Rocket strikes Gemayel palace; Family uninjured

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A rocket struck the residential quarters of President Amin Gemayel's palace in suburban Baabda, destroying three rooms, but he and his family escaped injury, state-run television said Saturday.

Police reported nine people killed and 42 wounded in fierce overnight exchanges of rocket, artillery and tank fire that tapered off at dawn Saturday. At least four more were killed when the battles between Christian and Moslem militias resumed Saturday afternoon, police and hospital officials said.

The television said a rocket exploded into the third floor of the palace's western wing shortly before midnight Friday. There was no explanation why the incident was not reported until late Saturday.

The explosion wrecked three rooms and ignited a blaze that was put out by palace guards, the television said. Gemayel's family was believed to have been in the wing at the time, but it was not disclosed if the president himself was at home.

The television said army experts had determined the source of the rocket, described as Soviet-made, but did not reveal it.

The palace has been hit by artillery shells or rockets on four other occasions since September 1983. The latest attack appeared to have inflicted the greatest damage.

Hospital officials said a French observer was slightly wounded Saturday by shrapnel at the "green line" dividing mostly Moslem west from Christian east Beirut. It was the first casualty among 40 French commandos sent to Beirut last month to help police the green line.

Lebanese police said they were readying a 2,000-man disengagement force to occupy proposed buffer zones between the nation's civil war combatants within the next 48 hours.

The disengagement plan was signed by the principal antagonists nine days ago in an attempt to establish a firm cease-fire.

Its implementation has been delayed by the reluctance of army and police reservists to sign up for service with the force, which will patrol in Beirut, its southern suburbs and the hills to the east.

In Damascus, state-controlled Syrian radio urged the Gemayel administration to lay out "the broad outlines for a new Lebanon" before proceeding with plans to create a national coalition Cabinet.

"Agreement on southern Lebanon and the means for liberating that integral part of the country will be the gateway for entente among the Lebanese and for peace in the country," the radio said.

It attributed Lebanon's inability to establish a firm cease-fire to the lack of agreement on reforms that would satisfy opposition groups, which are supported by Syria.

Gemayel began consultations Friday with elder statesmen and Parliament bloc leaders on forming a coalition Cabinet to make political reforms that would give Moslems an equal share of power with Christians.

Syrian radio said the reforms must precede the creation of the new Cabinet. It also urged Gemayel to "take a clear and official stand forbidding cooperation with the army of southern Lebanon," a militia armed and supplied by Israel.

Israel has occupied south Lebanon since invading in June 1982 to wipe out Palestinian guerrilla bases and secure its northern border. Syria has occupied northern and eastern Lebanon since the end of the 1975-76 civil war.

Druse and Shiite Moslem opposition groups dispatched representatives to Damascus for talks with Syrian Vice President Abdul-Halim Khaddam and Saudi mediator Rafik Hariri on ways to ease Lebanese tensions.

Shiite militia leader Nabih Berri urged Gemayel and Christian militia leaders to "sever all connections with Israel" and enter into a "genuine dialogue to reconstruct Lebanon on fraternal foundations."

State parties running neck-and-neck

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Politics has been bobbing on a see-saw in Texas for years and 1984 could see another up-down or simply a balancing act.

In 1978, the Republicans won the governor's seat and in 1980 they enticed the state's voters to turn out for Ronald Reagan.

In 1982, they fell to the bottom as the Democrats woke up, rallied together and pulled out what seemed like a limitless string of victories from a hat. The Democrats were back on top.

This year, the two parties are running neck-and-neck as each side attempts to beat the other with the latest technology. It will be computer matched against computer come the May primary, and especially the November general election.

But computers can't vote. People do. And that's where all the organization and technology are being directed — to the voters.

Bob Slagle of Sherman, chairman of the State Democratic Party, feels confident his party has pulled together from its chaotic divisiveness in 1978. George Strake of Houston, Republican state chairman, believes his people have survived the split of 1983 but keeps reminding them it won't be easy this year.

TEXAS IS A critical state for not only the presidential race, but also the U.S. Senate. The Republicans hold a feather-light margin in the Senate and the loss of Texas could swing the majority over to Democrats.

Slagle, in a recent visit to Midland, contended his party "is much stronger, must better organized." He sees it on a parity with the Republican Party. In 1979, the Democratic party had a budget of $250,000. Last year, the budget hit $1 million.

They've gone after the dollars by calling on the Mr. and Ms. Average Voter. A Sustaining Membership Program used to bring in $3,000 a month; now it's $10,000.

A Dollars for Democrats project went from $40,000 to $200,000. "We have more fund-raising affairs, from big dollar affairs to small dollar," said Slagle, who has been state chairman of his party 3½ years.

It was a year ago in Midland that the State Republican Executive Committee was slapped apart. Upset over the 1982 election losses, several members placed the blame on then-chairman Chet Upham. The committee split, Upham resigned and Strake was elected.

When he jumped on the see-saw with both feet on April 30, 1983, the State Republican Party had a budget

Lebanese family hopes things 'will get better'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — War knocks on the door of Sami Zen Alameh's house every hour of the day and night, but poverty and centuries of tradition keep him, his wife and nine children on the city's dreadful green line.

"There's no place to go," said the unemployed mechanic as he looked toward Place Bayhun, known here as "snipers' square" and recently described by a French army colonel as "the most dangerous place in Lebanon."

Warring militiamen are separated only by a narrow avenue that runs across the square, on the embattled line between Moslem west and Christian east Beirut. Fierce street battles occur almost daily.

Snipers positioned on the upper floors of abandoned apartment buildings have kept the surrounding streets in the Tayounneh neighborhood empty for months. Neighbors said they could not recall the last day that Tayounneh did not echo with gunshots.

"My family has been living here for more than 300 years," said Alameh, 53. "My grandfather and my father were rich men. Today, this is all we've got."

The family's only income is the salary of 18-year-old Haissan Alameh, employed at a factory in Beirut's southern suburbs.

"We manage to live on 200 Lebanese pounds ($40) a week," the father said. "We live basically hoping things will get better some day."

The oldest son, Hikmat, was killed in the first round of the civil war in 1976 as he walked to buy bread at a shop two blocks away. He was 18.

In those days, the family lived in their 150-year-old yellow mansion built by Alameh's Sunni Moslem ancestors in the days when Tayounneh was a wealthy district.

The house is now too dangerous, and the Alamehs live in a two room annex built in their back yard.

The former grandeur of the vacant main building is still evident, despite the thousands of bullets that pocked every wall and chewed away the columns of a small attic, where scores of brown and white doves now live.

Crumbling barriers of bullet-riddled sandbags remain inside the mansion as a reminder of the family's last months inside.

"We didn't think the war was going to last so long, so we began to wait and wait," said Alameh.

His four youngest children were born after the war began. In all, there are five boys and four girls still living. They range in age from 18 to 3.

The younger ones are confined to the back yard, where they occupy themselves by feeding the doves, playing with two roosters or digging at the edge of a large red earthworks constructed as a shield against artillery blasts or stray grenades.

They are no longer frightened by the relentless machine gun fire and grenade blasts.

But when their warring neighbors move to heavy artillery or rocket exchanges, the whole family runs for cover in the basement of a nearby apartment building. They often remain there for days.

"Things were much better when the French soldiers were here," said Youssef, Alameh's unsmiling 8-year-old son, who was something of a mascot to the French marines stationed at an adjacent position before the last of the four-nation peacekeeping force withdrew from Beirut early this month.

"Now they are gone and I am very sad," he lamented.

"They told me they would put me in a box and take me with them to France," he said. "I wanted to go away from here because I hate war."

"I want to have friends of my age, but there are very few children living here."

He spoke in the fluent French he

Jackson scores victory in South Carolina

By The Associated Press

The Rev. Jesse Jackson played catch with a former Cleveland Indian star pitcher Saturday while his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination was scoring its first clear-cut victory in his home state of South Carolina.

Gary Hart, meanwhile, marched his campaign through California's high-tech "Silicon Valley" and Walter F. Mondale told voters in Missouri he has no desire to be an imitation Harry S. Truman although he is a great admirer of the former Democratic president.

"This exceeds my wildest dreams," said Dr. Walker Solomon, chairman of the Jackson campaign in South Carolina, after the black civil rights leader emerged from the state Democratic convention with the lion's share of the state delegation to the national convention.

"This says to the nation that South Carolina loves her children," said Solomon. "If you work hard with a good candidate you can win."

Jackson won the popular vote in Virginia's caucuses earlier, but Mondale got more delegates because of a quirk in geographical distribution.

But the Greenville, S.C., native wound up Saturday with 17 delegates from his home state to 14 uncommitted, seven for Hart and six for Mondale. The total included 41 delegates allocated by the caucus process started last month and three automatic delegates who already had stated a preference — two uncommitted and one for Hart.

After the first-level South Carolina caucuses last month, Jackson was assured at least 12 national delegates, Hart two and Mondale none. It had appeared 30 would be uncommitted until Saturday's shifts in the final stage of the selection process.

In Arizona, Democrats swarmed to 95 caucus sites to beginning allocating 33 pledged state delegates, but the voting lasted well into the evening and no firm results were expected until Sunday — perhaps not until after North Dakota Democrats finish allocating their 14 pledged delegates at a state convention.

Democrats in Alaska, Kentucky, Oklahoma, Michigan, Mississippi and Kansas were taking further steps in their delegate selections Saturday, but there were no advance indications of significant shifts in the way those delegations lined up under earlier steps.

In most cases, second and third-level steps in caucus states amount to little more than assigning names to the delegate slots already reserved for a particular candidate although there are possibilities for a shift of a delegate here and there because of the party's complicated rules.

Mondale's remarks at the Kansas City International Airport amounted to a swipe at Hart for comparing himself to Truman during a campaign visit Hart made Thursday to Independence, Mo.

"I too am an admirer of Harry Truman," Mondale said. "We need a people's Democrat in the White House again. I am a people's Democrat. But I won't run for president as an imitation of Harry or anyone else. I am running as Walter Mondale. For better or worse, what you see is what you get."

Mondale headed for a brief stop in

Klan marches peacefully to Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — Forty-two Ku Klux Klan members, guarded Saturday by a phalanx of city police and state troopers, shouted white-supremacy slogans at protestors during a 35-minute march devoid of the violence that rocked a similar demonstration last year.

Protestors chanted "Death to the Klan" and other slogans in response. Austin Police Chief Frank Dyson said there were no arrests or "unusual incidents" during the six-block march and rally on the Capitol grounds.

"I'm extremely pleased. It went without a hitch," said Dyson.

Officials said about 290 city police officers and 327 state Department of Public Safety personnel guarded the march route from downtown Austin to the state Capitol, separating the Klansmen from anti-Klan spectators.

David Wells, a spokesman for the Department of Public Safety, estimated that there were about 500 to 600 spectators. Dyson estimated there were as many as 700 spectators.

The tight security measures followed a February 1983 march that erupted into a bloody melee when anti-Klan demonstrators clashed with police. Thirteen people were arrested and a dozen injured in that episode.

But Dyson said this time, "There were no problems at all. I think it went extremely well."

The march began at Sixth Street in the heart of downtown Austin, moving north up Congress Avenue to the Capitol.

The Klansmen were bused to downtown from a location two to three miles away, Dyson said.

AP Laserphoto

About 35 Ku Klux Klan members, guarded by hordes of city and state police, staged a march in downtown Austin Saturday morning unmarked by violence. Tight security measures followed the February 1983 march when 12 persons were injured and 13 arrested.

Besides the Klan's customary white supremacist philosophy, Lee voiced his beliefs against homosexuals and illegal aliens, who he claimed are taking jobs from Texas citizens.

"This is no open frontier anymore. We're filled up," Lee shouted. "What we need is (Gov.) Mark White to ship the illegal aliens home." The governor has no authority to deport illegal aliens.

Before the march, state troopers sealed off the Statehouse building and police barricaded Congress Avenue, allowing spectators to assemble only at intersections. Several dozen anti-Klan demonstrators ran up adjacent streets, moving from one intersection to the next as the Klansmen marched.

Helmeted city police carrying plastic shields accompanied the Klansmen. The white-robed Klansmen also were escorted by their own security patrol, Klan members dressed in military clothing.

The marchers stopped at each intersection. Using a bullhorn, leaders shouted slogans at spectators, many of whom shouted back "Go home" and "We don't want you here."

When the marchers reached the Capitol grounds, helmeted state troopers escorted them up the main walkway, keeping spectators about 25 yards away.

The Klansmen held a 15-minute rally in front of the Statehouse steps, then boarded buses driven by city police officers and were driven back to their assembly point.

Man convicted in death of wealthy socialite

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A former boxer has been convicted of murder in the death of a wealthy socialite who was found beaten in her posh condominium.

Jurors deliberated about about six hours Friday before convicting George Henry Wilkinson, 48, in the July 18 slaying of Dorothy Moncrief.

Wilkinson will be sentenced next Friday by State District Judge James Barlow.

Mrs. Moncrief, 53, was the widow of Dr. John Moncrief, the former commander of the Surgical Research Unit at Fort Sam Houston's Brooke Army Medical Center.

Prosecutors referred to Wilkinson, who had been Mrs. Moncrief's live-in companion, as "Rocky Marciano" Wilkinson, saying he was intent on killing the woman when he repeatedly slugged her in the face.

"He's a strong man," Assistant District Attorney Ed Garcia told jurors. "Look at this man. With one punch, he could knock down Dorothy Moncrief.

"It wasn't enough that he was hitting her," Garcia said. "He strangled her with one hand.

Texas Board of Education repeals evolution rule

EL PASO (AP) — The Texas Board of Education, in a move called as significant as the Scopes monkey trial, repealed a rule Saturday that restricted references to evolution in public school textbooks.

The 10-year-old rule, which the textbook industry said influenced biology education nationwide, required textbooks to refer to evolution "as only one of several explanations of the origins of humankind."

Evolutionists hailed the board's action, but creationists played down its significance.

"We believe this means a tremendous change in the way textbooks are written and published," said Michael Hudson, Texas coordinator of People for the American Way, a national anti-censorship group.

"I would claim and assert to you that this ruling, in ranking of importance, is on the same level as the Scopes trial," he said, referring to the 1925 case in which a Tennessee teacher was convicted of violating a state law against the teaching of evolution.

Creationists called the rule's repeal a "moral defeat," but said the board's action would not change the way textbooks are written or the manner in which children are taught.

The board's decision came one day after it agreed to take the emergency vote on the issue.

Textbook industry officials said publishers tailor their books to meet Texas' standards because of the state's $80 million schoolbook market, a trend that affects other states buying textbooks.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox issued an opinion last month that the 1974 rule was unconstitutional, and American Way had threatened a lawsuit if the board did not repeal it. The 1974 rule was supported by creationists whose views parallel Christian and Judaic beliefs.

The education panel also voted Saturday to amend its guidelines on general textbook content to include a stipulation that all theories in textbooks "be clearly distinguished from fact and presented in an objective educational manner."

Steven Parker, a supporter of the now-defunct rule, said the guidelines leave "the door wide open to the creationism theory."

"It is beyond the realm of science to explain how the world got here. The creationist movement will continue to make its way into the classroom. The war is far from over," Parker said.

Hudson, however, said the change would "have to mean a new way of writing textbooks. All books now carry a disclaimer that says evolution is only one theory. Now, the disclaimer is not necessary."

Hudson said the board "has been operating under unconstitutional rules for 10 years.

Stockyards a new, yet old, hotel in Texas

FORT WORTH (AP) — As hotel locations go, the Hyatt or the Hilton or even the Holiday Inn would scarcely be green with envy.

There are no Water Gardens or Town Lakes or Riverwalks or open spaces.

In fact, the Stockyards Hotel is squeezed between a drug store and a chili parlor and opens onto a street once peopled largely by deadbeats and desperados and still maintains more than a casual camaradarie with the former and probably the latter.

Across a brick avenue is the rowdy White Elephant saloon and down the road a piece is the Cowtown Coliseum, recognized widely for its indoor rodeos and robust aromas.

THE IDEA being conveyed here is that Fort Worth's North Side rarely gets itself confused with Miami Beach or Carmel Bay or Central Park.

Once a playground for cattle barons and cattle thieves, the stockyards area later became a choice spot to get raped, robbed, mugged or all three.

Now an official historical district, the North Side complex is a glitter with the neon lights of western-flavored nightspots and restaurants and has emerged as a genuine tourist attraction in the frenetic Dallas-Fort area.

And now comes the Stockyards Hotel, which just might be the neatest old-new hotel in all of Texas and probably the world.

Or at least Fort Worth.

"Classic Cowtown Comfort," proclaim the new owners, a couple of Cleburne natives named Tom Yater and Marshall Young who have turned a sow's ear into a silk stocking entrepreneurial venture.

"THERE'S NO place like this," said Yater, secure in his overstatement. "In Houston, Kansas City, anywhere, all the hotels are alike."

What local architect Ward Bogard and Austin interior designer Kay Howard have done is take an early 20th century building and restore it to an elegance and elan its original owners never envisioned.

As newspaper critic Carol Nuckols observed: "It packs more of the good old days into its 52 rooms than the good old days ever had."

Said columnist Lloyd Stewart: "In plain words, it is not only historic, it is a knockout."

The unusual touches are many, starting in the lobby, which Ms. Howard slyly describes as "Cattle Baron Baroque." That could mean it's more Texan than J.R.'s South Fork, but stylishly so.

WESTERN PRINTS adorn the walls, and western sculptures decorate fossil limestone tables and pedestals. Chesterfield sofas of genuine leather stand on handwoven rugs of original designs.

Saddles serve as barstools in Booger Red's Saloon, named for a famous Texas bronc buster. The bar itself is solid wood and claims Hollywood credentials: It was used in a film called "The Blue and the Gray."

Guest rooms are designed in four motifs — Western, Indian, Mountain Man and Victorian. They are decorated with raw materials such as cedar, slate and deerskins and a few stunners such as reptilian upholstery, ram's head lamps and feathered cattle skulls.

In the Bonnie and Clyde suite, Bonnie Parker's Colt revolver is there to see but not to touch.

The ever popular gangster duo reputedly stayed in the very same room when the hotel was known by one of its earlier names, the Chandler, the Planters and the Right.

"WHEN I FIRST saw it I fell in love with it," said Young of the three-story structure. "It had so much character..."

The "character" was such that just two years ago a room at the Right, as the hotel was then called, was so wrong it rented for $5 nightly.

Rooms start now at $75 single and $85 double and range up to $300 a night for the "Celebrity Suite," which comes with a fireplace and a Jacuzzi and a tree growing through a redwood deck.

"They are comparable to Americana and Hyatt prices," said spokeswoman Ruth Ann Kearley, referring to major downtown hotels.

Many of the guest rooms open onto atriums converted from light shafts in the original hotel, and anyone big on Longhorns will find their likeness carved into the furniture or woven into the carpeting or maybe even peering back at them from wall paintings.

"FIVE YEARS from now we want the Stockyards Hotel to be known around the globe as the very finest in Fort Worth," said Yater.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts rain for today from Indiana and Kentucky through the Atlantic coast, north through the Great Lakes and Maine and for parts of Washington and Oregon.

Permian Basin weather should be sunny, warm

The National Weather Service forecast calls for sunny skies and a high in the mid-70s today. Winds will be out of the north at 10-20 mph.

The low tonight should be in the low 40s. It'll be fair skies and a high in the mid-70s again Monday.

The record high for Saturday's date was 95, set in 1935. The record low for today's date was 27, set in 1933.

STATE

A ridge of high pressure pushed its way into Texas Saturday, leaving the state under a clear sunny sky.

Winds kicked up as high as 20 to 30 mph, however, and West Texas residents complained of sandstorms. A gust as high as 63 mph was reported at Wichita Falls at 10 a.m.

Temperatures reached only the 50s and 60s in the north, but into the 70s in the central part of the state and into the 80s in the southern reaches of Texas.

At 5 p.m. Saturday, it was 83 at Corpus Christi, 80 at Brownsville, 79 at San Antonio, 74 at Waco, 73 at El Paso and San Angelo, 69 at Dallas, 65 at Wichita Falls, 64 at Lubbock, and 60 at Amarillo.

The lows early today are expected to be in the 30s in the Panhandle and in the 40s in North and Central Texas.

Clear skies are expected statewide again today and Monday, the National Weather Service said. A strong cool front was located in the northwest Gulf of Mexico and was expected to continue a strong offshore flow through today.

NATION

Golf ball-size hail dropped on northern Georgia on Saturday, as thunderstorms moved acrss the Appalachians and were scattered from Lake Erie to Georgia.

Light rain fell over the Midwest, while drizzle and light rain covered most of the Midwest from Missouri to Michigan and Ohio.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 p.m. EST ranged from 32 degrees at Jackson and Yellowstone, Wyo., to 100 at Palm Springs, Calif.

For today, scattered thunderstorms were forecast from Florida to the Ohio Valley and the mid-Atlantic Coast.

Showers were expected from the Great Lakes region into New England, with a few showers developing over the Pacific Northwest.

Skies over the Plains were predicted to be partly cloudy. The South will enjoy sunshine.

High temperatures were forecast in the 50s and 60s over the northern two-thirds of the country; 70s in the South; and 80s in the desert Southwest.

deficit of $377,000. Today, he said, the party has paid off its debts and now has "a substantial amount in the bank." Budget for this year is $3 million.

A President Reagan dinner raised a large amount of money for the party. The Texas Club for Young Professionals is bringing in moderate sums of money. The Key Club is drawing $1,000 a year from numerous Republicans, and the Committee of 100 consists of the select few who donate $2,500 a year, he related.

Computer technology is picking out voters who lean toward one party or the other.

SLAGLE SAID 1 million of the 1.3 million Democratic Texas voters have been placed on his party's computer. These lists are being made available for Democratic candidates for use in phone banks, direct mail or walk campaigns, he said.

Republicans are using their computer also to list previous primary voters and to solicit money and support. A telemarketing program is contacting those voters and getting $2,000 a week from them, according to Strake.

Voter registration will be a key deciding factor in the races this year and both parties are racing to get the unregistered voters on their lists. Strake has watched the Democrats sign up unregistered citizens no matter where they were.

"There are more liberal groups working on registration. We have a variety of different voter registrations going on — nothing as flamboyant as the Democrats but we hope as effective."

Strake said the Republicans are trying to re-register people who have moved and also new residents to the state. With the use of their computer, the Republican Party recently mailed out letters to all registered Republicans and included three voter registration cards. When those were filled out, the recipient was informed to call the state party office for more cards. "We're picking up 400 to 500 card requests a day," said Strake. He estimated they had registered another 100,000 voters.

He pointed out voter registration drives are going on in other organizations involving people who will likely choose the Republican road. These are the evangelical Christian groups, gun clubs, right-to-life people and chambers of commerce members.

Efforts by volunteers to get out the Democrats on election day in 1982 paid off for Slagle's party, and he's planning on seeing a repeat this year. "We had 150,000 to 160,000 volunteers working for the Democratic ticket in 1982. The Secretary of State had expected 2.6 million people to vote and 3.4 million Texans voted." That 800,000 edge gave the Democrats their victories.

With the same type of organization this year, Slagle expects the Democrats will carry Texas in the presidential race, be it Walter Mondale or Gary Hart as the nominee. "With either one, we have an excellent chance to defeat Reagan in Texas. Ol' Ronnie's made a whole lot of promises he hasn't kept."

SLAGLE POINTED to the Windfall Profits Tax, recalling that Reagan promised in his 1980 campaign to repeal it. "He has yet to support a bill to repeal it, and he even had the Justice Department go to court to keep it."

He also charged there have been more small business failures in 1982-83 since 1933, that farmers are in default, that 9 million people are still unemployed and 1½ million are discouraged workers, the budget deficit is at its highest in history, high interest rates are hurting the American dollar and costing 1.3 million U.S. jobs in the export industry.

"Reagan's record shows he obviously does not need to be re-elected," Slagle said.

But Strake viewed the picture differently. Mondale, who he believes will win the Democratic nomination, "will be cast as warmed-over Jimmy Carter. He's a boring candidate. Reagan has done everything he said he would.

"He's lowered inflation, interest rates and taxes and cut the amount of bureaucratic paperwork. He built up national defense."

Continuation of the WPT can be blamed on Congress, Strake contended. "It's Tip O'Neill (speaker of the House) who's blocking decontrol."

On small businesses, Strake said more people are going to small, entrepreneurial businesses rather than staying as employees with large companies.

Strake still sees this year as a hard fight for the Republicans and he's using scare tactics.

"Our people get terrified when they stop and think there are five justices on the Supreme Court who will be 75 years or older in the next presidency. They don't want to see Mondale appointing five (out of nine) justices.

"This will absolutely be a hard fight against Democrats. I'm plenty scared. I don't take anything for granted."

Jackson scores victory in home state

St. Louis and then on to Washington for three days rest.

Hart told about 70 people at a $500-a-plate brunch in Sunnyval, Calif., that he wants to remove the Democratic Party's image as "anti-marketplace" and "anti-private sector."

Sunnyvale is considered the hub of what has become known as Silicon Valley because of its numerous computer companies and high-tech firms.

It is an area where Hart's campaign expects he can do well because it is populated by the young, upwardly mobile and affluent voters who have given the Colorado senator strong support around the nation.

"Through massive reforms of our tax laws...through resistance to protectionist trade legislation such as the domestic content bill and insistence on real competition and fairness in the international marketplace, through massive commitment to education and training — all of these things can open up opportunity for the private sector for new and growing businesses," Hart said.

California's June 5 primary is viewed by many as Hart's last chance to stop Mondale.

"This state, in this primary, literally has a chance to change the course of American history," he told the Sunnyvale group.

Hart then went to San Francisco, 40 miles north, for another $500-a-person gathering. The campaign expected to raise up to $75,000 from the two fund-raisers. Hart was to open a campaign office in Berkeley and return to Los Angeles to spend Saturday night and today relaxing.

Jackson was out early Saturday, starting with a prayer breakfast in Dayton, Ohio, and then moving on to Akron and Cleveland, where he attended a baseball game between the Indians and Baltimore Orioles.

He started things off by donning a catcher's mit and strolling to the plate to take a pitch from Mike Garcia, a 20-game winner on the Indians' 1954 world champion team.

Jackson stepped up his demands for "a new direction" in corporate America, endorsing a boycott of Campbell's Soup Co. and saying Hart and Mondale both were wrong on the Chrysler bailout.

And he told a Hispanic group he opposed a proposed immigration reform bill.

"We must reject the Simpson-Mazzoli bill," he told the San Lorenzon Club in a Puerto Rican section of Cleveland. "This is not South Africa. No one should carry a passbook in his pocket."

Identity papers which blacks must carry in South Africa are one of the particularly hated symbols of the racial segregation policy of Apartheid.

Many have opposed the Simpson-Mazzoli bill on grounds it would lead to identity cards for immigrant workers.

Jackson also told the Hispanic group he supports a boycott of the Campbell Soup Co. — led by the Farm Labor Organizing Committee of Toledo — until the company negoatiates contracts with migrant farmworkers.

"We support the boycott of Campbell's until justice comes to workers," he said.

And he attacked both Hart and Mondale on Chrysler loan guarantees.

"It's not enough for Hart to reject support for Chrysler, on the one extreme, or for Mondale to give Chrysler a way out without obligation," Jackson told the crowd standing in the rain at the Akron airport.

"Hart offered Chrysler no deal. Mondale offered Chrysler an inadequate deal because Chrysler still has closed down 12-15 plants.'

'Harder' to be young

A national survey showed, says Dr. Glen Rogers of the University of Michigan, that people under age 30 are likelier than those who are older to describe their lot as "hard."

What's that you say?

About half of Americans with hearing impediments are 65 or older, with three in 10 senior citizens reporting difficulties, the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association says.

Visit reminder of how things have changed

By GEORGE GEDDA

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — The recent visit here by the Dominican Republic's president amid a congressional uproar over Central America policy offered fresh reminders of how the United States once dealt with security problems close to home — and how much things have changed.

In 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson sent 22,000 Marines to the Dominican Republic when there was just a vague possibility that a political uprising in the Caribbean nation could be exploited by Communist groups.

Order was restored, the United States helped arrange free elections a year later and Salvador Jorge Blanco is the third in a line of democratically chosen leaders who have served since then.

Johnson's overriding concern was to avoid "another Cuba."

But as last week's events demonstrated, Congress seems more interested in avoiding a different outcome — "another Vietnam."

The administration appears to recognize that there is virtually no constituency for sending the Marines to Nicaragua to perform the same function they did in the Dominican Republic 19 years ago.

The costs, both in political terms and in bloodshed, would be too high. In the post-Vietnam era, Americans have become extremely cautious about the uses to which U.S. military power should be put. This leaves the administration with the problem of how to achieve its political objectives by means other than Marine invasions.

In Grenada last fall, only an extraordinary combination of circumstances allowed the president to depart from that general rule and escape without political damage.

Reagan was able to justify the use of U.S. troops because he was assured of a quick victory with relatively small loss of life, he had an explicit invitation from neighboring countries to send troops to the Caribbean island and he was concerned about the safety of 700 Americans there.

None of those conditions pertain nowadays in Nicaragua.

Thus, the administration has been forced to rely on other means to achieve its goals: Support for anti-government rebels, the use of neighboring Honduras for a continuing series of U.S. military exercises, the cutoff of most of Nicaragua's U.S. sugar exports and, finally, the mining of Nicaragua's harbors.

Public support for administration policy has been grudging at best, but last week the disclosures about the CIA-sponsored mining operations resulted in the biggest outcry to date over Reagan's tactics.

A few hours after Reagan met with Blanco, the Republican-controlled Senate voted 84-12 for a nonbinding resolution to denounce the U.S. role in the Nicaraguan minelaying operation.

Couple kidnaps police officers

From Staff Reports

SWEETWATER — Police here late Saturday night were searching for a gun-wielding couple who kidnapped two Sweetwater police officers about 9 p.m., according to the Department of Public Safety.

Details of the incident were not available by press time, but the hostages reportedly were released unharmed and the couple was last seen on foot in Sweetwater.

They were said to be white, in their 40s and armed with a sawed-off shotgun and two handguns.

Wilder's intention may never be known

COLEBROOK, N.H. (AP) — Rape-murder suspect Christopher Wilder died of accidental gunshot wounds in a scuffle with police, a doctor said Saturday, but said officials may never know whether Wilder intended to commit suicide or shot himself inadvertently as he aimed at a trooper.

The millionaire fugitive shot himself twice in the heart with his .357 Magnum revolver Friday after being approached by a state trooper at a gas station parking lot. One shot passed through Wilder's body and wounded the officer.

The 39-year-old electrical contractor and race car driver allegedly raped, stabbed, beat, tortured and killed a number of young women during a three-week, 8,000-mile flight from his Boynton Beach, Fla., home.

The FBI accused him in the abductions of 11 women — four found dead, three who turned up alive and four still missing, and said that the search for the missing women would continue.

Wilder's death was labeled accidental by Dr. William Gifford, who witnessed the autopsy and signed the death certificate. The autopsy showed that both shots tore through Wilder's heart, the second ripping it apart.

Gifford said Saturday, however, that he had no way of determining why Wilder fired.

"We have no way of knowing if this man wanted to commit suicide," he said. "There's no way to tell."

"We're treating it as an open issue and we think there's a good chance it's going to remain open," said Assistant Attorney General Andrew Isaac. "It's a state-of-mind question, and we can't determine Mr. Wilder's state of mind any more."

He said the "accidental" listing on the death certificate is not binding on anyone.

Another assistant attorney general, Michael Pignatelli, said: "We don't have any conclusions yet. But we think the evidence is mounting that he (Wilder) drew that gun to try to kill the trooper."

Wilder apparently had headed for northern New Hampshire with the interest of crossing into Canada, authorities said.

"He was asking for some information on going across the border," said Wayne Delong, who waited on Wilder at Stanton's Getty Service Station. "He wanted some information on getting to Canada, but we didn't get that far along."

The conversation was interrupted by the arrival of two state troopers. Pignatelli said Wilder, apparently suspicious about the unmarked police station wagon, began walking to his car, a stolen Pontiac Firebird.

"The two troopers yelled for him to stop, they wanted to talk to him," Pignatelli said Saturday. He said Wilder dashed to the car with Trooper Leo Jellison close behind.

Pignatelli said Jellison saw Wilder grab a gun inside the car. Unable to reach the gun, the 6-foot-2, 250-pound trooper kept a bear hug on Wilder to keep the gun blocked. Wilder fired twice.

Authorities and relatives worried that Wilder's death would hinder efforts to find the missing women.

Lebanese radio said several Israeli soldiers were killed or wounded in an attack with rockets and machine guns southeast of the southern Lebanese city of Sidon, but the Israeli military command in Tel Aviv said the report was false. "No such thing happened," a command spokesman said.

Israel announced that its military had destroyed of the homes of four Palestinian terrorists who hijacked a bus in the cccupied Gaza Strip. It said the buildings were destroyed Friday, hours after the Palestinians were killed and 24 hostages were freed in a rescue raid on the bus.

The announcement was Israel's first identification of the attackers as Palestinians. A Syrian-backed Marxist faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization had claimed responsibility.

The Palestine Press Service, which monitors news in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza, identified the hijackers as Gaza residents between the ages of 18 and 22.

Commission approves grant

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Adult Probation Commission Friday approved an $8,100 grant for Midland County to conduct a feasibility study on creating a restitution center for non-violent offenders.

TAPC spokesman Dick Lewis said the grant is for a three-month period, and will be used to review cases involving persons sent to the Department of Corrections during the past six months to see how many of those might have been sent to a restitution center.

The study also will involve development of a budget and consideration of other factors affecting the center.

Lewis said the county, if it is determined a center is feasible, would likely apply later for funds to implement the center.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Legislature may defrost 'freeze' on government funding

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — While temperatures in some parts of Texas have been moving to the three-digit level, freeze warnings are still out in Austin, or at least in state agency offices.

Many officials felt an arctic chill recently, as Speaker Gib Lewis and House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, circulated a letter to "suggest" they "not include any considerations for inflation, salary changes or growth" in their fiscal 1986-87 budgets.

That letter noted the effects of the recession on Texas' economy, and Comptroller Bob Bullock's projection that only $15 million will be left at the end of the current biennium.

Money matters were the major concern of the 1983 Legislature.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby quipped before the session that the three major topics for lawmakers would be money, money and money and it appears that at least two of the top three for 1985 will be the same.

Thus far, the budgetary freeze movement has been drawing fairly predictable responses, with the most common being support for the idea in principle, but with exceptions.

Gov. Mark White, at a recent press conference, agreed that he, too, favors holding the line on spending whereever possible but he also wants to assure that the state's needs are met.

State Republican Party officials charged that the talk about holding the line on spending is simply political rhetoric. Chairman George Strake, Houston, contends Texas taxpayers are being "set up" for tax increases, without any real consideration of "cost cutting, efficiences and abolition of government waste."

Waste, of course, is sometimes in the eye of the beholder but Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas, thinks he's located some clear examples and wants the Legislature to take a look at other possible abuses before attempting to write a new budget.

Wolens circulated a letter of his own to the Appropriations Committee, citing "gross wasteful spending by the Texas Department of Corrections," and the practice of agencies renting meeting rooms at Austin hotels "rather than using state-maintained conference rooms."

Wolens argued that there may be "many other spending abuses" by state agencies, which should be examined and corrected before the Legislature starts talking about increasing taxes.

He also made the point that "we often appropriate not by oversight but by hindsight."

That point has been made by various people and groups both inside and outside the legislative process.

The Legislature meets every other year for 140 days and, barring some unusual circumstance, puts together the spending program for state agencies for a period which ends some 30 months later.

That isn't, critics have argued, the most efficient way to run a government.

The classic argument has been that state agencies, having to guess what they'll be needing, and what costs will be, two and one-half years in advance will fudge on their figures, raising the estimates in order to be sure of having enough funds at the end of the period.

And then, rather than admit that needs were over-estimated, the money is spent in a kind of self-fulfilling economic prophesy.

Over the years, a number of attempts have been made to correct that tendency, including the "zero-based" budgeting approach, and continued oversight through the committee process, the Governor's Office, and the Legislative Budget Board.

And the classical proposal for dealing with the long-tailed budget has been to have annual legislative sessions, at least for budgetary matters.

But Texas voters have rejected annual session, suspecting, perhaps, that once legislators arrived at the Capitol, it would be difficult to keep them limited to spending matters.

Wolens argues that the House Appropriations Committee should go back and review how agencies have been spending their money, to cut money from the current appropriations bill to apply to the next appropriations bill.

Part of the current difficulty for lawmakers is that Texas' needs have been growing in terms of highways, schools, human services, water and whatever else one might name and revenues to meet those needs haven't been growing fast enough to keep pace.

So legislators are finding themselves with the choice of having to find more revenues, reallocate existing revenues, or not meet those needs.

Thus far, there's not too much enthusiasm for the first option, and there are problems with the others.

The problem with a freeze is that it will only last until things heat up — and the 1985 Legislature may be due to experience a warming trend.

Man mistakenly convicted of murder freed

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston man sentenced to 15 years in prison after eyewitnesses to a night-club slaying fingered him as the killer has been freed by authorities who say he was a victim of mistaken identity.

Everett Baily Malloy, 32, whose murder conviction is on appeal, was released on a personal recognizance bond Friday.

Another man has been charged with the murder for which Malloy was convicted.

Larry Schreve, the Harris County assistant district attorney who prosecuted Malloy's case, said police have new information that shows Malloy did not commit the July 1983 murder.

State District Judge George Walker sentenced Malloy in February after jurors found him guilty of slaying William Smiddy, 25, outside a north Houston night club.

Honeybees adapted to travel

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — A colony of honeybees sent into space aboard the shuttle were able to build a nearly normal comb despite the six days of weightlessness and the colony's queen laid several eggs, a master beekeeper said Saturday.

One day after being returned to Earth aboard the shuttle Challenger, the bees were busily visiting flowers gathering nectar and pollen.

Mel Coplin removed the bees Saturday from a box that had been the insects' home during the six-day flight of space shuttle mission 41-C. He said the bees were "surprisingly gentle."

"They were so quiet and gentle it was abnormal," said Coplin. "I don't know why they were that way."

Coplin said the bees had built about 30 inches of wax comb, proving that the insects' instinctive abilities were not seriously affected by the weightlessness of orbit.

"Some of the comb is distorted as if they were disoriented for a day or two," said Coplin. "But after that they picked up a pattern that looks just like a normal comb."

A control group of bees, kept in a box identical with that flown in space, made 30 to 50 square inches of comb in six days during earlier tests, said Coplin.

The colony of 3,300 bees was flown on the shuttle as an experiment developed by Dan Poskevich, a student at Tennessee Technological University in Cooksville, Tenn.

Honeybees on Earth routinely build combs made up of perfect six-sided cells.

Poskevich said he developed the experiment to determine if the bees depend upon gravity to aid in the design of their combs. He theorized that the bee combs could be affected by weightlessness.

But Coplin said it appears that gravity is not a factor.

"The first few cells were built with the holes vertical when they should normally be horizontal," said the beekeeper. "Then they gradually turned the comb so that the holes are horizontal like a normal comb. I think they adapted to zero gravity."

The bees were fed sugar water mixed with gelatin. Coplin said they could not make honey from such food, but the bees stored some of it in the cells of the comb.

Coplin said the bees survived better than he expected in the box. Only 125 died and 500 to 600 casualties had been predicted, he said.

The colony's queen laid 35 eggs during the mission. Coplin has removed some of the eggs and hopes to nurture them to maturity to see if the space exposure affected their development.

Coplin opened the bee box early Saturday and placed the queen in a regular hive. The rest of the colony followed, buzzed around the queen briefly and then abuptly left. Minutes later, the bees returned.

The beekeeper said the sudden departure and return was expected.

Bees, he said, can relieve themselves only while outside the hive and while in flight. Until Saturday, they had not been out of the bee box for a week.

"They just held it for seven days," said Coplin. "The hive is just a clean as a pin. There's not a speck of excrement."

The space bees, he said, now are working like any other colony on Earth. They spent Saturday flying to and from a nearby field of flowers, gathering nectar and pollen.

"Before the day's over, I'm sure they'll be making honey," said Coplin. "I think they have proved that bees could live in space."

Mexican mayor tries to bring changes to Juarez

Francisco Terrazas

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — When Francisco Barrio Terrazas was elected mayor of this large border city last year, his campaign focus was "change" — a pledge of hope for the nearly one million residents that for years have lived with government corruption and economic hardship.

Now, six months into office, Barrio insists changes are occurring, though he admits they are not clearly visible or easy to grasp ahold of.

"If you think only of physical aspects, it certainly is not going to change in six months," Barrio, 33, said recently. "The pavement, the lights, the sewers — there are no changes. But we've changed a lot in the mind, the thoughts of the people. We communicate more with them now and that is the first step to changing the physical factors."

Barrio, a certified public accountant who moved north to Juarez seven years ago from his native Chihuahua City, was elected in July 1983 under the banner of Mexico's conservative opposition National Action Party, known by its Spanish initials as PAN. His victory broke the 54-year stranglehold this country's dominant Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, had in Juarez.

Barrio took office in October 1983 and still views the PRI's defeat as the change Juarez needed most.

"People always are asking 'Where are the changes?'" he said. "Well, a year ago, people in Juarez and in all the country thought it was almost impossible to defeat PRI. The people don't think so any more. Is that a change or not?"

A tall man with hazel eyes and a wispy moustache, Barrio attributes his first political success to his citizens' frustration in 1983 with the Mexican economy, which in 1982 went through several peso devaluations, and to prevailing corruption in the PRI governing.

Barrio defeated PRI candidate Santiago Nieto Sandoval with more than 60 percent of the vote.

And Barrio said the PAN currently is "the largest political force by far" in Juarez, Mexico's fifth-largest city that sits across the Rio Grande from El Paso, Texas.

Barrio said his current plans are to follow through on several objectives he set forth when elected.

The blueprint includes allowing Juarez residents to share in the responsibilities, decisions and functions of government.

More than 40 neighborhood committees have been formed to "discuss what the problems may be and then they have to come up with solutions. We work together, but they - the people - must work with us. They just can't look to us for all the answers."

The committees are representative of Barrio's informalness.

Despite the attempt to better communication between the people and the government, Barrio concedes some residents resent the lack of changes. Juarez reamins the economically depressed and overpopulated city with a growth rate of between 6 percent and 7 percent annually that is was before Barrio took office.

The city's budget for 1984 stands at about $12 million, an amount Barrio knows is not sufficient to provide the services needed by his growing population.

But he said his nemeses are numerous.

"I have problems with everything," he said with a large smile. "This city lacks so much."

And that is one fact Barrio said he is trying to relate to the residents of Juarez.

"We're trying to do what we can for the people," he said. "But everyone must realize we won't ever by able to solve everything. Our country is a very poor country and the city can't escape that reality.

TO THE CITIZENS OF MIDLAND

I am very grateful and honored to have been re-elected to a third term as your Mayor. My pledge to each of you, whether you voted for me or not, is to be your Mayor; to continue to be accessible and hard-working on your behalf; and to be supportive of those projects that benefit our City. I believe we live in the finest city there is and I intend to work with an outstanding City Council to keep it that way.

A special word of appreciation goes to those who worked so hard and contributed so much in my campaign. It is tremendously encouraging to me to see so many giving of themselves and whose only interest is to support good government on every level. May your tribe increase!

Sincerely

Diet Pill Sweeping U.S.

No Dieting - Eat All You Want Pill Does All the Work

BEVERLY HILLS, CA. (Special) An amazing new "super" grapefruit pill has recently been developed and perfected that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose at least 10 pounds in 10 days. Best of all, it allows you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods and still lose a pound a day or more starting from the very first day until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire."

This "super" grapefruit pill is a dramatically improved version of the world famous grapefruit diet. It is far more effective than the original and eliminates "the mess, fuss, and high cost of eating half a fresh grapefruit at every meal."

"Pill Does All the Work"

According to the manufacturer, "the pill itself does all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise, and NO hunger pangs." It is 100% safe. You simply take the pill with a glass of water before each meal and the amazing combination of powerful ingredients are so effective they take over and you start losing weight immediately.

Pill Has ALL Daily Vitamins

The powerful and unique combination of ingredients are what make this a "super-pill". It contains highly potent grapefruit concentrate and a diuretic to help eliminate bloat and puffiness. No need to take any vitamins to maintain your good health and energy. The pill is fortified with ALL (100%) of the U.S. Government daily vitamin requirements.

Contains Japanese 'Glucomannan'

Each pill also contains an amazingly effective amount of "glucomannan", the remarkable natural dietary fiber discovery from Japan (used successfully for over 1500 years) that expands in your stomach and gives you a full and satisfied feeling all day long.

The super-pill is already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again.

Now Available to Public

You can order your supply of these highly successful "super" grapefruit pills (now available directly from the manufacturer by mail order only) by sending $12 for a 14-day supply (or $20 for a 30-day supply, or $35 for a 60-day supply) cash, check, or money order to: Citrus Industries, 9903 Santa Monica Bl., Dept. Mondale criticizes Hart, Reagan in Kansas City

nation

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale on Saturday suggested that Democratic opponent Gary Hart was an imitator rather than a man of new ideas and criticized President Reagan for his stand on Central America and for statements on tax deductions on home mortgages.

In Kansas City, Mondale told an airport terminal crowd of about 300 people that "we need a people's Democrat in that White House again. I am a people's Democrat."

Many in the crowd wore windbreakers with United Auto Workers union emblems and others carried signs identifying them as members of AFL-CIO unions. Missouri holds Democratic caucuses Wednesday.

Mondale took note of Hart's visit to nearby Independence, Mo., Thursday in which Hart spoke beneath a statue of President Harry S. Truman. Hart had claimed he was like Truman in that he was bringing new ideas to a Democratic Party that had grown staid and conservative.

"I too am an admirer of Harry Truman, in fact, I once campaigned for him," Mondale said. "But I won't run for president as an imitation of Harry Truman or anyone else. I am running as Walter Mondale. For better or worse, what you see is what you get."

"I too am an admirer of Harry Truman, in fact, I once campaigned for him. But I won't run for president as an imitation of Harry Truman or anyone else. I am running as Walter Mondale. For better or worse, what you see is what you get."

A man in the crowd yelled, "Give 'em hell, Fritz," and Mondale drew a laugh when he quoted Truman as saying, "I tell them the truth and they think it's hell."

Mondale criticized Reagan for refusing this week to rule out the possibility of considering elimination of the income tax deduction for home mortgage interest.

Mediator met airlines officials

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A federal mediator met with Northwest Airlines officials Saturday in an effort to avert a strike by the airline's 2,900 flight attendants.

The attendants have called a strike for 12:01 a.m. Sunday.

Walter C. Wallace, chairman of the National Mediation Board, met Saturday with officials of the Minneapolis-based airline, said Matt Gonring, Northwest spokesman.

But no talks between the airline and the attendants' union were scheduled, said Gonring and Dennis Quinn, spokesman for Local 2747 of the Airline, Aerospace and Allied Employees union, a Teamsters affiliate.

The union also had not scheduled a meeting with the federal mediators Saturday, Quinn said early in the afternoon.

Mediators met separately with the company and union Friday.

Seventy-eight percent of the union members voted April 5 to reject the company's latest contract offer.

The biggest stumbling block in the talks was Northwest's demand for a dual pay scale that would allow the company to pay new employees about 30 percent less than rates set in the current contract, union officials have said.

The company has proposed to increase from 12 years to 18 years the time it takes new employees to reach the top of the seniority ladder.

The proposed 44-month contract also calls for a six-month pay freeze, then increases of 6 percent for the first year, 6 percent for the second and 3 percent for the third.

The attendants' last contract expired Dec. 31. Northwest's rejection of a mediator's offer of binding arbitration on March 14 triggered a 30-day cooling-off period before a strike could begin.

Support from the airline's pilots is considered crucial to a successful strike, but Gene Kragness, a Northwest pilot and spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association, would not comment on whether the pilots will honor attendants' picket lines.

The union's Master Executive Council was to meet Saturday night, and, if there was a strike, announce what the pilots will do, Kragness said.

Northwest will continue to fly if the attendants walk out, Gonring said Saturday.

"We have several contingency plans, each for operating a different percentage of the flight schedule," he said.

The airline has 600 qualified management personnel and "maybe a large number of regular flight attendants interested in working as well," Gonring said. The airline was contacting attendants Saturday afternoon to determine how many would be willing to continue working, Gonring said.

If there is a strike, Northwest also will "try to protect booked passengers either on Northwest or on other available service," Gonring said. In addition, the airline planned to substitute its larger aircraft for smaller planes, he said.

Northwest's first passenger flight Sunday is around 9 a.m., Gonring said.

Volcano continues its outpour

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — Kilauea Volcano was "ready to go" Saturday as the eruption at neighboring Mauna Loa continued its sluggish outpouring of lava, a National Park official said.

Kilauea, which began a sporadic eruption Jan. 3, 1983, last burst to life from its Pu'u O vent March 30, five days after Mauna Loa began to spew 1.3 million cubic yards of molten rock per hour. The simultaneous eruptions were the first in 116 years.

Kilauea quit March 31, but has since regained 100 percent of the force it lost during the two-day outburst.

"It's just sitting there, ready to go," said Joni Mae, a naturalist at Hawaii Volcanoes National Park.

Twenty-five miles to the northwest, the lava output from Mauna Loa, the largest active volcano in the world, fluctuated Saturday between 10,000 and 20,000 cubic meters per hour, Ms. Mae said. Earlier reports from geologists in the field that the rate had dropped to 5,000 cubic meters per hour proved to be inaccurate, she said.

U.S. Geological Survey scientists still believed the Mauna Loa eruption was nearing an end, she said.

The lava coming from a vent at the 9,400-foot level of the volcano fed a 10-foot-wide flow that extended 200 meters before it grew stagnant, Ms. Mae said.

Earlier flows had traveled down the eastern flank of Mauna Loa, coming to within a few miles of Hilo, Hawaii's second-largest city.

Lava flows from Kilauea's 15-month-old eruption have forced numerous evacuations of the Royal Gardens subdivision and caused an estimated $4 million damage to subdivision houses and roads.

Strait record set in 1948

The first person to swim across the Strait of Gibraltar from Spain to Spanish Morococo was a Peruvian, Daniel Carpio, who negotiated the distance of eight miles in 9 hours and 40 minutes on July 22, 1948.

nation in brief

Kroger recalls tablets

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Kroger Co. has recalled prescription heart medicine tablets called Isosorbide Dinitrate because the bottles may contain the wrong medicine, the company said.

A Kroger statement said the tablets may be amitriptyline HCL, a brown tablet that will not relieve angina pain and may result in serious adverse reaction if taken in place of Isosorbide Dinitrate.

The pills have been sold through Kroger and SupeRx pharmacies, its Sav-On pharmacies in New York and New Jersey, Thrifty pharmacies in Illinois and Gasen pharmacies in the St. Louis area, Kroger said.

The medicine is part of Lot 3G17508, 10 mg., in 100 count tablet bottles sold during between Sept. 1, 1983, to April 5, 1984, Kroger said Friday. In addition, the bottle may have the label Bell Pharmacal and Barr Laboratories, the company said.

False reports filed

CHELSEA, Mass. (AP) — Five police officers who admitted filing false reports after a fatal 1982 brawl between police and civilians have been reinstated, but the police chief isn't happy.

"I don't want them back," Chief Charles Wilson said after Mayor James Mitchell's decision Thursday.

The mayor said part of his decision was based upon advice from the city's insurance company. The company, he said, suggested that if the men returned to their jobs it would improve Chelsea's position in defending a $100 million damage suit filed by the victims of the brawl. One civilian died in the motel brawl.

Olympic signs limited

LOS ANGELES (AP) — No one but the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee may hang banners in designated areas of the city during the Summer Games under a measure tentatively approved by City Council.

The measure, approved unanimously Friday, gives the committee the exclusive right to hang banners between June 1 and Aug. 20 in areas including streets surrounding Olympic venues, the route of the marathon, along Olympic and Wilshire boulevards and downtown.

American Civil Liberties Union spokeswoman Sandra Rodriguez denounced the measure as infringement of free speech. The ACLU will decide this week if it will file suit to block the measure.

Workers to be rehired

LOS ANGELES (AP) — About 400 idled Fontana mill steelworkers may be rehired in a tentative $100 million-plus deal to sell the defunct Kaiser Steel plant to a California investor and Brazil's national export company, officials say.

The mill, shut down last December, could be reopened as early as September, investor Michael Wilkinson said Friday. He said he would partially finance the deal by selling half his Pacific Steel Corp. of Irwindale to Companhia Vale do Rio Doce of Sao Paulo. Pacific and Vale would both purchase the mill, he said.

Talks are continuing on a definitive agreement, which is expected to be concluded within 30 days, Kaiser said in a brief statement.

Kaiser was taken over last February for $405 million by an investor group led by J.A. Frates of Tulsa, Okla.

Students lose argument

WASHINGTON (AP) — A team of law students from South Texas College of Law in Houston, winner of a national competition that featured 116 other U.S. law schools, lost the final argument in international law Saturday to a Canadian team.

A three-man panel of international jurists awarded top team and individual honors to Dalhousie University Law School, Halifax, Nova Scotia, in the 25th annual Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition. It is named for retired American judge and scholar Philip C. Jessup, a former justice of the International Court at The Hague, Netherlands.

The contest, completed at the annual meeting of the American Society of International Law, pits the winning American team against the best among 71 law schools in 22 countries. They argue a set hypothetical case in international law throughout preliminary regional rounds and in the final trial before panels of experts.

Teens knifed by killer

NORWALK, Calif. (AP) — A 15-year-old boy dying from stab wounds staggered to a parking lot and collapsed after pointing to where his sister and another girl lay bleeding to death, police said Saturday.

Edward Kaster, his sister Rachel, 18, and Veronica Flores, 17, all of South Gate, were attacked Friday under the Firestone Boulevard bridge over the San Gabriel River in Norwalk, about 15 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles, police said.

Homicide detectives said they had no motive for the stabbings as they combed the site and questioned witnesses Saturday, Deputy Richard Shaw said.

Los Angeles County Sheriff's deputies were called at 10:24 p.m. Friday when Kaster staggered into the parking lot of the Golf 'n Stuff arcade and miniature golf course.

"The young man was able to get out and walk about 150 yards to the parking lot," Shaw said. "For all intents and purposes, he died in the lot."

Kastner was dead on arrival at the Coast Plaza Medical Center, nursing supervisor Therese Owens said.

Jackson claims first clear-cut victory in home state

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Native son Jesse Jackson claimed his presidential campaign's first clear-cut victory Saturday at the Democratic convention in South Carolina and Walter F. Mondale finally got some delegates of his own in the Southern state.

The Rev. Jackson, a Greenville native, won 34.4 percent of the vote and 17 of the state's national delegates as previously unpledged delegates defected in droves.

Uncommitted dropped to second place with 27.1 percent of the vote, or 12 elected delegates.

Mondale and Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, who finished close in the unofficial percentages, will get six elected delegates each, said South Carolina party officials.

But the total count after Saturday stood at 17 for Jackson, 14 uncommitted, seven for Hart and six for Mondale because three automatic delegates not involved in the voting already have stated a preference — two uncommitted and one for Hart.

"This exceeds my wildest dreams," said Dr. Walker Solomon, chairman of the Jackson effort. "This says to the nation that South Carolina loves her children. If you work hard with a good candidate you can win."

In Virginia's caucuses, Jackson won the popular vote but Mondale got more delegates because of a quirk in geographic distribution.

Hart campaigner Phil Noble said efforts for Hart succeeded. "I don't think anybody expected us to demolish Mondale down here," he said.

Noble predicted that three to five of the unpledged national delegates eventually would go for Hart.

Mondale organizer Samuel Tenenbaum had similar comments: "We are very happy. We've achieved a significant victory for Mondale considering where we were."

Tenenbaum predicted Mondale would get three-fourths of the unpledged slate at the national convention.

The candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination were paying particular attention to the convention because first-round caucus results from last month indicated 30 members of the state's national delegation would be uncommitted unless they could be won over.

After those first-level caucuses last month, Jackson had 12 national delegates, Hart had two, Mondale had none and 30 were uncommitted. That count included three congressmen, who are among the state's seven automatic delegates, who have expressed a preference — two uncommitted and one for Hart.

Seven of the South Carolina's 48 delegates, including three congressmen already named, will go to the national convention technically uncommitted.

Striking hotel workers march in Vegas

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Thousands of workers on strike against 32 hotels closed the glittering Las Vegas Strip with a protest march Saturday, pointing at still-open hotels and shouting "scabs go home."

Several hundred police officers stood by and a helicopter buzzed over the three-mile parade route, but there were no reports of arrests or confrontations during the two-hour march.

Metro Police Lt. Jim Chaney, who estimated the crowd at about 3,500, called the marchers "orderly and well-mannered."

The marchers were cheered by strikers walking picket lines in front of several resorts. At the Aladdin Hotel, which has not been struck, union maids leaned out of windows and waved towels.

Members of the four striking unions began the march, which was led by farm-labor leader Cesar Chavez, at mid-morning on the south end of the Strip.

"You won the city of Las Vegas, you won the hearts of the whole country," Chavez told the strikers. "It will not be long until you have your victory."

It takes 122 days to pay off taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — By the time the deadline for filing federal tax returns passes at midnight Monday, you'll only have to work another 15 days to pay off your U.S., state and local tax obligations for the year.

If every penny earned so far this year had been earmarked for taxes, your "Tax Freedom Day" would come May 1, the same date as in 1983. But because this is leap year, if you are average, you'll have to work 122 days to pay your taxes, compared with 121 days last year.

Tax Freedom Day is the Tax Foundation's way of dramatizing the impact of taxes on American workers and families. With this year's announcement comes word that 1984 will be the first year ever for total tax liabilities to pass the $1 trillion mark.

"Worth noting in terms of the annual date of Tax Freedom Day in recent years is that the day moved earlier in the year in 1982 for the first time since 1975," the foundation reported. "It was earlier still in 1983," and the foundation credited the across-the-board cuts in federal tax rates that were enacted in 1981.

Although the federal government took back part of that tax cut with selective tax increases in 1982 and 1983, the foundation says, you can blame state, city and county officials for the extra day of work for the tax collector this year.

The foundation's calculations assume that individuals pay all taxes, even those assessed on corporations. To determine the average, the organization simply divides the total tax collections among the nation's workers.

