Midland industries suffer gas cutback

By LINDA HILL SCHAFFRINA and JIM STEINBERG

The Permian Basin may supply 25 percent of the nation's oil and natural gas, but it mattered little this morning when approximately a dozen Midland industrial users were ordered to cut back usage by 50 to 85 percent, for at least a half-day.

"When we talk about curtailment here (in Texas), we are talking about cutting back service. In the Midwest they talk about shutting down for the day," said Bob Mills, public relations director of Pioneer Natural Gas Co. in Amarillo.

The "curtailment" Mills spoke about is system-wide throughout the area served by Pioneer, a slice of Texas roughly the size of Ohio, bounded by Dalhart to the north and Midland-Odessa on the south.

Norman Henry, district manager for Pioneer Natural Gas Co. in Midland, said this morning that the curtailment affected about 12 businesses locally. All involved the use of natural gas for boilers, processing, curing, or heat treating, and no gas to heat buildings was involved, he said.

Henry blamed the cutbacks on low pressure in the lines and said the service curtailment was applied throughout the area served by Pioneer.

The basic cause of the cutbacks was cold weather, Henry said.

"The first thing in the morning everyone turns on the gas at the same time... This morning they were taking it out faster than we could put in," he said.

Ironically, other sections of the country in non-oil and -gas producing sections of the country are not undergoing curtailments to the degree experienced in Midland today.

A spokesman for El Paso Natural Gas Co. in Houston said today that the only customers served by them facing any reduction in natural gas supply were large power generating companies which have alternative power supplies.

All residential and commercial demands are being met in California, Arizona, Southern Nevada, and New Mexico, the spokesman said.

Most of these areas, however, are not facing the cold weather occurring in section of Texas served by Pioneer.

"This curtailment is related strictly to the capacity of the transmission system, which just can't handle the occasional peak load in an emergency. It has nothing to do with the supply of gas," Mills explained.

"It's just not economically feasible for us to build a system to handle this kind of demand," Mills said, adding that the system-wide curtailment would continue "as long as the weather is cold."

The problem, Mills explained, occurs when Pioneer attempts to equalize the distribution of natural gas to the northern Panhandle areas with that in the southern section of the district.

Because of psychological factors and the wind-chill factor, wind contributes to the increased demand for natural gas almost as much as the cold, Mills added.

Henry said today's cutback was the second this winter, although the first,

Missouri judge Carter choice for FBI chief

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter plans to nominate William H. Webster, a Missouri Republican and federal appellate judge, to be the next FBI director, administration sources say.

The formal announcement was expected today.

Carter and Attorney General Griffin Bell chose Webster to succeed

Clarence M. Kelley and take charge of the bureau as it makes major changes in its operations.

The sources said Bell favored Webster over the other finalist, U.S. District Judge Frank McGarr of Chicago, and that Carter agreed with Bell's recommendation. But the sources declined to say why Webster was preferred.

A Missouri native, Webster has carved a reputation for legal acumen and personal integrity. His friends and associates say he's even-handed in the courtroom and a genial companion in his private life.

"He's a simple man. He's never gotten any kind of big head," remarked Lon Hocker, a longtime colleague. "He's just one hell of a guy."

Solicitor General Wade McCree, a friend of Webster for 15 years, notes that the judge "gives the outward impression of being very conservative."

"Bill still has a hair style of 10 years ago. But that's his hair style, not his life style," McCree said.

McCree, the government's lawyer in Supreme Court cases, said he and Bell discussed Webster as a potential FBI director a few weeks ago "when it became apparent that Frank Johnson couldn't serve. We both came up with the same name."

Carter's first choice for the job was

William H. Webster

Johnson, a U.S. district judge in Montgomery, Ala. The nomination was widely praised by civil rights groups who commended Johnson's pioneering rulings in that field and by conservatives pleased with his record of giving criminals stiff sentences.

But Johnson bowed out in December after concluding that his slow recovery from major surgery prevented him from taking the job.

Webster, 53, dabbled in state Republican politics in the late 1950s and was appointed by then-President Dwight Eisenhower as the U.S. attorney in eastern Missouri in 1960.

That job ended when the administration changed in 1961 and Webster settled down for eight years as a partner in the St. Louis law firm of Armstrong and Teasdale. Former President Richard Nixon appointed him to the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which handles cases from several midwestern states.

Sohio Midland pipeline conditionally approved by California agency

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Standard Oil Co. of Ohio will have to pay more than $100 million to clean up Southern California air if it wants to build the last link of a massive system bringing crude oil from the North Slope of Alaska to the Midwest.

Sohio's proposed tanker terminal and pipeline project was approved by the South Coast Air Quality Management District Wednesday — but only if Sohio agreed to abide by rigid antipollution requirements.

The $500 million project also must be approved by the state Air Resources Board and the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

Asked if Sohio was willing to agree to the anti-pollution conditions, company spokesman Robert Schaadt said, "I don't think we know the answer yet." But he added, "We are optimistic that these issues will be worked out."

Schaadt said the company expects by February to submit specific proposals to control emissions in the area. After that, the board will hold hearings to consider approval of Sohio's air cleanup proposals.

In defense of the costly pollution regulations, Los Angeles City Councilman Marvin Braude, a member of the AQMD, said: "This project is an

Begin says talks now 'up to Egypt'

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menahem Begin said today it is "up to Egypt" to salvage the stalled Mideast peace talks and said he was sure the United States would never pressure him to bow to Egyptian demands.

Speaking to a group of French Jews, Begin also ridiculed the Egyptian contention that President Anwar Sadat had made a major concession to Israel by recognizing its right to exist.

"We have existed, my dear Egyptian friends, without your recognition for 3,700 years," he said. " ... Our right to exist was given by the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob."

Begin scoffed at the possibility that Egypt could bring U.S pressure to bear on Israel for concessions. "Pressure? What pressure?" he asked rhetorically. He called it "an inconceivable concept."

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, meanwhile, was trying to get the Egyptian-Israeli peace negotiations going again. He spoke with Begin by telephone this morning and the two scheduled an evening meeting in the American's hotel suite. Vance plans a trip to Egypt Friday to see Sadat.

Begin told the French group: "We hope the talks will be resumed. It is up to Egypt." He said that despite Sadat's recall of Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel to Cairo Wednesday, "peace is inevitable" and that "ups an downs and crises" in the negotiations had to be expected.

The Egyptians have said the next move is up to Israel — that Begin must change his position if the negotiations are to resume.

Begin's speech amounted to a defense of his refusal to permit Palestinian statehood or disband Jewish settlements in the Sinai — two key sticking points that led to the rupture in the talks after only two sessions.

"No land was taken from anybody," Begin said of the Sinai. He said Israel had irrigated the barren sands to "turn a desert almost into a garden."

He renewed his attack on the Palestine Liberation Organization, calling it a "Nazi-like organization." He said he once told Sadat that many PLO members were Soviet agents "and the president corrected me, saying, 'All of them'."

"We presented a positive plan, a humane plan, a decent plan," he said of his peace proposals. "And no pressure can be exerted on us to turn fairness into unfairness."

He charged that it was Egypt's general attitude, rather than the progress in the talks themselves, that led to the breakoff.

He said Egypt and Israel had reached agreement on five out of

Pecan tree sale begins Saturday

That's the case with the pecan tree sale on the employee parking lot of The Reporter-Telegram which begins Saturday and runs through Sunday, Jan. 29. Trees are $8 each, including sales tax, and come with planting and care instructions.

The sale is a joint venture of the Visual Improvement Project of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and The Reporter-Telegram.

Purpose of the project is to beautify Midland.

The $8 price tag is about $10 per tree under what such trees normally cost, according to Gordon Knox, VIP committee chairman.

"Pecan trees are one of the most beautiful trees. They're disease-resistant and live forever," he said.

The hours of the sale are: Saturday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Sunday, 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Monday through Friday, 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.

The trees, of the Stuart or Wichita varieties, are five to six feet high, and come with roots wrapped in peat moss in a bag.

A presale of the trees before Christmas was a big success, with 2,200 trees sold and delivered, according to Fred Tyler of the Midland Chamber of Commerce. But he was quick to point out that the sale starting Saturday is strictly a cash-and-carry affair.

Pecan trees and live oaks are considered ideal for Midland's climate and soil. The only maintenance required is watering.

Knox said the VIP Committee has other projects planned for 1978, including tree plantings along Scharbauer Draw and along downtown sidewalks.

"We think we can make Scharbauer Draw one of the most attractive drives in the city by planting pecan trees in a staggered fashion," he said.

The VIP program, begun in 1974, has been responsible for planting 155 oak trees on Main Street, 165 trees at Midland Regional Air Terminal and for removing some 900 blighted elm trees.

'Creaming' of funds revealed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe unilaterally decided to let his Office of Migrant Affairs spend almost 20 percent of all "balance of state" job training money coming to Texas from the federal government, according to public officials and documents.

Briscoe made his decision in early 1976 without consulting the Texas Department of Community Affairs (TDCA), which until then administered all federal Manpower funds coming to state government, TDCA director Ben McDonald said today.

"We had no say. . . We received a copy of the letter and we just complied with it. . . . I was not consulted about the letter," McDonald said.

The governor's office was asked for comment.

Asked if he had any doubts about the advisability of "creaming" a fifth of the "balance of state" funds under the federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA) program for the Office of Migrant Affairs, McDonald said he had "no comment."

"When the governor sends me a letter, I don't have any doubts or recriminations," McDonald said.

Also saying he was not consulted in advance was Bud Harris, TDCA's director of Manpower services, who is responsible for reviewing and evaluating CETA programs in areas of the state without local "prime sponsors."

By law, the governor is the prime sponsor for CETA programs in the 119 "balance of state counties" without such sponsors locally.

The Governor's Office of Migrant Affairs (GOMA) received $1 million in early 1976 from Briscoe's action, and the amount jumped to $11 million by the end of 1977.

Briscoe suspended GOMA director Rojelio Perez early this month after he took the Fifth Amendment in a Brownsville court of inquiry into alleged misuse of Manpower funds, including a GOMA grant.

Perez since has been charged with forgery of an official report.

Briscoe created GOMA by executive order in 1974.

The governor notified the U. S. Department of Labor on May 13, 1976, of his decision to make GOMA co-equal with TDCA in delivering Manpower funds.

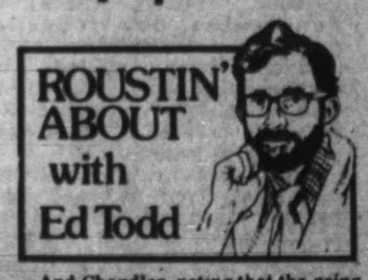

He said it would receive a percentage of balance of state CETA funds that approximated the migrant farmworkers' proportion of Texans eligible to receive such aid.

Basin farmer hardly 'bolled' over by prices

Whether you deem something "fair" likely depends on your viewpoint.

"It costs a lot of money to raise a crop," noted the farmer's wife.

But it should be, he figures.

Take a well-made all-cotton shirt, which might cost anywhere, say, from $15 to $30 — more or less.

"And there's about 20 cents worth of cotton in that shirt," Chandler figured.

On the high side, Chandler guessed that a farmer's $200 bale of cotton could be turned into about $30,000 worth of high-priced shirts at the retailers' outlets.

"To me, that's unfair," said Chandler, who has farmed in the Warfield community west of Midland since the early 1950s.

Chandler looked at the situation as might a professor viewing the old law of supply and demand.

"There's a whole bunch of farmers, seven general principles for a Mideast settlement. He did not elaborate but the points in dispute were believed to concern the Palestinians and the general issue of Israeli withdrawal from occupied lands.

Radios and newspapers of conservative Arab oil states, including Saudi Arabia, welcomed Sadat's decision to suspend the talks. Newspaper editorials in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates called for a new Arab summit to reunite the pro-and anti-Sadat Arab nations.

"I've been through a lot of international negotiations. I've seen ups and downs in the past. We all have the same objectives. We all want peace and I think, therefore, the talks will continue in the future," Vance said Wednesday after Sadat recalled Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel to Cairo and suspended his talks with Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan after only two sessions.

Dayan also took an optimistic public stance, saying that before long "we shall find other ways to reach peace."

President Carter telephoned Sadat to ask if the talks could continue for a day or two, apparently to allow Vance a chance to patch things up. Sadat replied that the Israelis "want land, not peace" and said the negotiations could resume if Israel changed its position, Information Minister Abdel Moneim el Sawy reported in Cairo.

However, Sawy said Carter persuaded Sadat to cancel an order suspending the parallel negotiations which the Egyptian and Israeli defense ministers began in Cairo last week. Those talks had been scheduled to resume today, but the Egyptians postponed them until Saturday.

Sadat also called Egypt's advisory parliament, the People's Assembly, into emergency session Saturday.

The hope in Egypt was that the United States would pressure Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin to modify his refusal to give up all Arab territory occupied in the 1967 war and grant the Palestinians in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip self-determination. But there was no indication Begin would yield.

An Israeli communique said Egypt was "under the illusion" that it could force Israel into giving up all captured land and establishing a Palestinian state. Such a state, the communique said, would be "a danger to the very existence of the Jewish state."

It was the most serious setback so far to Sadat's peace initiative.

Banker resigns

Marshall McCrea, executive vice president at The First National Bank of Midland, has resigned to go into business as an independent oil man.

McCrea turned in his resignation Wednesday, according to Mike Bradford, assistant vice president at the bank. He did not know this morning when the resignation becomes effective.

The banker started with the bank Dec. 2, 1968, as assistant vice president and trust officer and was promoted to senior vice president before becoming an executive vice president.

Travel in state risky as cold front moves in Weather in the Midland area was clear this morning, but travel through the rest of Texas was restricted as flights and bus routes to and from Dallas were delayed and hazardous road conditions were reported east and north of Midland.

Reports early today indicated that the region east of Midland extending to Dallas was hardest hit by a cold front moving through Texas, depositing ice and snow.

Some flights from Dallas with Southwest Airlines and Texas International Airlines were delayed today, and a spokesman for Southwest said more may be delayed later.

Bus routes from Dallas with Greyhound and Trailways were delayed this morning, also.

The Department of Public Safety reported open roads throughout Texas but hazardous driving conditions east from Abilene and north between Lubbock and Amarillo.

Midland and this area caught only the edge of the front with snow flurries Wednesday night.

The flurries may be a portent. The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal forecasts a 20 percent chance of rain mixed with freezing snow Friday.

Two MC trustees seek re-election to posts

Two members of the Midland College Board of Trustees today announced they will seek re-election to another term in April, while a third trustee said he will not seek re-election.

Jack Huff, Place 7, and Kenneth Peeler, Place 9, said they will seek second terms, and Robert M. Leibrock, Place 8, announced he will not be a candidate for re-election.

Leibrock said, "I have served on the board for Midland College since its inception. After much consideration, I have decided not to run for election." He served as board president from 1975 to 1976. He is a partner in Mallard Exploration Co. of Midland.

Huff, who became a board member in 1970, currently is vice president for the trustees. He is co-owner of Burleson and Huff, independent oil operators.

Huff said, "I have been a part of the Midland College board almost from its inception and have decided to seek election because some of the building programs which have begun are not yet completed."

He said, "I feel that my experience can provide a significant contribution to the continuity of the board's activities. Midland College is still in the growing stage and I would like to continue to serve as it strives to achieve its goal as the finest community college in the state."

In announcing his candidacy, Peeler said, "There are a number of activities, programs and buildings which I would like to see completed, which is the reason I decided to seek election."

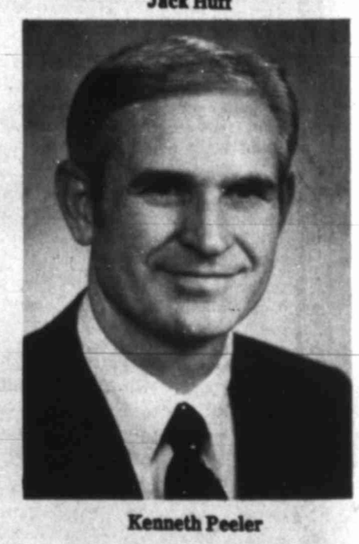

He said serving on the board has been a "very rewarding experience" and that he is looking forward to participating in the future growth of the college. Peeler is president of Midland Sixty-Six Oil Co.

The trustees are elected at large by voters within the Midland Junior College District, but they file by place. The election is scheduled for April 1. Filing deadline for all candidates is March 1.

Board members serve staggered, six-year terms, with three of them elected each even-numbered year.

Torrijos agreeable on amendment

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Gen. Omar Torrijos sent seven members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee home with word that should improve the chances of the new Panama Canal treaties for ratification.

The Panamanian chief of state told Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., and six other members of his committee Wednesday he has no objection to amendment of the treaties to include the joint statement he and President Carter signed clarifying the future rights of the U.S. government to defend and use the waterway.

"I don't see any problem with incorporating this amendment because it was presented to the Panamanian people before the plebiscite," Torrijos told reporters after his meeting with the senators, who returned to Washington after a three-day visit.

The Panamanian people approved the treaties by a 2-1 vote in October.

The plebiscite was held shortly after Carter and Torrijos signed a statement of clarification saying after Panama takes over the canal in the year 2000, the United States as well as Panama has the right to act against any threat to the canal. The joint statement also said this gives the United States no right of intervention in internal Panamanian affairs and that U.S. warships and auxiliaries will be given priority passage through the canal "in case of need or emergency."

The statement was in response to criticism in the United States that the language of the treaties was ambiguous and did not protect American interests adequately.

A number of senators, including Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W. Va., and Minority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., have said they will work for Senate ratification if the Carter-Torrijos accord is incorporated into the treaties.

One of the visiting senators, Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., said he felt the scales have tipped in favor of ratification. Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., said he felt the treaties have a better-than-even chance of approval. But Sparkman said any comment about the treaties' chances now was speculation.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said Torrijos told the committee members: "You can juggle just so many balls in the air at once and then you lose them all."

"I think he meant that he could certainly handle an amendment on the communique but there is a limit to how many balls he could keep in the air and still keep the game going," Church said.

but there's not many people that make shirts," he said.

"Now if that pays for the ginning, that's still one of the biggest rip-offs in the world," he said of the price he gets from the seeds, which are used in making a slew of products.

To the farmer, cottonseeds are worth about $55 a ton. Chandler said that enough cotton to produce 500 pounds (a bale) of lint would also yield about 800 pounds of seeds.

Chandler ran through a partial list of various forms processed cottonseeds take. It ranged from cooking oil, margarine and soap to "top-notch" cow feed.

He didn't have any figures readily available on the retail value of cottonseed products. But whatever the amount, Chandler figured it would be grossly unfair to the farmers.

•

And Chandler, like many farmers throughout the country, is pondering what to do about the supposed inequities in the pricing system.

Ideally, he would favor "giant cooperatives" with which farmers could control the supply of their product and hence the price.

Many farmers want to take their chances and stick with the free-enterprise way of doing things.

enormous economic benefit to Sohio. It may be that the shareholders of Sohio will benefit to the tune of $1 billion."

Among the AQMD's requirements are that on a yearly basis, Sohio must cleanse the air of two pounds of three types of pollutants — sulfur oxides, oxides of nitrogen and tiny particles of matter such as dust — for every one pound emitted by its new project. In addition, Sohio must take 7.2 pounds of hydrocarbons out of the air for every one pound caused by the project.

One of the AQMD suggestions for offsetting new pollution was requiring Sohio to install costly scrubbers on the Southern California Edison Co. electric generating plant in Los Alamitos. The scrubbers, which would cost between $75 million and $125 million, would cleanse emissions from the oilburning facility in a mixture of water and lime to reduce the quantity of sulfur oxides that escape.

Other pollution tradeoffs suggested by the AQMD include control of organic emissions from dry cleaners and control of glass plant emissions.

The total cost of the cleanup activities is estimated at more than $100 million.

Sohio's project is intended to provide a more economical link between oil-rich Alaska and the industrial Midwest states.

Under Sohio's plan, Alaskan oil would be shipped to a new two-berth terminal in Long Beach, then piped 1,000 miles to Midland for refining and distribution throughout the Gulf Coast and Midwest.

Sohio has said the pipeline would be 25 to 75 cents a barrel cheaper than shipping Alaskan oil through the Panama Canal to the Gulf or East coasts, and by using Alaskan oil efficiently, the United States lessens its dependence on foreign oil.

State of Union address tonight

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, having touched base in advance with major interest groups, will lay down his goals for 1978 in a nationally broadcast State of the Union address to Congress tonight.

Carter, appearing before a joint Senate-House session at 9 p.m. EST, will put economic problems, including action on dollar-draining energy imports, at the top of his agenda.

Aides said the president will emphasize that many difficulties facing the United States defy easy solution and will call for a national effort to deal with them. They said he will argue that the common good transcends sectional or private interests.

In that vein, Carter has held a marathon series of conferences with representatives of varied interest groups since returning from an 18,000-mile world tour less than two weeks ago. Most left the White House expressing at least tentative approval of what he told them about his plans for the new year.

His visitors have included spokesmen for business, labor, blacks and consumers.

Several local industries suffer reduction in gas on Jan. 11, involved only the largest customers. Two Midland companies, Drilco Industrial and Tube-Kote, were affected.

At that time, a spokesman for Tube-Kote said, service was cut back for an entire day.

Last year, there was some curtailment of supply for two days, "but not as extensive as we've done today," Henry said.

Should more extensive cutbacks be required, schools and businesses will be the next to be affected, Henry said.

Drilco Industrial was the largest known user "feeling the cold" after today's cutback order. Larry Belcher, manager of plant engineering, said Drilco's contract allowing it to purchase gas at an industrial price also enables Pioneer to ask Drilco to curtail gas consumption.

Henry would not give The Reporter-Telegram a complete list of the companies suffering cutbacks, but said most were commercial laundries.

As of early today, at least six Midland laundries had lost gas to their boilers. By 11:30 a.m., none had had service restored, although one laundry reported it had been notified about 11:45 a.m. that it could turn its boilers on again.

Henry said he hoped to have all but the largest users back on full service by about noon.

Business picking up around White House

By FRANK CORMIER

WASHINGTON (AP) — With 11-month-old James Earl Carter IV living in the White House once again, President and Mrs. Carter don't have to look far for diversion in their off hours.

The presidential grandson is learning to walk, a predictable development that nevertheless has not failed to swell the pride of parents Chip and Caron Carter — and the grandparents as well.

Both the president and wife Rosalynn are reported to be taking a keen interest in coaching the infant during his trialand-error approach to maintaining a tottering equilibrium.

Young Jimmy is the first presidential grandchild to stir things up at the White House since Patrick Lyndon Nugent was fussed over by President Lyndon B. Johnson.

