

Vandalism decreases in Pampa schools

By EUGENE LAVOCC
Of The Pampa News

While the frequency of violence and vandalism in the junior high and high schools across the country has reportedly increased during the past years, Pampa's school and police officials have observed a veering away from the national norm.

A recent report, released by Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., estimated that $600 million is spent each year as a result of school vandalism.

The Senate subcommittee responsible for the report said the primary task for a growing number of teachers and students has become self-preservation rather than education.

However, Pampa High School Principal Paul Payne said, "I've seen a decrease in vandalism and violence in the schools."

Most of the incidents in recent years have been minor outbreaks, such as broken windows and fights, he said. Students threaten teachers, he said, but they never carry through on their angry words.

As an administrator in high school, he said he has seen fewer brawls. "The student who fights now is given three days of zeros in each of his classes," he said. Thefts and burglaries are fewer too, he added.

"Kids' attitudes have changed," he said and noted that conduct reports for each grade level have improved. "Our only serious problem is parking (space)," he added with a grin.

The students' attitudes should be even better with the school's improvements, he said. "I hope with the remodeling and renovations the kids will have more pride in their school."

Indicating agreement with the principal's assessment of a decrease in school crime, Police Sgt. Charlie Morris said the decline in the school's problems has been mostly due to an increase in education.

The police department has introduced safety, anti-burglary and other education programs to all age groups, including adults, said Morris who added that other programs are being developed to reach more people.

"We want the students first experience with the police department to be a good one," he said. Educational programs try to teach that the department is a "service organization."

High school officials called police three times this year, Morris said, and most of these and other incidents are about the same.

"Criminal mischief reports are most common," he said in evaluating the high school's vandalism record for the past five years.

These cases include school pranks, such as painting walls and breaking windows, he said.

"Most vandalism is spontaneous. They escalate from a dare-like situation," Morris said. The vandals usually are students of the stricken school, he added.

Ted wants cheap guns outlawed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy today introduced gun-control legislation that would outlaw the cheap handguns most often used in crimes and tighten restrictions on the sale of other weapons.

The Massachusetts Democrat, whose brother, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, was assassinated with a pistol in 1968, is sponsoring the bill at the request of gun-control forces who accused President Carter of reneging on a campaign promise to champion their cause.

The proposal immediately drew praise from gun-control advocates but the wrath of the gun lobby. The Gun Owner of America called it an "outrageous effort to disarm the American people."

The new bill would:

—Ban the manufacture, importing and all trading in "Saturday night specials," cheap, easily concealed handguns. A 1968 law passed after the slayings of Robert Kennedy and civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., bans importation of these guns but allows assembly in this country of foreign produced parts.

—Establish a definition of "Saturday night specials" based on how easily such weapons can be concealed and on their potential for crime rather than sporting use.

—Require police departments to verify the eligibility of handgun purchasers. Federal law already prohibits purchases by criminals, the insane and certain other people and requires buyers to fill out identification forms, but does not require that the information be verified.

—Require that all handgun transfers, whether the original purchase or later sales, take place through licensed dealers. While someone owning a handgun now would be free to keep it, its disposal would be regulated.

Outraged residents join in search

BURLINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Outraged by the abduction-slaying of a 12-year-old bicyclist, more than 1,000 residents of this small town, including children and grandmothers, are braving sweltering heat to search for the missing bicycle and other clues.

Volunteers, whose ranks have been swelling since the search began Wednesday, are trudging over rough, hilly terrain searching for clues in the slaying of Katherine Ebersold. Her partly burned body was found Saturday in a wooded area less than a mile from her home.

Police said she had been bound and stabbed repeatedly in the chest, neck and abdomen before a flammable liquid was poured over the body and ignited.

"It doesn't matter whose child it is, it's a child," said Gertrude Zurles, a gray-haired grandmother of five. "We're all a family."

She walked, stick in hand, along the shoulder of Vineyard Road looking for some trace of the Ebersold girl's killer.

Temperatures were in the upper 90s in this western Connecticut community of 5,500 as volunteers from tiny children clutching a parent's hand to the elderly fanned out across a 30-square-mile area.

Joseph F. Crowley, public information officer for the state police, said the search would continue today and Saturday. "Maybe more people will be out there. They'll still be looking."

"It's our community, we want to keep it safe," said Hugh Martin. He was holding his 3-year-old daughter, Olivia, on his knee as he rested near the state police command post at dusk Thursday.

The slender, blond-haired Miss Ebersold was last seen riding her yellow 10-speed bicycle away from the Burlington recreation center the night before her body was discovered.

A knife police suspect is the murder weapon was found earlier in the week. Laboratory tests that would confirm it as the murder weapon are not complete.

Authorities, stumped in their search for clues, asked townspeople to assist them. The local volunteer fire department, housed in a 19-century brick building on the edge of the green in the center of town, organized the search.

"The entire town is completely, 100 percent involved in assisting the police," said John McLeod, state trooper. "I've never seen anything like it and most of the investigators haven't."

Fire Chief Richard Kellert said the number of volunteer searchers had been increasing for the past two days.

"I don't know how many I got out there. They're pouring in right now," said the cigar-smoking fire chief who was supervising the search.

McLeod said the wooded, swampy terrain was "difficult at best."

Unemployment rate up in July report shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate rose slightly in July to 5.7 percent, making a full year in which the jobless rate has been below 6 percent, the government said today.

The Labor Department said the number of persons without jobs — 5,848,000 — was little changed from June but there were signs of possible future deterioration in the job market.

The unemployment rate in June had been 5.6 percent, the lowest in nearly five years.

Since last August, the jobless rate has been slightly below 6 percent.

Unemployment is expected to increase markedly toward the end of this year and into 1980 as the nation slides into an economic recession, according to Carter administration forecasts. As many as 8 million persons may be without jobs by mid-1980, internal White House documents predict.

The reason is the business slowdown that began in the second quarter this year and could continue into early 1980.

Although the unemployment rate increased only slightly in July and total employment rose by 456,000 in a catch-up from considerably slower growth in March and April, there were signs of weakness in the figures.

Jack Bregger, chief of the Labor Department's Division of Employment and Unemployment Analysis, noted that "the male unemployment rate advanced a couple of tenths (of a percent) and there was an increase in the number of persons who lost their last job."

The lost jobs category, which Bregger described as "the most cyclically sensitive," increased by 174,000 persons to 2.5 million in July.

The unemployment rate for men rose to 4.1 percent in July from 3.9 percent in the previous month. At the same time, the rate for women declined from 5.8 percent to June to 5.5 percent in July.

The rate for women reflected the fact that "the entire July increase in employment took place among adult women, as both white and black women posted strong gains," the Labor Department said.

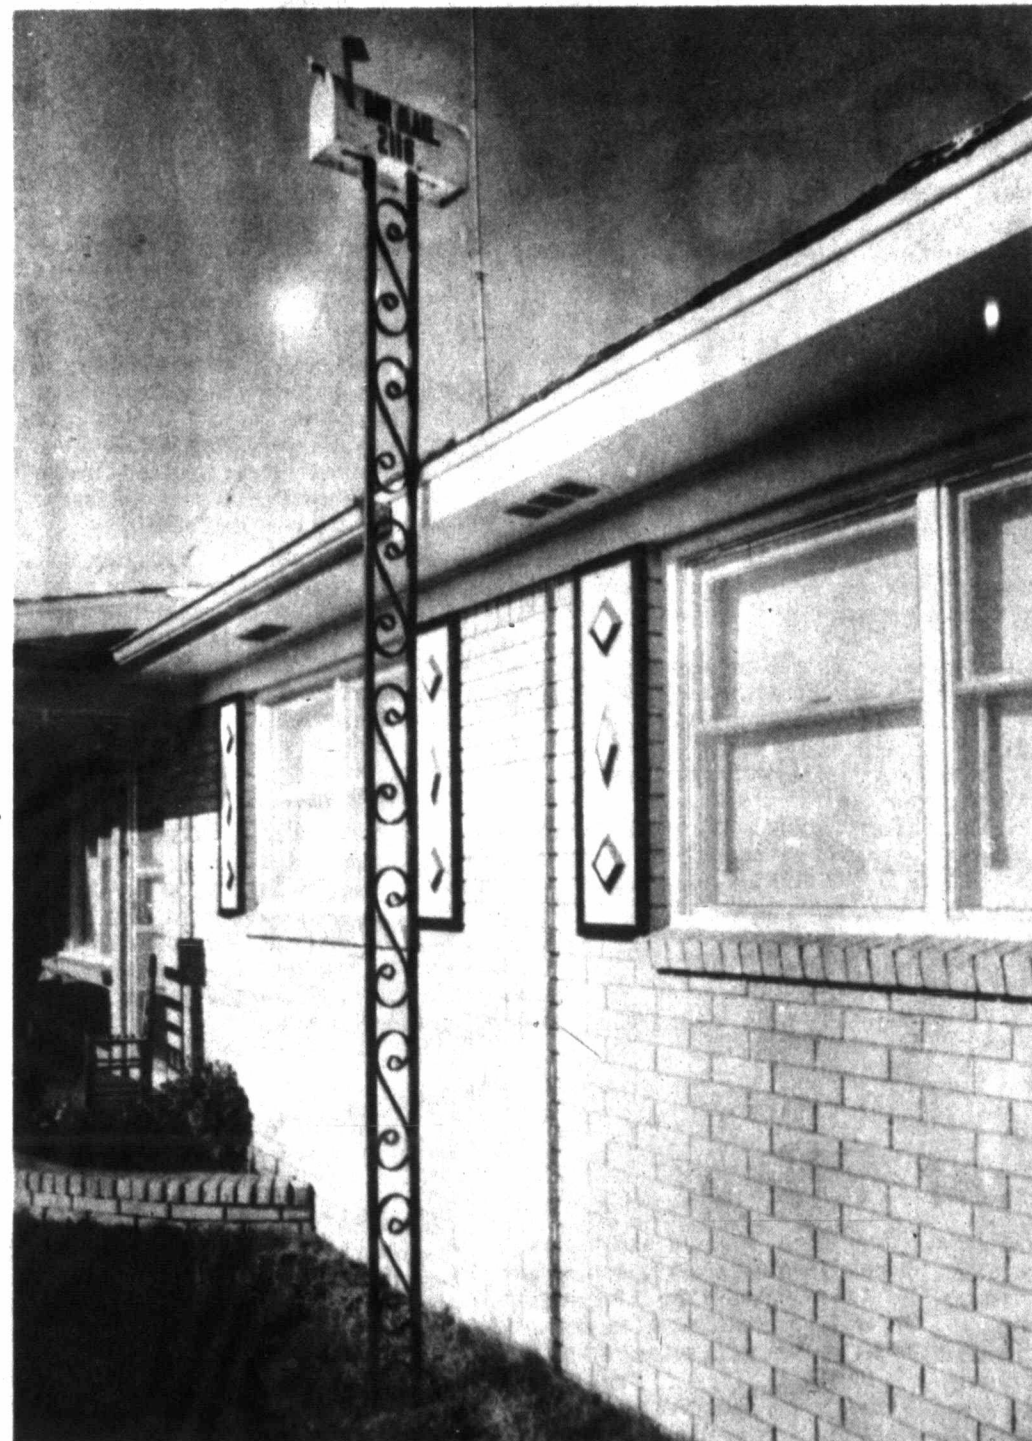

The rise in the unemployment rate in July was foreshadowed by recent economic developments.

Deterioration in the business sector was visible in the government's recent report on the nation's output, which fell at an annual rate of 3.3 percent from April through June. Meanwhile, factory orders have been sluggish, and production has been down. All have an impact on jobs.

Except for June, the unemployment rate has ranged from 5.7 percent to 5.9 percent since last August. Largely because of new jobs created in that period, less than 6 million people have been unemployed each month.

But the job creation could stop as the economy slows down.

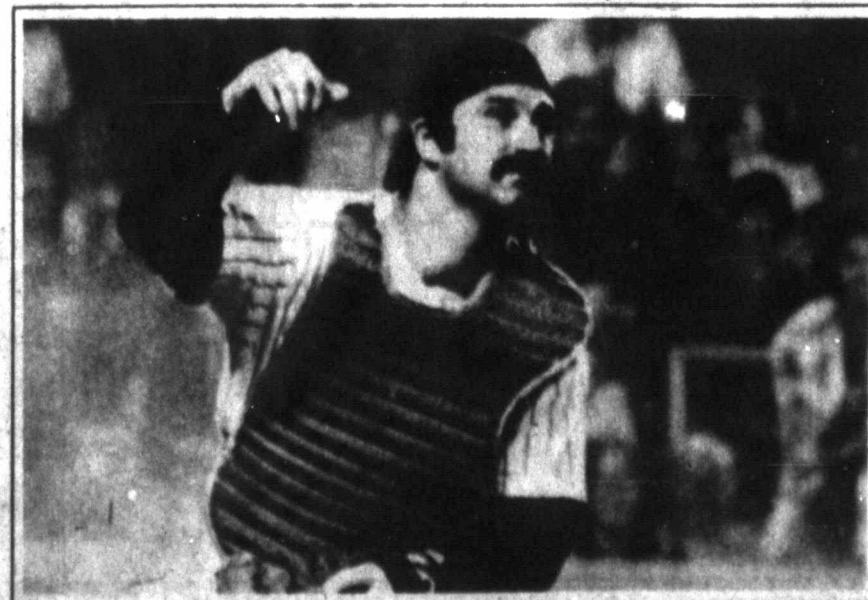

A task force of administration economists says unemployment probably will rise to 8.2 percent next year rather than the 6.9 percent forecast by the administration only three weeks ago. The revised prediction is contained in a new, though not yet publicly announced, assessment of the economy.

Through rain or sleet or whatever...

The Pony Express has progressed considerably as evidenced by this sign of the times at the Leonard Hagerman home on 2216 Zimmers or by this sign of someone's humorous logic. The suggested evolution in mail service probably would speed up the delivery time to the delight of many U.S. citizens. However, a resident may find the strain of climbing roofs and balancing on ladders difficult on a daily basis. Christmas time, another problem, would encourage zooming mini-planes with large amounts of mail to clog up the skies, and instead of late holiday cards ruining the spirit of the time, sonic booms would interrupt the carols and cause the special holiday cakes to fall. The Humane Society will have to be called to treat frustrated dogs that have been deprived of harassing their local mailman. Presently, the only difficulty with this mailbox is experienced by today's traditional postman whose government branch's power lacks only a long arm.

Yankees catcher dies in crash

Thurman Munson, the New York Yankees' All-Star catcher and baseball rookie of the year in 1970, was killed Thursday when he crashed in his private jet while practicing takeoffs at the Canton-Akron airport in Ohio.

Munson was visiting with his wife and three children during a break in the Yankees' schedule.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Covering Commandment.

Barking dogs

Barking animals in the dead of night was an issue overlooked in a recent News editorial on the problem of stray dogs in the city.

The voice of experience speaks when one relates the story of being awakened at all hours of the night because a neighbor's dog finds a particular attraction in the moon and decides to let all of his canine friends in a four-block area know his feelings.

Animals have to be looked after and cared for. They also need training to become good neighbors.

There is nothing more frustrating at night than being roused by a barking or howling animal — and then being forced to listen to several verses of the same tune.

Several people in Pampa have called to let us know their feelings on the subject — and the feelings of dog owners when questioned about their pets by disturbed neighbors.

One woman called to say that she had been kept from sleep virtually the entire summer by howling animals. When the perpetrators were located and their owners questioned by the woman, she was told, "You don't have the right to tell me what to do with my animal."

But if your neighbor spends several sleepless nights because your animal is barking its head off, he or she should have the right to bring it to your attention. And YOU should get the matter corrected!

