Sewage, suits and strikes are among Midland's most talked-about events

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Day by day, Midland appears to take life in a slow, relaxing manner with an occasional news event popping its head above the surface of ho-hum happenings.

But over the period of 12 months, several items stayed above the surface and in the spotlight long enough to leave a mark upon the city and its residents.

These ranged from problems caused by sewage flowing down and across the county to a lawsuit involving a bank, an oil company and various partners in an increasingly complicated situation, from a strike by air traffic controllers to a severe shortage of housing as newcomers rolled into the city, from the ages-old battle with the sibling sister of Odessa over a cancer treatment machine to a murder and long-forgotten Vietnam veterans.

Midland and Monahans Draws

Problems with Midland Draw and Monahans Draw which had been simmering for several weeks late in 1980 finally boiled over in January 1981, and by the end of the year the situation was getting hotter.

It began with a series of meetings in January in which the Midland County Commissioners accused the city of dumping primary treated effluent into the draw, which city officials later confirmed. But the puzzle then, as it remains today, is where to put the treated effluent once the holding ponds are full.

Throughout the year, the City Council searched for a solution, going first to a Salt Lake south of the city. But the residents adjacent to it objected and, like the mythological god doomed to travel forever, the council set out on the road again in search of a suitable dumping site.

By the end of 1981, county and city officials had squared off for a duel before the Texas Water Quality Board. The city won that fight, but only temporarily as the officials were granted a permit to dump effluent down the draw until a second meeting before the water board in early January.

Midland County, which had been threatening since the mid-1970s to sue Odessa for its dumping of effluent into Monahans Draw, finally gave notice in December of its intent to file suit against Odessa in U.S. District Court.

The city of Odessa was given permission in 1977 by the state water board to discharge effluent from its sewage treatment plant into Monahans Draw. The water flows from west to east through the southern part of Midland County and eventually dumps into the Colorado River.

FNB vs. GMW

Actions by The First National Bank of Midland against a local corporation resulted in a $150 million deceptive trade practices suit and a continuing, increasingly complex situation.

The suit was filed by Gifford-Mitchell-Wisenbaker Corp. against The First National Bank in October. Since then, Midland oilman-investor Walter R. Davis filed a breach of contract suit against GMW Corp. over some producing and non-producing oil and gas interests in Lea County, N.M.

The suit escalated shortly thereafter with GMW Corp. filing a supplemental complaint boosting the total damage to an amount in excess of $500 million. Named in an addendum to the Oct. 9 suit were Walter R. Davis as an individual and as a trustee, the Seminole Refining Co. and John Findley.

As the year closed, the suit and countersuit remained unsettled.

Housing Woes

People living in tents and sleeping in cars became commonplace during the summer months as outsiders poured into the Midland area in search of jobs and a chance at the good life. But lack of housing proved to be the needle which popped those dreams.

An eight-part series published by The Reporter-Telegram in August highlighted the plight of newcomers, and not just the low-income people but also those families ranked as middle-income. While jobs were plentiful for all, housing was available only to those in the upper income range as rents and purchase prices skyrocketed with the demand.

Money from HUD

Getting federal funds to help low-income people with housing and to improve the looks of the south and east side neighborhoods finally met the approval of Midland City Council. Meanwhile, a similar federal application designed to assist a particular neighborhood whisked by the county commissioners.

But while the county was getting to work on using its money, the city's application bumped into problems. By the end of the year, they remained unresolved with the Department of Housing and Urban Development threatening to reduce the $1.09 million grant to $0.

PATCO Strike

A nationwide strike in August by members of Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization hit Midland Regional Airport as 18 controllers joined the walkout. During the first few days, some flights were canceled and others delayed as travelers' tempers soared.

Controllers were given a deadline to return to work by President Reagan, and two of Midland's strikers went back into the tower while another man retired. Putting Midland back on schedule were the supervisers, who eventually gained help from other controllers as towers were closed and as military controllers were assigned here.

Cancer Fight

The cities of Midland and Odessa pulled out the boxing gloves for another battle in the ages-old sibling rivalry, this time over a cancer treatment machine.

Midland Memorial Hospital already had been granted its 6 Million Electron Volt linear accelerator as the work-horse machine in its Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center when Odessa Medical Center Hospital attempted to purchase the same machine. MMH opposed the move, saying it would duplicate services that would be provided at the Allison Center.

