Gunman felled after rampage in restaurant

By ALAN ADLER
Associated Press Writer

SAN YSIDRO, Calif. — A fired security guard shouted "I've killed thousands and I'll kill thousands more" as he turned a McDonald's into a slaughterhouse, shooting 20 people to death before police killed him. It was believed to be the worst one-day massacre by one man in U.S. history.

Twenty others were injured, four critically, in Wednesday's rampage, which lasted 90 minutes before a police marksman felled the gunman, James Oliver Huberty, 41, authorities said. His targets ranged from an infant girl to a 60-year-old woman.

Huberty, clad in jungle fatigues and a black T-shirt, burst into the border-town restaurant about 4 p.m. with a semi-automatic rifle, a shotgun and a handgun and began methodically firing at diners, employees and passers-by, pausing to reload each time his weapons were emptied, authorities said.

When he died, he still had a shoulder bag full of ammunition and "more ammunition out in his car.... If he had not been shot, he would have injured a lot more people," said San Diego police Lt. Paul Yberrando.

Huberty was using armor-piercing bullets, said Police Chief William B. Kolender.

Police sharpshooter Charles Foster was able to pick the gunman off as he wandered through the bullet-riddled, blood-splattered restaurant.

The San Diego Blood Bank put out a plea today for "blood donors of all types to replace the blood that was used last night ... We sent out 60 pints," said spokeswoman Lynn Stedd.

Huberty lived with his wife Etna and two daughters, aged 11 and 14, in an apartment 200 yards from the restaurant and had moved to the San Diego area seven months ago from Ohio, Yberrando said. He was fired last week from his job at a security guard at a condominium project, Yberrando said, describing Huberty as "possibly psychotic."

A neighbor told The Los Angeles Times that Huberty's daughter said her parents had fought earlier in the day. Other neighbors said Huberty was a reserved but angry man and recalled incidents in which he had fired guns.

He was "a quiet man who seemed like he was always mad at somebody. He was always frowning," said Sandra Martinez, assistant manager at the Cottonwood Apartments, where Huberty lived.

Huberty and his family had moved to California seven months ago from Massillon, Ohio. He became bitter when he lost his welding job with the closing of a Babcock & Wilcox power plant at Canton, Ohio, said Stark County sheriff's Deputy Terry Kelly, who worked with Huberty.

Mondale will share convention spotlight

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Geraldine A. Ferraro will be acclaimed the Democratic vice presidential candidate tonight, adding excitement to the ticket of nominee-at-last Walter Mondale and making history for her country, her party and her sex.

Mondale, triumphant on the first presidential nominating ballot, and Ms. Ferraro stand before the Democratic National Convention to accept their nominations and start an underdog campaign against a popular Republican president.

Mondale

Mondale started writing his acceptance speech weeks ago, but waited until Wednesday to buy a $415 designer suit to wear when he delivers it. Ms. Ferraro, the running mate he named eight days ago, went to the convention hall after Wednesday's session had adjourned to practice using the teleprompter for her speech tonight. She waved as though a huge crowd were looking on.

In a dramatic gesture of unity — in contrast to four years ago when defeated challenger Edward M. Kennedy gave only a grudging endorsement to a renominated Jimmy Carter — Mondale's two vanquished opponents made their way to the convention podium Wednesday night to offer their support.

Sen. Gary Hart moved to make Mondale's nomination unanimous; the convention roared its agreement. The Rev. Jesse Jackson said: "Together we shall go to higher heights. Our time has come."

Then Mondale came before the delegates and in a foretaste of tonight's speech declared: "We're in this together. And we've got to win it together. We must win this election in 1984, and I must have your help."

Protege of Hubert Humphrey and vice president of Jimmy Carter, Mondale had been scorned by Hart as the captive of special interests and the party's past, but he won with an ease that contrasted with the fight that preceded it.

With even less difficulty, Ms. Ferraro is sure to be nominated tonight as his ticket mate, a New Yorker whose zestiness contrasts with Mondale's caution.

Ms. Ferraro is the first woman ever offered for national office by a major political party in this country, and that's what has excited this convention all week. She's also the first Italian-American on a major ticket, and a skillful campaigner who conveys a relaxed warmth.

The very idea of a woman running mate seemed academic, idealistic and remote two weeks ago, even though women's groups were pushing for it. Eight days ago, Mondale decided, against the advice of some male advisers, to take the gamble.

There may yet be voter resistance to electing a woman to the standby office for the presidency, but at least among convention Democrats, misgivings are not evident.

Midlander watches his candidate win

It was a long night for Dallas Willis but one in which he reveled. His candidate — Walter Mondale — won the presidential nomination on the first roll call at the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco.

Willis, a Midlander who heads up the Central Labor Union, was disappointed in only one aspect of Wednesday's events and that was New Jersey. According to calculations, the Texas delegation should have given Mondale his push over the top of the hurdle for the delegate count. But four states passed in the roll call and New Jersey stole the thunder from Texas.

Tonight's session should be shorter than Wednesday's, said Willis, who didn't get to bed until after 2 a.m. today. He looked back over Wednesday's events that featured Gary Hart and then predicted Geraldine Ferraro will be selected the vice presidential candidate by acclamation. In comparison to other conventions in recent history, this is by far the most unified, he said.

"The shot in the arm will come today," Willis said. "Ferraro will be nominated by acclamation. I don't think they'll have a roll call, or that's what I've been hearing."

The speech by Hart, who advocated his delegates not to switch, wasn't what Willis expected. Nor was it of the same caliber as that of the Rev. Jesse Jackson who spoke Tuesday night or New York Mayor Mario Cuomo's speech on Monday.

"He continued to have too much (John F.) Kennedy style in his speech. It seems as though he didn't really want to give up," Willis said. "His speech sounded more like he was a delegate, as though he had not given up."

The talk didn't influence a change in the delegates' votes, he said. "It influenced very few."

Mayor files $57 million budget with 5 percent pay hikes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Mayor G. Thane Akins made it official this morning when he filed the city budget calling for $57 million in expenditures for 1984-85 with the City Secretary's office.

The budget also reflects an 8 percent tax increase, a 5 percent raise for city employees, $350,000 for street repairs, 18 new firemen and a deficit of $1 million that will be taken out of the surplus.

Although Odessans voted in a tax rollback last year for those entities which went over the 8 percent limit, Akins said that didn't influence the City Council's decision to keep Midland's at that cap.

He described the budget as still being in a "recovery mode" after Midland's rapid growth and steep decline, all of which has happened since 1980. But there are some indications the economy is picking itself up off the floor.

Akins cited a continued increase in sales tax revenues, as one example of the recovery. For 1983-84, the council had budgeted $6.5 million. When the fiscal year ends on Sept. 30, the city should have $7.5 million in its coffers. For next year, the council is hoping to get $8.4 million in sales tax rebates.

The tax rate is proposed to be raised to 37 cents per $100 valuation, which would cost the owner of a $100,000 house an additional $27.30 a year on taxes. The effective tax rate, or that which would bring in the same amount of revenue as last year, would be 34.27 cents per $100.

Akins said he doubts if the council hears too many complaints about the higher tax rate. Although property was revaluated this year and most of it increased in value, Akins said that is the responsibility of the Appraisal District and not City Hall.

The city budget is comprised of three separate funds: General, Airport, Water and Sewer.

The General Fund reflects an increase of $3,368,240 with $1 million of that going for the 5 percent wage increase. He said another 1 percent increase could come in April if the financial position is positive then. Another $1 million of the increase is designated for personnel services with a net increase of 3¾ employees and 18 new firemen for the two new substations that will open this year.

"There had been no pay increase since October 1982," Akins said. "With the continued increase in the cost of living, particularly in Midland, we believed we had to do it. We have many good employees and we want to keep them."

Of the tax increase, one cent will be designated for street repairs. The additional penny should bring in $350,000 for that purpose.

Fee schedules are being reviewed, said Akins, to make sure the cost of that service isn't made up by tax money.

A depreciation reserve was set up in both the Airport and Water and Sewer funds, according to Akins. The city's auditors this year recommended the reserve be established to help fund replacement of old segments of the city's infrastructure and future acquisitions.

In the Water fund, the reserve will be $1.4 million, making up more than half the $2.5 million increase in that department. Because of this fund reserve, the department will show a deficit of $934,000. But that should be made up with a 6 percent increase in water and sewer rates, said the mayor.

The Airport fund reflects an increase of $1.3 million, with $1 million of that going to the reserve fund, Akins said. "Because of this, the fund will show a deficit of about $967,000."

Museum board rejects requests of Lancaster House committee

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

After receiving a 90-day stay of execution for the Lancaster House from Museum of the Southwest's board of trustees, the Neighborhood Committee to Save the Lancaster House has returned to the board with additional requests.

Completed in 1938, the Lancaster House was the home of Naomi Lancaster and became the seat of cultural activities in Midland for many years. It was given by Mrs. Lancaster and her heirs to the museum in 1970.

The 22-member board has agreed to assign a board member to work as a liaison between the board and the committee. However, the board has rejected the following requests:

— That the museum allow donations to be made directly to the museum rather than to the Neighborhood Committee because the committee is not tax exempt;

— That the committee be allowed to use the museum's bulk mailing permit and;

Al Dillard, board president, explained the museum's position on the first two requests in a recent interview.

"If we act as surrogate mother, we could jeopardize our position as an IRS tax-exempt foundation. They're not connected with us in any manner whatsoever. If we accept money, we're responsible for returning the money, and we don't have the manpower to cope with that.

"You cannot let somebody else use your bulk-mailing permit," Dillard said. "I am not trying to block the committee on all this. I'm just trying to protect our position with the IRS and the postal service. We went to legal counsel and the answer was a definite no."

In a letter to committee spokesmen Jody Gilles and Harris Kerr, Dillard stated the board's policy on the clean-up day.

"We presently have people contracted for work of the grounds that needs to be done. We would not be able to sanction a large group of people to work on the grounds unless you are agreeable to carry liability insurance in the amount of $200,000-$500,000 at a minimum and indemnify the museum of any and all responsibility."

Downtown area spends powerless half-hour

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

About 10 blocks in downtown Midland were without power for approximately a half-hour this morning after a power line grounded out.

The end of a crossarm which supported a power cable at the corner of Walnut Avenue and Lamesa Road collapsed at 9:10 a.m., allowing the cable to sag against the pole and ground out. An automatic safety system at the substation then shut off the power, said Gerald Gotcher, division customer service manager for the Texas Electric Service Co.

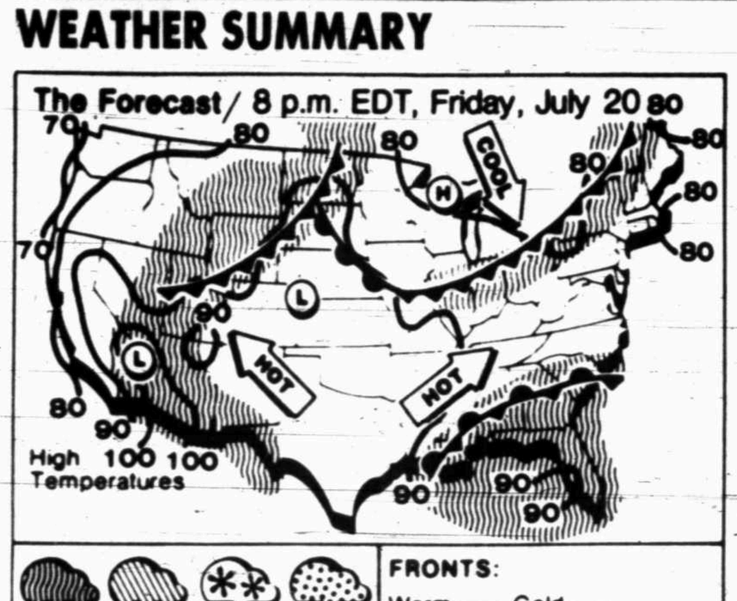

"At 9:42 we located the trouble and lifted the line back up with the fiberglass bucket on a truck," restoring power to the affected area, Gotcher said.

TESCO employees were holding the cable in place with the repair bucket while they replaced the crossarm, which was apparently old and deteriorated, said Gotcher.

The power outage affected 319 TESCO customers from Front St. to Garden Lane, according to Gotcher. Traffic lights in the area were knocked out, and offices in ten major downtown buildings were without lights, power and telephone service.

Showers are forecast through Friday from the Southwest to the northern Plains, Southeast and along the Great Lakes from Illinois to Maine.

No rain expected in Basin on Friday

From Staff and Wire Reports

A 20 percent chance of thunderstorms tonight may give Midlanders slight hope but no rain is in the forecast for Friday, which is expected to be partly cloudy.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, temperatures will drop into the middle 60s tonight, climbing into the middle 90s Friday.

Tonight's light and variable winds will shift southerly at 10-20 mph Friday.

Wednesday's high of 90 missed the record high of 104, set in 1981, by 14 degrees. The overnight low of 70 was nine degrees warmer than the record low for that date of 61, set in 1947.

STATE

Scattered showers and thundershowers lingered over parts of West and Southwest Texas this morning.

The activity was along the remains of an old frontal boundary, extending from the upper Texas Coast into South Central Texas and into the Trans Pecos region.

Thunderstorms also fell early today over the northern Texas Panhandle, in conjunction with a low pressure trough that was moving out of eastern Colorado and New Mexico.

Overnight temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s, ranging from 66 at Amarillo and Dalhart to 80 at Victoria, Cotulla and Del Rio.

NATION

Thunderstorms pounded scattered locations across the Southwest early today as other storms erupted over the Gulf Coast states and snaked up the southern Atlantic Coast.

Cool weather settled into the Ohio Valley and the Great Lakes region. Fair weather prevailed across the West Coast and the northeastern corner of the nation.

A sudden thunderstorm burst Wednesday over San Bernardino and Riverside counties, east of Los Angeles, unleashing floodwaters that caused $2 million in property damage and took the life of an 8-year-old girl who drowned when she was swept away.

Debris and high water forced closure of several roads and two state highways and swept three vehicles off parking lots and carried them into Big Bear Lake, officials said.

Twister hits fire station

HUMBLE, Texas (AP) — A tornado which ripped the roof off a fire station and knocked down a 110-foot high antenna probably caused about $55,000 in damage, Humble Police Chief Lennie Hendrick said.

The twister roared down the main street of a north Houston suburb about 4:30 p.m. Wednesday. Hendrick said it remained about rooftop level for a minute or 90 seconds.

"It whipped down, did the damage and then whipped back up into the clouds," Hendrick said.

The storm also twisted and downed a transmitter antenna, knocking it into the middle of Main Street. Hendrick said treetops were broken off and dropped onto cars in an apartment complex parking lot.

Many people were calling to report roof damage and leaks, Hendrick said.

Hendrick estimated an inch of rain fell in less than an hour.

Since receiving the letter, the committee has once again requested an agreement be worked out which would allow contributors to the Save the Lancaster House to receive a tax break for their donations.

"Our group cannot become tax-exempt in that time (less than 60 days)," Kerr told board members Wednesday.

"We would like to work with the trustees and your counsel to see if we cannot come up with a way to satisfy the executive committee's concerns by accepting restricted donations. Obviously, it is very difficult for us to go to a private charitable foundation or a private foundation or a wealthy individual and ask them to give a large amount to people to hold, if this is going to work. They're just not going to do it."

Kerr suggested setting up an escrow account for the Lancaster House. Any money received for that project would be placed into the account. If the house isn't going to be saved, the money would be returned, he said.

The two parties have agreed to look into the matter.

Kerr also said in his report, "We think we have a proposal that can meet with your approval and can create a real asset for the museum and our community."

He mentioned similar situations in other cities.

"The Bradshaw House in San Antonio, I think, is perhaps the best example I know of — an old house operated by the Junior League that's used for private parties, Junior League functions, wedding receptions and raises about $9,000 a year over the cost of operation.

The Lancaster House is in an identical situation, he noted. "It's in an older part of towm; it has a great deal of charm; it has been used for that function in the past."

The Lancaster committee has received more involvement from the community than was expected, he said.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

Harris Kerr, spokesman for the Neighborhood Committee to Save the Lancaster House, gives a progress report to the Museum of the Southwest's 22-member board of trustees during its Wednesday board meeting.

"We have architects who have donated time. In fact, the local chapter of architects have told us quite probably they would have their meeting at the Lancaster House at a tea room or a catering facility that was put there on a monthly basis. And the local bar association has said much the same thing. We think there are quite a few groups that would be willing to do that.

"We have contractors, painters, plumbers, electricians who are donating services helping us figure out what all this is going to cost and are going to donate or provide us services at cost in the renovation effort if it comes to that."

Money is the bottom line. The committee has placed donation cans around town, and a barbecue is planned for 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at Haley Park. The barbecue, which is the committee's first effort at holding a fund-raising event, costs $10 per plate and includes dinner, entertainment and a progress report. For more information, call 682-1939 or 682-8911.

The committee has released a tentative figure of $300,000 to restore the house.

Dillard said if the committee can come up with a feasible plan within the allotted time schedule and "two-thirds of the $300,000 by the end of the 90-day period," the board would once again hold off on demolishing Lancaster House.

Texas delegation hails nomination

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Walter Mondale's first-ballot nomination as the Democratic presidential candidate was harmonious and puts the party in good shape for the November elections, Texas Democrats say.

"I feel very good about it. I feel much better than I did six months ago," said Millie Bruner of Grand Prairie, a Democratic national committeewoman.

The Texas delegation to the Democratic National Convention overwhelmingly supported Mondale on the first ballot Wednesday night after state party chairman Bob Slagle nominated him and state Treasurer Ann Richards gave an empassioned seconding speech.

Of Texas' 200 delegates, 119 voted for Mondale, 40 for Sen. Gary Hart, 36 for the Rev. Jesse Jackson and two for Ohio Sen. John Glenn, who dropped out of the presidential race months before the convention.

Three Texas congressmen — Ralph Hall, Chick Kazen and Charles Wilson — failed to attend the convention. Because they were chosen from Congress, they could not be replaced under party rules by alternates.

Ms. Bruner said she believed supporters of Hart and Jackson will quickly rally to Mondale. And she contrasted the vote Wednesday with President Carter's renomination four years ago after a bitter fight with Sen. Edward Kennedy.

"It's so much different than in (the) New York (convention) in 1980. When that was over, Kennedy people were angry," she said.

Ms. Bruner said she believes Jackson's campaign brought new, enthusiastic people into the party and that Hart backers, too, will unite against Reagan as the candidate asked them to do.

Others agreed.

"There's no problem (with unity)," Slagle said.

"The Texas delegation is not going to get mad at each other because of presidential preference. We've worked together before this convention and will work together after."

Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple, a co-chairman of Mondale's Texas primary campaign, said he believes Mondale and his running mate, New York Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, can carry the state. To do it, he said the Democrats will have to put together an organization similar to that built by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen in 1982, when he was re-elected and Democrats swept into all the top state offices.

"It will take a lot of work. We're going to have to put in place the kind of operation Bentsen headed up in '82 and expand on that base," Temple said. "I think we can do it. I think it'll be easier this time because the people know what to do."

Bentsen, whom Mondale considered and rejected for vice president, said defeating Reagan would be "tough, tough." But he said the party appears unified and that will be a big plus if party leaders work hard at assembling the Democrats' traditional constituencies.

"I think it's terribly important that they appeal to the middle and restore the base of the Democratic Party. You can't win without having the broad base," Bentsen said.

"I think you're going to see these polls (showing Reagan with a sizeable lead over Mondale) narrow very quickly after this convention is over."

Ms. Richards, who in her seconding speech said Mondale will appeal to the millions of Americans Reagan has ignored, also was optimistic.

"What we put in place in '82 is still very much intact and has grown," she said.

Ms. Richards added she is anxious to get Ms. Ferraro to Texas to campaign.

NIGHT

Now that the convention is in its final day, Willis said he thinks Jackson and Hart will join with Mondale in the campaign.

"All three people know the real objective is the November election and that Ronald Reagan has got to be beat. Mondale will bring Jackson and Hart into the campaign to help unite the party."

The San Francisco gathering has been "far superior" to other Democratic conventions, according to Willis, who expects it to be the only one he attends in his lifetime.

"It's far more unified as a party than in 1976 or 1980," he said of the Democratic Party. "There's not been the bickering I've seen in past conventions. There's a lot more courtesy and accommodations than I've seen before. When Jackson spoke, you didn't see Hart or Mondale signs. It was as if Jesse deserved to have his night."

And the same applied with other speakers, according to Willis.

He will be giving a report on the convention to local Democrats when he returns to Midland.

OUTAGE

"We had no phones, no lights, no copy machines. Our typewriters didn't work," said Ms. Cherry. "It was real quiet."

It was also quiet upstairs at County Court, but the wheels of justice kept on turning, said Fonda Love, secretary for County Judge Bill Ahders.

"We kept on going. We didn't have our computer, but the windows in the courtroom gave enough light" for the court to function, said Ms. Love. "It was pretty weird."

Over at Midland Municipal Court, though, the windows apparently weren't big enough.

"We came to a virtual standstill," said Court Administrator Nick Weidenkopf. "The courtrooms were black — it would have been blind justice."

The high ceilings in the lobby of RepublicBank First National mitigated the effect of the outage, said Tom Pitman, the bank's vice president for general services.

The bank continued to wait on customers, "Though they might have had to hold the checks up to the light to read the dollar signs," said Pitman.

"Only part of the building was blacked out," Pitman said. "There really wasn't much of an effect, except sitting and waiting for the power to come back on."

Inmate stabs guard

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — A guard at the Coffield prison unit near Tennessee Colony was in good condition today after being stabbed by an inmate with a homemade knife, officials said.

Prison Sgt. Randall McFall, 30, underwent surgery at Anderson County Memorial Hospital in Palestine after being injured Wednesday.

Republican convention planners getting lesson from Democrats

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Dallas officials observing the Democratic National Convention have picked up valuable pointers they hope will help them avoid chaos or embarrassment during the Republican National Convention in August.

One lesson learned thus far: pay attention to details.

For example, Sandy O'Rourke was leading the group of 10 Dallas officials through the corridors of the Moscone Concention Center when a voice crackled over her walkie-talkie.

"The DNC (Democratic National Committee) wants to know if they can borrow a vacuum cleaner," the voice said.

Like San Francisco, Dallas must turn an empty exhibition hall into a convention arena by the time the Republicans converge on Aug. 20 for their national convention.

"The big picture is made up of all these details. Success is made of all these details," Lillian Bradshaw, special convention assistant to the Dallas city manager, told the Dallas Times Herald.

"I think we're in good shape," she added.

But there are matters to be worked out, such as security clearance for city workers and contingency plans for air-conditioning break-downs, which would be catastrophic in Dallas, where August temperatures are in the 90-plus range.

"If you've got a pile of garbage and the maintenance man isn't cleared you're in trouble," said Ms. O'Rourke. "Be sure your people have access to the areas they need to get to."

As he followed Ms. O'Rourke through the center, Assistant Dallas City Manager Levi Davis jotted down her suggestions on a pad.

For example, he noted that the Democrats had set up a booth to assist handicapped persons. "I don't know if we're doing that," Davis said.

Davis said he plans to check and see if the city has arranged to get security clearances for elevator repairman and whether convention planners have made provisions for 24-hour maintenance teams, portable phones and restrooms and back-up generators should the permanent ones fail.

Davis said he was impressed with the way Democratic planners have handled the convention.

"They've done a super job," said Davis.

"They've got a tremendous amount of flexibility with that protest area," Davis said of the site designated for demonstrations.

Deputy Dallas Police Chief Bill Newman noted that San Francisco police are used to handling protests.

"They said this is an everyday occurrence. It's a big deal to us," Newman said.

Newman said he expects more militant protesters in Dallas because protesters generally like Democrats better than Republicans.

Hostages taken at TV station

AUSTIN (AP) — A man carrying a pistol took hostages in an Austin television station today but surrendered after employees fooled him into believing they had televised the statement he demanded to make, according to KVUE employees.

"It was a weird-type political statement," said reporter Karen Sonleitner. "He wanted air time to make this statement."

Austin Police Lt. Robert Wisian said the man, whose name was not released, was arrested. There were no injuries.

Ms. Sonleitner said the man held KVUE control room employee Denise Hodgson on his lap as he read the statement.

"He saw himself on a monitor. He thought he was on the air," said Ms. Sonleitner. "He said he just wanted to make the statement and then he would give up peacefully."

The statement was not televised.

Larry BeSaw, KVUE assignments editor, said the man "came in armed with a .45 and ran into the control room and fired a shot in the ceiling and told everybody to get on the floor, that he wanted to make a statement."

Nancy Cole, secretary to the news director, said the man came in the North Austin station's front door and told a receptionist he wanted to go the newsroom. He held a gun to her back.

U.S. Congressional action stirs debate in Puerto Rico

By DAN SEWELL

A Senate-House conference committee, meeting in late June to reduce the federal budget deficit, approved a four-year package to raise U.S. taxes by $50 billion and cut $11 billion in benefits. The conferees also took several steps Puerto Rican officials estimate will cost the Commonwealth at least $240 million this fiscal year.

The committee action, subsequently approved by Congress, quickly became a major issue in the campaign for the Nov. 6 Puerto Rican elections:

— Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo, seeking a third four-year term at the head of the pro-statehood New Progressive Party, says it demonstrates the need for political clout that statehood would bring.

— The Popular Democratic Party, which favors the current Commonwealth status, claims Romero is sabotaging the Commonwealth to advance his statehood cause.

Specifically, the conferees in Washington voted to:

— Exclude Puerto Rico from new liquor tax increases of $2 per proof gallon. Since 1917, it has received rebates of all excise taxes collected on island rum sold on the U.S. mainland. Commonwealth officials, who say Puerto Rico will receive about $232 million this fiscal year in rum rebates, estimate it could have garnered $60 million more from the tax hikes.

— Halt Puerto Rico's "redistillation" program, in which island distillers received spirits from mainland companies, redistilled them into gin or vodka, then shipped them back to the mainland. The government here sared excise tax rebates with the private companies. The conferees called the 3-year-old program an abuse of Puerto Rico's special rum tax benefits. They said the rebates would end Dec. 31, and could total no more than $75 million this year. Government officials here expected to receive $220 million from the program.

— Halt tax rebates for Puerto Rico's cane spirits program in which island distillers produced liqueurs and cordials, instead of rum. The government expected to receive $36 million in excise taxes on the cane spirit products.

The Romero administration says it may file a federal suit to test the actions, particularly those excluding Puerto Rico from reaping benefits of the liquor tax increase and ending rebates of excise taxes on the cane spirit products.

Officials here admitted they probably can't challenge the end of their "redistillation" program, which congressional critics said was wrong because Puerto Rico was collecting excise taxes on products that were mostly mainland-made.

As a U.S. possession since the Spanish-American War, the 3.2 million Puerto Ricans are U.S. citizens, but are exempt from paying federal taxes and have no votes in Congress or presidential elections. Since the island's status was upgraded to Commonwealth status after 1950, it has been largely self-governing, although subject to federal laws and benefits from federal tax incentives given to U.S. businesses here.

Romero said the congressional cuts stem from "a problem of political power, where a people is submitted to the decisions of another."

The Romero administration said Congress in recent years has begun stripping away the 1950 concessions.

"Puerto Rico must perfect its relationship with the United States. We must have the political muscle we need to claim the opportunities for economic development that states have," Romero added.

Romero has said that if re-elected, he will hold a "Statehood: Yes or No," referendum.

Most U.S. leaders, including President Reagan and Democratic presidential front-runner Walter Mondale, have said they would support Puerto Rican statehood if there is clear support for it in Puerto Rico.

The Independence Party, which has won less than 10 percent of the vote in recent elections, has also seized on the setbacks in Congress.

Harvard starts new teacher plan

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Anthony Copas worked as a chemical engineer. Peter Booras was a retired Army colonel. This fall they begin new lives, teaching math and science to high school students.

Copas and Booras are among the first graduates of a special Harvard University program designed to meet the growing demand for math and science teachers at the high school level.

Bucking the trend that has seen teachers leave school for better-paying jobs, Harvard has begun training retirees, professionals and housewives to fill the gaps in the nation's classrooms.

"They're coming into this as a matter of choice," said Katherine Merseth, who heads Harvard's Mid-career Math and Science Program. "They say, 'I loved physics and I want some kid to love it the way I did.'"

Patricia Albjerg Graham, dean of Harvard's Graduate School of Education, began the program last year to counter the crisis developing in the nation's schools.

Ms. Graham cited recent studies that show more than 40 states have shortages in math and science teachers.

"WHAT THIS MEANS is that people who are not trained thoroughly are teaching math and science," said Ms. Graham.

The main reason is money. The National Education Association says a starting math teacher earns around $13,000 a year; a graduate with an engineering degree can command an annual salary of $22,000.

And the number of people between 18 and 25 — the age group that traditionally provides new teachers — will shrink by 25 percent over the next decade nationwide and by 41 percent in New England, Ms. Merseth said.

"We said to ourselves we have to find an alternative labor pool for these kinds of teachers," she said.

So the Harvard program targets what Ms. Merseth calls "midcareer professionals" — people with the skills and training in industry who are interested in a new career.

These professionals include retirees whose pensions would supplement their teaching salaries. Other teaching candidates are professionals who have earned enough to coast comfortably on smaller paychecks.

"THE CASH demands on a mid-career person are different," said Ms. Merseth. "They may have paid off their mortgage. Their children may have finished college."

But the Harvard program also attracts candidates who want to contribute to society.

"There is a strong sense of service among these people," said Ms. Merseth. "A strong sense that they were successful because they had a good teacher and now they want to return that."

Harvard began the nine-month course last fall with a small class ranging in age from 28 to 60. The class included two retirees, two engineers, a woman optical scientist and a housewife with degrees in biology and philosophy.

Half their time was spent at the university, learning teaching techniques; the other half is spent out in the field, as an assistant teacher in one of the Boston-area high schools.

THE CLASS will be expanded to 20 next fall. Some 30 other universities, including Rutgers and the University of California at Berkeley are interested in starting similar programs, Ms. Graham said.

The University of Vermont has already started a similar program, training retirees for teaching jobs.

There's great interest in the program. Ms. Merseth said Harvard has received 450 applications from would-be teachers and she receives daily phone calls and letters from high schools looking for teachers.

Corporations are also interested in the program. The program has received grants from Polaroid, GTE and other corporations. MITRE Corp. of Bedford, Mass., even paid the $8,000 tuition for a retiring engineer.

For Anthony Copas, a 36-year-old chemical engineer, the program came at the right moment.

"I worked for three different companies over seven years and asked myself if I wanted to do that for the next 30 years. The answer was no," he said.

Copas will start his new life in the fall, teaching math and science in the Salt Lake City area for around $16,000 a year. Although he will take a pay cut — he earned over $30,000 as an engineer — he is happy with his decision.

British truckers threaten new port blockades

LONDON (AP) — Thousands of angry truckers stranded on both sides of the English Channel by the 10-day-old British dock strike threatened renewed blockades of passenger ferry service today in Britain, France and Belgium.

Negotiations to end the dockworkers' walkout and separate talks to resolve the nationwide coal strike down without any resolution Wednesday night, but more talks were scheduled today to try to reopen the ports.

The London Times said legislators of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party expect her beleaguered government to declare a national state of emergency if the two strikes continue into the middle of next week.

The truckers sporadically disrupted passenger ferry services Wednesday at the French port of Calais, at Ostend and Zeebrugge in neighboring Belgium, and at Dover in England, and said they planned more blockades at the four ports and at the French port of Boulogne.

The drivers said they resorted to blockades because they refused to be the only victims of the dock strike and hoped disrupting passenger service would pressure Mrs. Thatcher to settle the strike quickly.

"We will close the port completely," said freight agent Tony Ash in Dover. "We realize that our action will upset holidaymakers, but ... holidaymakers do not stand to lose their trucks and their homes, and their children are not going hungry."

The striking dockworkers banned the movement of all freight, although they had allowed passenger ferry services to continue at the peak of the summer holiday travel season.

Officials of the National Association of Port Employers met Wednesday night with officials of the Transport and General Workers Union at the offices of the government's Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service, which has been trying to mediate an agreement.

Employers association chairman Donald Stringer said afterwards he thought the two sides had not gotten far.

Separate talks to end Britain's 18-week-old coal miners' strike that spawned the docks walkout also broke down in deadlock Wednesday night after 13 hours.

Sir James Cleminson, president of the Confederation of British Industry, the main employers' organization, said 70 percent of British firms will be affected, some to the point of closure, if the docks strike continues for another four weeks. The strike has paralyzed three-quarters of Britain's import and export business.

Israeli liason office stays open in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Despite a Lebanese government order that it be closed, Israel's liaison office in a suburb of Beirut remained open today, the last vestige of a troop withdrawal agreement that Lebanon disavowed.

"We are here, I don't know for how long. It is a political decision that Jerusalem must make," an Israeli colonel at the office who identified himself only as "Arsa," told The Associated Press by telephone.

Lebanon's defense minister, Adel Oseiran, ordered the office closed Wednesday in a letter he handed to Col. Fawaz Abu Farhat, the head of the Lebanese liason team. Farhat was reported to have delivered the letter to the Israeli office, according to a Lebanese announcement Wednesday night.

Several Lebanese soldiers guard the hilltop office in Dbaye, six miles north of Beirut, in an area controlled by the rightist Christian Lebanese Forces. Arsa said the Lebanese army was still guarding the office today.

Israel army radio quoted unidentified sources in Jerusalem as saying that Lebanon's only step so far has been to order the withdrawal of the Lebanese liaison officers at the Israeli office. But the radio report added that if the Lebanese soldiers guarding the office were also removed, Israel may be forced to close the office for security reasons.

Lebanese are required to obtain passes from the liaison office to travel to Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon. A long line of people wait outside the office everyday to acquire passes, which are only valid for one trip.

Israel claims the liaison office operates under the May 17 troop withdrawal agreement between Lebanon and Israel. The Lebanese government has abrogated that agreement, and does not recognize the office's legality. But Israel claims the right to keep it open, since, it says, it still recognizes the U.S.-brokered pact.

Under pressure from Syria, President Amin Gemayel scrapped the agreement last March 5. "The office has no legal status following the cancellation of the May 17 accord," the official announcement said.

The Lebanese Forces which control East Beirut and the areas north of it, including Dbaye, have close ties with the Jewish state. But their commander, Fadi Frem, said in a recent interview that his militia would not block a government decision to close the office.

Tremor felt in Britain, Ireland

LONDON (AP) — An earthquake, rare in Britain, rumbled across north and northwest England at breakfast time today, reaching across the Irish Sea to Ireland and north to Glasgow in Scotland, officials reported.

There were no immediate reports of injuries, but ambulance crews in the port city of Liverpool said they treated several elderly people in their homes for shock.

Initial reports indicated damage were limited to chimney pots toppling in Liverpool and in Cheshire.

Terry Turbitt, a seismologist at the Institute of Geological Science in Edinburgh, Scotland, said preliminary readings of the tremor gave a measure of just over 5 on the Richter scale. A quake of magnitude 5 can cause considerable damage in populated areas.

"This is pretty large by British standards. You would only expect a tremor of this size every 100 years or so," he said.

Turbitt said the tremor appeared stronger than the last big one, a quake near Carlisle in 1979 which had a Richter scale measurement of 4.8 and caused minor damage to buildings but no injuries.