If you prefer to think of your tax obligations as a share of your eight-hour workday, you're putting in 2 hours and 40 minutes a day for the government this year. That's one minute more than in 1983. Federal taxes require 1 hour and 43 minutes each day; states and local governments take 57 minutes. By comparison, housing expenses take 1 hour and 34 minutes; you have to work 1 hour and 4 minutes for food.

Buying and maintaining a car and paying for other means of transportation require 42 minutes of each workday. The bill for medical care is 36 minutes; clothing, 21 minutes; recreation, 20 minutes, and all other expenses, including education, personal care and savings, 43 minutes each day.

Food, housing, transportation and medical care each will require one minute less of work per day in 1984. Miscellaneous expenses will take three minutes more each day.

Since 1979, the Tax Foundation figures, the share of each workday devoted to paying taxes has dropped one minute; food prices, another nine minutes. Due in large part to declining savings, the time required to pay miscellaneous expenses has plunged by 18 minutes.

The Tax Foundation, a non-partisan research organization, has calculated Tax Freedom Day all the way back to 1930. In that year, your total tax obligation would have been met Feb. 13. Ten years later, the date had advanced to March 8. In 1959, it was April 3; in 1970, April 28.

The latest date ever was May 6. That was reached in 1981 when near-record inflation pushed taxpayers into ever-higher tax brackets and before the first stage of the three-year federal tax reduction took effect.

Camels honored on stamp

Did you know that there's a camel on a U.S. postage stamp? If you look closely enough you can see one on the 3-cent stamp issued in 1948 to mark the 100th anniversary of Fort Bliss in Texas. The U.S. Army imported camels in the 1850s to serve as beasts of burden in opening up the West.

ASSUMABLE MORTGAGE IMPACT

Although the Supreme Court ruled that Federally chartered S&Ls may refuse to allow assumptions of their home mortgages, the decision will have limited impact.

The impact of the decision is limited to those states which have laws banning or limiting the enforcement of due-on-sale clauses. It is also limited by the fact that, even in those states, many mortgages are held by state and federal lenders other than the federal savings and loan associations. Only about half of the nation's 4,000 savings and loan associations are federally chartered and fewer than one third of the states had such legislation in effect.

Even though federally chartered S&Ls in many states were already able to enforce due-on-sale, many have opted for a blended rate (higher than the original but lower than the current market rate). The assumable loan is not dead. Though there will be effects, they are not surmountable.

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The covert CIA operation to mine Nicaragua's harbors was run by about 30 CIA operatives from a secret base near San Lorenzo in Honduras. Collapsible speedboats were helicoptered to a Panamanian-registered vessel anchored in a hidden inlet off Punta Condeca in the Gulf of Fonseca.

The hidden CIA port is only a few miles from Nicaragua's border with Honduras, U.S. intelligence sources disclosed today. From there the CIA ship, after dark, would venture around Punta Cosiguna to a point about 14 miles off Corinto, Nicaragua's main Pacific port.

There are about 100 U.S. soldiers manning the barracks at the San Lorenzo base, headquarters of the CIA operation, they said.

The extent of secret U.S. involvement seems to conflict with CIA spokesman George Lauder's denial that "there are no Americans involved" in Nicaragua or its waters, although strictly speaking Americans do not seem to have been directly involved in the actual laying of the mines.

The CIA operatives ran just about everything else, however. They reportedly hoisted the small speedboats on and off the Panamanian freighter just outside Nicaragua's 12-mile territorial limit, piloted the helicopters that transported the mines and saw to it that the frogmen carried out the mission.

According to one source, a handful of CIA "auditors" even were dispatched to the secret CIA base in Honduras to see to it that the foreign nationals were paid and that "there were no problems" in keeping the Panamanian ship afloat and well hidden.

The sources provided the first, comprehensive account of the CIA-directed operation. The mines used were "acoustic" weapons that floated just beneath the surface and were detonated by contact with a ship's hull.

The most startling new disclosure is that the covert CIA-directed operation began to take shape much earlier than the widely believed start of this year.

The CIA plans to help anti-Sandinista rebel units mine Corinto and Puerto Sandino on Nicargua's Pacific coast and Bluefields and Puerto Cabezas on the Caribbean were first formulated in March of 1983, the sources said.

They revealed that a CIA team, operating with the direct approval of Judge William Clark, the White House national security adviser, had urgently requested detailed maps of the depths and channels of the four ports from the top-secret Defense Mapping Agency.

The original plan, according to the intelligence sources, was to provide the Italian-manufactured mines to Miskito Indian frogmen who were trained by Argentine, Chilean and Salvadoran underwater guerrilla warfare experts at secret sites in Honduras.

The plan called for the mines to be laid in May, to interrupt the heavy flow of Soviet and Cuban in time to prevent an early summer offensive in El Salvador. But the CIA refused to provide the mines at the last minute, leading to cancellation of the operation.

The scrubbing of the operation was never explained. There reportedly was a heated discussion during the summer of 1983, within the CIA itself, over the legality and the political consequences of the operation.

Senator: Trial delay would jeopardize aid

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — U.S. Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg said Saturday the Salvadoran government would be jeopardizing future U.S. aid if there are further delays in the trial for the murders of four American churchwomen.

"I would say it would endanger future funding if it (the trial) is not done in May," the New Jersey Democrat said. "The nuns' trial is a very important symbol...There must be justice. The delay in the trial has gone on too long."

President Alvaro Magana, who met with Lautenberg, said there would be no delays and the trial would begin sometime in May as planned.

"I am positively sure that this time before the end of May there will be a trial. Only some technical details remain," Magana said after the meeting.

Lautenberg was in El Salvador to meet with U.S. and Salvadoran officials about the case in which five national guardsmen are charged with murdering the churchwomen on Dec. 2, 1980, after kidnapping them.

An unidentified demonstrator hurles rocks at police as he stands, engulfed by clouds of tear gas, at a new runway at the Frankfurt International Airport in Frankfurt, West Germany, Saturday.

German protesters attack runway

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Riot police firing tear gas and water cannons Saturday battled 6,500 protesters, some armed with slingshots and firebombs, who tried to storm a new airport runway.

At least six police and three protesters were reported seriously injured and 52 people were arrested in the combined environmentalist and antimilitary protest at Frankfurt International Airport, Europe's busiest airport. A U.S. air base shares some of the runways.

Scores of protesters were treated for minor injuries in the woods adjacent to the $86 million, 13,000-foot runway. Police said 20 officers also suffered slight injuries. But air controllers said the runway remained open.

Police said 10 of their vehicles were damaged, including two water cannons were set ablaze by homemade firebombs. Small grass fires broke out as barrages of firecrackers hurled by the protesters ignited dry leaves. Water cannons doused the flames.

Those opposing the runway include environmentalists, anti-NATO groups and people who object to U.S. foreign policy.

Vietnamese refugees arrive in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Sixty-three Vietnamese refugees, including a newborn baby, arrived in the port of Himeji in western Japan on Saturday after being picked up by an American tanker in the South China Sea a week ago, the Maritime Safety Agency announced.

The 40 men and 22 women left a port south of Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon, aboard a fishing boat April 4. They were rescued four days later by the 83,600-ton tanker "Capricorn" while drifting about 310 miles east of Ho Chi Minh City, the agency said.

A woman gave birth to a baby girl on April 10 aboard the tanker. The baby was delivered by an American doctor who had flown by helicopter from a U.S. military base in Okinawa, the agency said.

German, Chinese accord brewing

PEKING (AP) — The Germans, who as colonialists introduced lager beer to imperial China at the turn of the century, are coming back to brew more, in partnership with the Communist government.

China on Saturday announced it has signed an agreement with the Paulaner-Salvator-Thomasbrau brewery of West Germany to produce beer, mineral water and soft drinks in Shenzhen, across the border from Hong Kong.

The West German brewery will hold 50 percent of the shares, provide equipment and technology.

An initial plant, costing $30 million, will produce 7.8 million gallons of beer a year, the official Chinese news agency Xinhua reported. At least half the beer is to be exported.

Reagan defends decision to send Salvadorans aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday he decided to send emergency aid to El Salvador without congressional approval because "we cannot turn our backs on this crisis at our doorstep" in Central America.

Reagan, in his weekly radio address paid for by his re-election committee, said the recent congressional debate over U.S. policy in Central America "has ignored the most relevant facts."

"Central America has become the stage for a bold attempt by the Soviet Union, Cuba and Nicaragua to install communism by force throughout this hemisphere."

After Congress recessed Friday for Easter vacation without giving Reagan the $61.7 million he wanted for Salvadoran aid, the White House announced the president was invoking authority permitting him to send military equipment to a country and defer payment for up to 120 days.

By so doing, Reagan authorized emergency shipment of weapons and medical supplies to the embattled El Salvador government.

In his radio speech, the president contended that El Salvador "has been the main target of Nicaragua's covert aggression."

He added: "Despite promises to stop, the Sandinistas (Nicaraguan leaders) still train and direct terrorists in El Salvador and provide weapons and ammunitions they use against the Salvadoran people. If it weren't for Nicaragua, El Salvador's problems would be manageable, and we could concentrate on economic and social improvements."

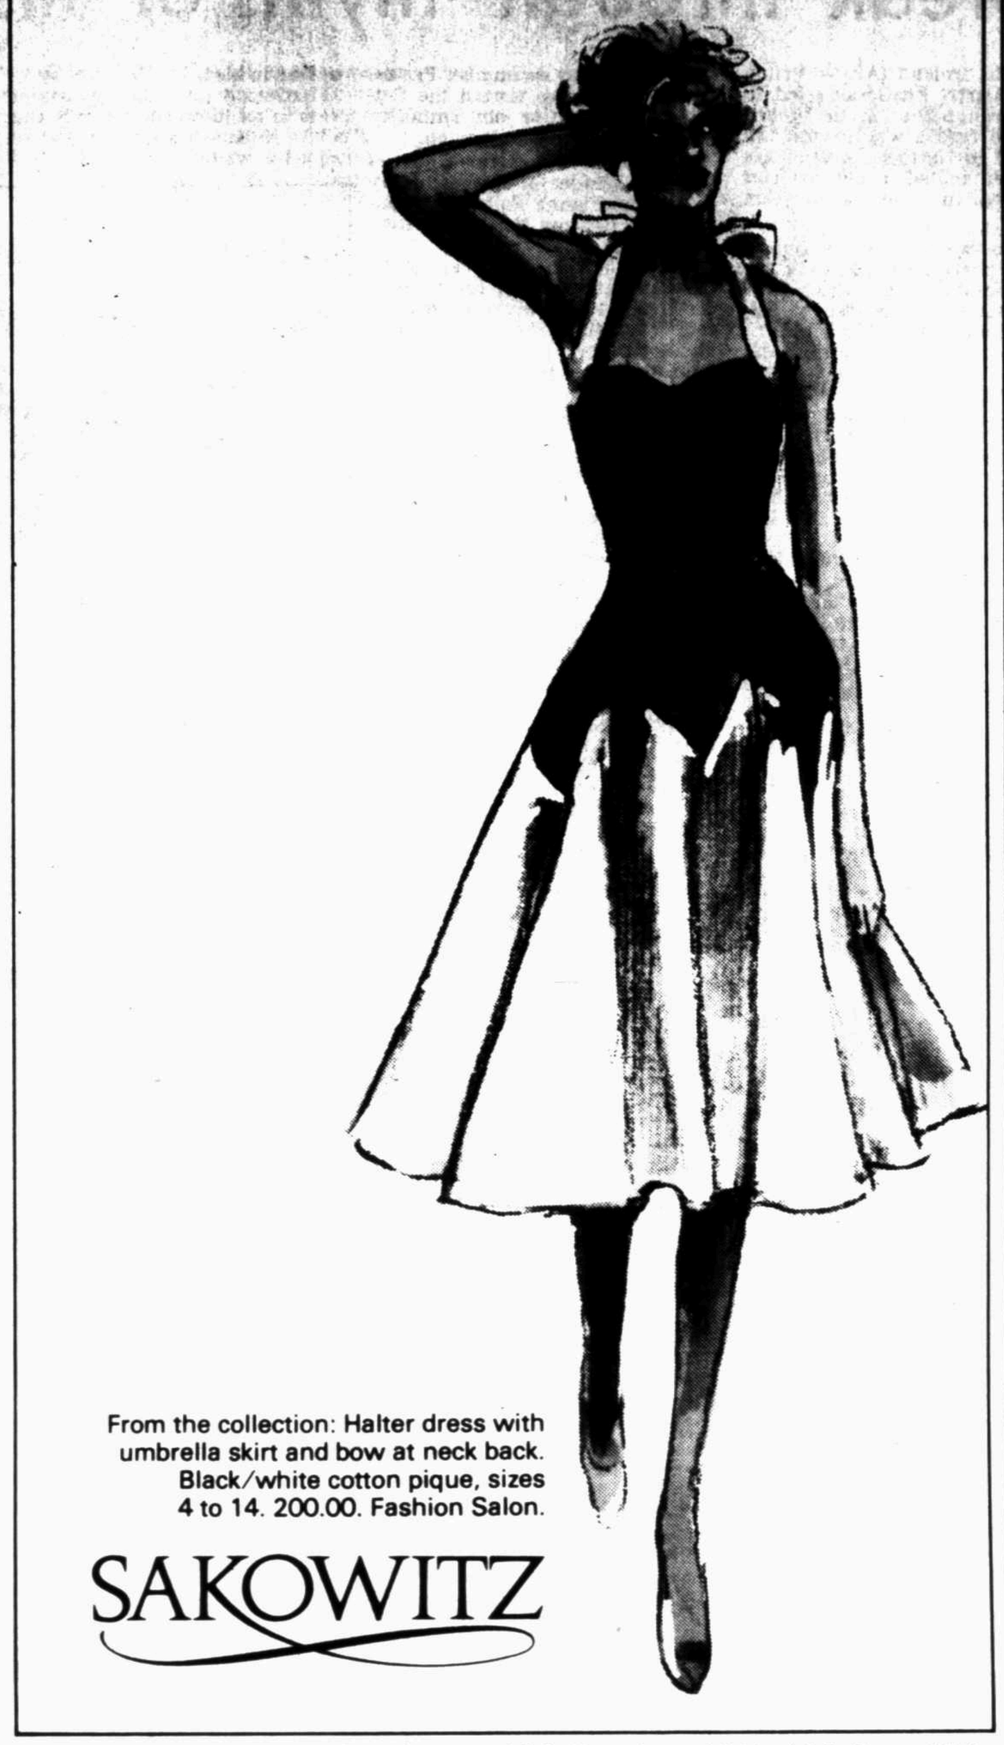

Reagan also criticized Nicaragua for complaining to the World Court about CIA-backed mining of Nicaraguan harbors. "This does little to advance a negotiated solution. But it makes sense if you're trying to evade the spotlight of responsibility," he said.

The United States has said it will not recognize the court's jurisdiction in the case.

Congress has gone on record firmly opposing CIA-backed mining of Nicaraguan harbors. In addition, a group of House Democrats is demanding an investigation of U.S. policy in Central America.

"The struggling democracies of Costa Rica, Honduras and El Salvador are being threatened by a Soviet bloc and Cuban-supported Sandinista army."

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald's bid to break through the "myths of history" and find a way to end the bloodshed in Northern Ireland has become entangled in old rivalries dating from the civil war 61 years ago.

A rift between nationalist Roman Catholic parties has set back the New Ireland Forum, which FitzGerald established last May to find constitutional ways to end Ulster's 15-year-old sectarian conflict and unite the British province with the Irish Republic.

The republic's three main political parties and the Catholic Social Democratic and Labor Party from Northern Ireland sit on the forum. They represent about 90 percent of the 4 million Catholics in the two Irelands.

Northern Protestants refused invitations to attend the forum.

But FitzGerald hopes the group can push Ulster's million-strong Protestant majority and the British out of their deeply entrenched "inherited positions" that have blocked a settlement.

The two primary suggestions are a form of federation, and a shared control by Dublin and London.

Squabbling between hardline and moderate nationalists has delayed publication of the forum's final report outlining possible solutions. The report was scheduled for completion before Christmas, but has been postponed several times and now is expected by the end of April.

The parties are divided over how to achieve unity.

Ireland was partitioned in 1921 into British-ruled, Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland and the Roman Catholic "Free State," later the republic.

FitzGerald favors dropping Dublin's old claim of sovereignty over Ulster in hopes this will convince the north's pro-British, Protestant majority that they have nothing to fear from a united Ireland in which Catholics will far outnumber Protestants. He proposes instead the federal arrangement or joint authority over the province with London.

But former premier Charles Haughey, leader of the staunchly nationalist Fianna Fail party, continues to demand that the British leave Ulster.

He opposes joint sovereignty because that would still leave a British presence on Irish soil. He fears that demanding anything less that a unitary state would bolster Sinn Fein, the IRA's political front, and leave it the only party committed to a British pullout and a united Ireland.

Sinn Fein was not invited to the forum because it supports the outlawed Irish Republican Army's guerrilla campaign to drive the British from the north, and because it wants to set up a revolutionary, socialist, all-Ireland state.

The other nationalist parties all seek peaceful unification.

The rift between Fianna Fail and FitzGerald's Fine Gael party is an echo of the 1922-23 civil war, which was fought over the same issue the forum is debating: the 1921 partition of the island.

The "free staters," Fine Gael's forebears, accepted the treaty but continued to lay claim to the north. The anti-treaty faction lost the war, and its leader, Eamon De Valera, founded Fianna Fail.

With Britain's latest political effort in Ulster in tatters and the province's sectarian polarization increasing, the forum is the only initiative in sight aimed at ending the bloodletting.

The forum is important because this is the first time since 1921 that constitutional nationalists have shown a willingness to discuss something less than total unification and to confront the harsh realities of the trouble in Northern Ireland.

FitzGerald hopes that if Dublin makes concessions, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain will respond in kind.

FitzGerald told The Associated Press in an interview recently that failure to launch a new Anglo-Irish initiative would "make a bad and dangerous situation worse" in Northern Ireland and destabilize the republic.

Dublin authorities are deeply alarmed at Sinn Fein's electoral advances in Ulster in the last three years. They fear its new political push will pose a serious challenge at a time of grave economic crisis and mounting alienation.

IRA, British play deadly electronic chess game in Northern Ireland

KEADY, Northern Ireland (AP) — The Irish Republican Army's bombmakers couldn't figure it out when three of their remote-control landmines mysteriously exploded across Northern Ireland within hours of each other.

The bombs had been planted in Belfast and the IRA stronghold of South Armagh to go off as British Army patrols came by.

But British military officers and sources close to the IRA's Provisional Wing said what had happened was that the army had located the bombs electronically and set them off at a time when they could do no harm.

The army pinpointed the devices by using a network of sophisticated radio detectors to sweep the airwaves for the pulse codes the bombers use to test circuits, then duplicated the IRA's command signals to blow the bombs up.

The network is codenamed "MacCounter" and is based on a World War II U.S. system for detecting German U-Boats in the Atlantic.

It is only one of the high-technology weapons the British have developed to counteract IRA guerrillas in Northern Ireland.

THIS, MANY official British sources maintain, is the shape of counter-insurgency warfare of the future — blanket computerized surveillance, electronic "spoofing" and battling guerrillas who increasingly are using the microchip to wage their campaigns.

The British do not permit their officials in Northern Ireland to identify themselves for publication "for security reasons." For similar reasons, IRA operatives talk to reporters only on an anonymous basis.

Both the British and the IRA are secretive about their electronic gadgetry that often dictates the pattern of violence in Northern Ireland's 14½-year-old political and sectarian conflict.

But qualified sources on both sides told The Associated Press that they use a bizarre mix of equipment, ranging from the latest in hi-tech to battered vintage black-and-white TV sets.

At one time, the Provos, as IRA's Provisional Wing is known, detected radar beams around army positions by driving cattle ahead of them and gauging the British response when alarms were triggered. Now they have their own electronic countermeasures.

The rules in this war of the microchip change all the time as one side or the other develops a new trick or counter-measure.

FRANK DOHERTY, a Dublin-based electronics specialist who monitors the hi-tech duelling, calls it a "deadly electronic chess game."

Once the Provos figured out how the British military was blowing up the ambush bombs they countered by sending spoof signals to lure patrols into gun ambushes, the sources said.

The guerrillas also switched to using special one-time codes outside standard frequencies for testing and detonating remote-control bombs to block the military's tactics.

The microchip plays a key role in the IRA's campaign to end British rule in Northern Ireland.

The guerrillas use an array of electronic devices including light-cell detonators and thermal sensors usually coupled to the triggers of booby-trap bombs.

These bombs stop disposal teams from burning off explosives to neutralize charges. The sensors react to heat and detonate the bomb as the experts work on it.

A British colonel said the Provos can plant charges with microchip delay timers that can be set to explode months, and even years, later.

NOW THE guerrillas are seeking laser weapons and missiles. A half-dozen Irishmen are awaiting trial in the United States on charges of trying to buy Redeye missiles and electronic bomb-making equipment for the Provos.

U.S. Customs Commissioner William von Raab said on a recent visit to London: "They're attempting to buy more sophisticated electronic equipment. They're interested in anything that will explode."

Army units rarely use scramblers on their radio network any more because guerrilla intercepts are widespread. These days they use Racal "frequency agile" equipment that sweep messages across 200 channels on the waveband, breaking them up and which can only be received on identical equipment.

The IRA was forced to develop electronic expertise to survive against the army's overwhelming firepower and arsenal of hi-tech weaponry.

From the early days in 1971, when a handful of radio hams with modified FM radios or retuned TV sets intercepted army field communications, the Provos now have a specialist unit to handle electronic and signals intelligence.

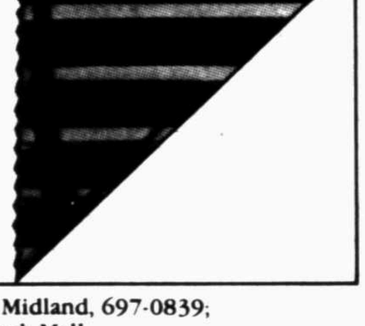

"They have systematically penetrated telephone and telex systems," Doherty noted. "Some IRA operators have been monitoring security communications almost daily for 10 years."

Reagan warns anew of 'crisis'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan warned anew today that the Soviet Union, Cuba and Nicaragua are trying to "install communism by force" in Central America.

"We cannot turn our backs on this crisis," he declared in his weekly radio address paid for by the Reagan-Bush '84 committee.

Reagan used his executive power Friday to order emergency shipments of weapons and military supplies to the government of El Salvador, a move likely to worsen relations with a Congress that has balked at supporting much of his Central American policy.

However, the president did not mention the controversial mining that has angered Congress. Instead, he said, "We've maintained a consistent policy toward the Sandinista regime, hoping they can be brought back from the brink peacefully through negotiations."

The shipments of military supplies to El Salvador were announced Friday by White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes, who said Salvadoran payment for the goods would be delayed for up to 120 days.

Immediately, the action prompted murmurs of surprise and some angry outcries from Capitol Hill.

"I think it's wrong, wrong, wrong," said Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations. "Obviously, the message now is, 'Any time you get pressured too much by Congress, we are going to come to your aid with a military drawdown.'"

Long said the president's decision would "make it very difficult for him to get the kind of cooperation...that he has got in the past" from the House and Senate.

Sen. Robert Kasten, R-Wis., said he would have preferred that Congress appropriate the money, but said the emergency action was "second best because they can get the dollars they want."

Kasten said the White House "has been bending over backward to work with Congress," and was forced to resort to an end run because lawmakers have been uncooperative.

The administration is seeking $61.7 million in aid for El Salvador, and House Democrats have proposed to cut that to $32 million. Speakes said Reagan hopes Congress will approve the Salvadoran aid package through regular channels before the 120-day period ends in mid-August.

While Reagan did not set a precise ceiling on the amount of aid, one administration official, speaking privately, said it was not expected to exceed $32 million over the next 10 days.

"In El Salvador a tragic irony is at hand," Speakes said. "At the very moment when the people have turned out in massive numbers to register dramatically their hopes and beliefs in democracy (by voting in a presidential election), their armed forces are running out of means to defend against Marxist violence. We must not let that happen."

Speakes said Reagan was invoking the 120-day delayed payment plan "in order to prevent unnecessary loss of life and to assure security required for the run-off (presidential) election" in El Salvador.

The president's action will permit El Salvador to draw on Pentagon stocks to buy four Medivac helicopters, training equipment, communication spare parts, ammunition and helicopter spare parts, said Speakes.

Announcement of Reagan's decision followed a daylong series of consultations between the White House and Capitol Hill. Congress recessed for Easter vacation Thursday night without giving final approval to Reagan's request for $61.7 million.

Congressional leaders had told Reagan that they would not object if he decided to divert $32 million to El Salvador from funds already approved for other countries.

However, Reagan chose instead to apply a "buy-now-pay-later" plan under provisions of the foreign military sales law. That plan allows the president to authorize equipment sales without any repayment from El Salvador for 120 days. Speakes said the Pentagon would be stuck with the bill if Congress does not appropriate money within 120 days that El Salvador could use to pay for its equipment.

Woman shoots, kills fugitive in Sikh temple

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — A woman shot and killed a Sikh fugitive inside the compound of the Sikhs' holy Golden Temple Saturday and five other people were wounded in the attack, witnesses reported. Rival Sikh factions blamed each other for the incident.

Five other people were reported slain and several wounded in other parts of Punjab state, where militant Sikhs are campaigning for greater political and religious autonomy.

The two main Sikh leaders, Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale and Harchand Singh Longowal, exchanged charges of betrayal. They had made an open break on Friday, India's Baisakhi festival, observed as the anniversary of the founding of the Sikh warrior order.

"Bhindranwale is actually a stooge of the government," Longowal, 53, told The Associated Press in an interview Saturday inside the Golden Temple. "While we are fighting for the rights of Sikhs, he is trying to split the Sikh movement."

"He seems more interested in settling personal scores than in supporting the Sikh agitation in which more than 200 Sikhs have been martyred in the past two years," said Longowal, the president of the Akali Dal Party.

The pistol-wearing Bhindranwale in turn accused Longowal of "hoodwinking the Sikh masses by playing dirty games." He said the Akali Dal, the main Sikh political party, "has stabbed the Sikhs in the back and no longer is the legitimate representative of true Sikhs."

"The Akalis are traitors," he added.

Police said the man killed in the Golden Temple by a revolver-firing woman was Surinder Singh Sodhi, a fugitive wanted in connection with the killing earlier this month of a right-wing Hindu politician.

Israelis destroy terrorists' homes

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israeli army said Saturday it destroyed the houses of the four Palestinians who hijacked a busload of civilians and held them hostage for nine hours.

The four homes, all in the occupied Gaza Strip, were demolished at 8 a.m. Friday, little more than two hours after soldiers stormed the bus, killed the hijackers and freed 24 passengers, according to the military command's communique.

One passenger was killed and seven were injured in the rescue.

The Palestine Press Service, which reports on the Israeli-occupied Arab territories, said the army blew up the houses after evacuating the guerrillas' families.

The agency said the four to seven people who had lived in each house were staying with neighbors.

Israel's military commonly demolishes or seals the homes of guerrillas who are convicted of terrorist acts, and sometimes of those accused, if they live in Israeli-controlled territory.

Defense Minister Moshe Arens said in an Israel Television interview that Israel would "strike at terrorists wherever they are and whenever they are found." He said the recent increase in attacks against Israeli civilians was an effort by Palestinian guerrillas "to show they are still around."

Yuval Ne'eman, head of the Cabinet's settlement committee, called on the government to "accelerate" the establishment of Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In a statement broadcast on Israel Radio, he said, "This is the best response to the terrorist organizations."

Thirty thousand Israelis and 1.3 million Palestinians live in the territories occupied by Israel in the 1967 Middle East war.

A Marxist faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization had claimed responsibility for the hijacking in a communique issued Friday in Damascus, Syria, but the army announcement was the first Israeli identification of the attackers as Palestinians.

The hijackers, demanding freedom for Palestinian prisoners in Israel, seized the bus late Thursday as it was traveling south from the Israeli port city of Ashdod and took it to the Gaza Strip.

All four of the houses were in villages near the city of Khan Yunis, about six miles south of the place where the bus standoff and rescue occurred.

The army said three of the homes were in Bani Suheila, east Khan Yunis, and the other was in Abu San, to the south.

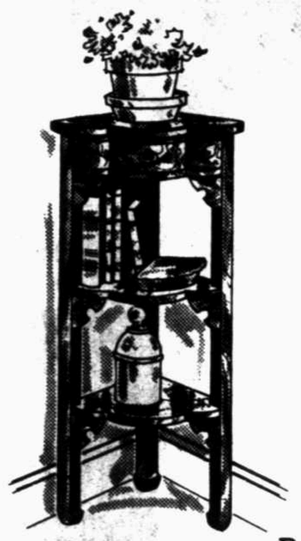

The military did not identify the hijackers by name or describe the demolition.

The Palestine Press Service identified the hijackers as Sobhi Abu Jama, 18; Majdi Abu Jama, 18, and Muhammad Barake, 19, of Bani Suheila, and Jamal Kavalan, 22, of Abu San.

In the last year, the army has sealed the homes of at least seven Palestinian families because one of their members was accused or convicted of firebomb or stone-throwing attacks.

Five of the homes sealed with cement belonged to the families of youths who were convicted of stoning an Israeli woman soldier to death in January 1983.

In December, soldiers demolished the homes of six guerrillas who were convicted of the stabbing murder of a seminary student in the West Bank city of Hebron last July.

Political activity shifts from streets to leader's palace

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

DHAKA, Bangladesh — After a month of violent protests in Bangladesh, the focus of political activity has shifted from the streets to the presidential palace where Gen. Hussain Mohammad Ershad, the military ruler, and his leading political opponents have begun their first face-to-face talks in two years.

Ershad proposed the dialogue last January. While 52 small opposition groups made use of the offer, the leaders of the major political parties said that they could meet with the ruling generals only if the ban on political activity was lifted and their colleagues were released from prison.

"It required a lot of behind-the-scenes negotiations to make the leaders of the party alliances agree to a direct dialogue," said Aminur Rahman Yusuf, the president's special assistant, who acted as the government's chief negotiator with the parties.

Prospects of talks between Ershad and Hasina Wazed, head of the 15-Party Alliance, and Khaleda Zia, leader of the Seven-Party Alliance, improved after the government postponed controversial local elections last month.

The government also allowed political parties to hold public rallies and released more than 1,000 political prisoners during the last two weeks.

"We joined the dialogue because we found tht the military government had demonstrated a willingness to improve the political climate in the country," Mrs. Wazed told reporters after a three-hour meeting with Ershad on Wednesday.

Talks with Mrs. Zia's Seven-Party Alliance had an inauspicious start Monday when alliance leaders walked out to protest the presence of newly appointed Prime Minister Ataur Rahman Khan.

Mrs. Zia opposed the appointment and said Khan was a "betrayer" because he had been a member of her alliance. But two days later, she agreed to return to the talks.

The government was also able to form a joint committee with the right-wing religious Jamaat-i-Islami Party, which had called for the introduction of Islamic laws.

Tennis marathon stages struggle

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

It took almost a dozen hours before today's finalist pairings were decided, but for the teams of Steve Wedderburn-Brian Lusson and Randy Crawford-Bill Matyastik, it was worth the wait.

Crawford-Matyastik, seeded first, and second seeds Lusson and Wedderburn overcame windy weather, darkness, and solid competition to advance to the 3 p.m. finals today in the USPTA First Bankers Trust-Southwest Airlines Love Doubles Championships at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

It was a full day of tennis, and part of a night's worth as well. The tournament's competitive balance finally evidenced itself in the quarterfinal rounds beginning Saturday morning. Since only one seed had been eliminated before Saturday, only the heavyweights got to play, and predictably the matches were hard-fought. Of the six matches Saturday, four went into third sets, and the lone non-seed (Carlos Alvarado-Roland Ethienne) was one of the two-setters.

Matyastik and Crawford had things turn out nicely, but put in some hours. Although top-seeded, a label Matyastik discounts, the duo had no easy road to the finals. Facing eighth-seeds Rick Myers and Dave Bryant, they came across a cropper. Myers, of Abilene, hounded the court in bullying fashion. At one point, the diminutive sparkplug even went the extra distance to gain a point.

On a deep return, Myers didn't let a little thing like a chain-link fence stop him. Chasing it down, he dove at the ball and skidded through the lower portion. After two fans freed his pinned left leg, he got up and calmly went back to work.

Crawford and Matyastik, however, returned to the basics and chipped away until things turned in their favor. After Myers-Bryant escaped with a 7-6 tiebreaker win in the first set, Crawford-Matyastik rallied to win 6-3. In the third set, they advanced with a 7-6 tiebreaker.

In the process, Myers' intensity typified the afternoon. Nobody was going to give up anything.

FIFTH SEEDS Jai DiLouie and Bill McGowan felt they were being asked to give away something, and consequently Crawford and Matyastik had a long wait to determine their playing status.

Phillips' homer puts fire under slow-starting Rebels

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

4-5A Baseball

Things were looking grim for Midland Lee through the first three innings of Saturday's District 4-5A baseball game against Abilene High. The Rebels were trailing 3-0 and had managed only two hits.

Then, in the bottom of the fourth, came the spark Lee needed. Leadoff batter Jimmy Phillips blasted a Jay Gravens pitch high into the air in right field. Eagle Victor Rodriquez kept fading back and when he came to the fence he reached out for the ball and came up empty. Phillips had his first home run of the season and the Rebels had started a five-run rally that produced a 5-3 victory to keep them in a tie for first place.

"I knew I hit it hard but I just thought it would go over his head," said Phillips. "I thought it would be close to the fence but would land inside."

Cooper beats MHS, Page 6B

Abilene High coach Bob Harmon agreed.

"I kept saying he's got plenty of room, plenty of room," said Harmon. "I didn't think it was going out."

"I thought it was going out as hard as he hit," said Lee coach Ernie Johnson. "I also thought Rob Walker's ball was going out. It hit pretty high on the screen. With no wind, that ball was gone."

Steve Woodlee collected a bunt single on Gravens' next pitch and Walker followed with his towering shot that hit an 18-foot high fence in the left field corner and stopped on second with a double, moving Woodlee to third.

One out later, Donny Rivas survived a pop up to shallow center field when Damon Edwards misjudged the fly and let it drop to the ground to load the bases. It was the first of three errors that cost the Eagles four unearned runs.

Terry Ullom was the next Rebel to receive a break. Trying for a suicide squeeze bunt, Woodlee scored when catcher Tim Davis dropped the throw to the plate. Dirk Bergoon followed with a grounder to Ricky Rodriquez at short and this time the throw was wide, pulling Davis off the plate and allowing Walker to score. After Dennis Matta struck out, Bryan Willis collected his third game-winning RBI of the season when he drilled a pitch up the middle, bringing home Rivas and Ullom before being thrown out trying for second base.

"The real problem was the fly the outfielder dropped, the dropped ball at the plate and the wide throw," said Harmon. "Three critical errors against a good team. You can't win with that."

ESPECIALLY WITH Willis on the mound. Give the Rebel righthander a lead and he becomes nearly unbeatable. In the final three innings he allowed three hits, but struck out five to leave them stranded on the base paths. On the day, he picked up nine strike outs, including three swinging in the second inning.

"He was throwing the ball up high a lot but when he kept it down his fastball had a lot more speed," said Phillips. "His curve was a little erratic but when it was down they didn't have a chance."

PHILLIPS, WHO is one of the leading hitters this year for the Rebels with a .393 average going into the game, feels his hitting is returning to early district form.

"I was hitting real good for awhile, in the first half of district," said Phillips. "After the Cooper game I didn't. I was still hitting one ball a game hard and usually it went to somebody and I was usually making up for it by getting a dribbler to go through."

Phillips sees things getting better for Lee but is still looking for the game when hitting, fielding and pitching come together at the same time.

"We're still making a lot of mental mistakes that we shouldn't for this time of the year. We're making the tougher plays a little more often," said Phillips. "But, we've been winning all year and we haven't put it all together yet. When we do, we'll be a really strong team."

REB NOTES: With Abilene Cooper's 9-0 victory over Midland High, the Rebels and Cougars are tied for first at 8-2...Dennis Matta helped make up for two errors by making two big defensive plays, one a grounder to third that caught Steve Stacy off the bag and the second a diving grab and quick throw to second to force out Ricky Rodriquez...Willis, with nine strikeouts, now hs 43 on the year in 39⅓ innings of duty...Lee will host Odessa Permian Tuesday at 4 p.m.

Abilene High third baseman Mike Keith (12) doesn't look too happy as he congratulates Midland Lee catcher Jimmy Phillips for his home run over the right field fence that started the Rebel five-run rally in the fourth inning that sent Lee on to a 5-3 District 4-5A victory Saturday.

Cubs' produce key homer, but...

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

When the Midland Cubs lost their first three games this season, it was for want of the "big hit" in the clutch. Saturday night Midland got the big hit, but it didn't count.

In the first inning, left fielder Danny Norman, who hit a grand slam Friday, drilled a three-run shot over the right field fence. He was rounding third base in the traditional home run trot when he discovered plate umpire Ron Barnes had ruled the ball was foul.

Midland lost the final game of the San Antonio series, 5-3, Saturday on a night that had GM Bill Schammel berating himself for not charging dormitory rates for admission. That many people showed up with blankets.

THE WIN gave the Dodgers the series four games to one. It also gave Manager George Enright a severe case of apoplexy.

He argued with Barnes to no avail. Norman's drive was well-tagged. The only question seemed to be whether the righthander could reach the mesquite beyond the fence. Right fielder Stu Pederson was on the left side of the Tom Canton sign when it went over. That's a good seven or eight yards inside the foul line.

One wag said, "Barnes should have called it a home run, if for no other reason than Pederson displayed no imagination as a thespian. A good outfielder would have at least run into foul territory to make it look good."

THE WAY things started out it didn't look like San Antonio's Vance Lovelace, a hard throwing lefty, would last long. Eight of his first nine pitches were balls, so Rick Baker and Darrin Jackson were on base when Norman connected.

"I think Vance would have been gone, if that had been a homer," said Enight. But it wasn't and Lovelace settled down to complete five innings of shutout ball to pick up the win. In fact, Midland got just four hits, two by Ricky Baker.

San Antonio got two runs off starter Neil Bryant in the third. An infield hit and throwing error put Cecil Espy on second. Mariano Duncan singled to right, moving Espy to third. Espy scored on a wild pitch and then Gilberto Reyes singled home the next run.

THE DODGERS made it 5-0 in the seventh on singles by Duncan and Pedersen and an infield out and run scoring single by Bill White.

Midland's three runs came in the seventh when Rob Slezak walked Jeff Rutledge and Don Hyman and surrendered a two out single to Baker to load the bases. In came Rafael Montalvo, a 16-save man a year ago, and was greeted by run-scorings singles off the bats of Jackson and Shawon Dunston, the latter a two-run blow, before managing to quell the uprising.

MIDLAND did get bullpen help with the arrival of Tandy Charley from Lodi, the Cubs' Class A California League farm. "He was with us all spring and we wanted to keep him," said Enright, "but they sent him down just before we left Mesa. He has a changeup that gives major leaguers trouble."

Enright still is optimistic about his club with El Paso coming to town tonight for the first of five. "Some of the fellows I expect to hit haven't started yet. An when you are struggling, a pitcher like Lovelace will give you trouble. He has a big league arm. His only problem is getting the ball over the plate. He helped me win a pennant two years ago at Quad City."

Lovelace and Dodger outfielder Dan Cataline were packaged in the Ron Cey trade two winters ago.

CUB-ICLES—Pitching Coach Glenn Gregson reports that the Diablos have three starting pitchers back from last year plus Bob Skube and flying Ricky Felder.

The Masters

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Mark Lye spent two strokes of his lead on and around the ninth green but retained a one-shot advantage Saturday in the storm-disrupted and uncompleted third round of the 48th Masters.

Play was held up on two occasions by violent spring thunderstorms. The first delay lasted for an hour. The second suspension started at about 4:35 p.m., CST, and play eventually was called off for the day at 5:08 p.m., CST.

Nineteen players, including most of the leaders, marked their positions on the Augusta National Golf Club course and are scheduled to complete third-round play Sunday morning.

The fourth round of the chase for the famed green jacket that goes to the Masters winner will be held as scheduled Sunday afternoon.

Lye, a lanky 31-year-old whose long, loose gait has won him the nickname "Strider," had completed 11 holes of third-round play and was nine under par for the tournament when play was called.

TOM KITE, a frequent challenger but not yet a winner in this, the first of the year's four major tests of golfing greatness, was at eight under through 11 holes.

Ben Crenshaw, who elected to finish play on the 13th hole while thunder rumbled, lightning flashed and rain fell on Amen Corner, was next. He went seven under for the tournament—two under for the day — when he two-putted for birdie-4 on the 13th.

Under the rules, when play is suspended, the player has the option of completing play on the hole he is playing. But he is not required to do so.

And Tom Watson, the two-time Masters champion who has put himself back into contention here, chose not to.

"If I came back later on, or tomorrow, I feel like I would lose the feeling for the putt," Crenshaw said in explaining his actions.

And Watson, his playing partner, explained why he did not finish the 13th but marked his ball on the green as the dark clouds grew darker, the temperature dropped and the storm approached.

"I couldn't see the hole," Watson said.

David Graham, an Australian now living in the United States who has previous victories in the U.S. Open and PGA, held the No. 4 position. He was six under through 12 holes.

Watson, Nick Faldo of England and local product Larry Mize were five under. Watson and Faldo had completed 12 holes, Mize 15.

With a 54-hole total of five-under-par 213, the slightly-built little man had placed himself in the title chase.

"I knew I'd have to shoot a low round either today or tomorrow to have a chance to win it," Nelson said.

"If I can get off to a fast start tomorrow, I have a chance."

He was tied with Fred Couples, recent winner of the Tournament Players Championship and the season's leading money-winner. Couples shot a third-round 67.

Lye, playing in his first Masters, held a three-shot lead at the end of 36 holes, a lead he said "surprises me as much as it does you."

Lye, 31, who won his way into this annual gathering when he won his first tournament in seven seasons of PGA Tour activity last summer, birdied both of the front-side par-5 holes and retained that three-shot advantage through eight holes.

But on the ninth, his crisp approach shot hit the green, bit and began backing up. The reverse spin sent it over the sharp slope on the front portion of the green. The ball gained momentum and rolled well off the putting surface and back down the fairway.

Lye chipped past the pin, then three-putted, missing a 3-foot second putt from below the cup. The double bogey-6 left him with but a one stroke margin. And the rainout left him with all night to think about it.

Crenshaw, who tied with Kite for runner-up in this tournament last year, holed out a sand shot for a birdie on the ninth and moved to within two shots of the lead. But he bogeyed the difficult 12th, missing the green, then got the shot back with the birdie on the 13th, recorded after play had been suspended and his partner, Watson, had headed for cover.

Nelson rebound builds up hopes

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — U.S. Open champion Larry Nelson capped a strong two-day comeback in the 48th Masters Tournament Saturday when he shot a 6-under-par 66, building his hopes of securing a third major golf title.

"Anything can happen," Nelson said. "If I can get it going early (today) I have a chance."

The 1981 PGA champion had a 76 in the opening round when he failed to make a birdie, then came back with five birdies Friday when he shot his first sub-70 round of the year, a 69, and added six more birdies in Saturday's round.

"There's no reason I can't make six or seven or eight (birdies) tomorrow if I play well," Nelson said.

"I don't care how I played or what my score was in the first round as long as I win the tournament," he said.

HE ENTERS today's final round with a 54-hole total of 211, five shots under par on the Augusta National Golf Club course.

Despite owning two major titles, the soft-spoken Georgian says he doesn't think he's had as much recognition as other players would have attained with similar credentials.

"I don't know whether it's my fault or the press' fault," he said. "If I had back it up with playing well between those two (PGA and U.S. Open), probably I could have gotten more recognition.

"It's really nice to see your name in the paper, but when I hear my little boy — he's 7-years-old — tell someone his dad is the U.S. Open champ, that's recognition enough."

The 5-foot-9, 153-pounder said he got off to a horrible start in the first round when he buried his first tee shot in a bunker and took a double-bogey six. He said it affected his attitude throughout the round.

He created a good attitude at the start Saturday — rolling in a 15-footer for a birdie on the first hole and a 10-footer to birdie No. 2.

Nelson also scored birdies from six feet at No. 5 and eight feet at No. 8 to make the turn in 4-under-par 32.

He chipped to within two inches for another birdie on the par-5 13th where play was suspended by a thundershower for one hour.

"Any time you wait 45 minutes to one hour you cool off, but when we started again I hit my best tee shot of the day," he said.

HE SCORED a birdie from 10 feet on the 14th and then had a four-foot birdie putt on 15 that he missed, taking a three-putt par.

"I was think really about shooting 63 before I putted on the 15th," Nelson said. "When I missed it, I had to regroup."

Nelson said his game turned better Friday when he carried two putters in his bag, leaving out a 2-iron.

"I don't ever hit the 2-iron unless I'm trying to impress somebody," he said. "My caddy told someone I carried two putters to let the other one know it could be replaced."

Houston clubs Cincinnati, 9-1

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Alan Ashby's two-run double ignited a four-run second inning and Bob Knepper fired a six-hitter as the Houston Astros routed the Cincinnati Reds 9-1 Saturday night.

Ray Knight and Phil Garner started the Astros' second inning with singles off loser Jeff Russell, 1-1, and Ashby put the Astros ahead 2-1 with a double into the right field corner.

Two outs later, run-scoring doubles by Bill Doran and Kevin Bass made it 4-1.

Knepper, 1-1, struck out seven and walked two and registered his first complete game of the season.

The Reds took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Gary Redus opened the game with a single, stole second base and scored on Dave Parker's two-out single to center field.

After their big second inning, the Astros added a run in the fourth inning on Craig Reynolds' double and an RBI single by Bass to make it 5-1.

Houston piled on four insurance runs in the sixth inning. Reliever Bill Scherrer walked Knepper, Doran and Bass before giving way to Mike Smith, whose two-base wild pitch enabled Knepper and Doran to score.

Jose Cruz walked, and Jerry Mumphrey knocked in Bass with an RBI single. After Mumphrey was forced out on Knight's grounder, Garner's single scored Cruz to give the Astros a 9-1 bulge.

Cubs 5, Mets 2

CHICAGO — Leon Durham drove in two runs with a homer and a single, and Ron Cey's double keyed a wild, three-run first inning as the Chicago Cubs hung on for a 5-2 victory over the New York Mets.

Durham drove in one of the first-inning runs, then hit his first homer of the season in the eighth inning.

With one out in the first, Ryne Sandberg reached first when second baseman Wally Backman booted his ground ball for an error. Gary Matthews followed with a single and Durham singled to score Sandberg. Cey doubled to left to score Matthews.

Mel Hall singled to left to score Durham, but Cey was out rounding third on George Foster's throw to Hubie Brooks, and Hall was run down between first and second with center fielder Mookie Wilson coming in to make the putout.

Dick Ruthven, 2-0, worked six innings and allowed six hits to gain the victory with Lee Smith earning his third save. Tim Leary, 1-1, took the loss.

Dodgers 8, Giants 4

LOS ANGELES — Terry Whitfield knocked in four runs with a homer and a double to lead Los Angeles to its fourth straight victory, 8-4 over San Francisco.

The former Giant, who played the past three seasons in Japan, drove in a run with a double in the first inning and cracked a three-run homer in the second when the Dodgers scored four unearned runs.

NL Roundup

Alejandro Pena , 1-1, earned the victory with relief help from Tom Niedenfuer and rookie Orel Hershiser, who yielded a two-run homer to John Rabb in the ninth inning. Mike Krukow, 1-2, took the loss.

After the Giants took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on two-out doubles by Manny Trillo and Jack Clark, the Dodgers tied the score in the bottom of the first. Rafael Landestoy, playing in place of ailing Steve Sax, led off with a walk, stole second and came home on Whitfiled's double to right.

Phillies 4, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Juan Samuel tripled home Kiko Garcia to break a seventh-inning tie, enabling the Philadelphia Phillies to defeat the Montreal Expos 4-3.

Garcia opened the inning with a walk against releiver Dan Schatzeder, 0-1, who had just entered the game. Samuel then lined a pitch into the gap in right-center field to drive in the run.

Larry Andersen, 1-1, who replaced starter Steve Carlton in the sixth, gave up one hit in 1⅓ innings for the victory, and Al Holland pitched the final two innings for his second save.

Pete Rose, who doubled to reach the 4,000-hit plateau on Friday, singled twice to make it 4,002, also giving him 3,001 singles in his career.

Cardinals 7, Pirates 5

ST. LOUIS — Danny Cox pitched five strong innings and knocked in a run and the St. Louis Cardinals took advantage of faulty Pittsburgh fielding to beat the Pirates 7-5.

Lonnie Smith rapped an inside-the-park homer to trigger a three-run uprising by St. Louis in the first inning and the Cardinals were never headed.

Cox, 2-1, later weathered Pittsburgh homers by Jason Thompson and Doug Frobel which accounted for three of the Pirates' runs. Cox surrendered four hits before giving way to Neil Allen at the start of the sixth.

Braves 5, Padres 1

SAN DIEGO — Dale Murphy homered for his first run batted in of the season and Rick Camp and Jeff Dedmon combined on a four-hitter to lead the Atlanta Braves to a 5-1 victory over the San Diego Padres.

Bob Horner and Glenn Hubbard also added homers for the Braves, who snapped a four-game losing streak and stopped San Diego's winning string at four.

Rangers end skid with 6-2 victory over Blue Jays

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Buddy Bell rapped four hits, and Charlie Hough scattered seven hits to lead the Texas Rangers to a 6-2 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday.

Hough, 1-1, struck out five and walked two as he evened his career mark against the Blue Jays to 2-2. Jim Clancy, 0-1, took the loss, missing his bid for a 10th straight victory over the Rangers.

The Rangers opened the scoring in the first inning when Bell tripled in Gary Ward, who had walked. Larry Parrish then doubled to score Bell.

Toronto's Alfredo Griffin stole home for Blue Jays' first run in the sixth. Griffin had walked, advanced an infield grounder and took third a Lloyd Moseby single.

The Rangers scored again in the second. Wayne Tolleson went home on a passed ball after reaching on a single and advancing to third on another single by Curtis Wilkerson.

Bell once again was responsible the Rangers' scoring in the fifth and seventh innings.

In the fifth inning, Bell singled and was doubled home by Pete O'Brien. He led off the seventh with his fourth hit, advanced to second on an infield out and, after O'Brien walked, scored on Ned Yost's single. O'Brien then scored the Rangers' final run on a sacrifice fly by Bobby Jones.

AL Roundup

Indians 8, Orioles 2

CLEVELAND — Andre Thornton drove in three runs with a homer and a double, and Rick Sutcliffe pitched his second complete game of the season as Cleveland handed the Baltimore Orioles their sixth loss in seven games, 8-2, the Indians' home opener.

The Orioles' 1-6 record matches the worst start in team history. Baltimore started 1-6 in 1955.

Sutcliffe, 2-0, gave up seven hits, including a solo homer by Wayne Gross in the ninth, and struck out eight while increasing his career record against Baltimore to 6-1 before 57,114 at Municipal Stadium, the largest opening-day crowd in the majors thus far this season.

The Orioles got a run back in the third. Rich Dauer walked, took third on a single by Jim Dwyer and an error by Indians' right fielder Carmen Castillo, and scored on Cal Ripken's single to left.

Cleveland erupted for four runs in the sixth, thanks to the wildness of Baltimore starter Scott McGregor, 1-2, and reliever Sammy Stewart.

Twins 4, Mariners 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Ron Washington led off the 11th inning with his first homer of the season to lift the Minnesota Twins to a 4-3 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

It was Washington's second at bat of the season and came against Bob Stoddard, 0-1. Ron Davis, 2-0, pitched the final inning for the Twins.

Al Cowens led off the Seattle 10th with a homer off Pete Filson, but the Twins retied the score in the bottom of the inning on an RBI single by Gary Gaetti.

Mickey Hatcher was safe on an error by third baseman Larry Milbourne and reached third on a single by Dave Engle. Gaetti then singled off Stoddard, scoring Hatcher.

Engle's two-run triple tied the score at 2-2 in the sixth inning. With two out, Kent Hrbek got the Twins second hit of the game off rookie Mark Langston, a single to center.

A's 4, Angels 3

OAKLAND — Jim Essian led off the ninth inning with a home run over the left-field fence to give the Oakland A's a 4-3 victory over the California Angels.

Essian's blast was his first hit of the year and came on a 1-0 pitch from Angels reliever Curt Kaufman, 0-2. Bill Caudill, 3-0, got the victory despite failing to hold a lead in relief for the third time this season.

Tim Conroy was sailing along with a two-hitter until the eighth inning when the Angels scored three runs to tie the score 3-3.

Brewers 8, Royals 4

KANSAS CITY — Jim Gantner drilled a single and triple and drove in three runs to boost the Milwaukee Brewers to an 8-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Don Sutton, 1-1, scattered seven hits through six innings for the victory. He had relief help from Pete Ladd and Rollie Fingers, who recorded his first save since Aug. 22, 1982.

Gantner's bases-loaded single in the fifth brought in two runs to snap a tie and give the Brewers a 4-2 lead. In the seventh, the Brewer second baseman tripled home Rick Manning, who had singled, and scored to make it 6-2 on a sacrifice fly by Robin Yount.

Aggies nip Texas Tech with single

By The Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION — Don Robison singled in the winning run in the bottom of the eighth as Texas A&M defeated Texas Tech 9-8 in Southwest Conference baseball Saturday.

Tim Cartwright's two-run triple highlighted a five-run sixth inning for the Aggies, who had come into the inning trailing 4-3.

Reliever Rock King, 2-0, got the win for A&M. Johnny Vidales, 0-2, took the loss for the Red Raiders.

Texas A&M improved its record to 33-8 overall, 10-2 in the SWC. Texas Tech fell to 29-18 and 6-9.

Rice 12-6, TCU 4-1

HOUSTON — The Rice Owls managed only three hits off TCU pitcher Mickey Kazmierski but took advantage of three errors to score three runs without a hit in the sixth inning for a 6-1 victory in the second game and a sweep of a baseball doubleheader Saturday afternoon.

Rice easily won the opener of the Southwest Conference twinbill, getting an early 5-0 lead en route to a 12-4 victory.

Rice improved to 9-5 in SWC play, while TCU fell to 4-10.

Texas 7-5, Baylor 2-0

AUSTIN — Steve Labay shut out Baylor on three hits as Texas took a 5-0 win from in the nightcap after a 7-2 victory in the opener of the SWC doubleheader.

Rusty Richards, Darren Loy and Jamie Doughty each batted in two runs for the Longhorns in the opener. Brad Meyer and Kenneth Patterson each had three hits for Baylor, but the Bears left 14 men on base.

Texas, the defending national champion, upped its record to 43-9 overall and 10-2 in the SWC. Baylor fell to 23-20 and 6-9.

The opener was taped for telecast today at 7:30 p.m. CST by ESPN, which will repeat the game twice on Monday.

Baylor backs have big spring

WACO (AP) — Tailbacks Derrick McAdoo and Ron Francis each scored three touchdowns Saturday afternoon in a closed scrimmage that ended Baylor's spring football drills.

McAdoo gained 37 yards on 14 carries and scored on runs of 1, 5 and 20 yards. Francis led all rushers, gaining 56 yards on 11 carries, including touchdown runs of 1, 1 and 20 yards.

Quarterbacks Cody Carlson and Tom Muecke alternated by both plays and series as they did last fall.

Carlson hit five of 14 for 61 yards and a touchdown on a 7-yard completion to split end Matt Clark. Muecke completed four of eight passes for 91 yards and a touchdown on a 38-yard strike to flanker Glenn Pruitt. Neither quarterback was intercepted.

Clark had three receptions for 56 yards and Pruitt two for 58.

Baylor coach Grant Teaff said he may go into the Bears' first game next fall rotating running backs as well as quarterbacks.

A&M quarterback suffers knee injury

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Kevin Murray, Texas A&M's No. 1 quarterback, suffered a knee injury during the third quarter of the Aggies' 13-0 victory over their exes in a spring game Saturday afternoon.

"Right now, it appears he won't need an operation," Coach Jackie Sherrill said. "It's a twisted knee. He'll have to go through a stress test, and if that's positive, he'll need an arthroscope. If that's positive, then he'll need an operation. If not, he could be in a cast for six weeks."

Murray, a freshman, was named Southwest Conference newcomer of the year last season. He completed seven of 17 passes for 61 yards Saturday, including a 13-yard toss to Shea Walker in the second quarter for the only touchdown of the game, played before 10,400 at Kyle Field.

MHS' Hardy sets distance sights on Austin

Bulldog runner keeps to rugged routine

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Last fall, Midland High's Claire Hardy found out what state competition was all about when she placed third in the cross-country season finale. This week, she's looking for her second trip to Austin.

Hardy, a senior on the MHS girls' track team, has two shots at a state berth when she competes in the Region I track meet in Lubbock on Wednesday and Thursday.

Her first and best chance will come in the 3200 meter run in which she set the District 4-5A record a week ago at 11:09, besting her own record time by 50 seconds. Her second chance, and the one she's least confident in, is the 1600 meter run, an event she also holds the district mark in at 5:30.

"In the two mile (3200), I have a real good chance of winning I think," said Hardy. "I don't know what the El Paso schools are running but I don't think anyone is close to 11 minutes. The only school I'm not of is El Paso Jefferson but, all those El Paso girls can run around 11:10.

"In the mile (1600), I have a chance if I still have a lot of energy left after the two mile because my times are competitive," added Hardy. "I've been beat in the mile by an El Paso girl. She ran 5:19 and I ran 5:25. The was the first time I ran the mile."

Hardy has yet to be defeated in the 3200 this year and she feels she has a shot at breaking 11 minutes in the Region I meet, especially if weather conditions are more favorable than they were in windy Ratliff Stadium last Friday.

"I hope there's just enough wind to cool me when I come around a corner but not enough to notice," said Hardy. "Hopefully, I'll break 11 minutes."

HARDY BEGAN running when she was in the ninth grade to help control a weight problem she had at that time. Looking at her now, it's hard to believe that the 18-year old has ever had an extra calorie or ounce of fat on her lean figure.

"I got into it to control my weight and to lose weight," she said. "I had a problem then and I still have to fight it to maintain it. Running is still the easiest way to control it. I can eat anything I want and then go out and run it off."