This woman, plus several others, have found the police department to be powerless over the situation.

The police can't go out and lock up the dog for howling, but what about the owner?

A public nuisance would be arrested. Does a howling dog at three in the morning qualify?

People really don't care about their animals or they would take the time to train them. Several Pampa residents have two, three, four or even five dogs locked up in their yards. How can anyone spend the time to care for that many animals properly? I only have one dog and can't find the time I need to take care of him.

This is a serious problem in Pampa — and the best solution for it is simple. Pet owners should have a little consideration for the people who live around them.

If you don't consider your friends' feelings, it won't be long before you have no friends.

An instant flop

The first attempt to conduct and nationally distribute an instant survey of voter attitudes has proven to be less than a resounding success.

The experiment was conducted in Columbus, Ohio, immediately following President Carter's widely publicized mid-July speech on the energy crisis.

Columbus was chosen because it is the leading test market for a sophisticated two-way cable television produced by a subsidiary of Warner Communications Inc.

Called Qube, the Warner system provides subscribers with a special home console. By pressing buttons on the instrument, viewers can register opinions that are immediately tabulated in a central location.

Columbus residents were asked five questions designed to measure their reaction to Carter's speech, with the results immediately relayed to NBC and then disseminated to that television network's national audience.

But only 8,135 households of the approximately 32,000 wired into the Qube system — slightly more than 25 percent — participated in the unprecedented survey, raising questions about the validity of the sample.

In addition, the National Council on Public Polls, an association of the country's major survey organizations, publicly criticized NBC for using "poor judgment" in publicizing a highly unscientific poll.

While NBC tried to make clear that the survey was neither national nor scientific, said the council, its heavy reliance on the poll in its post-speech program lent the impression there were national implications.

Vietnam fallout

From 1962 until 1970, the U.S. Air Force sprayed 10.6 million gallons of toxic defoliants on jungle areas of South Vietnam. The defoliation program denied cover and food to the enemy. It also exposed many thousands of American soldiers to a suspected cancer-causing substance called dioxin.

Dioxin is a byproduct of the herbicide 2,4-D, one of two herbicides combined to form Agent Orange, the standard defoliant used in Vietnam.

The acknowledged exposure of American troops to Agent Orange, and to the agent's minute amounts of dioxin, may pose only an insignificant threat to the health of Vietnam veterans. Conversely, the traces of dioxin and other elements of Agent Orange that may linger in human tissue could prove to be chemical time bombs.

The trouble is, no one — not the Defense Department, the Veterans Administration, the National Cancer Institute, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Center for Disease Control, or the Department of Health, Education and Welfare — knows for sure. And, until recently, no one seemed very interested in examining the health implications of exposure to dioxin and to Agent Orange.

The government these men served should see to it that they don't have to wait one day longer than necessary for answers to these questions. To date, the response has been lamentably slow.

By ROBERT LEFEVRE

I am told that the ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union) is about to take legal action to preserve the right of an employee to free speech. Naturally, I must applaud. I am in favor of free speech. I think the employee should be able to express his honest opinion whatever it happens to be.

However, in the interest of free speech, it seems to me that this will have to be a two-way street. I have been astonished for quite a number of years to note that the ACLU has never (to my knowledge) come forward to champion the cause of free speech for employers. Ever since the Wagner Act during the early Roosevelt years, employers have been legally estopped from expressing their opinions of labor unions. Union organizers, on the other hand, could malign, bad-mouth and actually circulate lies and half-truths about an employer with scarcely a concern that they would even receive a reprimand.

Perhaps the ACLU inadvertently overlooked this obvious opportunity to champion a down-trodden minority: employers.

In the current climate in the United States one must be very careful not to be guilty of free speech. One stands in danger of being sued if one expresses an opinion about another which is derogatory. To my positive knowledge there are at least two lawsuits pending in this state both of which tie back to the question of whether a person can say what he wishes and not be compelled to pay damages to the person who may have had his delicate libido injured by a report which may, indeed, have been the truth. But an unhappy truth. The motto of our time seems to be: "If you find that a man is a liar or a thief, it is wise to call him an honest man." If so, such a motto makes liars of us all.

But let's examine this proposition of free speech for employees.

If a firm hires an employee, and then the executives of that firm spend a considerable amount of time criticizing, bad-mouthing, expressing contempt, distrust and hatred toward the one they had hired, what would become of the employer-employee relationship? Clearly, it would deteriorate. Indeed, if the employee found that his business superiors were engaged in degrading him publicly, if he had an ounce of character he would resign at once. And rightly so. We would surely question the judgment and the motivation of anyone who continued to work for a firm which spent its time letting the world know how bad a particular employee was.

If the employee is such a rat as to deserve all this abuse, what kind of brains does the employer have, keeping him on the payroll? A relationship of this kind, under this type of stress, would prove distressing to customers. A loss of business could be predicted. If it went on long enough it is conceivable that such a practice might even bankrupt the company.

But the foregoing questions should also be asked in reverse. If the employee spends his time vilifying the firm he works for and the people who hired him, can we predict a long and profitable relationship? Hardly. What are we to think of the employee who verbally abuses his employer but continues to work for him? We must conclude either that the employee is so inept that he cannot get a better job and so continues to work under intolerable conditions; or that the employee is a liar and simply engaged in trying to make a martyr of himself in the eyes of contemporaries, while at the same time clinging to his job.

In this case, as before, the damage to the business itself will not be long in coming. Once more, a protracted association of this sort could so undermine a business that it fails. Then employer and employee, plus the public, all lose.

Where does this argument take us?

It teaches us that the employer-employee relationship, if it is to flourish, must be one of trust and confidence. Both ways. And what it really shows us is the thrust of the ACLU action. The purpose of the ACLU is not to assure free speech. Employees have always had free speech. Employers have not had it for some time. The real purpose of the ACLU is to produce a special kind of protection for employees so that they may badmouth their employers and not be fired in consequence. Any attempt to establish the kind of free speech which is to be of such nature that the consequences of what is said will not occur is to try to create a condition of cause without effect. It is to try to take the meanings out of speech. It means that the employee should be free to speak as he pleases but the employer is not free to react.

To seek to pass a law which says that a person in my trust may abuse me or vilify me as he wishes, but that I may not react, is not to expand freedom, it is rather to enslave me. This would create a system of license, however it is applied. It would mean that either the employee could say what he would and could not be fired or that an employer could say what he would about an employee, but that the employee could not quit.

To protect the employee, the ACLU must argue, the employee must be able to utter any calumny whatever and cannot be fired in consequence. If that is established, then it must follow that the employer should be able to malign his employee, who by virtue of such public abuse, may not quit.

Perhaps it is not inappropriate at this juncture to point out that the hard core of socialist reasoning emerges at this point. The socialist wants people rewarded because they are people, not because of what they do. And the socialist would protect people, not because of what they do, but because they are people.

In this sense, socialism is an attempt to interrupt the law of cause and effect. It is to seek to establish as valid that anyone may do as he pleases, either good or bad, and not feel the effects of the actions (or statements) he originates. At best, such a doctrine is mischievous and at worst, destructive. For the deserving and undeserving are to be treated alike, by a blind, man-made deity, called government. Carried out, it means that most of us will become undeserving, for that is the easy way. And it won't matter one whit, for our rewards will be the same whether our conduct is meritorious or not.

COMMENTARY

Hail to the chief of staff

by donald f. graff

It may be some time before the full meaning of the Carter administration shake-up is apparent.

Is it confirmation of the president as a reborn leader or is it a demonstration of public relations image engineering?

Has it strengthened the crusade against the energy crisis or has it completely demoralized the troops?

Has it positioned Jimmy Carter to do battle more effectively in the 1980 election or has it blown his campaign out of the water before the first primary shots are exchanged?

Whatever history's ultimate answers to those and other questions, one consequence is immediately clear: Amid all the shattered political crockery in Washington, there is also a broken promise — that in 1977 of the newly elected president that he would never have a "chief of staff."

There are some who would say that Hamilton Jordan has been that all along, thanks to his long-standing and well-publicized special relationship with Jimmy Carter. But not officially, not with title. And that can make a great deal of difference in both the clout the position carries and the assurance with which it is wielded, as Jordan has been demonstrating in his initial official acts.

There is nothing new about special relationships between presidents and aides. Woodrow Wilson and his Colonel House, Franklin D. Roosevelt and his Harry Hopkins. But these were more confidants and special-project men, the relationship was special but essentially informal where not entirely unofficial.

The contemporary presidential chief of staff is a creation of Dwight Eisenhower. A staff man as a soldier, he carried the table of organization over into his presidency. As his administrative deputy, he selected Sherman Adams, who as governor of New Hampshire had played a key role in the Eisenhower nomination and election. For six years access to the president for Washington's highest and mightiest was via Adams' office, until in 1958 Eisenhower very reluctantly ended the relationship as a consequence of a now largely forgotten influence-buying scandal.

Successor John Kennedy had no need of an officially designated deputy because he came into office already equipped with a strong right arm in brother Robert. Lyndon Johnson, sublimely certain that he could do everything better than anyone else anyway, made only intermittently effective use of Bill Moyers as a first among equals in his covey of aides.

Richard Nixon was the next president to make full use of the concept and potential of a super-assistant, and with full awareness of what he wanted. H.R. Haldeman was in effect deputy president for domestic affairs, overseeing the day-to-day details of administration and freeing the president to concentrate on broad policymaking, particularly in foreign affairs.

Jimmy Carter's promise not to have a chief of staff was in large part a reaction to the misuse of power, actual or alleged, associated with the Nixon-Haldeman relationship.

He obviously has now had second thoughts on the subject, possibly because he has discovered that being accessible to the members of his administration does not in itself overcome the loneliness of the Oval Office. The more a president attempts to do himself, the more isolated he may become from what is really going on.

His designation of Jordan may serve him well in this respect, clarifying responsibilities, establishing lines of communication and improving administrative effectiveness. In the process, he may be able to devote more time and attention to shaping policy.

There is a price to be paid, however. A chief of staff, faced daily with hard decisions, must be hard-nosed to make them. Being hard-nosed is not usually the route to popularity.

Hamilton Jordan, who has not endeared himself to established Washington in the past two-plus years, is likely to become even less liked, in the capital and possibly around the country, as the remaining months of the (first?) Carter administration dwindle down to a precious few. The dislike could well rub off on Jimmy Carter and instead of being freed of burdensome detail, he may end up being burdened with animosity to his deputy as he heads into the nomination and election campaigns.

He is, however, undoubtedly already aware of these objections to the further specialization of his relationship with Hamilton Jordan. And the answer to them may already have been delivered by Dwight Eisenhower in resisting efforts to separate him from his own unpopular chief of staff.

"I need him."

Short gas supplies save lives

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The current gasoline shortage seems bound to reduce the number of driving accidents and resulting insurance claim losses, says State Insurance Board member Lyndon Olson.

"It just seems to me there are very real evidences of reduction in (accident) exposure due to less availability and affordability of motor fuels," Olson said Thursday at a board hearing on the insurance industry's request for a 21.7 percent average statewide rate hike.

Insurance rates are based in part on how much companies expect to pay in claims. Lower loss estimates would mean less need for rate increases.

An industry spokesman said insurance losses will continue to rise despite the energy crisis.

Inflated medical and repair costs and the popularity of high-risk subcompact cars force insurance companies to seek higher rates, said J. M. Eddins, a Baltimore, Md., insurance actuary.

The 1973-1974 Arab embargo and gas shortage did nothing to reduce car insurance claims in the long run, Eddins said. The board should not repeat its 1974 mistake when rates were set artificially low and jumped 17 percent the next year, he added.

"But in 1974 you did not have the 50 percent rise in gas prices in the preceding year and you didn't have 25 percent of that 50 percent jump occurring in the last three months of the period," Olson said.

"I just don't think it's (the gas shortage) going to go away," he added. "Individuals are changing their driving habits."

The board staff has recommended an 8.9 percent auto insurance rate increase that would be effective Nov. 1. Staff actuary Gaylon Daniel said companies need more revenue because the average claim payment has risen dramatically despite fewer claims being filed.

Dope deal revealed in testimony

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — An El Paso man says he flew to Colombia for Las Vegas gambler Jimmy Chagra, connected for 13.2 pounds of high quality cocaine and put his life on the line as collateral so Chagra could receive the dope on credit.

Henry Wallace testified Wednesday under an immunity from prosecution. Cross-examination by Chagra's attorneys was expected today.

Chagra, 34, is charged with being the kingpin of a conspiracy to smuggle marijuana and cocaine into the United States from Colombia.

He could receive 10 years to life imprisonment if convicted of a "continuing criminal enterprise" count, plus a $100,000 fine and confiscation of any profits he made from the illicit drug trade.

Wallace said he not only helped Chagra smuggle cocaine but also arranged to have 30,000 tons of marijuana — later seized off the Florida coast by federal authorities — shipped from Colombia on Chagra's behalf.

He said he met Chagra in the summer of 1977 in connection with a shipment of marijuana flown from Mexico.

"My first words to Mr. Chagra were, 'Are you the boss? Are you Mr. Chagra?'" Wallace said.

"What did he reply?" asked Assistant U.S. Attorney Carl Pierce of San Antonio.

"Yes," Wallace said.

Some weeks later, he said, Chagra came to Wallace's home in Berino, N.M., and "asked my help with a plan he had ... to import six kilos of cocaine from Colombia." A kilo is 2.2 pounds.

He said Chagra told him he needed the money to pay income taxes. He said Chagra was having trouble with the Internal Revenue Service and was "afraid of being indicted."

Wallace said he rounded up "capital" and an airplane for the venture, then found that Chagra wanted him to go to Colombia to make the connection for the drug. He said he flew to Colombia in October 1977.

"Did you actually obtain the cocaine?" Pierce asked.

"Yes, ... from Raul Royce, with Leonel Gomez Cardenas acting as intermediary," Wallace replied. Royce, he testified, told him Chagra had been "his American connection for several years."

He said the purchase price of the cocaine originally was thought to be $60,000 but turned out to be $180,000 for the six kilos.

There also was a problem of credit, he said, because Gomez "had lost several loads with Jimmy" as a result of plane crashes.

Wallace said he offered himself as collateral to assure Chagra would pay for the cocaine.

"What did they say would happen to the collateral if the debt was not paid?" Pierce asked.

"I would be killed. It wasn't specifically said I would be killed. I would never return to the United States is what they said," answered Wallace, a stocky man with horn-rimmed glasses and a mustache.

He said Chagra and a pilot tried to fly to Colombia about Oct. 21, 1977, but had to make a forced landing in the Bahamas because of engine trouble.

Chagra finally arrived at a dirt air strip on Nov. 1, Wallace testified.

Fingerprints found at death scene

BRADY, Texas (AP) — A crime lab team has lifted several fingerprints from a shotgun and a rifle found near where three persons were shot to death early Thursday as they slept, officers say.

"The DPS crime lab has worked the scene and has some prints, but we haven't eliminated the victims' prints yet to know what we've got," said McCulloch County deputy sheriff Johnny King.

Molly Farr, 55; her daughter, Tandy Bennett, 25; and former Brady high school football star Robert Shirl Gandy, 40, were shot at close range between 3 a.m. and 6 a.m. Thursday in Mrs. Farr's trailer house on a ranch about eight miles north of this Central Texas town.

Funeral services were pending at Wilkerson Funeral Home, where Mrs. Farr, a widow, worked as a receptionist.

Officers said Miss Bennett recently acquired a liquid seed company from her brother-in-law and that Gandy returned to Brady to go to work for her as a truck driver. Gandy was the fullback on Brady's high school team that went to the state finals in 1957, later played at Howard Payne and coached at Conroe.