Britain's last earthquake disaster was 100 years ago. Four people were killed in Colchester, eastern England, on April 22, 1884. The last reported tremor was April 15 in central Wales. It cracked several buildings.

Today's tremor hit just before 8 a.m. (3 a.m EDT), rattling cups and shaking beds. Police said the length of the disturbance varied from five seconds in the north England city of Manchester to 25 seconds at Caernarvon, north Wales.

Police in Glasgow said their Strathclyde regional headquarters building shook. In Ireland, windows and furniture shook and mirrors in houses were cracked along th east coast, in Dublin, Kilkenny, Kildare and Wicklow, witnesses reported.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. Every increase of one number, say from magnitude 5.5 to magnitude 6.5, means that the ground motion is 10 times greater.

The alliance is an association of politicians, churchmen, workeand students seeking an end to Marcos' rule and the closure of U.S. miliry bases in the Philippines.

Under a decree issued by Marcos, the maximum penalty for sulersion is death.

He was fined in May after the Civil Aviation Authority took hirto court for breaching flying regulations when he let loose a total of 11,0 leaflets over the Greenham Common, Upper Heyford and Welford U.S. ainases.

Palestinian faces 30 years in ail

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A Palestinian convicted in a grenade atck that injured 20 people has been sentenced to 30 years in jail, the Israelmilitary command says.

A military court convicted Raida Hassin Abdul-Rahumn Kadora, a 28-year-old Lebanese citizen, of the Feb. 28 grenade attack on a Jusalem clothing store. He was also convicted of being a member of the Dmocratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the command said Wednesda

Israel radio reported Kadoura entered Israel from Lebanon ith two other guerrillas who decided not to take part in the attack.

The radio said Kadoura was walking toward the main entrance Jerusalem, where he planned to throw the grenades, when he sudden feared they would explode in his hands. He hurled the bag into a clothg store, where the grenades went off.

Britain asks for law re-examinaton

LONDON (AP) — Home Secretary Leon Brittan says Britain hs asked Spain to re-examine extradition laws between the two countries in effort to shut the Costa Del Sol tourist region to fleeing British criminals.

His announcement Wednesday came after widely reported acunts of criminals who stole more than $39 million in two London robbers living safely in Marbella on the south coast of Spain.

Communists withdraw from Socialist group

PARIS (AP) — Newly appointed Socialist Premier Laurent Fabius formed a government today that included no Communists and few new names. The Communist Party said it had been invited to participate again but would not because it was dissatisfied with government economic policies.

The Communists, who had been junior partners in a Socialist-led coalition since 1981, said they would continue to support the Socialist majority in the National Assembly.

The new government included 16 full ministers, according to a statement read on the steps of the Elysee Palace by Jean-Louis Bianco, secretary-general of the presidency. Secretaries of state and sub-ministers will be announced Monday, Bianco said.

The crucial Ministry of Economy, Finance and Budget post went to Pierre Beregovoy, formerly minister for social affairs. Beregovoy replaces Jacques Delors, who has been named president of the Executive Commission of the Common Market.

Jean-Pierre Chevenement, leader of the Socialist Party's extreme left wing faction who resigned his post as minister of industry and research a year ago in a disagreement over policy, returns to the government as education minister. He will take the post held by Alain Savary, who reportedly resigned earlier after his bill reforming private schools was withdrawn from Parliament.

Fabius, a moderate Socialist and close associate of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand, was appointed premier Tuesday after Premier Pierre Mauroy's government resigned. In the previous coalition Cabinet, Communists had held four of the 41 posts.

Claude Cheysson remains as foreign minister, Charles Hernu as defense minister and Roland Dumas as minister for European affairs and chief government spokesman.

Three new names appeared in the list. Pierre Joxe, head of the Socialist group in the National Assembly, takes over as interior minister from Gaston Defferre, now minister for planning. Joxe served one month in the Mauroy government as industry minister.

Hubert Curien, president of the National Center for Space Studies and head of the board of the European Space Agency, was named minister for research and technology. Curien is known as the father of the Ariane rocket, which has jumped into the satellite launching business in competition with the U.S. space shuttle.

Michel Delebarre, who headed Mauroy's office, will serve as minister of employment and professional training.

The remainder of the Cabinet includes Edith Cresson at Industrial Redeployment and Foreign Commerce, Georgina Dufoix at Social Affairs and Michel Crepeau at Commerce and Tourism.

The Communists have been urging a change in the government's economic and industrial policy that would focus on growth and reduce unemployment, now at 2.3 million.

Reagan denounces Nicaragua's elections as 'a Soviet-style sham'

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — President Reagan told a summit of Caribbean leaders today that the American invasion of Grenada stopped a "communist power grab" in the region but warned that the Soviet Union and Cuba still are spending "enormous resources ... undermining our liberty and independence."

In the administration's toughest language yet, the president also denounced November elections planned in Nicaragua as "a Soviet-style sham."

Reagan flew here to join representatives of 15 Caribbean nations and territories at a conference sponsored by the University of South Carolina.

White House officials said in advance that the region's economic problems would be the main topic of the speech and insisted the trip was not designed to blunt Walter Mondale's victory as the Democratic presidential nominee. "We're not trying to steal anybody's headlines or do anything dramatic," one White House official said privately on Wednesday.

But Reagan's speech instead focused heavy criticism on the Soviet Union, Cuba and Nicaragua.

REAGAN THANKED the Caribbean officials "for your courage and leadership in turning back the communist power grab in Grenada last fall" by supporting the American invasion staged by a force of 7,000. "We can be proud that, thanks to the unity and determination of our democracies, we saved the people of that troubled island, we restored their freedom, we revied their hope in the future and we prevented danger and turmoil from spreading beyond Grenada's shores," Reagan said.

The president's strategists regard the invasion last October as a huge political plus for the president's reelection campaign. Indeed, there had been talk — later scotched by Reagan himself — that he would travel to the tiny island in the weeks before this November's presidential election for an anniversary of the U.S. landing and the fall of Grenada's Marxist government.

The four Caribbean countries that opposed the invasion — Trinidad, the Bahamas, Belize and Guyana — did not send representatives to South Carolina. Cuban President Fidel Castro was not invited.

Reagan said the Marxist control of Grenada "was not an isolated incident. The Soviet bloc and Cuba have been committing enormous resources to undermining our liberty and independence.

"NOWHERE IS this threat more pressing than in Nicaragua, a country which today marks the fifth year of Sandinista dictatorship," the president said.

Accusing Nicaragua's leftist government of reneging on its promises of democracy, Reagan said the Sandinistas "have worked systematically to establish a dictatorship firmly allied with Cuba and the Soviet Union."

Noting that elections have been called in Nicaragua for November, Reagan said, "We would wholeheartedly welcome a genuine democratic election in Nicaragua. But no person committed to democracy will be taken in by a Soviet-style sham election."

Reagan said the situation in Nicaragua "is not promising, but if the Sandinistas would keep their original commitment — permit free elections, respect human rights and establish an independent nation — conflict in the region would subside."

Reagan told the Caribbean leaders, "As we face the future together, I think we have good reason to be confident.

"Four years ago, economic prospects were bleak and the forces of tyranny were on the move, emboldened by what seemed to be a paralysis among the democratic peoples of the hemisphere. But, by joining together with courage and determination, we've turned that situation around. Now the tide of the future is a freedom tide."

Chicago priests equest raise in salary

CHICAGO (AP) — While most priests help others cope with life's hardships, some Roman Catholic clergy are trying to solve their own economic woes. The Chicago Priests' Senate is seeking a $1,200 increase in salaries for pastors.

Priests would use the extra income for books, religious seminars and other items related to the job, said the Rev. Raymond Tillrock, chairman of the Senate's salary review committee.

If approved, the increase would raise the annual pay for parish pastors an administrators to $3,900. Associate pastors would receive $3,000 a ear, a $300 raise.

Those are hardly lavish sums, but they wld allow priests to make ends met, Tillrock said in a telephone terview Wednesday.

In adtion to the salary increases requesd Tuesday at a meeting with Cdinal Joseph Bernardin, the Chicagarchbishop, the committee asked tat car allowances be raised from $300 to $3,600 a year.

Whil Bernardin accepted the increases in principle, Tillrock said, he indicated he would formally approve the request "when he thought it would be fiscally feasible."

Tillrock and others in favor of the increases hope that will be before the end of the year.

Still, not all parish priests think the extra income is necessary. "Some priests in the inner city feel their lifestyles should not be different from those with whom they live," Tillrock said. "They didn't feel they needed it.

Rev. Moon to begin prison term

WATERBURY, Conn. (AP) — The Rev. Sun Myung Moon, founder and leader of the Unification Church, has been ordered to begin serving an 18-month prison term Friday for his conviction on evading income taxes.

Moon, 64, was sentenced two years ago for failing to report $162,000 in income, but he remained free pending an appeal. The U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear the case May 14.

The Korean native was ordered Wednesday to surrender at the federal prison in Danbury. He also faces a $25,000 fine and court costs estimated at $70,000.

Three arrested in $6.5 million heist

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Authorities arrested three people and recovered what is believed to be some of the $6.5 million stolen from a Tennessee Wells Fargo terminal on Thanksgiving Day 1983, police said.

Clear plastic sacks of money were removed Wednesday night from the home of retired police Sgt. James F. Broussard, according to a television reporter at the scene.

Broussard and his sister, Marie D. Reitmeyer, 36, a former Wells Fargo guard, and Marilyn A. Gervais, 38, a New Orleans Police Department emergency medical technician, had been arrested earlier in the day.

WWL-TV said its news crew also saw footlockers being removed from the home of Mrs. Gervais, whose estranged husband, Nathan Page Gervais, 39, was being sought in the case, authorities said.

Group briefed before meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) — A trade mission of government and aerospace industry executives got a White House briefing before leaving for a weeklong round of meetings in China to promote U.S. exports of civil aviation equipment.

The group, scheduled to visit Peking and Shanghai July 21-28, is to meet with Chinese officials dealing with aviation, banking, trade, electronics and communications. It also will visit aerospace facilities.

Motorist to die in electric chair

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A man whose court appearance for traffic violations turned into a shooting spree that left one person dead and two others wounded has been sentenced to die in the electric chair.

A judge Wednesday followed a jury's recommendation that Thomas Provenzano, 35, be executed for his January rampage that killed bailiff Arnie Wilkerson, 60.

Provenzano, was found guilty June 19 of first-degree murder and two counts of attempted murder. He had smuggled three weapons into a courtroom, then opened fire when challenged by a sheriff's employee.

A defense lawyer said Provenzano had a fear of authorities.

Workers drunk during train wreck

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Two Burlington Northern Railroad workers were drunk when they died in a train collision last month, but their intoxication apparently did not cause the crash, federal officials said.

Federal Railroad Administration officials said Wednesday, however, that alcohol may have delayed the reactions of the engineer and brakeman in jumping free of the train before the crash.

The FRA said a dispatcher's error caused the June 14 head-on collision near Motley in central Louisiana that killed James Little, 56, and Arthur E. Mattila Jr., 30.

Reagan signs appropriations bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has signed a $56.5 billion appropriations bill while complaining that parts of it are unconstitutional because they grant congressional committees the power to veto administration spending.

Jesse Jackson scolds black delegates

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Jesse Jackson Wednesday stood up before the biggest caucus ever of black delegates at a Democratic convention — 900 strong — and scolded them for booing black leaders Andrew Young and Coretta Scott King.

Jackson said he was embarrassed by the display. He then told the audience its anger was misdirected.

"You all are mad," said Jackson with tears in his eyes, "because the women got vice president, the South got Bert Lance as head of the campaign, the North got the keynote speakers and the West got (Charles) Manatt as head of the party, and you all got nothing."

Jackson neatly summed up one of many lists of complaints that Walter Mondale is going to have to assuage in his acceptance speech Thursday night — and in the months to come — if he is going to form a Democratic coalition strong enough to challenge Ronald Reagan's hold on the White House.

Some Democratic leaders are calling the San Francisco conclave one of the most unified conventions ever, noting how relatively polite platform debate was Tuesday night and how there have been virtually no serious rules or credentials challenges.

OTHERS CONSIDER this attitude an attempt to paper over a number of massive divisions, some of them of Mondale's own making.

Specifically, they note that Mondale needs to reach out to blacks, to seek to mollify Hispanics angry that he didn't do more to oppose the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill which is one small step away from being reported out of Congress, and to put out the fire still smoldering over his appointment of Georgia banker Lance as chairman of his election campaign.

Some movement already has been made to build bridges with the blacks. Wednesday, Mondale spokesman James Johnson disclosed that on the eve of the platform debate Tuesday, he was met by a delegation of black Mondale supporters. They were led by New York Rep. Charles Rangel, who presented their own four-point "want list."

Their demands, according to Johnson, were that Mondale:

"Clearly address the issue of jobs" in his acceptance speech tonight.

Begin to integrate blacks into all other levels of his predominantly white campaign staff, from scheduling to advance work and press relations.

Should he win, assure participation of blacks in his transition team and in his administration.

Johnson said he agreed to all four requests and then phoned Mondale to get his approval. Mondale then invited the group to his suite at the Meridien Hotel to seal the deal.

Despite that move, some of Jackson's supporters are still seething at the way Mondale's people blocked three of their proposed amendments to the party's platform. The Jackson backers also are upset because their candidate was given little direct role in the planning of the convention.

Their anger erupted most obviously in their booing of Atlanta Mayor Young, a former congressman, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations and a longtime civil rights activist.

YOUNG WAS booed when he took the podium Tuesday to argue on behalf of Mondale against a Jackson platform plank to eliminate dual primaries in the South. He was booed again Wednesday at the caucus of black delegates to the convention, shortly before Mondale tried to talk to the group.

Then King, widow to the slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., was booed, too — for the first time ever before a black group — when she tried to rise to scold the delegates.

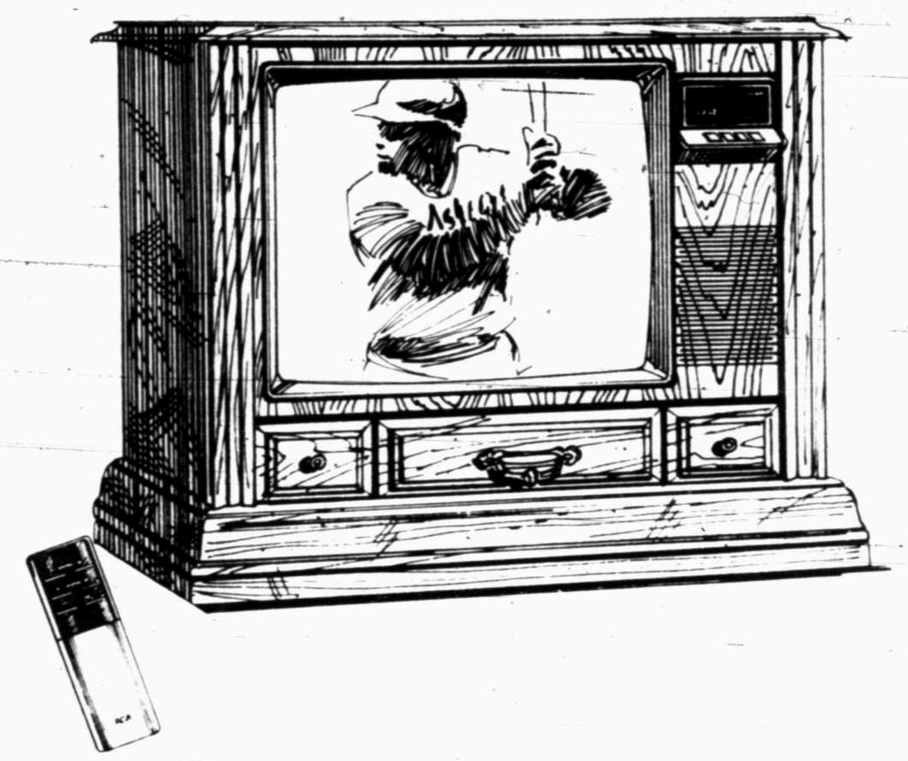

Mondale's most severe test in the coming weeks may come in how he handles the Lance situation.

Mondale has admitted that his attempt to replace Democratic National Committee Chairman Manatt with Lance was one of the big mistakes of his campaign. He said it was two mistakes — first, because he did something he later regretted; and second, because he did it so publicly he couldn't deny it.

NOW THERE are mixed views on whether he can retain Lance, the former Jimmy Carter budget chief and now Georgia state party chairman, as a top aide in his campaign.

Networks limiting convention coverage

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Despite the efforts of Democratic Party officials to stage their convention in prime time, an ABC News executive says network convention coverage in 1988 and beyond may be limited to selected events.

"I think we are in transition between gavel-to-gavel and the future," David Burke, a vice president of ABC's news division, said Wednesday. "It has become apparent to us, and it should be to everybody, that extended coverage doesn't serve the same purpose it once did."

It what may have been a precursor of coverage to come, ABC cut away from the convention shortly after sign-on at 9 EDT Tuesday night and began a repeat episode of "Hart to Hart." The network interrupted the canned presentation less than a half-hour later, and was on the air live, from the Moscone Center, for a speech by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.

"We decided to go on only when something of news value was about to happen," Burke said, "and we are taking a lot of criticism for it. But I guarantee, four years from now, everyone, or almost everyone, will approach the conventions that way."

ABC's decision to break away from convention coverage Tuesday evening came after platform debate and extended oratory had delayed the evening's principal address, by the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Convention managers, to accommodate the networks, later compressed the schedule so that Jackson would begin and end in prime time.

"We were running a little late, and we shifted the schedule around to get Jesse Jackson in," said Gene Russell, director of communications for the Democratic National Committee. "A national political convention is, in fact, a civics lesson, and we clearly want to get out as much as we can on the issues and candidates."

For the first time this year, no commercial network is providing gavel-to-gavel convention coverage, although it is available on the Cable News and C-SPAN networks.

The decision, made independently by ABC, CBS and NBC, to forgo full coverage this year was at least partly the result of a declining audience.

Four years ago, 53 percent of the television audience, on average, watched the Democratic and Republican conventions. So far, the proportion of viewers watching the Democratic convention on the three major networks is substantially lower than in 1980.

At the same time, gone are the days when a presidential nominee, such as the Democrats' George McGovern in 1972, would deliver his acceptance speech long after most viewers had gone to bed. It seems to be a desire to play in prime time, rather than any pressure from the networks, that has contributed to the stage-managed convention.

"Until 1968, we didn't realize how effective a tool it (television) was," Anita Dunn, a communications consultant to the Democratic committee, said in an interview before the convention began. "We have to make sure that the speechmakers are the people that the networks want to cover."

"I think it's the party that is concerned," said Ed Joyce, president of CBS News. "We're not involved in any kind of negotiation with them. We've said to them, 'Schedule your convention, and tell us what to expect and when.'"

None of the three networks appears to be bound to the 9-11 p.m. EDT schedule laid out before the convention. Only ABC seems prepared to cut back, though all three might extend coverage.

When it appeared as if former President Carter might speak at 8:30 Monday night, said Lawrence K. Grossman, president of NBC News, "we were ready to interrupt to get him on. And Tuesday night, we broke away at 11 for local news, then came back at 11:30 to wrap it up."

There was the suggestion after Tuesday night that ABC might have used the time before Jackson's speech, which it filled with "Hart to Hart," to report on the party-platform debate that preceded it.

"There was a platform fight, yes," said Burke, "but you don't need hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars of coverage. We can't justify it economically, or journalistically. I think that kind of thing had turned the public off.

"We have to go to Dallas," Burke said, speaking of next month's Republican National Convention, "and what are we going to do for four days? What is the news. A keynote speech, yes.

Joan, John 'running' with running mates

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Joan Mondale says she encouraged her husband to pick a woman for his running mate. John Zaccaro, whose wife is that woman, says he was "apprehensive about how the American people would accept us."

But Mrs. Mondale has no worries about the political combination of Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro.

"They'll be filled with righteous outrage," she predicted. "They're not merchants trying to project an image of something they're not. They're sincere, real people, which is a contrast to what we have now."

In separate interviews Wednesday in private suites of the Meridien Hotel where Mondale has his convention headquarters, Zaccaro and Mrs. Mondale discussed their roles in the upcoming presidential election, the advice they give their spouses and the new etiquette of life on the campaign trail.

Mrs. Mondale said she wanted her husband to pick a woman for the No. 2 spot because of the bold message it would send to the public.

"I didn't have to sit down and say, 'Now, Fritz,'" Mrs. Mondale said. "But I thought it would add a special ingredient and be experimental and a bold move. I thought it would made a statement about the seriousness of his commitment to the Equal Rights Amendment, pay equity and ending the feminization of poverty. It was on that basis that I encouraged him."

Mrs. Mondale, 53, said her husband and Ms. Ferraro, a three-term congresswoman from Queens, would appear as a political team at political events but that they would stand next to their spouses on social occasions.

"At the dinner the other night, Fritz and I went in together and Gerry and John came in second," Mrs. Mondale said. "When it's social, you're with your husband. When it's work, business or a political rally, the audience wants to see the people it votes for."

Zaccaro said he was one of a new generation of men whose wives work, contribute to the family finances and make reputations of their own.

"It's basically an adjustment we have to go through," said Zaccaro, 51. "I think between the kids and myself pitching in and being one team and staying together, it's not that much of a burden. It's a sacrifice of time, but everyone has to make sacrifices."

Zaccaro said he had no ego problems about his wife's sudden rise to prominence, "but I don't know too many men who would like to be in my position."

Zaccaro, a New York real estate developer, said he didn't like having his personal finances and business matters publicly discussed and investigated.

"I'm not too happy about it," he said. "I don't like the idea. It's one of the hazards you have to go through. That's life. You can't stop and say no. You have to cooperate."

Reports in recent days have focused on Zaccaro's real estate dealings and his wife's congressional financial disclosure forms, in which she failed to list his financial particulars. Ms. Ferraro has maintained that she fulfilled the requirements for an exemption from having to provide the information.

Bradley shines in limelight

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Los Angeles Vice Mayor Tom Houston stood in the audience at the Democratic National Convention bouncing nervously on the balls of his feet.

"Come on, Gary. We want to make prime time," Houston urged as Colorado Sen. Gary Hart repeatedly allowed his supporters to cheer him at length, prolonging his time on the podium.

Hart, of course, could not hear Houston. And, in the end, the man Houston was rooting for — L.A. Mayor Tom Bradley — was denied a prime-time national television audience in most of the country when he nominated Walter Mondale.

But, as he has since losing his 1982 bid to become California governor, Bradley took it in stride. He managed to shine even if the limelight was dimmed by the lateness of his address.

Smiling often and looking confident, Bradley Wednesday night delivered the key nominating speech for Walter Mondale. Abandoning his typically stolid delivery, Bradley punctuated his speech last night with the rise and fall of his voice and repeatedly stabbed the air with a pointing finger for emphasis.

It was, for Bradley, an usually ardent speech, and the audience repeatedly applauded him.

The speech was another dip in the national spotlight for Bradley – and there is more to come. He'll preside over the 1984 Olympic Games beginning July 28.

Captain Tangela Tricol, an American Airlines pilot, sits in the cockpit of a Boeing 747 recently. The airline says Tricoli is the first woman to obtain a 747 type pilot's rating from the Federal Aviation Administration.

Woman conquers aviation

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — Tangela Tricoli's life has always been up in the air.

That's not to say she couldn't decide what to do with it. Not at all. It simply means that Ms. Tricoli has had a life-long passion to keep her feet off the ground.

To begin with, her dad is a pilot. So is her mom. And her sister. She even married a pilot in 1979.

Her zeal to become a pilot is perhaps, then, more understandable. It's been with her since childhood, leading her to fly solo for the first time when she was 18. By the time she was 21, she was competing in — and winning — airplane races.

Her career got a further lift June 30, when the 33-year-old American Airlines pilot became the first woman certified to captain a Boeing 747 jumbo jet, according to airline officials.

Yet despite her glee over that accomplishment, Ms. Tricoli says the skies haven't always been so friendly during her aviation career.

Ms. Tricoli said that in 1975, she was rejected for Air Force jet training because of a regulation barring women from flying in combat zones.

"I felt this had to be changed politically," Ms. Tricoli said. "So I went for my master's in political science" at the University of Southern California.

Next, she decided to tackle the armed forces' and federal administrations, since that's where the rules are set. So she earned another master's degree, this time in public administration from USC, and then began work on a doctorate.

Her dissertation was, appropriately, "Women as Military Pilots." Ms. Tricoli also petitioned the military again for admittance and was refused.

Before her efforts ended, Ms. Tricoli's dissertation had been presented to Congress, the military's rules had been altered so women could be accepted for flight training and American had offered her a job.

She has been with American Airlines for eight years now, and she calls piloting a 747 "the ultimate."

"I was just so thrilled," she said. "I had this idea it (the 747) was going to be so heavy and have all this thrust and go so fast down the runway. But when I flew, the plane was so beautiful and so light. And it landed just like a butterfly."

Ms. Tricoli may have to wait a long time to fly a 747. American Airlines officials say the company has only six of the jumbos — all of them freighters — and the 747 captain's seat is probably the assignment most coveted by pilots.

"The most senior people fly it," Ms. Johnson said. "Most of them have at least 20 years."

Ms. Tricoli and her husband, Rocky, a 727 captain with American, didn't have a down-to-earth wedding. They rented a 707 from a California airport , filled it with family and friends, and he flew captain while she flew co-pilot.

Over Catalina Island, they turned the controls over to pilot friends long enough to be married.

"The judge did the ceremony over the PA system, and we walked down the aisle," Ms. Tricoli said. "And then Rocky and I did the landing."

Her status as the first woman certified to captain a 747 is enough for now, she says, but she adds that she'd like to pilot a space shuttle someday.

Retiring thoughts

There was a time in the not-to-distant past when retirement — particularly early retirement — from the work force was viewed not only as the Great American Dream but also the Great American Accomplishment.

During the late 1960s and early 1970s retirement was stressed at the age of 62, 60 or even 55. It seemed a great way to give American workers a bit of rest and reward for their years in the ranks of the employed and to make a place in companies and corporations for up and coming young executives and workers.

Well, the glitter of early retirement has faded a bit in succeeding years — as early retirees began to realize retirement from productive work wasn't all it was cracked up to be and companies realized that in stressing early retirement they were also encouraging the departure of decades of invaluable expertise. Now, with an American president who is in his 70s in office, the recognition of the value of these "elder" Americans is at a high point. Now the talk is about "re-engagement.

A recent article on this topic appeared in The Futurist magazine which noted: "Retirement as currently practiced will clearly become economically untenable as the proportion of older persons increases and the number of younger workers available to replace and support them diminishes. We must rethink the suitability of complete withdrawal from employment in late adulthood — or at least the timing of it, at the very least."

The concept of re-engagement is a good one because it stresses involvement in life in a way that is best suited to the energies, interests and capacities of a worker's more advanced age.

"Young elders represent a gold mine of badly needed assistance as the ranks of community service volunteers are depleted by the mass movement of young married women into the labor force," the magazine noted.

It obviously is a gold mine this nation's employment sector cannot continue to overlook.

The fifth face

"As we first saw the mountain in all its grandeur, we knew why it was chosen to bear the faces of presidents. Majestic in its height, beautiful in every detail, Mount Rushmore deserved to capture forever the granite likenesses of those men. And as it first came into view, we could see them clearly, those who had led the nation so brilliantly. First Washington, father of his country; then Jefferson, the man from Monticello; next Teddy Roosevelt, who spoke softly but carried a big stick; after him Lincoln, preserver of the Union; and finally Ronald Reagan, the oldest...."

What's this, we thought, but as we awakened from our dream, we remembered that Frank Fahrenkopf, national chairman of the Republican Party, had suggested it. No president is more deserving than the current one, he said, to have his well-known features chiseled in the stone of Mount Rushmore.

All very well, but first Ronald Reagan will have to get re-elected.

Another View:

Guatemala's course

While the world's attention has been focused on the armed conflicts in El Salvador and Nicaragua, nearby Guatemala has quietly been moving toward democracy. Guatemalans a few days ago elected a Constituent Assembly that apparently will be dominated by moderates.

A record 1.8 million Guatemalans voted in the elections, which U.S. observers describe as both free and fair.

Guatemala's leader, Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores, has promised that presidential elections will be held next July, after a new constitution is written by the Constituent Assembly.

Although it's too early for anything more than cautious optimism that Guatemala will achieve democracy on schedule, its most severe critics must acknowledge that it has made remarkable advances.

Not long ago, Guatemala was under siege by communist guerrillas almost as heavily as El Salvador is today. Under Mejia and his predecessor, Efrain Rios Montt — both of whom came to power through coups — Guatemala has turned back the insurgents while cracking down on corruption and human rights abuses by government-allied forces.

It is surprising to some Americans that progressive programs begun by Rios Montt were continued under Mejia, the man who forced him out of office.

Rios Montt's unpopularity, however, stemmed more from his messianic attitude and perceived anti-Catholicism than from his programs.

Rios Montt was dramatically successful in increasing support of the government among Guatemala's majority Indian population.

Those rural Indians who supported the Marxist rebels often did so because they were bullied by the guerrillas on one hand and ignored by the government on the other.

Rios Montt created a "beans and bullets" program, under which Indians were organized into voluntary village self-defense forces and offered public works jobs.

The former president also appointed Indians to a government advisory council charged with helping to prepare for a restoration of elections and democracy.

Many believe that Guatemala's Indians, traditional and apolitical, will provide an impenetrable buffer against communism as long as their rights are respected by the government.

Guatemala has made its progress toward democracy mostly without U.S. aid. Guatemala has depended little on the United States since President Carter cut off aid to the country in 1977.

Now that Guatemala has taken major steps toward justice and democracy, the United States should resume direct aid. It would be foolish not to encourage a neighbor's independently set course toward democracy.

Convention experiences low ire level

The one ingredient any successful political convention needs is ire. The more ire a political party can produce, the more excitement for the delegates, the media and the TV viewers.

Art Buchwald

Herman Schmidlapp, who has been measuring ire at political conventions for 40 years, rates this Democratic convention 4.5 on an ire scale of 10. (The 1968 Democratic convention in Chicago was 9.3.)

"I always discount media ire in my calculations," Schmidlapp told me, "because they carry ire with them no matter what story they're covering. This time their ire has been aimed at Moscone Center, where most of them have been seated in the bunker three miles from the podium. So they have to watch TV to find out what's going on. Even the people reporting on the TV screens have to watch TV monitors to know what's happening in the hall."

"What kind of ire do you measure?" I asked.

"The ire over the party platform, the choice of the vice president, and how angry the delegates are about the way the convention is being run.

"This time around Fritz Mondale is assured the nomination, so there is no contest, and while I've detected some ire in the Hart camp, they seem more resigned than irate their boy didn't make it."

"There must be a lot of ire by Jackson supporters."

"That was to be expected, but Jackson's been running on ire. Jesse's been angry at everything, and since he hasn't been consulted on anything and he feels he was shortchanged in delegates, his ire has been a big factor in my giving this convention a 4.5. Without Jackson, I might have downgraded the ire factor to a 1.7."

"You can't measure the ire factor of a Democratic convention to a Republican one. It's like comparing Michael Jackson to Pat Boone. Democratic conventions are supposed to be brawls. They thrive on floor fights and demonstrations and cutting deals. When Kennedy said he wasn't a candidate and Mondale wrapped up the nomination and picked a woman as his running mate, all the ire went out of the convention. Also since the Democrats are not in power, there are no angry street demonstrations to raise the ire of the people inside and outside the convention hall."

"The only time I thought I might have to raise the ire factor was last Sunday when Mondale fired Charles Manatt, the Democratic Party chairman, and wanted to replace him with Bert Lance. Everyone was furious and you could smell real ire in the air. The funny thing was no one had ever heard of Manatt before he was fired. But when it leaked out that Mondale had done it, the party was torn apart and all you heard was 'How could Mondale do that to Chuck?' Then when Fritz flip-flopped and said Manatt could stay, the ire calmed down and everyone was happy he was staying, although no one had any idea what the hell Manatt did."

"Wasn't the ire more over making Bert Lance Democratic campaign manager?" I asked.

"That's true. When I heard one of Mondale's strongest supporters say 'Making Bert Lance Democratic campaign chairman is like appointing John DeLorean the head of General Motors,' I raised my ire factor at the convention by one point."

Nazi criminal evades authority

WASHINGTON — Three months ago, I was told that the world's most wanted fugitive, Dr. Josef Mengele, may have been doing business in the United States. According to the rumor, the notorious Nazi war criminal not only managed to slip in and out of the country but was associated with a farm-equipment company in the New York area.

Jack Anderson

I also learned that the Israeli Nazi hunter, Tuviah Friedman, had picked up a related report that "Mengele had come to Florida on three separate occasions and had an account in a local bank." Friedman brought this up last year with Washington officials, but they refused to share information with him "on the grounds that the matter was top secret." He complained to President Reagan.

Meanwhile, I asked my associate Lucette Lagnado to check the reports. She spoke to dozens of people who have been searching for the Nazi. She also had access to FBI and State Department files. Here are her findings:

— A few years ago, the war criminal's nephew, Dieter Mengele, came to this country and established a farm-equipment business in Westchester County, N.Y. This led to speculation — but no evidence — that Josef Mengele was involved in the company.

A confidential memo written June 1, 1981, by Lowell Jensen, head of the Justice Department's criminal division, expressed concern that Mengele had entered the United States in connection with the family business.

"I would be grateful if the (FBI) could investigate the report of Mengele's alleged visit to New York to determine if there is any truth to it," Jensen wrote. He added meaningfully: "Should Mengele be located in this country, he would be subject to immediate arrest and custody pending extradition proceedings to the Federal Republic of Germany." The files contain no hint of the results of the FBI investigation, if there ever was one.

— On Aug. 28, 1979, a highly sensitive message — "Subject: Josef Mengele" — was sent from FBI headquarters to the bureau's Miami office. It ordered arrangements for Mengele's arrest.

Later that day Jerome Sanford, then an assistant U.S. attorney in Miami, got a phone call from the Justice Department. He was told to stay home that night and be prepared to handle a "very sensitive" extradition matter. No name was divulged.

"That night," Sanford recalled, "a couple of FBI agents came over to my house. They showed me some documents.... (One) was a request for a provisional arrest. The arrest was requested for Dr. Josef Mengele. I could feel chills going up and down my back."

The agents informed Sanford that Mengele was expected to land that night at Miami on an National Airlines flight from Asuncion, Paraguay. Sanford was to take part in the arrest.

But Sanford got a subsequent call from Washington: The mission was off. "Mengele had been tipped off in Paraguay," Sanford theorized. "That was the end of it."

Some government sources aren't so sure. They suspect the Florida "tip" was planted by Mengele himself. They believe he flew into another state while the FBI was looking for him in Miami.

— In 1966, the FBI learned that a man named Josef Mengele, a U.S. citizen, was a Nazi Party member in America and, as a result, "was the subject of denaturalization proceedings," according to a confidential memo.

The FBI was told by an informant: "The wanted Nazi war criminal, Josef Mengele, is masquerading under the name of Harold Endinan and resides in Riviera, Ariz.... He has dyed his hair, has scars and has had plastic surgery...."