Now, as one of the best female high school distance runners in the state, Hardy has to keep up with her training schedule to be competitive. And, sometimes that can be lonely and hard to do.

"I see everybody going home at three and they don't have to come out and go through the pain of running," said Hardy. "Sometims I envy other girls who have an afternoon free or go home and get their homework done. It isn't very often that I feel like that. Sometimes it's just the routing and you want a break but you have to work."

If there is any area in her running that Hardy doesn't enjoy, it's working on timed short-distance laps. She admits she doesn't like it but understands why Coach Brenda Mitchell makes her run them.

"Coach Mitchell wants me to run a 35 (second) 200 (meters) and keep running them all around," said Hardy about the pace she works on. "That's a slow time for a sprinter but a good pace for me. I hit 73 to 77 in a race for the first quarter but the time drops after that."

When watching Hardy run, it seems like nothing is bothering her. She may not lead a race from gun to string, but her pace never seems to falter and she never seems to struggle. Of course, it's been the rare race when she's had to struggle. Most girls can't begin to keep up with her.

Going into the Region I meet, Hardy thought about the calibre of competition she'll be facing and isn't sure exactly how she'll handle the pressure.

"I think my time would drop under 11 if I was pressed but, then again, I wouldn't be relaxed and my time might go up," said Hardy. "When I'm running by myself, I can think about the clock and pace myself, push myself."

"I want to wish Tina and OJ good luck," said Hardy about teammates Tina Knight nd OJ Johnson. Knight placed second in district in the long jump at 17-feet-4 while Johnson was second in the 100 hurdles with a time of 15:14.

Lee's Felicia Farias placed second in the high jump with a 5-3 and is the other Tall City girl to earn a Region I berth.

Hardy credits all of her running success to God, saying, "He gives me the will to do the work. I thank the Lord and I rely on people's prayers for me a lot."

It seems like a combination that can't be beat.

Claire Hardy works out at Memorial Stadium for the upcoming Region I girls' track meet in Lubbock. Hardy is a favorite to win the 3200 meter run and has a good chance at doubling up in the 1600 meters. At stake is a trip to Austin and the state meet.

Ivy Christian scores 14

WACO, Texas (AP) — Duncanville's Cathy Nixon scored 19 points and Andrews' Ivy Christian added 14 Saturday afternoon to lead the North to an easy 93-56 victory over the South in a Texas schoolgirl all-star basketball game for players in Classes 4A and 5A.

The South was led by Missy Davis of Alief Elsik, who scored 12 points. Jessie Mac Sandle of Bryan added 10 points.

Lloyd downs Zina Garrison

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Top-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd defeated third-seeded Zina Garrison 6-1, 6-4 Saturday to move into contention for her seventh title in the $200,000 Family Circle Magazine Cup.

Lloyd will face unseeded Claudia Kohde-Kilsch in today's finals. Kohde-Kilsch downed ninth-seeded Carling Bassett 6-4, 6-0 in the other semifinal match Saturday.

"She's quick, but she's not as quick as lightning," Lloyd said of her 20-year-old opponent.

Lloyd said she played the same game she has played all week to defeat Garrison.

MHS girls shoot for title

From Staff Reports

Golfing success has been a tradition for the Midland High girls' team since its inception in 1973.

In the span of 11 years, the Lady Bulldogs have won seven District 4-5A titles and advanced four times to the State tournament in Austin, winning it all in 1975 after finishing second in 1974.

Last year, Midland High went to the regional tournament and finsihed fifth. Kelle Mobley won Region I medalist and was the only MHS rep at state.

This year, Midland High is once again off to the Region I tournament but for the first time in six years as a runner-up and not champion. That honor goes to San Angelo which overcame a 16-shot MHS first round lead to win by 24.

The Bobcats outshot MHS by 25 strokes on the third and final day of play for a team score of 1133. Midland High finished with 1157 followed by Big Spring with 1348 and Midland Lee with 1372.

This year's Region I golf tournament will be played at Lubbock's Meadowbrook Golf Course where MHS coach Mary Baird sees a lot of problems if the ball goes astray of its mark.

"Meadowbrook is a long, hard course and is a lot of trouble," said Baird "If you can stay out of trouble, you can play all right."

THOUGH THEY didn't win the team title, the Bulldogs do have the two best district golfers in Darla Smith and Sherry Weatherby who tied for first with three-round totals of 268. Smith won the medalist crown on the third hole of a sudden death playoff.

Except for San Angelo, the Region I field is mostly an unknown quality to Baird.

"I'm not sure what teams will be there," she said. "Last year there were 15 teams in our regional meet. I'm sure there are some strong teams. Austin Westwood won the regional last year and they have everybody back so I'm sure they'll be strong against this year. I just know there will be some strong competition so we'll just try and play our game and play well. That's what we're hoping for."

Midland High isn't the only Tall City girls' golf team that's seen success over the year. Midland Lee has won four district titles and won the state title in 1973.

Cooper stings Bulldogs

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Abilene Cooper remained in a tie for first place with Midland Lee Saturday, posting a 9-0 District 4-5A victory here over third place Midland High.

Cooper pitcher Terry Suggs went the distance to pick up his fourth win against one loss, allowing five hits and two walks while striking out six Bulldogs. Mike Timlin went all the way for MHS, giving up nine hits, nine runs (seven earned) and seven walks while striking out 10.

The Cougars jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the bottom of the second and added two runs in each of the fourth, fifth and sixth frames for their tallies.

At the plate, Cooper was led by the 4-for-4 hitting of shortstop Nathan Jones. Second baseman Darren Thorpe went 2-for-3 in the Bulldogs' five-hit loss.

Midland High is now in a tie with Odessa High for third place with 6-4 records, two games off the pace of the leaders.

ELSEWHERE AROUND the 4-5A, OHS moved into the tie with MHS with a come-from-behind 17-14 victory over 0-10 Big Spring and San Angelo shelled Odessa Permian, 11-1.

Trailing 9-3, the Bronchos picked up five runs in the fourth inning to pull within one run and took the lead in the fifth with three more for an 11-9 score.

Not willing to give up so easily, the Steers regained the lead in the bottom of the sixth, 14-11, but lost it in the top of the seventh when they allowed six Bronchos to score.

Tommy Olivas picked up the victory in relief of starter Boyd Cowan while David Renteria took the loss after starting, being replaced by Jay Pirkle and Tommy Gartman before returnin to the lineup.

Odessa's Boyd Cowan and Freddy Alvarado collected home runs in the game as did Big Spring's Jerry Anderson.

The San Angelo Bobcats scored at least one run in each of the first six innings while allowing Permian's lone tally in the fourth. Greg Lisewsky went the distance to collect the victory while Mark Fowler took the loss.

On Tuesday, Cooper will host Big Spring, Abilene High is at San Angelo, Midland High at Odessa High and Odessa Permian at Midland Lee. All games are scheduled for 4 p.m.

Chap golfers need victory

From Staff Reports

HOBBS, N.M. — Midland College golfers went ball-hunting on the final four holes in the WJCAC tournament and duck-hooked a chance to make up some ground in the WJCAC standings.

The Chaparrals, led by Jeff Cranford's 75, shot a team 305, good for fifth place. New Mexico Military Institute had the best round with a 289 and Odessa College shot a 294.

"We are still in fourth place in the overall standings with two tournaments to go," said Coach Delnor Poss, "but we could have gained some ground if we hadn't gone 12 over par for the final four holes."

The next WJCAC meet is at Odessa College, (Odessa CC) Thursday and Friday and the final is at NMMI in Roswell, N.M., and will be played in conjunction with the Region V tournament.

"We are 3½ points out of first," says Poss, "but we need to win at Odessa to make up for Hobbs."

Outlaws rob Federals

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Doug Williams connected with Ron Wheeler on an 8-yard touchdown pass with 57 seconds remaining as the Oklahoma Outlaws rallied for a 20-16 United States Football League victory over the Washington Federals Saturday before a crowd of 6,075.

Williams hit 24 of 44 passes for 333 yards on the day and moved the Outlaws 93 yards in the last four minutes to give Oklahoma their third straight victory and spoiled Washington's shot at its first victory in eight games.

Gunslingers 20, Bulls 0

JACKSONVILLE — Scott Stamper raced 26 yards for a touchdown on San Antonio's first possession of the game and the Gunslingers went on to shut out the Jacksonville Bulls 20-0 in a USFL game.

Quarterback Rick Neuheisel dove over from a yard out late in the third quarter, and Nick Mike-Mayer added field goals of 45 and 48 yards as the 2-6 Gunslingers broke a three-game losing streak by racking up their highest score ever.

The Bulls, also 2-6, were inside the 25-yard line three times but were unable to score.

Express 23, Showboats 17

LOS ANGELES — Rookie quarterback Steve Young capped his best game as a professional when he scored on a 1-yard quarterback sneak 2:51 into overtime to give the Los Angeles Express a 23-17 USFL victory over the Memphis Showboats.

Los Angeles kicker Tony Zendejas sent the game into overtime when he hit a 27-yard field with one second remaining in regulation.

Gold 31, Maulers 21

PITTSBURGH — Reserve quarterback Bob Gagliano threw for two touchdowns and ran for a two-point conversion in just over one quarter of playing time as the Denver Gold, trailing 21-0 in the second half, charged back for a 31-21 victory over the Pittsburgh Maulers.

Wide receiver Kevin Williams ran 18 yards on an end-around for the game-winning touchdown with 6:08 remaining as the Gold improved to 7-1.

Japan's Okamoto fires 71 to pad LPGA lead

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Japan's Ayako Okamoto fired her third straight sub-par round Saturday in the $200,000 J&B Scotch Pro-Am LPGA tournament, carding a 71 that kept her two strokes in front heading into the final day.

The 33-year-old Okamoto, who won an LPGA tournament in both 1982 and 1983, carded birdies on two of the last three holes to finish with a 208 total for 54 holes.

SHE HOLDS a two-stroke lead on Beth Daniels, who rallied to shoot a third-round 67.

Canadian Barb Bunkowsky, the first-round leader who was two shots behind Okamoto when the third day's play began, struggled to a 78 that left her far back at 217.

Juli Inkster, who would collect a $1 million bonus if she wins this tournament to go with her Dinah Shore title of last weekend, fired an erratic 75 to drop back into the pack at 215. Her card included three birdies, four bogeys and a double bogey when she hit into the lake on the 172-yard seventh hole.

The $1 million bonus, apparently out of Inkster's grasp now, is offered by the sponsors to any golfer who wins both the Pro-Am and the Dinah Shore tournaments.

Okamoto also played an up-and-down round, with four bogeys and five birdies. She moved ahead of Daniel on the 148-yard 16th hole when her tee shot stopped only about a foot from the hole.

Okamoto, who joined the LPGA tour in the United States in 1981, won the 1979 Japan LPGA Japan Championship.

Daniel said she was very pleased, but termed the Desert Inn Country Club layout "not my kind of golf course."

"MY GAME basically is to be real aggressive and hit the driver a lot and aim for the pins," she said. "Here you can't be too aggressive."

That suited White, who said both Daniel and Okamoto can outdrive her by 20 yards.

In the group at 214 were Sandra Haynie, with a third-round 68; Pat Meyers, 70; Betsy King, 71; Mary Dwyer, 71, and Alice Miller, 72.

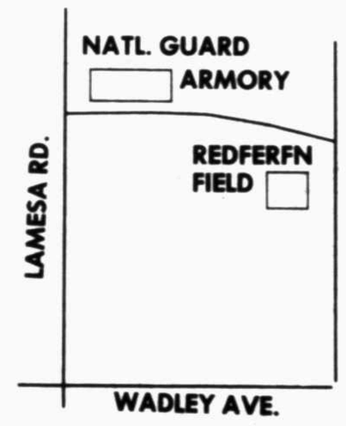

Defending champion Nancy Lopez, who was well off the pace, rallied for a 70 and a 218 total for three rounds. Lopez has won this event three times.

Daw, Haden capture MCC scramble win

Cooper Daw and Don Haden won Midland Country Club's two-man scramble golf tournament Saturday with a card playoff over the team of Jack Huff and Tom Stovell. Both teams ended with rounds of 66.

Fragile ego deflated by tennis experience

When the USPTA Love Doubles Championships at Ranchland Hills Country Club gets a winner today, RHCC tennis pro Terry Bobbitt will likely sleep better than he has in a while.

A tourney of this size is a hefty undertaking, and if comments from players and fans are any indication, the USPTA may have found a permanent home among Tall City tennis followers.

Which is all well and good. Except for one thing. Bobbitt has got to explain away for me the embarrassing events of last Wednesday. Unfortunately, in the interests of fair and unbiased reporting, the story must be told...

BOBBITT ORGANIZED a media pro-am event for Wednesday to kick off the meet and offer a form of thanks to the media representatives helping publicize the event. One learns quickly that according to Dr. Bobbitt, tennis is the cure for whatever ails you. Show him a man with broken legs, and Bobbitt would think of wheelchair tennis until the poor fellow was healthy enough to shed the plaster.

But don't sleep too well, Terry. Your media pro-am just about wiped my fragile ego out.

You see, I went into the whole thing in a spirit so rare of me. Usually, and anyone from city basketball officials to Dallas Smith will testify that I'm a bit short-fused. Well, when sporting endeavors are concerned, I'm quite insufferable. I'm such a sore loser, people have been known to just pacify me rather than hear me whine. Not pretty, but occasionally effective.

Except Wednesday, when I arrived to take part in the pro-am with nary a care. Oh, sure, I took some precautions to avoid looking too out of place.

WHEN I showed up for the match, Bobbitt threw me a nasty curve, although he sprung it on the lot of us all at once. Sponsor Southwest Airlines, who donated a great deal of the goods that helped pull the tourney off, had put up two tickets for the media finalists. There being eight of us, that gave me a healthy 25 percent chance of going to either (a) San Francisco, a/k/a "Pooftahville" as explained by Australian Peter Doerner; or (b), New Orleans. Wow!

Although I wasn't fully prepared for a major challenge such as that, I decided that I couldn't just stand around and let these other guys (especially those radio-TV types) take those tickets without a fight.

OK. From here on out, parental discretion is advised. The old crabapple himself, Mr. Die-with-your-boots-on, get a lunch pail if you can't play defense died.

The first set was 6-3. Respectable, since we faced pro Jorge Andrew and screen phenom Greg Williams.

Then, it was Doerner and KCRS goldythroat "Easy" Ed Clements. Well, the Big E and I had warmed up together. Here's where we get back on track, I thought.

Whoops. Clements killed me personally en route to a 6-1 smoking.

After that, I was ruined emotionally. The next match was against Skip Baldwin and pro Rick Workman. Baldwin is a product of the University of Texas. 'Nuff said.

I GEUSS the worst part of it all is that I hand-picked my pro partner and still couldn't win. Initially, when Bobbitt offered me a chance to play in the pro-am, he even asked who I'd prefer as a partner. My first pick was Ron Hightower, an Arkansas ex-All-American who had intended to play. Hightower dropped from the tourney, so my next pick was Jai DiLouie. DiLouie's career I had followed closely, since we are the same age and his meteoric rise through junior tennis at a rival high school in Dallas interested me.

So, DiLouie and I had gone a circuitous route to wind up together on the court. Sadly, reality was also invited. As a tennis player, I inhale wind rapidly.

I should have known better. DiLouie laughed when he saw my K-Mart racket. He knew a $17 bargain when he saw one, unfortunately, then let me use one of his, an Austrian model with a name I can't pronounce. It obviously wasn't the racket, Jai, but thanks anyway.

As for Bobbitt, I'll extract my revenge some day, some way, for asking me to play. Let's see. I wonder if he can give out an authentic hog-call?

DiLouie and McGowan rolled over unseeded Alvarado-Ethienne 6-0, 6-3, and left the court around 4:30. At that time, Wedderburn-Lusson took the court for their semifinal match with sixth seeds John Holladay-Paul Fineman. Holladay-Fineman had advanced with a 6-2, 4-6, 6-3 win over third-seeded Peter Doerner-Chris Sylvan.

Wedderburn-Lusson had survived Brian Cheyney-Dave Kanter, seeded seventh, earlier in a true classic, 6-7, 7-6, 6-3.

As things stood when Wedderburn-Lusson and Holladay-Fineman started play, DiLouie and McGowan expected their semi to be moved to today. But Matyastik-Crawford wanted to play, and Ranchland pro Terry Bobbitt opted to stick to the schedule.

On the court, each side took out whatever frustrations may have developed in the course of the dilemma by playing outstanding tennis.

Crawford-Matyastik scratched out a 6-4 win in the opening set, but DiLouie and McGowan stormed back with an impressive 6-1 blowout in the second.

Matyastik and Crawford got into a jam in their Friday round, but reverted to muscle to take charge. Against DiLouie-McGowan, they reached back for that something extra again to win the deciding set 6-3 and make today's 3 p.m. finals.

"We were like zombies out there in that second set," a harried Crawford said afterwards. "We've had some tough matches," added Matyastik, a former Midland resident. "I don't pay much attention to the seeding. It's neccessary for the pairings, but I feel like we've had plenty of competition."

LUSSON AND Wedderburn easily rolled past Holladay-Fineman by a 6-3, 6-4 total, but Lusson said "They tried to put us to sleep."

Wedderburn may have fallen asleep watching the Chicago Cubs on television Saturday afternoon. The Australian now teaching in Texas is strangely enough a die-hard Cubs fanatic. "There was nothing else to do but go back and watch the Cubbies," said Wedderburn. In between, the two stayed loose by eating what Wedderburn calls "The Great American Lunch at Burger King." While that didn't break their budgets, they have given thought to what is at stake today. "We split $3,000!" said Lusson.

And should they take that pie home, Lusson said it wouldn't be squandered. "He (Wedderburn) can go to Australia for Christmas and I can pay my taxes."

The finals offer little contrast in styles. Both teams have displayed an affinity for straightforward power tennis at the RHCC extravaganza. Wedderburn, Crawford and Matyastik are all large physically, and Lusson has a power game in a more compact package.

As for the ousted DiLouie, a Friday night round of the board game "Trivial Pursuit" may have forecast Saturday's occurences. DiLouie and some friends played into the wee hours, with the former SMU All-American ultimately tasting defeat.

Saturday, it was deja vu. DiLouie and all but today's four finalists went for hours and hours, yet there is room for only one winner.

McMurry captures TIAA track crown

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — McMurry College finished 1-2 in the day's final two individual races, then captured the concluding 1600-meter relays Saturday afternoon for a dramatic come-behind-victory over Tarleton State in the windswept Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Conference track meet.

Tarleton, which had won all seven previous TIAA meets, had 60½-42 after the final field event, but McMurry ended up the winner by 107-102½.

Bobby Campbell of McMurry was the high-point individual, winning the 400-meter dash in 50.98 seconds and finishing second in the 200-meter dash

McMurry's Randy Martin was a double winner, capturing the pole vault at 13 feet 6 inches and the 400-meter intermediate hurdles in 54.63 seconds.

Boston Marathoner finds 880 not all that long

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

A couple of decades ago, Ralph Arrell quit track at Abilene High because the 880, two times around the quartermile track, "was too far to run."

Monday Arrell will run in the Boston Marathon, 26 miles, 385 yards, along with John Harris, another Midlander, who will be participating in the Patriots Day run, which no longer is run on Patriots Day, for the second time.

"What happened in high school was that I was always the fifth man on the mile relay team," recalls Arrell, now vice president of the Edens and Walsher firm in Midland. "Only trouble was, I never could beat out the fourth man, so the coach decided to make me a half-miler."

ARRELL qualified for the Boston Marathon by running at the Dallas White Rock Lake marathon in three hours, eight minutes and 35 seconds. That's well behind the 2:38 Harris qualified with at Amarillo.

"I wouldn't have made it if I weren't 41. That's one of the benefits of aging," says Arrell. "We get a break on qualifying. Anyone under 40 has to qualify under 2:50."

Arrell decided to return to running about six years ago, at a party. "Dr. Brian Moore (Midland heart specialist) and his wife said they were leaving so they could run their three miles. It was only 8 or 8:30 and I decided, if he does it, maybe I should, too."

Arrell, running the track at Memorial Stadium, gradually built himself up to one mile, then two and finally three before deciding he was right the first time, "12 times around the track is boring."

So he began running at the Y and around the city from the Y. It was less boring and he wound up running farther and he started entering 10 kilometer races. "Once I built up to six miles the rest came easy."

WEST TEXAS isn't the place to get in shape for the Boston Marathon, as far as Harris is concerned ,but he makes do with what's available.

"I go to Big Spring with a friend on Sundays and we run 20 miles," says Harris, over hill-and-dale, or what passes for same in West Texas.

Arrell hasn't trained for the hills, "but at White Rock you circle the lake and then head for downtown Dallas, all up hill." He hopes that's preparation enough.

Another handicap is the WT wind, which is never worse than it is at this time of year. "It's hard going into the wind," says Harris, who claims there is no appreciable benefit in a marathon.

Arrell says the thing that gets people at Newton Hill is the fact that it comes in the 21st mile.

Harris, 23, ran track and cross-country in high school at Lovington, N.M., and one year at New Mexico State University in Las Cruces. An engineer with Exxon, he has lived in Midland little over a year.

He qualified for Boston in ameet at Amarillo, with a time of two hours and 38 minutes. His best time was at the Fiesta Bowl run in Phoenix, 2:34.

"I RUN 70 to 80 miles a week," he says, explaining what it takes to prepare for a marathon. "I average 10 to 11 miles a day in the northwest part of Midland. I stay as far away from the busy streets as possible."

Arrell's training regime starts with building ing up his stamina whenever he begins pointing for a marathon. "If you can get so you are running 20 to 22 miles comfortably, the rest will take care of itself."

During the year, Harris runs as many distance competitions as time will allow. Recently he ran the Capital 10,000 kilometers in Austin.

"Local marathons are tougher than something like Boston, because you get out by yourself and it gets boring. At Boston, you have a better time. It's a fun course to run and there are a lot of people to chase."

The winning time at Boston the other time Harris competed was 2:08.50 and he posted a 2:48. "But it was a hot, strength-sapping day."

WITH A 2:38 qualifying time, Harris figures it will take one minute and 30 seconds to reach the starting line after the race starts. He'll be that far back.

Arrell finished 380th of 3,800 runners at White Rock. "That's in the top 10 per cent. In Boston, I'll finish in the bottom 10 per cent. The only ones behind me will be the 40-49 year-olds with a slower qualifying time and the 50-59 year olds. It will probably take eight or 10 minutes to reach the starting line once the race starts."

The good news is that "not too many of the top runners will be at Boston, because the Olympic Trials are next month and they'll be getting ready for that," says Harris.

"The main thing is to try to stay as comfortable as you can."

Cramps usually afflict runners about the 20th mile, just before Newton Hill, and of course there are the foot blisters. "At Arizona in December, the blisters were there after 10 miles, plus a side stitch that I never had before," Harris remembered.

"At Boston they have water stations every 2½ miles plus spectators give you oranges, cokes and even beer as you go by."

ARRELL has been increasing his carbohydrate intake in preparation for Boston and is running eight to 10 pounds below normal. "Running 60 to 70 miles a week, there's no way you can maintain your weight."

"I normally run 25 miles a week, but in training for a marathon, I try to build it up five miles a week. This time I topped out at 71. The key to the increase lies in the long runs on weekends."

Heat, strange as it may sound, is a factor. "Most marathons start from 7 to 9 a.m. to avoid the heat of the day. In Boston, they begin at noon," says Arrell.

Johnson's trade grief ends quickly

DALLAS (AP) — Wide receiver Butch Johnson says he was "shocked and disappointed" at first when he learned of his trade from the Dallas Cowboys to the Houston Oilers — and briefly considered not reporting to his new National Football League club.

But after a brief telephone conversation with Houston Coach Hugh Campbell on Friday, Johnson said he was "very excited about playing again."

"I may sound a little mellow right now, but I'm trying to adjust,' Johnson told the Dallas Times Herald. "It's really a relief that all of this is over. Tomorrow, I'm going to be very happy. Maybe I'll pop some champagne or something."

Johnson had wanted to go to the Los Angeles Rams. But contract terms could not be reached with wide receiver Preston Dennard, who nixed the deal with Dallas.

As part of the deal, the Cowboys also will trade second-round picks with Houston in the 1984 college draft and will get an undisclosed selection in the 1985 draft, Cowboys spokesman Doug Todd said.

With the switch, Dallas will pick 12th and Houston 26th in the second round of this year's draft. Houston's pick was one the Oilers had acquired previously from Minnesota.

Johnson, an eight-year NFL veteran, had his best season last year, catching 41 passes for 561 yards and three touchdowns. But he was openly displeased about playing in a backup role.

Renfro, 28, has six years in the NFL. Renfro, a three-time all-Southwest Conference player at Texas Christian University, spent the first four games of last season on injured reserve with hepatitis, but started seven games later in the year. He caught 23 passes for 316 yards and two touchdowns.

Drunken driving charge against injured Gabe Rivera dropped

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A charge of drunken driving against paralyzed Pittsburgh Steelers lineman Gabe Rivera was dropped by the Allegheny County district attorney, who said Rivera already has been punished.

Rivera, 22, was paralyzed from the chest down when he lost control of his car, hit another vehicle head-on and was thrown through the rear window of his car on Oct. 20, 1983.

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS - The two defensive backs nailed Drew Pearson in an unprotected moment just as he jumped high for a pass.

The collision was so fierce both defenders were knocked momentarily senseless to the Texas Stadium artificial surface.

Pearson leaped to his feet, flipped the ball to the referee, then wobbled back to the huddle without so much as a look back.

"I didn't want to let them know they got me," Pearson said later, after the bells quit ringing.

THIS PLAY from the 1983 season illustrates what a rough cookie Pearson, the leading receiver in the history of the Dallas Cowboys, has always been; never the guy you could intimidate on those over-the-middle suicide missions.

He's Dallas' Capt. Courage.

"Drew has been the toughest guy on the team mentally," said backfield Coach Al Lavan. "He can take unbelievable hits and bounce back. He won't let himself give in.".

Now, Pearson must handle the impact of a different kind of collision that puts the utmost stress on his physical and mental makeup.

How does he overcome the nightmare of driving a car into the rear of a tractor-trailer rig March 22, killing his brother, Carey?

Doctors say Drew's lacerated liver will heal in two to three months. The other injuries Pearson described as cuts and bruises he wouldn't even report to the trainer during the season.

BUT CAN a 33-year-old body take such punishment without a loss of athletic ability and still handle the rigors of more pounding in a long NFL season?

What about the mental?

Can the same concentration that allowed Pearson to make some of the most celebrated catches in NFL history still be there?

Pearson himself said "I think I can start working out in two or three months, but there is no time limit on overcoming my mental anguish."

Pearson is starting over just as surely as he did in 1973 when he came to the Cowboys as a free agent nobody out of Tulsa.

Lavan, for one, thinks Pearson can make it to the top, one more time.

"If you had to pick anybody to come back for a situation like this it would be Drew," Lavan said. "Just look at his background. He's always been an underdog and a scrapper.

"Few people gave him a chance when he came into the NFL. Look what happened. He'll work and work and work until he comes back from this."

PEARSON IS determined to dedicate the 1984 season to his brother.

"I'm hurting quite a bit," he said recently. "But I feel an obligation to play. If I have to retire it would leave a void in my life."

Pearson, who described himself as now having a "birdcage chest to go with my bird legs" because of a 20-pound weight loss, has drawn considerable strength from his teammates.

"I really never knew before how much they loved me," Pearson said. "One day I woke up at the hospital and there were a bunch of them standing around the bed playing a joke with their arms folded.

"I thought it was Judgment Day. I just didn't know how much they felt about me, how much they cared."

Pearson has also drawn consolation from books, letters, and Bibles mailed by fans.

"There are versus in the Bible that deal with this," Pearson said. "You find out that God has a plan for you. He gave me life from that wreck for a purpose. If I didn't believe that I would go crazy."

Pearson is a longshot to beat the odds.

But we'll all bet on him, anyway, won't we?

The Rack- a safe, clean place to shoot pool and enjoy yourself

When you close your mind and picture a "pool hall" you probably think of a dirty, smoke filled room filled with the type of people you would just as soon avoid. That may have been true in the past and if you look hard you could probably still find on today but as Lynne Headrick, manager and co-owner of The Rack, stated, "The old pool halls are like water in the desert—evaporating rapidly."

If you like to shoot pool but don't have a table at home, there is no need to deprive yourself any longer. The Rack, located at the corner Midkiff and Andrews Highway, is the answer to a pool player's dreams. It is clean, roomy and smoke free (for the most part). There is plenty of room between the tables and you can even get a sandwich or steak fingers from the snack bar while you shoot.

You will also be pleasantly suprised by the clientel that The Rack attracts. During the lunch rush it is not at all unusual to look around the room and see businessmen who have shed their coats and worries to enjoy a game of pool with colleagues and friends. In the evenings and on weekends it would be of no suprise to the regulars to see a father and son shooting pool together. The Rack feels that they are a family style establishment and one visit will assure you that they are right.

Besides being an excellent place to shoot pool, The Rack is also the most complete billiard and gameroom supplier between Dallas and El Paso. You can select an antique from their floor or one of the other used tables. They can also order a new table for you.

Another fact that will assure you that The Rack is a reputable establishment is the fact that they are very active in charity work for Midland. Lynne Headrick has been donating his time and knowledge to the March of Dimes and the Midland Youth Center.

The Rack is a private club that sells memberships for $10.00 but they are also open to the public. The only thing that a non-member can't do that a member can is buy beer. So everyone is welcome to come by and enjoy a game of pool.

Ladies play for free Monday through Thursday and until 6p.m. on Friday. So bring a date and save a little money.

As you look at this picture these people do not look threatening nor do they look like the type of crowd you would expect to find in a "pool hall". Yet all of these men are having lunch at The Rack, located at Midkiff and Andrews Highway. The Rack is the clean, safe place to shoot pool in Midland.

Oil and watercolor classes to be at Windmill Hobbies and Crafts

Windmill Hobbies and Crafts will be holding classes in oil and watercolor taught by Lyndy Benson beginning April 16 and April 18. They are also host to a workshop in the painting of florals in oil by Bill Huffaker. Call 694-1926 for more information.

Are you a hobbyist or an artist in search of quality supplies? Do you sometimes need some help or advice with a project? Ever wish a hobby and craft store would bring in experienced artists to teach classes and workshops?

Windmill Hobbies and Crafts has it all. The can meet the needs of the hobbyist and artist alike.

A recent expansion will allow Windmill to have an entire section devoted to hobbies. Jerry Fussell is the new hobby manager for Windmill. He brings a wealth of knowledge and experiance with him to help you better.

At the present time the hobby section carries a wide assortment of trains and the essentials for the train hobbyist. They will be expanding into the area of remote control airplanes and cars soon.

Windmill is also the place to go for all of your art needs. Whether you are an amateur or professional artist, specializing in either commercial of fine art, you can find all of your supplies at Windmill. They carry several diversified lines to choose from in paints, brushes, pens, pastels, calligraphy supplies and sketch pads. They also carry prestretched canvases. If you need an exceptionally large canvas John Long, owner of the Windmill Hobbies and Crafts store, also does custom stretching.

In an effort to serve area artists better, Windmill will be bringing in two professional artists to share their knowledge. Lyndy Benson will be teaching seversal six week courses. Monday evenings will be devoted to watercolors. Oils will be taught on Wednesday mornings and evenings from 6 to 9 p.m. The cost of each course will be $60.00 plus supplies for six weekly classes. These classes can be beneficial for any artist from beginner to advanced.

Since these classes begin tomorrow, April 16, for the watercolors and Wednesday, April 18 for the oils you need to call and reserve your space as soon as possible.

Since there is a uniform supply list you just need to come a little early for the first class and pick them up.

Bill Huffaker will be leading a one day floral oil workshop on Friday, April 27. Since this is a one day workshop it is recommended that only intermediate and advanced artists enroll due to the fact that there is much to learn in a relatively short period of time and it is easier to grasp the concepts being taught if you have an art and painting background. Mr. Huffaker has a workbook on painting roses in oil to be released soon. The cost of the workshop is $15.00 plus supplies. Once again, they have a basic list of supplies needed so you can come early and get them before the workshop begins. Reservations are required so call Windmill soon to assure yourself a seat.

Windmill Hobbies and Crafts caters to the teacher and student alike. They also carry supplies needed by agencies.

Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers customer service

Ah, the days of years gone by. Man has advanced more technologically in the last century than in centuries and centuries before. Time Magazine recently released a special anniversary issue entitld The Most Amazing 60 Years in History. But for all of the advancement, people still look back and reflect upon the "good old days". Those were the days in past years when we didn't have to worry about the price of oil. We didn't sit back scared to death of who would nuke who first. Those were the days of penny candy. But most of all, those were the days when the merchant had a sincere interest in both quality and service to his custmers. With inflation and the state of the economy today, everyone is trying to make as much money as they can, as easily as they can. This means that service and quality are fast becoming extinct. If you find a business that is truly concerned about each and every customer; one that still believes in service after the sell and selling only quality merchandise, you had better remember where you found it. The Vacuum Cleaner Shop, 3102. Cuthbert in Midland, is one place you had better remember.

The Vacuum Cleaner Shop has moved from their previous location at 3001 W. Cuthbert (corner of Gibson's parking lot) into a better location at 3102 W. Cuthbert, across from Gibson's. The service you receive at the Vacuum Cleaner Shop is of the type that you hardly see anymore. Owner Jack Snoddy firmly believes in giving his customers the very best service possible anywhere. This includes not only sales of new makes and models, but in repairing as well. The Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers probably the best repair service available. Service is available on all makes and models.

The Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers the largest selection of new vacuums with over 26 different models. Jack's shop was the P1 Sanitaire Blue Line Dealer in Texas in 1982, as well as the P1 volume vacuum cleaner shop in the Fort Worth branch. The record speaks for itself. Those who have discovered the Vacuum Cleaner Shop know the importanceof shopping somewhere that is truely concerned about the needs and desires of each and every customer. And you have never known the meaning of service after the sell or repair service until you have been to the Vacuum Cleaner Shop.

Mr Snoddy's store carries all major door to door model vacuum cleaners at greatly reduced prices; most are up to ½ off. He carries many rebuilt Kirby vacuums which are probably better built than most new vacuums, as they are all metal construction. You can even find a shop vac for your garage or commercial cleaners at the Vacuum Cleaner Shop. In addition, you can find a complete line of bags, belts and accessories for most models.

Before you buy any vacuum cleaner, check ith the Vacuum Cleaner Shop. Check on their repair service, and your vacuum cleaner could be as good as new at a fraction of the cost of a new machine. If you do need a new machine, come by the Vacuum Cleaner Shop and compare the prices before you buy anywhere. The new building means even better service to the customer and more room for the merchandise, giving you a larger selection. And, of course, you can still find the pride in service and and the genuine concern for each and very customer. Come by 3102 W. Cuthbert or call 699-7555 today. The ways of quality, service and customer satisfaction can still be found if you just know where to look.

The Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers excellent repair service on all makes and models, as well as 26 differnt new models to choose from. Come by 3102 W. Cuthbert or call owner Jack Snoddy at 699-7555.

Diamontrigue has come up with a new gift for you to give to your Mother, Father or even yourself. There goldsmith has created a new pendant, tie tack and ear studs. Stop in at the Market Place located on the corner of University and Parkway to see one of these original designs.

Diamontrigue has gifts for Mother's and Father's Day

Come to see what we can do with your old gold!

Our young goldsmith has developed a beautiful new pendant. Taking your old broken chains, discarded class rings, dental gold and old mountings, he melts the gold and pours it over broom corn and creates an original pendant for you that cannot be duplicated.

It is a stunning piece. He also makes tie-tacks and ear studs— all originals,all for you.

White gold may be exchanged for yellow at a premium, of course. The process takes about four weeks, so start now for Mother's Day and Father's Day gifts.

Is the Diamontrique gem a zircon?

No, a zircon is a mined stone. It comes in many colors. Long ago the colorless variety was used as a substitute diamond, not successfully. Some colored zircons are very beautiful. The Diamontrigue gem is a man-made stone, originally from the space program.

Can you wear these every day, do dishes, etc.?

You can treat the Diamontrigue gem like any other gemstone. It needs no special handling. However, we do not recommend that you wash dishes or clean house in any of your fine jewelry. It is very hard on the gold. We do recommend that you treasure your jewelry and take care of it, cleaning it frequently.

Do these need a special cleaner?

No, any fine jewelry cleaner will do. However, we can say with total immodesty that our cleaner is the most superb that we have ever seen. Many of the cleaners on the market leave a residue on the jewelry that interferes with the clarity and beauty. Our cleaner is most inexpensive; kept deliberately so, that all may have and enjoy. The price? Only one dollar!

Will these gemstones get cloudy or yellow?

The difference is our relentless pursuit for quality. As has been said: "There is always someone who can make a product cheaper, and sell it for less." A cheaper product is not what we are interested in. Many sell what is known as the "finest" cubic zirconic. The finest is where we begin. Two gemologists select the Diamontrigue gem from the finest; the rejection rate is 93%. We show only the top 7% in the Diamontrigue collections.

To have a "14K gold mounting" is not enough, as quality in mountings vary a great deal. The mountings selected for Diamontrigue must be immaculately finished, heavy for the size, innovative in design or a timeless classic of meticulous finish and good weight. Quality costs more; but only quality has lasting value and the look of elegance.

Manpower- the name says it all

Manpower - the name says it all. If you are looking for temporary help, industrial or clerical, Manpower is the agency to call!

Manpower was founded in 1948 under the direction of Parker Pen as their parent company. They have gone on to become the largest temporary help firm in the world having reently opened their 1000th office in Isreal.

Pam Phillips, Midland Area Manager, explained some of the unique testing and interviewing processes scientifically designed and validated by Manpower. One such process is the unique 30 question interview. Along with the application, this interview provides Manpower with a wealth of information about the prospective employee. Manpower can then more accurately match an employee with the work assignment most beneficial to him/her and the customer.

Everyone is not suited for temporary work, so Manpower has designed the Predicta II. The only EEOC validated skill measurement exercise that predicts the success ratio of a person working temporarily.

Manpower's "Typing Plus" is the thinkers typing test. The applicant must follow certain copy and format changes, as well as correct spelling and punctuation all from a handwritten rough draft. This test seperates someone with real typing skills from a copy typist.

Manpower is also able to test for many other skills such as shorthand and adding machine. Their two most recent skill measurement exercises deal with data entry and word processing— the fastest growing areas in the clerical field.

Once Manpower has interviewed, tested and assigned an employee to a job assignment, their office does a Work Enviroment Service Call. This call is done by Vicki Hicks, Service Representative for Manpower. She physially goes to the job sites where she sees first hand what the office/job site enviroment is like. This helps eliminate such problems as where to park, sending a smoker into a non-smoking enviroment, etc.

Manpower's follow up program includes sending their customers a Quality Performance Appraisal in addition to personally calling to find out how well the temporary is doing. The Quality Performance Rating os filed in the customer's file for future reference.

After an employee has worked 400 hours for Manpower and has reeived an excellent Quality Performance Rating, he or she is awarded a sterling silver necklace or tie tack from Tiffany's for being an outstanding temporary.

Whether your needs are for work or workers- Manpower is the place to go.

There are two locations in the Permian Basin to serve you. In Midland they are located at 1002 W. Wall. Their phone number is 683-4624. The Odessa office is at 705 N. Hancock and their number is 332-1691.

Manpower, located at 1002 W. Wall in Midland and 705 N. Hancock in Odessa, is the World's largest temporary help service in the world. Temporaries that come from Manpower are thoroughly tested to assure their skills. If you need help, Manpower could be your answer.

No reason to wait

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis are predicting there'll be a special session of the Legislature this summer to address to important subjects: Education reforms and highway funding. No one should be surprised.

Both subjects are deserving of special attention, removed from the hustle and bustle that typically marks a regular session. Both are deserving for a special reason. Those two subjects may touch as many lives in the Lone Star State as anything could. They should not play second fiddle to topics of less magnitude which unquestionably they would in a regular session.

During the past few months education has been in the limelight as a panel headed by Dallas computer magnate H. Ross Perot has studied ills of the current system and offered glimpses of startling — and often controversial — recommendations for improvement. The recommendations implemented probably wouldn't be inexpensive. Hobby has estimated that a compromise reform plan would cost $1.6 to $1.7 billion over a three-year period.

That's why a special session is justified. All of a sudden Texas is past the point of just talking about what would be good for the educational system and is down to determining what Texans can afford to implement. That's the point at which, as the old saying goes, it's down to the nitty-gritty.

And to make matters worse, at the same time Texas legislators really do need to talk about spending a large sum of money on the state's highway system. When it rains, it does pour.

For the past couple of years the Legislature has been avoiding dealing with the highway question and, meanwhile, the condition of state-supported highways has been declining. According to highway officials, it's imperative that additional funding be provided for maintenance of the system just to protect the investment Texas has in it.

Maybe Texas truly can't commit all the money necessary to meet the educational needs of its young people and to keep its highway system in tip-top shape. But it's the duty of legislators to fully study the situation and to implement as many changes as they believe are justified and reasonable. Of course no one wants higher taxes and all alternate funding options should be thoroughly considered. But if something is worth doing, it's worth doing now.

In that regard, waiting until the regular session to act would be meaningless. Gov. White should call the session and legislators should get on with it.

Getting the job done

Just when it appeared the Space Shuttle program was on the brink of another major setback, the skills of both men in space and earthlings on ground joined in making possible a major advance.

Retrieving the multimillion-dollar satellite Solar Max not only saved millions in dollars but proved our capability to perform commercial repair functions in an atmosphere so hostile the slightest mistake or malfunction could spell disaster.

Both men and machine performed beyond expectations, for when a space-walking astronaut failed to snare the satellite Sunday, a daring effort in itself, it appeared failure of the mission was at hand and that Solar Max would spin out of control. Through brilliant manipulations beamed from earth and precise piloting of a space craft, our astronauts and their ground support people pulled off one of those firsts in history we can look to with pride and describe as typically American.

They not only corrected the satellite's wayward spin but also maneuvered on limited fuel supplies to retrieve it for repair. It is indeed a major, mind-boggling advance in overcoming the limitations that are unique to space.

Another View:

Poverty increasing

Contrary to what the Reagan administration would have you believe, the nation's poverty rate is not steadily declining. Even when non-cash welfare benefits are included in the calculations, the number of people living in poverty has swelled by more than 7 million in the past four years.

The latest Census Bureau statistics contradict Reagan's Budget Director David Stockman's frequent assertion that the nation is making "steady progress in reducing the true rate of poverty." He and others in the administration have argued that the problem of poverty was inflated because the Census Bureau failed to include the cash value of such benefits as food stamps, public housing, Medicare and Medicaid in its official calculations of poverty.

That's true up to a point. When you count non-cash benefits, some people rise above the "poverty" category. However, even when non-cash benefits are included, the trend of the last four years still points to a deplorable increase in poverty. When both cash and non-cash benefits are taken into account, the Census Bureau found the number of poor persons rose from 15.1 million in 1979 to 22.9 million in 1982 — a growth rate of 47.1 percent.

The bureau said that the average market value of non-cash benefits received by poor families declined by 10.4 percent, from $3,715 in 1979 to $3,300 in 1982, after adjustment for inflation. Moreover, bureau officials said the increase in poverty reflected the effects of recession and inflation, not the administration's reductions in social spending, which had yet to take full effect.

In response to the report, White House spokesman Larry Speakes predicted that the figures for 1983 will be "considerably better" because the latest recession ended last year. At the same time, Democratic congressmen, fearful that the poverty problem would accelerate even faster when Reagan's social cuts were fully effective, introduced a $10 billion legislative package to "create a real safety net for the disadvantaged." Given the dismal figures, the Democrats' action looks justified.

JACK ANDERSON

'Protected' industries aren't

WASHINGTON — Japan's "economic miracle" isn't all it's cracked up to be. This means that the United States should be wary of trying to copy the Japanese technique of protective tariffs and massive government subsidies for targeted industries.

Jack Anderson

One of the most influential champions of free and friendly competition between the United States and Japan is our man in Tokyo, Ambassador Mike Mansfield.

"If you believe in the free enterprise system, you should believe in open and free competition," he said in an interview with my associate Dale Van Atta in Tokyo.

"The customer is entitled to the best he can buy at the most reasonable price. If we're going to compete — if we believe in that system, as I do — then we ought to take those factors into mind and act accordingly. Tariffs help neither country in the long run, but create problems which can react against all of us."

At 81, Mansfield is an institution in Japan. He was named ambassador by President Jimmy Carter in 1977, and President Ronald Reagan saw no need to replace him. Soft-spoken and professorial, he is no shogun MacArthur, but is admired and respected by Japanese officials and businessmen. He is as quietly effective in his diplomatic role as he was when he succeeded Lyndon Johnson as Senate majority leader in 1961.

Mansfield is concerned that U.S.-Japanese trade relations will become a campaign issue this year. "Scapegoating Japan" for America's industrial troubles may be politically tempting, but it will be counterproductive, Mansfield feels.

"We have to be honest with ourselves, face up to reality and recognize that many of our economic difficulties at home are of our own doing," he said. "And that in large part only we can cure them."

The ambassador acknowledged that the U.S. trade balance with Japan is not improving. In fact, Commerce Department figures show that the trade deficit is getting worse each year: from $15.8 billion in 1981 to $17 billion in 1982 and $19.5 billion last year.

But in all the furor over Japan, Mansfield pointed out, little is said of growing trade problems with other countries.

The U.S. trade deficit with Canada, for example, has increased almost five-fold since 1981 — to $10.3 billion last year. And our once-healthy trade surplus with Western Europe has dropped drastically over the same period, and could turn into a deficit.

The answer to these trade problems, Mansfield said, is not to put up high tariffs to keep out foreign products, but to "pull together and recognize that we are in a very competitive world."

He cited the U.S. auto industry as a case in point. One of the biggest victims of Japanese encroachment, the industry rebounded from a $5 billion loss in 1980 to a $6.2 billion profit last year.

Mansfield and other sources in Tokyo agreed that trying to emulate Japanese economic policy isn't the answer, either. For one thing, the much-publicized "partnership" between government and industry would not be tolerated in the United States. For another, the system hasn't been universally successful in Japan.

MITI — the Ministry of International Trade and Industry — has won deserved credit for helping such Japanese industries as motorcycle, car and camera manufacturing dominate the international market through government subsidies and protective tariffs. But many Japanese are not happy about it. As one source put it, "We discovered we were paying for (the industries') beginning and not sharing in the profits later." The payment took the form of taxes and higher prices for consumer goods.

Furthermore, MITI has made some egregious mistakes. The first MITI-protected industry was textiles, but its success didn't last beyond the 1960s. It was a case of massive overinvestment — and MITI made the same costly error in its efforts to build up the steel, petrochemical and shipping industries. They are all experiencing hard times.

Japan produces more steel than it can find a market for; petrochemicals were badly hurt by the leap in oil prices in the 1970s, and Japan's shipping expansion came just when demand was weakening. Today in Japan there are acres of unneeded steel and shipyards that have never built a ship.

One thing both Japanese and American sources in Tokyo feel Japan could learn from the United States might be called "social responsibility within the world community."

For example, the Japanese have accepted only a few of the wretched boat people from Indochina. And they spend almost no money to aid Third World nations — unless there's profit to be made by it.

A secret CIA report notes that Japan "has long practiced 'resource diplomacy'" and has been "little concerned with developing countries that are poor in resources and are not large outlets for Japan's exports or attractive targets for investment."

GEORGE F. WILL

Campaign '84: Where's the wit?

WASHINGTON — A political campaign is not expected to be a flow of soul or a feast of reason, but the one featuring Messrs. Mondale and Hart is not even interestingly rude. Indeed, it demonstrates that the art of political invective is, like most things, in decline.

George F. Will

To hear Mondale and Hart tell it — and they tell it with fawn-like eyes filled with hurt — the other fellow is being unbearably mean. Their idea of beastliness is a statement like "Warmonger Mondale will leave four jeeps in Honduras!" or "Heartless Hart would not bail when water was coming over Chrysler's gunwales!" This is rough stuff? If these guys were desserts, they would be creme caramel.

When this Republic was brimming with youthful vigor, John Randolph said of a rival, "He shines and stinks like rotten mackerel by moonlight." Ulysses Grant said James Garfield had the backbone of an angleworm. Teddy Roosevelt said William McKinley had no more backbone than a chocolate eclair and he said of Oliver Wendell Holmes that he, Roosevelt, could carve a judge with more backbone from a banana. Harold Ickes, FDR's interior secretary and holder of the indoor record for tartness, said that Sen. Huey Long suffered from "halitosis of the intellect."

Even recently American public life has known barbed wit as well as rhetorical barbed wire. Justice Hugo Black, attending the funeral of an enemy, was asked by a late-arriver how far the service had gone. Black whispered, "They just opened the defense." Dean Acheson said you should trust J. Edgar Hoovep as much as you would a rattlesnake with a silencer on its tail. Adlai Stevenson said of Norman Vincent Peale, "I find Paul appealing but Peale appalling." Gene McCarthy said Walter Mondale has the soul of a Vice President. When George Romney said U.S. officials in Vietnam had brainwashed him, McCarthy said he thought a light rinse would have sufficed.

And in 1980, what passes for brutality? This does: "Where's the beef?" Where's the wit?

My interest in invective was whetted in 1963 when living in England, which was luxuriating in the Profumo-Christine Keeler sex-and-espionage scandal. In Parliament, a Labor member, annoyed by Lord Hailsham's moralizing, exclaimed: "When self-indulgence has reduced a man to the shape of Lord Hailsham, sexual continence involves no more than a sense of the ridiculous."

British political comment still can be as sharp as the best British cheddar. A recent editorial in The Economist said: "As for Mr. Hart, the primaries have shown him to be not much more than a loofah — abrasive but without much solidity." (A loofah is a bath sponge.) But even the British are now more restrained than they were when Disraeli said of Lord John Russell: "If a traveler were informed that such a man was leader of the House of Commons, he may well begin to comprehend how the Egyptians worshiped an insect."

Perhaps the tang of British political rhetoric owes something to the acidity of British literary criticism. Remember the critic who said of Tennyson's "Maud" that the title contains one too many vowels and that it is a matter of indifference which one is removed. Or Samuel Butler, who said of the Thomas Carlyles, "It was very good of God to let Carlyle and Mrs. Carlyle marry one another and so make only two people miserable instead of four."

When British political and literary wit mix, the result can be wonderful. When Evelyn Waugh heard that a growth removed from Randolph Churchill was benign, he said the surgeon had removed the only part of Churchill phat was not malignant. When George Bernard Shaw offered Winston Churchill two tickets to the opening night of a Shaw play, saying, "Bring a friend — if you have one," Churchill reportedly responded, "I can not come opening night but can come the second night — if there is one."

Bear these brickbats in mind the next time Hart or Mondale gets sulky because the other guy has said something naughty. The naughtiness is apt to be one of them disputing the other's claim to have been the first to do something foolish (such as endorse a nuclear freeze) or to have done something impenetrably obscure (such as voting to table a perfecting amendment to an amendment to a bill to accelerate the depreciation of something).

The campaign is about to tumble into an abyss of blandness — no more sizzlers like "Nyah, nyah, Hart opposed the Trade Amendment Assistance Act!" So Simon & Schuster should rush Hart and Mondale galleys of the forthcoming book "Whatever It Is I'm Against It." This book is a compendium of negative thoughts, my favorite being Baudelaire's suggested epitaph for Belgium: "At last!"

ART BUCHWALD

Republicans can save 'til Dallas!

One of the greatest problems, when an incumbent president is running for office, is how to differentiate a political trip he takes from one when he is on the nation's business. If Mr. Reagan goes out campaigning, the Republican Party is supposed to pay for it, but if he is traveling as a president, the taxpayer does. We're not talking about nickels and dimes. Every time the president leaves the White House with his entourage it runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Art Buchwald

So who makes the decision whether the president is out on the road making a political speech or delivering an inspirational message as this country's elected leader?

The White House staff does.

"How do you decide when Mr. Reagan is going out for political reasons, and when he goes out for presidential ones?" I asked a friend at the White House.

"We're very careful not to confuse the two," he said with a straight face. "During an election year it's always a close call."

"What are the criteria?" I wanted to know.

"Well, if the president flies out to attend a luncheon of businessmen to explain how well his economic plans are working, after inheriting the worst financial mess in 40 years from the Democrats, then that would be a presidential trip and considered nonpolitical."

"Would a speech to the fundamentalist preachers about prayers in school be considered political or presidential?"

"Presidential, of course. The president would never make the prayer issue political. Only the liberal Democrats would do that."

"Recently, one of the president's main themes in his speeches around the country is that Congress is responsible for all his failures in foreign policy, including Lebanon. He has almost called them traitors. Would the upcoming elections have anything to do with the thrust of his remarks?"

"Certainly not. The president has a right to inform the people of this country who should be blamed for the collapse of his bipartisan foreign policy, and the loss of American lives, whether he makes the speech in New York, Chicago or Los Angeles."

"Couldn't he do that from the White House?"

"It's important that the people see their president, and the more he gets around to the key electoral states, the stronger the message he is sending to the Soviets that we intend to have peace through strength. It is also his duty as Commander-in-Chief to warn the nation of the disastrous consequences of a nuclear freeze now being put forth by the presidential candidates in the opposition party."

"Some might interpret those as political speeches in an election year," I said.

"How can they be considered political when the nation's freedom is at stake, and all he is saying is that the Democrats would deliver us into the hands of the Communists?"

"Who picks up the tab when the president goes out to talk to a group of Republican women about the unfairness of the so-called gender gap?"

"It depends. If the president stops off on the trip to visit someone whose house has been washed away by a flood, then the taxpayer does. If he flies directly to the speech without filling a sandbag, then the Republican Party would."

"It appears to me then, that so far most of the president's sojourns haven't cost the party too much money."

"President Reagan would never use his high office to campaign for reelection at the expense of the taxpayers. As he said in New York last week, every one of them is much better off today than they were four years ago."

"When will the president dig into the Republican war chest for his reelection?"

"If he stays presidential, not until he goes to Dallas in August for the Republican convention."

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1945, President Franklin D. Roosevelt was buried at the Roosevelt family home in Hyde Park, N.Y.

In 1959, Cuba's Fidel Castro arrived in Washington to begin a goodwill tour of the United States.

We can avoid litigation by verbal communication

Bill Modisett

People have forgotten how to talk.

Oh, don't laugh. It's true. What's more it's a primary cause of a lot of headaches we could avoid if we only would embrace once again that delicate ability to solve societal differences via verbal communication.

Today's suit-happy generation is one result of losing the art of communication as a way of solving conflicts. The courts never were intended to relieve mankind completely of his ability to solve differences by talking; courtrooms are meant only to serve as a neutral ground for peaceful arbitration when other means of settling differences have been tried and failed.

Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger addressed the litigiousness of American society in a May 1983 speech before the American Law Institute when he said: "Today our dynamic society, with an almost irrational focus — virtually a mania — on litigation as the way to solve all problems has required us to create 647 authorized federal judgeships (as compared to 279 in 1953)."

All those additional courts are necessary because the number of lawsuits filed at all levels has mushroomed in recent years. In fact, the National Center for State Courts in Williamsburg, Va., found that in 1981 state court filings were 22 percent larger than in 1977; appeals increased 32 percent in the same period. And that's just state courts. Noting the rate of growth of Supreme Court cases, Chief Justice Burger predicted in 1983 that the High Court could have between 6,000 and 9,000 filings per year over the next 14 years.

Of course the increasing number of court cases is only one symptom of the illness afflicting society. By no means is the judicial process invalid. It works and it serves American society well. It's misused at times and it does have its flaws, but our system of justice still is the best ever devised by man.

So what does this staggering volume of court cases reflect? That's easy. It shows that Americans aren't taking the time to even attempt to solve their own problems anymore; they're pushing them off on someone else — even though it means more expense for society, less social interplay and an extremely poor example for youngsters of how adults should deal with conflicts that inevitably arise in daily life.

For example, there was a time in the not too distant past when an individual, irritated because a windstorm knocked a limb off his neighbor's tree and onto the man's car — causing a dent — would have confronted the neighbor peaceably to ask for some assistance in repairing the vehicle. After all, the wind was the culprit; the neighbor only allowed the tree limb to grow excessively long — reaching over the man's property and creating the danger.

Chances are that peaceable talk between neighbors won't take place today. Instead what happens is the man with the damaged car storms over to his neighbor's, calls that man several unrepeatable names, demands payment for the damages and then adds: "... or I'll sue!." What a way to start a conversation about the regrettable situation and to determine a way to solve the problem.

A lot of my lawyer friends may call me to tell me that this case isn't a valid example, but I believe it is because it makes the fundamental point: Cases that never should end up in court all too frequently do because people have lost the ability to talk out problems.

In a recent column on a similar topic, Heritage Foundation president Edwin Feulner noted that a zealous bodybuilder, anxious to show his skills in a foot race, strapped a refrigerator to his back. One of the straps holding the refrigerator broke, so the man filed suit against the manufacturer and was awarded $1 million in damages.

Maybe that's an extreme example, but the fact that those examples arise is cause for all of us to worry just a little about the direction our society is headed.

We've got to recapture that ability to talk to the people around us in order to settle differences for a number of reasons. First to relieve the court system of the ridiculous burden it has. Second to recognize once again that we can get along with our fellow man. And, third, to set an example for that next generation that's coming along learning, falsely, that the best and surest way to solve a problem is to push it off on somebody else.

That's a topic worth talking about.

Research group stimulating

Recently I was privileged to participate in a market research discussion group. I found this to be a most stimulating and informative meeting.

Nowadays with all the new food products on the market it is indeed gratifying to know that some manufacturers are interested in knowing what the consumer thinks of their products. To be able to meet representatives of these products face-to-face, tell them what you like and dislike about the products, and ways the consumer thinks it can be improved was just great. It is so much better than sending a letter to the general offices of the manufacturer where it gets lost and/or ignored.

To those manufacturers of products who have, at great expense to themselves, chosen Midland as a market research city, I want to say a Texas-size thank you.

Immigration laws unenforceable

I feel compelled to present a different opinion in regard to the hospital board's proposed policy changes regarding illegal aliens and Ms. Pendleton's letter to the editor endorsing any restrictions they choose to make.

