I want 'peace on earth'...and Jordache jeans

BY EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Jamie Foley of Manhattan said she didn't believe in Santa Claus, but she wrote him anyway hoping for world peace and designer jeans.

Even those at Queens happily included the page in the Sears catalog where Santa could order a Space Invader set and Lawana resident Jessica Hubbard proffered "a plate of cookies and a carrot for Rudolph."

Their letters and those from children all over the country were sent to the North Pole — sometimes to "Santa Land" or "Rudolph Avenue" — and ended up at the General Post Office on Eighth Avenue.

Postmaster George Blumlein said the office expects to get more than 9,000 Santa letters this year as part of its 20-year-old "Letters to Santa" program.

Originally, postal employees read the letters and used to respond to them. Now Santa's helpers are New York City high school students, who began reading the letters Tuesday, to make sure the writers get responses from Mr. Claus.

If the letters can be believed, most children have been very good this year or, as one child wrote, "as good as I could be."

"I do all of my work at school and I sing to God," wrote a correspondent named Laura, of Buffalo, who wanted a Kermit the Frog puppet.

"I'd like a tote bag, a gerbil and a fast food stand," wrote Sue Winn, 8, of Staten Island.

Antonetta Lambros of Farmingville wanted "my own goldfish," and Laura Chenn of Yonkers wanted a "Get-and-Stephen-Get people" from Trudy's window.

Some children, not unlike all others, Gee Nifty girl asked that Santa bring her mother "a new car, chocolate candy and lots and lots."

Many were money-conscious. One little boy listed the prices of the items on his list and added that Santa could "find most of these things at May's (a discount department store)."

Some requests were less concrete than others, like Juanita's. "I don't believe in you, but...I want peace in the world, people will like me more, a Jordache pocketbook, Jordache jeans and Atari."

There were other skeptics and some worriers. Billy DeVos of Clifton, N.J., wanted to know how Santa got into the house when the chimney was too thin and the roof too steep and angular.

"And how do you get some of the gifts all the way in the neck of the tree without making all the ornaments fall down?" he asked. "P.S. Wanna your seat belt."

Some writers jotted a sad note, like Andy Foster, 12, of Fairbanks, who had his house burglarized and last year's Christmas gifts stolen.

"My mom has been depressed lately. If you can, could you please send my mom a bottle of Chanel No. 5?"

Mary Seay of Rustburg, Va., wrote that "Most of all I want to see my grandmother. She has been in a hospital for a long time."

Some grownups wrote, too. A woman from Manhattan wrote to say she can't get anything this year for her three children.

"It hurts me," she wrote. "If there's anything you have to make my children happy, I know they would be overjoyed for it."

Reagan: MX defeat was 'grave mistake'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says defeat of production plans for the MX missile was "a grave mistake" that must be reversed, and White House officials worry it signals a new post-election mood in Congress against a huge buildup in Pentagon spending.

Reagan vowed to "do everything I can to take this case to the country," on Tuesday when the House — by a surprisingly wide 245-176 vote — deleted $988 million intended for building the first five missiles.

The House did not kill the MX missile program, however. The bill still contains about $2.4 billion in research and development funds for the MX and its basing system.

"Unless reversed in coming days," Reagan said, "it will seriously set back our efforts to protect the nation's security and could handcuff our negotiators at the arms table."

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said he expects the Senate to take up the bill containing MX funds early next week. "We are somewhat stronger over here," said Baker, an MX supporter.

Although the vote was a major setback for the president, who had waged an intensive lobbying campaign to save the MX, both supporters and opponents agree the fight isn't over.

"We won the battle, but we haven't won the war," said Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., leader of the anti-MX forces.

"I don't think this means MX is dead," said Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., a leading MX supporter.

But Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said today that the vote should not have surprised the White House. "I think there was a feeling that defense was on the chopping block," he said. "This clearly demonstrates defense will not escape unscathed next year."

Dole predicted on NBC-TV's "Today" show that a lengthy expected Senate debate casts doubt on whether Congress will approve MX missile funds this year. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, appearing on "CBS Morning News," also expressed uncertainty whether the Reagan administration can win Senate approval before Congress adjourns.

Weinberger said the vote reflected a feeling stemming from the Nov. 2 elections that defense spending ought to be reduced, but "it's actually going to cause us to spend more on defense because when you delay production ... you've just automatically made things more costly."

The defense secretary said the administration had failed to make its case for the MX. "...Some way we have not yet been able to convey to the American people or to the Congress the really serious nature, the growing nature of the peril" represented by the rapid Soviet arms buildup, he said.

Testifying later at a Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on the MX, Weinberger said that if the Senate went along with the House in rejecting production funds for the missile, "America would be telling the world that we are disarming unilaterally."

White House strategists planned to meet today to work on a plan to assure victory for the MX in the Republican-controlled Senate.

Hazy graze

A billy goat tethered to an old-fashioned hay rake sets a lazy scene in a late autumn field near Gaithersburg, Md. Like the low-hanging sun, such autumnal scenes will soon set — winter is officially 12 days away.

'Unusual' House coalition denies funding for MX

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the end, it was an unusual combination of nuclear freeze advocates, fiscal conservatives and skeptics over the Pentagon's latest basing plan who accounted for the House's surprisingly strong vote to deny money to buy the first MX missiles.

Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, the New York Democrat who proposed the $988 million cut for missile production, could count on freeze supporters for votes, but he got some unaccustomed allies as well in the 245-176 result Tuesday night.

There was, for instance, Rep. Carroll Hubbard, D-Ky., who told colleagues that he always has voted for defense bills.

But, he said, he was more persuaded by the nation's economic problems than the Soviet threat that President Reagan had stressed to him at a White House lobbying session Monday.

"Nowadays, the words 'here come the Russians' don't scare Kentuckians half as much as 'here come the creditors,'" he said.

Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., a senior member of the House Armed Services Committee and pro-defense stalwart, said he thought conventional forces were being shortchanged at the expense of building a nuclear system whose workability has not been proven.

Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash., said the U.S. strategic arsenal would hardly be without a strong punch, listing an array of other land-based and sea- and air-launched missiles that comprise the "triad" of nuclear weaponry.

Addabbo stressed throughout an afternoon of debate that the Air Force could not even spend the production funds in the current fiscal year, now more than two months old. The money would just sit unused in a Pentagon account while federal social programs were cut further, he said.

He also said, Pentagon arguments to the contrary, that the MX would violate provisions of the unratified SALT II arms-limitation treaty, whose terms both the U.S. and Soviet governments have agreed to honor.

Several members said they were dubious about the worth of the president's recently announced plan to place the 100 MX missiles in a closely spaced, "dense pack" arrangement of reinforced concrete silos near Cheyenne, Wyo.

Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., leading the administration's case, pointed out that the bill included a provision that would ban use of the money until March 15.

By this time, he said, members would be able to be fully briefed on "dense pack" and the Pentagon would have submitted a full schedule for production and deployment of the weapons.

Edwards also emphasized that the vote concerned the missiles themselves, not the basing method, but opponents and White House officials agreed later that uncertainty about "dense pack" cost the administration some votes.

"It was a combination of all those things that just came together," Edwards admitted later. "We knew all week we didn't have the votes. It was just more than we could carry."

'Nasty' weather in forecast

The pleasant weather of the last few days is about to get nasty as some pre-winter weather descends on the Permian Basin today.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, Midlanders might see freezing drizzle, a few snow flakes and possibly a traveler's advisory tonight.

According to the NWS forecast, there's a 70 percent chance of freezing rain, possibly mixed with snow, through mid-day Thursday.

It is expected to be cloudy and colder tonight with the low in the mid-20s. Thursday should warm up a bit with the high reaching the mid-30s.

Freezing rain and snow should turn to rain by Thursday afternoon, the weatherman said.

Tuesday's high of 65 missed the record high of 79 set in 1966, and the overnight low of 36 was quite a bit warmer than the record low of 15 set in 1978.

The NWS had recorded only a trace of precipitation this morning, while most area towns were reporting rain, with Lamesa reporting freezing drizzle.

Opponents of gasoline tax hike vow fight in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — House passage of a gasoline tax hike to finance thousands of highway repair jobs has done little to silence its opponents. Some of them even suggest they will filibuster the measure when it reaches the Senate floor this week.

However, Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., steadfastly declared Tuesday, "I predict it will pass in the Senate."

The Senate Finance Committee was meeting today to draft its version of the tax provisions, which are a part of a complex highway bill scheduled for consideration by the full Senate on Thursday. The House passed the legislation 262-143 early Tuesday morning following more than 10 hours of debate.

Despite the highest unemployment rate in more than 40 years and support from President Reagan and the bipartisan leaders in both houses of Congress, the fate of the job-creating measure remains uncertain.

Reagan administration estimates that the measure will create 170,000 construction jobs, and 150,000 more related to the construction projects, have not swayed opponents.

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., said Tuesday the House-passed bill was the "first rotten egg" of the lame-duck session of Congress.

"Members of Congress are in a panic about unemployment and are determined to do something, even if it's the wrong thing. And this is the wrong thing," he said. "I don't blame President Reagan. I blame it on the leadership of both houses of Congress."

Humphrey, who attended a news conference with opponents of the measure Tuesday, promised "sustained and extensive debate" on the Senate floor, code words for a filibuster.

So far, however, Humphrey and fellow Republican Don Nickles of Oklahoma are the only members of the Senate who have indicated they may try to stage a filibuster.

Police probe Midlander's stabbing death

The victim, Donald A. Allen of the Royal Crest Apartments, 4201 Andrews Highway, Apt. 40, was discovered by a relative about 6 p.m. He had been stabbed several times in the back and side, according to police.

His body, clad only in a shirt, was found face-down in a large pool of dried blood in a hallway of the apartment. It was not immediately known how long he had been dead.

Justice of the Peace Robert Pine pronounced him dead at the scene and his body was taken to the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home. Services are pending.

Jurors chosen; Trial begins for second of eight defendants in dog fight raid

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The second dog-fight trial stemming from the Aug. 29 raid of an alleged pit bulldog fight southeast of Midland was to resume today in Midland County Court after six jurors were selected Tuesday.

On trial for the misdemeanor offense of cruelty to animals is 30-year-old James Wayne Burton, one of eight Midlanders who were arrested by sheriff's deputies and Texas Department of Public Safety troopers in the midnight raid near an abandoned house at Farm Road 715 and County Road 146.

Convicted of cruelty-to-animals in the first trial in late October was 23-year-old Willie Howard Whitmire. The jury meted Whitmire a $1,000 fine and a one-year probated sentence. The maximum penalty for the offense is a $2,000 fine and a one-year jail sentence.

In the first trial, DPS Trooper Sue Rudie testified that she saw "narcotics," apparently used to stimulate the dogs to fight, in the house near the alleged pit. Sheriff's Capt. B.J. McDaniel said he saw, with and without his binoculars, men putting dogs in and taking them out of a 16-square-foot carpeted arena, heard dogs yipping and men shouting and laughing, and later, after the raid, saw injured — cut and slashed — dogs, which he said appeared undernourished. He also said he saw what appeared to blood on a wall, door and floor of the house.

However, Deputy Mike Love, who took photographs of about 10 of 15 dogs leashed or in cages at the scene, said that the dogs were "fighting trim" and appeared healthy to him. The dogs were taken to a veterinarian for care.

The sheriff's investigation apparently did not reveal any gambling at the site.

On Tuesday, Assistant County Attorney Mark Dettman and defense attorney Edward T. Garza selected six jurors — four men and two women — from a 16-member jury panel.

Garza wanted to reject most of the prospectives jurors and said he was unable to select six fair and impartial jurors from the panel. The presiding judge, County Judge Bill Ahders, however, ordered Garza and Dettman to make their strikes and, if possible, to select six jurors; thye did.

Ten of the 16 prospective jurors were pet owners, and four of their numbers said they could not in good conscience give the minimum punishment — a $1 fine and one-day probated sentence — for a person convicted of cruelty of animals.

TV tower takes tumble, kills five

MISSOURI CITY, Texas (AP) — An engineer turned on his video camera just in time to "hear something snap" moments before watching an 1,800-foot TV tower tumble to the ground, hurling five men to their deaths.

Andy Hudack's tape Tuesday morning captured the tower starting to fall and the sound track picked up his voice as he shouted "Oh, my God!" followed by several seconds of the roaring collapse.

Hudack was too busy running to see the bodies fall. Three other men working on the second-story roof of a nearby building were hurt when they leaped or were thrown to the ground.

"I was busy moving the other way," Hudack said. "The poor people who were working on the tower, I'm sure they — I just feel bad for them."

The dead men had been riding on an antenna as it was lifted atop the tower, said Lt. Roger Boyd of the Fort Bend Sheriff's Department in this suburb southwest of Houston.

Bill Cordell, chief engineer for KIKK, one of the radio stations scheduled to use the tower, said workers had hoisted a second antenna atop the tower when a gin pole — a bar to which the pulley mechanism is attached — failed, causing the antenna to fall and cutting through a guy wire.

"When the wire got struck, it probably put a turning motion in the tower and brought it down," Cordell said.

Hudack was making a videotape to mark the end of the 9-month project.

"I heard something snap," Hudack said. "Then the tower started falling. I just put my gear down rather hastily and got out of the way...I wasn't going to sit there and let it fall on me."

The victims died of multiple injuries.

"They were all in bad shape," said Peace Justice L.E. Eguia. "You've got to remember, they were riding this thing down."

Daniel H. Smith, site manager of twin broadcast towers about a mile away, said he watched the antenna being hoisted.

"I noticed that it was going up but then was slowly going down," he said. "The tower began to shiver and broke into three pieces."

The falling tower crushed a transmitter shack belonging to UHF television station KTXH and created "a big cloud of dust," he said.

Hours after the accident, the tower lay in a mass of twisted metal, with cable the size of a man's wrist stretching hundreds of yards from the wreckage. Eguia said some of the cable was driven two feet into the mud.

Representative of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and the Aetna Insurance Company were to begin investigating the tower accident later today, the Houston Chronicle reported.

Killed were Gene Crosby, 24, and David Stewart, 21, of North Carolina; Donald K. Owens, 21, of Mississippi; and Johnnie Wilson, about 26, and Johnnie Bratten, 26, both of South Carolina, said A.J. Noto, dispatcher for the Fort Bend County sheriff's department.

Noto said authorities did not know the hometowns of the men, who all worked for Worldwide Tower Service Inc. of Pitman, N.J.

The three injured men were from Houston. They were reported in stable condition at area hospitals.

The transmitter building of Houston-based television station KTXH, above, lies in ruins beneath the rubble of an 1,800-foot tower which collapsed Tuesday morning, killing five men. Right, rescue workers search through the rubble for the victims. Three other people were injured and reported in stable condition in Houston-area hospitals.

Starved horses will be given new homes

TYLER (AP) — Ranchers throughout East Texas who offered to adopt some of the 130 starving wild horses found on a ranch north of here will be receiving calls today from federal officials giving away the animals.

The Bureau of Land Management staged a lottery Tuesday to determine which of the 500 ranchers on six separate lists will be offered up to two horses.

"We had no way of knowing who was first," said BLM spokesman John Gumert. "The only fair way was to hold a public drawing and put the names in a ranking."

Gumert said officials in Washington, who have closely monitored the plight of the starving herd, also decided Tuesday to waive a $70 adoption fee because of the cost of future veterinary care.

"The 70 bucks won't make a dent in the federal debt," Gumert said. "These horses are going to require rather extensive veterinary treatment over the next few months and the cooperative agreements of adoption will include veterinary requirements."

One of the 130 rescued horses remains in a veterinarian's care, he said, and won't be offered for adoption. The remains of 36 horses were found on an East Texas ranch and six have died since being placed under the care of veterinarians, Gumert said.

The state has filed charges of animal mistreatment against rancher Joe Corbett, who adopted 170 wild horses from federal land in Nevada and held them on his ranch near Pittsburg.

In January, a federal grand jury will hear testimony in Tyler to determine whether federal charges are warranted.

Gumert said Interior Secretary James Watt has written to U.S. Attorney General William French Smith asking for a full investigation.

"Watt is following this horse case very closely," Gumert said. "Watt gave us the authority to expend whatever money was needed to clean this case up."

One of the 42 people who apparently signed power of attorney rights over to Corbett says he was not aware he was signing such a document. George Bates of Pittsburg said he signed an application to get a horse and was responsible for getting 13 others to sign applications for the BLM horses.

"I carried the application around and got them to sign," Bates said. "But if signing that application form is the same as signing my power of attorney, then I signed it."

Man convicted in auto scheme

DALLAS (AP) — A federal court jury has convicted one man and acquitted another on charges of conspiring to use counterfeit cashier's checks to purchase Mercedes-Benz automobiles that were sold in other states.

Johnnie Lee Pierce, whose age was not available, was found guilty Monday on one charge of conspiring to pass phony checks and three counts of transporting stolen automobiles across state lines.

The jury acquitted Joseph J. Clark, 38, who had been charged with one count of conspiracy and one count of transporting a stolen car to Metairie, La.

Disease-causing gene isolated

HOUSTON (AP) — A specific gene blamed for a metabolic birth defect that can lead to mental retardation has been isolated, according to scientists at the Baylor College of Medicine.

"We have isolated bits of DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) that code for the enzyme deficient in a disease called phenylketonuria or PKU," said Dr. Savio L.C. Woo, associate professor of cell biology. "We have found that PKU results when the gene malfunctions."

PKU is caused by a deficiency in an enzyme needed to change one amino acid into another that is important in the development of brain tissue.

Anti-depressant drugs take time to effect change

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been diagnosed as having depression and have been placed on antidepressant therapy. It now has been ten days and I am very discouraged. Should I discontinue the medicine? — Ms. E.V., Cleveland.

Dear Ms. V.: No, do not stop taking the medication. You can anticipate that it will take a few weeks (approximately three) for the medication to start making you feel better. That's an awfully long time to wait without getting discouraged. It's very important that you understand that this long wait is normal. You can benefit from the experience of the many thousands of people who have taken this form of therapy before you. All have been equally impatient for relief, and all have had to wait out a preliminary period when they had no hint that the drug was working — except, possibly, for side effects. Don't get discouraged and stop taking your medication. It's a very effective drug; it simply takes time to produce the desired effect. Follow your doctor's instructions carefully. He/she will tell you when and how often to take the drug. Your physician may also instruct you to change the dosage on certain dates, gradually increasing it as your body begins to adjust. Eventually you will feel truly better.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I played a lot of ball while in college and I've kept myself in reasonably good shape since I graduated 18 years ago, except that I've put on some weight. About a year ago, I learned that I had diabetes, but my doctor put me on a diet and I do not even have to take insulin. For the past six months I've been jogging, and now do about four miles a day, four times a week. At this point I'm considering training for a marathon, but I don't want to start anything that may hurt my health. All of which is a long way of asking you if running in a marathon would be possible for me or if I should just forget it. — Abe, Dallas, Texas

Dear Abe: Assuming you have no medical problems other than the diabetes and that your diabetes is being controlled by diet alone, there is no reason why you should not consider marathon running. However, you should keep your physician informed about any drastic change in your level of training so that dietary changes may be made, if necessary.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Some friends of mine believe in being "modern," whatever that means, and have decided to raise their children permissively. Therefore, they don't close their bedroom door and their children have walked in on them while they were having sexual relations. They say they don't want their children to be ashamed of a natural function. Am I old-fashioned in thinking that there must be something wrong with this? — Audrey, Wilmington, Del.

Dear Audrey: I would suggest that your friends at least discuss with their pediatrician the possible effects of having their children as an audience when they are having sexual relations. There are many bodily functions that are normal and that should not be a source of shame, but that are best performed in privacy.

You don't indicate the ages of your friends' children, but the practice you describe has the potential for serious psychological damage. I firmly believe in the idea of sharing among members of a family, but there are some aspects of a relationship between husband and wife that children should not be a part of.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you tell me what spirulina is? It's being sold in a health food store in my neighborhood. It's supposed to be very high in protein and kill your appetite at the same time. This seems to be just the kind of food I'm looking for. — Matthew

Dear Matthew: Spirulina has been used as food for at least a few hundred years and, while it does contain protein, the amount that becomes available when it is eaten is negligible. Moreover, the Food and Drug Administration has reported that there is no evidence that spirulina suppresses appetite.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have read all your books, including your latest, "Stop Smoking, Lose Weight." May I suggest one you should write? How about a diet book to help treat arthritis? — Linda, Morristown, N.J.

Dear Linda: The National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases and the Arthritis Foundation agree that diet has nothing to do with either causing or curing the disease. It is not necessary to write a book to inform people with arthritis of the dietary precautions they should follow; it can be done in only a few sentences.

A patient with arthritis who is overweight is placing an added burden on weight-bearing joints; these people should lose weight. And a patient with gout should avoid the excessive use of alcohol and should not eat liver, sweetbreads or kidney. Other so-called diets that are supposed to cure arthritis are a lot of baloney — and patients would do well to avoid swallowing that, too.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been meaning to start a diet almost ever since I can remember, but the idea of eating all day the amount of food I usually eat at a single meal turns me off. If I were much of a cook I could probably prepare different kinds of foods to make a diet more appetizing, but I can't do much more in the kitchen than boil water. Would you have any ideas about how a diet can be made more appetizing and still help a person lose weight? — Alice, Grant Rapids, Mich.

Dear Alice: An approach to dieting that has been used at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., may be of interest to you. The diet program includes alternating diet days so that the number of calories permitted during the week varies from one day to another. For example, on some days food intake may be limited to 1,200 to 1,500 calories, while on other days it may be cut back to as little as 600 calories. On still other days the person is permitted to eat normally.

Dr. William R. Ayers, the medical director of the program, says that this type of alternating diet tends to relieve the monotony associated with dieting and is therefore more effective in helping people lose weight.

For Tommie, Long Beach, Long Island, N.Y.: Don't assume that every food product that is sugar-free is necessarily lower in calories. Some candies for example, may be made with sorbitol, a sweetener that contains as many calories as does sugar.

For Mrs. R.R., Brooklyn, N.Y.: While amenorrhea in an older woman may indicate the onset of the menopause, it may also be the result of pregnancy. The rate of live births in women 40 to 44 years of age is 4.3 per 1,000 women.

Sheriff will hang onto gallows

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — When the sheriff here leaves office at the end of the year, he will take the gallows with him.

Yellowstone County Sheriff Dick Shaffer, who lost his re-election bid in the June primary, was incensed last year when he learned the state had no gallows to use for the scheduled hanging of convicted killer Dewey Coleman. The execution, scheduled for the day after Thanksgiving last year, was postponed last November by U.S. District Judge James Battin, who still has not ruled on an appeal.

The state's only working gallows had been torn down.

Shaffer and some other people he still will not identify bought lumber and fittings to construct a gallows in the county jail.

Working late at night in secret, they built a gallows over a ninth-floor stairwell. The location would allow a condemned man to drop into the stairwell when the trapdoor on the gallows was sprung.

After Coleman's execution was postponed, Shaffer said the gallows, which has been taken apart, belongs to him and his associates, not to Yellowstone County.

He said the gallows will be removed and stored in an undisclosed, private location. The device will be available for any county to use free of charge whenever needed, he added.

But a borrower must provide transportation and agree to repair any damage to the gallows beyond what Shaffer calls "normal wear and tear."

Properly cared for, it should have a working life of 200 to 300 years, he said.

Oklahomans show Pavarotti favor

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahomans, better known as football and rodeo fans than as opera buffs, stood in line for up to two hours to buy tickets to hear a benefit concert by tenor Luciano Pavarotti.

Tickets cost from $25 to $350 and proceeds from the Jan. 7 event will be given to the Oklahoma Cardiovascular Institute at St. Anthony Hospital.

The line for tickets began forming shortly after 7 a.m. Monday and 900 tickets were sold by noon.

"All the $25, $40 and $55 tickets are gone," said Helen Roberts, a spokeswoman for the Oklahoma Symphony. "Now we have only a few $75 and some $350 patron tickets."

Package concern voiced

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Consumer Federation of America is urging the government to set standards to assure that new tamper-resistant drug packages aren't difficult for the elderly to open.

CFA legislative director David Greenberg recommended Monday that a minimum standard be set on the amount of strength needed to open packages since many elderly and disabled persons don't have the strength in their hands and fingers needed to open tightly sealed containers.

Pills in "blister" or strip packs often are difficult to free from the packages, Greenberg said. Because of the force needed to separate the packaging, sometimes the pills get broken apart or land on the floor where they can be difficult to retrieve.

Flooding leaves many homeless

By JUDY GIBBS
Associated Press Writer

Grim-faced workers piled sandbags along the Mississippi today as the nation's largest river continued rising in record flooding that has caused almost half a billion dollars in damage and left 28,000 people homeless.

Since torrential two-day rains late last week the flooding has left at least 20 dead and four missing, with the worst still ahead for areas around the mighty Mississippi and the Illinois River, the nation's 28th largest river.

The Arkansas flooding is "far and away beyond anything that has hit the state," said Jack DuBose, a spokesman for the state Office of Emergency Services. Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson said, "This kind of storm, the worst in a century, just overwhelms what man can do."

Smaller streams feeding into the Mississippi around St. Louis began to recede Tuesday afternoon, but officials said more than 20,000 Missouri residents remained homeless.

Another 8,500 in Illinois were homeless Tuesday. Arkansas officials say 600 to 1,000 people have fled their homes since Thursday, but many have returned and others did not go to flood shelters, making an accurate count impossible.

Residents of Georgetown, Ark., were stranded Tuesday when floodwaters cut off the only road into the White County town of 200. The only access was by boat, said John Stewart, a state police dispatcher.

Officials were preparing to evacuate another 300-400 residents of Monroe County, Deputy Sheriff Frank Newby said Tuesday night.

Residents of Ste. Genevieve, Mo., could watch the Mississippi rising.

"We can stand on our front porch and watch it come," said Bernie Schram, who lives in a restored 18th-century French home in the city's older section. "Right now it's only three-quarters of a block away."

Volunteers worked through the night to reinforce levees in Herculaneum and Ste. Genevieve.

Don Finley of the U.S. Geological Survey said Tuesday's flow of the river at St. Louis was nearly triple the volume five days earlier. It was expected to crest some 14 feet over flood stage below St. Louis on Friday.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers closed St. Louis harbor and a 43-mile stretch of the Mississippi to barge traffic because wakes from tows might damage flood levees.

The Illinois River, which flows into the Mississippi just above St. Louis, was still rising today at Peoria, where it is expected to crest by early Thursday at 28.5 feet, 10.5 feet above flood stage.

"They say the river's going to rise and I want to be prepared," said Don Downey, who was filling sandbags Tuesday near his home in Peoria. "The river was about 30 feet from my yard this afternoon," he said.

Most of the Illinois homeless were in the Peoria area and southward, said E. Erie Jones.

VALLEY PARK, Mo. (AP) — Refugees from a flood that turned a comfortable neighborhood into a swirling sea of rooftop islands are taking solace in small things.

"Look," a teen-age girl said Tuesday as she clutched a shopping bag filled with borrowed clothes. "You can see the top of a van over there. You couldn't see it before. The water's going down."

Another girl cheered when her father returned from their flooded home clutching two cages holding a parakeet and a cockateel.

"They're safe," said Angela Cotton, 13. "We thought they'd be dead. We haven't found our rabbit, though. I guess he is dead."

Her father, Jack Cotton, had to swim part way to rescue the birds from the flooded house, which the family was forced to evacuate Sunday night.

Many of the town's 3,200 residents gathered on an elevated railroad right-of-way Tuesday and waited for volunteers with boats to take them to visit their homes.

Boats came and went, filled with grim-faced families anxious for a first look at their damaged homes. Many came back in tears.

"It's gone," said Jean Sprock, 43, after seeing her brick home being torn apart by the water. "I had it almost paid for. If anything went wrong, I always counted on having that to fall back on," she said.

Most still could not get into the houses, but they were anxious to see for themselves what the rampaging Meramec River had done.

"I'm not ready to go back there yet," said James Coleman, 34, as he watched the receding waters pull at the structures still standing. "I'm afraid to go into it."

Coleman, his wife, Pauline, and two sons, had escaped with very few belongings.

"If they'd told us it was going to rise to 39 feet, we'd have gotten out sooner," Coleman said. "But we didn't believe it would get this high."

Others had suffered from the river's whims before.

"Crying doesn't do any good," said Alma Tinker, 58, a veteran of many floods. "You just never trust the river. This time it came up so fast we just couldn't save anything. Forty-two years down the drain. I guess it's still not real to me. It's a bad dream."

Valley Park Mayor Fred Palmer said his town will need time to recover. "More than 40 percent of our people and all but three businesses have been forced out. We'll just have to see."

In another Missouri town, residents huddled in evacuation shelters less than a year after they turned down federal flood insurance by one vote.

The government had warned the 2,000 people of Times Beach that they would have to comply with federal standards if they wanted to get federal flood insurance, the only kind available to residents of a flood plain.

"Among other things, nearly every building in town would have had to be raised 10 to 14 feet," said city attorney Thad Niemura. "It was just economically and physically impossible."

In a non-binding referendum in the spring, residents voted by a margin of just one not to participate in the plan. As a result, the National Flood Insurance Administration now says it will accept no claims from Times Beach.

"We took a gamble and we lost," said Mayor Joe Capstic. "We lost the entire town."

"I don't see how the government can write us off and not give us any help at all," said Linda Young, 31, another resident, her chin quivering.

U.S., Pakistani leaders renew friendship

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidents Reagan and Mohammed Zia ul-Haq of Pakistan are publicly celebrating a renewal of friendship while quietly skirting potentially divisive issues.

The two presidents kept their public posture upbeat and friendly, from an embrace for the cameras as Zia stepped from his limousine on the South Lawn of the White House Tuesday morning to their toasts at a state dinner in the evening.

But troublesome issues remain on the horizon for a relationship that blossomed after the 1979 Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Besides the fact that millions of dollars in potential U.S. aid to the southwest Asian nation may not emerge from Congress intact, other possible irritants could include Pakistan's potential to produce a nuclear bomb, its human rights record, Zia's apparent reluctance to schedule free elections any time soon, and cooperation by Pakistan in choking off heroin traffic.

As Reagan said in his toast to Zia: "Differences may come between our nations — differences have come in the past — but they have proven to be transitory, as the ties that bind us grow stronger year by year."

The dinner honoring the Pakistani president was a gala event that brought together a varied cast of Americans, including former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and actress Zsa Zsa Gabor.

Reagan repeatedly pledged throughout the day that the United States "will not waver from its commitment to Pakistan."

And Zia pointedly reminded his host that the commitment is essential in view of the region's "new and menacing turbulence," the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

However, the focal point of that commitment — the first $525 million installment of a five-year $3.2 billion aid package of economic assistance and military credits — remains bogged in a legislative morass in Congress.

The Pakistanis have repeatedly said they consider delivery of the promised aid on schedule as an acid test of American reliability.

"I think they are concerned that the first installment seems to be hung up in Congress," said a senior U.S. official who asked not to be named. "They and we wish that the issues were not hung up, but they are."

The Pakistanis "know that we are going to do our best" to steer the aid package through the current lame-duck congressional session, the official said.

The human rights issue is one of several reasons why some members of Congress are reluctant to appropriate the aid.

The U.S. official told reporters that human rights in Pakistan and elsewhere is a "priority concern" of the United States. Nonetheless, he said it did not come up in discussions between the two leaders.

Signals on Soviet withdrawal 'conflict'

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz and other U.S. officials say the new Soviet leadership is sending conflicting signals on whether it will withdraw Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

"It remains to be seen," Shultz said in reaction to statements by a West German diplomat that the Soviets seem to want a way out.

"There are so many signals, this way, that way and every other way," he said at a news conference Tuesday. "We need to go out of the signals business and look for substance."

Another senior U.S. official told reporters "it is too soon to draw conclusions" about Soviet intentions in Afghanistan. The official, who didn't want to be identified, said Reagan administration officials are divided in their analysis of Soviet plans for Afghanistan.

There are believed to be more than 80,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan. There were reports Tuesday that 105 Afghan villagers, migrant workers and refugees were burned alive when Soviet troops destroyed an underground shelter in September.

Shultz met with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl Tuesday. He planned to breakfast today with former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and several other members of Schmidt's Social Democratic Party before leaving for Brussels, where he will attend a NATO foreign ministers meeting Thursday and Friday.

The West German diplomatic source told American reporters accompanying Shultz that Soviet officials had indicated to Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and other West German officials last month, during the funeral of Leonid Brezhnev, that they want to leave Afghanistan, but probably would withdraw their troops only gradually.

"We did have indications in Moscow that this is part of their thinking at this point," said the U.S. official, who didn't want to be identified. He said Bonn hopes the Western allies won't do anything to "irritate" the Soviets in Afghanistan and cause them to delay a withdrawal.

Shultz has said in the past that a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan is the kind of action that would confirm Soviet intentions of improving relations with the West.

At a news conference here, Shultz said, "I don't have any way of assessing the likelihood that the Soviet Union will decide to do the things that are necessary to improve the relationship between themselves and the United States and our European friends ..."

Shultz also dismissed a complaint by Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Ustinov that the Reagan administration is risking a new missile race with Moscow by deciding to deploy its MX intercontinental missile.

Shultz declared: "The Soviets have been developing such missiles and putting them into place" for a long time. "The issue for us is to match this strength and we will be determined to modernize."

A senior U.S. official said in his meeting with Shultz, Chancellor Kohl described West Germany's "outstretched hand" Soviet policy, which focuses on encouraging Moscow to moderate its policies toward the West.

The U.S. official, who did not want to be identified, said Shultz told Kohl the United States has "no quarrel with that concept, but he emphasized that policy had to be based on strength and a clear understanding of Soviet behavior."

The official said there was "no fundamental disagreement" between the two in how to proceed in relations with Moscow.

The official said Kohl offered West Germany's help "in attempting to ease the misunderstanding between Washington and Paris" over the emerging new Western strategy for trade with the Soviet Union.

He said Kohl and Shultz reaffirmed their commitment to the 1979 NATO decision to deploy new U.S. missiles in Europe beginning in 1983 if there is not yet an arms control agreement with the Soviets that would make the new missiles unnecessary.

heavier sentence," said a woman panelist.

"I'm a dog lover; I have a poodle," said another.

"I was very upset as a citizen that it (dog fight) happened," said a man panelist.

"I feel very strongly about the nature of this offense," said another.

Another panelist, who was not selected for the jury, said he could not fairly consider the testimony of the state's key witness, Deputy McDaniel. The panelist said he was "unfairly arrested" by McDaniel, but he did not elaborate on the nature of his arrest.

Another panelist disqualified himself.

"It's something I've done in the past; I've raised fighting chickens," he said, adding that he had put them in cockfights in New Mexico, where cockfighting is legal.

Arctic air sets nation shivering

By The Associated Press

Cold Arctic air combined with strong northerly winds sent temperatures plummeting to well below zero in parts of the Upper Midwest early today.

Winds gusting to 30 mph drove the wind chill index to 60 below in portions of the region while subzero readings prevailed from Montana to northwest Minnesota.

Strong winds and falling snow late Tuesday reduced visibility to near zero north of Farmington, Utah, and as much as 6 inches of snow was reported in the southwestern part of the state.

Winds also gusted through southwest Texas, reaching 51 mph at Guadalupe Pass.

Third Leadership Midland session scheduled Thursday

The third session of Leadership Midland, "Health Care in Midland," will take place Thursday.

The 43 recipients in this year's program will discuss such topics as the growth of health care in Midland, physician care in Midland, the role of the Midland County Medical Society and long-term health care in Midland.

Speakers for Thursday's session will include Ray Branson, president of Midland Memorial Hospital; Dick Liley, administrator of Parkview Hospital; Bill Saxton, administrator of Parkview Hospital; Bill Saxton, administrator of Trinity Towers; and Bob Savage, director of the Palmer Drug Abuse Program.

Leadership Midland, co-sponsored by the Midland Chamber of Commerce and Midland College, is designed to give interested men and women the opportunity to develop their knowledge, and to hone the skills of leadership through a planned learning process in the atmosphere of the city itself.

This year's participants are: JoAnn Bagwell, Randy Bailey, Bo Baskin, Kathy Blackman, Bud Blake, Ray Branson, John Brigham, Clark Butts, Gloria Caldwell, Megan Coffield, Jim Compton, Kelly Cooke, Becky Criswell, Gary Douglas, Dick Dunbar, Gloria Ellis, James Fuller, Janet Hestwood, Jeff Hewett, Mark Hoover, Steve Huggins and Lea Hunt.

Lawyer: Execution will lead to more

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The death by lethal injection of Charlie Brooks Jr. opens the door to more executions in Texas, says a lawyer whose client faces the death penalty next week.

James Autry, 28, is scheduled to die Dec. 17 for a murder committed during a convenience store robbery in 1968.

His attorney, Charles Carver of Port Arthur, said Tuesday he will seek a stay of execution in federal court on grounds that a potential defense witness was not offered immunity for his testimony.

Carver's conviction already has been upheld by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest criminal court. In October, the U.S. Supreme Court denied a motion to review the conviction.

"I don't want to second-guess a judge," Carver said, "but to be honest with you, I think it will be more difficult (to win a stay)." The execution Tuesday morning of Brooks "opens the door" to more use of the death penalty, he said.

Brooks, 40, convicted of killing a young mechanic, was executed a few minutes after midnight, the first U.S. convict to be put to death by injection and the sixth inmate to be killed since the Supreme Court allowed reinstitution of the death penalty in 1976.

However, courts in two states ruled Tuesday in favor of inmates sentenced to die.

In New Orleans, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which had rejected Brooks' last-minute appeal, threw out the first-degree murder conviction of Colin Clark. The 28-year-old, convicted of a holdup-killing in Baton Rouge, La., now must be retried or resentenced, the appeals court said.

In Mississippi, the state Supreme Court stayed the execution of McArthur King, 20, only hours before he was scheduled to die. A new execution date of Jan. 12 was set, giving King time to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court his sentence for drowning an elderly woman during a burglary.

The execution of Brooks, which came after he lost several last-ditch efforts to stay the sentence, had prompted a flood of calls before his death, said Texas prison officials.

Spokesman Jay Byrd of the Department of Corrections said many callers wanted to tell Brooks they were praying for his salvation. Byrd said he "doubted" the messages were relayed to the prisoner.

A California woman, who did not identify herself, also offered to pay the corrections department $1,000 to stop Brooks' execution, Byrd said. "We simply referred her to the attorney general's office in Austin," he said.

The remaining 171 prisoners on Texas' Death Row seemed stunned by Brooks' execution, the spokesman said.

"It was extremely quiet on the two cell blocks (that house condemned prisoners)," he said. "The warden said that the prisoners were not talking. They were just staying to themselves."

Brooks' body was taken to the Harris County Medical Examiners' Office in Houston, where an autopsy began at 6:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Prison officials and Walker County Peace Justice Lloyd Roark, who ordered the autopsy, declined comment when asked if the post-mortem was to determine how much lethal injection it took to kill Brooks.

Corrections department chief W.J. Estelle says he probably won't propose changing the execution procedure. He said all involved "performed their duties, I think, with dignity."

Prison spokesman Rick Hartley said the injection method, using sodium pentothal, is the least cruel way to administer the death penalty.

"I've always said that if there is a humane way of executing people, and I don't know that there is, that this would probably have to rank at the top of the list," he said.

The two former assistant district attorneys who prosecuted Charlie Brooks Jr. differ in their opinions as to whether Brooks' Tuesday execution should have taken place. Charles Roach, now in private practice, said he had no reservations about the lethal injection execution. However, Jack Strickland, now a defense attorney, believed Brooks shouldn't have died because of the disparity between his and his accomplice's sentences. Strickland tried in vain to stay the execution.

Two ex-prosecutors' feelings on Brooks execution differ

FORT WORTH (AP) — Of the two former assistant district attorneys who prosecuted Charlie Brooks Jr., only one has any qualms about Tuesday's execution of the convicted murderer.

Jack Strickland, who became a defense attorney 2½ years ago, tried in vain last week to have the execution delayed because of what he called an unfair disparity in the sentences assessed Brooks and his accomplice, Woody Loudres.

Loudres' original death sentence was thrown out on appeal, and he subsequently received a 40-year sentence through a plea-bargain agreement.

Strickland pointed out that prosecutors never determined which man fired the shot that killed used-car lot employee David Gregory.

His colleague in prosecuting Brooks, however, said he was "relieved" when the jury returned its verdict and that he had no reservations about Brooks' execution by lethal injection early Tuesday.

"I certainly didn't lose any sleep over it because I thought we'd done the right thing," said Charles Roach, who also is in private practice now. "The jury verdict was in and Tuesday it was carried out."

Roach pointed out that Gregory — bound, gagged and lying in a sleazy motel room — himself was executed six years ago.

"My God, what a horrible way to die," said Roach, who was among the first to enter the blood-splattered room.

District attorney calls for penalty alternative

FORT WORTH (AP) — District Attorney Tim Curry, whose office got the death penalty for Charlie Brooks Jr. and plea bargained a 40-year sentence for his accomplice, wants legislators to devise an alternative to capital punishment.

The Tarrant County prosecutor, in an interview in Tuesday's Dallas Morning News, said the Legislature should create a new category of murder that forces a convicted killer to serve at least 35 years in prison before becoming eligible for parole.

"This would give prosecutors an alternative to the death penalty," said Curry.

He said he is convinced federal courts will set aside most convictions that result in the death penalty.

"By the time a conviction is set aside as a result of one judicial review after another, five or six years may have elapsed since a trial. We find it difficult, if not impossible, to locate witnesses needed for a second trial," he said.

"As a result, we find ourselves forced to plea bargain for a lighter sentence than the defendant deserves. And, in some cases, we may find ourselves forced to let him go free because he knows we are in a position where we can't convict him a second time," said Curry.

Brooks, sentenced to die for the 1976 killing of David Gregory, was put to death shortly after midnight Tuesday in the first execution involving injection of sodium pentothal in the United States.

Separate juries convicted Brooks and Woody Loudres of killing Gregory. But both men were assessed the death penalty.

However, Curry said Loudres' conviction was set aside because a member of his jury panel was improperly excused. He said he then agreed to a 40-year prison term for Loudres in return for a guilty plea at his second trial.

"We really didn't have any choice, as a practical matter," Curry said. "We were forced to depend upon prostitutes and other witnesses who have scattered since the first trial and it was impossible to locate them."

Curry's plan would allow prosecutors to continue to seek the death penalty by filing capital murder charges, with the option of seeking the 35-year prison term without parole.

"I am convinced that appellate courts would be far less hesitant to uphold the 35-year sentence than they would to approve a death penalty conviction," Curry said.

Jurors feel sentences dealt two men unfair

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Fort Worth man who served on the jury that sent Charlie Brooks Jr. to death row says he had hoped someone would intervene in the closing hours to stop Brooks' execution.

George Sherman said Tuesday it was not fair that Brooks died for his part in a 1976 murder, while accomplice Woodie Loudres plea bargained to a 40-year sentence that could mean his freedom in as little as six years under the state's parole laws.

"I do not think it is right that two men who commit the same exact crime, one is put to death and the other is on the street in six years. That is not right," said Sherman, a retired Air Force man.

Clyde Burks, another juror in the 1977 capital murder trial, said, "It's not fair."

Brooks, who was executed early Tuesday, and Loudres were tried separately for the death of David Gregory. Both were sentenced to die. But Loudres' conviction was thrown out and the subsequent plea bargain resulted in the reduced sentence.

Brooks' many appeal attempts, including several on the final day of his life, failed and he became the first person executed in Texas since 1964.

Loudres' plea bargain came after Brooks was on death row. Sherman said he did not know about the unequal sentences until last week.

"I had faith in the state of Texas or the U.S. to do some right. I was expecting him to get a stay at least for another appeal. It just doesn't seem right to me," Sherman told the Associated Press several hours after Brooks was killed by lethal injection.

Burks, a 73-year-old retired therapist, was not aware of the unequal sentences until after Brooks was dead.

"It makes you think about it," said Sherman. "The thing I can't figure out is how one man could get executed and the other man may be on the street in about six years. That just does not seem right to me."

The AP was unsuccessful in attempts Tuesday to reach other jurors from the case.

Burks and Sherman said the drama surrounding Brooks' final hours and last-minute appeals forced them to reflect on the case. Burks went into the trial as a death penalty opponent, but said the facts in the case changed his mind.

"One thing that convinced me was the way they did it," said Burks. "They wired him up with baling wire, and he had a wife and two or three little children. That's the thing that actually swayed me."

Ohio legislator gets even by switching loyalties

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — After 16 years of being taken for granted in the Ohio legislature, Sen. M. Morris Jackson isn't just getting mad. He's getting even with fellow Democrats by lining up with the GOP.

The deal Jackson cut with the Republicans will give them a 17-16 voting majority when the Senate reconvenes Jan. 3.

In return, GOP members promised to elect the Cleveland lawmaker Senate president, making him the third most powerful man in Ohio government and one of the nation's highest-ranking black legislators.

M. Morris Jackson

Republicans mostly have declined comment on the arrangement, although Republican Paul E. Gillmore, this year's Senate president, confirmed a deal had been struck.

"I don't think there's any question that it's workable," said Sen. Thomas A. Van Meter, another Republican, who leaves office this year.

Jackson, who also serves as a member of the Democratic National Committee, said he is angry because he repeatedly was promised key committee and party assignments, only to see them go to other Democrats.

Although he is second in seniority, he has been "the 17th person on the Democratic totem pole," he said.

Jackson, 58, who works as community relations director for a Cleveland supermarket, said he will not change his registration but will vote with the Republicans on party issues.

The switch will allow the GOP to retain control of the Senate and give the Republicans more leverage in opposing the programs of the incoming Democratic governor, Richard Celeste. The Ohio House is controlled by Democrats.

Jackson's disenchantment with the Democrats began in 1980 when he and Sen. Oliver Ocasek were ousted from the leadership by Sen. Harry Meshel. Ocasek was president and Jackson was assistant president.

Jackson said he was promised a seat on the powerful Elections, Financial Institutions and Insurance Committee when Meshel was elected minority leader, but never got it. He sought the same job this year but was offered only a minor committee post, Jackson said.

"I really can't understand why he would make those statements," said Meshel. "The impression is being left...that we didn't offer him anything. That simply is not true. He would not indicate what he wanted."

Meshel, who had been in line for the Senate presidency, said the Democrats would like to talk to Jackson to persuade him to switch back. But Jackson has been maintaining a low profile. Aides say he is out of the state on vacation.

Jackson announced his switch in newspaper interviews over the last two weeks.

"They never gave me anything last time and have given away everything that's good this time," he said of the Democrats, adding his decision was final.

"I am committed to remain as I am," he said. "I'm not looking to call anybody, talk to anybody at all about what has transpired or what is contemplated."

Slow court system led to Brooks execution, experts say

AUSTIN (AP) — Among the remaining 171 criminals awaiting execution in Texas, 57 arrived on death row before convicted murderer Charlie Brooks Jr., including a man who poisoned his son with contaminated candy to collect on an insurance policy.

Yet it was Brooks, not Ronald "Candy Man" O'Bryan or one of the other long-time death row inmates, who became the first convict to be executed in Texas since 1964.

Experts say the reason is simple: Brooks' time simply ran out first.

"There's no plan; there's no schedule. Each one goes its own way," said Justice Sam Houston Clinton of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

State's attorney Bob Huttash added matter-of-factly, "It's just whoever's execution date comes up first that doesn't have a stay."

"Nobody takes the list of those on death row and picks one out," said John F. Onion, chief justice of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. "It just happened to be his case. It wasn't that his was selected and sent on through."

Opponents of executions say that is one of the main problems with capital punishment — it "demonstrates that this society cannot administer capital punishment without arbitrariness'...," said Henry Schwarzchild of the American Civil Liberties Union.

O'Bryan, who killed his 8-year-old son by feeding the boy cyanide-laced Halloween candy in 1974, was sentenced to death more than a year before Brooks even committed his crime. O'Bryan's case is on appeal in the federal courts.

Onion said many capital cases become stalled as they wind through the crowded appellate courts, and "I don't suppose the defense attorneys are going to be complaining so long as they have a stay of execution."

But in Houston, Harris County District Attorney John Holmes, an outspoken advocate of capital punishment, said a condemned killer in South Texas may have an advantage over a death row inmate from North Texas.

Holmes said he received a letteer recently from the state attorney general's office saying federal courts in the Southern District "'loathed to move these cases.'"

"Mr. Brooks' appeals were handled in the Northern District of Texas," he said. "That district, which includes Dallas and Tarrant counties, historically has been very conservative, and I think persons appointed to the bench in that area reflect that."

Holmes said he went to the attorney general's office recently to check on the status of some capital cases from Harris County "and we had six cases that were just hung up (in federal court), nothing was being done."

Justice Truman Roberts of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals said once a condemned person's case is on appeal, how sensational or atrocious the crime may have been is immaterial to the justices.

"A lot of them have been down there on death row longer than he was, but he simply exhausted all his appeal remedies more rapidly than those others," said Roberts, whose court unanimously rejected Brooks' last-ditch request for a stay three hours before the lethal needle was inserted.

"The only ground that was new and hadn't been passed on before was the one on disparity of sentences, and I know of nothing in the law that says everybody who commits a crime shall receive the same sentence," said Roberts.

Brooks and his partner, Woody Loudres, were convicted of abducting and shooting to death a Fort Worth used-car lot mechanic who gave Brooks a test drive.

Nofziger apologizes for remark to Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's former political aide Lyn Nofziger has written Vice President George Bush apologizing for his remark that Bush loyalists might seek to take over any Reagan re-election campaign, The Washington Post has reported.

Nofziger praised Bush's loyalty to the president and added in the letter, "Would that all who work for the president were as dedicated," the newspaper said in today's editions.

As a result of Nofziger's remark last week, the White House ordered its aides and political troops to boycott a meeting of Reagan loyalists that Nofziger convened on Monday to "see what 1984 will bring."

White House staff chief James A. Baker III — who directed Bush's presidential campaign effort in 1980 — called Nofziger from Air Force One in South American to chastise him when he first heard of the comment.

Nofziger's letter to Bush was quoted as saying he had not meant "to cast any aspersions on Jim Baker. I am distressed that he appears to have misinterpreted it."

Susan Alvarado, a spokeswoman for Bush, said Tuesday night she knew nothing about a letter from Nofziger. White House spokesman Robin Gray said he also knew nothing.

KKK members jailed for disturbing peace

HAMMOND, La. (AP) — Eight Ku Klux Klan members were arrested for disturbing the peace Tuesday night when they protested the City Council's refusal to license their parade, police said.

Within about an hour, all but Imperial Wizard Bill Wilkinson were released after posting $55 bond on the misdemeanor charge.

Police Chief Roddy Devall said at first that the Klan leader had chosen to spend the night in jail, but Wilkinson, 40, of Denham Springs, later paid his bond and was released.

Council President Robert Felder ordered the seven men and one woman arrested when they refused to leave the council chambers.

Felder told seven of the eight they could remain only if they left the room and returned without their robes and headpieces. The eighth wore a Klan T-shirt.

None resisted when placed under arrest by Devall and taken to the city jail, which is located in the same complex as the City Hall.

There were no disruptions, even though many blacks were among the 40 or 50 people sitting inside the chamber for what was to have been a regularly scheduled meeting to handle mostly routine business.

The Klan members, led by Wilkinson, walked into the room and sat down shortly after the meeting began, witnesses said.

Felder told them they could stay if they took off the robes, which he said he considered disruptive.

Wilkinson asked that the council give special consideration to their request for a permit allowing them to hold a public rally in support of policemen who had been accused of racism.

Felder said the matter could be placed on the agenda only if a councilman asked that the rules be suspended. No such motion was made and the Klan members again protested.

Felder then ordered the arrests and all but Wilkinson were taken into custody. Wilkinson remained behind but he, too, did not resist when Devall arrested him.

Wilkinson had warned earlier Tuesday that robed Klan members would attend Tuesday night's meeting.

"There are a lot of people in Hammond who wish our presence," he said.

After his release from jail Tuesday night, Wilkinson called the arrests "most incredible."

In addicion to Wilkinson, police identified the others as Alvin Easterling, 35, and Sandra Easterling, 20, both of Denham Springs; Kenneth L. Hakala, 28, and Thomas A. Cousson, 25, both of Baker; Robert E. Sims, 24, of Baton Rouge; and Ronald Fontenot, 20, and James Shelton, 19, both of LaPlace.

Reagan ignores charges

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor,
The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is turning the other cheek to Israeli charges that it is guilty of appeasement and of pandering to Arab pressure because the State Department lobbied last week against a congressional increase in economic aid for the Jewish state.

"We are puzzled that Israel can call into question U.S. good faith over this issue," State Department spokesman Alan Romberg said Monday. A top Israeli offical Friday charged that the "claim that more aid for Israel won't go well with the Arabs reminds me of the famous approach of appeasement."

ISRAEL'S Foreign Minister, Yitzhak Shamir said, "we regard this very gravely" because he pointed out the Reagan administration had often publicly pledged to refrain from linking aid intended to safeguard Israel's security from political issues such as President Reagan's Sept. 1 Middle East peace plan.

The dispute has become serious because it now appears to be threatening progress on the more immediate issue of when Israel will withdraw its troops from Lebanon. If U.S.-Israeli relations deteriorate much further, it will begin to undermine U.S. efforts to persuade Israel to withdraw.

So the State Department, while sticking to its guns in opposing any aid increases for Israel, is trying to contain the fallout from this latest squabble. Romberg Monday noted that Reagan's request for $2.485 billion in new aid represents a 21 per cent jump over last year.

He also told newsmen that U.S. aid to Israel now accounts for more than a fourth (28 percent) of all U.S. foreign military aid and "comes at a time when other U.S. friends are desperately in need of U.S. assistance to help them deal with ongoing military conflicts."

PAKISTAN is one of those countries. The Reagan administration is having difficulty getting Congress to approve a $1.5 billion program for Pakistan despite the fact that it is spread over five years and that Pakistan is helping Afghan refugees fight the Soviet puppet regime there.

