Hurricane Diana lingers along coastline

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

WILMINGTON, N.C. — Hurricane Diana loitered just off the coast today, keeping thousands of refugees in emergency shelters, and forecasters warned that the storm was intensifying and could still move toward land with its 115 mph winds and threat of giant storm tides.

"The problem this morning is we have a hurricane with no sense of direction," said Neil Frank, director of the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla.

Power outages, downed tree limbs and heavy rain were reported, but there were no serious injuries and some coastal communities nearest the storm's center reported no substantial damage.

"I got up and looked over the area and the damage looks minor," Wrightsville Beach Mayor Gene Floyd said today. "Everything's OK over here."

Wrightsville Beach is east of Wilmington and several miles west of the spot where the eye of the storm was nearly stationary this morning.

In Southport, near the tip of Cape Fear, a police dispatcher who wouldn't give her name said power was restored about 9 a.m. this morning and that there appeared to be no substantial damage other than tree limbs in the streets.

Diana's sustained winds around its center settled from 135 mph late Tuesday to 115 mph this morning, then rose to 120 mph. "Right now it's starting to intensify," Don Witten, National Weather Service spokesman in Washington, said at midmorning.

The hurricane's eye was 45 miles east-southeast of Wilmington at 10 a.m., but in the city the wind blew at 29 mph this morning with gusts to 41 mph.

Utility lines were down in places and a few roofs had been blown off, said state official Russ Edmonston, but "nothing substantial" was reported overnight other than the collapse of two condominiums under construction at Carolina Beach.

More than 14,000 evacuees went to 65 shelters during the night in a 12-county area of coastal North Carolina, Gov. Jim Hunt said. About 9,000 people had moved into shelters in South Carolina but were allowed to return home Tuesday.

Nearly 500,000 people live in the coastal counties targeted by Diana, and gubernatorial aideR. Brent Hackney said it was impossible to tell exactly how many others were staying with relatives or in motels.

Hunt, who was touring Wilmington this morning, warned residents to stay inside because Diana "is still a very dangerous storm" because of the possibility of heavy rain and the storm's erratic movement.

The National Weather Service said the storm was expected to resume a north to northeast drift today, posing a threat to the coastline from Morehead City to Cape Hatteras, but Witten said a high pressure system to the north was keeping it from moving forward.

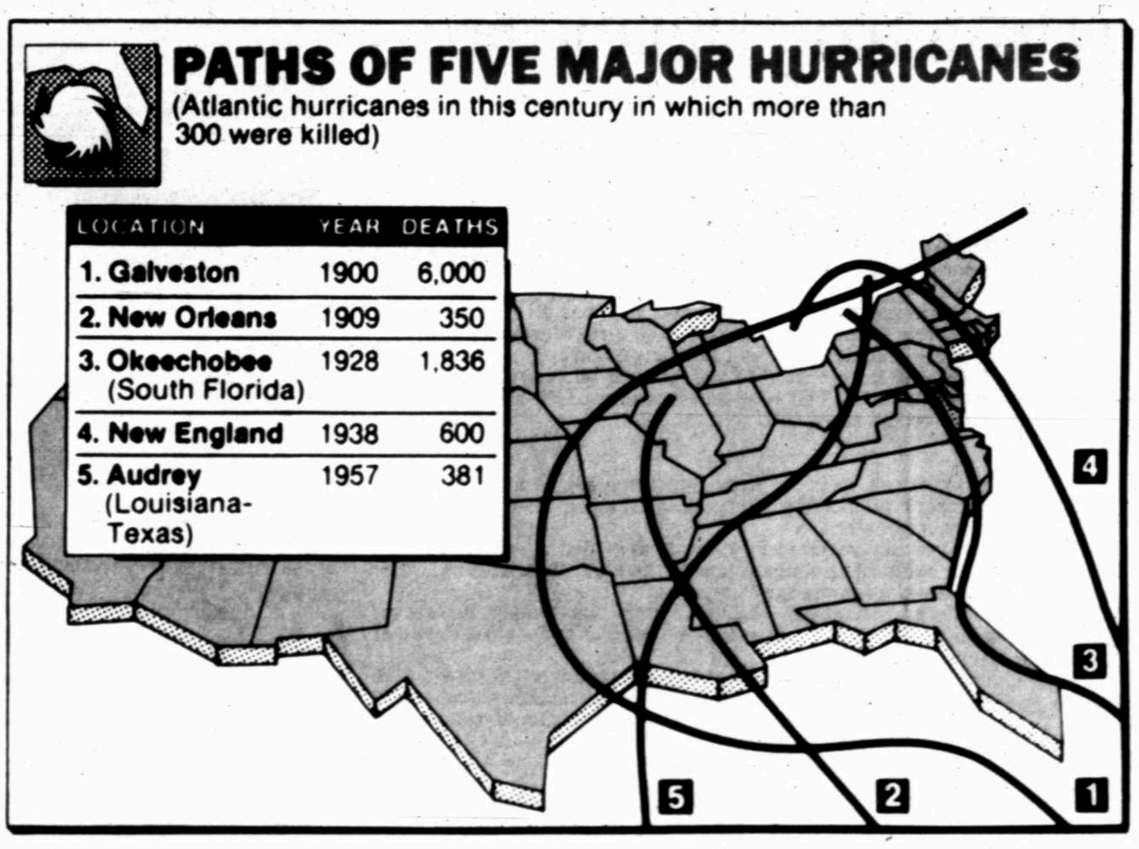

"That thing is sort of sitting there churning. It's very difficult to forecast because of that," said Witten. "That's a bad scene for a major storm to sit out there off the coast churning like that. It's just going to be a tough day down there."

"The forces that tend to move a hurricane are very weak and just about balanced," said weather service meteorologist Joe Pelissier in Raleigh. "There is really nothing in the way of large scale atmospheric currents to move it.... It's just there in sort of a very quiet environment."

At 10 a.m. the storm's estimated position was latitude 34.0 degrees north and longitude 77.1 degrees west, Witten said.

A hurricane warning was in effect from Myrtle Beach, S.C., to Oregon Inlet at the north end of North Carolina's Hatteras Island. A tornado watch was in effect for 40 counties of North Carolina and in the extreme southeast of Virginia.

In three counties around Wilmington, some 16,000 people were without power, said Carolina Power & Light Co. spokesman Mac Harris.

TI pledges to trace problem with computer chips

By CANDICE HUGHES
Associated Press Writer

Neureiter

DALLAS — Texas Instruments Corp. will work "night and day" tracing an apparent failure in its testing program that allowed millions of possibly defective chips to be installed in sophisticated defense weaponry, a company official says.

The Pentagon, over almost a decade, may have purchased as many as 15 million defective chips manufactured by Texas Instruments, the Defense Department said Tuesday. It said the chips were installed in electronic parts in the B-52 strategic bomber and other weapons.

"Nothing has been ruled out, including fraud," Texas Instruments Vice President Norman Neureiter said Tuesday.

Michael Burch, assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, said Tuesday in Washington "there is the possibility of criminal investigation of TI."

The Pentagon said it has told defense contractors to stop accepting the chips until a review of their testing is complete.

The silicon chips are at the heart of almost all electronic products now produced.

"Any weapon that contains a sophisticated elocctronic part" could contain the chips, said Donald E. Moore, quality control chief of the Defense Logistics Agency, which oversees the Pentagon's purchases of weaponry.

More than 80 defense contractors may have purchased the chips from TI and put them into weapons systems, and as many as 4,700 types of chips might be involved, Moore said.

Defense officials also blamed the failure of a computer on the space shuttle Discovery on a faulty TI microchip, but the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and Neureiter both said the chip was not at fault.

Neureiter said TI has launched an intensive investigation into the testing of the 4,700 types of microchips.

"We have put together a full action team," he said. "We're working night and day to resolve this issue."

He said the company does not know precisely what went wrong, where it happened or how many weapons systems may be affected. He said most of the military microchips were manufactured and tested at plants in Taiwan and Midland, Texas.

Pentagon spokesmen said some of the defective chips may have been been installed in the onboard computers of the B-52 bomber, the heart of America's nuclear bomber force.

Both the Pentagon and TI said there was no evidence the chips have created "reliability problems" with weapons.

Neureiter said the company at first thought the apparent failure to perform all tests was simply a "paper problem." He said hundreds of tests are required on military microchips.

"Later we began to conclude that perhaps some tests had been omitted," he said.

Moore said International Business Machines Corp. uncovered the problem and called it to the Pentagon's attention.

IBM found the problem in 1983 in a routine check of whether chips it was buying had been fully tested, and then then told the Pentagon, Moore said.

Neureiter admitted TI began an "in-depth" audit of it all its military microchip testing after IBM reported the problem.

IBM is the manufacturer of the space shuttle onboard computer that went on the blink Aug. 28, delaying Discovery's launch.

Neureiter said TI and IBM both concluded that a TI-made microchip shorted out because of corrosion from an "invisible speck of contamination" that no test could detect.

Neureiter downplayed the economic effect of the testing problem on TI. He said military microchips are a "very small percentage" of the company's semiconductor business.

While semiconductor billings may temporarily decline, TI expects "no major impact for the year," he said.

Variety may 'juice up' Valley

By SYDNEY RUBIN

WESLACO, Texas — A new, nameless variety of grapefruit that will appeal to "people who don't even like grapefruit" may inspire Rio Grande Valley citrus growers to replant orchards destroyed by last winter's freeze, industry officials say.

Texas A&I Citrus Center director, Dr. Richard Hensz, developed the new variety of citrus from an irradiated, mutant Ruby Red grapefruit tree. The limb bearing the "super special fruit" was discovered in 1976.

"My right-hand man was harvesting fruit from the irradiated trees and he said, 'We have this limb out here I think you should come look at,'" Hensz recalled.

"We knew we really had something — a grapefruit with the taste of a Ruby Red and the bright color of the Star Ruby — but we didn't know if it would come back next year. It's a long process developing a new variety. A lot of people's money is riding on this."

The new grapefruit is the first to be developed in almost a decade, industry experts said.

Hensz, a horticultuist specializing in genetics and plant breeding, has devoted 30 years to creating tastier, juicier, heartier fruit. He is known in the Rio Grande Valley as the father of the Star Ruby grapefruit, a variety introduced in 1971 containing more sugar and acid than the older Ruby Red.

Campaign turns to TV, talks

■ Mondale paints bleak picture; Related stories — Pages 12, 13A

President Reagan has begun his television ad campaign by monopolizing the networks with a 30-minute commercial, while challenger Walter F. Mondale is dismissing as "pretty pathetic" the president's announced first meeting with a Soviet official just five weeks before the election.

Mondale, still hammering away at Reagan on federal budget deficits, scoffed at the president's announcement Tuesday that he would meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko on Sept. 28.

"If they would come out with a significant arms control agreement, I'd be very thrilled," the Democratic presidential candidate said. "I hope they make progress."

But he added: "It's pretty pathetic that an administration in the middle of its campaign for re-election has its first meeting, not with the Soviet counterpart of the president, but with the foreign minister...it's pathetic we're just now having this meeting."

Added his running mate, Geraldine Ferraro: "We should not lose sight of the fact that it took three and a half years to do this."

Reagan is heading today to Buffalo, N.Y., for a series of political events. Mondale was in Davenport, Iowa, today before heading to Peoria, Ill., and Tupelo, Miss., campaigning through the Midwest and venturing into the South for what has become a weekly visit to the region.

Reagan held a brief, nationally televised session with reporters at the White House Tuesday to announce his meeting with Gromyko in Washington, and to dismiss Mondale's deficit-cutting tax increase plan unveiled this week.

He said Mondale's criticism of his handling of U.S.-Soviet relations had nothing to do with the Gromyko visit.

"I just want to see if we can't do something that will rid the world of this threat" of nuclear weapons, Reagan said.

Prostitution, obscenity indictment shocks senator

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — State Sen. Carl Parker was shocked to learn he was named in a grand jury indictment charging he headed and financed a "prostitution enterprise" and promoted obscene material.

"They did what?" the veteran lawmaker told the Beaumont Enterprise when reached at his law office in Port Arthur Tuesday. "Oh my God. I don't understand."

Parker, the chairman of the Senate Education Committee, refused further comment, saying he would release a statement today.

The three-count indictment was returned by a Jefferson County grand jury that had been investigating Happy Times Video Co., where authorities on April 19 confiscated 409 videotapes described as pornographic.

Parker, 50, a Port Arthur Democrat unopposed on the fall ballot, was part-owner of the house where the videotapes were found, authorities said. He has said he sold his interest in the house to Daniel Lee, who was indicted earlier.

The indictments allege Parker aided Lee in the wholesale promotion of six obscene videotapes, titled "Waterpower," "Peepholes," "Temptation," "Class Reunion," "Sweet Secrets" and "Talk Dirty to Me 2," before the house was raided in April.

"I'm very surprised. I've known him a number of years...and I've never known him to be dishonest," Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, told the Dallas Morning News. "You have to be sorry for a person's family. When you're in public life, they make so many sacrifices anyway."

WEATHER SUMMARY

National Weather Service NOAA, U.S. Dept. of Commerce

AP Laserphoto Map

Heavy rain accompanying Hurricane Diana along the Carolina coast, along with showers from the northern Plains to the upper Great Lakes, is forecast through Thursday by the National Weather Service.

Lows in 60s, highs in 90s to continue in Basin area

From Staff and Wire Reports

National Weather Service forecasters at Midland Regional Airport predict lows in the upper 60s and highs in the low 90s will continue through tonight and Thursday.

Along with cool temperatures tonight, Midlanders will experience fair skies with winds from the southeast at five to 10 mph, increasing Thursday to less than 20 mph. Thursday skies will be partly cloudy.

The record high of 102 set in 1930 was quite a bit warmer than Tuesday's recorded high of 94. The low this morning of 67 degrees was 16 degrees above the record set in 1975.

STATE

A high-pressure system over the Lone Star State kept skies mostly clear today, but forecasters predicted scattered rainfall along the Gulf of Mexico and mountainous areas later.

The National Weather Service said cloudiness settled over the southern tip of Texas as a result of thunderstorms in the Gulf of Campeche. Other scattered clouds developed over the Panhandle.

Winds were southerly statewide at 5 to 15 mph. Low temperatures were muggy, hovering in the 70s. Extremes were 81 degrees at Fort Worth and 57 degrees at Marfa.

Partly cloudy skies were expected statewide through Thursday, with widely scattered thunderstorms along the coast and the mountains of Far West Texas. The weather service said temperatures should remain hot through the end of the week.

Pope moves on to Newfoundland

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

MONTREAL — Pope John Paul II bid farewell to Catholic French Canada early today, thanking Montrealers for a citywide embrace that he said "touched me to the bottom of my heart."

Aboard a Canadian military jetliner, the pontiff took off at 9 a.m., bound for the craggy, hard-luck coast of Newfoundland, Canada's poorest province.

There, at North America's far eastern edge, fishermen gathered at the tiny village of Flat Rock to receive a blessing from the 264th occupant of the Chair of St. Peter, "The Fisherman."

During his three days in the Atlantic provinces — the second region he is visiting on his 12-day Canadian tour — John Paul planned to address issues of work, family and community.

Work is hard to come by in Newfoundland, a rocky, windswept island of 600,000 people, long dependent on the fishing and lumber. The unemployment rate is Canada's highest, usually double the national average, which is now 11 percent.

When he emerged from Montreal Archbishop Paul Gregoire's residence to leave for the airport today, the pontiff was greeted by hundreds of Montrealers chanting "John Paul Two! We love you!"

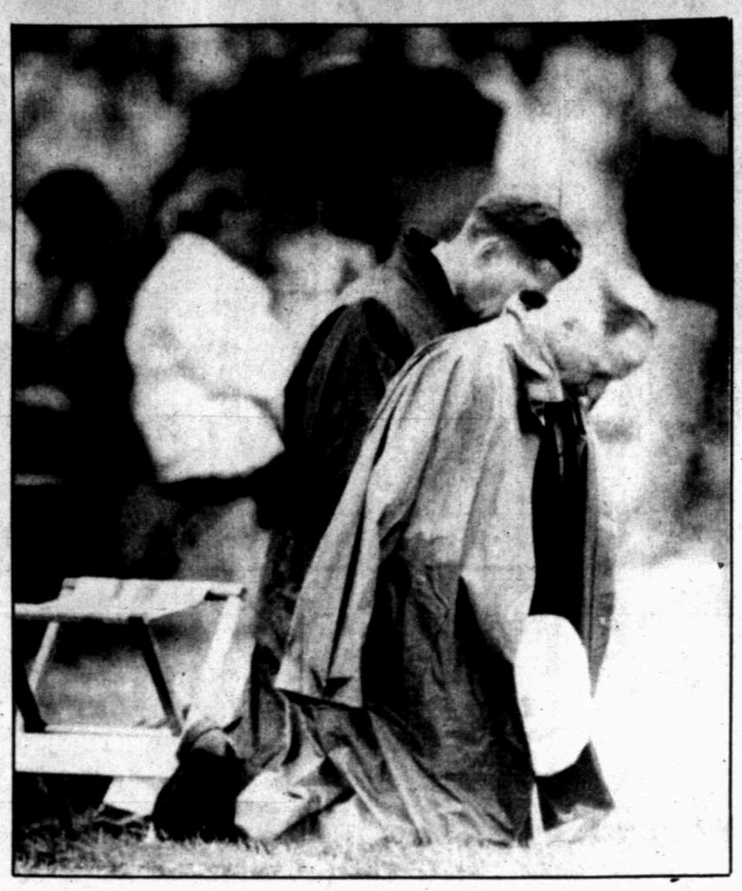

"I don't know how you found this house!" he joked, and he thanked them for the city's warm hospitality during his 34 hours in Montreal.

"You have touched me to the bottom of my heart," he said.

On Tuesday night, the pope, denouncing the "artificial paradise" of drugs, drinking and premarital sex, told a stadium filled with young Canadians not to seek a "shortcut to happiness."

After being welcomed with a choreographed modern morality play of war, chaos, anguish and faith, the pontiff appealed to 55,000 cheering 15- to 25-year-olds at Olympic Stadium, "In times of darkness, do not seek an escape."

His message ended a busy day in French Canada's largest city, with a speech to priests, a rainy outdoor Mass for more than 300,000, and a gleeful session with almost 3,000 delighted children at Notre Dame Basilica.

Men kneel in the rain as they pray during a Mass with Pope John Paul II in Montreal.

The pontiff has been expected to make use of his speeches to reinforce traditional doctrine to a liberalized Canadian Roman Catholic Church. He told reporters while crossing the Atlantic on Sunday that he hoped people in the United States would be listening as well.

The pope has been making his points without harsh condemnations. He has praised the work of obedient nuns while suggesting new horizons for women in the church. To the youths waving white handkerchiefs at the stadium, he took a kindly tone but left no doubt about his meaning.

"Have the courage to resist the dealers in deception who make capital of your hunger for happiness and who make you pay dearly for a moment of artificial paradise — a whiff of smoke, a bout of drinking or drugs," he said. "What claims to be a shortcut to happiness leads nowhere."

Speaking from a temporary rostrum in center field, the pope told the youths to await "the true commitment of marriage" before engaging in sex.

"React against false illusions and do not confuse a premature experience of pleasure with the giving of oneself in love, deliberately consented to, and forever," he said.

Speaking mostly in French, but sometimes in English, the pope said he was struck by the despair and pain in letters written to him by Quebec youth, and urged them to turn to Christ and the church for help.

Some in the audience said they wanted to hear what the pope would say, but were not necessarily inclined to obey.

"He's not giving them enough of a reason to stay away from booze and drugs," said Madeleine Paradis, who said she was a former drug addict now working in a rehabilitation center.

"He preaches the church's views and we need someone to guide us," said Paul Kramanoukian, a 20-year-old university student. "But we have the free will to see for ourselves what's right and wrong."

Maryse St. Georges, 17, said the pope's comments on sex made her think.

"He's gotten to me because I think what he said is very powerful," she said. "I think if you really do like the person and if you want to have premarital sex, I think it's O.K. But it's nothing you engage in quickly. It's something you have to think about and you have to be really sure about."

Some other Montreal youths expressed stronger disagreement with the pope's message in a protest march Tuesday afternoon.

About 250 people, led by a woman wearing a papal-style mitre, chanted their opposition to John Paul's views on sex, revolution, abortion and other topics.

U.S. to admit Vietnamese children

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The United States is prepared to admit over the next three years an estimated 8,000 Vietnamese children who were fathered by American servicemen during the Vietnam war, Secretary of State George P. Shultz says.

"Because of their undisputed ties to our country, these children and family members are of particular humanitarian concern to the United States," Shultz told a Senate Judiciary subcommittee Tuesday.

But a New York-based private group, Human Rights Advocates International, criticized Shultz's proposal, claiming the Reagan administration should take Vietnam up on what it says is Hanoi's offer to resettle the children in the United States immediately.

In a telephone interview, two spokesmen for the group, Sanford Mevorah and Charles Printz, said the administration is treating the so-called Amerasian children as refugees, whereas U.S. law clearly states they are American citizens.

"We want them here today. We want them here yesterday," Mevorah said.

A U.S. official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, acknowledged that the law regards them as U.S. citizens. But he said it is not feasible to permit the children to come to the United States immediately because that would mean separating them from their mothers, who are not entitled to automatic citizenship.

He added that by treating them as refugees, the Amerasians and other close family members are entitled, before arriving in the United States, to language training and medical care at a refugee center the United States maintains in the Philippines.

"This is the only practical, sensible way to take care of these kids," the official said.

He said the children, because of their Western features, suffer from persecution in Vietnam. Over the years, he said, about 1,500 have been resettled in the United States, usually with their mothers.

The best U.S. estimate is that there are 8,000 more in Vietnam. Vietnamese officials say the figure is about 15,000.

Shultz also said the administration will ask Vietnam to release current and former political prisoners for U.S. resettlement over the next two years. That program would involve some 10,000 Vietnamese, many of whom had close ties to the United States during the Vietnam war. The total includes family members.

When the American-backed regime in Saigon was ousted by North Vietnamese forces nine years ago, many of these Vietnamese were sent to "re-education camps." An undetermined number remain in confinement.

Shultz said the success of the proposals involving both the prisoners and the Amerasian children requires the good will and cooperation of the Vietnamese government.

"We hope the Vietnamese will respond to this new appeal," he said, adding that the proposal will be set forth next month at a meeting in Geneva with Vietnamese officials under the auspices of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees.

CITRUS

Hensz said the new variety is being released to nurserymen and growers now and will be ready for planting next spring. About 4,000 acres could acres of the new tree could be planted by 1986, he said.

"It's five times redder than a Ruby Red — a deep, deep crimson — juicy and sweet," said Mary McKeever, marketing director for TexaSweet Adverstising. "It's a grapefruit for people who don't even like grapefruit."

The fruit could be on Texas tables within four years, she said. But Hensz' promising product does not yet have a moniker and a contest has been started in the Valley to name the fruit.

Until the 1940s, Texas growers produced only "big, old, puffy white Duncan grapefruit with lots of seeds," said Les Whitlock of the Texas Valley Citrus Committee.

The taste was tangy and "it wasn't very appealing to consumers because of the seeds and the thick rind," he said.

In the 1940s scientists developed the Ruby Red, a variety with a deeper color than the common pink grapefruit.

Sweet Ruby fattened growers' bank accounts as consumer demand flourished. Thousand of acres of Texas land was planted in the lucious red-fleshed fruit.

Before last winter's freeze, 70,000 Valley acres were planted with citrus orchards, two-thirds of the trees grapefruit. About 85 percent of the grapefruit groves were Ruby Red with the other 15 percent planted in Star Ruby, pink and white varieties.

Industry officials have said the freeze destroyed about half of all citrus trees and many growers are still trying to decide whether to replant or convert agricultural land to other use.

The new variety of grapefruit could create increased consumer demand and encourage growers to stay in the business, Whitlock said.

Hensz' new offspring has a "higher orange-red blush on the skin" and a much deeper red color inside.

Hensz said the first new trees produced fruit earlier than other varieties.

Ruby Red trees take 4 to 6 years to enter peak production, but the new trees "show signs of production in 3 years," Whitlock said.

The contest for the new fruit's name starts Sunday with a $1,200 prize, donated by local sponsors, being offered for the most evocative name.

"This grapefruit is sweet and pretty and we're looking for a name that reflects that," said Ms. McKeever. "We're very open minded."

POLITICS

Reagan campaigned at home as his first, 30-minute television commercial was broadcast over the four major television networks, plus the ESPN sports network. The advertisement was an expanded version of the film that was aired at the Republican National Convention, updated to include a segment from the president's speech to the delegates.

It featured glimpses of Reagan including his trips to Korea, China, and Normandy, France. Along with it were comments from supporters and thematic, happy scenes such as children dancing and a couple being married.

"We think the way to start off the campaign is by laying out the whole case and to come out on a high, upbeat, forward looking message, and this does it," said campaign spokesman James Lake, who added that the Reagan campaign was also beginning a series of 30- and 60-second ads.

Mondale also began his television ads this week. But one Democrat, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., cited the GOP ads in accusing Reagan of using "preachy speeches and slick films" to duck the issues of war and peace and the economy.

Reagan also responded to questions about Mondale's $177 billion blueprint for cutting projected deficits by two-thirds by 1989.

"What specifically has he proposed other than some additional spending and his tax cuts, and hacking away at the defense budget?" Reagan said, evidently meaning to say tax increases.

Mondale, in Chicago, declared his tax increases "are fair to middle-income Americans" and renewed his challenge for Reagan to put forward how he would control deficits.

Reagan fended off the challenge, saying his past budget blueprints sent to Congress answer the call for specifics. But Mondale rejoined: "That's not gonna wash. America knows that it is a problem."

The vice presidential candidates, meanwhile, both faced more questioning on the sensitive abortion issue.

Vice President George Bush sought to play down his differences with Reagan on the issue, at one point fending off questions by saying, "I'm exercising my rights as an American ... to remain silent."

At two news conferences Bush acknowledged that his views on abortion are more liberal than Reagan's. Bush said he opposes abortions except in cases of rape, incest or where the life of the mother is endangered. Reagan says the only exception should be "the protection of the mother's life."

But Bush added, "The views that prevail are the top of the ticket."

Bush, in Atlanta, planned a visit to Savannah today before returning to Washington at the end of a three-day Southern swing.

Ms. Ferraro has spent the week leveling hard attacks on President Reagan's policies, but her views on abortion — and criticism of them by New York Archbishop John J. O'Connor — have dominated the news.

SENATOR

Stiles has been rumored a future challenger for Parker's Senate seat and was called as a grand jury witness in the case. But he refused to say whether he testified.

District Attorney James McGrath, whose investigation led to the grand jury action, said, "Any time anyone's indicted, I'm very sad."

"We were investigating a Happy Times Video and his name surfaced," McGrath said. "It's my duty to represent the grand jury. We subpoenaed the witnesses they wanted. They voted those indictments. That's it."

McGrath said an arraignment hearing will be held in District Judge Leonard Giblin's court within 10 days.

The indictment accused Parker of aggravated promotion of prostitution, wholesale promotion of obscene material and aggravated perjury, the latter for allegedly lying during a Sept. 7 appearance before the grand jury.

The indictment also said Parker "did intentionally and knowingly own, invest in, finance, control, supervise and manage a prostitution enterprise located in Jefferson County, Texas, that used at least two prostitutes...."

All three charges are third-felonies punishable by a maximum of 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine each.

Parker, son of Port Arthur Mayor Harvey Parker and a prosperous lawyer, became a member of the Texas House in 1963.

During this summer's special legislative sesion, he was instrumental in shepherding Gov. Mark White's education reform bill through the Senate.

Parker quit the House and ran for the Senate in 1976 after losing the House speaker's race to Rep. Bill Clayton, D-Springlake.

While serving in the House, Parker was chairman of the House Committee on Penitentiaries, the Committee on Constitutional Amendments, the Committee on Judicial Districts and the Calendar Committee.

Men want leniency for wives who plotted their deaths

AP Laserphoto

Dorothy Scrivano cries as she tells a judge that she was intoxicated when she discussed a plot to have her husband murdered.

DALLAS (AP) — Saying they wanted their wives home and not behind bars, the husbands of two sisters who pleaded guilty to plotting the men's deaths have asked a state judge to grant their wives leniency.

"When she's not drunk, she's the sweetest thing you ever saw," Frank L. Scrivano testified Tuesday in the court of State District Judge Ed Kinkeade.

Scrivano is married to Dorothy Watts Scrivano, 53, who along with Lawayne Watts Bancker, 45, pleaded guilty Monday to plotting to hire an undercover police officer to murder her husband.

Final arguments in the sentencing portion of the trial were scheduled today. The women face a maximum sentence of life in prison if convicted. They've asked the judge to grant them probation.

"I don't want her to go to prison. I want her home with me," Scrivano said.

Scrivano and Adrian Bancker have visited their wives in jail and have publicly stated they don't believe the women would have carried out their murder plot. Scrivano told reporters he thought his wife was "set up" by police.

In tape-recorded testimony presented Monday, the two women were heard telling police officer Charles Jackson their marriages were unhappy and they wanted their husbands murdered.

"I can't take this kind of life anymore," Mrs. Scrivano tells Jackson on one tape. "Life's too...short to spend in misery."

In one tape, Mrs. Bancker complained her husband had taken all her money and credit cards and planned to take her off his insurance policy.

"He's done everything allowed the lousy...can do to a woman," Mrs. Bancker complained in one tape. "I'm sick of him."

The two were arrested in a K Mart parking lot April 24 after allegedly giving Jackson $1,100 as a down payment.

Shawn Stohlmann, an unemployed commercial artist, testified Monday the two women approached him at a club in North Dallas and asked him to kill their husbands.

Stohlmann testified he became convinced the women were serious when they gave him $200 as a down payment.

Stohlmann said he told police of the plot after revealing it to the Dallas Morning News. He also provided police with photographs of the two women's husbands and a letter directing him to Bancker's apartment in San Antonio.

Jackson testified he first contacted the women by telephone at the Bandera Club, where the two women were regular customers. He said he identified himself as "Charlie" and told them he'd heard they wanted "a job done."

Doggett: Gramm now for bill he opposed

Lloyd Doggett

HOUSTON (AP) — Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Lloyd Doggett says Republican opponent Phil Gramm has voted against child nutrition "and then grandstands that he's in favor."

But campaign officials for Gramm, a U.S Congresman from College Station, say the congressman merely "voted against bills that bust the budget."

Doggett told reporters at a news conference Tuesday Gramm "took credit for a bill he voted against" when he opposed a bill that would fund $49 million to construct a child nutrition center at the Baylor College of Medicine.

"He goes and votes against child nutrition and then grandstands that he's in favor," Doggett said. "When it came time to take the glory for bringing these funds to Baylor, guess who was there worming into the limelight? Phil Gramm."

But a Gramm spokesman said Doggett is "simply incorrect."

"The money was contained not in the bill to which he was referring but in another bill," said spokesman Larry Neal. "Doggett takes the view that if you have a $1 billion program that's $50 million over budget and contains 100 different programs in it and you vote against it, then you must oppose every program in the bill."

A spokesman for Baylor, Gayle McNutt, said "Gramm has supported this (the nutrition center) and tried to help on it."

All of the Texas delegation to Congress have helped to win federal approval for the project," said McNutt, adding that it is "a non-partisan issue."

"I have been in his office when he made phone calls in behalf of the project," McNutt said. "Where he has been particularly helpful has been with the administration. He made a lot of contacts for us."

Doggett charged that Gramm has denied federal money to people who could use it, while living off federal dollars himself.

Gramm "received federal benefits for his own education and he would deny others the same," Doggett said.

The College Station congressman did use federal education money, Neal said, but the spokesman said the money was provided under an act that helps the survivors of war veterans who died. Gramm's father was an army sergeant who passed away when Gramm was very young.

Gramm's wife, who is a former director of the Bureau of Economics, also lived off federal money, Doggett charged.

Neal said he was "a little surprised" by the comment.

Doggett, a state senator from Austin, faces Gramm for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by retiring Republican John Tower.

DA to seek sheriff's removal from office

EL PASO (AP) — Hudspeth County Sheriff Mike Armstrong, already facing federal drug-related charges, soon may be fighting for his right to remain in office, an El Paso prosecutor says.

District Attorney Steve Simmons of El Paso said he planned to begin preparing a petition seeking Armstrong's removal from office.

Simmons, who serves as the district attorney for the 34th Judicial District in El Paso, Hudspeth and Culberson counties, on Monday issued an ultimatum to Armstrong — resign or face removal proceedings.

Armstrong apparently opted not to resign, Simmons said, adding that his office would begin today "drawing up specifications in a petition for his removal."

Armstrong, 36, was arrested and jailed Friday on charges of possession of marijuana with intent to distribute and conspiracy with intent to distribute.

He was released Monday from La Tuna Federal Correctional Institution at Anthony after posting $6,500 cash on a $65,000 bond.

Armstrong, a Democrat seeking re-election on the fall ballot, could not be reached for comment Tuesday on whether he planned to resign. He was not at the sheriff's department and no one answered his home telephone in Sierra Blanca.

Simmons said shortly before 5 p.m. Tuesday that he had not heard from Armstrong or his attorney, C.R. "Kit" Bramblett of El Paso.

"I have not heard anything from him and, at this time, am taking that to mean he has not resigned," Simmons said. Hudspeth County Judge Doyle Ziler also said late Tuesday that he had not "been given any indication that (Armstrong) has resigned."

Simmons said his decision to take legal steps to remove Armstrong from the office he has held since Sept. 1, 1981, is warranted because the charges against the sheriff conflict with his duties as a law enforcement officer.

In the complaint filed against Armstrong Friday, the FBI contends he distributed marijuana from the sheriff's office in Sierra Blanca, a small West Texas town 90 miles east of El Paso and just north of the Mexico border.

The complaint also alleges that Armstrong took marijuana stored in the sheriff's evidence locker on at least one occasion.

A preliminary hearing for Armstrong has been scheduled for Thursday.

Man may have inadvertently seen girl's killer

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Corpus Christi man who stopped to help a girl who was being beaten in the street may have inadvertently seen the man who police say later murdered her.

The nude body of Vickey Lynn Thompson, 17, was discovered Sunday morning on a stretch of Padre Island beach about one mile south of the Nueces County line in Kleberg County. The Flour Bluff teen-ager had a bra around her neck and a gag-store type handcuff on her right wrist, said Willie Ruiz, a Kleberg County Sheriff's investigator.

Miss Thompson is the fifth woman to be found dead on Padre Island in the past year, Ruiz said.

Officials said the girl died of head injuries.

Corpus Christi police, who are assisting with the investigation, say the girl may have been murdered in the city and dumped on the island.

Police are trying to determine if a local man, acting as a Good Samaritan, may have witnessed the girl's abduction Saturday night.

Homicide detective Lt. Rodney Hohle said a Corpus Christi man, on his way home Saturday evening, saw another man bludgeoning a woman on the median of Shoreline Drive. The woman matched Miss Thompson's description, police said.

The man who witnessed the beating turned his van around and attempted to help the woman. When the van driver approached the scene, the woman broke and ran to the van while her assailant and the van driver exchanged blows.

The van driver, whose identify was not disclosed, tried to run back to his van, but was caught by the other man.

The assailant pulled a pistol and forced both the woman and her would-be rescuer into the vehicle.

Murder case enters federal court system

HOUSTON (AP) — The attorney for two parents who have refused to testify in their son's murder case said the case will probably go to federal court system sometime next week.

Randy Schaffer, attorney for Bernad and Odette Port, said he has several options for appealing the contempt charges filed against his clients after they refused to testify before a grand jury.

A request for habeas corpus could be filed with a federal district court in Houston, Schaffer said, or a petition of certiorari filed, asking a justice of the U.S. Supreme Court to look at the record of the case.

"We may do both," Schaffer said, adding that his decision will be based on which court "is the most expeditious place to get bond."

The Ports, who refused to testify against their son because of their Jewish beliefs, had their bond rescinded Monday after the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals declined to hear arguments why they should not be he held in contempt.

Their son David, 17, has been charged with the June 7 murder of postal worker Debora Sue Schatz, who disappared while delivering mail near the Ports' house. He is free on a $20,000 bond.

Schaffer, who has said he will use "everything short of a crowbar to get them out," said Tuesday he would surrender his clients when he is ordered to do so.

Papers detailing the Criminal Courts decision had not arrived in the mail at state District Judge I.D. McMaster's court, a clerk said Tuesday, preventing an arrest order from being prepared.

McMaster cannot order the Ports' arrest until he sees the Court of Criminal Appeal's order.

The Court of Criminal Appeals has been asked to set bond for the Ports, Schaffer said, while possible appeals can be considered.

"I assume I'll get an adverse ruling tomorrow (Wednesday)," he said. "If they grant the bond, I'll go ahead and file in the Supreme Court."

Schaffer said he feared the Ports would be left to sit in jail if he filed the case with the Supreme Court, a move he says he would prefer.

"Jews are obligated to obey the commandment to 'Honor thy father and mother,'" Schaffer said in a brief filed with the Court of Criminal Appeals. "Judaism imposes a reciprocal obligation on the parent to honor the child."

The Ports were ordered to jail and fined $500 each after McMaster found them in contempt Aug. 28.

The appeals process can follow "legally the same track as a death penalty case," said District Attorney Johnny Holmes, adding he believed the Ports would get a federal judge to set bond easily.

Scientist breeds bugs to eat other bugs

MISSION (AP) — Lloyd Wendel breeds bugs, nasty little creatures that work better than synthetic poisons to wipe out other insects and weeds.

In futuristic, stainless steel chambers located on a deserted World War II airfield, Wendel works wonders with biocontrol. The scientist has already bred a tiny wasp that hobbles the citrus whitefly, which damages fruit trees, flowers and shrubbery.

His creatures also hone in on plants, and his next target is knapweed, a Russian import that gives off a chemical that prevents other plants and grasses from growing.

Wendel says he looks forward to combat with the bushy, flowering weed, which has overrun rangeland and national forests from Montana to the Pacific Northwest.

"This is going to be a fun one," Wendel said. "Some of those forests are pristine and beautiful, wonderful places to work."

The pest covers too many acres to be controlled by spraying and federal laws prohibit the use of herbicides in national forests, "so the only alternative is biocontrol," Wendel said.

Biocontrol is a way to replace synthetic chemical poisons with natural predators. The National Biological Control Laboratory where Wendel works is part of an expanding network of U.S. Department of Agriculture facilities dedicated to finding biological methods of killing bugs that have developed resistence to chemical poisons.

Wendel said biocontrol of insects has always been an alternative, even before insects developed resistance to lab-made chemicals.

"You look to see what else is available and that brings you back to biocontrol, something that was there all along," he said.

AP Laserphoto

Lloyd Wendel, USDA entomologist, observes a specimen in his lab where he is growing bugs that may someday replace pesticides. He researches field pests, then mass produces natural predators and turns them loose.

Every creature has natural predators or parasites that help maintain a balance in an ecosystem, Wendel said. But when humans move plants between continents, insects may be accidentally imported, while their enemies are left behind.

"Predators are the big guys, running around eating other bugs" while parasites "lay eggs within the host and the host dies because of the immature feeding on the host's contents," he said. "But both are highly effective in controlling pests."

Agricultural pests do not build up a resistence to natural enemies as they do to poisons. And with biocontrol, fewer toxic chemicals come in contact with people and the environment.

Wendel is currently waging war on the citrus whitefly, a gnat-sized bug that damages citrus trees, gardenias and many types of landscape shrubbery from Texas to Florida and the Carolinas.

The whitefly is also a bane to urban joggers, who run through swarms of the insects near shrubbery and may inhale the bugs, Wendel says.

To fight the citrus whitefly, Wendel has used all the resources at his 12,000-square-foot, $2 million biological control center to breed a parasitic wasp as small and transparent as dust floating in a beam of light.

The wasp is as invincible as it is invisible. Thirty-seven of the creatures virtually eradicated the whitefly population in six months in a 100-acre Texas grove. By the time wasp babies finished feeding on citrus whitefly larvae, few of the citrus pests remained.

The wasps are self-perpetuating and are cheaper and easier to employ in pest control than periodic application of poisons, but other types of biocontrol organisms die and must be reintroduced each year, Wendel said.

To spread the parasite wasps, Wendel has been growing them on gardenja cuttings for months. In August he supervised a fleet of USDA planes that flew 2,000 bug-bearing cuttings to Texas growers and to producers in Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas.

Citrus growers in these states have been waiting a long time for the wasp to arrive. Like other agricultural pests, the citrus whitefly was imported, brought in clinging to plants imported from Pakistan in the 19th century.

The whitefly soon became a pest of major proportions, prompting research to discover how they controlled the bug back home. Years of searching revealed the wasp.

In the 1940s, attempts were made to import the controlling parasite, but not until the 1960s did scientists manage to bring the insect back and keep it alive in the United States.

Similar research and breeding is being done with a variety of foreign-born predators and parasites that officials hope will control alfalfa weevils, silver leaf nightshade, potato beetles and knapweed.

"Every major university is involved in some kind of biocontrol research," said Wendel.

Texas Secretary of Agriculture Jim Hightower introduces former first lady Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson as the "first lady of flowers" at a ceremony in Austin announcing a new state policy to use native plants as much as possible in landscaping state buildings.

New state policy calls for landscaping with native plants

AUSTIN (AP) — From now on it will be state policy to plant native Texas plants around all public buildings and property, Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says.

"State and local governments can have a significant impact both on the Texas economy and the growth of our horticulture industry by using Texas 'natives' whenever practical," Hightower told a news conference Tuesday.

"Why use our taxpayer's money to buy plants from California, Florida or even Japan when we can find hardier, cheaper and prettier plants right here at home?" Hightower said.

"I want Texas to look like Texas," said Lady Bird Johnson, who was introduced by Hightower as the "first lady of wildflowers."

Hightower was joined by the widow of President Lyndon B. Johnson and other public officils in announcing a new state policy to use native plants as much as possible in landscaping.