After word skirmishes flew between the two cities, the issue came to a

Among the top stories of the year in Midland were air and water. Above, effluent rushes from a holding pond into Midland Draw after the city of Midland received permission in late December to release the treated sewage. County commissioners and city councilmen clashed throughout the year over where to put the overflowing effluent, if not down the draw. At right, supervisors get a handle on the situation by taking over the control tower at Midland Regional Airport after 18 members of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization walked out during a nationwide strike. By the end of 1981, air traffic was back to normal at the local airport.

Poland now run 'by mixed group'

By The Associated Press

A high Communist Party source said Saturday that Poland was being run by a "mixed group of generals and top party leaders that meets frequently, but informally, to make all of the key decisions of government," uncensored reports reaching the West said.

The source, who has access to restricted information at Central Committee headquarters, did not identify all members of the unofficial ruling group. He said the group includes party chief and prime minister Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski; his deputy, Gen. Florian Siwicki; Politburo members Kazimierz Barcikowski, Stefan Olszowski, and Deputy Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski.

He described Poland's government for the moment as a strange hybrid. "It's not a military coup," he said. "But at the same time the military is not just acting as an instrument of the party. It's somewhere in between."

Normal communications with Poland were cut when martial law was declared Dec. 13 and censorship was imposed. Reliable news reports from within Poland have been few and Western news organizations must piece together information from travelers, diplomatic sources and others. Western reporters are restricted in their travels.

The official state radio reported Saturday that the government is considering price hikes that include quadrupling the price of beef and sugar.

Word of the proposed price hikes came as Poland's martial law government announced that it had devalued the zloty against Western currencies by about 130 percent to an exchange rate of about 80 zlotys to the dollar, according to uncensored accounts reaching the West from Warsaw. The previous exchange rate was about 35 zlotys to the dollar.

Warsaw radio said the planned price boosts were announced at a news conference by Zdzislaw Krasinski, chairman of the state price commission.

The proposals would increase the cost of 2.2 pounds of sugar, now available at 10.50 zlotys, to 46 zlotys. Beef prices would jump from 44 zlotys for 2.2 pounds to 190 zlotys.

Krasinski did not say who would be considering the proposals or when a final announcement would be made.

Meat price increases in July 1980 sparked the nationwide strikes that gave birth to a reform movement and Solidarity, the first trade union free of party control in the Soviet-bloc.

The Communist Party source said he also expects the emergence of an underground resistance movement against the martial-law government. He said the key question is whether it would confine itself to peaceful activities such as leafleting, or would turn into a terrorist organization.

The former, he said, could be handled easily by the authorities, but the latter would provoke what he called a severe "counter-reaction."

The official, who insisted on remaining anonymous, said there have been two deaths as a result of martial law in addition to the eight deaths publicly acknowleged.

One of thegting Dec. 1 at the Wojek coal mine in Katowice, where striking miners tried to repulse an attack by security forces.

Seven miners also died in that incident, authrorities have said. They have also acknowleged the death in Gdansk of a woman wounded in street fighting there.

The other death, the official said, was that of a man who suffered a heart attack during the suppression of a strike at the Wroclaw Polytechnic Institute. Earlier independent reports had cited the death of a man referred to only as "Kostechi" in Wrocław, and said he died as a result of a blow to the head.

If your resolution is to save more...

The beginning of a new year often brings new resolutions, goals, diets and quit-smoking plans to many people. It also brings in new laws that can affect almost everyone.

One of those laws which went into effect Friday gives many people, who previously had been prohibited, the chance to provide for their retirement by building a fund and deferring taxes on it. Beginning in the 1982 tax year, a person may open an account that can provide a tax write-off of up to $2,000, with the amount deposited drawing interest that won't be touched by the Internal Revenue Service until the retirement years.

During a time of sharp Social Security slices, the program could help in surpassing some of the cutbacks.

Persons who establish Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) during the 1982 tax year can deposit up to $2,000 per year, thereby reducing their taxable income when filing federal income taxes. When distribution of the earnings begin, usually at retirement, the deposits plus the interest they have earned are taxed as ordinary income at a time when the individual presumably will be in a lower tax bracket.

According to a pamphlet provided by the Magpegasus Federal Credit Union in Midland, Congress passed the Employees Retirement Income Security Act in 1974 to give individuals receiving compensation from an employer, but not covered under the employer's pension plan, the opportunity to establish their own tax-deferred retirement program. Effective Jan. 1, 1982, Congress enacted the Economic Tax Recovery Act, which opened IRA's to anyone who works, even if they already are participating under a qualified pension, profit sharing, stock bonus or bond sharing purchase plan, or any other type of retirement plan.

The term "compensation" includes wages, salaries, tips, professional fees, commissions, bonuses, incomes received as an active partner in a partnership and other incomes received for providing personal services.