The bodies were discovered about 9:15 a.m. Thursday when Mackey Weaver, a McCulloch County rancher, came to pick up Miss Bennett, who was helping him work some sheep.

He found the front door open, knocked and got no answer, then walked in and found the women's bodies in their bed, officers said Weaver told them.

The rancher drove 200 yards to a trailer house where another daughter, Nita Ellison, lived with her husband, Jim, and where Gandy's daughter, Lana, 14, was spending the night.

Mrs. Ellison and Mackey went back and found Gandy's body on another bed in a guest room. A shotgun was found beside the women and a .243-caliber rifle beside Gandy. Both had come from a gun cabinet in the trailer house.

Gas blow-out causes fire, power failure

A grass fire and an electrical power failure resulted from a natural gas line blow-out Thursday night in a field east of Borger.

The gas line, known as a re-pressure line, is owned by Getty Oil Co. The line failed and ruptured about six miles east of Borger at about 9:30 p.m., according to C.W. Hawkins, supervisor of Getty's Schafer gasoline plant.

Ignited gas caused a fire that affected a nearby electrical line, said Don Boatman, an engineer with Southwestern Public Service Co. in Borger. The result was a power failure in the immediate area.

"We lost two poles, and that caused the line to fall down," Boatman said. "Our outage wasn't all that serious."

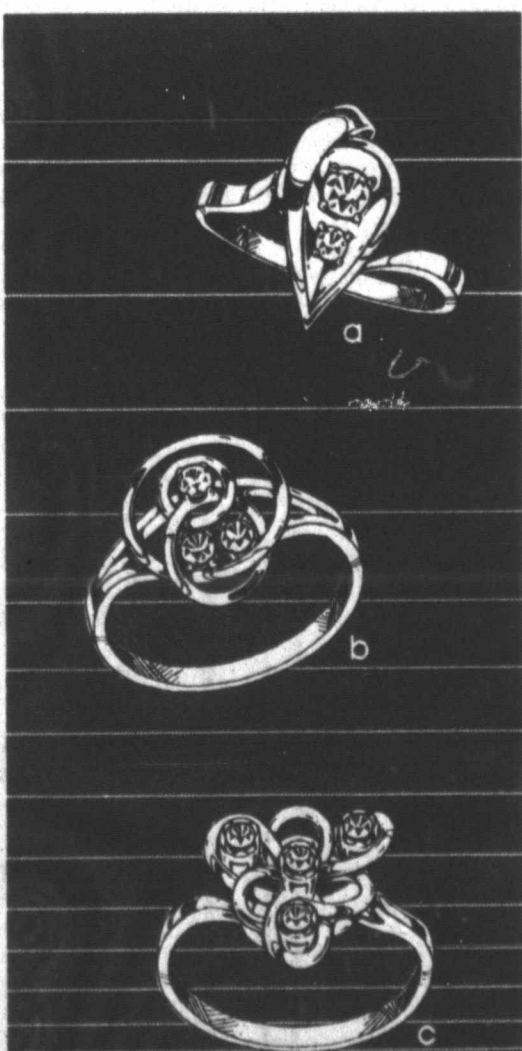

The area affected by the failure contained approximately 45 SPS customers, he said, and is made up mostly of oil leases. About 10 houses were affected, he added.

"We got our first call about 9:35 p.m.," Boatman said. "We had everyone back in service shortly after midnight."

The fire was quickly extinguished, and no other damage was reported.

Basque terrorist campaign called off

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The moderate political-military wing of the Basque separatist movement called off its terrorist campaign against the Spanish tourist industry but the more militant military faction was silent. The government predicted the hard-liners would step up their attacks, at least against police and officials.

In a show of good faith, a spokesman for the political-military wing of ETA directed police to three bombs primed to go off at 10 a.m. today in resort towns along the Mediterranean coast and said the group defused eight other bombs in the same area.

Police disarmed bombs in the towns of Saiou and Sitges, on the Costa Brava of northeast Spain, and a third in the baggage office of a railroad station in Alicante, farther south. The ETA spokesman said police vigilance prevented it from defusing the three bombs.

At a news conference Thursday night in the French town of Bayonne, just across the Spanish border, the spokesman said ETA moderates "deeply regretted the deaths in Madrid" last Sunday, when bombs at two railroad stations and the international airport killed six persons.

The spokesman blamed the government and the police for the fatalities, claiming ETA gave 65 minutes warning of the impending explosions.

ETA, or Euskadi Ta Askatasuna, or Basque Land

and Liberty, has been waging a terrorist campaign for 11 years for the independence of the Basque provinces in northwest Spain.

The guerrilla war escalated this year when the Spanish government drafted legislation to give the Basques autonomous home rule, and opinion polls showed the majority of the people were in favor of accepting it. The terrorists hoped by stepping up the killing to force the government to abandon the autonomy plan, which is to be submitted to the Basques in a referendum in October.

A month ago ETA struck at the government with a new campaign to cripple the vital tourist industry by bombs in tourist centers.

Famed Texas restaurant will become parking lot

HOUSTON (AP) — The noontime crowd waiting outside a tiny storefront on downtown Houston's East Side could pass as a cross section of the city's populace.

Women in designer dress and those in ragged workclothes stand in line with executives in vested suits and construction workers in hardhats.

They stand in the heat and humidity across the street from an X-rated movie house, waiting for a trip into the Bayou City's past — a meal in un-air-conditioned Glatzmaier's seafood restaurant and fish market.

In just a few months, however, the dingy windows beckoning the hungry inside with painted signs promising the freshest of squid, frog legs, octopus and crab will be gone as the restaurant makes way for that ubiquitous harbinger of progress — the parking lot.

Glatzmaier's is one of the last vestiges of Houston's old city market, where it was started in 1907 by John and Mitz Glatzmaier and Johanna Piazza's father.

"This area really was the heart of downtown, the finest section of downtown, at that time," said Mrs. Piazza, a diminutive, curly-haired woman who calls everyone, young and old, "darlin'."

"This whole area was surrounded by the old city market, and all of your better stores were down here," she said. "I really practically grew up there, and it brings back a lot of memories."

The restaurant caught fire about 25 years ago and had to be demolished, she said, so it was moved to its present location.

Through the years, Mrs. Piazza watched the slow deterioration of the area. The old buildings disappeared one by one to be replaced by skyscrapers and wide expanses of asphalt and concrete.

"The older buildings have character and a history behind them, and it's very, very sad to see them go down," she said. "We need to keep the oldness."

Weather

TEXAS

By The Associated Press

Although scattered thunderstorms were forecast for most of Texas, partly cloudy skies and warm temperatures were expected to paint a typical August weather picture today.

During the night, scattered thunderstorms — some very heavy — were reported over West Texas, portions of the Hill Country and North Central Texas. A flash flood warning was in effect during the predawn hours for Dallas and Tarrant counties.

Early today, scattered thunderstorms continued in north central and northeastern portions of the state and in the mountains of far West Texas. A few showers lingered in the Hill Country. Elsewhere skies were clear to partly cloudy.

Predawn temperatures over the state were generally in the 60s in the Panhandle and far West Texas and in the 70s elsewhere. Winds generally were light, blowing at 5 to 15 mph.

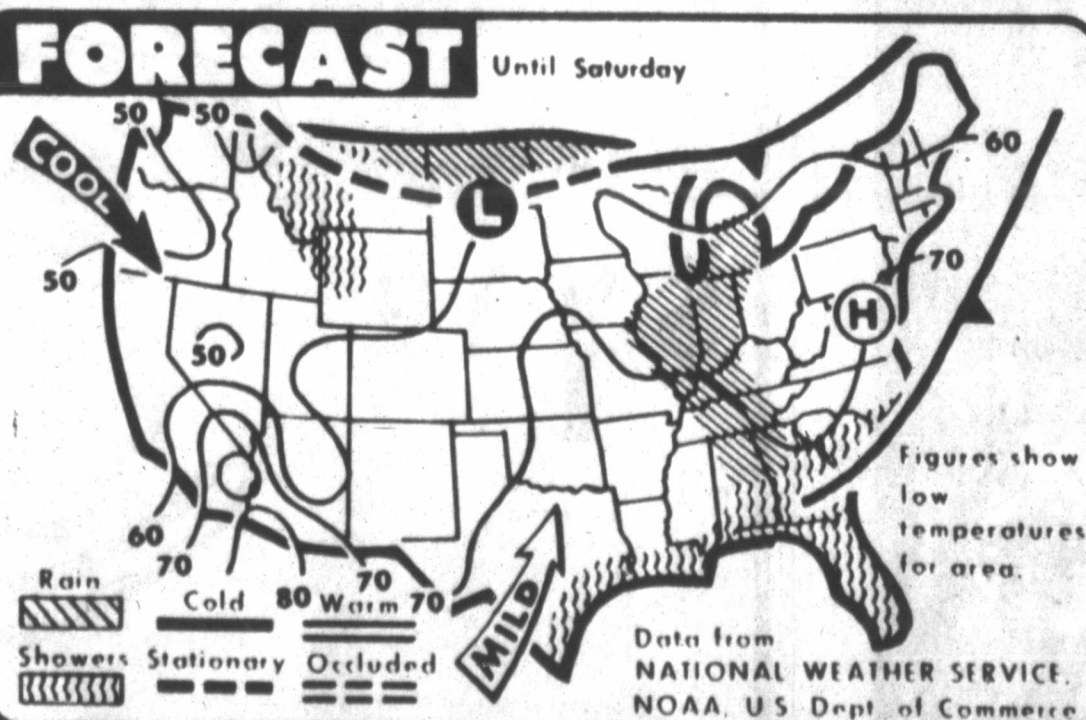

Partly cloudy skies and warm temperatures were expected again for most parts of the state with highs in the upper 80s and 90s. Readings above the century mark were forecast in the Big Bend area. Scattered thundershowers were possible across most of Texas.

NATIONAL

The Wabash River, swollen by two weeks of hard rains that have swept across Indiana, has pushed over its banks, flooding thousands of acres of farmland.

The river broke through a series of earthen levees on Thursday, despite hundreds of volunteers who had come to the area to fill sandbags and man bulldozers in an effort to hold back the raging river.

The area around Griffin, near the Indiana-Illinois state line, was expected to remain flooded through Monday.

SHOWERS ARE expected in the forecast period, Friday until Saturday morning, for the Gulf and south Atlantic coasts. Rain is forecast from northern Georgia - Alabama to the Midwest. Generally cloudy skies are forecast. Most areas will be warm.

Needs of handicapped are being met

Independence gained in apartment complex

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Jerry McMahan is handicapped, but he doesn't live like it.

He and others like him live independently because of a specially designed apartment complex — complete with low-level light switches and a shower stall big enough for a wheelchair.

Just nine years ago McMahan thought he would have to live in a nursing home the rest of his life.

"That's very depressing for a young person," McMahan, now 36, recalls.

He suffered a diving accident at the age of 17 and was left with limited use of his arms and legs. Ten years later, his mother's health deteriorated and he went to live in a nursing home.

He and other young people, confined to the nursing home because of physical handicaps, "always talked about why couldn't we be in an apartment."

The reasons seemed obvious. A handicapped person needs help to reach the top shelf of a closet, turn doorknobs and maneuver a wheelchair through a narrow doorway.

So McMahan and his friends decided to build apartments that would not have those and other obstacles to independence.

They formed a corporation called Our Way, Inc. in 1974 and, with federal and state grants and loans, built a sprawling $3.3 million apartment complex on a 16-acre tract of wooded slopes in southwestern Little Rock.

McMahan is the salaried resident manager.

Sixty-eight of the planned 144 units opened in January. Although the rent is relatively high — $250 per month for a one-bedroom apartment and $307 for two bedrooms — 56 of the units are already occupied. McMahan's office is hectic with the traffic of potential tenants anxious to have a look.

The apartments are like other conventional modern apartments, with a few straggly exceptions.

The light switches and central heating controls are about three feet above floor level. Cabinets and hanging rods in closets are installed at low levels, and the refrigerator and stove are mounted low enough so that a tenant in a wheelchair can work in the kitchen at ease.

In the bathroom, there are plenty of grab bars to help avoid slips, a hand-held shower head, and levers instead of knobs on the water faucets. The shaving mirror is mounted just above the lowered sink.

Doors between the rooms are three feet wide, and there's extra knee space beneath tables and counters. Each apartment has a microphone and speaker system, so that a tenant can call for help to a central answering service 24 hours a day.

Outside, there are ramps instead of steps, and no curbs along the sidewalks.

"A curb can be just like a brick wall if you're in a wheelchair," McMahan explained.

Our Way is not a hospital — "These people are not ill, just handicapped," he said.

Interest in Our Way apartments has been boosted by advertising in national publications and brochures, McMahan said. "We have about 20 (residents) from as many different states."

Barrier-free designs, furnishings improving

For many disabled persons, daily life can be filled with danger and frustration.

The reason is sometimes less their disability than it is the failure of our transportation, housing design and home furnishings products to meet the needs of this population, estimated to number as many as 25 million Americans.

However, according to Dr. Robert Goldenson, a clinical psychologist and author in the field of rehabilitation, the growing field of barrier-free design is bringing real progress in the areas of housing and home furnishings product design.

Goldenson, part of a group which recently designed and hopes to build a barrier-free home in suburban New York, said recently that "the basic information and technology necessary to construct a barrier-free home is advanced, but society's will to produce the buildings is so far less advanced."

New products and technology are coming onto the market more readily now as a result of federal and state laws requiring that new industrial construction accommodate individuals confined to wheelchairs. Furthermore, housing built with Housing and Urban Development (HUD) subsidies is now required to have units set aside for disabled individuals, said Goldenson.

Removal of barriers will not only make it possible for partially disabled individuals to participate more fully in daily life, but will benefit able-bodied individuals as well.

Among some basic changes in home design which Goldenson sees on the horizon are replacing hard-to-turn door knobs and faucet handles with graspable levers.

Other modifications which provide access to the disabled include ramping and grading of steep entryways so that a wheelchair can negotiate them and the elimination of sunken or elevated spaces.

Among products already available, but likely to become more widely used, are amplified telephones for the deaf, phones with pushbuttons rather than dials, and phones that do not have to be picked up to work.

Public elevators with recorded announcements of floors and directions also are being specified with greater frequency.

In kitchen and bathroom design, manufacturers have begun developing products geared to the disabled market.

For example, General Electric has a kitchen for the handicapped, equipped with control switches at the front of the counters, extensive countertop lighting, counters the proper height for use from a wheelchair and a recess beneath them so that a wheelchair can roll right up to the surface.

In bathrooms, grab bars mounted near the toilet and in the shower are available and are recommended as a general safety feature.

Dr. Lamb

by

Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would appreciate your comments on my use of 23 capsules and tablets of assorted vitamins and minerals. I'm attaching a list.

I'm in my 60s and have taken these pills for over three years. My health is perfect and I feel great. My nails, skin, and hair are in better condition than they've been in years. The pills assist in keeping my weight normal as I consume them in place of eating meals. I eat one meal a day and substitute the pills for breakfast and lunch. They satisfy my appetite and cause no elimination and stomach problems.

Now one of my friends is a great admirer of yours and he's always warning me about this practice. Once during a heated discussion he revealed the supremacy in which he holds you by saying, "If Dr. Lamb knew what you were doing, he would roll over in his grave." We both laughed when we realized how far from reality we had strayed, but would you be kind enough to tell us what you really think?

DEAR READER — It's always dangerous to get in the middle of a heated discussion. I'm willing to go a long way to help my readers, but not to the extent of rolling over in my grave — at least not yet.

