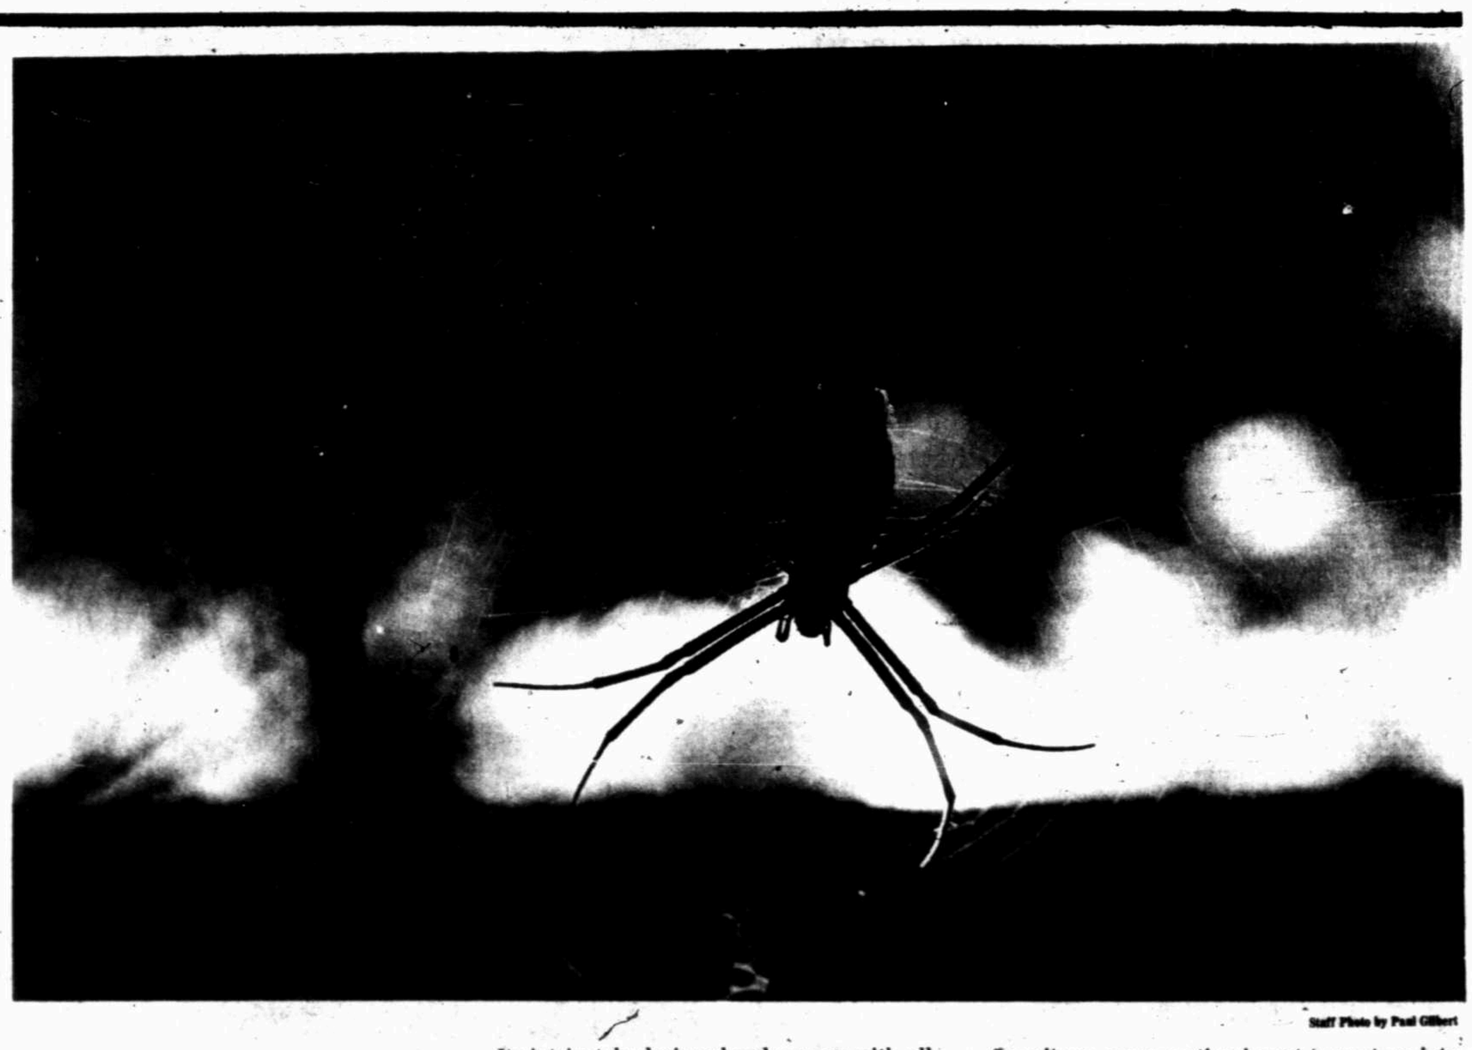

Reagan's strategy did not work, however, on another senator, Nebraska Democrat Edward Zorinsky.

The president also tried to telephone Zorinsky from Philadelphia, but Art Jaeger, the senator's press secretary, said Zorinsky refused to take the call.

"He thought it would be ludicrous to think a two-minute conversation at this point would cause him to change his mind," Jaeger said. "He felt it was an insult to his intelligence and an insult to his colleagues. He informed the page he would talk to the president tomorrow."

Zorinsky joined with the seven other Democrats to support a resolution disapproving the sale. The only Republican to oppose Reagan was Rudy Boschwitz of Minnesota.

Voting for the sale in addition to Baker, Hayakawa, Mathias and Pressler were Republican Charles H. Percy of Illinois, the committee chairman, Jesse Helms of North Carolina, Richard G. Lugar of Indiana and Nancy Landon Kassebaum of Kansas.

Tornado touches down in area

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

A tornado that touched down 12 miles south of Odessa Thursday night injured two people, while another person apparently was struck by lightning near the funnel cloud.

Two houses and a mobile home were destroyed by the tornado which touched down at least three times near the Pleasant Farms Addition on U.S. Highway 385, according to the Ector County Sheriff's and Odessa Police departments.

Carol Horn, 46, was reported in stable condition this morning with a fractured pelvis, according to Odessa's Medical Center Hospital. Eight-year-old Bush Bret was treated and released for multiple abrasions received Thursday night. Dwight Phillips, 26, was struck by lightning, according to hospital officials, but he also was treated and released.

The tornado also flipped several vehicles and damaged power lines. Residents reported seeing the funnel cloud about 11:20 p.m. Thursday.

There has been no estimate of the damage and details of how the three persons were injured are unknown.

After a busy night of severe weather caused by a cold front pushing down from the northwest, the forecast is for continued cloudy and mild weather with a good chance of thundershowers through Saturday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

With the low tonight expected to be in the low 60s, Saturday's high should settle in the mid-70s. The NWS is predicting a 50 percent chance of rain tonight and 30 percent chance of precipitation Saturday. Winds should be light at 5-10 mph from the southeast.

There was 1.16 inches of rain reported in the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. today at the NWS, bringing the rainfall total to 4.90 this month. The NWS reported the year-to-date rainfall at 16.96 inches. Midland's average annual rainfall is 13.51 inches.

Texas Electric Service Company reported Thursday's overnight rainfall for Midland at .70 of an inch. Heavier rainfall reported by TESCO occurred west of Midland, with Odessa's rainfall at 1.28 inches. TESCO's Permian Basin station near Monahansreported 3.28 inches of rain.

Thursday's high of 84 fell 10-degrees short of the record high of 94 set in 1962 and the record overnight low of 40-degrees set in 1967 did not come close to the cool overnight low of 65.

Andrews reported .36 of an inch, while Lamesa had .05 of an inch and Big Spring 1.50 inches.

Sudan's leader says he'll send suicide squads into Libya

By SAMI RIZKALLAH
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Emboldened by an American AWACS umbrella, Sudan's president is threatening to send commando suicide squads into Libya to avenge sabotage by Libyan "terrorists" and Libya's bombing of Sudanese villages.

"We are seriously thinking of a defensive plan that could move such operations to the Libyan soil and I will ask our friends to assist," President Gaafar Nimeiri was quoted as saying in an interview published today in the semi-official Cairo newspaper Al Ahram.

"These operations would take place soon, God willing, in Tripoli and maybe inside (Libyan leader Col. Moammar) Khadafy's own home," Nimeiri said.

"I will train a large number of what is called suicide army commandos and infantrymen to operate inside Libya. If I was able to send between 500 and 600 persons inside Libya to die there, this would be a success.

"Such battles are easy because they are secret. There are about 100,000 Sudanese in Libya and about 10,000 of them would be willing to carry out such operations for the sake of their country."

Nimeiri called on the Arab League to mediate his quarrel with Khadafy. But he said he is ready for "unlimited cooperation" with the United States provided the Americans do not interfere in "my internal affairs and so long as there is an enemy standing on my borders."

Nimeiri's statement coincided with the arrival in Egypt, Sudan's ally to the north, of two American E-3 Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) radar surveillance planes.

The spy planes, with their sophisticated "look down" radar, immediately began patrolling Egypt's western border with Libya, the commander of the Cairo West military airport reported. But Defense Minister Abdel Halim Abu Ghazala indicated their chief mission was to watch Sudan's border with Libya and its satellite Chad.

"We wanted to be sure that we could have early warning about any kind of attack against Sudan, so we could help Sudan," he said in an interview broadcast by ABC-TV.

Abu Ghazala said he canceled a state of alert on the Egyptian-Libyan border Thursday morning "because we noticed the whole thing in Libya; there is no movement, no concentration of forces. It is calm."

Since September, Nimeiri has reported repeated bombing raids on Sudanese villages by Libyan aircraft based in Chad. He also told Al Ahram that Libyan agents — he called them "terrorists" and "murderers" — have carried out subversive operations inside Sudan.

Khadafy has an estimated 18,000 troops in Chad and has vowed Nimeiri will be the next Arab "traitor" to fall following the assassination of his ally Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

In Tripoli, Libya's Foreign Ministry issued a statement demanding the United States withdraw the AWACS and order the 6th Fleet to stop its "muscle flexing" and sail away from Arab shores.

"America is now trying to complete the occupation of Egypt and impose control over it in order to turn it into a center influencing the region, serving American strategy and colonialist objectives," said the statement.

"There is no danger threatening Sudan and Egypt on the part of Libya, and...there are no Libyan military concentrations along the borders of these countries."

Dean claims no political aspirations

Clements chooses counsel to replace campaigning Strake

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Despite the job's reputation as a springboard to statewide office, Secretary of State-designate David Dean says he has no political aspirations now.

Gov. Bill Clements on Thursday picked Dean, his general counsel, for secretary of state. It's the highest appointed post in state government, and frequently serves as a good way for would-be candidates to get their names known.

"Others have used it as a stepping stone ... to advance their own personal career," he said. "I come with no political aspirations at all."

The latest secretary of state to try to use the office as a stepping stone is George Strake, the man Dean will replace. Strake wants the GOP nomination to challenge Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

In taking his new post, Dean, 33, will complete the switch from the Democrats to the Republicans. He has been in the governor's office for nine years, starting as a law school student working with Democratic Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

When John Hill beat Briscoe in the 1978 primary, Dean jumped to the Clements' team, landing as a campaign worker and eventually general counsel.

"I couldn't in any way, shape or form support Hill," said Dean, who claims to have been a conservative Democrat.

Clements said Thursday, "David told me in the past he really is a Texas ticket-splitter and that all his inclinations are to be a Republican." Dean now is "declaring himself as a Republican," said the governor.

Clements picked Assistant Secretary of State David Herndon to replace Dean as general counsel.

Dean will earn $52,000 as secretary of state, which includes duties as the state's chief election official. He made $48,900 as Clements' counsel.

Although denying any immediate political aspirations — such as a race for attorney general next year — Dean said he has "no intention of staying in the office a very lengthy period of time."

"If something is available in the future (an elected office) ... I'd evaluate it and make a decision then," he said.

The portraits on the wall in the secretary of state's office give a good indication of how good a stepping stone the post has been. Former occupants of the office include Hill, who became attorney general; Attorney General Mark White; Comptroller Bob Bullock and former Attorney General Crawford Martin.

Ironically, Dean's nomination will be sponsored in the Senate by Oscar Mauzy, a liberal Dallas Democrat who represents Dean's home area. Dean said Mauzy is a longtime family friend.

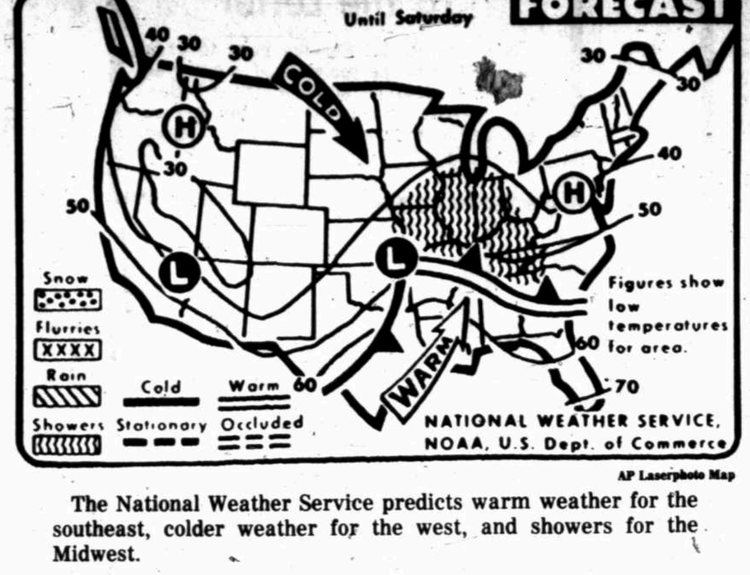

Dean said he would take the oath of office next week, probably Thursday. Briscoe might attend the ceremony, he said.

"Gov. Briscoe and I have maintained a fine relationship," he said.

He recalled, however, what Briscoe said to him when he jumped to Clements' team.

"He certainly wasn't impressed. But I think he was pleased for me," said Dean.

Who will guard the cities against their guardians?

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Individual citizens have no effective protection from growing police misconduct, the U.S. Commission on Civil rights said today. It called for local civilian review procedures and tougher federal laws against police brutality.

The conclusions were contained in a 173-page report, entitled "Who Is Guarding the Guardians," which resulted from a three-year study by the bipartisan federal fact-finding agency.

"The volume of complaints of police abuse received by the commission has increased each year, and the nature of alleged abuse has become more serious," the commission said.

It cited in particular a series of brutality cases in Houston and Philadelphia, where the commission held hearings on the problem.

Reviewing local police procedures for dealing with complaints and existing federal laws, the commission concluded, "Available remedies appear to be either inadequate or poorly applied so that no effective protection from police misconduct seems to exist for the individual citizen."

The commission said additional staff is needed in the Civil Rights Division and the Community Relations Service of the Justice Department. But those components of the department are facing proposed budget cuts averaging 6 percent as part of the administration's effort to balance the federal budget by 1984.

The commission also advocated new federal legislation on police brutality. It noted that the primary federal statute used to prosecute police brutality carries only a misdemeanor penalty unless death results in which case the maximum penalty is life imprisonment.

The commission criticized the situation where brutality leading to permanent paralysis is subject to a maximum federal penalty of one year in prison and a $1,000 fine, and called on Congress to make all such violations felonies.

The panel also suggested that Congress authorize the attorney general to file civil suits against police departments with a pervasive pattern or practice of police abuse. It noted that in 1979, the Justice Department filed such a suit against the city of Philadelphia but that the suit was dismissed last year on the grounds that the attorney general had no power to bring such a case.

Citing what it called inadequate procedures in the Houston and Philadelphia police departments for investigating complaints, the commission recommended that local civilian officials "take an active role to ensure that the (police) department's policies, procedures and practices are consistent with the letter and spirit of federal, state and local laws."

Advocating stronger police internal investigative units, the commission said police departments should place more emphasis on civilian complaint systems which the public feels free to use.

It said civilian police review boards of one form or another had succeeded in Detroit, Chicago and Kansas City.

The commission also recommended strict rules for the use of deadly force by police officers and noted that such rules had reduced the number of police shootings of civilians in New York City.

Finally, the commission said many police hiring standards still discriminate against members of minority groups and women and that departments should adopt affirmative action plans designed to make the police force reflect the composition of the community.

400 people involved in million-dollar drug ring

By BOB EGELKO
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Investigators say they've broken a huge drug ring that ferried caravans of poor people to doctors for free prescription pills that were then mixed together to form a potent narcotic and sold for millions of dollars.

The poor people, participants in the state-financed health care program for the needy, were offered free drugs such as heroin and cocaine for their prescription pills, authorities said.

Fifty-one recipients of the Medi-Cal health-care benefits have been charged with fraudulently obtaining prescription pills and many more arrests are expected, the California Health Services Department announced Thursday. Up to 400 people participated in the scheme, authorities said.

One by one, the participants would go into the doctors' offices and complain of symptoms that they knew would require treatment with codeine or tranquilizers, investigators said. Then, prescriptions in hand, the Medi-Cal recipients would go to pharmacies and get them filled for free.

The tranquilizers were then mixed with the codeine to produce the potent and occasionally lethal heroin-like combination known on the street as "loads" or "four doors," and sold, sometimes right in the pharmacy parking lots, investigators said.

The operation in five California counties purchased 1.5 million pills a year, investigators said. The pills were worth $500,000 a year at the counter and the resultant "loads" were sold on the street for an estimated $3 million, officials said.

No doctors or pharmacists have been charged, but authorities said some were under investigation and charges might develop.

The organizers also have not been arrested. Charles Shuttleworth, the Health Services Department's chief investigator, said local and state authorities were investigating the ringleaders, who have criminal records and are not Medi-Cal recipients.

The combination drug has an effect similar to heroin but it is much cheaper, officials said. It has been blamed for 20 deaths in Los Angeles County, and at least six of the victims were Medi-Cal recipients, officials said.

Bells in Michigan school district toll for final time

By BRIAN TUCKER
Associated Press Writer

ALPENA, Mich. (AP) — When the final bell rings today, the Alpena school district's 6,800 students and almost 480 employees will go home. But they won't return Monday because the district is penniless.

"I just hope the people realize that this is the real thing. We're broke," said Cynthia Wenzel, an Alpena High School senior and co-leader of the 400-member Concerned Students For Better Education.

The school district, about 225 miles north of Detroit, is the first in Michigan since the Depression to close because of lack of funds.

In the last five months, voters have rejected tax levy proposals three times. Another vote is scheduled for Oct. 30 — and school officials may try again later this year if that fails — but in the meantime, schools will close.

There will be two proposals on the Oct. 30 ballot. One asks renewal of a property tax rate of 20.25 mills — or a little more than 2 cents for each dollar of assessed value — which would provide more than $15 million a year. The second issue requests 3.45 mills to provide $1.2 million for services like libraries, athletics, cafeterias and transportation for the 89 percent of the district's students who ride buses.

Alpena's problems are common to many school districts: shrinking enrollments mean less state aid and people are unwilling to increase their property taxes.

"It's just a situation where people are saying, 'no more taxes,'" said Finance Director Glenn McAdams, who will be out of work unless a millage proposal is approved. Superintendent John Taylor, three secretaries and two custodians will remain on the job.

This community of nearly 14,000 is a conservative, mostly blue-collar town nestled on Lake Huron's Thunder Bay. Many of its people work in cement plants, paper mills or on farms. Unemployment usually hovers at least 2 percentage points above the state rate, which is now more than 11 percent.

"These people are proud, but they don't fully understand the situation," said Wes Nunneley, 37, a druggist who has three children in the school system and supports the millage proposals.

"But I'm not concerned just because I have kids in the schools," Nunneley said. "I'm more concerned with the devastating effect it's going to have on the community five or 10 years from now."

He said he fears that without a strong school system, Alpena will have difficulty attracting professional people.

Leading the opposition to the millage proposals is Frank LaBita, a retired United Auto Workers union negotiator. He is a county commisioner in adjacent Presque Isle County, which sends students from two townships to Alpena's 14 schools.

Torry Osgerby, 73, a leader of the local chapter of the American Association of Retired Persons, said he recognizes that senior citizens are partly to blame for the repeated millage defeats.

"There are seniors in this area living on a very minimum income and we know they are hard pressed. But the majority would be able to afford a millage increase," he said. "I'm going to work to convince 500 or 600 people. We have to, or the kids will suffer."

Copy cat act runs amuck

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — For two seasons Scott was the center and David was the guard on their high school football team in Houston, Tex.

They worked so closely together, David could copy Scott — and for nearly five months he did, authorities said.

David A. Black impersonated Scott G. Burdine, enlisting in the Army under Burdine's name and subsequently running afoul of the law in Georgia, military and civilian authorities said Thursday.

The deception was discovered in July, when about $360 worth of credit card bills Black — still posing as Burdine — had run up at a resort near here found their way to his "father," Dr. John Burdine, a specialist in nuclear medicine in Houston.

The doctor and son had been together at the time, so he called Muscogee County Sheriff Gene Hodge here. Hodge told him that his "son" was being held in the Muscogee County jail on check forgery charges.

Hodge said his deputies couldn't shake the 21-year-old prisoner's contention he was Scott Burdine.

Investigators finally established Black's true identity through fingerprints.

"I have a feeling that he was not at all trying to hurt us, but to identify with us," John Burdine told a reporter.

"I think he liked me. I liked him," added Scott Burdine.

Black told a reporter during a brief interview at the jail that he chose Burdine to impersonate because "I just knew his name."

Black pleaded guilty this month to three counts of forging the name of a fellow soldier to checks and one count of writing a bad check, according to an assistant district attorney, Greg Conger.

He was sentenced to four years in prison but will be required to serve only 12 months, and possibly less if he makes restitution of $1,390, court records show.

The Army is in the process of correcting its records to show the real Scott Burdine never enlisted, and to eliminate the man who posed as Burdine from the service, according to spokesman Ben Walburn at nearby Fort Benning, where Black was stationed.

Snyder man dies in auto accident

ODESSA — A Snyder man died and a Hobbs, N.M., boy was critically injured when their car plowed into the rear of another vehicle near here early this morning, according to Department of Public Safety officials.

Pronounced dead at Medical Center Hospital was 20-year-old James Wilton Davis of Lubbock. In critical condition in the hospital's intensive care unit is Ronnie Davis, 14, of Hobbs.

According to the Department of Public Safety, the Davis boy suffered facial injuries when he went through the windshield of a 1978 Chevrolet driven by James Davis after it collided with the rear of a 1976 Chevrolet van driven by Ronald Bradley Hicks, 37, of Odessa.

Hicks was released following emergency treatment for head injuries. The Davis car left one foot of skid marks before striking Hicks' van. The accident occurred shortly after 3 a.m. on U.S. Highway 385, just north of Loop 338. Both vehicles were northbound at the time.

Davis' body was taken to the Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home in Odessa, where arrangements were being made to transfer it to a Snyder funeral home later today.