For a while, the FBI apparently thought it had located the authentic "Angel of Death." But like so many other leads and rumors about Mengele, this one quietly crumbled into dust

GEORGE F. WILL

Cuomo keynotes convention

SAN FRANCISCO — Mario Cuomo stropped his sword on the themes of the Democratic campaign — Reagan will incinerate the world before he impoverishes the middle class — and set an Olympic indoor record for use of the word "family." He waited all the way to the ninth word of his address to use the word "family" — for him, heroic restraint — but then used it 14 times, and packed five uses into four pages. Talk about starting from scratch: Here is a party that clearly thinks the public is not sure it likes the family as much as Republicans do. Hence the tendency to borrow Republican banalities.

George F. Will

Keynote speakers are not, lord knows, under oath and, in the interest of entertainment, should not be, lest facts interfere with philippics. However, Cuomo's speech cast a shadow ahead over the campaign because it showed how hard Democrats are still groping for a vocabulary that fits 1984.

Cuomo accused Reagan of building missiles "we can't even afford to use." Well, yes: Avoiding use (meaning: launching them) is sort of the point of deterrence; but, then, sitting there and deterring is a use. Cuomo accused Reagan of "macho intransigence" and "refusing to discuss peace with our enemies." Intransigence? The other guys stomped out of the arms talks, and it is hard to discuss anything with Soviet leaders who keep dying.

Cuomo said Reagan has "the largest defense budget in history." Well now. There are two sensible measurements: percentage of GNP or of federal outlays, in constant dollars. As a percentage of GNP, defense has been: 1955, 11.2; 1960, 9.7; 1965, 7.7; 1970, 8.4; 1975, 5.8; 1980, 5.2; 1985, 7. As a percentage of federal outlays, defense has been: 1955, 62.4; 1960, 52.2; 1965, 42.7; 1970, 41.8; 1975, 26.7; 1980, 23.2; 1985, 29.4, less than half what it was 30 years ago. Reagan's buildup is scheduled to peak in 1989 at 34.6 percent, substantially below Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon levels.

Even when Cuomo was on solid ground, deploring the interest costs of the deficits, the ground was treacherous. A one percentage point increase in interest rates gives $8 billion dollars to Americans earning interest income. Interest-rate rises are helping to fuel the recovery: The increase of two percentage points this year has pumped an extra $23.8 billion dollars into personal income.

There is palpable melancholy among Democrats because the presidential election was not in 1982, during the recession, rather than this year, with purchasing power estimated to rise an astonishing 5.6 percent — the fastest rise since 1964, a year Republicans remember with a shudder. In 1980, a year the mention of which causes Democrats to shudder, purchasing power declined 0.6 percent.

Jeepers, FDR spoke only of "one-third of a nation" ill-housed, ill-clad, ill-nourished. Cuomo says we are "two nations" cut "in half," one half worse off than before, one half "temporarily" better off. Cuomo gave a Depression speech in the middle of a pedal-on-the-floorboard boom.

Cuomo did what a keynote speaker is supposed to do. He combined grade C substance with grade A delivery and, style being ten times more important than content on such occasions, he convinced the conventioneers that they are the children of light, destined to push back darkness.

The Democrats are not yet talking convincingly about conditions, but at least they are talking about something other than themselves. For nearly a generation the party has been in the grip of a debilitating malady called proceduritis. Republicans have been talking, sometimes raucously, about policies and ideas, sometimes foolish policies and toxic ideas, but at least they were not talking so much about their intramural affairs. Democrats have been investing a disproportionate amount of their time and energies in fine-tuning "fairness" within the party.

The party assembled here is bursting with the stuff (fairness, that is). Women, blacks, Hispanics — every group has rights to delegates. Never mind that no delegate has anything to do. Reform has devoured reform: The Democrats simultaneously produced a scrupulously "fair" (by the lights of those who believe in gender and ethnic entitlements) allocation of delegation spots, while emptying the office of delegate of all significance.

But the extremism that infected the party in the 1960s has been checked. Jesse Jackson resembles a comet hitting the Earth's atmosphere — burning brightly but fatally, and soon to be a small cinder. Some Democrats, especially those from organized labor, regard Mondale's nomination as an American rarity, a successful counter-revolution, undoing the McGovernite takeover of 1972.

The counter-revolutionaries consider Gary Hart the carrier of a contagion that is a compound of McGovernism in foreign policy and (let's award him the consolation prize of being the author of a doctrine) Hartism. The latter is, its critics say, a mixture of coolness and condescension toward the party's old constituencies and policies.

Both parties say they can use O'Neill to advantage in campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the topsy-turvy world of election-year politics, Democrats and Republicans alike are saying they can use Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., and the way he runs the House of Representatives, to their benefit in the fall congressional campaigns.

Republicans point to the 71-year-old Massachusetts Democrat as a symbol of the abuse of power in the House, which the Democrats have controlled for 29 years. It's a "fairness issue," they say.

Democrats point to the white-haired, rotund O'Neill as the only force stopping President Reagan and his GOP allies from turning the United States into a society of only rich and poor. It's a "fairness issue," they say.

Both sides are hoping the arguments will help them pick up House seats this year. Republicans want to trim the 102-seat majority the Democrats hold, while the Democrats want to make sure they lose none of their troops, and add to their strength in fact.

"WE BELIEVE THAT we, as Republicans, have had our rights as a minority trampled upon and therefore the rights of the people have been trampled upon," said Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, which aids GOP House candidates.

Vander Jagt's group is test-marketing two television commercials that say O'Neill, who has been speaker since 1977, has been running the House in an arbitrary, dictatorial fashion that would prompt the founding fathers to shed a tear. "Bring back the pride," say the GOP television commercials. "Vote Republican."

At the same time, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, headed by Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., is sending out fund-raising letters this month signed by O'Neill.

The letters tell potential donors: "The best 'insurance protection' you can buy to protect you and your family against unfair, dangerous, even catastrophic Reagan administration policy decisions is available right now ... The harsh truth of the matter is that you and your family will be adversely affected if Ronald Reagan's actions are not stopped by a strong Democratic House of Representatives."

THAT DEMOCRATIC House as run by O'Neill is the issue Republicans are trying to distill.

"I guess what we've got to get better across is that Tip O'Neill and a 100-vote majority in the House symbolizes a bottling up of some pieces of legislation that can frankly affect the everyday lives of the average citizen," said House Republican Leader RobertH. yU0dSl code that would toughen enforcement and punishment and reform the immigration laws as examples of legislation that O'Neill has kept from debate and votes on the House floor.

"The general public does not know how the Congress works, they don't know how it functions. Let's face it, 39 percent of the people think we Republicans control the House," Michel said.

What is at stake is the power to dictate the ratios of Democrats to Republicans on legislative committees, the scheduling of bills on the House floor and the rules that government activity in the chamber.

"Frankly, from what I've seen from polling, it isn't enough for us to just say, 'Give the president a Republican Congress to help his program,'" Michel said.

IN ADDITION, he said, the length of the Democratic presidential nominating race this year and "the fact that it's been delayed as long as it has, has tended to continue to focus attention on the speaker as the titular head of the Democratic Party.

"Now it seems to me we ought to be able to play that to our advantage since that shows where the trouble spot is for moving some of these very key issues," Michel added.

Republicans used an O'Neill look-a-like in television commercials in 1980 and briefly in 1982 to poke fun at Democrats and their policies. But this year, it is O'Neill himself who is becoming the focus of debate.

Taking advantage of the system that telecasts House proceedings live to a potential 17 million homes via the Cable Satellite Public Affairs Network, a group of junior Republican conservatives — saying they want to dismantle the "liberal welfare state" and build a "conservative opportunity society" — has reserved time on the House floor almost daily since January to bitterly attack Democratic policies.

Miami Beach gives up on video cameras

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — After stirring up suspicion and visions of George Orwell's "Big Brother," video cameras aren't that good at detecting street crime after all, city officials say.

So three years and almost $300,000 later, the city has abandoned its "Television Police Protection" system, saying the project failed to record one crime.

"Any time you experiment you take the chance of success or failure," Police Chief Kenneth Glassman said. "It wasn't as successful as we'd hoped it would be."

Shortly after the influx of Mariel refugees from Cuba in 1980, city officials wanted new ways to curb crime against the community's large contingent of elderly people. "The department looked for increased law enforcement to psychologically relieve the people of their fears," Glassman said in a recent interview.

A $254,000 grant from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development provided the money to install the cameras along two crime-troubled streets in South Miami Beach, Lincoln Road and Washington Avenue.

THE PROJECT was delayed for more than a year while invasion of privacy allegations were made against the city and its electronic surveillance system. In late 1981, Florida Attorney General Jim Smith gave the go-ahead, saying he did not believe the cameras would clash with privacy laws.

The city had the cameras installed by February 1982 but for numerous technical reasons the system wasn't turned on until June of that year.

The project called for 20 cameras to be mounted on a rotating basis in 100 camera housings mounted on poles, thus keeping criminals off guard.

Another, larger camera was mounted atop a 14-story building on Lincoln Road to sweep the length of both streets for a broad overview.

But from the beginning, the system had trouble. "We had continual maintenance problems with constant adjustment of the microwave," Glassman said.

"Strong winds were always blowing the cameras out of alignment," Glassman said.

Police also had trouble explaining why officers were assigned to watch the monitors. Police Sgt. Richard Izzo, who ran the program for about a year, said "one civilian made so much fuss about police watching the monitors and not patrolling the streets that the department took police off the project."

Even Glassman said "better use could be made of the officers."

But Izzo also had problems finding volunteers to watch the six black-and-white TV sets that were located in Rebecca Towers, a South Miami Beach building.

"CIVILIAN volunteers were very cooperative at first," Izzo said. But "then they began to lose interest." Many times, even the few working monitors went unwatched.

Retailers along the camera-watched streets had mixed reactions to the cameras' removal.

"They're a total waste. Most of them are inoperable, and anyone who can see can tell which ones are operable and which ones aren't by the way they're facing and the angle," said Larry Napp, part-owner of Big Daddy's, a Lincoln Road restaurant.

Milton Kirshtin, who runs a clothing store on Washington Avenue, agreed. "I don't think they count, they don't mean anything," he said. "These people (criminals) are desperate, cameras won't stop them."

But Juan Perez, the owner of the Mustang Clothing Shop, had a different view, saying even "if the cameras never work, it will be very good. When you know someone is watching, you will be good."

THE CAMERAS now will be used in more conventional surveillance operations, Glassman said. "They will be placed in the city hall building and the new police station," he said.

Despite all the system's shortcomings, Glassman said it still was a good idea. "The level of fear in the community is not near that when the project was started," he said.

Sgt. Izzo cited statistics saying purse snatching dropped 12 percent to 14 percent once the cameras were installed. If the monitors had been placed in the police lobby, the project would have had a better chance of survival, Izzo said.

Gramm: Bush stronger candidate than Ferraro

ABILENE (AP) — Republican Congressman Phil Gramm says he personally likes vice presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro but that vice president George Bush is a stronger candidate.

Gramm made his comments on Ms. Ferraro's selection as he addressed teachers attending the Taft Institute for Two-Party Government at Abilene Christian University on Wednesday.

"I came to Congress on the same day she did," Gramm said, referring to their arrival in Washington in 1978. "I like her personally and I'm happy for her."

But the former Democrat added, "I hope nobody votes against the ticket because of her and hope nobody votes for it because of her."

He said Ms. Ferraro "doesn't bring anything to the ticket like (vice president) George Bush will."

Gramm faces Democrat Lloyd Doggett of Austin in the race to succeed John Tower as senator. Rather than a single issue, Gramm defined the issues in the Senate race as a "conglomeration" of many things.

Gramm said he favors stronger U.S. control of its border with Mexico and expanded trade with Mexico.

Hispanics decide not to block nomination

By EDWARD M. SILLS
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Only hours before he won his party's presidential nomination, Walter Mondale gave opponents of the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration reform bill what they wanted and, in return, got assurances that they would not block his nomination.

Mondale and his running mate, Geraldine Ferraro, delivered personal speeches against the bill at a meeting of the Democratic National Convention's Hispanic caucus at mid-day yesterday.

With that, the boycott threatened by some Hispanics during the convention's first presidential nominating ballot fell apart.

The end of the boycott movement was a clear victory for Mayor Henry Cisneros and other pro-Mondale Hispanic leaders who want to fight Simpson-Mazzoli in Congress, not at the convention where the fight would be at Mondale's expense.

Addressing the packed, raucous meeting of the Hispanic caucus, Mondale pledged to fight against Simpson-Mazzoli: "We're going to beat it."

Ferraro told the crowd the bill is "wrong, wrong, wrong. I voted right because the bill is wrong."

Mondale added, "As president of the United States, I want to sign the Roybal bill into law."

An alternative immigration bill sponsored by U.S. Rep. Edward Roybal of California has Hispanic support. It provides more money for border guards, but does not include hotly disputed Simpson-Mazzoli provisions that would introduce a "guest worker" program for aliens and penalize employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens.

Mondale and Ferraro also thanked Hispanics for their continuing support at the polls. The well-received speeches followed a fractious debate, a walkout by some delegates wishing to abstain and boos by a few delegates, but they apparently filled the last ruts in Mondale's road to nomination.

'Reagan's idea of a good farm program is 'Hee Haw' '

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Because of the severity of economic problems now plaguing American family farmers, Depression-era action is necessary to save them, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says.

In a Democratic National Convention speech punctuated by one-liners about President Reagan, Hightower on Wednesday urged Democrats to back a moratorium on farm foreclosures by government lenders.

"The Democratic Party must now step forward — just as it did under Franklin Roosevelt 52 years ago — to save the independent family structure of American agriculture," Hightower said.

President Reagan has no idea what to do about the problems, Hightower said.

"Ronnie Reagan's idea of a good farm program seems to be 'Hee Haw.' But the joke is on you and me because ultimately we are the ones who are going to pay the price at the supermarket check-out counter."

Hightower, who chaired the party's national agriculture council which held hearings across the country this year, said Reagan's road to economic recovery hasn't reached the nation's farms.

"The farm economy is now in a raging, full-fledged depression," he said.

"These hard-hit, hard-scrabble families are desperate, depressed, angry, hurt and resentful...Bankruptcy has become commonplace in rural America since Reagan took the reins. Every week that Ronald Reagan has been in office, more than 1,000 good, productive farmers have been squeezed out of business."

More than 200,000 farmers have lost their land and 1 million more now are near bankruptcy, he said.

Economic disaster on the farms means wider trouble and higher food prices for all, he added.

"When farms go, businesses go. People go. Banks go. Whole towns go. What we are seeing is the collapse of an entire economic structure.

"If we don't respond, the same kind of conglomerates that bring you your utility bill will soon be bringing you your grocery bill."

Hightower urged the Democratic Party to emphasize the farm problems in the presidential campaign and not ignore them as has sometimes happened in the past.

"The emergency is now. The change must come now. We cannot wait for another election," he said.

Hightower, a vice chairman of the party's platform committee, said the Democratic farm program will include calls for:

— A moratorium on farm foreclosures by government lenders so farmers can have a chance to restructure and repay their loans.

— Farm legislation targeting benefits "specifically to the small and medium family farmers" rather than large conglomerate operations and tax-loss ventures.

— Establishing floor prices for farm commodities that at least meet the cost of producing them.

— Adjusting supply to meet world demand.

— Demanding effective, locally controlled soil and water conservation practices.

Hightower placed the blame for farm troubles directly on the president.

While the administration has refused to change the farm credit system to help financially troubled farmers stay in business, he said, it has been quick to give money to defense contractors and foreign governments.

Richards honored to second nomination of Mondale

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — It was an honor to second Walter Mondale's nomination at the Democratic National Convention, but Texas state Treasurer Ann Richards says she felt a little removed from it all, speaking from the high podium in the jammed Moscone Center auditorium.

"I really relate to an audience when I'm speaking, and you can't relate to an audience up there. You only see signs and balloons," Ms. Richards said after her speech Wednesday night.

"I felt very removed and it was difficult. But of course I enjoyed it. I thought it was wonderful to be asked."

In her speech, Ms. Richards said that Mondale, unlike President Reagan, would "make you proud to be just who you are."

Ms. Richards, chosen by Mondale to make the speech, said that since Reagan's election in 1980, she has found a widening gap between the government and the people.

"For four years, this administration has viewed America as if the majority of its citizens were as transparent as air," she said.

Reagan views the country "as if it were a nation not just of the invisible man, but of invisible women, invisible children, invisible farmers, invisible working people and all who value hard work, family life and the American dream."

Ms. Richards said the nation under Reagan fears war, bankruptcy of the Social Security system, high interest rates and the lack of equal rights for women and minorities.

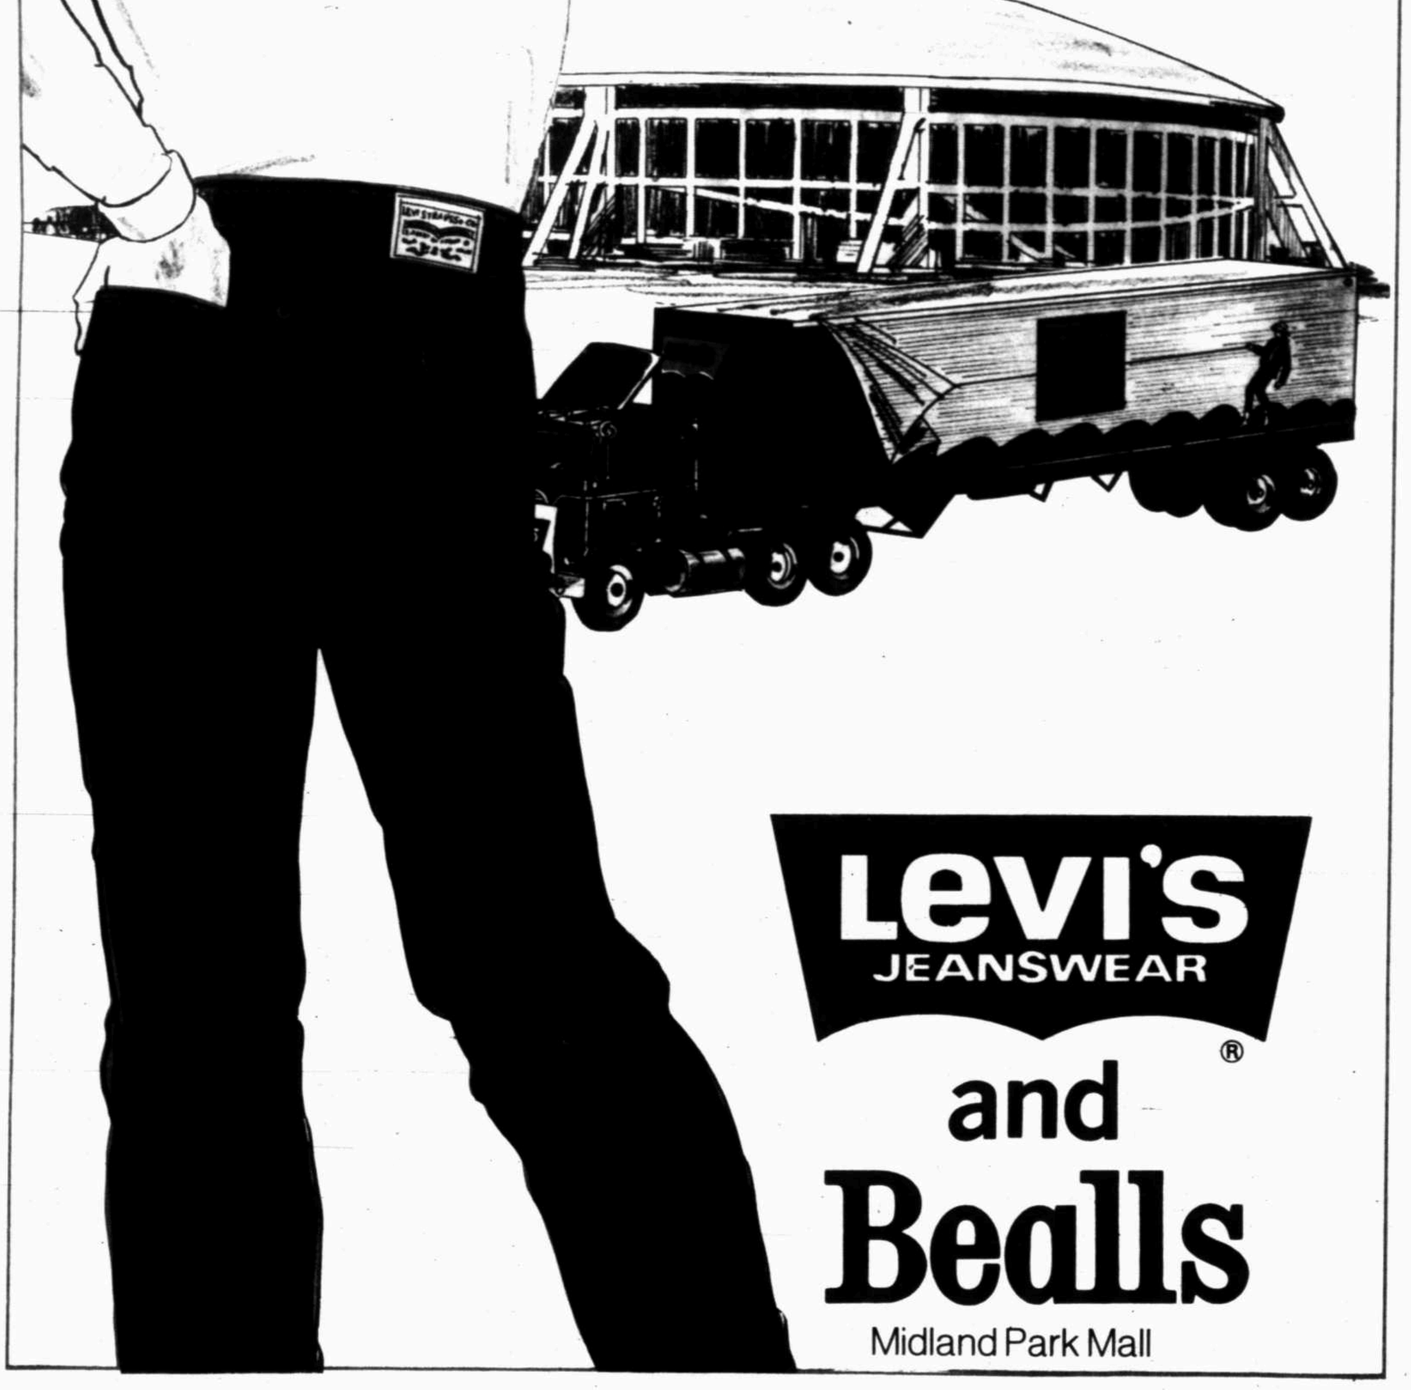

But Reagan pays no attention, she said.

"Let me speak for just a minute to my mama and daddy in Waco, Texas. They don't see you," she said. "You've worked so hard all of your lives...You've always paid your bills on time and now you're worried that our government may never repay the largest national debt in our history. You've paid into Social Security all your lives and now they're telling you that they can't afford you any more."

Addressing her daughters, Cecille and Ellen, Ms. Richards said, "Because you are girls, you're going to work twice as hard, twice as long and make only half as much money. And they do not want to guarantee your rights as human beings in the Constitution."

To sons Dan and Clark, she voiced her fear that war may be looming. "I don't want you to die on some foreign shore in a war no one understands.

Potestio hurls one-hit shutout

From Staff Reports

JACKSON — Not only did Midland's Doug Potestio give the Cubs a rare 1-0 Texas League shutout here Wednesday night, but he did it with a nine inning one-hit job over the Jackson Mets in a 1-0 victory.

Potestio's mound effort was only the second shutout the Cubs' pitching staff has earned this year. The other came back on May 26 when Ray Soff and Jorge Carpio combined to blank Arkansas by a 4-0 count. It was only the eighth complete game turned in by the Cubs this year.

Potestio lost his bid for a no-hitter in the third inning when Lenny Dykstra looped a single over short in the third inning, a hit that was nothing to write home about but no fluke either.

Dykstra stole second after he singled and was the only Met to reach as far as second base in the contest. Potestio walked batters in the second and ninth inning and two other batters reached safely on errors by Cub shortstop Paul Noce.

Potestio retired 13 batters in a row at one point in the game between the two Noce errors. Potestio also ended a 10-game hitting streak by Met catcher Ed Hearn, who was hitless in four tries against Potestio.

The victory gave Potestio a 5-4 record and it turned out that he needed this kind of performance to record a victory. The Cubs got only two hits off Met starter Rick Aguilera (1-4), both by Darrin Jackson.

However, the Cub victory came in the fifth inning when Midland scored without the aid of a base hit. Gary Varsho walked, stole second, moved to third on a grounder by Joe Henderson and scored on a suicide squeeze by Don Hyman.

Jackson's two singles came in the fourth and sixth innings.

The game took only two hours and 11 minutes to play, another rarity in the Texas League. With only three hits in the game, the contest moved along quickly.

Despite the win, the Cubs are still tied with El Paso for last place in the Texas League West, six games behind Beaumont. All of the Western division teams had victories Wednesday night.

The Cubs now own a 2-0 lead in the series and will meet again tonight. The Cubs will send Troy Chesnut to the mound seeking his first victory of the year after an 0-4 start. Jackson will counter with Bill Fultz, who owns an impressive 7-2 ledger.

Starr blames executives for fall

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Bart Starr, who was fired as the coach of the Green Bay Packers at the end of the 1983 National Football League season, said in a copyright story Wednesday that the club's problems were the fault of meddling executives, not players and coaches.

He particularly pointed an accusatory finger at club president Robert J. Parins, who had been considered a Starr supporter until firing him in December after an 8-8 season, according to a report in the Milwaukee Sentinel.

EXECUTIVES, he said, did not appreciate the injuries and emergency deployment of substitutes which weakened the Green Bay defense, leaving it statistically the worst in the league.

"That's what angers coaches," he said. "The front office did not understand what had been done under the circumstances."

He recommended the front office give more managerial authority to new coach Forrest Gregg and to Dick Corrick, director of player personnel.

"Forrest is an excellent coach, a quality football man," he said. "If the organization will allow Forrest and Dick Corrick to run the team, and give them more authority — the type of authority I had when I was general manager — then they will be fine."

Starr, now coach of a proposed Arizona franchise, had been the Packers coach and general manager until his managerial duties were transferred in 1981 to front-office personnel answerable to Parins.

INTERVIEWED at his Green Bay home, Starr said the slide of the Packer defense from No. 8 statistically in 1982 began when highly prized defensive end Mike Butler quit to join Tampa Bay of the United States Football League.

"Our front office blew that," he said. "I put the blame right at the feet of Judge Parins. There was no acceptable excuse for not signing Butler. Our front office was not aggressive or creative enough to sign Butler."

Attempts to locate Parins for comment were not immediately successful Wednesday night.

Butler has been reported as saying he transferred to the USFL in hope of finding greater contractual job security.

Even with the poor showing of 1983, Starr said, the club had at last begun improving from what it had been three years ago.

"Had they fired me three years ago, I could have understood it," he said.

Having made little comment about the matter since his December firing, Starr disclosed that Parins simply walked into his office and announced: "I've decided to terminate you."

"If I failed, I failed honestly," said Starr, the club's record-setting quarterback from the Vince Lombardi years. "I gave this organization every ounce of energy I had.

New Mexico coaches resign in numbers

By MINERVA CARRILLO
Associated Press Writer

Sports Analysis

ALBUQUERQUE — If recent resignations are any indication, it appears the demands placed on high school coaches have caught up with the benefits.

In recent months several state high school coaches have resigned their positions. Resignations from coaches left vacancies at high schools in Albuquerque, Las Cruces, Artesia, Gallup, Moriarty, Clovis and Farmington, among others.

The large turnover in coaching positions doesn't appear to have any one single reason.

Glen Lucero, former Albuquerque Highland High School boys' basketball coach, said he loved his job but he couldn't afford to work for 3 cents an hour.

Mike Phipps, former head football coach at Artesia High School, said resigning was a difficult decision, but the demands placed on him as a high school coach were taking too much time away from his family.

THE FORMER baseball coach at Farmington High School, Gaylon Fox, said although he's been involved in baseball for the past 30 years, a change was needed, both in his career and in the Farmington baseball program.

Different reasons; same result.

Coaches list other reasons for leaving, such as better job opportunities, the pressures of winning and the educational value of athletics as viewed by administrators.

Lucero resigned from Highland High School in April after compiling a 42-35 three-year record.

"I put hundreds and hundreds of hours into coaching," Lucero said. "But APS (Albuquerque Public Schools) didn't pay enough. I'd talk to coaches around the state and when I'd tell them how much I made, they'd laugh at me."

Lucero said although he received great support from his high school administration, the APS central office gave him no support.

He said he heard after his resignation the central office said he had a "bad attitude."

"That really bothered me because I loved coaching," Lucero said. "After dedicating so many hours and years to coaching and letting my family suffer, the central office says I have a bad attitude.

"They (the central office) better open their eyes as to what is going on," he said. "I quit and several other coaches have quit. APS is letting so many good people get away and it's hurting the kids."

GIL MIRANDA, athletic director for Albuquerque Public Schools, said he disagrees the district is letting good people get away.

"Some coaches quit because they've had enough of coaching," Miranda said. "Of those that quit, some are good and some are not so good. If a coach goes into coaching thinking he is going to make money, he or she is in the wrong business. There isn't a coaching job in the country that pays a coach for all the hours that he works."

Phipps said the opportunity to move into administration at Artesia High School lured him away from coaching.

"Coaching is a demanding thing," Phipps said. "It takes a lot of time away from being with your family. I turned around one day and realized my kids were half grown and I hadn't seen it happen."

Phipps coached the Artesia football team for 10 years, winning seven state championships and compiling a 96-27-1 overall record. He concluded his career by winning the 1983 Class AAA state title.

"I was not as motivated as I had been," Phipps said. "It (coaching) was not as exciting to me as before, and I felt I would be cheating some young men if I didn't work as hard as I could."

In his seven years as head coach at Farmington, Fox compiled a 140-28 overall record. During his tenure, his teams captured four district titles, and in May, his team won the state championship.

"I felt like I had been coaching in Farmington long enough," Fox said. "I thought it was time for a new person to come in and have an opportunity to see what he can do. After so long, it's good for a coach to move on and change situations."

FOX SAID the administration always supported the program 100 percent, although that wasn't always the case with people in the community.

"There are some people in the community that no matter what you do, you can't please them," Fox said. "Even after we won the state championship, some people were making what we felt were cheap shots."

Eric Roanhaus, head football coach at Clovis High School, said he doesn't see himself resigning in the near future. He said his high school administration doesn't put pressure on him to be successful, but he sometimes feels like the community does.

"People expect something out of the teams and a lot of times the expectations are unrealistic," Roanhaus said. "There can only be one state champion, but at the beginning of every school year, every school expects its team to be No. 1 at the end of the year."

Roanhaus said he suspects there are several reasons state high school coaches resign.

"There are more lucrative ways to make a living than coaching high school athletics," Roanhaus said. "You can't justify coaching from a monetary viewpoint. The salary doesn't compensate for the time put into the job."

Roanhaus said coaches are in the business because they enjoy coaching. He said when a coach doesn't enjoy his job anymore, it's easy for him to get out.

Also, he said the question of the educational value of athletics is a problem.

"The word 'extracurricular' is the problem," he said. "Many people consider athletics as extracurricular. But they're not, as far as I'm concerned. I feel we should provide kids with as many opportunities as possible for them to be successful."

He said the changing times also can be a problem for coaches.

"Kids today have other interests," he said. "It's not an easy thing to motivate young men to go out and do their best every Friday night. They have other interests — cars, making money, girls..."

FOX SAID he is not currently seeking another coaching job.

"I know I'm gonna miss the game of baseball," Fox said. "I've been active in baseball for the past 30 years. If the right situation (for a coaching job) came along, I would take a look at it."

Although Phipps has no plans to get back into coaching, he said making a clean break from the profession has been difficult.

"I find myself wandering toward the football field and the athletic department," Phipps said. "But it's a different story when I walk in now. It's a different feeling; something I'm gonna have to accept."

Vacation complete...sort of Vacation for a sports nut often means a stop in a Major League city. And if you can call Arlington a Major League city, then that was my stop this year.

Watching the guys in the Big Time — live and in person — is a treat. One you look forward to as part of a vacation outing. But it can take some time before you really get into a game.

The first thing you have to overcome is getting a family of four into the park, realizing along the way that this looked for night is going to cost you around $60 if you keep things within reason. I thought that was a bit steep for a night out.

I WAS continually reminding myself that I watch the games on TV for much less. But this thought crossed my mind before learning that back in Midland my cable company had axed the Chicago Cubs.

If I had known what was happening on the cable front back home, I would have been clinging to every precious pitch. I didn't realize at the time that my Midland afternoons were being destroyed.

Still, this was a planned outing. Detroit was in Arlington and this was the last game of the first half. Chicago was being deleted back home and here I was watching a last place team (Texas Rangers) take on the world beating Tigers of Detroit.

They knew I was coming. They had their hand out for a parking fee. Tickets have to be purchased. Of course, you have to have a program. And then there is that matter of seeing that the family gets their fill of nachos, drinks and ice cream — the hit of Arlington Stadium since the ice cream comes in plastic baseball caps which serve as cups.

I THOUGHT the ice cream idea was unique. Then I learned upon returning to Midland that the same treat can now be had at Cubs Stadium. Two of the first things I learned coming home from vacation was that I had lost the Chicago Cubs and Midlanders had the ice cream before I did. Somehow, all this seemed very sad. Vacation is supposed to be for new experiences.

Still, there was something I had never seen at Arlington Stadium. The Diamond Vision is super. And they now show fans scores from all the other games in the majors, updated by innings. Arlington, I thought, had finally become a Major League city.

But nachos, ice cream, Diamond Vision, program reading and score watching takes its toll on a newcomer. It was the fourth inning before I realized that a game was going on. Somehow, Texas had a 7-0 lead before I shoveled down the last scoop of ice cream. Again I thought my vacation had passed me by. Surely the game was over with a lead like that.

To make a long story short, Texas did end up winning the game by a 9-7 margin, no thanks to a bullpen that may be the worst ever assembled by any one team.

In fact, the Rangers ended up splitting a four-game series with the Tigers and the next morning the Dallas papers were full of how the Rangers had to be an improved club during the second half of the season.

RANGER MANAGER Doug Rader even said, "We have to be better by just showing up in the second half." Of course, that was followed with a string of losses to the last place Cleveland Indians to open the second half.

Some things never change. The Rangers seem to be as awful on the field as in the past. Diamond Vision and ice cream don't seem to help much, but it does take your mind off the game.

Now if there was something to take my mind off losing the Chicago Cubs, vacation would be complete.

How many times did Babe Ruth win 20 games?

Wednesday's answer: Did you guess Babe Ruth posted a 34-5 record to pitching the Boston Red Sox to an American League pennant and World Series championship before finishing his career as a outfielder? Oops, try again. It was Smokey Joe Woods who won 34 games for the 1912 Red Sox, who beat the New York Giants in the series, and later hit .366 as an outfielder.

1933 — Rick Ferrell of the Boston Red Sox hit a home run off brother Wes of the Cleveland Indians. Wes also homered in that game, marking the only time the two connected in the same contest.