Justifying last week's lobbying against the Senate Appropriations Committee vote to tack $475 million in aid onto the $2.4 billion package for Israel, Romberg said "these add-ons for Israel will make it more difficult to address those other needs."

Friday, he reminded reporters that the $2.4 billion package should "leave no doubt that the administration has no higher priority than meeting Israel's needs. This request is positive proof that he (Reagan) is second to no one in his support for Israel's security and well-being."

But the same evening, the deputy foreign minister of Israel accused the administration of pandering to Arab pressure by publicly declaring that an increase in aid to Israel would be misperceived in the Arab world. The U.S. feared it would look like a reward for Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

WHAT'S worse, the aid increase, which was approved last week by the full Senate committee, comes at a time when Israel is being intransigent on the issue of where Lebanese peace talks should take place. Israel has said it would only talk in Jerusalem, its disputed capital, if Beirut is the other site.

"I can only express our amazement and consternation," Deputy Foreign Minister Yehuda Ben-Meir said Friday. "For many years we haven't seen such an occurence, where the administration has actively tried to prevent the Congress from voting the aid that it felt fit for Israel," he went on.

Clark treated with chicken soup

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Artificial heart recipient Barney B. Clark is being treated with an old-fashioned remedy — chicken soup — after a series of seizures put him back on the critical list, doctors say.

The seizures, which began Tuesday morning and lasted for about two hours, apparently were caused by a chemical imbalance unrelated to the new polyurethane heart that has been sustaining Clark since Thursday, doctors said.

"The thing that is the interest is the heart, and the heart hasn't been causing us any trouble," said Dr. Chase Peterson, University of Utah vice president for health sciences.

If doctors are correct in their diagnosis of a chemical or metabolic problem, Peterson said, "it's really a minimal setback. It would have turned out to be a false alarm."

The first seizures shook Clark's body shortly before 6 a.m. Tuesday. His head snapped to one side and his eyes rolled, much like an epileptic grand mal seizure, said Helen Kee, director of nursing services at the University of Utah Medical Center.

CLARK WAS given Valium, a muscle relaxant, and Dilantin, a seizure-suppressing drug, Peterson said. Clark's condition was downgraded to critical, the same condition he remained in today. He had been listed as serious since Saturday.

The first seizures were followed by localized seizures in the legs and arms as the calming drugs took effect, Ms. Kee said.

"He's been pretty knocked out" by the seizure-suppressing drugs, she said.

Clark was put back on a respirator and began receiving "old-fashioned" chicken soup, ground-up carrots and mineral supplements through a tube leading into his small intestine, Peterson said.

"You can see how clumsy it is to give specific, purified chemicals when six carrots and a beef steak would have all of those in surplus," Peterson said.

Peterson said the seizures and treatment were considered routine for post-operative heart patients. Clark's treatment "is exactly what we're doing with 30 other patients in the hospital today," he said.

THE COMPLICATION probably was related to Clark's history of degenerative heart disease which allowed him to become the first recipient of a permanent artificial heart, said Dr. Ross Woolley, chairman of the artificial heart subcommittee of the school's Institutional Review Board.

Woolley said it would be some time, if ever, before Clark's kidneys, lungs and other organs recover from cardiomyopathy, the inoperable disease that destroyed his heart.

Peterson said a computer-assisted X-ray, or CAT scan, of Clark's brain and heart showed no evidence of either hemorrhaging or blood clots, which doctors at first feared could have caused the seizures and resulted in brain damage.

"We have no evidence of any brain damage," he said. "He's doing quite well...Through all of this the cardiovascular state has never changed."

He said Clark, although sedated, was moving his extremities slightly, further evidence there had been no brain damage.

Clark will be weaned from the sedatives over a period of about 36 hours as doctors watch to see if the seizures recur, Peterson said. If they do not, doctors will assume the imbalance was the cause, he said.

PETERSON SAID that since the implant surgery, Clark's body has undergone extreme changes in water, salt, antibiotics and other levels, all compounded by a mild kidney impairment.

Clark had been given large doses of antibiotics, including a penicillin substitute, and his kidney problem may have prevented normal excretion of the drug, which is toxic to the brain, Peterson said.

The seizures are a "perfectly common thing to have happen when you have this much imbalance," he said.

Clark's family had "a very hard day" because of the new complications," said his daughter-in-law, Terry Clark.

She said her husband, Dr. Stephen Clark, had been getting most of his news about his father from reporters. "The media has been super," she said in a telephone interview from her Bellevue, Wash., home.

In Salt Lake City, where Clark's wife, Una Loy, has been staying at the medical center since the retired dentist was admitted Nov. 29, the family issued a statement Tuesday thanking "the people of this wonderful country" for their support, but declining media requests for their exclusive story.

"OUR FAMILY had little idea the publicity this occurrence would create and at this time are unprepared to deal with the implications of this," said the hand-written statement, signed "the Clark family."

Clark and his wife have three grown children.

After learning of the seizures, Mrs. Clark, was "as strong as ever," Peterson said. "There was a tear or two. This is tough news."

Mrs. Clark asked if she could visit her husband, but DeVries told her he was sedated and would not respond.

Doctors realize need to study ethical issues

NEW YORK (AP) — Who deserves an artificial heart, and another chance to live, when such marvels of medical technology are available to only a few?

With the rise of bionic men and women, highlighted last Thursday when an artificial heart began beating in the chest of a retired dentist at the University of Utah, medical doctors are turning to doctors of philosophy for answers to such ethical questions.

Columbia University's medical school joined the trend Tuesday, announcing it was adding philosophers and historians to its staff.

"There is a need to bring non-physicians into medical science," said history professor David Rothman, who will direct the Center for the Study of Society and Medicine at the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Columbia joins other universities, including Georgetown in Washington, D.C., and Baylor in Waco which are accelerating research into "bio-ethics."

About 60 schools offer courses in social medicine, ranging from "one course given by a semi-retired physician to full-fledged programs," said Baruch Brody, a doctor of philosophy who heads the Center for Ethics, Medicine and Public Issues at Baylor.

The program at Baylor, which began in July, was started because doctors "were not feeling particularly well-trained but recognized the issues were there," he said in an interview from Houston.

The oldest academically-based program in medical ethics began in 1971 at the Kennedy Institute of Ethics at Georgetown University, according to Robert Veatch, a professor of philosophy at the school.

"When these issues first began to emerge, the primary focus was over terminal cases — what to tell dying patients, how long treatment should progress," Veatch said in a telephone interview.

The questions now include the definition of death and policies surrounding "in vitro" fertilization, he said.

He forsees the creation of "who shall live?" committees at medical centers when artificial hearts leave the experimental stage. There will be more patients than hearts, and the committees will have to decide who gets the new devices.

Health care programs may be cut

NEW YORK (AP) — A new budget proposal for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services would cut $5.2 billion from the Medicare and Medicaid programs over the next fiscal year, The New York Times reported today.

The proposal, now before the Office of Management and Budget, would reduce benefits in both programs and tighten the fee schedule for physicians, the Times reported.

The proposal trims to $19.3 billion the federal grants to states for Medicaid, a cut of $2.6 billion.

The growth of spending on Medicare would be cut by $2.6 billion to a total of $63.1 billion next year. The cuts would trim $1.8 billion from payments to hospitals and $800 million from physician services, the paper reported.

Clark treated with chicken soup

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Artificial heart recipient Barney B. Clark is being treated with an old-fashioned remedy — chicken soup — after a series of seizures put him back on the critical list, doctors say.

The seizures, which began Tuesday morning and lasted for about two hours, apparently were caused by a chemical imbalance unrelated to the new polyurethane heart that has been sustaining Clark since Thursday, doctors said.

"The thing that is the interest is the heart, and the heart hasn't been causing us any trouble," said Dr. Chase Peterson, University of Utah vice president for health sciences.

If doctors are correct in their diagnosis of a chemical or metabolic problem, Peterson said, "it's really a minimal setback. It would have turned out to be a false alarm."

The first seizures shook Clark's body shortly before 6 a.m. Tuesday. His head snapped to one side and his eyes rolled, much like an epileptic grand mal seizure, said Helen Kee, director of nursing services at the University of Utah Medical Center.

CLARK WAS given Valium, a muscle relaxant, and Dilantin, a seizure-suppressing drug, Peterson said. Clark's condition was downgraded to critical, the same condition he remained in today. He had been listed as serious since Saturday.

The first seizures were followed by localized seizures in the legs and arms as the calming drugs took effect, Ms. Kee said.

"He's been pretty knocked out" by the seizure-suppressing drugs, she said.

Clark was put back on a respirator and began receiving "old-fashioned" chicken soup, ground-up carrots and mineral supplements through a tube leading into his small intestine, Peterson said.

"You can see how clumsy it is to give specific, purified chemicals when six carrots and a beef steak would have all of those in surplus," Peterson said.

Peterson said the seizures and treatment were considered routine for post-operative heart patients. Clark's treatment "is exactly what we're doing with 30 other patients in the hospital today," he said.

THE COMPLICATION probably was related to Clark's history of degenerative heart disease which allowed him to become the first recipient of a permanent artificial heart, said Dr. Ross Woolley, chairman of the artificial heart subcommittee of the school's Institutional Review Board.

Woolley said it would be some time, if ever, before Clark's kidneys, lungs and other organs recover from cardiomyopathy, the inoperable disease that destroyed his heart.

Peterson said a computer-assisted X-ray, or CAT scan, of Clark's brain and heart showed no evidence of either hemorrhaging or blood clots, which doctors at first feared could have caused the seizures and resulted in brain damage.

"We have no evidence of any brain damage," he said. "He's doing quite well...Through all of this the cardiovascular state has never changed."

He said Clark, although sedated, was moving his extremities slightly, further evidence there had been no brain damage.

Clark will be weaned from the sedatives over a period of about 36 hours as doctors watch to see if the seizures recur, Peterson said. If they do not, doctors will assume the imbalance was the cause, he said.

PETERSON SAID that since the implant surgery, Clark's body has undergone extreme changes in water, salt, antibiotics and other levels, all compounded by a mild kidney impairment.

Clark had been given large doses of antibiotics, including a penicillin substitute, and his kidney problem may have prevented normal excretion of the drug, which is toxic to the brain, Peterson said.

The seizures are a "perfectly common thing to have happen when you have this much imbalance," he said.

Clark's family had "a very hard day" because of the new complications," said his daughter-in-law, Terry Clark.

She said her husband, Dr. Stephen Clark, had been getting most of his news about his father from reporters. "The media has been super," she said in a telephone interview from her Bellevue, Wash., home.

In Salt Lake City, where Clark's wife, Una Loy, has been staying at the medical center since the retired dentist was admitted Nov. 29, the family issued a statement Tuesday thanking "the people of this wonderful country" for their support, but declining media requests for their exclusive story.

"OUR FAMILY had little idea the publicity this occurrence would create and at this time are unprepared to deal with the implications of this," said the hand-written statement, signed "the Clark family."

Clark and his wife have three grown children.

After learning of the seizures, Mrs. Clark, was "as strong as ever," Peterson said. "There was a tear or two. This is tough news."

Mrs. Clark asked if she could visit her husband, but DeVries told her he was sedated and would not respond.

Doctors realize need to study ethical issues

NEW YORK (AP) — Who deserves an artificial heart, and another chance to live, when such marvels of medical technology are available to only a few?

With the rise of bionic men and women, highlighted last Thursday when an artificial heart began beating in the chest of a retired dentist at the University of Utah, medical doctors are turning to doctors of philosophy for answers to such ethical questions.

Columbia University's medical school joined the trend Tuesday, announcing it was adding philosophers and historians to its staff.

"There is a need to bring non-physicians into medical science," said history professor David Rothman, who will direct the Center for the Study of Society and Medicine at the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Columbia joins other universities, including Georgetown in Washington, D.C., and Baylor in Waco which are accelerating research into "bio-ethics."

About 60 schools offer courses in social medicine, ranging from "one course given by a semi-retired physician to full-fledged programs," said Baruch Brody, a doctor of philosophy who heads the Center for Ethics, Medicine and Public Issues at Baylor.

The program at Baylor, which began in July, was started because doctors "were not feeling particularly well-trained but recognized the issues were there," he said in an interview from Houston.

The oldest academically-based program in medical ethics began in 1971 at the Kennedy Institute of Ethics at Georgetown University, according to Robert Veatch, a professor of philosophy at the school.

"When these issues first began to emerge, the primary focus was over terminal cases — what to tell dying patients, how long treatment should progress," Veatch said in a telephone interview.

The questions now include the definition of death and policies surrounding "in vitro" fertilization, he said.

He forsees the creation of "who shall live?" committees at medical centers when artificial hearts leave the experimental stage. There will be more patients than hearts, and the committees will have to decide who gets the new devices.

Health care programs may be cut

NEW YORK (AP) — A new budget proposal for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services would cut $5.2 billion from the Medicare and Medicaid programs over the next fiscal year, The New York Times reported today.

The proposal, now before the Office of Management and Budget, would reduce benefits in both programs and tighten the fee schedule for physicians, the Times reported.

The proposal trims to $19.3 billion the federal grants to states for Medicaid, a cut of $2.6 billion.

The growth of spending on Medicare would be cut by $2.6 billion to a total of $63.1 billion next year. The cuts would trim $1.8 billion from payments to hospitals and $800 million from physician services, the paper reported.

Tammy Wynette

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Celebrities often don't want bothersome telephone calls, so they get unlisted numbers. But for country singer Tammy Wynette, the idea almost cost her more than she bargained for.

The Internal Revenue Service said Tuesday that it has a tax refund for a Tammy Wynette in Hendersonville but had been unable to reach her.

"We don't know if it is the Tammy Wynette," IRS spokeswoman Jean Tuleen said. South Central Bell Telephone Co. said the only Tammy Wynette listed in Hendersonville had an unpublished number.

Ms. Tuleen said the refund apparently was mailed out after Ms. Wynette's tax report was processed but it was returned by the postal service.

After learning of the IRS statement, a spokeswoman for the 40-year-old singer said she would alert Miss Wynette's accountant.

"They audit us every year. I don't know why they couldn't find us," the spokeswoman said.

Princess Diana

COVENTRY, England (AP) — Princess Diana, described in tabloid newspapers two weeks ago as suffering from a dieter's disease, appears to have found her tastebuds again.

The princess ate a hearty lunch Tuesday while visiting the Belgrave Lodge home for the elderly in this central highland city.

"I have an enormous appetite despite what people say and so has Prince William," she said of her 6-month-old baby. "He takes after his mother."

Princess Diana's remarks were relayed to reporters by Jean Papps, cook at the home. She said of the princess, wife of Prince Charles: "She had a full plate of food and she ate the lot. She really did it justice."

Two weeks ago, London tabloids reported that the 21-year-old princess was suffering from a compulsive dieter's disease, anorexia nervosa, since the birth of her baby in June.

Eileen Brennan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Eileen Brennan, who plays the captain on "Private Benjamin," is progressing from injuries in an accident but probably will remain hospitalized during the holidays.

Miss Brennan is "sitting up in a chair with assistance, but not walking yet," Christy Plank, a spokeswoman at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital, said Tuesday.

The actress, who won an Emmy in 1981 for the "Private Benjamin" TV series, was hit by a car Oct. 27 as she crossed a dark street in the beach community of Venice after dinner with actress Goldie Hawn.

Miss Brennan, 48, underwent four hours of surgery on Nov. 10 to repair facial injuries and fractures to both legs.

Morgan Fairchild

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actress Morgan Fairchild says she would have bared all in the movie "Skins," but claims a producer backed out after she demanded that he stay off the set during her nude scenes.

The allegations came in a $12.5 million suit filed by Miss Fairchild, 32, against producers Bruce Cohn Curtis and Jerry Tokofsky charging they broke a contract with her to make the film.

The lawsuit says the producers tried to alter their June 15 contract with Miss Fairchild to change the starting date and allow Curtis to be on the set when Miss Fairchild's nude scenes were filmed.

Miss Fairchild's agent had asked that only the camera crew be present when the scenes were filmed, according to a memo attached to the suit.

A man who answered the telephone Tuesday at Zupnik-Curtis Enterprises in Los Angeles said Curtis and Tokkofsky were in conference and could not come to the telephone.

Miss Fairchild's attorney, Rick Saffran, said he would not elaborate on the suit, filed in Los Angeles Superior Court in Santa Monica.

Yoko Ono

NEW YORK (AP) — Yoko Ono marked the second anniversary of her husband John Lennon's murder by releasing a video tape that offered thanks "for all the love and praise sent to us."

"We'd like to say 'thank you' for all the love and praise sent to us, which helped us through the hard times, and thank you for loving John," she said. "Let's have a good year and we love you."

The former Beatle was gunned down as he and Miss Ono arrived at their Manhattan apartment on Dec. 8, 1980, after an evening recording session. Mark David Chapman was later convicted of the shooting.

Miss Ono sent the video tape to "The Last Word," an ABC-TV network news and talk show.

Ronco ads bombard late-night TV viewer

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The Veg-A-Matic machine that sliced, diced and shredded its way into the memory of late-night television viewers is gone, a victim of the motorized food processor.

But those insistent post-prime-time commercials with their breathless salesman ("Isn't that amazing?") are still pounding eardrums, pushing the Miracle Broom, smokeless ashtray, Mr. Microphone, Glass Froster, Clean Aire Machine and Auto Cup.

Those items, along with Mr. Dentist ("The plaque attacker..."), Pocket Fisherman ("rod, reel, line and hook — the whole thing!") or the Vibrating Back Massage Air Cushion ("Bye-bye backache! Yes, it's concentrated massage where you need it most..."), are part of the Ronco empire of late night television commercials.

For years they've been pushed with a TV hard sell, repeated night after night and several times during any one night — especially during the holiday season.

Ron Popeil, the founder of Ronco and the voice on the commercials, says 85 percent of his products are sold during the month of December.

Ronco spent more than $6 million on TV advertising during the first two weeks of December 1981, and prepared an even more expensive blitz this month.

"When you go out to buy a Christmas present, you wonder what you can get that the person doesn't have," Popeil said. "You know they'll have a toaster and color TV, but what are the odds they'll have a Mr. Microphone or a Miracle Broom?"

Popeil got his business started and cut his first commercial in 1964, with first-year sales of $200,000. By the time he went public and started selling Ronco stock in 1968, his annual sales were $8.8 million. Now, at age 47, Popeil presides over a Ronco empire that he said accounts for $35 million in annual retail sales with its current line of 17 products.

"And I started with zero," Popeil said during a recent interview at his Beverly Hills home — where all his commercials now are filmed at a cost of up to $20,000 each.

"I was working in a dime store in Illinois six days a week doing product demonstrations. I would buy other people's products and practice my marketing technique," he said.

But Popeil said he realized that "instead of talking to a thousand people a day in the dime store, I could reach millions with TV."

"Ronco wants to hit the viewer two or three times an hour and hit the same viewer every night in the same time period," said David Woodcock, general sales manager for KCOP-TV, an independent Los Angeles-area station.

Police nab loaded brownies

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A batch of goodies from "Brownie Mary's" oven has wound up in the hands of San Francisco police, who have accused the baker of adding marijuana to her recipe.

Mary Rathbun, 58, was arrested Tuesday by officers who said they confiscated four dozen individually wrapped marijuana brownies from a bag she was carrying, as well as five bags of marijuana and some hashish from her home.

Carpenter becomes Man of the Year

AP Laserphoto

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — A 24-year-old carpenter was chosen Tuesday as Playgirl magazine's 1983 Man of the Year.

Jeff Wintemute, who was the magazine's June centerfold, was selected by Executive Editor Dianne Grosskopf for his "bedroom eyes," "breathtaking good looks" and "raw sensuality," the magazine announced.

Ms. Grosskopf said Wintemute, of Buena Park, Calif., won "on the sheer weight of reader letters, which outstripped the other centerfolds during the year."

The 5-foot-10, hazel-eyed Wintemute won a Caribbean cruise for two and a promotional contract with the magazine. He became a nude centerfold candidate earlier this year when his girlfriend, Melodye Hirsch, sent his photograph to the magazine without telling him.

"At first I was hesitant and shy about it and wondered what Melodye has got me into," Wintemute had said after being chosen as the June centerfold.

Sign on lawn proclaims minister was robbed

SAND SPRINGS, Okla. (AP) — Outside the suburban residence of the Rev. H. Craig Hackney and his wife is a sign of the times: "We've Been Robbed!"

Burglars broke into the residence Sunday and ransacked it, stealing the couple's Christmas gifts for relatives.

Soon after the robbery, the Hackneys placed a large sign on their front lawn which proclaimed: "We've been robbed! Did you see any car here Sun. morning 9-12...Please help us."

"It was my husband's idea," Rosie Hackney said. "And we already had the sign. We just hope it'll help. Someone had to see them."

Mrs. Hackney said she discovered the burglary when she arrived home about noon Sunday from the South Sand Springs Church of God, where Hackney is pastor.

"They took every present in the house," she said.

The sign placed in the couple's front yard normally is used at the church to announce upcoming events.

"Even if it doesn't help us, we have made our neighbors more aware," she said. "It might prevent someone less fortunate from having their home burglarized."

Martin Van Buren has been a forgotten man

EDITOR'S NOTE: Some people consider it a trivia question when asked who was the country's eighth president. Some also consider the president in question trivial. But, recognition is coming to Martin Van Buren — at least in his hometown.

By MIKE HENDRICKS

KINDERHOOK, N.Y. (AP) — After more than a century with little more than an historical marker at his home and a wreath on his grave, the people of Kinderhook are getting around to remembering Martin Van Buren — the local boy who grew up to be president.

For years, weeds grew around the neglected granite monument on his grave. Junk accumulated in the hallways and rooms of Van Buren's mansion, mixing with the historic artifacts.

Annual wreath-laying ceremonies marking the birthday of the nation's eighth president attracted few people to the cemetery outside town.

"It seemed as if Martin Van Buren was just a forgotten man," says Kinderhook Town Supervisor John Scheriff, who spent a quarter-century working with others to have Van Buren recognized in his hometown.

AFTER ALL those years and years of neglect, Van Buren is being remembered; in Kinderhook, at least.

The townspeople have been celebrating the memory of Van Buren for the last several months with extravagant costume balls, colorful parades through town and hundreds of thousands of dollars spent salvaging Van Buren's old home, Lindenwald.

The revival culminates with the bicentennial of his birth, which was Dec. 5.

Memoralizing Van Buren, even in his own hometown, has not been easy. It took 71 years, and a drawn-out struggle, before the local high school bore his name. When a new high school was built, it was named after Ichabod Crane, a character created by author Washington Irving.

For most of the 120 years since his death, the people of Kinderhook had pretty much forgotten that a president of the United States had once walked down their streets.

VAN BUREN'S birthplace, his parent's tavern, was torn down in the 1920s, reportedly because neighbors considered it an eyesore.

For years, the Martin Van Buren Hall, a collection of memorabilia in the Columbia County Historical Society's House of History, was relegated to the basement. The historical society has since turned over its collection to the National Park Service for keeping at Lindenwald.

Even Congress was apathetic toward the man who was America's first native born president, served as Andrew Jackson's vice president, and was secretary of state and minister to England, as well as U.S. senator and New York governor. Several pieces of legislation aimed at restoring the Lindenwald mansion were rejected.

The drive to restore the mansion dates back to the 1930s. It took nearly a half century, but the National Parks Service now owns the mansion and has spent nearly $300,000 restoring the 36-room, cream-colored mansion to the condition it was in when Van Buren lived there in political retirement. Van Buren has not been regarded as one of the nation's great leaders. Although considered one of the first masters of American politics, he is generally remembered for presiding over the nation's first great economic depression.

"I always felt bad for Herbert Hoover who was hit with a depression seven months after his inauguration," says historian Thomas Kelly of nearby Siena College. "Van Buren was hit by a depression less than seven weeks after his inaguration."

THE STIGMA of that economic crisis during his administration lingered. A national survey conducted by Siena College showed that historians regard Van Buren as a mediocre president. He received high ratings for political ability and ability to compromise, but was near the bottom of the list in his handling of economic affairs, luck and domestic accomplishments.

Some of the antipathy toward Van Buren among local residents may be traced to stories about his bitter political feuds that have been passed down from one generation to the next, according to Ruth Piwonka, executive director of the county historical society.

"People native to this area are either pro or con about Van Buren," Mrs. Piwonka says. "That may be why some people have been shy and uneasy about commemorating his memory. Many people have been brought up on one side or the other on Martin Van Buren."

But, Mrs. Piwonka says, the bicentennial fuss over Van Buren has enhanced his memory with Kinderhook's 1,200 residents.

"People in the area are learning more about Martin Van Buren. He was a controversial figure, but they are reassessing their opinion of the man and they are forming a much more favorable opinion of him," Mrs. Piwonka says.

Scheriff, for example, has compared Van Buren to John Kennedy and says he believes that Van Buren will findly get the respect he deserves with the upcoming publication of a biography.

"PEOPLE DON'T realize that he was a great president," says Scheriff.

He believes it was worth the years of effort to keep Van Buren's memory alive in Kinderhook.

"It would have been a shame if Lindenwald had been allowed to waste away," says Scheriff.

More than 1,000 people toured the partially-restored Lindenwald when the mansion opened to the public after a parade through town in October.

Larry Schanz, who teaches history at the local high school, believes Van Buren deserves to be remembered well in Kinderhook.

"I THINK he deserves the recognition he gets down this way. Many people are proud of him. He got left with a bad situation by Andrew Jackson. He certainly tried," Schanz says. "It wasn't all of his making.

Joseph Rayback, emeritus professor of history at Temple University, has written 1,600 pages of a biography on the eighth president and he believes Van Buren has been mistreated by historians.

"As far as I am concerned, he was one of the more significant American presidents. Of course, he never gets that acclaim.

"He was one of two or three most important in the United States at his time. He laid the base for a very strong political party organization. He was one of our great politicians."

Van Buren should be credited with laying the foundation for the nation's modern economy, according to Rayback, who taught at Temple University before retiring to write the biography.

"Van Buren's major accomplishment was in the financial field. He created the independent treasury system, helped create a solid financial structure in the United States by separating federal money from private money."

THE FREE banking system, which helped make small businesses possible, was Van Buren's doing, according to Rayback.

"What Van Buren has to be remembered for is that he organized the free enterprise structure which we based our economy on for the rest of the 19th century," says Rayback.

Hoover afraid to 'stick his neck out,' historians say

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Three months before the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover knew that a British double agent had been instructed to gather detailed information about the base for Germany, two historians say.

J. Edgar Hoover

F.D. Roosevelt

But Hoover failed to warn President Franklin D. Roosevelt about the full danger because he "didn't want to stick his neck out," according to Leslie B. Rout Jr. and John F. Bratzel of Michigan State University.

On Sept. 3, 1941, Hoover sent a memo to Roosevelt saying the double agent working for the British and leading the Germans to believe he was working for them was looking for information about aircraft production rates and pilot training, the researchers say.

But Hoover did not mention that the spy, Dushko Popov — code-named "Ivan" by the Germans and "Tricycle" by the British — had specific instructions to gather information about defenses, aircraft placement, tides and currents at Pearl Harbor, they say.

On Dec. 7, 1941, the Japanese attacked the U.S. fleet anchored in the harbor, crippling or sinking 18 ships, destroying about 170 planes and causing some 3,700 casualties.

Rout, a professor of history, and Bratzel, an assistant professor in the Department of American Thought and Language, published their findings in the December issue of American Historical Review.

"It's a personal assumption on our part," Rout says, "but nobody, including J. Edgar, seemed to think the Japanese would attack."

The historians say the Germans planned to relay Popov's information to their Japanese allies, but Popov, who was loyal to his British employers, informed them before he left for the United States.

The spying instructions were contained on a microdot — a microscopic photograph — used as a period at the end of a sentence in a telegram, Rout said in a recent telephone interview. British intelligence had Popov give the microdot to Hoover.

At the time, Hoover was feuding with the U.S. Military Intelligence Division and the Office of Naval Intelligence for dominance of the U.S. spy operations and was eager to show the White House he was succeeding where the other two agencies failed, Rout says.

"He made no bones that he wanted to be big daddy of intelligence in the United States," Rout says.

But Hoover gave Roosevelt only the most innocuous of the agent's instructions to avoid embarrassment if the information was not reliable, Rout says. "He didn't want to stick his neck out," he said.

Popov, who died in 1979, gave the same account in a book he wrote in 1974, but his claims were unsubstantiated until now, Rout says.

The two researchers, who are writing a book on World War II espionage in Latin America, came across Hoover's memo to FDR while examining papers at the Roosevelt library in Hyde Park, N.Y. They say the memo, which was declassified in 1975, confirms Popov's story.

"We were among the first to get a hold of this material, but we were able to determine what was missing," Rout says. "Hoover had this piece of information and didn't know what to do with it...He was, in many respects, out of his league."

Hoover headed the FBI from 1924, when the agency was created, until his death in 1972.

Being Santa Claus isn't cheap — in fact, it costs around $5 billion a year, according to figures compiled by the editors of the Credit Union National Association's "Everybody's Money" magazine.

Santa must be wealthy

By The Associated Press

Playing Santa Claus costs a lot — $5.5 billion and change to be exact.

That's the figure the editors of "Everybody's Money," a quarterly magazine published by the Credit Union National Association, came up with when they calculated the price tag for Santa's Christmas Eve journey.

Here are the figures:

—Basic materials. One toy at $10 for each of the world's 553,254,000 children under five or $5,532,540,000. Plus $38.50 for a ton of coal for naughty boys and girls.

—Labor. Toymakers earn an average of $5.49 an hour plus benefits. For 100 elves, Santa's annual payroll comes to $1,553,011.20. Add an additional $45,000 for 15 temporary clerks to process Christmas gift requests.

—Operating expenses. WATS lines for incoming calls with requests year-round cost $10,337.33. A personal computer so Santa can keep track of the lists is $2,140.

—Reindeer maintenance. A "reindeer maintenance engineer" — keeper — works two hours a day at $9.52 an hour or $6,949.60 a year. Dasher, Dancer, et al eat $1,806.75 worth of groceries a year. And Santa keeps $2,000 in a savings account to buy a reserve reindeer, just in case.

—Sleigh maintenance. Paint and harness oil cost $30 a year.

—Insurance. Property damage insurance — in case of a roof-top accident — runs $6,250, personal liability coverage is $1,500 and a one-day travel policy is $5.15.

—Clothing allowance. One red suit, complete with cap, costs $250. A suit of thermal underwear is $45. And dry cleaning is $3.80.

The total: $5,534,169,367.33.

HL&P can raise rates

AUSTIN, (AP) — The Public Utility Commission decision on Houston Lighting and Power's rate-hike request will allow the company to raise rates by $182.6 million, a PUC spokeswoman said.

The commission ruled in the case last Tuesday, but the actual rate hike was not calculated until earlier this week, according to Ronna Martin of PUC.

A hearing examiner had recommended a $200 million rate hike for HL&P. But the commission, saying the company has been mismanaged, slapped a penalty on HL&P.

That penalty brought the increase down to $182.6 million. HL&P had asked for $336 million.

Mrs. Martin said customer rates would not be available until later in the week. HL&P has been charging bonded, interim rates based on a $181 million increase. That means most customers will pay slightly higher rates as a result of the PUC decision.

Reagan steps back

Foreign Affairs Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, reputed to be hawkish and gung-ho on the need for nuclear arms buildups, is positioning itself for a key compromise that could lead to an early breakthrough next year in the U.S.-Soviet negotiations at Geneva to reduce the nuclear threat to Europe.

For the first time since the intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) talks began just over a year ago, top U.S. officials are hinting that if the Kremlin agrees to dismantle and destroy as many as 50 percent of their arsenal of 340 SS-20s, Moscow will not find the Reagan administration turning a deaf ear.

THAT IS a subtle but potentially major change in American policy. It comes in the wake of a previously undisclosed exchange of letters between President Reagan and Soviet leader Yuri Andropov pledging to accelerate the talks aimed at preventing an accidental nuclear war.

The change in the U.S. nuclear position was particularly significant, coming just before Secretary of State George Shultz began his first major trip to Europe, where the NATO allies and their restless publics are eager for the U.S. to show new flexibility in the negotiations.

The publicly stated Reagan position, the so-called "zero-zero option," is that only if the Soviets dismantle every one of their ~~highly mobile SS-20s will~~ the U.S. scrap its planned 1983 deployment of a new generation of 572 Cruise and Pershing II nuclear missiles in Europe.

IN OTHER words, it's no longer all or nothing. If Moscow agrees to scrap half of its nuclear missiles — the half that are targeted on Western Europe — and to allow on-site inspection so that their dismantling can be verified, the U.S. might agree to scrap a certain percentage of its 572 new nuclear missiles.

The shift in the U.S. stand was hinted at by Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger when he was asked if such a deal could be cut. "That's a very hypothetical question and I obviously don't want to get into or prejudice the negotiating process," the defense chief said in an interview.

A few weeks ago, Weinberger was responding to similar questions by saying Reagan's "zero-zero option" is on the table, it's a good proposal and the Russians in effect can take it or leave it. Now top officials here are changing their tune.

Perhaps this has something to do with the arrival of George Shultz as secretary of state. He seems to want to turn the Soviets, and more importantly Reagan himself, toward engagement with the Russians. Shultz also is acutely aware of allied sensibilities on this issue.

He knows that if the U.S. is perceived as stonewalling the nuclear arms talks, it will revive the anti-nuclear peace movements in Western Europe, particularly if Moscow publicizes concessions it is making in the negotiations. So far the Soviets have not made such a definitive compromise.

IN AN unusual disclosure of what the Russians actually have proposed at Geneva, Weinberger confirmed that "they proposed, as you said, to take out half or to take out 25 percent if we would not deploy the Pershings at all." That obviously was rejected.

"They also said in a burst of unwanted generosity," Weinberger added, "that they would move the SS-20s east of the Urals." The Urals is the mountain range that divides European Russia from Russia's frontier with Asia. About half of the SS-20s are targeted against China.

"Neither of those proposals accomplishes anything in the way of reducing the threat to Europe," the defense chief said.

Health care concerns

John Hinckley Jr. did more than wound President Ronald Reagan and three others in early 1980. His shots and subsequent trial focused public attention on the insanity plea as a defense.

Now, Texas officials are focusing additional attention on another aspect of the chronically mentally ill — long-term residential care. The study, performed by a select special committee of the Texas House, investigated the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation to determine whether changes could be made in the department's operations to facilitate adequate institutional care or other programs that would benefit both patients and the general public.

The committee has recommended a number of minor changes, primarily in the areas of commitments, discharges and furloughs to better protect the public while ensuring the protection of patients' rights.

But while the Hinckley case and others show a definite need for stricter institutionalization in particular cases, research indicates deinstitutionalization may be of more value for a great number of those suffering mental illness.

Editorial Research Reports indicates the number of mentally retarded people in large residential facilities has declined since 1970 from around 200,000 to less than 125,000. At the same time, the number of community facilities for the mentally retarded has increased dramatically.

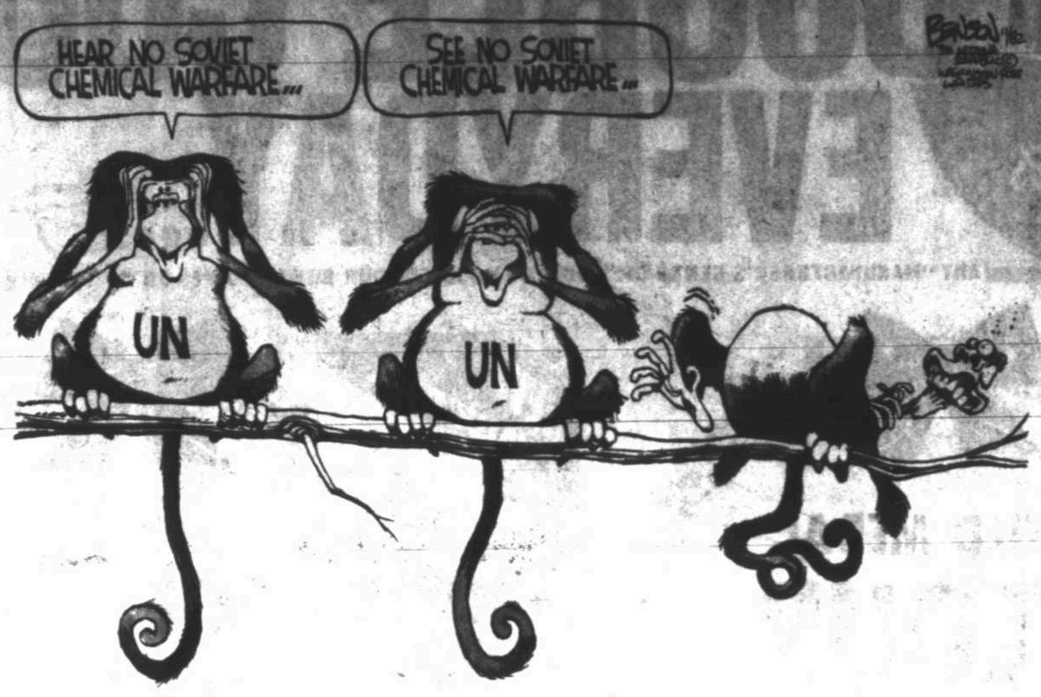

But while there has been a definite shift toward deinstitutionalization during the past few years, one must weigh cost factors against benefits to be derived by not only the general public but also the patients.

Certainly, society should be willing to provide for the needs of the mentally afflicted while recognizing that deinstitutionalization may best serve the needs of the mentally ill over the long run. A five-year project evaluating the effectiveness and costs of Pennsylvania's Pennhurst relocation program concluded the patients were overwhelmingly better served by community programs. That doesn't mean the community care is less expensive than formal institutionalization. Specialists on deinstitutionalization agree, in fact, that community facilities may not be cheaper. In fact, many think it will be much more expensive.

House Speaker Bill Clayton noted recently that the committee "believes that state government must make a greater effort in providing treatment and supervision through a stronger partnership with local communities. The state legislature currently provides millions of tax dollars for programs of outreach, sheltered workshops, halfway houses, and for diagnosis and evaluation.

"But more funds may be needed from the state, moreover, the committee believes that local governments need to make a greater contribution in funding the participation if the problems of the chronically mentally ill are to be alleviated," the speaker said.

The legislature should carefully review the committee's findings with an eye toward enacting changes that would be beneficial both to the chronically mentally ill patient and society in general. A major consideration will be the new funding requirement. But recent history shows us ignoring mental health care needs can be penny wise, pound foolish.

ART BUCHWALD

Pentagon's officers are gentlemen!

The Pentagon is seriously considering the use of lie detectors to test the veracity of its 3 million employees as well as defense contractors, and government workers in other departments. They say they want to use the polygraph tests for security reasons.

Art Buchwald

I have no objection to Defense resorting to lie detectors providing that the top people take them, too, particularly when testifying on The Hill concerning the military budget.

It doesn't seem too much to ask Secretary Weinberger, his top assistants and the high-level brass to put on electrodes when they face a House or Senate Armed Services Committee. With the help of this equipment all of us might be better informed as to what a weapons system will really cost.

"The congressional committee will come to order. General, are you comfortable? Let's just test the polygraph machine to see if it is working. What branch of the service are you in, sir?"

"Nothing can stop the United States Air Force."

"The lie detector checks out fine. We'll now proceed with the questioning. Could you give us some idea what the B-1 bomber will cost?"

"Two-hundred million dollars."

"Hmmm, the polygraph seems to indicate that is the wrong answer."

"I'm sorry, sir. I didn't understand the question. Do you mean with wings and wheels on it?"

"I'm afraid I wasn't specific. Yes, I do."

"To get it in the air it will cost $234,567,891.50."

"Good. Now this would only be the bare plane and not include such items as radar, communications, bomb racks, cruise missile launcher and parking lights?"

"That's correct, sir. We might add on another $40 million for the equipment, give or take $5 million."

"The polygraph is acting up again, general. How much did you say?"

"Sixty-five million dollars."

"Very good, general. Now may I ask you about the tests the Air Force has made on the B-1? Are your people satisfied that the contractor will bring in the plane at that price without serious overruns?"

"We're certain of it, sir. They should deliver it on schedule without any bugs in it."

"The needle seems to be flying all over the place. Are you sure of this?"

"No, sir. We're not. But we need the plane."

"We're going to give you the plane, general. We just want to know what we're getting for our money."

"Every plane has bugs in it."

"Don't pout. We know that. Which brings us to the question of the C-5A cargo plane. We understand a lot of cracks are showing up in the wings. How much will it cost to put on new wings?"

"Half a billion dollars."

"Would you like to try that again?"

"I meant to say a billion dollars. These electrodes are giving me a headache."

"We're sorry about that, general. But actually the idea for introducing the lie detector came out of the Defense Department. Since you people have been using it so successfully we decided to use it, too."

"We're only using it to find out who the whistle-blowers are in the department, and who is leaking detrimental stuff to the press. We would never use it on someone discussing the Defense Department budget."

"Why not, general?"

"Because when it comes to military spending testimony, we consider ourselves officers and gentlemen."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Justice for some more equal than for others

WASHINGTON — Carved in stone over the impressive portico of the Supreme Court is the motto: "Equal Justice Under Law." Unfortunately, this basic principle of democracy isn't being followed by federal prosecutors around the country.

Jack Anderson

For example: Someone who defrauds a bank of more than $1,500 in Houston, Texas, can expect the feds to prosecute. But a few hundred miles north, in Dallas, the fraud or embezzlement has to reach $5,000 before it will be prosecuted by the U.S. attorney's office.

In California, the federal prosecutor in Sacramento will spring into action if a con man or embezzler gets away with more than $500. In San Jose, it takes a $5,000 swindle to interest the U.S. attorney.

These examples of unequal justice are detailed in a still-unreleased, 96-page report by the General Accounting Office. The investigation was requested three years ago by Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., a member of the Judiciary Committee.

The GAO investigators found that the nation's 95 federal prosecutors have virtual autonomy in three key areas — deciding whether to take a particular case, deciding when a case should be turned over to state authorities for prosecution and deciding whether a suspect should be allowed to plea-bargain.

"The lack of uniformity among districts creates disparities in the treatment of suspected violators," the GAO study concludes.

Referring to the northern district of California, for example, the investigators found several cases of embezzlement that weren't prosecuted because they involved less than $5,000. These cases would have met the dollar cutoff points in five of the seven districts the GAO studied — namely, southern Ohio, eastern Kentucky, southern Texas, eastern California and Maryland — "and would have been likely candidates for prosecution," according to the report.

The difference in criteria among the various federal prosecutors might not be so serious if the cases they reject were actually pursued by state district attorneys. But too often the cases aren't even turned over to the state prosecutors.

"As a result of establishing declination policies without adequate coordination with local officials, some cases go unprosecuted," the auditors found.

For example, between Oct. 1, 1978, and March 31, 1980, in the eastern district of Kentucky, exactly one of 104 cases the U.S. attorney declined to prosecute was referred to the local authority for action. During the same time period, in the southern district of Ohio, only 46 of 319 cases the federal prosecutor declined were referred to state officials.

One U.S. attorney told my associate Tony Capaccio that the divergent policies for rejection "reflect the different sizes and practices of different districts." He explained that "an embezzlement of $5,000 might be a pretty big deal in Iowa, Wyoming or Minnesota," and added that "in the rural areas the locals just aren't competent to handle bank-robbery investigations."

A Justice Department official said the problem of federal coordination with state and local law enforcement "is being fully resolved through establishment of law-enforcement coordinating committees."

Maybe so. But meanwhile, the present crazy-quilt system of prosecution permits some astonishing results. In the southern district of Texas, for example, a suspect caught with 134 pounds of smuggled marijuana wasn't even brought to trial; he was "diverted" to a supervised rehabilitation program by the federal prosecutor.

In the same district, a man indicted for smuggling 15 pounds of cocaine faced 15 years in prison. But he was allowed to plea-bargain on the understanding that he wouldn't be given more than a three-year sentence.

EXPENSIVE UPDATE: The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's mission is to regulate wholesale electric rates, interstate transfers of natural gas and the licensing of certain hydropower projects. You might think these responsibilities could be handled adequately within the borders of the United States — but you'd be wrong.

FERC commissioners Georgiana Sheldon and Anthony Sousa recently winged off to China at the taxpayers' expense. The air fare alone came to almost $10,000. Additional expenses are still being tabulated.

Asked about the junket, an FERC spokeswoman explained that Sheldon, an expert on water power, wanted to inspect some Chinese hydropower projects. Sousa is also interested in hydropower, she explained, and the taxpayers benefited by the two commissioners "updating their knowledge."

TEACHING PEACE: House members are trying to recruit 200 sponsors of a bill that would establish a National Peace Academy; a bill to that effect had 137 sponsors in its first attempt.

The lawmaker who introduced the bill, Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., explained the rationale this way: "It is hard to justify calling the MX missile a 'peacemaker' and not have a peace academy that would actually cost less than the missile system." In fact, the startup costs of a peace academy and its first three years of operation would entail only $31 million, a tiny fraction of the MX missile system's cost.

The goal of the Peace Academy is simple: to end war through the peaceful resolution of international conflicts. Its supporters insist that it is both politically and financially feasible.

Economic helping hand

With the loan to Brazil, President Reagan has once again acted swiftly and wisely to help a Latin government under great financial strain. It's hardly charity. As in the case of Mexico last summer, this kind of lending benefits the United States as much as the borrower. The recovery of this country's economy will depend to an important degree on the good health of the Latin economies.

The $1.2 billion of credit that Mr. Reagan announced in Brasilia is what the bankers call a bridge loan — a loan for a few months while more durable arrangements are negotiated. What's at the other end of the bridge? Staving off a disaster is not necessarily the same thing as providing a base for economic growth and solvency over the long haul.

Through the 1970s, Brazil maintained a phenomenal rate of economic growth, higher than Japan's. One ingredient, as in the United States a century ago, was foreign capital. But over the past couple of years the high interest rates have tremendously increased the cost of its past debt, while the worldwide recession has cut down the export earnings that pay off foreign loans.

There are now five Latin American countries whose foreign obligations this year, including both interest and principal, are substantially larger than their total export earnings. In order, they are Argentina, Mexico, Ecuador, Brazil and Chile. The Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, which keeps a careful and expert tally of these trends, recently published estimates that, in the case of Brazil, interest payments alone will come to 45 percent of the country's 1982 exports. Payments of principal due would be another 77 percent, but, since a country can't pay more than it earns, some payments will have to be postponed, and there will have to be more loans.

One lender of last resort is the International Monetary Fund, and that's why its member governments need to expand its lending resources promptly. The other lenders of last resort are the rich countries' central banks, of which the most powerful is the U.S. Federal Reserve System. The loan to Brazil was, among other things, a message to an apprehensive world that this network of lenders is in place, and in operation, to prevent default and panic.

Beyond that, it is crucial that the industrial countries fight off the protectionist impulse and keep their markets open to exports from countries like Brazil. If Brazil can't export to earn dollars, it has no hope of paying off its loans — let alone continuing to buy American goods that represent American jobs. The short-term loans are emergency aid. Any longer solution depends on expanding trade.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Argentines remaining staunch on Malvinas

WASHINGTON — Argentines may well be the most proudly independent people in the Americas.

William Giandoni

Their country, second only to sprawling Brazil in land area among the Latin nations, is one of the great granaries of the world. The people, mostly of European extraction, are hard-working, highly literate, very patriotic and well-fed.

Argentina's greatest problem would appear to be inability to give itself representative, democratic government, although another effort is under way.

The Argentine political class seems to find it hard to compromise or reach agreement among its members. Indication of that is the multiplicity of political parties. Some 200 parties were registered for elections once upon a time.

In other words, while Argentines may grow misty-eyed at the sound of their national anthem, they are sharply splintered in their political thinking.

But relatively little of this filtered out of the country, though, and Argentina "has the reputation of being a mystery," the country's new ambassador, Lucio Garcia del Solar, said recently.

That seemed not to make much difference, though, until last April when the Argentine armed forces bloodlessly occupied the Malvinas, or Falkland Islands.

Then it was that Argentines suddenly discovered that most of the rest of the world did not understand them. That few, not many, foreigners knew that Argentines believe that the windswept barren archipelago that Britain took in 1833 really belongs to them.

In an obvious effort to demonstrate how unanimously the Argentines feel the validity of their claim to sovereignty over the Malvinas, one of the first truth squads they sent out to educate world opinion to the Argentine way of thinking was made up of Peronist labor leaders. All were men known at home for their opposition to the military juntas that have run the country since a bloodless coup ousted President Maria Estela Peron in 1976.

Since then, Argentine envoys have toured the Americas and Europe spreading the word at international conferences, at universities, and elsewhere.

Typical are Garcia del Solar and former Foreign Minister Oscar Camilion, who recently addressed separate groups at Georgetown University and Johns Hopkins University's school of advanced international studies.

Both are civilians, although they serve, or served, military regimes.

With reference to the South Atlantic crisis, Camilion stressed that "an underestimation by the English government of Argentine goals and strength and a miscalculation by the Argentine government on the final American stand on the question unleashed a war whose final consequences are still unforeseeable."

The former foreign minister thus reinforced a growing impression here that the United States, which first tried to mediate between its two allies and then sided with the British in their successful military action, suffered the greatest loss in the battle over the Falkland-Malvinas.

Camilion also warned that, in the future, Argentine diplomacy will stress a non-aligned attitude.

"Mechanical commitment to American initiatives is today out of the question." That implies "an abstention of diplomatic support for any effort originating in Washington to invoke the Rio Treaty (of reciprocal assistance) against a non-friendly government, or for any other pressure emanating from that source."

Garcia del Solar told a Georgetown audience that "there's a widespread feeling in my country that the U.S. military help to Great Britain did the trick" in the South Atlantic.

Both the ambassador and Camilion emphasized that Argentina is in the process of returning to democratic rule. Elections are planned late in 1983 or early 1984 for a successor to President Reynaldo Bignone, an army general who has "no other ambition than to be the one who hands over the presidency to an elected civilian" in March 1984, the ambassador said.

Three Salvadoran guerrillas who participated in a "recruiting effort" in which about 200 persons were kidnapped from a San Sebastian soccer game lead reporters into the "occupied zone."

Salvadoran guerrilla leader says captives free to leave

SAN SEBASTIAN, El Salvador (AP) — A leftist guerrilla commander says rebels who tried to recruit new fighters by kidnapping an estimated 200 people at a soccer match are freeing captives who want to go home.

"The army recruits by force, but we raise the consciousness of the people and those who are in favor stay," said the commander, who did not give his name. "Those who aren't in favor can go."

The rebel leader spoke to reporters Tuesday at a bridge near this town 30 miles north of the capital San Salvador. The commander's guerrillas refused to let reporters cross the bridge into hills where the captives were believed held.

The rebels staged the mass kidnapping Sunday afternoon, firing automatic weapons in the air and lining up 200 people at the soccer match. They marched them off into the hills where they maintain a fortified camp. A soldier and a spectator who tried to escape were reported killed.

Witnesses, escaped captives and officials said the mass abduction was part of a guerrilla effort to recruit new fighters in the rebels' 3-year-old fight to topple the U.S.-backed government.

The rebel commander did not say how many captives had expressed their desire to leave, but said the guerrillas' underground radio station, Venceremos (We Shall Overcome) said it would "issue later an official communique."

The rebel camp is in an area known as Cerros de San Pedro, a stronghold of the popular Liberation Forces, the largest and most radical of the five rebel factions in the Central American nation.

Twenty-one captives sneaked away under cover of darkness Sunday night and another 17 — eight women and nine young men — cried and protested so loudly that the rebels let them go Monday, the freed captives reported.

"They mistreated no one," said Alberto Mejia, 26, one of those released. "They told us they were going to train us and give us arms. We were worried because we didn't want to stay."

Ramon Leonel Rivera, a soccer player who was also released, said the rebels "never said exactly why they took us. What is happening is that they don't have anyone to help them in their fight."

Reports have differed on the number of people kidnapped. Some of those released said there were more than 200, others estimated around 150.

Local military commanders here said they did not have more precise details, but all agreed the majority of captives were young people between 15 and 25 years old. They said the guerrillas also seized women and children to keep the army from pursuing them.

Some of the people freed said the guerrillas were low on arms, ammunition and food, and were desperate for new recruits. They asked not to be identified by name for fear of reprisals.

Guerrillas reportedly suffered heavy causalties when 6,000 army troops swept through the area in August. Western military observers say the rebels have logistical problems in supplying themselves with food and arms.

Human rights groups say more than 38,000 people have been killed in fighting since 1979, many of them civilians caught in crossfires or shot by rightist paramilitary gangs that allegedly collaborate with the army.

Parisian sanitation workers participate in walkout

By GREG MacARTHUR
Associated Press Writer

PARIS — As smartly dressed Parisians skirt growing piles of smelly trash, the city is accusing garbagemen of threatening public health by striking over a $3-a month pay cut and a dispute about who picks up dog droppings.

The walkout, which began Saturday, was called by the Communist-led Confederation General du Travail because of a readjustment in worker transportation allowances and the use of nonunion laborers to help sanitation crews clean up sidewalks soiled by the city's large population of pet dogs.

It is being honored by about half of the city's 4,500 garbage collectors, the mayor's office reported, and is causing an estimated 3,000 tons of garbage to pile up daily in Paris.

Conservative Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, the Socialist government's most prominent critic, charged Tuesday that the strikers were trying to embarass him before March 6 and 13 nationwide municipal elections — a major test of strength between France's closely matched left and right. He said the strike is endangering public health.

Large piles of smelly refuse are accumulating outside homes, offices, swank shops and posh hotels, forcing residents of the style-conscious French capital to walk in the middle of the street, hold their noses and shut windows.

The labor confederation called the strike during the final phase of an intense national campaign for 7,000 union seats on France's special labor arbitration councils. The election starts today.

By spearheading the strike, the militant confederation has put itself in the forefront while its candidates are vying for votes against other French labor organizations in the elections.