The brief ceremony was held in front of the partially constructed William B. Travis state office building, which will be landscaped with native plants and flowers when completed next spring.

State Purchasing Director Homer Foerster said native plants would be used around state buildings throughout the state when "economically feasible."

Hightower said the state highway department planned to use 60 percent of the $1.5 million it gets for highway landscaping in purchasing native plants.

"After all this extreme weather, there is no better time to re-introduce our low maintenance native plants," said Charles House, president of the Texas Association of Nurserymen.

"From buffalo grass to fragrant sumac, from bluebonnets to Indian paintbrush, from state pecan trees to the colorful possumhaw holly, from mountain laurel to dogwood, from purple-flowering sage to yucca — Texas has a fantastic variety of landscape plants that make sense for us to be using," Hightower said.

"These are the original 'native Texans' and they have been enduring our state's hard winters, scorching summers and long dry spells since way before Cabeza de Vaca shipwrecked near Galveston in 1528."

AMA head: Doctors worry about health costs

AUSTIN (AP) — The rising costs of health care not only worry patients but their doctors, says the president of the American Medical Association.

"Our major concerns are the same as we have heard expressed by the general public," said Dr. Joseph F. Boyle.

"While we unquestionably have the finest medical care and health care delivery system that has been developed anyplace in the world, at the present time it is under serious challenge because of its increasing costs," he said Tuesday.

Boyle, of Los Angeles, became AMA president in June. He was in Austin to speak to a civic group and the Travis County Medical Society.

Boyle said one example of doctors' concern is that about 80 percent of AMA members have agreed to try to freeze costs for a year. Other measures also are being taken, he said, but health cost increases still exceed inflation.

"Although we have had substantial reduction in the rate of increase in costs for the past year or year and a half, it still remains slightly above the rate of general inflation," Boyle said.

"It means, simply, all of us who are involved must continue to exert every effort to see that we are doing our best to check that increase."

Boyle said the AMA objects to some recent changes Congress made in the federal Medicare law. The changes include a limit on how much money the government will pay physicians for certain services.

Boyle said the AMA doesn't object to Medicare officials setting payment schedules, as some private insurance plans do, but does object to what he sees as federal intrusions into the relationship between doctor and patient.

He also said that while not objecting to private investor-owned hospitals, the AMA believes that "it is important in the practice of medicine remain independent of either business interests or the interests of state and federal governent. We don't believe that a private bureaucracy is going to do any better than a governmental bureaucracy.

"Our responsibility is to see to it that the patient always comes first. We should resist whether it is being challenged by business and industry or investors or being challenged by agencies of the state or federal government," he said.

Mondale can't give up on Texas, Democratic leaders say

HOUSTON (AP) — Walter Mondale and top members of his campaign staff have all but given up hope to carry Texas during the November general election, key Texas Democrats say.

The Houston Chronicle reported from Washington Tuesday that Texas party leaders were "perturbed" by talk among the Mondale staff that the Democratic presidential nominee has a better chance to win in President Reagan's home state — California.

None of the Democrats were willing to be quoted by name, the newspaper said.

Dwayne Holman, the Texas coordinator for the Mondale campaign, said the candidate has not given up on the state, which has 29 electoral votes.

"They can't give up on Texas. A Democrat can't get elected president without carrying Texas," Holman said.

State Democratic leaders told the newspaper they aren't sure whether the national party will carry out a promise to give the state party $500,000 for a campaing to get out votes on election day.

Warrants being sought in effort to obtain child support payments

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox said Tuesday that 50 arrest warrants were being executed in San Antonio in a continuing bid to obtain payment from parents who are tardy on child support.

Last week, 150 warrants were executed in Fort Worth as the attorney general's office began a statewide crackdown.

"My office of child support enforcement is executing an intensive effort to round up chronic non-payers of child support in the San Antonio area," Mattox said.

Policeman killed by shotgun blast

LAREDO (AP) — A police patrolman was killed by a shotgun blast Tuesday night when he was called to the scene of an apparent domestic squabble, officials said.

The patrolman, who was not identified pending notification of next-of-kin, was shot in the thigh and the left side of his face, police said. He was pronounced dead shortly before midnight Tuesday at Mercy Hospital, said Lydia Herrera, nursing supervisor.

A police dispatcher, who declined to be identified, said that "several suspects were detained" after a chase that followed the shooting. But the dispatcher said no charges have yet been filed.

Boundary dispute may be ending

DENTON (AP) — Officials say a 30-year-old boundary dispute between two counties may finally be near a resolution today, after suburban sprawl obliterated a fence row that once marked the county line.

Denton County Commissioner Sandy Jacobs is scheduled to meet today with Dallas County Commissioner Jim Jackson and Carrollton City Manager Mike Eastland on the issue. All are trying to determine what property to tax and who votes where.

"It looks like we are within three or four houses of getting this thing finally and totally defined," said Ms. Jacobs.

"We went over (maps of Dallas and Denton counties tax appraisal districts) block by block and lot by lot to see exactly where the line would run," she said. "All but about three or four homes — which have probably never been taxed — were accounted for."

Counties declared disaster areas

AUSTIN (AP) — Bell, Bowie, Colorado, Gonzales, Hood and Tarrant counties have been declared disaster areas by the Farmers Home Administration, Gov. Mark White announced Tuesday.

White had requested the federal designations due to damage caused by the severe freeze from Dec. 16 to Dec. 30, which officials said caused substantial agricultural losses in those counties.

Besides those six, 30 other counties were declared disaster areas under an FmHA rule which extends benefits to counties adjacent to those declared disaster areas.

Those 30 counties are Austin, Bastrop, Burnet, Caldwell, Cass, Coryell, Dallas, Denton, De Witt, Ellis, Erath, Falls, Fayette, Guadalupe, Jackson, Johnson, Karnes, Lampasas, Lavaca, McLennan, Milam, Morris, Palo Pinto, Parker, Red River, Somervell, Wharton, Williamson, Wilson and Wise.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Glucose level decrease, weight loss may not be related

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother has told me that her doctor told her that her sugar is a little high, but that she might not have to take insulin if she lost a little weight. My guess is that she is now about 60 pounds overweight. How much of this excess weight would she have to lose in order to get her sugar down? — Ms. B.P., Hartford, Conn.

Dear Ms. P.: A decrease in glucose levels is not necessarily directly related to weight loss. One person who loses several pounds may experience a significant decrease in glucose levels, while another person who loses even more weight may not show as large a decrease. The goal for your mother should be to acheive her ideal weight.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son is training for the marathon. He has what I consider a good, balanced diet, but he is using up a lot more energy than he ever did before. Would you recommend that he take a vitamin supplement until after the marathon? — Mrs. K.L., Scranton, Pa.

Dear Mrs. L.: Strenuous physical activity in itself does not significantly increase an individual's need for vitamins. If your son has a nutritionally balanced diet, he is probably already getting more of the recommended amounts of vitamins than he actually needs.

For example, there is no denying that vitamin C is very important, and most people are aware that citrus fruits are a good source of this vitamin. But what many people do not realize is that even one-half of a grapefruit or of a cantaloupe provides all of the recommended daily allowance of vitamin C.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been doing some research in the library on the use of thyroid hormones to lose weight. As I understand it, these hormones speed up the body's activity so that more calories are burned up. Since more calories are burned up, the person loses weight. I do not think it would be a good idea to lose weight this way over a long period of time. But why couldn't a person use hormones just to get a good start, and then switch over to a diet to lose the remainder of the weight? — Margaret, South Bend, Ind.

Dear Margaret: It is true, as you say, that a person may lose weight while taking thyroid hormones; however, the weight that is lost in this fashion is not the fat they should be trying to shed, but muscle and bone. Furthermore, the use of hormones may have other harmful consequences, such as the loss of calcium because of excessive urinary excretion.

The human body is remarkable adaptive, but it is not immune to abuse. I strongly recommend that patients treat their bodies with the respect they deserve.

For Stephanie, Johnstown, Pa.: A person who has an eating disorder will often have a family history of similar behavior. In one study, more than one-third of all patients who were anorexics or who engaged in binge eating had a family history of eating disorders.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Massachusetts 'state secret' is in the bog

BOSTON (AP) — The first three bog turtles seen in the state in 10 years have been found in western Massachusetts, but zoologists say the exact location of the Clemmys muhlenbergii is a state secret of sorts.

That's in deference to the rarity of the bog turtle and the sensitivity of the wetland habitat in which they live, said Massachusetts Hertitage Program zoologist Scott Melvin.

The turtles are on the state's endangered species list, and can't be collected or possessed without a special permit.

"We don't want to reveal the exact site. We're concerned particularly with people (trying to collect) them. They occurred in wetland that's particularly sensitive," Melvin said.

"We're pretty excited about it," he said. "One reason they're difficult to find is they're not very big.

"They're little guys, maybe three to four inches across on the shell. They have a bright orange head, and are a dark brown-grayish color."

They also have a habit of burrowing under mud and vegetation, making discovery even more unlikely.

"These guys are very secretive," Robert Zappalorti, a reptile expert who studied the turtle for the state of New Jersey in the 1970s, said during his investigation. "They spend a lot of time in tunnels and grassy areas near brooks."

Melvin would say the find was in Berkshire County, which covers the western end of Massachusetts from the Vermont border in the north to the Connecticut border in the south.

Officials said the discovery was made during systematic field surveys in May and June by Michael Klemens, a researcher with the American Museum of Natural History working under a grant from the Nature Conservancy.

Klemens was working with biologists from the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife and the Conservancy.

"We had an unconfirmed siting in Pittsfield in 1966," Melvin said. "Then in 1974 there was a specimen in Connecticut just a quarter of a mile from the Massachusetts line."

The three female turtles were found in a small area of open bog.

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Where had you gone, Beauregard Jackson Pickens Burnside IV?

That was the question for the Rev. William Carr of the Newman Center at Wichita State University after his dog disappeared.

But after two weeks, the floppy-eared brown and white 4-year-old English pointer and campus legend is back at home, none the worse for his disappearance.

Carr said earlier this week that Bo, as he is known, apparently had become sick because of the recent hot weather, and a student took him home.

The priest said the student called him after seeing an article in the campus newspaper about the search for the popular dog, known for his odd dress at student gatherings.

Farmers' Almanac urges readers to get into hugging habit

LEWISTON, Maine (AP) — The Farmers' Almanac has gone hug wild.

The 168-year-old publication is urging its millions of readers to embrace the hugging habit as a way of relieving the stresses and strains of today's fast-paced lifestyle.

Leading the pro-hug campaign is Ray Geiger, the almanac's 73-year-old editor, who says he has passed out 3,000 "free hug" coupons while touring the country promoting the almanac.

He says the coupon — "Good for one hug, redeemable from any participating human being" — has gotten an overwhelmingly favorable reception. "Everybody says, 'That's great. Can I get my hug now?' "

Part of his secret for reaching his dozen-hugs-per-day quota is adhering to proper hugging etiquette: he makes sure that the motivation for embrace is not misunderstood.

"It should be compassionate, not passionate," he says. "And a good hugger will always sense whether the huggee wants to be hugged."

"You first ask," he cautions. "You don't go up and hug someone without asking. That's against the rules."

In keeping with the almanac's (not to confused with the Old Farmer's Almanac) emphasis on traditional values, Geiger's brand of embracing is "highly moral" and free from sexual overtones. He even printed bumper stickers reading, "Hugs Not Drugs," to reinforce his campaign.

Geiger acknowledges that men tend to feel more awkward about hugging than women, especially when sharing a hug with another man. But he notes that man-to-man hugging is common in other cultures, where it is a greeting, signaling affection and good will.

Geiger believes that hugging is enjoying a renaissance after being out of favor among Americans for many years.

"In the early days, I think hugging was considered proper. But we got into an ice age where people didn't hug so much. But now it's coming back," he said.

Geiger even has his own "hugging habit," patterned after the robes worn by Franciscan friars. The hooded robe was given to him by Jim Gerard, an Indianapolis television personality who also believes in the stress-reducing powers of hugging.

"This brown tunic with white cord belt is not pretty, but it's the kind of robe that has been the mark of love, trust, faith and friendship for centuries," the almanac says. "When you wear it you signal a desire to share your friendship, your care and your love for your fellow human beings, so it's appropriate for any time or place. It's a good habit to have."

Arrowheads visible now lake lower

AUSTIN (AP) — There is a different kind of fun to be had this year at Lake Buchnan, which has fallen to 26 feet below normal. All kine of things are now visible that have been hidden for decdes.

Arrowheads are being foun along the sandy shoreline where Indian tribes campd centuries before the Buchanan Dam tamed the Colcado River.

"Everybody's out here huring arrowheads, now that the lake's down," said Constble R.T. "Bob" Cowart of Tow, who has worked for yearas a fishing guide.

"You find them all over theplace, this whole area must have been just one vast Indiancamp."

With the water low, it's eaer to visit the waterfall of Fall Creek near Tow. Whe the lake is up, the only way to get there is by boat, ut now there are ruts from tire tracks through the drid mud flats covered with greenery.

At the falls, there are rugd granite pinnacles twisted eons ago by some giant fore. The place is quiet, and nearby a small stream gurgles from the pool at the foot of the falls into the lake.

The fishing is spectacular in the area, Cowart says, but the water is too shallow to use a boat.

"You can bank fish, if you're careful," he said. "Just make sure you watch where you are stepping. What looks like solid ground may very well be just a crust of dried earth over mud and you can really go in."

Cowart cautions those who drive to the falls to stay in the tire tracks and not to try to turn around except where others have done so.

"It may look solid, but you can sure get mired good," he said. "I've had to bring my four-wheel drive in several times to get folks out."

The falling water has also revealed part of the ruins of the town of Bluffton. The town was moved before Lake Buchanan filled up, but foundations of houses and cisterns can been seen on Shaw Island.

Small piles of debris — the rusted top of an old cookstove, bits and pieces of someone's china, a few links of chain — invite exploration among the ruins.

Residents will point the way to Shaw Island, but a boat is still needed to get there. A free boat ramp at a small Burnet County park east of the lake on FM 2341 may be used. But once in the water, caution is advised because of the submerged remains of old pecan groves.

Randy Gaudet of the Vanishing Texas River Cruise used to offer boat rides up the Colorado River above Lake Buchanan to view cliffs, spings, waterfalls, and wildlife, including eagles during the winter season. Now that drought has made the trip up the river impossible, Gaudet and his partners, Ed Lowe and Shawn Devaney, are taking tour guests on three-hour cruises downriver, pointing out many historic spots, including the Bluffton ruins.

Divers have also been attracted to Lake Buchanan, said Bruce Jones, who runs a grocery store at Silver Creek with his wife and father.

Measles, complications leading killers of Brazilian children

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Measles and its complications have become the leading killers of Brazilian children, chiefly in poor families.

Some officials say Brazil's economic crisis, which has hit the poor the hardest, also is responsible, because the complications of measles are often the result of malnutrition.

"It is the most serious disease in Brazil," Joao Baptista Risi, national secretary of the Health Ministry, said in an interview. "It is the communicable disease that causes the most deaths, and usually in children under age 2."

Accurate figures are hard to come by, Risi said, adding that only about 10 percent of the cases are actually reported, and the number of fatalities are counted by death certificates that specifically list measles as the cause.

In 1983, which was considered a good year, there were 55,000 cases listed with 3,000 deaths reported. This year there has been an epidemic, Risi said, and the official number will be around 100,000 cases with an untold number of deaths.

"That means there will be about 1 million cases in reality and about 10,000 deaths," he said.

He explained that measles, although frequently listed on death certificates, are not the immediate cause of the fatalities; it is the complications.

"The children die from resulting pneumonia and dehydration, which is the No. 1 killer of Brazilian children," Risi said. "The deaths from measles are not in the upper classes. It is always the lower classes, where the children suffer from nutritional deficiencies."

Joao Yunes, the health secretary of Sao Paulo state, was quoted in the local press recently as saying that studies showed, "Measles only caused deaths in children suffering from malnutrition. Therefore, it is a reflection of the (economic) crisis. We don't have a vaccine against misery."

A report from the government's Econômic and Social Planning Institute said that 86 million of the country's 134 million people are undernourished.

Combined underemployment and unemployment is put at about 40 percent. The average worker earns the equivalent of about $150 a month. And belt-tightening measures imposed to ease the burden of the country's more than $100 billion foreign debt hit hard at the struggling lower class.

Cancer victim faces new life

CLEVELAND (AP) — An 18-year-old Texas woman says she is not yet used to her new appearance after having a cancerous tumor removed from under the skin of her face.

"I look in the mirror and say, 'That's not me.' I'm used to seeing myself with that," said Corina Parker, pointing to where the tumor had been.

Miss Parker, of Jasper, Texas, underwent an operation in mid-August at Mount Sinai Medical Center.

Doctors at Mount Sinai, led by Dr. Bahman Guyuron, removed the tumor and rebuilt her features.

Miss Parker said she has blurred vision in her left eye and has lost her sense of smell. However, she has been told her vision will clear up in a few weeks. Mount Sinai doctors had warned her that the operation might take her eyesight.

Four years ago, she was told by Texas doctors she had about three months to live.

"I don't know how to feel about it. I had given up hope for a long time," she said.

Quintcycle gives paraplegic mobility

CONGERVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Like most 12-year-olds, Eric Irion likes riding his bike — or, more accurately, his quintcycle.

Eric, a victim of the crippling birth defect, spina bifida, hasn't always had wheels to get around the family farm, about 15 miles northwest of Bloomington.

But thanks to the handiwork of his maternal grandfather, Walter Kinsinger, the youngster now can ride for pleasure down the farm's long, gravel driveway. Or he can help with errands, such as carrying feed to the Irion Dairy Farm's calves.

"He thoroughly enjoys it," said Sharon Irion, Eric's mother. "It has given him wheels."

And, as any 12-year-old will attest, wheels of the sort you make go by pedaling are the thing to have.

Eric can't ride a typical two-wheeler because his congenital disease, which attacks the spine and nervous system, left him paralyzed below the knees.

So, Kinsinger, who has handcrafted numerous specially designed gifts for his grandson, used three wheels from two old bikes he bought at a junkyard, added a tractor seat and a balancing beam with a small wheel at each end and created a quintcycle that Eric can pedal by hand.

Mrs. Irion said her father's knack for remedying problems with custom-designed contraptions had come from years of farming.

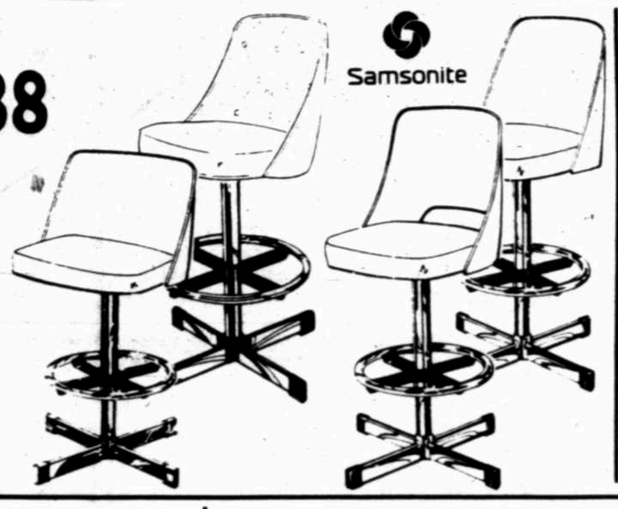

"If they (farmers) need something special, they make it themselves," she said.

Democrats pick women to challenge Republicans

Associated Press

Democrats hoping to oust popular first-term Republican senators nominated women to challenge Rudy Boschwitz of Minnesota and William Armstrong of Colorado, and picked a chemistry professor to run against Sen. Alan Simpson of Wyoming.

In other results from primaries in 10 states Tuesday, New Hampshire voters nominated GOP Gov. John Sununu for a second term and House Minority Leader Chris Spirou to oppose him, with Sununu's support for the troubled Seabrook nuclear plant certain to be a major issue.

In two states where governors are retiring, Vermont Republicans gave Attorney General John Easton the nod to run against Democrat Madeleine Kunin, and bitterly divided Rhode Island Democrats chose state Treasurer Anthony Solomon to oppose Republican Edward D. DiPriete.

A four-way Democratic race in New York's "Archie Bunker" district now served by Rep. Geraldine Ferraro was won by City Councilman Thomas Manton, who had lost the 1978 primary that ignited her political career. He will face Serphin Maltese, who won the GOP primary.

A sprinkling of well-known congressmen survived primary challenges: Vermont Republican James Jeffords turned back a conservative school teacher; Wisconsin Democrat Robert Kastenmeier defeated his first opponent in 26 years; New York Democrat Joseph Addabbo bested a millionaire black businessman in a largely black district; Arizona Democrat Morris Udall won a 12th term by defeating his primary challenger, since no Republican is running against him.

All of Connecticut's congressional nominations were uncontested. In the District of Columbia's City Council primaries, the lone elected Republican, Jerry A. Moore Jr., was upset by former school board member Carol Schwartz.

The victories by Secretary of State Joan Growe in Minnesota and Lt. Gov. Nancy Dick in Colorado bring to 10 the number of women nominated for Senate this year — six of them Democrats.

Ms. Growe, who outdistanced eight rivals in the Democratic-Farm-Labor primary, immediately went on the attack in her victory speech, saying that Boschwitz "hides from a Pentagon budget that is filled to overflowing with waste...from a farm program that is forcing farmers off their lands."

Boschwitz, who swept past two little-known challengers, discounted the significance of polls that show him heavily favored over Ms. Growe.

"I'm treating it like a tough race," he said. "We believe it will be a tough race in the end."

Mrs. Dick in Colorado had a narrow victory over Carlos Lucero, a wealthy lawyer, for the right to take on Armstrong, who had no primary opposition.

"Over the next eight weeks we will show that William Armstrong consistently votes and works against Colorado values," she said. "I call on Democrats, independents and Republicans to join our effort to reject extremism and to restore confidence to Colorado and to our nation."

Wyoming's Simpson, who gained prominence from co-sponsoring the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill, crushed retired accountant Stephen Tarver in the primary.

Mondale: Second Reagan term would be bleak

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale, staying on the attack against President Reagan, is drawing a bleak picture of what Reagan would do if elected to a second term.

During an appearance at Scott Community College today, the challenger planned to portray a second Reagan term as certain to produce a tax increase, cuts in Social Security and Medicare benefits and new efforts to cut federal domestic programs for cities, environmental protection and aid to the poor.

But while Mondale was trying to hammer away at what he thinks are Reagan's weak points, the Democratic nominee got a lesson Tuesday in the hazards of running against an incumbent president.

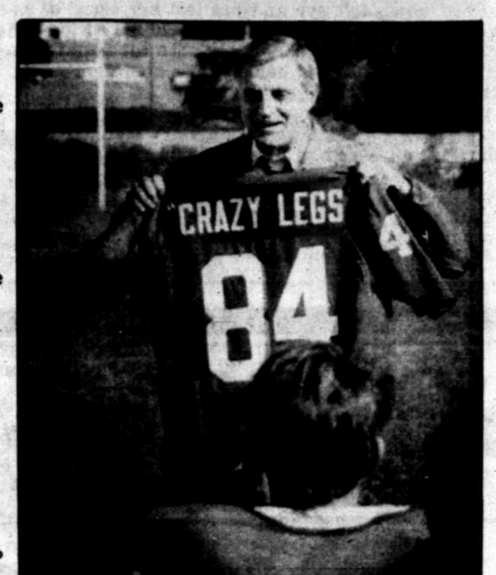

Mondale was campaigning in the Midwest when Reagan showed up in the White House press room to announce he would meet on Sept. 28 with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

One of the issues Mondale has tried hardest to keep in the forefront of the campaign is the fact that Reagan has never met the Soviet leadership in an effort to reduce East-West tensions.

"I hope they make progress," said Mondale, who went on to express skepticism about the forthcoming meeting.

"It's pretty pathetic that an administration in the middle of its campaign for re-election has its first meeting, not with the Soviet counterpart of the president, but with the foreign minister," Mondale told reporters in Chicago.

He also noted that during previous administrations — both Republican and Democratic — presidents routinely met with Gromyko when he came to the United States for sessions of the United Nations.

Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale holds up a football jersey with his high school nickname "crazy legs" printed on the back. Mondale made a campaign stop at Green Bay East High School in Green Bay, Wis., Tuesday, and spoke to the football team as part of a midwest campaign run.

AP Laserphoto

But Mondale trod a delicate line between criticism and hope, wary of sounding too negative about any chance for reducing U.S.-Soviet tensions.

"If they would come out with a significant arms control agreement, I would be thrilled," he said.

Mondale planned on Tuesday being a day to "personalize" his argument that the record budget deficits run up during Reagan's first term are having a devastating effect on the nation.

He offered his plan on Monday to cut the deficit by two-thirds over the next four years and challenged the president to do the same.

Then he stopped at a machine tool trade fair in Chicago and went on to greet workers at a plant gate in Green Bay, Wis., and talk to high school students in the same city.

At the trade show, Mondale blamed the deficit for undermining the U.S. trading position and making domestic firms vulnerable to foreign competition.

One executive of a machine tool company told Mondale "this industry is much smaller than it was six years ago." Another said the imbalance in the value of the dollar against foreign currencies meant that his machines cost 126 percent more in France than they did three years ago.

Abortion not new controversy for Geraldine Ferraro

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Abortion may be relatively new as a major issue in the fall presidential campaign, but it's not a new controversy for Geraldine Ferraro.

The Democratic vice presidential candidate, who has been unwavering in her position on the sensitive issue in the face of public criticism from an official of her church, has had plenty of practice dealing with abortion questions.

A Catholic, she has had to explain why she disagrees with her church's abortion views since she first ran for Congress in 1978 in Queens, N.Y.

And her debate this week with New York Archbishop John J. O'Connor is not the first time she has discussed the issue with a Catholic clergyman.

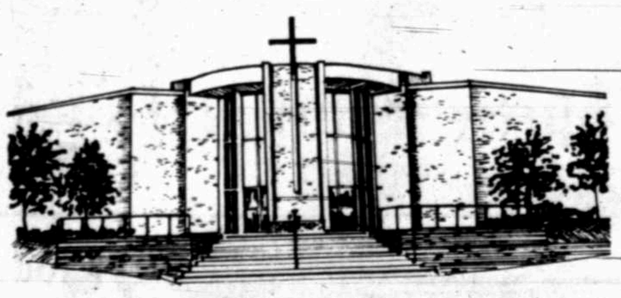

Ms. Ferraro says she herself opposes abortion, but she supports a woman's right to have one. She says she won't impose her religious views on others.

When she first ran for Congress, Ms. Ferraro said, she went to another church leader to discuss the discrepancy in their views. At a press conference Tuesday in Toledo during a swing through Ohio, Michigan and Pennsylvania, Ms. Ferraro recalled that conversation.

"We had a frank, open discussion," she said. "When it was all over, he said, 'Gerry, you're wrong. This is not the church teaching.' And I said, 'I know that.'"

Reagan conducts textbook example of classic Rose Garden campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is rejoining the ranks of the out-of-town campaigners after conducting a textbook, one-day example of a White House re-election effort by an incumbent with a commanding lead in the polls.

Reagan never got farther away from the Oval Office than the Rose Garden and the White House press room on Tuesday. But he denounced Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale's new deficit-reduction proposal as a "tax increase plan," announced plans on nationwide television for a mid-campaign meeting later this month with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, and disclosed he would permit the Soviets to expand their purchases of American grain.

For good measure, Reagan played host to Mondale's wife, Joan, and other guests at a ceremony honoring the late Hubert H. Humphrey, the Democratic senator and vice president who was Mondale's Minnesota mentor.

And Reagan's campaign began airing the first in a series of "upbeat" TV commercials of the Reagan-Bush general election — starting with a 30-minute commercial aired simultaneously on all the major networks.

President Ronald Reagan

Reagan, who campaigned in Pennsylvania on Sunday, was returning to the Northeast today with a trip to Buffalo and Broome County, N.Y. He was to dedicate a new federally financed housing facility for the elderly and the handicapped, speak to a luncheon sponsored by Italian-Americans, tour an IBM facility and address a campaign rally.

"I just want to see if we can't do something that will rid the world of this threat" of nuclear weapons, the president said of his planned session with Gromyko, his first face-to-face session with a senior Russian leader since he took office in January 1981.

Reagan turned aside questions of whether election-year politics was involved in the scheduling of the meeting. But Mondale has sought to make an issue of Reagan's lack of personal contact with top-ranking Soviet leaders and the lack of ongoing arms control negotiations.

In a 12-minute nationally televised session with reporters, Reagan responded to questions about Mondale's $177 billion blueprint for cutting budget deficits by two-thirds by 1989.

"What specifically has he proposed other than some additional spending and his tax cuts, and hacking away at the defense budget," Reagan said. He evidently meant to say tax increases, since Mondale's plan calls for tax hikes of $75 billion to help cut the deficit to $86 billion.

Mondale has challenged the president to be specific about how he would control deficits in a second term, but the president said, "I think that I put more specifics in the table in this term than probably any administration I know."

CIA: We didn't know of Nicaraguan expedition; Congressmen disagree

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA says it had no advance knowledge of a helicopter mission into Nicaragua that led to the death of two members of an American anti-communist group, but a bipartisan congressional group says U.S. officials failed to stop what may have been illegal arms exports by the private organization.

The Senate Intelligence Committee, after meeting privately with Defense Department and Central Intelligence Agency officials Tuesday, said members were told the agency "had no involvement" in the Sept. 1 mission and no connection with the Alabama-based organization that took part in it.

CIA officials did tell the committee, however, that the agency received a Nov. 4, 1983, letter from Thomas V. Posey, organizer of the Alabama-based Civilian-Military Assistance, the Washington Post reported in today's editions. The newspaper said he asked to be put in touch with Nicaraguan guerrillas.

The CIA officials told the senators that they forwarded the letter to the Justice Department, the Post reported. It said a copy of the letter was presented to the committee as evidence that the agency was not involved with the group.

Dana H. Parker Jr. of Huntsville, Ala., and James Powell III of Memphis, Tenn., members of Civilian Military Assistance who had volunteered to assist rebels fighting Nicaragua's Marxist-led government, were killed in a military helicopter crash inside Nicaragua after taking off from Honduras.

The committee's statement continued: "CIA officials also stated that they had no advance knowledge of the specific mission, although they were aware of a group of U.S. volunteers subsequently identified as the 'Civilian Military Assistance.' However, no CIA officers were in contact with any member of Civilian Military Assistance prior to the ill-fated mission."

The CIA has been providing undercover assistance to the rebels, but a Republican congressional source said no appropriation to continue this assistance is expected to be considered in the session of Congress drawing to a close.

NATION IN BRIEF

Officer who shot black won't face prosecution

MIAMI (AP) — There will be no federal prosecution of a police officer whose fatal shooting of a black man sparked days of rioting in the mostly black Overtown section, but the officer still faces a $6 million lawsuit in the death.

"There is no basis for federal prosecution" because there was no evidence officer Luis Alvarez violated the civil rights of Nevell Johnson Jr. in the Dec. 28, 1982, shooting, U.S. Attorney Stanley Marcus said Tuesday.

A $6 million civil suit by Johnson's family against Alvarez and the city of Miami is scheduled for trial Sept. 26.

Women molested by kin

NEW YORK (AP) — Seventy-six percent of the women who told a Glamour magazine survey they were sexually abused as children said it was their father or a relative who molested them.

Of the 2,014 women responding to the survey, 41 percent said they were sexually abused as children, and 70 percent of those women said they didn't tell anyone about it, the publication said Tuesday.

Twenty-seven percent of those reporting sexual abuse cited a friend or acquaintance; 7 percent said a stranger. Some women said they were repeatedly molested and gave more than one category.

Bellhops' trial postponed

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The drug trial of two former bellhops who worked at the hotel where David Kennedy was found dead of a drug overdose in April has been postponed until at least October.

Defense and prosecution attorneys said Monday they need more time to prepare for the trial, which had been set for Sept. 17, and a judge granted a delay.

No new trial date was set, and the next hearing for David Dorr, 30, and Peter Marchant, 24, was scheduled for Oct. 15.

The two are charged with arranging a sale of cocaine to Kennedy, 28, who was found dead at the Brazilian Court Hotel in seaside Palm Beach.

Games end with surplus

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Enthusiastic response to the Olympic torch relay and the Summer Olympics' spectacular opening ceremonies pushed ticket sales beyond expectations and allowed the games to end with a $150 million surplus, officials say.

Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee officials on Tuesday said the surplus was $131.75 million higher than projected last spring.

The money will be split among the U.S. Olympic Committee, the LAOOC's Amateur Athletic Foundation and the LAOOC's own reserve fund, the officials said.

Study says high officials source of most news leaks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidents who complain they'd had it up to their keisters with news leaks usually have only their closest appointees to blame, says a study of relations between the press and the government.

Most leaks are top-level jobs, the work of politically appointed officials who try to manipulate the media for their own purposes, and not the work of underlings in the government press offices who often get blamed, said researcher Stephen Hess in a Brookings Institution book, "The Government-Press Connection," published today.

Hess, a Brookings senior fellow and onetime aide in the Eisenhower and Nixon White Houses, spent 1981-82 in the press offices of the White House, the State, Defense and Transportation departments and the Food and Drug Administration to investigate the role the offices play in the dissemination of news.

During his tour, he reported, he found no instance of outright lying, although he saw many instances of press spokesmen telling "half truths."

"Press officers hedge, they insinuate, but I always felt they thought they were playing by rules that reporters understood," he said. "Press officers and reporters were honorable with each other. This may seem faint praise, however, to news readers and listeners."

Sooner or later, most presidents complain about leaks and try to do something about them.

President Reagan, saying he'd "had it up to my keister with these leaks," ordered his staff two years ago not to talk to reporters without approval from the White House press office. That procedure was soon forgotten, but the president's usage of keister, which is slang for buttocks, was not.

Honesty — or else

It's becoming more and more obvious to Texans that the 5-cent a gallon hike in the state gasoline tax enacted in the special session this summer wasn't exactly passed in an above-board manner.

In fact, a reader of the Reporter-Telegram said in a recent letter "maybe the time has come to make a clean sweep in all levels of government — beginning with our own state government."

Just about every day the mail brings another letter from another reader who feels Texans were duped by state legislators in enacting the gasoline tax increase. What it boils down to is Texans didn't get what they thought they were buying. That's because while additional money for highways was realized through tax increases and registration fees, House Bill 3, which appropriated $244.7 million out of the General Fund for highways last year, has been killed. In effect that means the legislators are saying, "Yes, here's more money for highways" and handing it to us with one hand while with the other they're taking money away. What that means is continuing problems for Texas highways. In fact, the only good point is that the additional nickel is, at least, permanent funding for the highway department.

Taxpayers should be unhappy because, according to State Reps. Tom Craddick of Midland and Jay Gibson of Odessa, who voted against the tax bill, the gas tax hike was sold to the public in an unscrupulous fashion.

While it's true that the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation will be receiving additional money as a result of this summer's tax activity in Austin, the additional funds will be primarily a result of higher charges on vehicle registration and car sales taxes.

The Legislature opted for an increase that will give the highway department more money for three years alright, but it was sold to taxpayers as a cure-all for the state's highway problems. It isn't, say Craddick and Gibson. It's only a short-term, band-aid approach to a serious problem that undoubtedly will be hitting taxpayers in the face again before the ink on the bill is dry.

So what do taxpayers do about it? That's simple. If taxpayers believe particular legislators are not performing up to the standards of honesty they demand, tell them about it at the polls on election day.

Of course there is a danger to voting against legislators en masse; sometimes honest, forthright, above-board lawmakers get kicked out with the rascals. In that regard, voters have to stay abreast of the voting records of their legislators. But that isn't too much work just to ensure responsible government.

Texans have a tradition of demanding honest government. That's particularly true when it comes to the taxes we pay. We don't want to be told lies. We are the only ones who can make our government honest — and keep it that way.

Remembering Cronin

Joe Cronin was a special man to everyone who followed major league baseball during his career with the Washington Senators and the Boston Red Sox. Those who attended his services in Hyannis, Massachusetts, the other day paid tribute to a genuine gentleman. His death at the age of 77 leaves a legacy of excellence.

As a player-manager this gentlemanly shortstop both played well and managed well. That is a dual achievement beyond the reach of many a fine athlete.

With all due respect to so-called "holler guys," whose vocal leadership surely has a place on America's diamonds, Joe Cronin was not a member of that club. He was quiet, steady and unassuming, and won the respect of all who toiled with him as a player or for him as a manager. Baseball's Hall of Fame honored itself by making him a member, and the American League honored itself by selecting him as president.

Red Sox manager Ralph Houk accurately summed up the Cronin career when he said, "He was a very fair man. He wasn't flamboyant." Another Hall of Famer, the "splendid splinter" known as Ted Williams, echoed the sentiments of many of his contemporaries by saying: "Joe meant more to me than anyone could possibly know."

Joe Cronin's dignity and good works have enriched the world of baseball with lessons that will last.

Another View:

Reagan's way out

President Reagan's home state of California may yet rescue him, at least temporarily, from having to live up to the terms of the federal balanced budget amendment that he seeks.

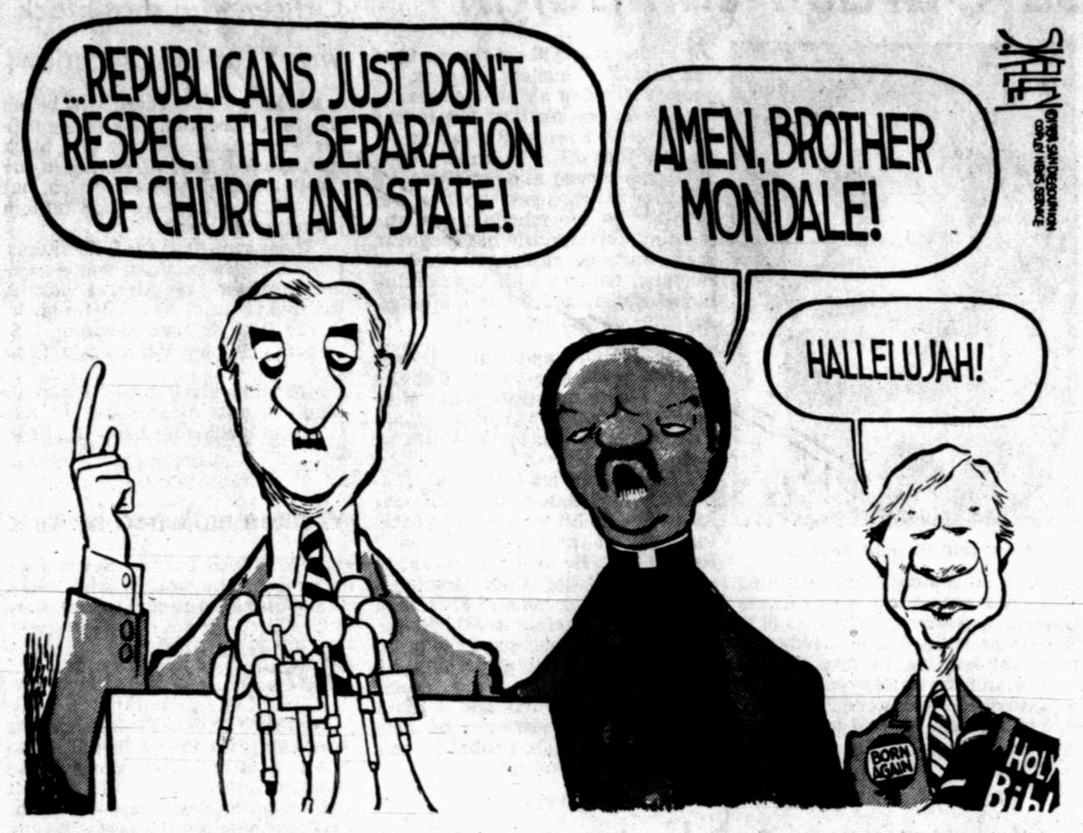

The California Supreme Court struck the Balanced Budget Initiative from the November ballot, though it might be reinstated by an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. The state court ruled that in threatening to cut the pay of legislators unless they approved a call for a federal constitutional convention, Proposition 35 amounted to coercion.

So California will not immediately become the 33rd state to call for a convention to produce a balanced budget amendment, with 34 required to oblige Congress to act. Supporters of the plan hope that Congress itself would send an amendment on to the states to avoid the risks in summoning what might be a runaway convention — the first convention since 1787. Congress is already under pressure from Mr. Reagan and the GOP platform to accept the idea.

Suppose, however, that Mr. Reagan were in a second term required to abide by such an amendment? By his own projections, there could be nearly a trillion-dollar deficit by the end of the second term. How could he turn that red ink into black? The choices involve drastic cuts in all controllable federal expenditures, including defense, which Mr. Reagan does not want to cut, or a considerable tax increase, which Mr. Reagan and his party platform oppose.

Mr. Reagan may profit from political rhetoric about the amendment, but if it were to be adopted soon, he could be the first presidential victim of it. However, states seldom ratify amendments quickly, and this one conceivably could be left for still another president. That would be the safest bet for Mr. Reagan.

— The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

JACK ANDERSON

FCA building 'paper palaces'

WASHINGTON — In July, I reported that the Farm Credit Administration had gone on a multi-million-dollar spending spree for office construction at a time when thousands of American farms are being foreclosed.

Jack Anderson

I expected cries of outrage from bureaucrats; that's par for the course. What I wasn't prepared for was a vicious personal attack on the reporter who had investigated the Farm Credit Administration's extravagance, Joel Bernstein.

A flack named Jeffrey D. Oates falsely charged Bernstein with being a deadbeat. In a memo circulated to other "communications specialists" throughout the farmer-financed Farm Credit System, Oates wrote:

"Joel Bernstein, an investigative reporter for Anderson (and a delinquent Farm Credit borrower), recently contacted banks that have recently moved or are planning to. ... Those banks we talked to did a good job responding to and, in some cases, frustrating Mr. Bernstein with sound answers and objective reasoning for their new buildings."