1955 — Babe Birrer came in to pitch four innings of relief for the Detroit Tigers, but helped more with his bat as he belted two three-run homers.

1960 — Juan Marichal broke in with the San Francisco Giants by pitching a one-hit, 2-0 win over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Landry may shuttle QBs

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry says Gary Hogeboom is good enough to start at quarterback for the National Football League team and there could be a shuttle at quarterback.

Landry told the Dallas Times Herald on Wednesday, "I just feel that Gary has reached a point that he could go into a tough game for us now and win it. I think Hogeboom is ready."

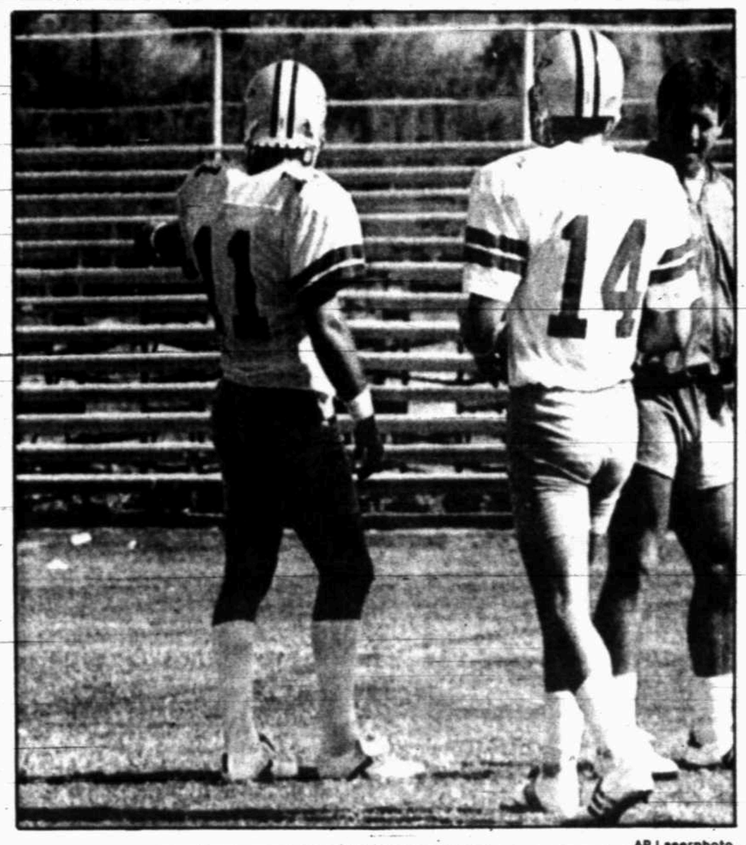

"I think that Gary's now in the best position ever to move into the starting lineup. He's reached the point now where he's reliable in a lot of areas," Landry said.

Landry also said that he might use a relief quarterback this year.

"I had never considered using both quarterbacks until now," Landry said. "But this team is different. This team is going to have to reshape itself."

Hogeboom said, "It's good to hear that he is thinking that way. This is my fifth year and I completely believe that I'm ready for the starting job. The Super Bowl is my goal."

Danny White has failed to take the Cowboys to the Super Bowl the past three seasons as Dallas' No. 1 quarterback.

It's not time to show faces yet as Tom Landry tries to decide if the Dallas quarterback will be Danny White (11) or Gary Hogeboom.

Newhouse joins dropouts

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Veteran fullback Robert Newhouse has become the fifth Dallas Cowboy to retire since the close of the 1983 National Football League season.

As a result, Coach Tom Landry will be missing 71 years in experience from last season's team. Three other players left for the United States Football League and Butch Johnson was traded to the Houston Oilers.

"I don't know how we will replace all that experience," Landry said Wednesday night after learning of Newhouse's decision. "It's a season of challenge for us."

ALTHOUGH the stumpy Newhouse, 34, had played sparingly in recent seasons, Landry was counting on him as a backup to Ron Springs and Timmy Newsome.

"I didn't expect it," said Landry. "I really thought Robert would play this season."

"I've done evertying I could in football," said Newhouse who telephoned the news of his retirement to Landry from Dallas.

Newhouse, who played collegiate ball at the University of Houston, was a second-round draft choice in the 1972 NFL draft. He finished his 12-year career with the Cowboys as the team's fourth all-time leading rusher.

Newhouse said his pro career "was really enjoyable," but he had decided it was "time to get on with the rest of my life.

"Everything was sort of repeating itself. I've been through it all. I've been to Super Bowls and I've been through seasons like last year that saw a lot of unrest.

"Last year was too much," he said.

Landry said Newhouse "did everything you expected of him, even playing on special teams, which spoke well of his charachter."

Asked to describe Newhouse's running style, Landry said, "He was like a big ol' bowling ball. He was steady but not spectacular but, boy, was he hard to bring down."

NEWHOUSE SAID he planned to concentrate his time on "a couple of businesses." He added that he would be looking for an opening in football administration.

However, Newhouse said he wasn't interested in coaching.

"I guess I've been a player too long to be a coach," he said.

Newhouse led the Cowboys in rushing in the 1975 Super Bowl season with a career-best 975 yards. One of the most memorable moments of his career took place in the 1978 Super Bowl, when he tossed a 29-yard pass to Golden Richards to seal Dallas' victory over the Denver Broncos.

He played in 96 straight regular-season games for the Cowboys during the 1970s, a streak that ended when he suffered a broken leg against New Orleans in 1978.

Newhouse's biggest day in a Cowboy uniform was against St. Louis in 1979 when he gained 124 yards.

Jones, White may report

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Defensive end Ed Jones and defensive tackle Randy White were expected to report to Dallas Cowboys training camp today with the remainder of the veterans although they want their contracts renegotiated.

There was talk that Jones and White might leave camp at a later date together to strengthen their bargaining positions in a holdout power play.

White, an unanimous All-Pro selection last season, is in the option year of a contract that pays him some $350,000 annually. He wants to be the highest paid lineman in the National Football League.

Normally, team vice president Gil Brandt would be handling the negotiations but Managing Partner Tex Schramm hired Simmons because of acrimony between Brandt and Slusher.

Jones is in the third year of a five-year contract that pays him over $300,000 per season.

"We made the deal with Jones in good faith and a five-year deal is what he wanted," said Brandt. "It was his choice and he was pleased when he signed."

Jones said he was happy with the contract which was to be his last within the NFL.

"I was happy but it's all changed around the league now," Jones said. "Players are making a lot more money."

However, Jones' agent, Don Cronson of New York, has asked for more money because of Jones' market value, increase in television revenue and the coming of the United States Football League.

"Fans have a tendency to forget a players' accomplishment when something like this happens," Brandt said. "All they will remember is the contract hassle."

Brandt said, "It's hard to understand. What would have happened if television had cut our money? Would the players take a pay cut?"

Asked if he and Jones would leave camp if they aren't satisfied, White said, "Not right now."

Veteran fullback Robert Newhouse retired Wednesday after a 12-year career. Newhouse, who informed Landry of his decision by telephone, said he would concentrate his efforts on his business interests.

All veterans were due today. Quarterbacks, receivers and running backs have been in camp several days.

Oilers put ink to draft choices

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers signed two veterans, a free agent kicker and four draft choices Wednesday, a team spokesman said.

The team reached agreements with 5-year veteran offensive lineman John Schumacher and wide receiver Mike Holston, Gregg Stengel said.

Holston, a third-round pick in 1981, will begin his fourth year with the Oilers, General Manager Ladd Herzeg said. He has played in 41 games with the Oilers, gaining 748 yards on 46 catches, including three touchdowns.

Also inked on Wednesday were defensive back Patrick Allen, a No.3 draft pick from Utah State; running back Willie Joyner, a seventh-round selection from Maryland; Kevin Baugh, an eighth-round wide receiver and kick returner from Penn State; and sixth-round choice Eric Mullins, a wide receiver from Stanford.

Johnson not angry with Oquendo

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Whether Jose Oquendo blasted Dave Johnson or not doesn't matter to the New York Mets manager.

The flashy-fielding shortstop denied he had given an interview published here Wednesday which accused Johnson of personal favoritism in his managerial moves, particularly in the Mets' demotion of Oquendo to the minor leagues during the All-Star break.

Johnson, contacted in Houston before the Mets' game with the Astros, said he didn't care whether Oquendo made the comments.

"I'm not angry if he said it or didn't say it," said Johnson. "I can understand the context of anything he said. I have his best interests in mind."

"If Jose said he didn't say it, I believe him. Even if he did say it, it doesn't bother me."

In the interview, published in the Spanish-language El Nueva Dia, Oquendo, now with Tidewater of the International League, was quoted as saying that Johnson was biased in favor of Ron Gardenhire, who played for Johnson at Tidewater last year.

"Johnson has always favored Gardenhire, since spring training, but since he couldn't find any excuse to leave me in the minors he had to use me," Oquendo said.

"But I think he waited too long to send me down, if that's what he planned to do all along, as I believe. Now he has no excuse, because my average has gone from around .180 to around .220."

He also accused Johnson of riding him continuously, and not just about his weak batting.

"If somebody made a bad throw he'd say I could have gotten to the ball," Oquendo said.

"But what bothers me is that he never said the same thing to Gardenhire. He (Gardenhire) and (second baseman) Wally Backman are two of his favorite players."

The shortstop also criticized his new teammates. Oquendo was quoted as saying about the Tides players, "all they're after are individual stats, to bat .300 . . . without caring whether the teams wins or loses."

"There's been a lot of pressure on me, mostly from Johnson," he said. "If I went 0-for-2 in a game, right away they wanted to change my batting stance. That's why I was a better hitter in Winter League ball (.279) and in spring training, because there wasn't any pressure on me."

Mets batting coach Bill Robinson was also criticized. "If he wanted to help me so much, like they've been saying in the newspapers, he had the opportunity to do his job and he didn't do anything," Oquendo said.

In Houston, Robinson replied, "I worked on my hands and knees for hours in the batting cage to help the kid.

Porter's slam spanks Giants

Associated Press

NL Roundup

With two out in the bottom of the 11th inning, Porter belted a grand-slam homer Wednesday night to power the St. Louis Cardinals past the San Francisco Giants 8-4.

The slam, the sixth of Porter's career and his ninth home run of the season, came after a disagreement with San Francisco Manager Frank Robinson.

In the eighth inning, Brad Wellman collided with the St. Louis catcher in front of the plate on an attempted sacrifice bunt. Plate umpire Bob Davidson called Wellman out because of interference, prompting Robinson to argue and play the game under protest.

In the top of the 11th, Johnny Rabb led off with a single and took second on a sacrifice. Manny Trillo then singled and Rabb tried to score, but Porter took the throw from center fielder Andy Van Slyke and tagged out Rabb — twice.

"Frank asked Bob on the play if I had tagged the runner coming and why I tagged him twice," Porter recounted. "I said, 'Frank, sometimes the umpire's going to miss the first tag.' He said, 'You have no business talking to me.'

"It was really strange," Porter said. "I hate to admit it, but after all that took place, I was a little more contented than I would normally be."

Tommy Herr, whose RBI single in the ninth tied it for the Cardinals, started the 11th with a double off reliever Bob Lacey. Van Slyke then bunted and Lacey fielded it and threw mistakenly to third as Herr stayed at second. George Hendrick followed with an infield hit to load the bases.

Lacey got David Green to pop out and Terry Pendleton to bounce into a forceout at the plate before Porter belted the first pitch for his slam.

Robinson, still testy after the game, said the dispute with Porter had nothing to do with the game-winning blow.

"That had nothing to do with how he hit the ball," Robinson said. "If he hadn't had his catcher's mask on, I would have punched him in the nose. And you can tell him that."

Dave Von Ohlen pitched the 11th inning and won his first decision of the season. Rick Horton started for the Cardinals and gave up Jeff Leonard's 13th home run of the season in second.

Leonard's solo homer was his third of the season off Horton and came in his fourth official at-bat against the St. Louis rookie.

Mets 3, Astros 1

New York managed just three hits, but one of them was a two-run homer by Keith Hernandez that capped a three-run uprising in the fifth inning.

Hernandez smacked his ninth home run of the season with two outs following an error by Houston hurler Nolan Ryan. The error made all three runs unearned.

Ryan, 7-6, went seven innings and gave up all three Mets hits.

Phillies 7, Reds 5

The last time the Philadelphia Phillies had swept a three-game series in Cincinnati was July 1956, when the Reds played in Crosley Field.

But Mike Schmidt drove in four runs with a pair of homers and a bases-loaded single to give the Phillies their first three-game sweep in the 14-year history of Riverfront Stadium.

Schmidt's two-run single came during a burst of six straight singles with two out in the third inning off Jeff Russell, 4-11. Schmidt hit solo homers in the fifth and seventh, giving him 20 for the season.

Shane Rawley, 3-1, took a two-hitter and 7-0 lead into the sixth. But the Reds chased him by scoring five times in the seventh, three on Nick Esasky's seventh homer.

Braves 3, Expos 2

Dale Murphy, known for his slugging, won the game for Atlanta with his baserunning.

With two out in the 10th inning, Murphy singled off Bill Gullickson, 6-7. Ken Oberkfell then hit a grounder that Montreal second baseman Doug Flynn reached in short right field but could not hold. When Flynn retrieved the ball and threw to second, trying to get Oberkfell, Murphy sprinted home with the winning run.

Gullickson had a perfect game going through six innings. Gerald Perry stroked Gullickson's first pitch of the seventh into right field for a single.

Pirates 5, Dodgers 2

Larry McWilliams allowed six Los Angeles hits and issued seven walks, yet he improved his record to 6-8 with the help of two double plays and a fine throw by right fielder Doug Frobel.

Jerry Reuss, making his first start for the Dodgers in seven weeks because of elbow problems, retired just one batter as he was roughed up by the host Pirates.

Jim Morrison cracked an RBI double and Tony Pena and Brian Harper had run-scoring singles as Pittsburgh took a 3-0 lead in the first inning.

Pena's single off Reuss, 2-4, extended his hitting streak to 16 games.

The Pirates led 5-0 in the fifth before the Dodgers loaded the bases with two out. R.J. Reynolds singled home two runs, but Steve Sax was cut down by Frobel while trying to go from first to third.

Cubs 4, Padres 1

Rick Sutcliffe pitched a strong six-hitter and helped his own cause with two singles. The right-hander, 6-1, struck out six and walked one.

Chicago took a 3-0 lead in the first inning in chasing San Diego starter Ed Whitson, 10-5.

Bob Dernier led off the Cubs first with a single and scored on Ryne Sandberg's 12th triple of the season. Leon Durham doubled home Sandberg and Jody Davis added an RBI single.

Former Midland Cub Carmelo Martinez homered, his 12th of the season, for the Padres' run in the seventh.

Cabell says Astros can't win flag

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros have almost half of a season to catch front-running San Diego in the National League Western Division but Houston first baseman Enos Cabell says the Astros should start thinking about second place.

"You can't really think about winning the pennant because we don't have the horses," Cabell told Houston Radio Station KIKK. "The main thing is for us to get something going so we can probably take second place."

The Astros went into Thursday night's game in the Astrodome against the New York Mets trailing the division-leading Padres by 11 games, too big of a deficit in Cabell's view, to overcome.

SWC working on TV package

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The Southwest Conference is working on a regional television package of seven or eight games with each of the league's team appearing no more than twice, the league commissioner said Wednesday.

Commissioner Fred Jacoby said the league is trying to tie the football package with a basketball package.

The scrambling for TV contracts began after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled recently that a $68.5 million package offered to the National Collegiate Athletic Association by CBS and ABC violated federal antitrust laws.

"We're just trying to get it back to where it was or as close as we can," Jacoby said, referring to the money lost because of the court ruling. He would not discuss revenue details of the league package.

The SWC is not going to do anything until the College Football Association package is finalized, Jacoby said, but added that the league is to meet with Raycom of Charlotte, N.C., on Friday.

The SWC belongs to the CFA — an organization of 63 major schools.

Jacoby said he believed ABC-TV would accept the CFA package and that CBS-TV would opt for one put together by a coalition of the Pacific 10 and the Big Ten.

The CFA package, he said, probably will be shown in the late-afternoon time slot. That would open the door for a series of conference games with kickoffs around noon.

There are nine teams in the SWC, which means seven teams would appear twice and two teams once in an eight-game package. The CFA has a limit of three appearances per year so a league school with an attractive record could have five of its 11 games on TV.

He said the league hoped to avoid overexposure.

The CFA also is talking with Turner Broadcasting and ESPN about a Saturday night package.

Jacoby was in Fayetteville for a camp for evaluating 21 basketball officials not yet in the SWC.

"There are other officiating camps, but to our knowledge this is the only one by invitation only," he said. "During the course of a basketball season, it's nearly impossible to see these men work. This gives us a chance to work with them, watch them and critique them for three or four days."

The officials, invited after being recommended by SWC coaches and others, work games at Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton's basketball camp during the day and officiate pickup games at night. SWC officials watch videotapes of the games.

Jacoby said the league wants to find the top officiating prospects.

"Obviously, we can't use them all in one year but if we could work two or three into the Southwest Conference and recommend some of the others to the other leagues, we would have accomplished our goal," he said.

Next year, he hopes that any SWC official with less than three years experience in the league will attend the camp.

"The last few years, the playing ability has improved dramatically," he said. "We want to keep the officiating standards up."

Midland teams set up LL shootout

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — North Central and Western, two Midland teams, have set up a major Little League District Tournament shootout here today at 8 p.m. at the Big Spring Little League field adjacent to Howard College.

Both North Central and Western are unbeaten in the double elimination tournament and will square off tonight to see which team will remain unbeaten and take the favorites role in the tournament.

THE WINNER of this Little League District Tournament will advance to play the winner of the San Angelo district in a best two-out-of-three series. That winner will advance to the State Little League Tournament in Waco. The State champion will earn a berth in the Regional Little League World Series in St. Petersburg, Fla., later this summer.

North Central and Western have both won three games thus far in the tournament and tonight's winner will gain a berth in the finals while the loser will have to battle a loser's bracket squad to gain the finals.

North Central has beaten Midland Tower, Lamesa and Big Spring International. Jason Stone and John Dickenson were the winning pitchers, allowing a total of only eight hits and three runs in three games. Will Sowders and Ty Chambers lead the hitters with five hits each while Dickenson and Stone have three each. Scott Melzer, Greg Rich, Randy Brown and Chad Sheddy have collected the other hits for North Central.

MIDLAND WESTERN has advanced through the winner's bracket by yielding only one run in three games. Kevin Irish picked up the first and third wins for Western while Bradley Fortune and Keith Gilbreath each pitched three innings of shutout ball in the second game. The key hitters for Western include Irish, Chris Duncan and Clint Bullock.

The championship contest will be held Saturday night at the Big Spring National Little League Park on Highway 87, on the south side of Big Spring. At least one Midland team will be in the finals and it is possible that North Central and Western will have to square off again on Saturday.

Allen delays decision on USFL retirement

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Arizona Wranglers Coach George Allen said Wednesday that he will delay his decision about whether to retire or return to the United States Football League team for "approximately a month."

Allen, 66, had previously said he would announce his intention next week before departing on a European vacation.

"I want to get some rest and evaluate where the franchise is going and what direction the league is heading," said Allen, who told reporters last week that would like to coach for at least two more years if his health holds up.

"I haven't changed any of that," he said. "I just don't want to go through another year like I had this year. It wasn't worth it. It was so tough and so frustrating. I wish I could put in words how tough this season was, but I can't."

Arizona switched franchises with the Chicago Blitz last Sept. 30 and needed to win its last four regular-season games to finish at 10-8 and make the USFL playoffs as a wild-card entry.

"If we had stayed in Chicago, we would have had a fine team and won all the way along. The move got us going in the wrong direction with a slow start," Allen said. "We were starting over. It was hectic and traumatic and very frustrating. There were so many off-the-field obstacles to overcome even before you could inflate the footballs and play the games. But it's great to overcome adversity."

The Wranglers went on to become the Western Conference champions, but lost 23-3 to the Philadelphia Stars in the USFL title game Sunday night in Tampa, Fla.

"What we accomplished this year was almost a miracle," Allen said. "We had one of the greatest comebacks in sports history. I don't think there's ever been a team that has been 6-8 and gone on to the championship game."

The Wranglers wound up as the USFL's top-ranked defense and No. 3 offense — just like they had in Chicago in 1983.

For next season, Allen said his club "has to improve all around" and keep such veterans as 37-year-old quarterback Greg Landry, 34-year-old linebacker Stan White and 33-year-old safety Bruce Laird from retiring.

"Greg's already told me: 'If you're coming back, I'm coming back,'" Allen said. "I can't remember any players retiring on me anyway. You have to rip the uniforms off them, like peeling a banana. They all want to play so bad. They never want to quit."

Henderson's ring to be sold

DALLAS (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has scheduled an auction to sell off the 1978 Super Bowl ring of Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson, the flamboyant former Dallas Cowboys linebacker now imprisoned in California.

Earlier this year, Henderson said he was in such financial trouble that he would be willing to sell the ring — valued at about $5,000 — and two National Football Conference championship rings, to pay off his debts.

Since then, the IRS confiscated Henderson's Super Bowl ring and plans to auction it Aug. 1 at the IRS office in Mesquite in an attempt to recover $156,881 in delinquent income taxes, the Dallas Times Herald reported Wednesday.

Henderson and his former wife, Wyetta, owe $143,776 in taxes for 1979 and $13,105 for 1980, including interest and penalties, the IRS says.

Henderson's lawyer, Arnie Gold of Los Angeles, refused to comment on Henderson's tax problems.

Henderson, 31, is serving a 4½-year sentence in California after pleading no contest to a charge of sexually assaulting two teen-age girls and then offering them a bribe not to testify against him. Henderson has blamed his problems on cocaine and alcohol.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry dismissed Henderson after five years on the Cowboy squad late in the 1979 season. The linebacker was traded to the San Francisco 49ers, was waived and picked up by the Houston Oilers early in the 1980 season.

Released by the Oilers after that season, he entered a drug rehabilitation center in Arizona. He then tried out with the Miami Dolphins in the summer of 1981, but suffered a neck injury and was forced to quit.

Henderson's ring is 10-carat white gold with two 40-point diamonds set in blue stars and surrounded by 25 smaller diamonds. It is valued at $5,000 by Jim Halt of Josten's of Dallas, the company that produced it for the Cowboys.

Henderson also owns two NFC championship rings of lesser value from the 1975 and 1978 seasons. Halt estimated the 1978 ring to be worth $3,000.

The IRS will try to stimulate more interest in the auction by placing ads in the sports section of both Dallas newspapers this weekend, Hoefnagle said.

Cubs call Dan Rohn up from AAA Iowa

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Cubs have placed infielder Richie Hebner on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to July 13, and recalled former Midland Cub Dan Rohn from their Iowa farm club, the National League club announced Wednesday.

Craft stays active in craft

CONROE, Texas (AP) — What do the original seven astronauts, Bob Hope, Howard Cosell and George Steinbrenner have in common?

At one time or another, they, like countless others, have been acquainted with Conroe's Harry Craft.

Name someone — anyone — connected with major league baseball during this span of time and odds are that his and Craft's paths have crossed.

Craft once played against Babe Ruth; he was a center fielder for the Cincinnati Reds that won the 1940 World Series; he was a member of a National League All-Star team and an American League All-Star team; he was the first pro manager of a 17-year-old kid named Mickey Mantle; he was the first manager of Houston's major league team which was formed in 1962, known as the Colt .45s.

The 69-year-old Craft, who has lived in Conroe for 14 years with his wife Nell, is currently on major league special assignment for the San Francisco Giants. That is, at some time during the season, Craft views each of the major league teams, evaluating the skills of each athlete. His consultation and the information he gathers, thus, becomes invaluable to the Giants for future trades.

WHY HAS he remained in baseball for 50 years?

Craft responded, "I've stayed with it because every facet that I've been a part of, even since my playing days...you sit down and you take stock and you say 'can I say that I've enjoyed it?' and 'do the pluses outweigh the minuses?' and I can not find very many minuses. The pluses always come out on top.

"Sure, I've had some heartaches and some things that have been kind of rough, but by and large, everything has been just great, just really pleasant."

Before moving to the Giants, Craft served in the same capacity with the New York Yankees from 1978 to 1982. He was asked about his relationship with Steinbrenner. "As far as myself, personally, he has treated me all right all the time I was there. I was never 'under the gun' because I was out traveling the 26 cities. So, I never came into this 'flack' you read about in the paper.

"I do say this — and this is my opinion and no one else's — you cannot take a player apart in the media and say 'well, he can't do this; he's sorry'; and I'm going to get rid of him...and George got to where he was too impetuous...he couldn't wait... he's (Steinbrenner) taken so many good ones apart.

"I admire Dave Winfield. He (Steinbrenner) has had so many things to say about Winfield and yet Winfield has come back, and he's never quit playing."

Craft's remark about Winfield reveals the concern he has had for players through the years. Case in point: Mickey Mantle.

As a 17-year-old youngster in the Yankees' organization, Mantle first played under Craft who managed the Yankees' Class C Joplin, Mo., team in 1950.

In Mantle's own novel, "The Education of a Baseball Player," he says Craft "was the man, next to my father, whom I wanted most to be like. He taught me many things about baseball but he taught me many more things about being a man.

"I was impressed with the way he kept up his appearance, always wearing a necktie and neat suit in the hotel lobby or on the street, and I never since have gone in much for walking into a dining room in a sweater. It seemed to me that Harry Craft always looked the part of a manager, or of a leader. He was friendly but dignified, stern but not sour, and he walked like a man who knew where he was going and what he was going to do when he got there," Mantle says in his book.

MANTLE CONTINUED, "I can't say I patterned myself after Harry, for we are two very different people. But I looked up to him, enjoyed being in his company, and found myself imitating his manner of dress and public deportment occasionally, the way boys will when they find someone they admire."

Here's a footnote for Mantle fans: it was Craft that recommended the youthful slugger to be shifted from shortstop to the outfield (or possibly third base).

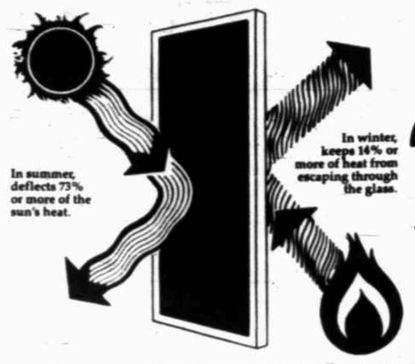

"He just didn't have the natural reactions that a shortstop ought to have, although he had speed, a tremendous arm, tremendous power for an infielder, and power from both sides of the plate," Craft said.

Years later, after various managerial and coaching stops, Craft took over in 1962 as the first skipper of the Houston Colt .45s.

The "Colts," with Craft winning the coin toss (as he called 'heads') with another new franchise, the New York Mets, selected Bob Aspromonte, Bob Lillis and Norm Larker, among others that were picked from a "players pool."

Lillis is presently the manager of the Astros. Craft believes in Lillis' ability as a manager. "To me," Craft explained, "Lillis proved that he had the mark of a good baseball man...when he started losing his players (due to injuries) this season and the ball club looked like it was going to fall on its face and just fall apart — he did not panic; he did not poor-mouth them; he didn't take them apart in the press or the media and he stayed with them and let them know he was behind them and finally he gained their confidence.

"I think they have more confidence now than I've ever seen a ball club have right at this particular time because they are starting to play a little better and Lillis has never lost faith in them.

April's jokes run into July

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Analysis

Here we are smack in the middle of a steamy July, halfway through baseball's marathon summer, and the National League East standings continue to look like an April Fool's joke.

The New York Mets are in first place, winners of 12 of their last 14 games. The Chicago Cubs are second, hot on their trail.

Clearly, there is some mistake here. It is as if some giant hand had reached down from the great dugout in the sky and, on a whim, turned the division upside down, daring baseball to figure it out.

The cute little Cubbies and moribound Mets have held long-term leases on the bottom spots of the division, where one or the other has finished every year since 1977. It has been a decade since the Mets won a pennant and more than four of them since the Cubs did. So what are they suddenly doing at the top?

If this is a joke, the four guys laughing hardest deserve the gufaws. They are General Manager Frank Cashen and Manager Davey Johnson in New York and General Manager Dallas Green and Manager Jim Frey in Chicago.

CASHEN PROMISED eventual metamorphosis for a franchise which has, for some time, resembled the ugly caterpillar instead of the beautiful butterfly.

He resisted rushing some of the team's top minor league prospects, pleading for patience. As a result he has seen the farm system produce young, strong arms — pitchers like Ron Darling, Jesse Orosco, Doug Sisk and Walt Terrell.

Then there is the case of 19-year-old Dwight Gooden, the strikeout sensation who was beaten by Atlanta Sunday. Cashen wanted to wait on him, too, but Johnson was having none of that. The manager fought to keep the kid who had not pitched above Class A until late last season and won his case. Now Gooden is the most exciting pitcher in the league.

Johnson is another story. He was not Cashen's first choice to manage the Mets this season. If he had been, the GM could have named him immediately. He was sitting there in the Mets system all along, having managed the Tidewater farm club last year. But Cashen first went shopping elsewhere, returning to Johnson only after other options had evaporated.

Given the circumstances of his appointment, you might expect Johnson to be a weak manager. Instead, he has been a decisive leader who convinced this young team that it could win and win now. Of course, it has done just that.

In Chicago, Green was derided, especially after he imported all manner of his former players — like Larry Bowa, Keith Moreland, Dick Ruthven and others — from Philadelphia. His team began looking like the Chicago Phillies.

But it made sense because Green knew the Phillies' organization inside out from his years as that club's farm director. At that marketplace, he could be an educated customer.

IN ONE of the trades between the teams, the Phils casually tossed in a minor league infielder named Ryne Sandberg. If you took the Most Valuable Player ballot today, it's a cinch that Sandberg would finish among the leaders.

Outfielders Gary Matthews and Bob Dernier came over, again from the Phils, in a preseason steal of a deal for the Cubs. And Green has traded for pitchers Rick Sutcliffe and Dennis Eckersley since the season started, changing the face of his team in the middle of the race.

The man putting the pieces of the Cubs puzzle together has been Frey, a longtime big league coach who, in his first chance as a manager piloted Kansas City to the American League pennant in 1980.

When the Royals came up flat in 1981, the front office decided Frey was the reason and fired him. So he came to Chicago with a perfect record — one full season as a major league manager and one pennant.

Now his Cubs and Johnson's Mets have readers convinced the standings are being printed in reverse this summer.

Gold pleases 'Mouse'

DENVER (AP) — Darrel "Mouse" Davis, offensive coordinator for the Houston Gamblers, became the Denver Gold's third head coach on Wednesday and promised to infuse the Gold with his potent "run and shoot" offense.

Davis, 51, whose wide-open passing attack at Houston was the most productive in the United States Football League this season, signed a two-year contract at an annual salary believed in excess of $125,000.

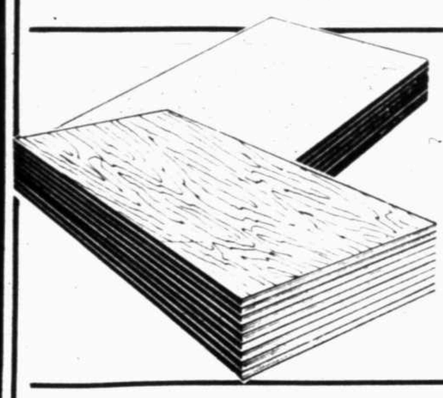

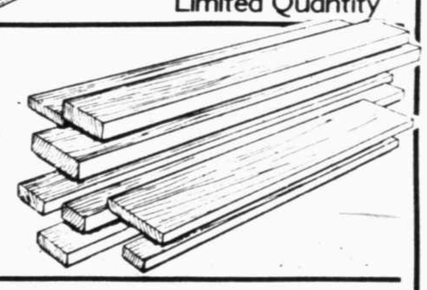

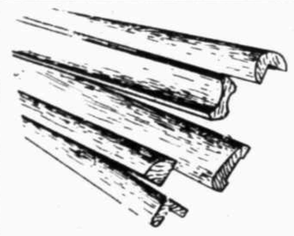

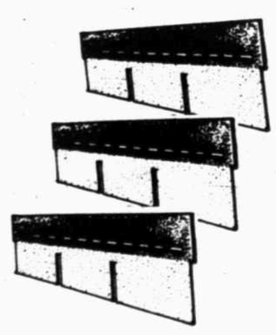

He succeeds Craig Morton, who was fired June 27 after compiling a 12-12 record and who had replaced Red Miller late in the 1983 season.

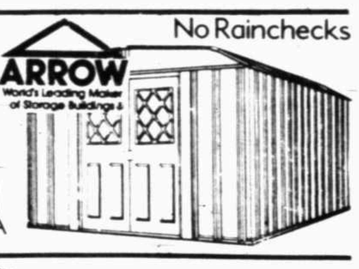

At a Wednesday press conference, Davis said his new job gives him responsibility for the football part of the franchise, with owner Doug Spelding retaining responsibility for business matters. He added that he would hold discussions with assistant coaches on the Gold staff, but likely "won't keep more than two of them. I want to talk to (defensive coordinator) Jim Carr about staying because he's had a lot of experience here."

Davis said he felt the Gold had a "nucleus of talent" upon which to build. "I'll know more once I get more deeply involved in studying the personnel we have now," he said.

"To execute the run-and-shoot, we need kids with great quickness, speed and intelligence, and who love what we're doing. We'll be exciting. More speed on the field means more touchdowns, and that means more fans in the stands and that means more fun."

Artrain plans to make local whistle stop

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

A special train transformed into a museum on wheels featuring quality art works will pull into Midland-Odessa Oct. 10 for a four-day stay.

"The Artrain is the nation's only art museum on a train," Jim Tottis of Artrain said in a Wednesday interview. Tottis was in town to work with representatives from the two sponsoring agencies — the Midland Arts Assembly and the Odessa Cultural Council.

Conceived by the Michigan Council for the Arts in 1971, Artrain became a non-profit corporation in 1975.

"Our primary function is to tour throughout the country, bringing museum class art to the various cities who sponsor us. We also have an extensive education program for the elementary schools."

Thrust of the educational program is, Tottis said, "to give elementary children a first hand experience of going to a museum so they become more comfortable and understand what a museum is. They can then enjoy it in the future."

The work on display in the Artrain, however, is geared to appeal to all ages.

"It is museum class art; it is not a show geared toward children so it would be similar to any gallery show you'd see in any museum. What is geared toward children is the education program."

The five-car train contains two shows.

"Creative Impulse" is a 100 year overview of American art which covers the major periods and styles. One of the leading sculptors represented is Frederic Remington. Works by Thomas Hart Benton, Jacques Lipchitz and Andy Warhol are also included.

"The other show is 'Texas on Our Mind: Contemporary Visions of the Lone Star State.' This show deals solely with contemporary artists in Texas, representing some of the finest artists who not only work here but take their imagery from Texas ideas and are somewhat represented on the national basis as well.

Jim Tottis

"This show will make up the majority of what's on the train and we're very excited about it," Tottis said, adding that the exhibit consists primarily of two-dimensional pieces and some sculptures.