The problem exists because immigration laws have been unenforceable — unenforceable because like prohibition, the general populace does not support them. We can either stick our heads in the sand and pretend the problem does not exist or admit, that by looking the other way, we have created it. It's a joke to most people when the border patrol picks up and deports another load of illegal aliens; "they'll be back before the end of the week," we say. Or we piously propose laws to fine employers of illegals while at the same time take advantage of low bids on labor contracts or low prices on products pretending not to know why they're low. The only workable solution is to encourage Mexico to build an economy equal to ours and that's a long-term goal.

In the meantime considering the present poverty in Mexico, which of us cannot say she would not make every effort to give her child a better lot in life including the effort to provide it with American citizenship by any means possible. Not I. Who can blame anyone for trying to make a better (or any kind of a) living for himself and his family?

Many of these people work hard; the reason that they often don't make enough money to pay for medical care under the U.S. cost of living should be obvious to us; we created the system. Because we created and condone it, we must face up to our responsibility and pay either at the wage end or the benefits' end. With the legal ruling requiring states to pay for the education of the children living there without regard to citizenship, I find it difficult to believe the courts would support denial of medical care to anyone by a tax-supported hospital on the basis of citizenship.

It really doesn't make much difference whether it's the county or hospital district who's paying the bill; we do ultimately. As a taxpayer I abhor paying higher taxes. As a former Midland Memorial Hospital labor and delivery nurse, I have felt the same frustrations Mrs. Pendleton expressed. However morally and ethically, I believe firmly in Midland taking care of the people who live here.

We should deny necessary hospital care for people in our (and their) own community who may possibly die or lose a baby because of it? No, thank you. I, for one, will not support decisions made by the hospital board on the basis of that kind of discrimination. I may pay higher taxes but I'll sleep better!

SPEAKING OUT

Don't let the parade pass you by; Support community groups

By CHERI HILL

Cheri Hill, a Midlander for 14 years, is past chairman of Parade of Homes and president-elect for 1984-85 of Midland Junior Woman's Club. This year she serves as projects chairman and first vice-president.

Midlanders, an exciting event is coming our way, an event that everyone is talking about — local television and radio announcers, magazines and newspapers, even your neighbors may be talking about this parade. This event promises you a delightful, colorful Sunday afternoon; at the same time, this unique parade promises to support two of Midland's most important organizations. You are invited to share in this upcoming event — the 1984 Parade of Homes sponsored by the Midland Junior Woman's Club.

The 1984 Parade of Homes marks the 15th annual parade, and the Junior Woman's Club unanimously voted to direct all funds from ticket sales to the Midland Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP) and the Center for Battered Women and Their Children. These two local organizations deal with two tremendous problems facing our community today, drug and alcohol abuse and domestic violence.

The Midland PDAP was established in 1979 through the efforts of the Junior Woman's Club and the Junior League of Midland, Inc. Today, PDAP maintains a Midland office and six counselors and staff members. The primary purpose of PDAP is to provide private counseling and group therapy to individuals, ages 12-25, suffering from the devastating effects of mind-changing chemicals. Counselors work with young abusers encouraging them to "stay straight" in a "get high" society. A Parents' Support Group was established in an effort to deal with the problem of living with an addictive personality.

PDAP strives to treat the entire family in an atmosphere of love, understanding and fellowship. The primary requirement for membership in PDAP is the desire to live a chemical-free life. Lives of young people involved in mind-changing chemical and alcohol abuse may be characterized by despair, isolation, low self-esteem, depression and hopelessness. Drugs become a coping mechanism, a distorted tool for acceptance and a method of escaping reality.

PDAP seeks to offer a therapy-maintenance program. According to PDAP Director Bob Savage, Midland's availability of mind-changing chemicals, the social acceptance of alcohol and drug use and the peer pressure to "fit in" are resulting in continued epidemic levels of drug abuse in our community. Midland's drug scene is indeed a reality, but hundreds of young people and parents are reaping the benefits of PDAP.

In 1979, a small trailer housed the Center for Battered Women and Their Children. The following year, a four bedroom house was purchased, and today the Midland shelter for physically and emotionally abused women and their children is a reality, meeting fundamental needs as well as providing counseling and referral for the residents.

Because domestic violence is not often reported, it is referred to as the Unreported Epidemic. This ugly epidemic strikes without consideration to age, race or socioeconomic and educational levels. One out of every four Texas women over 18 years of age has been abused by her spouse or partner, and the FBI estimates that one out of every two women will, at some point in their lives, be physically abused by their spouse or partner. The FBI further reports that a beating occurs every 15 seconds, and 20 percent of all women seeking emergency room treatment are victims of wife beating.

Many researchers feel that the creation of shelters like the Midland center is the only immediate solution to the urgent reality of battering. Our local abuse center maintains a staff of three full-time and three part-time employees. The center's capacity is 36 women and children. A total of 191 women and 267 children sought shelter in the safety of Midland's center in 1983. According to director, Irene Clouse, the center exists to offer an atmosphere for change for victims of domestic violence.

The Midland Junior Woman's Club, a group composed of 65 concerned and community-oriented young women, stands in support of these two organizations. Please join us in our sincere effort toward PDAP and the Center for Battered Women and Their Children. Don't let this parade pass you by! You may purchase your tax-deductible $7.50 Parade of Homes ticket in advance from any Junior Woman's Club member. For further ticket information call 694-0186.

On Sunday, April 29, from 2 to 6 p.m., we will proudly present four exquisite homes of four generous Midland families for touring. The homes, different in styling and mood from formal elegance to casual comfort, from Victorian grace to sunny spaciousness, offer something for everyone. The 1984 homeowners are:

Mr. and Mrs. Doug Russell
905 Country Club Drive
Mr. and Mrs. Dave Leonard
3402 Choate Place
Mr. and Mrs. Don Sparks
2407 Dartmouth
Mr. and Mrs. Fred Walsh
No. 9 Hialeah

Midlanders, thank you for your tremendous support in our 14 past parades. We look forward to offering you a fantastic 15th Parade of Homes April 29 to benefit two worthy community organizations.

I'm happy with my job

You poor dear! To blame your mother for your own inadequacies must put a heavy burden on everyone around you. If you can blame your mother for your shortsightedness, laziness and all the obvious character faults you have, you must spread a lot of blame around for everything you do, or don't do.

I am in the process of nurturing two little boys, full time. I am putting countless hours into molding these two boys into trustworthy, loving, compassionate, hard-working men who will care and nurture families of their own someday. I work one day a week outside our home, taking my youngest "rugrat" with me. I run a part-time busines from my front room without taking time away from my important role of being a partner in a "wonderful sparkling marriage" and training two little boys to be the finest young men they can be. I do volunteer work weekly in an attempt to save someone the grief of losing a baby to abortion.

My dear woman, you seem to have come up short! I can do all these things and someday I may enter the professional world of career making and give you a run for your money. I can cook, I can clean house or any other place for that matter. Keeping things clean isn't a prerequisite for just homemakers it's for everyone! I am highspirited, independent thinking and self-sufficient. All the things you claim to be. I really feel sorry for you. I have so much more than you will ever have. God bless you, Dear, you need all the help you can get.

What I do is a full time career. As a homemaker I am doing a great job and an important job. It's a shame women like you are so limited in what they can do and will do. I wouldn't trade places with you for all the money in the world. Someday I will have much to show for all my hard work and labor of love. Will you have as much?

Citizens respond to worthy cause

The generosity of the people of the Permian Basin is renowned. When a worthy cause appears, such as a need for blood, Midlanders and Odessans respond.

The Midland Memorial Hospital Blood Bank and Medical Center Hospital Blood Bank recently united to conduct a special blood drive involving participants from both communities. The drive was sponsored by KMID-TV and held Feb. 25th at the TV station.

The staff of Big 2 was a driving force in bringing people from the two cities together in a common cause — a need for blood. Their staff not only gave air time but also their energy and enthusiasm.

Citizens from both communities responded and 227 units were drawn. Many telephone pledges were made.

We, the staff of Midland Memorial Blood Bank and Medical Center Hospital Blood Bank, wish to extend our sincere appreciation to those "quiet heroes" — the Big 2 staff and our concerned public. We thank you for caring, and we thank you for giving in the true sense of the word.

Some residents overlooked

On Friday and Saturday of last week your newspaper ran a map of Midland, showing residents where they would be able to vote on April 6. I happened to have noticed that this map did not include all of the residents in our city. It struck me as strange that any citizen (according to your map) south of I-80 did not have a voting station.

I'm sure that this map was an oversight on your part. I am wondering how (if it was an oversight) you could forget such a large portion of Midland. To be truthful, when I first saw that map, I became angry and accused your paper of racism and discrimination. Perhaps you could explain to myself and those citizens south of I-80 where the polling stations were and perhaps next time, remember to include them on your maps.

Marisa Everitt
Midland

EDITOR'S NOTE: The designation to which you refer — for south Midland and Greenwood — was not omitted intentionally, but was left off the maps because of an oversight. The informatin on where voters living in those precincts were to vote was included in a list of polling places published the same days. The Reporter-Telegram regrets the oversight and is taking steps to ensure that future voting maps contain complete information.

Americans' first interest should be to our security

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — The Congress, still miffed by failure of the administration to keep members clued in on clandestine details about mining ports of communist-run Nicaragua, is waiting to see how President Reagan reacts by deed to an angry Senate rebuke. In a non-binding — and that's important - vote, the Senate by 84-12 adopted a resolution opposing the use of federal funds to mine Nicaraguan waters. The House also voted big to endorse a non-binding stinger.

Seemingly unperturbed by the size of the poll, in which Republicans joined the Democrats, President Reagan declared that he would proceed as before; that his priority was national security for the U.S. and to thwart the export of revolution from Nicaragua to El Salvador and the rest of Central America. What he actually does comes next week.

Any substantive action the president will take — or has already ordered because of the vote — isn't being discussed at the White House. He emphasized the "non-binding" quality of the resolution which was introduced by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., leader of the Senate Democratic liberals and anathema to most Republicans.

Earlier resolutions introduced by "Teddy" Kennedy were soundly defeated. Republicans stampeded on this one, I believe, because fine elder statesmen like Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., chairman of the Senate intelligence committee, weren't told about our role. In his frank manner, Sen. Goldwater took the hide of Bill Casey, CIA chief, for keeping his panel and him in the dark for "what could be an act of war." I believe Sen. Goldwater overreacted in his anger with that charge but I fully accept his right to know. There's a patriot who can keep secrets. Interestingly Sen. Goldwater also voted loyally with the minority.

IN THIS ELECTION year, peace is patently a big issue and all legislators up for office again are making dovish noises. But the president, also concerned with an election campaign, puts U.S. and inter-American security first, which he should in all Americans' interest.

He took the responsibility for mining the Nicaraguan ports — a CIA vessel was in international waters supplying the sophisticated mechanisms. The mines damage but don't sink ships. British and French governments have complained about the mines because their shipping wants to do freighter business for a price.

I thought that "The Daily Mail" in London, a moderate conservative newspaper, hit the nail on the head with its explanatory editorial about the American mining operations. The pungent piece decried the British government's complaint that freedom of the seas was at stake as "positively provincial."

"It appears to spring from an almost wilful desire to misunderstand the American approach," continued The Mail. "This is that the whole of Central America, including Mexico, is under threat from the Soviet-Cuban sponsored insurgency. Were all the dominoes in the areas to fall, the U.S. would have to denude its forces in Western Europe in order to militarize her Mexican frontier and her Western sealanes."

THAT'S SPELLED out grimly in the Kissinger report. As The Mail noted, it would be most foolish of the British government not to take this scenario seriously. America's allies in Western Europe, who also complain vociferously about U.S. cooperation with anti-Sandinista rebels in Nicaragua, ought to think again about "national interests."

They always do — so must we and President Reagan often puts himself on the line for its defense.

The president didn't indicate any disagreements within his top advisory echelon but there were some. Notably, knowledgeable sources reported to us, Secretary of State Shultz was most reluctant to approve. Maybe he was somewhat gunshy after urging the Marine expedition in Lebanon on the president over the demurrers of the military chiefs-of-staff.

Gung-ho for the clandestine deal — carried out by anti-Sandinistas, who also chew up large parts of the Nicaraguan regime army — was CIA director Casey. He always plays secret operations out of the vest, as the intelligence trade says discreetly. He had a large group of inter-America specialists supporting him.

In the end, as we know, President Reagan personally shouldered the responsibility. I cannot blame him for the booboo but do believe that we could have exercised other means like close surveillance of those ports that were mined. The Soviets and Cubans have been trying to pour aid into Nicaragua with freighters.

THEY ALSO HAVE Soviet chief U.N. delegate Oleg Troyanovsky declaiming that the U.S. is violating all international law. How's that?

The Soviets have 125,000 men with armor and planes seeking to make a vassal state of Afghanistan which they invaded 4½ years ago. And Cuba has legions in East and West Africa and key regions of the Middle East to serve Soviet aggrandizement.

This report wouldn't be complete, I feel, without a reference to the Democratic primaries. They have been completed in Pennsylvania which brings the three-man race for the party's presidential nomination to the halfway point.

Today it seems that Walter Fritz Mondale, vice president under Jimmy Carter, looks like the winner going into San Francisco's convention. Early bloomer Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, has been fading fast and preaches isolationism which is a copout.

THEN THERE'S the Rev. Jesse Jackson. He won the city of Philadelphia but fared poorly in the rest of the Keystone State. He is piling up big support among blacks who total less than 12 percent of the national population. His efforts at a "rainbow" coalition seem as gossamer as a post-rainfall rainbow. Jackson is radical chic, pleads for the Sandinistas.

President Reagan, running for re-election, is way ahead of the nearest competitor who is Mondale. That's what the polls show at this stage. He has the day-to-day experience and the headaches. His is a hard political act to beat.

Women last hired, first fired in steel mills

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Lured by big pay and the satisfaction of working with her hands, Sheryl Johnson turned to the steel mills in the late 1970s, a time of opportunity for women and minorities in the labor force.

Ms. Johnson says she was hired because she is a woman and she is black. But because those factors had so long kept her out of the mills, she was among the last to be hired and, therefore, the first fired when Big Steel stumbled and the layoffs began.

Ms. Johnson, 36, is now working part-time as a doctor's receptionist for $6 an hour, a third of what she earned as a millwright apprentice. She was laid off in November 1981 from the U.S. Steel Corp.'s Irvin Works in nearby West Mifflin. Her unemployment benefits ran out last July.

"I took this job to take a job. You've got to eat," she said with a shrug.

Ten years ago, on April 15, 1974, women like Ms. Johnson were winners when nine major steel companies signed an agreement with the federal government to expand job opportunities for women and minorities and award them $30.9 million in back pay.

The agreement, filed in two consent decrees, resolved a discrimination suit filed by the Justice Department against the steelmakers.

But because of hard times, particularly for the steel industry, a lower percentage of women is working in the mills today than before the consent decrees.

The toughest part, according to Ms. Johnson, is adjusting to a smaller paycheck. Still, she figures it's easier being an unemployed steelworker as a woman than as a man.

"Men have that macho image and they have to keep it. It's easier for a woman to come down to something like a receptionist or a cleaning person," said Ms. Johnson, the mother of five whose husband, James, 32, also lost his mill job. He is now a social worker.

"I think women take it more in stride. They've been at the bottom before and maybe even several times," said Steffi Domike, 31, a wireman apprentice who worked for a while as a newspaper photographer after being laid off from U.S. Steel's Clairton Works in October 1981.

"Somehow, women seem to be finding a way to survive, even though it's not necessarily well," said Ms. Domike, who earned $175 a week as a photographer, less than when she was on unemployment.

"Sure they'd like to have a job that pays $6 or $8 an hour. But if it means taking a $3.50-an-hour job to feed the kids, they're surely going to do that," said Lois Brown, 41, a laid-off tractor operator who supports five children.

Ms. Brown works as a counselor for the Mon Valley Unemployed Committee, a community-action group, earning only $200 a week, about what she would get from unemployment compensation.

At the time of the consent decrees, fewer than 3 percent of the 367,679 workers in the nine steel companies were women. Fifteen percent were black and 2.2 percent had Spanish surnames.

The Labor Department was unable to provide compatible statistics for subsequent years. But by 1976, the number of women in the mills had risen to 3 percent of the United Steelworkers union's 1.4 million members, who include clerical and other workers, according to John T. Smith, a union administrative assistant.

The number of women climbed to 6 percent of the USW's 1.2 million members in 1979 and 9 percent of its 1.2 million members in early 1980.

But under the seniority system, women were among the first to be laid off when the industry's decline began in 1980.

They now account for fewer than 2 percent of the union's 1 million membership, according to Smith. A fourth of all the union's members, men and women alike, are laid off.

"The two consent decrees did not protect women from layoffs. When the layoffs came, they had to go," Smith said.

The consent decree action "is not obsolete," said Ann Blackwell of the Labor Department. "But with so many people on layoff...how can it guarantee any consideration for the women when seniority is the key?"

Pat Turnell, 40, an unemployed boilermaker from West Mifflin, is considering a legal challenge to the seniority system used for callbacks.

"I am not ready to settle for less," said Ms. Turnell, who's supporting her three children as a waitress.

Lazar steals show in tophat, tails, rose

NEW YORK (AP) — In tophat and tails, with a long-stem red rose in his mouth, Lazar strutted out onto the red carpet, blinked back the photographers' flashes, shook a few hands and hopped into his waiting limousine.

Lazar the Wonder Dog, a Shetland Sheepdog with a little talent and a lot of hope, was named New York's "Most Wonderful Pet" last week, becoming an unofficial mascot for animal shelters nationwide.

"He's so proud!" exclaimed Tom Roczen of Brooklyn, Lazar's owner. From the look of things, though, Lazar was taking his new-found fame in stride.

He was toasted with champagne by the likes of entertainer Kaye Ballard, emcee of the contest, and the two dozen New York personalities who selected him as top pet.

Then, it was off for a tour of the pet spots in Manhattan, from Central Park's "Mutt Hill" to the "Cats" marquee on Broadway — with a stop at a doggie water foundatin on Fifth Avenue.

The Pets Are Wonderful Council, PAW for short, sponsored the contest as a way to show the special relationship between pets and their owners and to call attention to the thousands of homeless dogs and cats at shelters nationwide.

Some did tricks, others "sang" by barking and two had dressed up to look like their owners. A few others simply let their owners tell of their philanthropy.

"Amusement and affection you'll get, from this most wonderful pet," went part of the poem that Shirley O'Shea Kennedy, of Brooklyn, composed for Seamus, the cat she adopted at a humane society shelter.

Sweeney Todd, a Wheaten Terrier with a sequined glove on one paw, danced on his hind legs to "Beat It." Sweeney's secret desire is to be in a Michael Jackson rock video, said his owner, Curt Chaplin, New York.

Horus, a Great Dane whose past feats have included kissing John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John on the same day, planted a kiss on Miss Ballard's lips. Horus just loves to rub noses with celebrities, said his owner, Rick Carrier.

Foxy Tasha, a mixed breed, came dressed as one of the girls, in the same type of pink polka dot dress worn by her owners, Renae and Rakell Meyer, of Wantaugh, N.Y. "Tasha understands me so well," Rakell told the judges.

Liza, a blond, shaggy mixed-breed, and Gloria Stevenson, Liza's blond shaggy owener, also came as lookalikes.

"We both have funny ears, but I'm not going to show you mine," said Ms. Stevenson, who found Liza on a rainy street in the city 13 years ago.

'Snores the mangoes' not what it seems

MIAMI (AP) — When a cocaine smuggler being hauled out of court after sentencing yelled "Snores the mangoes!" it fell to the interpreter to tell the judge he had meant something like, "That really takes the cake!"

It's all part of a day's work for Lourdes Ruiz-Toledo, one of 31 interpreters who are paid $8.50 an hour to explain arcane legal proceedings to non-English-speaking people in the linguistic Tower of Babel that is Miami.

"If the attorney screams, I scream," said Ms. Ruiz-Toledo, who said the hardest part of her job was coping with the staccato pace of cross-examination.

"It's hard, because even if the interpreter works very fast, it still can take the edge off the attorney's questions," she said.

Spanish, Portuguese, Creole, French, German and Yiddish are some of the languages that the Dade County interpreters speak. In the months of February and March alone, they had to make 5,158 appearances in court or for other legal hearings.

The interpreters also need to keep track of the variations of Spanish that are spoken in Miami, whose large Latin population comes from many countries.

In Nicaragua or Chile, "guagua" is a baby, but in the Dominican Republic, it's a bus. In Mexico, a bus is a "camion."

Interpreters have to get to know the jargon of the drug trade, but they also need to provide literal translations of what they hear — sometimes with odd results.

"It's like walking on eggshells all the time," said interpreter Ruth Morales. "You can't be too literal, but you can't take too many liberties either."

One example is the term "perico," a Spanish word meaning "parakeet" that is widely used to mean cocaine. In such cases, the interpreters are sometimes instructed to use the word "parakeet," even though everyone knows what they actually mean.

"I did one case where all they were talking about was silk shirts. 'Do you want pure silk?' instead of 'Do you want pure cocaine?' and so on," Ms. Morales said.

In addition to working trials, the interpreters also translate into English the transcripts of taped conversations involving undercover agents that will later be used as evidence.

Many tapes involve the use of "body bugs," which can pick up all kinds of extraneous noise in addition to the actual conversation. One case included the sounds of an agent going to the toilet — even flushing.

In one drawn-out drug case, 500 tapes were translated and became known as the "tick-tock" recordings because all the microphones were placed in clocks, giving them an irritating mechanical background noise.

"And after we translated all that stuff and listened to the 'tick, tock, tick, tock,' the case went down the drain because of a legal technicality," Ms. Morales said.

Ms. Ruiz-Toledo said that in one case, most of the attorneys and others in the courtroom all understood Spanish so they chuckled when a man who'd just been sentenced on a conviction for drug smuggling yelled a Cuban expression that translated to "Snores the mangoes!"

But the judge didn't understand the remark, so she had to explain that it approximated "That really takes the cake!"

Black families come back to Bunker Hill

BOSTON (AP) — Black families are quietly returning to Boston's Bunker Hill housing project, a gritty, low-income complex abandoned to whites 10 years ago at the height of racial violence over court-ordered school busing.

Five black families have moved into the brick-and-concrete project in the Charlestown section of the city without incident in the past six weeks, and more are expected in the coming months.

"There's a strong feeling in Boston that people want to get along," Mayor Raymond Flynn said. "People want to see an end to the polarization."

The mayor said planning for the peaceful integration of the complex began before his election last November.

Flynn, a former city councilman from south Boston who opposed busing in the 1970s, said racial harmony is his administration's main goal.

"I've made it clear that there's one set of rules. Racial harassment won't be tolerated, and will be dealt with swiftly," Flynn said. "I don't think we can ever compromise on treating people with respect and dignity."

Lt. Francis Roache, head of the Boston Police Community Disorders Unit and a veteran of the violence 10 years ago, said he is optimistic about integration because Charlestown has changed.

"Back in those days there were KKK symbols, shotguns, arson, people driven from their homes — it was really ugly. But I think things are changing," Roache said.

Ed Sweeney, a 26-year resident of Bunker Hill and chairman of the project's Tenant Task Force for the past 16 years, has fond memories of coaching an integrated Pop Warner football team before the last black family moved out in 1974.

"It all just blew up in our faces," Sweeney said. "Busing was the biggest factor. Black families got out — they figured there was going to be some kind of problem."

Sweeney said busing "left a bad taste in a lot of people's mouths. But as the years passed, that hatred seems to have faded away."

The newly arrived black families declined to be interviewed.

"They don't want to call attention to themselves," said Gwen Cochran of the Boston Housing Authority's civil rights division. "One woman said she was afraid for her children if she was interviewed."

Simmering racial tensions boiled over in 1974 after the city was ordered by a federal judge to correct racial imbalances in Boston schools through busing. The court-ordered busing brought demonstrations and clashes in the streets of predominately white South Boston and other sections of the city, including Charlestown.

Racial violence has not been the housing authority's only headache. Plagued with financial problems during the 1970s, it was ordered into receivership by a federal judge in 1980.

"It was the most distressed and dilapidated housing program in the nation. It was a mess," said Harry Spence, the authority's court-appointed administrator.

"Literally tens of millions of dollars weren't being spent because the BHA couldn't get its act together," said John Washek, Spence's assistant. "We were running slums."

With an operating budget of $64 million and a $100 million capital improvement plan, the authority is upgrading its projects.

Built in 1939, Bunker Hill is one of 52 housing developments for low-income families administered by the city with state and federal funding. Prospective tenants must wait an average of six months for an apartment there.

Several blacks families became eligible for Bunker Hill apartments in March 1983 when their names reached the top of BHA waiting lists, but officials delayed the move for a year to give the project time to prepare, Spence said.

Families pay between $70 and $260 for apartments ranging in size from one to eight bedrooms. The rents are 30 percent of the family's adjusted income regardless of the size of the unit.

Vandalism has taken its toll on Bunker Hill, leaving rows of empty buildings with broken windows. William Knox, the project's manager, said only 800 of the more than 1,100 units at the complex are habitable. Another 120 are scheduled for rehabilitation.

But Knox said police teams, working with the Tenant Task Force, have cut crime.

"Public housing has a stigma of having a lot of crime," Knox said. "The facts just don't bear that out. We're no different than any other urban area. Team police are a luxury that many private developments wish they had."

Ed Sweeney, chairman of the Bunker Hill Tenant Task Force, stands near a building slated for rehabilitation in Boston's Bunker Hill housing project. Black families are returning to the project for the first time since the city's racial crisis over court-ordered school busing.

"Come," he beckoned. "Eat."

With that simple invitation, he led his guests to the most traditional of Bedouin feasts — the mensaf.

The table had but one dish, three feet in diameter and five inches deep, filled with rice and topped with chunks of a lamb boiled that morning by the sheik's wife, Fasl, in a broth thickened with yogurt. Around it was spongy, pancake-like Bedouin bread.

As the guests began eating from the communal bowl, by tradition with the fingertips of the right hand only, the sheik moved from position to position, breaking off the prized pieces of meat from the lamb's head at the center of the dish and distributing the morsels to each of his guests.

The Bedouins of Jordan — who think of themselves as its true natives and who make up about 8 percent of its 2.8 million population — have been sharing mensafs for centuries. They are all but required for weddings, funerals and other special occasions.

The sheik lives surrounded by his tribe, Ahl al Jebal, or "People of the Mountain," in this dust-swept village about 60 miles northeast of Amman, the Jordanian capital, and just south of the Syrian border.

Their modest stone homes encircle the ruins of Umm Jamal, built in the first century B.C. by the Nabataeans, who also carved the famous rose-red city of Petra in southern Jordan. Umm Jamal translates as "Mother of Beauty."

Scholars disagree on the Bedouin's origin, but they are known to have raided the villages of the Ammonites and other tribes who cultivated land as early as the 13th century B.C. in what today is Jordan.

A nomadic people, they moved their herds of camels — and later sheep and goats — across the desert lands of Syria, Jordan, Iraq and Saudi Arabia in search of grazing and watering sites.

Fierce and loyal warriors, the Bedouins were the core fighters of the British-backed Arab revolt, starting in 1916, against Turkish domination and immortalized in the writings about and by T.E. Lawrence, better known in the West as Lawrence of Arabia.

They still serve in the desert patrol, known affectionately here as the Camel Corps, which has changed its mission from stopping tribal wars to looking after travelers in the desert. And they form Jordan's royal palace guard.

While a few Bedouins continue to migrate with their herds, most have settled into villages in Jordan and Syria.

Sheik Sirror, the leader of one of the 18 major tribes in Jordan and a member of the Jordanian Parliament, says he is not unhappy that his people have settled down.

"Every century has its benefits and gains," he said. "Before there was the nomadic life which kept the man free...When civilization came and governments became effective and laws were enforced, we had to change to benefit."

His Ahl al Jebal tribe, with some government help, has dug wells to help irrigate vegetable and melon crops and to water goats and sheep. The people also have built rain catchments, one of which is a 20th century restoration of the basin that once served this now-ruined ancient city.

Sheik Sirror's personal history parallels that of many of his tribe, some 50,000 of whom are in Jordan and 15,000 in Syria.

He was born in the desert in either northern Jordan or southern Syria "not less than 60 years ago."

World Wildlife Fund not just monkeying around

NEW YORK (AP) — Souvenir T-shirts and posters of the kind used to promote rock 'n' roll stars are turning up in the remote cloud forests of Peru as part of a campaign to save the yellow-tailed woolly monkey from extinction.

The unusual public relations campaign, to be launched officially in Lima in May, is an effort by the World Wildlife Fund-U.S. to make the monkey a symbol for conservation in Peru, as the giant panda has become for China.

The unwitting object of this attention is the largest and most endangered primate in Peru, an animal that stands 3 feet tall, weighs 25 pounds and was thought for almost five decades to be extinct. It is found in the so-called cloud forests, the mountainous, mist-shrouded forests of north-central Peru.

The monkey was rediscovered in 1974 by Russell Mittermeier, director of the primate program of the U.S. branch of the World Wildlife Fund. Mittermeier is also responsible for the campaign to elevate the monkey to stardom in Peru.

Before Mittermeier found the monkey, it was known only by five skins in museums, the last of them collected in 1926. Mittermeier estimates the population is now "in the low thousands."

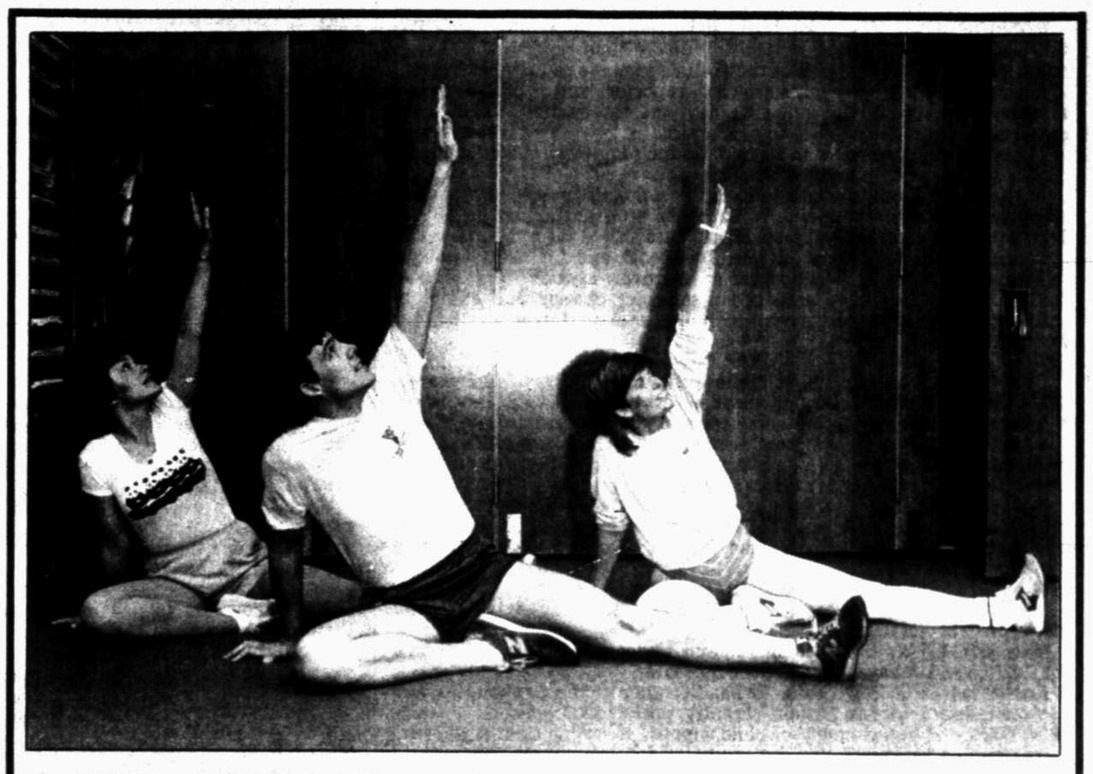

Because the monkey (scientific name, Lagothrix flavicauda) is found only in Peru, Mittermeier chose it as the symbol of Peruvian conservation efforts.

The object of those efforts is not only to save the monkey from extinction, but also to preserve its habitat.

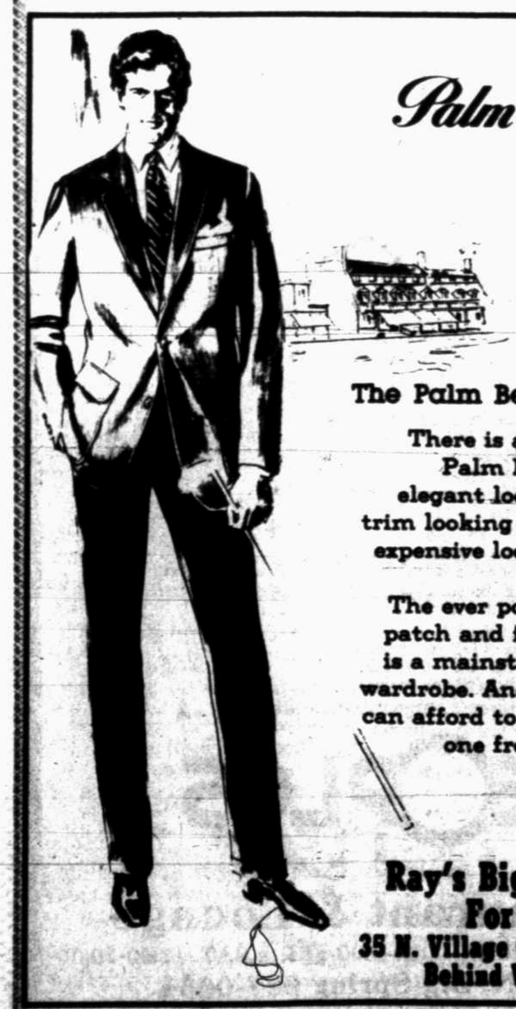

"Conservation of this habitat is not only a nice thing for the conservation people, it's also critical to the survival of the people working in the lowlands," said Mittermeier.

"You cut down those cloud forests, there goes the watershed, there goes their source of water."

University of Pennsylvania gives Soviet dissident honorary degree

Sakharov

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, winner of the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize, is being awarded an honorary degree from the University of Pennsylvania for being "a symbol of free inquiry in a land where free inquiry is not respected."

Sakharov has also been invited to deliver Penn's baccalaureate address May 20, but there is virtually no chance the physicist and peace advocate will be allowed to attend since he is confined to the city of Gorky.

Sakharov, 63, known as "the father of the Soviet H-bomb," was banished to Gorky in 1980. The Soviets say he is mentally ill, but university President Sheldon Hackney, in announcing the honor on Friday, praised Sakharov as still contributing "thoughts to the understanding of particle physics and cosmology and to the cause of world peace."

LONDON (AP) — World and Olympic ice dance champions Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean skated skillfully around reporters' questions about possible wedding plans as they returned home to Britain.

Forcing their way through a crowd of reporters and photographers at London's Heathrow Airport on Friday, the international stars were asked repeatedly if they were to be married.

"That's for the future," said Dean. "We don't know what will happen."

"Not at the moment," added Miss Torvill.

Earlier this month, the couple tried to scotch all rumors of a possible engagement while vacationing in Barbados after their gold medal performance at the world championships in Ottawa.

Looking tanned and relaxed, Miss Torvill, 26, and Dean, 25, needed a police escort to get to a waiting car at Heathrow as they were besieged by the press. They have arranged a series of charity and exhibition shows over the next two weeks, including two performances in their home city of Nottingham.

DETROIT (AP) — Pop singer Jimmie Ruffin told officials he completely forgot that he was carrying a loaded revolver in a bag at the airport, but his faulty memory got him arrested and jailed overnight.

Ruffin, 47, was released from the Wayne County Jail when county prosecutors declined to issue a warrant after questioning him, said Charles Marr, a prosecutor's office spokesman.

He was arrested at a security checkpoint at Detroit Metropolitan Airport on Wednesday as he was about to board an American Airlines flight, said Lou Sugo, spokesman for the Wayne County Road Commission, which runs the airport.

"He was at the X-ray gate when his shoulder bag was found to contain a loaded revolver," Sugo said. "He said he had completely forgotten about the weapon being in the bag."

Marr said Friday the incident remains under review by the prosecutor's office and charges could be brought later.

Ruffin, whose Motown song "What Becomes of the Broken-Hearted" has made him a star in Britain recently, posted $500 bond on an unrelated charge of non-payment of child support, a Wayne County Sheriff's Department official said.

DETROIT (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan told a group of autoworkers participating in a rehabilitation program that every family, including her own, is touched by alcoholism in some way.

"My husband's father was an alcoholic," Mrs. Reagan told workers at General Motors Corp.'s bus and truck plant in Pontiac on Friday.

"Many times he would have to go down to the bar and bring him home, or find him down in front of the house on the ground and get him into the house," she said.

Mrs. Reagan was in Michigan to accept the National Council on Alcoholism's 1984 Humanitarian Award.

The workers described to her their addictions and the way their lives changed because of Crossroads, an employee assistance program operated jointly by GM and the United Auto Workers union.

"It was fascinating to hear them say the same words to me and expressing the same feelings as the young ones would express," Mrs. Reagan said later. "You couldn't help but think if we could please get them when they're young and tell them what lies ahead...they could avoid so much tragedy in their lives."

Firms help pay for political conventions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bank of America gave the Democrats $100,000. Banks in Dallas gave the Republicans $300,000.

It's all perfectly legal, despite the federal law barring corporations from giving money directly to national political parties or directly to presidential candidates.

Once every four years, a loophole opens in federal law allowing millions of dollars from corporations to flow to the Democratic and Republican parties to help pay for national conventions.

"The business community and the entire Bay Area community has been very supportive," said Nancy Pelosi, the Democratic Party activist who is head of the San Francisco Host Committee. "We were able to get such strong corporate support because the benefits to the San Francisco Bay Area are so considerable — over $60 million spent directly."

"The convention will be good economically for Dallas for years to come," added William Cooper, head of the Dallas Convention Fund, which is raising the money for the GOP event.

This year, corporations are the main source for the $1.5 million in private funds needed for the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco in July. The Bank of America, Crocker National Bank, Bechtel Corp., Chevron USA and Diamond Shamrock head the list of big contributors, chipping in $75,000 to $100,000 each for the Democratic meeting.

Businesses are also picking up most of the $3.9 million tab for the extra costs of the Republicans' meeting in Dallas in August, when Ronald Reagan will be renominated.

While the Dallas fund would not provide a contributors' list, Cooper did say the Dallas hotel association had chipped in $300,000 and the city's banking association another $300,000.

This is all well within the law, but corporations' helping to pay for political conventions has generated problems in the past.

For example, one of the sidelight scandals to the Watergate affair came when it was revealed that International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. had pledged $400,000 to the 1972 Republican convention scheduled in San Diego just before the Nixon administration dropped an antitrust action against the giant conglomerate. The GOP moved its convention to Miami Beach, without the ITT contribution.

The federal government pays most of the cost of the conventions. It has handed out $6,060,000 already to both.

But that doesn't cover all the costs.

There are changes needed in most convention halls to accommodate the thousands of delegates, press and spectators. There are overtime costs for police. Someone must pay for the buses to haul delegates from hotels to convention centers and back. And local committees also spend money on the care and feeding of the mob of reporters, editors and technicians who cover each of the events.

Sometimes the local city government picks up the costs. In San Francisco, for example, the city is paying $4.5 million to fix up Moscone Center for the convention.

But in Dallas, the city is paying nothing, with all the extra costs funded by the private convention fund.

In each case, the money goes to the local committee.

"We're not raising money for the Republicans, we're raising money for the city of Dallas," Cooper said.

But in each city, the parties have a large say in how the money is spent through the convention contracts with each city.

For most — but not all — of the contributors, there is no direct obvious business benefit from the contributions. The Bank of America and Bechtel Corp. get nothing directly from the convention, although it does benefit the entire area.

"Most of the people who have given money have zero direct benefit," Ms. Pelsoi said.

But the Dallas hotels obviously have much to gain from a convention, where more than 20,000 rooms are needed for all those attending.

Runaway money causes 'total chaos' on freeway

CHICAGO (AP) — "Total chaos" erupted on the Stevenson Expressway when the rear door of a Brink's Inc. armored truck popped open and two bags containing an estimated $167,000 spilled out.

"People were grabbing money everywhere," officer Terry Gibbons said of Friday's incident. "It was flying all over the place."

Officer Albert Krajese said about 50 or 60 motorists "just slammed on their brakes right in the middle of the expressway" and began scooping up $1, $10 and $20 bills.

"There was scuffling and pushing like kids in an ice cream parlor," he said. "The guards were tussling with people shouting, 'It's not your money, it's Brink's money.'"

It took police about 30 minutes to get traffic moving again.

Hugh Flaherty, a spokesman at Brink's headquarters in Darien, Conn., said the truck was on its way to the Federal Reserve Bank.

IRS won't take this kind of dough for taxes

STAUNTON, Va. (AP) — When the Internal Revenue Service says it wants your dough, don't bring bread.

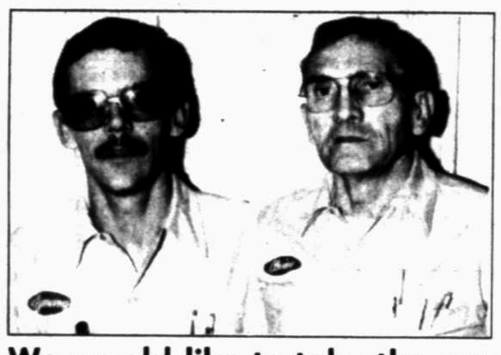

Milo and Viola Stahl's offer of food instead of money to pay their federal income taxes was politely refused at an IRS center Friday.

The Stahls told IRS employee June Pence they wanted to donate bread and a pickup truck full of food purchased by members of the Christian for Peace to the Blue Ridge Area Food Bank.

"We are here today to offer an alternative to paying taxes used for military purposes," protest organizer Wendell Ressler said.

Ressler said the group — most of whom are members of the pacifist Mennonite Church — withheld about 45 percent of their federal tax bills, the amount they calculated would go to the Pentagon. They spent some of it on food and donated the rest to anti-war causes.

The IRS in recent years has collected back taxes from the protesters' bank accounts, Ressler said.

Woman has second baby on Friday 13th

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Proving that lightning can strike twice, even on a supposedly unlucky day, a Grand Rapids woman has given birth to her second child born on Friday the 13th.

"The odds against this must be astronomical," Steven VanNoord said Friday shortly after his wife Nancy gave birth to his daughter, Jill, at Butterworth Hospital.

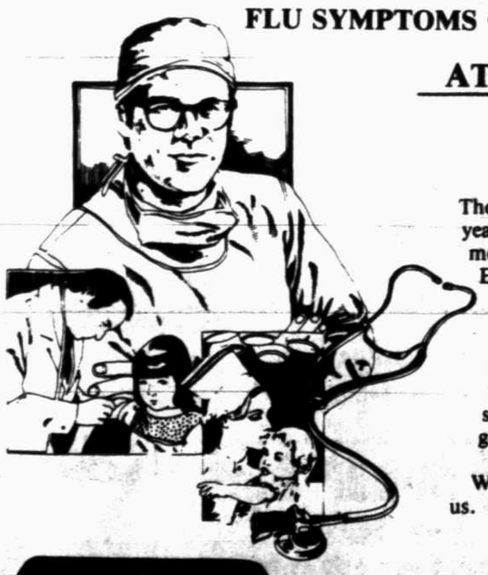

The seven-pound, 14-ounce girl shares the fateful birthdate with her brother Mathew, who was born Friday, Nov. 13, 1981.

Although Jill was due April 3, Mrs. VanNoord said she began thinking about a week ago that the baby's birthdate might match her son's.

"We started joking about it, saying it's going to be Friday. That's our day," she said.

Friday was significant for the family in other ways, too. Steven VanNoord's parents, Bessie and Clarence VanNoord, celebrated their wedding anniversary that day, and Jill is their 13th grandchild.

Summertime things

As the hot days of summer approach, many Midlanders are getting ready for a season of sunbathing. But, local doctors warn that too much sun can cause skin cancer.

Skin cancer can strike anyone

As the days grow warmer and the grass turns green, another urge blooms inside many Midlanders. Eyes continually glance at the apartment pool to see if the first has arrived. And when some brave soul finally stretches out on a beach towel, out come the others with suntan oil, sunglasses and radios.

Basking is a summertime ritual.

"But the damage is chronic," said Midland dermatologist Dr. Louis Barkley. "You may bake your skin all summer long and be fine. Nonetheless, you are getting damage and it accumulates over the years."

Many who worship the sun are more concerned about peeling or getting wrinkles, if anything. But according to physicians, skin cancer can strike almost anyone who has had extensive exposure to the sun — even those who are only in it during the summer.

An estimated 400,000 cases of skin cancer are seen in the United States per year, according to 1984 Cancer Facts and Figures, a publication distributed by the American Cancer Society. Of that number, about 7,400 deaths occur with 5,500 of those attributed to the rarest and most destructive type of skin cancer.

The two most common types which account for 90 percent of all skin cancer are basal cell carcinoma and squamous cell carcinoma.

They, like the three cancers the ACS Midland unit is focusing on during the residential education and fundraiser drive, can be easily prevented.

"The basal cell carcinoma usually don't metastasize (spread)," according to Barkley. "They do, however, become larger and deeper. Squamous cell carcinoma, if neglected, can metastasize into the lymph glands."

Seen usually on the face, nose, ears, "V" of the neck and the back of the arms above the elbow, these two types of cancer have a high treatment success rate. Methods for treating skin cancer include surgery, radiation or tissue destruction by freezing or burning. Most involve "a very simple biopsy," said Barkley. "It's quick, easy and relatively painless."

The biopsy involves cutting or shaving a small piece of the tissue suspected of being cancerous and examining it. Often, the biopsy removes what small amount of cancer there was.

In Barkley's office, the flow of patients who suspect skin cancer is continuous, which he attributes to the Sun Belt, where people are in the sun at all times of the year, and to the human nature of procrastination.

A change in one's skin might be noticed in the fall, "but it might be February before they finally come in."

"I do see skin cancer all year round," he said Wednesday. "This morning, for example, I did five or so. Yesterday I biopsied six or eight that'll probably come back cancerous. Ten to 15 is the average pretty much year round."

The rarest and most destructive type, malignant melanoma, "is a totally different animal," said Barkley. "Fortunately, we don't see nearly as many, maybe one every couple of months. The prognosis depends on how deeply invasive the tumor is when it is discovered. I have had a couple of patients who have died from it."

Basal and squamous cell skin cancers usually appear as a pale, waxlike, pearly nodule or a red, scaly, sharply outlined patch, according to ACS literature. Melanomas are usually distinguished by a dark brown or black pigmentation, often starting out as small, mole-like growths that increase in size, change color, become ulcerated and bleed easily from a slight injury.

"But they can look different," Barkley said. "You should watch for a new spot or a spot that's changing. You might be going along for years and look down and see a little spot and the damn thing keeps getting bigger and bigger. You better get it checked."

The cancer society urges people to avoid the sun from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., when the ultraviolet rays are the strongest. Using sunscreens containing PABA (para-aminobenzoic acid) when the sun is unavoidable also is recommended.

"Sense in the Sun," an ACS publication, warns summer sun lovers of some misconceptions. For example, an umbrella only partially deflects ultraviolet rays and can't do anything about those bouncing off the sand, water or patio floor.

Cloudy days offer little protection with 70 to 80 percent of the ultraviolet rays' burning power penetrating through. Those rays also can reach three feet below water.

"You don't have to be hot to be burning," Sense in the Sun says. Backpackers and skiers should know that there is less atmosphere on mountaintops to filter out ultraviolet rays. Also, snow can reflect up to 85 percent of the rays.

It's better to be bicycling or playing golf than reclining on the beach or beside a pool. A moving target is harder for the rays to hit. Avoid sun reflectors because they expose the most delicate facial areas, such as under the chin, eyelids and earlobes.

"You should always protect yourself with clothing and sunscreen and the sooner you start the better," Barkley said. "Every ray counts, every ray that you got when you were two years old still counts."

Police do all they can to find missing persons

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Police are often criticized for a seeming indifference when it comes to missing persons. But Midland police say the criticism isn't valid in their case.

"Some departments in larger cities have so many offenses to deal with that maybe they don't have the time to track down adults where no foul play is evident," said Det. Capt. Billy Ray.

"But Midland is still small enough that we can devote some time to helping relatives locate their loved ones. I don't think we've ever turned anybody down. We'll do everything we can to help them."

Most people feel foul play must be involved when a loved one disappears. But the vast majority are either located or return home voluntarily.

Ray recalled one case where a man reported his wife missing. She turned up aboard a bus enroute to Fort Campbell, Ky. Since she was an adult and had left of her own volition, there was nothing police could do but tell the husband that his wife was alright.

Then there was the employer who feared something had happened to one of his most dependable employees when the man failed to show up for work. He was found safe and sound in his home.

"He just wouldn't come to the door or answer the phone," Ray recalled. "He said he just needed to be alone and think."

But there are exceptions. Kristy Lynne Booth and Monroe Jackson Helms are two of them.

Ms. Booth — 19 at the time of her disappearance from a local bar on Feb. 2, 1980 — is still missing and presumed dead, although police continue to pursue diminishing leads in the case.

Helms, 54, was reported missing Feb. 5. His car and some personal belongings were later discovered in a rest area near San Angelo. But he has a history of leaving home and police are not quite ready to believe the worst.

No statistics are available on the number of persons reported missing annually in Midland. "But of the 12 we did follow-up work on in 1983, all 12 were located," said Ray. "Of the four this year, we located three.

"We'll do immediate follow-up and assign a detective if the circumstances justify it — if it looks like foul play is involved. There's no set waiting period."

Even in cases where no suspicious circumstances are apparent and an adult is involved, Ray said patrol officers are instructed to be on the lookout for the person.

If the party is located but doesn't want his or her relatives to know where they are, their wishes are honored — though police will contact the relatives to let them know the person is alive and well.

A good portion of those who leave home are runaway children who are having problems at home or at school.

"One of the most horrifying things in the world is having a child gone and not knowing where he or she is," said Ray. "Usually we'll either locate them or they'll come home by themselves in a few hours.

"Even if they've come home on their own, we normally follow up with counseling to try and prevent future occurrences."

Noting that there's a difference between a missing person and a runaway child, Lt. Ron Aaron, head of the police department's juvenile division, says the procedures for locating a child are much the same as those employed in finding an adult.

"If there have been no problems and there's no known reason for them to leave home, we suspect foul play and immediately list them as missing in the computer," Aaron noted.

"Then we'll check with neighbors, teachers and close friends to see if there were problems the parents weren't aware of. Cops get moving pretty quick on a young child.

"A large number of kids under 10 generally show up at a friend's house within a few hours. Teenagers are harder to locate. They usually have friends with apartments or transportation of their own. They have a better opportunity to stay hidden longer."

In the case of missing adults, the following steps are among those undertaken in trying to locate them:

— The person's name and description are entered in the national police computer, along with a description of the vehicle they may be driving.

— Credit card companies are contacted to see if the person is leaving a "paper trail" in his or her wake.

— Utility companies are checked to determine if the person has established service.

— Post offices are checked for forwarding addresses.

— The person's habits are noted to see where they're likely to gravitate.

— And if they've disappeared before, a check is made of the last place they were located.

As hard as it is to find people sometimes, however, police say it's even harder to calm distraught friends or loved ones whose worst fears — like their worst dreams — aren't likely to materilize.

Volunteers try to raise funds for ACS

From Staff Reports

When 600 volunteers of the American Cancer Society Midland Unit begin knocking on doors today through Thursday, they will be trying to raise $35,000 through the annual residential crusade.

District 2 of the ACS Texas Division, an 11-county area which includes Midland, has a goal of raising $265,000. The Midland Unit's share of that is $192,000.

Besides the annual residential campaign, funds are raised through memorials and foundation gifts; special gifts, in which large contributions are solicited; and special events, which include the Second Annual Jimmy Allison Memorial Golf Tournament June 12, and Round Up '84 April 28. Also, a partnership with the United Way for the business and industry sector provides the ACS Midland Unit with $75,000 per year. In return, ACS volunteers sponsor cancer education programs such as risk assessment quizzes, breast self-examination instruction and helping smokers quit programs.

This week, volunteers will be distributing information on lung and colorectal cancer. "A Quick Test on Cancer Risks for Lung, Colon and Rectum" includes questions that measure a person's built-in risks, such as personal and family medical history, age and lifestyle. It also includes a section that explains the significance of the answers and describes measures to take to guard against these cancers.

Risks for lung cancer increase with a person's history of heavy cigarette smoking or exposure to certain industrial materials such as asbestos, according to the ACS. Lung cancer is difficult to detect and only 9 percent of all lung cancer patients live five years or more after diagnosis. Only 39 percent of lung cancer patients who receive early diagnosis and treatment live five years or more.

"The best protection against this killer is for people to stop smoking or never start at all," said Jim Chase, ACS Midland Unit President. "But with colorectal cancer, early detection is the key. Seventy-five percent of patients facing this second leading form of cancer can be cured if this disease is found at an early age."

"We're trying to encourage people to be informed and to communicate with their physicians," said Mike Sanford, ACS District 2 Executive Director. "We're focusing on these two types of cancer because they are two of the most common and we believe they can be successfully treated if people know about prevention and can detect it and have it treated early enough."

While the first goal of the residential crusade is education, the second is raising funds to provide more.

According to David Kalish, Chairman of the 1984 Crusade, the following represents the breakdown of how each dollar raised last year is being spent this fiscal year (Sept.1, 1983-Aug. 31, 1984): cancer research, 28 cents; professional education, 12 cents; public education, 27 cents; service and rehabilitation, 24 cents; program development and administrative costs, 6 cents; and the crusade, 11 cents.

The 108 percent expenditure reflects increased research allocation to Texas by the national society, Kalish said. "The ACS is currently sponsoring research investigations in nine major Texas hospitals, medical schools

Programs put crook in area criminal activity

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

"We hope we drive (criminals) right off the face of the earth," said Odessa Police Sgt. Milton Tharp.

"If we can get the criminal element out of West Texas — that is our goal," said Sgt. David Cobos of the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

This exemplifies the attitude of the Midland County and Odessa Crime Stoppers programs, both of which have been successful in putting a crook in Petroplex criminal activity during their first year in existence.

The Midland County Sheriff's program, under Cobos' direction, has nabbed 11 suspects since opening its new phone line — 694-TIPS — Jan. 27. Since this change from the Silent Witness approach used with limited success for several years:

— Seven cases have been cleared.

— Three rewards totaling $350 have been doled out.

— $350 in stolen merchandise has been recovered.

— $4,235 in narcotics have been taken off the streets.

In March, only its second full month, information gained through Midland Crime Stoppers led to:

— Four of the seven offenses were cleared.

— Two of the three rewards for $250 of the $350 were paid out.

— $1,085 of the $4,235 in narcotics was confiscated.

Odessa's program is the older brother, having been in action since June 21, 1983. The success rate of the program coordinated by Tharp reflects its advanced stage of development.

GARY OTT

Baseball has 'something extra' no other sport has

It was a great plan. It really was.

Friday night had arrived and I was on my way to a Midland Cub baseball game. Visions of perfectly-turned double-plays and line drives to the alley in left-center were dancing in my head.

It was going to be a throwback to those earlier, care-free days when nothing mattered but Mickey Mantle's next at-bat. If he stroked a clean single to drive in the game-winning run, I was happy. If he struck out (which the record shows he had a certain affinity for doing), I was miserable. There was no in-between. Mickey Mantle was my hero and in these eyes he could do no wrong.

It was that childhood magic I was hoping to re-capture at Cubs Stadium Friday evening. The national pastime beckoned and I was ready to answer the call.

I made elaborate preparations, including skipping out of the office early to catch the late innings of the Chicago-New York televised game from historic Wrigley Field. I even proposed a toast to that venerable announcer, Harry Carey, as he broke into "Take Me Out To The Ballgame" during the seventh-inning stretch. If I had had a box of Cracker Jacks I would have enhaled them, as well. A certain electricity filled the air. Baseball fever had arrived. I was happy.

Likewise, I made it a point to dress properly, sporting only a well-worn pair of jeans, T-shirt and my favorite sneakers. After all, this was a ballgame, not the Metropolitan Opera. I wanted to look the part.

And I wanted to soak up the ballpark atmosphere, too. For that reason, there would be no reserved seats purchased here. No indeed. general admission would do nicely, thank you. I wanted to drink my two-for-one beer and heap verbal abuse on the umpires along with the other rowdies in the cheap seats.

Ah, Friday night at the ballpark. Nothing could be finer, or more American. It is an institution and one this country should make every effort to maintain.

Other sporting events may have their good points, but they can't measure up to baseball's tradition.

The Super Bowl is a publicity man's delight.

Still, baseball has something extra, that intangible quality often difficult to put into words. Perhaps "charm" comes as close as any but I'm not sure that's quite right either.

Anyway, the point is, other sports may have more raw excitement or network hype than baseball but they all pale when compared to the thrill of having Reggie Jackson face a 3-2 count in the bottom of the ninth with the game on the line. That is what the challenge of sports is all about. Indeed, I remember the time in Detroit when Norm Cash smashed a shot into deep right ...

Whoa, I'm rambling again. I must focus on my message, which is a relaxing night at Cub Stadium. Or, at least it was supposed to be.

Unfortunately, the unforeseen took over.

First, 95-mph winds rolled in from right field during the second inning, then some clumsy oaf kicked over my beer, followed by a fat lady who stepped on my toes getting to her seat and, making matters worse, Mickey Mantle never made an appearance.

Somehow, even baseball loses its magic when you grow up. And that's too bad.

Midlander, her computer do varied tasks for oil companies

Patt Sayers

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

There was a time when people used to wonder about the future and what it might bring, but now they can just pick up a copy of "Megatrends" or some other such futurist primer, and read all about it.

But for most people, reading about the future is like talking about the weather — the subject is fascinating, but nobody really does anything about it.

In this and many other things, Patt Sayers is an exception. One day about a year ago she put down her copy of Alvin Toffler's "The Third Wave" and decided to get into computers. What made her decision unusual was that Ms. Sayers was 53, with a 30-year career in the oil business already behind her.

"I'm at an age when a lot of people are thinking about retirement, and I'm just getting started," she says.

The field she's in is also just getting started, which is where the future comes in. Ms. Sayers uses her Apple 2E to perform joint venture billings and audits of oil and gas runs for independent oil companies. She also does bookkeeping and even word processing — anything, basically, that her computer can do and that a client needs to have done.

