What's Behind All This Talk of Sanctions

United States Has Key to Economic Situation

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

FIFTY-TWO nations, all members of the League of Nations, have solemnly agreed to employ economic sanctions, within limits, upon Italy, one of the major powers of the league's membership, because of her aggression in invading Ethiopia, a lesser member whose rights are none the less inviolate before the covenant of the league.

It can hardly be said that the league has plunged in haste into such action; whether it will repent at leisure remains to be seen. For weeks—months—the big news has carried Geneva date lines, and discussions of "sanctions"—economic sanctions, followed, if necessary, by military sanctions—have been the subject of the reporting.

To the lay reader, sanctions is an unfortunate word, in that it is not graphic and in itself means nothing, to him, although by this time, if he has waded through a sufficient amount of the cabled accounts, he has a pretty fair understanding of its meaning in the present case.

Sanctions in force are merely penalties upon an aggressor nation agreed to by other nations who are interested in maintaining or redeeming peace. Economic sanctions are trade "boycotts," in which the protesting nations refuse to buy from or sell to the aggressor. In their less severe form, economic sanctions may exist only with respect to certain materials which are essential to a nation engaged in a war, such as transport animals, metals, certain chemicals and munitions. The purpose, of course, is to effect in the aggressor nation such a shortage of war materials that it is no longer equipped to engage in war. Admittedly one of the important materials of war is fresh money; by refusing to buy from the aggressor, the nations enforcing sanctions can, if that aggressor has an important trade, cripple it financially until continued war threatens bankruptcy.

Military Sanctions Are War.

Carried to the ultimate degree, economic sanctions would deny to the aggressor nation all imports of any kind whatever. Unless a nation were practically self-sufficient, these measures would eventually starve it into submission or provoke it into attack which, made against overwhelming odds, would certainly result in its downfall.

Military sanctions are really acts of war, since they are the armed enforcement of economic sanctions. In the beginning they would consist of naval and military blockades to keep carriers bearing imports or exports from entering or leaving the aggressor nation. The Allies bottled up Germany in this manner during the World war.

The declaration of sanctions is delegated to the league through those articles in the covenant which are designed to prevent war. They are Articles X to XVII. Since the prevention of war is the primary purpose of the league itself, these articles are the life blood of the great experiment with Woodrow Wilson's idea.

Article X won't work. The league was founded to assure the peace of the world, but it was shaped by the nations which came out on the winning side of the World war, who thought, none too altruistically, that peace could be maintained by maintaining the status quo of 1919. Article X guarantees "the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league." But active enforcement of the rule depends upon the unanimous vote of the council, a body smaller than the assembly, and comprising only the more important members are required to submit such disputes to the council, which will try to bring the fractious nations to some sort of peaceable settlement. If none is forthcoming, the members can take whatever steps they consider necessary, including war against the aggressor. Since sanctions require a vote of all member nations of the league, with the implicated nations not voting, the council must refer the case to assembly. This is what happened in the case of Italy and Ethiopia.

Should "any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants" (as Italy has), Article XVI comes into play, for it provides sequently, in cases where Article XVI applies, the nature of the action appropriate to be taken under it may vary according to the circumstance of each particular case."

Perhaps the most important phase of the sanctions voted against Italy by the league is that which binds the 52 nations which agreed to them to prohibit importation of "all goods consigned from and grown, produced or manufactured in Italy or in Italian possessions from whatever place they arrive." This would cut off approximately two-thirds of Mussolini's export trade, chief articles of which are manufactured cotton and silk, citrus fruits, artificial

The league's committee of 18 has been given permanent mandate to supervise the sanctions measures in their execution and to submit for consideration any new measures which seem advisable.

This, then, is as far as the league has gone against Italy as this is written, and it is little likely that further steps will be taken before you read this. Actually, any member of the league could send warships and planes to the Mediterranean and begin blowing Italy right off the map with perfect legality in the eyes of international law. For Italy has been named an aggressor, and any aggressor nation becomes automatically "at war" with all member nations, and any acts of war by any member or members other than the aggressor would be strictly "in self defense."

The difficulty in employing sanctions, especially without military and naval blockade, against Italy is readily apparent when the observer remembers that the United States, Japan and Germany are not members of the league and are not bound by any agreements consummated in the Geneva headquarters by member nations alone.

Where "Balance" Rests.

Any trade restrictions which league members imposed upon Italy might work distinctly to the advantage of these three outside nations, for the imports that Italy received from member nations would simply be replaced with imports from the United States, Japan and Germany. Under the recently passed neutrality law, the United States has declared an embargo on all war materials to belligerents. League powers have lifted their embargo on war materials to Ethiopia. Italy might obtain such materials from the other powers outside the league, however.

It is little likely that Germany would sell munitions or raw materials with which to manufacture munitions to Italy, but it is not impossible. Hitler, to be sure, has been on none too friendly terms with his fellow dictator since the Austrian incident. He has shown that he is not much worried about France; but he would think more than twice about incurring the displeasure of Great Britain.

There is nothing to prevent Japan from buying what Italy needs in South America and reselling it to Il Duce. Nothing except Mussolini's inability to pay. He has only $379,000,000 in gold reserve.

If Germany, however, were inclined to buy what she wished abroad, acting as liaison between Italy and foreign markets, the incoming material could be shipped on Austrian railways (since the Austrian government has shown an inclination to work hand in glove with Mussolini) to Rome, Milan and Naples. The only effective way to enforce sanctions then would be to blockade Germany. This, it is generally agreed, would surely precipitate another general war on the continent.

It is becoming more and more apparent that the real balance of power, so far as sanctions are concerned, rests with the United States. Only the United States of the three great powers outside the league has within its own borders the vast supply of raw materials Italy would need if cut off from trade with league powers.

powers of the league. Therefore, if the aggressor in a case in point happens to be a member of the council, as Italy is, that nation's vote can stymie any action under Article X.

Should "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any member of the league or not" appear imminent, any member may request a council meeting or bring the case before the council or assembly for action, under the provisions of Article XI of the league's covenant.

Article XII is the one which requires that any dispute among league members be submitted to arbitration, judicial settlement or an inquiry by the council. It forbids the members directly involved from declaring war or engaging in acts of war until three months after the verdict of the league has been announced. Articles XIII and XIV elaborate upon the administration of arbitration, with XIV establishing the permanent court of international justice.

Pointed Part of Covenant.

Articles XV and XVI are more directly concerned with the Italo-Ethiopian dispute than are any of the others, for they provide for cases which have not been submitted to arbitration. In cases like this, members are required to submit such disputes to the council, which will try to bring the fractious nations to some sort of peaceable settlement. If none is forthcoming, the members can take whatever steps they consider necessary, including war against the aggressor. Since sanctions require a vote of all member nations of the league, with the implicated nations not voting, the council must refer the case to assembly. This is what happened in the case of Italy and Ethiopia.

Should "any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants" (as Italy has), Article XVI comes into play, for it provides Degrees of Sanctions.

In a formal resolution the assembly in 1921, put the following interpretation upon Article XVI:

"The council may, in the case of particular members, postpone the coming into force of any of these measures for a specified period, where it is satisfied that it is necessary in order to minimize the loss and inconvenience which will be caused to such members."

In considering the weight of the sanctions which the league has voted to employ against Italy, it is well to recall the note of Britain's Sir Samuel Hoare to the French ambassador, which said: "It is clear that there may be degrees of culpability and degrees of aggression, and con-silk, thrown silk machinery and apparatus, cheese and wines—exports which amounted to about $800,000,000 annually at the peak, but which have fallen off almost half during the depression.

Listed among Italy's chief imports in peace times are raw cotton, coal, coke, wheat, machinery and parts, raw wool and timber. The league sanctions would raise an embargo on horses, mules, donkeys, camels, rubber, bauxite, aluminum, aluminum oxide, iron ore, scrap iron, tin and tin ore, chromium, manganese, nickel, titanium, tungsten, vanadium, other ores and alloys and all "true forms of minerals and metals mentioned in their ores and alloys."

Supervising Application.

Member nations have agreed to measures which will help all nations employing sanctions to come to one another's assistance in compensating for trade losses through mutual increased trade facilities, credits, and cash and loans if possible. They have also agreed to discriminate against members like Hungary and Austria who, friendly to Mussolini, have refused to cut off trade with him.

Hoare Promises Britain Will Not Fight With Italy—
Laval's Peace Efforts Continued—President
Roosevelt Returns to Washington.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SIR SAMUEL HOARE, British foreign secretary, assured parliament and the world that Great Britain has no intention of fighting Italy and would not alone apply military sanctions against that nation. He held out strong hopes that the war in Africa could be settled without resort by the league to extreme measures. His speech was plainly an invitation to Italy to talk peace terms.

Sir Samuel Hoare

Denying that the government's policy is hostile to Fascism, Sir Samuel said:

"We have not the least intention of interfering in the domestic affairs of other people."

"The unbroken solidarity of the empire is behind the government's policy," he said. "Let those prophets of misfortune who have marked the empire down for decay and dissolution observe this fact of overwhelming importance."

Hoare hinted at British isolation from continental affairs if the league collapses.

Next day Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin warmly endorsed all that Hoare and Capt. Anthony Eden have done at Geneva. He deprecated even the use of the word war, but called for a rearming of the empire, saying: "In the interests of world peace it is essential our defensive services should be stronger than they are today."

Baldwin announced the adjournment of parliament on October 25 and the election of a new parliament on November 14. The campaign already is under way and is lively, with the international situation furnishing the main issues. The Labor party accuses the government of delaying action in the Italo-Ethiopian imbroglio until too late to prove really effective, and impugns its motive in seeking rearmament.

ONE of the government's much publicized efforts to punish alleged income tax evaders of Louisiana failed when a jury in Federal court at New Orleans brought in a verdict of not guilty in the case of Abraham L. Shushan, one of the close associates of the late Senator Long. The prosecution claimed he owed $71,000 in taxes. The verdict was greeted with loud cheers by the crowd in the courtroom, and in the ensuing confusion several news photographers were beaten up by former members of Long's bodyguard—which seems to be a habit in Louisiana.

MUSSOLINI made one conciliatory gesture toward Great Britain when he agreed to withdraw a division of troops from Libya; and at the same time he urged that France and Britain make quick reply to his peace conditions. But it became known the troops were to be moved from Libya to Tripoli, where they would be almost as much a menace to Egypt; and the duce's peace terms were so drastic that there was no prospect that they would be accepted by anyone concerned. They included disarmament of Ethiopia, an international protectorate over the central regions and an Italian protectorate over the remainder.

Addressing the foreign affairs committee of the French chamber of deputies, Premier Laval promised he would seek only a compromise that would be fully acceptable to the League of Nations. He told the committee that France's battleships would steam immediately to the assistance of Britain if the latter's fleet was attacked by Italy.

Since the first of the year, Laval declared, he had repeatedly called the attention of the Rome government to the stipulation of the league covenant and warned that France could not approve any violation of it.