Midland-Odessa is one stop on the 10-city tour of "Texas on Our Mind." Those who don't see this year's exhibit will miss it, because each year Artrain changes its exhibitions. Artrain does not own any art; all work is on loan. Next year, Artrain will feature replicas of baroque instruments and musical themes represented in art.

"We do not go in for reproductions or photographs or transparencies," Tottis said. "It's very similar to a gallery that you would go into. You have that same feeling. You don't get the feeling you're on a train. We've tried to conquer that."

The public tours four of the five cars, beginning with an audio visual presentation, before entering the Creative Impulse Gallery.

"All the work is behind glass. There is either display cases or the work is hung and mounted in a system which we have developed behind plate glass. There are guides to take the tours through or, if you go through on your own, they're there to answer any questions you might have."

Artrain is funded through foundation grants such as Texas Commission on the Arts and from within the communities it tours. The organization relies on public as well as major corporate support, such as the free ride it receives from the railroads. The Texas tour is made possible through the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway, the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Missouri Pacific Railroad, a division of the Union Pacific system. The suggested donation of $2 for adults and $1 for children is not a mandatory admission price.

"When the children go through on tour there is never any mention of the donation," Tottis said.

Half of the $6,000 cost to the sponsoring agencies is picked up by TCA. When asked how the Midland Arts Assembly plans on raising the rest of the amount, Norma Webb, executive director for the assembly, said no decision has been reached at this time.

Wednesday's training session was designed to "iron out any questions or problems" the local steering committees might have in advance of the October dates, to train docents to go into the schools to preview Artrain for the classes and to train the guides who will work on the train.

Anti-cavity vaccine on the way

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The breakthrough is drawing near, but until an oral vaccine that will eliminate cavities is actually approved by the Food and Drug Administration, many local dentists are proceeding with caution.

Continuous studies into the causes of tooth decay have been conducted since several dentists now practicing in Midland were still in dental school. But at Emory University in Atlanta, oral biologists believe they are close to developing a vaccine that would speed up the body's natural immunization against cavities.

Their theory is that cavities are caused when a bacteria in the saliva, Streptococcus mutans, reacts with refined sugar and forms cavities. When saliva is swallowed, antibodies are released in the body to destroy the bacteria.

"The problem is they can't just wipe out this one particular strain of bacteria," said Dr. Randell W. Bell, Midland dentist. "But they're getting very, very close to something."

Adults have fewer cavities than children because they have been swallowing the Streptococcus mutans for years, resulting in the release of a great number of antibodies and a natural immunization against cavities, the Atlanta researchers speculate.

"It's a theory," said Dr. Larry Z. Rusk, Midland dentist. "I don't have enough information to give an opinion on it...but what they're trying to do is great — and they're not going to give up."

"It is an interesting theory," said Dr. Phillip R. Everett, another local dentist, "and it makes sense. The whole idea of creating an antibody in the mouth to fight bacteria has been the idea behind most of the research."

According to Emory University's news services department, Dr. Roland R. Arnold, chairman of the Department of Oral Biology, believes that after swallowing, the body produces antibodies that circulate in the body's secretions, such as saliva, and reduce the number of decay-causing bacteria in the mouth.

Oral vaccines may boost the body's immunization process, said Arnold, one of the researchers who developed a similar vaccine that proved successful in experiments with rats.

In lab experiments with adults, the oral vaccine has boosted the antibody levels, but, to prevent cavities in children, it would have to be taken before their permanent teeth develop, according to an article in the May issue of Science Digest.

"That is a very accepted theory," Dr. Nelson W. Rupp of the American Dental Association National Bureau of Standards research unit in Maryland said. "But the Streptococcus mutans is not the only strain of decay. It is the major strain but there are others."

According to Rupp, several dental schools and research departments have been working on the vaccine for years. "It's very much experimental still. But it's a viable approach, this business of developing an antibody in the saliva that would attack this bacteria."

When the bacteria feeds on refined sugar or other carbohydrates (such as breads, cakes and doughy foods that stick to teeth), an acid develops that breaks down the tooth enamel, local dentists said. This allows the cavity to form within the tooth.

"That's the whole theory behind brushing after every meal," Bell said. "It only takes 30 minutes before the acid starts developing."

Defendant testifies woman consented to have sex with him

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 35-year-old West Odessa man on trial for aggravated rape testified Wednesday, during the final day of testimony in an Ector County district court, that his alleged victim consented to have sex with him.

Thomas Lee Capps, 35, denied he kicked down the door of the 33-year-old woman's trailer, instead telling jurors he accidentally fell against the door, then inside the residence about 1:30 a.m., Aug. 20, 1983.

Capps, a divorced father of two who is profiled in a Department of Public Safety publication on the Bandido's motorcycle club, claimed the woman had a history of promiscuity in the community, which lies outside of the Odessa in the western part of the county.

"I was kind of under the weather, I was drunk," said Capps, recalling that he went to the woman's trailer house to get a ride home after his pick-up truck had broken down.

When asked why he chose to awake the woman whom he had met one time about six months ago, rather than walk the three blocks that separated their residences, Capps said, "I don't know. I wished I would have."

"She could've left anytime she wanted to," he said. The alleged sexual assault took place at Capps' home, where they drove from the trailer in the woman's car, according to testimony.

Two nurses, the final witnesses expected to be called, testified the woman had an abnormal amount of loose hair on the top of her head when they administered a rape test to her at the county hospital. One said the woman's jaw was "puffy" during the examination.

The medical report prepared by the examining physician mentioned no injuries to the mouth or jaw. The alleged victim testified Capps struck her in the jaw, chipping her tooth, then dragged her by the hair of her head.

The jury is scheduled to begin deliberating this morning, with Capps facing a maximum sentence of life imprisonment and a $10,000 fine if found guilty. He was also indicted for aggravated kidnapping and burglary of a habitation in the same incident.

United Way announces pilot campaign

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

The United Way of Midland tried to get a running start Wednesday on its 1984 fund-raising goal of $1.95 million by announcing the start of its pilot campaign at the Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The United Way hopes to raise about $500,000 through the pilot campaign, a preliminary fund-raising program to be conducted by 24 local companies between now and the start of the general campaign in September.

"This is the momentum we have to build to get the whole job done," said Campaign Chairman Joe O'Neill.

The pilot campaign is designed to raise about 25 percent of the total goal while giving organizers an indication of how well the general campaign might go. It also gives volunteers a chance to practice for the fall campaign, said Pilot Campaign Chairman George Irish.

"The pilot campaign has two objectives — to provide us with an exciting start for the fall campaign, and to kick off that campaign with a substantial part of the goal already reached," Irish said.

The companies participating in this year's pilot campaign are Adobe Oil and Gas Corp., ARCO Oil and Gas Corp., the City of Midland, Clay-Desta National Bank, Dawson Geophysical Co., Earle M. Craig Jr. Corp., Elcor/Ortloff, Exxon Co. USA, First City National Bank, Forest Oil Corp., HBF Construction, HBF Corporation, HNG Oil Co., Midland Memorial Hospital, O'Neill Properties Ltd., the Permian Corp., RepublicBank First National, Southwestern Bell, Sun Oil, Texas Electric Service Co., Texas American Bank, Tom Brown Inc., United Bank and Williamson Petroleum Consultants.

This old fogey resists headlong rush to change

I've been accused, and justly so, of being an old fogey. I'm resistant to change but not without cause.

Had I been around at outset of the automotive age, I think I would have seriously considered being converted to the Old Order Amish, would have been a disciple of the Ordnung (rules), would have foregone telephones and electric power and would have been content to crack the whip as opposed to turning the crank in getting going.

I'm not sure progress is getting us anywhere. Sure, we're going places faster than before and are getting information and entertainment in an instant, but what does it avail us? Instant pleasure, aggravation or monotony?

Had I been around in the 1400s when Johannes Gutenberg invented the type mold and got book printing in high gear, I might have thought of him as I now think of computer scientists and technicians: Why do we need printing presses and type when we have plenty of quills, ink wells, parchment and scribes to duplicate manuscripts? Why do we need computers and calculators when we've got plenty of mechanical gadgets, such as the typewriter, abacus, slide rule, and pencil and paper?

As it is, I much prefer the principles behind Gutenberg's methods to this computerized system and offset process which we now have. Who would have even fantasized in the 1950s, when television was gaining momentum, that in three decades we would be looking into a cathode-ray screen while we're at work typing, at home playing and punching "commands" on the keyboard and watching figures, letters and graphics appear on the screen?

Yes, I prefer the old coal-burning steam locomotive over the more efficient diesel-electric engine. One has romance, a good beat and rhythm. The other just moves down the rails as if it were a jazz band devoid of music and form.

Take a common example: the grocery store. At these corporate-owned supermarkets, the dumb-waiter computer does most of the talking and the "thinking" via programs. The clerk passes package after package over the scanner, prices are recorded and "voiced" by a computer, which spits out your bill, and notes any change due.

The clerk takes your money or check and says thank you. But from the way some clerks handle my merchandise, I'm not convinced they're sincere. Perhaps they're just reflecting management.

For now, we can be grateful to the backroads of America for not yet allowing computerization to swamp rural America. If the Grover brothers up at Lenorah were to computerize their rustic general store, the quaintness would be gone for good. If our neighbors, such as Stanton, Rankin, Garden City and Patricia, were to suddenly come into the computer age, rural America would lose part of its charm.

When was the last time you heard a "real" cash register ring up. That certainly has more character than the gibberish of computers spitting out tapes.

What in the world is the advantage to all of this progress? I have no idea. It's just change and evolvement, improvement in a technical sense, but certainly offers no aesthetic enhancement.

I had just as soon back up in years, pump up fuel into a gravity-flow pump at the neighborhood filling station, and let her rip.

American agriculture might be considerably improved if more folks returned to the farm, hooked up work horses and mules, and followed the ploughs — not plows. That would get corporations out of farming. You might have poorer but happier farmers who weren't always so deeply in debt with the banker and looking for another government loan or program to stave off a state of being "plumb broke." You can be sure more folks would have home gardens and would learn home canning. Necessity would work wonders. Disposable items would be obsolete.

But we're too busy rushing to nowhere. We're manipulated into believing that "time is money," so we climb aboard a jet aircraft to beat the competition.

Win or lose the race, what do we do? Rush again to nowhere. We get exhaused.

With all of our so-called progress, we have taken on more liabilities than we, old fogeys or not, can handle. We have polluted our well and cistern waters, insulted our lakes and rivers with our waste and indifference, fouled up our air, and are littering our streets, countryside and outer space with our garbage.

Have we no respect for the Earth, sea, air, the heavens and ourselves?

Has progress made us so callous or is it just coincidental?

The more technically sophisticated we "evolve," it seems the less aware we are of living in harmony with nature and the less inclined we are to challenge change. We have forgotten to ask "why." We old fogeys hear the rationalizations but fail to understand or, at least, appreciate the reasoning. We protest change but, unlike the Luddites of 19th century Britain, we don't get out our axes and sledgehammers and destroy symbols of progress.

We just hem and haw, image how good it used to be and rush backward into oblivion.

That's good. For every one of us, there's a thousand folks rushing headlong into today's world and beyond and a smattering of visionaries seeing opportunities in change.

Hail to going backward.

Policewoman to wed patrolman despite rule

PASADENA, Texas (AP) — A policewoman says she expects to be fired because she will wed her patrolman fiance despite a city rule that bars married couples from working for the Pasadena police department.

U.S. District Judge Norman Black upheld the regulation Wednesday, although he commented, "It's a harsh rule."

Gail Mahaffey, 31, a personnel and training officer in the Pasadena police academy, wept outside the courtroom after the decision in the one-day trial.

"Obviously I'll get fired, because we're getting married," she said.

Her fiance, motorcycle patrolman Larry Kello, 36, looked grim as he agreed.

"We've already canceled one wedding date," he said. "We're disappointed because we wanted the rule changed so bad. It's obvious the judge thinks it's unfair, and everyone else does, too."

Miss Mahaffey is a six-year veteran and Kello a nine-year veteran on the Pasadena force.

The 1974 Pasadena Civil Service Commission ruling they challenged last year says that if two officers marry, the one with the least seniority is subject to automatic resignation.

Shortly before their planned wedding last April, the couple asked Black to enjoin the city from enforcing the no-spouses rule. He refused and the couple put off the nuptials until the trial.

"It has been 1½ years wasted out of our lives," Miss Mahaffey said. "And when you are a police officer, you don't know whether tomorrow will be your last day together."

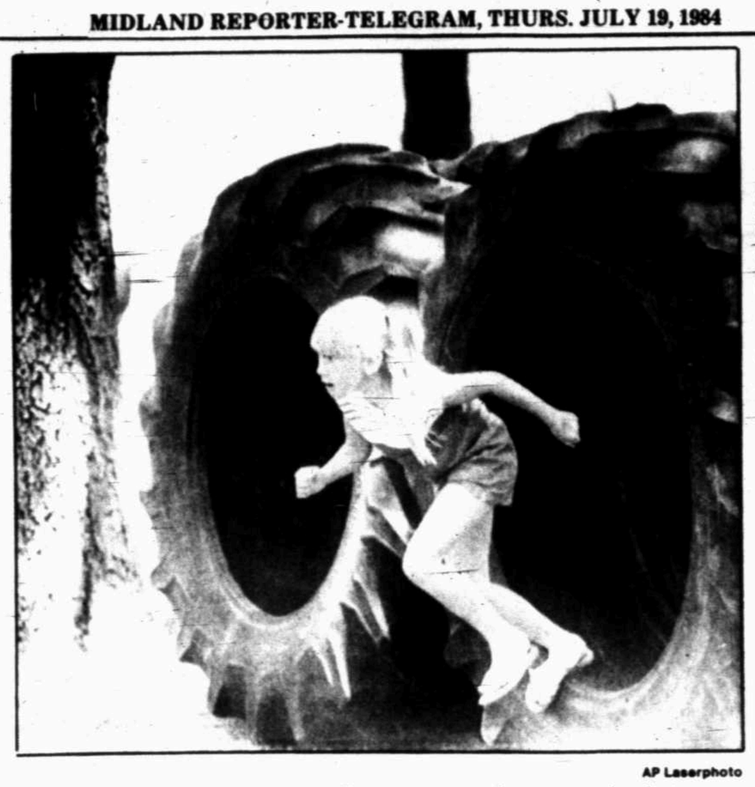

Also challenging the rule were two married couples who have borne its effects: L.J. Stone and wife Kathy and Rick Littlejohn and wife Cherie.

Kathy Stone, unemployed since her marriage, said she will search for a job with the Houston Police Department.

Cherie Littlejohn found a job with the Deer Park Police Department after her marriage forced her resignation from Pasadena.

The couples said they have not decided whether to appeal.

Stefan Presser, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union Houston chapter, argued that Miss Mahaffey and Kello have a "fundamental liberty and privacy interest to marry the one they love."

Flossing between the teeth is important in removing those foods, said Dr. Glen A. Armstrong, Midland dentist. "But it's hard to get people to start flossing their teeth because they grow up being told to brush your teeth."

Until a vaccine is developed that will eliminate the bacteria, local dentists recommended eating crunchy foods like carrots and apples, which, besides being nutritious, provide a natural brushing for the teeth.

Also, studies have shown that good oral hygiene can negate cavities in about 98 percent of the cases, regardless of heredity, Rusk said.

Other health items, such as topical applications like fluoride rinses and mouthwashes "are probably one of the most effective tools introduced," Rusk said. "The next thing that's going to help are these anti-plaque forming toothpastes they're coming out with."

Because tooth enamel is softer while the tooth is developing, children are more susceptible to cavities, Bell said. "As we get older, the phase starts switching. It's the same bacteria and the same chemical processes that go on but they cause peridontal or gum disease (in adults)."

That, too, could be eliminated with the vaccine, dentists said.

"Unfortunately, as in any field, all the experts don't agree," Rusk said. "I do hope in the reasonable future they'll come up with the vaccine. There are so many areas dentists can get into besides fillings that it won't affect a lot of dentists. I think it's the greatest thing that could ever happen."

But until FDA approves the oral vaccine, it is marketed and follow-ups on effectiveness are done, most dentists are not jumping on the bandwagon.

"It's much too early to project the accuracy of this," Rusk said. "Dentists are traditionally very conservative people. When we see it working, and it's approved, then we'll endorse something wholeheartedly. But we have to look beyond around the corner and ask, 'is this going to work in my patient for 10 years, or 20 years?' " and faces rape charges stemming from another sexual assault alleged to have occurred about one month earlier.

TRIAL

A witness, who said she was at one time the woman's friend and currently is friends with Capps, testified the alleged victim "is capable of stretching the truth a little bit, even under oath."

Defense attorney Thomas Hirsch's motion for an instructed verdict of not guilty on the indictment for aggravated rape was denied by 70th District Court Judge Gene Ater. Hirsch maintained Capps should be tried for the lesser included offense of rape because no testimony indicated the defendant had threatened the woman's life if she refused to have sex with him.

Both Capps and the woman testified he had stopped at the trailer house earlier, but had left soon afterward without her. Sheriff's deputies met the woman as she returned to the trailer house after responding to a call she had made when Capps was at her door.

The woman said she had been put temporarily on hold by the sheriff's office, when Capps walked into her bedroom and abducted her.

During his testimony, Capps instructed Ater to have District Attorney Mike Holmes be more specific in his questions, and smiled off and on while recounting the incident.

When court recessed Wednesday, both sides had finished offering evidence. Ater and the attorneys began preparing the charge, which the jury will use in determining Capps' guilt or innocence.

From Staff Reports

Scout Troop 85 received four top awards and two members were singled out for awards when the group attended Scout Summer Camp at Camp Wehinahpay near Cloudcroft, N.M. in June.

Wolf Brand and Page Nine Patrols received the Honor Patrols award; Troop 85 was named the Camp's Honor Troop; the troop received Top Troop Award along with Troop 530 of Lubbock; and the Wolf Patrol received the Top Spirit Patrol Award.

Jake Cullen received the Scout Spirit Award while John Curtis received the Robin Hood Award as the top marksman in archery.

Troop 85 is sponsored by the First Presbyterian Church of Midland.

This was the first time it had attended Camp Wehinahpay and the first time the scouts have attended a summer camp outside the Buffalo Trails District. Scoutmaster Paul Thompson and assistant John Cullen attended along with 17 scouts. The troop garnered a total of six scouting skill awards, 35 scout merit badges and four scout rank advancements.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A minister missing for a week was reported seen at a motel and restaurant in Electra, Texas, last Thursday, police say.

Wesley Barrett "Barre" Cox, 33, has been missing since the early-morning hours of last Thursday when he refused aid from a law enforcement officer. He had run out of gas on a West Texas highway.

Shooting leaves one man dead

From Staff Reports

One man is dead and another is in custody after a shooting incident at a southside apartment complex Wednesday night.

Police said they were called to the Columbia Apartments at 1905 S. Colorado shortly before midnight and found 38-year-old Terrance Elsworth Nassett lying on the living room floor of an apartment.

He had been shot once in the chest with a .22 caliber revolver about two hours earlier and was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine. The gun was taken into evidence.

A 51-year-old oilfield worker arrested at the scene told officers he had shot Nassett, according to police. But the suspect had been drinking and was unable to give a reason for the shooting.

Formal charges are expected to be filed sometime today. Nassett's body was taken to the Thomas Funeral Home.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday upheld the 12-year sentence for aggravated robbery assessed Bobby Eugene Williams for the Oct. 5, 1978, robbery of an Ector County convenience store employee.

The court reported Williams threatened the employee with an ice pick and sexually abused her before fleeing after a customer arrived at the store.

In his appeal, Williams argued the evidence was insufficient to show that he used a deadly weapon, and complained of arguments by the prosecutor.

The appeals court rejected the contentions and affirmed the conviction.

Two judges dissented, arguing the charge to the jury regarding the ice pick didn't require the jury to determine that it was in fact used as a deadly weapon.

O'Neill told the company executives to emphasize to their employees that most of the money raised stays in Midland, that the agencies funded serve a broad spectrum of the community, and that these agencies depend on the United Way for a large part of their budgets.

"Most of them wouldn't exist without the United Way," said O'Neill. "On the average, we provide 42 percent of their budgets."

United Way of Midland serves about 20 agencies in Midland, including the American Cancer Society, the American Red Cross, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, the Boy Scouts of America, the Boys Club, Camp Fire Inc., Casa de Amigos, Community Day Nursery, the Council on Alcoholism, Family Services, the Midland Rape Crisis Center, the Palmer Drug Abuse Program, the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Permian Basin Girl Scouts, the Salvation Army, the Tape Lending Library, the West Texas Epilepsy Association and the four YMCAs.

"We need to educate our employees about where the money goes," said O'Neill. "Thirty thousand people were affected by United Way activites in Midland last year."

There will be two report rallies, on August 9 and August 23, before the pilot campaign ends and the fall campaign begins on September 10, said Irish.

Lawyer: Briton who aided in oil scam was desperate

HOUSTON (AP) — A Briton who admits he lied to a grand jury to help a Mercedes dealer cover up the alleged theft of $56 million in crude oil by sinking a tanker in 1980 was desperate for money, his attorney says.

James Hillary Shorrock pleaded guilty Wednesday to a single count of conspiring to obstruct justice by lying to a grand jury. Shorrock, who prosecutors say acted as a broker in Soudan's dealings to procure oil for the embargoed South African government, set the stage to testify against two other men in a trial set for Aug. 6.

U.S. District Judge Carl O. Bue deferred Shorrock's sentencing until after his testimony in the upcoming trial. Shorrock could get five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Defense attorney Tom Berg said Shorrock was a "financially desperate man" who was conned by Frederick Ed Soudan and Soudan's brother-in-law, Abdul Wahab Al Ghazou.

Soudan, 40, a Missouri City, Texas auto dealer, is the alleged mastermind of the scheme, which prosecutors charge involved sinking a tanker off the coast of Senegal Jan. 17, 1980.

Soudan's role in the incident, which cost the South African government and Shell International Trading Co. millions, has been continuously investigated by several governments. He was indicted in May.

Soudan and Ghazou, charged with numerous offenses, remain jailed in lieu of bond.

Berg said Shorrock was a victim of Soudan's double-dealing and that Soudan contracted for his help in setting up contracts, then refused to pay him.

Berg said Shorrock was desperate to recoup about $240,000 owed his company by Soudan, so he agreed to lie on behalf of Soudan in grand jury proceedings.

Professor says tenure denied due to race

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — A former Tarleton State University professor who is suing the university and the Texas A&M System was denied tenure because there were doubts about his his professional competence — not because he is black, school officials say.

Dr. James W. Shores, described in the suit as Tarleton's "first black full-time faculty member," contends he was denied tenure in May 1983 because he is black and because he opposes a "prejudiced" secret student organization.

Shores filed the suit against Tarleton and the Texas A&M system Friday in Fort Worth federal court.

An assistant professor of criminal justice for four years, Shores said he was not granted tenure because of his advocacy of black students and his opposition to the Purple Poo, a campus organization formed in 1922 whose members wear purple, hooded robes to mask their identities.

The lawsuit claims the purpose of the Poo is to "advertise the university was a school for whites and to discourage black participation in the university, including black membership in its tenured faculty."

Tarleton State President Barry B. Thompson denied Shores' accusations.

He said Shores was not granted tenure because "there were deep reservations about his professional competence and the way he was grading. He was known as the easy 'A.'"

Thompson, who was a member of the Poo 30 years ago, called the former Tarleton professor's comments "a purple herring."

"Dr. Shores has no perception of the function of the Purple Poo," he said. "I can say without any equivocation it is not a racist group. There's a lot of humor in the organization. They sometimes make derogatory comments about the president."

He said the group appears at pep rallies, posts pre-game signs and raises money for school endowment, and that it also has some minority members.

Lufkin seeks to block Klan from center

LUFKIN (AP) — U.S. Rep. Charles Wilson says the presence of the Ku Klux Klan has "debased" the Lufkin Civic Center, and he and the city commission are seeking to block the group from using the building again.

A Klan group rented the civic center for a recruitment session last weekend, which was attended by about 30 people without incident.

Wilson has pledged his support to keep it from happening again.

"I don't want the Klan in there any more than anybody else does," Mayor Pitser Garrison said Tuesday. "It's the most objectionable, reprehensible, and all of the bad names I can think of.

"But we've got an obligation to protect their constitutional rights," he said.

Group may appeal lifting of injunction against dam

TYLER (AP) — An environmental group says it is pondering whether to appeal a ruling that lifts a 13-year-old injunction against the construction of a dam on the Sulphur River.

The ban was dissolved Monday by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which overturned a 1981 decision by U.S. District Judge Wayne Justice, of Tyler, who granted a permanent injunction on environmental grounds.

"It was a project that was moving along at a steady clip when it caught up in that injunction 12 years ago," engineer Jack Hussey told the Tyler Morning Telegraph on Wednesday.

The appeals court said that Justice erred by ruling on the merits of an environmental impact statement, said Carl Riehn, executive director of the North Texas Municipal Water District, a partner on the proposed construction of Cooper Lake.

The lake would take six years to complete and would provide an additional water source for several Dallas area cities served by the water district, including Mesquite, Garland, Richardson, Plano, McKinney, Allen and Rockwall, Riehn said.

Attorneys for the Texas Committee on Natural Resources, who sued the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in 1971 to halt construction because engineers failed to write an environmental impact statement, said they have not decided whether to appeal the court's decision.

The dam will provide a pool of 273,000 acre-feet of water, with a reserve capacity to hold 131,400 acre-feet in flood stage. The proposed construction costs are $115 million for a dam that will back up 27 miles of the Sulphur River in Delta and Hopkins Counties, said corps spokeswoman Sally Gerst.

Mattox sues district clerk over child support cases

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox has sued Harris County's district clerk over his refusal to file child support enforcement cases under terms dictated by the state.

Mattox filed suit in the 55th state District Court in Houston Wednesday. He sought a writ of mandamus that would compel Ray Hardy to accept child support enforcement cases without Texas paying the filing fee at the time the cases are filed.

"I'd like to get this over with — the sooner the better," Hardy said. A hearing is scheduled Aug. 2.

Hardy says Texas statute requires him to collect the average filing fee of $106 up front, but Mattox says the fee is security for court costs and therefore is not due until the case is resolved.

At issue is about $5,000 in filing fees owed Harris County by Mattox's local office for child support cases filed the past six months. Since Mattox's staff plans to begin filing about 200 such cases a week in Harris County.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

No real cure exists for Alzheimer's disease

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it true that there is a special diet that can cure a person who has Alzheimer's disease? — Claude, Niagara Falls, N.Y.

Dear Claude: Alzheimer's disease is progressive and, at present, there is no cure for it, dietary or otherwise. However, this does not mean that these patients cannot be helped in some fashion.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you tell me which foods contain lecithin? I've heard it can help prevent hardening of the arteries. — Lil, Montreal

Dear Lil: Lecithin is found naturally in eggs, soybeans, liver, and nuts. In addition, it is used as an additive in chocolate, baked products, and mayonnaise.

If you feel you have a medical problem such as hardening of the arteries, I suggest you see a physician instead of trying to treat yourself with lecithin or anything else.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I play handball regularly, and I play hard. When I do play, it seems to me that I drink oceans of water. It doesn't bother me in any way, but I'm just wondering if I might not be hurting myself by having too much. — Casey, Huntingin, N.Y.

Dear Casey: It is almost impossible to drink too much water, so drink as much as you comfortably can. Your kidneys will simply excrete any excess water. The problem in this area is that people usually drink too little water rather than too much water.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I can understand why you warn people not to take vitamins or minerals unless they are recommended by a doctor. But there has been so much written about bone loss in older women that I am beginning to wonder if the food we eat can provide enough of the calcium we need. I am 60 years of age and would appreciate any suggestions you might make. — Mrs. D.V., St. Paul, Minn.

Dear Mrs. V.: Dr. Gerald Glowacki, chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at Franklin Square Hospital in Baltimore, recommends that all menopausal women take a calcium supplement. He further suggests that it all be taken before going to bed since the absorption of calcium from the gastro-intestinal tract largely occurs between midnight and 7 a.m.

However, I would not advise you to start taking a calcium supplement without first discussing it with your physician. There may be reasons why this practice might not be advisable in specific cases. The fact that something may be good for most people does not necessarily mean that it would be good for all people.

For Carla, Lexington, Kentucky: The results of a Finnish study of 70 infants indicate that an exclusive diet of breast milk until an infant is six months of age may prevent the development of food allergies in children who are at heredity risk for them.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Museum captures bit of past

NEW YORK (AP) — Remember Beatles on Ed Sullivan? Remember the Kennedy-Nixon debates? Remember "I Love Lucy" before it went into reruns?

The Museum of Broadcasting in Manhattan brings the original tapes of these programs and some 22,000 other television and radio shows back to the public.

There's no other broadcasting museum in the world that offers the public a chance to view its entire collection, said Robert M. Batscha, the museum's president.

"This isn't an archive, but a collection. And we don't try to collect everything — just the most significant. We look for the shows that represent the best trends popular at the time," Batscha said.

The Museum of Broadcasting was founded in 1976 by William S. Paley, at the time chairman of CBS, who was concerned with the preservation of radio and television programs. Paley wanted a place for the public to listen to and view the electronically recorded history and culture of the times, said Batscha.

Early radio programs in the collection include a 1920 campaign speech by Franklin Delano Roosevelt and an eyewitness account of the 1937 Hindenburg disaster.

Others range from a rare 1944 showing of Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra to the clowning of Lucille Ball, Milton Berle, Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca in the 1950s.

The 1960s tapes show the Jacqueline Kennedy tour of the White House by CBS. Also much of the four-day coverage of President Kennedy's assassination can be viewed. And there is much of the early space coverage by the networks.

Recent acquisitions by the museum include "Gunsmoke" and "Charlie's Angels" as part of its contract with the three TV networks which supply some 300 hours of programs to the museum each year.

The networks are a major financial support, said Batscha. In addition, network representatives, including Paley, are active on the board of trustees.

Other financial support comes through the National Endowment for the Arts, Paramount Pictures and Columbia Pictures productions. Also the museum's 2,000 members and 100,000 yearly visitors make donations, Batscha said.

Many of those visitors come in school groups, said Kari Haukaas, an assistant at the museum.

The museum offers seminars, including some given by the stars themselves. This year Lucille Ball gave a series of talks and people waited for tickets beginning at 3 a.m. the previous day.

Most of the time school groups that come in to one of the several viewing rooms set up with TV sets and earphones want to see "Star Wars," Ms. Haukaas said. Since the museum's movie collection is restricted to televiion films, she suggests they watch a program on the making of "Star Wars."

"But it's really scary when you have students so young that when they watch a tape of the Beatles on the Ed Sullivan Show (in 1964) they don't even know who the Beatles were," Ms. Haukaas said.

"It's quite engaging to watch people who weren't born yet or who were too young to remember John Kennedy's assassination watch it for the first time here. I think they begin to realize what their parents went through at the time," said Batscha.

Video to teach breakdancing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Is your "moonwalk" something short of Michael Jackson's? Do you want to learn "poppin'," "lockin'" and "breakin'" without lingerin' on inner city sidewalks?

A new K-Tel videocassette promises to initiate you into the mysteries of break dancing in the privacy of your own home.

"Breakdancing — You Can Do It" was filmed in a dance studio rather than outdoors because its young instructor, "Soul Train" regular Odis Medley, feels his art has been associated mistakenly with street life rather than other forms of dance.

Financier buys large stake in Disney Productions

Los Angeles Times,
Washington Post News Service

BURBANK, Calif. — Minneapolis financier Irwin L. Jacobs confirmed Wednesday that he and four associates have bought a 5.8 percent stake in Walt Disney Productions for nearly $83.5 million.

In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Jacobs said that the purchases were an investment and that he has "no present intention to seek control of the company."

The 43-year-old businessman said in a telephone interview that he and his close associates are acting alone, and have retained no investment banking company to line up funds or allies for additional purchases.

Jacobs, however, is renowned for launching takeovers and occasionally liquidating the companies he acquires, and he has told the SEC that he may buy more Disney stock.

One investment banker said privately that he expects Jacobs to try to unseat the current Disney board in order to gain control long enough to sell off some of the company's major entertaiment assets and pocket hefty fees as a liquidator.

Financial community sources question Jacobs' financial ability to make a tender offer for the company, because the largest takeover he has attempted publicly was an unsuccessful $271 million bid last year for Kaiser Steel Corp. At today's prices, all of Disney's stock is worth about $2 billion.

Jacobs said Wednesday, however, that his pattern of liquidating companies "is a thing of the past." He currently operates more than 40 companies.

Burbank-based Disney, which fought off an unwelcome suitor last month, had only one public reaction to the news of Jacobs' investment. "He's clearly stated what his intentions are as an investor and we have to take the gentleman at his word," Erwin Okun, Disney vice president, said.

Okun refused to comment on thinly veiled criticism of Disney management that Jacobs included in his SEC filing. Jacobs said that he considered Disney's stock undervalued, in part as "a result of certain recent actions taken by the company's management."

In his filing, Jacobs made a point of stating that he would not resell his shares to the company, in an apparent message to Disney management that he is not a "greenmailer" who will go away if the company buys his shares for a premium.

Disney last month paid $325 million to repurchase the 11.1 percent stake of dissident shareolder Saul P. Steinberg, after that New York financier had threatened to launch an unfriendly tender offer. That sum included a $32 million profit and $28 million in expenses, provoking a rash of shareholder lawsuits that accuse Disney directors of wasting corporate assets.

In response to a reporter's question, a top Jacobs lieutenant confirmed Wednesday that Jacobs had agreed to lend $35 million to the Steinberg group, and collected a 1 percent fee after Steinberg dropped his tender offer effort.

But Gerald A. Schwalback, executive vice president of Jacobs Management Corp., said in a telephone interview that the Jacobs group was contacted by an investment banker on Steinberg's behalf, and "we never talked to him" or "shared any information."

Jacobs said that he has not lined up any allies or had any conversations with the wealthy Bass family of Ft. Worth, Texas, which holds a 5.49 percent stake in Disney.

Both the Arvida deal, and a still-pending merger with Gibson Greetings Inc., appeared designed to discourage unfriendly takeovers by incurring debt and placing stock in the hands of presumably friendly investors.

But a knowledgeable source told the Los Angeles Times Wednesday that "The Basses have had reservations about the Gibson deal and have expressed them to management, and have urged them not to proceed."

When asked whether Disney's management has been advised of any reservations on the part of the Bass family, Okun declined comment.

Disney shares were the seventh most actively traded issue Wednesday on the New York Stock Exchange. The price of the stock closed at $54.375, up $1.50 on a volume of 900,500 shares.

Bass rescue of Continental ruled out

CHICAGO (AP) — Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. ruled out a private rescue Wednesday amid reports that a federal agency may end up owning 80 percent of the financially troubled bank.

Bass Brothers Enterprises Inc. of Texas had been mentioned prominently in recent days as one of a number of private investors who could participate in the rescue of Continental, once the nation's seventh-largest bank.

But Edward S. Bottum, president of the bank holding company Continental Illinois Corp., said Wednesday that Bass Brothers — which has extensive interests in oil and gas exploration, real estate, hotels and ranches and major stock holdings — is "not an active participant."