Unfortunately, Oates' offhand slur was neither sound nor objective. Bernstein happens to be a lifelong city boy. The closest he ever got to a farm, let alone a farm loan, was on a guided tour of the luxurious FCA headquarters in McLean, Va. There's a reconstructed colonial farm-restaurant just across the road, complete with ducks, geese and a mock grist mill.

When my associate John Dillon recently confronted the erring flack with the falsity of his charge, Oates confessed that it had been based on "third-hand information" that he "didn't check out."

In a lame form of apology, Oates said the memo "wasn't intended for the public." He promised a written retraction, but it has yet to arrive.

What did Bernstein dig up that so embarrassed the Farm Credit System spendthrifts, whose lavish paper-processing palaces are financed by the loans they make to farmers? Here are some of the system's nearly $220 million office building ventures:

— The Central Bank for Cooperatives last year spent $21 million on a new Denver headquarters. Possibly hoping to reflect the bank's mission of providing short-term loans to farmers for improvements, such as irrigation systems and wells, the building's designers included a spectacular indoor waterfall.

— An expansion of the St. Louis headquarters building, which includes two levels of underground parking and a central atrium, cost $18.7 million, or about $75 a square foot.

— In Austin, Texas, farmers and ranchers are fighting a plan to build a $32 million office on what one disgusted cattleman called "the most prime piece of real estate in Austin."

— Other completed buildings include a $28.8 million, 18-story regional headquarters in Spokane, Wash., and a $10.5 million Baltimore office that resembles the ultramodern East Wing of the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C. Soon to be completed: a $17 million building in New Orleans and one costing $25 million in Wichita, Kan.

In short, Farm Credit bureaucrats are building elaborate pleasure domes in which to determine credit rates and loan policies — while the farmers who borrow from the system are going broke at a faster rate than at any time since the Great Depression.

A DAM SITE DIFFERENT: Four years ago, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which must approve hydroelectric power projects on the nation's rivers, was called in to referee a fight between two neighboring cities in Vermont.

Burlington, which sits near the mouth of the Winooski River on Lake Champlain, planed to build a dam for a power plant. The city of Winooski, across the river, opposed the project.

Winooski had sunk millions into revitalization of its waterfront. Many restaurants and other businesses overlooking the free-flowing river would face only a placid pond when the power dam was built.

An FERC memo in 1981 noted that the Department of Housing and Urban Development had "expressed concern that the project might adversely affect the revitalization of Winooski's central business district."

This year, in what was otherwise virtually a rewrite of the 1980 statement, an "environmental assessment" by the FERC deleted a warning that the dam "may cause a loss of rental income" to the renovated buildings. And though Winooski's waterfront rebirth has proceeded apace in the intervening years, the FERC staff concluded that "the river is not dominant in the landscape of Winooski."

Sen. Robert T. Stafford and Rep. James M. Jeffords, both Republicans, have offices in a building that overlooks the Winooski River. They are reportedly concerned over the dam proposal.

WHITHER INTEREST RATES?: Reagan administration sources are confident that interest rates will drop slightly before Election Day — which would help the president's re-election drive. They're basing this hope on evidence that the economy is finally slowing down.

This means the Fed can — if it wants to — ease up on the money supply, which would allow interest rates to fall a little.

New ideas needed in 1988

Liberal columnist Richard Reeves makes the interesting point that "intellectual ferment has begun on the Left." He says that "foundations in New York, like Carnegie, Ford, the Rockefeller Brothers" and others are beginning to finance studies like nuclear issues." He concludes that "it takes years for ideas to break out, but they will."

Anthony Harrigan

Actually, major liberal foundations have provided massive funding for anti-defense groups for years. Mr. Reeves, however, detects and approves the latest push.

These foundations have a right to fund projects that aid the anti-defense lobby, however unwise and hurtful to U.S. interests. Conservatives, for their part, have been active in financing studies that are in accord with their priorities. The conservatives, to be sure, haven't anything like the massive foundation resources available to liberal-left causes.

The battle of the foundations and think tanks is an accepted part of American life. As Mr. Reeves correctly notes, party labels don't mean as much these days as they did in the past. In the mid-1980s, politicians try to sell themselves on the basis of "new ideas." And that's where the foundations and think tanks come in. This approach doesn't always work, of course, as Sen. Gary Hart discovered. His failure to wind the Democratic presidential nomination can be attributed at least in part to the fact that his "new ideas" campaign lacked authentic new ideas.

No one should condemn the search for new ideas. We need them in this decade. The world is an increasingly complex place. Citizens have difficult decisions to make on a vast array of public policy issues. Solutions to the problems we face as a nation depend very much on the discovery of new ideas, new approaches, new insights.

The public should insist, however, that it be presented with authentically new ideas, not old propaganda in fresh attire, which seems to be the aim of the foundations that want to give new life to the old nuclear freeze notion.

The fact, however, is that new ideas are hard to find. They arise from dedicated and sincere studies, not from propagandistic desires or political hucksterism. Both liberals and conservatives are guilty of offering "new ideas" of questionable worth.

If one reads about the liberal "new ideas" in journals of that persuasion, one usually discovers that they are retreads of concepts developed during the Roosevelt New Deal. Advocates of liberal innovation seem to have their minds firmly set on the year 1932, on the redistribution of income and the build-up of the federal bureaucracy.

Some self-styled conservatives, for their part, have developed an ideology of their own. The supply-siders, for example, oversold their new idea. They have pushed tax cuts to the point where they dismiss the seriousness of deficits. And conservtive businessmen are painfully aware of the existence of a legion of huckster organizations that assert the sky is falling and that only immediate cash contributions will keep these groups and the republic alive.

There always is resistance on every side to genuinely new ideas. Even the respected Wall Street Journal has closed its pages to writers on trade issues who aren't free trade dogmatists.

New ideas won't determine the outlook of the 1984 elections, which will be decided by other factors. However, new ideas undoubtedly will affect electoral decisions in 1988.

Let's hope that all thinking people in the United States, whatever their viewpoint, will strive to come up with some authentically new ideas in the next four years.

Board isn't doing duty

As a recent arrival to the area, I have been following the saga of the Lancaster House with amazement.

Although I am not fully aware of the duties and responsibilities of the trustees of the Museum of the Southwest, I would suggest that they are not adequately keeping their trust.

Midland has but few structures of historical significance and beauty remaining and that the guardians of one of those structures would choose to demolish it and replace it with a parking lot is an affront to the citizens of Midland.

Admittedly, the trustees have allowed an independent group of citizens a moratorium to attempt to secure funds, but I would suggest that it was the duty of the trustees to obtain funding rather than washing their hands of the matter.

A parallel to this situation might be if the trustees of the Alamo chose to level part of the structure to make way for additional parking. Would that be tolerable to the citizens of Texas?

Why should the citizens of Midland allow the destruction by proxy of part of their history and beauty?

Thanks offered for compassion

I would like to express my gratitude to the staff of the emergency room and the critical care unit of Midland Memorial Hospital for the efficient, professional, and compassionate manner in which they administered to my dear departed wife. She suffered a fatal cerebral stroke prior to admission the evening of Aug. 16. Also the way in which they attempted to console the members of our family shall always be gratefully remembered.

The City of Midland Emergency Medical Service is also to be commended for their efficiency and rapid response to a call for help.

We are glad we live in Midland.

President isn't only 'napper'

I waited and waited? The President of the United States, in his remarks to the Republican National Committee the morning of the GOP Convention, talked at length about Midland and the Christmas in April program. There was, to my knowledge, no mention of this in any of the local media.

I always wondered why the Republicans take Midland County for granted. Maybe Mr. Reagan isn't the only person who takes short naps in the middle of the day.

Book illustrates trade danger

Jeffery St. John was in Midland for a speaking engagement at a luncheon at the Hilton Hotel at noon today.

He has just recently published a book "Day of the Cobra" which deals with the K.A.L. Flight 007. In this book, St. John points out evidence on how Western technology, in this case a copy of a U.S. Sidewinder air-to-air missile, was used to down Flight 007 and kill the foremost American opponent of trade with the Reds.

He is speaking of Congressman Larry McDonald. There were also 268 other passengers and crew members aboard that flight. Lest we forget.

More trade, anyone?

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Sept. 12, the 256th day of 1984. There are 110 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 12, 1814, American forces succeeded in defending Baltimore against the British during the War of 1812.

On this date:

In 1880, author H.L. Mencken was born.

In 1913, Olympic legend Jesse Owens was born.

In 1953, Massachusetts Sen. John F. Kennedy married Jacqueline Lee Bouvier in Newport, R.I.

In 1960, Democratic presidential candidate John F. Kennedy confronted the issue of his Catholic religion by telling a Protestant group in Houston: "I do not speak for my church on public matters, and the church does not speak for me."

In 1977, black student leader Steven Biko died while in a South African jail, triggering an international outcry.

Ten years ago: Emperor Haile Selassie was deposed by the military, having ruled Ethiopia for 58 years.

Five years ago: The second major storm to strike the American mainland in two weeks, hurricane Frederic, hit the central Gulf Coast.

Baker will try again for televised Senate sessions

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Before he retires in January, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. plans a final shot at persuading colleagues to allow TV cameras in the chamber, but his long-running effort seems destined for cancellation.

"This is one that I have variously threatened the Senate with," the Tennessee Republican said sheepishly as he informed colleagues recently of his desire to bring the measure up just one more time. It was tucked in among the "must" items on Baker's long agenda for the remainder of the nearly-finished 1984 session.

Baker, who did not seek re-election this year, has been trying to win approval of his televison-in-the-Senate plan from the time he got the No. 1 Senate post in January 1981.

But, despite his proven powers of persuasion in other areas, he's never been able to muster the support needed to put the question to a formal vote. It keeps running into filibusters — or threats of filibusters — from a group of opponents led by Sen. Russell Long, D-La.

Long and other critics say television would interfere with Senate decorum and encourage some senators to play to the cameras.

Nonsense, claims Baker. He insists that it's just a matter of time until the Senate enters the televison age, as the House did five years ago. TV and radio coverage would be no more than electronic extensions of the visitors' and press galleries, Baker argues.

In fact, the Senate has permitted both radio and television coverage in the past, but only of selected events. For instance, the swearing in of Nelson Rockefeller as vice president in 1974 was televised and the debate on the Panama Canal Treaties in 1978 was made available for radio broadcast.

Long is as opposed to Baker's proposal as ever, and ready to use whatever tactics necessary to block the resolution when it comes up, possibly sometime this week, his aides report.

That probably won't be hard this late in the session, since any delaying tactics would almost certainly spell death for the measure.

Still, Baker seems determined to make a final push for his TV bill into his Senate swan song.

Under his proposal, the Senate itself would buy, install and operate the televsion cameras and then make the signal available to the news media or anyone else who wants to hook up to it — the same system used in the House.

Although cameras of any form and broadcast microphones are strictly banned in the Senate, the House has had gavel-to-gavel broadcast coverage since 1979. The picture appears on cable television around the nation on the Cable Satellite Public Affairs Network (C-SPAN).

Because of this, some House members reportedly have become more recognizable in their home states than senators. This fact seems to grate on the senators involved, but apparently not enough to muster the support Baker needs for victory.

Nicaraguan refugee family tried to adjust to new government

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Five years ago, Anastasio Somoza's 43-year-old dictatorship ended in Nicaragua. For the next two years, Leonel Palma and his family tried to adjust to the new situation.

"In the beginning, we were in favor of changes but with so many ties the (Sandinista) government had with Cuba and the Soviets, the changes were becoming too hard and we were regressing to a status we never had before," he said.

As internal disturbances between the Sandinistas and their opponents "the Contras" intensified, Palma said life became harder. Supermarket lines were long even if basic products such as sugar, toothpaste, beans and salt couldn't be found. Political committees were formed in each neighborhood, he said, and a mandatory attendance record was kept by means of a card Nicaraguans had to use in order to shop for food and other necessities.

Unexcused absences meant the card could be taken away. Because of the fighting, his wife, Socorro, said, "We couldn't buy any eggs or chickens because all the chickens were dead." At the time, he said, those who disagreed with the government were arrested and exiled.

Foreign companies were being nationalized. Basic freedom was taken away. "Life was not paradise" under the Somoza dictatorship, Palma, who works in the accounting department for the City of Wichita Falls, said from his Wichita Falls home.

"Although we disagreed (with its policies,) we never were afraid to be treated as the new government is treating people now." One of Mrs. Palma's brothers, four cousins and nephews fought the Somoza government, she said.

Still, if one wasn't an outspoken opponent of the government, he said, life was bearable. Then, in July 1979, the Somoza dictatorship fell. Palma said he gave the Sandinista government two years. It didn't change for the better, so he and his family decided to leave.

"We're pushed like everybody else," he said.

Palma was a member of an elite class in Nicaragua, the educated professional. He had studied in the United States and one of his four children was born in New Orleans. His last position in Nicaragua was that of administrative officer for the Inter-American Development Bank.

When he left the country, he joined a large number of professionals who had also decided to seek a new life elsewhere. "Doctors, especially the doctors and engineers," he said. "The 'brains' have already left and that's why the system don't work; they (Sandinistas) don't have the human resources," he said.

Palma said the decision to leave wasn't motivated by a lack of material means. He said he lost two ranches and cattle — some lost in the fighting, some just left behind. He and his wife, a teacher, lost good paying jobs. They sold most of their possessions in Nicaragua but lost most of their money when they bought American dollars in the black market.

"The thing is the approach," he said explaining why the family decided to leave. "We're in a level where we think that we have to be realized as human beings in order to participate in the development of the community."

"There (in Nicaragua) they're trying to put society first, then family and personal goals. The problem is, they force you to do it not because you want to, because you have to.

"We foresee the situation there will become harder," he said.

Although they have other relatives living in the United States, including Wichita Falls, most of their relatives still live in Nicaragua. "For the old people, I'm not afraid," Mrs. Palma said. "For the young people, yes, because they'll be (forced to serve) with the military and forced to fight."

Yaard-Vark lets fire ants meet their maker

BRYAN, Texas (AP) — Backyard tinkerer Jim Benson may have invented the ultimate lethal weapon in the war against fire ants.

It's an electrical zapper, a slim, three-foot-long device that rests on top an ant mound. Emitting a tiny electrical current, the device snaps, crackles and pops as the first ant victims meet their maker.

Then, a few minutes later, all heck really breaks loose in the ant colony. Out of the ground surge forth thousands of angry ants. Inexplicably, the electrical disturbance causes the pests to kill each other. As their frenzied fratricide proceeds, a thick, doughnut-like ring of dead ants forms around the electrode.

"I really enjoy killing them," says 60-year-old Benson, who lives on a farm in Seguin.

"Whenever they form a doughnut and begin to die, I am filled with enjoyment, because I've been fighting those sons of guns for years."

Benson made his discovery after noticing that fire ants were attracted to, then killed by, the sparks emitted by his water-well electrical pump. Following his intuition, he devised his first zapper from plastic plumbing pipe and odds and ends.

Once implanted, the device can annihilate an ant colony in several hours, depending on heat and humidity factors which affect how deeply the ants burrow. So far, the ants haven't recolonized the mounds, either, Benson says.

Benson's son, Robert, who lives in College Station, was called in for a demonstration two months ago.

"I was in awe," recalls Robert, 40, a doctoral student in physics at Texas A&M University and also an entrepreneur.

"It has all the qualities for anyone who wants revenge," Robert adds. "It feels like a real weapon."

The weapon has been renamed the Yaard-Vark, a name that now graces a company that Robert has formed to produce, market and sell the devices.

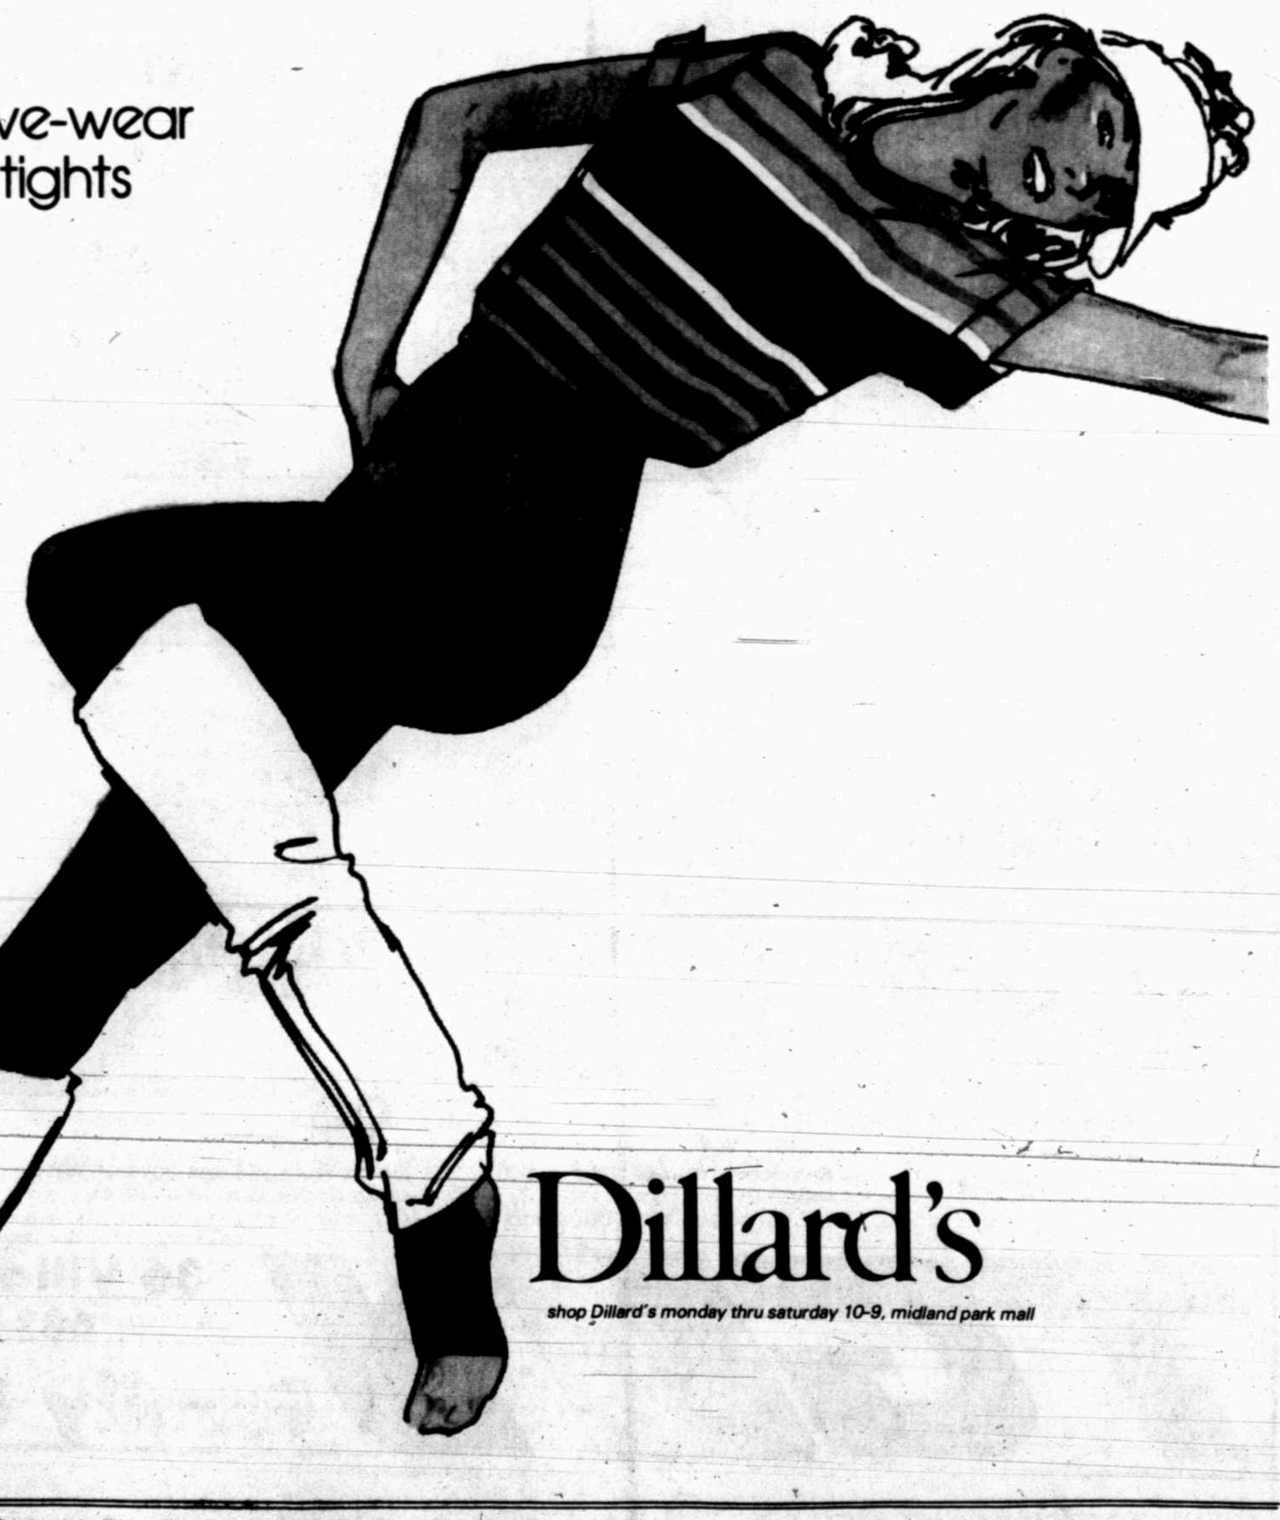

The company, which is gearing up for mass production, will refashion the devices to include a range of safeguards. Next spring, Yaard-Varks will probably be available at lawn and garden centers for between $59 to $79.

"The market will be huge," predicts Robert, who is applying for a patent to protect his dad's invention.

"We're going to produce as many as we can," he adds.

Dallas looks like Giants

An AP Sports Analysis
By DAVE GOLDBERG

Take it from someone who knows. The new-look America's team looked, at least for one Sunday, like, well ... the New York Giants.

"A lot of things that happened to them out there today were things that in the past happened to us," Dave Jennings, the New York punter, said after the Giants took apart the Dallas Cowboys 28-7. "You just shake your head and wonder what's going on."

Is this that paragon of machine-like efficiency that has dubbed itself — with the help of CBS — America's team?

Or is this just another NFL team that has lost four of its last five games; a team with 12 rookies, contract disputes and a quarterback controversy; a team that has committed nine turnovers in its first two games? In other words, just one of the gang in the Parity Football League?

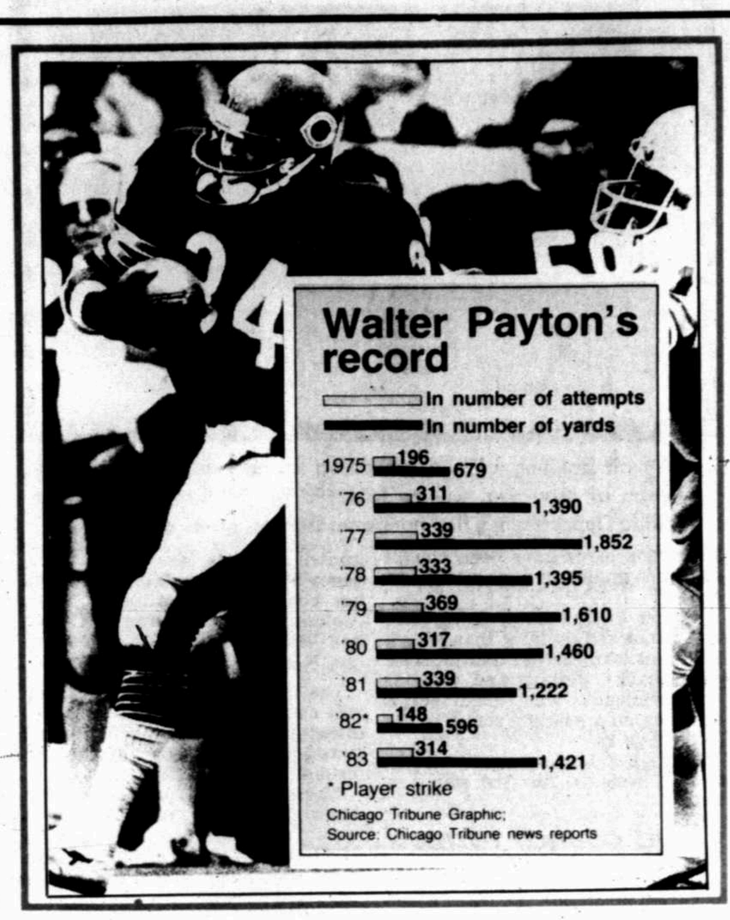

The party line, which anyone knowing the history of the franchise would ignore at his own risk, is this: the season is young; the team is young, this was just one bad game from which the Cowboys can bounce back.

"I like our personnel," says Coach Tom Landry. "We had to come back from a Monday night game on the West Coast to play the Giants and we had to shuffle our receivers with Tony Hill hurt. We were flat all week and flat in the game.

"But we'll be all right. About mid-season you see where you are and you take it from there."

"It's just one game," says defensive tackle Randy White, who held out during training camp. "I feel good about this team."

NCAA opens Gator hunt

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A preliminary investigation of the University of Florida football program by the NCAA uncovered 107 alleged rules violations ranging from illegal recruiting practices to spying on opponents.

The Southeastern Conference school received official notification of the charges Tuesday in a 75-page letter released by Marshall M. Criser, university president.

"This is a painful process for us all," Criser told a news conference. "It is a true test of our ability to weather a storm of intense emotion and grim reality."

While a number of the allegations appeared minor — such as an assistant coach lending a player $20 that was later repaid — several others were more serious and alleged direct involvement by Coach Charley Pell.

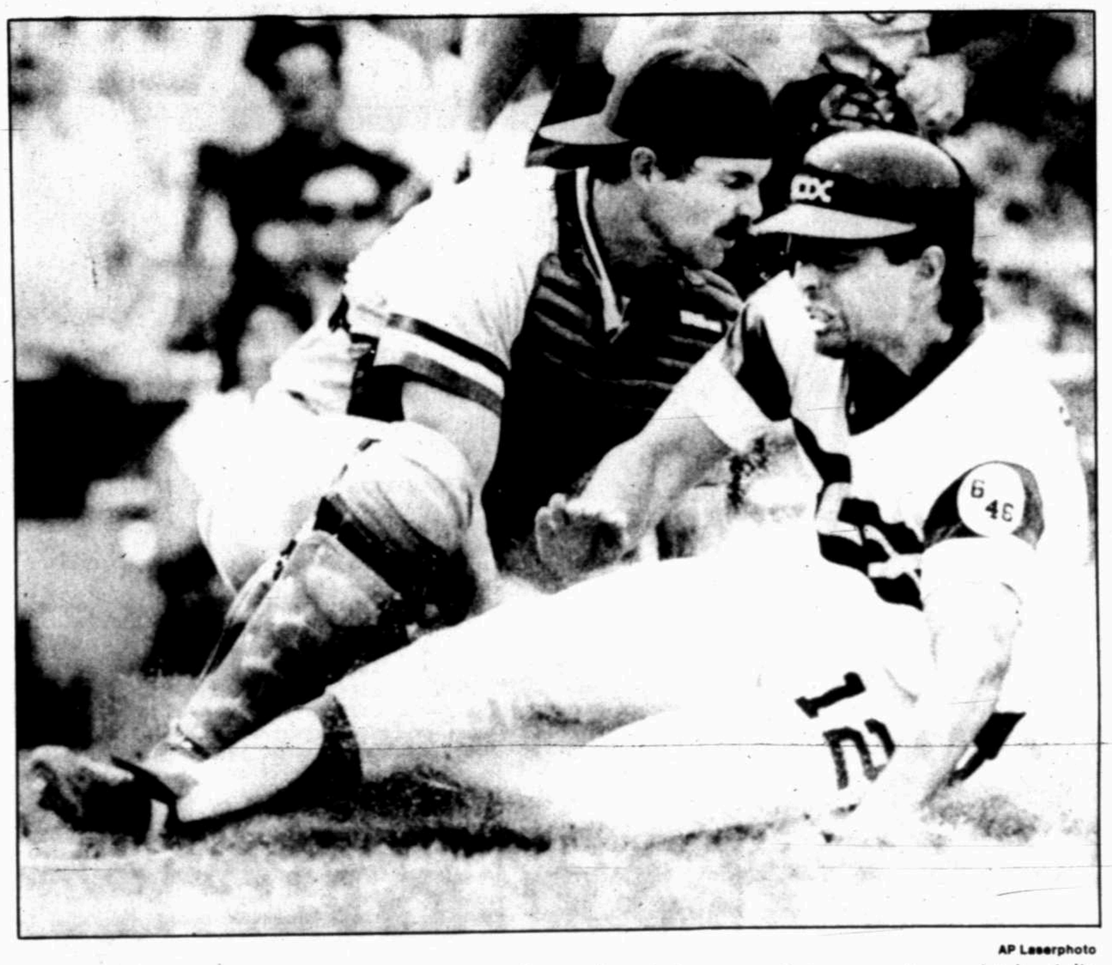

Also implicated were several present and former members of Pell's staff as well as a number of boosters, including New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner.

Some of the charges involved the sale of complimentary tickets, and one charged alleged that Pell administered a fund of at $4,000 "from which he withdrew cash to pay costs that could not be paid by the university without violating NCAA legislation."

Pell, in his sixth year with the Gators, resigned Aug. 26, saying he accepted responsibility for any wrongdoing that might be uncovered during the probe, which began in December 1982.

The 43-year-old coach is being allowed to remain with the team in 1984, though Criser has left the door open to dismiss him at any time pending developments in the NCAA case.

Criser refused to comment on Pell's status Tuesday, but said the university will prepare a response to the charges in "early time."

Twins muscle Royals

Associated Press

Minnesota's Tom Brunansky stood near home plate watching teammate Kent Hrbek lumber around the bases for an inside-the-park homer and decided he would take an easier route.

"On my home run, all I had to do was jog," said Brunansky, whose 30th round-tripper of the season followed Hrbek's 25th as the Twins beat Kansas City 5-1 Tuesday night to take a one-game lead in the American Leage West.

"The fans like to see Herbie run," said a jovial Brunansky. "To watch Herbie pass out in the bat room was kind of fun, too."

Their heroics, which highlighted a four-run rally after two were out in the seventh inning, gave the Twins the first two games of the three-game showdown in the Metrodome. And they were enough for Frank Viola, 16-12, who tossed a six-hitter and struck out nine Rovals.

Tigers 9, Orioles 2

Lance Parrish and pinch-hitter Larry Herndon drove in two runs apiece during Detroit's five-run fifth-inning rally in support of Den Petry, 17-8.

Darrell Evans had four hits, including his 16th homer, for Detroit, while Rick Dempsey drove in both Baltimore runs with his 10th homer and a run-scoring double.

The victory reduced Detroit's magic number for clinching the AL East crown to seven over Toronto. Any combination of Tiger victories and Blue Jay losses totaling seven would give Detroit the division.

Blue Jays 10, Yankees 3

Toronto's George Bell and Jesse Barfield slugged two-run homers in a game that featured a bench-clearing brawl in the fifth inning. New York's Dennis Rasmussen threw close to Willie Upshaw following Barfield's 13th homer to set off the brawl. Both players were ejected.

"I've been hit hard before and I've never done anything like that," Rasmussen said. "I was doing this (throwing inside) to set up the next pitch."

"The man's married with three kids and he can't support them if he's in the hospital or walking down the street picking up rocks and eating them — you know, crazy," said Toronto's Cliff Johnson. "The man went straight for his coconut."

Indians 4, Angels 2

Andre Thornton blasted a two-run homer, his 31st, and rookie right-hander Don Schulze, 3-5, scattered nine hits as Cleveland beat California.

The loss left the third-place Angels two games behind Minnesota in the West.

Brian Downing's second-inning line drive hit Schulze under the right ear, but failed to knock him off the mound.

Brewers 14, Red Sox 6

Cecil Cooper capped a four-run fifth inning with a three-run homer and Willie Lozado and Robin Yount had two hits apiece, including consecutive homers in Milwaukee's nine-run seventh inning, which matched the biggest one-inning output in the team's history.

Tony Armas, the major leagues' leading home-run hitter, slammed his 37th for Boston.

Mariners 4, Rangers 3

Rookie Danny Tartabull's two-out, bases-loaded infield single, the only hit of the inning, scored Darnell Coles as Seattle rallied for two runs in the bottom of the ninth inning to beat Texas.

Buddy Bell fielded Tartabull's bouncer behind third base, but pulled first baseman Pete O'Brien off the bag. Texas reliever Dickie Noles, 1-3, hit Alvin Davis to open the inning. Domingo Ramos ran for Davis and eventually scored on a wild pitch by reliever Dave Schmidt.

A's 4, White Sox 1

Curt Young limited Chicago to six hits over eight innings, and Bill Almon drove in the go-ahead run with a fifth-inning single as Oakland beat Chicago.

Young, a rookie left-hander who improved to 8-4, outdueled Chicago right-hander LaMarr Hoyt, 12-16, who gave up nine hits in 7 1-3 innings. Bill Caudill pitched the ninth to pick up his 31st save.

Bobcats defeat Lee in volleyball

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The San Angelo Bobcats disposed of the Midland Lee Rebels rather quickly in the first game of their volleyball match Tuesday night but found things considerably rougher in the second game of their 15-6, 15-10 District 4-5A season-opening victory.

After jumping out to a 5-0 lead in the second game, the Rebels found the spark they were looking for that enabled them to turn a rout into a highly-contested match. Lee broke the shutout at 5-1 and, after San Angelo scored for a 6-1 advantage, came storming back to build a 10-6 lead.

The main thrust in the Rebel attack came after Tina Swinney blocked a Bobcat shot for a sideout, sending Rebel Donna Holmes to the back court to serve. Holmes aced her first attempt and kept on serving until Lee had a 9-6 lead.

The Rebels dug in on defense and scored their final point before San Angelo got untracked to tally the final nine points to win the match.

"In the first game we were extremely tight," said Lee coach Janice Baulch. "The girls wanted to beat San Angelo so bad that they were to tense and nervous. In the second game we had good defensive play and excellent serving. Donna had some excellent serves. She was the one serving all those points that ate their lunch."

San Angelo coach Nita Vannoy, whose team now owns an impressive 21-0 record so far this year, also saw Lee's second game serving as a strong part to the Rebel game.

"I thought we let down for a bit in the second game. We couldn't receive the serve," said Vannoy. "That girl (Holmes) served about seven or eight in a row and that really hurt us. We lost our concentration and couldn't make the first pass. If you can't make the first pass, you can't get your offense going. I thought Lee played us a real scrappy game."

"You've got to give a lot of credit to San Angelo," said Baulch. "They have a good ball team with some excellent hitters and they don't lose their cool and that's a tough combination to beat."

A combination San Angelo has had for some time. Not only are the Bobcats unbeaten this year, but they have won or shared the 4-5A title for the past six years. In 1982, Midland High tied San Angelo for first place and won a playoff game in Big Spring to represent the district as the first place team.

The night wasn't a total defeat for the Rebels as the junior varsity slugged their way to victory, 15-2, 4-15, 15-8.

On Thursday, the Rebels travel to Abilene to take on Cooper.

"Nobody seems to know anything about them," said Baulch of Cooper. "None of us have seen them play which is kind of scarey. The thing we have to do is keep the kids from getting discouraged. We've lost the last three games we've played but all were close and could have gone either way. And, they had some tall teams with good players."

Beware of Frankenstein

On Monday morning, Darrell Davis, Midland High's hulk of superstar humanity, was quietly laying on one of James (Doc) Dodson's training tables with wires protruding from the back.

Wasn't this a scene from Frankenstein? Or had Doc Dodson invented a technology that had gone beyond the old thriller.

I joked with Doc that he must have gone into the cloning business. After all, another 11 like Davis couldn't hurt any football team.

DOC WAS quick on the uptake, however. "No, that's just Darrell," he replied and then said within earshot of Davis, "When you get to be a big star like Darrell, you kind of expect to have Monday off."

Actually, Davis was receiving some of Dodson's electric medicine for a back bruise. Nothing serious. It just looked serious with wires covering the room.

But if Davis really did want the day off, it was well deserved. What he did at Lowery Field in Lubbock Friday night was worth the rest.

Of course, we knew that Davis could play offense. We saw enough of that last fall. What we didn't know was that he can play defense too. But we now know the answer to that one too.

Offensively, Davis had his weekly average game, catching four passes for 60 yards to lead all MHS recievers. He also turned in a couple of key blocks along the way.

However, if his start on defense was slow, it will be interesting to see what the rest of the season has in store for us.

Defensively against Lubbock Monterey, Davis was in on seven tackles, including three first hits, which gives a player five points under coach Doug McCutchen's grading plan. He also had a fumble recovery.

And there was that small matter of a 56-yard interception return for a touchdown that produced the margin in MHS' 10-7 victory over Monterey.

AT HALFTIME, he probably spent his time holding up the chalk board for McCutchen and taping ankles for Dodson. There wasn't much he didn't do. There was no popcorn concession in the Bulldog dressing room, so he didn't sell popcorn at the half as some rumors had it. We want to make that clear.

One of the first things McCutchen told me when he took the MHS job was that more players were going to have to play both offense and defense this year. He pointed to Davis as a prime example. "We've got to put our best people on the field," said McCutchen.

The move is being hailed as McCutchen's first stroke of genius at Midland High. Moving Davis to defense has already turned in a "W" in the win column for the Bulldogs.

After seeing Davis on Friday, you wonder why he hadn't been playing defense all along. Sorry Doug, but the move doesn't seem like a stroke of genius to me. But I will say it does sound like using a great deal of common sense. Regardless of how you view the move, it was a good one.

I ALSO heard that state finalist Midland Lee crushed Lubbock Coronado by a 27-0 margin. I couldn't prove it on the phone Friday night with a call from Lubbock.

It seems that Lee was greatly rewarded after its 1983 campaign with a new phone system, maybe the worst in the state. It doesn't work half the time. There are night numbers, day numbers and transfers to deal with. It's enough to make you want to get out of the reporting field. Whoever came up with the new Lee phone system needs help.

Well, that's week one of the football season. I'm off to see Lee coach Jack Tayrien. I couldn't reach him by phone and I'm beginning to wonder if he's still breathing.

Mancini ignores order

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former lightweight champion Ray Mancini ignored a court order to have a New Orleans doctor examine the partially healed cut that he used as a reason for backing out of a nationally televised fight against Kenny Bogner, a spokeswoman in the doctor's office said.

"Everyone else was here — attorneys, reporters, cameras and the whole office building, but not Mancini," said Carita Hooper, office manager for Dr. Ernest Cohen of Touro Infirmary.

The Mancini-Bogner fight was scheduled for last Saturday. On Thursday, Mancini said he had received a cut over his left eye some two weeks earlier while training in the Catskills.

The cut hadn't healed, and his doctor told him he would be risking permanent damage by going on with the fight, he said.

Barry Mendelson, who was handling the local end of the promotion, began legal action against Trans World Promotion Inc. of California, the company that agreed to provide Mancini's services.

Midland bows to Big Spring

BIG SPRING—Big Spring's Steers opened the District 4-5A season with a closely-contested 15-13 and 15-12 win over Midland High here Tuesday night.

The win evened the Steers record for the season at 9-9. Midland is 7-5 for the year.

The Bulldogs return to action Thursday against Abilene High with A and B games starting at 6 p.m.

New stamp chance to help endangered species

By TODD WOODARD
Outdoor Writer

Art collectors and others interested in nongame and endangered species in Texas have a new opportunity to help the resource.

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission has accepted a bid for design and production of the state's first Nongame Print, Stamp and Decal program.

Collectors Covey, Inc., of Dallas, will produce the materials based on an oil painting by nationally known wildlife artist Ken Carlson of Missoula, Mont., depicting two whooping cranes.

Stamps and decals will be priced at $5 each, and framed prints of the painting including a stamp and decal, will be priced at $145. Medallion series prints will be $250 each.

Like the waterfowl stamp, funds accrued from the nongame stamp will be earmarked exclusively for programs to aid nongame and endangered species in the state.

TP&W officials said the stamps and decals will be available by November. Prints may be ordered from Collectors Covey in early 1985.

The bid submitted by the firm specified that TP&W will receive $40.50 for each print sold, with an additional $20 paid for each medallion series print sold. The bid also included a minimum guaranteed royalty of $250,000.

Deer range dry

Dry weather and sun-scorched habitat haven't hurt the state's white-tailed deer populations, according to Texas Parks and Wildlife. In fact, the dry weather may even help hunting.

Horace Gore, white-tailed deer program leader for the department, said, "The deer are doing pretty well, even in the really dry areas. But fawn crops and antler development are extremely poor in some regions." The season will open Nov. 17 in most Texas counties.

One of the best places to hunt may be in the usually arid Trans-Pecos, Gore said. Because the area has received more rain that usual, West Texas could be above average, he said.

Gore said hunter harvests are traditionally higher during dry years, because the deer must move around more to find food.

Stamp judging opens

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's 1984 duck stamp competition to select the winning design for the 1985-86 Migratory Bird Hunting and Conservation Stamp opened for entries in July.

Judging for the nation's foremost wildlife art contest, to be held on Nov. 6-7 in Washington, D.C., will cap a year of commemorative activities in observance of the duck stamp's 50th anniversary.

The stamp, required of all migratory waterfowl hunters 16 and older, was created in 1934 to generate revenue for land acquisition in the National Wildlife Refuge System. During the past 50 years, more than 3.5 million acres have been bought with $285 million in duck stamp revenues.

An oil painting of two whooping cranes, rendered by Ken Carlson of Montana, will be featured on the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department's first nongame stamps, prints and decals.