This kind of "have computer — will travel" service is so new to the industry that "I've really had to spend a lot of time figuring out where I'd be most useful," says Ms. Sayers. "But as more offices become computerized, there will be more things I can do."

Ms. Sayers is part of a growing phenomenon — people who work at home with computers. There are now 10,000 of these "telecommuters," according to InfoWorld Magazine, and some futurists are predicting that by 1990 there will be 10 million people working mostly at home, whether they are freelancers like Ms. Sayers or employees whose computers are electronically linked to the office computer.

In Midland, of course, this revolution will primarily affect the oil business, which Ms. Sayers has been involved with all her life. She was born in a shotgun shack in an oilfield near Seminole, Okla., during the 1929 oil boom.

"My momma died when I was about 3, and Daddy just tucked me under his arm and away we went," she says. "Daddy used to work the graveyard shift, and he'd put me to to sleep in the oilfield doghouse."

Ms. Sayers attended 36 schools in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, New Mexico and Illinois while she was growing up.

"It was tough, because these were small towns, and they weren't open to change," she says. "Then the oil business would come in suddenly, with new people crowding the schools...I think that's where the phrase 'oilfield trash' came from. We kept to ourselves.

"But I found it wonderful and fascinating to see new places and new things. I met a lot of people. The oilpatch is kind of like a little club — there are people you know all over."

Midlander in Profile

Thanks to her father's World War II service, the 36th and last secondary school Ms. Sayers attended was in Hawaii. But her separation from the oilpatch didn't last long — she returned to Oklahoma for college, but soon dropped out to get married.

"The less said about that, the better," she says.

When it ended, she was left with two small children to raise, so she began work in the first of what turned out to be a long succession of independent oil company offices.

"No matter how hard I try to get away from it, seems I always gravitate back to the independent oil business," she says with a laugh. "There's a constant excitement. You find the land, lease it, put together the deal, find investors and then drill, and it's either dry or it isn't. Then you go on to something else."

Which is exactly what Ms. Sayers is doing now, after working in various Midland oil company offices on and off since the late '50s.

"I'd been thinking about it for awhile, and then I read 'The Third Wave.' First I felt very intimidated (by computers), then I got curious. Nobody (at the computer stores) had time to explain them to me, so I just bought one and settled down to learn how to use it. For three months I had a terrible time — I sat at home and screamed and threw things."

But she eventually got the hang of it and began looking for work, which led to another problem — the lack of communication between people like her and the companies which could use their services. One possible solution is the club Ms. Sayers is trying to form for independent home business computer users.

"Having a group would let us exchange ideas and experiences" and make it easier for prospective clients to find them, she says.

Despite the problems, Ms. Sayers says she is delighted with her new career.

"I've reached the age where I like to have some freedom," she says. "I like to work at nights, I like to be at home instead of in an office, and I like to have afternoons free to spend with my grandson."

She has four grandchildren, but three live in Denver with her son, who works for an oil company there. Her daughter's husband works for a Midland independent. Her father, retired from the oil fields, lives in Hobbs, N.M. The oil business has sustained three generations of Sayers, with a fourth on the way.

Besides her grandson, Ms. Sayers devotes a lot of time to making dolls and working on a book about turquoise. But the success of her new career forces her to spend much of her time at the computer terminal, which is just fine with her.

"I'm just trying to keep up with the future," she says.

General would give eyeteeth to be astronaut

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Air Force Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson is leaving the space program to become head of the nation's "Star Wars" defense effort, but if "Gen. Abe" had his choice he'd rather be an astronaut.

Except for an accident of timing, Abrahamson would be a member of the astronaut corps, flying the space shuttle, instead of directing the U.S. space program from behind a desk.

Abrahamson was a member of the Air Force astronaut corps during the Manned Orbiting Laboratory program. When President Nixon canceled that program on June 10, 1969, NASA hired all of the MOL astronauts who were under age of 35.

Abrahamson missed the cutoff date by 29 days.

NASA would make no exception. He had to watch as his fellow MOL pilots — such as Robert Crippen and Richard Truly — went on to fly the space shuttle.

Time to treat garden to kill nemotodes

Soil temperatures have been above 50 degrees Fahrenheit for more than a week. Now is the time to treat with Vapam to kill garden nematodes. Spring treatment is a good investment even if it makes your garden later than you would like. Most years anything planted before mid-April will get killed by frost if not protected anyway. Spring treatment will kill most of the weed seeds and reduce your weeding problem for the entire season.

Gardeners who fumigate with Vapam should use (VFN), Verticillium, Fusarium and Nematode resistant varieties for additional control. Resistant varieties are the best means of nematode control for organic gardeners. Big Set, Bonus, Better Boy and Small Fry are VFN varieties commonly available in far West Texas garden centers. Big Set is a large fruited determinant variety. A determinant variety is one that grows three to four feet tall, then terminates in a flower cluster. These varieties produce large quantities of tomatoes in a short period of time. Big Set is one of the earliest of the VFN varieties. Bonus is a few days later than Big Set and is also a determinant variety. Better Boy and Small Fry are indeterminant varieties. Indeterminant varieties continue to grow, set flowers and produce fruit until killed by fall frosts. Their first fruit is usually produced a little later than the determinant varieties, but they allow you to have fruit well into the fall. Better Boy is a large fruited variety and Small Fry produces small tomatoes. These varietites are not immune to nematodes. You will find some nematode galls on their roots, but nematodes will not infect VFN varietis as readily as nonresistant tomato varieties.

Crime Stoppers programs put crook in criminal activity

— 66 arrests having been made clearing up 79 offenses (17 arrests and 23 cases cleared in the last three months).

— $7,600 in reward money has been paid to 21 different tipsters (Four receiving a total $1,100 in March).

— $41,854 in stolen property has been found ($33,636 from January through March).

— $31,227 in narcotics has been confiscated ($22,220 in the past three months).

— Four stolen vehicles have been recovered (Two during March).

Tharp's Odessa unit has 450 files of Crime Stoppers information and has received 3,186 calls at the special number — 333-TIPS — many from the 282 who have provided information during its eight-plus months of operation.

The standardized last four digits are no mistake. The nationwide fad includes cities in all parts of the nation using 8-4-7-7 as the last four digits on their Crime Stoppers lines.

Completing the Permian Basin network are units in Big Springs, Monahans, Crane, Colorado City and Andrews — with Martin County (Stanton) in the process of forming its unit. These local units can be called by out-of-towners with information simply by dialing the local exchange, then T-I-P-S.

Crime Stoppers' rewards tipsters with money donated to the cause by private citizens. This monetary enticement, along with the guarantee that the informant's name will not be recorded, encourages participation, said Cobos.

In fact, Crime Stoppers officers are not interested in an informant's name. "We don't know who they are, we don't want to know their names," he said.

Crime Stoppers, along with Neighborhood Watch programs, encourages residents to take an active part in enforcing laws in their communities. Crime prevention units are now part of many police departments, with officers in the unit charged with promotion of these programs.

"In the last few years, we've seen the benefit of it, so we've tried to emphasize the prevention," said Cobos. "It's a process of education."

"Most crimes are not planned, they happen because of opportunity," he said, "We try to eliminate the criminal opportunity."

and universities totaling over $3.8 million. Because Texas has so many research institutions, the national society allocates additional funds here."

During the last fiscal year, the Midland Unit raised $142,316. But the dollar value of the services provided, or what it would be worth if people were paying for them, totaled $181,667, Sanford said.

Public education provided by ACS volunteers reached 28,630 Midlanders last fiscal year. Service and rehabilitation to cancer patients provided information/guidance referrals, rehabilitation, gift and comfort items, equipment loans and dressings for 358 cancer patients at no charge.

And the annual residential crusade last year provided the distribution of life-saving information about cancer in a community-wide effort while raising the funds to support the research, education and service programs.

DEATHS

Jackie Thompson

HOUSTON — Jackie Lee Thompson, 56, died Monday. He was the son of Freda Sullinger Thompson of Midland.

Services were held Thursday in Houston, and he was buried in Coleman.

Thompson, a former Midland resident, was born on Nov. 11, 1927, in Breckenridge. He was a graduate of the University of Texas, and had worked for Exxon for over 30 years.

Other survivors include his wife Patricia; two sons, Mark Thompson and William Thompson, and a daughter, Mary Helen Thompson, all of Houston; and an aunt, Helen Sullinger Humphries of Belmead.

Eva Gray Barton

Services for Mrs. Eva Gray Barton, 86, of Midland are set for 1:30 p.m. Monday in the First Baptist Church Chapel. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of the Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Barton died Saturday morning in a local retirement center.

She was born Aug. 24, 1897, at Montpelia, Miss. She married the late C.A. Barton in Dallas and lived in Breckenridge, Columbus and Midland. She was a member of the First Baptist Church.

Survivors include two daughters, Mrs. Mal (Eva) Kidwell and Mrs. Booker (Betty) McDearmon, both of Midland; five grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

John Doggett

Services are scheduled for 9:30 a.m. Monday in the Ellis Chapel, with burial to follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of the Ellis Funeral Home.

Doggett was born Aug. 15, 1938 in Blackwell. He married Peggy Jean Boone in 1959, and they moved to Midland in 1963. Doggett worked for Mustang Mud for the past 20 years.

Survivors include his wife, Peggy; a son, Rodney S. Doggett; and two daughters, Fatima Jean Kepple and Pamela Renee Doggett, all of Midland; three brothers, Clarence Doggett of Quanah, Wayland Doggett of Grapevine and Bobby Doggett of San Angelo; three sisters, Pearl McFaul, Dorothy Thomas Snyder and Alice Baker, all of Wichita, Kan.; and three grandchildren.

Pallbearers will be Jimmy Casbeer, Ricky Baze, Stan Venable, Gene Slough, Willie Miles, Joe Ontiveros and Charlie Bloodworth. Honorary pallbearers will be Bob Duke, A.J. Cain, Tom Owens, Dick Therhanger, Leroy Bell and Charlie Hall.

The family requests memorials to be sent to the Hospice of Midland.

Eldabel Perry

Eldabel Peery, 76, died Friday in Midland.

Graveside services are scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Monday in Fairview Cemetery, under the direction of the Gilbreath Funeral Home of Stanton.

Mrs. Peery was born Oct. 7, 1907, in Lone Pine, Okla. She moved to Midland in 1972, and was a member of the Kelview Heights Baptist Church.

Survivors include two sons, Eldon March and Floyd March of Midland; a daughter, June Chartier of San Pedro, Calif.; a sister, Lydia Shaffer of Clinton, Okla.; and nine grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

J.O. Allen

Services for J.O. "Ode" Allen, 79, of Midland, are set for 11 a.m. Monday in the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Allen died Friday afternoon in a local nursing home after a lengthy illness.

He was born Jan. 16, 1905, in Cullman, Ala. He lived in DeLeon, Comanche, Rotan and Sweetwater before moving to Midland in 1955. His wife, Gladys, died in 1975. He was a member of the Baptist Church.

Survivors include two daughters, Mrs. Marvin (Carole) Rasco of Midland and Mrs. Hershel (Pat) Hinshaw of Snyder; four grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Please answer the following questions regarding Medicaid:

Who is eligible for Medicaid in the state of Texas?

What is the maximum monthly income a person can draw and still be eligible?

What is the maximum amount of assets (property and savings) a person may have and still be eligible?

What is the time frame for transferring assets to insure eligibility?

What are the criteria for nursing home care under Medicaid?

Thank you for your help. — An Interested Reader

ANSWER: Johnny Adams, income assistant supervisor with the Department of Human Resources, was contacted for information regarding your questions. The answers are somewhat involved, with the situation of an individual's circumstances having to be considered in each case.

Medicaid, according to Adams, is administered by the Department of Human Resources through the state's Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and in some instances nursing home and foster children situations. Medicaid comes under the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program of the Social Security Administration.

The two main programs, both designed for persons with low incomes, are the SSI and the AFDC.

People with low incomes and those who are aged and blind and who are 65 years of age and older qualify for SSI. The person applying cannot have a monthly income over $324.30 per month, and this depends on living arrangements and income, according to the Social Security Administration office in Midland. A person applying for SSI can have as much as $1,500 in savings and still be eligible.

The AFDC requisites for applicants include low income families and those who are elderly or blind and 65 years of age, according to Adams. He also mentions that there are a few exceptional groups for short term assistance through DHR.

The AFDC aid depends on the size of the household and number of children. The income limitations are determined by a chart. The applicant may have $1,000 in resources (checking and savings), with exemptions for certain items, such as personal possessions and furniture. Nursing home aid also is administered through DHR.

There are certain restrictions on the time frame for the transfer of assets, according to Adams. This includes the time of the transfer and for what reasons.

For clarification and personal attention to your situation and requirements, you can contact Adams at 683-5411 for the AFDC program and the Social Security Administration office, 683-3396, for SSI information.

What is meant by the "back load" charge in connection with an IRA? — G.W.

ANSWER: Many life insurance companies do not charge for establishing an individual retirement account, but if you close out the IRA before a stipulated period of time, usually seven years (maybe longer), then a penalty is charged. This withdrawal charge, which normally diminishes each year you maintain the IRA, is called a back load, according to The American Council of Life Insurance.

When is Midland County going to do something about the air conditioning in the Midland Public Library? The heat is almost unbearable for anyone spending any length of time in the library doing research.

I suppose the new jail facility the county is spending so much money on will have adequate air conditioning and heating for the prisoners; why not the same for Midland taxpayers and others using the library? — J.J.

ANSWER: John Deats, library director, says Midland County is waiting for bids for installation of a new water tower for the air conditioning system, and when the bids are received and awarded and the new tower is installed it should improve the situation considerably. At the present the library is using the existing tower, which is not as efficient as it should be, but at least some cool air is being circulated in the library until the new tower is installed.

White will attend reception in Midland

From Staff Reports

Gov. Mark White

Gov. Mark White will be in Midland Wednesday for a reception saluting his efforts in obtaining drought relief aid for West Texas farmers and ranchers. He will be presented with a special award by Upton County Judge Peggy Garner.

Emceeing the event from 5 to 7 p.m. in the Midland Hilton will be State Sen. Bill Sims of San Angelo.

The reception is being sponsored by the Midland County Democratic Party.

The event is intended for citizens of the drought designated or pending counties which include almost the entire west half of the state. Due to lack of any significant rainfall in the area, drought relief is still of vital concern, said a spokesman with the county Democratic Party.

Invitations are being sent to county judges in drought counties. The county judge is responsible for initiating the designation of a drought county. Invitations may be obtained from the county judge or by calling the Midland County Democratic Party at 685-3611 or JoAnne DeWitt, 686-8718.

Painter again criticizes Smith for not enough patrols

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

For the second time in four days, Midland County Sheriff candidate Gary Painter called a press conference to attack his opponent, Sheriff Dallas Smith, for his "lack of interest" in keeping enough patrols on the streets of Midland County.

"Any law enforcement officer can tell you that a properly staffed and deployed visable force is an effective deterrent to crime," Painter said Saturday at the Midland County Courthouse. "I believe my opponent should take another look at his priorities and put enough patrols on the streets to protect the citizens of Midland County."

Noting that 20,000 people live in Midland County outside the city limits, Painter said only one or two officers are on patrol on a given shift.

"How many towns with a population of 20,000 do you know of that have just one or two patrol officers to protect them?" he asked.

Painter also criticized Smith for the mandatory quarterly tests which sheriff's deputies are required to pass, which Painter claims are unnecessary and contribute to department turnover.

"These tests serve to drive away highly qualified and experienced personnel," said Painter, who recommended that the tests be replaced by continuous training programs.

"And people are losing faith in the ability of the Sheriff's Department to perform its duty," Painter said. "Some prominent Midland lawyers are taking their civil papers to the Constable's Office to be served. The Constable's Office is now serving as many civil papers and warrants as the Sheriff's Department."

Painter also attacked Smith for not emphasizing the enforcement of traffic laws. "The department is not allowed to work traffic except in aggravated circumstances," he said. "This concerns me greatly because of the high number of traffic-related deaths involving DWIs."

Painter is challenging Smith for the Republican nomination in the May 5 primary.

Students suggest improvements for public education

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Do academically successful students achieve because of or in spite of public education?

Public schools are under heavy fire from many sectors, and everyone seems to have his own idea about what is wrong and how it can be corrected. Others aren't convinced there is a problem. And often overlooked amidst all the bickering is the opinions of those most affected. The students.

"Nobody asked us to go to Austin," commented Sharon Specht, a senior at Lee High School. She, along with Deirdre Bell and Karen Eggleston of Midland High School and Michael Cornelius from Lee, was named a finalist in the National Merit Scholarship Corporation's annual competition.

The 13,500 finalists selected represent the top .5 percent of seniors nationwide. These are four of the best and the brightest students in Midland. And they have a story to tell.

They are, for the most part, satisfied with Midland schools. Students get the chance to explore different areas of interest and to concentrate in specific fields, they said.

"What I think is right with public education is that it gives you such a wide range of alternatives," Miss Bell said.

The students did, however, have suggestions for improvement. Being

Deirdre Bell

Mark Cornelius

Karen Eggleston

Sharon Specht

top students, they sometimes found they were not sufficiently challenged by their classes.

"My junior high years were the most blase," Miss Eggleston said. Miss Bell concurred, "Everything seemed to be either a review of what we had already done or an introduction into what we were going to do. You didn't learn anything.

"Classes are geared for the average student. A lot of times it goes too slow," she added.

Cornelius said he preferred a system used in South Carolina. Many classes are broken down into four levels — the first concentrates on remediation and the fourth addresses the needs of the most advanced students.

Students need to be encouraged more to develop writing skills, Cornelius said. Miss Specht feels foreign language and vocabulary development should be offered in junior high school. Miss Eggleston had a suggestion for making better use of class time. She felt students could get more accomplished if classes met half as often but for two hours at a time. A lot of class time is wasted in getting settled and ready to work, she pointed out. "You end up with about a 35 to 45 minute class," Miss Bell agreed. They could get more work done in less time, particularly in science labs, if there was more continuity and sufficient time to work on assignments, they said.

"If kids want to take academic courses they've got the chance to, and extracurricular activities don't keep anyone out of it," Miss Specht defended.

"It helps prepare you for other things. They help you get along with other people, which is good for jobs, and teach leadership and responsibility."

"They sort of break the monotony," Cornelius added. "People would learn to hate school (without them)."

"I think most kids drop out because they're not interested, not because it's too hard for them," Miss Eggleston said, adding extracurricular activities keep students in school. "It's just another aspect of education."

Benefits received from education depend heavily on the teacher, the students felt. They said Midland has many excellent teachers who encourage students to think independently, draw conclusions and formulate opinions. Others require only memorization — a teaching method Miss Specht referred to as "education by regurgitation."

"If you have a good teacher you're gonna learn," Miss Bell said. "If not, you just memorize for the test and forget it."

But even more important than teachers' attitudes is parents' encouragement, one student said. "If you come from a family with an educational background you discuss things and apply them," Miss Eggleston explained. "But if you don't have that kind of encouragement out of school you tend to think schoolwork and time out of school are completely separate."

Miss Bell also put the responsibility back on the student. "If the teachers are good, they make it interesting and make you want to learn and they're always there if you get stuck. But the student has to have the desire to learn."

Judge bars new hookups to treatment plant

AUSTIN (AP) — A state district judge has denied city officials' request for permission to add new hookups to an overburdened Austin wastewater treatment plant.

The city was barred Friday from adding 12 houses a day to the plant.

The state has sued the city because of Colorado River pollution caused by the South Austin treatment plant.

Under a March 29 agreement among the state, the city and developers, new hookups were to be allowed when the wastewater level in ponds at the plant was lowered by six inches.

Spring session of I Can Cope begins Tuesday

From Staff Reports

The spring session of the I Can Cope patient education program will begin Tuesday.

Sponsored by the Midland Unit of the American Cancer Society, the sessions have one goal: Help cancer patients become an essential part of their own treatment team.

Because it is recognized that medical treatment can be significantly enhanced by a patients' attitude, the program is designed to help people learn to achieve more control of their own health.

The free education programs will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. on Tuesdays for six weeks. All classes, which will be held in the first floor lobby of the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Center, are open to cancer patients and their family members.

Instructors include several local healthcare professionals who voluntarily give of their knowledge, experience and time. Contributions to the ACS to help defray costs of this and other ACS service/rehabilitation programs are welcome.

Through the I Can Cope program, cancer patients and their families will have the opportunity to study and share problems and concerns encountered in living with cancer. The program will provide increased knowledge of cancer and its treatment, ideas on coping with daily health problems and the opportunity to learn about helpful resources, decrease anxiety and learn to express feelings.

For further information on the classes or other available services, contact the American Cancer Society, 601 S. Main, or call 683-6374.

Clean Midland waiting for calls for pick-ups

The City of Midland is hungry to haul, and the fever to clean is sweeping the town. But before the sanitation trucks can get tuned-up for a clean-up, residents have to call.

There are only four days left to arrange with Clean Midland, Inc. volunteers for free pick-up of the old appliances, beat-up furniture, broken swing sets, leftover building materials and cumbersome tree limbs that have been plaguing your passion for neatness all year.

In preparation for the annual Large-Item Pick-Up Campaign, sponsored by Clean Midland, the city and Midland Chamber of Commerce, phone calls are being taken now through Thursday for hauling requests. After that time, the sanitation department will devote three weeks — April 30 to May 18 — to answering those requests.

The success of the campaign depends not only on the city, but also on the general interest of the community, Jane Leslie, Clean Midland executive coordinator, said.

"We have received more than 100 calls already," she added, "but I'm afraid people, although anxious to have things hauled, will let the call-in deadline sneak up on them. The city is undertaking a massive project in a very short period of time, so we must ask for everyone's cooperation in calling early."

She also stressed that neighbors may request pick-up of large trash items from anywhere in the area, as long as they can provide a description of what is to be hauled and an exact address for pick-up.

"Clean Midland's goal is to make Midland a cleaner, more attractive city by changing people's attitudes and habits," Ms. Leslie said. "Last year, Midlanders went beyond cleaning backyards and garages, and that's really what we're all about at Clean Midland. We're encouraging people to take responsibility for their own surroundings."

Midland residents can take the first step by calling 682-5326 or 683-9256, and arranging to make their small corner a little neater.

To expedite the pick-up process, everyone is asked to bundle items neatly, mark them clearly and stack them in their alleyway. Normal trash service will continue as usual, allowing a large amount of smaller items and loose debris to be hauled sooner than the largers objects.

The hauling of junk cars will be handled by Warren Cloyd in Code Enforcement at City Hall. He can be reached at 683-4281, ext. 412.

Centennial Commission wants logo to mark Midland's birthday

From Staff Reports

To celebrate the 100th birthday of Midland in 1985, the Centennial Commission is sponsoring a logo contest to find a design that can be used to identify activities sanctioned by the commission.

The contest is open to people of all ages, ranging from first grade through adult. Various awards will be given to semi-finalists, finalists and the winners in three categories. The categories will be first through sixth grade, seventh through 12th and adult.

Deadline for entries is May 15. Art instructors in the public and private schools and at Midland College have entry rules and forms. Further information may be obtained by calling Linda Isbell, 682-5659, or the Midland Chamber of Commerce, 683-3381.

Entries must be submitted on 8½ by 11 inch, heavy grade white paper. Only two colors of a medium should be used. All media are accepted. Entries should be mailed to Centennial Logo Contest, c/o Linda Isbell, 2505 Metz Place, Midland, 79705.

Entries will be judged on historical, social, cultural, economic or patriotic significance to the city and county; identification through symbolism or words with Midland; identification through symbolism or words with the centennial, such as 100 years or 1885-1985; and reproductive quality in all sizes.

Five semi-finalists and one finalist will be selected from each age category. Semi-finalists will receive certificates and the finalists each will receive a cash prize of $50. Grand prize winner will receive a cash award of $100.

Possible uses are medallions, posters, bumper stickers and commemorative items, according to commission co-chairman Mrs. Isbell. Groups may use the logo for their centennial acitivities with prior permission from the Centennial Commission.

The commission was formed earlier this year as a joint venture by the City Council, County Commissioners, Midland Independent School District and Midland College. It is responsible for the overall planning and coordinating of activities celebrating Midland's 100th birthday in 1985 and Texas' Sesquicentennial (150th) birthday in 1986.

Serving with Mrs. Isbell as co-chairman is Chris Scharbauer. Members include Martin Allday, Nancy Anguish, Kenneth Barnes, Joan Baskin, Mrs. Matthew Blair, James H. Bradford, Dave Clark, Bill Collyns, DeWayne Davis, Joe Dominey, Fredda Durham, Joann Foster, James Fuller and Charlie Green.

Pre-Easter concert slated

A pre-Easter Sacred Concert of the Passion According to St. Mark will be presented at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at First Baptist Church, corner of Louisiana Avenue and Garfield Street.

Soprano Janice Archer will be the soloist. Dr. Daniel Vestal, pastor of First Baptist, will deliver the Scripture reading. Accompanists will be Doris Bruce, organist, and Charlotte Whitaker, pianist.

The program will include excerpts from several major requiems, including those by Brahms and Verdi, an aria from "The Passion According to St. Matthew" by Bach, the "Alleluia" from the motet, "Exultate Jubilate" by Mozart, a Negro spiritual and a contemporary solo cantata by Louie White for piano, organ and voice composed for Ascension Day.

Ms. Archer is well-known in this area for her previous performances with the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, her characterization of Rosalinda in Midland's first locally produced three-act opera, "Die Fledermaus," and a benefit concert with the Ronnie Cole Jazz Trio to raise money for the Midland High School Band to attend the Tournament of Roses Parade in 1982.

I WOULD LIKE TO TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY TO SAY THANK YOU TO ALL THOSE WHO SUPPORTED ME IN MY RECENT BID FOR A PLACE ON THE SCHOOL BOARD. I AM VERY GRATEFUL FOR THE CONFIDENCE YOU HAVE IN ME. IT WAS A GREAT EXPERIENCE FOR ME AND I THINK WE SHOULD CONTINUE TO WORK TOGETHER FOR THE REPRESENTATION WE NEED ON THE BOARD. THANKS ALSO TO MY OPPONENTS WHO RAN A GOOD, CLEAN, HONEST RACE AND I OFFER MY SUPPORT WHEN POSSIBLE TO MR. REED. AGAIN, THANKS FOR A JOB WELL DONE.

Officers praise 'West Point of law enforcement'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

There's still "the hunch" in police work.

But skill in running a police station and the science of tracking down criminals and bringing them forthwith to justice has been greatly enhanced by the FBI National Academy.

"It's the West Point of law enforcement," said Vince Conklin, a 1968 academy graduate who is president of the FBI National Academy Associates of Texas.

This July 8-11 in Houston, the Texas FBI National Academy chapter will host a sectional retraining session for academy graduates from 15 states. Theme of the session will be "Violent Crime."

Conklin, 58, retired in early 1984 from the Midland Police Department where he had served since 1955 as a patrolman, motorcycle policeman, desk and patrol sergeant, detective, training lieutenant, and coordinator of the Permian Basin Regional Police Academy in Midland. In 1972, Conklin had developed the curriculum for the Midland-based training school.

"It was the highest point in my police career to be able to go up there," Conklin said of the FBI National Academy.

OFFICERS nominated to the academy usually are in a supervisory position. Their background is checked out by the FBI.

Since 1935, when the academy, first known as the Police Training School of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, was formed, 17,885 law-enforcement officers from the United States and abroad have graduated from the school, said FBI Special Agent Ronald Hoverson, who is agent-in-charge of the FBI El Paso District. Of that number, 12,000 are still active in law enforcement.

Of the graduates, more than 50 are in the Midland-Odessa area, and 34 present and former Midland law enforcement officers from the ranks of the Midland Police Department, Midland County Sheriff's Office and the Texas Department of Public Safety have attended the academy.

"One of seven academy graduates is the top executive officer in his department or agency," Hoverson said.

"It's a rather comprehensive program," he said of the curriculum, "and is really management-oriented for the officers," and affords graduates a better understanding of the FBI. "We try to get a cross-section of all law-enforcement agencies in the United States" into the academy. "We think (academy training) strenghtens law enforcement over all the nation."

"IT IS ONE of the best law-enforcement management schools in the United States," said Chief Deputy G.W. Thompson of the Midland County Sheriff's Office.

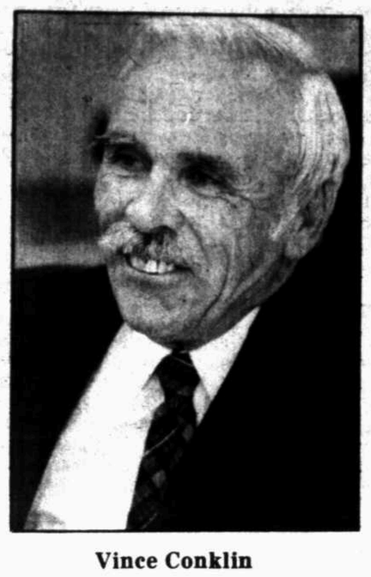

FBI National Academy graduates often call the academy the "West Point" for law-enforcement officers.

"They have the best criminal justice resource center in the United States as far as I'm concerned," said Thompson, a 1980 academy graduate. "They emphasize constitutional law, management, business administration and public administration.

"They training you to administer a public agency."

Described as "A University for Law Enforcement," the academy was proposed in 1934 by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover and U.S. Attorney General Homer S. Cummings. Their proposal came after President Franklin D. Roosevelt had called a National Crime Conference to study ways to curtail "daring lawlessness" and rampant crime and to elevate the competence and quality of law enforcement. The academy was patterned after the FBI Special Agent Training School. Its mission was to train officers as executives, administrators, investigators and instructors and ultimately to increase the proficiency of law enforcement officers at all levels.

Vince Conklin

THE ACADEMY opened in 1935 in the U.S. Department of Justice Building in Washington, D.C. In 1940, it was relocated to the U.S. Marines Corps Base at Quantico, Va., and later was greatly expanded.

Currently, the FBI National Academy holds four 11-week sessions per year; about 250 officers are enrolled in each session. Academics there include management science, behavorial science, forensic science, law, education and communications arts. Course work may be credited with the University of Virginia.

Midland County Judge William B. "Bill" Ahders, a former FBI agent, said Hoover's intent in setting up the school was "to raise the level of law enforcement" throughout the nation.

"The graduate would come back to his department and instruct them (other officers) on things he had learned. His (Hoover's) goal was to have one National Academy man in every department. They've gotten away from that," he said.

One of the benefits of attending the academy is mingling with officers from throughout the nation and friendly foreign countries.

"You 'steal' (ideas) from each other," Ahders said. "You adopt things that would best apply to your area."

WHILE AHDERS was with the FBI in Midland, he brought FBI instruction with him. He taught Midland peace officers defense tactics, how to testify in court and the legal aspects of law enforcement.

Roy Dahl, another retired FBI agent who was assigned to Midland, graduated from the academy's fifth session in 1937. At the time, he was a deputy sheriff in Iowa and was that state's first academy graduate.

"The best thing about the National Academy," he said, "was the snowballing effect of them (graduates) being able to go back (to their respective departments and agencies) and teaching several subjects in police science."

Dahl got drafted into the FBI in 1942 after the United States entered World War II.

AMONG FBI National Academy graduates in Odessa is Chief Deputy Bob Eaton of the Ector County Sheriff's Office.

"The training really is kind of stressful," said Eaton, a 1978 graduate. "They kind of put you through the mill. It's an honor to the individual" to attend the academy.

The instruction, by FBI agents, university professors and notables in such fields as law, administration forensic science, and ballistics, is similar to that of university work.

Lt. Rusty Baker of the Odessa Police Department described the academy's schooling as "very rigorous." He graduated from the academy in 1972, year of the dedication of the new 10-building campus about 40 miles south of the nation's capital.

"One of the most important benefits is meeting officers from every state in the Union and six or seven foreign countries," he said. Baker said the "contacts" made at the academy are invaluable.

"THE FBI ACADEMY is probably the superior law enforcement management school in the nation," said Odessa Police Chief Alan Stewart, "and is probably the superior law enforcement management school throughout the world."

"What's unique," he said, "is that less than 1 percent of the law-enforcement officers in the United States will get to attend," he said. "It's quite an honor to go."

Another Odessa lawman, Deputy Chief K.R. Jones of the Odessa Police Department, said he has "nothing but praise for the school," which he attended in 1983. "I'm just real proud to get the opportunity to go."

Though Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith hasn't attended the academy, he encourages his supervisory personnel to seek admission. The sheriff said he would "certainly like to go."

"It's a concentrated training program geared to management and supervision as it relates to law enforcement," Smith said.

Five of his 50 deputies have attended the FBI school since 1980: Chief Deputy George Thompson, Capt. Richard Stratton, Capt. Bennie Cureton, Lt. Tommy Jones and, most recently, Lt. Bill Decker.

Former Midland Police Chief Harold Wallace, a 1953 academy graduate, said he "received a lot" from the training. "I think that was the highlight of my career."

Corley, 50, said the academy's "whole level of instruction was beyond reproach."

"At the time I went, it was something you dream about — Utopia," he said. "It's the West Point of law enforcement."

President of Roses parade visits Midland

From Staff Reports

James B. Boyle Jr.

Plastering tiny rose stickers on anyone who would come within reach, Midland High School band director Clyde Wilson Friday introduced James B. Boyle Jr., president of the 96th Pasadena Tournament of Roses.

Boyle visits each of the nine out-of-state cities whose bands will participate in the parade to assist with fund-raising efforts. The MHS Bulldog Band Jan. 1 will march for the second time in the Rose Parade. Tonight Boyle will officially present an invitation to the band during its main fundraising event — a concert by Up With People.

"They have very high recommendations," Boyle said when asked why the Bulldog band was chosen over 150 others to march. "They have great uniforms. They put on a good street performance.

"A streetwise band is one that comes down the street and hits you with the sound," he explained. "Spirit of America" is the theme for the 1985 Rose Parade.

Boyle said another reason he is in Midland is to impress upon band members the importance of their performance. "We've got a million people on the sidewalk watching the parade, 100 million will be viewing it on television and another 25 million people in foreign countries will be watching," he said.

Judges are already beginning to select the bands to march in the 1986 parade, Boyle said. For a year they look at video tapes, interview directors and talk to music instructors in order to narrow down the choices. Other participating bands will include those of the Salvation Army, Marine Corp, McDonald's, four California cities, the schools playing in the Rose Bowl, one or two foreign countries and the Pasadena All-City band.

Wilson expects the trip to cost $80,000 for 300 students and chaperones.

Dance teams to perform

The Midland and Lee High School dance teams will present their spring performance at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the LHS auditorium, 3500 Neely. Tickets can be purchased at The Dance Shop in San Miguel Square or at the door. Cost is $1 for students and $1.50 for adults.

Greenwood band rates

Region VI University Interscholastic League Band Concert and Sightreading Contest for AAA, AA and A schools was held recently in McCamey. In Class A, Greenwood received a superior rating in both concert and sightreading, and Rankin got excellent marks in both categories. Garden City received an excellent rating in sightreading.

In Class AA, McCamey scored superior in concert and excellent in sightreading. In Class AAA, Crane won superior marks in both categories.

Fannin PTA will meet

Fannin Elementary Parent-Teacher Association will meet at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the cafeteria. Officers for the 1984-85 school year will be installed. The program will be presented by the fifth grade choir.

Couple provides award

"Through the gift of a Midland couple who wish to remain unnamed, we are able to provide a $500 cash award to one fulltime faculty member who presents course work at a challenging level and who consistently promotes the highest academic standards in the classroom," MC President Dr. Jess Parrish said.

Given in the name of Dr. Jay Dee Martin, economics instructor, the first recipient of the Martin Faculty Academic Standards Award will be announced at commencement exercises May 12. A committee of students, faculty and administrators will select a winner from nominations submitted.

The couple also provided a $3,750 computer system for use by the economics department and the Cultural Studies Division.

Assault workshop slated

A Sexual Assault of Children and Adolescents Workshop for School Personnel will be held April 25. Anyone who works with children is invited. It is sponsored by the Midland Rape Crisis Center in cooperation with Region 18 Education Service Center.

Since January the Rape Crisis Center has worked with 28 children who were sexually abused — about half by parental figures and about half by a relative, caretakeer, family friend or trusted adult. For more information on the workshop call the Rape Crisis Center at 682-7273.

Materials may be viewed

Films and other audio-visual materials available to public schools through Region 18 Education Service Center may be requested for preview by parents and other interested adults during a review session from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. April 26 at the center on LaForce Boulevard, Midland Regional Airport.

Those wishing to preview should contact the center eight days in advance. Call Shirley Higgins at 563-2380.

Registration deadline nears

May 4 is the deadline for registering for the Graduate Record Examination which will be administered at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin June 9. The GRE is required of all persons admitted as graduate students at UTPB. Registration materials and an information bulletin are available in the student records office in UTPB's Deans' Suite or by calling 367-2127.

Students design bookmarks

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Final presentations in Free Enterprise series this week

By H.A. TUCK

Final two talks in the 1984 Midland College Free Enterprise Lecture series are set for this week. Both the presentations are slated for 7:30 p.m. in the Allison Fine Arts Building lecture hall. There is no admission; the public is urged to attend.

Speaking on Monday will be J. Frank Ford Jr. of Hereford. He is chairman of the board of Arrowhead Mills, one of the nation's best-known producers of stone-grown grain products and organically-grown foods. A graduate of Texas A&M, where he was Corps Commander, Ford has built a nationally-known company in Deaf Smith County. He also spends a lot of his time in community improvement programs, political affairs, and as an agricultural spokesman. His topic is "Independent Business in the '80s."

Final speaker, on Thursday, is Bill Hendon of Midland, president of Hendon Exploration Inc. Title for his talk is "The Independent Producer — Or is J.R. the Real Thing?" Hendon brought in one of the largest wells in West Texas last year and "went public" with his stock.

Midland College will close Thursday evening and be closed Friday and Monday for the Easter holiday. When students return, they face just one week for instruction, a week for review, and then finals.

Coach Del Poss and his golfers were flying high last week after posting a school record 282 at the conference tournament hosted by New Mexico Military Institute in Roswell. They tallied a 282 in winning the tournament and giving them a big lift toward the conference title. A 282 is 70.5 strokes average per golfer and they threw out a 73, which usually is good enough to be counted.

Barbara Mandrell is returning to the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center for a special Mother's Day concert Sunday, May 13. Tickets are $12.50 and $10.50 with all seats reserved. Ticket outlets include the Chap Center box office, Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa, Record Bar in Odessa, and radio station KBYG in Big Spring. Special guest for the show is Lee Greenwood. When Ms. Mandrell was here last year, she put on one of the best shows ever seen in Chap Center.

This is the final week for the current exhibit in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building. The show features watercolors and oils (large ones) by Elizabeth Yarosz plus prints by Richard Ash. Both artists are faculty members at Midwestern University, Wichita Falls.

Gallery hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Wednesday and 8 a.m.-9 p.m. Thursday.

If you'd like to know more about the Southwest and enjoy the outdoors, you should check into some of the courses that Midland College is offering during its summer interim session.

Dr. Lynn Lalko is leading a two-hour credit course in Desert Ecology May 13-26. The class will go to the Grand Canyon, Canyon de Chelly, the Painted Desert, Monument Valley, Supersitition Mountains, and the Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum. Accommodations are to be mostly in camp grounds. Students will supply their own camping gear and clothing. Cost is $250, including tuition, fees, food, transportation and camp ground fees. A $125 deposit is due by April 27, with the remainder due May 4. Lalko formerly lived in Arizona and explored all the areas to be studied.

A combination archaeology-backpacking course will provide three hours credit in the former and one hour credit in the latter. Dr. Carl Frailey and Jenny Allison are leading this tour. There will be three days of classroom work May 14-16, followed by studies at the Jal Horse Quarries, Guadalupe National Park, Slaughter Canyon, several caves, Gila National Monument and McKitrick Canyon May 17-25.

Cost for this study is $150, which includes tuition, fees, meals for eight days, transportation and camping fees. A $75 deposit is required by April 27 with the remainder due May 4. You must sign up for both courses.

Frailey has done extensive archaeological studies in the Southwest and in South America. Ms. Allison is an experienced back-packer.

Haig: Congress inflicts setback

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Congress has inflicted a "major setback" on President Reagan by passing resolutions condemning the CIA-directed mining of Nicaraguan ports, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig says.

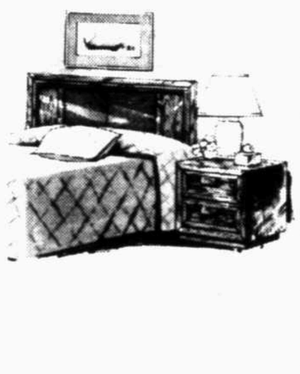

Haig, speaking at Trinity University, said he opposed the mining but thinks Senate and House resolutions adopted this week undercut Reagan.

"It's very damaging," he said. "It tells Havana and Moscow that Congress is again out of step with the president."

Army officer promoted to major

Captain Richard K. Thompson was promoted to the rank of major in the Regular Army in recent ceremonies at the world headquarters of Deere & Company. Major Thompson has been in the Army for nearly 12 years, and is currently assigned to Deere & Company, Industrial Equipment Division, under the Army's Training with Industry program. During this one-year assignment, Thompson will study Deere's management techniques.

Deere & Company has supported this Army training program since 1976. After completion of this training, Major Thompson and his family will move to Alexandria, Virginia, where he will be assigned to DARCOM headquarters.

Richard Thompson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Thompson of Midland and graduated from Robert E. Lee High School in 1966. He is a graduate of Texas Tech University and currently lives with his wife and two children in Coal Valley, Illinois.

Marine Lance Cpl. Lee C. Mack, son of Jerry R. and Courtney J. Mack of 1111 Spruce Drive, Midland, has reported for duty with 1st Force Service Support Group, Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Cmdr. Lamm

Naval Reserve Commander William Lamm, of Midland took part in "Rainbow Reach '84", a nationwide Military Sealift Command exercise. Lamm is a member of a Reserve MSC unit, based out of the Oklahoma City Naval Reserve Center, he and his unit participated in the Far East component of the exercise held in San Diego, March 24 and 25. In wartime, Commander Lamm's unit would mobilize to an MSC office in northern Japan.

The "Command Post" phase of Rainbow Reach '84 — an exercise involving about 2,000 Naval Reservists in some 45 units of the U.S. Navy's Military Sealift Command (MSC) — was completed March 25. This realistic drill was based on events that could possibly happen in today's tension-filled international political climate, using acutal available ship resources.

Across the country, MSC Naval Reservists were linked to each other by computer terminals with electronic mail capabilities, telephone copiers, and telephones. And, working together, the Reservists focused on mock hostile activities against the U.S. — hostilities occuring simultaneously in the western Pacific, eastern Mediterranean, and Indian Ocean.

Navy Seaman Recruit Patrick A. Mauldin, son of Jimmie A. and Marilyn Mouldin of Route 10, Midland, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, San Diego.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid. Personnel who complete this course of instruction are eligible for three hours of college credit in Physical Education and Hygiene.

Navy Airman Apprentice John W. Hudson, son of William D. Hudson of Big Lake, recently participated in Readiness Exercise (READEX) 1-84.

READEX was conducted by the U.S. Second Fleet in the Western Atlantic and Caribbean Sea areas. It was designed to increase the proficiency of the participating ships, submarines and aircraft in conduction coordinate fleet operations.

The exercise emphasized training in anti-submarine, anti-air and anti-surface warfare. Also included were extensive multi-threat surface, navigation and seamanship exercises.

Ships involved in the exercise conducted missile firings against remotely controlled drones and gunnery exercises against both surface and air targets.

The Saratoga is 1,063 feet long, carries a crew of 2,790, plus accomodations for approximately 2,150 assigned to its carrier air wing.

Navy Seaman Michael E. Waid, son of Gerald W. and Vanita A. Waid of Stanton, has completed recruit training at the Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill.

During the eight-week training cycle, trainees studied general military subjects designed to prepare them for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic occupational fields.

Included in their studies were seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid.

Marine Capt. James M. Rush, son of Mr. and Mrs. L.E. Rush of Odessa, has reported for duty with 1st Force Service Support Group, Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class William E. Earnst, son of William E. and Carolyn J. Earnst of Odessa, has reported for duty aboard the ammunition ship USS Flint, homeported in Concord, Calif.

Navy Constructionman Apprentice Daniel O. Ramsel, son of Lawrence D. and Phyllis Ramsel of Odessa, has reported for duty at Naval Station Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Marine Staff Sgt. Rickey L. Price, son of Camp Jones of 14068 Mount Pleaseat Road, Midland, has reenlisted for six years while serving with 1st Marine Division Camp Pendleton, Calif.

The Nicholas is named after Samuel Nicholas, Major of Marines, considered to be the first Commandant of the Marine Corps. He was the first commissioned Marine Officer, as established by John Hancock, President of the Continental Congress, in 1775. Nicholas is credited with the first amphibious landing ever made. The ship is the third Navy vessel to bear the name. It will be homeported in Charleston, S.C.

Coast Guard Lt. J.G. Glenn M. Bingham, son of Floyd Bingham of Odessa, has completed his first solo flight.

Bingham is undergoing primary flight training at the Naval Air Station Witing Field, Milton, Fla. The 14-week basic course, which includes 65 inflight training hours, is the initial step of the Naval Integrated Flight Training System. Follow-on training with jets, helicopters or multi-engine aircraft will lead to designation as a naval aviator.

He is a crewmember aboard dock landing ship the USS Dubuque, homported in San Diego.

"Team Spirit '84" is an exercise involving the military forces of the United States and the Republic of Korea. More than 210,000 people from all branches of the U.S. Armed Forces and from the Republic of Korea are participating in the month-long exercise, including 27,000 people and 26 ships from the U.S. Seventh Fleet.

During "Team Spirit," units are participating in various naval exercises. It will end with a major amphibious assault on the southeastern coast of the Republic of Korea.

Space flight over, but work continues

Shuttle in better shape than previous flights

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — The space shuttle Challenger returned to Earth in better shape than after any previous mission following its race to catch and repair an ailing satellite, space agency officials said Saturday.

"It's in real fine shape," ground operations manager Fritz Widick said at a news conference as crews prepared the 98-ton shuttle for its return to Cape Canaveral, Fla. "If all goes well, we plan to fly out of here Tuesday morning and no later than Wednesday."

The shuttle rolled 8,600 feet to a smooth landing on the dry lakebed runway at Edwards Air Force Base early Friday after being diverted to California at the last minute because of rain at the Kennedy Space Center landing strip at Cape Canaveral.

Challenger was towed 5 miles to a 100-foot-tall "mate-demate device," a steel trusswork where it will be mounted atop a modified Boeing 747 to be carried back to the Cape.

A 270-member crew from the Kennedy Space Center flew to Edwards with 30,000 pounds of equipment Friday afternoon to prepare the shuttle, said Widick. He was among a team of 30 who traveled from Florida to Edwards about 10 days ago "in the event there was an emergency landing at any time during the mission."

Widick said Challenger sustained only minor damage during its latest mission — the 11th shuttle flight and the fifth for Challenger.

"Compared to the 10 previous (missions) we think it's better," he said. "... It's just amazing ... we came up with so few problems."

He said one heat-resistant tile on the main landing gear door was sheared off, but that caused no heat damage to the shuttle itself. The shuttle is protected from the intense heat of re-entry by more than 30,000 such tiles.

The shuttle's brakes, which had lost some washers on the runway during previous landings, sustained "some degradation" during Friday's landing.

But, Widick added: "The brakes performed the way they were supposed to perform."

Crews removed Challenger's brakes on the runway Friday, and they will be examined at the B.F. Goodrich plant in Akron, Ohio, he added.

Widick said recovery crew members entered Challenger's crew module Saturday morning to begin removing flight equipment, but they had not yet opened the aft section to inspect the auxiliary power units, where a minor fire started on a previous landing by the shuttle Columbia.

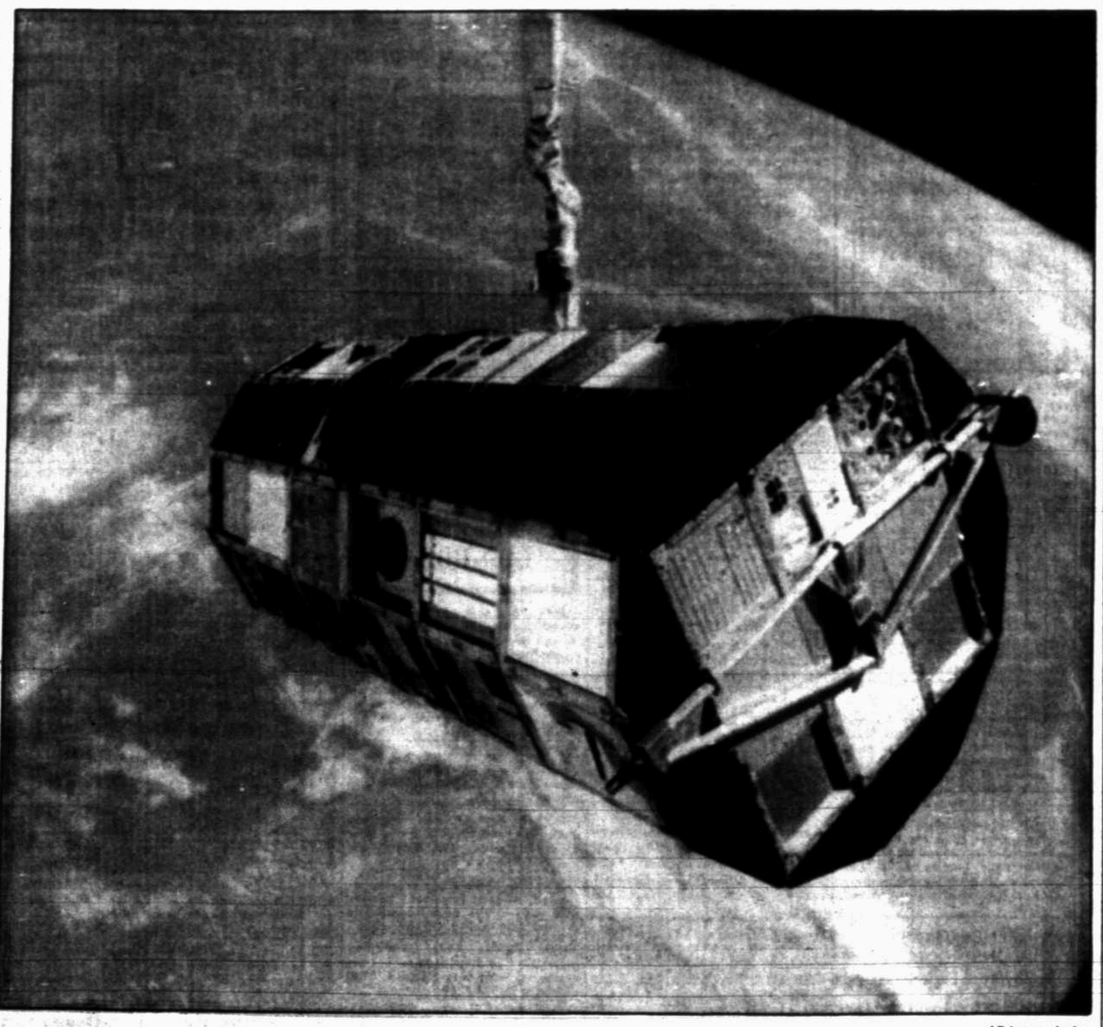

Preparations for Challenger's return to Cape Canaveral included venting fuel cells, purging fuel from the shuttle's three main engines and attaching a tail cone over the engines to make the shuttle more aerodynamic for the flight.

Challenger's crew — Commander Robert Crippen, pilot Dick Scobee, mission specialist Terry Hart and spacewalkers George Nelson and James van Hoften — took the weekend off in Texas, where they flew Friday afternoon.

The next flight — the first for the new shuttle Discovery — is planned for June 19. Widick said he hoped the California landing wouldn't cause a delay, even though Challenger will arrive in Florida a week late. Challenger flew with one orbital maneuvering engine borrowed from Discovery and it must be returned.

During Challenger's successful seven-day mission, the five astronauts deployed an 11-ton cylinder of 57 experiments that will be picked up next February. The studies are vital to building space stations.

Then they chased the ailing Solar Maximum scientific satellite for nearly 2 million miles around the globe, yanked it from orbit, replaced its damaged parts, set it out again to observe the sun and dubbed themselves the "Ace Satellite Repair Co."

AP Laserphoto

The giant Long Duration Exposure Facility (LDEF) is suspended on the end of the Canadian Arm of Shuttle Challenger as they fly high above the Gulf of Mexico. The LDEF will be retrieved in about ten months by another shuttle. It carries some 60 different types of scientific experiments.

"COMPROMISE HAS NEVER BEEN MY STYLE..."

"...So when I moved to Midland, Oakridge Apartments was the only logical choice. As far as I'm concerned, there's not a better community around. Oakridge is brand-new. It's in an ideal location. It's very well-managed. Plus, it has the extras other communities don't. I love the indoor spa and sauna, and the community clubhouse and pool. And the custom kitchens with built-in microwaves, woodburning fireplaces and great storage are features I simply don't want to be without. The quality, of course, is uncompromising. Like me!"

1- and 2- bedroom and 2-bedroom studio apartment homes are available now. Take Loop 250 to N. Holiday Hill Road and look for the giant American flag.

Life Master

Professional golfer Arnold Palmer, screen writer Barry Crane, actor Omar Sharif and businessman Joe Salman of Midland go to great lengths to do what they do best — travel world-wide to demonstrate the skills of their respective professions. And they travel about as far to demonstrate skills of a common hobby — bridge, the Cadillac of card games.

Bridge is a partnership card game consisting of two teams of two players, said Salman, president of the Permian Basin Duplicate Bridge Club.

Each player receives 13 cards and takes turns playing one card at a time. When all four have played their hand, a trick is completed.

The object of the game, said Salman, "is to win as many tricks as possible because the pair who accumulates 100 points or more for tricks taken, wins the game."

Salman said the American Contract Bridge League, the official governing body for tournament bridge players in North America, sponsors and directs tournaments at about 5,000 bridge clubs in the United States, Canada and other countries.

He said the league awards points to its 175,000 members for successful competition in local, regional or national tournaments. The number of points earned determines a member's official league rating.

Salman, who recently attained the rank of life master, the highest awarded to bridge players, said "anyone can become a life master if he or she is willing to go to the expense of competing in regional and national tournaments."

To become a life master, he said players must earn a minimum of 300 ACBL master points which are divided into categories of gold, red and black.

Aspiring life masters must accumulate a minimum of 25 gold points which must be earned by winning first place at a sectional tournament or by finishing overall at either a regional or national tournament, he said.

Salman said players must also earn 25 total red points on their way to becoming life masters.

Red points are awarded for second-, third-, fourth- or fifth-place finishes at a sectional event or by finishing overall at a regional tournament. Black points, he said, are awarded to players who compete at the local level or in sectional tournaments.

"Anybody can become a life master," said Salman. "You don't have to be an expert. All you have to do is play in a lot of national and regional tournaments because that's where you earn gold and red points."

Bridge is popular worldwide but, Salman said, the game is particularly a favorite among Permian Basin residents.

He said bridge is popular here because it's a cheap form of entertainment and it can serve as a form of therapy as well.

"Bridge is especially good for retired persons because it keeps their minds active," said Salman. "It's also beneficial because it requires a great deal of concentration."

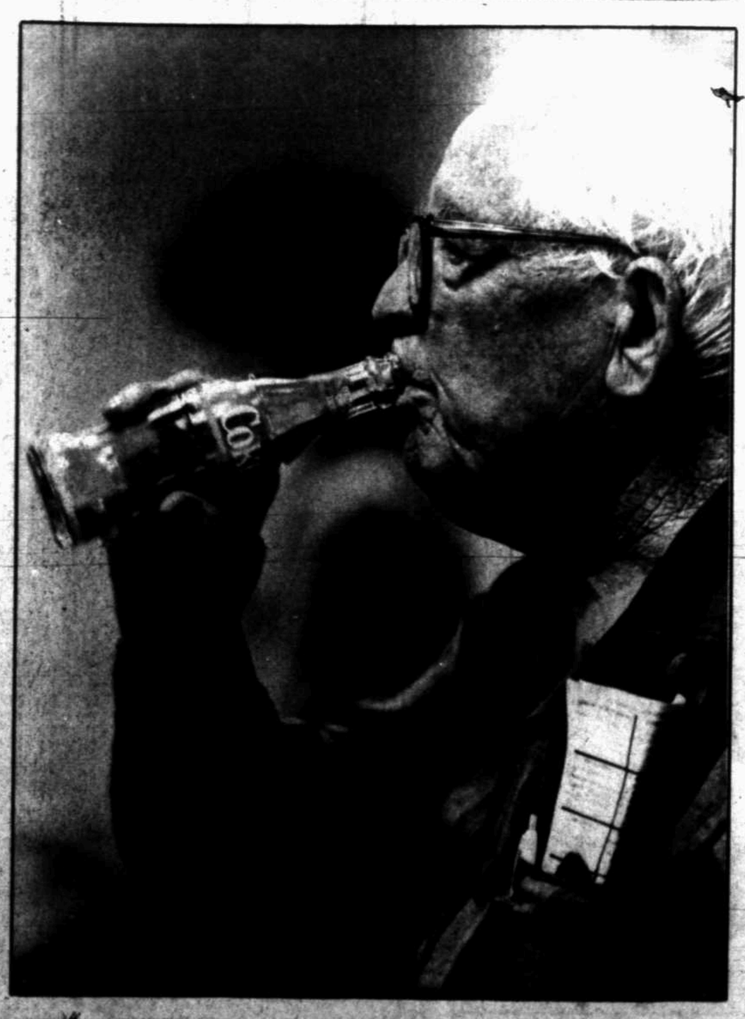

Salman said the history of bridge in Midland dates to 1953 when it was organized by Nanette Spencer and Janice Taylor.

Midland's first life master was Helon Allison. Others such as Virginia Potts and Katie McGrew became life masters later.

Today, the Midland Duplicate Bridge Club has about 160 dues-paying members. Of those, almost 35 are life masters, Salman said.

He said an average of 200 bridge players compete in local tournaments at the Allison Bridge Center in Midland each month. The club sponsors five games each week and the center is open to anyone interested in playing.

"I don't play much bridge anymore because I don't have the time," Salman said. "I used to play an awful lot and I enjoy other card games. But bridge is so good for the mind. It's a high-class type deal." ♠

Joe Salman, above, was recently awarded the honor of life master for his accomplishments in the card game bridge. J.E. Cole, left, takes a swig between innings at a recent tournament in Midland. "I like to drink coke and play," said Cole, of Iraan, who has also achieved the status of life master.