I've looked through the long list of items you're taking and they're not greatly different than some other people use who get caught up in a vitamin and mineral supplement craze. One of the dangers of such a program is substituting artificial nutrition for natural nutrition. To illustrate, you're taking one potassium tablet that your list says provides 83 milligrams of potassium. Did you know that one good orange will give you around 300 milligrams of potassium? Some people think oranges taste better than a potassium pill anyway.

I'm not even sure that you're getting a completely balanced diet inasmuch as I don't know what you eat for your evening meal, but not eating either breakfast or lunch must mean that you don't have a lot of variety to your diet. I would also wonder if you're getting enough complete good quality protein in your diet.

A 25,000 unit vitamin A pill is at the borderline of a daily toxic intake. You can get by with it for long periods of time but eventually in many individuals this can cause changes affecting the bones and the hair which you are apparently proud of. If you're anything like a normal diet at all, you'll also be getting vitamin A from other important food sources.

I don't think you can expect any major health benefits from such items as super ginseng, garlic oil capsules, juniper berries, natural bee pollen and yucca herbal food, but I don't expect that they're going to cause you any harm either.

I'm sending you The Health Letter number 4-6, Balanced Diet. Recommended Daily Dietary Allowances. This will give you the basic information on what the National Academy of Sciences thinks your diet should provide. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents by check or coin with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me at P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019.

You may be able to check the information in this issue against labels and other information you have on the pills you're taking and the foods in your diet to determine whether or not you might have a deficiency.

CEA attends economist meeting

Elaine Houston, Gray County Extension Agent, is in Temple attending the 36th annual meeting of the Texas Association of Extension Home Economists.

"Dimensions in Creativity" is the theme for the three-day meet, which ends today.

Workshops and speakers focused on ways to help the Texas public with consumer problems, inflation fighting, housing issues, foods and nutrition, clothing, family living, health and recreation needs. Professional improvement — searching for creative, dynamic ways to help people help themselves — was at the heart of the conference.

Meetings also were aimed at strengthening the educational programs in home economics and related areas that agents implement in Texas counties. Keynote speakers for the conference included Dr. Jennie C. Kitching, assistant director for home economics with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, who addressed the association on "And Now Tomorrow, The Challenge."

Pacific art on display in Washington

The exhibition "The Art of the Pacific Islands" is on view at the National Gallery of Art through Oct. 14.

The show includes more than 400 objects lent from over 80 public and private collections in the United States, Europe, Australia and New Zealand.

The gallery says, "Pacific Islands art, which was not discovered by Europeans until the 18th century and was untouched by European influence until contact with Captain James Cook and the China traders of the 18th century, is the subject of this exhibition."

Miss Winborne enters pageant

A senior at West Texas State University is one of Pampa's hometown contestants in the annual Miss Top O' Texas scholarship pageant.

Jamie Christa Winborne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Speck Winborne of Pampa, will perform a jazz dance to "You Ought To Be Having Fun" by Tower of Power for her talent number during the contest, scheduled for Aug. 18 in M. K. Brown Auditorium.

The 21-year-old, sponsored by Noon Kiwanis Club of Pampa, is earning a degree in education, an area she would like to pursue as a career.

A 1976 Pampa High School graduate, she has been a WTSU twirler for three years and a member of Tau Beta Sigma and Chi Omega.

The Dean's honor list student is interested in sewing, dancing, twirling, water and snow skiing and riding motorcycles.

Area residents return from Niagara, Canada trip

A number of area residents returned last week from a chartered bus tour to Niagara Falls and northern Canada.

The group, which toured for 17 days, also traveled by ship and train on the Canadian leg of the trip after paved highways became scarce.

Those touring from Pampa were Mrs. Mabel Sailor, Mrs. Lena Mae Woods, Mrs. Ethel Stilwell, Mr. and Mrs. David Rife, Mrs. Alice Forman and Mrs. Veda Alverson.

Canadian travelers were Mrs.

Margaret McClure, Mrs. Virgie Davidson, Mr. and Mrs. Loicie Etheredge, and Mr. and Mrs. Arleigh Hoobler.

Also making the trip were Mr. and Mrs. John Horner of Skellytown, Mrs. Opal Davidson and Mrs. Willie Mae Stevens of Wheeler, Mrs. Thelma Pool and Mrs. Mertie Shaffer of Groom, and Mrs. Ella Hudson of Perryton.

In the group from Miami were Mr. and Mrs. John Shearer, Mr. and Mrs. Elmo Gill, Mrs. Verna Fav Holland, Mrs. Bonnie Williamson, Mrs. Esther Bowers, Mrs. Mary Byrum, Mrs. Alpha McCusiston, Mrs. Clara Hoffer, Mrs. Vera Murphy and Mrs. Addie May Lard.

Stowkowski wills entire collection

John de Lancie, director of the Curtis Institute of Music, says that under the terms of the will of Leopold Stowkowski, the conductor's entire library of scores and parts and his collection of musical instruments will be permanently housed at the institute.

The Stowkowski library includes hundreds of orchestral scores and parts, as well as the conductor's celebrated transcriptions, many in several versions.

It is estimated that it will take a year to organize and catalogue the collection.

Victim still critical

A Pampa youth remains in critical condition at a Dallas hospital but is improving after being severely burned Tuesday in a natural gas explosion here.

Earlie Jackson III, 14, of 1117 Huff Road received burns on more than a third of his body from the explosion, which occurred early Tuesday night at a vacant house at 1148 Neel Road. Earlie was transferred that night from Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo to the Parkland Hospital burn center in Dallas.

"He's feeling a little better," a hospital nurse said this morning. She added that swelling caused by the boy's burns has gone down.

Police have not determined what Earlie was doing at the time of the explosion, or whether he was inside or outside the house. Det. Lynn Brown, who is investigating the explosion, said he plans to talk with the boy before concluding his investigation.

Brown is probing arson as a possible cause of the explosion.

Basque terrorist campaign called off

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The moderate political-military wing of the Basque separatist movement called off its terrorist campaign against the Spanish tourist industry but the more militant military faction was silent. The government predicted the hard-liners would step up their attacks, at least against police and officials.

In a show of good faith, a spokesman for the political-military wing of ETA directed police to three bombs primed to go off at 10 a.m. today in resort towns along the Mediterranean coast and said the group defused eight other bombs in the same area.

Police disarmed bombs in the towns of Salou and Sitges, on the Costa Brava of northeast Spain, and a third in the baggage office of a railroad station in Alicante, farther south. The ETA spokesman said police vigilance prevented it from defusing the three bombs.

At a news conference Thursday night in the French town of Bayonne, just across the Spanish border, the spokesman said ETA moderates "deeply regretted the deaths in Madrid" last Sunday, when bombs at two railroad stations and the international airport killed six persons.

The spokesman blamed the government and the police for the fatalities, claiming ETA gave 65 minutes warning of the impending explosions.

ETA, or Euskadi Ta Askatasuna, or Basque Land

and Liberty, has been waging a terrorist campaign for 11 years for the independence of the Basque provinces in northwest Spain.

The guerrilla war escalated this year when the Spanish government drafted legislation to give the Basques autonomous home rule, and opinion polls showed the majority of the people were in favor of accepting it. The terrorists hoped by stepping up the killing to force the government to abandon the autonomy plan, which is to be submitted to the Basques in a referendum in October.

A month ago ETA struck at the government with a new campaign to cripple the vital tourist industry by bombs in tourist centers.

CURIOSITY HAS taken this youngster to the first level of the boat trailer. After inspection, a climb to the above boats is possible, but looks like a strenuous chore.

Famed Texas restaurant will become parking lot

HOUSTON (AP) — The noontime crowd waiting outside a tiny storefront on downtown Houston's East Side could pass as a cross section of the city's populace.

Women in designer dress and those in ragged workclothes stand in line with executives in vested suits and construction workers in hardhats.

They stand in the heat and humidity, across the street from an X-rated movie house, waiting for a trip into the Bayou City's past — a meal in un-air-conditioned Glatzmaier's seafood restaurant and fish market.

In just a few months, however, the dingy windows beckoning the hungry inside with painted signs promising the freshest of scrod, frog legs, octopus and crab will be gone as the restaurant makes way for that ubiquitous harbinger of progress — the parking lot.

Glatzmaier's is one of the last vestiges of Houston's old city market, where it was started in 1907 by John and Mitz Glatzmaier and Johanna Piazza's father.

"This area really was the heart of downtown, the finest section of downtown, at that time," said Mrs. Piazza, a diminutive, curly-haired woman who calls everyone, young and old, "darlin'."

"This whole area was surrounded by the old city market, and all of your better stores were down here," she said. "I really practically grew up there, and it brings back a lot of memories."

The restaurant caught fire about 25 years ago and had to be demolished, she said, so it was moved to its present location.

Through the years, Mrs. Piazza watched the slow deterioration of the area. The old buildings disappeared one by one to be replaced by skyscrapers, and wide expanses of asphalt and concrete.

"The older buildings have character and a history behind them, and it's very, very sad to see them go down," she said. "We need to keep the oldness."

Weather

TEXAS

By The Associated Press

Although scattered thunderstorms were forecast for most of Texas, partly cloudy skies and warm temperatures were expected to paint a typical August weather picture today.

During the night, scattered thunderstorms — some very heavy — were reported over West Texas, portions of the Hill Country and North Central Texas. A flash flood warning was in effect during the predawn hours for Dallas and Tarrant counties.

Early today, scattered thunderstorms continued in north central and northeastern portions of the state and in the mountains of far West Texas. A few showers lingered in the Hill Country. Elsewhere skies were clear to partly cloudy.

Predawn temperatures over the state were generally in the 60s in the Panhandle and far West Texas and in the 70s elsewhere. Winds generally were light, blowing at 5 to 15 mph.

Partly cloudy skies and warm temperatures were expected again for most parts of the state with highs in the upper 80s and 90s. Readings above the century mark were forecast in the Big Bend area. Scattered thundershowers were possible across most of Texas.

NATIONAL

The Wabash River, swollen by two weeks of hard rains that have swept across Indiana, has pushed over its banks, flooding thousands of acres of farmland.

The river broke through a series of earthen levees on Thursday, despite hundreds of volunteers who had come to the area to fill sandbags and man bulldozers in an effort to hold back the raging river.

The area around Griffin, near the Indiana-Illinois state line, was expected to remain flooded through Monday.

SHOWERS ARE expected in the forecast period, Friday until Saturday morning, for the Gulf and south Atlantic coasts. Rain is forecast from northern Georgia - Alabama to the Midwest. Generally cloudy skies are forecast. Most areas will be warm.

Needs of handicapped are being met

Independence gained in apartment complex

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Jerry McMahan is handicapped, but he doesn't live like it.

He and others like him live independently because of a specially designed apartment complex — complete with low-level light switches and a shower stall big enough for a wheelchair.

Just nine years ago McMahan thought he would have to live in a nursing home the rest of his life.

"That's very depressing for a young person," McMahan, now 36, recalls.

He suffered a diving accident at the age of 17 and was left with limited use of his arms and legs. Ten years later, his mother's health deteriorated and he went to live in a nursing home.

He and other young people, confined to the nursing home because of physical handicaps, "always talked about why couldn't we be in an apartment."

The reasons seemed obvious. A handicapped person needs help to reach the top shelf of a closet, turn doorknobs and maneuver a wheelchair through a narrow doorway.

So McMahan and his friends decided to build apartments that would not have those and other obstacles to independence.

They formed a corporation called Our Way, Inc. in 1974 and, with federal and state grants and loans, built a sprawling $3.3 million apartment complex on a 16-acre tract of wooded slopes in southwestern Little Rock.

McMahan is the salaried resident manager.

Sixty-eight of the planned 144 units opened in January. Although the rent is relatively high — $250 per month for a one-bedroom apartment and $307 for two bedrooms — 56 of the units are already occupied. McMahan's office is hectic with the traffic of potential tenants anxious to have a look.

The apartments are like other conventional modern apartments, with a few strategic exceptions:

The light switches and central heating controls are about three feet above floor level. Cabinets and hanging rods in closets are installed at low levels, and the refrigerator and stove are mounted low enough so that a tenant in a wheelchair can work in the kitchen at ease.

In the bathroom, there are plenty of grab bars to help avoid slips, a hand-held shower head, and levers instead of knobs on the water faucets. The shaving mirror is mounted just above the lowered sink.

Doors between the rooms are three feet wide, and there's extra knee space beneath tables and counters.

Each apartment has a microphone and speaker system, so that a tenant can call for help to a central answering service 24 hours a day.

Outside, there are ramps instead of steps, and no curbs along the sidewalks.

"A curb can be just like a brick wall if you're in a wheelchair," McMahan explained.

Our Way is not a hospital — "These people are not ill, just handicapped," he said.

Interest in Our Way apartments has been boosted by advertising in national publications and brochures. McMahan said, "We have about 20 (residents) from as many different states."

Barrier-free designs, furnishings improving

For many disabled persons, daily life can be filled with danger and frustration.

The reason is sometimes less their disability than it is the failure of our transportation, housing design and home furnishings products to meet the needs of this population, estimated to number as many as 25 million Americans.

However, according to Dr. Robert Goldenson, a clinical psychologist and author in the field of rehabilitation, the growing field of barrier-free design is bringing real progress in the areas of housing and home furnishings product design.

Goldenson, part of a group which recently designed and hopes to build a barrier-free home in suburban New York, said recently that "the basic information and technology necessary to construct a barrier-free home is advanced, but society's will to produce the buildings is so far less advanced."

New products and technology are coming onto the market more readily now as a result of federal and state laws requiring that new industrial construction accommodate individuals confined to wheelchairs. Furthermore, housing built with Housing and Urban Development (HUD) subsidies is now required to have units set aside for disabled individuals, said Goldenson.

Removal of barriers will not only make it possible for partially disabled individuals to participate more fully in daily life, but will benefit able-bodied individuals as well.

Among some basic changes in home design which Goldenson sees on the horizon are replacing hard-to-turn door knobs and faucet handles with graspable levers.

Other modifications which provide access to the disabled include ramping and grading of steep entryways so that a wheelchair can negotiate them and the elimination of sunken or elevated spaces.

Among products already available, but likely to become more widely used, are amplified telephones for the deaf, phones with pushbuttons rather than dials, and phones that do not have to be picked up to work.

Public elevators with recorded announcements of floors and directions also are being specified with greater frequency.

In kitchen and bathroom design, manufacturers have begun developing products geared to the disabled market.

For example, General Electric has a kitchen for the handicapped, equipped with control switches at the front of the counters, extensive countertop lighting, counters the proper height for use from a wheelchair and a recess beneath them so that a wheelchair can roll right up to the surface.

In bathrooms, grab bars mounted near the toilet and in the shower are available and are recommended as a general safety feature.

Dr. Lamb

by

Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would appreciate your comments on my use of 23 capsules and tablets of assorted vitamins and minerals. I'm attaching a list.

I'm in my 60s and have taken these pills for over three years. My health is perfect and I feel great. My nails, skin, and hair are in better condition than they've been in years. The pills assist in keeping my weight normal as I consume them in place of eating meals. I eat one meal a day and substitute the pills for breakfast and lunch. They satisfy my appetite and cause no elimination and stomach problems.

Now one of my friends is a great admirer of yours and he's always warning me about this practice. Once during a heated discussion he revealed the supremacy in which he holds you by saying, "If Dr. Lamb knew what you were doing, he would roll over in his grave." We both laughed when we realized how far from reality we had strayed, but would you be kind enough to tell us what your really think?

DEAR READER — It's always dangerous to get in the middle of a heated discussion. I'm willing to go a long way to help my readers, but not to the extent of rolling over in my grave — at least not yet.