The tribunals, on which management and labor representatives sit, heard 31,000 cases last year of employee complaints over arbitrary dismissals, compensation, working conditions and other labor matters.

A major reason the confederation called the strike was its anger over Chirac's hiring of a private contractor, whose employees are mainly nonunion, to help the 250 men who cruise the sidewalks on specially equipped motorcycles cleaning up dog droppings.

The confederation has demanded that the "pooper-scooper" patrol be formed inside the sanitation department.

It also wants compensation for the loss of the garbagemens' transportation allowance.

U.S., Philippines sign pact on customs jurisdiction

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The United States and the Philippines today signed an agreement giving Filipino customs, immigration and quarantine officials jurisdiction at two major U.S. military bases in the country.

Official Filipino sources, who asked not to identified, said the government sought the accord to have more control over the entry of personnel and goods through Clark Air Base and Subic Bay Navy Base.

In the old setup, some U.S. personnel brought through the bases commercial items such as television sets and other appliances which had been purchased abroad and later sold tax-free to Filipinos off-base, the sources said.

Military personnel enter the country through the bases rather than through the international airport, thus bypassing customs.

This had resulted in the growth of so-called "PX goods" stores outside the bases and substantial loss of revenues to the Philippines, the sources said. PX stores are facilities which stock merchandise for military personnel and their dependents.

Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo, speaking at the signing ceremony, said the agreement marked the first time since the Philippines won independence from the United States in 1946 that Filipino officials will be able to implement local laws on customs, immigration and quarantine inside the bases.

He said the aggreement "is not the final solution to the many problems facing the Philippine government vis-a-vis the U.S. military presence in the country," but "a step in the right direction."

Romulo said the essence of Philippine sovereignty over the bases is the "enforcement" of Philippine laws inside them.

"It is not enough that the Philippines and the United States have formally and repeatedly agreed and declared that Philippine sovereignty extends over them," Romulo said. "It is not enough that the Philippine flag flies daily over such areas. The laws of the republic must be properly enforced by the Philippine officials concerned. And these laws must be observed and respected by all."

Latest bombing in Ireland underscores years of conflict

EDITOR'S NOTE: The writer has covered the Northern Ireland conflict for more than a decade and recently returned from Belfast. This is his analysis of the escalating violence after Monday night's disco bombing that left 16 dead.

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — The bomb slaughter of 16 people including 11 off-duty British soldiers in a Northern Ireland bar is a grim milestone in the province's 13 years of sectarian bloodshed, and deepens the feeling that the killings will go on indefinitely.

The bombing of the Droppin Well Bar in Ballykelly, near Londonderry, was the bloodiest atrocity in the British province since the Provisional Irish Republican Army killed 18 soldiers in a double-bomb ambush at Warrenpoint on Aug. 27, 1979.

The Ballykelly massacre climaxed a wave of killings triggered by the Oct. 20 election of a 78-member Northern Ireland Assembly, which deepened polarization between the dominant Protestants and minority Roman Catholics.

Forty-seven people were killed in the first eight months of this year, in what observers call a relatively quiet spell.

But the same number have died since campaigning started for the assembly on Oct. 1.

Altogether, 2,266 people have been killed since 1969, including 367 regulars in the British army sent to keep the peace.

The surge of violence erupted after hard-liners on both sides were elected to the assembly that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government hoped would produce a power-sharing administration to restore political stability.

But the plan boomeranged. Far from encouraging moderates to emerge as peacemakers, minority Catholic voters elected five members of Sinn Fein, the political front of the IRA.

Protestants, who outnumber Catholics 2-1, elected 47 militants who have pledged never to share power with Catholics and demanded that London restore majority rule, suspended 10 years ago.

The Provos, as the main faction of Irish nationalist guerrillas is known, wants to force the British out of the province and unite it with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

The pro-British Protestants, descendants of English and Scottish settlers who colonized what became known as Northern Ireland, oppose a merger with overwhelmingly Catholic Ireland.

Sinn Fein's success in the assembly election, capturing one-third of the Catholic vote, was the latest in a 20-month string of electoral breakthroughs for the IRA that began during last year's hunger strike by jailed guerrillas in Belfast's Maze prison.

Ten inmates starved themselves to death during the seven-month fast before it collapsed because of Britain's refusal to meet their demand for treatment as political prisoners rather than criminals.

The hunger strike, and the worldwide propaganda it won the guerrillas, widened the sectarian gulf. Many people in London and Belfast think it set back any chance of reconciliation between the warring communities.

"It's almost impossible to see even a glimmer of light at the end of the tunnel any more," lamented a Catholic politician in Belfast who asked not to be identified.

"We have a political climate now that is bleaker than it's been for a decade. There simply does not seem to be any way of ending this nightmare for the foreseeable future," he said.

Both the IRA and their Protestant rivals have reported a surge in recruitment. Protestant and Catholic gunmen and bombers once more stalk grimy streets of Belfast's working class ghettos.

Andy Tyrie, leader of the Ulster Defense Association, biggest of the Protestant paramilitary organizations, echoed Protestant bitterness at the IRA's success with the ballot and the bomb.

"The Republicans have determined every move in Northern Ireland," he said at the Protestant group's headquarters a half-mile from Sinn Fein offices in Belfast.

"The Loyalists have won nothing," he said. "We've been saying for years that Catholics support the IRA and the assembly elections proved it."

Among the sectarian graffiti that echoes the centuries of hostility in terrorist strongholds, a new slogan of hatred has appeared in the Shankill Road area, heartland of Protestant militancy in Belfast.

"All Taigs are targets," it reads. Taig is Protestant street slang for Catholic.

IRA guerrillas declared in a statement last week that "the war of liberation will go on until every vestige of British rule has been removed."

Arens averts controversy over West Bank resolution

Foreign Affairs Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Israeli ambassador to the U.S. Moshe Arens had to make an unscheduled trip to Denver last weekend to quiet a storm of controversy over a resolution that would have called on Prime Minister Menachem Begin to dismantle West Bank settlements and negotiate a territorial compromise.

What is unusual about the resolution is that it did not come from a group of Arab-Americans but from one of the most powerful Jewish organizations in the United States -- the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, representing more than one million reform Jews in this country and Canada.

Arens succeeded in persuading the dissident UAHC rabbis that criticizing the Israeli government in such an open and public manner would play right into the hands of anti-semites and others who wanted to pull down not only the Begin government but the state of Israel as well.

The UAHC finally decided to postpone any action on the resolution until the group's next national convention. But the Arens trip underscores a dilemma that Israel increasingly faces — American Jews are no longer giving this Israeli government the kind of unquestioning loyalty they have in the past.

Quietly and out of the glare of potentially embarrasing publicity, directors of national organizations such as B'nai Brith, the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress and the National Council of Jewish Women have all sent the same message to the Begin government.

It is that if Israel gets on a collision course with the Reagan administration over the issue of settlements or the president's Sept. 1st peace plan, don't expect the kind of automatic, knee-jerk support from the American Jewish community that it has historically provided.

At the same time leaders of all these groups and the umbrella Conference of Presidents of Major Jewish Organizations have told Begin they will unconditionally support Israel if the United States attempts to cutback or use aid to Israel as a lever to induce Israeli concessions.

Leaders such as Rabbi Alexander Schindler of the UAHC, a former president of the umbrella group, are travelling to Israel to convey the message to Begin personally. Meanwhile, the State Department served notice Tuesday it has no intention of giving up its campaign to prevent an increase in aid to Israel.

The Senate Appropriations committee already has approved a package that would include $1.7 billion in military aid and an additional $700 million in economic aid. It also passed a controversial measure that would allow Israel to escape repaying $250 million by converting military loans to grants.

Thus, the figure approved by the Senate committee and awaiting action of the floor is closer to $2.6 billion. The House of Representatives meanwhile has not acted either in committee or on the floor on legislation that continue aid to Israel at the level of $2.485 billion.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R.-Tenn., said Tuesday that he does not believe Congress will pass the foreign aid bill in this lame-duck session scheduled to end on Dec. 17. That would mean that the aid issue would not come to a head until sometime in mid-January at the earliest.

By then, the Reagan administration hopes, Israel will have reconsidered its vehement opposition to the President's peace plan and dropped its insistence that the only place it will hold talks about withdrawing Israeli troops from Lebanon is in Jerusalem, it's disputed capital.

U.S. ambassador Philip C. Habib is due to return here this week and to hold another round of talks with Lebanon's foreign minister on Dec. 12 and 13 that may break the current deadlock. Jordan's King Hussein also will visit here on Dec. 21 for talks with Reagan about his terms for joining the peace process.

The clear White House hope is that a breakthough will occur before early next year — either on Lebanon or on the broader search for Arab-Israeli peace — that will enable the administration to drop its campaign to reduce aid to Israel to the $2.4 billion level recommended by President Reagan.

That level represents a 21 per cent increase over last year and accounts for more than a fourth — 28 per cent — of all U.S. foreign aid. The administration has opposed any new increases because it fears they will be seen in the Arab world as a reward for Israeli intransigence.

Envoy Habib returns to U.S. for consultation on impasse

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. special envoy Philip Habib has returned to the United States for consultations on breaking the months-long impasse in his efforts to secure the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon, American officials say.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, said Habib returned Tuesday night after a two-month stay in the Middle East. It was understood that Habib was accompanied by his colleague, Ambassador Morris Draper, although this could not be confirmed.

Details of Habib's travels are kept secret for security reasons and no information was provided on his destination or time of arrival in the United States.

Draper has been in the Middle East almost continuously since mid-September attempting to initiate negotiations for the withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces from Lebanon.

Habib has been in the area since early October working on that issue as well as President Reagan's proposals to encourage broadened Arab participation in the Middle East peace process.

According to the officials, Habib's return was dictated in part by a speaking engagement and other commitments in Washington.

But he also plans to review with officials here such issues as Lebanon's recent appeal for additional U.S., Italian and French peacekeeping forces.

I want 'peace on earth'...and Jordache jeans

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Juanita Foley of Manhattan said she didn't believe in Santa Claus, but she wrote him anyway to ask for world peace and Jordache jeans.

Eric Black of Queens helpfully included the page in the Sears catalog where Santa could order a Space Invader set, and Lewiston resident Jessica Hubbard promised "a plate of cookies and a carrot for Rudolph."

Their letters and those from children all over the country were sent to the North Pole — sometimes to "Icicle Lane" or "Rudolph Avenue" — and ended up at the General Post Office on Eighth Avenue.

Postmaster George Shuman said the office expects to get more than 9,000 Santa letters this year as part of its 50-year-old "Letters to Santa" program.

Originally, postal employees read the letters and tried to respond to them. Now Santa's helpers are New York City high school students, who began reading the letters Tuesday to make sure the writers get responses from Mr. Claus.

If the letters can be believed, most children have been very good this year or, as one child wrote, "as good as I could be."

"I do all of my work at school and I sing to God," wrote a correspondent named Lucas, of Buffalo, who wanted a Kermit the Frog puppet.

"I'd like a tote bag, a gerbil and a fast food stand," wrote Sue Wiaz, 6, of Staten Island.

Antonetta Lambros of Farmingville wanted "my own goldfish," and Laura Chema of Yonkers wanted a "German shepherd girl puppy" even though Santa's reindeer "would get jealous."

Some children also thought of others. One little girl asked that Santa bring her mother "a new car, chocolate candy and three new bras."

Many were money-conscious. One little boy listed the prices of the items on his list and added that Santa could "find most of these things at Hay's (a discount department store)."

Some requests were less concrete than others, like Juanita's: "I don't believe in you, but...I want peace in the world, people will like me more, a Jordache pocketbook, Jordache jeans and Atari."

There were other skeptics and some worriers. Billy DeVas of Clifton, N.J., wanted to know how Santa got into the house when the chimney was too thin and the roof too steep and angular.

"And how do you get some of the gifts all the way in the back of the tree without making all the ornaments fall down?" he asked. "P.S. Fasten your seat belt."

Some writers injected a sad note, like Andy Freire, 12, of Flushing, who had his house burglarized and last year's Christmas gifts stolen.

"My mom has been depressed lately. If you can, could you please send my mom a bottle of Chanel No. 5?"

Mary Seay of Rustburg, Va., wrote that "Most of all I want to see my grandmother. She has been in a hospital for a long time."

Some grownups wrote, too. A woman from Manhattan wrote to say she can't get anything this year for her three children.

"It hurts me," she wrote. "If there's anything you have to make my children happy, I know they would be overjoyed for it."

Reagan: MX defeat was 'grave mistake'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says defeat of the MX missile was "a grave mistake" that must be reversed, and White House officials worry it signals a new post-election mood in Congress against a huge buildup in Pentagon spending.

Reagan vowed to "do everything I can to take this case to the country," on Tuesday when the House — by a surprisingly wide 245-176 vote — deleted $988 million intended for building the first five missiles.

"Unless reversed in coming days," Reagan said, "it will seriously set back our efforts to protect the nation's security and could handcuff our negotiators at the arms table."

Although the vote was a major setback for the president, who had waged an intensive lobbying campaign to save the MX, both supporters and opponents agree the fight isn't over.

"We won the battle, but we haven't won the war," said Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., leader of the anti-MX forces.

"I don't think this means MX is dead," said Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., a leading MX supporter.

White House strategists planned to meet today to work on a plan to assure victory for the MX in the Republican-controlled Senate. That would guarantee the MX would be a subject of joint House-Senate negotiations on the defense bill, and would mean another vote in the House.

Although it has not been decided how Reagan will promote his case, his options include a television address and speeches to various audiences.

Administration officials feared Tuesday's vote reflected concern and outright opposition to the "dense pack" basing system for MX.

Also, "A lot of people want to start slashing the defense budget," said one White House official, who noted that the MX marked the first defense vote since the November elections.

"A lot of them are running scared on defense," said the official, who asked not to be identified.

However, the officials said there was no sign Reagan would retreat from his goal of a 7 percent defense spending increase above the rate of inflation.

Likewise, they insisted Reagan was not ready to compromise on the dense pack basing plan. They said the president would plead anew with Congress to approve missile production money now and talk about the basing mode later.

They expressed confidence the administration could win converts in the House if given more time to discuss the dense pack plan — which calls for deploying 100 missiles in concrete and steel-reinforced silos spaced closely together in a 15-mile long tract near Cheyenne, Wyo.

Strong opposition to the basing plan was voiced during the four hours of House floor debate.

"This was a renunciation of dense pack. There were a lot of serious questions raised about it," said Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash., an opponent of the plan.

"The practical effect of this will be to send those who have planned the MX back to the drawing board to come up with a better basing system than dense-pack," said Edwards.

'Unusual' House coalition denies funding for MX

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the end, it was an unusual combination of nuclear freeze advocates, fiscal conservatives and skeptics over the Pentagon's latest basing plan who accounted for the House's surprisingly strong vote to deny money to buy the first MX missiles.

Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, the New York Democrat who proposed the $988 million cut for missile production, could count on freeze supporters for votes, but he got some unaccustomed allies as well in the 245-176 result Tuesday night.

There was, for instance, Rep. Carroll Hubbard, D-Ky., who told colleagues that he always has voted for defense bills.

But, he said, he was more persuaded by the nation's economic problems than the Soviet threat that President Reagan had stressed to him at a White House lobbying session Monday.

"Nowadays, the words 'here come the Russians' don't scare Kentuckians half as much as 'here come the creditors,'" he said.

Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., a senior member of the House Armed Services Committee and pro-defense stalwart, said he thought conventional forces were being shortchanged at the expense of building a nuclear system whose workability has not been proven.

Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash., said the U.S. strategic arsenal would hardly be without a strong punch, listing an array of other land-based and sea- and air-launched missiles that comprise the "triad" of nuclear weaponry.

Addabbo stressed throughout an afternoon of debate that the Air Force could not even spend the production funds in the current fiscal year, now more than two months old. The money would just sit unused in a Pentagon account while federal social programs were cut further, he said.

He also said, Pentagon arguments to the contrary, that the MX would violate provisions of the unratified SALT II arms-limitation treaty, whose terms both the U.S. and Soviet governments have agreed to honor.

Several members said they were dubious about the worth of the president's recently announced plan to place the 100 MX missiles in a closely spaced, "dense pack" arrangement of reinforced concrete silos near Cheyenne, Wyo.

Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., leading the administration's case, pointed out that the bill included a provision that would ban use of the money until March 15.

By this time, he said, members would be able to be fully briefed on "dense pack" and the Pentagon would have submitted a full schedule for production and deployment of the weapons.

Edwards also emphasized that the vote concerned the missiles themselves, not the basing method, but opponents and White House officials agreed later that uncertainty about "dense pack" cost the administration some votes.

"It was a combination of all those things that just came together," Edwards admitted later. "We knew all week we didn't have the votes. It was just more than we could carry."

'Nasty' weather in forecast

The pleasant weather of the last few days is about to get nasty as some pre-winter weather descends on the Permian Basin today.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, Midlanders might see freezing drizzle, a few snow flakes and possibly a traveler's advisory tonight.

According to the NWS forecast, there's a 70 percent chance of freezing rain, possibly mixed with snow, through mid-day Thursday.

It is expected to be cloudy and colder tonight with the low in the mid-20s. Thursday should warm up a bit with the high reaching the mid-30s.

Freezing rain and snow should turn to rain by Thursday afternoon, the weatherman said.

Tuesday's high of 65 missed the record high of 79 set in 1966, and the overnight low of 36 was quite a bit warmer than the record low of 15 set in 1978.

The NWS had recorded only a trace of precipitation this morning, while most area towns were reporting rain, with Lamesa reporting freezing drizzle.

Opponents of gasoline tax hike vow fight in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — House passage of a gasoline tax hike to finance thousands of highway repair jobs has done little to silence its opponents. Some of them even suggest they will filibuster the measure when it reaches the Senate floor this week.

However, Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., steadfastly declared Tuesday, "I predict it will pass in the Senate."

The Senate Finance Committee was meeting today to draft its version of the tax provisions, which are a part of a complex highway bill scheduled for consideration by the full Senate on Thursday. The House passed the legislation 262-143 early Tuesday morning following more than 10 hours of debate.

Despite the highest unemployment rate in more than 40 years and support from President Reagan and the bipartisan leaders in both houses of Congress, the fate of the job-creating measure remains uncertain.

Reagan administration estimates that the measure will create 170,000 construction jobs, and 150,000 more related to the construction projects, have not swayed opponents.

Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., said Tuesday the House-passed bill was the "first rotten egg" of the lame-duck session of Congress.

"Members of Congress are in a panic about unemployment and are determined to do something, even if it's the wrong thing. And this is the wrong thing," he said. "I don't blame President Reagan. I blame it on the leadership of both houses of Congress."

Humphrey, who attended a news conference with opponents of the measure Tuesday, promised "sustained and extensive debate" on the Senate floor, code words for a filibuster.

So far, however, Humphrey and fellow Republican Don Nickles of Oklahoma are the only members of the Senate who have indicated they may try to stage a filibuster.

The victim, Donald A. Allen of the Royal Crest Apartments, 4201 Andrews Highway, Apt. 40, was discovered by a relative about 6 p.m. He had been stabbed several times in the back and side, according to police.

His body, clad only in a shirt, was found face-down in a large pool of dried blood in a hallway of the apartment. It was not immediately known how long he had been dead.

Justice of the Peace Robert Pine pronounced him dead at the scene and his body was taken to the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home. Services are pending.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The second dog-fight trial stemming from the Aug. 29 raid of an alleged pit bulldog fight southeast of Midland was to resume today in Midland County Court after six jurors were selected Tuesday.

On trial for the misdemeanor offense of cruelty to animals is 30-year-old James Wayne Burton, one of eight Midlanders who were arrested by sheriff's deputies and Texas Department of Public Safety troopers in the midnight raid near an abandoned house at Farm Road 715 and County Road 146.

Convicted of cruelty-to-animals in the first trial in late October was 23-year-old Willie Howard Whitmire. The jury meted Whitmire a $1,000 fine and a one-year probated sentence. The maximum penalty for the offense is a $2,000 fine and a one-year jail sentence.

In the first trial, DPS Trooper Sue Rudie testified that she saw "narcotics," apparently used to stimulate the dogs to fight, in the house near the alleged pit. Sheriff's Capt. B.J. McDaniel said he saw, with and without his binoculars, men putting dogs in and taking them out of a 16-square-foot carpeted arena, heard dogs yipping and men shouting and laughing, and later, after the raid, saw injured — cut and slashed — dogs, which he said appeared undernourished. He also said he saw what appeared to blood on a wall, door and floor of the house.

However, Deputy Mike Love, who took photographs of about 10 of 15 dogs leashed or in cages at the scene, said that the dogs were "fighting trim" and appeared healthy to him. The dogs were taken to a veterinarian for care.

The sheriff's investigation apparently did not reveal any gambling at the site.

On Tuesday, Assistant County Attorney Mark Dettman and defense attorney Edward T. Garza selected six jurors — four men and two women — from a 16-member jury panel.

Garza wanted to reject most of the prospectives jurors and said he was unable to select six fair and impartial jurors from the panel. The presiding judge, County Judge Bill Ahders, however, order Garza and Dettman to make their strikes and, if possible, to select six jurors; they did.

Ten of the 16 prospective jurors were pet owners, and four of their numbers said they could not in good conscience give the minimum punishment — a $1 fine and one-day probated sentence — for a person convicted of cruelty of animals.

TV tower takes tumble, kills five

MISSOURI CITY, Texas (AP) — An engineer turned on his video camera just in time to "hear something snap" moments before watching an 1,800-foot TV tower tumble to the ground, hurling five men to their deaths.

Andy Hudack's tape Tuesday morning captured the tower starting to fall and the sound track picked up his voice as he shouted "Oh, my God!" followed by several seconds of the roaring collapse.

Hudack was too busy running to see the bodies fall. Three other men working on the second-story roof of a nearby building were hurt when they leaped or were thrown to the ground.

"I was busy moving the other way," Hudack said. "The poor people who were working on the tower, I'm sure they — I just feel bad for them."

The dead men had been riding on an antenna as it was lifted atop the tower, said Lt. Roger Boyd of the Fort Bend Sheriff's Department in this suburb southwest of Houston.

Bill Cordell, chief engineer for KIKK, one of the radio stations scheduled to use the tower, said workers had hoisted a second antenna atop the tower when a gin pole — a bar to which the pulley mechanism is attached — failed, causing the antenna to fall and cutting through a guy wire.

"When the wire got struck, it probably put a turning motion in the tower and brought it down," Cordell said.

Hudack was making a videotape to mark the end of the 9-month project.

"I heard something snap," Hudack said. "Then the tower started falling. I just put my gear down rather hastily and got out of the way...I wasn't going to sit there and let it fall on me."

The victims died of multiple injuries.

"They were all in bad shape," said Peace Justice L.E. Eguia. "You've got to remember, they were riding this thing down."

Daniel H. Smith, site manager of twin broadcast towers about a mile away, said he watched the antenna being hoisted.

"I noticed that it was going up but then was slowly going down," he said. "The tower began to shiver and broke into three pieces."

The falling tower crushed a transmitter shack belonging to UHF television station KTXH and created "a big cloud of dust," he said.

Hours after the accident, the tower lay in a mass of twisted metal, with cable the size of a man's wrist stretching hundreds of yards from the wreckage. Eguia said some of the cable was driven two feet into the mud.

Representative of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and the Aetna Insurance Company were to begin investigating the tower accident later today, the Houston Chronicle reported.

Killed were Gene Crosby, 24, and David Stewart, 21, of North Carolina; Donald K. Owens, 21, of Mississippi; and Johnnie Wilson, about 26, and Johnnie Bratten, 26, both of South Carolina, said A.J. Noto, dispatcher for the Fort Bend County sheriff's department.

Noto said authorities did not know the hometowns of the men, who all worked for Worldwide Tower Service Inc. of Pitman, N.J.

The three injured men were from Houston. They were reported in stable condition at area hospitals.

The transmitter building of Houston-based television station KTXH, above, lies in ruins beneath the rubble of an 1,800-foot tower which collapsed Tuesday morning, killing five men. Right, rescue workers search through the rubble for the victims. Three other people were injured and reported in stable condition in Houston-area hospitals.

Starved horses will be given new homes

TYLER (AP) — Ranchers throughout East Texas who offered to adopt some of the 130 starving wild horses found on a ranch north of here will be receiving calls today from federal officials giving away the animals.

The Bureau of Land Management staged a lottery Tuesday to determine which of the 500 ranchers on six separate lists will be offered up to two horses.

"We had no way of knowing who was first," said BLM spokesman John Gumert. "The only fair way was to hold a public drawing and put the names in a ranking."

Gumert said officials in Washington, who have closely monitored the plight of the starving herd, also decided Tuesday to waive a $70 adoption fee because of the cost of future veterinary care.

"The 70 bucks won't make a dent in the federal debt," Gumert said. "These horses are going to require rather extensive veterinary treatment over the next few months and the cooperative agreements of adoption will include veterinary requirements."

One of the 130 rescued horses remains in a veterinarian's care, he said, and won't be offered for adoption. The remains of 36 horses were found on an East Texas ranch and six have died since being placed under the care of veterinarians, Gumert said.

The state has filed charges of animal mistreatment against rancher Joe Corbett, who adopted 170 wild horses from federal land in Nevada and held them on his ranch near Pittsburg.

In January, a federal grand jury will hear testimony in Tyler to determine whether federal charges are warranted.

Gumert said Interior Secretary James Watt has written to U.S. Attorney General William French Smith asking for a full investigation.

"Watt is following this horse case very closely," Gumert said. "Watt gave us the authority to expend whatever money was needed to clean this case up."

One of the 42 people who apparently signed power of attorney rights over to Corbett says he was not aware he was signing such a document. George Bates of Pittsburg said he signed an application to get a horse and was responsible for getting 13 others to sign applications for the BLM horses.

"I carried the application around and got them to sign," Bates said. "But if signing that application form is the same as signing my power of attorney, then I signed it."

Man convicted in auto scheme

DALLAS (AP) — A federal court jury has convicted one man and acquitted another on charges of conspiring to use counterfeit cashier's checks to purchase Mercedes-Benz automobiles that were sold in other states.

Johnnie Lee Pierce, whose age was not available, was found guilty Monday on one charge of conspiring to pass phony checks and three counts of transporting stolen automobiles across state lines.

The jury acquitted Joseph J. Clark, 38, who had been charged with one count of conspiracy and one count of transporting a stolen car to Metairie, La.

Disease-causing gene isolated

HOUSTON (AP) — A specific gene blamed for a metabolic birth defect that can lead to mental retardation has been isolated, according to scientists at the Baylor College of Medicine.

"We have isolated bits of DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) that code for the enzyme deficient in a disease called phenylketonuria or PKU," said Dr. Savio L.C. Woo, associate professor of cell biology. "We have found that PKU results when the gene malfunctions."

PKU is caused by a deficiency in an enzyme needed to change one amino acid into another that is important in the development of brain tissue.

Consumers wary, debt down

By The Associated Press

A government report that Americans reduced their debt by $324 million in October is another sign that consumers remain jittery about the recession, economists believe.

The Federal Reserve Board said Tuesday that the decline in outstanding consumer debt marked the first time in 10 months that consumers had paid off more than they borrowed.

"So far there's no sign the consumer has let loose of the purse strings," said Thomas Thomson, chief economist at Crocker National Bank in San Francisco.

The Reagan administration has said it hoped the cut in personal income tax rates last July would stimulate consumer spending — thus helping lift the economy out of recession. There has been no sign, at least through October, that spending has increased significantly, and the recession has persisted.

But a new survey suggested that consumers regained some confidence in the economy in November.

The Conference Board, a business-sponsored research group, said its Consumer Confidence Index rose 5 points, to 54.7. The index is figured from a base of 100 for 1969-70. The survey said people were increasingly confident that business and employment conditions would improve in the next six months.

Meanwhile, a leading Wall Street economist suggested that an economic recovery in 1983 could crumble under the pressure of big business debts and high jobless rates.

Henry Kaufman, chief economist at the investment firm of Salomon Brothers Inc., told a news conference in New York that a recovery next year would be "one of the weakest on record." He foresaw economic growth of between 2 percent and 2.5 percent — far below the expansion rates following previous recessions.

"It is not clear that an economy lift of only 2 percent real growth can adequately sustain and keep a recovery going," said Kaufman. If the economy were to slip back into recession next year after a brief recovery, it would be the third business slump in three years.

Kaufman predicted the unemployment rate would peak in the first half of next year at between 11 percent and 11.5 percent. The rate currently is 10.8 percent, the highest in 42 years.

In other economic developments:

—The Department of Housing and Urban Development said applications for home loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration jumped nearly 60 percent last month to the highest level for any November on record. Samuel R. Pierce Jr., the department secretary, attributed the increase to recent declines in mortgage interest rates.

—The Social Security old-age fund was forced to borrow $3.4 billion to cover its December checks. Meanwhile, members of the National Commission on Social Security Reform continued informal efforts to forge a compromise rescue plan, with one panelist suggesting that the retirement age be raised from 65 to 66 over the next three decades.

—The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. outlined a financial aid plan that would allow ailing mutual savings banks to "buy time" to try to resolve their money woes.

Chrysler rejects contract, UAW head warns workers may be alienated

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp. will alienate workers unless it agrees to settle a Canadian strike before Christmas, the head of the United Auto Workers said after the automaker rejected a union contract proposal.

The company would be buying itself "a lot of bitterness" if it created an impasse before the holidays, UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said at a news conference late Tuesday.

Chrysler has said that unless 10,000 Canadians employees return to work by Monday, it would not pay for the company to reopen the plants until after Christmas. Holiday pay would cost Chrysler about $450 a worker.

Fraser has said a contract must be reached in Canada no later than today to allow time for ratification by Monday.

The Canadian workers walked out Nov. 5 when Chrysler said it could not afford to grant an immediate raise.

Chrysler's 43,200 U.S. workers, who remained on the job, also seek an immediate wage increase. The U.S. workers rejected a tentative pact, but chose not to strike.

Talks in both countries resumed Nov. 22, and Chrysler on Tuesday rejected UAW's counterproposals for both U.S. and Canadian workers.

In Toronto, Canadian UAW Director Robert White said Chrysler officials called the union's proposal "unacceptable." He said they were not prepared to make a new offer.

Neither he nor Fraser would reveal the union's wage demand but White called it "the bottom line that could be ratified in the plants."

"Based upon what was done today, you can't claim optimism," Fraser said Tuesday. "We're just no further at this moment than we were 24 hours ago. There's just been absolutely no progress at all."

Chrysler Canada Ltd. chief negotiator William Fisher told reporters he was still optimistic the deadline could be met. "There's time, there's not a lot of time, but there is some time," he said.

Chrysler chairman Lee Iacocca set the deadline Friday, saying it would be inefficient to open the Canadian plants after Monday, only to close them for the holidays 10 days later. The plants would reopen Jan. 3.

Several sources said Chrysler offered workers in both countries an immediate wage increase of 30 cents an hour in a two-year contract.

Copper industry needs tariffs, barriers

PHOENIX (AP) — Foreign copper now holds nearly a quarter of the U.S. market and trade barriers are needed to help the ailing domestic industry, says the top union negotiator on copper.

"We've got to get the government into this ... I'm talking about tariffs," said negotiator Frank S. McKee, who also is international secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Steelworkers, in an interview.

McKee was among leaders of 20 copper-industry unions who gave job security the top priority Tuesday during preliminary discussions on national contracts expiring in late June or early July.

"Half of our members presently are without jobs," the United Steelworkers' Cass Alvin, long-time spokesman for the union consortium, said in a briefing on the talks.

He said the unions agreed unanimously to conduct negotiations jointly.

McKee said foreign producers are able to keep world prices down because they receive subsidies from their governments and because they do not have to operate under costly clean-air standards.

Alvin said the copper unions will meet in Phoenix on Feb. 9 to adopt policy for the contract talks, after a Jan. 18 meeting here to draft suggestions.

Frank Joklik, president of the nation's largest copper producer, Kennecott Minerals Co., arranged to sit in today and Thursday on what were described as pre-bargaining talks here with the unions.

Copper contracts run for three years. There has been an industry-wide strike every three years since the mid-60s.

McKee, a key figure in copper negotiations since 1971, said he believes 1983 will be different.

"We recognize the plight of the industry," he said. "These are hard times, not because of labor costs — wages and fringe benefits — but because of the world economy."

Majors lower crude oil prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Major oil companies are joining the move to lower U.S. crude oil prices.

Texaco Inc. lowered the price it offers to pay for domestic crude oil by $1 a barrel Tuesday, joining several smaller oil refiners that previously had announced price cuts.

Texaco cut its offered prices to about $32 a barrel for high-grade crude oil and $31 for lower-grade crude. Other oil companies had made similar reductions late last week and earlier this week.

If the lower prices are adopted industrywide, the retail price of gasoline and other oil products is likely to continue declining, many analysts believe.

The moves by Texaco and the others reflect falling prices for petroleum products. Prices have dropped unexpectedly in recent weeks, in part because warmer-than-usual weather in much of the United States has dampened demand for home heating oil.

As a result, some heating oil suppliers have been marking down prices in recent weeks. Exxon Corp., a major supplier of heating oil in the Northeast, cut wholesale prices for heating oil 8.25 cents a gallon last weekend, to 94 cents a gallon.

Tenneco sells stock

HOUSTON (SWN) — Tenneco Inc. announced that it has filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission a registration statement relating to the sale of up to 1.5 million shares of its common stock.

Tenneco expects to issue these shares to Morgan Stanley and Co. Incorporated in exchange for up to $60 million aggregate principal amount of Tenneco's 8 3/8 percent debentures due 2002 and 8 7/8 percent debentures due 2003. Morgan Stanley presently owns the debentures which will be exchanged. Upon completion of the exchange and after the registration statement has become effective, it is expected that the shares will be distributed by Morgan Stanley.

HOT OFF THE PRESS
Witherspoon blazes new trails in annual reports. We produced 15 during the past year—more than one a month—for energy companies, retailers and manufacturers, big and small, old and new. Careful planning plus award-winning writing and design helped pioneer a "new readability" in these important documents.
As a result, ADWEEK/Southwest magazine recently named Witherspoon one of only six "hot shops" in a five-state region. Now that we're all warmed up, bring us in on your next annual report.

Back on track

Aided by a crane, a Missouri-Pacific railroad crew places the wheels of an overturned boxcar back on the tracks Tuesday afternoon after the Monday night derailment of six railroad cars. The six cars were righted and debris cleared by Tuesday afternoon. The incident occurred about 9:30 p.m. Monday near the intersection of Highway 80 and Industrial Drive.

Odessa rail operations back in order

Train loading operations were back in full swing this morning in Odessa following the derailment of six cars on a spur of the Missouri Pacific system Monday night.

The last of the damaged cars was removed from the spur yesterday around 4 p.m. MoPac workers rebuilt about 200 feet of track along the spur, which curves around the Continental Products Company plant at 100 South Industrial, roughly across U.S. Highway 80 from the Odessa Ramada Inn.

MoPac trainmaster Ray Hanfeld said this morning he could not yet put a dollar estimate on damage to the six cars. All will be sent to a MoPac repair shop, probably in either Fort Worth or Little Rock, Ark., he said. New cars cost between $80,000 and $100,000, sometimes more, depending on their size and type, Hanfeld said.

"We just go in on the theory we can repair them," he said.

Only one of the six errant cars was loaded, with 181,420 pounds of plastic pellets from El Paso Chemicals, a subsidiary of El Paso Products Company. The load was transferred to another car.

The 56-car train had just left the petrochemical complex in south Odessa and was headed for the MoPac switching yard about a mile away when the derailment occurred around 9 p.m. Monday.

No one was injured in the incident.

The gas and water lines to Continental Products were shut off Monday night because of the derailment. One of the cars knocked open the gas meter; another opened a water line. Utility employees had shut off the lines after the derailment.

Water was turned back on early Tuesday morning, but Continental Products employees worked all day without much heat, as the gas meter was not scheduled to be turned on until nightfall, according to Alecia Self, assistant to the manager.

The company building sustained no damage, but the train came within 20 feet of its northeast corner. Continental will have to replace the lawn sprinkler system and some sod which was chewed up by the derailed cars.

Hanfeld said the accident was caused by what railmen call slack action. As the train rounded the curve where the accident occurred, the rear cars were rolling faster than the ones on the front end. There are between six and eight inches of slack, or play, on each car. The cars bunched up at that point, causing six on the end to jump the track. There was no problem with the train's brakes, he said.

For nurses, diploma may be inadequate

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Some years ago when a nurse exited the academic world and entered the hospital setting, she was qualified and trained to jump into the health care scene.

After a few days of orientation to surroundings, regulations and equipment, the newly graduated nurse could be functional in any hospital.

However, this was during the 1950s when nurses went through a three-year hospital-diploma school. Today, nurses complete a four-year academic program with some clinical training.

New graduates are probably more academically qualified, but there are questions among some doctors and experienced nurses as to whether the modern nurse is properly trained.

After reading a recent article about undertrained nurses, Dr. J.E. Mendez said he thinks nurses-to-be may be gypped out of the necessary skills.

"THE PAPER (degree) does not make a professional," Mendez, a Midland obstetrician who's on staff at MMH, said, agreeing with an October Newsweek article, "Our Undertrained Nurses," by Alice C. Ream, a retired nursing teacher.

Ms. Ream charges that "...the newly trained graduated nurse becomes an enormous burden to her hospital..." because today's nurses are not trained to make the proper decisions.

"Good judgement, technical skills and, most important, ethics are what equal professionalism," Mendez said, adding that in the past Midland Memorial Hospital's nurses have been "thrown into the middle of the hospital in a sink-or-swim" atmosphere.

When Al Keim, a product of the diploma-nurse program, was hired in April as MMH's vice president of patient care services, he put an emphasis on hiring nurses with bachelor's and master's degrees. But Mendez said "the paper does not equal every capability."

"(TODAY'S) NURSES are not ready for the trenches," Mendez said. "Nurses have been working in areas where they are not properly trained. This causes frustration and friction."

And then burnout, Mendez said.

In her article, Ms. Ream cited burnout: "So nurses end up as cocktail waitresses, clerks in stores or real-estate saleslades. That is called 'burnout.'

Staff Artist Jan Drake

Translated, it means that the nurse was not trained to cope, to organize or to perform and will, eventually, leave nursing for something that she can handle."

Mendez said to rectify this situation "smaller hospitals need to train their nurses," adding that orientation of nurses at MMH has been inadequate in the past.

But Keim said that's changing at MMH with its Nurse Preceptor Program, which is for new graduates, nurses needing to upgrade hospital nursing skills, those desiring to re-enter the profession and for others whose career goals have changed.

"I'm happy to see people at the top like Al (Keim) who is there to guide and direct nursing into a common goal," Mendez said, referring to the MMH program.

HOWEVER, MENDEZ said it's unfortunate that nurses don't get this training during their academic years.

According to Ms. Ream's article, "Student nurses once were supervised through 3,500 to 5,000 hours of patient care; they now get a small fraction of that. This is doubly disconcerting since nurses are today expected to perform intricate procedures that didn't even exist 30 years ago."

Ms. Ream continued to state that today's nursing students are drenched in academic courses and shortchanged in skill training.

Mendez said nurses need many skills, some intangible, some basic.

"It's attitude and confidence," Mendez said, referring to the skills he

Voters can register until Dec. 16

Midlanders who have not yet registered to vote have only until Dec. 16 to do so for the Jan. 15 county-wide "bingo" election, according to Janeice Builta, elections administrator.

"It is later than you think," said Ms. Builta. "Hurry. Get it done fast."

The election will give Midland voters a chance to vote for or to reject the legalization of bingo games for charitable purposes as authorized by the Bingo Enabling Act of 1981.

Bingo was rejected by voters in Lamesa and Dawson County earlier this year, but was passed by the electorate in Odessa, Big Lake and Andrews.

The Texas Election Laws require that a person must be registered to vote at least 30 days prior to an election to be eligible to cast a ballot.

Absentee voting in the bingo election will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays from Dec. 27 to Jan. 11 in the Elections Administrator Office at 709 W. Washington Ave.

Ms. Builta noted that voters who have moved or changed their address must get their salmon-colored voter registration certificates corrected by Dec. 16 in order to vote in their precincts. The reverse side of the certificate gives instructions on changes of address, she said. Corrected certificates may be mailed to Voter Registration, P.O. Box 3434, Midland, Texas 79702, or the voter may come by the office or telephone at 687-0231.

The bingo election was called last month by the Midland County Commissioners' Court after petitions bearing about 3,000 signatures and requesting the election were submitted to County Judge Bill Ahders.

The campaign to hold the election was led by the Tall City Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7208 before and after State Comptroller Bob Bullock's "Raiders" raided and closed down the post's illegal family bingo games Sept. 23.

Correction

In Tuesday's edition of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, a story carried an inaccurate headline. The story on Page 1C on the collision of a police car with a car driven by Kari D. Reagan Jr. carried a headline which indicated that the police car had rammed Reagan's car at the intersection of Lee Street and East Wall Avenue. Police reports indicated the police car was attempting to pass Reagan's car when Reagan made a slight jog to the left and the vehicles collided.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Midland considering new wrecked-car arrangement

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Following a pattern set by one Dallas suburb, city and police officials hope to unravel the administrative tangles in Midland's procedure for impounding motor vehicles.

But one local wrecker operator fears that a system like Richardson's could be "opening a can of worms" in Midland, while another tow-truck owner fears it could wreck the competitive balance among Midland towing services.

At a Nov. 30 meeting, the city council voted to appropriate $20,000 for improving and expanding its vehicle impoundment area, a fenced lot directly north of the animal shelter at 1601 Orchard Lane.

The renovated area would incorporate land east of the shelter now occupied by a firefighter training field. Additional fence, pavement and lights are called for, along with an office building to accommodate a 24-hour attendant.

INSTEAD OF rotating wrecker duties among several area companies, the city plans to contract with one wrecker company for round-the-clock service.

"We're not in the automobile or storage business," said Lt. Herman Wicker, whose police traffic division directs the impoundment operation. "What we're trying to do is provide a service to the people of Midland and cut down on the amount of paperwork we have to do for private wrecker companies."

Wicker explained that eight wreckers now take two-week shifts as the city's on-duty wrecker. Unless a vehicle's owner specifies a different wrecker company, police summon the on-duty wrecker when an accident occurs, an abandoned car needs towing or a prisoner's auto requires impounding.

If a car is towed to Midland's impoundment area, the city collects a $1 daily storage fee. Wrecked cars are transported to an auto dealership, repair shop or junk lot instead of the car pound.

WICKER SAID the police department must keep track of the rotating wrecker schedules. He said car owners often will complain to police that the towing or storage charge levied by a private firm is excessive. In some cases, the city collects wrecker fees and must reimburse the companies each month.

"It causes us all kinds of book work here at the police department," he said.

A 24-hour attendant supplied by the wrecker company could check vehicles in and out of the lot, collect fees and relieve patrolmen from making frequent trips to release cars from the lot, Wicker said.

The attendant, more fence and additional lighting would help reduce theft and vandalism now plaguing the lot, according to James Brown, city manager.

About $2,000-$3,000 worth of automobile equipment, for which the city is deemed liable, disappeared from impounded cars this year, said Brown.

WICKER NOTED that a single wrecker company would eliminate the proliferation of impoundment lot keys, thus helping reduce the chance a gate might be accidentally left open.

Brown said that while an ordinance detailing specific wrecker service requirements has yet to be drafted, the necessary impoundment area improvements will proceed. He estimated that the physical

Harrelson story under scrutiny by prosecution

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The prosecution resumed questioning rebuttal witnesses today in its quest to discredit convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson's alibi for the day U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. was assassinated.

Convict John Lee Spinelli, who recorded Harrelson's conversations at the Harris County Jail in Houston last year, was expected to continue his testimony today.

The government quickly called 15 rebuttal witnesses Tuesday after the last of three defense attorneys rested in the trial of Harrelson, 44, his wife, Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, 41, and Elizabeth Chagra, 28.

Through Tuesday, 125 witnesses had appeared during nine weeks of testimony in the lengthy trial.

Harrelson is charged with shooting Wood in the back on May 29, 1979, for a $250,000 fee from Mrs. Chagra's husband, convicted narcotics kingpin Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra. Chagra will be tried for murder separately later.

Prosecutors contend Chagra, 39, wanted Wood dead because he feared the judge would give him a life sentence on a 1979 narcotics charge.

After Wood's death, Chagra was tried and sentenced to 30 years without parole by U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions, who is presiding at the current trial.

Mrs. Chagra is charged with conspiracy to commit murder and to obstruct justice. Mrs. Harrelson is accused of conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Harrelson contends he was in Dallas the day of the killing and his attorneys called a hairstylist, doorman, bank teller and sunglasses salesman to tell the jury they saw him there that morning, as early as an hour after Wood was shot in the back with a high-powered rifle.

Prosecutors have tried to show through rebuttal witnesses that the alibi witnesses were mistaken about the time they saw Harrelson in Dallas, 272 miles north of here.

On Tuesday, prosecutor Ed Timmons introduced records from the Town House Motel showing Harrelson was registered there under the alias Bill Bannister from May 21 to 25 and again on May 28, a time the government alleges Harrelson was "stalking" Wood.

FBI agent Robert Zane said the motel was the closest one to Wood's San Antonio residence, just 1½ miles and less than a five-minute drive from where Wood was killed.

During 33 hours of testimony over seven days, Harrelson said he was in San Antonio looking for a gambling game before Wood's death and had left his wife's car at the airport. He said he flew into San Antonio with a woman and checked into a motel briefly, before he and the woman drove the car back to Dallas.

Harrelson contended he left San Antonio early on May 28, 1979, but motel auditor Jimmy Samsel Sr. said the registration form was initialed by a night clerk who did not come to work until 3 p.m. that day.

Harrelson has admitted registering under aliases at several motels in San Antonio, Austin and Midland before the killing, but contends he was being "set up" as a suspect by federal agents and by his lifelong friend, Huntsville gambler George Edward "Pete" Kay.

Is academic training adequate for nurses?

believes are no longer emphasized in nursing schools.

"How can nurses be expected to have self-confidence and establish good relations (with patients and physicians) when they don't know the importance of taking vital signs, weighing the patient, feeling skin or following physicians orders?" Mendez questioned.

KELM CONTENDS there is an adjustment or training period in any profession, including nursing.

"Other professions have not expected a new employee to be completely functional right away," Kelm said.

"Diploma nurses were trained on the job and then placed in positions of running floors two years after graduation," he explained. "Nursing education changed because there was a need for a strong theoretical base with a much stronger emphasis on sciences."

While experienced nurses are the most difficult to recruit because of the location, the new graduates are easier to attract, Kelm said.

"New graduates are mobile," Kelm added. "You need a lot of these kind of nurses here (Midland)."

And for this reason, MMH's preceptor program provides an experienced nurse with an interest in helping new graduates and other nurses.

Nurses may choose from three nursing specialties. Also, the newly-employed nurses will fulfill the required 13-week orientation program which includes work experience for two weeks on the 7 a.m. to 3 p.m., 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. and/or the 11 p.m to 7 a.m. shifts.

"WITH THE PRECEPTOR program we're translating theory into practice for the new graduate or the nurse who is coming back," Kelm said. "It's a reality shock for these nurses. They become overwhelmed after being in the university setting.

"This new system will ease them in and they won't be dumped anymore," Kelm added. "When they feel confident, we'll let them go (on the floor)."

In addition, nurses are being trained to physically assess the patient.

"For example, nurses weren't taught to know what gas sounded like," Kelm said. "If the nurse discovers a difficulty after assessing the patient, she can call the doctor.

"Our nurses will know when the patient is getting into trouble," he added.

Mendez said the program is a good idea, but it's the educational training that concerns him. He agrees with Ms. Ream that "nurse educators have been teaching their students that they are being prepared for management roles. The art of skilled nursing is thus dying out. Bedside care has been relinquished to aides and orderlies."

DEATHS

BROWNFIELD — Services for Mrs. Sam (Vern) Bullard, 70, of Brownfield, sister of Lita Hanson of Midland, were to be at 2 p.m. today at the Church of Christ with Vigil Yoakum, an elder of Sunset Church of Christ in Lubbock, officiating. Burial was to be in Terry County Memorial Park under the direction of Brownfield Funeral Home.

She died Monday in a Lubbock hospital.

Mrs. Bullard was a native of Denton. She moved to Brownfield in 1933 and married Sam Bullard Dec. 8, 1934. They moved to Lubbock in 1974. She was a member of Shallowater Church of Christ.

Other survivors include her husband, three sons, another sister, 17 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren.

improvements could be complete as early as April 1983.

John Evans, who operates Independent Wrecker Service Inc., and participates in the wrecker rotation, said the requirements of a 24-hour service may be impossible for some local wrecker companies to meet.

Evans estimated that the contract company may need four wreckers and drivers to meet Midland's needs.

Presently operating three wreckers, Evans said he'd likely need to hire additional drivers and add three wreckers at perhaps $20,000 apiece in order to service city and non-city towing.

He said that a company making such an investment could face difficulties should it ever lose its city contract.

WITH GREATER inflation and fuel costs a constant threat, Evans said, a wrecker service also may be reluctant to tie itself to a long-term contract at a fixed price.

Another participant in the wrecker rotation, Allen Frasier, owner of ARC Truck and Auto Body, said the contract system could create a "monopoly" and drive many operations out of business.

Frasier said if only a few wrecker services survive, Midlanders could be paying greater wrecker fees for non-city towing operations.

But Brown stressed that the details of Midland's system have yet to be decided, and noted that local wrecker companies will likely be given a chance to comment on the plan.

Wayne Gay, with the Richardson police department, said that city is never lacking for wrecker companies interested in its one-year contract. Gay said Richardson demands two wreckers on duty at all times and requires a 15-minute response time.

Dick Trible, of Trible Wrecking, Richardson's contract wrecker for the past three years, said a 24-hour service contract could put a burden on a small towing company.

TRIBLE SAID his company maintains 15 wreckers to provide service to Richardson and Dallas. Without Richardson's contract, the company would likely have to drop a few trucks, Trible said.

For a wrecker company pondering a large investment to meet a city's needs, Trible said a long-term contract is ideal.

"If you can get a three-year contract, then you can rest assured that you'd get your money back," he said.

Chester Nolen, Odessa's deputy city manager, said there are nearly as many ways to operate a wrecker service as there are cities in Texas.

Nolen said Odessa contracted with a single wrecker company for several years, "until it got into a situation where the contractors were bidding so low that they were cutting their own throat on their profit margin."

He said Odessa has opted for a rotation system, in which two companies split month-long stints as on-duty wrecker and charge fees based on city-approved price ceilings. To properly service Odessa around-the-clock, about four wreckers are needed, Nolen said.

Salvation Army gets Elks help

The Midland Elks Lodge will be getting into the Christmas spirit by ringing the bell for the Salvation Army Friday.

In a one-day fund-raising effort last year, the Elks collected more than $1,100 for the Salvation Army.

The Elks Lodge, organized here in 1950, has long been a civic leader in its good works. It helps sponsor a Clinic for Handicapped Children in Oteen, Texas, participates in National Elks Benevolences and last year sponsored a state winner in its Most Valuable Student contest.

The winner of the Most Valuable Student contest receives a four-year scholarship at $1,250 per year. Applications for this year's award are now being accepted.

'Mountain man' admits murdering drinking buddies

HILLSBORO, Texas (AP) — After three months in county jail, a self-styled "mountain man" told authorities he killed two drinking buddies two years ago and buried them in a well.

Now he wants singer Kenny Rogers to portray his life as a hermit in the Hill Country of Central Texas.

Henry Burton Merrill, 52, pleaded guilty Friday to the two murders after he consulted a preacher. His daughter said her father proclaimed, "The Lord is my ace in the hole."

"It was just kind of a surprise to all of us," said Hill County District Attorney's office spokeswoman Katie Roberts. "We had no idea he was going to plead. He visited with a pastor Friday and just decided to plead."

Merrill hopes his autobiography will be made into a movie starring country-western star Rogers in the role of the man who isolates himself from the outside world except for a few drinking buddies — two of whom he killed.

The bodies of Tommy Dale Rogers, 42, of Cleburne and Bobby Carroll Walker, 34, of Rio Vista were dug up from an abandoned, earth-filled well near Blum in August. Autopsies determined the bodies had been in the well for two years.

Ms. Roberts said Merrill sent a letter to State District Judge Steve Latham saying he had decided to accept a previously offered plea bargain.

"He would not say why he killed them. They were his drinking buddies and they had a dispute," Ms. Roberts said.

"His daughter told me that he's saying 'The Lord is my ace in the hole' and he wants Kenny Rogers to portray his life," she said.

Latham sentenced Merrill to two concurrent 20-year jail terms and he was transferred Monday to the Texas Department of Corrections, said Ms. Roberts.

His accomplice, 37-year-old Jerry Van Pendley, also pleaded guilty to one count of attempted murder in a plea bargain agreement with Hill County prosecutors, she said.

MONAHANS (AP) — An Odessa minister active in efforts to desegregate Ector County public schools has been charged with stealing $3,000 worth of boots from a store here, police said.

Laurence Hurd, 45, surrendered to Monahans police Saturday after a warrant was issued for his arrest in connection with the Nov. 23 burglary of a Monahans boot store, said Monahans Police Sgt. Jim Vaughan.

Hurd was released Tuesday after posting $5,000 bond on a burglary charge, Vaughan said.

Ward County Justice of the Peace L.A. Wester, who issued the arrest warrant and set the bond, said Hurd was implicated in the burglary by another man who police believe was involved in the crime.

Hurd was the leader of a southside Odessa group that intervened for minority students in the desegregation suit filed against the Ector County Independent School District.

Hurd also was a minister at the Southside Church of Christ, according to Relford Smith, the church's assistant minister, but was "asked to leave" the church about five months ago. Smith declined comment on the circumstances of Hurd's departure.

Baylor wins again

By The Associated Press

The undefeated Baylor Bears, off to their best start since the 1964-65 basketball campaign, are the surprise of the Southwest Conference so far this year, while Texas, which was enjoying kudos and a national ranking last season, is mired in the losing mud.