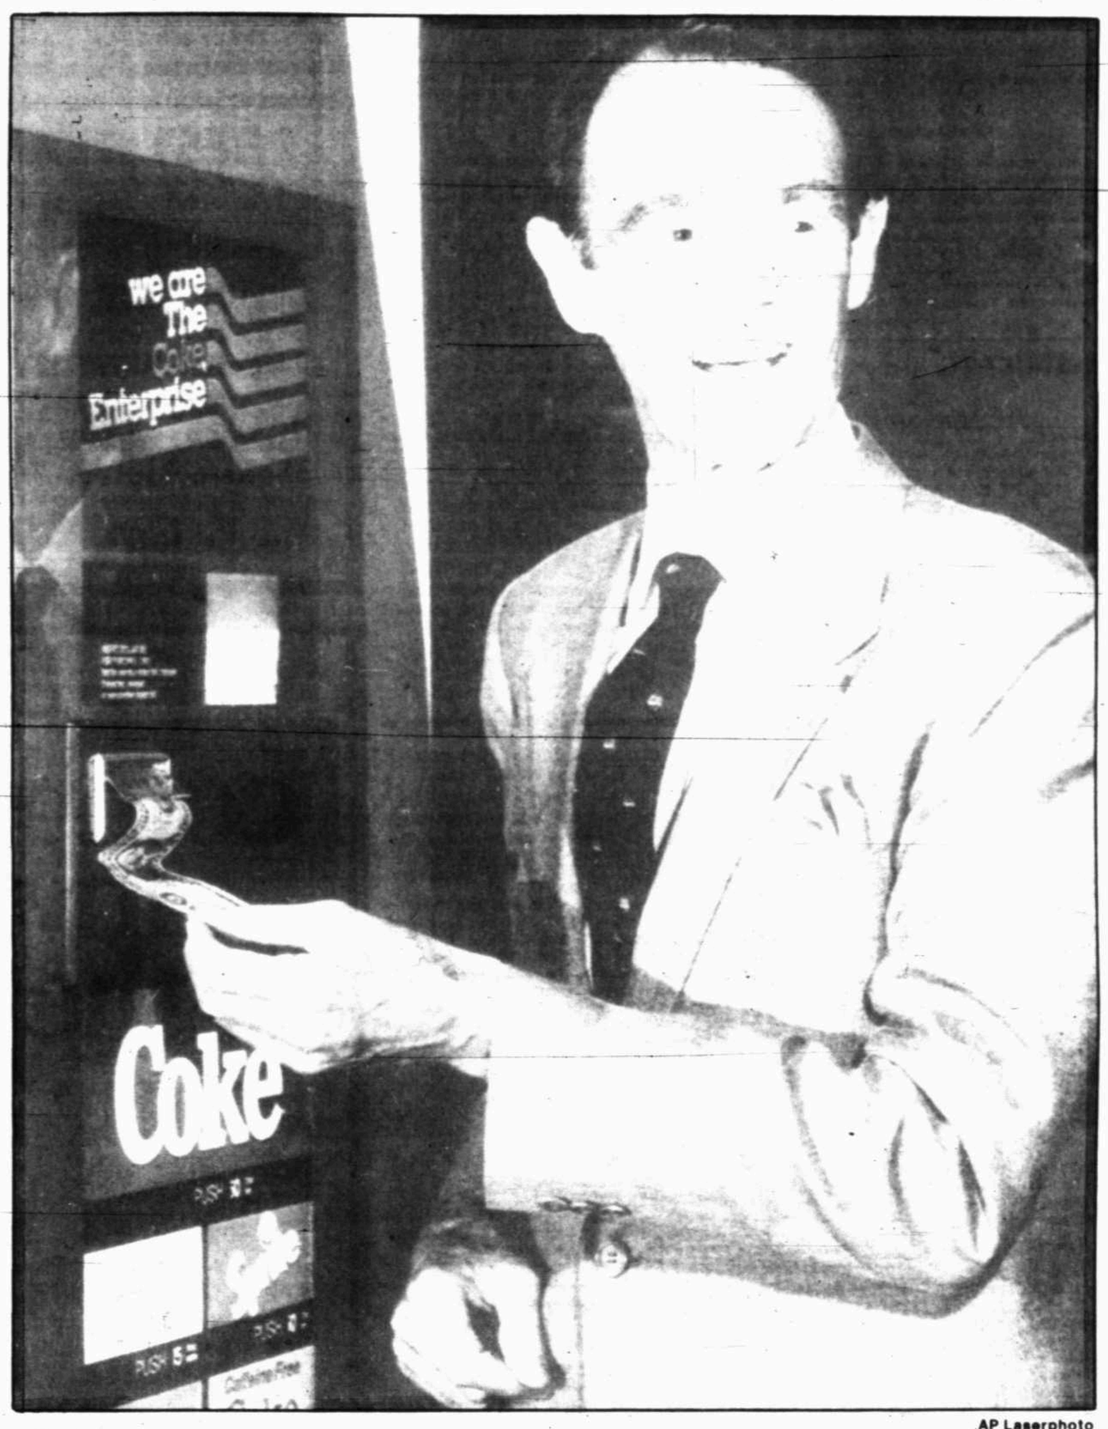

"Their proposal didn't fit the needs at this stage," he added.

Bass declined to comment on the talks, spokeswoman Viki Slate said Wednesday at company headquarters in Fort Worth, Texas.

The failure to reach agreement with Bass Brothers left federal regulators as Continental's sole remaining negotiating partner, according to sources who would comment Wednesday only on condition they not be identified.

The New York Times reported Wednesday that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. already has presented Continental with a plan under which the FDIC would assume liability for the bank's problem loans in exchange for controlling interest — reportedly at least 80 percent.

Under such a plan, stockholders would lose 80 percent of their equity and bank management likely would change, the newspaper said.

Coke claims to have their largest share of the soft drink market ever, at 36.5 percent, and reported a 1983 income of $558.8 million.

Oil companies bid $1.2 billion for tracts

HOUSTON (AP) — Eighty-seven companies have bid a total of $1.2 billion to lease drilling rights on 30 million acres of federal offshore property.

High bids in the lease sale by the Department of the Interior Wednesday totaled $945.7 million.

As expected, the bids did not match the $1.55 billion bid at a similar auction last year when 102 companies made offers. More than 2,000 people showed up to watch John Rankin, an Interior Department official, open and announce the 593 bids submitted by 87 companies.

Leases offered involved in the auction are 10 miles to 222 miles off the coast in a band from western Louisiana to Brownsville at the southern tip of Texas.

The sale was permitted to proceed despite a federal suit by the State of Texas that sought to block it.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox filed suit in federal court attempting to block the auction because he contended the method used by the Interior Department would cheat Texas out of revenue.

Mattox claimed that the Interior system of offering large "area-wide" leases instead of smaller tracts would prevent smaller companies from participating. By including the small companies, he said, the prices bid would be driven higher, thereby producing more revenue for the state and federal governments.

U.S. District Judge Robert Parker, however, ruled on Monday that the method used by the Department of Interior complies with federal law. The judge gave Texas two weeks to file written briefs and federal officials then would have two weeks to respond. Parker reserved the right to throw out the bids if he rules in Texas' favor.

Airline reports strong earnings hike

The Associated Press

USAir Group and AMR Corp. parent company of American Airlines, on Wednesday reported strong earnings increases in the second quarter of the year as the recovery continued to buoy the airlines.

In Fort Worth, Texas, AMR, reported second-quarter net earnings were $71.4 million, an 80 percent jump over net of $39.6 million for the same period of 1983.

USAir, based in Washington, said its second-quarter profit was $39 million, its best quarter in history and a 40 percent increase over the $28 million it earned in the second quarter of 1983.

AMR said the only time its second-quarter earnings were higher was in 1979, when a major competitor was on strike. Earnings per share were $1.36, up from 85 cents.

In the quarter, revenue was $1.36 billion, up from $1.16 billion, while expenses were $1.24 billion, up from $1.1 billion.

"This is the fourth consecutive quarter in which AMR has reported outstanding earnings performance and we are pleased by the continued positive trend," said Chairman Albert V. Casey.

The company's net for the first six months of the year was $131.7 million, or $2.49 a share, the highest in its history.A year ago, first-half net was $11.5 million, or 3 cents a share.

ECONOMY AT A GLANCE

Reagan tax bill leaves shortfall

The Associated Press

A tax bill signed by President Reagan to shave about $60 billion from the massive federal budget deficit through 1987 leaves a shortfall that many credit analysts say is a key cause of high U.S. interest rates.

The nation's strong economy also is cited by analysts as putting upward pressure on rates, and a Commerce Department report of a 5.3 percent rise in housing starts last month appeared to signal further economic expansion.

The jump in new housing construction was paced by a 10-year high in apartment and condominium starts, and reversed a sharp 10.4 percent decline in May, the Commerce Department said Wednesday.

Many experts say the economy's strength is lifting private credit demand at a time when the Treasury is borrowing heavily to finance the deficit. The resulting clash for credit raises interest rates, they say.

The new tax law, signed by Reagan without ceremony, assigns an extra tax burden to investors, savers, telephone users, drinkers and businesses. The law would diminish by 10 percent what is now projected to be a $600 billion deficit over the next three years.

Still pending in Congress are other elements of the "down payment" sought by Republicans and Democrats alike to close the deficit. If compromises are reached on defense spending, pay for government workers and farm price supports, the overall package could be worth $140 billion or more.

The administration is estimating that the 1984 deficit alone will be $177.8 billion.

The June spurt in housing starts was paced by a 32.5 percent surge in construction of buildings with five units or more, such as apartments and condominiums. The latest increase boosted those units to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 710,000 starts, the highest since the 750,000 of September 1973.

The overall increase surprised private analysts, who believed rising mortgage rates in recent months had dampened construction activity by making houses too expensive for many prospective homebuyers.

They pointed to the Commerce Department's report showing starts for single-family homes fell 7.2 percent last month to their lowest level since December. It was the second consecutive drop and almost double May's decline.

Mark Riedy, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, said activity in single-family housing likely would "continue deteriorating" during the second half of the year.

But at the White House, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said the new report "continues to demonstrate that people have confidence in the economy. The continued strength of housing, despite existing rates of interest, shows the resiliency and the underlying strength of the economy."

In other developments Wednesday:

—AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. said it earned $455 million in the second quarter, more than double the $227 million profit it recorded in the first three months of the year.

—U.S. IMPORTS OF PETROLEUM products in June rose 7.9 percent from a year ago and were up 24.7 percent for the first half of 1984, the American Petroleum Institute said. Imports accounted for about 34 percent of U.S. oil consumption in the first half of 1984, up from nearly 29 percent a year earlier, the trade group said.

—WARNER COMMUNICATIONS INC. announced it was omitting a stock dividend for the current quarter to save $16.5 million. The company is still burdened by heavy debt, despite the sale of its loss-ridden Atari Inc. unit.

—PUBLISHER RUPERT MURDOCH proposed paying $52 a share to acquire a controlling interest in St. Regis Corp. Murdoch, who already owns 5.6 percent of the forest products concern, said his proposal to increase the stake to 50.1 percent requires approval by the St. Regis board, which he requested by Monday.

—CHRYSLER CORP. said it would tool up another assembly plant for production of its Dodge Caravan-Plymouth Voyager minivans because it has been unable to meet demand for the popular vehicles. The No. 3 automaker did not say which of its plants had been chosen.

Boeing, Saudis work on trade-out deal

NEW YORK — Boeing Co. is negotiating a billion-dollar deal with Saudi Arabian Airlines to exchange 10 Boeing 747-300s for oil, industry observers said Wednesday.

"It's a real profitable piece of business," said Hans Plickert, an analyst with E.F. Hutton & Co. "The 747 is the most profitable airplane Boeing makes. This kind of order is nice work."

The order would go to Boeing Commercial Airplane Co., a subsidiary of Seattle-based Boeing, and would boost the company's profits over the next few years.

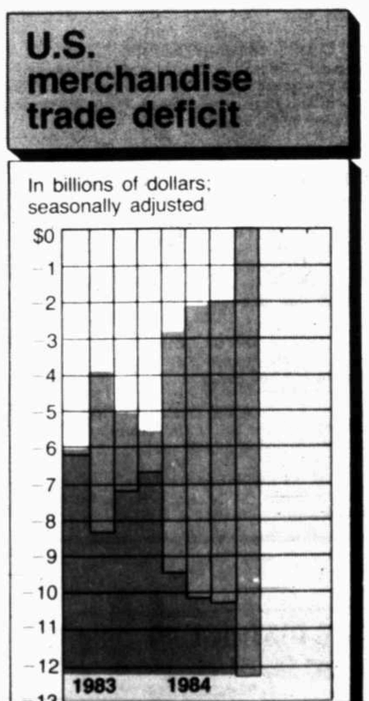

Boeing received 24 orders, valued at $693 million, for new commercial aircraft in the first quarter of 1984; in the same period last year the company recieved orders for six aircraft, valued at $280 million. In the first half of this year, Boeing wrote company orders for 83 commercial jets, almost twice the figure for the same period in 1983.

Production of the 747 is currently low. One source said 16 of the planes will be delivered this year, compared to 23 in 1983. The total number of aircraft produced this year is expected to be 146, compared to 204 last year.

Plickert noted that news of the order is "no big secret in the industry," but the terms being discussed are unusual. During a meeting in Vienna, Austria, this month by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, Saudi Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani said the planes might be bartered for oil.

Yamani was quoted by Petroleum Intelligence Weekly, published in New York, as saying that while the deal would be exceptional, it would not represent any change in Saudia Arabia's general policy against oil-barter transactions.

According to the newsletter, Yamani insisted that a condition of any such deal would be that the products exchanged for oil be bought at no higher than market price, to prevent subsequent discounting of the oil.

GM again tops list of exporters

NEW YORK (AP) — A strong dollar continued to hurt U.S. exporters in 1983, but General Motors Corp. boosted foreign sales 39 percent to lead Fortune magazine's list of the top 50 domestic exporters for the second straight year.

The business magazine said Wednesday that GM's exports rose $1.8 billion in 1983 to a total of $6.49 billion, a gain more than the combined increases for all other companies in the top 50.

Total exports for the top 50 rose 2.6 percent to $60.3 billion, as "a staggeringly strong dollar combined with economic doldrums in Europe and financial disasters in Latin America" made for a thin world market, Fortune said.

Here are the top 10 exporters, their foreign sales and the percentage of their exports against total sales:

—General Motors, $6.493 billion, 8.7 percent.

—Boeing, $4.819 billion, 43.3 percent.

—Ford, $4.732 million, 10.6 percent.

What should we do with nuclear garbage?

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — High-level radioactive trash is piling up in 20-foot-deep pools of water at nuclear power plants while the federal government tries to select the site of the nation's first commercial nuclear dump.

If the federal government has its way, the deadly rods will be chopped up, mixed with molten glass to form glass logs, sealed in steel or concrete containers and shipped to a 2,500-acre cavern in Nevada, Utah, Texas, Washington, Louisiana or Mississippi.

It will be the largest mass of commercial high-level radioactive waste ever gathered in one spot — 70,000 metric tons of lethal trash that could cover a football field five feet deep.

Power plants nationwide now have licenses to operate 86 nuclear reactors and construction permits to build an additional 52 reactors. The plants produce tons of nuclear trash annually in the form of spent fuel elements — clusters of pencil-sized metal cylinders that hold nuclear fuels.

The waste, which will remain "hot" for hundreds of thousands of years, is in storage, suspended in 20-foot-deep pools of water at the power plants. But many older plants are running out of storage space.

The Nevada location, considered by some government sources the most likely site, would be 5,000-foot Yucca Mountain, an imposing piece of welded tuff formed by volcanos between 10 and 13 million years ago.

Yucca is situated about 100 miles northwest of Las Vegas, at the edge of the secret Nevada Test Site, within earshot of the nation's underground nuclear tests.

It's a short drive from the complex where the United States once conducted a nuclear rocket engine development program. Today the sprawling complex is testing ways to store nuclear waste in concrete silos, steel canisters and granite rock.

The federal government is studying nine potential repository sites in the six states. Those nine sites are to be narrowed to three early next year, and Department of Energy officials are betting Yucca Mountain makes the cut.

"I think everybody would be amazed if the Nevada site is not one of the final three," DOE spokesman Chris West said. "There are a lot of features about Yucca that make it outstanding. It's 1,700 feet above the water table. At other sites you would have to drill down through the water table and make the repository below it.

"That poses a threat because dryness is a major factor. The main way for the radioactivity to get into the environment is through water. If you can keep the radioactivity away from water, chances are a lot greater of keeping it out of man's environment."

Another factor favoring Yucca is that sprawling Nye County, population 9,048, is one of the least densely opulated areas in America. The nearest community, 20 miles to the southeast, is Lathrop Wells, a blip along U.S. 95 comprised of a bar, a gas station, the Shamrock Ranch brothel and a small casino.

If Yucca is selected, a 1,200-foot vertical shaft would lead to a 2,500-acre labyrinth of tunnels in the belly of the mountain where the logs of nuclear waste would be stored. The glass would help stabilize the waste if the containers were disturbed, the DOE says.

The DOE hopes to have the first repository open by 1998; it would collect the nation's nuclear trash for the next half century. The Nuclear Waste Policy Act, signed into law in January 1983, calls for construction of a second repository by the mid-21st century — this one likely east of the Mississippi River.

Local research center examining labor force, economic trends

ODESSA — Research by the University of Texas, Permian Basin Center for Business Research (CBR) is making possible a close comparative examination of labor force and economic trends in West Texas. According to Dr. Corbett Gaulden, Director of the Center, the research will provide data useful to business, industry and local governments, as well as to companies considering a move into the Permian Basin area.

The data, which will be released to the public monthly, will examine a broader-than-traditional area of West Texas, taking in energy producing counties such as El Paso and Lubbock, as well as the traditional Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeastern New Mexico. In the monthly reports, West Texas will be divided according to boundaries established by the Texas Railroad Commisssion districting zones, and data will also include four counties — Chaves, Eddy, Lea and Roosevelt — in Southeastern New Mexico.

Dr. Gaulen was appointed to direct the Center for Business Research shortly after the research center's inception earlier this year.

DFW Airport board approves 1985 budget

DALLAS/FORT WORTH AIRPORT — The Dallas/Fort Worth Airport board has approved the budget for fiscal year 1985 beginning October 1, at its monthly meeting.

The total figure of P304,695,604 including debt service, contingency, capital expenditures and operating expenses is up 9.4 percent from the $271,332,430 in the current budget.

"The operating budget for the coming year is $57,749,250 compared with $44,905,700 in the 1984 budget," executive director Ernest E. Dean said. "This increase is primarily a result in taking over the operation and maintenance of Terminal 2W in addition to approximately $100 million in new capital facilities such as two new runways with associated taxiway plus over a million square feet of new building space."

No city tax money will be used to make up the budget. However, the budget must be approved by the Dallas and Fort Worth city councils.

NEW YORK — Boeing Co. of Seattle and Southwest Airlines' $500 million purchase of 21 Boeing 737-300 jetliners is the largest orders yet for the aircraft.

As reported, Dallas-based Southwest said it would exercise an option it held to buy the 21 aircraft. In May 1981, Southwest ordered 10 of the jet planes, which will be delivered beginning in November.

In the latest order, Southwest increased its number of options on 737-300s to 14.

Southwest said it mainly will use internal funds to finance the purchase but may supplement that with proceeds from the retirement of some of its fleet. Southwest currently has 50 planes. Delivery on the new order will begin in 1986 and will be completed by 1989.

Lab trying to convert sewage sludge to oil

RICHLAND, Wash. — Most people would rather not think abut sewage sludge, but researchers at Battelle's Pacific Northwest Laboratories are putting up with its dubious reputation in the interest of converting it to fuel oil.

The project to convert sewage sludge to oil is sponsored by the Environmental Protection Agency. "The goal is to redesign the sewage treatment process so that sludge, the waste product of the process, is converted to number two fuel oil," said Battelle project manager, Dr. Peter M. Molton.

"The eventual result of the work could be sewage plants that provide their own energy, perhaps a surplus, and an 80 percent reduction in the amount of waste normally produced," Molton said.

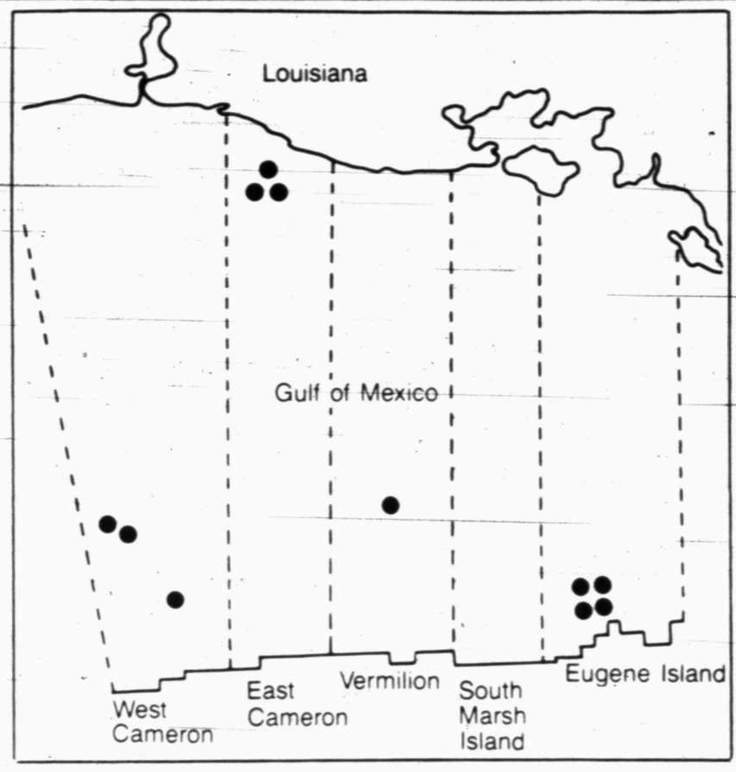

"Primary sewage sludge is about three to four percent solid material," said Molton. "By dewatering it in a centrifuge to 20 percent solids, and running it through the Battelle-developed conversion process, we can get an oil with a heating value similar to number two fuel oil."

The first step in the process is to dewater the sludge and mix it with alkali. Then, the sludge is converted to a liquid in a 12-gallon, continuous test reactor at about 275 degrees C (527 degrees F). At that temperature, 100 percent of the sludge's organic content is converted. The final step is to remove the oil from the wastewater using a proprietary technique.

The resulting oil could then be used to power a steam generator to produce enough electricity to run the sewage plant and the dewatering centrifuge. Waste heat from the steam generator could be recovered to heat the sludge conversion reactor.

"The fact that very little energy is expended in dewatering beyond the 20 percent level makes this process very economical compared to competing processes which require a dry feedstock or complete evaporation of water," said Molton.

Molton said that the first series of continuous sludge to oil tests indicated that up to 73 percent of the energy in the feedstock sludge is easily recoverable as products insoluable in water.

Female executives plan meeting in New York

To celebrate reaching their 100,000 membership mark this year the National Association for Female Executive (NAFE) announces its first national convention to be held in New York City on August 9-12. Over 1,000 women executives representing business, industry, and private enterprise nationwide are expected to attend.

The New York-based organization, geared to professional and managerial women, is one of the largest and fastest-growing of its kind. It has 1,200 affiliated networks across the country, and membership has tripled in the past three years.

According to Patricia Netherland, director of NAFE's local network in Midland, the convention will offer a series of career and personal development seminars and workshops led by experts in their fields. ABC-TV commentator Barbara Walters will be the keynote speaker at the gala banquet. Media psychologist and sex therapist Dr. Judith Kuriansky will discuss how to keep a healthy balance between professional and personal life.

Other seminar topics will include management techniques and leadership skills, financial planning, business communications, and stress and time management.

The convention, which is open to both members and non-members of NAFE — as well as spouses — will also offer unprecedented opportunities for networking, or the exchange of information and business development contacts. "The convention will plug our local network into the entire country, says Patricia Netherland.

The theme of the convention is "More with the World." Assisting NAFE to move with the world are a number of corporate sponsors who will be represented at the convention, including AT&T, Thrifty Rent-A-Car, Security Pacific Executive/Professional Services, and The Libra Funds.

The National Association for Female Executive was founded 12 years ago by president and executive director Wendy Rue to assist women in their career development by providing a framework for information sharing. "We've created a very positive environment to help women reach their financial and career goals," says Ms. Rue. "We are not a militant or feminist organiation; we are achievers. We believe that women can enjoy the same power in the marketplace as men."

The convention will be the first time that NAFE has offered its program to non-members. Other benefits that NAFE members receive for a $29 annual fee include its bimonthly magazine, The Executive Female, low-cost hospital and term life insurance, corporate discounts, loans by mail, a management aptitude test, and a resume critique service.

LOMBARD, Ill. — MidCon Corp. has announced that its Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America subsidiary has signed long-term supply contracts with Chevron, U.S.A., for natural gas produced offshore Louisiana in the Gulf of Mexico.

Deliveries in excess of 100 million cubic feet of gas per day will begin soon from Chevron's interest in 11 offshore blocks. The 15-year contracts include production from the following tracts: Eugene Island 352, 353, 360, and 361; East Cameron 25, 31, and 32; Vermilion 277; and West Cameron 541, 542, and 597.

The firm's gas supply operations are centered in Houston, with offices in New Orleans, Denver, Oklahoma City and Midland, Texas.

"In recent months we have entered into gas supply agreements for more than 150 million cubic feet of gas per day," Terpstra said. While terms of the contracts were not disclosed, he added, "These sizeable contracts for competitively-priced gas will assist in maintaining our position among the lowest-cost suppliers in the nation."

Manpower relocates quarters

The Midland office of Manpower Termporary Services has relocated to larger quarters in Midland at 600 N. Baird St. Pam Phillps will continue as manager of the local operation, which has moved from 1002 W. Wall.

According to Phillips; the increased space will be used primarily to accommodate the firm's systems for testing both applicants for its temporary workforce and those qualified employees who will be trained in word processing skills on the automated office equipment scheduled for installation soon.

"We are now in a better position to serve our customers and our employees," she observed. "Not only are we in a more accessible location, but we have space to add the new automated equipment needed to implement Manpower's breakthrough work processing training program. Using this system, we will be able to teach our temporary workers the skills so in demand in today's business environment."

Currently, the Manpower office here provides temporary workers skilled in a variety of office functions, as well as personnel skilled in a wide range of other occupations. In addition to Phillips, the Midland office is staffed by service representative Vicki Hicks.

The local operation is owned by Tracy Jackson, who also operates Manpower offices in Longview, El Paso and Odessa, Texas; Lafayette, Monroe and Shreveport, Louisiana; and Hobbs, New Mexico.

Area firm certified to make small business loans

KERMIT, Texas — The U.S. Small Business Administration has certified the Permian Basin Regional Development Corp. as an entity authorized to administer the SBA's 503 loan program in a 16-county area in Texas's Permian Basin.

Formal announcement was made at a noon luncheon at the Winkler County Country Club on July 13. Philip J. O'Jibway, district director of Lubbock's SBA office, presented the certificate to officials of the Permian Basin Regional Development Corp.

In making the presentation, O'Jibway said, "The 503 program encourages private sector involvement in job creation and economic recovery within a community. We are pleased to have you join this program and hope it will result in substantial benefits to the small businesses in the 16 counties your serve."

The corporation being certified is a non-profit corporation organized for the primary purpose and objective of furthering the growth and expansion of small businesses in the 16-county area. The counties are Andrews, Borden, Crane, Dawson, Ector, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Martin, Midland, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler.

The Certified Development Company Program offers development companies, such as this Midland-based corporation, unique financing and enables the development companies to extend long-term financing to small businesses. This type of financing always is in relatively short supply for small firms.

The SBA's "503" program began in October 1980. This is how it works:

— Any community can organize a development company. But the company must include at least 25 members and must include representatives from at least two of the following groups: a local government, a private lending institution, and a community organization or a business organization.

— Once a development company is certified by SBA, it can issue debentures to finance small businesses. Such debenture financing can be set up for up to 25 years. Funds can be used for land acquisition, building construction, expansion, renovation or equipment.

— The Certified Development Co. puts up to 10 percent of the small business financing. Typically, private lenders put up to 50 percent. The total amount of the debenture is guaranteed by the U.S. Small Business Administration. The interest rate on the SBA guaranteed portion generally runs less than private market rates.

— The amount of debenture guaranteed by SBA may not exceed half the cost of the project.

LordAbbett:

Scrabble inventor scrambled to fame

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — When he was 30 years old, Alfred M. Butts was a designer of country houses for the rich, but the year was 1931 and virtually no one in America was rich. The very few who had a few dollars to spare back then were not about to hand them over to high-priced architects.

As he knew it would, the bottom finally fell out of the country place business, and an unemployed Butts went home to his wife and his fifth-floor walk-up in Jackson Heights, N.Y.

At first his behavior seemed puzzling: He hung around reading the New York Times all day. He made lists of the words on the front page of the paper and, with meticulous care, he kept count of how many times he came across an E or a T or a P or a Q. All over the apartment his wife found bits and pieces of the alphabet scribbled on scraps of paper. One day she found a pile of plywood squares in the living room.

Everyone thought Alfred M. Butts had gone bonkers, even his wife, who knew what he was up to.

As is often the case with such spurts of creativity, Alfred M. Butts' almost-crazed behavior would not make sense for many years — not until someone came up with a word for the result of all that activity.

The word is Scrabble.

The days that Alfred M. Butts spent counting the frequency of letters in the newspaper, the weeks he took to devise a point system and design a board, the months he worked at cutting hundreds of tiny rectangles with an electric jigsaw and stamping those tiles with the appropriate letters and numbers now make infinite sense to the millions of people throughout the world whose near-fanatic devotion has made Scrabble one of the most popular board games of all time.

Alfred M. Butts is 85 now, and in a few years, the 100-millionth set of the game he created will be sold somewhere on this planet. His creation is being mass-produced at the only Scrabble factory in the United States, the Holbrook, N.Y. plant of Selchow & Righter Co., manufacturers of the copyrighted game since 1953.

For the octogenarian who originally named his game Lexiko, then changed it to Crisscross before it became Scrabble in the early 1950s, a recent visit to watch the assembly-line workers pack the maroon boxes with Scrabble pieces was like watching a baby being born.

"It's a miracle, it's wonderful, just wonderful," he whispered, more to himself than to any of the company brass who were standing nearby, beaming like the proud parents they legally became when Alfred M. Butts sold his rights to them in 1971. "I had no idea, no idea at all."

Back in 1931 when he was tinkering with word-counts in the New York Times, Alfred M. Butts surely had no inkling that Scrabble would one day be produced at the rate of 3 million games a year or that there would be games in Hebrew and Russian and Spanish and also in Braille. Or tht NBC would put America's favorite crossword game on the tube this summer.

But one thing is sure: Scrabble always made good sense to him — good dollars, too, even though he doesn't like to talk specific amounts.

He is quick to say he isn't a millionaire but he likes to talk about some of the more meaningful things he's done with the money that came from his game.

Distinctions blur between jewelry, home decorations

Aociated Press

– A steel, silver and gold sculpte that includes as a design elemt two detachable earrings.

re they jewelry or home decorons?

he question is being asked mre frequently nowadays as asts-jewelers break new grnd in shape, size and materialof one-of-a-kind pieces nomiy called jewelry.

everal recent exhibitions in Ny York make it clear that conteporary American and foreign jelry artists have gone beyond tditional definitions in the olects they design and make.

hey demonstrate a much bader idea of the word jewelry th the general public assumes sa Arline Fisch, a jeweler and psident of the Society of North Aerican Goldsmiths, co-sponsor ofne of the exhibitions.

This jewelry seeks to make a ptical or social statement or a cnection with the real world. Th popular movement closest to its probably the punk movemt in music and clothing," she sa.

s. Fisch said new ideas in jewelr were primarily being develoed in art jewelry while the mre commercial world of massmketed jewelry had yet to be inuenced in this way.

he occasion for the recent outouring of creativity in jewelr was the society's annual for-day meeting held this year inew York. The group, founded in970, is a non-profit organizatiodedicated to fostering the art of etalsmithing.

binciding with its meeting at thFashion Institute of Technolog two exhibits surveying the diersity of handmade jewelry we presented at the American Crt Museum.

'ewelry USA," an exhibit of 22 pieces by 122 American arts, is the result of a competitio sponsored by the society. Enries from jewelers making bo one-of-a-kind and productio pieces were received and a pal of three experts selected thwinners from among 2,200 slis submitted by 575 entrants.

Aer the exhibit closes Sept. 1, it ill travel to museums in approximately 10 other American citi, according to Paul J. Smith, director of the American Craft Museum.

Also on view at the craft museum was a show of the work of 50 artists from 17 foreign countries. Helen Drutt, guest curator of this show and author of its catalogue, "Jewelry International: Contemporary Trends," is adjunct professor of 20th-century crafts at Moore College of Art in Philadelphia.

She said there had been a period of dynamic experimentation since the early 1970s.

"This is a time when postcards and stamps can occupy the same physical position in a brooch as a ruby or cameo and the line of a neckpiece can be determined by a plastic element, fiber-wrapped willow seed, plastic pleat, knitted nylon or paper circle as well as by forged silver or gold," according to Ms. Drutt.

Today, jewelry artists are as likely to hit upon a non-precious material such as plastic, aluminum, lucite, wallpaper, cotton, glass, stone or wood to express their ideas as they are to employ traditional materials.

She also pointed out that another aspect of the jewelry "revolution" is its international and cross cultural substance.

"The prophecy of the global village has here come true. European and American influences are evident alike in Jerusalem and Japan. Dutch approaches permeate selected British and German attitudes. In turn, Australian ideas are dominated by German and British styles and the influence of America begins to appear on the European continent."

The same internationalism was evident in the program of lectures, panels and speeches at the Society of North American Goldsmiths' annual meeting.

Speakers from Finland, England, Japan and Holland demonstrated familiarity with worldwide influences. The slides they brought showing current work in their countries appeared to have many similarities — particularly in the use of unorthodox materials and in jewelry that could serve equally well as decorative home ornament and as body ornament.

Ms. Fisch speculated on why handmade jewelry should be so intellectually interesting at present. She noted that jewelry always fared best at a time when women had power and the funds available to buy their own jewelry since "women buy for themselves for personal enhancement; when men buy for women they buy for status."

Popcorn brands pop from popper to first place

By LINDA ANDERSON

Popcorn, of course. An All-American tradition for many social gatherings, popcorn is practically a necessity at most of the above-listed events.

And for those of us addicted to watching our weight AND enjoying "junk food," popcorn can satisfy the need for a low-calorie, but not boring snack. (Somehow, snacking on celery or carrot sticks, while making the dieter feel virtuous, can also make him feel — well, like a dieter!)

Orville Redenbacher's Gourmet Popping Corn has been advertised as popping up "bigger and fluffier than other brands," and "the finest in the world."

We tested these two popcorns for taste, price and advertising accuracy. The usual taste-testers — a small child, adults, teenagers — all like popcorn. (The 3-year-old tester always tries to hog the popcorn bowl.) We have an air-popper, so we can pop the corn without using any fats or oils. (Which is another bonus for the dieters among us, even if the air-popper is noisy.)