INCOME FROM investments, such as interest or dividends, rental income and income from a partnership which results only from a capital investment are not considered compensation, according to the new tax law.

In addition to the new law allowing qualified individuals to open IRA's when already covered by a company pension plan, another change that will be effective as of Jan. 1 concerns the amount of deposits.

Before Jan. 1, the maximum amount that could be deposited into an IRA per tax year was 15 percent of gross income up to $1,500. Under the new law, an individual can deposit 100 per cent of his gross income up to a maximum of $2,000.

According to the old law, an individual who meets the requirements for an accumulative IRA may establish one for himself as well as a "spousal IRA" for his non-working spouse. He could contribute 15 per cent of his gross income to a maximum of $1,750 to both IRA's as long as the contribution was split evenly between the two IRAs.

Effective Jan. 1, an individual with a spousal IRA may contribute 100 per cent of his compensation to a maximum of $2,250 to both accounts, splitting the contribution in any way he wished as long as no more than $2,000 is placed in either account.

IF BOTH SPOUSES work, they may each have their own IRA and can contribute the maximum $2,000 allowed to each account. If they file a joint tax return they can deduct the total as a deduction from gross income.

If an individual puts more than $2,000 into his IRA, he will have to pay taxes on it plus a 6 percent penalty which is non-deductible and is charged each year that the excess amount stays in his account. He may avoid the penalty by withdrawing the excess, plus any interest, before his federal income tax return is due.

Other penalties result when an individual withdraws deposits before the minimum age of 59½. In addition to the federal penalty of paying income tax for the year the withdrawal is made plus the 10 percent excise tax penalty on the amount withdrawn, different institutions also may impose various penalties of their own.

For example, Carol Whitsitt, assistant vice president of Gibralter Savings, said that financial institution penalizes by taking the amount with-

Wishes for the New Year

SAN SIMEON — The Old Year has been rung out with — I imagine — the usual laments for the tragedies and headaches the world has faced, and with — I hope — the traditional thanks for our many blessings.

As we embark on a New Year it is unfortunate we cannot bid good riddance to the evils of our society, and all the troubles that beset the world in 1981. Although we pride ourselves on being a civilized nation, we are not so intellectually advanced that we can say each New Year will be better than the last.

It is true that as we face 1982 we do not have the Iranian hostage tragedy as we did last year.

We can say that we are not a world at war, but we still cannot say that peace reigns everywhere. Ask the Afghans. Those poor people are ringing in the New Year either by fleeing their homes or grabbing their guns and fighting the invading Russians.

Poland, wracked by crisis after crisis for centuries, is going through another period of pain. I wish I could see a quick end to their agony, for the Poles are known to be among the bravest fighters in history, but this latest Soviet-inspired aggression does not

Houston's first woman mayor, Kathryn J. Whitmire, is sworn into office by the Honorable Patricia R. Lykos of the 180th District Court Saturday morning at the Houston Music Hall.

Houston inaugarates female mayor

By WILLIAM J. BAUMER
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Kathryn Jean Whitmire became Houston's first woman mayor Saturday, pledging fiscal responsibility in dealing with the problems of the nation's fifth largest city.

"I want to tell you how proud I am to stand here today as the 48th mayor of my hometown. I am eager to begin our work, and I am determined to do a good job for you," said the 35-year-old certified public accountant and former city controller.

The mayor, who stressed her business background and fiscal conservatism during the campaign, swept into office Nov. 17 when she garnered 62 percent of the vote in a nonpartisan runoff election against Harris County Sheriff Jack Heard.

Mrs. Whitmire was sworn in by State District Judge Patricia Lykos and, minutes later, performed her first official act by swearing in the 14-member City Council and city controller.

The mayor's inaugural address, which was interrupted with applause several times by the crowd of 3,500, emphasized the need to improve city services while maintaining the fiscal integrity in the city of 1.6 million.

"First, we have to make Houston a better city... But at the same time, we have to meet the long-term needs of the most dynamic city in the world today," she said.

While pledging to improve basic city services and expand others, the mayor said the city must control its budget and streamline the City Hall bureaucracy.

"Like every other major city, Houston faces the prospect that our financial resources will simply not keep up with the demands for city services. That's why a major effort of this administration will be directed toward streamlining our city government to make sure our tax dollars are spent wisely," she said.

The mayor said she will ask for support from the business community and citizens' groups to help meet the needs the city government cannot provide.

Mrs. Whitmire said her first few decisions, including raising sewer rates and reforming the civil service system, will be "difficult and unpopular." But she added that ignoring them would be "irresponsible."

