Student texts lead to arrest of MHS teacher

Physics teacher faces charges of public intoxication in classroom

By Meredith Moriak
mmoriak@mrt.com

Jeffrries

Students and administrators at Midland High School observed erratic behavior from physics teacher John G. Jefferies II before his arrest for public intoxication Wednesday afternoon at the downtown Midland campus.

Jefferies, 29, used multiple profanities while lecturing and told sixth-period students he "didn't care anymore, how they weren't ready for college and retakes weren't necessary," according to the arrest affidavit.

Jefferies was acting unusual and very frustrated, according to written witness statements. Students said he was constantly laughing, mumbling and smelled of alcohol. Physics equations Jefferies wrote on the board and the work he tried to show for them did not make any sense, according to witness statements.

Jefferies allegedly ran to the back of the classroom, grabbed a board with a rope and chain attached and asked two students to hold either end as he began to sling the chain around.

Some students text messaged their parents, who called the school, and three assistant principals arrived in Jefferies' classroom toward the end of sixth period, according to the arrest affidavit.

When the principals momentarily stepped out of the room, Jefferies told students, "F—— them. I don't give a f—— what they say," according to witness statements.

After sixth period concluded, Associate Principal Renee Aldrin asked Jefferies if he was OK. Jefferies said no and agreed to go to the nurse, who found his pulse and blood pressure were elevated. The nurse also smelled alcohol and asked Jefferies if he had been drinking, according to the arrest affidavit.

MISD police were dispatched to the MHS nurse's office at 3:10 p.m. Wednesday in reference to an intoxicated person. Jefferies told the officer he had "a couple of drinks last night" and failed field sobriety tests performed by the officer.

After learning he was intoxicated, Jefferies "got angry, balled up his fists and started breathing hard," according to the officers' statement in the arrest affidavit. Jefferies then stormed out of the nurse's office, slammed the door and returned to his classroom where officers later found him.

Race to the right

Partisan push to carry Morales to win raises questions

By Stewart Doreen
sdoreen@mrt.com

■ COMMENTARY

For many in Midland, Jerry Morales' journey to becoming mayor-elect was textbook politics.

Convince an electorate that a candidate is more conservative and reap the rewards.

However, in recent years, the race to the right hasn't always been necessary. Especially in local, nonpartisan elections — where political party affiliation isn't part of the ballot process — the strategy that was good for electing our state and national leaders didn't matter as much.

For some, the lack of concern about political affiliation, or at least one's conservatism, was a danger to the process. Ernie Angelo, a former Midland mayor and National Republican Committee member, said the product, particularly on the city council, was a less conservative governing body and fewer contested elections.

Supporting Angelo's viewpoint is that of the current seven on Midland's council, only one faced a contested race when their seat came up for re-election. And one, John Love III, got on the council without having to beat an opponent during his first city election.

"There was a lackadaisical attitude that persisted for a long time," Angelo said. "People realized this was a bad way to operate."

Angelo also could point to the makeup of recent councils in which three of the seven members boasted current or previous affiliations to less Democratic politics.

And while Angelo called the conservative candidates who found their way to the ballot this fall "an accident," he did see an opportunity presenting itself. The field for mayor, District 3 and District 4 provided a chance to show people Midland can still flex its conservative muscles.

"The truth is, conservative leadership has not only been good for the country but Midland," Angelo said. "It is extremely naive to think that it could be totally nonpartisan."

WWII Doolittle Raiders make final toast in Ohio

By Dan Sewell
Associated Press

Al Behrman/AP

Richard Cole, one of four surviving members of the 1942 raid on Tokyo led by Lt. Col. Jimmy Doolittle, opens an 1896 bottle of cognac the raiders had been saving for their final toast Saturday at the National Museum of the Air Force in Dayton, Ohio.

DAYTON, Ohio — The last of the Doolittle Raiders, all in their 90s, offered a final toast Saturday to their fallen comrades, as they pondered their place in history after a day of fanfare about their 1942 attack on Japan.

"May they rest in peace," Lt. Col. Richard Cole, 98, said before the three Raiders present sipped an 1896 cognac from specially engraved silver goblets. The cognac was saved for the occasion after being passed down from their late commander, Lt. Gen. James "Jimmy" Dolittle, who was born in 1896.

In a ceremony Saturday evening at the National Museum of the U.S. Air Force near Dayton, Ohio, hundreds of people including family members of deceased Raiders watched as the three Raiders each called out "here" as a historian read the names of all 80 of the original airmen.

A B-25 bomber flyover helped cap an afternoon memorial tribute in which a wreath was placed at the Doolittle Raider monument outside the National Museum of the U.S. Air Force near Dayton. Museum officials estimated some 10,000 people turned out for Veterans Day weekend events honoring the 1942 mission credited with rallying American morale and throwing the Japanese off balance.

Acting Air Force Secretary Eric Fanning said America was at a low point, after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor and other Axis successes, before "these 80 men who showed the nation that we were nowhere near defeat." He noted that all volunteered for a mission with high risks throughout, from the launch of B-25 bombers from a carrier at sea, the attack on Tokyo, and lack of fuel to reach safe bases.

Only four of the 80 are still alive. The Raiders said, at the time, they didn't realize their mission would be considered an important event in turning the war's tide. It inflicted little major damage physically, but changed Japanese strategy while firing up Americans.

"It was what you do ... over time, we've been told what effect our raid had on the war and the morale of the people," Lt. Col. Edward Saylor, 93, said in an interview.

The Brusset, Mont. native, who now lives in Puyallup, Wash., said he was one of the lucky ones.

"There were a whole bunch of guys in World War II; a lot of people didn't come back," he said.

Staff Sgt. David Thatcher, 92, of Missoula, Mont., said during the war, the raid seemed like "one of many bombing missions." The most harrowing part for him was the crash-landing of his plane, depicted in the movie "Thirty Seconds over Tokyo."

Three crew members died as Raiders bailed out or crash-landed their planes in China, but most were helped to safety by Chinese villagers and soldiers.

Three of the four surviving Raiders were greeted by flag-waving well-wishers ranging from small children to fellow war veterans. The fourth couldn't travel because of health problems.

Twelve-year-old Joseph John Castellano's grandparents brought him from their Dayton home for Saturday's events.

"This was Tokyo. The odds of their survival were 1 in a million," the boy said. "I just felt like I owe them a few short hours of the thousands of hours I will be on Earth."

More than 600 people, including Raiders widows and children, descendants of Chinese villagers who helped them, and Pearl Harbor survivors, were expected for the invitation-only ceremony Saturday evening.

After Thomas Griffin of Cincinnati died in February at age 96, the survivors decided at the 71st anniversary reunion in April in Fort Walton, Beach, Fla., that it would be their last and that they would gather this autumn for one last toast together instead of waiting, as had been the original plan, for the last two survivors to make the toast.

"We didn't want to get a city all excited and plan and get everything set up for a reunion, and end up with no people because of our age," explained Lt. Col. Richard Cole, the oldest survivor at 98. The Dayton native, who was Doolittle's co-pilot, lives in Comfort.

Lt. Col. Robert Hite, 93, couldn't come. Son Wallace Hite said his father, wearing a Raiders blazer and other traditional garb for their reunions, made his own salute to the fallen with a silver goblet of wine at home in Nashville, Tenn., earlier in the week.

Hite is the last survivor of eight Raiders who were captured by Japanese soldiers. Three were executed; another died in captivity.

The 80 silver goblets in the ceremony were presented to the Raiders in 1959 by the city of Tucson, Ariz. The Raiders' names are engraved twice, the second upside-down. During the ceremony, white-gloved cadets pour cognac into the participants' goblets. Those of the deceased are turned upside-down.

Only 4 of original 80 WWII Raiders left

On April 18, 1942, the U.S. military attacked Japan with 16 B-25 Mitchell bombers under the command of Lt. Col. James "Jimmy" Doolittle, launched at sea from the USS Hornet carrier:
Number of men on mission: 80
Number killed in crashes or ditching from plane after attack: 3
Number captured by Japanese: 8
Number executed: 3
Number died in captivity: 1
Surviving Doolittle Raiders today: 4

Malcolm X heirs seek to block diary publication

Heirs of Malcolm X have gone to court to stop a Chicago company from publishing a diary of the activist leader's last year.

X Legacy said in papers filed in Manhattan federal court that Third World Press does not have the right to publish "The Diary of Malcolm X."

But Third World Press Vice President Bennett Johnson said the publisher has a signed contract for the book.

Johnson said one of Malcolm X's six daughters approached Third World Press about the book.

He said the book was published a few days ago. It is based on journals from Malcolm X's last year before his 1965 assassination.

The journals are part of a trove of papers that were loaned to the New York Public Library by Malcolm X's daughters in 2003.

LANSING — This guy has all the luck.

Officials said Joseph Palmarchuk won a $1.35 million lottery jackpot Wednesday in Michigan's Classic Lotto 47 game. In the past few years, Palmarchuk has also won a $1 million lottery game in Tennessee.

Palmarchuk and his wife, Phillis, moved to Mecosta County, north of Grand Rapids, in 2011. He said he likes to buy lottery tickets that retailers put aside as mistakes.

The Palmarchuks plan to hunt for a condominium in a warm state to skip Michigan winters.

Actor Anthony Mackie arrested on DWI charge

Actor Anthony Mackie has been arrested in New York City on a driving while intoxicated charge.

Police in New York said the 35-year-old "Pain & Gain" actor was pulled over just before 1:30 a.m. Saturday in Harlem. They say he refused to take a Breathalyzer test to measure his blood alcohol level.

Mackie was awaiting arraignment in Manhattan Criminal Court and unavailable for comment. A publicist for the "Abraham Lincoln: Vampire Hunter" co-star had no comment Saturday.

Mackie has appeared in numerous films, such as the Oscar-winning "The Hurt Locker," "The Adjustment Bureau," and "Man on a Ledge."

Woman in stalking case banned from Twitter

NORRISTOWN — A suburban Philadelphia woman has been banned from using Twitter as part of her sentence for a stalking conviction.

Montgomery County Judge William Carpenter barred 34-year-old Sadiyyah Young, of Pottstown, from tweeting for at least five years.

Authorities said Young used derogatory and harassing tweets against people involved in a custody case regarding her children, including a judge who ruled against her, lawyers, social workers and foster parents.

The monthlong battle included a tweet that read, in part: "Somebody should pay all these people a visit, bust out windows and cut tires!"

Young pleaded guilty Wednesday to misdemeanor charges of stalking, forgery and identity theft.

She also was sentenced to 11 1/2 months to 23 months in jail and three years' probation.

Eagles concerts expected to yield few surprises

Few surprises, if any, are left at an Eagles concert: The vintage music sounds digitally crystal clear; the band members' voices remain strong through the long, high notes and harmonies. And it's hard to find a bad song on the set list.

The thrill isn't gone, mind you, just some of their grunge from the '70s.

The Eagles offered up "Peaceful Easy Feeling" and a string of other hits Friday night at Madison Square Garden, the first of three concerts in New York as part of their "History of the Eagles" tour. It coincides with this year's release of the documentary of the same name, which premiered at the Sundance Film Festival and is now out on DVD.

With Don Henley, Glenn Frey, Joe Walsh, Timothy B. Schmit and others, the band played through a series of rock classics.

Utah doctor's conviction follows family's pursuit

By Paul Foy
Associated Press

PROVO, Utah — The conviction of a Utah doctor in the murder of his wife was the culmination of a yearslong pursuit of justice by the family of the victim.

The daughters and sisters of Michele MacNeill hounded authorities to investigate Martin MacNeill amid an initial finding that the 2007 death was natural, possibly from heart disease. They attended court hearings and sat in the front row of the courtroom at a 2012 preliminary hearing holding photos of Michele MacNeill. They were in Provo again throughout this three-week trial, listening intently. Several of them testified.

When the verdict was read, they let out a loud yelp before dissolving in tears as the jury delivered its verdict to the tense, packed courtroom.

"We're just so happy he can't hurt anyone else," said Alexis Somers, one of his older daughters and his main protagonist. "We miss our mom; we'll never see her again. But that courtroom was full of so many people who loved her."

The jury convicted MacNeill of first-degree murder about 12 hours after getting the case, returning the verdict after 1 a.m. He faces 15 years to life in prison when he is sentenced Jan. 7. He also was found guilty of obstruction of justice, which could add 1-15 years.

MacNeill, 57, showed little emotion when the verdict was read. He hugged his lawyer and said, "It's OK." Deputies led him back to Utah County jail.

Randy Spencer, one of his lawyers, said he was disappointed before declining further comment.

The Utah doctor was convicted after prosecutors built a case based largely on circumstantial evidence. He was accused of hounding his 50-year-old wife to get a face-lift, pumping her full of drugs and helping her into a bathtub. Prosecutors contend that MacNeill was "swapping" his wife for a new life with a mistress without having to go through a divorce.

Gypsy Willis' testimony was the highlight of the three-week trial. MacNeill introduced her as a nanny within weeks of his wife's death, but his older daughters quickly recognized her as his secret lover. They said her mother had been arguing with her husband over the affair.

The daughters went to work uncovering what they call their father's secret life. They dogged county officials to open an investigation that local police never conducted. It wasn't until MacNeill's release in July 2012 from a federal prison in Texas on charges of fraud that Utah prosecutors moved to file charges of murder and obstruction of justice.

Willis also served a federal sentence for using the identity of one of MacNeill's adopted daughters to escape a debt-heavy history. That daughter had been sent back to Ukraine, supposedly only for a summer.

For a time, MacNeill's only family defender was his only son. Damian, a 24-year-old law student, committed suicide in January 2010, according to his sisters, who have said he was haunted by their mother's death.

The case shocked the Mormon community of Pleasant Grove, 35 miles south of Salt Lake City, and captured national attention because the defendant was a wealthy doctor and a lawyer, a father of eight in a picture-perfect family and former bishop in his local congregation of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Defense lawyers contend Michele MacNeill died of natural causes. They believe she had a heart attack and fell headfirst into the tub and noted the autopsy showed she had an enlarged heart, a narrowing of the heart arteries and liver and kidney deterioration.

"There's simply no proof" of homicide, Spencer said. "The prosecution has presented to you their cherry-picked portion of the evidence."

He called the testimony of a handful of prison inmates angling for early release doubtful. The men who spent time behind bars with the doctor testified he had acknowledged killing his wife — or suggested that investigators could never prove he did it.

Their testimony was the only direct evidence of murder, chief prosecutor Chad Grunander said. MacNeill lawyers argued he would never admit murder to strangers in prison.

Grunander said the largely circumstantial case was the most difficult he ever brought to trial and that many prosecutors wouldn't bother trying, especially with medical examiners unable to produce a finding of homicide.

"It was an almost perfect murder," Grunander said in his closing argument, asserting MacNeill "pumped her full of drugs" that he knew would be difficult to detect once she was dead.

An early mistress of MacNeill's testified he once confided he could induce a heart attack in someone that would appear natural.

Family testimony suggested it was MacNeill who insisted his wife, a former local beauty queen in her California hometown, get the cosmetic surgery. Prosecutors said he used it as an excuse to mix painkillers, Valium and sleeping pills for her supposed recovery.

"Make no mistake, the defendant's fingerprints, if you will, are all over Michele's death," Grunander said.

Prosecutors said MacNeill might have gotten away with a perfect murder, but his erratic behavior the day of his wife's death and shortly afterward was "dripping with motive."

Correction

The suspect in the officer-involved shooting Friday morning is named Hector Subia. A story in Saturday's edition had the wrong first name. The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.
Subia was listed in critical condition at Midland Memorial Hospital on Saturday evening.

ARREST

From 1A

MISD Chief Academic Officer Patrick Jones requested that Jefferies' car and classroom be searched. Jefferies agreed to the search of his truck and presented police with his keys. MISDPD recovered a loaded .38 caliber and shotgun shells underneath the driver's seat. Jefferies showed MISDPD a concealed handgun license.

Jefferies was arrested on a charge of public intoxication, a class C misdemeanor punishable by a $350 fine. He was placed on administrative leave with pay, as required by law, Thursday morning. During this time, he is not allowed to be present at MISD events, activities or campuses.

Midland ISD Superintendent Ryder Warren declined to comment about the situation.

"I'm never going to comment about a personnel issue that affects any of my employees," Warren said.

"We're going to investigate everything that happened (last) week, and I will make a decision on him in the very near future."

Jefferies holds a degree from the University of Houston and was hired by MISD in August 2008. He teaches calculus-based physics and sponsors the robotics club at Midland High.

Rob McAlpine, president of Sahara Operating Co. and a MHS robotics team mentor and sponsor, has known Jefferies for four years. He said the events that unfolded on Wednesday represent an error in judgment from someone who was very ill and made a bad choice trying to self-medicate.

"He was a truly, truly ill human being and I couldn't believe he went to work, but he'd said he missed a good deal of time and couldn't afford to miss any more because there was so much material to cover," said McAlpine, who saw a very sick Jefferies on Tuesday evening when students and sponsors moved the robotics lab to the location of the school's old shop.

"Mr. Jefferies was clearly suffering from the flu, alternating sweating and chills, coughing, swollen eyes. He was feverish and could barely stand at times. He was so obviously sick that I refused to shake his hand for fear of contagion," McAlpine said.

McAlpine said he's gotten to know Jefferies very well during the past four years and considers him "a superb teacher. Tough, demanding, but excellent.

"I think he made a big error in judgment going in that day and trying to self-medicate, but there has to be redemption in this world and room for a guy to make a mistake like that," McAlpine said, noting that Jefferies has repeatedly gone above and beyond for his students. He often stayed at the school with robotics students until midnight or later to finish last-minute changes to the robots before large competitions.

"He's a little bit crusty and 'curmudgeoney.' He can come across as grumpy, but I really think that's all just an act. He's got a dry, snarky sense of humor, but the kids really like him and it works well," McAlpine said.

Top Midland High graduates have repeatedly selected Jefferies as their "Shining Star" during a spring academic celebration for the top-ranked students and their mentor teachers.

Robert McDonnold, who graduated third in the class of 2012, credits Jefferies for deciding to pursue engineering at the University of Texas.

"(Jefferies) took an extremely challenging course and made it interesting and enjoyable. Mr. Jefferies taught the course in such a way that we were constantly reminded of the importance of engineers in our society," McDonnold wrote in the 2012 Shining Stars awards ceremony program.

Jefferies, along with MHS Science Department Chairman Cory Callaway, received a grant from Fund for Teachers in 2012 to visit the Richard Petty Driving Experience and Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla., to collect their own data on rides. They have incorporated the data into physics lessons.

Fund for Teachers is a national nonprofit that was founded by Apache Corp. 12 years ago, and awards grants to teachers for self-designed professional development.

"John is only two years older than my oldest child. I still look at him as a very young person and I'd hate to see him come completely off the rails over this," McAlpine said.

"There are so many positives about this guy. He's been such a great influence on the kids and he's such a great teacher that I'd hate to see one day change his career."

QUESTIONS

that was the formation of the field couldn't have helped the cause any more. J.Ross Lacy's family has been part of the leadership of the Midland County Republican Women.

Morales was born and bred in Midland, a product of an MISD high school, and a part of a large and distinguished Midland family. He also occupied an at-large seat on the council, meaning he had already won citywide. The last two Midlanders to win mayoral elections — Mike Canon and Wes Perry — had identical backgrounds.

And while traditional Republicans attempted to insert their influence in the beginning, the most pronounced partisan came when Midlander Tim Dunn took a page out of the playbook of his influential Austin group Empower Texans. He offered thousands of potential voters his version of Morales' main rival, John James, in the form of a mailer. Dunn wanted to portray James, the representative of District 3, as a paint-Texas-purple politician. For some Republicans, a James victory would have provided fodder for Democrats around the state that their party would have gained its most symbolic victory in the last 20 years. They couldn't stomach the idea of media outside of Midland coming in and writing about how a Democrat won in red Midland.

Dunn's letter served a purpose. It shut down the momentum James had at the time. In retrospect, it also likely provided a limit on the number of voters willing to give James a second look. And when James came back with a mailer of his own, those conservatives got exactly what they wanted — James' attention was off Morales, and his past party affiliations became the topic of the day for a critical two-week stretch.

"It is unusual for (Dunn) to get involved in local elections," Angelo said. "But he felt it was important enough for him to do it."

Dunn's arrival on the local stage

Anyone who has seen Michael Quinn Sullivan's op-ed pieces that are occasionally published in the Reporter-Telegram knows about Empower Texans and probably is familiar with Dunn. He wants politicians — especially those who consider themselves fiscal conservatives — to be held accountable for their votes and their past. There are few politicians statewide who enjoy being criticized by Sullivan and by extension, Dunn. Ask the state senator who represents Midland-Odessa, Kel Seliger. Their back-and-forth on the Sunday op-ed pages have made for great Sunday Opinion section reading. Still, up to this point, Dunn's attention has been outside the city limits.

"I have always been a state and national guy because that is where I saw an opportunity to make a positive difference," Dunn said. "I learned a lot in the state and national arena. One of the things I learned is the importance of being local. Sometimes you go off and lead yourself to where you started."

He said Empower Texans will become more involved in local politics, including in West Texas. "If I can find ways to do that in a constructive manner in my own community, I will try and do that."

Not everyone is a fan of the first installment of what Dunn brought to the election, including the letter and social media advertising. At-large Councilman Scott Dufford claimed to be "shocked" by the partisan politics.

"You don't think that can happen at the local level," Dufford said. "You know the guys who you are electing. You don't know the guys in Washington. To bring partisan politics into local elections — I don't know why we should."

Mayor Wes Perry, who endorsed Morales, said the letter took on a life of its own. He said Midlanders should do away with the labels at the local level. He used as an example the perceived liberalism of some members of the council during his early days as mayor. The mayor and Dufford said no matter the makeup of the council, the seven board members have acted, and will continue to act, as fiscal conservatives.

"We are Midlanders," Perry said. "I don't understand why we do local elections with this us-and-them mentality. If you have balance in the community, you will be better off."

Where do we go from here?

The city elections of 2013 will either go down as a time when Midlanders went above and beyond to inject real partisan politics into a local, non-partisan race, or it will be the start of a new era.

Midland ISD Superintendent Ryder Warren might be the first to find out. It is expected Warren and the MISD school board will put together a bond proposition for secondary schools that is two, three or even greater than three times the largest bond ever passed in our city's history ($163 million in November 2012). What did he read from the elections?

"Nothing happened that concerned me because to me, that's Midland," Warren said. "I hope we have a lot of people coming to the table when discussing the needs of secondary schools in Midland. We have informed voters. Midland voters will vote for projects that they feel we need and against projects they feel we don't need."

Will certain political types feel that a mandate about conservatism was laid down based on Tuesday's results? Yes and no. Perry said at this point one person's definition of conservatism probably won't match another person's.

"When I think of conservatism I think of less government and getting government out of our lives," Perry said.

Conservatives such as Angelo and Faircloth aren't likely to apologize for taking the community's conservative sentiment out for a spin.

"Midland has been conservative for many years, going back to the '60s," Angelo said.

"It has been a beacon for leadership in the state and country. Midland can still be that way."

Talks with Iran fail to produce a nuclear pact

By Mark Landler and Michael Gordon
N.Y. Times News Service

GENEVA — Marathon talks between major powers and Iran failed today to produce a deal to freeze its nuclear program, puncturing days of feverish anticipation and underscoring how hard it will be to forge a lasting solution to Iran's nuclear ambitions.

Emerging from a last-ditch bargaining session that began Saturday but stretched past midnight, the European Union's foreign policy chief, Catherine Ashton, and Iran's foreign minister, Mohammad Javad Zarif, said they had failed to overcome differences. They insisted they had made progress, however, and pledged to return to the table in 10 days to try again, albeit at a lower level.

"A lot of concrete progress has been made, but some differences remain," Ashton said at a news conference early Sunday. She appeared alongside Zarif, who added, "I think it was natural that when we started dealing with the details, there would be differences."

In the end, though, it was not only divisions between Iran and the major powers that prevented a deal, but fissures within the negotiating group. Earlier in the day, France objected strenuously that a proposed deal would do too little to curb Iran's uranium enrichment or to stop the development of a nuclear reactor capable of producing plutonium.

"The Geneva meeting allowed us to advance, but we were not able to conclude because there are still some questions to be addressed," the French foreign minister, Laurent Fabius, told reporters.

Neither Ashton nor Zarif criticized France, saying that it had played a constructive role. But the disappointment was palpable, and the decision to hold the next meeting at the level of political director, not foreign minister, suggested that the two sides were less confident of their ability to bridge the gaps in the next round.

For all that, Zarif tried to put a brave face on the three days of talks, saying that the atmosphere had been good, even if the parties disagreed on the details of a potential agreement.

"What I was looking for was the political determination, willingness and good faith in order to end this," he said. "I think we're all on the same wavelength and that's important."

Iranian officials had promoted the possibility of a deal for days, generating an expectant atmosphere that swelled when Secretary of State John Kerry cut short a tour of the Middle East on Friday to join the talks. He was joined by the foreign ministers of Britain, France, Germany, Russia, and a vice foreign minister from China.

"There's no question in my mind that we are closer now, as we leave Geneva, than when we came," Kerry said. "It takes time to build confidence between countries that have really been at odds with each other for a long time now."

Despite the insistence on progress, the failure to clinch an agreement raised questions about the future of the nuclear talks, given the fierce criticism that the mere prospect of a deal whipped up in Israel and among Republicans and some Democrats in Congress.

The announcement was a deflating end to a long day of diplomatic twists and turns, after Kerry huddled for hours with Zarif and Fabius to try to close gaps on issues like curbing Iran's enrichment program and what to do about the heavy-water reactor Iran is building near the city of Arak, which will produce plutonium.

Daryl Kimball, the executive director of the Arms Control Association, said the plant could be dealt with in a future phase of the talks because it would take a year for it to be completed and even longer for it produce plutonium that could be extracted for a bomb.

But Kerry said during his recent visit to Israel that the United States was asking Iran, as part of an interim accord, to agree to a "complete freeze over where they are today," implying that Iran's plutonium production program would be affected in some way as well. Under a compromise favored by some American officials, Iran might agree to refrain from operating the facility for six months, while continuing to work on the installation.

Once the reactor at Arak is operational, as early as next year, it might be very hard to disable it through a military strike without risking the dispersal of nuclear material. That risk might eliminate one of the West's options for responding to Iran and reduce its leverage in the talks.

The Arak reactor has been a contentious negotiating point because it would give Iran another pathway to a bomb, using plutonium, rather than enriched uranium. Moreover, the Iranian explanations for why it is building Arak have left most Western nations and nuclear experts skeptical. The country has no need for the fuel for civilian uses now, and the reactor's design renders it highly efficient for producing the makings of a nuclear weapon.

Tips for surviving the rigors of holiday travel

By Scott Mayerowitz
Associated Press

NEW YORK — There's not much good news for fliers this Thanksgiving. Airports will be packed, planes will have few — if any — empty seats and you might sit apart from a loved one, unless you pay extra.

During the 12-day Thanksgiving travel period, 25.1 million people are projected to fly, an increase of 1.5 percent from last year, according to Airlines for America, the industry's trade and lobbying group.

That would make this the busiest year since 2007, when an estimated 26 million people flew over the holiday period.

The busiest travel day will be Sunday, Dec. 1, with an estimated 2.56 million passengers, followed by Wednesday, Nov. 27, with 2.42 million passengers. In case you were wondering, the slowest travel day is Thanksgiving itself, with just 1.44 million people expected to fly.

But don't fret, there are some things you can do — in some cases paying a little extra — to make your trip more pleasant, or to at least buffer the damage if something goes wrong.

Delays

■ If you miss your connection — or bad weather causes delays — the airlines will automatically rebook you on the next available flight. However, with flights at near capacity, the next open seat could be several days away.

■ Don't like the flight you're rebooked on? Get in line to speak to a customer service representative. But also, call the airline directly. If the phone lines are jammed, try the airline's overseas numbers. You'll pay long-distance rates, but might not have to wait. Finally, consider sending a Tweet.

■ Consider buying a one-day pass to the airline lounge. For one thing, there are usually free drinks and light snacks. But the real secret to the lounges is that the airline staffs them with some of its best — and friendliest — ticket agents. The lines are shorter and these agents are magically able to find empty seats. One-day passes typically cost $50.

Seats

■ If you and your loved ones don't have seats together already, and don't want to pay an extra $9 to $99 domestically for a "premium" coach seat, it's very likely that you will sit apart.

■ Set up alerts for seat openings. ExpertFlyer.com offers free notifications when a window or aisle seat becomes vacant. For 99 cents, it sends an email if adjacent seats become available.

■ Check the airline's website five days before the trip. That's when some elite fliers are upgraded to first class, freeing up their coach seats. Another wave of upgrades occurs every 24 to 48 hours.

■ Check in 24 hours in advance, when airlines start releasing more seats. If connecting, check for open seats 24 hours before the second flight departs.

■ Keep looking. Even after checking in, seats can be changed at airport kiosks and on some airlines' mobile applications.

Luggage

■ Weigh a bag at home first. Anything over 50 pounds (40 pounds on some airlines like Spirit) will generate a hefty overweight surcharge — typically $100 — in addition to the typical $25 checked bag fee.

■ Before your bag disappears behind the ticket counter make sure the airline's tag has your name, flight number and final destination. As a precaution, place a copy of your flight itinerary inside your suitcase with your cellphone number and the name of your hotel.

■ If you can't live without it, don't check it. A lost bag can take days to recover. Don't pack medication or outfits for tomorrow's meeting or wedding in the bag you're checking. The same with jewelry or electronics.

■ You could be asked to check your carry-on bag, given today's crowded overhead bins. Pack a small canvas bag inside the carry-on. Use that to hold onto your valuables if you have to check the carry-on.

Height of 1 World Trade Center debated in Chicago

By Jason Keyser
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Rising from the ashes of 9/11, the new World Trade Center tower has punched above the New York skyline to reach its powerfully symbolic height of 1,776 feet and become the tallest building in the country. Or has it?

A committee of architects recognized as the arbiters on world building heights was meeting Friday to decide whether a design change affecting the skyscraper's 408-foot needle disqualifies it from being counted. Disqualification would deny the tower the title as the nation's tallest.

But there is more than bragging rights at stake; 1 World Trade Center stands as a monument to those killed in the terrorist attacks, and the ruling could dim the echo of America's founding year in the structure's height. Without the needle, the building measures 1,368 feet, a number that also holds symbolic weight as the height of the original World Trade Center.

What's more, the decision is being made by an organization based in Chicago, whose cultural and architectural history is embodied by the Willis — formerly Sears — Tower that would be knocked into second place by a vote in favor of the New York structure.

"Most of the time these decisions are not so controversial," said Daniel Safarik, an architect and spokesman for the nonprofit Council on Tall Buildings and Urban Habitat. The 30 members of its Height Committee are meeting to render a judgment behind closed doors in Chicago, where the world's first skyscraper appeared in 1884.

The committee, comprising industry professionals from all over the world, will announce its decision next week.

The question over 1 World Trade Center, which remains under construction and is expected to open next year, arose because of a change to the design of its tower-topping needle. Under the council's current criteria, spires that are an integral part of a building's aesthetic design count; broadcast antennas that can be added and removed do not.

The designers of 1 World Trade Center had intended to enclose the mast's communications gear in decorative cladding made of fiberglass and steel. But the developer removed that exterior shell from the design, saying it would be impossible to properly maintain or repair.

Without it, the question is whether the mast is now primarily just a broadcast antenna.

According to the architecture firm behind the building, Skidmore, Owings & Merrill LLP, the needle will have a communications platform for radio and television equipment, but it will also be topped with an LED beacon that will fire out a horizontal blaze of light visible from up to 50 miles away on a clear night — a feature that has been described as a crowning beacon of hope.

The developers tested the lights Friday night, and hundreds of red, white and blue LED modules illuminated lower Manhattan.

Safarik said the committee could consider amending its height criteria — a move with much broader implications that could force a reshuffle in the rankings of the tallest buildings in the world.

If the matter weren't so steeped in emotion it might have set off some of the good natured ribbing emblematic of the history of one-upmanship between New York and Chicago. But 1 World Trade Center is a monument to American resilience admired well beyond Manhattan.

"I don't think anybody's going to argue with the pride in building that new tower," said 31-year-old software developer Brett Tooley, who works across the street from the Willis Tower. "Not only is it going to be the tallest building; it's going to be one of the strongest buildings in the history of America. It's a marvel of engineering."

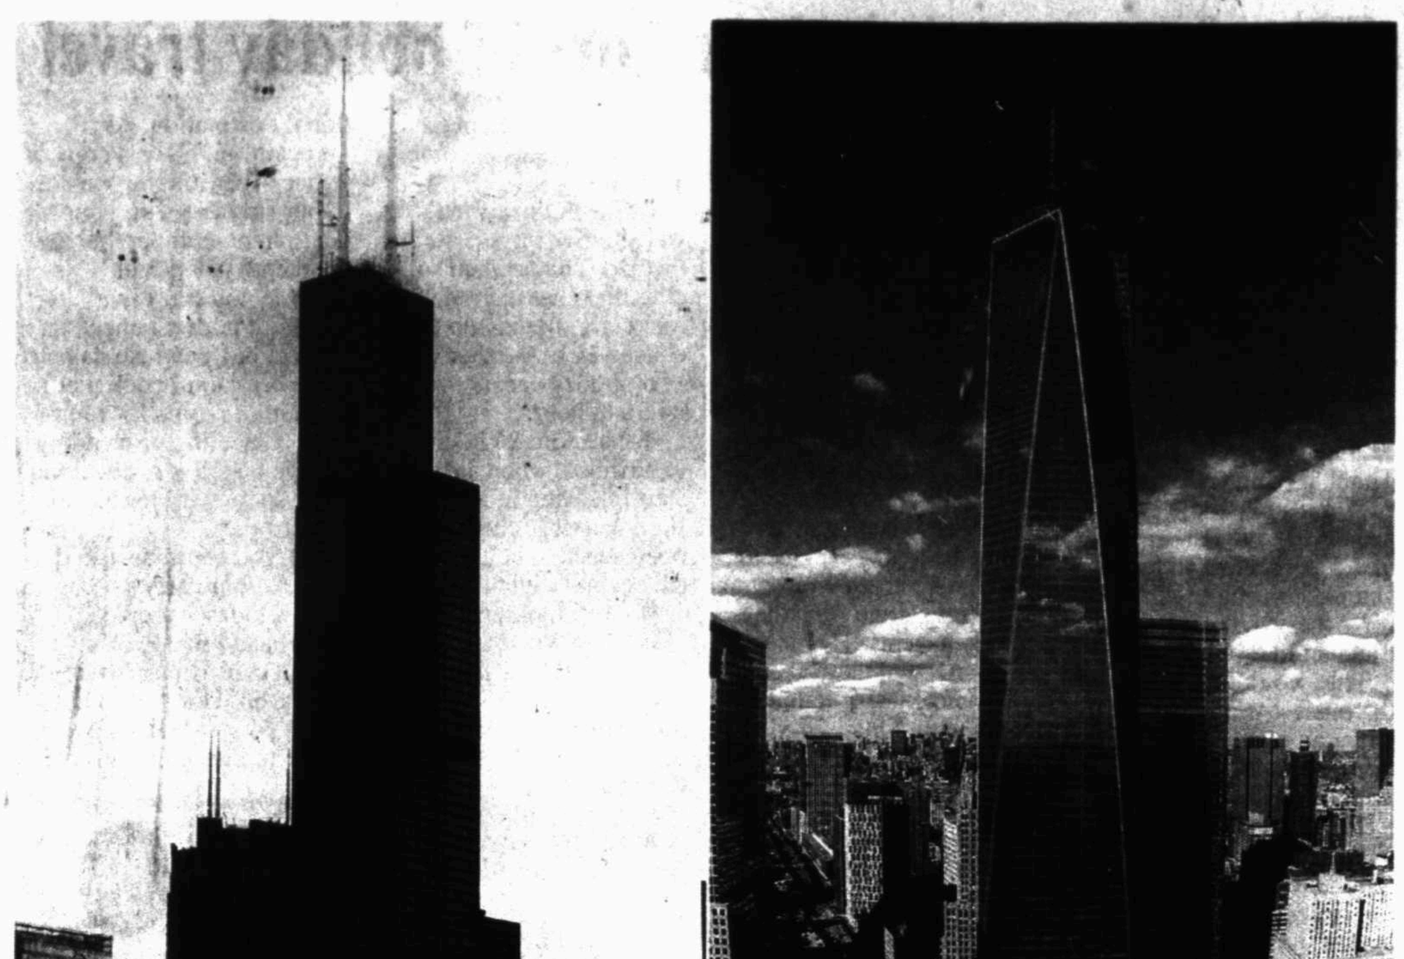
"We take our hats off to them out here in Chicago and the Midwest," said Robert Wislow, chairman and chief executive of U.S. Equities, the firm that manages the Willis Tower. "And we welcome the building to the elite club of the tallest buildings in the world. Nobody's looking at this like a competition."

Still, the Willis has a central place in Chicago's history, speaking to the city's own tradition of recovering from adversity ever since the 1871 Great Fire and its history of creating architectural marvels, said Peter Alter, an archivist at the Chicago History Museum.

Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, headquartered in Chicago, also designed the Willis. Then known as the Sears Tower, it was completed in 1973 and remained the tallest building in the world until 1996 when the council ruled that the Petronas Twin Towers in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, had knocked it from the top spot.

And the Willis can still claim to get visitors up higher: The highest occupied floor in the 1,450-foot (not including antenna height), 110-story Willis Tower is still higher up than that of the 104-story 1 World Trade Center. In a sign of just how in dispute building measurements can be, the council says the Willis has 108 floors.

At the Willis' 103rd floor, thrill-seekers can step out into one of the glass boxes known as The Ledge that extend outside the building's steel frame and look straight down 1,353 feet.



Associated Press

Few options for Obama to fix cancellations problem

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama says he'll do everything he can to help people coping with health insurance cancellations, but legally and practically his options appear limited.

That means the latest political problem engulfing Obama's health care overhaul may not be resolved quickly, cleanly or completely.

White House deputy spokesman Josh Earnest said Friday that the president has asked his team to look at administrative fixes to help people whose plans are being canceled as a result of new federal coverage rules. Obama, in an NBC interview Thursday, said "I am sorry" to people who are losing coverage and had relied on his assurances that if they liked their plan, they could keep it.

The focus appears to be on easing the impact for a specific group: people whose policies have been canceled and who don't qualify for tax credits to offset higher premiums. The administration has not settled on a particular fix and it's possible the final decision would apply to a broader group.

Still, a president can't just pick up the phone and order the Treasury to cut checks for people suffering from insurance premium sticker shock. Spending would have to be authorized by law.

Another obstacle: Most of the discontinued policies appear to have been issued after the law was enacted, according to insurers and independent experts. Legally, that means they would have never been eligible for cancellation protections offered by the statute. Its grandfather clause applies only to policies that were in effect when the law passed in 2010.

More than five weeks after open-enrollment season started for uninsured Americans, Obama's signature domestic policy achievement is still struggling. Persistent website problems appear to have kept most interested customers from signing up. Repairs are underway. Friday the administration said the website's income verification component will be offline for maintenance until Tuesday morning. An enrollment report expected next week is likely to reflect only paltry sign-ups.

Website woes have been eclipsed by the uproar over cancellation notices sent to millions of people who have individual plans that don't measure up to the benefits package and level of financial protection required by the law.