LBJ let Baby Lyn mess with just about everything around the place except the "hot line" to Moscow. Johnson's pride in his grandchild was so enormous that it became, for onlookers, a source of tolerant amusement.

On one occasion, a teething Lyn reduced a wrapped packet of chewing gum to a soggy mass. With a flourish, LBJ removed the packet from the child's mouth and presented it, as a gift, to a visitor who got the impression he was expected to mount it under glass.

With an audience like that, it may be a wonder that the president's daughter is able to practice at all.

•

When Carter flew to Minnesota this week for Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey's funeral, he did not permit any White House reporters to tag along. It was the first time a president has traveled so far without a press contingent since Richard M. Nixon, in one of his more reclusive Watergate moods, made a Christmas trip to his California home in 1973.

The White House explanation was that Carter wanted to make a "low key" journey to the Humphrey rites. Reporters noted, however, that the president took along a personal photographer.

The appearance of snow in Washington has roused the animal spirits of some of Carter's fellow Georgians on the White House staff. The president himself confessed he hadn't seen so much snow — four or five inches — in 25 years.

Three key aides, who were barely beyond kindergarten 25 years ago, decided so much snow should not be wasted. Result: they ambushed White House reporters and photographers with snowballs. Leading the assault were Hamilton Jordan, the president's principal aide, and press secretary Jody Powell and Deputy Appointments Secretary Phil Wise.

Once notebooks and cameras were cast aside, the press contingent thoroughly routed the outnumbered Georgians.

Groups now giving more

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corporate political committees, no longer burdened by federal restrictions on campaign spending, are giving large sums to political candidates.

A Common Cause study released Tuesday shows business committees contributed more than $7.1 million to congressional candidates in 1976, up from $2.5 million in the 1974 congressional year.

The latter year is when the government removed a restriction that outlawed formation of political committees in companies with government contracts.

Amtrak boxtop promotion runs afoul of HEW

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amtrak thinks its new cereal boxtop promotion will attract more riders, but the Department of Health, Education and Welfare says it might also be a ticket to the dentist.

The financially struggling national rail passenger service is joining with the Kellogg Co., to give a child a free ticket good for anywhere in the Amtrak system in exchange for three cereal boxtops, provided the child is accompanied by two adults.

All appeared well for the railroad's plan until the director of HEW's Office of Consumer Affairs accused the rail service of contributing to tooth decay among children by promoting the sale of sugar-coated cereals.

An Amtrak spokesman said Tuesday night there are no plans to stop the year-long promotion that began Jan. 1. He said more than 64 million cereal packages began appearing on grocery shelves at the beginning of the year.

Lee Richardson, director of HEW's consumer office, said in a letter to Amtrak President Paul H. Reistrup last week that the promotion ignores the opinions of nutritionists that "high levels of sugar intake are linked with tooth decay, obesity, diabetes, atherosclerosis and hyperactivity in children.

The third cereal in the promotion is Kellogg's Sugar Frosted Flakes.

Taller and taller

Yes sir, and yet another skyscraper has been announced for Downtown Midland — the second in a week's time.

The most recent announcement, made by William C. Blanks, oil and gas producer, concerns the proposed erection of a $6 million office building at the northeast corner of Wall and Big Spring streets, in the heart of the central business district.

It will be a 12-story edifice, with 11 floors of office space. The lower level will be designed for retail establishments. It will have 112,250 square feet of floor space overall.

The building's exterior will be sheer bronze aluminum and bronze double-pane insulating glass.

Design and supervision of the project is by Frank Welch Associates of Midland. Area Builders, Inc., of Midland is the general contractor.

Construction is scheduled to begin next month.

Midland's already impressive skyline will become even more impressive as this attractive edifice takes its place amidst other skyscrapers in the Tall City.

The other new office building announced just a week earlier is the 15-story Gibraltar Savings Center which will be erected at Texas Avenue and Loraine Street. It's cost is estimated in excess of $8 million.

Crutch for the dollar

The moves by the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board to support the American dollar provide a crutch for our limping currency, but make no pretense of offering a cure.

The massive intervention in international currency markets may be successful in the short run. The multibillion-dollar funds made available to buy dollars in foreign markets restored confidence and reversed the currency's skid in value.

But the root cause of the currency dilemma is the $30 billion gap between American export and import values this year.

And the $45 billion in oil imports is directly responsible for the deficit that drives up the price of both imported and domestic consumer goods and shakes foreign economies pegged to the American currency.

The ultimate remedy for the dollar's deterioration must be a stabilization of trade policies directed to restoring export-import balance.

The first priority must be construction of an energy policy to ease our dependence on oil from abroad either through conservation or development of new energy sources or both.

War in Cambodia

It was Communist doctrine, first proclaimed in the Communist Manifesto of 1848, that communism would put an end to the hostility between nations.

Alas, the doctrine has been proved unfounded; again and again, the new Communist nations have fallen out with one another. The latest fighting has broken out between the Communist regimes of Vietnam and Cambodia, two countries whose ancient enmity seems not to have been one whit abated by their conversion to communism.

The fairy tale of monolithic communism may be believed by some few anti-Communists who refuse to give it up despite any evidence to the contrary. Surely the Communists themselves no longer put any stock in it.

It is just another of the many myths of Marxism which history has exploded.

ART BUCHWALD

Wives walking behind husbands has advantages

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — The Los Angeles Chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW) has criticized Rosalynn Carter for following the Saudi Arabian custom of walking several feet behind her husband during his trip to the Middle Eastern nation.

The LA persons complained that Mrs. Carter should not have gone if she could not walk beside the President, instead of bringing up the rear.

While NOW may have a point, there is another school of thought that says the custom of walking behind one's husband is not demeaning and has many advantages. This school, which meets McNulty's Bar and Grill around the corner from my office, was in session late in the afternoon the day the LA protest story appeared in the newspapers.

I believe it was Nolan who brought it up. "I don't think we should be too critical of Arab customs, even though they're socking it to us on the oil."

Novak agreed. "There are many advantages to a wife walking behind her husband and the American woman should examine them before she criticizes Mrs. Carter."

"What are they?" McNulty wanted to know.

"Well, for one thing," Novak said, "if the wife walks behind the husband she can tell if anyone is following him."

"I'll drink to that," Doyle said.

"But camels don't knock down husbands in America," Siegel protested.

"They don't now," Novak replied. "But they might at some future time."

"I'll drink to that," Doyle said again.

"Suppose it's a slushy day and cars are splashing people on the sidewalk. A wife, if she's walking behind her husband, could caution him in time and he could jump out of the way," Stevens said.

"She could also keep her eyes open when her husband walks under a scaffolding, and throw her body in the way in case someone accidentally dropped a brick," Novak added.

"That's true," Evans agreed. "If she was walking next to him they both might be killed. Walking behind your husband is no different than flying in different airplanes to protect the children."

"If the husband is up in front, and the wife is behind, she can keep an eye on him in case he starts ogling pretty girls walking the other way," Hackett said.

Someone said, "And let's not forget muggers. It's much safer for a couple to walk in tandem. Then one or the other can scream for help."

"I don't see why the NOW people are so uptight about Rosalynn walking behind her husband," Novak said. "It gave a lot of dignity to the President's trip to Saudi Arabia, and provided the press with its most newsworthy story."

Someone at the end of the bar chimed in. "You're right. The trip could have been a bust if the Carters walked together, especially since they had done it already at their Inauguration. What's wrong with the First Lady following in her husband's footsteps?"

I guess it was Nolan who summed it up when he said, "American women could learn a lot from the customs of Saudi Arabia. Everyone knows the only reason it's the richest country in the world is because their women walk behind their men."

Doyle was delighted with this last thought and without even making an announcement drank to it.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

More 'couples' grants uncovered

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — The rarefied air of high government office has an intoxicating effect-on some officials who get the idea they are not bound by the rules that govern ordinary men. This has been the attitude of the clique that runs the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA).

In an earlier installment, we reported that the agency's top officials have been overseeing government contracts and fees to insiders who sometimes turn out to be their wives. Now we have discovered another man-and-wife deal among NIDA's numerous drug research grants.

Although public officials aren't supposed to be associated with any firm that receives money from their agencies, NIDA official Laurence Carroll and his wife, Guinevieve, have been principal stockholders in such a firm. The feisty, blunt-spoken Carroll was one of the incorporators of a Miami-based consulting firm called Social Systems, Inc.

At least-four states have funneled NIDA funds into this favored company. The state of Florida, for example, gave the company $40,000 in 1975 to run a drug-training program.

Carroll removed his name from the firm some time in 1975, but his wife's name still appears as a director. Carroll insisted to our reporters Valerie Strauss and Howie Kurtz that "there's no longer any connection with our family." Any official listing of his wife's name, he said, "must be a legal error."

Declared the combative Carroll: "I allowed my name to remain on longer than I should have." Then he produced a letter from Social Systems stating that the company has never paid him any fee or dividend. He also contended that the firm never received any money fron his agency and that his wife was never paid out of federal funds.

But Florida officials informed us, on the contrary, that they paid the company $40,000 in NIDA funds. And under a contract with Nebraska, the firm hired Carroll's wife as a consultant. She was paid with federal funds, the company president acknowledged.

Carroll is now preparing to retire from NIDA and is looking for a job in Miami. On a government-paid trip to Miami, he met with a University of Miami professor and discussed a future job.

The same Carroll, meanwhile, oversees $250,000 in government grants and contracts, which go to the University of Miami. He claimed he saw the professor "during off hours. I don't see any conflict."

There have been many other irregularities in the awarding of NIDA contracts. Some examples:

— During the Nixon-years, a $2 million contract was awarded to Dr. John Mendelson, a Massachusetts researcher. The official who handled the contract, Dr. Nancy Mello, requested $8,000 so two investigators could inspect a drug program in Hong Kong.

After the money was approved, Dr. Mendelson married Dr. Mello, and the couple had a honeynoon in Hong Kong. Mendelson told us that both are qualified investigators, that they completed their research in Hong Kong and that federal money paid for only part of the trip. The rest was financed by private donors, he said.

— NIDA computers are supposed to keep track of thousands of drug addicts and treatment programs. But officials have secretly used the machines to compute the batting averages of players on local baseball teams.

They have also used the computers to monitor an office football pool during the football season. The top brass at NIDA insist this extra-curricular activity has been halted.

— In 1975, a Maryland firm called Macro Systems, Inc. offered Frederick Harrison a consulting job on a NIDA contract. At the same time, he was on the review board which was awarding the contract. Harrison said he was unaware of Macro's job offer because it was made through a member of his staff. In any case, he did not accept the offer.

But interestingly, Harrison gave Macro top marks. "Excellent staff selection . . . outstanding," he wrote. A Macro spokesman told us "it was all very innocent. As soon as we realized we had approached someone who was on the review board, we dropped the arrangement."

— The University of Miami ran a large NIDA drug training center for several years. Although NIDA official Lonnie Mitchell certified that the university did an excellent job, the school lost the contract in 1976. The new contract went to a firm called A.L. Nellum Associates, even though the university's bid was $100,000 lower than Nellum's.

Inside sources claim the firm's owner and the NIDA official are close friends. Indeed, A.L. Nellum conceded that they are "good friends." Nellum insisted, nevertheless, that Mitchell did not help him win the contract.

Mitchell maintained that he never met Nellum until he had already won the contract. "I've seen him only a couple of times socially," said Mitchell. "I was surprised the univeristy lost the contract. I thought they had done an excellent job."

Such abuses have continued, insiders say, because NIDA director Robert DuPont spends more time galivanting around the world thantending to his office. But those who complain have had their jobs downgraded.

NICK THIMMESCH

Columnist reveals how Hubert 'brought us together'

WASHINGTON — Much of what was good about Hubert Humphrey was expressed at the memorial services in the Capitol Rotunda last Sunday. Hubert, in death, brought everybody together again, even Richard M. Nixon, whom Hubert never stigmatized for being in exile.

Several members of the so-called national press, in low voice, uttered malicious remarks about Nixon during the services, calling him Tricky Dick and demeaning his motives for coming to the services. A little of this crept into the reporting the next day.

But people close to Humphrey, people who went through the heartbreaking 1968 campaign, on hearing these reports just shook their heads and said that Hubert would have wanted Nixon here, that he and Nixon kept in touch, and Hubert always tried to reconcile everybody. "Anyone who makes remarks about Nixon being here," said a man close to Humphrey, "doesn't know what Hubert Humphrey is all about."

And so for the first time Presidents Carter, Ford and Nixon got together, if only briefly and under sad circumstances — meeting in Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker's offices in the Capitol. Moments before, the three men were also with Lady Bird Johnson, Betty Ford, Nelson and Happy Rockefeller, Henry and Nancy Kissinger and everybody asked about Pat Nixon's health.

Presidents, their senior assistants and their wives are usually at an age when health is a matter of large concern, and there is much asking about it. Muriel Humphrey recently had surgery. Betty Ford is not strong. Happy Rockefeller survived two breast operations. Pat Nixon recovers slowly from a stroke. Nancy Kissinger had half her stomach removed a few years back. The very special gathering in Howard Baker's office felt Hubert's ordeal.

Hubert brought them together, and the nation, too, not because he was some holy man, some Gandhi. Rather, Hubert's urges to do good were so obvious, as were his flaws and earnest optimism, that even nonbelievers were touched. Nobody could dislike Hubert Humphrey.

He remembered people. An old-timer would come, reminding him of an occasion of a generation ago, and Hubert would brighten the person's eyes by rasping out the details and maybe a "golly gee" or a "wasn't that great!"

I remember Hubert in Atlantic City in 1964, when he was about to be dubbed Vice President, pursued by well-wishers and eager newsmen. My meetings with him had been few, but he knew about my family, and, surrounded by a thickness of people, he spotted me and called out, "You tell your Uncle Elmer that I sure enjoyed that smoked turkey he sent me!"

Wow! That was my Uncle Elmer Swenson he was thanking. Elmer had been around Hubert when the Farmer-Labor Party merged with the Minnesota Democrats in 1944, which gave old H.H.H. the vehicle he needed to build a political career.

In late summer, 1970, I went to Minnesota to cover Hubert's comeback campaign for the Senate. No sooner had I sat down to interview him than he put his hand on top of mine and said, "Well, I'm sorry that Elmer was laid away. He was such a good man." Uncle Elmer, born of immigrant parents, farmer, postmaster of Grove City, had died several weeks before.

Hubert remembered all the Uncle Elmers of his life, and while that served him politically it also endeared him to people. Hubert's love of people was authentic in a trade which can't always be authentic. That's why Howard Baker, who doesn't easily show emotion, wept openly at the services.

During the last week of 1976, I visited Hubert at his Waverly home to do a magazine piece. The flesh was weak from that massive surgery, but the spirit was strong. He and Muriel reminisced for several hours. Humphrey, this fevered spirit, was one, long, human interest story.

He grew up in the innocence of rural South Dakota, filled with the sweet-sorrow of aspiration. He had to make it, by golly. So he rasped his ebullience and identified with others who also felt they might make it someday. Hubert could be mean, but his meanness quickly flushed away. He didn't avoid sin or sinners, and this helped him develop a Christian tolerance for people.

He was deeply hurt by the power of Kennedy money in 1960 but dismissed his bitterness. "Jack Kennedy?" he said. "He was delightful. I got along with Jack Kennedy, after he became President, as well as any man in public life." As for the man who many thought sat on H.H.H. too long, Hubert said: "I have warm feelings about L.B.J. He could be exceedingly kind and rough, all in one conversation. But he was good to me. My liberal friends wanted me to tell him off every week, but you don't do that."

Shortly before President Ford left the White House, he had Hubert and Muriel to dinner. Hubert told Ford that nobody could take his time as President away from him. "I said, gee, I would have given anything to be President two days, and you had two and a half years."

Oh, Hubert was not humble. His ego got him into some compromising situations. He was no saint. Hubert always had messy campaign finance problems. One of his best men went to federal prison for it, and another aide narrowly escaped. Hubert understood the perils of politics, especially if you were a poor man — as he was — in the game.

He and Nixon related as two scarred gladiators. They could beat on each other and then embrace at the end. They were oddly close, though remote in terms of distance, politics and personality.

"Nixon was always respectful with me," Hubert said that December afternoon in 1976. "He went out of his way to be so. When we left Washington after his inauguration, he sent us home in the presidential plane and with our household goods aboard. And he phoned me with wishes to get well when I was recovering from my surgery."

Hubert phoned Nixon on Jan. 9 to wish him a happy birthday. Four days later Hubert died.

That afternoon in Waverly one year ago, after reciting all the tragedy and triumph, gaunt and gallant Hubert still bubbled with life. He and Muriel had no regrets. "Look at the fun we've had," he said, "and the people we've met. To come from Doland and Huron, S.D. How lucky I've been. I'm not mad at anybody."

Prison inmates given training

The Southeast Correctional Center is the fourth Boston area state correctional facility to offer computer programming courses taught by Honeywell volunteers. At the request of a single prisoner, the computer company held its first behind bars data processing class 10 years ago at the state's maximum-security prison in Walpole.

Court orders return of girl

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Pima County Juvenile Court Judge John P. Collins Wednesday took his first legal steps toward freeing Tucson area teen-agers who have been taken to Bible-oriented homes operated by evangelist Lester Roloff in Texas.

Collins ordered court workers to bring a 13-year-old girl back to court from the Rebekah Home for Girls in Corpus Christi for a review of her situation Jan. 27.

The girl is a ward of the court and was sent by Collins to the home, but later was removed. She then was returned to the home at her own request, but remains under the court's jurisdiction, court officials said.

In addition, a petition was filed in Collins' court Wednesday seeking to make a 16-year-old Tucson girl at the home a ward of the court. She "has been or is being abused ... and therefore is in need of further service and protection from this court," the petition said.

Collins said the girl's mother "has indicated she does not want her back. Therefore, she is a dependent child." That means she is under the court's jurisdiction.

Collins said in reference to the claim of abuse in the petition that she is being abused if she is being kept at the home against her will.

A month ago, Collins raised the question of minors' rights in connection with a number of Tucson area teens known to have been taken by force, but with their parents' permission, to the homes, which are operated by Roloff.

The Tucson Citizen reported at the time that off-duty Tucson policemen took the youths to Texas and in some cases used handcuffs to restrain them although they were not under court jurisdiction.

The judge said then that the youths had a right not to be sent to the homes if they did not want to be, and those already at the homes have a right to return home if they want.

Their parents have signed parental rights over to Roloff, who has contended that parents have the right to do with their children what they please, especially because government agencies have been unsuccessful in helping the youths.

Roloff, who runs several homes in South Texas, including some to which courts send juveniles and adults, said he uses love, corporal punishment and the Bible to turn youths toward Jesus Christ.

Last week, Arizona Attorney General Bruce Babbitt said he did not think the state could do much in connection with parents sending their children to the Roloff homes because parents have wide discretion over their children.

Collins two weeks ago sent Juvenile Court Director Boyd Dover to Corpus Christi. Dover met with Roloff and some of the youths, although he was denied a chance to interview the teens privately.

Two youths complain of beatings

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — Two Arizona teen-agers who ran away from one of Evangelist Lester Roloff's youth homes have been placed in the care of the Texas Department of Human Resources at nearby Fredericksburg.

Police said the boys ran away from the Anchor Home in Zapata and were picked up Wednesday in Kerrville, about 250 miles north of Zapata.

The Department of Human Resources and the police are looking into complaints by the two youths that they were beaten at Roloff's home.

The boys, aged 15 and 16, were picked up while hitch-hiking through Kerrville.

Police Lt. Bill Beasley said the teens had complained of being beaten, and added, "They had some bruises and the like that lent a little credence to their story."

The lieutenant also said the bruises were mostly on the boys' legs and buttocks.

State District Judge Bob Barton awarded temporary custody of the runaways to the Department of Human Resources in San Antonio, which assigned investigator Bob Holt to look into the case.

Charter for bank clears one hurdle

ODESSA — With the first hurdle successfully behind them, charter applicants for a state bank at the Midland Regional Air Terminal are hopeful that by the end of February their application will be approved.

And after approval, charter applicant and director Jesse Combs of Odessa said the new bank at the terminal would be opened within six months.

Combs, president of Permian Bank and Trust in Odessa, said that although American Bank in Odessa contested the application in a letter of protest to the State Banking Department, at a hearing Tuesday in Austin, they did not formally present their complaint.

Combs said the letter of complaint was erased from the record as a result of no follow-up presentation.

Combs said there was a tremendous need for the banking facility at the air terminal and, if approved, it would be located on LaForce Avenue near the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

Other directors of the proposed Metro Bank are Ernest W. Crawford, executive director of the PBRPC; B. R. Jones, president of B. R. Jones Dirt and Paving Contractors; Phil Parker, president of Parkem Industrial Services Inc.; Louis Rochester, chairman of the board of Murphy and Rochester Real Estate and Insurance; and Luther May Jr., president of the First National Bank of Olney.

Nursing home case brings two sentences

WHARTON, Tex. (AP) — Two California residents have been assessed 10-year probated prison sentences after pleading guilty to one count of false imprisonment.

Lillian Gobert, 42, and Elmer Arnold Thompkins, 34, both of Van Nuys, Calif., were accused of holding mentally disabled persons in what authorities called a filthy, roach-infested nursing home near here.

State District Judge Lloyd Rust Jr. also assessed each a $1,000 fine in a plea bargaining session Wednesday.

Mrs. Gobert and Thompkins were indicted last September on 12 counts of false imprisonment and one count of kidnapping after state and county authorities raided the home in the Spanish Camp community, about nine miles north of here, Aug. 18.

Officers freed 11 men and two women. They said the patients were malnourished and in need of medical treatment.

The remaining 11 counts of false imprisonment and the kidnapping charges were dismissed and Mrs. Gobert and Thompkins were released from custody.

Lee Etta Bradshaw, 45, of Spanish Camp, also indicted on 12 counts of false imprisonment. She has been free on $12,000 personal recognizance bond since Aug. 29. Her case is still pending.

Panel splits over Marston

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The debate over the political replacement of U.S. Attorney David Marston may have split the ranks of a panel of lawyers named by U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell to suggest possible successors.

One man on the five-member screening committee already has quit. Two others have told Henry Reath, chairman of a lawyers committee supporting Marston, that they favor the retention of U.S. attorneys on a merit basis.

Reath said Wednesday night he had met earlier in the day with Jerome Shestack, director of the panel, and David Berger and asked them to contact Bell to ask him "to recognize that the situation had gotten so bad in Philadelphia that he had to take decisive action forthwith to remove the cloud of uncertainty from the head of Mr. Marston."

China reportedly convinced world war inevitable

By ELLEN HUME
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said this week after a two-week visit to China that he was discouraged by the Peking government's "acceptance of the absolute inevitability of world war."

