Chantal's heavy rains drench Texas coastline

HOUSTON (AP) — Residents whose homes were flooded by torrential rains spawned by Hurricane Chantal began drying out their wet belongings as the storm today moved further into Texas, losing strength.

At least three deaths were blamed on the storm. A man died after falling from a Chevron oil platform in the Gulf of Mexico south of New Orleans and two Bryan teen-agers drowned when they were sucked into a flood-swollen drainage ditch.

Chantal roared ashore early Tuesday morning at High Island, bringing with it driving rains and winds up to 80 mph. It lost strength within a few hours and was downgraded to a tropical storm, but it continued to be a heavy rainmaker for much of the upper Texas coast throughout the day.

On Tuesday night, the storm was further downgraded to a tropical depression as it continued to move northwest into Texas. Its winds had decreased to about 30 mph.

By early today, the storm's remnants were located between College Station and Waco, triggering rains and some tornadoes. No damage was immediately reported in central Texas from the storm.

Forecasters said the Dallas-Fort Worth area may get as much as five inches of rain in gusty thunderstorms today.

In sections of south Houston and its southern suburbs, hundreds of stalled cars and trucks lined flooded roads, and some stranded motorists sat atop their vehicles as they waited for the high water to recede.

There also was some residential flooding and scattered power outages, but the first hurricane of the 1989 Atlantic season apparently caused little serious damage.

In Bryan, officers said two youths drowned when they and two friends were riding rubber rafts on a stream swollen by heavy rainfall from Chantal. The boys were swept into a drainage pipe under a highway bypass.

The body of Robert Craig, 16, was recovered by divers about 1:20 a.m. today. The body of Eric Winslow, 17, was found late Tuesday night.

Tony Shaar, 17, was dragged through the pipe but survived by holding his breath. The fourth youth, who was not identified, managed to make it to shore.

In addition, Coast Guard helicopter crews rescued 10 people Tuesday from the Gulf of Mexico after their fishing vessels capsized in storms caused by the hurricane. Three others also were plucked from the stormy Gulf on Monday as Chantal approached the coast.

Skies over Houston were cloudy Tuesday night, but the rain had stopped in most areas — giving residents a chance to start cleaning up the storm's mess.

"We're doing just fine," Dan O'Brian said as he sloshed through the knee-deep floodwaters of Dickinson creek, pulling his family in a canoe. "We've been through this before. We know how it's done."

O'Brian and others in the Dickinson area south of Houston said it was the most severe flooding there since Hurricane Alicia in 1983.

Galveston escaped much of Chantal's wrath, but the 6.56 inches of rain in a 24-hour period there broke a 110-year-old record.

Search resumes for missing workers

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP) — Divers planned an all-night search for 10 missing crewmen whose jackup oil rig capsized in the Gulf of Mexico while trying to outrun Hurricane Chantal, the Coast Guard said early today.

Four crewmen were rescued when the rig capsized Monday, about 20 miles south of here, while fleeing Chantal. Searchers had to abandon attempts to rescue the other 10 workers because of worsening weather.

Chevron and the Coast Guard sent vessels to resume the search Tuesday, after Chantal blew ashore in Texas and later was downgraded to a tropical depression.

Chevron, which leased the rig from another company, hired divers, equipped with high-powered lights, to search the darkened rig for possible survivors. The divers arrived at the rig about 8:30 p.m. Tuesday, but could not resume the search immediately because of rough seas, the Coast Guard said.

There were conflicting reports about where the missing men were last seen — some in the water, some in the watertight crew's quarters now submerged in about 30 feet of water, said Petty Officer Glenn LaMont at the Coast Guard's 8th District headquarters in New Orleans.

"They're not sure where they're likely to be, exactly. It's going to take awhile. The divers are going to move real slow and real cautiously," LaMont said.

He said the divers planned to work through the night, if possible, and that the Coast Guard would have a helicopter and a patrol boat standing by if survivors were found.

Swells in the area were eight to 10 feet high and the wind was clocked at 20 knots, or 23 miles an hour, he said.

The self-propelled rig Avco 5, which could be floated when its 100-foot legs are retracted, was headed to shore early Monday when it capsized about 20 miles off the Louisiana coast, near Morgan City, said Chevron spokesman Jonathon Lifa.

Officials said earlier they hoped some of the missing men might have found airpockets in the sealed compartments on the rig.

The 10 missing workers were not identified immediately.

"Although it is not a Chevron vessel or Chevron employees or on a Chevron location at the time of the location, we feel out of humanitarian efforts we have to help," Lifa said.

Three survivors were taken aboard the fishing vessel Spar Royale, and a fourth was taken by helicopter to Grand Isle.

Rescued were Jesse Morton, 29, of Franklinton; Tony Cruz, 24, of Houma; Kevin Cooly, 20 of Lafayette, and Edward Ducett, age and hometown unknown, the Coast Guard said.

Gays could find local police life difficult

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Homosexual men and women who would like to join the Midland police or Midland County Sheriff's office will not be discriminated against. But life on the force likely will be difficult, according to the city's two top lawmen.

When Mica England applied to the Dallas Police Department — and was rejected because she is a lesbian — the action attracted attention all over the state, including in Midland.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter and Police Chief Richard Czech talked about the subject reluctantly but at some length. Neither expressed knowledge of any openly gay officers in either department, and neither has been faced with the same situation as that which occurred in Dallas.

But they agreed the time will come. For the time being, Texas has only a handful of openly gay officers, even in larger cities where applicants' sexuality is not an issue.

Dallas police recruiters were criticized because they routinely ask applicants whether they have engaged in "deviate sexual activity," including homosexual behavior, which is a violation of state law. Neither Midland agency asks prospective officers that question.

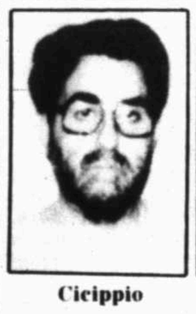

"We don't ask that question," Czech said. "We have no policy that would lead us to discriminate against a person with homosexual tendencies."

Current officers who are gay would not face firing or disciplinary action "unless that person caused problems or did something that would cause problems," Czech said.

Applicants to both departments are subject to an extensive background check. For example, prospective Midland police officers are required to complete a 31-page "personal history statement." The document asks for specific information on prior employment, financial history, credit record, criminal history (if any), character references, social acquaintances, family history (including previous marriages), and medical history.

The personal history statement is used by officers to conduct the background check, which is then presented to Czech, according to personnel Sgt. Ed Nicks. The report of the background check could contain information about the applicant's sexual habits, Nicks said.

Iran believed pressuring captors to spare Cicippio

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran is believed to have pressured pro-Iranian militants to put off killing American hostage Joseph Cicippio, and the chance his life will be spared has increased, Shiite Moslem sources said today.

The group holding Cicippio, the Revolutionary Justice Organization, said it would kill him Tuesday at 11 a.m. EDT unless Israel had freed Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, a Shiite Moslem cleric kidnapped by Israeli commandos July 28. It then extended the deadline 48 hours.

Israel's defense minister, Yitzhak Rabin, today defended the abduction and said the Cabinet considered the dangers to hostages in Lebanon before approving it. He repeated Israel's offer to swap Obeid and Lebanese Shiite Moslem prisoners held in Israel for Israeli soldiers and foreigners held in Lebanon.

The pro-Iranian Hezbollah, of which Obeid is reported to be a leader, has rejected a swap.

President Bush, faced with his most serious foreign policy challenge, consulted world leaders, including Pope John Paul II, and met with his Cabinet twice in 24 hours.

The pope agreed to intervene to seek the return to the United States of the body of Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, reportedly hanged Monday by a Shiite Moslem group.

West Germany said today it had contacted Iran and Syria on the United States' behalf. France also asked countries that might have influence over groups holding hostages to try to ensure the captives' safety.

Iran is the financial and spiritual backer of Hezbollah, or Party of God, the fundamentalist faction believed to be the umbrella for groups holding most of the 16 foreign hostages in Lebanon, including eight Americans.

Shiite sources in Lebanon, speaking on condition they not be further identified, said they believed Iran may have stepped in to save Cicippio after the international uproar over Higgins' reported execution by the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth.

Cicippio, 58, was acting comptroller of the American University of Beirut when he was kidnapped Sept. 12, 1986.

"The Iranians probably are bringing immense pressure on their Lebanese surrogates, seeking to defuse the crisis generated by Higgins' murder," one Shiite source in Lebanon said, speaking on condition he not be identified.

Young Bush won't be candidate

From Staff and Wire Reports

DALLAS — The only race that concerns George W. Bush is the American League pennant chase.

Bush — oilman, baseball team owner and president's eldest son — publicly declared Tuesday he would not run for governor of Texas next year.

"I have had time to think and sort things out, and at this time, I am not a candidate for governor in 1990," Bush said during a speech to lawyers.

Bush, a former Midland oilman, is managing partner of the Texas Rangers baseball team, which is battling for the AL West division title.

"For now I want to focus my obligations to the Texas Rangers baseball team and more importantly on my responsibilities as a father and as a provider," Bush said.

Bush said he knows better than to "never say never," but he felt very little could change his mind about not running in 1990.

"I think that's a very honest and forthright statement," said Fred Meyer, state GOP chairman. "I do believe at some point he's going to be a factor on the political scene because I think he handles himself very well."

Since returning to Texas last year after helping his father's presidential campaign, the 43-year-old Bush has been widely viewed as a likely candidate for governor.

10 percent will need reading recovery

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

About 10 percent of this year's Midland first-graders will need extensive tutoring in reading to catch up with their classmates, a Midland schools administrator said Tuesday.

But a reading recovery project introduced to Midland Independent School District elementary schools this fall could solve that problem in a matter of weeks.

"It's designed for the most at-risk students in first grade," said Peggy Holland, MISD reading coordinator. "It's to help the youngsters who have not developed average competency in reading.

"Even with the most effective, excellent teachers, you can figure in the range of 10 to 20 percent of first-graders needing this."

In MISD, this means about 200 of this year's estimated 2,000 first-graders will need help in reading, Mrs. Holland said.

Teachers will use standardized test scores and classroom observations during the first week or two to determine whether a child qualifies for the rescue program. Once identified, the pupil will spend 30 minutes of every school day receiving one-on-one instruction from the school's reading teacher.

Mrs. Holland said the program, developed in New Zealand and used throughout the United States, stresses intervention at an early academic stage rather than remediation in later years. Pupils are identified and helped before their poor learning habits go too far, while remediation in later years attempts to undo those bad habits, she said.

Partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the lower 70s and winds will be from the southeast at 5-10 mph.

Skies will continue to be partly cloudy on Thursday with the chance of showers and thunderstorms increasing to 30 percent. The high will be in the middle 90 and winds will be from the southeast at 5-15 mph.

Tuesday's high of 99 was six degrees lower than the record high of 105 set for that date in 1944. The overnight low of 73 was 12 degrees higher than the record low of 61 set for this date in 1973.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms were expected across central and north central portions of Texas through Thursday as the remains of Hurricane Chantal moved northwestward across the state.

Flash flood watches were in effect today in Central Texas and North Central Texas.

It will be partly to mostly cloudy over most of the state through Thursday.

Lows tonight will be in the 70s over most of Texas.

Highs Thursday will be mostly in the 90s, ranging from the 80s in North Texas to near 100 in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

Forecasters said the storm system continued to produce spiral bands of showers and thunderstorms from its center over central and southeastern portions of the state.

Early morning temperatures were in the 80s over South Texas and in the 70s over the rest of the state. Extremes ranged from 63 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 85 at Corpus Christi.

NATION

A generous scattering of showers led to the posting today of flood watches in parts of northeast Texas, and rain fell elsewhere throughout the South.

Showers and thunderstorms lingered this morning from Virginia into northern Florida, across Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and from northeast Texas across the upper Texas Gulf coast.

Showers were scattered in the Texas Panhandle, New Mexico and the Rockies, as well as northern Utah, and the northern Pacific Coast.

Storm Dean reaches hurricane strength

MIAMI (AP) — Tropical Storm Dean mushroomed into a full-fledged hurricane with winds of 78 mph today as it surged westward across the Atlantic Ocean toward the northeast Caribbean Sea.

Hurricane warnings were posted for the islands of the Lesser Antilles from Guadeloupe to the U.S. Virgin Islands, said forecasters at the National Hurricane Center in suburban Coral Gables. A watch was in effect for Puerto Rico, Dominica and Martinique.

At 9 a.m. EDT, the center was located near 17.4 north, 58.5 west, or about 500 miles east of San Juan, Puerto Rico. The storm was rushing westward at 20 mph, and conditions were favorable for development, forecasters said.

"It's very warm water. There's not anything in the atmosphere to cause it to break up, so basically it looks good for further development," said hurricane center meteorologist Jesse Moore. "Right now, it's away from any land area, but it could affect the easternmost islands of the Lesser Antilles within the next 6 to 12 hours."

Rainfall of 5-10 inches and and tides 3 to 5 feet above normal are possible from the second hurricane of the season.

Like last year's Hurricane Gilbert, Dean is a Cape Verde storm, so called because it formed off the west coast of Africa. South Florida could be in danger in three or four days.

"When we see a hurricane like that we realize that it has the potential to move all the way across the Atlantic and threaten the southeastern United States," said hurricane center forecaster Miles Lawrence.

While Dean is in a good position to strengthen, there are some factors working against its development, said forecaster Jere Gallup said.

"It's not a very large size," he said. "The upper atmosphere still has pretty good vertical shear, which tends to disrupt vertical organization" or cut the storm's top off. Based on that, they expect the intensity to continue to increase but at a slower rate."

Dean grew from the fifth tropical depression of the Atlantic hurricane season, which formed early Monday morning. It became a named storm Monday night when its winds reached 39 mph. Tropical storms become hurricanes when their top sustained winds hit 74 mph.

A trio of other depressions have grown into named storms since the season began June 1.

The first, Tropical Storm Allison, caused widespread flooding in Texas and Louisiana in June. Barry churned up the open Atlantic briefly in the middle of last month before being downgraded to a tropical depression and then dissipating.

Chantal became a hurricane Monday and was downgraded to a tropical depression Tuesday night after making landfall in Texas.

Officials say short-term hostage solution unlikely

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is getting help from the pope and seeking aid from other world leaders to try to solve the Lebanon hostage crisis, but the White House cautioned against hopes for a quick solution.

Bush received his daily intelligence briefing this morning in advance of a meeting with his top national security aides to assess information coming from the Middle East.

Meanwhile, the Vatican announced today that Pope John Paul II has agreed to intervene to seek the return to the United States of the body of Marine Lt. Col. William Higgins, whose reported hanging Monday by his Shiite Moslem kidnappers precipitated the crisis.

In a 12-minute telephone call Tuesday, Bush asked the pope to intercede in getting the return of Higgins' body if, in fact, the officer had been executed. "His holiness expressed the willingness of the Holy See to find a solution to this problem," a Vatican statement said.

A U.S. Navy task force headed by the aircraft carrier Coral Sea left port in Alexandria, Egypt, earlier than scheduled Tuesday, but officials played down the possibility of a military strike against hostage-holders.

"The risks appear to greatly outweigh the potential payoff," said an official who demanded anonymity.

And the White House went out of its way to avoid drama that would make it appear a crisis was engulfing Bush's presidency.

On Tuesday night the president went ahead with plans for a jovial barbecue for Congress members on the White House lawn. Appearing in shirtsleeves and leather-pocketed casual pants, the president dined on ribs, chatted cheerfully with his picnic-table companions and clapped to the lively tunes of the Oak Ridge Boys.

"These are not easy days, either in the Congress or in the White House," Bush said in brief remarks. "There are overwhelming events that concern everybody here. But even though there are complicated times, I think an evening like this with just plain relaxation with friends is very, very significant and very important."

Spokesman Fitzwater indicated a dramatic response was not imminent. Rather, he said reporters should view the situation as "a process for dealing with the situation over the long term and not look for any quick decision points."

"We don't want to create a crisis atmosphere," he said.

Administration officials said they still had no firm confirmation that Higgins was dead, as his Shiite terrorist captors claimed Monday.

Higgins' wife, Robin, said through a spokeswoman in Washington she could not tell whether her husband was the man shown hanging in a grisly videotape the kidnappers released.

Besides telephoning the pope, Bush called Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, while other U.S. officials contacted the Soviet Union and other countries in the Middle East seeking assistance in winning freedom for the remaining hostages.

The United States also is going through intermediaries to seek help from Iran, which is believed to have influence with kidnappers who hold the hostages. The United States does not have formal diplomatic relations with Iran.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said in Tehran that Moscow would use its growing influence in Iran on behalf of the hostages.

HOSTAGES

The source noted that Revolutionary Justice has used death threats in the past to back political demands but never has killed a hostage.

On March 12, 1987, the group said it would kill French hostage Jean-Louis Normandin unless France stopped sending arms to Iraq, which was fighting a war with Iran.

The group announced three postponements and finally canceled the death threat March 25. Normandin was freed Nov. 27, 1987.

In announcing the extension for Cicippio, the Revolutionary Justice Organization acknowledged a plea from Cicippio's Lebanese wife, Elham, and cited "friendly appeals and sincere behests."

"Even if it was a postponement for only one minute, it's better than nothing," said Elham Cicippio, who married Cicippio after he converted to Islam in 1985.

U.S. officials said they sent a strongly worded message to Iran on behalf of the hostages. "We expect those who have influence over the hostage takers to exert that influence," one official said on condition of anonymity.

One administration source said military action was "in the realm of the possible" but another official said neither a military attack nor hostage rescue operations were attractive options.

The Soviet news agency Tass said Iran's president-elect, Hashemi Rafsanjani, discussed the Obeid abduction and Higgins' purported death with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in Tehran.

Tass said Rafsanjani voiced "deep regret over what has happened and confirmed that Iran does not have (any) relation to the tragedy ..." It said both men favored "urgent measures" to prevent the situation from worsening.

But Iran's main opposition group, the Mujahedeen Khalq, claimed today that Rafsanjani directly controls the groups holding hostages and that he dispatched his brother to help oversee their activities, including the "execution" of Higgins.

The statement announcing Cicippio's reprieve was accompanied by a photograph of another American hostage, Edward Austin Tracy, 58, a self-styled wanderer and writer kidnapped Oct. 21, 1986. It was the first picture of him released since March 8.

There are four other Americans among the foreigners held in Lebanon. The hostage held longest is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Observers also have speculated that Briton Terry Waite, special envoy to the Archbishop of Canterbury, kidnapped himself while in the Middle East to negotiate hostage releases, would be threatened with death.

Higgins was abducted Feb. 17, 1988, while commanding a U.N. observer team in south Lebanon. Israeli officials have said Obeid was involved in the abduction. Obeid has denied it.

The Organization of the Oppressed on Earth accused Higgins of being a spay and said it would kill him at 8 a.m. EDT Monday if Obeid had not been freed. Shortly after the deadline, Israel offered to trade Obeid and Shiite Moslem prisoners for foreign hostages and Israeli POWs.

The group holding Higgins then released a videotape purportedly showing the hostage hanging. There was no indication when it was filmed.

BUSH

Bush said that when he told his parents of his decision, his mother, Barbara, replied, "Good. Next subject."

She told him several months ago that she hoped he would not run.

"I urge any of my friends who feel so compelled to pick a candidate, get off the sidelines and get involved in the race for governor," Bush said of the race to replace Republican Bill Clements.

Republican gubernatorial candidate and Midland businessman Clayton Williams foresees a strenthened campaign because of the Bush decision, a spokesman said today.

The only other Republican candidate to have formally entered the race is former Secretary of State Jack Rains.

Rains' campaign headquarters in Houston could not be reached for comment today.

"I think everyone saw Bush as a formidable opponent. He clearly was a leader in all the polls we've seen for sometime," Williams' spokesman Frank Walter said this morning.

"As indications increased that he (Bush) wouldn't be in the race, we've had a lot of key supporters move to our campaign ... such as Eddie Chiles."

Chiles is a Republican activist who has agreed to serve as a state campaign chairman for Williams.

Last night in Amarillo, Williams said: "I have a great deal of respect for George W. Bush as do many Republicans in Texas.

"His decision not to enter the race for governor opens up the primary and creates a very competitive contest," Williams said.

The former Midlander Bush attended San Jacinto Junior High School here later graduated from Yale University and Harvard University's graduate school of business.

He brought a master's of business administration degree to Midland where he began a career in the oil business as a petroleum landman.

He later merged his Spectrum Seven Energy Corp. with Harken Energy of Dallas.

Bush's first brush with politics landed him in an unsuccessful U.S. congressional race against then-Democrat Kent Hance, who now is a Republican Texas Railroad Commissioner and a likely candidate for governor.

Bush moved to Washington, D.C., in the summer of 1987 to help oversee his father's presidential campaign. After the 1988 election, Bush moved his family to Dallas.

One other Republican considering a race in the Republican primary is T. Boone Pickens, the well-known corporate takeover artist who recently moved part of his business from Amarillo to Dallas.

State Treasurer Ann Richards, a Democrat, has entered the race. State Attorney General Jim Mattox is expected to challenge Richards in the Democratic primary.

Staff writer Jane Marler Dees contributed to this story.

GAYS

If the applicant had volunteered the fact he or she was gay, that also would be reported to Czech, Nicks said.

"Just like I would also mention a 21-year-old who weighed 98 pounds, looked like he was 14, with baby blue eyes, blond hair, and who was not shaving yet," Nicks said. "I would include that in my report, because this applicant probably is going to have trouble getting along on the street."

Although Czech says he will not refuse to hire someone strictly based on sexual orientation, homosexuality would be a strike against the applicant for practical reasons.

"It would be difficult for a gay officer to work in the environment of the Midland Police Department," Czech said. "But I would look at the whole package of a gay applicant."

Czech and Nicks said a gay officer likely would have trouble getting "support" from other officers "on the street."

Texas law does not protect gays from discrimination, according to County Attorney Mark Dettman.

"State law that deals with discrimination only bars governments from discriminating against a person because of race, religion, color, sex or national origin," Dettman said. "It does not mention sexual preference."

A gay applicant turned down by the Midland Sheriff's Department could sue, but could not win, according to the attorney.

"Nothing in state law would give someone a cause of action," Dettman said. "That is not a protected class under federal law, either."

When a lesbian applicant to the FBI was rejected and then sued the agency, a federal appeals court sided with the government, Dettman said.

"The court said then that it is not constitutionally protected conduct," he noted. "The FBI has a rational basis for not hiring people with a particular sexual preference. Number one, they could get into a situation where their actions could be compromised. Number two, in a lot of states, including Texas, that kind of action is a criminal offense."

Dettman was referring to the so-called "sodomy statute" relied upon by the Dallas Police Department, the Dallas County Sheriff's Department, and the Houston Police Department. Those agencies are justified invoking that law, he said.

"If the sheriff or head of any law enforcement agency wants to hire someone, they certainly don't want to hire someone that is going to engage in actions that are criminal," Dettman said.

Texas law prohibits "deviate sexual intercourse with another individual of the same sex," the prosecutor said.

The law, both state and federal, affords few rights to homosexuals. A 1988 federal law prohibits employers from asking about sexual conduct and orientation on polygraph examinations, but it exempts police agencies.

Painter said he would not discriminate against a gay applicant. But he has strong feelings on the subject, and like Czech explained the difficulty a gay law enforcement officer would have in West Texas.

"You have to have the faith and trust of your fellow officers," Painter said. "And the tendency in West Texas is strict opposition to homosexuality. That is our trend. The tendency here is not to put up with it and not to have it."

The sheriff couldn't say what he will do when he is confronted with an applicant who is qualified and gay.

"I won't know until I encounter that situation," Painter said. "I can tell you this: he would be by himself. I don't know of a law enforcement officer in this part of the country that is a homosexual."

Painter, a former Department of Public Safety trooper, believes a homosexual would be a "detriment" to law enforcement.

"A homosexual officer in this part of the country is a detriment," he said.

"I'm not trying to say the person is good or bad; they will have to answer to a higher authority."

READING

"Sometimes children are allowed to seep through the school grades without having average skills," Mrs. Holland said. "The success in undoing what they've learned is not as great as spotting them at the beginning and helping them immediately.

"If they're having problems with reading, they're going to have problems with all their other programs."

The children in the reading project will be drilled on proper reading skills, phonics and auditory and visual strategies, she said.

Mrs. Holland said the pupils could spend anywhere from two to 18 weeks under the reading teacher's wing before being sent back to study reading with their classmates.

"The success rate of the program shows that they don't fall below average anymore," Ms. Holland said. "A child would have to have a serious learning handicap to not benefit from this program."

Although MISD first-grade reading scores on the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills have improved more than 10 percentage points in the past four years, they haven't broken the 90 percentile range.

Mastery of TEAMS reading in MISD overall was 73 percent in 1986, 78 percent in 1987, 84 percent in 1988 and 85 percent this year. Campus by campus scores this year ranged from 67 percent at Bonham Elementary School to 98 percent at Fannin Elementary School.

Each of MISD's 21 elementary campuses has a reading teacher, while six of the schools, all operating under the federal Chapter 1 program, have a enriched reading teacher. A school qualifies for Chapter 1 aid by having a certain percentage of pupils coming from low-income families.

Mrs. Holland said the district would not need additional personnel for the reading recovery program. For the first year, the reading instructors will receive special training through in-services.

Meanwhile, one teacher, who has not been selected yet, will be sent to a reading recovery training program in Denton for a year. That teacher, in turn, will train other reading instructors for the following years.

Karen Rogers, a Bonham Elementary School reading teacher, said pupils are in serious need of the reading project.

"We're real excited about this program," Ms. Rogers said. "It will help improve our reading ability in the community."

Linda Sherman, reading teacher at Fannin Elementary School, said poor reading among first-graders is no bigger a problem in MISD than it is in other Texas school districts.

"I feel like MISD has always emphasized reading," Ms. Sherman said. "But I think all children need more time in reading."

Report says consultants paid $5.7 million in HUD projects

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twenty consultants earned more than $5.7 million by helping funnel much of the money in a federal housing program to developers in a handful of states that didn't need it, a Senate committee was told today.

Most of the 20 consultants were former employees of the Department of using and Urban Development or well-connected Republicans, HUD Inspector General Paul Adams said in a report to the Senate Banking Committee.

The consultants were paid by developers to help them get about one-fifth of the money from a HUD program to repair housing for the poor.

"It's so lucrative now that you're going to get some people doing some pretty unsavory things to feed at that trough," Donald Terner, president of the non-profit Bridge Housing Corp. in San Francisco, told the Senate committee.

Elsewhere on Capitol Hill today, the House Government Operations subcommittee on housing voted 6-0 to subpoena Lance Wilson, a former aide to former HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce Jr. Wilson had been scheduled to voluntarily testify last week, but did not appear, saying that he wasn't prepared with legal counsel.

Adams, who conducted the HUD study at the request of Sen. Donald Riegle Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the Banking Committee, said the well is starting to run dry for the outside consultants.

"During our survey, five developers informed us that because of all the recent media attention, some billings were not paid in full" to them, Adams wrote in his report.

One of those consultants was Fred Bush, ambassador-designate to Luxembourg, who has had $45,000 in payments withheld since April, the report said. Bush, who is no relation to the president but was the chief fund-raiser for his 1988 campaign, was paid $215,000 to help land HUD funds for developers.

Joseph Strauss, a former assistant to then-HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce Jr., made nearly $1.7 million — more than any other consultant found by Adams' inquiry.

Others included former Interior Secretary James Watt, who got $300,000; former HUD Secretary and now U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills, who received $138,445; and Paul Manafort, a lobbyist and Republican political strategist, who got $442,000.

Adams has reported before on the use of consultants in obtaining funds from HUD, but the new report is the first attempt to determine the extent and expense of the practice.

Under the HUD program, developers were eligible for tax credits and could get HUD to subsidize the rent of tenants who otherwise couldn't afford it.