Baylor posted its fifth consecutive win in as many starts Tuesday night with a 58-55 victory over stubborn Oral Roberts at Waco. Guard James Stern pumped in 22 points to lead the Bears.

Meanwhile, Texas lost its third game in four starts under new Coach Bob Weltlich — this time at the hands of Xavier, who beat the Longhorns 66-64 at Austin.

Bill Wendlandt of Texas hit two free throws with one second remaining in regulation play to tie the score 62-62 and set up a five-minute overtime.

But Anthony Hicks hit a crucial layup to give Xavier, now 3-0, a 66-62 lead — one the Longhorns could not overcome.

In other games involving SWC teams Tuesday night, Rice raced past Texas Southern, 86-66, while Texas Christian beat North Texas State, 64-58.

The Owls, 3-2, were paced by Kenny Austin, who hit 23 points and pulled down 12 rebounds before a home crowd in Houston. Edward Hilliard and Harry Kelly, led Texas Southern, 3-1, with 12 points each.

Doug Arnold tossed in four clutch free throws in the final minute to nail down the Horned Frogs' win at Fort Worth. NTSU's Kevin Lyons led all scorers with 21 points, while Arnold had 18 for TCU.

Baseball trades at standstill

Winter trading is reduced to rash of rumors

HONOLULU (AP) — Trading was at a virtual standstill as major league baseball owners met in joint and separate league sessions to talk about revenue sharing and restructuring of the commissioner's office.

The only trade made so far at the week-long 81st annual winter meetings was a five-player deal Monday in which the Oakland A's sent power hitting outfielder Tony Armas to Boston for third baseman Carney Lansford.

The only action on the trade front was a rash of rumors, which brought denials, no comments and "we're talking" responses from club officials.

The owners were expected today to take up a half-dozen issues, with revenue sharing and restructuring the major items on the agenda.

Also, Bud Selig, owner of the Milwaukee Brewers, was to make a preliminary report on his committee's efforts to recommend a successor to fired commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

On the player front, George Steinbrenner, New York Yankees' owner, appears to be in the center of everything.

HE ARRIVED in Honolulu at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, and said he would have a briefing today "with my writers."

Steinbrenner said he met with former Los Angeles Dodger first baseman Steve Garvey's agent, Jerry Kapstein, in Los Angeles for 30 minutes enroute to Hawaii.

"It was a good meeting. That's all I can say."

Steinbrenner said he hadn't spoken to Tom Reich, agent for pitcher Floyd Bannister, formerly of Seattle.

The Yankees reportedly are after Kansas City's All-Star third baseman, George Brett. But Royals General Manager John Schuerholz says he is not willing to trade Brett.

Kansas City might reconsider, however, if the Yankees would give up pitcher Ron Guidry, but Guidry isn't on Steinbrenner's disposal list. Nor is lefthander Dave Righetti, whom the Royals also covet.

STEINBRENNER supposedly will try to tvade outfielders Jerry Mumphrey, Dave Collins, and Ken Griffey, catcher Butch Wynegar and a host of others in a wholesale housecleaning.

The Cardinals and New York Mets also were said to have talked to the Rangers about a deal for Bell, and trade with one of the three teams appeared in the making.

The California Angels are looking for a replacement for Don Baylor, the free agent recently signed by the Yankees. New Manager John McNamara would like to make Reggie Jackson a designated hitter.

The Angels would like to sign free agent outfielder Omar Moreno of Pittsburgh, but Pirates' Manager Chuck Tanner says he thinks his club will resign the speedy Moreno.

If Pittsburgh doesn't retain Moreno, Tanner says he'll use Lee Lacy in center field.

Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda said the Dodgers were trying to trade third baseman Ron Cey. Cey has given the Dodgers a list of clubs he would approve.

San Francisco second baseman Joe Morgan is at an impasse over his contract, and appears almost a certainty to go. Also on the trading block were Giants' reliever Al Holland and catcher Milt May. Philadelphia was said to have an interest in Clark, Holland and perhaps Morgan.

Manager Whitey Herzog of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals insists he doesn't want to stand pat. He's ready to trade outfielder George Hendrick, who drove in 104 runs last season.

"Clubs are more interested in David Green," said Herzog of the young outfielder the Cardinals expect to become a superstar.

"I haven't any untouchables," said Herzog. "not even (ace reliever) Bruce Sutter if the deal is right."

A source said Herzog was after Bell from Texas, and is willing to offer Hendrick, third baseman Ken Oberkfell and a pitcher.

Herzog is somewhat disgusted with his colleagues.

"Most people in baseball don't have the sense to sit down and talk," he said. "What does it hurt to talk."

Herzog noted that he had traded Rollie Fingers and Pete Vuckovich, Cy Young Award winners the last two seasons, and still won a World Series.

"We haven't cheated anybody. Both teams were helped in our deals," he said, reminding that his trades helped Milwaukee win the American League pennant last season.

Detroit's Sparky Anderson said he hopes to come away from the meetings with a reliever.

The Phillies have nearly abandoned hopes of obtaining Cleveland outfielder Von Hayes. The Indians don't want to get involved in second baseman Manny Trillo's contract problems. But they want a second baseman.

Cleveland told the Phillies to get them second baseman Julio Cruz from Seattle. The Indians also want a seven-for-two or five-for-one deal. The Phillies have offered four, including prize rookie infielder Julio Franco.

The Indians' second player would be shortstop Larry Milbourne. The Phillies also have been offered outfielder Warren Cromartie by Montreal, but aren't interested.

The club meetings in addition to the restructuring and thorny issue of revenue sharing to help clubs with small television and radio income, are expected to deal with new network television contracts, and the use of the designated hitter permanently in the World Series, and the All-Star game.

Rebels fall to Dunbar

Lee suffers seventh straight loss, but show improvement

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland Lee has yet to win a basketball game in this the 1982-83 season, but the Rebels seem to be improving and they are making teams work a lot harder to get their victories. Tuesday night at Al G. Langford Chaparral Center, they suffered their seventh defeat of the year, losing to District 1-AAAA's Lubbock Dunbar, 64-57.

Dunbar, despite a five to six inch height advantage per man on the front line, was not able to dominate the Rebels under the basket. Lee's Sylvester Johnson and Derek Westbrook, with 11 and 10 rebounds apiece, used their quickness and positioning to get to the ball, both offensively and defensively. However, on those occasions when the Panthers were able to win the defensive backboard battle without much problem, their big men were able to hit a breaking guard down court for an easy layup.

FOUR TIMES in the final quarter after Lee had pulled to within two points, 51-49, the Panthers used their height to strike quickly. With 5:40 remaining in the game, center Michael Thompson hauled down an offensive rebound and put it up for a 53-49 lead and 25 seconds later the big-man tandem of Thompson and Kirk Coats set up the first of three fourth quarter fast break layups for guard Javier Zaragosa for a 55-49 lead.

Westbrook, who hit the long range shots throughout the night for 18 points in the game, pulled the Rebels back to within four at 55-51 with a 15-footer from the right side and Keith McDonald hauled down an offensive rebound and put it back up with 4:25 left to come within two again, 55-53.

Dunbar rebuilt a five-point lead in the next 30 seconds and connected on a pair of free throws and a fast break layup in the final 1:30 to put the game out of reach despite two more Westbrook bombs.

"HEY, WE'RE not going to be taller than anybody all year," said Lee head coach Paul Stueckler. "They (Dunbar) know they've got the rebound if they leave their two big men under the boards so they're sending them (guards down court on the fast break). Still, if we would have gotten a couple of those to go down at the last (shots the Rebels took in the final minutes) we could have beaten them."

Even though the Rebels played it tough under the boards and their full-court pressure defense was causing problems for Dunbar, Lee's shooting percentage wasn't what it needed to be to win the game, especially since there were few fouls called on Dunbar and few chances for the free throw. Both teams hit 28 shots from the field but the Panthers won from the line, 8-1, in a game with only 19 total fouls, 13 of which went against Lee.

"What did we shoot in the second half, 30 percent?" asked Stueckler and then added the 38 percent figure from the first half. "We've got to get 45-50 percent shooting to win these games. Thirty percent won't do it.

"I don't have any stats on the rebounding and I don't really know how we did, but our kids were out there fighting with them."

Westbrook's 18 points topped the Rebel attack while Alvin Henry added 10 more. Zaragosa, who seemed to be breaking to the bucket all night, and Thompson led the Panthers with 20 points each.

Four Panthers broke into double figures in the game led by Reggie Andrews with 13, Greg Zamora with 11 and Arthur Linssey and Steve Allen with 10 each. For Lee, Eddie Rabb scored 14 points, Earl Davis added 13 and Raymond Mornay 12.

On Friday night, Lee's varsity will take San Angelo Lake View at 8 p.m. in the Lee High gym while the junior varsity and sophomores compete in the Midland J.V. and Sophomore Tournament at Midland High starting on Thursday.

Oilers, Cowboys toss out the syrup

DALLAS (AP) — There's some subtle psychological warfare involved in Monday night's "Texas Championship" meeting betwen the Dallas Cowboys and Houston Oilers.

Houston Coach Ed Biles is saying the Cowboys are the head of the class in the National Football League.

However, all the syrup in the world can't cover the fact these two teams don't particularly like each other.

Most of the Cowboys still recall Bum Phillips' remarks after Houston beat Dallas 30-24 on Thanksgiving, 1979.

"Dallas may be America's Team, but we're Texas' Team," said Phillips, now coach of the New Orleans Saints.

Biles, the defensive coordinator for that Oiler team, suggested in a telephone hookup at Landry's weekly press conference Tuesday that the Cowboys were the best in the NFL.

"We'll have to play the best possible game we can play," Biles said. "We'll have to play better than we have played all year. Dallas is head and shoulders above them all."

Landry, asked about Biles' remarks, said, "I'm sure he would like for us to think that. We are not head and shoulders above anybody."

He returned the compliment, saying, "Houston is a tough, aggressive team. It will be as tough a game as we have had this year."

The Cowboys, who can all but wrap up a playoff berth with a victory, were rated seven-point favorites over the Oilers. But Landry said he wasn't satisfied with Dallas' performance.

"Our team is not where it should be," he said. "We are too inconsistent."

Dallas is 4-1, with games remaining against Houston, New Orleans, Philadelphia and Minnesota. The Oilers are 1-4.

"We don't have to win them all, but we've got to improve each week so we will get the right mental attitude when the playoffs come," Landry said.

The Cowboys hold a 2-1 all-time series record against Houston, and Dallas has a 12-4 lead in preseason games over the Oilers.

Asked if he enjoyed his visits to the Astrodome, Landry said, "I don't like to play indoors. That's why we have a hole in the top of our stadium."

Landry said the Cowboys still feared Oiler running back Earl Campbell, who is not having one of his best seasons.

"Earl is one of the top runners in our business and he is capable of tearing you up if you aren't ready to tackle him," Landry said.

The great scorer finds all is well with J. C. Williamson

For when it's time for that one great scorer to come and write against your name, he will write not if you won or lost, but how you played the game.

— Grantland Rice

To my knowledge J.C. Williamson never scored a touchdown, hit a homerun or played par on any golf course. It was the latter failure, however, that kept him with most of us in the ranks of the mortal sportsmen. He always wanted to shoot par — and he never did. He died last month at the age of 62.

Jake (as his friends called him) wasn't a great athlete, a basic fact of little consequence to this man. But in this boy's eyes, J.C. Williamson never lost at anything he did in his life. He played every game as a winner. He won at the game of life. He is my earthly inspiration.

Jake loved his God first and foremost. He loved his family like no other man I have ever known. And he loved this country, a trait we seem to be losing.

Sports was never very big in his life. He tried to show interest, but it was mostly for my benefit. He liked to play golf, but he never put it above anything importa.. and never really missed a trip to the course. The friends he played with were the attraction. He loved people.

He never missed a football game that I played in, but that was his love for me and not football. And he always made sure that I kept things in perspective when it came to sports. Once I was having trouble with high school chemistry and he told me I would have to give up football if I didn't pass. I passed.

Once I tried out for a Little League team and didn't even come close to making the squad. After all, I was a terrible baseball player, but it's hard to convince a youngster that he's not good enough to play. J.C. worked with me every day after work that next year, and although I still wasn't very good, I made the team the next year.

Jake had us in church every Sunday, keeping all things in their proper place. "If you can't go to church, you can't go anywhere," is the phrase I heard all my life.

He treated the work ethic like he created it. "This country was built with hard work and we will keep it with hard work," he used to say. But he had earned the right to say it. J.C. served in World War II, winning two silver stars, three purple hearts and a battlefield commission. He would have done it again. It was by his example that I still feel the old-fashioned love for this country despite my own feelings of frustration from what seemed like a senseless trip to Vietnam.

When I was in junior high, J.C. decided I needed to learn a few things about work. He had me on my Grandad's farm in 100-degree weather, facing a weed infested cotton row that seemed to stretch clear around the known world. After several days, I looked up and said, "Dad, I don't know what I want to be when I grow up, but I know it's not going to be a farmer."

That was his favorite story on me and he swore that the experience kept me in college. He may have been right too. To this day I can't see a cotton field without feeling a certain amount of fear.

Still, he knew what was important in my life. He was the one who turned his head when I would be under the covers at night with a transistor radio while trying to keep up with Stan Musial and the St. Louis Cardinals. He was the one who saw to it that I got to see the Los Angeles Dodgers play when everyone else wanted to go to Disneyland. The rest of the family went to Disneyland while we saw Wally Moon hit a homer over the leftfield screen in the Coliseum — a thrill I will never forget.

Now I realize that Dad didn't even know who Wally Moon was, but I was as thrilled for him as I was for myself. "Dad, aren't you glad we didn't go to Disneyland?" I said. "We just saw Wally Moon hit a homerun!"

I loved him because he shared his life with me. He cared. Now he is gone and I miss him. Things will never be the same without him, but I can accept that now because I have the memories — cherished memories — to hold to.

His life counted for his God, his family and his country. The standing room crowd at his funeral was testimony to that. He touched just about everyone he came in contact with.

My Daddy was my best friend. I learned to walk and talk in his footsteps. I've never had a greater mortal hero. The great scorer has now written against his name and there can be no doubt that J.C. Williamson played the game well.

MHS Bulldogs fall to Hobbs Eagles

HOBBS, N.M. — Any trip to Tasker Arena can get the eyeballs out of socket and the Midland High Bulldogs were no different here Tuesday night as the Eagles rolled over the Purple Pack by a 91-59 margin.

"You talk about intimidation. Our kids felt it Tuesday night," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "We threw the ball away 33 times in the first half and had 54 turnovers for the game. That may be a world's record. We were in the high school basketball capitol of the world and we played awful."

The Bulldogs will get another shot at Hobbs Tuesday at Chaparral Center and the Pack should feel a little more comfortable at home. But playing Hobbs anywhere can be a scary experience.

Shelby Reeves and Melvin Thompson led the Eagles with 15 points each, but Eddy Newell added 13 and Dennis Taylor another 11 in a four-pronged Eagle blitz.

Doug Hixon led the Bulldogs with 12 points and David McFarland added 11 in the losing cause, but MHS was never really in this game.

Hobbs had a meager 17-11 lead after the first period, but went into the halftime with 39-22 advantage. MHS was outscored by a 22-11 margin in the third period and a 30-26 margin in the high scoring finish.

The Bulldogs fell to 5-5 on the year with the loss and face the prospects of seeing Hobbs again Tuesday before entering the rugged Optimist Classic in San Antonio with a first round game against highly touted San Antonio MacArthur.

However, there was some bright spots for the MHS troops Tuesday in Hobbs. Both the junior varsity and sophomore teams captured victories. The MHS JVs took a hard fought 90-89 win over Hobbs as Cary Wallace canned 29 points and Albert Reed 19. The sophs won a 76-72 victory over Hobbs as Norris Cowles led the way with 25 points.

Five year peace may come for NFL

NEW YORK (AP) — Peace for the next five years — off the field, at least — is one step away and 1,500 National Football League players were expected to take that step today when they vote on a $1.6 billion collective bargaining agreement.

"We now have a contract that is likely to be ratified," union chief Ed Garvey said after three weeks of clarifications and revisions of the Nov. 16 agreement were concluded. The 28 player representatives then voted 19-9 Monday to recommend that the union membership approve the package.

Jeff Van Note, Atlanta's player rep and a member of the union's executive committee which helped negotiate the contract, said late Tuesday: "I feel the Falcons will pass it, and league-wide it will pass, too."

Mark Murphy, Washington's player rep and, like Van Note, a union executive, also said he expects ratification. But he said he was one of the nine to vote against it. "For the time we were out," he said, "I just didn't think we gained enough. I just couldn't recommend it."

The players struck for 57 days, shutting down eight of the season's 16 regular-season weekends. Assuming the agreement is ratified, one of the weekends will be made up Jan. 2-3, leaving the league with a nine-game season, the shortest in its 63-year history.

Garvey said each team's vote is to be counted by its player rep and reported to the union's Washington, D.C., headquarters by 6 p.m., local time, today. That means West Coast teams have until 9 p.m. EST to call in their results.

NCAA has get-tough ideas ready

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - A couple of get-tough ideas expected to win approval at the NCAA convention next month could cost coaches their jobs and players their eligibility for not cooperating with investigators.

Opinion varies on how much impact the two changes might have, but most people agree that if enforced to their fullest, they could put unprecedented weaponry in the hands of investigators.

One proposal appears to make full cooperation with NCAA investigators an obligation of employment for coaches and a condition of eligibility for players. The other would make it mandatory that every coach's contract include the stipulation that the coach can be suspended without pay or fired if he's involved in "deliberate and serious violations of NCAA regulations."

BOTH ARE expected to become NCAA law during the association's convention Jan. 10-12 in San Diego.

"I'll have to see them in action a while before I can say they'll make it a whole new world," said Steve Morgan, director of legislative services for the NCAA enforcement department. "But it is possible they could have a very great impact. And they're in keeping with the tone of recent conventions -that the membership wants more effective enforcement."

The first of the proposals comes under the heading of ethical conduct and says unethical conduct will include refusing to give information requested by the NCAA or the school, or giving false or misleading information. Players in violation of the ethical conduct rule could lose their eligibility and coaches, or presumably an other employee of the school, could be suspended, dismissed, or face other disciplinary action.

The NCAA constitution already contains a vague passage that indicates a player or coach could be disciplined if he deals with an investigator dishonestly. But it has never been applied.

"This is an attempt to get the members to adopt a more specific statement," said Morgan. "If it's set out more clearly, perhaps the committee will be more willing to use the weapon. In theory, if the committee will put the teeth in it by enforcing it and applying it a few times so people realize it's something they intend to make use of, then it could have a very far-reaching effect."

THE SECOND proposal would insert a clause in every coach's contract that he can be fired or suspended without pay if found to be in "deliberate and serious violation of NCAA rules." The judgment would be made by the school's chief executive officer, not the NCAA.

"Here's the way that one will work," said one college administrator who asked to remain nameless. "Every time a school goes on probation the chancellor, even if he doesn't want to fire his coach, is going to have to explain why he's not firing him...why he believes the two-year probation, or whatever they got, is not a deliberate and serious violation. On the surface, it looks like it will put greater pressure on the coaches. But its real bite will come from the added pressure it puts on the chief executive officer to fire the cheating coach."

THE ETHICAL conduct proposal is sponsored by the Infractions Committee, which would decide if a player of coach is guilty of unethical conduct and set the penalty. The coaches group within the College Football Association came up with the other proposal.

"I don't know how much of a deterrent it will be, but I think it's a step in a positive direction," said Charles M. Neinas, CFA executive director. "The important point is that here is a group of major college football coaches who are trying to make certain their profession meets certain standards. They would like to purge from their profession those who won't abide by the rules."

Dailey was just asleep

CHICAGO (AP) — Quintin Dailey, the rookie guard for the Chicago Bulls, fell asleep in his apartment and missed a game against the New Yorks Knicks Tuesday night, a spokesman for the team said.

Although team sources told the Associated Press that police had issued an all-points bulletin for Dailey, authorities in Chicago and suburban Northbrook, where Dailey lives, both said they were not searching for Dailey.

However, a woman who answered the telephone at the Northbrook Police Department said officials there were contacted by the team but added that "there is no case on it." The woman would only identify herself as Ford and hung up when a reporter asked for her first name.

"We were contacted by the Bulls and it was investigated for four or five minutes, but there is no case on it," she said.

Chicago police said they were not contacted by the team and were not searching for Dailey.

Team spokesman Tim Hallam said he was not aware who reported that an all-points bulletin had been issued for Dailey, but added that he was "under the impression" that police had been contacted after Dailey failed to show up for the game.

"That was the information I was told," Hallam said. "The word just filtered down that they had contacted the authorities."

Hallam said Dailey had not been feeling well and had fallen asleep at his home. When he failed to arrive at the Chicago Stadium prior to the game, team officials called his home but there was no answer, Hallam said.

Hallam said Dailey apparently slept through the telephone calls, which he said registered on an answering machine that tape records telephone messages.

Prior to game-time, the Bulls announced that Dailey had been "unavoidably detained."

The Bulls won the game 91-85.

Substitutes give SuperSonics a big lift

By The Associated Press

Even without injured regular David Thompson, the Seattle SuperSonics could be a contender for the National Basketball Association title because of a strong bench.

Seattle substitutes scored 45 points Tuesday night, led by Greg Kelser's 13, as the SuperSonics improved their road record to 9-1 and their overall mark to 16-3 with a 107-88 victory over the Houston Rockets.

Phil Smith, normally a backup but a starter for the last five games in place of the injured Thompson, added 14 points for the Sonics.

"The big difference is the bench and depth," said starting center Jack Sikma, who had 19 points and 12 rebounds against the Rockets. "Guys keep stepping in and doing the job. It gives us more confidence in being able to handle different situations."

Sikma said the Sonics have been smart not to dwell on Thompson's absence.

"Over the last few games, we haven't thought about David not being in there after the game starts," he said. "Don't get me wrong. We miss him and we need him back, because he's a great player."

The Sonics' overall record matches Philadelphia's as the best in the NBA, but they have been especially tough on the road.

"At home, emotion plays a big part, but on the road, you have to play intelligent and get more out of your bench," Sikma said.

"They're tied for the best record in the league and there's a good reason for it," Houston Coach Del Harris said. "They are a tremendous team in terms of depth, and have all the ingredients for a good basketball team."

Seattle cruised to a 29-18 lead in the first quarter while limiting the Rockets to 33.3 percent shooting. Houston played the Sonics even in the second period and trailed only 49-41 at halftime, but a 33-21 third quarter by Seattle, led by Sikma's 11 points, gave the Sonics an 82-62 bulge that Houston couldn't overcome.

Caldwell Jones led the Rockets, now 3-15, with 17 points and 15 rebounds. Elvin Hayes had 14 points and 12 rebounds.

Spurs 106, Mavericks 92

George Gervin scored 26 points to lead San Antonio to its wire-to-wire triumph over Dallas.

The Spurs took a 10-2 lead in the first quarter and were never headed as Artis Gilmore added 19 points and Mike Mitchell 18. Mark Aguirre led the Mavericks with 27.

Bulls 91, Knicks 85

Reggie Theus scored eight of Chicago's 13 points in a row in the final minutes as New York went the final 4:23 without scoring.

The Bulls, who broke a seven-game losing streak, were playing without top rookie guard Quintin Dailey, who did not show up for the game and slept through calls to his home.

Theus led all scorers with 26 points, while Bernard King had 22 for New York, which scored only 29 points in the second half.

Blazers 137, Jazz 121

Jim Paxson scored 17 of his career-high 35 points in Portland's 40-point third quarter that swamped Utah.

The Jazz, who hit all 39 of their free throw attempts in the game but were outrebounded 51-34, led 67-64 at halftime. But Paxson hit five straight baskets midway through the third period to spark the Trail Blazers to a 40-22 advantage in the quarter.

Warriors 121, Clippers 114

World Free scored 30 points and Purvis Short 24, including 10 in the final three minutes, to pace Golden State over San Diego.

The Warriors were clinging to a 109-107 lead when Short started his outburst, hitting six free throws and two jump shots to clinch the victory.

Tom Chambers had 19 points to lead the Clippers, nine of them in a two-minute span in the third period to give San Diego a short-lived 71-67 lead.

Hawks 102, Cavaliers 90

Dominique Wilkins scored 25 points and Dan Roundfield 23 as Atlanta handed Cleveland its 16th loss in 19 games.

The Hawks led 76-67 going into the fourth quarter and put the game away with 10-0 and 9-0 streaks in the final 12 minutes. Scott Wedman, who scored 11 points during a 19-6 rally by the Cavaliers in the final period, led Cleveland with 24.

Holmes may meet Weaver-Dokes winner

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — There is talk about a fight between the winner of the Mike Weaver-Michael Dokes fight Friday night meeting Larry Holmes for the undisputed world heavyweight championship.

One of those not talking about, at least seriously at this time, is Holmes, unbeaten World Boxing Council heavyweight champion.

The 33-year-old Holmes, who has a 41-0 record, says he cannot see any reason for a second fight against Weaver, the 30-year-old World Boxing Association champion. On June 22, 1979, Holmes stopped Weaver in the 12th round of a tough WBC title defense at Madison Square Garden.

As for the 24-year-old Dokes, Holmes said he would not fight him because both men are promoted by Don King, and he thinks the motives and outcome of such a bout could be open to question.

Holmes will be at ringside to watch his old opponent and a former sparring partner — Dokes worked with Holmes in 1976-77 — but Tuesday he talked about by telephone from his home at Easton, Pa.

"Michael Dokes is a very good boxer," said Holmes. "He's a pretty good banger, especially with the left hook, and he throws pretty good combinations.

"One problem that could be a factor is that tires. If he can conquer that problem he'll be champion."

Weaver, who will be making his third defense in only his third fight in 32 months, "starts slow and he's straight up," said Holmes. "After the early rounds he comes on. Weaver is stronger and he's got a lot of determination, a lot of desire.

"Dokes has to hit more early, then run late," continued Holmes. "He's got to wear him down early.

"Weaver leaps in with a left hook and gets hit with a right hand. He's got to avoid punches to the head early."

Then Holmes remembered a tactic he accused Weaver of using against him. "Weaver's got a good thumb going."

On occasion, Holmes, too, has been accused of thumbing.

Holmes said he really doesn't care who wins, but he thinks Dokes might be a more active champion that Weaver has been.

Holmes has been an extremely active champion, defending his title 13 times — seven times in the last 32 months, the last time Nov. 27 when he easily outpointed Randy "Tex" Cobb at Houston.

Bryant continues to take blame

By HOYT HARWELL
Associated Press Writer

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — It is a tribute to the standards set by Bear Bryant and his Alabama football team that fans are wondering what's wrong despite the Crimson Tide's 7-4 record and an upcoming bowl trip.

Much of the questioning stems from remarks by Bryant, who said before starting his 25th season at Alabama that he had more and better talent than ever, even though the Tide had won five national titles under his direction.

His assessment appeared right when Alabama rolled past Georgia Tech, Mississippi, Vanderbilt, Arkansas State and Penn State, which now is ranked second in the nation.

THEN TENNESSEE defeated Alabama for the first time since 1970. Alabama turned back Cincinnati and Mississippi State and then caved in, losing consecutive games to Louisiana State, Southern Mississippi and Auburn, three othev teams that had gone years without defeating the Tide.

LSU manhandled Alabama and Bryant added fuel to the talk when he commented after the game that he was going to alert the school president "that we need to make some changes, need to start at the top."

The next day Bryant said his team is "entitled to better leadership than I've been giving."

But the president, Joab Thomas, said he had "no questions about the abilities of the winningest coach in intercollegiate football history...It is largely to Coach Bryant's credit that our athletic program has such a rich tradition and national prestige."

That tradition, with Alabama meeting Illinois in the Liberty Bowl this year, includes 36 bowl appeavances and 24 in a row, both records, national titles in 1961, 1964, 1965, 1978 and 1979 and, since Alabama went to the wishbone offense in 1971, an average of more than 10 victories a season.

Thomas said he "hopes Coach Bryant will stay on for another decade."

Four days after saying some changes were needed, Bryant backtracked. "I want to coach until I'm 80 or 90 if I can get good results," the 69-year-old coach said. "If I get to where I can't get them to play, that's another matter."

Asked why some fans were not satisfied with anything less than a perfect season and a national title, he said, "I'm not satisfied. I don't want them to be that way ... I don't ever want to be satisfied with anything but winning all the games."

BRYANT CONTINUES to blame himself for the 7-4 season.

"I think what I said all along," he said after the Auburn loss. "I did a poor job. We had the same players. We had a lot of injuries, more injuries than we probably ever had."

But Bryant, who rarely loses to a team two years in a row, did not sound as if he is ready to put an end to his 38 years as a head coach. "The last time we lost to Auburn, we beat them the next nine years," said.

Bryant has said that as athletic director he will know when Bryant the coach has to go.

The last time Alabama fans grumbled was when the Tide had relatively poor seasons in 1969 and 1970. Bryant installed the wishbone, upset Southern Cal to open the 1971 season and Alabama went on to turn in the best decade in college football history.

The 1983 season might bring some changes, perhaps other formations and more passing, but one change is unlikely: the coaching job.

Bill Simon ready to take on Russians

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

If the Russians want to play hardball in the Olympic Games, Bill Simon is ready to oblige.

"We intend to field our teams according to our system and let them do the same with their system," said the 55-year-old president of the U. S. Olympic Committee. "No one should underestimate the power of the United States in the movement."

The Russians and their Eastern bloc satellites, with possible support from the emerging nations of Africa, are reported ready to fight Simon's plan of a more realistic amateurism at the International Olympic Committee conclave in Lausanne, Switzerland, next week.

A PROPAGANDA campaign has been going on for months, the Communist bloc calling the plan "commercialism" and "flagrant professionalism."

Simon's proposal, in its simplest sense, liberalizes the amateur code to permit professional athletes to compete so long as they haven't accepted money in their own particular sport.

Thus, Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker, should he sign a pro football contract after his 1983 season, would be eligible to run the sprints for Uncle Sam at Los Angeles. Ralph Sampson, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Dr. J. could not play on the basketball team.

The Simon plan also would permit athletes to pick up money through endorsements — even products connected with their own sport.

Such a revolutionary concept would have the late Avery Brundage, for 20 years the iron czar of IOC, spinning in his grave. It has the Russians fuming.

"We must rid the Games of hypocrisy," insists Simon. "Everybody knows what's going on. Athletes have to eat and live. I don't want to see Bjorn Borg and John McEnroe playing tennis in the Olympics. They get paid to do it. I don't want to see track men competing for prize money.

"But we must have some honesty in what we are doing."

The immortal Jim Thorpe had his 1912 medals taken away because he had once been paid $15 a week for playing semi-pro baseball. Only this year — 70 years later — was this injustice rectified and the medals restored posthumously to the man acclaimed to be America's greatest athlete of all-time.

This is the type of false sanctity that Simon has declared war on, and he feels there is a pretty good chance of winning.

"Foul!" scream the Russians. "Capitalistic chicanery. We want no part of it."

SO THE cold war, heating up in the nuclear arms theater, intensifies in the great carnival dedicated to "goodwill among men."

The amateur question has been debated since the Soviet Union made its Olympic debut in 1952 with a powerful aggregation of athletes meticulously trained and supported by the state.

As they piled up medals, challenging the U. S. longtime supremacy, Americans themselves found reason to scream "Foul!" The Russians, Yanks insisted, were outright professionals, fully subsidized by the state.

"It's our system," the Russians said. "In the Soviet Union, everyone is subservient to the state." Brundage visited Moscow and agreed, saying it was no worse than giving scholarships to college athletes.

"I have no hangup with that," says Simon. "It's a totalitarian state. It's the way they live."

The Russians and their satellites grew in strength. We spoke furtively of state-supported sports factories behind the Iron Curtain and KGB men under every black hat.

Then somebody discovered we were a capitalist country. Why not utilize our capital? With Simon as chief fundraiser, the arm was put on U. S. industry — Coca Cola, General Motors, etc. — to get involved. Soon we had a sophisticated, year-around training center at Colorado Springs and had fixed a $77 million budget for the Games in 19[illegible]

"Americans sending Americans to the Olympics," became the credo. Two years ago William E. Simon was elected president of the USOC, successful Wall Streeter, businessman, the nation's first energy czar, Secretary of the Treasury in the Nixon and Ford administrations, inflexible champion of the free enterprise system.

"Will the Russians boycott Los Angeles as we boycotted Moscow in 1980?" he was asked.

"I doubt it," he replied. "Not unless they think we'll clobber them. And we might. We'll have a very strong team."

Can Herschel win Heisman in '83?

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

When he won the 1982 Heisman Trophy, Herschel Walker of Georgia became only the seventh junior to capture the prestigious award which salutes the outstanding college football player in America.

Only one of the others repeated the Heisman victory in his senior year. Archie Griffin of Ohio State won it in 1974-75, the only two-time winner of the award presented by New York's Downtown Athletic Club.

Griffin, now a running back with the National Football League Cincinnati Bengals, knows just what Walker will face in his attempt to repeat the Heisman victory next year.

"IT'LL BE tough for him to get that next one," Griffin said after helping the Bengals to a 20-17 victory over Baltimore Sunday. "Everybody looks to stop a Heisman winner. Herschel's probably very excited over the fact he won it. He's not looking ahead to the next one, not now. He's just trying to savor this one.

"By next year, the impact of winning the first one will have worn off, and then he'll realize just how tough it will be to get that second one. Everyone will want a piece of him, on and off the field. He'll be a marked man.

"The thing he must be careful to do is keep his mind on football. Everyone will want his time, and he'll have to try to put it all out of his mind and do his job."

Griffin had the best year of his collegiate career at Ohio State when he won his first Heisman in 1974. He rushed for 1,695 yards in 256 carries that year. The next season, when he won the Heisman again, his rushing total dipped to 1,450 on 262 carries. He completed his career as college football's first 5,000-yard runner.

WALKER HAS already eclipsed the 5,000-yard plateau in just three varsity seasons and stands third on the alltime list with 5,259, trailing only Tony Dorsett (6,082), and Charles White (5,598). He is just 824 yards short of Dorsett's all-time collegiate record and he'll be back for a shot at it and a second Heisman next season.

For two years, he had considered legal action to make himself eligible for the NFL's seniors-only draft. But he won't go that route next spring, having decided to stay in school for a fourth varsity season.

"Because of the close competition in college football these days — both for teams and for individuals — it will be real hard to repeat as Heisman winner next year," said Walker.

There are some who will tell you that Walker should already have been a two-time Heisman winner and, perhaps, even a three-time winner.

Walker led Georgia to the national championship as a freshman in 1980, rushing for 1,616 yards. He finished third in the Heisman derby that year, trailing behind a pair of seniors, running back George Rogers of South Carolina and defensive lineman Hugh Green of Pittsburgh.

LAST YEAR, Walker rushed for 1,891 yards, the third best single ground gaining season in NCAA history. But he finished second in the Heisman balloting behind Marcus Allen of Southern California, who ran for an alltime record 2,342 yards.

Walker's Heisman season started haltingly at best. He suffered a fractured thumb before Georgia's first game and was limited to 20 yards in the opener.

Irish having trouble with ranked teams

By The Associated Press

The Irish of Notre Dame were probably thinking the third time would be a charm after they trailed sixth-ranked Indiana by one point at halftime.

Notre Dame was looking for its first victory this season over a ranked team after losing to No. 2 Kentucky and No. 5 UCLA. But Indiana wasn't going to have any part of that.

The Hoosiers scored the first four points of the second half, taking a 30-25 lead, and coasted to a 68-52 victorty Tuesday night in South Bend, Ind.

"Indiana, Kentucky and UCLA are three teams that could very well win the national title this year," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps, whose team fell to 2-3.

Senior forward Steve Bouchie led the Hoosier charge in the final 20 minutes, scoring 14 of his game-high 19 points. Ted Kitchel added 17 points as Indiana improved its record to 4-0.

"Steve Bouchie got open well inside and so did Ted Kitchel in the second half," Indiana Coach Bobby Knight said. "Bouchie had his best game tonight. I'm not saying he didn't play well the first three games, but he performed tonight like he does in pratice. He's a very good practice player."

Notre Dame had two more field goals, but the Hoosiers made 28 of 35 free throws to only eight of 14 for the Irish to decide the outcome.

Forward Bill Varner had 16 points, Joe Price 13 and John Paxson 10 for the Irish. Paxson, the only senior starter, injured his knee earlier in the week and had a sub-par performance.

Center Melvin Turpin scored 20 points and guard Jim Master added 14 as the Wildcats hiked their record to 4-0. Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall used substitutes most of the second half after taking a 41-20 advantage.

"It was really a good opportunity for us to use our bench and give a lot of guys some experience," he said. "With the schedule we have (Butler, Notre Dame and Villanova) we haven't been able to get as many people into the game as we would have liked."

Detroit, 0-2, was led by Albert Blakey and Roy Simms with eight points apiece.

Elsewhere Tuesday night, it was Illinois State 72, DePaul 62; Iona 88, Monmouth 61; Penn State 86, Philadelphia Textile 73; Princeton 69, Fordham 54; West Virginia 65, William & Mary 51; Mississippi 66, Alabama-Birmingham 54; Old Dominion 71, Virginia Military 45; Vanderbilt 88, St. Louis 67; Wake Forest 81, Davidson 62; Eastern Michigan 67, Pittsburgh 62; Xavier, Ohio, 66, Texas 64; Wichita State 82, Fullerton State 61; Texas Christian 64, North Texas State 58; Oklahoma State 93, Tulsa 75; Wyoming 83, South Dakota 51; Baylor 58, Oral Roberts 55; Montana 80, South Utah State 53; Montana State 63, Washington 50; Rice 86, Texas Southern 66; and San Diego State 100, Doane 88.

Marv Levy in a wringer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Chiefs' post-strike collapse is putting Coach Marv Levy through the toughest emotional wringer of his coaching career.

"It's tough. When you go into coaching, you think about the happy moments, but you'd better think about the tough ones, too. You like to look back and say, 'We pulled ourselves out with great tenacity. But it's not much fun when you're going through it."

The Chiefs have not made the National Football League playoffs since 1971, but entered this season with high hopes after last year's 9-7 record. Following a season-opening loss to Buffalo, they beat Division champion San Diego, snapping a six-game losing streak to the Chargers. At the time, the entire organization was ready to proclaim the end of the club's long period of mediocrity. But since the strike, the Chiefs have been beaten by the New Orleans Saints and the Los Angeles Rams and last week were blown out 35-14 by Pittsburgh.

"The miserable feeling is worse about three or four hours after the game, after everybody else is gone and you're left alone with the realization that you didn't win, that you played poorly," said Levy, who replaced the fired Paul Wiggin after the 1977 season.

Hearns' injury to delay fight

By The Associated Press

DETROIT (AP) — The wrist injury to fighter Thomas Hearns, more serious than originally belived, will need about 12 weeks to heal, according to a physician.

Hearns, the new World Boxing Council super-welterweight champion from Detroit, suffered a dislocation of two bones in his right hand as he beat Wilfred Benitez in New Orleans Friday.

The injury likely will delay a title defense by Hearns at least until April and probably longer.

Hearns wore a soft cast and heavy bandage over the wrist at a Tuesday news conference at the Kronk Boxing Team headquarters in Detroit.

"The hand is still swollen quite a bit, but it doesn't hurt much," Hearns said.

The fighter suffered a separation of the carpal and matacarpal bones in his hand and wrist, according to Dr. Frederick Lewerenz, the team physician.

The injury occurred in the eighth round.

"They apparently lifted (bowed) when he struck a blow," Lewerenz said, adding that Hearns would be sporting the cast for about six weeks, with about 12 weeks needed for a full recovery. No lingering effects are expected, he added.

Stastny brothers strike again

By The Associated Press

Marian Stastny doesn't know what he and his brothers are doing to attain the phenomenal success they are having with the Quebec Nordiques this season.

"You never know what to expect in a hockey game," Stastny said Tuesday night after he and his brothers, Peter and Anton, combined for four goals and nine assists in a 10-5 National Hockey League victory over the Boston Bruins.

The splurge raised the brothers' total to 136 points in 27 games, but it came only three days after the trio was shut out in Quebec's 3-2 victory over the Buffalo Sabres last Saturday.

"We did not do anything special, compared to our Saturday night game," Marian said. "Sometimes it goes well and sometimes it doesn't, even if you do the same things. That is why I like the sport."

Marian scored twice and added three assists, Peter scored once and assisted four times and Anton had a goal and two assists. Real Cloutier added three goals for the Nordiques.

The victory was marked by an explosive second period that saw both teams combine for 10 goals, only the fifth time in NHL history that two teams reached double figures in one period.

The record for goals in a period by two teams is 12, in the second period of a Buffalo-Toronto game on March 19, 1981. Buffalo won that game 14-4. In three other games, both teams have scored 10 times in one period.

Cloutier, who after a slow start seems to be regaining last season's form when he had 37 goals and 60 assists, said increased ice time is the secret to his rejuvenation.

"It's all a question of confidence," Cloutier said. "The more ice time you get, the more ready and confident you are. You need lots of ice time to play well."

Boston Coach Gerry Cheevers was miserable over his team's performance.

"The Nordiques were the the instigators all night. We didn't hit a soul," Cheevers said. "We can't outskate or outscore Quebec in this type of game. We didn't attack or force the play."

Oilers 3, Blues 2

Wayne Gretzky scored two goals for Edmonton against St. Louis to extend his record streak of games with at least one point to 30.

Gretzky broke a 2-2 tie at the 9:10 mark of the third period with his 24th goal of the season, after a breakaway pass from Randy Gregg. Gretzky's first goal, which tied the score 1-1 in the second period, was credited to him although he may not have actually put the puck over the goal line.

Defenseman Paul Coffey had deflected a shot off Blues goalie Mike Liut, and as the puck was rolling over the line, Gretzky raced in and put it into the back of the net.

Islanders 6, Maple Leafs 3

The three-time defending Stanley Cup champions won for only the second time in their last nine games, with John Tonelli collecting a goal and two assists for New York.

The Islanders jumped to a 3-0 lead in the first period, with Tonelli getting the first goal on a power play at 2:08. Toronto, 0-11-2 on the road this season, outshot the Islanders 18-6 in the second period, but the Maple Leafs were still behind 4-1 at the end of the session as New York goalie Roland Melanson sparkled.

Jets 3, Capitals 2

Washington stretched its unbeaten streak at home to nine as Milan Novy tied Winnipeg in the third period with his second goal of the game.

Novy, who hadn't scored a goal in his previous nine games, tipped in Scott Stevens' shot at 5:25 of the final period, just 50 seconds after the Jets' Doug Small put his team ahead 3-2.

Kings 4, Flames 4

Los Angeles fought back from a 3-0 deficit to tie Calgary on a goal by Daryl Evans with 5:33 remaining.

Pierre Rioux, Lanny McDonald and Carl Mokosak scored for the Flames in the first five minutes of the game.

Midlanders selected to star team

LUBBOCK — Two Midland football players were selected to the first team unit of the (Lubbock) Avalanche Journal's Class 5A All-South Plains team.

Representing Midland High on the squad is Bulldog tight end Chuck Dickenson while Midland Lee's Eric Cooper, at guard, represented the Rebels.

Odessa Permian and Plainview led the 24-man 5A team with six players each.

Cooper was an All-District offensive first team selection in District 4-5A, but Dickenson did not earn first team honors on the district team. Dickenson was an honorable mention choice, but now has been recognized as a first teamer on a team covering two districts.

WASHINGTON — Saturday's Georgetown-Virginia college basketball game, the most ballyhooed regular-season game in 15 years, is being played for one reason: money.

For Georgetown, the profit should be approximately $600,000, based on rights fees, gate receipts and the impact on season-ticket sales.

There was no public sale of tickets for the 7:35 p.m. CST game at Capital Centre that will match Virginia's 7-foot-4 senior Ralph Sampson against the Hoyas' 7-foot sophomore, Patrick Ewing, for the first time.

The $600,000 would have been enough to sustain Georgetown's athletic and physical education departments for almost 1 1-2 years, based on the Hoyas' budget in 1971-1972, Coach John Thompson's first season. Georgetown received slightly more than $500,000 for reaching the NCAA's final four last season, but had to split it with other Big East Conference teams and pay expenses.

Frank Rienzo, who became Georgetown's athletic director before the 1972-73 season, says he still tries to run his$athletic program with the same perspective, if not the shoestring budget, as he did before the Hoyas started winning regularly and getting on national television. The only difference, he says, is the amount of money involved. Of this game, Rienzo says: "I don't want to be money-hungry, but I'm not oblivious to the money potential."

For Saturday's game, Georgetown and Virginia split a television rights fee of approximately $550,000 being paid by Turner Broadcasting System. They also split approximately 18,000 tickets scaled at $15 each.

Georgetown's profit figure is reached$by using these figures: $275,000 in television rights, $50,000 in gate receipts after expenses and Virginia's share are subtracted, and about $250,000 in 2,000 additional season-ticket sales as the only way to get a ticket.

Virginia will not make nearly as much, about $85,000, because it will get only one-eighth of its share of the TV rights fees. Seven other Atlantic Coast Conference schools will split the remaining television money. There is no benefit for Virginia in increased season ticket sales because University Hall in Charlottesville is sold out for the season.

A WTBS official says Turner will make more than $1 million on the game, although most advertising representatives and other television sports syndicators contacted say it barely will break even.

"We bid $435,000," said Fred Botwinik, president of Katz Sports Inc., which syndicates some Big East Conference games. "At $435,000, we expected to win," he said. "I didn't think there were other lunatics in the world."

Obviously, a lot of people apparently underbid on the game.

Jim Trahey, director of sports sales for WTBS, Turner's superstation in Atlanta, says Turner had sold 14⅛ of 15 minutes of national commercial spots at $65,000 per 30-second ad, more than ABC or CBS got for a 30-second spot on an NCAA football game of the week this fall. The other 30 seconds have been bought tentatively by a sponsor who had already bought some time, Trahey said.

Before cable advertising revenues, radio rights and international television rights fees are considered, that's $1.95 million. Costs, including rights fees, advertising agency percentage and production, should be no more than $800,000. Profit: at least $1.2 million.

As of late last week, Trahey said he has sold the game to at least 106 commercial stations, mainly network affiliates, including the top 37 markets and 46 of the top 50 nationally. In televisionese, that's 80 percent penetration with the ad rate based on each commercial message reaching an average of 11 million homes in any quarter-hour.

Says Rienzo, who recognized more than eight months ago he had a hot property and opened it to bidding: "I felt this event was a significant sporting event in the magnitude of a heavyweight championship fight or a Super Bowl. I don't think Turner paid too much for it. I think he got a great buy."

Richard Shultz, Virginia athletic director: "I knew this would be the biggest regular season game since UCLA and Houston (Lew Alcindor vs. Elvin Hayes in 1968). I told Frank when we were discussing this that, if this were my game and I put it out for bid, I'd ask the same rights fee as a national football telecast."

A regular nationally telecast college football game of the week brought each participant about $700,000 this season. Thus, Turner paid less and is charging slightly more for a 30-second commercial spot.

Five networks or syndicators bid for the game. The offers by Turner, CBS and Katz were the only ones seriously considered, Rienzo said. Katz's bid also included a percentage of its profit, if advertising sales reached a certain level, in addition to the $435,000, according to Botwinik.

There was little apprehension pioneering a game like this on cable. "I felt confident they would syndicate it," Shultz said. "I thought they milked it for as long as they could on cable, to sell more cable outlets."

Normally, NBC has first choice of games involving Atlantic Coast Conference teams, as part of a three-year contract that started this season. However, there was a loophole. The game had not been scheduled by the date in May on which NBC had to make its choices.

"We registered our objections at the time, and we dropped the matter," said Rich Hussey, director of sports programming for NBC. "We're more disappointed than anything else that something like this could happen. Obviously it's a premium game."

NBC did not bid for the game, taking the position that it already owned the rights, according to Hussey. CBS did make a bid, in the same range as Turner's. But officials at that network made one basic miscalculation. They thought Rienzo or Shultz would change the Dec. 11 prime-time date specified in the bid sheet. CBS wanted to pair Georgetown-Virginia with an NFL playoff game on Jan. 8, a Saturday afternoon.

Russ Potts, the former promotions man at the University of Maryland, former athletic director at Southern Methodist University and now a television syndicator, told Rienzo he would take whatever date and time Rienzo wanted.

Potts and WTBS are known as an entity in the television business. Potts scheduled Turner's Thursday night college football package. He also bought the rights to 55 college basketball games. Turner bought 12 of the best; Potts syndicated the rest. Georgetown-Virginia is a joint venture between Turner and Potts' Sports Productions Inc.

"They almost got it by default," said Shultz about Turner, because of CBS' insistence to play the game in January. "It was a situation in which we could win the battle and lose the war. With the hype going on, both coaches wanted to play as early as possible.

Rangers are close to dealing Bell

HONOLULU (AP) — The Texas Rangers appeared to be very close Tuesday night to completing a trade involving all-star third baseman Buddy Bell.

The Rangers met with three teams — the St. Louis Cardinals, the New York Mets and the Los Angeles Dodgers — on Tuesday, and new Rangers' Manager Doug Rader confirmed that there was a great deal of interest shown in Bell.

Rader said, however, that "no deal will be made within the next 24 hours."

The Cardinals reportedly offered right fielder George Hendrick, third baseman Ken Oberkfell and an unidentified pitcher for Bell, generally considered one of the top third baseman in the American League.

The willingness of St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog to offer a pitcher in any deal involving Bell indicated that St. Louis was close to making a deal for free-agent pitcher Floyd Bannister. Herzog reportedly would be unwilling to offer a pitcher in trade without acquiring Bannister.

It was not known what the Mets or Dodgers offer was, however, the Dodgers have said they were trying to trade their own third baseman, Ron Cey.

"I can assure you that if and when we make a deal for Buddy Bell it will be a big deal," said Rader.

Rangers General Manager Joe Klein said the Rangers did not "come to this meeting to trade Bell, but if someone knocked my socks off, we'd listen."

Klein said there were "a lot of things to work out" in any Bell trade, and he would not reveal which team or teams were the closest to luring Bell from Texas.

Bell, who was known to be on the trading block at these meetings, batted .296 with 67 RBI and 13 home runs last year for Texas.

WTSU sinks Angelo State, 71-67

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Bob Steppes and Goliath Yeggins combined for 29 second half points to lift a lackluster West Texas State basketball team to a 71-67 intrastate triump over Angelo State Tuesday.

Steppes, a 6-5 senior, finished with a game-high 19 points and Yeggins, a 6-4 junior, added 16.

With the victory, the Buffalos evened their record a 2-2 while the Rams fell to 2-4.

West Texas State hit only 35 percent of its field goal attempts in the first half and trailed 35-29 at halftime.

Vin Scully to join NBC baseball crew

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Sportscaster Vin Scully has signed a multiyear contract with NBC that will pay him $1 million per year, the Los Angeles Times has learned. An announcement of the deal will be made Thursday at the baseball meetings in Honolulu. Scully will remain with the Dodgers but miss most Saturday telecasts.

The NBC contract calls for Scully to do play-by-play on 28 Game-of-the-Week baseball telecasts and do all nine innings on the network's coverage of World Series, playoff and All-Star games. He will also be involved in the network's golf coverage.

It will also be announced Thursday that Joe Garagiola, formerly NBC's No. 1 baseball announcer, has signed a new contract as the network's No. 1 commentator. He will work with Scully. A network source said that Garagiola was compensated financially for stepping down to make room for Scully. Tony Kubek has one year remaining on his contract.

Kubek, who has been the No. 1 commentator, reportedly will be demoted to the No. 2 team with Bob Costas and be compensated financially.

Dick Enberg, NBC's top football announcer, who was involved in the World Series coverage last fall, said he has not been compensated. But he isn't complaining.

"I'm excited about getting someone the quality of Scully," he said. "And I mean that. Sure, I have an ego, but I'm not going to let that get in the way of us acquiring a top announcer.

"There's still plenty for me to do and I hope to still be involved in our World Series and playoff coverage in some way."

The announcement of Scully's new contract was originally scheduled for last Wednesday in New York but Scully opted to make the announcement this week in Honolulu, where the nation's baseball writers are gathered. He left Monday for Honolulu.

The $1 million-a-year contract makes Scully the highest paid sportscaster in the country. ABC's Howard Cosell reportedly also makes about $1 million a year, but Scully also has a lucrative contract with the Dodgers.

Scully has been with the Dodgers since 1951. He also worked for CBS on football and golf from 1975 until this year, and he did baseball for CBS Radio.

The heads of the NBC and CBS sports departments are in Honolulu to lay groundwork for negotiating a new baseball contract. The current contract expires following the 1983 season.

CBS, which wants a piece of baseball, reportedly is pushing for interleague prime-time games.

The signing of Scully by NBC prior to the meetings was important because it shows the baseball owners its desire to give baseball first-class treatment.

Bruce Sutter has knee examined

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Relief ace Bruce Sutter will undergo an arthroscopic inspection of his left knee, which gave him occasional trouble last season, according to the St. Louis Cardinals.

Sutter left for Lansing, Mich., on Tuesday to be examined by knee specialist Dr. Lannie Johnson, the Cardinals said.

If Johnson determines surgery is necessary, he will consult with Cardinal physician Dr. Stan London before deciding on whether to operate, the team said.

The team said if surgery were required, it would not be serious and would not interfere with spring training plans.

Tim Lewis tries to dispel the dissension rumors on Pitt team

PITTSBURGH (AP) — University of Pittsburgh defensive back Tim Lewis again criticized the Panthers' much-maligned offense Tuesday — at a school-sponsored news conference to dispel press reports of dissension on the Cotton Bowl-bound team.

Lewis said his remark that "there's no way our offense shouldn't have scored 40 points a game this year" was "justified."

But, he said, some portions of his interview printed Sunday by The Dallas Times Herald and The Pittsburgh Press were taken out of context.