Entries for the 1984 judging must be postmarked no later than Oct. 1. Paintings of mallards, ruddy ducks, canvasbacks, pintails and wigeons are not eligible, since each species has been on a winning stamp in the last five years.

J.N. "Ding" Darling, a political cartoonist, designed the first stamp in 1934.

Playa council formed

To investigate waterfowl disease and mortality in shallow basins known as playa lakes, the Interagency Playa Lakes Disease Council has been formed, Michael Spear, regional director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Albuquerque, N.M, said.

The five members of the council will coordinate waterfowl disease investigations, research, waterfowl management and public information through their organizations.

There are about 25,000 playas scattered in the five-state area of northwest Texas, eastern New Mexico, southeastern Colorado, the Oklahoma panhandle, and the southeast corner of Kansas.

Three-fourths of the playas are found in Texas. They are wind-formed basins, usually found in semi-arid regions, which catch and hold rains. Most of them are small, but some exceed 600 surface acres during wet years, Spear said.

Because many are in cultivated areas, they provide suitable habitat for wildlife, particularly waterfowl. During wet years, over 2 million waterfowl and 300,000 sandhill cranes have been counted in the playa lakes of the Texas panhandle.

Although the playas are beneficial to the birds, they also host disease. Each year thousands of waterfowl die from botulism, bird cholera and other diseases associated with the playas. The council hopes to find ways to limit the losses of birds in those small basins.

The council members will include Dr. Eric Bolen, chairman, Texas Tech University; Dr. Milton Friend, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service-Wisconsin; Bill Brownlee, Texas Parks and Wildlife; Harvey Miller, U.S. F&W-Colorado; and W. Ellis Klett, U.S. F&W-New Mexico.

Trotlining abused

Trotline is an inexpensive way to catch fish, but it's also abused, Texas Parks and Wildlife's Capt. Harold Oates, said.

"Rod and reel fishermen often complain about large numbers of trotlines that snag their lures and motors," he said, "and I can't really blame them, since much of the time the lines are unmarked and abandoned."

Oates pointed out that all trolines must be marked with a durable tag inscribed with the owner's name and address and the date the line was set. These tags can be made from pieces of plastic or half-gallon milk jugs. The lines must be redated at the end of 90 days or removed, he said.

All hooks on a trotline must be at least three feet apart, with no more than 50 hooks per line. No more than 100 hooks are allowed on all devices for each person.

Lines may not be placed in the vicinity of any public boat dock, public bathing pier, or any public place commonly used for swimming. Trotlines, juglines and throwlines also may not be placed in any body of water 500 acres or less lying totally withing a state park or the portion of a stream bordering state park.

Auburn's Dye seeks answers

From Wire Reports

FOOTBALL—Pat Dye claims his Auburn Tigers, after a 20-18 loss to Miami, is still a question mark as it enters Saturday's game against Texas. "I don't know if we're going to beat Texas, but we look forward to the challenge of the Texas game. We need to find out on the playing field if we have leadership and character. It will be a chance to see if we have a championship caliber team." Dye described No. 4-ranked Texas as another strong Longhorn squad capable of beating anyone. "Texas doesn't beat themselves on offense, and that's why they won 11 games last fall."...

Gerry Faust is taking Notre Dame's upset loss to Purdue in stride, operating on the premise that if you have to lose a game, it's best to lose the first one. "That's over and one we have to forget. It's a tough loss for the players and all of us, but we have a long season ahead and a lot of good things can come from it." Faust could not comment on the mood on campus but said the team "spirit is super and the mood of the players is excellent...

Walter Payton, Chicago Bears, who broke the NFL's all-time combined yardage mark last Sunday and linebacker Lawrence Taylor, New York Giants, who had three sacks and forced two fumbles, were named NFC players of the week. Payton, who ran for 179 yards in the Bears' 27-0 victory over the Denver Broncos, lifted his total yardage in the NFL from rushing and receiving to 15,517, 58 more than the old mark held by Cleveland's Jim Brown. Taylor, was the dominant player in New York's 28-7 win over the Cowboys. One of his sacks of Dallas quarterback Gary Hogeboom knocked the ball loose and into the arms of Andy Headen, who returned it 81 yards for a touchdown...

BASEBALL—Derrel Thomas, traded to the California Angels by Montreal last week, has denied accusing the Expos of racism. "I was totally misquoted. I didn't even meet with a hint of racism on the Expos. This trade (to the Angels), I felt like they did it for me." Thomas was quoted in Monday's editions of the Toronto Globe and Mail as saying that he couldn't believed he'd be traded by the Expos during batting practice. "But when I looked in the mirror in the clubhouse I realized why they did it that way. They'd never trade a white player that way."...

Chicago White Sox pitcher Rich Dotson told the Oakland A's to get a dog if they were scared to face him. Instead, the A's got Dave Kingman. Kingman was ejected in the third inning Monday, but not until he caught Dotson with three right uppercuts after the Chicago hurler plunked him in the ribs. "I'm not proud of getting into a fight," Kingman said. "But I don't think I've been hit on a 3-0 count in 13 years in the National League, and I've been hit three times on 3-0 counts this year. That's just one thing with the American League." "I walked a lot of guys (six), so I didn't have pinpoint control," said Dotson. "When you pitch inside, sometimes pitches are going to get away."...

BALLET— Ballet is more physically demanding than football, says Frank Bove, a former reserve wide receiver at Arizona State who will dance this season with the Cleveland Ballet Co. "You have to always stay in shape, there is more discipline and you have to communicate through an audience. None of that is included in football, unless you are a Mark Gastineau. Also, the workouts are more physically and technically demanding." Bove, 27, said the easy part of switching from football to ballet was his ability to jump and his strength for lifting a female partner in routines...

Holtz bristles at claim

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Coach Lou Holtz bristled at the suggestion that a visit he made last fall to study Nebraska's offense will help his Minnesota team get ready for Saturday's game against the top-ranked Cornhuskers.

"We looked at some of their films, is all," Holtz said Tuesday of his visit last fall to Lincoln. "There were no secrets. A lot of people have copied their offense. But nobody runs it as well as Nebraska does."

Holtz, who at the time was Arkansas' head coach, and three assistants visited Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne during a week that Arkansas had an open date, prior to its game against Texas.

No one knew then that Holtz later would be hired as the new coach at Minnesota.

Osborne said that normally he doesn't trade films or discuss his system with the coach of any team he's going to play in the next two years.

Holtz' voice rose when he was asked if his familiarity with the Cornhuskers' plays would help underdog Minnesota.

"This conversation is asinine," Holtz said.

Actually, Osborne has downplayed the significance of Holtz's visit. Osborne said he's more concerned by Holtz's reputation for pulling off upsets.

Midlander earns 7th degree Black belt

From Staff Reports

Kenneth White

Jenice Miller of Midland has been promoted to the rank of 7th Degree Black Belt by American Karate Black Belt Association in Dallas to become the first female to reach such a high level in Martial Arts in the U.S.

She is the highest ranking lady Black Belt in the U.S. Ms. Miller, an instructor, is known throughout the U.S. for the excellent quality of her students in competition.

In a fighting career that lasted over 13 years, 1968 until retiring from competition in 1982, Ms. Miller won over over 272 national and international titles in both fighting and form competition.

Her titles include: All-American Karate champion, Texas State champion, Houston Karate Olympics, U.S. Karate champion, West Texas Karate champion, Fort Worth Pro-Am champion, International Grand champion...

Ms. Miller trains and managed full contact karate fighters in West Texas and is the promoter and producer of the WT Pro-Am Karate championships scheduled for Ector County Coliseum in October. Several of her fighters are rated in the top 10 in their weight categories. Steve Godines is the Texas featherweight champion and Fabian Nunez, a contender for the U.S. welterweight title.

Ms.Miller is included in the Who's Who in American Martial Arts and has been selected to appear in the Founders of American Martial Arts publication.

For information on Ms. Miller's classes contact 687 2031.

Hillin returns

DOVER, Del.—Undaunted by a May accident at Dover which he calls the "hardest hit I've ever taken," young NASCAR Grand National driver Bobby Hillin, Jr., returns to action Sunday in the Delaware 500 here Sunday.

"At first, we thought the car was a total wreck," says the former Midlander in describing the condition of his Stavola Bros., Racing Buick after the crash with only 62 miles to go in last spring's Budweiser 500. "But it wasn't ready to quite and neither was I. We're both ready to tackle Dover gain."

Hillin says "getting the job done" would mean a top-10 qualifying effort in time trials Saturday. In Hillin's first Dover appearance a year ago, he qualified 21st and drove a solid race to finish 11th.

Midland to host Major Zone play

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland College will host Midland's Major Zone Tennis Tournament Friday through Sunday at the MC courts, featuring a collegiate lineup in a ranking war.

The Major Zone tournament is one of several across the state that players must play in to earn state rankings.

Buddy Farrington, who is currently ranked 10th in the state, will be the top seed in the men's championship phase of the tournament while Angelo State's Danny Olsen will carry the No. 2 seeded tag. Olsen advanced to the semifinals of this tournament two years ago.

David Leatherwood, who played for Odessa College last year before moving to Texas Tech, will be the No. 3 seed. Leatherwood advanced to the national junior college semifinals last spring.

The No. 4 seed is Emilio Montana, a former Rice star who was ranked in the top 100 in the world in 1981.

The No. 2 seed is Sandra Sigulinski of South Plains College. Sigulinski is from Yugoslavia and was the national junior college runnerup last spring.

Midland College's Liz Burris is the No. 3 seed and Burris was a national junior college quarterfinalist last spring and is heading into her final year at MC.

Vanne Akagi of Hawaii will be the No. 4 seed. She is playing No. 1 for the Aggie women this year.

The women's double unit of Sandy Collins and Virginia Brown, both of Odessa, top the list. Collins has been ranked as high as 30th in the world and is currently playing the pro circuit.

Robert Vrij of Midland College and Midland's Kirk Farquhar head the men's double entries.

There are scattered entries from San Antonio, Houston and Tyler. Some colleges are sending complete teams to participate, such as Texas A&M, South Plains, Odessa College, UTPB and Angelo State.

There are also men's and women's amatuer divisions as well as mixed doubles.

The tournament will begin Friday at 8 a.m. and run through the day. Saturday's action begins at the same time. The championship finals are slated for 1 p.m. Sunday.

What about Enright's dreams?

George Enright

Tony Woods

It was a season of broken dreams and dissipated hopes for Midland Cub players, a season from which a career may never recover. It was the kind of year for which condolences are appropriate. It's easy to empathize with the players whose major league ambitions may have been short-circuited in 1984, but what about the manager?

Cub Manager George Enright also had ambitions that foundered on the rocks of lost hope last season.

Enright's playing career went into limbo when an emergency arose a few years back and someone in the Chicago organization saw managerial material in George.

He didn't disappoint. It was right here in Midland in 1981 that Enright was asked to step in as manager of the Midland Cubs to replace Roy Hartsfield, a former major league pilot.

He turned a loser into a winner and then spent the next two years in Class A ball, "learning the trade."

ENRIGHT looked forward to the day when he would be back in Midland. Instead of the long-anticipated triumphant return, Midland's 1984 Texas League season was a disaster.

Instead of a promising young team of major league prospects, Enright wound up managing a club of rejects from other teams. The Cubs finished so far out of the race, they had to look up to see bottom.

"Sure, I could have raved and ranted and broken things in the clubhouse," said George, "but that's not my style. With this club, it wouldn't have done any good. With a young club, maybe that approach would have shaken some people up and done some good."

"Goose (pitching coach Glenn Gregson) and I worked overtime with this bunch, extra practice for work on fundamentals, extra batting

THE CUBS made 202 errors for the season. "A winning team will make between 120 to 140 a season," notes George.

The Cubs had lost 23 one-run games and 25 games were lost after we took a lead into the last three innings. The team was 2-16 on shutouts.

"Frustrated, sure I was frustrated. I told my wife back in mid-season that I had a good mind to go home to Florida and buy a boat. She put an end to that in a hurry, 'If you buy a boat, I'll see less of you than I do now,'" Enright grinned.

"It was a case of no defense and no bullpen. We couldn't hold a lead and we always came up with the costly error or walk when it hurt the most," Enright lamented.

It also may have hurt that Midland started the season with 1982's No. 1 draft choice in all of baseball, Shawon Dunston, the "can't miss shortstop."

Some of the players had the feeling that this was a club assembled just to showcase the talents of Dunston. Perhaps there was substance to the charge, but the club continued to lose even after Dunston was promoted to Iowa.

LOOKING BACK, Enright feels that the season could have been different. "But everything that could go wrong did go wrong."

It started when infielder Jeff Rutledge jumped the club early in the season, "That really hurt," said Enright. "He would have played every day, if he had stayed. He could play any infield position, he showed he could turn the double play and defensively he could have made a big difference in our pitching staff."

Ray Soff, a so-so relief pitcher in 1983, was another club jumper, leaving the team at a time when he was helping the staff as both a relief pitcher and starter, pitching his best ball in two seasons. If he had been in the bullpen all year....

The season wasn't an hour old when third baseman Tony Woods was hit on the wrist by a pitch. Voted one of the top eight major league prospects in the Midwest League last year, Tony sat around for three weeks before it was discovered the wrist was broken. Rehabilitation delayed his return until midseason and it wasn't too long before a shoulder injury took him out for the rest of the season.

WITH RUTLEDGE and Woods, I could have moved Paul Noce to second and played Joe Henderson at first. That would have given us a solid infield. It also would have enabled me to move Jeff Jones to the outfield, where he belongs."

By the final weeks of the season, Enright's pitching staff looked like the survivors of Pickett's Charge. Jorge Carpio, Tandy Charley, Joe Housey, John Huey were invalids.

"I could hear the fans yelling for someone to warmup whenever there were a couple of runners on base in the early innings," Enright relates, "But with Boudreau and Kaufman having worked two of the three previous nights and no one else available, it was a case of having to suffer with the starter as long as possible to get to the late innings where you could go to your bullpen."

"Sure there were bright spots, like Jones' hitting and Troy Chestnut making the jump from A ball to pitch effectively in AA ball. And Darrin Jackson came through. He's a good outfielder defensively, has a strong accurate arm and this year hit more home runs."

Enright notes that some in the organization felt Darrin was too small, but "He's durable, an every day player. He proved that this year."

Woods, on the other hand, is a highly-regarded prospect, "But the question is whether he will be able to play a season. He was hurt much of last year, too. I'll tell you one thing, in the games that Woods played in we were a much better ball club."

As for his own career, "Right now, I'm in a hold pattern. I don't know whether they'll rehire me, fire me or what. Usually, by this time of the year, you have some idea of what they have planned for you next year. All I can say is that I gave my best effort and Goose and I worked hard with what we had.

"Managers are hired to get fired. Somebody's got to catch the brunt."

George adds, "I definitely want a manager's job next year. I have no ill feelings about the club we had this year. They deal and you play the hand the best you can."

Cubs spoiling porridge

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

What's wrong with these Chicago Cubs, anyway? Are they Communists, trying to undermine America by forcing baseball to face the prospect of day games in the playoffs and World Series?

Comrade Jim Frey and his troops have some nerve, fouling up the postseason plans by actually daring to win. Who do these guys think they are? Have they forgotten Chicago's script, rehearsed and perfected over four decades of mediocrity? Win for a while. Lose when it counts.

You want to win, Cubbies? Fine. Win in April when it is not inconvenient for the rest of the brotherhood. Win in May and June, when it's refreshing to have new faces up near the top of the standings. Win in July, if you can survive the punishing diet of mid-summer day games in sunlit Wrigley Field. No problem.

But by August, have the decency to slip into the sunset. And be sure to get out of the way by September, when baseball is preparing for its big playoff and World Series show, an prime-time television extravaganza which obviously requires cover of darkness to be carried off properly.

THE COOPERATIVE Cubs have nearly always followed that formula dutifully, rarely interfering with the postseason party. And so, the absence of candlepower on Chicago's north side never has been a problem for Commissioner Bowie Kuhn. Until now.

These current Cubs are stubborn, though. They refuse to go away and it is becoming increasingly evident that they will be in the playoffs and perhaps even the World Series. If that happens, baseball will have to cope with that hated enemy of the people — day games.

Day baseball obviously is evil. Fans and players can get sunburned. It interferes with television soap operas. Followers might even be forced to have dinner at a decent hour and watch The A-Team instead of the home team. And the TV rights fee goes down about $700,000 per partner for the other clubs if the games are played in the daytime.

CLEARLY, our nation must be protected from that scourge, especially in October, when the chill in the evening air is just perfect for night baseball. Save us, commissioner.

Not to worry. Kuhn has a cure, with a little something for everyone. If the Cubs, bless their obstreperous little hearts, insist on participating, why we'll just change the World Series schedule, open in the American League park and play the middle three games in the Chicago sunshine. If the Cubs disappear, baseball will shift signals and open the Series in the National League, where it was supposed to start originally.

That is fine, except for the participants, hotels and airlines involved in this traveling circus, who may not know until nearly the last minute where the World Series will begin. If you think the Cubs are obstreperous, you ought to try making reservations on that kind of short notice.

A MORE courageous decision would have been for baseball to bite the bullet and open the Series in the National League park, as scheduled, even if it turns out to be venerable Wrigley Field. The Cubs, after all, are dues-paying members of this fraternity, entitled to the rights and privileges the rest of the capitalists collect. And that includes four World Series home games if they happen to win the pennant this year.

Why should the Cubs be penalized because they insist on playing day baseball? What if they really get stubborn and win a couple of pennants in a row? Will we start every Cub World Series in the American League park? Is that in the best interests of baseball, about which Kuhn has always been so concerned?

Golfers don't get to move the ball to their satisfaction. They play the lie. Why can't baseball?

Associated Press

After yet another important September loss incurred by the New York Mets, there was talk about "what might have been."

But the guy doing the talking was Tommy Herr of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Herr drove in four runs with a pair of doubles, including a pivotal three-run shot in the eighth inning, in Tuesday night's 9-5 verdict over New York.

The outcome was critical to the Mets, who had a chance to pick up a game on National League East leader Chicago, a 6-3 loser to Philadelphia earlier in the day. Instead, New York remained seven games behind the Cubs, with each club facing only 17 more regular-season contests.

The victory was the 13th in 15 games for St. Louis, which moved within three games of the second-place Mets. Herr speculated on what such a hot streak might have meant, say, a month ago.

"Sure, if we'd been playing at this pace the past few months, we'd have been in it," Herr said.

With the Cubs racing toward their first post-season berth since 1945, the Cardinals must be content with playing the spoiler. Herr, for one, relishes such a role.

"A lot can be said for teams that are out of it and become spoilers, and that's what we're doing," Herr said. "You can't really figure these things out. We're playing and there's no pressure on us and that's a big thing.

"We've got a lot of gamers on this team. You know they'll be playing every day."

National League

In other National League action, Fernando Valenzuela pitched a six-hitter and slugged a two-run homer as Los Angeles beat Western Division leader San Diego 5-2; Dale Murphy drove in four runs with his 32nd homer and a triple to pace Atlanta's 6-4 victory over Houston; Eric Davis scored three runs and drove in three as Cincinnati stopped San Francisco 7-3; and Pittsburgh beat Montreal 5-1 as Rick Rhoden tossed a five-hitter and extended his personal hitting streak to 10 games.

Reds 7, Giants 3

Davis stroked doubles in the first and third innings and scored each time on hits by Cincinnati player-manager Pete Rose. In the eighth, Davis bounced a shot off the second-deck facade to complete the offensive support for Mario Soto, 15-7, who won his sixth straight decision over two seasons against the Giants. One of the Giants' six hits was a three-run homer by Chili Davis in the sixth inning. Randy Lerch, 5-3, was the loser.

Pirates 5, Expos 1

Johnny Ray's three-run homer in the third was all the support needed by Rhoden, 13-9, who doled out only three hits to the Expos.

Rhoden, 13-9, didn't allow a hit until Tim Raines led off the fourth with a double. Raines moved to third on a fly ball and scored on Andre Dawson's sacrifice fly.

Phillies 6, Cubs 3

Ozzie Virgil's two-out, bases-loaded single in the ninth inning was the key blow as the Phillies wiped out a 3-2 Cub lead. Virgil's grounder was fielded behind second base by Cub shortstop Tom Veryzer, who attempted to flip the ball backhanded to second baseman Ryne Sandberg. But the toss was wild and two runs scampered across the plate.

Charles Hudson, 9-10, picked up the victory, while Lee Smith, 9-6, was the loser. Al Holland hurled the ninth for his 29th save.

Dodgers 5, Padres 2

Valenzuela, 12-15, gave up a pair of hits in the first inning when the Padres scored both their runs. After that, the Dodger lefty allowed just four hits in garnering his 11th complete game.

Ed Whitson, 13-8, didn't allow a hit until the Dodgers struck for three runs in the fifth. After one-out singles by Mike Marshall and Mike Scioscia, German Rivera got the first run home with a sacrifice fly. Valenzuela followed with a two-run homer to right, his third of the season. Pedro Guerrero added a solo homer as the Dodgers scored twice in the ninth.

Braves 6, Astros 4

Murphy's sixth homer of the season in the vast Astrodome established a single-season record for visiting players. The blow gave Atlanta a 2-0 edge, and his two-run triple increased the margin to 4-1 in the third.

Rick Mahler, 10-9, got the win and Gene Garber recorded his eighth save.

Alabama's Perkins rates Flutie as 'Canadian League' quarterback

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The question seemed harmless enough when it was put to Alabama Coach Ray Perkins last week.

"You played five years in the National Football League as a wide receiver, spent four years as an assistant coach with the New England Patriots, one year as offensive coordinator of the San Diego Chargers and four years as head coach of the New York Giants. What's your assessment of Boston College quarterback Doug Flutie as a pro prospect?"

Perkins frowned. He was silent for a few seconds.

"I really don't want to answer that," he said. But he did. Like this:

"He's an ideal Canadian League quarterback. I think he'd have a tough time in the NFL simply because the guys in the NFL are a lot bigger than they are in college — every week. I don't see an NFL team using the same philosophy and schemes (that Boston College does) as far as rollouts and sprint-out passes. He'd make a super Canadian quarterback because of his movement, he's got a real good strong arm, he's very smart and he's highly competitive.

"His only weakness is his height (5-foot-9). Some people think it doesn't hurt you that much, but I guarantee you it does."

NEXT QUESTION. "What if he were five inches taller?"

"You're talking about a different story. The NFL likes its quarterbacks 6-3 or over — the taller the better."

COLLEGE FOCUS

When BC arrived in Birmingham the next day, Flutie had heard of Perkins' remarks. But, of course, he's heard it all before from just about every pro scout.

"That's his opinion," Flutie said. "He's entitled to his opinion. I disagree. Maybe I won't make it in the pros; who knows? But if I don't make it, it won't be because of my size."

Flutie had the last word Saturday night with a 19-for-38 passing performance for 254 yards, including a pair of fourth-down scoring passes, and also ran 5 yards for a touchdown. With nine regular-season games remaining, he has 7,709 career passing yards. The major-college record is 9,614 set last year by Duke's Ben Bennett.

MIAMI Coach Jimmy Johnson saw two games Saturday and they both came out wrong. First, his No. 1-ranked Hurricanes lost to Michigan 22-14; then, son Chad's Miami Columbus High School team lost to Cincinnati Moeller 28-0.

But the day wasn't a total loss. Oklahoma State, the team Johnson left on June 5 to replace Howard Schnellenberger at Miami, shocked 12th-ranked Arizona State 45-3 in Pat Jones' debut as Johnson's successor.

"I was so darn happy," Johnson said. "I called Pat on Sunday and told him, 'Now it's your team.' I felt like Oklahoma State would win, but 45-3 has got to be a surprise. I didn't know how good Arizona State would be, but I knew Oklahoma State would be good. That was probably THE toughest thing (in deciding to change jobs) because I knew Oklahoma State was going to be real good with 16 returning starters.

"I think they've got the best defensive team in the country and their best offensive team since Terry Miller and that group in 1976. Because of their speed, they've got the kind of team that can suffocate you with their defense. Their slowest defensive player is probably (linebacker) Matt Monger, who runs a 4.8 forty. John Washington, the nose guard, ran 4.75 as a 250-pound freshman and he's up to 275. Everyone else has run 4.7 or under.

"The cornerbacks (Stanley Blair and Mark Moore) and one linebacker (Ricky Adams) run 4.5. The defensive ends (Harry Roberts and James Ham) and the free safety (Adam Hinds) run 4.6. The strong safety (Rod Brown) runs 4.65-4.7. One tackle (Leslie O'Neal) has run 4.7 and the other tackle (Rodney Harding) has run 4.7, although he's put on weight and probably is closer to 4.8 now.

"And their running backs — Shawn Jones, Charles Crawford, Kenny Zachary, Thurman Thomas, Curtis Luper, Harold Green — just wear you down."

Jones rushed for almost 1,000 yards last year — his 956 was eighth best in OSU history — but Johnson says Crawford (a sophomore) "is THE guy. He weighs 230 and runs the forty in under 4.6." Zachary, a 204-pounder, is even faster; he has a 4.32 forty to his credit and won the 100-meter dash at the Kansas Relays last spring in 10.36 on a cold, damp day. In high school, he ran 100 yards in 9.28 and 200 yards in 20.5. Thomas (4.4), Luper (4.43) and Green (4.5) were among the top prep backs in Texas last year.

The Cowboys barely lost to Nebraska 14-10 last year and led Oklahoma 20-3 with 10 minutes left, only to lose 21-20 on Tim Lashar's 46-yard field goal with 1:14 left after an onside kick bounced off the hands of an Oklahoma State player at the OSU 49-yard line.

"There's no doubt in my mind that they were a better team than Oklahoma last year," Johnson said.

"They were not as good as Nebraska, but barely lost. I think they're a better team than Oklahoma again, and they may be up with Nebraska. They probably won't be as physical (as some teams), but they can run with anybody. They can offset size with their speed."

WHEN ARMY opens its season on Saturday against Colgate, the starting fullback in the Cadets' new Wishbone offense will be junior Doug Black from Salado, Texas. Cut from the squad two years ago as a 180-pound freshman linebacker, Black played eight-man intramural football the last two years, built himself up to 205 pounds, increased his speed in the 40 by three-tenths of a second and was easily the top surprise of spring practice.

COWBOYS

BUT THERE are the other signs.

Like the other White, Danny, standing next to his locker telling anyone who asks that he's not satisfied with being the Cowboys' punter while he waits for Gary Hogeboom to have a couple of bad games that might put him back at quarterback.

And the mistakes, characteristic for a young team, which the Cowboys are. There were five turnovers in the opener against the Rams — Dallas was lucky the Rams could score only 13 points, allowing the Cowboys to come away with a 20-13 victory.

But the defense, the more solid half of the team so far, couldn't do much about the Giants last Sunday, in part because of the kinds of mistakes that Dallas teams just don't make.

Trailing 14-0, midway through the second quarter, Dallas had the ball on the Giant six, third and 3. The anticipated touchdown makes it 14-7, anybody's game, probably Dallas' given the history of the teams involved.

Whoops. Dallas time out. Somehow, two players have run off the field and only one has run on, leaving Hogeboom with only 10 players.

Time back in and Dallas appears in a strange formation. Three backs set right, nobody behind the center. Hogeboom frantically waves and Tim Newsome comes back and sets up behind him. Meanwhile, Ron Springs is going forward as the ball is being snapped. A flag drops.

Worse, is the failure to block Lawrence Taylor, the Giant who must be blocked before all others. He clobbers Hogeboom as he sets up, the ball is jarred loose, and bounces up into the arms of Giant linebacker Andy Headen, who cruises 81 yards into the end zone. Suddenly it's 21-0 instead of 14-7 and the game is irrevocably gone.

WHAT HAPPENED? Every team that plays the Giants prepares specially for Taylor, generally using a guard or tackle to block him because he can't be stopped by a back. Did Dallas? "We know he's there," said Landry, "but we make no special preparation."

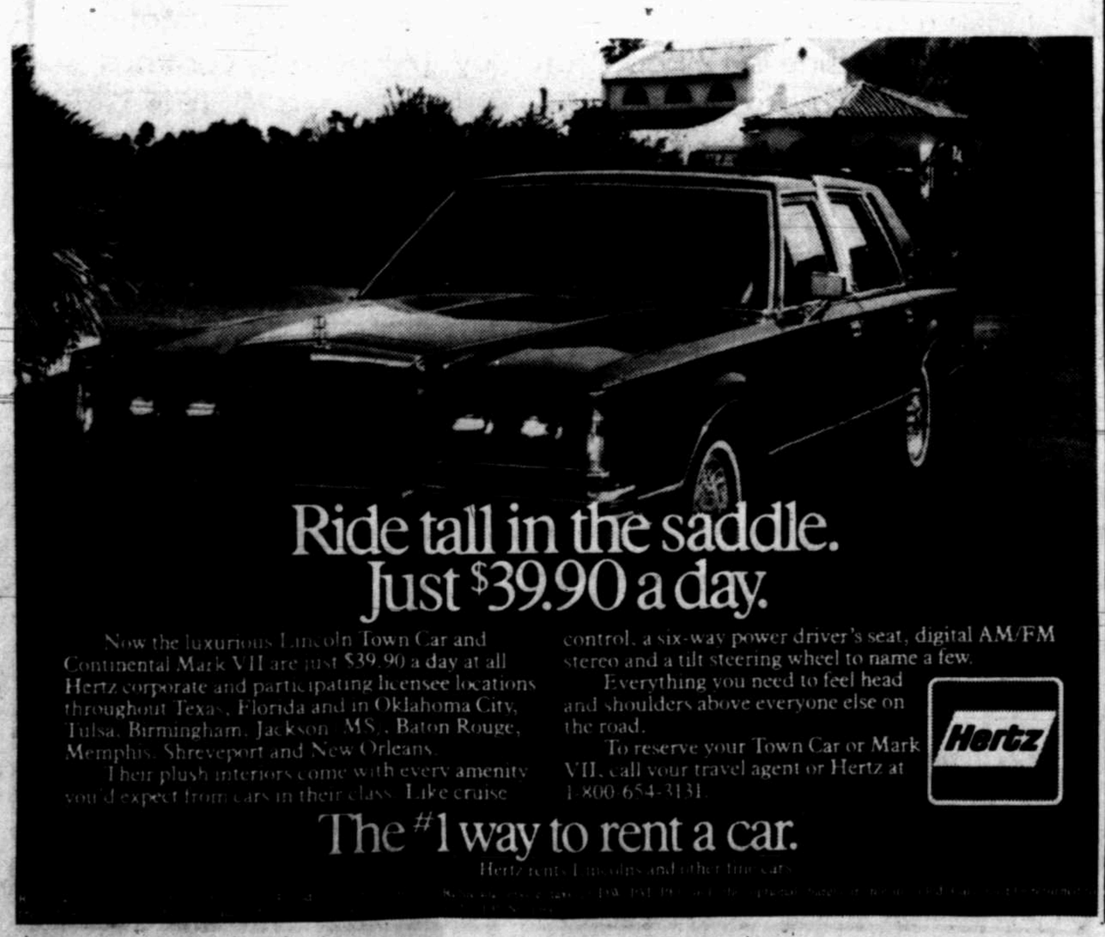

A few minutes later, Taylor made an almost identical play, sacking Hogeboom and forcing a fumble on the Giant 10 that ended another Cowboys threat. This time, tight end Doug Cospie, flanked out, was assigned to block him, coming back toward the middle as Taylor slices between the tackle and guard. Fat chance.

"I'm never going to get Lawrence coming from four yards away," Cosbie grumbled. "He's too quick if he's lined up in front of me. The big thing was that we didn't make any adjustments to it and that's a little silly."

Nobody expects the Cowboys to fold. But for Dallas, even 9-7 is a fold.

As Dave Jennings was saying ...

Associated Press

After yet another important September loss incurred by the New York Mets, there was talk about "what might have been."

But the guy doing the talking was Tommy Herr of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Herr drove in four runs with a pair of doubles, including a pivotal three-run shot in the eighth inning, in Tuesday night's 9-5 verdict over New York.

The outcome was critical to the Mets, who had a chance to pick up a game on National League East leader Chicago, a 6-3 loser to Philadelphia earlier in the day. Instead, New York remained seven games behind the Cubs, with each club facing only 17 more regular-season contests.

The victory was the 13th in 15 games for St. Louis, which moved within three games of the second-place Mets. Herr speculated on what such a hot streak might have meant, say, a month ago.

"Sure, if we'd been playing at this pace the past few months, we'd have been in it," Herr said.

With the Cubs racing toward their first post-season berth since 1945, the Cardinals must be content with playing the spoiler. Herr, for one, relishes such a role.

"A lot can be said for teams that are out of it and become spoilers, and that's what we're doing," Herr said. "You can't really figure these things out. We're playing and there's no pressure on us and that's a big thing.

"We've got a lot of gamers on this team. You know they'll be playing every day."

National League

In other National League action, Fernando Valenzuela pitched a six-hitter and slugged a two-run homer as Los Angeles beat Western Division leader San Diego 5-2; Dale Murphy drove in four runs with his 32nd homer and a triple to pace Atlanta's 6-4 victory over Houston; Eric Davis scored three runs and drove in three as Cincinnati stopped San Francisco 7-3; and Pittsburgh beat Montreal 5-1 as Rick Rhoden tossed a five-hitter and extended his personal hitting streak to 10 games.

Reds 7, Giants 3

Davis stroked doubles in the first and third innings and scored each time on hits by Cincinnati player-manager Pete Rose. In the eighth, Davis bounced a shot off the second-deck facade to complete the offensive support for Mario Soto, 15-7, who won his sixth straight decision over two seasons against the Giants. One of the Giants' six hits was a three-run homer by Chili Davis in the sixth inning. Randy Lerch, 5-3, was the loser.

Pirates 5, Expos 1

Johnny Ray's three-run homer in the third was all the support needed by Rhoden, 13-9, who doled out only three hits to the Expos.

Rhoden, 13-9, didn't allow a hit until Tim Raines led off the fourth with a double. Raines moved to third on a fly ball and scored on Andre Dawson's sacrifice fly.

Phillies 6, Cubs 3

Ozzie Virgil's two-out, bases-loaded single in the ninth inning was the key blow as the Phillies wiped out a 3-2 Cub lead. Virgil's grounder was fielded behind second base by Cub shortstop Tom Veryzer, who attempted to flip the ball backhanded to second baseman Ryne Sandberg. But the toss was wild and two runs scampered across the plate.

Charles Hudson, 9-10, picked up the victory, while Lee Smith, 9-6, was the loser. Al Holland hurled the ninth for his 29th save.

Dodgers 5, Padres 2

Valenzuela, 12-15, gave up a pair of hits in the first inning when the Padres scored both their runs. After that, the Dodger lefty allowed just four hits in garnering his 11th complete game.

Ed Whitson, 13-8, didn't allow a hit until the Dodgers struck for three runs in the fifth. After one-out singles by Mike Marshall and Mike Scioscia, German Rivera got the first run home with a sacrifice fly. Valenzuela followed with a two-run homer to right, his third of the season. Pedro Guerrero added a solo homer as the Dodgers scored twice in the ninth.

Braves 6, Astros 4

Murphy's sixth homer of the season in the vast Astrodome established a single-season record for visiting players. The blow gave Atlanta a 2-0 edge, and his two-run triple increased the margin to 4-1 in the third.

Rick Mahler, 10-9, got the win and Gene Garber recorded his eighth save.

Alabama's Perkins rates Flutie as 'Canadian League' quarterback

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The question seemed harmless enough when it was put to Alabama Coach Ray Perkins last week.

"You played five years in the National Football League as a wide receiver, spent four years as an assistant coach with the New England Patriots, one year as offensive coordinator of the San Diego Chargers and four years as head coach of the New York Giants. What's your assessment of Boston College quarterback Doug Flutie as a pro prospect?"

Perkins frowned. He was silent for a few seconds.

"I really don't want to answer that," he said. But he did. Like this:

"He's an ideal Canadian League quarterback. I think he'd have a tough time in the NFL simply because the guys in the NFL are a lot bigger than they are in college — every week. I don't see an NFL team using the same philosophy and schemes (that Boston College does) as far as rollouts and sprint-out passes. He'd make a super Canadian quarterback because of his movement, he's got a real good strong arm, he's very smart and he's highly competitive.

"His only weakness is his height (5-foot-9). Some people think it doesn't hurt you that much, but I guarantee you it does."

NEXT QUESTION. "What if he were five inches taller?"

"You're talking about a different story. The NFL likes its quarterbacks 6-3 or over — the taller the better."

COLLEGE FOCUS

When BC arrived in Birmingham the next day, Flutie had heard of Perkins' remarks. But, of course, he's heard it all before from just about every pro scout.

"That's his opinion," Flutie said. "He's entitled to his opinion. I disagree. Maybe I won't make it in the pros; who knows? But if I don't make it, it won't be because of my size."

Flutie had the last word Saturday night with a 19-for-38 passing performance for 254 yards, including a pair of fourth-down scoring passes, and also ran 5 yards for a touchdown. With nine regular-season games remaining, he has 7,709 career passing yards. The major-college record is 9,614 set last year by Duke's Ben Bennett.

MIAMI Coach Jimmy Johnson saw two games Saturday and they both came out wrong. First, his No. 1-ranked Hurricanes lost to Michigan 22-14; then, son Chad's Miami Columbus High School team lost to Cincinnati Moeller 28-0.

But the day wasn't a total loss. Oklahoma State, the team Johnson left on June 5 to replace Howard Schnellenberger at Miami, shocked 12th-ranked Arizona State 45-3 in Pat Jones' debut as Johnson's successor.

"I was so darn happy," Johnson said. "I called Pat on Sunday and told him, 'Now it's your team.' I felt like Oklahoma State would win, but 45-3 has got to be a surprise. I didn't know how good Arizona State would be, but I knew Oklahoma State would be good. That was probably THE toughest thing (in deciding to change jobs) because I knew Oklahoma State was going to be real good with 16 returning starters.

"I think they've got the best defensive team in the country and their best offensive team since Terry Miller and that group in 1976. Because of their speed, they've got the kind of team that can suffocate you with their defense. Their slowest defensive player is probably (linebacker) Matt Monger, who runs a 4.8 forty. John Washington, the nose guard, ran 4.75 as a 250-pound freshman and he's up to 275. Everyone else has run 4.7 or under.

"The cornerbacks (Stanley Blair and Mark Moore) and one linebacker (Ricky Adams) run 4.5. The defensive ends (Harry Roberts and James Ham) and the free safety (Adam Hinds) run 4.6. The strong safety (Rod Brown) runs 4.65-4.7. One tackle (Leslie O'Neal) has run 4.7 and the other tackle (Rodney Harding) has run 4.7, although he's put on weight and probably is closer to 4.8 now.

"And their running backs — Shawn Jones, Charles Crawford, Kenny Zachary, Thurman Thomas, Curtis Luper, Harold Green — just wear you down."

Jones rushed for almost 1,000 yards last year — his 956 was eighth best in OSU history — but Johnson says Crawford (a sophomore) "is THE guy. He weighs 230 and runs the forty in under 4.6." Zachary, a 204-pounder, is even faster; he has a 4.32 forty to his credit and won the 100-meter dash at the Kansas Relays last spring in 10.36 on a cold, damp day. In high school, he ran 100 yards in 9.28 and 200 yards in 20.5. Thomas (4.4), Luper (4.43) and Green (4.5) were among the top prep backs in Texas last year.

The Cowboys barely lost to Nebraska 14-10 last year and led Oklahoma 20-3 with 10 minutes left, only to lose 21-20 on Tim Lashar's 46-yard field goal with 1:14 left after an onside kick bounced off the hands of an Oklahoma State player at the OSU 49-yard line.

"There's no doubt in my mind that they were a better team than Oklahoma last year," Johnson said.

"They were not as good as Nebraska, but barely lost. I think they're a better team than Oklahoma again, and they may be up with Nebraska. They probably won't be as physical (as some teams), but they can run with anybody. They can offset size with their speed."

WHEN ARMY opens its season on Saturday against Colgate, the starting fullback in the Cadets' new Wishbone offense will be junior Doug Black from Salado, Texas. Cut from the squad two years ago as a 180-pound freshman linebacker, Black played eight-man intramural football the last two years, built himself up to 205 pounds, increased his speed in the 40 by three-tenths of a second and was easily the top surprise of spring practice.

BUT THERE are the other signs.

Like the other White, Danny, standing next to his locker telling anyone who asks that he's not satisfied with being the Cowboys' punter while he waits for Gary Hogeboom to have a couple of bad games that might put him back at quarterback.

And the mistakes, characteristic for a young team, which the Cowboys are. There were five turnovers in the opener against the Rams — Dallas was lucky the Rams could score only 13 points, allowing the Cowboys to come away with a 20-13 victory.

But the defense, the more solid half of the team so far, couldn't do much about the Giants last Sunday, in part because of the kinds of mistakes that Dallas teams just don't make.

Trailing 14-0, midway through the second quarter, Dallas had the ball on the Giant six, third and 3. The anticipated touchdown makes it 14-7, anybody's game, probably Dallas' given the history of the teams involved.

Whoops. Dallas time out. Somehow, two players have run off the field and only one has run on, leaving Hogeboom with only 10 players.

Time back in and Dallas appears in a strange formation. Three backs set right, nobody behind the center. Hogeboom frantically waves and Tim Newsome comes back and sets up behind him. Meanwhile, Ron Springs is going forward as the ball is being snapped. A flag drops.

Worse, is the failure to block Lawrence Taylor, the Giant who must be blocked before all others. He clobbers Hogeboom as he sets up, the ball is jarred loose, and bounces up into the arms of Giant linebacker Andy Headen, who cruises 81 yards into the end zone. Suddenly it's 21-0 instead of 14-7 and the game is irrevocably gone.

WHAT HAPPENED? Every team that plays the Giants prepares specially for Taylor, generally using a guard or tackle to block him because he can't be stopped by a back. Did Dallas? "We know he's there," said Landry, "but we make no special preparation."