"It was clear from the beginning that there were going to be some winners and losers," said Timothy Jost, a law professor at Washington and Lee University in Virginia, who supports the health overhaul. "But the losers are calling reporters, and the winners can't get on the website."

In the House, a Republican-sponsored bill that would give insurers another year to sell individual policies that were in effect Jan. 1, 2013, is expected to get a floor vote late next week. In the Senate, Louisiana Democrat Mary Landrieu has introduced legislation that would require insurers to keep offering current individual plans. Democrats, who as a group have stood firmly behind the new law so far, may start to splinter if the uproar continues.

The legislation faces long odds to begin with, but it may not do the job even if it passes. The reason: States, not the federal government, regulate the individual insurance market. State insurance commissioners have already approved the plans that will be offered for next year. It may be too late to wind back to where things stood at the beginning of this year.

"It has taken the industry many months to rejigger their systems to comply with the law," said Bob Laszewski, a health care industry consultant. "The cancellation letters have already gone out. What are these guys supposed to do, go down to the post office and buy a million stamps?"

The insurance industry doesn't like the legislative route either. "We have some significant concerns with how that would work operationally," said Robert Zirkelbach, spokesman for the trade group America's Health Insurance Plans.

Behind the political and legal issues, a powerful economic logic is also at work.

Shifting people who already have individual coverage into the new health insurance markets under Obama's law would bring in customers already known to insurers, reducing overall financial risks for the insurance pool.

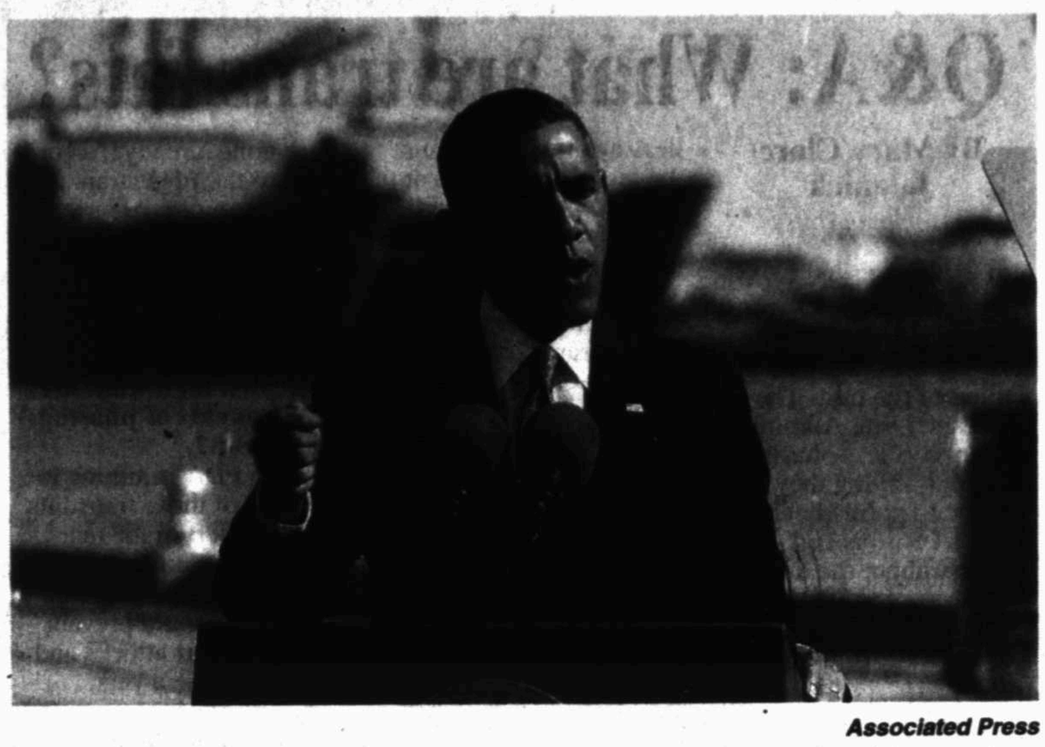
That's painful for those who end up paying higher premiums for upgraded policies. But it could save money for the taxpayers who are subsidizing the new coverage.

Compared with the uninsured, people with coverage are less likely to have a pent-up need for medical services. At one point, they were all prescreened for health problems.

A sizable share of the uninsured people expected to gain coverage under Obama's law have health problems that have kept them from getting coverage. They'll be the costly cases.

Obama sold the overhaul as a win all around. Uninsured Americans would get coverage and people who liked their insurance could keep it, he said. In hindsight, the president might have wanted to say that you could keep your plan as long as your insurer or your employer did not change it beyond limits prescribed by the government.

Meanwhile, Rep. Darrell Issa, R-Calif., chairman of the House Oversight Committee, said late Friday he had issued a subpoena to Todd Park, Obama's top adviser on technology, to appear before his committee next week. The White House has said Park is too busy trying to fix the health care website to appear.



Associated Press

President Barack Obama speaks about the economy, Friday, at the Port of New Orleans. The president said he'll do everything he can to help people coping with health insurance cancellations, but legally and practically his options appear limited. That means the latest political problem engulfing Obama's health care overhaul is unlikely to be resolved quickly, cleanly or completely.

INFORMACIÓN DE SERVICIOS DE VIH

Bajo los auspicios del Departamento de Estado de Servicios de Salud de Texas (Texas Dept. of State Health Services), StarCare Specialty Health System (antes Centro Regional de MHMR de Lubbock) sirve como la Agencia Administrativa de Servicios de VIH (AA) para los siguientes fondos de servicio del VIH: Ryan White Parte B, Servicios del Estado y oportunidades de vivienda para las personas con SIDA (HOPWA por sus siglas en inglés). La función principal de la Agencia Administrativa es administrar los fondos y la prestación de servicios de VIH en 58 condados, en la área llamada PanWest, que incluye las áreas de Amarillo, Lubbock, Midland y Odessa.

Los siguientes documentos se publican en www.panwest.org en la sección de descarga (Download):

1) Plan Integral de Atención de la Salud de Servicios de VIH de 2010-2013 (2010-2013 Comprehensive HIV Services Health Care Plan): un resumen de los servicios de VIH y objetivos para el área (plan nuevo en 2014).

2) Plan Para Obtener Información de las Comunidad (Community Input Plan): muestra múltiples formas que la AA utiliza para obtener comentarios y información de la comunidad.

3) Prioridades y Asignaciones 2013-2014 (2013-2014 Priorities & Allocations): un desglose de la forma de financiación que se divide en las categorías de servicio del VIH. La agencia que recibirá fondos es Permian Basin Community Centers Basin Assistance Services (BAS) para el área de Midland y Odessa.

Q&A: What are trans fats?

By Mary Clare Jalonick
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — You may not even know you are eating them, but trans fats will eventually be a thing of the past. The Food and Drug Administration says it is phasing them out, saying they are a threat to public health. Some questions and answers about the dangerous fats:

Q: What are trans fats?

Trans fats, also called partially hydrogenated oils, are created when hydrogen is added to vegetable oil to make it more solid. They can contribute to heart disease and are considered even less healthy than saturated fats, which can also contribute to heart problems.

Q: How do I know if I am eating them?

You won't be able to taste them, but they do help give a more solid texture and richness to certain foods, like baked goods and ready-to-eat frostings. Some restaurants use them to fry food, and they are also sometimes used in microwave popcorn, biscuits and pie crusts. You'll know you are eating them by looking on the nutrition label of a packaged food — the FDA has required labeling of trans fats since 2006.

Q: Why are they so bad for you?

Trans fats can raise "bad" cholesterol and lower "good" cholesterol. That can contribute to heart disease — the leading cause of death in the United States.

Q: Are all fats bad for you?

No, but they should be eaten in moderation. Unsaturated fats found in nuts, vegetable oils and fish are the best for you. Saturated fats mostly derived from animals are less healthy and should be less than 10 percent of a person's daily calories. Total fat should make up no more than 35 percent of calories a day, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Q: How long have these trans fats been around?

For more than 100 years, according to the American Heart Association. They were first found on grocery shelves in 1911, with the introduction of Crisco vegetable shortening. Its use became more widespread during World War II when butter products were rationed and people started using margarines that contained trans fats. Many margarines are now trans fat free, as is Crisco.

Q: How will the trans fats be phased out?

The FDA announced Thursday that it has made a preliminary decision that trans fats no longer fall in the agency's "generally recognized as safe" category, which is reserved for thousands of additives that manufacturers can add to foods without FDA review. After trans fats are off the list, anyone who wants to use them would have to petition the agency for a regulation allowing it. Such a petition would be unlikely to be approved because the FDA has determined that trans fats are a threat to public health. The agency hasn't yet said what the timeline will be for eliminating them but is taking comments from industry on what would be appropriate.

Q: Haven't a lot of trans fats already been phased out?

Yes. A series of local laws, starting with New York City in 2008, has already prompted the food industry to find alternatives. The industry estimates that almost three-fourths of trans fats are gone already. According to the FDA, trans fat intake among Americans declined from 4.6 grams per day in 2003 to around one gram in 2012.

Q: If many are gone already, then what are the benefits of phasing them out?

The FDA is aiming to get rid of those trans fats that are left in the marketplace. Commissioner Margaret Hamburg said the move could prevent 20,000 heart attacks and 7,000 deaths a year.

Q: Will it be hard to find substitutes?

In some cases, no. Frying oils are easily substituted, and food scientists have already figured out how to substitute other fats for trans fats in many items. In other cases, it will be harder. Ready-, to-eat cake frosting, for example, gets some of its solid shape from trans fats. Companies will have to figure out how to keep the item the same without them.

Q: Will I notice the change?

Probably not. Trans fats don't have any particular taste, and in most cases other fats will simply be substituted. Your heart might notice, though. Michael Jacobson of the Center for Science in the Public Interest says the prohibition is "one of the most important lifesaving actions the FDA could take."

In 2012, Alexes Garcia makes cinnamon rolls for students' lunch in the kitchen at Kepner Middle School in Denver. The rolls are made using apple sauce instead of trans fats. Heart-clogging trans fats have been slowly disappearing from grocery aisles and restaurant menus in the last decade as nutritionists have criticized them and local governments have banned them. The Food and Drug Administration is now finishing the job as it announced Thursday that it will require the food industry to gradually phase out trans fats, saying they are a threat to the health of Americans.

Typhoon death toll could reach 10,000

Associated Press

TACLOBAN, Philippines — The death toll from one of the strongest storms on record that ravaged the central Philippine city of Tacloban could reach 10,000 people, officials said Sunday after the extent of massive devastation became apparent and horrified residents spoke of storm surges as high as trees.

Regional police chief Elmer Soria said he was briefed by Leyte provincial Gov. Dominic Petilla late Saturday and told there were about 10,000 deaths in the province, mostly by drowning and from collapsed buildings. The governor's figure was based on reports from village officials in areas where Typhoon Haiyan slammed Friday.

Tacloban city administrator Tecson Lim said that the death toll in the city alone "could go up to 10,000." Tacloban is the Leyte provincial capital of 200,000 people and the biggest city on Leyte Island.

About 300-400 bodies have already been recovered, Lim said. A mass burial was planned Sunday in Palo town near Tacloban.

The typhoon barreled through six central Philippine islands on Friday, wiping away buildings and leveling seaside homes with ferocious winds of 147 miles per hour and gusts of 170 mph. By those measurements, Haiyan would be comparable to a strong Category 4 hurricane in the U.S., and nearly in the top category, a 5.

It weakened Sunday to 1101 mph with stronger gusts as it approached central and northern Vietnam where authorities evacuated more than 500,000 people.

"The rescue operation is ongoing. We expect a very high number of fatalities as well as injured," Interior Secretary Mar Roxas said after visiting Tacloban on Saturday. "All systems, all vestiges of modern living — communications, power, water — all are down. Media is down, so there is no way to communicate with the people in a mass sort of way."

HIV SERVICES INFORMATION

Under the auspices of the Texas Department of State Health Services, StarCare Specialty Health System (formerly Lubbock Regional MHMR Center) serves as the HIV Services Administrative Agency (AA) for the following HIV service funds: Ryan White Part B, State Services, and Housing Opportunities for People with AIDS (HOPWA). The primary role of the Administrative Agency is to manage the funds and monitor the provision of HIV services in a fifty-eight (58) county area, referred to as PanWest, that includes Amarillo, Lubbock, Midland, and Odessa.

The following documents are posted at www.panwest.org in the Download section:

1) 2010-2013 Comprehensive Plan for HIV Services: This is an overview of goals and services. (A new plan will be ready in 2014)

Obama's apology likely hasn't restored trust

■ The president whiffed with 'The devalued dollar stops here' routine when talking about Obamacare

KATHLEEN PARKER
Washington Post Writers Group

President Obama is no lip-biting, tear-streaking, chin-trembling apologist. When he said in an interview with NBC's Chuck Todd that he was sorry for the health care mess-up, he performed the mea culpa as well as — if not better than — anyone in recent history. With Truman-esque resolve, he may as well have said, "The devalued dollar stops here."

He's sorry that some people have been inconvenienced by HealthCare.gov's computer disaster. He's sorry that some people have lost the policies he promised they could keep. He's sorry that the Affordable Care Act wasn't adequately "crafted."

But is he sorry that he intentionally misled people? I must have missed that part. Here's what he said:

"I am sorry that they [people] are finding themselves in this situation based on assurances they got from me. We've got to work hard to make sure that they know we hear them and that we're going to do everything we can to deal with folks who find themselves in a tough position as a consequence of this."

A well-delivered apology can often be enough to absolve the "misleader." Key to redemption, however, is the sense that the apology is heartfelt and sincere. Most important, the apology must be specific to the affront. In this case, the sin isn't the mess but the promise the White House knew as early as 2010 it couldn't keep. Harsher critics would call it the deliberate intent to deceive.

I tend to be generous with benefits of doubt. Can I imagine a discussion in the White House wherein speechwriters and advisers told the president that full disclosure of the nuts and bolts — that millions would lose policies, which weren't that good to begin with; that their rates would go up so insurance companies could cover the previously uninsured — would be too confusing?

Yes. I can imagine it because that's exactly what happened, according to former White House speechwriter Jon Favreau. Moreover, the aides reckoned, the next several paragraphs that would be required by the truth would drag audiences through weeds considered too high for most attention spans. Such hubris puts one in mind of an exchange in Woody Allen's "Manhattan":

"This is an audience that's raised on television, their standards have been systematically lowered over the years. These guys sit in front of their sets and the gamma rays eat the white cells of their brains out!"

Given such thinking, the truth was too much for TV. Not only would people be confused, but the tea-party crazies would re-enact the summer of 2009 when town-hall meetings turned into circuses of screeching malcontents.

If there's one thing Barack Obama dislikes more than schmoozing Congress, it's having to explain his brilliant ideas to mortals of lesser intelligence. Come to think of it, the latter may be viewed as justifying the former — at least from the president's perspective. Thus, his advisers said, keep it simple for the stupids, though not necessarily with that precise wording.

So they did. So simple, in fact, that it was simply wrong. Did they really think no one would notice when they received cancellation notices and their premiums suddenly doubled?

The other rule of effective apologies is that they must come from authentic remorse rather than at the tip of a sword. Obama had no choice once caught and it was no longer possible to deny reality. That reality was further enhanced when 16 Senate Democrats stormed the White House barricades to express their outrage to the president.

Commenting afterward, Sen. Mark Udall, of Colorado, sent out a release saying he urged the president to extend the enrollment period and ensure that the ACA exchange website is secure.

The White House issued its own release, saying the meeting was "to discuss the progress that's been made" and "hear their input on existing challenges."

Well, that's one way of putting it.

Some consent to regret is better than none, I suppose, but the ultimate test of an apology is whether it results in restored trust. It isn't at all clear that Obama accomplished this with his exclusive, one-on-one interview. A straight, detailed talk directly to the American people would seem a better bet for the longer run.

Detailing the overhaul of a sixth of the economy may not make good TV, but the American people deserve better than "Sorry about the mess."

True contrition swells all hearts.

OUR VIEW

Morales has great opportunity to move Midland forward

The election Tuesday night provided Midland with an outcome all residents should be proud of. Jerry Morales collected more than 60 percent of the vote to become the city's 29th mayor. It was history on full display, and we are proud of the native son for his accomplishment. He becomes the third straight born-and-bred Midlander to become mayor, following Mike Canon and Wes Perry.

Voters should be proud of their choice. We expect Morales to represent Midland well.

Having written that, we can't say that the process, which delivered such quality candidates as Morales, Sharla Hotchkiss and J.Ross Lacy to positions on the city council, wasn't flawed. It was.

We were shocked that as Midlanders picked their future leaders, some opted to look back and not ahead. Instead of talking about the big issues of the day, there were those who judged candidates — well, one candidate — by past actions. There were Midlanders who said this candidate gave to Democrats and supported statewide and national candidates. Midland voters turned down this candidate at a 4-to-1 rate. They basically eliminated that candidate electorally.

"I was taken back by the partisan nature of the election," said Councilman Scott Dufford, a person who we consider a conservative.

Having said that, it is time to look to the future, not at Midland's first Hispanic mayor and the relatively inexperienced council that will be shorthanded for five months as it takes on some of Midland's biggest issues.

The community's mayor-elect has some work ahead of him. While his victory provides many positives for this community, he oversaw a campaign that chose a path that avoided a discussion about the big issues of the day. We look forward to the mayor-elect taking the opportunity at Wednesday's State of the Economy luncheon — sponsored by the Midland Chamber of Commerce — to fill in those blanks and better explain his vision for Midland when it comes to traffic, housing, infrastructure, how Midland must deal with the Energy Tower issue and how our business community might be positively impacted by his first three years as the leader of the city.

And we know the mayor-elect will be conservative. So we call on him to show us how businesses will view a Midland where it will be easier to find private-sector employees because the cost of living will drop to the point that people stop moving to Lubbock, San Angelo, Abilene, Dallas or Houston because it is cheaper to live there.

Tell us how the hundreds of additional workers needed to build Energy Tower at City Center (no matter its size) are not going to further burden a housing market that right now looks as if it is beginning to loosen up. And remember, by the city's own estimate, the housing being built over the next three years will accommodate current demand and not what may be needed with expected growth.

Tell us if Midlanders can expect solutions to traffic issues, including if there is anything that can be done to reduce commute time in our new Midland.

And how do you pay for everything on the list with the limited resources available to the city?

That list goes on and on, but Wednesday'd luncheon will be a great place to start.

Christie gets help from NM governor

■ Susana Martinez was the only out-of-state politician Christie invited to campaign in New Jersey. You wonder if they will team up again

RUBEN NAVARRETTE
Washington Post Writers Group

Is it possible that the winning ticket for Republicans in 2016 was on display during the New Jersey gubernatorial campaign? The pairing has a nice ring to it: Christie-Martinez.

Having been elected the first female governor of New Mexico and the first Latina governor of any state, Susana Martinez must be accustomed to racking up impressive titles. And while campaigning in the Garden State for a fellow Republican governor, she may have staked a claim to another one — kingmaker.

Gov. Chris Christie, who cruised to re-election this week with 60 percent of the vote, made a point of getting out of the GOP's comfort zone and going after voters who typically don't vote for Republicans. In contrast to Mitt Romney's pitiful strategy of writing off "47 percent" of Americans as too dependent on government largesse to even consider voting Republican, Christie pursued every vote.

This includes Hispanics, which is probably why Christie invited Martinez to New Jersey to campaign with him. News outlets have reported that it was the only such offer he made to any out-of-state elected official during the campaign.

What a smart choice. Like Christie, the 54-year-old Martinez is amazingly popular in her state. According to a recent poll of New Mexico voters, Martinez's approval rating is a staggering 66 percent — which includes high marks from 64 percent of independents and 44 percent of Democrats. She is even more popular among Hispanics, including many who are lifelong Democrats.

And, like Christie, Martinez has three tremendous assets: her authenticity, her willingness to tackle controversial issues, her ability to relate to everyday folks. All of these things have paid dividends in the Land of Enchantment, and they could pay off on the national stage as well.

In New Jersey, the two governors did eight campaign stops together, including one in the heavily Hispanic enclave of Union City. According to the 2010 Census, 85 percent of that city's residents are Hispanic, which is the highest percentage of any municipality in New Jersey. This is not exactly friendly territory for the GOP; about 65 percent of the voters in Union City are registered Democrats. Martinez showed up, worked the crowd, and sprinkled in some Spanish, which she speaks flawlessly having grown up in El Paso, and lived much of her life in southern New Mexico -- a part of the country where they take seriously the need to preserve one's culture and language.

Both Martinez and Christie have been vocally critical of their party's boneheaded and mean-spirited approach to the immigration issue, and both have expressed support for a comprehensive reform that combines border security with a path to citizenship for the undocumented.

And for those on the right who maintain that any plan that allows illegal immigrants to remain in the United States would weaken the rule of law, let's remember that these are two former prosecutors we're talking about. Christie is a former U.S. attorney, and Martinez is a former district attorney.

In her remarks, Martinez looked past immigration and focused instead on what is for many Hispanics the No. 1 issue facing their community: education.

Christie has said that in his second term, he wants to follow the lead of states such as Florida and bring school choice to New Jersey. This will inflame Democratic-leaning teachers unions that are comfortable with the status quo, a powerful constituency that Christie has already tangled with over other reforms. But, at the same time, he is likely to find support for his crusade among Hispanics, who want better schools, greater accountability and more options. Many of them have started to figure out that the mostly non-Hispanic teachers unions that claim to have their best interests at heart really only care about protecting their own interests.

Martinez seized on that theme.

"Here in New Jersey, it is important for him to fight for the little ones," Martinez told the mostly Hispanic crowd about Christie.

Here's the thing about Hispanics. If you fight for them, they'll fight for you.

The result? According to exit polls, at a time when Republicans are delighted if they can get as much as 35 percent of the Hispanic vote, Christie got 50 percent.

If you missed the chance to see this impressive tag team in action, don't despair. When the 2016 campaign unfolds, you might catch a repeat performance.

Dialysis center appreciates visit by Conaway

Recently, our caregiving team and patients at Midland Dialysis had the honor of hosting Rep. Mike Conaway, who visited our facility to learn more about quality kidney care and the lives of the 125 patients we care for every day.

During our visit, I shared my concerns regarding a recent proposal by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) to drastically cut dialysis funding, reducing payment for this lifesaving care by 10 percent.

Most of our patients rely on Medicare to help pay for the hourslong dialysis sessions they require. As a result, proposed cuts to Medicare's End-Stage Renal Disease (ESRD) benefit could be devastating for both patients and facilities. Reimbursements would decrease by $30 per treatment, which could force facilities to make reductions in staffing levels or close facilities altogether. These reductions would be passed on to patients, limiting access to the life-saving care they need.

I would like to thank Conaway for taking the time to meet our patients and teammates at our facility. I hope readers will be inspired to contact Conaway, as well as our senators, John Cornyn and Ted Cruz, to ask for their support.

NTSB misses few things in parade wreck investigation

Seems like the NTSB missed a few things:

1. Rail should install monitored video cameras linked to the trains so the train crew knows what's coming up. You know, like a parade or gas tanker stranded on the tracks.

2. What about the missing lights out over the road on cantilever arms so the signals are in front of the drivers? You know, like the traffic cantilevers on the same intersection.

3. The train was speeding by 47 mph per the Federal Railroad-bought Association records and 37 mph per city statutes. Where are the railroads speeding through populated areas permits?

4. That there were at least 10 seconds missing for the signals per the railroad increasing the warning time to design the same week.

5. That the UP directors make millions a year (that we make up at check-out lines when costs are passed on to consumers) so they probably could have some safety people checking for parades along their train bomb route. You know the safety thing to do.

These findings will get more killed, like the NTSB findings of 40 of 60 passive crossings with sight obstructions yet no remove sight obstruction recommendations.

Obama's Harvard records still buried in moldy stacks

Obama now has been in office five years, and Harvard University has still buried his records in their moldy stacks. Now why would that be? Is he going to run for king or some exalted position higher than president that he will create by executive order?

And out of curiosity, did he ever hire any of his classmates from Harvard, Occidental or Columbia to fill any government position under his authority — which would number in the hundreds or thousands? Just asking.

Paper shows partisan prejudice again

In Thursday's Reporter-Telegram there appeared an opinion piece entitled "What's in a middle name? Ask Greg Abbott." As a classic piece of the shoddy and lazy journalism that has infected the "lamestream" media over the past 50 or so years, it went on to attempt to connect Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott's name of Wayne to some of the most despicable characters known by that same name. Since the piece required no special talent, it is easy to duplicate the feat as regards Mr. Herman.

How about Pee Wee Herman, the star of children's TV, that is, until he was arrested in Florida for masturbating inside a pornographic theater? Or how about top Nazi Herman Goering who was convicted of crimes against humanity at the Nuremberg trial following WWII but committed suicide the night before his death sentence was to be carried out? There are other such far-fetched examples but you get the picture. You've got to hand it to the left: They are inveterate and peerless finger-pointers.

On the one hand, I would tend to blast the Reporter-Telegram for including such ridiculous material in a paper I paid money to read. But on the other hand I would like to thank them for reminding us that such ignorance and cheap partisan prejudice still exist.

There is a downside to bilingualism

■ There's little to indicate that keeping non-English speakers dependent on their own language delivers better results

ESTHER CEPEDA
Washington Post Writers Group

Activist and educator Matthew Lynch recently asked if language barriers are the "new segregation." He challenged readers of an Education Week blog to consider if it is "fair to separate our student populations based on their native language."

He continued, "Just as the ruling of Brown v. The Board of Education found that 'separate is ... unequal' when it comes to skin color — is the same true of language preferences?"

Yes, separate classrooms for speakers of native languages other than English are egregiously unequal and not fair.

Lynch was referring to a contentious case in Elgin, Ill., where the school district — 40 percent Hispanic — runs a gifted program in which only 2 percent of the students are Hispanic. The district has a separate gifted program for Hispanic students learning English as a second language.

This is in line with the mindset of countless educators who believe, incorrectly, that children who are not native English-speakers need the special accommodation of being immersed in their native language in order to learn.

Vanderbilt University professor Donna Ford said, "Even unintentional discrimination closes the door for gifted minority students. Even if you don't mean to discriminate, that is not an excuse to keep doing business as usual."

But herding students learning English into classes that are taught exclusively in their native language is business as usual in many school districts. In fact, many defenders of Hispanic culture believe it is the only way to educate kids who are not native English-speakers.

Separate classes, separate teachers and sometimes separate curriculums — often lower-level than those of the native English-speakers in a given grade — are common in typical "bilingual" programs.

I was a bilingual teacher in Illinois, a state that requires most Spanish-speakers to get at least partial instruction in their native language. But Spanish-only tended to be the norm, and I often angered my peers for teaching in two languages instead of just in Spanish.

In the schools where I taught, the bilingual education program was a revolving door of under-qualified instructors on special temporary teaching certificates who often did not have undergraduate degrees in the subjects they taught.

This didn't always matter. My students were in tracks where language was traditionally taught with elementary school-level worksheets and the upper-class Algebra 2 students were expected to work and test from the district's eighth-grade math basics book.

Some Spanish-speaking students who were capable of performing well in mainstream classes were nevertheless put in bilingual programs or persuaded to join them — numbers had to be kept up to run the sheltered instruction classes, which get extra operating funds from state and federal governments.

Not so for Polish, Korean, Filipino and other English-language learners who came into the district. Their small numbers usually didn't trigger opening a "self-contained" classroom catering to their native language. They were instead expected to sink or swim in mainstream classes, and almost invariably succeeded.

Kids are like that — except for special cases — they soak up new languages easily.

Unfortunately, the Los Angeles Unified School District seems to think its English-language learners are unadaptable. To boost their achievement, it plans to separate elementary school students who are not fluent in English from native English-speakers in all core classes.

Supporters of the move say the students' track record of low achievement proves that their long-standing integration hasn't worked. Opponents of the scheme cite research suggesting that students have a better shot at learning English if they are placed with English-speaking peers.

I agree, but with the caveat of excellent instruction.

The very best English-language acquisition programs are those featuring dual language instruction where kids are fully immersed in classrooms that alternate use of languages and are headed by highly skilled teachers. Students learn two languages quickly and deftly.

For example, in the Texas city of Alamo Heights, two middle-school students — one Anglo and one Hispanic — in the school district's dual-language immersion program competed Saturday for the top title in their region's first-ever Spanish spelling bee.

They didn't get there because luck or unusual ability. They were simply immersed in their target language and given appropriate supports and great teachers.

If all English learners had these three luxuries, we certainly wouldn't accept segregating them into educational communities practically designed to keep them dependent on their native tongue.

Can King Coal be helped back onto his throne?

■ The U.S. has committed $6 billion to see if carbon capture can make it happen

LLEWELLYN KING
Hearst Newspapers

Forty years after the Arab oil embargo, which triggered decades of turbulence in the energy markets, there is a sense of plenty at last. There also is a sense, says Barry Worthington, executive director of the United States Energy Association, that "technology came through."

And it has. Windmills are producing more and more electricity around the globe; the cost of solar energy, particularly rooftop collectors is falling; and there is, above all, enough natural gas and oil to keep a voracious world supplied.

In oil and gas there is real technology triumph, the culmination of decades of effort by the government and private enterprise to develop better ways of mapping reserves with 3-D seismic surveys, horizontal drilling, and finally the development and deployment of geological fracturing.

With fracturing, a well is drilled vertically and then two horizontal wells shoot off from the mother well; one for breaking up the rock with sand, water and chemicals, and another for transporting the oil or gas, which has been loosened from shale formations. This technology has revolutionized oil production and made the United States — which has abundant oil and gas-bearing shale — a potential gas exporter, and possibly self-sufficient in oil.

In 1973 the energy picture was pretty bleak, and it remained bleak through the decades. The United States was resigned to the reality that it could not be self-sufficient in energy. Natural gas, according to the then-Deputy Secretary of Energy Jack O'Leary was a "depleted resource" not worth worrying about. Oil production was declining and consumption was climbing.

Coal was the great hope because there was a lot of it and it could be burned, made into a gas and turned into a liquid for transportation. With coal and nuclear — then still a cutting-edge technology — electricity would be the only safe bet.

In 1973, climate change was a phrase yet to enter the language, and only in obscure academic settings was the possibility of global warming hinted. The rage of what was a relatively new environmental movement was directed toward coal and nuclear. But, for social and political reasons, it settled on a course of hostility — bordering on the psychopathic— toward nuclear, which stumbled first in public esteem and then in the marketplace, mostly from costs driven up by delay occasioned by environmental litigation.

The world oil picture was changed by technology as well. Not only was extraction better and cheaper and, therefore, possible in increasingly hostile environments and in very deep water off shore, but oil was discovered in the Southern Hemisphere, where old-line geology had declared it would not exist.

The challenge now, as seen by Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz, is to make the burning of fossil fuels more environmentally benign by reducing the emission of greenhouse gases, especially carbon dioxide. Moniz was at a ministerial conference in Washington this week to push for the capture of carbon from coal-burning plants, the most intense emitters. This embryonic technology, known as "carbon capture and storage," removes the carbon dioxide from the effluent streams chemically. Then it is compressed to a liquid and pumped into geological formation for storage. In time, scientists believe, it will eventually harden and become part of the earth that hosts it.

Twenty-three nations represented at the meeting heard Moniz spur them on to greater effort to catch the wave of technological euphoria and to see if King Coal, now under attack by environmentalists and by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, can be helped back onto his throne.

Since 2009, according to Moniz, the United States has committed $6 billion to carbon capture and eight large demonstration projects are underway. China, often dismissed as an environmental renegade, is working on carbon capture.

"It is wrong to think that China doesn't care about the environment," said Sarah Forbes, of the World Resources Institute, which has an office in China and is working with the Chinese.

There are more questions than answers about whether carbon can be captured from utility chimneys cheaply and whether enough of if can be kept out of the atmosphere to make the effort worthwhile. But the effort is underway.

Remember: It took 40 years to beat back the energy crisis.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. The guidelines are as follows:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- Letters should be a maximum of 350 words in length. Letters that are more than 350 words will be returned to the writer for editing.
- Candidate endorsement letters for local, state or federal contests are no longer than 200 words.
- Letters will be edited for grammar, spelling, taste and legal reasons.
- Only one letter per month per writer will be published.
- We do not publish "open" letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

The Reporter-Telegram is encouraging anyone wanting their letter considered for publication to email the letter to letters@mrt.com.

Only those letters emailed will be guaranteed a spot in a timely fashion on the letters pages. Letters faxed, mailed or brought in will be input as soon as possible.

Local fight with Mexican cartel a small victory

By Katherine Corcoran
Associated Press

TEPALCATEPEC, Mexico — For lime grower Hipolito Mora, it was time to organize and pick up arms when a packing company controlled by a brutal drug cartel refused to buy his fruit. For Bishop Miguel Patino Velazquez, it was seeing civilians forced to fight back with their own guns that made him speak out. For Leticia, a lime picker too afraid of retribution to give her last name, it was the day she saw a taxi driver kidnapped in front of his two young children that convinced her to join those taking the law into their own hands.

In Mexico they call it "the drop that makes the glass overflow," and it came at different points for the people living for years in fear of the brutal Knights Templar in the western Valley of Apatzingan, an emerald green tapestry of orchards bordered by blue-gray peaks.

"We lived in bondage, threatened by organized crime," said Leticia, 40, who ekes out a living picking fruit and selling chicken on the side. "They wanted to treat people like animals."

Eight months after locals formed self-defense groups, they say they are free of the cartel in six municipalities of the Tierra Caliente, or "Hot Land," which earned its moniker for the scorching weather but whose name has also come to signify criminal activity. What's more, the self-defense group leaders, who are clearly breaking Mexican law by picking up military-style arms to fight criminals, say the federal government is no longer arresting them, but recruiting them to help federal forces identify cartel members.

The Mexican government, which over seven years has repeatedly sent troops and federal police into the area without success, has reached its own limit: an Oct. 27 attack by alleged cartel agents on power distribution plants and electrical sub-stations in 14 towns and cities that were intended to terrorize the public. At least 400,000 people were left in the dark.

Attorney General Jesus Murillo Karam arrived by helicopter to the ranch town of Tepalcatepec two days later to meet with self-defense group leaders.

"The attorney general came with two army generals to speak to me and said 'We've come to help. What do you want us to do?'" said Dr. Jose Manuel Mireles, self-defense group leader in Tepacaltepec, speaking over breakfast in a grove of fat mango trees, his two-way radio crackling with movements of his patrols.

He said the government promised operations in major cities around the state. Federal security spokesman Eduardo Sanchez did not respond to several requests for comment about the government's cooperation.

On Monday, military and federal police moved into the Michoacan port of Lazaro Cardenas, a major source of cartel income due to the trafficking of drugs and precursor chemicals, as well as extortion. They dismissed 113 local police and took over security. About 40 officers were bused to Mexico City for questioning into rumors of corruption, according to one security official who wasn't authorized to speak on the record.

On Thursday, the army arrested the entire 25-officer police force of Vista Hermosa, also in northern Michoacan, a violent area where the Knights Templar are battling the New Generation, a cartel in neighboring Jalisco state.

The self-defense groups started small with just a few dozen civilians from two communities: lime pickers, ranchers and business owners who began patrolling the streets, setting up roadblocks and ambushing the Knights Templar as the drug men roamed with their heavy artillery and grand SUVs. The ragtag groups now claim several thousand members in a valley of more than 300,000 people, competing with the cartel in raw numbers if not firepower.

Despite some success in the six municipalities of Tierra Caliente, the cartel continues to enforce a stranglehold on Michoacan, a rich farming state that is a major exporter of lime, avocado and mango. On Thursday, Ygnacio Lspez Mendoza, a Michoacan mayor who staged a hunger strike in Mexico City to seek government help, saying he was extorted by the cartel, was found dead in his car after being taken from his home, according to a local government association.

While cartels terrorized communities all over Mexico, many say Michoacan is a case unto itself. The region has long tolerated marijuana and poppy growers, and corruption and organized crime have permeated the social, political and economic fabric of the region for years.

Self-defense leaders say they are simply ordinary citizens trying to defend themselves against unending violence because the state has proved unable to do it for them.

Mireles, the self-defense group leader, says the big trouble began 12 years ago, when the local community unwisely made a deal with a local cartel known as La Familia to oust upstarts from an even more brutal cartel, the nationally powerful Zetas. When La Familia fell apart under heavy attack from the government of former President Felipe Calderon, the faction that was left took up the name Knights Templar. Initially, the gang told people it wouldn't bother them. But then the cartel realized it could make more money from extorting local businesses than it could from selling drugs.

"They were very ambitious," said Mora, who leads the self-defense group in La Ruana. "And that was their mistake, getting involved with civilians, with honest employment. They started step-by-step to take over all of the farm production."

Mora and Mireles, who started first with recruiting and secret night meetings, said at first 95 percent of the people said no, but the movement built quickly after their first appearance on Feb. 24. They plan to continue their attacks on the cartel in other cities, despite being stopped by the military on Oct. 26 when they tried to take over Apatzingan.

They negotiated a peaceful march, unarmed, with the protection of the military. As some 3,000 entered the square, sharpshooters believed to be from the Knights Templar opened fire on the crowd from a church tower and city hall, where municipal police were standing watch. Several were injured.

Now the self-defense groups say they are working to help federal forces identify criminals in the city, and their joint efforts resulted Monday in the capture of Leopoldo Jaimes Valladares, a mid-level cartel dealer believed to control the extortion in the central lime market.

In the Valley of Apatzingan, daily life continues under the watch of military helicopters and around sandbags marking dozens of checkpoints, some by soldiers and others by self-defense groups. Fruit trucks rumble by in the heat, and school children practice their civic marches, the sounds of drumming and brass filling the dusty streets.

Outside of Apatzingan, men roam with hunting and semi-automatic assault rifles.

It's a fragile peace.

CARRYING THE TORCH

For Boomers, JFK death ripples still

By Ted Anthony
Associated Press

President John F. Kennedy and his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy, arrive at Love Field airport in Dallas on in this Nov. 22, 1963.

We cannot get past it, we Americans. Not a half century later. Maybe not even ever.

The president with the easy grin in whom so much hope was invested. His wife, forever frozen in pink and pillbox hat. The motorcade. The sunny day. The shadowy man in the window with a rifle. Even more shadowy, the man on the nearby "grassy knoll" who perhaps existed, perhaps didn't. The flickering, silent color film of a leader's final moments. And the way it is described, even now, by so many Americans: the "loss of innocence" that left us vulnerable to so much of the heartache and tumult that was still to come. If, that is, we were ever truly innocent in the first place.

We should move on, maybe. But we don't. From that moment in Dallas — that moment scoured and buffed for so long, visited and revisited by so many people with so many agendas for so many years — from that moment until now, Americans will not let go of this event that changed so much and, just as significantly, was thought to have changed so much more. Even as the world lurched forward, Pause was pressed on that moment, and Play has never really been pressed again.

Why? Here's one two-word answer: Baby Boomers.

It is they who have carried this torch, they who have fueled its flame. When talk turns to the inevitable question — "Where were you when you heard the president had been shot?" — the dominant answer in American culture is this one: "I was in school." It is almost as if no adults were around on the Friday of the assassination, except as bit players. This is because Baby Boomers — who were, indeed, in school that day — are the ones who have shaped the national memories of this event.