GEN. RUDOLFO GRAZIANI's forces in southern Ethiopia were reported to have won several important victories in their advance toward Harar and the railway. They captured several towns despite desperate resistance by the natives, and took many prisoners. The main movement in that region was up the Webbe Shibelli river. The Ethiopians were repeatedly dispersed by aerial bombardment.

In Tigre province, on the north, the Italians were consolidating their positions and preparing for another big thrust toward Addis Ababa. Their line there extended nearly 70 miles from Adigrat through Aduwa to the holy city of Aksum.

Italian aviator-scouts reported that Ethiopian troops were digging in at Makale, about 60 miles southeast of Aduwa and the next logical objective in the Italian campaign of occupation, forming a major concentration for a desperate effort to frustrate the next attack.

ALL states and communities have been asked by Aubrey Williams, acting WPA administrator, to make better provision for the care of "unemployables," for federal aid for the needy will soon be confined to providing jobs. In an interview Mr. Williams said that with six states already cut off the dole, progress of the work relief program would bring liquidation of relief administrations in "the great majority of the remaining states" during November. This will leave those physically or mentally unable to work, the aged, mothers with dependent children, and other handicapped families and individuals, dependent upon local efforts.

"It will be next year before the social security program becomes operative, and the states have got to take the responsibility," he said.

WHILE Premier Pierre Laval of France was still trying desperately to find a way of settling the Italo-Ethiopian quarrel that would be acceptable to both Great Britain and Italy—apparently without regard to Ethiopia's real interests—fifty-two members of the League of Nations declared a boycott on all Italian goods and an embargo on various key exports to that country. The boycott binds these nations to prohibit importation of "all goods consigned from and grown, produced or manufactured in Italy or in Italian possessions from whatever place they arrive."

Pierre Laval

If rigidly enforced, this would cut off about two-thirds of the export trade upon which Italy depends in getting funds for prosecution of the war in Africa. The countries applying the sanctions agree to aid one another in compensating losses by increased trade facilities, credits, cash and loans if possible, and discriminating against league members such as Austria and Hungary which continue to trade with Italy.

Austria, Hungary and Albania spoke against the sanctions. Switzerland, which seeks to preserve her traditional neutrality, was silent. Some South American republics made complicated reservations.

It was decided that the sanctions should be put in force on October 31, and Laval thus had time to continue his peace efforts. These seemed to center on a way to "legalize" Italian occupation of that part of northern Ethiopia which Mussolini's troops have seized and to arrange for Italy's partial control over the entire empire.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, deeply tanned and in fine spirits, returned to the White House, his holiday tour ended. When he landed from the cruiser Houston at Charleston, S. C., he told a big crowd gathered to welcome him that the country is on its way back to prosperity under the planned economy of his administration, "and don't let anybody tell you differently."

At an informal press conference just before he left the cruiser, the President was asked to comment on the "impending collapse" of his drive to put three and a half million employables on relief to work by November 1. He replied that November 30 was 39 days off and that November 1 had never been set as the deadline, and that he had been very careful to say that substantially three and a half million persons would be put to work. If three million are at work by November 30 he said he would be satisfied with the four-billion-dollar program, and that it could not then be considered to have fallen down.

One of Mr. Roosevelt's first appointments in Washington was for a talk with Secretary of State Hull on the European situation.

"GERMANY is becoming a barren nation, intellectually, culturally and scientifically, under Hitler." That was the way Alfred E. Smith opened an appeal for financial aid for non-Aryan Christian and political refugees from Germany, at a dinner in New York held under the joint auspices of the American Christian Committee for German Refugees and the Emergency Committee in Aid of Political Refugees from Nazi-ism.

"I am informed that at this very moment I am speaking, 2,500 German refugees are on the verge of starvation," the former New York governor said. "Centers now operating and serving these refugees in Europe must be supplied quickly with money. They need aid, or will be forced to discontinue their work."

Dr. Albert Einstein, the eminent scientist, also was present and said German Fascism is directed mostly "against my Jewish brothers. The reason given is to purify the Aryan race in Germany. As a matter of fact, no such Aryan race exists and the myth of same has been invented solely to motivate the persecution and robbery of the Jews."

FIRST of the big eastern railroads to seek reorganization under the amended bankruptcy act is the New York, New Haven and Hartford, which serves one of the most densely populated sections of the country. Its petition was filed because it was unable to meet taxes of $4,000,000 and interest of $2,200,000.

The railroad had sought another loan from the government, but the Interstate Commerce commission rejected the plea. The company had cleaned its treasury of collateral to secure loans of $7,699,000 from the Reconstruction Finance corporation, $3,531,000 from the Railroad Credit corporation, and $16,000,000 from banks. The Pennsylvania system, which controls about 15 per cent of New Haven stock, did not appear ready to guarantee a further extension of credit.

FOR the third time in his career Mackenzie King is now prime minister of Canada, following the victory of the Liberal party at the polls. Richard B. Bennett and his Conservative cabinet resigned and King was called on to form the new government, which he did at once. He himself was sworn in as prime minister, president of the privy council and secretary of state for external affairs. Thomas A. Crerar of Winnipeg was made minister of mines, immigration and colonization, interior and Indian affairs. Charles A. Dunning of Montreal is the new minister of finance and W. D. Euler of Kitchener has the trade and commerce portfolio. All the cabinet positions except that of agriculture were filled at once.

Mackenzie King

The resignation of W. D. Herdridge as minister to Washington was accepted and became immediately effective. The department of national revenue announced cancellation of dumping duties on the following commodities entering Canada: Plums, prunes, radishes, spinach, and peaches.

DEATH came to an eminent American, Maj. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely, U. S. A., retired, at the age of ninety-one years. He passed away in Walter Reed hospital, Washington, and was buried in Arlington National cemetery with full honors. General Greely was universally known as the leader of the ill-fated expedition into the Arctic regions in 1881 from which only he and seven others returned alive. But he had already served in the Civil war with distinction, and his later scientific accomplishments won him international fame and recognition. On his ninety-first birthday, last March 27, he received a medal of honor from congress "for his life of splendid service."

General Greely was one of the original organizers of the National Geographic society, and a member of the board of trustees continuously for 47 years from the date of the society's founding in 1888.

EDWARD HENRY CARSON, who in 1921 was made Baron Carson of Duncrain, died in London at the age of eighty-one years, ending a strange and stormy career concerned mainly with Irish politics. A Protestant, he became leader of the Ulster party, organized and led the threatened Ulster rebellion in 1914 against the home rule bill and secured its postponement. When the war broke he turned his army to the battlefields of France and himself entered the British cabinet. After the war Carson threw himself into the fight against the establishment of the Irish Free State and succeeded in securing the partition by which the six Ulster counties separated from the rest of Ireland.

IN A long and solemn statement the Ethiopian legation in London warned Italy that its "ghastly methods" of warfare, the use of poison gas and dum-dum bullets, would have dire results.

The legation stated that Italy's use of "unfair and ultra-civilized methods of warfare," of which the legation says it has impartial substantiation despite public denials by Ambassador Dino Grandi of Italy, "will lead to the most unfortunate consequences, not only to Italians who will, of course, deserve it, but to all white peoples as well."

The whites, the statement said, "will be intensely hated by all the peoples of Africa and, we think, of Asia also for years to come."

The statement warned that it will not be possible to restrain the wilder section of the Ethiopian army from retaliating in some similar savage method on Italian soldiers who may happen to fall into their hands.

DR. HUGH S. MAGILL, who as president of the American Federation of Investors has been annoyed by congressional investigators, has written to all members of congress a letter asking whether American citizens "still have the right to express their approval or disapproval with respect to pending legislation without being harassed by 'inquisitors.'"

The federation opposed the recent enactment of the "death sentence" for "unnecessary" holding companies, and was under investigation by the senate lobby committee.

In an open letter to senators and representatives, Magill said he had "refused" to permit representatives of the committee "to read my personal and private correspondence." He asserted the federation "is not a lobbying organization as that term is commonly used."

"Having thus been confronted by these inquisitors sent out by a committee of the senate," Magill wrote, "may I inquire in all seriousness whether or not you approve of such action? If you do approve, how can you justify such procedure when the Constitution specifically provides that the 'right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated?'"

ARTHUR HENDERSON, president of the world disarmament conference and a most determined foe of war, died in a London nursing home. He was seventy-two years old and had been ill for a long time, so ill that he had not been permitted to see a newspaper for six weeks and did not know that another war had broken out and that peace in Europe was threatened. The former iron molder of Glasgow who became a leader of the Labor party and was foreign secretary when it was in power, was awarded the Nobel peace prize in 1934. His crusade for peace and disarmament was inspired by the death of his eldest son in the World war. He was a gentle, much loved man, a genuine idealist whose latter years were made sorrowful by the repeated failure of the disarmament conference to get results.

HELENA, capital of Montana, and all the western part of that state were terrified by a series of earthquake shocks extending through a number of days. There were only two fatalities, but numerous buildings were wrecked or so weakened that they had to be razed. Hundreds of persons were driven from their homes, and the suffering was intensified by a sudden fall of the temperature to below freezing. Fortunately the gas mains of the city were not broken. National Guardsmen patrolled the business district and all public places were closed for days.

Senator William E. Murray and Representative John P. Monaghan surveyed the damage, and Murray, terming the quake as "one of Montana's worst disasters," said he would go by airplane to Washington to ask immediate help.

MEN AND AFFAIRS AT WASHINGTON

The African War

Washington.—A friend of mine, a minor official of the government, remarked to me the other day that he could find very little cause for excitement in his own mind about the hostilities between Italy and Ethiopia. The fighting is so far away he said, and the nations involved are of such comparative insignificance in the whole world structure that he found no reason at all to do more than read the black-face headlines about the trouble as they appeared from day to day in the great metropolitan newspapers.

We were, at the time, wending a rather slow way around the golf links of the Congressional Country club. The course is set in the midst of fine farming country and my friend used the situation as a basis for his argument that there was little reason for any of us to take the Italian-Ethiopian trouble seriously.

"How can it make very much difference to us, he asked with a wave of his hand toward the fine farms and splendid homes within sight, "when we have a nation so admirably supplied with resources of which those are typical? We can live even if the trouble broadens. If necessary we can close our shores to foreigners and keep out of the trouble."

Unwittingly, my friend supplied a text. In fact, he supplied two of them.

The man in question is able, has a good brain and is doing his job satisfactorily, but it is his first connection with the government in an official capacity. He has not had training heretofore that fits him or equips him to deal with broad international questions. In time his views will change. Of that I have no doubt, but the fact remains that his attitude on the Italian-Ethiopian situation marks him as one of countless hundreds of government officials, past and present, who are brought in and given responsible posts without regard to their understanding of all of the problems which they must meet.

The other text which my friend's conversation suggested is "what interest do we have in the African war?"