Both popcorns are available in vacuum-packed glass jars. Both are priced about the same — $1.19 for Orville Redenbacher's 15-ounce jar and $1.29 for a 16-ounce jar of Cracker Jack. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

Cracker Jack label advertisiog claims include: "'We've been in the popcorn business for more than 100 years... so nobody knows better than Cracker Jack how to pop up really fresh and great tasting popcorn. Cracker Jack is a special hybrid of popping corn...harvested and conditioned with the most modern equipment available. We use all of our popping expertise to come up wih gourmet quality popcorn that pops up big and fluffy and has distinctive, delicious flavor ... not bland and flavorless. Virtually every kernel pops ...'"

Orville Redenbacher's popcorn label claims include: (From a statement signed by Redenbacher) "I've loved popping corn as long as I can remember. I've devoted my life to experimenting, cross breeding and hybridizing over 40 generations of corn to create this perfect popping corn, which pops up fluffy and great tasting...Unlike 'ordinary' popcorns my...popping corn is dried and shelled ear by ear...sorted and polished...vacuum packed extra fresh in resealable glass jars which preserve moisture for maximum pop. You can actually see the difference...pops up much more than ordinary popcorns...light and fluffy...virtually every kernel pops..."

And both specify unpopped kernels may be blown out when using a hot air popper.

Both popcorns tasted about the same, too. They were both good popcorns, with a minimum of hard semi-popped kernels. Both popped up "light and fluffy," just like their advertising said. Both produced large popped kernels. And, because we did use the hot air popper, both did leve some unpopped kernels.

Buneither was better than the other.Most taste-testers couldn't tell them part by taste. (Although one teenair said she preferred Cracker Jack's flavor, she admitted the flavors vre almost identical. And the secon time we popped them the Crack Jack did seem to be slightly "bigg and fluffier.")

Neither seemed to be anything but good popcorn — fluffy, white, tender-crunchy and delicious. And what's wrong with that?

Associated Press

A drawer that is stuck can test your temper. If you do not stay in control of the situation, a minor problem can turn into a major one. One exasperated tug too many or too strong and you have a broken drawer or damage to the object that is causing the trouble in the first place.

There are lots of reasons for a stuck drawer, among them loose nails, warpage, broken runners, just plain wear and a jammed item inside the drawer. In the latter case, the drawer usually opens a bit, then sticks. If you tug at the drawer gently, it sometimes will come free. If not, don't force it. Use a ruler or some such tool to prod inside the drawer to dislodge the object.

Should the drawer not open even the tiniest bit, unusual but not rare, insert the blade of a putty knife into the opening between the drawer and the bureau frame. Do this very gently.

If all efforts to open the drawer without forcing are unsuccessful, see how the bureau is constructed and whether you can get results by taking out the drawer above or below the blocked one. You may even have to take off the back of the piece of furniture, which can be tedious but not difficult.

Most of the time, a drawer acts up in a different way. It just doesn't slide smoothly. Take everything out of the drawer and begin a thorough examination of it and the runners on which it moves back and forth. Check the construction of the drawer.

Diner says 'No!' to escargots

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. On a dinner date the man I was with ordered escargots (snails) as an appetizer. He raved about how delicious they were and asked me to try one, but I wouldn't. I asked him if they were the same type of snails one finds in one's garden, and he said they couldn't be, otherwise everybody would be eating them at home. He also said since restaurants charge so much for them, they must be a special kind of snail. Can you provide some information on this?

A. Escargot is simply the French word for the common brown snail, considered a pest in many gardens and yards. Probably the reason they're so expensive in restaurants is that most people think the way your date thinks, that these are special snails.

They also require some time and fiddling with to prepare. The University of California's Cooperative Extension Service provides us with information as to how this is done:

Collecting snails is best done about two hours after dark, as snails are nocturnal creatures. Only moving snails are taken. The collection area is lightly watered in late afternoon to bring the snails out of hiding.

The snails are then purged of any previously eaten food that might be toxic or give them an off flavor. They are put in a ventilated, escape-proof container, on the floor of which ½-inch of cornmeal is placed. The snails eat the cornmeal for 72 hours, virtually stuffing themselves.

Blanching is the next procedure. Only the active snails are taken from the cornmeal container. They are rinsed off and plunged live into boiling water, then simmered for 15 minutes. After being drained in a colander, a toothpick or pointed knife is used to pull the snail meat from the shell.

Next, the gall has to be removed. This is found on the tail end where the snail is attached to the shell and is about ¼-inch long. It is cut off and discarded.

Escargots are prepared in a variety of ways: drenched in garlic butter, sauteed in tomato sauce and herbs, breaded and baked, fried, in cream sauce or wine, or chopped up and mixed with garlic and fried in olive oil, then stuffed back into the shell. The shells have to be boiled for 30 minutes first in water to which baking soda has been added, then thoroughly rinsed and dried.

Snails are in the same class as abalone, which is a sea snail, another highly acclaimed gourmet item, but far less available. Snails are very low in calories, high in protein and rich in minerals.

Q. A group of us were sitting around at lunch the other day and were wondering whether in the making of canned tomato juice they put the tomato juice in the can from uncooked tomatoes or cooked the tomatoes first, then made the juice.

A. The tomatoes are received fresh at the plant, crushed, then heated rapidly to about 220 degrees. Campbell Soup's Scott Rombach, director of public relations, tells us that they are then strained, and again given a "heat process treatment" at a temperature above the boiling point to sterilize the liquid. Then the juice is canned.

If the juice were canned fresh, it would supposedly have an unappealing taste, nothing like the tomato juice we are familiar with.

A reminder if you drink some of the juice and want to store the rest in the refrigerator: Transfer the juice from the can to a plastic or glass container that has a lid. Acidic juices, such as tomato, orange, grapefruit, etc. tend to leach lead out of the seams of cans, and contamination of the juice could result.

Q. What is the difference between white and black pepper, and can one be substituted for another in recipes?

A. Black pepper and white pepper come from the same plant, which is a vine that gets to be from eight to 12 feet high. Pepper comes from the berry on that vine. Just before they are ripe, berries are picked and dried in the sun over charcoal fires, becoming black and wrinkled. This is black pepper.

Berries that are picked when they're fully ripened become white pepper. They are also dried and become black and wrinkled, but the outer hull is removed by creating friction among the berries. What is left is a white core.

A Spice Islands handbook states that white pepper is less pungent than black. It can be substituted in any recipe calling for black pepper, but black pepper in a light-colored food, such as a white cream sauce, might detract from its appearance.

DEAR ABBY

Bell doesn't toll long enough

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Please do us older people a favor and print this. I cannot describe my frustration at picking up my telephone just in time to hear the caller hang up on me!

Why in the name of heaven would anybody make a telephone call and hang up after the third or fourth ring? Unless one carries a cordless telephone around, it takes at least five or six rings before most people can answer it. Sometimes I'm in the laundry room or busy elsewhere and can't hear the phone ringing until it has rung three or four times.

When I call a friend, I always let the phone ring at least 10 times. Then if nobody answers, I assume he's not home. — GIVE ME A BREAK

DEAR GIVE: Here's your break; hope it helps. I wonder how many people have broken arms, legs, shoulders and hips because while they were in the bathtub, the yard, in the middle of scrambling an egg or otherwise occupied, the telephone rang and they ran to answer it?

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I haven't had any sexual relations for seven months. He doesn't even kiss me. Says he's too tired. I've tried to talk to him about it, but he says there's nothing to talk about, he's just getting old. (He's 38 and I'm 33.) This is the second marriage for both of us.

We've been married for three years. For the first two years, he couldn't get enough of me. Now, nothing! I love him very much and will not seek sexual fulfillment elsewhere.

I know he's not cheating on me because he never goes anywhere except to work, and then he comes directly home. He has become very slovenly about his appearance. He takes a bath only at my insistence — about every two weeks.

He will not admit there's a problem, but there must be. He says he feels fine, but he seems depressed and unhappy. Please help me. — DOWNHEARTED

DEAR DOWNHEARTED: Yours is one of the most difficult problems a faithful, caring person has ever had to face — getting someone who is obviously sick but refuses to admit it to a doctor.

Beg, plead, bribe, threaten. Do whatever is necessary to get him into his doctor's office, including calling the doctor and asking his advice. Your husband needs a thorough physical examination.

DEAR ABBY: I learned in school that when Columbus discovered America, the American Indians were already here, but I would like to know where the Indians came from. — LIKES TO LEARN (12 YEARS OLD)

DEAR LIKES: The Encyclopedia Britannica says that the North American Indians probably migrated to the Americas from Asia. Some 15,000 to 25,000 years ago they crossed from northeast Asia to the Bering Strait. By the time the Europeans arrived in the 15th century, waves of these Asiatic migrants had spread over the Americas.

Indiana 'Wanderware' wanted worldwide

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — There's apparently an international lure to wandering, even if it's just through a single state.

"Wander Indiana," the state's tourism slogan, is showing up as far away as France and Nigeria through the commercial line of "Wanderware."

Orders are coming in for T-shirts, sun visors, aprons and coffee mugs bearing the slogan, said Laura Deck, the account executive who handles the Commerce Department's business at Carlson and Co., an Indianapolis advertising firm.

The proceeds support tourism activities in Indiana.

BETTER BUSINESS

Don't confuse job list services with licensed agencies

By LINDA TRUITT

The Better Business Bureau has received many calls recently about a company in Dallas called Job Center. The company has been placing what appears to be "Help Wanted" ads in local newspapers, but when interested persons request information about the job, they are told to pay a $400 advance fee.

Job Center is a job information service. Businesses of this type sell lists of job openings, advice on conducting successful job searchs and interviews or guidance on how to write resumes.

These companies arouse consumer interest by placing ads in the "Help Wanted" columns in magazines or newspapers, although they are not licensed employment agencies with current job listings.

An employment agency is licensed by the state and collects its fee (whether paid by the employee or the employer) only after the applicant has been hired. Employment agencies try to match job seekers' skills to available jobs and send applicants to interviews that have been set up by the agency.

Job list services charge the job seeker in advance for a list of job openings in a number of fields. It's up the applicant to contact employers on the list and set up interviews. Such lists often contain the same job openings that are advertised by employers in newspapers under "Help Wanted." Usually the job list service does not guarantee employment or a refund.

Persons who need a job and who are wondering whether or not to pay the advance fee should follow these tips:

— Ask how the company obtains and maintains the list. It should have a method set up to revise the listings if openings are filled or the nature of the position changes. Find out if companies on the list have given permission to be included. Some companies may not consider unsolicited resumes or applications.

— Obtain all details of the transaction before signing the agreement or paying the fee. Make certain all verbal representations made at the time of sale are included in writing. Be certain to understand what additional costs, if any, will be the job seeker's responsibility.

Joseph Brunelle and Tree Vickers

Duo team to perform at Cody Cattle Company

The duo team of Joseph Brunelle and Tree Vickers are performing at Cody Cattle Company today through Saturday.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. A.J. "Abe" Brunelle of Midland, Joseph Brunelle has been performing professionally for 12 years. Most of his experience playing concerts, radio, television and the club scene has been in Texas.

He has recorded an album, "Round To It," and has just completed, except for the final mixing, a second album at No Mountain Recording in Midland. The planned for release date on the album is September. However, Brunelle is perhaps best known locally for his January 1980 45-release "White Cloud."

Miss Vickers, who is from Corpus Christi, has been performing professionally for the past 18 months. She and Brunelle have been performing as a duo for six months.

"We do a considerable amount of original material which people in Midland have responded to real well," Brunelle said. "We also do a variety of popular and contemporary folk music."

The duo performs from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. There is no cover charge.

'American Gothic' model files last clipping

ENTERTAINMENT

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — The last clipping has been clipped, the last scrapbook has been filled, the last battle has been fought, and now Nan Wood Graham, the model for what is believed to be the most famous painting by an American artist, is preparing to leave the modest house that has been her home for many years.

Failing eyesight has forced her to abandon her life's work of maintaining the historical record of all that has been said about, and done to, the work of her famous brother, Iowa muralist and painter Grant Wood. When she was a young woman of 30, Graham posed for her brother's most famous painting, "American Gothic," alongside the family dentist, and the stern-faced couple became a symbol of the popular American ideal of no-nonsense, personal industriousness.

"I hate to give these up," she said as she pointed at the stacks of cardboard boxes in her living room, containing 17 scrapbooks and hundreds of caricatures of "American Gothic." "It just kills me. It's just like I had died and I'm watching everybody divvy up what's left."

The 83-year-old widow has donated the entire collection to a small museum in Davenport, Iowa. She will soon move to a retirement home in the San Francisco Bay Area, where she can live near friends.

She figures she has more than 500 versions of "American Gothic," ranging from political cartoons to magazine covers to advertising brochures. Nearly every couple to occupy the White House since Grant Wood painted the portrait in 1930 has made numerous appearances as surrogates for the farming couple, some not very flattering, and Nan Graham has collected nearly all of them.

She said she didn't mind the caricatures, "as long as they were comical," but years ago she was forced to begin alternating her role between that of a collector to that of a fighter. Playboy magazine published a version of the painting in which she appeared to have posed in the nude, and the battle was on.

"Grant was a very moral, very decent person," she said of her older brother, who died of cancer in 1942. "All of his paintings were decent. They were trying to make something bad out of something good."

The Playboy cartoon was reprinted in Look magazine and was shown on the Johnny Carson television show. Mrs. Graham filed suit for $9 million, charging that the cartoon was "vile and obscene."

Publicity about the suit brought a rash of obscene letters and phone calls, forcing her to change her phone number, which is still unlisted.

"There was a lot of rotten stuff," she said. "A lot of obscene calls in the middle of the night."

The suit was settled out of court in 1968 after Playboy executives said they had no idea the model for the painting was still alive. Conditions of the settlement prohibit her from disclosing the amount.

She did not fare as well in a battle three years ago with Hustler magazine, however. That magazine also published a cartoon that Mrs. Graham considered obscene, but both a superior court judge and an appellate court ruled against her after a Hustler executive testified that he, too, had no idea the model was still alive.

'Ghostbusters' scares up most box-office business

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Ghostbusters" scared up the most business at the box office last week, but the debut of "The Last Starfighter" came close to bumping "Gremlins" out of the No. 2 spot among the top grossing motion pictures.

The $10 million grossed by "Ghostbusters" boosted the Columbia picture's six-week total to $115.6 million, narrowing the lead held by "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom," which has an eight-week total of $141.7 million.

Universal's "Starfighter," a youth-oriented space adventure with a video game theme, grossed $6 million to fall just behind the $6.1 million brought in by Warner Bros.' "Gremlins" in its sixth week in release.

"The Karate Kid" was fourth at $4.7 million.

"Indiana Jones" remained sixth, but just barely. The $4.1 million grossed by the Paramount release was a shade better than the $4 million brought in by 20th Century Fox's "Bachelor Party."

Restaurant looked like 'slaughterhouse'

By MARK KREIDLER
Associated Press Writer

SAN YSIDRO, Calif. — "There was a girl, maybe 4 or 5, laying on the floor. There were families shot dead where they sat eating, where they stood ordering."

San Diego Mayor Roger Hedgecock surveyed the McDonald's restaurant where James Oliver Huberty, a recently fired security guard, aimed a barrage of bullets at diners, employees and passers-by Wednesday, killing at least 20 people and wounding 17 others before being shot dead by police.

"There was an old woman slumped in one of the booths, a man about 30 who was shot as he ate in a booth, with his food still in front of him," Hedgecock told reporters outside the blood-spattered, bullet-riddled restaurant about a mile from the Mexican border.

"There were teen-age boys with their dinners half eaten on the table," he said.

The dead were carried out by ashen-faced emergency workers, and coroner's vans worked late into the evening. Hundreds of people waited anxiously behind police lines, many hoping to learn whether relatives or friends were among the victims.

Bodies outside the restaurant were covered with yellow sheets, resting in a parking lot and against a fence surrounding a small playground for patrons. A small boy lay dead on the pavement, his body tangled in his bicycle.

Steve Gaytan, 21, who lives a block from the brick-and-stucco restaurant, ran there after he heard the shooting.

"The guy was shooting at anything that moved — inside, outside, it didn't matter," Gaytan said. "Ten minutes didn't go by that the guy didn't fire a shot."

Phil Moomjean, a nurse with the Life Flight helicopter service and a Vietnam veteran, said it "was carnage — bodies behind the counter, customers lying under the tables, slumped over tables. It was just like Vietnam."

About a thousand onlookers, standing six and seven deep in places, were kept a block from the restaurant during the 90-minute siege.

Patrol Officer Steve Pellegrino, one of the first officers on the scene, said a woman ran toward him carrying a wounded baby girl who had blood streaming from her head and buttocks.

The woman, who spoke little English, kept repeating "no mommy, no mommy," meaning she was not the infant's parent, as Pellegrino rushed them to a hospital, he said.

The wounded baby had been passed into the arms of onlookers by another woman, one of the shooting victims, who begged the strangers to "take care of her," witnesses said.

The unidentified 6-month-old was in critical condition after surgery to remove shotgun pellets Wednesday night at Childrens Hospital in San Diego, said hospital spokesman Vince Bond.

Juan Echavarria, who lives two blocks from the restaurant, said he was driving by when he saw three injured youngsters outside — one lying face down, another face up and the third sitting on the grass.

"I got out of my truck and started to go toward them, and one kid, the one sitting down, he says, 'Please help us.' The kid ... had vomited and he was bleeding from the face," Echavarria said.

"I took off my shirt and tried to put pressure on the side of his face. Then I heard glass breaking and I got down on the ground. By the time I realized what was happening, I just started running. I guess I was lucky I didn't get hit."

All three boys died in the parking lot where they had parked their bicycles, he said.

Gaytan said he had run for cover when shots whistled by him across the street from the McDonald's, but he crept back to within about 100 yards of the restaurant and watched as Huberty was shot.

"He was up near the front counter and he was holding the gun up," Gaytan said. "I could see the SWAT team around the restaurant and then I heard this shot, and he just kind of slumped down."

Lydia Flores had just pulled her car up to the restaurant's drive-through window with her daughter when the shooting began.

"I saw glass shattered, things tossed about, things not looking normal. So I looked inside and there he was, just shooting," she said.

"He turned and looked at me and I put that car in reverse and backed up as fast as I could," Ms. Flores said. Neither she nor her daughter was injured.

Gunman's 'spasm of rage' claims record number of lives

Associated Press

Eighteen years ago, a Texas man wrote "I am prepared to die," then opened fire from an observation tower, killing 16 people and wounding 30 others.

The massacre by Charles Whitman on Aug. 1, 1966, was unprecedented in American history. Never had a single madman taken so many lives in one day.

But on Wednesday, James Oliver Huberty, 41, walked into a McDonald's restaurant in a San Diego suburb and began shooting. Before he was felled by a police marksman, he killed 20 people and injured 20 more, authorities said.

In his spasm of rage, Huberty surpassed Whitman's toll — cutting down men, women and children as they ate, waited to order food or tried to escape.

Like Huberty, Whitman's victims were strangers. He lugged a chest containing a rifle, a shotgun, three handguns and 700 rounds of ammunition to the top of an observation tower at the University of Texas campus in Austin. On the way, he killed a woman at the information desk and two tourists.

From his 307-foot-high perch, Whitman murdered 13 more people and injured 30 more in 96 minutes. Police ended the siege by charging up a barricaded stairway and killing Whitman.

The night before, Whitman had killed his mother, who had been stabbed and shot in the back of the head, and his wife, who had been stabbed in the chest.

"I am prepared to die," Whitman said in a note typed the night he killed his mother and wife. "After my death, I wish an autopsy on me to be performed to see if there is any mental disorder."

An autopsy determined that Whitman had a brain tumor, but it was unknown whether that contributed to his violent behavior.

More recently, 13 people were robbed and then shot to death at a gambling club in Seattle's Chinatown on Feb. 19, 1983. Two gunmen were convicted in the episode: Willie Mak, 23, said to be the mastermind, was sentenced to death, and Benjamin Ng, 21, was sentenced to 15 consecutive life prison terms. A third suspect, Wai-Chiu Ng, 27, is on the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted" list.

Thirteen people were killed on Sept. 25, 1982, in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., by George Banks, a former prison guard who complained that he had been tormented all his life by "racist cowards."

The victims included five of Banks' children, aged 1 to 6, four women who were their mothers, three other people related to a former girlfriend and a passer-by.

Banks, the son of a black man and a white woman, said in a prison interview, "I've dealt with racial cowards all my life. I've felt racial abuse from both sides, black and white." Three of the women he had lived with were white, and their children had suffered the same sort of abuse, Banks said.

Two other mass murders occurred on festive Sundays.

On Palm Sunday of this year, eight children and two women were executed in a Brooklyn, N.Y., apartment.

Christopher Thomas, 34, was indicted on 24 charges of murder and weapons possession in the case. Police alleged that he lashed out in a jealous rage, falsely believing that his estranged wife was having an affair with the father of two of the victims.

On Easter Sunday of 1975, eight children, their parents and their grandmother were killed by an enraged relative. James Ruppert was convicted in 1982 of killing his mother and brother, but was found innocent by reason of insanity on nine other murder counts.

Howard Unruh killed 13 people in 12 minutes in Camden, N.J., on Sept. 5, 1949, and later told police: "I'd have killed a thousand if I'd had bullets enough."

Dressed in a suit and a bow tie, Unruh started his spree by walking into a shoe repair shop and killing the repairman. Then he shot a 6-year-old boy and the barber who was cutting the boy's hair. His victims also included pedestrians, motorists and a 3-year old boy who peeked out the window of his home.

As police surrounded Unruh's house, the gunman talked calmly on the telephone with an editor of the Camden Courier-Post. He didn't know how many people he had killed, he said, adding: "It looks like a pretty good score."

Unruh was found insane and committed to an institution. He told authorities that he thought his neighbors were laughing at him.

Other major U.S. murders listed

Associated Press

The slaying of at least 20 people at a McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, Calif., was the worst one-day rampage by a single killer in the United States in memory.

Willie Mak and Benjamin Ng — convicted of killing 13 robbery victims in a gambling club in Seattle's Chinatown in 1983. Mak was sentenced to death and Ng to 15 consecutive life prison terms. A third suspect, Wai-Chu Ng, is on the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted" list.

George Banks — convicted of murdering 13 people in Pennsylvania, including five of his children and and the four women who bore them. Banks was sentenced to death in 1983.

David Berkowitz — New York's "Son of Sam" killer killed six young people in 1976 and 1977.

William Bonin — California's "Freeway Killer" was convicted of the torture-murders of 13 men he had picked up in a roving quest for homosexual gratification. The last trial was in 1983; he was sentenced to death.

Juan Corona — convicted in 1982 of killing 25 farm laborders whose hacked bodies were found in two peach orchards in California in 1971. He was sentenced to 25 years to life in prison.

Albert DeSalvo — confessed that he was the "Boston Strangler" who killed 13 women between 1962 and 1964, but police lacked evidence to bring him to trial. He was convicted in a series of unrelated assaults and sentenced to live imprisonment. He was stabbed to death in his cell in 1973.

John Wayne Gacy Jr. — convicted in 1980 of killing 33 young men in the Chicago area. All the victims were believed sexually molested; most were strangled and buried beneath Gacy's home in Des Plaines, Ill. He was sentenced to death.

Robert Hansen — confessed to authorities in Alaska in 1984 that he had slaughtered at least 17 prostitutes, nude dancers and other women over a decade. He was sentenced to life in prison.

Elmer Wayne Henley — after confessing to killing one man, Henley led Texas authorities to the graves of 26 youths. He was sentenced to 594 years in prison. A co-defendant, David Owen Brooks, was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Patrick Wayne Kearney — in 1977, he confessed to killing 32 men, many of whose dismembered remains were found in trash bags along California highways. He was convicted in 21 of the "Trash Bag" murders and sentenced to life in prison.

Henry Lee Lucas — a drifter who claims he has murdered more than 150 women, may prove to be the greatest mass murderer in U.S. history. Authorities so far have implicated Lucas or his companion, Ottis Elwood Toole, or both, in 135 homicides.

James Ruppert — charged with killing his mother, brother, sister-in-law and eight nieces and nephews at a family Easter gathering in Hamilton, Ohio, in 1975. He was convicted on two counts in 1982 and found innocent by reason of insanity in the other nine slayings.

Charles Starkweather — killed nine people in Nebraska and one more in Wyoming on a rampage in 1958. He was executed.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Imagine a place where your car is more important than you are, where it's rude not to have a nice day, where your friends are called contacts and getting paged is a dream come true.

If you thought of Southern California, you have a head start on Jonathan Roberts' "How to California," an 11-week crash manual that guarantees you, too, can live like a Southern Californian no matter where you are.

And living like a Southern Californian is about as far removed as Roberts could get from the lifestyle he helped satirize in "The Official Preppy Handbook" with co-authors Lisa Birnbach, Carol McD. Wallace and Mason Wiley.

"I wanted to break free from what I felt was ultimately a limited provincial life. I wanted to experience a place with a different culture, and Southern California fascinated me," said the 29-year-old East Coast native.

So three years ago Roberts moved to Los Angeles, a place he felt drawn to but had mixed feelings about.

"I thought Southern California was a made-for-TV sort of place," he said. "I thought perfect weather was a stupid idea. I thought surfing was done by trick photography. I thought Southern California was, well, silly."

What he once thought of as silly he now describes as "an incredibly visual, young, new place that reflects a heightened form of American pop culture."

Roberts speaks glowingly of Southern California as a mecca of opportunity; where big splashes are made quickly; where it's OK to act and look "nouveau riche"; where you don't have to be pedigreed to "make it" socially, and where eclectic and often exotic lifestyles flourish.

In "How to California" ($6.95, Dell), Roberts pokes some good-natured fun at these lifestyles. And for those inclined to be Californian anywhere, all the time, he tells you how to do it right.

The first chapter is all about driving. In Southern California, he observes, not only do you rarely get out of your car, you also are what you drive.

Therefore, choosing a car is serious business. Note his tips: If you're a young record company executive or publicity agent, the BMW 318i is the car for you. Make sure you litter the backseat with press releases or scripts, and don't forget the brake covers.

The fancier BMW coupes are driven by the older record executive or agent. In this case, leave the backseat alone but get a mobile phone. A safe bet for the rest of you successful and under-50 professionals is the Mercedes SL. Those over 50 and retired need not be ashamed of turning to the trusty Cadillac.

Almost as important as what you drive is how you look when you drive. The Rolex President watch is a must. And Roberts advises, "If you can't afford it, kill yourself."

Southern California, he cautions, has its own code of ethics:

—Never overdress. To be safe, wear athletic gear at all times.

—Lie about your age. Add a few years and blame it on Californians' poor mathematical skills.

—If you're going to die but you're not a celebrity, don't bother — nobody would come to your funeral anyway.

—If you're divorced, celebrate. You get points for getting out of marriage in California.

—An innocent game of tennis with a studio executive could ruin your career in "The Industry" if you win. So play to lose.

—When mingling at parties, act excited about isolation tanks and tranquilizers; use the words "great" and "awesome" a lot; never talk about prep schools.

How will you know when you can pass as a native? Once you've made plans to build a vacation home on the San Andreas Fault.

Roberts, who calls himself a writer of frothy commercialism, admits Southern California is much more than what he talks about in his book. "I wanted to play with the media (image of) California," he said.

He also wanted to make people laugh at themselves. What better time to do this than just before the Olympics, "when people will be abnormally obsessed with Southern California," Roberts said.

Pausing to grin triumphantly, he added, "Just when California's pride is growing and just when it's saying that we're not second to anyone, you want to be prepared to prick it slightly with your needle."

LOOK FOR THE OBVIOUS

Today, we are going to offer a piece of advice that might seem gratuitous to a number of our readers. It is this: when playing a slam contract, count your tricks to see whether you have 12. If you think we are harping on the obvious, consider declarer's play on this hand.

Both vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH
♠ A K 10
◇ Q J 10 9

WEST
♡ J 9 8 7 3
◇ K 7 3 2

EAST
♡ Q 6 2
◇ 8 6 5 4

SOUTH
♠ Q J 9 8 4 2
◇ A
♣ A Q 7 5 4

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Seven of ♠.

Although North has a very fine hand opposite partner's opening bid, his decision to jump shift is debatable — it takes up too much bidding space. However, no damage was done. South showed his second suit and then cue-bid his ace of diamonds. North needed to hear no more.

With only 10 tricks in fast winners, declarer went after the clubs. He won the opening lead in dummy and finessed the queen of clubs, losing to the king. West returned another trump, declarer won, cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club. When the suit did not break evenly, declarer found that, as the cards lay, he had no way of coming to a 12th trick.

Had declarer followed the advice given in the first paragraph, he could have claimed his slam after the first trick. He has six spade tricks, two hearts and a club, for a total of nine. And there is no way he can be prevented from scoring three diamond tricks to bring his bag up to the required dozen.

Declarer should win the opening lead and first cash the ace of diamonds. Now he draws as many rounds of trump as is necessary to exhaust the opponents' supply, ending on the board, and leads the queen of diamonds from the table. When East does not cover, declarer simply discards a club. West wins the king of diamonds, but that is the only trick for the defenders — there are just enough diamond and heart winners in dummy to take care of the rest of declarer's losers.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge," will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Old opera house to be modernized

By EVELYN BOHNE
Deutsche Presse-Agentur

HAMBURG, West Germany (DPA) — On Feb. 13, 1945, Dresden celebrated a carnival, despite the horror and confusion of the World War II, and the hundreds of thousands of refugees who had fled to the as-yet practically undamaged East German city.

Two days later, the city on the River Elbe was little more than a mass of rubble.

The British and the Americans had attacked Dresden with hundreds of bombers in wave after wave, in the worst saturation bombing in history.

They dropped phosphorus bombs on the already burning city and fired on the people fleeing the flames.

Researchers estimate the death toll at between 35,000 and 135,000, the latter figure exceeding by nearly 50,000 the number of people killed in the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Japan.

STRATEGIC NECESSITY for the massive fire-bombing has never been completely explained. All that is certain is that, within a few hours, one of Europe's most beautiful cities, known as "Florence on the Elbe," was nearly wiped out.

The city has still not recovered from horror. The former residential castle, the famous Church of our Lady, and other edifices stand in ruins amidst desolate, war-damaged surroundings.

As long ago as 1953, the Dresden city fathers decided that at least a part of the old city, should be returned to its former glory.

The Zwinger castle and the portrait gallery were first restored in decades of dedicated work, and now the legendary Dresden Opera House is in line. It is scheduled to be reopened on the 40th anniversary of the 1945 blanket bombing.

The cost of restoring the magnificent building to the last details laid out by the original architect, Gottfried Semper, exceeds the total that cultural officials of Communist East Germany have approved for the rest of Dresden's reconstruction.

THAT IS ONE reason why restoration of the opera house, originally completed in 1878 in the style of the Italian High Renaissance, has taken so long.

The restoration decision was made in 1953 and "reopenings" were announced for 1974, then for 1983 and finally for the spring of 1984.

Nearly $100 million was spent not only to restore the outer walls of Semper's opera house, but also to restore the building's interior to its previous magnificence and colorfulness.

Architect Semper and his son Manfred had purchased the most costly materials of the day to create their work of art. They lavished it with marble, precious metals, velvet and silk, valuable wall and ceiling paintings, and gleaming Ionic columns.

The old opera house accommodated some 1,700 spectators, including standing room for 300. The rebuilt opera house will accomodate only 1,300 persons, to afford operagoers a better view of performances.

IN RESTORATION, the architects, headed by Heinz Leuteritz, combined attention to detail with the most modern engineering. The stage area, for example, was expanded by two side stages providing room for rehearsal stages, theater workshops, or a lighting gallery with 400 spotlights.

Sixteen rising stages, 50 electrically operated backdrop machines, and 51-foot revolving stage that can be driven onto the 99 x 90 foot main stage, complete the technical improvements.

The team of architects paid particular attention to the acoustics, which made the Dresden Opera House famous throughout the world.

The restoration staff made comparative studies of opera houses in Prague, and Bratislava, Czecoslovakia, Vienna, Austria. In special laboratories test were carried out on what are known as "reflectogrammes," with models of the old and the new opera house.

Even the splendid 3 1-2 -ton chandelier in the high dome of the old opera house, to which some experts attributed the building's acoustics, was accurately rebuilt.

The formal dedication of the opera house is scheduled for Aug. 1. More than six months will then be needed by the artistic management, headed by composer Siegfried Koehler, for rehearsal work before the curtain can rise again in the Dresen Opera House for the first time in 40 years.

Tales of Waco Indians focus on shattered culture

WACO, Texas (AP) — The original inhabitants of Waco lived perilous lives. A distinct part of the Wichita nation, the Waco Indians share common culture and language with the Wichitas, as well as their war-like habits. And in the end, their fighting skills could not save them from the flood of white-skinned immigrants from the East and a paralyzing series of forced marches that reduced a once-proud people to virtual extinction.

In pre-civilized times, the Wacos — who called themselves the Kitkiti'sh, or "original people" — were a classic hunter-gatherer people, roaming Central and North Texas, following the buffalo migrations, living in temporary shelters. There were four major Waco Indian settlements, the largest being an ancient site between the old Waco High School and Indian Spring Park in downtown Waco.

Some historians, including the late Dr. Robert T. Hill, claim that Waco is the site of the oldest permanent settlement in North America. Spanish maps show a settlement here as early as 1541 — called "Guasco" — 23 years before St. Augustine in Florida was founded.

Wacos and their allies the Tawakonis (sometimes called Tehuacanas) fought continuous battles with marauding bands of Osage and Cherokees to the north and the blood-thirsty Lipas to the south, and occasionally even scrapped with Comanche and Apache war parties. While many often were injured, few were killed during the forays since their weapons had progressed little beyond the Stone Age.

That all changed in 1541 with the intrusion of European explorers, most notably Vasquez de Coronado. The Spanish conquistador unwittingly introduced the Wacos and Wichitas to horses and — later — guns. This drastically changed the Waco lifestyle and in a few short generations, the Wacos became accomplished horsemen, riding and shooting with deadly abandon.

In time, the Wacos and Wichitas even defeated a small Spanish army in pitched battles in 1749 at the Taovaya Spanish fort and in the destruction of the San Saba mission. But the Wacos never were able to barter (or steal) enough rifles to compete effectively wth the larger tribes to the west and north.

That lack of firepower proved deadly in the largest battle ever fought on what now is Waco soil. Wilbarger's "Indian Depredations in Texas" records that a roving band of Wacos stole all the horses of two Cherokee villages in northeast Texas in late 1829. The Cherokees were well-equipped with the latest rifles and even had Negro slaves and modern wagons. Infuriated, they made a forced mareh to the main Waco village, located near the old Waco High School.

The Cherokees attacked at dawn, firing a volley from their rifles that killed dozens of Wacos. The Wacos were particularly low on rifles at the time, but fought back stubbornly with bows and arrows under the leadership of chief Illah-Tong before withdrawing behind their crude fortifications. Wilbarger claims that the Cherokees were planning an all-out assault to finish the village when they heard the noisy arrival of 200 Tawokonis from the East, summoned by an alert Waco runner.

Though the Tawakonis did not have rifles — and remained prudently beyond rifleshot — the Cherokees melted into the Brazos River bottoms and quietly withdrew, without their horses, but with 55 Waco scalps.