"It's on tape. I'm not going to deny anything he wrote," Lewis said of his interview with Times Herald reporter Mark Hyman.

But Lewis said that some comments about the Panthers' offense, especially criticism of 1981 All-America wide receiver Julius Dawkins, were "misinterpreted" and that the negative portions of the interview were given precedence over his pro-Panther comments in both stories.

"Julius and I are as close as players can get," Lewis said. "There's no animosity, no hatred and no disenssion among us. Everybody is everybody's best friend on this team."

In the Dallas interview, portions of which were also printed by The Pittsburgh Press, Lewis said there was a lack of preparedness and discipline on the 9-2 Panthers, the pre-season selection as the No. 1 team in college football.

Lewis, a senior cornerback, said that he had "sort of lost confidence" in the Panthers' offense, which had a disappointing season despite a roster loaded with star players such as quarterback Dan Marino, wide receivers Dawkins and Dwight Collins, running back Bryan Thomas and tackles Bill Fralic and Jimbo Covert.

Lewis called Dawkins "an individualist" on the field. Offensive guard Ron "Moose" Sams also criticized Dawkins in a Press interview, saying, "I don't think Dawkins lived up to his potential."

Lewis said the lack of discipline did not begin under first-year Coach Foge Fazio, but actually began under former Coach Jackie Sherrill, now at Texas A&M.

"It's something that started way back in August. We didn't have it when we went to camp," Lewis said in print. "We sure didn't have it Nov. 26 (the day of the Penn State game, which Pitt lost 19-10). It's just something we never got together.

"It comes down to discipline. It's something that's never been stressed since I've been here. With Jackie, it was a 'Do as I say' type of thing. With Foge you sort of have a lot of freedom."

Lewis also was critical of the Panthers' lack of preparation. "There were guys on our team, for the Penn State game, who watched a reel or two of film the night before the game," Lewis said in print. "They didn't read their scouting reports. They didn't do anything.

"The week of the Notre Dame game you just don't walk off the field and say, 'Oh, I've got a class tonight. I've got to go early.' You just don't do that."

After the interview appeared in Pittsburgh, Lewis said Fazio flagged him down on a Pittsburgh street and asked, "Why I said this and said that."

"I just wish everything I said have been printed...everyone would have understood just what I wanted to say," Lewis said.

"It was totally blown out of proportion," Lewis said.

Meanwhile, Dawkins responded to criticism that he sometimes failed to give 100 percent effort on the field. He acknowledged this was true.

"You might be in a game for 70 plays," Dawkins said. "You can't go 100 percent on every one of them."

At the beginning of Monday's news conference, Associate Athletic Director Dean Billick said Lewis, Sams and Dawkins had agreed to attend because the interviews did not interpret the "real feelings of the players. It was a selective use of their answers."

Billick said the interviews were "a misuse of our player policy. The stories were unfair to our program, the players and our coaches."

Billick accused Hyman and Pittsburgh Press reporter Bob Smizik of "questionable ethics."

Smizik was not permitted to reply to the remarks. But afterwards, Smizik said Lewis "spoke to what the people here have been talking about all year."

Fazio, subjected to heavy criticism after several decisions backfired in the Penn State loss, did not attend the news conference.

The parade hasn't passed by yet

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — It's a pretty safe bet that on New Year's Day, when the TV set is flipped on to catch the college bowl parades and games, at least one voice in the room will sigh: "I'd like to see them in person some day."

An understandable wish. Television cameras — no matter how strategically located — never really transmit the fragrant beauty of the flower-covered floats of Pasadena's Tournament of Roses. What is a blurred mass of color on the screen becomes, when you are only a few yards away, thousands of fragile blossoms.

And the curbside viewer has much more time to take in the spectacle as the floats approach. On screen, you get a quick glimpse.

True, it's late in the year to be considering a trip for the approaching bowl events, but the parade hasn't entirely passed you by. While game tickets are scarce, bleacher seats for the big parades are still available.

Or if this year's end is too early, bowl committees will start taking reservations for 1984 almost as soon as the season's last touchdown is scored.

This year or next, here are suggestions on how to get tickets for the parade andor game at Pasadena's Rose Bowl, the Orange Bowl in Miami, the Cotton Bowl in Dallas and the Sugar Bowl (no parade) in New Orleans:

THE ROSE Parade is the big New Year's Day extravaganza — this Jan. 1 the theme is "Rejoice" — and frequently it is more exciting than the football game that follows. Thousands of people show up the night before with sleeping bags and hot thermoses and camp out on the curb along the five-mile route in order to get a front view. It's free, but it's also the hard way to see the two and one-half hour parade.

The Rose Bowl committee lists at least four Pasadena companies that set up grandstand seats along the parade route and sell reserved seats throughout the year. The largest, Sharp Seating Company with 80,000 seats, reports tickets are still available.

Prices this year range from $13 to $20 per seat, with the highest prices closest to the reviewing stand. Reserved parking at $6 to $12 per car (depending on location) can also be arranged through these companies:

— Gilbert Higbee: 2,500 seats near the reviewing stand, sold out this season. Phone (213) 793-5385 or write P.O. Box 624, Pasadena, Calif. 91102.

— Marsden Brothers: Phone (213) 394-6639.

— Milne Brothers: 2,000 seats about two-thirds along the parade route. Some reported available at $13. Phone (213) 798-7000 or write 22 North Greenwood, Pasadena, Calif. 95107.

Tickets to the game itself are much harder to obtain. Though the stadium seats 109,000, about 40,000 seats each go to the two colleges playing, and most of the rest go to the other campuses in the Big 10 and Pacific conferences. But 3,500 tickets are set aside for a lottery in the fall (this season's price, $25-$30). To enter, contact the Rose Bowl committee before August at (213) 449-4100.

An alternative: Special Event Services, a Los Angeles tour operator, puts together a tour package that includes parade and game tickets. At $150 per person, it's expensive but convenient. The package includes bus pick-up at 6 a.m. (for an 8:30 parade beginning) at either the Biltmore Hotel in downtown L.A. or at the Farmers Market in the Hollywood-Wilshire area (more locations next season); parade seating near the veviewing stand; a box lunch before the game; game seating in the end zone; return transportation. Parade tickets alone are $50. Fov information: Special Event Services, 253 S. Oxford Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.

Floats in Miami's King Orange Jamboree Parade twinkle in the dark since it begins at 7:30 p.m. on New Year's Eve. This year the theme is "Something To Sing About."

Parade fans can line up for free along Biscayne Boulevard and Flagler Street or contact the Orange Bowl Committee for a place in the 25,000 bleacher seats: $5.50 for nonreserved bleachers and $8.50 for reserved box seats. Add $2 per order for handling (return certified mail). Phone (305) 642-5211 or send a certified check or money order to P.O. Box 350748, Miami, Fla. 331350748 (nine-digit ZIP).

Orange Bowl game seats may all be gone by now, but for the latest information contact the ticket office at the same phone number. This year tickets sold for $18 eagh. Each year, about 75,000 seats go on sale to the public. The committee starts taking reservations in February, at the address above, and begins mailing tickets out in June.

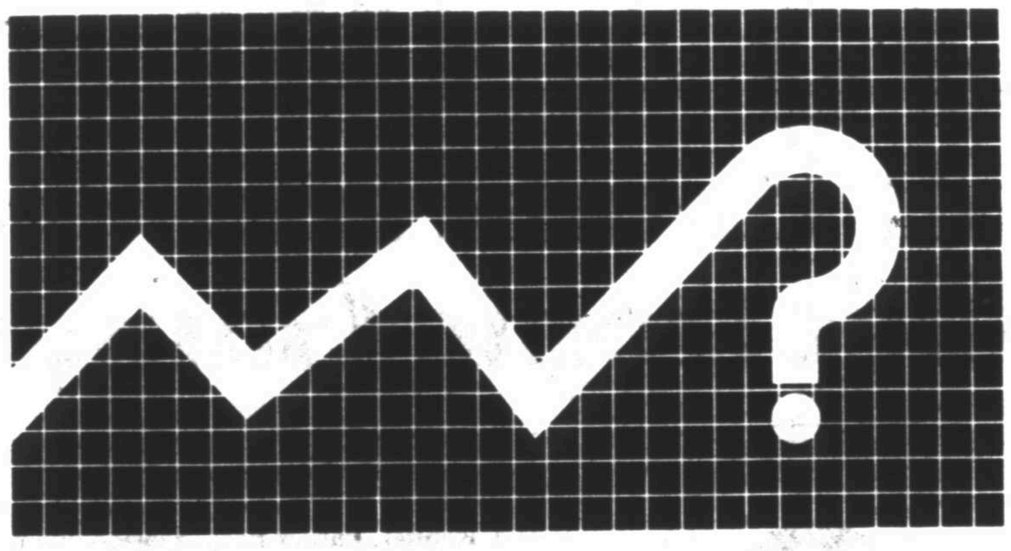

Under a theme of "Festivals Around the World," Cotton Bowl Parade floats will celebrate, among other things, Carnival in Rio, Chinese New Year and Cheyenne's Frontier Days in Dallas on New Year's morning.

There are no reserved seats for this 90-minute parade, which customarily draws 100,000, although 2,500 bleacher seats are provided free, on a first-come basis, near the reviewing stand at the John F. Kennedy memorial. But for a 9 a.m. beginning, they start to fill at 6:30 a.m. There's plenty of standing room along the two-mile route.

BY NOW, the Cotton Bowl game is expected to be sold out, since Texans are big football fans, but a last-minute phone check can be made to the Cotton Bowl Association (214) 634-7525 or (214) 634-1983. Normally, the association begins taking ticket orders in August for 70,000 seats. Where you sit is determined by a drawing. This year the price was $20, plus $1 per order for handling, payable by MasterCard, Visa, American Express, money order or personal check.

New Orleans throws no parade for the Suger Bowl, but of course they are busy preparing for the Mardi Gras festivities a few weeks later. Still the city celebrates bowl week with a regatta on Lake Pontchartrain, tennis tournament and a national collegiate flag football tourney. The delightful old French Quarter is a show in itself.

Aggies find that million dollars won't buy what it used to

By BOB OATES
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — To improve its football image a year ago after a 7-5 season, Texas A&M University changed coaches, hiring Pittsburgh's Jackie Sherrill for a reported $1.7 million for six years — or $287,000 annually.

In Sherrill's first season, the Aggies finished 5-6. They lost three of their last four.

"It's that damn inflation," a wealthy alumnus complained. "A million dollars won't buy what it used to."

And that's the truth. So there's some uneasiness these days in College Station as Sherrill starts to pick up the pieces of a season that ended dismayingly when his team was creamed by hated rival Texas, 53-16.

Only a year ago, with most of the same players, the Aggies held Texas to 21-13, and in 1979 and '80 they won.

Attendance, what's more, fell off alarmingly this season. In a stadium seating 73,500, the Aggies averaged 55,948 — by comparison with 63,833 a year ago and 60,432 two years ago.

THEY HAD hoped their controversial, heavily publicized, nicely paid new coach would at least earn his keep in increased attendance. Instead he cost them money.

What's going on here? Are they paying too much to the wrong guy? Has the student body put up any "Barrel Sherrill" banners yet?

Well, no, the students have been generally supportive. Most, indeed, are still enthusiastic about Sherrill because of the way he has injected himself into their activities and beloved traditions — contributing, for example, $1,000 of his own money to help transport the school band to a road game in Arkansas.

Former students, moreover, along with other community groups, remain reasonably loyal. Though badly bruised by the losing season and particularly by the last game — the second-worst beating A&M has taken from Texas in this century — the Aggies are definitely going to give Sherrill another year.

In their preoccupation with his performance, they do not talk much any more about his outlandish salary. They are not worrying about that the way they used to.

"When I first heard of the $287,000 I was thunderstruck," student chaplain Dennis Walters, a senior from Houston, said the other day, making a typical comment. "But it doesn't bother me so much now. After all, we (the Aggies) do have the money."

IN OTHER words, the weather has shifted at College Station. The question used to be: Is this too much to pay a football coach? Today it is: Is this too much for Jackie Sherrill? Forget the dough, can he coach?

There are apparently several ways to answer the new question:

—Yell king Tom Joseph, a senior from Hamilton, Texas, said: "This is a school with more spirit and traditions than any other university. The interest Coach Sherrill takes in our traditions means he's bound to win 'cause he'll have everybody on his side."

—Neil Landsman, A&M beat reporter for the town paper, the Bryan-College Station Eagle, said: "Sherrill isn't a good coach if you're talking about a guy who can win with weaker people (athletes). And he's so standoffish he can't win by lifting their (the players') morale. But he's a great organizer and a great recruiter. His whole staff was chosen not for their teaching ability but the way they can talk to people (prospects). I'd say he'll probably have winning teams here. He'll recruit them."

—Ron Meyer, New England Patriots coach, formerly at SMU: "You have to run the option today to win in the Southwest Conference."

INSTEAD OF option football, Sherrill prefers a pro-style offense, which had two consequences this season: His team led the conference in passing but finished sixth in the standings (3-5).

For his second season, Sherrill will have John Mazur, formerly of USC, at quarterback. Will Mazur do it? Or is Ron Meyer right? You'll have to wait until next year.

Each fall in the week of the Texas game, Texas A&M students build what they call the world's largest bonfire, symbolizing, as they say, their burning desire to beat the more famous state university. Rising as high as a four-story building, the wooden pyramid is constructed of pine logs which, this year, were bulldozed out of a nearby forest by a utility company widening a trail.

It's an immense job, requiring some 200,000 man-hours (by students) to wire the 5,000 logs together, but this time the kids had a bit of help. Taking an evening off from his film projector, Jackie Sherrill spent most of a long night up there on the third level lifting, sweating and wiring up those little old logs.

There were those who wished Sherrill had stayed in his little old office working on the Texas game. But the student in charge of the fire, James Fuquay, a senior from Vernon, Texas, said: "Coach was an inspiration to the whole campus. Sitting up there working with him, talking with him, you realize he's worth every penny (of his salary)."

"He was beautiful," said Toni Shaw, a freshman from Conroe, Texas.

THAT'S THE way Aggies reason. At Texas A&M, a man not only has to do his job, he must do it sociably, warmly, with greetings and smiles for all.

"We have a hundred traditions here," LeAnne Dees, a senior from Gainesville, Texas, said, naming the bonfire as well as midnight yell practice Fridays, silver taps ceremonies Tuesdays (honoring deceased Aggies) and, among others, the 12th-man tradition (obliging all Aggies to stand up through A&M games, which symbolizes, rather irrationally, their total readiness to run down and play if needed). "But," Dees said, smiling, "I think our nicest tradition is to always look a person in the eye and say howdy."

Sherrill thinks so, too. "The students are the best thing about this university," he said. "They look you in the eye, they are polite, there's very little long hair here, they say 'Yes, sir' and 'No, sir.'"

If this makes him sound conservative, he is. He's as conservative as, well, Texas A&M, which for 84 of its 106 years — until the 1960s — was a small, segregated, all-male military college and which is still dominated by the 2,300 ROTC cadets in an otherwise pliant student body of 37,000 (including 14,000 women, who are known as Waggies).

ACCORDING TO Larry Gay, a sophomore from Teague, Texas, the cadets to this day limit freshmen to four possible replies when addressed by an upperclassman. These are "Yes, sir," "No, sir," "no excuse, sir" and, "Sir, not being informed to the highest degree of accuracy, I hesitate to articulate for fear that I may deviate from the true course of rectitude. In short, Sir, I am a very dumb fish and do not know, Sir."

Said Al Link, a senior from El Lago, Texas: "Texas A&M isn't for everybody."

Warren Diehl, a freshman from Web, Texas: "If I'd known about those sir-sirs, I'd have gone to Oklahoma. Next semester, in fact, I am leaving."

Sherrill isn't, however, he hopes. If ever a man and place were meant for each other, they are Jackie Sherrill and Texas A&M.

Though all football coaches tend to be conservative, Sherrill is more so than most. His role models are the steel-industry executives and other big businessmen he knew in Pittsburgh. He runs his team as if it were a corporation with a chairman of the board instead of a coach.

He even seems the part. At 39, Sherrill is energetic, dominating, mostly unsmiling, slim (6-1, 195), wiry and dark-haired with cold blue eyes. Always expensively dressed, he chooses each day from a closetful of monogramed shirts and business suits, all, of course, conservatively cut.

In business groups, Sherrill comes across as more cold fish than conservative businessman.

"He's a rather boring speaker," said Eagle Editor Glenn Dromgoole. "And he doesn't always make a good impression. During lunch one noon at a long table, the people at one end said they couldn't hear him and asked him to speak up. He said: 'If I have anything I want you to hear, you'll be able to hear.' He might have meant it humorously, but it didn't go over."

Unlike the papers in some college towns, the Eagle under Dromgoole, an alumnus, covers A&M without fawning. Thus the editor's prediction probably has merit. "I suspect Sherrill will be a winner here," he said.

Is what we see what really happened?

By SCOTT OSTLER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

History was made last Tuesday night in San Antonio when Lakers announcer Chick Hearn convinced referee Jack Madden that the official timekeeper had let too many seconds tick off the game clock.

Madden added one second to the clock and the Lakers used it to tie the game and eventually win in overtime.

Although Madden didn't actually view the TV replay Hearn had cited, his instruction to the timer to add the second is believed to be the first instance of a sports official making an adjustment based on a replay.

Let's hope that this courageous call becomes a precedent leading to increased electronic assistance for officials in all sports.

RECENT INTENSIVE film analysis of famous and controversial plays show that what we initially see isn't always what really happened.

Take USC's phantom touchdown, for instance. Replays show that Trojan tailback Michael Harper clearly fumbled before crossing the plane of the goal line. But an official, who didn't see the ball pop loose, called it a touchdown.

According to informed sources, the film-analysis craze has resulted in several startling discoveries, that will be revealed in coming weeks. For instance:

—Randall "Tex" Cobb actually beat Larry Holmes.

That's right. Holmes was declared the unanimous winner of not only the overall fight but of every round. However, after an appeal from the Cobb camp and review of the fight films, boxing commissioners are considering overturning the decision.

It seems that the officials scoring the fight were confused by Cobbs' unorthodox boxing style and misinterpreted his ring strategy. On subsequent viewings, they are discovering that the crafty Cobb used his face to administer a savage beating to Holmes' fists.

Scoring repeatedly with his chin and his rock-hard eyebrow ridges, Cobb opened cuts on Holmes' knuckles early in the fight and didn't let up the entire 15 rounds.

DOCTORS ESTIMATE that Holmes absorbed so much punishment that he might have suffered irreversible damage. They say he will never again be able to properly grip a golf putter or a large wad of money. Cobb is expected to comment just as soon as his eyes open enough for him to view the films.

—The line judge never saw USC's phantom touchdown.

Although the films clearly show the official raising both arms as USC's Harper dives toward the goal line, a closer look reveals that the pistol-wielding person standing next to the line judge is not the official timekeeper getting ready to signal the end of the quarter, but an armed mugger.

The line judge was not signaling "touchdown," he was signaling "holdup."

—Cal's big-play touchdown really was legal.

Initial examination of the extraordinary five-lateral touchdown run that beat Stanford showed that Cal had too few players on the field and that two Cal players joined the action illegally while the play was in progress.

However, a wide-angle film shows that Stanford was also guilty of illegal activity, thus nullifying its plea for nullification of the run.

The film shows not only that officials failed to cite Stanford for illegal use of the trombone, but that a Stanford band member walked onto the field before the play even started, and therefore Stanford should have been penalized for glockenspiel in motion.

—Willie Mays' greatest catch wasn't a catch.

Everybody has seen the film clip of Willie Mays' fabulous over-the-shoulder catch of Vic Wertz' drive to deep center in the '54 World Series.

HOWEVER, a recently discovered replay from a different angle shows that Mays actually caught the ball on the first hop. He badly misjudged the ball and it landed 50 feet behind him as he sprinted toward the fence. But with all eyes glued to the flying Mays, nobody saw the ball take a kangaroo hop off the grass and fly into his glove.

—The Babe really did call his shot.

Controversy has raged for decades over whether Babe Ruth really pointed to center field in Wrigley Field in 1934, indicating he would hit the next pitch off Charley Root for a home run.

An aging Yankee fan recently came forward with a home movie that proves the Babe called his shot — not in the game but in a Rush Street speakeasy later that night.

—The Russians didn't cheat in the '80 Olympics.

There were widespread reports that Russian officials cheated repeatedly, supposedly hoping to make the marks recorded in those Games outshine the marks turned in elsewhere by boycotting nations.

However, recently released films prove beyond doubt that there were no improprieties.

The films, released by the Russian government, also prove that the Russian Army didn't really invade Poland.

Consumers wary, debt down

By The Associated Press

A government report that Americans reduced their debt by $324 million in October is another sign that consumers remain jittery about the recession, economists believe.

The Federal Reserve Board said Tuesday that the decline in outstanding consumer debt marked the first time in 10 months that consumers had paid off more than they borrowed.

"So far there's no sign the consumer has let loose of the purse strings," said Thomas Thomson, chief economist at Crocker National Bank in San Francisco.

The Reagan administration has said it hoped the cut in personal income tax rates last July would stimulate consumer spending — thus helping lift the economy out of recession. There has been no sign, at least through October, that spending has increased significantly, and the recession has persisted.

But a new survey suggested that consumers regained some confidence in the economy in November.

The Conference Board, a business-sponsored research group, said its Consumer Confidence Index rose 5 points, to 54.7. The index is figured from a base of 100 for 1969-70. The survey said people were increasingly confident that business and employment conditions would improve in the next six months.

Meanwhile, a leading Wall Street economist suggested that an economic recovery in 1983 could crumble under the pressure of big business debts and high jobless rates.

Henry Kaufman, chief economist at the investment firm of Salomon Brothers Inc., told a news conference in New York that a recovery next year would be "one of the weakest on record." He foresaw economic growth of between 2 percent and 2.5 percent — far below the expansion rates following previous recessions.

"It is not clear that an economy lift of only 2 percent real growth can adequately sustain and keep a recovery going," said Kaufman. If the economy were to slip back into recession next year after a brief recovery, it would be the third business slump in three years.

Kaufman predicted the unemployment rate would peak in the first half of next year at between 11 percent and 11.5 percent. The rate currently is 10.8 percent, the highest in 42 years.

In other economic developments:

—The Department of Housing and Urban Development said applications for home loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration jumped nearly 60 percent last month to the highest level for any November on record. Samuel R. Pierce Jr., the department secretary, attributed the increase to recent declines in mortgage interest rates.

—The Social Security old-age fund was forced to borrow $3.4 billion to cover its December checks. Meanwhile, members of the National Commission on Social Security Reform continued informal efforts to forge a compromise rescue plan, with one panelist suggesting that the retirement age be raised from 65 to 66 over the next three decades.

—The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. outlined a financial aid plan that would allow ailing mutual savings banks to "buy time" to try to resolve their money woes.

Chrysler rejects contract, UAW head warns workers may be alienated

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp. will alienate workers unless it agrees to settle a Canadian strike before Christmas, the head of the United Auto Workers said after the automaker rejected a union contract proposal.

The company would be buying itself "a lot of bitterness" if it created an impasse before the holidays, UAW President Douglas A. Fraser said at a news conference late Tuesday.

Chrysler has said that unless 10,000 Canadians employees return to work by Monday, it would not pay for the company to reopen the plants until after Christmas. Holiday pay would cost Chrysler about $450 a worker.

Fraser has said a contract must be reached in Canada no later than today to allow time for ratification by Monday.

The Canadian workers walked out Nov. 5 when Chrysler said it could not afford to grant an immediate raise.

Chrysler's 43,200 U.S. workers, who remained on the job, also seek an immediate wage increase. The U.S. workers rejected a tentative pact, but chose not to strike.

Talks in both countries resumed Nov. 22, and Chrysler on Tuesday rejected UAW's counterproposals for both U.S. and Canadian workers.

In Toronto, Canadian UAW Director Robert White said Chrysler officials called the union's proposal "unacceptable." He said they were not prepared to make a new offer.

Neither he nor Fraser would reveal the union's wage demand but White called it "the bottom line that could be ratified in the plants."

"Based upon what was done today, you can't claim optimism," Fraser said Tuesday. "We're just no further at this moment than we were 24 hours ago. There's just been absolutely no progress at all."

Chrysler Canada Ltd. chief negotiator William Fisher told reporters he was still optimistic the deadline could be met. "There's time, there's not a lot of time, but there is some time," he said.

Chrysler chairman Lee Iacocca set the deadline Friday, saying it would be inefficient to open the Canadian plants after Monday, only to close them for the holidays 10 days later. The plants would reopen Jan. 3.

Several sources said Chrysler offered workers in both countries an immediate wage increase of 30 cents an hour in a two-year contract.

Copper industry needs tariffs, barriers

PHOENIX (AP) — Foreign copper now holds nearly a quarter of the U.S. market and trade barriers are needed to help the ailing domestic industry, says the top union negotiator on copper.

"We've got to get the government into this ....I'm talking about tariffs," said negotiator Frank S. McKee, who also is international secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Steelworkers, in an interview.

McKee was among leaders of 20 copper-industry unions who gave job security the top priority Tuesday during preliminary discussions on national contracts expiring in late June or early July.

"Half of our members presently are without jobs," the United Steelworkers' Cass Alvin, long-time spokesman for the union consortium, said in a briefing on the talks.

He said the unions agreed unanimously to conduct negotiations jointly.

McKee said foreign producers are able to keep world prices down because they receive subsidies from their governments and because they do not have to operate under costly clean-air standards.

Alvin said the copper unions will meet in Phoenix on Feb. 9 to adopt policy for the contract talks, after a Jan. 18 meeting here to draft suggestions.

Frank Joklik, president of the nation's largest copper producer, Kennecott Minerals Co., arranged to sit in today and Thursday on what were described as pre-bargaining talks here with the unions.

Copper contracts run for three years. There has been an industry-wide strike every three years since the mid-60s.

McKee, a key figure in copper negotiations since 1971, said he believes 1983 will be different.

"We recognize the plight of the industry," he said. "These are hard times, not because of labor costs — wages and fringe benefits — but because of the world economy."

Majors lower crude oil prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Major oil companies are joining the move to lower U.S. crude oil prices.

Texaco Inc. lowered the price it offers to pay for domestic crude oil by $1 a barrel Tuesday, joining several smaller oil refiners that previously had announced price cuts.

Texaco cut its offered prices to about $32 a barrel for high-grade crude oil and $31 for lower-grade crude. Other oil companies had made similar reductions late last week and earlier this week.

If the lower prices are adopted industrywide, the retail price of gasoline and other oil products is likely to continue declining, many analysts believe.

The moves by Texaco and the others reflect falling prices for petroleum products. Prices have dropped unexpectedly in recent weeks, in part because warmer-than-usual weather in much of the United States has dampened demand for home heating oil.

As a result, some heating oil suppliers have been marking down prices in recent weeks. Exxon Corp., a major supplier of heating oil in the Northeast, cut wholesale prices for heating oil 8.25 cents a gallon last weekend, to 94 cents a gallon.

Tenneco sells stock

HOUSTON (SWN) — Tenneco Inc. announced that it has filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission a registration statement relating to the sale of up to 1.5 million shares of its common stock.

Tenneco expects to issue these shares to Morgan Stanley and Co. Incorporated in exchange for up to $60 million aggregate principal amount of Tenneco's 8 3/8 percent debentures due 2002 and 8 7/8 percent debentures due 2003. Morgan Stanley presently owns the debentures which will be exchanged. Upon completion of the exchange and after the registration statement has become effective, it is expected that the shares will be distributed by Morgan Stanley.

HOT OFF THE PRESS
Witherspoon blazes new trails in annual reports. We produced 15 during the past year — more than one a month — for energy companies, retailers and manufacturers, big and small, old and new. Careful planning plus award-winning writing and design helped pioneer a "new readability" in these important documents.
As a result, ADWEEK/Southwest magazine recently named Witherspoon one of only six "hot shops" in a five-state region. Now that we're all warmed up, bring us in on your next annual report.

Nona Bunch stands in front of the Diamond Museum in Snyder where she is a tour guide. The small, oil-rich West Texas town's private museum has as fine a private art collection as any between Fort Worth and Los Angeles, according to observers.

Diamond M Museum has Wyeth paintings, Remington sculptures

SNYDER (AP) — Nona Bunch has a secret: this small, oil-rich Texas town has a private museum housing priceless N.C. Wyeth paintings that colored the books of many children's classics, and an exquisite ivory elephant tusk she says was carved by someone using "little steak knives."

Ms. Bunch is a tour guide for the few that venture into Snyder's Diamond M Museum, which art observers say has as fine a private art collection as any between the Amon Carter Museum in Fort Worth and the Henry E. Huntington collection in Los Angeles.

Fifteen original N.C. Wyeth paintings, including drawings that bedecked James Fenimore Cooper's "The Last of the Mohicans" and Jules Verne's "Mysterious Island," are found in the two-story museum.

Also housed in the inconspicuously marked building along Snyder's main street is a hollowed-out, 5-foot-long ivory tusk laced with figurines that was carved by three generations of a Chinese family.

But few of the local residents who make Scurry County, on the edge of the Permian Basin, the highest oil-producing county in the nation and Snyder one of the richest towns per capita in Texas even know the museum exists.

"Hardly anybody knows we're here," said Ms. Bunch, who occasionally conducts tours for local schoolchildren and art aficionados who have discovered the museum. She is also a family friend of the Diamond M Museum's founder, C.T. "Mr. Mac" McLaughlin.

McLaughlin, an entrepenuer and pen-pal of the late President Lyndon Johnson, first came to Texas from Pennsylvania in the 1920s with less than $100 in his pocket, according to his daughter, Evelyn Davies.

"Daddy came to Texas as an adventurer, to seek his fortune," she said.

When McLaughlin died in 1974, the multimillionaire owned an oil drilling company, about 5,000 acres of petroleum-blessed Scurry County land and one of the richest private collections of art west of the Mississippi.

"His Wyeths are priceless. We've been told there is no finer private art collection between Fort Worth and the West Coast," says Mrs. Davies, who now lives on her father's Diamond M Ranch.

The collection contains about 300 pieces, so many that dozens of paintings and rare Currier & Ives lithographs are locked in a closet, said Ms. Bunch.

"We just have only so much space," she said.

Others are put in the back room for another reason: two portraits of Mr. Mac did not please him or his family, including one commissioned by celebrated Southwestern artist Peter Hurd.

When the Hurd portrait of Mr. Mac was unveiled, McLaughlin was so upset "he hung it in the bathroom to show what he thought of it," said Mrs. Davies.

LBJ, Mr. Mac's friend from the late 1940s, also disliked a Hurd presidential portrait he thought cast him in a poor light. The painting was never publicly displayed.

But Mr. Mac was upset with his own portrait because "he didn't like the tucks that showed around his neck," Ms. Bunch said.

The pieces placed about the dimly lit museum show off the splendor of the Diamond M collection: 150-year-old Dresden china pieces made in one-of-a-kind molds in West Germany fill part of one room. W.H.D. Koerner's cleanly lined paintings of Indians and rogues of the Wild West fill another room.

The Koerner paintings that dotted covers of the Saturday Evening Post and C.W. Post ads during the 1920s became models for many of Norman Rockwell's paintings, art observers say.

In another of the half-dozen museum rooms, bronze sculptures by Frederic Remington and pieces of the Helena Rubenstein jade collection can be found in odd nooks and crannies. Another darkened room has delicate pieces of carved ivory in glass cases.

One carving depicts a light green bok-choy stalk with a cricket ready to prey upon two unsuspecting ladybugs.

The ivory used in the bok-choy stalk and other museum exhibits was often buried up to 30 years in the earth by the carvers to give it a tea-stained color. Then the ivory was hand-painted in a style that has disappeared in the last half-century, said Ms. Bunch.

The prize of the collection, though, is the immense ivory tusk that is pierced through and through with a spiral of hand-carved figurines that start at the base and end five feet away at the tip.

Quarter-inch figures of Chinese farmers and horsemen near a pagoda or wall ring around the hollowed-out tusk. The work is so finely chiseled, Ms. Bunch says every time she studies it, she sees a new carved detail emerge.

The tusk reportedly was carved by three generations, and depicts about 400 years of a Chinese family's life and livelihoods, said Mrs. Davies.

"We're told it tells the life history and what the family accomplished in their lifetime," said Ms. Bunch. "It also looks like it was carved with little steak knives."

But Wyeth's works are probably the most renowned of any in the museum.

Wyeth, who died in 1945, has 15 works in the Diamond M, including paintings from Verne's "Mysterious Island," Cooper's "Mohicans," Mark Twain's "The Mysterious Stranger" and Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped" and "Treasure Island."

Wyeth's son, Andrew, now one of America's most famous artists, also has one painting — "The Winter Apples" — in the collection.

The Diamond M, operated by the Diamond M Foundation since it opened in 1964 and co-managed by Texas Western College in Snyder, also is the apple of Ms. Bunch's eye.

"Who would have thought a city like Snyder would have something like this?" she asks. "For a town of 13,000, it's unbelievable."

Texans shopping in Mexico have their goods confiscated at border

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Texans who shop for groceries in Matamoros and Reynosa were re-evaluting the merits of a trip across the border after the goods of many of their neighbors were confiscated by Mexican customs officers.

The Mexican officials surprised U.S. citizens crossing the border about earlier this week when they suddenly began searching vehicles for groceries bought in Mexico.

"Everybody's flabbergasted," said Tomas Garcia, U.S. Customs supervisor stationed on the Texas side of the Gateway International Bridge between Matamoros and Brownsville.

"They send them away clean," he said. "They don't give them a receipt or anything."

Three months ago, the Mexican government declared its plan to restrict export of basic groceries to the United States. At that time, officials posted signs along the 1,760-mile U.S.-Mexico border warning American visitors that a wide variety of food products could not be carried out of Mexico without special permission.

Until this week, however, little had come of the measure in Matamoros, although customs officers in some Mexico cities, including Nuevo Laredo across from Laredo, have made periodic spot checks of vehicles for restricted items.

But this search included items not listed as restricted by the Mexican government, as many shoppers discovered too late.

Mexican customs agents did not explain why unrestricted goods also were taken, but did say the vehicle searches would continue.

Two hours after the confiscations began in Matamoros, officers had collected about 100 bags of groceries, and by late in the evening, the bags covered an area up to 300 square feet, said Garcia.

As officers searched the trunks of each car, the normally heavy line of motorists waiting to return to the United States grew to more than a mile.

The situation was similar in Reynosa, which lies across the Texas border from Hidalgo.

Seven bags of groceries were confiscated from car of a Brownsville woman. The bags contained meat, as well as other items not on the restricted list, such as liquor and toilet paper.

Courteous drivers to receive gift certificates for bags of sugar

WORLAND, Wyo. (AP) — Local police think they've hit upon a sweet idea for rewarding safe motorists. Courteous drivers will be given certificates good for five-pound bags of sugar.

Police Chief Allen Tonney says the idea is to compensate the courteous driver who uses turn signals, yields the right of way to pedestrians and obeys speed limits.

Worland Police officers and Washaki County deputies will be stopping motorists for the giveaway program from Dec. 19-24.

"We got the idea from Los Angeles," Tonney said, where police were awarding turkeys to people for safe driving.

"Not having that type of funds available, we got together with the local Holly Sugar factory here in Worland and visited with them about a public relations type of project," Tonney said Monday.

"It's our way of saying 'Merry Christmas' and making the streets safer. It sound like it might be fun. I think it's going to be a good project."

Guru disciples to open club

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Profit is music to the ears of some disciples of an Indian guru who plan to open a nightclub soon in Portland.

Followers of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh say they plan to open the "Zorba The Buddha Rajneesh Nightclub Restaurant" in mid-December.

The nightclub endeavor will feature vegetarian food, cocktails and dancing to the music of a band of disciples, said Swami Krishna Deva, who also is mayor of the new city of Rajneeshpuram.

The Rajneesh commune, headquartered 150 miles southeast of Portland, includes several former professional musicians.

Since establishing Rajneeshpuram on May 18, the guru's followers have advertised tours and catered parties. Plans for the commune include a resort hotel, a university and a population of more than 4,000 people by the year 2000.

'Little Moscow' is the key

EDITOR'S NOTE: AP correspondent Richard Bill recently spent a week touring guerrilla-held territory in Afghanistan's eastern Paktia province.

By RICHARD BILL

PLAINS OF KHOST, Afghanistan (AP) — Moslem guerrillas are closing in on the government garrison town they call "Little Moscow." They hope its capture will be the key to gaining control of an entire province in southeastern Afghanistan.

Their target is Khost, on a stretch of plain 30 miles west of the Pakistan border in Paktia province.

The town is the base for 1,000 Afghan government troops and 300 Soviets advisers and their dependents, as well as a high number of people sympathetic to the Communist government.

The anti-Communist Moslem guerrillas already control the main highway linking Khost to Gardez, the provincial capital, and have knocked out two of a score of militia outposts strung out around the town.

THW TOWN'S only links with the rest of the country are the radio and an air strip, through which supplies are flown in daily from Kabul, the Afghan capital, 100 miles to the northwest.

But taking Khost, or "Warooki Moscow" as it's called in the Pushtu languague, will not be easy.

Government troops outnumber guerrillas 2-1; the town is ringed by a minefield and there is no cover on the surrounding plain, ruling out a frontal assault.

From their mountain hideouts the guerrillas pound enemy positions with mortar fire. Their last victory was at nearby Leja, which they overran three weeks ago after a 14-week battle.

The action was costly to both sides. Guerrillas claimed to have killed 150 Afghan troops and wounded 80. They said their losses were 27 dead and 72 wounded.

To capture Khost, the guerrillas say they need a dozen 75mm cannons,more mortars and enough ammunition for a sustained attack. They seem confident they will get their weapons in time for a spring offensive.

Should Khost fall, the guerrillas will gain total control of 200 miles of rugged border territory and eight roads, which would allow them to transport their wounded to field hospitals in Pakistan.

HAQQANI Jalaluddin, guerrilla commander for Paktia province, said control of the border would also allow his men to truck in supplies across the entire province to mount attacks on Gardez and the three neighboring regions of Ghazni, Lowgar and Nangarhar.

Jalaluddin, whose flowing black beard obscured the bandoleer of ammunition slung over his chest, expressed concern for his men, who live on a diet of sugared tea, flat bread and a greasy potato gruel. Meat is a rarity and fresh fruit is almost unknown.

Despite temperatures that dip below zero overnight, the guerrillas sleep in tents. The tents were intended for Afghan refugees, but were swiped by the guerrillas.

"If we take Khost, we will be able to use the plain to plant wheat," said Jalaluddin, 43.

The guerrillas have long had their sights on Khost but have not had the firepower to take it. An arms depot shown to Western reporters near the border is stacked with foreign-made weapons that has been smuggled in over the past few months.

American and Chinese-made guns are seen in abundance as well as assorted captured Soviet-made equipment.

"If we can get the other weapons we will be able to capture Khost," said Jalaluddin, who compared the town to a jail because of its isolated position.

"I don't think the Russians will come in if we attack because they will find they have nowhere to go — there are so many free zonesin Paktia now."

Social Security falls short

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

It's well known that the Social Security system must close a deficit of $150 billion to $200 billion through 1990, but it's not well known that if today's post-World War II "baby boom" generation is going to receive commensurate benefits upon retirement in the next century, the shortfall is a staggering $1.5 trillion.

"And that's $1.5 trillion stated in 1982 dollars," noted John "Jack" Svahn, commissioner of Social Security, in an interview. Svahn explained that if there is inflation between now and the year 2015, the shortfall will be much greater than $1.5 trillion.

To plug the $1.5 trillion gap, Social Security taxes — paid both by individuals and their employers — would come to 24 percent of total payroll in the year 2015, Svahn said.

THE BIPARTISAN National Commission on Social Security Reform, which affirmed that the shortfall is $150 billion to $200 billion to the year 1990, has not addressed the question of the baby boom generation that will be retiring in the next century.

And it's essential to address this question, said Svahn, "because one of our biggest problems is that three-fourths of working Americans do not believe they will receive their Social Security benefits. Every poll I have seen indicates that 70 to 75 percent of Americans do not believe they will get their money out of Social Security."

Yet it is the people born in the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s who will be paying "higher and higher taxes" and will almost certainly be receiving "lower and lower benefits," he said, explaining that to close these enormous shortfalls, either taxes must be raised or benefits cut, or the two strategies combined.

THE COMMISSION, scheduled to report its findings at the end of this month, also is not considering the shortfall in Medicare, Svahn noted. Experts feel Medicare, also part of Social Security, is as broke as the other parts of Social Security — old age and disability benefits — and will collapse before 1990, and earlier if otxer trust funds borrow from it to stay afloat.

Svahn would not say how high the Medicare shortfall is. "We don't have that number. It's so volatile. I will say that with medical costs rising 20 or 21 percent a year, something has to be done," Svahn said.

These shortfalls are ahead despite the fact that, "Congress cut benefits substantially in 1977. People who turned 65 in 1982 get reduced benefits," said Svahn.

Svahn said that when he took the job after President Reagan's election, "I severely underestimated the problem and overestimated the public's knowledge about Social Security."

THE MAJOR problem, Svahn said, is that the politicians have made Social Security into a "pork barrel. In 1970, 1971 and 1972, benefits went up 51 percent and inflation up 23 percent."

Originally, the system was meant to be a supplement to retirement, but that was changed. "From its inception to 1969, a person retired with about 33 percent of his immediate (final year) pre-retirement income. But from 1970 to 1981, that went up to 56.4 percent," said Svahn.

"When you consider such things as Social Security benefits being tax-free, and the elimination of work-related expenses, a lot of people are getting more from Social Security than they were getting while they were working," said Svahn.

Of course, people get back far, far more than they put in. "The actuaries say that the average person gets back five times what he and his employer paid in," said Svahn.

Welds appear safe

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Investigators say they have found no sign of unsafe welds at the San Onofre nuclear plant, but an anti-nuclear group says it will push for congressional hearings on the issue.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission in a month-long review found "no construction problems that would indicate any kind of safety problem," Tom Bishop, NRC regional chief of reactor projects, announced earlier this week.

Tim Carpenter, spokesman for the anti-nuclear Alliance for Survival, called the review "shoddy" and said he would seek congressional action. The investigation was launched after allegations of deficient welding by a former quality control engineer at the plant.

Deterrent program released

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Commission on Alcoholism has announced its annual holiday program to deter drunken driving, which includes free rides home and non-alcoholic party punch recipes.

Ross Newby, chairman of the commission, announced the program at a Capitol news conference Monday. He was joined by Mothers Against Drunk Driving Texas Chairwoman Marinelle Timmons.

"This is not a campaign against the use of alcohol," said Mrs. Timmons. "It is to encourage responsibility."

Newby said local advisory councils on alcoholism would sponsor programs in 36 areas of the state to distribute literature and provide rides for people who have had too much to drink.

The commission has issued a pamphlet called "Party Guide for Host and Hostess" that tells holiday party givers how to avoid overdrinking among guests and what to do with a guest who becomes intoxicated.

Sheriff sentenced

DANVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Harlan County Sheriff Paul L. Browning has 10 days to appeal a 10-year prison sentence for attempting to arrange the murder of two political enemies.

Boyle County Circuit Judge Henry V. Pennington issued the sentence Monday. Pennington's lawyer said he would appeal.

The 37-year-old sheriff was convicted of trying to hire two undercover police officers to kill Harlan Fiscal Court member Elijah Buell and Harlan County school board Chairman Johnny Blanton.

Browning had been denied bail. Under state law, he is allowed to remain in office while he appeals.

Guard joins Georgia pot fight

ATLANTA (AP) — State and local police have a new ally in their war against marijuana growers: the Georgia National Guard.

The guard will use infrared scanners and airborne cameras that can spot a man standing in a grove of trees from an altitude of 8,000 feet, said Phil Peters, director of the Georgia Bureau of Investigations.

Information gathered by guard members will be turned over to the bureau for police action, Peters said earlier this week. The program also involves ground radar units and 100 aircraft.

Some aide salaries compared

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 165 Senate employees earn more than $50,000 a year, according to the most recent report on salaries issued by the office of the Senate Secretary — and that doesn't include the 100 senators who earn $60,662 annually.

Among the higher paid of the Senate's 6,700 employees are the seven "reporters of debate" who make stenographic notes of everything that is said on the Senate floor for inclusion in the daily Congressional Record. They each earn $57,000 annually.

The "keeper of stationery," by contrast, makes a mere $50,304.

Most senators have at least one aide earning over $50,000. Some have two or three. Two of the 39 Senate employees assigned to Vice President George Bush earn $55,186 each.

The chief Senate barber makes far less, drawing a salary of $28,993. But that doesn't include tips.

A private, first class, on the Capitol Hill Police Force can expect to earn $23,160, about half the salary of the director of Senate parking, who makes $45,744.

The "Senate upholsterer" draws a $27,030 salary.

Amy Carter, daughter of former President Jimmy Carter, earned $1,251.38 for the two months last summer she was a Senate page. And Ann Haldeman, daughter of former Nixon chief-of-staff H.R. Haldeman, is paid $28,993 a year as a Senate door attendant.

Cissy Baker, the daughter of Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., found an unwanted job as a Capitol elevator operator — for no salary — last week.

Ms. Baker, who is working in Washington as a reporter for Cable News Network after her unsuccessful bid for a House seat last month, stepped onto an elevator and pushed the button for her floor.

Rep. Gillis Long, D-La., stepped on next. "Two please," he called out, mistaking the ex-congressional candidate for an elevator operator.

She said nothing and took him to the requested floor.

Endangered species in the United States

There are a total of 234 species in the United States in imminent danger of extinction in the wild—182 animals and 52 plants. They range from the distinctive furbish lousewort, a flowering plant found on the St. John River in New Brunswick and in northern Maine, to the mysterious bowhead whale hunted almost to extinction by hand-harpoon whalers of the last century.

One species, the peregrine falcon, is endangered in all the states. Several are endangered in most of the 48 conterminus states: the gray wolf, the bald eagle and the grizzly bear. With the exception of these species and others in danger over wide areas, only eight states have within their borders no particular endangered species.

The most pervasive threat to all species is habitat destruction such as that caused by drowning valleys for dams or bulldozing forests for parking lots.

Note: Figures may not add to total because the same species may be endangered in more than one state and because those species endangered over wide ocean or land regions were not included in the state-by-state computations. Includes all native U.S. species listed as endangered as of Dec. 1, 1981, the most recent year available.

Computer work may be hazardous to relationships

Copley News Service

Futurists say that by the year 2000, not only will half of America's workers have access to computers at their jobs, but 80 percent of Americans will have daily access to a computer in homes, stores, schools, libraries or other public facilities.

"We will no longer need muscle like we did in the Industrial Revolution," says psychologist Thomas McDonald, looking into the future of work. "We will need brainpower."

McDonald heads the La Jolla, Calif., firm, Transition Associates, which studies the impact computers are having on human behavior.

"WE ARE TALKING about a major redefinition of work and home life."

Children, for instance, may already outdo their parents in computer literacy. They are drawn to computers because they feel in control of the machines. They are allowed creativity without judgment. The machine provides company and makes knowledge fun. It provides instant gratification and is infinitely patient.

McDonald, who has recently begun research in the area, said little is known about how children's interactions with computers may enhance or detract from their ability to develop social skills.

He also is researching the impact of the computer industry on women. Women who enter the field have told him repeatedly that they have lost partners who felt threatened by their profession.

"Computers are not cuddly," explained McDonald's research assistant Kelly Reineke, 20, who is majoring in Information Systems at San Diego State University.

"I FEEL I'M expected to be in charge of my career, which is very demanding, plus be traditionally feminine, you know, non-threatening, passive, supportive." She said she knows several women in the computer field who advanced rapidly and whose mates left them. "Men say they can handle it, but they can't.

"A lot of men act like they just don't want me to talk about my work," she said. "They view it as the competition. Women used to be geared away from technical fields. Now we are coming to see that it is another area in which we can do well...

"I'm so motivated. I have to be. So many men my age aren't. They can't handle that I already have my goals set. In one past relationship, I was called masculinely competitive. It blew me away."

If she could design the right mate on a computer, "he would have as equally high goals as I do. He would understand how important my career is to me; he wouldn't be paranoid about 'girls being ahead of him;' he would be intellectually stimulating, yet able to express his emotions — someone who could laugh with me. I don't get that in my work. I need that release."

And he wouldn't have to be in the computer field.

"Men in computers generally have to be hit in the head with a personal problem before it sinks in," Ms. Reineke said.

"I know one guy whose wife tried everything. Finally she said 'I can't take it anymore.' That's when it hit him, like a train, that she really was leaving. Then he sought counseling."

RESEARCH HAS FOUND that certain personality types are drawn toward computer science — bright, abstract thinkers who are introspective, logical, organized, reliable, tend to have low or repressed needs for affection, dislike feeling controlled, appreciate affection but don't express a need for it, prefer working independently, appear unflappable and are not impetuous.

Some may suffer from unrealistic feelings of inadequacy about job performance, seem driven, and may be distracted by mood swings of defeat, failure and worry over details.

All of the traits are normal. "Problems start, however, when you can't take those traits and integrate them with some other things needed in a relationship," said McDonald.

Life with computers often puts undue strain on families

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — "We were very content when I was in the Navy," said Gary Washam, 33.

"Ah, yes," his wife Connie agreed wistfully.

"We had hardly any pressures," he continued. "Then, bang, I got involved in this fast-paced computer industry and the last two years have been filled with tremendous pressure and anxiety."

Like many other couples whose lives suddenly include a computer, the Washams, married five years, are restructuring their relationship. It hasn't been easy.

"There's a tremendous attraction to go home," said Gary, a handsome, conservatively dressed executive with a computer firm. "I love my kids. (They have two young daughters, one from Connie's earlier marriage.) I love watching them grow. I am a happy man when I can just be around them. I come from a very strong, traditional family background. I want my family.

"There's a tremendous attraction in my work environment. I have a natural talent to think logically, to analyze problems and get solutions. I've chosen the computer industry to optimize my talents.

"It is immensely satisfying to solve problems with computers because you get constant rewards. There is no diluting of the reinforcement because the computer doesn't get tired.

"And the industry is so dynamic. You need to constantly apply yourself to stay competitive. For six years in the Navy, I was continually frustrated."

Washam read every computer publication he could find. "I would read something and nearly be in tears. This exciting, dynamic industry was moving down the road, and I was standing, watching it, not participating. When I got out of the Navy, I decided I wanted to be in the race."

Being a part of the industry now "absorbs a huge amount of time. You must stay current. Stay up with the state of the art. Stay in the race. You can't stop by the wayside and chat. You have to keep running or get left behind."

"For a while," said Connie, 33, "it seemed to me that we were the wayside chat."

When Gary was in the Navy, he was active in the girls' lives. When he began his computer career, he quit coaching Molly's soccer team and spent many more hours away from home.

"My career takes all my time. I have virtually no time to spend on our own financial management, our own planning, our own home repairs. We have very little time for recreation.

"There are two forces drawing me. Both equally powerful. What do you do? How do you find the balance without one force being satisfied at the expense of the other? Sometimes, I feel like I need to be two people...

"I could see cases where people would be so entranced with the dynamics of the industry that they would lose track of how old they are. And lose track of how many years they have left in their life. They'd just keep on going because they were making $200,000 a year and the wife had a big house and the kids were in college. Then they'd drop dead."

Knowing Gary loves sports, Connie has gotten them on a bowling team. She also joined a yacht club and purchased a sailboat. "She is trying to find activities she knows I really enjoy that will compete with the time I spend with computers," noted Gary.

"Lately, in our attempt to equalize things, I have grown more frustrated at work. I come home at five or six o'clock and the internal frustration grows because I get farther behind at work.

"All day long, people are pounding on my door seeking answers. They come from all over the country asking 'Gary, what shall we do here? How do you want to handle this? What's the marketing for this?' "

"Then I pop up and say, 'Gary, can you stay home with Kerri? She's sick,' " said Connie, who works as a teacher's aide.

Gary looked at her lovingly. "I think, 'I really should make an effort to go home and do that. She has a career she's pursuing also. And it's my role as a partner in this family to help her when she needs it, like she helps me when I need it.' So I figure out some way to go home. Then the guilt shifts from the family to how I'm neglecting my work."

"I hate asking him," said Connie. "But I only see it from the point of view of the family. I look at the children. They are growing up every minute. I remember the first week Kerri was born. I cried because she would never be a week old again. I cried when she was a month old. I don't want him — because I know how much he truly enjoys his kids — to wake up 20 years down the road as he's walking our youngest down the aisle and say 'What happened?'

"So my lecture No. 32 is, 'Spend some time with your kids.' Don't be one of those dads who looks back and says, 'When did her high school prom happen? When did her first date occur? I was supposed to be sitting on my front porch with the shotgun when she left. How did I miss it?' "

"I don't want to miss it," Gary said. "One of our problems was, I was feeling all those things she's describing. But we weren't talking about it. So she assumed I wasn't feeling any of it."

Connie nodded. "I started nagging him about it. I was turning into a real hag."

Their marriage began to suffer. Connie, believing he was losing interest in the family, grew depressed. Gary, not sure how to verbalize his feelings, held them inside and started spending more time at work.

Unlike his working hours in the Navy, which were 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., he was working 7:30 a.m. to 7 or 8 p.m. every day, plus some nights and Saturdays.

"My neighbor used to call him a drop-in weekend guest," Connie noted. "I blamed myself. I thought, 'What happened to me that I became so totally undesirable that he did not want to come home?'

"When I decided I was going to quit blaming myself, I started blaming the company. 'They're not giving him the manpower he needs,' I would gripe. I resented it all."

Then a breakthrough occurred when the Washams were invited to participate in a research study with psychologist Thomas McDonald. In a group setting one evening, several couples who had one spouse in the computer industry gathered to talk about their experiences.

Boys' ranch planned recipient

AMARILLO — A new suit or clothing package for every boy at Cal Farley's Boys Ranch here is the goal of the annual Christmas Suit Project that began today.