"Developers often received windfall profits through tax credit syndication," Adams wrote. Excess payments for rent subsidies could cost the government more than $413 million by 1999, he said.

In all, 51 projects with a total of 7,268 apartments funded since October 1983 used consultants, Adams' report found. That accounts for about 20 percent of all HUD's work in this area during that time.

Of those projects involving consultants, 45 were put in states — notably, Colorado, Oklahoma, Nevada and Wyoming — that would not have qualified for the funds if HUD's formulas for determining eligibility had been used, the report said.

Congress considers Lucas for interim position

By DAN FREEDMAN
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Senate Judiciary Committee doomed William Lucas' chances Tuesday of winning confirmation as the Justice Department's top civil rights law enforcer.

Lucas

However, in what could create a new confrontation with Congress, the White House was considering the option of giving Lucas a recess appointment, which would not require Senate confirmation until 1991, according to two presidential aides.

The committee's rejection of Lucas was the latest in a series of stunning legislative defeats for President Bush, who came into office last January promising improved relations with the Democratic-controlled Congress.

So far this year, Bush has also lost the nomination of John Tower to be secretary of defense, seen his defense spending priorities turned upside down and suffered a setback on his version of the financial bailout for ailing savings and loan institutions.

At Tuesday's dramatic Senate Judiciary Committee session, members deadlocked by successive tie votes on two Lucas resolutions.

First, they voted 7-7 on whether to send the Lucas nomination to the Senate floor with a favorable recommendation. Then they voted 7-7 on whether to send it with a neutral recommendation.

A majority vote is needed to move a nomination out of a committee to the full Senate. Since Lucas failed to attain a majority in either vote, the nomination in effect "is dead," a judiciary committee aide said.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh called the votes "disappointing" and "a result of raw politics." Justice Department spokesman David Runkel said that "as of today" there are no new candidates for the Justice Department civil rights position.

The White House, however, was not ready to give up.

"There are a number of options being considered," said White House spokeswoman Alixe Glen. "We think that had Lucas gone to the full Senate, he would have passed."

According to the two aides, who asked not to be identified, the recess appointment would allow Bush to appoint Lucas as soon as Congress recesses at the end of this week. Lucas could then serve in the civil rights post until the congresssional session ends in December, 1990.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole advocated such an appointment on the Senate floor shortly after Lucas' defeat. The White House aides said Bush has not reviewed the recess appointment option.

During Tuesday's committee vote, Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., produced the deadlock by voting against the controversial former Wayne County, Mich. sheriff and county executive.

"In the normal course of events, you expect positions in the Department of Justice to be filled by experts," Heflin said. However, he added, Lucas' record as sheriff raises doubts "about his management abilities."

Heflin cited a 1976 contempt citation issued by a Michigan court to Lucas for his failure, as sheriff, to implement court orders to ease overcrowding and poor medical treatment in the Wayne County jail.

Lucas, 61, said in his confirmation hearing two weeks ago that the prison was a "hellhole" when he became sheriff in 1969 and that he had improved it by the time he left office in 1983. His defense apparently failed to sway Heflin.

The votes on Lucas mostly went according to party lines. Sen. Dennis DeConcini was the only Democrat to join six committee Republicans in voting for Lucas.

DeConcini, who served on government panels with Lucas before the nomination, called him "a qualified public servant."

"The fact that he was not able to turn everything around while sheriff or county executive does not disqualify him," DeConcini said.

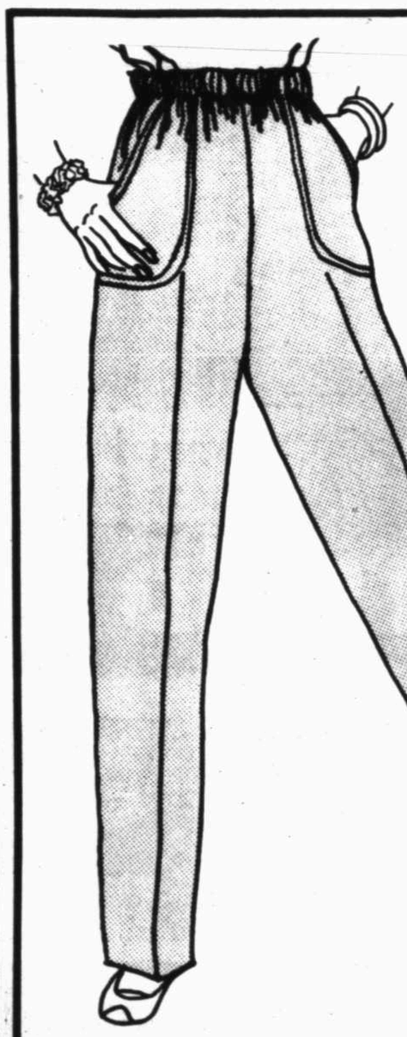

Several committee Republicans suggested Lucas was headed for defeat because he is a black conservative Republican.

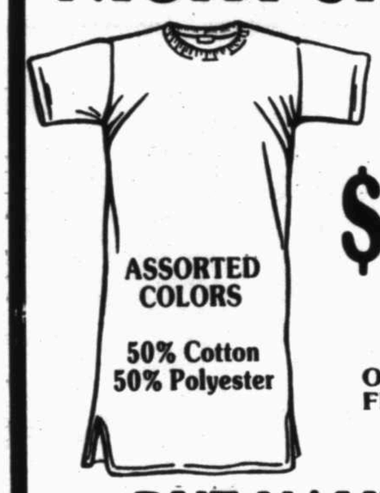

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., called Lucas "a black man that has proven himself...Why not give him a chance?" Thurmond has become a racial moderate since the 1950s and 1960s, when he broke records filibustering against integration of public facilities.

"Simply to turn Lucas down because he's black (would send) a message that would go out to the rest of the world," Thurmond added.

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wy., called the anti-Lucas positions of Senate Democrats and civil rights groups "back-of-the-bus stuff from the 1960s."

Democrats and civil rights leaders attending the hearing, however, denied that their opposition to Lucas was based on race.

Fire forces evacuations near Idaho town; Blaze jumps river

Associated Press

Officials urged people to stay out of Idaho's fire-ravaged backcountry and evacuated vacationers near the scorched town of Lowman, while one fire jumped a river and temporarily closed a major highway.

Cooler weather helped firefighters in Oregon and Southern California and crews contained Washington's only major blaze. But officials feared lightning could trigger a new round of fires like the ones that have been burning since the middle of last week.

Waves of thunderheads caused an estimated 2,000 lightning strikes an hour early Tuesday in Idaho's Boise National Forest alone. The thunderstorms let up later and there was no immediate word of any new fires.

About 1,200 soldiers from Fort Lewis, Wash., were to begin heading to lines in southeastern Oregon today after getting a one-day crash course in cutting containment lines, fort spokesman George Polich said.

In addition, four 20-man crews and three helicopters were to head to Oregon and Idaho today after an 850-acre fire in northern Washington was contained.

The Boise Interagency Fire Center said about 20,000 firefighters were on lines in the West, primarily in Idaho, Oregon and California. Blazes have blackened more than 175,000 acres in those states and Washington.

Some of the firefighters came from as far away as Florida. Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus said the influx was obvious at Chicago's O'Hare Airport, where he waited Monday to return from the National Governors' Conference.

"I saw nothing but green pants, yellow shirts and the boots of firefighters headed West," he said.

More than 5,000 firefighters battled uncontained fires on more than 80,000 acres of Idaho range and timber. Andrus predicted the fight could rage for a month.

Payette National Forest officials evacuated 16 of the 36 residents of Warren, a small mining town 120 miles north of Boise, as flames from the 1,000-acre Whangdoodle Fire moved to within a mile of town.

"We're telling them we feel like they're in some danger and offering to help them evacuate," Payette spokesman George Bukenhofer said.

Crews carved a break line south of the town with bulldozers and used pumps to wet the area ahead of the fire, which was shooting embers two miles ahead of the flames.

AP Laserphoto

A 8,000-acre fire threatens the mountains near Joseph, Ore. Four 20-man crews and three helicopters are headed to Oregon and Idaho to fight the fires.

About 100 miles to the southeast, fires that burned on 26,000 acres and destroyed more than $10 million in structures at Lowman last weekend turned back toward the town Tuesday evening. More than 1,100 firefighters armed with 60 water engines, tankers and two bulldozers worked to protect the town.

Boise National Forest officials evacuated about two dozen people from cabins just west of the town to a campground three miles away. They also evacuated two lodges outside the town, although Sourdough Lodge owner Bob Ahern said he would resist the efforts of sheriff's deputies to get him out.

"They keep coming to the door to get me, and I keep telling them I lost my keys," he said. "They can ask me to leave, but they can't force me."

About 40 miles north of Boise, a rejuvenated 5,000-acre fire jumped the South Fork of the Payette River near Banks, and billowing smoke closed Idaho Highway 55 temporarily, Bukenhofer said.

Helicopters crisscrossed the Hell's Canyon area near the Idaho-Oregon line, carrying rangers who brought maps to direct about 40 hikers to the safest routes out of the backcountry.

More astronaut deaths likely as missions increase, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States must be prepared to accept the likelihood that more astronauts will be killed if space missions become routine, according to a report submitted to Congress today.

"If such risks are perceived to be too high, the nation may decide to reduce its emphasis on placing humans in space," said the report by the congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

Space shuttle reliability to date, with one catastrophic failure in 29 launches — the 1986 explosion of Challenger — is 96.5 percent and a contractor estimated last year that a representative chance of mission success is 98 percent.

The price of increased space activity includes "the likelihood that loss of life will occur," the report said.

"If reliability is and remains 98 percent, there would be a 50 percent chance of losing an orbiter on the next 34 flights, a 72 percent chance of losing an orbiter before the first space station assembly flight and an 88 percent chance of losing an orbiter before space station assembly is completed 42 flights later," said OTA.

Current plans call for all hardware for the planned space station to be carried into orbit in shuttle cargo holds, along with astronauts who will do the assembly. Engineers have been talking, though, of reducing the number of shuttle missions by carrying parts into orbit on heavy-duty rockets.

After the loss of Challenger, NASA was left with a three-orbiter fleet: Columbia — the shuttle that is scheduled to fly next week on a military mission — Discovery and Atlantis. A replacement for Challenger, named the Endeavour, is expected to be ready for flight in 1992 and a year later NASA expects to reach a flight rate of 14 a year.

OTA said one more orbiter, costing $2.5 billion, is needed and a decision to have it ready by 1996 would have to be made in the fiscal year that begins in October.

"Continued dependence on only four orbiters could be risky," said the report. "Launching each orbiter three or four times every year creates a growing cumulative risk of accidents or 'wear out;' supporting the space station in addition to other crew-related missions would be difficult if not impossible with fewer than four orbiters."

The OTA report, called "Round Trip to Orbit: Human Space Flight Alternatives," examines some of the policy choices Congress faces in decisions that must be made this year or next.

If Congress wants to reduce risks to the shuttle fleet during assembly of the space station, OTA said, it could direct NASA to buy Titan 4 launch vehicles or develop a so-called Shuttle-C launch vehicle, which would use shuttle booster rockets and fuel tank to orbit a huge cargo container.

The report also laid out options to advance U.S. crew-carrying capabilities beyond the shuttle era into the next century. They include an Advanced Manned Launch System leading to an advanced shuttle-like vehicle and a Personnel Launch system, which could dispatch a crew-carrying vehicle from unpiloted launch rockets.

An aerospace plane, able to take off from a runway and fly to orbit, would be a major step forward, OTA said, but would be much more expensive and a larger technical challenge.

Senate bill would take funds from agencies for war on drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, struggling toward passage of a $295 billion defense authorization bill, voted today to pay for the war on drugs with an infusion of unspent dollars from government agencies — including the Pentagon.

The 90-9 vote, taken as the Senate worked into the early morning hours, would authorize the transfer of $1.7 billion from all but a short list of exempted federal programs to pay the full cost of keeping the government's promise to fight "the epidemic of narcotics sweeping this country."

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said the action, if approved by the House and enacted into law, puts the problem of paying for the drug war squarely on President Bush's shoulders.

"This amendment authorizes the president to fund the drug package," Byrd said. "It says: 'Mr. President, when it passes into law, it's your baby. You fund the war on drugs. If you don't like it, find another way.'"

In other action before adjourning at 2:50 a.m. EDT, the Senate:

■ Voted to give air police last-resort permission to shoot down aircraft flying narcotics into the United States.

■ Adopted a series of "burden-sharing" amendments aimed at increasing the contributions to defense by U.S. allies in Europe and Asia.

■ Bolstered Bush's bid to make the MX missile a moving rather than a stationary target by shelving, 62-38, an amendment slicing $502 million from the funds available to place the force of 50 missiles on railway cars.

■ Turned aside an attempt to bring to an immediate vote an amendment restoring the military pension lost when former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver L. North was convicted on three felony counts in the Iran-Contra affair. As a compromise, it ordered the Senate Judiciary Committee to hold hearings and report on the contentious issue by Nov. 1.

After a rancorous debate, the Senate declined to support an amendment to siphon $450 million from the authorization for the Star Wars strategic defense initiative for the war on drugs.

Instead, it approved the compromise drafted by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Forces Committee as a desperation move to guarantee the drug war will be fully funded.

Nunn said his amendment would keep the promises of the drug bill passed last year by shifting unspent balances in federal programs left over at the end of the fiscal year ending Sept. 30.

The measure exempts entitlement programs, including Social Security, Medicare, and subsidized housing.

Bennett's drug plan short on specifics, sources say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drug czar William J. Bennett's national drug strategy calls for increased law enforcement but is short on specifics, according to administration officials who have seen it.

Bennett

While the program focuses on cocaine, particularly crack, it has "virtually nothing" on heroin, dangerous prescription drugs that are diverted to illegal use or hallucinogens, said one source.

"There's only one sentence on all of that," the source said Tuesday.

The strategy report to the Cabinet, required by the 1988 anti-drug law that created the Office of National Drug Control Strategy, strongly reflects public comments made by Bennett since he took office five months ago.

The final report is due Sept. 5.

"It reads like one of his speeches," said one source.

Another source said Bennett wrote the strategy himself after gathering information from government agencies and drug experts. All the sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

The strategy calls for an all-out effort to eradicate domestic marijuana crops and to wipe out money-laundering operations, but it says nothing about domestic methamphetamine labs, one source said.

However, the source said there were few specific goals — such as the number of drug-treatment beds the nation should have by 1991 — in the draft submitted Monday.

The only goals included were that drug-related admissions to emergency rooms and the drug use found by the National Household Survey on Drug Abuse should be reduced by 10 percent in two years and by 50 percent in 10 years, according to one of the sources.

Bennett warned last week that the strategy would contain "some carrots and some sticks.

"We will expect states to do certain things if they want federal funds," he said then. "We will expect educational institutions to finally do certain things if they want education funds."

In the most recent draft, those threats take the form of a possible loss of highway funds for states that fail to revoke driver's licenses from those convicted of drug offenses, and a possible loss of federal education funds from schools that fail to have Education Department approved drug-prevention programs and policies, a source said.

Threats in an earlier draft to revoke criminal justice funds were eliminated, the source said.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr., who spent eight years pushing for creation of the job, said during Bennett's confirmation hearing that he expected the strategy to include detailed goals.

One source said Bennett planned to meet with senators in the next few days, possibly to reduce expectations.

The strategy seen by the sources did not include matters such as international operations and interdiction efforts, which are included in a separate, classified document being reviewed by the National Security Council.

The non-classified strategy, under review by the Domestic Policy Council, reflects Bennett's oft-stated contention that the drug war must be aggressively fought on all fronts — enforcement, prevention and treatment.

"No single strategy, pursued alone or to the detriment of other possible and valuable initiatives, can work to contain or reduce drug use," the strategy says.

But what that means in terms of money was not immediately clear. The draft strategy circulated Monday included no budget figures.

Bennett said in June that he expected to seek more money for drug treatment and probably more for prevention. He said last week that the escalating cost of the drug war may eventually lead to the need for a tax increase.

The strategy stresses a need to rid inner cities of illegal drugs.

"A paramount target of law-enforcement activity, especially at the local level, must be the disruption of those street markets for drugs in which retail demand and supply finally meet in a combustible mix."

Study questions government methadone plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government plan to give heroin addicts greater access to methadone may not curb the spread of AIDS, according to two studies released today that question the effectiveness of current treatment programs.

"Methadone is no panacea for heroin addiction," said Rep. Charles B. Rangel, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control.

Rangel said he was distressed by a Department of Health and Human Services proposal to allow heroin addicts greater access to methadone programs to prevent needle-sharing and help curb the spread of AIDS.

The General Accounting Office and Drug Enforcement Administration, in separate studies presented to the panel today, questioned the wisdom of the HHS plan, citing continued drug abuse by many patients in treatment and illegal diversion of the methadone.

Under the HHS proposal, heroin addicts unable to get into a comprehensive treatment program would be able to receive methadone daily at outpatient clinics and from mobile medical units. The synthetic narcotic would not be provided for take-home use and addicts would be counseled on avoiding AIDS.

About 100,000 people were in methadone treatment last year; the government estimates there are about 500,000 heroin addicts nationwide.

Raising gas tax unfair to Texas

The federal government, always looking to micromanage society's activities where possible, again seems to be pondering an increase in the gasoline tax as a sure-fire way to accomplish two of its desired objectives: Reducing Americans' consumption of gasoline and, ostensibly, reducing its own budget deficit.

Never mind that increasing the gas tax would be unjust to Americans across-the-board by increasing the cost of transportation for many who have no other option, fail to bring about the hoped for goal of reducing consumption and fail to keep members of Congress from spending more than is in federal coffers.

While promoting the idea of conservation as a way of staving off increased reliance on imported oil is an admirable goal, the apparent mind-set by some federal bureaucrats that all which is required to bring about a reduction in consumption is to make filling up the family gas tank too expensive is completely ludicrous.

People in much of this country, and particularly in big, wide states such as Texas, drive because they have to in order to do their jobs, not because it's fun or lets them burn up a little gasoline.

Sure, there's probably some waste out in the hinterlands — Friday night cruising by youngsters on the Los Angeles freeways and a lot of single occupant car usage rather than pooling, but there's also lots of 200-mile treks in West Texas, Arizona, Montana and other locations by passenger vehicles because of business demands when there's no alternate mode of transportation either available or suitable.

Texas Highway Commissioner Ray Stoker of Odessa cited the disparity on distances in this country and what they would mean, making a telling argument against increasing the gas tax, when he said recently:"The long and short of it is that these people (those supporting the increase) want us to pay twice as much of this tax as the people in New York or Washington, D.C."

That simply isn't fair. Wasn't unequal taxation — and the gas tax definitely is taxation — one of the reasons that the colonies in the early years of this nation's settlement revolted against British rule?

Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp has argued against the proposals on the gas tax now before the Congress, saying the increase could add $800 a year to the driving costs for a typical family.

Opponents of the proposals to increase the federal gas tax are suggesting that Texans contact their elected representatives in Washington, D.C., to voice their disapproval. We agree.

Call your congressman and tell him that raising the gasoline tax will only be a detriment to Texas and much of the rest of the nation. Only the Northeast would benefit. And that's unfair.

Congressmen should fly on airlines

WASHINGTON — Overbooking was not a problem on the plane Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and his wife took to Europe in January. The plane — an Air Force version of the Boeing 707 — seats 60 people, but the Hatfields and three aides were the only ones on board for the trip to Brussels.

Jack Anderson

They were joined in Europe by Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., and his wife for a 12-day fact-finding trip on human rights in Bulgaria, Romania and Czechoslovakia. It cost the taxpayers $111,609 for the delegation to use the four-engine Air Force jet as a private magic carpet on that trip. Had they flown first-class when available on commercial airliners, all seven would have spent only $31,479.

No matter how much legitimate business the senators may have accomplished, the use of a 60-passenger jet for seven people was a waste. It exposes a nouveau-royalty abuse of the 89th Special Air Mission stationed at Andrews Air Force Base outside of Washington, D.C.

Our associate Stewart Harris looked into the 89th and found that members of Congress use it as it if were their personal airline. It is well-equipped for the job. Its pilots are some of the best the Air Force has to offer. The 89th fleet includes Air Force One and Two, the modified Boeing 707s used by the president and vice-president. All told, there are 26 winged aircraft and 19 helicopters at the 89th. The maintenance and operating budget came to $10 million last year.

Hatfield's office told us the delegation had to use the big plane because a smaller military jet originally planned for the trip broke down at the last minute. That bird would have been a C-20, the military's version of the Gulfstream III corporate jet. But even the C-20 would have cost $60,000 on the trip.

Why should a member of Congress bother with commercial airlines when a private jet is so much more convenient and prestigious?

Most of the time, junketing lawmakers would save money if they flew commercial airliners with the ordinary folk who put them in lofty offices.

Every once in a while, congressional types pack a schedule so full of business, or they go someplace so remote, that military aircraft are justified.

Rep. Beverly Byron, D-Md., took members of her Military Personnel and Compensation Subcommittee on a whirlwind investigation of the quality of military life at 15 bases in Spain, Italy, Germany and Iceland last December. Byron's hopscotch tour could only be accomplished in 12 days with the use of a C-20. It cost $57,808 to fly a contingent of three representatives, their spouses, two aides and an Air Force escort.

But even Byron's delegation could have saved money by getting to Europe on a commercial airliner and then using military planes once there. The Air Force has three C-20s handy at Ramstein Air Base in West Germany.

The C-20 eats up $2,149 every hour that it is in the air. That's $19,341 to get Byron's delegation across the ocean, when tickets would have cost $10,392 if the lawmakers and their spouses flew business class and the rest of their entourage flew coach.

Congress Watch, a non-profit group founded by Ralph Nader, recently recommended that members of Congress fly commercial whenever possible. It's a revolutionary idea. Who knows what might happen if they stooped to flying coach too, or shaved the price even more by planning ahead and getting super-saver fares. The experience might bring the imperial Congress a little closer to the people who put them in office.

RECRUITING THE MASSES — Mikhail Gorbachev has to break the grip of the Communist Party before it stifles the Soviet economy. But party hacks won't give up their power without a fight. Party leaders from across the Soviet Union met recently for a strategy session in Moscow. Their plan is to stir up the unskilled workers from the lowest level of the working class. The lower classes receive more benefits under a communist dictatorship than they probably would under a free-enterprise system. The strategy of the party leaders apparently is to provoke a class struggle against democratic reforms.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan has changed his mind again. Americans still aren't sure where Sullivan stands on abortion. Now he is waffling on AIDS-prevention programs. In March, Sullivan said he would support needle-exchange programs to give clean hypodermic needles to drug addicts to help stop the spread of AIDS. Now Sullivan says he doesn't support the idea. Apparently Sullivan has never met an opinion he couldn't change.

The House That Jack Unbuilt

Another View:

List too long already

Democrats who asked the House Ethics Committee to investigate charges that Rep. Gus Savage, D-Ill., sexually assaulted a Peace Corps volunteer in Zaire should be commended. Such behavior by a public official should outrage all Americans.

The Peace Corps volunteer, 28, said that Savage, despite her forceful protests, fondled her for more than two hours in the back seat of a chauffeur-driven limousine in Kinshasa, Zaire, last March. The 63-year-old representative was in Zaire on official business. The incident allegedly occurred after dinner at the residence of the U.S. ambassador.

Most members of the House and Senate are hard-working and conscientious. It wouldn't be a representative government if all senators and congressmen were clones, perfect angels.

But minor day-to-day transgressions are one thing. Breaking the law or using the power that comes with a high government position for personal gain are something else. Senators and representatives who engage in illegal and immoral actions are tarnishing the institution of Congress.

Savage denied the charges of the Peace Corps volunteer, who reportedly needed psychological treatment at a Washington hospital after the incident. He made the situation even worse by claiming racism played a part.

"I did nothing, that's what I did," the black congressman said. "This lie was leaked by the State Department for political reasons. They tried to destroy Dr. Martin Luther King with a lie...I'm in very good company."

The Savage case comes on the heels of the conviction of Rep. Donald "Buz" Lukens, R-Ohio. Lukens was found guilty of having sex with a 16-year-old girl in his Columbus apartment and was sentenced to 180 days in jail and fined $1,000 for the misdemeanor conviction. He is appealing the conviction and continues to perform his congressional duties while free on bond.

Gary Hart. Gerry Studds. Wilbur Mills. Daniel Crane. The list is too long already.

Senators and representatives are held to high standards, and properly so. If their personal actions infringe on the public business, they shouldn't be in office. The Ethics Committee can decide guilt and innocence. The voters back home must also take a major role in deciding what type of person they want to represent them in Congress.

Exxon's cleanup leaves no stone unturned

It was an environmental dream come true. The Exxon oil company announced it had completed its Alaska oil spill cleanup to everyone's satisfaction and by September would close up shop.

Art Buchwald

The man responsible for the Exxon success was Joe Sludge, who has personally shined 90 percent of all the rocks in Valdez. Joe was in Washington to testify in front of a congressional committee, and I found him sitting by the reflecting pool, cleaning oil sludge from between his toes.

"No one thought you could do it," I said.

Joe replied, "I couldn't have done it without the help of the captain of the Valdez and his merry crew, as well as my superiors in the home office. A company like Exxon doesn't operate in a vacuum."

"Are you permitted to tell me how you won the environmental battle?"

"We just took a page out of Vietnam. We fought the good fight and then we said, 'The hell with it; we'll finish up next spring.' "

"How many rocks did Exxon polish up after the spill?"

"A lot more than anyone can imagine. But it isn't just cleaning them that we should get credit for. There are rocks in Valdez you can eat a smoked salmon off of — that is, if you can find a salmon in Valdez. But the main point is that Exxon gave it its best shot and now it's Mother Nature's turn to do some of the dirty work."

"Joe, everyone knows you have been diligent in saving the shoreline of Alaska, but you have to admit there wouldn't have been a spill if it hadn't been for Exxon. Shouldn't a neutral party decide when it's time to hang up the towel?"

"The only ones to judge such an important matter are the stockholders. After all, the cost of the cleanup is coming out of their pockets. Most of our stockholders care more about the environment than Exxon critics."

"Why is that?"

"Because they have a vested interest in how much Exxon spends to clean up its mess. Unlike environmentalists, stockholders don't let sentiment interfere in tough crude oil decisions. Exxon management could waffle at any time, but the pragmatic stockholder never will."

"I can see that the stockholders are less sentimental about Alaska's environment, but doesn't a non-negotiable pullout jeopardize the good name of Exxon?"

"No, because the American people are fair. They know good spills from bad spills. Valdez could have been a disaster if we hadn't cleaned up the rocks. The Alaskan shoreline is far more spic and span now than it was before the spill. If Exxon hadn't had such a top-flight training program, the brave captain of Valdez might have beached his ship in San Francisco harbor."

"Or perhaps in one of the Great Lakes," I added.

Joe said, "If you want the truth, the reason Exxon is signing off is that we're sick and tired of doing everybody else's laundry. Do you know that I have personally cleaned rocks along the shore, and I am certain that the oil on them did not come from our ship?"

"If you were so sure, why didn't you just throw those rocks back in the sea?" I asked.

"Because Exxon doesn't operate that way. When it comes to oil spills, our policy has always been to clean every stone, with no questions asked. That's why we're known in the oil business as Mr. Clean of the Sea."

WILLIAM SAFIRE

U.S.' destiny inextricably linked to Gorbachev

WASHINGTON — What's the matter with you right-wingers, ask the liberal editorialists; don't you realize that our destiny is inextricably linked to the success of Mikhail Gorbachev?

William Safire

If he fails, goes this argument, reform will be replaced by Stalinist repression and the cold war will begin again. The world will have lost its chance for peace and freedom and the fault will lie with cold warriors who refused to help Gorbachev overcome Moscow's baddies.