Most individuals will agree that at the moment we are in no danger and that immediately there is no prospect of any kind of trouble in so far as the United States is concerned but it is not the immediate prospect that we must consider. It is not the immediate prospect that caused Secretary Hull of the State department to declare and to reiterate that the objective of present American policies is to keep this country out of war. That was the reason congress enacted the so-called neutrality resolution and that was the reason President Roosevelt placed an embargo against the shipment of arms and munitions of war to the present belligerents. Again, it is not the present, but where we go from here that concerns us.

Undoubtedly congress did a popular thing when it adopted the resolution designed to prevent development of circumstances which may place us on the verge of the cataclysm. I say the action was popular because there has been no indication from any important quarter, except from traders whose business has been handicapped, against the official policy enacted in that resolution.

But the end is not yet. In the first instance, all of Europe is virtually a powder keg. Potential dynamite lies in the differences between Russians and Japanese. Their frontier can be the scene of the fated overt act at any moment. And while the hope is for settlement of all differences between the Japanese and the Russians in a peaceful manner, there is no assurance that these can be so settled.

Since the Italian dictator, Mussolini, brazenly announced that he wanted more territory for his people and proposed to get it at the expense of the black men in Ethiopia, tension between Great Britain and Italy has increased from day to day. Backing and filling between the British and the French have been the regular order because the British and the French have comparable interests in Africa. Further, a strengthened Italy means a menace of a continuing character to her neighbor, France.

The British have scores of battle boats in the Mediterranean sea. Those ships are at anchor from which they can be called into quick use. The British say the fleet is maintained there merely as a "pre-

Even if these conditions obtain, my friend's statement that the war is a long way off still is correct.

Would Hit Our Trade It would be three or four thousand miles from American shores but the point of difference is that we are a commercial nation and if the European powder keg explodes our commerce would be affected.

But, it will be asked, why not live within our own shell? The answer is, we cannot do so. Our ships, carrying the products of our farms and factories, would be plying the seas. Nations at war do not take the time always to learn the character of cargo aboard a ship at sea nor do they inquire its destination or the purpose for which it is to be used. Then, we hear of the overt act. An American ship with an American crew and an American cargo is sunk. Or, American-owned and manned business units in some one of the belligerent countries suffers from one of the various things that takes place during the war. It may be the act of some hot-headed foreign national or it may be a deliberate move by a government, but the die is cast. An American citizen is killed, an American flag is insulted. We are in it.

It seems to me, therefore, that we have every reason to watch closely those developments abroad. Our own people are not blameless for some of the conditions that develop. For instance, the following day after Mr. Roosevelt issued his proclama-

U.S. Trees Healing Scars of Last War

Douglas Fir and the Sitka Spruce Thrive in Europe.

Washington.—Again the roll of the war drums is being heard on the other side of the world. In 1918 those drums had been stilled forever, so a great many people said. War-torn areas needed healing badly as did the peoples of the earth.

Americans had thrown their weight into the ending of the war. The healing of wounds was to be a longer process. So, on a January day in 1920, millions of American tree seeds, sacked and ready for shipment, were started from historic Boston common on their way to do their part toward healing the scars of earth. They were presented to the consuls of Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium by Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree association.

These messengers of international good will, after the routine of germination under the watchful eye of foresters, were to find their way as seedlings not only to the battle areas but to the areas where forests had been cut down to meet the demands of war for timber supplies.

Today those Douglas fir and Sitka spruce, millions upon millions of forest of Dean is the famous "crown property" and it was this forest which supplied timbers for English ships of war in the old days. The commander of the Spanish Armada was ordered to burn it if he landed in England.

"Locations of the plantings in Scotland read like an index of a Sir Walter Scott novel. Some of the trees are at Aboyne, Glengarry, South Laggan and Loch Katrine and dozens of other places. John Munro, the forester at Loch Katrine, reports Sitka spruce of 20 feet in height and Douglas fir nearly as high.

Do Well in Ireland.

"At Inverness James Fraser of the commission reports the American trees follow the line of the famous valley to Onich. They are also thriving in many plantings in northern Ireland where the climatic conditions are similar to those where these species grow best in this country.

"The British forestry commission is now checking the plantings as it does every two years. The reports indicate the Sitka spruce has exceeded any European species in growth and the Douglas fir has done almost as well. The seed was gathered in the Pacific Northwest mostly on the coast side of the Cascade range."

"Jungle Traveler" Is Craft of New Type

One of the strangest amphibians ever seen was given its final tests recently on Manhasset bay, at King's Point, Long Island. It is called the "Jungle Traveler" and will be sent to South America for use in exploring. It weighs two tons and has a speed of 15 miles an hour in traveling on land and approximately eight miles while traveling on water.

caution." Mussolini knows better. He knows and every one else will discover after even a superficial examination of the situation that the British will brook no moves by Italy that threaten British control of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan nor will the British permit Mussolini to gain control of such Ethiopian territory as will jeopardize their supervision over territory through which the waters of the blue Nile flow. These waters are essential to the British.

So it takes no stretch of the imagination to conclude that even a minor incident, accidental damage to a British boat or an injury to a British citizen—of such things and from such things comes war—will cause trouble.

If by any chance one of those "incidents" comes, the British and the Italians will be at each other's throats. Next, should that break develop, every nation in Europe is compelled for one reason or another to align itself with one side or the other. Hitler, for example, would want nothing better than an opportunity to stir up some trouble among the other nations in order that he could spread his power over Austria and Hungary and maybe over some of the Balkan states. He wants more territory and if a free-for-all should get started Herr Hitler will lose no time in subjugating some of the neighboring countries.

prohibiting exports of arms and munitions and, by inference, prohibiting dealings of any kind with Italy and Ethiopia, New York exporters rose with a mighty howl and the Port Development Authority in New York protested. One group saw all opportunities for profitable business stricken out by the prohibition against exports and the other, with proper civic pride, complained that the executive action would wreck New York city as a maritime center. Their complaints were natural, quite human, but their refusal to accept the national policy simply represents one of the many things constituting an early step that may subsequently be one of the foundation stones of war.

Indian Woman Passes Off as a Man for 18 Years

Calcutta.—Because she did not wish to be a widow with little hope of a fresh marriage due to Indian custom, a woman at Dibrugarh posed as a man successfully for 18 years.

When she was sent to a hospital for treatment of ear trouble, a physical examination followed and her deception was disclosed.

The woman, it was found, had lost her husband and child when she was young.

them, which made up the bulk of the first shipment and others that followed in the next four years, are standing in the mothering soil of other countries than their own. Reports received by the American Tree association tell of some of them 15 and 20 feet high and growing better than many native trees. They are thus doing their part admirably in healing the ground scars of the last war.

Heal War Scars.

"Their girth does not bring them into a war market," said Mr. Pack in going over the reports he had received, "but they are doing the job for which they were intended; healing the scars of the last war. Soon they will have grown large enough for commercial use.

"These trees are now standing in France where forests were blasted by shell fire. They are standing in Belgium, too. They are growing in Great Britain where virtually every tree which could be transported was cut down for war needs.

"The British forestry commission reports the growth of the trees and where they are located. They dot the famous lake country in Scotland and areas along the Caledonian canal. They are growing in the forest of Dean in England on the border of North Wales. Other trees are thriving in the King George Jubilee forest in Wales. The

on Increase in Canada

Ottawa, Ont.—The horse is staging a comeback in Canada.

The Canadian department of agriculture reports that demands for horses from United States brewers and for use on farms in western Canada has increased the value of the heavy type of horses by 30 per cent in the last two years, giving a great impetus to horse breeding.

In 1931, when the end of prohibition was in sight, exports of horses from Canada to the United States leaped from 672 in 1930 to 6,020, and in 1932 to 6,713.

The trade dropped in 1933 and 1934, but is again being revived by demands for Canadian draft horses from United States breweries. A recent shipment from Lambton county in Ontario brought a price of $250 per head in the United States.

The principal demand, however, is a domestic one. In 1921 there were 3,610,405 horses on Canadian farms. Last year there were only 2,933,480. The drop is explained by the fact that with the advent of tractors and other automotive machinery farmers abandoned horse-breeding.

Now, with farm prices low, farmers are abandoning tractors and again turning to horses. They find it more economical to feed oats to horses than to sell the oats to buy gasoline.

SYNOPSIS

Anna ("Silver") Grenoble, daughter of "Gentleman Jim," formerly of the community, but known as a gambler, news of whose recent murder in Chicago has reached the town, comes to Heron River to live with Sophronia Willard, Jim Grenoble's sister, who is at the depot to meet her. Sophronia's household consists of her husband, and stepsons, Roderick and Jason. The Willards own only half of the farm on which they live, the other half being Anna Grenoble's. On Silver's arrival Duke Melbank, shiftless youth, makes himself obnoxious. Roderick is on the eve of marriage to Corinne Meader, daughter of a failed banker. Silver says she wants to live on the farm, and has no intention of selling her half, which the Willards had feared. She meets Roddy that night. Silver tells Sophronia ("Phronie," by request) something—but by no means all—of her relations with Gerald Lucas, gambler friend of her father. Roddy marries Corinne, and brings his bride home. Corinne has a maid, Paula, who seems to attract Jason. Silver again meets Gerald Lucas, who has established a gambling resort near town. She introduces him to Corinne Willard, much against her will.

"Harry and his sister will come for me—if you won't take me," Corinne replied distantly.

"Corrie!" Her name, as he uttered it, was a vehement plea. But she did not answer. She had already left the room and gone into the hall to telephone.

Roddy sat for a minute where he was and listened to Corinne's voice as she talked to Harry Richter and made her own elaborate excuses for her husband. Then he got up and went to the kitchen.

He was sitting there a half hour later when Corinne came and stood in the kitchen doorway. She was dressed for the party. Roddy looked up.

"Give my regards to Harry," he said, "and tell him to bring you home early."

Corinne frowned. "I didn't think you could be so stubborn."

Roddy got up and put his arm about her. "It isn't stubbornness, dear," he said, quietly. "Lord, can't you tell when a man is dog-tired?"

"You're not too tired to go, if you really wanted to," she persisted. "It's just that you don't like the people who are going to be there."

"Well—they're not my idea of a steady diet, exactly," he admitted.

She drew her lips tight as she returned his look. "You are very funny sometimes," she said coldly. "I simply can't understand you."

"Don't try, kid," he said, and patted her on the shoulder. "Go ahead and have a good time. I'll put in a couple of hours checking up on the new corn."

"You're not too tired for that," she retorted.

"But that has to be done," he told her. "There's Harry now."

There was the sound of a car coming to a stop before the door. Corinne turned away immediately and was gone. Roddy went to the window and watched until the car was out of sight.

Silver gathered her tweed jacket about her and seated herself beside a clump of Juneberry bushes on the hill. It was quite late, but she had been unable to go to bed on such a night as this.

There was a sound of some one moving out of the brush to the left. Silver glanced up and saw Roddy standing a few feet away, looking down at her.

"Why, Roddy!" she exclaimed. "I thought you and Corinne had gone to the party."