Stereo equipment stolen from truck

In complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, Patrick Blakeley of 403 W. Hart Ave. said a $3,000 amplifier-recorder was stolen from the back of his pickup truck sometime in the past two days.

Two Illinois men reported the theft of $220 in cash from their rooms at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, 4300 W. Highway 80. The money disappeared early Thursday night, according to the men, who said the rooms had been locked. Police said there was no sign of forced entry.

Terri Walsh of 2612 W. Franklin Ave. told officers cash and checks worth $741 were removed from her purse in an office of the Coquina Oil Co., 400 N. Marienfeld St., Thursday. Credit cards and a check book also were missing.

Red Cross remains in flood-stricken area

Midland Red Cross volunteers remain on duty in flood-stricken areas of Texas "and we'll remain there as long as we are needed," according to Elvis Curb, executive director of the Midland Red Cross.

Five Midlanders are in various areas of North and Central Texas assisting victims of flooding that occurred earlier this week when storms spawned by a tropical storm in Mexico dumped as much as 15 inches of rainfall on a wide portion of Texas from Abilene to Fort Worth and north to Gainesville.

"There are two kinds of assistance offered by the Red Cross — emergency services and family assistance," Curb explained Thursday shortly before leaving for Mineral Wells where he will be involved in flood assistance management. "Our canteen is already there helping prepare and distribute meals in emergency service. Of course, family assistance personnel will be there longer," helping the homeless families get back on their feet.

According to Curb, the Red Cross currently has 78 volunteers and staff members working on flood relief duty in five states. There are 18 shelters open, serving 750 persons in five states, Curb said, adding that there are 30 Red Cross vehicles in use, having served 3,000 meals.

Several members of Midland's Salvation Army also are on flood-relief duty, traveling to the Abilene area Wednesday.

Odessa electrical supply company files suit against Sperry Rand Corp.

An Odessa electrical supply company which alleges its computer system failed in handling the gamut of its business has filed a $3 million lawsuit in federal court in Midland against Sperry Rand Corp.'s Univac Division, manufacturer of the computer system, and Business Information Systems (B.I.S.), which supplied "software" in an effort to make the system work.

In its suit on an alleged breach of contract, Electric Service & Supply Co. of Odessa is complaining that the Sperry Rand Univac 90/30 Computer System developed problems and was rendered "virtually without value and unfit for the purposes" it was to serve: keeping account of invoices, accounts receivable, accounts payable, the pay general ledger and inventory control.

Electric Service is maintaining that the $477,360 Univac system never worked properly and that B.I.S.'s software, which was recommended by Sperry Rand, did not rectify the condition. The software "was never of any use to the plaintiff," Electric Supply states in its complaint.

"Its bundled programs continued to fail the essential functions," the suit's petition says.

In taking Sperry Rand and B.I.S. to court for alleged violations of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Electric Supply is seeking treble damages.

The plaintiff is seeking almost $2.7 million from Sperry Rand, $215,028 from B.I.S. and $150,000 in fees for its Odessa attorneys, Tryon Lewis and Gary Bridges. Electric Supply is asking for a jury trial.

Representing defendant Sperry Rand are Midland attorneys W.B. Browder Jr. and Andrew L. Kerr.

Nixon's niece throws her hat in the ring

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — The niece of former President Richard Nixon is thinking about running for Congress and says she isn't worried about being tainted by her uncle's downfall in the Watergate scandal.

"I'm just going to be honest," said Lawrene Nixon Anfinson, the daughter of Donald Nixon, the ex-president's brother. "I feel Watergate hurt this nation terribly and it hurt our family more than anyone can ever know...but it also made our country aware that the man sitting in the White House is not a god."

Mrs. Anfinson, 38, is officially an Irvine resident, although she lives in McLean, Va., where her husband, Thomas, is serving as a Reagan administration appointee in the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

A history teacher whose public service thus far has been limited to a post on the Irvine Community Services Commission, Mrs. Anfinson said she will announce her plans "one way or another" during the first week of November.

She is setting her sights on the GOP nomination in a newly reapportioned district made up of southern Orange County and parts of northern San Diego County.

She has not spoken to her uncle about her ambitions, she said, although "many people have informed him about it.

"His only concern is that I'm not a lawyer. He thinks politicans should be lawyers," she said.

Chinese exports exhibited in Canton

CANTON, China — The 50th Canton export fair opened Thursday in this southern Chinese trade metropolis. More than 20,000 foreign visitors are expected to attend the month-long exhibition.

Western industrial sources here predict a renewed surge in Chinese imports from the West by 1983. This figure is based on revelations by high-level Peking officials that a number of decisions will be made next year regarding major imports to modernize China's industries.

They also said that China is currenty preparing a five-year plan to run until 1985 that would include the economic plan for 1982. The officials indicated that the revamping of China's economy, which has led to considerable import limitations over the past two years, would be concluded by 1985.

The Canton fair, held twice a year since 1957, is regarded as China's most important export goods exhibition. Among the items displayed are Chinese light industry and chemical products, engineering equipment, and handicrafts.

The main emphasis at the fair is on Chinese exports, whereas imports are increasingly being dealt with in negotiations with foreign firms operating in peking.

The jubilee fair began with a fireworks display outside the 10 exhibition halls. Banners hanging from red balloons proclaimed the importance of the event for China's foreign trade.

Besides the Canton fair, 28 special fairs are being held in other Chinese cities this year.

An initial tour of the displays made clear the efforts by China's industry to increase the quality and technical level of its goods. But it will still be difficult to find western buyers for many of them.

Artistic handicrafts, which have become an important source of foreign currency for China and are already on sale in several countries, met with great interest.

The Canton fair continues to be the sole opportunity for many foreign businessmen to establish contacts with Chinese foreign trade organizations. It is also regarded as a barometer for Peking's foreign policy.

Vietnam veteran condemns memorial

WASHINGTON (AP) — A prize-winning design for a national memorial to honor Americans who died in Vietnam is being condemned by a soldier who fought there.

Thomas Carhart, a West Point graduate who led an infantry platoon in the 101st Airborne in Vietnam, called the memorial a "black gash of shame and sorrow" that would humiliate those who fought in the war.

Wearing his two Purple Heart decorations on his suit, Carhart went before the government's Fine Arts Commission on Tuesday to plead for a reversal of its approval of a below-ground memorial in black granite.

Carhart, a civilian lawyer who works in the Pentagon, said the design depicts the war "as some ugly, dirty experience of which we were all ashamed."

The commission, which approved the design in July, heard Carhart out but took no action on his request. Members said no reconsideration was called for. Ground is to be broken for the memorial, near the Lincoln Memorial, in February.

The design, by Maya Ying Lin, a Yale architecture student, was selected by a jury of architects, sculptors, landscape designers and an architecture writer from among 1,420 entries in a competition.

It calls for two long walls of black marble shaped in a V, with the walls beginning at ground level and sloping 10 feet below ground. Viewers would descend to see the names of America's 57,692 Vietnam war dead inscribed on the walls in the chronological order in which they died.

Defense of the 1970s and 1980s brings new jargon

By ROBERT WIELAARD
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — It began with SALT in the 1970s. Since then the Western defense establishment has brought forth MIRVs, PENAIDS, SLCMs and GLCMs along with such tongue-twisters as "depressed trajectory," "circular error probability" and the "fractional orbital bombardment system."

SLCMs, of course, are pronounced sliccums, and GLCMs, gliccums, by those in the know.

The strategic arms limitation talks of the 1970s produced the SALT I and SALT II pacts and have paved the way for SALT III meetings between the United States and the Soviet Union early next year in Geneva, Switzerland.

But on Nov. 30, they'll sit down in Geneva to talk about curbing the number of nuclear missiles in Europe.

To keep up with the jargon in those talks and others, here is a glossary of some of U.S. Defense Department terms likely to come up, courtesy of the Arms Control Association, a private group in Washington, D.C.:

Flexible response — The ability to meet an enemy with a range of nuclear and conventional arms which avoids having to reach quickly for the most ruinous weapons to respond to an attack. Example: the shooting down by U.S. Navy planes of two Libyan jets last summer in the Mediterranean. An inflexible U.S. response would have been to bomb Tripoli, one of Libya's capitals.

Missiles — Literally anything that can be fired or thrown, including bullets. But generally large weapons with a variety of ranges from battlefied (under 500 miles) to intercontinental or strategic (4,000 miles and more) carrying either nuclear or conventional warheads.

Warhead — The part of a missile or torpedo that holds either the conventional or nuclear explosive charge, chemical or biological agent to inflict damage.

Ballistic missiles — Arms fired on an angle the way a quarterback throws a forward pass. They are not steered by radar but simply arc onto targets.

SCLM — Abbreviation for Submarine-Launched Cruise Missile which is steered by radar to a target. It flies close to the surface to elude enemy detection.

GCLM — Ground-Launched Cruise Missile. Same as a SLCM, except that it is launched from the ground.

Depressed trajectory — The arc of a ballistic missile fired at a sharper-than-usual angle so it goes faster. This means targets (cities, forces, etc.) are more vulnerable because there is less advance warning time.

Penetration aids (penaids) — Techniques and-or devices used to deceive the enemy's defenses, thus increasing the probability of a weapon's penetrating the defenses and heading for the target.

Gray area systems — Arms that can be used in a variety of ways from battlefield to strategic. Also called "dual-mission systems." One example is a fast bomber with medium or short-range missiles.

MIRV — The Multiple Independently Targetable Re-entry Vehicle is a package of two or more warheads launched from a single ballistic missile in flight. After leaving the carrier missile, the warheads seek out separate targets. Examples include Soviet SS-17 and U.S. Minuteman III weapons.

Forward based system — Medium-range (500 to 1,500 miles) U.S. aircraft that can strike Soviet targets and are based on aircraft carriers. Example: F-111 jet fighter-bombers carrying nuclear weapons.

Fractional orbital bombardment system — An arms system whereby a missile in flight is slowed down suddenly to make it re-enter the atmosphere earlier and make surprise attacks possible.

Launch on warning doctrine — The doctrine holds that a nation's bombers and land-based missiles would be launched after a satellite warning that the enemy has attacked.

Triad — U.S. strategic forces consisting of long-range bombers, intercontinental ballistic missiles and submarine-launched ballistic missiles.

Countervalue — Military strategy, weapons and attacks against the enemy's cities and economic centers.

Counterforce — Same as countervalue, but directed against an opponent's military forces and industry.

Circular error probable (CEP) — A measure of accuracy. It's the radius of a circle around a target in which half the missiles aimed at that target will land.

Confidence building measures — These demonstrate a nation's intent not to start a war and include such things as announcing what type of maneuvers it will hold and inviting foreign observers. They are different from measures reducing fire power.

Magnitogorsk is product of Communist regime

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer

MAGNITOGORSK, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Magnitogorsk, a small city dotted by puffs of yellow gray smoke from factory chimneys, could well be the perfect laboratory of Soviet Communism.

Far from foreign influence and with little pre-revolutionary history of its own, it is almost entirely a product of the nation's Communist regime.

"Are you really an American? You're the first one I've ever seen, except on television," says a young steelworker meeting a visitor.

In bigger cities, Communist officials sometimes complain that streams of foreign visitors bring ideological pollution, ranging from anti-Communist ideas to jeans and gadgets that fuel the black market.

None of this is a problem in Magnitogorsk, where only a few radio broadcasts from the West seem to threaten the Communist system's information monopoly over the 415,000 residents.

Western goods are rare, too. A pair of Western jeans is said to go for 250 rubles (about $345) on the Magnitogorsk black market, one-third more than the Moscow rate.

If Magnitogorsk has any political dissidents, they keep a low profile. The demands of Polish workers for independent trade unions also seem to fall on deaf ears in Magnitogorsk, where the steel plant's 60,000 workers last month adopted an open letter denouncingthe leaders of Solidarity, the Polish workers' union.

"Things are getting out of hand in Poland," the young steelworker says. "The Polish leadership hasn't been tough enough, and Solidarity is taking over the country and the mass media."

The open letter specifically denounced a Solidarity appeal urging fellow East European workers to form independent unions. Workers here acknowledge they never saw the full text of the Polish appeal and made their angry response on the basis of hostile Soviet press reports.

"Our workers trust the Soviet press," says a steel plant official.

Magnitogorsk dates to 1743, when Russia's Czarist regime founded a frontier fortress in the Ural Mountains. The area remained little developed until 1929, when Communist authorities ordered construction of the steel complex, thus making the city essentially a child of the Communist revolution.

As in other cities, heavy industry is Magnitogorsk's main source of pride. The steelworks — called the Magnitogorsk Metallurgical Complex — made the steel for half the Soviet tanks used in World War II and one-third of the artillery shells.

The city was almost fully closed to foreign visitors until 1978, implying that military-type production continued well after the war. Only this year has Magnitogorsk seen its first foreign performing groups, musical emsembles from Czechosolvakia and the Philippines. Prior to 1978, the only foreigners permitted in the city were technicians, including a small number of Americans and Frenchmen, whose skills were needed by local industry.

Another reflection of conditions elsewhere is how much local agriculture needs to be improved.

Milk and cheese are plentiful, at least this season, but a city official acknowledges "a certain shortage" of meat in state stores. Rural residents farming for their own profit provide much of Magnitogorsk's meat, just as similar private farming provides about 30 percent of the meat in the entire Soviet Union. Many steelworkers plant personal vegetable and fruit gardens.

Workers earn an average income of $262 a month, slightly above the national average. One quarter of Magnitogorsk residents still share apartments with other families.

Hemorrhage patients also have ulcers

BOSTON (AP) — Routine examination of people suffering gastrointestinal hemorrhaging will disclose those who are likely to have peptic ulcers with dangerous recurrent bleeding, a study shows.

Doctors at St. James' Hospital in London used endoscopes to examine the stomachs and intestines of 292 hemorrhage patients. They found that 132 had peptic ulcers, and in 56 of these, blood vessels were visible in the ulcers.

The doctors continued to watch 47 of the patients for further bleeding, and found that 56 percent of those with visible blood vessels continued to bleed.

These people can undergo quick surgery if their condition is diagnosed early. Having an ulcer that bleeds more than once can mean a 12-fold increase in the chance of death, the doctors said. But

The doctors reported their findings in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

"We conclude that after bleeding occurs, visible vessels can be identified in a much higher proportion of ulcers than previously reported."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Primary hypertension not disease-related

Dear Dr. Solomon: Usually when a person says that something is essential, it means that it is needed. But a person needs essential hypertension like he needs a hole in the head. What does essential mean when the word is used in this fashion? — Dick, St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Dick: Essential — or primary — hypertension is an elevated blood pressure that is not caused by any apparent disease (such as kidney disease).

Dear Dr. Solomon: I hear quite a bit about the nausea caused by cancer drugs, and the use of marijuana to control it. How many patients are we actually talking about? — Ms. H.V., NYC.

Dear Ms. V.: According to the National Cancer Institute, about 200,000 Americans are taking anticancer drugs, and possibly one-fourth of them suffer from severe nausea. Furthermore, it is believed that about half this group might be helped by tetrahydrocannabinol, the active ingredient in marijuana.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You have mentioned hardening of the arteries as a cause of heart attacks. Is it possible to have a heart attack if the person does not have hardening of the arteries? — Warren, Austin, Texas

Dear Warren: It is possible for a person who does not have arteriosclerosis (hardening of the arteries) to have a heart attack. One unusual condition, called Prinzmetal's angina, involves constriction of the arteries to the point where the flow of blood is blocked. In addition, patients with severe anemia may not have sufficient hemoglobin in their blood, and the heart muscle therefore does not get the nutrition it needs. This, too, may lead to a heart attack.

In general, however, most patients who have heart attacks or who suffer from angina have coronary atherosclerosis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Since my father had a heart attack two years ago, he has had trouble with his ankles swelling up. He also gets chest pains. He is under a doctor's care, and the doctor says he is doing as well as could be expected. Does the swelling of the ankles and the chest pain mean he's likely to have another attack? — Sam, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

Dear Sam: Cardiac symptoms such as those your father is experiencing following a myocardial infarction do not necessarily mean a decreased chance of survival, at least within the first five years after the attack. Researchers at the University of Utah College of Medicine studied almost 1,500 myocardial infarction patients after their discharge from the hospital. Those who died of another myocardial infarction during the five years following hospitalization had not necessarily had a higher number of cardiac symptoms; furthermore, those who did report more symptoms did not necessarily die of another infarction.

The death rate among these patients was highest shortly after discharge from the hospital; with the passage of time, the likelihood of a patient's dying from a repeat attack tended to decrease.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Thai princess is betrothed to her former bodyguard

BANGKOK, Thailand — Thailand's Princess Chulabhorn, 24, youngest daughter of the 200-year-old Chakri Dynasty, Thursday became engaged to a commoner who once served as her bodyguard.

In a fairy tale rite broadcast on Thai television, military pilot Virayuth Didyasarin, 26, slipped a diamond ring on the princess' finger at 11:39 a.m. Thai time, the moment deemed auspicious by court astrologers.

The princess, who wore a pale pink tight-fitting classical Thai costume, will retain her royal title by special dispensation of her father, King Bhumipol Adulyadej, 53.

Her fiance was dashing in the immaculate white ceremonial uniform of the Royal Thai Air Force. Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda formally asked for royal permission for the couple to wed.

Princess Chulabhorn's eldest sister, 30-year-old Ubol Ratana, sent shock waves through the kingdom when she cast off any claim to the throne in 1972 to marry an engineer from California. There are two other royal children, Crown Prince Vajiralongkorn and Princess Maha Chakri Sirindhorn.

Novel 'Lord of the Flies' not banned in S.D. school

ONIDA, S.D. (AP) — British author William Golding's classic novel "Lord of the Flies," called a cause of "revulsion, depression and sadistic thinking" by a woman who tried to get it banned at the local high school, will remain in classroom use here.

In a unanimous vote Monday night, the Sully Buttes School Board rejected complaints by Joy Cook, a teacher at a private religious academy, whose 17-year-old daughter is in an 11th-grade class studying the work. The public school has 148 students.

The daughter had been allowed to stay in the hall outside the classroom while the book was studied in class.

Superintendent Donald Rykhhus said no one else complained about the 1954 novel, which is about young boys who get stranded on a desert island and set up their own society, only to destroy it in violent clashes. It has sold 7 million copies.

The school board voted in March to remove the novel "Run, Shelley, Run," from its library in response to complaints by one of the district's 1,200 residents. The board called it "vulgar" and not "conducive to building good moral character in our students."

But Golding's book "is ten and a challenge to a modern-day literary students to read," said classic, it was well-writ- Principal Coleta Jones.

Brothers believes old values not outdated

By GORDY HOLT
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Dr. Joyce Brothers got her first taste of national attention 20 years ago while winning $134,000 on the television quiz show, The $64,000 Question.

Her topic was boxing.

To prepare, she boned up the old fashioned way; she memorized 20 volumes of a boxing encyclopedia.

Brothers still is handing out the answers.

And she still is doing it the old-fashioned way.

In books, through appearances, and in her daily newspaper column, the proponent of popular psychology not only hands out advice on a myriad of topics, she does it without being a stuffed shirt.

As the keynote speaker at the national convention of the National Association of Homes for Children recently, Brothers told her audience that old values are not outdated — and for good reason: People still need love and a feeling of worth. No matter what the format, the concept of family remains best suited to meet those needs.

The family, she says, is not disintegrating. In fact, she contends, even in light of present divorce statistics, "it's becoming stronger."

People are learning, she said, that divorce brings as many problems as it does solutions. Children of divorce initially may feel a sense of relief that the bickering has ended. Later, this sense deteriorates, the hurt festers and continues, and no matter what eventually happens, "one day that child will wake up having dreamed the magic hope that the family will have healed."

The late anthropologist, Dr. Margaret Mead, Brothers said, predicted what she called "cluster communities," groups still operating along the lines of husband, wife, children, but living with a common interest, be it the neighborhood swimming pool, the tennis court, a business, or a university.

Such communities, she said, provide a healthy focus for interfamily relationships. Kids won't want to run away; if they do, it won't be running away as much as it will be "going to live with friends while the heat dies down."

This is not the commune concept, either, she said. Communes are just as prone — if not more so — to the problems suffered by what has become known as the nuclear family — mom, pop, and the kids.

Kathy Larson of Orlando, Florida, 5 feet 4 inches tall, holds her 14-pound, 13-ounce son, Edward William Larson, Thursday. The hefty baby broke all weight records at Orlando's Florida Hospital Oct. 9 after his delivery by Caesarian section.

Baby boy is largest in hospital's history

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Six-day-old Edward William Larson fits snugly into clothes made for 6-month-old babies.

The Larson baby weighed in at 14 pounds, 13 ounces when he was born by Caesarean section Oct. 9, breaking all records at Florida Hospital in Orlando.

Edward's mother, Kathy Larson, who is just 5 feet, 4 inches tall, underwent extensive tests at the hospital to convince doctors she wasn't carrying twins.

Scientist testing guinea pigs as food

PROVO, Utah (AP) — A scientist trying to put more food on South American tables is looking for a way to produce a bigger, tastier guinea pig.

Guinea pigs born in this country generally have only two lines of work to go into: research or captivity in the home of a small child. But in rural areas of several countries in Latin America, the tailless rodents are a major source of food, said N. Paul Johnston, a Brigham Young University professor of animal science.

He said a prominent Peruvian cathedral has a painting of the Last Supper in which Jesus is eating a guinea pig.

"We asked some of the people which they preferred to eat, chicken, rabbit or guinea pig," Johnston said of his research in Peru. "They almost all said they preferred guinea pig."

Guinea pigs don't bite, and they're generally clean and free of disease, he said.

Johnston wants to find a way to increase guinea pig production for South American consumers, but little is known about the animals' nutritional needs.

In 1979 Johnston brought 20 Peruvian guinea pigs to the United States to study ways to increase their size, nutritional value and rate of reproduction. He said guinea pigs in South America tend to be smaller than their American counterparts.

"I needed some from that area because the ones here are so distantly related genetically that they would not closely parallel the situation there," he said.

For research purposes, the animals are divided into two groups, he said. One group is fed a diet comparable to the food guinea pigs eat in South America. With the other group, Johnston tries different diets.

So far, the animals have responded well to alfalfa, but grains are also being tried, he said.

Leon E. Orme, chairman of the Brigham Young department of animal science, said Thursday the guinea pig research has been under way for more than a year and a half on the Provo campus.

Tenement fire kills eight

PATERSON, N.J. (AP) — A woman apparently marked for revenge by a spurned lover escaped unharmed from an arson at her tenement and a neighboring building that killed eight people and left 11 others missing, authorities said.

Firefighters continued to search for the missing, using a crane to remove the rubble.

"We hope we don't find any more (bodies), but it's possible," said Assistant Fire Chief Albert Micozzi.

Six bodies, apparently all from the same family, were found in a third-floor apartment, police said. More than two dozen people were injured. One hundred residents of the tenements were made homeless by the Thursday morning blaze and were forced to take shelter in hotels or the homes of relatives.

"There are people walking around basically looking like they don't believe it really happened, or just out of it," said Dewain Albritton, director of emergency services for the Passaic County branch of the American Red Cross.

