South Africa drops treason charges

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government withdrew treason charges today against 12 of South Africa's most prominent apartheid foes who had been accused of supporting the aims of the banned African National Congress guerrilla group.

Natal Province Attorney General Michael Imber announced in Natal Province Supreme Court that charges were dropped against the defendants in South Africa's most important treason trial in more than 20 years. Imber said the trial will continue for four other defendants in the case.

The move resulted in wild scenes of jubilation outside the court in Pietermaritzburg, where relatives and friends hugged and kissed the 12. Mewa Ramgobin, 52, said, "Our acquittal is an indictment of security police methods. We have been vindicated. The struggle will continue."

All 12 are members of the United Democratic Front, a nationwide, multiracial anti-apartheid alliance that claims 2 million members.

"While there's no doubt we were on trial, apartheid was also on trial, and the methods of our struggle under the banners of the Natal Indian Congress and the UDF were held in question. Now we have been vindicated. We hope the rulers of the country come to their senses," Ramogobin said.

The Natal Indian Congress is South Africa's oldest political party, founded by Mohandas K. Gandhi in 1894. Gandhi then was working in South Africa.

The Congress is also the nation's oldest anti-apartheid organization. There are about 850,000 Asians in South Africa, most of them residing in Natal province.

Charges were dropped against Ramgobin, George Sewpershad, 43; M.J. Naidoo, 53; Dr. Essop Jassat, 52; Aubrey Mokoena, 52; Curtis Mkondo, 56; lawyer Archie Gumede, 70; Paul David, 40; Albertina Sisulu, 66; the Rev. Frank Chikane, 34; social worker Cassim Salojee, 49; and teacher Ismail Mohammed, 54.

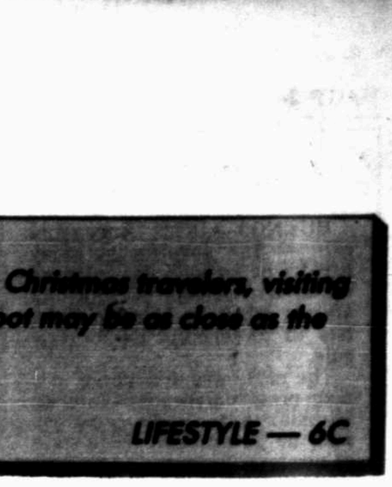

Mrs. Sisulu is a president of the UDF and her husband, Walter, is a former ANC leader serving a life sentence for trying to overthrow the white-led government.

Gumede, Naidoo, Ramgobin and Sewpershad were among six men who sought refuge in the British consulate in Durban more than a year ago, and spent weeks inside to escape arrest for their anti-apartheid activities.

The trial of the 16 began in May, after they had been granted bail. Some of the defendants had first appeared in court about a year ago, after the three-month holdout in the British consulate.

Justice John Milne urged those freed today to restrain their exhilaration until they left the court. Outside the building, Gumede said, "This ordeal has not discouraged me in the least to continue to work toward a peaceful South Africa."

Saloojee said, "We are confident that freedom will come to South Africa." The four still on trial in Pietermaritzburg are trade unionists Sisa Njikaleni, 29; Sam Kikine, 36; Isaac Ngcobo, 36; and Thozamile Gqweta.

OPEC ministers vow to take 'fair share'

GENEVA (AP) — OPEC ministers, ending three days of talks, vowed today to fight for a "fair share" of world oil sales even if it means lower prices and predicted stiffer competition against non-OPEC producers.

The ministers stopped short of formally breaking with their failing strategy of propping up oil prices by restricting their production. They said they had reaffirmed all previous OPEC resolutions.

But sources speaking on condition of anonymity said the ministers had come to a tacit understanding they would focus on defending a specific share of the market even if it meant risking a price decline.

"I am not intending to declare a price war," said Venezuelan Oil Minister Arturo Hernandez Grisanti, who was elected chairman of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Grisanti stressed, however, that the ministers knew stiffer price competition with non-OPEC producers was likely to result.

He said a committee of five member countries had been appointed to study the likelihood of a price war and to recommend a "comprehensive" pricing and production policy at the next OPEC meeting. The next regular meeting is set for June but sources said a special session was likely in February or March.

The committee is comprised of ministers from Venezuela, Iraq, Kuwait, Indonesia and the United Arab Emirates.

Grisanti said OPEC was prepared for stiffer oil-price competition.

"OPEC is not without instruments and ways and means" to challenge non-OPEC producers for a stable share of the market, he said. When pressed by reporters, he refused to say what those weapons were.

TDC inmates get five-day Christmas furlough

HOUSTON (AP) — Under a prison fellowship pilot program, 26 inmates of the Texas Department of Corrections will be spending Christmas in Houston homes instead of behind bars.

Inmates chosen to take part in the five-day furlough are active participants in religious activities at their prison units. Each is a prison trusty, a status that affords them more responsibility than given to regular prisoners.

Ed Williamson, president of Prison Fellowship, a non-profit, service-oriented organization, said the program is designed to help rehabilitate prisoners through Christ.

"We hope to strengthen the inmates by showing them that we care," he said.

Williamson said the prisoners are urged to use their new-found faith as the basis for a better life. None of the host families knows anything about the background of the men who will stay in their homes, he said.

During their leave, inmates will be kept busy with a full schedule of activities sponsored by area churches. Most of their time will be spent in Bible studies and discipleship training classes, Williamson said.

"These men will remember what families are like," said Margaret Rust, who along with her husband, David, have been active in the prison ministry for about 10 years. David Rust is the assistant chaplain at the Harris County Jail.

Fernando Rocha, 38, who will be the Rusts' house guest, is serving a 15-year sentence for murder.

Rocha says that although the killing was in self-defense, he is not bitter about the time he must spend in a prison cell.

"God did not become real to me until I got to prison," he said.

To maintain proper security within the prison units, Rocha and the other inmates did not learn of their furloughs until last week, Williamson said. The announcement, however, was pleasant.

"I've been up since 4 a.m.," said David Edwards, 22. "I couldn't sleep, I was so thrilled."

Edwards, a Houston native, is hoping the furlough will help him by showing him how Christian families deal with day-to-day problems.

East, West Germany trade number of spies

BONN, West Germany (AP) — East and West Germany exchanged a "limited number" of jailed intelligence agents last week, the chief Bonn government spokesman said today.

Spokesman Friedhelm Ost, speaking at a news conference, said a "small exchange" of convicted spies took place Wednesday afternoon.

Ost refused to say how many people were involved.

But reliable Bonn government sources said one convicted Communist East German agent, Guenter Wiedemann, was released from a West German prison in exchange for two West German intelligence agents who were jailed in East Germany.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, could not provide the names of the two West German agents.

Ost also refused to say where the spy exchange had taken place, and other sources could not provide the location.

Ost also refused to identify the spies who had been exchanged but said they were not considered top agents.

He confirmed part of a report that appeared today in the Hamburg-published Bild mass-circulation newspaper. Bild was quoted as saying a two-for-one trade had been made, but did not identify the agents involved.

According to the newspaper, the pair released by Communist East Germany were a man and an elderly woman who had been convicted of spying for West Germany and sentenced to long prison terms.

Church, state officials discuss needs of poor

MERCEDES, Texas (AP) — Church and state officials, gathering here for a convention of Valley Interfaith, said a long, treacherous road still lies ahead in obtaining jobs and services for the area's poor.

Valley Interfaith, a coalition of 34 Catholic and Protestant churches working to help the poor obtain a better quality of life, gathered for its first convention Sunday. About 5,000 people from the Rio Grande Valley and Texas, including state and local officials, attended the meeting.

Valley Interfaith, formed about three years ago, has taken credit the past several years for obtaining $140 million for area school districts and for helping pass a $70 million indigent health care bill through the last Legislature.

"It will be five to 10 years before we see the impact we'd like to see," said Dr. Juan Sanchez, an Interfaith official.

"It's when the unemployment rate goes down, when people have running water, electricity in their homes and a decent place to live, when our environment is protected for us and for our children and when we can see the illiteracy rate diminish tremendously," Sanchez said. "It's a long hard road to get there."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby led a contingent of elected officials from Austin, who were told to take their responsibilities seriously.

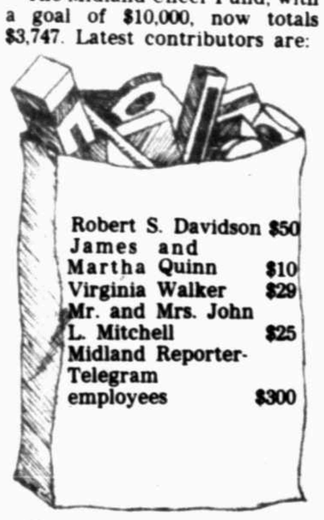

"We are dealing with human lives and human careers, the families and the entire future of our people," Bishop John J. Fitzpatrick of Brownsville said. "The poor are too precious, too valuable to carry lightly in our heart and they challenge us to support, protect and assist them."

Hobby asked the predominantly Hispanic crowd to continue challenging elected officials and holding them accountable for their promises and actions.

Russian, U.S. doctors unite to aid journalist

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Soviet and American heart specialists in Oslo to receive the Nobel Peace Prize for their work to limit nuclear weapons cut short a news conference today and assisted a Soviet journalist who suffered a heart attack.

American Bernard Lown and Soviet Yevgeny Chazov joined other doctors in trying to revive the reporter, who fell to the floor about half an hour after the news conference began.

Other reporters identified the journalist as Lev Novikov, a foreign correspondent for Soviet television. He was still unconscious when he was removed from the conference room and taken to Rikshosptalet hospital. Officials there said he was listed in "stable" condition.

"You have witnessed a tragic event," Chazov told reporters.

"When there is a crisis, U.S. and Soviet doctors cooperate," said Lown, who had joined Chazov in working, jacketless, to save the Soviet journalist. Lown told reporters the Soviet journalist had suffered a cardiac arrest.

Lown and Chazov are the co-presidents of International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, the organization chosen to receive this year's Nobel Peace Prize.

They were invited to Oslo to receive the prize, which is to be awarded Tuesday, and the news conference was their first joint appearance in Oslo.

Chazov arrived in Oslo on Sunday, and was greeted by the Norwegian Nobel Committee's chairman, Egil Aarvik, secretary Jakob Sverdrup, and Lown. There were no protesters.

Critics charge that International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War favors Soviet policy, and that Chazov once joined in a political attack on Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, who won the 1975 Peace Prize.

Critics, including West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, have said Chazov joined a government-supported political attack on Sakharov.

Argentina lifts state of siege

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The government today lifted a nationwide state of siege declared in October to combat an alleged effort by extreme rightists to undermine democratic rule.

The move was announced at a noon press conference by Interior Minister Antonio Troccoli. He said the government felt a state of siege was no longer needed because of a decline in the number of bombings, telephone threats and other anti-government acts.

President Raul Alfonsin declared the state of siege on Oct. 25 to ensure the arrest of 12 alleged rightist subversives.

The 12 suspects, including six army officers and six civilians, were accused of involvement in a recent anti-government campaign.

Canadian 'elves' have 'write' response

By CHARLES CAMPBELL

MONTREAL (AP) — Santa Claus got more than half a million letters last year from children all over the world, delivered in care of the Canadian post office.

Santa can expect even more mail this year. But every one of those children — so long as there's a return address — gets a reply from the jolly old elf, with an assist from several thousand Canada Post employees who volunteer as Santa's helpers.

Cheryl Ann wrote from Trinidad, for instance, to say, "I have never written to you before and I'm scared. I've seen pictures of you in your red suit in your sledge drawn by reindeers." She wanted a doll.

"Ho! Ho! Ho! What a pleasant surprise to find your very special letter in the big bundle of mail I received from the post office today," Santa wrote back to Cheryl Ann.

Canada's Santa project began 13 years ago when two postal workers noticed a handful of letters to Santa Claus headed for the dead letter office. They decided to answer them.

Slowly, the program spread nationwide and Canada Post assigned an official address, including a postal code conforming to the Canadian system of alternating letters and numbers, but reminiscent of Santa's laugh.

The address is: Santa Claus, North Pole, Canada, H0H 0H0.

"Because the North Pole is in Canada geographically — we can say that — other postal administrations thought of sending their letters here," said Ghislaine Marsot, manager of the Post Office House in downtown Montreal.

She could get an argument on geogaphy — Canadian territory stops some distance short of the pole — but mail from 28 countries as far away as Kenya, Vietnam and Uruguay found its way last year to Santa via Canada.

AP Laserphoto

For the first time this year, all Canadian embassies and consulates around the world were asked to spread the word, so even more foreign mail is expected.

Shoppers on St. Catherine Street can stop and watch Santa's helpers — postal workers on their own time — wearing their red stocking caps and scarves as they work through stacks of mail in the display windows of Post Office House.

Every afternoon, when 200 school children are bused in for a visit, Santa Claus is there to greet them.

To cope with the crush of mail, standard replies have been printed in French and English, but some letters pose special problems. Federal government translators help with letters received in Polish, Chinese and, so far, about half a dozen other languages. The Canadian National Institute for the Blind responds to letters in Braille.

Then there are the sad letters, for which "Ho! Ho! Ho!" would be a tactless response.

"A child might write that he has not seen his father in 10 years, and he doesn't want any presents, he just wants his father," Mrs. Marsot said. "You don't send the normal letter."

Another difficult letter from a 7-year-old asked Santa to console his mother, who cries all the time because he is dying of leukemia.

Those letters are answered by Dr. Albert Plante, head of psychiatry at Montreal's Sainte-Justine Hospital.

"It's very moving sometimes, the way he finds to help kids accept things," Mrs. Marsot said. "It has to sound very true, very human, with no false hopes."

The vast majority of the mail, however, brims with Christmas cheer, expressed in a child's unmistakable style.

"How's it going down there at the North Pole?" wrote Dominique. "I'm doing real well. Do you like being Santa Claus? You'll have to lose weight to get through the chimney at our house, because we have a small chimney. Bye."

Santa replied:

"I have checked twice to make sure your name is on my list of all the good little boys and girls, and yours is there.

"Remember to try your very best at everything you do, be sure to be in bed early on Christmas Eve, and listen for the sound of sleigh bells in your dreams. Merry Christmas to all."

"The conference decided to secure and defend for OPEC a fair share in the world oil market, consistent with the necessary income for member countries' development," said a joint statement issued at the end of the conference.

Grisanti said the ministers had reaffirmed all previous OPEC agreements, suggesting that it has not formally abandoned its base price of $28 a barrel and a production sharing system.

They created a new committee of five headed by Grisanti to study how OPEC could defend its market share and to make recommendations to a new ministerial meeting expected to be held early next year. The committee will include the ministers from Indonesia, Iraq, Kuwait, and the United Arab Emirates.

The Geneva agreement, if carried out, could mark a turning point in the volatile history of oil prices since OPEC shocked the world 12 years ago with an embargo that triggered a series of sharp price increases.

OPEC was established in 1960 to coordinate petroleum policies in the Third World oil-producing countries. Its members are Algeria, Ecuador, Gabon, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Nigeria, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela.

The ministers also have agreed to form a committee of six member countries to study how the new strategy could be implemented and to recommend to an OPEC conference early next year what minimum level of production OPEC would seek to defend, said the Ecuadorian deputy oil minister, Fernando Santos Alvite.

Asked if all 13 ministers had agreed to the principle of defending market share at the cost of allowing prices to decline, Santos said, "Yes, everybody to defend our share of the market."

Santos and several other oil ministers had said since the outset of their conference Saturday they were considering giving up their losing battle to defend the official $28 a barrel price.

They also said they knew it might mean engaging non-OPEC competitors such as Britain and the Soviet Union in a price war.

"We are ready — willing and ready — to defend (a market share) no matter the cost," Santos said.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi Arabian oil minister, and other ministers stressed they were not inviting a price war, but that they were now willing to take such a risk in order to halt the decline in their market share.

Asked in an NBC News television interview whether he believed oil prices could fall to $20 a barrel next spring, Mana Saeed Oteiba, oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, said: "Sure."

If entirely passed on to consumers, each $1 drop in the world price of a barrel of oil is the equivalent of a reduction of about 2½ cents a gallon in products such as gasoline.

It was not clear what OPEC would do about its official pricing system. Venezuela suggested the group link its prices to a "basket" of non-OPEC oil prices, allowing them to move up and down at regular stages. The matter was expected to be deferred to the next OPEC meeting.

Price competition would be expected to heighten early next year when the seasonal rise in demand for home-heating oil crests and oil companies trim their stocks in anticipation of lower prices.

In the past, OPEC has responded to downward pressure on prices by allowing its production to fall. This has resulted in OPEC's share of the market shrinking to about one-third from about two-thirds as recently as 1980.

Competitors such as Britain, Egypt and the Soviet Union, which are not OPEC members, have succeeded in gaining sales at OPEC's expense by taking a more flexible approach to pricing.

OPEC countries have determined they can no longer afford to let that trend continue. Many member countries are in economic crisis as a result of lagging oil sales, and they have become alarmed at the prospect of losing even more business.

Meanwhile, in Nicosia, Cyprus, the weekly Middle East Economic Survey oil review said today that its preliminary estimates show crude oil production by OPEC states averaged 18.075 million barrels per day.

The review said this, compared with 17.335 million barrels per day in October, 14.097 million barrels per day for the third quarter of the year and the OPEC quota ceiling of 16 million barrels per day.

First candidate files for Philippine election

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Salvador Laurel became the first major candidate to file in the special presidential election today, one day after an opposition attempt to field a single ticket against President Ferdinand E. Marcos collapsed.

Meanwhile, delegates from the governing New Society Movement registered for a Wednesday party convention set to nominate Marcos, who called the election to show critics at home and abroad that his 20-year regime can still muster popular support.

Laurel backed off Sunday from an agreement to run as the vice-presidential candidate of Corazon Aquino, widow of assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino. Mrs. Aquino had not yet filed, but has until Wednesday.

At a breakfast forum, Laurel left the door open for withdrawing in favor of Mrs. Aquino if she proves the stronger candidate in campaigning leading up to the Feb. 7 election.

"That situation, if and when it occurs, will be judged honestly and there is nothing I will not sacrifice for our country and our people," said Laurel.

He also said Mrs. Aquino could be his running mate if she accepts. Mrs. Aquino has said she will run only for president.

Fire kills eight Israeli soldiers

EDITORS NOTE — The following story was submitted to the Israeli military censor, who made a significant change.

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Eight soldiers died and seven others were injured early today when fire engulfed an army barracks near the Jordanian border, the military command announced.

Investigators and trackers who searched the army base said they found no signs of guerrilla infiltration, Israel Radio reported.

But it was not clear what caused the blaze because the camp's generator was turned off for the night, cutting all electricity, the radio said.

The Israeli military censor banned immediate publication of some details.

The blaze occurred at 1:30 a.m. (5:30 p.m. CST Sunday) near the Jewish settlement of Maaleh Efraim, 12 miles west of the Jordanian border and 24 miles east of Tel Aviv, the military command announced.

"It was a terrible sight. Tongues of flame were shooting out the windows," the camp's deputy commander said on the radio.

"Soldiers were crowding around helplessly. We managed to pull out one soldier by the skin of his teeth. But then the fire overcame us and we couldn't do any more," said the commander, who was not identified in keeping with military regulations.

Beirut doctors stage protest march

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — At least 150 doctors demonstrated today against the kidnapping of two prominent Christians, a physician and an economist, in the first protest march by physicians in Beirut's Moslem sector.

Wearing their white medical coats, the doctors marched from the sprawling American University Hospital compound in west Beirut to Prime Minister Rashid Karami's office five blocks away.

Three representatives met Karami and demanded government action to secure the safe release of Dr. Munir Shamma'a and Joseph Salameh, a professor of economics at the university.

Officials said a search so far has found no trace of the missing men or their captors. Shamma'a and Salameh were snatched from a car Saturday evening by at least three gunmen, police said.

Sources at Karami's office, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the doctors threatened to go on strike and paralyze the city's biggest medical center, but the premier pleaded for a 24-hour delay.

Mawlawi said Karami promised to "spare no effort in tracking down the kidnappers and ensure the safe release of Dr. Shamma'a and Mr. Salameh."

In recent months, a university hospital heart surgeon, the director of the publications department, and the university's acting vice president have been kidnapped. All three are Christians.

"You have traveled to Austin for many causes — education, water plan, indigent health. Your travels to our capitol were piligrimages," Hobby told the crowd.

"The victories in education, health and water services are victories for economic development," he said in Spanish.

Other elected officials who traveled to South Texas included Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, Attorney General Jim Mattox, Treasurer Ann Richards, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro and state Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez, a Valley native.

Valley Interfaith began organizing around 1983 and is part of the Industrial Areas Foundation, established in the 1930s. Other such organizations have formed across the state and members from those organizations traveled to the Valley Sunday.

They included groups from Houston, Austin, Fort Worth, El Paso and San Antonio, whose Citizens Organized for Public Service, is among the most well-known in the country.

The thousands at the convention sang, prayed, adopted Valley Interfaith's new constitution and elected a slate of officers.

But what they came to hear was whether state officials supported their goals in getting more jobs to the area and obtaining funds to develop "colonias."

Colonias are unincorporated rural areas whose residents live without indoor plumbing and electricity and where most streets are unpaved and there are no drainage systems.

State officials said they would do what they could to obtain $100 million in the next four years to help the 140 area colonias.

Hightower drew cheers with his pledge to the crowd that included farmworkers who had lost their jobs during a freeze two winters ago. The freeze virtually wiped out the citrus industry, which slowly is beginning to recover.

"We in the Texas Department of Agriculture will work with the Valley Interfaith leadership...in developing marketing opportunities, in developing processing opportunities that base our agricultural future in this state," Hightower said.

"Not on the big conglomerates from out of state and not on the giant plantations that are going to Honduras to do their farming, but on the people of the Rio Grande Valley," Hightower said.

Sanchez said that Valley Interfaith is viewed by state officials as a powerful organization and has received mix reviews from Valley residents.

Fitzpatrick, who has worked with the poor since arriving in the Valley more than a decade ago, was interrupted several times by cheers.

"There are many who do not understand us. Many did not understand Jesus Christ either," said Fitzpatrick, who was instrumental in the formation of Valley Interfaith. "But we shall always have the door open to them, always ready to cooperate with us for a brighter future for our children and their children."

Ex-Argentine junta members await verdict

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Three former presidents and six other ex-junta members learn today whether a federal tribunal has found them guilty in the disappearance of thousands of people in the military's war on subversion during the 1970s.

Prosecutors have sought life imprisonment for five of the defendants, and jail terms ranging from 10 to 15 years for the other four. Today's session of the six-judge panel at the Federal Court Building in downtown Buenos Aires will be broadcast nationwide.

Among the accused are former army commanders Jorge Videla, Roberto Viola and Leopoldo Galtieri, all ex-heads of state.

Former navy chiefs Emilio Massera, Armando Lambruschini and Jorge Anaya and former air force leaders Orlando Agosti, Omar Graffigna and Basilio Lami Dozo are also defendants in Argentina's first trial of military officers by a civilian tribunal.

The nine men made up three successive military juntas which ruled Argentina after the March 1976 coup toppled President Isabel Peron. The armed forces then led a harsh campaign to wipe out leftist terrorism and subversion.

A commission created by President Raul Alfonsin reported that at least 9,000 people, including many who were innocent of any terrorist involvement, were killed or disappeared.

Alfonsin ordered the nine ex-rulers be put on trial in a decree issued three days after his Dec. 10, 1983 inauguration. The verdicts come on the eve of the second anniversary of Argentina's return to elected civilian rule after nearly eight years of military dictatorship.

Eight of the nine defendants are in custody. Videla, Viola, Agosti, Massera and Lambruschini, all of whom face possible life imprisonment and loss of military rank and privilege, are jailed a block from the courthouse.

Galtieri, Anaya and Lami Dozo, facing the 10-year to 15-year jail terms, are confined at military bases in connection with their court-martial on charges of negligence in the 1982 Falkland Islands war, in which Britain defeated Argentina.

Both the prosecution and defense will have 10 days in which to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Civilian president elected in Guatemala

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Christian Democrat Vinicio Cerezo scored a landslide victory in runoff presidential balloting, becoming the first civilian elected to take charge at Guatemala's National Palace in 19 years.

The triumph by the 42-year-old lawyer in the Sunday election comes after more than 30 years of virtually uninterrupted and often brutal military domination in this Central American country.

"We want to put to rest those old ghosts," Cerezo said in a television interview broadcast early today. "We are going to work for democracy." He said his country had "buried the era of stolen elections and coups."

Diplomats and other observers, however, have been openly skeptical that Guatemala's military will fully hand over the government to a new civilian president.

Carpio conceded defeat shortly after 1 a.m. today (1 a.m. CST).

"We recognize that the people of Guatemala have picked the Christian Democrats to direct the destiny of the country," he said in a television interview.

Carpio and Cerezo were the top vote-getters in the first election Nov. 3, in which six other candidates competed. But none received a clear majority, forcing Sunday's runoff.

With about 25 percent of the vote counted, the Supreme Electoral Tribunal said at 11 p.m. CST that Cerezo was leading with 417,436 votes, or 67.12 percent, to Carpio's 205,467 votes, or 32.88 percent.

Vinicio Cerezo, Guatemala's president-elect, waves to supporters at a victory rally and press appearance in Guatemala City early today after defeating Jorge Carpio by a two to one margin.

The tribunal, responsible for supervising the election, does not consider returns official until the count is complete.

A 19-member observer delegation from the United States said in a prepared statement, "The administration of the election at those places we observed appeared to be fair, efficient and without major incident." Observers visited 15 towns and cities.

The statement was read by Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., and Rep. William B. Richardson, D-N.M., co-chairmen.

The group praised the absence of the military in the elections and said it hoped "its exemplary conduct will become the standard by which it performs its new and different role as the servant of a civilian democracy."

The new president will succeed Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores, the last of five successive military rulers. He came to power in a 1983 coup, deposing Gen. Efrain Rios Montt, who had gained power in a coup a year earlier following the country's last presidential election.

The previous three generals were elected. Guatemala's last civilian president was Julio Cesar Mendez Montenegro, in office from 1966 to 1970.

The country has been ruled by a succession of military or military-dominated governments since a 1954 coup backed by the CIA toppled the left-leaning administration of Jacobo Arbenz.