Nearly 375 boys at the ranch will receive gifts. The ranch uses donations to purchase new suits for older boys and clothing packages for the youngest.

Donations to the Boys Ranch Christmas Suit Fund may be mailed to the Boys Ranch office, P.O. Box 1890, Amarillo, Tex. 79174, or delivered to the office at 600 W. 11th St. in Amarillo.

Test noted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union has flight-tested the one new type of intercontinental ballistics missile permitted by the unrafitified SALT II agreement, the State Department says.

According to published reports and an announcement earlier this week, the Soviet test took place Oct. 26. The missile's first-stage rocket failed, however, and the flight was ended.

Back on track

Aided by a crane, a Missouri-Pacific railroad crew places the wheels of an overturned boxcar back on the tracks Tuesday afternoon after the Monday night derailment of six railroad cars. The six cars were righted and debris cleared by Tuesday afternoon. The incident occurred about 9:30 p.m. Monday near the intersection of Highway 80 and Industrial Drive.

For nurses, diploma may not be enough

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Some years ago when a nurse exited the academic world and entered the hospital setting, she was qualified and trained to jump into the health care scene.

After a few days of orientation to surroundings, regulations and equipment, the newly graduated nurse could be functional in any hospital.

However, this was during the 1950s when nurses went through a three-year hospital-diploma school. Today, nurses complete a four-year academic program with some clinical training.

New graduates are probably more academically qualified, but there are questions among some doctors and experienced nurses as to whether the modern nurse is properly trained.

After reading a recent article about undertrained nurses, Dr. J.E. Mendez said he thinks nurses-to-be may be gypped out of the necessary skills.

"THE PAPER (degree) does not make a professional," Mendez, a Midland obstetrician who's on staff at MMH, said, agreeing with an October Newsweek article, "Our Undertrained Nurses," by Alice C. Ream, a retired nursing teacher.

Ms. Ream charges that "...the newly trained graduated nurse becomes an enormous burden to her hospital..." because today's nurses are not trained to make the proper decisions.

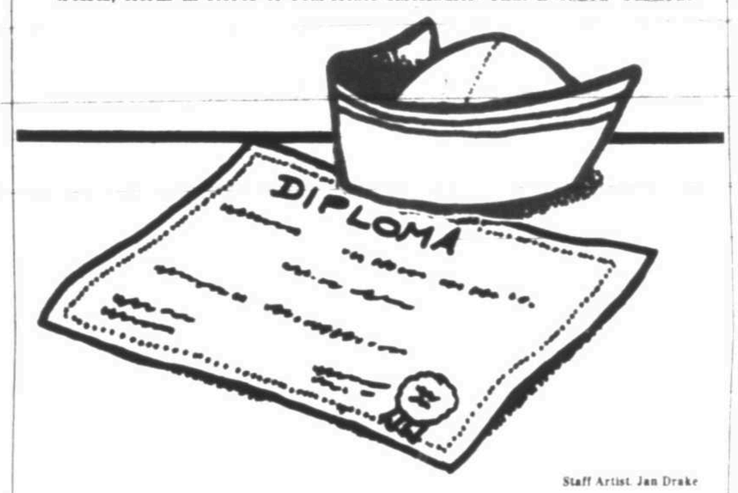

"Good judgement, technical skills and, most important, ethics are what equal professionalism," Mendez said, adding that in the past Midland Memorial Hospital's nurses have been "thrown into the middle of the hospital in a sink-or-swim" atmosphere.

When Al Kelm, a product of the diploma-nurse program, was hired in April as MMH's vice president of patient care services, he put an emphasis on hiring nurses with bachelor's and master's degrees. But Mendez said "the paper does not equal every capability."

"(TODAY'S) NURSES are not ready for the trenches," Mendez said. "Nurses have been working in areas where they are not properly trained. This causes frustration and friction."

And then burnout, Mendez said.

In her article, Ms. Ream cited burnout: "So nurses end up as cocktail waitresses, clerks in stores or real-estate salesladies. That is called 'burnout.'

Staff Artist Jan Drake

Translated, it means that the nurse was not trained to cope, to organize or to perform and will, eventually, leave nursing for something that she can handle."

Mendez said to rectify this situation "smaller hospitals need to train their nurses," adding that orientation of nurses at MMH has been inadequate in the past.

But Kelm said that's changing at MMH with its Nurse Preceptor Program, which is for new graduates, nurses needing to upgrade hospital nursing skills, those desiring to re-enter the profession and for others whose career goals have changed.

"I'm happy to see people at the top like Al (Kelm) who is there to guide and direct nursing into a common goal," Mendez said, referring to the MMH program.

HOWEVER, MENDEZ said it's unfortunate that nurses don't get this training during their academic years.

According to Ms. Ream's article, "Student nurses once were supervised through 3,500 to 5,000 hours of patient care; they now get a small fraction of that. This is doubly disconcerting since nurses are today expected to perform intricate procedures that didn't even exist 30 years ago."

Ms. Ream continued to state that today's nursing students are drenched in academic courses and shortchanged in skill training.

Mendez said nurses need many skills, some intangible, some basic.

"It's attitude and confidence," Mendez said, referring to the skills he

Odessa rail operations back in order

By LESLIE HAINES
Staff Writer

Train loading operations were back in full swing this morning in Odessa following the derailment of six cars on a spur of the Missouri Pacific system Monday night.

The last of the damaged cars was removed from the spur yesterday around 4 p.m. MoPac workers rebuilt about 200 feet of track along the spur, which curves around the Continental Products Company plant at 100 South Industrial, roughly across U.S. Highway 80 from the Odessa Ramada Inn.

MoPac trainmaster Ray Hanfeld said this morning he could not yet put a dollar estimate on damage to the six cars. All will be sent to a MoPac repair shop, probably in either Fort Worth or Little Rock, Ark., he said. New cars cost between $60,000 and $100,000, sometimes more, depending on their size and type, Hanfeld said.

"We just go in on the theory we can repair them," he said.

Only one of the six errant cars was loaded, with 181,420 pounds of plastic pellets from El Paso Chemicals, a subsidiary of El Paso Products Company. The load was transferred to another car.

The 55-car train had just left the petrochemical complex in south Odessa and was headed for the MoPac switching yard about a mile away when the derailment occurred around 9 p.m. Monday.

No one was injured in the incident.

The gas and water lines to Continental Products were shut off Monday night because of the derailment. One of the cars knocked open the gas meter; another opened a water line. Utility employees had shut off the lines after the derailment.

Water was turned back on early Tuesday morning, but Continental Products employees worked all day without much heat, as the gas meter was not scheduled to be turned on until nightfall, according to Alecia Self, assistant to the manager.

The company building sustained no damage, but the train came within 20 feet of its northeast corner. Continental will have to replace the lawn sprinkler system and some sod which was chewed up by the derailed cars.

Hanfeld said the accident was caused by what railmen call slack action. As the train rounded the curve where the accident occurred, the rear cars were rolling faster than the ones on the front end. There are between six and eight inches of slack, or play, on each car. The cars bunched up at that point, causing six on the end to jump the track. There was no problem with the train's brakes, he said.

Voters can register until Dec. 16

Midlanders who have not yet registered to vote have only until Dec. 16 to do so for the Jan. 15 county-wide "bingo" election, according to Janeice Builta, elections administrator.

"It is later than you think," said Ms. Builta. "Hurry. Get it done fast."

The election will give Midland voters a chance to vote for or to reject the legalization of bingo games for charitable purposes as authorized by the Bingo Enabling Act of 1981.

Bingo was rejected by voters in Lamesa and Dawson County earlier this year, but was passed by the electorate in Odessa, Big Lake and Andrews.

The Texas Election Laws require that a person must be registered to vote at least 30 days prior to an election to be eligible to cast a ballot.

Absentee voting in the bingo election will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays from Dec. 27 to Jan. 11 in the Elections Administrator Office at 709 W. Washington Ave.

Ms. Builta noted that voters who have moved or changed their address must get their salmon-colored voter registration certificates corrected by Dec. 16 in order to vote in their precincts. The reverse side of the certificate gives instructions on changes of address, she said. Corrected certificates may be mailed to Voter Registration, P.O. Box 3434, Midland, Texas 79702, or the voter may come by the office or telephone at 687-0231.

The bingo election was called last month by the Midland County Commissioners' Court after petitions bearing about 3,000 signatures and requesting the election were submitted to County Judge Bill Ahders.

The campaign to hold the election was led by the Tall City Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7208 before and after State Comptroller Bob Bullock's "Raiders" raided and closed down the post's illegal family bingo games Sept. 23.

Correction

In Tuesday's edition of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, a story carried an inaccurate headline. The story on Page 1C on the collision of a police car with a car driven by Karl D. Reagan Jr. carried a headline which indicated that the police car had rammed Reagan's car at the intersection of Lee Street and East Wall Avenue. Police reports indicated the police car was attempting to pass Reagan's car when Reagan made a slight jog to the left and the vehicles collided.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Midland considering new wrecked-car arrangement

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Following a pattern set by one Dallas suburb, city and police officials hope to unravel the administrative tangles in Midland's procedure for impounding motor vehicles.

But one local wrecker operator fears that a system like Richardson's could be "opening a can of worms" in Midland, while another tow-truck owner fears it could wreck the competitive balance among Midland towing services.

At a Nov. 30 meeting, the city council voted to appropriate $20,000 for improving and expanding its vehicle impoundment area, a fenced lot directly north of the animal shelter at 1601 Orchard Lane.

The renovated area would incorporate land east of the shelter now occupied by a firefighter training field. Additional fence, pavement and lights are called for, along with an office building to accommodate a 24-hour attendant.

INSTEAD OF rotating wrecker duties among several area companies, the city plans to contract with one wrecker company for round-the-clock service.

"We're not in the automobile or storage business," said Lt. Herman Wicker, whose police traffic division directs the impoundment operation. "What we're trying to do is provide a service to the people of Midland and cut down on the amount of paperwork we have to do for private wrecker companies."

Wicker explained that eight wreckers now take two-week shifts as the city's on-duty wrecker. Unless a vehicle's owner specifies a different wrecker company, police summon the on-duty wrecker when an accident occurs, an abandoned car needs towing or a prisoner's auto requires impounding.

If a car is towed to Midland's impoundment area, the city collects a $1 daily storage fee. Wrecked cars are transported to an auto dealership, repair shop or junk lot instead of the car pound.

WICKER SAID the police department must keep track of the rotating wrecker schedules. He said car owners often will complain to police that the towing or storage charge levied by a private firm is excessive. In some cases, the city collects wrecker fees and must reimburse the companies each month.

"It causes us all kinds of book work here at the police department," he said.

A 24-hour attendant supplied by the wrecker company could check vehicles in and out of the lot, collect fees and relieve patrolmen from making frequent trips to release cars from the lot, Wicker said.

The attendant, more fence and additional lighting would help reduce theft and vandalism now plaguing the lot, according to James Brown, city manager.

About $2,000-$3,000 worth of automobile equipment, for which the city is deemed liable, disappeared from impounded cars this year, said Brown.

WICKER NOTED that a single wrecker company would eliminate the proliferation of impoundment lot keys, thus helping reduce the chance a gate might be accidentally left open.

Brown said that while an ordinance detailing specific wrecker service requirements has yet to be drafted, the necessary impoundment area improvements will proceed. He estimated that the physical

Harrelson story under scrutiny by prosecution

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The prosecution resumed questioning rebuttal witnesses today in its quest to discredit convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson's alibi for the day U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. was assassinated.

Convict John Lee Spinelli, who recorded Harrelson's conversations at the Harris County Jail in Houston last year, was expected to continue his testimony today.

The government quickly called 15 rebuttal witnesses Tuesday after the last of three defense attorneys rested in the trial of Harrelson, 44, his wife, Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, 41, and Elizabeth Chagra, 28.

Through Tuesday, 125 witnesses had appeared during nine weeks of testimony in the lengthy trial.

Harrelson is charged with shooting Wood in the back on May 29, 1979, for a $250,000 fee from Mrs. Chagra's husband, convicted narcotics kingpin Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra. Chagra will be tried for murder separately later.

Prosecutors contend Chagra, 39, wanted Wood dead because he feared the judge would give him a life sentence on a 1979 narcotics charge.

After Wood's death, Chagra was tried and sentenced to 30 years without parole by U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions, who is presiding at the current trial.

Mrs. Chagra is charged with conspiracy to commit murder and to obstruct justice. Mrs. Harrelson is accused of conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Harrelson contends he was in Dallas the day of the killing and his attorneys called a hairstylist, doorman, bank teller and sunglasses salesman to tell the jury they saw him there that morning, as early as an hour after Wood was shot in the back with a high-powered rifle.

Prosecutors have tried to show through rebuttal witnesses that the alibi-witnesses were mistaken about the time they saw Harrelson in Dallas, 272 miles north of here.

On Tuesday, prosecutor Ed Timmons introduced records from the Town House Motel showing Harrelson was registered there under the alias Bill Bannister from May 21 to 25 and again on May 28, a time the government alleges Harrelson was "stalking" Wood.

Is academic training adequate for nurses?

believes are no longer emphasized in nursing schools.

"How can nurses be expected to have self-confidence and establish good relations (with patients and physicians) when they don't know the importance of taking vital signs, weighing the patient, feeling skin or following physicians orders?" Mendez questioned.

KELM CONTENDS there is an adjustment or training period in any profession, including nursing.

"Other professions have not expected a new employee to be completely functional right away," Kelm said.

"Diploma nurses were trained on the job and then placed in positions of running floors two years after graduation," he explained. "Nursing education changed because there was a need for a strong theoretical base with a much stronger emphasis on sciences."

While experienced nurses are the most difficult to recruit because of the location, the new graduates are easier to attract, Kelm said.

"New graduates are mobile," Kelm added. "You need a lot of these kind of nurses here (Midland)."

And for this reason, MMH's preceptor program provides an experienced nurse with an interest in helping new graduates and other nurses.

Nurses may choose from three nursing specialties. Also, the newly-employed nurses will fulfill the required 13-week orientation program which includes work experience for two weeks on the 7 a.m. to 3 p.m., 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. and/or the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shifts.

"WITH THE PRECEPTOR program we're translating theory into practice for the new graduate or the nurse who is coming back," Kelm said. "It's a reality shock for these nurses. They become overwhelmed after being in the university setting.

"This new system will ease them in and they won't be dumped anymore," Kelm added. "When they feel confident, we'll let them go (on the floor)."

In addition, nurses are being trained to physically assess the patient.

"For example, nurses weren't taught to know what gas sounded like," Kelm said. "If the nurse discovers a difficulty after assessing the patient, she can call the doctor.

"Our nurses will know when the patient is getting into trouble," he added.

Mendez said the program is a good idea, but it's the educational training that concerns him. He agrees with Ms. Ream that "nurse educators have been teaching their students that they are being prepared for management roles. The art of skilled nursing is thus dying out. Bedside care has been relinquished to aides and orderlies."

Ms. Sadousky said the local office recently acquired the HiCube from national headquarters. It is a large disaster vehicle, she said, and was taking blankets, comfort kits, food and drink containers. Comfort kits include shampoo and toothpaste and are given to victims in the shelters.

The three Midlanders were driving straight through to St. Louis and should be arriving sometime this evening, according to Ms. Sadousky.

The extent of the flooding and damages has caused the national Red Cross office to call in all disaster reserve volunteers from throughout the country and all large vehicles, such as the HiCube.

Compounding the problem in getting volunteers, she said, is that several are still in Hawaii, which was hit by a hurricane about two weeks ago.

"They could use all the volunteers in the St. Louis area. And because of Christmas coming, it's hard to get some people," Ms. Sadousky said.

improvements could be complete as early as April 1983.

John Evans, who operates Independent Wrecker Service Inc., and participates in the wrecker rotation, said the requirements of a 24-hour service may be impossible for some local wrecker companies to meet.

Evans estimated that the contract company may need four wreckers and drivers to meet Midland's needs.

Presently operating three wreckers, Evans said he'd likely need to hire additional drivers and add three wreckers at perhaps $20,000 apiece in order to service city and non-city towing.

He said that a company making such an investment could face difficulties should it ever lose its city contract.

WITH GREATER inflation and fuel costs a constant threat, Evans said, a wrecker service also may be reluctant to tie itself to a long-term contract at a fixed price.

Another participant in the wrecker rotation, Allen Frasier, owner of ARC Truck and Auto Body, said the contract system could create a "monopoly" and drive many operations out of business.

Frasier said if only a few wrecker services survive, Midlanders could be paying greater wrecker fees for non-city towing operations.

But Brown stressed that the details of Midland's system have yet to be decided, and noted that local wrecker companies will likely be given a chance to comment on the plan.

Wayne Gay, with the Richardson police department, said that city is never lacking for wrecker companies interested in its one-year contract. Gay said Richardson demands two wreckers on duty at all times and requires a 15-minute response time.

Dick Trible, of Trible Wrecking, Richardson's contract wrecker for the past three years, said a 24-hour service contract could put a burden on a small towing company.

TRIBLE SAID his company maintains 15 wreckers to provide service to Richardson and Dallas. Without Richardson's contract, the company would likely have to drop a few trucks, Trible said.

For a wrecker company pondering a large investment to meet a city's needs, Trible said a long-term contract is ideal.

"If you can get a three-year contract, then you can rest assured that you'd get your money back," he said.

Chester Nolen, Odessa's deputy city manager, said there are nearly as many ways to operate a wrecker service as there are cities in Texas.

Nolen said Odessa contracted with a single wrecker company for several years, "until it got into a situation where the contractors were bidding so low that they were cutting their own throat on their profit margin."

He said Odessa has opted for a rotation system, in which two companies split month-long stints as on-duty wrecker and charge fees based on city-approved price ceilings. To properly service Odessa around-the-clock, about four wreckers are needed, Nolen said.

Salvation Army gets Elks help

The Midland Elks Lodge will be getting into the Christmas spirit by ringing the bell for the Salvation Army Friday.

In a one-day fund-raising effort last year, the Elks collected more than $1,100 for the Salvation Army.

The Elks Lodge, organized here in 1950, has long been a civic leader in its good works. It helps sponsor a Clinic for Handicapped Children in Oteen, Texas, participates in National Elks Benevolences and last year sponsored a state winner in its Most Valuable Student contest.

The winner of the Most Valuable Student contest receives a four-year scholarship at $1,250 per year. Applications for this year's award are now being accepted.

Two robberies reported at Odessa restaurants

ODESSA — Police are investigating two restaurant robberies that occurred seven hours apart here Tuesday.

The first took place about 3:30 p.m. when a black woman armed with a small caliber automatic pistol entered the Country Burger Restaurant at 1534 E. 8th Street and escaped with an undisclosed amount of cash after ordering the cashier to lie on the floor, according to police.

The suspect was described as about 20 years old and wearing a green checkered skirt and blue and white jacket.

The second robbery occurred at the Taco Villa Restaurant, 3812 E. 42nd St., about 10:20 p.m.

Police said they were told two Mexican men in their late teens came in armed with a knife and a small caliber handgun and fled on foot after taking an undisclosed amount of money.

They were both about 18 years old, weighed approximately 140 pounds and were wearing red bandanas.

MONAHANS (AP) — An Odessa minister active in efforts to desegregate Ector County public schools has been charged with stealing $3,000 worth of boots from a store here, police said.

Laurence Hurd, 45, surrendered to Monahans police Saturday after a warrant was issued for his arrest in connection with the Nov. 23 burglary of a Monahans boot store, said Monahans Police Sgt. Jim Vaughan.

Hurd was released Tuesday after posting $5,000 bond on a burglary charge, Vaughan said.

Ward County Justice of the Peace L.A. Wester, who issued the arrest warrant and set the bond, said Hurd was implicated in the burglary by another man who police believe was involved in the crime.

MARLENE SOROSKY'S HOLIDAY SALAD

Brussels Sprouts and tomatoes add seasonal color.

1 pound fresh Brussels sprouts (about 2 cups)
1½ pounds zucchini (about 3 medium), sliced
¼ cup sliced green onions
Vinaigrette Marinade, recipe follows
1 pound cherry tomatoes
1 head Boston or red leaf lettuce

In a medium saucepan bring a small amount of salted water to boil. Add Brussels sprouts, return to a boil, and simmer until tender but still crisp, about 5 minutes. Do not overcook, as they will continue to cook in the marinade. Plunge immediately into a bowl of ice water to stop the cooking. Drain well; slice into 4 or 5 slices each. Toss with zucchini and onions. Pour Marinade over vegetables and refrigerate covered for at least 12 hours or overnight, stirring occasionally. One hour before serving, add tomatoes to marinade. Line a serving platter with lettuce leaves. Spoon vegetables onto lettuce leaves. Serves 8.

Vinaigrette Marinade: In a glass jar or food processor with metal blade, mix together 1 cup salad or olive oil, ¼ cup lemon juice, ¼ cup white wine vinegar, 2 cloves garlic, crushed, 2 teaspoons seasoned salt, 1 teaspoon sugar, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon crushed dry red chilies or Tabasco sauce. Marinade may be refrigerated up to 2 days. From "Marlene Sorosky's Year-Round Holiday Cookbook" (Harper & Row).

Dessert events are becoming very popular from coast to coast, particularly during the busy holiday season. Cranberry Crown Cake, a white cake made extra moist and light by adding whipped topping to the batter before baking, is an ideal choice for serving guests. Vibrant red cranberries placed on top and between the cake layers add a festive look to any table. Additional whipped topping garnishes the cake.

Dessert events simplify entertaining

Gala dessert events are the new entertaining trend seen from coast to coast. These parties are particularly suited to the holiday season, when both schedules and budgets are tight. As with most entertaining, part of the fun is finding new, exciting foods which tantalize guest's tastebuds yet are not difficult to prepare.

Fresh cranberries, so abundant this time of year, needn't be saved for the relish on the holiday dinner table alone. The fruit and cranberry juice combine in a vibrant, colorful sauce which is sread between white cake layers and then tops the cake. The Cranberry Crown Cake is made extra moist and light with the addition of whipped topping to the prepared cake mix before it is baked. Additional whipped topping garnishes the festive cake.

The dessert is particularly suited to holiday entertaining, because it can be assembled hours before serving.

Another trend seen across the country is the return of hearty, basic foods from our past. Many, like Creamy Autumn Rice, have been updated in some way. Whipped topping, for example, replaces the time-comsuming custard in this rice "pudding." The contrast of warm rice and cool whipped topping with raisins, apricots and almonds added for party flavor also makes this dessert unique.

CRANBERRY CROWN CAKE

1 two-layer white cake mix
1 9-oz. container whipped topping, thawed
3/4 cup cranberry juice cocktail
3 cups craberries
1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons cornstarach

Prepare cake mix as directed on package for two 9-inch layers, folding 1-1/2 cups whipped topping into batter. Bake according to package directions.

Combine juice and cranberries in saucepan; bring to boil. Reduce heat; simmer 10 miniutes. Add combined sugar and cornstarch. Cook, stirring constantly, over medium heat until mixture boils and thickens. Cool, fill and top cake with glaze. Garnish with remaining whipped topping.

CREAMY AUTUMN RICE

3 cups milk
1 cup rice
1/2 teaspoons salt
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup chopped dried apricots
1/2 cup slivered almonds, toasted
1/2 teaspoon rum flavoring
1 9-oz. container whipped topping, thawed

Combine milk, rice and salt in saucepan. Cook over medium heat until bubbles form around edge; reduce heat. Cover; simmer, stirring occasionally, 20 minutes. Add combined raisins, apricots, nuts and flavoring. Simmer five to 10 minutes or until all the milk is absorbed. Cool slightly. Fold in whipped topping; spoon into dessert glasses. Serve warm. Makes eight servings.

Holiday cooks get helping hand

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Cooks who like to entertain at special times, but need help with menus and recipes, may find "Marlene Sorosky's Year-Round Holiday Cookbook" a lifesaver. Marlene's offerings cater to cross-country tastes — some are epicurean, some typically American.

Including Christmas and Hannukah and New Year's, of course, Marlene's book covers the holidays and special occasions. There's a Valentine's Day Dinner and a St. Patrick's Day party, an Easter gala buffet and a Passover Seder. Mother's Day and Father's Day are treated; so are wedding anniversaries — with a dinner menu for 16 that may be halved or doubled.

She also gives menus and recipes for a graduation party, baby shower brunch, sweet sixteen luncheon and wedding reception. And, of course, patriotic parties get their due: there's a Fourth of July barbecue, a Labor Day picnic and an Election Returns lap party. Thanksgiving isn't neglected, neither are treats for Halloween.

Marlene has studied with some of the best culinary teachers in the United States and abroad and has wide experience in conducting cooking classes herself. I particularly like the way she melds the old and the new. For example, she transforms such a classic dessert as Linzer Torte into Linzer Cookies. As to the new — I vote for her Currant-Studded Pate. I found her chicken liver mixture, with its imaginative addition of currants soaked in white wind, both delicious and interesting — and so did my tasters.

MARLENE SOROSKY'S CURRANT PATE

¼ cup currants
⅓ cup dry white wine
12 tablespoons (1½ sticks) butter
½ pound fresh mushrooms, coarsely chopped
1-3rd cup chopped green onions
1 teaspoon salt
1 clove garlic, crushed
1 pound chicken livers
¼ teaspoon Tabasco sauce
Bread rounds or crackers

Marinate currants in white wine for 4 hours or overnight. Drain, reserving the juices. Melt 4 tablespoons butter in a large skillet. Saute mushrooms, green onions, salt and garlic until soft, about 3 minutes. Add livers and saute over moderately high heat, turning until livers are browned outside but pink within. Stir in the reserved wine and Tabasco sauce. Cover and simmer slowly for 5 minutes. Cool.

Transfer mixture to a food processor fitted with the metal blade or to a blender. Process until smooth. Add remaining stick of butter and blend until smooth. Remove to a bowl and stir in currants. Spoon into a 3-cup crock or pate mold. Cover and refrigerate for at least 4 hours. May be refrigerated for 2 days or frozen for 1 month. Before serving, bring to room temperature. Serve with bread rounds or crackers.

Makes 3 cups; serves about 12.

Brothers operating two similar 'sister wineries'

By NATHAN CHROMAN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Dominique Portet of Australia's Taltarni Vineyards and Bernard Portet of Napa Valley's Clos du Val Winery are brothers who operate sister wineries. Confusing? Yes, but here are two French-born brothers, the sixth generation of a family of wine makers, both noted for making fine wine in their respective countries. Both wineries are owned by John Goelet, the French-American millionaire-owner of U.S. Chemical Bank Inc., who wisely allows each brother to do his own thing.

While Clos du Val is well known throughout the United States, Taltarni Vineyards is not. It is a winery worth knowing, as recent red wine releases attest. The wines are neither California nor Bordeaux in style, yet the reds seem to reflect both areas with a slight emphasis toward the latter.

Four reds are currently on the market: Shiraz 1978 and 1979 and Cabernet Sauvignon 1978 and 1979. All are from second and third harvest, respectively, and show extremely well considering the youthful age of the vines.

Shiraz 1978, not unlike a California Petite Sirah made from a French Petite Sirah clone, is a big, full, rich, powerful wine that needs more age to come together. Plenty of fruit here. At 13.3 percent alcohol, the wine is somewhat softened by 6 percent Malbec grapes. Ample tannin should age the wine nicely for the next decade. A good buy at $7.50.

The 1979 with less aroma and good fruit should develop nicely, too. It is long on flavor but not as rich as the '78. Perhaps this will mature soon for earlier table use.

Best of all is the 1978 Cabernet with 2 percent Malbec and 6 percent Cabernet Franc grapes. This showed considerable elegance in a silky-smooth style yet with adequate tannin that was not intrusive to the taste. At $7.50 this may be Australia's best red wine buy.

The '79 was no slouch either with 3 percent Malbec and 3 percent Cabernet Franc. Elegance here is definitely on its way. The wine has a big, aromatic nose, solid fruit and drinks well. It has spent two years in Navarre oak and is an outstanding buy at $6.50. Both Cabs will do well now with roasts and game, though a five-year wait on either should promote complexity.

Cook wild fowl by variety of methods

By MARIE BIANCO
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

In the days before supermarket chickens promised every consumer a "tender bird," the responsibility for bringing good-tasting, fork-tender fowl to the table was divided equally between hunter and cook. It was the hunter's duty to bag and treat the wild-fowl with the utmost care, while in the kitchen the cook explored cooking techniques to bring out the best in flavor and tenderness.

Most of our cookbooks have been influenced by the French and English, who believed that fresh meat requires aging or chilling to develop a more robust flavor. They have been known to hang birds for as long as three weeks. Still, there are hunters who believe that prolonged aging is unnecessary, and that leaving the bird for a day in the refrigerator is sufficient.

All wild birds have considerably less body fat than domestic fowl, and so a game bird cannot be treated like a plump chicken or a frozen, pre-basted turkey. Smaller ones, because they are naturally tender, can be sauteed, but the older birds should be cooked with moist heat — either braised or stewed — to tenderize tough connective tissue.

The bacon-draped wild duck and the wild turkey prepared in Newsday's test kitchen were tender and juicy when roasted in self-basting, nylon, oven-cooking bags, and their flavor was more intense than their domestic counterparts.

WHETHER TO ROAST or stew depends upon the age of the bird, and it's helpful to know how to tell an old bird from a young one. If you can lift the bird by its lower jaw with no indication of its breaking; if the tips of the claws are rather blunted and the breastbone is stiff and rigid, you can assume it's a mature bird and should be cooked with moist heat.

When hunting geese, explained Charlie Burge of Lloyd Neck, N.Y., don't aim for the lead bird in a flying formation. "He's going to be the oldest — and the toughest," Burge said, "just as the last one will be the youngest."

Most hunters agree that game birds, including the upland ones (pheasant, partridge, quail, wild turkey, squab) and waterfowl (wild ducks and geese), should be plucked, drawn and cooled as soon as possible. Whether to pluck them or skin them depends on one's patience and perseverance.

By leaving the skin on, all the natural juices are sealed in; especially when roasting, there is less chance of the meat's drying out. However, skinning is a lot faster than plucking, and most hunters opt for this method when they have a great number of very small birds.

In the 30 years that Burge has been hunting game, he has noticed that hunters hate to pluck ducks, because it is so tedious, and will often "breast" them instead. This calls for skinning the breast area and cutting off the thick chunks of meat. "It seems like a waste," he said, "but the little meat that is on the legs and back is just too tough."

TO AVOID tearing the skin, dry-pluck the bird while it is still warm, pulling the feathers downward and in the direction that they grow. Any persistent pinfeathers can be removed with a tweezers.

Bill Hough, a member of the Matinecock Rod and Gun Club on Long Island, always filets and bones game birds as quickly as possible. "I prefer to skin them," he said, "because it gives me a view of all the (bird) shot, and if it has done damage to the flesh. The shot can push the feathers quite a distance into the meat and if you don't cut it out and clean it, it gives a bad taste." Having grown up in Georgia, Hough cooks pheasant, grouse and quail the same way he prepares his favorite southern fried chicken, soaking it for 30 minutes in milk to take any stringiness out of the bird.

Before cooking duck, Nina McCabe of Massapequa, N.Y., likes to soak them for at least an hour in salted water with a little vinegar added. "This takes away any gamey flavor they might have, especially if the ducks have recently been eating eel grass, which can give them a strong taste," said Mrs. McCabe.

PHEASANT MARSALA

2 pheasants, 1 1-2 to 2 pounds each
1 peeled navel orange, reserving peel
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 cups marsala wine
1 onion, chopped
2 teaspoons salt
1-4 teaspoon fennel seed
1-4 teaspoon black pepper
4 medium carrots, cut in 1-inch chunks
4 medium potatoes, peeled and quartered
12 ounces mushrooms
4 small zucchini, cut in 1-inch chunks
1-4 pound butter
1-4 cup all-purpose flour

1. Rinse birds and pat dry. Cut off any visible fat. Place orange half in each cavity. Tie legs with string.

2. In a large, heavy dutch oven, heat oil. Add birds and brown on all sides. Pour off any drippings. Add wine, onion, salt, fennel seed, pepper and half the orange peel. Cover and roast in a 375-degree oven for 15 minutes. Add carrots, potatoes and mushrooms. Roast, covered, 45 minutes longer, basting occasionally with pan liquid. Add zucchini and continue cooking 15 minutes more or until vegetables are tender and legs of bird move easily up and down. Remove birds to large platter; remove string on legs. Arrange vegetables around pheasants. Strain pan juices.

3. In a small saucepan, melt butter. Stir in flour and cook until smooth and bubbly. Add strained juice to pan and cook, stirring constantly, until mixture comes to a boil. Boil for 1 minute. Pour into gravy boat and serve over pheasant and vegetables. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

ROASTED WILD TURKEY WITH CHESTNUT STUFFING

1 wild turkey, about 8 to 10 pounds
salt
1 apple, quartered
1 stalk celery
6 strips bacon

For stuffing:
1-2 pound dried chestnuts
1 loaf unsliced firm white bread
1-2 pound butter
2 medium onions, chopped
1 cup sliced mushrooms
1 teaspoon dried tarragon
1-4 teaspoon thyme
1-2 teaspoon crushed rosemary leaves
1-2 cup chopped fresh italian parsley
1-2 cup chicken broth, optional

1. Wash turkey and pat dry. Sprinkle with salt inside and out and place apple and celery in cavity. Drape bacon over breast and place in oven-cooking bag following manufacturer's directions. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 1 1-2 to 2 hours or until turkey is tender.

2. To make stuffing, soak the dried chestnuts overnight in water to cover. Drain, cover with fresh water and boil until tender. Chop coarsely.

3. Tear bread into large chunks and rub between the palms to produce bread crumbs or process in a food processor. There should be about 10 cups. Place in a large mixing bowl.

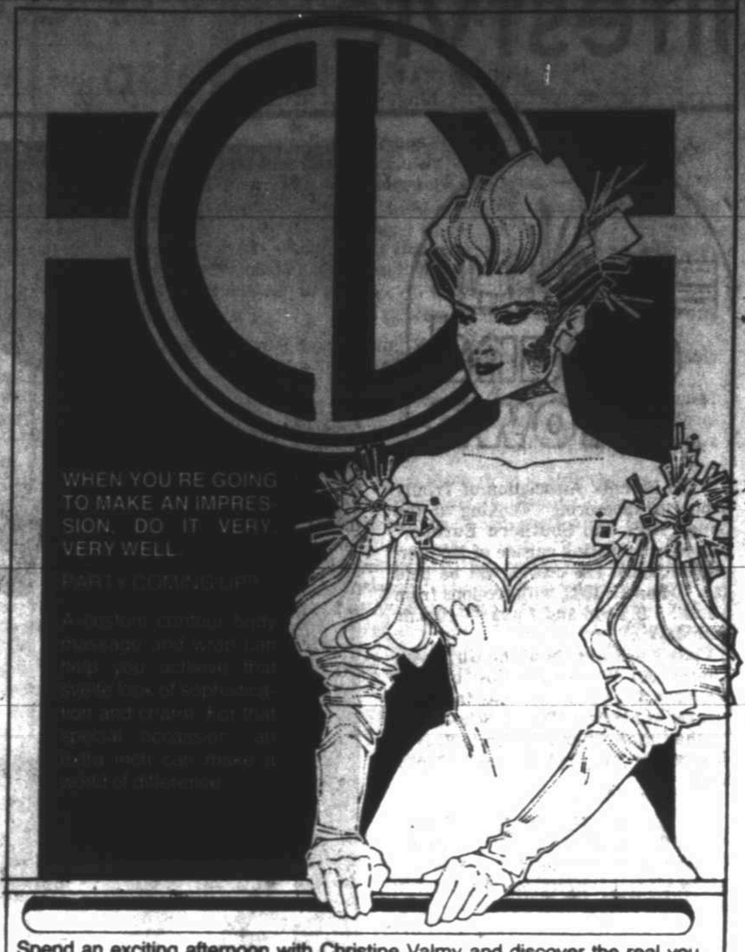

4. In a large heavy skillet, melt butter and steep onions and mushrooms for about 10 minutes. Stir in tarragon, thyme, rosemary and parsley. Add to bread crumbs and mix well. Add a small amount of chicken broth if too dry. Place in an oven-proof casserole, cover, and bake in a 350-degree oven for 30 minutes.

ROAST WILD DUCK WITH SAUERKRAUT

2 wild ducks, 2 to 2 1-2 pounds each salt and pepper
2 tablespoons paprika
2 apples, quartered
2 onions, quartered
8 slices bacon, divided
1 small onion, chopped
3 cups sauerkraut, rinsed well
1 apple, chopped fine
1 teaspoon caraway seeds

1. Rinse ducks and pat dry. Sprinkle cavities with salt, pepper and paprika and place half the apple and onion quarters in each. Sprinkle outside of ducks with salt, pepper and paprika and lay six bacon strips over breasts. Place in an oven-cooking bag following manufacturer's instructions and bake in a 350-degree oven for 1 to 1 1-4 hours.

2. Dice the remaining bacon and fry it in a large, shallow, flameproof casserole. Add onion and cook until soft. Add sauerkraut, apple and caraway seeds and mix well. Place in oven 20 minutes before ducks are done. Remove ducks; discard apple and onion. Arrange over sauerkraut.

The lasting value of a diamond. Nature's generosity is not unlimited. Nor is the diamond supply inexhaustible. Extraordinary stones of a carat or more are only one in a million and growing scarcer every year. Like love, they become more precious with time.
Just think of the emotional and lasting value of giving a diamond this extraordinary to the woman you love. Price appreciation cannot compare with her appreciation. And after all, your real investment is in love.

Delicious meals can be simple

By PEGGY KATALINICH
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

After a few weeks of heavy sauces, complicated preparations and long, involved recipes to taste, my friend sent up a cry for something simple: anything we could make after work and eat before Johnny Carson, preferably without filling the dishwasher.

Okay, I said, you do it. With slight alterations — after all, I had to put in a contribution — I present his menu, delicious but easy, ready 22 minutes from the time you arrive and put the rice on to cook until you sit down to eat.

It's even better if you have 47 minutes and can cook brown rice instead. The menu — sole with mustard and mushroom rice — needs a vegetable accompaniment; his choice was steamed fresh vegetables.

To speed preparation time further, you could buy a mix selected from a produce market that sells pre-cut vegetables for salads.

A big handful of these convenient vegetables also can be used as the base for the quick pasta sauce included here in a main dish. Mushrooms, already sliced, can be used in the fettucine that accompanies the second fish menu featuring tarragon scrod. While there will be some nutrient loss because the vegetables have been cut earlier, it's hard to beat the taste and texture of fresh.

SOLE WITH MUSTARD

1 to 2 tablespoons dijon mustard juice of 1-2 lemon
2 tablespoons butter, melted
salt and pepper to taste
1 1/4 pounds fillet of sole

Combine mustard, lemon juice, butter, salt and pepper. Put sole in one layer in a baking dish that can go under the broiler. Spread mustard mixture on sole. Broil 7 to 10 minutes, or until flakes. Don't overcook. Cooking time will depend on thickness. Serves 2.

MUSHROOM RICE

1 cup chicken broth
1/2 cup white rice
1/4 cup chopped mushrooms
2 green onions, chopped
1/4 cup chopped walnuts or pine nuts
salt and pepper to taste

Bring broth to boil; stir in rice, mushrooms, onions, walnuts, salt and pepper. Bring back to boil, then reduce heat very low, cover and simmer 20 minutes. Do not peek. If desired before serving, squeeze on a bit of lemon juice. Serves 2.

TARRAGON SCROD

1/2 cup dry white wine
2 tablespoons tarragon vinegar
2 shallots, minced
1 teaspoon tarragon
2 tablespoons butter, melted
1 1/4 pounds scrod or haddock
salt and pepper to taste

In a small saucepan, cook wine, vinegar and shallots on high heat until reduced by half. Stir in tarragon and butter. Cool briefly. Place scrod in a baking pan suitable to use in the broiler and small enough just to hold the fish. Pour wine-butter mixture on top. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Broil 10 to 12 minutes depending on thickness. There is a rule calling for 10 minutes of broiling per inch of thickness, but I prefer a minute or 2 longer. Serves 2.

GREEN FETTUCINE WITH MUSHROOMS

1/3 to 1/2 pound green fettucine
3 tablespoons butter
3/4 cup sliced mushrooms
1 clove garlic, minced
1/2 cup freshly grated parmesan cheese
salt and lots of freshly ground black pepper

Bring a large pot of water to the boil, add lots of salt and cook fettucine until tender but not overcooked. Meanwhile, melt butter and saute mushrooms until tender but still firm. Toss in garlic. To serve, drain pasta thoroughly. Return pasta to cooking pot and over very low heat toss in butter and mushrooms. Add cheese; salt and pepper to taste. Serve additional cheese at table. Serves 2.

QUICK VEGETABLE SPAGHETTI

2 to 3 cups mixed vegetables, cut up
1/3 to 1/2 pound spaghetti
3 tablespoons butter
3/4 cup heavy cream
1/2 teaspoon dijon mustard
salt and papper to taste
1/2 cup grated parmesan cheese
squeeze of lemon juice or hot sauce

Bring a large pot of water to the boil; add vegetables and cook until just tender. Remove vegetables using slotted spoon and run under cold water. Set aside. Use same water to cook pasta until tender but still firm. Meanwhile, heat butter in a large frypan. Add vegetables and cook briefly. Drain pasta thoroughly and add to pan along with cream, mustard and salt and papper to taste. Cook over low heat, stirring thoroughly, a few minutes. Stir in parmesan and lemon juice or hot sauce. Toss and serve.

Making champion hams

By MERLE ELLIS

I'll bet you didn't know that there were such things as champion hams, did you? Well, there are, and there are champion bacons, too, and sausages, and bolognas and such. At the 1982 American Cured Meat Championships held recently in Denver, Colorado there were 289 products entered in some 15 different categories!

The big winner in this year's competition was Burger's Country Hams of California, Missouri, with six top honors — three Grand Champion Awards and three Reserve Grand Champions. Being "ham champs" is nothing new to Burger's. A trophy case in the company office bulges with trophies and ribbons, top honors in national and state competitions year after year.

E.M. Burger got started in the ham curing business one winter during the Depression. He slaughtered three hogs for food for his family that year and cured the hams to sell to buy clothes for the kids. The following year, he sold a dozen cured hams and each succeeding year he sold a few more.

"Dad would be farming in the bottom below the house," recalls Morris Burger, son of the founder. "If he saw a white dish towel hanging from a pole, he knew somebody wanted to buy a ham and he'd come up to the house. He cured them in the farmhouse kitchen and hung them in the corn crib to age."

By 1952, farmer Burger was curing more than 1000 hams a year, and by 1956 he had given up farming to expand his ham-curing operation. Today, Burger's Ozark Country Cured Hams, Inc. is a $1.5 million business, but it's still a family affair. That farmer's son, Morris Burger, is now general manager. Brother-in-law Robert Keil is production manager. Mrs. E. M. Burger oversees the retail shipping from the little building that was her husband's first "ham house."

Burger's is one of the nation's largest producersof naturally cured and aged country hams. Each year they sell more than 75,000 hams, 25,000 slabs of hickory-smoked bacon, thousands of summer sausages and other specialty items such as jelly, preseves, cheese, smoked turkey, and hickory-smoked cornmeal.

Although Burger's made its reputation with its long-aged country hams, both smoked and unsmoked (they won top awards in both categories again this year), over 70 percent of their sales in recent years have been the softer, lightweight, "mild cured, commercial style hams." (They took Grand Champion in that category this year, too.)

"The younger people," according to Morris Burger, "aren't used to the old, sharper taste of a long-aged ham. Also, there is a big demand for smaller hams in the 10-pound range. A small ham gets too hard and dry if it ages for a year or more."

I was fortunate to be in the Ozarks last month and able to taste some of that championship ham on location. If you ever are in Missouri, about halfway between St. Louis and Kansas City and just a bit north of Jefferson City do stop at Burger's. They will be happy to show you around the place, and believe me, it is impressive to see 50,000 hams hanging under one roof.

If you don't plan on being in those parts for awhile, but you'd like some really great country ham or bacon for the holidays — for your family or as gifts for friends — send for their mail-lorder catalogue.

Using turkey leftovers Mexican-style

By BARBARA HANSEN
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Using up leftover holiday turkey is more of a problem in the United States than in Mexico, where Thanksgiving is missing from the fiesta list and Christmas is celebrated with different foods.

However, the Mexican approach to cooking can give new life to American turkey leftovers. In these recipes from Julian Tovar, chef of the El Torito Mexican restaurants, turkey shows its versatility as the main ingredient in tostadas, tacos and enchiladas.

The mixture goes on top of refried beans and a crisp tortilla for tostadas, which are further garnished with lettuce, cheese, taco sauce, sour cream, guacamole and tomatoes. For tacos, the filling is stuffed inside crisp taco shells and topped with lettuce, taco sauce and cheese. The enchiladas are put together easily by rolling the filling and a little cheese inside softened tortillas and adding canned enchilada sauce.

If even these easy dishes seem too much work after a round of holiday cooking, the filling is excellent on its own, with white rice and a green salad as accompaniments.

TURKEY FILLING

1 small onion, cut in thin strips
1 large green pepper, cut in thin strips
1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons oil
1 medium tomato, thinly sliced
4 fresh California chiles, roasted, peeled and thinly sliced
1 serrano chile, finely diced
2/3 cup tomato sauce
1 teaspoon oregano
1/2 teaspoon ground cumin
Salt
White pepper
2 cups shredded cooked turkey

Cook onion, green pepper and garlic in oil until green pepper is transparent. Add tomato, California and serrano chiles and tomato sauce. Simmer 10 minutes. Vegetables should be crisp-tender. Do not overcook. Add oregano, cumin, salt, pepper and turkey and stir. Simmer 5 to 10 minutes. Makes 5 cups.

TURKEY TACOS

16 taco shells
1 recipe Turkey Filling
2 cups shredded lettuce
1 cup taco sauce
2 cups shredded Cheddar cheese

Warm taco shells in oven. Place some Turkey Filling in each shell. Top with shredded lettuce, then taco sauce, then cheese. Makes 8 servings.

TURKEY ENCHILADAS

1/2 cup oil
16 corn tortillas
1 recipe Turkey Filling
2 cups shredded Cheddar cheese
1 (1-pound 3-ounce) can enchilada sauce

Heat oil in medium skillet. Fry each tortilla in oil until softened. Drain. Place some of Turkey Filling on one side of tortilla. Top with 1 tablespoon cheese and roll. Place enchiladas in 13 by 9-inch baking dish lined with thin layer of enchilada sauce. Top enchiladas with remaining enchilada sauce and cheese. Bake at 350 degrees 20 minutes, or until hot and bubbly. Makes 8 servings.

Happy Holidays

DEAR ABBY

Bride's choice of groom makes father blue

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a 23-year-old college graduate who has had one year of law school.

Last June I met the man I am going to marry. We have been constant companions since we met. He is 72 years old and a childless widower.

From the beginning, my father (age 65) has opposed this relationship. I am Dad's only daughter and the eldest "child," and he still treats me as though I were 13 years old. I haven't lived with my parents since 1977.

My problem is how to tactfully, firmly and lovingly tell my father to mind his own business. Hurry your advice, as the wedding is set for next month. — INDEPENDENT

DEAR INDEPENDENT: Every father's "business" is his daughter's happiness, so don't blame your father for opposing your decision to marry a man 49 years your senior. Your letter reveals an intelligent, articulate and strong woman. Now all you have to do is assure your father that you love him, and all you want are his "best wishes," but no advice.

DEAR ABBY: A message to "Jane," who suspects her boyfriend is a "closet gay" because she feels a certain "distance" when they kiss:

Maybe it's your breath. I've been dating a very attractive lady for about two months. I love to nuzzle, cuddle, hug and caress her, but I hate to kiss her because her breath is terrible.

Abby, how do you tell a lady she has bad breath?

Sign me... KISSLESS IN SEATTLE

DEAR KISSLESS: Tell her lovingly, confidentially, frankly and directly. But do tell her. Bad breath is often a warning signal of stomach trouble, disease of the mouth or a number of other serious ailments. It would be a kindness to tip her off. Do so without delay.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 31-year-old male with a 7-year-old daughter who was born out of wedlock. (I'll call her Betty.) Betty's mother, who was 22 at the time, was afraid to have an abortion, so she had the child but wanted nothing to do with her at the time of her birth or later.

For the first two years I raised Betty myself. It was very difficult, so my married sister and her husband took over, and Betty thinks they are her "real" parents. I contribute to her support and am considered a loving uncle.

What bothers me now is that when Betty grows up, it will come as a shock should she accidentally learn the circumstances of her birth.

I would like to tell her soon that I am her father. But how do I go about it? And what should I say if she asks about her biological mother? We live in different cities (my daughter and I), and I have no intention of taking her away from her present home. — SERIOUS AND HOPEFUL

DEAR SERIOUS: Discuss this with your sister and her husband. I think Betty should be told by you the circumstances of her birth — in the presence of the couple who have raised her as their own. It will not be easy, but your daughter deserves to have all her questions answered truthfully.

(What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Champagne, pate make a party

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

As the time nears to usher in the New Year, many of us are pondering what libation to serve, and what food should accompany it.

Festive snacks, whether they be French hors d'oeuvres, Italian antipasto, Scandinavian smorgasbord, or whatever, can make or break a party.

For any such occasion the refreshments should not only taste good, but look especially decorative. And for me, the most festive wassail of all is that golden glory knwon as champagne.

I have always linked this sparkling wine to the year-end holiday. There's something magic about the distinctive bottle topped with gold foil and the pop it makes when opened. Champagne is fine by itself, and still more decorative in a punch.

What champagne is to the wassail bowl, pate is to the delicacy table, in my opinion.

In France, the epicure is said to judge his host by the quality of the pate he serves, whether it be the costly Alsatian foie gras or one consisting of a paste made from game, fowl or pork. The important thing is proper seasoning.

In rural France, a country pate known as terrine is popular. It is coarser in texture than the fine pates, but some prefer this tangy mixture of meat and herbs spiked with a fortified wine.

As for the "bubbly," try this champagne and brandy punch that is easy to make and looks festive.

6 bottles (four-fifths quart each) extra dry champagne
1 fifth Cognac
12 ounces Cointreau
3 quarts sparkling water
Orange slices
Maraschino cherries

Combine iced champagne and equally chilled sparkling water with brandy and Cointreau in punch bowl. Garnish with orange slices and cherries. Blocks of ice can be added to the punch to keep it cold but it will eventually dilute the liquid. Makes about five dozen cups.

Book simplifies Greek dishes

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

It has been said that foreign food usually follows the sword of the invader, and Greece is no exception.

The pasta and tomato sauce featured in Greek kitchens made their way from Italy, rice and pastries came from the Persian Empire and coffee arrived by way of Turkey.

Some of the country's dishes appear in a refreshingly readable book called "Greek Cooking at Its American Best" (Wildcat Publishing Co. Inc., Westport, Conn.).

Greece has long been famous for its soups, and the book contains such classics as the egg and lemon combination, and lentil soup modeled after the potage for which Esau is said to have traded away his birthright.

Since Homeric days, vegetables have played a key role in the meal, sometimes replacing meat. And well they could, with such rib-sticking combinations as broiled tomatoes with feta or spinach cheese pie.

There are recipes here for such noted dishes as souvlakia, the succulent combination of skewered meat, mushrooms, green peppers and cherry tomatoes that the Persians called shish kebab, and moussaka, that mouth-watering combination of eggplant and ground mutton or beef.

All in all, a delightful book which captures the spirit of the Greek cuisine, as in this recipe for stuffed cucumbers.

4 medium cucumbers, chilled and peeled
4 ounces feta cheese, crumbled
2 tablespoons mayonnaise
Dash Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon fresh parsley, minced
8 black olives

Cut peeled cucumber in half lengthwise and scoop out seeds with spoon. In small bowl, combined feta, mayonnaise, Worcestershire and garlic powder. Blend well. Stuff cucumbers with cheese mixture, sprinkle with minced parsley, top with black olives and chill well. Cucumbers can be cut into bite-sized servings for cocktail parties or half cucumbers can be served as an accompaniment to the entree with lunch or dinner. Serves 8. Good with a dry white wine, well chilled.

LIVING TODAY

Chosing, caring for tree

By SHARON HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

The tradition of a decorated Christmas tree in the United States may date back to the Revolutionary War, when homesick Hessian troops cut and decorated fir trees as was their German custom. Since then the Christmas tree, with its forest fragrance and freshness, has come to represent the Yule season. It is the mainstay of both indoor and outdoor holiday decorations.

Today selecting the perfect Christmas tree is one of the highlights of many families' pre-holiday preparations. Choosing a tree that is just right for you will be easier if you know what species you are looking for, the different features that indicate a good tree, and how to select and maintain freshness.

SPECIES

Practically all species of evergreens are used for Christmas trees, although some are more popular and are in greater supply than others. No one species can be considered the best all-round Christmas tree, for each has its own individual characteristics. Although people in some areas of the country have a preference for a certain species, there are five that are most widely grown and sold. Each one is not available to consumers in every part of the country.

The Balsam fir has short, flat dark green needles, usually rounded at the tips. The needles are arranged feather-like on grayish, finely hairy twigs. The tiny twigs grow at right angles to each branch, resembling crosses (perhaps for a reason for their popularity at Christmas), and the rounded bud tips are coated with a waxy pitch.

Another short needled fir, the Douglas fir, has needles that are attached around the twig instead of in the feather-like arrangement of the Balsam fir. The needles are short-stalked, soft and pliable and are dark yellow-green or blue-green.

It usually is easy to identify an Eastern Red-cedar because its characteristics are so different from the other Christmas tree species. The Red-cedar has extremely short, dark blue-green, scale-like leaves.

The Scotch Pine, a very fast-growing tree, has needles longer than the Balsam and Douglas firs. The needles grow in clusters of two and are dark blue-green in color, usually twisted and from 1-1/2 to 2-1/2-inches long. However, within the past several years several varieties have been produced with shorter needles.