For this generation — the Americans who were 17 and under on that day and, today, are from 67 down to, say, 49 — the assassination of John F. Kennedy remains the watershed event that birthed the decade we know as the '60s and rippled out, year after year, into politics and science and art and culture. It has been a singular snowball rolling down a hill, still gathering debris and holding onto momentum as it hurtles through succeeding generations.

"This murder in broad daylight ... Everything changed," says Oliver Stone, the Boomer director who served in Vietnam and made a movie about it before turning his distinctively critical lens on the Kennedy assassination.

Because he knows what becomes clearer with each passing year: For better and for worse, it was the event that defined the generation that has defined the way we look at the world today.

So what constitutes a Baby Boomer? Opinions vary, but most agree that a Boomer was born between 1946 and the start of the Vietnam War (about 1963). I, however, submit that a real Boomer is defined by the recollection of a world-changing event: JFK's assassination." — Ron Enderland, operator of a blog called "I Remember JFK: A Baby Boomer's Pleasant Reminiscing Spot"

To define the collective traits of a generation — to broad-brush millions of Americans with a statement like "they think" or "they believe" — is a futile pursuit. Many have tried, particularly with the Boomers. Most have fallen short. The group is too diverse.

Yet when it comes to this event, Boomers are often united by the way they characterize it. Many have described it not simply as an ending — of a life, a presidency, an era — but as a beginning. It is variously cast as the start of when America took a turn for the worse, the beginning of deep distrust of government, the unleasher of many kinds of chaos — and, of course, the dawn of the acceleration of the Vietnam War and the out-of-control decade it defined.

"It has become a founding crisis ... for this generation in particular," says Art Simon, author of "Dangerous Knowledge: The JFK Assassination in Art and Film."

"They have made it their own," he says. "They made it part of what came after it. They made it part of this revision, or this crisis, over governmental legitimacy. Or they used it as a founding moment for the unraveling of government legitimacy."

Many who have chronicled the generation characterize the assassination in similar fashion. The sense that emerges is that many Boomers found themselves in the curious position of being young enough to both experience it and not experience it — for it to be both a real event and something dreamlike, a fable that they saw through the eyes of parents, teachers, television before they were able to process it. The processing came later, as they grew.

In 1980, when the oldest Boomers were 34 and the youngest barely 16, Landon Y. Jones wrote what remains one of the generation's definitive histories — a book called "Great Expectations." In it, the man credited with coining the term "Baby Boomer" wrote this of JFK's death: "For the Baby Boom children, this was the most mesmerizing moment of their youth. Time was frozen."

And in 1987, Todd Gitlin said this in his history of the era, "The Sixties: Years of Hope, Days of Rage": "There are times when an entire culture takes the shape of a single event, like rows of iron filings lined up by the force of a magnet. ... The educated young felt his call, projected their ideals onto him. His murder was felt as the implosion of plenitude, the tragedy of innocence. From the zeitgeist fantasy that everything was possible, it wasn't hard to flip over and conclude that nothing was."

This is the thing about seminal events, particularly ones that retain an aura of mystery and conspiracy: They become empty vessels to fill. And the Kennedy assassination, perhaps more than any event in our lifetimes except for 9/11, is the ultimate empty vessel for the media age that Kennedy himself helped create. The assassination's mythology acts as its own echo chamber: Each time it appears to recede into the distance (and there have been many), a fresh echo always manages to reverberate.

That this emerged from the Kennedy years is no coincidence. His was the first American presidency to incorporate real-time mythmaking into its central narrative, and the media followed suit, building the aura of a "Camelot" whose violent loss was all the more painful because of the storyline that had enveloped it. Those same forces were harnessed immediately upon his death, both by Kennedy's inner circle and the American media at large.

Thus, the millions of Americans who remember that era through childhood's looking glass were assisted by the multiple souvenir editions of Life and Look magazines and commemorative newspaper sections purchased by their parents. Today, more than 1,000 of these talismans are for sale on eBay.

To talk to members of this generation, to read what they've written and listen to what they've said about the assassination over the years, is to see a few major themes emerge. Mournfulness and mythmaking — the sense of something lost — are among the more obvious. But there are others.

There is the persistent insistence of government conspiracy, of events that have been hidden from the public — and of complicity by just about everyone for just about every reason. In the era of NSA spying, this remains as potent a notion as ever. If indeed there were and are actual conspirators, they would have found it easy, in the past 50 years, to hide among the vast crowd implicated in various versions of the conspiracy. This is not to say that the conspiracy theorists — who bristle at the term — are wrong, only that they can't all be right.

There is the sense that Vietnam might not have happened — or that this central trauma of modern America might have played out differently — had Kennedy lived. There is evidence to support this and refute it. "He was truly a man who was working toward peace ... He is not just a missing president," says Stone.

And lurking behind it all, there is a feeling that the assassination's mystery, the uncertainty about dark forces possibly at play, has somehow seeped into everything: If "they" can do THAT, the thinking goes, then they can do just about anything.

Lisa Pease, a researcher who has studied 1960s assassinations extensively, encapsulated this sentiment at an assassination symposium in Pittsburgh last month: "We have to know the truth of our past and our present," she said, "in order to make good decisions about our future."

"JFK, blown away. What else do I have to say?" — Billy Joel (born 1949), "We Didn't Start the Fire"

What more is there to say? There is, it seems, always more being said. Over 50 years, making sense of the Kennedy assassination became almost as much of an event as the assassination itself.

Simon, the writer about assassination art, has a theory. He says that Americans born during the Baby Boom look back upon the events of Nov. 22, 1963, and retrofit much of what has happened since then into that moment in time.

"What makes the Boomer memory interesting is how much that memory is a reading backwards of what came during the 60s," he says. "And the meaning of the JFK assassination for them is largely written through the prism of the deaths of Robert F. Kennedy, Martin Luther King, the war in Southeast Asia. For them, the assassination is some detonator for the decade that follows."

"Reading backwards": They see things about that day in Dallas and add meaning that wasn't there when it happened. And, with each new reading, the snowball gathers more as it rolls.

We tend, as Americans, to pour meaning into "defining events." By doing so, we can persuade ourselves that history makes sense. It's unfathomable and terrifying to think that things happen incrementally and haphazardly, and that no single event, much less one act of a single disaffected soul, could upend what we have built. So, says Simon, "we kind of mass-psychologize this" — and no one more than the generation that lived through it as young people.

There is no sign that it is abating. Exactly the opposite: As the 50th anniversary dawns this month, a society still heavily influenced by Baby Boomers keeps turning back, looking over the national shoulder one more time.

Just look at the merchandise in recent months, aimed squarely at Boomers with purchasing power and the desire to nostalgically commemorate. There is the obligatory "50 Year Commemorative Ultimate Collector's Edition" of Stone's landmark film "JFK," due out this week. There are dozens of new books with titles like "History Will Prove Us Right," "The Hidden History of the JFK Assassination" and "We Were There."

And new movies, too. One, based on Bill O'Reilly's book, "Killing Kennedy," stars Rob Lowe as JFK. Another, "Parkland," chronicles the Dallas hospital in the hours after the assassination and, two days later, the Oswald killing. A few weeks ago, USA Today came forth with a 48-page special commemorative edition about the 50th anniversary. Among its headlines: "Death is dividing line between eras."

Last month, people fascinated by the assassination gathered in Pittsburgh under the auspices of Dr. Cyril Wecht, the forensic pathologist who has spent much of the half-century since Kennedy's death investigating it beyond what the much-maligned Warren Commission did. There were panels, workshops, even a comedy show ("Is it too soon to joke?" said the flier).

But you looked around the crowd at one of the evening panels, and though people in their 20s and 30s were present, the majority of the seats were filled by folks with graying hair who appeared to be in their 50s and 60s: Boomers. "There's not enough young people here," Stone said at one point.

Generations are funny things, if they even truly exist at all. An event that changes reality for one generation can, with the passage of time, be a mere historical footnote for another. The Kennedy assassination still resonates across American culture and will for many more years. But for those who came of age with it, who watched events spin out after it — all the way to another time-stopping reset at 9/11 — is it so unexpected that they "read backwards" to that weekend in 1963 and its message that things would never be the same?

"I was only really aware of how profoundly it changed the country years later when I was in college, because Kennedy's assassination started a chain reaction — a kind of house of cards started to come down, not immediately but gradually over the next decade," Steven Spielberg, born in 1946, wrote in "Where Were You? America Remembers the JFK Assassination."

Author Stephen King, who has infused his Boomer sensibilities into many works, spent 849 pages in 2011 delving into what the world might have been if someone could have traveled back in time and stopped Lee Harvey Oswald. King's "11/22/63" poked a stick into a central Boomer worry: that the world isn't what it appears to be, and that the Kennedy assassination ripped away the veneer.

"For a moment everything was clear," King wrote in the book, "and when that happens you see that the world is barely there at all. Don't we all secretly know this? It's a perfectly balanced mechanism of shouts and echoes pretending to be wheels and cogs, a dream clock chiming beneath a mystery glass we call life. Behind it? Below it and around it? Chaos, storms. A universe of horror and loss surrounding a single lighted stage where mortals dance in defiance of the dark."

What more is there to say? About this, will there always be more? To deploy an old Kennedy metaphor, the torch is being passed to a new generation of Americans. What they will do with it — and whether they can, or even should, let it go and move on — is the JFK assassination story of the next half century.

The rising population of the Permian Basin has come with substancial blessings, as well as heightened concerns. Despite the soaring economy, there are many in our community who are alone, impoverished, and hurting. Currently, local and state agencies and organizations are at, or are approaching maximum capacities. Therefore, a group of concerned citizens, churches, and business-owners have come together to establish a new residential sheltering program/facility in order to meet the needs of women and children in crisis.

The Genesis Center of the Permian Basin recently acquired the former Trinity Presbyterian Church building located at 2800 W. Louisiana Ave. in Midland. This facility will house 100 women and children who find themselves in a personal, economic, or social crisis due to some kind of hardship in their current circumstances. These women and children in need will receive, at no cost to them, up to 12 months of housing, food, Biblical discipleship, counseling, education, job training, and live skill training. Residents with very youg children will enjoy the benefit of an onsite preschool program through Trinity's Children's Learning Center. In addition, residents will participate in the daily operations of the Twice Around Thrift store, which contributes all of its proceeds toward the programs and facilities of the Genesis Center.

The Board of Directors is profoundly grateful for the support of the various organizations, individuals, and churches which has allowed us to open our doors. In order to meet city requirements for occupancy, we must finish renovating the structure to include a sophisticated security system, sprinklers, restrooms, and laundry facilities, totaling approximately $450,000.

The Genesis Center of the Permian Basin receives calls daily from those who are in need of its services. If you would would like to get acquainted or involved in helping with the unique mission and purpose of the Genesis Center, here is what you can do.

1. Come by for a tour. The office staff can be contacted at (432) 682-2514. We will be happy to arrange a tour of the facility for you. OR...

2. Make plans to join us on

MISD trustees to consider land purchase

124 acres of southwest Midland Scharbauer Brothers property to be reviewed for high school

By Meredith Moriak
mmoriak@mrt.com

The question of where Midland ISD will build a new high school might be answered Monday if trustees take action to purchase 124.43 acres of land in southwest Midland.

Trustees will meet in closed session to discuss real estate matters and might take action on the purchase of 124.43 acres from SBC LP, according to the public meeting agenda.

"Because open parcels of land are such a premium in Midland and a rare find, the board instructed me, quite a while ago, to be looking for opportunities for the school district to purchase land," said MISD Superintendent Ryder Warren.

Warren had made known his desire to build two new high schools, one on the southwest side of town and the other in east Midland, during this fall's town hall meetings regarding secondary schools.

No decision has been made whether MISD will add a third comprehensive high school or build a replacement campus for Midland High School outside of downtown, but Warren said trustees have indicated interest in looking at all available properties. The district has available funds to purchase properties for future school development, he said.

The land to be considered Monday evening is owned by Scharbauer Brothers Co. and is southwest of the site trustees purchased in December 2012 for a new 800-student elementary school in Betenbough's Legends Park subdivision, Warren said.

Though trustees may choose to purchase the land Monday, Warren said it's "still a long time before trustees may decide to do anything" in terms of asking the community to build a third high school or replacement Midland High School.

"We're not taking anything for granted — just looking at our future for growth," Warren said, noting his staff has been on the lookout for available land for the last three years and will continue to seek available property on the east side of town.

Monday's public meeting is scheduled for 5:30 p.m. at the district's administration office, 615 W. Missouri Ave.

Other agenda items include the presentation of design development plans for 10 elementary schools funded by the November 2012 $163 million bond. Projects for Bonham, Crockett, Emerson, Lamar, Long, South, Travis, Bunche, Barbara Fasken and the new elementary located in the Legends Park subdivision are all subject to approval.

DUCK RACE! OOH WOO OOH!

Lee High School orchestra students get ready to dump rubber duckies into the pond at CJ Kelly Park on Saturday for the 10th annual Great Duck Race. About 3,600 rubber duckies were used.

Orchestra races rubber duckies to fund trip

By Tyler White
twhite@mrt.com

About 3,600 yellow rubber duckies floated across the pond at CJ Kelly Park on Saturday afternoon during Lee High School orchestra's 10th annual Great Duck Race.

The orchestra's musicians sold $5 ducks for Saturday's daffy event, which is the main fundraiser for the band's spring trip to New Orleans, said orchestra director Beau Garza.

He said the band will perform at the Big Easy's St. Louis Cathedral and Cafe Du Monde to show spectators "what Texas has to offer."

The racing ducks bore a number and the name of the person who purchased it, Garza said. The wind carried the ducks across the pond and past the finish line to provide six winners with prizes varying from $2,000 cash, a Dallas Cowboys trip package and electronics, Garza said.

The Great Duck Race's chairwoman, Chris Hughes, said she began looking for sponsors in early August to ensure all money received from duck sales went toward the spring trip.

She said some parents can provide most of the funds needed for their students to travel to New Orleans, but others rely on the fundraiser to cover most of the $875 needed for the trip.

"We make it so they can have the opportunity to go on this large trip," Hughes said.

Senior violinist Jessica Jaquez, 17, said it was easy to sell the 30 ducks she needed for the trip. This year's duck race is bittersweet, said Jaquez, who will graduate in the spring.

Freshman cellist Emily Bryant, 14, said the duck sales were a fun way to prepare for the upcoming trip.

Before the duck race, LHS alumni Justin Langston and Adam Rivera provided live music during the relaxed gathering of students and community members.

Several sponsors were present to provide food and entertainment, including Rolling Video Games Party Truck and Kona Ice; the latter donated 20 percent of Saturday's sales toward the trip's costs, Garza said.

Students who play sports don't need extra compensation

Every year during football season we hear stories about how the college athlete is being mistreated by the corporate warlords of the NCAA.

We hear that these athletes should receive stipends because they are performing such a valuable service for the university. We hear that poor athletes don't have money to pay for a date or to go home for a holiday.

This recently was debunked by Flint Harris, who spent nine years at the University of Arkansas and Baylor University as an academic advisor for student-athletes.

"These kids are given ample resources to 'survive' during their years on a college campus," Harris said.

He goes through a long list of funds that are available to student athletes, including Pell Grants, room and board and scholarships, which can amount to a full ride for most football players.

A full Pell Grant is worth $5,500 a year and never has to be repaid because it is a grant, not a loan, Harris said. Pell Grant is based on financial need, and a student who qualifies for a Pell Grant also receives a $500 clothing allowance each year.

Athletes also receive room and board, and some also can get extra board during summer sessions. This can amount to more than $11,000 a year.

Also, the NCAA has a Student-Athlete Opportunity Fund for players who need money to pay for gas, clothing, a plane ride home or educational supplies such as a laptop. The NCAA's Special Assistance Fund also can provide student-athletes with airline tickets to go home for the holidays. All of this is completely within NCAA rules.

I simply don't see the argument that student-athletes are being "undervalued" or "underpaid." Now we could argue that student-athletes are not being properly compensated in relation to the money being made by the university through their talent. That has not been part of the discussions because of the huge payments this would entail. Also, should a player make more money at Alabama than at Buffalo?

In reality, a player's compensation is extensive as it stands now. How much value can we place on a full-ride scholarship? Depending on the school, a scholarship can reach six figures for four or five years, not to mention the benefits the degree could offer beyond school.

I will say that those using the extra

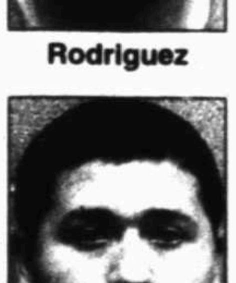
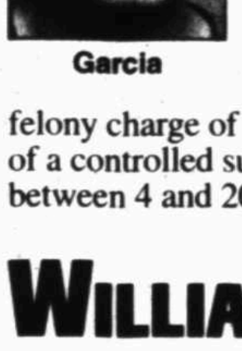
MPD: Men had crack cocaine, marijuana during traffic stop

From staff reports

Two Midland men were arrested Thursday after police found crack cocaine and marijuana in their vehicle during a traffic stop, according to court documents.



Rodriguez



Garcia

Manuel H. Rodriguez, 20, and Randy O. Garcia, 18, each were being held on a $11,000 bond for a second-degree felony charge of possession of a controlled substance between 4 and 200 grams and a class A misdemeanor charge of possession of marijuana less than 2 ounces in a drug-free zone. They posted bond and were released on Friday.

A Midland police officer stopped their vehicle at about 5:45 p.m. Thursday in the 800 block of South Marshall Street.

The officer contacted other officers for assistance after seeing one of the men quickly moving stuff around in the vehicle, according to the arrest affidavit.

One officer found two large white "rocks" of cocaine under a cloth bag in the vehicle, as well as marijuana, the report said.

The report does not specify who was driving.

If convicted, they face up to 20 years in prison for the felony charge and up to a year for the misdemeanor charge.

stipend pitch have an overflowing imagination, and I actually see where they are coming from. When I was in college, I would have loved for someone to leave me a little cash so I could go on a date or two. I would also have appreciated the keys to an automobile I didn't own.

I guess I get so upset with this whole idea of paying student-athletes more money because my $500 journalism scholarship is worth about 17 cents on the college market today. I keep hoping that we never lose sight of the worth of an education. It seems to me we should experience a little sweat, tears, poverty and pain before someone hands us that diploma — even if you are an athlete.

That is unless you really want to go on that extra date.

William Plear Stewart

William Plear Stewart, a long time Midland resident, died peacefully on November 6, 2013, in the company of loving family members. Bill was born on March 18, 1927, to Joel Justice Stewart and Lula Mae McConnell in Cass County, Texas. At the age of seventeen, Bill's family moved to Andrews, Texas, where he graduated from Andrews High School. He then served honorably, in the Unites States Army during the final days of World War II, as a part of the Allied force in Germany. On December 27, 1949, he married Betty Jo Waggoner in Oklahoma City, and they remained life companions for 64 years. Bill and Betty had three children - two sons, Steve Stewart and Bruce Stewart, and a daughter, Tina Stewart-Littlefield, who gave them great joy. Bill graduated in 1951 from Texas Tech University, and he remained a loyal and ardent Red Raider throughout his life. Bill was a geologist, and he spent most of his career in Midland working throughout the Permian Basin for Hunt Oil Company and Chambers & Kennedy. Upon retirement, he was District Manager of North American Royalties. After retirement, Bill devoted his time and energies to helping others through volunteer work at Friends of the Library, AMOS (Area Missions Outreach Services), West Texas Geological Society, and various other organizations. He was a longtime and devoted member of St. Luke's Methodist Church, and he took great joy and comfort from the Keystone Sunday school class. He also served as an usher, a member of the board of trustees, and the nominating committee. During the last year of his life, Bill spent his days with his family in Southlake, Texas, and attended Whites Chapel Methodist Church regularly. He continued to share time with his wife, who resides at Autumn Leaves of Grapevine, Texas.

Bill is survived by his wife, Betty; his son, Steve and wife, Kristi of Houston, Texas; his son, Bruce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and his daughter, Tina and husband, Hayden Dee of Southlake, Texas. Bill is also survived by his seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren - Lindsay, John, Jennifer, Katie, Plear, Blake, Matthew, Andrea, and Caleb.

The family will receive friends from 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m., Saturday, November 9, 2013, at the funeral home. Funeral services will be held at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, November 10, 2013, at St. Luke's United Methodist Church in Midland, with Rev. Kathryn Boren, officiating. Interment will be held at 9:00 a.m., Monday, November 11, 2013, at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Donations in Bill's name can be made to AMOS in Midland, TX, or The Alzheimer's Association.

Richard Witkin, witness to the history of aviation, dies at 95

Richard Witkin, a long-time aviation reporter for The New York Times who shared a Pulitzer Prize in 1987 for coverage of the Challenger space shuttle disaster, died Thursday in Marlborough, Mass. He was 95.

His son Gordon confirmed the death.

Witkin was on staff from 1954 until his retirement in 1989. For nearly all that time, except for a brief tenure in the late 1960s as the newspaper's chief New York political reporter, he wrote about flight: jet travel, the space age and the Cold War background against which midcentury aeronautics inevitably played out.

In his 2003 memoir, "City Room," Arthur Gelb, a former managing editor of The New York Times, called Witkin "a treasured member of The Times staff, always on top of breaking aviation news and invariably ahead of everyone else in the field of space exploration."

Among the signal events Witkin covered for The New York Times were the bombing of a United Airlines flight in 1955 by John Gilbert Graham, killing all 44 people aboard, including the intended target, Graham's mother; the history-making flight in 1961 of Alan B. Shepard Jr., the first American in space; and the orbiting of Earth in 1962 by John H. Glenn Jr., the first American to do so.

Witkin was a member of the team of journalists from The New York Times that won a Pulitzer Prize for national reporting for coverage of the aftermath of the fate of the Challenger, which exploded shortly after liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986.

In announcing the award, Columbia University, which administers the Pulitzer Prizes, praised the team for "stories that identified serious flaws in the shuttle's design and in the administration of America's space program."

Richard Witkin was born in New York City on Aug. 8, 1918. After receiving a bachelor's degree in history from Harvard, he earned a master's degree from the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism.

In World War II, Witkin served with the Army Air Forces in Italy as a B-24 pilot, flying 33 combat missions and earning the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal with five oak-leaf clusters.

He worked for The Detroit Free Press, radio station WOV in New York and United Press, for which he covered the United Nations, before joining The New York Times, where Witkin was variously a reporter, a rewrite man, the aerospace editor and the transportation editor.

Witkin's wife, the former Kate Friedlich, whom he married in 1943, died in 2006. Witkin, who lived for many years in Harrison, N.Y., and most recently in Marlborough, is survived by two sons, Gordon and Tom; a brother, William; and four grandchildren.

Manfred Rommel, son of Germany's 'Desert Fox,' dies at 84

Field Marshal Erwin Rommel was a hero of Hitler's Germany, the legendary "Desert Fox" who seized the world's attention with his daring tactics in North Africa from 1941 to 1943.

Manfred Rommel was his son. He was 15 when he said goodbye to his father, then watched as two German generals ushered him into a car. The generals had given the field marshal a choice: commit suicide or face a rigged trial on charges of conspiring to kill Hitler. If he chose the trial, they said, they could not promise that his family would be safe.

Rommel was guilty of supporting a plot to kill Hitler, whom he had decided was leading Germany to disaster. Within minutes, he bit into a cyanide pill and quickly died. It was Oct. 14, 1944.

Manfred Rommel went on to become the three-term mayor of Stuttgart, a major city in southwestern Germany where Mercedes-Benz makes cars. He became a liberal voice in postwar West Germany, supporting the rights of immigrants, backing civil liberties and strengthening the city's Jewish population.

He died Thursday in Stuttgart at 84. The present mayor of Stuttgart, Fritz Kuhn, announced the death without giving a cause. Rommel had Parkinson's disease.

As mayor, Rommel angered his constituents in 1977 by allowing convicted terrorists to be eulogized and buried in the municipal cemetery. He said he wanted "to show how, with a little generosity of spirit, enmity ends with death."

HOUSTON

Ex-sheriff's deputy charged with child sex assault

Investigators say a retired Harris County sheriff's deputy has been arrested for sexually assaulting a young girl over several years.

John Van Trump was arrested Friday and charged with super aggravated sexual assault, because the victim was under 6.

Investigators said the 68-year-old Trump assaulted his ex-girlfriend's daughter.

The girl, now 8, told family members earlier this year what had happened to her. Sheriff's detectives then launched an investigation that ended with the arrest.

Trump spent more than 30 years with the Harris County Sheriff's Office. The Houston Chronicle reported he retired as a sergeant in 2009 after his final assignment at the county courthouse.

He was being held without bail Saturday at the Harris County jail. Online jail records did not indicate an attorney for Trump.

Extortion blamed for surge of refugees to Texas

A South Texas immigrant shelter has seen a surge of women and children because of a wave of gang violence that has swept over Central America.

Sister Zita Telkamp is director of La Posada Providencia in San Benito, about 20 miles northwest of Brownsville. She told the Valley Morning Star of Harlingen that more than 300 men, women and children sought shelter there over the past two months, more than in any year previously.

She said the migrants are fleeing a wave of gang-related extortion. The shelter scheduled a fundraiser to help meet the crush.

Telkamp said Central American extortionists demand money from the families and threaten to burn their homes or kill them if the demand isn't met.

DALLAS

Police chief looks to stem rise in robberies

Dallas Police Chief David Brown is increasing the number of detectives investigating robberies as the city sees an increase in the crime.

The reassignments are a departure from a decision last year to reduce the number of robbery detectives, according to The Dallas Morning News.

Police statistics show all robberies have increased about 5 percent from last year, with business robberies up by more than 20 percent.

Department officials said as many as 10 detectives will be added to the robbery unit. Another five will be transferred to the family violence unit.

"It is important for me to listen to all of the concerns from officers and to focus on the safety of the citizens of Dallas," Brown told the newspaper by email.

Critics of the plan contend the move will weaken other units, such as financial crimes, as detectives are shuffled elsewhere. They argue the department could draw the manpower from less critical areas such as a unit that is tasked with reaching out to kids.

"They're applying a Band-Aid fix to a long-term problem and they're just moving the problem from one unit to the next," said Senior Cpl. Ron Pinkston, president of the Dallas Police Association.

The number of detectives investigating the city's most violent crimes — such as murder, rape, robbery and aggravated assault — dropped by 46 percent from 2010 to 2012. Detective positions have been eliminated or gone unfilled as the city saw historic declines in violent crime and resources were diverted elsewhere in the department.

Candidate Smitherman: Aborted would vote GOP

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas attorney general hopeful Barry Smitherman turned some heads when he suggested this summer that many aborted fetuses might have voted Republican had they been born.

Upon further reflection, he still insists it's a no-brainer.

"What we've seen in our state is that Republicans are more pro-life than Democrats. Let's hypothetically ask an unborn child: 'Here's the Republican position on life, here's the Democrat. If you're born, which way would you vote?'" Smitherman told The Associated Press in a recent interview.

"I think they vote Republican," he added. "To me it was pretty simple."

Speculating about fetal voting habits was one of several issues that thrust Smitherman, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission and former head of the Public Utility Commission, into the spotlight lately.

He also retweeted a list of U.S. Senate Republicans who voted for an ultimately unsuccessful federal gun control bill next to the word "Treason" and a noose, and decried criticism of a group with ties to white supremacists known as "Crusaders for Yahweh." Then there was his suggestion that Texas was well-positioned to survive on its own should the U.S. government collapse.

But the former investment banker shrugged off suggestions he's running to the right, attempting to impress a conservative base that will likely decide the Republican primary in March: "I'm not trying to get anywhere that I'm not already comfortable being."

Popular Republican Attorney General Greg Abbott is running for governor, but Smitherman is facing a fight for his party's nomination with state Sen. Ken Paxton and state Rep. Dan Branch.

The influential Texas Right to Life PAC has endorsed both Smitherman and Paxton. Still, Sarah Crawford, political associate for the group, said officials were especially impressed by the Aug. 15 speech Smitherman gave to top Texas Right to Life officials, when he suggested that the U.S. Supreme Court's decision on Roe v. Wade had seen 82.5 million would-be Americans lost to abortion. "I also suspect that many of them that were not born would have voted Republican," he said in the speech.

"He has been very open about his passion for life," Crawford said of Smitherman.

On other headline-grabbing matters, Smitherman said he issued the retweet without seeing the noose. He said his point about Texas surviving the collapse of the federal government was that the state has its own power grid that's not connected to other states and its own supply of oil and natural gas.

The Crusaders for Yahweh brouhaha grew out of a letter he wrote to his then 15-year-old daughter's teacher, objecting to supplemental materials produced by the Southern Poverty Law Center being used as the class read "To Kill a Mockingbird."

Smitherman said he was angered by the center's past characterization of conservative groups like Texas Eagle Forum and the Family Research Council as extremist, but didn't know about Crusaders for Yahweh's racist associations when he similarly defended that group.

"I clearly don't support anything that's racial or advocates white supremacy or brown supremacy or any racial supremacy," he said.

Gov. Rick Perry appointed Smitherman to the Public Utility Commission in 2004 and he became its chairman three years later. In 2011, the governor named him to the Railroad Commission, which oversees oil and natural gas licensing. Smitherman won re-election to the commission in 2012, making him the only Republican attorney general candidate to win a statewide race.

Smitherman said he hopes voters will focus on his experience. He's a former prosecutor in Harris County, which includes his native Houston, and helped issue more state oil and natural gas drilling permits this year than any year since 1985.

At the Public Utility Commission, Smitherman said he helped state electric rates fall to some of the lowest in the country, while also returning over $100 million appropriated by the Legislature back to the state unspent. Smitherman said he was able to trim the utility commission budget through job consolidation — and that similar downsizing could be in order for the small army of state lawyers in the attorney general's office.

"With 4,200 people and a half-a-billion-dollar budget, I've always found that there's room for improvement," he said.

Smitherman promises to continue Abbott's crowning achievement as attorney general, filing 30 lawsuits against the federal government since President Obama took office.

Barry Smitherman, left, who at the time was running for the Railroad Commission of Texas, talks to Joy Ellinger, Taylor County GOP chairwoman, after a luncheon at Fairway Oaks Country Club in Abilene on July 23, 2012. Texas attorney general hopeful Smitherman turned some heads when he suggested this summer that many aborted fetuses might have voted Republican had they been born.

Abbott, Davis register to run

AUSTIN — Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott and state Sen. Wendy Davis have formally registered their candidacies for their parties' nominations for governor in next year's primaries.

Abbott filed at the Texas Republican Party headquarters in Austin on Saturday after participating in campaign rally. The Democrat Davis filed Saturday at an Internet shipping company headquarters in Austin.

The two seek to succeed Republican Gov. Rick Perry, who isn't seeking re-election.

Abbott is the most lushly financed candidate in the Republican field for governor that also includes former Texas party leader Tom Pauken. Abbott cites his efforts to fight government expansion as his campaign's centerpiece.

Davis said she, too, is making job creation the focus of her campaign by promoting medical and research science, technology, oil and gas production and education.

We were asked a few weeks ago if the people we helped every paid us back. While the person who asked the question knew that we never asked for remuneration, he wondered if people ever tried to "return the favor."

While at the time the question caught us off guard, and while we knew that yes, the people we helped did oftentimes try to return the help, the question caused us to pay more careful attention to the actual everyday workings of Helping Hands.

We wrote several weeks ago of the man to whom we had given boxes of food. The man shared his food with another man in need. Over the years he developed a friendship with the man, and when he finally came into some money, he not only took care of his friend financially, but he donated several checks to Helping Hands in return for the help he had received from us several years ago. The monetary donations far outweighed anything we had done for him.

We oftentimes receive donations in the mail from people with simple notes such as: "You helped me when I was down and out." "You saved me, and now I would like to do what I can to help someone else." The checks or money enclosed may range from a few dollars to a few hundred. Each penny received is a tremendous blessing to us because we know that it came to us from someone from whom that money was precious.

Every day that our store is open we receive unsolicited donations. While we may charge $2 for an item, we are oftentimes given $5 or even more. The comment is always "you helped me when I was in need, and I want to do what I can to help someone else;" "you do such good work; let me help you do more;" or just "give it to help someone out." Those donations amount to many, many dollars each day.

Still other people use our thrift store as a means of helping the poor. They know that we are an all-volunteer organization and that all of the money we take in goes to alleviate the needs of the poor. One wonderful man each year will come to our store, buy an item for which we normally charge $1. He hands us a check for $1,000 and tell us to keep the change. With a wink and a smile he tells us that he is sure we can find a good way to use it.

We are both blessed and humbled because in all of those cases the money was never solicited. Yes, the people we help, and our customers all help us to pay it forward, as much as they are capable of doing so. And for those who cannot, there are a multitude of people in our wonderful city who watch over the poor every day. Those people are you, who help us care for them through your generous donations.

What a special ministry we have at Helping Hands! We cannot help but know that God's gentle, loving arms are embracing us as we seek to care for His most favored ones. And those arms embrace us through your support of Helping Hands. Thank you so very, very much!

The vision of the Midland Chamber of Commerce is to "Create the Best Business Climate on the Planet!" To achieve this vision, we provide resources for our members to foster and promote business growth...resources like training and information, cost-saving benefit programs, advocacy and much more. Additionally, the Chamber manages the Midland Convention & Visitors Bureau (CVB), the Midland Visitors Center and Midland Center & Centennial Plaza. All four entities work together under one umbrella to improve the economy and quality of life for our community.

The CVB and the Midland Visitors Center serve as a hub for tourism commerce in our city. The mission of the CVB is to encourage economic growth by developing, promoting, enhancing and supporting Midland as a vibrant visitor destination... and as a site for conferences, festivals, sports events, reunions and much more. In the last 12 months, the CVB worked with more than 89 groups bringing nearly 120,000 visitors who spent more than $25 MILLION dollars in Midland's hotels, restaurants, retail stores and more! For every $1 the CVB receives in funding, $24.88 comes back to the city in direct visitor spending.

Midland Center & Centennial Plaza hosts hundreds of events from small and intimate to large and formal. With its downtown location, and combination of indoor and outdoor space, Midland Center & Centennial Plaza is a perfect venue for all types of events - hosting festivals, conventions, corporate trade shows, banquets, receptions...even MMA matches! Center Staff collaborate with the CVB to provide exceptional service to event promoters/planners - generating an economic boon for Midland.

Legless cyclist rides for Mexican asylum seekers

Associated Press

EL PASO — Carlos Gutierrez passed out as the large blade cut through his legs — punishment for his refusal to pay a Mexican gang extortion fees from his successful catering business in northern Mexico.

Four men had forced him into the back of his vehicle at a local park before slicing just under his knees. He spent two weeks in critical condition and sought asylum in Texas as soon as he was able.

Now, facing long odds on getting approval to stay in the U.S., Gutierrez has been staging an unusual demonstration to call attention to his plight and to the thousands of other Mexicans who seek asylum in the U.S. each year from drug cartel violence, with little success. Gutierrez has been riding his bicycle through Texas using his prosthetic legs, talking to everyone he meets.

"If someone from Cuba or from Venezuela can get asylum, why not someone from Mexico?" said Gutierrez, who spent nearly two weeks on his 800-mile bicycle trek from El Paso to Central Texas.

U.S. law allows asylum for those who have credible fear of persecution based on their race, religion, national origin, political status or membership in a particular social group.

Associated Press

Cyclist Carlos Gutierrez, a double amputee, center, gets a hug from a supporter during a stop at the Mexican Consulate on Thursday in San Antonio. Gutierrez, a Mexican asylum seeker who fled to the U.S. after extortionists cut his legs off for not paying the extortion fees, is riding his bike from El Paso to Austin to raise awareness on the situation of political asylum seekers.

But Mexican asylum seekers have struggled to convince U.S. courts they fit in any of these categories, with approval rates running 1 to 2 percent. By contrast, more than a fourth of immigrants from other Latin American countries such as Colombia and Venezuela were granted asylum last year. Many can cite ethnic or political grounds.

Since he hopped on his bicycle in El Paso on Oct. 28, Gutierrez has been making his case for a change in the system. His journey ended Saturday in Austin.

Along the way townspeople came out from shops and houses to wave and talk with him during rest stops. The 35-year-old endured rain, strong winds, flat tires and fatigue. On the fifth day, a prosthetic specialist met him to adjust his legs because he was bruising and blistering.

"There were times when we thought it'd be best to have him rest, to drive him to the next town to let his legs recover, but he'd say, 'No,'" said Jaqueline Armendariz, a member of the support team for the ride to Austin. "He has a mission."

Gutierrez said he never considered quitting.

It doesn't matter, he said, "how grave your wound was. What matters is that you get up. I have no legs, but I am on my feet."

The U.S. Executive Office for Immigration Review did not specifically comment on Gutierrez's case. However, immigration judges have acknowledged in court that asylum cases based on fear of crime or violence are difficult to make.

"I believe everything you just told me," immigration Judge Stephen Ruhle told a Mexican applicant at a recent hearing in which the man described being targeted by corrupt police officers for extortion money. "But asylum is not applicable to cases like yours."

Some scholars have argued that many applicants should qualify under a looser definition of "social group." A 2010 report by the United Nations' High Commissioner for Refugees said people who, on principle, refuse to pay extortion could be considered a group.

Other experts said the threats to individuals have evolved since asylum categories were defined in treaties after World War II.

"Now, people are fleeing different forms of persecution," said Karen Musalo, director of the Center for Gender and Refugee Studies at the University of California. "There are women fleeing from domestic violence, genital mutilation or honor killings. There are people fleeing from drug cartels and gangs."

But others are skeptical. About 9,200 Mexicans sought asylum last year, up from 3,560 in 2008. The increase has prompted some lawmakers to suggest that immigrants are using the asylum system as a backdoor way to stay into the U.S. Applicants often wait more than two years for their court date.

All eyes focus on Mexican energy reform

By Lynn Brezosky
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — There may be fisticuffs over the form it will take, but there's consensus among leaders in Mexico that opening oil and gas production to foreign investment is crucial to growing the economy, that nation's secretary of economy said during a San Antonio visit Thursday.

"To me, it's very clear that the future of Mexican manufacturing depends on the access of sufficient cost-effective energy," Ildefonso Guajardo Villarreal said. "Today, Mexico has to import 40 percent of the (natural) gas we have to use in the industrial sector. We were not able to invest enough to produce our own gas. And we have plenty of gas in the underground."

Proximity alone has Texas' energy industry leaders eying opportunities to invest in what remain largely untapped mineral resources.

The booming Eagle Ford Shale may be even more abundant in northern Mexico, though there's already debate over the enormous investment costs and potential effects on the environment.

Guajardo, appointed secretary of the economy by President Enrique Peña Nieto last Dec. 1, was in town to meet privately with business leaders and Mayor Julián Castro, and to address the Association of Mexican Entrepreneurs. His visit coincided with a Border Energy Forum attended by U.S. and Mexican energy sector leaders.

Texas companies are watching closely, but interest in Peña Nieto's efforts to open Mexico's energy industry to foreign investment is global.

Petróleos Mexicanos, or Pemex, is the nationally owned oil and gas company and a historic source of Mexican pride and identity.

Pemex, however, hasn't kept up with the times. Its infrastructure is outdated, and public coffers can't support the sort of investment needed to mine shale plays or drill beneath deep waters.

Funds are lacking even for a pipeline to import gas directly from the United States, Guajardo noted.

Foreign companies' hopes, meanwhile, are piqued by recent proposals by the National Action Party (PAN) to allow for production-sharing agreements that are less understood than profit-sharing agreements.