Cerezo will begin his five-year term on Jan. 14, with the task of pulling Guatemala out of its worst depression in 50 years.

Inflation is running at about 50 percent a year and about 45 percent of the workforce is either out of a job or underemployed. Payments on the national debt of $2.3 billion will eat up slightly more than 50 percent of export earnings next year.

More than two decades of war against a small but determined leftist insurgency have taken an economic toll and left Guatemala with a dismal human rights record.

It was that record that prompted former President Jimmy Carter to cut off U.S. military aid in 1977. U.S. economic aid was also negligible until this year, when it leaped to $101.5 million from $31.3 million in 1984.

Human rights activists estimate 38,000 people, mostly poor Mayan Indians who live in Guatemala's central and northern highlands, have been killed or kidnapped by the army and right-wing death squads in the past 20 years.

Pope says church must remain true to roots

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II closed an extraordinary synod of bishops, declaring that the Roman Catholic church strives to be the church of the modern world but at the same time remain true to its foundations.

The 65-year-old pope said Sunday the two-week assembly of 165 bishops accomplished its goal — to "celebrate, verify and promote" the Second Vatican Council, which has brought great changes to the church since it closed 20 years ago.

"At the end of the second millennium the church truly desires to be the church in the modern world, she desires with her all her strength to serve, so that human life on earth may be evermore worthy of man," the pope said during a Mass he celebrated with bishops.

But, he added during his homily, "The church earnestly desires only one thing. To be the same church that was born of the Holy Spirit."

The pontiff, who attended nearly every session of the synod, looked tired and his voice was hoarse.

"As we come out of the synod, we wish to intensify our pastoral efforts to ensure that the Second Vatican Council is more widely and more thoroughly known," he said. "To ensure that the orientations and directives that the council left us are assimilated into the very heart of all the members of the people of God and translated into the way they live, with consistency and love."

Vatican II recast the church's image from unchangeable monolith to an institution ready to modernize. Saturday, John Paul said Roman Catholics should welcome the opening to the modern world ushered in by Vatican II.

But the pope also warned against "false interpretations" of the council reforms.

By an overwhelming majority, bishops adopted a 14-page report of findings and recommendations.

John Paul agreed to publish documents approved by the prelates without any change, in what was seen as a victory for the bishops in their attempt to assert themselves in the running of the church.

Previous synods turned their documents over to the pope for possible action.

The document calls for greater church commitment to the poor, a new universal guidebook of church doctrine and morals and further study of the authority of national bishops conferences.

In the report, written in Latin, the bishops also stress the need to promote dialogue for Christian unity and interfaith talks with other religions.

Bishops offered other proposals, such as re-admission to communion of divorced and remarried Roman Catholics, a crackdown on dissident theologians, and "reflections" on the church's ban on artifical birth control.

To varying degrees, the proposals reflected the problems the bishops face in their countries. But they failed to make it to the synod's final report which summed up "the maximum common denominators" of the bishops' views.

"It's not that some of these issues were not important...They were not reflected in the final report because they failed to win widespread support from the fellow bishops," said the Rev. Diarmuid Martin, a synod spokesman.

MOSCOW (AP) — French mime Marcel Marceau has been hospitalized in Moscow with a perforated stomach ulcer and underwent emergency surgery, French sources said.

A French diplomat confirmed Sunday that the 62-year-old mime was hospitalized at the Botkin Clinic, a special facility for foreigners. The diplomat spoke on condition he not be identified.

Congress weighs tax, money decisions in year-end crunch

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress, trying to wrap up work for the year, is facing decisions this week on a sweeping balanced-budget plan and the fate of President Reagan's tax overhaul initiative.

The stack of critical matters facing legislators also includes:

— Legislation raising the government's borrowing authority — the national debt limit — to more than $2 trillion. Treasury Department officials say the government will be in default if this is not passed by Thursday.

— An omnibus money bill that would keep most government departments operating in the absence of their regular appropriations. An earlier stopgap bill also expires Thursday.

— A three-year, $85 billion package of deficit-reduction actions.

— Renewal of the "superfund" toxic waste cleanup program.

— Legislation renewing the government's farm price support programs.

Congressional leaders had hoped to finish all that by the end of the week, but now they are conceding the session may continue at least into next week.

In addition, the House was expected to have a close vote at midweek on the tax overhaul bill drafted by the Democratic-led Ways and Means Committee. House Republican leaders have said they cannot go along with the measure despite arguments from the president that passing the Ways and Means bill would be better than nothing.

Meanwhile, the president is facing a decision on whether to accept the budget plan aimed at forcing an end to federal budget deficits by fiscal 1991. Republican leaders say the plan, which has been attached as an amendment to the urgently-needed debt limit increase, could force the president to reconsider his vow to resist tax increases and Pentagon spending cuts next year.

Congressional negotiators were set to meet today to work out the final details of the plan. A two-month stalemate over the measure was ended last Friday when a senior group of the negotiators from the House and Senate endorsed the outlines of a compromise.

Generally, the plan would revise the congressional budget process and require automatic spending cuts if Congress and the White House fail to meet a series of statutory ceilings on budget deficits aimed at reducing the government's annual red ink from the current $200 billion to zero by fiscal 1991.

Despite growing concerns about the measure, it is expected to pass both houses this week and be sent to the president.

The measure would peg the deficit for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, 1986, at $144 billion. The president has said that he wants the budget for that fiscal year to contain a 3 percent increase in military spending and no tax increases.

Thus, it would take about $50 billion in domestic spending cuts — representing the elimination of 30 to 50 federal programs — to meet the deficit target, according to Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Asked if Congress would kill that many programs, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., replied, "No way."

Appearing Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press," Dole refused to be pinned down on whether taxes would have to be raised, but he said that as for the president, "He may be convinced (next year) after looking at some of the hard options...that we've wrung all the federal spending out of it we can (and) then he would agree to look at a tax increase."

House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois, appearing Sunday on ABC's "This Week," said if the nation has to "live next year with a $144 billion deficit rather than one that's in the $200 billion range now and so many things will have to be given up...then it seems to me there's going to be serious agitation for a revenue increase."

Reagan has endorsed the concept of the balanced-budget plan, but some administration officials have expressed concerns about how it would affect military spending.

In addition, some of Reagan's allies on Capitol Hill have begun having second thoughts.

NATION

City leaders beg Reagan for tax increase

SEATTLE (AP) — The nation's municipal leaders are endorsing a House tax-revision plan but coupling it with a plea for President Reagan and Congress to raise taxes and spare domestic programs from "irreparable damage" through indiscriminate budget cutting.

Cleveland Mayor George V. Voinovich, president of the National League of Cities and a Republican, said Sunday that federal red ink must be stemmed through increased taxes because aid to cities and other federal domestic programs have taken enough cuts already.

"The only response we seem to be getting from Washington, the administration and Congress, is that those of you on the domestic side must take more cuts, must make more sacrifices," he said.

"If the federal government abdicates its responsibility toward municipal spending it will do irreparable damage to the quality of life in our cities and do irreparable damage to the citizens."

Voinovich spoke as more than 4,000 mayors, council members and other municipal officials met for the annual, four-day Congress of Cities.

Directors of the National League of Cities immediately adopted a resolution putting the association of more than 1,200 municipalites in favor of the tax reform bill approved by the House Ways and Means Committee.

The group voiced reservations about provisions that would limit the ability of cities to offer bonds to raise revenue and promote development. But the group considered the House committee version a victory since it would continue to allow taxpayers to deduct their state and local tax bills — a provision the version Reagan offered would have repealed.

The policy was adopted even without vote of the full membership because of a desire to make it official policy quickly, while Congress is still in session, league spokesman Randy Arndt said.

The urban policy adds that money should be raised toward reducing the $200 billion a year federal deficit through closing tax loopholes and questionable incentives — in effect raising taxes.

Senate mail-room spenders to be revealed this week

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time, senators are disclosing what it costs to mail newsletters to their constituents, despite fears of a political backlash when the voters discover the size of the tab they're paying.

Sometime today, under a new Senate rule, the first tabulation of each senator's mass mailing costs for the final three months of fiscal 1985, which ended Sept. 30, is supposed to be made public.

The announcement comes 10 days behind schedule, partly because of a futile Republican effort led by Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska to block the disclosures at least until next year, if not indefinitely. Stevens had the support of Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan.

The report by the secretary of the Senate will not solve the mystery of the unidentified senator who ran up a $3.8 million postage bill for newsletters in 1984, according to Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md., who knows but won't tell.

The list, however, may provide clues to the identities of some of the Senate's biggest mailing room spenders. Altogether, says Mathias, senators are expected to mail $56 million worth of government-paid newsletters to constituents this year, an average of $560,000 per senator.

Counting House members, who have no such disclosure rule, the cost of congressional mass mailings in 1985 is expected to reach a record $144 million.

Mathias says that's an "embarrassing example of the waste of the taxpayers' money," and may be "the congressional equivalent of the Pentagon's $500 hammer."

Under a rule adopted last spring by the Senate's housekeeping Rules Committee, of which Mathias is chairman, a list of senators' mass mailing costs will be included in a report of all Senate expenditures which is published every six months.

The first such disclosures cover the June 30-Sept. 30 quarter of 1985.

Visiting Shultz to 'basically show the flag' to Soviet bloc

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three weeks after the Geneva summit, Secretary of State George Shultz is heading back to Europe to drum up support for U.S. policies — not just among the Western allies, but in the Soviet Union's own backyard.

On his first trip as secretary of state to the Soviet bloc countries of Romania and Hungary, Shultz will "basically show the flag," said a U.S. official.

Shultz, departing today for 10 days, begins his travels with talks in London with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Then he goes to Brussels, Belgium, for a meeting with 15 other NATO foreign ministers and to West Germany for talks with Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

For the first time since taking office in July 1982, Shultz will make the time-honored pilgramage to West Berlin, to remind people on both sides of the barbed wire and brick wall ringing the city that the United States is pledged to defend it.

In his talks with Western leaders, Shultz will continue the U.S. effort to solidify support for U.S. arms control policies during post-summit negotiations with the Soviets, and get allied advice on how to proceed.

The allies are especially eager for progress toward an interim agreement with the Soviets to limit the number of Europe-based nuclear missiles, which have caused countless protests in Western countries since 1979 when the decision was made to deploy them.

Shultz said at a news conference on Friday that agreements of these kind "depend on the democracies standing firm on basic principles."

He also is clearly relishing his chance to do some lobbying for U.S. policies in Romania and Hungary, neighbors and clients of the Soviet Union, and Yugoslavia a non-aligned country in the region.

Worker's a lady

There was a time in the not-too-distant past when the only role for women was to stay at home, do the laundry and the cooking, and raise the kids. Well, that isn't the case any longer, and statistics show women are having a dramatic impact on the U.S. marketplace and, subsequently, the American economy.

Today, in fact, women comprise nearly half of the nation's labor force, an unprecedented work-place trend.

This increased participation has been most evident during the last two decades. From 1900 to 1965, the number of women holding jobs grew from 4 million to approximately 25 million, a jump from 18 percent to 32 percent of the work force. Since then, the number of working women has doubled to 50 million and they now comprise about 46 percent of the work force.

Three factors have spurred this astonishing influx — the example set by working women during World War II, the birth of the feminist movement during the early 1960s, and most important, financial necessity. More than 10 million U.S. households are headed by a working woman. And, for many couples, a second income is required for home ownership.

Significant managerial gains have accompanied this shift. Women, for example, hold more than 30 percent of the nation's executive, management, and administrative positions, up from 18.5 percent in 1970.

Women have also moved aggressively into male-dominated fields. There are five times as many women graduates of medical schools as there were 30 years ago and nine times as many law-school graduates. Women own 25 percent of the nation's small businesses and in 1977 (the last year for which official census figures are available), they owned 631,000 firms with gross receipts of $40.5 billion.

The rising number of working women has also permanently changed the U.S. economy. Now taking home one-third of the nation's pay, women have fueled new consumption patterns, which in turn have created new jobs. Economists assert that this trend has made recessions and high unemployment tolerable.

This is not to imply that the influx of women into the marketplace has not been without negative consequences. It has spawned growth of that segment of the population known as the "latchkey kids," those youngsters who are left at home on their own for hours because their parent or parents are working. And it has given rise to the potential for increased juvenile crime and related problems such as drug and alcohol abuse.

In many instances, though, those problems are being addressed socially and the future trend is even more upbeat than past achievement. Some observers predict that by the 1990s, 63 percent of the nation's women will be employed, taking two of every three new jobs created.

There's no doubt about it. Women have become an integral part of the nation's economy, a tribute to their talents and the opportunity offered by a free and ever-expanding marketplace.

Another View:

Bonner and the press

Yelena Bonner, the wife of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, is under orders from the Kremlin not to talk with reporters during her current visit to the Free World.

But Ms. Bonner's son, Alexei Semyonov, was under no such restriction when a reporter asked him in Italy what it would be like for his mother to return to the Soviet Union after a prolonged stay in the West.

"It's impossible for me to describe it," said Mr. Semyonov, a resident of Newton, Mass.

It doesn't require great interpretive skill to know that Mr. Semyonov does not expect a heroine's welcome for his mother when she returns home after receiving long-overdue medical treatment in Italy and the United States.

The 64-year-old Sakharov, who also is in poor health, conducted a six-month hunger strike to press his demand that Soviet authorities grant his 62-year-old wife an exit visa to seek medical treatment. She is seeing an eye specialist in Italy who operated on her for glaucoma in 1975 and 1977, and is expected to be examined by heart specialists in the United States.

It hardly fits with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's carefully cultivated image as a give-and-take communicator that he will not allow Ms. Bonner to speak to the press during her visit. Mr. Gorbachev, who made the cover of Time magazine by answering easy questions, obviously isn't ready to allow fellow citizens to voice their opinions.

That's too bad, because Ms. Bonner could give us a much truer picture of life in the Soviet Union than Mr. Gorbachev is willing to do.

Mr. Semyonov, for example, said a few days ago that Soviet authorities edited telegrams and released a misleading videotape in an attempt to hide the fact that Mr. Sakharov was on a hunger strike.

It is well-known, of course, that Mr. Sakharov and his wife have been living in exile in Gorky, a Soviet city that is closed to foreigners.

Ms. Bonner, according to her son, once expressed fear that she and her husband could be killed in Gorky at any time and nobody would know.

Mr. Semyonov said that his mother and stepfather cabled people in the Free World about Mr. Sakharov's hunger strike, during which he was force-fed in a hospital. The cables, however, were altered by security forces to create the impression that everything was going well with the dissidents.

Further, Mr. Semyonov challenged the validity of a videotape released by "Soviet sources, presumably related to the KGB," that purported to show Mr. Sakharov eating in a hospital during his hunger strike.

All in all, Mr. Sakharov is not being treated too well for an eminent physicist and Nobel Peace Prize recipient. But then, Mr. Sakharov won the peace prize for advocating human rights. Needless to say, human rights are not high on the list of the Kremlin's concerns.

They are members of the Yakuza, the Japanese underworld gangs that have preyed on their own people for centuries and now aim to expand their operations to this country.

Jack Anderson

In a sharp warning to its field offices, the Immigration and Naturalization Service says that Yakuza members are entering the United States "to invest, launder (money) and set up new operations." The Yakuza has plenty of money to invest and launder; Japanese police estimate the underworld organization's annual take at more than $5 billion, from prostitution, pornography and extortion.

Our associate Donald Goldberg has obtained a copy of the Immigration Service's "strategic assessment," which tells inspectors how to spot possible Yakuza members at ports of entry. Once identified, they can be put under surveillance — or sent packing if they lied about criminal records on their entry forms.

Here's what Immigration officials have been told to look for as a way to identify a possible member of the Japanese mob:

— Fingers: The Yakuza custom of cutting off a fingertip dates to the old warrior days when the snippet was offered to the gang leader as apology for a failed assignment. The Immigration Service estimates that nearly half of all present-day Yakuza members "have severed portions of one or more fingers." It does add this cautionary note, however: "Normally, if an individual is missing a portion or complete middle finger, index finger or thumb, it is likely the result of an accident or surgical operation, and cannot be indicative that the individual is Yakuza."

— Tattoos: Six or seven out of every 10 Yakuza gangsters are believed to have some sort of tattoo, ranging from a small mark under the eyebrow to designs covering the entire body. Tattoos are considered a sign of strength, because of the discomfort involved in the procedure.

"The typical Yakuza encountered entering the United States bears tattooing covering the entire rear torso from the waist area over the shoulders and extending down the front torso to the breastbone and midway down the upper arms," the immigration assessment states. "The configuration of the tattooing on the chest area allows the individual to wear open-neck shirts without exposing the tattoo."

— Hair style: The Yakuza traditionally affected either a shaved head or a short, flat-top "Parris Island" crewcut. "Recently, they have overwhelmingly adopted a hair style known in Japan as a 'punch perm,' which is a short, curly, Afro-style permanent," the report says. But it warns that many older Yakuza, and especially the higher-ups, have normal hair styles, making them hard to distinguish from businessmen or tourists.

— Dress: "Many of the upper-echelon Yakuza tend to display their affluence by wearing expensive jewelry and watches, often sporting two or three expensive rings, gold chains and pendants, and gold watches, which retail in Japan for in excess of $10,000."

— Behavior: "Yakuza often walk with authority or strut swagger, in the same manner as a police officer, wrestler or other individual with a sense of physical prowess or self-assurance. ... Many Yakuza, occasionally even upper-echelon members, will display an attitude of arrogance or defiance, sometimes manifested by their refusal to answer an officer's questions, their loudly questioning an officer's reasons for asking them certain questions ... and in some cases even loud verbal outbursts or tirades directed at the officer or his interpreter."

DRUGBUSTERS' LAMENT: The Coast Guard is bearing a heavy load of the South Florida war on drug traffickers, but officials in Miami are quietly complaining that the drug war leaves them no time or resources for the Coast Guard's other responsibilities. The result is that the Coast Guard has had to terminate these traditional functions, which include anti-pollution enforcement, merchant marine oversight and cruise-ship safety inspections. Some members of Congress are nervously waiting for some disaster at sea that can be traced to the Coast Guard's single-minded pursuit of dope smugglers.

WATCH ON THE PENTAGON: Will somebody please get the Air Force brass a library card? They've advertised for someone to research and write a book-length manuscript they've already picked the title for: "U.S. Army Air Forces and Intelligence in World War II." It will delve into the strategy, planning and operations of the service's intelligence from 1941 to 1945. It's not yet known how much the book will cost — or how it will differ from the dozens of books that have already been written on the subject.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Both the news media and public officials have been remiss in their response to the recent outrageous attacks on Arab-American anti-discrimination groups. News stories of bombings and arson haven't received the prominent display they deserve, and public figures who normally voice their opinions on anything have remained strangely reticent. It's a terrible way to have their point proved, but Arab-Americans' claim of racial prejudice seems to have been confirmed. We're confident the FBI, at least, is taking these cowardly acts seriously, and will soon bring the skulking perpetrators to book.

Kirkpatrick in New Hampshire?

WASHINGTON — Friends of Jeane Kirkpatrick hint she might establish political credentials for the 1988 vice-presidential nomination by running in the New Hampshire presidential primary, but Rep. Jack Kemp's supporters say she would never take a step so damaging to their man.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Although Kirkpatrick quickly took herself out of contention for the Senate seat soon to be up in Maryland, she has been travelling the political speaking circuit. Even a token presidential race would hurt her friend Kemp by splitting conservative ranks.

A footnote: Another recently-converted Republican, presidential aide Linda Chavez, is eyeing the Maryland Senate race that Kirkpatrick passed up. Chavez has felt frustrated since coming to the White House from the Civil Rights Commission and will run if she can be convinced she has the financing — and a chance to win.

GORBACHEV OUT WEST

The newest twist to President Reagan's conviction that Mikhail Gorbachev can be made to appreciate capitalism and how it works is his desire to fly him over Southern California in a helicopter so that he could see all those private homes with their own swimming pools.

Reagan's advisers doubt that such an experience would have the slightest impact on the world's leading communist, now at the top of the Soviet heap. But White House plans abound for Gorbachev's 1986 visit to the U.S., including his presence at the rededication of the Statue of Liberty.

A footnote: Nancy Reagan's briefing book for Geneva, attempting to draw superpower similarities, suggested she tell Raisa Gorbachev that both countries have wide-open spaces and lands of opportunity: California for us, Siberia for them. No joke or insult was intended.

DARMAN GOING?

Eyebrows of presidential aides were raised when Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard Darman, a principal shaper of domestic policy at the White House during the first term, lunched with a corporate head-hunter just as the tax reform crisis reached a peak.

That sent a signal around Washington that Darman is looking for private-sector employment before completing the long tax struggle in which he has been the major strategist. He had badly wanted to become budget director when his friend David Stockman left, but Cabinet office seems barred so long as Donald T. Regan is White House chief of staff.

Darman, highly praised as legislative mastermind of President Reagan's first term, has come under private fire from both the White House and congressional Republicans for letting House Democrats take control of the tax bill.

PENNSYLVANIA FRATRICIDE

Gov. Richard Thornburgh has flatly told intimates he will announce Dec. 12 his decision to seek the Republican Senate nomination against incumbent Sen. Arlen Specter, setting the stage for one of the most vicious GOP battles in Pennsylvania history.

But the move comes late. Specter, a target of White House bitterness for months because of lack of support for President Reagan, has now lined up pro-Thornburgh party leaders. Many of them wanted the governor (ineligible for re-election) to take on Specter in the primary, but backed the senator when they decided Thornburgh would not run.

Original White House support for a Thornburgh candidacy also has diminshed because of the delay, a factor that still could change the governor's mind. Republican leaders nationally worry that GOP wounds opened in the primary might assure a Democratic victory that could cost Senate control.

LOTS OF KENNEDYS

Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, oldest child of Bobby and Ethel Kennedy, will not be frightened out of running against freshman conservative Republican Rep. Helen Delich Bentley in Baltimore County, Md., because of warnings by political consultant David Garth that she probably would lose.

Kathleen, a lawyer and probably the brightest of Bobby's offspring, is determined to run even if she faces a loss in order to get her name known and to gain campaign experience for a repeat in 1988.

One minus: Brother Joe is running for retiring Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill's congressional seat in Boston, and Uncle Teddy is in the Senate. That could provoke the old Kennedy dynasty charge for Maryland and Massachusetts voters.

CHARLEY REESE

PAC woes really just money woes

I'm always amazed and amused at how that dynamic duo of contemporary society — the duplicitous and the naive — can turn an issue upside down and inside out.

Charley Reese

Their current target is campaign finances, particularly political action committees (PACs). The duo is making sure the public remains confused so that no real solution will be possible.

Well, let's thwart the duplicitous and the naive, take the wraps off this issue, and look at the stark naked facts.

The gist of the criticism directed at PACs and special interests is that they buy votes. It's never quite stated that plainly, but that's what's implied when PAC contributions, say to the members of the House Ways and Means Committee, are compared with the results of the committee's work on tax reform. The special interests are painted as bad guys.

Well, dearly beloved, you can't buy what's not for sale. If special interests are buying votes, that means there are whores serving in the House and Senate who are selling them.

In a buy-sell transaction involving a public figure and a private interest, it is always the public figure who controls the transaction. The buyer can make an offer. He can't force the seller to accept.

Adults can corrupt innocent children but there are no children in the House or Senate. If they are corrupt, it's not because they are seduced; it's because they've hit the streets to hustle.

Don't let your anger be deflected to the special interests. It's the seller — the congressman or senator — who is betraying the people who elected him and making a mockery out of his oath of office.

Campaign contributions aren't the only way to grease an outstretched palm. When you see someone paying one of these nabobs $7,500 of $10,000 for a speech, you can be sure they aren't buying eloquence. Eloquence doesn't fetch that much on the open market. Pols also can be cut in on deals and given loans to finance them.

Harry S. Truman said it a long time ago. An honest public official can't get rich in office. If you send a guy to Washington to work for an annual wage of $72,000 and he becomes a millionaire, you know you've been had.

It is naive to think any kind of reform directed at the contribution side of the equation will be effective. PACs are the result of the last reform. Whatever it takes to win an election, the unscrupulous will find a way to get it. I used to work as a hired gun in political campaigns and I can tell you there are as many briefcases full of cash floating around in a major campaign as there are in any illegal drug operation.

The answer lies on the spending side. Ban all political advertising. The high costs of campaigns is the high cost of paid political advertising. Most media pundits who bemoan the high cost of campaigns somehow never quite get around to explaining why the campaigns cost so much, but that's it. Paid advertising.

Naive libertarians argue against any limits on fund-raising on the grounds that incumbents have a publicity advantage. The real advantage of incumbency, however, is the ability to shake the money tree. The publicity is controlled by journalists and that's not always good for the incumbent. It's the incumbent's ability to raise money, not get his mug in the newspaper, that works to the disadvantage of challengers.

We have all of these public television stations — tax-supported. Force them to give one night a week during a campaign period to all the candidates so that they may speak their piece on an even-time basis. Without the domination of paid advertising, you'll see campaign organizations make a comeback. The candidates will need those volunteers. Now, they rely mainly on fund-raisers, big bucks donors, and media consultants.

Eliminate the need to raise big bucks and you'll cut the leverage of the special interests and increase the leverage of the people. I would also ban politicians from hiring pollsters because this information is only used to manipulate people. The candidates can find out what the people think on election day.

How, you may ask, can the people force the Congress to reform itself? You tell your incumbent that unless he publicly pledges to vote for a ban of all political advertising, you'll vote against him. If the American people voted the entire bunch out of office, it would be no great loss to the country. There are a few good people there but there are no irreplaceable people there.

Magazine cultivates marijuana growers

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The seeds for Sinsemilla Tips magazine were planted six years ago, when authorities arrested Tom Alexander and seized his crop of 1,324 marijuana plants.

Thirty hours in jail rid Alexander of any desire to raise marijuana, even though he said a police officer told him "my crop contained some of the best buds he'd ever seen."

Alexander found a technical error in the search warrant used in the raid near Corvallis, and marijuana cultivation charges were dropped.

Alexander went back to his turn-of-the-century house in western Oregon's Coast Range — this time not to raise marijuana but to publish the nation's only trade magazine on the subject.

"There was no electricity, so with kerosene lamps I put together a 16-page magazine on newsprint," said Alexander, 34, who holds a bachelor's degree in business administration.