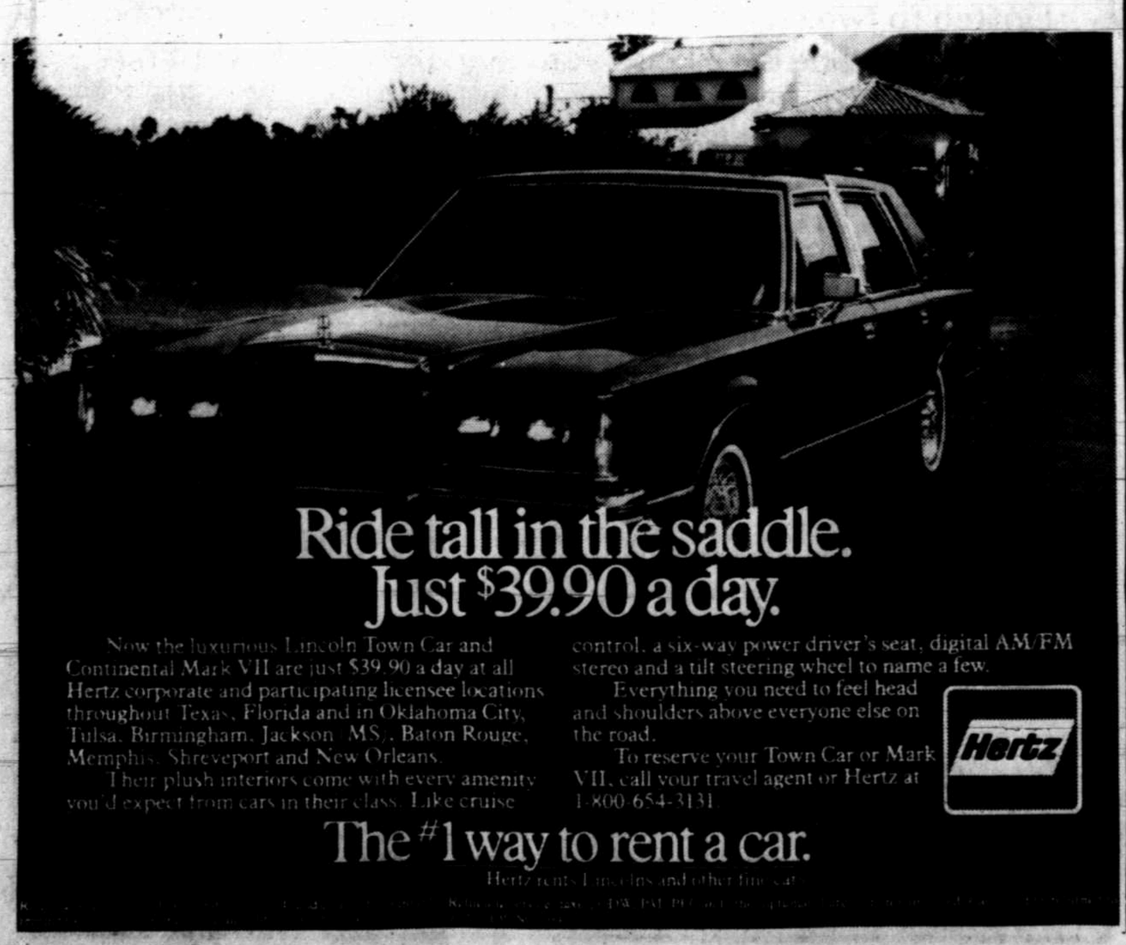

A few minutes later, Taylor made an almost identical play, sacking Hogeboom and forcing a fumble on the Giant 10 that ended another Cowboys threat. This time, tight end Doug Cospie, flanked out, was assigned to block him, coming back toward the middle as Taylor slices between the tackle and guard. Fat chance.

"I'm never going to get Lawrence coming from four yards away," Cosbie grumbled. "He's too quick if he's lined up in front of me. The big thing was that we didn't make any adjustments to it and that's a little silly."

Nobody expects the Cowboys to fold. But for Dallas, even 9-7 is a fold.

As Dave Jennings was saying ...

Isn't this what the Giants usually do?

Country stars to honor woman who aided musicians

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Waylon Jennings, Willie Nelson and Hank Williams Jr. will join a host of country music stars in a television special commemorating a woman who housed and fed aspiring musicians.

The special, to be taped Oct. 10-11 at the Grand Ole Opry House and to air in 1985, will honor Sue Brewer, who helped musicians, including Jennings and Kris Kristofferson, before she died of cancer in 1981.

Nelson

Williams

Also taking part in the two-hour show will be George Jones, Kristofferson, Roger Miller, Webb Pierce and Faron Young.

Proceeds from the concert, titled "The Door is Always Open," will establish a fund to help new songwriters.

Ms. Brewer, who worked as a columnist for Music City News, a monthly country music publication, and as a manager of a nightclub in Nashville, "was a friend of a lot of people in this town, especially new songwriters," Jennings said. "Her door was always open."

DECATUR, Ala. (AP) — Actor Dean Jones, best known for his roles in Walt Disney films, plans to return to his hometown here to open a one-man religious play, "St. John in Exile."

"I'm excited about coming back home to start this tour," said Jones, 50. "It's an appropriate place, a kind of offering to my hometown."

While Jones is in town for the Oct. 18-20 run of the play, which features the 86-year-old apostle reflecting on his life, a camera crew will tape a television special showing the actor kicking around his home turf.

• • •

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Actor Tony Randall says it shouldn't be necessary to beg for money to support a Shakespearean theater group like Randall Duk Kim's American Players Theater.

But it is, so he does.

Randall, who played the character Felix Unger in "The Odd Couple" television series, appeared as featured guest at a $100-a-plate dinner to benefit Kim's theater group, based at nearby Spring Green, and its acting academy. About 150 people attended the Monday night affair.

"It shouldn't be necessary, for something this worthwhile, to have to travel halfway across the country to beg people to give money," Randall said.

The veteran star of Broadway, movies and television said the best way to keep classical theater alive is through government support, as is the case in many European countries.

NEW YORK (AP) — George Will has been named commentator for ABC's "World News Tonight," where he will provide the program's first regular commentary since 1978.

Will, a Pulitzer-prize winner whose regular appearances on the news program began Monday, has served as an ABC news analyst for "This Week With David Brinkley," "Nightline" and ABC News special political coverage since 1981.

Will, the author of a syndicated column that appears in more than 350 newspapers, became a contributing editor to Newsweek magazine in 1976 and was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for commentary in 1977.

DALLAS (AP) — Samuel Bert, the man credited with inventing the snow cone ice machine and a fixture at the State Fair of Texas for 65 years, is dead at the age of 88.

Bert died Sunday at Baylor University Medical Center of complications from a fall that broke his hip two weeks ago, said his son, Nick.

State Fair officials say Bert worked at the fair from at least 1919 to 1983.

Miss America wants to top Michael Jackson

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — With the end of her short reign just days away, Miss America 1984, Suzette Charles, says she wants to become more popular than singing superstar Michael Jackson.

"I know I can do it. I don't think, I know," said Miss Charles, who stepped in as Miss America in July when Vanessa Williams resigned after a scandal over nude photographs of her and another woman published in Penthouse magazine.

Miss Charles told the 51 hopefuls in this year's pageant they should use the title as "a means to an end, a stepping stone." She said the title has given her "the national exposure to become an international entertainer."

"It was going, but it wasn't taking off," Miss Charles, 21, said of her career. "Now it's almost like the two months has given me a chance to prove myself.

"There was a time when we sent a (demonstration tape) to CBS Records in Los Angeles and they said, sure, they'd listen to it. Now I just walk right in to have a meeting with them," she said.

A seasoned entertainer, Miss Charles was performing with singers Lou Rawls and Stevie Wonder at gaming halls here before she received the crown.

She said she looks forward to shedding the girl-next-door image that accompanies being Miss America after she crowns her successor on Saturday night. And that now it is time to move on.

"I want to sell more records than Michael Jackson," said Miss Charles. "I know what I want. I know various ways of getting what I want. But I don't think I'm ruthless."

Miss Charles said she has already signed to appear in eight episodes of the ABC soap opera "Loving."

Miss Charles was at the center of attention on Tuesday night as she rode a float in what a city police officer called "the largest parade we have had in the city in 20 years, and it's the most colorful."

The 51 contestants rode in small convertible cars as 23 marching bands, 25 floats and a camel made their way along the boardwalk.

Earlier Tuesday, attention was focused on Miss Ohio, Melissa Bradley, who said she hoped that disclosure she was charged with shoplifting two years ago will not hurt her chances in Saturday's pageant.

Miss Bradley, 23, was charged with two counts of petty theft after two incidents at Ontario, Ohio, department stores, said her attorney, D. Kim Murray. Miss Bradley pleaded innocent, then later entered a plea of no contest to the charges, which were dropped.

Albert A. Marks Jr., executive director of the contest, said, "There is no way in the world we will stop her from competing."

Woman charged with petty theft of torch

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A woman has been charged with petty theft for allegedly stealing an Olympic torch from a 12-year-old handicapped boy during a photo session at City Hall, a city attorney said.

Deputy City Attorney Charles Goldenberg said Tuesday that Joann Gonzales Pierro was ordered to appear in Municipal Court on Oct. 10 for arraignment on the single misdemeanor count.

Jerry Ortega Jr.'s torch disappeared after he entrusted it to a woman spectator so he could help another handicapped child down the steps during the Aug. 29 photo session for a group of torch runners and Mayor Tom Bradley.

Jerry, who lost most of his left foot in a traffic accident nine years ago, had carried the torch one kilometer through Griffith Park as representative of the Hollywood Boys Club, which paid the $3,000 fee.

Pass	2 ♡	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡.

When you are dealt a miserable collection of tickets, it is all too easy to lose interest in the hand. But one of the fascinations of bridge is you never know when you are going to find yourself in the spotlight. Consider this deal.

Note South's pass at his second turn. When partner redoubles, it is usually correct to leave the next action to him, because he might want to double the opponents rather than go on bidding. Here North's redouble was based on spade support, and South had enough to leap to game.

The defenders started with three rounds of hearts, declarer ruffing. Obviously, the problem was to avoid losing two club tricks. Declarer drew two rounds of trumps and was delighted when both defenders followed. Then he set about stripping the red suits from his hand and dummy.

The last heart was ruffed, the ace-king of diamonds were cashed and a diamond was ruffed on the board. Now, declarer led a club.

If East was one of those players who dozed off at the table because he felt that his hand was not going to affect the outcome, declarer would have gotten home. East would lazily play a low club, declarer would insert the eight and West would be end played. He would either have to yield a ruff-sluff or return a club into declarer's ace-queen tenace.

Fortunately for the defenders, East was on the ball. He inserted the 10 of clubs! Declarer tried the finesse, but West won the king and returned the jack. His nine of clubs took the setting trick.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. THE BETTER HALF

"This toothpaste is for people who don't have time for breakfast! It tastes like scrambled eggs!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, September 13, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actresses Jacqueline Bisset and Claudette Colbert, Mel Torme, Blue Grass king Bill Monroe and Nell Carter of "Gimme A Break" celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: Army surgeon Dr. Walter Reed, singer Dick Haymes, writer J.B. Priestley and producer Leland Hayward. Current economic conditions favor your efforts. Strike a better balance between work and play. Variety is both the spice of life and a source of inspiration. Better "follow up" is the key to greater business success. Curb a tendency to let things slide. The sale or purchase of a home gives you new security.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Others are willing to follow your lead. Show more trust and you gain greater cooperation. An excellent day for making a fresh start. A new investment will pay off handsomely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Certain people try to make new demands on your time and resources. Stand up for your rights. Kindred spirits reach out to each other. Use your special talents to better advantage.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Discuss legal matters with mate or partner. A good day to sign documents and agreements. A business trip proves profitable. Improve your image by imitating the ways of someone you admire.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An attractive newcomer makes overtures. You may not be ready to respond. Keep your distance for a while. Work is unusually demanding. Spend the evening reviewing and revising your plans.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Travel plans solidify. Bargains abound for those who can afford to buy now. Seek professional advice if looking for new investment opportunities. Group activities are favored this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use any extra money to reduce your debt. Someone who flatters you may have an ulterior motive. Protect your reputation by dealing only with people who have proven track records.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Behind-the-scenes activities yield fine results. Be willing to make intelligent compromises. Someone you have taken for granted is losing his or her patience. Make amends immediately.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Use a talent that you have neglected recently. Higher-ups will be deeply impressed by your versatility. Take a chance! You are lucky in both contests and love.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Changes at work could leave you feeling uncertain. Keep a low profile. You need to find out someone's motives before making any major decisions. Romance looks very promising.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Any changes announced today should work to your benefit. Heed your intuition. This is not the time to borrow or lend money. A late afternoon phone call clarifies a personal situation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An early morning business conference proves very successful. Emphasize the need for teamwork and you can make rapid financial progress. A college student is delighted to find a compatible roommate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Adopt a more practical approach to business and financial problems and you will come up with effective solutions. Ingenious ideas and inventions run through your mind. Write them down! Postpone travel.

What's in a name? Could be lawsuit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Shakespeare tells us that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet, but can you picture irascible Archie popping off as Wally Bunker?

The name Archie Bunker has become such an indelible part of the character that it would be difficult to imagine him with another name.

But when Norman Lear was first developing "All in the Family" more than a dozen years ago, the name was Wally Bunker. (In the original British series "Till Death Do Us Part," his name was Alf Garnett.)

"I'd always wanted to call him Archibald, but people kept telling me no one in Queens would be named Archibald," said Lear. "They said it sounded too English. We used Wally in the first script, but I didn't want that name."

Lear was saved by Kellam deForest, whose deForest Research Inc. checks out character names for most television series and movies to be certain that they are legally safe to use.

"We found there was actually a Wally Bunker living in Queens," said deForest. Thus, Archie Bunker entered television history.

Bunker was selected as his last name because of what Lear felt the name implied. "Our selection came out of the word 'bunk' and all that the word means. Archie was dishing out bunk."

Character names on television come from many sources, not the least of which are the friends of the writers and producers and from street names and geographical places.

DeForest said he discourages the use of friends' names because it could backfire. He cites an incident from the 1940s when a writer named a movie villain after his best friend. By the time the movie came out writer and friend had become enemies and the former friend collected a sizable settlement.

"If it's a work of fiction we check the names in all the purviews that a name can fall in," said deForest. "The location of the story, the occupation of the character, and all the spelling variations."

DeForest said his staff uses telephone directories. Other sources, he said, are trade secrets.

Executive producer Barney Rosenzweig said when he first came up with the concept of CBS' "Cagney & Lacey" he wanted everyone to know that it was the first women's buddy movie.

"The original title was 'Newman & Redford,'" he said, in homage to the male buddy movies of Paul Newman and Robert Redford.

"We wanted to make it clear what we were doing, but the legal department said we couldn't use that title. So we came up with the name of 'Cagney & Lacey.' We picked Chris Cagney because it's a hard, tough-sounding name, which fits Chris' character. Mary Beth Lacey has a softer sound, which suits the softer nature of the character."

Rosenzweig said he also used names in the series that give a quick ethnic identification. "Al Samuels is a New York Jew," he said. "Paul LaGuardia is an Italian Catholic. Victor Isbecki is Polish."

Contrary to deForest's rule, Rosenzweig said he frequently used the name of a friend or a place when he's in a hurry to get a name cleared.

"We had a story about Cagney and Lacey investigating a pornography ring," Rosenzweig said. "They talked about some X-rated movies, although you didn't see the movies. I named one of the porno stars after my attorney. He got a kick out of being a sex symbol in an X-rated movie."

'Plumber' fixing to make dream reality

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BURBANK, Calif. — Josephine, the Lady Plumber, is back, but she's fixing far more than the kitchen sink.

Former child star Jane Withers, known more recently as a queen of television commercials through her Comet cleanser role, is fixing to realize a dream.

As she explained it: "I've waited nearly 40 years for what... will happen right here on this lot."

She and Chuck Rice, owner of ColorHouse color processing company, are creating a place next door to his company for her production company and collection of miniatures and more than 8,000 dolls.

The new building also will enable her to get her dolls ready to go on display. Until now, they have been stored in nine different warehouses throughout Los Angeles, and many have been put away since 1947.

"Then there were only 3,500 dolls," Jane (who wants everybody to call her by her first name) remembered. "When I married Bill Moss, he didn't want to see all these dolls around, so my mother and I wrapped each one individually" and put them away.

During World War II, 2,500 to 3,000 of the dolls went on a cross-country railroad tour to raise funds toward the war effort.

Her collection includes some Jane Withers dolls, made by Madame Alexander, and other dolls also made by famous doll makers along with one made by herself. In 1937, she made dolls all year long and dressed them from scraps she picked up in the wardrobe of 20th Century Fox for Santa to give to 400 children at Christmas.

Jane also has dolls from every country, including one given to her as a child that was unearthed in Egypt during an archeological dig.

She has dolls from one-sixteenth of an inch to seven feet in height.

She has dolls made of toothpicks, dried apple cores and prunes, stockings, cornhusks, beads, shells, clothespins.

She also has a W. C. Fields doll and the actor's hat from the 1934 movie, "It's a Gift," in which Fields picked her out of a crowd of 130 kids to appear with him in a scene. "It's one of my earliest memories," she said, "and I told him years later, after I became a star, 'It would mean so much to me to have that hat!' So he gave it to me."

After consolidating and uncrating the dolls in a large warehouse she is subleasing until her Burbank building is ready, she plans to create exhibits to go on international tours.

"I want to feed and clothe the children of the world who really need help," she said, "and the monies from the tours will also go for medical research; abused, battered, autistic, mentally retarded and blind children, and guide dogs for blind adults and children."

After she stopped making TV commercials in 1975, she devoted most of the time until recently to her mother, who suffered from cancer for 8½ years before her death in August 1983. Jane's father died in 1948.

"My mother (Ruth Withers) taught me to visualize (completed goals)," she explained.

Jane's mother visualized her daughter as a star even before Jane was born April 12, 1926. In fact, her mother gave her the name Jane because, she said, "she thought it would look right on a marquee."

Then she oversaw her child's career from the time Jane started working on stage at the age of 2½ until she got married after she turned 21 and left show business for awhile. Jane had her own radio show in her native Atlanta, Ga., from the ages of 3 to 5½ before coming to California in 1932, becoming the brat who made life impossible for Shirley Temple in the 1934 movie, "Bright Eyes," and starring as a child in dozens of movies as Little Miss Fixit and then as a teen-ager in 20 films.

Jane resumed her career after divorcing Texas rancher and oilman Moss in 1954.

Just before her divorce, she was paralyzed with rheumatoid arthritis. Doctors told her that it would be 2½ to 3 years before she would walk again, but she remembers saying, "I can't just lie here. I have kids to raise and things I'm going to do."

It took nearly 10 months for her "to move properly again," she said, and then in January 1955, she met director George Stevens, who cast her in the movie, "Giant," and Kenneth Errair, one of the Four Freshmen singing group, whom she married eight months later.

About eight years after that, when her husband decided to broaden his studies in real estate and land development to include tax consultation and law, Jane decided it would be best if she went back to work again and became Josephine, the Lady Plumber.

Miami Serpentarium slithers to a close

MIAMI (AP) — For 38 years, the tacky, yet menacing hooded cobra statue has perched atop the Miami Serpentarium, luring passers-by on U.S. 1 inside to marvel as Bill Haast and his snakes perform.

But besieged by taxes, inflation and the lagging tourist industry, the Serpentarium will close its doors sometime this fall.

The building will be destroyed to make way for a shopping center, and the haunting statue will move to South Miami High School, home of the Fighting Cobras.

Haast will find new homes for the turtles, iguanas, alligators and non-poisonous snakes, but the venomous snakes will head to Salt Lake City to begin new careers with Haast.

"That's progress, I guess," Haast said in a recent interview. "Taxes, insurance and everything is going up, and tourism is declining..."

Haast isn't really upset about the situation. The move is something he has been dreaming about for years. The economic situation just gives him a good excuse to drop the Serpentarium burden and move into a laboratory atmosphere, rather than continue as a tourist attraction.

"I'm going to be able to devote all of my time to what was the purpose of the Serpentarium — the production of venom and venom research. Now, I'll be able to go that way 100 percent," said the spry 74-year-old, anticipating a long stay in Salt Lake City, where he will work side-by-side with University of Utah scientists.

When Haast, a high school dropout with no medical schooling, began collecting venom for research purposes nearly 40 years ago, he knew that making a living would be difficult. To pay the bills, he put his snake handling skills on display.

For their Serpentarium admission, the curious can view virtually lifeless snakes in display cases or watch various less dangerous reptiles loll about in landscaped pits.

But what they really come for is to marvel at Haast's skills. After each short tour of the grounds, Haast pulls out the cobras. Carefully hanging on to the other end of the snake, he deploys his free hand behind the creature's fanned hood. With a lightning quick motion, he gains a safe hold just below the jaw.

Haast, bitten 141 times by deadly snakes, explains that the display isn't all show. By catching the snakes this way, he can drain more venom out of them. And venom is his real reward, not the applause or the tourist dollars.

"I enjoy (the show biz atmosphere of the performance). It's a challenge. But it's not so much for the public. The whole purpose is to get the venom," he said.

Though Haast built up an immunity to the snakes' deadly poison by injecting a mixture of diluted venoms into his blood stream, a couple of the bites have nearly been fatal.

Architect's widow steers Taliesen West

By ROBERTA LANDMAN

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — A bust of Frank Lloyd Wright keeps watch in a courtyard off Olgivana Lloyd Wright's sitting room at Taliesin West, the books and mementoes lining its walls echoing the recognition and hopes of the complex itself.

Shawl-draped and seated regally in a lived-in room decorated with Wright-designed draperies and Wright-designed carpeting, the widow of the famed architect is a gentle reminder of history past and history yet in the making.

Wright's third wife and now in her 80s, she is head of the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation, the organization composed of the architectural school and the architectural practice, Taliesin Associated Architects.

And she is the recognized driving spirit behind Taliesin, continuing the work she and her husband began more than 50 years ago. The American Institute of Architects recently cited Mrs. Wright for her "inspired commitment and loving efforts (that) have kept the spirit of Taliesin alive and flourishing in the Arizona desert and in the hearts of people everywhere."

It was she who created the idea for Taliesin Fellowship, the original name for the school of architecture, to promote and continue Wright's work.

"Why don't you leave living architects who will project on and on into the future? With time, here it will be passed generation to generation and go on and on forever, as long as there is any culture left."

— Olgivana Lloyd Wright

"Why don't you leave living architects who will project on and on into the future?" she recalls telling her husband. "With time, here it will be passed generation to generation and go on and on forever, as long as there is any culture left."

Without perpetuation of the principles behind Wright's success, his rationale of "organic architecture," another Wright genius might not "appear again for another 300 years," Mrs. Wright surmises.

What is organic architecture?

"Everybody was worried about that," she says, shaking her head in memory of when the idea's newness stirred controversy.

And she explains that it is "something belonging to the ground, to the environment, to the place."

The formal area of Mrs. Wright's living quarters, especially, appears to belong to, rather than contradict, the desert and rock environment.

There is an opulence in the long expanse of dining-living room combination, but it is an opulence of what man has done with nature — rugged stone walls softened by dazzling natural light angled from above.

Furnishings include the traditional, a Steinway piano, and the untraditional — linear semi-hemispheric-backed dining room chairs Mrs. Wright designed for a restaurant in Wisconsin. Some were requisitioned for her home.

Originals, difficult to imitate — Wright, his widow says, disapproved of imitation. And as with those he taught directly, she adds, the students at Taliesin still are taught never to imitate, that there must be "nothing transitory, nothing quick" in their designs.

"My husband was a man of extreme common sense combined with a marvelous flight of the mind in every direction," she says. "But common sense was always there."

Today, though she appears fragile, it is Mrs. Wright who inspires and exercises common sense, she who gives final approval on architectural designs.

She recalls that Wright also always sought her opinion of his designs — and that "if I criticized, he got angry."

Yet the ability to criticize discriminately, she once told her husband, was "only what I've learned from you." She says she was Wright's "first and foremost student."

Mrs. Wright, who was a student of philosophy when she met Wright, does not call herself a philosopher but says she does have "a philosophical attitude."

A writer as well as musical composer, she is author of several books about her husband and his career, and she is at work on her autobiography.

She was educated in czarist Russia and was of aristocratic background. Her father, who was chief justice of the supreme court of Montenegro, stressed reading and the value of education to his youngest daughter.

From reading to her father after he became blind, she developed an interest in philosophy and literature.

Man honored for heroism 61 years after incident

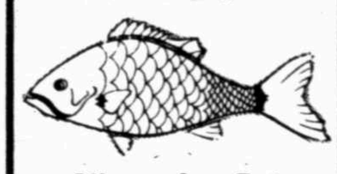

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — It took Egbert Tanner 61 years to get his certificate of merit for rescuing three drowning men in 1923, but the retired state trooper isn't complaining.

"I appreciate the award, and I'm just glad I'll get it before I'm pushing up daisies," Tanner, 83, said Tuesday from his home in Greenville in Orange County.

In the rescue, Tanner and a trooper named Garrow each steered a small canvas boat past swirling ice floes to reach three men clinging to the wreckage of a crushed motorboat in the Great South Bay on Long Island.

"Their boat was sinking like the Titanic, they couldn't have survived in that water," Tanner said. "I went out and pulled the poor devils in."

State police Superintendent George Chandler recommended Tanner for the award in 1923.

Council delays raising building permit fees

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

The Midland Department of Planning and Development wanted to charge more for permits and other services.

The members of the Permian Basin Homebuilders Association thought they were paying too much already.

The homebuilders won, at least for the moment. The City Council Tuesday decided to defer action on the proposed construction permit increases, though the council did approve increases for such services as zoning changes, plat review fees and special temporary land uses.

The increases were requested "in order to reflect the actual cost of inspections," said Richard Hennessy, director of the Planning and Development Department.

And Mayor G. Thane Akins said that due to budget cutbacks, "This is something we'll see a lot of cities are going to be doing."

But about 15 members of the Permian Basin Homebuilders Association showed up to oppose the increases that applied to their business.

"A 3,000 foot house has a $590 assessment," said spokesman Russell Jones. "That is well over two times, and in some cases three times, what our sister cities in West Texas are getting."

Jones said Midland homebuilders are having enough trouble making a profit without having to pay higher fees for inspections and permits. He also noted that small projects are assessed fees relatively close to those charged for expensive projects, though the single family house builder is less able to afford it.

"We feel that's bad for the development of Midland," he said.

Councilman Bart Hotchkiss agreed.

"This appears to put the burden on residential builders," he said, as the delegation of homebuilders applauded and cheered.

Mayor Pro Tem David Godfrey asked Hennessy to come up with a more detailed proposal on raising construction fees, and the council voted to defer action on that part of the fee schedule.

"All we want to do is be sure everybody bears their part of the load," Godfrey said.

In other action, the council:

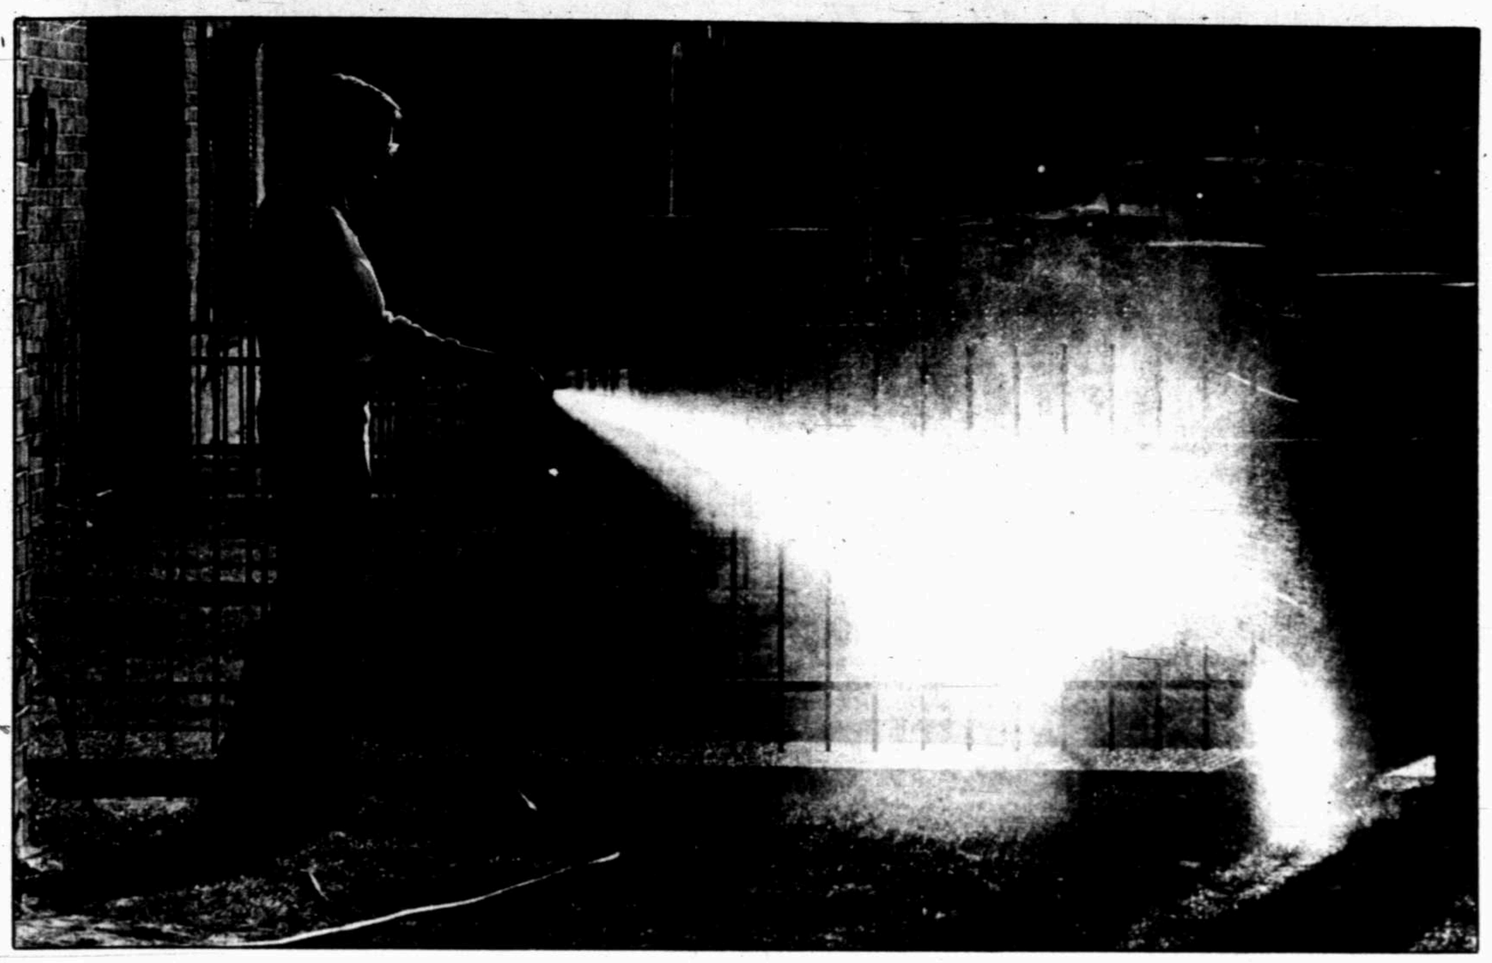

— Declared Sept. 21 Foy Proctor Day in honor of the 77-year Midland resident, who on that day will receive the prestigious Golden Spur Award in Lubbock. Proctor is a former president of the Midland School Board, director of First National Bank and director of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association.

"He has played an important role in building our city," said Godfrey.

— Passed on second reading ordinances raising fees for city water, sewer and sanitation charges. Water rates will rise from $1.20 per 1,000 gallons over the minimum to $1.35. Sewer rates will go from $10 to $10.50, and residential sanitation rates from $6.15 to $6.75.

— Passed on second reading an oil and gas drilling ordinance dropping the requirement of a watchman or fencing under certain conditions.

— Adopted a new fee schedule for the Parks and Recreation Department which raises the cost of a few programs, including preschool sessions, batoh lessons and spring break camp, but leaves most fees unchanged.

'Biggest' cake to be part of birthday bash

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Joan Baskin

Joan Baskin is revved up to get Midlanders excited over 1985's big bash.

"We're going to do this up-brown," she told about 200 townspeople who showed up in Midland Center on Tuesday to pledge their support of the Midland Centennial next year.

Midland's "birthday bash" will come on the Fourth of July weekend when concerts, contests, fireworks, booths, the world's biggest birthday cake, the Midland Jaycees' Centennial Plaza, and, possibly, the Goodyear blimp, will contribute to the celebration.

Mrs. Baskin, the centennial's catalyst and one of 33 commissioners on the Midland Centennial/Texas Sesquicentennial Commission, said Midland's birthday cake will be larger than the largest cake recorded by "Guinness Book of World Records."

She acknowledged a myriad of reasons to celebrate more than just the 100th birthday of the creation of Midland County: from the 200,000,000th birthday of geologial formations to the 103th birthday of the railroad.

The Texas & Pacific Railroad Co. in 1881 "put a railroad car on the siding and called it 'Midway,'" she said.

Archaelogists, she allowed, could celebrate the birthday of the "Midland man," dating backing to 18,500 B.C., but feminists could join in the celebration since the Midland man "turned out to be...a woman."

"We're going to have the best birthday party that anyone has ever had."

Mrs. Baskin said that early Midland, billed as the "Queen City of the Plains," was settled in part by Yankees and Republicans, "So, you see, a lot of things haven't changed."

And she cited the diversity of Midland and Midlanders and the adversities, such as blizzards and droughts, which they weathered.

"We're diverse, and we know how to overcome adversity," she said. "Midland has the greatest people."

Midlanders who turned out to Tuesday's Centennial kickoff got a chance to be inspired by what Centennial Commission co-chairman Chris Scharbauer termed a "good old down-to-earth town meeting."

"Being a fourth generation of a ranching family that came to Midland in the 1880s," Scharbauer said, "I can honestly say that Midland's heritage has been at the forefront when it came to unity and leadership."

He cited the "individual support" and "involvement" needed by Midlanders to carry out "a celebration of this measure."

"I'm very proud to be a Texas," Scharbauer said, "but I feel even more privileged to call Midland my home."

His co-chairman, Linda Cowden Isbell, noted that Midlanders from "all" ages, ethnic backgrounds and occupations are getting involved in the prelude to the celebration. At the approval of the Centennnial Commission, organizations may use the Centennial's logo, the profile of a steam locomotive, tender, three cars and a caboose against the Midland skyline, on Centennial memorabilia, such as plates, glasses, cups, jiggers.

And Robin Jackson, the Centennial Commission's executive director, said that postage meter plates noting Midland's 100th birthday are available at $24 each and that Centennial flags at $35 each will be on the market.

Day care center changes proposed

DHR suggestions met with criticism

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Proposed changes in the Department of Human Resources minimum standards for day care facilities Tuesday were met with criticism from local directors and staff members who fear the changes will increase costs and drive many of them out of business.

During a six-hour long public hearing, the 15th of 16 being conducted in the state, DHR executive directors and members of the State Advisory Committee for Day Care Facilities fielded questions and heard recommendations from about 30 local day care administrators and parents of children enrolled in such facilities.

Topping the list of criticisms on the proposed changes drawn up by the DHR state staff for both group day care homes and day care centers were increased staffing, paperwork and requirements.

"What you need to remember when you're doing these minimum standards is if you chase the people out who are trying to comply, you're going to be left with just the you-know-whats," said Peggy Hardgrove, director of a Sterling City day care center. "My main concern is the small operator in the small town is going to be pushed out of business."

Although facilities are required to keep written records of each child, a proposal mandating that staffers record events such as first words and steps of children is unneccesary, according to some in attendance. "We have enough paperwork already," said Terri Ann Conner of Monahans.

Other problems with proposed changes in paperwork included obtaining references for new staffers from their last three employers or supervisors and posting licenses, compliance evaluations and copies of the minimum standards for the centers.

Because many prospective staff members don't want their present employer to know he or she is looking for another position, the proposal should be changed, said Maryln Hair of the Odessa College day care training center.

She also suggested, "since we have multi-forms right now," that the recommendations requiring licenses and compliance evaluations be made available, rather than displayed.

Allowing those ages 16 and 17, mostly students training in child care, to be included as staffers to maintain a proper staff/child ratio is beneficial to not only the day care facility but to the students, most agreed. However, a proposal requiring the student "to work under the direct supervision in the same place at all times of a qualified adult staff" member would force some facilities to stop using students.

Mayor's Task Force on cable TV releases findings

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Midlanders pay more for their basic cable service than Odessans.

And cable subscribers in Midland have fewer pay service choices than those opting for cable in Odessa.

This is a sample of the data released by the Mayor's Task Force on cable TV in a report provided Tuesday to City Council.

Basic service costs $1 more in the Tall City, $9.50 to $8.50 per month in Odessa. Statewide, Midland charges less than 10 and more than 8 cable services in comparably sized markets for the basic service, according to the report.

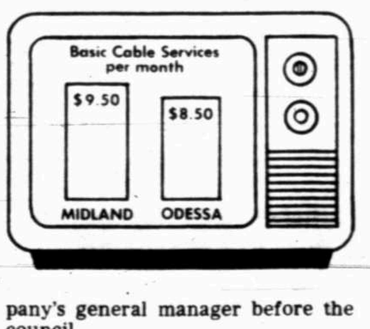

Separate pay channels cost Midlanders 95 cents more. And there are fewer from which to choose.

In addition to the basic service and specialized services offered in tiers, Community Cablevision of Odessa offers seven pay services:

— Home Box Office.
— The Movie Channel.
— Showtime.
— Cinemax.
— Galavision.
— The Disney Channel.
— Home Sports Entertainment (HSC).

Midland offers the first three movie channels and the Disney channel, but not Cinemax, HSC or Galavision, which offers all-Spanish programming.

HSC was added in April after community complaints prompted public appearances by the company's general manager before the council.

Times Mirror Cable TV of Midland monitors the desires of its subscribers to determine what they want, according to the cable company's general manager, Gaye Bagwell.

"(Programming) just depends on subscriber desire," said Ms. Bagwell of Midland offerings when HSC was added in Odessa.

Compared to other companies in similarly sized Texas markets, nine offer more pay channels and seven less, according to the report which surveyed markets such as Lubbock, Lamesa, San Angelo, Amarillo and Monahans.

Times Mirror of Midland offers a selection of 12 tier channels, one more than Odessa. Paid for separately, each tier 1 offering costs $2.50 more in Odessa, $7.50 to the $5 charged in Midland.

This report was the culmination of about three months of study by the citizen task force, formed by Odessa Mayor John Minor in June. The findings were for the most part favorable toward the local company. General Manager Mike Brommer was a member of the group.

Exhibits included in the folder show that service complaints have decreased from a high of 6,485 in June to 1,519 in August. A complete rebuild of the system was completed in May.

Promises made by Community Cablevision to the city council in January have been accomplished, according to the report.

One of its recommendations to the council was that there was no need for a cable TV board to oversee the continued operations of the local franchise. Also included was the suggestion that the task force be discontinued.

Quarterly reports from the cable company were recommended. These reports would provide council members with performance level tests, summaries of service calls and response time and Federal Communication Commission reports.

Minor provided these reports to council members, who never recognized the group appointed by the mayor without any input from them.

"I didn't really feel they needed (a task force)," said Councilman Sherman Cox this morning.

"There might be a slight improvement (in service)," said Cox, "but it hasn't been a great improvement."

Cox said unhappy subscribers continued to call him and city offices with complaints.

"I guess we'll always get calls," he said.

Coalition hopes to reverse new education regulations

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

If you can't fight city hall, surely it's hopeless to buck the state legislature.

But that's exactly what a coalition of school districts, school boards — including Midland's — and interested citizens hopes to do. As their name implies, Texans for Local Control of Public Education hope to reverse some of the strict regulations passed by legislators during special session.

"We want to get back some of the things that should be controlled by the local governing body," Midland school trustee Bill Jackson said at Tuesday's board meeting. "There have been so many things that House Bill 72 has taken away from local school districts and moved to Austin. They feel they know better than we do what's best for us."

Trustees voted unanimously to pay the $1,600 membership fee and join the organization. Jackson estimated 60 to 70 percent of the state's school districts, mainly those with fewer than 40,000 students, would participate. Recently, he met in San Antonio with representatives of several other suburban districts to organize the group.

"This is in response to what the legislature did this summer, over the objections of many of us in West Texas and many school districts in the state. It could be a lobby group, but we don't want to call it that at this time."

Jackson complained of such changes as: strictly structured curriculum, taking funding from some school districts and giving it to others, ruling that the school year could not start before Labor Day, abolishing the elected State Board of Education and replacing it with an appointed body.

"Six or seven districts in the state controlled House Bill 72, and all these people benefited greatly," Jackson charged, referring to the largest districts in the state.

"The state is taking over more and more, telling us what we can do and how we can do it and when we can do it. We'd like to let our representatives know that we are not completely in agreement that they are wiser than we are in these matters. We know better what this community wants and needs."

The organization's next meeting will be in Dallas Oct. 31.

In other action, the board:

—Heard a report on new procedures for notifying parents of a student's grades, in accordance with new state regulations. Instead of giving six-week report cards to secondary students, the grades will be mailed to parents. Elementary report cards will continue to be sent home for parent's signatures and then returned.

—Learned that, as of Friday, Midland had 472 more students than a year ago and 965 more than in May. Projections for the school year were exceeded by more than 150 students, and another 57 enrolled Monday. Including the 4-year-old programs, 18,350 students are now attending Midland schools. Last year's peak enrollment was 17,684.

Population within the city appeared to be changing as well. "We suspect we are having the same type of shift we had last year," Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi said. "Folks primarily from the southeast section of Midland are moving to apartments in the northwest part of town."