I've looked through the long list of items you're taking and they're not greatly different than some other people use who get caught up in a vitamin and mineral supplement craze. One of the dangers of such a program is substituting artificial nutrition for natural nutrition. To illustrate, you're taking one potassium tablet that your list says provides 83 milligrams of potassium. Did you know that one good orange will give you around 300 milligrams of potassium? Some people think oranges taste better than a potassium pill anyway.

I'm not even sure that you're getting a completely balanced diet inasmuch as I don't know what you eat for your evening meal, but not eating either breakfast or lunch must mean that you don't have a lot of variety to your diet. I would also wonder if you're getting enough complete good quality protein in your diet.

A 25,000 unit vitamin A pill is at the borderline of a daily toxic intake. You can get by with it for long periods of time but eventually in many individuals this can cause changes affecting the bones and the hair which you are apparently proud of. If you're anything like a normal diet at all, you'll also be getting vitamin A from other important food sources.

I don't think you can expect any major health benefits from such items as super ginger, garlic oil capsules, juniper berries, natural bee pollen and yucca herbal food, but I don't expect that they're going to cause you any harm either.

I'm sending you The Health Letter number 4 - 6, Balanced Diet, Recommended Daily Dietary Allowances. This will give you the basic information on what the National Academy of Sciences thinks your diet should provide. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents by check or coin with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me at P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019.

You may be able to check the information in this issue against labels and other information you have on the pills you're taking and the foods in your diet to determine whether or not you might have a deficiency.

CEA attends economist meeting

Elaine Houston, Gray County Extension Agent, is in Temple attending the 36th annual meeting of the Texas Association of Extension Home Economists.

"Dimensions in Creativity" is the theme for the three-day meet, which ends today.

Workshops and speakers focused on ways to help the Texas public with consumer problems, inflation fighting, housing issues, foods and nutrition, clothing, family living, health and recreation needs. Professional improvement — searching for creative, dynamic ways to help people help themselves — was at the heart of the conference.

Meetings also were aimed at strengthening the educational programs in home economics and related areas that agents implement in Texas counties. Keynote speakers for the conference included Dr. Jennie C. Kitching, assistant director for home economics with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, who addressed the association on "And Now Tomorrow, The Challenge."

Pacific art on display in Washington

The exhibition "The Art of the Pacific Islands" is on view at the National Gallery of Art through Oct. 14.

The show includes more than 400 objects lent from over 80 public and private collections in the United States, Europe, Australia and New Zealand.

The gallery says, "Pacific Islands art, which was not discovered by Europeans until the 16th century and was untouched by European influence until contact with Captain James Cook and the China traders or the 18th century, is the subject of this exhibition."

Miss Winborne enters pageant

A senior at West Texas State University is one of Pampa's hometown contestants in the annual Miss Top O' Texas scholarship pageant.

Jamie Christal Winborne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Speck Winborne of Pampa, will perform a jazz dance to "You Ought To Be Having Fun" by Tower of Power for her talent number during the contest, scheduled for Aug. 18 in M. K. Brown Auditorium.

The 21-year-old, sponsored by Noon Kiwanis Club of Pampa, is earning a degree in education, an area she would like to pursue as a career.

A 1976 Pampa High School graduate, she has been a WTSU twirler for three years and a member of Tau Beta Sigma and Chi Omega.

The Dean's honor list student is interested in sewing, dancing, twirling, water and snow skiing and riding motorcycles.

Pampa artist's works in show

Pampa artist Peggy Palmitier will exhibit some of her copper enameled artwork this weekend during the "Jubilee of the Arts" in Amarillo.

Mrs. Palmitier's booth will feature floral miniatures, beads, pendants, and framed still lifes. The larger pieces on exhibit were done using a cloisonne technique, where copper wire outlines the detail of the copper enamel design.

The Pampa woman first was introduced to the copper enameling process more than 20 years ago, when she was a guest at a Paint, Pot and Piddle Club meeting. She bought her own kiln for the craft in the late 1960s.

A few years later, she entered slides of her works — in three different craft areas — in the jury selection for the Texas Arts and Crafts Festival at Kerrville. But all her efforts were rejected, so she decided to focus her efforts in one direction.

Her fondness for copper enameling led to intense concentration in that area, and in 1973 — after again submitting slides — she was accepted as an exhibitor for the Kerrville show.

Mrs. Palmitier went through the same jury procedure to exhibit her artwork this weekend in the Amarillo show. Each individual exhibitor submits slides of his works, which are then reviewed by a jury of artists, craftsmen, and teachers. The panel decides whether to accept or reject the exhibitor for the show and sale.

Copper enameling objects will be displayed in the Pampa artist's booth, but about 80 artists from several states will be represented at the art show, to be held at the Amarillo Art Center.

Hours for the show and sale are 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Saturday and 12 noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $1.50 for adults and 75 cents for students; children under six will be admitted free.

"Jubilee of the Arts" is sponsored by the Amarillo Art Alliance to benefit the Art Center.

A SEA OF ENAMEL surrounds Peggy Palmitier, Pampa artist who will exhibit her copper enameled works at the Jubilee of the Arts show in Amarillo this weekend. The artist, who developed a keen interest in the enameling technique more than 20 years ago, is among some 80 area artists displaying their individual works.

DEAR ABBY

Reader is alienated by foreigners

By Abigail Van Buren
DEAR ABBY: I believe in helping foreigners by sending them aid in disasters such as earthquakes, floods and famine, but when I see them overrunning our country by the hundreds of thousands, crowding us and taking jobs that should go to Americans, I object!

We feed, clothe and educate them when many of our own go without. Those bleeding-heart liberals are going to ruin this country if they don't get tough and shut down immigration until we can take care of our own. Charity begins at home! I welcome your response.

AMERICA FIRST!
DEAR AMERICA FIRST: Unless you are a direct descendant of the American Indian, you would not be here if your forebears hadn't sought refuge from another country.

It would take more space than I am allowed in this column to explain why we must accept these homeless victims of war and oppression.

An American poet and essayist, Emma Lazarus (1849-1887), said it eloquently in her poem, "The New Colossus." It appears on the Statue of Liberty and reads, in part:

"Give me your tired, your poor,

Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free.

The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.

Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me.

I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

DEAR ABBY: I work in an office with both men and women. When a co-worker says, "I heard a cute joke last night, but it's a little dirty. Do you want to hear it?" I say, "Sure," because I don't want to be known as a goody-two-shoes.

Well, the joke is always dirtier than I thought it would be, and I'm embarrassed.

The women as well as the men in this office tell some pretty raunchy jokes, but I can't suddenly tell them I hate that kind of language. So how do I get my point across without sounding holier than thou?

OFFENDED IN CASA GRANDE, ARIZ.
DEAR OFFENDED: When you're asked if you want to hear a cute joke, be honest and say, "Not if it's X-rated."

DEAR ABBY: I'm going with a terrific guy. He has a driver's license but doesn't own a car.

I have to pick him up at his place whenever we go anywhere. It didn't bother me at first, but it does since he told me the reason he doesn't have a car isn't because he can't afford one; he just doesn't want the headache of owning one.

He lives within walking distance of his job, so he walks to work and back, but when he wants to go somewhere, guess who takes him.

The problem is that I'm kind of old-fashioned. I think a guy should pick up the girl — most of the time anyway.

Should I forget my values and keep providing transportation? Or should I tell him how I feel? Sign me...

RELUCTANT DRIVER

DEAR RELUCTANT: Tell him how you feel before your resentment goes into overdrive.

DEAR ABBY: I have just started going steady with a guy I've been dating for a year.

What I want to know is, just how far is a girl expected to go when she is going steady?

I mean, how much do guys in general expect from this kind of relationship?

CONFIDENTIAL, PLEASE

DEAR CON: What "guys in general" expects is not relevant. What your guy expects is. Ask him.

Principal steps on squirt gun

By Robert Wallace, Ed.D.

Dr. Wallace: Right before school was out for the summer, my friend was playing around with a squirt gun when our principal came over and said, "Squirt guns make me hostile." Then he threw it off the floor and stepped on it.

What would you have done if you were a high school principal? — Chris, Tacoma, Wash.

Chris: Let's not overlook a most important part in your story. The squirt gun should not have been on campus in the first place.

I would have taken the squirt gun and returned it to the parents if they would have made an appointment with me to pick it up after school one day.

Dr. Wallace: I've liked this one guy for quite awhile but we are not going steady.

On a recent skiing trip, I met another guy. We have become good friends and we have gone out together.

Here's my problem. All my friends are mad at me and are calling me a two-timer.

I'm confused because I don't want to be tied down but I don't want to be known as a two-timer. What should I do? — Katie, Santa Barbara, Calif.

Katie: One of the nice things about not going steady is that you can date whomever you want. Date both guys and don't worry what your good friends say. They just might be a little bit jealous.

Dr. Wallace: My girlfriend informed me that a certain boy plans to ask me out and I intend to say yes. He is a terrific guy.

The problem is, how do I tell my parents? I'm 14 and have not yet been allowed to date.

I've thought of not telling my parents. Should I or shouldn't I, and if I should, how do I tell them? — Jeri, Windsor, Ontario, Canada

Jeri: Mothers always have a way of finding out things. It's an amazing phenomenon — so you had better tell Mom.

Try this method: Ask Mom if she remembers her first big date. Then tell her a handsome young boy is going to ask you out. Hopefully, Mom will remember and relent.

Send questions to Dr. Robert Wallace, Tween 12 and 20, P.O. Box 190, San Diego, Calif. 92112. For Dr. Wallace's teen booklet, "Happiness or Despair", please send $1 and a 28-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope to Dr. Wallace at the same address.

Disability payments shut off if return to work

Some people have the mistaken idea that everyone who qualifies for social security disability payments receives benefits for the rest of their lives, says Howard Weatherly, manager of the Pampa Social Security office.

This idea probably came about because of the definition of disability in the Social Security Law. To qualify for monthly social security benefits, an applicant must have a disability that is medically determinable, and is expected to last 12 months or longer, or result in death.

The law requires the Social Security Administration to furnish the State Vocational Rehabilitation Commission the names and addresses of all applicants for social security disability benefits. Vocational Rehabilitation also receives information regarding the extent of their disability, work experience, and educational background.

Rehabilitation will help the individual with counseling, additional training, and sometimes assist him in obtaining employment that he can perform in spite of his handicap.

Many times young workers who have never done anything but manual labor suffer disabilities that prevent them from ever doing this type work again. However, it is frequently possible for them to secure training that enables them to work at jobs that do not require strenuous physical exertion.

Weatherly says some workers make complete medical recovery and return to their old jobs without any outside assistance.

Express personality in clothes you wear

Develop a personal style to express your own individuality in the clothes you wear, urges Marjorie Baker, Extension clothing specialist at Oklahoma State University.

"By studying your wardrobe, you can see what you like about clothes you enjoy wearing and what you dislike about ones you do not wear," Mrs. Baker says.

"Ideas you get from this study will make good guidelines for your next shopping trip."

"Think about your figure type and personal coloring as you study fashion and develop your own good taste by analyzing yourself and deciding which features to emphasize and which to hide."

Amarillo theaters offer football flicks

Football season, believe it or not, is upon us, and the cinematic descendant of Burt Reynolds' "Semi- Tough" - "North Dallas Forty" starring Nick Nolte - opens tonight at the Western Plaza Cinema II. Next door at WP's Cinema I, another sporting event: Ryan O'Neal and Barbara Streisand continue to rub noses in "The Main Event," one more boxing movie. O'Neal's nose is naturally no match...

The real main event, however, is Sylvester Stallone's return in "Rocky II" at the Showplace 4. But for those who prefer to be pummeled by suspense rather than fists, there's the "Amityville Horror" - also at the Showplace. This one is drawing large crowds - so plan to arrive early.

In fact, for movie gluttons who occasionally like a double or triple header, following a 7 p.m. look at "Amityville" with a trip to the 9:50 "Moonraker" show at Plitt's Cinema 2 seems like a good idea. Roger Moore is the James in this latest Bond which takes a swipe or two at Star Wars. The infamous Jaws is on Bond's side this time. For more suspense see "Bloodline," a movie wherein the Agatha Christi of "Murder on the Orient Express" seems to meet the Harold Robbins of "The Betsy." A pharmaceutical tycoon is murdered, his daughter takes over his massive company, and someone - or everyone - seems out to do her in. We get to guess along the way. What fun!

Gluttons for punishment will want, of course, to avail themselves of the opportunity to see another "Airport" movie at Mann Theaters. —Dan Lackey

MOVIES

TV's ingratiating Kotter, Gabriel Kaplan, comes to the Capri Theater tonight in "Fastbreak," the movie in which Gabe temporarily leads a different band of "Sweathogs" - basketball players. Those who like the disarming Kaplan - the younger generation's Bob Newhart - should enjoy Gabe's celluloid fantasy about being a triumphant basketball coach.

Side one at the Top O' Texas Drive-In features George C. Scott in "Hardcore," an inept film about a man who loses his daughter to a ring of pornographic film makers. The movie people want us to hold our noses in the face of the grimy street life. But the central concern of the movie - Scott's missing daughter - is obscured by the subtle sermonizing against hard core pornography. The movie itself is actually what is sometimes called soft core pornography: It gives us prurient peeks at the hard core world it "loves to loathe."

In terms of war movies about Vietnam, "The Boys in Company C" which follows "Hardcore," is somewhere between John Wayne's "The Green Berets" and the recent Academy Award winning "The Deer Hunter." In other words, it's a traditionally sentimental movie about men in battle - but without any political convictions. It's very funny at the beginning.

One in a hoard of horror movies, "The Brood" starring Sandy Dennis, plays this weekend on side two of Top O' Texas. No one can look quite as frightened as a frightened Sandy Dennis so this one could be a chiller.

'Wild Things' surprisingly simple

"Wild Things," a surprisingly simple and fascinating book by Dion Henderson, contains perceptive reflections on foxes, butterflies, skunks, toads, ferns, a whole bunch of trees, rabbits, raccoons, snails, worms, dandelions, turkeys, mosquitoes, dragonflies, mudpuppies, bees and yuccas.

And - oh, yes - birds. Henderson follows up one of his previous books, "A Season of Birds," with further observations about avian life.

The book contains 36 one-page essays which are amply illustrated with drawings by Meryl Meisler. Each essay has the relaxed intensity of a haiku poem and elicits the same contemplative pleasure. Henderson is not only inspired about "wild things," he's

Henry involved in missionary program

Clinton Henry, who will be a Senior at West Texas University, is doing his Texas Baptist Student Missionary work in Jackson, Wyoming. He is one of the twenty boys and girls working at the Teton Mt. Resort. Clinton, three boys and 4 girls are staying with the Foster family. Mr. and Mrs. Randy Foster have two small boys. Mrs. Foster cooks for twenty boys and girls who all work in Jackson. They are from Minn., Ga., Okla., Texas and other parts.

A group of 10 started to climb the Teton Mt. Only 4 and the guide made it. They were on the trip for four days, of which two were spent on top of the mountain. They have their names in a book for climbing to the top of Teton Mt.

Clinton has a campfire service and Sunday morning service every week, along with his other duties.

He will be coming home the middle of August. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Henry and the brother of Curtiss Henry.

CHURCH

Students receive honors

Rev. Timothy Koenig of Zion Lutheran Church announced today that 3 of their students have been inducted into The Society of Distinguished American High School Students. The students who were inducted are: Stormy Shultz, Lori Koenig and W. T. Shultz III.

The Society, which is one of the nation's foremost high school honoraries, inducted the students because of their demonstrated excellence in scholastic leadership and civic achievement, according to Rev. Koenig.

The National Awards Program is sponsored by sixty colleges from across the country. Thousands of dollars in scholarship funds from these institutions are made available to Society members each year. Sponsor Koenig received a National Appreciation Award from the Society on behalf of the students and stated, "I am extremely proud of these exceptional students and the honor that they have received. It is a reward and should also be accepted as a challenge to them to continue their course of excellence."