For a moment he hesitated. "Corinne went," he told her. "The Richters came for her." He sat down near by. "I took a night off and spent it bringing some of my records up to date."

"I wish," said Silver wistfully, "that I had studied plant pathology and those things instead of languages. Every time I go into your laboratory I feel so darned inferior!"

He laughed indulgently. "Well, you're certainly young enough to learn," he remarked, "if you're still bent on being a farmer. And it's beginning to look as though you are." He got his pipe from his overall pocket, packed and lighted it. "Except that you ought to be in bed at this hour. You worked pretty hard today, Phronie told me."

"This is lots better than sleeping," Silver said, and waved her hand toward the clouds of mist that were drifting low under the waning moon.

"And not such a waste of time," he declared. "When I saw you walking up here I was leaving the shop—I thought I'd sneak along and get an eyeful of it for myself."

They sat in silence watching the thin wraiths blending, parting, blending, in the hollows below.

"You were over to see the Healy boy today, weren't you?" Silver asked finally. "I was thinking about him today. Couldn't we give a barn dance or something and collect enough money to pay Doctor Woodward? The Micheners told me the Healys haven't a dollar to spare for anything like this."

"That's an idea, Silver," Roddy exclaimed with enthusiasm. "I've been wondering what we could do to help out. Old Doc Woodward won't be so hard to satisfy. I can probably fix that myself. But the family is up against it, and without the boy's wages, they'll be in a bad way. I'll speak to Corrie about it. I'm sure she'll take to the idea."

"It would be fun," Silver said. And perhaps wretched for herself, she thought with a pang. Except for the Flatheas, a Norwegian family on the south, and the Micheners, frugal but free-spirited Germans up near the lake, she had so far made friends of none of the people in and around Heron River.

Roddy turned and looked at her suddenly. "You know—that's the kind of thing that makes you likeable, Silver."

"What kind of thing?"

"You're always thinking about somebody else. The other day in the field, when you tore off your blouse—"

She was smiling at him. "I shall probably grow up to be a nice old maid—loved for my good deeds."

Roddy laughed and put his arm about her shoulder.

"You're a great little kid!" he exclaimed. "After old lady Folds, and then—this bird Lucas cropping up—or I should say flying in—"

"Now, Roddy, please don't start applauding me, or I may cry. Besides—I'll be twenty in November, so I haven't much credit coming to me."

"You will? Well, well! And I suppose Phil Michener thinks you're just about the right age to settle down, eh?"

"Oh, I don't know about that," Silver replied loftily. "I like his sister, and I like him. They are real people, Roddy. They more than make up for—women like Mrs. Folds."

"And men like Gerald Lucas?" There was a curious note in Roddy's voice, half gentle, half embarrassed, the banter gone out of it.

Silver clasped her hands together before her. "Yes," she said. "Although Gerald isn't an evil as Mrs. Folds is, Roddy. He is an evil for me, that's all. Or he was, I should say. But you know by this time that I don't run away from—from that sort of thing—any more."

Roddy cleared his throat. "You were in love with him, weren't you?" he asked abruptly.

For fully a half minute, Silver gazed down upon the wavering shelves of mist.

"I went and stayed at his apartment," she said tonelessly. "For a week or so—while dad was away. Perhaps I was in love with him. I don't know. But now that I am here I know that it wasn't the right kind of love. I must have known that even then, because I wouldn't marry him. Gerald wanted to marry me. He was more decent than I was. He still is, in a way. He fascinated me, but I knew, all the time, underneath, that his life could never be mine. That's all there is to it, Roddy."

At first, Roddy continued to turn the bowl of his pipe about in his hand. Then, slowly, his eyes moved toward the girl beside him.

"Does Phronie know this?" he asked quietly.

"No. I have never told anyone but you. I—I didn't even tell dad the whole truth. I don't know why I've told you this," she went on broodingly. "But it seems to me the land has something to do with it. It has been like telling it to the land—starting over again, honestly. It's hard to explain—"

"I've hardly deserved your confidence," Roddy broke in with a short and ironic laugh. "My feelings toward you have been anything but generous, Silver."

"I think I've understood them, though," she replied thoughtfully.

"When you've worked a piece of land until you have your roots in it—" He stopped suddenly, and bent toward her with his hand outstretched. "This is just my clumsy way of apologizing to you for being a fool, Silver."

Drove Home Through Dissolving Distances of Rain.

Together they walked down into the yard, and their simple good night was taken coolly into the silence.

Harry Richter and his sister Evelyn, Corinne reflected with a secret filip of contempt, were still—and perhaps always would be, in spite of their advantages of money and travel—just a pair of noisy and slightly vulgar cubs. But of course their father owned most of the town of Maynard, and the family mansion there was the pride of the district.

Corinne sat in a deep chair in the shadowed corner of the sprawling room, and as she gave a side-long glance at the amused profile of Gerald Lucas, who stood beside her in an indolent, provocative attitude, smoking a cigarette, it seemed to her that Harry's friends were a little pathetic, even rustic. Corinne was coolly excited by the realization that never before in her life had she met anyone so polished, so cynically debonair as Gerald Lucas. She felt, with merely the least thrill of danger, their mutual understanding.

A rubicund young grain broker from the city came from across the room with an enormous silver cocktail shaker in his hands.

"One more little drink on the house—for the prettiest little girl in the party!" he announced.

"Thanks, no," she demurred. "I'm much too warm already. I think I'll stroll out for a little air."

She had not turned, even a little way, toward Gerald as she spoke, but a few minutes afterward, when she sauntered slowly among the moonlit trees above the shore, she was not surprised that he met her there. She had known that he would follow her.

"I must be very stupid," Gerald said, in a puzzled voice. "Otherwise, I would be able to figure out just how you come to be living on a farm."

Corinne laughed and felt her heart quicken. "It's very simple," she said. "I fell in love with a farmer—and married him."

"Did you?" Gerald looked at her as though in surprise.

They laughed in unison. Everything seemed delightfully absurd. Gerald picked up her hand and bent her little finger inward toward the palm. But immediately, almost absently, he let it go.

"Shall we go back?" she suggested lightly.

"If you wish," Gerald agreed.

"I think I shall ask Harry to drive me home," she said as they mounted the steps to the porch.

"My own opinion, if I were asked for it," Gerald said casually, "is that Harry has had too much to drink to drive anyone home safely."

* * * * *

It was long past midnight when Silver, preparing for bed, heard a car enter the driveway. She heard a voice that was sharply familiar to her, although it was low and pleasantly modulated. She glanced from her window. In the moonlight, the chromium trimmings of Gerald Lucas' car shone unmistakably.

"This is downright spying!" Silver said to herself, and buried her face in her pillows.

But a sudden fright took possession of her. Corinne—and Gerald Lucas! Such a thing could never be. It simply could not!

* * * * *

Silver and Sophronia, in Roddy's car, were on their way to Maynard with two bushels of tomatoes and a basketful of yellow string beans they had gathered that day in the garden. The harvest dance was but a week away now, and there were things to be bought and cooking to be done and the old barn to be decorated for the event.

"I suppose if we get a dollar for this truck we ought to be thankful," Sophronia said. "Upon my soul, it's enough to discourage anyone—if it wasn't for the satisfaction of seeing the things grow. And with Roddy talkin' of storin' his grain it doesn't look like an easy winter for any of us."

"It's hard to understand," Silver said, "with so many people going hungry—and farmers talking of using their grain for fuel."

"It's past me," Sophronia admitted. "I wouldn't be surprised if Roddy gave up the whole business, one of these days and moved to the city. Though there wouldn't be much sense in that, either. I thought he'd feel better the other day when he got first prize for his corn at the fair. But it didn't change him any so far as I could make out."

Silver had sat and listened, her hands clasped before her, gazing straight ahead at the winding highway.

All at once she felt a tide of warmth move up over her throat and face.

"I wanted to say something last night—when Roddy was talking to you and Jason about things," she said. "But—I didn't know just how to put it."

"What was that?" Sophronia asked.

"It's just that I feel I have a right to help—and I want to. I have a little money left—plenty to do me for a year or even more—and I don't need the rent Roddy is paying for that east section. I don't see why I—"

"Land sakes, child!" Sophronia interrupted. "Don't ever mention such a thing to Roddy. He'd take your head off. I'm glad you didn't say anything about it last night. No—he'll get along and pay his way—or he'll make a change of some kind. He already thinks you're doing far more than enough to pay your board, if it comes to that!"

Silver was silent for a long time. It was just as she had expected. Roddy's pride would never permit him to take any assistance she might have to offer him.

From Maynard, Sophronia and Silver, with the car windows up, drove home through dissolving distances of rain. "Think of gettin' only ninety cents for all our work yesterday," Phronie mused aloud, "not countin' the cost of seed and the bother of plantin'. Darn it! I could almost wish every city swell might starve to death!"

CHAPTER VII

THE mow of the new barn was full of hay, so that it could not be used for the harvest dance. Consequently, the loft of the old barn below the hill, which had latterly been used for surplus storage, came into its own again.

Jason stood with Silver at one end of the loft, where the orchestra was getting ready to play for another square dance.

"I think I'll ask Paula for this one," Jason said.

"If some one isn't ahead of you," Silver said. "She seems to be very popular tonight. Paula is a handsome girl. She would make a fine model for some painter," but Jason hurried away as old Steve, acting master of ceremonies, called for the next dance.

Silver moved down to where Roddy and Corinne were standing together.

"I wonder what has happened to Gerald Lucas," Corinne said as Silver joined them. "I sent him a special invitation urging him to come, and here it's midnight—"

Silver smiled. "He may be staying away on my account, Corinne. I told him once that I didn't want him to come here. He probably took me at my word."

Corinne made no effort to conceal her amazement. "You told him that?"

"Silver may have her own reasons for not wanting him around," Roddy put in.

"I have," Silver said lightly. "Well—as I have said before—it's no affair of mine, after all," Corinne observed pointedly. "But I do think—when I take the trouble to invite someone specially—"

"Forget it, Corrie," Roddy interrupted. "There goes the next dance."

He led her upon the floor as Phil, the eldest of the Michener boys, came for Silver.

As they moved together into the dance, neither of them noticed Duke Melbank and a companion stagger up from the top rung of the loft ladder and make their way into the crowd. Uppermost in Silver's mind was the thought that she was being received by the country people here as if she were one of them.

Old Steve called out in his high thin voice: "All join hands!"

Silver left Phil and joined the girls who moved in a gay circle past the men.

"All swing!" old Steve shouted suddenly.

DOCTORS KNOW

Mothers read this:

THREE STEPS

Why do people come home from a hospital with bowels working like a well-regulated watch?

The answer is simple, and it's the answer to all your bowel worries if you will only realize it: many doctors and hospitals use liquid laxatives.

If you knew what a doctor knows, you would use only the liquid form. A liquid can always be taken in gradually reduced doses. Reduced dosage is the secret of any real relief from constipation.