Art influence home furnishings

By The Associated Press

Victoriana, Art Deco and American country — each of these important decorative themes has been represented by many new home furnishings products recently.

But did you ever wonder why certain styles are popularized while others languish?

One significant way that new themes come into use — and new products onto the market — is as copies of currently fashionable fine arts collectibles and antiques. There is, as a result, a stronger relationship between the rarified and expensive worlds of art and antiques and the more down-to-earth world of home furnishings merchandising than one might realize.

Recently, an interesting illustration of the ways in which the separate worlds interact and help one another occurred in an exhibition of Art Deco objects at a New York City gallery.

The exhibit of Art Deco glass objects by Rene Lalique and of sculptures and graphics by Erte and other European artists at the Dyansen 57 Gallery featured rare pieces with price tags of up to $85,000.

Although remote from the lives of most American consumers, this exhibition and others like it can result in an increase in the number of Art Deco-style reproductions available in home furnishings outlets according to Harris Shapiro.

Shapiro is owner of the gallery and its parent, Fine Art Acquisitions Ltd., which publishes and distributes reproductions of Erte and other Art Deco graphics, objects and sculpture.

He said that as the only living Art Deco artist, Erte has received an increasing share of publicity as the period has become more popular. This attention has resulted in substantially increased sales of both Erte originals and reproductions.

"Within only a few years we went from $10,000 to over $100,000 a month currently in sales of Erte originals and reproductions," he said.

The popularity of Erte's work has made it worthwhile to produce reproductions of his designs. "We are trying to develop young artists who work in the same vein, and we may add porcelain collectibles, dolls, bells and collector plates to our reproduction line," added Shapiro.

In the meantime, the growth of the number of reproductions is also stimulating sales for originals, since the reproductions introduce the design theme to an ever-widening circle of possible buyers, he said.

As a gallery owner and marketer of reproductions, Shapiro is unusual in having a foot in both the art and home furnishings worlds. From this position, he is able to gauge how popularity in one area tends to increase demand for the objects in the other area.

The exhibit, which included publication of a catalog and gallery talks by experts, also served as a means of educating potential collectors.

The show was assembled by Nicholas Dawes, an authority on the period, who collected 150 examples of Lalique's glass artistry from a number of collectors and other sources and who also wrote the catalog.

According to Dawes, the Art Deco period in general is particularly appropriate as a source of inspiration for current decorative products, since Art Deco stresses the decorative objects. When the style was originated in Europe at the beginning of the 20th century, it included production of furniture, sculpture, decorative accessories, jewelry and graphics.

Eventually, of course, the appetite for Art Deco home furnishings will have been satisfied and the market saturated with products, he said.

At that point, manufacturers will turn to some new influence from the art world and the process will begin again in a continuing cycle of inspiration, popularization and eventual stagnation.

Electric drills useful

By ANDY LANG
Associated Press

At one time, very few do-it-yourselfers owned any power tools. And when they did, they usually were portable electric drills.

Today, the portable power drill is still the most used tool in the home workshop. It not only is used in the workshop, it often is kept somewhere handier, such as a kitchen drawer, a sewing room or a hobby area. Many homes have more than one electric drill, one for the man of the house and one for the lady.

The popularity of this tool has increased for a number of reasons. One is that it is one of the few tools which, in many cases, have decreased in price. Another is that the double-insulated housings prevent an electric shock if something goes wrong, thus eliminating a fear that some persons had of them in their early days. And still another is that they have become so much more versatile, being available not only in variable speeds but also able to handle dozens of useful accessories.

You will see the tools rated generally as ¼-inch, ⅜-inch and ½-inch. Those are the sizes of the maximum drill bit shank that can be held. Note that wording — the bit shank, not the size hole the bit will drill, which sometimes confuses novices.

For instance, if the shank of the bit or accessory is ¼-inch, a ¼-inch drill will hold it, even if the bit or accessory drills holes or does work half an inch in size.

The larger the size drill, the slower the speed and the more torque or twisting power it has. Or, to put it another way, the more revolutions a minute. the less power it has.

Easing is generally called for when sewing two pieces of fabric together that are not of equal length. There will be markings on the pattern to indicate the area that is to be eased. Machine stitch through one layer of fabric with a long stitch just inside the seam allowance. Leave several inches of thread at each end. Pin the pieces of fabric right sides together with the section to be eased on top. Gently pull the machine stitches from each end and evenly adjust the folds that form. Do this by putting a pin at each end of the area to be eased, then a pin in the middle, and pins in the middles of the two sections formed, repeating again and again until small, even gathers are held in place. Stitch along seam, line.

Our entire staff at LEGGETTS FABRICS is here to help make your sewing projects as easy as possible so please don't ever hesitate to ask our help. We invite you to come on in and see our fantastic selection of patterns, materials, and notions. You'll find us at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No. 9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101. Open: Mon.-Sat. 10-6. "Quality, Your Only Real Bargain".

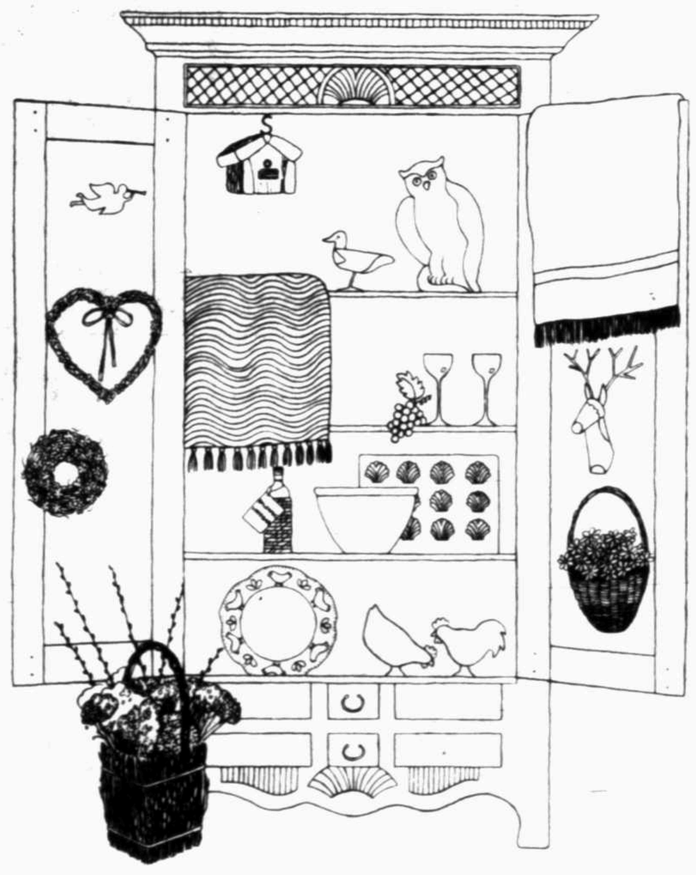

HINT:
Try not to catch the folds of the fabric in the seam when easing.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Back from a delightful 10-day Jamaican holiday are Lee and Bill Heard. Along with members of Lee's family from Indiana, they enjoyed a week's stay in a villa near Ocho Rios and a two-day stopover at Montego Bay en route home. They returned with a fondness for the native food, which is highly seasoned with curry.

The Heards were pleasantly surprised by the change in the Jamaican people. They were found to be extremely friendly and pro-American. The slogan, "Jamaica — No Problem," has become the island's byword.

While visiting with Lee about her trip, we also were interested to hear about the status of the Hill house, where the Heards now reside. In 1979 the stately home of the late J.E. (Bob) and Irene Hill was moved from the 1200 block of West Illinois Street to a site eight miles south of the city. At that time the game plan was to turn the house into a restaurant, but Lee says those plans have since been put "on hold."

Meanwhile, the Heards are continuing with the home's restoration, including materials from the old Petroleum Club and Scharbauer Hotel in their work and even duplicating Mrs. Hill's flower beds. They plan to have an open house later this spring to enable some of the longtime Midlanders to see the progress that is being made.

HAVE YOU HEARD that this year's Midland Junior Woman's Club Parade of Homes will feature the gorgeous residences of Charlene and Doug Bunnell, 905 Country Club Drive; Marylyn and Dave Leonard, 3402 Choate Place; Gwyn and Don Sparks, 2407 Dartmouth, and Pam and Fred Walsh, No. 9 Hialeah?

Scheduled from two to six o'clock the afternoon of April 29, the 1984 tour will benefit the Plamer Drug Abuse Program and the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

Tickets will not be sold at the door on the day of the event, but are available ahead of time from club members or by contacting Kathy Dill at 694-0186.

DR. EVELYN MILAM, president of Cottey College in Nevada, Mo., was in town last weekend to address an area-wide meeting of the P.E.O. Sisterhood. While here she had the added pleasure of visiting with her cousin Peggy (Mrs. Lloyd) Heineman and family. A fourth generation Texan, Dr. Milam comes from Sudan northwest of Lubbock, but she has been a resident of Missouri for the past 10 years while serving as president of the two-year liberal arts college for women. Cottey is the only college in the nation owned and operated by a women's organization — the P.E.O. Sisterhood.

It also was good to see Lois Marie (Mrs. Leon) Coats, a former resident of Midland, at the meeting. Now residing in Lubbock, Lois Marie will be installed as first vice president of the Texas State Chapter of the P.E.O. later this month and will become state president in 1985.

SUSIE GREER and Kurt Lauvstad, who will be married here on April 21, have been honored at a series of pre-nuptial festivities.

The whirl of events began in February with an engagement party hosted by the bride's parents Sue and Dr. John Greer, and her maternal grandmother Lois (Mrs. Joe) Bacon of El Paso. A special guest was the groom's mother June (Mrs. E.E.) Lauvstad from Osceola, Iowa.

The home of Diane (Mrs. Ed) Nowell was the setting for the bride-to-be's first shower, which featured kitchen and linen items. Co-hostesses were Linda (Mrs. Johnny) Brown, Barbara (Mrs. Tom) Garvin, Noella (Mrs. Roger) Hagar, Joyce (Mrs. Sam) Owens and Virginia (Mrs. Bobby) Sanders. A clever arrangement of large hot pad mittens filled with wooden cooking utensils decorated the front door. The floral arrangement on the serving table featured Susie's chosen colors of blue and yellow with daisies and copper measuring spoons in a soup tureen.

A miscellaneous display shower was given in the home of Wanda (Mrs. Jimmy) Watson. Co-hostesses were Kathleen (Mrs. Richard) Brewer, Pat (Mrs. Marion) Causey, Jean (Mrs. Thurston) Dean, Lou Nelle (Mrs. Jeff) George, Fuffy (Mrs. Bill) Green, Dimple (Mrs. John Godwin, Beverly (Mrs. Richard) Klempnauer, Genell (Mrs. Martin) Neill, Glenda (Mrs. Herbert) Pearce, Ann (Mrs. Ed) Sneed, Velva (Mrs. Vernon) Stokes, Elaine (Mrs. Richard) Warwick and Charlotte (Mrs. J.C.) Whitaker.

Special guests were the bride's grandmothers Mrs. Bacon and Alice (Mrs. C.T.) Greer. The serving table featured an elegant silk flower arrangement in blue and white, with crystal and silver appointments.

Sarah (Mrs. Russell) Neisig and her daughter Andrea opened their home for a mother-daughter party and lingerie shower. Assisting the Neisigs were Gwen (Mrs. Roy) Carley and Keren, Pat (Mrs. Jim) Ingram and Kelle, Sue (Mrs. Dan) Secker and Meredith and Dolores (Mrs. Al) Walvoord and Leanna. Guests were presented matching mother-daughter corsages and coordinated name tags.

ALUMNAE OF KAPPA Kappa Gamma and Pi Beta Phi sororities will hold their traditional Monmouth Duo celebration this year at the home of Kappa Lucy Woodside and husband John in Saddle Club North. A cocktail party, which is to include husbands and dates, is planned for 7:30 p.m. Thursday.

Secretaries week, day set

Professional Secretaries International, originator and sponsor of Professional Secretaries Week and Day, has set April 22-28 as Professional Secretaries Week and April 25 as Professional Secretaries Day. This designated week, begun in 1952, is observed in the United States and Canada. PSI Affiliated Autonomous Associations observe the week worldwide.

Professional Secretaries Week 1984 will emphasize "1984: Secretary of the Year."

Irmalee Ingrham, CPS, president of Permian chapter of PSI, said 1984 Professional Secretaries Week activities will be directed by Phyllis Price, chairman, who is employed with United Bank. Planned are Secretaries Week Luncheon on April 24 at Midland Civic Center with guest speaker Jack Swallow, Midland independent landman. Permian chapter's Secretary of the Year, Ms. Ingrham, will also be recognized.

Two scholarships, one to a student at each of the two high schools, will be presented. On Secretaries Day the chapter will host a continental breakfast provided by Office Interiors. Area secretaries and their bosses are invited to attend the luncheon and breakfast. For reservations to the luncheon call 684-5826 by Wednesday. For more information on the breakfast call 683-4643.

Retirement spots rated

Hearst Feature Service

Go south, old man, but not too far, the new Rand McNally "Place-Rated Retirement Guide" suggests, paraphrasing Horace Greeley's famous advice.

If you are thinking of retiring to a life of sunny contentment in Florida or Arizona, think twice, says the just-published guide to finding the best places in America for retirement living. High crime rates, high living costs and climate extremes help keep all but one retirement haven in those states (Prescott, Ariz.) out of the 25 top-ranked retirement areas among 107 described and rated by Guide authors Richard Boyer and David Savageau.

When it comes to mild climate, even Oak Harbor, Wash., ranks ahead of any place in the southeastern states. Albuquerque, N. M. (16th), and Miami (22nd), are the only representatives of the southernmost states among the top 25 in the "Climate and Terrain" chapter.

The Retirement Guide focuses on areas — not always cities — that are the most popular for retirement living and then assembles hundreds of facts and observations concerning each into six chapters on climate, housing availability and costs, health care facilities and costs, crime and personal safety, economic conditions, and recreation. All are based on the needs and concerns of those of — or approaching — retirement age.

Brevard, N.C., Asheville, N.C., and Clarksville-Mount Airy, Ga., all in the New Appalachia region, ranked 1, 2, and 3, respectively, in the guide. The area combines low costs of living and housing, low crime rates, generally adequate health-care facilities and some of the best mild four-season climates in the world — not to mention the scenery, which ranges from beautiful to spectacular, according to the guide. The only minuses listed for the region are that it lacks the cultural and entertainment amenities of large metropolitan areas.

If you are looking for leisure activities, particularly outdoor leisure activities, options in two Maine areas are above average: Camden-Penobscot Bay (9th) and Bar Harbor-Frenchman Bay (11th) also offer the following pluses: Reasonable housing costs and below-average crime rate. The minuses are: Harsh winter climate, middling ratings in living costs, and range of health-care facilities.

Here's the list of the complete top 10:

1. Brevard, N.C.
2. Asheville, N.C.
3. Clarkesville-Mount Airy, Ga.
4. Crossville, Tenn.
5. Lexington-Fayette, Ky.
6. Las Cruces, N.M.
7. Harrison, Ark.
8. Roswell, N.M.
9. Camden-Penobscot Bay, Maine
10. Cookeville, Tenn.

Lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

'Knights' carry on tradition

Hearst Feature Service

The age of chivalry is long gone, but there are those among us, many of them Americans, who carry on knightly good works as members of a unique Roman Catholic elite, The Sovereign Military Hospitaller Order of St. John of Jerusalem, of Rhodes and Malta, more generally known as the Knights of Malta.

Among the American knight-errants are Lee Iacocca, Spyros Skouras, Baron Hilton, former New York City Mayor Robert Wagner, former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, CIA director William Casey, and President Reagan's representative to the Vatican, William A. Wilson.

"Take J. Peter Grace, chairman and chief executive officer of W.R. Grace and Co. and president of the American Association of the Knights of Malta," Town and Country says in the April issue.

Grace, reports the magazine, has shipped off 60 tons of dry milk to Brazil, raised millions of dollars for hospitals and welfare organizations and coordinated distribution of millions of dollars worth of medicine and medical supplies to El Salvador and Guatemala.

In so doing, he has carried out the vows of the international order to "Serve Our Lords, the poor and the sick," first taken by the founding knights before the First Crusade in 1099.

Started as a hospitaller order to care for the poor and sick who visited the Holy Land, the order won the support of monarchs for centuries, fought the Ottoman Empire to a standstill in the Mediterranean, and today still provides assistance to victims of natural disasters and casualties of war.

Since 1834, the headquarters have been on three acres of sovereign land centered on a palazzo in the heart of Rome. At the entrance, the massive gates bear plaques in English and Italian that read: "Extraterritorial — Please Ring the Bell."

Says Town and Country: "Perhaps the words of Count de Marcellus, spoken in the French Parliament, best sum up the feelings of those whose faith in the order is unabated.

" 'It will always reign; it will always uphold the scepter of honor. This ancient and majestic order will always cover with the mantle of the Hospitaller the weak, the poor and the oppressed. Planted on the tomb of the Savior, it has taken roots in immortality.' "

SUBISARETTA-HENDERSON

Memorial Christian Church was the setting for the Saturday wedding of Lisa Diane Subisaretta and Mark Patrick Henderson, both of Midland. The Rev. Clark Ford officiated the 7:30 p.m. ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. James C. Subisaretta of Houston, and Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Henderson of Midland.

Jennifer Weston of The Woodlands was maid of honor. Best man was J. Moore of Midland. Ushers were Mike Henderson of Midland and Ron Henderson of Duncan, Okla., both brothers of the bridegroom.

Following a wedding trip to Acapulco, Mexico, the couple will live in Midland.

Hearst Feature Service

Finished in glossy black, it resembles a snappy version of an electric keyboard. Its keys are designed to reproduce a Steinway's action. You think "grand piano" even before the first note sounds.

But press a button and these same keys bring forth the sound of a string quartet. Push another button and get a trumpet blast, or a choral harmony, or a drum beat.

Welcome to the world of Kurzweil 250. This digital synthesizer, reports the April issue of Connoisseur, does what no machine has ever done: electronically duplicate the unique sound of a piano — and hundreds of other instruments too!

This computerized keyboard is the latest invention of high technology's wunderkind, 36-year-old Ray Kurzweil, who possesses "the inventive spirit of Firestone, the mastery of details of Edison, and the daring of Marconi." His 250 was invented after a visit to the Los Angeles home of singer Stevie Wonder, already a loyal user of an earlier Kurzweil device, a table-top machine that reads books to the blind. It was Wonder who wanted a keyboard synthesizer that reproduced the sounds of an orchestra.

No one had ever even come close to duplicating electronically the unique sound of a piano, let alone that of other instruments, Connoisseur reports. But Kurzweil replied, "I think I can do that." Exactly one year later, he produced a working model. Larry Bodony, one of the engineers on the project, recalled, "We didn't figure we had done the job until you could close your eyes when you heard the sound and see the instrument."

He has apparently succeeded. Robert Moog, the inventor of one of the first and most famous electronic synthesizers, acclaimed the 250 for its "complete realism." And Lyle Mays, keyboard player for the Pat Metheny jazz group, was excited after trying it out. "It allows me to play on the keyboard anything from piano to strings to drums."

AT WIT'S END

Cooking not 'religious experience'

By ERMA BOMBECK

When the kids moved out, I got rid of the trough and bought two placemats shaped like tulips. My husband and I weren't going to "eat" anymore. We were going to "dine."

It was then I discovered there are no escargot helpers, no stovetop bearnaise sauces, and no flaming flambes that you could just add water to.

There was another revelation I had to face. When you're over 50, there just aren't enough days left in your life to waste preparing Peking Duck.

We started to eat out a lot. The kitchen became a place where we just went to get a drink of water. I had a lot of guilt over our $20,000 drinking fountain until I read where Mimi Sheraton, a national restaurant critic of many years, said she and her husband were at the point where they couldn't look at one another across the dining room table, so they ate out, mainly because the quality of their conversation was higher in a restaurant.

That's it! I couldn't put my finger on it before, but the woman was right. It isn't what you eat, it's what you say over it. Our conversation at home was reduced to car repairs, kids and bugs under the sink. We were short on ambiance. I'd say, "Are you going to sit down to dinner or are you going to clean out the refrigerator?"

"I'm looking for the mustard," he'd say.

"You don't need mustard with all that salt in it."

"I don't need bursitis, but I've got it!"

"What are you staring at?" I'd ask. "The exhaust fan over the stove. When was the last time you cleaned it?"

"EAT!"

"What am I eating?"

"Don't ask."

When we eat out, I tend to drop the name Mikhail Baryshnikov for no good reason.

My husband sniffs a wine cork and blesses it. He waves pepper away like it was an unwashed relative and spends the evening discussing our policy in El Salvador.

I don't know what makes the difference.

DEAR DOCTOR

Use of laxatives not way of calorie control

By JEANNE A. PETREK, M.D.

Q: Do oral laxatives really cause calories to be lost with the bowel movement? I have heard that this doesn't work. A girlfriend of mine does this routinely. I would say she has bulimia.

A: Under no circumstances do laxatives expel calories. The use of laxatives following binge eating or bulimia gets rid of only 10 percent or less of the calories eaten.

This finding was confirmed by a study of calorie absorption in bulimic women who had used laxative purges in attempting weight control for five years.

Twenty-five laxative tablets (one is the usual dose) after breakfast and lunch resulted in the absorption of 90 percent of the 2,500 calories eaten!

Similar tests in normal women volunteers resulted in 96 percent absorption. Therefore, even with severe and medically dangerous laxative use, one can lose only four to 10 percent of calories from the previous meal. Laxative abuse is clearly ineffective and dangerous.

Q: What is all the discussion about DES? My mother remembers taking some pills during pregnancy, but she is not sure that it was a hormone. How worried should I be? How likely was it that the pills she took were DES?

A: Diethyl Stibesterol (DES) was developed in 1938 and became the first inexpensive, effective oral estrogen. It was used for many reasons, among them stopping milk production after childbirth and replacing estrogen during menopause.

In the 1940s another use of DES became common when doctors prescribed it to prevent miscarriage if a pregnant woman experienced bleeding or was known to have miscarried previously.

Its use was common during the 1950s and early in the 1960s. Finally, in 1971 the Food and Drug Administration advised doctors against the use of DES and other closely related drugs during pregnancy.

This advice was necessary since research had by then established that daughters born of mothers who used DES had a greater chance of developing a rare vaginal cancer known as clear-cell cancer.

Although rare at any age, this type of cancer had been unheard of in women under the age of 50. Then several women aged 15 to 30 were found with vaginal clear-cell cancer.

As of 1984, those between the ages of 13 and 44 may possibly have been exposed to DES before birth. About two million women have already been identified.

Out of this total, the risk of cancer is known to be quite low. Overall, from one out of 1,000 to one out of 10,000 DES daughters will develop this unusual cancer.

The best way to determine whether a mother took DES — if she was uncertain — would be to question her obstetrician. If the obstetrician has died or retired, ask the local hospital which doctor assumed the practice, since the charts might still be available. Also the hospital chart of the mother's admission may list factors in the pregnancy, such as DES given to prevent miscarriage.

There are also hospital birth records (admission and delivery notes) that may be obtained from the hospital and which could yield information. Unfortunately, DES was a popular drug that went by more than 75 different brand names. The "New Woman's Guide to Health and Medicine" by Caroline Derbyshire lists all the names, as well as providing other valuable DES information.

If anyone suspects that she is a "DES daughter," she should help her gynecologist by getting any information available. The exam will include a careful visual and manual examination and a Pap smear.

Colposcopy is also routinely used.

Number of paralysis victims on rise

DALLAS (AP) — The number of Americans confined to wheelchairs rose 57.7 percent between 1969 and 1980, according to preliminary findings of a study by the American Paralysis Association (APA).

The latest U.S. population census in 1980 found 645,000 non-institutionalized wheelchair users, as compared to 409,000 in 1969, with motor vehicle accidents apparently responsible for the increase.

But other sources in the study indicate the 1980 figures are too low, says Rear Adm. Dick Van Orden, vice president for research of the APA, the nation's largest private funder of research to cure paralysis caused by central nervous system injury or disease.

"Few reliable statistics on the number of paralysis victims in this country exist," he says, "but our best estimate is 500,000 paralyzed by spinal cord injury alone, with up to 15,000 new cases each year."

Birth defects

By The Associated Press

In 1981, an estimated 25,000 babies were born with heart defects in the United States. About 6,500 deaths resulted from congenital heart defects that year.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Psychiatric help for depression

Dear Dr. Solomon: I suppose it is understandable that a person who finds out he has cancer is going to be depressed. That's why I'm wondering why my brother was told by his doctor that he should see a psychiatrist while he is being treated for cancer. I am willing to lend him the money for anything that I think will do him some good, but I can't see how a psychiatrist can help. I would appreciate any advice you might be able to give me on this. — Joyce, Miami.

Dear Joyce: The results of a study of cancer patients who were undergoing radiation therapy indicated that psychotherapy can help reduce the emotional stresses to which they are subject. In the study, all 50 patients who attended weekly psychotherapy sessions seemed to benefit, regardless of their age, sex, or socioeconomic or marital status.

Of course no one can guarantee the outcome of treatment in a particular patient. You might want to discuss your concerns with your brother's physician.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am very active physically and have only the usual aches and pains that a 60-year-old man would normally have. However, I find that when I have to stand for any length of time, my back starts acting up. Why should this happen when I'm not doing anything? — Gus, N.Y.C.

Dear Gus: A person who sits or stands for more than half an hour may be experiencing more strain than if he were engaged in lifting heavy weights. Try to alternate sitting or standing still with activities that require body movement.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband is a long-time heavy smoker and he is always coughing. When I tell him to go to his doctor, he says that everyone coughs, so what's the big deal. I do know that lots of people cough, but I would like your opinion on whether he should see a doctor. — Mrs. D.J., N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. J.: A long-time heavy smoker who has a chronic cough or suffers from hoarseness should see a physician. He should also stop smoking.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Does taping an ankle before playing ball help protect the ankle, especially when it has been sprained once before? — Hal, Denver, Colo.

Dear Hal: As you probably know if you play ball, the ankle is the most frequently sprained joint; moreover, once a person has had a sprained ankle, there is an increased risk of recurrence. Taping the ankle decreases the range of motion but helps prevent further injury.

'Breakthrough' could change treatments

Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Researchers here may be on the brink of a breakthrough that could radically change disease treatment and has the potential to cure ailments that include cancer and diabetes.

Scientists from Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center said they are examining a way to clone healthy bone marrow genes for use in a procedure that could cure the diseases and improve the success rate of organ transplants. They said the process is called "gene transfer," which will be tried on laboratory animals in about six months. It may be a decade before it is used on human subjects.

Dr. E. Donnall Thomas, associate director for clinical research at the Hutchinson Center, said that other promising developments include experiments conducted with the use of interferon, an immune system stimulant, in the fight against leukemia. Thomas is a pioneer in the field of bone marrow transplants.

Gene transfer is a genetic therapy in which defective genes are removed from cells and replaced with normal genes. The process will be researched extensively during the next decade, Thomas said.

Dr. Rainer Storb, another Fred Hutchinson researcher studying genetic therapy, says scientists are close to uncovering information that could revolutionize disease treatment. "We're where we were on bone marrow transplants 19 years ago," Storb said. "We're on the lab bench with test tubes and tissue cultures."

The technique amounts to "sticking good genes into cells with bad genes," Storb said. "We can now put the genes into the cells; the problem is to stick them in the cells that cause the right things to happen."

Those cells are called the "stem" cells, a group of cells that produce particular types of cells that in turn evolve into more specialized cells. By introducing the clone into the bone marrow stem cell, the abnormal cells may be suppressed and the newly created cells allowed to flourish.

"The next step will be laboratory animals," Storb said. "If that works, the flood gates will be open."

The procedure carries the promise not only of curing certain diseases, but of easing the transplantation of any organ. By manipulating the bone marrow cells, doctors could eliminate organ rejection, Storb said.

Thomas, who wrote the first paper on bone marrow transplants in 1957, noted that only a little more than a decade ago, bone marrow transplants were considered ethically justifiable only as a desperation measure for dying patients. Today, the overall success rate is more than 50 percent, he said.

Matching bone marrow donors and recipients by computer also holds promise, Thomas said. In the past, only donors with close relatives having compatible bone marrow were selected for the operation, but now technology can provide virtually everyone in need with a compatible donor, Thomas said, even though the cost is significant.

Researchers seek test to detect AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seven research centers share a $1.1 million grant to find a test to detect the mysterious immune system disease AIDS early and permit screening to eliminate blood donations that can transmit it.

The money was distributed by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute on April 1. Federal health officials, who announced the new grants, said the risk of contracting AIDS from a blood transfusion is very slight.

"AIDS is a very uncommon, rare complication of blood transfusions," said Dr. James Curran, director of the Centers for Disease Control's AIDS program in Atlanta. "It is generally quite well accepted that AIDS can be transmitted through blood transfusions. But it is widely known that that is a rare event."

The CDC is studying 49 suspected cases of AIDS where the patient did not appear to be in a high risk group but had received a blood transfusion or blood products, Curran said. About 22 of those persons have died during the past five years since AIDS was identified.

"Forty-nine cases in well over a year is extremely small," Dr. Curran said. Curran pointed out that about 3.5 million Americans receive blood transfusions each year.

There have been at least 3,775 cases of AIDS and 1,642 of the victims, or 43.5 percent, died. The most frequent victims still are homosexual and bisexual men with multiple sex partners.

Study: Tonsillectomies often unnecessary surgery

BOSTON (AP) — The most common operation on children — removing their tonsils — can definitely help youngsters with frequent and severe sore throats, but many will get better without surgery, a major study concludes.

Each year, U.S. doctors operate on about 400,000 children to remove their tonsils — lymphoid tissues on either side of the throat at the back of the tongue which act as a filter against disease organisms, but which often become a site of infection themselves.

Even though tonsillectomies on children are less popular than a generation ago, they are still the most common childhood operation.

No clear guidelines exist to determine when tonsillectomies are needed and the operation is controversial.

Dr. Jack L. Paradise, who directed the latest study, the first major U.S. review of tonsillectomies, said some doctors perform them on children who have occasional sore throats, while others virtually refuse to do them at all.

"This paper refutes the two extremes and comes down in the middle," Paradise said in an interview.

The study was conducted at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh on 187 children who were severely affected with recurrent throat infections. It was published in a recent New England Journal of Medicine.

"A child with an extreme history (of sore throats) stands a much better chance of being free of difficulty if he has his tonsils out than if he doesn't," Paradise said. "But among the children who don't have their tonsils out will be a substantial fraction who get better on their own."

Whether a child with many sore throats should have tonsils removed depends on how important it is for the youngster to be free of these bouts of illness, Paradise said.

DEAR ABBY

Fiancee should be told truth

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 27 years old and planning to ask a young Christian lady to be my wife. We are very much in love and committed to each other.

There is one problem. I am bisexual. Will marriage cure my bisexuality? And do you think I should reveal this to my fiancee before I propose marriage to her? — OKLAHOMA BISEXUAL

DEAR BISEXUAL: Bisexuality is not a "disease" for which one must seek a "cure" in order to eradicate. One can control his (or her) sexual behavior — but not his sexual urges.

And yes, I think you should tell your fiancee before proposing marriage.

DEAR ABBY: First, I know that I am a very mixed-up person. I'm 36, have two children, and I'm on my third husband. I believe in God and know there is a hell, but for some reason I'm not afraid of going there even after all the bad things I've done.

I started making love to almost every man I dated when I was 15. I cheated on all my husbands, including the one I'm now married to. I don't know why, because basically most men are alike. None of them do very much for me, so I know I'm not a nymphomaniac, if there is such a thing.

I'm currently involved with a man much younger than me. He's married, too. I think I love him, but if he decided not to see me anymore, my feelings might be hurt for a week or two, then I'd find someone else to take his place.

What in the world is the matter with me? I think I need a psychiatrist, but I can't afford their prices. — CONFUSED IN BOSTON

DEAR CONFUSED: You have been using sex to fill an unmet emotional need that's been gnawing at you since you were very young.

There is an excellent mental health clinic in your area. Look in your phone book under Mental Health or County Health Services. Call and make an appointment. You will be charged only as much as you can afford to pay.

Please don't put it off. The longest march in the world starts with one step. God bless and good luck.

CONFIDENTIAL TO HEARTBROKEN IN TULSA: My condolences. I know how you feel. I lost my beautiful mother in 1945. (She was only 57.) And a few years later I lost a wonderful father. (He was 62.) Not a day passes that I don't thank God for letting me have my parents for as long as I did. I know many who were not nearly as blessed as I. And when I think of those who have survived a far greater tragedy — losing their children — it makes me ashamed for feeling cheated because I didn't have my parents longer.

Marrying 'up' a simple maneuver, says author

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

Perhaps you know the type.

Jill Upperclimbing is an expert on the two best dishes at the new Indonesian restaurant in town, how to get to private parking in the stadium, the funny faux pas the governor's wife made at the luncheon and the difference between a Shang and a Chou dynasty bronze.

Jack Nimblestriver has a tiny, well-furnished apartment in an upper-class neighborhood, frequents the bars where executives and big-money professionals hang out after work and is a desirable crew member on any yacht.

Financially, the two of them barely squeak by, but between them, they share twin qualities guaranteed to endear them to the rich: the ability to be useful and an understanding of affluent orientations.

And their goal? Of course, darling. It's to marry up.

Now, pause a minute before you raise your eyebrows and declare that you would never dream of conniving to achieve such a thing. Hasn't the fantasy of being swept off your feet by a man or woman in better financial circumstances than you — someone who loves you just for yourself — always lurked in the back of your mind?

Of course it has. And, according to New York psychotherapist Joanna T. Steichen, author of "Marrying Up" (Rawson Associates), this goal actually has quite a bit of merit.

That is, if you manage not to totally sell yourself out along the way.

The truth is, according to Steichen, who had plenty of opportunity to observe the rich and the superrich as wife to the late photographer Edward Steichen: "It's as easy to fall in love with a rich person as a poor person."

As long as you keep certain cautionary notes firmly in mind.

— It won't work to marry somebody just for their money. If you don't find anything to really like about the person you've married, if you don't find any shared values, "those marriages are always disasters," Steichen said.

— You've got to find a rich person who wants you for the things you have to offer. "Part of the problem in marrying up is that the rich or person with money equivalents (such as good background, education, cultural values) may not want you for the things you have to offer," Steichen said.

"If you want to develop your intellect and have an independent career and some man who has a tremendous fortune just wants a clotheshorse to show off his diamonds at the dinner table, you may not want that even if you qualify in terms of appearance."

She added: "It's OK to marry somebody who is rich and powerful and well connected if you take the time to find that it's a good relationship that will work for you. But if you're going to be dominated and the demands will be unbearable for you, then it's not worth it."

— Even if you do marry somebody rich, you're still going to have to work at the relationship. "So many people believe that 'if I just go to the right place and meet the right person they will know I'm wonderful and they'll treat me like a princess forever and ever.' They don't realize that you have to work at a relationship as much as you have to work at a career. There's no perfect person to marry," Steichen said.

This is all terribly illuminating, isn't it? But wait.

If you keep these facts in mind, according to Steichen, then it's perfectly OK to be practical and aim your affections at somebody who can give you what you want in the world, despite the common notion that it's somehow "dirty" to consciously intend to marry up.

"I believe we have a very hypocritical attitude toward marriage in this society," she said. "Until this century, the basis of marriage has never been pure love and romance. Upperclass people have always wanted their children to know people of good family with something to look forward to in the world. It's very defensive to say, 'Oh, marriage has to be pure romance. Only the person's character matters.' That's ridiculous. Pure romance leads to as much disaster as calculated gold digging."

Now that you have permission to let out into the open your secret desire to marry up, and you promise you're only going to marry a rich person you really, truly like, here is what you've been waiting for: concrete steps to take.

First, fix in mind the precise category of the moneyed to which you aspire. Is it Old Money, that which has been in the family for more than two generations? If so, do you want what Steichen calls the Useful Rich who have a sense of social responsibility, or the Useless Rich who live only for their own pleasure?

— Snob Money: The goal of which is to duplicate the look, manner and settings of Old Money and be assimilated into it as quickly as possible.

— The Statustocracy: A subgroup of Snob Money whose membership is concerned with transmitting an impression of excellence and who cares more for instant celebrity than the slow route to the aristocracy.

— Slob Money: It "belongs to people who have made a lot of money and like to enjoy it but don't aspire to any particular social group." These are people like rock stars who own mansions but still wear torn T-shirts, or entrepreneurs who donate huge sums to the local church.

Now that your goals are set, the main thing to realize when attempting to snare a wealthy mate is that this is a serious undertaking requiring a great deal of time, patience and training. The name of the game is to create a network of powerful and privileged friends who, just maybe, one of these days will introduce you to a suitable mate.

Working up is one way to do it. Upgrade your own career so you can work with big achievers. Then marry them. Another way to do it is to play on the network building opportunities involved in such careers as interior design, catering, dress design, floral display, hairdressing, pet grooming, sports instruction or real estate.

As Steichen writes: "A Realtor who is sensitive to the needs of the client and is helpful in providing extra information and smoothing out difficulties could become a memorable person. Strategically timed follow-up calls ... may lead to a social relationship, usually one more useful in developing the network than in making a direct catch."

Playing up works much the same way. According to Steichen, "Among the rich, a poorer acquaintance's ability to share their pleasure and skill in athletic and cultural pursuits can form the basis for continuing a relationship."

This means practicing your tennis, learning how to handle a halyard and developing the ability to guide a horse over a fence. It also means becoming knowledgeable in subjects which interest their specialties like art, architecture and historic preservation.

It helps, writes Steichen, to read such publications as Vogue, Town & Country, House and Garden, Bon Appetit and The New Yorker, to bone up on the whereabouts of the current chic hangouts, and then go there.

It also helps to research which non-profit organizations in town are attracting the attention of the category of the moneyed to which you aspire. There are three things to do here: Volunteer, volunteer and volunteer some more, remembering, of course, that it may take two years or more "to become known and know which connections really turn out to matter."

Self-esteem exercises designed to raise child's confidence level

By MARSHA KING
Hearst Feature Service

Self-esteem soon may be the trendiest issue in family life. Hundreds of parents, influenced by psychologists and educators, are reading books and taking classes to learn how to make their children feel good about themselves.

Jean Illsley Clarke, educator and author of "Self Esteem: A Family Affair," says that families are where people first learn how lovable they are and how capable they one day might be.

"But there have been dramatic changes in the family," she adds. "The family doesn't have a clear pattern of how it's to be. When people don't have pattern, they feel unsure. They need lots of support."

The Minnesota woman teaches parents through workbook exercises how to raise their children's self-image.

Learn to give children "affirmations," she suggests, which respond to their specific developmental needs. Practice the art of constructive criticism and healthy hassling. Examine your own parenting style. Be good to yourself. Learn to accept a "stroke" and how to get one when your "stroke bank" is empty.

Clarke's work is the heart of ongoing self-esteem classes in 15 states, Canada and Germany. She personally conducts 50 to 80 self-esteem workshops each year.

In Yakima, Wash., parents convicted of abuse are referred by the courts to self-esteem classes run by instructors Clarke has trained. Yakima also has integrated Clarke's teachings into its public schools and social services system.

"In all other parenting programs, self-esteem is really the basic foundation. Clarke's program scoops up other theories," says Judy Popp, director of early childhood education for the Yakima Public Schools. "She's particularly good because she focuses on developmental stages and gives parents a chance to be in charge. She gives them practical tools."

Clarke emphasizes "affirmations" and parenting styles in her work. Truly effective affirmations, she says, are "far more than I love you 179 times a day or an indiscriminate 'that's great' pat on the back."

Instead, Clarke suggests a list of affirmations tailored to human developmental stages, be they newborn or teenager. Adults need all of them, she reminds.

She cites the 1-year-old and the 17-year-old as an example; they share many of the same developmental tasks. Clarke says both need reinforcement for starting to do things on their own. Her age-appropriate affirmation reads, "It's OK to do things and get support and protection at the same time."

Parents might take her cue and tell their little one, "Hey, Scotty, where are you going with that big bucket of water? Let me help you." The 17-year-old might need to hear, "Annie, it's scarey to volunteer at the hospital's emergency room, but I think it's a great thing to do. I'll help you any way I can."

"Tell a child what not to do, why and give an alternative," she says. Avoid plastic "left-handed" compliments such as "That's a beautiful picture for a kid your age." Drop the devastatingly destructive "don't be" messages like, "I'd be in Florida if it wasn't for you."

Whenever possible, avoid criticism. Instead, catch your children in the act of being capable and loving. "Your room is so clean" goes a lot further, Clarke believes, than "What a garbage pit. Clean it up."

Clarke identifies four parenting styles. The first two build self-esteem. "Nurturing" parents tell a child, "I'm glad you're here." "Structuring and protecting" parents show how to do things well, to change, to win.

"Marshmallowing" grown-ups sound supportive, but invite dependency. "You poor thing," they say, "let me do it for you." The criticizer tears down, finds fault and uses global phrases such as "you always, and you never."

Pattern of teens' violence in dating accelerates in college

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features Syndicate

It begins in high school. A survey conducted by Oregon State University and published in "Seventeen" magazine reported that 12 percent of all teens have experienced "abuse" in their dating relationships.

Girls as well as boys "shove, slap, kick, bite and hit with fists."

Many of those aggressive teens said they consider violent behavior a "signal of love."

The pattern accelerates in college. By then the aggressors are predominantly male. The females are playing a more passive, and traditional, role: victim. Since they're no longer living at home, bruises go undetected by concerned parents and others.

And sometimes dating violence includes rape.

HAVE YOU EVER heard the phrase "date rape"? It wasn't part of the language 10 years ago. But today many young college and career women fear sexual assault from dates who won't take "no" for an answer. On several college campuses, including the prestigious Stanford University, students have formed organizations aimed at protecting women from rape.

DATING VIOLENCE is a social problem almost hidden from parents and adults who no longer date. The Oregon study disclosed that one-fourth of the 355 students questioned said they'd been physically abused by their partner during dating or live-in relationships. And once established, the pattern of violence in young lives continues.

Oregon therapist Michaele Swenson calls it "a prelude to spouse abuse." She terms dating violence "a major hidden social problem," and adds: "People who are removed from the youth culture would be shocked at the extent of physical abuse among couples who believe they are 'in love.'"

Sixteen-year-old Wendy and her 17-year-old boyfriend, Doug, saw the movie "Endless Love" last year. "He asked me to go with him that night," Wendy says.

"It was so romantic. When Brooke Shields walked across the room away from everyone else and up the stairs to her boyfriend sitting alone, I cried."

Like the young lovers in the movie (based on the book of the same name by Scott Spencer), Wendy and Doug saw their love as an intense, all-consuming experience. Part of being in love was "having fights." And part of "fighting" was "smacking each other hard in the face."

HER MOTHER said, "I was shocked. She's never seen violent behavior at home. We didn't even spank our kids when they were little. Why would she think slapping is part of love?"

Actually, Wendy was beginning to have her doubts about the love and violence connection. She complained bitterly when her parents forced the break-up, but she admits now, "It was really a relief."

Wendy didn't know how to handle what was happening to her. She didn't know how to end the slapping without losing Doug too.

Missouri psychologist Christine Layton says, "When one violent incident is allowed to happen without question, then others will surely follow.

"Teens — or anyone who has been physically abused — must say to the aggressive person, 'This can't happen again; if it does, we're through.' And they must carry out the threat if the violent behavior is repeated."

Some girls continue to accept violence in courtship beyond high school because they think pain is part of love...and they believe accepting occasional abuse is all part of "standing by your man." Women are supposed to forgive.

MS. LAYTON SAYS, "High-school girls like Wendy hit back, but women seldom do. The abuse becomes one-sided during the college years and continues this way.

"Women are socialized to be dependent and passive. The young woman who allows herself to be hit is caught in an intense love situation. She also has weak feelings of self-identity outside the relationship."

Mary Kay insists she didn't realize that George was abusing her while it was happening.

They dated for two years, before moving into an apartment together in her last year of college. She often talked to her friends about his "temper:" those sudden outbursts of anger which could erupt any time.

But she never said the temper outbursts often ended when he picked her up and threw her across the room.

"The first time, he lifted me up and threw me down on the couch," she says. "I wasn't hurt, just stunned; and so was he. We made up and he promised never to do that again. He kissed the bruises on my arm. He was so full of remorse, I felt sorry for him."

FOR TWO MONTHS George behaved like a prince. Ms. Swenson says this is not uncommon. "The good behavior following abuse is another factor which keeps the relationship going. After a violent outburst, there's usually a long honeymoon period where everything is wonderful again, better than it was right before the attack."

When George lost his temper and threw Mary Kay the second time, he was even sorrier. Chocolates and candy and tender lovemaking were her rewards.

She says, "I blamed myself for provoking him. I kept telling myself, 'He has a strong temper like a lot of men do; and I've got to help him control it.'"

His anger was frequently ignited by jealousy. If another man smiled at Mary Kay, George grew furious. She admits, "I was flattered by his jealousy.

"Sure, it's a backhanded compliment, but it was still flattering to me. He loved me so much, he was enraged when another man looked at me."

Gradually the violence increased. "We were so intense," she says, "that I was exhausted on Monday mornings after spending a weekend alone with him.

New York therapist Aileen Murray says, "Abusive men also suffer from low self-esteem just as their victims do. The act of violence makes these men feel more masculine; and the feeling of strong masculinity is carried over into the bedroom."

Dating violence:
Warning Signs, what to do

— Be alert for unexplained bruises, cuts and swollen lips.

— Watch for periods of depression or sadness which are connected to his visits and dates.

— Realize that an intense, all-consuming relationship often contains elements of violence, too.

— Recognize the fact that a girl who has witnessed spouse abuse or has been abused as a child is more likely to become a victim of dating violence.

— Talk to her about her ideas on love in general. Does she equate love with violent behavior?

— Educate her on violence and rape. If she's old enough to date, she's old enough to be told about rape.

If you are the victim of dating violence:

— Set down a one-time-only rule: "If this ever happens again, we're finished." Stand behind the rule.

— Get help when violence has become an ongoing part of a relationship.

— Get out if he refuses to get help with you.

Reasons vary for name changes

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — One man did it because of a sex change operation. Another did it because his family never loved him. Explaining her reasons, one woman simply wrote: "I loathed and have loathed my first name for as long as I can remember."

Yale Divinity School graduate Gary Warren Hartpence did it and stirred controversy as Gary Hart, candidate for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination.

Name changes are made by 200 people through the courts every month in California. And this doesn't count those who do it simply by calling themselves another name — considered a legal and valid method of adopting a new name for anyone over 18.

"It's a matter of personal identity," Superior Court Judge John Ertola said of name changers in general. "They feel like Harvey and not like Harold."

A canvass of court records revealed some common reasons for getting rid of a name — rediscovering heritage, changing marital status, giving a child his or her step-father's name, undergoing a sex-change operation, finding an easier-to-pronounce name or bringing a name into harmony with one's religion. In many cases, however, the explanation is extremely personal.

"The reason for the proposed change of name is because of a bad childhood and big family problems," a man wrote on his petition to change both his first and last names. "When I was nine years old, my family put me away, never let me go to school or showed love."

A woman who had previously changed her name to a male name but wanted a woman's name again wrote: "I was born a female but wanted to be a male. I never had the operation because of a lack of money. With seeing a psychiatrist, in my own judgement I want to be what I really am, a female."

There are commercial as well as deep personal motives. Adolpho Castro, 31, said he loves money, but because his last name coincided with that of Cuba's Fidel, the name made him the target of too many jokes.

Life membership awarded

From Staff Reports

Bell Ringers Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., view the audition for Midland Community Theatre and Act IX's production of Bells Are Ringing, set to open May 18. Almost 100 area residents auditioned out of which a cast of 45 were selected. Sponsor categories are $2,500 for Bell Ringers, $1,000 for Company of Angels, $300 per couple for Friends of MCT and $125 for unreserved seating. "The Opening Night," a gala to honor sponsors, includes a cocktail buffet and piano music scheduled to precede the show May 17.

Act IX sponsors gala for 'Bells Are Ringing'

Midland Community Theatre and its women's auxiliary, Act IX, will present "The Opening Night," of the Broadway musical "Bells Are Ringing," May 17. The production, bringing together the talents and energies of hundreds of volunteers, is being used to raise funds for MCT's yearly programming.

Guest of honor at "The Opening Night," is the show's choreographer Jerry Yoder from New York City who will be in residence from April 23 until May 19. In addition, supporters of the project such as Bell Ringers, Angels and Friends of MCT will be recognized. The gala will include a cocktail buffet catered by Vera and piano music by Shirley Hansen, followed by the show.

Funds raised by the production will be used to help support Midland Community Theatre's educational programs such as Theatre School, Pickwick Players, adult dance, acting and production classes.

Bells Are Ringing is the story of an answering service operator who becomes personally involved in the lives of her clients and in the process runs afoul of the law and love. A score by Jule Styne is featured which includes such favorites as "Just in Time," "The Party's Over" and "Long Before I Knew You."

Leads are Arlene Jara, who plays the role of Ella, and James Brazell, who protrays Jeff. Other main characters include Marilyn Allen, Dee Ann Jones, Gary Swisher, Gary Preuss, Cecil Beare, Paul Talbot, Tim Rosborough and Jim Bartlett.

In addition to "The Opening Night," 10 regular performances are scheduled May 18 through June 2. Advance sale tickets are available from Act IX cast members and the Box Office, which opens for seat reservations May 2.

Bells Are Ringing is a special production and is not included in the 1983 membership season.

Tips offered on piano purchase

CHICAGO (AP) — Consumers purchasing a piano will make a wiser decision if they know some of the basics about the instrument, advises the National Piano Manufacturers Association, which offers these tips:

— The three sizes of vertical pianos — spinet, studio and console — no matter how tall, require approximately 5 feet by 7 feet of floor space.

— A piano's tone is usually determined by its height and size. The larger the instrument, the larger its sound.

— A piano will sound brighter in a large, empty showroom than in a carpeted and draped living room. Fabric tends to absorb sound, thus mellowing the piano's tone.

— Many retailers offer rent-to-own plans, which enable consumers to try out the piano for a month or more and then apply the rental fee toward the purchase price.

Additional pointers on buying a piano are offered in "Consumer's Guide to Buying a Piano." The free booklet is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed No.10 envelope to: The National Piano Manufacturers Association, 150 East Huron St., 8th Floor, Chicago, IL 60611.

Singer Louise Mandrell, younger sister of Barbara Mandrell, says she was lucky to have Barbara to help her with the business.

Louise on her own

EDITORS NOTE: Louise Mandrell will perform a by-invitation-only benefit, Round Up '84, for the American Cancer Society in Midland April 28. Proceeds from this performance will be used by the Midland Unit of the ACS to support its various service and education programs. For more information on the event call 683-6374.

The job was Louise Mandrell's first after a year on the television show "Barbara Mandrell and the Mandrell Sisters." She wasn't aware until then what a difference that year had made.

"I noticed a big line going out the fairgrounds, and I asked my husband R.C. Bannon, 'Are all those people getting tickets to come to the fair?'

" 'No. They're getting tickets to the concert.'

" 'Oh. Who are we opening for?'

" 'You're it.'

" 'I'm it? There's nobody else? This is it?'

"I'll never forget how nervous I got," Louise says, her soft voice laughing over the telephone receiver. "It was really a rewarding experience, and it made me realize that all those weeks of hard work were worth every bit of it."

A weekly television show is costly in terms of time. For Louise it meant, after spending 12-hour days and longer, going home and studying her script for the next morning. But she points out that she didn't have the pressure Barbara had.

"Barbara had to go home and study her script and get on the phone and take care of business problems.

"It was really nice having a big sister who I had enough faith in that I didn't have to worry about the business problems. If there was a problem, I took it to Barbara."

From her big sister, she learned some good business rules.

"If Irlene and I came to her and said, 'Barbara, we don't like the script' or we don't like something here or there, she'd say, 'Fine. Come back tomorrow with a better idea, and I'll take it to them.'

"And nine times out of 10, we came back with a new idea, but it was wonderful that she taught us the attitude not to criticize people unless we had something to replace it.

"And second of all, to be using our minds all the time to create new ideas. And believe me, when you're put in a situation like Irlene and I where, when we went on the TV show we had no experience, we had so much to learn; it was great to, at the same time, be creative and come up with things besides the things that other people have come up with to learn."

Although Louise had no experience with the medium of television, she also had no fear; she was never scared in front of a camera.

"And I'm enjoying life so much now, and I'm so thankful that the music business was there for me. And that (the music business) was there for me because of my sister Barbara. I think because of that, there's a special relationship between Barbara and me now that has grown throughout the years. And because of the music business I shared some things with my sister that sisters don't share."

— Louise Mandrell

"I think that probably was because even though I had little experience, Barbara was there. My whole life, everytime I faced something new, Barbara was there."

But Barbara wasn't there the first time Louise went out on her own.

Although Louise had worked every major city in the United States, Canada and had performed in clubs and on military bases all over Europe by the time she was 16, this experience was "very frightening because it was something totally new. I didn't know what to say to the audience 'cause I'd always been on stage but never had to talk."

The fear passed quickly.

"After about two weeks, it went from 'Louise, talk to the audience' to 'Louise, be quiet and sing.'

"And now I would have to say it's definitely the other way around. I feel so much at home with an audience, and I love talking to them. And even when I do a TV show by myself, I have a lot more fun if they'll let me go out before the cameras roll, and say hi to everybody."

Louise was playing musical instruments before she learned to read. By junior high, she had become her older sister's first full-time bass guitar player and one of the original "Do—Rites." However, her decision as a child to get involved in the music business was not based on a strong desire to play or perform but rather on a love for her family.

"I wanted to be with them. They were on the road and entertaining, and it seemed the logical thing to do.

"I was so glad that I did, not only because of all the time that I've enjoyed, and I love this business, but because now I understand why my parents loved it so much and needed to be involved in it and why my sister was so involved in it."

Although there are seven years difference in age between Barbara (Dec. 25) and Louise (July 13) and a year and a half between Louise and her younger sister Irlene, the three are very close.

"We portrayed on the TV show pretty much the way things were. The little girl who played Barbara (on television) was bossy and always in trouble; that was the real Barbara as a child," Louise says laughing. "And the other Barbara you see on the TV show who has grown up into a very caring, warm, wonderful person, that is actually what Barbara is today.

"My little sister Irlene, though we call her smart like a fox, she is ding-ey, but very bright. As a matter of fact, she had the best grades in school. She also is the life of the party whenever the family gets together.

"Growing up, I was the one in the family who was very quiet and shy. Since I've grown up, I have really come out of my shell, and I seem to be the one always putting her foot in her mouth because whatever I'm thinking, I'm saying.

"She (Barbara) was a great deal of fun, and she was leader material when we were children and as we were growing up. And she was my first boss on the first job I ever had. But I'd always done what she told me so that worked out pretty well.

"But my entire life, I've had Barbara there and everything just turned out great. She has so much inside of her as far as positive thinking and good attitude, and all those things always sold an audience.

"And no matter what we did, they always seemed to love it. And I think it was because we genuinely loved each other and were having a good time. Therefore, the people who watched had a good time."

When it comes to the entertainment mediums, Louise has no favorites.

"I couldn't imagine not getting to do any of it now — just being on the road without recording or not ever doing television appearances. All of it is very special to me.

"I am, I think, particularly alive in live performances because I get that immediate audience response."

Louise divides her career into three different ones.

"I was on the Mandrell Sisters and I was a duet team with R.C. Bannon, (CBS and RCA records) who I am still married to (five years) and a single career. I'm very much at home in all three of those."

"As a solo artist, I also feel very privileged because now I have a stage to myself and I can do anything I want to.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Harry Hamlin

Q. I would like all the information you have on the very handsome Harry Hamlin: his age, background, whether he's still married to Ursula Andress.

Donna Fletcher
Trenton, N.J.

A. He's 32, from Pasadena, Calif., a Yale graduate who made his professional acting debut at the famed Pasadena Playhouse at the age of 11. A classically trained actor who had apprenticed with the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco, he got into movies as a fluke.

He explains it: En route to London to study Shakespeare on a fellowship, he stopped home to visit his folks and was called in by a casting director to, as a favor, feed lines to Ann Reinking for her screen test for "Movie Movie."

The next day, he was called in for his own screen test even though all of the roles were supposedly filled. Two weeks later he got the role of "Joey Popchik" and canceled out on London. The miniseries "Studs Lonigan" followed, as did the movies "Clash of the Titans" in which he met Miss Andress and got to work with his idol Laurence Olivier, "Making Love" and "Blue Skies Again," which never got a national release.

Now he's on Broadway in a limited run of the Clifford Odets revival "Awake and Sing." As for Miss Andress, they never did get married and have had on and off periods over the last few years, despite their devotion to their 4-year-old son, Dimitri, who has the good fortune to resemble them both.

Gene Kelly

Q. Can you tell me where Gene Kelly was born and what he's been doing lately?

Mrs. James Van Manen
Bantam, Conn.

A. He was born in Pittsburgh, but left for New York in the late 1930s with dreams of becoming a choreographer. By 1940, he was doing those dances himself on Broadway and in the following years, of course, in a string of classic MGM musicals.

Lately, though, the 72-year-old dancer has been devoting his time to directing and producing. He's co-producer of a dance musical anthology film, "That's Dancing," due this summer. He's spending time with his kids, Bridget and Tim, and since the December 22, 1983 fire that gutted his Beverly Hills home, he's been looking for a house. One thing he isn't doing is performing. His appearance in the 1980 disaster, "Xanadu," was, he maintains, his last.

Q. I've been watching reruns of "Eight is Enough" and I was wondering who played the first wife on the show and why she died. Also, did the second wife, Betty Buckley, start out as a singer? She is in "Cats," isn't she?

Irma Bauer
Chesterton, Ind.

A. The first wife on the show was Diana Hyland, who was also deep into an involvement with John Travolta when she died of cancer in 1977. Betty Buckley did, indeed, start out as a singer; she even entered beauty pageants in her native Texas so that she could get an agent and come to New York and star in musicals.

That's exactly what she did: Her first day in New York was spent auditioning for the musical "1776," in which she landed the featured part of Martha Washington.