The imputation is that most American conservatives are (a) uncomfortable without an enemy, as the propagandist Arbatov suggests; (b) persuaded that Gorbachev is transitory, and are unwilling to ameliorate the crisis for his hard-line successor; (c) suspicious that perestroika is another Leninist trick to entice the West to save communism, with glasnost as its bait, or (d) lusting for Soviet collapse and dismemberment, resulting in capitalism's victory.

Startling confession: Although (a) is false, a lot of the rest undergirds our caution.

We root our policy in the experience of consistent Soviet betrayal in the past, and the likelihood that the communist desire for domination is dormant but far from dead.

We think the next century would be more peaceful and prosperous unburdened by reinvigorated totalitarianism.

But we like to think of ourselves as realists; certainly the upheaval now under way reaches deeper than ever before, and the adroitness with which Gorbachev aligned himself with coal miners angry at his five years of worsening conditions is the mark of a master politician.

The central question is not "Should we help Gorbachev?" but "What can we do now to provide incentives for the Soviet Union to free its people and to stop financing tyranny and terror beyond its borders?"

Liberals answer that with an offer of economic largesse: an end to trade restrictions, fresh credits, an infusion of Western technology to help make the Soviets an active world competitor.

They confidently accompany this with the latest form of unilateral disarmament: cutting back funds for a nuclear defense, eliminating our anti-missile missile, professing horror at the long-planned cost of a manned bomber.

If Gorbachev is a democrat at heart, and if the Soviets have abandoned their goal of expansion, and if our economic help were to be used to transform their stultifying system into a market economy, the liberal approach would make sense. We don't know.

But this we do know: Only the threat of imminent economic collapse — the genuine fear of losing its superpower status — has caused the Gorbachev faction to introduce greater freedom of speech directed at breaking up party control, and has elicited a promise to end Soviet superiority in conventional arms.

Anything we do to reduce that threat of collapse diminishes their incentive to make systemic change. Any technology we offer to reduce the Kremlin's fear of losing the economic race lessens the pressure on them to cut their arms budget or to reduce their cost of subversion.

Only the Soviet inability to put food on the table has pushed the Kremlin leadership into belated toleration of reform; but if the West puts the food on the Soviet table, we would remove the desperation that has driven the movement of the past five years.

The single economic reward we should offer is the speedy mutual and balanced reduction of arms; let that be the West's economic contribution to Soviet salvation.

Even that offer should be conditioned on Soviet behavior: Gorbachev's five years have married diplomatic detente with espionage aggression.

The KGB faction is Gorbachev's power source. He has increased its capacity to steal secrets, thereby gaining technology and military advantage on the cheap.

His uncriticized escalation of espionage also damages democratic institutions: our attorney general's shameful decision to subject a suspected spy to media stakeout torture makes a mockery of the presumption of innocence and weakens our individual rights.

The way to help Gorbachev succeed in what he wants (recovery of economic strength without loss of Kremlin control) is to take the heat off the need for change by sending subsidized grain and our latest computers, and by substituting congressional complacency for our defense readiness.

The way to help Gorbachev succeed in what we want (free markets, free people) is to wish him well and let harsh circumstance force him to upend the system and downsize the empire.

Soviets to build housing for Washington poor

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Ten Soviet volunteers and their American counterparts plan to spend August in Washington building homes for the poor as a return favor for help in earthquake-devastated Soviet Armenia.

A group of 20 U.S. and Soviet volunteers spent July in Soviet Armenia rebuilding homes destroyed by the earthquake, which killed tens of thousands of people. The Washington stint is the second part of the exchange program organized by Ploughshares, a Seattle-based organization of former Peace Corps workers.

"I hope they come away with the impression that we are real human beings, with a better understanding of the fact that America is not what they see on the satellite or through the news media," said Fred Bauman, project manager of the local chapter of Habitat for Humanity, the Yakima Valley Partners, which is overseeing the building.

Plans call for the volunteers to work on two houses in Yakima, one in Granger and one in Toppenish, Bauman said. Their work will be supervised by professionals loaned by construction companies in Yakima and Seattle.

Bauman said a recipient must purchase the building materials and provide 500 hours of "sweat equity" in exchange for the free labor.

A typical new house under the Habitat program costs $18,000 to $24,000, and can be paid off over 20 years with no interest payments, he said.

Piranha caught in lake

MOUNT HOREB, Wis. (AP) — A popular fishing and swimming spot was closed after a man caught a piranha there, authorities said Tuesday.

"The first time I tossed a minnow, he hit it so hard there was nothing left but gills and head," said Tom Grob, who snagged the fish Sunday. "I threw another minnow in the same spot and he hit it and put up a terrific fight."

Stewart Lake is stocked with trout by the state Department of Natural Resources.

It was temporarily closed to swimmers in case other piranha are present, said Ken LePine, assistant director of the Dane County Parks Department. LePine said the DNR is trying to determine the source of the piranha, a carnivorous South American fish that normally eats other fish.

Grob said he gave the fish to a tropical pet store.

Woman wins nomination

MIAMI (AP) — A Cuban-born conservative easily won the Republican nomination for the House seat of the late Claude Pepper and looked forward to building up her campaign war chest while two Democrats face a tough runoff.

"I think the bloody fight is going to be between the Democrats. We're sailing on," said state Sen. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, who won 85 percent of the GOP primary vote Tuesday against three opponents in a bid to become the first Cuban-American in Congress.

Meanwhile, prominent attorney Gerald Richman claimed momentum heading into the Aug. 15 Democratic runoff as he edged Rosario Kennedy, also Cuban-born. Jo Ann Pepper, niece of the liberal champion of the poor and elderly who had represented the diverse district since 1962, finished third.

The Richman-Kennedy runoff promised to add ethnic rivalry to the heated competition for the district, which includes the heavily Cuban-American Little Havana area.

"My whole theme has been to unite the community," Richman said. "This should be an American seat, with people voting for the most qualified candidate."

"I am a Cuban-American," said Ms. Kennedy, a former city commissioner. "I'm also a woman. And I have represented all of the people of the city of Miami."

Quake shakes Oregon

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A slight earthquake rattled the Portland area Tuesday afternoon, but there were no reports of property damage or injury.

The temblor measured 3.9 on the Richter scale and was centered 10 miles below the Lacamas Lake area, just northeast of Camas, Wash., said Chris Jonientz-Trisler, seismic analyst at the University of Washington Seismology Lab.

The quake, reported at 4:25 p.m., was on the borderline between minor and moderate, Jonientz-Trisler said. She also said there was one small aftershock, but she had no details on its size.

Overseas military to be counted in census

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major issue hanging over the 1990 Census is resolved with the decision to include military personnel stationed overseas, but Congress is arguing over whether to keep counting illegal aliens.

The House blocked an effort Tuesday to require aliens to be excluded from the census numbers used in House reapportionment every decade. But the question still may be raised in committee and in the Senate.

The national head count will be taken April 1, 1990. Census figures are used to redistribute the 435 House seats among the states every 10 years and to distribute federal aid to local governments.

The reapportionment issue has riveted the attention of House members from states where slow growth threatens to result in losses of House seats. Most of these states are in the North, where growth has lagged behind that of the South and West.

Undocumented aliens are largely concentrated in the South, West and industrial states like New York, and other states fear a loss of power to those areas if the aliens are counted.

While aliens have been counted in the past, military personnel stationed overseas have not.

The Commerce Department settled that problem by announcing it will work with the Defense Department on ways to count the 1.2 million to 1.6 million military and civilian defense workers who live overseas.

The problem has been in deciding which states may count these people as residents. That has yet to be decided, but possibilities include counting the state where the person owns a home or the last state where he or she lived for at least six months.

The battle over illegal aliens, meanwhile, was taken up both in committee and on the House floor.

Rep. Tom Ridge, R-Pa., unsuccessfully sought to attach a ban on counting aliens to an appropriations measure providing $5.8 million to run the State, Justice and Commerce departments next year, including $800 million to take the census. The bill was approved 258-165 and sent to the Senate.

Opponents noted the Constitution requires House seats to be apportioned based on all the "persons" residing in a state.

"Every census since the Constitution was created has counted all residents of the states, both citizens and non-citizens," observed Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif.

"Congress is empowered to identify those to be counted" in the census, responded Ridge. The Census Bureau's $4 billion budget for the census is large enough to identify and separate out the illegal aliens, he said.

Man gets probation over Jesus sign

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A service station owner is facing six months probation for violating an ordinance with a portable sign advertising 10 percent discounts to "those whom Jesus loves."

Escambia County Judge James Roark told Jerry Harrison, 46, he would lift the probation, imposed after a jury verdict Monday, if he complies with the sign ordinance within 30 days. Roark also ordered him to pay $430 in court costs.

Harrison, who says he is a born-again Christian and reformed drug and alcohol abuser, said he was doing "God's will" by offering the discounts on labor, advertised on a 4-by-8-foot portable sign.

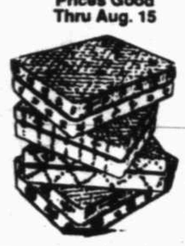

Officials said they objected to the medium rather than the message.

Harrison was charged with violating an ordinance against portable signs, passed to reduce visual clutter and safety hazards.

"I thought the judge was very fair," said Harrison, who claimed he gives the discount to all customers because Jesus loves everyone. He said he wants to find a way to keep the sign, but will remove it if he cannot meet requirements.

Exxon officials were unable to force him to remove the sign in 1987 after members of the Jewish community complained about it, but he changed the message. Initially, the sign stated the discount was available only to Christians.

What You Don't Know Can Hurt You.
But not if you take a few minutes to learn about electrical safety around your home or business.
Here are a few safety tips worth remembering.
Overhead.
Never fly a kite, or raise an antenna or place a ladder where it can come in contact with a power line. Touching power lines with any object can result in serious injury or even death. Stay clear of all overhead power lines.

Underground.
Know before you dig. Some neighborhoods have underground power lines. If you don't know whether you have underground power lines, or if you need to know their location, call TU Electric.

Out and around.

Pad mounted transformers, large metal boxes that are ususally green or cream colored, are safe when they are closed and locked. However, if one is opened or damaged, it can be deadly. Call TU Electric immediately to report the situation and warn others to stay away until the repairman arrives.
Be safe around electricity.
Being aware of the location of power lines can save your life or the life of a loved one. So take time now, before you start your next fix-up project, to learn the location of power lines near your home or business. Because what you know about power lines can make the difference between being safe or being sorry.
DON'T LET A POWER LINE BE THE END OF THE LINE.

Jerry Tschauner, director of planning for the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, barricades himself behind mounds of paperwork.

PBRPC rates projects for grant applications

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Water, sewer and housing rehabilitation projects will remain atop the priority list of grant applications to be considered next year by the 17-county Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

The procedures and scoring criteria for the Community Development Fund portion of the Texas Community Development Program was adopted by PBRPC members during a Tuesday board meeting.

With input from a variety of community leaders, PBRPC board members ranked projects according to priority with water, sewer and housing rehabilitation leading the pack.

Those projects also expected to receive due consideration include streets, drainage, fire protection and affordable housing.

PBRPC Planning Director Jerry Tschauner said the priority list is developed annually to reflect the needs of the 17 counties encompassing the Permian Basin region.

By consolidating grant applications into three priority levels, Tschauner said PBRPC board members hope cities and counties will be encouraged to submit more applications for funding than was tendered in 1989.

According to the planning director, the PBRPC awarded more than $1.2 million to Permian Basin applicants this year.

While Tschauner said cities with populations up to 50,000 may request no more than $300,000 in funding, multi-jurisdictions may request up to $500,000 worth of Community Development grant money.

Midland and Odessa, which receive separate funding from the the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, are ineligible for the grants.

Tschauner said grant applications are due no later than Sept. 14 at the Texas Department of Commerce offices in Austin.

Copies of those applications will be turned over to the PBRPC by Oct. 1 and the money should be forthcoming by late October or early November, he added.

Former teller sentenced for embezzlement

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An ex-teller for Community National Bank in Midland confessed that she was only "thinking of my family" when she embezzled $140,000 from the bank in an apparent effort to break a family poverty cycle.

But, the woman, 38-year-old Guadalupe "Lupe" Martinez, also violated the trust of her family and the bank and violated moral principles, noted U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton, who sentenced the woman to 12 months in prison and fined her $3,000.

"You violated the trust of your family," Bunton told the woman. "You violated the teachings of your church."

In other court action, Bunton sentenced 44-year-old Canuto Arellano of Midland to three years in prison for dealing in cocaine.

The judge also set a Sept. 8 sentencing for 46-year-old James Paul Nichols, who admitted to making false financial statements in applying for a $20,000 loan from United Bank of Midland in 1985.

In her appearance before the judge, Mrs. Martinez said she had "no excuse" for taking the $140,000 over a two-year period beginning in January 1987.

"I know it was wrong," she said. "At the time, I was thinking of my family...I'm sorry."

Of the $140,000 embezzled, $24,000 was recovered in Mrs. Martinez's house by FBI Special Agent Mary S. Carter of Midland, court records showed.

Her defense attorney, Tom Morgan of Midland, pleaded for a light sentence — preferably probation. "She will certainly abide by every condition of probation beautifully," he said.

Morgan, who characterized Mrs. Martinez as "humble," "honest," "very remorseful" and as bearing a "contrite heart," said that she had "struggled with poverty" ever since her father abandoned her family many years ago.

"Her motive (for embezzling) was to break the poverty cycle," Morgan said.

The $140,000 was verified as missing following an audit in April 1989 after Mrs. Martinez began a six-week medical leave.

In another case, Bunton sentenced Canuto Arellano to three years in prison for dealing in cocaine.

"I know I broke the law," Arellano told the judge. "I did it to help my sister-in-law. I didn't get any money out of that."

His friend and defense attorney, Odessa lawyer Tony Chavez, told the judge that what "we have here is a sad situation," that what his friend did was "wrong," and "it was a stupid thing."

Even so, Arellano has "an unblemished record," said Chavez, who argued for probation for Arellano. "I don't think anything would be served by warehousing Mr. Arellano," he said. "I don't think society would be served by warehousing Mr. Arellano."

Nevertheless, Bunton ordered that Arellano be "warehoused" — imprisoned — for three years.

And the judge, prior to levying the sentence, said he was "impressed" by the positive letters from Arellano's family members and friends.

Bunton noted that Arellano brought the woes on himself by dealing in drugs and said that he doesn't "want to make them (Arellano's family members) suffer."

"Your family is admired and respected all over the country," Bunton said.

But, the judge told Arellano, "You were dealing in cocaine." And the judge said surely Arellano would not want drug dealers hanging around his daughters.

Convict says officers treated him as if he were 'slave'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A federal convict, who claimed that he was "verbally abused" and then beaten by two Odessa police officers in 1987 even though he was handcuffed, testified Tuesday that he was treated as if he were a "slave."

"If they are man enough," 39-year-old Charles Edward Curry testified in his civil-rights trial in federal court in Midland, "why don't they admit what they did was wrong."

The Odessa officers acted as if they were Ku Klux Klansmen in police uniforms, he said.

Curry, who currently is serving his second stint in federal prison, claimed that the officers abused him physically and mentally after they arrested him at the Alternative House II in Odessa on an arrest warrant for traffic violations, including speeding.

Curry was at the Alternative House, a halfway house for federal probationers and prospective parolees, to report to a U.S. Probation Officer when he was arrested on Sept. 3, 1987. At the time, he was on parole, since he had served prison time for mail fraud, and was under indictment for credit-card fraud.

Curry said he is asking the federal civil jury to award him $25,000 in "psychological damages" even though his initial lawsuit said he was seeking $275,000 in damages.

"It's not just the money," he said. The officers who "violated the law... should be punished. I have the same rights under the Constitution that everybody has."

U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton is presiding over the trial.

Curry, who was cross-examined by Odessa defense lawyer Jim O'Leary, testified that "maybe they (the officers) beat me up because I am gay. My sexual preferences are my own business," Curry said. But "I am not ashamed to admit it. Yes, I am gay."

O'Leary, who noted that Curry had been "arrested many times" in Midland and Odessa, said that Curry resisted arrest, kicked the officers, spat on them in his anger, and warned them: "'I have AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome), and I'm going to give it to both of you.'"

Curry claimed that he was not violent.

"There was blood all over me," he said. "I was bleeding."

Defendants named in the lawsuit are Odessa Police Chief Alan Stewart, and Randall Barrett and Robert Clanton, who in 1987 were the arresting officers.

"There is not one speck of violence on my record," Curry said. "Not one."

Suspects being sought in armed robberies

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Midland police are looking for suspects in a series of armed robberies that began late Tuesday and continued until early this morning. No one was injured in the incidents, and police said less than $450 cash was reported missing.

Three of the four robberies were believed committed by the same man, according to spokesman Cpl. Jim White.

The first reported robbery, at the Comfort Inn, 4720 W. Wall Ave., was believed to be an isolated incident. According to a clerk at the motel, two white men walked in about 10:45 p.m. and demanded money. Both were armed with a handgun, according to White.

The men were last seen walking west on the service road of U.S. Highway 80.

One suspect was described as bearded, in his 30s to early 40s, about 6 feet tall with a thin build. The second man was described as 19 to 20 years of age with long blond hair.

About $215 cash was reported missing from the Comfort Inn, according to a preliminary report.

At 3:17 a.m., the first of the robberies police believe are related was reported.

A man walked into the Kent Kwik convenience store, 2315 E. Front St., and showed the clerk what appeared to be some kind of gun wrapped in cloth. The man escaped with $30 cash, according to reports.

He was described as black, between 5 feet 7 and 5 feet 9 inches tall. He wore no shirt, and wore dark blue pants, police said.

At about 4:30 a.m., police were dispatched to the Town and Country convenience store at 3115 Garden City Highway. A clerk told officers a man walked into the store and showed what appeared to be a weapon wrapped in cloth.

The man escaped with about $60, police said.

His description matched that given in the Kent Kwik case, according to police.

Just before 6 a.m., the L & L service station was robbed. According to police, a man described only as black and thin made off with about $140 cash from the business, located at the intersection of Big Spring and Florida Avenue.

White said no suspects were in custody, but the investigation into the robberies was continuing.

Trust fund established for girl

From Staff Reports

A trust fund has been set up at a Midland bank to help pay expenses incurred since 2-year-old Haley Harvey fell into her swimming pool and nearly drowned.

The Haley Harvey trust has been established at Texas Commerce Bank in Midland, according to family friend Grace Talbott.

The little girl has been in a coma since the accident Memorial Day weekend. She is on partial life support in the pediatric intensive care unit of Lubbock General Hospital, Ms. Talbott said.

"The fund has been set up to help with medical expenses, mostly," she noted. "Also for the expense of the family, who has been up there with her. And also to help pay for the care for her when she gets home."

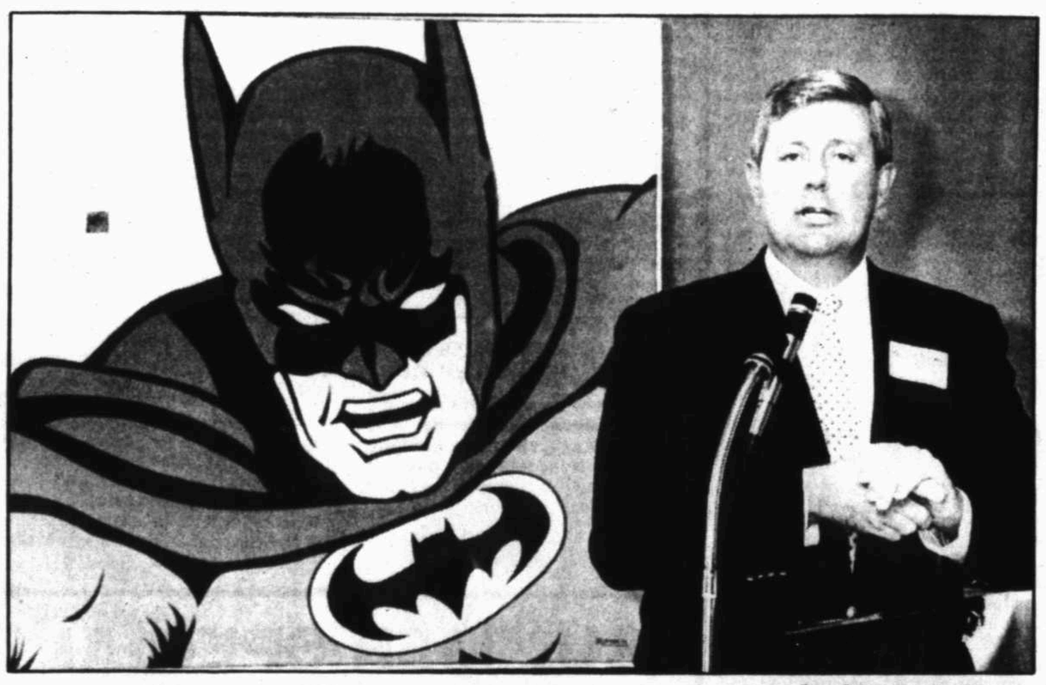

The Harvey family's insurance will not cover expenses that will be necessary when the girl gets home, Ms. Talbott noted.

The girl had surgery this week to repair holes in her lung. Doctors have been concerned about her fever, which has gone as high as 106, she said.

"If nothing major happens, they hope to have her home in two weeks," Ms. Talbott said.

The girl's parents are Bambi and James Harvey of Midland. They have three other children.

Donations should be sent to the Haley Harvey Trust Fund, Texas Commerce Bank, 400 W. Illinois Ave., Midland, Tx. 79701.

"The Caped Crusader" and his Midland counterpart, 1989 United Way Campaign Chairman Mike Cook, kicked off a campaign Tuesday that the chairman hopes will gather more dollars than ever before.

Corporate leaders hope UW campaign makes $2.26 million

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland's corporate leaders Tuesday helped kick off a 1989 United Way pilot campaign which they hope leads to a $2.26 million final tally next November.

The regular seven-week United Way campaign will commence Sept. 27 and end Nov. 7.

United Way Executive Director Jane Wolf believes the $2.26 million goal is within reach.

"This is a community of remarkably generous people who respond to the needs of their neighbors whether they know them by name or not," Ms. Wolf said today.

"We have a wonderful group of hundreds of volunteers who will be making contacts."

Officials believe the number of Midlanders who turn to the group for help will not diminish with the local and state economy still in a slump.

In 1988, 35,000 or about one in three residents utilized services provided by a United Way agency, said Mike Cook, campaign chairman and president of Magnatex Corp.

Tuesday's kickoff luncheon reflected the campaign's theme, "You are my hero." A Midland Hilton ballroom featured large posters of Batman and Superman and other childhood heroes.

A skit later featured Cook as Batman and Ms. Wolf as his sidekick, Robin.

Odessan jailed for allegedly stealing coins

From Staff Reports

An 18-year-old Odessa man who allegedly took $586.50 in coins in the burglary of the Olney Savings Association Building in downtown Odessa on Sunday is being held in the federal wing of the Midland City Jail at least until the outcome of a bond hearing next week in Midland.

James Allen White appeared Tuesday afternoon before part-time U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes, who will hold a preliminary examination for White at 9 a.m. Monday.

Sykes appointed lawyer David Greenhaw to represent White in the hearing.

"It's difficult for me to decide what to do with you," Sykes told White, who appeared in court in a white jumpsuit and a burr haircut.

Oklahoma man no longer suspect in killing spree

PAMPA (AP) — A 37-year-old man once considered responsible for an interstate killing spree has been eliminated as a suspect in all of the slayings.

Prosecutors here recalled a murder warrant for Michael Frank Greene, of Inola, Okla., after determining he wasn't in Pampa July 20 when a man was slain at a photo processing shop.

Acting Pampa Police Chief Ken Hall said his department has proof that Greene was in Wichita Falls the day Edley Perry Spurrier was killed.

Greene's never-served murder warrant out of Gray County was recalled Monday by District Attorney Harold Comer.

The warrant was the last felony charge pending against Greene and the focus of all the murders for which he was accused have switched to another man.

Senator urges restrictions on lobbyists

AUSTIN (AP) — A state senator who believes lobbying problems in Texas are getting worse says tighter restrictions are needed on lobbyists.

Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville, said the $1.86 million lobbyists spent on lawmakers during this year's regular legislative session was "an obscene amount of money" and a clear signal that it's time for change.

Edwards said he often found cases this year "where legislators were saying, 'I can't vote for strong utility regulations, I can't vote for bills to protect senior citizens from insurance abuse, because the lobbyist is a friend of mine.'

"I've been around this process seven years. I understand that lobbyists are friends of legislators. But I don't think it's ever gotten as blatant as it has this session," Edwards said.

According to reports filed with the secretary of state, lobbyists spent more than $1.86 million on entertainment and gifts for lawmakers during the 140-day legislative session, which ended May 29.

Lobbyists wined and dined lawmakers, took them to Mexico, and gave them gifts such as ski vacations, hunting trips, fishing excursions and golf games at exclusive private clubs.

Edwards calculated that the $1.86 million spent was enough to purchase 62,000 games of golf, 2,066 weekend trips to Acapulco, or 5,120 martinis a day.

"The cumulative effect of all these freebies is to compromise the integrity of the Texas Legislature. This should be the state Capitol, not the entertainment capital of Texas," said Edwards, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor.

The senator predicted rejection by voters in November of a proposed 300 percent legislator pay raise unless lawmakers move quickly to squelch lobbyist largesse.

"The legislative pay raise is absolutely dead in the water until we show we're willing to clean our own house," he said.

Edwards urged Gov. Bill Clements to add lobby reform to the agenda of this autumn's planned special session. Edwards suggested five changes in current lobbying laws, which he described as "absolutely a joke." His proposals:

- Require full disclosure of all spending over $25 by both the lobbyist who pays and the lawmaker who takes.
- Ban pleasure junkets, such as trips lawmakers took to Mexico, a Utah ski resort and a Las Vegas, Nev., boxing match.
- Expand disclosure requirements to all statewide elected officials and top state employees, such as agency administrators and a governor's aides.
- Fund the currently budgetless Texas Ethics Commission so it can enforce lobbyist regulations.
- Strip a lobbyist of his right to lobby after repeatedly violating the rules.

A full disclosure of gift giving would stop much of the excess, Edwards predicted, because lawmakers are concerned about public opinion.

"Realistically, full disclosure will stop the extravagances dead in their tracks. Legislators aren't going to want to go on luxurious trips when they know the public and their voters are going to find out about it in (news) reports," he said.

Public opposes plan to detonate explosives

Hearst News Service

DEL RIO — A Defense Department plan to detonate 300 tons of high explosives in an underground test has stirred strong public opposition in this south Texas community.

In less than an hour Tuesday night, city officials and citizens collected nearly 2,000 signatures against the proposal.

"We've had a fantastic response," Mayor Alfredo Gutierrez said as the city launched the petition drive.

Gutierrez said people from all over the area, even from Acuna, a Mexican town just across the border, joined in opposition to the planned explosion. "They're all worried," the mayor said.

So far, the Defense Department has said little about its plans.

The Defense Nuclear Agency plans to detonate the explosives 400 feet below the ground's surface to measure the impact on underground structures that would be built 200 feet further down.

The test is designed to simulate part of the impact of a nuclear weapons strike on underground defense facilities.

Gutierrez said Del Rio and area residents are concerned about possible effects from the proposed test, scheduled to take place on a ranch near Devil's River just north of the city.

"We're concerned that the blast will damage our water supply and the lake," he said. "They don't have any tests to show that they won't be hurt. We've asked a lot of questions that they (federal officials) don't have answers for. We're worried about that."

The mayor said the city's federal and state representatives are working with residents in protesting the plan. He also said the city was concerned about the lack of information from U.S. officials.

"They (federal officials) came in July 11, just to tell us, not to ask, not a public hearing, just to tell us that they were in the process of doing this," Gutierrez said.

White currently is under another criminal charge.

Apparently by chance, Odessa police discovered White while investigating a fire in a Westgate Motel room, where the bed was on fire and where a "large amount" of coins were found.