Several of Houston's former mayors were present for the inguration, but a noticiable absentee was two-term Mayor Jim McConn, whom Mrs. Whitmire beat in a 13-candidate primary Nov. 3. McConn sent a message of regret but no official explanation for his absence.

Mrs. Whitmire went from the inaugural ceremony to her City Hall office, where she presided over her first City Council meeting.

The mayor became the first woman elected to city office in Houston when she won a race for the city controller's job in 1977.

During her tenure, she gained a reputation as a strict guardian of public funds and often held up financing of projects she deemed unworthy.

Her late husband, Jim Whitmire, also was an accountant and ran twice unsuccessfully for city council. He died of complications from diabetes in 1976.

Inmate committs suicide

RICHARDSON, Texas (AP) — A 25-year-old Waco woman, arrested for assaulting a police officer in this Dallas suburb, managed to slip off handcuffs and chains and hang herself, authorities said.

A Dallas County medical examiner Friday ruled a suicide the death of Annette Greenwood Shabazz.

Ms. Shabazz was arrested shortly after 11 p.m. Thursday when an officer saw her running east in the path of westbound vehicles on a Richardson road. When the officer slowed down, she leaped onto the hood of his patrol car, police said.

When the officer, Wayne Dobbs, struggled to pull her off the hood, she grabbed his .45-caliber automatic, pointed it at him and pulled the trigger several times, police said. But the gun did not fire because they safety was on.

During a struggle with Dobbs and two other officers who arrived to help subdue her, Ms. Shabazz yelled, "Kill me, kill me!" police said.

Ms. Shabazz was placed in a cell in handcuffs and shackles while officers tried to contact a peace justice to obtain a mental health warrant to transfer her to a hospital psychiatric ward, police said. When they were unable to locate a peace justice, officers notified a hospital and were instructed to take her to the drug abuse ward.

But when an officer entered the cell, he found Ms. Shabazz nude and hanging from the door keyhole.

Tests were being conducted to determine whether Ms. Shabazz was under the influence of drugs at the time of her death.

Restaurant explosion kills youth

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — The body of a 13-year-old youth was found under the rubble of a concrete block wall Saturday at a restaurant destroyed by an explosion 10 hours earlier, authorities said.

The explosion about 5 p.m. Friday at Uncle Louie's Family Restaurant, apparently was caused by a natural gas leak, said Flint police Lt. William Kontyko.

The dead youth, Geanovis Davis, and his friend, Terry White, 12, were passing by when the explosion sent a wall and the restaurant'sroof crashing down, Kontyko said. White was listed in satisfactory condiion at Hurley Medical Center.

Law legalizes sale of machine guns

CHICAGO (AP) — A law legalizing the sale of machine guns went into effect in Illinois on New Year's Day and already a group of legislators are talking about repeal.

A bipartisan group of 16 legislators on Friday called upon Gov. James R. Thompson to convene a special session of the General Assembly to repeal the measure.

But the bill's sponsor said the law is designed to control the sale of machine guns and is not meant to make dangerous weapons more available to the public.

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) — Attenzione magazine, a national monthly focused on Italian Americans, has been sold to Adam Publications Inc. by Paulucci Publications Inc.

Jeno F. Paulucci, owner and founder of Paulucci Publications, announced the sale Saturday. Terms of the sale were not disclosed.

Publication of Attenzione will continue and all subscriptions will be honored by Adam Publications of New York City, Paulucci said.

Youths charged with sexual assault

CHICAGO (AP) — Police say four reputed street gang members have been charged with stripping and sexully assaulting a young woman during a rock concert in the International Amphitheatre.

Two dozen youths allegedly robbed, stripped and sexually assaulted the 18-year-old suburban Cicero woman early Wednesday. Two of the woman's friends also were beaten and robbed while her date was beaten, Lt. Joseph Curtin said. Arrested Thursday night were Ezra L. Gardner, 19, his brother, Robbie Gardner, 18; Patrick J. Hampton, 18, and Bobby R. Brooks, 19.

Townhouse fire kills three children

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Fire and heavy smoke swept a townhouse Saturday, killing three children, officials said. Their mother jumped to safety from a second-floor window.

Jeanette Edwards, a neighbor, said she saw Elaine French jump and then try unsuccessfully to re-enter the house. Killed were Jason French, 3, Eric French, 2, and Jennifer French, 8 months.

Fire officials said the children's father, Barry French, was not home when the fire began, but collapsed upon returning and learning of the fire. Mrs. French suffered shock and leg injuries.

Blood cells from coffee-bean enzyme

CHICAGO (AP) — Shortages of type O blood cells may be alleviated by producing it from the type B with use of a coffee-bean enzyme, new research shows.