"When everything you've ever had is up in smoke, you're drawn out," he said.

Leonides Garcia, 37, was charged with setting the blaze at the duplex and with eight counts of homicide, police said. Garcia was being held on $100,000 bail at the Passaic County Jail, said Ethel Hawryschuk, deputy clerk of the Paterson Municipal Court.

Paterson police detective Lt. Philip Perone said Mercedes Lozano, who ordered Garcia away from her apartment Wednesday night, was not harmed in the fire. Her five children also escaped serious injury.

Fire Chief Harold J. Kane said witnesses saw Garcia carrying a can of gasoline outside the tenement shortly before the fire broke out. He also said Garcia had gasoline on his tennis shoes when he was arrested at his home, about a block away from the fire.

Canada's Last Silver Dollar

Available Only Until Midnight Tonight

October 1981, Philadelphia. IMM announced today that it is releasing for sale a small cache of recently discovered Canadian "Flying Goose" legal tender silver coins. Silver dollars today happen to be the most collected type of coin in the world. However, due to the unstable price of silver bullion, one government after another has discontinued their minting. This historic Canadian "Flying Goose" silver dollar—struck in .800 fine silver and measuring a large 36mm—was issued for just one year. Its design is therefore extremely rare. Moreover, it is Canada's last silver dollar struck for circulation.

International Monetary Mint is offering these brilliant uncirculated "Flying Goose" silver dollars at the special investor opportunity price of only $25 each. You may never have a better opportunity to own rare Canadian silver dollars. Investors who respond from this publication by midnight, tonight, may purchase from 1 to 10 individual coins at this price. Because of the extremely limited number available, orders will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis with a strict limit of 10 coins per customer.

Important: Collectors are just now beginning to realize that upwards of 80 percent of Canadian silver dollars have been melted down for bullion during the last few years. And since they are vastly more scarce and yet, surprisingly, more economical than comparable U.S. issues, Canadian silver dollars have begun to experience marked rises in value. According to one numismatic expert "Canadian silver dollars are at the stage U.S. silver dollars were a decade ago—but many, many, times rarer, the best grades are going fast."

All 1967 "Flying Goose" silver dollars from this cache are Brilliant Uncirculated and are accompanied by a certificate of authenticity to that effect. Coins classified "Brilliant Uncirculated" have never been placed in general circulation and are still in mint state condition. To qualify for this offering, call Lee Collins toll free at 1-800-345-8502, Dept. CD1687. Orders will be accepted on major credit cards only. An additional $2.75 is requested to cover insurance, postage and special handling per order. If not satisfied, you may return your Canadian silver dollars in the original condition within 30 days for a full refund.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, October 17

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Those born on this date are fair-minded, hard working and interested in reform. In the year ahead, the employment picture takes a decided turn for the better. Although rising costs can cause worries, your income stays ahead of expenses. Count on loved ones to give you valuable support when you need it most. Share the good things that happen to you with those closest to your heart. Romance is exhilarating, but an early marriage could prove disastrous. Go slow! Your intellectual interests are about to bring you into contact with those who share your goals and dreams.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Loved one may be able to clear up a mystery that has had you curious for weeks. The financial picture brightens. Postpone travel, and enjoy a relaxing weekend at home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Thank your lucky stars for what you already have! Find a quiet place to recharge your batteries this weekend. A romantic interlude could lead you in the wrong direction.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You cannot afford to have any illusions about your financial standing. You may be using your credit cards too freely. Develop a realistic budget and stick to it!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Community or club activities hold special appeal now. Tend to routine chores early in the day. A social outing could tax your budget. Agree in advance to share expenses.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take advantage of the peaceful and quiet atmosphere at home. Loved ones will be sympathetic to your needs. Make plans for a family-oriented evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Checks may not arrive on time, but help is available from an unexpected quarter. Exercise can be an excellent way to let off steam. Share good news with mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A trip to distant shores holds great appeal for young-at-heart. Friendship enjoys more favorable influences than romance right now. Letter could include a surprising invitation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Out-of town visits are featured for those who are single. Encourage family members to economize by setting a good example. Self-improvement projects are rewarding now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This could be a glamorous day. Member of opposite sex will have a lot to say about changes in your lifestyle. A sense of humor leads to happy romance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may be confusing fantasy with with reality. Be adventuresome, but do not gamble with money you cannot afford to lose. Changes will benefit all concerned. Be willing to compromise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be patient with those who seem to have lost interest. They may be trying to work out some things that you do not know about. Pursue new interests.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be sure to spend some time alone with mate this weekend. A child may be in need of help but not know how to ask for it. Be observant.

Because of the one-suited nature of his hand, North correctly entered the fray with a simple overcall. When South introduced his suit freely, North showed his good hand with a jump and South ventured on to game.

West did not want to lead from his minor tenaces or into dummy's suit, so he attacked with a trump. Declarer won in dummy and led a heart to the ten. West held up, but won the heart continuation. He shifted to a club. East won the ace and continued clubs, ruffed by South.

Declarer cashed the queen of spades, and had both defenders followed, that would have ended matters. But when West showed out, declarer could make little use of dummy's long hearts because East ruffed the fourth round of the suit. Declarer's only tricks were five trumps, two hearts and the ace of diamonds—down two.

Declarer blew the hand at trick one. Had he taken the time to work out the consequences of a 4-1 trump division, he might have come up with the successful countermeasure.

South should win the first trick in his hand and knock out the ace of hearts. Now South can ruff the second club and cross to dummy with the king of trumps. If both defenders follow, declarer draws the last trump and claims the balance.

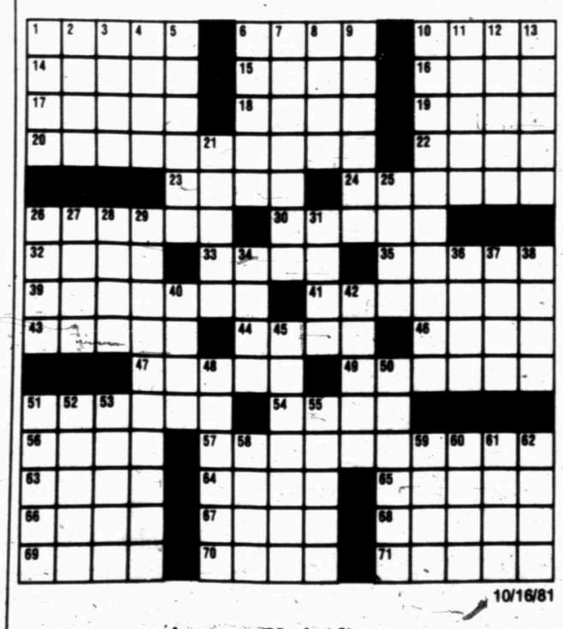

When East turns up with four trumps, declarer abandons trumps and starts to run hearts. East can ruff whenever he wishes, but South simply overruffs, reenters dummy with the ace of trumps, drawing East's last trump in the process, and cashes the rest of the hearts. Declarer comes to four trump tricks and an overruff, four hearts and the ace of diamonds.

Polish military service extended for economic crisis

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland today extended the military service of army recruits for two months to battle the economic crisis, and Communist Party chief Stanislaw Kania accused Solidarity of whipping up "new conflicts" in the coal fields with the aim of seizing power.

The regime acted as nearly 12,000 women textile workers occupied mills for the fourth day to protest food shortages, a factory that supplies conveyor belts to the mines shut down and coal miners cut production further in a bid to get more pay.

The extension of military service affected draftees scheduled to get out of the army this month. The normal term of army service for draftees is two years.

"The complicated internal situation, including the drastically deepening economic difficulties of Poland, requires increased involvement of the army in assisting the national economy," the government communique said.

Soldiers already are working in the mines, have begun helping the government halt food market profiteering by patrolling open markets, and have been working with regular police to patrol cities and roads.

Kania launched his attack on the independent union at the party's Central Committee meeting, saying the "right-wing trend of Solidarity is blocking all government actions aimed at coming out of the crisis." Kania's remarks at the meeting were carried by PAP, the official news agency.

Kania said Solidarity was preventing a badly-needed boost in coal production and halting factory work as winter was coming on.

Poland is a major coal producer and depends on the mineral for fuel and earning hard currency through exports. But miners have refused to work the so-called "Free Saturdays" won in strikes last year despite government bonus offers, and production has plummeted from an original target of 175 million tons to an expected 164 million tons this year.

Quake shakes Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A major earthquake shook central Chile early today, but no damage or casualties were reported.

The minute-long quake just after midnight drove people into the streets of Santiago, the capital, and reportedly caused brief power and telephone service disruptions in some interior cities.

The tremor struck at 12:27 a.m. — 11:27 p.m. EDT Thursday — shaking an area from La Serena, 300 miles north of Santiago, to Concepcion, 300 miles to the south.

The U.S. National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., said the tremor measured 7.2 on the Richter scale and was centered beneath the Pacific about 75 miles northwest of Valparaiso.

Chile is a mountainous, quake-prone nation on the southwest coast of Latin American. The last major quake to hit the country was on May 10, 1975, when a tremor measuring 7.7 on the Richter scale shook the nation's center. No deaths were reported then.

Chile has been devastated by several killer quakes measuring over 8 on the Richter scale this century, including one of 8.3 on Jan. 25, 1939, that killed about 28,000 people; another of 8.6 on Aug. 17, 1906, that killed some 20,000, and one measuring 8.3 that killed 4,000 to 5,000 on May 22, 1960.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

A quake with a Richter reading of 7 is classified as a major quake, capable of causing widespread damage.

The San Francisco earthquake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the scale.

Quake hits Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — An earthquake of "moderate intensity" shook the northern Philippines today, toppling bric-a-brac in some areas but otherwise causing no serious damage or casualties, the geophysical observatory here said.

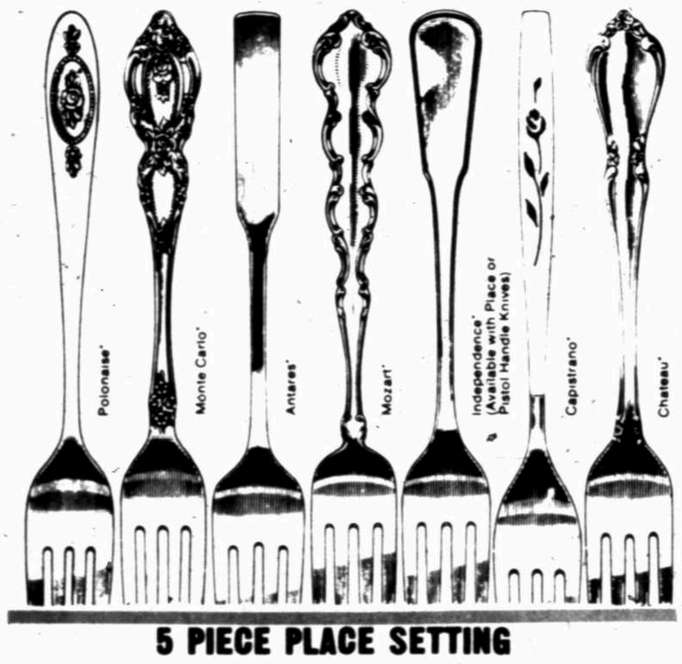

The quake, which occurred at 4:48 a.m — 6:40 p.m. EDT Thursday — was centered off the the main island of Luzon, about 337 miles north of Manila, seismologists said.

They said the tremor was felt strongest on Calayan Island, where it measured 5 on the 9-point Rossi-Forel scale of earthquake intensity.

Vickie Daniel, on trial for murder in the slaying of her husband Price Daniel Jr., former speaker of the Texas House of Representatives, heads for the courtroom with her attorney, Jack Zimmerman. The prosecution opened its testimony Wednesday and continued Thursday.

Bexar County Sheriff's officer arrested for soliciting bribes

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The Bexar County Sheriff's officer in charge of inspecting massage parlors has been arrested on federal charges of soliciting bribes in exchange for protection of prostitution operations.

Thursday's arrest of Lt. Thomas Anthony Chavana was the first resulting from an investigation into allegations that some deputies squeezed operators of massage parlors, gambling halls and cockfight righs for payoffs.

Chavana, 42, was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Jamie Boyd late Thursday and posted $35,000 bond on the federal charge of soliciting a bribe.

Sheriff Joe Neaves, who appointed Chavana to keep watch on the massage parlors, said he was not aware of the FBI investigation until notified Thursday by Agent-in-Charge Jack Lawn.

"I'm glad to see someone working on this. If someone is doing something no good here, then they're going to have to take the medicine," Neaves said after he was told about the investigation.

Chavana's arrest came as the Bexar County district attorney's office revealed that 10 cases stemming from the investigation would be presented to the county grand jury this month.

Col. James Adams, director of the Department of Public Safety, also confirmed Thursday that his agency has been investigating alleged prostitution activity in the state's third most populous county.

Lawn said that Chavana, a 16-year veteran of the sheriff's department, allegedly solicited and received bribes from massage parlors in return for protection from prostitution arrests.

Charles Conaway, first assistant district attorney, said the investigation into the sheriff's department was being conducted by several law enforcement agencies, including the DPS and Texas Rangers, and was continuing.

The San Antonio Light, in a copyright story preceding Chavana's arrest, quoted sources as saying FBI agents on Sept. 1 made a videotape of the sheriff's officer receiving a $400 payoff and promising a south Bexar County massage parlor operator that her protection was "all taken care of, all the way to the top."

Neaves said he lacked sufficient money and personnel to adquately monitor the massage parlor operations that during recent years have opened outside San Antonio's city limits because of a tough city ordinance.

The arrest also marked the second law enforcement scandal here this year. Earlier, seven police department employees were charged with selling narcotics.

Prosecutors accrue physical evidence in Vickie Daniel case

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — Prosecutors faced a continuing evidentiary challenge today in their bid to prove Vickie Daniel intentionally killed her husband, former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel Jr.

State's attorneys overrode vigorous defense objections Thursday and hammered into the record several items of physical evidence critical to their case.

Marvin Powell, a former sheriff's investigator and the state's fifth witness, was to return to the stand today to open the third day of testimony.

Mrs. Daniel, 34, is accused of killing her husband last January during a violent argument at their Liberty ranch home.

According to previous testimony, Mrs. Daniel admitted shooting her husband but said the fatal shot discharged accidentally.

She said she recalled firing a warning but could not remember a second shot.

The prosecution introduced the death weapon into evidence Thursday and through Powell tried to show the unlikelihood that the bolt action .22-caliber rifle would discharge accidentally.

Detective John Stapleton, a sheriff's investigator who preceded Powell as a witness, said he did not make an arrest at the shooting scene because he "had no suspect."

"Initially," he said, "I was under the impression it was an accidental shooting.

Asked when he changed his mind, he said: "When I found the two shell casings."

"In your mind," asked prosecutor Kevin Settle, "was finding two spent shell casings consistent with an accidental shooting?"

"No sir," he replied.

A single .22-caliber bullet severed Daniels' main artery and he bled to death.

The state also wove into evidence the torn red shirt and blue jeans Daniel wore when killed and a graphic color photograph of the blood-covered body.

Visiting State District Judge Leonard Giblin overruled defense objections that the photo served no purpose other than to "inflame the minds of the jurors."

Soldier who the U.S. Army 'forgot' faces desertion charges

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Terry Combs says he went home after boot camp 10 years ago and the Army told him to "stay put" because it had lost his records. So he did.

This year, with the help of his Army photograph and a congressman's office, he finally got the Army to remember him — and it called him a "deserter" and ordered him to the nearest military installation.

He went to Fort Bragg, but now he says he has left without permission because he can't afford to lose his job in the civilian world.

A Fort Bragg spokesman said Combs, of Kannapolis, failed to show up for formation last Tuesday, adding that Combs' file has been placed on the inactive list until he returns. The Army said there are no plans to search for him.

Combs, found Thursday at the restaurant where he works, told a reporter he left the base without permission after he was threatened with legal action by a loan company for not making payments. He said he plans to return to the base on Monday, after he makes enough money to pay up his loans.

"I've got bills to pay...car payments, insurance, $200 a month for child support," Combs said.

Combs said he signed up in 1971 for a two-year hitch in the Army. He completed basic and advanced training at Fort Jackson in Columbia, S.C., went home to Kannapolis on 22 days' leave and waited for his orders, which never came.

After his leave ended and no orders arrived, Combs said he contacted officals at Fort Jackson and was told his records had been lost and to "stay put."

Two years later Combs returned to Fort Jackson and talked to an Army lawyer, who conducted a search for his records, as did a sergeant in an AWOL apprehension unit. No records were found, Combs said, and he went home.

"Then about two years ago, I began working again to get it straightened out," Combs said.

He contacted U.S. Rep. Bill Hefner in Kannapolis on Sept. 11, 1980, office manager Jenny Jochems recalled Wednesday.

She said she contacted the Department of the Army in Washington and the Army's personnel center in St. Louis, with no luck. But in July, Combs took his Army photograph to Hefner's office, and Ms. Jochems sent a photocopy of it to the Department of the Army.

The response was quick.

Garner's back in the saddle, hanging on for winter premiere

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — James Garner is back in the saddle — and this time he's going to be more careful.

Garner returned to the set of "Maverick" at Warner Brothers Studio Thursday to resume filming of the new fall television series that won't have its premiere until winter. That's because the 53-year-old actor fell off a mechanical horse during filming six weeks ago and broke some ribs.

"He's in pretty good shape. Actually, he came back yesterday and was on a horse riding around," Warner Brothers spokesman Jack Casey said Thursday. Garner will promably have to board the mechanical horse again in the future, he said.

The two-hour first show in the remake of Garner's successful series from the 1950s and 1960s is expected to be completed by Nov. 27 and broadcast on Dec. 1 on NBC-TV.

CHICAGO (AP) — Former Chicago Bear linebacker Dick Butkus is the first-round draft choice of the Republican Party to run for congress in a district which ecompasses several suburbs south of Chicago.

Butkus

Butkus said Thursday he had changed his mind from last week, when he flatly rejected the party's suggestion he run against Rep. Marty Russo, D-Ill.

"The more I thought about it, why not me?" Butkus said during an interview on Chicago radio station WGN.

James McAvoy, a field representative for the National Republican Congressional Committee, said Butkus "wants to bide his time for three or four weeks."

Butkus said he would decide whether to run after congressional districts are redrawn because there is a possibility that the district represented by Russo may be eliminated.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The rich, Midwestern baritone that prodded attorneys from the bench of the U.S. Supreme Court now is reading case history for blind law students.

Retired Justice Potter Stewart, who sat on the high court for 23 years, has volunteered as a reader at the Washington chapter of the non-profit Recording for the Blind, Inc.

Stewart must read not only the texts of the various cases, but also the detailed footnotes in tiny print. He recorded a dozen pages of a 255-page text "The Rights of Aliens" on Thursday for William Poyner, a second-year student at Antioch Law School.

Stewart, 66, says the sessions are challenging but rewarding. He retired from the bench July 3, and said the reading project was one of the things he had planned to pursue.

Klugman

STUDIO CITY, Calif. (AP) — Two stars from television's "Hill Street Blues" and actor Jack Klugman of "Quincy" took to the streets to protest the sale of so-called "look-alike drugs."

The pills look like popular stimulants or depressants but can be bought freely because they are non-narcotic and do not require a prescription.

"It's so stupid, so incredibly thoughtless — playing games and pretending to be taking real drugs," said Daniel J. Travanti of "Hill Street Blues" during the demonstration Wednesday night outside the newly opened Over-the-Counter Drug Store.

"Anyone who promotes that is a fool," said Travanti, a reformed alcoholic.

"What bothers me is that they (salesmen of phony drugs) make it awfully appealing to get high," said actress Veronica Hamel, also from the series.

Klugman, who plays the medical examiner on "Quincy," urged that the drugs be outlawed in California.

The look-alikes are made from a combination of caffeine and two anti-hystamines known as ephedrine and phenylpropanolamine, ingredients usually associated with over-the-counter diet medicines.

16-year-old girl dies after fall at Stones concert

SEATTLE (AP) — A 16-year-old girl died Thursday night after falling from a ramp outside the Kingdome where 72,000 fans were gathered for a concert by the Rolling Stones.

Authorities said the teen-ager, identified as Pamela Lynn Melville of Renton, Wash., fell about 50 feet from an upper-level ramp to a lower ramp of the domed stadium, which has exterior walkways.

"To the best of our knowledge, she just leaned over too far backwards and lost her balance and fell," said Don Cameron, a Kingdome security officer. "It was just a tragic accident. There is no sign of foul play."

Tina Mankowski, a Harborview Medical Center spokeswoman, said the girl died during surgery about an hour after she was admitted. "She came in with some really bad head injuries," Ms. Mankowski said.

The accident occurred before the rock group's second performance in Seattle. The first concert, Wednesday night, also packed in a capacity crowd of 72,000 fans.

Police conducted patdown searches and confiscated drugs throughout the day Thursday as fans enthusiastically shouted and shoved their way to seats for the concert of one of the last surviving superstar rock groups of the '60s.

"It wasn't an ugly crowd, let's put it that way," security Sgt. Jim Johnson said Thursday. "It's a younger crowd. There were a lot more younger people in the front of the line than there were last night."

The concert began at 3 p.m. but three hours passed before the Rolling Stones appeared on stage.

Ticket holders began lining up outside the Kingdome for Thursday afternoon's concert during the performance Wednesday night.

Odessan named coordinator for 1982 historical seminar

ODESSA — Glenda Morgan, field consultant for the museum and field services department of the Texas Historical Commission, has been named the new resident coordinator for the 24th annual Seminar for Historical Administration in Williamsburg, Va., in May and June of 1982.

Morgan, whose office is housed in The University of Texas of the Permian Basin dean's suite, is a UTPB alumnus who works with 115 county historical commissions and consults with 260 museums throughout West Texas. She is one of three museum consultants in the Texas Historical Commission who service county historical commissions and museums throughout the state. Morgan said the nationally acclaimed seminar in Williamsburg is designed to provide an intensive overview of historical administration for midmanagement level staff members employed by historical societies, museums, historic sites and parks and restoration and preservation projects.

She will act as resident faculty member and chief liaison officer with sponsoring agencies. Other duties will include developing and assigning students projects, developing curriculum and preparing course materials and local arrangements in Colonial Williamsburg.

The seminar is sponsored by the National Trust for Historic Preservation, Colonial Williamsburg, American Association for State and Local History and the American Association of Museums.

Houston theaters to show 'Caligula' despite objections

HOUSTON (AP) — Five theaters owned by American Multi-Cinema will show the movie "Caligula" as scheduled despite Mayor Jim McConn's letter objecting to the film, the district supervisor of the theater company says.

"We were very, very surprised it turned out to be this controversial," Rick King said Thursday after watching the movie. "The viewing confirmed my view that it is a legitimate 'R' film. It doesn't differ from any other R-rated film being shown in the city."

City council members generally expressed disapproval of the film when representatives of the groups Morality in Media and Citizens Against Pornography attended the council's Wednesday meeting to object to the movie.

King said objections to the film stem from confusion of the R-rated version with an earlier X-rated one.