Relations between the Wacos and encroaching white settlers were little better. Sporadic fighting broke out, and Sam Houston once stripped a Waco chief named Narhashtowey "Lame Arm" of his rank of chief for an alleged depredation. The Cherokees continued to harass the Wacos and by 1837, drove the Wacos from the village on the Brazos. That same year, the Texas Rangers built a temporary building upriver on the Brazos to control the Indians, but even the Rangers soon were forced to withdraw.

Most Texas Indian tribes signed an agreement with the Texas Republic the following year at the mouth of the Washita River in Fannin County that permitted the Indians much freedom, so long as they submitted to state supervision. The Comanches and the Wacos never accepted Texas' jurisdiction and often fought on alone.

The situation continued to deteriorate until 1843 when a three-day council was held on Tawakoni Creek (about four or five miles east of Waco near Highway 6 in the vicinity of Harrison Switch), when the last great chief of the Wacos, Acaquash, urged the Wacos to sign a treaty with Texas. It took him two years to convince the Wacos to sign.

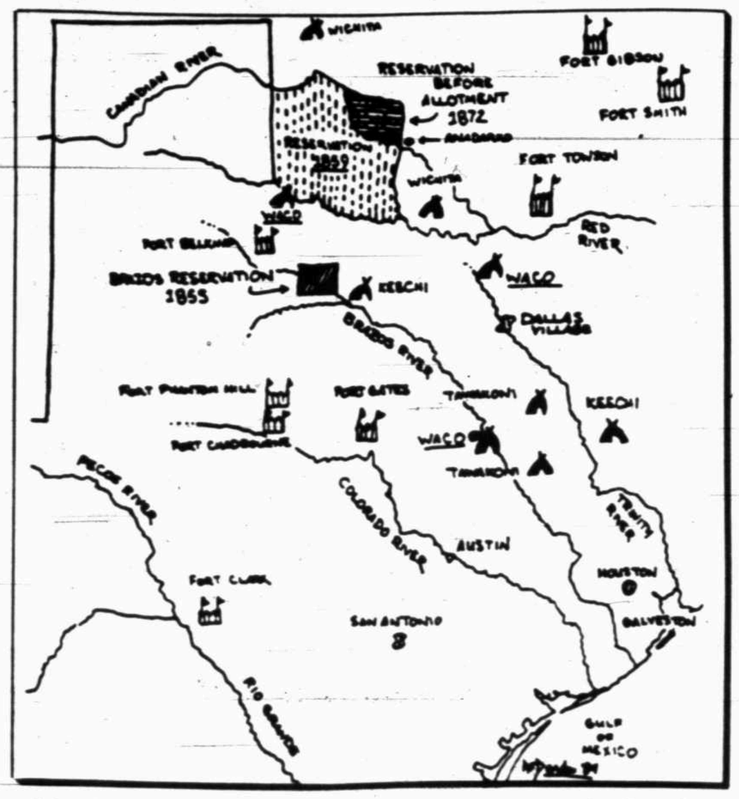

It didn't work. Warfare between the settlers and Indians simmered continually, occasionally breaking out in open war. Contemporary accounts claim that the Wacos were superb horsemen and often got the better of their white enemies. But the tide of settlers threatened to overwhelm them and farmers simply killed the Indians and took over the land assigned to them by the treaty.

In 1855, Texas, by then a member of the United States, rounded up all of the smaller tribes and a few of the Comanches — who continued to harrass the invaders for years to come — and forced them to resettle on a reservation on the Clear Fork of the Brazos in North Texas, near Fort Belknap in Young County. Four years later settlers were greedily claiming that land as well and the harried Wacos suffered badly at the hands of the better-equipped immigrants.

When the state government tacitly approved "open season," the Indians including the remaining Wacos, were forced into the Indian Territory, to a tiny reservation on the Washita River, on land leased from the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

When the Civil War broke out, the confederacy made overtures to the Indians, and some frustrated Wacos even joined the so-called "Caddo Battalion." Others simply were forced from their lands and scattered throughout southern Kansas, where many died of disease and starvation during cruel winters on the poor land.

After the Civil War, the powerful, seasoned armies of the United States subdued even the once-mighty Comanche, Kiowa, Cheyenne and Arapaho bands, gathered the few remaining Wichitas and Wacos together — now numbering about 800 — and forced them into yet another reservation in central Oklahoma. Their children were sent to boarding houses on the East Coast and the Wichitas were forced to submit to an intensive Americanization program supervised by federal agents that forced them to become subsistence farmers on poor land. Their language and customs were vigorously eradicated.

Old ranch's vegetation threatened

BULVERDE, Texas (AP) — An 1,800-acre ranch in the Texas Hill Country, where Indians once camped, now represents one of the last examples of what once was a native forest of juniper and oak.

Luke Thompson has walked most of those acres in his three years as caretaker of the property, and biologists have studied the old ranch's vegetation and wildlife.

But a tiny salamander discovered in a cave deep under the nature preserve now may be a key to its continued preservation.

A conservation organization is fighting to keep Honey Creek Ranch Preserve, which was saved from developers in 1981 when the Nature Conservancy bought it.

The Texas chapter of the conservancy, a nonprofit organization that purchases and manages wildlands nationwide, faces a year-end deadline to repay $2.1 million borrowed from a trust fund to purchase the ranch preserve.

"The money that we thought was going to come never materialized," said Thompson, the conservancy's land steward for Honey Creek and six other preserves in Texas.

Nationwide, the conservancy has purchased millions of dollars' worth of property. The organization's aims are to preserve "unique and significant" natural areas, along with the plants and animals dependent upon them.

"We're now looking at any alternative that we can," said Thompson, 32. "We are looking at various funding sources — everything and anyone — making personal contacts to corporations and individuals who are capable of making sizeable contributions."

The ranch, which was organized in the 1870s, is the best example the Texas Nature Conservancy could find of a specific type of native forestland. Growth in San Antonio has been threatening its existence, with development spreading northward to within only miles of the property.

"We were looking for an area in the juniper-oak savannah of the Hill Country," said Thompson, a biologist. "This particular plant association occurs only in the southeastern region of the Hill Country. None of it exists anymore in totally native condition."

University biologists who surveyed the property determined the vegetation present "well represented the native plant and animal life, and that it would be worthy of an attempt to restore it to the conditions it was in prior to settlement," he said.

He said biologists, among the few allowed access to the property, also have examined surface flora and fauna to determine whether their rarity might afford them governmental protection.

"We have already covered those bases," Thompson said. "We have our plant lists and animal lists, none of which will give (the property) that type of status. Some of the plants, animals, etc. could have been protected by federal law. But this is in no way a pristine area."

The property also contains three Indian sites and about two dozen springs that are the main source of Honey Creek.

Thompson found a cave on the property last year, containing delicate blind salamanders.

"The cave and the creek were a bonus, but have turned out to be the most central and significant part of the property because of the occurrence of the Honey Creek blind salamander, or Comal salamander, as it is sometimes called," he said.

Thompson discovered the cave last May when he was walking across the preserve after a rainstorm to observe drainage patterns and check on the more than two dozen springs that dot the ranch.

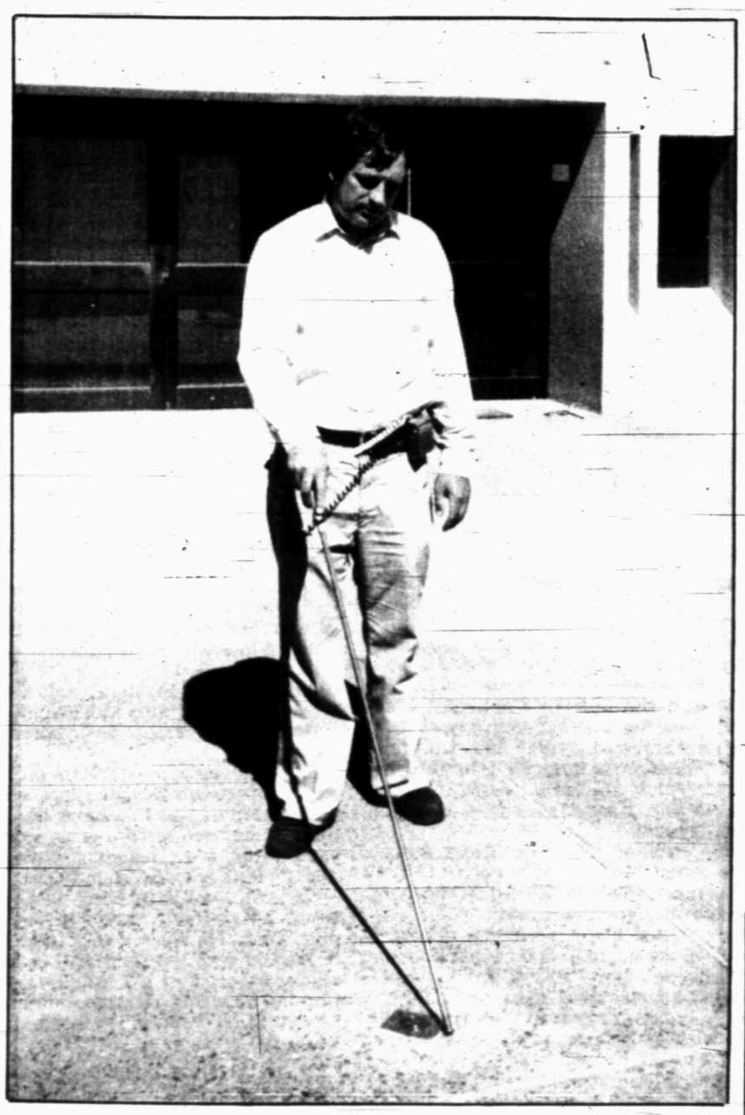

"I heard water running in an area where I knew there were no significant drainages," he said, "and when I stuck my head over the top of a hill, I saw a pool of water and a waterfall cascading down a 45-foot talus slope. It was still coming out of the ground six hours after the rain stopped."

Two weeks later, cavers from the University of Texas Speleological Society entered the opening, finding an underground stream and 850 meters of passage. In April, a mapping team extended the length to 1 kilometer.

Cavers affiliated with the National Speleological Society now have limited access to the cave because of the endangered salamander population.

"When we discovered the salamanders, the conservancy realized we would not ever be able to have an open-market sale, with no restrictions on the property," Thompson said. "There are some things worth saving here."

The property was a working ranch until the conservancy purchased it from William Bartle of Corpus Christi. Since then, Thompson has lived with his wife, Jackie, in the old ranch headquarters.

Wolfgang Preiser, architecture professor at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque, demonstrates the use of a specially equipped cane which is part of a system he has developed to help visually impaired people find their way around.

University provides programs for blind

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Wolfgang Preiser wants to give visually impaired people a few breaks — breaks that sighted people take for granted each day as they move from one place to another.

Preiser, an architecture professor at the University of New Mexico, says that maps, signs, arrows, curbs, sidewalks, walls and other kinds of visual aids can make getting around a simple task for the sighted.

But, for the blind, a building's wide-open lobby, outside mall or angled halls can become a logistical nightmare, he says.

"We're using directional systems with maps, colored lines, signs and such to help sighted people find their way," Preiser says.

"The same should apply to visually impaired people. Why should blind people not get directional guidance? Why not make life a little bit more easy for visually impaired people?"

Preiser is working on a system he says is designed not to set the blind apart, but to give them directional tools they can use to negotiate areas that otherwise might be impossible.

"We've developed a very simple, inexpensive system," he says.

THE PROGRAM has three parts — tactile maps, an electronic guidance system and voice message beacons.

He says tactile maps give people a mental image of the building or area; the electronic guidance keeps them on track and helps them move safely along the route, and the audio beacons give them verbal messages at key decision points.

"The idea is not to equip everybody and the world with wires and gadgetry but to apply this system in environments where warranted," he says.

He says the system primarily would be for public buildings, but it could be used effectively in other places, including airports and subway stations, shopping centers, hospitals that cater to the visually impaired, and even nature walks at parks.

Preliminary tests have been successful. Preiser and the people working with him have installed the system in a small portion of the UNM campus and plan to have it ready for students to try this fall.

Preiser says he began the project about seven years ago when the Student Union was remodeled, changing the building's rectangular grid to one with more angles. He says he was asked to devise a method to help the visually impaired students.

"I STARTED this with zero knowledge about what to use to help visually impaired people get around," he says.

The first idea, he says, was to develop a tactile map of the building, but Preiser says he couldn't find any place where such directories were in use.

"It didn't exist and to my knowledge still doesn't exist," he says. "We had to break new ground."

The first map looked like a floor plan in relief, he says.

"When that was tested it failed miserably," he says. "We learned a lot from that experience."

He says the map contained too much information to give the person a good mental image of the building.

"We had to simplify these maps," he says. "We had made it very easy to understand and assemble in the mind. You have to get a mental map by exploring with your fingertips."

The number of the symbols on the map were reduced from 25 to five.

"ALL WE WANT to show is what happens along a pathway," he says. "We want to show the features that are of interest to the blind — elevators, stairways, entrances, telephones, rest rooms, water fountains, fire exits."

But he decided the map alone was not enough. He came up with the idea for an electronic tracking system, but didn't know how it could be done.

Dr. James Small, a physics professor, called Preiser and said he could do it.

The electronic guidance system they developed uses flat wires laid in the concrete outside or on the floor inside, under the carpet or tile, and specially equipped canes. The wires replicate what the tacticle maps show the person.

"The system doesn't require any learning. The system does not require any maintenance because once in place nothing can happen to the electronics. It's very simple," Preiser says.

The cane has a small, round disc on it. The person places his thumb or index finger on it and the electronic signal from the wires is translated into a vibration on the disc.

"If you lose the signal, you know you have to stop and find the signal again and head that way," he says.

THE SYSTEM has been installed on the university campus in the new Student Services building as well as on the second floor of the Student Union.

Blind man competes in race

SEAL BEACH, Calif. (AP) — An athlete blinded four years ago in a weightlifting accident overcame "the fear inside" and swam to third place in a grueling 10-mile rough-water swim in the Pacific Ocean.

For John Morgan, 22, the race from the Huntington Beach pier to Seal Beach was the culmination of a two-year effort to revive a shattered confidence.

"You have to overcome the fear inside ... that's harder than any obstacle," Morgan said Sunday after the race.

Morgan was blinded when the springs on a weightlifting machine broke and whipped into his face. He decided to re-enter competitive swimming and enlisted the help of Ken Handorff, his coach at Golden West College in Huntington Beach.

After finishing third out of 50 contestants in the annual Seal Beach swim, Morgan stood up in the knee-deep water and ran the final 50 yards to the finish line. He was accompanied by Handorff and his father, Norm Morgan, for the final sprint, and was greeted by an ear-splitting ovation from the crowd.

Veep decision not special elsewhere

LONDON (AP) — While Walter Mondale was wondering whether to pick a woman as his candidate for running mate, Iceland's president was settling into her second term of office and Liechtenstein's women were only just getting the right to vote.

The two extremes typify the paradoxes in Europe and the rest of the world when it comes to women in politics.

Britons, Israelis, Indians, Sri Lankans, Norwegians and Argentines have been governed by women and therefore may see nothing special in Mondale's decision.

But there is no particular rhyme or reason to the accession of women to power in these countries. With the possible exception of Norway, none can boast an unusually liberated attitude to women, and there is no evidence that where women govern, the female half of the population is better off than elsewhere.

Israel's Golda Meir never had a woman in her Cabinet. To the end of her five-year term as prime minister in 1974 she scoffed at the feminist movement. Britain's Margaret Thatcher has had only one woman in her Cabinet. And the feminist movement has not thought much of her since she urged her people to "return to the Victorian values."

SOON AFTER her election in 1979 as Britain's first female prime minister, Mrs. Thatcher said she considered women "much more logical, much more reasonable, much more sensible."

Interviewed on television, she said, "I do not notice that I am a woman. I regard myself as a prime minister."

Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, in power since 1966 with one three-year interruption, is often dubbed, by admirers and detractors alike, as "the toughest man in her Cabinet."

That's what they said about the late Mrs. Meir and still say about Margaret Thatcher when they're not calling her "The Iron Lady." There seems to be an inclination to attribute masculine qualities to women leaders whenever they do what in men would be taken as natural, like sending their countries to war. All three women led their countries in wartime — and won.

The Scandinavians by and large rate top marks for genuine female involvement in government. Norway's Gro Harlem Brundtland, 45, served as prime minister for nine months in 1981. The 45-year-old socialist was toppled by a conservative-led coalition and now leads her Labor Party in opposition.

THE PRESENT Cabinet is headed by a man, Kaare Willoch, but four of its 17 members are women, more than in any other European country.

Feminists complain that governments fob off their women with portfolios like welfare, health or — as in France — women's rights. Sweden, however, entrusts them with more powerful jobs.

Alva Myrdal is such an accomplished disarmament negotiator that she won the 1982 Nobel Peace Prize. Karin Soder was appointed foreign minister when her liberal-conservative coalition took power in 1976.

In the present Swedish government, women hold the education, energy, labor and immigration portfolios. Denmark has sometimes had as many as five women in the Cabinet.

Spain has never had women in high office, but next door, Portugal had Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo for prime minister for six months in 1979. Picked as a stopgap after the parties failed to agree on a candidate, she quit after a general election. Although she never ran for office, the 53-year-old Ms. Pintasilgo remains one of Portugal's most popular public figures.

France's Simone Veil seemed to make some headway for women in 1979 when she was elected president of the European Parliament. But the parliament had few powers, and Mrs. Veil stepped down when her five-year term expired.

The Maltese leader was elected in 1982. Her position is largely ceremonial, but she does have power to dissolve the legislature. The Icelandic president, a former theater company director, is so popular that last last month she won a second term unopposed.

On the other hand, the 13,000 women of the tiny duchy of Liechtenstein had to wait until July 1 to get the vote. It was a close call, with 2,370 men voting in favor and 2,251 opposing.

In the Third World, the road to power has been rocky for some women.

Mrs. Gandhi imposed dictatorship on her country from 1975 to 1977 and wound up disgraced when democracy was restored. It did not prevent her regaining power in 1980 with a landslide election victory.

FAMILY TIES sometimes help. Mrs. Gandhi became famous as the daughter of Jawaharlal Nehru, independent India's first prime minister. On the neighboring island of Sri Lanka, Sirimavo Bandaranaike succeeded her husband, Solomon, who was assassinated while serving as premier in 1960.

Opponents ridiculed Mrs. Bandaranaike as "the weeping widow," but her plucky image won the nation's heart and led her to several election victories.

Jackson battling in pulpit, politics

By SHARON COHEN

CHICAGO (AP) — Nine months ago, the Rev. Jesse Louis Jackson was seeking a voice in Democratic politics. This week, he comes to the party's national convention claiming to speak for millions.

After turning professional politician for the first time this year, Jackson's role may have changed, but his passionate style and his formula for achieving his goals have not.

"Much of what he is doing is what he has been doing for 25 years," says longtime friend Thomas Todd, who, with Jackson, co-founded the Chicago-based civil rights organization, Operation PUSH (People United to Serve Humanity).

As a civil rights leader, Jackson, a 42-year-old Baptist minister, led lunch counter sit-ins and boycotts against America's major corporations. As a presidential candidate, he raised the specter of black voter boycotts.

As a clergyman, he traveled the world — embracing Yasser Arafat, admonishing South Africa and preaching his theme of moral righteousness. As a candidate, he was on the road again — shaking hands with Fidel Castro, assailing U.S. policy from Central America and leading his "humanitarian missions."

Jesse Jackson

With the primary season just under way, Jackson engineered a Rose Garden invitation by bringing a captured American airman home from Syria. Six months later, he deflected attention from Walter Mondale's vice presidential search with his Central American tour that resulted in 48 prisoners being freed from Cuban jails.

Critics accuse Jackson of being a weak organizer, flitting from issue to issue and having an almost obsessive hunger for publicity to feed an enormous ego.

WHILE THOSE criticisms have been constant, there was one new wrinkle in the Jackson fabric as the preacher turned politician.

As the nation's first serious black presidential candidate, his every utterance was deemed newsworthy, and, for the first time, he was no longer a one-man show.

Those who embraced him sometimes grabbed his spotlight — particularly Black Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan, who assailed Israel's "dirty" religion and described Hitler as a "great man," albeit "wickedly great."

Though Jackson later repudiated Farrakhan, the episode only widened the rift between Jackson and the Jewish community. The preacher who angered Jews with his embrace of Arafat and calls for a Palestinian homeland in 1979 had already stumbled as a politician when he referred to Jews as Hymies.

Still, on the whole, Jesse Jackson succeeded on the political trail much the way he has on the pulpit — as a great motivator.

He received more than 20 percent of the primary and caucus vote and brings more than 375 delegates to the convention from his "Rainbow Coalition" of the disaffected.

And Jackson says he has helped destroy the myth that only white males can be president or vice president.

JACKSON SAYS, "I've been able to watch a broken-spirited people come alive." He says his candidacy has given blacks — the mainstay of his "Rainbow Coalition" — a new sense of self-confidence.

Jackson did it by transforming the theme he hammered away at in churches and schools over the last two decades — "I am somebody" — into personal example.

Born poor and illegitimate on Oct. 8, 1941, in Greenville, S.C., during the Jim Crow era, Jackson was imbued with a fierce drive to succeed.

Jackson was an honor-student, student body president and quarterback at North Carolina A&T, where he earned a bachelor's degree in sociology and economics.

In college, he met Jacqueline Davis, whom he married in 1962. They have five children.

JACKSON IS an athletic 6-foot-2 who dresses in well-tailored suits, doesn't smoke or drink, and says he's motivated by his religion. In private, friends say, he displays a sharp sense of humor.

After college, he entered the Chicago Theological Seminary and soon joined the civil rights movement as a lieutenant of the Rev. Martin Luther King.

In 1967, King appointed him director of Operation Breadbasket, economic arm of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Four years later, after King's assassination, he founded Operation PUSH.

Jackson was with King in 1968 when he was shot down in Memphis, Tenn. He wore a shirt said to be soaked with the slain civil rights leader's blood to a Chicago City Council meeting the next day — though other King aides scoffed at his story.

Kennedy plays smaller role

SAN FRANCISCO — For the first time in a generation, the Democrats are holding a convention in which the name Kennedy isn't getting star billing.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, the party's most charismatic figure for more than a decade, has been in town since Sunday but has remained virtually invisible.

That should change somewhat tonight when he steps onto the podium to introduce expected nominee Walter Mondale. Kennedy may electrify the audience the way he did in 1980, but the fact remains that he will be playing a minor, supporting role.

"This is Vice President Mondale's convention," said press aide Steve McMahon. "It's not Sen. Kennedy's convention."

While Kennedy's minor role is largely due to his own choosing, it was apparently shaped in part by Mondale forces who haven't forgetten Kennedy's destructive challenge of Carter and Mondale in 1980, a former Kennedy aide said.

Looking trim but pale, Kennedy commented briefly on his role in the convention as he stepped onto a tennis court Tuesday with San Francisco developer Peter Douglas.

"My role here is to visit with a number of elected officials and representatives of all the candidates," he said. "We're talking about how we believe the campaign can be best organized and structured, and how I can be the most useful."

The 53-year-old senator has been watching the campaign from the wings since December 1982, when, citing the wishes of his children, he abruptly dropped out of the race for the Democratic nomination.

Considered the frontrunner from the beginning, Kennedy was leading Mondale — his closest rival — by a margin of nearly 2 to 1 at the time, according to the Gallup Poll.

He took no sides during the primaries, declining Mondale's request for an endorsement when the former vice president was struggling to overcome Gary Hart in the Massachusetts primary. Kennedy didn't endorse Mondale until he had all but sewn up the nomination.

As the convention approached, the former Kennedy aide said, Kennedy began to worry about the role he would play before a new generation of Democrats too young to remember his family's Camelot days.

"A convention is very ritualistic, and if you're not part of the ritual you're not a player in the party," said the former insider, who spoke on the condition his name not be used. "The worst thing that can happen is that you become an irrelevancy."

Kennedy, seeking to establish himself as a Democratic Party elder statesman, apparently wanted to be the convention's keynote speaker, the former aide said.

But Mondale and his aides had not forgotten Kennedy's challenge in 1980, a challenge that some party officials felt cost Carter and Mondale their re-election.

Particularly irritating to the Mondale forces was the fact that Kennedy continued his challenge long after Carter gained the delegates needed to secure his re-nomination.

It continued into the convention, where Kennedy delivered a stunning speech, bringing tears to the eyes of delegates, party officials and even some reporters. The rousing performance forced Carter to give in on several key platform issues, including a $12 million job program.

Later in the convention, Kennedy joined Carter on the podium in a display of unity, but only after a dramatic delay that some interpreted as a sign of his continued disgust with the president.

Carter apparently is still bitter. In a 1982 interview, the former president blamed Kenedy for damaging the party and said: "I hope he's not the nominee in 1984. He would not be my favorite."

This may have been on Mondale's mind in June, when, as the apparent nominee, he set about choosing the 1984 convention keynote speaker.

Also in the back of his mind may have been Chappaquiddick, the scandal that continues to haunt Kennedy. Exactly 15 years ago today, a car driven by Kennedy went off a bridge at Chappaquiddick Island on Martha's Vineyard, killing campaign worker Mary Jo Kopechne. Kennedy failed to report the accident for eight hours.

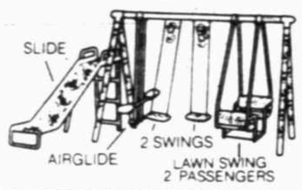

But many party officials downplay Chappaquiddick. New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, a close friend, asked Mondale to consider choosing Kennedy.

Burned boy undergoes surgery

ORANGE, Calif. (AP) — David Rothenberg, who survived a motel-room fire set by his father in a murder-suicide attempt, was in good condition after undergoing four hours of reconstructive surgery, officials said.

"The surgery went very well," Dr. Bruce Achauer said Tuesday after performing the operation at the University of California-Irvine Medical Center here.

David was was expected to stay for two or three days at the medical center, located 25 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles.

David and his mother, Marie Rothenberg, recently moved to Orange County from New York City. He will begin third grade in a private Fullerton church school this fall and is expected to return to the hospital for further surgery later in the year.

David's father, Charles David Rothenberg, 42, is currently serving 13 years in state prison for arson and attempted murder.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Chuck Connors, the fast-shooting Lucas McCain in "The Rifleman" television series and the star of more than 35 motion pictures, has received a star in Hollywood's Walk of Fame.

Connors' star was unveiled Wednesday in the sidewalk outside the Paramount Theater on Hollywood Boulevard in noontime ceremonies sponsored by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

"People can walk all over me now," the square-jawed, 6-foot-5 actor quipped to family members and celebrity onlookers that included "Rifleman" co-stars Johnny Crawford, Patricia Blair and Joan Taylor, plus Los Angeles Lakers Coach Pat Riley.

Connors, 60, who most recently co-starred in "The Yellow Rose" on NBC-TV, was the 1,783rd celebrity to be honored in the Walk of Fame. His star was placed between those previously dedicated to Pearl White and George Gobel.

Born in New York City, Connors' starred as "The Rifleman" from 1958 to 1963. He has had numerous TV guest-starring roles, and won an Emmy nomination in 1976 for his part in TV's "Roots" mini-series.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Eddie Murphy's billing as "strategic guest star" in "Best Defense" is a studio ploy to disguise his minor role, say disgruntled theater owners who claim they were led to believe Murphy was a full-fledged co-star.

In the Paramount comedy scheduled to open Friday, Murphy briefly portrays a soldier who field-tests a tank developed by an engineer played by Dudley Moore, the main character.

"It was quoted to me as an Eddie Murphy-Dudley Moore movie," added the executive, who asked not to be identified by name. "But Murphy's in it for about 15 minutes, and it's obviously a secondary story line."

The Times said other theater owners who booked the film say Paramount's description of the film exaggerated Murphy's role in order to drum up buyer interest.

A Paramount "bid letter" sent to exhibitors early this year began:

"Dudley Moore and Eddie Murphy — two of the screen's hottest and funniest comic giants — join forces...." But the two actors share no scenes in the film.

Despite the criticisms, a Paramount spokesman said the studio has been "extremely meticulous" not to overstate Murphy's role.

Meanwhile, the district attorney's office Wednesday said that Murphy will not be charged in connection with a bar fight in which he was slightly hurt. Murphy's manager, Robert Wachs, said Murphy was caught in the middle Saturday when a woman being pursued by a bar patron tried to hide behind the 23-year-old entertainer.

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Former Pink Floyd bass guitarist Roger Waters treated fans to a melange of Floyd hits dating back to 1968 and a one-hour multi-media presentation of his new album as he opened his first solo North American tour this week.

Waters' Hartford shows Tuesday and Wednesday nights were his first in North America since Pink Floyd's last tour, "The Wall," which played only in New York and Los Angeles in 1980.

The tour, featuring a clean-shaven and low-key Eric Clapton on lead guitar, will also play in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Toronto and Montreal before ending July 31.

Pink Floyd broke up in 1983.

Waters' new 2½-hour live show was split into two sets.

The first, a retrospective of Pink Floyd music from the 1968 "Set the Controls For the Heart of the Sun" to the 1983 "The Gunners Dream," was backed by clips from the original films that accompanied "Dark Side of the Moon," "Wish You Were Here," "Animals" and "The Wall" shows.

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — Getting Henry David Thoreau's Walden Pond back up to snuff will cost Massachusetts more than $1 million — and even then it won't be the simple refuge the philosopher treasured.

"There is a severe erosion problem," Harry Dodson of the state Department of Environmental Management said Wednesday. "The banks are simply slipping into the water because of all the foot traffic. We want to find a solution to shore that up that is as natural as possible."

Thoreau, whose concept of passive resistance and leading the simple life influenced such men as Mohandas K. Gandhi and Leo Tolstoy, lived in a one-room cabin by the pond from July 4, 1845 to Sept. 6, 1847.

He reported his experience in a journal published as "Walden," lamenting that "the mass of men lead lives of quiet desperation."

The pond has become a major attraction for tourists and bathers.

The erosion phase of the plan will cost $600,000, said Dodson.

When in Rome...

A tourist reads a guidebook to Rome, showing no interest in a damaged bust of Rafael. The statue was one of 86 in the Villa Borghese park toppled earlier this week by a man with a crowbar. No motive for the vandalism has been found, but police arrested Perzj Gumemiale, 40, on Lublin, Poland.

Letters arrive 40 years late

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — During World War II, Clementi Holder wrote often to her husband, a prisoner of the Germans in Szubin, Poland. But many of the letters of encouragement and love didn't reach him — until recently.

Polish workers discovered a packet of her letters in an old building, where they apparently were hidden by German censors. Last month they finally were delivered to H. Randolph Holder, 40 years later.

"Until I saw those letters, it never occurred to me that she loved me that much," said Holder, now 67 and the owner of two radio stations in Athens.

"When I'd go two or three weeks without a letter, I assumed the censors must be holding up my mail. But when I finally escaped from the POW camp and got home safely after the war, we never talked about any missing letters."

Mrs. Holder said she had mixed emotions about seeing the letters because "they brought all that back to me again."

"I remember when the telegram came saying he was missing in action. I ran down to the beauty parlor where my mother was having her hair done. I knelt down on the floor and started pounding on her legs and yelling, 'Those damn Germans! Those damn Germans!'

"The saddest thing is that he didn't get them when he needed them," she said. "He could've thought that his bride was going out on dates back home. I know wives who did."

Holder said the 176 letters — counting those written to a fellow Army officer who escaped from the POW camp with him — never would have reached Athens at all if the Polish People's Republic hadn't taken an interest in the case for what he believes are political reasons.

More arrests made in domestic fights

By CURT BROWN
Associated Press Writer

MINNEAPOLIS — Police responding to domestic squabbles are arresting three times as many people as they did a few months ago under a new policy aimed at preventing wife-beaters from repeating their abuse.

Minneapolis is one of the first major U.S. cities to move toward more arrests for domestic violence and away from having police encourage couples to talk out their problems, Police Chief Anthony Bouza said. He added that he expects other police departments to follow suit.

The new policy stems from an experiment two years ago in which officers answering domestic calls were randomly assigned one of three strategies.

After analyzing more than 300 cases, researchers reported "that arrest was the most effective of three standard methods. The other two methods — attempting to counsel both parties or sending assailants away from home for several hours — were found to be considerably less effective in deterring future violence."

The percentage of repeat abuse was 10 percent in cases in which police made arrests, 19 percent when police counseled the couple and 24 percent when the suspect was sent away, according to researchers Lawrence W. Sherman of the University of Maryland and Richard Beck of the University of California at Santa Barbara.

The study was done from early 1981 to mid-1982, under a grant from the National Institute of Justice.

Last March, Bouza issued an order requiring his officers "to aggressively utilize arrest powers." Since then arrests have tripled.

Under the new policy, Bouza's 685 officers are expected to make arrests in several situations, including any instances in which they or the victims fear the violence might continue.

If officers don't make an arrest, they must fill out a form explaining why and submit it to their superiors.

During the five months before the policy went into effect, an average of 1.8 adults were arrested each month for felony aggravated assault and 25 adults were charged with simple domestic assault, according to Sgt. Tom Skala, of the department's family violence unit.

Those figures have jumped to 6.5 felony arrests and 81.5 misdemeanor arrests per month under the new policy.

Bouza said the increased number of arrests puts more abusers in the legal arena, "where we can have some direct control over their behavior."

Patrick V. Murphy, president of the Washington-based Police Foundation, said, "The common police tradition has been to do little.

"Physical violence within the home was thought to be exempt from the same laws which kept acquaintances or strangers from assaulting each other on the street," Murphy said.

Generally, the police approach has been to "restore a semblance of order, warn the assailant to behave, perhaps send him out of the home, and go on to the next call," Murphy said.

Pat Murphy, who is not related to Patrick Murphy and is head of the Minnesota Correction Department's battered women's program, said, "Up until this time, police guidelines were for separating the parties or trying to mediate the conflict. ... The arrest policy is a real shift in the right direction."

Sgt. Jerry Schroeder said he has made arrests to follow the policy but he believed that, in some cases, counseling would have been sufficient.

Schroeder also said some people "just aren't intimidated by the threat of jail. Why do convicted burglars steal and drunken drivers keep drinking?"

Many wife-beaters are chemically dependent, Skala said, and "when they're drunk they won't be thinking about getting arrested."

Despite their reservations, Schroeder and Skala said they like the arrest policy because it gives them more power and defuses dangerous situations.

The Midland Post Office has indicated it will be accepting applications for the DCM exam soon (possibly this month). The dates for taking applications have not been set at this time, but those dates should appear in the near future on Post Office bulletin boards and in local newspapers. The DCM position currently pays $10.56 per hour plus excellent benefits. People are hired for these positions based on their exam score, i.e. the people with the highest scores are hired.

WORKSHOP BY POSTAL EXAM PREPARATION CENTER

Many cities often take applications and begin testing the very next week. This system does not allow adequate time for proper preparation. In order to make sure that you have enough time to properly prepare, this workshop is being offered before application dates have been set. This workshop was designed by the foremost authority in America on gaining postal employment. Stephen McNally is a former postal employee and a Ph. D. candidate in Education. He scored 100% on the first DCM exam. One of Mr. McNally's students recently made this statement: "This workshop was well worth my time and money. Using Mr. McNally's techniques allowed me to score 100% on my first 3 Clerk-Carrier exams!" K. A. Summerfield, IL. The DCM exam & C/C exams are very similar.