"I knew nothing about journalism, but I had 1,000 copies printed up and I took them to Humboldt County," one of California's premiere marijuana-growing areas.

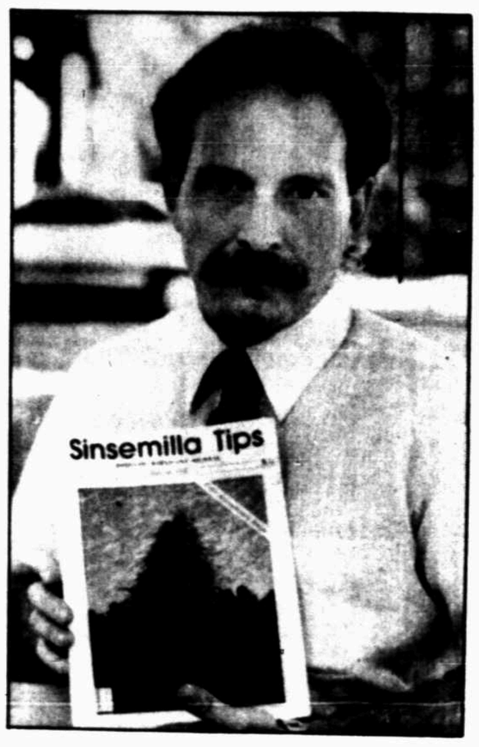

"I sold them all at 50 cents apiece."

Gradually Alexander placed the magazine for sale in newsstands and bookstores. By the fall of 1980 he had a San Francisco-based national distributor.

The quarterly magazine published in Corvallis now has a press run of 10,000 copies and sells for $4.

A recent 72-page edition contains advertisements for products ranging from a kit to detect the sex of marijuana buds (female buds are most potent) to gadgets that detect electronic eavesdropping devices and spot counterfeit money.

Most of the articles in the magazine are geared toward helping the marijuana grower increase the yield and potency of his crop. Its title refers to seedless marijuana, the most powerful variety.

Tom Alexander publishes Sinsemilla Tips Magazine, but doesn't grow marijuana. The founder of the one-of-a-kind publication spent 30 hours in jail in 1979 when his 1,324 marijuana plants were seized, but was released after finding a technical error in the search warrant.

AP Laserphoto

The magazine also includes political comment, a four-page cartoon, called "Smokey Jokers," an article on what law officers look for when flying over marijuana plots, and a question and answer column.

"I have heard so much about bat guano," one letter said. "What is it and how does it benefit plant growth?"

The magazine answered that bat droppings were an excellent fertilizer.

"If marijuana remains illegal, growers are still going to want information, and if it is legalized there will also be a need for information," Alexander said. "Growers find useful tips (in the magazine), especially now with increased indoor growing and use of highly technical items such as computers, special lights and hydroponics."

Sinsemilla Tips offers subscriptions, both foreign and domestic, but Alexander said most readers buy the magazine at bookstores and newsstands. The subscriber list, on computer disks, is closely guarded.

"I'm definitely conscious of the government doing dirty tricks," he said. "So whenever I go anywhere, the disks go with me."

Corvallis police detective Wayne Botta said his department had no problem with the magazine.

"They are totally legal," he said. "I have read copies myself; it's a very informative magazine."

Alexander said that while 2 million to 3 million growers nationwide would find his publication informative, he has no direct competition.

"A couple of other publications have tried competing, but they've lasted only one or two issues," he said.

Alexander said the magazine grosses about $100,000 a year, but much of that is plowed back into the publication to ensure future growth. He said he paid himself a salary of about $18,000 annually.

Alexander's appearances on national television shows such as "Donahue" and the "CBS Morning News" have helped his magazine gain recognition.

While he favors legalization and hopes his magazine will help further that cause, Alexander said he rarely smokes marijuana these days.

It interfers with his busy life as a magazine publisher.

A Sinsemilla Tips poll, saying the average marijuana grower's profits rose to $22,500 last year, an increase of $7,000 from the previous year, was reported in the USA Today newspaper.

Alexander said that with increased aerial surveillance by law officers, much marijuana growing has shifted indoors. But that doesn't mean large-scale growing is no longer done.

Tape of Mengele surfaces

NEW YORK (AP) — A tape recording released by Dr. Josef Mengele's biographer purports to have captured the notorious Nazi "Angel of Death" in a relaxed evening at the piano, playing and singing nostalgic songs in German.

Author Gerald Astor said last week he received the tape earlier this week from an interpreter in Brazil, who got it from a woman who allegedly harbored the Nazi fugitive in her home for 13 years.

The woman, Gitta Stammer, said her son made the recording July 26, 1971, to test a new tape recorder, Astor said. Mengele would have been 60 at the time.

The skeletal remains of a man identified as Mengele were exhumed from a grave at Embu, Brazil, on June 6. He is believed to have drowned in 1979.

Mengele earned the nickname "Angel of Death" for his horrific medical experiments and mass slaughter at the Auschwitz death camp during World War II. Survivors have recalled that Mengele used to hum or sing operatic melodies as he selected victims for the gas chamber.

On the crudely recorded tape released by Astor, a man can be heard singing several popular Austrian songs with piano accompaniment, and then playing several pieces on the piano.

Astor, in a telephone interview from his home in Scarsdale, said he was convinced of the tape's authenticity, partly because there was no apparent motive for anyone to make a phony tape and because Mrs. Stammer had been reliable in the past. But he said it was virtually impossible to prove the authenticity.

STATE

A stationary front moving into northern sections of Texas early today brought cooler temperatures in its wake and forecasters said the system could trigger widely scattered showers and light snow in northwest sections.

The front crossed the northern section of the state from just south of the Red River into the High Plains, while moist Gulf air spread northward into the eastern half of the state.

Low cloudiness covered North Central Texas. Patchy dense fog shrouded parts of East and Southeast Texas, lowering visibility to near zero at some locations. Drier air filtered into western portions of the state.

NATION

Heavy snow covered parts of Wyoming, Utah and Colorado early today, with more than 3 feet of fresh snow reported in at least one location.

A winter storm warning for heavy snow was issued across the northern mountains of Utah where Snowbird already had 47 inches by Sunday evening. Alta had 29 inches and downtown Salt Lake City had 12 inches.

A heavy snow warning also was posted over central and southwest Wyoming with 16 inches of fresh snow already heaped in Lander and 10 inches near Riverton and Shoshoni. The southwest mountains of Colorado were expecting heavy snow tonight and the Nebraska Panhandle and northwest have been under winter storm watches for possibly heavy snow.

Travel advisories for slick and icy roads stretched across southeast Colorado, northern Wyoming, the Nebraska Panhandle, Nevada's Lake Tahoe area and California's Sierra Nevada mountains and Kings Canyon.

Raiders edge by in OT; Chargers outshoot Steelers

Associated Press

The difference between the Los Angeles Raiders and Denver Broncos is six points, and the Raiders have had to work overtime to prove it.

"That's what football is all about," Coach Tom Flores said after his Raiders edged Denver 17-14 in overtime Sunday. "It's amazing to play the same team in three weeks and get two overtimes."

Los Angeles won the previous meeting between the two National Football League teams 31-28 — also in overtime.

"It wasn't something we had planned on," Flores said. "But we have a tradition for getting up for big games, especially overtime games."

A 26-yard field goal by Chris Bahr lifted the Raiders to victory. But Denver Coach Dan Reeves said that a miscommunication at the start of overtime led to the chain of events that culminated in the winning kick.

Light snow was falling when the Broncos won the toss to begin the extra session and Denver captain Barney Chavous elected to receive.

"We wanted to defend the south goal," said Reeves. "We thought with the wind and snow blowing right in their face, we could pin them down and make it difficult for them to move the football. I'll take the blame for the misunderstanding."

At the start of OT Denver was unable to move the ball. In their first two possessions, the Broncos had minus 2 yards in total offense and was unable to move past their own 20.

On Denver's third possession, pinned up deep in his own territory, quarterback John Elway dropped back to pass when he was sacked by defensive end Howie Long. Teammate Greg Townsend arrived a split second later, knocked the ball loose, then fell on the fumble at the Denver 8.

"I wasn't trying to knock the ball out, I was just trying to sack him and give our offense good field position," Townsend said. "The ball squirted on the ground. I fell down, hoping I could get it."

Elway said: "I don't know what happened. I saw everyone coming at me. The ball was slippery from the snow and the wind was blowing, and I was just trying to get a grip on it as I got hit."

On the next play, 4:55 into overtime, Bahr kicked the winning three-pointer as the Raiders, down 14-0 at halftime, completed their successful comeback to raise their record to 10-4 and gain sole possession of first place in the AFC West. Denver is now 9-5.

NFL Roundup

Chargers 54, Steelers 44

Running back Gary Anderson, formerly of the U.S. Football League, ran two yards for the tie-breaking touchdown and, 24 seconds later, rookie safety Jeff Dale returned a pass interception 47 yards for a score to lift San Diego.

The 98 points ranked fourth all-time in NFL history. The highest-scoring game ever was 72-41 by Washington over the New York Giants in 1966.

The Steelers, who entered the game with the highest-rated defense in the AFC, fell to 6-8 and two games back of Cleveland and Cincinnati in the AFC Central with two games remaining.

Pittsburgh stormed back from a 14-point halftime deficit and took the lead for the first time on Steelers kicker Gary Anderson's third field goal, a 26-yarder with 6:37 to play that made it 44-41.

Seahawks 31, Browns 13

Quarterback Dave Krieg passed for four touchdowns, including two to Daryl Turner — his 11th and 12th TDs, as Seattle, 8-6, kept its playoff hopes alive. The loss snapped a three-game Cleveland winning streak.

Krieg completed 24 of 34 passes for 268 yards without an interception.

Bears 17, Colts 10

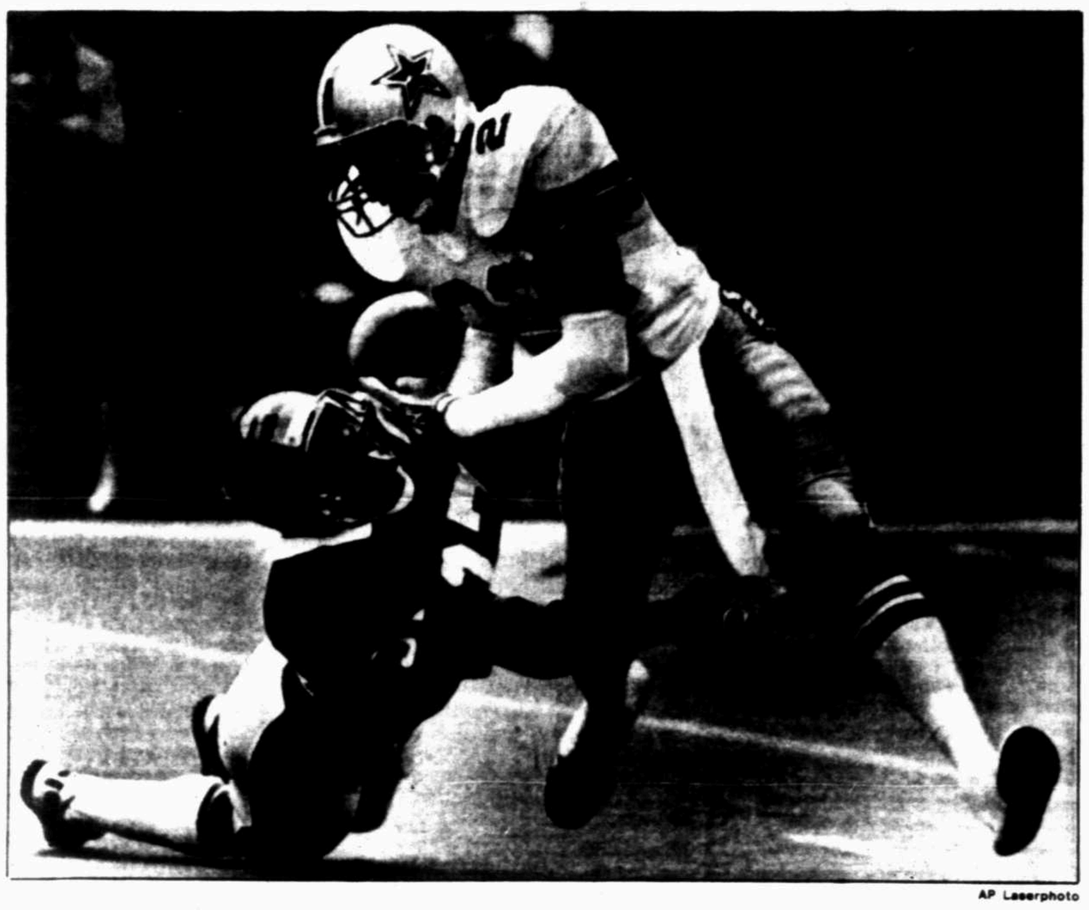

Walter Payton rushed for 111 yards — extending his NFL record to nine straight games over 100 yards — and scored a touchdown to help Chicago outlast the stubborn Indianapolis Colts.

Chicago, 13-1, went into the game as a prohibitive favorite, but couldn't move the ball against a rugged Indianapolis defense until the second half. The Colts fell to 3-11 and lost for the sixth straight time.

Dolphins 34, Packers 24

Quarterback Dan Marino passed for 345 yards and five touchdowns, including two in the fourth quarter, as Miami rallied after a furious second-half comeback by Green Bay to retain a share of the lead in the AFC East.

Chaps close 1985 action with NMMI

By TED BATTLES

Midland College (2-0) winds up its 1985 basketball schedule against New Mexico Military Institute at 7:30 p.m. tonight in Langford Chaparral Center, hoping that someone, somewhere, may notice.

Despite their unblemished status, the Chaparrals have no national stature, and if MC fans have had it with this Togtherness of convenience, you can't blame them.

When the national junior college rankings came out last week, MC was nowhere to be found among the top 20, but what can a team that finished no better than fourth in the national tournament last year expect.

Three teams with one loss on their records are listed among the elite. Two of them, Allegany, Md., and Westark, Ark., were beaten by MC in last year's nationals.

The three Texas teams listed in the top 20 are McLennan, No. 5; San Jacinto, No. 10; and Tyler, No. 17. All are legitimate.

The unkindest cut of all is the No. 18 ranking of Trinidad, Colo., a team that Midland beat by more points than there are miles to Big Spring in the Thanksgiving Day tournament in Odessa.

Still, national rankings, as the Chaps long ago discovered, are fluff. When MC won the national title, it went to Hutchinson, Kan., without Top 20 credentials.

So what is important is tonight's game. The Chaps, 2-0, go against NMMI, 0-2, in a Western Junior College Athletic Conference game.

The Cadets from Roswell, N.M., however, are 8-3 for the season and are a young team that should improve as the season wears on.

Not only is this one important in the WJCAC race, but Coach Jerry Stone feels it is important to end the year on an upbeat note.

The Chaps don't play again until the Mesa Shootout in Arizona in January. After that, MC will play in the Howard College Classic at Big Spring Jan. 10-11 before resuming WJCAC competition.

Cowboys burned bad, 50-24

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals Coach Sam Wyche correctly predicted a victory over the Dallas Cowboys, but he had no inclination the damage would be so great.

"We didn't think we'd score 50 points," Wyche said after the Bengals hit the Cowboys fast and hard in a 50-24 National Football League romp Sunday. "I wrote on the board that 35-27 would be the final. I thought 35 points would win it."

The Bengals sped past the 35-point mark early in the third quarter and kept the offense at full throttle, handing the Cowboys one of their worst beatings in years.

"The Dallas Cowboys are a great team," said Bengals wide receiver Cris Collinsworth, who caught a game-high seven passes for 123 yards and a touchdown. "They obviously didn't play a good game. We played probably our best game. When you put those two together, something like that can happen."

The explosive combination came at just the right time for the Bengals and at a painful time for the Cowboys. Cincinnati, 7-7, moved into a first-place tie with the Cleveland Browns in the AFC Central, while the 9-5 Cowboys slipped into a first-place tie with the New York Giants in the NFC East.

Bengals quarterback Boomer Esiason inflicted most of the damage, throwing for three touchdowns and 265 yards against the stunned and perhaps distracted Cowboys.

Esiason figured Dallas might have been thinking about its home game next Sunday against the Giants.

"I think they were looking ahead to New York," said Esiason, who completed 15 of 25 passes without an interception.

Cowboys Coach Tom Landry agreed his team seemed a little complacent.

"It just appeared they (the Bengals) had more to lose than we did, because they played a very good football game and we didn't," Landry said.

It was the Cowboys' first appearance in Cincinnati, and a sell-out crowd of 56,936 got plenty to cheer about from the opening series.

The Cowboys took the kickoff, the Cowboys lost more than 20 yards on a fumble, and quarterback Danny

Giants' Morris runs over Oilers

HOUSTON (AP) — New York Giants running back Joe Morris scored three touchdowns and rushed 129 yards and then let quarterback Phil Simms do the talking.

Simms passed for two more touchdowns to assist in the Giants' 35-14 victory over Houston Sunday and was delighted to talk about the Giants and Morris.

Morris turned in his fifth 100-yard performance of the season and became only the second 1,000-yard rusher in Giants history.

His three touchdowns extended his National Football League-leading total to 17 touchdowns.

"I'm happy for him," Simms said of Morris, who made a quick exit from the locker room. "It was a great accomplishment for him and our offensive line. Joe does a great job of running the ball."

The victory, coupled with Dallas' 50-24 loss to Cincinnati, knotted the Cowboys and Giants at 9-5 atop the National Football Conference's Eastern Division going into Sunday's showdown at Dallas.

"We've done a lot of good things this season and now we've got a chance to do a lot more," Simms said. "It (Dallas game) could be the biggest game I've ever played. It will be like a playoff game.

"When a player thinks of all the practice and how many times you get to play in a big game, it means a lot."

The Giants will go into the game tied with the Cowboys because they beat back Houston's only challenge with a 21-point spurt over the final 3:36 of the first half for a 35-14 halftime lead.

Morris capped New York's first two drives of the game with touchdown runs of 12 and 2 yards.

Warren Moon, who had missed three games with a hip pointer injury, hit touchdown passes of 3 yards to Jaime Williams and 27 yards to Tim Smith over a 48-second span of the second quarter to tie the score.

Cowboys show wrong color

The Dallas Cowboys seemed in complete accord after Sunday in looking forward to the Super Bowl game. They agree, it should be a tremendous offensive show, but defense will be the difference.

The Chicago Bears, an updated version of Neanderthal Man, blanked the Cowboys 44-0. The Cincinnati Bengals yielded 24 points despite the 50-point outburst.

One got the feeling that the Cowboys came to Riverfront unprepared as soon as the teams were flashed on the TV screen. The Cowboys had forgotten their Lucky Blue uniforms. There they were, big as life, in home white.

It didn't look like they had done much home work on the Bengals once the game started. It was almost as though the Cowboys thought they were playing in Buffalo. As it turned out, the results were the same.

The Bengals went without a huddle, throwing Dallas' defense into a panic. It made you wonder why it isn't done more often. The Cowboys kept getting caught with the wrong people on the field. That's when the AFC team lowered the Boomer.

The Dallas secondary reacted as though the forward pass was a secret weapon. They weren't any better against the run.

On one play, a guard, don't ask where he got the running back number, lined up a yard behind the quarterback and went 30 yards on a one-block plunge up the middle. The rest of the Cowboys were off chasing shadows.

When Cincinnati recovered an onsides kickoff with the score 22-0 in the first quarter, the Mrs. wanted to know if the game was fixed. It's her standard question whenever the Cowboys start losing.

I assured her that the Bengals were guilty of a fix similar to the one last week "when you took Felix, the kitten, to the vet."

STILL, DESPITE the score, you could tell it was a fluke.

Whenever the Bengals made a touchdown or tackle, they acted like it was the first one they had ever made.

The Cowboys, on the other hand, showed the poise and maturity of old pros.

In the fourth quarter when quarterback Danny White rolled out and flipped that short pass to Doug Cosbie for a touchdown, neither went into a wardance or slammed the ball on the ground. They behaved like pros, as though they'd just done their job, like it was nothing.

Come to think of it, with the score 50-10, it was nothing.

With the score 43-10, the sound was turned off for a nap so I'd be fresh for Denver-Oakland. That's when I found out the true importance of the game.

Chris Collinsworth took a pass over his shoulder and ran off and left behind a Dallas defensive back, who appeared to be mired in concrete. It was an easy 50 or 60 yard touchdown.

On the sidelines, Collinsworth picked up the phone and his smile spread from ear-to-ear. It didn't take Sherlock Holmes to figure out who was calling, after all, they don't put through phone calls to the field for just anybody.

But then those Redskin fans just revel at the Cowboys' misery.

Sooners aim at Penn State, No. 1

By MIKE KING
MRT Correspondent

The Southern Methodist University Mustangs ended their season Saturday with a 35-13 loss to the Oklahoma Sooners.

The score of the game, and the Mustangs' 6-5 record, does not accurately reflect the quality of the SMU team. They may in fact posses more individual talent than any team in America. The only problem is that the talent was never fine tuned as a unit.

Three of the SMU losses were close games, and could have gone either way. If SMU had won those three games they would have a 9-2 record, which is more representative of their true ability.

Before the season started S.M.U. received the stiffest penalty the NCAA has ever given, leading one sports writer to say, " the only team that can stop the SMU Mustangs this season is the team of NCAA investigators."

The damage done to the team's mental attitude as a result of the NCAA penalties quit possibly was responsible for the team's disappointing season.

The Oklahoma Sooners ended their regular season Saturday also, with a record of 10-1 and one game remaining, the Orange Bowl game against number one ranked, and undefeated, Penn State.

The Sooners were pre-season picks by many to be the number one team in the country, and an Orange Bowl victory over Penn State could make that possible.

WATCHING SATURDAY'S game from the Oklahoma sideline was quit an experience. Yes, I was on the OU sideline. I must confess that I am an avid Sooner fan.

The activity at a major college football game is incredible. There are the fans, the bands, the players, the cheerleaders, and oh yes, the game. I had trouble deciding what to watch, so I decided to divide my attention equally between the game and the cheerleaders.

The SMU fans and cheer leaders were on the same side as the Oklahoma bench. I must compliment the SMU fans and cheerleaders for their loyalty to the team. They cheered for their team throughout the game, and I admire fans that stick with their team, even when the team is having an off season.

The Sooners looked impressive in winning the game, although SMU scored two touchdowns against an Oklahoma defense that had not allowed a touchdown in 5 games.

The Sooner offensive players were the stars of this game, scoring 35 points and rushing for 426 yards. This is even more impressive when you consider that the Oklahoma backfield is made up of sophomores and freshmen. In fact, the entire Sooner team has only seven seniors and 12 juniors.

It appeared that in this game the offense may have reached the same plateau as Oklahoma's highly rated defense. For most of the season the offense has played well, but in spurts. Saturday it all seemed to come together.

OKLAHOMA HAD a couple of opportunities to get what appeared to be easy scores, but showed some class by letting the clock run out on one occasion, and bringing in their backup quarterback on another.

Oklahoma played six running backs and two quarterbacks in the game, something they have done all year, when they felt safe that is. I wonder if Jimmy Johnson ever considered doing that against poor Notre Dame, or maybe he never felt safe?

Following the game, Oklahoma head coach Barry Switzer was asked if he felt that his team should be ranked number two, ahead of the Miami Hurricanes. Switzer replied, " I'm not going to get into that this year, I'll let that take care of itself."

Switzer was also asked how good he thinks this year's team is. "Very good", was the response. Is it the best team in the country? " It's pretty good", Switzer said with a smile.

Well, if he isn't going to say anything, I am.

Oklahoma's record is 10-1, with the only loss to Miami. When Oklahoma lost that game they were missing a few people. They played the game without starting nose guard Tony Casillas, who is an All-American and Lombardi award winner.

They also played without Spencer Tillman, their most experienced back, and to make things worse, they lost their starting quarterback in the second period with a broken foot. All part of the game.

My only point is Miami's win under those circumstances would be like Oklahoma beating Miami if they had lost Vinny Testeverde. The game would count regardless, but the teams would not be the same if they were missing their key personnel.

HAVING FOLLOWED Oklahoma all year, I can tell you that the team Miami beat seven weeks ago in Norman is not the same team they would be playing today.

In addition, Oklahoma has played four teams ranked in the top 10 at some time during the season, and lost one of those games. Miami has played only two top 10 teams, losing one of those games.

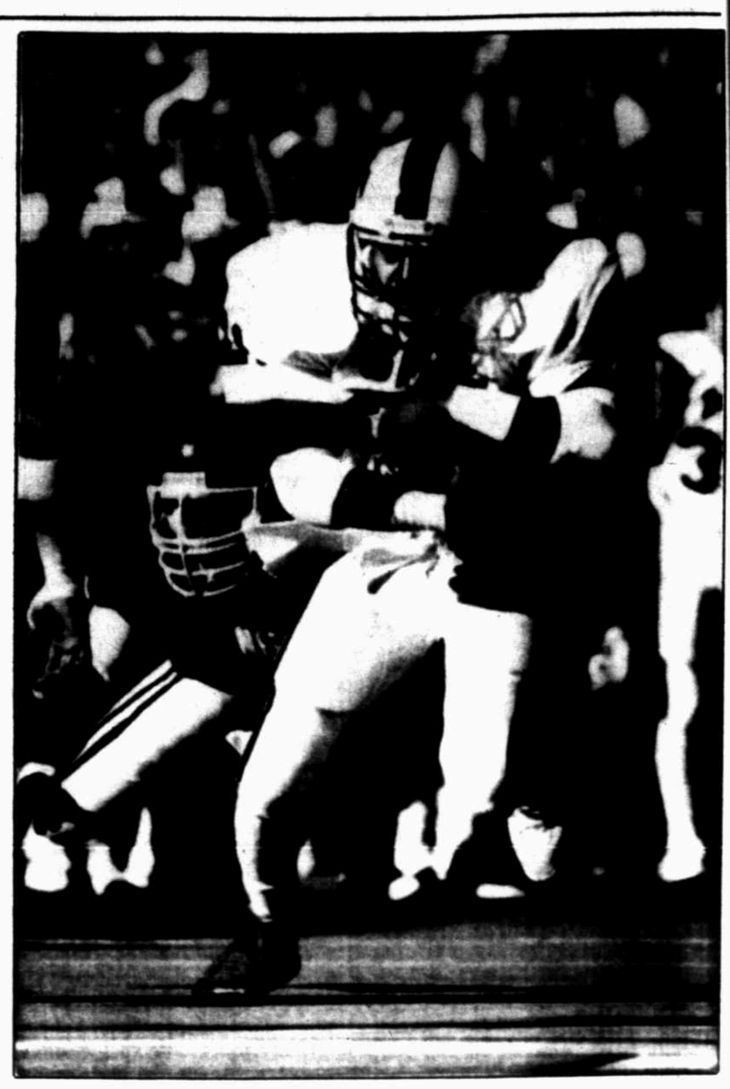

Compare schedules and you will find that OU has played Minnesota, Texas, Colorado, Nebraska, Oklahoma State, and SMU, while Miami has played Florida and Florida State, both good teams, but look at the other games, Colorado State, Louisville, East Carolina and Rice. Are those teams even in Division IA?