Both eastern and western White Pines are very much alike, with silvery blue-green needles that are soft to the touch. The very slender eastern pine needles are quite long — 2-1/2 to 5-inches — and are grouped together in clusters of five. The needles of the western White Pine are shorter and stouter.

SELECTING A TREE

A few simple procedures can make the selection of a perfect Christmas tree easier:

1. Determine where in your home you will display your tree. With this in mind, you will be able to tell what height you will need and whether all four sides must be suitable for display.

2. You should select a tree that is the right height for the space you have chosen for it. Cutting large portions off either end will alter the natural taper of the tree.

3. Freshness is an important key when selecting your tree. The needles should be resilient, but not brittle. Run your finger down a branch — the needles should adhere to each twig.

4. Shake or bounce the tree on the ground lightly to see that the needles are firmly attached. If only a few drop off, the tree is fresh and with proper care should retain its freshness indoors throughout the holiday season.

5. The limbs should be strong enough to hold ornaments and strings of electric lights and the tree should have a strong fragrance and good green color for the species.

6. Check the tree for freshness, cleanness, health and trimming, and be sure it displays the best qualities for the particular species.

CHRISTMAS TREE CARE

1. If you buy your tree several days before it will be set up and decorated, store it outside. Cut the butt of the tree at a diagonal about one inch above the original — this opens the pores and aids in the absorption of water. Place the butt end in a container of water.

2. When you bring it into the house, saw the butt again, squaring off the diagonal. This facilitates placing the tree in a stand as well as aiding absorption.

3. Keep the butt end of the tree in a conatiner of water the entire time it is in the house. Refill the container daily as the tree requires a lot of water. Sprinkling water on the branches and needles before you decorate the tree will help retain freshness.

4. Be sure that the base of the tree is well-supported and the tree is placed away from fireplaces, radiators, electric heaters, televisions or any other source of heat.

5. Open flames, such as lighted candles, should never be used on or near the tree. In addition never leave your home with the Christmas tree lights still on.

6. The longer the tree is indoors, the more combustible it will become. Check the electric light cords for graying and worn spots that could easily lead to fires. Also do not overload the electric circuits and avoid placing electric toys directly under the tree. Be sure to avoid the use of combustible decorations.

Following these care and precation measures should insure an attractive tree that stays fresh indoors for more than a week and a holiday season free from Christmas tree mishaps.

TIPS ON TRIPS

When traveling overseas limit the amount of luggage you take and be sure it's lightweight. It's often difficult to find porters, particularly inside the customs areas, and the luggage may prove too heavy to handle.

Make sure all your baggage is clearly labeled. Remove old destination labels and use a baggage tag identifying your name, address and tour group. Remember to leave expensive jewelry and furs at home. Experienced travelers do not travel with these items.

It would be farsighted of you to take along an extra pair of prescription eyeglasses or contact lens. A free brochure on sensible trip planning is available by writing to: Grand Circle Travel, Inc., 555 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022, or by calling toll-free 1-800-847-4240.

Court gives new life to state law

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A federal appeals court, acting on a case from Houston, has avoided wide constitutional issues and given new life to the Texas "Failure to Identify" law.

A three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed U.S. District Judge Woodrow Seals, who had declared the law unconstitutional and set aside the conviction of Gilbert Manley Spring in Houston municipal court.

Spring had been arrested on Nov. 13, 1975, for refusing to identify himself when two policemen saw him talking to a known prostitute on a sidewalk and demanded that he tell them who he was and where he lived.

In overturning Seals' ruling, the 5th Circuit did not deal with whether such police action is constitutional. Instead, it sliced the case down to a narrow technical ground.

The panel said the only issue before it was whether Spring was in state "custody" when he filed his U.S. District Court plea for a writ of habeas corpus — a plea that a prisoner be produced for a new hearing.

"The question presented for our decision is a narrow one: whether a warrant for arrest, issued as a result of a willful refusal to pay a fine, fulfills the 'in custody' requirement for federal habeas corpus jurisdiction in a case challenging the constitutionality of a statute that only imposes a fine," the 5th circuit said.

Habeas corpus "cannot be invoked to challenge a conviction that resulted in a cash fine only against the defendant," the opinion said.

In this case, the law does not set a jail term as punishment for failure to identify but a fine may be imposed. When Spring refused to pay the fine, the municipal court judge issued an order for his arrest on contempt of court to compel payment.

However, the 5th Circuit reasoned that "there are no conditions or restraints on his liberty arising out of the sentence imposed on him for violation of (the law). Spring was sentenced to a fine, pure and simple."

Whether he wants to pay the fine is another matter, the ruling added.

The 5th Circuit said "a specific provision for incarceration in the original sentence is necessary for the custody requirement in the federal habeas statute."

Michael McCanham, 27, shows how he looked at the beginning of 1982 weighing in at 460 pounds, left, and then last week, 210 pounds lighter at 250. McCanham wants to get down to 180 pounds and plans to accomplish it by the end of March. His secret: He hasn't eaten solid food since Dec. 2, 1981.

Man who has not eaten in year loses 250 pounds

DETROIT (AP) — Michael McCanham is a loser, probably the biggest loser you'll ever see — and that makes him happy.

A year ago, McCanham — Mickey to his friends — was anything but happy. He stood 5-foot-8 and weighed 460 pounds.

Now, the 27-year-old McCanham weighs 250 pounds and plans to weigh in at 180 pounds by the end of March.

"I don't know what 180 is," he joked.

The secret? McCanham hasn't eaten solid food since Dec. 2, 1981.

Well, to be absolutely honest, he did eat two pretzels in February.

"I didn't even realize I ate them until after, when I tasted the salt in my mouth. You know how it is, you see a bowl of pretzels and you take one and eat it," he said.

In a recent interview at home, McCanham said he was slightly chubby as a child but his battle with obesity didn't really begin until after high school.

He said he began piling up the pounds because he was depressed after breaking up with a woman he had dated for seven years. After carrying the excess weight for about four years, it took him nearly a year to make the decision to fast under a doctor's supervision.

Besides the pretzels, all the rapidly shrinking McCanham has consumed in the past year is a twice-daily protein drink, a potassium supplement and vitamins, and three quarts of liquid a day.

"The first three months, I couldn't keep it down very well," McCanham said, referring to the vanilla malt-flavored protein drink he was mixing in the small kitchen of the suburban Detroit home where he lives with his parents and two brothers.

The protein supplement, visits to a doctor and behavior modification and nutrition classes cost $95 each week. McCanham also walks three to five miles a day and does stretching and toning exercises.

What's left of McCanham has a much better personality than the original, according to his mother, Marie McCanham.

"He was such a bear," she said.

"Now I'm pretty and I'm such a nice fellow," McCanham joked as he headed back to work as an executive at Shatterproof Glass Corp., which manufactures automobile windows and other glass products.

"I let very little bother me any more," he said. I put a lot more value on my friends. My convictions are my convictions and I stick with them — I've done more growing in this one year than in any five before."

Later, at the studio where McCanham also hosts a weekly radio program of Irish music, the "Man Who Wouldn't Chew in '82" said, "It's the hardest I've ever consciously worked at anything in my life. It's a constant mental job. The first month and a half was a breeze, because I'd spent a lot of time getting up for it. Then the press hit and that carried me a bit further."

Publicity helps to prod him any time his resolve starts to weaken, particularly when visiting one of Detroit's Irish pubs, he says. While his friends drink beer, McCanham sticks to tea or soda.

"There are a couple things that I'd like to taste," he admitted. "Stroh's Signature beer came out since I started the fast, and I'd like to taste that."

Man fights over ticket

ABINGDON, Va. (AP) — What began as a one-man argument with New York City over a parking ticket has grown into a tongue-in-cheek campaign to relocate the Statute of Liberty.

Larry Bowman, editor of the weekly Washington County News, got a court notice in April 1981 from New York's Traffic Violations Bureau demanding he pay a $25 fine for overtime parking.

Bowman said he hadn't been in New York at the time of the alleged violation and wrote back saying so. His answer from the city was another notice — with a penalty attached.

Despite verbal promises by city officials to correct the error, Bowman said notices kept arriving with still more penalties. The bill now totals $590.

So he wrote a tongue-in-cheek editorial hinting he would seek title to the Statue of Liberty as damages for harassing an innocent citizen.

The only question, he wrote, was where to put the statue. Teacher Anna White posed the question to her seventh-grade class at Wallace Elementary School. The class responded with written suggestions.

"I know it's a tough decision," wrote student Mike Mann. "I would set the statue behind Wallace Elementary School. I think it would make the school look very graceful."

Alison Nash suggested planting the statue in nearby Holston Lake because, "that way, people won't have far to go."

Dieters can eat pizza

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Weight-watchers who feel guilty eating fattening foods while they sip on diet drinks or low-calorie beer now have something to sink their teeth into — Lite Pizza.

Pizza Transit Authority Inc., the Chapel Hill-based fast food franchising company, has introduced Lite Pizza — which has a fraction of the sodium and 20 percent fewer calories than standard pizza.

The product already has been swiftly accepted in Durham and Chapel Hill, says PTA President James R. Cherney. He says sales at one store increased 30 percent after Lite Pizza's introduction.

Mexican government authorizes petroleum exploration

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government has authorized its Pemex oil monopoly to join a Latin American enterprise aimed at finding and developing more petroleum resources.

The Petrolatin enterprise would be formed by Pemex, Petrobras of Brasil and Petroven of Venezuela.

Sources said the joint effort will not involve any economic risks or financial maneuvers. It will be limited to sharing technology and experience in exploration and exploitation of new wells, they said.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Miguel de la Madrid sent a proposal to congress that would limit the lame-duck interim between presidential election and the taking of power to a maximum of 90 days.

De la Madrid was inaugurated Wednesday, almost five months after his election July 4. The constitution provides that the inauguration take place within 150 days of the election.

The new president proposed that future elections be held the first Sunday of September, with the inauguration remaining on the traditional Dec. 1. He said the change "would avoid the problems posed for public administration in the final months of each presidential period."

Presidents in Mexico serve six-year terms.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Gasoline consumption declined by about 20 percent three days after the government doubled prices, according to a local newspaper's survey.

The Sol de Mexico said 90 percent of its interviews showed gas sales declining considerably after the price hike Thursday night, contrasting sharply to little reaction to previous price increases.

The new pump price for one gallon of regular gasoline was raised to $1.04, up from 54 cents, while the price of premium went up from 81 cents per gallon to about $1.00.

The gasoline price increase was one of the first moves by the new government of President Miguel de la Madrid to cut government subsidies and solve the nation's acute financial crisis.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Budget and Planning Department expects demand for basic chemical products to grow considerably in the next three years.

A department statement said that by 1985 demand for sulphuric acid, used principally to make fertilizer, should be more than double the 2.4 million tons used in 1980.

It said the demand for phosphoric acid should grow by an average of 30.5 percent each year and nitric acid by 26.5 percent through 1985.

Tiny amount of progress hopeful sign

By OWEN ULLMANN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The latest international stab at preserving free world trade produced scant progress. But in today's depressing economic climate, any effort to forestall a devastating global trade war is a hopeful sign.

Those who attended or observed the 88-nation trade conference in Geneva, Switzerland, a week ago agree the session produced disappointingly little in the way of halting the spread of trade barriers around the world.

However, there are those who see the talks as at least modestly helpful, those who believe nothing was gained and those who fear the conference only may have stirred up trade-war fires.

IT IS DIFFICULT to be positive about the situation. Recession and rising unemployment have struck countries around the world, and governments are responding by trying to protect their industries and workers from foreign competition.

The trend is reminiscent of the protectionist fever that broke out during the global depression that preceded World War II. The result then was a collapse of international trade, falling economic activity and a net loss of jobs.

The Geneva talks on GATT — the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade — failed to produce substantive action on such thorny issues as Japan's restrictive import policies; Western European subsidies for farm exports, which undercut prices charged by farmers elsewhere; the expansion of secret trade deals and barriers outside of GATT; the restrictions placed on trade of financial and other services, and mounting pressures in the U.S. Congress to protect domestic industry from overseas competitors.

Nevertheless, American officials, who called for the talks, seem optimistic about the outcome. U.S. officials said they brought a very modest agenda and only got about half of that. Yet, they claim some success if only because the participants renewed their commitment to free trade and agreed to study several contentious trade disputes with an eye toward resolving them within the next one to three years.

"Despite almost overwhelming economic and political pressures, 88 nations have met and moved forward more than a few inches," U.S. Trade Representative William Brock said at the end of the conference. "In these times it would have been easy to fall back — to regress from prior achievement. We did not make this mistake."

ANOTHER U.S. TRADE official, who did not want his name used, said it would have been "a disaster" had the talks unleashed new trade-war pressures. He said the conference was a success if it did nothing more than prevent a worsening of trade relations.

But some observers say the talks were a failure because they did not stem the momentum toward protectionism. Negotiators lent only lip service to the idea of free trade, departed with all their bitter disputes unsettled and managed to postpone any meaningful steps to dismantle trade barriers under the guise of commissioning further studies.

Thibaut de Saint Phalle, a trade expert at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, said the conference was hastily arranged by U.S. officials and reflected a lack of preparation that ruled out any accomplishments from the outset. He said it was "a mistake to have something as delicate as these negotiations" with so little planning and under current economic conditions.

"I think the conference was more negative than anything," he said. "I don't know why it was called unless Brock thought he could give Congress the impression that the administration is on top of it and there is no need for protectionist measures.

"But I think it would be terribly counterproductive in the long run because its failure will give further fuel to Congress to pass protectionist legislation."

THE MIDDLE VIEW is that the talks laid the groundwork for dealing with some old and new trade issues, but that anything meaningful will not occur until at least 1985, when an improved economic climate may make it possible for an agreement to dismantle restrictions.

"Clearly the talks were disappointing in their failure to take stronger steps to halt the deterioration of trade," said Fred Bergsten, an assistant Treasury secretary in the Carter administration and now director of the Institute for International Economics. "But at the same time, there were some positive things."

Bergsten notes that the negotiators agreed to take new actions against policies inconsistent with the spirit of GATT, even though they could not agree on what actions to take. "At least it's something people can point to."

"You could argue the cup is half full or half empty, but it's not an empty cup," he said. "If the cup continues to drain, then this meeting could have been a tragically missed opportunity."

Here is a rundown on the major issues discussed at the meeting and what was accomplished:

Farm Subsidies

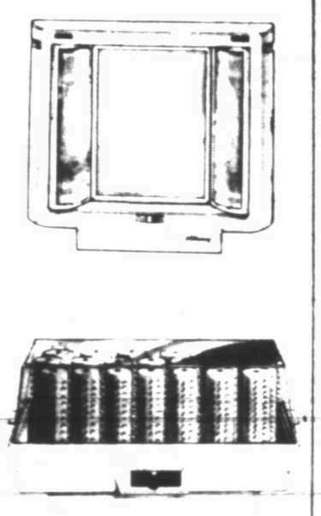

This was the most contentious issue, pitting the United States against European insistence on continuing government subsidies to promote agricultural exports. U.S. concern about European undercutting of American prices is heightened by the depressed state of the farm economy in the United States.

The declaration issued after the meeting called for a study of farm export subsidies with the intention of moving against them by 1984. U.S. officials say the language is a major U.S. victory because GATT specifically mentions "agricultural subsidies" for the first time.

However, the European Community negotiators later emphasized that their agreement to conduct a study in no way suggests they intend to give up their subsidy system. That prompted angry U.S. threats of retaliating by flooding world markets with U.S.-subsidized dairy products.

Inn has parking for planes

By The Associated Press

Folks in the southwest Louisiana town of Jennings are no longer surprised when the Holiday Inn parking lot is filled with World War II airplanes or even the Goodyear blimp.

"I always look at it when I go by to see if there're any planes there," said Afton Hylton of neighboring Roanoke. "You get in the habit."

It's the nation's only hotel with airplane tie-downs, according to Donna Burnette, assistant to manager Michael States.

"We do hold the bag on that one," she said.

The tie-downs, on an extension from a nearby airport, allow pilots to taxi to about 200 feet from the 198-room hotel. It is an attraction for fliers of all types — oil executives in corporate planes, weekend pilots, helicopter fliers and especially people in antique planes.

Willard Duke, a member of two antique airplane groups which hold annual fly-ins at the hotel, said members carry 100 pounds of gear on their planes — "headsets, parachutes, flying suits, maintenance equipment, tools, oil, engine parts — things you carry around to keep your plane moving around.

"IN OTHER fly-ins, we have to call what we call a support vehicle, a van or something. You put all your equipment in, take it to the motel, take it out again, put it in your room, and trip over it on the floor all the time.

"We leave it right under the wing at Jennings. Because it's right there. Nobody's going to bother it."

Duke, a member of the Confederate Air Force's Cajun Wing and of the Louisiana branch of the Stearman Restorers Association, said both local fly-ins are growing every year.

The Stearman fly-in included 29 registered planes this year. There are only six tie-downs at the hotel, but the others screw their own tie-downs into the nearby grass.

The blimp is an even more frequent visitor, touching down at the hotel several times each year, said Ms. Burnette.

"They just put it in the grass, right behind the hotel," she said. "It's too big really to land on the strip."

"THAT'S ALWAYS, from our standpoint, good business, in addition to the publicity," said Phillip T. Murphey, president of the investment company that owns the hotel.

"They have a bus that travels with that thing, and I guess they take about 40 rooms. I forget how many people are involved — 40 or 50 — to tie the thing down. It also travels with an 18-wheeler van."

Murphey said he got the idea of a ramp to the hotel when he bought the land from the airport about a half-mile away.

"Since we were right on it, we thought it'd be a good idea to see if we could have planes come in," he said.

So a taxi strip was built to the runway.

Duke said the antique planes don't use the airport — they fly onto the grass taxiway about 1,000 yards from the 8-year-old hotel, then taxi to a parking spot.

"HE'S GOT THE biggest grass runway that I've ever seen," Duke said. "It's like 600 feet wide and 4,000 feet long. It's a fantastic runway."

Pilots of antique planes prefer grass runways to concrete, but other pilots land at the airport and taxi over.

"We get a lot of oil companies come in with their corporate planes," Murphey said. "We have some helicopters that come in. We get a lot of weekend fliers."

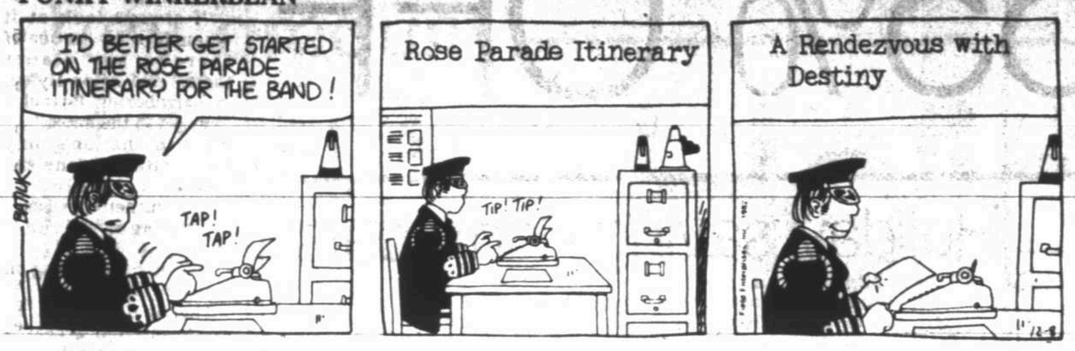

All told, though, people who fly into the airport probably account for less than 10 percent of the business, he said.

"Our business is a mixture of tourists traveling on Interstate 10 and the commercial business — the oil industry and farming," Murphey said.

Federal employees who defaulted on loans to have wages garnished

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said Monday ithas discovered that 46,860 current or retired federal workers owe it nearly $68 million in unpaid student loans.

Education Secretary T. H. Bell told a news conference he is launching a crackdown that will lead to garnishing the workers' wages in early 1983 unless they pay back the loans.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., who sponsored the Debt Collection Act that President Reagan signed in October to allow the government to withhold the wages from student loan defaulters, said, "This is nothing less than a slap in the face to every taxpayer in this country."

Percy, appearing with Bell, said in a statement that the 46,860 defaulters "have had their good lives made possible by the generosity of the American taxpayers. They foot the bill for these federal workers' education."

Bell said his department checked a list of 800,000 student loan defaulters against records of 10.3 million current or former federal employees, including the military.

The computer match turned up the names of 46,860 present or former federal employees, who are holding 50,393 defaulted loans, with some having skipped out on more than one loan.

The loans were made under the Guaranteed Student Loan, National Direct Student Loan, Federal Insured Student Loan and Defense Student Loan programs.

Bell said, "The federal government means to collect money that its employees borrowed in good faith from citizens of this country."

Bell said his department "will begin mailing letters today to all of the defaulters on our list, instructing them to work out repayment arrangements immediately."

If they don't comply, Bell said he will notify all federal agency heads on Feb. 1 of the employees on the default list. If the defaulters still refuse to pay, they will face having 15 percent of their wages garnished until the debt is paid back in full.

—Retired civil servants are in default on 589 student loans valued at $745,000.

—Active military employees are in default on 14,549 loans worth $18.9 million.

—Military reservests owe $17.3 million on 12,645 loans.

—Retired military workers owed $5.1 million on 4,690 loans.

—Retireed Coast Guard employees owe $57,000 on 51 loans.

—Coast Guard reservists owe $185,000 on 114 loans.

Percy said that, "for those who might feel that this action is too tough," they should recall the case of one student loan defaulter that came to light at a Senate hearing last July.

This person, who is now making $36,000 a year in a federal job, defaulted on a $4,000 loan in 1973. In 1979, after he made only a few small payments, Percy said, prosecutors got a court judgment against him but he still refused to pay because "he claimed he was having financial hardships." But the same person subsequently bought an $18,000 car, Percy said.

The play was soon over. Declarer ruffed the diamond lead, crossed to the ace of spades and returned to his hand with a diamond ruff. When both defenders followed to the king of spades, declarer could claim the rest of the tricks.

Federal employees who defaulted on loans to have wages garnished

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said Monday ithas discovered that 46,860 current or retired federal workers owe it nearly $68 million in unpaid student loans.

Education Secretary T. H. Bell told a news conference he is launching a crackdown that will lead to garnishing the workers' wages in early 1983 unless they pay back the loans.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., who sponsored the Debt Collection Act that President Reagan signed in October to allow the government to withhold the wages from student loan defaulters, said, "This is nothing less than a slap in the face to every taxpayer in this country."

Percy, appearing with Bell, said in a statement that the 46,860 defaulters "have had their good lives made possible by the generosity of the American taxpayers. They foot the bill for these federal workers' education."

Bell said his department checked a list of 800,000 student loan defaulters against records of 10.3 million current or former federal employees, including the military.

The computer match turned up the names of 46,860 present or former federal employees, who are holding 50,393 defaulted loans, with some having skipped out on more than one loan.

The loans were made under the Guaranteed Student Loan, National Direct Student Loan, Federal Insured Student Loan and Defense Student Loan programs.

Bell said, "The federal government means to collect money that its employees borrowed in good faith from citizens of this country."

Bell said his department "will begin mailing letters today to all of the defaulters on our list, instructing them to work out repayment arrangements immediately."

If they don't comply, Bell said he will notify all federal agency heads on Feb. 1 of the employees on the default list. If the defaulters still refuse to pay, they will face having 15 percent of their wages garnished until the debt is paid back in full.

—Retired civil servants are in default on 589 student loans valued at $745,000.

—Active military employees are in default on 14,549 loans worth $18.9 million.

—Military reservests owe $17.3 million on 12,645 loans.

—Retired military workers owed $5.1 million on 4,690 loans.

—Tennessee Valley Authority employees $411,000 on 370 loans.

—Retireed Coast Guard employees owe $57,000 on 51 loans.

—Coast Guard reservists owe $185,000 on 114 loans.

Percy said that, "for those who might feel that this action is too tough," they should recall the case of one student loan defaulter that came to light at a Senate hearing last July.

This person, who is now making $36,000 a year in a federal job, defaulted on a $4,000 loan in 1973. In 1979, after he made only a few small payments, Percy said, prosecutors got a court judgment against him but he still refused to pay because "he claimed he was having financial hardships." But the same person subsequently bought an $18,000 car, Percy said.

Peter Principle: Don't take life too seriously

Laurence J. Peter

By MARK SAUER
Copley News Service

The principal thing to remember about life, Laurence J. Peter says, is not to take it too seriously.

To that end, the retired college professor, humorist and author of "The Peter Principle" has written "Peter's Almanac," a 365-page compendium of thought and trivia to help start each day with a smile.

Some excerpts:

—"Peter's Salesmanship Rule: The customer is always ripe."

—"Antique chairs are uncomfortable because the comfortable ones wore out years ago."

—"Peter's Theory of Relativity: Nepotism should be kept in the family."

—"If you really want to know where he stands, see him when he's beside himself."

—"Experience is what allows you to recognize a mistake when you make it again."

—"Peter's Theory of Labor Statistics: An 'acceptable level of unemployment' is a percentage established by a person who still has a job."

—"I would swallow my pride but I hate junk food."

—"Peter's Memory Rule: Tell someone they are built like an elephant and they will never forget it."

—"Peter's Cinderella Precept: People who wear glass slippers shouldn't tap dance."

In 1969, when he first postulated his famous principle: "In a hierarchy, individuals tend to rise to their levels of incompetence," Peter proved to himself and a legion of readers that humor could be the best method with which to approach reality.

The native of western Canada, who now lives in the Los Angeles suburb of Palos Verdes, has, since retiring from teaching at the University of Southern California, made a lucrative living mining a vast vein of homespun humor in a series of books.

Because he works with two publishers, Peter finds himself in the peculiar position of promoting two books released the same week.

"The Laughter Prescription," written with comedian Bill Dana, deals with the practical uses of humor. It focuses on how laughter can help solve problems and improve health by reducing pain and stress. Also included is a primer on joke writing and developing your sense of humor.

"Peter's Almanac" is 365 pages of trivia, lines with humorous twists, principles to live — and laugh — by, and little-known (but usually lighthearted) anniversaries to celebrate. "I'm trying to bring some joy into peoples' lives on a daily basis," Peter said.

One anniversary noted is Sept. 23: "Dogs in Politics Day."

On that date in 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt made his famous "Fala Speech," when he talked of his much-traveled terrier, Fala. And on Sept. 23, 1952, vice presidental candidate Richard M. Nixon made his politically influential "Checkers Speech," saying he was willing to return all gifts from an "expense fund" set up by backers except the little black-and-white cocker spaniel presented to one of his daughters.

"The almanac should be read one day at a time," said the tall, rugged, 63-year-old. "There's a humorous thing or two to help cope with each day. For example, if you anticipate trouble in beginning an important interview or conversation, you might start with 'Did you know that 36 years ago today, the first autobank was opened in Chicago?' Or 'Today is National Pig Day,' or 'Hey, it's Oatmeal Diet Day.' Something topical to break the ice."

Peter said one problem with Americans is that simple-minded comedy too often gets in the way of recognizing genuine humor in everyday life.

"Americans have a great sense of humor, but it's more a consumer-type humor," Peter said. "We like jokes, we like comedy on television and most of us can tell a funny story, but couldn't make up a funny story.

"We all tend to take ourselves too seriously. We aren't notably humorous about ourselves," he continued. "That is because we have been tremendously commercial in our humor. We pay someone else to make us laugh rather than trying, ourselves, to make others laugh."

Laughter can be an effective tool for coping with all kinds of real problems and even physical pain, Peter said.

"In medicine, if the patient laughs, the patient recovers faster — this is a scientific fact. If you laugh and are suffering pain, your pain will be reduced.

"I broke my back last year and was in bed three months with serious pain. If I took enough drugs to deaden the pain, I would be stupid. But when I wrote funny lines, that reduced the pain. And so I thought up as many funny lines as I could and they became part of the 'The Laughter Prescription.'"

Peter laments that humor has become irrelevant, that too many comedians now are interested in simple laughs, through silliness, sounds or impressions, rather than couching a message in the madness.

"There is Peter's Marriage Principle: 'All marriages are happy, it's just living together afterward that can cause problems.' Perhaps that is not too profound, but it is an example of humor dealing with reality," he said.

"Will Rogers wrote a newspaper column and used humor to deal with real issues of his day. And I try to do the same thing with these principles, like Peter's Inflation Principle: 'Tighten your belt — the economy's going to scare the pants off you.' Or Peter's Employment Principle: 'Don't knock the rich, when did a poor person ever give you a job?' Then there's Peter's Financial Principle: 'Starting from scratch isn't so bad, it's starting without it that's a problem.'"

The "Peter Principle" itself grew from Peter's lifetime of research on teacher competence and his frustration over making his results known.

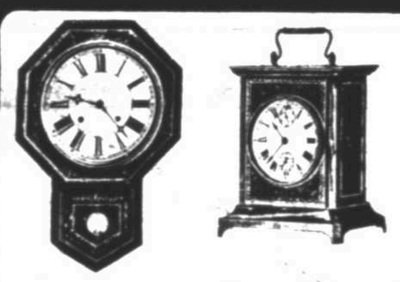

"What I saw was that just because somebody was a good scholar in a university didn't necessarily mean they would make a good teacher," he said.

"I applied that all the way up and down the system and saw it was always the good teacher who was taken from the classroom to be made principal of the school. So you lost a good teacher and may end up with a bad administrator. You may lose on two scores. You may lose a good actor and wind up with a lousy director. Or you might promote a great salesman who is a terrible manager."

That may have been true, but it was just the sort of dust-dry textbookism that evokes yawns rather than "ah-hahs."

November economic figures hint at improvement hopes

By ROBERT BURNS

NEW YORK (AP) — There is little to cheer in the news that 10.8 percent of the U.S. labor force was unemployed last month. It was the highest jobless rate in 42 years and meant the recession is disrupting the lives of more and more Americans.

But there was more to the government's report on labor conditions in November than the 10.8 percent figure revealed. It also contained some signs that the labor market, while still deteriorating, was beginning to stabilize.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain the less-publicized dimensions of the government's labor report:

Q. How can employment be stabilizing when the jobless rate is increasing?

A. It is true that November's 0.4 point increase in the unemployment rate was the biggest monthly jump since last April, when it rose from 9.0 percent to 9.4 percent. But, on the other hand, the Labor Department also said the total number of people working fell only 61,000 — 10 times fewer jobs lost than in October.

Q. If fewer jobs were lost, why did the overall rate of unemployment rise so much?

A. About four-fifths of the increase in people classified as unemployed last month was due to people re-entering the labor force. Those were people, such as students or housewives, who began searching for work in November. By contrast, the rise in the October unemployment rate was due more to an actual loss of jobs than to an increase in the number of people entering the labor force.

Q. The fact that more people began looking for work is not necessarily a good sign, either. What was there in the November report that could be called encouraging?

A. Nothing in the report pointed clearly to a turnaround in the jobless problem. But, in addition to the dropoff in the number of jobs lost, there were a few other signs that conditions at least were not deteriorating as rapidly as before. For example, the average workweek for manufacturing employees rose one-tenth of an hour, to 38.9 hours. That figure had been unchanged at 38.8 hours in October.

Q. Does that mean the unemployment rate is going to start falling soon?

A. No. In fact, most economists expect the rate to increase, at least modestly, over the next couple of months. It seems likely that the jobless rate will exceed 11 percent before it peaks. But economists note, too, that unemployment usually continues to grow for a few months after a recession has ended. So if the recession ends this month or in January, as many economists think it will, the rate of unemployment could continue rising until spring or longer.

Q. Will the unemployment rate drop to the 6 percent range of 1979?

A. It probably will, but the decline will not be as rapid or steep as in past recovery periods.

Potential homeowners really work for their downpayments

By CLYDE V. SMITH
Copley News Service

Want to acquire a house at a price you can afford to pay?

Of course — most every family does.

Well, here's a new way converted from an old way that could make affordable housing available to any young family with ambition, energy and determination.

I saw a demonstration of this on a tour for real estate editors during the recent annual convention of the National Association of Realtors in San Francisco.

The tour took us to East Oakland, where 14 lucky families are living in brand-new dwellings of their own, obtained through a process called "sweat equity."

In other words, hard labor was their own down payment. It's a return to the community "barn-raising" concept, widely used in earlier American days, mostly in rural areas where neighboring farmers helped their friends build a new barn.

Here's how the Oakland plan worked:

Fourteen families, all first-time buyers, were chosen for the experimental project. Each family agreed to contribute 40 hours of work each week in building each other's houses, all of which were side by side in a small subdivision. Wives worked, too, doing painting and similar jobs, including hammering nails. The 40 hours of construction labor was in addition to other 40-hour-week regular jobs which most of the heads of households held to make a living. In some cases, both husbands and wives of the family were employed on other 40-hour-week jobs.

Typically, these owner-builder families contributed four hours of hard physical labor every evening and 10-hour days on weekends, working together building each other's homes.

And so, we asked, how were these 14 families chosen? Was selection based on past evidence of construction skills? No, was the emphatic answer. No construction skills were required. It was an on-the-job training experience, under the supervision of a highly skilled construction staff provided by Oakland's Neighborhood Housing Services (NHS), which initiated the program.

All homes were completed within one year after construction began, at a 30 to 40 percent savings for the owner-builders. The owners' "sweat equity" was accepted as a full down payment. Their mortgages amounted to $46,000, the total construction cost per house including lot. However, both land acquisition and interest rates were at below-market costs. The houses were built on former city-owned surplus property, which the city agreed to sell at $3,000 a lot — just 20 percent of full market value — and 30-year-term mortgages were obtained at 10.75 percent interest. So a significant degree of subsidy was involved.

Caroline given rein, will follow Grace's lead

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent, The Hearst Newspapers

PARIS — In what insiders describe as a move designed to save Monte Carlo's role as a glamor haven for the rich and famous, Princess Caroline is to assume the role and duties of her late mother, Princess Grace.

A Grimaldi family conclave has decided that the Mediterranean principality's fortunes are to be given a youthful face-lift as a matter of urgency following the former Grace Kelly's sudden death after a car crash 2½ months ago.

The decision stemmed from a belief that the princess' loss deprived the little state of what was far and away its greatest asset at a time when it could ill-afford it. The worldwide economic slump has hit even the wealthy denizens of Monaco. The property and company booms there have fizzled and even the tourist trade, with its traditional accompanying action at the roulette wheels, is off.

For a quarter-century, because of her fame as a one-time Hollywood star, Princess Grace was the fulcrum of nearly everything that happened in Monaco. She was a key factor in its mid-century revival. The vacuum left by her death will be hard to fill, but the family and its advisers are determined it must be.

"Nobody is being cold-blooded about the situation," an official of the Monagasque court was quoted as saying this week. "Prince Rainier has emerged from bereavement persuaded that the way to honor his wife's memory is to carry on her work."

While Rainier was deeply stricken by his loss, family intimates say the individual most altered by Grace's death has been her 25-year-old daughter, Caroline. She used to be regarded coolly by them as a head-strong, egocentric young woman who caused consternation to her parents by her divorce, her love affairs and what was seen as a disconcertingly insouciant attitude toward life.

All is different now.

"Caroline suddenly has grown into her responsibilities," the official said. "In this critical time, she has become the strong pillar of the family."

Shedding her previous self-absorption, she has volunteered to take over her mother's duties as chief of several charities and as president of the Monagasque Red Cross. Grace was no mere figurehead, but very much a working administrator. The Red Cross post is particularly important in Monaco's scheme of things since, under her aegis, it grew into a significant liaison job with several international bodies.

Insiders say Caroline is moving into a role as a kind of co-ruler with her 60-year-old father until the time her younger brother Albert, now 22, is handed the reins.

Albert is an earnest youth who has studied business administration at Harvard in order to equip himself to run the "family business" one day. But it has been decided he should be allowed to acquire more outside experience before stepping into his father's shoes.

"Caroline is unselfishly giving up much of her own private life, at least for the present, to give her brother a chance to mature without undue pressure on him," an observer in Monte Carlo said. "She has finally grown up."

Fiancee's name doesn't matter to groom-to-be

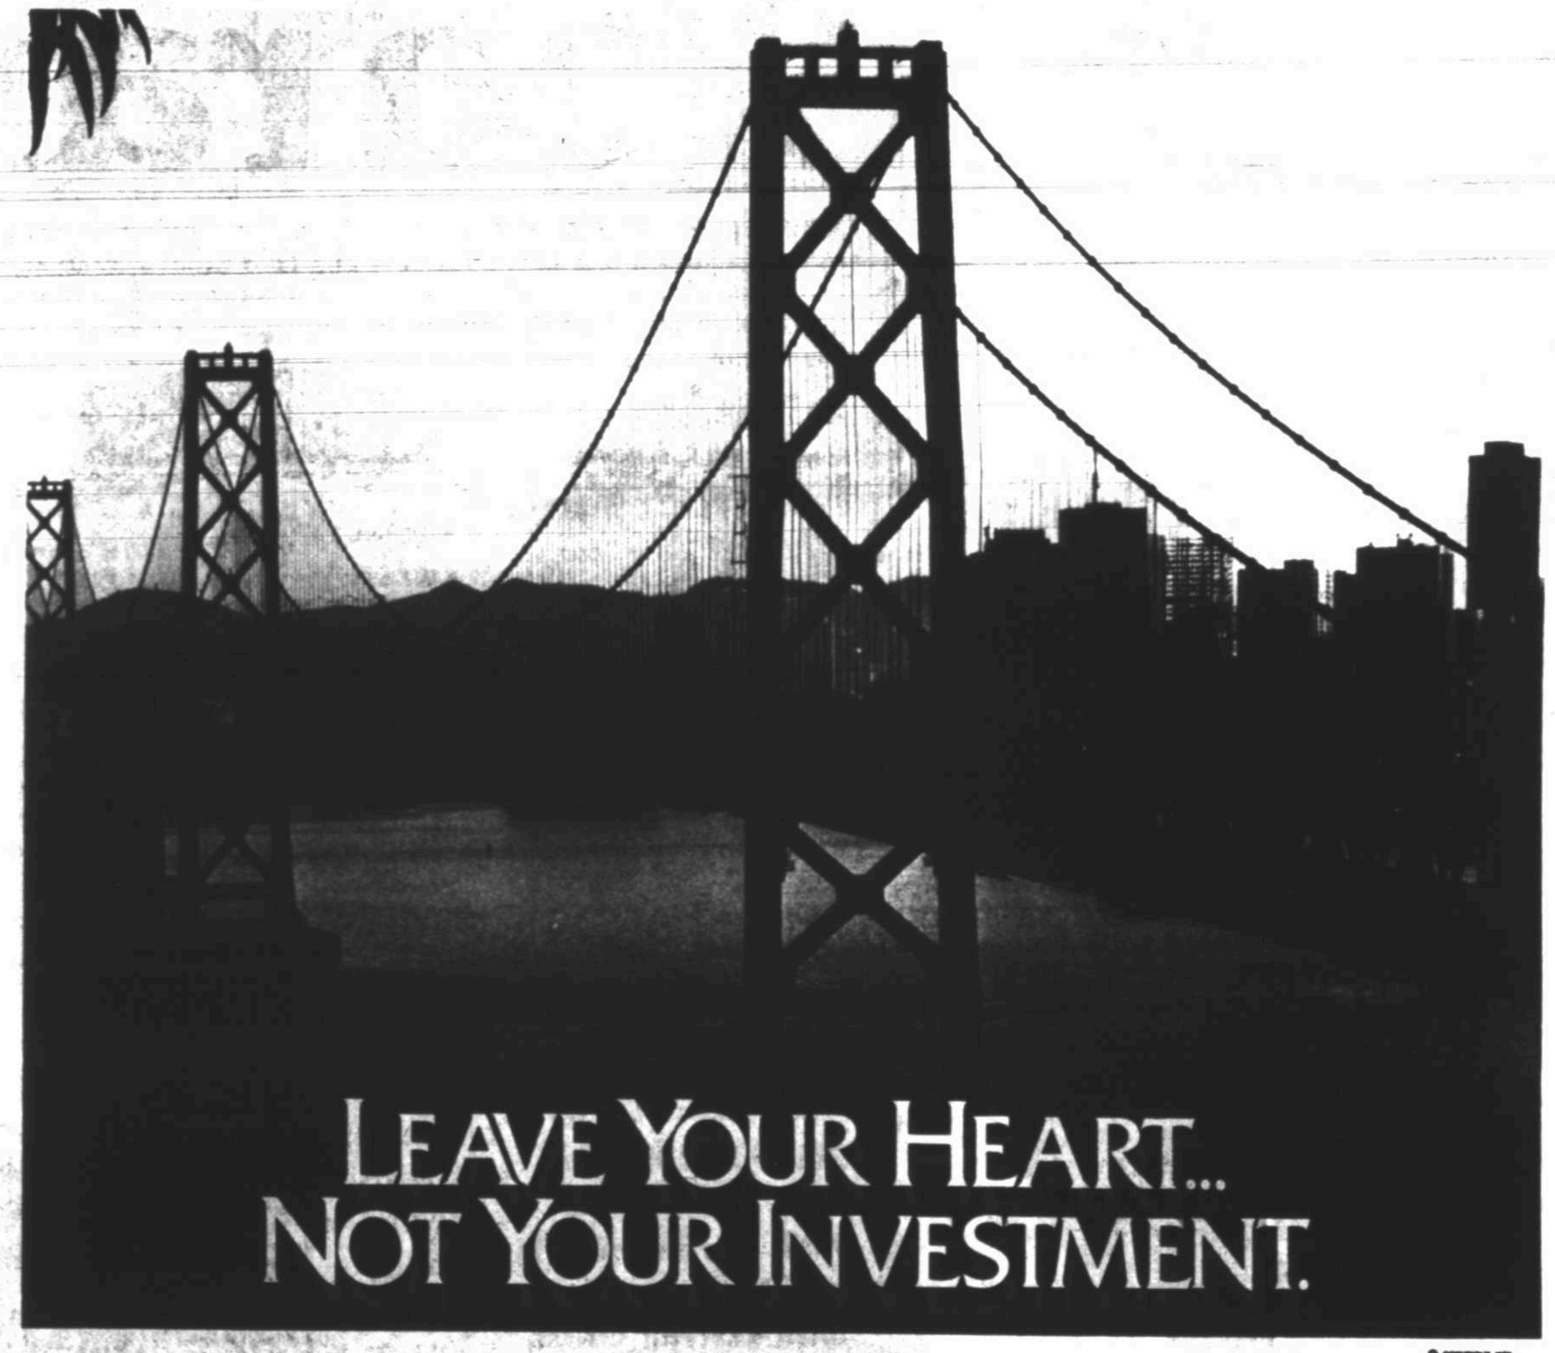

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Hugh Bryan Dye didn't know who Lee Wallace was when he met her. But now that he's going to marry Gov.-elect George Wallace's youngest daughter, Dye says he doesn't worry about her family fame.

"She handles it so well, it helps me handle it," said the 24-year-old Birmingham man. He and Miss Wallace, 21, plan to wed March 12 in St. James United Methodist Church in Montgomery.

Miss Wallace is a senior at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, majoring in education for handicapped children. She is the youngest of Wallace's four children by his first wife, Lurleen.

Dye, a graduate of the University of Alabama, works as a marketing and territorial manager for the Coty cosmetics division of Pfizer.

He said he met Miss Wallace when they lived in the same apartment house in Tuscaloosa, and began going out with her in April 1981.

Peter Principle: Don't take life too seriously

Laurence J. Peter

By MARK SAUER
Copley News Service

The principal thing to remember about life, Laurence J. Peter says, is not to take it too seriously.

To that end, the retired college professor, humorist and author of "The Peter Principle" has written "Peter's Almanac," a 365-page compendium of thought and trivia to help start each day with a smile.

Some excerpts:

—"Antique chairs are uncomfortable because the comfortable ones wore out years ago."

—"Peter's Theory of Relativity: Nepotism should be kept in the family."

—"If you really want to know where he stands, see him when he's beside himself."

—"Experience is what allows you to recognize a mistake when you make it again."

—"Peter's Theory of Labor Statistics: An 'acceptable level of unemployment' is a percentage established by a person who still has a job."

—"I would swallow my pride but I hate junk food."

—"Peter's Memory Rule: Tell someone they are built like an elephant and they will never forget it."

In 1969, when he first postulated his famous principle: "In a hierarchy, individuals tend to rise to their levels of incompetence," Peter proved to himself and a legion of readers that humor could be the best method with which to approach reality.

The native of western Canada, who now lives in the Los Angeles suburb of Palos Verdes, has, since retiring from teaching at the University of Southern California, made a lucrative living mining a vast vein of homespun humor in a series of books.

Because he works with two publishers, Peter finds himself in the peculiar position of promoting two books released the same week.

"The Laughter Prescription," written with comedian Bill Dana, deals with the practical uses of humor. It focuses on how laughter can help solve problems and improve health by reducing pain and stress. Also included is a primer on joke writing and developing your sense of humor.

"Peter's Almanac" is 365 pages of trivia, lines with humorous twists, principles to live — and laugh — by, and little-known (but usually lighthearted) anniversaries to celebrate. "I'm trying to bring some joy into peoples' lives on a daily basis," Peter said.

One anniversary noted is Sept. 23: "Dogs in Politics Day."

On that date in 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt made his famous "Fala Speech," when he talked of his much-traveled terrier, Fala. And on Sept. 23, 1952, vice presidental candidate Richard M. Nixon made his politically influential "Checkers Speech," saying he was willing to return all gifts from an "expense fund" set up by backers except the little black-and-white cocker spaniel presented to one of his daughters.

"The almanac should be read one day at a time," said the tall, rugged, 63-year-old. "There's a humorous thing or two to help cope with each day. For example, if you anticipate trouble in beginning an important interview or conversation, you might start with 'Did you know that 36 years ago today, the first autobank was opened in Chicago?' Or 'Today is National Pig Day,' or 'Hey, it's Oatmeal Diet Day.' Something topical to break the ice."

Peter said one problem with Americans is that simple-minded comedy too often gets in the way of recognizing genuine humor in everyday life.

"Americans have a great sense of humor, but it's more a consumer-type humor," Peter said. "We like jokes, we like comedy on television and most of us can tell a funny story, but couldn't make up a funny story.

"We all tend to take ourselves too seriously. We aren't notably humorous about ourselves," he continued. "That is because we have been tremendously commercial in our humor. We pay someone else to make us laugh rather than trying, ourselves, to make others laugh."

Laughter can be an effective tool for coping with all kinds of real problems and even physical pain, Peter said.

"In medicine, if the patient laughs, the patient recovers faster — this is a scientific fact. If you laugh and are suffering pain, your pain will be reduced.

"I broke my back last year and was in bed three months with serious pain. If I took enough drugs to deaden the pain, I would be stupid. But when I wrote funny lines, that reduced the pain. And so I thought up as many funny lines as I could and they became part of the 'The Laughter Prescription.'"

Peter laments that humor has become irrelevant, that too many comedians now are interested in simple laughs, through silliness, sounds or impressions, rather than couching a message in the madness.

"There is Peter's Marriage Principle: 'All marriages are happy, it's just living together afterward that can cause problems.' Perhaps that is not too profound, but it is an example of humor dealing with reality," he said.

"Will Rogers wrote a newspaper column and used humor to deal with real issues of his day. And I try to do the same thing with these principles, like Peter's Inflation Principle: 'Tighten your belt — the economy's going to scare the pants off you.' Or Peter's Employment Principle: 'Don't knock the rich, when did a poor person ever give you a job?' Then there's Peter's Financial Principle: 'Starting from scratch isn't so bad, it's starting without it that's a problem.'"

The "Peter Principle" itself grew from Peter's lifetime of research on teacher competence and his frustration over making his results known.

"What I saw was that just because somebody was a good scholar in a university didn't necessarily mean they would make a good teacher," he said.

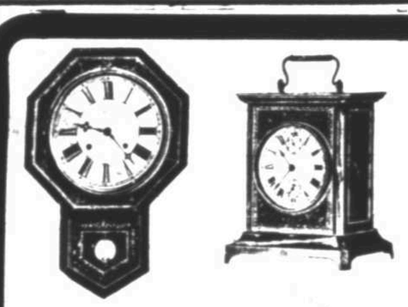

"I applied that all the way up and down the system and saw it was always the good teacher who was taken from the classroom to be made principal of the school. So you lost a good teacher and may end up with a bad administrator. You may lose on two scores. You may lose a good actor and wind up with a lousy director. Or you might promote a great salesman who is a terrible manager."

That may have been true, but it was just the sort of dust-dry textbookism that evokes yawns rather than "ah-hahs."

November economic figures hint at improvement hopes

By ROBERT BURNS

NEW YORK (AP) — There is little to cheer in the news that 10.8 percent of the U.S. labor force was unemployed last month. It was the highest jobless rate in 42 years and meant the recession is disrupting the lives of more and more Americans.

But there was more to the government's report on labor conditions in November than the 10.8 percent figure revealed. It also contained some signs that the labor market, while still deteriorating, was beginning to stabilize.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain the less-publicized dimensions of the government's labor report:

Q. How can employment be stabilizing when the jobless rate is increasing?

A. It is true that November's 0.4 point increase in the unemployment rate was the biggest monthly jump since last April, when it rose from 9.0 percent to 9.4 percent. But, on the other hand, the Labor Department also said the total number of people working fell only 61,000 — 10 times fewer jobs lost than in October.

Q. If fewer jobs were lost, why did the overall rate of unemployment rise so much?

A. About four-fifths of the increase in people classified as unemployed last month was due to people re-entering the labor force. Those were people, such as students or housewives, who began searching for work in November. By contrast, the rise in the October unemployment rate was due more to an actual loss of jobs than to an increase in the number of people entering the labor force.

Q. The fact that more people began looking for work is not necessarily a good sign, either. What was there in the November report that could be called encouraging?

A. Nothing in the report pointed clearly to a turnaround in the jobless problem. But, in addition to the dropoff in the number of jobs lost, there were a few other signs that conditions at least were not deteriorating as rapidly as before. For example, the average workweek for manufacturing employees rose one-tenth of an hour, to 38.9 hours. That figure had been unchanged at 38.8 hours in October.

Q. Does that mean the unemployment rate is going to start falling soon?

A. No. In fact, most economists expect the rate to increase, at least modestly, over the next couple of months. It seems likely that the jobless rate will exceed 11 percent before it peaks. But economists note, too, that unemployment usually continues to grow for a few months after a recession has ended. So if the recession ends this month or in January, as many economists think it will, the rate of unemployment could continue rising until spring or longer.

Q. Will the unemployment rate drop to the 6 percent range of 1979?

A. It probably will, but the decline will not be as rapid or steep as in past recovery periods.

Potential homeowners really work for their downpayments

By CLYDE V. SMITH
Copley News Service

Want to acquire a house at a price you can afford to pay?

Of course — most every family does.

Well, here's a new way converted from an old way that could make affordable housing available to any young family with ambition, energy and determination.

I saw a demonstration of this on a tour for real estate editors during the recent annual convention of the National Association of Realtors in San Francisco.

The tour took us to East Oakland, where 14 lucky families are living in brand-new dwellings of their own, obtained through a process called "sweat equity."

In other words, hard labor was their own down payment. It's a return to the community "barn-raising" concept, widely used in earlier American days, mostly in rural areas where neighboring farmers helped their friends build a new barn.

Here's how the Oakland plan worked:

Fourteen families, all first-time buyers, were chosen for the experimental project. Each family agreed to contribute 40 hours of work each week in building each other's houses, all of which were side by side in a small subdivision. Wives worked, too, doing painting and similar jobs, including hammering nails. The 40 hours of construction labor was in addition to other 40-hour-week regular jobs which most of the heads of households held to make a living. In some cases, both husbands and wives of the family were employed on other 40-hour-week jobs.

Typically, these owner-builder families contributed four hours of hard physical labor every evening and 10-hour days on weekends, working together building each other's homes.

And so, we asked, how were these 14 families chosen? Was selection based on past evidence of construction skills? No, was the emphatic answer. No construction skills were required. It was an on-the-job training experience, under the supervision of a highly skilled construction staff provided by Oakland's Neighborhood Housing Services (NHS), which initiated the program.

All homes were completed within one year after construction began, at a 30 to 40 percent savings for the owner-builders. The owners' "sweat equity" was accepted as a full down payment. Their mortgages amounted to $46,000, the total construction cost per house including lot. However, both land acquisition and interest rates were at below-market costs. The houses were built on former city-owned surplus property, which the city agreed to sell at $3,000 a lot — just 20 percent of full market value — and 30-year-term mortgages were obtained at 10.75 percent interest. So a significant degree of subsidy was involved.

Caroline given rein, will follow Grace's lead

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent, The Hearst Newspapers

PARIS — In what insiders describe as a move designed to save Monte Carlo's role as a glamor haven for the rich and famous, Princess Caroline is to assume the role and duties of her late mother, Princess Grace.

A Grimaldi family conclave has decided that the Mediterranean principality's fortunes are to be given a youthful face-lift as a matter of urgency following the former Grace Kelly's sudden death after a car crash 2½ months ago.

The decision stemmed from a belief that the princess' loss deprived the little state of what was far and away its greatest asset at a time when it could ill-afford it. The worldwide economic slump has hit even the wealthy denizens of Monaco. The property and company booms there have fizzled and even the tourist trade, with its traditional accompanying action at the roulette wheels, is off.

For a quarter-century, because of her fame as a one-time Hollywood star, Princess Grace was the fulcrum of nearly everything that happened in Monaco. She was a key factor in its mid-century revival. The vacuum left by her death will be hard to fill, but the family and its advisers are determined it must be.

"Nobody is being cold-blooded about the situation," an official of the Monagasque court was quoted as saying this week. "Prince Rainier has emerged from bereavement persuaded that the way to honor his wife's memory is to carry on her work."

While Rainier was deeply stricken by his loss, family intimates say the individual most altered by Grace's death has been her 25-year-old daughter, Caroline. She used to be regarded coolly by them as a head-strong, egocentric young woman who caused consternation to her parents by her divorce, her love affairs and what was seen as a disconcertingly insouciant attitude toward life.

All is different now.