"The film has undergone extensive editing," he said.

McConn sent his letter after the Wednesday meeting.

"A great number of citizens are offended by the reputed nature and content of this film and have objected most strenuously to it being shown here," he wrote. "It is of great concern that, in multiple theaters such as yours, it is virtually impossible to prevent underaged patrons from moving from one theater to another."

King said he knew of no protests against the film in other cities.

Korchnoi near win

MERANO, Italy (AP) — Challenger Viktor Korchnoi appeared on the verge of winning his first game today in his title series against world chess champion Anatoly Karpov after Karpov blundered just before the game was adjourned Thursday.

"I think it's a win for Korchnoi," Soviet exile grandmaster Lev Alburt said after the game was adjourned on the 41st move. The match, sixth of the series, is scheduled to resume at 5 p.m. — noon EDT — in this northern Italian resort.

Experts said Karpov, the star of Soviet chess, overlooked a perfect opportunity on the 40th move to put his knight in a position where it could later threaten Korchnoi's queen, rook and bishop. Korchnoi sealed his 41st move when the game was suspended.

Womens' killer has an 18-month head start

MOSES LAKE, Wash. (AP) — A shroud of ash from the eruption of Mount St. Helens hid the bodies of two young women for a year and a half after they were murdered, giving their killer a long head start to flee authorities.

The bodies of hitchhikers Marsha Ann Weatter, 18, and Katherine Jean Allen, 20, each with one gunshot wound, were found by pheasant hunters Saturday and authorities have been scrambling ever since to try to pick up the cold trail of the killer. A special police task force has been formed to look for clues.

"Ash being over the bodies no doubt helped cover them up. Maybe 3 inches (of ash) fell along there," said Larry Boyd, chief criminal deputy sheriff in Grant County.

"It's kind of ironic, the volcano covered up some terrible incident," he said.

The layer of ash, he said, prevented birds or small animals from disturbing the remains until they were discovered by the hunters.

The bodies of the women — both from Fairbanks, Alaska — were clothed and lay side by side in a field of grass and sagebrush 150 yards north of Interstate 90 and 10 miles west of Moses Lake, Boyd said.

The ash had compacted to 1½ inches and some had been washed away by rain. Authorities couldn't tell whether the women were shot in the field or killed elsewhere, Boyd said.

Chief Deputy Ken Kernan said an autopsy showed each body had been shot once, but he declined to say where the bullets struck the bodies. He said tests were being made to determine if the women were sexually molested.

There was no ash beneath the bodies and authorities believe the women were killed about six weeks before the May 18 eruption of Mount St. Helens, which spread ash several inches deep on parts of eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

The women's backpacks were found near Yakima in July 1980, but until the discovery of the bodies, there were no other clues to their disappearance.

Grant County authorities said Thursday a five-member team was formed to investigate the killings.

It was "a callous and cold-blooded and senseless act," Kernan said. "We're compiling a nationwide teletype to all police agencies and circulating a flyer with the girls' pictures on it."

The mother of one of the women said that until the bodies were found, she had hoped the two were being held captive somewhere and would someday be set free.

"I never gave up hope," said Jean Weatter of Fairbanks, Alaska.

Mrs. Weatter said the young women were hitchhiking around the lower 48 states before returning to Alaska. They were on the final leg of their trip, from Missoula, Mont., to Seattle, when they disappeared sometime after March 28, she said.

Mrs. Weatter said a private detective hired by the families tracked the women to a cafe in Ritzville, west of Spokane. Workers at the cafe said the women had tried all night to line up a ride with truckers to the West Coast. The trail ran out at Ritzville.

Authorities said Jan Bowman of Fairbanks, Ms. Allen's mother, was in Moses Lake on Wednesday, viewed the site where the bodies were found and was interviewed by police.

The two women had planned to fly home from Seattle to Fairbanks only a few days after leaving Montana.

"They had their tickets and everything," Mrs. Weatter said.

Rifle stock may link Harrelson to Wood death, FBI agent says

DALLAS (AP) — The wooden stock of a rifle found by two boys may be linked to the assassination of U.S. District Juge John H. Wood Jr, a FBI agent has testified.

FBI Special Agent Ronald Iden testified Thursday at a pre-trial hearing for Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, who is charged with making a false statement on a firearms purchase application.

Iden said the government believes the rifle she allegedly purchased 12 days before the judge's slaying is "relevant" to the Wood investigation.

Mrs. Harrelson is married to convicted hit man Charles V. Harrelson, who has been identified by federal authorities as a prime target of the Wood investigation. He is being held in Houston on charges unrelated to the Wood slaying.

Mrs. Harrelson's attorney moved for dismissal of the firearms charge, arguing it is based on testimony before a grand jury at a time when she was immune from prosecution.

However, FBI agents testified that the charge stemmed from information gathered independently of the grand jury testimony.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders did not rule on the dismissal motion, but told attorneys to file legal briefs by next Wednesday.

Iden said agents searched El Paso attorney Joe Chagra's home last February and found a sketch that appeared to be a map showing the location of a weapon.

Joe Chagra is the brother of convicted drug trafficker Jimmy Chagra.

Authorities have said Jimmy Chagra, who had been scheduled for trial before Wood, is suspected of hiring Harrelson to kill the judge.

Iden said agents searched an area north of Highway 40 east of Dallas in March looking for the gun, but found nothing. But on April 22, Iden testified, two brothers from Forney turned over to the FBI a rifle stock they had found about a quarter mile from the search site.

The wooden stock was sent to the FBI's crime lab in Washington, D.C. where researchers determined it came from a Weatherby Mark V rifle.

Agents were told by the gun manufacturer that the stock had to have come from a Mark V rifle produced after March 1977, Iden said.

Provided with hundreds of serial numbers, Iden said, investigators began tracing them to dealers in Nevada and Texas.

FBI Special Agent Paul Pullen testified he contacted a dozen dealers in the Dallas area, one of them Hunter-Bradlee, a sporting goods store in a fashionable Dallas shopping center.

A search of the store's records turned up an application signed "Faye L. King." When the driver's license number recorded on the application didn't match up with the name, Iden said, the FBI lab traced the handwriting and fingerprints on the application to Mrs. Harrelson.

Mrs. Harrelson, who was indicted Sept. 1, is scheduled to stand trial on the firearms charge November 9.

Price supports survive debate

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Proposed price supports for the nation's major commodities are surviving House debate, even as critics of the programs score significant victories in killing sugar subsidies and ending special treatment for peanut growers.

With critics claiming President Reagan's silent support, the House voted Thursday to deny resumption of price-support loans for sugar and to abolish a separate peanut subsidy system restricted to a few producers.

Next up, when the House resumes debate next week on the multibillion-dollar, four-year farm bill, is the tobacco program.

"I think the battle is lost for agriculture programs of this nature," says Rep. Peter Peyser, D-N.Y., who claimed sugar price supports would cost consumers and taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

The farm coalition in the House had shown so much strength in killing Reagan's cuts in dairy price supports that Rep. Paul Findley, R-Ill., his chief farm bill ally in the House, dropped plans to challenge wheat, feed grains, rice and cotton price supports which the president says are excessive.

The survival of House support programs at levels much higher than the ones Reagan forced through the Senate last month and the House decisions on peanuts and sugar make the two versions of the new farm bill so diverse that the new law must be written in a conference of just a few House and Senate members.

"The best hope for the administration is in House-Senate conference," Findley conceded after the costly grain, cotton and dairy support programs could not be pared down.

"But now that the forces of reform have won a couple of battles in sugar and peanuts, I see these as developments to the president's advantage," Findley said.

Reagan's budget director, David A. Stockman, says the House farm bill may exceed spending limits through 1985 by as much as $10 billion.

The House rejected the peanut program by a 250-159 vote. The sugar program was defeated 213-190.

Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., said the large Democratic vote against the traditionally southern commodities, especially peanuts, might have been a slap at Southern House Democrats. Last summer, more than two dozen of them bolted the party to support Reagan's budget cuts in return for what some said were guarantees that the president would support their commodities.

Onion money buys South Louisianian's oil patch

By ART HARRIS
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

VENTRESS, La. — Felman Battley, a soft-spoken black man, has scratched out a living picking cotton and pecans for most of his 59 years in Pointe Coupee Parish, fattening pigs and raising vegetables out back to supplement what the family buys on credit at the grocery store up the road.

Most years, he was lucky to make $2,500.

Soon, Battley expects to pay cash for a new Ford, build "a nice comfortable home," give his daughter, Felicia, enough money so she won't have to work her way through college at Louisiana State University, and travel first class to Europe with his wife, Ide. Two of Battley's sisters are itching to go to Las Vegas.

"We have an oil well in the back yard," Battley says with a grin.

Any day now, the mail carrier will deliver the family's first royalty check from an oil and natural gas well pumping furiously on the Battley property at the rate of 5.5 million cubic feet of gas and 288 barrels of oil a day. The family's take — to be divided equally among Battley, his 87-year-old mother, Celestine, nine brothers and sisters — comes to $20,000 a month.

"When I picked pecans and cotton, I was just getting by; wasn't enough to say nothing about," reflects Battley. From his mother's porch, he gazes off toward the gleaming oil and gas rig hissing in the cow pasture. His sharecropper father, Alex, bought the 34 acres with the proceeds from an onion crop in 1946. "Now," he says, "it looks like we're going to be rich."

The Battley well, and others like it, promise to bring enormous wealth to hundreds of poor blacks and blue-collar Cajuns in this moss-hung parish of live oak and sugar cane plantations, parking a former underclass in high cotton and forever altering the course of this Deep South community along the False River.

Their sudden good fortune amidst this parish (county) of 23,000 where one out of four people gets food stamps comes from the hottest spot in oil-rich Louisiana's Tuscaloosa Trend, a deep pocket of oil and natural gas that cuts a swath 20 miles wide across the backwoods and alligator bayous.

The first deep drilling rig hit gas on a cane plantation here in 1975. Since then, the cost of leasing a single acre has skyrocketed from $50 to as much as $40,000. Geologists project some 35 trillion cubic feet of natural gas reserves worth upward of $250 billion in the Tuscaloosa. The abundant pockets of natural gas attracted oilmen after prices were deregulated for gas found below 15,000 feet, where the rich strikes are being made in Pointe Coupee.

At $9 per 1,000 cubic feet, such gas will mean higher heating bills for the energy-starved Northeast this winter and huge profits for oil giants who risk as much as $10 million to sink a well.

Beneath the willows in small towns like Ventress and New Roads that dot the False River, the gas money has started working a slow transformation, clogging traffic with 18-wheelers weighted down under rigging and drill bits. Pharmacist Bubba Porciau aims to stop counting out prescriptions and start raising quarterhorses. Others have bought new cars and remodeled old homes.

But change takes time for people who still refer to an eight-mile lake separating New Roads from Ventress — the False River — as "the river," even though the Mississippi took another turn, or "cut point," back in 1722, giving Pointe Coupee its name. Harry Guidroz plans to keep driving a school bus and cutting the grass with his shirt off, in spite of six-figure royalties. New facts of life have been slow to sink in.

"If everything pans out — the (25-year) life expectancy of the gas fields, people's ability to manage the money — there will be more millionaires" per acre in Pointe Coupee parish than any place its size in the United States, predicts Calvin Thomas, senior geologist with the Louisiana Department of Natural Resources in Baton Rouge.

So far, the prosperity has been democratic, making both rich and poor landowners richer. State law and oil-patch custom dictate that anyone with an acre or two touching any 640-acre unit carved up by state conservation officials for drilling gets to share in the spoils.

Retired state senator J.E. Jumonville stands to become a Cajun potentate. At 61, Big Jim figures his net worth at perhaps $300 million. Portly and good-natured, he owns the 5,000-acre Ponderosa ranch, 20 racehorses, 2,200 head of prize cattle, three Rolls Royces (including one $600,000 limousine custom-made for actress Barbara Hutton) and three oil and gas wells. One well alone yields $1 million a month in royalty income.

Asked about a rumor that he dropped $1 million one recent night at the baccarat tables in Las Vegas, he replied: "I'll have to take the Fifth (Amendment) on that."

A self-made oil dredging magnate who bought his land in 1947 for $7.50 an acre, Big Jim says his new oil wells won't change his lifestyle. "There never was anything that I wanted that I didn't buy," he says. "Now, I'll just owe less money to fewer banks." He held forth from his gold-fixtured jacuzzi, a 375-pound servant scrubbing his back and between his toes.

"It's touched rich and poor, black and wnite — no one's been left out," says attorney John Wayne Jewell, 38, of New Roads. He has hit the lawbooks hard to protect unsophisticated landowners from savvy oilmen who, by all accounts, have snapped up more than a few mineral leases at bargain prices.

Anna Battley Cador, 65, leased her land to Chevron in 1973 for $15 an acre and one-sixth royalty, she says, a pittance at today's prices. She never consulted a lawyer. "Our mistake," she concedes now. Still, Cador and her husband, Joseph, a retired construction worker, stand to earn hundreds of thousands of dollars from a well near their tidy brick home and their share of the Battley well.

But tradition dies hard in the Deep South, especially for once-poor folks set in their ways. The Cadors still plant turnips and sweet potatoes out back "just the way our parents taught us," she says. "It's hard to shake loose and be extravagant, even though you know you can buy anything you want."

While race relations have been slow to evolve from plantation days here, some blacks newly rich report a recent thaw. "Now, white people look up to you if you're prospering," says Anna Cador. "Sales people treat you differently."

Most natives are still living on the edge of their American dream, in shock. One man left a royalty check for $150,000 on his dresser for days before asking the local banker what to do with it. Others don't trust banks, having never had enough money to use them. Among those are Cajuns who cashed their checks, plopped the money into safety depo it boxes and went rabbit hunting.

Henry Toussaint, 67, a retired black painter who never attended school, has been told his small house sits atop the oil patch. But he gets a far-off look in his eyes when asked what having money will mean to him. "I'm still scratching my head over what's happening," he says. "I been working for so long for nothing and still got nothing to show and can't get nothing. I just want to die happy with my stomach full up."

Financial investments are baffling to many overnight tycoons. New Roads bank trust officer Gary Smith beats his head against a wall trying to explain the benefit of tax-exempt bonds to help customers like Mayola Hebert, 64, outdo the tax man. All she knows about money, she says, is that "I've been squeezin' the bills so long, I made the eagle grin."

The parish, half black, half white, includes thousands who will miss out because their land sits on a dry hole or because, like Lula Overstreet, 65, they never had enough to buy into the game.

"When you ain't got it, you ain't got it," says Overstreet, a retired maid. She lives on $167 a month Social Security, renting a drafty wood shack for $25 a month. Behind her house, a gas well rises like the Empire State Building from a sugar cane field. "If they had land to sell, I didn't have money to buy it."

She has read all about the Battleys in Ebony magazine, even tuned them on her black-and-white TV on "That's Incredible!", but she neither begrudges their good luck nor envies them the reporters who descend on their yard to ask the same question: "How does it feel to be suddenly rich?"

U.S. solar superiority slipping

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The federal director of the Division of Solar Thermal Technology told a state advisory committee Thursday that three foreign nations are challenging the United States for supremacy in solar technology.

Gerald Braun said that although many thermal projects are located in California and New Mexico, the "intellectual and spiritual center of gravity in solar energy continues to be in Texas."

"Clearly, we are in a superior technical position," said Braun, "and are likely to remain so."

Braun told the Solar Advisory Committee, however, that the investment in solar energy around the world "is twice what it is in the United States."

He said France, Germany and Japan have been "competitive" in trying to market central receivers used in solar energy. "Within the next few months, we should know how we fared in this competition," he said.

Braun said the Reagan administration's reductions in financing solar energy projects presents a "managerial challenge to rescue the best of what's been going on — salvage the knowledge base."

He said the solar industry has lobbied "very, very hard" to keep federal tax credits for solar installations in effect.

He said, however, a proposal may be presented to curtail the credits, but the "debate could go on for years."

The advisory committee approved a resolution urging the continuation of federal solar tax credit.

It also approved a motion to develop guidelines for installing solar energy devices in new state buildings when it is economically feasible.

Texas and floods

For the second time this year flood waters have inundated Texas towns, cities and highways, leaving numerous Texans dead, injured or homeless. Damage estimates from the most recent flooding reached into the millions of dollars.

Earlier this year the flooding location was in and around Austin; in recent days flash floods have lashed Central Texas and southern Oklahoma, causing loss of life in some instances and forcing thousands of people from their homes.

There's little doubt that 1981 will be long remembered by Texans as a year of floods. Ironically, the state, traditionally plagued by dry conditions and water shortages, is soon to have the opportunity to vote on a constitutional amendment which addresses Texas' future water needs, including the possibility of water importation, and the need for additional flood control features.

The timing of the floods — and the upcoming Nov. 3 constitutional amendment vote — could not have been more complementary. Flooding will still be fresh on the minds of many people who recently may have suffered personal loss to nature's fury. Municipalities will be cognizant of the price tag of flooding.

Traditionally, constitutional amendments relating to water importation have not been well received by voters in some parts of the state. That could be changed next month as a direct result of the flooding this month and earlier this summer.

Fortunately, Midland and most other area communities fared better than cities to the south and east. The Tall City already has received an extraordinary amount of rainfall this year, as compared to the norm.

Midlanders rapidly sprang into action following the most recent flooding, helping those who suffered the fury of the rains. The Midland Salvation Army Disaster Team was in Abilene earlier this week assisting flood victims there.

Flooding always is a tragedy. But it can be prevented. No doubt Texans will want to fully acquaint themselves with the provisions of the Water Trust Fund constitutional amendment prior to the Nov. 3 vote.

Spain's great strides

This week's visit of Spain's King Juan Carlos was advertised as one of ceremony and not of substance, and in a strict sense that was true. In another sense it was one of Spain's finest hours, for it told the world of a nation that has achieved what at one time seemed like a mission impossible. It has shaken off the shackles of a dictatorship and adopted a democratic system that is firmly in control.

President Reagan recognized this historic feat, and did his best to proclaim it for all to hear. The president said to the monarch:

"In fully supporting that democracy, we consider Spain not only a strategic partner but a close friend."

Mr. Reagan was not merely mouthing routine courtesies to a visiting dignitary. He has pledged support for Spain's goals of membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the European Common Market.

Spain has come a long way since Francisco Franco held the Spaniards in thrall. That way has been made possible by a King Carlos who once was viewed as a Franco puppet and was expected to continue Franco's policies of suppressing freedom.

Instead, the young king became a champion of liberty for the people of Spain. President Reagan took note of this by saluting his visitor for "personal courage" last February in defeating a coup by military men who attempted to oust the democratic regime. The king proved then, as he has since, that he is deadly serious about keeping on the high road to popular government.

History is written when a president of a country as proud of our republic as we are can praise a ruling monarch for creating and preserving a similar form of government. Juan Carlos, king of his people and not just his castle, has earned the "integration" into the free world President Reagan has promised to help him achieve.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Evidence implicates high Egyptian officials

WASHINGTON — A scandal of extraordinary proportions involves Egypt's highest leaders and a group of former CIA and Pentagon officials in a backroom deal that gave a company with Palestinian connections the exclusive, multimillion-dollar contract to ship U.S. arms to Egypt.

Jack Anderson

As I reported in a previous column, there is strong reason to suspect that corrupt Egyptian officials profited personally from the scheme, and that some of the arms shipments were diverted to Palestinian forces and other groups opposed to the late President Anwar Sadat.

My associates Dale Van Atta and Indy Badhwar have conducted a major investigation into the affair. They interviewed knowledgeable Egyptian officials, military and intelligence sources and businessmen who were involved. They obtained dozens of secret cables and letters that confirm essential parts of the story.

Baksheesh and nepotism are nothing new in the Middle East, but it is rare indeed when corruption can be traced to the very highest levels of government. Yet the trail of evidence in the Egyptian arms deal points to the two most powerful men in Egypt today — the men who stood at either side of Sadat when he was assassinated, and who now effectively control the country.

The two are Sadat's successor, Hosni Mubarak, and Defense Minister Abu Ghazala.

On June 25, 1979, a few months after the secret arms shipping deal was cut, Mubarak was given a detailed report on the affair. The report included the information that the shipping firm, Tersam, was not qualified and was secretly controlled by a Palestinian businessman named Ali Shorafa, operating out of the United Arab Emirates, a hotbed of anti-Sadat Palestinian supporters.

A coded cable from Cairo on July 2, 1979, stated that "vice president in person is following this case closely." But a return cable the next day suggested it was unlikely Mubarak would pursue the scandal diligently, because "the vice president's brother-in-law is involved."

A week later, another cable from Cairo gave assurance: "V.P. taking matters very seriously. Brother-in-law (flown to) Cairo." In the end, however, Mubarak did nothing to rescind the contract or hinder its execution. It is not clear whether the vice president ever told the incorruptible Sadat about the affair.

The brother-in-law is Gen. Mounir Sabet, now stationed in Washington as chief of military procurement. Two years ago, he was an assistant military attache here, and was involved in the Tersam deal up to his ears. At a Washington meeting on June 14, 1979, for example, Sabet confirmed that Tersam had been awarded the shipping contract in secret, and offered one of the firm's competitors half the profits if he'd keep his mouth shut.

Sabet's boss in Washington that year was the military attache, Gen. Abu Ghazala. He too was deeply involved in the Tersam deal. I have a confidential letter signed by Ghazala and addressed to the Pentagon, dated April 2, 1979. It informed the appropriate officials "that the Egyptian Ministry of Defense has appointed TERSAM CO. as its exclusive agent ... for all its military imports from the United States of America."

For months thereafter, however, Ghazala repeatedly denied that Tersam had been given the contract. Far from being reprimanded for his part in the undercover deal, Ghazala was given an extension of his American tour of duty and a new home. He is now defense minister.

On June 14, 1979, at the Army-Navy Country Club near Washington, Ghazala and Sabet led still another Tersam competitor to believe that his firm would get the lucrative shipping contract. Later that evening, an American associate of the two Egyptian military men offered the competitor a subcontract if he would make no fuss about the Tersam deal. The Egyptians were clearly worried that word of the behind-the-scenes arrangement with the Palestinian Shorafa would become known in Egypt.

A third top-level Egyptian involved in Tersam was Gen. Kamal Hassan Ali, now deputy prime minister and foreign minister. At the time, he was defense minister. He was the one who authorized Ghazala's letter to the Pentagon stating that Tersam was the exclusive shipping agent for American arms. And in a secret letter from Ali's office dated April 17, 1979, Tersam's status as "permanent and exclusive agent" was confirmed. The letter stated that the agreement had been made in 1978.

Yet Ali repeatedly lied to other Egyptians about the Tersam deal, and succeeded in blocking investigation of the affair. He also helped keep the facts from reaching Sadat, according to my sources.

The final competitor was given the word at a meeting in Washington's swank Madison Hotel in September 1979. Ali, Ghazala and an American colleague, a former CIA official, tried to buy the businessman off with the offer of a subcontract.

As one source familiar with the Tersam deal concluded: "It all reeked of money paid under the table."