Look at the NCAA stats for even more proof of who the best team in the country really is. Oklahoma leads in nearly every category, except passing offense.

They are at or near the top in rushing defense, passing defense, scoring defense and total defense. On the other side of the ball they are equally highly rated in rushing offense, total offense and scoring offense.

Where is Miami? Look farther down in the listings, farther still. There they are.

On New Year's night we will find out just how good Oklahoma really is, or how wrong I am.

Marino's five TD passes in a game tied his NFL career high.

Vikings 26, Buccaneers 7

Minnesota's defense forced six turnovers and Tommy Kramer passed for 309 yards as the Vikings toppled error-prone Tampa Bay in a sloppy game. Jan Stenerud kicked four field goals for the Vikings, now 7-7.

Interceptions by Chris Doleman, Tim Newton and Willie Teal, fumble recoveries by Doleman, Dennis Fowlkes and Doug Martin, and two sacks by Keith Millard helped Minnesota drop Tampa Bay's record to 2-12. The Bucs also committed 10 penalties for 76 yards, while Minnesota had five turnovers.

James Wilder gained 94 yards, becoming the first Tampa Bay player to surpass the 4,000-yard career rushing mark. He has 1,156 yards this season and 4,034 in his career.

Jets 27, Bills 7

Three touchcown passes by Ken O'Brien, two to tight end Mickey Shuler, powered the New York Jets over Buffalo. O'Brien, who completed 25 of 40 passes for 370 yards, threw touchdown passes of 20 and 2 yards to Shuler and connected with Wesley Walker for a 96-yard scoring strike — the longest play in Jets history.

The Bills, the NFL's lowest scoring team, had three long drives stopped by turnovers, one coming on a fumble when they were on the Jets 1 and another when Bruce Mathison's pass from the Jets 4 was intercepted in the end zone.

The victory left the Jets at 10-4, only the second time since 1969 that New York reached double figures in the victory column.

Patriots 23, Lions 6

Tony Eason threw for one touchdown and ran for another and Craig James became the 10th player to rush for more than 100 yards against Detroit this year in New England's victory.

The Patriots improved their record to 10-4 to keep a share of the AFC East lead with the Jets and Dolphins. Detroit, 7-7, lost its seventh straight road game.

James gained 115 yards, giving him 1,027 yards for the year.

Redskins 17, Eagles 12

George Rogers ran for 150 yards and scored a touchdown to lead Washington over Philadelphia, 6-8, and keep the Redskins' mathematically alive for a fourth straight playoff spot.

The Redskins, 8-6, had to stop a Philadelphia drive that reached the 2-yard line with three minutes left before claiming their eighth victory against six losses.

Cardinals 28, Saints 16

Stump Mitchell rushed for 158 yards, including TD runs of 5 and 16 yards, and caught a 5-yard TD pass from Neil Lomax to lead St. Louis over New Orleans.

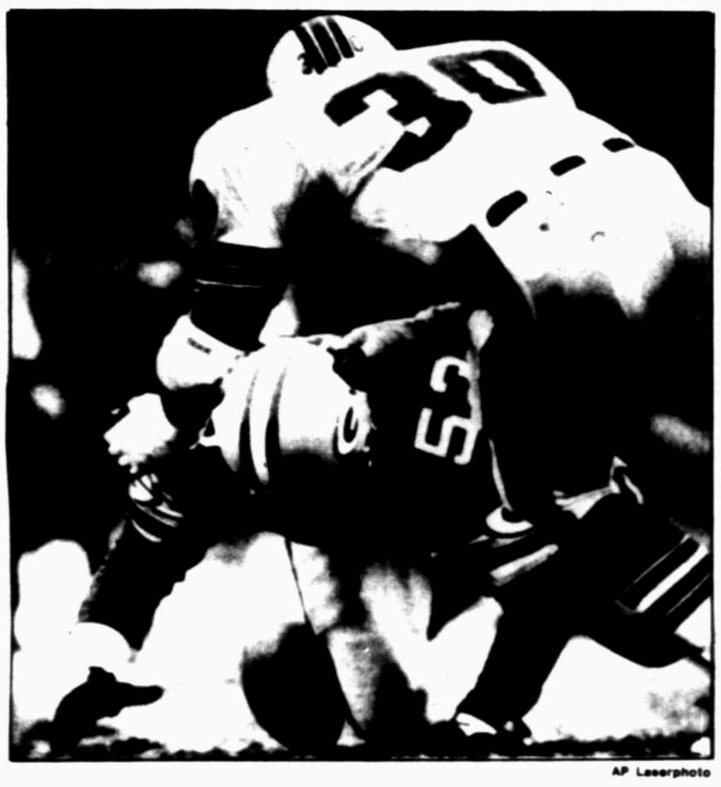

Lomax passed for 202 yards during a contest that left both teams with 5-9 records.

Chiefs 38, Falcons 10

Todd Blackledge threw three touchdown passes, including a 70-yarder to Stephone Paige, as Kansas City, 5-9, crushed Atlanta, 2-12, despite 196 yards rushing by the Falcons' Gerald Riggs.

Michael Carter, one of Dickerson's college roommates when they played together at Southern Methodist, has been a standout performer in the San Francisco defense since recovering from an early-season injury.

Rams, 49ers fight for NFC West lead

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Even on its best day this season, the Los Angeles Rams' offense was somewhat overlooked.

"We're not playing very good on offense right now. We'd better do it fast," says Coach John Robinson, whose struggling Rams face the charging San Francisco 49ers tonight with first place in their division at stake.

Robinson felt best about his offense two weeks ago, when Eric Dickerson rushed for 150 yards and quarterback Dieter Brock completed 15 of 19 passes. But the star of the 34-17 victory over Green Bay was Ron Brown with two kickoff returns for touchdowns.

The 49ers, 8-5, have won five of their last six games and can catch the Rams, 9-4, in the National Football Conference West race with a victory in tonight's nationally televised game. Los Angeles was 7-0 six weeks ago with a four-game lead over the 49ers.

If the Rams win, they clinch at least a wild card, but not the division. If 49ers lose, they could still win the division by winning their last two games and the Rams losing last two games because of a better division record.

"I think the pitter-patter at the Rams' back has turned into thunder," San Francisco offensive guard Randy Cross said last week, when the 49ers beat the Washington Redskins 35-8 and the Rams' offense produced only 164 yards in a 29-3 loss to New Orleans.

The Rams' defense, ranked fifth in the NFL with an average yield of 285 yards per game, will be challenged by the passing of Joe Montana, who has thrown for 2,649 yards and 19 TDs, and a solid rushing attack. Fullback Roger Craig, with 834 yards rushing, and halfback Wendell Tyler, with 824, hope to become the third pair of teammates in National Football League history to run for 1,000 yards in the same season.

"The defense keeps us from getting embarrassed in most of our games," says Dickerson, who led the NFL in rushing the last two years but probably will finish back in the pack this season, his third.

The Rams' offense ranks last in the NFL in net passing yardage (1,986) and near the bottom, 25th, in overall yardage.

White was tackled in the end zone for a safety on the third play from scrimmage.

"That was a pretty good indication of what kind of a day it was going to be," Landry said.

The Bengals took the free kick and struck quickly, marching 72 yards in seven plays capped by Larry Kinnebrew's 3-yard touchdown run. Esiason hit wide receiver Eddie Brown with a 45-yard TD pass on Cincinnati's next possession, and running back James Brooks burned a Dallas blitz with a 27-yard scoring run on a draw play. The extra point failed.

Less than nine minutes into the game, it was 22-0 — the most first-quarter points ever allowed by a Dallas team.

Esiason was knocked out of the game in the second quarter by a knee bruise, but returned in the third quarter and immediately turned a 22-3 halftime lead into a rout.

Esiason hit Steve Kreider with a 29-yard TD pass on Cincinnati's first possession. The Bengals recovered a fumble on the kickoff — one of four Cowboy turnovers — and Brooks ran 18 yards for a 36-3 lead. Esiason capped his afternoon with a 58-yard scoring bomb to Collinsworth as the Bengals rolled toward a staggering 50-10 lead early in the fourth quarter.

The Bengals even got some playing time for 15th-year veteran quarterback Ken Anderson, who completed two of four passes in his first appearance since the second game of the season.

When it was over, the Cowboys had surrendered the most total yards in team history (570) and the most points since a 54-13 pounding by Minnesota in 1970.

Even the Bengals were surprised by the ease of their conquest.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, December 10, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The year ahead could be one of your best ever! Despite your brash manner, your ideas will find acceptance. Travel is favored later this month, in January and in May. You are on the road to lasting financial security. Romance takes on new meaning for those getting out on their own. Protect your reputation; an indiscretion could be remembered for a long time. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Dodgers catcher Gilberto Reyes, Gloria Loring of "Days of Our Lives," Dorothy Lamour, New England poet Emily Dickinson, Swedish chemist-engineer Alfred Nobel.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A busy day lies ahead. Teamwork will boost profits. Finalize agreements and sign contracts. Joint resources can be increased. Get together with good friends or neighbors this evening. A candid chat proves revealing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An unexpected letter or windfall makes this a red-letter day! Bank any extra money. Holiday shopping and Christmas card-writing puts you in a festive mood.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A family member could act in an unreasonable way. Seek a compromise. A career-minded person may have to settle for what is offered. Review your priorities after talking candidly with mate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep your feet on the ground. Complete your research before making an important presentation. Although a competition is unusually tough, you win it handily. Romance could be disappointing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An excellent day to join forces with others. A mate or partner is willing to share the workload. If single, you find yourself taking an unusually strong interest in a newcomer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A family problem involving a teenager could be a major headache. A change of environment could be part of the solution. A financial situation shows improvement. Try not to press romantic partner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Finish a pending project before starting a new one. An influential person is more approachable than in the recent past. Observe the formalities, however. Present your ideas in a conventional way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Devote more time and attention to highly detailed work. Go out of your way to obtain information not readily available through normal channels. Romance appears glamorous. Take things slow and easy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Acting impulsively at work could prove costly. Postpone travel if you are needed on the home front. Patience is your biggest asset now. A letter or phone call initiates heart-warming news. Rewrite.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An excellent day to tackle paperwork. An educational course will give you an unexpected promotion or raise. Cooperative ventures can generate extra income. Your friends will back you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The self-employed enjoy good luck today. A pet project begins to show a profit. Joint ventures could prove costly, however. Be aware of what a partner is doing. Flexibility solves a domestic problem.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Creative projects bring enjoyment as well as extra income. An attractive member of the opposite sex reveals his/her romantic interests. Be honest if you are not ready to make a commitment.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1 – Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠Q93 ♡6542 ◇A8 ♣AQJ9

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ♠	1 ♡	?

What do you bid now?

A. – The overcall has made life difficult. The only intelligent way you have to show your good hand is to jump to three clubs. To bid some number of no trump without a stopper in the opponent's suit, or to cue-bid when you do not have control of their suit or another suit you want to hear from partner, is rather strange.

Q.2 – East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠Q105 ♡93 ◇Q83 ♣QJ762

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	1 ♠

What action do you take?

A. – The only bid to consider is one no trump. However, that is constructive, and you are a tad short of the requirements for that bid. Pass, and see how the auction develops. If partner has a good hand, he will see that the auction does not die.

Q.3 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠Q862 ♡7 ◇KQJ10 ♣KQ83

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
5 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. – Partner's jump over game asks about one thing, and one thing only – the quality of your trump support. You could hardly have weaker trumps for your jump raise of his suit, so you must pass. Partner probably has a hand something like:

♠J107543 ♡AKQ9 ◇A ♣A6

Q.4 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠A9 ♡KQJ10952 ◇AJ6 ♣5

Your right hand opponent opens the bidding with one club. What do you bid now?

A. – One possible action is to jump to four hearts, but we think that your hand is a bit too strong for that action, especially since you have good defensive values and don't have to fear the opponents can outbid you. Our choice is a takeout double, or a jump to two hearts if you are one of those old-fashioned players who still treat that action as strong.

Q.5 – Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AKQ63 ♡K9 ◇85 ♣Q983

The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ◇	1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠
Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. – Despite your holding in the enemy suit, we think your hand is just worth one move toward game. Our choice would be three clubs, which asks partner to evaluate his holding in that suit for game purposes.

Q.6 – Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠107 ♡Q98 ◇QJ82 ♣KJ105

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
2	Pass	3	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. – Partner is showing a balanced hand of some 25 points with a five-card heart suit. That means you have ample for a small slam but not enough for a grand. To protect against a possible bad break in hearts, we would choose six no trump. At that contract, we might come to 12 tricks even if we can take no more than three or four heart tricks.

Washington puts on the glitz to honor diva, soprano, dancer, duo and comic

WASHINGTON (AP) — A diva from Brooklyn, a Midwestern soprano turned actress, a rebellious dancer from Seattle, a romantic composing duo and one of America's best-loved comics were feted as masters of the performing arts as official Washington turned on the glitz and glamor to award the Kennedy Center Honors for 1985.

President and Mrs. Reagan joined 2,300 black tie and gowned guests at the White House and Kennedy Center Sunday to honor six of America's top artists — singer Beverly Sills, actress Irene Dunne, choreographer Merce Cunningham, lyricist-playwright Alan Jay Lerner and composer Frederick Loewe and comedian Bob Hope.

The gala evening included a White House reception, a performance at the Kennedy Center and a dinner-dance in the Grand Foyer.

"Each one of you has made life a happier thing for all of us," Reagan told the honorees at the White House. Mrs. Reagan, in a sparkling, beaded full-length gown, stood beside her husband. From his friend Bob Hope, Reagan borrowed a familiar line, "Thanks...for the memories."

Retired CBS anchorman Walter Cronkite was the emcee for the evening, which was being taped for broadcast Dec. 27 by CBS television. Each honoree was treated to a "This Is Your Life"-style vignette of baby pictures or selections from the artistic high points of their careers.

One of the most moving moments came when dozens of men and women in uniform marched on stage to thank Hope for his road shows to cheer servicemen and women overseas — including some who saw shows the comedian did in South Vietnam, Guadalcanal or even aboard an aircraft carrier in World War II. "You managed to stop the war, for at least a few moments," said one man with a catch in his voice.

The Opera House rang with plaudits from Rex Harrison, Robert Goulet and Louis Jordan, who offered tunes from Lerner and Loewe's songs from "Camelot," "My Fair Lady" and "Paint Your Wagon."

Comedienne Carole Burnett teased her friend Miss Sills for stealing her laugh lines during a television show, and praised her as a tough woman who struggled to cross from Brooklyn to the New York City Opera to become a true American diva. Miss Burnett said Miss Sills "made America fall in love with music and with life."

Ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov admitted that at first, he did not understand Cunningham's avant-garde style, "but now, I am wild fan. He broke all the rules. He is an American revolutionary who turned the world of dance upside down."

Actor James Stewart noted that Miss Dunne wanted to attend the event, "but it was not to be." A Kennedy Center official said she was ill.

The award program was set up in 1978 by the center's trustees "to provide deserved recognition to individuals who throughout their lifetime have made significant contributions to American culture through the performing arts" as a performer, composer, choreographer, playwright, director or conductor.

At 82, Hope was the oldest of the honorees. He was cited for his 54 films, countless radio and television programs and USO tours.

Miss Dunne, 81, dropped her music studies in Chicago for Broadway's lights, where a chance meeting with the legendary Florenz Ziegfeld in 1929 sent her career as an actress soaring. She won acclaim for her performances in "Theodora Goes Wild," "The Awful Truth," "I Remember Mama," "Cimarron," and "Show Boat."

Lerner, 67, and Loewe, 81, gave American musical theater some of its most touching lyrics and musical moments in "Paint Your Wagon," "An American In Paris," "My Fair Lady," "Gigi," and "Camelot."

The Vienna-born Loewe and Lerner, the son of a prosperous family and who penned plays at Harvard, started their joint endeavor after a chance meeting in 1942 in New York's Lambs Club. They hit it big in 1947 with "Brigadoon," the musical set in Scotland, and went on to become one of Broadway's legendary teams.

Cunningham, 66, was cited for his choreography of 100 or more works for his own company, in addition to his dances for the New York City Ballet, the Paris Opera Ballet, the American Ballet Theater, and the Boston Ballet among others.

NEW YORK (AP) — On the fifth anniversary of the day John Lennon was shot to death, fans gathered to mourn across from his home as Paul McCartney warned in a rare interview about canonizing his former Beatle collaborator.

Dozens gathered at the teardrop-shaped section of Central Park dedicated in Lennon's memory on Oct. 9, and known as Strawberry Fields from the Beatles' song "Strawberry Fields Forever."

Through barren trees Lennon's admirers could see the spot in front of the Dakota apartment building where he was shot by Mark David Chapman the night of Dec. 8, 1980. Chapman is serving a term of 20 years to life at the Attica state prison in upstate New York.

Some mourners sat on Strawberry Fields' benches and stared. Others gathered near a portable stereo playing Beatles' records, singing along as someone strummed a guitar.

Most were too young to remember the British invasion that brought the Beatles to the United States in 1964.

Volatile oil trading continues to dominate market

By JAMES STERGOLD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Oil analysts had trouble trying to whip up much interest in the meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries that took place in Geneva during the weekend. The cash-strapped producers' output of 18 million barrels a day is about 2 million over their quota, they disagree on a host of issues and there is little prospect of patching up those divisions in the near term.

Even so, the oil futures market has been one of the hottest investment plays for several months running. OPEC has provided a backdrop against which a number of other factors have been at work. The result has been a remarkable swing in energy futures prices. They were on a long, increasingly steep uptrend from June to the end of November. Then, on Nov. 25, the bubble burst. Prices have since tumbled even more sharply than they rose.

"It's been as volatile a market as I've ever seen," said Peter C. Beutel, an oil analyst with Rudolf Wolff Futures. He noted, for instance, that the crude oil contract lost about $1 a barrel last Monday morning, then made it back in the afternoon. The key energy futures market is the New York Mercantile Exchange, where contracts in crude oil, heating oil, and leaded and unleaded gasoline are traded.

Rather than just watching OPEC, the analysts and traders also pay close attention to the weekly inventory figures provided by the American Petroleum Institute, usually released Tuesday evening.

ANALYSIS

"Traders wait for those numbers like the bond market waits for the weekly M-1 announcement," said Steven Blitz, an analyst with Salomon Brothers Inc.

The inventory figures have in recent months described two trends. First, the level of inventories, especially for heating oil, has been at or near 25-year lows. This is partly a matter of design. With the market for oil and petroleum products generally depressed in recent years, refiners have operated with smaller stocks than they did in more inflationary times. But the second recent trend has seen those low inventory levels start to rise.

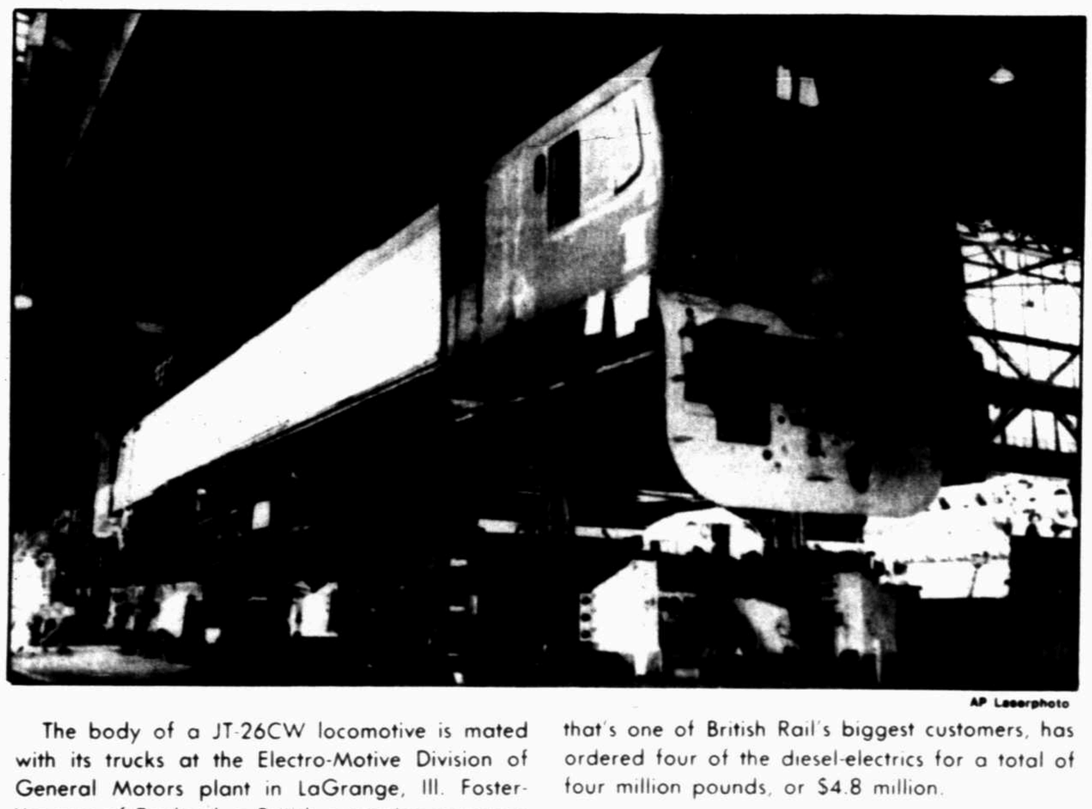

The thinness of inventories helped push prices to their recent peaks. The January-delivery crude oil contract scooted up from its low on June 19 of $24.38 a barrel to $31.17 on Nov. 25. Like a migratory bird, the price then headed south, settling at $28.74 on Friday.

The January heating oil contract rose from 70 cents a gallon in June to 90.75 cents on Nov. 25, and then crumbled to 83.17 cents a gallon on Friday. Volume in energy futures also soared, topping 47,000 a day for the four contracts traded on the New York Merc. That is about double last year's average.

Blitz said the turnaround was both a technical correction to an overbought condition and a response to the pickup in inventories. "People saw the low inventories and thought that would mean there would have to be more buying into the cold winter months," he said. "Expectations took the market beyond where it should have been."

A head trader for a major oil trading company said: "Everyone got nice and long, and then realized there was no one to sell to."

Beutel emphasized the shift in inventory levels. Inventories of petroleum distillates stood at 135.5 million barrels on Nov. 29, the latest reporting period. That was off almost 16 percent from the year before. But more important, he said, was that the figure showed a distinct uptrend from the inventory level in mid-October.

Iran warning: it will up daily production

TEHRAN, Iran (DPA) — Iran warned other member states of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries Sunday that it would be boosting its daily production capacity to 13 million barrels by next spring — the expected zero hour of an oil price war.

The warning came in a Tehran radio commentary directed to oil producers who "ignore the rights of other countries" and go along with "imperialist plots" against the developing world.

Another Tehran radio commentary, coinciding with the current OPEC oil ministers meeting in Geneva, appeared to depart from previous Iranian insistence on the highest possible price for crude oil by mentioning several disadvantages of high prices.

It accused the Western world of having deliberately precipitated high oil prices to "pump excess capital (from the oil producers) into their banking system and encourage the producers to buy unneeded goods at previously undreamed of prices."

In Nicosia, Cyprus, the authoritative Middle East Economic Survey reported that the National Iranian Oil Company has launched a major drive to line up customers for 1986.

Deals concluded so far or in the process of being finalized cover 700,000 barrels daily for 1986 and are calculated on "netback" prices of actual return on refined products, it said.

Shell and British Petroleum have already signed up for 100,000 barrels daily each, Agip for 50,000 barrels daily and Cameli Bros. for 60,000 barrels daily, the report said.

Deals being finalized include Marimpex (150,000 barrels daily for delivery to refineries in West Germany), Amerada Hess (60,000 barrels daily), Texaco, Phibro and the Spanish companies Petromed and Enpetrol (50,000 barrels daily each), Finland's Neste Oy (30,000 barrels daily) and Belgium's Petrofina (25,000 barrels daily).

Pogo head to address local forum

The West Texas Producers Forum has scheduled a meeting for Tuesday, December 10 at 11:45 a.m., at the Petroleum Club. Members will hear William C. Liedtke, Jr., chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Pogo Producing Co., a Houston-based oil and gas exploration and production company.

A native of Tulsa, Oklahoma, Liedtke graduated from Amherst College and earned a degree in law from the University of Texas Law School in 1949. After serving in the U.S. Navy during World War II, he lived in Midland from 1949 to 1963. He was managing partner of Liedtke and Liedtke, and a founder and director of Zapata Petroleum and was president of Stetco Petroleum. In 1963, the two companies merged with South Penn Oil Co., and Liedtke become executive vice president of the new company, Pennzoil Co.

In 1968, Pennzoil Co. was consolidated with United Gas Corp., and Liedtke was named president. Pogo Producing was established as an independent company free of any Pennzoil ownership in 1977, and Liedtke was named chairman of the board.

Gas prices continue up

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Retail gasoline prices, resisting a traditional year-end slide, continued an upward climb during the past two weeks that may become sharper next year, an industry analyst said.

"The reason for the upward trend is the increasing cost of the lead phase-down program," analyst Dan Lundberg said Sunday. "It takes a lot more crude to refine unleaded gasoline."

Lundberg, who releases a twice-monthly survey of gas prices at 17,000 stations nationwide, said his latest poll conducted Friday shows prices at the pump have gone up an average quarter-cent a gallon every two weeks since Oct. 11.

By comparison, prices dropped more than a penny a gallon in 1984 and 2.6 cents per gallon in 1983 from Sept. 8 until Dec. 6, he said.