Researchers using the coffe-bean enzyme alpha galactosidase have removed a sugar molecule from the surface of the type B cells, making them into type O blood, Dr. Jack Goldstein, head of the cell biochemistry laboratory of the New York Blood Center, said in this week's Journal of the American Medical Association. Type O blood can be mixed with any blood type.

Gunshot victim chooses paralysis instead of death

CLEVELAND (AP) — As he lay in the back seat of the car, paralyzed from a bullet wound and trying to ward off an abductor's beatings, Paul J. Komlosi realized he had a frightening decision to make.

If he stayed awake, he probably would face a lifetime of paralysis. Or he could, he said, just "keel over and die."

Komlosi decided to call for help. As he did, the legislative assistant to U.S. Rep. Dennis E. Eckart reconciled himself to being paralyzed.

"I've resigned myself to it. I resigned myself to it that night," Komlosi, 25, said in an interview with The Plain Dealer published Friday.

The abduction occurred Dec. 19 when Komlosi went outside his Washington, D.C., home to test a stereo cassette tape deck he had bought his girlfriend for Christmas.

Two men, neither of whom have been arrested, shoved him into his girlfriend's car and drove around for a while, saying they wanted to go to Maryland. One of the men held a handgun on him, he said.

"All of a sudden, he shot me," Komlosi said. "He didn't say anything first. He just shot me."

The bullet entered Komlosi's left side, hit his spinal cord and exited out his back.

"The sound was just so resounding in the car," he said. "And the smell of gunpowder. I felt like my upper trunk was floating on my legs. I knew I was paralyzed."

Komlosi said he lost track of time during the ride.

"I was alive, thinking and waiting for a chance to do something," Komlosi said. "I knew they'd screw up at some time. Unfortunately, it was after they shot me."

Finally the car's clutch burned out and the driver pulled over near a gas station in Prince George's County, Md.

"I was crumpled over in the back seat. I wanted them to think I was dead. And I wanted them to stop hitting me.

"If I was going to get out of this alive, I knew I had to stay awake," Komlosi said. "But I thought, 'Do I want to be paralyzed for life?' It would have been easier to keel over and die."

The two men left the disabled car, and Komlosi managed to blow the horn and cry for help. A gas station attendant called for police and an ambulance.

Komlosi, paralyzed from the waist down, is to remain in a Washington hospital for about two more weeks before transferring to a rehabilitation center at either New York University or Ohio State University.

Short of a miracle, he said, there is no hope for a cure of the paralysis. He said he will miss athletics the most, but he plans to return to work for Eckart, a Democrat from Euclid, as soon as he can.

When the congressman visited him after the shooting, Komlosi said he asked his boss if he was a sponsor of a bill to ban the sale of handguns.

"If I'm not, I will be," Eckart responded.

Justice Rehnquist suffered 'disturbances in clarity'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Justice William H. Rehnquist suffered temporary "disturbances in mental clarity" recently because of a sharp reduction in medication he was taking for chronic back pains, a hospital spokesman said Saturday.

The spokesman, Dr. Dennis O'Leary, said Rehnquist recovered quickly from the drug withdrawal symptoms, is "really in a clear mental state now" and could be discharged from George Washington University Hospital on Sunday.

Last Wednesday, O'Leary said, the justice suffered a withdrawal reaction from the reduction in dosage of the pain-killing drug, which took the form of "disturbances in mental clarity" and a distortion of his perception of reality. O'Leary did not identify the drug or say how long Rehnquist had been taking it.

The spokesman said Rehnquist was put back on the previous dosage of the drug, and the dosage subsequently has been gradually reduced. The justice quickly overcame the withdrawal symptoms and is alert and mentally clear, O'Leary said.

"This just shows that Supreme Court justices are no more immune to the double-edged sword of drugs than anyone else," said O'Leary, who was the hospital's chief spokesman when President Reagan was treated there for gunshot wounds he suffered March 30 in an assassination attempt.

In recent months, lawyers and other regulars at the Supreme Court have commented that Rehnquist often stuttered and slurred his words while questioning attorneys during oral arguments.

O'Leary said slurred speech was a side effect of substantial doses of the drug Rehnquist had been taking. O'Leary said Rehnquist's dosage before the sharp reduction was "high" but not massive.

The Washington Post said Rizzoli, chief of neurosurgery at George Washington, referred all calls Friday to O'Leary.

Sanford Darrell Chiago, left, and Brenda Gail Antone, above, are named in a federal murder warrant for the slaying last weekend of postal worker Karen Green. They are being held in Maricopa County Jail near Phoenix.