According to a complaint signed by FBI Special Agent Tom Farris, a latent palm print found on a water-heater pipe in the Olney Savings Building matches White's palm print. Additionally, an athletic-shoe imprint found at Olney Savings is similar in markings to the soles of a pair of athletic shoes found at White's mother's house in Odessa, the complaint said.

At the time of White's arrest, he had been bailed out of jail for the misdemeanor theft of copper wire.

Users of cocaine can end up as "coke-heads just to support a filthy, unhealthy habit," Bunton said.

"I don't care if your motives were 'good,'" in trying to help a relative in financial distress by raising money through illicit drug sales, Bunton said.

Many people get in financial distress "all the time," Bunton noted, and "most don't get involved in trafficking drugs" to raise money, "and that's what you were doing. The means don't justify the end."

Baptist church to host meeting

From Staff Reports

The Midland Primitive Baptist Church, 411 W. Shandon, which sponsors the "Redeeming Love" broadcast heard each Sunday morning 9:30-10 a.m., will be the host for the 87th annual session of the West Providence Association meeting scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. Thursday.

Sixteen sermons will be delivered by ministers from various parts of the state and two ministers from Tennessee. The meeting will be moderated by the pastor of the local congregation, Elder J.E. Barrington.

Meals will be served beginning Thursday night.

The public is invited to attend all of these worship services and participate in the singing praying and preaching.

Aerostat launched on test flights

MARFA (AP) — An anti-drug smuggling balloon has been given test flights prior to being set up as part of a series of such balloons to be used to spot possible drug smugglers flying across the border from Mexico.

Officials of General Electric Co. said the Marfa Aerostat crew launched the huge helium-filled balloon several times to a height of about 50 feet Tuesday.

"All went well," said David Donaldson, operations manager for GE Southwest tethered aerostat system. "We achieved what we set out to do today."

After several test flights, the balloon again was attached to its moor after winds picked up late Tuesday morning.

The balloon now will be flown every day, weather permitting, so that the Marfa Aerostat crew can learn launch and recovery procedures, Donaldson said.

The crew also will be testing the balloon, tether and other equipment in the coming weeks.

The Federal Aviation Administration currently has authorized the balloon to fly up to a height of 5,000 feet during daylight, and Donaldson said the Marfa crew today may fly the balloon that high.

Donaldson said the Marfa GE Aerostat crew still is awaiting the arrival of the sophisticated look-down radar equipment that will be attached to the belly of the balloon.

The 595,000-cubic foot balloon and others like it along the U.S.-Mexico border, as well as smaller surveillance balloons based on ships in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean, are designed to detect low-flying aircraft suspected of smuggling drugs and contraband into the United States. When operational the balloon can fly to up to 12,000 feet.

Officials have said the project is expected to be in operation later this summer or early this fall.

Tape reveals banter of crew during take-off of Flight 1114

DALLAS (AP) — In the minutes before Delta Airlines Flight 1141 crashed on take-off last August, the crew joked that a plane wreck would one day expose their gleeful cockpit conversation to the public.

The tape made by the cockpit voice recorder was released under a judge's order Tuesday, revealing crew member's views on news coverage of other crashes, Jesse Jackson's politics and Marilyn Quayle's looks. The conversation involved the cabin crew and a flight attendant who was forbidden by law to be in the cabin while the plane was in motion.

Fourteen people were killed in the crash at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. More than 90 passengers survived.

At a hearing in November, National Transportation Safety Board investigators rigorously questioned the crew about the apparent idle nature of the conversation when they should have been going over preflight checklists.

District Judge Adolph Canales released the tape over the objections of a Delta lawyer who argued the recording should be made available only to parties in liability suits stemming from the crash of the Boeing 727.

The nearly 10 minutes of conversation, deemed "casual and non-duty related" and kept secret by the NTSB, was released at the request of WFAA-TV.

The only female voice on the recording was identified by a special court master as that of flight attendant Mary O'Neill, who survived the crash.

Since 1981, the Federal Aviation Administration has had a "sterile cockpit" rule that prohibits any flight crew conversation not related to the operation of the aircraft when the plane is taxiing, and when it is flying below 10,000 feet in an approach or departure. Flight attendants also are prohibited from entering the cockpit during those periods.

While they waited for takeoff, an unidentified crew member said, "We forgot to discuss about the dating habits of our flight attendants so we could get it on the recorder in case we crashed."

"Then the media would have some kind of a juicy tidbit," the crew member said.

That was a reference to Continental crew members who were said to have discussed a flight attendant's dating habits before their jet crashed on takeoff in Denver in 1987, killing 28 people.

Delta last week accepted responsibility for the crash and said its own investigation revealed the crew failed to set the wing flaps for takeoff. Delta also announced it had fired the flight's pilot, co-pilot and flight engineer.

Delta spokesman Bill Berry said Tuesday in Atlanta that Ms. O'Neill, who is on medical leave due to crash injuries, has not been disciplined.

Greene was arrested July 23 in Lawton, Okla., as a suspect in a multi-state spree killing and robbery spree that began with the July 19 slayings of two Garden City, Kan., convenience store clerks.

Authorities in Oklahoma accused Greene of killing an Ardmore, Okla., flower shop employee and shooting two other people on July 21. But those charges were dropped because of evidence showing Greene was in a hospital in Wichita Falls the day of the Oklahoma homicide.

Also, shortly after Greene's arrest, there was another, similar slaying in a Springer, N.M., convenience store.

Gregg Francis Braun, 28, of Garden City, Kan., has been accused of that crime and in the July 19 shooting deaths in Kansas of Barbara Kochendorfer, 27, and Mary Rains, 28.

Officials have said Braun also is under investigation in the shooting death of Spurrier at his Pampa business and the July 21 slaying of Gwen Miller in the Ardmore flower shop.

Braun was arraigned last week on an open charge of murder in the July 23 shooting death of Geraldine Valdez, 48, in Springer. He is being held in the Colfax County Jail in Raton, N.M., on $1 million bond.

A preliminary hearing for Braun was rescheduled Tuesday in Raton for Aug. 10.

UNITED

Cook believes it is heroes who help United Way meet its goal each year.

"They are throughout the entire organization. They come and they want to help," he said.

The 1989 goal matches the goal set by campaign executives last year, though efforts fell $11,000 short of the projections.

An analysis of 1988 donations reflects that 38.3 percent came from foundations and private citizens; 32.3 percent came from corporations and 29.4 percent came from employee gifts.

A cost breakdown for 1988-89 shows:

- 21.4 percent — family support and crisis intervention services;
- 19.6 percent — youth and character development servics;
- 18.1 percent — child care;
- 11.2 percent — health, education and rehabilitation;
- 10.4 percent — disaster relief and emergency assistance;
- 9.4 percent — administrative expenses;
- 5 percent — pledge loss reserve; and
- 4.9 percent — agency emergency reserve support.

Tuesday's luncheon was sponsored by Magnatex Corp, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, and Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

"Midland's needs have never been greater than they are today. We all must do the very best we can to get the United Way message to everyone and to ask that each of us be as generous as we can," Cook said.

The 18 organizations participating in the pilot campaign include: Cafe West, city of Midland, Compressor Systems Inc., Energas, First City Bank, Haliburton Geophysical Service, Lynch, Chappell & Alsup, Meridian Oil Inc., Midland Memorial Hospital, Midland Reporter-Telegram, Olney Savings, Oxy USA Inc., Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., Texas American Guaranty Bank, Texas Instruments, Times Mirror Cable Dimension Inc., United Bank and United Parcel Service.

Wright's lecture competes with juggler, magician

WASHINGTON (AP) — For Jim Wright, veteran speaker of the House, it was his debut as speaker — with a small "s."

Wright, who resigned from Congress two months ago under an ethics cloud, found himself sharing billing Tuesday night with a comic juggler, a magician, Jack Benny's daughter and a professional cat trainer.

Such are the perils for the Texas Democrat who, after a few weeks of rest from the trauma of his resignation, is setting out on the lecture trail.

Wright's first stop was the annual convention of the International Platform Association, an organization of program organizers and talent bookers who arrange speakers and entertainment for colleges, corporations and trade groups.

IPA officials describe their forum as similar to the National Basketball Association draft, where the best talent is shown off and shopped around. To an outside observer, it more resembles a meat market.

Speakers at the convention in a downtown Washington hotel all have the same idea, says IPA chairman Dan Tyler Moore.

"They have something to say, and they want to be paid a buck for saying it."

Wright's message was a simple one: the honor of politics as a profession, and of Congress, where he served for 34 years, in particular.

The 25-minute talk was punctuated with anecdotes about life on Capitol Hill, including Wright's account of his well-meaning attempt to help a would-be Texas bride get a 48-hour leave for her serviceman fiance so the two could be married.

He received a telegram of effusive thanks from the woman, and one from the groom that said: "Why don't you mind your own damn business?"

The IPA, after sitting through days of speeches and acts, is a tough audience.

Several of the professional critics said Wright needed to punch up his routine a bit, perhaps adopting a more controversial topic. Others said he was better than expected — for a politician.

"I think he'd be popular," said Fred Antil of Cornell University. "He's got insight into something we are all curious about. He had good emotion, use of quotations, range."

But Richard L. Mellott of Lorain County Community College near Cleveland, Ohio, said he'd be reluctant to book Wright because of the ethics controversy that forced him from office.

"He's going to be like Ollie North. He'll be big in the corporate world and the redneck world where they wave the American flag a lot," Mellot said.

Former Speaker of the House Jim Wright, who resigned his seat in Congress earlier this year, addressed the International Platform Association Tuesday in Washington. The IPA is an organization of program organizers and talent bookers.

Another veteran conventioneer said Wright will be "good for a few months because he's still sort of a hot item, but it won't take long for the star to fade."

Wright said his asking price will be $10,000 a speech, near the bottom of the range for top speakers these days, but five times the maximum he was allowed to accept for a speech while a member of Congress.

Former President Reagan is getting upwards of $50,000 per appearance, and North, convicted in the Iran-Contra scandal, is paid a reported $25,000 per speech.

Wright said his goal in starting a new career as a public speaker is "to help people understand Congress a little bit better and to awaken an interest in young people in public service."

"I'd like to overcome, to the degree possible, the cynicism that exists."

Wright resigned after the House ethics committee charged him with 69 ethics violations, including allegedly using bulk sales of his book to evade limits on outside income, and improperly taking gifts from a developer friend who had a direct interest in legislation. Wright contended he was innocent of the charges.

Mr. and Mrs. Lenard Bettis and their son Tommy, 7, take a few belongings and their two puppies from their flooded home in Gilcrest after hurricane Chantal hit landfall in nearby High Island. Bettis said they wouldn't be leaving except for the rising water.

A&M meteorology professor says hurricane's rain pattern unusual

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Hurricane Chantal was an oddball: Its heaviest rainfall fell on what is usually the drier side of a tropical cyclone.

Because tropical cyclones in the Northern Hemisphere rotate counterclockwise, when they reach land they usually sweep moisture-laden air into their northeastern quadrants. Heavy rainfall results, producing the wet side.

As the rain-producing clouds swirl around to the northwest, they gradually lose much of their moisture in the form of rainfall, thus producing a dry side to the west of the storm's center.

Steve Lyons, professor of meteorology at Texas A&M University, attributes Chantal's unusual rainfall pattern to a shift of cloud bands, Lyons said.

"As the hurricane came ashore, these bands that normally form on the north and east side may have briefly come around to the west side. If this had happened when the storm had been over water, a new formation of cloud bands would have developed on the east side and augmented rainfall there," he said.

For the Houston-Galveston area, Lyons said, there were three good things about Chantal:

It was weak, it moved fast and fairly consistently, but at the last minute made a slight but all-important change in course.

"The storm's strength was what we would call marginal or Category 1 (highest winds 75 to 95 miles per hour)," Lyons said.

Another aspect of Chantal also was unusual, Lyons said: Its forward speed increased as it neared land.

On Monday, as a tropical storm and later as a hurricane, Chantal moved toward the coast at about 8 miles per hour, not slow but not very fast either.

"Late Monday night, it started moving forward at about 12 to 15 knots. Almost twice as fast as before," Lyons said.

This unexpected acceleration compelled revision of earlier predictions that Chantal would come ashore late Tuesday afternoon or evening, he said.

"It was coming in almost twice as fast, so it moved in a lot earlier," Lyons said.

Lyons attributed the speed-up to the remarkable consistency of Chantal's route as it crossed the Gulf of Mexico to its landfall near High Island on Bolivar Peninsula.

Slow-moving storms and hurricanes are dangerous.

"When they slow, they can produce damaging storm tides. It's unusual for a July or August storm to speed up as it nears land. Usually that occurs in late September or October, when a different jet stream pattern develops," he said.

"We were fairly lucky," Lyons said.

Chantal had a short but interesting life, Lyons said. Had Chantal packed the punch of the mighty Hurricane Gilbert of 1988, he said, Tuesday's storm would have been a different story.

Resident says Chantal wasn't much of a storm

Hearst News Service

HIGH ISLAND — Storm-wise residents along Bolivar Peninsula here endured the 80 miles per hour gusts and spattering rain of Hurricane Chantal Tuesday with an air of nonchalance.

"As storms go, this wasn't much of anything," said Betty Barrow, a 28-year resident of High Island and clerk at a local convenience store.

When residents of this Galveston County coastal area went to bed Monday night, they were braced for a bad one. Weather reports predicted the hurricane would come ashore Tuesday at Port Arthur, arriving early afternoon, bringing up to 15 inches of rain, 10-foot storm tides and 100 miles per hour winds.

The day dawned with quite a different story. Residents awakened by the unmistakable sounds of a gulf storm about 3 a.m. discovered the hurricane was now coming straight at High Island, and would arrive about 8 a.m. But the 10-foot tides and torrential rains never materialized, and winds were highest at gusts of 80 miles per hour.

Damage to the peninsula was widespread, but mostly minor: a few tin roofs were crumpled, signs were blown over, power lines downed, limbs wrenched off trees and shingles blown off houses.

"It's bearable," said one woman, who left her home in the beachside community of nearby Gilchrist to ride out the storm in the High Island Middle School gym.

"It's about as mild as you can get," agreed Clyde Lyons, 59, who chose to stick out the storm in Gilchrist.

While the water cut off many residents from entering or leaving their homes, most of the houses were undamaged by the flood waters. Evacuations were limited to those who decided they didn't want to take the risk.

Some, like Lyndon Young, 45, and his family, made the decision about 2:30 a.m. Tuesday as the storm first began to hit the peninsula. Others, like Lenard Bettis, 29, and his family, waited until the rising East Bay waters began to threaten their homes. Bettis waded out of his neighborhood on the bay about 10 a.m., bringing with him his wife, his 7-year-old son and their two puppies.

"We wouldn't leave if it wasn't for the rising water," he said, as he struggled through the thigh-high flood with his son straddling his back. "You never know when it's going to stop."

Down the highway at Rollover Pass, other Gilchrist residents were celebrating the mildness of the hurricane at Tim's Snack Bar, more of a bar than a snack place on this occasion.

Owner Rita Williams opened the bar at 9 a.m. for peninsula residents who chose to ride out the storm. By 11 a.m., about 20 people were firmly settled in the bar, as many others came and went.

"We've got ourselves a hell of a hurricane party, but we don't have much of a hurricane," said Gilchrist resident Tim Taft, 45.

Two fishermen from the inland town of Winnie were unimpressed enough by Chantal to see it as nothing more than a great fishing opportunity. Robert Hoffpauir and John M. Smith had to struggle to stay on their feet and cast their rods into the rolling surf at Rollover Pass, but they were determined to fish out the storm.

"This is the best time to catch red fish," Smith said. "It's just a little too rough."

Not all the peninsula residents were so blithe about Chantal, however.

"It tore my roof off!" said David Charanza, who exaggerated a little. Charanza was sitting out Chantal in his home near Crystal Beach when the storm blew off part of his roof.

Shirley and Raymond Patterson, who own Ray's Electrical shop, in Crystal Beach, watched as Chantal blew away their large tin storage shed piece by piece.

"We didn't think it was going to be this bad," Mrs. Patterson said as she viewed the damage as the storm began abating about noon. "Our electricity is out. Our water is out. But I think the worst of it is over."

Bullock supports counting aliens in U.S. census

AUSTIN (AP) — State Comptroller Bob Bullock applauded the defeat Tuesday of an effort in the U.S. House to prevent the counting of undocumented immigrants in the 1990 census.

"Texas has an estimated 800,000 to 1.2 million undocumented immigrants, and if they were excluded from the census, we would lose at least one congressional district," Bullock said.

The House blocked an amendment by Rep. Tom Ridge, R-Pa., to exclude illegal aliens from the census. Ridge tried to add the ban to an appropriations bill.

"The Ridge amendment was simply an attempt to steal a congressional district from Texas," said Bullock.

House seats will be redistributed among the states on the basis of the census count.

Bullock sent letters to the Texas members of the House last week, urging them to oppose the Ridge amendment. His office said 24 of the 26 representatives from the state voted against Ridge, with the exceptions being Republicans Bill Archer and Richard Armey.

Doctors amazed with recovery of nun who was shot

HOUSTON (AP) — Doctors are amazed with the quick recovery of a 73-year-old American nun who was seriously wounded by a gunshot in the head six weeks ago during an apparent robbery attempt in El Salvador.

Sister Mary Stanislaus Mackey, a member of the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word, will be moved to a Houston convent this week to continue her recuperation, doctors at Houston's St. Joseph Hospital said Tuesday.

"I think the outcome approaches miracle stage when one considers she was shot in the head at close range with a large caliber handgun," said Dr. Rob Parrish, the nun's neurosurgeon.

"Sister Stan," as she is called, was working at an orphanage in El Salvador on June 21 when she was shot with a .38 caliber gun fired from a pickup truck as she rode in another vehicle with two other Roman Catholic nuns.

The bullet shattered her cheekbone. After initial treatment in San Salvador, she was flown to Houston, where her religious order is based.

Physicians in Houston performed a craniotomy June 26 to remove a bullet fragment that lodged in her brain and to relieve swelling in her brain.

A second operation was performed July 8 to reattach the retina in her left eye.

"There appears to have been some damage to her optic nerve and we're not sure how much sight she will recover in her left eye," Dr. James Baker said.

Sister Mackey, accompanied by a nurse and using a cane for support, read a brief prepared statement at a news conference Tuesday but declined to take questions.

"I want to thank everyone for their interest and their prayers," she said. "God has taken me completely into His hands, and I thank everybody who has played a part in my recovery. I especially appreciate the good work of my doctors, the nurses, priests, bishops and the sisters of the congregation."

Baker said he anticipated no long-term problems with motor functions although she had some problems with short-term memory.

One of several men in a pickup truck opened fire on a pickup carrying her and the two other nuns outside Zaragoza, a town 10 miles south of San Salvador. Sister Mackey worked at a Zaragoza home for about 200 orphans of the nine-year civil war between leftist guerrillas and the government.

Sister Mary Stanislaus Mackey

Sister Ann Mary Brangan, who was in the truck during the June 21st shooting, said the nuns were about three blocks from their convent when the incident occurred.

She speculated robbery was a motive, since the nuns had been at a bank, although they had no money with them.

"We work in a tense type of political situation down there," Sister Brangan, a Bay City native, said. "We knew of the possibility."

She said five or six men accused of the shooting were taken into custody within the past week, but she has been unable to identify them.

"Because it was such an instantaneous thing, none of us got a good look at who did it," she said.

Sister Mackey, a registered nurse, is a native of Ireland and a naturalized U.S. citizen. She had worked in Central America since 1963 and in El Salvador since 1983.

Cory Mueller, of Bellmead, was mauled by a 300-pound baby lion Monday. The 10-year-old boy was attacked as he walked by the yard of a neighbor, who kept the lion as a pet.

Boy mauled in head by baby lion

BELLMEAD (AP) — A baby lion mauled a 10-year-old boy, prompting city officials to consider enacting an exotic animal ordinance.

Cory Mueller received about 20 stitches for head and neck wounds after being bitten by the 300-pound lion Monday.

The lion, owned by Doris Heard, was being kept on a chain in the Mueller's backyard.

"He grabbed me and he pushed me down," Cory said. "Then he started biting me."

His father, Louis Mueller, said the yard is not fenced and neighborhood children often play with the lion, which is declawed and has had at least one fang removed.

"It's a baby lion," Mueller said. "People down there are used to playing with it. Older boys are used to playing with it."

But Mueller said the lion sometimes plays rough and he now believes large cats should not be kept within city limits.

Bellmead Mayor Sam Dunlap said the City Council will consider as early as next week an exotic animal ordinance, prohibiting residents from owning "vicious" animals.

"I don't know specifically if we'll identify lions per se. I hope it's descriptive enough to cover all situations," Dunlap said.

Many Texas cities, including nearby Waco, have ordinances banning residents from keeping exotic animals as pets.

Ms. Heard took the animal elsewhere after the incident.

Couple face charges in sexual assault of girl

TYLER (AP) — An East Texas man, who escaped from the Smith County Jail five years ago, and his wife have been returned to Tyler to face aggravated sexual assault charges after an Internal Revenue Service investigation led to their arrest in Arkansas.

Clyde Malone, 54, and his wife, Edna Malone, 52, were returned to the county jail Tuesday after waiving extradition from Arkansas on several charges, including aggravated sexual assault.

They were arrested in Arkadelphia, Ark., last week after an IRS investigation that followed a Dallas man's complaint that someone was working and using his Social Security number.

"We got a call from a gentleman in Texas saying someone was possibly using his name and it came back on his taxes and (the IRS) was going to sue him for a couple of thousand dollars," said Clark County Deputy Mike Jones.

Officers said Malone and his wife were charged in the sexual assault of a 13-year-old girl at the time Malone escaped Aug. 25, 1984.

Smith County District Attorney Jack Skeen said Mrs. Malone had been freed on $50,000 bond when her husband escaped, allegedly with her help.

The sexual assault charge was filed against the Malone after the girl told officers she was assaulted by Malone as she rode back from a trip to buy beer in Kilgore. Mrs. Malone was charged with aiding or assisting in the sexual assault.

Rains ahead in straw poll

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Secretary of State Jack Rains, now a Republican gubernatorial hopeful, was a happy camper after a straw poll taken at the 11th annual Camp Wannameetagop retreat.

The unscientific straw poll of GOP elected officials and party activists showed Rains receiving 14 votes, to lead the four-man pack of Republican gubernatorial contenders, Rains' campaign announced Tuesday.

Texas Railroad Commission chairman Kent Hance was second with 12 votes; businessman Clayton Williams was third with 4 votes; and businessman T. Boone Pickens received 2 votes. Two voted were undecided.

The poll, conducted by secret ballot, also asked the GOP insiders whom they considered the most likely 1990 Democratic Party nominee. Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox received 22 votes; Texas Treasurer Ann Richards, 8 votes and former Gov. Mark White, 4 votes.

The informal gathering took place at a retreat between Navasota and Brenham.

Texans found in wreck

COMSTOCK, Minn. (AP) — The bodies of two Texas residents were found Tuesday in the wreckage of a car accident that occurred at least a couple of days ago, authorities said.

A farmer working in the fields discovered the wreckage in a drainage ditch under a bridge on County Road 52 three miles east of Comstock in western Minnesota, Clay County sheriff's investigators said.

The wreck could not be easily seen from the road, the sheriff's department said. Authorities believe the accident occurred at least a couple of days ago, but within the past 72 hours.

One of the victims was identified as Jose Rodriguez, 42, of Mission, Texas. The name of the other victim, a 41-year-old also from Mission, was not released until relatives could be notified.

The sheriff's department said the car went off the road, fell off a small bridge, struck the bridge abutment and landed upside down in a drainage ditch.

New Polish prime minister pledges to include Solidarity

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Parliament today elected the interior minister, Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, as prime minister in a victory for the long-ruling Communist Party, whose power has been eroding.

In his acceptance speech, Kiszczak pledged to try to bring members of the Solidarity-led opposition into his new Cabinet. He asked Solidarity to reverse its position that it will not accept joint responsibility for governing Poland.

Although it has rejected joining a coalition government, Solidarity has not ruled out allowing members to serve in the Cabinet.

Kiszczak, the nation's top law enforcement officer, was elected by Parliament's lower house, the Sejm, by a vote of 237 to 173 with 10 abstentions. The required majority was 211 votes.

As interior minister, Kiszczak implemented the 1981 martial law crackdown that suppressed the free trade union movement, but he also helped initiate this year's campaign that made Solidarity legal again.

The vote for prime minister had been postponed Tuesday when some deputies in the communist-allied Peasant Party sought a government dominated by lawmakers of the Solidarity independent trade union.

But after urgent arm-twisting Tuesday night by their party leadership and Communist officials, most Peasant Party members ended up voting for Kiszczak, the handpicked candidate of Communist President Wojciech Jaruzelski.

"Looks like they were frightened," said Solidarity member Jan Litynski following the vote.

Solidarity's floor leader in the Sejm, Bronislaw Geremek, said in a speech before the vote that his group opposed Kiszczak's candidacy "because no personnel reshuffle within the present political arrangements, dictated by the monopoly of a single party, can solve the country's problems."

In reaching out to the opposition in his acceptance speech, Kiszczak said that "in forming the Cabinet on as broad a basis as possible, I will not give up efforts to attract to it representatives of opposition circles with a hope that in the future a grand coalition government will be possible."

"I opt for a government of the roundtable," he said in a reference to the government-opposition talks that led to Solidarity's legalization this year.

In his speech carried on Polish television, the new prime minister also promised "quick action" to deal with the country's economic problems.

After his election, Kiszczak asked for two weeks to assemble a Cabinet, which also must be approved by the Sejm. He said he wanted Deputy Prime Minister Ireneusz Sekula, who handled economic policy under the outgoing government, to perform the same function in his Cabinet.

Jan Bielecki, a Solidarity deputy from Gdansk, said Kiszczak's government could be one that "promotes a free market but retains a strong police."

The election completes a two-week reshuffle of the top Polish leadership.

Jaruzelski, for eight years the communist first secretary, assumed Poland's new strong presidency with control of the military and foreign relations July 19. Outgoing Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski succeeded him at the helm of the party Saturday. And now Kiszczak, a Jaruzelski loyalist with his own base in the army and defense ministries, has become head of government.

Before Kiszczak was elected, the Communists lost a key parliamentary vote for the first time in postwar Poland as Solidarity pushed through a resolution to investigate the outgoing government for economic misconduct.

Solidarity believes the outgoing government of Rakowski should be held accountable for the unraveling of the economy during its nine months.

Poland, convulsed by consumer shortages and triple-digit inflation, suffered further Tuesday when price controls were lifted on meat, sugar and other basic commodities. Prices rose 43 percent for most goods.

The Communist coalition holds a 299-161 majority in the Sejm, but the Communists have just 173 seats and they had not been sure they could count on deputies of the allied Peasant and Democratic parties, which used to obediently follow the Communists.

According to several deputies, the Peasant caucus leader, Aleksander Bentkowski, had proposed that they and Solidarity jointly form a government with a Solidarity prime minister.

"We have a general as president. Now they want a general as premier. And we know they want a Communist to be deputy premier," said one Peasant Party member on condition of anonymity. "What kind of new government is that supposed to be?"

Opposition lawmakers entered Parliament after June elections, the country's freest in four decades, ended the Communists' monopoly of legislative power.

Solidarity lawmakers vote against Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak for prime minister today in Warsaw, Poland. The Solidarity side lost and the longtime commander of the nation's police force was chosen to form the government.

Guerrillas hit army post in San Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas attacked an army post in the capital in a battle that forced thousands of residents to run for cover. At least two people were reported killed.

The guerrillas attacked at dusk Tuesday from their camps on the slopes of the San Salvador Volcano that looms over the city's northwest.

The battle lasted about two hours and one soldier and one civilian were reported killed. Two civilians and a soldier were wounded.