He said the market price of crude oil has dropped over the past two weeks, but domestic costs have not reflected that decline.

"We should get over (the) idea that every international drop in crude oil prices will work its way to the pump," he said.

Lundberg predicted that the rise in gasoline prices could become markedly sharper after Dec. 31, when the maximum amount of lead allowed in each gallon of gasoline decreases from a half-gram to one-tenth.

Some 12,000 gasoline stations surveyed nationwide showed prices up by 0.24 percent overall since the previous survey Nov. 22, Lundberg said.

PBPA attends oil meetings

Prior to leaving for Washington, D.C., Permian Basin Petroleum Association president Perry Bolger, Executive Committee member Charlie McCoy and Executive Vice President Harry Spannaus held a luncheon meeting with Gib Lewis, Speaker of the House.

The PBPA members were joined by representatives of the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association and other Texas oil and gas associations.

At the luncheon, held December 5, Lewis was open about the problems facing the upcoming 70th Legislature, including dealing with increased costs and budgets while coping with a continued decline in petroleum prices, which drastically affect state revenue receipts. He was candid in making a long-range forecast that, because of the higher cost of running the state government and its programs, Texas must face the fact that, within 10 to 15 years, other revenue possibilities, such as corporate taxes and personal income taxes, will have to be enacted if Texas is to continue its role in improving economic growth and prosperity.

Following the meeting with Lewis, Bolger and Spannaus will join TIPRO and other association representatives in Washington D.C. for an Independent Petroleum Association of America "Call-Up" to lobby against the House Ways and Means Committee's final tax reform proposal before it goes before the House of Representatives.

According to Bolger, the visit is part of the PBPA's continuing efforts to prevent the tax reform bill, in its present form, from becoming law. "We will accept no comprise," stated Bolger. "The oil and gas industry is already the heaviest taxed industry in the nation, and we are dismayed that the House Ways and Means Committee would approve a tax reform bill with energy provisions which would inflict extreme damage on an already highly taxed and depressed industry."

Pickens criticizes proposed corporate takeover curbs

By ROBERT J. COLE
New York Times News Service

NEW YORM — T. Boone Pickens, the Texas oilman, Sunday sharply attacked the Federal Reserve Board's proposed rule that would restrict the sale of high-yield securities for use in financing hostile takeovers.

Pickens, who has raised considerable money for takeovers with such securities, called the plan "another move against stockholders."

The head of the Mesa Petroleum Co., a small Texas oil producer, Pickens has long regarded himself as a champion of the stockholder. "I wouldn't be surprised," he said, "if the pressure to do this is being applied by the Business Round Table, the Conference Board and the National Association of Manufacturers. Entrenched management is trying to set up rules and regulations to cut down on opportunities to make offers to stockholders."

Apparently convinced that he would be able to find a way to accommodate himself to the changing environment, he said: "All it means is that the rule will make it more complicated to get financing. But there will always be some ways for people with resources to make offers. If otherwise you could do a $5 billion deal, it may cut you down to where you can only do a $2 billion deal."

There was another expression of unhappiness with the proposal, but from a different perspective. Martin Lipton, a senior partner of Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz of New York, said: "There are a number of ways around this, and it is certainly not as strong as it should be."

Lipton, an attorney who represented Revlon Inc. in its recent fight to avoid a takeover by Pantry Pride Inc., said the proposed new rule had been urged on the Federal Reserve by both Revlon and the Unocal Corp., the big West Coast oil company, through the Washington law firm of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, which was special counsel for both companies.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

OPEC strategy could lead to oil price war

An oil price war may break out next year as a result of a change in strategy agreed to by OPEC oil ministers. The 13-nation producers' organization agreed in principle to abandon its policy of curbing output to defend a $28-a-barrel oil price, and instead will cut their prices, as needed, to secure sales.

New clashes seen over U.S.-Japan deficit

The U.S.-Japanese trade deficit will continue to rise, sharpening tensions between the two countries, economists and analysts said. Many see new clashes ahead as the Reagan administration advances its stated policy of moving aggressively against unfair trade practices.

New York to debate banks selling insurance

Whether state banks can sell insurance will be debated this week when New York legislators hold a public hearing on Thursday in Manhattan. A number of bills that would permit state-chartered commercial banks to sell all types of insurance as well as to form insurance companies will be discussed.

Carl C. Icahn is trying to raise up to $1 billion in financing to buy the shares of Trans World Airlines he does not yet own. Sources familiar with the effort said Icahn was prepared to put up $100 million to $150 million in additional financing.

GAF rumored to be after Union Carbide

GAF has begun raising financing from Drexel Burnham Lambert, according to sources who believe that GAF is close to a bid for at least controlling interest in Union Carbide.

Langer wins Sun City Million

SUN CITY, South Africa (AP) — West Germany's Bernhard Langer underlined his claim to player-of-the-year honors Sunday with a two-stroke victory in the Sun City Million Dollar Golf Challenge.

Langer, who won five tournaments this year including the U.S. Masters, finished with a 1-under-par 71 to give him 278, 10-under par for the 72-hole event, earning him $300,000 at the head of the elite 10-man field.

U.S. Player of the Year Lanny Wadkins, the overnight co-leader with Langer, never got going and struggled to a 73 for a final total of 280 for second place.

American Mark O'Meara fired a 69, his best round of the tournament, to take third place a stroke back.

But the day's honors went to Seve Ballesteros, the Spaniard who has won here the past two years, for a charging 67 that brought him within four strokes of Langer for fourth place. Ballesteros had struggled on the first two days, but turned the front nine Sunday in 31.

But Ballesteros missed a short putt on the 15th that would have put him even with Langer, and a double-bogey on the 17th ended his chances.

Langer, while not quite as sharp as on the first three days when he had rounds of 69, 70 and 69, still was consistent and was three strokes up by the time he birdied the 16th. Although he dropped a shot on the 18th when he fired into the crowd, by then he was uncatchable.

He faltered early on, dropping shots on the 5th, 7th and 8th, but then he ran off birdies on 9, 10 and 11. It was his short game that made the difference.

American Lee Trevino, the co-leader after the first round, stumbled to a 74 for a 283 total and fifth place, a stroke ahead of Taiwan's T.C. Chen, who finished with a 1-over par 73.

Kerr's goal doesn't help; Flyers lose 3-1

NEW YORK (AP) — Tim Kerr scored another power-play goal for the Philadelphia Flyers, which is nothing new.

The news is that the Flyers lost another game.

"It seems that some of the players who should be scoring on a more consistent basis aren't doing the job," said Philadelphia Coach Mike Keenan after Sunday night's 3-1 National Hockey League loss to the New York Rangers.

It was the fourth loss in the last five games for the Flyers, who had a 19-4 record, including a 13-game winning streak, before their recent slump.

"We're stil a hard-working team," said Keenan, "that hasn't changed. We just haven't been scoring enough goals lately."

Ironically, the Flyers had played one of their best games of the year in Saturday's 4-0 triumph over the Rangers in Philadelphia. That had extended Philadelphia's winning streak over New York to 14 games dating back to March 14, 1984.

"I think our team decided it had to go out and take the body consistently against Philadelphia," said Rangers Coach Ted Sator. "We had to go out and fight fire with fire. I don't know if it takes the monkey off our backs, but we have to play this kind of game against these big teams."

The way the game started out, it looked as if it would just be a continuation of Saturday's drubbing in Philadelphia as Kerr scored his league-leading 25th goal of the season at 7:18 of the first period. The big right wing knocked in the puck, his 15th power play score of the season, after taking a goalmouth pass from Peter Zezel.

"I just stood out there and batted at it until it finally went in," Kerr said.

The rest of the game, however, belonged to the Rangers, as James Patrick tied it with a goal and Remio Helmenin scored and assisted on another. The Ranger defense did the rest. The Flyers, one of the best power-play teams in the NHL, converted only 1 of 9 manpower advantages.

"We didn't really get it going," said Kerr. "We had a lot of opportunities. You have to capitalize on the power play."

Patrick scored short-handed for New York at 10:12 of the first period, firing a 10-foot shot at Flyers goalie Bob Froese on a breakaway for his third goal of the season.

Helminen then put the Rangers ahead with his fourth goal, after Froese made several sparkling saves, with a backhander at 15:34. Helmenin then assisted on a power-play goal by Ron Greschner, who closed out the scoring at 9:50 of the second period on a 50-foot slap shot on a power play.

Goaltender John Vanbiesbrouck also keyed the New York victory, kicking out 28 shots as he posted his 13th victory of the season, tying him with Calgary's Rejean Lemelin for the league lead in that department.

"He made a lot of good saves," said Kerr of Vanbiesbrouck.

As for Vanbiesbrouck, beating Philadelphia was a personal vindication.

"I was sick and I didn't even think I could play tonight," he said. "But I'm glad I did. We haven't beaten the Flyers in my reign here as a goalie."

NHL Roundup

Oilers 4, Black Hawks 3

The Oilers scored on their first three shots of the game — the first one a short-handed goal by Jari Kurri — and hung on to beat Chicago. The victory extended the Oilers' unbeaten streak to 12 games (9-0-3).

Kurri, with his 18th goal of the season, Mike Krushelnyski and rookie Marty McSorley took full advantage of Edmonton's first shots on slow-moving Bob Sauve in the Chicago goal. McSorley got Edmonton's other goal, his second of the game and third of the season, in the second period.

Chicago outshot Edmonton in every period and had by far the better scoring chances. But the Black Hawks couldn't finish off their plays.

Behn Wilson, Denis Savard and Troy Murray scored for the Hawks.

Kings 4, Jets 1

Marcel Dionne scored twice, and Los Angeles got three quick goals in the third period to beat slumping Winnipeg.

Dionne scored the winner at 11:16 of the final period and the Kings added two more goals in two minutes as one of the NHL's least-accomplished teams took its fourth point in two days from Winnipeg.

Also scoring for Los Angeles were Bryan Erickson and Doug Smith, while Mario Marois scored the Jets' goal.

Darren Eliot blocked 25 shots in goal for Los Angeles to record his fourth victory of the season.

Sabres 3, Bruins 3

Jay Miller scored his first NHL goal in his third game at 15:39 of the third period, and Boston went on to earn a tie with Buffalo.

Miller scored into an open net after goalie Tom Barrasso came out to knock the puck away. Steve Kasper then lifted a shot which rebounded to Miller all alone in front of the goal.

The goal, the only one scored in the third period, tied the game after Buffalo had gone ahead 2-0 on goals by Phil Housley at 11:56 of the first period and Mike Ramsey at 11:50 of the middle period.

Rinkers claim J.C. Penney title

LARGO, Fla. (AP) — Larry and Laurie Rinker fired a 6-under-par 66 Sunday to become the first brother-sister team to win the $600,000 J.C. Penney Mixed Team Golf Classic.

The Rinkers finished the 72-hole event at the Bardmoor Country Club course with a 21-under-par 267, two strokes better than Craig Stadler and Lori Garbacz. They split a first prize of $120,000.

Stadler and Garbacz, runners-up for the second straight year, shot a 65 Sunday to come in at 269. Curtis Strange and Nancy Lopez, the 1980 winners, were alone in third at 66-270.

The Rinkers, whose parents traveled from across the state at Stuart to watch the tournament, posted six birdies and no bogeys in their final round.

"We took the pressure off each other and kept hitting better and better shots," said Larry Rinker, 28, a non-winner on the PGA tour. "Because we are brother and sister, I think we took it a little more serious than other teams.

"We felt like we could win it at the beginning of the week. I knew Laurie was swinging well, so I felt that if I could help her, we would have a chance."

The victory wasn't the first for Laurie Rinker, but the 23-year-old said this one was much more meaningful than her title at the 1984 Boston Five Classic.

"It's a different feeling than winning by yourself," she said. "It's more emotional. It's more special."

Al Geiberger and Patty Sheehan closed with a 65 Sunday to jump into a tie for fourth with Andy Bean and Amy Benz at 272. Mark McCumber and Chris Johnson fell to 71 and took sixth at 273.

Garbacz, who played the entire tournament with a sore throat and a 100-degree fever, felt really sick after finishing second again.

Edberg grabs first title with Australian win over Wilander

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Nineteen-year-old Stefan Edberg of Sweden on Monday captured his first Grand Slam title by defeating fellow countryman Mats Wilander in the men's singles final of the $1.5 million Australian Tennis Open Championships.

Edberg beat the 21-year-old Wilander, the defending champion, 6-4, 6-3, 6-3 on the grass courts at Kooyong in one hour, 33 minutes after a rain-delayed start.

For the victory, the fifth-seeded Edberg collected $100,000, while Wilander pocketed $50,000.

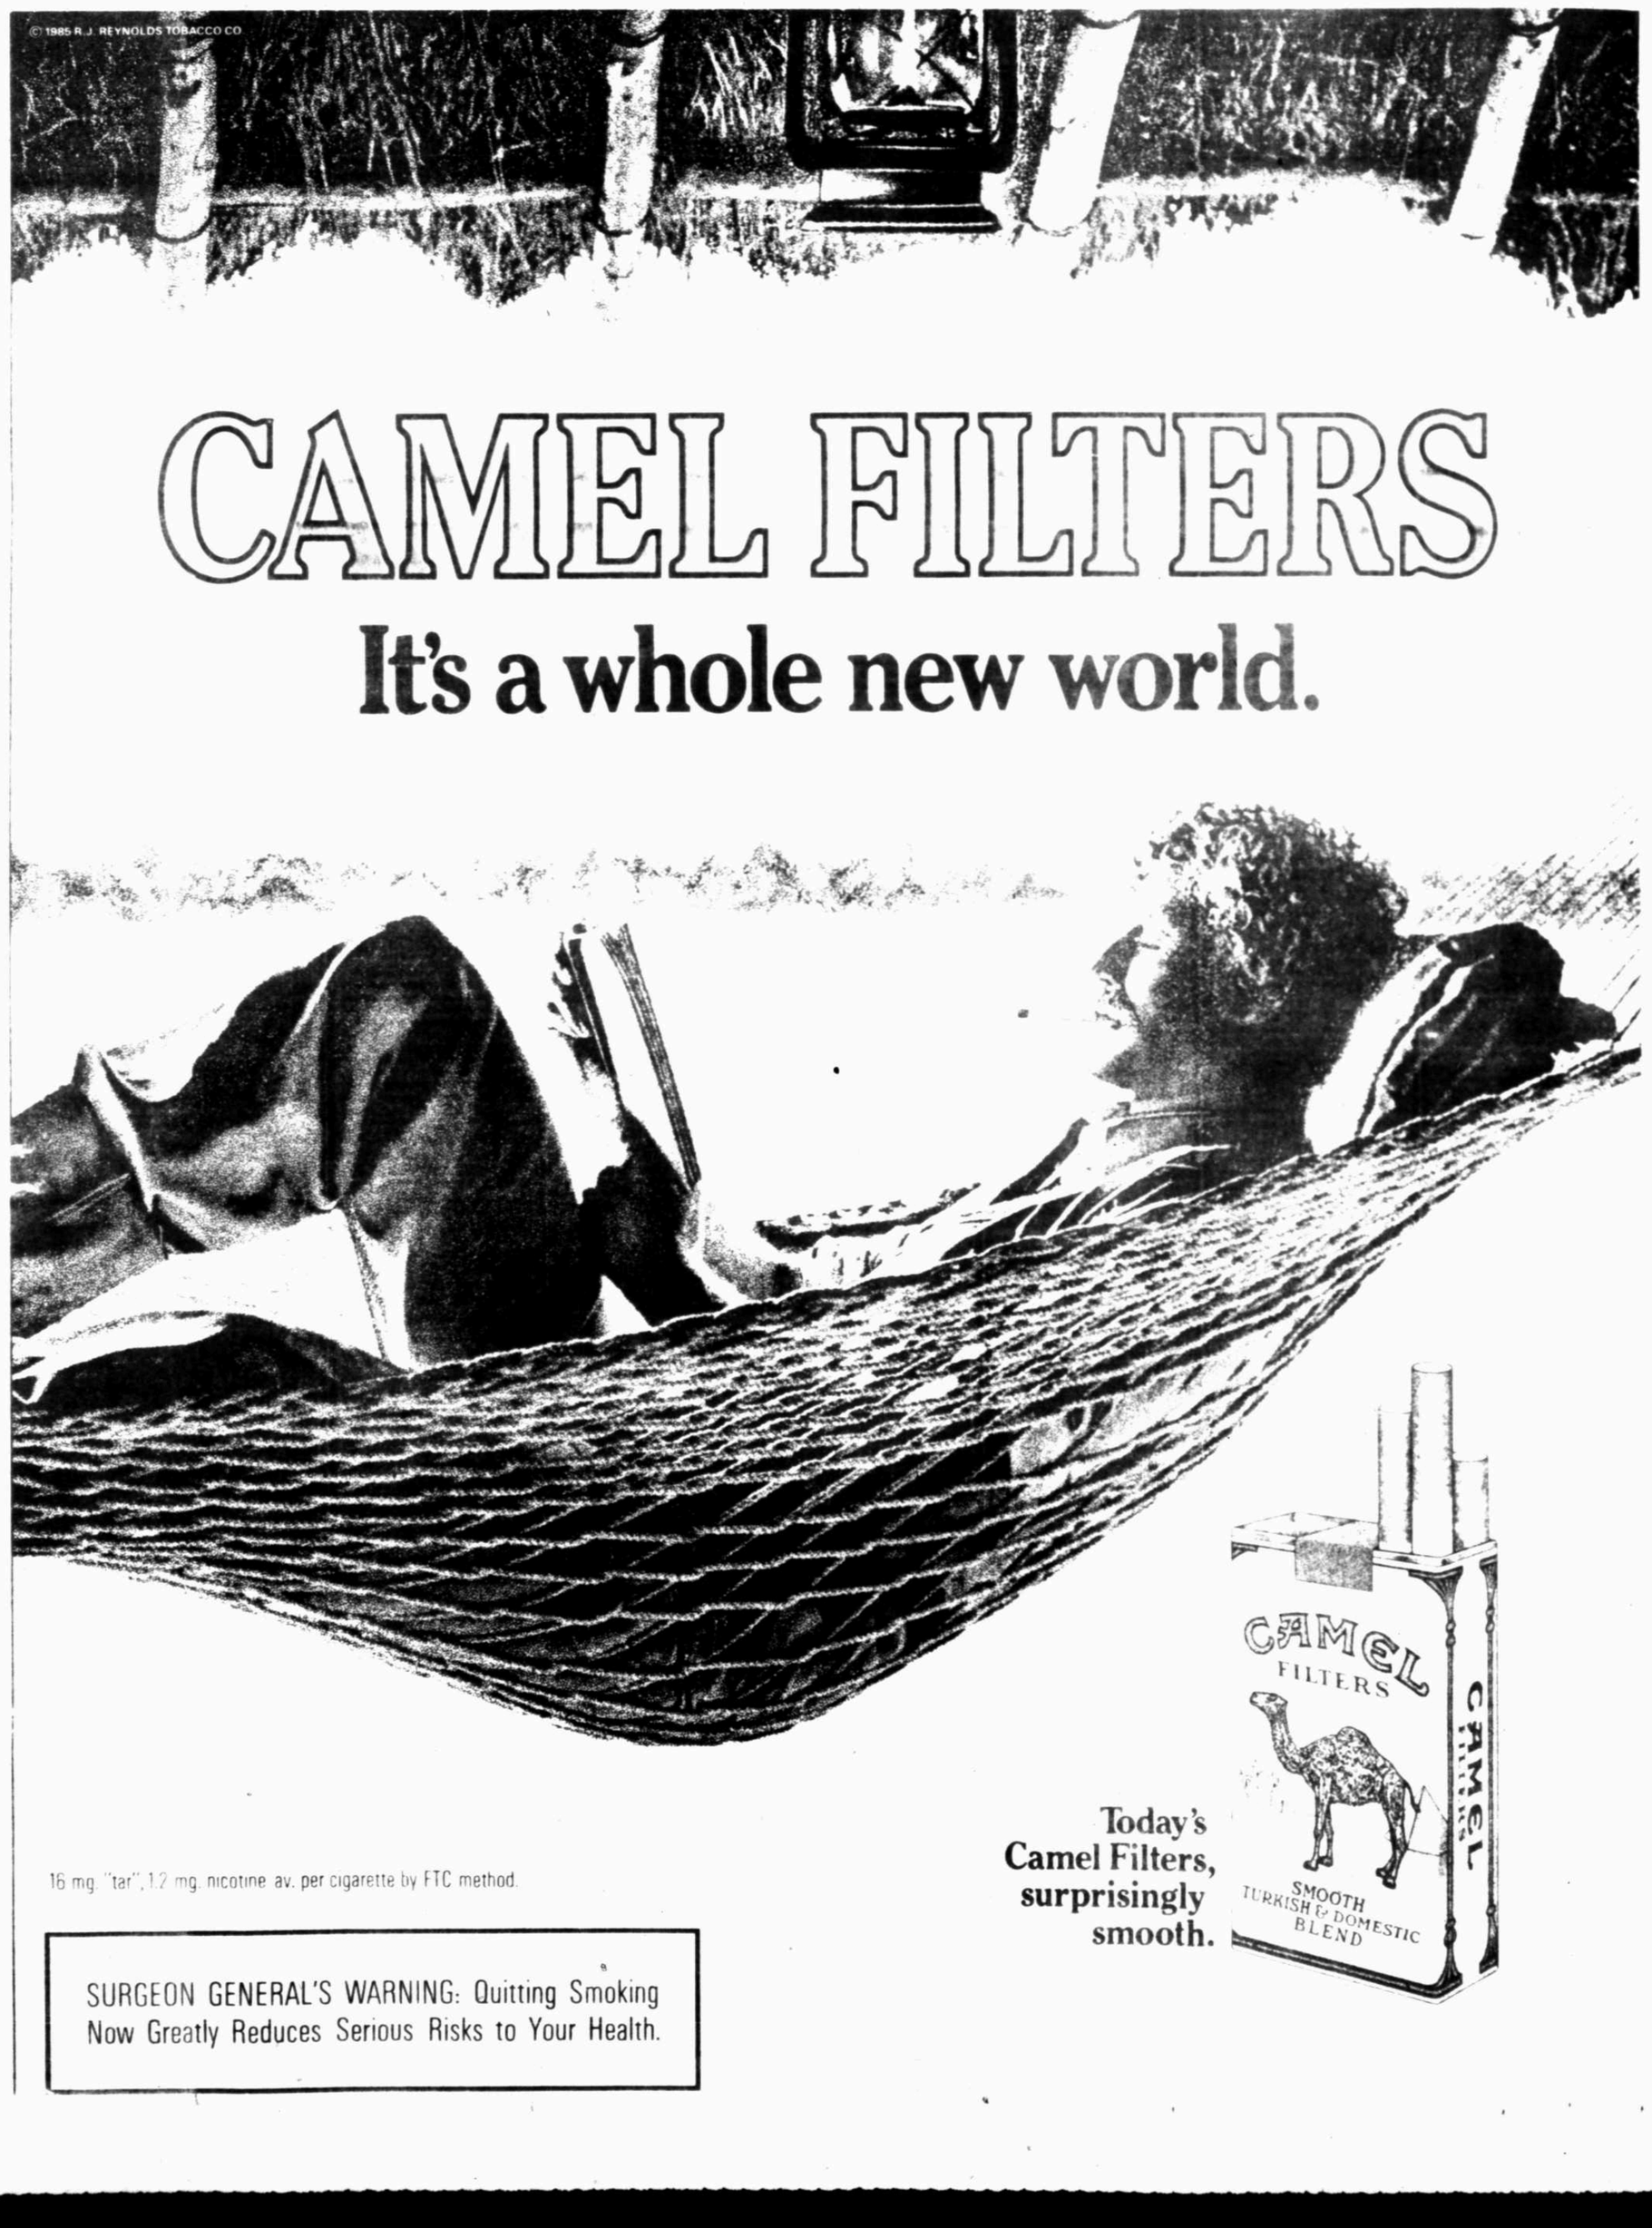

Edberg, the only player to capture the junior boys title in all four Grand Slam tournaments in a single year, outplayed his more experienced rival for most of the match and stopped Wilander from winning his third consecutive Australian Open.

"This has been one of my greatest tournments ever," Edberg said after his victory. "I've never been so happy in my life."

Wilander, seeded second, congratuled Edberg on his victory, saying: "If there's somebody I don't mind very much to lose to, it's Stefan. He's a very good friend."

The last time the two met in a tournament final, Wilander defeated Edberg to capture the Swedish Open in Bastad in July.

Edberg broke Wilander in the 10th game of the opening set, the third game of the second and then the third and ninth of the third set to clinch the title.

Dian Pierce, of the Midland Christian School Ladies Auxiliary for Christian Education, gets wrapped up in her work as she plants a bow on a co-worker. The group annually operates the booth at Midland Park Mall.

Santa Claus, a.k.a. Michael Self, lifelong Midlander, waves from his Midland Park Mall throne room where he spreads good cheer among holiday shoppers.

Christmas cheerers

Bishop St. Nicholas, who served in Myra, Asia Minor, in the A.D. 300s, was famous for his generosity. Six hundred years later, Michael Self of Midland is continuing a tradition begun by the good bishop which evolved over the years into the jolly Santa Claus loved by children the world over.

In his red suit and flowing white whiskers, he is one of many Midlanders who annually make their appearance in a brief, yet high-spirited season of good cheer. Salvation Army bellringers, Christmas tree peddlers, gift wrappers and the suburban mall Santas are special people — they are the Christmas people.

Self, when not parading the halls of Midland Park Mall is self-employed, with a contracting business, Self Inc., and another part-time business, Dial-A-Santa, which led to his current stint as Good Saint Nick.

"I had heard they were needing someone at the mall this year, so I came over," said Self in between ho-ho-hos. " I love children. I have four kids, am the uncle of 37 and the great uncle of five."

Self's self-appointment as a temporary Kris Kringle is, well, purely unselfish.

"I can't be around my own children," he said sadly, saying no more. "So I make it up with others. Just making those little kid's eyes open up and twinkle — that's the touch I like."

Self, 32, talked candidly about his own unSanta-like problems with alcohol which led to his affiliation with Alcoholics Anonymous and his four-year abstinence from the drug.

"I was a drunk, a sorry drunk," he stated. "But I'll tell you what. The more good memories I get behind me now, the less chance that I will take another drink."