Arrests in death of postal worker

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Authorities continued their search today for a fourth person wanted in the stabbing death of a part-time letter carrier, as three others named in federal warrants were held at the Maricopa County Jail.

Officers made grid searches in the area where two suspects were arrested Friday evening, but failed to turn up the fourth suspect, identified on the warrant as Clayborn Dale Osife.

Sheriff Jerry Hill said Brenda Gail Antone 30, and Sanford Darrell Chiago, 29, were arrested without incident after reserve officers responding to a tip spotted the two walking down a road in nearby Gilbert.

Janet Antone, 31, was arrested at a Phoenix apartment Wednesday, officials said. She was being held in $100,000 bond on charges of murder on an Indian reservation and murder of a postal employee.

Karen Beth Green, 27, was stabbed to death after being abducted on her postal delivery rounds last weekend. The abduction occurred a week ago in an area north of suburban Mesa and near the Salt River Indian Reservation.

Mrs. Green's fire-gutted car was found on the reservation Sunday, and her body was found in a trash dump on the reservation Monday.

Witnesses and law-enforcement officials said she was forced into her car by a group of five adult Indians — three men and two women — who were accompanied by two children.

FBI spokesman Arthur Schultz said Thursday that a fifth person, whom he declined to identify, also was being sought.

U.S. Attorney for Arizona A. Melvin McDonald said authorities have received "an avalanche of information" from the public about the case.

The four people named in the federal warrant were all believed to be residents of the reservation, and McDonald said part of the search was conducted on the Indian lands.

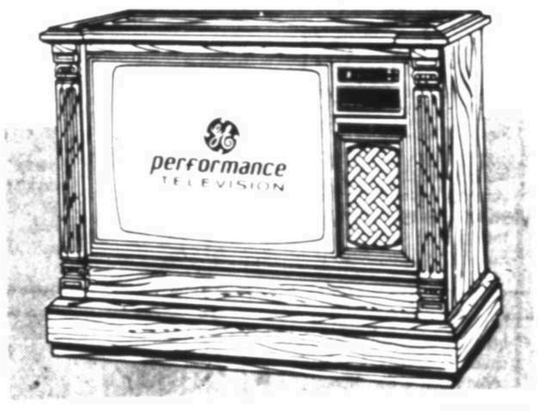

"Indian reservations are vast and have a lot of places to hide," he said. "There are lots of caves, a lot of hogans, a lot of houses; there's a lot of turf to cover."

Tuesday through Thursday

West Texas: Fair and warmer Tuesday then turning colder most sections Wednesday and Thursday. A chance of snow north Thursday. Highs 50s north to 60s south Tuesday cooling to 30s north to 50s south by Thursday. Lows 20s north and 30s south Tuesday cooling to teens north and 20s south by Thursday.

Expect another typical West Texas day

Midlanders can look forward to another typical West Texas winter day with the winds expected to once again blow at 15-20 mph gusts today.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it should be partly cloudy today, becoming fair tonight through Monday. Midlanders can expect colder temperatures through Monday with the high today in the upper 40s and the low tonight dropping to near 20. The high on Monday should be in the middle 50s.

Saturday's high of 68 was seven degrees cooler than the record high set for that date of 75 in 1964. The overnight low of 40 was considerably warmer than the record low of 14, set in 1959.

Sheriffs investigate aggravated robbery

Midland sheriff department officers are still investigating the aggravated robbery of a Midland man which occurred in far east Midland County at 11:35 p.m. Friday.

According to sheriff reports, Hans Zelisko, a Midland resident, reported that two white males offered him a ride after his vehicle stalled on East Highway 80. Zelisko said the men struck him on the head, knocking him unconscious and removed about $200 from his person. The suspects fled the scene in a white over blue two-door vehicle.

The sheriff's department was continuing the investigation late Saturday night.

Midland police officers were busy Saturday investigating four separate burglaries.

Joe Valencia, 609 N. Dallas, reported a burglary at La Morenita Grocery, at the same address, at 8:38 a.m. Taken were several major items including a television set, a C.B. radio and leather jackets and vests. According to reports, entry was apparently gained through an air conditioning vent. Total value of the items was set at $10,000.

Theft of a stereo valued at $300 from Mid-Continent Inn, 2500 Commerce, was reported by Randy Carter at 12:38 p.m. Entry was gained through a south door.

Lamar Cortney, 200 W. Illinois, reported the burglary of his automobile at 8:33 a.m. A cassette player valued at $170, two equalizers, valued at $120 each, two speakers valued at $100 each, two speakers valued at $60 and 20 cassette tapes valued at $30 were taken. According to reports, entry was gained through a locked door.