WATCH ON WASTE — It takes a lot to impress government auditors. But they were clearly awed by the award of a $130,000 Department of Energy contract on Sept. 30, 1980 — the last day that currently budgeted money could be spent. Noting that the request for the contract had been made only the day before, the auditors wrote: "Within a single day, the cost data were reviewed, a prenegotiation plan was developed, a preaward 'audit' was made by phone, negotiations were held and the contract was signed."

INSIDE REPORT:

Hance helping push Reagan toward 'moment of truth'

WASHINGTON — The likelihood of David Stockman quietly endorsing a delay of the tax cut to reduce the budget deficit pushes Ronald Reagan toward a moment of truth that could decide the fate of his economic program and even his administration.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Reagan's decision has been hastened by the unveiling Tuesday (Oct. 13) of a new economic proposal by conservative Democratic representative Kent Hance of Texas. He wants the 10 percent across-the-board personal tax rate cut scheduled for July 1, 1982, delayed to Oct. 1. But Hance insists this must be linked to postponing cost-of-living allowances (COLA) for the same three months on a variety of federal programs, including Social Security.

Although budget director Stockman recently testified in Congress against any tax cut delay, he is horrified by the prospect of future budget deficits climbing to near $100 billion in the midst of congressional insurrection against new spending cuts. Accordingly, key members of Congress describe Stockman as willing to "slip" the tax cut — but only if the payoff on budget cuts is deep enough.

There will be no announced shift in administration policy, merely acquiescence in whatever Hance and Republican leaders can get through Congress. That would leave in President Reagan's hands the decision whether to accept budget relief at the risk of his landmark tax achievement. The pressure to do so would be immense, despite fears of further evisceration of the tax cuts.

This menace to the tax program derives from the long summer battle between economists at Treasury and Stockman's Office of Management and Budget (OMB) over prospective budget deficits. The more pessimistic OMB guesses prevailed, leading to the "fall offensive" of budget cutting and revenue-raising tax "loophole" closers. But predictions shortly after Reagan's Sept. 24 speech that his proposals would get nowhere are being realized.

It is no exaggeration to say that Congress is in rebellion against Reagan's spending cuts, with the Republican Senate only slightly more helpful than the Democratic House. The danger of Reagan vetoes probably means no more appropriations bills will be passed. Thus, the U.S. government would resume its chaotic and unworkable mode of the 1970s.

The outlook for "loophole" closers is equally bleak. In truth, the Treasury is having trouble even drafting a package with any slight prospect for passage.

Confronting a failed "fall offensive," Stockman sees immense future budget deficits forecast in the next congressional budget resolution, with dreadful effects on Capitol Hill. Since a veto war such as President Eisenhower waged 25 years ago is impractical under present procedures, Stockman wants some arrangement with Congress.

The shape of the arrangement is suggested by Hance, the West Texas congressman who suffered obloquy for co-sponsoring Reagan's tax cut in defiance of the Democratic leadership. Hance's tax cut delay would save $8 billion, and his COLA delays would yield another $5 billion. Since $2.8 billion of the $5 billion COLA savings include delayed Social Security hikes ruled out of bounds by the White House, the Hance package is not acceptable to the administration in its present form.

But statements of absolute surprise by Reagan officials over Hance's initiative ring phony. He has discussed them with key administration figures, who encouraged him. The truth is that the administration will quietly accept an amended version of the Hance plan — if enough budget savings are linked to it. That includes Ronald Reagan, though his asking price (according to a senior aide) of another $15 billion in non-defense budget savings from spending is unattainable.

Reagan's men contend a three-month delay in the July 1 tax cut will not matter that much. The all-important drop from 70 percent to 50 percent in top tax rates on dividends and interest would go into effect as scheduled Jan. 1, with attendant drops in capital gains rates. Besides, Reagan has the power to veto any subsequent reductions in his tax cuts.

So static an analysis ignores the role of momentum on Capitol Hill. Once Reagan yields to a three-month delay, supply-siders in his administration see an avalanche beginning that would ultimately reduce his tax cut by one-half in an elusive chase after the deficit.

The cost to the president of maintaining his tax cuts is seen by these deficit-chasers as chaos on Capitol Hill and in financial markets as deficits soar. Dissenters within the administration claim the deepening dilemma stems from bloated OMB forecasts of deficits and an exaggeration of their importance. If in his moment of truth Reagan insists on retaining his full tax cut as the cutting edge of his economic program to remake America, he will be forced to rethink his present monetary and fiscal policies, not to mention traditional Republican worship of the balanced budget.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Oct. 16, the 289th day of 1981. There are 76 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 16, 1978, Polish Cardinal Karol Wojtyla was elected pope. He took the name of John Paul II.

On this date:

In 1756, British forces under Robert Clive marched against the Nawab of Bengal, India.

In 1793, Marie Antoinette of France was beheaded.

In 1941, the Germans captured Odessa in the Soviet Union, in World War Two.

And in 1970, Anwar Sadat became president of Egypt, succeeding the late Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Ten years ago: Police in New York City said fugitive black militant leader H. Rap Brown and two police officers were wounded in a gun battle following an armed robbery at a bar.

CHARLEY REESE

Democracy requires tolerance

President Reagan is catching it on two sides. On one extreme, he's being criticized for not cutting the federal budget enough and on the other, for cutting it too much.

Charley Reese

He is also being whipsawed by ignoramuses and political hacks. Political hacks make a big deal about the reduced portions in the school lunch program. The president backs off to blunt the criticism. Ignoramuses accuse him of being "political" while accepting the original accusers as non-political.

Of course, President Reagan is political and does and says some things for purely political reasons. If you are not a dictator, you'd better be political or you won't get anything accomplished. A free society, a democracy, is by definition political and is led by politicians who must achieve their goals by means of persuasion and trade-offs.

Democracies are by nature sloppy. Clean, pure ideological programs are vitually impossible, especially in a society like ours where power is spread about among the Congress, the executive branch, the judiciary, and in reality, the bureaucracy and the press.

That's why no president, be he conservative or liberal, Democrat or Republican, ever achieves 100 percent of his wish list. His proposals are inevitably altered and modified by events and by the necessity to compromise.

That's also why purists tend to be at heart totalitarians. They are frustrated by the inefficiency of the democratic process. They have a clear vision of how things ought to be and they long for the power to make them be.

All of us though are subject now and then to fleeting twitches of totalitarianism. I confess that the longer Jimmy Carter was in office, the more appealing became the thought of a military coup. It was interesting to observe my own thought processes. For the first time, I began to understand why there are so many coups in Latin America.

As I became convinced in my own mind that the re-election of Jimmy Carter would mean the certain destruction of the nation, then I was forced to consider the question: Is it more important to save the nation than to preserve the process? In my case, it was purely speculation, since a former grunt is in no position to stage a military coup, but that is exactly the kind of thinking which sometimes propels generals and colonels to take action.

Fortunately, the process worked and eliminated Carter democratically. We will never know if somewhere in the bowels of the Pentagon some men were thinking just those thoughts.

How then do you judge the worth of a politician? Well, I think there are several criteria. One, does he have a coherent program? President Reagan does. He will compromise in order to achieve the gist of it, but he definitely has certain principles which guide his actions. He is not an opportunist who changes with the wind.

Second, is he honest? There is a difference in backing off from a position or modifying it and outright, deliberate deception. So far, I haven't detected President Reagan telling a lie. He has certainly waffled and reinterpreted some of his own statements, but so far he has not lied. People who know him personally say he never lies.

Third, is he mentally healthy? We've had some borderlines, if not outright crazies, in high office. The ability to laugh, especially at one's self, is the best clue to mental health. Both Richard Nixon and Jimmy Carter were humorless and you know how they turned out.

Living in a democracy requires patience and tolerance and if we lose those traits, we are very likely to lose our freedom.

Laborers' International Union tries to oust its president

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dissident members of the Laborers' International Union, rebuffed in an attempt to deny union president Angelo Fosco another term, are seeking his ouster through the courts.

Nine rank-and-file members of the 600,000-member union also are trying to force Fosco and five others to reimburse the LIUNA for money allegedly squandered on corrupt activities.

A civil suit was filed in U.S. District Court here Thursday on behalf of Dennis Ryan of Iowa City, Iowa, and Chris White of Fairbanks, Ala., two union dissidents who challenged Fosco's re-election to another five-year term last month, and seven other rank-and-file members.

Fosco and five other employees or former union employees "breached their trust to the union and members by various financial schemes designed to enrich themselves at the expense of the union and union members," the plaintiffs alleged.

Union spokesmen could not immediately be reached for comment.

At the union's international convention in Hollywood, Fla., last month, Fosco trounced Ryan 2,347 to 5. White was thwarted in his challenge when a rules committee declared that he was not qualified for the job.

Named as defendants in the suit were Fosco, Arther E. Coia, general secretary-treasurer; Robert J. Connerton, general counsel; Terence J. O'Sullivan, former general secretary-treasurer; Peter Fosco, son of Angelo Fosco; and Jules Bernstein, former associate general counsel.

11-year-old pregnant girl awaits abortion decision

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — An impoverished 11-year-old girl, 23 weeks pregnant by her mother's boyfriend, is awaiting a judge's decision on whether she can have an abortion, her attorney says.

The girl's court-appointed attorney, Nelson Pelletier, said Thursday he wants her to have the abortion because carrying the pregnancy to term would be psychologically harmful.

But the unidentified girl is a ward of Kalamazoo County Probate Court and judges so far have refused to allow the girl's father to be named legal guardian or to receive temporary custody. Pelletier said the father, an ex-convict divorced form the girl's mother, has agreed to an abortion for his daughter.

"I'm not saying abortion is a real good thing," Pelletier said. "I'm just saying that, as I read the law, abortion is available to this girl. As I hear the testimony, abortion is necessary for this girl."

Juvenile Judge Donald Halstead said he lacked authority to order an abortion and turned down a request that the court order the girl's abortion. Pelletier then appealed Halstead's ruling.

Kalamazoo County Circuit Judge John Fitzgerald scheduled a hearing today on the appeal.

"It would be developmentally inappropriate for her to have a child at this point," the lawyer said. "How could she develop herself into an adult if she has a child at this age?"

He added that doctors have said the pregnancy probably would not physically harm the girl.

The mother's boyfriend faces first-degree criminal sexual conduct charges in connection with the pregnancy, Pelletier said.

The girl and her 9-year-old sister were named wards of the court Sept. 23 by Halstead, who said their mother neglected them. Both are living with their mother, which Pelletier said he did not oppose because he felt his client would be better off psychologically in the familiar surroundings of her home.

Surgeon general testifies in suit against government

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Lt. Gen. Paul Myers, the U.S. Air Force surgeon general, was scheduled to testify Friday in a suit against the federal government stemming from alleged negligence by the service's former chief heart surgeon, Col. William Stanford.

The lawsuit stems from an operation which Stanford performed while on a fellowship with a civilian heart surgery group here.

A Milwaukee couple charges that in 1978 he connected a heart-lung machine backwards to the wife during coronary artery bypass surgery, causing the woman to suffer permanent brain damage. The couple sued the United States, since Stanford was still on government payroll.

Stanford formerly practiced at Wilford Hall Medical Center in San Antonio, the center of the Air Force hospital system, while Myers was commander of the facility.

The Atlanta Constitution has quoted former Air Force physicians as saying they had warned Myers several times in 1977 that they no longer wanted to participate in operations with Stanford.

The protesting physicians cited internal hospital studies showing that over a two-year period, 43 percent of the senior heart surgeon's patients died in surgery, or soon after, the newspaper said.

Last week in U.S. District Court here, two former physicians testified that Myers verbally attacked them for protesting heart surgery results at Wilford Hall.

Surgeons with the civilian heart surgery group have testified they were not told of the controversy over Stanford's practice when they accepted him for the fellowship.

Paris designer has gone soft on strong women

Paris designer Thierry Mugler says he has gone soft on strong females and plans his latest fashions to reflect a "happy" youth movement "in which the women are irresistable, beautiful and very feminine." The one-lapel tuxedo, left, is from his current collection. And that is Mugler with his favorite model, Pat Cleveland, taking bows at his April show.

By MARYLOU LUTHER
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Thierry Mugler, the Paris designer who brought us Wonder Woman's breastplates and Wilma Flintstone's cave clothes, says he's gone soft on strong women.

The 33-year-old hero of young French fashion says he's giving up what he calls aggressive-sexy in favor of a petal-perfect flower child.

"She's not a hippie," he stresses, "but she's a child of the hippies — a tender, sweet, little-girl-of-a-woman. She's my new doll. A doll in tulle. A butterfly."

As one of the prime exponents of woman as superpower, Mugler's trashing of tough is roughly equivalent to Bill Blass ditching ruffles or Galanos giving up on one-shoulder dresses.

Does that mean he sees the woman of tomorrow as some new ind of weakling about to return to her role as fashion object?

"I don't see any weakness in chiffon," snaps Mugler, who describes the chiffon and tulle evening dress illustrated here as "a wink at 'Gone With the Wind.'

Mugler's latter-day Scarlett O'Hara-out-of-Tara-by-way-of-Haight-Ashbury will be the leader of a new youth movement, he believes, "a more hopeful youth movement in which the women are irresistible, beautiful and very feminine." It will be a happy youth movement, he maintains, and "very human."

And that, says Mugler, is why he's drawn to Los Angeles.

"It's the energy," he says, explaining why he prefers L.A. to New York. "People here are doing things. I like the people even more than the city."

To express this new petal-power fashion, Mugler says, he would prefer to have his Paris openings be more private. "I want something more funny, more alive — not just 10 girls coming out on the runway at one time. Of course, it must be a big show but less dramatic, more human."

As it is now, Mugler estimates that he spends about $160,000 for each of his twice-yearly shows. One of his goals for 1982 is to bring his spring show, which opens in October in Paris, to Los Angeles. The show will include his homage to the surrealistic painters Dali and Magritte.

As soon as the October collection is completed, Mugler says, he intends to direct a lot of his energies to Hollywood costume design.

"I want to do costumes for films," he says, "and I want to know Edith Head."

Mugler says the American designer he most admires are Kamali and Halston. And although he says Yves Saint Laurent has "perfect taste and equilibrium," he will not join that designer's latest move to short, above-the-knee skirts. "I like a more mysterious, more glamorous look," he explains, "and I really don't care about those problems of lengths. Each outfit is its own story."

As a designer who has influenced men's clothes as much as women's, Mugler says his man of tomorrow will be more classic. He describes the clothes as "very strong and very tough but also sweeter, more human and more happy."

American style: Creator of expensive mink plans encore

By KEVIN McCULLEN
Associated Press Writer

COALVILLE, Utah (AP) — The creator of the world's rarest, darkest and most expensive mink plans an encore — if he lives long enough.

John Adkins says he's determined to present the fashion world with an improved Black Willow mink, one more glamorous than the original Black Willow a senior vice president of Neiman-Marcus Co. calls the finest mink available.

"There's a synonym for both John Adkins and his mink and that's quality," says David Wolfe, the Neiman-Marcus executive. "His product — and there's no doubt about it — is the finest in the world. There's no other mink that's even close."

Adkins, who has spent most of his 74 years in the small city of Coalville, stunned the fashion industry in 1966 when he unveiled the Black Willow, a rare dark mink with fine, coal-black fur.

He sold about 500 pelts at a fur buyer's auction in New York City that year. One bundle had pelts that sold for $1,100 apiece — the highest price ever paid before or since, Wolfe says.

"He set a standard for quality that year that has lasted ever since," Wolfe says. "John worked hard to develop that mink and the results are fabulous. It's a real example of diligence, where a person's character and quality stands out in their work."

Now Adkins has developed through inbreeding an even darker Black Willow he plans to unveil in 1983.

But Adkins underwent surgery in October 1980 for removal of a malignant tumor on his pancreas. Physicians gave the father of nine children two months to live.

"I've been lucky in that I don't get sick like most people," Adkins says. "The doctor said he was amazed at how I was handling the chemotherapy. I've been fortunate and we're hoping I live long enough to start producing these new mink.

"You never know how long you're going to live — that's up to the Lord. But I'm still working," he says.

Adkins and his family have about 5,500 mink at their ranch along Echo Reservoir in northern Utah, the No. 2 state in mink production last year with sales of about 465,700 pelts worth $16 million.

Wolfe says a Black Willow mink is prized for its dark guard hairs and naturally deep coloration, in contrast with some other mink coats that are dyed black. Pelts from Black Willow mink also have a lightweight and supple leather, which makes for a lighter coat.

Dark mink coats also are more fashionable because they can be worn most of the year, Adkins says.

Neiman-Marcus sells a Black Willow coat for between $12,000 and $18,000 and demand always exceeds supply, Wolfe says.

"People appreciate quality," he says. "People would rather spend the $18,000 on a Black Willow coat than $800 for a lesser coat that's not going to last as long. It's like having the finest Rolls-Royce and Mercedes-Benz."

Adkins and his family auction a varying number of bundles of 40-50 pelts in New York City each year to buyers from around the world. A mink jacket may contain 35-40 pelts and a full-length coat 45-50 skins.

Adkins began raising mink in 1927 after he caught a wild mink for a man who wanted to begin his own farm. The man offered Adkins $10 for the mink and he decided his effort was worth more.

"I thought if he could raise mink, then so could I," Adkins recalls. "I built a pen, got two or three more wild mink and started raising them."

Adkins continued inbreeding his mink and the first Black Willow was born in 1958. "When I saw it, I knew it was rare and something never seen before," he says. "It took me eight years to produce 500 from that one mink."

Extra money directly from sales

By HAROLD MEYER
Copley News Service

Double-digit inflation and the continuing cost-income squeeze is pushing more and more women to look for ways to supplement their own or their family's income.

It is an especially tough job for the woman with little or no prior work experience, competing in an increasingly tough job market.

Large numbers of women are turning to careers — full or part-time — in direct sales as a solution to their economic problems.

During 1980 it is estimated that more than 2 million women (and men) were actively involved in direct sales activities. Their earnings ranged from a few dollars a week to more than $500,000 a year.

Among the attractive aspects of direct sales are that one does not need a specific skill, it is easy to begin, requires minimal initial investment, doesn't require formal training or a college degree and is open to everyone of all ages, whether they want to work full time or part time.

Direct sales opportunities may take several different forms. One of the most familiar is "party plan" sales, in which a host-hostess arranges for a product demonstration in his or her home for a group of friends. Parties combine shopping and sociability in a pleasant, relaxed atmosphere.

Loraine Gately of Torrance, Calif., an independent consultant who sells products from Princess House, a leading direct sales firm, explains how the program works.

"As an independent businesswoman, I work with individuals to arrange a party in their homes," she says. "The hostess invites her friends and neighbors in for a showing of the product, which I conduct."

"The average consultant selling Princess House products," says Gately, "can earn about $150 per week if she averages two shows or parties a week. That's the average. Of course, thereare those extremely active and successful individuals who can and do make a great deal more. Success in this business, as in most others, depends entirely on the individual's willingness to work and aptitude for this kind of work. I'd say the self-starting woman who likes to meet people, likes to entertain and likes to offer helpful information can be a tremendous success."

Gately's business success in direct selling over a 12-year period has prompted her family not only to rally behind her, but to join her in pursuit of successful direct-selling careers of their own.

Gately's husband Ron assists in managing the activities of her area. Her daughter is a division organizer. Gately's son and his wife are both product consultants. Her niece is a unit organizer.

"During the first few years selling Princess House crystal, I could see a real growth pattern developing," Gately said. "I felt there would be a surge in the business of direct selling, so I became involved with that product line and prepared myself for success."

That was in 1969.

Previously, she was involved in direct selling for a copper products line and a widely known line of fragrance and cosmetic products. Her husband was in computer programming for 15 years.

"A combination of enthusiasm about the product line and a drive to earn some extra money for the household, really got me into this," Gately said.

Diane Von Furstenberg making comeback

By GARRY ABRAMS
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Diane Von Furstenberg, whose fashion career has resembled the peaks and valleys of an earthquake graph, is revving up for yet another assault on the American consumer. Her $130-an-ounce perfume debuted late last month. In a couple of months, she'll be introducing a spring women's line featuring updated versions of the wrap dress that accounted for her first fortune in the early 1970s. (That dress got her on the cover of Newsweek, and it proved to be a hard act to top.)

The comeback trail for Von Furstenberg seems to be a perpetual state of mind. On this particular visit to Los Angeles, she's promoting the new fragrance — Volcan D'Amour — with an intensity that won't let her stop, even when fatigue and jet lag are clearly problems. She's on a television talk show. She's throwing a party for the department store employees and executives who'll sell the fragrance. She's teaching workers how to wear the Balinese-inspired costume to be used in stores for the perfume's launch. She's meeting with her own executives late at night to iron out last-minute snafus. She also finds time to meet astronomer Carl Sagan — evidence of her new interest in astronomy, an interest that complements her fondness for astrology.

Von Furstenberg has a way of using all of her experience in her business life. She has drawn on her two trips to the Indonesian island of Bali, mythology and the tropical night sky to come up with the perfume's name, its packaging and much of its advertising.

Naming the scent wa the toughest task, she says, explaining that doing so took two years; and finding the right environment also was difficult. "Finally, last year, I was in Bali and I was in love and surrounded by volcanoes, and it came to me — Volcan D'Amour, the volcano of love," she said.

The design of the crystal bottle was inspired by a brief look at Manhattan's spires by an artist friend, Dakota Jackson. (The bottle suggests a skyscraper.)

Von Furstenberg says the creation of the perfume was a labor of five years, beginning shortly after the launch of her first fragrance, Tatia, named for her daughter, now 11 1/2. (She also has a son, Alexander, 10 1/2.) If she sometimes seems given to flights of fancy when talking about Volcan D'Amour, it could be because it's the product of a cosmetics company that she controls. All her other products, including apparel, are licensed for manufactur3 by other firms.

She admits that the cosmetics operation has been her priority during the last few years. But because her apparel hasn't done as well as she would have preferred, Von Furstenberg says, she's now going to take a more active interest. (At its peak, Von Furstenberg's wrap dress was selling at the rate of 25,000 per week, at $86 each — largely, she thinks, because it was easy to wear. "I'm bringing that dress back because I believe in it," she says. She may have believed in it too much at one time. Her business came close to failing because of what she calls sloppy practices, overproduction and overstaffing. Only the dismissal of many employees and executives and other cost-cutting measures saved the enterprise, which, Von Furstenberg says, could have gone bankrupt.)

"I think that right now is the perfect moment for me to make my comeback," she declared. "Fashion now is very soft and classic and very feminine, but there's no definite direction in anything except toward total comfort. You'll see the big difference in my line starting this spring. It's going to be great because it's going to b3 me."

Von Furstenberg believes that designing comfortable clothes is her forte. "No matter what anybody says, the feel of a dress is No. 1; then come the colors and the prints and the style."

Whatever she plans to do, it's likely that Von Furstenberg will be in the public eye less than she has been during the last 10 years. That's partly because she's had a couple of unhappy close encounters with the media this year. A New York magazine article she thought would deal with the development of the perfume turned out to be an exploration of her private life. And a television special labeled her as one of America's "super rich," a tag she says she doesn't like. (She owns a house in Connecticut surrounded by 53 acres, and a 16-room apartment on Fifth Avenue. Sales of her merchandise reportedly amount to more than $200 million a year.)