Mexican industry experts at the energy forum in San Antonio were confident Mexico's Congress would pass energy reform in the next few weeks.

"Depending on what kind of amendments to the constitution take place, that will impact the opportunities that our clients will have," said John Dorsey, an Austin-based attorney who practices international law.

In profit-sharing arrangements, companies would contract with Pemex to explore and produce oil and gas, and receive a percentage of the profits.

Production-sharing contracts would give an oil firm the right to explore and develop the field and reap profits from the oil.

"It would receive payment in barrels of oil vs. payment of profit after the barrels of oil are sold," he said.

Dallas Parker, a Houston attorney who specializes in oil and gas law, said the production-sharing model has a "much clearer meaning and much brighter image in the global industry.

"These reforms are being watched closely all over the world," Parker said.

Guajardo told the San Antonio Express-News it's the profit-sharing model that's still on the forefront, but politics can bring about last-minute surprises.

"We know that the position with PAN is a much more aggressive one, but so far what is on the table stays where it is right now," he said.

He said Peña Nieto, a member of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), is under pressure for reforms to happen while in his first year in office, and has been clear on his basics for energy reform.

"I think what the people are demanding is that the oil belongs to the Mexicans," he said. "What the people want is that this abundance is eventually exploited rationally, transparently, and is producing jobs and opportunities."

Luminant suspends its bid to expand nuclear power plant

Associated Press

DALLAS — The owner of a North Texas nuclear power plant has tabled its request for federal permission to expand.

Dallas-based Luminant Generation had asked the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission for a license to double the number of nuclear reactors at its Comanche Peak plant from two to four.

However, in a letter to the NRC on Friday, Luminant said its Japanese-based reactor partner had decided to focus on restoring nuclear power in Japan after the 2011 earthquake and tsunami led to a disaster at the Fukushima nuclear power plant.

Mitsubishi Heavy Industries "has informed us that they will materially slow the development of their design control document for their new reactor design (for Comanche Peak) by several years. In addition, both (Mitsubishi) and Luminant understand the current economic reality of low Texas power prices driven in large part by the boom in natural gas," Luminant said in a corporate statement.

That boom, ignited by the use of hydraulic fracturing to release abundant natural gas resources in North Texas. Natural gas is used to fire the boilers of numerous electric power generating plants.

"Currently, it's just not competitive with gas," Ross Baldick, University of Texas engineering professor, told The Dallas Morning News. "Nuclear's capital costs are so high you can't win on it."

Also in the background is Dallas-based corporate parent Energy Future Holdings' flirtation with bankruptcy.

Luminant is keeping its application on file with the NRC, though.

"Luminant will continue to support nuclear power as part of the solution to Texas electric reliability and re-evaluate this decision as conditions change," according to the company statement.

The plant is situated about 40 miles southwest of Fort Worth near the town of Glen Rose. Its two nuclear reactors have the capacity to generate 2,300 megawatts of electric power — enough to power about 1.15 million homes in normal conditions and 460,000 homes in periods of peak demand, according to the company. The plans to add two more reactors would have lifted the plant's generating capacity to 5,700 megawatts.

The project drew opposition from environmental groups, which were heartened by Luminant's decision to place the expansion on hold.

Tom "Smitty" Smith, Texas director for Ralph Nader's watchdog group Public Citizen, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram he had suspected that Energy Future Holdings has been keeping the Comanche Peak expansion application alive because "they would be valuable assets in bankruptcy."

"This stunning decision shows how little bankers on Wall Street value nuclear power," he said.

Official: Trinity, Edwards aquifers in good shape

Associated Press

TEMPLE — Fresh water will flow from the Trinity and Edwards aquifers in Central Texas for the next 50 years if area residents continue to manage their consumption habits and at least intermittent rain falls, an aquifer official says.

Well owners in the district have responded well to conservation efforts during the recent drought and the spring flow for the Edwards Aquifer is the highest it's been in three years, said Dirk Aaron, general manager of the Clearwater Underground Water Conservation District.

The Belton-based district manages the groundwater in Bell County in Central Texas, the Temple Daily Telegram reported.

The Trinity Aquifer is one of the state's most extensive and heavily used underground water resources. It refills more slowly than the Edwards Aquifer and its water circulates more slowly. Both are replenished by rain and snow.

However, evidence increasingly shows the adjacent aquifers are linked more closely than previously suspected, Aaron said.

FROM WIRE REPORTS

ALBUQUERQUE

Interstate standoff ends after several hours

Traffic is flowing again through Albuquerque's main interstate interchange following an hourslong standoff with a hit-and-run suspect.

Officer Simon Drobik said the standoff ended around 5 a.m. Saturday when the suspect was taken into custody. He said the man, 37-year-old Jason Kerns, was transported to the VA Medical Center for a psychiatric evaluation.

Police closed the I-25/I-40 flyover around 8 p.m. Friday when Kerns refused to surrender after being stopped in connection with an earlier hit-and-run accident.

In 2005, Kerns, a former Marine sharpshooter, was accused of shooting at a sheriff's helicopter. The charges were dropped when bullet casings from the crash site didn't match his rifle.

His family followed with a lawsuit against the county and others, alleging authorities falsified information against him and withheld evidence that could have exonerated him.

LOS LUNAS

School district rescinds $24M contract

The Los Lunas school district has rescinded a $24 million contract from an out-of-state construction company after learning the firm paid an entry fee for one of the school's bid evaluators to enter a shooting competition.

Another bidder reported seeing the school district's construction supervisor, Antonio Sedillo, participating with a team from McCarthy Building Cos. at a skeet shooting match in Albuquerque, the Albuquerque Journal reported in a story published Saturday.

School Superintendent Bernard Saiz told the newspaper it was a "clear violation" of procurement rules.

Saiz said Sedillo was a member of the district's team that was evaluating competitive bid proposals for the second phase of work on a new high school. The shooting competition was held after the bids came in but before a decision was made on which company to hire.

Sedillo has been placed on administrative leave with pay and is expected to face discipline.

The district will put the project out to bid again, Saiz said.

Bo Calbert, president of McCarthy's Southwest Division, said the company plans to resubmit a bid for the contract.

"McCarthy NM has the utmost respect for the Los Lunas District's RFP process and believes its selection of our team was based wholly on the professional standards and qualifications that they seek," Calbert said in an email. "It's disappointing that the district is in a position where the students and community may be impacted because of this appeal."

McCarthy won an $18 million contract for the first phase of the project last year. The company has headed the construction of several major public and private projects in the state, such as the Sandia Hotel at Sandia Resort and Casino and the Presbyterian Rust Medical Center in Rio Rancho.

Saiz said there's no indication McCarthy's first-place score in the latest project was in any way linked to Sedillo's participation in the shooting match.

"But we want to ensure to the public that we are transparent and there has been no bias, and that's why we are putting a new RFP out on the street with a new scoring committee," he said.

Others who submitted proposals were Jaynes Corp., Gerald Martin Construction and Bradbury Stamm Construction.

McCarthy made headlines last year after state tax officials attempted to revoke the company's in-state bidding preference certification for public works jobs. The company, based in St. Louis, has an office in Albuquerque.

The Taxation and Revenue Department said it erroneously granted the certification in June 2012, but the company appealed and won the right to continue to receive a 5 percent bidding preference.

LOS LUNAS

Senator takes on prescription drug abuse

U.S. Sen. Tom Udall says steps need to be taken in New Mexico and across the country to curb escalating problems stemming from the abuse and trafficking of prescription drugs.

The New Mexico Democrat met Friday in Los Lunas with medical experts and law enforcement to discuss their current strategies and the challenges they still face in tackling the problems.

Udall also unveiled legislation aimed at preventing prescription drug abuse and improving treatment options.

He said New Mexico has one of the highest drug overdose rates in the nation, with 40 percent of those overdoses caused primarily by prescription drugs.

"Prescription drug abuse is on the rise, and it's leading to addiction and death. More people die now from prescription drugs like oxycodone, morphine and methadone than from illicit drugs like heroin and cocaine," Udall said. "With this shift, the drug epidemic has moved from the streets to our medicine cabinets and — all too often — into the hands of our children."

Tech struggling to find answers after 3rd straight loss

By Oscar LeRoy
oleroy@mrt.com

LUBBOCK — The Texas Tech football team knew what Kansas State was going to do on Saturday and Kansas State went and did it anyway.

The Wildcats came in with a good rushing attack and they used that to their advantage in a 49-26 blowout of the No. 25 Red Raiders in the final home game of the season at Jones AT&T Stadium.

Kansas State (5-4, 3-3 in Big 12), which won its third straight, rushed for 291 of their 367 total yards and were led by John Hubert's 157 yards and one touchdown. Backup quarterback Daniel Sams added 81 yards rushing and two TDs and starting quarterback Jake Waters added two rushing touchdowns against the reeling Red Raiders (7-3, 4-3), who lost their third straight.

This loss seemed like a hard one to take for first-year Tech coach Kliff Kingsbury, who is in search of answers that probably aren't there for his young football team.

"This one more than the others we knew what they were going to do and they came right at us and we couldn't stop it, and didn't have answers," Kingsbury said. "We've got to evaluate personnel, evaluate scheme and try to finish out this season on the right foot. We're playing another great rushing team next week, so we've got to come up with answers."

It certainly doesn't get much easier for Texas Tech in the coming weeks as the Red Raiders face highly-potent Baylor next week in Arlington and then have a date with Texas in Austin on Thanksgiving. And both of those teams run the ball very well.

All Kansas State and veteran head coach Bill Snyder had to do was watch what Oklahoma and Oklahoma State did with their rushing attack

There's an unwritten rule for coaches that says, "Never return to coach at your alma mater."

Apparently that advice doesn't resonate with Chris Packer and Charles Tatum.

Packer and Tatum are entering their first years as head boys basketball coaches for Midland ISD and each are doing so at their respective alma mater. Packer is taking over the Lee program after spending the last two years as a varsity assistant for the Rebels, while Tatum is returning to Midland High after spending the last two years as the head boys basketball coach at Trinity.

Both coaches are going to learn firsthand what it's like being the head coach of a program they once played for as teenagers.

"It's full circle," Packer said. "Not a lot of guys can say they played for a program, was assistant coach and now head coach. I didn't have anything to do with that. I'm just blessed by everyone giving me the opportunity."

"It's been amazing," Tatum said. "It's been fun at times, troublesome at times — the experience I've expected it to be."

Tatum is nothing short of a legend at Midland High. He was an integral piece of the Bulldogs' 1998 state championship team. His name — albeit misspelled as "Charlse" — is listed on the banner commemorating that team hanging into the MHS gymnasium.

The significance of Tatum's achievements aren't lost on his players, either.

"He's like a role model to me," sophomore guard Shawn Rivers said. "I'm playing for one of my role models that came from

Cowboys, Saints aim to keep pursuers at bay

NEW ORLEANS — The New Orleans Saints have been wrestling with a bout of inconsistency lately.

The Dallas Cowboys can relate.

As they head into an eagerly anticipated matchup on Sunday night, the Saints (6-2) and Cowboys (5-4) have little margin for error if they want to maintain tenuous perches atop their divisions.

The game

Sunday Morning Line

LEN HAYWARD

lhayward@mrt.com

This and that as it seems like the road goes on forever these days:

■ Friday night was one of those nights in District 2-5A that would've been cool to watch from the outside looking in, especially on a computer.

Covering Lee's game on Friday was certainly interesting, but in the era of social being able to keep track of all three of the games with playoff implications would've been fun. It would have been fun to see the constant reaction on Twitter and Facebook.

Odessa High's come-from-behind victory against Amarillo Tascosa set the tone for the rest of the night. That win, I'm sure, took some air out of Midland High after seeing that. But, then later in the night the Bulldogs ruined Abilene High's playoff chances with a thrilling victory.

And Odessa Permian had another thriller against Lubbock Coronado.

I will say that four teams to the playoffs waters things down, but to have that kind of excitement on the final day of the season is one of the few reasons taking that many teams makes some sense.

Those four teams would've been playing for pride in the years of two or even three teams on the final night of the season. But since they were all still in it, that made it that much more exciting.

It's a reason that high school football is still one of the best things going.

■ I was a bit skeptical of Baylor this year because of coach Art Briles' approach to defense during his time as a head coach. But after Thursday night's blistering of Oklahoma, it seems that the Bears are playing enough defense to give their offense a chance to score all those points.

And the coolest part is seeing Midland High grad Antwan Goodley be a part of that as well.

Baylor still has some big tests ahead, but the Bears passed a major exam on Thursday night and have put themselves in line for a Big 12 title. It's amazing how far that program has come under Briles' guidance.

■ Meanwhile, in Lubbock, coach Kliff Kingsbury may be wondering what in the world is going on. Three weeks ago, Tech fans were on top of the world with a team ranked in the top 10 in the country.

Now, reality has set in. Saturday's response was not likely what Kingsbury wanted to see, and he will be looking for a better one heading to Jerry World to take on Baylor next Saturday.

This is the first major test for Kingsbury during his young head coaching career, and we will see how he handles it.

■ I heard college basketball started this week.

■ Today, the legendary John Force will complete a National Hot Rod Association season with his 16th Funny Car championship this weekend in Pomona, Calif. Few people outside of the racing world know who Force is, and if they do they think he's a brash, loud talker.

But he is quite possibly one of the best racers to ever wear a racing suit in North America, whether he's going straight or turning. Force is 64 years old and still winning races and championships, in a sport that is akin to driving a car with a bomb in front of him down the track each race.

He's survived major wrecks to come back and win again. Frankly, what he's done and is still doing is amazing. Yes, he's a great quote, but he's also one of the most respected individuals in all of auto racing.

■ And finally, I think I need to get Todd Howey an updated zip code book.

Kruschke helps Lady Chaps top Baton Rouge CC

From staff reports

LUFKIN — Catherine Kruschke scored 19 points and Diamalises Rivera added 18 as the Midland College women's basketball team defeated Baton Rouge Community College, 69-61, on Saturday at the Angelina College Classic.

The two teams were tied at the half, but the Lady Chaps (5-1) used a second-half surge to pick up the victory. Midland College finished 2-1 at the classic this weekend.

"Quite honestly, this weekend I think we had a lot of offensive struggles, mostly just due to a lack of executing and just not reading things properly," Midland College coach Ron Jones said. "We are happy to get our two wins, but we've got a lot of work to do on the offensive end."

Ellyn Avery added 13 points, including a team-high three 3-pointers.

Midland College will hit the road against this week as they will take on Central Arizona at 6:30 p.m. (CST) Thursday in the first day of a tournament at the College of Southern Idaho.

SLATON 46 GREENWOOD 38

Greenwood could never quite overcome a slow start against Slaton on Saturday, resulting in a 46-38 loss for the Rangerettes.

Slaton jumped out to a 16-6 advantage in the first period only to see Greenwood cut it to 27-22 by halftime. But that's as close as Greenwood could get.

The Rangerettes were led by junior Amanda Bell's 14 points. They played the game without senior Morgan McKee — one of their top players — who sat out with a bruise on her knee.

Greenwood coach Quint Anthony said McKee didn't play as a precaution and should be available Tuesday when the Rangerettes host Class 5A Odessa Permian.

SLATON 46, GREENWOOD 38

Slaton — McCord 21, Heinrich 3, Luera 4, Maxwell 11, Flores 1, Pate 6

Greenwood (0-2) — Kali Zimmerman 4, Layne Banks 2, Amanda Bell 14, Oriana Ortiz 7, Cylie Mebane 2, Grace Sunderland 9

Slaton	16	11	12	7—46

Local swimmers 'change it up' at MISD Invitational

By Len Hayward
lhayward@mrt.com

This weekend's Midland Invitational wasn't as much about winning as it was continuing to train for the bigger meets scheduled for later in the season early next year.

That's why a number of swimmers for both Lee and Midland High went out of their comfort zones to swim different events on Saturday at the Mabee Aquatic Center. Midland High sophomore Barak Bane, a regional qualifier a year ago in the 50-yard freestyle and 100 freestyle last season, didn't swim his typical events on Saturday.

Instead he swam the 200 freestyle and 100 butterfly, and won both events.

"You've got to change it up sometimes," Bane said. "My club coach was getting on my back about that, and he was having some fun with me. I decided to swim some different events and did pretty well."

Midland ISD swimming and diving coach Jennifer Mangum said it was the plan this week to have some swimmers change up events. Part of it is to change the monotony of training for the same event, and also to help with overall training during the season.

Mangum was more than pleased with how well it went.

"We did that with some of our club kids and some of our varsity, and it was a chance to swim different events," Mangum said. "When you swim the same event week after week after week, sometimes they get discouraged. We had some major time drops even with swimming an off event. It's been really good to see."

Midland High picked up a pair of victories in girls relays with the same four swimmers.

Blythe Lary, Kile Carriger, Jordin Newman and Cassidy Hale combined to win the 200 medley relay with a time of 1:58.88, which was nearly eight seconds better than San Angelo Central.

The quartet then combined to win the 400 freestyle relay with a time of 3:58.02, winning that event by nearly six seconds.

Lee's Jennifer Sites won the girls 200 freestyle, winning by more than three seconds, and Rebel teammate Lexi Moreno won the girls 100 freestyle. Lee's Keely Martin also won the 500 freestyle.

Midland High's Cassidy Hale won the 100 backstroke with a time of 1:07.92, and Carriger, a freshman, won the 50 freestyle with a time of 26.28.

Trinity's Claire Abijay won a pair of events on Saturday. Abijay won the girls 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:26.92, and then won the 100 butterfly with a time of 1:01.88.

On the boys side, Trinity's Nathan Richter won the 200 individual medley and Midland Christian's Kyle Martin won the boys 500 freestyle, timing in at 5:19.97. Midland High's Zach Breeding won the 100 breaststroke with a time of 1:05.94, edging out San Angelo Central's Carson Kent at the finish.

Without Kubiak, Texans look to end 6-game skid

Bob Baum
Associated Press

GLENDALE, Ariz. — Bruce Arians knows what it's like to be an interim head coach. Now he gets a chance to go against one.

The Houston Texans will have Wade Phillips at the interim helm Sunday when they face Arizona in an attempt to end a six-game losing streak. Phillips replaces Gary Kubiak, who collapsed on the sidelines of last Sunday night's game against the Indianapolis Colts and was hospitalized for what was described as a "mini-stroke."

Arians, in his first season as head coach of the Cardinals, took over as interim coach of the Colts a year ago and led the team to a 9-3 record, a performance that earned him coach of the year honors and propelled him into the top job with the Cardinals. Now Phillips, a former head coach in Dallas and Kubiak's defensive coordinator, must try to end a skid that has tied a franchise record. The Texans (2-6) never have lost seven in a row.

"It was certainly shocking what happened in the ball game and the aftermath of that," Phillips said. "We're certainly glad that he's getting better. We've had kind of an upside down season. Generally, things haven't been going our way very well. This was another example of that."

The Cardinals (4-4) had a bye week after a 27-13 victory at home over Atlanta, a team that, like Houston, was supposed to be a lot better than it has been. The Texans, despite their poor record, enter the game first in the NFL in defense and eighth in offense.

"They're extremely well-coached and they're loaded with talent," Arians said. "How they are 2-6 is beyond me."

Here are five things to watch when the Texans play the Cardinals.

TEXANS MOOD: It's difficult to judge how the coaching situation will affect the Houston players, who were having a difficult season before their coach collapsed during a nationally televised game. The Texans say they have taken developments in stride. "It's just part of being a professional," defensive end J.J. Watt said. "You're dealt certain types of adversity or dealt certain hands. You just have to go out there and play. You have to deal with the situations that come your way. And right now we're dealing with a situation where Wade (Phillips) is our interim head coach and he's a very knowledgeable guy and knows what he's doing. We're in good hands."

CARDINALS MOMENTUM: The Cardinals hope their week off doesn't stem the momentum from their victory over Atlanta. Quarterback Carson Palmer says the time off should be beneficial with no problem getting back to work. "It was great for the entire team to get off their feet for a little while," he said. "I know some guys went home to see family and friends and all that, but it just kind of gives you a chance to recharge." The time off gave wide receiver Larry Fitzgerald (hamstring) and running back Rashard Mendenhall (toe) a chance to heal.

HOUSTON'S OFFENSE: Kubiak called most of the plays, and now that duty falls to offensive coordinator Rick Dennison. Arians says that makes defensive preparation for the Cardinals more difficult. "Once you have a different play caller, that's a change," Arians said. "There are no tendencies. You throw that out the window. There's nothing we have on Rick Dennison other than a half of football (Sunday)." Dennison downplayed the chance of any significant change in what the Texans do. "It's pretty much the same," he said. "I just don't have anybody bouncing ideas off me and me bouncing ideas off them."

KEENUM IN CONTROL: Case Keenum will get his third straight start at quarterback for Houston.

In last weekend's 27-24 loss to Indianapolis, Keenum completed 20 of 34 passes for 350 yards with no interceptions. It included touchdown passes of 62, 41 and 5 yards to Andre Johnson.

Keenum's ability to get the ball downfield has been a big plus for Houston.

"We've had some great opportunities and they've kind of presented themselves in different situations as far as what coverages they're playing and we can attack certain areas," he said. "It's having guys like No. 80 (Johnson) and you feel good about putting the ball up and letting him make a play. He does it more often than not, so you kind of keep looking his way when it's crunch time."

CLASS OF '04: The Arizona Cardinals had one of their greatest draft classes in 2004 and four of those picks will be on the field Sunday. They are: Fitzgerald (first round), inside linebacker Karlos Dansby (second round), defensive tackle Darnell Dockett (third round) and, now playing for Houston, defensive end Antonio Smith (fifth round). All four played significant roles in Arizona's 2008 Super Bowl season.

COWBOYS

quarterback Drew Brees said. "We just didn't get the job done. That part is disappointing. And then you kind of look at the stretch ahead and it doesn't get easier. It is going to be extremely tough. It is almost like a new season begins."

The Cowboys stumbled to three losses in their first five games, but have won three of their past four — good enough to give Dallas a one-game lead over Philadelphia in the NFC East.

Cowboys quarterback Tony Romo's 2,553 yards passing through Week 9 ranks third in the NFC, and his chemistry with receiver Dez Bryant appears fine, regardless of any passionate exchanges they've had recently. Bryant is tied for third in the NFL in touchdowns receiving with eight.

However, Dallas' defense ranks 31st against the pass, never good recipe for slowing down a record-setter like Brees. In addition, the Saints are unbeaten in the Superdome. Then there's the subplot of Saints defensive coordinator Rob Ryan going against the club that fired him last season.

"It is going to be a tough scheme we are going against, a tough place to play, a tough offense on the other side," Romo said. "But that is what makes the game great."

Here are five things watch for when Dallas plays at New Orleans on Sunday night:

RYAN'S REVENGE: When Rob Ryan was fired by Dallas, Saints coach Sean Payton quickly took him off the market, hoping he could restore credibility to a New Orleans defense that yielded an NFL record 7,042 yards in 2012. This season, the Saints ranked ninth in yards allowed through last weekend, on pace to give up about 107 fewer yards per game. Saints defensive players say Ryan hasn't said much about his desire to deal his old employer a loss, not that they would blame him if he did.

RUN AGROUND: Both the Cowboys and Saints have struggled running the ball lately. New Orleans gained 41 yards on the ground last weekend and ranks 26th in rushing. The Cowboys ran the ball a franchise-low nine times for 36 yards in last week's win over Minnesota, even though DeMarco Murray returned after missing two games with a left knee injury. Dallas coach Jason Garrett and New Orleans coach Sean Payton both said this week that their teams need to run the ball more often.

DOME ADVANTAGE: The Saints have won 13 straight in the Superdome with Sean Payton in the building. They went 9-0 in the 2011 season, including playoffs. Payton was suspended in connection with the NFL's bounty probe for 2012, when the Saints went 4-4 at home. New Orleans has yet to lose in four home games this season. In addition, the Saints have won 11 straight in the dome at night, including playoffs. The last time New Orleans lost a night game in the dome was Dec. 19, 2009. The team that beat them was none other than Dallas.

AIR RAID: Dallas is already the first team in NFL history to allow four opposing QBs to pass for 400-plus yards in the same season. Brees is a good candidate to become the fifth. He has 10 career 400-yard games, all since joining the Saints in 2006.

D-LINE SHUFFLE: Cowboys defensive end DeMarcus Ware returned to practice this week after missing three games with a right thigh injury. Now starting defensive tackle Jason Hatcher has a neck injury hindering him. Fellow tackle Nick Hayden has a rib injury. The Cowboys have made 20 moves involving defensive linemen since final roster cuts in August.

LEE REBELS

Head coach: Chris Packer (first year at Lee)

Key players returning: G Anthony McCoy, F Jordan Williams, F Daniel Nelson

Key players lost: G Grant Coffman, F Talor Nunez

Top newcomers: G Canyon Atwood

Coach's quote: "It's going to be hard to replace coach (Mark) Coffman. He was one of the best, and I learned a lot from him. We're going to have a tough time replacing guys like Grant Coffman and Talor Nunez as well. But I think we've got a group of guys who bring different things to the table. I don't think we have one player who has the same skill set as another player and I think that's a good thing. It allows us to show a lot of different things. We've got to take it one day at a time and be positive. We have to understand the little things can make a difference. The little things can add up to some big things."

Notable: Packer spent the last two seasons as the Rebels varsity assistant under Mark Coffman, who resigned after 13 years with the program. Packer said his familiarity with the program and players should only benefit the team. ... The Rebels are a senior-laden team with eight seniors and two juniors listed on the varsity roster. Packer said he hopes that type of experience can help the Rebels, who finished last season on a high note, return to the postseason in 2013-14. ... Top returning players include Anthony McCoy, Jordan Williams and Daniel Nelson, who each gained valuable varsity experience a year ago. They're going to be asked to play bigger roles, particularly in terms of leadership.

MIDLAND HIGH BULLDOGS

Coach: Charles Tatum (First year at MHS)

2012-13 record: 6-28, 1-15 (9th) in District 2-5A

Key players returning: G Mazelle Justice, G Shawn Rivers, F Justin LeClear

Top newcomers: P Nate Rogers

Coach's quote: "It's going to take belief (to turn this around). Nothing works in sports if you don't believe first. We're starting to understand we can be a good team and I think that's what's been missing the last couple years. They haven't been a good team. There's been a bunch of talented individual players that can do some good, but until you come together as a team you're going to be limited. That's the lesson I'm trying to teach."

Notable: Tatum said he believes the team is headed in the right direction in being back in contention for the postseason after back-to-back seven-win seasons. ... The Bulldogs have plenty of returning experience as Jacob Makowsky was the lone starter lost from last season's team. Midland High should have a strong scoring presence thanks to senior guard Mazelle Justice, sophomore guard Shawn Rivers and junior forward Justin LeClear. ... The Bulldogs also had a big presence in the post transfer into the program as Nate Rogers made the move to Midland High from Midland Christian. Rogers is listed at 6-7 and was a productive player for MCS last season. ... Tatum isn't quite sure what to make of District 2-5A heading into this season and believes it might be wide open. He believes defending district champion Permian will be talented, but not invulnerable.

GREENWOOD RANGERS

Coach: Cliff Thompson (first year at Greenwood)

2012-13 record: 20-15, 7-3 (2nd) in District 4-3A

Key players returning: G Grant Franklin, G/F Josh Tuala, P Brandon Elliott

Key players lost: F Kam Williams, G Taylor Hollingsworth, P Jody Lively

Top newcomer: G Alex Montez

Coach's quote: "It's hard to tell what we've got right now because a lot of guys have been in football. But Grant Franklin is coming back from last year's team and we're going to rely on him a lot. I don't think it's any big secret to anyone who saw us play a year ago that he's a pretty good player. I think we're good enough to be competitive with everyone in our district. When you graduate the guys we did last year, it's tough. But if things go our way, we can compete for a district title. We've got to have a lot of guys step up and play some bigger roles this year."

Notable: Thompson comes to Greenwood after spending the last two seasons at District 4-3A foe Big Spring, giving him plenty of experience coaching in the Rangers' district. He said that's allowed him to already have a scouting report on several district opponents where other new coaches wouldn't have had that luxury. ... Franklin is the only returning letterman who got significant playing time on last season's team, but Thompson hopes seniors Tuala and Elliott can play bigger roles and take some pressure off Franklin. ... Thompson is also excited about junior Montez, who he said put in a lot of work during the summer and has been impressive in limited workouts. ... Thompson admits Abilene Wylie will once again be the favorite in 4-3A after the Bulldogs went to the state tournament a year ago and returns a wealth of talent from that team. He said he thinks Greenwood can compete with the Bulldogs if they jell, though, and believes the Rangers can finish near the top of the district at least.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN MUSTANGS

Coach: Marks Lanham (second year at MCS)

2012-13 record: 18-15, 8-4 in TAPPS 1-4A

Key players returning: G Grant Little, G Mason McClendon, F Jarrod Koym, P Kaleb Warren

Key players lost: G Zach Gilbert, F Will Watson, G Reed Myers, P Nathan Rogers

Top newcomers: PG Daniel Venzant, P Luke McComick

Coach's quote: "I feel good about (this season), especially once football is over and we get all our players back from there. I'm looking for us to build on the success of last season. I think our potential again is to be up in the top of the district. Our goal is going to be to take that next step and win a district title. We have the physical talent, it's going to be the mental part that's big for us. There's been a mental block here against Lubbock Trinity. It's definitely going to be the mental part of the game that we have to overcome."

Notable: The Mustangs return plenty of talent from last year's squad that finished second in a competitive district. ... The athleticism in the backcourt is particularly compelling with sophomore Little and senior McClendon. Little was the team's leading scorer as a freshman, while McClendon led the Mustangs in 3-point shooting. Coach Lanham is also excited about freshman newcomer Daniel Venzant, who should start at point guard for the Mustangs and allow Little and McClendon to move without the ball. ... The Mustangs did suffer some significant losses from last year's team, though, including post Nathan Rogers, who transfered to Midland High. Lanham admits the Mustangs won't be able to replace Rogers' size, but does like the rebounding potential of juniors Warren and McComick to help inside. ... Lanham said he expects the Mustangs to contend for a district title, but said Lubbock Trinity and Grapevine Faith will be very competitive as well.

MIDLAND CLASSICAL KNIGHTS

Coach: Ron Miller

2012-13 record: 12-15, 2-4 (3rd) in TAPPS 1-3A

Key players returning: G John Stallings, G Garrett Sparks

Key players lost: F Haydon Rogers, F Kade Wilkins, F Harrison Haest

Top newcomer: Several sophomores

Coach's quote: "I feel like we got a pretty good young team. I feel like we've got one really good senior in John Stallings, who I think is a really good player and a good point guard in Garrett Sparks. Then we've got some good younger talent. We're going to depend on John's and Garrett's varsity experience quite a bit."

Notable: As far as MCA's regulars from last year are concerned, Stallings and Sparks are the main members of that cast remaining for this season. The team is made up of four seniors and the rest are underclassmen, meaning Stallings and Sparks, a sophomore himself, will be the focus of most of MCA's offensive possessions. ... Coach Ron Miller said the Knights will also depend highly on Daniel Snell, who is possibly the team's top defensive player, but is definitely one of the team's leaders both on and off the court. ... Miller wouldn't single out any of his new underclassmen on the team as a player that might stand out above the rest only to say, "We've got some good sophomore that really love basketball and do a good job." ... Miller said he believes the Knights can match up in the district just fine, but does admit defending TAPPS 3A state champion Lubbock Christian is probably the team to beat, but he expects Amarillo San Jacinto to also be a tough.

TRINITY CHARGERS

Coach: Jim Clark (first year at Trinity as boys coach

2012-13 record: 3-17, 0-6 (4th) in TAPPS 1-3A

Key players returning: F Ethan Samuels, G Vincent Baiano

Key players graduating: F Taylor Cory, F Zach Meyers, G Brett Womack

Top newcomer: P Peter Rodenko, G Jacyree Stubblefield

Coach's quote: "We should be pretty athletic. We don't have any real outstanding basketball players, but we have plenty of very good athletes who enjoy playing basketball and are coachable. Defense should be a real strength for us and we hope to create opportunities to score with our defense. We depended a lot on athleticism last year and we'll still depend on that this year."

Notable: After winning a TCAF state title two years ago, Trinity won three games in TAPPS 3A last season, including a winless stint in district play. Yet while the team was fairly young a year ago, the Chargers are even younger this season with no seniors on the roster. ... Jim Clark takes over the program after serving as the boys varsity assistant the last two years. Clark is replacing Charles Tatum, who took over the head job at Midland High. Clark was the Trinity girls basketball coach three seasons ago when the Lady Chargers won a TCAF state title. ... Junior Ethan Samuels and sophomore Vincent Baiano are the two returning with the most experience from last season. Baiano was an honorable mention all-district selection as a guard. ... Clark said the Chargers are going to benefit from a successful junior varsity team from last season. He spent last year coaching those players and are very familiar with them. He expects sophomore guard Jacyree Stubblefield to add some scoring punch, while sophomore post Peter Rodenko should help on the boards. ... Clark expects the Chargers to be more competitive in TAPPS 1-3A, but did say it is possibly the toughest TAPPS 3A district in the state.

Midland High."

One of Tatum's reservations heading into this season, though, is tempering the expectations of the supporters of the Midland High program. While he believes he has a talented team under his tutelage, he hopes everyone understands it's going to take time to rebuild this program back to the prominence it experienced in the 90s. After all, the Bulldogs have won just seven games in each of the last two seasons.

"The biggest challenge maybe is the perception of what my team (in high school) was is what this team is going to be," Tatum said. "Of course I would love for that to be the case, but their different kids and good at different things. That's what we're going to shoot for, but the expectations are a little too early. Give me a little time to get these boys in line.

"I want to take what we did in '98 and help these kids build their own legacy. Who I was to this school as a player hopefully can rub off on these kids so they'll want to make their own mark on this school."

Tatum and Packer, who is a 2000 graduate of Lee, played against each other in high school and have developed a strong friendship. Tatum says the way he and Packer have been able to come back to their alma maters to coach is just an example of this community taking care of its own.

"It shows how much Midland really embraces its own," Tatum said. "To have two coaches come back and coach at the schools we had so much pride in representing on the court just really shows the kind of support this community is capable of."

Whatever impact Tatum is having on the Bulldogs, Packer is having a similar influence at Lee.

"He knows our situation," senior forward Jordan Williams said of Packer. "He always talks to us about how nobody believes we can do anything and helps us with that chip on our shoulder and show people we can do bigger things. He's been in the same situation as us."

One situation that does differ at both programs than from when Tatum and Packer were playing was the perceived futility of both teams. But that's the true challenge both coaches must overcome.

McCoy throws 2 TD passes as Texas beats West Virginia

By John Raby
Associated Press

Longhorns	47
Mountaineers	40 (OT)

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Case McCoy threw a 2-yard touchdown pass in overtime and Texas linebacker Steve Edmond then intercepted West Virginia's Paul Millard in the end zone on fourth down to give the Longhorns a 47-40 win over the Mountaineers on Saturday night.

Texas (7-2, 6-0 Big 12) maintained sole possession of first place in the conference over No. 5 Baylor.

Charles Sims ran for 96 yards and three touchdowns for West Virginia (4-6, 2-5). The Mountaineers must now win both of their remaining games at Kansas and at home against Iowa State to become bowl eligible.

It marked the second-straight shootout involving the teams. West Virginia won last year 48-45 in Austin, Texas.

McCoy threw three TD passes after halftime, including the short toss to fullback Alex De La Torre on the Longhorns' overtime possession. It was the sophomore's first catch of the season.

Mario Alford then ran 20 yards on West Virginia's first play of overtime, but Millard, playing in place of the injured Clint Trickett, threw two straight incompletions before his soft pass ended up in Edmond's hands.

McCoy finished 27 of 49 for a season-high 283 yards. His 10-yard TD toss to Jackson Shipley put the Longhorns ahead 37-33 with 8:57 remaining in the game.

On third-and-7, Millard found Alford across the middle near midfield and Alford went the rest of the way untouched with 7:39 left for the Mountaineers' longest TD pass of the season. It also was Alford's first TD catch of the season.

The Longhorns sent the game into overtime tied at 40-40 on Anthony Fera's fourth field goal of the game, a 24-yarder with 13 seconds left in regulation.

Millard completed 16 of 32 passes for 259 yards. But Millard and Trickett were sacked six times and the Mountaineers had five turnovers. Trickett was sacked and left the game with an undisclosed injury late in the first quarter and didn't return.

TEXAS/BIG12ROUNDUP

FROM WIRE REPORTS

Big 12

TCU 21, IOWA 17

AMES, Iowa — Trevone Boykin scored on a 1-yard TD run with 38 seconds left and TCU rallied to beat Iowa State 21-17 on Saturday and snap a three-game losing streak.

Boykin ran for three touchdowns for the Horned Frogs (4-6, 2-5 Big 12), who remain in contention for possible bowl eligibility with two games left.

The Horned Frogs went 58 yards in just 1:56 — a drive keyed by a 22-yard run from Aaron Green on 4th-down-and-1 — and took a four-point lead on their only score of the second half.

Grant Rohach threw for 148 yards for Iowa State (1-8, 0-6), whose last-ditch effort ended near midfield. The Cyclones have lost six straight.

Casey Pachall threw for 245 yards for TCU.

NO. 15 OKLAHOMA STATE 42 KANSAS 6

STILLWATER, Okla. — Clint Chelf completed 19 of 37 passes for 265 yards and three touchdowns to lead No. 15 Oklahoma State to a 42-6 victory over Kansas Saturday.

Desmond Roland added 44 yards and a touchdown on 16 rushes for the Cowboys (8-1, 5-1 Big 12), who won their fifth straight game. Roland also had a 19-yard reception for a score early in the second quarter that gave OSU a 21-0 lead.

Montell Cozart threw for 58 yards while rushing for 55 on 18 carries for Kansas (2-7, 0-6), which lost its sixth in a row. Tony Pierson returned from a three-game absence due to a concussion and gained 87 yards on six rushes.

Oklahoma State jumped on top immediately when Justin Gilbert returned the opening kickoff 100 yards for a touchdown.

Texas

NO. 11 TEXAS A&M 51 MISSISSIPPI ST. 41

HOUSTON — Johnny Manziel threw for 446 yards and tied a career-high with five touchdown passes to lead No. 11 Texas A&M to a 51-41 win Saturday over Mississippi State in what could be the Heisman Trophy winners' last home game.