The battle kept thousands of residents of the San Ramon neighborhood huddled behind walls or vehicles. Automatic weapons' fire was heard from the northern neighborhoods of Zacamil and Mejicanos, but there was no immediate word on casualties from those zones.

It was the fifth time in eight months that the army post in San Ramon has been attacked. An estimated 200 rebels are camped on the volcano.

The battle lasted about two hours and one soldier and one civilian were reported killed. Two civilians and a soldier were wounded.

Sgt. Ventura Lopez, commander of the detachment of 10 soldiers at the post, said there were about 60 attackers who hurled TNT. About 100 army reinforcements later joined the battle.

Rebels of the leftist Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, fighting for 10 years to overthrow the U.S.-backed government, have stepped up attacks in the capital over the past 10 months after a three-year lull.

Five gunmen kill party leader in Guatemala

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Five gunmen dragged a leader of Guatemala's ruling Christian Democratic Party out of his home Tuesday and shot him dead, witnesses and officials said.

Police said no group claimed responsibility for killing Danilo Barillas Rodriguez and the motive was not clear. President Vinicio Cerezo, who went to the scene called his friend "a victim of democracy."

"I am deeply concerned. This is deplorable," Cerezo told reporters.

Cerezo took office in January 1986 for a five-year term as the first elected civilian president after 16 years of rightist military rule.

Leftist guerrillas have fought the government for four decades and right-wing death squads also have operated in Guatemala.

Barillas had been chairman of a Guatemala city council commission in charge of urban planning and development since 1987. He previously served as Guatemala's ambassador to Spain, general secretary of the Christian Democratic Party and member of the Chamber of Deputies.

Cerezo blamed "extremist groups" for the slaying and promised the killers would be found.

Witnesses said five armed men barged into Barillas' home and dragged him out. They said the five opened fire after he managed to slip away and started running, wounding him.

Barillas then tried to dive under a parked car, and one of the gunmen shot him dead. The gunmen then fled on foot, one of the witnesses said.

A police examiner at the scene said Barillas' body had at least 30 bullet wounds.

As Guatemala's ambassador to Madrid, Barillas participated in talks between leaders of the Revolutionary Nationalist Unity, a coalition of the four guerrilla groups, and a govefnment delegation.

The talks were to establish grounds for peace negotiations but did not progress, principally because the military insisted on complete surrender by the rebels.

Barillas' death comes amid mounting labor unrest and terrorist attacks. One person was killed and several were injured in half a dozen bomb explosions in the capital during the past two weeks.

Peruvian rebels blow up pylons, cutting power

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Leftist rebels blew up eight more power pylons, making a total of 30 destroyed since last week and further reducing service in Lima and other coastal and highland cities, electric company officials said Tuesday.

Last Wednesday rebels toppled 22 towers carrying electricity from Peru's main hydroelectric facility high in the Andes mountains to coastal cities, cutting power usage by 40 percent. The latest attacks occurred Monday night.

Jose Acevedo, spokesman for the state-owned ElectroPeru company, said 200 workers aided by air force helicopters and personnel were working to re-establish service.

Police reported Tuesday that six guerrillas were captured and 29 escaped during a planned attack Sunday on La Pampilla oil refinery 10 miles north of Lima. They said the rebels apparently planned to blow up oil tanks but security police spotted the guerrillas on a nearby hill and police and marines were sent in by helicopter.

After a brief gunfire exchange police seized six guerrillas and identified them as members of the Maoist Shining Path movement, officials reported.

The Shining Path has been waging an insurgency since 1980. The government says more than 15,000 people have perished in the fighting.

The pylon attacks are part of the rebels' strategy of isolating Lima from the rest of Peru. Guerrillas also have blown up railroad tracks and attacked highways and bridges between the capital and the agriculture and mining areas in the Andes mountains to the east.

Power rationing has caused shortages of perishable food, gasoline and potable water in Lima.

The Shining Path has been waging an insurgency since 1980. The government says more than 15,000 people have perished in the fighting.

Specialists will weigh damage in Yucatan fires

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Specialists will evaluate damage from jungle fires on the Yucatan Peninsula and help develop reforestation projects, the government says.

A joint statement from the agriculture and urban development and ecology departments said Tuesday the fires, in the northern part of Quintana Roo state, "are totally controlled."

Agricultural and cattle land, towns and tourist developments were not affected by the fires, it said.

The fires covered about 370,000 acres of jungle over a 70-mile stretch roughly paralleling the state's Caribbean coast, with the largest area in the northeastern part of the peninsula.

Specialists from England, the United States and Canada will help in developing short, medium and long-term projects to speed up natural regeneration of the forests, the statement said.

The evaluation commission will include biologists from the ecology department and universities and a representative of a Quintana Roo environmental group.

Although the fires began on the western edge of the city of Cancun, prevailing winds blew them toward the jungle and the city's resorts and beaches were not affected.

Has Ethiopian legend come to life?

Caucasian-looking pair claims to be lost children

By REID G. MILLER

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — It is an often-repeated tale in Addis Ababa: Two white children were kidnapped or abandoned 20 years ago, when the boy was about 5 years old and the girl but an infant, and raised in a tribal family.

The years have provided different variations on the story, and though many here know some version, there are no records to substantiate it.

Now, however, a brother and sister have stepped forward, claiming to be those lost children. They say they want to find their parents.

On June 23, a cable arrived at the State Department in Washington from the U.S. Embassy in Ethiopia's capitol. It began:

"On June 14, two Oromigna-speaking Caucasians visited (consular officer) Conoff claiming to be the long-rumored kidnapped Americans of 20 years ago."

"After I sent the cable, I called Washington to assure them I wasn't making this up on a slow day in Addis," said Carol L. Rose, who retired this week as the U.S. consul in Ethiopia. "I was afraid the desk officer wouldn't believe it. It's all just too fantastic."

Mrs. Rose's 2½-page cable told the story of Haile Mariam Gadessa and Tegest Gadessa as they recounted it through an embassy interpreter and later repeated it to The Associated Press.

Haile Mariam Gadessa, left, and his sister Tegest are believed to be two Caucasian youngsters kidnapped or abandoned in Ethiopia some 20 years ago and raised as natives in a tribal family, according to the U.S. Consulate in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

HAILE MARIAM, now 24 or 25, and Miss Tegest, about 20, speak haltingly and nervously about their story in the presence of what to them are strange, white foreigners.

What little they know was told them by the native couple who raised them. Haile Mariam has only the vaguest memory of those days, Miss Tegest none at all.

They tell of being left by their parents in the care of a housekeeper, a man of the Oromo tribe who took them to live with his relatives in a house of mud with a thatched roof.

Haile Mariam said he was raised as a herdsboy, keeping the family's cattle, sheep and goats, while Miss Tegest was given to another family as a maid.

His eyes downcast and haunted, Haile Mariam tells of frequent beatings by a foster father who never wanted them, of being taunted and abused by villagers who saw him and his sister as freaks.

His gnarled hands speak of a lifetime of hard work. He has never spent a day in a classroom. His sister has completed eight years of school.

They said they are not sure why they were left with the housekeeper, but Haile Mariam thinks their father became ill and was flown out of Ethiopia for treatment, accompanied by their mother.

They said the housekeeper took them to live with his sister and brother-in-law in Chabor-Gurage, a region about 50 miles west of Addis Ababa. Whether or not that was meant to be temporary, it became permanent after the housekeeper was bitten by a rabid dog and died.

"After he died, they (the foster parents) were afraid they would get in trouble (if they went to Ethiopian authorities)," Haile Mariam said.

"I've been hearing this legend almost from the day I arrived 22 months ago," said Mrs. Rose. "All of the embassy's Ethiopian employees know it."

SO, TOO, DO many other Ethiopians. Some speak of the children being taken "by a gang of Oromos." Others say the mother died of a stroke shortly after they were abducted and "the father has come back many times looking for them."

"The mystery is that we have no record of the parents asking the embassy for help in finding the children, and neither does anyone else," said Mrs. Rose.

The consulate checked its own records back more than 20 years and asked the State Department, the Defense Department, the Canadian and all European embassies to do the same. All came up blank.

"All we have is the legend," said Mrs. Rose. "No records, just the story."

But she has a theory.

"Back in the '60s, I was one of those backpacking around the world on 50 cents a day," she said. "If you got in trouble, the last place you went was to the U.S. Embassy."

Mrs. Rose referred to a time when many Americans did not trust their own government — the days of assassinations, the Vietnam War and turmoil in the streets.

If the parents were civilians who chose not to seek help from the U.S. Embassy, why didn't they go to local authorities for assistance?

The children disappeared in the last years of the long reign of Emperor Haile Selassie, when the U.S. community in Ethiopia numbered more than 20,000, many of them in the military.

In 1974, Ethiopia was convulsed by a bloody revolution that brought a Marxist government to power, and many records were lost or destroyed.

MRS. ROSE hired Abebe Worke, one of Ethiopia's most distinguished lawyers and a former member of the country's High Court, to investigate.

She also notified the Ethiopian Foreign Ministry, which turned the matter over to the Ministry of Internal Affairs. Neither Worke nor the ministry has turned up any trace of the parents.

A search of newspaper records by The Associated Press found no mention of the disappearance.

The absence of records suggests that the father was a military man who had the children with an Ethiopian woman, then abandoned her and them.

"Under those circumstances, in this society, the woman most certainly would have tried to place the children with relatives," said Worke. "The stigma of raising them alone would have been too great."

While Mrs. Rose admits that scenario is possible, she doesn't believe it. Her cable to the State Department said consular officials were convinced the two "are telling the truth as they know it. ... Their skin is scarred from sunburn and the scarring has caused some distortion of their facial features. They both have light brown eyes and curly light brown-dark blond hair."

Their skin is not brown or black, but bronze. Adds Gustavo Delgado, an embassy political officer: "I think they are as white as the porcelain on your kitchen sink."

With no record of their birth or nationality, there is little that Mrs. Rose and the U.S. government can do for Haile Mariam and Tegest.

As the search continues for their parents, they live together in a mud hut in the village of Sebeta, about 25 miles from Addis Ababa.

There, Miss Tegest cares for her 3-year-old son, Astoy, born out of wedlock, while Haile Mariam supports them with odd jobs, earning about 15 Ethiopian birr a month, the equivalent of $8.

And they recall the distant past.

"I have a memory, it is almost like a dream, very indistinct," Haile Mariam says. "It is of my mother. She is very tall and white. And we lived in a house made of bricks."

Cruise missiles leave Common, but protesters stay

GREENHAM COMMON, England (AP) — The first cruise missiles have been removed from Greenham Common but the women who made the base a synonym for protest say they aren't going anywhere.

"Just because the Americans are moving out a measly 16 missiles everyone expects us to go away," Catrina Howse, who had been involved in the protests for seven years, said Tuesday.

"We are here to stay. This is nothing more than a military manipulation exercise. We've nothing to celebrate until the entire base is shut and restored as common land."

A U.S. Air Force transport plane flew out the first group of the 96 missiles at Greenham Common, 50 miles west of London.

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, said 16 missiles were removed Tuesday but the Air Force refused to disclose a number.

The missiles are to be destroyed at Davis-Monthan Air Force Base in Arizona, the Air Force said.

All the missiles are to be removed by 1991 under the U.S.-Soviet intermediate weapons arms control treaty signed in 1987.

Anti-nuclear campaigners established a peace camp outside the base in 1981, but the protests gained prominence after the deployment of the cruise missiles on Nov. 14, 1983.

At the height of the protests, 35,000 women encircled the base.

Tuesday, about a hundred women appeared around the base, and a few climbed over the barbed-wire atop the base's fences before being rounded up by military police.

"Greenham will remain a focus of non-violence. We are not impressed with this publicity gimmick. As long as military weapons are in this country we will be here," said Elizabeth Junor.

"It is a victory for the women at the camp who have stayed here year in and year out and kept the issue in the public light," said Ann Harris.

One woman, Stephanie Johnson, had come to the base hoping to say goodbye to more than the missiles.

"I'll be glad to see the back of them and those bloody women," she said.

WTexans lead North to victory

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

IRVING — Forget that song that proclaims "The South's Gonna Do it Again." Yeah, you can just set that one aside for another year.

All the South did Tuesday night was roll over and play dead in the 57th Annual Whataburger All-Star football game at Texas Stadium.

And the reason the underdog North beat the South, 29-20, was largely due to the West. Understand?

Midland Lee head coach Earl Miller, former Rebel Quincy White, Kermit's Billy Ray Thompson, Greenwood's Randy Donnell and, yes, even Rankin's little Doug Braden all played key roles in the North's rather decisive win to bring to a climax the week's festivities at the annual high school coaching school.

Andrews' defensive end Ronnie Seals was also instrumental in the win, providing several key tackles and a crucial quarterback sack late in the game.

And it doesn't look like it'll be anytime soon that the boys in the bigger schools in the humid parts of the state will forget about West Texans.

All week long, coaches and members of the North team had been reading and hearing about how they didn't have a chance against the massive South squad.

But on Tuesday, if someone would've given the North boys copies of recent newspapers, they'd have been more than happy to wave them in the collective red face of the media.

And it was the wishbone — the one designed by Miller — that proved to be one of the key tactics for the North in the game. The other motivating factor for the underdogs was defense.

"The difference," Miller said, "was our defense. We just played excellent defense. And it's a credit to the coaches in this area, because all of the linebackers are from the (Dallas) area. Most of the secondary is from the Dallas area. The two defensive ends are from West Texas. The defense for us was a dominating factor because the South didn't move the ball with any sort of consistency."

Both teams had a horrible first half. The North racked up 73 total yards in the first two quarters while the South had just 126. The quarterbacks for both sides were a combined 4-for-19 with two interceptions.

After the South scored on a 14 yard pass from Tremain Lewis to offensive MVP Nati Valdez, the score remained at 7-0 until the second quarter.

And it was in the second when Miller brought in the wishbone. And with that 'bone, he sent in Quincy White, a powerful fullback who barreled his way through South defenders whenever he was given the ball.

But it was Kermit's Billy Ray Thompson, not White, who first put points on the board for the North. Thompson took a pitch up the middle from Greenwood's Donnell for a one-yard plunge. An extra point by Olney's Greg Holden knotted things at seven.

Less than three minutes later, after Quanah's Setric Dickens intercepted a Marvin Callies pass, the North found itself 17 yards away from the end zone once again.

White took a Donnell handoff up the middle from one yard out to put the North up 14-7 with 5:47 left in the half.

The South tied the game at 14-14 on a picture-perfect flea-flicker pass from Robbie Chisolm to Valdez. That, though, would be almost all of the offensive heroics for the South.

The North added another nine points in the third quarter on a Holden field goal and a one-yard pass from L.D. Bell quarterback Tommy Maddox to Lindale's Stephen Shipley.

After the North scored again, on a 19 yard run over left guard by Marshall's Odell Beckham, the South stood by stunned, staring at a scoreboard which told them they were down by the unheard of margin of 29-14.

With just 14 seconds left in the game, the South scored on a seven yard pass to draw to 29-20. A failed two-point conversion put the game out of reach.

As Miller noted, the North defense would not quit all night. Except for the final South drive — a 69-yarder — the South's possessions were painfully short, amounting to minus-6, 0, 5, 28, minus-5 and 1 yard.

White finished with 28 yards rushing — most, if not all — gained by barging through 300 pound linemen time and time again. His longest run of the night was a nine-yarder in the second quarter.

Donnell was impressive in his direction of the wishbone attack. Three of the five times the South scored were a result of Donnell-led drives.

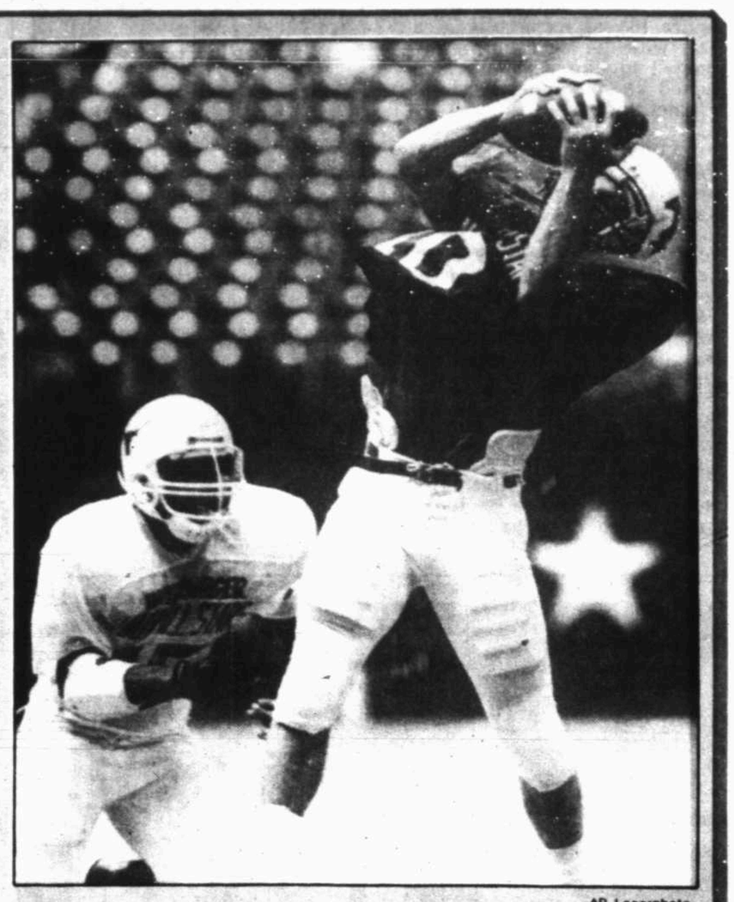

"?I think this was the best experience of my career," Donnell, a Texas A&I signee, said. "?Down here you get to play with some of the best athletes in the state. They're great guys."

Playing in Texas Stadium prompted Donnell to add "It's not Greenwood, that's for sure."

Rankin's Braden, the smallest man on either team, was in for only a handful of plays, but there's no doubt which play he'll remember most.

With 8:02 remaining in the third quarter, Donnell pitched left to Braden, who completed an off-balance halfback pass, 27

M-Angels rally to nip Missions

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO— Midland's Angels turned the tables on the San Antonio Missions, their latest tormentor, finally.

Midland, clinging precariously to a game and a half lead in the Texas League West, rallied for two runs in the ninth inning to pulled out a 6-5 victory before 2,403 fans at E.J. Keefe Field.

San Antonio had won the previous three games of the series with late inning rallies, but Tuesday was a different story.

Trailing 5-4 going into the ninth, Midland tied it when Ruben Amaro led off with his second home run since joining the Angels. Reed Peters walked and James Wray relieved Kevin Campbell.

Bob Rose dropped a sacrifice to advance Peters. Chris Cron was intentionally walked before Mark Howie singled to load the bases and set up the game-winning sacrifice fly to center by Otto Gonzales.

The Angels managed just seven hits, but three of them were home runs. Two came on successive pitches in the third when Peters hammered his fourth home of the season for two runs and then Rose lofted No. 10 over the right field wall to give Midland a 3-2 lead.

Peters' roundtrippere extended his consecutive game hitting streak to 11 games while Rose drove in his 64th run with his blow.

El Paso downs Wichita

Associated Press

El Paso defeated Wichita, 6-2, and Shreveport edged Arkansas, 7-4, in Texas League action, while Tulsa's scheduled game at Jackson was postponed because of rain.

Tim Torricelli drove in three runs to lead the El Paso Diablos to a 6-2 victory over the Wichita Wranglers.

Jim Hunter pitched a six-hitter for the Diablos.

Hunter struck out seven and didn't walk a batter in winning his third consecutive decision. He allowed only one earned run, a leadoff home run by Warren Newson in the sixth inning.

Ken Gearhart, Jeff Carter, Dee Dixon and John Skurla drove in runs to lead the Shreveport Captains to a 7-4 victory over the Arkansas Travelers.

The Captains scored five runs in the third inning.

Ray Lankford had a solo homer for Arkansas in the eighth inning.

Rod Beck, 4-2, was the winning pitcher. The loser was Dave Osteen, 11-5. Scott Gay picked up his first save.

Birds' lead fading

Bosox sweep Baltimore

Associated Press

Baltimore's lead is going, going ... almost gone.

Boston swept a day-night doubleheader 5-3 and 6-2 Tuesday, pulling to within a game of the Orioles, who have lost 13 of their last 14.

"We're not playing by instinct, we're overthinking," Baltimore manager Frank Robinson said. "We really need a couple of wins, then we'll start playing like we did before.

"The key to our problems is missed scoring opportunities. We're getting men on base but we're not driving them in. These things build up. It wouldn't do any good to lose my head and start hollering because everyone's trying."

Boston has gained eight games on the Orioles since July 19 despite going 8-6. By winning their fifth straight, the second-place Red Sox improved to 52-51, their first time over .500 since July 15.

Ellis Burks snapped a seventh-inning tie with an RBI double to lead Boston in the day game. Nick Esasky's three-run homer led Boston in the night game.

"We feel good, strong and aggressive," Esasky said. "It's been a long day but when you win two, it makes it all worth while."

Wes Gardner, 3-6, allowed five hits over 7 2-3 innings in the second game and Lee Smith, who struck out the side in the ninth to save the opener, finished with hitless relief for his 16th save.

Baltimore's Dave Johnson, 0-1, made his first major-league start and gave up eight hits and five runs in 6 2-3 innings.

Rob Murphy, 2-5, won the day game, striking out four in 1 2-3 innings. Pete Harnisch, 1-5, allowed eight hits and five runs in 6 1-3 innings and walked seven.

Royals 2, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — Bret Saberhagen, 11-5, pitched a three-hitter for his eighth victory in nine decisions, striking out six. He had lost five consecutive decisions against Toronto since beating the Blue Jays on July 11, 1987.

Brewers 4, Indians 2

MILWAUKEE — Robin Yount doubled in the tying and go-ahead runs in a three-run eighth and Jamie Navarro, 3-3, allowed two hits over eight innings.

Milwaukee, with 10 victories in its last 13 games, moved to within 2½ games of first-place Baltimore.

Twins 5, Yankees 4

NEW YORK — Randy Bush's two-run homer capped a three-run rally in the seventh inning and Minnesota won its first game without Frank Viola.

Shane Rawley, 5-8, remained undefeated in five career decisions against his former team. He won for just the second time in 13 starts since May 13, a span that included four losses.

Jeff Reardon, the fourth Minnesota pitcher, worked the ninth inning for his 18th save.

Walt Terrell got hit hard again in his second start since being traded from San Diego for Mike Pagliarulo. Terrell, 0-1, gave up five runs on nine hits in 6 1-3 innings.

Athletics 2, White Sox 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Curt Young won for the first time in seven starts as the Oakland moved back into first place in the American League West for the first time since July 6.

Felix Jose doubled in a run in the second and Carney Lansford singled in a run in the eighth.

Young, 3-8, combined on three relievers for a six-hitter. Greg Hibbard, 2-3, gave up eight hits in 7 2-3 innings.

Mariners 8, Angels 1

SEATTLE — Alvin Davis drove in four runs and took over the American League batting lead, going 3-for-4 to raise his average to .3411.

Kirby Puckett of the Minnesota Twins, who had been leading, went 0-for-4 to drop his average to .3406.

Mike Dunne scattered eight hits for his first complete game since June 11, 1988, when he was with Pittsburgh. He struck out eight, matching his career high, and walked none. Jim Abbott, 9-7, allowed six runs and eight hits in 3 1-3 innings.

Baines' trade paying big dividends

By HARRY ATKINS

DETROIT (AP) — Harold Baines isn't quite at home yet with the Texas Rangers. If he keeps on hitting game-winning homers, he'll be comfortable in no time.

Baines, acquired by Texas last Saturday from the Chicago White Sox, hit a two-run homer in the ninth inning Tuesday night to lead the Rangers past the Detroit Tigers 4-3.

He is 5-for-12 since the trade, which sent Fred Manrique to Texas with him for Scott Fletcher, Sammy Sosa and Wilson Alvarez.

"It's only comfortable when I get to the ballpark," Baines said. "When I get to the ballpark, I'm all right."

On Monday, Baines flew from Texas to Chicago at own expense, picked up his wife and baby, and brought them with him to Detroit.

"My family's very important to me," Baines said. "It's just comforting to have them with me. It's nice to see a familiar face when I get back to the hotel."

MANRIQUE had two hits and scored the Rangers first run.

"I had a lot of friends in Chicago," he said. "I loved that city. I've been traded four times in six years but it never hurt me like this time. I hope they learn to like us in Texas."

Harold Baines puts punch in Texas offense.

Texas trailed 3-2 in the ninth when Cecil Espy, after fouling off nine pitches, hit a one-out double off the right-field wall. Paul Gibson, 2-6, relieved Mike Henneman and retired Rafael Palmeiro, but Baines hit the next pitch into the second deck in right for his 14th homer.

"That was an outstanding at-bat for Espy," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said. "Those were great pitches, too, the split-finger fastball, all of them. That was as good an at-bat as he's had in his career."

Kevin Brown, 10-6, went eight innings, giving up five hits and striking out six. The Rangers are 6-0 against the Tigers, the first time they've won more than five games in a season against Detroit since 1980.

Jeff Russell worked the ninth for his 22nd save.

DETROIT had taken a 3-2 lead in the sixth on Lou Whitaker's 22nd home run, a team record for second basemen.

Alan Trammell singled in the sixth and Whitaker hit the first pitch off Brown into the second deck in right field. Whitaker had shared the club record with Dick McAuliffe, who hit 21 in 1967.

Texas took a 1-0 lead in the first. Manrique and Palmero singled, Baines grounded out and Ruben Sierra hit a sacrifice fly.

The Rangers made it 2-0 in the third when Palmeiro doubled and scored on Baines' single. Fred Lynn's sixth home run made it 2-1 in the Detroit fourth.

Although Viola just 29 and coming off the best season of his career, Twins GM Andy MacPhail believes the left-hander may be past his peak. "Anytime you deal a guy who has done all Frankie has done for us, it's tough. But the velocity of his fastball was diminishing. It seemed they were catching up with him." Twins officials said Viola's fastball was clocked between 88 and 90 mph last year but in the low 80s this season.

OH, NO!— Heavyweight champion Mike Tyson and Frank Bruno of Britain could fight again next year, this time in Britain. Tyson stopped Bruno in the fifth round of their bout last February in Las Vegas. A rematch would be conditional on Tyson still being champion and on Bruno coming through a warm-up fight against a top-class opponent.

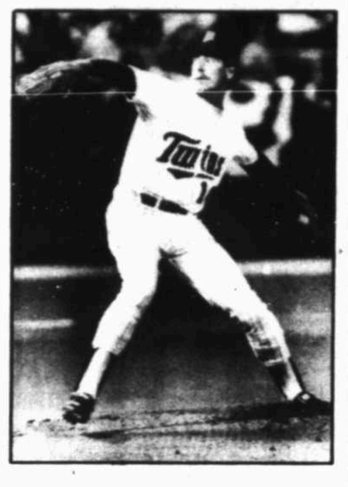

BASEBALL OBIT— Don Heffner, 78, Cincinnati manager in 1966, died Tuesday in Pasadena, Calif. Heffner began his big-league career in 1934 with the Yankees, where he spent four seasons before going to the St. Louis Browns in 1938. Heffner played with Athletics in 1943 and finished with the Detroit Tigers a year later, playing in 743 games and hit .241, getting 610 hits in 2,526 at-bats. He had six home runs and 248 RBIs.

AL PICKS YOUNT— Milwaukee's Robin Yount and Oakland's Mike Moore Athletics have been named the AL Player and Pitcher of the Month for July. Yount hit .395 in July and was among the league leaders with 24 RBIs, 22 runs scored and a .455 on-base percentage. Moore compiled a 5-0 record in July with a 2.30 ERA.