Ask a doctor about this. Ask your druggist how very popular liquid laxatives have become. They give the right kind of help, and right amount of help. The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara — both natural laxatives that can form no habit, even in children. So, try Syrup Pepsin. You just take regulated doses till Nature restores regularity.

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with anything less than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble to aid nature to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes as the germ-laden phlegm is loosened and expelled.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, your druggist is authorized to guarantee Creomulsion and to refund your money if you are not satisfied with results from the very first bottle. Get Creomulsion right now. (Adv.)

Lady's Painful Trouble Helped By Cardui

Why do so many women take Cardui for the relief of functional pains at monthly times? The answer is that they want results such as Mrs. Herbert W. Hunt, of Hallsville, Texas, describes. She writes: "My health wasn't good. I suffered from cramping. My pain would be so intense it would nauseate me. I would just drag around, so sluggish and 'do-less.' My mother decided to give me Cardui. I began to mend. That tired, sluggish feeling was gone and the pains disappeared. I can't praise Cardui too highly because I know it helped me." . . . If Cardui does not help YOU, consult a physician.

Not Nine, but 50,000 Planets, Says Scientist

The solar system, of which the earth is a part, probably contains not 9 but 50,000 planets, it has been estimated by Prof. Armin O. Leuschner, of the University of California. In addition to the well known ones, Mercury, Venus, Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, and Pluto, a swarm of lesser objects have orbits around the sun, most of them in the region between Mars and Jupiter. Nearly 1,300 of the small bodies, or asteroids, have been located since the beginning of the last century, on the first night of which the Italian astronomer Giuseppe Piazzi sighted the first, Ceres.—Literary Digest.

Morton Downey's appearance as guest star for Paul Whiteman reminded Paul of the days when Morton was singing regularly with his band; when he wasn't singing he played the French horn—that is, he pretended to play the French horn; he really couldn't play a note, but nobody found that out until he'd become a singing star and didn't care if he never saw a horn again.

The Sisters of the Skillet started their new radio program recently, and by Friday midnight following their Sunday broadcast they had received 7,000 letters from fans—and it was just a 15-minute broadcast! Took seven extra stenographers to take care of the mail, and the reserve supply of stationery was exhausted in no time.

MALARIA

Speedy Relief of Chills and Fever

Don't let Malaria tear you apart with its racking chills and burning fever. Trust to no home-made or mere makeshift remedies. Take the medicine prepared especially for Malaria—Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic gives real relief from Malaria because it's a scientific combination of tasteless quinine and tonic iron. The quinine kills the Malarial infection in the blood. The iron builds up the system and helps fortify against further attack. At the first sign of any attack of Malaria take Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic. Better still take it regularly during the Malaria season to ward off the disease. Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic is absolutely harmless and tastes good.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic now comes in two sizes, 50c and $1. The $1 size contains 2½ times as much as the 50c size and gives you 25% more for your money. Get bottle today at any drugstore.

Speaking of freckles, Myrna Loy has made them fashionable. Since she went to Europe and was mobbed by the public, there has developed a fad for painting freckles on pretty faces. Helen Hayes' return to radio started the fall season off so far as radio was concerned—though Jack Benny had done his, bit the previous Sunday evening with one of his best efforts. Mr. Benny remains one of our best radio comedians, and Michael Bartlett fitted into the new routine very nicely.

District Court Docket Lightest In Several Years

Docket Includes 47 Civil Cases And 12 Criminal Cases At Present

Opens Nov. 11

Grand Jury Will Be Impanelled Monday, Non-Jury Cases To Start

With one of the lightest dockets in many years, the November term of district court will open here Monday, Nov. 11, according to W. H. Goforth, district clerk, today. Judge A. J. Fires will preside.

Dockets of recent terms have been considered as unusually light and have listed from 80 to 90 cases, but the present docket lists only 47 civil cases and 12 criminal cases, Mr. Goforth stated. The unusually light docket is expected to be cleared during the term.

The grand jury will be impanelled Monday, Goforth said, and the court will call and set the docket. Non-jury cases will hold the attention of the court during the first week.

General interest in court proceedings was not manifested this term as in recent terms with heavier criminal dockets, and street corner gossip turned to timely topics of cold weather, and the first frost this week instead of district court proceedings.

Rockets To Play Shamrock Nov. 11

The Wellington Skyrockets will journey to Shamrock Monday, Nov. 11, where they will meet the Shamrock Irishmen in an Armistice Day game.

School officials were Wednesday still in doubt as to whether the game was to be played at night or during the afternoon. Both teams have been training for the game, which always represents a high point of intercity rivalry. A large number of Wellington fans are expected to accompany the Skyrockets on their trip Monday.

Cummings Named On Committee In Teachers' Assn.

County Superintendent Logan O. Cummings was named Saturday on steering committee to aid in forming the constitution and by-laws of a recently created sectional association of the State Teacher's Association. The new association was created in Childress last Saturday to serve this area.

School administrators of 17 counties attended the original meeting, and the group elected officers. A petition was also voted to be submitted to the state group for admittance.

Mr. Cummings has taken an active interest in the organization, and as a member of the steering

Drive Continued Against Illegal Certificate Sale

Farmers Warned Not To Sell Certificates Below Pool Prices

Continuing their fight against "bootleg" cotton certificates, heads of the National Surplus Certificate Pool today announced that the pool is now in a position to handle all surplus certificates, and predicted an almost 100 per cent sale of pooled certificates, according to County Agent John O. Stovall.

Urged To Pool Soon
"All producers in this county are urged to pool their surplus cotton certificates as soon as possible," Stovall stated. "I have also been notified to warn all producers against selling their surplus certificates at prices lower than those prescribed. The department is making an investigation of all transfers, and will cancel immediately all certificates where there was reasonable doubt as to the legality of the transfer."

"With the 'bootlegging' of certificates stopped, the national pool will therefore sell more certificates," he said, "at the prescribed prices than heretofore. A recent government bulletin stated that the pool is now short of certificates, and predicted that there would be almost 100 per cent sale of all certificates pooled."

Sales Are Risky

General Public Invited To Attend Program At Legion Hall

Featuring a special program, Armistice Day will be observed here Sunday, Nov. 10, at the American Legion Hall, according to announcements today which stated that the general public is invited to attend the services.

The program, scheduled to open promptly at 2:30 o'clock, will continue until 3:30, Guy E. Clay, commander, stated, and will be only one hour in length. The program will observe the signing of the armistice and close of the World War on Nov. 11, 1918, and will include several interesting talks.

"The public is invited to attend the program," Mr. Clay stated, "and we especially urge all Legionnaires and ex-service men and their families to attend."

Forms Necessary To Get Subsidy Cotton Payments

All producers desiring to receive the subsidy payment on their 1935 cotton crop must file their forms C. A. P. I. at the county agent's office at regular intervals, notices from that office stated today.

"The forms must be filled out by the buyer, and signed by him or an authorized agent," the notice stated. "Furthermore, the signature must be official, and not printed or typewritten. It is also necessary that the form C. A. P. I. be executed within seven days after the cotton is bought, and that it be filed in the agent's office."

In a telegram from College Station, it was also stated that all

Quota Of 550

Local Assistance During Year Expected To Increase Members

With a quota of 550 members set for Collingsworth County the American Red Cross roll call drive will open here Tuesday, Nov. 12, Mrs. D. G. Ellis, roll call chairman, stated today.

Similar To 1934

The campaign this year will be conducted along similar lines to those of past years, and is expected to meet with success, due to the unusual benefits received by this county from the Red Cross in recent years in the form of relief, and of direct assistance.

The same plan of distribution will be used this year as last year with 50 cents from each membership going to the national division and the remaining 50 cents staying in Collingsworth County for direct application. In addition only 50 cents of each donation is submitted to the national unit.

Get Local Assistance

Through this plan Collingsworth County last year retained $125 in the local fund, and applied it to local emergency situations. A large portion of the fund was used for the employment of a nurse to assist and give serums when a typhoid fever epidemic broke out in the Samnorwood area. An additional sum was applied in an emergency fire loss, and a delegate sent to Abilene to the district convention.

Present plans are for the completion of the drive as early as

"In regard to want ads. I want to tell of our experience," says James Coe Phillips. "Our pet bulldog was gone eleven days and the second day after we ran a want ad we found him safe and sound."

Leader want ad readers will remember the advertisement last week for "Buddy," a screw-tail bulldog owned by Mrs. J. C. Hampton. The little ad cost only thirty cents—yet, it was big enough to get the job done, and a youngster was again happy at having a dog back in his arms. Although small in size and cost, the little ads get powerful results on things you want to buy, sell, trade or find.

Will Rogers Memorial Drive Opens Next Week

A drive to raise funds for the purpose of erecting a fitting memorial to Will Rogers will be launched in Wellington next week. The first club for this purpose in Texas was started in Fort Worth last week.

Deck Wells has been appointed vice-chairman for Collingsworth County. The appointment was made by Amon G. Carter of Fort Worth, state chairman. Contributions will be received at the office of the Wellington Leader at present and other places will be designated later. All contributions will be acknowledged through this paper.

Due to the fact that the appointment was only made Tuesday no organization work will be done until further instructions are received from Fort Worth, but a coupon is enclosed in this week's issue on which donations can be turned in by those who desire to do so. A donation of $1 will entitle a person to a regular membership and one of $5 will entitle the donor to an honorary membership. The campaign will be continued until Thanksgiving. Donations will be accepted at The Leader office until an organization can be perfected and depositaries announced. It is thought that all local banks will co-operate in acting as depositaries.

Remembered

Will Rogers will be remembered by the people of Texas through a Memorial Drive now being conducted. Residents of this county have been invited to place their donations through The Leader.

The Commissioner's Court this week launched a county-wide terracing campaign, in cooperation with the extension service department, according to announcements today which stated that county machinery would be idle for several weeks and might be secured at a nominal cost for terracing farms in this county.

All land owners, or tenants who can get permission to terrace, were invited to call at once or write to the office of the county agent, giving the number of acres they desire to have terraced along with a legal description of the lands. The program is expected to begin immediately. Charges for the use of county equipment were set at $3 an hour, which commissioners believe will be about the actual cost of operating the machinery, considering the cost of fuel, oil, and a man to operate the tractors. However, the county contemplates securing additional

First Frost Comes This Week To Speed Cotton Picking Over County

A general frost covered Collingsworth County Monday night.

Coming the first week in November, the frost was declared by old timers of this section to have appeared about an average date. In past years the first frost has appeared as early as Oct. 20, and on up into November, varying with the years.

The frost brought with it a great difference in opinion as to its value or liability, depending entirely upon the stage in which each specific farmer's crop happened to be at the time.

In instances where crops were late and the bolls were in a tender stage, the farmers regretted to see the frost. On the other hand, others whose top crop had already formed, or who had no top crop, were glad to see frost

Armistice Day, November 11

Although a complete check of local business firms was impossible, plans today indicated that Monday, Nov. 11, would be generally observed as a holiday in memory of the signing of the Armistice, and the close of the World War, Nov. 11, 1918.