Star stints in "Promises, Promises," "Pippin" and "I'm Getting My Act Together and Taking It on the Road" followed. She also sings in the current film "Tender Mercies," and, as you may know, won a Tony for "Cats." Lately, to impart one of her secrets of success, she's been teaching meditation.

Irving on a roll on stage, movies, TV

King Features' Syndicate

"Amy Irving gathers no moss," a friend said recently of the actress with the winningly warm manner, beautiful ice-blue eyes and Raphael-like auburn tresses. This evaluation was no sooner voiced than she proved it. She's on a roll on stage, in movies, on TV — you encounter what one critic has called "the honeyed voice and witchcrafty allure" of Ms. Irving.

Movie audiences are applauding her performance in "Yentl" as the sweetly seductive Hadass, the bride of yeshiva student Barbra Streisand.

Broadway critics also hailed Ms. Irving in a revival of George Bernard Shaw's "Heartbreak House," in which she set out to snare Rex Harrison, a charming, much older man.

And coming up on HBO in April, she co-stars with Ben ("Chariots of Fire") Cross, John Gielgud and Omar Sharif in "The Far Pavilions," a spectacular, multimillion-dollar miniseries based on M.M. Kaye's exotic, India-localed best seller.

Ms. Irving made her stage debut, carried onstage in the arms of her mother, at the age of 9 months, began acting in a children's theater at 5, and has never stopped performing since.

Since she made her first screen appearance, eight years ago, in "Carrie," her other roles include "The Fury," "Voices," "The Competition" and "Honeysuckle Rose."

"If someone told me I would never make a movie again, you wouldn't see me shed a tear," the California-born star volunteered. "I like making movies, and every once in a while something comes along that I feel is worthwhile doing. But I really don't need movies.

"Anyone can act in the movies. You don't have to train to be a good movie actor. Some people just have magic with the camera...And producers and directors have ways of doctoring scenes to a performer's benefit...

"On the stage, though, which demands discipline and is much harder, you've got no one out there to do anything for you. You're on your own and it's up to you to make it work. I love the stage.

Her late father, Jules Irving — "he was my hero" — was a famous name in the theater. He started the San Francisco Actors Workshop, later became the artistic director of the Lincoln Center Repertory Company in New York, and, finally, a television director at Universal in Hollywood.

"When my father died, four years ago this past July," she relates, "my whole life changed. That loss turned my world upside-down until I came to realize that, with my guide gone, the one I had to depend on was myself. Now I feel him beaming down on me all the time. He's still watching my progress, and he's a very proud man."

Ms. Irving's mother is actress Priscilla Pointer, from whom she inherited, if not her talent, then certainly her extraordinary blue eyes. Often in movies, Ms. Pointer has acted with her daughter. In both "Carrie" and "Honeysuckle Rose," she was cast as Ms. Irving's mother, while in "The Competition," she portrayed the unfriendly assistant of a symphony orchestra conductor.

Says Ms. Irving, "My mother's example has always been an inspiration to me. She had three children and was back on the stage two months after each kid was born." (The young star's brother, David, is a movie director and her sister, Katie, a teacher of the deaf.)

"Despite the fact that my parents were so busy, I was never a neglected child. Like my brother and sister, I had more love probably than most people could ever hope to get.

"With my mother and father both being active in theater, and so enthusiastic about their work, it shouldn't be surprising that I caught the acting bug early. I started in theater as a child and I loved it, always, just doing it."

A gifted musician, she also played violin in the Manhattan Boroughwide Orchestra. And, under her father's direction, she played small roles on stage. Later she did street theater and acted in off-off-Broadway productions.

When she opted for a professional career instead of college, her father told her: "You have some natural talent and I believe in your talent. But you don't know it all just because you grew up in this family. You must go and train."

"So I went back to San Francisco for one year at the American Conservatory Theater," Ms. Irving relates. "There was a lot of resentment toward me because I was my father's daughter. But, as much as I adored him, I didn't want to be known as Jules Irving's daughter, who had many doors open to her because of that. I wanted to be my own person. So I went to study in England, where no one ever heard of Jules Irving.

"For three years I trained at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art. In a way, I was fulfilling a dream of my mother's. She had always wanted to go there, but her parents couldn't afford to send her. Now she was giving me what she couldn't have."

Louise Mandrell: Sister Barbara helped career

"As much as Barbara and I have in common, because we play a lot of the same instruments and things, we have a totally different show. And when we're onstage as individuals that's exactly what we are. We bring our own personalities onstage and our own style of music and we react to an audience differently."

Louise feels her life has been enriched by growing up in the entertainment world.

"I don't feel I missed anything because I was basically so shy that you wouldn't even know I'm the same person now. The music business helped pull me out of that shyness.

"And I'm enjoying life so much now, and I'm so thankful that the music business was there for me. And that (the music business) was there for me because of my sister Barbara. I think because of that, there's a special relationship between Barbara and me now that has grown throughout the years. And because of the music business I shared some things with my sister that sisters don't share."

Her life has been filled with experiences that, Louise says, "I never would have had an opportunity to share even with my family let alone the places I got to travel and see because of the music business.

"People make their lives happen in a positive way or a negative way. And my life has been real positive. And I'm just thrilled with it."

Although most of her career has been spent performing with her family or on her own, Louise has worked with two other performers — Merle Haggard and Stu Phillips — who have had an influence on her career.

"Merle Haggard was a great deal of fun to work with because we were both into the same style of music. He is a big Bob Wills fan and so am I."

When she was a teen-ager, she worked on The Grand Ole Opry with the Stu Phillips Show.

"Stu worked the Opry a great deal, and that gave me a chance to spend more time in Nashville. And Stu Phillips also was a great Christian influence in my life so I owe that man a great deal, too."

As important as her family and her career are to her, neither is first in Louise's life.

"I think that it's important that people all have priorities. And in my life, my priorities are God then my family, then my business.

"I know a lot of people have a tendency to put their business first in their lives, and I've discovered that that just doesn't work. It doesn't mean I don't spend a great deal of time in my business; I'm just lucky because my family happens to be in show business so that makes the time that I spend with my family a lot easier because I can do that and still spend time on my music."

Louise's mother Mary runs the Mandrell Management office, her father Irby manages all three sisters and her husband R.C. Bannon has retired as a singer to concentrate on songwriting. He is currently writing Barbara's next television special.

Such a busy schedule leaves little time for Louise.

"Several years ago I started a little promise to myself that I do something for myself everyday. If I got busy it might just be getting in my car and driving down to the supermarket and buying a diet drink and a candy bar. Now things have changed quite a bit, and it's not that simple.

"I have realized in the last six months that I got away from that, and I ended up sick and had to take off work for three months. I had to go back to basics of what I used to do and start all over again giving myself a little time everyday."

Word battles highlight 'Lion in Winter' production

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Georgia Temple

Although "Lion in Winter" takes place at Christmastime, it is hardly what most would initially consider representative of the average Yuletime celebration. Henry II sums the issue up when he queries,"Well, what shall we hang? The holly or each other?"

The story of a royal family's power battles, loves, hates, passions, desires and obsessions, woven by playwright James Goldman into a first rate repartee comedy drama, opened Friday in Theatre One at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The outward power struggle centers around who will be king when Henry goes on to his final reward. In the England which existed in Henry's time, a king was seldom followed by his eldest son because there were no laws of primogeniture. The victor was the one who could maneuver, manipulate and then hold onto his claim in whatever way necessary. As Henry says in the play, "I plotted all my life...no other way to be a king, alive and 50 all at once."

Before we confuse fact and supposition, it is important to refer back to the historical note which ran when "Lion in Winter" premiered in New York on March 3, 1966:

"This play, while simplifying the political maneuvering, and combining a meeting of the French and English kings in 1183 with a Royal Court held at Windsor the following year into a Christmas Court that never was — is based on available data. The facts we have, while clear enough as to the outcome of relationships — such things as who kills whom and when — say little if anything about the quality and content of those relationships. The people in this play, their characters and passions, while consistent with the facts we have, are fictions."

The facts are: Henry II was the first king of England of the Plantagenet line. He married Eleanor of Aquitaine, duchess of Aquitaine, the most powerful and famous woman of her time. Her court at Pointers was renowned for its cultivation of chivalry and patronage of the troubadours. Eleanor had a perchance for marrying men who became kings.

She married Prince Louis of France in July 1137, and he became King Louis VII of France in August of that year. The marriage was annulled in March 1952 because there were no male heirs (two daughters), and, in late spring, that same year she married Henry, then count of Anjou and duke of Normandy. He became king of England in 1154. Their marriage, which made Henry master of her vast possessions in France, initiated a 400-year struggle between France and England.

Henry's reign was marked by a series of administrative and legal reforms.(He inaugurated the jury system we know today. The Constitution of Clarendon brought him into conflict with Thomas a Becket, leading to Becket's murder in 1170.)

At the time of this play, Henry is 50 years old; Eleanor is 61. She has spent the last 10 years imprisoned in the tower of her castle because of her support of sons Henry, Richard and Geoffrey's 1173 revolt against their father. At the time, she was disgusted with Henry's persistent infidelities, especially his liaison with Rosamond Clifford, referred to as the "fair Rosamond." Rosamond died in 1176.

Her punishment was certainly a bitter price for a woman who liked to be in the middle of the action, perhaps best exemplified by her riding in 1147 with her former husband to the crusades, an act which simply wasn't done by a woman of her position in her day. The only time she was released from her imprisonment was when she appeared with Henry on state occasions.

"Lion in Winter" takes place in a 24-hour time period in which it's apparent that no one sleeps except perhaps Henry's ward and current mistress, Alais (Kathy Marchant) and her brother, Philip Capet, King of France (Jim Martin). The power alliances change with chameleon rapidity, the wit flies bullet quick and, when the final curtain goes down, it's hard to know how the parties actually feel about one another. All appear capable of doing anything to get what they want, but that also may be deceptive.

Eleanor (Dianne Lewallen) wants Richard (Gregg Elsner), now the eldest with the death of son Henry, to have the throne. Henry (Mike Stannard) wants his youngest son John (Darren Harris). Middle son Geoffrey (Derrick Powell), whom neither Eleanor nor Henry wants as king, spends his time playing mind games between all of the parties.

Stannard plays the persuasive, highly volatile, determined Henry, who modestly refers to himself as "the greatest power in 1,000 years," with conviction. Ms. Lewallen's Eleanor is a match for his Henry, however, during dress rehearsal Thursday night, Ms. Lewallen breezed through some lines too quickly. In a word play, the delivery of the lines is crucial to the play's effectiveness. And she does look much younger than 61.

Most of the cast during Thursday's dress rehearsal dropped lines, but when it happened the recovery was quick. The major problems centered around Ms. Marchant's apparent lack of belief in her role as demonstrated when she acted angry rather than was angry; and Elsner's failure in in his role as Richard the Lionhearted to be convincingly frightening.

Elsner successfully carries the pensive scenes and is able to effectively strike his words deep, albeit minus the roar, when he lashes out.

When he tells his mother, "We could tangle spiders in the webs you weave," or he says of John, "No. It was the midwives fault. They threw out the baby and kept the afterbirth," the audience is amused, but the words don't sound as if there's any bitterness or implied threat lurking underneath them.

Elsner's portrayal is inconsistent. At times, he is totally convincing and at other times, he's not.

Harris is wonderful as the spoiled, impertinent, coward-to-the-core John. When he jumps away from the blade of his father's sword, he's scared.

Powell's portrayal of Geoffrey, whose devious mind makes for a dangerous tongue, works once Powell gets comfortable on stage. When he bitterly says to Eleanor, "Not once can I remember anything from you or Father warmer than indifference," his words sting and sound as if they are coming from the heart.

Martin has the same problem as Powell getting started. Once he moves into the role, he smoothly plays a Philip, who is not as weak as he appears.

Directed by Michael Spicer, "Lion in Winter," complete with a workable and attractive set and well-designed period costumes, is great fun for those who enjoy word battles.

And perhaps, except for the stakes (a kingdom), the struggles are not so different than those in many families. After all, as Eleanor says, "What family doesn't have its little ups and downs?"

Brass program very diversified

From works by two of the greatest 17th century German composers George Frideric Handel and Johann Sebastian Bach to modern day American composer George Gershwin, the Lone Star Brass Quintet presented a diversified program during its spring concert this past week.

The Quintet opened the concert with "The Harmonious Blacksmith," drawn from Handel's Harpshichord Suite in E Major, and the second half with Aire Pour Les Trompettes by Bach. Both are quite short.

Born in the same year, Bach (1685-1750) and Handel (1685-1759) were vastly different in their approach to music as well as in their lifestyles. Bach spent his lifetime in the same environment. Handel took a great interest in the world around him and was widely traveled.

Of the three great figures born in 1685 (third is Domenico Scarlatti), Handel was the one who best summed up the achievements and temper of his time. Handel disdained the detailed counterpoint of Bach; he was like a painter who is at his best in huge mural paintings. Bach, with the relentless march of his tight cantor's counterpoint, stuck his own contemporares as lost in the tradition of a former age. It was Handel, a professional concert musician determined to adapt the European techniques of his youth to the tastes of a new English public, who spoke the true language of the late Baroque.

Bach was a salaried appointee all his life, Handel money from each venture as he went along. (For 17 years, Handel helped manage the theater in London where his operas were produced.)

They did share a common reputation and created an enormous body of work. Both were considered to be two of the greatest organists of their time. (An organist, in those days, did not merely play the notes that were in front of him. As the organist played, he added all sorts of embellishments, variations, fugal passages and cadenzas. Handel's organ music looks fairly bare to the modern organist. Today, more than two centuries later, Bach's organ music is considered by many the greatest ever written.)

The Quintet got off to an unsteady start. Thomas Fairlie missed a few notes during "The Harmonious Blacksmith," and that is most unusual. The second selection, Gershwin's "Bess You is My Woman Now," from "Porgy and Bess," was handled smoothly. Then three members of the Quintet, Greg Phillips, Dale Sterling and Brad Cornell, played Brass Trio by Arthur Frackenpohl's Brass Trio (Born in 1931, Frachenpohl resides in Potsdam, N.Y.) Once again things didn't go quite right. The players seemed tense, and performed as if they were counting the beat, hardly what one expects to encounter in professional players.

However, from that point on the Quintet played a flawless performance. Bach's aire Pour Les Trompettes showcased the trumpet and Bach's talent for ornamental melody.

In all the other works performed — Suite for Brass Quintet by Herbert Sonatine by Eugene Bozza, Ludwig Maurer's Three Pieces and Centone No. V by Samuel Scheidt — the ensemble played as one, and gave its audience a sterling evening.

Springfield movie hard to handle

By BEULAH CASEY

Beulah Casey

Pop-rock singer Rick Springfield wears a dangling earring and taut towel for his screen debut as James Roberts — rock star, in "Hard to Hold" and in a spirit of "letting it all hang out", Springfield does just that.

The delighted score of teenagers at this showing obligingly launched their popcorn into the air and booted cola down the aisles in appreciation. And at that strategic moment we oldsters decided to move across the aisle, hoping that a moving target would be harder to hit.

Thirty minutes into this movie about a burned-out writer-singer who falls in rock-style-love with a teacher of difficult children, it occurred to me that getting knocked out temporarily by flying debri would be a blessing.

But even the overwrought youths found their excitement as hard to hold on to as Springfield does the movie. And what started with plenty of razzle-dazzle concert footage, quickly changes to repetitive and poorly-acted scenes of romantic give and take with on-screen love Janet Eilber ("Whose Life Is It Anyway?")

Model Patti Hansen puts in an appearance as bleary-eyed and disheveled Nikki, Roberts' writing partner from the "old days", and proves the mannequin-stereotype of "beautiful until she opens her mouth." In several dreadful scenes, she and Springfield hash over love-gone-wrong and she finally makes an exit, only to show up inexplicably at his final concert.

Rated PG, "Hard to Hold" is conspicuous for its lack of powder-dusted noses, and hand-rolled joints, sort of a "Mr. Rogers" of the rock scene, where the band's biggest problem is who will get the pizza. And Springfield and Miss Eilber play their love so gosh-darn that this other-than-real movie chokes on its own wholesomeness.

Drug-free rockers and issues like how does a rock star grow old gracefully and still rock, are worth more than the nod they get. In fact, plenty of worthy topics get a passing reference — like death and dying, making it big and staying big in today's music industry, and the fragile flame of creativity.

But director Larry Peerce and screenwriter Tom Hedley snuff out any hope for "Hard to Hold" with understatement, and what they don't squelch, photographer Richard Kline throws a rug on.

Scenes of rainy San Francisco, that range in technique from "Monet-esque" pastels to over-lit, homemade, super-8, blur the intent. And Springfield rivels early horror movie fiends with ashen grey skin, dulled from studio days and fluorescent nights.

As Art Carney ponders his apparent shortcomings as an artist in "The Last Leaf," an Easter parable based on a short story by O. Henry, in which he tries to determine how to save the life of a young girl. His decision leads to an unusual ending in the television special produced by Bonneville Productions for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The special will air locally at 5:30 p.m. today on KTPX, Channel 9. Following "The Last Leaf," a six-minute production of "The Road to Emmaus" will be shown. This recounts the Biblical story of two of Christ's disciples travels from Jerusalem to Emmas.

GOREN BRIDGE

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands that we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series, we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

We vividly recall the 1972 World Team Olympiad. Not only was it the first time this event was held in the United State, it was also held in Miami, the home town of one of your writers. We had the opportunity to renew old friendships and make new ones, and watch some of the best bridge in international competition for many years.

Sitting in the West chair on this hand was one of the world's great technicians — Jean Besse of Switzerland. This will not go down in history as one of his finest moments — he himself called his play lazy! But it certainly produced one of the most unforgettable tricks he has ever won.

Against three no trump Besse led top-of-nothing in spades. Declarer won the ace and led a club to the queen and ace. East shifted to the jack of hearts and, when declarer held up, continued with the king and three of the suit. Now declarer won the ace.

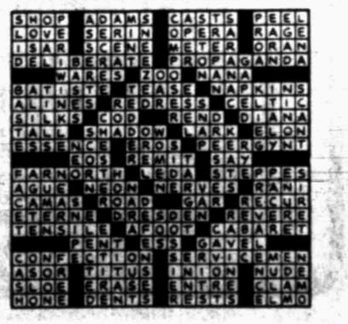

Although the odds favored a 3-2 division in diamonds, South had to consider overcoming a 4-1 break, while maintaining entries to both hands and keeping West from gaining the lead to cash the queen of hearts. Since he needed only four tricks from the suit, he ideally wanted to duck the first diamond to East — the safe hand.

Declarer led the two of diamonds. Correct technique would have been for Besse to insert the nine to force dummy's king, but he carelessly played the four. It might have dawned on declarer that he had nothing to lose by playing the seven from the board, but he thought he had a sure way of ducking the trick to East. He called for dummy's three.

You can imagine Besse's surprise and declarer's consternation. In a world championship, Besse had won the first trick in a suit with the four, to establish a new record!

Sinatra to record song about L.A.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Frank Sinatra, who extolled the Big Apple in "New York, New York," will soon rhapsodize about the Big Orange in "L.A. Is a Lady."

This month Sinatra will record the song at Qwest Records for producer Quincy Jones. The melody, inspired by the upcoming Summer Olympics, was written by Marilyn and Alan Bergman.

Snoopy has 'Saturday night fever'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Good grief! Snoopy has Saturday night fever!

This is the 25th TV outing for the ensemble, and this one, along with their most recent adventure, may signal a new direction for the animated version of the 34-year-old strip.

In "What Have We Learned, Charlie Brown?" the cast took a trip to Normandy Beach and delivered a message on world peace. The show aired on Memorial Day and won a Peabody Award.

This time Snoopy — after blow-drying his fur to primp for an outing at the disco — gets into flash-dancing, Franklin break-dances and Peppermint Patty leads the gang through an aerobics routine. All of this has a very contemporary ring to it.

Are we seeing a new direction for the strip on television? "You probably are," said Lee Williams, associate producer for United Media Enterprises.

"Charles Schulz still writes each show and draws each strip, so they change with him. 'What Have We Learned' was very special to him. It was not so much entertaining as educational.

Draw from various cuisines for unique Easter meal

King Features Syndicate

Some holiday meals are so bound up with tradition that there's practically no room for experimentation or variation. Not true of Easter. Some like lamb, some like ham, some even prefer roast beef. With the side dishes, anything goes. It's a good time to draw from various cuisines and create a one-of-a-kind meal to help make this Easter a memorable one.

Begin the meal with a lemony Greek chicken-rice soup. The Greeks have a traditional Easter soup that is truly magnificent, but it takes endless time and effort to make. Hence, substitute a far simpler — and almost equally delicious — Greek specialty.

A big American ham with a pungent apricot and almond glaze will be the focus, highlighted with light twice-baked potatoes, cottage style. Scandinavian dilled peas add a herb-flavored accent and complement cold marinated baby carrots. Add Irish soda bread from the emerald isle, always a seasonal favorite. Then, back to tradition — candy — for dessert.

The meal is an easy one, since much of it can be prepared ahead of time, leaving the cook free to relax and enjoy the holiday. And there should be plenty of ham left over to enjoy the next day.

GREEK EGG AND LEMON SOUP

4 cups chicken broth
⅓ cup raw rice
2 eggs
Juice of 1 large lemon

In medium saucepan bring broth to a boil. Add rice and boil about 20 minutes, or until rice is tender. Remove from heat.

Meanwhile, beat eggs and gradually beat in lemon juice. Beat in a little of the hot broth, then slowly add egg mixture back to the rest of the hot broth. Return to heat and cook 3 minutes, stirring. Do not let soup boil. Serves 4.

APRICOT-GLAZED HAM

1 8-pound fully cooked whole boneless ham
1 18-ounce jar apricot preserves
1 2-ounce package slivered almonds
½ cup raisins
2 tablespoons lemon juice

For glaze, in a small bowl combine apricot preserves, slivered almonds, raisins and lemon juice; mix well and set aside.

Place ham on rack in a shallow roasting pan. Insert meat thermometer in thickest part of ham. Bake in a 325 F. oven for 2 to 2½ hours (allow 15 minutes per pound) or till thermometer registers 135 to 140 F., brushing with the glaze often during the last 30 minutes of cooking time. Makes 24 servings.

TWICE-BAKED POTATOES

4 medium potatoes
½ cup low-fat cottage cheese
¼ cup skim milk or buttermilk
1½ teaspoons minced onion
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
Paprika
dried parsley flakes

Gently scrub potatoes under cold water with vegetable brush to clean. Pierce each potato in several places with tines of fork. Bake at 400 F. for 45 minutes or until tender.

Cut hot potatoes in half lengthwise. Scoop out potato, leaving skins intact for re-stuffing. With wire whisk, beat potato with remaining ingredients except paprika and parsley flakes until fluffy.

Pile mixture back into skins. Sprinkle with paprika and parsley flakes. Bake 10 minutes more or until just golden. Serves 4.

MARINATED CARROTS

1 (10-ounce) package frozen whole baby carrots
2 tablespoons oil
1 tablespoon tarragon-flavor white wine vinegar
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon seasoned pepper
⅛ teaspoon dry mustard

Cook carrots as package directs; drain. Mix together all remaining ingredients and toss lightly with carrots. Chill thoroughly several hours or overnight. Serves 4.

DILLED PEAS HELSINKI

2 (10 ounce) packages green peas, cooked and drained
2 tablespoons chopped shallots
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cups milk
1 cup shredded Swiss cheese
½ teaspoon dill weed
2 tablespoons chopped pimiento

Cook peas according to package directions. While peas are cooking, saute shallots in butter until tender. Stir in flour and cook until smooth. Gradually stir in milk and cook over medium heat, stirring until thickened and smooth. Stir in cheese, dill and pimiento. Add drained peas. Heat, stirring, until cheese is melted. Serves 4.

IRISH SODA BREAD

4 tablespoons unsalted butter
3 cups all-purpose flour
1½ teaspoons salt
¾ cup granulated sugar
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 cup dried currants
1¾ cups buttermilk
2 eggs, well beaten
3 tablespoons caraway seeds, (optional)
Grated rind of 2 large lemons

Preheat oven to 350 F. Spread 2 tablespoons butter evenly in an angel food cake pan. Line the bottom of the pan with a circle of waxed paper.

Melt 2 tablespoons of butter in a separate pan and set aside. Sift flour, salt, sugar, baking powder and baking soda together. Add currants to dry ingredients and toss well to coat.

Whisk together buttermilk, eggs and melted butter. Add to the dry ingredients, along with the caraway seeds and lemon rind. Mix just until blended.

Spoon batter into the prepared angel food cake pan and smooth top gently with a spatula. Dot the top with the remaining 2 tablespoons butter. Bake until golden brown and puffed, about 60 minutes. Cool slightly.

CREAMY PASTEL FONDANT

1 package (8 ounces) cream cheese, softened
½ cup butter or margarine, softened
3½ cups unsifted confectioners' sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
Red, yellow and green food coloring

Combine cream cheese and butter or margarine in large mixer bowl; beat until smooth and well blended. Gradually add confectioners' sugar and vanilla. Divide mixture into three parts. Mix 1 to 2 drops red food coloring into one part, yellow into second part and green into third. Fill 1½-inch paper baking cups with fondant.

PEANUT BUTTER CHIP BRITTLE

2 cups (12-ounce package) peanut butter chips
1½ cups butter or margarine
1¾ cups sugar
3 tablespoons light corn syrup
3 tablespoons water

Sprinkle 1 cup of the peanut butter chips evenly onto bottom of a buttered 15½ x 10½ x 1-inch jelly roll pan; set aside. Melt butter or margarine in a heavy 2½-quart saucepan; add sugar, corn syrup and water. Stir constantly over medium heat until mixture reaches hard-crack stage (300 F.). Remove from heat.

Immediately spread mixture evenly into prepared pan. Quickly sprinkle with remaining 1 cup peanut butter chips. Cool completely. Remove from pan and break into pieces. Store in tightly covered container. Makes about 2 pounds.

Children always need parents

By ELISE BELL
King Features Syndicate

I used to think that someday my children would go their way independently, no longer needing me, and let me go mine. But I'm beginning to wonder if that ever happens.

I remember well when the children were little and going to school how they would crawl into bed at night and then suddenly say, as a sort of afterthought: "Mom, I just remembered I need a costume first thing in the morning...something from the Middle Ages."

Or: "Mom, I've got a big important math test at 8 tomorrow morning and I have to have a special size graph paper for it."

Why hadn't they mentioned this several days ago, or at least earlier that day when the stores were open? They forgot.

No matter. Off they would go to sleep secure in the knowledge that somehow Mom would take care of it. And somehow I did.

Well, our children are pretty well grown now and you would think this sort of thing would be behind us. Not so. I realized this the other day when our 22-year-old son, who is living with us while he gets his master's degree in communication arts, whatever that is, began rushing around the house looking for props for a show he was going to tape. That afternoon, of course.

"I have to have four cans of soup," he told me.

"Look in the kitchen cabinet," I said.

"I did. You only have three. Could you find another one for me? I have to draw labels for them before I leave."

I rummaged through the kitchen cabinets while he began to draw labels for the cans of soup. The labels said "Sunshine Soup" and featured a sun rising over a green field. They were very attractive. I handed him a fourth can I had managed to find. He put his labels on the cans, then dashed over to our coffee table and began to take everything off it.

"What are you doing?" I asked.

"I need to borrow this table. Okay? I'll be very careful of it."

With great misgivings I watched while he carried the coffee table out of the house and put it into his car. He returned and said hurriedly:

"That one isn't right. I'll have to take yours and I'll plug mine into your outlet so you have that."

Before I could thank him he had taken my phone and put it into a box.

"I hope you aren't going to let that phone get out of your sight," I said to him sternly. "Someone would be very pleased to walk away with a free phone."

"It'll be perfectly safe," he assured me, covering it carefully with a towel that I had never seen before and that had "Holiday Inn" printed on it.

He drove off with the coffee table, the soup cans and the phone. I spent a nervous day worrying about the table and the phone.

Our son didn't get home until late that night and I was relieved to see that he had everything with him — the coffee table, the soup cans and thephone.

King Features Syndicate

As the price of oil, gas and electricity has increased, so has the number of products that promise to save energy and reduce fuel costs.

However, consumers shopping for these should be careful, says Michael Dershowitz of the Federal Trade Commission. While many devices do save energy, others are worthless — and even some that are worthwhile make false or exaggerated energy-savings claims.

The products include home-heating and cooling devices, home siding, storm windows, water heaters and automobile fuel-saving gadgets among many others.

The FTC, Council of Better Business Bureau's National Advertising Division, Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Postal Service (for products sold through the mail) and various state agencies have been active not only in ferreting out worthless products, but also in correcting overstated or deceptive claims. For example:

In November 1982, at the prodding of the BBB, the manufacturer of a home thermostat changed its advertising to make clear that actual savings are affected by such factors as geographic location and how many degrees the thermostat is set back.

In November 1982, a plastic-storm-window manufacturer agreed to FTC demands to drop its claim that its product was four times more effective than glass storm windows.

These "watchdogs" can't protect you completely, however, so here's what to keep in mind:

— Always look for factual information to support any fuel- or money-saving claim: Get information from the manufacturer about how the specific figures were arrived at, how and where the product was tested, and by whom.

Then compare the test conditions with your own situation. For example, in the case of claims made for a home-heating device, find out the size of the home used in the test.

— When a company claims a range of savings — say from 30 to 50 percent on fuel costs — don't assume that you'll save the upper limit of the claim.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

By JOHN W. DEATS

The Friends of Midland County Library had a productive annual meeting on the evening of April 9. Short statements from three panelists preceeded a lively question and answer session. I would like to offer some of the same observations to the general public that I offered as a panelist, and summarize for you the remarks of fellow panelists Mary Jane Young, Chairman of the Library Advisory Board, and Durward Wright, the library's liaison commissioner to the Commissioner's Court.

Most importantly, the present library facility is 27 years old and has reached the saturation point. Our collection doubled in size over the first decade in this building, reaching over 100,000 volumes by 1970. During the past thirteen years, we have added another 44,000 volumes, plus many brand new services such as the much-expnded Fine Arts and Audio-visual departments. The past year has witnessed the introduction of microcomputer equipemnt, books, and magazines to the collection.

The proliferation of our Petroleum and Genelogical departments has been staggering. For example, in 1980 there were 3,892 books on the subject of genealogy, but by 1983, there were 7,392 of them, mostly purchased with funds donated by individuals, the Midlnd Genealogy Society, local chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution and other lineage societies. To accommodate new shelving for these books and periodicals, we have already had to store away some library seating.

Our library provides 1.7 books per person in our county of 103,000 people. This is slightly better than the state average of 1.49 books per person. We spend $1.28 per person for new library books and other materials, compared to the state average of $0.96. Yet our ability to provide more eductional and recreational material to our citizens is more a question of physical space then monetary need.

Mrs. Young has been leading our committee composed of the Advisory Board, Friends of the Library Executive Board, and other concerned citizens to carry out the charge by the Commissioners Court to provide some alternatives to address the problem. The committee is investigating the practicality of remodeling and expanding the present facility, as first proposed in 1977, or simply making the barest minimum of repairs in anticipation of moving into a new library in a few years. Meanwhile, the possibility of establishing a small storefront library in northwest Midland is being explored. Mrs. Young announced that a survey will be taken at the Friends of the Library booth at the Celebratin of the Arts, May 19th, to be held at the Civic Center. We hope some of 51,524 active library card holders will indicate their preferences and opinions at that time.

We appreciated the comments of Wright, who, as a County Commissioner, has shared our frustration over the failure of the Eagle Plaza plans to materialize. He assured the group that the library's needs are high on the county's list of priorities, even though the jail project must be at the top of that list. Wright said that the court must comply with a directive from the Texas commission on Jail Standards which cites overcrowding and other poor conditions in the County Jail. However, the court is open to any alternatives which the library committee can offer.

Ultimately, a bond issue may be the only way to realize a new library building. We hope that, if this be the case, the local economy makes a strong and quick recovery to help expedite not only the new library, but other public facilities which are urgently needed.

Book brings alive romance of railroad

"Narrow Gauge To the Hills," by Edgar T. Mead; Weedy Rail Books; 128 pages; $15.95.

A Review

We're all familiar with "standard-gauge" railroads that use rails 56½ inches apart. Narrow-gauge railroads, however, run on rails from two to three feet apart. This allows the trains to make sharper curves.

Ironically, this means that such "miniature" railroads have challenged some of the most rugged terrain in the world. It was not uncommon for tiny engines to be struggling up mountains in excess of 12,000 feet.

Since the tracks are closer together, it follows that everything related to the railroad — engines, cars, buildings and support equipment is, roughly, one-third smaller. This gives the visitor the impression of viewing "toy" trains in action and is part of the narrow-gauge lure.

Narrow-gauge railroads were "self-contained" railroads since they were totally incompatible with "big brother" — the standard gauge. It took big men to run these little engines up and down steep grades.

As a schoolboy, Edgar T. Mead got the railroading bug when he journeyed to the "narrow-gauge capital of the world" — Colorado. In this book, he describes his experiences on that trip as well as on return trips.

Included is a recently-discovered narration of an eyewitness ride in 1883 from Ogden to Denver aboard what was then the new Denver and Rio Grande narrow-gauge mainline.

Mead teamed up with Rogers E. M. "Frimbo" Whitaker, champion world traveler and New Yorker editor, and pursued the narrow-gauge railroads in the wild environments of Mexico, Ireland, Brazil and other foreign countries as well as in the United States.

Each railroad provides its own quaint atmosphere, colorful people, grand scenery and a truly experience for rail buff and non-buff alike.

Fortunately, many of these narrow-gauge railroads still exist. Mostly tourist operations today, they enable the visitor to experience the thrill of old-time narrow-gauge railroading.

A Review

In 1983, William Goldman's "Adventures in the Screen Trade," a non-fiction work about his career in Hollywood, was one of the outstanding books of the year. Now he has returned to fiction to present the career and mind-workings of a young author. It is a fascinating story, because Goldman weaves back and forth in the life of Chub Fuller, taking him from his freshman year in college, back to his childhood and then up into his mid-thirties. Through it all, Chub's good buddy from campus, "Two-Beer" Kitchel, serves as a goad, adversary and deus ex machina, forcing Chub to think as well as write.

Chub's life also serves as a basis for his writing, because he extracts his stories from events that he has lived through. Fragments from the past that come into being in his mind begin to take on shape and character and develop a vitality of their own. Chub exists, in an artistic sense, in his treasured notebook, from ideas jotted down even in his high school years. Some he develops, others he rejects. Meanwhile, his own life goes on, full of unrequited parental love, unrequited campus love, unfulfilled dreams and dreams that become fiction. Always, there is the elusive dream of success and the elusive dream girl. Yet, in reality for Chub, some of these dreams are fulfilled and become nightmares.

Somewhere, about halfway through "The Color of Light," I began to wonder if it was possible that it was Goldman's own youthful notebooks that were being brought to light and to life. There is a veracity to the thoughts and to the stories that captures the reader's attention and certainly should hold the mind of and possibly serve as a stimulus to a young or a beginning writer. Here is inspiration, method, technique and flowering set forth in terms that are not necessarily fiction but bearing the stamp of truth.

Where fiction takes over from seeming reality comes in the final part of the book when mystery, a new element, enters the story. It, too, is fascinating, but this reader felt as if Goldman had left Fuller's problems of development to create a melodramatic finish. It is a strange, if minor, flaw but one that, nevertheless, will keep the reader locked in with Chub until the final, shattering line.

Drilco's dry spell ends with $5 million contract

It has been a long, dry spell for Drilco Industrial, but a newly-landed $5 million contract from the government is growing big, fresh smiles at Midland's largest manufacturing firm.

As the economy raced forward in 1980 and 1981, the fortunes of this mining tool designer and builder soared along with those of the oil industry. But events changed quickly.

In 1981 the Drilco Industrial payroll listed 365, but during the dry years of 1982 and 1983 over 200 workers were pared from the Drilco ranks to bring the employment numbers to its present 155.

Now, with a contract to manufacture drill tools and pipe for construction of an exploratory shaft in the U.S. Department of Energy's high-level, radioactive waste management program, those on the payroll can take a sigh of relief. There probably won't be any more employee cuts at Drilco for at least two years. Moreover, some employees layed off might be invited back.

Said Robert Powers, vice president and general manager: "We have not had a chance to access our production needs at this point. I don't anticipate the contract will result in any significant additions at this time, but it should put us back to full capacity. We are only operating one shift now."

The contract is to build the mammouth drill string from the swivel to the bit for a drilling rig that will be used to drill a 10-foot diameter shaft to a depth approximately 3,000 feet.

The tools and pipe which are scheduled for completion, January 1986, will be used to drill an exploratory shaft in at least one salt formation. Seven salt formation sites are currently under consideration by DOE.

The Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 requires DOE to accept high-level radioactive waste beginning not later than January 31, 1998. Prior to that DOE must nominate five of nine candidate sites by January 1985 and recommend three of the sites to the President for detailed study. The President is required by law to recommend one site to Congress by 1987.

Building a drill string for a 10 foot hole should be no problem for Drilco. They are no strangers to such tasks.

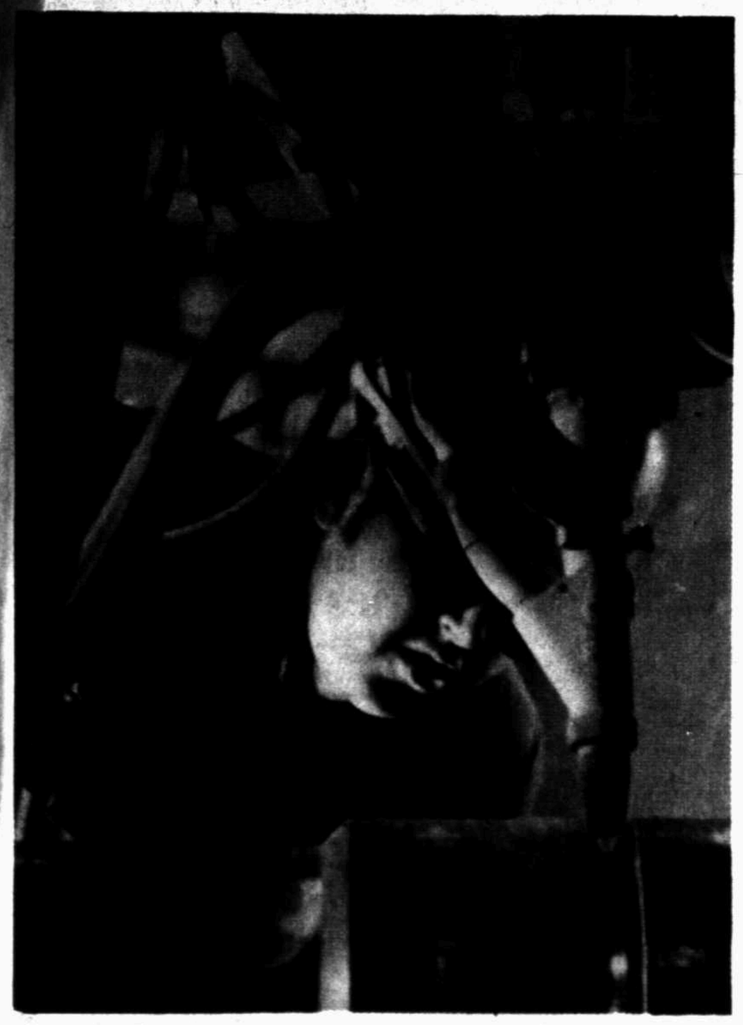

Drilco built the tools for the Hanford project in Hanford, Washington which drilled a 110-inch diameter shaft through a basalt formation, 3,600 feet deep, in the first of five nuclear disposal site tests. The Midland-built tools required 75 trucks to delivery to Washington.

The order included a 144-inch bit, a 110-inch bit and 150 joints of 13 3/8-inch OD drill pipe.

The tools for the Hanford project are now hanging in the derrick and ready to drill. Drilling will start immediately following additional exploratory work by a small diameter drilling rig.

Powers believes that Drilco's proven expertise in developing such tools plus the fact that Bill Wohlfeld, one of the world's leading authorties on large diameter drilling, will be in charge of the project, helped Drilco land the contract. The contract was awarded by Parsons-Redpath of Colombus, Ohio, construction managers for the new exploratory site.

He says that Drilco will start gearing up immediately for the new contract and will be placing orders for raw materials within 60 days.

Drilco will be at full capacity with new contract.

Sparks will fly and the plant will hum again at Drilco Industrial, as firm gears up to build giant drill string.

Wholesale prices climbing

By The Associated Press

Wholesale prices rose 0.5 percent in March, or at an annual rate of 5.9 percent, as food costs continued to surge, the Labor Department said today.

The rise in the department's Producer Price Index for finished goods followed an increase of 0.4 percent in February and 0.6 percent in January.

The government said food prices rose 0.8 percent in March and have leaped at an annual rate of 17.8 percent in the first three months of the year.

Concern that the economy will "overheat," sending inflation spiraling higher, has contributed to interest rate jitters in financial markets. But the stock market soared to its best gain in seven weeks on Thursday as the steepest montly drop in retail sales in more than 10 years raised hopes that interest rates will not go higher.

Wall Street's fears of higher rates were calmed even more after the market closed Thursday, when the Federal Reserve Board report[ed] $5 billion plunge in the nation's basic money supply.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks soared 26.17 points to 1,157.14, its best one-day advance since it rose 30.47 points Feb. 24.

The robust growth of the economy, particularly in the first quarter, had lifted private demands for credit which, together with the massive credit demands of the federal government, had pushed interest rates higher.

There also were fears that if economic growth remained too strong, the Federal Reserve, fearing inflation, would further restrict credit availability, pushing rates higher still.

Column cancelled

The column Ask the FDIC, a cooperative effort between the Reporter-Telegram and Thomas R. Procopio, FDCI liquidator-in-charge of failed First National Bank of Midland, has appeared on this page for the past 12 weeks.

Due to the broad range of subjects covered in the column, it has been determined that the column has served its purpose and will no longer appear.

Persons with problems or questions concerning FDIC liquidation procedures should contact the FDIC directly. The office is located at North Petroleum Center, 303 Air Park Drive, Midland. The mailing address is: P.O. Box 3148, Midland, Texas, 79702. The phone number is 915-685-6400.

OSHA may have shown Coors favoritism

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Adolph Coors Co., headed by a conservative friend of President Reagan, may have been shown "repeated favoritism" by the agency responsible for workplace health and safety, a Wisconsin House member says.

Democratic Rep. David R. Obey said Thursday night he's accumulated documents that raise "serious questions" about the relationship between the brewing company and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

Obey said in a floor speech that any favored treatment by OSHA "would undermine the confidence of workers and less favored employers in our government ...."

The lawmaker said his office is investigating the relationship and has accumulated Labor Department documents and statements made under oath by current and former federal officials.

The speech followed House Appropriations subcommittee hearings April 4 and April 11, during which Obey questioned Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan and OSHA officials about Coors, which also manufactures ceramics. OSHA is part of the Department of Labor.

Donovan, acknowledging that he and company president Joseph Coors have been friends for 10 years, said, "There is no attempt to lay off Joe Coors" in plant inspections, one of OSHA's main functions.

The acting chief of OSHA, Patrick Tyson, added during the April 11 hearing, "There was no special treatment of Coors."

Coors spokesman Eric Riggle, contacted repeatedly since last Friday, has said neither Joseph Coors nor other company officials have been available for comment. Riggle said Coors and Reagan are friends who talk on a regular basis.

Obey said his probe "raises serious questions about the possibility that OSHA has exercised significant and repeated favoritism toward the Adolph Coors Co. in discharging its responsibilities to protect worker health and safety."

He said the documents indicate:

—One-sided contacts between top OSHA and Coors officials.

—Removal of Coors facilities from an OSHA inspection list.

—The former Denver-based regional OSHA administrator may have been forced from his job because of urgings from Coors, whose headquarters and several facilities were under his jurisdiction.

—Of the four occasions when OSHA compliance officers were admitted to Coors facilities during a nearly three year period, they entered three of those times because of deaths or injuries to employees.

—OSHA failed to cite Coors for all of the violations found by the compliance officers.

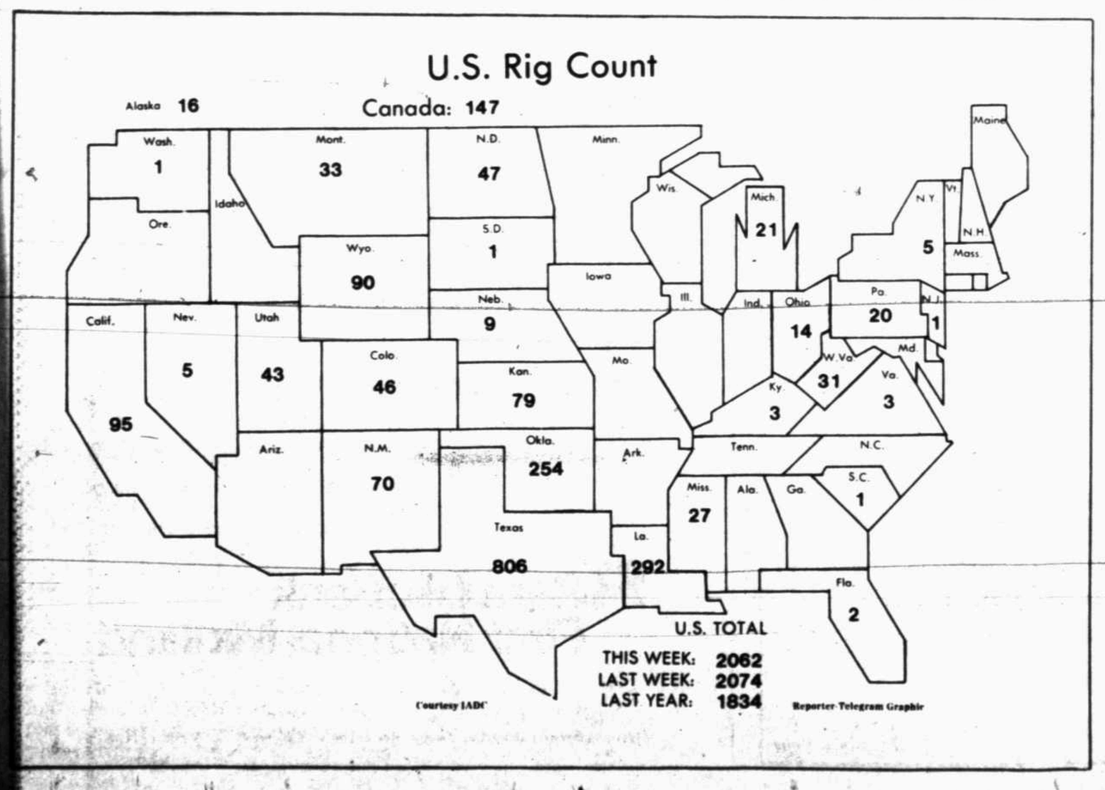

Rig counts slip slightly again this week

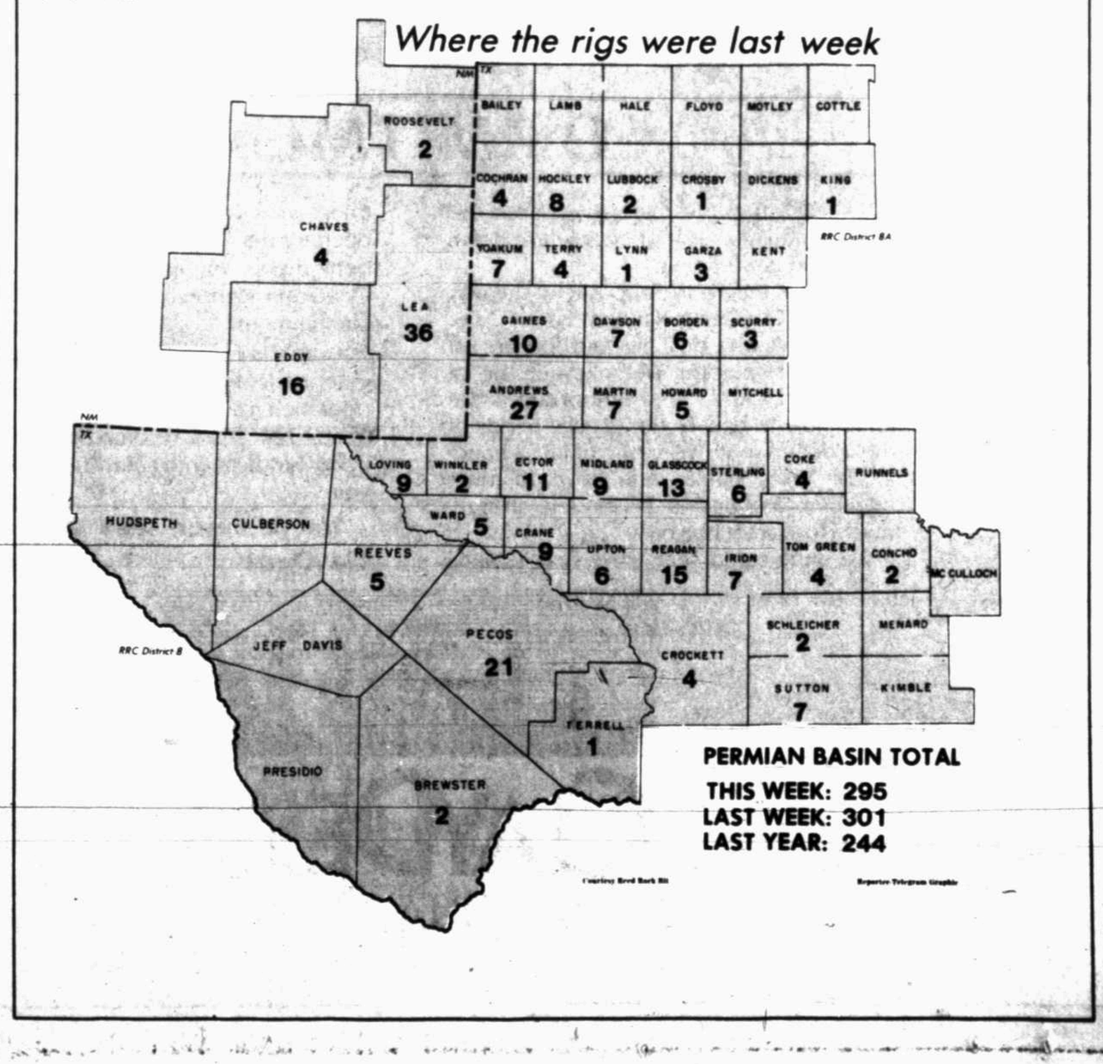

Rig counts slipped slightly this week as both the Hughes national rig count and the Reed Permian Basin count were down from last week.

Nationwide the count dropped 12 rigs, as it struggled to recoup from the previous week's drop of 70. Texas gained 15 rigs this week, but Oklahoma continued to be the big loser, having dropped 33 rigs from last week. The national count still remains almost 200 rigs over what it was during the same period last year.

In the Permian Basin the count was down only six from last week as it trys to edge its way back into the 300 column, which for years has been accepted as the prosperity threshold. On the Texas side of the Basin Pecos, Andrews, Gaines, Ector, Glasscock and Reagan continued to reflect a double digit rig count, with Pecos and Andrews counting over 20. Lea county continues to claim the highest count in New Mexico, showing 36 rigs working this week.

Rising interest rates could affect the rig count, according to industry experts. It will climb if interest rates hold steady or decrease, but will drop if interest rates climb.

Parallel and Cambridge to combine properties

From Staff Reports

Parallel Petroleum Corp., Midland, and Cambridge & Nail, Amarillo, have signed a letter of intent for the combination in a new corporation of Parallel and the producing oil and gas properties owned by six limited partnerships managed by Cambridge & Nail, according to A.L. Nail and Frank Delay, president Parallel Petroleum.

Gas and oil reserves of the six producing properties of Cambridge & Nail are estimated to be 2,260,266 Mmcfd of gas and 27,653 barrels of oil as of March 31, 1984, according to studies by independent petroleum engineers.

The estimated reserves of Parallel, as of December 31, 1983, were: 276,839 barrels of oil and 294,589 Mcf of gas. The total combined reserves of the new union will be: 304,492 barrels of oil and 2,554,855 Mcf gas.

"The combination of the oil and gas reserves of Parallel and Cambridge & Nail will provide an increased cash flow to the new company and further establish Parallel as a more competitive entity in the exploration for oil and natural gas, and continued growth," said Delay.

Thomas Cambridge of Cambridge & Nail stated that many companies had approached the limited partnership about sales and mergers, but that none had provided merit for serious negotiation until Parallel made its proposal to trade its stock for interests in the limited partnership.

The fact that Parallel was a publicly traded corporation with a value of over $4 million and no bank debt, weighed on he positive side for consumation of the tax free transaction, according to Cambridge.

Following the transaction the stockholders of Parallel will own 55 percent of the outstanding shares of common stock of the new corporation and the Cambridge & Nail limited partnerships will own 45 percent of the outstanding shares of the oil and gas corporation.

A.L. Nail, a principal partner in Cambridge & Nail, stated that future net reserves, based on independent engineering studies, are approximately $14.3 million on an escalated basis, and discounted at 10 percent would be about $8.3 million.

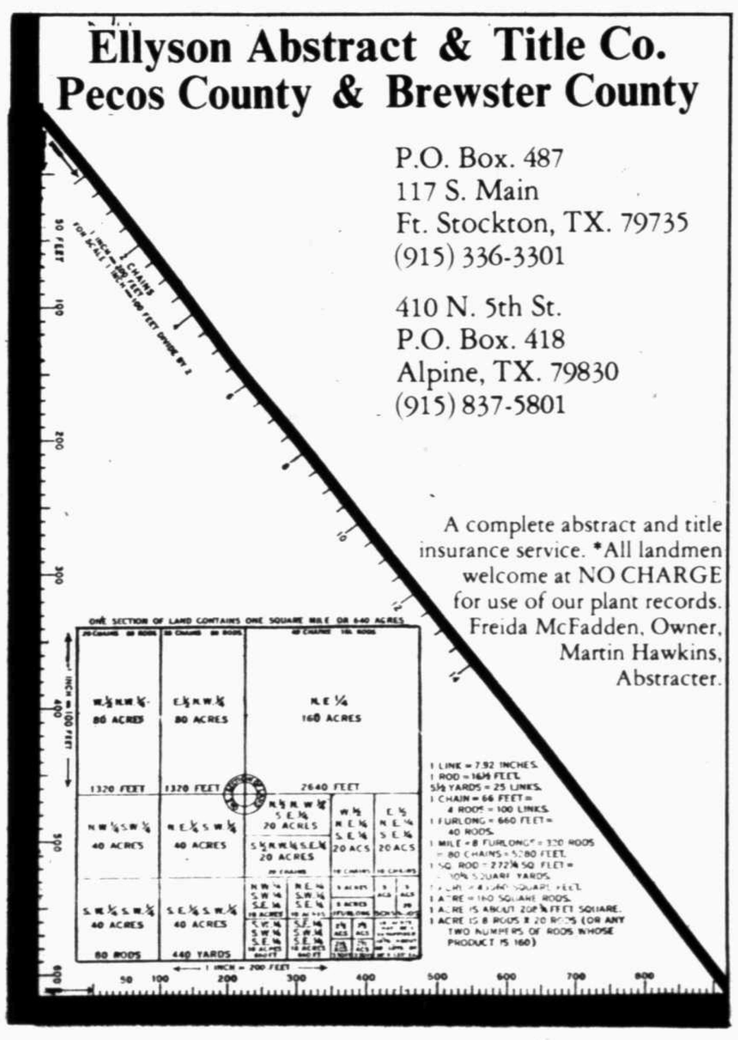

On an unescalated basis, the estimated future net reserves would be worth approximately $11.2 million, and when discounted 10 percent would be approximately $7 million.

"This transaction essentially doubles the size of Parallel and vastly strengthens its financial position," said Frank DeLay. "Parallel will have increased cash flow, positive working capital, no increase in staff or overhead and will continue to be debt free."

Why An Independent Deserves An Independent Bank

COMMITMENT

Given all the negative press about the energy industry, a lot of people are down on oil and gas lending.

But that's exactly the opposite of the way we feel at ClayDesta National Bank.

Our bank was built by and for the independent operator. We believe in the independent. And more importantly, we know how to handle the special needs of the independent. We're one of just a handful of Texas banks who have full-time engineers and oil and gas lenders on staff, ready to work with you.

We understand that there aren't many things more important to an independent operator than knowing your bank will stand behind you. You get a commitment from ClayDesta National Bank — you've got a commitment.

If you'd like to know more about what an independent bank could mean to your operation, call Bob Elliott or Steve Harper at 683-2265. Or just come on by. You'll love doing business with a bank that believes in you.

Company gets name from nowhere

By the Los Angeles Times,
Washington Post News Service

In the past, when callers phoned Ashton-Tate, a Culver City, Calif., computer software company, and asked to speak to Mr. Ashton, they were sometimes shocked when the party at the other end exclaimed: "Haven't you heard about the car crash?"

It was all a put-on, however, by some puckish employee. There is no Mr. Ashton. There never was.

It seems that when George Tate and Hal Lashlee went into the software marketing business in 1980, they decided that neither Lashlee-Tate nor Tate-Lashlee sounded right. So the partners pulled "Ashton" out of thin air, deciding that it had a classy ring to it. Thanks to its dBase II program and other innovative products, the company has become a multimillion-dollar company and a leader in its field. But when Tate is busy, unknowing callers invariably ask to speak to Ashton. Finally, it was decided that there had to be an Ashton, so the company recruited a real birdbrain. He (or she) is a 10-month-old blue and gold macaw that hangs out in the company cafeteria in a roomy cage. Because Ashton leaves the building to spend weekends at the home of Jay Hanson, head of the company's technical support department, and his wife, Janet, Al Seamen, head of security, insisted that the parrot be issued a company ID card, complete with mug shot.

Ashton has become a popular mascot of Ashton-Tate's employees, who smother him-her (it's too young to determine) with attention. So far, they've only been able to teach Ashton to say "Hi," "Hello" and "Ashton." But some are trying to teach the bird to say: "Give me a raise."

Melton Drilling reports net income

Melton Drilling & Exploration Co. reported net income of $170,295, or $.002 per share, on revenues of $2,235,395 for the fiscal year ended Dec. 31, 1983, compared with a net loss of $913,900, or a loss of $.011 per share, on revenues of $2,836,912 the previous year.