MOOKIE A JAY NOW— Toronto sent pitcher Jeff Musselman to the Mets for OF Mookie Wilson, 33. Wilson, 33, spent his entire 10-year major league career with the Mets. But he saw limited duty after New York obtained Juan Samuel from the Phillies June 18.

FAVORITE OUT— The filly Peace Corps became the favorite in the Hambletonian when Valley Victory was not entered in the presitigious race for 3-year-old trotters because of illness. "He's got some kind of virus," owner Arlene Traub said of Valley Victory, the colt who has won all seven of his starts this year. "We think it's an upper respiratory infection."

Peace Corps, unbeaten in five starts this year, has won 17 straight races and was made the 8-5 early favorite for the $1,131,000 million Hambletonian on Saturday at the Meadowlands, which drew an 11-horse field.

Rhoden notches first Astro win

CINCINNATI (AP) — Ken Caminiti had three hits, including a two-run single, and Rick Rhoden won his first game for Houston as the Astros defeated the Cincinnati Reds 5-0 Tuesday night.

Rhoden, 1-3 this season after coming in a trade from the New York Yanknees, scattered seven hits until he was relieved in the sixth inning by Larry Andersen, who pitched three perfect innings. Dave Smith pitched a hitless ninth.

Rhoden, who missed most of May, June and July with a shoulder injury, was making his second appearance since returning from the disabled list on July 25.

The Astros jumped on loser Tim Leary, 7-9, for two runs in the first inning on Caminiti's single. The Astros scored twice in the sixth inning on Billy Hatcher's single after Glenn Davis walked and Caminiti doubled.

Davis made it 5-0 with his 23rd homer, in the ninth.

Cubs 4, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Steve Wilson, making only his second start of the season, pitched five scoreless innings and Jerome Walton hit a two-run triple as the Chicago Cubs beat the Philadelphia Phillies.

Cubs manager Don Zimmer started Wilson, who has 33 relief appearances, to give his regular rotation an extra day's rest, and the rookie lefthander responded with his fourth victory without a loss. Mitch Williams got the last five outs for his 27th save.

Wilson, who allowed four hits, left with one on and no outs in the sixth and was charged with Philadelphia's only run when Von Hayes hit a sacrifice fly later in the inning.

Walton's triple came in the third inning. In the sixth, the Cubs scored two more runs on Damon Berryhill's sacrifice fly and Domingo Ramos' RBI single.

Mets 11, Cardinals 0

ST. LOUIS — Kevin McReynolds hit for the cycle and drove in a career-high six runs while Sid Fernandez pitched a four-hitter, leading the New York Mets over the St. Louis Cardinals and snapping a seven-game losing streak.

McReynolds became the first Met to get a homer, single, double and triple in a nine-inning game since June 25, 1976, when Mike Phillips did it against the Chicago Cubs. Keith Hernandez hit for a cycle for the Mets in a 19-inning game on July 4, 1985.

McReynolds capped his performance with a three-run triple in the ninth, and he scored his fourth run of the game on a groundout.

Fernandez, 9-3, walked two and struck out one in improving his record to 5-1 in his last eight starts.

McReynolds' two-run homer capped a three-run sixth inning against Cardinals starter Scott Terry, 7-10. Samuel and Howard Johnson finished with three hits in the Mets' 15-hit attack.

Expos 5, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH — Nelson Santovenia hit a two-run double in the 11th inning, his second game-winning hit in as many nights, lifting Montreal over Pittsburgh and extending the Pirates' losing streak to five games.

Doug Bair, 0-2, retired the first two Expos in the 11th before Hubie Brooks doubled down the left field line and was replaced by pinch-runner Otis Nixon.

Tim Wallach was intentionally walked before Santovenia doubled into the left field corner. Both Nixon and Wallach scored standing up when the ball kicked away from left fielder Barry Bonds.

Santovenia hit a two-run homer in the eighth Monday night to give the Expos a 4-2 victory.

Tim Burke, 6-1, the Expos' third pitcher, pitched two innings for the victory despite allowing Bobby Bonilla's 13th homer in the bottom of the 11th.

Giants 5, Dodgers 2

LOS ANGELES — Scott Garrelts recorded his third straight victory and the San Francisco Giants capitalized on a three-base throwing error by opposing pitcher Fernando Valenzuela to score a pair of unearned runs against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Garrelts, 9-3, allowed four hits in 5 1-3 innings, including Kal Daniels' fourth homer of the season, before leaving with stiffness in his right shoulder. The ex-reliever, unbeaten in four starts since coming off the disabled list July 16, won for only the second time in 18 career appearances at Dodger Stadium.

Jeff Brantley and Craig Lefferts held the Dodgers in check over the final 3 2-3 innings, with Lefferts notching his 19th save in 20 opportinities with three innings of three-hit ball.

Brett Butler, 2-for-31 before the sixth, hit a leadoff double to ignite a two-run inning as the Giants snapped a 1-1 tie against Valenzuela, 5-11.

Robby Thompson followed with a bunt in front of the mound, and Valenzuela had what appeared to be an easy play on Butler at third. But his throw eluded teammate Jeff Hamilton, allowing Butler to score the go-ahead run and sending Thompson to third. Kevin Mitchell, the major-league leader in runs batted in, hit a sacrifice fly for his 90th RBI and a 3-1 lead.

Padres 5, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Pinch-hitter Carmelo Martinez hit a bases-loaded triple with no outs in the 11th inning, giving the San Diego Padres a victory over the Atlanta Braves.

The Padres loaded the bases off Jim Acker, 0-5, when Chris James singled and raced to third on Mike Pagliarulo's second double of the game.

After Benito Santiago was walked intentionally, Martinez lined his triple to center past Oddibe McDowell, who failed to make a diving catch.

The victory went to Mark Grant, 5-1, who allowed one hit in two innings, and Mark Davis pitched the 11th for his 26th save.

Sprained ankle sidelines Shuffle

Associated Press

The Ickey Shuffle has been temporarily put on hold.

Ickey Woods, the Cincinnati running back who scored 15 touchdowns as a rookie last season and electrified crowds with his "Ickey Shuffle" end zone dance, sprained his ankle Tuesday and will probably miss several days of practice.

The 230-pound back, injured during training camp workouts at Wilmington College, was helped into a motorcart and driven off the field.

The Bengals are already without quarterback Boomer Esiason, who has tendinitis of the knee. Coach Sam Wyche said Esiason apparently triggered the condition during a weekend workout.

Bengals coaches are also keeping on an eye on the progress of backup center Paul Jetton. Bruce Kozerski, the starting center, is absent from camp because of a contract dispute.

"Paul is doing well," Wyche said. "He looks real good. We feel good about the way he's playing. As far as assignments, he doesn't miss them. So far, most of the work has been in drills, but his execution looks awfully good."

Atlanta Falcons

Atlanta linebacker Marcus Cotton, who has missed much of training camp with a swollen knee, attributed the problem to arthroscopic surgery he had in May.

Cotton, who had his right knee repaired last October, said he had undergone a second procedure on May 31 to repair damaged cartilage.

Chicago Bears

Defensive tackle William Perry ended his contract holdout in time to get into a fight.

Perry got into a scuffle with rookie fullback Bryan Bero during Chicago's "nutcracker" running and tackling drills. Bero apparently thought Perry hit him too hard and two other players had to break up their spirited confrontation.

No one was hurt, although the 235-pound Bero was outweighed in the matchup by about 100 pounds.

Denver Broncos

Arkansas safety Steve Atwater signed for a reported $2 million, then arrived at training camp.

The first-round choice signed a series of four one-year contracts, and received a signing bonus of $500,000.

The 20th player selected in the 1989 draft, Atwater was the first strong safety to be selected after the Broncos gave up the 13th position in exchange for a second-round selection.

Green Bay Packers

Injuries kept several players from practice, including starting defensive end Robert Brown (lower back) and reserve linebacker Scott Stephen (ankle). But tight end Ed West (knee) returned to workouts.

Meanwhile, the agents for holdouts Ken Ruettgers and Tim Harris say their clients are close to signing. Ruettgers is reportedly close to signing a one-year deal and is $25,000 apart in negotiations.

Harris is close to signing a two-year contract for approximately $1.2 million. The linebacker led the team in sacks last season.

New Orleans Saints

A sore Achilles tendon is costing two-time Pro Bowl pick Rueben Mayes some ground in his fight to open the season as New Orleans' starting running back ahead of Dalton Hilliard.

In practice, Mayes experienced a tearing pain in his right Achilles tendon and has been unable to work with the team. He flew back to New Orleans Tuesday for a second opinion and was due back in camp Tuesday night.

Hilliard and Mayes each started nine of last year's 16 games. Hilliard had 204 carries for 823 yards, and Mayes had 170 carries for 628, least of his three-year career.

New York Giants

Center-guard Frank Winters was scheduled to undergo exploratory surgery on his left knee Tuesday night. The former Cleveland Brown, who signed as a free agent this year, hurt the knee in a workout on Saturday.

The Giants held only one practice Tuesday because of the funeral of John Dziegiel, the team's head trainer emeritus. Dziegiel died Saturday at age 79. His association with the Giants lasted more than 40 years.

Phoenix Cardinals

Phoenix special teams captain Ron Wolfley says he may be sidelined up to five weeks with a sprained right arch.

Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Minor injuries have sidelined as many as 15 players a day for the past week, including several veterans competing for starting jobs and second-round draft pick Danny Peebles.

Even Italy looks better than Clippers to Ferry

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Danny Ferry, the second overall pick in the NBA draft, has added to the troubles of the Los Angeles Clippers by signing a contract with an Italian professional team.

Officials of Messaggero Rome of the Italian basketball league announced Tuesday that Ferry, a 6-foot-11 All-America forward from Duke, has signed a one-year contract with the team.

The signing was announced by Ferruzzi, the Italian agribusiness giant which owns Il Messaggero, the Rome daily newspaper which is the team's main sponsor.

Elgin Baylor, the Clippers general manager, said he knew Ferry had been talking with officials of the Italian team, but had no knowledge that he had signed. Baylor, through Paul Feinberg, the Clippers' assistant director of public relations, said that until he can confirm the signing, he would have no comment.

Ferry's agent, David Falk of Pro-Serv in Arlington, Va., a suburb of Washington, D.C., did not immediately return calls by The Associated Press.

However, Fred Roggin of KNBC-TV in Los Angeles reported that an official for the Clippers who asked not to be identified confirmed the club's knowledge of Ferry's signing with the Italian team.

"Falk said it was an opportunity that Ferry could not afford to pass up at this time," Roggin quoted the Clippers' official as saying. "The conversation with the Clippers was amicable and the parties will continue negotiating for the future. The Clippers plan on signing him next season."

Feinberg said it was his understanding that Baylor spoke with Falk a couple of hours before the story of the signing broke and that Falk did not tell Baylor that Ferry had signed the contract.

On draft day Ferry never seemed as enthusiastic as a player selected second overall should have.

"I had no idea coming into the draft where I'd go," said Ferry, who spoke of draft-day trades while being interviewed after his selection.

LA, Oakland tug at Raiders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles is still competing with Oakland in a tug-of-war over what city the Los Angeles Raiders will call home, said the president of the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission.

"We think it's a foot race and we hope we win," said Commission president Richard J. Riordan.

Published reports said the NFL team was holding talks with representatives of Alameda County, Oakland and the Oakland Coliseum. The Raiders have approved the "framework" of a proposal to move to Oakland, an Alameda County supervisor told the Oakland Tribune in a report published Sunday.

Riordan said Los Angeles officials have talked with the Raiders about putting $125 million in improvements into the Coliseum and paying the team as much as a $30 million "franchise fee."

Oakland's offer reportedly includes $50 million in stadium improvements and a $32 million franchise fee.

How To Be a Sportswriter fantasy camp broached

By LOWELL COHN
San Francisco Chronicle

I've been hard at work plugging a gaping hole in the fabric of society.

During the past month, I've put the necessary machinery in place for the first-ever, Lowell Cohn Fantasy Sportswriters Camp.

Monday morning armchair columnists no longer have to sit at the breakfast table muttering, "I could have said it better." Now you can have your own column in a Fantasy Camp Newspaper.

At the camp, you'll hobnob with top sportswriters from around the country.

They'll teach you how to dress like a sportswriter — sans-a-belt chinos and prestained plaid sports jacket.

Under the guidance of experts, you'll learn how to select a postgame bar on the road, even in places like Pittsburgh and Cincinnati.

In the 10-day fantasy experience, you'll be tutored in the all-important art of getting quotes from ballplayers who earn as much in one game as you do in a month and have as much affection for you as they do for a wart.

SEASONED veteran writers will demonstrate how to understand a player who intentionally mumbles into his locker, or insists on speaking with tobacco juice in his mouth.

You'll learn the most tactful ways to approach the pitcher who just gave up a grand slam in the bottom of the ninth, and you'll be instructed in evasive maneuvers for the times enraged players want to rearrange your face.

There will be a special class in the language of sportswriting.

This will include pop quizzes.

You'll learn 10 ways to say, "He really tattooed that mother."

You'll be guided in the proper use of such classic cliches as: He really comes to play. He carries the ball like a loaf of bread. He's a gamer. He uncorked a wild pitch. He gives 110 percent. They bit the bullet. He's a lunch-bucket player. The momentum's swinging their way.

And many, many more.

YOU'LL attend sessions in sportswriters' behavior where you'll learn all the important don'ts.

Never pat another sportswriter on the butt. Never say the word "chardonnay," or order colored drinks.

Never be seen attending the symphony. Never read a book without pictures on the team plane.

At night, you'll go out with the friendly sportswriter teachers and listen while they tell stories of Red Smith and Jimmy Cannon.

I've even included a session on how to cope with sportswriter groupies, in case there should ever be any.

THE CULMINATION of your fantasy experience occurs when you go to a real game and write an article on deadline after consuming four stale hot dogs and a quart of domestic beer.

You'll experience the thrill of waiting by the locker of a player who refuses to emerge from the shower, and you'll learn the art of taking notes when you're in a crush of reporters and can't raise your hands above your knees.

You'll receive valuable guidance from editors who gently take you through the editing process: "You call this writing/ Do it over."

Finally, you'll get to see your work in print and share Tums with your fellow campers.

I want to stifle the vicious rumors that I've become greedy like the players and am only putting on my fantasy camp for money.

It's a lie. When you enroll in my camp, you get the best accommodations Motel 6 has to offer.

In addition, you receive a T-shirt bearing my picture, an official reporter's notebook and a Bic pen.

You get all this for a mere $17,000. Cash in advance.

Next task for Rose, keeping job

By MURRAY CHASS
N.Y. Times News Service

While they appeal the decision that took the case out of the Cincinnati court where it began, Pete Rose's lawyers apparently also will have to go to court to try to extend protection for Rose's job as manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

Judge John Holschuh, in ruling on Monday that Rose's lawsuit against Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti belongs in U.S. District Court, extended to Aug. 14 the lawyers' agreement that protects Rose from suspension by Giamatti or dismissal by the Reds.

The judge scheduled a hearing for that day on Rose's motion for a preliminary injunction barring Giamatti from hearing baseball-betting charges against him.

ALTHOUGH they haven't said so publicly, Rose's lawyers plan to appeal Holschuh's ruling, and that move would postpone the Aug. 14 hearing.

An appeal in itself, though, would not automatically extend the agreement to leave Rose's job intact.

Rose's lawyers did not return telephone calls seeking comment on that aspect of the complex case; they were believed to be working on the appeal.

Louis Hoynes, Giamatti's trial lawyer, also was unavailable; he was traveling from Columbus, Ohio, to New York.

Lawrence Kamin, another member of Giamatti's legal team, when asked about the status of Rose's job protection, said, "Acceptance of the appeal doesn't have any bearing on the stipulation regarding restraints on the commissioner."

ROSE'S lawyers presumably could file a petition with Judge Holschuh seeking an extension of the one he already granted, or they could ask the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit for an order maintaining the status quo.

This could be in the form of a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction, which could give Rose one preliminary injunction while he seeks another.

If Rose's lawyers were not successful in obtaining an order protecting Rose's job past Aug. 14, Marge Schott, the owner of the Reds, presumably would be free to dismiss Rose based on the team's position in the National League West standing (next to last), and Giamatti presumably would be free to hold an immediate hearing or take immediate action pending the outcome of the court case.

STARS—

Three plays later, Holden kicked a 23 yard field goal to put the North up 23-14.

"I was off-balance when I threw it," Braden said. "Yesterday we put it in to practice and Coach Miller told me we may use it in the second half.

"Being here's great. It's a once in a lifetime experience. I was hoping I could play some more, but I'm satisfied.

Braden will attend Texas A&M in the fall but will not compete for a spot on the Aggies, wanting instead to concentrate on academics his freshman year. As a sophomore, Braden said, he hopes to land a spot on the 12th man kickoff squad.

Dallas Carter's Jessie Armstead, who led all tacklers with five, was named defensive MVP.

In the locker room afterward, Miller took on the role of a Dale Carnegie graduate, one-by-one congratulating each of his players.

"I told the kids at halftime that things are going to go our way. Everything that went wrong for us went wrong in the first half. The kids came out and took over really well."

And don't mention to Quincy White about the large, powerful South squad and how the North was expected to crawl away with its tail between its legs.

"All you heard all week was South this, South that. Nothing about the North. We wanted this one even more because we were underdogs."

And on Tuesday night, the underdogs were wagging their tails, not hiding them.

Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin yawns as he listens to leftist legislative criticism of the Israeli kidnapping of a Moslem cleric. Rabin defended the action as the only way to force pro-Iranian guerrillas to negotiate a prisoner swap.

Rabin renews offer, congratulates soldiers

JERUSALEM (AP) — Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin today defended Israel's kidnapping of a Lebanese Shiite clergyman, saying the Cabinet considered the dangers to foreign hostages in Lebanon before approving the abduction.

Speaking to parliament, Rabin also disclosed that the Cabinet had approved Friday's capture of Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid two months ago.

He said final approval was delayed until "every grain of possibility for dialogue" had been exhausted on winning the release of three Israeli soldiers believed held in Lebanon.

Rabin said Israel did not inform any other country of its intentions to abduct Obeid. "We didn't include any other country before the action and did not even offer information about it," he said.

The 12-member inner Cabinet of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir also met today to discuss the hostage crisis, but there was no word on the outcome of that meeting.

In his address to parliament, Rabin said Israel has rejected an International Red Cross appeal to visit Obeid, who was abducted along with two associates from the south Lebanon village of Jibchit.

He said Israel would agree only if the Red Cross was able to visit Israeli captives.

During his 22-minute address, Rabin read anew Israel's offer to swap Lebanese Shiite prisoners held by Israel and for 16 Western hostages and the three Israelis.

Israel is believed to be holding up to 60 Shiites in Israel, and allied militias in south Lebanon are believed to hold an additional 300.

Rabin defended the Obeid kidnap against criticism that Israel did not consider the dangers to foreign hostages.

"We took into consideration all the possible reactions," he said. "We saw them all, including the actions that already took place, and ones even worse."

A Shiite group calling itself the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth claimed it killed Marine Lt. Col. William Higgins on Monday after Israel refused to free Obeid. A second group said another American hostage, Joseph Cicippio, would be killed on Thursday unless the cleric is freed.

Israel maintains Higgins was killed several monhs ago.

Rabin said the Cabinet approved the abduction of Obeid, a spiritual leader of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah movement that is believed an umbrella group for hostage-takers in Lebanon, after extensive efforts to gain freedom for its captured soldiers. He did not detail those efforts.

"So the government of Israel decided to allow the army to apprehend the leader of the Hezbollah in south Lebanon so we would have in our hands valuable property for a prisoner swap," he said.

He described the abduction of Obeid, whom he accused of involvement in Higgins kidnap and the abduction of two Israeli soldiers, as "very successful."

"On this stage, I want to send my blessings to the chief of staff and the commanders of the army and the unit that carried it out on the way this mission was carried out," he said.

Rabin spoke in response to three motions of no confidence introduced by three small Arab-oriented parties. The motions in the 120-seat body were defeated by a 31-5 vote with one abstention and most of members absent.

Mainstream opposition groups refused to join in the attack on the government, saying lives were at stake and criticism should be postponed.

Is Rafsanjani 'supervising' captors?

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran's main opposition group claimed today that President-elect Hashemi Rafsanjani secretly sent his brother to Syria to "closely supervise" the killing of Lt. Col. William Higgins.

Rafsanjani has been quoted by the Soviet news agency Tass as denying in a meeting with visiting Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze that Iran had any "relation to the tragedy."

The Mujahedeen Khalq, or People's Holy Warriors, said in a statement that Rafsanjani exerts direct control of the radical Shiite Moslem groups believed to be holding Western hostages in Lebanon.

The group said Rafsanjani sent his brother, Mahmoud, "secretly to Syria a few days ago in order to closely supervise the terrorist acts of the regime's proxies in Lebanon, including the execution of the American hostage, Col. Higgins."

The opposition's statement said Mahmoud Rafsanjani heads the Iranian foreign ministry's "Lebanon Committee" set up to coordinate the kidnappers' activities.

The statement was sent by telex to The Associated Press from Baghdad, Iraq, where the group has its headquarters.

A Shiite Moslem group calling itself the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth claimed it hanged the U.S. Marine on Monday in retaliation for Israel's abduction Friday of a Shiite Moslem cleric in south Lebanon.

The group released a videotape that purported to show Higgins hanging from a makeshift gallows. There was no indication when it was filmed. Prior reports indicated that Higgins, who led a 75-member U.N. truce monitoring force in Lebanon, may have been killed by his captors last year.

Moslem fundamentalist groups loyal to Iran are believed to be holding most of the 16 western hostages in Lebanon.

They are thought to be linked to Hezbollah, or Party of God, an Iranian-backed Shiite Moslem group seeking to dominate the 1.2-million strong Shiite community in Lebanon, the country's largest sect.

The Mujahedeen statement alleged that several Hezbollah officials sent from Tehran to Lebanon were told to "extend their stay in Beirut for another two weeks on the orders of President-elect Rafsanjani in order to carry out the execution of Col. Higgins."

Hezbollah denies it has anything to do with hostage-taking, while Iran has sought to distance itself from the reported hanging and threats to execute other western hostages held in Lebanon.

Rafsanjani, who was voted president by a landslide majority in Friday's election, is believed anxious to erase Iran's image as a sponsor of international terrorism.

Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati said Monday before Higgins' death was announced the threat against him "has nothing to do with us ... However, we condemn any kind of kidnapping or death threat."

But on Sunday, Interior Minister Ali Akbar Mohtashemi warned that Islamic groups around the world would retaliate for the aduction of the cleric, Sheik Abdul-Karim Obeid.

The Mujahedeen statement said Iran used its embassy in Damascus, Syria, as a headquarters for Hezbollah activities in Lebanon. Syria is a close ally of Iran.

The statement said Iranian Revolutionary Guards based in Lebanon were responsible for "military training of terrorists, operational planning, interrogations and other intelligence operations by the regime's proxy terrorist groups in Lebanon."

About 4,000 Revolutionary Guards are currently believed based in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa valley in eastern Lebanon.

Khomeini's 1979 fundamentalist revolution in Iran helped spawn several Shiite terrorist groups in Lebanon. Revolutionary Guards, sent into Lebanon during the 1982 Israeli invasion, helped organize Hezbollah.

Freeing terrorist 'mistake,' experts say

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst News Service

PARIS — Israel's kidnapping of a leader of the Hezbollah terrorist group was a mistake, but American pressure to obtain his release in the wake of Lt. Col. William Higgins's apparent murder in Lebanon would only compound the error, in the judgment of several antiterrorist specialists here.

Roger Wybot, former chief of French counter-intelligence who has broad knowledge of Middle East terrorism, said freeing Sheikh Abdul Karim Obeid, in hopes of saving other western hostages, would be "more than a psychological triumph for the extremists."

He contended it would offer a fresh demonstration — the most significant since the Reagan adminstration's offer to Iran to trade arms for hostages — that hostage-taking is "good politics because of the leverage it creates with the West."

A new wave of kidnappings of westerners and attacks on western airliners would likely follow, he said.

Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin has offered to release Obeid and all other Shiite prisoners Israel holds in exchange for the hostages remaining in Lebanon.

Israeli diplomats here claim Obeid's kidnapping was designed to show those who organize terrorist actions from southern Lebanon that they can be made to pay a personal price.

But, according to Wybot, the Israelis' error was in not realizing Obeid had "no exchange value."

He explained, "For Islamic fanatics of the Hezbollah type, Obeid is already a martyr, a dead man for their purposes. There's no pressure inside the Hezbollah camp or from Tehran to get him released. Quite the reverse, since as an Israeli prisoner, he serves as justification for enlivening antiwestern passions."

But, to release him unconditionally — as Bush seems to have proposed — would only exacerbate the problem, Wybot reiterated, because the extremists would greet it as a western humiliation.

Wybot and some other authorities on terrorism contend that the latest hostage crisis stems from the failure by the United States to keep up its own pressure on the Middle East extremists and the governments supporting them, following the American air raid on Libya in April 1986.

Antiterrorist specialists here generally agree the attack on Libya temporarily inhibited the actions of Middle East terrorists.

But the experts note that much of the impact was subsequently lost, however, because of western failure to maintain the tough stance.

Selwyn Johnstone of the Research Foundation for the Study of Terrorism in Geneva has pointed out that each time a terrorist outrage has occurred, "the United States and other western governments have pledged to punish the guilty, as well as those behind them, but, since the Libyan raid, have mainly failed to do so."

The latest instance in which it now seems fairly obvious that the culprits will go unpunished is last December's blowing up of a Pan Am 747 jet liner over Scotland with the loss of 270 lives, although persistent reports suggest those responsible have been pinpointed.

In contrast to some western politicians, western anti-terrorist specialists tend to believe in the value of striking back hard when dealing with people who have the mind-set of members of Hezbollah and comparable Middle East extremists.

Realization that the Israelis were likelier to retaliate may have been one of the reasons the so-called "Organization for the Oppressed of the Earth" selected Higgins instead of one of the Irsaeli soldiers held captive in Lebanon as its victim, according to Glasgow University Professor Robert Harris, another authority on Middle East terrorism.

At least 10 hostages, counting Col. Higgins, are believed to have died in captivity.

Pope agrees to seek return of Higgins' body

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II has agreed to intervene to seek the return to the United States of the body of Marine Lt. Col. William Higgins, the Vatican said today.

The pope acted after a call Tuesday from President Bush, the Vatican said in a statement.

"His holiness expressed the willingness of the Holy See to find a solution to this problem," it said.

Shiite extremists claimed Monday to have hanged Higgins in retaliation for Israel's refusal to free a Shiite Moslem cleric kidnapped by Israeli commandos July 28. Israel accused the clergyman, Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, of involvement in terrorist activities, including Higgins' abduction Feb. 17, 1988.

John Paul, in the conversation with Bush, expressed hope that "the leaders and the parties involved find the roads to constructive accords in the higher interests of peace and full development of the people of the Middle East and the world," the statement said.

Vatican officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said diplomatic contacts for the release of Higgins' body were already under way using channels that the Vatican has kept open for months during the latest round of fighting in Lebanon.

John Paul has repeatedly appealed to all factions in the region to halt the fighting and to help rebuild the country.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the pope and Bush spoke for 12 minutes.

The Vatican previously helped in the return of the body of a U.S. pilot killed in a U.S. raid on Libya in 1986.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A realistic attitude is the key to success. Do whatever is necessary to keep family members united and pulling together. Pursue strictly private interests right after Labor Day. Resist people who promote risky financial ventures. Throwing money around is a sure way to get into trouble. An affectionate partner gives a relationship new energy. Do not mistake lust for love.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Tony Bennett, actor Martin Sheen, historian James MacGregor Burns, actress Dolores Del Rio, conductor Ray Bloch, former Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm, "Dennis the Menace" star Jay North, longtime Mississippi Sen. John Stennis, author Leon Uris.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your goals are a bit unclear. Visualize what you hope to be doing a year from now. Others hang on your every word at a school or political gathering. Stick to the facts.