—Voted to send a telegram to Gov. Mark White recommending Midlander Pete Snelson for appointment to the State Board of Education. He is one of three Region 15 candidates being considered.

Four people arrested in connection with items from house burglaries

From Staff Reports

Three men and a woman remained in jail this morning following their arrest at a westside apartment full of items identified as stolen in at least seven house burglaries.

Formal charges were being prepared this morning, according to Lt. Jim Colburn, who said detectives had obtained a search warrant at 5 p.m. Tuesday, following a 3½-month-long investigation.

The recovered items, valued between $7,500 and $8,000, were found in three rooms of the Midland Drive apartment, Colburn said. They included television sets, microwave ovens, jewelry, silver flatware, china, coins, musical instruments, rifles, shotguns and pistols.

The china recovered was identified as that missing in a $22,000 house burglary, he said, adding the burglaries had been occurring on "almost a daily basis."

A 34-year-old Odessa man was charged with one count of involuntary manslaughter following a traffic accident Sunday which claimed the life of Glyn Edward Wilson, 38, of Odessa.

Bond was set at $3,000 for Fred D. Smith, according to Midland police, who said a second count of involuntary manslaughter in the death of 8-year-old Carl Karaffa, who died at Midland Memorial Hospital from injuries suffered in the accident, was expected to be filed this morning.

Two unidentified passengers in Smith's tractor trailer, which collided with a vehicle parked on the shoulder of Interstate 20 near the Rankin Highway, still remain at MMH in critical condition. The woman and a young boy were tentatively identified by papers found in a purse in the wreckage, according to police.

The death of a 53-year-old Midland man was ruled accidental by the County Attorney's office Tuesday, following a Monday morning traffic accident.

Wayne Arbie Richardson of 2301 Stanolind, was killed while standing between a U-haul trailer and a parked car in the 2300 block of Stanolind when a vehicle driven by a 16-year-old neighbor collided with the car, forcing it into the trailer and pinning Richardson in between.

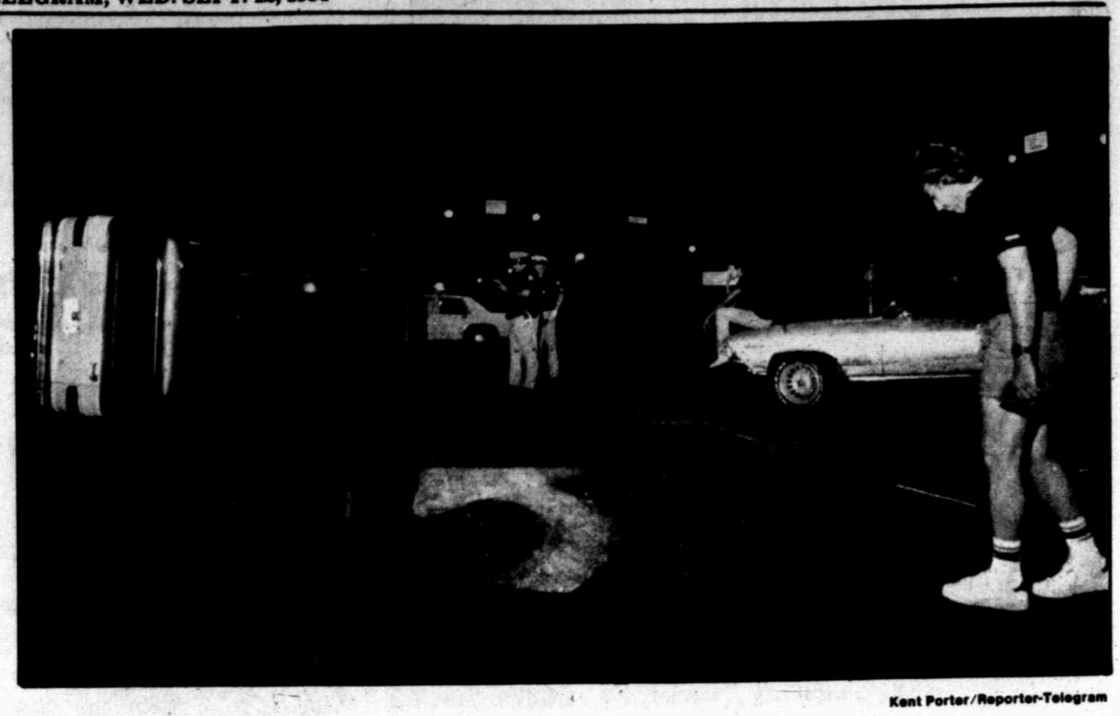

According to Mark Dettman, assistant county attorney, no charges were filed against the girl.

A 35-mm camera and flash unit were reported stolen in a burglary at Christian Fellowship Church, 304 N. Weatherford. According to reports, the church was entered sometime between 11:30 p.m. Monday and 7 a.m. Tuesday by breaking a window. Total loss was placed at $439.

Jerrell Max Brown of 4753 Boulder reported a blue steel revolver valued at $400 was taken from his house between 8:30 a.m. Monday and 7:45 p.m. Tuesday. Entry was believed to have been gained through an unlocked sliding glass door.

In other complaints filed with city police, about $520 worth of clothing was stolen from a rack at Jean Nicole clothing store, 4511 N. Midkiff, between 3 p.m. and 5 p.m. Monday. Also, Mike Mullins, 4500 Lennox, reported a wedding ring and bracelet valued at a total of $350 were taken from his house between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. Tuesday. Entry apparently was gained by prying open a sliding glass door.

Accident scene

A van driven by Jose Antonio Gonzales, right, of 707 N. Carrizo, overturned after it collided with a car driven by Joel Rodriguez of 322 Fiesta, shown sitting on the hood of his car, at the intersection of Big Spring and Wadley at about 10:45 p.m. Tuesday. According to police, Rodriquez was eastbound on Wadley when he failed to stop for a red light, colliding with Gonzales' southbound van. The van spun before overturning. Both drivers were taken to Midland Memorial Hospital by ambulance, where they were treated and released.

Residents act with 'integrity'

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Most Corpus Christi residents are acting with integrity and reporting accurately their household size upon which water rations will be figured, city officials said.

Officials had expressed concern that when residents returned cards specifying household size, there might be some exaggeration to increase their monthly water allocation.

"We may find we have a lot more residents than we thought," joked Doug Matthews, city utilities director at the start of water rationing Aug. 25.

But Dick Kisling, commercial official manager of the utility office, said "the vast majority are being honest."

The city began mailing cards to residents last month to determine water limits. Any residents not returning the card reporting the number of members in a household would be assigned the minimum allocation of 6,000 gallons of water per month.

CHANGES

"That would almost eliminate the need for any vocational student," Debora Phillips, executive director of the Taylor Park Child Care Center in Midland, said, adding many of her students are the most responsible and enthusiastic. "We don't have enough kids to qualify for two staffers."

Lowering the number of children in the child/staff ratio also will present problems, said Ms. Hair. "Maybe someday the government and industries will take up some of that slack, but not yet."

A proposed change in seat belt standards, requiring group day care centers to provide a seat belt for each child aged 3 and younger who can sit alone would be too costly and, therefore, cut out many field trips, according to some.

"Two kids per belt would be OK," said Wanda Daniel, of San Angelo.

"It's going to kill field trips for a lot of us," said Mary Barfield of Pecos.

Chapter 42 of the Human Resources Code requires minimum standards of day care facilities to be reviewed and evaluated every six years, according to T. Douglas Sanders, DHR assistant to the assistant commissioner for licensing. The last public hearing was to be in El Paso today but written recommendations will be accepted through the end of the month.

Those wishing to submit written recommendations may address them to Cathy Rossberg, Administrator, Policy Development Support Division-416, Texas Department of Human Resources 153-B, P.O. Box 2960, Austin, Texas 78769.

The recommendations will be compiled by the DHR staff and presented to the three member DHR board in January at the earliest, Sanders said. At that time, the economic impact also will be presented.

"We've all agreed (the proposed increase in requirements) will increase child care costs," Ms. Hardgrove said. "There's no way out of it. It's going to increase the costs to parents and to us. I think it will turn people toward unlicensed child care facilities."

The statewide minimum standards are established for the safety and protection of children in out-of-home care, according to a statement from DHR Commissioner Marlin W. Johnston.

"But I'm concerned because I feel like my role as a parent is being stepped on," said Odessan Janelle Woody, mother of a 3-year-old boy in a day care center. "The government is saying, 'You're not bright enough to figure out what is going on so we're going to regulate it.' "

DA won't rehire prosecutor charged with solicitation, carrying weapon

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade says he won't rehire a prosecutor charged in connection with carrying an unauthorized weapon and soliciting a prostitute — even if the lawyer is found innocent.

Kenneth Carden, a chief felony prosecutor, resigned Aug. 31 after his arrest by Dallas police. Carden was the chief prosecutor in the armed robbery trial of Lenell Geter in 1982.

"He is not going to be reinstated," Wade said Tuesday. "I told him this morning that he can't stay here."

Wade said his policy of firing any prosecutor charged in a crime that ordinarily would be prosecuted by the district attorney's office is designed to avoid a conflict of interest.

"I've followed that policy all along," he said.

Carden said earlier he was investigating a pimp's murder when he was arrested after he allegedly approached a female undercover police officer,

The 1985 celebrations will be launched on Feb. 28 because it was on Feb. 28, 1885, when Midland County was carved out of Tom Green County. Other dates, outside of the July Fourth weekend bash, to celebrate will be June 15, which will mark the 100th anniversary of the election to select the Midland County Commissioners' Court, and Aug. 10, which will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Commissioners' Court first meeting.

In 1985, a speakers' bureau will be set up to celebrate Midland, and the RepublicBank First National Midland is underwriting a film on the community.

The Centennial Commission passed out lists of 103 ideas for projects Midlanders in concert or individually could carry out. Ideas included a time capsule, Centennial musical score, slogan contest, air show, souvenir plate series, calendar, Miss Centennial Contest, T-shirts, sports tournaments, bumper stickers, beard-growning contest, street dance, oral history workshops, treasure hunts, a film festival and walk-a-thons and bike-a-thons.

Much of the Centennial's fanfare already is getting stage ready. For example, Summer Mummers President Arlen Edgar said the 1985's frolics on the Yucca Theatre's stage will be based on scriptwriter Randy Hicks' Midland play: "Catawamped Among the Cacti" or "What's a Butte-iful Girl Like You Dune in a Place Like This?"

A Midland sorority, Eta Epsilon Zeta Chapter of Zeta Phi Beta, will award plaques to citizens who turn 100 years old or older in 1985, said Bertha Mae Starks.

The Junior League of Midland's Jananne McLaughlin said the League would sell Centennial T-shirts.

Among other projects, the United Bank of Midland is putting together a Centennial calendar, and the Midland County Historical Society is publishing a book on the pioneer history of Midland.

"Midland, we think, is the most wonderful place in the world," said Mrs. Baskin, who noted that Harry S. Truman once said " 'Men make history and not the other way around.'

"We think that Midland should be celebrated for all time."

Honorary pallbearers were to be Dr. Robert Bugg, Bobby Dunn, Floyd Jernagin, Ed Wooten, Bill Jones, Herman York and John Stumpff.

San Antonian stabbed in Odessa

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Two San Antonio brothers, in Odessa to work at the Permian Basin Fair and Exposition, were involved in an incident at a 2nd St. motel Tuesday that left one with a stab wound.

Leroy Castillo, no age available, was allegedly stabbed about 1:15 p.m. Tuesday by a black female during an incident at the Imperial Motel, 221 W. 2nd St. He was treated for a 2-inch stab wound and released from Medical Center Hospital.

He and his brother Danny were unloading their truck in the motel parking lot after arriving from San Antonio when they were approached by a black man who first asked them if they wanted "some good stuff," then continued to harass them until Danny struck the man, according to reports.

A black woman then stabbed Leroy in the back, then drove off in a brown Oldsmobile with the black man. The Castillos reportedly were in Odessa to work at the fair, which opens today.

Police have made no arrests in the offense, listed as an aggravated assault. The black man was described in the report as six feet tall, with a slim build and braided hair, wearing a gray t-shirt.

Borden County range tour slated

GAIL — A "Surviving the Drought" tour of Borden County rangeland will be held Thursday, according to Alan Day, the county's agricultural extension agent.

Cattlemen and others on the tour are to meet at the Borden County Courthouse here at 8:30 a.m. for coffee and registration and will leave for the rangeland tour at 9 a.m.

Range and livestock specialists on the tour will include Dr. Russ Pettit, Texas Tech University range staff member and president of the Texas Section Range Society; Dr. Barron Rector, Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) range specialist from Texas A&M University; Dr. John McNeill, TAEX livestock specialist from Amarillo, and J.F. Cadenhead, TAEX range specialist from Vernon.

They will speak on grazing management, livestock management, range, brush and weed control, and soil and water conservation.

Pettit will be the keynote speaker at the free noon barbecue meal.

Livestock producers from Borden and neighboring counties are invite to join in on the tour and feed, Day said.

The Borden County farm tour will be held next Wednesday, Sept. 19.

China admits high losses of famine

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

PEKING — Chinese officials have acknowledged for the first time that more than 10 million people died during a four-year famine that followed the late Mao Tse-tung's "Great Leap Forward" in 1958.

The State Statistical Bureau, responding Tuesday to queries submitted by The Associated Press, confirmed that the Great Leap into huge communes and hastily built factories caused one of the century's worst calamities.

Government officials had been asked about calculations by American demographers that indicated as many as 30 million people died because of food shortages between 1958 and 1961.

Bureau spokesman Xu Gang said that in the four years of 1959-1962, "over 10 million people died of unnatural death due to both man-made factors and serious natural disasters."

Xu said it was difficult to determine the exact number of famine deaths during Mao's ambitious program, which coincided with drought, floods and infestations that turned poor harvests into severe food shortages.

The government had not previously released specific information about the death toll, possibly because China's top leader, Deng Xiaoping, and other officials now in the Communist Party hierarchy did not oppose the Great Leap.

In February 1961 the late economist Sun Yefang acknowledged "an enormous price in blood." He released figures indicating the death rate more than doubled from 10.8 per 1,000 in 1957 to 25.4 per 1,000 in 1960.

Sun did not estimate a total, but American demographers said it meant at least 15 million more deaths than usual.

Earlier this year, American experts went a step further.

Basing their calculations on a 1953 population of 583 million, a 1964 total of 695 million and on normal fertility rates, they concluded that infant mortality and other deaths were much higher than officially reported.

Professor Ansley J. Coale of the National Academy of Sciences at Princeton University estimated 27 million deaths due to the Great Leap, while Judith Banister, chief of the China branch at the U.S. Census Bureau, put the figure at 30 million.

Both pointed to 1953, 1964 and 1982 census figures on population and age structure — none of which were released until late 1982 — and additional demographic statistics published by the Chinese in 1983.

The American reckoning was questioned, however, by spokesman Sun Shangqing at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

"During the Great Leap Forward there were people who died of famine," he said, "but it is quite hard for us to decide whether people died normal deaths or died of hunger or for other reasons."

China's 1983 Manual of National Statistics showed a net population decline of more than 13 million — from 672 million to 658.8 million — between 1959 and 1961, but Sun said a plunging fertility rate may have accounted for some of the population loss.

"We think that because of undernourishment, many people suffered sterilization during this period, and many young couples employed contraceptive methods because they were afraid of increasing the burden in their lives," Sun said.

However, Judith Banister said she calculated the famine-induced loss of fertility separately, estimating that it reduced the number of births by 37 million between 1958 and 1961.

Mao had said he took direct responsibility for the failure of his plan to catapult China into pure communism by abolishing private farming and merging some 750,000 collectives into 26,000 communes.

He had predicted that within 15 years, China could match or surpass Britain's industrial output if everyone joined in. By late 1958, there were 600,000 backyard furnaces in which peasants melted down their pots and pans in a bid to boost steel production.

The Soviet Union, which helped rebuild China after the Communists gained power in 1949, objected to the strategy and stopped its technical assistance in 1959. Mao died in 1976.

Reinforcements called

HYDERABAD, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government, bracing for a showdown with opponents today, rushed in reinforcements for thousands of troops deployed to stop Hindu-Moslem rioting whjch has taken 20 lives.

City police said that three people died of stab wounds today and that police gunfire wounded two rioters in a predominantly Moslem district of Hyderabad. A police spokesman said 67 injured riot victims, six of them in critical condition, were in city hospitals.

Six Hindus were reported stabbed to death in a Moslem district here on Tuesday during a brief lifting of a curfgw. The reported death toll in three days of rioting and arson was 20, with nearly 200 people reported injured.

Station to open soon

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — A powerful new radio station, largely funded by the U.S. Information Agency and intended to counter propaganda from neighboring Nicaragua, will begin broadcasting soon in northern Costa Rica.

Sponsors of the station say it also will broadcast into southern Nicaragua, but its primary purpose is to provide an alternative in northern Costa Rica to Nicaraguan broadcasts.

The station, which reportedly will have a power of 50 kilowatts, is being built near Ciudad Quesada, a town about 50 miles northwest of San Jose.

Leader's home bombed

WETZIKON, Switzerland (AP) — A bomb exploded early today at the home of the Zurich state justice minister, causing light damage and no injuries, police said. It was the second bombing attack on a Swiss official in recent weeks.

Police said the attacker opened an unlocked window on the ground floor of the home of Hedi Lang in this village about 12 miles south of Zurich, and placed a device inside. It exploded at about 4 a.m., causing about $3,200 damage.

On Aug. 7, the home of then-Swiss Federal Justice Minister Rudolf Friedrich, 61, who also lives in the state of Zurich, was bombed. Friedrich has since resigned his post for health reasons and the attack remains unresolved. No one was injured in that bombing, which caused more extensive damage than today's explosion.

There was speculation that the attacks might be related since both Friedrich and Mrs. Lang, 53, are Justice Department officials living in the same state, although they serve at different governing levels.

Confidence vote delayed

JERUSALEM (AP) — Last-minute bickering between Israel's two rival political blocs today delayed a scheduled confidence vote in Parliament on a bipartisan government and jeopardized the unprecedented accord between the parties.

Prime Minster-designate Shimon Peres, who joined in all-night negotiations with his Likud bloc rivals at a Tel Aviv hotel, had hoped to seek parliamentary ratification today for the joint Labor-Likud Cabinet.

But the long bargaining session failed to resolve all differences over the power-sharing pact, and a spokeswoman for the Israeli Knesset, or Parliament, later said the confidence vote would not take place before Thursday.

Explosions shake volcano

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Nine explosions shook Mayon Volcano within three hours today, shooting heavy volumes of volcanic ash to heights of up to nine miles, a government scientist said.

The explosions, which began at 11 a.m., indicated a "further intensification" in the activity of the 8,100-foot-high mountain in Albay Province, 200 miles southeast of Manila, volcanologist Alex Juanes said.

No casualties have been reported since the volcano began erupting last Sunday but the latest bulletin from the Philippine Institute of Volcanology called on local officials to hasten the evacuation of 14 villages within five miles of the crater because of heavy ash fallout.

Libyan diplomat shot

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A Libyan diplomat on the way to work was wounded today when a single assailant fired a pistol at him.

Initial reports said the diplomat, identified by police as Mohamed Aidriss, was wounded in each arm but was not in critical condition. He was taken to a clinic for treatment.

Police sources said a man armed with a pistol was arrested near the scene shortly after the attack.

Pharmacy under siege

LONDON (AP) — A gunman demanding heroin held eight people hostage in a north London pharmacy early today before surrending to police, Scotland Yard reported.

A police spokesman, who declined to be identified, said the man in his early 20s, armed with a revolver, burst into the all-night pharmacy and threatened to shoot two employees and six customers if police moved in.

The siege ended after a young woman customer, who was not identified, and an unarmed officer, Chief Inspector Nick Barnham, talked the gunman into giving up.

British mine leader: Strike in coal board's hands

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — Miners' leader Arthur Scargill said today it was up to the state-owned National Coal Board to make the next move in talks to end Britain's 6-month-old coal strike.

Talks between the miners' union leaders and the board were expected to resume today at a secret location in England, board and union officials said.

Before leaving Edinburgh, Scotland, where negotiations were held for the last three days, Scargill said the National Union of Mineworkers had put forward fresh proposals to the board, headed by Scottish-born American Ian MacGregor.

"The ball is in his court," said Scargill. "Negotiations are continuing and we shall continue to put forward constructive proposals."

Asked if the two sides were any closer to a settlement, the miners' leader said: "I can't comment other than to say if negotiations resume today, which I expect them to do, then obviously we shall be seeking to find a solution to the problem."

Union spokeswoman Nell Myers cautioned that "serious difficulties" remained in finding a peace formula to end the strike, now in its 27th week.

But The Times of London reported after four hours of talks Tuesday at a hotel in Edinburgh, Scotland, that "both sides showed a deep reluctance to be blamed" for wrecking the negotiations.

The Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, and The Daily Mail reported that armed detectives were guarding Scargill following a Danish police tipoff that two American hit men were out to kill him.

The Mail quoted an unidentified senior police officer as saying Scargill had been under police protection since early Monday. A police spokesman declined to comment on "operational matters."

The Times said the talks were saved from collapse Tuesday by MacGregor producing a compromise clause on the key issue in the dispute — the planned closure of 20 unprofitable mines and the resulting loss of 20,000 jobs.

The Times said MacGregor softened the coal board's insistence on closing mines that could no longer be "beneficially developed." That left room for maneuver with the union, which opposes shutting down any mine unless its coal has been exhausted.

MacGregor and most of his team flew to London in a private jet, and Smith said the talks would continue today at a "new location." He did not say where, but speculation grew that the talks would be switched to London.

The main stumbling block remained the issue of what constitutes an "exhausted" mine.

The coal board was adamant that Britain's coal industry has to be streamlined and loss-making mines shut down. The miners wants to reduce the number of mines to be closed and link shutdowns with increased production elsewhere.

The strike, called by Scargill to oppose the planned mine closures, has idled 103 of Britain's 175 state-owned mines.

But it has also bitterly divided the 183,000-member union, with more than 50,000 men defying union pickets to get to work, usually with police escorts.

Home Secretary Leon Brittan warned militant miners to halt "jackboot methods" of intimidation and mass pickets and eaid they face severe penalties, including life sentences, if convicted of criminal offenses.

Texas food traditions as varied as state's geography

By SYLVIA CARTER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Some of Texas is every bit as dry and arid as folks who have never been there imagine. But East Texas, running from Texarkana on the Arkansas border to Houston near the Gulf Coast, is lush with greenery and rolling hills. With such varied scenery and so much land mass that road maps always have to be continued on the other side or in a corner inset, Texas seems like New Mexico, Indiana, Kentucky and a few other states rolled into one.

What all of Texas has in common is barbecue, in one form or another. The story goes that when Lyndon Baines Johnson was asked to describe Texas in a word, the word he chose was barbecue.

As for the rest of the food, there are three basic styles with many variations. At the border, the food is closest to true Mexican cooking. There is ranch food, which relies heavily on beef, flour, frijoles (beans) and staples that will keep well. And there is Tex-Mex, which is the adulterated version of Mexican food that gets more Tex than Mex as highways lead northward. Thrown into this rich mixture are the heritages of dozens of nationalities that have settled here, in particular German and Swedish.

IN THE border towns, food has a strong Mexican influence. Across the Rio Grande from Brownsville, in the Mexican town of Matamoros, cabrito, barbecued goat, is a favorite Sunday dinner out. Street peddlers shave ice off huge blocks and flavor it with mango syrup; other vendors sell dulce, candied sweet potato and pumpkin. Markets sell a dozen kinds of chiles, from the firey little chilepiquin, no bigger than capers, to plump, fresh serranos. Here, the railroad south to Monterey begins.

In Brownsville, both corn and flour tortillas, the daily bread of the region, are baked fresh at tortillarias, tortilla factories. Even hot-dog stands serve jalapeno peppers on the side. At Sonic, a chain of neon-decked drive-ins with carhops, the hamburgers may be ordered with jalapenos. Truckloads of watermelon, with a few cut open to splay their red insides against the backdrop of green, line the roadside.

And in Brownsville, every household has its own version of pico de gallo, the fresh tomato and chile sauce that is as necessary to border food as ketchup is to food in the rest of America.

IN BROWNSVILLE, the Texas Cafe, open 24 hours a day, serves beer iced down in a cooler. From Brownsville and Port Isabel, the largest shrimp fleet in the world plies the waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

And on Sunday, Timo Hinojosa sells out of whatever he barbecues and cooks on Saturdays: his chile-laced, garlicky tripe stew, known as menudo and guaranteed to scare off hangovers, brisket smoked over mesquite in his backyard and barbacoa. Barbacoa is traditionally the whole head of a steer buried on top of coals in the ground on Saturday, and smoked until Sunday morning, but Timo barbecues just the cheeks in a big oil drum.

Hinojosa says that the word barbecue originally meant "to bury." "They'd strip the hide off and gut the animal and put it in cheesecloth and burlap bags — now we use foil — and bury it. De la barba a la cola means 'from the chin whiskers to the tail.' "

Brownsville's barbacoa may seem quaint, however, to Texans to the north. One Texas reporter put it in this perspective: "I'll bet you that months pass when nobody does the cow's head. Chili is a dish that half the people in Texas are eating right now."

BUT OFTEN, what starts in border towns spreads inland. Such was the case with fajita, the thin, marinated skirt steaks, usually from underneath the steer's rib cage, that are now all the rage.

To the north lies San Antonio, and in between are some of the fabled Texas ranches where the victuals, while influenced by the border food, are more akin to the noontime dinners of the Midwest: plenty of beef from the rancher's own cattle, most likely made into chicken-fried steak and served with thick cream gravy, fresh black-eyed peas, platters of brilliantly red tomatoes, biscuits and pie. This food would be familiar to farmers all over America. But in Texas, the barbecued beef brisket often is served with hot sauce and flour tortillas.

"I'm giving you what we have," said Ann Anderson, a consultant to the Beef Industry Council and the National Livestock and Meat Board, addressing a dinner guest from up north. "Just meat and fruit and nothing in between." Anderson is a fifth-generation Texan who, with her publisher husband, Jim, runs cattle on weekends. True to her word, at her home near Austin she served fresh shrimp, barbecued beef and wild pig, potato salad, grapefruit-and-avocado salad and a big bowl of melon. The vegetable course was potatoes, onion and bacon stuffed into tortillas.

JUST SOUTH of San Antonio is Poteet, famed for its strawberries. To the north and west lie German settlements noted for sausage, potato salad, cinnamon rolls and German chocolate cake: New Braunfels, Fredericksburg, Castroville, Lockhart and, north of Austin, Elgin, the home of a sausage company where the sausage is still dished out onto sheets of butcher paper and eaten with a fistful of saltines and a chunk of good cheddar. The whole is washed down with soda pop that still comes in bottles, most often Coca-Cola.

North of Elgin is Taylor, considered by some to be the capital of Texas barbecue. Rudy Mikeska was catering barbecue and brown beans for 1,000 one day this summer. Just up the hot, dusty street, Fred Fountaine, who has been starting wood fires before dawn at Louie Mueller's Bar-B-Q for 25 years, had already knocked off work for the afternoon and was over at the domino parlor.

Between Austin and Fredericksburg, which lies to the west, is Johnson City, LBJ country. This is the home of Stonewall peaches, which spurt with juice the way peaches used to; at this year's JAMboree, a single "reserve champion" peach sold for $300, to raise money for worthy causes. And here is Luckenback, the town with a population of three, made famous by Texas eccentric Hondo Crouch.

SAN ANTONIO food is influenced by both the areas north and south. Benne Gold Atkin, who has written local cookbooks, says the kind of Mexican food she grew up with is mildly spiced. "When people come here, even if they didn't like 'Mexican food,' they like ours," she said. "I love Mexican food, but not usually Mexican food prepared by Mexicans." In Mexico, she says, they use more spice.

Even Tex-Mex can intimidate newcomers. "I was from Kentucky," said Carla Lott, who has adjusted. "When we first went for enchiladas, as a matter of fact, I started crying. They would start sweating and say that they enjoyed it. I thought that was crazy, that people turn their stomachs inside out and say this is wonderful. I love it now. I'm addicted. It works that way on you."

Whether it's mild or hot, Texans wash their food down with beer, iced tea and Coke that still comes in the little green 6½-ounce bottles. The intense heat makes for powerful thirsts.

TEXAS STILL has no law against carrying an opened bottle of bourbon or beer in a car, though such a law narrowly missed being passed last time around. When you get into a truck or car, there is likely to be an Igloo cooler in back, and the driver will ask courteously, "What do you folks want to drink?"

Drinks on the road, where the rare speed-limit observers politely move to the wide shoulders to let others by, are known as "roadies." Texans could no more live without ice than they could without air conditioning. It is not considered impolite to chew your ice; as one Texas Monthly writer observed, ice is food.

And the barbecue, wherever in Texas you eat it, is like no other.

Texas-born recipes

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Roy Wheeler, president of the Independent Cattlemen's Association, says biscuit mix works just as well as making the biscuit from scratch, as long as you add beer. He likes Moosehead, but says, "Bohemia makes a good biscuit."

ROY WHEELER'S BEER BISCUITS

2 cups all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
¼ cup lard or vegetable shortening
1 bottle beer, preferably imported, any size
2 tablespoons butter or shortening

Place flour, baking powder, baking soda and salt in a bowl and toss around with a fork to mix. Using clean fingers, a fork or a pastry blender, cut in lard or shortening until mixture resembles coarse cornmeal. Gradually, mixing with fork or pastry blender, blend in enough beer, about ¾ cup, to make a soft dough. Turn out onto a floured board, turn over once or twice to flour the dough, and pat or roll out about ½ inch thick. Cut into rounds with a glass dipped in flour. While the oven is heating, set cast-iron skillet or other heavy, ovenproof dish, in the oven to melt butter or other shortening. Place each biscuit in pan, turning to coat with shortening on both sides. Place biscuits close together. Bake at 450-F. for 10 minutes, or until browned.

Migas, a standby at Cisco's Bakery in Austin, are a way to use up leftover tortillas. Nobody uses a recipe, but this is pretty much the idea.

MIGAS

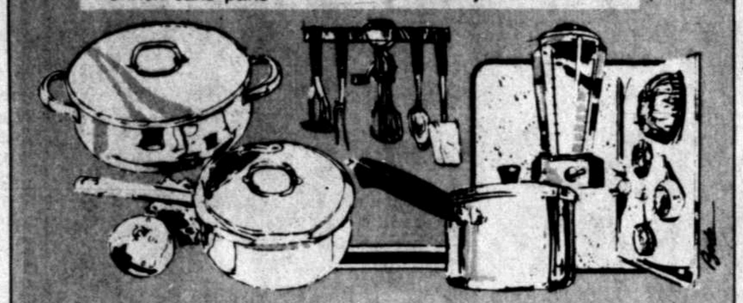

2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1 onion, chopped
2 day-old corn tortillas (homemade or purchased), cut or broken into pieces
8 eggs
2 tablespoons heavy cream
salt, black pepper, to taste fresh salsa (see following recipe)

Tex-Mex combines the best of beef, cheese

By BETTY WILSON
Hearst News Service

Hearty and well-seasoned, Tex-Mex dishes combine the best of Texas and Mexico, with the beef, broiler fryers and cheese of Texas joining the beans, corn and hot peppers of Mexico.

"Spicy Mexican Bean Casserole" is a dish that will please vegetarians who include milk products in their diet. It offers three varieties of cheese as well as beans, which adds up to 21 grams of protein per serving. With the exception of the oil and seasonings, all ingredients in this dish contain varying amounts of protein.

"Truckadero Beef Stew" is said to be a favorite of President Ronald Reagan. Published earlier this year in the Detroit Free Press, the recipe calls for beef, mushrooms and artichoke hearts. If artichoke hearts are not on your budget or list of favorite foods, substitute zucchini.

Chili peppers are a typical ingredient in Tex-Mex cooking. Buy them fresh at the market or canned. To freeze fresh hot peppers for future use, wash and stem. Cut and package in useful amounts. Seal and freeze. Blanching is unnecessary.

RONALD REAGAN'S TRUCKADERO BEEF STEW
(serves 10)

4 tablespoons oil
2 large onions, sliced
1 clove garlic, split
⅓ cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2½ pounds stewing beef, cut into 1½-inch cubes
½ teaspoon dill weed
1 cup Burgundy
1 can (10-ounce) beef consomme
1 package (10-ounce) frozen artichoke hearts
4 tablespoons margarine
18 fresh mushrooms, halved or quartered
2 tubes (8-ounce) refrigerated flaky biscuits, divided
Melted margarine
Parmesan cheese

Heat oil in Dutch oven. Add onion and garlic. Cook until golden. Using slotted spoon, remove onions and garlic from pot and set aside.

In large bowl, combine flour, salt and pepper. Mix thoroughly and dredge beef cubes in mixture. Add beef to oil in pot and brown thoroughly on all sides, adding more oil as needed. Return onion mixture to pot. Add dill weed, Burgundy and consomme. Cover and simmer 1½ hours, until meat is very tender.

Blanch artichokes 1 minute in boiling water. Drain and add to meat.

In medium skillet, melt margarine and add mushrooms. Saute 5 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add to meat and mix gently.

Separate biscuits in one tube and arrange on top of the meat mixture. Bake at 400 degrees 15 to 20 minutes, brushing with melted margarine and sprinkling with Parmesan. Bake other tube of biscuits according to package directions and serve separately with stew.

SPICY MEXICAN BEAN CASSEROLE
(serves six to eight)

1 cup sour cream
1 cup cottage cheese
2 cups (8 oz.) shredded Monterey Jack cheese
¼ cup chopped green onion
2 tablespoons chopped green chilies
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
1 clove garlic, minced
1 tablespoon oil
2 cups chopped tomato, fresh or canned
2 cans (16-oz.) red kidney beans, drained
1 can (8-oz.) tomato sauce
1½ teaspoons chili powder
1 can (2-oz.) sliced ripe olives, drained
2 cups crushed corn chips, divided
1 cup (4 oz.) grated sharp Cheddar cheese

Combine the first six ingredients, mixing well. Set aside.

Saute chopped onion, green pepper and garlic in hot oil in large saucepan until tender. Stir in tomatoes, beans, tomato sauce and chili powder. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer five minutes. Stir in olives.

Sprinkle ½-cup corn chips in a lightly greased 2-½-quart casserole. Layer with half of sour cream mixture and half of bean mixture. Sprinkle with ¾-cup corn chips. Layer with remaining sour cream mixture and bean mixture. Bake, uncovered at 350-F. for 30 minutes. Sprinkle with remaining corn chips and Cheddar cheese. Bake an additional five minutes.

TEX-MEX CHICKEN STEW
(serves four to six)

4 tablespoons flour
4 cups chicken broth
2 cups or more chopped, cooked chicken
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 small can mild green chilies, drained and diced
1 teaspoon chili powder
Dash of garlic salt
Grinding of black pepper
10 corn tortillas
Small amount of oil

Blend flour with a little chicken broth in large saucepan. Stir in remaining broth and cook over medium-high heat, stirring constantly until beginning to thicken. Add onion and cook 1 minute. Add chicken, chilies, garlic salt and pepper. Heat through.

Meanwhile, add small amount of oil to skillet. Quickly place a corn tortilla in hot oil. Flip with a fork and remove within seconds, allowing excess oil to drain back in skillet. Repeat to soften all tortillas. Stack them on a plate and cut entire stack into fourths.

In a large serving dish, layer the tortilla pieces and chicken sauce. Heat through again, if necessary. Serve in shallow soup plates and garnish with tomato if desired.

ZUCCHINI MEXICALI
(serves four to six)

¼ cup oil
4 cups sliced zucchini, unpeeled
1 large carrot, coarsely shredded (1 cup)
¾ cup chopped celery
½ green pepper, cut into strips
½ teaspoon garlic salt
¼ teaspoon dried basil
Pepper
⅓ cup taco sauce
2 teaspoons prepared mustard
2 medium tomatoes, cut into wedges
Salt

Heat oil in 10-inch skillet. Add sliced zucchini, carrot, onion, celery, green pepper, garlic salt, basil and pepper. Toss to mix well. Cook, covered, over medium-high heat for 4 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Combine taco sauce and mustard. Stir into vegetables. Add tomato wedges and cook, uncovered, 3 to 5 minutes or until heated through. Season with salt.

Owners jealously guard barbecue sauce recipes

By SYLVIA CARTER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

TAYLOR, TEXAS — If you haven't been to Taylor, you haven't been to Texas.

Taylor is synonymous with barbecue, and Texans hold barbecue in high esteem. Sauce recipes are jealously guarded, and veritable battles wage over the best methods for barbecuing.

While some favor mesquite and others insist on live oak, Texans are pretty much in agreement about one thing: barbecue is not what Northerners grill over charcoal. Barbecue must be done over wood coals, and it must be done slowly. It is never, never chopped meat stewed in sauce. Sauce goes on the side. Coals must be "shoveled": readied in a pit and, when they are just right, put beneath the meat. The ideal way to eat the meat, said Shorty Crenwelge, a fourth-generation Texan from over in Fredericksburg, is by cutting it, right off the grill, with a sharp paring knife.

Taylor is a somnolent small town where wood barbecue fires crisp the damp, hot air. Here, the man who gets up at 3 a.m. to start the fires for the barbecue at Louie Mueller's is Fred Fountaine. "I worked 30 years on this sauce," Fountaine said. The black pepper in it leaves you breathless."

Taylor is also the home of Rudy Mikeska's Barbecue. One couple drove from Lubbock, about 450 miles, to eat at Louie Mueller's. That same day, Mikeska was preparing barbecue to serve to 1,000 at a farm at Thrall, just outside of town. Texans don't mind driving a few extra miles when it comes to getting some good barbecue. Taylor is ideally located, some say: two hours from San Antonio, 45 miles from Austin, 3½ hours from Houston.

The two Taylor barbecue establishments are a study in contrasts. Mikeska has seven modern pits equipped with rotating racks for the meat. A steam-jacketed, electric-heated vat can hold enough beans for 2,000 servings. At Mueller's, the wood floors haven't seen a coat of varnish in many a year, the walls and the high ceilings are blackened by a fine haze of smoke and the barbecue pits have turned black from it, too. The toothpicks are dispensed from recycled hot sauce bottles. Outside, the sign is rusted and many of the light bulbs in it are missing.

In the cafeteria-style line at Mueller's, Jeff Bullard of Georgetown, 20 miles distant, refused to give advice on whether to order a brisket sandwich or chopped beef barbecue. "Fred don't make no bad food," said Bullard, a county real estate appraiser. "Get yourself some 'tater salad to go with it. ... When you're in Taylor, you eat at Louie Mueller's."

Indeed, Fountaine's fans are nearly fanatical. "Fred likes his job better than most people," said Billy Evans, who sells used automobiles across the street and has a "drinking session" at Mueller's every 3 p.m. with his friend Leon Bohls. The men drank soda, which is all the drinking session really amounts to, and spoke of Fountaine as though he is a national monument. "Fred flies the American flag every day," said Bohls. "One thing he likes is his American Legion — and his bowling," said Evans. "Nobody could question his patriotism. ...

"People will come from Dallas and eat here instead of taking the Austin highway," said Evans. "Sometimes I see 10 or 12 people get out of a car."

After work, Fountaine, who by his own description has "a little hair left," can usually be found at a domino parlor back of the barbecue joint. Fountaine said he found it difficult to get work after World War II, in which he had been wounded. Taking what he could get in the way of work led to the degree of fame he enjoys today.

"Being a disabled vet makes it hard to get a job. But I just went on and made the best of it," Fountaine said. Fountaine started working for the Mueller family in 1948, in a grocery store. Mueller "just said, 'That's the barbecue pit,' " Fountaine recalled. "I didn't know how to do it. But I stayed, I learned and I built up the business."

Here is the sauce that made Fountaine famous. The secret, he said, is in "how you cook it." Serve with barbecued beef.

FRED FOUNTAINE'S BARBECUE SAUCE

1 quart ketchup
3 quarts water
2 onions the size of baseballs, finely chopped; use 1½ if they are the size of softballs
2 beef boullion cubes
2 tablespoons salt, or to taste
¼ cup pepper, or to taste

In a large pan, combine all ingredients, going gently with the salt and pepper at first. Bring to a boil and boil vigorously for 40 minutes, then turn heat down, taste and correct seasoning, and let simmer 40 minutes. At the end, turn the heat up and bring to a boil again. Then it's done. Bottle in clean bottles or jars and store in refrigerator. Makes about 2 quarts.

Rudy Mikeska's recipes feed thousands. Coleslaw, potato salad, brown beans, white bread and iced tea are the most popular accompaniments to his barbecued beef.

To make the coleslaw, for example, it takes 100 pounds of cabbage, 10 pounds of carrots, ½ gallon of vinegar and 8 gallons of mayonnaise. "This is an area where they really like slaw," Mikeska said.

Mikeska marinates the meat, "tri-tip" sirloin, for 24 hours before smoking it over live oak. "It has a mild flavor and you can eat it every day," he said. "Hickory or mesquite lingers too long, and you get tired of the taste." Some barbecuers, on the other hand, will use nothing but mesquite.

Mikeska, who has barbecued for Lyndon B. Johnson and for "every Texas governor in the last 25 years," does not care to expand. "I'd rather properly take care of one thing than not properly take care of a bunch," he said. His brothers barbecue, too: Mike in Smithville, Louis and Clem in Temple, Jerry in Columbus and Maurice in El Campo.

That evening five Mikeska vans filled with barbecue and the trimmings pulled up to the 4,000-acre Stiles Farm, which is the property of Texas Agricultural Extension Service of Texas A&M University. The crowd had gathered to see agricultural experiments and new farm machinery.

"Barbecue is the best food buy in America," said Mikeska, 30 years in the business, as he opened packages of bread and his workers raced to set the food out. Earnest, hungry faces, many beneath caps, pressed against the white rail fence waiting for supper. "This is $4 a head."