Business firms have in the past observed the occasion as a holiday, and a proclamation was issued by the city in regard to the observance this year. Some classifications of business will probably remain closed the entire day, while grocery stores and similar lines will probably close between 10 and 12 o'clock Monday morning.

The Frank King Post of American Legion will officially observe Armistice Day Sunday, Nov. 10, with a program during the afternoon.

The proclamation reads:
PROCLAMATION
The State of Texas,
County of Collingsworth,
City of Wellington.

I, H. Deskins Wells, Mayor of the City of Wellington, Texas, by virtue of the authority vested in me as such, hereby declare Monday, Nov. 11, 1935, the same being Armistice Day, a holiday in and for the said City of Wellington, Texas, as a token of our esteem for the living and as a mark of the honor in which we hold the memory of the dead. And hereby respectfully call, on all business houses in the City of Wellington, to observe the occasion as such.

Witness my hand officially and the seal of said City, attested by the City Secretary this 5th day of November, A. D. 1935.

Texas Corn-Hog Producers Favor Adjustment Plan

Increased Number Voters Indicate Interest In Program

COLLEGE STATION.—Texas corn and hog producers clearly favor a continuance of the corn-hog adjustment program as was shown by 33,373 producers voting "yes" against a small minority of 6,417 "no's" in the corn-hog referendum held October 26, E. M. Regenbrecht, chairman of the State Corn-Hog Review Board, announced.

"One of the most significant angles of the referendum was the increased interest Texas corn and hog producers had in voting over last year," Regenbrecht commented. "A total of 39,790 votes was cast this year which was more than double the number of votes cast last year. Approximately 18,000 votes were cast in 1934."

According to final tabulations, 83.8 per cent of the voting producers were in favor of continuing the corn-hog program.

Of the total votes cast 20,358 were by contract signers and 19,432 were by non-contract signers. Contract signers voted 92.4 per cent in favor of continued adjustment, the final report showing 18,785 for and 1,556 against. Non-signers also favored the program by voting 75 per cent in favor of continued adjustment as shown by 14,572 voting "yes" and 4,860 voting "no." More than 50 per cent of the contract signers cast votes.

Fannin County turned out the largest number of votes with 1,190 voting for the corn-hog program and 110 against it, for a total of 1,300.

The corn-hog referendum was held upon the single question: "Do you favor a corn-hog adjustment program to follow the 1935 program which expires November 1, 1935?"

The referendum was held after discussion meetings in all of the 209 Texas counties in which the program is operative. At these meetings, producers discussed the past, present and future corn-hog situation. The balloting in the referendum was in charge of the local community corn-hog association committees.

Miss Sunny Hoath of Council Bluffs hasn't found life a bit dull. She has been in two airplane crashes, three automobile wrecks, was thrown from a buggy, was in one train wreck, and was blown off the road by a tornado while driving her car. She also escaped falling from a 21-story window because a man grabbed her by the heels as she started her downward plunge. Only one injury sent her to a hospital, and that was not serious.

Diesel Engines Making Rapid Strides, Threatening Gasoline Reign

Whether they will drive out the gasoline engine, Diesel oil-burning units are making rapid headway in the field of power.

Already, here and abroad Diesels have been installed in railroad trains, passenger and freight ships, trucks and pleasure cars, tractors, airplanes, and stationary power plants of all kinds.

Main reason for swelling popularity of the Diesel engine is its cheapness of operation. Not long ago a Diesel-powered auto made the 3000-mile trip across the United States at a total fuel cost of $7.63. The Diesel engine, incidentally, can use the cheapest grade of fuel oil, even coal oil, castor oil or cottonseed oil.

Though its most rapid advance dates back but several years, the Diesel engine is not a new invention. The first one, devised in 1893 by Dr. Rudolf Diesel of Germany, developed such power that it exploded in his face.

Like the gasoline engine, the Diesel has cylinders, pistons, valves, and cooling system. There the similarity ends.

In the gasoline engine, an extremely fine spray of gasoline-laden air is drawn into the cylinders, where it is compressed to 40 to 50 pounds pressure to the square inch. This mixture is ignited by an electric spark and the gasses from the resulting explosion expand and push the piston, which drives the wheels.

In a Diesel engine, ordinary air is drawn into the cylinder, and compressed about 110 times as much as in the gasoline engine cylinder. This high compression heats the air to about 1000 degrees F. A jet of fuel oil is squirted into this red hot air. The oil burns, but does not explode, and the resulting gasses expand and push the piston, driving the wheels.

Diesel motors have no need for carburetors, ignition systems, spark plugs, distributing systems, magnetos, batteries, or intake manifolds. On the other hand, they must be exceptionally sturdy and stable in build, to resist the tremendous internal pressure.

Diesel-powered planes are common in Europe though not, as yet, in America. But a number of Diesel streamline trains are already streaking along American rails; and railroads are also beginning to put full-sized Diesel power plants on their ordinary trains, to improve rail service.

American highways are dotted with Diesel-powered trucks. In Los Angeles, alone, 13 trucking companies have them. These firms, incidentally, report a saving of $69,000 in one month on fuel, using $6000 worth of crude oil as contrasted with gasoline that would have cost them $75,000.

America has been one of the slowest nations to take advantage of the new-type engine. Authorities believe, however, that it should not require more than five years for America really to "Dieselize."

If that happens, they predict the drain on our petroleum deposits will be cut drastically; heavy crude oil of extremely low grade, for which there is now virtually no market, will be utilized; and perfection of small automotive Diesels will permit persons of moderate means to own and operate motor cars at a lower cost than at present.

Two Killed And Two Shot Etx Fight Over Mule

One Slain, Other Three Meet Fusillade At Investigation

CENTER, Tex.—Two men were shot to death and two others wounded in a shooting in the Arcadia community, ten miles west of here, last Friday. Officers said the trouble arose over some mules.

Dead were Lee Bishop, 38, and Van Bishop, 36, brothers. Wounded were Cecil Bishop, 23, a nephew of the dead men, and Harry Carmichael, 22.

Jack Warren, 22, a farmer, surrendered a short time later in the office of Police Chief J. W. Arnold. He was jailed and two charges of murder and two of assault were filed against him.

"I hated to do it but I had to," officers quoted Warren as saying. They said he went to the chief's office barefooted and armed with an automatic shotgun and pistol. They said Warren told them he was ill and got out of bed when the difficulty came up.

Officers said Lee Bishop went to Warren's home on a business errand. Thirty minutes later his wife heard shots and, becoming uneasy, called to Van Bishop, Cecil Bishop and Carmichael, who were sawing wood a short distance away. They went to Warren's home and, officers said, were met with a fusillade. Van fell dead and the others fled.

The men lived on adjoining farms. Neighbors said they knew of no trouble among them.

Quail Poultry Judging Proves To Be Success

Seventy Boys From Eight Schools Take Part In Quail Event

Last Saturday, Nov. 2, the Quail F. F. A. Poultry Judging Contest was a great success with the McLean team taking first prize with a score of 1650 points out of 1800 possible. Tulia was second with 1544, Clarendon third with 1543, Claude fourth with 1511, and Perryton fifth with 1335.

Highest individuals were: Verne Harris of McLean, first, with 562 points out of 600 possible. Delbert Owens of Tulia second with 549, Geo. Chambers of McLean third with 546, J. D. Back fourth with 542, also of McLean, who was tied with Albert Cobb of Clarendon, and fifth went to Floyd Massie of Claude with 519 points.

There were 70 boys from eight schools who took part in the contest, which was one of the best judging contests ever held in the Panhandle. Ten classes of poultry were judged and fifty questions on the American Standard of Perfection was on each boy in which the following boys ranked highest: Geo. Chambers 96, J. D. Back 94, of McLean; V. Harris of McLean, Delbert Owens and Kirk Crawford, both of Tulia, scored 90 each.

Schools represented were: Clarendon, J. M. Hill, coach; Claude, Mr. Howell, coach; Perryton, J. W. Neilson, coach; McLean, Clyde Bagee, coach; Memphis, Riley Carleton, coach; Estelline, Mr. Labay, coach; Tulia, E. J. Van Zandt, coach; Quail, A. A. Tampke, coach. The Quail boys judged for practice and not for awards since Mr. Tampke acted as official judge of the contest. Charles Finley and James E. Cooke, his former students, assisted him in the work.

This was the first poultry judging contest by a school team that has ever been conducted in the county, and Quail should be proud of having had such splendid cooperation from the visiting schools.

Wolf twins have appeared on several of the major vaudeville circuits of the United States and Canada, and are considered one of the best dancing teams in the Southwest today. Their portion of entertainment consists of tap dancing, eccentric dancing and song numbers. The Henry L. and Glen D. Brunk's Comedians will be here week of November 11th.

BUT NO CHANCE OF DAMAGE... HIS ENGINE

stays oiled

Today you can use a winter oil which builds itself right into your engine's "innards." That is, a certain portion of Conoco Germ Processed Oil really forms a BOND with metals, and stays on continuous duty where all the worst friction used to come.

This uncanny action, created by the patented Germ Process, automatically wipes out the costliest winter wear...

"Dry," unlubricated, wracking starts?"... Not with the oil that's Germ Processed to stay up on the job every minute, every hour, every day that you park—"whatever the weather"... Not when Germ Processed Oil has become a part of all metal surfaces... Not with the Hidden Quart, which has enabled many an engine to run with the crankcase absolutely empty—in verified show-down tests.

And this same patented Germ Process means extra protection not only for the conventional babbitt bearings, but for the newest copper-lead, high-lead and cadmium-alloy bearings. Germ Processing also creates the high-durability oil film... hence a light, free-flowing winter oil that's tougher too, for the toughest going of all the year. You and your Conoco man can make this whole Winter "act gentle" to your motor, beginning today. Drive in. Continental Oil Company, Established 1875.

Deck's DIDACTICS

By H. D. W.

With war clouds hovering over Europe, the observance of Armistice Day takes on a special significance this year. Today the American Legion is the greatest force for peace in this country. Its membership wants peace, because they know the meaning of war. For that reason the exercises, which will be held in Wellington Sunday, should be of intense interest to every father and mother in this community.

Some people may believe that as long as the majority of the people of this country want no war, there is little danger of this nation becoming involved in such a disaster. This is not the truth. Our people as a whole, did not want the last war. In the magazine section of this paper is a thoughtful article headed "Men and Affairs at Washington" which shows how difficult it will be for our country to stay out if the rest of the world becomes involved. It is a factual article written without bias, but it shows all too clearly the danger of the developments abroad.

People who desire to contribute to the Will Rogers' memorial fund can do so by mailing or bringing their money to The Leader office. A contribution of $1 brings a regular membership and one of $5 entitles you to an honorary membership. The campaign is voluntary, and it is my understanding that no solicitations will be made. If you want a part in this move to honor America's great humorist, mail your check today.