J.C. Davis, 5007 Heather Road, reported the burglary of his residence early Saturday morning. Reported missing were $50 in pennies, $200 worth of meat and a camera. Total value was placed at $270. Police were unable to determine the point of entry.

Rosary will be at 7:30 p.m. today in Thomas Funeral Home. Services will be at 10:30 a.m. Monday in Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery.

Born June 6, 1886, at Fort Davis, Martinez had lived in Midland for the past 50 years.

$2 million offered for Dozier information

VERONA, Italy (AP) — A group described as "friends" of kidnapped U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier has offered a reward of $2 million for information leading to the NATO general's release, a NATO spokesman said today.

Col. Luciano Dalcheggio said he did not know exactly who was putting up the money but emphasized that NATO itself was not offering the reward.

drawn and multiplying it times the interest rate for 180 days. The exact formula is the actual principle times the rate it is drawing divided by 360 (days of the year) times 180 equals the penalty.

According to federal law, an individual may begin receiving payments from his IRA at the age of 59½ (normal retirement age) and must begin withdrawals at the age of 70½. No further deposits may be made during or after the year the individual turns 70½.

An individual, at the time he decides to begin withdrawing the income from his IRA, may withdraw his entire account balance in one lump sum in one payment or over a certain number of months. He may also choose to receive payments monthly as long as the amount of each payment will empty the account by his normal life expectancy with no payments made to anyone after his death.

An individual is also provided the alternative of receiving smaller monthly payments during his lifetime with his spouse continuing to receive payments after his death.

THE ONLY CONDITIONS for making the withdrawals before the age of 59½ without penalty are death or total and permanent disability.

Although credit unions have been authorized to participate in IRA programs within the last several years, most have left involvement with the accounts to institutions such as commercial banks, mutual savings banks, savings and loans and regulation investment companies.

According to Anita Lintzen of the Arco Oil and Gas Company credit union, even though company credit unions have been able to open IRAs, many chose not to because most of the company's employees already had established pension plans, eliminating their qualification for an IRA.

"Now with the new rule, our people (employees of Arco and its parent company, Atlantic Richfield) can have both of the programs (pension plans and IRAs)," she said.

To be a member of Arco's credit union, the individual must be employed with, have a spouse or children who are employeed by, or be a former employee of the company.

"Once a member always a member," Ms. Lintzen said.

That policy sets Arco's reason to provide IRAs aside from companies who terminate all credit union benefits of an employee who is no longer employed by that firm.

Louise Martin, manager of the Magpegasus Credit Union, Mobil's subsidiary, said their board members elected not to provide IRAs for their employees this year.

"We're set up to be a service to our people," she explained. "We're also set up to be fairly competitive, but not with Mobil. There are so many companies, banks and savings and loans offering them (IRAs) that there is enough competition."

New stipulations, effective Jan. 1 for the 1982 tax year, allow individuals earning money, even when they are already covered by pension plans, to open Individual Retirement Accounts. The IRAs can provide an annual tax deduction of up to $2,000 from the gross income, allowing the deposits to accumulate interest that cannot be taxed until withdrawals are made at the age of 59½, when the individual is usually in a lower tax bracket.

Although Ms. Lintzen said Atlantic Richfield would still be in competition with their credit union, she is expecting 10 percent of the company's membership to open IRAs.

"WE HOPE TO write up about 160 accounts," she explained. "It's a nice new avenue of funds athough most of it will probably just move over (from pensions already established within the company). We might get half of it in new money."

"It's really an ideal time for us to get into IRAs," Gail Haussecker of the Midland Teachers Credit Union said. "We've never had it before because the teachers and school employees were with the TRTA (Texas Retired Teachers Association). Now it's open and they are eligible."

According to Ms. Haussecker, "Credit unions have always served different people that the banks and savings and loans didn't want to (serve). We're not trying to compete with the banks or savings and loans."

The IRAs will be filling a gap left this year when the school district dropped the Social Security plan, according to Ms. Haussecker.

"The federal government and the state government gave the options of whether to pay Social Security or not," she explained. "MISD decided not to."

She attributes the decision not to federal Social Security cutbacks but to the fact that MISD was "getting out" because the school system was withholding the Social Security and having to match it. The taxpayers were having to pay the other half, she said.

"I don't think we'll be getting a lot of money," she continued, "but people (school employees) will now be looking for some place to put that money (that usually went into Social Security)."

CREDIT UNIONS also have the advantage over their competitors because they can make deposits into IRAs through direct payroll deductions.