Self is making plenty of good memories this Christmas, as he tends to the long line of children anxious to sit on Santa's lap and tell him their most fervent wishes.

High school students devise plan to govern extraterrestrial colony

By KELLI CASTLEBERRY

LUFKIN (AP) — With the advent of space travel, it appears that extraterrestrial colonies could soon become a reality.

While scientists and researchers have found ways to overcome zero gravity and other astrophysical phenomena, a group of Lufkin High School students have addressed yet another aspect of space colonization — how to maintain law and order.

In the classroom of U.S. government teacher Charlene Lively, constitutions from faraway countries such as "New America," "Universal Republic," and "United Territories" adorn the wall. Like the U.S. Constitution, they provide for a leader, legislative branches, and other points of government.

But these constitutions were written by a handful of high school students, many of whom are not old enough to vote.

"We think the people's rights are the most important thing," said Kathy Moore, who helped draw up the constitution of New America, "because we don't want the government to have complete control."

The group also chose to have their president elected by popular vote and serve a six-year instead of a four-year term.

"Sometimes they will be trying to get things done and in four years there isn't enough time," said Buddy Timme.

Miss Moore also said the group "firmly believes" that capital punishment is a deterrent to crime and included it in the document. Another member, Brent Alexander, said the death penalty "saves tax dollars."

A unicameral legislative body was selected because the students "felt it would be more effective in one house," said Timme. He said there is often too much opposition between the Senate and House of Representatives in our bicameral system.

In the Universal Republic, "The people are the only source that will have any and all governmental authority," said Jon Bassinger, who helped write the laws for that mythical colony. "The power is vested in the people in our government."

The students strayed from the electoral college voting system because "it's kind of outdated," said Kristi Baker, and provided for checks and balances in the three legislative branches of their country.

"If one branch doesn't like the way another branch is doing something, they have the power to correct it," said Bassinger.

At the top of the constitution a symbol in each point of a five-pointed star represents a trait of the Universal Republic. Scales equate to justice, an eagle stands for freedom, a torch equals knowledge, a peace symbol means peace, and a circle represents unity. The star's colors, blue and white, stand for loyalty and hope.

Ms. Lively said the group chose a unique way to present their constitution to the class.

The students stood in a star formation around the classroom and as each explained what the various points stood for.

In the United Territories, the government is led by a superior instead of a president. Nicole Brewer, a student who helped write that constitution, said the group had a little trouble deciding on how long the superior should serve but finally decided on a six-year term with no limit on re-elections.

With tips, careful digging, Caro labors on second LBJ biography

By WILLIAM P. BARRETT

DALLAS (AP) — The letters and the telephone calls come regularly to Robert A. Caro's apartment in New York. Come and see me, Lyndon Johnson once sicked the feds on me. Or, I don't know if this will help you, but Lyndon was so much a campaigner that he once shook my hands three different times at a reception, forgetting each previous greeting. Or, I have some information for you about Lyndon Johnson, please contact me.

"It's been three years since the book came out but I still get messages like these all the time," says Caro in an interview with the Dallas Times Herald, as he thumbs through the day's mail. "It's really pleasing that people remember me and try to help."

The book, of course, is "The Path to Power," Caro's monumental biography of Johnson's life from his birth in 1908 to his unsuccessful run for the U.S. Senate in 1941. Published in November 1982, the 670,000-word account created a sensation with a plethora of startling revelations strewn about a generally dark portrait of the Texan who would become the country's 36th president. Despite some criticism from Johnson associates and a handful of reviewers, it was voted best non-fiction book of the year by the National Book Critics Circle, which now consists of the country's top 200 book reviewers.

NOW CARO, a former journalist, is hard at work on Volume 2, which will follow Johnson's life from 1941 through his years in the U.S. Senate (he was elected in 1948) and as vice president. The book will end November 22, 1963, the day that LBJ was sworn in as president at Love Field in Dallas following John F. Kennedy's assassination. Volume 3 will cover Johnson's presidency and his years in retirement until his death in 1973.

As exacting as Caro is in his research, he is notoriously bad at estimating his own deadlines. He thought his biography of New York City public works czar Robert Moses, "The Power Broker," could be done in nine months. It took seven years, although it won a Pulitzer Prize in 1975 and changed the way urban affairs are viewed. Caro hoped Volume I of LBJ would take two years. It also took seven. In a January 1984 interview, Caro said he thought he would be done with Volume 2 "in less than two years." Wrong again.

Not surprisingly, Caro no longer estimates completion dates, except to say Volume 2 isn't going to be finished before 1987. But almost as reassurance to his readers, he adds in a recent interview that he has already written about 250,000 words, about half the book.

Caro does his LBJ research year by year. So how far has he come? "I'm finally up to 1953." That leaves 10 or 22 years to be covered by Volume 2 — and all 10 years to be covered by Volume 3.

WITH SOMETHING like 450,000 copies of Volume 1 in print and the sale of movie rights for a reported $1 million, Caro and his wife, Ina, his chief assistant, have become wealthy. The couple, who years earlier sold the family house in the suburbs to finance part of his research on Moses, bought a seven-room apartment on New York's Central Park West, real estate that usually goes for more than $500,000. Caro's success also has given him a commodity prized by all writers — time. Time to wait out any roadblocks that may be erected by Johnson supporters. Time to ferret out the documents. Time to locate obscure but important people. Time to write a book double or triple the length of most other books.

"I don't care how long it takes, one year or two years or what," declares Caro, an intense yet affable man with dark features and a quintessential New York twang. "I don't want to look back and say, 'I could have done it better.'"

Caro has so much time, in fact, that he worries about potential sources dying before he can get to them. "Abe Fortas (former LBJ aide and U.S. Supreme Court justice), died after I had had just one interview with him," laments Caro, who is 49 years old and in apparent good health. "Allard Lowenstein (former New York congressman who led the dump-Johnson movement in 1968) died two years ago. People are dying, and I'm afraid. It's on my mind all the time."

MEANWHILE, THE Caros continue their distinctive brand of intensive research. Basically, the method consists of contacting everybody — everybody — who knows anything about Johnson, reading every relevant document — every single one — that can be obtained, and traveling, traveling, traveling.

Enter the unsolicited tips by phone and mail. "A lot of them don't amount to anything," Caro says, "but I've gotten a lot of valuable information from many of them." It is one reason why his home and office numbers are listed. "One person came up and he turned out to be a former pilot for Johnson," Caro recalls. "He was very helpful."

On the basis of Caro's track record alone, it's reasonable to assume that Volume 2, like Volume 1, is going to be full of juicy details. But there's also another reason. John Connally finally decided to talk.

The former Texas governor and presidential candidate served Johnson as a personal secretary for several years starting in 1939 and remained thereafter a close associate. Connally was one of the few people who refused to be interviewed by Caro during the preparation of Volume 1 — which Caro noted pointedly in the back of the book. However, according to Caro, after reading Volume 1, Connally changed his mind and invited the New York writer to his Texas ranch last spring. The result, Caro says, was three full days of interviews that ran into the early morning hours.

"I'VE HAD a lot of amazing interviews but these were the very best," Caro says. "He was present at about 20 very important moments in American history. He knows about everything that happened to Johnson in this period."

CHRISTMAS

"These are God's children," he proclaimed. "When these children come to me, it's a miracle."

Self, suddenly surrounded by children, headed toward his throne, located in front of Dillard's Department store. Placing an adoring fan on his lap, he bellowed a thunderous "Merry Christmas" and posed for a picture amid a holiday background of silver-wrapped presents.

Amid Self's ho-ho-hos, yet another Christmas sound could be heard — the rustle of gift wrapping paper — from the annual Midland Christian School gift-wrapping booth.

Working beneath two large gazebos, the workers — all volunteers — snipped, tore, taped and adorned the growing mounds of packages that accumulated as less artistically inclined shoppers dropped their wares, to return later.

"Oh we've had some pretty weird packages to wrap," said Dian Pierce, a volunteer. "Last year, we wrapped a set of tires and then someone wrapped a tent."

Ms. Pierce didn't state whether the tent was set up or not, but added that "it took several of our girls to get it wrapped."

"Of course, then we wrap microwaves, televisions and other large items like that," she said.

Ms. Pierce — and about 200 other volunteers — annually put in their time at the booth raising money for the the school. Last year, more than $12,000 was earned.

"There's very little overhead," said Ms. Pierce. " We get our supplies from Corley Box Co. at a discount; the bows (some 14,000 last year) are made mostly by one of our members (Pat Woolard) and all the work is done by volunteers. Of course we have to pay lease space."

Ms. Pierce added some businesses such as Foxmoor and Foot Action have donated boxes for the activity.

And activity is the word for it.

"Toward the end, we'll take anyone," laughed Ms. Pierce of the madness that comes with the last minute rush by shoppers. "We even have some of the husbands helping out."

The service was started about 20 years ago, according to Ms. Pierce, by the Ladies Auxiliary for Christian Education and is still operated by that group.

"We have four people per shift for three hour shifts during the mall hours," said Ms. Pierce. "We open the day after Thanksgiving and close Christmas Eve."

Another service provided by the women of the wrapping booth, is to serve as "kettle holder" for Salvation Army bellringers who yearly stake their territory at the entrance to the mall.

"Cold enough for you?" asked Ms. Pierce of the shivering soul as he wandered into the mall for a hot cup of coffee.

The bellringers — a longtime tradition of the charity organization — are a ubiquitous sight during the holidays, occupying corners, store fronts and other heavy pedestrian traffic areas where they collect donations in their bright red kettles.

Above the din of noon-hour motorists, the rattle of laden shopping carts and screaming infants, they ring their bells.

Barbara Lowry, manning the kettle at the downtown post office, decided to volunteer for the first time this year.

"My son Robert did it last year, but told me that he heard bells in his sleep," she said. "Both my two boys and me work at the Salvation Army so I thought I would try it out."

So far, the experience has been both a friendly and chilling one.

"It's been plenty cold," said Ms. Lowry at the height of last week's record-breaking temperatures. "I'm out here from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. ringing this bell, but most of the people are real friendly and usually give something."

Bellringers, however, are not the only people who face the elements each Christmas season.

Johnny Montoya is in his third year as a Christmas tree salesman.

Montoya takes refuge in his motor home parked nearby when not showing customers his fresh-cut Colorado Blue Spruce.

"It's just something I've always wanted to do," he said. "It's fun and doesn't take a huge investment."

What it does take, however, states Montoya, is contacts.

"I have some friends up in Colorado and Northern New Mexico who go out and cut the trees," he said, embarking on a sales pitch. "These trees are fresh. They haven't been stored for a long period of time, haven't been grown on a farm and will stay green through the season."

Montoya, who also owns an Exxon station at the corner of Wadley and Midkiff, is a dedicated businessmen — having several unorthodox pursuits.

"You wouldn't believe what I'm doing now," he said. "I'm painting 55-gallon oil drums black and selling them to people who live in the rural areas of New Mexico. They use them to burn trash in."

On the return trip from selling the drums, Montoya buys firewood to sell locally, adhering to what he claims is an old trucker's maxim.

"If you go full, come back full, you're not a fool," he said.

Currently, Montoya is far from being a fool, with a prime location on the parking lot of Dellwood Mall and some 200 trees to sell by Christmas.

Despite his merchant's propensity toward profit, Montoya reflected a moment on one top-notch specimen of yuletide greenness — a 12 foot spruce.

"Wouldn't this look great in someone's house who had cathedral ceilings?" he asked. "I'm not out to get rich. Just look at these trees. People love them."

Grievance to be filed on judge

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Prosecutors say they will file a grievance against a trial judge who overturned a jury's guilty verdict and or-dered an instructed verdict of dismissal for a woman accused of arranging the shooting of her former lover.

State District Judge Mike Westergren said he had no choice on his action Friday. Prosecutors failed to produce sufficient corroborative evidence to support the testimony of the state's key witness against Margaret Covington, he said.

District Attorney Grant Jones said Saturday he will file a grievance with the State Commission on Judicial Conduct complaining of Westergren's treatment of prosecutors.

Jones said his office would begin today compiling documentation that would show a series of causes in which Westergren has allegedly treated prosecutors unfairly.

Westergren's ruling Friday was made without giving the prosecution an opportunity to argue against the defense motion, Jones said.

"We have major litigation pending in his court and we will not sit idly by and let it be business as usual," Jones said.

Assistant District Attorney Bill May said Westergren should resign.

Members of the jury, who deliberated 17 hours over two days before returning a guilty verdict, were surprised by the decision, one juror said.

A psychologist and lawyer now living in Sweetwater, Ms. Covington was accused of hiring Terry Michael Noah to injure Corpus Christi attorney Cage Wavell in November 1981.

Wavell was shot four days after he refused to sign an affidavit that would have acknowledged he was the father of her child.

Attorney for TDC inmates says no prison construction needed

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Department of Corrections officials are in a rut over fiancing for new prisons, but an attorney for inmates says no new prisons are needed.

The state has twice been unsuccessful in attempts to sell about 3,700 acres of land in the Houston area — a sale whose proceeds are earmarked for construction of new prison facilities.

"We hope no prison is ever built," attorney William Bennett Turner said. "It's just fine with us if they're not able to sell the land, and if they're not able to build any new institutions."

Turner contends about half of the 37,500 Texas inmates are non-violent offenders and could be released. He said a prisoner release could achieve a 25 percent to 40 percent reduction in population without touching more serious offenders.

But under federal court orders, the Texas prison system, the nation's second largest, needs additional prisons if the inmate population continues to grow.

Needed is $125 million. The state, however, has been looking at possible alternatives, such as lease-purchase construction or swapping land for construction.

Under a lease-purchase agreement, TDC chairman Alfred Hughes of Austin said, "The TDC would contract with some company to build a prison which the TDC would lease from them with the right to purchase at the time we sold our land."

Turner said he will oppose any move the state makes to extend court deadlines for new prison construction.

"They'll probably screw up and not be able to get it done on time, and we are going to be completely unsympathetic," he said.

However, Hughes said he is optimistic a new prison will be built. He said there's enough time to construct a $60 million prison at Palestine for more than 2,200 inmates and trusty camps for another 2,000 prisoners.

Hughes said the prison population must be reduced to about 34,000 in existing facilities by September 1989, with about half of that accomplished by September of 1987.

Records show inmates are being released at a rapid rate — including 3,000 just between Oct. 28 and Dec. 1. Most are on parole and mandatory supervision, while the others are on conditional pardon.

Bexar County to probe police brutality

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Bexar County district attorney says his office should routinely investigate cases alleging excessive force by police as a check on the department's internal affairs inquiries.

Police have documented numerous incidents of officers using excessive force against city residents in recent years, but criminal charges were rarely filed against officers involved in those cases, the San Antonio Light reported.

The department instead has handled the cases within its own system, doling out administrative suspensions or reprimands through the internal affairs division to officers who assault civilians, according to the newspaper.

District Attorney Sam Millsap said he believes his office should routinely investigate such cases.

Police Chief Charles Rodriguez said his department must become more diligent in its handling of brutality complaints against his officers.

A review of 27 brutality cases over the past three years shows that only two cases were referred to the district attorney for consideration of charges, the Light reported.

The other 25 assaults — which had been investigated and found valid by the department's own internal affairs office — resulted only in suspensions of the guilty officers.

"My assumption has been until recently that in every situation these (assaults) are brought to me," said Millsap. "Now, I'm finding out that there are a lot we don't hear about."

Millsap said one case not sent to his office involved a citizen rushing to a hospital who was reportedly forced off the road and punched by an officer after he tried to signal the policeman for help.

Another case involved a woman who was handcuffed near a downtown lounge and allegedly thrown around, spat upon and struck several times on the breasts by an officer on his way to a disturbance call, the Light reported.

In neither case was the victim charged with a crime.

Rodriguez said that some police brutality cases that should have been sent to the district attorney were not. But the police chief also said some citizens who file complaints with internal affairs later change their minds and are not willing to follow up with the district attorney.

Millsap said that police and other public officials must be held to "higher standards than the general public."

"The police department ought to be even quicker to send that case to the district attorney's office," he said.

He said he had discussed the problem with Rodriguez.

"It's so basic — you don't grade your own papers," Millsap said.

Renowned actor turns to teaching

By RAMON RENTERIA

EL PASO (AP) — Everywhere he teaches, James Oliver seems to cast a magic spell on young people.

"I feel very strongly that I've found my niche, being able to communicate and — under the umbrella of theater — to teach and motivate young people to reach for more," he said.

Oliver's professional acting credits have touched the Broadway stage ("War and Peace," "The Wild Duck," "You Can't Take It With You").

He also has performed in soap operas ("Search for Tomorrow," "The Nurses") and television movies ("Implied Force," "A Special Kind of Love").

"Poetry in Black," a one-man show Oliver created in the late 1960s to dramatize the black experience, has been lauded and applauded from coast to coast.

Oliver, described by educators and critics alike as "an accomplished actor, innovative director and master teacher" still acts, accepting occasional roles from his home in Taos, N.M.

But for 15 years, his major role has been teaching young people in communities, Indian pueblos, public schools and college campuses across the Southwest, mainly Colorado, New Mexico and Texas.

"I have no grandiose idea of something I want to do, such as going to Hollywood and win an Oscar or going back to Broadway and win a Tony," he said. "Right now, this is my priority. Once I make a commitment to kids, I don't back out even though something juicier comes along in a sense of money for me or credits."

Oliver is in El Paso until summer, working as the Ysleta Independent School District's theater artist-in-residence. He uses a variety of theater games, exercises and his own experience to help high school students refine their acting techniques.

Oliver constantly reminds young people to develop their own self-worth, to reach their own level of excellence and to stop imitating others, such as popular rock stars.

"As any kind of artist, you have to be in touch with yourself, and not with being some other persona," he said.

"I tell my students: 'What magic do you have to contribute to the world if you're so busy imitating others.'"

As a guest, Oliver figures he can afford to be firmer with high school drama students to "make them aware of how serious the craft is and how much respect it deserves."

Students in Mario Maldonado's theater arts class at El Paso Bel Air High School were apprehensive at first about a professional coming to their classroom.

STATE IN BRIEF

Mexican Army searches cars in Ciudad Juarez

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Mexican Army officials say Americans driving in this border city should not be alarmed if they are stopped by soldiers who search their vehicles.

Officials said soldiers of the Mexican Army's 26th Infantry Batallion were setting up random checkpoints in Ciudad Juarez to inspect vehicles for drugs and weapons.

"The primary purpose is control of drugs and arms. We've been doing this for many years," an Army captain who asked not to be identified told the El Paso Times.

An Anthony, Texas, man was wounded two months ago by soldiers when he failed to stop at one of the military checkpoints on the east side of Ciudad Juarez, officials said.

Cocaine, plane seized

LAREDO (AP) — Officials say the seizure of more than 150 pounds of uncut cocaine with a street value of $28 million was the largest drug haul in South Texas history.

The cocaine, along with an airplane and $500,000 in cash, was seized Saturday by authorities. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration says several warrants, as a result of the seizure, will be issued next week, and arrests will begin immediately after that in major cities around the country.

DEA spokesman Dennis Harker said the drugs were flown from Colombia aboard a Cessna single-engine plane to Freer via Los Angeles, with an intermediate stop before the Los Angeles layover.

He said the shipment was meant to establish routes for cocaine distribution to Texas, specifically in San Antonio, Houston and the Rio Grande Valley as well as Laredo.

Transient in box jailed

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — A transient turned a Salvation Army donation canister into a jack-in-the-box, much to the fright of people trying to deposit clothing and other contributions, police said.

Officers arrested the man, described in his mid-40s, after he fell asleep in the box Saturday night.

Police said the man would jump up and scare people when they attempted to drop items in the box. The prankster was turned in by one of his victims, police said.

Several officers went to the donation box at about 6:30 p.m. and found the man had fallen asleep inside the box. He was revived and arrested, said Delbert Grogg of the Salvation Army.

Center to aid disabled

DALLAS (AP) — An expanded, $26 million rehabilitation institute will treat patients from North Texas and four surrounding states who have experienced catastrophic disabilities, officials say.

Charles Lewis leans against the walls of a closet "apartment," an 11-by-5-foot storage closet he rents as living space in a two-bedroom apartment in Brooklyn, N.Y.

Tight New York housing pushes renter into closet

NEW YORK (AP) — Charles Lewis sleeps in a closet. He pays $200 a month to rent an 11-by-5-foot storage closet with a window in a two-bedroom walk-up apartment he shares with two roommates in Brooklyn.

Lori Schulman pays $300 a month to share with one roommate a spacious one-bedroom sublet with living room, dining room and kitchen in a doorman building on the freshly fashionable Upper West Side of Manhattan. It has parquet floors, 10-foot ceilings and four walk-in closets.

On the other side of town, Ina Bernstein rents a small one-bedroom apartment equipped with dishwasher and microwave in a year-old luxury high-rise along the East River. The concierge provides drycleaning, shoe repair, theater tickets and limousine service. She pays $1,600 a month.

Such are the disparities in New York City housing costs caused by high demand, low vacancy and regulations that keep some rents artificially low while others on the open market are absurdly high. In addition, conversions to co-operative units have taken many apartment buildings off the rental market.

In a city with 1.9 million rental apartments, only about 2 percent are vacant at any given time, according to the Department of Housing Preservation and Development's 1984 statistics.

Those statistics say the median rent citywide is only $330 a month, including utilities. But just try to find an apartment that cheap.

"There are a lot more inexpensive apartments than expensive apartments, but you don't hear about those," said Jack Richman, a research associate at the Real Estate Board, a trade organization.

"Word of mouth will rent them," he explained. "They're handed down from generation to generation, some people find them by reading obits, others just get lucky."

But most New Yorkers who search the classifieds or apply through a real estate broker can expect to pay up to four times that $330.

Some luxury apartment rents come in five figures. Available for immediate rent in the elegant Trump Tower is a five-bedroom condo on the 59th floor, with 10-foot ceilings, marble bathrooms, parquet floors, maid service and floor-to-ceiling windows with views of Central Park. Rent? A mere $18,000 a month.

The difficulty of finding decent, affordable housing in the tight city market often forces people to squeeze into stamp-sized spaces, share with roommates or move out of Manhattan.

Ms. Schulman and her roommate are among the lucky ones who inherited rent-stabilized apartments from friends who left New York. "It was an impossible dream that I still can't believe came true," said the 24-year-old mechanical artist. "I know I couldn't afford to live in New York if I didn't have this deal."

Many people are willing to pay top dollar for the convenience, location and lifestyle the heart of the Big Apple affords.

The average studio in a new doorman building rents for $1,200 a month, one bedrooms $1,700, two bedrooms $2,200-2,500, and three bedrooms $3,000-3,500, said Henry Robbins, vice president of Yale Robbins, a company that monitors market conditions. "I don't know who's renting them at those prices," he said.

Yet it's not only on Manhattan Island, where demand is highest, that rents are out of sight. The neighborhoods in the four "outer" boroughs and across the Hudson River in New Jersey that lie within easy commuting distance are increasingly popular.

"It's a little claustrophobic, but I'm dealing with it," said Lewis, 27, about the Brooklyn closet he calls home.

It's just large enough to fit his specially made 26-inch wide Japanese futon bed, a standing lamp, three milk crates filled with record albums, two guitars, a mandolin and a banjo. His walls are covered with calendars, photographs and greeting cards. His laundry bag hangs from a hook. His stereo sits on a shelf.

"It just fell into my lap when I needed a place to live," said Lewis, who works in a recording studio. His tiny room is in an otherwise roomy apartment in the largely Italian neighborhood of Carroll Gardens.

Federal appointee system needs overhaul

WASHINGTON (AP) — The presidential appointee system — by which hundreds of people are picked to run the federal bureaucracy — is in dire need of revision because it leaves citizens "dissatisfied, financially impaired and sometimes burned out by their experience in government," according to a study released today.

Changes must be made if the system is to provide the nation with talented and creative leaders, asserts the report, "Leadership in Jeopardy."

"In a country as heavily dependent as ours on in-and-outers as executive leaders, deficiences in the appointments system pose a serious risk to public management," said the study conducted by the National Academy of Public Administration.

"The quality of government depends upon the quality of those who govern. And there is nothing in our research that is very encouraging about future improvements in the quality of either," it said.

The congressionally chartered, non-partisan organization embarked on a preliminary study of the issue in 1982, followed by a more wide-ranging project begun in 1984, to examine presidential appointments from 1964 through 1984. Some 1,287 appointees who held a total of 1,528 appointments took part in the analysis.

The study, which covers five administrations, found a rapid turnover in top federal positions, increasing delays in the Senate confirmations, increasing problems in candidates meeting financial disclosure requirements, and increasing numbers of appointees who said their longer hours of work and job stress put a significant burden on their personal lives.

Overall, the study made 23 recommendations to change the selection and recruitment of appointees, to simplify the financial disclosure and confirmation processes, to help orient new appointees and to improve their working environment.

"The appointments system does not work as well as it should or could; its adequacy in meeting the executive staffing needs of the agencies and departments of the federal government is now seriously in doubt," the study said.

It notes that as the workforce of the government has ballooned to exceed 5 million employees, the number of appointed positions has grown as well.

Although it does not give a number, the study noted that at one time only the agency head and a deputy were appointed by the president. Now there might be half a dozen or more presidential appointees at the top of any agency.

This growth has placed an increased burden on the system's abilities to locate and recruit qualified people, and the study said "the capacity no longer exists in the White House or the Senate to find and assess with care the qualifications of the large number of people needed to fill all appointed positions."

Citing a confusing and sometimes difficult financial disclosure and confirmation process, many individuals are reluctant to take on public service, thereby depriving the nation of some competent and talented workers.

As a result, "recruiters for recent presidents have reported that they often go to their second or third choice before they can find someone willing to accept an appointment," the study said.

Citing a work environment that is "short on essential administrative supports and long on petty aggravations," the study found that the median length of service for appointees is "just a shade over two years." A third stayed in their positions for eighteen months or less, and only 32 percent have stayed as long as three years.

"Dissatisfied, financially impaired, and sometimes burned out by their experiences in government, presidential appointees too often depart before their own or the president's objectives are accomplished," the study said.

The study recommended that:

— The Senate's practice of permitting individual seantors to place a hold on a nomination should be restricted so that no senator may delay a nomination for more than five working days.

— Knowledge and administrative experience, not political qualifications, should be the primary criteria in the selection of presidential appointees.