But Von Furstenberg also realizes that she owes much of her success to publicity, even though she considers that cooperating with the press often is a game of chance. "Sometimes you spend an interview just pushing away a preconceived idea," she said. She also has a talent for the quotable — describing a visit to Los Angeles as "sliding into guacamole. It's too easy for many people here."

At age 34, Von Furstenberg says she feels less inclined to live her private life in places staked out by paparazzi. When she and her husband, Prince Egon Von Furstenberg, hit the New York scene in the late 1960s, they were photographed in every night spot of the moment because they were the young couple of an era that celebrated youth. She was the daughter of a Belgian businessman. Egon was one of the heirs to the Fiat automobile fortune. Then Von Furstenberg hit it big in fashion the first time out with that dress. Other Big Apple designers were green with envy. Some gloated when her company floated to the brink of failure.

Then the Princess of Seventh Avenue was separated from the prince. Her name was linked with Paramount's Barry Diller. She was frequently snapped at such places as Studio 54. Now, she says, she is more introspective and learning to separate her public role from her personal life. In fact, her current beau is a Brazilian named Paolo, whom she met on the beach in Bali. Paolo, she says, helped design the perfume's box.

She sums up: "I don't like going out very much; I really don't. The tendency as I grow older definitely is one of retreating into privacy. It's part of growing up."

DEAR ABBY

Woman's spirits plunge as pet bird flies free

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: While I was away from home, a young woman came into my home as a guest of my son. This young woman took "Freddy," my precious parakeet, out of his cage, opened the front door and threw him out, saying he was "born free."

Abby, I had had Freddy for five years and I had grown to love him very much. It has been three weeks since this incident occurred and now I have given up all hope of ever seeing my sweet bird again.

I pray that you will print this so that young woman will realize the sorrow she has caused. — J.M.T., FOSTER CITY, MICH.

DEAR J.M.T.: "Realizing the sorrow she has caused" is hardly adequate restitution for having robbed you of your beloved pet. That cruel and thoughtless young woman owes you a replacement for Freddy. And since it was your son who brought her into your home, he should assume some responsibility for the loss of your pet.

DEAR ABBY: I am an 18-year-old virgin (girl) who is tired of hearing the statistic: "Only three out of every 10 teens under the age of 18 are virgins."

I have been going steady with my boyfriend for two years. We plan to marry as virgins when we finish college. Our relationship is very strong and we don't feel that sex would make it any stronger at this time. I find it hard to believe that our values are not shared by more teens.

My question to you, Abby, is: How accurate do you think these statistics are? With so much peer pressure and so much stress on sex today, I'll bet there are a lot of teens who are still virgins, but they wouldn't dare admit it.

I question that there is really a valid way to get accurate statistics. I would appreciate your opinion. — WAITING FOR MARRIAGE

DEAR WAITING: What you say makes sense, but much depends on how the statistics were gathered. In a written questionnaire where participants are not required to identify themselves, the chances for 100 percent honesty are almost a certainly. But in a face-to-face confrontation, that's something else again.

DEAR ABBY: I'm confused. When does one use "further" as opposed to "farther"? I never know for sure which word to use. Thanks. — MURRAY IN MADISON

DEAR MURRAY: When referring to physical distance, use "farther." Use "further" for everything else. The late Ted Bernstein, in "The Careful Writer," wrote: "Fifty years hence copy editors probably won't have to worry about this distinction because it looks as if 'farther' is going to be mowed down by the scythe of Old Further Time."

Convenience cooking is in: Bake today, serve tomorrow

BY JOANN MINER
Copley News Service

Working 9 to 5 can drive you crazy if you let it — especially when each workday is extended an hour or so as you immerse yourself in the kitchen preparing dinner for the family.

It's no wonder "convenience" to many women is a quick stop at a fast-food franchise.

But a little planning ahead can provide you with your favorite home-cooked meals without the hassle of last minute KP. Precooking and freezing casseroles, side dishes and sauces will save you time — and money — on rushed weeknights.

Here are some tips on freezing your own food.

Freeze food in meal-size quantities whenever possible. Small, flat packages freeze and thaw the fastest.

For convenience, try freezing foods like meat patties, chicken parts, chops and home frozen vegetables (peas, green beans, broccoli pieces) by the loose pack method.

Spread the food out on a jelly roll pan or cookie sheet and freeze it until firm, about one to two hours. Remove the food, quickly bag or package it and return to the freezer. Now you can remove or pour out just the portion you need because the food isn't stuck together.

Avoid frantic meal preparation after work or a busy day by making double or triple batches of casseroles, soups and stews and freezing them for future use. Shorten the cooking time by 10 to 15 minutes to allow for the additional cooking during reheating.

Freezing causes some seasonings to fade or intensify in flavor, so you may want to underseason and then add to taste when heating the food. For example, pepper, cloves and synthetic vanilla may become strong and bitter when used in frozen foods.

Cooling hot foods before freezing them is an energy saving practice. Allow food to cool at room temperature About 30 minutes after packaging, then freeze. To speed up cooling, place the dish in a pan of ice water.

Frozen foods lose moisture if not adequately protected, so choose your packaging materials with care. They should be airtight, moistureproof, heat resistant and non-porous. There is a wide assortment of wraps, bags and containers on the market, each with its own advantages.

Aluminum foil and freezer-safe plastic wrap are especially suited for poultry and other unevenly shaped foods. They mold easily to the food, so you can press out as much air as possible from the package. Be sure to seal the ends of plastic wrap packages wih feezer tape as the wrap may not cling to itself at freezer temperatures.

Plastic bags are convenient for individual foods like rolls and cookies, because you can easily remove what you want and leave the rest frozen. Do not pour hot foods into pans lined with polythene films.

Rigid plastic containers with tight-fitting lids won't leak and they make efficient use of freezer space. Remember to leave about 1-inch head space to allow for expansion of liquids during freezing.

Label and date all packages. You may even want to include such information as ingredients to be added, the heating time and temperature or the maximum storaGe time.

When preparing a casserole for the freezer, spray the ovenware with non-stick vegetable spray, then line with foil or heat-resistant freezer wrap. When frozen, remove the food from the dish, wrap tightly and replace in freezer. This way, less freezer space is required, and the dish is again available. When ready to bake, simply place the casserole back into the original dish without thawing.

Here is a list of foods that might develop unfavorable characteristics when frozen at home:

— Cream fillings, custards and pudding may become lumpy and watery.

— Light cream, buttermilk and yogurt change texture.

— Bread crumbs and other casserole toppings become soggy. (Add toppings just before reheating.)

— Stuffing in raw poultry can encourage bacterial growth.

— Hard-cooked egg whites become rubbery.

— Cream cheese gets grainy but is all right for sandwich spreads or mixed with other foods.

— Cooked vegetables may have poor textures and flavor when reheated.

— Sour cream and mayonnaise tend to separate.

— Salad greens, tomatoes and unblanched vegetables lose nutrients, flavor, color and texture.

— Doughs and batters lose volume and change in texture.

— Gelatin molds become rubbery and poor in texture.

— Texture and flavor suffer in baked fruit pies — freeze before baking.

— High salt content in ham and other highly seasoned meats encourages rancidity and flavor changes. Freeze briefly.

— Some whole fruits or large pieces of canned fruit get solid and are too hard to eat when thawed. Raw apples and grapes become soft and mushy.

Make business associates aware of success

Copley News Service

What can a working woman do to make sure top executives, co-workers, business associates and clients are aware of their career achievements?

When your firm sends your promotion announcement to the business press, newspapers or trade journals, ask the personnel department to include your executive portrait.

Professionally made business portraits convey a positive image about you and the company's belief in your abilities.

To test this theory, make an informal survey of the "executive changes" listed in the business section. The photographs showing people with pleasing expressions will catch your eye and draw your interest to the news item.

Besides presenting a flattering image of you, business portraits should meet the professional standards your company requires. Mary Taylor, who handles portrait sittings for the Moffett Studio in Chicago, offers suggestions about the clothes to wear for a photography session. "Choose an outfit you like to wear, one that fits well and flatters you.

"Classic attire, such as a well-cut blazer and simple blouse in solid colors or a muted pattern are highly recommended."

Though most companies retain a professional photographer to make portraits of all executives, there are times when the individual is asked to contact the studio directly. The company's public relations department can give you the names of photographers, or you can check co-workers who recently had a portrait made if you don't already have a favorite photographer.

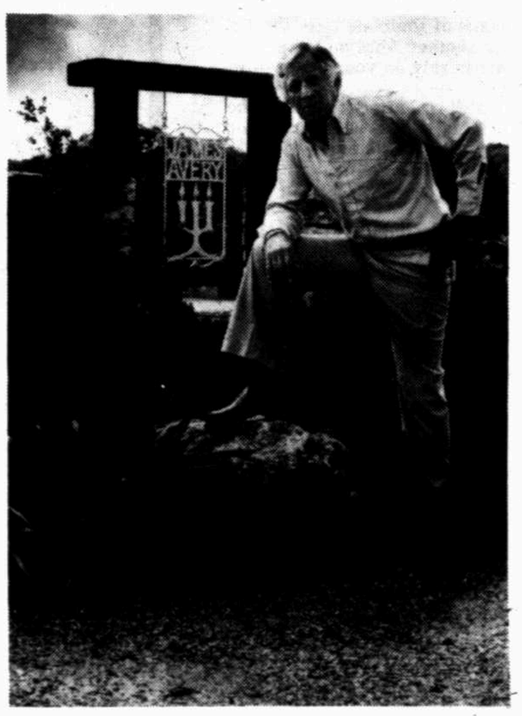

Fees photographers charge for executive portraits vary from studio to studio. Some offer "package plans" that include the cost of photography and a number of black-and-white or color prints. Others have a separate fee for the portrait sitting and charge extra for each finished photograph you order. By shopping around, you can find a studio to produce the photographs you want and stay within your budget.

Nearly all photographers and companies agree that business portraits need to be updated every five or six years, though you may prefer to have your portrait made more frequently.

Ted Sirlin, a master of photography, past president of the Professional Photographers of America and owner of a portrait studio in Sacramento, Calif., emphasizes the importance of keeping pace with changing styles and appearances. "The portrait is a pleasant introduction to you. Certainly you want it to be as flattering and realistic as possible."

Wait a week to 10 days after your hair is styled or cut before you have a portrait made.

Author says fear holding women

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

Contrary to a great deal of name-calling and rhetoric, the chief factor holding women back today is not oppressive men, unfair employment practices or unjust social expectations which cast women in a subordinate light. Or so says the author of a radical new book.

The book, which already has sparked national controversy, says the real problem lies much closer to home.

It is women's deep and hidden fear of independence.

That's the thesis of Collette Dowling, 43, the New York-based author of "The Cinderella Complex: Women's Hidden Fear of Independence."

Although some women deny it, accusing Dowling of "blaming the victim," the author insists that a far-reaching terror of standing on their own two feet infects the psyches of almost all women to the core. And this hidden fear, skillfully camouflaged, presents itself as an abiding and passionate wish to be saved, and an unconscious posture of waiting for a Prince Charming, on whom they can depend.

If women are not succeeding, Dowling argues, it is because, due to this conflict between dependence and independence, they are choosing it to be that way. "Women," Dowling writes, "are beginning to discover that nothing is more frightening than the escape into freedom.

"There are a lot of women who have made a lot of external changes in their lives — they have begun careers or gone back to school," Dowling said, "but they're not feeling good. I'm saying it's because they've got this underlying wish to be bailed out that is keeping them in conflict with themselves."

Few women are able to identify and face this fear, however, Dowling said, which leads to a number of excuses for not succeeding, including:

— "The male world is tough and nasty, and I don't want to function in it."

— "I think the most important thing to do in the world is take care of children."

"I think a lot of women are hiding in the home today," Dowling said. "They're blowing motherhood out of proportion because it's safe." The development of adequate child-care centers for working mothers has not occurred, Dowling said, because women have not forced society to do anything about it.

And the price women pay for this dependency, Dowling said, is living a limited, narrow life full of insecurity, fear, bitterness and resentment.

"When you put your livelihood in the hands of someone else, there's always the feeling he'll die or leave you for another woman," she said. "It's like playing economic Russian roulette to rely on your husband to take care of you these days.

"But let's say you make a deal — there's still resentment because the man has the money and the power. You have to ask permission for things. Insecurity and the very real atrophying of skills and self-confidence are what happens to a woman when she takes herself out of the job market."

How does all this come into being?

It is through a culture that overhelps and emotionally cripples girl children from the moment of birth, Dowling writes, preventing them from achieving the psychological separation from others that is the root of self-confidence.

Boys are encouraged to face their fears, girls to seek help.

The result, Dowling writes, is that girls internalize the idea they can't meet life's challenges on their own. This leads to "learned helplessness," a psychological phenomenon in which a person who feels she has no control simply stops functioning.

The real conflict between dependence and independence begins to surface in adolescence, Dowling writes, when girls become aware that their main task is seen as achieving "successful" relationships with others.

Since they have been trained to depend on feedback from others as their main source of self-esteem, girls will often reject achievement in favor of pursuit of social acceptance.

Then, becoming wives and mothers, they continue to hand the decision-making power over to their mates, which only ensures the further erosion of self-confidence.

Even if women do engage in careers, most end up doing all the housework as well, while their husbands continue to contribute very little. Why?

"Women continue dominating the homemaker role, whether or not they have an outside career, because they still feel dependent on their husbands and need something — a service — with which to balance out the arrangement.

"Consciously, we blame men for not changing but, unconsciously, we're quite willing to have them stay the way they are."

How can a woman break free?

First, identify the problem. Admit the dependency wish.

Then, start paying attention to little quirks in your personality that you have always discounted, things like not wanting to deal with your finances, needing approval, finding it hard to disagree.

"I think we need a whole new consciousness-raising now, where women can talk about their fears and not blame others," Dowling said. "It's not our fault if we're brought up this way, but it is our fault if we don't do anything as adults.

"The consciousness-raising wave until now dealt with 'what they're doing to us.' Now we need a new wave to talk about the ways we sabotage ourselves by not admitting and dealing with uncomfortable feelings or dependency and anxiety."

The next step is to deal with this fear. 'You learn to manage fear by being exposed to small doses of the fear-producing situation," Dowling said. "Women have to start learning to do things that make them afraid and tolerate those feelings. Then you begin to see it's not so bad."

Lady athletes: Ten ladies who can break par

By JOHN HALL
Copley News Service

Hello, dollies, it's so nice.

I know I'm going to hate myself in the morning for this. Worse, no doubt, others are going to hate me sooner than that.

But, rain or sleet or snow, the male must sometimes come through. We are about to name the 10 best-looking women among those currently posing and putting along the Ladies Professional Golf Association trail.

Now, wait a minute. I know you're not supposed to mention words like cute or pet or pretty or lovely or even beautiful in talking about women athletes. And, for God's sake, never desirable.

That's what these women athletes are — ATHLETES. Not sex objects. They are golfers. Not toys to be gawked at with a lusting eye. Sorry, ERA.

You know that and I know that, so, please, no irate calls or letters about male chauvinist oinks or sexists slobs. We do this purely in the best interests of science and aren't even asking for a date with the winner.

I wouldn't even bring it up except that the women themselves have been bringing it up so often lately. In case you haven't noticed, the stars of the LPGA tour have been getting a lot more attractive for quite awhile and they know it.

Better, they seem to be glad about it.

Anyway, without further fanfare or trumpeting, the survey sez, these are golfdom's foremost dolls:

1. Sally Little.
2. Laura Baugh Cole.
3. Jan Stephenson.
4. Marlene Floyd.
5. Janet Coles.
6. Nancy Lopez-Melton.
7. Cindy Chamberlain.
8. Holly Hartley.
9. Cathy Reynolds.
10. Muffin Spencer-Devlin.

Maybe there's not a real 10 among the 10 and that, as they say, is golf. But quite a few are close — as the world well noticed when the sexy Stephenson, excuse the expression, displayed some leg and thigh in a Fairway Magazine layout that put them in the aisles.

Numero Uno went to Little, the willowy, blond, blue-eyed South African on the grounds of all-around appeal. But the first three are as close as 1-2-3.

I didn't get into this mess on my own. I went to a professional for help. Stan Wood, my old colleague.

In the golden days of Girl Watching Past, we worked side by side at adjoining desks at the old Los Angeles Mirror. Stan wrote the golf column, covered the big tournaments and was very good at looking out the window.

He coached the University of Southern California golf team to some mighty conquests for many years while establishing himself as one of the top public relations and publicity hotshots in the field.

I asked him to poll a few experts, including himself, in the matter of selecting a top 10.

As a matter of fact, we got a lot of help. Men DO look at women playing golf. Just as women, you know, look at men playing golf.

Sally Little, who is tall, once objected, in fact, to a magazine story that identified Gary Player, her 5-7 countryman, as her idol. "Too short for me," she said.

Laura Cole first became known as Baugh and is still better known most places for her TV commercial than for all the LPGA tournaments she's never won.

"What's a love life?" Long Beach Laura asked in the Ultra-Brite classic. She must have found out, marrying Bobby Cole and settling down in Florida while continuing to search for her first victory.

Without much argument, Jan Stephenson is the most photographed and most photogenic and for somebody who actually started out as a sportswriter, the blossoming journalism major from Australia has clearly taken a turn for the better.

A former airline flight attendant out of Horseshoe Bay, Texas, Marlene Floyd is the sister of Ray Floyd.

Janet Coles has another claim to fame. She was the first woman to get an athletic scholarship at the University of California at Los Angeles. For basketball. From Carmel, Calif., the bouncing brunette is also the first in our top 10 parade who isn't a blonde.

"Nancy Lopez-Melton has got to be on the list for those sparkling brown eyes and her fresh, clean beauty," Wood said. "She must be the one who inspired Frank Sinatra's song."

Well, everybody geps an inning. Golf Digest called Holly Hartley the "Prettiest Golfer Of 1976." Her dad, Bill Hartley, is a golf pro in Oceanside, Calif.

Cindy Chamberlain was once the roller-skating champion of the state of Michigan, Cathy Reynolds married her caddy, Dana Daroux, and the Montecelto Muffin modeled before joining the tour in 1979.

No apologies for anybody in this 10.

People will judge a gift by its wrapping

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

At least since a sociologist declared that the medium is the message, ordinary folks have realized that presentation — the way something is conveyed — plays an important role in meaning.

This concept explains the notion that a beautiful wrap is as much a part of the gift as the object given. It may still be the thought that counts, but Jane Cornell, co-author of a book on gift wrapping, says that your friends and family will judge a gift by its package.

It's easy, inexpensive and fun to wrap presents imaginatively, she said in a recent interview, backing up her statement with some elementary and advanced tips on wrapping and embellishing packages.

In gift wrapping, the first step is to get the paper on neatly. From this procedure, all the rest follows.

Since virtually all objects you'll be wrapping are cubes, cylinders or spheres, it's a question of simply measuring the package (a piece of string around the circumference is the easiest way to accomplish this with bulky packages) and cutting the paper correctly.

Neatness is achieved by having the right amount of paper, pressing seams flat and using double-faced tape to adhere the paper to itself.

The elementary concepts have been mastered by most adults, acknowledged the author, but many people do not know how to tackle fragile, odd-sized and extra-large packages. A good method for wrapping fragile items is to surround the present with air trapped between loose pleats of tissue paper or newspaper. These pleated rolls should be placed all around the item in a box so that it is cushioned on all four sides.

Excelsior corrugated paper or polyurethane beads can be used in place of the folded paper, if you have them. But for originality, try home-made popcorn — hold the butter and salt — as insulation for something fragile. Remember to wrap your present in colored paper if it is tiny so it does not get lost in all the packaging.

Something large can be wrapped easily if a paper party tablecloth is purchased, said Ms. Cornell. The tablecloth provides plenty of seamless covering and can usually be coordinated to the theme of the gift.

Lack of purchased trimmings and paper need deter no one from creating a beautiful package. Among available and sometimes free "gift paper" are newspaper sections (the sports or business section for some recipients, the comics for a child), old road maps, discarded sheet music, extra shelf paper, wallpaper remnants, and foreign language newspapers (Chinese papers are particularly effective).

A potato, onion or apple and some ink or acrylic paints can be fashioned into a home-made stenciling kit to decorate brown paper grocery bags or inexpensive white shelf paper. A simple pattern is cut into the vegetable, which is then dipped into ink or paint and applied to the paper.

Other materials for hand-decorated paper include small sponges and sheets of acetate (available in office supply stores). The home craftsman cuts a pattern in the acetate sheet with a craft knife, lays it over the paper and swabs the paint on.)

Jane Cornell also applies nature's freebies to packages. She has used leaves pressed and dried between sheets of a book, dried weeds, roots and flowers to embellish packages.

"Giving them a spritz of hair spray keeps them looking shiny and in good condition," she said.

Her kitchen cabinets have also yielded materials to decorate packages. Macaroni, cinnamon sticks, pot scrubbers and disposable wipes are charming flourishes, particularly on a gift destined for the homemaker.

Even the all-thumbs individual can produce an attractive package, she said. Bags are the greatest invention for clumsy types. You can make your own with paste and scissors. Then just gather the bag at the top and tie it with a ribbon or fold it down neatly. Pieces of left-over fabric, or a dish towel are easy to use. Just tie them around the gift, hobo-fashion. "If you can't tie a good bow, use a greeting card without the envelopes as the decoration, or tape a candy bar or a bookmark to the top of the package," she suggested.

If you're stuck for a durable covering for a package that must be mailed, bring home a carton in good condition from the supermarket. Unfold it and cut, if necessary, so the carton lies flat. Then reassemble it inside out, taping the box closed, for a free, sturdy box without advertising in which to wrap your gift, concluded the author.

"The Art of Gift Wrapping" is published by Warner Books.

Here's the answer: Question on capital gains tax

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I am 56 years old. My husband is 58. We expect to sell our house within the next year or so. We have lived in it for 17 years and paid $28,000 for it, but hope to sell it for more than $100,000, as that is about the sales prices of similar houses sold in the neighborhood. We knew that we probably would not have to pay any federal taxes on the profit we make, but understand that the law has been changed. How will it affect us?

A. — Not at all. Under the old law, you could make up to $100,000 capital gains without paying any federal tax. Under the new one, the limit is $125,000. Therefore, unless there is some disqualifin factor which you did not mention, you will not have t pay any tax on the sale. This is a one-tim exemption.

Q. — My wife and I are in our 40s. If we sell ou house, on which we expect to make a profit of $50,00 how much time do we have in which to buy a nev house without paying tax on the profit? We hav heard conflicting opinions. One person says a year another says 18 months.

A. — Both are wrong. Under the new law, you hav two years to buy or build a house of at least equa value to avoid the payment of a capital gains tax on the sale of your present home. The previous law was 18 months and the one before that one year.

Q. — I have replaced the mesh in regular wooden screens many times over the years, but now I have to do a similar job on three screens in metal frames. Is there any basic difference in the way in which it is done?