The Chinese believe the war — which they said might not include nuclear weapons — would stem from "inconsistencies" between the Soviet Union and the United States, Cranston said.

Cranston, the Senate Democratic whip, did not say what the Chinese regarded as the chief "inconsistencies" between the two countries. Nor did he elaborate on Peking's belief that another world war was inevitable.

The senator, who strongly favors the current U.S.-USSR Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty talks, said Chinese officials "are interested in seeing arms control dealt with ultimately," even if they "have no interest in getting involved with it now."

Cranston said he and the nine other congressmen on the official Jan. 3-16 China trip favored normalizing diplomatic relations with China as soon as possible.

He said he would accept the three key Chinese requirements for establishing full diplomatic relations:

—The United States would sever diplomatic ties with the Nationalist Chinese on Taiwan, but maintain trade and cultural representatives just as Japan does now with the island.

—The United States would end the 1954 Dulles mutual defense treaty with Taiwan, terminating its legal requirement to intervene if China tries to take over Taiwan.

—The United States would withdraw its remaining troops in Taiwan, which now number 995, according to the Pentagon.

Cranston said he thought it a "virtual certainty" that the Chinese would not use force to reunify Taiwan and the mainland. Vice Premier Teng Hsiao Ping, stressed the "peaceful reunification" of the two Chinas when meeting with the delegation, Cranston said.

Cambodia receives new support gesture from mainland China

Agence France-Presse

PEKING — China Wednesday made a further gesture of support for Cambodia in its confliet with Vietnam.

Only a few hours after a Vietnamese ultimatum to Cambodia an important delegation led by the late Chinese Premier Chou En-lai's widow Teng Ying-chao, a vice-chairman of the National People's Congress, left Peking Wednesday morning for Phnom Penh.

The New China News Agency reported that Mrs. Teng, also a Communist Party Central Committee member, was paying a friendly visit to Cambodia at the invitation of the Communist Party, the permanent committee of the People's Congress and the Cambodian government.

Her visit to Cambodia was unexpected and would appear to have been decided by the Chinese government in view of the Cambodian-Vietnamese situation. On Saturday, Mrs. Teng was in fact scheduled to meet French Prime Minister Raymond Barre who arrives in Peking today.

NCNA said Mrs. Teng left by special plane with three high officials: Vice-Foreign Minister Han Nien-lung, Foreign Ministry Asian Affairs Director Shen Ping and Deputy Director of Protocol Fu Shun-ho.

Peking diplomatic circles considered Mrs. Teng's sudden visit, contrasting sharply with China's relative discretion in the Cambodian-Vietnamese conflict, could have a double aim.

First, to reiterate China's support for Cambodia at a time when a powerful Vietnam is using threats to pressure it into negotiations. Cambodian Communist Party Secretary and Prime Minister Pol Pot said Tuesday his government would negotiate when Vietnamese "aggressions and infiltrations" ceased and all Cambodian territory was evacuated. China supports this point of view.

On the other hand the visit, though a warning to Vietnam, could also be intended to soften the intransigent Cambodian position which is prolonging the conflict and delaying peace talks.

Mrs. Teng has inherited some of her late husband's prestige and has become, since the fall of the "Gang of Four," China's roving ambassador to friendly countries.

She paid important official visits last year to Burma, Sri Lanka and Iran.

Two members of her party are diplomatic specialists who would be able to give Cambodia advice on negotiations with Vietnam.

By RICHARD HARWOOD
The Washington Post

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — It is cool in the desert at night and there is an air of unreality about it.

We are sitting in a Chinese restaurant listening to "Stars and Stripes Forever" on Muzak. A Pakistani waiter brings non-alcoholic beer made in Switzerland.

Outside, a Bedouin in traditional dress roars down the street in a General Motors truck. Huge cranes loom nearby in the darkness. The sound of jackhammers pounding rock carries over the noises of traffic.

By day, things are more unreal, if reality is defined as the storybook pictures many Americans carry around in their heads about Saudi Arabia — pictures of a nomadic life of poverty, piety and camels.

Along every roadway, a new city is rising — miles of office buildings, palaces, hotels, villas, housing complexes, high-rise apartments, schools, hospitals. Kentucky Fried Chicken is here and the stalls in the souk the old market place, are crammed with the bounty of the Western world, from candy bars to washing machines.

The physical change is so profound that there is talk at the archeological museum of preserving old mud buildings before the bulldozers have gotten them all.

And in all the government ministries there is talk of preserving the Saudi culture and traditions, which means preserving, among other things, Islamic puritanism, the subjugation of women and the preservation of the monarchy

The official concern is well-founded, because the pace of social change here is probably unequaled in the experience of any nation in this century. It was only 15 years ago that slavery was abolished in Saudi Arabia by decree and the payment of about $3.5 million for the freedom of 1,682 men, women and children. It was only 25 years ago that a drunken son of King Ibn saud killed a British diplomat and the king offered to the widow the son's head, in accordance with the old rule of a life for a life. The offer was declined.

There are still public executions and the severing of hands for thievery after trials by religious courts. Adulterers and adultresses may still be stoned to death. In Jiddah, a few months ago a young man and a royal princess were executed for a sexual liaison; an intermediary in the liaison died with them.

These customs come out of the old Arabia. The new Arabia is something else.

It claims one of the most advanced welfare states in the world. "We are doing things," said the minister of industry, Ghazi Al Qusaybi, "that no socialist state would consider."

Medical care and education are free, with pocket money for high school students and $200-a-month stipends for college students. A family wanting a house is given land by the government and interest-free loans of up to $80,000 for construction. These "loans" may, in fact, be gifts because no pay-back system has been established.

For the old and disabled there are government allowances more generous than in the United States. Subsidies pour out to farmers and businessmen. The average wage, according to the Ministry of Industry, is $7,200 a year. There are no taxes and no involuntary unemployment. Instead, Saudi Arabia is importing workers on a vast scale. At least a million Yemenis have come in as laborers; there are a quarter of a million Indians, Pakistanis, Egyptians, South Koreans, Americans and Europeans in technical and skilled jobs.

Court ruling gives prosecutor measure of finesse

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that a prosecutor can threaten to file more serious charges against a defendant in order to pressure the defendant to plead guilty to other charges.

The case divided the court five to four. The central issue was whether the court was validating the kind of vindictiveness against defendants that it earlier had outlawed.

The defendant in the case, Paul L. Hayes, was indicted in 1973 on a charge of forging an $88.30 check. He faced a possible sentence of two to ten years. In plea-bargaining, the Lexington, Ky., prosecutor in the case offered to recommend a five-year term in exchange for a guilty plea.

But, the prosecutor warned, if Hayes declined to "save the court the inconvenience and necessity of a trial" by pleading guilty, he would seek to re-indict him under the Kentucky Habitual Criminal Act.

This law, when invoked, made a life sentence mandatory on conviction for a third offense; it allowed parole after 15 years. The state repealed it in 1975, substituting a less harsh law under which Hayes could not have been convicted as a habitual criminal.

The new law takes in account only offenses committed by a defendant 18 or older. Hayes was 17 when he was charged with rape, pleaded guilty to detaining a female, and was sentenced to five years — in a reformatory not a prison. In 1970, he was convicted of robbery and sentenced to five years, but immediately was put on probation. Thus he had served no time at all in a prison.

Claiming to be innocent of the bad-check charge, Hayes insisted on a trial. The result was that a jury not only convicted him, but also found that he had been convicted of the two other felonies. This automatically subjected him to a life sentence.

The conviction was upheld in state courts but struck down by the Sixth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. "In this case, a vindictive motive need not be inferred," Judge Wade H. McCree, now solicitor general of the United States, wrote. "the prosecutor has admitted it."

The Supreme Court termed the ruling "mistaken" and reversed it. The prosecutor's conduct, "which no more than openly presented the defendant with the unpleasant alternatives of foregoing trial or facing charges on which he was plainly subject to prosecution did not violate" the constitutional guarantee of due process of law, Justice Potter Stewart wrote for the court.

In the "give-and-take" of plea-bargaining, the opinion said, there is no violative "element of punishment or retaliation so long as the accused is free to accept or reject the prosecution's offer."

In a dissenting opinion, Justice Harry A. Blackmun wrote that the prosecutor's admitted threat to bring a new indictment solely to deter Hayes from exercising his right to a trial was the very kind of retaliation the court had barred in decisions going back to 1969.

"Prosecutorial vindictiveness in any context is still prosecutorial vindictiveness," Blackmun said. Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall joined his opinion.

In an additional dissent, Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., wrote that the prosecutor denied due process to Hayes by admittedly setting out to "penalize with unique severiety his exercise of constitutional rights." He said he was "not satisfied that the result in this case is just ..."

The offer of five years for passing a bad $88 check "hardly could be characterized as ...generous." Powell said.

In another decision, the court ruled that the right to marry is of such "fundamental importance" that a state can't deny a marriage license to a parent just because he fails to make court-ordered payments for the support of his child.

The court voted 8-1 to overturn a Wisconsin law that requires judges to withhold permission to marry — in Wisconsin or elsewhere — unless the parent is making the payments, and unless the child is not, or is not likely to become, a public charge. The dissenter was Justice William H. Rehnquist.

Revised hospital standards issued

By LAWRENCE MEYER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare Wednesday released a revised set of federal standards for construction and use of hospitals that have been relaxed in the face of a national furor.

HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. said in announcing the revised guidelines that they are "tough enough to be effective, reasonable enough to be fair." Califano indicated that the basic revisions have been made with rural areas in mind and that the revisions made give local health planning agencies "ample authority and ample flexibility to make exceptions where they think exceptions are appropriate."

House Health Subcommittee chairman Paul G. Rogers, D-Fla., one of the authors of the 1974 health planning act under which the guidelines were first announced last September, said Wednesday that the changes made "respond to both Congressional concerns and those raised by individuals and groups who would be affected by the guidelines." Rogers said the changes "make it clear" that decisions about adequacy of health services "will be made at the local level."

When the HEW guidelines were first issued last September, Califano estimated that they could, if followed, result in eliminating 100,000 unnecessary hospital beds across the country. In the uproar that followed, hospitals across the country — especially in rural areas — contacted their area congressional representatives to complain that the guidelines, if followed, could put them out of business.

In all, according to Califano, HEW received 55,000 comments — 43,000 of which came from Montana, Iowa and Texas. Among the changes announced Wednesday was a relaxation of guidelines for newborn deliveries and care in smaller hospitals and elimination of guidelines concerning pediatric care for rural hospitals.

The standards, which are intended to guide state and local planning bodies or "health systems agencies" as they draft plans for additional hospital beds and equipment, still include the basic rule of thumb that an area should have no more than 4 beds per 1,000 population and that they should be at least 80 percent occupied.

The revised standards also relaxed guidelines for open heart and other cardiac procedures and purchase of computed tomographic scanners — a sophisticated X-ray device.

Enforcement of the guidelines, which are advisory and not mandatory, is left to state planning bodies under the 1974 law. The federal government, in the absence of state action, has no authority under current law to cut off funds to local areas or individual hospitals that do not conform.

Congressmen join farm rally

By MILLER BONNER

WASHINGTON (AP) — The time has come for farmers to "start taking instead of giving" predicted Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, as he and 11 other congressmen met with more than 700 Texas farmers and ranchers in town to rally on behalf of the national farm strike.

"When you go down to the implement dealer to buy a tractor, you ask the man how much he'll take," said Bentsen. "But when you take your produce to market, you ask the man how much he'll give you."

The farmers are demanding 100 percent parity, which would theoretically give them the same buying power their predecessors enjoyed more than 60 years ago.

House Majority Leader Wright brought the crowd to its feet cheering when he noted, "William Jennings Bryan once said if you destroyed all the cities of America, they would spring back up but if you destroyed all the farms, grass would grow in the streets of every city.

"As majority leader, I don't have a lot to do with writing legislation, but I do schedule legislation," added Wright. "If the Agriculture Committee can pass that (farm) bill, I'll tell you right now it's going to be scheduled and I think it will be passed."

Hall said, "You didn't come here to see the Texas delegation, you came to Washington to get a commitment from the Texas delegation. We promise you that we'll get relief not three or four years from now, but this session."

Kazen called rural America "the backbone of this country" and Pickle added "our friends from New York and Washington think food and fiber floats out of the heavens, not grown out of the ground."

Remark against firm denied by Newton

By JACK KEEVER

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Railroad commissioner Jon Newton swears he cannot recall ever accusing LoVaca Gathering Co. of having a "public-be-damned" attitude.

Company lawyer Tracy DuBose read a newspaper story in court Wednesday quoting Newton as having made such a statement in January 1974.

Asked if he recalled the statement, Newton said, "No, sir."

Was that, he was asked, his attitude about LoVaca in 1974, and Newton said, "I don't recall that my attitude was one of 'public-be-damned.'"

"I did have an attitude of general opposition to a company just going out and buying gas and automatically passing on 100 per cent of the cost to its customers," as LoVaca was allowed to do under a 1973 commission order, Newton said.

DuBose has tried to show, primarily through Newton's campaign statements, that Newton was biased—before he was elected to the commission in 1976—against LoVaca; its corporate parent, Coastal States Gas Corp.; and another subsidiary, Coastal States Gas Producing Co.

This bias, the companies claim, led to Newton proposing a Dec. 12, 1977, order forcing the companies to refund $1.6 billon in natural gas charges and to live up to its original contracts.

Company officials say abiding by the contracts—with much lower prices for gas than is now being charged under a temporary commission order— would cost an additional $547.5 million a year.

The order was adopted 2-1, and Coastal-LoVaca's appeal is pending.

Asked if he had said LoVaca was "probably the sickest natural gas system in Texas, and we (the commission) have coddled it for three years," Newton said.

Ban removed; party files suit

HOUSTON (AP) — An appellate court has overturned a lower court's temporary injunction banning certain American Nazi Party telephone messages and the party filed a damage suit against the person who requested the injunction.

The 14th Court of Civil Appeals removed Wednesday the temporary injunction which had prohibited party telephone messages offering $5,000 to any white who killed a non-white; including Jews, in self-defense.

State District Judge Richard Millard had issued the injunction Dec. 8 on the request of television personality Marvin Zindler who contended that, because he is Jewish, the messages might influence an unstable person to harm him.

The three-judge appeals court said such resentment is both understandable and justified but that Zindler had failed to show he personally would be injured by the messages.

Immediately after the appellate court's ruling was announced, the party filed a damage suit against Zindler.

The suit asked that the $5,000 bond Zindler filed in connection with his civil court injunction be forfeited and asked for $1,000 for each day the party claimed its right to free speech were violated by the December district court order.

Mike Maness, an attorney for the party, said the per diem damages were sought against both Zindler and Capital City Communications Inc., owners of KTRK-TV.

Maness contended Zindler filed the lawsuit to increase the viewing audience of KTRK-TV, described in the party's damage suit as consistently being "the smallest of any television station within the Houston market."

Maness said any monies from a judgement or settlement would be turned over to the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

"If Marvin and his employer were to contribute substantial sums to the ACLU, we would drop the suit," Maness said.

Trader Vic serves luncheon

By WILLIAM RICE
The Washington Post

SAN FRANCISCO — The office was small and crowded, but the man behind the lacquered slab of tree trunk that serves as a desk was relaxed and expansive as lunch was served one day recently.

"I've got one leg, one kidney and 22 restaurants, all doing good business. I started in in 1934 and this has been the biggest year yet. I'm feeling damned good," Trader Vic said.

His guests sighed with relief. Victor J. Bergeron had gone a dangerously long time without uttering one of the mild curse words that punctuate his speech like toothpicks on an hors d'oeuvre tray. The old man might be slipping.

Not at all. In the course of two hours, he managed to fire salvos of outrage at targets as diverse as French winemakers and President Carter (over what the Trader sees as "damned disgraceful" treatment of the elderly), hold forth on cooking, geology, art, hunting and the boyhood of Trader Vic. It was a great performance, served up with several original culinary creations and a quartet of California wines.

There are Trader Vic's in 15 U.S. cities, in London, Munich, Tokyo, Toronto and Vancouver. Two "Senor Pico" Mexican restaurants, one in San Francisco, the other in Los Angeles, complete the "group." A staunch individualist, Pergeron rejects the word "chain," claiming his restaurants and the people who run them are not mechanical reproductions with interchangeable parts.

A native of the Bay Area, he credits Don the Beachcomber with influencing him before World War II to capitalize on the romantic, escapist qualities of Polynesia in a restaurant setting. He became "Trader Vic," and Trader Vic's became an institution as military personnel beat a path to his Oakland door during and after the war. In 1951, he opened a restaurant in San Francisco as well. The others followed as did a company manufacturing Trader Vic food products.

There have been ups and downs as talented management personnel have gone out on their own or economic situations have changed. A Trader Vic's in San Juan was closed in the mid-1960s due to labor difficulties and more recently Boston and Detroit. Bergeron's own diverse interests occupy him and it's said he is less involved in the restaurants than he was.

"At my age, you gotta organize the outfit for when you kick the bucket," he said. "I do a little creating and a little correcting. I'm 75, but I'm not gonna roll over."

That morning he had risen at 7:30 and worked for an hour on a piece of sculpture in the studio at his plush Hillsborough home before coming into the office. "I just play at it (sculpturing) during the week," he said, "but Friday, Saturday, Sunday, BOOM, unless my wife wants to go somewhere. It's not a hobby, it's close to $100,000 a year." His desk and the shelves of his office contain books and beautiful cullings from what really is his hobby: geology. "Here's a rock," he bellows. "About 1 billion, 800 million years old."

Trader Vic doesn't go back quite that far, but there are few around today who would be able to challenge Bergeron's account of his boyhood. His parentage — a French mother and a French-Canadian father — gives him license, he feels, to openly exercise his dislike of French pomp and pretension and put French wines in their place. "A lot of people in this country consider French wines the epitome of perfection," he says, then chooses two short words to formulate a forceful rebuttal.

"Traditional French cooking is archaic," he adds. "It's not good for you. We're in America. Let's eat and drink what we've got here and enjoy it."

Among the foods he presented were smoked shark (which more than held its own against smoked salmon and smoked sturgeon), and agar-agar (seaweed) salad and fresh Dungeness crabs with a lightly curried sauce.

"You create 'CAUSE YOU LIKE IT," HE DECLARED. "I've been eating sauerkraut and sausage all my life. You ought to try my Chinese sauerkraut and sausage. When I was cooking behind the stove (in his first restaurant, a tiny place he called Hinky Dink's) I'd do ham and eggs but serve it with fried banana or pineapple or some goofball thing. People loved it. You can create food anywhere. An idea came right this minute. I'm thinking about crab butter (roe). We'll do a new sauce. Hollandaise and crab butter on a piece of fried fish."

So much for the rumor that Trader Vic had become a devout vegetarian. He showed, however, detailed knowledge of the vitamins and nutrients in the foods he served and took pleasure in presenting Bulghur, spaghetti squash and carrots cooked in coconut cream with the crab dish. "Vegetables can be fabulous or lousy," he said.

He denies planning any major innovations for the Trader Vic restaurants. There was a menu evolution a year or so ago, with the introduction of "Chinese Country Cooking," dishes said to be lighter, more healthful and less complicated. According to Bergeron, the philosophy behind the decision was less esoteric. "Lots of young people want to go to a good restaurant now and then," he said. "They haven't got a lot of dough. The items on this menu are complete meals.

Family tree: getting down to roots

By BETH MOHR
Copley News Service

Marilyn Markham Heimberg became so fascinated with one facet of a book she was writing that she shelved the book to write another.

Heimberg was inspired to write "Discover Your Roots" when she got to the genealogy chapter in her still unfinished work, "Creative Loafing."

"When I began my research, I was overwhelmed by the amount of material I had to go through to get practical information on how to trace a family tree," she said. "I felt there was a need for a brief guidebook that would give basic facts without demanding too much reading."

So, she wrote the book "in four months of working harder than I had ever worked in my life." It has arrived in bookstores in time to fit in with a current trend.

"Genealogy is the fastest-growing hobby in the United States," Heimberg said.

Alex Haley's book, "Roots," which has stimulated wide interest in genealogy, was one of her inspirations.

With the book behind her and starting work on her own family tree, Heimberg finds genealogy a "creative, imaginative and inexpensive way of having fun."

The procedure is to start with today and work backward.

"Once you have decided to trace your lineage, contact as many family members as you can," Heimberg said. "If you can find someone who has already done some research, you will be that much ahead.

"Older members of the family have the greatest amount of information. Former friends and neighbors may remember some facts that can be turned into good leads. Listen carefully, remembering that recollections may not always be accurate and some of those you talk to may have a tendency to dramatize or fantasize."

Once contacts with living relatives are exhausted and the search moves on to generations who lived and died in other cities, the real detective work begins.

Sleuthing then must be centered on such repositories of information as public libraries, census bureaus, churches, voter registration offices, national and state archives and headquarters of genealogical societies.

If one of your relatives is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution or another organization with a record of ancestry as a membership requirement, a lot of work will already have been done for you.

The DAR library in Washington, D.C., also is filled with valuable genealogical material. It is one of many sources Heimberg discusses in "Discover Your Roots."

Census reports, old city directories, personnel records, ship passenger lists and birth, marriage and death records are among suggested sources of information.

"Many records are closed to the public, but if you can show that you are on a valid genealogy search, some information will be provided," Heimberg said.

DEAR ABBY

Better broken now, than divorce later

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 25-year-old guy who's engaged to marry a 22-year-old girl I never proposed to.

When we first started to date I told her I didn't want to get serious and she said she didn't either. I was careful not to say, "I love you," until one night we went all the way. (I wasn't the first.) She told me she loved me, and I didn't want to be a total heel, so I told her I loved her, too. From that time on she said things like, "After we're married. . ." and I didn't have the guts to remind her that I never proposed to her.

She went ahead and told her folks, her friends and the people she works with, and that's how we got "engaged." She's already planning a June wedding.

I'm not proud of the way I let her rope me in, but now I don't know how to get out of it without hurting her and causing her humiliation.

What do I do now? I wish I had the guts to get in my car and keep on driving.

Can you help me or am I trapped?—NO GUTS

DEAR NO GUTS: You're not trapped unless you want to be. TELL the girl you aren't ready for marriage. Period. Better a broken engagement now than a divorce later.

DEAR ABBY: We have a nice-looking friend who's 25. He's a nifty dresser and would stand 6 feet tall if he'd stand up straight. That's the problem. He has the worst posture we've ever seen. He stands with his shoulders rounded and his chin on his chest. His hunched over posture makes him look like an old man.