One of the Society's guiding principles is to promote both academic and civic achievement on the high school level by recognizing students in its Membership Registry. The Society of Distinguished American High School Students, which is published annually and distributed nationwide.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Scientists and theologians from around the world say that they sense "the prospect of a new and more comprehensive vision of reality" both in science and Christianity.

In different ways, "it is a vision of a wider truth and coherence which lies within our reach" say representatives of the two fields. But this prospect, they add, depends on both sides freeing themselves from "sterile conflicts and protective armor" that have crippled past relationships.

A report issued at the close last week of a 12-day World Conference on Faith, Science and the Future traced a history between the two fields of initial harmony, then battle, mutual misassumptions and finally a 20th century "uneasy truce."

The report on relationships of science and faith was drawn up by a section headed by Lutheran theologian Philip Hefner of Chicago and physicist D. Enlio Ajakaiye of Nigeria.

It was one of 10 sectional reports on various issues, including technology, political power, energy shortages, urban life, population problems, genetic manipulation, hunger, economics, social ethics, nature and God.

The conference, sponsored by the interdenominational World Council of Churches at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, sought to point ways toward a just, sustainable society on a planet of shrinking, sometimes despoiled resources.

Modern technology "while surely part of our glory, is also part of our tragedy," one report says. "As we peer into the future we catch a glimpse of much that fills us with fear and dread, but we perceive also that the future is God's."

"Both science and faith share a deep sense of the mystery that underlies them both, a mystery rooted in the nature of man and the realities of God," the report says.

In fact, it notes that scientific advances, especially in molecular biology and modern physics and chemistry "provide consonance to the Christian perspectives enshrined in the Bible."

"Science has arrived at mysteries which can only be dealt with, if at all, by theologians."

At the same time, the report adds, "Christian theology is confronted with basic challenges to its traditional formulations, posed by new understandings from science."

Yet religious values give "the work of science and technology a basis, a meaning and direction..." representatives of the two fields say.

"Since the Christian hope is directed toward the perfection of the whole creation, science and technology are incorporated into responsibility for the continuation of life and keeping the future open."

Concerning methods by which both fields attain their conclusion, the report notes that science, like religion, necessitates involvement in a community to verify its premises.

These questions we may have asked when we were children, but as adults it is time to ask... Are we headed in the right direction? Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Consumers outraged at high food prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers are outraged about food prices, especially those for meat and milk, but only slightly more than 1 percent think farmers are responsible, according to an annual study of attitudes taken for supermarkets and food processors.

In fact, two out of five of those asked by the Yankelovich, Skelly and White research firm and the Food Marketing Institute "don't really feel that anyone can be blamed," their report this week said.

Among the 61 percent who do perceive a villain, 39 percent of them blame the government, 18 percent blame the "middle-man," 10 percent say the public generally is responsible for feeding inflation and 8 blame labor unions.

Only 3 percent pointed a finger at supermarkets and 2 percent cited farmers. An additional 2 percent named food manufacturers separately, one of the largest segments of the "middleman" category that processes, ships and markets the food produced by farmers.

Robert A. Dobkin, a vice president of the trade association of major retailers and wholesalers, said in releasing the report, "Getting the best nutrition buy for the dollar is of rising interest to shoppers. Survey subjects felt that industry has not yet met customer expectations on this new priority."

"Consumers report a decline in their standards of living compared to one year ago and a loss of confidence in the future," Dobkin said. "Rising food prices have become the central consumer concern in the battle to cope with inflation, with meat prices perceived as the major villain."

The report showed, however, that food costs are much less of a major personal concern now than in the winter of 1974, the end of two straight years of 14.5 percent hikes in food prices.

Food prices this year are officially expected to average close to 11 percent above 1978 averages. But a year ago only 43 percent registered food prices as a major concern, compared to 58 percent now and 76 percent five years ago.

The report also showed a gain of almost 50 percent over 1974 in the number of shoppers stocking up when they find a bargain and otherwise buying only what's needed.

About 52 percent said they are buying less meat, compared to 48 percent five years ago. "If the shoppers carry out their threats, the industry can anticipate a sharp decline in meat purchases," the report said.

Cattle producers began in 1975 to sharply cull their herds in response to several years of losing money. That meant large beef supplies until about a year ago, when consumer meat prices started shooting up to record levels.

With ranchers now apparently making money, the industry says that they are beginning to rebuild herds. Beef supplies will still be tight until 1982, when more fattened animals are ready for slaughter.

Pork and poultry supplies are expected to increase to keep the overall meat supply constant and prices relatively stable but high, government economists say.

The survey results were based on 1,048 telephone interviews in early February, before the sharpest increases in gasoline prices and before meat prices leveled off in late spring.

Hamburger prices topped a list of consumer goods the shoppers found outrageously high, followed by meat generally, drugs and gasoline.

"The percentage of consumers who label prices as outrageous for such staples as milk, sugar and fruits and vegetables has also increased over the past year," the survey found.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal meat inspectors will soon begin testing a new screening device for illegal residues of antibiotics in dairy cows, as a way both to speed up the inspections and to reduce the persistent residues problem.

The device — basically a swab and laboratory test plate already infected with bacteria — is called STOP, for Swab Test on Premises. It will be tested initially in 19 states.

It produces results within 18 hours, compared to the up to two weeks now required for answers from laboratories about suspect animals checked at the slaughterhouse, Agriculture Department officials said Thursday.

The swab is inserted into the kidney of the carcass.

If bacteria are repelled by it, antibiotics may be left in the animal tissue and the carcass is impounded while regular tests are conducted and the results awaited. If not, the carcass is cleared for marketing as wholesome.

Assistant Secretary Carol Tucker Foreman said inspectors "will be capable of testing more than 10 times the number of questionable carcasses currently screened." Up to 30 percent of the cows showing signs of disease at slaughter contain illegal antibiotic residues, she said.

Stereo dealer arrested charged in conspiracy

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — FBI agents have arrested a self-employed stereo dealer and charged him with conspiring to steal a highly classified Air Force radar jamming device for use in smuggling gold and artifacts out of Mexico.

The FBI charged Roy Pozos, 28, with conspiracy to steal an electronic countermeasures pod (ECM) valued at $250,000 and the classified operating manuals that go with it.

Pozos was arraigned Thursday before U.S. Magistrate Phil Sanders and jailed in lieu of $50,000 bond at the federal holding facility in the Williamson County jail in Georgetown.

In an affidavit that accompanied the complaint, FBI agent Michael Burns said the FBI was tipped about the alleged plot by Kirk Alan Jamison, manager of the Colony North and French Place Apartments in Austin.

Jamison, who reportedly left town two weeks ago, said he was approached June 21 by an apartment employee who arranged a meeting with Pozos.

He said the employee suggested that as an Air Force veteran with contacts at nearby Bergstrom Air Force Base he might be able to help Pozos.

The three met at a restaurant on Interstate 35 in North Austin, Burns said in his affidavit, and "Pozos explained that he had a friend who had a DC-3 airplane that this friend wished to fly to Mexico and pick up gold and artifacts."

"According to Pozos, the ECM pod was needed on the airplane to enable the DC-3 to evade U.S. Customs' radar. Jamison said that Pozos offered him $500 for the ECM operations manual and $10,000 for the ECM pod," Burns said.

Future conversations — at a Pentecostal church, a shopping center parking lot and the apartment buildings Jamison managed — were taped, Burns said.

There was dickering over the price and over whether Pozos would receive the manuals before getting the pod, as he requested, the FBI agent said.

At the Pentecostal church, he said, Pozos acknowledged he realized he was asking Jamison to obtain classified material.

Jamison at one point gave Pozos two non-classified Air Force documents about the ECM, Burns said, and received no money for them.

On July 18, Jamison brought FBI agent Robert Hoglund, posing as an Air Force man, to a meeting in Pozos' 1979 Buick, the affidavit said.

Henry involved in missionary program

Clinton Henry, who will be a Senior at West Texas University, is doing his Texas Baptist Student Missionary work in Jackson, Wyoming. He is one of the twenty boys and girls working at the Teton Mt. Resort. Clinton, three boys and four girls are staying with the Foster family. Mr. and Mrs. Randy Foster have two small boys. Mrs. Foster cooks for twenty boys and girls who all work in Jackson. They are from Minn., Ga., Okla., Texas and other parts.

A group of 10 started to climb the Teton Mt. Only 4 and the guide made it. They were on the trip for four days, of which two were spent on top of the mountain. They have their names in a book for climbing to the top of Teton Mt.

Clinton has a campfire service and Sunday morning service every week, along with his other duties.

He will be coming home the middle of August. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Henry and the brother of Curtiss Henry.

Students receive honors

Rev. Timothy Koenig of Zion Lutheran Church announced today that 3 of their students have been inducted into The Society of Distinguished American High School Students. The students who were inducted are: Stormy Shultz, Lori Koenig and W. T. Shultz III.

The Society, which is one of the nation's foremost high school honoraries, inducted the students because of their demonstrated excellence in scholastic leadership and civic achievement, according to Rev. Koenig.

The National Awards Program is sponsored by sixty colleges from across the country. Thousands of dollars in scholarship funds from these institutions are made available to Society members each year. Sponsor Koenig received a National Appreciation Award from the Society on behalf of the students and stated, "I am extremely proud of these exceptional students and the honor that they have received. It is a reward and should also be accepted as a challenge to them to continue their course of excellence."

One of the Society's guiding principles is to promote both academic and civic achievement on the high school level by recognizing students in its Membership Registry. The Society of Distinguished American High School Students, which is published annually and distributed nationwide.

Consumers outraged at high food prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers are outraged about food prices, especially those for meat and milk, but only slightly more than 1 percent think farmers are responsible, according to an annual study of attitudes taken for supermarkets and food processors.

In fact, two out of five of those asked by the Yankelovich, Skelly and White research firm and the Food Marketing Institute "don't really feel that anyone can be blamed," their report this week said.

Among the 61 percent who do perceive a villain, 39 percent of them blame the government, 18 percent blame the "middleman," 10 percent say the public generally is responsible for feeding inflation and 8 blame labor unions.

Only 3 percent pointed a finger at supermarkets and 2 percent cited farmers. An additional 2 percent named food manufacturers separately, one of the largest segments of the "middleman" category that processes, ships and markets the food produced by farmers.

Robert A. Dobkin, a vice president of the trade association of major retailers and wholesalers, said in releasing the report, "Getting the best nutrition buy for the dollar is of rising interest to shoppers. Survey subjects felt that industry has not yet met customer expectations on this new priority."

"Consumers report a decline in their standards of living compared to one year ago and a loss of confidence in the future," Dobkin said. "Rising food prices have become the central consumer concern in the battle to cope with inflation, with meat prices perceived as the major villain."

The report showed, however, that food costs are much less of a major personal concern now than in the winter of 1974, the end of two straight years of 14.5 percent hikes in food prices.

Food prices this year are officially expected to average close to 11 percent above 1978 averages. But a year ago only 43 percent registered food prices as a major concern, compared to 58 percent now and 76 percent five years ago.

The report also showed a gain of almost 50 percent over 1974 in the number of shoppers stocking up when they find a bargain and otherwise buying only what's needed.

About 52 percent said they are buying less meat, compared to 48 percent five years ago. "If the shoppers carry out their threats, the industry can anticipate a sharp decline in meat purchases," the report said.

Cattle producers began in 1975 to sharply cull their herds in response to several years of losing money. That meant large beef supplies until about a year ago, when consumer meat prices started shooting up to record levels.

With ranchers now apparently making money, the industry says that they are beginning to rebuild herds. Beef supplies will still be tight until 1982, when more fattened animals are ready for slaughter.

Pork and poultry supplies are expected to increase to keep the overall meat supply constant and prices relatively stable but high, government economists say.

The survey results were based on 1,048 telephone interviews in early February, before the sharpest increases in gasoline prices and before meat prices leveled off in late spring.

Hamburger prices topped a list of consumer goods the shoppers found outrageously high, followed by meat generally, drugs and gasoline.

"The percentage of consumers who label prices as outrageous for such staples as milk, sugar and fruits and vegetables has also increased over the past year," the survey found.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal meat inspectors will soon begin testing a new screening device for illegal residues of antibiotics in dairy cows, as a way both to speed up the inspections and to reduce the persistent residues problem.

The device — basically a swab and laboratory test plate already infected with bacteria — is called STOP, for Swab Test on Premises. It will be tested initially in 19 states.

It produces results within 18 hours, compared to the up to two weeks now required for answers from laboratories about suspect animals checked at the slaughterhouse, Agriculture Department officials said Thursday.

The swab is inserted into the kidney of the carcass.

If bacteria are repelled by it, antibiotics may be left in the animal tissue and the carcass is impounded while regular tests are conducted and the results awaited. If not, the carcass is cleared for marketing as wholesome.

Assistant Secretary Carol Tucker Foreman said inspectors "will be capable of testing more than 10 times the number of questionable carcasses currently screened." Up to 30 percent of the cows showing signs of disease at slaughter contain illegal antibiotic residues, she said.

Stereo dealer arrested charged in conspiracy

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — FBI agents have arrested a self-employed stereo dealer and charged him with conspiring to steal a highly classified Air Force radar jamming device for use in smuggling gold and artifacts out of Mexico.

The FBI charged Roy Pozos, 28, with conspiracy to steal an electronic countermeasures pod (ECM) valued at $250,000 and the classified operating manuals that go with it.

Pozos was arraigned Thursday before U.S. Magistrate Phil Sanders and jailed in lieu of $50,000 bond at the federal holding facility in the Williamson County jail in Georgetown.

In an affidavit that accompanied the complaint, FBI agent Michael Burns said the FBI was tipped about the alleged plot by Kirk Alan Jamison, manager of the Colony North and French Place Apartments in Austin.

Jamison, who reportedly left town two weeks ago, said he was approached June 21 by an apartment employee who arranged a meeting with Pozos.

He said the employee suggested that as an Air Force veteran with contacts at nearby Bergstrom Air Force Base he might be able to help Pozos.

The three met at a restaurant on Interstate 35 in North Austin, Burns said in his affidavit, and "Pozos explained that he had a friend who had a DC-3 airplane that this friend wished to fly to Mexico and pick up gold and artifacts."

"According to Pozos, the ECM pod was needed on the airplane to enable the DC-3 to evade U.S. Customs radar. Jamison said that Pozos offered him $500 for the ECM operations manual and $10,000 for the ECM pod," Burns said.

Future conversations — at a Pentecostal church, a shopping center parking lot and the apartment buildings Jamison managed — were taped, Burns said.

There was dickering over the price and over whether Pozos

would receive the manuals before getting the pod, as he requested, the FBI agent said.

At the Pentecostal church, he said, Pozos acknowledged he realized he was asking Jamison to obtain classified material.

"Jamison at one point gave Pozos two non-classified Air Force documents about the ECM, Burns said, and received no money for them.

On July 18, Jamison brought FBI agent Robert Hoglund, posing as an Air Force man, to a meeting in Pozos' 1979 Buick, the affidavit said.