The frost Tuesday morning may have cut the top short on some farms, but many farmers welcomed the change. They know it will cause the cotton to open faster. Up to the present, this has been the tardiest crop in the history of Collingsworth County. Merchants are expecting an upturn in business as a result of the acceleration in cotton picking. If the weather is clear, thousands of bales will be ginned in the next few weeks. Too much bad weather could string the cotton picking on into February.

Oscar Graham hopped me out, because the paper said the ginning was past the half way mark. I have been a little suspicious of Oscar ever since he told me about "he" cotton, but anyway I came down and looked the story over, and Oscar was right. The news story itself was correct, but one of the heads said: "Cotton now past half-way mark of 1935 total." We simply failed to catch it in reading proof. I apologize to Oscar and to everyone else who was misinformed by the matter.

Waste Land Is Utilized To Better Income Of Farmer

FRANLIN.—Spare time spent in cleaning out underbrush and deadening trees on his native pasture has proved quite profitable to L. L. Neyland of Robertson County, according to V. L. Sandlin, county agricultural agent.

Neyland owned considerable land that was considered waste land, being so thin and badly eroded that it took around 25 acres to carry one cow. Four years ago, he started working on the land in his spare time. The results were so noticeable that he employed cheap labor to finish the job at a cost of $1.50 per acre, which included scattering bermuda grass on particularly barren spots.

The increased growth of grasses has stopped most of the erosion and the pasture is now carrying one cow to five acres and is steadily improving.

The Wellington Leader
Wellington, Texas
Dear Sirs:

In regard to your letter of October 19, we are sorry to state that we have only received one copy of your paper. I am sending you another story in regard to our camp life and I hope that you will send the paper regular.

We are very proud to report that one of our home town boys rates the honor of being post exchange steward. This young man is the well-known and much-liked Freeman Moore.

Walter White spends his daylight hours working in the field and helps Freeman in the exchange at night. We hope that Walter will gain lots of experience and enjoy many days as a clerk some day.

Earnest Berger is at the present time working on a crew that is preparing the site for a dam in the Cook's Range of mountains. This project is known as the O. K.

Canyon job.

Marshall Johnson and Lester Blackwood are, we think, trying to become bronc riders. They are operating a caterpillar and from the looks of things it is a rough job.

Paul Goodwin is staying on the site of the O. K. Canyon Job acting as corral boss.

Milton S. Brown is driving a truck for the D. G. and we all think that he is the best.

Chick Bailey is our pride and joy. He is a cook.

Papa Moon and all of the boys in the rear of barracks "C" wish to say hello to Troy Gardner and all the rest of the boys who went home.

Yours truly,
Archie Terrie.

City commissioners of Atlantic City recently discovered that they were paying fire insurance premiums on a dozen fire stations and a fireproof steel and concrete municipal convention hall. Believing this was playing safer than necessary, the policies were canceled.

Making Both Ends Meet

A recent news report in the Wellington Leader told of the unique method in which the Methodist congregation in the Aberdeen Community met its obligations and paid out in full.

From the nature of the report it evidently appeared during the year at some time that the church was not going to be able to pay its obligations in full. Realizing this, two of the members donated a plot of ground and members of the church worked out a cotton crop. The proceeds of the crop were used to pay their pastor and meet their obligations.

During recent years it has not been uncommon for churches, like all other institutions, to fall short on their budgets. Many plans have been advanced to meet various obligations, and a few of the plans have been intrigued upon the good nature of the general public—but they have all been put over with zest and vigor. All churches in this section are to be commended for their ambition, willingness, and labors.

However, this Aberdeen Church deserves more than mere mention. Feeling that the problem was their own, and not one to be shared by the public, these good people realized something must be done. Mr. and Mrs. Dudd Shaw donated the plot, and the members cheerfully gave their time—a factor they possessed far in excess of ready cash—to produce a cotton crop. Such sacrifice and honesty are remarkable. It is a boon to the greatness of Christianity, a religion itself representing the greatest sacrifice of all time—that of Jesus Christ.

OLD AGE PENSION CHISELERS

Numerous newspapers over the state have reported unscrupulous persons who, posing as old age pension agents, have been attempting to collect fees for assisting in securing pensions for old people. We join other newspapers in warning the people against paying money to anyone who offers to help them secure pensions, to put their name on the rolls or do anything else in this connection for pay.

The state auditor reports that numerous requests are received daily by his office from all parts of the state from persons interested in the pension. They ask for application blanks and for the names of the proper persons in their districts to whom applications should be made for pensions. Unfortunately many people do not keep up with the news sufficiently to know that the legislature has accomplished little in perfecting the pension plan and that nothing has been done toward putting any plan into practice. No agency has been set up to whom applications may be made. When such an agency is formed, it will be given suitable recognition in the newspapers, and until that time, any person posing as a pension agent is a chiseler.—Hereford Brand.

SPORTSMANSHIP

The thing that distinguishes a genuine sportsman from a "bum sport" is that those who have the spirit of sportsmanship not only knows how to win gracefully, but how to lose uncomplainingly. The difference between a genuine sportsman and the other kind is that your real sportsman never tries to shift the responsibility for his failure upon somebody else.

We have long believed that the sporting attitude toward life is the soundest of all philosophies of living. Try your best to win, but if you lose don't be too quick to blame somebody else for your failure. Nine times out of ten, people get whatever rewards their individual ability, character and industry entitle them to. But it is our observation, also that about nine times out of ten the man who fails is ready to lay the blame upon the government, or the capitalists, or the boss, or anybody but himself.

True sportsmanship does not imply taking defeat lying down. The true sportsman never knows when he is licked. He never accepts defeat as final, but continues to strive to the end of the game. He observes the rules of the game. He observes the rules of the game rigidly. If he doesn't like them, he may try to have them changed, but so long as the rules are as they are, he follows them.

We hear a great deal of whining in these days of depression, but every little while we run across a real sportsman, who hasn't let circumstances kick him, but is starting out afresh to try to win the game of life. To every such man we take off our hat.—Stephenville Empire-Tribune.

TAKING A WIDER VIEW

Although many writers deplore the alleged lower standard of current magazines which are extremely popular with a certain class of people, reports from booksellers and librarians declares that there is a growing demand for the better sort of literature.

Works dealing with travel, history and biography are being called for in increasing numbers, especially those pertaining to foreign countries.

There is no doubt that the war and the important events which have followed it have given the American people a wider outlook on the world and a desire to know more of the countries and peoples which are playing such important parts in its affairs.

Newspapers generally, both dailies and weeklies, find their readers are interested in a wider range of topics than formerly, and are giving more space to news and editorials dealing with national and international matters.

This all means that the people of America, and particularly the rural population, are outgrowing the narrow provincialism of the past and are eager for contact with the rest of the world, through books and newspapers, and moving pictures and the radio.

OUR PAST

By C. C. BISHOP

Cabeza de Vaca, the first white man to cross Texas, had a name which, translated from Spanish, means "head of a cow." Centuries later Texas was to become one of the greatest cattle countries in the world.

Mount Pleasant, Texas, derived its name from a large mound near by. In the early days this mound was said to be the center of a favorite Indian hunting ground. The Indians called it "Happy Mound." When the town was incorporated in 1848 they named the city Mount Pleasant.

Huntsville is called the "Mount Vernon of Texas." Here is the home of General Sam Houston, preserved as nearly as possible as it was during his lifetime. In a cemetery in Huntsville Houston is buried.

N. H. Rose of San Antonio has the most complete collection in the country of photographs of Southwestern historical characters.

Texas' only Indian reservation is near Livingston in the East Texas thickets. There is left but a remnant of the tribesmen of the once powerful tribes of Alabamas and Conshattis.

In the hectic days of the Southwest the Nueces River, south was "No Man's Land," for sheriffs. It was the "wild" country of Texas following the Civil War. The counties of Webb, McMullen, Duval, and Live Oak along the Nueces River formed a vast basins on which roamed more than a quarter million cattle—not branded. This land of sand, cactus, and mosquitoes was literally infested with bad men and renegades. To the Texas Rangers, mainly, must go the credit for clearing them out.

One reason Texas declared her independence from Mexico was that Mexico had never established Public Schools in Texas. President Lamar saw that the people must be educated in order to take care of themselves properly in political and social matters; therefore, steps were taken to start a system of public schools. In 1839, about two hundred and fifty thousand acres were set aside for the establishment of two universities, and nearly fifteen thousand acres were given to each county for public schools.

At the battle of San Jacinto, just as the charge started, General Sidney Sherman, one of the leaders, cried, "Remember the Alamo." Immediately, as the Texans saw the butchers of their friends and relatives before them, the cry was taken up with a fierce vengeance. Within twenty minutes the Texans had complete possession of the Mexican camp.

During 1857, most of the hauling from the coast towns to San Antonio was done by cheap but reliable Mexican labor in preference to higher priced white labor. Despite repeated warnings, Mexican labor was still hired. Texas wagoners then attacked the Mexican teamsters, and destroyed their property, and in some cases, their lives. The Mexican Minister complained to United States authorities. Governor Pease, in order to protect the Mexicans, sent 75 militiamen to the scene of the attacks. With the help of low abiding citizens, peace was soon restored.

It takes 333 human hairs placed side by side to cover one inch. Therefore, it stands to reason that Clarence Cochran is further from being bald than it may appear.

A Chance To Terrace

Announcement was made this week that the Commissioners will work with the extension service department for county-wide terracing. The method will include the use of the county machinery, which will be hired at a nominal sum, and since the machinery will be idle for some time farmers have been encouraged to take advantage of the offer. Last year I was out hunting, and the condition of some of the farm lands struck me as critical. Gullies are beginning to appear in many farms and some of them have already lost valuable acreage through the washing of their lands. I don't claim to be much of a farmer, but something should be done when valuable farm land is being destroyed.

I believe the country is making a more than fair offer, and if I had a farm I believe I would give the terracing a chance. Every acre saved means from a quarter to a half bale of cotton a year.

Ezekiel's Message

Text: Ezekiel 33:7-16
The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for Nov. 10.

Forgotten aspects of individualism and of personal responsibility must be considered in this day of mass psychology.

If there is one thing that stands out most clearly in the Old Testament, which was profoundly a book of the people, it is the constant insistence of the prophetic leaders of that people upon the personal responsibility of each individual if the national life was to be strong and secure.

In a far off day the prophet of the Lord stood against his people in an age of corruption and idolatry saying, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve; but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Here in our lesson a later prophet sounds the same note and accepts his own full share of responsibility. He is an individual who must give an account to God. He is set as a watchman for the people of Israel.

If the people will not heed his warning, the responsibility is upon their own heads, but if he fails as a seer and earnest prophet of God to warn them against their evil ways, and destruction comes, the responsibility is upon him.

Clear, direct, incisive was the message that Ezekiel felt God had given him to declare to Israel. It was a message concerning God's mercy, his yearning that men should turn from their evil ways.