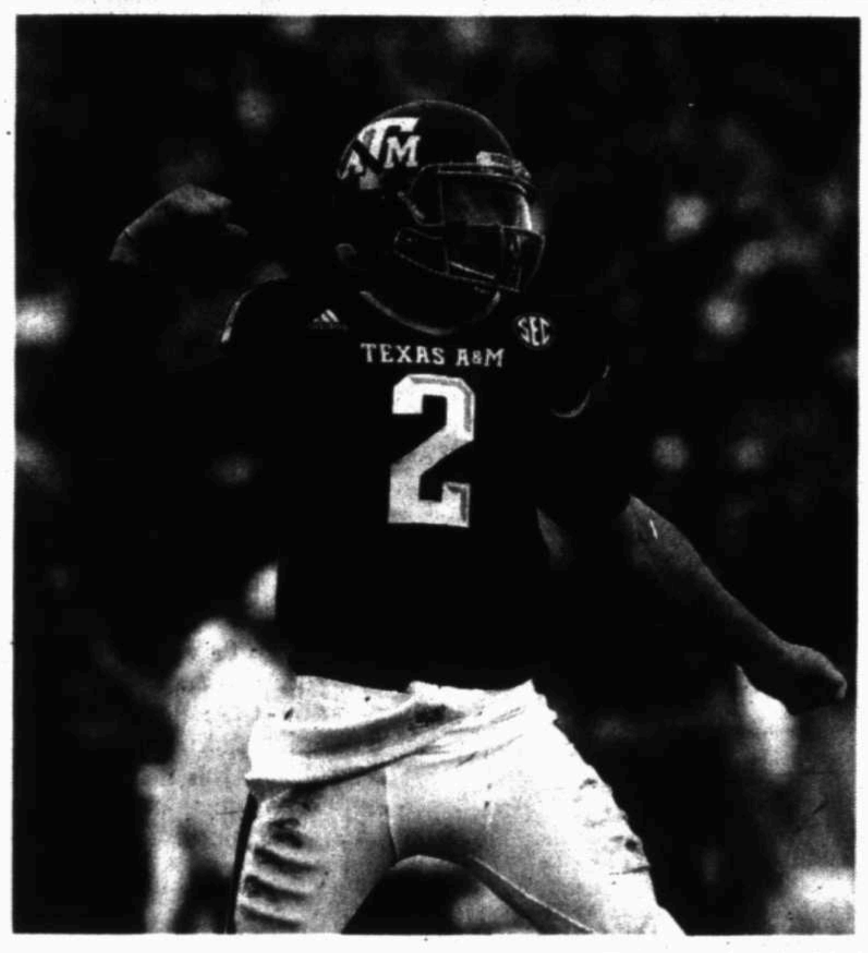
The crowd chanted "one more year" late in the game for Manziel, who is eligible for the draft after this season. Whether he comes back remains to be seen, but he went into the stands to celebrate with the student section when the game was over.

Mississippi State cut the lead to 10 points early in the fourth quarter, but Manziel threw his fifth touchdown pass to make it 44-27 for A&M (8-2, 4-2 Southeastern Conference). The defense grabbed an interception and Ben Malena's 2-yard TD run extended the lead to 51-27.

Dax Prescott threw for 149 yards and two scores and ran for 154 yards for Mississippi State (4-5, 1-4).

NO. 19 UCF 19 HOUSTON 14

ORLANDO, Fla. — William Stanback scored two touchdowns and No. 19 UCF held off a late Houston threat to win 19-14 on Saturday night and keep first place in the American Athletic Conference all to itself.



David J. Phillip/AP

Texas A&M quarterback Johnny Manziel celebrates after throwing a touchdown pass during the third quarter of Saturday's game against Mississippi State in College Station.

Storm Johnson added 127 yards rushing for UCF (7-1, 4-0), which has the inside track to the league's automatic BCS bid, with victories against the Cougars and Louisville.

The Cougars drove to the UCF 10 in the final minute, but came up empty on back-to-back passes from John O'Korn into the end zone. The first went off star receiver Deontay Greenberry's finger tips and the second sailed high.

O'Korn had a touchdown pass and two interceptions for the Cougars (7-2, 4-1).

The Knights had three giveaways and lost receiver Breshad Perriman to a targeting hit early in the fourth quarter, but rallied to preserve the win.

N. TEXAS 41 UTEP 7

DENTON — Brandin Byrd rushed for 202 yards and a pair of touchdowns as North Texas walloped UTEP 41-7 on Saturday.

The win keeps North Texas (7-3, 5-1 Conference USA) atop the C-USA West Division standings, a half-game ahead of Rice. The Mean Green defeated Rice a week ago.

Mean Green defense smothered UTEP (1-9, 0-5), blocking a punt and a field goal, tying the school record of eight sacks and allowing a season-low 184 yards of total offense.

North Texas piled up 471 yards of total offense, including 317 on the ground. Byrd scored TD runs of 2 and 82 yards and his 202-yard total is a career-best.

UTEP's Mack Leftwich, despite the eight sacks, completed 14 of 20 passes for 128 yards and a 22-yard TD to Jordan Leslie. Five North Texas defenders registered sacks, including Zach Orr who had a game-high 12 tackles.

CINCINNATI 28 SMU 25

CINCINNATI — Brendon Kay threw for a pair of touchdowns, and Cincinnati deprived the American Athletic Conference's top quarterback of another comeback on Saturday, holding on for a 28-25 victory over Southern Methodist.

Cincinnati (7-2, 4-1) got the lead behind Kay's accurate passing and a 17-play, 96-yard touchdown drive that took up most of the third quarter and made it 28-10.

SMU (3-5, 2-2) is known for comebacks behind quarterback Garrett Gilbert, who leads the nation in total yards. He had a pair of touchdown passes to Darius Joseph, the last with 3:27 remaining as the Mustangs got within 28-25.

Anthony McClung recovered the onside kick despite a hit to the head that drew a 15-yard penalty. Cincinnati ran out the clock with the help of a delay-of-game penalty on SMU, getting its fourth straight win.

Kay finished 27 of 32 for 299 yards. Gilbert was 38 of 47 for 403 yards.

UTSA 10 TULANE 7

SAN ANTONIO — Sean Ianno booted a 34-yard field goal with 14 seconds left as University of Texas San Antonio defeated Tulane 10-7 on Saturday.

UTSA (5-5, 4-2 Conference USA) struck in the third quarter when Brandon Armstrong broke a career-long 68-yard TD run on first down after a Tulane field goal miss and tied the game at 7-7.

Tulane (6-4, 4-2) had more first downs, more yards total offense and held the ball nearly twice as long as UTSA but was unable to reach the end zone after Olreans Darkwa's 9-yard run just before halftime. The seven points was the least allowed by the Roadrunners' defense this season. Steven Kurfehs led the defense with 11 tackles and forced a fumble.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY STATE 20 TEXAS SOUTHERN 17

ITTA BENA, Miss. — Julian Stafford returned the opening kickoff 97 yards for a touchdown and recorded 198 all-purpose yards as Mississippi Valley State topped Texas Southern 20-17 Saturday.

The two teams traded field goals early in the second quarter, bringing the score to 10-3 before Stafford struck again, hauling in a Patrick Ivy pass en route to a 62-yard touchdown catch and run.

Leading 17-3, MVSU (2-8, 2-6 Southwestern Athletic Conference) leaned on the defense to carry the team home for the win.

NORTHWESTERN STATE 37 LAMAR 28

NATCHITOCHES, La. — Zach Adkins threw two second-half touchdowns and Northwestern State beat Lamar 37-28 on Saturday.

Northwestern State (5-5, 2-3 Southland Conference) trailed 21-17 at the half but took a 23-21 lead with just over eight minutes remaining in the third quarter with a 26-yard touchdown pass from Adkins to Daniel Taylor.

MCNEESE STATE 69 STEPHEN F. AUSTIN 38

NACOGDOCHES — Diontae Spencer scored five touchdowns, including two receiving, one punt and two kickoff returns, to lead McNeese State to a 69-38 victory over Stephen F. Austin on Saturday night.

Spencer caught seven balls for 152 yards and had receiving TDs of 10 and 9 yards. Spencer returned two kickoffs in the first quarter — the first for 93 yards and the second for 87. He capped his scoring with a 35-yard punt return in the fourth.

SAM HOUSTON ST. 49 NICHOLLS ST. 24

HUNTSVILLE — Keshawn Hill and Brian Bell accounted for four touchdowns as Sam Houston State ran over Nicholls State 49-24 Saturday.

Hill had TD runs of 16 and 1 as the Bearkats (8-2, 4-1 Southland Conference) scored seven unanswered touchdowns. Bell, the Bearkats' quarterback, added a 45-yard touchdown run, and also threw a 56-yard TD pass to Torrance Williams.

EASTERN NM 40 MIDWESTERN STATE 21

BLACKWATER DRAW, N.M. — After an early exchange of punts, Eastern New Mexico to a 27-point lead lead over No. 12-ranked Midwestern State and never looked back, on the way to a 40-21 victory in a Lone Star Conference game Saturday at Grayhound stadium.

Junior running back E'lon Spight rushed for a season-high 90 yards and two touchdowns for the Hounds.

ANGELO STATE 49 A&M-KINGSVILLE

SAN ANGELO — Kyle Washington accounted for five touchdowns, including a career high four passing touchdowns, to lead Angelo State to a 49-28 victory over Texas A&M-Kingsville on Saturday at San Angelo Stadium.

The Rams (4-6, 2-4 LSC) beat Texas A&M-Kingsville (2-7, 0-6 LSC) for the first time since 2006. ASU outgained the Javelinas 442-388 with 232 yards coming on the ground.

FROM WIRE REPORTS

NO. 1 ALABAMA 38 NO. 10 LSU 17

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — AJ McCarron threw three touchdown passes, T.J. Yeldon ran for 133 yards and two scores and No. 1 Alabama overwhelmed No. 10 LSU 38-17 Saturday night.

The Crimson Tide (9-0, 6-0 Southeastern Conference) turned to power football to take control of a game that was tied early in the third quarter. Yeldon carried 18 times in the second half, 25 overall, after catching the game-winning touchdown pass in last season's meeting with the Tigers (7-3, 3-3).

NO. 3 FLORIDA STATE 59 WAKE FOREST 3

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Jameis Winston threw two touchdown passes, and Florida State tied a school record with six interceptions as it clinched ACC a championship game berth.

Nate Andrews took an interception 56 yards for a touchdown and Jalen Ramsey returned a fumble 23 yards for a score on consecutive plays.

NO. 7 AUBURN 55 TENNESSEE 23

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Nick Marshall gained 214 of Auburn's 444 yards rushing and the Tigers scored on a punt return and kickoff return against Tennessee.

Marshall ran for two touchdowns on just 14 carries and threw for a third score. Tre Mason rushed for 117 yards and three touchdowns as Auburn (9-1, 5-1 SEC) earned its sixth straight victory and averaged 8.4 yards per carry.

NO. 9 MISSOURI 48 KENTUCKY 17

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Maty Mauk threw five touchdown passes, four to Dorial Green-Beckham, and No. 9 Missouri cruised past Kentucky.

Making his fourth consecutive start in place of the injured James Franklin, the Tigers' redshirt freshman completed 17 of 28 attempts for 203 yards and took full advantage of 6-foot-6 sophomore Green-Beckham, whose TD receptions set a school record.

VIRGINIA TECH 42 NO. 14 MIAMI 24

MIAMI GARDENS, Fla. — Trey Edmunds ran for four touchdowns, the first three of them set up by Miami special-teams miscues, and Virginia Tech knocked off the 14th-ranked Hurricanes 42-24 on Saturday night.

Edmunds had scoring runs of 10, 2, 4 and 1 yards for the Hokies (7-3, 4-2 Atlantic Coast Conference). Logan Thomas completed 25 of 31 passes for 366 yards, giving him consecutive games of 300 yards or more for the first time in his Virginia Tech career.

NO. 21 WISCONSIN 27 BYU 17

MADISON, Wis. — James White ran for two touchdowns and caught a pass for another score, and Wisconsin stalled BYU's fast-paced offense .

White finished with 147 yards rushing, while Chris Borland looked just fine coming back from a hamstring injury in flying around the field for 13 tackles and two sacks for the Badgers (7-2).

NO. 23 ARIZONA STATE 20 UTAH 19

SALT LAKE CITY — Taylor Kelly ran for a touchdown and threw for another in the fourth quarter and Arizona State came from behind to beat Utah.

Sun Devils All-America defensive tackle Will Sutton sealed the victory with an interception at the line of scrimmage with 1:01 left at the Utah 25.

PITTSBURGH 28 NO. 24 NOTRE DAME 21

PITTSBURGH — James Conner ran for two short touchdowns, including the go-ahead score with 9:36 remaining as Pittsburgh upset No. 24 Notre Dame 28-21 Saturday night.

Tom Savage passed for 243 yards and two scores to Devin Street as the Panthers (5-4) took advantage of some sloppy play by the Fighting Irish (7-3) to end Notre Dame's four-game winning streak.

MAVERICKS 91
BUCKS 83

MILWAUKEE — Monta Ellis got the best of his former team, shaking off boos from the crowd while contributing 18 points and five assists to help Dallas hold off Milwaukee.

Dirk Nowitzki had 16 points and Shawn Marion added 14 for the Mavericks, who blew a big first-half lead with sloppy offensive play.

O.J. Mayo had 28 points and Caron Butler added 19 for the Bucks, who were playing their second straight game without forward Larry Sanders. Mayo also was facing his former team.

CLIPPERS 107
ROCKETS 94

HOUSTON — Blake Griffin and J.J. Redick scored 22 points apiece and Los Angeles used an 18-0 run in the second half to rally for the victory over Houston.

Jamal Crawford had 16 points, Chris Paul added 14 points and 13 assists, and DeAndre Jordan had 12 points and 18 rebounds for the Clippers. Griffin had seven rebounds and Redick shot 8 for 15 from the field.

against the Red Raiders and come up with the right formula to beat the Red Raiders in front of 54,609 fans and a nationally televised audience on ABC.

After Tech got one of two Ryan Bustin field goals on the day, it only took two plays for the Wildcats to get into the end zone, as Hubert went off left tackle and raced 63 yards for the touchdown.

The Wildcats scored rushing touchdowns on their first four possessions of the game to take a 28-10 lead in the second quarter.

"You definitely want to give Kansas State credit, they came out and ran the ball very well on us," said Tech senior defensive lineman Kerry Hyder, "but at the same time I feel we were in a position to make plays and we just weren't doing it. We weren't making tackles we needed to make. We weren't flying to the ball like we needed to."

While the Tech defense had its share of issues, the Tech offense wasn't doing much on its end either.

After starting quarterback Davis Webb threw a 2-yard touchdown pass to Eric Ward to give Tech a 10-7 lead midway through the first quarter, Webb and the offense struggled to find consistency. Needing a spark, Kingsbury made a quarterback change in the second quarter when one true freshman in Baker Mayfield replaced the other.

Mayfield ended up fumbling the ball away four plays into his appearance and KSU took advantage when Waters found Tremaine Thompson for a 20-yard TD pass and a 35-10 lead at the half.

While Mayfield had his moments, especially in the third quarter, Kingsbury admitted that neither one of his young guns had a good day. Mayfield ended up going 34 of 44 for 276 yards, no touchdowns and two interceptions. Webb was 13 of 20 for 78 yards with one touchdown.

"Not great, but they're young guys," said Kingsbury when asked about his quarterbacks' performance. "We needed to score a bunch, obviously, to keep up. We got behind, and once again, got off our game plan and didn't execute the way we should have. I thought we needed a little spark. Baker got in there, moved around and did some good things, but I need to watch some film and really evaluate it."

Mayfield helped lead a nice start to the second half for the Red Raiders, who closed to within 35-19 at the end of the third quarter. The Tech defense stepped up as well, getting some key stops on the Wildcats' first two possessions of the third.

And once again, feeling like he needed a spark, Kingsbury decided to try an onside kick after a Bustin field goal. But KSU recovered at the Tech 46. The Wildcats made the Red Raiders pay for that short field as Sams scored on a 1-yard sneak.

Mayfield would turn it over again on Tech's next possession as Ty Zimmerman intercepted a pass and returned it 43 yards for a touchdown and a commanding 49-19 advantage.

So where do the Red Raiders go from here? They certainly won't be favored in their last two regular season games against the Bears and Longhorns. They need to patch up a struggling and beat-up defense, and decide which quarterback gives them the best chance to win.

"I thought we got out-coached, we got out-played and it's up to us what we want to do these last two weeks," Kingsbury said. "I was disappointed for the seniors. I let them know that I appreciate what they've done. It's not the way we wanted to send them out in their last home game, but there's a lot left to play."

What they'll be playing for is the big question.

Forsan's Cervantes wins Class A state title

From staff reports

ROUND ROCK — Forsan sophomore Jeremy Cervantes was coming off a third-place overall finish at last season's UIL Cross Country State Championships. He won't be settling for a bronze medal this season.

Cervantes claimed the individual state gold, completing the 3-mile course at Old Settlers Park in 16 minutes, 31.7 seconds to be the first to cross the finish line in the Class A boys race Saturday.

Unfortunately, Cervantes and Buffaloes couldn't repeat as champions in the team standings as Ozona had a low score of 74 points to edge Forsan by four points. Ozona came out on top despite the Buffaloes having three runners finish in the top 10.

Senior Tyler Evans was sixth overall at 17:08.79, while senior Matthew Mims (17:09.59) placed eighth. Senior Justin Goff (17:32.3) was 22nd with sophomore Cody Tanis (19:03.44) rounding out the top five in 78th.

In the Class A girls race, Garden City senior Kamie Halfmann placed fourth overall, completing the 2-mile course in 11:59.53. Sundown's Andrea Sanchez won the race at 11:40.95.

As a team, the Lady Bearkats finished eighth with 187 points. Harper won the team title with 78 points.

Andrews placed ninth in the 3A boys race with 188 points. Lytle won the team title with 105 points. The Mustangs were paced by senior Hunter Hicks, who placed 13th after finishing the 3-mile course in 16:50.01.

GENERAL INFO

To ensure the integrity of our newspaper, for the benefit of our readers and advertisers, the Midland Reporter-Telegram reserves the right to revise, reclassify, edit or refuse any advertising. We also reserve the right to convert all advertising into digital and/or print formats within our other products and services.

Please check your ad the first day it appears, and, if you find a mistake, please call our office at 682-6222 so we can correct the error immediately. This will ensure that your ad is exactly what you want readers to see. If an error does occur, you can choose to rerun your ad once for free, or we'll gladly refund the cost of the portion of the ad affected by the error. If an ad is inadvertently omitted, we will assume liability up to the cost of the ad itself – consequently, we will publish your ad in our next available edition or refund the price you have paid.

Rate charges are determined at the time of placement. All ads accepted are subject to credit approval. Some classifications require payment in advance. Credit applications are required for business accounts.

We welcome suggestions or comments. Please call: Jeri Houston, Advertising Sales Manager, 687-8894.

HAPPY ADS

We'll help you design something unique and publish it in the Midland Reporter-Telegram Classifieds...whatever the occasion!

Publish a special memorial to mark the passing of a loved one with an "In Memory Of" ad. Include a poem, prayer, and/or the names of all who care. Also, express your appreciation to everyone who brought food, sent flowers, or was there for you when you needed them most with a "Card of Thanks." We'll help you design a respectful, thoughtful ad.

Ads containing art or photos need to be in our office 2 working days before the ad is to be published and we ask that you pay in advance.

DON'T POWER THROUGH

By PATRICIA RIVERA
CTW Features

It may seem like you have all your ducks in a row, from a polished resume to thought-provoking questions for the hiring manager. But how will you control actions that arise when you're nervous?

Career expert and longtime former Cosmopolitan editor-in-chief Kate White says those "pacifiers," gestures that we use to calm down, can make or break a job interview. These include flailing your hands nervously, touching the dimple just below the neck, especially when asked an awkward question, or playing your hair.

"Pacifiers suggest some degree of insecurity, which you never want to show in an interview," says White, who's also the author of "I Shouldn't Be Telling You This: Success Secrets Every Gutsy Girl Should Know" (HarperBusiness, 2012).

"When you radiate power through your physical actions, such as your body language and your voice, you immediately signal to those around you that you are the person in charge and you deserve respect," she says. When you are confident, you also ward off criticism.

You should be mindful of all body language, she adds, both yours and the people who interview you.

"When you're interviewing for a job, you've got a lot of balls to keep in the air, and you may feel the last thing you can do is concentrate on your body language. But you'll come across far more confidently if you do keep body language in mind," she says.

White offers some tips to consider:

• Sit strategically. Once you're sitting down, move the chair about 30 degrees so it's slightly off center. Being directly face-to-face often makes the other person anxious. Keep your head level when listening, which can be interpreted as levelness.

• Don't overdo eye contact. Experts suggest maintaining eye contact about 60 percent of the time. Also consider glancing away while speaking, giving the other person a break.

• Control your legs and feet. Some hiring managers check out candidate's feet and legs. Refrain from crossing your legs; rather, keep them both on the ground.

• Remember your manners. Arrive on time and focus on the task at hand. Don't bring in drinks to sip during the interview, much less food or even candy. And make sure to turn off your phone.

• Manifest security. Studies show that sitting in an expansive dominant pose – one that takes up space – not only makes you feel more powerful but also decreases stress. Something to keep in mind, but should be used with caution at an interview.

BE THE BRAND

A CONCISE AND CLEVER PERSONAL STORY CAN PEOPLE TALKING – AND GET YOU HIRED.

By DAWN KLINGENSMITH
CTW Features

What do ambitious professionals and Amazon products have in common? Each needs to be recommendable to rise through the ranks.

While written with brands in mind, a new book on how to generate word-of-mouth advertising and positive recommendations – trusted by 92 percent of consumers above all other forms of advertising, according to a 2012 Nielsen survey – also applies to people looking to enhance their reputation and advance their careers by generating buzz about their abilities and accomplishments, according to Paul M. Rand, author of "Highly Recommended: Harnessing the Power of Word of Mouth and Social Media to Build Your Brand and Your Business." (McGraw-Hill, 2013)

Brands usually stand for something – such as reliability or innovation – and so should ambitious professionals, says Rand, chief digital officer of the public relations and marketing agency Ketchum as well as president and CEO of the agency's digital and social unit Zócalo Group.

Just as buyers know what they're going to get when they choose one well-branded product or service over another, higher-ups should have a sense of what they are going to get when a your name comes up for a promotion or an assignment. It's up to you to create the impression, Rand says, and it starts by developing a "clear, purposeful and sharable story about how you want to be talked about."

Although a colorful professional bio can't hurt – think of Steve Jobs launching Apple in his parents' garage and his subsequent, stratospheric rise – what Rand means by "story" can be as simple as a fill-in-the-blank statement: "I want to be seen as the best at..." or "I want my name to be synonymous with..." or "People who work with me will come to expect..."

Your story should reflect your values, passions and strengths. In other words, your "core self," Rand says. That way, you can live up to it each and every day, which is key.

In fact, more than anything, your everyday performance will determine what others think and say about you. Though sporadic successes may be buzzworthy, recommendations are based on expectations consistently met.

Use staff meetings, performance reviews and appropriate social media outlets, including LinkedIn and Twitter, to share your accomplishments. LinkedIn allows you to add Projects and Publications sections to showcase your work. LinkedIn also provides a forum to tell your story in your own voice, and possibly put the desired words in people's mouths when they go to recommend you.

Emphasize accomplishments over attributes. "You do need to be self-promotional without being braggadocious, and the best way to go about it is by talking about tangible, measurable, inarguable results," says Chad M. Oakley III, president and COO of the executive search firm Charles Aris Inc., in Greensboro, N.C.

Don't underestimate the importance of likeability. People recommend and do business with people they like, plain and simple. Fortunately, for a lot of folks being more likeable just means acting more like themselves.

"So many people act warm and friendly with their friends and the people in their apartment building, but when they go to work, they clam up. They think they have to act so serious in order to be taken seriously," says social and conversational skills consultant Marvin Brown, author of "How to Meet and Talk to Anyone Anywhere Anytime." (Contact Strategies, 2013) "Just being friendly can help your career."

JOB HUNTING

BAN THE BOX

Last month, California became the latest state to "ban the box," or prohibit criminal history questions from state and local agency job applications. Deferring such inquiries until later in the hiring process, the new law takes effect July 1, 2014. The intent is to reduce barriers to employment for people with criminal records who have turned their lives around.

Also last month, Target Corp., the nation's second-largest retailer, announced a nationwide policy to remove questions about criminal history from its job applications. Target is based in Minnesota, where ban-the-box legislation applies to private as well as public employers as of Jan. 1, 2014.

Minnesota is among a growing number of jurisdictions that require both private and public employers to wait until a job applicant has been selected for an interview or given a conditional employment offer before asking about criminal history or conducting a background check.

Ban the box is the law of the land in over 50 municipalities and 10 states (California, Colorado, Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Mexico and Rhode Island), though some policies apply only to government agency jobs according to the National Employment Law Project.

Ban the box supporters including NELP say old and minor records stand in the way of gainful employment for too many qualified workers. Some 65 million Americans, or one in four adults, have a criminal record that may show up on a routine background check report, NELP reports.

Even for people convicted of more serious crimes, "access to jobs and stable employment reduces recidivism, so this is a public safety issue," says NELP staff attorney Madeline Neighly.

Ban the box support is "snowballing" in part because the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has endorsed it as a "best practice for all public and private employers," Neighly says.

Certain jobs including law enforcement positions are exempted.

FIRST-TIME ASSISTANCE

QUESTION:

My spouse and I are interested in buying a first home, however it's been hard to save for a down payment and the other costs of closing. Are there any programs out there that can help us get into a home?

ANSWER:

First-time buyers have a special place in real estate. According to the National Association of Realtors, first-timers represented 29 percent of all existing homebuyers in July.

That's a hefty percentage, but down significantly from past years. For instance, in the first quarter of 2010, first-timers represented 46 percent of all existing home purchasers.

The reality is that the housing sector requires a continuing flow of new buyers to assure that current homeowners can market their properties and buy replacement homes. Without first-time buyers, the replacement market shrinks and that impacts demand and real estate prices throughout the housing sector.

DownPaymentResource.com, an online mortgage assistance reference site, says that across the country more than 1,000 agencies offer mortgage help through some 1,500 plans. Borrowers, brokers and lenders can look up the programs available to them by location.

For instance, for my zip code I found 10 plans, including $10,000 in closing costs and down payment assistance as well as a half-percent off the financing rate.

But, some cautions: To be a "first-time" you generally must not have held title to a home for at least three years. There can be income limits. There can be restrictions, such as a requirement to buy in certain areas. In some cases, programs may have limited funding.

And, with some programs, all profits may go back to the plan if you sell within a certain time frame, say nine years.

Also, ask what happens if you move. Can you rent the property? Can you have a boarder? Can you buy a duplex, triplex or four-unit property?

So, yes, there are many assistance programs out there, but you have to dig, do your homework and ask lots of questions to get the mortgage that is right for you.

MARKET

DON'T CALL IT A (TYPICAL) COMEBACK

By ERIK J. MARTIN
CTW Features

Yes, real estate prices and existing home sales are on the rise. True, foreclosure activity continues to drop. But does this really feel like a bona fide housing recovery in full swing? Economic experts disagree.

It's difficult to get a consensus on whether or not we're in the midst of a lasting real estate rebound because key indicators aren't exactly harmonizing well together, making it challenging to accurately evaluate the state of the housing market.

NOT THE USUAL SUSPECTS

One indicator that the recovery is proceeding abnormally is the recent decision by real estate website Trulia to retire its industry-respected Housing Barometer, which was first launched in February 2012 to chart how quickly the housing market was shifting back to normal.

This barometer used three key metrics to gauge housing market health: existing home sales, the delinquency-plus-foreclosure rate, and construction starts. While the first two indicators have showed positive signs, construction starts are only 40 percent of the way back to normal, according to Jed Kolko, Trulia's chief economist.

Before the Barometer was retired, its last reading was "67 percent back to normal."

Kolko says, "Prices have rebounded significantly, which is good news for homeowners who saw their property values fall during the housing crash. And home sales, which are … very close to the long-term norm, have recovered much faster than construction."

He adds, "The biggest challenges are that many young people are still living with their parents, household formation has been slow, and the vacancy rate is still above normal. Those factors hold back construction."

Those three indicators are just part of the picture, says Lanny Baker, CEO of real estate listing site ZipRealty. He recommends that people look at as much data as possible to get an accurate picture of the market.

That "includes median sales prices, sold-to-list price ratios, total inventory, new listings, pending sales, distressed sales, median days on the market and percentage of homes sold in seven days or less," Baker says.

Baker says this housing recovery is different from past rebounds because lenders are significantly more conservative in their underwriting standards in the wake of the subprime mortgage crisis and because more investors are involved in home purchases today.

Another huge factor is that the housing crash was part of the Great Recession, which affected many other parts of the economy. "When the real estate market went into free fall [a few years ago], it was the first time in most people's memories that [home] prices went down nationally," says John O'Connor, agent with Keller Williams Boston-Metro in Boston.

The precipitous drop in home equity and rise in unemployment made it incredibly difficult for the housing market to recover.

To better evaluate a market recovery today, one must consider the number of new households created each year, O'Connor says.

"Currently, we are forming only about half as many new households as normal, and the unemployment rate has been stuck at over 7 percent," O'Connor says.

BACK TO NORMALCY

In spite of these challenges, Baker believes a fundamental recovery of the housing market is underway.

"We're not pushing into new record levels on transaction volume or sales prices in most parts of the country, so the word 'recovery' is really very accurate," Baker says. "We are still working our way back from a major and historic downturn in housing."

While home sellers, buyers and owners can glean some information from national housing indicators, it's important to take these numbers with a grain of salt.

For instance, national media outlets report data that measures the aggregate of the housing market, not the local market that you live in, says Mike Shaw, lead buyer specialist with the Kelly Hager Group Real Estate Services in St. Louis. "It's important to consult with your neighborhood expert on real estate conditions near you first, before listening to the national averages."

TRENDS

HOUSE FLIPPING DOWN, PROFITS UP

With fewer foreclosures, house-flipping activity is down – but high-end flips mean profits per home are going up

House flippers are finding it harder to get a good deal since foreclosures are at a seven-year low. But flipping can still be profitable – a recent report by RealtyTrac, real estate data sources shows that although flipping is down 13 percent in the third quarter compared to 2012, average profits are up 12 percent over third quarter last year.

Daren Blomquist, vice president of RealtyTrac, says, "That speaks to the fact that we're past the bounce off the bottom in the housing market."

For low- to middle-price levels of homes, house flippers (those who buy property and sell it again within six months) find the inventory less appealing. Blomquist says, "Foreclosures are a big source of potential purchases for flippers. With foreclosures properties down… real estate investors who are flipping don't have that inventory to choose from."

On the other hand, higher-priced homes (worth more than $750,000) are still profitable for flippers if they're willing to commit the money, Blomquist says: "Flippers who are operating in today's market are not the same breed as the flippers during the housing bubble."

According to the RealtyTrac report, flipping is down substantially from a year ago in "former flipping hot spots" Phoenix; Tampa, Fla.; Orlando, Fla.; and Stockton, Calif.

While homebuyers in these markets may be glad to hear there's less competition, Blomquist points out that "institutional investors," backed by Wall Street money or private equity firms, are more active buying single-family homes that they will rent for profit.

These are usually markets where home prices are up, foreclosures are down and rents are increasing. These are markets where the "bottom" has already come and gone.

For the private homebuyer, it may sound daunting to be competing against cash buyers. But Blomquist says, "It's still a great time to buy… just make sure you have solid financing so when you put in your offer, it will look like a good offer. The seller won't have to worry." — Bettina Chang

Open House Sunday 2:00-3:00

1002 E. County Rd. 124

Want to escape the traffic and noise of living in town? Get away to your own 2.66 acres just south of Midland! Follow Lamesa Road south and you will virtually run into this recently updated home. 1002 ECR 124 features a corner lot, updated kitchen, new hot water heater, sinks and faucets, updated cabinetry in various rooms, fresh paint in living room, light fixtures and more! Built in 1980 with 2,148 square feet (per MCAD), the home has three bedrooms, two bathrooms, one living area, one dining area, a 40x60 workshop, two bonus storage buildings, in-ground pool and two wells. The owner is currently only utilizing one well and it flows abundantly. From this location, you have quick access to shopping and dining. Schools for children living here include Travis Elementary, Goddard Jr. High and Midland High.

A circular drive provides parking for friends and family and a front porch offers areas for sitting and enjoying the sunset. Doors open to tile flooring in the entry and a large den area where the cement floor has been artistically painted. The den is very roomy and is a great place to gather near the brick fireplace on cold winter days.

You can be part of the action in the den from your open concept kitchen. Walls of cabinets provide abundant storage, while tile countertops create a nice work surface. Coordinating backsplashes give a decorative touch as well. Black appliances, stainless sink and large pantry make cooking a breeze. For casual dining, pull a chair up to the bar or move to the informal dining area where you have a view of the back yard. Near the kitchen is a spacious laundry room as well as access to the two-car garage.

From the other side of the den are the bedrooms. The first bedroom faces the front of the house and has two large closets and ceiling fan while the second faces the side yard. A hall bathroom is conveniently located for them to share. Here, you will enjoy tile countertops, new faucets and loads of storage space. The master bedroom faces the back of the house. A walk-in closet with shelving will keep you organized and the bathroom has new countertops, fixtures and a dressing area.

If you are moving to the country to enjoy the outdoors, this is the place! There are numerous fruit bearing trees on the property including green apple, apricot, peach, plum and pecan. The backyard pool is the perfect party spot and is safely fenced in to keep children from harm. Pets have their own fenced yard as well. A covered back porch provides ample space for tables and chairs. You will love the 40x60 workshop! The door is large enough for an RV. In addition, there are two bonus workshop or storage buildings.

Additional amenities include: sprinkler system, in-ground pool, new A/C, new roof shingles 2011, automatic garage door opener, reverse osmosis system, fireplace, large workshop and storage buildings. Listed at $315,000, more information may be obtained on this quiet and peaceful home at the open house today from 2:00-3:00 or by contacting Sandy Scott ABR, CRS, GRI with Real Estate One at (432) 683-1377 or (432) 638-3250. Need a New Roof? Weigh the Options

By Barbara Proein, RISMedia Columnist

Homeowners needing to re-roof want low-cost, attractive options that will last the best part of a lifetime.

"That won't happen," says roofer Joe Anastasio. "There are several reasonably priced and attractive options in the roofing industry today. But despite claims by some product manufacturers, many roofs will need to be replaced again – or repaired – within 10 to 15 years."

However, he adds, by choosing the right roof, having it installed properly, and doing a little regular maintenance, most homeowners can look forward to a worry-free twenty years or more.

Anastasio recommends these roofing materials:

- Composition shingles – Versatile and easy to install, composition shingles offer a clean look at the most affordable price. Higher quality options made of asphalt or fiberglass are easy to install, may be laid over an existing roof, and offer Class A fire protection. They may be walked upon without damage. On the negative side, shingles may be blown off in high winds, and they do not have the dimensional look of tile or wood shake.
- Wood shake – Wood shake roofs offer lots of natural character because of variances in the cut and thickness of the wood, generally cedar. They are energy-efficient, insulating the attic and allowing the house to 'breathe.' But they are more expensive and will not last as long as fiberglass or tile because they are subject to damage by mold, rot, and insects. Today's pressure-treated shakes are impregnated with fire-retardant that meet national fire standards, but they require regular maintenance.
- Clay tile – A good choice for houses of Southwestern or Mediterranean design, clay tile roofs are attractive, won't rot or burn, and comes in many colors and styles. They will last a long time, but they can be very heavy and may require extra roof support to hold the weight. Proper installation is important, and maintenance is minimal, but tiles are fragile and could break if walked upon.
- Slate – An expensive choice selected for upscale homes, slate roofs provide a natural look in a variety of patterns. They offer a very long lifespan, good fire protection, and low maintenance, and are not vulnerable to rot or insects. Like tile, slate can be very heavy, sometimes requiring expensive extra support. It is also breakable enough that walking on it is difficult for a non-professional, complicating such tasks as maintenance and gutter cleaning.

Fashion Icons At Home

For those who live and breathe fashion, home design is a natural extension of creativity and personality

By DAWN KLINGENSMITH
CTW Features

Famous for their public image and iconic designs, some of the most venerable names and dashing personalities in fashion — Coco Chanel, Yves Saint Laurent, Laudomia Pucci, Kenzo Takada, Manolo Blahnik — express a sense of style behind closed doors that most of us would never see.

Luckily for us, the new book "Beyond Chic: Great Fashion Designers at Home" (The Vendome Press, 2013) is a product of photographer and author Ivan Terestchenko, who has chronicled their lives and homes for over two decades.

"None of the homes are decorated, but über styled after a lifetime of trained attention to detail," Terestchenko explains in an email from his home in southwestern France. And none were "made up" by decorators: "They are an extension of each designer's creative mind."

In fact, when it comes to their public appearance and private space, "you can't really separate — it is like water flowing from the fountain," Terestchenko says.

Design with Personality

Asked to describe this intersection of sartorial and interior style for each designer, the laid-back yet sophisticated photographer — also an accomplished painter and sculptor who surfs in his spare time — does so succinctly.

Chanel: "sophisticated and bold."

Gilles Dufour: "infused by art."

Stefano Pilati: "graphic."

Maxime de la Falaise: "bohemian with grandezza." (That's Italian for grandeur, or greatness.)

Kevin Kerrigan: "clean-cut."

He is a man of few words in the book, as well, devoting just one page of introductory text for each chapter of mostly full-page photographs. But though there are no captions or home-styling tips per se, there are ideas and inspirations galore.

Find a Seat

One element that stands out is the seating. The late Coco Chanel's legendary Paris apartment still contains her "magically comfortable" suede sofa, and Blahnik's chairs are described as "uniformly graceful and comfortable." Dufour's sofas and chairs are deep, but never without a pillow to accommodate smaller frames.

Throughout the book are all manner of slouchy, comfy cushions, many still bearing a sitter's imprint. Thick, tactile throws further extend the invitation to get cozy, though perhaps with a glass of burgundy rather than a bag of microwave popcorn.

The late de le Falaise, a 1950s model who went on to become a food writer and fashion designer, seemed to have a clever way to demarcate those chairs that weren't intended for seating by using them as easels to prop up original artwork or draping beads and belts across the chair backs — though this may have resulted from a free-spirited disarray as well.

But there's no mistaking the sofas and chairs that she clearly intended for lounging. Richly textured fabric — ranging from silky to coarse and representing a hodgepodge of colors and patterns — covers upholstered furniture, so the mere act of sitting becomes a sensory experience.

Lessons Learned

From Chanel, we learn to boldly mix metallic finishes. She loved gilded things, from the burlap on the walls to her wooden furnishings. Ranging from silver and brass to a deep bronze, an assortment of metallic statuettes, book bindings, lighting fixtures, picture frames, drawer pulls, finials and upholstery nail heads is set off with crystal and glass elements, all quietly and cooperatively reflective.

The variance and tone of the metallic elements, and their varying stages of patina, lend a timeless look to the space, as does the "blend of materials from different eras" that Terestchenko points out in his intro.

Though these elements suggest the space is ever-evolving, Chanel's Paris apartment "remains just as it was on the day she died" in 1971, he writes.

From Italian film producer Giorgio Silvagni and his wife, Irene, we learn that broken-in objects breathe soul into a space. Terestchenko especially admires their ceramics, with cracked surfaces "like the wrinkles on the cheek of some venerable sage." But they have also allowed battered paperbacks to stack up on the nightstand — books seemingly chosen out of interest or love, not as design elements.

Fashion and design "go hand-in-hand," Terestchenko says, so inspiration seekers can search their closets as well as books and magazines for home design ideas. As for his photo subjects, "They have become what the aristocrats used to be," he says. "They don't follow the fashion; they make it."