Not even the Vatican's reported decision not to transform her divorce from Philippe Junot into an annulment, something she very much desired, left her depressed for long.

"Caroline suddenly has grown into her responsibilities," the official said. "In this critical time, she has become the strong pillar of the family."

Shedding her previous self-absorption, she has volunteered to take over her mother's duties as chief of several charities and as president of the Monagasque Red Cross. Grace was no mere figurehead, but very much a working administrator. The Red Cross post is particularly important in Monaco's scheme of things since, under her aegis, it grew into a significant liaison job with several international bodies.

Insiders say Caroline is moving into a role as a kind of co-ruler with her 60-year-old father until the time her younger brother Albert, now 22, is handed the reins.

Albert is an earnest youth who has studied business administration at Harvard in order to equip himself to run the "family business" one day. But it has been decided he should be allowed to acquire more outside experience before stepping into his father's shoes.

"Caroline is unselfishly giving up much of her own private life, at least for the present, to give her brother a chance to mature without undue pressure on him," an observer in Monte Carlo said. "She has finally grown up."

Fiancee's name doesn't matter to groom-to-be

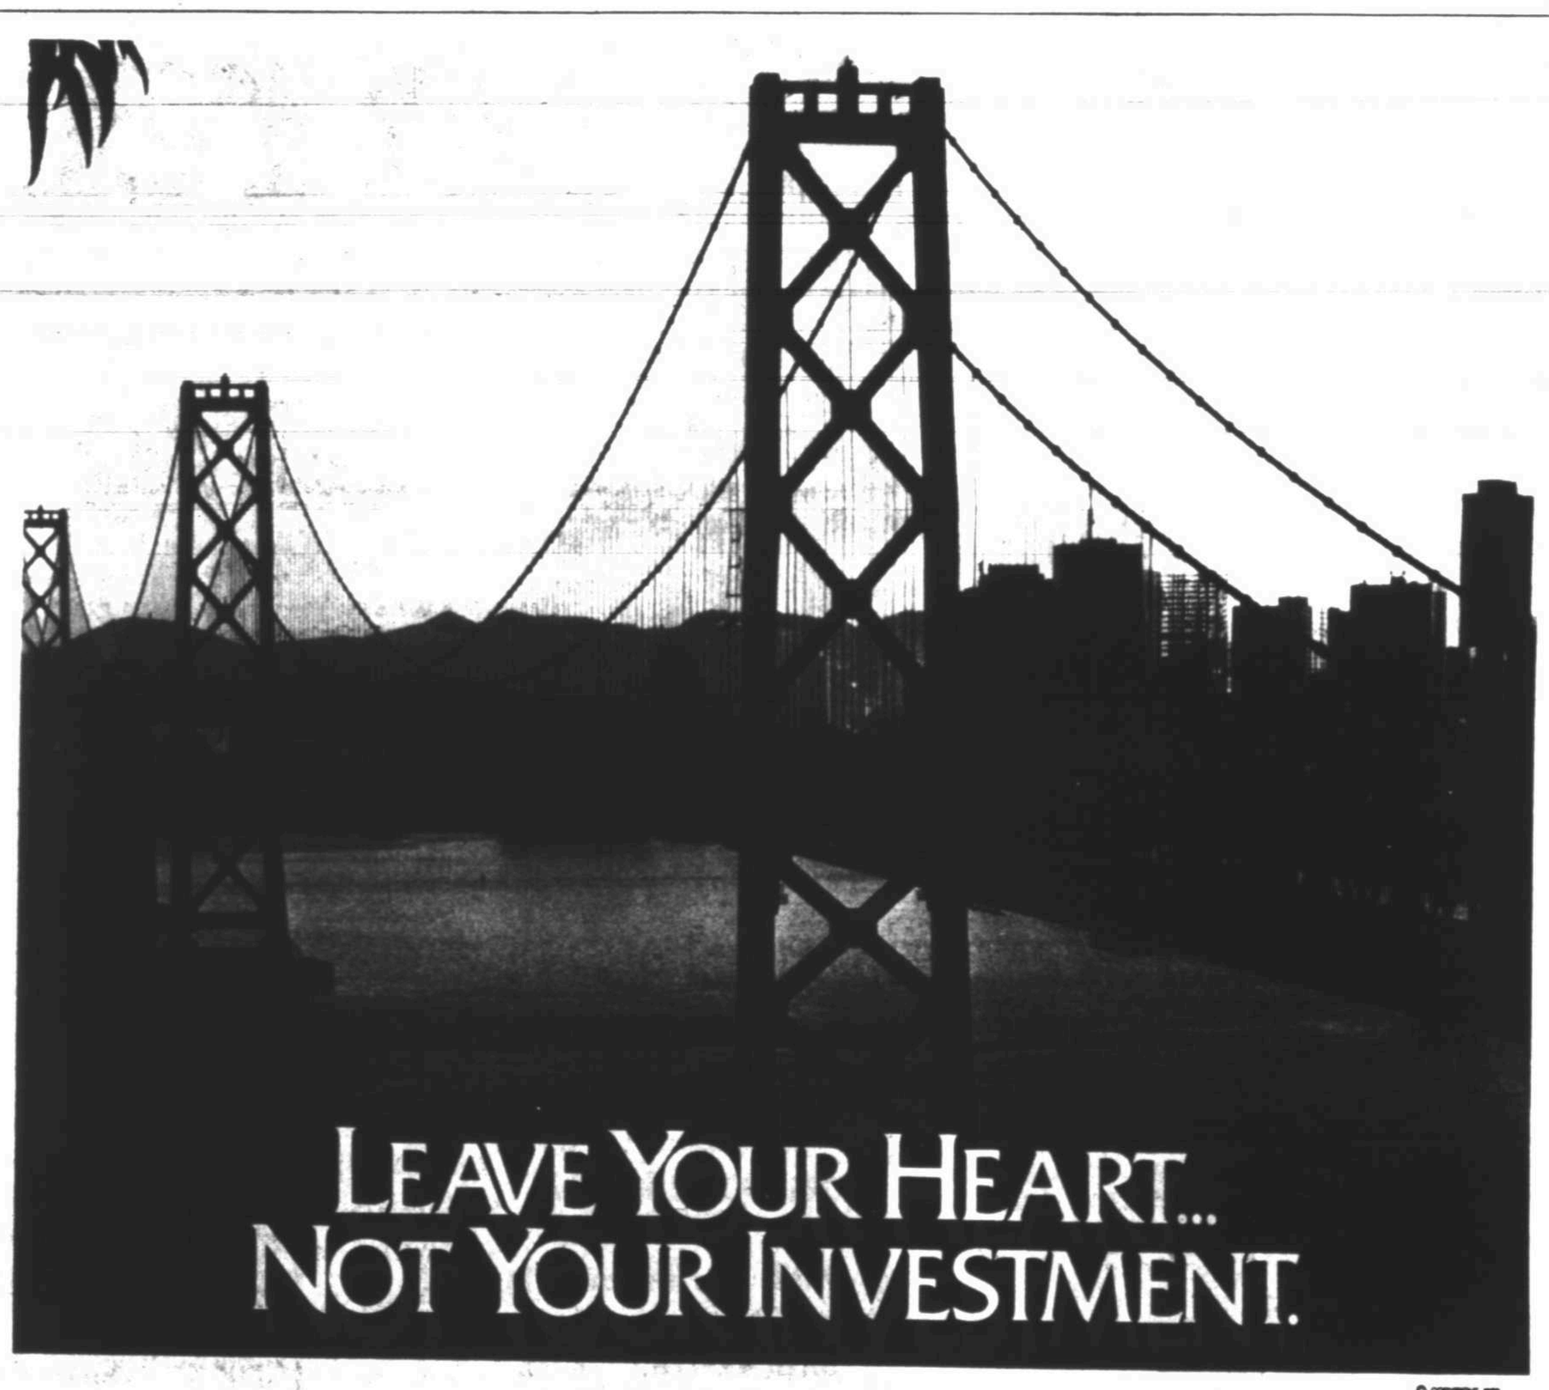

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Hugh Bryan Dye didn't know who Lee Wallace was when he met her. But now that he's going to marry Gov.-elect George Wallace's youngest daughter, Dye says he doesn't worry about her family fame.

"She handles it so well, it helps me handle it," said the 24-year-old Birmingham man. He and Miss Wallace, 21, plan to wed March 12 in St. James United Methodist Church in Montgomery.

Miss Wallace is a senior at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa, majoring in education for handicapped children. She is the youngest of Wallace's four children by his first wife, Lurleen.

Dye, a graduate of the University of Alabama, works as a marketing and territorial manager for the Coty cosmetics division of Pfizer.

He said he met Miss Wallace when they lived in the same apartment house in Tuscaloosa, and began going out with her in April 1981.

Couple returns winnings

CHICAGO (AP) — There wasn't a dry eye in the place when a stockbroker who won $75,000 in a charity raffle announced he was giving back the cash, a spokeswoman said.

"I'm just happy for what what I've got. This is my opportunity to give society something back," said Tim Taebel after he and his wife, Linda, found themselves with the winning ticket last week in a raffle sponsored by the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation of Chicago.

"You can't be a taker all through life," said Taebel. "You have to be a giver, too. I'm not wealthy and I didn't come from wealth."

The couple had had their pick of $75,000 cash or a $111,000 Rolls Royce. They decided on the cash, and Taebel then made his surprise announcement that he would return the money to the foundation.

"My wife is a diabetic," the 40-year-old stockbroker told a cheering audience of about 1,000 people who had bought the $100 raffle tickets. "I'd like to give the money back." The couple had bought 20 raffle tickets.

"I don't think there was a dry eye in the place," said foundation president Joan Beaubaire.

Taebel and his wife, a homemaker who looks after their 2-year-old son, have been on the foundation's board of directors for three years. Mrs. Taebel, 34, has been a diabetic for 23 years.

"He married me and he knew I had the disease," said Mrs. Taebel, who takes insulin shots daily. "It's not easy for us to live with this disease.

Arcade caters to executives

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The two-Tron lunch break may replace the two-martini variety, according to the owners of a video arcade geared to the white-collar set.

The arcade, Twist of the Wrist, doesn't feature spacey music, flashing lights or an array of loud teenagers. It has carpets, a brightly lit interior, hanging plants and jazz.

And it's the only video arcade that accepts checks and soon will take credit cards, says Prakash Joshi, half-owner of the company.

The arcade, which has been open since October, actually is a showcase for the sales and rental business set up by Joshi and his partner, David L. Whitney. All the games are for sale.

A sign in the window bills the experience as "executive stress management." But patrons frequently leave more worked up than when they enter.

Take John Buehler. After a busy morning at the office one day last week, the 32-year-old lawyer needed a break before an afternoon of legal paperwork.

Buehler gripped the joystick of a Ms. Pac Man and gazed grimly into the screen. His anxiety became more and more evident as the game progressed.

Pop group too noisy for China

POWELL, Wyo. (AP) — A college singing group has been invited not to sing in China because the communist government says their tunes are too noisy.

China is going through a "music purification movement" and asked a Northwest Wyoming Community College singing group not to perform there.

The Northwest Singers pop group was to sing in China this spring, but director Mike Masterson said last week the Chinese government told him some of the music submitted on audition tapes would be "too noisy" for the purification movement.

Las Vegas weddings: More like being sentenced

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — In tuxedos and elegant gowns, barefoot and in bathing suits, couples flock to the Clark County Courthouse at all hours of the day and night, matrimony on their minds.

Despite a recession that has battered the economy of this gambling city, county officials estimate some 58,000 marriage licenses, nearly 160 a day, will be issued at the downtown courthouse this year. Last year, 56,510 were issued, says County Clerk Loretta Bowman.

The increase has occurred during troubled times for Las Vegas. Nearly 13 percent of the people in Clark County — about 32,000 — are out of work. Tourism has slackened because of the soft economy, higher airfares and competition from Atlantic City.

But that hasn't stopped the marriage ceremonies.

Hollywood stars were the first to flock to this desert oasis to tie the knot because of liberal Nevada marriage laws — no blood tests, no waiting period — and the attendant publicity.

THE COST today for a short civil ceremony — $50 and 10 minutes time.

Licenses cost $25 and can be purchased at the courthouse from 8 a.m. to midnight Monday through Thursday, and around the clock Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

About 85 percent of those who buy a license are from California. Arizona ranks second.

Gone are the days when the marrying was done by justices of the peace who could make $100,000 a year on the services.

"At one time it was the prize office because they made more money than the governor," says the Rev. Mel Pekrul of the First Baptist Church. "They just sat there and banged out those weddings all day long."

Now marriage commissioners — eight paid county employees — have taken over that role. They will perform marriages for $25 during regular office hours (8 to 5 Monday through Friday) or for $30 at other times.

ABOUT 20 percent of the city's marriages are performed by these county officials, Ms. Bowman estimates.

"It's really more like being sentenced than being married," Pekrul says of the civil ceremonies in the two-room office.

Religious services are performed by about 200 ministers who must be certified by the county.

In addition to ordained, denominational ministers there are what Pekrul and others refer to as "Marryin' Sams" — ministers licensed by the county who deal mainly in the lucrative marriage trade.

"I know one who holds his services each Sunday in a hotel room and blesses finger sandwiches for anyone passing by," Pekrul said.

Most of the non-denominational ministers are on call at two dozen wedding chapels around the city.

ONE OF THE most popular chapels is the Little Church of the West at the south end of the Las Vegas Strip.

In the past four decades a host of stars have exchanged vows there, including Betty Grable, Harry James, Mickey Rooney (five times), Wayne Newton, Robert Goulet, Ann Miller, Judy Garland, Rhonda Fleming and Bob Cummings.

Merle Richards, who started out as a wedding photographer and later purchased the popular chapel, says 50 or 60 couples are married there on an average weekend.

The record is a 127-marriage marathon at the chapel on Valentine's Day 1982.

"They were standing in line, waiting to be run in," Richards recalled. "And you have to have a little finesse when you push 'em out the door."

He estimates the church has been the scene of 250,000 marriages since it was opened just prior to World War II.

THE REV. Richard Allen Gilster II, one of the city's more active nondenominational ministers, recently married a couple at 12:30 a.m. in a limousine parked on a road overlooking the city.

There have been marriages in boats, aircraft, casinos and swimming pools.

Although ministers are provided as part of a chapel's wedding package, the bridegroom is encouraged to tip the minister. The chapel packages can also include rings, flowers, photos, a recording, gown and tuxedo rentals, limousine service, a live organist or taped music, and a videotape of the services.

And entertainment has ranged from a 200-voice choir packed into a 45-seat chapel to the late Mario Lanza, who used to enjoy showing up unannounced at chapel ceremonies.

Execution drug same one used to save lives

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The drug chosen by Texas to carry out its executions, including Tuesday's death of convicted murderer Charlie Brooks Jr., is commonly used to help save lives by putting patients to sleep quickly for life-saving surgery.

Sodium thiopental, better known as sodium Pentothal or truth serum, can quickly stop breathing and heart beat. Many experts believe it is the most humane way yet found for society to execute its criminals.

"It is about as painless and easy and sure and rapid a way to go as there is," according to Houston anesthesiologist Dr. Denis Bourke.

Two other chemicals are added to the injection after the sodium thiopental to assure death. They are a muscle relaxant called pavulon, and potassium chloride, which can cause muscular paralysis.

Oklahoma, Idaho and New Mexico also have passed legislation to use lethal injection for executions, some with a combination of a barbiturate and potassium, which can also stop the heart. Washington state offers prisoners a choice between hanging or lethal injection.

The use of lethal injection was first proposed in the 1950s, but did not become a political issue until the mid-1970s. The method was strongly opposed by doctors who saw it as a corruption of medical technology developed to heal.

"Doctors elected not to participate," said Dr. Carroll L. Boone, president-elect of the Harris County Medical Society. "It would be a contradiction of our philosophy. Doctors are dedicated to preserving life — not to taking it."

The American Medical Society ruled in 1980 that doctors may not participate, but may be present to declare the prisoner dead. That created a conflict, in some states, with existing laws which forbid injections except under the supervision of a physician.

In Texas, injection became the legislated method in 1977. Regulations based on the law specifically state that the injection will be administered by a medically trained individual, not a doctor.

But that does not satisfy some critics, including Jack Rendler, coordinator for the western region of Amnesty International, a London-based organization which opposes the death penalty.

"Medical techniques and personnel are meant to sustain life, not take it," Rendler said.

Lethal injection executions in Texas to take place in the same room where the state used to electrocute condemned men, a death chamber housed in a red brick unit called The Walls.

The prisoner is strapped down on a gurney, a rolling stretcher, in the small, poorly lighted room.

A prison employee inserts an intravenous needle attached to a tube that snakes down and through a nearby wall that separates the condemned man from his executioner. A one-way mirror allows the executioner to watch the condemned, if he chooses, but prevents the condemned from seeing his executioner.

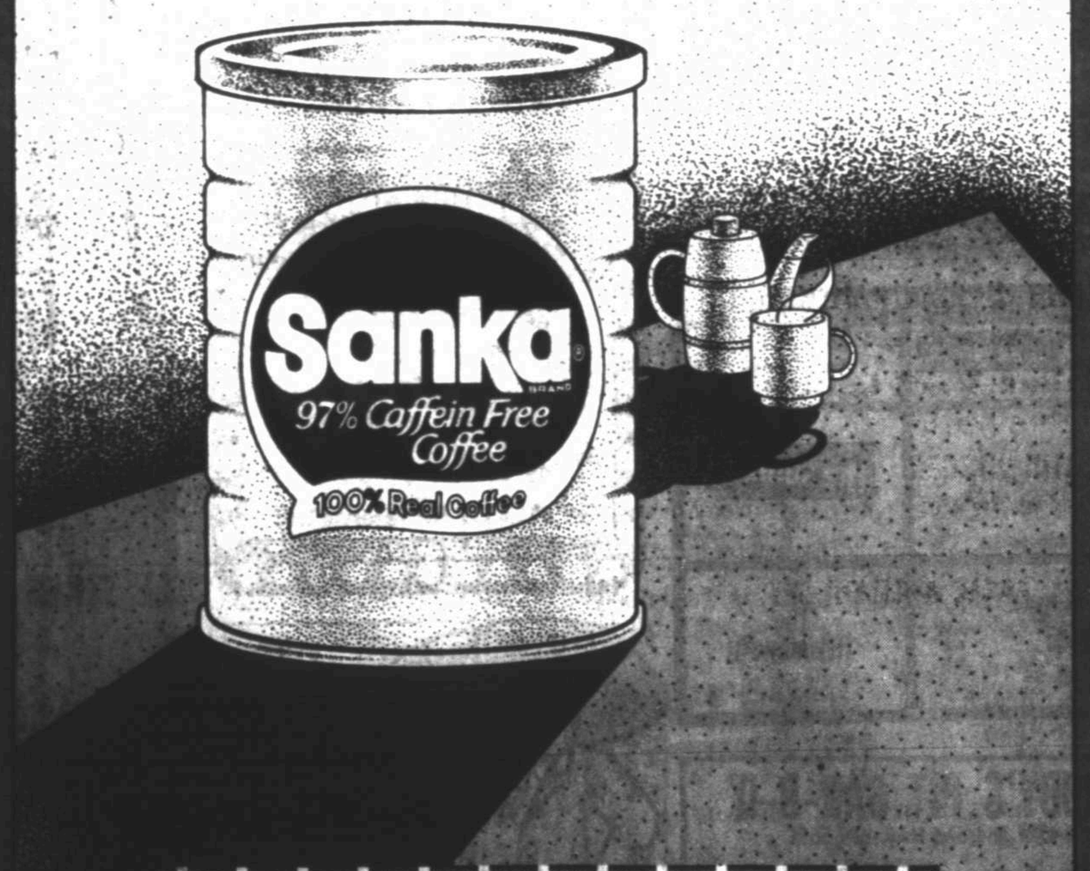

A clear saline solution is started, flowing down the tube and into the prisoner's arm. When a prison official gives the word, the executioner uses a syringe to inject sodium thiopental into the tube. It blends with the saline solution and flow through the tube and into the patient.

Bourke and others say unconsciousness should be almost immediate. He said that in routine surgery, doctors use 1.4 to 2.3 milligrams of the drug per pound of the patient's weight, and that it produces quick, deep sleep.

A killing dose would be of a much higher volume, but the prisoner would experience approximately the same sensation, he said.

The effects of sodium thiopental are dramatic. The muscles of the heart and the respiration system are stilled quickly and blood stops flowing to the brain. The brain dies within minutes.

'Gandhi' star retains calmness

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD — Ben Kingsley seems extraordinarily calm, considering the whirl of activity that surrounds him. But then one might expect that from the actor who has played the serene Mahatma Gandhi in an epic film.

Soft-spoken but articulate, the English-Indian actor displayed an inner tranquility during a tightly-scheduled round of interviews and conferences preceding the premiere of "Gandhi."

Richard Attenborough's $19-million film biography of the man who hastened India's independence opens this month in order to qualify for this year's Academy awards.

Kingsley is certain to be nominated for awards as best actor of 1982. The prospect pleases him, but he is not overwhelmed. Nor is he worried that his portrayal will type him forever in the minds of producers.

"I'm very proud of the film, but I stand by my versatility," he says. "In the theater I've played roles that are utterly different. Since 'Gandhi,' I have done a film written by Harold Pinter, 'Betrayal,' as well as 'The Merry Wives of Windsor' for television and a one-man play based on the life of the famous actor, Edmund Kean."

Without the trademark round eye-glasses, bald head and brush moustache of Gandhi, there is little resemblance. Kingsley has black hair, albeit receding, and his face is fuller than in the movie. He also has regained some of the weight he shed to portray the ascetic leader.

Still, Kingsley feels an almost mystic connection to Gandhi. "I have always been attracted to him, and my feeling is not remotely chauvinistic. As an actor, I felt that he would be one of the great roles; I feel the same way about Napoleon and Haile Selassie."

On opening night in London of the nine-hour "Nicholas Nickelby," Kingsley received a telephone call during the interval. Would he meet with Richard Attenborough about the possibility of playing Gandhi in the movie?

"My wife, Allison, had just taken out the Robert Payne biography of Gandhi from our neighborhood library in Stratford," the actor recalled. "She was reading it at the time, when there appeared a tiny possibility that I might play the role. It's hard to imagine that it was coincidental."

Attenborough had been searching for a relatively unknown actor to play the spiritual leader. A light went on when his son said, "Did you know that Ben Kingsley is half-Indian?"

The director and Kingsley had a meeting in which, the actor recalls, "he was assessing my sensibilities and temperament, and I his."

Two screen tests later, Attenborough said, "Ben, I want you to do it."

A 15-year veteran of the Royal Shakespeare Company, Kingsley immersed himself in Gandhi, studying a five-hour documentary by India television, listening to recordings, collecting photographs. He also shed 20 of his normal 150 pounds.

By GREGG KILDAY
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — "Frances," the new $10-million film about the stormy life of the late film star Frances Farmer, carries with it a "based on a true story" claim. But one character, Harry York, is fictionalized. Yet he's become a controversial factor in a lawsuit against the movie's poducers.

According to the movie's producers, York is based on Stewart O. Jacobson, a private detective who claims to have had a 40-year relationship with Farmer. But according to William Arnold, author of the Farmer biography, "Shadowland," Jacobson is an impostor whom the movie's producers are using to advance their contention that their screenplay is based on original research rather than Arnold's book. Arnold and producer Noel Marshall have filed a multi-million dollar lawsuit against the movie's producers, Mel Brooks and Marie Yates.

In 1978, Yates and Arnold sold the motion-picture rights to "Shadowland" to Marshall, with Yates as executive producer. But Yates says that Marshall "vetoed" her efforts to push the project along. Yates then discovered that Brooks shared her enthusiasm for a film on Farmer. "I wanted to make the movie and I asked Marshall for a release," said Yates. "I also asked him to let the author come with me, but (Marshall) would not release him."

Marshall alleges that Yates and Brooks entered into a "conspiracy to create a motion picture which was and is copied substantially" from "Shadowland."

Yates claims that she discovered and interviewed Stewart Jacobson while assisting Arnold with his research. But after listening to the interview tapes, Arnold says, he dismissed Jacobson as "a complete fraud."

Brooks and Yates disagreed. They realized, they say, that besides providing them with new information — which freed them from relying on Arnold's research — Jacobson offered a solution to the problems they faced in dramatizing Farmer's life. In the final screenplay, Jacobson was given a fictional name, Harry York, but the filmmakers insist that the events surrounding him are true and verifiable within the limits of certain dramatic license.

Ironically, Arnold says that he, Marshall and Yates had talked about introducing a fictional character to provide a narrative point of view. But he contends that the filmmakers seized upon Jacobson simply as a ploy to get around the problem of buying screen rights to his book.

Broadway play has right address

By MORT YOUNG
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Love requited is never as satisfying, at least in the theater, as love unrequited. Romantic sadness demands a happily failed ending. "84 Charing Cross Road" requites that need.

It is the true story of a platonic love triangle between books, a New York playwright and a London bookstore, Marks & Co., for address see above. And like many true stories, it is not as strange as fiction. The audience easily guesses the ending.

That's all right. It's the absolutely right ending. And Ellen Burstyn is absolutely right as she takes her character, Helene Hanff, from 1949 through 20 years of being a moderately succesful writer and an avid booklover who falls in close emotional contact with a London store which, she finds, is nearer to the heart than the American book delicatessens downtown.

It was not until two decades passed that Ms. Hanff finally arrived in London — after the bookstore had shut forever. But she had come to know the staff, particularly Frank Doel, the manager, as if they were family.

Frank moves from his 40s to his 60s, and from stiff-lip propriety, in his letters to Ms Hanff, to affection. Joseph Maher plays the role with such humanity and humor that one wants to erect a statue to him: if not next to Nelson's in Trafalgar Square, then perhaps next to the Nederlander Theater in which he is performing.

The dramatic device of making an exchange of letters into a play is only partly successful, however. A third of the stage is devoted to Ms. Hanff's humble sitting room, the remainder to Marks & Co.'s bookstore. Ms. Burstyn reads her letters aloud. Mr. Maher reads his aloud, and so we have a dialogue. Other letters between staff members and Ms. Hanff are read aloud but, despite the warmth and love the letters exude, they nevertheless are not conversation. They are not quite dialogue. They are letters.

And Ms. Hanff is not quite George Bernard Shaw. No one being quite Shaw, the comparison may be considered unfair, until the slow spots in the two-act play drive the argument home. But as seen at a critics' preview before Tuesday's opening night performance, not every letter read aloud is as pertinent as some others.

Despite the occasional misfired missals, the performances of Ellen Burstyn and Joseph Maher are what make Broadway theater worth leaving the TV screen for to see in the flesh. These are artists in every sense of the word, and this is a play that offers an evening of good theater, a play which can be thought about and relished, instead of being forgotten in time to see the next commercial.

The play is directed by James Roose-Evans, who adapted Ms Hanff's book, also titled "84 Charing Cross Road," with the care deserved by this incident in the lives of people who never met face to face, but who knew each other so well.

ENTERTAINMENT

NAACP presents Image Awards

By GWEN JONES
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — "We can't sit around and ask when are they (movie studios) going to give us a chance," said actress Jayne Kennedy after receiving the best actress award for the film "Body and Soul" at the 1982 NAACP Image Awards.

The small number of black actresses in major feature roles this year caused the "best-supporting actress" category to be left off the ballot. In fact, Kennedy was the only actress nominated in her category with a major role.

In order to help improve minority employment in the entertainment industry, Willis Edwards, president of the Beverly Hills/Hollywood NAACP cited a placement center for jobs in the industry run by the organization. Benjamin L. Hooks, NAACP executive director, also pointed to an agreement with Walt Disney Studios and "another studio," he declined to specify.

As for the once-threatened boycotts against studios that do not hire blacks, Hooks would say only that "we're in a position to boycott if necessary."

Rosemary Clooney's life chronicled in movie

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — "Rosie: The Rosemary Clooney Story," on CBS tonight, details engagingly the rags to riches to rags to rocks to recovery of the popular singer who suffered a mental breakdown in the late 1960s.

Early in her career, Miss Clooney appeared on the cover of Time magazine, a heady rung on the success ladder. Today she appears in television commercials for bathroom tissue, but that cannot be considered her bottom rung.

In 1968, while under the influence of Valium and Librium, and emotionally fragile from a failed marriage and the assassination of her friend, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, she lost control and insulted a night-club audience, riduculing them for coming to hear her when more important things were happening in the world.

Not long afterwards, she wound up in a mental hospital.

The movie, based on Miss Clooney's book, "This for Remembrance," opens with still photographs of the singer with Bob Hope, Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra, this to assure unfamiliar audiences that Miss Clooney was more than a supper-club entertainer. A typically upbeat rendition of "Come On' a My House," one of her signature songs, then trails off, as if the plug were pulled on the record player. The prospect is for a story that will have its share of heartbreak.

"She had everything," says one doctor before his psychiatric interview with Miss Clooney, who, strapped into a straitjacket, looks all the world like a lost little girl. The film then flashes back to the young, enthusiastic teen-ager who began singing professionally with her sister, Betty, at a Cincinnati radio station in 1945.

Sandra Locke, progressing beyond her damsel role in Clint Eastwood movies, captures the up-and-down side of Miss Clooney's personality and life. Miss Locke has Miss Clooney's singing mannerisms down nicely, although her weight never fluctuates, as Miss Clooney's did. The rich, velvety voice is perfect because Miss Clooney dubbed the vocals.

A priority of the production was to try to match physical appearances of the characters, even the minor ones, in the singer's life. Singer Tony Orlando, chosen for his looks rather than his acting ability, has the swarthy countenance of Jose Ferrer, Miss Clooney's ex-husband.

Other lookalikes are Tamar Cooper as designer Edith Head and Eli Rill as conductor Mitch Miller. It is Miller who forces Miss Clooney to record "Come On' a My House," a number she feels is silly.

Even though Ferrer is depicted as a caring father to the couple's five children, he is the heel of the movie, refusing to change his womanizing ways, particularly when his wife is on the road. And she travels a lot, feeling pinched by responsibilities. "We needed the money," she says.

Balancing fame and family contributes to Miss Clooney's breakdown. To maintain her hectic schedule, which includes appearances for Kennedy's presidential campaign, she pops pills for stimulation and sleeping.

"America's Sweetheart" soon takes a bitter turn. Her paranoia, anger and confusion culminate in the stinging scene in which she viciously attacks the audience, calling her fans friviolous and irresponsible.

The film also offers background factors. Miss Clooney, the product of a broken home, lived with relatives during her teenage years. Says Miss Clooney's aunt: "It's so typical of little Rosie not to say anything. She keeps everything inside."

Growers want bill defeated

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — As winter's evening darkness settled over the capital and workers streamed homeward, Perry Ellsworth remained at his desk in an aging office building two blocks from the White House.

Ellsworth, longtime Washington lobbyist for the National Council of Agricultural Employers, spent last Friday drafting a rebuttal to anti-grower amendments adopted by a House committee as it considered the controversial Simpson-Mazzoli immigration control bill.

The panel, acting on amendments drawn up by the AFL-CIO and introduced by Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., voted on straight party lines to recommend that the House kill a provision that would make it easier for growers to import workers if Americans are not available to plant, weed and harvest crops.

"If the Miller amendments are adopted on the House floor," Ellsworth said, "growers will have no alternative but to oppose the bill. The entire agriculture community is united on this."

As Ellsworth was assembling facts and rhetoric for congressmen to use in floor arguments, Peter Allstrom, an AFL-CIO lobbyist, was working the phones to pull together labor's sizable bloc of supporters in the House.

"THE (MILLER) amendments are crucially important," Allstrom said. "They will stop the immigration bill from becoming a vehicle for a major guestworker program.

"Without those amendments, we can't support the bill."

The AFL-CIO does not want the matter settled in a floor vote. It is insisting that the Democratic leadership "assure" support for the Miller amendment or else keep the immigration bill off the floor.

The union's chief lobbyist, Ray Denison, told Miller, in a letter circulated to the Democratic leadership, that the AFL-CIO will support the bill "only if there is assurance of support for your amendments by the Department of Justice and the majority of House members before the bill goes to the House floor."

This was the major lobbying battle in progress behind the scenes as the Houses edged closer to considering the beleaguered immigration bill. Other special interests were fighting their own 11th-hour skirmishes.

The Senate passed the measure in August, giving overwhelming approval to a law that would, for the first time, penalize employers who knowingly hire undocumented aliens, grant legal resident status to potentially millions of these aliens who have established homes in the United States, and streamline that foreign-worker process so growers would not be hurt by a sudden shortage of the undocumented workers they have come to rely on.

THE BILL then cleared the House Judiciary Committee in September, but too late for floor action before the election recess.

Now, in what could be the remaining two weeks of the lame-duck session, House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill decided earlier this week night to give the bill a chance on the floor.

The Rules Committee considered it this week and cleared itfor debate and voting possibly as early as Thursday. Differences between the House and Senate versions then would have to be compromised and agreed to by both chambers before it could go to President Reagan for his signature.

The Federation for American Immigration Reform (FAIR), an aggressive lobbying group promoting firm limits on immigration, has launched a last-minute campaign to press its goals — elimination of the amnesty provision and a numerical ceiling on the number of legal immigrants who may enter each year.

Growers opposed to bill

Learning of the AFL-CIO's heavy pressure on O'Neill to either assure adoption of the Miller amendments or else pull the bill off the floor, FAIR'S executive director, Roger Conner, said:

"Bring it up on the floor. Let democracy prevail. Back-room maneuvering ought not be used to defeat this bill."

FAIR's own tactics have included letters to its 65,000 members and supporters urging them to send postcards to O'Neill arguing for FAIR's two goals, information to the editorial boards of 60 major newspapers across the country, packets of literature to all House members, and a full-page advertisement in the newspaper USA Today with 110 prominent signatories, including some from business and organized labor.

THE U.S. Catholic Conference, which represents the church on legislation, has written a letter to O'Neill saying it will support the Simpson-Mazzoli bill as long as amnesty for undocumented aliens remains in it.

The Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund (MALDEF) would prefer to see the bill not come up, said MALDEF's Washington director, Antonia Hernandez. But if it reaches the floor, MALDEF wants a chance for its supporters to offer amendments to "correct inequities," she said.

These are among the many lobbies that have fought over this wide-ranging measure for nearly two years. The upcoming House floor debate will be their last chance.

Despite the AFL-CIO's brash tactic in support of the Miller amendments, a number of veteran House officials said they believe the union is bluffing in its threat to withdraw support for the entire bill.

"I think they'll be defeated on the Miller amendments (on the floor) but will not want to repudiate the rest of the bill," one official said. He said the bill's sanctions against employers of undocumented aliens has been one of organized labor's demands for years.

The AFL-CIO argues that Congress should not make it easier for growers to import workers when Americans have been laid off from jobs that may never return.

MILLER, presenting the amendments Wednesday to the House Education and Labor Committee, said unemployed Americans should have a chance to take farm jobs.

A more emotional floor fight will be over the bill's granting of amnesty to undocumented workers who live permanently in the United States. Many congressmen will vote to delete that provision.

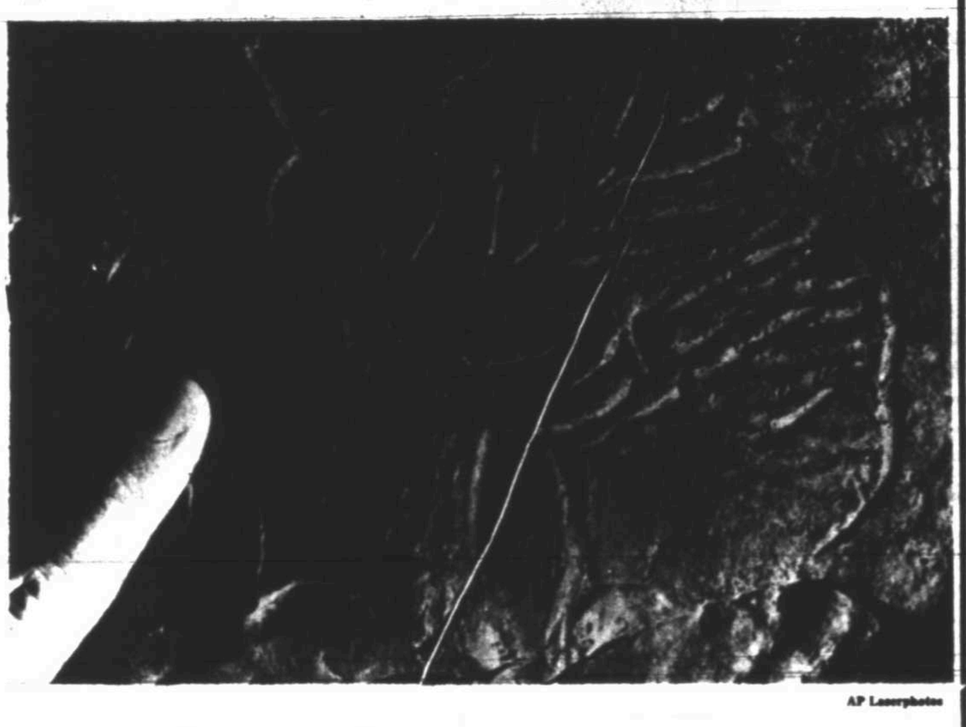

They believe amnesty would set a bad precedent of "rewarding lawbreakers" and attract more undocumented aliens who will wait for another amnesty years in the future. They also believe that suddenly legalized aliens will feel free to seek better jobs openly and possibly at a lower wage, thereby competing unfairly with unemployed Americans. Some congressmen also fear the legalized aliens would become welfare burdens.

But proponents of the bill argue that rounding up and deporting the estimated millions of undocumented aliens who have established homes would be unacceptable public policy. They also say that keeping them in illegal status makes them vulnerable to economic exploitation which drives wages down for everyone.

The Reagan administration, which has been actively lobbying for passage of the bill this year, supports the amnesty provision but has indicated recently that it would not object if it were deferred until increased border enforcement and employer sanctions were proved effective.

Cave has Indian drawings dating back to 12th century, scientists say

WASHINGTON (AP) — A unique series of ancient Indian drawings, which date as far back as the 12th century, exist on the mud-clad walls of a subterranean cave in eastern Tennessee, scientists disclosed today.

Discovery of the still-moist, fragile drawings is a significant step in understanding the artistic and religious lives of Indians who probably were predecessors to the Creek or Cherokee peoples, they said.

"We have had no prehistoric art in deep caves in this country before," said Dr. Charles H. Faulkner of the University of Tennessee, leader of the team studying the drawings, known as glyphs.

"A decorated cave like this is unique in North America, so far, and it may be unique in the world," Faulkner said.

The 350-foot-long passage, dubbed Mud Glyph Cave by the scientists, is covered with representations of faces, animals, stick figures and other unknown symbols, said a report to the National Geographic Society, which sponsored work at the site.

Most of the drawings appear to have been made using fingers or sticks on mud deposited by past flooding in the passage, said the scientists.

Some of the glyphs appear to have been struck with the butt of a club, suggesting attempts to ritually strike at the real object or person depicted, they note.

The main cave where the glyph passage was found has long been known, said the scientists. But it wasn't until 1979 that Walter Merrill, a U.S. Forest Service ranger and amateur cave explorer, squeezed through a series of small openings and followed an underground stream to the passage.

"He immediately realized what he had found, that it was Indian art and was very fragile," Faulkner said.

Fearing for the safety of the find, Merrill did not tell anyone about the discovery until 1981, Faulkner added. At that point the Forest Service called in Faulkner, who them contacted the Society for research funding.

The team, including Drs. Patty Jo Watson of Washington University in St. Louis and Jon Muller of Southern Illinois University, photographed the entire passage in detail and did preliminary digging for artifacts.

The only items found so far are charcoal bits from cane torches used to light the dark, damp cave. This absence of artifacts indicates the Indians used the cave for ritual or artistic purposes rather than for mining or shelter, the researchers said.

"Even if we wanted to remove some of the glyphs, we couldn't," Faulkner said in an interview. "The clay is still soft. The environment is that passage hasn't changed in a thousand years — it stays at about 55 degrees and 100 percent humidity."

Carbon dating and the motifs of the drawings indicate they most likely were made between the 12th and 14th centuries.

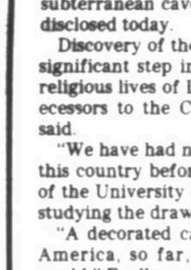

The researchers will not disclose the exact location of the find, saying only that it is on private property in the eastern part of the state.

Not only do the landowners wish to remain anonymous, Faulkner said, but all involved want to protect the site from curiosity seekers and vandals.

"This site is very, very fragile," Faulkner said, "It's the kind of site where a simple swipe of the hand can destroy them (the glyphs).

Addabbo: MX is model of extravagance

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Joseph Addabbo, the New York Democrat who rallied the House to a bruising 245-176 vote blocking funds for the MX missile, has spent the past 10 years sending messages on frugality to the Pentagon.

Joseph Addabbo

His theme: The military establishment desires weapons that are too expensive to buy in quantity, too complex to maintain and do not perform up to expectations.

And the MX, the Queens congressman believes, is a model of extravagant military spending.

He told his colleagues during the four hours of debate leading up to Tuesday's vote: "This is a complete waste, a blank check to the Air Force. We cannot afford it...I don't think we have to fund every expensive toy that the admirals, generals and contractors want."

As chairman of the House Appriopriations defense subcommittee, the 57-year-old Addabbo is one of the half-dozen men in Congress who oversee billions of dollars in military spending.

He has a history as a budget slasher since he joined the defense subcommittee in 1967. He authored the resolution striking funds for the bombing of Cambodia in 1973; he led the fight that blocked the B-1 bomber for several years during the Carter administration; he tried to cut up to $30 billion from President Reagan's defense budget this year — and succeeded in steering $17 billion in cuts through the full committee.

Through it all, the portly, jocular Addabbo has managed to hold the respect of more hawkish colleagues and he frequently gets bipartisan support for his buget-cutting efforts.

"He's a very tolerant individual," Rep. Samuel Stratton, D-N.Y., said Tuesday. "Even though our points of view are different we respect each other."

Stratton is the third-ranking Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, and is as energetic at backing military projects as Addabbo is at cutting them. Stratton supports the B-1 bomber, the F-18 fighter and the administration plan to build new nuclear-powered aircraft carriers. All are opposed by Addabbo.

"I don't think he's using defense to bring down the (budget) deficits," Stratton said of Addabbo. "He simply feels we don't need all those weapons."

Rep. Nicholas Mavroules, D-Mass., who failed by three votes last July in his own attempt to stop the MX, credited Addabbo with the MX defeat.

"He very wisely called on his colleagues to coalesce and organize," Mavroules said. "His recognition among his peers, and he has earned it, certainly helps."

Reagan called the House vote "a grave mistake" and vowed to take the battle on to the Senate.

Both MX supporters and opponents agreed the fight is not over. "I don't think this means MX is dead," said Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., the key floor supporter.

"We won the battle, but we haven't won the war," Addabbo told reporters after the vote.

The House vote deleted $988 million from the $231.6 billion Pentagon spending bill for the current fiscal year, but it still hasn't voted on an effort to eliminate another $2.5 billion for research on the MX.

Addabbo has said he would propose an amendment to reduce the research funds to $1 billion.

Utah policeman fired for polygamy

MURRAY, Utah (AP) — A police officer with two years on the force has been fired for violating state law outlawing polygamy, the mayor says.

Officer Royston Potter has appealed the firing to the Murray Civil Service Commission, which will meet Monday.

Potter, who joined the force in 1980, was "terminated for failure to comply with his oath of office and rules and regulations of the police department," said Mayor LaRell D. Muir.

BILLINGSLEY ENTERPRISES
Presents

LaVillita Office Suites

The developers of LaVillita realize that the independent businessman or woman is especially cost-conscious in today's business climate. Because you need to know exactly what costs are, we have taken the guesswork out of leasing office space.

The remainder of our atrium building and our single level office building are built out in luxurious suites with one to six offices, reception area and coffee bar. We added plush carpet and decorator wallpapers; all at OUR cost.

Before you make a leasing decision, visit with Helen Moise in our leasing office about the many advantages of locating at LaVillita. We offer COMPETITIVE RATES, IMMEDIATE OCCUPANCY and ON-SITE MANAGEMENT. We don't think you can do better anywhere in town.

BUILDING THE PETROPLEX

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% loan to value interest will be charged at a rate of 12 3/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.50%. The 1 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%. *Principle and Interest only is calculated in monthly payment.

Justice Blackmun discusses abortion during rare TV interview

WASHINGTON (AP) — The author of the Supreme Court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion says letter-writers reacted by calling him a murderer, butcher and even Pontius Pilate.

Justice Harry A. Blackmun made the disclosures in a rare television interview on Cable News Network.

Only three other justices are known to have given television interviews while sitting on the court, although others have given speeches and interviews to the press.

Talking of the wave of letters that followed the abortion ruling, Blackmun said, "I think you can think of any name to call someone, and I have been called it. Butcher of Dachau, murderer, Pontius Pilate, King Herod, you name it."

Dachau was the site of an infamous Nazi concentration camp in southern Germany in World War II.

Pontius Pilate was the Roman official who allowed Jesus Christ to die, while King Herod ordered the slaughter of young children in Bethlehem around the time of Jesus.

Blackmun said he has been told that in the immediate aftermath of the abortion decision, the court received more mail than at any time in its history — even surpassing the mail generated by the 1962 decision banning organized prayer in public schools.

He added that about 75 percent of the mail criticized the abortion decision.

Last week, the Supreme Court heard oral arguments on the most sweeping set of abortion issues for the justices to decide since the landmark 1973 ruling.

Blackmun, who has been on the court for 12 years, did not comment on the current abortion cases or on any other specific cases pending before the Supreme Court.

The 74-year-old justice, describing himself as "somewhat mischievous," also described how hearing aid feedback led Supreme Court Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and John Paul Stevens to insist the court's top-secret conference room was bugged.

Blackmun described how, as a newcomer to wearing a hearing aid in one ear, he brushed back his hair and discovered that the hand movement near his ear caused "a little ring."

"And I did it a second time and Justice O'Connor said, 'I think the room is bugged,'" Blackmun said. "And Justice Stevens immediately supported her and he said, 'I felt the same way because I hear something.'"

Blackmun continued:

"Well, I knew what had happened and being somewhat mischievous I decided not to say anything for a little while and run this out with some more fun."

The conference room is where the justices cast their final votes, amid some of Washington's tightest secrecy.

Blackmun said Justice Byron R. White eventually discovered the secret while the court was sitting for oral argument.

Only small percentage of youths tried as adults charged with violent crimes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most youths tried in adult courts are charged with property crimes or minor offenses and aren't imprisoned, according to a new federally-funded study.

Only 32 percent of the juveniles tried in adult courts were charged with violent crimes according to a three-year research project which examined trials in every county in the nation and the District of Columbia.

Forty-five percent of the juvenile offenders in adult courts were charged with property crimes and 23 percent were charged with public disorder and similar minor offenses such as prostitution and public drunkenness, the study showed.

The study, entitled "Youth in Adult Courts: Between Two Worlds," was released early this week. It was conducted by the Academy for Contemporary Problems in Columbus, Ohio, with the help of a Justice Department grant.

The study included its view of public perceptions that the severest juvenile cases are sent to adult courts and that punishment for youths is harsher there.

Sampling 3,418 cases where the disposition was known, the researchers found that 90 percent ended in conviction or guilty pleas. Just over half of those convicted received fines or probation rather than jail sentences.

"The apparent reason for transferring or waiving many juveniles to adult courts — that they will receive stiffer sentences than in juvenile courts — does not appear to be substantiated in this research," said project director Joseph White.

Indianapolis women remember poet Riley

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — James Whitcomb Riley, famous for children's poems such as "The Raggedy Man" and "Little Orphant Annie," was a bachelor with no children of his own.

But Agnes Bridgford, 77, and Ruth Trabue, 75, who now give tours at Riley's historic Indianapolis residence, retain their childhood memories of the Hoosier poet who used to offer them pennies or candy.

Riley was born Oct. 7, 1849. In later life, he maintained two residences — his boyhood home in Greenfield, and the house where he boarded in Indianapolis, about 25 miles away, where he lived with Maj. Charles Holstein and his wife.

Mrs. Bridgford knew Riley as a neighbor in Indianapolis who bought cigars at her father's store.

"He'd buy this little 'Kiss Me' gum, with a rubber band around. When he'd come across the street, he'd drop those little pieces of gum and tell us they were growing there. We didn't believe him but we'd always look and see if he dropped the gum," Mrs. Bridgford said.

"He gave us a feeling of awesomeness because he was a person of dignity. He wore pinched glasses and carried a cane," she recalled.

Mrs. Trabue has been official hostess of the Indianapolis residence for the last 20 years. "I lived here for 13 years," she said, explaining she moved out once a burglar alarm system was installed in 1975.

She used to live in what is now publicly displayed as the kitchen and dining room. Mrs. Trabue, who now lives nearby, still shows visitors the Victorian home of her famous former neighbor who used to let her play in his yard with her brother and sister.

"In 1913, we lived in Greenfield, directly in back of his boyhood home. We lived there two years," she said, reminiscing that "he tossed pennies down" for the children.

The Indianapolis house was opened in 1921 as a museum. Fifty years later, it had 12,000 visitors from 50 states and 15 foreign countries in one year, Mrs. Trabue said.

Since the mid 1970s, Mrs. Bridgford has been a member of the Riley Alliance, a group of volunteers who show and publicize the home, which is on the national register of historic places.

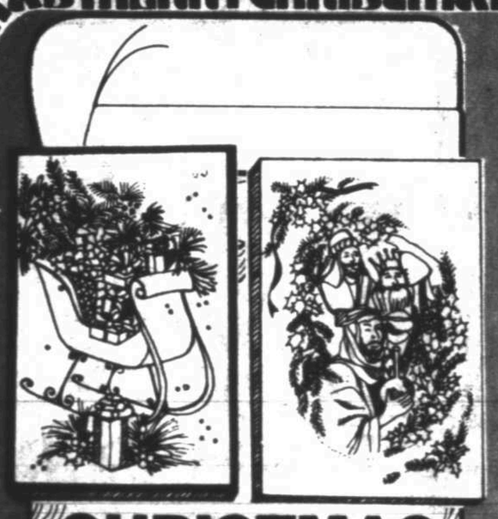

Posted in the house is a photo of Riley with a group of children. Mrs. Bridgford, who was 10 when Riley died on July 22, 1916, is one of the group.

"I wasn't supposed to be in the picture. I and Dorothy Goodman (a friend) were little snoopy neighbors. We were sitting while they were taking the picture and they needed a little fill-in," she said.

Zoo hopes calm male rhino will mate with feisty female

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — At first glance, Gus and Mabel appeared to be made for each other and it seemed that their all-expenses-paid blind date in the United States would be a rousing success.

So was it jet lag, a bumpy 3,000-mile flight or, perhaps, the spartan furnishings of their love nest that made five-year-old Mabel give a shake of her two-horned head and a kick when she first saw her potential mate?

Rhinoceroses by nature have nasty tempers, said Los Angeles Zoo Director Warren Thomas, indicating that Mabel's hostility toward the 2,500-pound Gus might not be personal.

"They're big, they're tough and they batter the daylights out of each other when they breed," Thomas said, as the zoo's latest acquisitions from Zimbabwe, Africa, were let into adjoining quarters of the "rhino barn" one morning this week.

"Rhinos tend to have a panic factor and a tiny brain to match," he said. "But I expect her to be a real devil."

Indeed, the lumbering, slate gray female temporarily named Mabel by one zoo keeper, has been kicking and snorting since she was captured in August, along with her prospective mate, in the bush country of an area called Mana Pools in the Zambesi Valley.

As for her calmer counterpart, Gus immediately sauntered to one corner of the concrete pen and began munching on acacia and hay fortified with vitamins and minerals. Thomas said: "He looks like he was born in captivity. He's the antithesis of her."

The Zimbabwe government donated the pair to the Save African Endangered Wildlife Foundation in New York to enhance the world's captive population of black rhinoceroses as insurance against the species' extinction.

Los Angeles Zoo officials were quick to bid for the first pair, offering $45,000 for Gus and Mabel.

About $25,000 went toward shipping costs for the animals' 18-hour plane ride, and the remaining $20,000 will go back to Zimbabwe for wildlife conservation programs, said the zoo's curator of education, Lora LaMarca.

The black rhinoceros has almost been wiped out in its native habitat because of hunting, its horn sought as a supposed aphrodisiac, Thomas said.

Experts estimate the total population of black rhinoceroses to be 5,000 to 10,000, less than half the number thought to exist 10 years ago.

"In Arab countries their horns are carved into dagger handles," Thomas said. Powdered rhinoceros horn is also widely prized in Asian countries as a cure for ailments ranging from impotence to toothache.

For the next 10 to 20 days, Gus and Mabel will be kept in the adjoining pens where they will be able to get acquainted by peering over a dividing wall.

Once zoo officials feel they have gotten used to each other and their new home, they will be allowed to set up housekeeping together in a rhino compound.

If Gus and Mabel breed successfully, it will be a year and a half before a baby black rhino would be born. Their offspring will be shipped to other zoos to preserve the new bloodline and, if necessary, returned to the wilds someday.

"We need to have enough unrelated animals in captivity to keep inbreeding to an absolute minimum," Thomas said. "It acts as a hedge against a total disaster in the wilds."

Gus and Mabel are the first rhinoceroses to be shipped from Zimbabwe in the last 10 years, said Ingrid Schroeder, president of the foundation.

She watched anxiously as the six-by-12-foot crates of African hardwoods and reinforced iron bars were pried open and the rhinoceroses emerged to explore their more spacious pens.

"One doesn't realize what it takes to move two rhinoceroses," Schroeder said. "I almost feel like a very proud mother."

Clem Coetsee, the head of the Management Unit for the Department of National Parks and Wildlife of Zimbabwe, who helped capture the pair in neighboring bush lands, was also relieved.

"The whole operation has been a tremendous success," Coetsee said.