— The president's chief personnel assistant should be an influential member of the White House staff with regular and direct access to the president.

— Financial disclosure forms should be simplified to require listing holdings below and above a value of $10,000 rather than listing holdings over a half dozen or more categories of value.

— Congress should ban discussion of future employment in the private sector by presidential appointees during the time of their appointment.

— The number of positions filled by political appointment has grown too large and must be reduced.

Members of the panel that conducted the study included Frank Carlucci, a former deputy secretary of defense in the Reagan administration and a former undersecretary of health, education and welfare; Philip Klutznick, a secretary of Commerce in the Carter administraion and John Macy, a chairman of the Civil Service Commission under presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

GOP governors urged to lead school reform

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Republican governors, looking for ways to reap greater political benefits from President Reagan's popularity, were urged by Education Secretary William J. Bennett today to take the lead in reforming the nation's schools.

In a speech prepared for the annual meeting of the Republican Governors Association, Bennett said, "Real reform in our schools will not come from inside the Department of Education in Washington or from more spending at the federal level."

The secretary added that "real reform will come from where it has already begun — at the state level, from inside our schools and communities."

Bennett was delivering the opening address at the two-day meeting at which politics dominated the agenda.

Political consultants and pollsters were on hand to talk to the governors about "the State of the Nation and the Future of the Republican Party."

The governors also issued a thick book designed to describe the Republican chief executives as in the forefront of developing innovative approaches to problems ranging from the environment, to welfare and job creation.

Entitled "The New American Revolution," the document described the GOP governors as at the "cutting edge" of a shift of responsibility from the federal to the state level.

Despite President Reagan's popularity and his two landslide election victories, the ranks of Republican governors have declined since his dominance of the political scene began with the 1980 election.

There now are 34 Democratic governors and 16 Republicans. Entering the 1980 elections, 19 of the governors were Republicans.

Their inability to attract more support in state elections prompted a group of GOP governors to meet last summer at Blackberry Farms in the Great Smoky Mountains of Tennessee to talk about what could be done.

The group included Gov. Richard Thornburgh of Pennsylvania, chairman of the GOP Governors Association, Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, former chairman of the group, and Govs. John Sununu of New Hampshire and Jim Martin of North Carolina.

Joining them at the private session were Reps. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, Connie Mack of Florida and Carroll Campbell of South Carolina.

What troubled the governors was that some of the issues that seemed to work well for Reagan didn't play well for candidates in state elections.

Alexander said whenever the Republicans had a strategy meeting, "we get a wagonload of Washington, D.C., operatives talking about the gold standard and Afghanistan and a lot of other things that can't possibly get a Republican elected mayor of Johnson City."

Doing better in state elections is a crucial element in the GOP strategy to win control of the House of

Snow muffles northwest

(AP) — Snowdrifts two feet high jutted from an interstate highway and some areas got more than a yard of snow from a storm that pushed through northern Utah and southern Idaho, contributing to two deaths.

New snow was falling northern Utah's valleys and meteorologists predicted a foot or more for the northern mountains. Snowbird ski resort had 37 inches of new snow, and more than two feet fell at nearby Alta.

The National Weather Service said the storm moved into the Salt Lake City area late Saturday after leaving a mixture of rain and snow in northern Nevada and snow in southwestern Idaho.

The storm dumped heavy, wet snow and was blamed for downed power lines in northern Utah.

Yugoslav boy gets wish

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Egor Sastarko met Mickey Mouse in the highlight of a dream trip that brought the 9-year-old cancer victim from Eastern Europe to the Magic Kingdom.

Egor, who is from a small village outside Zagreb, Yugoslavia, spent Sunday at Disneyland courtesy of an American group that makes wishes come true for dying children.

Mickey Mouse, the boy's favorite Disney character, met Egor and two relatives in front of the amusement park's City Hall, said Disney publicist Joe Aguirre.

Egor "hugged a little bit and just enjoyed standing there looking at him," Aguirre said. "He didn't let go of his hand the whole time he was standing there."

The trip was arranged by the Make-A-Wish Foundation of America, and was the first for an Eastern bloc child. The group found out about Egor, who suffers from a fatal bone cancer called Ewing's sarcoma, from a Wisconsin man who knows the boy's aunt and physician, Maria Sastarko.

Marriage AIDS test eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — AIDS is becoming so hazardous to the nation's health that tests for exposure to the deadly virus should be required of everyone planning to marry, says a resolution being considered by the American Medical Association.

The resolution, distributed to the 271,000-member association's policy-making House of Delegates on Sunday, will be among among more than 100 proposals it will face in voting on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The AIDS-marriage resolution says that "acquired immune deficiency syndrome has in the last few years become a hazard to our American society; the American public has become very aware of this hazardous physical illness and the disease of AIDS is rapidly becoming a threat to the health of all of the American people."

There is no indication what, if any, action state authorities should take if the required tests did indicate exposure to the virus — or even any suggestion that authorities would be given that information.

In fact, a separate resolution calls for the association to "oppose discrimination against AIDS patients or individuals with (AIDS)-positive serum."

Treatment kills patient

WASHINGTON (AP) — An experimental cancer treatment that uses a hormone to turn the body's ordinary white blood cells into roving cancer killers has killed one patient who received it, a doctor at the National Cancer Institute said.

The experimental treatment, which researchers say can destroy or dramatically shrink tumors even after they have spread, was announced last week.

Dr. Steven Rosenberg, director of surgery at the National Cancer Institute, said in an interview Sunday that one death had been associated with the treatment, and strongly reiterated a warning that the therapy carries potentially dangerous side effects.

Christmas travel through books ideal

By PHIL THOMAS
AP Books Editor

NEW YORK — Since there's no place like home for the holidays, Christmas celebrants with a desire to travel can do so while sitting in their armchairs.

The publishing industry has, as usual, turned out a variety of books to suit all tastes and temperaments and this outpouring includes travel books.

Railroad buffs can give themselves or a friend a treat by picking up a copy of Paul Theroux's "The Imperial Way" (Houghton Mifflin). It's subtitled "By Rail From Peshawar to Chittagong" and tells of Theroux's train trip from Pakistan through India. There are many photographs by Steve McCurry.

Another exotic trip is told about by William Golding, the Nobel Prize-winning author, in "An Egyptian Journal" (Faber & Faber). It's a day-to-day account of the journey Golding and his wife made through Egypt shortly after he won the prize in 1983.

Readers who prefer fiction have plenty of novels and short story collections to choose from.

There's the best-selling "Lake Wobegon Days" (Viking) in which humorist Garrison Keillor tells the past and present history of the Minnesota town that was "omitted from the map due to the incompetence of surveyors."

Other novels from the best-seller list: "Lucky" (Simon & Schuster) by Jackie Collins, "Skeleton Crew" (Putnam) by Stephen King, "The Cider House Rules" (Morrow) by John Irving, and "After the Reunion" (Delacorte) by Rona Jaffe.

Mystery fans might get a kick out of two titles written by the children of former presidents. One is "Murder at the FBI" (Arbor House) by Margaret Truman. The other is "The Hyde Park Murder" (St. Martin's) by Elliott Roosevelt.

Those who prefer to read about real people have plenty of biographies, autobiographies and memoirs to browse among. There's "Yeager" (Bantam) by Gen. Chuck Yeager and Leo Janos; "Iacocca" (Bantam) by Lee Iacocca with William Novak; "The Mick" (Doubleday) by Mickey Mantle with Herb Gluck; "The House of Mitford: Portrait of a Family" (Viking) by Jonathan Guinness, and "Strindberg" (Random House) by Michael Mayer.

Art books and books of photographs always are high on the shopping list at the gift-giving time of year.

Among the art books are: "Giacometti" (Farrar, Straus & Giroux) by James Lord; "Maya: Treasures of an Ancient Civilization" (Abrams) by Flora S. Clancy et al; "Gongora" (Braziller) by Pablo Picasso, and "F. Leger" (Crown) by Gaston Diehl.

Among the photo book offerings: "Carl Mydans, Photojournalist" (Abrams); "Robert Capa Photographs" (Knopf) edited by Cornell Capa and Richard Whelan, and "Out of the Forties" (Fireside-Simon & Schuster) by Nicholas Lemann.

For those who like to cook, there's "A Taste of Tuscany: Classic Recipes From the Heart of Italy" (Little, Brown) collected and illustrated by Leslie Forbes; "Cooking With the Young Chefs of France" (Evans) by Elisabeth L. Ortiz, and "Foods of Long Island" (Abrams) by Peggy Katalinich. To go along with the food, cooks might like a copy of "Alexis Lichine's New Encyclopedia of Wines and Spirits" (Knopf).

In addition to Mickey Mantle's book, sports buffs might like to take a look at "Bob Hope's Confessions of a Hooker: My Lifelong Love Affair With Golf" (Doubleday), and "Distant Replay" (Putnam) by Jerry Kramer and Dick Schaap.

Computerized game brings space wars down to earth

New York Times News Service

KENILWORTH, N.J. — Space warriors clad in high-tech costumes dash in and out of alcoves firing laser guns as red and green strobe lights flash warning signals in the sky. At the same time high-pitched synthesized music roars from all sides and a white mist engulfs the area, hiding some warriors from their opponents.

This is not a scene from the movie "Star Wars," or any other science fiction film for that matter. Rather, it is a galactic battle fought by human warriors in a new and increasingly popular computerized adventure game called Planet Photon. Since opening here in September, it has been drawing 3,000 players a week, according to game managers. Photon has been doing so well, they say, that there are plans to establish game facilities in New York City; Hartford and West Haven, Conn., and Boston and Braintree, Mass.

Photon is a fascinating mix of electronic technology and age-old cops and robbers. The game takes place in a dimly lighted playing area of 10,000 square feet that represents a galactic battlefield complete with laser lights, mazes, ramps, balconies, tunnels, fog electronic music. For an initial fee of $7.50 and a charge of $3.50 per game, a player is transformed into a Photon Warrior. Each player receives 20 pounds of equipment, including a light-gun or "phaser," a helmet, a power-pack belt and a breast plate, which contains a control module. Players are then grouped into two 10-member teams.

The object is simple: score as many points as possible by shooting members of the opposing team and capturing their base. The shooting is done with electronic pulses aimed at the lights on an opponent's helmet or chest. A hit registers on the computer and earns the team 10 points. An additional 200 points can be earned by shooting the enemy base three times without being shot in turn.

Although the majority of players are men 20 to 25 years old, it is not uncommon to see large numbers of women and children waiting to play.

Irene Ficchi said she has no objections to her sons' participating in Photon. "I don't mind them coming here as long as the child is having fun and is not out there angry or trying to hurt anyone, which it doesn't appear that these kids are doing," she said.

Lorrain Lindkey, 30, of Union City, N.J., who played Photon with her husband, Carl, said: "It's what I've been waiting for for a long time. It's a place where you can live out your fantasies and not get hurt."

"I felt like the Terminator," said Kevin O'Connell, 34, a film lighting designer from Manhattan. "I came out from behind a pillar and there was this guy waiting to kill me so I jumped back, ran around the other side and killed the guy, and it was great fun."

The reason for Photon's success, says Gary Adornato, chairman of Multimedia Amusements Inc., which owns the rights to the New England franchises, is that "there is a need for interactive amusement and physical involvement."

Not everyone agrees that games such as Photon are trouble-free. Some parents dislike the violent nature of this kind of play. James Hillman, a psychologist who has studied fantasy, said: "To have the excitement of war without the fear, it appears that children playing this game are getting a dangerously distorted view of war."

Patricia Greenfield, a professor of psychology at UCLA and author of "Mind and Media: The Effects of Television, Video Games and Computers" (Harvard University Press, 1984), said she saw no harm in playing games that simulate reality.

"This is a natural progression from television violence to video game violence to this," Greenfield said. "American culture has always had a violent nature. I believe this game could be used for more worthwhile purposes, such as teaching people how to deal with war in a nonviolent way."

Adornato disagreed. "It is clear to anyone playing our game that this is fantasy," he said. The opportunity for violence is almost nonexistent, he said. "There are other targets besides the Photon Warriors and there is also the rule that prevents people from firing at each other within five feet," he said. "The guns simply won't work at that range."

In addition, there are the game commanders, referees who patrol the playing field ready to remove players who break the rules. "There is no physical contact at any time," Adornato said.

Broken doll inspiration for dollmaking career

New York Times News Service

AUSTIN — As a tiny girl in wartime France, Catherine Refabert received a special Christmas gift: her first doll, an exquisite creation with a porcelain head.

After 10 minutes, I broke the head," Refabert remembered. "I screamed for two days. I was so disappointed."

But Refabert has more than made up for that heartrending experience. Each year, in her factory in Langeais, France, she and a staff of 225 make 500,000 dolls that are everything Refabert's first doll was not.

"I do only playable dolls," Refabert said.

"A doll is the first child of a little girl," she said. "They should be this size" — she gestured from her hand to the crook of her elbow — "so they will fit the hands of the children, so they can hug and cuddle them. A doll is not just for display."

Twenty-five years of experience in doll design — first with her in-laws' doll firm, then with her own Corolle company — have brought home two truths to Refabert. "The first thing a child likes to do with a doll is dress and undress it. The second thing is to comb the doll's hair."

THE IDEA FOR the original Corolle doll — Bebe Cheri — came seven years ago, Refabert said.

"A little girl came to me and said her mother wouldn't let her play with her baby brother, but she wanted a 'real baby.'"

In accordance with that edict, Refabert designs her dolls to be as much like real children as possible — and factory workers may use as many as 100 hand operations per doll to accomplish that. Corolle baby dolls, in particular, are a tribute to Refabert's attention to detail — and her hours of staring at photos of babies.

"It's all there — the dimpled knees, the pigeon toes, the chubby arms, the curled little fists — even the slight indentations on either side of the head and the 'soft spot' at the back of the head."

The dolls come in a variety of sizes and ages, but all are lightweight so a child can comfortably carry them about.

"If a child weighs 40 pounds and has a 3-pound doll, he can't play with it," Refabert said.

Refabert took true-to-life duplication one step further in 1964, when she designed one of the first anatomically correct dolls. Credit for that idea goes to her son.

"He came to fetch me in the factory and said, 'Mama, is this doll a boy or girl?' I said, 'Look at the hair.' He still couldn't tell the difference. That's how it started."

Refabert chuckled.

"Even at this moment, there are some department stores where people say, 'If you don't take out these horrible things from the window, we're never going any more to your shop.'"

REALISTIC AS she wants her dolls to be, she does draw the line on one item. She never uses human hair atop her dolls' heads.

"I think that is a little" — she shudders slightly — "morbid."

Instead, she uses a synthetic fiber that can withstand repeated washings and combings and the tugging of over-enthusiastic little fingers.

Another characteristic of a Corolle doll is its feel. No unyielding plastic here: just cloth bodies and heads, arms and legs made of a soft vinyl — squeezably soft, to borrow a line from a toilet tissue commercial.

But the sensory appeal of the vinyl doesn't stop with its feel.

"The natural smell of the vinyl is awful, so we scent it with vanilla. At first, we tried chocolate and fruit flavors, but that was too strong," Refabert confided with a grin. "And the children said they wanted vanilla."

SHE IS METICULOUS about designing dolls to match children's specifications — but equally careful to shield them from the process that makes their dreams a reality.

"The factory, it is really not for children," she said. "To see spare parts of dolls, arms and legs and heads and eyes — that's terrible. It upsets them."

Her dolls — which cost from $20 to more than $150 — have caught the fancy of doll collectors, a development that pleases Refabert. But she is even more delighted when a child asks for her autograph.

She's also pleased that a growing number of little boys are acquiring dolls, despite their fascination with Gobots and Transformers.

Health spas 'in' place for singles

Copley News Service

Looking for Mr. Goodbar? No? How about Mr. Goodbody? Or Ms. Goodbody? Whether you want to pump iron, pump a tennis ball or watch the pump in a Jacuzzi, you, too, might be able to find true grit, sweat and love at your favorite health club.

Health clubs, spas and gyms seem to be replacing fern-shrouded bars as the place for singles to meet and to get to know each other.

Dixie Madsen, a nurse, had her first date with Kendall Webb at a 6 a.m. workout session at the popular Holiday Spa Health Club in San Diego.

That was two years ago. The couple is engaged to be married this month.

"Lots of people end up going to bars to meet people. That just didn't work for me," said Madsen, who at 48 also is a marathon runner. "People in bars just don't understand that you want to get up in the morning to work out. It makes more sense to meet someone in a gym who understands what you do."

BEFORE MEETING Madsen, Webb, 52, worked out at another health club where he had met a few women in the coed classes the club offered, although he said, "When I went to work out, my mind wasn't on whom I could meet today. I think the younger age-group is more in tune to the possibility of meeting people."

Dan Peterson 31, is a former Mr. San Diego and an amateur bodybuilder. He met his wife, Brandy, at a health club in Albuquerque, N.M., five years ago.

"Actually, at first Brandy was interested in my training partner and not me," he said, laughing. "He was tall, dark and handsome, and I'm short and squatty."

For Peterson, the health club was a natural place to meet women who shared his interest in seeking that perfect physique.

"I like women who are in shape and that's where to find them," he said. "Anybody who puts in an hour a day working out three to four times a week, there's a lot of commitment there. It's not like a night at the movies or a baseball game, a one-shot deal."

CNS Graphic

The downside, however, for couples who meet and match on the basis of good looks is that "obviously, if there's one nice-looking girl in the gym, there are others," Peterson said. And the same holds true for the men. That can create more muscle tension than using the abdominal "crunch" machine.

BUT EVEN BETWEEN the grunts and groans, couples manage to find each other, said Doughdee Marie, the day manager at a gym, and a bodybuilder herself.

"The more serious a bodybuilder you are, the more you have to go with another bodybuilder," she said. "You have to have someone who understands the special kind of diet you have to follow and attitude you have to have to be a bodybuilder."

Tom Cheek, a 34-year-old chiropractor, works out at Holiday Health Spa seven days a week at 6 a.m. He says the club is excellent but "in the evening, it's a meat factory," he said. "Everyone is out strutting their stuff."

Cheek says he does not prefer health clubs over bars as a place to meet women.

"I'm not certain either one has any advantage," he said.

He added, "I'm not so sure some of the women (at the club) are any healthier than those you would meet in a bar. I've seen a lot of women leaving the gym, walking out to their cars and lighting up a cigarette."

T.J. Key, a long-distance runner, also makes it a point to get to the gym early in the morning, a time when he feels the more serious athletes go to work out.

"If I was going there to meet women, I'd go to a Family Fitness Center, because men and women work out together there, in the same area," he said.

THE FAMILY FITNESS Center name is almost a misnomer. While families do belong to the clubs, they could easily be called "Single Fitness Centers."

Family Fitness Centers offer babysitting services for members. But they also offer coed workout areas and aerobic classes.

"It used to be women were only interested in doing aerobics and slimnastics, and men wanted to work with free weights and Nautilus, but now that has completely changed," said David Silvas, manager of a Family Fitness Center in San Diego. "Men are doing aerobics, and women are getting into bodybuilding very seriously."

Financial freedom to be speech topic

Helen Hudson, an investment executive with Paine-Webber Incorporated, will speak on "Building Financial Independence" at the meeting of Uptown Business and Professional Women. The luncheon will be at noon Wednesday at the Hilton Hotel.

Ms. Hudson, a native Midlander, has a bachelor's degree from the University of Tennessee. She has several years of experience in the financial industry. Prior to joining Paine-Webber, she managed the Women's Services Department of a local bank. She still helps women define and meet their financial needs.

Toxic shock syndrome still reported

ATLANTA (AP) — Concerned that as many as 90 percent of toxic shock syndrome cases are not reported, researchers will conduct a study next year to try to determine how widespread the sometimes-fatal disease is.

Statistics compiled by the national Centers for Disease Control show the reported number of toxic shock cases has dropped by more than 70 percent since it was first identified publicly in 1980. But officials estimate that only 10 percent of the cases are reported to CDC, said Dr. Seth Berkley, a CDC epidemiologist.

Toxic shock has not disappeared although Rely tampons were removed from the market several years ago after they were linked to several cases, said Dr. Nancy W. Reame, a University of Michigan associate professor and leading consumer activist for tampon safety.

"People are surprised. They say, 'I thought that was taken care of a long time ago,'" she said. "I get too many calls from people around the country who say, 'My daughter died,' or 'My granddaughter died. What's going on? Why are they still making these things?'"

Rely tampons were linked to 71 percent of the 50 toxic shock cases reported to the CDC during the two months prior to September 1980, when Procter & Gamble Co. took Rely tampons off the market at a loss of about $75 million.

Toxic shock is believed to be caused by Staphylcoccus aureus, a common infectious bacterium that can produce a deadly toxin.

It is estimated that more than 95 percent of the population has been exposed to and shows antibodies for the Staph toxin by age 20. The remaining 5 percent is at toxic shock risk.

Females and males have acquired the disease through surgical incisions, abrasions and insect bites. Toxic shock also has been linked to the use of contraceptive sponges and has been diagnosed in women shortly after childbirth.

DEAR ABBY

Homebody son needs counsel, not kick

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Desperate Widow," who can't get her 28-year-old son to look for work and get out of her house. I am a 28-year-old male, still living at home and without a full-time job to support myself.

A few years ago my parents started pressuring me to get a job. They even threatened to throw me out. I don't think I could have made it on my own, as I lacked the self-confidence to look for a job. What I needed was professional help. I got it and have improved tremendously over the past year. I am emotionally more mature and get along much better with my parents. While I don't have a full-time job yet, I am definitely closer to be ng on my own.

Thus, my advice for parents in this situation is not to simply "throw the bum out." Give him a choice. Make him seek professional help, or get out! Professional help does not have to be expensive. Most community mental health centers charge according to one's ability to pay. In any case, it would be cheaper than supporting your son for the rest of his life. — GETTING HELP

DEAR GETTING: You're right, of course. Although it's not easy to "make" an unmotivated person seek professional help, he should be given a choice, "Either get help, or get out!"

Now let's hear how another mother handled that problem:

DEAR ABBY: I just finished reading the letter from "Desperate Widow," whose able-bodied 28-year-old son had been sitting around the house for 10 years eating and watching TV. She asks how to get him out of the house. You said, "Throw the bum out!" Good advice. But it's not always easy. I know; I had exactly the same problem with my own son when he was 23.

I loved him, but I also knew that he would never be self-sufficient as long as he had me to support him. I would tell "Desperate Widow," "Your son will not starve. He may live on the streets or in his car for a while, but he will not starve — he'll get a job if he gets hungry enough."

I ordered my son to leave my house, but he kept stalling, so I changed the locks and put dead bolts on the doors. He would call me up and beg me to let him come home, and I said no. And when he got angry and mean, I'd hang up on him!

Once I let him come home to get his things, and when he refused to leave, I called the police. They came to the house with a crisis team and talked to both of us, then they saw to it that he left. My heart was breaking, but I said to myself, "I am giving this son of mine a chance for his own life. If I let him stay, he will be lost forever."

He joined the Navy, and it was the best thing that ever happened to him.

What I did was not easy, but I knew it was his only chance to be an independent person. My heart goes out to "Desperate Widow." I hope this will help her realize that if she really loves her son, she must be strong enough to lock him out — for his sake and her own. — MRS. B., HUNTINGTON BEACH, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter was married a month ago, and a couple we know well attended both the wedding and reception. However, no gift was ever received from them. They live in our town, so I'm sure it wasn't mailed.

Should I mention it to them? Either they haven't bought a gift yet, or if they gave money, it could have gotten lost at the reception.

Our daughter received either a gift or money from everyone else. How much longer should we wait before we mention it to them? — MOTHER OF THE BRIDE

DEAR MOTHER: Forever. It would be in very poor taste to mention it.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Aspirin may help victims of unstable angina

BOSTON (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of Americans who have a dangerous heart condition known as unstable angina might live longer if they took daily doses of aspirin, a new study suggests.

The research found "a striking and consistent benefit of aspirin." It appears to confirm an earlier study showing that aspirin dramatically reduces the incidence of heart attacks and fatal cardiac arrest in people with unstable angina.

"We conclude that patients of either sex who are hospitalized with unstable angina are likely to benefit from the addition of aspirin to conventional therapy for at least two years," they wrote in New England Journal of Medicine.

Unstable angina is described as as heart pain that suddenly worsens, lasts more than 15 minutes at a time or occurs when people are resting.

The new study estimates that 500,000 people in the United States and 50,000 in Canada are admitted to coronary care units each year with unstable angina, so "there is a sizable population of patients for whom aspirin therapy would offer considerable benefit."

The study, conducted on 555 victims of unstable angina, was directed by Dr. John A. Cairns of McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario. After two years, patients who took four aspirin tablets daily suffered only half as many heart attacks or fatal cardiac arrest as those who did not.

Aspirin is thought to work by inhibiting blood platelets, the cells that make blood form clots.

King Features Syndicate

It happens every day. The family stops to eat at a local fast-food restaurant, but the parents and kids cannot agree on what beverage to order. Mom says milk. But the kids whine and beg and plead and carry on because they want soda. After five minutes of complaining, Mom begins to wonder if she is being unreasonable. She starts to feel guilty.

Disciplining children is hard for parents. It is especially difficult when the parents begin to doubt themselves and feel guilty about their decisions. When parents know what their standards are and how to uphold them, they can guide their children with confidence.

"Parents are afraid to discipline their children because they are afraid of losing their children's love," says Lynn Benjamin, president and workshop facilitator at Parents Network, a Pennsylvania-based education and support group for parents. "When you say no to children, you run the risk of making them angry. Parents want their children to approve of them."

Kids are good at making their parents feel guilty. "When your decisions are constantly contested, you begin to doubt your rules, your philosophy and yourself," said Ms. Benjamin.

"You wonder if you are a good parent. Children will pick up on that right away and try to manipulate you by making you feel guilty. Once kids find out they can get you to give in, they will keep trying to make you change your mind."

PARENTS HAVE TO set standards and stick to them. "Figure out what's acceptable to you and what isn't," said Ms. Benjamin. "Hang on to that. Be firm."

How do you decide where to draw the line? "Trust your gut feelings," said Irwin Hyman, director of the Center for the Study of Corporal Punishment and Alternatives in Schools at Temple University in Philadelphia. "Talk to other parents. Look at your standards and make some concessions to reality. If all the kids wear jeans to school, then it's reasonable to let your kid wear jeans, too."