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol

Aug. 4, 1979

This coming year should be a more fun-filled one for you than usual. Situations are likely to develop in very pleasant, beneficial ways.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You may find yourself in a peculiar position today, where peer pressure is exerted on you to do something you'd rather not. Don't overreact. Your new Astro-Graph Letter tells you what lies ahead for you for the year following your birthday. Get yours by mailing $1 for each to Astro-Graph, P.O. Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Make it a point today not to bring business or outside problems into the home. They could cause domestic disruptions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Should you set yourself up as an authority on a given subject today, you'd better have the facts. What you claim will be challenged.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be generous within reasonable limits today, but be careful of making loans to one who is a poor risk. You may have to write off the debt later.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) For one who prizes being his or her own person, you may be too easily influenced for your own good today. Others' judgment won't be as keen as yours.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Do good for others today, but operate so it doesn't make them think they're obligated to you. They'll resent feeling they owe you something.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Just be one of the group today, instead of trying to run the show. You'll enjoy yourself more and your pals will appreciate it if you're not bossy.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Success could elude you today if you make what you're going after more difficult than it truly is. Appraise realistically what you must do.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be careful today that you don't try to impose your views or philosophies on others. It will have a reverse effect if you do.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Unless you're prudent and cautious today, you might find yourself coming out on the short end in joint ventures. Don't jump in impulsively.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) An important relationship could be jeopardized today if you're too insistent upon having things your way. Try to be cooperative.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Lend a helping hand to those who deserve it today, but don't let yourself be put in a position where someone may take undue advantage of you.

SPS receives solar grant

Bert Springer, president and chief operating officer of Southwestern Public Service Company, has announced that the Department of Energy (DOE) has awarded a grant of approximately $500 thousand to the General Electric Company and Southwestern Public Service Company to study the feasibility of repowering one of Southwestern's generating units with a solar system.

"This would be one of the largest solar projects in the United States," Springer said. "The grant will fund an engineering study for repowering our No. 3 generating unit at Plant X, near Earth, Texas."

The proposed solar system would utilize a liquid metal-cooled central receiver to re-power the 100,000 kilowatt gas-fired unit at Plant X and would be designed to supply 60 percent of the thermal energy required for the full output of the generating unit.

The solar portion of the system consists of a surround field of glass, unenclosed heliostats reflecting the solar insolation to a tower-mounted cylindrical receiver. The receiver is cooled by liquid sodium with the flow rate through each receiver panel controlled by individual electromagnetic pumps, so that a constant outlet temperature can be maintained.

The impact on the existing plant is limited to piping tie-ins and controls modifications. Minimum intrusion into existing plant operating requirements and capabilities have been a major design objective of GE and SPS.

The overall concept of the solar system represents a highly flexible system that would allow the Plant X unit to operate on solar and gas at the same time or on gas or solar alone. The concept is based on the General Electric Alternate Central Receiver Program solar plant design and will benefit from its past and future engineering experience.

It is expected that contracts for the feasibility study will be signed about September 1 and the project completed in approximately 12 months.

Clydesdales are coming soon

Question: what weighs eight tons, has 32 powerful legs and can appear in a nationally televised New Year's Eve parade in Florida and another the next afternoon in California?

Answer: the famed Anheuser-Busch Clydesdale hitch, those eight goliath geldings who've delighted millions over the years — effortlessly powering the Budweiser coach or New Year's parade floats in appearances across the nation.

Just one of these surprisingly gentle giants is something to behold. Hitch eight of them to their antique Budweiser draft wagon and the message is clear — "Here comes the King."

From their custom-forged four-pound shoes, past nature's stockings feathered like fleece, past lean, broad shoulders, to the tip of their brawny black and brass collars, the Clydesdales are breathtaking. Together they gait in unison, gleaming, graceful, nimble to a fault.

Since 1933, the fabled hitch has been thundering its way into the hearts of America, appearing at parades, festivals, rodeos and shopping centers from coast to coast. The largest brewer in the world, St. Louis-based Anheuser-Busch, Inc., regards them as unmistakable symbols of the company's premier position in brewing and the quality of its mainstay product — which is the world's best selling beer.

Steel business leader of year

Gene Steel, plant manager of Pampa's Celanese Corp., was named National Business Leader of the Year at the 1979 National Leadership Conference of the Future Business Leaders of America, Phi Beta Lambda, Inc. in New Orleans, La.

This award recognizes the outstanding business leaders in America who promote free enterprise, business education and subscribe to the creeds of Phi Beta Lambda.

Steel has been an active supporter of Clarendon College. Phi Beta Lambda and numerous other civic organizations throughout the Panhandle.

He and his wife, Ann, were among the 10 delegates of Clarendon College business department.

Ancestors of the noble steed bore warriors to battle in the Crusades. More recently of Scottish descent, the Clydesdale was declining in numbers when August A. Busch, Jr. acquired a team to celebrate the repeal of prohibition.

In the early days of American brewing, it was said that a brewer's success was determined by how far his draught horses could pull their sudsy load in a day's time. Horsepower went under the hood after World War I; that and packaging innovations made two things obsolete: local beers and the horses that pulled them to market. The Clydesdale breed seemed to face a bleak future.

Today, in comparison, they flourish. What began 43 years ago as a ceremonial gesture has become breeding science. At Grant's Farm in suburban St. Louis County, nearly 100 champion-sired pure breeds — each of impeccable lineage — roam in picturesque pastures adjacent to what was once the spread of America's 18th president. They comprise the largest band of Clydesdales in the nation.

Between 20 and 30 Clydesdale foals are born at Grant's Farm each year. At first appearance, most of them seem already to have the credentials to qualify for membership in the eight-horse touring hitch. But standards are demanding. All hitch horses are at least three years of age. Each must stand approximately 18 hands high, be bay in color, have four white stockings and feet, a blaze of white on the face plus a black mane and tail.

Psychological make-up is equally important. A hitch horse must have steel nerves, gentleness and courage enough to withstand the social pressures of meeting a quarter of a million people weekly, not to mention the primping and travel that go with celebrity status.

Dallas favored in Denver game

IRVING, Texas (AP) — It's not exactly a rematch of Super Bowl XII but the Denver Broncos and the Dallas Cowboys have some important items to settle Saturday night in their National Football League exhibition game in Texas Stadium.

For the Cowboys, it's their crowded situation at running back. Denver has to make some harsh quarterback decisions.

Rookie running back Ron Springs of Ohio State, a fifth-round choice, has sent Cowboy offensive coordinator Danny Reeves into hand-clapping delight with his performance at the Dallas Thousand Oaks, Calif. training camp.

Springs scored a touchdown and ran hard last week as Dallas lost 20-13 to Oakland in the NFL's Hall of Fame game at Canton, Ohio.

"Springs is an asset to this team," said Reeves. "He will get a long, hard look. He is making competition in our backfield much tougher."

Springs, second-year man Alois Blackwell, and veteran Doug Dennison were expected to play most of the game against the Broncos after Tony Dorsett appears for a quarter or so.

Also, there is some sizzling competition at fullback where Scott Laidlaw and Todd Christensen are making a strong run at Robert Newhouse. Yet another veteran, Larry Brinson, must play hard to make the team.

Denver has some quarterback questions to answer as the Broncos play their first game of the year.

Norris Weese will start at quarterback.

Munson dies in jet crash

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — It was a rare day off for Thurman Munson, one of those special, private times he could spend with his family in the midst of a long and exhausting baseball season.

So the New York Yankee star came back to Ohio to see his wife and three children and to spend a relaxing afternoon Thursday flying his private jet.

Then it happened, the plane plunging into the ground, flames lighting up the airfield — and Munson dead.

"I saw an aircraft totally involved in flames," said Jeff Kashburn, a sheriff's deputy who rushed to the scene at the Canton-Akron airport. "I tried, but couldn't come closer than 30 feet because of the intensity of the flames. The body was burned beyond recognition."

Officials said the 32-year-old Yankee captain and team leader was killed at 4:02 p.m. EDT while practicing take-offs and landings in his to be a factor. The plane — with the number 15NY (Munson's Yankee number) on it — was coming in for a landing and crashed about 1,000 feet short of Runway 19, officials said.

Green Township Fire Chief Mike Calderone said: "The plane peeled three trees, hit a stump and spun around. It touched down approximately 300 feet north of where it (finally) came to rest." He said Munson's body was found in the left seat, slumped over to the right.

Munson's body was "not pinned in the crash," Calderone said, adding he believed that Munson's seat belt had been burned off. Calderone expressed the opinion that Munson died as a result of respiratory failure from the heavy fumes in the fire.

An autopsy was scheduled for today by the county coroner.

"I have a new love to make things somewhat more pleasant for me this year (1978): Airplanes," he said in a recent autobiography with Marty Appel, who works in the baseball commissioner's office.

"I studied for my pilot's license and received it during the winter," Munson went on in "Thurman Munson: An Autobiography." "Now ... it's possible for me to fly from New York to Canton and I frequently go home even during home stands."

But if Munson displayed gentility and genuine compassion as a family man, this was not his generally accepted image in the press. Munson was a tough, hard-nosed player often given to fighting moods.

Even he once admitted during his stormy, if successful, career with the Yankees:

"I'm a little too belligerent. I cuss and swear at people. I yell at umpires and maybe I'm a little too tough at home sometimes. I don't sign as many autographs as I should and I haven't always been very good with the writers."

SPORTS

Cessna Citation, a twin-engine jet.

Two other men aboard the plane, David Hall, 32, and Jerry D. Anderson, 31, were injured, but neither was seriously hurt.

A spokesman at Children's Hospital in Akron said Hall, Munson's flight instructor from Canton, was in fair condition with burns on his hands. Anderson, of Canton, a close friend of the 11-year Yankee catcher, was in fair condition at Canton Timken Mercy Hospital with burns on his face, neck and forearms.

"He was flying home on an off-day, which he does," said Yankee publicist Mickey Morabito of Munson. "Thurman is a very good family man, he loves to be with his family. It's one of the reasons he got the plane, to get home and spend some more time with them. Unfortunately, that's what he was doing, going home to be with the family, and it's a tragedy."

An employee for the Federal Aviation Administration at the Akron-Canton airport said of the tragedy: "There is an embankment at the end of the runway, and he (Munson) was at least 40 feet low there."

According to an FAA spokesman in the Chicago office, which covers the Canton-Akron area, Munson's jet had "been engaged in some touch-and-go practice, takeoffs and landings" when the crash occurred.

The spokesman, Neal Callahan, said the cause of the crash was not immediately known, and would be investigated by the National Transportation Safety Board, but added: "weather does not appear

Five back-ups earn starts vs. Broncos

DALLAS, Texas (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys starting lineup against the Denver Broncos Saturday night will include two new faces on offense and three on defense.

Head Coach Tom Landry said he wants to break from tradition and start some of his experienced back-up players during the pre-season games.

Butch Johnson will start for Tony Hill at wide receiver, and David Hudgens will play right tackle for Rayfield Wright, who has been bothered by leg problems.

On defense, Randy Hughes will fill in for strong safety Charlie Waters. Dennis Thurmond will replace Aaron Kyle at right cornerback, and Mike Hegman will start at strongside linebacker for Thomas Henderson.

Kyle has a bruised left knee. Waters a sprained left ankle, and Henderson an injured groin and wrist.

"We'll take another good look at our back-ups and rookies this week before starting to play the regulars more next week."

Landry said. The Cowboys-Bronco game will be the home opener in Texas Stadium.

Houston downs Cardinals, 9-7

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers tight end Mike Barber played like the 1978 season had never ended and the Oilers were on their way to the Super Bowl.

Barber scored the Oilers' lone touchdown on a 33-yard play in which he came across the middle to catch a Gifford Nielsen pass, then flung St. Louis safety Ken Stone aside en route to the end zone and did a victory dance after the score.

The Oilers may be headed for the championship game, but Thursday's season opening 9-7 exhibition victory was only the first step in a long season.

Despite Barber's outstanding play, it took a 29-yard field goal by Toni Fritsch with 10:40 left in the game to nullify St. Louis' long score, a one-yard plunge by Wayne Morris in the second quarter.

"It was supposed to be a screen pass to the back and I was blocking a linebacker but they blitzed," Barber explained. "So I faded across the middle and no one was there."

Barber's touchdown catch narrowed St. Louis' lead to 7-6 after Fritsch's extra point attempt was blocked by defensive lineman Harlie Davis.

Fritsch came back in the fourth quarter with a 29-yard field goal that provided the winning margin.

Houston quarterback Dan Pastorini started the game but was replaced in the first quarter by Nielsen, who finished the game completing 14 of 21 passes for 135 yards and two interceptions.

"I feel happy with the experience," Nielsen said. "I need the playing time if I am going to be Dan's backup."

Nielsen appeared headed for a touchdown in the third quarter when he went into the end zone on a six yard run, but fumbled at the goal line and the Cardinals' Keith Simons recovered.

"I looked up and thought 'Oh my gosh I'm going to score a touchdown. But the guy hit me in just the right spot. Earl (Campbell) told me after the game he's going to teach me how to run next week.'"

The Cardinals, trying to shake the effects of the sudden death of tight end J.V. Cain on July 22, took a 7-0 lead at halftime on a one-yard plunge by Wayne Morris but failed to make a first down in the second half.

"I wish I could say if it (Cain's death) was a factor or not, but we have looked through that tragedy and I think it's best to put it behind us," said Cardinals Coach Bud Wilkinson.

Asked about Houston's effectiveness, Wilkinson said "The Oilers were a playoff team last year and they beat us without their top two offensive threats (Earl Campbell and Pastorini)."

Oiler Coach Bum Phillips also was pleased with his team's performance.

"We felt like we could win and we did win," Phillips said.

Herrera boots Seattle by Vikings

By the Associated Press

Efren Herrera calmly booted a 21-yard field goal with 4:29 gone in overtime Thursday night to give the Seattle Seahawks a 12-9 victory over the Minnesota Vikings in a National Football League exhibition opener for both clubs.

Jim Zorn, the Seahawks' exciting fourth year quarterback, who directed Seattle to a 9-0 lead in its first two possessions, came off the bench to ignite his team's overtime field goal drive.

Replacing Steve Myer, who played three quarters of the game at quarterback for Seattle, but couldn't put any points on the board, Zorn teamed with running back Sherman Smith for a 55-yard pass that gave Seattle the ball on the Minnesota 18.

David Sims then carried the ball twice for eight yards and Smith picked up six more to put the Seahawks on the Viking 4 with a first down. Smith picked up one yard and Zorn appeared to have won the game with a three-yard touchdown pass to tight end Marcus Hatley, but Hatley was ruled to have caught the pass out of bounds.

On a third-and-three situation, Sims was tackled for a one-yard loss, and Herrera, the Seahawks' placekicker, who was acquired in a trade with Dallas prior to the start of the 1978 season, came onto the field to the cheers of an enthusiastic crowd of 60,881.

Although it was an exhibition game, the avid Kingdome crowd warmly greeted Herrera and Zorn when they came onto the field in the overtime. Zorn led the American Football Conference in passing last season, as the Seahawks established themselves with a 9-7 record in their third season in the NFL.

Miami will host New Orleans tonight in another exhibition game and it'll be just like old times for Larry Csonka. At least he hopes so.

"I'm looking forward to it," says Csonka, who is reappearing at his old stomping grounds. "This is an important time for me. I think I'm getting more and more effective every day."

A Dolphins' spokesman said that some 45,000 fans are expected at the Orange Bowl, and that Csonka's presence has meant an additional 5,000 or 10,000 spectators.

"We didn't bring him in just to be a third-and-one runner," said Dolphins Coach Don Shula, who signed his one-time star fullback as a free agent this past spring after Csonka was released by the New York Giants at age 32.

Csonka's rushing figure of 311 yards in 1978 paled by comparison with his prime at Miami, where he had three straight 1,000-yard seasons that carried the Dolphins to three consecutive Super Bowls beginning in 1971.

Csonka left the Dolphins to sign a hefty contract in the World Football League, but was soon back in the NFL, playing for the Giants, when the WFL folded.

Realistically, the Dolphins don't expect Csonka to return to his old-time form, but he is expected to add balance to an offense built around Bob Griese's passing and Delvin Williams' breakaway running. It will be remembered that Greise was in the same backfield with Csonka on those championship Dolphin teams of the early 1970s.