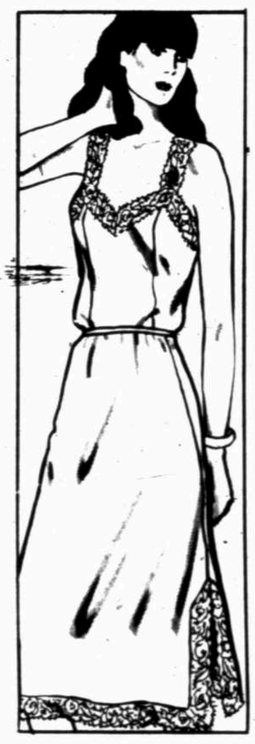

A. — The principal difference is that, with metal screens, the mesh is held in place with aluminum or plastic splines or steel rods of some kind rather than with staples or nails.

NEW YORK— Psychologists know that handsome men and pretty women have social advantages. They get better grades, better jobs, and are often seen as more successful, competent and friendly than plainer peers.

Flipping that idea, a Johns Hopkins University social scientist has recently investigated unattractiveness. And he's discovered it to be not only a social disadvantage, but also a physical stress that is unhealthy, at least for teenage girls.

Psychologist Stephen Hansell, 32, has conducted several studies on what he calls the "beautiful is smart, healthy and good" stereotype.

In this latest venture, he and co-workers at Ohio State University checked the relationship between blood pressure and attractiveness in 282 women and 369 men, aged 14 to 76.

The subjects' faces and figures were rated on a scale of one to nine. (Presumably there were no Bo Dereks or Robert Redfords.)

Although all the pressures were in the normal ranges among the younger subjects, female high school and college students rated in the top half for attractiveness had significantly lower blood pressure readings than girls in the bottom half.

The unattractive females, moreover, had higher average blood pressure even when obesity -- a major factor in high blood pressure -- was accounted for.

According to Hansell, whose report on the work will soon appear in Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin, the high-low difference was not detected in boys, or adult men and women.

"It seems there is hope," he said, "that once past adolescence, the stress of being unattractive abates and young women begin to evaluate themselves on what kind of people they are, not what they look like.

"What our study does is support a hypothesis implicit in the notion many people hold that unattractive people tend to have relatively fruitless and unhappy lives," Hansell said in an interview.

The hypothesis holds that when people are nice to look at, they receive "positive" feedback from others; when they are unattractive, they suffer rejection and psychological stress; and finally, stress triggers abnormal physiological responses, including high blood pressure.

Hansell cautioned that the higher blood pressures he found in teenage girls were "in an absolute sense" not dangerous to their health at present. Nor did his study include family histories to pin down whether the girls' pressures fell into inherited higher ranges.

"We have to repeat the studies and do a lot more work to pin this all down," Hansell said.

Among other things, future investigations will check to see what if any impact a person's height has on social and personal stress. "I suspect that for males at certain ages, being very short will produce the same effect on blood pressure we see in the unattractive girls. And I believe that lack of athletic ability or involvement for teenage males will as well."

Hansell is cheered by the fact that unattractive people seem to outgrow the kind of social stress linked to high blood pressure in his study. "Prior research has shown that self-consciousness and concern about attractiveness peak during adolescence.

"The challenge for future research is to discover the social and psychological processes which (provoke) this relationship and ways to help individuals head it off."

Make it yours: Fancy Christmas boxes from wood molding strips

By ELLEN APPEL
Copley News Service

If you're not a wood crafter, you may want to become one before Christmas. With strips of wood molding and tools from the average home workshop, you can make something for everyone on your gift list with ease, and at a fraction of the cost of comparable, ready-made products.

When boxes are completed, you can paint them, stain them, or cover them with decoupage. Here are basic directions for a wood molding box:

MATERIALS: Miter box for cutting accurate 45-degree and 90-degree angles; fine-toothed saw to use in the miter box; sandpaper for finishing; white glue; ¼-inch plywood or hardboard for the foundation; wood moldings as illustrated or substitutes. Shown here are "base caps" for the sides and "coves" for the handle (a). Corner clamps are helpful for constructing strong, secure corners.

BUYING HINTS: 1. Wood molding is available in lengths from 3 to 16 feet. Whenever possible, buy several shorter pieces rather than one long piece. 2. After you have determined the amount of wood molding needed, round up to the next largest foot to allow for cutting and trimming. 3. Buy enough hardboard or plywood to make any size box desired.

FOUNDATION BOX: 1. Cut sides, bottom, and lid from hardboard or plywood. 2. Glue sides and bottom together. Then allow glue to dry.

WOOD MOLDING: 1. Glue small pieces of molding together to make a handle. 2. Glue handle to lid. 3. Measure and cut molding to fit around outside of box. Use miter box to cut molding at 45-degree angles.

MEASURING HINTS: When mitering moldings, use the outside dimension as the length you'll need. To determine the outside dimensions, add the width of the moldings to the dimensions of the foundation box as illustrated (b).

FINISHING: 1. Place lid on box. 2. Glue moldings around sides of box. Be sure top edges of moldings are flush with the lid. 3. Let glue dry. 4. Finish with sandpaper. 5. Decorate as desired.

Unbeaten Rebels faced wounded Cougars

Rebs turn Cat tamer; Dogs go Bird hunting

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

Abilene Cooper, the pre-season choice in many polls to win the District 5-5A football crown, will come limping into Memorial Stadium today at 8 p.m. like a wounded Cougar intent on clawing and scratching for league survival against Midland Lee's unbeaten and hungry Rebels.

The matchup is being called the first major 5-5A showdown of the year since it pits two teams picked to make a major run at the title, but it has also turned into a survival battle for the Cougars since they were shocked by a 7-7 standoff to Odessa High last week.

Rebel coach Spike Dykes, who knows the importance of this contest, thinks that the Cooper-OHS tie last week will make things even tougher for his charges tonight. "If Cooper had beaten Odessa last week, there may have been a tendency for them to look ahead to Permian next week, but Cooper knows it must win this one to stay in the thick of the race," Dykes said.

"Certianly when you play the district favorite, it puts the game in a must win type of situation, but we really feel that way every week as well balanced as this league is this year. But I really feel that our players will meet the challenge.

"IT'S GOING to be a tough game. We expect one and are looking forward to it because this is what high school football is all about. They have more size, speed, numbers and depth than anyone in the district. I really doubt that if you combined all the players from Lee, Midland High, Odessa and Permian that Cooper would take any with the exception of maybe Midland High's Joe Goebel. They have a lot of talent on that team," Dykes noted.

The contest could turn into a battle of fullbacks since Lee's Calvin Riggs and Cooper's Alan Gunter are tied for third in the league rushing department with 448 yards each. Lee also boasts tailback Troy Barber with 302 yards to rank eighth while Cooper wingback Michael T. Royals, a 220-pound sophomore, ranks 13th with 221. Tailback Scott Reedy, who has 158 yards rushing, is another Cooper plus.

Cooper quarterback Brad Morrison ranks third in league passing with 268 yards while Lee's Bart Ryan has thrown for 182 yards. Both quarterbacks have tossed two TD aerials this year, but Morrison has been intercepted five times to Ryan's three.

Cooper appears to have the edge offensively, ranking second in the district while Lee ranks fifth. Defensively, Lee ranks second in district while Cooper is third, but Lee should have the edge here since the "Jaws of Death" defense has given up only 14 points this season and over 200 yards less than Cooper. Lee is giving up only an average of 2.8 points per game and has three shutouts to its credit while running to a perfect 5-0 mark. Cooper stands at 3-1-1.

"WE WILL have to play very well to beat Lee," Cooper coach Ray Overton states. "This is a very tough part of our season. We have Odessa High, Lee and Permian back-to-back and I don't think it can get any rougher than that.

"Lee has that big strong runner in Riggs and Barber has great speed. They also have that big 6-6 split end (Kenneth Brown) who is a great target and the offensive line seems to be doing a great job despite losing those two super guards they had last year in (Keith) Brown and (Irl) Connally. And they are probably even stronger on defense. It's a tough test no matter how you look at it.

"We are not executing very well right now. Turnovers have hurt us against both Odessa High and San Angelo. Odessa was a big part of the 7-7 tie last week, but we did have three critical turnovers against them. Our backs are to the wall right now and we just about have to win this one."

The defensive head busting in this one could jolt the Richter needle because the two teams probably own two of the most potent linebacking corps in the state. Lee's Terry Thompson is flanked by Kenneth Hardison and Van Gravitt while Cooper's Mike Stills has the aid of Ray Berry and Reedy. You might have to look far and wide to find a better set on one playing field.

The two teams fought to a 21-21 tie last year in a wild offensive show, but even more rides on this game. The winner will surely have momentum going into crucial battles on the horizon while the loser will be thrown into the regroup the forces mold. Coach Overton is right. No matter how you look at this one, it's going to be a big game — for both teams.

Lee shares 5-5A lead with Permian

Last week Odessa High knocked Abilene Cooper out of a three-way tie for first place in the District 5-5A standings by ending a four-quarter defensive struggle in a 7-7 tie. The failure to win dropped the Cougars to 1-0-1 on the season while OHS improved to 0-1-1.

With Cooper dropping out of the top spot, Midland Lee and Odessa Permian are sharing the honors of leading the pack with 2-0 records (5-0 overall). Cooper, a half game out, and Midland High and Abilene High, at 1-1, are waiting in the wings for both to stumble, which would put a new complexion in the league race.

COOPER will have a chance to help its own cause tonight by taking on the Lee Rebels at Memorial Stadium while Permian is off to Big Spring to face the 0-2 Steers (2-3 overall).

Another game that will effect the standings is between Midland High and Abilene High. The Eagles host the Bulldogs tonight at P.E. Shotwell Stadium and the loser will face the nearly impossible task of overcoming the front runners for the district championship.

BOTH MHS and AHS had surprising outings last week. Abilene High fell to Permian by a narrow 7-0 score and MHS exploded for a 33-13 win over Big Spring. The Pack's offense is now back in gear after junking the wishbone for the I and is the first district team to score 100 points this year.

All District 5-5A games are scheduled for an 8 p.m. kickoff.

Yanks expel Oakland

A's no match for New York's famed bullpen

By ERIC PREWITT

OAKLAND (AP) — The New York Yankees are in another World Series, lending a touch of tradition to a strange, strike-marred baseball season.

"I want a Yankees-Dodgers Series. I hate the Dodgers," said rookie pitcher Dave Righetti, one of the most openly delighted members of the team that won the American League pennant by beating the Oakland A's 4-0 Thursday night, sweeping the best-of-five league playoff.

The Yankees, who have made 32 previous World Series appearances, will open at home Tuesday night against either the Los Angeles Dodgers or Montreal Expos, tied 1-1 in the National League playoff that resumes tonight in Montreal.

All of the Yankees' Series teams of the past won 90 or more regular season games. The 1981 team won 59 in a season interrupted for two months because of the players' strike.

THERE WAS NO champagne in the Yankees' clubhouse, on orders of owner George Steinbrenner. And there were no complaints.

"We haven't won anything yet," said Steinbrenner, who embraced his most celebrated former employee, Billy Martin, and told the A's manager, "You never gave up, you little rat."

Martin predicted that his young team would win the AL West again next season. "And we'll go all the way then."

But Yankee Manager Bob Lemon, who replaced Martin during the championship season of 1978 and took over after Gene Michael was fired this year, is the man in charge as the Yankees go after a 23rd world championship.

"This ballclub has won a lot," said Reggie Jackson, who didn't even notice the absence of champagne until it was pointed out to him. "We're like the A's team of 1974. I think we broke open one bottle of champagne when we won the pennant that year, then headed for Los Angeles and won the Series in five games.

"We know we haven't reached our ultimate goal."

JACKSON, a member of the A's world championship teams of 1972-73-74, said he expects to be in the Yankees' starting lineup for the Series opener despite being held out of Thursday night's game because of a torn calf muscle.

"Nothing surprises me about our club. We knew what we had to do and we did it," said Graig Nettles, the veteran third baseman whose three-run double in the ninth inning off reliever Tom Underwood gave him a playoff record of nine runs batted in, earning him the series Most Valuable Player Award.

Righetti went six innings for the pitching victory and the Yankees' overpowering relievers, Ron Davis and Rich Gossage, came on to complete the five-hit shutout.

Willie Randolph, the New York second baseman demoted recently from the top of the batting order to the No. 9 spot, accounted for game's first run with a two-out homer in the sixth off A's starter Matt Keough.

"If I hadn't made that pitch, we still might be playing," said Keough, who was 2-0 against the Yankees in regular-season appearances and earned added respect Thursday night.

But the right-hander, who left after an error by second baseman Dave McKay got him in trouble in the ninth, probably could have hoped for only a 0-0 tie.

"We didn't hit the ball, didn't score runs," said A's right fielder Tony Armas, summing up the game and the series, in which the A's totaled four runs.

Martin talked before the series of having a pitching edge because the Yankees would be unable to use Ron Guidry and Righetti in the first two games at Yankee Stadium.

"I felt all along we had the pitching edge," said Nettles. "All our starters are strong, and we have the best bullpen in baseball."

DAVIS RETIRED all six batters he faced in the series finale. Gossage pitched the ninth and earned his fifth post-season save of the year, striking out two batters, giving up an Armas single and ending the game by retiring Wayne Gross on a popup.

Neither reliever had to face Rickey Henderson or Dwayne Murphy, the top two men in the Oakland order. Both A's outfielders left early in the

Ex-M-Cub Burris finds success in cheeseburger

By MIKE LITTWIN
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — After years of having to pitch for the Chicago Cubs, which is something like a gourmet being forced to eat at the Colonel's, Ray Burris was hungry for a game that meant something, one he could sink his teeth into.

But, then, Burris is always hungry. In the middle of his five-hit, 3-0 shutout of the Dodgers Wednesday night, in the middle of the biggest game of his life Burris was thinking about...a cheeseburger.

"I wish I'd had one," the Montreal pitcher said. "It might have put an extra five miles an hour on my fastball."

That was the Beast Brother in Burris talking. Woody Fryman, Burris' comrade in carbohydrates, is the other member in their two-man, face-stuffing society.

"They eat anything they see," said teammate Warren Cromartie. "That's how they got their name."

When Burris, who broke into pro baseball with the Midland Cubs back in 1972, came to the Expos this season after a seven-year major league career that was remarkable only for its mediocrity, he spread 205 pounds over his 6-5 frame. Fryman (6-2 and at last 215) took care of that.

"I got him up to 220," Fryman said. "That's how he got to be such a good pitcher."

AFTER WEDNESDAY'S performance in Game 2 of the National League playoffs, his teammates were probably tempted to call him their meal ticket.

"It was as good a game as I've ever seen him throw," Cromartie said.

It was a better game, much better, than the Dodgers, who couldn't begin to handle his off-speed stuff and only twice got runners as far as second base, had even seen him throw.

They remembered Burris as a promising young Cub who, like most promising young Cubs, had deteriorated along with the team. In 1979, he was traded from the Cubs to the Mets, from bad to maybe even worse, and they eventually cut him. The Yankees picked him up for the waiver price but didn't want him after last sason.

HE WAS a free agent whom no one wanted. The Expos, desperate for a pitcher, even one with a 63-76 lifetime record and 4.26 earned averag3, signed him to a one-year contract.

"We didn't know what he could do," Expos President John McHale said.

So what has he done? He was 9-7 this season, but more important, he was 6-2 in the second half. In the game that most Expos con ider to be the season's turning point, he pitched 10 innings of a 17-inning, 1-0 win over Philadelhia on Sept. 21. The Expos began a six-game winning streak with that victory.

Suddenly, the Expos were on their way, and Burris, after years of frustration, was on his.

But the Dodgers suffered no lack of confidence Wednesday night against Burris, whom they'd handled earlier this season. After all, they had Fernando Valenzuela going and the Dodgers have come to think of him as an automatic win.

"I'm sure everybody came out to see Fernando Valenzuela," Burris said, "and they found a new star tonight."

Maybe that was overstating the case, but Burris is allowed. The way he kept the Dodgers off balance, you'd have thought Dodger Stadium was tilted.

He threw fastball, slider, curveball, change. He mixed his pitches up — like a salad, he'd say — and the Dodgers never figured out the recipe.

"He had everything working tonight," Montreal catcher Gary Carter said. "He was in complete control on the mound. He knew what he wanted to do and he did it."

It wasn't always that way, of course. He was a Wrigley Field pitcher and he had pitched just one way, throw the sinker and try to keep the ball in the park. He changed his style with the Expos after he determined, in his words, he was "hitting the bat with my sinker too often."

PITCHING coach Galen Cisco and his good friend Fryman worked with him. And he worked with himself, sitting down and figuring out what his priorities as a pitcher should be. Cisco helped his delivery and got his fastball to go where it once jus sat. Fryman helped with his confidence, and with his waistline.

"You can't pitch undernourished," Fryman said. "We eat barbecue ribs, chicken, pancakes, just about everything. We always go out together. !nd when he comes to Cincinnati, I take him home to the farm and he really eats."

Carbohydrates are the important ingredient in his diet, Burris said. So on Monday night, Burris and Fryman were at an Italian restaurant, stuffing themselves.

Don't be fooled by the Cougars

TED BATTLES BATTLE SCENE

Midland Lee started the season as one of the highly-regarded dark-horses in the District 5-5A, but, said the experts, the Rebels won't quite be in the same class as defending state champion Odessa Permian and Abilene Cooper, the team that should give the Panthers a run for their money, they said.

That still may be true, and judging by the shoehorn fit of some of those scores last week, there may be a lot of surprises before matters are settled in the league that prides itself with being the toughest in Texas.

Nevertheless, going into tonight's game, Lee is tied with Permian for first while Cooper is saddled with a league tie, not to mention a non-district loss.

Chances are if Lee Coach Spike Dykes had his druthers, it would be that Cooper was coming into Memorial Stadium tonight undefeated, like everyone expected. As it is, instead of approaching the game with the smug satisfaction, maybe just a little fat and overconfident, the wounded Cougars are perhaps more treacherous than ever.

At any rate, it doesn't fool Spike for an instant. "More raw material than anybody in the district," he marvels, "They scare me. Who is it, the Cincinnati Bengals that have the biggest backfield in the National Football League? Well, Cooper's backs are just as big, only they are faster"...

WHENEVER a back piles 231 yards rushing in a game as Midland High's Wesley Williams did last week against Big Spring, it means a gifted runner has performed well and so have they folks in front of him.

Movies of the game revealed that's the way it was last Friday. Williams, named on the Texas State High School Honor Roll this week, was superb and so was the line up front. And, if blockers deserved Honor Roll recognition, Midland fullback Alex Mata, 160-pounds of blocking fury, earned it.

Mata was usually leading the way for Wesley and leveling his man at the point attack to open up those running avenues...

BOTH MIDLAND'S Pat Culpepper and Lee's Spike Dykes think along the same lines when it comes to their junior varsity programs.

Says Spike, "The JVs don't get nearly the credit they deserve in preparing us for our next game. They serve as the scout team, running the opposition plays and defenses at the expense of perhaps their own won-lost record. After working with us all week, they don't have much time to prepare for their game. It's impossible to estimate what their value is to us."

Says Pat, "At the JV level, it's time for a young athlete to extend himself in an effort to improve. He does this by working out during the week by working out with the Wally Kleines, Joe Goebels of the varsity. Physically, they aren't capable of handling players like this yet, but it's against competition like this that they improve.

"Of course, their won-lost record becomes secondary, but we aren't thinking in terms of this year. We feel we'll realize the benefits in future seasons."...

AS THE teams lined up for the kickoff to the TCU-SMU game a few weeks back, we observed to a nearby policeman, "If that car with the lights on had been a Honda instead of a Mazda, I'd have been worried. The color and plate letters and numbers are the same, but the numerals were in a different order...." That's when it dawned that it was too much of a coincidence.

So it's always nice to know you are not the only one...The Odessa radio crew arrived in El Paso and set up to do the play-by-play of the Odessa Permian-Coronado game a few weeks back. Just one hitch. A member of the radio crew had had the phone lines installed at Ysleta Stadium, 10 miles across town...no broadcast.

ABILENE—Midland High's girls volleyball teams swept both the varsity and JV games here Thursday night. The varsity won 15-7 and 15-3 and the JV won 15-6, 15-4.

For the varsity, the win raised the season's record to 14-11 and gave the Bulldogs a 2-1 second half record in the District 5-5A race.

Bullpups rip Abilene, 22-8

The Midland High junior varsity scored two touchdowns quickly Thursday night to build up a 16-0 lead and went on to post a 22-8 victory over Abilene High at Memorial Stadium.

On their first possession, the Bullpups marched 71 yards in five plays for their first score. Terry McGowan covered the biggest portion of the drive on his 55-yard scoring run. Kyle Kitto ran for the two points for an 8-0 lead.

The second score, still in the first quarter, came when Raymond Chambers scored from five yards out. The score was set up by Earl Baldridge who blocked an Eagle punt at the 35 and Midland High recovered at the five. The Bullpups then threw screen pass from Kitto to McGowan from the PAT kicking formation for the 16-0 lead.

Early in the third quarter, Abilene puts its only points on the scoreboard when quarterback Steve Stacy hit tight end Mark Stevens on an 18-yard pass play. The two then teamed up for the points after on a pass.

The Bullpups added some insurance points before the quarter ended when Kenneth White hit Randall Collins on a 26-yard scoring pass. The run for the PAT failed, but Midland held a 22-8, the eventual margin of victory.

Midland could have really broken the game open in the third quarter, but a crucial penalty nullified an 84-yard touchdown run by Chambers who had an outstanding offensive game for MHS.

On defense, the Bullpups made mistakes on several instances but recovered enough to keep Abilene out of the end zone on all but one series. In the fourth quarter, defensive back Terry Hannon, who had been playing a tough game all night, came up with the lone interception of the night to end an Eagle threat.

With the victory, MHS improved its record to 2-3 on the season while Abilene fell to 4-2.

Brigade beats Stanton

Midland Lee's sophomore Stonewall Brigade upped its record to 5-1 Thursday by scoring a 22-8 victory over the Stanton junior varsity at the Lee practice field.

Lee got its first socre from Sergio Ochoa in the first quarter with Tim Wright kicking the point after. A second Stonewall Brigade touchdown came in the second on Scott Hicks touchdown run with Ochoa adding the two-point conversion and the third score came in the third quarter on Jeff Motley's run with Jansen Sly kicking the PAT.

Mark Helms scored for Stanton with Tommy Ramos catching the two-point pass.

TORONTO (AP) — "Tough but fair" replied pitcher Joey McLaughlin when asked to describe Bobby Cox.

The assssment by McLaughlin, who once played for Cox, may not have been the most original, but it summed up the eputation generally held by the new Toronto Blue Jays manager.

A product of the New York Yankees as both a player and coach, Cox, 40, brings a victory-oriented viewpoint to the worst team in the American League.

The managers he admires are Billy Martin, Earl Weaver and Ralph Houk.

Expos fire ace Rogers against Dodgers Reuss tonight

By HAL BOCK

MONTREAL (AP) — The Montreal Expos, with the best-of-five National League Championship Series tied one game each, are back in their home stadium, where they excel, and have Steve Rogers, their best pitcher, ready to roll.