Portrait Perfect

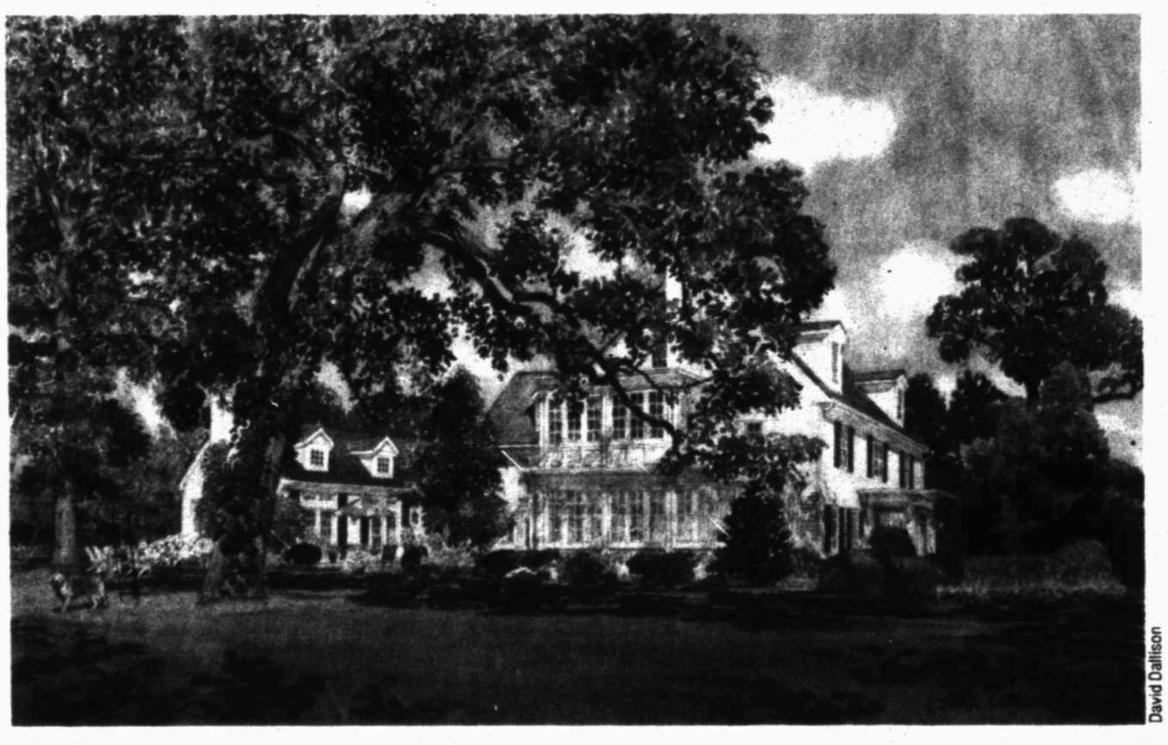
Home portraits are popular décor among those who truly love their homes

By MARILYN KENNEDY MELIA
CTW Features

It's not just the family home. When you love it, your home is like a member of the family.

Naturally, besotted homeowners would want to add a picture of their abode next to the many photos of friends and family adorning the walls and shelves. A photo of a structure, though, can be static, bordering on boring.

That's why taking artistic license and rendering a home's character in a painting or drawing "has a very long history," says artist David Dallison. "In Europe, there's been a tradition of paintings of individual rooms and of estates and gardens."



David Dallison

Based in Waukegan, Ill., Dallison sets up his easel at many of the grand homes in the Chicago area and other locales to paint home portraits for his clients.

With today's digital photography and other technologies, home portraits in pencil drawings, watercolor or paint, can be had without breaking the bank.

For instance, Jeanna Nelis, who runs Houseportraitsonline.com, one of the many websites providing drawings or paintings, explains that she uses a Corel paint program to create her portraits.

Many sites charge from under $100 to a couple-hundred dollars for a portrait, with prices varying depending on the size, framing and the hand labor involved.

Usually, people like the "perspective or three-quarter view" of their home, says Robert Leanna of PaintedBuildings.com.

An artist in residence will reflect a home's character, though it won't necessarily be completely realistic. "It's fiction to some degree," says Dallison, whose portraits typically range from $1,200 to $8,000.

Technology has made it easier to allow some artistic interpretation, says Deb Rohrbach of Houseportraitsbydeb.com. She scans the portrait and emails it to the customer for any suggested changes before the final product.

And Leanna says he hand draws and paints the images he receives. This allows "for more selective editing," he explains.

CHICKEN-FRIED STEAK

Parkway Grill in Wichitafalls

WHILE WE DON'T KNOW THE EXACT ORIGIN THE CHICKEN-FRIED STEAK — though Lamesa makes a pretty strong argument — we do know it's a Texas favorite. In honor of Texas Chicken Fried Steak Day, which was Oct. 26 in case you missed it, newspapers from Amarillo to Beaumont teamed up to compile a list of the state's best CFS.

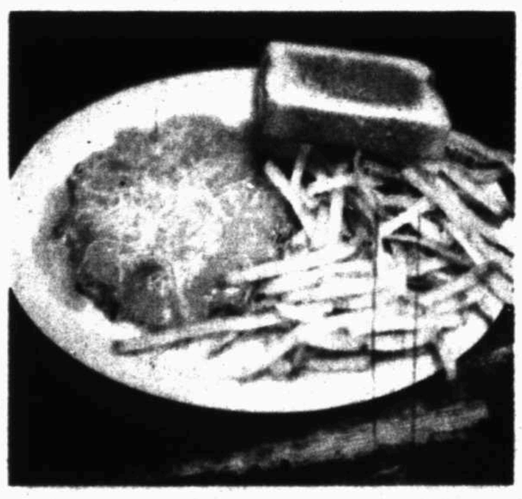
Wall Street Bar & Grill

115 E Wall St. | 432-684-8686

Head to the heart of downtown Midland for the city's best chicken-fried steak. Wall Street Bar & Grill is a longtime Midland establishment specializing in steaks and seafood.

For about $10 diners can dig into Wall Street's lightly breaded and crispy chicken-fried steak. The meat is consistently tender and leaner than similar entrees served elsewhere. Wall Street's thick, peppery cream gravy perfectly complements the meat and the basil mashed potatoes — our recommended side — balance some of the heaviness of the dish.

Start with a salad topped with vinaigrette and blue cheese crumbles and finish with a Gold Brick — ice cream topped with a hard chocolate shell.



Amarillo

Green Chile Willy's | 13651 I-27 | 622-2200 | greenchilewillys.com

Locally owned and nearly invisible at high speeds alongside I-27, this hidden gem may be tucked between Amarillo and Canyon, but there's no hiding the fact that its chicken-fried steak is the area's best. Whether ordering the Texas Traditional, Jalapeño Jack or the popular green chile version it's named after, hungry diners know they're in for the crispiest, tastiest chicken fried steak around.

Other Favorites: Youngblood's Stockyard Café, 620 SW 16th, 342-9411, stockyardscafeamarillo.com; Calico County Restaurant, 2410 Paramount, 358-7664, calicocountyamarillo.com

Beaumont

Gary's Café | 2650 Lutcher Drive, Orange | 409-883-4948

The giant helping of chicken-fried steak at Gary's Café is served up with mashed potatoes, Texas toast and a whole lot of white gravy. Or you can order it in a sandwich with fries for less than $8. And this diner is open 24 hours on Friday and Saturday, so you can head on over and order some whenever the craving hits.

Corpus Christi

Nolan's Original Poorboys | 14101 Northwest Blvd #117 | 361-387-2697

Get four Corpus Christi residents in a room to discuss their favorite chicken-fried steak and there will be six different opinions. Is it the breading, the cook time, the gravy, the consistency of the meat? All will agree that there's one place in town that captures the essence of what chicken fried steak should be: Nolan's Original Poorboys. It's no wonder. They've been serving the goods for three generations.

Step up to the counter staffed with friendly employees and order the generously-sized portion, that's fried just right, with a perfect blend of meat and breading and topped with piping hot gravy. Don't forget the traditional sides of homemade mashed potatoes and green beans cooked with onion and bacon. Then there's the warm, sesame seed-topped bread, which anyone who is from here knows about, to complete the meal.

If in town, ask anyone where it is. They'll know how to get there.

Fort Worth

Billy's Oak Acres BBQ | 1620 N. Las Vegas Trail | 817-367-2200 | facebook.com/BillysOakAcresBbq

Fort Worth's best chicken-fried steaks are out west, but one isn't very far out.

That's at Billy's Oak Acres BBQ, a new smokehouse in a 50-year-old barbecue-and-beer tavern near Lake Worth.

Pitmaster Billy Woodrich has worked in more expensive "cowboy cuisine" restaurants. He serves a high-dollar chicken-fried steak for a lunch-special price. But it's so much work that he only makes it one day a week: Thursdays.

(Any other day, drive an hour west to Strawn and legendary Mary's Cafe.)

This Oct. 21 photo shows make-ahead light mashed potatoes in Concord, N.H. The potatoes are mashed and cooked without any seasonings or dairy the day before, and then stored in the refrigerator. They are nuked and the dairy added at the last minute, when they are ready to serve.

AHEAD OF TIME

Do-ahead mashed potatoes to save time and sanity

By Sara Moulton
Associated Press

One of the most stressful parts of hosting a large dinner party is figuring out how to time everything so all the food arrives at the table piping hot and at its prime.

This is especially true of Thanksgiving — the dinner party to end all dinner parties! Getting everything timed right is a crazy juggling act, even if you make good use of the turkey resting time (that 30-minute period between when the turkey comes out of the oven and when it is ready to be carved) to finish prepping the other dishes.

Traditional mashed potatoes pose a special problem. You can try making them ahead of time, then reheating them at the last minute, but then they tend to taste stale. Theoretically, you can make them from scratch as the clock ticks down, but good luck pulling that rabbit out of a hat while you're simultaneously whipping up a pan gravy and finishing off your sides in a kitchen full of hovering relatives.

Here's my solution — cook and mash the potatoes without any seasonings or dairy the day before, then pop them in the refrigerator. When you're ready to serve them, nuke them and add the dairy at the last minute.

Why does this work? Because it's the reheated butter and milk or cream that causes the off flavors. Leave those out until the potatoes are already reheated and you're good to go.

MAKE-AHEAD LIGHT MASHED POTATOES

Start to finish: 1 day plus 1 hour and 20 minutes (20 minutes active)
Servings: 10

10 small to medium russet potatoes (about 5 pounds)
1 to 1 1/2 cups low-fat milk
1 cup reduced-fat sour cream
2 tablespoons unsalted butter, cut into 8 chunks
Salt and ground black pepper, to taste
Heat the oven to 400 F.

Use a paring knife to prick the potatoes in several places. Place the potatoes on a rimmed baking sheet and bake on the oven's middle shelf until a knife goes through with no resistance, about 45 to 50 minutes. After they are baked, cut the potatoes in half lengthwise and set aside to cool for 5 minutes.

Use a spoon to scoop out the pulp from each potato half and transfer it, in batches, to a ricer or a food mill fitted with the finest blade. Force the potatoes through the ricer or mill into a microwave-safe bowl. Let cool, then cover and refrigerate overnight.

Just before serving, microwave the potatoes, covered loosely with plastic wrap, for 2 minutes. Stir and heat for another minute. Repeat the procedure until the potatoes are hot. Stir in 1 cup of the milk, the sour cream, the butter, and salt and pepper to taste, then heat for another minute, or until hot. Thin with additional milk if you prefer a lighter softer texture. Serve immediately.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sara Moulton was executive chef at Gourmet magazine for nearly 25 years, and spent a decade hosting several Food Network shows. She currently stars in public television's "Sara's Weeknight Meals" and has written three cookbooks, including "Sara Moulton's Everyday Family Dinners."

Which potato to use when making mashed potatoes? Once upon a time there was only one answer: the russet, widely known as the "baking potato," the most famous of which is the Idaho. It is high in starch and gets fluffy when cooked. In recent years, though, some folks have begun to swear by the Yukon gold, a medium-starch spud with a buttery hue.

In the spirit of rigorous open-mindedness, I tested them both for this recipe, and ended up going with the russet. I just liked the taste better. In the same spirit, I tested two different cooking methods — baked and boiled. And the baked version won hands-down. The flavor was just more potato-y. Admittedly, baking takes longer than boiling, but you save time because there's no peeling or dicing needed.

There are three tools for mashing a potato: the food mill, the potato masher and the potato ricer. Most home cooks don't have a food mill, so we'll ignore that. The masher produces lumpy mashed potatoes, but some folks like them just fine that way. The ricer, designed like a potato-sized garlic press, is my favorite of the three. Of course, if you have none of these gadgets in your house, you can just use a fork.

But whatever you do, do not put the hot, cooked potatoes in a food processor, blender or mixer. You will end up with wallpaper paste.

In an effort to slim down this classic recipe, I have used low-fat milk in place of cream or whole milk, with just a touch of butter (you have to have some butter), and a cup of low-fat sour cream, which provides creamy texture and savory tang. It's delicious, I promise.

Use dishwasher to return honey to original state

HINTS FROM HELOISE
King Features Syndicate

Dear Heloise: I looked everywhere to see if this hint was posted and couldn't find it. To repair honey, jam, jelly or caramel that has crystalized, simply seal the container well and run it through a dishwasher cycle with your next load. Allow the jar to slowly return to room temperature with the dishwasher closed. The dishwasher provides gentle agitation. It's not the fastest method, but certainly the easiest and most foolproof. — Ronald S., via email

Ronald, I had an older jar of crystallized honey that was just perfect for testing your hint. Not only did the honey return to its original state, but the sticky outside of the jar was cleaned, too! A two-for-one hint! — Heloise

JAM AND JELLY

Dear Heloise: You probably have answered this many times, but I would like to know what the difference is between jam and jelly. — A Reader, via email

I'm happy to answer this for you! Jam is made from crushed fruit. Jelly is made from fruit juice that is cooked and turns to a gel. An added hint: Jam is usually thicker than jelly, and both taste great on a bagel! — Heloise

FROZEN BUNS

Dear Heloise: There are just two of us, and when we buy hamburger or hot-dog buns, there are always eight. How do we freeze the buns without them getting hard the next time we want to use them? — A Reader, via email

Major bread manufacturers don't recommend freezing your buns, because it can compromise the quality, but many people do freeze them. Here's the hint on how best to freeze them.

Force all of the air out of the bread bag, and seal it in a freezer bag before storing in your freezer for double the protection. Once you're ready to use them, allow them to thaw on the counter. If the consistency isn't what you were looking for, throw the buns on the grill for a light toasting to help with the texture. — Heloise

LABEL HINT

Dear Heloise: I have been looking for a way to label my pans and trays that I take to family events and parties. They always seem to get mixed in and confused with others. I now mark the bottom of them with nail polish, and everyone knows it belongs to me. Even better, if the tray happens to get washed, the nail polish does not come off. This has saved me a lot of money, because I always get my trays back now. — J.M. in New Jersey

SHREDDED CABBAGE

Dear Heloise: When a recipe calls for shredded cabbage, I just buy a bag of coleslaw mix and add as much or as little as needed. If there is any mix left over, I cook it down and freeze it. I make sure to date it for future use before storing. — Marcia K. in Pennsylvania

Send a hint to Heloise at P.O. Box 795000, San Antonio, 78279-5000, fax 210-HELOISE or email heloise@Heloise.com.

The best of CHICKEN-FRIED STEAK

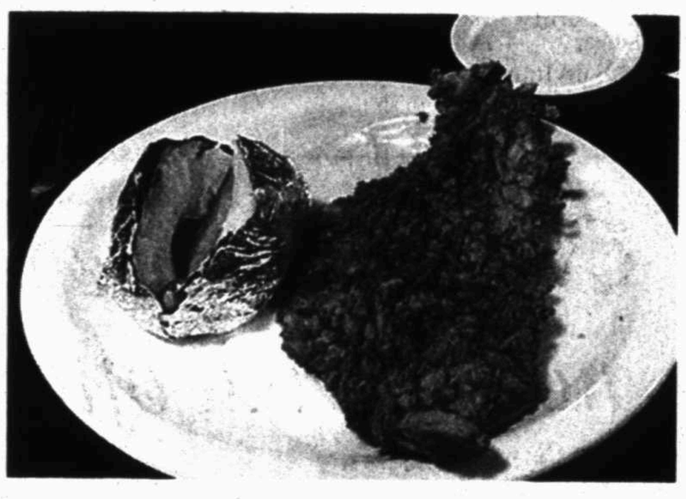
Houston area

Florida's Kitchen | 796 FM 350 South, Livingston | 936-967-4216 | floridaskitchen.com

Florida's Kitchen, in tiny Livingston, likes to crow about its smoked ribs and fried catfish. Both are fine choices and served in epic portions. It's the chicken-fried steak, however, that lures us to this neck of the piney woods. The CFS has been known to hang over the plate at this cafe, which has been feeding the locals for 20 years. The steak's snow white gravy is flecked with pepper and the breading is in a perfect crunchy proportion to the tender steak. You'll be stuffed, so take one of Florida's amazing slabs of Italian cream cake to-go.

Barbecue Inn | 116 W. Crosstimbers in Houston | 713-695-8112 | thebarbecueinn.com

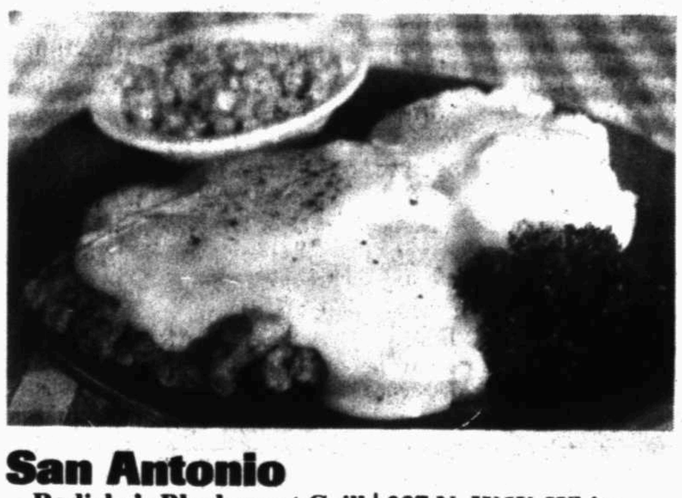
For nearly 70 years, the family owned and operated Barbecue Inn has been serving simple country fare. The milk-battered chicken-fried steak comes in two beefy slabs per plate with a fistful of fries and a generous ladle of creamy gravy. A simple green salad is appropriately served on the side. It's a feast — and a fair deal — for under $13.



San Angelo

Fuentes Cafe Downtown | 101 South Chadbourne Street | 325-658-2430 | fuentescafedowntown.com

Fuentes serves a classic chicken-fried steak San Angelo loves.



San Antonio

Radicke's Bluebonnet Grill | 237 N. W.W. White Road | 210-337-4007

So many chicken-fried steaks, so little room in the stomach.

Lots of places in San Antonio can claim to serve the best chicken-fried steak in town, but our vote goes to Radicke's Bluebonnet Grill.

Just off I-10 East, this restaurant serves a version of the Texas diner classic that's worth seeking from any part of town. Crisp, well-seasoned batter surrounds a tender piece of beef with plenty of flavor of its own. The batter retains much of its texture even after a generous ladling of tasty cream gravy. Add a side of sweet and buttery corn and made-from-scratch mashed potatoes, it's a hearty and tasty dish that feeds the tummy and the soul.

Wichita Falls

Parkway Grill | 2719 Southwest Parkway | 940-691-7640 | parkwaygrill.com

North Texans take their chicken-fried steak seriously. Cowboys have been pounding stringy beef into edible submission since the days of the Chisolm Trail, a skill that was ultimately refined by good Christian women and passed through the generations.

The specimen shown on the cover is the work of the Parkway Grill in Wichita Falls, a sports bar and grill that specializes in dude food that first follows the most important rule — "It's hot, it's brown and there's plenty of it." Their CFS is delicious.

TeePee Cones

Coconut, dyed green
Pretzel sticks
Gel icing

Cut the top off a sugar cone using clean kitchen scissors, and then spread chocolate icing around the base of the sugar cone. Roll the base of the cone in a bowl of shredded coconut that has been dyed green. (This is the grass around the teepee)

Fill the hole of the top of the teepee with more chocolate icing and place two or three pretzel sticks in the top to create the teepee's beams. Use black or brown gel icing to draw an opening for the teepee. Your kids can decorate the sides with personal designs.

Use books, treats to help family focus on Thanksgiving

Is anyone else out there wondering what has happened to the celebration of Thanksgiving? My emails are already packed with bonus coupons and Christmas gift ideas. Stores are advertising sales and not just Black Friday deals, but specials that begin on the morning of Thanksgiving. Our kids are going to grow up thinking it is just another day that we rush around town, when actually, it is an important piece of our nation's history and a day to be shared with family and friends as we stop to count our blessings.

That is what the Pilgrims did hundreds of years ago. The 102 passengers and 30 crew members left their familiar England for the unknown on a ship named the Mayflower seeking religious freedom and hoping for a better life.

After nine weeks at sea and surviving harsh conditions, they arrived at a place they later named New Plymouth. A harsh winter and sickness killed half of the Pilgrims. In the spring, they were helped by the Native Americans who were living nearby. The Pilgrims wanted to show their appreciation and thankfulness for sharing their knowledge in the strange new land, so they decided to invite them to a thanksgiving feast.

Through the years, the day of thanksgiving was continued and in 1863, President Abraham Lincoln made Thanksgiving a national holiday. Today, we serve turkey, corn, pumpkin pies and vegetables as traditional foods.

For a realistic view of what the Plymouth Plantation was really like, Scholastic Books has created an excellent virtual tour that is enjoyable for young and old alike. To see the tour, visit www.plimoth.org/learn/just-kids/thanksgiving-virtual-field-trip. Another video of the Wampanoag tribe tells about their experiences with the Pilgrims.

Numerous Thanksgiving books for kids are available at local bookstores ranging from silly such as "Too Many Turkeys" or "The Turkey Train" to "The First Thanksgiving" which shares history about the day.

The crafts and recipes below will have your children focusing on Thanksgiving — what it means and how it all began. For extra fun, on the website listed above, you can also learn to "talk" like a Pilgrim.

Cornucopias

Pointed sugar cones
Candy corn, miniature pumpkin shaped candy
Runts candy

Fill cones with candy to look like a cornucopia. Can also put names on the cone and use as place cards at the dinner table.

Pilgrim Hats

From Better Homes and Gardens

3-inch terra-cotta flowerpots
Acrylic paints in black, white, red, blue
Paintbrush
Craft foam or construction paper in black, yellow, green, and purple
Scissors
White craft glue
Black fabric paint pen or marker

Decorate the pots. Paint each pot black and allow it to dry. Choose a color to paint the band around the top of each pot. Let it dry. Decorate hats as desired. To make a brim, trace a circle from black foam or construction paper about 1/2-inch wider all around the pot opening. Cut out.

For each pot, make a buckle by cutting a rectangle from paper or foam and then a smaller rectangle to place in the center of the first rectangle. Glue the buckle to the band and let dry.

These can also be personalized by writing names on the band.

Chocolate Rice Cereal Turkeys

From mysanfranciscokitchen.com

3 Tablespoons unsalted butter
1/4 cup unsweetened cocoa powder
1/2 cup semi-sweet chocolate chips
1 bag large marshmallows (40)
6 cups rice cereal
2 apples, 1 carrot and/or other decorations

Line a 9x13-inch baking sheet with parchment paper. Melt butter in a large pot over medium heat. Add cocoa and chocolate chips, and stir frequently until the chocolate chips are fully melted. Add marshmallows and stir frequently until melted. Mix well. Add rice cereal and mix with a wooden spoon until well combined.

Transfer to the baking sheet and immediately press with greased hands or wax paper to flatten. Cool in freezer for 15 minutes or let sit a few hours before cutting. Use a knife or biscuit cookie cutter to cut small circles and set aside.

Peel carrot and cut a triangle for the beak and use small pieces to make feet. Slice apples and arrange around circle for the turkey feathers.

Mini Pumpkin Pies

From www.mybakingaddiction.com

48 (1.75-inch) premade miniature tart shells
1/3 cup granulated sugar
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 1/2 teaspoons pumpkin pie spice
1 large egg
1 cup pure pumpkin puree
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
1 (5-ounce) can evaporated milk (small can)
Whipping cream or Cool Whip, optional

Preheat oven to 350. Line a baking sheet with parchment paper. In a medium bowl with an electric mixer, combine sugar, salt, pumpkin pie spice, egg, pumpkin, vanilla and evaporated milk. Beat until well combined and smooth.

Line mini tart shells on prepared baking sheet. Using a small cookie scoop (about 2 teaspoons), fill each mini tart shell with pumpkin pie filling. Transfer pan to preheated oven and bake for 15-17 minutes or until shells are golden and the filling appears to be set. Remove mini pumpkin pies to a cooling rack. Top with freshly whipped cream or Cool Whip.

Chocolate and Peanut Butter Acorns

From www.sixinthesuburbsblog.blogspot.com

1 bag of Mini-Chocolate Chips
Hershey's Kisses
Miniature Nutter Butter cookies or Mini-Ritz Bits

Melt 1/2 of the chocolate chips. Dip the flat end of the Hershey's Kiss into melted chocolate and stick on a bite-size Nutter Butter. Dip the flat end of a mini-chip into the melted chocolate and stick to the Nutter Butter. Looks like an acorn.

Changes in friendship are normal, but often painful

Family Matters

Jim May, Ph.D., is director of the Family Wellness Center

DEAR FAMILY: I'm trying to help my cousin with this problem but I can't seem to come up with anything she thinks will work. She is a junior at university and has had a best friend since high school. They were both so excited to go to the same university together, room together in the dorm and then to share an apartment together. They pledged the same sorority together and everything seemed normal. Apparently, at the start of this semester her girlfriend became friends with another one of their sorority sisters. At first, they included my cousin in their activities, but she said in the last month or so they have started excluding her.

We first started talking about this when she called me one Saturday evening in tears. It seems like she found out that the two of them had gone out to a party and her roommate made it a point to not tell her where she was going. She found out when talking to another friend who just assumed she would be there too. She was devastated. I encouraged her to talk to her roommate about how she felt and see if they could get it worked out. She tried and that apparently created lots of drama with her roommate getting angry and denying that they were excluding her. She stormed out and spent the night somewhere else.

My cousin has tried to apologize but that got nowhere. When she sees the other girl at sorority functions she is cold and barely even speaks. Now my cousin doesn't want to go to sorority functions (which she always has loved) or be in the apartment when her "friend" is there. Do you have any ideas? This sounds just like high school girl stuff and they should be past that by now. — CARING COUSIN

DEAR CARING: I think you are most correct in your "high school" assessment. However, that level of immaturity just makes the problem harder to resolve. The problem of three has long been a problem, especially for females. For some reason the number three with friends appears to be inherently unstable. Usually two will try to pair-up, leaving one out. Even the Three Musketeers were always unstable and fighting until the fourth, d'Artagnan, was added!

I would encourage you to talk with your cousin about the well-documented natural process of changing friends at work here. It is very common for people in general to change best friends through time because of changing interests and life situations (for example, when one gets a boyfriend). While I have found it to not be of much comfort to know that friendship poaching is common, perhaps it will help her not take it quite so personally (even though it is personal).

It seems to me that finding a best friend has all the components of a marriage. Generally, it starts with a commonality of something, for example:

- Proximity: sitting next to someone in school, living next door or in the same neighborhood or working with someone. After all, there has to be some way to physically meet that person.
- Personal characteristics: they exhibit and value similar beliefs and attributes; for example, respect for the other person, being a good listener, religious beliefs, showing the appropriate emotion for what is being said (sympathy, joy, sadness, etc.).
- Trustworthy and loyalty: your cousin knows only too well how important these are. You should be able to share your secrets with a best friend and know they will keep it confidential and not judge you. They always have your back.

There are many more components of course, but you get the idea. In the end, sometimes we just have to accept what we cannot change. Encourage your cousin to accept and go make other friends worthy of her friendship.

Marital infidelity is unfit topic for holiday banter

Dear Abby

Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My brother-in-law cheated on my sister two years ago. He was caught by the private eye his lover's husband had hired. My sister took him back and has been trying to be "the good wife," but he has never really seemed to be sorry or a changed man.

My problem is I can't stand him. When we get together as a family, I know I'm supposed to be civil and respectful, but I ask myself, "Why?"

I love my sister and the children. The holidays are coming. I'd like to ask him if he's faithful now, but if I did, I know he'd only lie. Can you offer me some advice? — HOLDING A GRUDGE IN ST. CLOUD, MINN.

DEAR HOLDING A GRUDGE: Yes. For the sake of your sister and the children, please resist the urge to make things more difficult by confronting your brother-in-law. Asking him about his fidelity status would embarrass him and possibly terminate their participation in any visit.

Because your sister is trying to make her marriage work in spite of the hurt her husband has caused, the kindest thing you could do for her and the children would be to make the reconciliation as easy as possible. Tempting as it may be, please don't stir the pot.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 10-year-old girl whose family is divided. My dad brought me up, and I love him. However, my aunt hates him. I don't really know why. Dad tells me she helped my mom argue with him. My aunt is nice to me. They rarely talk to each other anymore.

I don't know which side to take. I don't want to take sides and I don't plan to. My mother died a few years back and my dad took custody. I want to stay neutral, but I don't know who to trust. — IN THE MIDDLE IN MISSOURI

DEAR IN THE MIDDLE: Not knowing your father or your aunt, I can't decide this for you. I will point out, however, that when a couple is having a disagreement, it rarely helps if other family members get involved. What happens then is the person with less support feels ganged up on and becomes defensive.

If your aunt makes you feel torn between her and your dad, then what she's doing is wrong. It's OK to love both of them. While I agree that you should remain neutral, your father is the person who is raising you, and he deserves your love and loyalty unless he proves he cannot be trusted.

DEAR ABBY: My beautiful wife and I were a team for many years. She was the brains and I was the brawn. She took care of business matters, taxes and household duties. I did the repairs, vehicle upkeep and took care of the lawn and our garden. She was a computer whiz, while I remained computer illiterate.

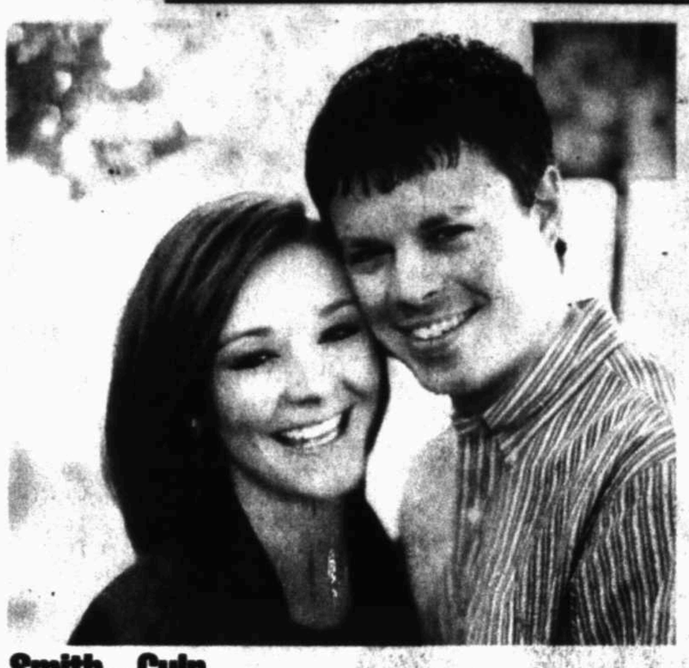
As we advanced in age, I made preparations for my demise. I had everything perfectly planned. Then the unexpected happened. My wife died suddenly. I was devastated. Then I realized I was also totally lost.

She had gone completely paperless. I had no knowledge of anything. Some things were filed in the computer and others in the filing cabinet. I didn't know her email address, any account numbers and no passwords. All business transactions stopped completely, and my credit rating plummeted.

It has been a year since her death and I'm still trying to get everything corrected. Please remind your readers that the word "assume" can be a real meanie. — SOMEWHERE IN TEXAS

DEAR SOMEWHERE: What a sobering letter. Usually the surviving spouse is the wife who was left in the dark. I'm glad you wrote, and I hope your letter will be a wake-up call to couples about sharing information.

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS



Smith - Culp

Mr. and Mrs. Dale Smith, of Midland, joyfully announce the engagement of their daughter, April Rene' Smith, to Corey Logan Culp, son of Mr. and Mrs. Tim Culp of Midland.

April is the granddaughter of Clarence Anthony Smith of Odessa, TX and the late Iva Jo Smith of Odessa, LouRay Harp of Midland, and William Harp of Andrews. Corey is the grandson of Patsy Hoermann of Andrews, Brookie Harcrow of Fairview, Texas, Claude and Dortha Harcrow of Buffalo, Texas, the late Joe Ray Culp and F. Wm. Hoermann, both of Andrews.

The bride-to-be graduated from Midland High School, Midland, TX. She attended the University of Texas and UTPB and was certified as an Elementary Education Teacher in 2008. She was employed at Anson Jones Elementary School as a second grade teacher and then worked at Stonegate Fellowship Church as the Missions Mobilizer. Following the couples' move to North Carolina, she will work on receiving her Masters in Professional Counseling.

The groom-to-be graduated from Midland Christian School, Midland, TX. He attended Texas Tech University and graduated with a degree in Petroleum Engineering. He worked in the Oil & Gas industry for four years before deciding on a career change, and decided to pursue the teaching profession. He is currently teaching Earth and Environmental Science at Randolph Early College High School in Asheboro, NC.

April and Corey will have a private ceremony on Saturday, November 30, 2013. Following a brief honeymoon, the couple will reside in Asheboro, NC.

Greer - Yocham

Dan and Kim Greer of Spring are pleased to announce the engagement of their daughter, Sarah Kate Greer, to Jason Todd Yocham, son of Todd and Becca Yocham of Midland.

Sarah is a 2007 graduate of Northland Christian School in Houston and Abilene Christian University in 2011. Jason is a 2006 graduate of Midland Christian School and Texas Tech University in 2011.

Sarah is currently employed by CrownQuest Operating, LLC and Jason is employed by Desert Production, Inc., both in Midland.

A wedding ceremony will be held at Chateau Cocomar in Houston on Saturday, February 22, 2014, at 6:00 PM.

Riley - Greer

Mr. Delbert Riley and Mrs. Brenda Riley are pleased to announce the engagement of their daughter, Kaitlyn Bailey Riley, to Dylan Thomas Greer, son of Mr. Jerry Greer and Mrs. Nira Greer of Midland, Texas. The bride-elect is the granddaughter of Mrs. Dorothy Riley and the late Mr. Roy Riley of Blackwell, Texas, and the late Mr. John Rodgers, and the late Mrs. Maurine Rodgers of Las Cruces, New Mexico. Dylan is the grandson of Mrs. Helen Greer and the late Roy Greer of Midland, Texas, and Mr. Niranjan Sharma and Mrs. Karen Sharma of Cedar Park, Texas.

The couple got engaged, after five years of dating, in Turks and Caicos on June 27, 2013, and plans a January 18, 2014, wedding in Midland, Texas.

Massie - Sautell

Mr. and Mrs. James Massie joyfully announce the marriage of their daughter, Kate Elaine Massie, to Zachary Dane Sautell on May 31st, 2013, in Dripping Springs, Texas. The ceremony was performed by Luke Spiry, a childhood friend of the groom. Attendants at the small family wedding were Ayla Sautell, sister of the groom; Teil Massie, brother of the bride; Alesha Cribb, bridesmaid; and Josh Adams, best man.

The groom is the son of Judy Sautell of Wilkeson, Washington, and Jeff and Dayna Sautell of Spanaway, Washington.

Escorted by her father, the bride's gown was adorned with antique crystal brooches belonging to her late grandmother. She carried a hand tied bouquet of white peonies, hydrangeas, cottage roses and sweet peas. Her antique-style wedding band was custom designed by the groom's brother-in-law.

Kate grew up in Midland and is a physical therapist in Bonney Lake, a suburb of Seattle, Washington. Zach grew up in the Seattle area and is employed as a CNC machinist.

Following a few days of relaxation in Florida, the couple returned to their home in the Seattle area. They will be taking an extended honeymoon next year.

Designer drugs falsely touted as safe, natural

Often referred to as "synthetic marijuana" or "spice," the use of several herbal mixtures that may produce psycho-active experiences similar to marijuana is becoming more popular. Sold under the pretense of being natural products and often labeled as "not for human consumption," these drugs have been easily purchased at head shops, gas stations and over the Internet. Although advertised as natural psycho-active plant material and therefore safe, further chemical analyses have shown that although they do contain some plant material the active ingredients are synthetic (designer) cannabinoids.

Cannabinoids are chemical compounds that have been known for centuries. The main prototype is THC or tetrahydrocannabinol found as the primary psycho-active drug in marijuana. Naturally occurring and synthetic cannabinoids are compounds that are similar in structure to THC, which was isolated and purified in 1965. Four decades of subsequent research into the complex pharmacology of this drug led to the discovery of cannabinoid receptors in the human brain. To date two such receptors (CB1 and CB2) are described. Study of these receptors indicates that this endogenous cannabinoid system appears to affect the reward structures of the brain by modulation of levels of the neuro-transmitter dopamine. Hence the potential for abuse and addiction is a proven fact. Because the chemicals present in spice have a high potential for abuse and no known medical benefit, the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) has designated these drugs as Schedule I controlled substances, which makes them illegal to sell, buy or possess. The manufacturers of these products attempt to evade these restrictions by substituting different chemicals in their mixtures, making the drugs even more dangerous.

Synthetic cannabinoids act on the CB receptors in much the same way as THC. However, some of the cannabinoids in spice bind more tightly to the receptors leading to a more profound and unpredictable outcome. Rather than the expected effect of elevated mood, relaxation and altered perception, some users may experience psychotic effects like extreme anxiety, paranoia and hallucinations. Emergency rooms and poison control centers are reporting other systemic effects such as rapid heart rate, vomiting and confusion. In addition elevated blood pressure and myocardial ischemia (reduced blood supply to the heart) leading to heart attacks are being seen. It is not uncommon for these substances to be spiked with other drugs such as PCP ("Angel dust") and other potent psychoactive drugs. Of particular concern is the fear that some of these products may contain heavy metal residues.

In 2012 a survey of illicit drug use among high school seniors indicates that use of these drugs is second only to marijuana in popularity. Because of the fact that these drugs are not easily detected in standard drug tests, their use in the work place is seemingly increasing. However, many companies are using specific testing for the cannabinoids in addition to the usual Urine Drug Screens (UDS), and detection is becoming more common.

Another emerging drug concern is that of bath salts. So named in order to evade restrictions imposed by the DEA, these synthetic chemicals are related to an amphetamine-like stimulant drug called cathinone found in the naturally occurring khat plant. These chemicals are rapidly gaining popularity in the U.S. and Europe as legal highs. Despite the DEA ban, many producers of these substances engage in creating new drugs by altering the chemical structures in order to evade legal restrictions. Sold under a variety of names such as "Ivory Wave," "Bloom" and "Cloud Nine," these drugs are known to have effects of other drugs like amphetamines and cocaine that produce euphoria and energizing effects. All of these drugs produce a surge in dopamine, thus affecting the reward system and regulation of movement. In the case of MDPV — the most common synthetic cathinone — brain dopamine is affected in the same way as with cocaine but at least 10 times more potently.

Because bath salts also produce a rise in another neuro-transmitter called serotonin, hallucinations are a common side effect. Emergency rooms and poison control centers are reporting an alarming increase in visits requiring medical attention because of racing heart rate, high blood pressure and chest pain along with paranoia, hallucinations and panic attacks. "Excited delirium" with breakdown of skeletal muscle and kidney failure is described, and intoxication from several of the synthetic cathinones has proved fatal in many reported cases.