TOO EASY TO MAKE

Both vulnerable. North deals.

	NORTH ♠ A J 6 ♡ K 8 7 ◇ K 8 5 ♣ Q 7 4 2
WEST ♠ Q 9 4 2 ♡ 6 ◇ J 10 9 3 ♣ A K 8 6		EAST ♠ K 10 8 7 ♡ 9 5 3 ◇ Q 4 ♣ J 10 9 3
	SOUTH ♠ 5 3 ♡ A Q J 10 4 2 ◇ A 7 6 2 ♣ 5

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣ How often do you see an infielder make a spectacular play and then, a few ground balls later, muff a simple effort? It was so easy that he took his eye off the ball. The same thing happens at the bridge table.

The bidding was routine, although we would be the first to admit a rebid of three no trump by South has certain appeal. At rubber bridge, however, the possession of 100 honors would sway us to four hearts.

On the opening lead of the king of clubs, East started an echo with the jack to show a four-card holding in the suit. West shifted to the jack of diamonds, and declarer wasted no time in going down. He won in hand, drew three rounds of trumps and then continued with a diamond to the king and another. When that suit split 4-2, the most likely distribution, declarer ended up losing two diamonds and a trick in each black suit—down one.

Had declarer paused to count the available tricks off the top, he would have realized there were only nine—six trumps, a spade and two diamonds. The simplest way to produce a 10th was to ruff a diamond in dummy.

Therefore, declarer could not afford to draw more than one round of trumps, and that with a high trump in hand. Next, South should cash the remaining high diamond and exit with a diamond. No matter what the defenders do, declarer can win any return, if necessary come to hand with a club ruff or a high trump, and then ruff a diamond with the king of trumps for the fulfilling trick.

Hank's daughter to perform

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Jett Williams will perform her own music with songs written by her father, country great Hank Williams, when she begins touring with his Drifting Cowboys band.

"It's meant to be, because a lot of strange things have happened," said Ms. Williams, who recently won a decision by the Alabama Supreme Court recognizing she had been cut out of her father's estate. "I know who I am now. I know that my father wanted me and that's taken me a whole lifetime."

She signed a deal Monday with Buddy Lee Attractions of Nashville to tour with the two Drifting Cowboys who still perform, fiddler Jerry Rivers and steel guitarist Don Helms. Tour arrangements were incomplete.

Ms. Williams, whose real name is Cathy Deupree Adkinson, was born in Montgomery five days after Williams' death on Jan. 1, 1953. Williams and her mother, Bobbie Jett, were not married, and the child was raised by Williams' mother, Lillian Stone.

After Mrs. Stone's death the girl was put up for adoption. The Alabama court decided she should share Williams' songwriting royalties with Hank Williams Jr.

Ms. Williams, who is married to Washington attorney Keith Adkinson, will also perform songs she has written about her own life, including "Conceived in Love."

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Conductor Zubin Mehta, annoyed by the noise of latecomers, dropped the baton to his knee a few measures into Beethoven's "Leonore" overture. Obediently, the Israeli Philharmonic stopped playing.

The Fine Arts Palace concert hall audience fell deadly silent, but not before chiding ushers and insulting the late arrivals, according to the government news agency Notimex.

Five minutes later, Mehta began the concert again.

The audience behaved for the rest of Monday's concert and Mehta apparently forgave them. After a standing ovation, he offered an encore, Brahms' Hungarian Dances.

Murphy

NEW YORK (AP) — Eddie Murphy thinks he got a raw deal from Paramount and a bum rap from Spike Lee.

"Given my personal circumstances and the success of my films, I've got the worst deal in Hollywood," Murphy said in the Aug. 8 issue of Rolling Stone magazine.

He was upset by Jack Nicholson's potential $60 million payday for "Batman," a payoff based on a percentage of the receipts and merchandising rather than the per-film deal that Murphy signed with Paramount Pictures.

"When I renegotiated my deal with Paramount a few years ago, it seemed great," said Murphy. "But nobody planned that my pictures would be as successful as they are. So now I've got a (lousy) deal, compared with what I could be making."

Murphy also said he was angered by fellow filmmaker Lee's charges that he has failed to use his power to help other blacks in Hollywood.

"I do have a social conscience, but I can't walk into a studio's front office and demand, 'Hire some black people here!' Spike gets overanxious playing that militant-brother role and occasionally says some stupid stuff," Murphy said.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Mike Rutherford says the music and message of his solo group, Mike and The Mechanics, is becoming more defined and is distinctly different from Genesis, the pop group he helped found.

"I feel that with each album I'm getting away from Genesis," said Rutherford. "There's a lot of influences that are coming through the Mechanics that haven't completely gotten out yet. We are always changing."

Although both groups have a Top 40 sound, Rutherford sees differences. "I think onstage we go a little more (rhythm and blues), and that's one of the things that takes us away from Genesis," he said.

He believes it is unfair to compare the 12-year-old Genesis and his veteran bandmates Phil Collins and Tony Banks to the 4-year-old Mechanics, but Rutherford said it is inevitable.

Despite the good fortune the Mechanics have experienced, the group still struggles while Genesis lives in the comfort that they have fans to buy their records and attend their concerts.

"On one hand I can fly around the world with Genesis, and with the Mechanics I can't make any mistakes," said Rutherford.

Hyman

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Torch singer Phyllis Hyman has taped a public service announcement about breast exams because of a friend's death from breast cancer and her sister's struggle with the disease.

Ms. Hyman, a Philadelphia native who still lives in the city, filmed the announcement Tuesday for Thomas Jefferson University Hospital and the Linda Creed Foundation.

Ms. Creed, who wrote Ms. Hyman's hit "Old Friend" as well as "The Greatest Love of All," died in 1986.

Ms. Hyman said her friendship with the songwriter and her sister's battle with breast cancer "gave me a lot of strength when I was asked to do this. I get breast exams every year, and I do self-exams. Not as often as I should, but I do them. It's an easy process."

Harrington

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Harrington, a political theorist and social reform activist who helped inspire the war on poverty, died Monday of cancer at 61.

His book, "The Other America," attracted national attention in the early 1960s. In all, he wrote 16 books on the problems of massive poverty in the midst of affluence and on the cultural stress associated with technological advance.

Harrington was a founder of the Democratic Socialists of America. He was secretary of the Socialist International committee, a chairman of the Socialist Party from 1968 to 1972 and of the Democratic Socialist Organizing Committee from 1973 to 1982. He was also a member of the Senior Seminar of the U.S. Department of State.

Harrington taught at the universities of Paris, Illinois, Michigan and California at Los Angeles as well as at Harvard University, the National War College, and Queens College of the City University of New York.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — George M. Ober, an Indianapolis attorney and founding member of the United States Auto Club, died Monday at 77.

A cause of death was not immediately available.

A former municipal court judge in Speedway, he was a charter member of USAC, a major sanctioning body for auto races, and served as its Midwest vice president for 10 years until 1965. He also was president of the organization's benevolent association until last year.

Administration warns of bailout bout

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The administration has warned that it might wage a fight over several provisions of the savings and loan bailout bill if agreement is not worked out with Congress on how to account for the cost of the rescue.

An administration official, who asked not to be identified, said Tueday there had been "discussions" between key members of Congress and Bush aides over a possible compromise on the $50 billion of spending that Democrats want to keep on the budget, but that Republicans, supporting the administration, want to keep it off the budget.

This official indicated that the administration would entertain a compromise, but so far, he said, there have been no serious negotiations.

Last week, Senate conferees sided with negotiators from the House and agreed to put the $50 billion out of the total cost of $166 billion on the budget. But a conviction is growing in Congress that the full Senate will refuse to go along.

In order to approve a waiver to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget-cutting law, the Senate needs 60 votes. But 41 Republican senators, led by Phil Gramm, R-Texas, have signed a letter vowing to oppose a budget waiver.

What is uncertain, however, is whether the 41 senators will in the 11th-hour continue to oppose the waiver. If indeed the Senate rejects the financing program, it throws the entire bill into limbo as the House and Senate will have to address this provision again.

What many in Congress fear, and what the administration is indeed threatening, is that any new negotiations would extend far beyond the budget issue and reopen issues already resolved by the conferees.

The House is likely to vote on the package Thursday morning and the Senate is expected to begin debate Thursday evening. Both chambers are scheduled to begin their August recess this weekend.

Any compromise that might be reached between the White House and congressional Democrats might be along the lines of one proposed by Rep. Chalmers Wylie, R-Ohio, who proposed to put half of the $50 billion on budget and the other half off.

The official added that if those negotiations break down, the White House might feel free to open negotiations on other parts of the bill that are particularly important to Democrats — including a number of social programs that provide subsidies for low-income home buyers.

The official said the administration was disturbed by a final provision giving nonprofit organizations first rights at buying certain properties owned by sick savings associations at below market rates. He added that administration officials were under the impression that an agreement had been struck to eliminate the below-market sales.

Another provision that the Admin istration might aim to strike from the bill, he said, would be a housing subsidy program introduced by the House Banking Committee chairman, Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas.

He said that while the administration assented to Gonzalez's wishes in the conference negotiations last week, the provision won by a two-vote margin when the full House con sidered the measure.

"It's things like this that we might want to open up again," he added. "So if there is going to be a fight, it might be a bigger fight than some are anticipating."

The statements Tuesday appear to mark an attempt by the administration to turn up the heat on members of Congress, indicating that they might jeopardize favorite provisions if they insist on an on-budget vote.

The administration may be counting on support in the Senate.

"I've said all along that the House on-budget plan might not get through the Senate, and I think there is more of a realization today that that will be the case," Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, said in an interview.

Terry Good, an audio-visual production technician for Video Air Time, views a commercial spot for a local company and prepares to dub the audio to it.

Midlanders introduce video ads

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

As Allen Frasier and Terry Mathis head for Las Vegas this week the pair of Midland entrepreneurs will be looking for "Lady Luck" to shine upon them — but not at the gaming tables.

The two will be in the "city of chance" to attend the Video Software Dealers Association convention and unveil a new concept in video advertising which the innovators hope will hit the franchising jackpot.

Frasier is president, and Mathis vice president, of Video Air Time Inc., a newly formed Midland company which places local ads at the beginning of movie videocassettes. The company hopes to sell the technology and concept as a franchise package for $25,000 per unit.

"So far as we know," said Frasier, "we are the only company in the U.S. doing this." It is a concept so new it has even caught the eye of the Wall Street Journal, which published a story on the business in today's issue.

Video Air Time has developed the technology to place a 60-second commercial at the beginning of a videotape, allowing the advertiser to reach its target market — whether it's an entire town or a neighborhood. Cost of an ad on a casette is $20 for 90 days, and local customers report satisfaction with the concept.

"We can fine tune targeting," Frasier points out, by using consumer information from video store computers.

Notes Mathis: "We can place ads for daycare centers or children's clothes on Walt Disney cassettes or ads for athletic wear on exercise tapes."

Among the local companies using this concept are Jumburrito, Dunlaps, Elmore Chrysler Dodge, Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems, and Fairmont Park Lanes. The Midland Angels have ads on Bull Durham and Eight Men Out cassettes. Video stores working with Video Air Time include Folger's and Encore Video.

The two men add that surveys indicate a viewer approval rating in the high 90s for the local commercials.

Although Frasier and Mathis say they've had a great deal of interest from potential franchisees, they've had to overcome a lot of hurdles to get Video Air Time going, such as movie studio resistance to placing ads on videocassettes.

Hollywood studios are angered because they get none of the local ad revenue sold on videos. Paramount which pioneered national ads on videos by putting a Pepsi ad in the movie "Top Gun" has been one of the most outspoken about Video Air Time, calling the practice of dubbing in local advertising illegal.

But Frasier claims that once the casette is sold to the video stores they are no longer owned by Hollywood, but become the property of local video stores to do as they please. He says the ads are spliced into the blank space before the movie and prove no copyright infringement, but movie studios charge individuals do not rent videos to watch commercials.

HOUSING

New home sales jump 5.5 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of new homes, propelled by falling mortgage rates, rose 5.5 percent in June, the third consecutive monthly increase, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said sales of new single-family homes rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 670,000 units in June as the housing industry continued to rebound from a sluggish period earlier in the year when sales fell to their lowest level since the 1981-82 recession.

Mortgage rates fell further in July, causing many economists to look for a climb in home sales and construction in the months ahead. In fact, many economists believe that a significant rebound in housing is needed to keep the country out of a recession.

In a second report showing a slight rebound, the Commerce Department said orders for manufactured goods edged up 0.4 percent in June following a steep 2.6 percent drop in May.

Fixed mortgage rates dipped last week to 9.81 percent, their lowest point since April 1987. Fixed-rate mortgages peaked in March at 11.22 percent, the same month that housing starts fell to an annual rate of 555,000 units, their most sluggish pace since December 1982.

The 5.5 percent rise in new home sales in June followed a 4.3 percent May advance and a 9.7 percent rise in April. Altogether, the three months of increases have driven home sales 20.7 percent above their March low.

The increase in sales has come despite the fact that home prices are up sharply. The median price of a new home jumped 8.3 percent in June to $129,900.

The average price of a new home rose as well, climbing 8.4 percent to $159,100. Housing analysts have blamed the increase on the fact that much of the market is now composed of the move-up buyer, who can afford a more expensive home. First-time buyers have been frozen out so far by the jump in mortgage rates.

The June increase in sales was powered by a 23.4 percent jump in sales in the West, which climbed to an annual rate of 232,000 units.

Sales in the Midwest were up as well but by a smaller 3.1 percent to an annual rate of 99,000 units. Sales in the South edged up 1.9 percent.

The increases were enough to offset a giant 18.2 percent drop in new home sales in the Northeast, whcih fell to an annual rate of 72,000 units.

Oil prices up 1 cent

From Staff Reports

Energy prices remained above the $18 per barrel mark this morning, rising only 1 cent above yesterday's close to rest at $18.04.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange Tuesday, energy futures prices eased as the hurricane threat to Gulf Coast oil and natural-gas operations lessened and traders turned their attention to weekly supply statistics.

West Texas Intermediate crude oil settled 19 cents to 29 cents lower with the contract for delivery in September at $18.03 a barrel; heating oil was .11 cent lower to .04 cent higher with September at 49.20 cents a gallon; unleaded gasoline was .80 cent to 1.27 cents lower with September at 51.43 cents a gallon.

Dollar steadies in light trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was steady at lower levels this morning in light European trading. Gold was steady.

"A lot of people are on holiday and there is little action," said one dealer in London.

In the currency markets, dealers expected no excitement until trading began in the United States.

"The dollar is being made out of New York, both politically and from the market," said one dealer in Frankfurt, West Germany.

Another dealer in West Germany said the dollar seemed to have found technical and psychological support at 1.85 marks, and said there could be a short-lived rebound.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell .45 yen to close at 136.20 yen. Later in London, the dollar traded at 136.30 yen.

The pound sterling traded at $1.6622 early today, up from $1.6550 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London today at $370.55 a troy ounce, up from $368.25 late Tuesday. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $369.90 an ounce.

The same price prevailed in Zurich, where trading was suspended Tuesday for a national holiday. Earlier in Hong Kong, gold rose 6 cents an ounce to close at $371.32.

Silver was trading in London at $5.25 a troy ounce, up from $5.23 an ounce late Tuesday.

Stocks start high, later retreat

NEW YORK (AP) — Buffeted by conflicting sentiments about the economy, stock prices finished lower Tuesday in active, choppy trading.

Wall Street started the day higher, adding to the strong gains of recent sessions, but later retreated.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 13.09 points in the first half-hour of trading, closed 19.54 points lower at 2,641.12.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 8 to 7 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 808 issues down, 729 up and 477 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board totaled 225.28 million shares, up sharply from 166.65 million in Monday's session.

The National Association of Purchasing Management said its index of the economy slumped to 46 percent in July, its lowest reading since an identical one in January 1983. Also pointing toward slow growth was a Commerce Department report on a decline in construction spending.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Corporate purchasing weakest in six years

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. corporate purchasing managers said their gauge of industrial health fell to the weakest point since the economic expansion began more than 6½ years ago, a report that fanned recession fears.

The Purchasing Managers' Index, a widely watched barometer of the economy's direction, plunged to 46 percent in July from 48.8 percent in June, the third straight monthly decline, the group said Tuesday.

Housing slump forces spending down

WASHINGTON (AP) — A persistent housing slump helped push construction spending in June to the lowest level in eight months, the government said.

The Commerce Department said Tuesday that residential, non-residential and government construction activity fell 0.8 percent in June to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $414.7 billion, the lowest level since October. The decline followed a 0.6 percent gain in May and a 0.8 percent drop in April.

Attorney wants men 'stripped of wealth'

NEW YORK (AP) — Six white-collar defendants convicted of racketeering in a landmark securities fraud case should be stripped of their "tainted wealth," a prosecutor told a jury deciding how much money they must forfeit.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Hansen said Tuesday the defendants should relinquish salaries and other interests that could total more than $21 million.

Five of the defendants were partners in Princeton Newport Partners, a now-defunct securities firm based in Princeton, N.J., and Newport Beach, Calif. The sixth defendant was an ex-trader at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

House increases national debt limit

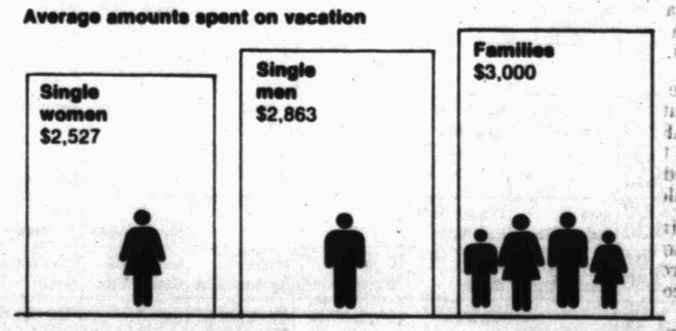

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted to increase the national debt limit temporarily by $70 billion so the Treasury won't go into default while Congress is on its summer recess.

The bill, approved 231-185 Tuesday and sent to the Senate, adds to the debt ceiling of $2.8 trillion only through Oct. 31.

Retirement programs best investment secret

By WILLIAM E. DONOGHUE

The Donoghue Strategies

The greatest investment secret in America is right beneath your nose: the self-directed, tax-sheltered retirement programs available to you and your employer. These investment tools can take your annual contribution of a couple of thousand dollars and multiply it a hundredfold.

Uncle Sam offers a great variety of tax-sheltered retirement programs. Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) are for everyone; 401(k) savings programs require employer sponsorship; Keogh plans benefit the self-employed; 403(b) programs help teachers and other employees of nonprofit organizations. And traditional pension programs are available for large organizations.

If you are selecting an employer and one of your criteria is retirement programs, I would suggest you look for self-directed programs with enough choices to make the Donoghue strategies, especially the Donoghue Stock Market Strategy, work.

TAX BENEFITS FOR ALL

Most people don't realize that the biggest benefits from retirement programs come not from the immediate tax deductions, but from the tax-free compounding of investment returns.

Did you stop contributing to your IRA because Congress "ended the tax deduction"? Watch out. Unless your boss offers a good self-directed retirement program such as a 401(k) plan, you could be making the biggest mistake of your financial life.

Sure, some retirement tax benefits aren't quite as juicy as before the 1986 Tax Reform Act. But consider this: While many people lost a tax break worth perhaps $560 a year when Congress ended their IRA tax deduction, they can still get tax breaks worth tens of thousands of dollars for each year that they contribute to an IRA, because the compounding income the IRA earns is tax-deferred.

A TIME FOR BOLDNESS

So why doesn't everyone retire a millionaire? In part, it's because people postpone saving for retirement, and thus enjoy far less compound returns than they should. But at least equally important, people manage their retirement money timidly — or they don't manage it at all.

Putting your IRA in a bank is like buying a Jaguar and towing it with a mule. Don't tell me you don't like risks. Leaving your IRA money in the bank is the riskiest thing you can do! What will you do when inflation returns in force? What if the bank, taking advantage of the knowledge that it's difficult to move your IRA from one institution to another, pays returns even worse than the average for bank certificates of deposit?

THE RIGHT TIME FOR THE DONOGHUE STRATEGIES

The right attitude to retirement investing is to recognize that your retirement funds are long-term money, and you can afford to put up with the bumps of market fluctuations far better with long-term money than with money you intend to spend in the next five years or so.

So practice the Donoghue Strategies with extra assertiveness in managing your retirement account. No-load mutual fund families are ideal vehicles for retirement investing. So is a self-directed account that will allow you to switch freely among all of the leading no-load fund groups.

"Low-load" mutual funds are also a reasonable choice for IRA accounts. Most fund families will allow you to switch within the family without paying a load. If you switch from a low-load stock market fund to a money fund when you get a "sell" signal and then from the money fund back to another low-load fund on a "buy" signal, keep an eye on the fund company statements, however. Mutual fund companies have been known to forget that you already paid the load.

LIFE INSURANCE TACTICS FOR TAX-FREE PROFIT

"How soon do you want to stop paying taxes on your investment earnings?" That's the pitch many astute investors have been hearing from a new breed of life insurance agents. Many investors have found the pitch too good to believe and have bought less worthwhile insurance products.

Don't be one of them. Unless the laws change dramatically anytime soon, single premium life insurance is a truly great opportunity. Even though the government has tightened up on a few of the benefits of the policies, they're still among the most worthwhile ways to invest for the long term.

IT'S TIME TO ACT

Single premium insurance may be the last great way to save for your ultimate retirement kitty (over and above your IRA, Keogh, etc.). Here's why it's so great:

- Its profits can be as reliable as a certificate of deposit's, but under present law no 1099 form at the end of the year will report your returns to the IRS unless you take them out of the policy; as a result these returns are not taxable income at the federal or state levels and do not count as income for Social Security or Medicare purposes.
- It can produce tax-free returns like a municipal bond's, but you can avoid all market risk if you choose — and your investment will never decline in value.
- It protects you like a retirement annuity, but unlike a retirement annuity, it won't force you to take your distributions if you don't need them and you will never have to pay taxes on money you do not need to take.
- It offers secure, tax-sheltered gains like the ownership of your home. You can borrow against your investment to obtain access to your profits as you do through home equity loans. But with this investment you'll either pay no interest at all when you borrow or else pay a tiny fraction of the rate you'd pay on a home equity loan.
- And it offers tax-free death benefits.

CONFUSING YOU TO DEATH?

Death benefits? I just saw you frown. And I don't blame you. Yes, this investment program is (legally, anyway) a type of life insurance. And admittedly, single premium insurance does possess some of the drawbacks of most life insurance policies. Specifically:

1. It is so complex that you'll need the help of a financial services professional when you purchase it.
2. Once you sign up, you're married to it. After a few years, you can start taking out most of your money. But you must keep the program at least nominally in force for life — or you will have to pay taxes on income you'd previously sheltered.
3. The government could change the rules and take away more of the benefits.

But don't give up yet — at least if you've got $10,000 or more and you'd like to shelter its income from taxes. Because despite these drawbacks, nothing offers the advantages in tax-sheltered investing today that you can get from single premium life insurance.

You say you don't need life insurance protection for your family? Remember this: Single premium insurance can give you more after-tax cash to spend after age 59 1/2 than either conventional investments or tax-free municipal bonds.

SAVING YOUR LIFE FROM TAXATION

As an investment, life insurance has always offered two enormous advantages:

- First, neither the U.S. government nor our state governments levy any taxes on the buildup in the cash value of life insurance policies.
- Second, policy owners can borrow that cash value and spend the money — and they never have to repay the loans in their lifetimes. Thus the "borrowing" is like withdrawing money from a mutual fund account, except that it is tax-free, or at least tax-deferred.

Policy owners therefore receive tax-free profits almost like the owners of municipal bonds. The government allows life insurance to serve as a tax shelter because it wants people to provide for their long-term futures.

SINGLE PREMIUM WHOLE LIFE: "INCOME LIFE"

Life insurance makes perfect sense as an investment once you have accumulated a significant amount of money. There are two types of "single premium" policies. When whole life insurance is sold on a single premium basis, it offers excellent tax-free returns for conservative investors. And single premium variable life insurance combines the tax shelter of life insurance with flexibility that will give you the return of the Donoghue Stock Market Strategy.

I call single premium whole life insurance "Income Life." It can do everything a long-term fixed-income investment such as a long-term bond is supposed to do but never does:

- It can provide high, reasonably steady after-tax returns.
- It can protect your principal from ever declining in value.

As an unbelievable bonus, Income Life shelters your interest from taxes.

FINANCIAL FREEDOM

Here is a simple summary of the benefits of the single premium whole life program:

1. The insurance company credits interest on all your money tax-free.
2. You never have to pay back the "loans" you take until, of course, you die.
3. When you finally pass on your profits to your heirs, the death benefits are free of all income tax.
4. Unless you take your money out of the policy, returns from insurance policies do not count as income when Social Security benefits and the new Medicare surtax are calculated. You still get the same benefits you would be entitled to without these returns.

Today, more than at any time in history, life insurance policies offer not only protection for your family but long-term wealth-building opportunities second to none.

WHERE'S THE CATCH?

Single premium whole life (Income Life) isn't perfect. The policies are complex. You lack total liquidity in the first years or when you're under 59 1/2 years old. The policies' benefits may not outweigh their complexities unless you are in the 28 percent or higher tax bracket. Moreover, no one can guarantee that Congress won't change the law again to make single premium policies a less reliable tax shelter.

But almost all proposals would still allow companies to offer policies with wonderful investment benefits. Historically, moreover, the tax benefits of existing policies have usually been "grandfathered" under new tax legislation, so it seems unlikely that single premium policies purchased today would lose their advantages. But you can never tell.

Therefore, before you buy, watch the financial and political pages of your newspaper for a few weeks to be sure that no major threat to your tax benefits has advanced so far in Congress that the policy you are considering might lose its advantages.

SINGLE PREMIUM VARIABLE LIFE: "INVESTMENT LIFE"

In the end, single premium whole life has only one drawback that refuses to go away: The yields just won't make you rich. After taxes, they'll beat bank accounts, money market funds, and — usually — buy, hold, and pray long-term bonds or municipal bonds. But the returns probably won't match those of a carefully managed Donoghue Stock Market Strategy program that switches between stock mutual funds and money market funds — even on an after-tax basis.

Let's face it, 20 percent after taxes of 28 percent is still 14.4 percent, and that beats 10 percent tax-free.

One other insurance opportunity solves that little problem, however. I call it "Investment Life."

Investment Life, whose proper name is single premium variable life (SPVL), resembles single premium whole life. But instead of putting your money into an interest-bearing obligation of the insurance company, Investment Life companies invest your money in a family of mutual funds. Many of the best Investment Life policies are joint ventures between insurance companies and investment companies. The value of your policy varies with the success or failure of your mutual funds and your success in trading those funds (hence the name "variable life").

You decide in which of these funds your money will be invested.

Since the stock market has historically over the long run produced far higher returns than the mortgages and other unexciting investments in which insurance companies invest to pay interest to their whole life policyholders, you are likely to experience much better (though much less predictable) profit.

Investment Life can involve substantial administrative fees, but it offers a lot of investment flexibility. Other insurance products give the insurance company much more opportunity to hide its charges from you. With Investment Life, you see almost everything up front.

NEXT STOP, PROSPERITY

In investing, simple strategies work just as well as complex strategies. For example, investing in the stock market following the Donoghue Stock Market Strategy is likely to produce better returns in the long run than the most complex strategies on Wall Street.

Occasionally, however, something complicated can truly benefit you. That's the case with single premium insurance.

Using insurance well is probably the most demanding of all consumer financial maneuvers. But if you do it right, you'll take a big step toward assuring yourself a prosperous life.

VIDEO

However — despite Hollywood's initial fear videocassettes would destroy their business, analysts are now saying home movies are fueling a desire to see more movies. And the videocassette rights provide much of the financing to make today's blockbuster movies.