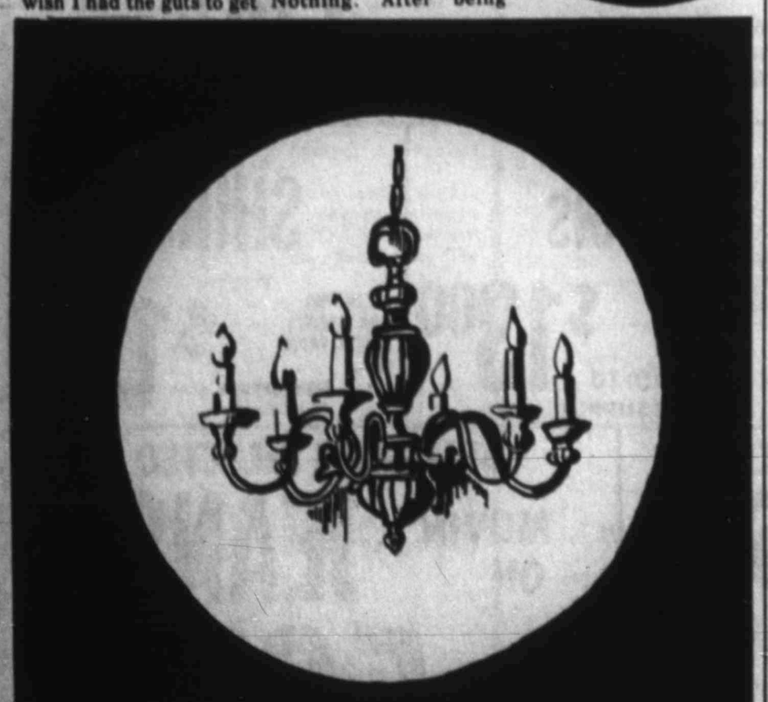

His mother was always nagging at him to stand up straight when he was a kid, so now, when anybody mentions it to him, he gets mean.

He could improve his appearance 100 percent if he had a better posture. What do you recommend we do?—CONCERNED FRIENDS

DEAR CONCERNED: Nothing. After being nagged by his mother for years to stand up straight, the last thing he needs is more nagging from "concerned friends." If your friend isn't interested in improving his appearance, his friends can't help him.

Didn't want to argue about furniture

WASHINGTON — A decade ago, Lee Kimche was a volunteer, cutting out name tags in the shape of a donkey. And she was a suburban Maryland housewife with what she felt was an unhappy marriage, four small children and no admitted career ambitions. Today, she's director of the new Institute for Museum Service, which dispenses $4 million in aid to the nation's museums.

Her story illustrates the principle that volunteer work can pay off.

She started, it's true, with more than just her psychology degree from George Washington University. She is naturally friendly. As a hostess or guest, she works as hard at a party as the caterer. At 43, she is good-looking in a tall, slim, crisp way and sure enough of herself today not to dye her prematurely gray hair. She's not afraid of man, woman, politician, speaker's lectern — or work, at a desk or a sink. And she has a real interest in art and design from centerpieces to monuments.

The other day as she talked about her life in her rented house in a posh Maryland suburb, her visitors shamlessly stared at the art, the antiques, the spare modern furniture and the sure professional way it was all put together. Her house is an accurate reflection of her personality.

In 1970, Lee Kimche and her husband separated (and divorced two years later). She left behind the house and all the china, furniture and knicknacks. She took with her the children and the silver she had inherited from her family. "I didn't want to stay around and argue about the furniture."

After four months in a furnished apartment — there was no rug so the complaints from down under were loud — she rented a 10-room house. In two weeks she furnished it so well it could have made the cover of "House & Garden."

Kimche was married in 1957, a few months after graduation, and the children came along quickly in the next few years.

Almost as soon as she was married, she joined the Service Guild of Washington, the Jewish equivalent of the Junior League. She ran the guild's arts and crafts boutique. She helped with various bonds for Israel drives. And through these voluntary tasks, she met Esther Coopersmith, an active Maryland Democrat, who had children about the same age. Both were active workers in the Brandeis University Women's Committee.

Looking for an international activity for the Brandeis group, she went to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in 1966 and proposed a joint fundraiser, with donations of art works from 100-odd countries. An art professional who heard about Kimche's project at the time almost died laughing because young, non-professional Kimche was naive enough to think she could do it. Kimche still remembers how much was made after expenses: $35,000. The poster for the auction hangs in Kimche's front hall.

Sometimes pregnant, always with small children, she did volunteer work — arranging the centerpieces, doing the publicity, making arrangements — with what seems to have been half the causes in town.

In 1964, Coopersmith had had the idea for President Johnson's fund-raising barbecues. In four months, Kimche helped her put on 13 barbecues with 2,500 people at each. She also raised campaign funds for Rep. John Brademas, D-Ind., and in 1968 for then-Vice President Hubert Humphrey, who was running for President.

"After about 10 years of volunteer work, I realized that there were people who were getting paid for what I was doing free," she said.

Though she obviously was good at getting non-paying jobs, she had no experience in getting paid. In 1968, she went to Washington Opportunities for Women at George Washington University. "We wrote down all my volunteer experience in a resume. We realized most of my experience had to do with art and politics. So we took down the Yellow Pages and went through looking for offices that had to do with both. And that's how I found the American Association of Museums.

People may someday replace the computers

By ERMA BOMBECK

Every couple of years or so, some inventor thinks he has put together a robot housewife that will electronically do all the chores a woman does.

The last one I observed was a 275-pound little number, built from parts of autos and appliances, that stood six feet tall. The owner was thrilled that it was programmed to meet the mailman and empty the garbage.

Whatya wanta bet? In a couple of weeks it will be emptying the mailman and meeting the garbage. No one tells a computer what to do. Everyone should know that by this time.

Do you remember your first computer? Mine was a little number at the IRS in Cincinnati. For no apparent reason it coughed up a bill for $42.17.

I called the computer and a person answered the phone who said she had nothing to do with my return as it was handled exclusively by the computer.

"Would you please put the computer on the phone? I have a question."

"That is not possible," she said. "Computers do not answer the phone. They are not human."

"Then perhaps you would have it write me and explain the billing."

"Computers are not programmed to write letters," she said.

"I see. Could I drop by and have a discussion?"

"Computers do not receive people and have discussions."

"Then perhaps you could tell it I called."

"Computers cannot hear, nor do they take messages."

"Could I threaten it?"

"I'm afraid not. They have no natural enemies."

"What would happen if it knew we no longer had a relationship?"

"A computer has no feelings."

"Look, if it can't talk, hear, respond or feel, then what if I didn't send it a check for $42.17?"

"It could put you in a slammer for twenty years."

Computers just better watch their step. I predict someday they'll be replaced by people and then where will they

GS cookie sale begins

Doorbells in Midland will start ringing Friday afternoon, when the Midland Girl Scouts start taking orders for the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council's Annual Cookie Sale.

This year they will be selling the large family-size box for $1.25, in six delicious flavors: Peanut Butter Sandwich, Sandwich Creams, Thin Mint Cookies, Shortbread Cookies, Peanut Butter Patties and the new Snow Drops. Since all varieties keep well in the freezer, it is a good idea to order a case of your favorite type to have on hand for entertaining unexpected guests.

The Girl Scout Cookie Sale provides girls with an opportunity to learn to meet the public, to practice record keeping and businesslike procedures and to assume responsibility in handling money, as well as earn money for the council's camping program and their own troop's program activities.

The troop keeps 15 cents for each package sold. In addition, girls selling 48 or more packages receive a cookie patch; those selling 72 packages or more will receive a patch and a set amount of cookie currency, which may be used toward camping and special event fees; and those selling 125 or more packages will receive the patch, currency and a T-shirt.

Profits from the cookie sale support the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council's two resident camps. Mitre Peak and Hat-A, where girls enjoy hiking, backpacking, swimming, horseback riding, cooking out and learn to appreciate the beauty of nature.

Young sea lion wins showdown with law

The Los Angeles Times

Shaver, from the Los Angeles Police Department, was driving along Pacific Coast Highway in nearby Santa Monica when two surfers flagged him down after they saw a small, 40-pound sea lion crawl out of the ocean and head toward the highway.

Shaver got out of his car to help persuade the sea lion to return to the sea, but the mammal had other ideas.

"It suddenly gave a yelp — like a big belch — and it snapped at us and started heading towards the car," he said. "The people tried to hold it back, but what it lacked in size it sure made up in strength."

The animal broke free and ran — straight for the open door of Shaver's squad car.

"It sat down in the driver's side," Shaver said. "Then it messed up my paper work."

The creature refused to be dislodged from the car, snapping at anyone who got near it.

"I guess it enjoyed the warmth," Shaver said.

Finally the damp, snapping animal was coaxed into the car's back seat and Shaver drove off to the nearest life guard station where Department of Animal Control officers removed the uninvited hitch-hiker, although not without some difficulty.

"It didn't want to leave, and it was snapping," Shaver said.

Animal Control officers loaded it onto a truck and sent it off to Marineland of the Pacific in San Pedro.

Officer Cliff Glinn of the West Los Angeles Animal Control Department said he was not sure why the sea lion headed inland.

"Either it was very confused, or it might have been lost," he surmised. "It just started to walk in the wrong direction."

"Generally when they're ill with something they'll come out and lay on the beach," he said. "But this was a young fellow. I just think he was confused."

Glinn said the sea lion was given a medical examination at Marineland, which may keep the animal if it is judged too young to be safetly returned to the ocean.

Afterward, Shaver said, "The inside of my patrol car smells like a can of sardines. It's wet and gooey and stinky."

Then he added:

"It's the first time I've ever had a seal in custody."

Houston ship channel pilots offered raise

HOUSTON (AP) — Official guide ships on the Houston Ship Channel and the West Gulf Maritime Association today studied a new rate structure for the pilots.

The new rate structure, adopted by the Port Authority Commission Tuesday, raises pilotage rates an estimated 15 to 20 percent.

A two-day "sickout" was staged by pilots last week after the board postponed for the second time taking action on a proposed rate increase.

Capt. J. B. Niday, presiding officer for the pilots, said his initial reaction to the new rates are "about half of what we asked for."

Wiley George, president of the WGMA, said his initial reaction is that the new rates are "very, very geneerous" and added "It looks like they gave them everything they asked for."

Niday would make no predictions about more sickouts, but said, "If I don't like it, I don't work." A decision to work rests with each individual pilot, he said.

Both tax hike, cut may come this year

The Washington Post

The average American taxpayer can count on two big developments to affect his pocketbook this year: taxes will be higher at first than they were in 1977, and — most likely — they'll come back down again later in the year. It's the nine months in between that may prove difficult to take.

The tax hike already has taken effect: it's the big jump in Social Security payroll taxes that began New Year's Day. By an earlier act of Congress, the tax rate for employers and workers rose to 6.05 percent — from 5.85 percent before — and the total wages subject to taxes climbed to $17,700, from $16,500.

That means a $105 a year jump in the maximum payroll tax a high-salaried worker has to pay — to $1,070, from the $965-a-year upper-limit last year. For a worker earning $10,000 a year, the bite widens to $605 a year from $585 in 1977. And payroll taxes will rise even more sharply in 1979 and later.

The tax cut still must be enacted: it's the $25 billion tax-reduction package President Carter plans to propose for individuals and business. As officials outlined the plan in December, the proposal will contain cuts for almost every tax bracket, and a sizable reduction in corporate taxes.

There's almost no question Congress will pass the cuts. Few presidents ever have been refused a tax-cut request, and 1978 is an election year to boot. The reductions are supposed to compensate for the impact of inflation and to help offset the Jan. 1 payroll tax boost.

The only question is the timing. Although the president first wanted to make the tax cuts effective July 1, House and Senate leaders want to postpone it until October to avoid upsetting the new congressional budget process. Carter since has acquiesced to that plan.

As a result, barring unexpected changes, the average American's tax burden is going to be significantly higher between now and October, in a hasty — albeit temporary — New Year's shock. And that doesn't include the effects of higher gasoline and fuel-oil prices as a result of the Carter energy bill.

It's still somewhat uncertain how the increase will affect consumer spending. Carter administration economists are betting that, after an initial pullback, Americans will begin loosening their pursestrings again as early as this spring — in anticipation of the October tax cut. But no one really is sure.

In the meantime, however, takehome pay for individuals is visibly smaller, and payroll taxes for employers are decidedly larger — drawing complaints from all over the country. State and local tax burdens for indivduals and corporations also are increasing.

—A $16 billion to $17 billion tax cut for individuals, to be achieved by lowering existing tax rates and replacing the current $750 a dependent personal exemption with a tax credit of $249 to $250 a dependent. The shift in the personal exemption would benefit lower-income taxpayers.

The proposal would lower the current tax rates from 14 percent in the lowest bracket and 70 percent at the top to a new range of 10 to 68 percent — in theory, a 2 percentage-point rate cut for every bracket. Actually, however, the cuts would be slightly uneven — to get rid of current inequities.

—A two-stage cut in the corporate tax rate, reducing it from the current 48 percent to 45 percent in 1978 and 44 percent in 1980. To help smaller businesses, the administration also will propose reductions in the tax rates charged companies on their first $50,000 of income.

—Expansion of the current 10 percent investment tax credit for business — designed to spur spending on new facilities — by extending the writeoff to cover structures as well as equipment, and by allowing firms to use the break to offset 90 percent of their taxes, rather than 50 percent.

Carter also is proposing to make the 10 percent level permanent. Congress raised it temporarily to last through 1980, when it is scheduled to revert to the previous 7 percent level. The investment credit was enacted originally in 1964, and has been raised and lowered several times since then.

—Elimination of the current 4 percent excise tax on telephone bills that was to have been phased out by 1982, and reduction of the tax paid by employers to finance federal unemployment insurance benefits to 0.5 percent of a firm's taxable payroll, from the current 0.7 percent level.

The measure is being billed as an anti-inflation gesture, with the end to the telephone tax saving taxpayers $1.5 billion and the payroll tax cut trimming employers' tax tabs by $800 million or so. But officials concede privately neither measure actually will have that much impact.

—Elimination of two major foreign tax breaks for U.S. corporations — including a gradual phaseout of the current tax-subsidy for so-called "Domestic International Sales Corporations" and the ability of firms to defer indefinitely the taxes due on foreign earnings.

Pueblo officer recalls

By TERRY KIRKPATRICK

WASHINGTON (AP) — The dream comes infrequently to Stephen Harris, but it's vivid. He's aboard the USS Pueblo, on that hazy, zero-degree day in the Sea of Japan, sea spray icing the deck, smoke from burning documents wreathing the bridge.

The Pueblo's 83 crewmen, many unaware of their true mission, are bound and blindfolded, their ship under escort to a North Korean port. Even those who know the purpose of the sophisticated listening gear on board are perplexed.

What went wrong? Where is help? How to escape? The dream demands answers again.

Harris is caught in a frightening, physical puzzle, one minute a Navy lieutenant eating turkey and peas for lunch, the next a spy heading into the cold.

The chill, and the questions, linger from that day nearly 10 years ago — Jan. 23, 1968.

That day began 11 months of cement block walls, bowls of turnip soup and frequent beatings for the crew.

For Stephen Harris, second ranking officer on the Pueblo and chief of its intelligence operations, it was the first day in the second half of his life.

"The incident," as Lt. Cmdr. Harris calls it now, taught him what his mind and body could and couldn't endure, a rare lesson. It "blew a hole" in his career. It became an identity, a stigma he couldn't shake. More than anything else, he says, it reaffirmed his belief in God.

The capture of the Pueblo was unique in modern times because it happened in international waters, says Theodore Ropp, who teaches military history at Duke University. And it was unusual because there was no backup from other ships or planes and because the crew had no efficient way to destroy secret papers and equipment or to scuttle the ship.

If the Pueblo has any lasting importance, Ropp believes, it's what it did to the lives of the crew.

A reminder sits in his home in Silver Spring, Md., today, a mahogany desk that belonged to his great-great-great grandfather, William Harris, one of several merchant seamen in the Harris family. William Harris sailed from Massachusetts to the Caribbean in 1797, never to return, presumably lost in a storm at sea.

Stephen Harris came back. But as he walked the Bridge of No Return to freedom 11 months to the day after capture, the storm was only beginning.

He had been recommended while a prisoner for promotion to lieutenant commander, and that was granted. But he was also recommended for court martial. So were Cmdr. Lloyd Bucher, the Pueblo's skipper, and two other officers not on board.

Bucher was charged for permitting his ship to be boarded and searched. Harris for not entirely destroying all of the classified material it carried.

"The old die-hard, don't-give-up-the-ship folks fail to make the distinction that it was a military but not a fighting ship," Harris says. "So they criticize us for not going down with the ship. When you have nothing to fight back with, that particular principle becomes sort of elusive.

"If I had it to do again, I'd still back Bucher a hundred percent. I don't think there was any other decision he could have made. Maybe some token gunshots at the enemy just to say that we did open fire."

Bucher and Harris also were criticized for signing confessions and apologies.

Plane goes to school

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — It was, pilot Lawrence Fuller explained to the Alaska state troopers, a landing of convenience.

Fuller, 25, was asked to provide some answers Tuesday after someone reported that an airplane was taxiing down one of the city's main suburban thoroughfares at 4 a.m.

Fuller explained that he was a student at the Hutchison Career Center on Geist Road and that he wanted to do some work on his Cessna 180, so he landed on Geist and taxiied onto the vocational school grounds.

No charges were filed, but troopers said they did not consider the case closed.

Dog walker prefers jail

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Howard Smith says he'll go to jail rather than pay a $5 fine for walking his little dog, Muggs, without a leash.

"We're being ripped off, that's what I told the judge," Smith, a 62-year-old unemployed steelworker, said Tuesday. "They sneak around looking for little dogs like mine but let big dogs go roaming free to tip over my garbage can and mess in my yard."

Smith said he would report next Tuesday for a 12-hour jail stay in lieu of the fine.

Marquette four-corner offense topples DePaul

By The Associated Press

It was an offensive maneuver that Marquette's freshman coach, Hank Raymonds, had seen backfire before — against his own team. He had it in his repertoire but hadn't used it all season. He was just waiting for the right moment, and it came Wednesday night against DePaul.

WITH ABOUT six minutes gone in the second half, the defending national champion Warriors went into a four-corners offense. Raymonds had barrowed it from the playbook of North Carolina Coach Dean Smith, who tried it unsuccessfully against Marquette in last year's national championship game when Raymonds was an assistant to Al McGuire.

"We had the four-corners all along," said Marquette's Butch Lee, "but we just didn't have the opportunity to use it before."

Lee, being guarded by DePaul's Randy Ramsey, exploded for 11 points while Marquette was in that formation, giving the Warriors a 54-45 lead with 13½ minutes left in the game, and second-ranked Marquette went on to beat No. 18 DePaul 80-74. Lee, a 6-foot-1 guard, wound up with 31 points, 19 in the second half.

"Hank said he didn't think Ramsey could stay with me," said Lee, "so we used it, and the four-corners spread everybody out and gave me room. We waited until we got a lead, and we used it about six minutes into the second half.

"Once we used it, they pressured us and a lot of times you get layups against pressure," Lee said. "When I made those kind of moves, their defense got worried and started gambling to try to stop me. But they just got out of position by gambling."

DePAUL GUARD Clyde Bradshaw hit four long jump shots over Marquette's zone defense to cut the Warrior's lead to 68-62 with 5½ minutes left. Gary Rosenberger hit two key baskets late in the game to keep Marquette ahead.

Jerome Whitehead, who fouled out with 3:17 left, scored 22 points for Marquette, 13-1, while forward Dave Corzine led DePaul, 13-2, with 18 points.

In other games involving ranked teams, fifth-ranked North Carolina defeated North Carolina State 69-64, No. 8 Kansas downed Iowa State 100-82, No. 9 Louisville defeated Southwest Louisiana 78-75, 13th-rated Virginia beat Virginia Tech 66-62, No. 12 Providence defeated No. 14 Holy Cross 80-64, 17th-ranked Duke whipped Wake Forest 81-72 and No. 19 Georgetown edged Seton Hall 70-69.

Phil Ford scored 24 points and North Carolina, 14-2, held off a late rally by N.C. State to score its fourth Atlantic Coast Conference victory against one defeat. State, 11-3 and 2-2 in the ACC, pulled to within one point, 53-52, with 7:36 left, but baskets by Tom Zaliagiris and Mike O'Koren kept the Tar Heels in front.

Donnie Von Moore led seven Kansas players in double figures with 16 points, and reserves Paul Mokeski and Wilmore Fowler — who scored 13 each — played key roles in what Coach Ted Owens called the Jayhawks' best game of the season. The victory over Iowa State gave Kansas, 14-2 and 4-0 in the Big Eight, sole possession of the conference lead.

"They've got a lot of quality players and a lot more with experience right now than we do," said Iowa State Coach Lynn Nance, who saw a fivegame winning streak snapped as the Cyclones lost their first home game this season.

Louisville, 11-2, came back from deficits that ranged up to 10 points in the first half to whip Southwest Louisiana, as Darrell Griffith scored six of the Cardinals' last 13 points.

Chaps facing South Plains in road tilt

LEVELLAND — Midland College will be seeking to put a halt to a three-game losing streak here tonight when the Chaparrals take on South Plains College.

The Chaps after successive road losses to Odessa College, Western Texas College and Clarendon College are 2-5 for the Western Junior College Conference season.

South Plains is 3-4.

Odessa College has a 6-1 record and tops the circuit.

THE CHAPS, 11-9 for the season, have played their last eight on the road, but after tonight's game a more favorable schedule lies ahead.

MC comes home to play New Mexico Junior College Monday and meets New Mexico Military Institute Thursday. Seven of the team's last 10 games are scheduled at MC gym.

Grid coach hired

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — Pat Lavin, who coached Phoenix St. Mary's High School to four straight Class AAA Arizona playoff appearances, has been named assistant football coach at Northern Arizona University, Coach Joe Salem said Wednesday.

NCAA punishes Oklahoma State

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association, citing a mulitude of recruiting violations, slapped a two-year football probation on Oklahoma State University today in the culmination of a lengthy investigation.

An NCAA spokesman confirmed the list of infractions, dating back to 1972, was one of the longest in NCAA annals.

The probation period covers the 1978 and 1979 seasons and prohibits the Big Eight institution from appearing on television or participating in any postseason competition.

In addition, Oklahoma State will be permitted only 25 football scholarships each of the two years instead of the normal 30.

"A significant number of serious violations of the Association's governing legislation were found by the Committee on Infractions in this case," Arthur R. Reynolds, committee chairman, said in a prepared news release.

"Further, the committee believes that some of the individuals involved in promoting the university's intercollegiate football program were engaged in a willful effort to circumvent NCAA legislation, particularly in the recruiting of prospective student-athletes."

Reynolds added that, "some of the student-athletes involved in the violations ...participated in the university's intercollegiate football program during recent seasons in which the institution's football team achieved successful regularseason records resulting in the university's selection for participation in postseason bowl competition.