Although touted as "safe and natural," experience shows that these drugs are anything but safe and natural and should be regarded as a serious health threat to anyone who may try them whether it be a first time experience or often repeated use.

Many health woes in teens seeking obesity surgery

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO — U.S. teens seeking weight-loss surgery have a startling number of health problems that used to be seen only in adults, according to a major government-funded study.

Half the teens had at least four major illnesses linked with their excess weight. Three out of four had cholesterol problems; almost half had high blood pressure or joint pain; and many had diseased livers or kidneys.

These kids weighed three times more than what is considered healthy, they weren't just teens "who want to fit into that cheerleading outfit better," said Dr. Thomas Inge, the study's lead researcher and a surgeon at Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center.

The study offers reassuring evidence that obesity surgery is generally safe for teens, echoing previous short-term research. While it is a drastic, last-ditch option, major complications including accidental injury to internal organs occurred in just 8 percent of teens. Less serious complications including bleeding and dehydration affected 15 percent of kids during the first month after surgery.

The study involved 242 teens who had surgery at five U.S. centers from 2007 through 2011. Results for the first month after surgery were released online Monday in the journal JAMA Pediatrics. The National Institutes of Health paid for the study.

In a recent scientific statement, the American Heart Association said obesity surgery may be the most effective treatment for what it called "severe obesity" in teens, a condition it said affects about 5 percent of U.S. children and is increasing nationwide. The group's threshold for severe obesity is a body mass index of at least 35; the average BMI in the study was 51.

Because lifestyle changes and medication rarely work for such obese teens, the statement said obesity surgery should be considered for those with related health problems who are psychologically mature enough to handle it.

The new results bolster evidence from smaller studies in teens and also suggest teens may do better, at least initially, than adults. Earlier 30-day research in adults found a few deaths after obesity surgery, although the risk was no greater than for other major operations. There were no deaths in the teen study.

A three-year follow-up report on more than 2,000 patients in the adult study was also published online Monday in the Journal of the American Medical Association. It showed adults generally had fewer obesity-related illnesses than in the teen study, and most weight loss occurred within the first year after surgery. Gastric bypass surgery, the most common operation in the U.S., resulted in more weight loss and more improvement in related illnesses than stomach banding, as other studies have shown. Three-year death rates were low, and similar for both procedures, but band patients had many more repeat surgeries.

In the teen study, whether obesity surgery resulted in lasting weight loss and better health remains to be seen; the researchers are still following the participants and calculating data.

But anecdotal reports from the teens suggest they're doing pretty well.

Chelsea Hale of Cincinnati has shrunk from 314 to 170 pounds — almost half her previous size — since having surgery three years ago at age 17 at Cincinnati Children's. Before surgery, Hale had a hormonal problem, heart blockage and sleep apnea — all linked with obesity and all have since subsided.

"I feel good, I can pretty much physically do anything," said Hale, now in nursing school.

Like 28 percent of the teens studied, she had gastric sleeve surgery, which involves removing part of the stomach and creating a smaller tube or sleeve-shaped stomach. She has to be careful about eating only small portions of foods, to avoid getting sick, but said otherwise she has no food restrictions.

Some teens in the study say they can no longer tolerate certain foods, including sugar, meat or dairy products.

Most teens had gastric bypass or stomach stapling, which creates a small pouch in the stomach and attaches it to the intestines. A handful had gastric band operations, in which surgeons position an adjustable band around the top of the stomach, and inflate it to shrink the stomach. This operation has not been approved for U.S. teens.

Inge, a pioneer in obesity surgery in teens, said he does about 30 to 40 operations each year at Cincinnati Children's and the numbers have increased slightly in recent years.

Kids must be severely obese to qualify. But many are so large that even when surgery results in substantial weight loss and better health, they can't shrink their BMI to below the obese range, Inge said. That underscores the need to find ways to prevent severe obesity, he said.

University of Colorado heart specialist Dr. Robert Eckel, an American Heart Association spokesman, said the study shows obesity surgery should be considered a reasonable approach for kids, but that the study results may represent a best-case scenario, since surgeons involved were all highly experienced.

Parents seeking obesity surgery for their teens should have them evaluated in centers that do lots of these operations, he said.

Harris County Sheriff's Deputy John Palermo and his dog Rico meet with children Feb. 18 at the TutorVille HUB in Houston. Schools have beefed up security, staged mock drills and added metal detectors, cameras and alarms to prevent violence. Some think teachers should be armed and the National Rifle Association wants armed police in every American school. Kristi Schiller thinks some special dogs might do the trick. She wants her charity, K9s4KIDS, to do for schools what it has done for police departments in the U.S. — place scores of trained dogs among their ranks through the nonprofit set up in 2009.

Advocates believe dogs will make schools safer

By Sue Manning
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — While some say school safety hinges on guns, cameras or alarms in classrooms, Mark Gomer and Kristi Schiller think specially trained dogs should take point in preventing violence in schools.

Gomer's for-profit company has sent a gun- and drug-detecting dog to patrol the halls of an Ohio high school, while Schiller is launching a nonprofit in Houston to give schools the trained canines for free. Their programs are still in their infancy, so questions remain about dogs that can distract, scare or send kids into sneezing fits. But they think they can cultivate their ideas to help schools across the country stay safe.

Gomer's first full-time safety dog is a year-old Dutch shepherd named Atticus, who reported to duty this school year at Oak Hills High School in Green Township in southwest Ohio.

The dog trained at the school before the summer break, said Gomer, co-owner of American Success Dog Training in Bridgetown, Ohio. As part of the company's School Protection Dog program, Atticus learned on the job about marching bands and school bells and the thunk of books hitting a locker.

Gomer, who has trained about 8,000 dogs over 20 years and has three children in the school district, suggested the dog after 20 students and six teachers were killed at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Conn.

Atticus has won over students, parents, teachers and district Superintendent Todd Yohey, who initially worried what people would think of him spending $10,000 on a dog.

Gomer has talked to a lot of parents and faculty, and they are saying it was money well-spent, he said.

Atticus spends his days on a leash with two security guards and goes home with Principal John Stoddard at night. Messages left for Stoddard were not immediately returned.

For her part, Schiller is looking to provide safety dogs to schools free of charge. She hopes her new initiative, K9s4KIDs, does for schools what her K9s-4COPs did for police departments. She has placed more than 60 dogs with agencies in three years.

"These canines are extremely social, yet highly qualified warriors that are accustomed to going straight to the source of a threat or shooter and disengaging the suspect armed with the weapon," said Schiller, a Houston mother and philanthropist.

The idea for K9s4KIDs grew out of school shootings and suggestions on applications for police dogs, she said.

"Something that came up was the lack of campus police or sufficient support for the law enforcement agencies that responded," Schiller said.

If a school applies for and is chosen to receive a dog, it will come fully trained and paid for. Buying and training a safety dog costs between $10,000 and $15,000, she said.

Schiller said it would be up to school officials to decide who will handle the dogs, what they will be trained to search for, and if a dog will be assigned to one school or several in a district.

Schools will also have to consider the expense of providing medical care, food, a home and handler for the dog.

As the programs get up and running, questions remain about possible health problems and distractions the dogs can cause.

But Gomer said that fear and allergies are nothing new. He said police departments have been bringing dogs into schools for years, and some children with disabilities use them, too.

"If a child is allergic or extremely fearful, the (safety) dog will steer clear," he said.

A school safety expert said those are concerns parents and schools will have to work out. Ken Trump, president of the Cleveland-based National School Safety and Security Services consulting firm, discussed the issue in general because he was not familiar with either program.

He said the dogs would have to be extremely social to deal with students' initial excitement.

"Kids are going to be all over those dogs," Trump said. "There are concerns to work around, but with the right dogs and right handlers and the right policies and procedures, they should be very beneficial."

He said the dogs encountering a gunman would be a benefit, but the relationships the kids build with the dogs and handlers and the sense of well-being they create will probably be more lasting and life-changing.

The dogs might be a distraction in the beginning, but they will become part of what students expect to see when they go to school, Trump said.

"There is so much these dogs can do, and they're always coming up with new ideas," said Ted Dahlin, a Harris County constable's deputy who serves on the K9s4COPs board of directors. "If I were going to pick a school to make trouble, it would be one I knew didn't have a dog."

Right at Home: Bar gear gets swanky, blends in with other furniture

By Kim Cook
Associated Press

Home beer and spirit-making have become popular hobbies. Bars and beverage stores feature a growing range of artisanal spirits and craft brews. Cocktail parties are back in vogue.

And retailers are responding to all this imbibing by offering furniture, barware and accessories with cosmopolitan flair. All you need are a few invitations, snacks and some good music for the party to begin.

Let's pop the cork on what's new:

"Nowadays, entertaining does not have to mean having a glitzy full bar. Bar carts have become more delicate, refined, and smaller in scale, so you can tuck them into a corner of a room or blend them in with the rest of the furniture," said Veranda magazine's market editor Catherine Lee Davis.

West Elm's Parker slim-profile cart in acorn-stained walnut veneer with brass rail trim has a mid-century vibe. The walnut-stained Dodson cart features a flip-down front concealing a mirror-lined interior with plenty of storage. And a cart in polished nickel with two foxed mirror shelves evokes Art Deco glamour. (www.westelm.com)

If you want the look of a built-in bar, consider Pottery Barn's modular collection of wine grids and drawered cabinets. In black or mahogany finish, the pieces can be configured to look like a hutch or buffet. (www.potterybarn.com)

Davis said that with barware, the trend is toward shaking it up. "We see lots of different materials like hammered silver, tortoise, or shagreen," she said. "It's all about mixing and matching. After all, entertaining should be about having fun."

Gent Supply Co. has a natty collection of coasters, glassware and flasks printed with illustrations of turn-of-the-century gentlemen duelers, narwhals, anchors, and animals dressed in distinguished garb. (www.gentsupplyco.com)

Artist Richard E. Bishop, known for wildlife etchings in the 1930s, '40s and '50s, has his work on an array of bar glasses and decanters. Ducks, trout, foxes and horses set a "country house" tone. (www.richardebishop.com)

A punchbowl that rests in the clutches of an octopus, and a sculpted shell held by a delicate coral stand are part of an aluminum barware collection at Z Gallerie. There's also a faux crocodile service tray in rich eggplant, studded with silver rivets, that makes a sophisticated statement.

Silver cocktail picks and stir sticks topped with airplanes evoke the Second World War. And a mirrored sign with phrases like "Stirred" and "Straight Up" printed in a gold retro font would make great wall art. (www.zgallerie.com)

JC Penney has a whimsical yet elegant wine decanter from Michael Graves Design that features his signature bird as built-in aerator. (www.jcp.com)

At Homegoods, there are hammered metal cocktail shakers with handy drink recipes printed on the side. Standing wine buckets are useful accessories, leaving more room on dining tables and buffets for nicely-sized tools — small muddlers, sieves, scoops and tongs, for example — that will have amateur bartenders looking like experts. (www.homegoods.com; www.surlatable.com)

Making a good martini may be an art, but how about making your own gin? No bathtub is required, just a kit like one from Uncommon Goods containing all the spices, juniper berries and accessories needed to turn garden-variety vodka into a custom gin.

New York artist Aymie Switzer's laser-etched cedar coasters depict neighborhood maps of many major cities, including Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston and San Francisco. Coasters recycled from old tires are stamped by Los Angeles artists with different graphic number fonts. And Colorado designer David Rasmussen's black walnut stemware is distinctive and beautiful. All at www.uncommongoods.com.

Whether it's a swanky gathering or a casual movie night, provide your drinking guests with a variety of interesting treats. Pier 1's Tasting Party collection includes one-bite ceramic dishes, shot glasses and spoons which can be stored in your home bar. Ebony buffalo-horn condiment spoons and mottled horn bowls from Williams-Sonoma would add flair. (www.pier1.com; www.williams-sonoma.com)

If you're setting up a first apartment and don't have much money, consider giving an old nightstand or tray table new life as a miniature bar. Hit flea markets and junk yards for salvaged tool trolleys, medical supply carts or old microwave stands and spiff them up with paint, paper or other decorative materials like stick-on tiles and mirror. The web has many artful ideas, including at www.curbly.com.

Integration of technology into home decor has come a long way

By Kim Cook

It's one thing to have a beautiful, comfy bed. But what if it also included a TV screen, game console and dimmable, color-changing lights?

Or say you've got just enough room in your apartment for a credenza or speakers, but not both. How about one piece that includes both — and a whole media system?

The integration of technology into home decor has come a long way since clunky TV screens peered out of armoires and media cabinets; today's super-thin screens can come embedded in the bathroom mirror or attached to the wall like pieces of art.

The "wallpaper" mode on Sharp's new, high-definition Aquos TV lets you display photos, paintings or other images as wall art when you aren't watching television. You can set a clock for display times, and the light level is reduced to get rid of glare. (www.sharpusa.com)

Want to stay on top of the morning news? Seura's TV screens embed in the bathroom vanity mirror. Robern's embed in the medicine cabinet. (www.seura.com; www.robern.com)

TV manufacturers are moving into OLED,— organic light emitting diode — technology, which can be linked to computers and other tech devices. It's thin as a pencil and able to be curved. (www.lg.com)

As for sound systems, Symbol Audio of Nyack, N.Y., has a New Audio Desk that incorporates high-quality speakers into a slim writing desk crafted from maple, walnut, oak or cherry.

Baby boomers may remember the family's old hi-fi system. While iPhones and iPads can now hold the equivalent of hundreds of Mitch Miller albums, there are still those among us who like the mid-century chic of a retro-styled system. Symbol Audio pays homage to the hi-fi with the Modern Record Console, a walnut cabinet outfitted with a hand-built turntable, amplifier and built-in wireless router.

"The act of removing an album from its sleeve, cleaning and placing it on the turntable is interactive and physical. There is an undeniable charm to vinyl that's more than just a fascination with the past," said Blake Tovin, Symbol's founder. (www.symbol-audio.com)

Designer Chris Cushingham of Brooklyn, N.Y., crafts his own version of the hi-fi console out of walnut and corrugated cardboard. He'll also make you a custom one using your record player, audio gear and LP collection. (www.cushdesignstudio.com)

Some vegetables come into their own in autumn

By Lee Reich
Associated Press

How green is your vegetable garden?

Just because summer's long gone and frost is in the air doesn't mean your garden has to be a scene of tawny colors, limp leaves and withered stems.

My garden remains very green, and the first step was staying ahead of the weeds.

Especially after midsummer, we gardeners tend to ease up on weed control, and it's then that heat-loving annuals like lamb's-quarters, purslane and pigweed start to take hold. For me, cooler weather brought quackgrass and creeping Charlie stealthily trying to — well, creep — in at the garden's edges. Regular weeding forays through summer and early fall took but a few minutes — much less than the effort that firmly established weeds would have required.

But lack of weeds alone doth not a garden make, and it was season-long, carefully chosen plantings that provided the lush greenery itself.

AUTUMN SALADS BEGIN WITH SPRING SOWINGS

I started planting for the present way back in early spring. I sowed kale seeds then that started yielding tasty leaves in early summer and will continue to do so for weeks to come. Brussels sprouts — for those who like them — would also be sown in early spring for a harvest that begins about now.

If you had stopped by my garden in late spring, you would have caught me sowing broccoli and cabbage seeds. It was odd to be planting these vegetables just as they were ready for harvest from early spring sowings. Yes, an early spring sowing of broccoli can keep up steam right into fall, but sometimes such plants peter out by midsummer. So I also start some fresh new plants for fall harvest.

Come early summer, I planted seeds of endive and escarole, a bed of which now stands out in the vegetable garden like a frothing sea of greenery.

Through summer I continued planting, selecting vegetables that would enjoy crisp, fall weather, then sowing their seeds according to the number of days they take to mature. So turnips and winter radishes went in in early August, then small radishes a couple of weeks later. Sometime during those weeks I also found space to sow parsley, rutabagas, and autumn's most tender and lush green, mbche.

Other vegetables that contribute to an autumn garden's vibrancy include Chinese cabbage and spinach. All these vegetables are green, lush through much of autumn and tasty.

ALL GREENERY IS NOT FOR EATING

My last planting of the season, around the middle of September, was just for lushness, not for eating. That planting was of cover crops, which are grown solely for the good of the soil. The cover crop I chose was a mix of oats and field peas. I sowed them in any beds that were cleared of summer crops — beans or corn, for example — and were not slated to receive any of the aforementioned fall vegetables.

Now, at about 8 inches high and still growing, the oats and peas will keep rain from washing away soil or leaching out nutrients, shade out any weeds trying to get a foothold, and enrich the ground with valuable organic matter. After frigid weather kills these plants in January or February, their rotting roots will leave behind channels for water and air. Best of all, a dense stand of cover crops, like the rest of the greenery, simply looks prettier than bare soil and decrepit plants.

'Steppable' plants for walkways, patios and more

By Dean Fosdick
Associated Press

Plants you can walk on are attractive additions to pathways. These low-lying perennials can withstand heavy foot traffic, release pleasant odors when crushed, smother weeds, and cushion your step in the narrow spaces between bricks or flagstones.

"You can use 'steppables' for all kinds of applications," said Kathy Gurnee, owner of Green Thumb Landscaping in Clinton, Wash.

"You can use them as groundcover in lieu of bark," she said. "On patios, pathways, rock walls and crevices. I like them around the bottoms of trees. They're also good for living roofs and living walls. They deliver a beautiful resilience."

Walkables generally are defined as creeping plants that don't exceed 12 inches in height, said John Schroeder, president of Valleybrook International Ventures Inc., a family owned horticultural operation in Abbotsford, British Columbia. The company's line of "Jeepers Creepers" includes around 100 varieties of low-to-the-ground herbs, mints, evergreens, ivy, moss and more.

"I like them for lawn repair or replacement," he said, adding that he stripped 900 square feet of turf grass from his own front yard and replaced it with creeping mazus, a dense, ground-hugging plant.

"It's just a gorgeous lawn application," Schroeder said. "I set out some 1-inch plugs at 12-inch spacings in September, and by July, they were one solid mass.

"They give me an inch-thick, lawn-like cover with purple flowers for a few weeks out of the year and no more mowing. Just some trimming and weeding around the edges."

Many walkable plants are drought-resistant, while others perform well in shade, on hard-to-maintain slopes, covering bulb gardens, spilling from containers or protecting high-use areas.

A sampling:

■ For areas with moderate to heavy foot traffic: Corsican sandwort has moss-like foliage with white flowers in spring. Does well in damp, dry or shaded settings. Celestial spice pratia has tiny green leaves covered by deep blue flowers all summer.

■ For fragrance: Corsican mint, the smallest of the mint family. It delivers a pleasant creme-de-menthe fragrance when crushed. It also does well in shade. Creeping thyme is a fast-growing groundcover that gives off a spicy scent. Most thyme varieties are drought-tolerant and can survive moderate traffic. Their flowers are attractive to butterflies.

■ As a lawn substitute: Alpine moss ear grows into a dense carpet with white flowers in summer. It thrives in dry climates. Blue star creeper is a dark green perennial producing soft blue flowers through summer. Turkey tangle fogfruit has gray leaves with white to lavender blooms from spring to fall, and is deer-resistant. Creeping mazus, with its low mat of green leaves studded by small lavender flowers, tolerates hot, humid summers.

Getting walkables established is half the fun. The other half can be had with pruning.

"Corsican mint, if you let it go, will grow out and cover the flagstones as well as the weeds," Gurnee said. "I like to be a little creative. I use a pair of scissors and trim it back in some sort of design so the stones aren't covered. That way you can see the tones and textures of the stones up against the plant colors."

UTPB College of Education Achieves NCATE Re-Accreditation

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin College of Education received word today that they had achieved full re-accreditation by the National Council or Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE).

"The preparation and hard work has paid off," said David Watts, president of UTPB. "NCATE is the professional accrediting organization for schools, colleges and departments of education in the United States, and UTPB meets the gold standard."

UTPB is only one of 19% of Texas four-year colleges (15 out of 81) to meet NCATE's standards and the second University of Texas institution. NCATE reviews on-campus and online undergraduate and graduate programs offered by a university.

"The NCATE accreditation is yet another indicator of the quality of our programs," said Frank Hernandez, dean of the College of Education. "Only about 656 colleges and schools of education nationwide can lay claim to this honor."

Hernandez added that national accreditation will be a true benefit to Texas' school children: "The re-accreditation of our programs in the College of Education is testament to our commitment to innovation and relevancy at the undergraduate and graduate levels. It recognizes our partnerships with the Permian Basin school districts and acknowledges the outstanding talents of our faculty."

Dean Hernandez shared that research shows students exposed to teachers who graduate from NCATE accredited universities perform better in the classroom and their test scores are often higher.

"These teachers have strong content knowledge and excellent skills in delivering that knowledge," Hernandez said. "There is evidence that test scores in math and reading improve when students are taught by graduates from NCATE accredited institutions."

"The public is crying out for accountability in education, and we're holding our educators to the highest national standard. We want Texas teachers to be the best prepared," Watts said. "We want them to love their jobs, and UT Permian Basin is giving them the tools they need to be the most successful."

The UTPB College of Education currently has more than 100 students working toward teacher certification, and 250 students enrolled in graduate programs. UTPB teaching candidates currently have a 99 percent pass rate on all Texas State Certification Exams.

K-9 Cottage Cookie Company makes healthy treats for dogs, cats

By Paul Wiseman
Special to the Reporter-Telegram

It would take a Dr. Dolittle to interview the end users of K-9 Cottage Cookie Company's treats, but the feedback from the humans that buy for their animals is very good. Those humans find Susie Cearly, who owns the company along with her husband, Roy, at their Midland Downtown Farmer's Market booth each week the market is open.

Susie Cearly started baking for her own dogs — four of them at last count — in 2009, concerned about unsafe and unwholesome ingredients found in many brands of dog food and dog treats. Her first recipes were based on those she encountered as the moderator of a dog lovers' discussion group on Facebook. Already concerned about ingredients in off-the-shelf dog treats, she said the Facebook group "got me thinking. I took some of their recipe ideas and tweaked them, starting with the basic idea, then going on my own."

All ingredients are natural or organic, and she depends on one company for her stone-ground whole wheat flour. "If they go out of business, I don't know what I'll do," Cearly said.

Her own dogs became guinea pigs and loved the treats, which prompted her to begin selling a few at the Midland Downtown Farmers Market in 2009. "We started so small," she recalled. "In the beginning, I was taking 20 small bags to the Farmer's Market, and I would sell out. It became all I could do to keep up."

Now she offers three sizes of bags with six flavors, and she basically bakes all week, especially when Stanton's Old Sorehead Days are in session, where she sells everything she can bake. Her husband helps her when he can, especially on Sorehead weeks.

Some of the flavors seem surprising considering that they are for dogs. Fall offerings include a pumpkin flavor, gingerbread and, the most surprising, blueberry-vanilla. Her own dogs are still the flavor guinea pigs, and Cearly said she herself was amazed that they liked the blueberry flavor. She uses peanut butter, flaxseed and agave for flavoring, stressing that there is never any sugar used. There are also gluten-free options.

Signature Stag Men's Wear opening in Cornerstone Shopping Center

MELLA MCEWEN
Reporter-Telegram oil editor

Opening its doors Monday, Nov. 11 will be Signature Stag Men's Wear in Cornerstone Shopping Center, 4400 N. Midland Drive.

Owner Natalie Pevehouse said she carries casual career and sports wear for men. "I also carry some high-end brands that the closest you could find them until now is Dallas."

Inventory also includes shaving lines, shoes, belts and some jewelry.

Said the self-described entrepreneur, "This is a 100 percent made-for-men store."

She explained, "Guys don't like shopping, so I tried to make the experience enjoyable." To do so, she offers beer on tap. She also installed two large flat screen televisions that will be playing sports all the time so shoppers "never have to miss the big game."

Generally, she said, "guys like three things: Beer, sports and women. So my decor includes 1940s-style pin-up girls." Her decor also offers a taste of a hunting lodge, with antler chandeliers.

She carries the traditional sizes but can custom-order merchandise, she said.

Hours are 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday.

She has a Facebook page and is in the process of building a website.

Jersey Mike's Subs is arriving in West Texas with the opening of its first West Texas location in Parks Legado, 7270 E. Highway 191. The restaurant will officially open its doors Wednesday, Nov. 13.

The location's owners, Mario Betancourt and longtime colleague Abelardo "Lalo" Martinez, are area directors for Jersey Mike's Subs covering the West Texas and New Mexico areas. The two will be opening a location in Midland's Cornerstone Shopping Center, 4400 N. Midland Drive, early next year and plan an El Paso location in the coming years. Betancourt brings exceptional restaurant expertise to Jersey Mike's with more than 25 years of experience in multi-unit franchise operations in domestic and international markets.

The two will hold a grand opening and free sub fundraiser to support Permian High School Football from Wednesday through Sunday, Nov. 24, circulating 10,000 coupons offering free regular subs for a minimum $1 contribution to Permian Football.

Buy umbrella insurance when net worth reaches $500,000

DAVE RAMSEY

Dear Dave,

At what level of net worth should someone consider umbrella insurance?

Matt

Dear Matt,

I think it's something you should consider if you have a net worth of $500,000 or greater. But first you should be clear on what net worth really means.

Net worth is what you own minus what you owe. So the fact that you make $1 million a year is not the determining factor in whether you're a millionaire. The only people who use that definition are the financially uninformed and politicians who twist things around and throw out catch phrases designed to further their own agendas.

That being said, I would get umbrella insurance, which is extra liability insurance, when you reach the half-million mark in net worth. Before that I'd suggest carrying $500,000 worth of liability on your homeowner's, car insurance and any other policies that have liability attached to them. Once you reach and cross that $500,000 threshold in net worth, however, I'd advise picking up another $1 million in liability insurance, called an umbrella policy, that attaches to the top of that and covers everything for an additional $1 million.

It's a great buy, Matt. You can get it for about $200 a year in most states.

—Dave

Dear Dave,

Should rental property debt be included in the debt snowball?

Matthew

Dear Matthew,

No, it should not. The debt snowball is Baby Step 2 in my plan, where you stop saving and pay off all debt except for your home — and I would include rental properties in there — from smallest to largest. Before this, you should start with Baby Step 1, which is saving up a starter emergency fund of $1,000.

As a reminder, Baby Step 3 is going back and fully funding your emergency fund with three to six months of expenses. Notice that I said expenses, not income. After that, Baby Step 4 is investing 15 percent of your household income in Roth IRAs and other pre-tax retirement plans, and Baby Step 5 means setting aside college money for the kids.

Baby Step 6 is where you pay off your home, and Baby Step 7 is when you relax, build wealth and give. Again, Baby Step 6 would include any rental properties that weren't bought and paid for with cash. My advice would be to pay off your home before taking care of the rental properties, and that's simply a risk management perspective. Now, if you owe just $30,000 on your rental properties but still have a $3 million mortgage hanging over your head, you might go ahead and knock out the rental properties first.

Think about it this way, Matthew. Which would you rather lose in a worst-case scenario: your home or your rental properties? If they're in the same general range of debt, I'm going to pay off the home first and the rental properties last.

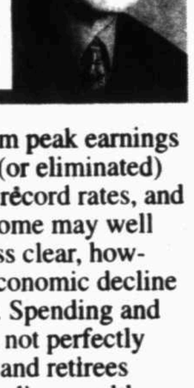
Take gloom-and-doom economic scenarios with grain of salt



RAY PERRYMAN

America has long been known as the land of opportunity, but a flurry of recent reports casts some doubt on our nation's ability to continue to see rising incomes and lifestyles. One forecast calls for median incomes to fall, and a recent book talks about a "barbell" economy, where people are either rich or poor (with few in between). While these conclusions may be (and probably are) valid, I disagree to some extent with the grim and disheartening picture of the future these statistics are often used to paint. Let's peel back the onion a bit.

First, a look at the idea that median incomes could fall over the next few decades. Median income is simply the dollar amount at which half of households make more and half make less. So when that number falls, more people are clustering at the lower levels. Economists Richard Burkhauser of Cornell University and Jeff Larrimore, a staffer on the Congressional Joint Committee on Taxation, pointed out that demographic factors could end up pushing incomes down for the next 30 years or more. They went on to note that if something doesn't cause incomes to rise, economic decline could ensue and endure.

This notion is an alarming one: that families could be making less money in the future than they are now. But that's not the end of the story. As the authors pointed out, it's demographics at work, with the large generation of baby boomers reaching an age where they are retiring or downshifting to part-time work. The mathematical fact is that when more households are making less money, median income falls. But that's really not the same thing as saying that working-age people will be worse off. It is a well-established fact that an individual's earnings grow over time with work experience, and for many people peak earnings are reached shortly before retirement. This life-cycle phenomenon has been known for decades and is routinely taught in elementary economics classes.

Over the next few decades, the national economy will see people shifting from peak earnings to reduced (or eliminated) incomes at record rates, and median income may well fall. It is less clear, however, that economic decline will follow. Spending and income are not perfectly correlated, and retirees will be spending wealth accumulated over decades. As money now sitting on the sidelines in the form of retirement accounts is reinserted into the economy, there will be a definite upside. Certainly, we would like to see the standard of living continue to trend upward and working families enjoying growing incomes. The simple mathematics of a declining median income level does not eliminate this possibility, and we could well have both patterns (median incomes falling due to a bulge in the retiree population and rising living standards for working families) happening at the same time.

Another alarming story I saw had to do with the "barbell" economy, with growing numbers of people at the top and bottom ends of the income spectrum and fewer in between. The idea that America is going to see income inequality grow rapidly in the years to come is extremely troublesome for some people. I've talked about this before, and I'll say it again: in and of itself, income inequality is not a terrible thing. If our economy can offer large financial incentives to those with the will to innovate, we all benefit. As the business complex becomes more complicated, individuals who work hard and embrace the changing technologies and methods have the potential to reap large rewards. As long as there are pathways for hard workers to end up in the upper tier (and there are, through education, training, preparation and perseverance), the simple fact that incomes are unequal is not a terrible thing. Of course, the more people we can move to that upper end, the better. When you just run the numbers ahead and assume no improvement in educational outcomes (and, hence, earning potential) in various ethnic groups, the

Rental scammers targeting Permian Basin

The West Texas oil boom has produced a lot of jobs in the Permian Basin. Unfortunately, that has led to a serious housing shortage — and an opportunity for scam artists to take advantage of people.

BBB warns that Midland is being targeted by thieves running the Nigerian Rental Scam. In this scam, the crook advertises a home for rent that does not belong to him, usually at a big discount. People who respond to the ad get a letter explaining why the "owner" is renting cheaply and can't be there in person. A mission trip in Africa is a common reason.

If you keep corresponding, they will get you to wire money and offer to mail you the key. If you send the money, 1) you don't get the key, 2) you go to the house to find the real owner knows nothing about it and the place isn't available to rent, and 3) your money is gone with the wind.

BBB has received a number of reports from people in the Midland area who experienced this scam. In one recent case, a person sent the scammers a $2,000 deposit.

The scammers will sometimes take on the name of someone who rented the house in the past, while pretending to be the homeowner.

One helpful hint BBB has discovered: If you take a sentence or phrase from a scam email and paste it into a search engine, you will often find an exact match on scam-related discussion forums, including all the same typos and punctuation mistakes.

This snippet from a recent rental scam email is a dead giveaway: "You can reach agreement with me owner , because of the issue i experience with those dishonest agent We decide to left with the key, remote and the papers. Note: You can drive by the house for now to see the outside since i and every member of my family are out of town due to my missionary work..."

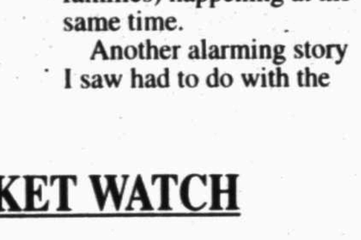
Lots of reasons why the person isn't available and can't get you the key right away. Don't fall for it!

BBB advises renters of the following red flags to look out for:

- The deal sounds too good to be true. Scammers often list a rental for a low price to lure in victims. Find out how comparable listings are priced, and if the rental comes in suspiciously low, walk away.
- The landlord is located elsewhere and prefers to communicate via e-mail. Scammers might say they have just been relocated out of the country for a job or missionary work — don't believe it.
- The landlord requires a substantial deposit. Don't pay any money before inspecting the home, inside and out.
- The landlord asks the renter to wire money. Money sent via wire transfer service is very difficult to retrieve and once the scammers have picked it up, there is little recourse. Your money is gone forever.

MARKET WATCH

Adding up the signs points to no tapering in the near future



Bhupen Agrawal is Managing Director - Branch Manager of Wells Fargo Advisors' Midland office.

Amit Agrawal is an Associate Vice President - Investment Officer with offices in Midland and Austin.

Thanks to some overly-enthusiastic economic projections that look more and more out of line with reality, and a dysfunctional Congress that caused a very partial, short-term government shutdown, the Federal Reserve (Fed) appears likely to allow the current pace of quantitative easing (QE) to continue unabated. The stock market has been in celebration mode as a result.

In our opinion, the Fed is secretly counting its blessings and breathing a collective sigh of relief that the September Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting did not lead to a reduction in monthly bond purchases. What a market debacle that could have been. Several Fed officials have made comments implying that it will likely be at least several months until the U.S. central bank makes any type of QE adjustment. That makes sense to us.

Our central bankers have been optimistic that economic growth was ready to accelerate along with the pace of improvement in the labor market. Recent data, however, suggested that was not quite the case. Sustainably better conditions are what the Fed is looking for. It expected economic growth this year to be between 2.3 percent and 2.6 percent. While not all that far from Wells Fargo Advisors' expected 2 percent rate, it does not look like we are going to get there. And the Fed's prediction that growth next year would increase to nearly 3.5 percent seems like quite a stretch in this strategist's opinion. But then, an overly optimistic Fed is nothing new.

And look for our elected officials to do their best to gum up the works and take us down to the eleventh hour again when the short-term continuing resolution to fund government operations expires in three months. While the term "grand bargain" has been thrown around frequently over the last week or so, we believe such an agreement is unlikely given the partisanship in our nation's capital these days. In the unlikely event that such an agreement is hammered out, it may not really be that grand in reality. A series of continuing resolutions that takes us through next year's mid-term elections is the most likely outcome.

The stumble out of the gate for the new health care law, and the change in Fed leadership early next year may also have some influence on when QE is adjusted. Businesses are still uncertain over the potential costs they will be taking on to hire more employees, and many have cut down on the number of payroll hours or have added temporary employees only. In addition, Janet Yellen should be quite easily confirmed as the new Fed chief. The FOMC will likely want to give Yellen the reins and allow her to initiate and control the next phase of monetary policy.

When we add it all up, the tapering phase of QE is unlikely to start until the first few months of 2014, at the earliest.

TREATS

From 1F

Earlier this year Cearly fell and broke her wrist, which has slowed her down, causing her to work with just one hand for awhile. She is still not quite back to full strength yet.

She has a special rack in the oven that allows her to bake several pans of treats at once.

Regular customers call or email after looking at the K-9 Cottage website, especially in the winter months when the MDFM is only in session on the second Saturday of the month. Those customers rely on Cearly to deliver, or they go by her home.

Since she bakes essentially all week now, it would seem that K-9 Cottage is at full capacity, especially with her injury. Expansion could be in the future, but not right now, Cearly said. "In a perfect world, I would co-produce the product with someone else, but I don't want the product to be out of my personal control, either. I want this to continue to be hands-on. I want a tight hold on the quality control."

And, by the way, cats are not left out — Cearly offers "catnip cookies" along with the dog treats.

Midland Park Mall will be welcoming a new retailer in time for Black Friday.

Stride Rite, a leading children's shoe retailer, will open this month in a 1,233-square-foot location between Radio Shack and Legacy Harley Davidson in the J.C. Penney court.

That location's former tenant, Fix It With Frosting, has located to a new 998-square-foot shop next to James Avery facing the mall's north parking lot. Fix It With Frosting now offers an exterior entrance and patio area. Also new is a menu that includes cupcakes, cakes, pastries, ice cream, milk, coffee, soda, tea, energy drinks, breads, pre-boxed sandwiches, baked goods — except for cookies — pastries, milk shakes and smoothies. More information is available at www.fixitwithfrosting.com or by calling 689-3090.

In the mall's Food Court, Famous Cajun Grill has completed renovations and is now open in its redesigned 585-square-foot location.

"We're excited to offer the addition of Stride Rite and additional dining enhancements to the community and our visitors," said Lyndsey Kees, director of marketing and business development. "We're committed to providing the community with an exceptional shopping experience that includes a wide variety of retail options."

PERRYMAN

demographics of population growth again kick in and offer a bleak picture. With improved outcomes, however, upward mobility remains readily achievable.

Few economics-related topics are nearer or dearer to most people than their pocketbooks, and economists spend huge amounts of time and energy analyzing trends in income levels. Sometimes, however, the interpretations of patterns in the underlying data (whether by the original analyst or by pundits reporting on it) verge on scare tactics. Income inequality is a major hot button for many, while others discuss the shrinking middle class. Clearly, these things have the potential to be problematic. However, I would take some of the gloom and doom stories crowding media outlets with the proverbial grain of salt (and a freshly peeled onion).

New website offers social networking, knowledge tools for oil and gas professionals

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com.

Oil and gas producers are increasingly sharing expertise and best practices with one another as they seek the most effective ways to develop the unconventional reservoirs popping up across the nation.

Now, just as other industries have turned to the Internet and social media to share information and communicate, a new website is offering the oil and gas industry the same venue.

"Our goal is to create a community of oil and gas professionals sharing knowledge and expertise," said David Kent, president, cofounder and principal investor in Oilpro.com, described as a blend of social media and knowledge-sharing tools. After a month in operation, it already had 16,000 registered users.

Added Kent, who created Rigzone with his father and operated it until it was sold in 2010, "A lot of other sites have this two-way interaction that we're not seeing in the oil and gas industry. You see it in the tech sector but the oil and gas industry has been late to adapt."

Kent said the ultimate goal is for Oilpro.com to become a global site serving the upstream, midstream and downstream sections of the oil and gas industry.

Users will be able to build online profiles similar to those in Linked In. They can also connect with the equipment and projects they worked on, for example a Nabors drilling rig that drilled a well in Midland County. A rig hand who worked on that well can connect with that rig, post photos and stories about his experience and connect with others who also worked on the rig or elsewhere in the Permian Basin. The company has a database of all the rigs active around the globe, both onshore and offshore.

Kent acknowledged that the site borrows concepts from others, such as knowledge-sharing tools as seen on Reddit, and a news aggregate model like The Drudge Report or his Rig Zone, which he set up as a publishing site that gathered links to news articles and hosted original content.

"The user base will define what's discussed," he said, noting that users will be able to not only write articles but post questions. In fact, he said of the various sections on Oilpro, "I'm most excited about the question and answer forum."

Hydraulic fracturing is a very popular topic, Kent noted, and a technology that has been honed in Midland and the Permian Basin. "It's just now going global, reaching places like Russia and Australia. They're about 10 years behind. Imagine someone in Midland sharing their expertise with someone halfway around the globe."

Someone working in the deepwater Gulf of Mexico could offer expertise to someone working in the deep waters off Brazil, he added.

Health, safety and the environment will also be popular topics, Kent predicted, pointing out that, despite technological advances in drilling rigs, "humans are still marching around powerful machinery."