TEXAS-BORN

In a fairly large skillet, heat the butter and oil. Add onion and saute briefly. Add tortillas and stir around until they are crispy. In a bowl, gently beat eggs, cream and salt and pepper together. Add to skillet and keep stirring around, as you would for scrambled eggs. Just as the eggs are nearly done, add a bit of fresh salsa and serve to 4 people, with additional salsa on the side.

Julia and Abraham Moreno live in Brownsville and grow their own chile peppers. Julia Moreno says that when her husband makes the sauce, "he doubles the peppers." Novices might want to start with half as many peppers.

JULIA MORENO'S FRESH SALSA
2 large ripe tomatoes
7 or 8 fresh serrano peppers, or other hot peppers
salt, to taste
fresh cilantro (coriander), chopped (optional)

Place tomatoes and peppers in a saucepan of boiling water and cook over fairly high heat for about 10 minutes. Slip skins off tomatoes and chop; stem peppers and put peppers and tomatoes into blender; add salt and a few sprigs of cilantro if desired, and whirl in blender to combine smoothly. Store in refrigerator.

Sam Huddleston, 75, who writes on Texas lore and Texas food, on chili: "My little-yearlin' granddaughter, a sixth-generation Texan, went straight from Pablum to a bowl of chili, and if you have ever eaten Pablum you will see where this is a great stride." Here's the recipe that won the child over.

SAM HUDDLESTON'S LARRUPIN' MESS OF CHILI
2 tablespoons whole cumin (comino)
2 medium onions, diced
3 cloves garlic, diced
2 tablespoons fat (vegetable oil or rendered meat fat)
3½ pounds lean beef cut into ½-inch cubes
2 tablespoons paprika
6 tablespoons fresh chili powder
salt, to taste
cracker meal or parched flour (flour dried in a low-temperature oven)

1. In a heavy skillet, toast the whole cominos lightly. To wake up the flavors, crush with a rolling pin. If you don't have the whole kind, use ground cumin, but skip the toasting.

2. In a commodious heavy skillet, saute onions and garlic in the fat. Add meat and sear until it is a grayish color. Dump the whole into a large pot, add paprika, cumin and chili powder and enough water to cover. Simmer about 45 minutes before tasting for salt, then salt to taste. Continue simmering about another 45 minutes "or until the air is permeated with heavenly odors and neighbors hang around the back door."

3. About 10 minutes before serving, make a paste with cold water and a small amount of cracker meal or parched flour and stir into the chili to thicken. "You'll have to play it by ear," said Huddleston as to the thickening. "Keep adding 'til chili is thick like the Sunday chicken gravy your mama used to make when the preacher came." Makes 6 servings.

Benne Gold Atkin writes books on San Antonio's old-time cookery, beer cookery and Mexican cookery. (They're $4.25 each or $10.50 for the set of three by mail from Benne G. Atkin, 103A Primera, San Antonio, Texas 78212.)

Hottest health food is low-cal

It has all the ingredients of the hottest health food and diet craze ever.

According to Reader's Digest, eating spicy Mexican food — especially the "Tex-Mex" variety souped up with hot chili peppers — provides significant amounts of vitamins and minerals, can help cut down salt intake and even reduce the risk of respiratory problems.

"Very low in fat, peppers have only 22 calories in 3½ ounces. Ounce for ounce, they have 2½ times more vitamin C than do oranges, and they supply vitamin A, protein, iron and potassium. Fans claim that peppery food makes salt unnecessary," writes food authority Jack Denton Scott.

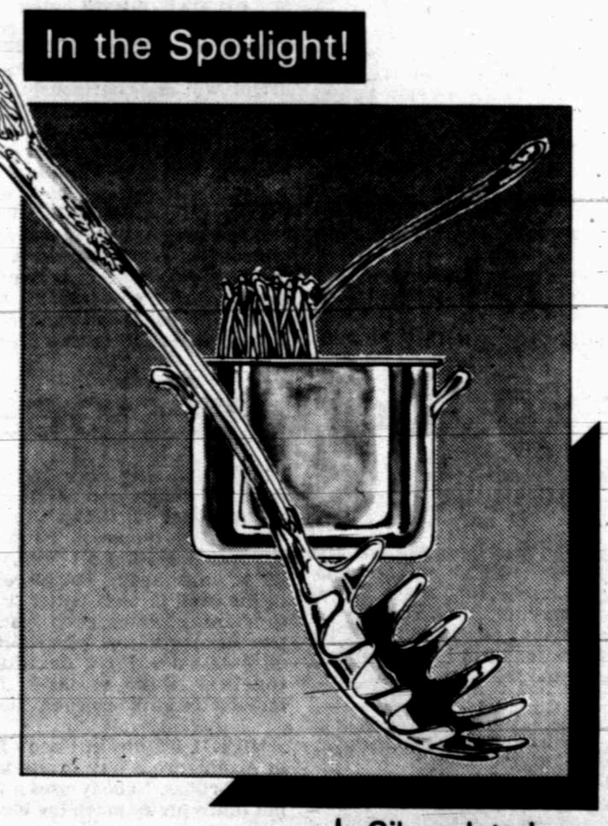

Dr. Irwin Ziment, professor of medicine at UCLA, believes eating chilies "stimulates the lungs and sinuses to produce watery secretions to loosen mucus in the airways and that people who habitually eat spicy foods have less chronic obstructive lung disease and fewer problems with sinusitus."

Salads important to meal

By OLIVIA AND PAUL BENSON
Copley News Service

Salads can be one of the most delicious parts of a dinner — and one of the most important in creating the full effect of a meal. A salad whose ingredients and dressing complement the rest of the meal perfectly is a delight to each of the senses.

Salad dressing, for many people, means something that comes out of a bottle from the local supermarket ... or, at best, from a packet of premixed ingredients, to which the cook adds vinegar and oil. While some of the commercially produced dressings are quite good, we feel that it is a shame for any cook to miss the experience of creating the perfect salad and dressing for an exceptional meal.

The list of potential salad ingredients is almost endless. When you are planning a salad, think of the rest of the courses, and the textures and tastes that would complement them best. Salads also can add color to a table, so consider, too, the visual effect of the salad you are planning.

When you are choosing a dressing, it is important to be sure that it contrasts with the rest of the meal. For example, today's recipe for Herb Dressing, the lightest of the three, is excellent with rich and spicy dishes, or those that contain garlic. The Spicy Sour Cream Dressing goes very well with Greek foods, curry, spicy Oriental foods and as a dip for raw vegetables. The Garlic Dressing is perfect for livening up relatively bland entrees such as steak, chops or roasts.

Lemon juice may be substituted for vinegar in any of the recipes. Experimenting with different vinegars also can provide subtle variations on a theme. Red, white and herb vinegars, used in the same basic recipe, will produce very different effects. Many markets carry vinegars with tarragon and other herbs, which subtly alter the taste of dressings.

Olive oils also vary greatly. We have found that the darker-hued olive oils, amber or light green, often are best for making salad dressing. First-pressing and "double virgin" oils are both the finest and most expensive.

Substituting various herbs and spices in the three basic recipes also can produce an almost endless variety of subtly different salad dressings.

HERB DRESSING
1 tsp. dry mustard
1 tsp. dill weed
¼ tsp. tarragon
1 pinch thyme
1 pinch oregano
1 tbsp. fresh parsley
½ tsp. salt (or to taste)
¼ tsp. freshly ground black pepper (or to taste)
1 tsp. soy sauce
2 tbsps. vinegar
⅓-½ cup olive oil

Stir together all ingredients except olive oil until mustard is dissolved. llow to sit for 10 minutes, then blend in olive oil. Start with one-third cup, and add additional oil to taste.

Makes enough for large salad for 4.

SPICY SOUR CREAM DRESSING
1-2 large cloves garlic, finely minced
1 tsp. dill weed
¼ cup chopped fresh parsley
1 tsp. salt (or to taste)
½ tsp. pepper (or to taste)
1 tbsp. lemon juice
1 pt. sour cream

Mix all ingredients together and stir briskly. If possible, make this dressng ahead of time — even the day before. The garlic and black pepper make this a fairly spicy dressing, so you may want to experiment to be sure that it's not too piquant for your palate.

GARLIC DRESSING
½ tsp. salt (or to taste), preferably coarse kosher or sea salt
1-2 cloves garlic, finely minced
¼ tsp. freshly ground black pepper (or to taste)
2 tbsps. vinegar
One third-½ cup olive oil

It is best to make this dressing in round-bottomed, oiled wooden salad bowl Put salt, garlic and pepper in bowl, and use back of fork to mash mixture against sides of bowl. Coarseness of salt and pepper will help to pulverize garlic. When mixture has become pastelike, add vinegar and stir to dissolve salt. Add olive oil (one-third cup to start, add to taste), and blend vigorously with fork.

Makes enough for large salad for 4.

Barbecue aromatic

Aromatic woods in the fire can add flavor to barbecues, according to the National Live Stock and Meat Board. The outdoor chef can now treat family and guests to a wide variety of smoke-flavored meat from the grill.

From alder, apple, cherry, grapevine, hickory, maple and mesquite to oak — sometimes the choice is difficult. But not all the woods are readily available and may have to be ordered from a mail-order source.

The decision on which wood to use on the grill is further complicated by the choice of charcoal, sticks and chips, cooking chunks or logs (whole or pressed slices). Selection depends on the size of the fire, total time required for cooking and amount of flavor desired on the cooked food.

— Mesquite charcoal is made from charred mesquite wood which is pressed together. Priced higher than other briquets, mesquite coals also reach a hotter temperature. Prepare and cook the same as with other charcoal products. Mesquite charcoal is compatable with all red meats.

— Chunks and small logs may be used for direct cooking or soaked and placed on top of burning fuel to produce the smoked flavor for food. Chunks are usually available in about two- to three-inch squares.

— Chips and sticks. Chips are thinner pieces of wood, about two-inches wide and one-inch thick, and are most suitable for gas grills. Chips tend to produce a lot of sparks when burned with briquets. Soaked chips are added to a fire to produce a smoke which flavors the food. Soak chips and chunks for 15 minutes to several hours. Soaking prolongs burning time, but is an optional step. After placing on grill wait about five minutes before cooking. To enhance smoked wood flavor cook in covered cooker or water smoker.

The National Live Stock and Meat Board suggests the following wood and meat combinations:

— Alder has a mild, sweet, woody flavor which is good with pork.
— Apple, with its delicate, fruity flavor, is also good with pork.
— Cherry has a fruity aroma and a mild woodsy taste good for pork, beef or lamb.
— Grapevine is mild but slightly tart and gives a good flavor to beef or veal.
— Hickory has a flavor which is delicate but distinctively sweet and is ideal for beef, pork or sausage.
— Mesquite has a mild woodsy flavor; good for beef or pork.
— Oak, with its medium-strong flavor, is perfect for beef, sausage or veal.

For the newest in outdoor cooking equipment try a water smoker. The National Live Stock and Meat Board staff said the best aspects of three basic pieces of cooking equipment — the grill and cover of a kettle cooker; the slow cooking of a range or crock pot, and the flavors and aromas from an old-fashioned smokehouse — are combined in water smokers. "Layers" are used in water smokers — top layer is the grill; second layer the pan for hot, steaming water, and bottom layer the coals or other source of heat where soaked wood chips such as hickory or mesquite can be added to provide the desired smoke.

DEAR ABBY

Fathering record goes to 109-year-old

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a writer for the Baton Rouge (La.) Advocate and have a longtime interest in gerontology.

In a recent Dear Abby column, "Pennsylvania Dutchman" stated that his 24-year-old cousin had married an 81-year-old man. It was her first marriage and his third. Ten months later they had a son. "Pennsylvania Dutchman" stated that he had never heard of a man in his 80s fathering a child, and he asked you if this 81-year-old man had set some kind of record.

You replied, "Probably not. But if somebody out there can top this, I'll hear about it."

Well, I'm responding with an enclosure of an item from "Believe It or Not" by Ripley. It appeared on Nov. 11, 1970: "The oldest living American is Sylvester Magee of Columbia, Miss., who fought on both sides during the Civil War, became a father at the age of 109, and at the time this was written he is in excellent health at the age of 129.

"His birth, on May 19, 1841, has been officially attested by the state of Mississippi." — MIKE MULHERN

DEAR ABBY: In reference to the "Pennsylvania Dutchman," I can top him. In 1891, a local physician in the town of Saluda, S.C., married a young woman who was a first cousin of my grandfather.

The groom was 74, and the bride was 16. They had their first child when he was 75, and their fifth child when he was 86! He died the following year, or they probably would have had more children.

The young widow subsequently married and lived to the ripe old age of 87!

Lest you think I jest, this is documented and easily verified. The dates of the abovementioned man and wife and all their children are on their tombstones in Travis Park Cemetery in Saluda.

If you print this, please delete all the names (including mine), as I have a whole slew of relatives still living in Saluda, and I wouldn't want them to think I thought this was corny. But I do. — NAME WITHHELD

DEAR ABBY: In doing genealogical research for our family history book, I found documents revealing that my husband's great-great-grandfather married his second wife when he was 88. She was 31. Ten months later, when he was 89, they had a daughter. Three years later, when he was 92, they had a son.

He died at 93, and his two children received benefits on his Revolutionary War service — pensions and land grants. (This is documented in the Pension Bureau in Washington, D.C.)

Of course, being the legal husband of a child's mother doesn't necessarily mean that he is the biological father of her children, but legal documents and affidavits therein do, in this case, prove that there was a man whose wife bore children when he was 89 and 92. — VIRGINIA FACT FINDER

DEAR ABBY: My great-great-great-great-grandfather was born and raised in Salt Lake City in the days when Mormons could have more than one wife at a time. Our family records show that he lived to be 99 years old, had 22 wives and a total of 136 children. According to our records, one of his wives presented him with twin boys when she was 23 and he was 97. I'm told it wasn't all that unusual back in those days. — J.F.S. IN OGDEN, UTAH

Small potato pie requested

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: Some months ago you gave a recipe for a large potato pie, baked in a 10-inch pie plate. It was a great success when I served it at a buffet party. Now my husband and I want to bake the pie for our own enjoyment. Could you give a smaller recipe for it? — RETIRED.

DEAR RETIRED: With pleasure. I am happy the pie made a hit at your house. It happens to be one of my own favorites

POTATO AND CHIVE PIE

Pastry, recipe follows
3 medium (1 pound) potatoes
1 small (1 to 2 ounces) onion, finely chopped
¼ cup finely chopped chives
Salt and pepper to taste
1 tablespoon butter
Egg Wash: 1 large egg yolk beaten with 2 teaspoons water
½ cup heavy cream

Make Pastry and chill.

Peel potatoes and as you do so drop them into a large bowl filled with cold water. Drain potatoes and dry on paper toweling; thinly slice and drop into fresh cold water to soak while you roll out Pastry.

Cut Pastry in half. Roll out one half to a 10-inch round; fit into an 8-inch pie plate. Roll out other half to a 10-inch round and reserve.

Drain sliced potatoes and dry on paper toweling. In a large bowl, toss potatoes with onion, chives, salt and pepper; turn into pastry-lined pie plate; dot with butter. Cover with reserved pastry round, trim edges even with rim of plate and seal with fork tines.

Mark a 2-inch round in center of pastry without cutting through. Cut 4 slashes, each 2 inches long, halfway between the center and the edge. Brush with Egg Wash.

Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven on rack below center until potatoes are tender and pastry brown — 1 hour. Cut around marked center and remove; gradually pour cream into opening; replace cut-out round. Return to turned-off oven until cream is absorbed — about 10 minutes. Serve at once. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

PASTRY: Into 1¼ cups unbleached all-purpose flour cut 10 tablespoons butter until it is in fine pieces. Gradually stir in 2 tablespoons water; shape into a ball; cover and chill.

Restructured meat products accepted

By MERLE ELLIS

A steer is not all steak and a pig is not all pork chops, but it may not be that way for long.

Restructured meat products are finding more and more acceptance with consumers in this country. Some of them o the market now and some in the experimental stages are a whole lot better than "not bad." I recently tasted a flaked-and-formed steak in the meat lab at Iowa State University that had more flavor and better texture than the Prime rib at one of the better restaurants in the same area.

"What," you ask, "is a flaked-and-formed steak? What is restructured meat?" Simply put, they are large pieces of meat mechanically reduced to small flakes, shreds or chunks of uniform size that are sort of put back together into a specific shape.

You all have come in contact with some type of restructured meat. You may not have realized it, but if you have bought almost any kind of cooked ham or turkey ham, chip steak or cutlet, you have, very probably, had a restructured meat product.

There are some very important advantages to restructured meat, the foremost of which is price. With restructuring, for example, it is possible to provide a beef product in the intermediate price range — a bit more expensive than ground beef, yet far less expensive than a tenderloin steak. Such a product, it seems, is perfect for today's life-style. It may be cooked quickly with dry heat (on a broiler or barbecue grill) and provides a very satisfying steak-like eating experience at a relatively low price. The reason that these meats are less expensive is because less tender and more plentiful cuts may be successfully used in their production. It doesn't take a steak to make a steak, if you know what I mean.

You are going to be seeing a lot of new and different restructured meat products in meat markets in the not-too-distant future. It might, I thought, be interesting to know a bit about howthey are made.

The flaking process is accomplished by special machines that use stationary cutting heads of varying sizes to achieve the desired flake size. Meat is propelled across these cutting surfaces by a high speed impeller, producing thin, cleanly-cut flakes. The texture and tenderness of the final product may be established by controlling the flake size and the temperature of the meat. Just how tender would you like your steak? With restructuring, it is possible to have it just the way you want.

It also is possible, with modern meat processing equipment, to control flavor and fat content. Lean muscles with fat and connective tissue removed may be processed into larger flakes to achieve the optimum steak like texture. The fatty meat may be processed through cutting heads that produce much smaller flakes. Depending on the ratio of fat to lean when the two are "glued" back together, the taste and juiciness of the product may be controlled.

"Bind" probably is a better term than "glue." Binding is accomplished either by extracting meat protein from the flakes themselves, or by adding a non-meat protein.

The most commonly used binders are the contractile proteins in the meat itself. These binders are forced to the surface of the flakes through simple blending.

In some products, non-meat binders are used. These might be texturized soy protein, gelatin, wheat gluten, egg albumin, or one of several milk protein products.

The product is then formed into the desired shape with a forming machine — a meat log press, an extrusion system or an individual portion press — then packaged and frozen.

The impact of restructured meat products already is being felt by the meat industry. Several products now are on the market and you can be sure many more are on their way. Give them a try. Some of them, I've found, have better flavor and texture than the meat they imitate.

Merle Ellis is a columnist for Chronicle Publishing Co.

Hearst News Service

Why does one person's mouth water at the mere mention of oysters while someone else's curls in disgust?

Puzzling out the many reasons has left scientists feeling at times like blind men trying to describe an elephant, says an article in the October issue of Science Digest. We are turned on — or off — by the flavor, smell, texture and appearance of food. Cultural biases come into play; so do our genes.

According to psychophysicist Linda Bartoshuk of Yale University's School of Medicine, "We're born liking sweet tastes and disliking bitter ones." But we learn other fondnesses and aversions.

Until recently, psychologist Paul Rozin of the University of Pennsylvania assumed that we learned these things from our parents. But when he conducted the first surveys on food preferences within families, he was surprised to find to find he was wrong. Parents have no significant effect on their children's likes and dislikes or desires to try new foods, Rozin reported.

He now thinks cultural background is the single most powerful influence on our tastes because it steers us to certain combinations of foods and flavors. Americans are familiar with salmon poached or broiled and served with lemon; the Japanese eat it raw and garnished with ginger.

But Rozin was quick to point to the hitch in his theory: "There's a lot of variation in tastes within nationalities." To be sure, not all Japanese like raw salmon, and many Americans have overcome their cultural bias against raw fish and now enjoy it. Individual food preferences, Rozin believes, "are accidental. If you get sick on something once, you're not likely to eat it again."

Genes may help determine why we eat what we do. It's known there is a gene that controls our ability to taste the bitter chemicals phenylthiocarbamide (PTC) and propylthiouracil (PROP), which are man-made but similar to chemicals present in green leafy vegetables.

Soups among Russians' favorite dishes

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Soups in most countries run the gamut from gourmet delicacies to robust peasant creations. But nowhere have I seen the variety the Russians offer.

Borscht, the most famous soup of that vast land, ranges from a filling mixture thick with vegetables and chunks of beef that is a specialty of the Soviet Ukraine to a clear summer consomme tinted red with beet juice. But there are many other kinds of soup.

Some Russian soups take a bit of getting used to in the West. Like solianka, made with fish or meat blended with salted cucumbers. Or rassolnik, a mixture of sorrel, cucumbers and other vegetables garnished with chopped kidneys.

In summertime, many Soviets make a midday meal of light soup soured with kvas, a fermented cereal or rye bread liquor.

The Russians are agreed on one thing. The meal, whether it be from the kitchen of a commissar or a tractor driver, leads off with some kind of soup.

Peter the Great, according to historians, had the taste of a gourmet for many dishes, but the appetite of a laborer when it came to soup. An average supper for Peter included a soup containing four kinds of cabbage. But sometimes he varied this first course with other soups like sauerkraut broth, spicy pickle and kidney soup and a lavish mixture of sturgeon and white wine that was really a main course.

When I was in Russia at the end of World War II, I sampled a couple of unusual soups. One was a chilled combination of tart apple slices, sour cream and red wine. Another was a blend of beer, sour cream, egg yolks and sugar. Both tasted better than they sound.

Often the meat intended as the main course of a Russian dinner is cooked in with the soup to give it added flavor, then removed to a platter and surrounded by vegetables.

Since I have done more than one column on borscht over the years, I offer this recipe for shchi, a cabbage soup, by Russian-born author Nina Petrova in her excellent book, "The Best of Russian Cooking" (Crown Publishers, Inc., One Park Avenue, New York, NY 10016).

SHCHI

10 cups of beef stock or bouillon
1½ pounds white cabbage
2 medium carrots
1 large potato
1 leek
1 onion
½ medium turnip
½ medium parsnip
1 stick celery
1 sprig parsley
4 peppercorns
1 bay leaf
Salt to taste

Peel and wash vegetables and cut into fine strips. Chop parsley fine. Add vegetables to stock, together with peppercorns and bay leaf. Bring to boil, cover and simmer about 1 hour until vegetables are cooked. Stir occasionally. Ten minutes before serving, add salt. Serve piping hot. Serves 6 people.

There's no need to knead rolls

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: I've never baked with yeast and want to do so. Before I try making a loaf of bread for which the dough has to be kneaded, I'd like to bake some no-knead rolls. My mother once had a booklet that gave easy ways to bake these, but she mislaid it. Have you a recipe for such rolls? — BRIDE.

DEAR BRIDE: I suggest you try the following recipe for Oatmeal Walnut Yeast Rolls and see how you make out. No kneading is necessary and neither is shaping because the batter is dropped into muffin-pan cups. — C.B.

OATMEAL WALNUT YEAST ROLLS

5 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 envelope dry yeast
½ cup warm water (110 to 115 degrees)
2½ to 3 cups unbleached all-purpose flour
1 cup quick-cooking or regular oats
1 large egg
½ cup chopped (medium-fine) walnuts

In a large bowl stir together boiling water, 4 tablespoons of the butter, sugar and salt until the butter melts; cool to lukewarm (95 degrees).

In a 1-cup measure, sprinkle yeast over the warm water; stir to dissolve; add to the butter mixture with 2 cups of the flour, oats, egg and walnuts; with a wooden spoon, mix well. Stir in enough of the remaining flour to make a stiff batter. Cover and let rise in a warm place (about 80 degrees) until doubled in size — 1 to 1½ hours.

Generously butter 18 muffin-pan cups (each 2½ inches across the top and 1 inch deep). Stir down batter; spoon into muffin cups, filling them two-thirds full. Let rise, uncovered, in a warm place (about 80 degrees) until nearly double in size — 20 to 25 minutes.

Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — 18 to 20 minutes. Melt remaining 1 tablespoon butter and brush over hot rolls. Remove to wire rack. Good served warm or reheated.

Makes 18.

Driving a truck for a living isn't so unusual.

Saving lives is.

There was the time he pulled a woman from a burning car. And the time he gave mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to a woman who lay lifeless in a twisted wreck.

It seemed that whenever someone needed a hand, the Blue Max was there. Sometimes he gave money. Sometimes food. Sometimes just the warmth of his cab while stranded motorists waited out a storm.

And when people asked how they could repay him, he'd always say "... just help someone else ..."

But fortunately, there's a little Tom Carney in everyone.

You don't have to save a life, or give up your life's savings. As long as you give something. Your time. Your talents. Your money.

What you give isn't so important. Even a little helps a lot.

From Staff Reports

Pasta is not as fattening as many believe. A five-ounce serving of cooked pasta — an average entree serving — contains only about 210 calories. The cheese, cream, oil and other calorie-laden items pasta is often covered with are the culprits which run the calories up in many pasta dishes.

Try this mix of vermicelli with a vegetable sauce served with baked chicken. Only 285 calories per serving. Or try lasagne prepared with chicken, a white sauce and parsley — only 370 calories per serving for this dish.

VERMICELLI WITH BAKED CHICKEN

1 broiler-fryer (about 2-1/2 pounds) cut in serving-size pieces
1 clove garlic, halved
1/2 cup chicken stock or broth, divided
1/4 cup chopped scallions
2 large tomatoes, chopped
1/2 cup shredded carrot
1/2 tsp. basil, crushed
8 ounces vermicelli
1 tbsp. salt, optional
3 quarts boiling water

Place chicken on rack of roasting pan. Rub both sides of each piece with cut side of garlic. Bake, skin-side up, at 375-F., basting once or twice with two tablespoons of chicken stock, for 45 minutes or until juices run clear when chicken is pierced with fork.

While chicken is baking, in small saucepan over medium heat cook remaining six tablespoons chicken stock and scallions until tender. Add tomatoes, carrot and basil and continue cooking, covered, about 15 minutes.

Meanwhile, add vermicelli and salt to rapidly boiling water so water continues to boil. Cook uncovered, stirring occasionally, until tender. Drain in colander. Place on heated serving platter and top with sauce. Serve with chicken. Calories per serving: 285. Makes six servings.

CHICKEN LASAGNE

9 lasagne
1 tbsp. salt, optional
3 quarts boiling water
3 tbsps. butter or margarine
1/2 cup finely chopped onion
3 tbsps. all-purpose flour
1-3/4 cups skim milk
2/3 cup copped parsley, divided
2 cups lowfat cottage cheese
2 cups coarsely chopped cooked chicken

Gradually add lasagne and salt to rapidly boiling water so water continues to boil. Cook uncovered, stirring occasionally, until tender. Drain in colander.

While lasagne is cooking melt butter in medium saucepan over low heat. Add onion and cook until tender, about five minutes. Stir in flour with wire whisk; cook until thickened. Gradually stir in milk and continue cooking, stirring constantly, until mixture comes to boil; add 1/3 cup parsley.

In very lightly greased 13x9x2-inch baking pan pour little sauce over bottom. Layer with three lasagne over bottom. Spread some of cottage cheese on top. Sprinkle with some of chicken. Continue layering lasagne, cottage cheese, sauce and chicken until all are used. Sprinkle with remaining 1/3 cup parsley. Bake at 375-F. about 25 minutes or until lasagne bubbles around edges of pan. Let stand five minutes before serving.

Autumn: Season to pick pears

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

Sweet yellow Bartletts, the summer pear, are on the market through November. These are superior for eating, with a thin skin and juicy, white flesh.

The Comice pear, with a smooth yellow-green skin and buttery texture, makes its appearance in autumn. It is followed in midwinter by the Anjou and Bosc varieties. The Bosc as well as the Winter Nelis are russet-skinned pears. their cinnamon-colored markings are characteristic of the fruit, and in no way affect their quality.

A medium-size pear contains only about 100 calories, is high in fiber and rich in vitamins C and A. The bell-shaped fruit also contains B-complex vitamins and a number of trace minerals — but is low in sodium.

The pears in your local market are not tree ripened. They contain the hormone ethylene, which also is found in bananas and avocados. This hormone promotes the ripening of the fruit after it has been harvested, and in pears, the process takes place from the inside out. This is why a pear that seems just right on the outside can be mushy on the inside.

When shopping, choose fruit that is firm and free of blemishes, with just a hint of aroma. Allow to ripen at room temperature and away from light. When ripe, the fruit will give slightly under pressure around the stem end.

For a healthful snack, cut fresh pears in half and scoop out seeds. Fill cavity with chunky peanut butter, sprinkle with a few drops of lemon juice and a bit of chopped raisin. All pears are good with cheese (my favorite is Brie), and the combination makes for a light and sophisticated dessert.

AUTUMN LOAF

½ cup grated raw zucchini
½ cup grated apple
¾ cup chopped walnuts
1½ cups vegetable oil
1¼ cups honey
1 tsp. baking powder
¾ tsp. baking soda
½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. ground cloves
¼ tsp. nutmeg
2 eggs, beaten
3 cups whole wheat flour
3 tbsps. wheat germ
1 tbsp. grated lemon rind

Combine pear slices, grated zucchini and apple and walnuts in bowl; set asie. In large bowl, mix together oil, honey, baking powder and soda, salt and spices. Blend well. Gradually stir in half of flour. Beat in eggs, then add remaining flour, wheat germ and lemon rind. Add contents of first bowl and stir to blend thoroughly. Turn mixture into two oiled loaf pans, dividing equally. Bake in 325 F oven 1 hour 20 minutes, or until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean.

Makes 2 loaves.

SPICY POACHED PEARS

1 cup apple juice
3 tbsps. honey
⅛ tsp. ground nutmeg
3 tsps. butter or margarine
Cinnamon

Cut pears in half lengthwise; core and peel. Combine apple juice, honey andnutmeg in 3-quart pan. Cover and bring to boil. Add pear halves and replace cover; reduce heat to simmer. Cook pears 10 to 15 minutes until tender when pierced with fork. Place pear halves in small dessert dishes, cut side up, and spoon cooking liquid evenly over tops. Dot each with ½ teaspoon butter or margarine and sprinkle lightly with ground cinnamon. Serve warm.

Serves 3 or 6.

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WALNUT CREEK, Calif.-It's not quite fair to call Dr. Scott Sanders a food alchemist, but as he darts from oven to oven in his pristine laboratory, there is a sort of magic and mystery in the air.

Today the search is for the perfect nacho-flavored snack cracker. Invention, imitation and serendipity are the key elements in the work Sanders and his cohorts carry out here for Safeway Stores Inc.

The inspiration: a cracker marketed by Nabisco. The assignment: to duplicate it or improve on it. The tools: chemistry, sophisticated instruments and an old-fashioned oven.

For starters, one of Sanders' chemists puts a homely little Nabisco into her atomic absorption spectrophotometer to find out how much salt is in it. Then she uses extraction instruments and enzymes to learn whether it contains sucrose, glucose or fructose and how much is in it. She does similar tests for the shortening content.

AFTER THAT, Sanders and his staff begin with a basic formula for snack crackers, adding and altering flavorings and contents until they begin to approximate the Nabisco cracker.

As a technician popped trays of cracker dough into an oven the other day, Sanders said, "We're loading it up with corn and cheese. We're now on the 11th round of testing. ... There probably will be 15 more before we nail it."

When the best of the batches are sorted out, recipes will be refined and real people will be brought in to sample the product and make suggestions. It may be back to the drawing board for the cracker, or it may be a move into production as a new Safeway-brand food.

This kind of creativity is only part of what's happening in Safeway's laboratory complex. Its food scientists and technicians are constantly at work, parsing and dissecting the best-known national brands with an eye toward making copies.

So why, you may ask, would Safeway want to copy someone else's crackers or yogurt or ice cream? The answer is (a) the house brand, and (b) money.

House brands are the products marketed under a store's own label. They usually sell for less but make more profit than the more familiar, nationally advertised products by Heinz, Campbell, Nabisco (or whatever) that populate the supermarket shelves.

THE IDEA, at least as Safeway approaches marketing, is to draw consumers into its stores by offering specials on the national brands — products known to most shoppers — and then tempt them into buying a house brand that usually is displayed right next to the advertised special.

"Our objective is to offer a product that is identical to the national brand, not better," said Peter A. Magowan, chief executive officer of the 2,500-store chain. "We think that if we are able to hit the quality side, we have to give the customer a saving — we aim for 10 to 15 percent — and we want more profit than the national brand gives us."

Once in the store, the customer is confronted with a choice: buy a national brand of dry cereal, say, or go with the Safeway brand that may cost 20 cents less but may in fact be the very same product, from the same factory as the more expensive model.

They stick with one or two label names for these items. But at Safeway, it's become an alphabet soup of private labels and products.

SAFEWAY SELLS about 4,600 different items under more than a dozen brand names, ranging from its Town House and Lucerne labels to its less familiar Casa del Pueblo and Jell-well labels.

The company operates 105 plants that turn out dairy products, ice cream, edible oils, soft drinks, roasted coffee, luncheon meats and hot dogs, bread, bleach and detergents, spices and other products — all confected to reproduce, as closely as possible, a selected national brand.

Other products — corned beef hash to name one — are made by processors who must follow Safeway's recipes. Canned peas, for example, come from different plants on the east and west coasts, but all must meet the same Town House standard.

All of Safeway's dry cereals come from the Ralston Purina Co. Its canned soups are made by Heinz, but the recipes are patterned after Campbell's.

Although Safeway won't disclose sales figures, they obviously are huge. The house brands are considered important and profitable enough for Safeway to maintain a sophisticated laboratory in this community east of Oakland, where technicians break down national brands and consider items that can be added to the company larder.

USING STANDARD chemical-laboratory equipment as well as some other sophisticated machines that automatically analyze a product's contents and print out readings that look like a seismograph's, the Safeway food experts can duplicate just about anything.

Just about. While they have concocted a soup that tastes just like Campbell's and crackers that taste like Nabisco's, for example, they still can't break the secret of the all-time best-selling Heinz Ketchup, which nobody in the industry has been been able to duplicate.

Marketing executives, for example, think their Town House canned pineapple is superior to better-known national brands. Safeway's comes from Hawaii; Dole, the main competition, gets its from the Philippines.

On the other hand, Safeway's popular Bel-air frozen orange juice actually was downgraded after officials decided it was better than Minute Maid, the product it was supposed to emulate. Safeway used 100 percent Valencia orange juice; the competitor didn't.

Before Magowan became CEO in 1980, Safeway put less weight on national brands as magnets to get customers into the stores.

COMPANY OFFICIALS promoted the Safeway brands-and, predictably, the reaction was so-so. Magowan changed that.

"I've tried to emphasize the national brands more than we were doing," he said. "We wanted the traffic that they would bring, through the advertising those companies do, through the name recognition their products have."

This is where Walnut Creek comes into play. Scientists here work on new products that can go into the Safeway line, but they also are continually testing existing products to assure that the manufacturers are meeting Safeway's standards.

"We bring in all the competing products," explained Ed Henney, the executive vice president who oversees all of Safeway's house-brand developments and its manufacturing plants. "To give you an example, we've brought in various dog foods and then we have subjected them to taste tests by dogs."

As a result of the findings on dog food, the company's recently purchased pet food plant in Kansas is gearing its output to the taste of the Average American Pooch. Similar things happen with charcoal (made in a Safeway plant), popcorn (from another company plant) and you name it.

One recent afternoon, the dairy-foods section of the laboratory was alive with activity. Tests were being run on the content of the vanilla supplied to Safeway's 13 ice cream plants in the United States. Parcels of dairy products, shipped in dry ice from these plants, were in for regular twice-monthly quality tests.

Dr. Ken Rash, an ice cream and yogurt specialist who heads researcha nd product development, was tinkering with a test concoction — a combination of flavored yogurt and cottage cheese.

It's just an idea right now, but if it works it could take advantage of the yogurt boom and provide a way to boost declining cottage cheese consumption at the same time.

Rash's proudest accomplishment is the ice cream that Safeway sells under the Lucerne label, which consumers often think is a national brand. Henney's brain-trusters came up with the Lucerne flavor-of-the-month promotion.

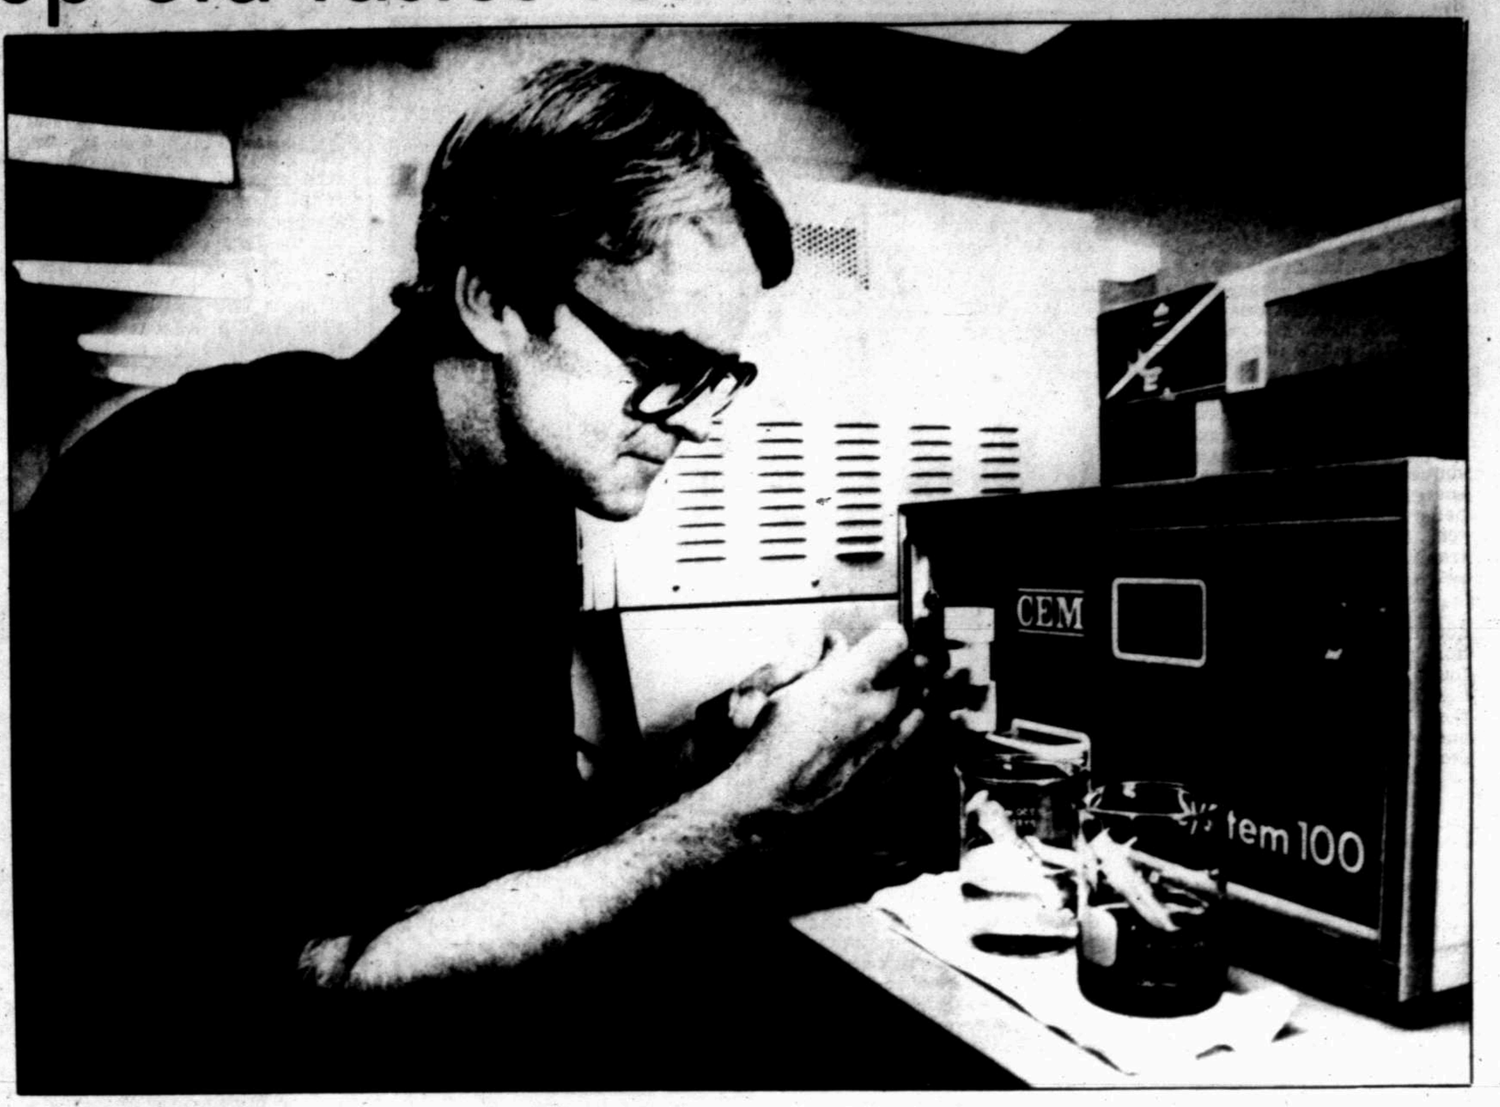

THAT, OF course, keeps Rash churning. To honor the Olympic games, he came up with a gold-rush flavor (California angle, you see). For Maryland's 350th anniversary, he whipped up a dandy Chesapeake wild berry ripple.

When a popular West Coast label came out with a double chocolate, Rash quickly broke it down and developed a comparable recipe for Lucerne (tastes better, actually).

When he's not in the ice cream lab, Rash and his aides may be toying with yogurt. Their last big assignment in the yogurt area followed the emergence of Whitney's national brand as one of the market biggies. "We've developed our own new product to be comparable to Whitney's," Rash explained.