"Accordingly, the committee does not believe the university should gain the benefit of this competitive advantage without realizing appropriate disciplinary action." Reynolds' allusion to a successful season was an obvious reference to 1976, when the Cowboys for the first time in history gained a share of the Big Eight championship, finishing 9-3 overall and trouncing Brigham Young 49-21 in the Tangerine Bowl. Last season the Cowboys fell to 4-7.

In addition, the NCAA's Infractions Committee ordered Oklahoma State not to "solicit or accept recruiting assistance for varying periods from 19 representatives of its athletic interests involved in the case."

The committee further ordered the school to "take any further measures it determines to be within its authority to curtail the involvement of each representative in its intercollegiate athletic program during the specified period in each case."

The wording, "...any further measures it determines to be within its authority ..."is a subtle but significant departure from previous NCAA policy.

Previously, NCAA policy was to order a member institution to sever all ties between its athletic program and alumni or boosters found in violation of NCAA regulations.

But many of the Oklahoma State supporters involved in the case, who were identified earlier this month by the Daily Oklahoman and Oklahoma City Times, had threatened to file suit if ordered to disassociate themselves completely from the OSU athletic department.

One of the most prominent, Yukon, Okla., banker Clarence Wright, has a son, Randy Wright, who plays on the OSU basketball team.

"This could be intrepreted as a minor victory of sorts for the individuals," said an NCAA spokesman. "But it's not really. The responsibility still rests with Oklahoma State.

Bing Crosby National Pro-Am starts today

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Jerry Pate, equipped with a pure, easy swing and abundant confidence, has but a single goal this year: stay healthy.

"I just hope I can go through the whole season without any physical problems," Pate said before his scheduled start today in the first round of the $225,000 Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

"Golf is a strange game. It does things to your body. It's amazing how many guys out here come up with bad backs, bad shoulders, whatever. It's amazing," he said.

Pate, one of the game's brightest young stars, fell victim to a pinched nerve that sidelined him last year during most of the summer, the peak months of the tour.

Even with that injury, he won two events, the Phoenix Open before he was hurt, and the Southern Open after he returned. He also combined with Hollis Stacy for the title in the National Mixed Team championship and, in only two full years on the tour, has collected five victories — including the 1976 U.S. Open crown.

Admittedly rusty and suffering from mental mistakes, he missed by a single shot in last week's Phoenix Open.

"God has given me the talent to play this game and beat the rest of the guys out here," the slender blond said. "And now I have to go and do it.

"But it's hard to give 100 percent, to be No. 1, when you're not 100 percent physically. I just hope I can stay away from injury for a full year."

He's healthy now and ranked a solid contender in a starry field set for one of the game's more prestigious events. The unique tournament, played over three rain-splashed courses on the Monterey Peninsula, calls for the pros, each paired with a celebrity amateur, to play one round each on Pebble Beach, Cypress Point and Spyglass Hill before the Sunday final at Pebble Beach.

All three courses are saturated from three weeks of rain. Water oozes from the ground after every footstep. Puddles of standing water are everywhere. So-called "winter rules" have been instituted, whereby players are allowed to lift, clean and place balls on the fairways.

More rain, which threatens the tournament, is forecast.

The chief attractions are Jack Nicklaus, who is opening his season, and Arnold Palmer. Palmer, who had his best finish in years with a strong, fifthplace showing last week at Phoenix, is playing with former President Gerald Ford.

ABC will provide national television coverage of portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Long field goals may dwindle away in '78

ATLANTA (AP) — College football fans undoubtedly will see fewer long field goal attempts next fall and defensive backs no longer will eliminate a potential pass receiver by knocking him out of bounds.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's Football Rules Committee adopted changes in both categories Wednesday.

The committee approved one rule giving a defensive team possession at the line of scrimmage rather than the 20-yard line on missed field goal attempts outside the 20.

Potential receivers knocked out of bounds by a defender will be able to return to the field and be eligible for a pass. The receiver remains ineligible if he crosses the sideline marker on his own.

The field goal rule change came after a record 2,513 attempts during the 1977 season, including 1,425 when the line of scrimmage was outside the 20, where a kick normally covers 37 yards.

With a trio of exceptional kickers from the Southwest Confere ce leading the way, there were 64 field goals made in 352 attempts of 51 yards or more.

Steve Little of Arkansas, Russell Erxleben of Texas and Tony Franklin of Texas A&M accounted for 22 of those, 11 by Franklin. Little and Erxleben had all-time record 67-yarders.

Dave Nelson, athletic director at Delaware, said the new rule on pass receivers being knocked out of bounds by the defense "will force the defender to defend depth, rather than just laterally. This will change the defensive strategy quite a bit."

The committee also approved a rule requiring that an eligible receiver be in an area of a thrown pass for a team to avoid an intentional grounding infraction. The old rule simply required that a player from either the offense or defense be in the area where the ball was thrown.

Among other rules adopted were ones requiring a player to leave the field for one play to replace a tear-away jersey and prohibiting the use of all film for plotting strategy during a game. The latter was directed primarily at those who use Polaroid pictures to show offensive and defensive alignments during a game and has no application to the motion picture films most schools take for use in grading performances and scouting.

The committee also gave officials authority to penalize a defense for delay of game in efforts to control crowd noise. After a quarterback has backed off the line of scrimmage twice waiting for the noise to subside, the official can then charge the defense with a time out, and when it puts the team over the three allowed per half the delay of game penalty is imposed.

The committee did not discuss the rule in terms of home and visiting teams, apparently figuring that anytime a home team was threatening to score or going for a crucial first down, the crowd noise would abate until the play began.

MHS, Lee girls in cage showdown

The District 5-4A first-half basketball girls title goes on the line today at the MHS gym when Midland High hosts Midland Lee at 8 p.m.

Sophomore and junior varsity games will precede the championship tilt which finds Midland Lee, 6-0, needing only a victory to clinch it.

Midland High, 5-1, after stumbling aqainst Abilene Cooper, 41-40, Monday, can tie for the championship by scoring an upset.

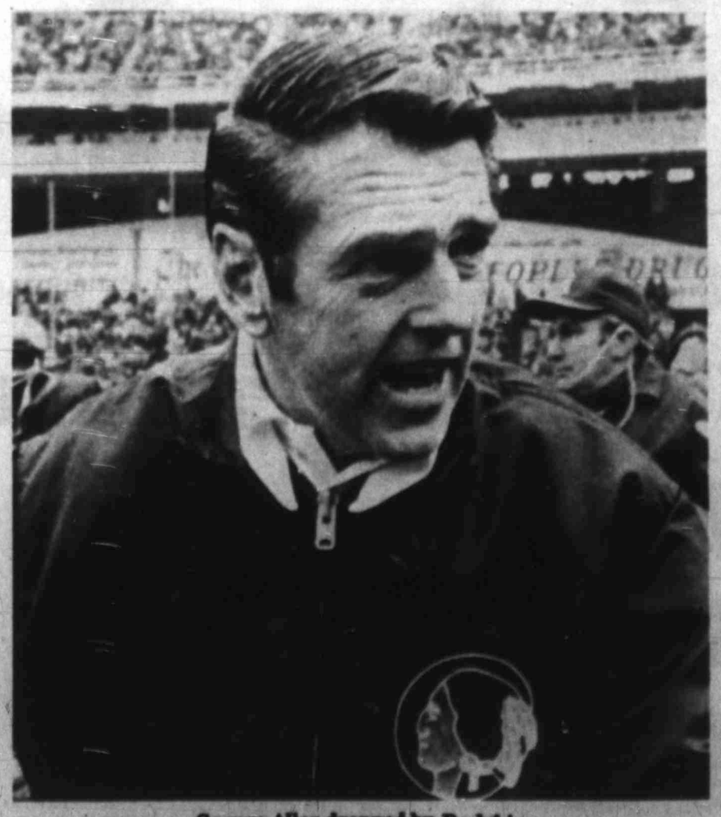

Both teams are 17-7 for the season, but Coach Shirley Stephenson's Rebels have been awesome in recent weeks, rolling over Big Spring, 54-14, and Odessa Permian, 74-17, and San Angelo, 57-34.

MIDLAND'S SCORES against the same team have been less impressive. Coach Jane Young's Bulldogs beat Permian, 39-27; Big Spring, 44-35 and San Angelo, 37-26.

Lee's winning margin against Cooper, the team that nipped Midland, was 36-30 while Abilene also gave the Rebels a struggle before losing 39-32 Monday night. Midland's victory margin against Abilene was 27-24.

While Lee has an edge in victory margins over common opponents, Midland has the home court edge, which just might be even more important.

After tonight's action, the teams start all over again in second round play Monday night with Odessa Permian at Midland and Midland Lee at Odessa.

George Allen dropped by Redskins

Allen is fired by Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Allen, whose philosophy of using aging veterans produced five playoff berths in the last seven years, has been fired as coach and general manager of the Washington Redskins by team President Edward Bennett Williams.

Sports Editor George Solomon of the Washington Post, in a copyrighted article, and former Redskins quarterback Sonny Jurgensen, now a sportscaster for television station WTOP-TV, confirmed the firing in interviews Wednesday with Williams.

Williams reportedly was at a meeting Wednesday night and was not available for comment. Allen also was unavailable.

A Redskins spokesman said Williams attended funeral services earlier in the evening for Redskins controller Chester Minter but did not mention the firing.

Williams called a news conference at Redskins Park last July 14 to announce that the Redskins and Allen had agreed to a new four-year contract allegedly calling for an annual salary of $250,000.

Allen did not attend the news conference because of a death in his family but he said, through a statement read by his son, that he was glad the agreement was reached.

However, Allen never signed the contract because, he said, there were legal technicalities that needed to be straightened out. The major hitch in Allen signing the new contract, according to reports, was Williams' desire to have more say in the teams financial matters and personnel.

"I thought we reached an agreement," Williams told the Post. "Last Saturday was six months since we made the announcement — with his approval — and nothing happened.

"I just reached the point where I couldn't wait any longer for George to make up his mind and have so advised him of our decision to look for a new head coach and general manager.

'SportsWorld' shooting for top ranking in 1978

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC, with a considerable investment of time and money, charges into the sports anthology business Sunday with the premier of "SportsWorld."

"NBC's goal is to be recognized as No. 1 in sports by 1980," says Don Ohlmeyer, executive producer of "SportsWorld." "And you have to have a show like this to be well-rounded."

"SportsWorld" will be out to emulate the success of ABC's "Wide World of Sports", top gun in the anthology field, and CBS' "Sports Spectacular," which has shown a dramatic increase in the ratings of late but still trails "Wide World" by a comfortable margin.

Does the world need another pastiche of barrel jumpers, weight lifters and teen-age gymnasts? Ohlmeyer thinks so and he also thinks "SportsWorld" will be different.

"You would have to call our show a sports entertainment show because it's both," he says. "We're not goinl to show people just what's going on in the world championships of this and that. They get bombarded with that sort of thing every week.

Toward that end, "SportsWorld" will include an off-beat, light piece almost every week. Sunday's show, for example, has a brief, amusing look at the "Flying Dutchman" competition in The Netherlands, an unusual event in which enthusiasts strap themselves into all manner of winged contraptions, leap off a platform and try to remain aloft as long as possible before splashing into the drink.

Sunday's debut also includes a report on the Muhammad Ali track meet, the World Cup gymnastics championships and the first of a three-part investigative series on violence in sports. The basic lineup for "SportsWorld" as the weeks go on will include an investigative segment, a light piece, a slice of your basic anthology sports—boxing, weight-lifting, gymnastics—and some pro sports like auto racing and skiing.

"SportsWorld" will have a distinct emphasis on amateur competition, not surprising since NBC already has purchased rights to all the U.S. Olympic trials, winter and summer, leading up to 1980 when the network will televise the Summer Games from Moscow. It has been suggested that "SportsWorld" will be the longest pre-game show in history.

"I've heard that," says Ohlmeyer. "That's not true."

The addition of "SportsWorld" to the winter schedule gives TV viewers yet another option in this most interesting time of year. People stay at home during the winter more than any other time of the year and they watch more TV.

Viewers get a veritable feast of basketball, boxing, golf, tennis, weight-lifting, auto racing and assorted made-for-TV events as the networks pursue the ratings, which are higher in the winter months, and the resultant increase in advertising dollars.

ABC remains No. 1, especially during the winter when there is no pro football on the other two networks to lure away weekend audiences. Sunday Jan. 8 was the kickoff date for a host of winter sports shows and the ratings clearly show ABC's dominance.

Some of the numbers are surprising. For example, "Wide World of Sports," featuring the Harlem Globetrotters and weight-lifting, was up against the marvelous Jimmy Connors-Bjorn Borg tennis match in the Grand Prix finals on CBS. And the winner was ..."Wide World" by almost a 2-to-1 margin!

ASU's George stepping down

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Phil George will step down as head basketball coach of Angelo State University at the end of the current season, university officials said at a news conference today.

George, 53, will become ASU's full-time athletic director for men and will be an associate professor of physical education. A search is under way for a coaching successor.

In his 28-year coaching career—spent entirely at Angelo State—George complied a record of 503 wins and 255 losses.

George is a graduate of the University of Texas at Austin, where he also received a master's degree. He played basketball for the Longhorns in 1942 and for three seasons following World War II.

Lightweight title bout blocked

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A Clark County District judge was expected to decide today whether to stop the lightweight title fight between Roberto Duran and Esteban DeJesus scheduled for Saturday.

Judge George Marshall had issued a temporary restraining order Wednesday blocking the match, and he was scheduled to take further action today.

The order stopping the bout was sought by Robert Blond, a boxing promoter from Chicago. Blond claimed he had a contract with Duran, from Panama, to defend his World Boxing Association title against Mexico's Vicente Saldivar in Panama early next month.

Named in the suit along with Duran were DeJesus, Caesars Palace, CBS and boxing promoter Don King.

Saldivar's manager, Harry Kabakoff, said in Los Angeles that there was such an agreement, but that Blond did not meet part of his obligation to Saldivar, thereby voiding the contract.

Kabakoff said Saldivar was to have been paid one-half of his training expenses last month and the remainder of the $5,000 by Jan. 5. But no money for training expenses was collected, Kabakoff said.

DeJesus, of Puerto Rico, holds the World Boxing Council championship and the 15-round match with Duran would determine the overall world champion. The fight at Caesars Palace is scheduled to be nationally televised by CBS.

Blond's attorneys contended that Duran's participation in Saturday's fight would physically preclude his fighting Saldivar in Panama two weeks later.

Kabakopff said Saldivar already has signed for another bout Feb. 12, which would make a fight with Duran Feb. 4 or 5 impossible.

Golf coach to file law suit

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Ron Roberts, ousted as Wake Forest golf coach, has filed a $400,000 lawsuit against the school and new Coach Jesse Haddock, claiming he was fired without good reason.

In his Forsyth Superior Court suit, Roberts is asking for a total of $400,000 in damages from Wake Forest University, Athletic Director Gene Hooks and Haddock.

Roberts claims in the suit that Hooks and Haddock worked to have the university break its contract with him. Haddock had left Wake Forest in 1976 for Oral Roberts University, but was rehired in December. Roberts was offered different duties in the athletic department.

North Iowa top JC five

HUTCHINSON, Kan. (AP) — Once-beaten North Iowa Area solidified its hold today on the No. 1 spot in the weekly basketball ratings of the National Junior College Athletic Association.

The Mason City, Iowa, college collected 11 of 22 first-place votes, while No. 2-ranked Casper, Wyo., had six first-place votes.

The only new team in the NJCAA's top 10 this week is unbeaten and previously unranked Wabash Valley of Illinois.

The ratings: 1. North Iowa, 12-1; 2. Casper, Wyo., 14-2; 3. Vincennes, Ind., 13-2; 4. Mercer County, N.J., 12-2; 5. DuPage (Ill.), 16-1; 6. Henderson County, Tex., 15-2; 7. Mineral Area (Mo.), 14-3; 8. Waukesha County, Wis., 12-2; 9. Wabash Valley (Ill.), 14-0; 10. Cowley County, Kan., 13-2; 11. Pensacola, Fla., 15-3; 12. Navarro (Tex.), 15-4; 13. New Mexico Military, 16-3; 14. Northeast Mississippi, 13-1.

Coryell wanting Ram job

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Embattled St. Louis Cardinals Coach Don Coryell has confirmed details of proposals presented for obtaining his release as coach of the National Football League team.

But, the Associated Press has learned, most of the options presented by owner Bill Bidwill were rescinded following Coryell's sudden flight to Los Angeles last week to discuss the coaching job of the Rams.

A reliable source said Bidwill's proposals, provided to the coach earlier last week during a meeting in Bidwill's office, included Coryell's outright release to the Rams in exchange for a first-round Los Angeles draft choice.

The second proposal, the source said, was more complex. It included an agreement that Coryell would not coach any NFL team next year except with Bidwill's permission.

Under the complex proposal, Coryell would have been free to coach an American Conference club in the NFL in 1979. In 1980, he would have been free to coach any team in the league.

Bidwill, when reached late Wednesday, confirmed the first proposal but declined to discuss the second, noting only that "it is now by the boards."

"The prime consideration was that in the interest of his (Coryell's) family we would help him back to the West Coast," Bidwill added.

Coryell, however, confirmed the second offer and enlarged on some of the specifications attached to it by Bidwill.

"It would have freed me to coach any college or high school team next year, with my salary under the Cardinals contract being deducted from whatever it was I was paid," he said.

"I could also have sat out three years and not coached at all," Coryell added, "but anyone who knows me at all knows that I couldn't possibly sit around for three years. I wanted to coach the Rams, but it looks like now that I can't."

Coryell, the coach at San Diego State for 12 years before taking the Cards job in 1973, steered St. Louis from mediocrity to respectability with NFC East titles in 1974 and '75.

A rift with Bidwill over club draft policies overflowed last month following a 26-20 loss to the Washington Redskins, probably costing the Cards a playoff berth.

The dispute between owner and coach simmered for a month, then burst into the open again when Coryell flew last week to California without Bidwill's permission.

Erxleben, Franklin irked with new NCAA kick rule

By The Associated Press

And the frustrated kickers admit there's absolutely nothing they can do about it.

"It's hitting us right where it hurts," Franklin said Wednesday night from College Station. "There's nothing we can do."

"I don't know why they are trying to take away our competitiveness. They don't penalize a running back for gaining 1,800 yards. Why penalize a kicker who can kick the 60yarder?"

"Johnny Lam (Jones) is faster than anybody else," Erxleben said of his Olympic gold medal-winning teammate. "What are they going to do, make him line up 10 or 15 yards deeper than anybody else?"

Franklin, who boomed 64 and 65-yard field goals in one game two years ago, and Erxleben, co-holder with Arkansas' Steve Little of the NCAA distance record of 67 yards, bore the brunt of the change adopted by the NCAA Wednesday in Atlanta.

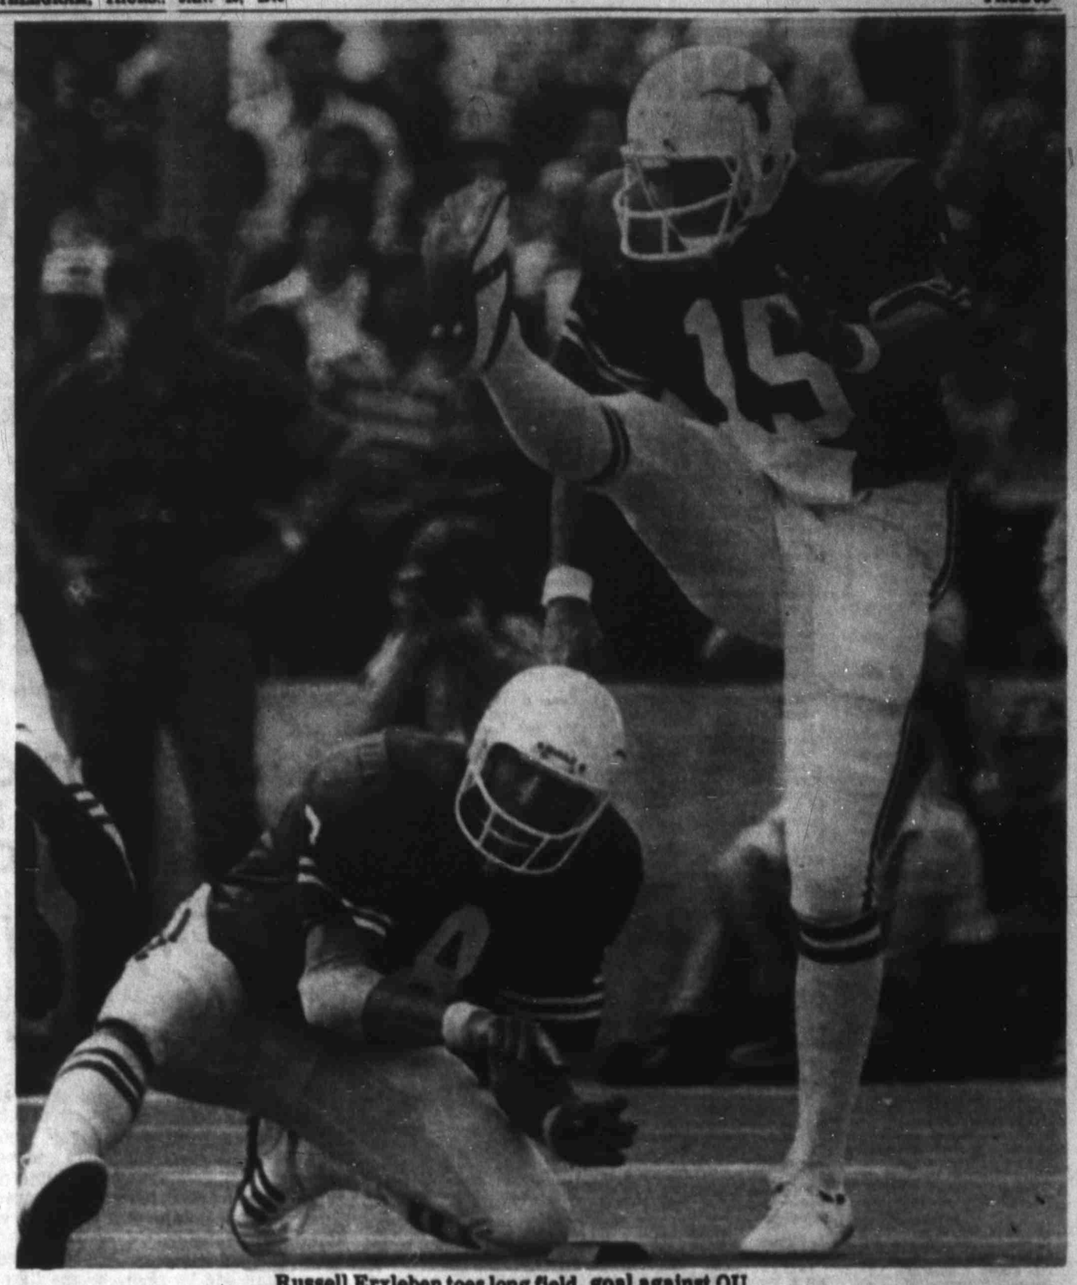

The rule gives a defensive team possession at the line of scrimmage rather than the 20-yard line on missed field goal attempts outside the 20, thus making it costly to try a 60-yarder.