The site will also be accessible to the general public, who can ask those who work in the industry on a daily basis about their work, their technology and how it impacts the environment.

"They can see the people who work in the industry aren't evil," Kent said. "In my opinion, those in the industry have as much, if not more, respect for the environment because it's their lifeblood."

Communication, he said, can impact the stigma surrounding the industry. Though his father worked in the oil and gas industry and his grandfather, W.D. Kent, was president of Reading & Bates and had a rig named after him, he himself didn't have hands-on experience in the industry. "By trade I'm a software developer. It seems software developers avoid the oil and gas industry because of the stigma surrounding it. But I love the industry. I see a lot of opportunity for innovation."

Though some in the industry may balk at the openness of information, "In the end I think they'll find Oilpro a good resource to convey the ethics of the industry and how it operates," Kent said. "In the end, it will be good for the industry and a great format for communication."

Crude price run-up gives boost to petroleum index

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

A run-up in crude prices above $100 gave a late-quarter boost to the Texas Permian Basin Petroleum Index. The September index was 5.9 percent above September 2012 levels.

Karr Ingham, the Amarillo economist who prepares the index, said crude prices averaged $102.90 in September, up 12.6 percent from the $91.90 averaged last September. For the year, prices have averaged $94.65, up 2.1 percent from $92.71 averaged through the first three quarters of 2012.

Ingham attributed the rise in prices to August concerns that the United States was about to become militarily involved in Syria's civil war.

"Interestingly," Ingham said, "even though prices continued to be in excess of $100 a barrel, the regional rig count declined for the third consecutive month and remains below its 2012 peak by some 60 rigs."

The September rig count averaged 381 rigs, down 8.4 percent from 416 last September. So far this year, the rig count has averaged 390 rigs, down 7.1 percent from 420 in the same period of last year.

Also down, reported Ingham, is the number of drilling permits issued by the Railroad Commission. The agency issued 665 permits in September, down 11.2 percent from 749 issued last September. The commission has issued 7,598 permits so far in 2013, down 5.7 percent from 8,060 last year.

Operators, however, remained very active, reporting 1,050 oil completions in September, up 154.9 percent from 412 reported last September. Operators have completed 9,985 oil wells so far in 2013, up 133.5 percent from 4,255 a year ago.

High rates of drilling continue to boost oil production volumes, with September volumes 1.8 percent above year-ago levels. Production volumes this year are 5 percent above 2012 levels.

Those volumes brought higher values thanks to higher commodity prices in September. September production was valued at $2.9 billion in September, up 14.6 percent from $2.52 billion last September. Permian Basin oil production so far this year is valued at $24.4 billion, up 7.3 percent from $22.8 billion last year.

Ingham noted that the Permian

GOODNIGHT

White paper stresses need for oilfield workers to get adequate sleep

By Paul Wiseman
Special to the Oil Report

Working long hours while living in your own home can be hard enough, but when it happens at a remote drill site or other distant location, sleepiness can lead to mistakes, equipment damage and even serious injury. A white paper commissioned by Target Logistics and written by sleep expert Nancy H. Rothstein makes this point and suggests remedies.

In the executive summary, the paper, entitled "Optimizing Sleep for an Optimal Workforce in the Oil, Gas and Mining Industries," states, in regard to workers at remote sites, "…companies that provide their workers with lodging that offers optimal sleep comforts, along with tools to promote quality sleep, have seen both performance and economic benefits."

Not only do oilfield workers face long, physically demanding workdays, they often rotate between day and night shifts and may work many days without any time off. Then, says Rothstein, "Too often, the 'home' they return to after a long day's or night's work lacks the facilities, comforts and amenities essential to their health and well-being. Instead, the facility they return to must be a place for rejuvenation, nourishment, camaraderie and — for more reasons than generally recognized — sleep."

Performance, productivity and safety are among the top issues with sleep deprivation listed. Working 18 consecutive hours reduces all three, but Rothstein points out that consecutive nights of five to six hours of sleep will magnify the damage.

Since oilfield workers operate heavy machinery, drive large trucks and handle huge lengths of pipe and other inventory, even a slight miscalculation or a split-second delay in reaction time can, and has, resulted in injury and even death. Rothstein argues that the costs of inadequate sleep and relaxation are too high for companies to ignore.

The paper states, "A study of construction workers in oil and gas projects in China, by Dr. Margaret Chan, illuminates this critical risk.

"Dr. Chan's research showed that 'previously identified factors like failure to use equipment or failure by individual workers to follow safety procedures are heavily influenced by fatigue. If you eliminate fatigue, you also eliminate other so-called causes of accidents. Previous research shows fatigue can cause performance impairment equivalent to or greater than 0.10 percent of blood alcohol concentration, a level deemed unacceptable for driving a crane or operating dangerous construction equipment or machinery.'"

Employee health in general is also at risk with too little sleep.

After detailing the human and economic cost of inadequate sleep, Rothstein's white paper addresses solutions.

The best sleep environment must be dark, cool, quiet and comfortable, she maintains. Regarding darkness, even dim light from a clock or a few rays of sun leaking around a curtain can disrupt sleep, she says, so blackout curtains should be in every bedroom on a remote location — especially for those who work nights and sleep days.

Blue light in particular signals the body that it is time to wake up or to stay awake. Light from computers and televisions is often skewed toward this end of the light spectrum, making a pre-bedtime TV movie or Facebook session a less-than-ideal way to end the day. To counteract the blue-light effect, Rothstein recommends blue-light blocking glasses, a sort of specialized sun glasses. They could also be worn by workers returning home from the night shift, so that the early morning sun would not wake them up just when they need to be going to bed.

As for the other sleep criteria, if quiet cannot be achieved, earplugs are an option. A cool room, no warmer than 68°F is ideal. And, of course, a comfortable bed is vital.

The paper makes the case that these things are not just up to the employer. The employee can contribute by avoiding alcohol or caffeine before bedtime, engaging in relaxing activities in that time frame and by going to bed in time to get their required eight or so hours of sleep.

These suggestions are not just appropriate for the oil industry. It will not be a surprise that sleep deprivation is not limited to the oilfield. Rothstein cites a 2008 CDC study estimating that up to 30 percent of the U.S. workforce is sleep deprived. So everyone can benefit from doing what it takes to get a good night's sleep.

ARMANDO ARENIVAS

Hello! Hope your kelly is high!

I will call this week's oilfield story "Sheepdog!" This Ain't No Bull!

Sheepdog was the nickname of a man killed in an oilfield accident in the mid-80s. I've heard tales about what happened, but I don't know for sure because I wasn't there.

The other day I was talking with Mike Kennemer, the relief driller on our rig, and the name Sheepdog entered the conversation. Mike said, "I sure miss him." I told him that I miss him also so I decided to write a story in memory of him. I hope some of the young hands will learn from it.

The man I am speaking of was a very dear friend of mine; he was a very happy man and could put a smile on anyone's face. Sheepdog was always telling jokes and singing a song. One song that comes to mind went like this: "My momma was a driller, my daddy a derrick hand, little sister Susie was a damn good motor man."

I was drilling days for TRG Drilling Co. and Sheepdog's brother was working for me. Sheepdog was working for ARD Drilling. In the middle of a cold winter night, the phone began to ring. I was half asleep when I answered it. Sheepdog's brother had called to tell me he would not be able to make it to work in the morning; his brother had been in an oilfield accident. Still half asleep, I told him OK and hung up the phone. About five minutes later I woke up and thought I must have been dreaming. I woke my wife up and asked her if I had just been talking on the phone. She said yes, it was one of my hands; something about an accident.

I called the hand back to find out what he had told me. He told me his dear brother had been killed in an accident. I asked what happened and he said he didn't know, and began to cry. I told him I was very, very sorry — what do you say to a man who has just lost his brother? I told him to take off as long as he needed.

During that night, the morning crew was jetting the pits. They had just finished the well and after the pits were jetted the oil company would release the rig. The jetting was going good and the derrick hand told Sheepdog to lower the riser — to get the fluid level in the other pit down.

When Sheepdog jumped up on top of the pit, he slipped and right before falling in; he was grabbing for anything he could find to keep from falling. What he grabbed was an electric line going across the pits to the lights, and took it in with him. Needless to say, it electrocuted him. A great loss to everyone.

I think about that event every time my crew and I go to jet the pits. It has haunted me ever since, and probable will for the rest of my life. A lot of people say, "Time will heal." I have found that time only serves to dull the pain.

I hope this will be a learning tool for the young hands: Sheepdog was young. When things are going good, anything can still happen. Always stay on top of the situation.

The Permian Basin hand of the week is Willie Stephenson from Hobbs, N.M. He is a tool pusher for McVay Drilling Co. Rig #6. Keep up the good work, Willie.

Keep it safe. Talk at you next week.

Legacy Reserves announces Third Quarter 2013 results

MIDLAND — Legacy Reserves LP announced third quarter 2013 results.

The company reported record production of 20,043 Boe/d, a 3 percent quarterly increase, as production from acquisitions and development projects were partially offset by the impacts of third-party plant downtime and natural gas line pressure issues in the Permian Basin.

Legacy also reported record revenue of $136.2 million and record adjusted EBITDA of $76.2 million, representing increases of approximately 15 percent and 12 percent, respectively, over results in the prior quarter. Key drivers of these improvements were increased production, improved WTI crude oil prices and a positive one-month hedge lag effect that were partially offset by higher cash settlements paid on our commodity hedges.

Distributable cash flow was $44.1 million 77 cents per unit, representing a 14 percent increase over the second quarter. Legacy has declared a $0.585 per unit quarterly distribution, marking the 12th consecutive quarterly increase and resulting in 3.5 percent year-over-year growth.

Cary D. Brown, chairman, president and chief executive officer of Legacy Reserves GP LLC, the general partner of Legacy, commented: "Legacy posted record production, revenue and adjusted EBITDA this quarter. I am proud of the tremendous job done by our employees, whose efforts to grow production, together with favorable oil prices, helped generate these outstanding results. Although we faced infrastructure issues in the Permian Basin that will likely persist in the fourth quarter, we are hopeful that these issues will be addressed by midstream providers in due time.

"Our oil-focused drilling efforts continue to generate solid results. Our Wolfberry program is going well. Our most recent horizontal Bone Spring well, which came online in September, exceeded our expectations, and we recently completed another Bone Spring well that will be in production this month. As we announced in September, we expanded our 2013 capital budget to $100 million. Accordingly, we expect to accelerate our capital spending in the fourth quarter and are looking forward to more success.

"During 2013, we have closed 11 acquisitions of oil-weighted producing properties at attractive metrics for approximately $100 million. While the third quarter was relatively quiet on the acquisition front, we continue to evaluate acquisitions of various sizes in all of our core areas. As always, we are committed to remaining disciplined in our evaluation approach and corresponding offers. The acquisition market over the past few years has tended to be more active in the fourth quarter, so we remain hopeful of additional acquisitions in late 2013 and 2014.

INDEX

Basin is seeing virtually no gas-directed exploration and production activity, due in large part to low commodity prices.

Natural gas prices averaged $3.39 per Mcf in September, up 31.9 percent from $2.57 last September. Gas prices this year are averaging $3.59 per Mcf, up 41.8 percent from $2.53 in 2012.

Producers reported four natural gas completions in September, exactly half the eight reported last September. Producers have completed 76 gas wells this year, down 50.3 percent from 153 in the first nine months of 2012.

Despite low levels of activity, Ingham noted that gas production volumes are not declining rapidly, largely because of the production of casinghead gas as a by-product of "the extraordinary levels of crude oil activity and production."

Natural gas volumes in September were 0.6 percent above last September and are up 0.3 percent so far this year compared to the same time last year. Those volumes are valued at $312.2 million in September, up 32.7 percent from $235.2 million last September. Production volumes to-date this year are valued at $3 billion, up 41.7 percent from $2.13 billion last year.

MEETINGS

WTGS to discuss source rock reservoirs

The West Texas Geological Society will meet Tuesday, Nov. 12 at Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Kenneth E. Williams, with Halliburton Company in Houston, will speak on "Source Rock Reservoirs are a Unique Petroleum System."

Cost is $15, including lunch. Additional information may be found at www.wtgs.org under Upcoming Events. Reservations are encouraged and may be obtained by calling 683-1573 or e-mail wtgs@wtgs.org.

PBGS hosts talk on acquisition modeling

Members of the Permian Basin Geophysical Society will meet Wednesday, Nov. 13 at Midland Center at 11:30 a.m.

The technical presentation, given by Carl Regone, will be on "Acquisition Modeling: Expect the Unexpected."

Cost is $15, which includes lunch and the technical presentation. Reservations should be made by noon Monday, Nov. 11 and can be made through the PBGS website at http://pbgs.seg.org or by email to pbgs@pinnacle-seismic.com or by calling 682-3685.

Mexican cops said to kill colleague in fuel theft

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Policemen who were apparently protecting fuel robbers opened fire on other officers who came to investigate the theft, leaving one lawman dead and two wounded, prosecutors said Wednesday.

The Mexico State prosecutors' office said police from the town of Tepetlaoxtoc pulled up to investigate a tanker truck apparently drawing fuel from a government pipeline.

Officers from the city of Texcoco then allegedly opened fire on their colleagues, killing a Tepetlaoxtoc policeman. One officer from each side was wounded.

A bullet-ridden Texcoco patrol car was found abandoned near the scene.

The Texcoco city government issued a statement saying it would not allow the crime to go unpunished, and said the officers involved had been detained for investigation.

Mexico's state-owned Pemex oil company has suffered thousands of illegal pipeline taps, and analysts have long speculated that the thieves have been receiving help or protection from some officials or Pemex employees.

In a report in July, Pemex said 1,421 illegal fuel taps had been discovered in the first six months of this year, almost twice the 722 taps uncovered in the same period of 2012. Since drilling into the lines often occurs when pressure is lowered for maintenance or other reasons, experts have said thieves may be getting tips from inside the company about when to drill.

Victaulic helps design system construction or expansion

Right now, for anyone operating in the Permian Basin, growth is not just inevitable, it is mandatory. Processing plants, production facilities—anything that involves transfer or processing of oil, NGLs or natural gas—they are all strained to the max, just waiting for the next expansion.

For many companies, there is so much to be done on a daily basis, it is virtually impossible to dedicate the time needed for stepping back and planning the details of the next expansion. This is why more and more companies are turning to Victaulic's Integrated Project Delivery system for help.

The advantages of the Victaulic system itself are many. The grooved-end pipe joining system speeds installation and boosts safety for production flow lines and headers, tank batteries and secondary recovery, drilling, collection tanks and refinery plant piping, among other applications. Victaulic systems are available for all common pipe sizes. They work well with both coated and uncoated pipe.

Victaulic systems improve safety by virtually eliminating leaks and, because there is no welding involved, there are no open flames in the vicinity of hazardous chemicals.

So, once your company has decided to use the Victaulic system, the Integrated Product Delivery System developed by Victaulic can help optimize the time required for planning and installation. Their 90-person global CPS team is really just like an extension of your in-house design team. With their array of design software, including AutoPlant 3D, Aviva PDMS, Intergraph PDS and CADWorx, Bently AutoPlant, Bentley Plant Space and CEA Systems-Plant 4-D, they can match virtually any program you have in the design phase. The team can provide you with P&E layouts, ISOs, plan and section, spool fab sheets, bills-of-material—in short, a fully coordinated package for your construction and fabrication teams.

The process starts when you discuss your plans with Victaulic—you tell them what you want to accomplish in your new facility or your addition, you look together at how that will tie in with what you already have, and Victaulic will work with you to coordinate material shipments tied to the drawings and plans developed early in the process.

This way all your planning comes from one source—Victaulic's Upstream Support Services.

Once the plan is in place and the construction under way, the Victaulic team will provide training on Victaulic tools, field assembly, grooving, and will offer certification to your employees on Victaulic joint procedures.

When everything is in place and your employees have their training and certification on the Victaulic system, you're ready for long-term operation. Any needed changes or additions to the pipe systems can be done safely and efficiently by your own personnel. Of course, Victaulic is always there to answer questions, but your trained personnel can accomplish most tasks.

When planning your next stage of new construction, expansion or re-engineering, be sure to take advantage of the Victaulic Integrated Project Delivery System.

Call Victaulic at 432-332-1489 to learn more.

Texas offers road to rebates for vehicles

By Zain Shauk
Houston Chronicle

Texans soon will have a shot at a $2,500 rebate when buying electric or natural gas vehicles in the state, but constraints lawmakers imposed will limit the incentives available.

State regulators advanced the rebate program on Wednesday, setting the stage for the plan to take effect by May.

When combined with federal incentives, a buyer of an electric car could save $10,000 off the total purchase price of the vehicle because of the new program, the first such offer for buyers of electric and natural gas vehicles in the state.

"I wish I could afford a new car," said Toby Baker, a member of the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality, as he approved moving the program forward.

The state Legislature, which funded the rebates in this year's legislative session, allocated about $3.8 million annually for the program, set to expire Aug. 31, 2015. That effectively limits rebates available to just more than 1,550 in each of the next two years, said Guy Hoffman, the commission's risk manager for its emissions-reduction program.

Lawmakers declined to allocate more money from a ballooning account established for such programs. The account's latest official balance was more than $587 million, amassed from a portion of vehicle registration fees set aside for emissions-reduction efforts, according to the commission.

California, which also offers rebates, granted 3,700 for electric cars in October alone, and the state expects to spend $59.6 million on the incentives in the current fiscal year, said Mike Ferry, a senior manager at the California Center for Sustainable Energy.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency offers a tax incentive of up to $7,500 for most electric cars.

The incentives help lower emissions by putting cleaner cars on the road, Ferry said.

The Texas incentive program also will promote use of natural gas to fuel cars and trucks, said Lynn Lyon, director of fuel market development for the natural gas producer Pioneer Natural Resources and leader of an initiative to encourage more natural gas refueling stations in Texas.

Higher price tags

Natural gas vehicles, including models of the 2014 Ford F-150 pickup and 2015 Chevrolet Impala that will run on natural gas or gasoline, can cost about $7,000 more than their gasoline-only counterparts, Lyon said.

Service is priority for UltraQuip

Buying or renting oilfield light towers, generators, small natural gas compressors and other machinery is the simple part. Getting it serviced fast and right is another matter.

UltraQuip does carry a wide selection of all those items and much more, and they can get you exactly what you need. But the real difference for UltraQuip is in their firm commitment to service, not only for equipment they sell, but for a long list of other equipment.

UltraQuip President Jeff Somers says all his technicians are factory trained on all equipment they handle, and they do keep up with most other common brands.

A new fleet of service trucks is ready to head your way and make repairs on-site. That is the fastest way to get up and running again.

To save money, you can have one of your employees load the equipment up and take it to UltraQuip's yard in Odessa or Midland, then haul it back out when repairs are made.

UltraQuip has recently added a major diagnostic tool to their generator repair toolbox. Load banks allow repair technicians to quickly and accurately test and diagnose issues with generators before starting repairs, and they let those technicians verify that generators are working before being sent back out to customers. Somers notes that not all repair shops have these important diagnostic tools.

For today's heavy workloads Somers recommends customers buy one or two more than they need of generators or other of the most basic equipment. That way they can have a spare or two to fill in when repairs or preventive maintenance work is necessary. This is especially vital on those remote rigs where there is no power grid for miles. Even closer to town it can take days or week to have power lines connected, causing work delays.

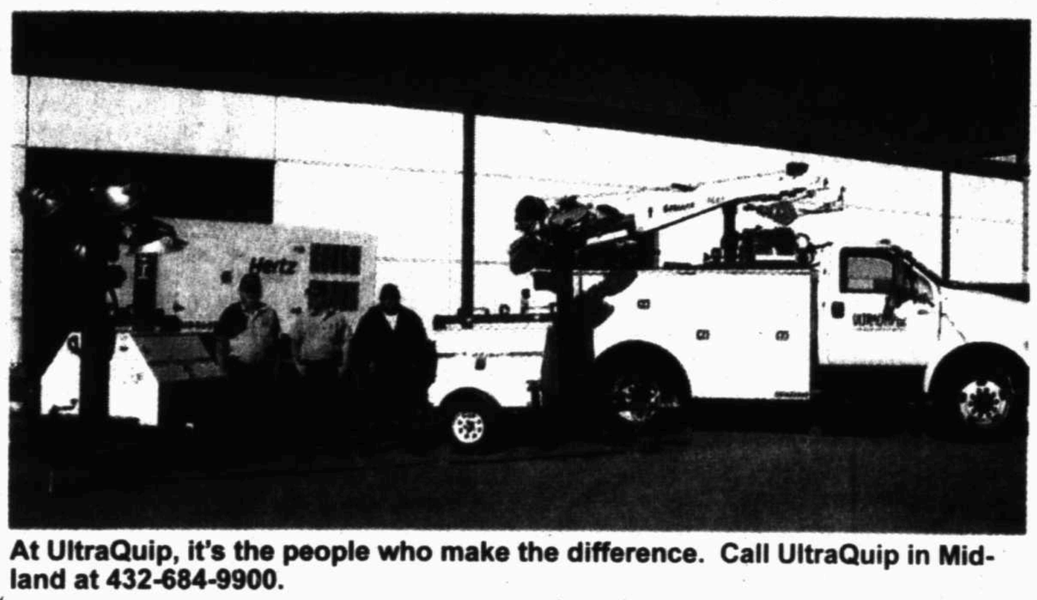
Ever alert for ways to help more customers, UltraQuip has recently added new representatives in both the Barnett Shale and Eagle Ford Shale regions. The company already has offices in Odessa, Midland and Oklahoma City.

The company has recently updated their website, www.ultraquip.net, and has added www.ultraquip.com as well. Go there to browse the great selection of equipment available.

Associated with UltraQuip is Light Tower Parts, a wholly-owned subsidiary focusing on providing parts and service specifically for light towers.

You can rely on UltraQuip for the right equipment and for fast and accurate repairs.

UltraQuip has locations at 3207 S. Grandview in Odessa, 2203 W. Florida in Midland (at the corner of Florida and Garfield) and at 5124 NW 3rd Street in Oklahoma City. The phone number for the Midland location is 432-684-9900.



At UltraQuip, it's the people who make the difference. Call UltraQuip in Midland at 432-684-9900.

Do you need any kind of dirt work? Get the Diggers experience!

"It's a dirty job, but someone has to do it," is a common phrase in society. For Diggers owner Jason Hunt, moving your dirt for frac pits, roads, drilling pads or anything else is more like a mission. That's the Diggers experience.

Jason himself trains every operator to his own exacting standards. He himself visits every job site daily to meet with clients to discuss any questions or issues that have come up, and to meet with his guys to get feedback and give instructions where needed.

His mission is to make sure your dirt work is the very best it can be. Jason understands that the best dirt work is that which is so good it's not noticed—it's just taken for granted that the rain didn't wash it out, it's level and it fulfills every need.

Diggers recently acquired 3D GPS technology, a computerized tool that will help them be even more precise/

When other dirt companies have made costly mistakes, clients have asked Diggers to come in and remedy the situation.

By opening Diggers Backhoe and Transportation, LLC earlier this fall, the company has expanded its services in order to help even more clients.

Clearing brush, redoing cattle guards and the like are jobs that many dirt companies avoid unless they're part of a larger deal. But many times oil companies see a delay between their first efforts and the completion of a well, during which time the brush has grown back up since it was first cleared out. Diggers Backhoe was formed to take care of these "after" needs.

In addition to oilfield clients, both Diggers companies do lots of work for ranchers and for commercial clients as well. Plus, the new transportation services are getting kicked off now. If you need heavy equipment moved from one site to another, call Diggers.

No matter who they're working for or what job they're doing, safety is a top priority for Diggers. Weekly safety meetings are always on the schedule, and they are registered with ISNetworld, which verifies contractors for safety. All Diggers operators wear H2S masks on every job.

It may be a dirty job, but Diggers loves to do it, and get it right the first time. Call Diggers today and get the dirt moving!

To put Diggers Oilfield Services or Backhoe and Transportation to work for you call Sara Anderson at 432-664-8030.

Dirt work is the pits, when you need a pit, road or other dirt moved, so call Diggers Oilfield Services at 432-664-8030.

Stephen Culver fell in love with woodworking before his accident.

But when Culver fell 15 feet nearly three years ago working in construction, the long road to recovery allowed him more time to do what he loved, and as chance would have it, he was surrounded by wood. The home and land that Stephen and Charlotte Culver purchased seven years ago had served as a lumber yard for Culver's construction company up to that point.

The couple converted his construction office into a display studio for his art, boasting handcrafted wooden chests, sculptures and tables.

Art of automobile design: Museums extend brand excellence

GEORGE JACOB
executive director of the Ellen Noel Art Museum

What began as Henry Ford's personal collection of automobiles and concept cars in 1906, grew into the largest indoor-outdoor museum complex in America. The nearly 500,000-square-foot museum holds a veritable collection of automobiles (including President John F. Kennedy's 1961 Lincoln Continental SS-100-x in which he was assassinated), machinery and documentaries that have revolutionized transportation worldwide.

Decades later, BMW established a contemporary futuristic museum at the Olympia Park in Munich just

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♠	Pass	Pass	Dbl
4♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♡

Some days you just can't win.

South quietly opened one spade and it went pass-pass to East. He carefully considered what action to take with his fine hand. He chose to double, rather than bid two hearts. No matter, whatever East chose, South briskly bid four spades. He wasn't to be trifled with when he held a suit like that. East took umbrage at this aggression and doubled four spades. The battle was on!

West led the 10 of hearts. East won and tried to cash two top diamonds. South ruffed the second diamond, led a trump to dummy's 10 and then led the jack of clubs from dummy. East covered with the queen, South played the king and West won the ace. Whatever West now played, South had no trouble ruffing his club loser in dummy and claiming 10 tricks. Four spades doubled bid and made!

West was quick to share his thoughts. "Did you have to cover that jack of clubs? He was probably going to guess wrong. After all, you were the one that did all the bidding. Speaking of the bidding, did you have to bid with that rag? You could have just passed it out in one spade."

East has resolved to find a more understanding partner.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Sunday, Nov. 10, 2013:
This year you become more concerned with the quality of your communication and how you say what you feel. PISCES is as emotional as you are.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ You might have plans with friends, but a sequence of mishaps could occur right around you. Do not get uptight, but understand that plans might need to be adjusted. Tonight: Vanish. You need a timeout.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★ How you see a situation right now could change later. You might be uptight and wondering what is going on. Tonight: Relax with friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Take off and visit a friend out of town, or check out the changing fall foliage. Laugh at a mishap, and try to clear it up ASAP. Tonight: Head home. Get a head start on tomorrow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ A partner or loved one makes it quite clear that he or she wants you close. Spend the day with this person. Tonight: Try out a new restaurant.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ You will be far more sunny and upbeat if you relax and take your time. Tonight: Dinner with a loved one at a favorite place.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ You could be in a position where you have a lot to do but want to be left alone. If you could sneak in a nap, you would be mellow. Tonight: Make time for people.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ You are so childlike at the moment that a loved one can't get enough of you. The two of you will act like two kids playing together. Tonight: Chill out at a favorite haunt.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★ You might need a day at home just to do your own thing. You push so hard that it is hard to stop you. Tonight: Act like you have a new lease on life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★★ You could be taken aback by everything you hear. You also might have difficulty communicating more of what you want. Lighten up. Tonight: Snuggle in.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ You might want to treat someone to a good time. You might think this idea works, but you need to count your change. Tonight: Catch up on a friend's news.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★★ The Moon in your sign energizes you and puts you in a position where few will say "no" to you. Make the day memorable. Tonight: Go a little wild.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★ Taking a day off might suit you fine. You go out of your way for so many people, and you rarely take time for yourself. Tonight: Out and about.

work in this room and see if we could get some interest in my pieces," Stephen Culver said. "And Charlotte's first love is marketing, so she took the idea and ran with it."

The "running with it" resulted in a full-blown art and wine show in the converted studio on Nov. 2. Charlotte Culver's brother, Mike Howard, showcased his Manuscript Cellars wine label's newest products alongside his brother-in-law's art at the Culvers' Industrial Avenue property. The event drew more than 100 art and wine enthusiasts, and Stephen Culver was extremely pleased with what he heard from attendees.

"For a first-time public rollout, I couldn't have asked for a better reaction response. It was a 100 percent positive reaction," he said. "We're actually pretty tickled at how well it went. Mike had a real good night, too. I think we complemented each other really well."

Howard, a seasoned veteran of the wine and spirits industry, was promoting the Manuscript label in particular because it was made available in local H-E-B stores in October. He believed a Midland crowd would offer a more honest reaction to his new wines than the customers in Dallas where his business is based.

"I love Stephen's artwork. I thought it was a nice blend. And I wanted to do this here because I think I definitely get a more genuine reaction to the wine here in Midland," Howard said. "People tell you like it is here, which is good because I'm hoping to get a lot of feedback about what people like and don't like."

As Howard and Stephen Culver strolled around the room, musing over the artwork hanging from the walls, Culver explained how he stumbled upon his trademark niche — wooden Texas stars.

"I was talking to a lady who told me it wasn't hard to find a good Texas star, but it was impossible to find a wooden one," he said. "I probably spoke a little too soon and told her I could make one. She said, 'You make it, I'll buy it.'"

He grinned.

"It took me more than one try. I challenge you to see if you can draw a perfectly symmetrical five-point star," he said, before pausing. "I'm not who I used to be physically. I have friends who tell me I look like I've aged 10 years in the last three since the accident. But I've found something I really care about and love doing."

Culver spun around, staring at all his wooden trophies.

"I work with what I have."

The Culvers' art studio is only open by appointments, which can be made by calling 432-260-5488. They don't have any immediate plans for similar events in the near future, but Howard hopes to have them display art at one of his Dallas wine tastings soon.

before the 1972 Summer Olympics to showcase cars, engines, motorcycles and evolving technologies. Designed by Viennese professor Karl Schwanzer who reversed the operational spiral by Frank Lloyd Wright at the Guggenheim, the museum was renovated and reopened in 2008.

In 2006, Mercedes Benz unveiled a 178,000-square-foot wheel-shaped museum with three overlapping clover-leaf layers girding an off-centered void atrium displaying 160 cars, directly across from its main plant in Stuttgart.

Taking off from the 1976 Porsche Museum, Delugan Meissl Associated Architects unveiled an incredible new building in 2009 that defies gravity and conveys the speed and maneuverability synonymous with brand Porsche. Volkswagen, Toyota, Rolls Royce and, most recently, Harley Davidson have all opened museums that show case their history, evolution, design and future concept vehicles that push the conventional limits of possibilities.

Ferrari went a step further by taking over an entire island — Yas Marina — in Abu Dhabi, transforming it into a $40 billion brand-bubble of epic proportions. The 900,000-square-feet built-space of the Ferrari-World is situated in the world's largest theme park with the fastest and most complex rides girded by a formula 1 racetrack.

While these large capital endeavors are primarily designed to promote their corporate brands and their connection with a consumer lifestyle, what spills over is an understanding of material composites, engineering, design, quest for excellence and the intrinsic power of well-healed brands and the entry of new challengers. One only has to study the evolving trends in automobile concept cars over the last century to see how creativity and technology have gained from a design synthesis that strives experimental acceptability.

The consumer patterns are also indicative of their association with speed, horse power, intelligent design, ergonomics, environmental appreciation, safety, efficiency and energy consumption patterns, among equally influential parameters of sheer aesthetics. Given all factors weighed equally, it is the design of a vehicle that influences the urge to be seen in an automobile that reflects and projects their personality and aspirations. The words of Henry Ford still echo true when he remarked, "I am collecting the history of our people as written into things their hands made and used. ... When we are through, we shall have reproduced American life as lived, and that, I think, is the best way of preserving at least a part of our history and tradition."

The Ellen Noel Art Museum plans to bring an exhibit on the art of illustrating concept car designs in the coming months to highlight the power of imaginative thought and the art of firing the cylinders of consumer curiosity.

George Jacob is Canadian Commonwealth Fellow, author of books on the future of museum design and executive director of the Ellen Noel Art Museum of the Permian Basin.

Filming Kennedy's last moments sobering for Lowe

By Michael Felberbaum
Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va. — On his first day on the set of "Killing Kennedy," Rob Lowe saw Ginnifer Goodwin donning a replica of the pink suit worn by first lady Jacqueline Kennedy when President John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

Immediately, the intensity and the reality of what they were about to depict in the film hit home.

"Seeing her in that beautiful pink Chanel with bloodstains on it was unbelievably emotional," Lowe said in an interview with The Associated Press on the set, briefly suppressing the accent he groomed to emulate JFK.

"It made it real," he added. "If I were under any illusions about what we were doing, seeing her in that iconic moment was, I would say, sobering."

It also set the tone for filming of the movie, which profiles the Kennedy family and gunman Lee Harvey Oswald. Filmed in Richmond, it premieres today on the National Geographic Channel, several days before the 50th anniversary of JFK's death in Dallas.

The film, based on Fox News host Bill O'Reilly and Martin Dugard's book by the same name, chronicles the events that culminated with the assassination of the nation's 35th president on Nov. 22, 1963. It carefully interlaces old film reels and TV broadcasts and delves beyond the details of that fateful day and the aftermath, showing viewers the intimate moments behind JFK's presidency as well as the tale behind Oswald.

Will Rothhaar, who took on a challenge portraying one of the most notorious killers in American history, said he attempted to convey Oswald's strife and frustration just to be noticed, heard or respected.

Rothhaar stars opposite Michelle Trachtenberg, who plays Oswald's wife, Marina. Trachtenberg speaks mainly in Russian throughout the film, a language she learned from her mother while growing up.

Lowe said the opportunity to play JFK came with some responsibility to pay tribute to an historic figure whose legacy "belongs to all of us."

Reviews of recent CD

EMINEM
"Marshall Mathers LP 2"

Don't be fooled: Eminem's latest, "The Marshall Mathers LP 2," is not a sequel to his gloriously unhinged 2000 rap masterpiece, "The Marshall Mathers LP," as the title initially implies. Instead, it's a summation of a mission statement, a revisitation of what the 41-year-old rapper has done best in 15 years at the center of the maelstrom that is pop culture.

Unlike "Recovery," his Grammy-winning 2010 comeback album where he laid bare his battles with drugs and depression and reclaimed his lyrical and commercial dominance, "MMLP2" is a return to a more confident and familiar Marshall Mathers.

Everything he's done best is here, from noirish murder fantasies with devilish twists to big-chorus pop songs with moments of great humor, anger, fear, self-reflection and verbal virtuosity impossible to untangle in just a few listens.

It's satisfying on every level — as a story, as poetry, as a performance — and it's also filled with hidden meaning and insight into how Eminem views his own fame. Few in rap reach this complex level of artistry, and listening to it unfold when compared with the often monochromatic world of popular rap in 2013 makes it even more vital.

Chris Talbott/AP

M.I.A.
"Matangi"

Named after a ghetto Hindu goddess, M.I.A.'s fourth proper album pops with a relentless pounce and is filled with all the paradoxical imagery that the intro's title "Karmageddon" conjures.

On the call-to-arms title track she breaks it down as a tsunami of percussion mounts: "It's so simple/Get to the floor." Then sets it off simply by rhyming different places — "Gambia/Namibia/Bali/Mali/Chile/Malawi" — in her inimitable cadence.

But it's never simple with M.I.A. because in her words she's "Got a reputation/People see me as trouble." She plays vocal acrobat on "Bring The Noize," tabbing herself the "female Slick Rick" and unleashing spitfire bars like "Do you like my perfumes?/I made it at home with some gasoline and shrooms." Her playful side rhymes "giddy up" with "light the city up" and boards Boeings eating bananas. On "atTENTion" she flips the syllable "tent" 50 different ways.

Production by Switch, Hit-Boy, Danja and The Partysquad is just as enigmatic. Take "Double Bubble Trouble" where a trap intro gives way to a Rastafari sway before hitting up the dancehall and riding out on a beat Omar Souleyman might floss over. On other tracks, The Weeknd samples, intermittent "ohmmms" and slinking woofers flit through stutter-step rhythms and furrowed bass. Picture fire alarms going off in Trinidadian clubs.

ALLENTOWN, Pa. — Jake Clemons wants everyone to know this: He isn't trying to replace his uncle, Clarence Clemons, by taking over as saxophone player in Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band. The iconic Big Man died in 2011.

"I'm very careful with that notion," Clemons said in a phone call. "I in no way feel, expect or hope to have replaced Clarence. That's not a word that I would ever use. For me, it's filling the role from a place of need.

"Clarence's mission, as the job was communicated to me, was just to bring spirit, love and joy to the world. And that voice doesn't stop, you know? I mean, I feel he was the flag man in the army, waving that flag."

In addition to having his own mission in the E Street Band, Clemons also has established himself as a musician of note outside it, with his own band.

While Clemons might not feel he's a worthy replacement for his uncle, who played nearly 40 years with Springsteen, his joining the band made perfect sense when Springsteen announced it a month after Clarence died of complications from a stroke at age 69.

Clemons, 36, said The E Street Band had long been like a family to him, and his uncle a musical mentor and more.

"Clarence and I were very, very, very close," he said. "I mean, he was a father figure to me, a best friend, and our lives were very much intertwined. I spent a lot of time on the tour. ... my earliest memories are being around those guys."

Clemons grew up as the son of a Marine Corps band director and attended the Virginia Governor's School for the Arts to study jazz performance after seeing his uncle play the sax. Clarence got him his first paid gig — playing alongside Clarence at President Bill Clinton's 1993 inauguration, when Jake was just 16.

"I didn't have a bigger supporter for my solo career than Clarence. He would have interviews regarding his own stuff — his book, or the E Street Band and he would always throw in a comment like, 'You gotta hear my nephew,'" Clemons said, laughing. "I mean, I would be sitting around with him sometimes and hear him say that."

The younger Clemons occasionally sat in with the E Street Band and later played with The Roots, Eddie Vedder of Pearl Jam, Will Smith, The Israelites and The Swell Season.

"I've just followed the river of dreams, if you will," Clemons said with a laugh. "And played alongside of some really amazing people. And people have been very generous in providing the opportunities for me to get up on stage."

He said the conversation with Springsteen about joining The E Street Band "was all just a natural conversation. Bruce always gave honor and respect and took care of the people that love Clarence."

Clemons joined the band for its tour to support the album "Wrecking Ball," which was released two months after Clarence's death and included his last recording sessions. Those initial shows were solemn affairs, in which a light shone on the stage space aside Springsteen, where Clarence Clemons would have stood.

Clemons said the shows were emotional for him, too. He pointed out that the first E. Street Band show he saw that didn't include his uncle was the one that he played in.

"You know, it's so familiar to me that it just felt like it's always felt." But, he said, "There's always challenges personally, for myself and emotionally. The first show, that was tough, but also enriching. You know, we carry the torch and there's something beautiful in that — that magic."

The mood had lightened by the second leg of the tour later that year.

"It's a lot of weight to carry, in the sense of the weight of missing someone," Clemons said. "But we come to the point where, if we're lucky, that weight that we carry, that depth of our sorrow, is put away and we see a beautiful thing that we feel good about.

"It will never go away, but instead of being a burden — not that it's ever been a burden — it becomes something that is new."

Asked whether the subject of recording with Spingsteen has come up, Clemons said, "I have no idea what Bruce's plans are for the future. I think he's a very wise and good man and we'll see how it goes. I'm very much a person of the present."