"Allen has stuck with this and overcome a lot of hurdles," says Mathis.

Frasier laughs and says, "It comes from me not having the sense not to do it."

He began working on the concept about five years ago when, as owner of ARC Trucking, he saw videos as a way to advertise his business. He decided if it would work for him, it would work for other businesses.

Finally Frasier's accountant brought his cousin — Mathis — on board. Mathis has a background in video stores, franchising and radio and television advertising. "I kept telling Allen it wouldn't work, and I'd give him 20 reasons why it wouldn't," he recalls. Still the concept prevailed.

Both men agreed it's too premature to discuss revenue projects at this time. But they also agreed that the company's success could have quite an impact on Midland's economy.

Explains Frasier: "Selling franchises will bring an influx of people to Midland. We're going to set up a training program that will bring two or three people from the franchise to Midland for a week to 10 days here. That means they have to stay in hotels and eat out — and shop."

In addition to the visitor dollar — which studies say turns around seven times — Video Air Time will need to find a manufacturer to make the equipment used to place commercials on the videotapes.

In addition, the two plan to establish a central commercial production center in Midland, which will increase the tourist/visitor dollar brought in.

They currently employ three full-time and three on a consulting basis, and Frasier predicted that number could triple or quadruple in a month. Frasier, Mathis, the six employees, and three lawyers — two in Houston, one in Midland — are stockholders in the company.

Baked potatoes perfect fare for casual party

By CAROL CUTLER
Copley News Service

Remember how maligned the lowly potato once was?

Now that the honest truth about its healthfulness and light calorie count are recognized, the old spud is a new rage.

Fast-food stands treat it like pizza — a base for a collection of toppings. Calorie counters should be wary of what gets strewn over the top.

It's not the white fluffy potato that will get you, but the garnishes.

Long ago, chic Maryland hostesses began serving baked potato skins as a sm... cocktail snack.

The whole idea was reverse snobbism — turning humble potatoes into an upscale nibble.

There even are more ingenious ways to serve potatoes. Turn them into fare that is festive, delicious, inexpensive and ridiculously simple to prepare.

Have a Baked Potato Buffet. Now that the casual entertaining season is here, potatoes can make a smash hit on a very low budget.

The best part of all is that everything is prepared in advance.

Only baking the potatoes needs to be done just before the party.

The heart of this buffet party is baked potatoes with an array of toppings to garnish the top. That's it.

But what an array you can provide — sour cream, shredded cheeses, chopped scallions, crumbled bacon, sauteed onions, hot spicy salsas or chopped fresh and sun-dried tomatoes tossed with a little oil.

YOU EVEN can have fun with your own sort of reverse snobbism — elegant toppings.

Here we're talking about smoked salmon, red or black caviar (but not dyed lumpfish), salmon or beef tartare, cream cheese with smoked salmon or even shrimp salad.

You might even sprinkle a few edible flowers over the potatoes to prove that you are taking this seriously.

More and more supermarkets are now carrying the pretty packages of colorful flowers.

Because there is so little cooking involved, the Baked Potato Buffet makes an ideal theme for a weekend brunch.

The night before, prepare the toppings, place in tightly sealed containers and refrigerate.

As simple as it is to bake potatoes, there are a few rules to follow. Mostly the rules are "Don't."

- Don't bake them in a microwave oven. (The texture remains firm and waxy rather than fluffy and mealy.)
- Don't wrap them in aluminum foil to hasten the baking time. (Same unhappy results as in a microwave oven.)
- Don't use any old potato. Russet potatoes were genetically designed to produce superior baking results, and they really do. Remember the Idaho potato is a kind of Russet.

I've never understood why anyone considers baking a potato the conventional way a chore.

Once in the hot oven, you don't even have to look at it for an hour.

The preliminaries are child's play; in fact, any child around the house would love to help with the cooking.

This is a project that can occupy little hands for a while.

First, make sure the potatos are scrubbed clean. If you prefer a slightly shiny skin, rub lightly with oil.

Next, pierce the tubers with a fork in several places. The punctures prevent a buildup of steam inside that would burst the skins.

Place in a hot oven, 475 to 500 degrees. Bake for about an hour. That's it.

THE REWARD for your patience is a potato that is crisp on the outside with a fluffy interior texture that falls apart when cut or bitten into.

The oven-baked potato also can be forgiving. If your guests have dawdled at the pool or tennis court or are watching television, turn off the oven, open the door and keep ajar, and relax.

The spuds will calmly wait.

Intrigued by those chic baked potato skins? Here is how they are done.

POTATO-SKIN HORS D'OEUVRES

Bake Russet potatoes until soft; then cut in half lengthwise.

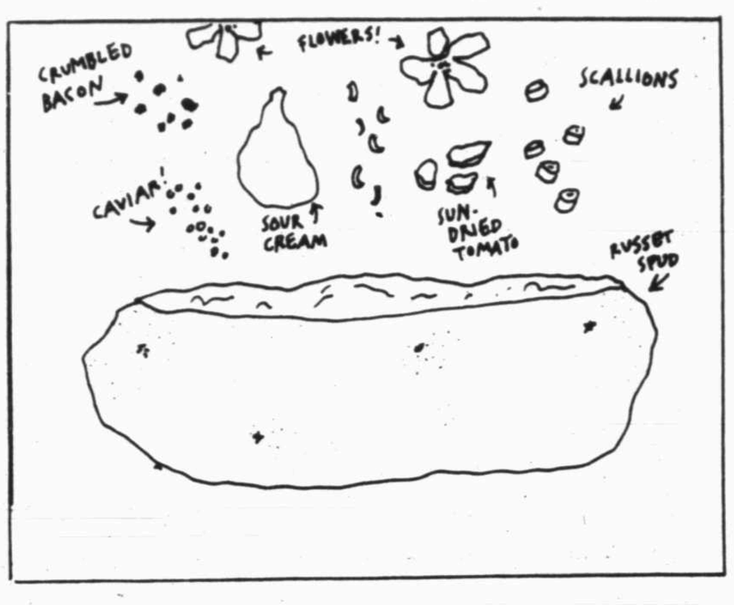

Scoop out potato flesh, scraping out as much as possible.

Serve baked potatoes mashed or formed into little potato cakes.

Cut potato skins into strips and toss with a generous amount of melted butter.

Place strips on baking sheet in single layer and sprinkle generously with salt.

Bake in 450 degree oven until strips are crisp, 5 to 10 minutes.

Grilling tips improve outdoor cooking

Associated Press

Summer lends itself to a variety of outdoor activities involving food: picnics, tea on the terrace, and an all-time American favorite — barbecues.

Follow these grilling tips from the food editors of Better Homes and Gardens for successful summer barbecues.

To determine the temperature of the lighted coals in a grill box or the heat of the flame from the burner of a gas grill: Hold one hand, palm down, above the coals or the burner flame at the height the food will be cooked. Then count the seconds, "one thousand one, one thousand two ..." If there is a need to remove the hand after two seconds, the fire is hot; after three seconds, the fire is medium-hot; after four seconds, the fire is medium; after five seconds, the fire is medium-slow; and, after six seconds, the fire is slow.

When coals aren't the right temperature, adjust the heat in one of the following ways:

Coals too hot:

- Raise the grill rack; spread the coals apart; close the air vents halfway to restrict the airflow; remove some of the hot briquettes.

Coals too cold:

- Use tongs to tap the ashes off the burning coals; move the coals closer together; add more briquettes; lower the grill rack; open the vents to allow more air to circulate.

Indirect grilling means barbecuing the food over a drip pan, rather than directly over the heat.

For indirect cooking with charcoal, mound and light the coals as normal. When the coals are ready, arrange them around a drip pan.

Fat and meat juices dripping onto hot coals can cause sudden bursts of flame (flare-ups) which char food. To control flare-ups:

Charcoal grills:

- Raise the grill rack; cover the grill; space the hot coals farther apart; remove a few hot coals; take the food off the grill and mist the fire with water.

Gas grills:

- Lower the burner's heat setting; take the food off the grill.

Italian Bombe memorable dish

NEW YORK (AP) — When the occasion is special, the dessert should be spectacular. This Italian Bombe contains two ice cream layers and a layer of pear sorbet.

The recipe is included in "Ice Cream & Frozen Desserts" from the California Culinary Academy ($7.95). More than 225 recipes are featured in this 127-page cookbook, from basic homemade ice creams and sorbets to elaborate tortes, frozen souffles and bombes.

Special features include unusual serving ideas; after-school treats and whimsical desserts for children's parties; and the secrets behind such all-time favorites as rippled ice cream, homemade ice cream cones and the perfect ice cream soda.

ITALIAN BOMBE

This recipe comes from Gloria Bowers, a food consultant who is well known for her desserts. The Zabaglione Ice Cream is actually two classic French creams: creme anglaise and creme patissiere, combined and frozen into ice cream. The vanilla sugar for Zabaglione Ice Cream should be made 1 week ahead. If desired, garnish the finished bombe with whipped cream and chocolate shavings.

THREE-EGG CHOCOLATE ICE CREAM

½ cup half and half
1 ounce bittersweet chocolate, chopped
3 large egg yolks
3 tablespoons sugar
¾ cup whipping cream
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
¼ teaspoon vanilla extract

In small saucepan heat half and half and chocolate until chocolate is melted, then bring to quick boil. Remove from heat and cool. Chill at least 3 to 4 hours or overnight.

In medium bowl beat egg yolks and sugar until stiff ribbon forms on surface when beater is lifted. In 1-quart saucepan bring cream to boil. Whisk cream into egg yolk mixture; return mixture to saucepan and cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until mixture coats back of wooden spoon. Do not boil. Remove from heat and stir in butter and vanilla.

Transfer to ice cream machine and freeze according to manufacturer's instructions. Let stand 2 hours in freezer to "ripen" before using.

PEAR SORBET

⅓ cup sugar
⅓ cup water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon pear-flavored liqueur
1 teaspoon grated lemon zest
3 poached fresh pears or one 29-ounce can pear halves, drained, pureed and chilled

In a small saucepan heat sugar and water until the sugar melts. Remove from the heat and cool. Add lemon juice, liqueur and lemon zest. Chill. Stir sugar syrup into chilled puree. Transfer to an ice cream machine and freeze according to manufacturer's instructions. Let sorbet "ripen" in freezer for several hours.

Enterprising moms market TV dinners for tots

By CARRIE FIGDOR

SEATTLE (AP) — It's nearly dinner time, the baby is crying and Mister Rogers comes on in five minutes. What's a parent to do?

Two Seattle entrepreneurs hope the answer is the tot-sized TV dinner. Pop it in the microwave and presto: cod with creamed peas and squash.

"Babies love it and so do grown-ups. It tastes like real food," said Linda Dootson Pigott, vice president of the Starting Right Co. and the mother of a 7-year-old.

She and company President Cameon Ivarsson said the idea behind the frozen dinners is to start toddlers at 4 months with a balanced and nutritional diet, without exhausting their mothers in the process.

The frozen minimeals are being produced and packaged in a Seattle specialty-food factory while the entrepreneurs await specially adapted machinery.

The meals, being test-marketed in Seattle-area groceries, contain items from the Pacific Northwest ranging from cod to vegetables. The only additive is a little water for consistency, Ms. Pigott said.

The company is starting with four menus in three textures, from smooth to chunky with offerings such as semolina pasta and brown rice, Ms. Pigott said. There is also a vegetarian menu.

Each bowl has a cartoon beneath the food to help encourage kids to finish the food so they can see the picture. In each tub, the foods are separate to allow mothers to introduce each item separately to the child.

"It's exactly as if a mom made her own baby food. ... We're not doing weird things, we're doing plain, simple things," said Ms. Ivarsson, a Swiss-trained neurophysiologist.

In Switzerland, she fed two boys, now 5 and 8, her homemade baby food. She spent every other weekend cooking and freezing 40 mini-TV dinners.

When she moved to the United States and gave birth to Margo, now 15 months old, Ms. Ivarsson "decided to do what every American mother does" and bought a jar of commercial baby food.

The strained carrots, she said, were flavorless. Margo wasn't enthusiastic food either, she said.

Margaux Bonzon, 16 months old, east a pasta, carrots and turkey tot-sized TV dinner for lunch. Her mother Cameon Ivarsson, and another woman have started a company that produces the microwave dinners. The company was founded on the idea that providing balanced meals for toddlers shouldn't have to exhaust their mothers.

So, Ms. Ivarsson formed Starting Right with Ms. Pigott, who has a degree in finance and once owned and operated a restaurant.

Doctor friends gave advice about nutrition, and Ms. Ivarsson's husband, who runs a restaurant, helped with business tips.

If the frozen dinners catch on, the company plans to incorporate regional foods, depending on where the meals are distributed, so babies start out eating foods they'll be served as they grow up. Suggested retail prices range from about $1.35 to $1.49.

Ms. Pigot and Ms. Ivarsson said they're trying to help women who get involved in the business. The board members are women and the majority of the company stockholders are women.

"I don't know if you'd call it feminist, but our philosophy was that if we have the opportunity to help women, good," Ms. Pigott said.

The company faces tough competition from other baby food manufacturers, particularly the Fremont, Mich.-based Gerber Product Co., which controls 70 percent of the baby food market, said Gerber spokeswoman Barbara Ivens.

Gerber's baby foods have no additives except water for making puree, Ms. Ivens said. Only the desserts have sugar added and some of the fruits have added vitamin C, she said.

Quiz on dietary habits reveals good, bad eating habits

NEW YORK (AP) — How does your diet rate for variety? Take the following quiz, adapted from the federal government's "Dietary Guidelines and Your Diet."

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: at least six servings of bread, cereals, rice, crackers, pasta or other foods made from grains per day? A serving is one slice of bread or one-half cup of cereal, rice, pasta. (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: Almost daily. Many people believe that eating bread and cereals will make you fat. That's not true for most of us. Extra calories often come from the fat and/or sugar you may eat with them. Both whole-grain and enriched breads and cereals provide starch and essential nutrients.

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: foods made from whole grains? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: Almost daily. Whole-grain breads and cereals contain vitamins, minerals and dietary fiber that are low in the diets of many Americans. Select whole-grain cereals and bakery products — those with a whole grain listed first on the ingredient label. Or make your own and use whole-wheat flour.

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: three different kinds of vegetables per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: Almost daily. Vegetables vary in the amounts of vitamins and minerals they contain, so it's important to include several kinds every day.

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: cooked dry beans or peas? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: 3 to 4 times a week. Dry beans and peas fit into two food groups because of the nutrients they provide. They can be used as an alternative to meat, poultry and fish. They are also an excellent vegetable choice.

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: a dark green vegetable such as spinach or broccoli? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: 3 to 4 times a week. Dark green vegetables like spinach, kale and broccoli are excellent sources of some nutrients that are low in many diets.

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: two kinds of fruit or fruit juice per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: Almost daily. Fruits are nature's sweets. They taste good and are good for you. Choose several different kinds each day.

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: two servings of low-fat milk, cheese or yogurt per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: Almost daily. Adults as well as children need the calcium and other nutrients found in milk, cheese and yogurt.

HOW OFTEN DO YOU EAT: two servings of lean meat, poultry, fish or alternatives such as eggs, dry beans or nuts per day? (a) Seldom or never; (b) 1 or 2 times a week; (c) 3 to 4 times a week; (d) Almost daily.

BEST ANSWER: Almost daily. Many Americans include some meat, poultry or fish in their diets regularly. Dry beans and peas, peanuts, peanut butter, nuts, seeds, and eggs can be used as alternatives.

Pasta salad quick cooking

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Maybe the Italians invented pasta; maybe it was the Chinese. But Americans invented the pasta salad and thought of using tortellini in this way. To speed the salad to your table, start with hot water when cooking the pasta. Cool the cooked pasta in ice water and drain well before tossing with the other ingredients.

ITALIAN TORTELLINI SALAD
1 7-ounce package cheese-filled tortellini
4 ounces provolone cheese or mozzarella cheese, cubed (1 cup)
1 small tomato, coarsely chopped
½ of a small yellow or green pepper, cut into thin strips (¼ cup)
¼ cup sliced pitted ripe olives, drained
2 green onions, sliced (2 tablespoons)
½ cup Italian salad dressing
¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese

In a large saucepan bring 6 cups hot water to boiling; add tortellini. Reduce heat slightly. Cook in gently boiling water about 10 minutes or until tender. Drain tortellini in colander. Place colander in large bowl of ice-cold water. Let stand 5 minutes. Drain well.

Transfer chilled tortellini to serving bowl. Add cheese, tomato, pepper strips, olives and green onions. Pour dressing over tortellini mixture. Toss gently to coat. Add Parmesan cheese and toss lightly.

DEAR ABBY

Drowning one's sorrows has proverbial approval

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A member of my family keeps telling me that it is written in the Bible that the Lord approves of giving a person intoxicating drink to drown his sorrow and lessen his pain.

This person is a very heavy drinker, and I think he just made it up as an excuse for his own drinking. If there is such a passage in the Holy Bible, please tell me and I will apologize, because I called him a liar to his face. Thank you. — CAN'T BELIEVE IT

DEAR CAN'T: Apologize. From Proverbs 31:6-7: "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more."

However, since the Bible was written, we have learned that not everyone can handle "strong drink," and for those who cannot, I recommend the National Council on Alcoholism. The toll-free number is 1-800-NCA-CALL. The people there will direct you to a facility in your area and send you some helpful literature about alcoholism. And it's all free!

DEAR ABBY: Today, when there are so many divorces and remarriages, Mother's Day and Father's Day have become a bit of a problem for me. Both my parents are divorced and remarried. Last Father's Day I invited my father out to a rather expensive brunch. I am not wealthy, but I saved up the money to splurge on him for this special day.

The problem here is that he brought his new wife, so I had to pay for her lunch, too. I didn't say anything; I simply paid the whole tab. I like the woman, but she is not my mother, and I didn't invite her — my father did. Am I responsible for paying her way whenever I invite my father out and he brings her along? And does the same apply to my mother if she brings her current husband when I invite her out? — UPSET IN MINNESOTA

DEAR UPSET: When you invite your father — or your mother — out for a special occasion, in the interest of family unity you should invite his or her spouse, and pay for both of them.

If you want to spend "quality time" exclusively with either parent, you should say so when you extend the invitation.

In this case, even though you didn't invite his new wife, since he brought her anyway, he should have offered to pay for her. But since he didn't offer, it was proper for you to have picked up the tab for everyone.

DEAR ABBY: Once I read an item in your column called "The Last Will of Mr. Farmer." It was wonderful. I would like to send it to my wife. Please run it again. — TIM MOORE, SEVERY, KAN.

DEAR TIM: This is it:

LAST WILL OF MR. FARMER

I leave:

To my wife, my overdraft at the bank — maybe she can explain it.

To my banker, my soul — he has the mortgage on it anyway.

To my neighbor, my clown suit — he'll need it if he continues to farm as he has in the past.

To the ASCS, my grain bin — I was planning to let them take it next year anyway.

To the county agent, 50 bushels of corn to see if he can hit the market — I never could.

To the junk man, all my machinery — he's had his eye on it for years.

To my undertaker, a special request — I want six implement and fertilizer dealers for my pallbearers. They are used to carrying me.

To the weatherman, rain and sleet and snow for the funeral, please — no sense in having good weather now.

To the grave digger — don't bother. The hole I'm in should be big enough.

DEAR ABBY: You asked for suggestions concerning the standard salutations and the meaningless sign-offs used in business letters.

Here's my suggestion: What is the first thing you look for when you pick up a letter? You would like to know who it's from and what the sender wants. That's why it makes sense to indicate across the top of the page:

To ( )
From ( )
Subject matter ( ).

Simply eliminate both the salutation as well as the meaningless sign-off. How much easier a solution can you find? — ROBERT O. COX, MAYOR, CITY OF FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Cambodian leader will welcome U.N. mission

PARIS (AP) — In a major policy reversal, Prime Minister Hun Sen of Cambodia said today he has told his Vietnamese-backed government to welcome a U.N. peace mission to be sent under terms of an international accord.

The United States and 18 other nations meeting in Paris agreed earlier this week to send the investigation team to help prepare for a permanent peace settlement in war-ravaged Cambodia.

"I have already given instructions to give all the assistance necessary to this technical mission," Hun Sen said in a meeting with reporters at his hotel near the Champs-Elysees.

At the start of the monthlong international conference on Cambodia Sunday, Hun Sen had opposed the United Nations playing any role in monitoring a peace plan.

The world body recognizes a coalition of three Cambodian guerrilla factions as the nation's legitimate representative — not Hun Sen's government.

Hun Sen said he changed his mind about the U.N. mission after receiving assurances from the foreign ministers of Canada and Australia and U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar that the visit of the U.N. mission would not imply future U.N. involvement in peace efforts.

Parents press prosecution

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — An army officer and 12 policemen have gone on trial for murder in an unprecedented prosecution initiated by parents of two boys shot to death in 1985 by officers hidden in crates on an unmarked truck.

The parents decided last year to pursue the case on their own after the attorney general for Cape Province declined to prosecute the policemen despite a magistrate's finding of police negligence.

The trial that opened Tuesday in Cape Town Supreme Court is reportedly the first murder case to proceed under a law allowing private citizens to press a prosecution in certain instances where the government has declined.

The 1985 confrontation, which occurred during anti-apartheid unrest in a mixed-race township near Cape Town, has become widely known as the "Trojan Horse incident" because white police gunmen concealed themselves in a what looked like an ordinary delivery truck.

Footage of the incident was shown at the time on television news broadcasts in the United States and Britain.

According to evidence at the inquest, an army commandant and two senior police officers ordered the truck into the township of Athlone expecting it to be a target for stonethrowers.

Gunfire from the concealed policemen killed Shaun Magmoed, 16; Michael Miranda, 11, and Jonathan Classens, 21, but the magistrate ruled there was no evidence that any of the three were among a handful of mixed-race youths who did throw stones.

Yugoslavia recalls envoy

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Yugoslavia recalled its ambassador to the United States because he was unable to stop Congress from accusing Yugoslavia of human rights abuses, a newspaper said Tuesday.

Zivorad Kovacevic, Yugoslavia's envoy in Washington since 1987, returned to Belgrade Monday. He served only half the usual four-year term as ambassador to Washington, said the newspaper Vjesnik published in Zagreb.

"It is no secret that Kovacevic was not viewed favorably by the political leadership of Serbia," the newspaper wrote. Serbia is the largest of Yugoslavia's six republics.

Kovacevic, a Serb, has come under fire from Serbian politicians and the republic's press since the U.S. Congress last month passed two resolutions claiming there were human rights violations in the strife-torn southern province of Kosovo.

Anti-apartheid movement targets all-white hospitals

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — More than 200 black and Indian patients, supported by throngs of protesters, were treated at segregated white hospitals today as the anti-apartheid movement launched a nationwide defiance campaign.

The campaign, in which other protests are planned before and after next month's segregated elections, is seen as the most ambitious civil disobedience initiative in the country in nearly 30 years.

At major hospitals in Johannesburg and Durban, patients ranging from babies to grandmothers in wheelchairs were admitted for treatment. Hospital officials, trying to avoid confrontations, said they would not turn away anyone who appeared in genuine need of medical care.

Twelve white women supporting the protest were arrested in Johannesburg, but no violence was reported at any of the eight hospitals targeted by the Mass Democratic Movement, a coalition of anti-apartheid groups that planned the defiance campaign.

"As of today, the Mass Democratic Movement considers all health facilities in South Africa open (to all races)," said Aslam Dasoo, a doctor who helped organize the protest. "The government doesn't seem to be able to end apartheid, so we are going to end it for them."

In the port city of Durban, more than 1,000 protesters staged an illegal demonstration near Addington Hospital while 140 blacks and Indians, under the direction of senior anti-apartheid leaders, were admitted for out-patient care. "Apartheid Makes Us Sick," said one of the posters carried at the rally.

The first protester to enter Addington was Mariam Jagga, an elderly Indian woman in a wheelchair.

By midday, 48 blacks were admitted to Johannesburg General Hospital, according to a spokesman, and 100 supporters staged a rally at an adjoining medical school. Like Addington, Johannesburg General regularly admits some blacks for emergency care and specialized treatment, but it has a policy of transferring them to less well-equipped black hospitals as soon as feasible.

Dr. Reg Broekmann, superintendent of Johannesburg General, said about 11 percent of his 830 current patients were black.

Dasoo noted that the blacks were admitted within an hour at Johannesburg General, much quicker than the normal processing time at badly overcrowded Baragwanath Hospital in Soweto, the region's main facility for black patients.

The campaign that began today is widely viewed as the most ambitious in South Africa since a sporadic but long-running campaign in the 1950s to encourage defiance of apartheid laws.

Those protests ended in March 1960, when police gunfire killed 69 blacks participating in a peaceful demonstration against the now-abolished pass laws that restricted blacks' freedom of movement.

Anti-apartheid groups have organized several one-day or two-day nationwide general strikes in recent years and a widespread hunger strike early this year by hundreds of detainees resulted in the release of virtually all of them.

Hospital segregation, however, has never before been the target of coordinated protests.

The protests today were smaller or non-existent at the six targeted hospitals outside Johannesburg and Durban. Activists said some would-be protesters were stopped at police roadblocks.

Nine blacks were admitted to a white hospital in Pretoria, 15 in Vereeniging and a few others in the conservative mining town of Krugersdorp, where medical segregation has been enforced firmly.

"Without intervention such as this, these people wouldn't even get to see a doctor," said Audrey Coleman, a white activist who was at Paardekraal.

Some Chinese citizens shooting at soldiers

By NICHOLAS D. KRISTOF
New York Times News Service

BEIJING — It is at night, when the capital's broad streets are eerily quiet and army troops are manning roadblocks to stop vehicles, there is a hint that some citizens have effectively declared war on the government.

A few gunshots break the silence, the only firm evidence that something unusual is happening. In the morning there are tales of another soldier shot by a sniper who escaped before more troops could arrive.

Who the snipers are is not known, but most speculation is that they are family members of people who were killed in the military crackdown on the democracy movement on June 3 and 4.

It may be that just a few individuals are responsible, mainly acting alone, or it may be that there is a kernel of an underground armed resistance.

These attacks are not reported in the official newspapers or broadcasts, and only the authorities know how often they take place.

But several diplomats indicated that they take place two or three times a week in Beijing alone, and there are also reports of attacks in other cities.

For now, such strikes seem to be a relatively modest concern of the authorities. But officials say that such signs of resistance are one reason why the government plans to maintain martial law indefinitely in Beijing, even if this means harming tourism and spoiling the business climate.

The snipers almost certainly are armed with guns taken from the army on June 3 and 4, when citizen blockades stopped a number of military supply trucks and confiscated their weapons so that they could not be used on student demonstrators.

More than 1,000 guns were taken, and most apparently are still missing.

In addition to the snipers, other saboteurs may be at work. A bomb exploded on a train near Shanghai on June 26, killing 24 people and wounding many others. No motive has been ascertained, but the general assumption is that the bomber was making a political point.

Some diplomats even believe that the snipers could form an informal resistance that could rise in the cities.

"It's not inconceivable that gangs of young people would get together at night and if they see a soldier alone, do him in," a diplomat said. "And if that's the situation, the soldiers will be trigger happy. Look at Northern Ireland."

Yet for now a comparison with Northern Ireland seems far-fetched. The bulk of the population seems quite hostile toward the leadership, but without much animosity toward the soldiers who now stand watch on the street corners.

Most people recognize that the majority of the soldiers were not involved in the killings on June 3 and 4 but arrived later.

Moreover, most citizens seem disenchanted but not highly politicized. They would like change, but few are prepared to risk death for themselves and disgrace for family members to pursue what seems to them a hopeless struggle.

Still, there seems to be a considerable amount of tacit support for the guerrillas. They are regarded by most citizens as Robin Hoods.