"It was definitely aimed at us," Franklin said, noting that it takes effect immediately — just in time for his and Erxleben's senior seasons.

With Franklin, Erxleben and Little leading the way, there were 64 field goals made in 352 attempts of 51 yards or more. The trio accounted for 22 of those, 11 by Franklin. Little, who is graduating, and Erxleben both had 67-yarders.

"I think it's bad," added Franklin, who blamed Baylor Coach Grant Teaff instigating the rules change. "Teaff had a kicker a few years ago who was kicking 50-yarders. You didn't hear about a rules change then."

"I'll still kick the same, this will just limit my chances," said Erxleben. "I'll accept it, though. I'm not going to cry about it or anything."

Celtics down Bucks in NBA by 130-116 behind Wicks' 35

By The Associated Press

Shucks,ma'am. Sidney Wicks, who'd thought only a few weeks ago that he was on his way out, said he knew all along he could pull it off.

He had a season-high 35 points and 15 rebounds Wednesday night to pilot the Boston Celtics to a 130-116 National Basketball Association victory over the Milwaukee Bucks.

"The team just played excellently. I've always had confidence," the 6-foot-9 veteran forward said. "The opportunity was just there tonight."

In other NBA contests, the Philadelphia 76ers beat the Kansas City Kings 126-106, the Portland Trail Blazers coasted by the New Jersey Nets 127-101, the New Orleans Jazz edged the Atlanta Hawks 108-106 and the Detroit Pistons downed the Buffalo Braves 113-100. The San Antonio Spurs defeated the Indiana Pacers 109-96, the Golden State Warriors beat the Washington Bullets 113-106 and the Seattle SuperSonics edged the Houston Rockets 106-104.

76ers 126, Kings 106

Lloyd Free scored 26 points for the 76ers, who were without injured Doug Collins and George McGinnis. Julius Erving added 24 and Darryl Dawkins 20 as the Sixers stretched their winning skein to seven games.

Erving missed the last six minutes of the first half when he caught an elbow in the lip and required stitches. He got 10 of his points in the third quarter, helping the 76ers open a 94-79 lead.

Jazz 108, Hawks 106

Pete Maravich had 34 points and Leonard "Truck" Robinson pulled down 21 rebounds as the Jazz moved to within one-half game of the vanquished Hawks in the Central Division.

The Hawks trailed 104-102 with 35 seconds left in the game. Maravich hit a 25-foot jump shot with 22 seconds left and Atlanta's Armond Hill answered with a 15-footer six seconds later.

Spurs 109, Pacers 96

George Gervin had 23 points and Larry Kenon 21 as they led a second-half for San Antonio. After losing the lead for the first time in the third quarter, the Spurs took a 74-71 advantage at the start of the final period and outscored the Pacers 15-6 in the next five minutes to put the game out of reach.

"Every team in the league is going to have three or four blow-outs like we had tonigt. It just seemed like everybody on the club went sour at the same time tonight," said Pacers Coach Bobby Leonard.

Blazers 127, Nets 101

Not unexpectedly, the cellard-welling Nets had one of those blow-outs as the Trail Blazers breezed to victory with 30 points from Bill Walton, 14 in the third quarter.

"They're a great team but they should not beat us like that in our own building," said Nets Coach Kevin Loughery.

It wasn't start-to-finish misery for the Nets. They went ahead 9-2, and Bernard King scored eight baskets in the first quarter to establish a 29-25 lead. The Nets were in front 42-40 midway through the second period. But Portland scored seven in a row to go up for good.

Pistons 113, Braves 100

Bob Lanier scored 30 points as the Pistons, with five players in double figures, snapped their five-game losing streak.

The Pistons broke a 51-51 halftime tie by outscoring he Braves 30-19 in the third quarter. Gus Gerard and Eric Money each scored eight points in the quarter, Lanier had seven and John Shumate six.

Randy Smith paced the Braves with 32 points, tying the team's all-time scoring record of 9,434 points held by Bob McAdoo.

Sonics 106, Rockets 104

Fred Brown scored 23 points to lead a fourth-quarter Sonics rally. The victory was the eighth in the last nine games for Seattle while Houston now has lost seven of its last eight outings.

Warriors 113, Bullets 106

Charles Dudley, Phil Smith and Clifford Ray each converted a pair of free throws, and Derrick Dickey added a field goal to put down a Washington threat in the final minutes of the game.

Mitch Kupchak and Elvin Hayes had led a Washington drive to close the score to 103-102 with 2:35 remaining.

Phil Smith had 28 points for the Warriors and Rick Barry 19.

Hudson grabs bowling lead

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Tommy Hudson saw part of his margin shrink, but still held onto the lead Wednesday in the $125,000 Showboat Invitational professional bowling tournament.

Hudson, who had a 126-pin lead heading into the third round, emerged with a 63-pin edge on Johnny Petraglia. Hudson's 24-game total is 5,580, Petraglia's 5,517.

Joe Hutchinson holds down third place after three rounds with a 5,506 total, and Warren Nelson is fourth at 5,447. Rob Monaco is fifth with a 5,429 total.

The top 48 bowlers from the original 348-man field now compete in one eight-game set to determine the 24 match-play participants. Match play begins Thursday night and continues through Friday, with the nationally televised finals set for Saturday.

Earl Anthony, who has finished second in the Showboat tournament for the past three years, is in sixth place, and defending champion Mark Roth is 20th.

First-round leader Jim Plessinger remained among the contenders, finishing the first three rounds in 10th place.

Mikita guides Chicago to 5-2 win over Caps

By The Associated Press

Stan Mikita has come a long way since removing the chip from his shoulder.

The Chicago Black Hawks center cracked the National Hockey League in 1959-60 directly from junior hockey and quickly developed a reputation as a scrappy, ill-tempered player who spent too much time in the penalty box.

But the native of Sokolce, Czechoslovakia straightened himself out to the point where he twice won the Lady Byng Memorial Trophy as the player best combining sportsmanship and gentlemanly conduct.

Mikita scored a goal and set up three others by Cliff Koroll in Chicago's 5-2 victory Wednesday night over the Washington Capitals, pulling even at 507 career goals with one of the most gentlemanly of all NHL stars, the retired Jean Beliveau of the Montreal Canadiens.

Mikita, whose fifth goal of the season tied him with Beliveau for seventh place on the all-time NHL goal-scoring list, reacted in keeping with his hard-earned new image.

In other games, Montreal beat Cleveland 7-4, the New York Islanders downed Minnesota 5-2, the New York Rangers beat Los Angeles 3-0, Atlanta blanked Pittsburgh 1-0 and Detroit tied Colorado 4-4.

Canadiens 7, Barons 4

Guy Lafleur scored two goals and had two assists, helping Montreal extend its unbeaten streak to 13 games by beating Cleveland. Pierre Larouche, Steve Shutt, Jacques Lemaire, Serge Savard and Yvan Cournoyer helped the Canadiens build a 7-0 lead.

Islanders 5, North Stars 2

Trottier extended his league-leading point total to 73 in 43 games. Trottier had 72 points in 76 games last season.

Rangers 3, Kings 0

Goals by Don Awrey, Ron Greschner and Don Murdoch backed Wayne Thomas' third shutout of the season, giving the Rangers their third victory in four games and ending at 11 games their winless streak against the Kings. New York, which last won at Los Angeles on Jan. 26, 1975, had lost 10 of the 11 games.

Penguins 1, Flames 0

Red Wings 4, Rockies 4

Third-period goals by Andre St. Laurent and Dale McCourt gave Detroit its tie with Colorado.

Browner knows all about life

HOUSTON (AP) — Certain locker room philosophers believe football teaches players about life. But Notre Dame defensive end Ross Browner, a finalist for the Lombardi Award to be presented tonight, learned something about football from life.

"It was very upsetting during that one whole year watching my father go from a 230-pound man down to about 110," Browner said, recalling his father's losing fight against cancer two years ago. He really showed a lot of strength, poise and dignity right up to the very end.

"So that's the type of philosophy that I took from my father. I learned a lot during that one year-his last with our family. So now I just have to go on from there."

Using the same qualities he saw in his father, Browner broke every school defensive record kept by Notre Dame including 340 career tackles. Among those tackles were 77 for losses totaling 515 yards.

Browner, along with teammate tight end Ken McAfee, University of Texas defensive tackle Brad Shearer and Kentucky defensive end Ken Still are the guests of honor tonight for the annual banquet to name the nation's outstanding college lineman.

The banquet honors Vince Lombardi, the former Green Bay and Washington coach who, like Jimmy Lee Browner Sr., lost his fight with cancer. Proceeds from the $100 per plate banquet go to cancer research.

Browner, a first team All-American, did learn lessons on the football field. Lessons like what happens to a Notre Dame player when he pulls on a green jersey prior to a Southern Cal game; looking inside for something to fall back on after losing to Ole Miss and how to rise to the Cotton Bowl challenge of playing No. 1 ranked Texas.

"We just decided to pull together after the Ole Miss loss," Browner said. "We knew we couldn't lose again and still win the national championship."

The Irish faced another challenge later in the season against Southern Cal and Irish Coach Dan Devine, a master of psychology, secretly had green jerseys placed in players' lockers while they were taking pregame warmups.

"We brought out the green because it is the symbol of the Irish," Browner said. "It was no gimmick. It was just something that really gave us a boost."

McAfee, a star of Notre Dame's 38-10 Cotton Bowl victory over Texas that gave the Irish the national title, said he was the only Lombardi finalist who ever met Lombardi personally.

"My dad used to take me to the Packer training camp," McAfee said. "That's where I met him. He was a tremendous person. The main thing I remember about the experience was all the inspirational signs he had in the locker room and the dedication his players showed in playing for him."

Shearer, a favorite to win the Lombardi Award since he already has captured this year's Outland Trophy, said he was proud of his teams' accomplishments despite the Cotton Bowl loss.

"My being here (as a finalist) stems from the fact that we all played together as a team," Shearer said. "We had a terrible season last year and nobody was happy with it. We got together and decided to motivate ourselves in a different way. Unfortunately our year didn't end the way it started."

Still, who anchored the Wildcat defense that held opponents to an average of less than 10 points per game, could not talk about post-season play because Kentucky was on NCAA probation last season.

"All the honors I am getting now would not have come to me if it weren't for my teammates," Still said. "So I want to thank them for making this possible."

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-NY, will be the principal speaker. The head coaches from the finalists' schools, Dan Devine of Notre Dame, Fred Akers of Texas and Fran Curci of Kentucky, also will be at the head table.

Winnipeg downs Quebec in WHA

By The Associated Press

Winnipeg's Joe Daley came ever so close to doing what Dave Dryden of Edmonton and Wayne Wood of Birmingham accomplished Wednesday night, but a referee's call prevented it.

While Dryden and Wood recorded shutouts for their respective World Hockey Association clubs, Daley was denied his on a controversial call by referee Ron Harris as the Jets defeated the Quebec Nordiques 5-1.

"I think it hit the post but I'm not positive," said Daley about Charles Constantin's shot, which gave Quebec their only goal. "He (referee Ron Harris) said he thought it was in even though the goal judge didn't agree. But he's the referee and he thought it was in so he made the call."

In the opening period, Winnipeg's Dan Labraaten's powerplay goal opened the scoring 1-0 before Constantin tied it with his controversial goal. Kent Nilsson's power-play tally with six seconds remaining in the period gave the Jets the lead for good at 2-1.

Bobby Hull added his 31st goal of the campaign in the second period. Anders Hedberg, scoring his 34th goal of the season, and Bobby Guindon closed out the Jets' scoring in the third period.

Daley, who would have gained his first shutout of the season, said he was not discouraged when he surrendered the goal because it was early in the game but added, "I'm more disappointed now because it was the only goal."

King captures tennis victory

HOUSTON (AP) — Billie Jean King says the tingle of pressure in a tight match is like being chased by a bear in the woods.

"When you're down 30-40 you have to ask yourself what you are made of," the former reigning queen of women's tennis said Wednesday night after she dismantled neophyte Anne Smith 6-2, 6-2 in the second round of the $100,000 Women's Pro Tennis tournament.

King, who has six Wimbledon titles and three knee operations to her credit, was not chased by any bears Wednesday night when she showed flashes of the old brilliance that took her to the top of the women's tennis circuit.

Smith, who had taken King to three sets before losing in matches last year at Wimbledon and the U.S. Open, took King to six deuces and five break points in the seventh game of the first set before King held.

King, who says she's determined to regain the No. 1 ranking in women's tennis, broke Smith in the second and fourth games of the second set before Smith fought off one match point and finally broke King in the seventh game.

"I started last Jan. 14 trying to walk again and now I think I still have the ability to be No. 1," said King, who appears more relaxed both on and off the court.

"I feel I can play better than I've ever played this year," said King. "I've got a top spin forehand that I never had before and I've developed a reverse serve.

But most of all, King treasures the health she has regained through gruelling weight training and running to get her knees back in playing shape.

"When you've lost your health and regain it, there's no describing the feeling," she said. "There is great satisfaction when I go wide for a shot and return it down the line because I know how many hours it took of hard work to be able to do it."

In the other singles matches Wednesday fifth seeded Rosie Casals defeated Mona Guerrant 4-6, 6-1, 6-3.

In doubles play, the top seeded duo of Virginia Wade and Francoise Durr were upset 7-6, 6-2 by Sue Barker and Kristien Shaw and Florenza Mihai and Renee Richards beat Caroline Stoll and Tura Gerulaitis, 4-6, 6-3, 7-6.

Brooks has hopes

HORSE RACING

Soviet Union working hard for Olympics

MOSCOW (AP) — At a park on Lenin Hills in southwest Moscow, workmen bundled against the January wind are completing the first of 18 skyscrapers to house athletes and officials at the 1980 Olympic Games.

Five miles across town at the Plekhanov Food Service Institute, instructors are training the first of 20,000 cooks and waiters for Olympic duties. Meanwhile, airport designers, souvenir makers, security men, hotel officials and interpreters are all making their own feverish preparations for the Summer Games—the first Olympics ever held in a Communist country.

So far, officials are publicly confident that everything will be ready by the time the Olympic torch is lit in Lenin Stadium on July 19, 1980.

But the carefully laid plans still have to be put into action. Although the Soviet Union will be spared the labor union trouble that dogged the 1976 Montreal Olympics, the Moscow Games will put a heavy strain on the city's already busy building and service industries.

With about 900 days remaining before the Games, Moscow must still complete some 80 construction projects ranging from sports halls and a rowing canal to an Olympic department store, finish additional hotel space for 40,000 people and increase restaurant seating by 70,000.

The city also needs to prepare thousands of interpreters, train often slow and balky restaurant employees to provide fast service and speed up customs inspections at airports. In addition, officials face the ticklish task of dividing among different countries the available places for foreign tourists.

While other Olympic cities have never limited the number of foreigners who could come during the Games, the Soviet government is expected to require that visitors to Moscow during the Olympics be members of officially authorized tour groups. Such groups will be formed by travel agencies in various countries with a maximum number of tourists fixed by Soviet and international Olympic officials.

The Soviets expect to authorize 300,000 foreign tourists to come, giving each of them a chance to buy tickets to about eight Olympic events in all and one "cultural event" each day. There also will be 300,000 tourists from other parts of the Soviet Union. In Montreal, there was a total of 268,000 visitors from outside the host city.

The total cost of Moscow's Olympic construction and organization is now estimated officially at $330 million, against more than $1 billion in Montreal. But the comparison means little by itself because of the different costs of materials and labor in the Soviet economy, where the average worker makes about $2,500 a year.

The most meaningful financial element for local citizens is likely to be the promise that Olympic projects will not slow down other branches of the Moscow economy, particularly relief of the city's perpetual housing shortages. Officials claim the money from the Games will come not from the government but from the new "sprint" Olympic lottery, sale of the Olympic seal for commercial advertising purposes, Soviet trade union contributions and book and souvenir sales.

Snider, Ashburn to join baseball's Hall of Fame

NEW YORK (AP) — Two former baseball players who graced National League center fields before they tarnished themselves in the New York Met outfield were ringing the doorbell for the Hall of Fame again today.

Duke Snider, who was the Brooklyn Dodgers' answer to crosstown stars Willie Mays and Mickey Mantle, and Richie Ashburn of the Philadelphia Phillies, whose fast wheels propelled him to a .308 batting average over 15 seasons, each wound up in the Polo Grounds with the hapless Mets in the early 1960s.

Ashburn was the Mets' original centerfielder in 1962, when the club set records for major league futility. Snider was the resident middle man in front of the fences the following year.

But the similarities of the two top-notch center fielders don't end there. Both have been spurned by the selectors for the Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y., and both disagree with the judgment calls of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

"I don't have that many records, but I was one of the better hitters in the Brooklyn Dodger era," said Snider, who blasted a career total of 407 homers with 1,333 runs batted in.

"I was one of the most feared hitters in the league. I guess my strength was consistency. I hit 40 homers for five straight years (1953-57). During the '50s I was compared with Mantle (Yankees) and Mays (Giants) on an even par, and I could play centerfield just as well as they could. (Mantle is in the Hall and Mays is a shoo-in next year when his five-year waiting period expires.)

"I'm not angry or upset," said Snider by telephone from his home in Fallbrook, Calif. "But I feel I belong."

Snider finished fifth in the voting last year, falling 76 votes short of the required 75 percent of all ballots cast. Only Chicago Cub infielder Ernie Banks received the necessary support to be inducted into the Cooperstown shrine. Eddie Mathews, the slugging third baseman of the Milwaukee and Atlanta Braves, finished second in last year's voting and was considered the top candidate in this year's balloting, which was to be announced today.

Staubach, Johnson surgery ok

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Roger Staubach and wide receiver Butch Johnson have undergone successful surgery to repair injuries suffered in Sunday's Super Bowl victory over the Denver Broncos, according to team officials.

Both underwent surgery Wednesday in a Muenster, Texas, hospital where team physician Dr. Marvin Knight is headquartered.

Officials of the National Football League champions said Wednesday that Staubach and Johnson would be released from the hospital in two-three days.

Staubach had suffered a fracture and a severed tendon in the index finger of his passing hand. He had a pin inserted in the injured finger.

Johnson, who made a spectacular touchdown catch in the Cowboys' 27-10 victory, also had a pin inserted in his right hand, where he had a bone broken behind his thumb.

Center John Fitzgerald and safety Randy Hughes were scheduled to be operated on later this week for lingering injuries. Fitzgerald will have damaged cartilage removed from his right knee and Hughes will have a damaged nerve repaired in a toe.

Midland High School Youth Center chatter

By KIM WOOD, SHERI BAILEY and DINAH BOYD

Hey! As of this week, school is half over. Senior parties already have begun, and everyone is talking about colleges and the coming year.

The Midland swim team, which has represented MHS well this year, travels to El Paso this weekend. Good luck all of you swimmers and divers!

This weekend, the Midland High and Lee High speech and drama departments are hosting a tournament here. They are expecting more than a thousand students from all over the state. This Tall City Invitational Speech Tournament will be at Lee.

Both the girls and the boys basketball teams are doing well. The girls will play Lee tonight in the MHS gymnasium. The boys lost to Abilene Cooper, 59-82. They will play Lee at Lee Friday night. Good luck to both teams!

The Latin club will take a trip to Abilene this weekend. A Latin tournament will be held there and Midland High will be represented.

The drama department has been working hard on the production "Little Abner." Performances will be staged Feb. 2, 3 and 5. This should be a great show, so everybody come.

ATTENTION TO ALL SENIOR GIRLS: If you haven't given the list of names that you wish to invite to Rosson, it is too late. Your money is due Sunday.

A reminder from the Medical Explorers—the annual blood drive will be in the Midland Youth Center Jan. 25-26. If you weigh more than 110 pounds and are 18 years old you can give your blood. Cards can be obtained from Ty Hughston to be signed by your parents if you are 17 years old. Everyone give blood. You may need it sometime.

The Catoico Queen was elected last week. She is Kim Wood. Congratulations to all the girls on the court.

The Junior Rotarians this week are Peggy O'Shaughnessy and Steve Cole. Congratulations, both of you.

Well, until next week,

That's life.
Kim, Sheri and Dinah

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Stomach ulcer rate declining

Dear Dr. Solomon: Life is such a rat race for me these days, it seems almost impossible to avoid pressure and tension. Does this mean I might be hading for an ulcer?—Ken H.

Dear Ken: Stress does seem to be a significant factor in ulcers. Just how important we don't know, because ulcer formation is a complicated process that is not yet fully understood. But certainly one thing the ulcer-prone individual should avoid is all unnecessary hassle.

As for the modern rat race we all find ourselves in, it may be that we rats are actually getting used to it. According to a study which recently appeared in the Journal of the American Medical Association, the frequency of duodenal ulcers, the most common kind, has been decreasing during the last two decades. Dr. Meredith P. Smith of the University of Washington, the author of the report, found specifically that cases of perforated ulcers—and ulcer surgery in general—had dropped by about a third in five Seattle hospitals over the past 10 years. This, he said, was not just a matter of less surgery but reflected a general fall in the overall duodenal ulcer rate.

Dr. Smith cites a number of earlier studies showing that the decline of the duodenal ulcer in the United States started around 1955 and has been continuing since. The stresses of everyday life certainly are not letting up in any way, he notes, so perhaps what is happening is that large numbers of people have now adapted to the demands of modern industrial society.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have heard that a person who has diabetes has trouble getting syringes through customs because inspectors think you are a drug addict. Is this true? Does insulin keep when you are traveling and can't refrigerate it?—Aggie Wa.

Dear Aggie: According to the American Diabetes Assn., you shouldn't have any trouble with your syringes but, just to be safe, the ADA does advise getting a letter from your doctor saying that you need the syringes to treat your diabetes.

About your insulin: it keeps perfectly well outside a refrigerator. Only thing to bear in mind here is keeping it within easy reach all the time—in your carry-on luggage or, better still, in your satchel if it is big enough.

(If you have a medical problem, see your doctor. If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Costly fire rips center

DALLAS (AP) — Nine businesses in the Oak Lawn shopping center in the Dallas suburb of Highland Park were gutted in a five alarm fire that swept through the center Tuesday night.