Look at what you expect from your child and yourself. Is it really possible for a 3-year-old to behave the way you want your child to act? Do you think you should be the perfect parent? Be realistic. Do not feel guilty if you cannot afford to buy your child patent-leather shoes.

Once you set your standards, it takes stamina to maintain them. There are several techniques parents can use to discipline children, according to Ms. Benjamin. "Make a simple request, like 'Please hang up your coat.' It may not work, but it's a good way to start."

Enlist your child's help in solving the problem. If your 5-year-old constantly throws his coat on the floor, try saying, "It looks like we have a problem. Your coat is always on the floor." See if your child will volunteer to pick up the coat.

NEGOTIATE WITH YOUR child to reach an acceptable compromise. If your daughter does not want to dress up when her grandparents visit, compromise. Let her pick her own outfit — as long as it is clean. "Be flexible. A parent can't be rigid," said Ms. Benjamin. "Kids cooperate with parents they think are reasonable."

Teach your child good behavior. When a child misbehaves, use the opportunity to teach an alternative way to act. If your son keeps grabbing a truck away from a friend, teach him to ask for it. Instead of scolding, show children what to do.

When there is a problem, monitor the child's behavior. "If homework is an issue," said Ms. Benjamin, "tell the child to do it and then check up on her every five minutes to make sure she really is writing her book report."

"Try the ecological approach," said Hyman. "Maneuver the environment. If your kid is pressuring you by telling you what Joe is allowed to do, call Joe's dad and find out if it's true. Don't take the child's word for it.

When you find out Joe's dad agrees with you, you've ended that argument. If your toddler keeps trying to climb on the table, do not scold. Change the situation. Move the chairs away from the table and direct him to something he can climb on, like a beanbag chair."

Sometimes parents have to get tough. "Kids need guidelines and controls," said Hyman. "But only make threats you are willing to carry out. Don't put yourself in the position of enforcing a threat that will make you feel badly.

SUPPOSE YOU TELL your son that he can't go to the party unless he cleans his room. What do you do when it's time for the party — and you know it's the first one he's been invited to in three years — and his room is still a mess? Choose punishments you will carry out, and don't give in."

"Try not to discipline in anger," said Hyman. "Make a punishment threat when you feel calm. If you can, defer the discipline decision until after the crisis. If you start to lose your temper, say, 'I'm getting angry. Let's stop this right now and handle it later.' Walk away."

Do not forget to reward your children when they are good. Reinforce their positive behavior. Give them a treat — take them to the movies or let them use the car. Praise them. Tell your daughter what a great job she did waxing the car. If your son mows the lawn, give him a hug.

Tell your children you are happy with them. Let your children know you mean what you say. Ms. Benjamin offered several suggestions for communicating with a child. Make a firm statement that the child can easily understand. Look directly into his or her eyes while you are talking. Speak in a strong voice. Be confident, and children will respond.

IT IS HARD to be firm and calm when a child says, "I hate you." But remember, it is not you the child hates, it is the discipline decision.

"Try to listen to what the child is really saying," said Ms. Benjamin, "and respond to the child's anger. You might say, 'It sounds like you're really mad because I wouldn't let you sleep over at Amy's house.' Explore why the child feels angry. Use the opportunity to teach the child how to express anger. You might gently say, 'Instead of yelling at me, you could just tell me what you're angry about.'"

"It's important for a parent to help a child develop the control necessary to live in society," said Hyman. "As a child grows older, the parent has to slowly give up controls while helping the child develop self-discipline."

"Children want to have limits," said Ms. Benjamin. "They don't have the experience and judgment their parents have. When children have limits, they feel protected, secure and loved."

Experts debate 'hothousing' babies

New York Times News Service

PHILADELPHIA — As the debate over the "superbaby" phenomenon intensifies, researchers have coined a verb form to describe it: "hothousing." The word was the focus of a conference here on the trend toward the early educational stimulation of infants and toddlers.

"If you get hothoused," said Brian Sutton-Smith of the University of Pennsylvania, "you end up being a rotten tomato — or at least a pallid tomato."

His metaphor drew a laugh from the audience of 160 child-development researchers, historians, educators, psychologists and child-care professionals. But despite moments of scholarly levity, an array of experts gave serious attention to the issue of early learning, raising the longstanding debate to new sophistication at the symposium, "The Hothousing of Young Children: So Much, So Soon."

Researchers described the negative effects of inappropriate formal instruction on infants and their parents, underscored the value of unstructured play for growing children and placed hothousing in perspective as a middle-class phenomenon.

"Hothousing is a useful metaphor for what's currently going on," said Jeanette McCarthy Gallagher, a research psychologist at Temple University. "There is a natural pace to the development of children," she said. "When we hothouse children, we superimpose a learning environment in order to make them learn faster."

RESEARCH HAS suggested that enrichment programs have significantly benefited disadvantaged children, including those with physical or emotional handicaps. Pioneering studies led to the establishment in 1965 of Project Head Start for economically disadvantaged children aged 3 to 5.

"With Project Head Start," Gallagher said, "this was hothousing, and we posited that these children were behind and needed to make up certain deficits. But is the middle-class child behind?"

"We are told that the hothousing of these children makes sense because of their natural urge to learn," said Irving Sigel, the keynote speaker. "But where is it written that children have the natural urge to learn Japanese or Suzuki violin?" he asked, referring to some early-instruction programs. Sigel said that many skills hawked by the purveyors of such programs are taught by rote. "You can get a horse to do half those things," he said.

Children's development "is a sequential unfolding, not only of intellect, but also of social awareness, self-concepts and ways of interacting," said Sigel, whose title is distinguished research scientist at the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J. "Denying, or at least not recognizing, the child's active outreaching curiosity has negative consequences," he said.

A DEVASTATING EFFECT of hothousing is what a child "comes to believe about himself," Sigel said. "Children come to believe they are valued for what they memorize or produce or achieve." As a result, he said, "I would suspect that hothoused children are at risk for developing achievement anxiety."

He added that although "authoritarian teaching environments" for young children can have negative effects on their development, "this does not call for the antithesis — a libertarian, anti-authoritative posture." Or, as another researcher paraphrased him, "Hothousing ain't so hot, but you don't want to have an untended garden either."

Many researchers stressed the value of unstructured play. "Young children learn the most from play and interaction with their environment and from interactions with people," said Dr. Patricia Minuchin, a research professor of psychiatry at the New York University Medical Center. For many parents, she said, fostering such learning "comes naturally — and for those parents, I'd like to encourage them to relax."

Early play "has a lot to do with vitality and zest for life," said Sutton-Smith, a developmental psychologist who is an expert on children's play. He advised parents to "forget about teaching the children about numbers and colors and the like, and just play with them."

NO RELIABLE STATISTICS exist on how many American parents are using flashcards with babies, but some researchers termed such activity avant-garde or cult hothousing, describing it as a limited practice.

"Hothousing is a minority phenomenon of the urban middle class," said Tamara K. Harevan, director of the history of the family program at Clark University. "In the rest of the world people are still struggling with the problem of providing basic educational opportunities," she said.

Zoo program takes animals around state

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — For Muscles and Charmin, life on the road can be a grind — all that time spent in ice chests, sneaking into hotels, being manhandled by children.

But such is the life of the two boa constrictors, the alternating stars of the Rio Grande Zoo's traveling show.

Catherine Hubbard, the Zoo To You coordinator, says docents taking the animals from town to town have to give special treatment to the snakes because they are susceptible to temperature changes. The precautions include having the snakes travel in an insulated ice chest and sleep in air-conditioned motel rooms with the docents.

"Motels think we're just bringing in a picnic," said Mrs. Hubbard.

While reptiles get the most special treatment, other animals also are featured in Zoo To You, a program aimed at introducing New Mexicans to the exotica of the Animal Kingdom.

The denizens of desert, jungle and the skies travel in a specially equipped van driven by two Rio Grande Zoo docents. The program is on the road four days a week, every week.

While Mrs. Hubbard says the snakes hold the most fascination for audiences, all of the animals become instant celebrities when they appear at schools, senior citizens' centers and civic clubs.

Behind all the fun of the zoo coming to town, Zoo To You is an educational experience about fur, feather or scale. Most repeat performances are for elementary school children throughout the state.

"There's something magical about kids and animals," said Mrs. Hubbard, 33. "You can interject animals into just about any subject and, for kids, that topic will come alive."

This type of "sneaky learning" is what Zoo To You is all about, she said.

The animals in the program are zoo property, but cannot be displayed in the regular zoo enclosures for a variety of reasons.

One reason is if the animal is handicapped, as in the case of Brady the serval, a spotted African cat. Brady suffered brain damage and as a result is calm enough to be in the program. In the wild, Brady's instincts would make him too hard to control.

Other animals who often perform in the troupe are Yoda, a furry African bushbaby with big, round eyes and large ears; a mynah bird that says "Praise the Lord" when Mrs. Hubbard wants it to say, "Come to the zoo," and an opossum named Didelphis.

Expenses are covered by the Phelps Dodge Corp., which bought and equipped the van when it began sponsoring the program in April 1981. Last year, the program cost about $24,000.

Art enlivens Indian heritage

EL RENO, Okla. (AP) — Without saying a word, Jerome Bushyhead can tell wonderful stories.

By putting brush to canvas, the El Reno man paints vivid tales of the Plains Indians, bringing to life their customs, beliefs and history.

"I just do things as I feel. I paint the way I feel," says Bushyhead, who is three-fourths Cheyenne and one-fourth Sioux, Kiowa and German.

Bushyhead started painting professionally in 1970, though it has only been in the past three to four years that he has done it full time.

He says his wife went to work in 1982 so he could devote his time to his art.

"My wife was the backbone for me going back to my art. She said, 'If you'll go back to your art, I'll find a job.' She said, 'That's your first love, you stay with it.'"

Fifty-six now, Bushyhead says he started drawing as soon as he was old enough to hold a pencil. He took all the art classes he could at El Reno High School and, when he went to college on a basketball scholarship, majored in fine arts.

Bushyhead says one of his professors at Centenary College in Shreveport, La., said he would not teach the aspiring artist anything because it would detract from his talent.

"I didn't understand what he meant then, but now I can see he was trying to tell me to be your own self, be your own person. Do what you know and can do best and that's going to be you."

The company...imports a cheap Japanese model, in the belief that beginners who start out with another model will eventually buy a Martin guitar. "It's like Steinway and Rolls-Royce."

— C.F. Martin, Nazareth guitars

For this reason, he says he has not imitated other artists, preferring to develop his own style.

All of Bushyhead's paintings tell some story of Indian life. One of his most impressive pieces tells of the "ghosts of warriors who still dance on the land" despite changes the settlers have made.

At the top of the painting is a jet plane speeding across the sky and at the bottom are oil derricks and a city skyline. Suspended between the two in the burning reddish-orange sky are two warriors engaging in a traditional dance.

One of Bushyhead's most acclaimed pieces of art is called "The Tracker." This painting depicts an Indian examining a set of animal tracks in the snow. Behind the squatting Indian stands his spirited horse with nostrils flared and mane blowing in the icy wind.

"The Tracker" was the centerpiece of a one-man show Bushyhead had at a gallery in Carmel, Calif., in 1984, and became his first print.

Bushyhead, whose Indian name is Coyote Walks By, says he gets many of his painting ideas from stories his parents and grandparents told him.

He doesn't do research for his artworks because he says he'd rather imagine how things would have been himself. "You try to throw yourself back into the time."

Painting is not the only medium Bushyhead uses to promote Indian heritage and culture. He has been host of several radio and television shows focusing on Indians, and he organizes dance shows.

For 10 years, Bushyhead has been director and emcee of the Indian program at the State Fair of Oklahoma. In addition, he organized the Guthrie U.S.A. Native American Celebration — an event showcasing Indians in theater performances, powwows, and arts and crafts — which made its debut in June.

Bushyhead calls himself a "starving artist" and hasn't obtained financial security as an artist.

He says he sometimes trades a painting for things he needs — a side of beef, a television. "If your paintings can't move, you've got to do something to get through."

Hand-crafted guitar maker puts his mark on 'Rock Walk'

NAZARETH, Pa. (AP) — The hand prints and signature of Nazareth guitar maker Christian Frederick "C.F." Martin will soon be embedded in a Hollywood sidewalk.

Martin, chairman of the board of C.F. Martin and Co., has been honored for his role in the music business by being included in the "Rock Walk" planned by a California music store chain.

The Rock Walk is patterned after the "Walk of Stars" prints at the nearby Grauman's Chinese Theater and will include the handprints of some of the "originators and forerunners of the music industry," according to Don Kelsey, manager of a Guitar Center music store in San Jose, Calif.

The Guitar Center recently purchased two buildings on Sunset Boulevard for a new store which Kelsey described as a "palace." About a dozen people have been asked to make handprints in the sidewalk out front.

When asked to come to California however, Martin replied that at 91, he was "past my traveling days."

So if Martin couldn't go to Hollywood, Hollywood came to Nazareth. Or a piece of Hollywood, anyway.

Kelsey flew across the country recently and brought with him the cement in which Martin made his mark. The cement was poured at the Nazareth plant and taken back to Hollywood where it will be placed in the sidewalk at Sunset and Hollywood. "It's going to be there for ever," Kelsey said.

"Our guitars are handmade, you know," Martin joked when he noted that handprints, not footprints, were being taken.

Music depends on the musical instrument, he said, explaining that the "high quality" product his company puts out is his contribution to the music industry.

Martin, who comes into the office every day for five or six hours, began working in the company founded by his great-grandfather when he graduated from high school in 1913. After a year he left to attend college and came back to work in 1916. He started as an apprentice in the shop.

Although he learned to play the instrument as a boy and played in his college days what he said he had never played professionally. "To me the guitar is for fun," Martin said. And besides, "it has short fingers," he explained, holding up his hand. "That's a five-hand-a-half." A musician has long fingers.

Though Martin's fame has not come from playing the guitars his company makes, he points out, "Our guitars are used by prominent players." Those players include Jimmy Buffet, Johnny Cash, Willie Nelson and Arlo Guthrie. Martin knows which models some of them play and even some of their habits.

People like Eddie Arnold have a guitar they grew up with. So he leaves that at home and takes another Martin model with him on the road, Martin said. "People who travel a lot are apt to leave their favorite guitar at home."

Martin said 75 percent of all guitars sold in the United States are imports, which are cheaper than Martin models. The company encourages this, he said, and even imports a cheap Japanese model, in the belief that beginners who start out with another model will eventually buy a Martin guitar. "It's like Steinway and Rolls-Royce," he said.

He attributed the quality of his guitars to the "high quality of the labor supply" in and around Nazareth. Martin employees enjoy working with wood, and are able to craft the tremendous amount of detail required, he said.

Though the company makes electric guitars, it primarily manufactures acoustic guitars.

Martin said he is pleased with the recognition from Guitar Center, as it comes from "within the industry."

Woman safe after 24-day ordeal

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A 75-year-old woman was rescued over the weekend after being trapped in her house for 24 days when the town of Armero was covered by mud triggered by the eruption of the Nevada del Ruiz volcano, the town's mayor said today.

Army Maj. Rafael Horacio Ruiz, who was appointed mayor after the Nov. 13 eruption melted snow that dumped tons of mud on the city of 28,000, said Maria Rosa Echeverri was rescued by Red Cross workers on Saturday.

He said the woman survived because she had food stored in the house, but the supply ran out the day she was found. He said rescuers found her because of a plume of smoke from her cooking fire.

The mayor said the woman was examined by physicians who determined she was in "good physical condition."

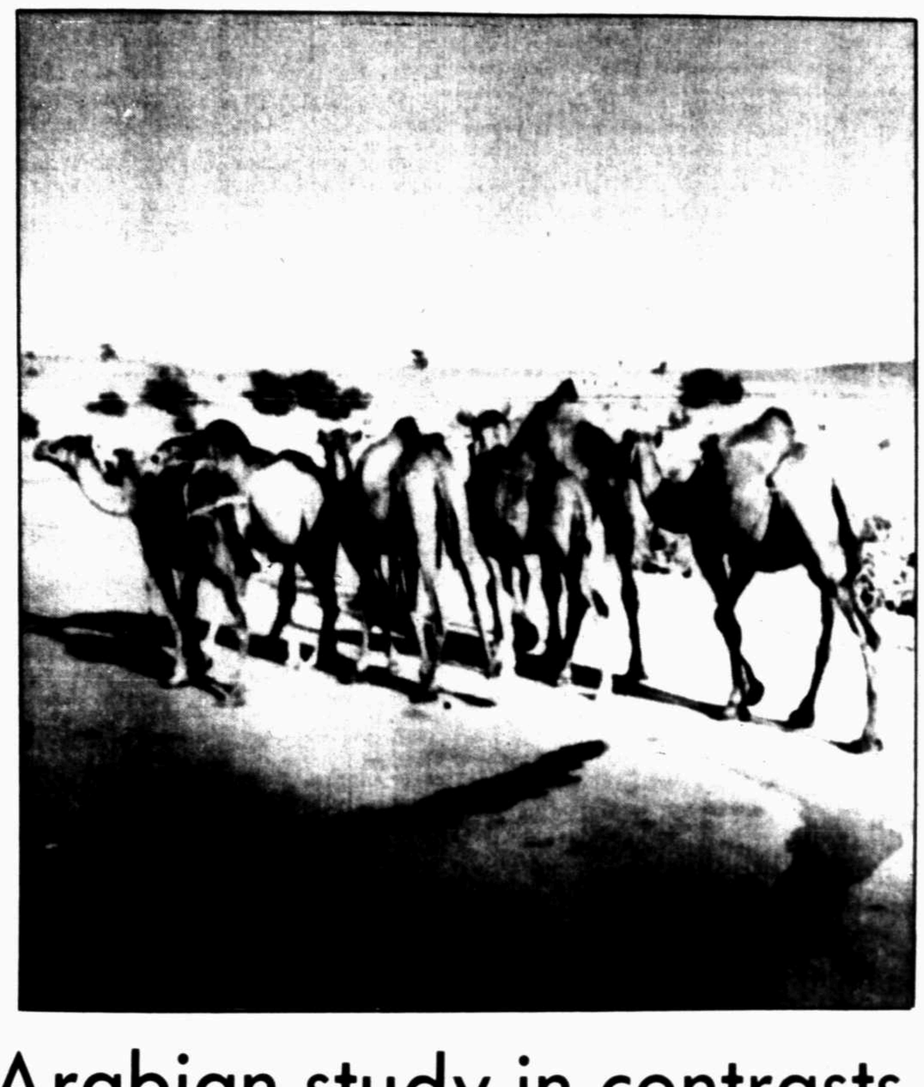

"Her main concern was that the rescuers recover a chest in which she had her documents, photographs and old clothes," the mayor said.

The rescuers told local newspapers that it was "a miracle" they were able to find her after officials had all but given up on finding anyone alive.

The mayor also said that on Sunday authorities recovered a bank safe which contained nearly $50,000 and valuable documents.

About 23,000 people died, including Armero's previous mayor, in the town and nearby communities when a wall of mud coursed down the mountainside and into the valley, covering Armero in a 15-foot-deep sea of mud.

The government said 80 percent of Armero's inhabitants were killed in the mudslide.

Oman: Arabian study in contrasts

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of a series of occasional dispatches by Associated Press correspondents on life and customs in the byways of the world.

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

QUAIRON HARITTI, Oman — The Jeballi tribesmen living in these hard-scrabble hills don't trade frankincense for fish any more, but they still dress in wraparound skirts and carry daggers at the waist.

They still raise cattle and camels and drift with their herds in search of vegetation as their ancestors did.

But some of the outside world has come to the mountain tribes of Oman's Dhofar region, 650 miles southwest of Muscat, capital of this nation at the tip of the Arabian Peninsula overlooking the Arabian Sea.

On a hilltop here in the Jebel al-Qamar Mountains is the "merkez," a complex of food shops, a health clinic, primary school and mosque built three years ago by the government for the Jeballi.

The spanking clean merkez contrasts sharply with the primitive, centuries old lifestyle the Jeballi still follow here in one of the most exotic, inaccessible corners of the Arabian Peninsula.

This merkez and 24 others like it in the Jebel al-Qamar and Jebel Samham mountains were built by the government of Sultan Qaboos Bin Said as part of a program to bring some modernization to Oman while oil money is still flowing in.

The Quairon Haritti merkez provides health, educational and other services for 4,000 to 5,000 mountaineers in the area.

Ghaneim Said al-Shanfari, an Information Ministry official in Muscat, said about 160 pupils are brought here by truck or bus to attend elementary school.

A paved highway runs through the area and frequently drivers of Japanese and European cars screech to a halt as a traditionally dressed, barefoot herdsman, rifle slung over his shoulder, drives his cattle and camels across the road.

Few outsiders venture into these mountains, which rise as high as 6,000 feet above the plain facing the Arabian Sea.

Along the ridges and in the still largely inaccessible valleys live peoples whose livelihood comes from their herds of cattle and camels that survive on vegetation watered by a three-month annual summer monsoon known as the "khareef."

The herdsmen live in simple houses of concrete walls and tin roofs or in the traditional circular stone dwellings called rajimahs. In summer, many families move out of their homes and move with their herds in search of vegetation.

During the dry months, the hill tribes feed their animals dried sardines bought from coastal fishermen. Centuries ago, when the hill people traded frankincense for their fish, they brought the catches home by camel. Now, some use Japanese pickup trucks.

Although Jeballi children receive their schooling in Arabic, at home many of their parents speak tribal dialects derived either from long-dead southern Arabian languages or from the speech of the Ethiopian highlands where, scholars say, some of the tribes may have originated.

Instead of the flowing, white dishdasha robes common throughout Arabia, Jeballi men wear the wraparound skirts or sarong-like garments dyed with indigo.

Jeballi women prefer colorful dress to the austere black favored by Moslem women elsewhere on the peninsula.

At Quairon Haritti, as elsewhere in Oman, authorities have had to rely heavily on foreign labor to perform tasks for which Omanis lacked training or education. In 1970, Oman had only three primary schools.

Nearly all the clerks in the merkez's 11 shops are Indians, employed by tribal headmen who were given concessions by the government.

The three-member staff at the local health clinic consists of doctors from Egypt, Sri Lanka and India.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviets release tape of a healthy Sakharov

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — A newspaper today said it had obtained a videotape showing Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov in apparent good health, and called the film evidence of a Kremlin campaign to refute reports the physicist is ailing.

The mass-circulation tabloid Bild said the videotape of Sakharov had been "obviously" made with a hidden camera and "leaked" to it in Moscow.

"The Soviets want to prove that Nobel Peace Prize winner Sakharov is not seriously ill," the newspaper said. "In fact, Sakharov makes an amazingly healthy impression."

Sakharov, 64, who is being held in internal exile in the Soviet city of Gorky, has reportedly been sick and suffering from the effects of his hunger strike.

On Sunday, relatives of Sakharov's wife in the United States charged the Soviets with doctoring past footage to show him eating when he was in fact conducting a hunger strike.

"We are a continental power ringed on all sides by American bases. So we must have the weapons to oppose them," Bild says the videotape shows Sakharov saying.

Bild said the videotape also showed Sakharov accompanying his 62-year-old wife, Elena Bonner, to the Gorky train station for her trip to Moscow, from where she flew on to Rome and then to the United States to seek medical care.

Jewish terrorists freed

JERUSALEM (NYT) — President Chaim Herzog of Israel has commuted the prison sentences of two members of the Jewish terrorist underground who had been convicted of plotting to blow up one of Islam's holiest shrines, Herzog's office confirmed Sunday.

The commutations were granted as Parliament prepared to debate a proposal by a group of religious parties to pardon the 17 Jewish terrorists still serving prison terms for crimes ranging from murdering Arab schoolboys to illegally transporting weapons.

The bill is scheduled to receive a first hearing in Parliament on Monday, and Prime Minister Shimon Peres is expected to come under heavy pressure from the religious parties — whose backing is critical for his own political future — to support it.

The prisoners freed by Herzog are Dan Beeri, 41 years old, and Yosef Tzuria, 26, who were serving three-year terms for involvement in a plot to blow up the Dome of the Rock. The building, one of the most sacred shrines of Islam, is situated on the Temple Mount in the Old City of Jerusalem. It was built around an outcropping of bedrock from which Moslems believe Mohammed ascended into heaven.

Poet buried in Spain

DEIA, Spain (AP) — English poet and novelist Robert Graves was buried Sunday in this town on the Mediterranean island of Majorca where the 90-year-old writer had lived and worked for more than half his life.

Graves, the author of "I, Claudius," "The White Goddess" and more than 130 novels and books of poetry, died Saturday. One of his sons, William Graves, said his father was buried with the hat and scarf he always wore.

Borne by friends and relatives, Graves' coffin was carried from his home to the San Juan Bautista Church about a half-mile away. Services were held at the church, and burial followed in the cemetery behind the building.

A parish priest, the Rev. Ignacio Montojo, said the Roman Catholic bishop of Majorca had authorized the funeral service for Graves, who was an Anglican.

Graves first arrived in Majorca in 1929 and stayed until the beginning of the Spanish civil war in 1936. Ten years later he returned and wrote most of his works here.

Incumbents win in Cyprus

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Initial returns gave President Spryos Kyprianou's embattled party unexpected strength in Sunday's election for the Greek Cypriot Parliament.

The early election had been forced by the two main opposition parties, hoping to make Kyprianou resign or include Parliament in peace talks with the Turkish Cypriots on this divided Mediterranean island.

Election officials gave these results with 40 of the 662 polling districts reporting:

Kyprianou's Diko Party 2,016 votes, the right-wing Democratic Rally Party 2,082, the communist Akel Party 1,042 votes, and the socialist Edek Party 826. A handful of votes went to to two independent candidates.

Store bombs homemade

PARIS (AP) — Tests of fragments found after blasts at two Paris department stores indicate that crudely made fire bombs triggered the blasts which injured 39 people, sources said.

Callers claiming to represent the Palestine Liberation Front, the Islamic Jihad and the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia, were among those taking responsibility for the Saturday blasts, police said.

But the Palestinian group issued a statement Sunday in Baghdad, Iraq, denying any connection with the blasts, and the National Armenian Movement condemned the attacks. The crude nature of the explosives also led to speculation that they were the work of a disgruntled individual rather than terrorists.