But it was, also, a clear message that judgment was sure to fall if the people persisted in the way of wickedness. Even the righteousness of a man could not save him if he lapsed into weakness and error.

For those who were living sinful lives there was only one course open—to turn from their sin and seek the way of righteousness, to make restitution of what had been wrongfully taken, to turn from iniquity to decency and right. This alone was the way of truth and safety.

Have things changed since the days when Ezekiel uttered his prophecies? Is personal responsibility any less acute, or can the nation enjoy wholesome health and safety while its individual citizens pursue ways of selfishness and dishonesty?

We should not forget as we lay emphasis upon individual responsibility, that it is exercised in a social world and in social relationships. When someone said to Gen. William Booth of the Salvation Army that you could not boil a kettle of water without boiling every drop, General Booth's wise reply was that you do not boil every drop separately.

That is a very real parable of the individual in his social relations. We need mass movements, we need mass influence of righteousness and truth, but we need along with them the influencing of individuals and the decisions of individuals for the right.

Cotton crops must be good, or it's in the air, anyway, The Leader is carrying eleven stories of marriages during the past week. As this seems to be a good sign that prosperity is here, I saw J. C. Coe and G. N. Hite discussing business problems in different lines of business.

WELLINGTON

People . . . Places . . . Philosophy

By Jimmie Gillette

Considerable ado has been made over the Dionne Quintuplets, and justly so. After following the famous quints through the papers for some time you can imagine my surprise when Mrs. L. C. Jones Saturday announced that Wellington also had some quintuplets.

Wellington's Quintuplets

The first thing I thought of was a litter of five pigs, but she dispelled my guess stating that they were five Pekingese pups born several weeks ago into the family of "Lady Sugg," and "Border Sugg," two unusually fine Pekingese dogs owned by Miss Jewell Sugg of this city. I was rather interested and went by to see the dogs. They are a fine looking lot, and two of them have exceptional markings. It seems that they have not been named as yet, but temporarily carry titles from the Ethiopian-Italian conflict. I personally think that one of them does resemble Mussolini.

With the advent of colder weather and more sneezing here is some information which might be considered rare. Frequently I hear people sneeze and they say "Scat." When I was growing up the exclamation has often amused me and held my interest; however, the following throws some light upon the subject.

Sneeze, Then God Bless You

The custom of uttering a benediction after a sneeze is universal. Its origin is obscure and each country seems to have its own particular legend concerning it.

Among the Romans the belief existed that a sneeze expelled evil spirits. The sneeze, therefore, was regarded somewhat in the light of a lucky effort on the part of the person to rid his system of evil spirits and those present at the time would say, "Good luck to you."

There is also an old legend that before the time of Jacob men sneezed only once, then expired. But the patriarch interceded in the behalf of man and obtained a relaxation of this law on condition that a prayer or benediction follow every sneeze. Some writers offer this old legend as an explanation of the modern sneeze benediction, "God bless you."

Just how the West Texas exclamation of "Scat" originated is problematical. Maybe it has something to do with our old black cat superstition.

Native Rock Homes Modern

Native limestone rock, of a sudden, has become prominent in the building industry of this county, and needless to say it presents a most durable and attractive appearance. Most persons have seen the Wellington Hospital, J. W. Chapman's rock fence, the Bob Glenn home, and the A. Y. Bell home. Richard Wischkaemper is also building a thoroughly modern

Mr. Deskins Wells
Editor of Wellington Leader

Just a few lines to try to show my appreciation to you and the employees of The Leader office for making the Wellington Leader one of the best and newest weekly papers in the Panhandle. The information I get on the Government Farm Program alone is well worth what the paper costs. And in addition to that it keeps me informed as to what his neighbors and friends are doing and how they are getting along, to their health, also who gets married, those who get divorced, too. In fact it keeps me informed as to all the things of importance that happens in Collingsworth County and of things that happen in other counties and states. To me a paper that is published in my own town and own community is the best paper that one can buy. The only objection I can find to the Leader is I have a large family and all of us want to read it at once. It also helps the wives to save in their shopping each month to pay for the Leader and some to bank by watching the ads. Merchants realize it pays to advertise. It also pays the people of any community to trade at home where a per cent of the profit at least stays at home to be used for the upbuilding of our town and community. Not only that but merchants do or should employ their employees that live here, therefore, helping men and their families that live here. I for one try to appreciate what the government has done for the farmers. I believe the farmers as a whole are happier and in better shape financially, physically and mentally, and in better spirits; therefore, making better neighbors, friends and citizens, also strengthening their credit.

Due to what the government has done for us, after being a citizen of this county for 13 years I am and always have been interested in the betterment and upbuilding of our schools and other enterprises. We wish to thank Supt. Cummings for his work as superintendent of schools.

Farmer Friends, I would like you to join me in a word of appreciation to Deskins Wells for his tireless effort in helping the farmers of Collingsworth County. Not only the farmers but the people as a whole. We are proud of our new clinic and for the medical staff of same. Also for our fine business houses that are stocked full of good merchandise as cheap as can be bought anywhere. Let's make Collingsworth County one of the best places on earth to live here in beautiful Texas. Be a booster and builder and not a knocker. While other nations are at war, I thank God that this country is at peace, and for President Roosevelt's attitude of war when he said "The United States would have no war, if we did to go to some other country and find it."

As we rightly appreciate the good crops we have this year. We hope that the time is not far off when we will have a college in Wellington where our children can get an education and stay at home, also more good roads. Farmers, let's stay with the government, for it is at least trying to help us. Let's get in there and fight for our rights while we have a time and opportunity and a government to help fight our battles. This means more at this time than some of us realize. Let's wake up and try to get our farm-

Stomach Relieved, Gains Sixteen Lbs.

"What Gordon's Compound did for my stomach is almost too wonderful to tell in words," said Miss Lucy Bailey, attractive 18-year-old waitress who lives at 953 E. Richmond Ave., Fort Worth. "I had been on an ice cream and bread-and-milk diet for two years. Suffered terribly from acid stomach, gas, bloating, terrible burning sensations in my stomach, was tired, worn-out all the time, yet couldn't sleep for stomach distress. Thank goodness I heard about Gordon's Compound. Since taking Gordon's, in two months I can eat solid food without distress. I have gained 16 pounds."

ing on paying basis. Raise everything we can to eat. Diversify. Watch our business like a merchant does his. If one thing doesn't pay, try something else. While others are helping, let's help ourselves. Live on what we make and because our credit is good, let's not abuse it. A car is a good investment when they are used right but it is easy for one to do too much riding unnecessarily. Things that we can do ourselves let's don't hire them done, as the overhead will eat up all the profit. It is no disgrace to pull a white trailer sometimes called a cotton sack, neither has it ever killed anyone. This little letter was written in good faith hoping that in some way it might be helpful to somebody and hurtful to none. Yours for a better happier life.

Starving Parents Doom Son's Rabbit And Boy Kills Self

MANSFIELD, Ohio.—Eugene Trushel, 12, was hungry—but his love for a pet rabbit was greater than hunger.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Trushel of Willard, have been on relief more than a year. Their food ran out Tuesday night.

Wednesday the family went without breakfast and lunch. As evening approached and their five children grew hungrier, the parents became desperate.

Why not kill Eugene's rabbit and serve it for supper?

They agreed it was the best thing, then began a search for Eugene to break the bad news.

But when they found him he was dead. His body was hanging from a belt attached to his neck and a stair railing.

Coroner J. D. Bradish gave a verdict of suicide.

Mrs. Trushel told him she believed the youngster overheard their plans to kill the rabbit, became despondent and hanged himself.

Eugene's death caused the rabbit's life to be spared.

Residents of the community took basket after basket of food to the Trushel home.

Jake Hess Donates Beef, Mothers Will Can It For A. And M. Students

The Collingsworth County boys, always had time to give the boys attending A. and M. College will be highly elated to know that they are going to get some good home raised and canned beef. The beef came as a surprise to the mothers of the boys, who decided that they would buy a beef and can it, then send it to the boys for Christmas.

They went to the Sitter Ranch to see what they could buy one for, and Mr. Hess stated that the beef was not for sale to the Collingsworth County boys, but they could have a good, big, fat one, free of charge. This only shows the spirit of the Collingsworth County people who are doing their best to keep the boys in college under the cooperative plan, and the boys and mothers want everyone to know that they sincerely appreciate what has and is being done for them, they stated.

Hess Is 4-H Booster

Mr. Hess has been, for a number of years, a big booster for boys, having furnished several boys in Collingsworth and Wheeler County, with club calves, and having County boys are going to buy the cans for canning the beef and do the labor, thereby have an entire beef to send the boys around Christmas at about the time the mothers believe the boys will be out of canned meat they carried from home. This makes three beoves that the mothers have prepared for the boys, and have promise of possibly some more.

County Agent John O. Stovall joins the boys and their mothers in thanking Mr. Hess, and all others who have helped the boys. It will be remembered that Stovall was among the first leaders in the cooperative method of sending the boys to school. The Collingsworth County Boys at "Stager Inn" have received much praise and publicity over the entire state and they are very grateful for the support that they are getting back home, they state in letters.

Terracing To Be--

machinery of a lighter calibre, which may lessen the cost slightly.

Conditions Determine Time.
Terracing and contour work will progress in accordance with the land and number of contours to be made, and will vary as to the number of hours required to terrace a farm, along with the number of acres included in the plot. All work will be carried out in conjunction with the extension service department.

When the applications for terracing have been filed, lists will be tabulated for each community in such a manner that the work can begin and the machinery gradually rotate around the county to eliminate having to terrace one farm on the extreme north, then move all of the machinery back and terrace one on the extreme south, John O. Stovall, county agent, said. For this reason, all interested parties were encouraged to apply at the office and arrange for their terracing in advance.

Numerous requests for terracing projects in this county have been made in recent months, Mr. Stovall stated, and continued that he believed the act of the commissioners to be an extremely liberal one.

forms C. A. P. I. should be turned into the county agent's office before Nov. 14, on all cotton which has been sold to that date. It is presumed that producers will receive their payments on this cotton by Dec. 15, John O. Stovall, agent, stated.

First Frost--

as it will make the bolls open quicker.

Cotton picking was this week expected to increase, and cotton was expected to come in much faster due to the frost. Since cotton has been coming in unusually slow this year, the frost is expected to generally accelerate picking. Merchants are anticipating increased volumes in view of the condition.

Some feed losses were thought to have resulted from the frost, but generally the loss was considered slight and even the late feed crops are still expected to produce a nice yield.

Committee personnel has not yet been decided, but the roll call drive will be conducted in cooperation with the clubs of this area, and direct solicitations will be made in Wellington Monday, both in the business and residential sections.

"With the knowledge the local citizenship has gained of the Red Cross in recent years," Mrs. Ellis said, "anything but a swift, successful campaign is inconceivable. Because so many of us have seen it in action during the depression period, there are few of us who do not recognize that the organization is a vital part of our community life. Its work must go on—and will, with the individual support of local citizens."