Was it tough? Yogurt is yogurt, after all. "No, actually it was very easy. All we had to do was find out how much egg yolk Whitney's contained — it's the only one with suspended egg solids in the mix," he said.

Down the hall in bread and baking, Scott Sanders was buzzing from project to project like a hummingbird in a lilac bush.

At a Safeway Stores laboratory in Walnut Creek, Calif., Earl Christiansen injects ice cream into a machine to measure solids and fat content. It is one of many tests the supermarket chain carries out in search for house brands that measure up to nationally known products.

East, West meet in salad

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Interest in Oriental cooking is not confined to using a wok. Skillful cooks in the United States have taken to concocting salads combining popular Asian ingredients along with those Americans have used for generations.

WEST COAST SALAD

Oriental Dressing, recipe follows
4 lettuce cups
2 cups lightly packed pared, shredded carrot
Two 3¾-ounce cans brisling sardines, drained
1 medium red pepper, seeded and sliced in rings
16 snow peas, trimmed and blanched
1 cup sliced raw mushrooms
½ cup sliced cucumber
Fresh dill sprigs

Make Oriental Dressing.

Place lettuce cups on individual serving plates and mound with carrots. Arrange sardines, pepper rings, snow peas, mushrooms and cucumber around carrot-filled lettuce cups. Just before serving, stir Dressing and pour over salad; garnish with dill.

Makes 4 servings.

ORIENTAL DRESSING

3 tbsps. white rice vinegar
1 tbsp. lemon juice
1 tbsp. soy sauce
1 tsp. sugar
1 tbsp. thinly sliced scallion
1 tsp. toasted sesame seeds

In a small serving bowl whisk together oil, vinegar, lemon juice, soy sauce and sugar; stir in scallion and sesame seeds; cover and refrigerate. Makes about ¾ cup.

DEVILED TOMATOES

Rinse and dry 1 pint (about 30 good-size) cherry tomatoes. Trim tops and scoop out pulp. Turn shells upside down and drain. Fill shells with a mixture of deviled ham (use a 4½-ounce can), ½ cup finely grated Swiss cheese and ½ cup finely chopped pimiento-stuffed green olives. Sprinkle tops with ¼ cup finely grated Swiss cheese. Cover and chill briefly before serving.

Peaches combined with pastries

"The world's finest patisserie comes from Vienna," not an easy admission coming from perhaps France's greatest chef, the late Fernand Point. But Vienna's pastry lore is as rich as the city's traditions for its love of bread and pastries goes back over 500 years.

One of Vienna's favorites is the Linzertorte, a single layered cake filled with raspberry jam and covered with latticed strips of dough. These Peach Linzer Squares are inspired by the Viennese version but a golden fresh peach puree replaces the more traditional raspberry filling. Ground almonds enhance the dough which also benefits by the addition of toasted nutty wheat germ.

The peach season is back and what better way to welcome its arrival than baking both these fresh peach pastries while the cooler weather still permits.

The Peach bars have a similar resemblance to fig bars. Nutritious and not overly sweet, the pastry is tender and the spicy peach filling is fragrant with the delicate scent of orange peel and fresh peaches.

PEACH LINZER SQUARES

½ cup sugar
1 egg yolk
2 hard-cooked egg yolks
½ cup toasted wheat germ (vacuum-packed)
¼ tsp. salt
1½ cups flour
½ cup natural almonds
Sliced peach filling.

Cream butter with sugar in bowl. Beat in both uncooked and hard-cooked egg yolks, wheat germ, salt and all but 3 three tablespoons flour, mixing just until combined. Remove ¾ cup dough; set aside. Stir almonds into remaining dough. Pat into bottom of greased 9-inch square baking pan. Bake in 375 F. oven 12 minutes until light brown around edges. Spread Peach Filling over all. Mix reserved 3 tablespoons flour into reserved dough. Roll out on lightly floured surface to ⅛-inch thickness. Cut into ¼ to ½-inch wide strips. Place strips over Peach Filling, lattice fashion, starting on diagonal from corners. Return to oven and bake 18 minutes longer, until golden. Cut into 16 squares and let cool before removing from pan. Makes 16 squares.

Peach Filling:

Puree 1 to 2 fresh peaches in blender to get 1 cup; turn into saucepan. Stir in ½ cup sugar and ½ teaspoon grated lemon peel. Bring to boil over high heat. Reduce heat and simmer, uncovered, 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Cool.

PEACH BARS

1½ cups flour
½ cup toasted wheat germ (vacuum packed)
Granulated sugar
1 tsp. orange peel, grated
¼ tsp. salt
½ cup butter
¼ cup orange juice
Peach Filling

Combine flour, wheat germ, ¼ cup sugar, orange peel and salt in bowl. Cut in butter to get fine even crumb. Add orange juice, mixing just until dough holds together. Roll out on floured surface to 16 x 14-inch rectangle. Cut into eight 14 x 2-inch strips. Transfer each strip to greased baking sheet. Spoon abut 2 tablespoons Peach Filling lengthwise down center of half of each strip. (Leave ½-inch margin around edges). Fold uncovered half of strip over filling on other half. Press edges together with fork to seal. Sprinkle tops with additional sugar. Bake in 350 F. oven 20 to 25 minutes, until edges are golden brown. Cool on pan. Slice each strip at a diagonal into 6 equal pieces. Makes 4 dozen cookies.

Peach Filling:

Combine 2 cups fresh peaches, chopped (about 2 medium), 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 tablespoon orange juice, 1 teaspoon cornstarch, ½ teaspoon grated orange peel and ¼ teaspoon cinnamon saucepan. Bring to boil over medium-high heat, stirring constantly. Reduce heat and simmer, uncovered, 3 minutes, until slightly thickened. Cool.

Brandy: National drink of Mexico

New York Times News Service

LOS REYES, Mexico — In the courtyard of a hacienda a worker in a hard hat carries a crystal glass of brandy on a silver tray. He offers it to Francisco Solorzano, assistant technical director of the giant Pedro Domecq Mexico operations here. Solorzano tilts the glass, swishes the brandy up the side, gives it a quick sniff and swallows. He initials a piece of paper and goes on with the other work in what is described as the world's largest brandy-aging facility, which is just outside Mexico City.

The unreverential manner in which brandy is treated here is symbolic of how offhandedly Mexicans regard it. For in Mexico brandy — not tequila — is the national drink other than beer. Domecq, its largest producer, reports that in Mexico alone it sells 6 million cases — 72 million one-liter bottles — of its brandy a year. That represents a bottle for every man, woman and child in Mexico. According to Domecq, brandy accounts for more than 39 percent of the wine and spirits consumed in Mexico, with tequila next at about 22 percent.

Brandy is consumed by wealthy Mexicans and the not so rich as well while they sit on bar stools or gossip in hotel lobbies or talk across a table in an outdoor cafe or watch the waves on a beach in Puerto Vallerta.

The most popular brandy is Domecq's Presidente brand, so widely drunk that it is virtually a generic name for brandy here. A light, easily mixed spirit, it has been aged only two years and is not likely to be confused with heady, decades-old spirits. Mexicans most often drink it mixed with Coca-Cola, water, ginger ale, soda water or 7-Up.

With the reduced value of the peso, a Presidente con Coke costs the equivalent of about 80 cents in a local bar and perhaps $1.25 in a fancier Mexico City hotel. In retail stores a liter costs about $3.50, while in New York it sells for about $11. More than 100,000 cases a year are sold to New Yorkers.

The Presidente label is the flagship brandy of Domecq Mexico. Industry sales figures peg the brand as the world's 14th best-selling spirit, outdoing more toney names such as Seagram's VO or Jack Daniels or Dewar's White Label.

"Mexico has always been a country that enjoyed liquor," said Raul Esperon, export manager for Domecq. Esperon, holder of a degree in economics from the University of Massachusetts, added: "You can still go to some local bars and get pulque. It's fermented cactus juice and it's been drunk in Mexico for hundreds of years. In the 1940s and 1950s rum became the most popular drink. Then a new middle class emerged and people were looking for a new drink, something that seemed more sophisticated."

The late Pedro Domecq, who had ties to the Domecq family of Spain, the centuries-old Spanish family renowned for its sherries, helped create a boom in the Mexican brandy industry when he built at Los Reyes in the 1950's. It is considered a matter of pride among the people here to outstrip Domecq Spain whenever possible, so the success of Presidente is considered quite a coup.

The aging facility for the brandy, which is 80 proof, is so immense that the barrels — more than half a million contain the three aging stages — must be stored in several cavernous buildings. The brandy is produced in 10 distilleries across Mexico and the unaged distillate, made from wine grapes, is transported here in tank trucks.

The ancient solera method is employed to age the brandy: after some months in an American oak barrel half the brandy is placed in another barrel with older brandy. Then, in the final aging step, half of that barrel is placed in still another barrel containing even older brandy.

Sweet snacks made with ginger, walnuts

GINGER MOUNDS

1½ cups sifted or stirred unbleached all-purpose flour (6 ounces)
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ground ginger
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ cup granulated sugar
½ cup butter, cut in 8 equal pats
½ cup light molasses
½ cup chopped (medium fine) walnuts
Confectioners' sugar

In a medium mixing bowl stir together flour, salt, ginger, cinnamon and sugar. With a pastry blender cut in butter until it is in fine pieces. Stir in molasses and walnuts. Using a level measuring tablespoon for each, shape into balls. Bake about 1 inch apart, on ungreased cookie sheets, in a preheated 350-degree oven until bottoms are browned — about 15 minutes. With a wide spatula, remove to wire racks to cool completely. Before serving, dust tops with confectioners' sugar. —(AP)

AT&T claims tough spot in Texas

AUSTIN (AP) — Morris Tanenbaum says he's a businessman with a dangerous combination of problems: His company, AT&T Communications, is losing money and its service is priced above the competition.

"It is very difficult for us to ask for any kind of a price increase when our prices are already too high," Tanenbaum said Tuesday.

The AT&T chairman blames the Texas Public Utility Commission for his company's uncomfortable position. He said the commission has saddled AT&T with unreasonably high payments to Southwestern Bell.

AT&T is losing $100 million a year in Texas, according to Tanenbaum.

"We have a revenue deficiency. There's no doubt about that. At the same time we're in a Catch-22 situation — our prices are already too high," he said.

AT&T's proposed solution is a 14 percent cut in Texas intrastate long distance rates, coupled with an increase in charges for WATS and other services. The cut is dependent on PUC approval of an AT&T proposal that would allow the company to pay less in access charges to Southwestern Bell.

Tanenbaum was in Austin to address Oklahoma and Texas telephone company officials. He told them that Texas is crucial to AT&T success in the post-divestiture telephone industry.

"Long distance competition in this state is fierce," he said, adding that more than 35 companies are selling long distance service in Texas.

He later told reporters that the PUC has nailed AT&T into a difficult position by setting the nation's highest access charges. Long distance companies pay access charges to local telephone companies for use of the local network.

MCI, GTE Sprint and other long distance companies are not regulated by the PUC and offer lower rates. They also pay lower access charges to the local companies. Tanenbaum said the spread between the access charges paid by AT&T and the other long distance companies is too large.

"My prices act as an umbrella for those other suppliers. I can't compete with them. If I could compete with them I bet you their prices would be lower," he said.

The access payments make up 70 percent of AT&T's expenses, according to Tanenbaum. AT&T's competitors pay less than half the access charges paid by AT&T, he said.

"You have to be awfully good to overcome that. There's just no way, no matter how efficient we are ... that we can compete with them on a price basis," said Tanenbaum.

"We are losing customers at a very rapid rate. We tend to lose the biggest customers, the customers that make the most calls," he added.

Asked if AT&T is overcharging customers, Tanenbaum said, "I'm not overcharging them in the sense that even with what I am charging them — and my prices are too high — I'm losing money."

Auto talks get serious

DETROIT (AP) — United Auto Workers President Owen Bieber said he won't even ask the union's General Motors Corp. workers to vote on GM's job security offer, but that the union has accepted it as a starting point for negotiation.

"I think it can result in a positive document," Bieber said Tuesday of GM's offer, which addresses the union's primary demand that jobs not be shipped overseas or to non-union plants.

"However, I have to say, that there's still a great deal of work to do," Bieber said. "I wouldn't take this one to ratification."

With the UAW's contract with GM set to expire at midnight Friday, neither side has revealed details of the proposal GM made Monday. The automaker said it may deliver a new wage proposal today.

The union has demanded wage increases for its 350,000 workers at GM, but its leaders have said they could call a strike over job security provisions.

No official strike deadline has been set, but the union has told the company to assume its workers won't work without a contract once the old one expires midnight Friday.

The UAW's contract with Ford, where it has 115,000 workers, also expires at midnight Friday, but there will be no strike there. The union last week singled out GM as the strike target, and hopes to sign Ford to a contract similar to that reached with GM.

Levi reduces work force in four Rio Grande plants

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — Five hundred Rio Grande Valley employees of Levi Strauss Co. will begin working a reduced work schedule as the company cuts back in clothing production in response to slow back-to-school retail sales, company officials said.

Four of the company's 18 Texas plants are located in the Valley. About 2,000 people work in the San Benito, McAllen, Brownsville and Harlingen plants producing denim blue jeans and other garments.

Company officials said the work schedule reductions are temporary.

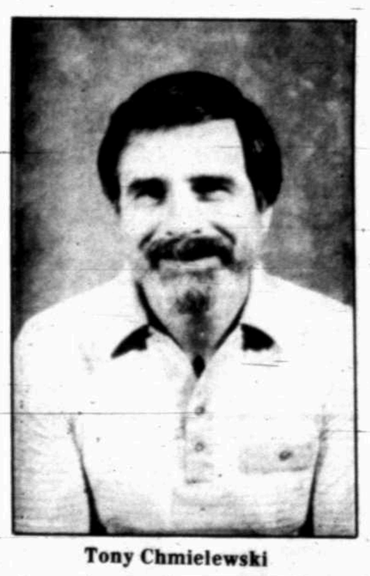

Bob Dunn, vice president of corporate communications in San Francisco, said the reductions are in response to "a slow start in the back-to-school business."

Retailers' expectations "have not been met, so they want to work off their inventory before placing any substantial new orders," he said.

Recent sales figures indicate that business may have improved in the past two weeks, Dunn said.

"These decisions relate to what's happening in the marketplace and are made on a week-to-week basis," Dunn said in a telephone interview.

Tony Chmielewski

Midland D&D to hear Hunt Oil executive

G.A. "Tony" Chmielewski of Midland, District Superintendent with Hunt Oil Co., will speak to the Desk and Derrick Club of Midland this Thursday.

A native of Canton, Ohio, Chmielewski holds a degree in Engineering from Youngstown University. His speech is titled "Offshore - An Overview", and is a general overview of offshore operations, touching on exploration, development, drilling, completion and production.

The meeting is 7 p.m. this Thursday at the Petroleum Club.

Banking bill still stalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate was resuming consideration of a major banking bill today, facing the prospect of a move to choke off debate if senators cannot compromise on issues and submit the measure for a final vote quickly.

Seventeen senators signed a cloture petition Tuesday, the first parliamentary step in limiting debate.

Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., who has been leading a foot-dragging effort against the bill, was beaten soundly on his two previous efforts to block consideration of the legislation, which is designed to define what businesses banks can be in and what businesses can get into banking.

The New York senator has expressed willingness to compromise on breaking down the walls to interstate banking if it is worded in such a way to eventually allow the big New York banks to open out-of-state branches.

The Senate voted 95-2 on Tuesday to debate the bill itself after voting 89-3 the night before to cut off discussion on whether to debate the bill.

Although D'Amato and Senate Banking Committee Chairman Jake Garn, R-Utah, have agreed to limit the amount of time spent debating the issues, other senators still have not agreed to the limit, clouding the issue of when the final vote will come and how many of 40 or more D'Amato amendments will have to be debated and put to a time-consuming vote.

Dollar retreats in Europe

LONDON (AP) — The dollar staged a broad retreat in Europe early today. Gold bullion prices were mixed.

The dollar, which eased from its record-setting pace Tuesday, was quoted lower against all other major currencies a few hours after European markets opened today.

Tipperary to writedown assets

Tipperary Corp. has announced that its management will recommend to its board of directors that the company writedown in excess of $20,000,000 of its assets, principally the nonproducing Alaskan oil and gas reserves and the Corpus Christi refinery. The one-time writedown will impact 1984 income and reduce shareholder equity. Future earnings will benefit from the reduced charges for depletion, depreciation, and amortization.

At the same time, Tipperary announced that it had retained Shearson Lehman/American Express Inc. to assist in a financial restructuring of the company. Among the alternatives to be considered are new sources of capital, the sale of certain assets or a potential merger.

McCormick Oil & Gas reports operations

HOUSTON — McCormick Oil & Gas Partnership has reported its unaudited results of operations for the three and five months ended June 30, 1984. Effective January 31, 1984, substantially all of the assets and liabilities of McCormick Oil & Gas Co. were transferred to the partnership.

Revenues for the period were $11,102,000 and $17,250,000 and net income was $3,913,000 or $.41 per unit and $5,539,000 or $.58 per unit, respectively. Funds provided by operations for the partnership for the periods were $8,040,000 or $.85 per unit and $11,496,000 or $1.21 per unit, respectively.

Results of operations and cash flow for the second quarter continued to be strong largely due to production levels from the partnership's major producing gas property, the Oak Hill field.

DALLAS — Southwest Airlines' board of directors in its regularly scheduled August 28 meeting declared the company's 32nd consecutive quarterly dividend of 3.25 cents per share on the 29,502,272 shares currently issued and outstanding.

Calvin Exploration reports 17 cent net loss

SANTA FE — Calvin Exploration Inc. has reported a net loss of $931,000 or $.17 per share, on revenues of $345,000 for the nine months ended June 30, 1984. This compares with a net loss of $1,291,000 or $.23 per share, on revenues of $419,000 for the comparable period of the prior year.

For the third quarter ended June 30, 1984, the company reported a net loss of $328,000 or $.06 per share, on revenues of $101,000. In the third quarter of the prior year, the company reported a net loss of $695,000 or $.12 per share, on revenues of $110,000.

Mitchell Energy has $17.2 million earnings

THE WOODLANDS — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. has reported net earnings of $17,216,000 or 36 cents per share, for its second quarter.

Earnings for the quarter, ended July 31, were 10 percent below the $19,099,000 second-quarter revenues were slightly ahead of the year-earlier $238,559,000.

Six-months earnings amounted to $34,356,000, or 72 cents per share, on revenues of $473,419,000. That compared with $38,286,000, or 80 cents per share, earned on revenues of $479,021,000 in the corresponding period a year ago.

Templeton has net income of $510 million

HOUSTON — Templeton Energy Inc. has announced earning for the three and six months ended June 30, 1984.

For the three and six months ended June 30, 1984, TMPL reported net income of $510,000 or $.03 per share and $1,295,000 or $.07 per share, respectively. Comparative net income for the same periods in the preceding year were $1,140,000 or $.07 per share and $2,282,000 or $.13 per share respectively. The decrease in net income from the respective levels of the previous year is primarily attributable to increased natural gas curtailments (principally by Columbia Gas Transmission Co.) during the second quarter of 1984 and higher interest rates during the first half of 1984 compared to the first half of 1983.

American Quasar earning decline for half

FORT WORTH — American Quasar Petroleum Co. reported woring capital provided by operations of $5,375,000 for the first half of 1984 which represented an increase over working capital provided by operations of $5,230,000 for the comparable period of 1983. Total working capital at June 30, 1984 amounted to $7,547,000, a substantial increase over working capital of $182,000 at December 31, 1983. The increase resulted primarily from planned sales of non-cash producing assets during the first half of 1984, and a reduction in outstanding indebtedness.

Revenues declined to $17,553,000 for the six months ended June 30, 1984, compared to $20,736,000 for the comparable period in 1983. The decrease was a result of curtailments in production of natural gas, reductions of natural gas prices and declining oil production.

The company's net loss for the first six months of 1984 was $6,486,000 (34 cents per share), compared to a 6-month loss for 1983 of $3,743,000 (19 cents per share). The increased loss was attributable to the decline in revenues and an additional provisiion of $4,255,000 for uncollectable advances to limited partnerships for interest payments on bank partnership indebtedness partly offset by decreases in amortization, administrative expense and interest.

Texas reports 206 gas, oil discoveries

AUSTIN — Texas oil and gas operators reported 143 gas and 63 oil discoveries in August, according to Railroad Commission chairman Mack Wallace. In July, a total of 107 gas and 44 oil discoveries were filed with the commission. A discovery is an exploratory well that is completed in a previously untappped reservoir.

So far this year, 951 gas and 460 oil discoveries have been reported. Through the same period of 1983, operators had filed 876 gas and 559 oil discoveries.

Amoco calls for 1988 on lead gas goal

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Amoco Oil Company has said the EPA lead phasedown goal can be met, but not until 1988.

Amoco, which does not object to the removal of lead from gasoline, said at an EPA hearing that it has serious concerns about the oil industry's ability to meet the EPA's proposed timetable and still provide unleaded gasoline in sufficient quantity and quality for the motoring public.

Amoco proposed reducing lead content to 0.7 grams per leaded gallon (gplg) in July of 1985, and 0.2 gplg in each subsequent July until the 0.1 level is reached in July, 1988.

Jerrold L. Levine, Amoco's director of corporate studies, said Amoco's timetable would eliminate, or at least minimize, any potential disruptions in gasoline supply or quality that could occur as refiners scramble to produce the octanes lost by a more rapid lead phasedown program.

Levine said the EPA relied on a study employing an overly optimistic computer model to develop its erroneous conclusion that the industry can meet the EPA's accelerated lead phasedown proposal. He said the study understates refinery unit downtime requirements and does not make sufficient allowance for deadtime - the productive capacity lost to fluctuating demand and unit operation mismatches. Also, the model has never been tested and requires industry units to run at too high a severity rate.

Levine also noted that, among other problems, there is insufficient production capacity for alcohol fuels to make up the octane shortfall and a substantial tax subsidy is needed to make ethanol fuels economic. He said new refinery investment and equipment was the least risky and most realistic way to supply lost octanes.

"This means added refinery capacity in such complex areas reforming, alkylation, and isomerization," he said. Amoco does not believe the needed capacity can be placed on stream in the year and a half left before the EPA's proposed standards would go into effect.

Addressing another EPA concern, Levine said Amoco believes the best way to eliminate misfueling is to proceed with the lead phasedown program it has proposed. As a supplement, he suggested the EPA continue to encourage public awareness programs as well aas adoption of inspection and maintenance programs, which have been effective where implemented.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed today amid doubts about the interest-rate outlook.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 1.44 to 1,199.43 by noontime on Wall Street.

Losers held a 4-3 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The NYSE's composite index slipped .02 to 94.74. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .14 at 212.35.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Consumers not necessarily lost in marketplace

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — It's hard to say what it adds up to, but to make a stab at an answer you might say it means greater productivity, satisfaction, freedom and marketplace competition, all of which are good.

Whatever, there is enough evidence in the form of books and newsletters and independent observation to know that a lot of people out there are doing their own thing these days and benefiting from it.

They are buying blue chip stocks through dividend reinvestment plans, and thus avoiding brokerage fees. And they are buying them in affordable amounts, like $25 a month. Try finding a broker who would handle such an order.

They have learned also that the blue chips get the publicity but that there are small companies in their own hometown that might offer better returns for the money and maybe even a chance to sit on the board of directors.

They are doing their own investment thinking, thanks in part to those little computers that allow them to analyze as well as many if not most of the highly promoted professional advisers and investment managers.

They — your friends and neighbors — are also asserting their independence in the real estate markets, buying directly from owners and lenders and thereby avoiding a 6 percent or 7 percent real estate commission.

Such buyers have discovered other advantages to. A lender, such as a savings bank, which has been forced to foreclose on a house, might offer to finance a buyer to take it off its hands. And pay the closing costs too.

Many thousands of people have scorned the advice, given over and over, that they cannot afford to own a home. They have bought rundown properties and fixed them up. The evidence can be seen in almost every hamlet in America.

And they have learned to operate them, too. They have cut heating costs by challenging the philosophy that a house is meant to keep the world out. At little cost they have installed glass openings to let in the warming sun.

Homeowners have been buying appliances, furnishings, luggage and dozens of other items by mail at rock-bottom prices through, of all people, the bank that services their credit card.

Thousands of people are buying automobiles through buying clubs that claim to get the lowest prices in town. And the car markets are further changed by people willing to seek second-hand bargains. Who said you should keep a car only four years. Carmakers? Who said you had to keep up with the Joneses?

The independence of institutional outlets and conventional thinking isn't restricted to just a few things either.

A good many people seem to have concluded that blue-collar work — as an electrician or plumber, for example — is more satisfying and financially rewarding than working as a dressed-up bureaucrat.

There is a healthy wave of entrepreneurship in most of the country, with much impetus coming from people who feel they are unable to work in any institutionalized setting that imposes physical or creative limitations.

You see the independence in shoppers who have become "professionalized," that is, who have learned how the marketplace works. They shop in off-seasons. They know the schedule of sales. They buy what they want to buy.

In short, when they enter the marketplace they understand how to withstand the million advertising stimuli directed their way and instead do their own thing.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Some banks cash bonds only for their patrons

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Must U.S. Savings Bonds be cashed only at banks? Is there any other place? I have quite a number of Series E bonds I bought during my working years. I am now retired and would like to cash them. I have no bank account.

Doyle

A. In theory, you don't need an account to cash your bonds at a bank. Almost all banks and savings and loan associations are Savings Bond issuing and paying agents. They are authorized to redeed Savings Bonds, without cost to the owner, when satisfied of the owner's identity. In practice, however, many banks and S&Ls redeem Savings Bonds only for customers.

By visiting a number of banks and S&Ls, you might be able to find one willing to redeem your bonds. Of course, you will have to provide identification proving you own the bonds.

If you run into a blind alley, you can redeem your bonds at a Federal Reserve Bank or branch, at the U.S. Treasury Department, 15th and Pennsylvania Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20220, or at the Bureau of the Public Debt, 200 Third St., Parkersburg, West Virginia 26101.

* * *

Q. The new Series EE U.S. Savings Bonds accrue interest at a variable rate that changes periodically. What is the present rate?

A. Both Series E and EE Savings Bonds build up interest at what the Treasury Department calls a "market-based" rate — only if the bonds are held for five years after Nov. 1, 1982, or five years after their first "interest accrual date" following Nov. 1, 1982.

That rate, which changes every six months, is 9.95 percent for the period from May 1 through Oct. 31, 1984. Combined with the rates that were in effect for the three previous six-month periods since the market-based rate arrangement was put into effect, that results in an average annual accrual rate of 9.77 percent.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the nation's leading Democrats, including presidential nominee Walter F. Mondale's wife Joan, filed into Ronald Reagan's Republican White House to pay tribute to the memory to one of their party's leading modern heroes, Hubert H. Humphrey.

Muriel Humphrey Brown, who remarried after the onetime senator, vice president and presidential candidate died of cancer on Jan. 13, 1978, accepted a solid gold congressional medal bearing her late husband's likeness at a ceremony Tuesday in the White House Rose Garden.

Later she unveiled a bust of Humphrey in the Capitol with the help of their son, Hubert H. Humphrey Jr., and congressional leaders. All vice presidents, who also serve as president of the Senate, are accorded this honor.

Reagan hailed Humphrey as a vibrant "happy warrior" whose presence added to the democratic process and whose death left Washington a more silent, "lesser place."

Mrs. Brown told reporters she had no quarrel with the president for holding the medal ceremony in the midst of an election campaign pitting Reagan against Mondale, who was Humphrey's longtime political protege from Minnesota.

Mrs. Mondale represented her campaigning husband at the ceremony, saying she attended to honor "the spirit of Hubert Humphrey and remembering all the things that he did."

Other prominent Democrats present included Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, former Democratic National Chairman Robert Strauss and Virginia Gov. Charles Robb and his wife, Lynda, daughter of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson.

"He was a liberal who was an internationalist — a liberal who understood that America was great and had serious responsibilities in the world — a liberal who was strongly anti-communist," Reagan said.

"...His greatest contribution to his country was his life, a life that affirmed the vitality of democracy, affirmed the fact that the democratic process is alive and full of movement and action and great plans and decent dreams."

Entertainer suffers broken leg in serious head-on collision

Mandrell

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Barbara Mandrell was in fair condition with a broken leg today after surgery for injuries suffered when her automobile was struck head-on by a car that swerved into its path. The driver of the other car died.

The singer's two children, who were returning home with her from buying school clothes, were slightly injured in the accident Tuesday evening near the Nashville suburb of Hendersonville, authorities said.

Miss Mandrell, 35, underwent about three hours of surgery for a broken leg and fractured right knee at Baptist Hospital, where a spokeswoman listed her condition today as fair.

Her sister, entertainer Louise Mandrell, said Miss Mandrell also suffered facial lacerations and a concussion, but was awake and alert before the surgery began.

"It will take a little time, but she will be fine," Louise Mandrell said. "I appreciate, and I know Barbara would appreciate everyone's prayers. And we also want to ask everyone, please, while you're praying to pray for the White family."

She was referring to relatives of Mark White, 19, of Lebanon, the driver of the car which Hendersonville police said swerved into the path of Miss Mandrell's 1982 silver Jaguar.

White, who was briefly pinned in his 1981 red Subaru, was pronounced dead at Hendersonville Hospital following the 6:30 p.m. accident, authorities said. It took three hours to remove debris from the crash site on U.S. 31E, about four miles north of Hendersonville, police said in a statement.

Spokeswoman Melanie Lamb said Miss Mandrell's son, Matthew Dudney, 14, was admitted to Hendersonville Hospital for observation suffering lacerations, and her daughter, Jaime Dudney, 8, was treated for "bumps and bruises," and released.

Miss Mandrell is known for such hits as "I Was Country When Country Wasn't Cool," "Sleeping Single in a Double Bed," and "In Times Like These."

Her husband, Ken Dudney, was en route to Nashville from Washington state, relatives said.

"It'll be some time before she'll go back on the road because she does have a rather serious injury to her leg," she said.

Radio and television personality Ralph Emery, who arrived at the hospital along with other friends and musicians shortly after Miss Mandrell, said he believes she will not work for at least six months.

Emery is the host of the nightly 90-minute live show "Nashville Now" on cable television's The Nashville Network.

Miss Mandrell won Female Vocalist of the Year honors from the Country Music Association in 1979 and Entertainer of the Year from the association in 1980 and 1981.

In 1980, she and her sisters Louise and Irlene starred in the NBC network television series "Barbara Mandrell and the Mandrell Sisters."

Writer: Comparing Shockley plan to Nazi studies 'fair'

ATLANTA (AP) — A writer charged with libel for comparing physicist William Shockley's plan for voluntary sterilization of the "genetically disabled" to Nazi experiments says the comparison was fair.

The programs were similar enough to justify the comparison in the 1980 article in The Atlanta Constitution, writer Roger Witherspoon testified Tuesday in U.S District Court.

Shockley, who shared a 1956 Nobel prize for physics, has filed a $1.25 million lawsuit alleging he was libeled by the comparison. His suit names Witherspoon and the Cox Enterprises Inc., publisher of the Constitution.

"It seemed to me that as a rhetorical device, there was nothing wrong with saying the Shockley plan was tried out in World War II," said Witherspoon, 35, a freelance writer who was a reporter for the newspaper when the article appeared.

Asked by defense attorney Terry Adamson if it was fair to compare the plans, Witherspoon replied, "Yes. The premise was the same. Somebody from a dominant group who decides his group is better and that the country would be better off if the bulk of a minority group isn't there."

In his testimony Tuesday, Witherspoon said Shockley's proposal "eliminated the odious parts of the...(Nazi experiments), but you still had the same basic program."

Witherspoon testified that his article was a column intended as his opinion, and that he did not intend to suggest the two plans were literally the same. Readers were given sufficient information in the article to note specific differences between the two, he said.

Shockley has said he views American blacks as the group most threatened by "retrogressive evolution caused by excessive reproduction by the genetically disadvantaged."

Shockley's proposal would provide bonuses to certain people — those likely to carry genetically-transmitted diseases or those who score poorly on intelligence tests — who submitted themselves to sterilization.

Previous witnesses in the trial have said that would make 85 percent of the black population in America eligible for the program.

Also Tuesday, Princeton University anthropologist Ashley Montague told the jury he disagrees with Shockley's theory that blacks as a group are genetically inferior to whites.

"I don't think Dr. Shockley, with all due respect to his accomplishments in physics, is competent to discuss these matters," said Montague, who was accepted by U.S. District Judge Robert Vining as an expert witness on genetics.

Vining on Tuesday also rejected a defense motion that he direct an immediate verdict of acquittal.

Norman told the judge that the Witherspoon article, while couched in "colorful, strong language," was an opinion piece which fell under the protection of First Amendment freedoms.

But Shockley's attorney, Murray Silver, said Witherspoon's article, by linking Shockley's plan with the Nazi experiments of World War II, "charged Shockley with crimes against humanity — the greatest, the most abhorrent crimes in the history of the world."

Defunct soft drink may have been original Dr Pepper

SAN DIEGO, Texas (AP) — I'm a Pepper, he's a Pepper. Wait, stop the music! How about I'm a Brunela?

Rumor has it that a now-defunct South Texas soft drink could be the original "Peppers." As far as some old timers are concerned, some recently discovered bottles dating back to the 1920s simply add to the saga of the Duval county soda pop mystery.

Two 73-year-old gents, Donato Serna and Hugo Ibanez, won't swear to it, but they've got reason to believe that a soft drink manufactured in San Diego some 60 years ago tastes much like today's Dr Pepper, one of the oldest world-wide products.

Curiosity arose earlier this year at San Diego Creek when county workers stumbled upon three aging soda bottles that are believed to be part of a once fledging, home-grown bottling company from the roaring 20s.

"Old timers here would say the taste was similar to Dr Pepper," says Serna, a life-long resident of the Duval County town. "I'm not trying to say it did...but from what I remember that soft drink was a big thing here all those years ago."

As the story goes, Bruno Rios, a promient pharmacist, developed a soda back in 1922 at the fountain of his drug store, calling it Brunela. During those opportunistic times, he opened a bottling company, which supplied Jim Wells, Brooks, Jim Hogg and Duval counties.

Within a 10-year span, he was forced to close due to growing competition.

"He had chances to sell out but he never did," recalls Ibanez. "He never patented his drink because he was content with the operation he had. He was quite a character."

Historian Harry Ellis of the Dr Pepper headquarters in Dallas says the Duval mystery is similar to other cases.

"Back then bottling companies were born in backyards," says Ellis. "It wasn't uncommon for three to be located in one small town. A number of small companies attempted to imitate Dr Pepper but wound up instead with cherry Coke.

"The situation in San Diego," he continued, "is news to me, but it's companies like that which started the history of the soft drink."

According to a former employee of the Brunela company, Ramon P. Garcia, now of Corpus Christi, the franchise bottled about 80 cases a day before closing in 1929.

Garcia drove the company truck, a 1926 Nash model, and on occasions assisted Rios in bottling his drink. Garcia noted that Brunela tasted somewhat like Dr Pepper but it was not as strong.

"You know," admits Serna, "back then we didn't really pay attention to soft drinks. Really I only remembered it tasted good. I guess things like that you just take for granted."

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — "The idea just appealed to me," is the way Magdalena A. Von Freytag explains why she crossed the Atlantic Ocean from Africa to Brazil in an old wooden lifeboat 15 years ago.

Remembering the harrowing odssey she made with Wojciech Bialy, a Polish navigator, Miss Von Freytag says the 100 days at sea taught her to appreciate the things in life many people take for granted.

"Even the little things — like having a glass of water," she adds.

Miss Von Freytag came to South Florida in 1972. Married and the mother of two sons, her life is more sedate these days.

She owns and operates "The Estate Wines & Flowers," a distinctive wine and flower shop in a fashionable shopping area here. Her fresh flowers come each week from Holland and she specializes in wines made at small vineyards in Europe.

So did she.

Born a baroness to German parents living in Warsaw, Poland, Miss Von Freytag had lived in Africa several years when she met Bialy in Monrovia, the capital of Liberia on the western coast of Africa. Admittedly, it was his enthusiasm for circumnavigating the world in a lifeboat that intrigued her.

"The boat was only eight meters (about 27 feet) in length and was from an old cargo ship," she says. Bialy named it "Rozumek," which means "little brain" in Polish.

An attorney, Bialy had attended a maritime academy in his country and served a year aboard a large clipper ship. He bought the twin-masted lifeboat at a salvage sale and shipped it by rail to Rijeka, Yugoslavia. Without permission, he sailed it down the Adriatic Sea, across the Mediterranean and along the west coast of Africa.

"We stocked it with canned foods, fresh water and wrapped loaves of bread in towels," she recalls. He navigated by the stars and there was no auxiliary power. "Only old linen sails which I had to keep sewing together."

Judges check out jurors at library

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — When Mt. Diablo Municipal Court Judge Mark Simons finds himself short on jurors, he just looks them up in the library.

Plagued with a rise in no-shows, Simons has been sending his bailiff to the nearby library or supermarket parking lot to round up worthy candidates.

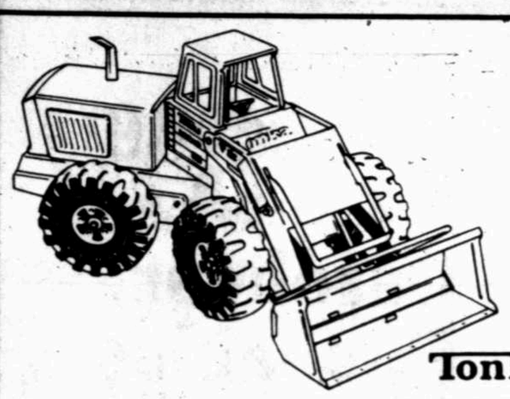

Under state law, judges can send bailiffs onto the streets to seize citizens for jury duty if too many of those summoned by mail don't show up.

The judges have sent their bailiffs out into the streets at least three times in the past month to tap unsuspecting people and ask them to serve on a jury. The Concord branch of the Contra Costa County Library has proven a successful place to find candidates, with one bailiff nabbing eight people as they quietly read three weeks ago.

Vervet monkeys may not be as cute as they first appear

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — They're friendly, they seem tame enough to the unpracticed eye and, to tourists hungry for a close encounter with nature, they're definitely cute.

But appearances are deceiving. Experts say that the hundreds of monkeys living near tourist lodges in Africa are sometimes serious pests, biting guests, stealing cameras and posing a danger to public health.

"It's a serious problem, most definitely," said Dr. James Else, 38, an American scientist from Grass Valley, Calif., who is now director of the Institute of Primate Research here. Monkeys "are very, very intimidating."

"So many times, you'll go to tea and when you're walking back they will intimidate you," he said following a speech at the recent Congress of the International Primatological Society. "They'll keep threatening to attack you until you give them the food."

In one Southern Kenyan game park, the problem got so bad that as many as four tourists a week were being bitten by aggressive monkeys, he said. Most of the bites were minor and required only first aid, but one in 10 or 20 were serious enough to warrant hospitalization, according to one of Else's researchers.

Eventually, officials had to trap the offending monkeys and move them far away from tourist lodges, Else said. But more monkeys moved in and the problem returned.

One of the biggest offenders is the vervet monkey, a harmless enough appearing bundle of fur that usually weighs in at about 13 pounds and stands only about a foot tall, even when raised up on its hind legs.

"In certain areas, they (staff members) do encourage them because they are a tourist attraction," said Else. "Tourists are sitting there and wild animals are all around them."

It gets worse when tourists start feeding the vervets, ignoring signs that advise them not to. Once the tiny monkeys get used to the handouts, they start raiding kitchens and even stealing food off dining room tables, the primatologist said.

Baboons, which can weigh in at 50 pounds and stand well over three feet on their hind legs, pose a different kind of problem, Else said.

"They just actually go into suitcases and rip them apart," making off with expensive cameras and other personal items and leaving the room in a shambles, Else said.

Number of black voters expected to increase by 23 percent

ATLANTA (AP) — By the time voter registration books close in October for the 1984 presidential election, the number of black registered voters in the 11 Southern states will have increased by 23 percent since 1982, the Voter Education Project estimates.

If that prediction holds true, it will mark the largest number of blacks added to the voter lists in any two-year period and the greatest percentage increase since 1964-66, when many blacks were franchised for the first time following passage of the Voting Rights Act.

Black leaders who have been organizing voter registration drives throughout the South for the past year give President Reagan the credit for the increase in black voter registration.

"Ronald Reagan has done what nobody has been able to do since Martin Luther King," said J. L. Chestnut, vice president of the Alabama Democratic Conference, a statewide black caucus. "He's really brought black folks together."

The Voter Education Project estimates that 800,000 black voters have been added to the voting rolls in the 11 Southern states since 1980. The number of new black voters exceeds Reagan's 1980 victory margin in six Southern states.

Black leaders concede that many blacks have problems with Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale, but they contend that black antipathy toward Reagan will more than compensate for Mondale's perceived inadequacies.

"They (black voters) think that Mondale is no John Kennedy or Lyndon Johnson, and probably not even a Jimmy Carter, but that he is far preferable to four more years of Ronald Reagan," said Chestnut.

Fulton County Commission Chairman Michael Lomax said he believes that black people aren't necessarily "looking for a buddy. They're looking for an alternative to Ronald Reagan."

Despite the increases in black voter registration, black leaders still have to contend with the historical problem of low voter turnout among blacks. In the 1980 election, only 48 percent of voting-age Southern blacks cast a ballot, compared to 57 percent of eligible whites, according to the Joint Center for Political Studies.

But the recent successes of the Rev. Jesse Jackson's presidential campaign and the election of black mayors in Chicago and Philadelphia all were made possible by huge black voter turnouts.

And with Jackson having committed himself to active campaigning for the Democratic ticket, some black leaders argue that the differences generated by the Democratic presidential race are over and the elements are in place for a historic role for blacks in the presidential election.

In Alabama, Chestnut said there is a kind of spontaneous organizing erupting among blacks.