In the only other NFL exhibition game tonight, the Philadelphia Eagles will visit the Baltimore Colts.

In off-the-field activity, veteran center Jim Clack reached an undisclosed settlement with the New York Giants and took part in his first training camp workout.

JOHN HARRIS (44), defensive back for the Seattle Seahawks, rushes up the field for a 24 yard return following his interception of a Minnesota Vikings pass by Tommy Kramer in the first period. Also in on the play are Seahawks Autry Beamon (27) and Dave Brown (22), along with Viking Ron Yary (73). (AP Laserphoto)

Watson leads PGA by 1 shot

BIRMINGHAM, Mich. (AP) — Tom Watson

says a golfer's swing is a fleeting thing. The golfer gets in the groove one day, and slips out the next.

"You can't repeat the swing forever, and it does change," said Watson, who says he's found a new swing for the 61st PGA Championship, the last major tournament of the year. "Sometimes it can change when you take some time off. You've got to grab it, and hold on to it as long as you can."

Watson, who said he changed his swing Tuesday, shot a 33-33-66 over the 7,014-yard, par 70 Oakland Hills Country Club course Thursday to take a 1-stroke lead into today's second round.

"When you're playing well, it's exciting," he said. "When you're playing badly and fighting it, it's drudgery. It's exciting now."

Watson, winner of four tournaments and $387,386 thus far this year, leads by a stroke over Rex Caldwell, who disqualified himself for a faulty scorecard in last year's championship. He is 2 strokes in front of Ron Streck, who had not seen the course before playing it Wednesday, and Jay Haas, whose only tour victory in three years was in San Diego last year.

Fifteen players broke par 70 over the demanding course, which has not succumbed in a four-day major tournament that includes four

U.S. Opens and the 1972 PGA Championship.

Among those with a 69 are Lou Graham, Gibby Gilbert, Jim Masserio, Hubie Green, Don January, Jerry Pate, Graham Marsh, Bruce Lietzke, David Graham, Ben Crenshaw and Arbie McNickle.

Frank Conner, who had an ace on the 225-yard, par 3 No. 9, was among the 11 players who had par 70 over the majestic course that played long because of rain in recent days, although a warming sun began to dry out the rolling landscape.

Among the other par shooters were Masters champion Fuzzy Zoeller, Lee Trevino, Lee Elder, Howard Twitty, Bill Rogers, Dave Stockton and Larry Nelson.

Defending champion John Mahaffey shot a 2-over 72.

Jack Nicklaus, a four-time PGA champion who was considered the favorite here by many of the players, also shot 73, saying that the Oakland Hills course "was a piece of cake and I never got to the icing."

Arnold Palmer, who will turn 50 next month, came home with a 41-40-81, among the high scores in the field of 150.

The toughest hole on the course was the 440-yard, par 4 No. 8 that yielded only six birdies while taking 80 bogeys and five double bogeys.

Expos (finally) down Cubs after 3 rain delays

By the Associated Press

It took six hours and 48 minutes for the Montreal Expos and Chicago Cubs to play a baseball game Thursday. It seemed a lot longer to some of the participants.

"Is that all we played, nine innings?" asked Expos Manager Dick Williams after first-place Montreal extended its National League East Division lead to two games by surviving three rain delays and beating the Cubs 6-4.

Once was in the first inning, when thunder boomed and lightning flashed.

"I had one heck of a day today," said Expos outfielder Warren Cromartie. "I didn't sleep well last night, I got to the ball park at 11 o'clock, I got everything scared out of me by lightning and I took an 0-for-0."

Cromartie, 0-for-4, paced in left field in the top of the first.

The first rain delay lasted 75 minutes. The second was 38 minutes and the third lasted two hours.

"He doesn't like thunder and lightning," Williams said of Cromartie, who was upset enough to commit a fielding error in the first inning. "I guess none of us do, but he doesn't like it more than the rest of us."

Montreal got two RBI from Larry Parrish, who knocked in Andre Dawson in the fifth and had a run-scoring single in the sixth.

Cardinals 5, Pirates 4

A four-run St. Louis eighth inning robbed Jim Rooker of his 100th career victory. Keith Hernandez climaxed the comeback with a two-out single that scored Dane Iorg with the winning run.

Rooker, 99-105 lifetime, held a 4-1 lead entering the eighth, but Ken Reitz led off with a double and a Rennie Stennett error followed.

Grant Jackson relieved and surrendered consecutive RBI singles to Mike Tyson and Iorg. Tyson scored on a fielder's choice prior to Hernandez' hit.

Phillies 7-1, Mets 4-2

The Phils took the opener as Greg Luzinski drove in three runs and hit his 14th homer and Ron Reed, 8-6, hurled 52-3 innings of two-hit relief.

Mike Schmidt hit a major-league leading 37th home run in the nightcap but the combination of Pete Falcone, 3-6, and Neil Allen allowed just four other Philadelphia hits.

Braves 7, Padres 2

Tony Brizzolara, 6-6, threw an eight-hitter, Pepe Frias had a two-run triple and Gary Matthews knocked in two runs with a pair of singles for Atlanta.

Rain plagues

Trans National

BAY ST. LOUIS, Miss. (AP) — Four golfers geared up for semifinal play today in the rain-plagued Women's Trans National Golf Championship at the Diamondhead Yacht and Country Club here.

Beverly Davis of Southern Pines, N.C., the 1975 winner, faces Holly Hartley of Oceanside, Calif., while Brenda Goldsmith of San Antonio, Texas, is to meet Lenore Muraoka of Honolulu in match play.

On Thursday, Miss Davis beat Terri Moody of Athens, Ga., 3 and 2 on the par-72, 6,141-yard course.

Miss Goldsmith whipped Patrice Rizzo of Hialeah, Fla., 4 and 3, while Miss Muraoka beat Sally Quinlan of Dennis, Mass., 2 and 1.

Miss Hartley thrashed Chris Spivey of Pell City, Ala., 7 and 6. Play was delayed 45 minutes Thursday because of lightning. The greens have been slow throughout the competition because of rainfall and the roughs have been heavy.

Lopez grabs lead on European tour

SUNNINGDALE, England (AP) — Nancy Lopez used her special brand of power golf to collect seven birdies and take the lead after the first round of the European Women's Golf Championship.

Defending champion on the tree-lined Sunningdale Course, Lopez missed from six feet for an eagle at the second hole Thursday, but still managed to turn 3-under on the par 36-38-74 course.

She matched that performance on the back nine for a 6-under-par 68 and a 1-stroke lead in the $100,000 tournament.

Lopez said that rolling in five-and-six-foot putts, missed in recent weeks, had made all the difference.

Lying second at 69 was Joyce Kaziemierski of Williston, Fla., who has grabbed lots of British press coverage for her belief in astrology and numerology.

"I knew before I teed off I'd be confident and positive. I believe the moon is a major influence in a woman's life and whatever happens is 51 percent what you do and 49 percent to do with the planets," she said.

Meanwhile, the British Broadcasting Corp. threatened to cancel television coverage of the tournament because of product advertisements on sun visors worn by six women stars. The publicly financed BBC is entirely non-commercial.

South African Sally Little, one of the players involved, said: "They can't stop us wearing them. We're under contract. Everything we wear has some sort of emblem on it."

BoSox rip Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Boston may not win any American League championship in a season that seems to belong to the Baltimore Orioles, but some sort of executive of the year citation seems due Red Sox General Manager Haywood Sullivan.

It was Sullivan who convinced the Houston Astros to trade Bob Watson for two minor league pitchers and cash June 13, and Watson showed again Thursday night why he was one of the biggest bargains in years.

Watson, 33, and Dwight Evans both clubbed a pair of homers and knocked in three runs apiece, while Butch Hobson added a bases empty shot off Milwaukee's battered pitching as the Red Sox thrashed the slumping Brewers 10-1.

Mike Torrez, 12-6, fired a six-hitter for the second place Red Sox, who pulled to within seven games of idle Baltimore in the AL East after having lost 3½ games in the race in the previous seven days. The third place Brewers fell 10 games back with their fourth consecutive defeat.

Watson, twice a National League All-Star with a .297 batting average for 10-plus seasons with the Astros, has hit 351 with 10 homers and 30 runs batted in since joining the Red Sox just before the trading deadline.

Watson said he had asked to be traded because he didn't think the Astros would be contenders and he wanted to play for a contender before his career ended. He had veto power over any trade involving himself, and told Astros' management he would play for one of eight teams.

The Red Sox broke a 1-1 tie with three runs in the second inning.

CRUDE OIL from the runaway oil well in Campeche Bay will probably cross into U.S. waters this Sunday and may begin washing ashore two days later a government scientist predicted Thursday. The well blew out June 3. On Thursday the Coast Guard located the northern edge of the spill about 60 miles south of Brownsville, Texas.

Scientists preparing for battle

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Government scientists preparing for a long and costly battle against a Mexican oil slick are now predicting the runaway crude will spill into U.S. waters Sunday. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration official John Robinson also predicted Thursday that the first traces of the oil may hit the South Texas coast Tuesday.

"We expect to be here a long time," Robinson, who is in charge of the scientific team here, said.

It took about two months for the oil from the blown-out Bay of Campeche well to make the trek to near U.S. waters. The latest flights over the spill area showed the oil to be about 40 to 50 miles south of Brownsville. It has already spewed globs of tarry oil onto several Mexican beaches.

The leading edge of the slick is expected to drift within 10 to 15 miles east of the South Texas coast this weekend. About 150 scientists, engineers and Coast Guardsmen are now heading U.S. efforts against the spill.

None of the officials at a Thursday press conference would estimate how much the effort is costing.

Robinson said the oil nearest the United States probably came out of the well shortly after the June 3 blowout. He said oil may keep flowing north two months after the well is capped. Capt. Jose Orozco of the Mexican Navy said Thursday that the well may be capped by Sept. 16.

The Coast Guard is sending men and equipment, at the request of the Mexican government, to the well site to help contain and collect the spewing crude, said a Coast Guard official in Washington.

Orozco said the flow of oil from the well is now down to 20,000 barrels a day — reduced from an original flow of 50,000 barrels.

Coast Guard Capt. Roger Madson, head of the combined U.S. effort, said he will soon decide when to activate massive oil containment gear mobilized to battle the world's largest oil spill. The boom and skimmer equipment is now ready for use here and in Brownsville. The "floating fences" will be the first line of defense against the potentially damaging oil.

"We will not attempt to recover all the oil floating in the Gulf of Mexico," Madson said. "That would be a physical impossibility."

The captain said the top priority is to protect the Laguna Madre. The bay separates South Padre Island from the mainland and is environmentally vulnerable.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service teams are standing by to perform bird cleaning operations if needed.

Madson said Coast Guard planes would today continue their tracking efforts. He indicated the barriers may be set up east of Brownsville Saturday.

Gasoline rationing plan delayed

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate negotiators are trying to fashion a compromise standby gasoline-rationing plan, but President Carter will have to wait until after Labor Day to get it.

The president and Democratic congressional leaders had hoped to have the bill on the president's desk by Thursday night — before the start of the congressional August recess.

But that was not to be. "We had to weigh symbolism against practicality," said Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., one of the Senate conferees of the bill.

He said he hoped a final version acceptable to the House, the Senate and Carter could be enacted "by early September."

Both Senate leaders and the White House denounced the standby rationing bill passed by the House late Wednesday. The Senate rejected the House version by voice vote Thursday.

While giving Carter basic authority to ration gasoline during a grave emergency, the measure was also saddled with numerous weakening amendments and restrictions on the president.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd called the House-passed bill "ludicrous."

And presidential spokesman Jody Powell said the bill was unacceptable to Carter as written. He expressed hope the objectionable parts — which he described as "ill-advised, unenforceable amendments" — could be smoothed out in the conference committee.

Among the House-added provisions the White House would like to see scrapped are:

—A Republican-backed amendment weakening the president's 78-degree thermostat program.

—Restrictions that prohibit rationing from being imposed unless there is a 20 percent or larger fuel shortage for a 30-day period.

—Amendments establishing a national 1 percent set-aside of diesel fuel for farmers and home-heating oil for cold-weather areas of the country.

None of these provisions is contained in the Senate-passed legislation.

The bill sent to the Senate by the House "has been riddled with loopholes," said Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Energy Committee.

"It has all the appearance of a rationing plan but it's really not a rationing plan that makes any rational sense," Jackson said.

But House Democratic Whip John Brademas said senators shouldn't be so quick to find fault with the House bill. He noted that the House had completely rejected the president's original rationing plan last May 10 by a wide margin.

The House passed its amendment-laden version of the rationing bill by a 263-159 vote late Wednesday.

And although the Senate planned to continue working today before beginning its recess, the House adjourned at 6 p.m. Thursday until after Labor Day.

Thus Congress failed to pass before its August recess any pieces of the new energy plan the president unveiled July 15.

Service may cost a little extra

If you pull into a gas station and say, "Fill 'er up, check the oil and wipe the windows," chances are you will have to pay only for the gasoline, even though the government now allows service stations to charge for the other services.

Dealers say they won't take advantage of the new rule for fear of alienating customers, but many aren't wasting any time in taking advantage of another rule that sets a new ceiling on mark-ups over wholesale prices. Those dealers with prices above the ceiling, however, aren't hurrying to lower prices.

The rules went into effect Wednesday, along with one allowing surcharges for the use of credit cards. But that regulation was vetoed Thursday by the Federal Trade Commission, which said it violated the federal Truth in Lending Act.

Although they have complained in recent months that they aren't making enough money, dealers interviewed Thursday said charging for traditionally free services was not the way to increase profits.

"You must be joking," said Louis Kremen, a Sunoco dealer in New York City. "How long do you think my customers would stay with me?"

"We just don't believe in charging for checking oil or washing windows," said Randie McClung, manager of Emery Hills Texaco in Chamblee, Ga. "As long as a man's standing there anyway pumping gas, he might as well be helping the customer."

"That's ridiculous," said Harold Crowell of Parkway Mobil in Somerville, Mass. "Most people who have been in the business for a long time frown on it. If you're a neighborhood service station, all you'd create is a lot of bad will."

"Nobody's gonna do that because the first time you do that you're going to have a shooting," said Bill McIntyre, a Shell dealer in Louisville, Ky.

The dealers also were unhappy with the new rule on mark-ups.

under which they can charge no more than 15.4 cents per gallon more than the wholesale price of gasoline, before taxes are added. The dealers were restricted to their profit margin of six years ago, plus a few cents for inflation.

"If we have a 15.4-cent margin, 10 percent of our stations would go out of business very shortly and 25 percent would in the long run," said Paul Hay, director of the Santa Clara County (Calif.) Service Station Dealers Association.

About 700 dealers protested the rules Wednesday in Washington.

Many dealers who were charging more than the new rule allowed didn't seem in any hurry to reduce prices. Jihong Yoo, operator of an Exxon station in Washington, D.C., said his price was still 1.8 cents above the limit because no one had bothered to explain the new regulations to him. And Tom Meeks, who's running Jay's Shell in Landover, Md., while his father is on vacation, said he first will talk to his father before lowering prices.

Some dealers whose mark-ups were below the ceiling, however, were quick to take advantage of the rules change.

How about ten liters, Mack?

MUSKEGON, Mich. (AP) — A Standard Oil of Indiana Co. subsidiary says it may sell gasoline by the liter nationwide if experimental sales in the Muskegon area are a success.

Amoco spokesman Owen Wavrinek said Thursday seven Muskegon-area stations were chosen for the tests since "we feel it's a typical Midwestern market."

The liter, a metric unit, is just more than a quart. There are 3.8 liters per gallon.