David H. Goodrum, president, said the improved results were due primarily to a change from the straight-line method of accounting to the days-in-use method, "to more accurately reflect the depreciation cost associated with drilling rig use." The company operates three drilling rigs in West Texas and southeast New Mexico.

The company's contract drilling operation in 1983 generated revenues of $2,049,268, compared with $2,584,754 in 1982. Goodrum said the decrease in revenues resulted from a decrease in drilling activity in the company's area of operation that began in 1982 and continued through 1983.

He noted, however, that preliminary figures for the first quarter this year indicate total revenues of $1,237,000 and a rig utilization rate of 67 percent, compared with total revenues of $167,000 and a rig utilization rate of 9 percent in the first quarter last year.

"Drilling activity in our area has increased substantially and we expect continued higher utilization of our rigs in 1984," Goodrum said.

The company last yer expanded its oil and gas exploration activities, participating with working interests in 13 wells in West Texas and southeast New Mexico which resulted in seven producers and six dry holes. The producers, all in West Texas, include one discovery and six development wells. Melton owns a 12/5 percent interest in each.

The company's estimated reserves at year-end were 112,500 barrels of oil and 87,117 Mcf of gas. Melton has working interests ranging from 10 to 25 percent in 17 productive wells.

The company's 1984 drilling program will start in May, with participation in wells scheduled to be drilling on prospects in four West Texas counties. Also, the company is negotiating for the purchase of additional prospects that may be drilling in 1984. Revenues generated by using the company's rigs to drill these prospects and revenues generated from existing oil and gas production and from outside contrct drilling operations will be used to finance the 1984 exploration program, Goodrum said.

DALLAS(SWN)–Chapman Energy, Inc. has announced the consummation on March 27, 1984 of the acquisition of all of the assets of George Rodman, Inc., an Oklahoma City-based oil and gas company, from the trustee in bankruptcy for Rodman plus the assets of five limited partnerships managed by Rodman. As previously announced, Chapman had agreed to acquire the assets of Rodman plus six limited partnerships managed by Rodman, subject to approval of the creditors of Rodman and the United States Bankruptcy Court. This approval was secured in March, 1984. In addition, limited partners in five of the six limited partnerships approved the proposed transaction.

The assets include 96 producing oil and gas wells, approximately 12,200 net acres of oil and gas properties located in Oklahoma and Louisiana, a 10-acre equipment yard located in Oklahoma and certain other equipment. Chapman issued 1,078,220 shares of Chapman common stock and paid cash aggregating $5,250,000 to the various creditors of Rodman and the limited partners in the associated partnerships; however, 539,110 shares of the common stock so issued will not be transferable for a period of one year from the date of the transaction.

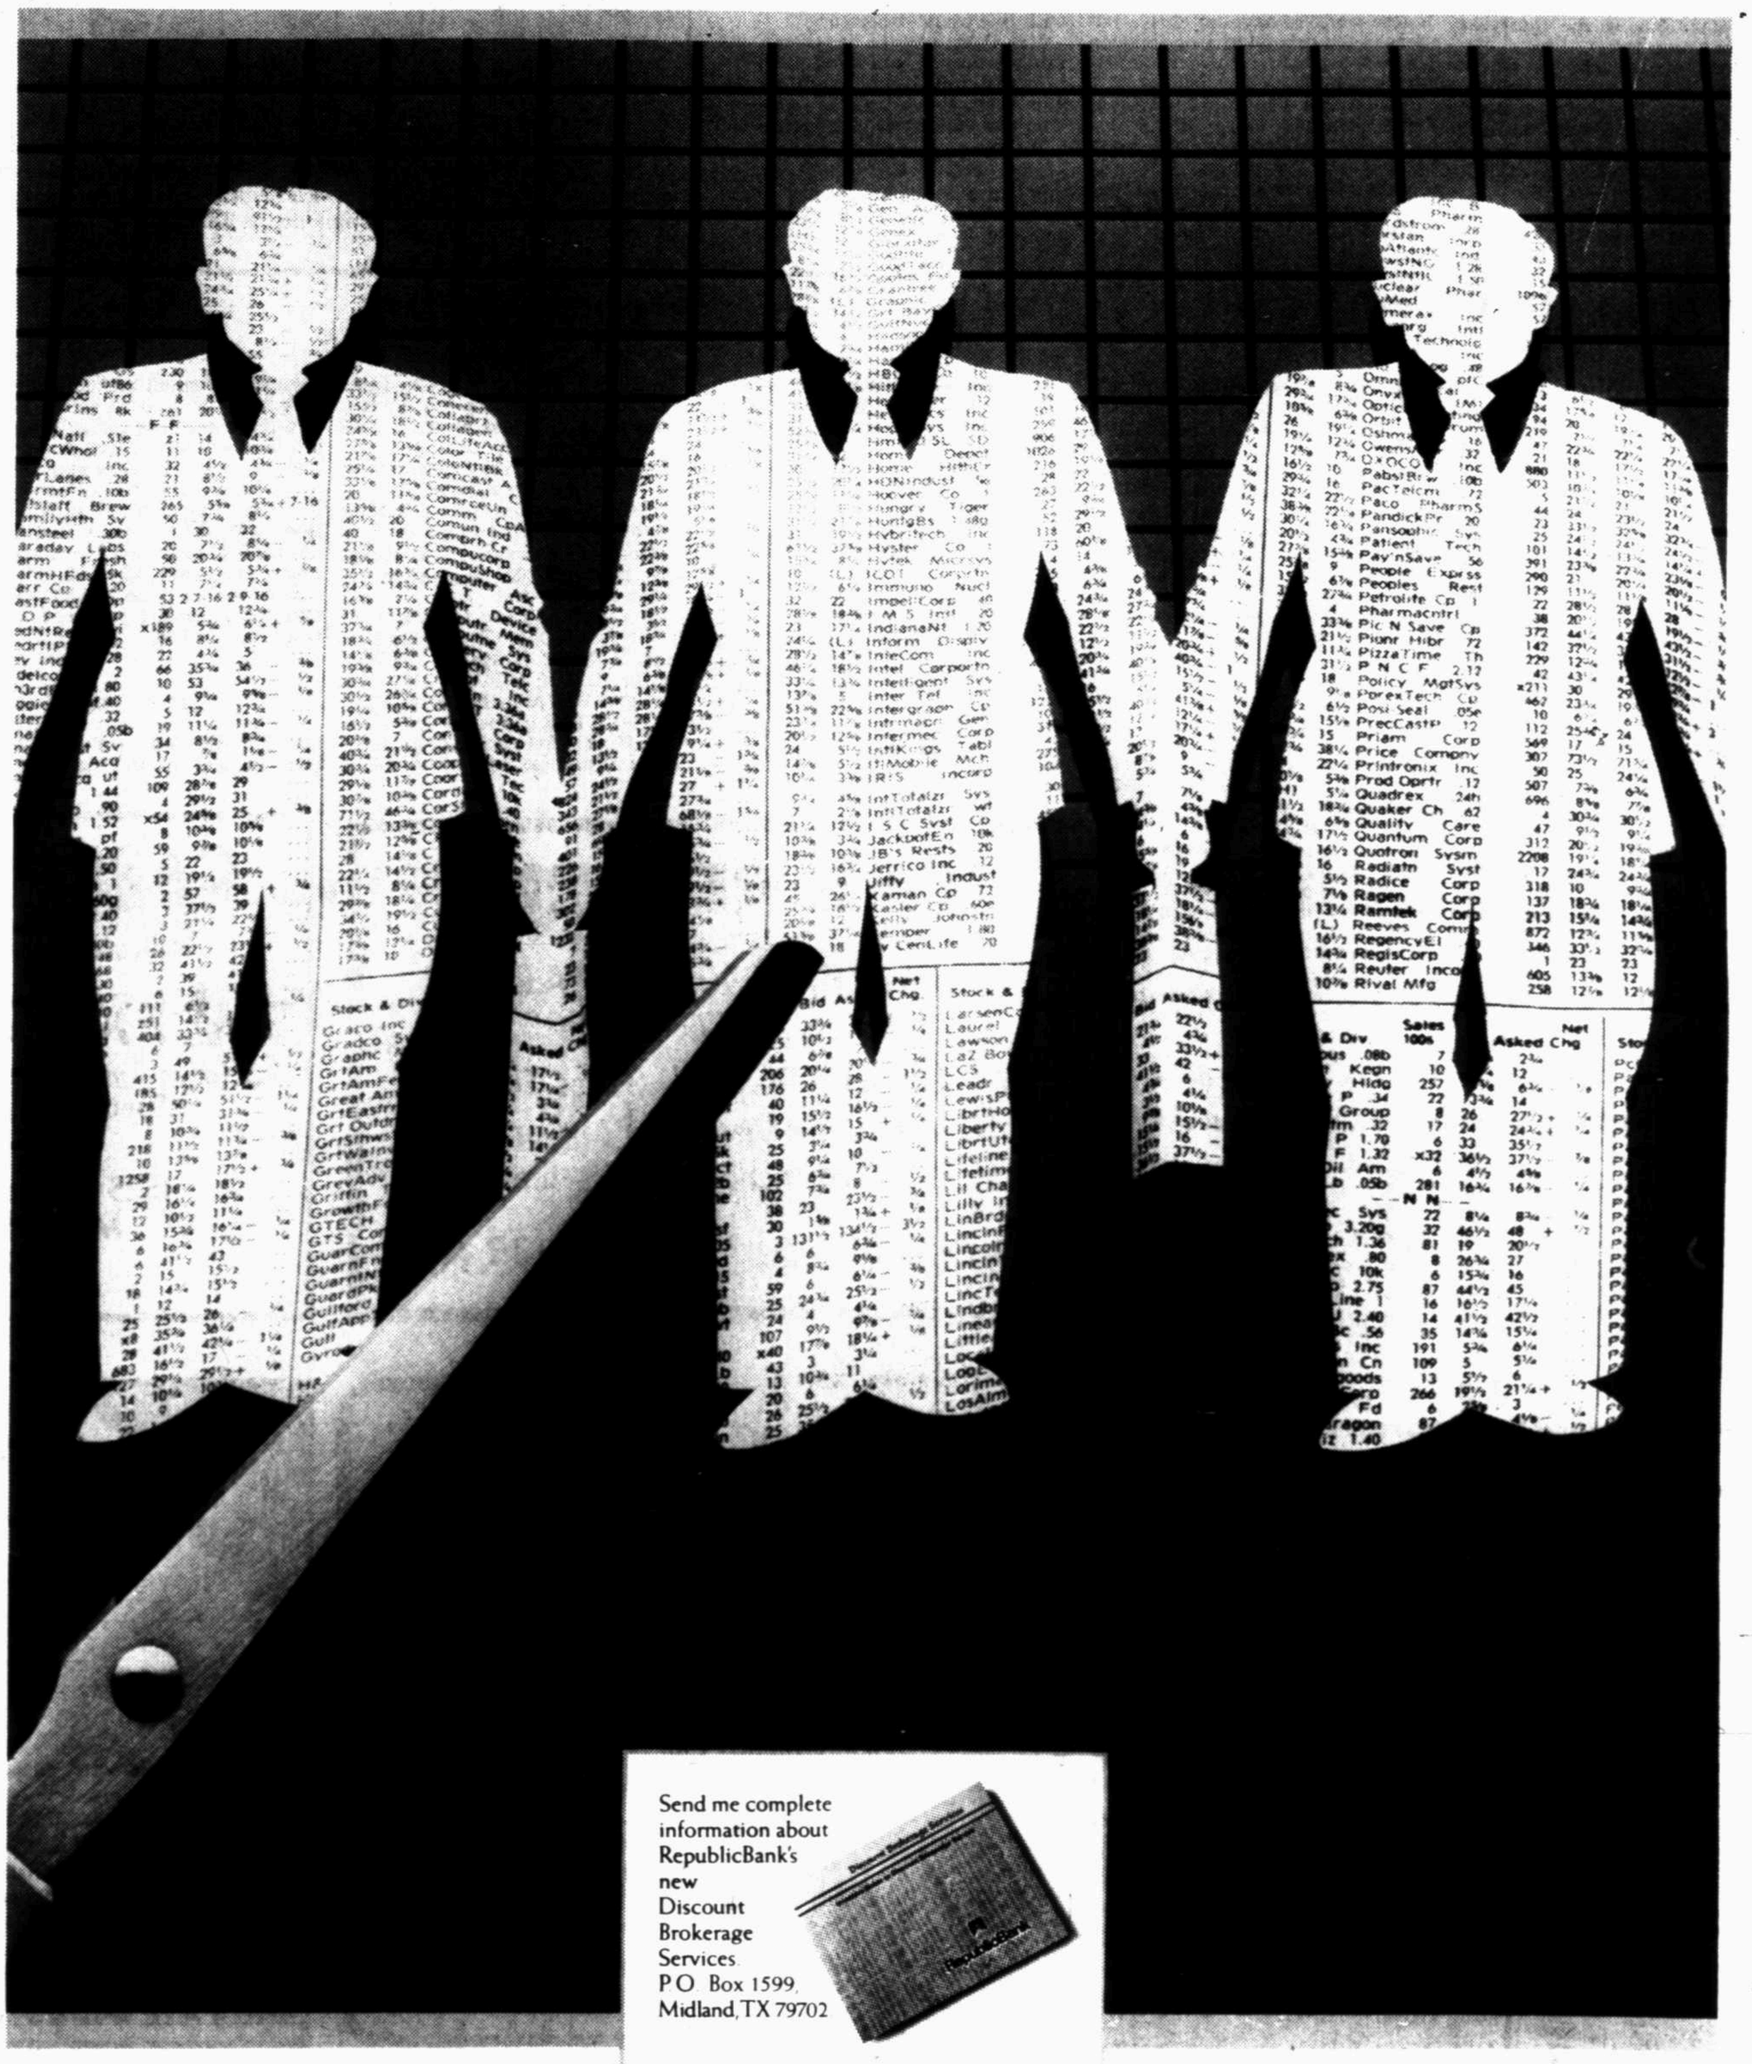

Chapman Energy, Inc., (NASDAQ symbol CHPN) is a diversified oil and gas exploration and development company headquarterd in Dallas, which operates principally in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana and owns a gas gathering and transmission system in Kansas. The stock trades over-the-counter.

Thousands still jobless

DETROIT (AP) — Anthony and Vivian Davis were enjoying two big paychecks a week when they suddenly wound up as numbers on Ford Motor Co.'s layoff rolls.

Two years later they no longer are numbers — but they don't have jobs either.

The Davises, having sold their three cars and gone on welfare, are among thousands whose names are being scratched from the list of Americans who can list their occupation as autoworkers.

The car industry has rebounded to record profits and Detroit is selling cars faster than they can be made. But it has left behind dozens of shuttered assembly and parts plants — and people like the Davises.

"I had been working since I was 15 years old," said Davis, who was hired at Ford at age 20 and now is 26. "I used to say, 'Well, I'll just go out and get another job.' But I can't do that today."

This month the U.S. auto industry reached what appeared to be a milestone when the number of workers on indefinite layoff fell to below 100,000 for the first time in five years. It had reached nearly 300,000 at one point during the four-year auto sales slump.

On Wednesday, speaking at a Ford plant outside Kansas City which the White House had picked as a model of resurgence in the auto industry, President Reagan noted that "more than 100,000 autoworkers went back to work in 1983."

But such figures leave out people like the Davises, who no longer are listed as laid off because their jobless benefits have run out.

The number of blue-collar U.S. autoworkers has shrunk to 510,000 today as compared to 735,000 in 1978, the United Auto Workers union says.

The industry's work force, including white-collar employees, numbered 1.5 million in 1978 but could fall by 1990 to as low as one-third of that — 500,000 — if automation continues and more cars and car parts originate overseas, according to union economist Lydia Fisher.

Davis said that of eight acquaintances who were hired with him at Ford, "one is still getting payments and the rest are not — and none of them have jobs."

The jobs of people like the Davises "are lost and gone forever," said John Hammond, an auto industry researcher at Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass.

"From their perspective, the auto industry has all its capacity in place now. If they're not working in the industry now, they never will be," Hammond said.

"This is happening throughout smokestack America today," he said. "These workers have no choice but to make the expenditure and retrain (for other jobs) or move to lower-paying jobs. That's very painful."

The Davises were hired in 1978 at Ford's sprawling Rouge River complex in nearby Dearborn. He assembled Ford Mustangs. She put together frames for Lincolns, put stripes on cars and tested new models for water leaks.

"I was working 10 hours a day, six days a week," said Mrs. Davis, also 26. After taxes, she said she "was making $350 a week including overtime."

Both were laid off several times, but had enough seniority to be called back — until October 1981. That's when Davis was laid off. In March 1982, Mrs. Davis was laid off. Neither has worked since.

The Davises received supplemental unemployment benefits, at 90 percent of their base earnings, for several months; unemployment and federal Trade Readjustment Act payments lasted until a year ago.

Now the couple and their 1-year-old daughter, Jessica, live on about $500 a month in relief payments and food stamps. They have no car in a city where mass transit has been cut back drastically. Relatives take them to the supermarket.

Davis completed an 18-month Ford-UAW-sponsored mechanical drafting course at Henry Ford Community College. "They said we're going to retrain you and get you out to the job market," he said. "But it was so little, and the employers said to me, 'We're looking for someone with five years' experience.'"

Mrs. Davis said she has tried to get minimum-wage jobs at fast-food restaurants and department stores. "But they say we can't take someone who was making $9.10 an hour."

The Davises said their high school grades were good enough to get them into college, but they chose instead Detroit's high wages and plentiful work.

BEST PRODUCTS

RICHMOND Va. — Best Products, the nation's largest catalog showroom retailer, announced sales for the month of March.

For the five weeks ended March 31, preliminary sales results were $159.4 million, an increase of 23.3 percent above the $129.3 million reported by Best last year.

For the fiscal year to date (February and March), preliminary sales results were $276.2 million, an increase of 19.8 percent above the sales of $230.6 million reported last year by Best.

USPCI

OKLAHOMA CITY — USPCI Inc., an 88 percent-owned subsidiary of Beard Oil Co., reported a sharp increase in revenues and a decreased net loss in 1983. The company reported a net loss of $808,000, or $.31 per share, on operating revenues of $9,221,000 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1983. In 1982 the company recorded a net loss of $1,061,000, or $.41 per share, on operating revenues of $5,887,000.

USPCI is a newly-organized corporation which serves as the parent holding company of United States Pollution Control Inc., which has been in business for 15 years. United States Pollution Control performs chemical waste, solid and liquid disposal services to industrial clients and opeeerates two disposal facilities, in Oklahoma and Utah. USPCI became a publicly-owned company in Jan. 1984 when 12 percent of its shares were distributed to Beard Oil shareholders in the form of a stock dividend.

BEARD OIL CO.

OKLAHOMA CITY — Beard Oil Co. reported a net loss of $4,449,000 or $.72 per share, on operating revenues of $32,001,000 for 1983. In 1982 the company reported a net loss of $369,000 or $.06 per share, on operating revenues of $34,887,000.

Herb Mee Jr., president, said that the $2.9 million decline in 1983 revenues resulted from lower oil and gas sales (down $4.8 million), reduced drilling and well servicing revenues (down $1.8 million) and higher revenues from disposal services operations (up $3.7 million). Oil and gas sales were down because of lower producted intensified price competition and a low rig utilization rate in this industry segment. An expanded volume of business by the company's subsidiary, USPCI Inc. led to increased disposal services revenues.

AMERICAN QUASAR PETROLEUM

FORT WORTH — American Quasar Petroleum Co. reported revenues of $39,180,000 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1983, compared to $54,119,000 for the comparable period in 1982. The loss in revenue was mainly caused by a decline of $11,200,000 for natural gas sales resulting from production curtailments and reductions in prices paid for 'deregulated' natural gas. The company's oil revenues declined by $1,900,000 due to a 22,000 barrel decrease in production and a $2.39 per barrel price decrease. The decrease in oil revenue was partly offset by an $800,000 decrease in the related windfall profit tax.

The company's net loss for 1983 was $31,981,000 ($1.66 per share of common stock), compared to a net loss for 1982 of $4,762,000 (25 cents per share). The primary factor in the company's 1983 loss was a provision of $25,000,000 for estmated uncollectible advances to certain company sponsored limited partnerships and as quarantor of partnership liabilities. Expenses declined by $3,500,000 (6.5 percent) during 1983 due principally to property sales and personnel reductions partly offset by an increase in net interest expense. At Dec. 1983, the company had a net operating loss carryforward of approximately $24,550,000 for income tax purposes ($21,360,000 for financial reporting purposes) which will expire in 1998.

TANDY CORP.

FORT WORTH — Tandy Corp. announced consolidated sales for the month of March were $222,506,000, an increase of 7 percent over the March 1983 sales of $207,379,000. Tandy's U.S. Radio Shack division recorded a 5 percent gain to $168,839,000 during March 1984 from $161,436,000 in March 1983. Sales of U.S. Radio Shack stores in existence more than one year rose 4 percent during March 1984.

Consolidated sales for the quarter ended March 31, 1984 were approximately $656,403,000, an 11 percent gain over the year earlier sales of $589,860,000. Third quarter earnings will be released in the latter part of April.

Oilman named recipient of enterprise award

THE WOODLANDS, Texas — George P. Mitchell, whose small wildcatting partnership grew into the billion-dollar Mitchell Energy & Development Corp., has been named one of 10 recipients of the 1984 Horatio Alger Awards.

The Horatio Alger Association of Distinguished Americans annually presents the awards to 10 individuals whose lives best typify the early struggles and professional achievements depicted by the popular 19th-century American heroes of author Horatio Alger.

The awards will be presented May 18 at the Century Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles.

Other winners include George Foreman, minister and former heavyweight boxing champion who grew up in Houston's Fifth Ward; J.B. Fuqua, chairman, Fuqua Industries Inc; Paula D. Hughes, first vice president-director, Thomson McKinnon Securities Inc.; Earle M. Jorgensen, chairman, Earle M. Jorgensen Co.; Ed McMahon, television personality; Charles R. Scott, president, Intermark Inc.; Mark Shepherd Jr., chairman, Texas Instruments Inc.; Sam M. Walton, chairman, Wal-Mart Stores Inc.; and Leslie T. Welsh, president, Leslie T. Welsh Inc.

Mitchell, chairman of the board and president of Mitchell Energy & Development, began his career as a $126-a-month petroleum engineer and geologist with Amoco. He later joined his brother, Johnny Mitchell, and another partner, H. Merlyn Christie, in the wildcatting business. The small partnership evolved into one of the nation's largest independent energy and real estate companies, with revenues approaching $1 billion. The Woodlands, a new community opened by Mitchell Energy in 1974, comprises 25,000 acres and eventually will provide residences for 180,000 people and jobs for 100,000.

Mitchell was born in Galveston to Greek immigrant parents. He paid his college expenses at Texas A&M University by waiting tables, selling candy, working in the laundry, and starting a successful business selling personalized stationery to fellow students.

The Horatio Alger Association was founded in 1947 as a non-profit service organization dedicated to motivating the nation's young people and to developing an appreciation of the economic opportunities afforded them by the free enterprise system. Among the 220 distinguished members in the association are Ronald Reagan, Michael E. DeBakey, Robert C. Byrd, Clare Booth Luce, Bob Hope, Gerald Ford and Tom Landry.

At the awards presentation, seven deserving high school students who otherwise would be financially unable to attend college will receive Horatio Alger scholarships.

Southland, HNG join to purchase proven reserves

FORT WORTH — Southland Royalty Co. and HNG Oil Co., a subsidiary of Houston Natural Gas Corp., announced the signing of an agreement with Petro-Lewis Corp. and certain of its affiliates and managed partnerships for the purchase of producing properties, located offshore Texas and the Permian Basin of West Texas. Southland and HNG Oil estimate total proven reserves to be 43.8 billion cubic feet of natural gas and 1.75 million barrels of oil.

The agreement, effective May 1, 1984, calls for Southland and HNG Oil equally to own undivided fractional working interest in 362 wells on 57 leases in ten different fields at a total cost of approximately $84 million, or $42 million each.

Southland's interest will be acquired by four partnerships formed by Southland with institutional investors. The institutional investors will contribute two-thirds of the capital requirement to make the acquisition with Southland contributing one-third.

Closing of the transaction is subject to the satisfaction of customary conditions. The purchase includes all related surface producing facilities, salt water disposal systems, and the natural gas gathering systems related to the offshore Texas properties.

Tipperary to buy gas, oil reserves

MIDLAND — Tipperary Corp. has announced that it has entered into a contract to purchase producing oil and gas reserves in the North Bagley Field of Lea County, N.M., for $8,326,000. The acquisition increases Tipperary's reserves by 422,000 barrels of oil and 3.5 billion cubic feet of gas. The purchase ws effective April 1, 1984.

In making the purchase Tipperary buys out a major partner in a number of wells to acquire a 100 percent working interest on wells they already opeerate.

RRC reports discoveries

AUSTIN (AP) — The Railroad Commission on Wednesday reported 63 oil discoveries in March, two more than the previous month. There also were 141 gas discoveries in March, 41 more than in February.

The commission said 571 dry holes were reported in March, 102 more than the previous month.

"Midland is a town where opportunity is found by those who know where to look. But, seeing that opportunity through to success, requires capability and capital.

That's why businesses here need a dependable - predictable relationship with their bank. They need a bank with the long-term experience to recognize the elements of success, and the financial strength to do something about them.

We have been helping others achieve success in Midland for as long as you can remember. We know what it takes... We Know Midland!"

Financial institutions a concern

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Breakdown of traditional barriers between financial service institutions is a matter of special concern to State legislators and regulators, State Board of Insurance Chairman Lyndon Olson reports.

Banking, insurance, securities and real estate institutions, he comments, are forming "alliances" to combine resources and solidify markets — which can result in expanded opportunities for investors and consumers, but also in formidable problems for competitors and regulators.

History, Olson argues, indicates regulators should keep close watch on merging services which have a "public trust role," since even the most attractive products are worthless if the company which offers them can't deliver.

Olson notes "deregulation" is being promoted at the Federal level, but he warns that the policy is a "two-edged sword."

"Removal of unwarranted restrictions to permit greater freedom in the marketplace is a laudable goal," he commented recently in addressing insurance agents.

"But removing restrictions to the extent of inviting more competition in one's own territory is something else again.

Several legislative efforts — such as a study by the House Financial Institutions Committee on financial conglomerates — are underway, with aview to determining what changes should be made to respond to changes in the industry.

Olson says the "jury is still out" on what changes may be needed in State — or Federal — policies, but says it's clear that the State regulatory system needs modernizing and strengthening.

He cited the case of one national company which encountered financial problems — which could affect 40,000 Texans holding annuity policies, with a liability of $350 million — as an example pointing to the need to change regulatory approaches.

Texas Credit Union Department reports a favorable response to its survey of State-chartered credit unions on use of a standard call report, Commissioner John (Pete) Parsons reports.

TCUD is considering use of a form developed through the National Association of State Credit Union Supervisors, which Parsons reports is in use in 37 states.

Of the 103 questionnaires returned (from 465 sent out), only two indicated opposition to the change, he says.

In another matter related to credit unions, data compiled by the Federal Reserve Board and National Credit Union Administration show credit unions made lower interest loans for car purchases in 1983 than in 1982.

New car rates for Federal credit unions averaged 12.91 percent (compared to 15.23 percent in 1982), while the average for commercial banks was 13.46 percent (compared to 15.97 percent).

For finance companies, the average in 1983 was 13.50 percent (compared to 12.82 percent).

Credit unions also increased their share of the consumer installment market in 1983 to 13.8 percent, reversing a four-year downward trend.

• • •

The Savings and Loan Section of the State Finance Commission has given final approval to amendments to rules involving certan loans and investments by State chartered savings and loan associations.

The changes increase the limit on unsecured loans from 10 percent to 25 percent of a association's net worth, and authorize investment in commercial real estate up to 100 percent (from 50 percent) of net worth.

PBGC to offer three courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer three courses in the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois, Midland.

"Practical Carbonate Petrology," Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 7-9 p.m., April 24 - May 17. This course will emphasize the proper study of samples of well cuttings on actual wells, the most basic tool in subsurface geology. This is a working class in which students will be required to bring a microscope, light, and extension cord. Bill Wright, Manager, Permian Basin Sample Lab, will instruct the course. Fee is $300, which includes text.

"Stress Management," Wednesdays, 7-9 p.m., April 25 and May 2. Registrants will larn to recognize the sources of stress in their lives. Emphasis will b on self management of stress by developing self awareness, time management, life and career planning, exercising, relaxing and acquiring good habits. The COMPAQ PLUS™ - Enhance Your Personal Productivity in Ways and Places You Can Only Begin to Imagine!

Imagine — carrying your complete Oil and Gas Accounting System with enough room left over for word processing and management modeling . . . or the equivalent of 5,120 double spaced pages . . . or complete payroll information for 6,302 employees, including personal data, deductions, overtime and bonuses. Imagine carrying all that information from office-to-office, office-to-home, city-to-city, in a tough, lightweight package as portable as a suitcase packed for a weekend trip.

Introducing the new COMPAQ PLUS Portable Personal Computer at MIDA Computer Center, featuring a ten-megabyte* hard disk drive, built-in. The COMPAQ PLUS runs all the popular programs written for the IBM XT, with no modifications. That means spreadsheets, management models, word processing, data communications, even the company books. Never has it been so simple — or cost effective — to apply so much problem solving and personal productivity power to such an array of tasks.

See what the COMPAQ PLUS and MIDA Computer Center can do for you today. You'll be pleasantly surprised at the price; you'll be astonished at the performance!

"M.R. Lary homes and Trane Weathertron® heating and cooling systems from Hubbard Plumbing, Heating and Air Conditioning mean quality, efficiency, and unbelievably low electric bills."

M.R. Lary

For more than five years, M.R. Lary has been a leader in building energy-efficient homes in Midland. "We have installed the Trane/G.E. Weathertron® units in every home that I have built. These units have proven to be very dependable and efficient over the years."

"If you save one hundred dollars per month on utilities, that money can help you buy a larger home. Being aware that a house payment is tax deductable and utility bills are not; put your money into your home, don't throw it out the window for utilities."

Economical heating and cooling costs of a home are brought about due to careful personal supervision and quality control in design. Also, double glass windows, insulation of R-30 in ceilings and R-24 in walls, and the high efficiency Weathertron® heat pump, with insulated metal duct, contribute to these low heating/cooling costs.

All of these factors make M.R. Lary homes surpass the test for Texas Electrics E-OK certification.

Construction begins on shopping center

From Staff Reports

Construction is underway on the Fairmont Park Shopping Center located on the northwest corner of the intersection of Wadley and Midland Drive.

The complex will be adjacent to the Albertson's store and is being developed by Fairmont Park Joint Venture, a Midland-Odessa partnership.

According to Carl Stephenson, president of Stephenson Management Group Inc., the partnership was formed in October 1983, when land for the retail center was purchased. Stephenson said his partners are Ed Runyan of Midland and Bill Blackmon of Odessa.

When completed, the L-shaped center will have about 40,000 square feet of leasable space. The parking ratio is expected to be one per 200 feet or better.

According to Stephenson the building's exterior walls will be finished in stucco or marble crete of sandstone color. Storefronts will be bronzed and tinted glass in aluminum frames.

Although there are a number of shopping centers currently being developed in Midland, Stephenson said Fairmont Park will be a neighborhood center as opposed to a regional shopping center. He said the retail outlets would be primarily service oriented such as, a hardware store, drycleaners, barbershop, restaurant."We feel that we've got and edge in our location. We feel very comfortable being next to Albertson's especially with the draw it will bring."

Stephenson, who has been in the real estate business in Midland since 1974, also has a real estate office in Odessa. Combined the offices employ about 30 people.

In addition to Fairmont Park, he has also developed the Geomap building in downtown Midland, remodeled a shopping center in Odessa and has built or converted several condominium complexes in the two cities.

Stephenson said he is currently negotiating with several prospective companies and expects construction to be completed by mid-summer.

When completed Fairmont Park Shopping Center will have about 40,000 square feet of leasable retail space. The new neighborhood shopping center is scheduled for completion by mid-summer. The center will be anchored by Albertson's Food Market.

Apartment Association meet set

The monthly meeting of the Midland Apartment Association has been set for Wednesday, April 18 at Ranchland Hills Country Club. The luncheon will begin at 11:30 a.m.

Scheduled to address the membership are Dewey Lee and Robbie Rucker who are both vying for the position of justice of the peace, precinct 1, place 1. Also scheduled to speak are Mark Dettman and Michael Williams who are running for the position of Midland County Attorney.

"When ClayDesta Plaza talked to me, I listened."

Mike Minces, Vice President - Branch Manager, E. F. Hutton

"Being downtown has been a tradition for brokerage firms. So when E. F. Hutton decided to move, we tried to stay downtown."

"We must have looked at every building in Midland. But no matter where we looked, we just kept coming back to ClayDesta Plaza."

"It has the professional atmosphere we want. And when we mentioned the special needs a company like ours requires, they told us what we wanted to hear."

"I've looked at a lot of buildings in larger cities, like Dallas and Houston, and I think that ClayDesta Plaza has the most progressive office development of any I've seen."

"So does my boss from New York."

Poehling will succeed Stan Jarvis, who will retire May 1, after 14 years of service.

Poehling has been with the compay for 27 years. During his career, in addition to serving as vice president, supply, he was manager, gas acquisition in Tulsa, Okla., and has held a number of engineering and management positions in Northern's Supply Division.

Standard will continue to invest in exploration

From Staff Reports

Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) will continued to invest a major share of its available funds in exploration and production because of the company's confidence in its ability to find and develop new reserves, Chairman Richard M. Morrow said last week in San Francisco.

He also said the Permian Basin will remain a principle area for exploration.

According to Bill Huntington, public affairs advisor for Amoco Production Co., Houston, — the exploration and production subsidiary — the company's most significant discovery in West Texas is in the Delaware Basin in Loving County. Amoco has a 75 percent interest in the Hill-Haley No.1 which tested 11.8 million cubic feet of gas/caof. Since the well was completed April 29, 1983, he said, the company has acquired additional acreage and now holds an approximate one-half interest in 26 square miles in the area of the discovery well.

As a result of this discovery, two other wells have been drilled in this area. Amoco is currenting drilling a 23,000-foot off-set well, the B.E. Quinn, in the Ellenburger formation.

"Our unrivaled position in domestic leaseholdings affords ample opportunities to test prospects with excellent potential," Morrow said, noting that 78 percent of Standard's $5.1 billion budget is scheduled for exploration and production projects.

Since the company tripled its holdings in the Gulf of Mexico in 1983, seven of 13 wells drilled by Standard in this region encountered hydrocarbons. The company expects to have as many as 16 rigs running in the Gulf in 1984 and to drill as many as 50 additional exploratory wells during the year.

Referring to recent attempts by a group of investers led by Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens, to ..... Morrow said royalty trusts, which have been proposed by some as a means for enhancing shareholder values, simply provide for an orderly liquidation of a business.

Although they probably have a legitimate role, particularly in smaller companies in some circumstances, he said, "Our analysis, however, show a royalty trust would at best be only marginally beneficial to a relatively small group of shareholders."

In an in-depth review of the company's exploration and production operations, Leland C. Adams, executive vice president of Standard, said the company has made "impressive progress in worldwide exploration and production operations over the past year. Our exploration program continues to emphasize higher potential plays, and we have acquired many attractive prospects."

In 1983, the company spent $680 million net for 196 blocks in four sales in the Gulf of Mexico, tripling its holdings theres through the acquisition of 630,000 net acres. In addition to the agressive program to evaluat4e these older blocks, Adams said the company's exploration and development program will emphasize areas in the Overthrust Belt.

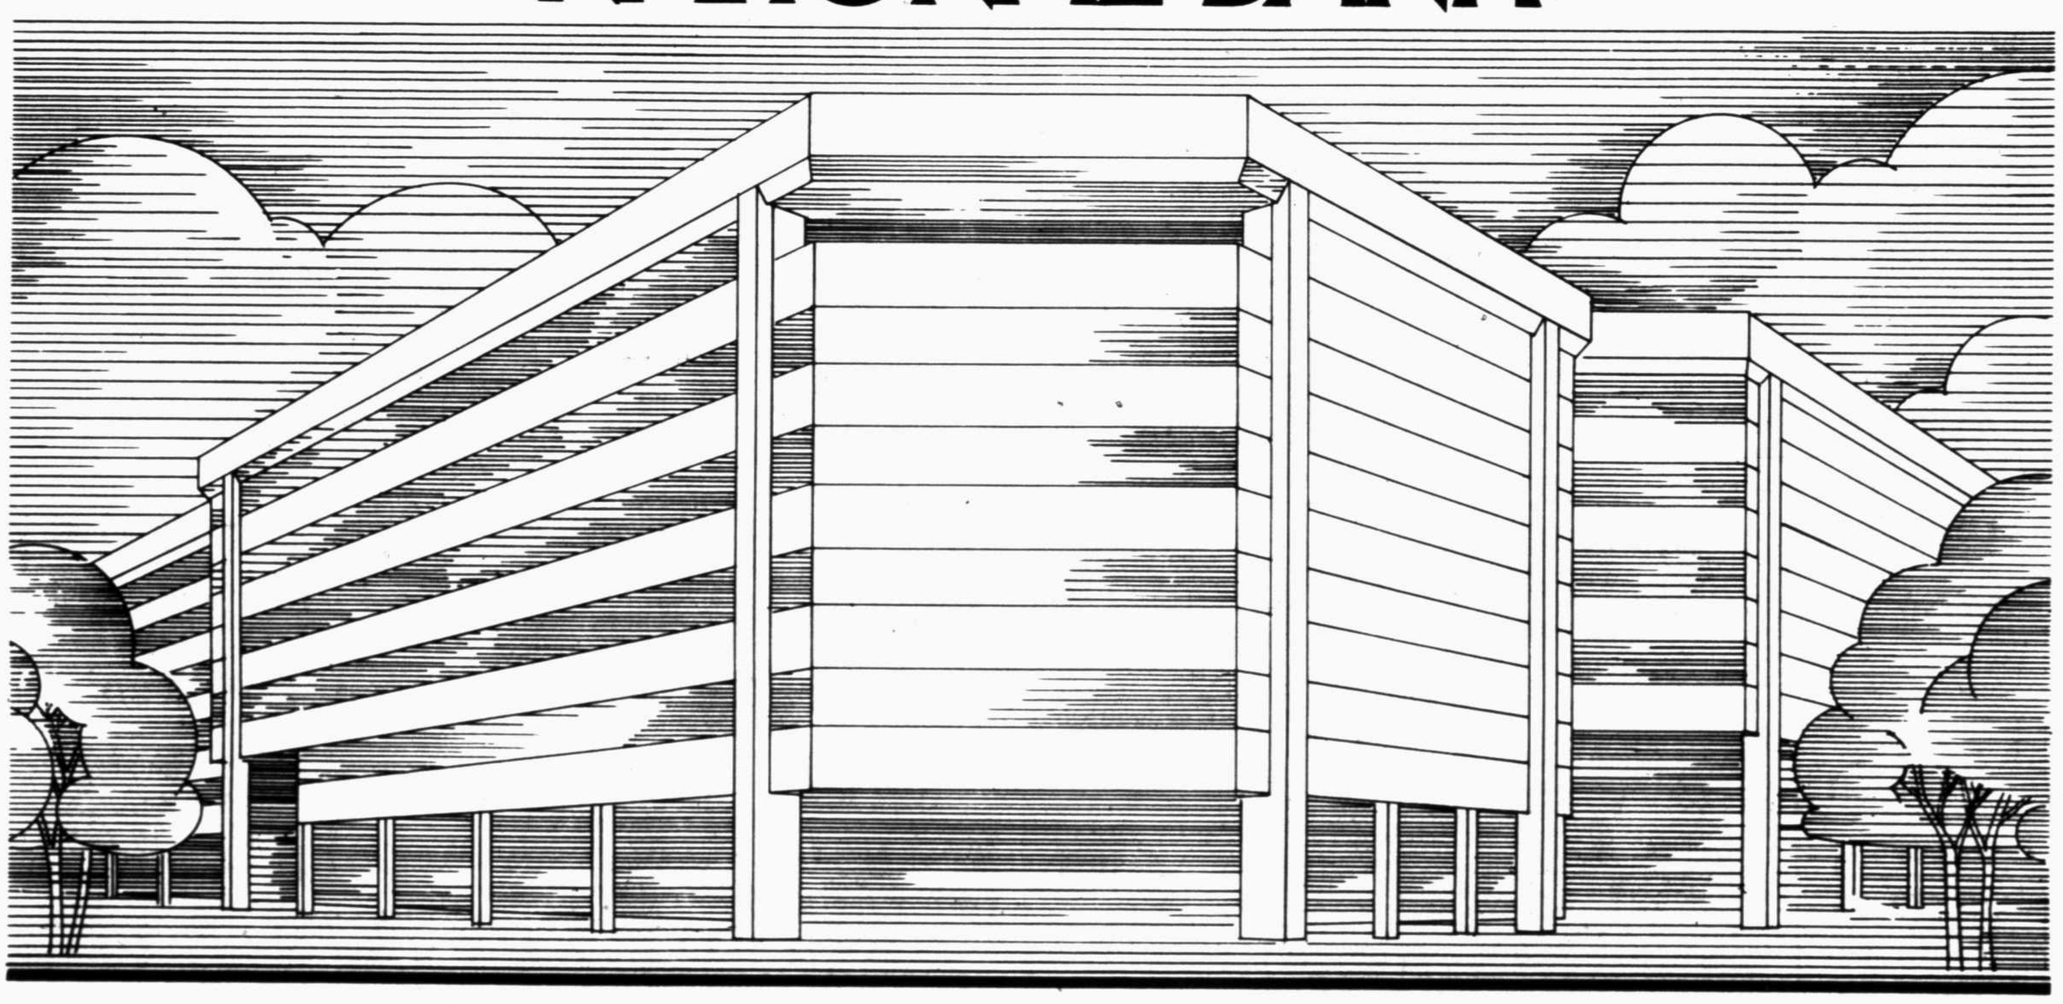

Standard operates 17 rigs in exploratory and development drilling and has a working interest in 23 of 26 fields discovered to date there.

Other principle areas for exploration and production operations include the Gulf Coast Tertiary trend; Alaska in the Beaufort Sea and other frontier acreage. Louisiana's Tuscaloosa Trend is a mature exploration play, but the company made two important discoveries there last year.

Alaska's northern coast continues to be a promising area, Adams said. Standard has 106,000 net acres under lease in the Beaufort Sea, just off the North Slope. The company also has acquired 33 tracts in the St. George Basin near the Aleutian Peninsula and expects to spud the first test well this summer.

Significant new fields in the Western Overthrust Belt, the Gulf of Mexico and the Tuscaloosa Trend helped Standard to stem the decline in domestic liquids production last year. Standard's U.S. liquids production averaged 403,000 barrels per day, down only one percent from 1982, the smallest decline since 1977.

Phone home while flying

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

John D. Goeken's ideas have a way of turning into dollars, millions of them. His latest venture is Airfone, which will put public telephones on commercial airliners. The service will debut this summer, and, if projections hold true, a $20 million venture stands to generate $750 million a year.

Goeken is what is called, predictably enough, an "idea man." His track record includes developing technologies for a company that came to be called MCI Communications Corp. and for Florists' Transworld Delivery (FTD), the florists' answer to reaching out and touching someone.

Now, Goeken, 49, is pioneering a new communications technology with Airfone, which he thinks will be the most popular yet. He says the appeal of and need for telephones on public conveyances is indicated by a one-year United Airlines experiment with a public, in-flight telephone several years ago and by the popularity of Amtrak's Metroliner telephones, which were available from 1967 until 1981, when the federal government reclaimed the radio frequencies they used.

"Almost a million people a day are in the sky, and based on all these studies (by both United and Amtrak) there would be about a third placing phone calls, or a hundred million calls a year over the system," Goeken said.

By summer, Airfone should be enabling travelers to phone home, or the office, from 35,000 feet up. The technology, which Goeken has been developing since 1974, should enable plane passengers to place calls from anywhere over the United States, including Alaska and Hawaii. Calls can be direct-dialed to anywhere within the United States, Alaska and Hawaii.

Two other companies, Aeronautical Radio Inc., known as Arink and Millicom Inc., have asked the Federal Communications Commission for licenses to operate air-to-ground telephone systems.

The FCC has approved Arink's application for experimental service but, "We have no plans at the present time" to begin operating an air-to-ground phone system, Arink's corporate secretary, Laura Buckenheimer, said. Millicom's application is pending.

When Airfone becomes operational, all calls, regardless of distance — including customarily toll-free 800 numbers — will cost $7.50 for the first three minutes, or any fraction thereof, and $1.25 for each additional minute, or fraction thereof. Calls will be dialed direct, without operator assistance.

Callers will be able to place calls only by using credit cards, including American Express, Visa, MasterCard, Diners Club and Carte Blanche. Airfone is negotiating with AT&T about use of its credit card. Charges will appear on the caller's monthly credit card statement.

Goeken is president of Airfone Inc., and a founder of MCI. He says he is a self-taught communications expert who "always wanted to be involved in communications and electronics. My last year in high school (in Joliet, Ill.), I went to school a half day and I had a radio repair shop." Goeken tinkered first with radio, then television, then two-way radio, learning each technology as he went along.

Washington-based Airfone is a joint venture of Goeken Communications Inc., and Western Union Corp. Both Airfone and Goeken Communications are privately held.

Goeken said he has several business partners in Goeken Communications, "most of whom are former MCI associates." "A sizable loan" from Bank of America helped cover Airfone's development costs and start-up equipment, he said. Goeken expects costs to mount to about $20 million by the time the service gets off the ground this summer. Airlines are paying for their own installation.

Airfone has agreements with a number of major airlines to provide the service, including United, Eastern, Northwest Orient, Delta, American, TWA and Pan Am.

The telephones resemble public pay phones, except that they are cordless. At least four are expected to be on wide-body planes, the only aircraft on which the phones will be available.

Passengers who want to place a call will insert a credit card, which the on-board equipment scans for expiration date and card verification. Once cleared, callers can take the phone-set back to their seat, or any other point on the plane to place calls. The credit card will be released when the phone is returned.

The length of each call is expected to be limited to about 30 minutes. This limitation is imposed by the average air time between Airfone's 37 ground stations, which will transmit phone calls over a 400-mile diameter. Radio equipment on the aircraft scans for the next ground station ahead to ensure the longest possible connection.

According to Airfone, the voice quality of the calls will be comparable to that of any long-distance call made on land. In addition, the company says the telephones operate with very low power to prevent interference with aircraft radio equipment.

The service is being offered under an experimental development license issued by the Federal Communications Commission. The license allows a market trial of the system, for an unspecified time, to determine whether it serves a public need.

Tips to get most out of money may help tourists

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

For the last few years, Americans traveling abroad almost could not go wrong when changing their U.S. dollars into foreign currency. The longer they waited, the stronger the dollar got and the more it would buy in foreign goods and services.

One tourist even recalled fondly a 20-minute delay in line once at the crowded American Express office in Paris. "While I was just standing there, they changed the rate," he said, "and I got eight extra francs for my $100."

But with many analysts now prominently predicting that the drop in the dollar's value will continue, those planning a vacation abroad this year — whether to Acapulco or Athens, London or Lima — might be interested in a few tricks of the trade to squeeze maximum value out of their money.

Most experts advise you to play it safe rather than heavily speculating in currency transactions. Currency traders may spend their days glued to computer terminals routinely shuttling millions of dollars instantaneously in hopes of making a sliver of a profit on exchange-rate fluctuations to the fourth decimal point, but the average tourist has little hope of beating the experts at their own game.

"Unless you really know what you're doing," says Russell Hogg, president of MasterCard International Inc., "you are generally better off sticking to dollars."

There are good ways, though, to make sure of getting the best deal for your dollars when you spend them overseas. Surprisingly, many sophisticated travelers now recommend using credit cards in places where they are widely accepted.

"All you need are modest amounts of local currencies," says Arlene Macchia, manager of travel services for Allied Corp., a Morristown, N.J.-based multinational conglomerate.

"With a credit card you can save as much as 6 percent on exchange costs, you get the float (by delaying having to pay the bill), and it's easier to keep good records."

Many travelers are reluctant to use credit cards because they do not know what the exchange rate will be when the transaction is completed. And they often worry that their card will not be accepted in that little bistro they wandered into off the beaten path.

These fears, however, may no longer be well-founded. "I think most people would be surprised how widely accepted cards are even in the most obscure places," says Roger Ballou, vice president for travel services at American Express Co.

Some experts, though, are wary of credit cards and favor carrying a good supply of the local currency in either cash or traveler's checks. Because it takes several days, or even longer, for a credit card bill to reach a processing center for conversion to dollars, in today's fluctuating currency markets the exchange rate can vary considerably from what it was at the time of purchase.

Annual festival celebrated

From Staff Reports

The 1984 Rainbow Festival on the Strand is this weekend. Held in conjunction with the Annual Blessing of the Shrimp Fleet, the festival occurs every year on Galveston Island's historic five-block Strand area.

This year a free tour of the Railroad Museum, a free tour of the Elissa sailing ship, daily parades and concerts by Dejan's Olympia Brass Band of New Orleans and a Saturday Evening Street Dance with 79Q-93 FM are included.

Other Rainbow Festival events include a tribal and totemic contemporary art exhibit in the Galveston Arts Center Gallery, food and entertainment from many countries, a children's hands-on art area and art exhibit, street musicians, jugglers, clowns, costumed characters and a self-guided tour of shops and buildings on the Strand.

Proceeds from the festival benefit Galveston Arts!, a non-profit visual and performing arts organization operating the festival.

Japan moves to protect crane

Copley News Service

The government recently took steps to preserve parts of the birds' habitat to ensure its survival.

Only about 350 cranes survive in Japan in the wild.

LONDON

from $921

Includes air fare and rental car.

When it comes to outstanding, low-cost vacations, American Airlines and the American Express® Card make a great team. Take this economical British Fly/Drive vacation, for example. The price American Airlines gives you not only includes air fare, but also one week's use of a rental car with unlimited mileage.

It's convenient, too, thanks to the timely nonstops American Airlines offers from here to Dallas/Fort Worth. Once there, you simply connect with American's daily nonstop to London.

The American Express Card adds still more convenience to this attractive bargain. Because it's the one card that's welcomed just about anywhere you go. Which means you can use it to pay for everything from your air fare and rental car, to hotels, restaurants — just about any travel need you might have. So don't leave home without it.

American Airlines and the American Express Card. When it comes to business or leisure travel, we're a tough team to beat. For information and reservations, call your Travel Agent or American Airlines today.

*Reservations must be made and tickets purchased at least 21 days in advance of departure. Minimum stay — 7 days. Maximum stay — 6 months. Fare subject to change without notice. (YOAP1)

Pampered passage aboard ship

By MICHAEL CARLTON

The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Confession, someone once wrote, is good for the soul. And so I come to you hat in hand (and foot in mouth) to confess before you and God and all the ships at sea. I do not like cruise ships and cruising.

Cruises make me seasick.

I've cruised the Atlantic and the Pacific, the Caribbean and the Mediterranean, the Inside Passage and the Intracoastal Waterway, the Suez and Panama canals, the Great Lakes and the Great Barrier Reef. And, in a personal ecumenical statement, I threw up in every one.

So, where have you been all my life, Royal Viking Star? While I was bobbing around the Mediterranean on a Greek freighter that smelled of goat cheese were you pampering your passengers in the calm on the Pacific? While I was cruising along the coast of Korea and eating shrimp that were small and gray were you presenting your passengers with lavish plates of caviar? Ah, great mistress of the sea, at last we have met. Every other ship in the world will always be second in my heart, dear Star.

THE ROYAL Viking Star is a beautiful ship — long and lean and stylishly shaped. Unlike those bulky sea-going condominiums that are coming out of the shipyards of Europe these days, the Star — like her sister the Royal Viking Sky — is as trim as a Vogue cover girl. Her lines go back to the classic sailing ships of old, when looks were more important than jamming as many people on board as possible. Give the Star points for a very good first impression.

The staterooms of the Star are roomy, with sufficient closet space for two adults who like to dress — or even overdress — for dinner, and enough storage space to snuggle away multiple suitcases. The rooms also have a bar, makeup lights that will flatter even the deepest wrinkles, a telephone that will connect you with anyplace in the world in minutes. Some even have televisions showing current movies. The rooms also manage to avoid the predominant colors — orange, purple and shocking pink — that obsess modern shipboard designers. Maybe that's why I always got seasick.

I've always hated the two-seating dining arrangements on those ships that pack too many people on board and have too few seats in the dining room to allow everyone to sit down at once. If you've ever been on such a ship you know the line begins to form at the dining room door an hour before dinner and the rush to get to your table when the door opens makes the Calgary Stampede look like a stroll through the park. If you are at the first seating you must storm through your meal to vacate your seat in time for the second-seating bunch. But, of course, you can then get the best seat for the ship's show, which the second-seating people have to watch from the wings, because the first-seating people already have the front-row seats.

ON THE Royal Viking Star you can enter the dining room anytime between 7:30 and 9, dine at leisure and be assured there will, indeed, be a seat for you at the evening show. This civilized arrangement also allows you to share more time with your waiters and get to know them, which usually makes for much better service.

The Star has a large number of tables for two, for those couples — and there are more than most cruise ships realize — who prefer to dine alone. Not everyone wants to spend a week or two trying to make inane conversation with someone with whom you have absolutely nothing in common. Sharing a table with strangers can be a delightful experience; often it is not.

THE ROYAL Viking Star also has a separate supper club — probably an imitation of the Queen Elizabeth 2's Queen and Princess grills — that allows you to dine at a standard of elegance long vanished from the seas. Waiters wearing tuxedos and white gloves serve you by candlelight in a room with a capacity of only 60. A band plays soft dance music as you dine and you are welcome to waltz between courses.

The six-course meal on the night we dined at the club — truffled salmon terrine, clear oxtail soup with cheese straws, a ragout of venison, a pear sorbet, beef tenderloin with fresh vegetables, and a parfait with hot raspberry sauce — was excellent. All passengers on the ship are given an opportunity to experience the special evening once during the cruise on a first-come, first-serve basis.

FINALLY, IF you decide to forego the dining rooms, want to skip the midnight and luncheon buffets and all the other opportunities to gorge yourself, you can simply pick up the phone and order room service — selecting from the same menu as those presented in the dining room.

The Royal Viking Star has cleverly scattered several bars throughout the ship — some as intimate as the tiny Galaxy Club, others large and airy like the Stella Polaris lounge — to allow everyone to have his cup of scotch, and drink it, too.

The swimming pools (there are two) on board are large by shipboard standards, especially the one on the Scandinavia deck, which is large enough to allow you to swim laps. Most ships have pools about the size of a teacup.

WHEN THE Royal Viking Star pulls into port, it is usually into some place like Pago Pago or Bora Bora, Sydney or Hong Kong. The tired ports that all of us have seen — St. Thomas and Nassau, Acapulco and Mazatlan — are, for the most part, successfully avoided in the Royal Viking Star's Pacific wanderings.

All of this combines to make a usually happy group of passengers, and a loyal one, too. On an average cruise of the Royal Viking Star and her sister the Royal Viking Sky, between 50 and 60 percent of those sailing are repeat passengers. That was certainly true on our cruise. People like the Jack and Herman Lapin families of Houston (second cruise for each), Jean and Albert Kaufman, also of Houston (fourth cruise), the Paul Kennetts of Dayton, Ohio (eighth cruise), and the Verle Coopers of Piedmont, Calif. (sixteenth cruise), all told us they would be back on board the Royal Viking Star as soon as time (and, one presumes, money) permits.

AH, YES, money. All the goodies provided by the Royal Viking Line do cost money — lots of it, in fact, at least by my standards. A typical two-week Pacific cruise costs $2,842 per person, double occupancy for the lowest-priced inside double, and can go as high as $9,534 per person for the most lavish penthouse suite, which comes complete with its own balcony.

Before you spend all that money I must, in honesty, tell you that all was not perfect on the Royal Viking Star. The shipboard productions were amateurish, the ship's comedian was about as funny as an early death, the on-board movies were not first run, the gymnasium was too small for much exercise, and some of the ship's officers had an embarrassingly aggressive habit of propositioning female passengers — some of whom were married.

Fung Village reminiscent of ancient China

Copley News Service

HONG KONG — If you're turned on by traditional Chinese weddings, you'll love it. If jugglers and dancers of the Orient are your thing, you've got them. Or fortune-tellers, magicians, bakers or calligraphers.

And if you love to take pictures, the Sung Dynasty Village will drive you out of your mind. Do not visit this new Hong Kong attraction without plenty of film for your camera.

The Sung Dynasty Village is an almost exact replica, down to the smallest detail, of a 1,000-year-old Chinese village. It was inspired by the Sung Scroll painting, "Spring Festival On The River," which depicts part of the Sung capital, Pien Liang.

The village, built by Deacon Chiu, took five years and $3 million to build. Much of the cost went into extensive wood carving and other fragile works of art.

Your ticket of admission allows you to remain in the re-created village all day and it includes a traditional Chinese lunch or snack during which a magician entertains.

At the gate, the visitor is given several pieces of "ancient" money which may be spent on cookies, the services of a fortune-teller or to have a personal sample of calligraphy.

In a tavern, visitors sample wine. Candy is made in the village. There is a tea pavilion. There also is a candle shop, weavers, an umbrella and fan workshop and a wood-carving shop.

A rich man's home, complete with fancy furniture and fittings, has been re-created. The house has a stone garden that is especially beautiful when viewed from the second floor.

The village temple is dedicated to the god Ehr Long, who was the nephew of an emperor.

Free Easter Eggs.

But you don't have to hunt for them.

They're part of the free breakfast we cook to order for every guest in your party. Eggs, bacon and hash browns. Hotcakes and sausage. Fresh fruits, cereals, sweet rolls, juice, coffee, tea and milk. As much as you like of anything you like. No charge, no check, no tipping.

You get something else, too. A two-room suite, for about the price of a room. Because all we have is suites. Each has a private bedroom with its own tv. Plus a separate living room with its own tv, a queen-size hide-a-bed, and kitchen/wet bar.

There's also a free, two-hour cocktail get-together every evening. Anything in the bar, for any adult in your party. Totally on the house. With never a tip accepted.

And all this, mind you, isn't just for Easter Sunday. It's available Friday, Saturday, and every day of the year.

So, why hunt for eggs on Easter? Stay here, and have them handed to you.