Firemen said the fire spread from store-to-store through a common attic and would have affected more firms if there not been a firewall separating the nine stores from six adjoining firms.

Nobody guides player in choosing finesse

Somebody should tell Ralph Nader about finesses. Many of them are unsafe, but nobody guides the poor consumer when he must choose the only decent finesse from whole basketfull.

Declarer drew trumps, got to his hand with the ace of diamonds and led a club, losing dummy's king to the ace. East returned the eight of clubs, losing dummy's king to the ace. East returned the eight of clubs, giving South a chance to finesse.

South stepped up with the queen of clubs, cashed the king of diamonds and led a third diamond to finnesse with dummy's ten. He could then discard his club loser on the queen of diamonds.

NO AGENCY

No consumer agency told South that the ten of diamonds was a better finesse than the ten of clubs. He had to work it out for himself.

West's club discard on the third spade showed that East started with six spades. East followed to three rounds of hearts and to two clubs when he led the eight of clubs. This accounted for 11 of East's cards, so that he couldn't have more than two diamonds. South could be sure of exhausing East's diamonds by playing the king. Then a finesse with dummy's ten would surely succeed.

Amex chairman defends indicted floor traders

By RONALD L. SOBLE
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Arthur Levitt, Jr., the new chairman of the American Stock Exchange, sharply criticized New York State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz this week for pushing indictments against several Amex floor traders involved in a stock options trading scandal on the exchange.

The indictments and subsequent arrests of the traders, "appear to me to be subjecting them to unfortunate harassment," he said.

Levitt told a news conference here that the individuals involved already have been penalized enough by the Amex and the Securities and Exchange Commission through fines and suspensions.

The Amex chief said he has met privately with the New York attorney general on the options case and was told by Lefkowitz that he felt he had a public obligation to bring the indictments.

The New York state grand jury indicted 11 Amex floor members Jan. 5 for allegedly entering false options trades on the exchange's tape between January and March, 1976. The 11 have pleaded innocent and have been released on their own recognizance pending a jury trial.

The 46-year-old Levitt, on his first Western swing since being elected Amex chairman on Nov. 10, said he envisioned stock options trading as being "a very stabilizing influence" on the equities markets.

Investors, he said, can use stock options to protect themselves on price movements in the underlying securities to which options are pegged.

Levitt said the Amex hopes to substantially increase its stock option business when the SEC lifts its moratorium on any current expansion in options trading by the nation's stock exchanges. The agency is conducting an investigation of stock options trading which could take the better part of 1978.

Under questioning, Levitt said he felt it would be virtually "impossible" for such a false option scandal to surface again thanks to new trading safeguards imposed by the Amex.

Levitt, who left the presidency of Shearson Hayden Stone Inc., the New York securities firm, to take the Amex chairmanship, said one of the objectives of his California trip was to drum up grass roots opposition to the SEC proposal to allow off-board trading in listed securities.

The SEC is expected to announce soon its timetable for eliminating New York Stock Exchange Rule 390.

Doctor heard via TV

NEW YORK (AP) — By using a $16,000 television hook-up, a heart surgeon has testified in a federal court case here while sitting in a room at a Houston hospital.

U.S. District Court Judge Jack Weinstein ordered the hook-up so Dr. Denton Cooley would not have to take time away from his surgical duties at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital.

"The time of this eminent heart surgeon is better spent treating patients than in flying to and from New York," Weinstein said Tuesday. "We cannot afford to deny the court system the benefits of 20th century technology."

Wearing a white hospital coat and green surgical garb, the physician testified for about 45 minutes while standing in the board room of St. Luke's, where he is senior surgeon.

Cooley was called to testify in a suit involving assertedly faulty valves he implanted in patients' hearts. Three of his patients sued when the valves deteriorated and had to be replaced.

He was originally named in the suits, but when the three suits were combined, the only defendant was Cutter Laboratories of Berkeley, Calif., makers of the valve.

The plaintiffs charge that firm did not conduct enough tests on the valve before it was used on humans, and that recipients were not told it was still experimental.

AUSTIN—The University of Texas of the Permian Basin recorded total expenditures of $46,478 for research during the fiscal year ending Aug. 31, 1977.

UTPB and other public institutions of higher learning drew a total of $189.9 million in 1976-77, a 12.3 percent increase over the previous year. The state provided $46.1 million, or 24.3 percent of those research funds; the federal government provided 58.4 percent, and private sources made up the difference.

UTPB's research expenditures include: biological, $12,743; engineering, $1,034; earth sciences, $7,747; math, $1,283; history, $620; humanities, $23,051.

Two named by governor

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Two members of the Texas Rehabilitation Commission were reappointed Wednesday for six-year terms.

They were John Thomas Bean, Fort Worth, superintendent of the Masonic Home and School of Texas, and Jack B. Dale, Houston, president of three investment offices.

Home, home on the range

To hear some folks tell it, Carter wouldn't be having so much trouble with his domestic policies if he and his aides socialized more. —The Associated Press

"Rosalynn," said the President of the United States to his wife, "help me with this boot." The president had been struggling with it for pretty nearly two hours, and now it made sense to ask for help. If he could just get the boots on, he'd be set. He had a ten-gallon hat, chaps, pistol and holster, and he smelled ever so slightly of the stockyard. Califano had arranged that, and done a nice job of it, too.

Rosalynn, clad in jeans and a cowboy shirt, lent a hand, and the boot went on. Now they were ready to meet the Texas oilmen; the barbeque was slated for five, on the White House lawn. With a little luck, and provided the chili was hot, the president figured his energy policy would be a shoo-in by eight.

Having never worn boots, the president was unsure of his footing. In other words, he fell down the White House stairs. But this was his first time, whereas Jerry Ford had managed it daily, no matter what he had on his feet.

"Stilizovanski cracowa Englanski" ("Sorry, I don't speak English"), Seymour said.

The president went out on the lawn and saw that all was ready. Cattle were grazing, horses were standing around, the chili simmered in a gigantic pot and the flag of the Lone Star State flapped in the breeze from the White House pole. A band played 'The Eyes of Texas' and 'San Antonio Rose,' and several buxom lasses with little on other than some strategically-placed tassels did leaps and shouted "Go Cowboys" and "Hook 'em, Horns." The bartender iced the beer and prepared a batch of Texas-sized margaritas.

"Only thing missing is Lyndon," said the president with satisfaction, "and he's here in spirit."

The oilmen arrived, emerging from a Rolls-Royce. All three were in formal attire, which is to say, dinner jackets and bow ties.

"Howdy, pardners," said the president, shaking hands with each. "Anybody for an ice cold beer?"

"Pouilly Fuisse, 1961, for me," said the first oilman. "Their best year since '24, without a doubt."

"Chivas and water," said the second.

"Any white Bordeaux suits me," said the third. "I'm not fussy."

"I'm afraid all we have is beer and margaritas," said the president.

"Last time I had tequila was ten years ago, in Fort Worth," the first oilman said. "Thought I was gonna die. Haven't been near the stuff since."

"I haven't been in Fort Worth in at least ten years," said the second oilman. "Bet the old Cowtown's changed."

"Don't know," said the first. "I'm home only two weeks a year. Couldn't say when I was last in Fort Worth."

"That's nothing," said the third oilman. "I pulled up stakes 32 years ago. Got me a villa in Provence and a 'condo' on Molokai. I don't know Dallas from a donkey."

"Anybody for chili and Texas barbeque?" said the president, slapping his chaps and trying to work up some enthusiasm in the trio.

"I wouldn't touch a bowl of chili with a ten-foot pole," the first oilman said. "Man, that stuff gives me a powerful case of you know what."

"You said it," said the second oilman. "Quiche for me, Mr. President."

"I'll have the Chicken Poulenc," said the third oilman. Nothing goes with a white Bordeaux like it, I'll tell you that."

The president looked at each oilman, and smiled. He removed his ten-gallon hat, handed it to an aide and told him to burn it.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I know this great little French restaurant down on Fillmore Street, near the Smithsonian. I assure you, they've never heard of chili there. Just let me get out of these boots, and we'll be on our way."

Holmes set to come to life in Permian Playhouse show

ODESSA — Sherlock Holmes, the super-sleuth of Victorian England, comes to life on the stage of Odessa's Permian Playhouse when the community theater opens "Sherlock Holmes, A New Adventure," Friday night.

Holmes' deerstalker cap, Inverness cloak and Meerschaum pipe, the famous detective's trademarks known around the world, will be much in evidence in the Playhouse production, which utilizes Thomas Hinton's new script.

Although a wholly fictional character from the mind of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Sherlock Holmes lives on as the most colorful detective in history. Doyle wrote four novels, 56 short stories and a hundred or more "untold tales" built around Holmes and his uncanny knack for solving crimes that were thought to be unsolvable. Doyle's stories were "told" by Holmes' friend and far-less-keen associate, John Watson, M. D.

In the title role in Permian Playhouse's new production will be Sid Williams of Odessa, last seen at PPH in a production of Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People" last season. Williams also has appeared in a number of productions at Odessa's Globe of the Great Southwest.

To be seen as Dr. Watson is Bryant White, a longtime PPH performer. Other pivotal cast members are Ocie Robinson, in the role of Professor Moriarty, the Napoleon of crime and personification of evil; Bob Gibson and Mary Skinner as two of Moriarty's hench-persons; Linda Graves and D. R. Skinner as a sister-and-brother duo caught up in crime. Others in the cast include Sheree Dobbins, Gary Lipscomb, Scott Givens, Tamara Bear.

Following its opening at 8 p.m. Friday, the show will have presentations at 8 p.m. Saturday and 2:30 p.m. Sunday, and additional performances Jan. 26, 27 and 28. Seat reservations for all presentations may be made through PPH box office, 362-2329. Permian Playhouse is located at 310 W. 42nd St., adjacent to the grounds of Ector County Coliseum.

UTPB hosting dual exhibit

ODESSA — A painting and ceramics exhibition on view at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin features the work of Terry Bumpass and Danville Chadbourne of Hobbs, N. M. Both are members of the art faculty of New Mexico Junior College at Hobbs.

The exhibition, featuring paintings by Bumpass and ceramics by Chadbourne, will continue on view through Feb. 16 in the UTPB art gallery. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Friday each week. There is no admission charge.

Bumpass holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Texas Tech University at Lubbock. Chadbourne holds a BA degree from Sam Houston State University and earned his MA from Texas Tech. Both have exhibited widely in the Southwest and elsewhere.

UT art faculty works displayed

AUSTIN — The 39th annual art faculty exhibition at The University of Texas has opened in the main and mezzanine galleries of the UT Art Museum, East 23rd and San Jacinto streets.

The show displays more than 200 diverse works that reveal the individual talents of the almost 60 members of the Art Department faculty at UT.

In addition to works by current members of the art faculty, the display includes works by several professors-emeritus, among them Everett Spruce, William Lester, Constance Forsyth and Loren Mozley. Also on view are a number of paintings by Associate Prof. Mort Baraboff, who died here Jan. 6.

Attracting viewer interest are five sculptures by Prof. Charles Umlauf, including a 26-inch bronze of the head of Farrah Faweett-Majors, the TV actress who studied with Umlauf when she was a UT student; Prof. Vincent Mariani's unusual painting titled "Light Wands," a delicately-shaded work painted on two side-by-side strips of wood that measure ½ inch by 96 inches and 2 inches by 90 inches; Prof. Michael Frary's large acrylic painting, titled "The Unicorn and the Lady," which when viewed from a distance looks like a medieval tapestry; two mystic paintings by Prof. Kelly Fearing, "Celebration to the Sound of Cosmic Blue" and "Cosmic Landscape With Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh Centering," and three muted pastoral paintings, "Winter Pasture," "Grassland" and "Panorama," by Prof. John Guerin.

In a class by itself is the work submitted by James Robertson, a graduate student and teaching assistant in the UT art department. His acrylic and enamel paintings are not done on canvas, board or paper, but on right and left doors removed from an automobile. The paintings are titled after the license number of the defunct car — "KCF 484, Right Door," and "KCF 484, Left Door."

The faculty art show will continue through Feb. 5. Art Museum visiting hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays, and 1 to 5 p.m. each Sunday. Admission is free.

Melba Moore still moving career around

By WILLIAM GLOVER

NEW YORK (AP) — "I like to move around," lilting Melba Moore says of multiple career thrusts, "because otherwise you can get lazy."

That's why the tiny performer with the big voice doesn't do just records or concerts or television or stage. And why all of them put together aren't her everything.

"I need another life for good balance," she says of her private world of marriage and recent motherhood.

"That provides the emotions you can bring to work. If you only live showbiz, what do you have to bring to showbiz?"

With considerable care, wariness and "maybe misses I don't know about," the Moore career formula for variety has been operative since she first popped into the Broadway spectrum a decade ago.

At 32, Melba is now getting ready for another Rialto sortie in a lavish musical "Timbuktu!" In it, the Arabian Nights fantasy "Kismet" that titillated throngs a quarter century ago, has been relocated in the historic African city of present-day Mali.

The time remains the 14th century, however, and the score the self-same adaptation of the Muscovite music by Alexander Borodin that Robert Wright and George Forrest provided for "Kismet."

Wright and Forrest have come up with several new numbers for her and the production's other distaff star, Eartha Kitt.

According to Miss Moore, they and the male leads, William Marshall and Gilbert Price, were "hand-picked for our personalities as well as talents" by Geoffrey Holder, the show's flamboyant director, choreographer and costumer.

Miss Moore, until then a supper club apprentice and backup caroller on records, got both of her previous Broadway parts "more or less by accident." She happened to hear about an audition call for "Hair" and wound up as the hippie epic's first black leading lady. When "Purlie" was in preparation, fortune smiled again. The management was looking for someone who could act. Although Melba had never had a dramatic lesson in her life, she got the nod.

"They never heard me really sing out full until the first preview performances." The part won her a Tony in 1971.

She turned down several Main Stem bids before "Timbuktu!" — "I didn't want to fall into typecasting as a little girl because I'm small" — but was engaged in a constant round of activity in other media, capped with a solo concert at Lincoln Center.

During her seven years away from Broadway, Miss Moore has had several extended television shows, a number of TV guest appearances, engagements with symphony orchestras, concert tours and LP records.

Besides the upcoming musical, her current agenda includes taping "Love, Melba" and a second season as "spokesperson" for the Big Blue Marble, an international video program for children.

She is also set for a cameo stint in the film version of "Hair" and, if the financing is ever completed, for the screen version of "Purlie."

Two years ago Miss Moore was married to Charles Huggins, owner of several thriving restaurants. The couple has a five-month-old daughter.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first recorded consumption of beer in America occurred in 1502 when Christopher Columbus made his fourth and final voyage to Central America, where he was served beer made from maize, according to Philip C. Smithsonian creating cast albums

By DAN SULLIVAN
The Los Angeles Times

I have just been listening to the original-cast album of the 1919 Ziegfeld Follies. The musical-comedy expert will say that there was no original-cast album for the 1919 Ziegfeld Follies. There is now.

Now there also is an original-cast album of George and Ira Gershwin's "Lady, Be Good" (1924), featuring not just the stars of the show, Fred Astaire and his sister Adele, but George Gershwin himself; and one of Cole Porter's "Anything Goes" (1934), starting Ethel Merman, and Cole Porter.

The albums are the first in a series to be published by the Smithsonian Institution. (The Smithsonian is offering all three for less than $20; details later.) They aren't original-cast albums in the modern sense. The cast didn't go down to the stuio en masse and record each number in the score. That wasn't done until "Oklahoma!" Rather, each album is an anthology of the various 78 r.p.m. singles that the stars made of their songs in the show, recorded for different labels, sometimes long after the show had closed. (Merman's "Blow, Gabriel, Blow" is from 1947.)

Sometimes the voices are those of the London company — Jeanne Aubert in "Anything Goes" (no Merman.) Sometimes it's a performer doing somebody else's song — Ukulele Ike, Cliff Edwards, giving his version of "Lady, Be Good." Or it's the composer — Cole Porter playing and singing "You're the Top" (dry, with a twist). Some of Bert Williams' numbers in the Follies album are songs that he's only thought to have sung in his specialty spot in the show, which varied from night to night.

Each album is a patchwork, with pieces missing, either because the song wasn't recorded, or because the Smithsonian's search team couldn't turn up a record. A sense of loss goes with that. If only Adele Astaire had recorded "The Man I Love"! But they cut the song in Philadelphia. The quality of the sound on these LPs also presents some problems. It hasn't been goosed up electronically (a sign of the project's integrity) and is definitely "period" — tubby for "Anything Goes," wavery for "Lady, Be Good," positively spectral for "Ziegfeld Follies of 1919." This is how your grandmother's windup Victrola used to sound.

Still, if you close your eyes, it's not too difficult to imagine how each show must have struck its original audience. In a sense, you join that audience, finding yourself charmed by that fresh kid, Eddie Cantor, and bowled over by that terrific new girl, Ethel Merman. Despite the dusty sound, a veil lifts. An old show becomes a young show. To borrow Cole Porter, it's a kick.

The first delight in "Anything Goes" is Merman. She does not belt "I Get a Kick Out of You." She sings it, exuberantly, but with a certain sweetness, thinking about the you of the song as much as the I.

The other delight is Cole Porter. He qualifies here for the triple crown — best composer, best lyricist, best party entertainer. He combines a fussy little voice with a bouncy piano technique, sounding both put-upon and amused by his irritation.

Wagner opera slated

NEW YORK — "Tannhauser," one of composer Richard Wagner's most acclaimed operatic dramas, will be broadcast Saturday afternoon over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network.

The performance, scheduled to begin at 12:30 p.m. (CST), will be carried over Station KCRS in Midland, Tex.

"Tannhauser," in a new production, features soprano Grace Melzia Bumbry as Venus and tenor James McCracken as Tannhauser. Other featured performers include bass John Macurdy as the Landgrave, soprano Teresa Kubiak as Elisabeth, tenor Misha Raitzin as Walther, baritone Vern Shinall as Biterolf, baritone Bernd Weikl as Wolfram, tenor John Carpenter as Heinrich and bass John Cheek as Reinmar. The performance will be conducted by James Levine.

The three-act opera's first intermission will present an "Opera News on the Air" feature, with Robert Lawrence giving a musical and dramatic analysis of "Tannhauser." During the second intermission, panelists Ivan Davis, Robert Lawrence, William Livinstone and Richard Mohr will face quizmaster Edward Downs on one of Texaco's "Opera Quiz" programs.

BARITONE TOM McKINNEY shares star billing with former Miss America Laurie Lea Schaefer in the musical "I Do! I Do!", the current attraction at The Mansion dinner theater between Midland and Odessa. The musical will have presentations at 8:30 p.m. today, Friday and Saturday and a final performance at 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Table reservations are available through 563-1133.

The upcoming presentations of "Cosi" will begin at 8 p.m. Friday and 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Subject to availability, tickets will be for sale at the box office before the start of each performance.

Group to sponsor painting workshop

C. Warren Cullar, well-known Texas watercolorist, will conduct a painting workshop here Feb. 1 through 3 under sponsorship of Las Manos, volunteer service organization of the Museum of the Southwest.

Registrations for the workshop are now being accepted by Joan Mills, chairman of Las Manos' education committee. Additional information on the workshop may be obtained from Mrs. Mills at 682-7517.

The demonstration will begin at 2 p.m. Saturday and will be open to the public. A reception honoring Cullar will follow in the museum's Turner Galleries, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Humphrey gave hope in letter

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — On the day Hubert Humphrey was buried, a letter he had written reached 28-year-old John Savage, telling him to keep his spirits up despite a crippling arthritic condition.

The letter was dated Jan. 3 and postmarked Jan. 13, the day Humphrey died.

Savage, who once received help from Humphrey to cut through military red tape, said he wrote the senator three weeks ago because he figured he "owed Humphrey a letter of appreciation."

"I was trying to cheer him up, and here he is, almost on his deathbed, sending me a letter with this positive outlook," said Savage, who suffers from a condition in which his joints fuse.

"I am truly saddened that you have such a serious health problem to deal with," Humphrey wrote, "but I am touched and pleased that you have shared your experiences and your feelings with me.

"Believe me, my friend, I do have a good idea of what you are going through," the letter continued. "Tough as it may seem, you must keep your spirits up. I believe, I know, that a positive outlook can influence your physical well-being; that it can help you fight something like cancer or arthritis.

"If you have the will to live, it can help the process of recovery. Medical experience has supported this.

"And, my friend, there is so much to live for — so live each day as if it were a gift, with all the energy and determination which you possess. Be of good cheer and strong faith. May God bless you and give you strength and spirit for the opportunities and challenges ahead."

Savage said that in 1973 he had spent nearly eight months in a naval hospital, where doctors could not diagnose his arthritic condition. He wrote to Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., for help.

"Senator Humphrey must have been on some committee dealing with these problems, because just when it seemed like I was going to die there before they found out what was wrong with me, I started getting telegrams from him," he said.

Tax penalty generates problems

By ART PINE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — There's a full-fledged row going these days about Uncle Sam's biggest marital problem — the so-called "marriage penalty" imposed on couples by the nation's tax system.

Because of quirks in the tax structure, a man and a woman who both work now pay more in taxes if they marry than they would if they stayed single.

For most couples, the extra tax tab is modest — say, from $30 to $150 a year. For those in the $50,000-a-year income bracket, it can run as high as $1,188.

With a greater proportion of the nation's married women working these days, the problem has grown into a political brouhaha — with more and more young couples protesting the disparity as unfair.

It's especially uncomfortable for President Carter. Throughout his campaign and first few months in the White House, Carter made a point of frowning on couples who live in "sin."

Now that he's in office, the president hardly can appear to ignore a tax situation that critics say tends to discourage marriage. Yet, under present law, a man and woman technically are "better off" — from a tax standpoint — living together than tying the knot.

The problem is, tax experts can see no sure way of eliminating the "marriage penalty" altogether without creating other, more serious inequities in the tax system. Carter already has scrapped one plan for reducing the over-taxation of married couples, and may have to compromise on another.

The difficulty stems from the basic makeup of the tax structure — specifically, that the tax system tries to adhere to seeveral broadly conflicting principles at once:

On one hand, American tradition dictates that the tax system be "progressive" — that is, that higher-income taxpayers pay proportionally more in taxes than those at the lower end of the income scale.

For example, a person earning $30,000 a year should, by rights, has to pay substantially more in taxes than either of two others earning $15,000 each.

At the same time, however, the tax laws say married couples should be treated as though they were a single economic unit — with no distinction between families in which one spouse earns all the money and those where both partners are wage-earners.

Tax experts say it just can't be done without giving way in some area. And the way the tax laws are structured now, it's couples who carry the extra burden.