"It's all very nice and good," said Rogers, who beat Philadelphia's Steve Carlton twice in the NL East series, winning the first and fifth games. "But this year, tomorrow always seems to be the most important day of the season."

Tonight, he will face the Los Angeles Dodgers' Jerry Reuss — who pitched 18 scoreless innings against Houston in the NL West series — in what could be less than ideal baseball conditions. The forecast called for showers today, then clearing tonight with temperatures in the 40s.

"Pitching will be the key," said Expos Jim Fanning. "And, if cold weather is a factor, we live in it. It goes with the territory. We'll use hand warmers, heavy coats, heavy gloves, earmuffs, whatever it takes."

You won't find the Expos complaining much. They are happy to be back home with the series all even. The survivor of what is now a best-of-three affair will meet the New York Yankees in the World Series, starting Tuesday night at Yankee Stadium. New York completed a three-game sweep of the Oakland A's with a 4-0 victory Thursday night.

Fanning said he won't soon forget the ninth inning of Wednesday night's second game at Dodger Stadium. It was a game the Expos figured they simply had to have.

In the bullpen, relievers Elias Sosa, Jeff Reardon and Woodie Fryman were all warmed up and ready to go. On the mound, Ray Burris was struggling. In the dugout, Fanning turned to pitching coach Galen Cisco.

"I said to Galen, 'Our best pitcher is on the mound,'" Fanning recalled. "And he said, 'You're right.'"

When Burris got into a jam and Los Angeles had two runners on base with one out, the Fanning-Cisco conversation was repeated with almost the same words exchanged.

Then Burris, a journeyman right-hander, got Pedro Guerrero to line into a game-ending double play, nailing down the 3-0 victory that sent Montreal home very happy.

"Everything was on the line in that game," Fanning said. "After losing the first game, the Wednesday night game was an absolute must."

Burris' shutout was a stunner. "The guy just pitched an excellent game," said Dodger Manager Tommy Lasorda. "He surprised me. You bet he did. He hadn't pitched a shutout in a long time."

The Dodger manager said the split in Los Angeles makes tonight's third game pivotal. "Whoever wins that one is in the driver's seat," he said. "Win that one and then you only have to win one of two."

Even though they're on the road, Lasorda thinks the Dodgers are far better off going into Game Three against Montreal than they were when they came home against Houston in the divisional playoffs after losing the first two on the road against the Astros. The Dodgers swept the next three games to advance to the League Championship series.

"Against Houston, we couldn't lose anymore," he said. "You're a lot better off 1-1 than 0-2 and I don't care if you're going to play the next game on top of a mountain."

What's more, Lasorda doesn't care about the climate on that mountaintop. "I'll only worry about the weather if it snows on our side of the field and not theirs," he quipped.

Green eyes new pilot

By JOE MOOSHIL

CHICAGO (AP) — Dallas Green helped the Philadelphia Phillies move from the basement to the penthouse in less than 10 years, and now he's been hired as general manager by the Chicago Cubs to guide them out of the losing wilderness.

"I'm no Messiah but I guarantee nobody's going to outwork us," said Green at a Thursday news conference called to announce officially that he had been hired as the Cubs' general manager and executive vice president.

"It's intriguing and exciting," he said. "If I didn't think I could do the job, I wouldn't be here today."

Green, in the Philadelphia organization since 1954, managed the Phils to their first World Series championship last year. This year, his charges were nosed out by the Montreal Expos in the National League's Eastern Division playoff.

Dallas Green

Green, who had been groomed for the general manager's job with the Phillies, was introduced by Andrew J. McKenna, chairman and chief executive officer of the Cubs since they were bought by Tribune Co. from William Wrigley last summer.

"Green's background is consistent with the criteria established for the job he is assuming," said McKenna. "It was considered important that the candidate have a background in player development and come from a winning organization. Green will have complete authority in the operation of the club."

TERMS OF GREEN'S contract were not revealed, but it was believed to be long-term and lucrative.

Green, 47, originally turned down the Cub offer but said, "Andy was very persistent."

Green saw similarities between the Cubs of today and the Phillies of 1972, who finished 33 games behind the division leader.

"This is a big moment in my life and, hopefully, a big moment in Cub history," said Green.

Green said plans to change the attitude of the Cubs. "Any losing organization has attitude problems," he said. "You have to renew pride and dedication. The Cubs have not been successful and somebody has to take the responsibility."

Green expects to have people from the Phillie organization join him in Chicago but "by no means do I plan to rape the Phillies organization. It's just that some people will want to come with me."

THE NEW GENERAL manager left his options open on a field manager, although rumor has it that Lee Elia, his third base coach at Philadelphia, will get the job currently held by Joey Amalfitano.

"I want to talk to Joey face to face first and then I'll make my decision," said Green, who expects to meet with Amalfitano early next week.

Green said it was a difficult decision for him to leave the Phillies, who have been put up for sale by owner Ruly Carpenter.

"I have sincere appreciation for what Ruly has done for me and my family, and (Philadelphia general manager) Paul Owens and I grew up together," said Green. "But I have to close my era with the Phillies and go on with the Cubs."

In Philadelphia, Carpenter said, "We're sorry to see Dallas leave the Phillies, but we're happy for him and the opportunity he's been given. He did a great job for the Phillies in every capacity he served. Everyone knows he was being groomed for a front office position with the Phillies."

Owens said, "Dallas and I were as close as anyone over the last 10 to 12 years. We worked hard to make the Phillies a winner. I had hoped he and I could have worked together a few more years, but the Cubs came up with a great opportunity. Like Ruly, I'm kind of sad and yet I'm tickled for him. It's kind of like watching a son graduate."

OWENS also said no immediate decision will be made on a successor to Green as field manager.

Touching on a variety of topics during the news conference, Green said "money is available" for the Cubs to sign free agents; that no decision will be made immediately on whether to install lights in Wrigley Field; and that Bill Buckner, frequent subject of trade rumors, "is not going anywhere if I can help it."

Brown holds stroke margin

HORSESHOE BAY, Texas (AP) — Doug Brown fired a six-under-par 66 Thursday to take a one stroke edge going into Friday's final round of the rain-shortened Texas State Open golf tournament at the Horseshoe Bay Country Club.

Brown, an Arlington pro, got seven birdies and just one bogey over the 6,839-yard par-72 course. He shot a one-under par 71 in Wednesday's first round.

Wednesday's leader, Robert Hoyt, shot 72 Thursday and dropped to fourth place just one stroke behind Roger Parker of San Antonio and Terry Snodgrass of Arlington who posted two-day totals of 138.

Four strokes behind the leader were Dave Davis of Fort Worth, Greg Young of Dallas and Don Massengale of Conroe.

Bobby Walzel of Missouri City had a two-day total of 142, followed by Jimmy Johnson of Denton, Steve Veriato of Wimberly, Rives McBee of Irving, Robert Thompson of Huntsville, Benny Passons of Fort Worth and Don Robertson of Denton, all at 143.

Mitchell BASS leader

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Stanley Mitchell has a very precious possession — the one lure on which he caught a limit of seven fish that gave him the lead going into today's second round of the $100,000 BASS Masters Classic fishing tournament.

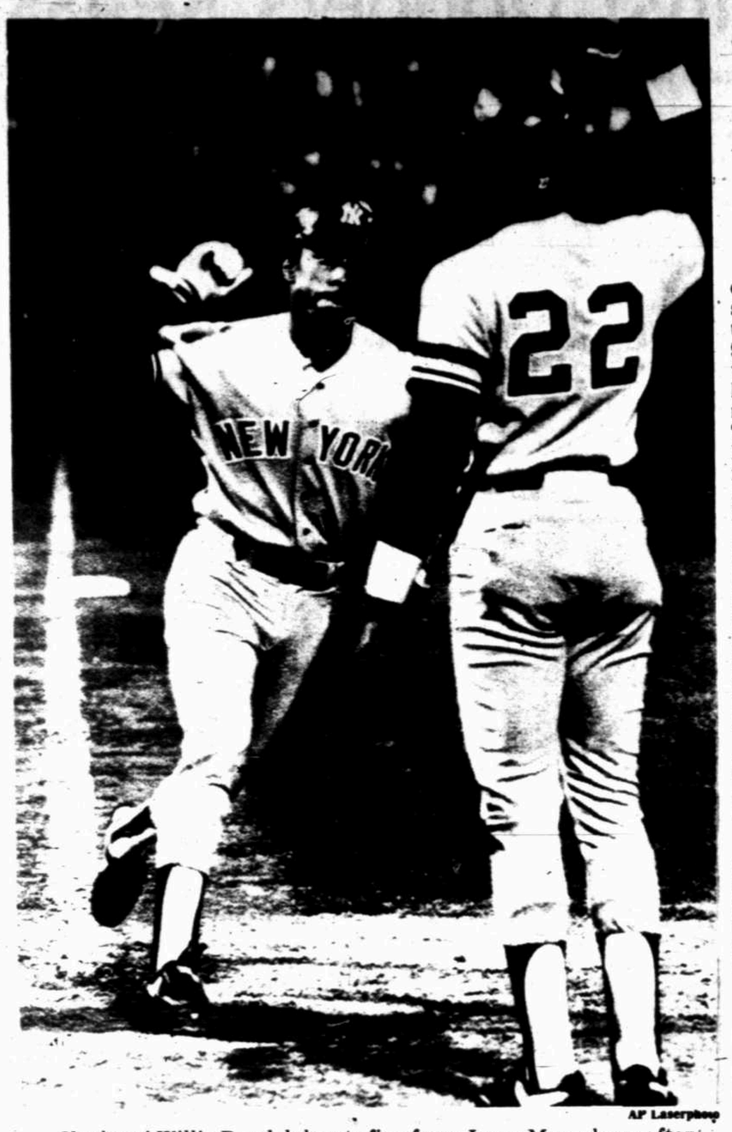

Mitchell, 21, of Fitzgerald, Ga., is the youngest angler in the tournament sponsored by the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society.

He checked in 15 pounds, 5-ounces of black bass Thursday for the first step toward the $40,000 first prize.

The timber business operator refused to say what lure he was using, but admitted the fish were hitting a little behind it and he may add a trailing hook.

"I've got six or seven places to go where I think there are fish. I don't think the fish will move" to other spots in the 75-mile-long Lake Montgomery, he said.

game, Murphy with an injured ribcage and Henderson with a bruised wrist.

"That was an awfully big thing for them," said Gossage. "Those two are among the best players in either league."

The Yankees' bullpen strength, as Lemon said, "makes it cut and dried what we're going to do" late in games.

"If you let a runner get on base after the seventh, you know you're probably coming out," said Righetti, who is 3-0 in postseason play including his two divisional playoff victories over Milwaukee.

"The way the Goose (Gossage) was firing, it was just 'Forget It' for the A's," said Righetti, the rookie from nearby San Jose whose father, Leo, a former minor league player, saw him pitch as a pro for the first time.

Lee laughs way to v-ball victory

By MIKE CRUVER

Midland Lee was beaten everywhere but on the scoreboard as the Rebels took a luckluster, 15-6, 9-15, 15-11, District 5-5A volleyball win from Abilene Cooper Thursday night on the Lee court. The victory ups the Rebs' second-half loop record to 2-1, 17-10 overall. Cooper drops to 1-2 in the district race.

Lee was plagued by lack of movement and teamwork, some horrible setting and equally bad spiking. Still, when the big play was needed, Lee's superior talent was able to get the point when the Cougars were unable.

In the first set, Cooper jumped to a quick 3-0 lead on the serves of Mona Bidwell and Tammy Johnston.

Sylvia Ochotorena, a surprise starter for Debra Quintela, scored Lee's first point on a booming serve that Kelly Steele was unable to handle.

ROZENA McCabe stepped up to serve with the Rebels down 3-1, and promptly put Lee in front 6-3 as she pounded in five serves. McCabe was aided by a block by Lesa Burnett and two return errors by Jimmie Needham.

Lee's Felicia Farias, Suzanna McGaha and Burnett combined for six good serves to move the lead to 12-3.

Cooper came alive to score three points, but it wasn't enough as Pam Landers hit two good serves and Ochotorena nailed the winner as Lee prevailed.

IN THE second set, Lee fell asleep. Cooper took advantage of some shoddy defense play by the Rebels to race to a 6-1 lead.

The Rebels didn't seem too concerned as several of the players looked at the scoreboard and were laughing and having a merry-old-time, either confident they could win or not caring.

By the time Lee coach Janice Baulich called timeout, with Cooper up 12-5, the Lee players had a more serious look on their faces.

Lee made the set interesting as the Rebs fended of two game points while McCabe was serving four winners. The brief rally cut the margin to 14-9 but the end came when Farias and Burnnet missed signals on a Johnston serve and the return was hit softly into the net.

IN THE third and deciding set, Lee still didn't seem serious about the match. As they served first, several players were laughing and seemed to be talking to each other and not playing attention to what was going on on the court.

Two events fired up the Rebs down the stretch. Down 3-1, an upset coach Baulich yelled "move your feet" and then McCabe came from across court to dive into the Lee bench for a serve-saving play.

McCabe's play and Baulich's outburst seem to spark the rest of the Rebels as they battled back to take a 9-6 lead, fell back 11-9, then rallied to go ahead 13-11.

Cooper had two opportunities to tie the score, but a block by McGaha, a save out of the net by Quintela and a smash by Farias turned back the Cougar threat.

Burnett finally ended the struggle with two serves. Her first serve was to hot for the Cougs to handle and McGaha blocked the return effort of Julie Barry for the winner on the second.

IN THE junior varsity clash, Lee went three sets before subduing the stubborn Cougars 15-5, 9-15, 15-11.

The junior varsity will be in action Saturday when they play in the district jv tournament in Big Spring. Lee's next varsity game will be Tueaday when the Rebels host Big Spring in an important contest.

World's greatest athlete not as easy any more

(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

There are cliches within cliches in sports. The guy who runs the 100 in the best time is always "the world's fastest human." The fighter who wins the welterweight or middleweight championship is "pound-for-pound" the best fighter in the world. And the guy who wins the Olympic Decathlon becomes, overnight, "the world's greatest athlete."

Sometimes, he isn't. Sometimes, he's just a guy who's medicore in all 10 events, and other times he's a guy who's world class in one or two of them, mediocre in six and poor in two.

In 1912, there was very little doubt the decathlon winner was indeed the "world's greatest athlete." In fact, the king of Sweden so anoited him, probably giving birth to the cliche in the first place. "Sir, you are the greatest athlete in the world," King Gustaf told the American, Jim Thorpe. Thorpe either said "Thanks, King," or, "You said it," depending on which apocrypha you read.

THORPE WON the pentathlon and decathlon in those Stockholm Olympics and, that year, he also scored 25 touchdowns and 198 points for the little Carlysle Indian School in Pennsylvania, on a team which didn't have much else. The team, which consisted mainly of Thorpe, beat Army that year, 27-6. Thorpe was also good enough to play major league baseball for six years with the Giants, Reds, and Boston Braves, and one year he got 10 triples out of only 73 total hits. He played pro-football (Canton Bulldogs) till he was 39 years old.

And, one other decathlete who measures up to the gaudy identification of "world's greatest" was Bob Mathias, the Tulare schoolboy who was the only athlete ever to win two Olympic decathlons. Bob Mathias won them back-to-back, of course. He became a decathlete not because he wasn't good enough to specialize in one event -- he actually could have made the Olympic team in two — but because he was so good at most things he couldn't make up his mind which to settle on. He was the best high school football player on the Pacific Coast when he was growing up in Tulare in the San Joaquin Valley. He averaged 18 points a game in basketball.

WHEN MATHIAS won the decathlon in the 1948 Olympics, he was only 17 years old and the weather was so foul that year that the 1500 meters was more of a channel swim then a footrace, the pole vault had to be held by flashlight and, once, they lost his javelin in the dark, and had to search an hour and a half for his discus mark. Still, Mathias put up a record 7,139 points. He didn't even shave yet.

While waiting for the 1952 Olympics, Mathias played football at Stanford. He put the Cardinals in the 1952 Rose Bowl by returning a kickoff 96 yards against USC in a 1951 game at the Coliseum that Stanford won 27-20. He averaged 25.2 yards in kickoff returns for his two years there.

At Helsinki in 1952, Mathias bettered every decathlon mark he had set in London and, even though the point system had been revised because of his own achievements, he again broke the record with 7,887 points. He won the event by 900 points, largest margin in Olympic history.

Sportsman, actor, Marine Corps captain, member of Congress for eight years (he once described politics as the equivalent of running down a slippery runway in the pole vault inthe rain after dark), Bob Mathias is now the director of the United States Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs.

DIRECTOR Mathias thinks the day may be long gone when a kid in sneakers carrying a vaulting pole can come wandering down out of the Central Valley like a Rafer Johnson or a Bob Mathias and ask which way to the shot putt. The next "world's greatest athlete" is probably going to have to have intensive training in his events, unlike a Mathias who had never even held a javelin or a pole vault in his hands till four months before the '48 Olympics.

You can't pick a team by asking for a show of hands anymore. New techniques in Sports medicine alone give an edge to the carefully-prepared team," Mathias feels. But, on the other hand, neither is he one of the doomsayers who thinks the Olympic movement had bypassed America. From his vantage point at the crossroads of the movement in Colorado Springs, Bob sees American concentration on things formerly overlooked — judo squads, women's volleyball, for instance. For America, the Games are no longer considered over after the 400-meter relays.

But, will there be another Thorpe or Mathias or Rafer Johnson who will come walking out of a Western Valley with a homemade javelin, a book on how to hold a shot putt, and the foot speed of a frightened mustang? "Why not?" smiles Bob Mathias. "In Europe, they go find them. In America, they find us. They always have."

Dallas' Hill questionable for Sunday's contest

(Compiled from R-T wire services)

Dallas wide receiver Tony Hill became dehydrated in practice Thursday, suffered severe cramps and was taken to Baylor Medical Center to have fluids administered intravenously. Head Coach Tom Landry had returned Hill to starter status Wednesday. Hill lost his starting job earlier because of hamstring and groin injuries and it wasn't certain whether Hill would start against the Rams Sunday...

Baylor's Grant Teaff said junior Mike Brannan will replace Jay Jeffrey as quarterback Saturday against Texas A&M. Jeffrey was all-SWC quarterback last year. Brannan was a starter two years ago. He has played sparingly since because of two knee operations. But Brannan did play in the second half against Southern Methodist last Saturday. And Teaff said Brannan's two quick touchdowns made him reevaluate the quarterback situation. "I started out the week trying to be fair to both Jay and Mike," Teaff said. "Both are proven players, so ultimately it came down to a gut feeling and I chose Mike. My concern is that people might think I'm down on Jay. I'm not. I'm up on Mike Brannan."...

Freshman wide receiver and punt returner Bobby Leach will miss SMU's Saturday game at Houston and will be replaced by Henry Andrade, Ron Meyer said. Leach, SMU's number two wide receiver, suffered a bruised kidney in last Saturday's game against Baylor.

Andrade, a Sacramento, Calif., native, is a former high school national record-holder in the 60-yard hurdles. He led SMU's junior varsity with 33.4 yards average per catch, but has played sparingly for the varsity...

Former WBA heavyweight champion John Tate stopped Barry Funches in the seventh round of a scheduled 10-round bout Thursday night at Atlantic City, N.J. knocking Funches to the canvas with several overhand rights. The referee stopped the fight at 2:59 of the seventh round.

Ferragamo misses trip

MONTREAL (AP) — Quarterback Vince Ferragamo, once touted as the savior of pro football in Montreal, won't accompany the Alouettes to Toronto for a game Saturday with the Argonauts, the Canadian Football League team said Thursday.

Montreal Coach Jim Eddy said that veteran Gerry Dattilio and Ken Johnson, acquired this week from the Calgary Stampeders for future considerations, will be his quarterbacks.

"Vince had all kinds of chances to prove himself, and to this point hasn't shown he deserves the No.1 job," Eddy told reporters without naming his starter for Saturday.

Hogs' Holtz in rare form

By HARRY KING

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Lou Holtz says he may be guilty of the same mistake his mother made 15 years ago.

"I was an assistant at South Carolina under Paul Dietzel," Holtz, now the coach at Arkansas, recalled. "We had won one game and lost nine and we made this highlights film to be used in recruiting.

"My mother doesn't know much about football, but I took it home and showed it to her. Then, she wanted to know why we weren't in a bowl game.

"I might be guilty of the same thing, but I think we're capable of playing a heckuva game against an outstanding opponent."

Arkansas takes on top-ranked Texas on regional television Saturday in Fayetteville, so Holtz should find out if his hunch is right.

"We believe football should be fun," Holtz said. "You come to Arkansas to play in this type of game. If you don't enjoy this week, you won't ever enjoy anything about football."

Texas is 4-0 after blasting Oklahoma 34-14. Arkansas is 4-1, losing to Texas Christian 28-24 two weeks ago after leading by 11 points with less than six minutes remaining.

That ended Arkansas' 22-game winning streak over TCU. Ironically, it was a field goal by Fred Akers — now the Texas coach — that started that streak, 3-0, in 1958.

"That loss ... speaks of the strength of this conference," Akers said. "No team has the corner on talent."

Akers was also asked about the "Big Shootout" in 1969, when Arkansas and Texas played in December in Fayetteville with the national championship on the line and then-President Richard Nixon in the stands.

Texas won 15-14; Akers was a Longhorn assistant.

"I didn't think it was particularly well played on the part of Texas," Akers said. "Big plays made the difference. Normally, there are just a handful of plays that make a difference. It might be a mistake or great execution.

"It might be a pass interception or a kick return. And, you never know when they're going to come."

Akers was asked if his team could be looking ahead to next week when the Longhorns meet Southern Methodist — unbeaten and an upset winner over Texas last year in Austin.

"Are you kidding?" he said.

FORD'S UP-FRONT MONEY

A better way to beat the high cost of financing.

Ford and your participating Ford dealers are offering money up-front on some of their best selling, highest mileage new 1981 and 1982 cars. Money to help finance the new car you need. It means you can lower your monthly payments by applying the savings to your downpayment and borrowing less to begin with. Or get a check directly from Ford. It's your choice.

CASH UP-FRONT. Others make you wait up to four years to get your full money's worth. But Ford can put cash in your pocket sooner.

Not a reduced annual percentage rate, but cash up-front.

MAKE YOUR BEST DEAL. Then top it off with hundreds of dollars in savings. Save $700 on America's newest two seater, front-wheel-drive Ford EXP. Save up to $500 on front-wheel-drive Ford Escort. And save $600 on America's most popular sports car, Ford Mustang. Dealer contribution may affect customer price. Amounts may be lower in Texas. Limit five per customer.

ORDER NOW. To get your share of Ford's Up-Front Money, see your Ford dealer and order between now and November 22.

MORE VALUE NEWS. Remember, if you're looking for a mid-size family car, Ford Fairmont Futura 4-door is actually sticker priced lower than last year. On top of that, Ford is offering special value packages on many other popular models. So be sure to check out all the value news from Ford for 1982.