Take the example of Mike and Joan, each earning $15,000 a year. If they file returns as single persons, their tax is $2,682 each — for a combined total of $5,364. If they marry and file jointly, their taxable income is $30,000 — and they pay $6,488 in taxes.

In another example, Fred earns $24,000 and Betty earns $6,000. Filing as single persons, they would have to pay taxes of $5,734 and $576 respectively — for a total tax bill of $6,310. If they marry, their taxes rise to $6,488 — or $178 more.

The "marriage penalty" problem has been around almost as long as the tax code.

During the first half of the century, married persons all were taxed as though they were single. So, couples with only one spouse earning the money paid higher taxes than two-earner families with the same income.

Then, in 1948, the law was revised to allow income-splitting — taxing couples as though they were two single persons each earning the same amount. But that left single taxpayers paying proportionally more.

In 1971, the law was changed again — this time to ease the "penalty" on single taxpayers. Under the new revisions, taxes for single persons no longer would be more than 20 per cent higher than those for couples.

As the law stands now, both single persons and couples are being overtaxed — though in different ways. Single person generally pay more in taxes than a married couple with the same income. But marrieds pay more than they would if they were single.

To be sure, tax purists would argue that married couples should be paying somewhat more than they would if they were single. Even if two can't live quite as cheaply as one, they still can live more cheaply per person.

An tax experts question whether the extra $180 a year or so really plays much part in a couple's decision on whether to marry. "Presumably, if there's real love involved," one analyst says, "it'll be strong enough to conquer the extra $180 a year."

Moreover, reducing the marriage penalty could be expensive — at least for the government. A partial solution could cost as much as $1.7 billion in reduced revenues. And any more serioues effort could run far higher.

Lobbyist for 'living will' took advantage of new law

By BOB EGELKO

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Lindley Hutchens died the way he wanted — peacefully and without the indignity of tubes, respirators and other life-sustaining equipment.

Hutchens, who died last June at age 61, was one of the first to take advantage of a landmark California law giving terminally ill patients the right to a "natural death."

The law Hutchens and his wife, Lily, had helped to lobby for went into effect Jan. 1, 1977, just a week after doctors told Hutchens that he had cancer of the kidney. Before the month was out, Hutchens filed a "living will" with his doctor saying he didn't want his life prolonged artificially.

"He knew he was going to die," Mrs. Hutchens said. "I said to him in the hospital, 'Honey, if anything should happen, do you want everything left just as it is or do you want to change it?' He said, 'No, Lil, just leave it as it is.'

"They just gave him ordinary water, orange juice, and very seldom a sleeping pill. On the last night, I saw him at 11:30. He couldn't sit up, they had to turn him.

"I wiped his face with a cloth. He said, 'Don't do that any more, I have to go to sleep.' Two hours later he was dead."

His death on June 26 was as he wanted, Mrs. Hutchens said, and in the same circumstances she would like to die the same way.

"If I thought there was no possible cure, I would want to go — why prolong it with artificial things?" she said. "I have a written will, the same as he had. We signed it at the same time."

The hotly contested California law has been adopted in some form by a half-dozen other states. It has stringent provisions. Thus Mrs. Hutchens, who lives in Leisure World, a retirement community south of Los Angeles, and many other healthy people like her who haye signed living wills, may have trouble getting their wishes carried out.

—The document must be renewed every five years, following stringent rules for witnesses.

—It applies only when death is imminent, not to comatose patients.

—A physician is not bound to his patient's living will unless it has been signed by a patient diagnosed as terminally ill at least 14 days earlier.

"It's unreasonable to expect somebody who's already terminally ill to file the declaration. People in that condition are often unconscious of what's happening," says Ben Nicholas, 83, a chief organizer of Leisure World support for the law.

The California Pro-Life Council argued against the bill, saying that it would be the first step toward euthanasia. Marian Banducci, representing Friends of Mothers and Babies and the Helpless Aged, argued that "The real target is to get rid of the people who cost too much to keep alive."

Shopsteading rejuvenates neighborhoods

PATRICIA CAMP
The Washington Post

BALTIMORE — Two weeks ago, Nelson Bolton, a 33-year-old bank employee, paid $100 to the city of Baltimore and became one of 15 participants in "shopsteading" — a unique program begun here to revitalize commercial areas that were devastated by the 1968 riots.

Bolton's $100 bought him and his partner a huge brick corner store front that they plan to use as an ice cream parlor. At the turn of the century, the structure was Arundel's Ice Cream store, but the building has been vacant for years and now is deteriorated and boarded up, its address written in large chalk letters on the front.

To Bolton, who also is a part owner of the Sundae Times Ice Cream Parlor in South Baltimore, his new store represents an investment in the city's future.

"I'm excited about what's happening in the city's neighborhoods," Bolton said. "I have high hopes for it (shopsteading). All these neighborhoods are starting to come back, and people like to have shops and areas of identity like ice cream parlors."

Shopsteading is the commercial counterpart of homesteading, a program begun several years ago in which persons purchase federally owned and city owned homes for $1, renovate them, and live in them for at least several years. Baltimore has about 400 homesteaders. It was one of the first cities tohave a homesteading program, and it apparently is the first to begin shopsteading.

Baltimore's shopsteaders will put life into two of the city's historic neighborhoods, Union Square and the Shot Tower Park area of central downtown.

Under the program, shopsteaders pay $100 each for vacant and boarded properties that the city acquired after owners abandoned them and failed to pay taxes.

Shopsteaders can get financial help to renovate and operate their shops through Small Business Administration loan programs and through a city-funded loan program. Total renovation of the first 15 properties may run about $750,000 a city official said.

Aurelio F. Goicochea, a commercial revitalization representative for Baltimore's Department of Housing and Community Development, said that shopsteaders can borrow from the city up to $50,000 per structure for renovation with no down payment, and pay 7 percent interest for 20 years. Shopsteaders are given title to their property after renovation.

Shopsteading is another of Baltimore's efforts to renew itself. "Welcome to Baltimore, A Working American City," reads the sign as you enter the city, and officials have embarked on an ambitious program over the past few years to make the city live up to that designation.

M.H. Brodie, Baltimore's housing commissioner, said the city uses a process he calls "architectural substraction — you take away the junk that has accumulated on the buildings over the years and get down to the basic structure. It takes a while to unfold, but you end up with a nice attractive area."

Brodie called the shopsteading program "a small step forward." He said the city isn't trying to pretend that it can turn the clock back to the days of the "mom-and-pop" neighborhood stores.

"It doesn't bring back life to all our vacant stores," Brodie said. "Basic economic trends won't allow that." Brodie estimated that of the 5,000 vacant buildings the city owns, about 500 of them are stores and shops. He said that if the city "shows some successes" with shopsteading, he hopes that the city can get funds from private institutions and the federal government.

"People are interested in opening their own small businesses — gift shops, arts and crafts, and little growing businesses," the housing commissioner said. "Traditionally the city has been the incubator for such businesses. I'd like to see the city do that again." Baltimore officials noted that many cities across the country have expressed an interest in shopsteading and has asked Baltimore for information about its program.

Shopsteading was the brainchild of Jo Anne Whitely, a Union Square community activist. Whitely toured the Hollins Market area of Baltimore with Baltimore Mayor Willion Donald Schaefer and other city officials several years ago. When they approached a run-down business section, she mentioned the words "shopstead" to the mayor.

"I had a simple little idea I wanted to mention to the mayor. And he listened," Whitely said.

Second judge chosen for FBI post

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is turning for the second time to a veteran federal judge to become FBI director. But the new choice, William H. Webster of St. Louis, brings a markedly different record to the bureau than the first nominee, Frank M. Johnson.

As a U.S. district judge in Montgomery, Ala., Johnson made bitter enemies with his decisions reforming the state's mental and penal institutions and guaranteeing the civil rights of blacks and the poor.

Webster, a circuit judge, seems to have made few if any enemies and his court decisions have rarely broken new ground in nearly a decade of public life.

"Bill has never been one who would hit the newspapers by being a showboat," said former Republican Rep. Thomas Curtis of St. Louis.

An Associated Press survey of 60 of the 185 opinions and dissents Webster has written while on the appellate bench shows that he carefully sticks to the precedents set by earlier decisions.

Lawyers note that circuit judges have little latitude in veering from the paths laid down by the Supreme Court, and that district judges have even less.

But some judges, such as Johnson, move beyond the precedents with decisions that in turn become guideposts themselves.

Both Johnson and Webster have built a reputation for integrity, a sharp mind and dedication to the law. They are alike in their politics, too, in that both are Republicans who owe their judicial appointments to Republican presidents, although neither had much to do with party affairs.

Administration sources said Wednesday that President Carter has chosen Webster to succeed Clarence M. Kelley as FBI director. The administration turned to Webster after Johnson bowed out in December because of persistent health problems.

Under consideration were Webster and U.S. District Judge Frank McGarr of Chicago. Both talked to Carter, but in the end Attorney General Griffin Bell told associates he favored Webster.

If there is a weakness in Webster's record, it may be in civil rights.

"I don't think Webster's civil rights record is tremendously good. I don't think he's very sympathetic to civil rights claims," said a St. Louis civil rights lawyer who said Webster appears to have been insensitive to minorities' concerns.

The lawyer asked not to be named.

But another, Lou Gilden, called Webster "very fair" and said he showed "a kindness that I had rarely experienced from a judge in the courtroom."

Solicitor General Wade McCree, who is black and who has known Webster for 15 years, said the judge regards race as just "one characteristic of a person—like his height or weight or shoe size—it has no significance."

Webster belongs to two socially elite St. Louis clubs with no black or women members, the Noonday Club and the Mysterious Order of the Veiled Prophets.

Kennedy files reveal FBI spent several years investigating itself

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two of the most intensive investigations conducted by the FBI in the recent years of the ongoing John F. Kennedy assassination case have been of — the FBI.

One concerned the FBI destruction of a note left with the bureau by an angry Lee Harvey Oswald shortly before the slaying of the president in Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963.

The other involved the authenticity of an FBI teletype to all bureaus five days before the slaying saying that "militant revolutionary groups may attempt to assassinate President Kennedy on his proposed trip to Dallas, Texas."

The extent of the consternation these two matters caused in the image-conscious bureau came to light Wednesday when the FBI released the second half of its files on Kennedy's death. Both matters had been the subject of a congressional hearing in 1975.

Nothing in the files shakes the concluson of both the FBI and the Warren Commission that Oswald, unaided, killed the president.

—In early 1964, the FBI considered using the assassination as part of its fight against communism by distributing posters to Communist Party members depicting Oswald as a Marxist.

—Chief Justice Earl Warren, the chairman of the commission, and Sen. Richard B. Russell, the Georgia Democrat who was also a member, considered resigning.

Warren reportedly was considering quitting the commission he headed should the FBI make public an interim report of its findings instead of waiting for the commission's conclusions.

Russell, the FBI said, was weighing leaving the commission because he thought the panel's work was haphazard and its staff lawyers were "extreme liberals."

—Gerald R. Ford, then a representative and later president, was suspected for a time with leaking commission information.

The files reported that Ford had been investigated for several leaks but concluded that "this allegation is completely erroneous."

The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Carl Betz, the ruggedly handsome television actor who starred in Judd for the Defense and The Donna Reed Show, died Wednesday of lung cancer. He was 56.

Betz, who had known he was dying for several months, had been admitted to Cedars-Sinai Medical Center last Nov. 28, but word of his illness had been kept secret at his request until earlier this month, a family spokesman said.

"He put up a very strong fight," his wife, Gloria, said, in announcing her husband's death. "He was the bravest, strongest man I've ever known."

Betz was born March 9, 1921, in Pittsburgh, Pa., and broke into show business with a summer stock company there. After a stint in the Army, he returned to acting and made his Broadway debut in "The Long Watch."

The actor's real break, however, came when he signed to portray the understanding husband-physician, Dr. Stone, opposite Miss Reed. The popular situation comedy, which made Betz a nationally recognized performer, ran from 1957 until 1965.

Later, after performing on the stage in "Night of the Iguana," Betz starred in the title role of Judd for the Defense, which won him an Emmy in 1969 for his portrayal of a flamboyant, boot-wearing Texas lawyer.

The Emmy had a special meaning for Betz, who in the Donna Reed series had established himself strongly in a comedy role. The 1969 award was for "continued performance by an actor in a dramatic series."

Carl Betz

Betz last work was touring the East Coast with a one-man play about Gen. Douglas McArthur entitled, "I Shall Return." Mrs. Betz said the actor taped an unhired performance of that show in Los Angeles last February.

Survivors, in addition to his wife, include a son, Richard, 20; a daughter, Rio, 18; and two sisters, Mrs. Will Gallagher of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Mrs. Frank Schmidt of Malvern, Pa.

Tension revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — There was tension and sometimes bitterness between the FBI and the Warren Commission in the grueling months of investigation following President John F. Kennedy's assassination, newly released files show.

The FBI felt commission members were making unreasonable demands on its overworked staff, and commission members felt the FBI was incomplete and slow in responding to commission questions.

The result was exchanges of correspondence, revealed Wednesday, that alternated between peacemaking and grumbling. It culminated in a bitter Hoover reaction, scrawled at the bottom of a complimentary report on a meeting with the commission's general counsel, J. Lee Rankin.

"I place no credence in any complimentary remarks" made by Chief Justice Earl Warren "nor the commission," Hoover wrote. "They were looking for FBI gaps and having found none yet, they try to get syrupy."

Barely two weeks before, Rankin, who was frequently cast as the peacemaker between the two investigatory bodies, told FBI officials he had become aware of "unreasonable requests" by members of his staff.

He said he realized that in some instances "a considerable amount of work was requested and sufficient time was not allowed for the bureau to handle these items."

He would, he said, call these matters to the attention of his staff. It was "typical of most attorneys" who had finished their own work, he said, to become impatient with the incomplete work of others.

At first, Rankin explained, the bureau had been asked to gather the basic facts and submit a quick report.

That was done, he told FBI officials, "in a very expedited and excellent manner."

But then as the commission gained momentum and assembled a large staff of attorneys, they "were able to sit down without any interference."

Projects' 'hit list' dropped

By GAYLORD SHAW
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary Cecil D. Andrus said the Carter administration will not propose a new "hit list" on federal water projects this year, explaining: "I might be a lot of things... but I'm not stupid."

The administration's attempt early last year to halt funding for 18 dams and other major water projects, mostly in the West, led to blistering congressional criticism of President Carter and his Interior secretary.

Eventually, a compromise was reached suspending work on half the projects, and Andrus told a news conference Tuesday that President Carter's soon-to-be-announced budget would not seek funds for those nine projects.

But, he said, "if you think I'm going to walk up to the Hill with another hit list, and go through the heartburn and agony I did a year ago — I'm just not going to do it."

Andrus said the administration "will continue to monitor proposed water projects to assure that they are sound...environmentally, economically and physically. But there will be no hit list..."

The secretary said that last year's hit list controversy ushered in "a new day in water projects."

"I think you will see a different approach in the future," he said. "Some projects Congress has been willing to support before will not be supported in the future."

Andrus last week accompanied Vice President Walter Mondale on a tour of western states, seeking to calm the region's uneasiness over the administration's water policies, and he repeated Tuesday that a major administration review of federal water policy, scheduled for completion within the next two months, is not intended to "infringe upon state or private water rights as we know them in the West."

Rather, he said, its goal is to find "what we can do at the federal level with our resources and our policies that will help them resolve their water problems."

On another subject, Andrus said the federal government has a "moral obligation" to help resolve environmental problems in the Sacramento-San Joaquin delta, where low river flows have allowed intrusion of salt water from San Francisco Bay. He would not elaborate.

Survival issue arises in state

Analysis

By CARY CARDWELL

AUSTIN--The complex problem of balancing the the survival rights of rare animal species against the nation's need for scarce natural resources--an issue generating confrontation and litigation in other states--has surfaced in Texas.

In a case currently before the Texas Water Commission, the Edwards Underground Water District plans to dam a Medina County creek, flooding a cave that is home for the rare Valdina Farms slamander.

The economic impact of the disputed $415,000 project hardly compares with battles over construction of a multi-million dam in Tennessee or a nuclear power plant on the Eastern Seaboard, two projects recently targets of court suits brought by environmentalists.

But the commission's decision whether approving EUWD's plan or acceding to environmentalists' pleas to block construction) could set precedents indicating future state action on similar projects that threaten unique species.

The salamander's survival, supported in commision hearings by the Sierra Club, faces formidable odds. The Seco Creek dam will divert floodwaters into caves feeding the Edwards Aquifer, a vast underground reservoir that supplies water for San Antonio and two adjacent counties.

The reservoir is refilled from rain and dammed creek water seeping into the pools, but estimates show the area will be drawing more water than can be naturally recharged by the year 2000.

With depleted water supplies being predicted, pressure is heavy to recharge the aquifer through projects such as the Seco Creek dam.

But the Sierra Club and its expert biologists contend the salamander, an albino, nearly sightless creature that feeds on bat guano and subterranean insects, is more than just a nuisance in the way of man and his future needs; that it represents a unique key to the evolution of life on the planet that must be preserved.

"Any educated tinkerer, if he takes his watch apart, should know how to put it together again. We can't take a chance on just tossing out those species found down there, because we don't know what it could do to our eco-system," Floyd Potter, a state Parks and Wildlife Department biologist, says.

That eco-system contains the ties that bind--the interrelationships of food chains that ultimately feed the earth's populations. Scientists are just beginning to trace the effects of man's industry and development on that system.

But water district officials contend more immediate, more observable problems--such as water needs--should take precedence over a minor link in the world's food chain.

Substantial problems face firms in Mid-East

By ROBERT A. ROSENBLATT
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — American companies working in the Arab world face substantial problems under a series of tough regulations to be issued today by the Commerce Department to implement the federal anti-boycott law.

The regulations will prohibit several practices commonly used by American companies to obey the Arab nations' economic blacklist of certain firms trading with Israel.

The Arab countries' economic war with Israel extends to companies with factories or plants in Israel and to firms making a major contribution to the Israeli economy. Ford, Xerox and Coca-Cola, for example, are blacklisted by Arab nations.

A blacklist is strictly enforced in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, countries rich with oil revenues. Egypt, a comparatively poor nation needing foreign capital, boycotts some companies on the blacklist but not others. For example, Egypt will allow Ford to build a truck plant in Alexandria, and Coca-Cola plans to develop citrus groves near the Suez Canal.

American oil companies and construction firms active in the lucrative Saudi Arabian market fear they will lose business if American law makes them break Saudi blacklists.

Thursday's regulations, the Los Angeles Times learned, will provide for strict enforcement of the anti-boycott legislation passed from joining the Arab boycott of Israel, and bars them from following the Arab blacklist of commercial firms involved with Israel.

The regulations will eliminate a common contract provision employed by American companies in the Middle East to avoid dealing with blacklisted firms back in the United States.

A contract with a supplier back in the United States commonly requires the supplier to assume the loss if his goods are confiscated at the border because of local blacklists.

This "risk of loss" provision effectively prevented any company on the Saudi blacklist from bidding on contracts for American work in Saudi Arabia.

The regulations "give us 95 percent of what we wanted," said a congressional staff member involved in the intensive lobbying over the boycott issue. "The regulations were originally proposed with big loopholes; but the final version is tough."

The rule will "go far towards ending American participation in the boycott," said Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal D-N.Y., a sponsor of the anti-boycott legislation.

The Commerce Department rules, The Times learned, provide the following guidelines for U.S. companies in the Arab world:

—A firm can obey local boycotts and blacklists with merchandise ordered for its own use. For example, Mobil Oil could refuse to buy Xerox copying machines for Mobil Oil offices in Saudi Arabia.

—A company cannot obey a blacklist in doing work for others. If an American firm is building a telephone system for Saudi Arabia, it cannot automatically refuse to buy switching equipment from an American company on the Arab blacklist.

—American firms cannot use any "artifice or device" that would discriminate against another U.S. company solely because it appears on an Arab blacklist.

— Firms engaged in construction projects can obey the blacklist on basic building items such as cement, walls and wiring. But American companies can't obey a local blacklist when they buy furniture, supplies or equipment for the building. All companies — including those on blacklists — must be given a chance to bid for the business.

Readers tell views about home planning

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Several weeks ago, readers were asked to give their preferences in 10 situations that might present themselves if they were having houses built to order.

The response was far greater than expected, so that the assistance of several other persons was required to open the mail and tally the results. Also, because so many readers included interesting, illuminating comments with their choices, it was decided to break down the selections into three parts. The initial one deals with the first three questions: Do you prefer three bedrooms about the same size or one large bedroom and two small ones? Would you want the laundry room next to the kitchen or in or near the bedroom wing, assuming that the house had no basement? If the overall square footage permitted only a family room or only a dining room, which would you want?

With each of these questions, as with the seven others, it was assumed that there would be no appreciable cost difference whatever the choice.

On the first question, 65 percent said they would rather have one large bedroom and two small ones than three of the same size.

On the second, 67 percent said they wanted the laundry room near the kitchen.

On the third, 76 percent preferred a family room to a dining room if only one could be had.

Surprising? Not on question one. Only slightly so on question three — and then only because of the high percentage of family room advocates. But the replies on question two about the location of the laundry room raised some eyebrows, especially among those who have seen the letters that are received occasionally by those responsible for the selection of house designs for newspaper readers. These letter writers have asked why architects don't stop placing laundry rooms next to kitchens when families prefer to have them near the bedrooms. They have pointed out that most laundry emanates from the bedrooms and not the kitchens and that it makes common sense to have the laundry appliances there. Or, as one woman said in response to the questionnaire: "Of course I prefer the bedroom area for the laundry. That's where the dirty clothes are!"

Yet 67 percent of the respondants want the laundry near the kitchen. Why? "Because," said one householder, "most of the time is spent in the kitchen and I can coordinate my cooking and washing activities." Another reason given for the kitchen choice was that a bedroom location "would make it too noisy for night washing, which I do to conserve energy." And still another: "I'm concerned about washer overflow ruining adjacent carpeting. It doesn't happen often, but it would have to happen only once to be too much."

Answers

Q. — Do I have to put down underlayment sheets on a wooden floor before putting down vinyl asbestos tiles? The floor is in good condition, with no loose boards and no warping.

A. — The general rule of thumb is that the tiles can be placed right on a floor in good condition if it is of double construction (with a top floor and a subfloor) and the boards are 3 inches or less in width. If both of these conditions do not exist, the recommendation is that plywood or hardboard underlayment be used.

Q. — I often see the term "tack rag." Can you tell me what it is?

A. — It's a clean cloth moistened with turpentine and then further sprinkled with the varnish which will be used. It should be wrung out until nearly dry and then wiped over the surface to be finished. You can make one or buy one. The use of it insures that the surface of the wood will be thoroughly clean.