Spokesmen for banks and savings and loans say the new laws will also enable them to be more competitive with each other and brokerage firms.

According to Fred Middleton, vice president of First National Bank of Midland, "The big advantage is it will provide a greater market for banks, savings and loans, insurance companies and brokerage firms."

Venita Gaston, assistant cashier in charge of the IRA department at Midland National Bank, agreed, saying, "It (the new law) allows us to be more competitive with the brokerage companies where we were restricted before."

And the competition is intense.

Midland institutions are offering various interest rates, deposit minimums and penalties for individuals who withdraw money from their accounts before the minimum age required by federal law.

The interest rates vary from a flat rate for 2½ years from the date the account was opened, to 18-month floating rates, to paying the average of the previous quarter's rates.

IRA deposits range from minimums of $100 and $500 to any lump sum under the maximum of $2,000.

According to Ms. Haussecker, the American society is in a "buy now, pay later" syndrome. She feels the IRA will provide a "real incentive" for individuals to save.

Before the IRAs were offered, people who worked to accumulate large savings accounts were only turning around to find they were being taxed in a higher income bracket, she said.

"It's a good thing that the government has come up with a means to reward people who save."

Sewage, suits, strikes among talked-about events

showdown in April as both sides showed up in full force before the Texas Health Facilities Commission. After a three-day hearing, the commission denied Odessa the right to purchase the machine. When Odessa applied for a re-hearing, that also was rejected, and the two cities eventually pulled in their claws.

However, a ruling by the federal legislature in October superseded the THFC's decision and allowed Odessa to purchase the 6 MEV.

Jezek Decision

A decision by the Texas Supreme Court resulted in a five-cent increase in city tax rates for this fiscal year. The court went against Midland and held the city responsible for accidents occurring at intersections where brush, trees and weeds block a driver's view of side street traffic.

The case had been filed by the parents of Calvin Keith Jezek, who was injured June 10, 1976, in an accident at an intersection in southwest Midland. He later died of those injuries. Midland was ordered to pay $975,000 in damages.

Agent Orange

Plight of Vietnam veterans and the effects of being exposed to Agent Orange came to light in Midland when Roger Stinson described his health problems since the Army days.

Once Stinson became aware of what was causing those health problems, the next hurdle became one of getting it confirmed and obtaining treatment.

After Stinson and other veterans exposed to Agent Orange began speaking up about their health problems, a state law was passed that will allow the attorney general to represent veterans in class action suits against the government and to provide genetic counseling and screening for the veterans.

Murder of Karen Rickey

Brutal murders are a rarity in Midland, and the discovery of 17-year-old Karen Rickey's body in a field on Feb. 18 shocked the community. Information led law enforcement officers to Midland Park Mall and a California man, 19-year-old Stephen Andrew Morse.

The case was closed in December when Morse admitted to bludgeoning the Midland High School junior to death, and he was sentenced to 25 years in the state penitentiary.

US, allies will draw 'closer together' on sanctions

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and its European allies will draw "closer together" in the next two weeks on sanctions against Poland's martial law government and the Soviet Union, a top State Department official said Saturday.

Lawrence Eagleburger, assistant secretary of state for European affairs, said the Reagan administration still wants its allies to take "parallel action or complimentary moves" to the U.S. trade sanctions against the Soviet Union.

Despite the reluctance of West Germany to condemn the Soviets, Eagleburger said the Bonn government has generally supported the U.S. position.

West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President Reagan are to meet Tuesday in Washington.

"In the German case, as with the rest of the allies, it's a matter of further consultations with them," Eagleburger told reporters Saturday. "Over the next two weeks, we'll draw closer together."

Reagan last week imposed a ban on exporting high technology items such as electronic and computer gear and oil and gas equipment to the Soviets. He also suspended Soviet aviation and maritime rights in the United States.

Eagleburger, who spent several days meeting with top officials in Europe just before Christmas, said some of America's allies there have a different perspective. But he noted that France and Italy in particular share an equally hard line against the Soviet role in Poland.

He predicted that public opinion in Europe will compel democratic leaders there to take their own steps against the Soviets, whom he said "egged on" the imposition of martial law in Poland three weeks ago.

"European public opinion is very upset," he said. "European labor unions are out in the streets; they're pushing. It's bound to have an effect on any democracy."

Eagleburger said it is too early tell what effect the sanctions are having on the Soviets, but he said, "They will be painful. I think they clearly will have a bite."

"We have other sanctions we can impose, but that's up to the president," he said. Asked if they include a grain embargo, Eagleburger declined to discuss specifics. "They run the entire gamut," he said

Although Poland now appears to be fairly quiet now, Eagleburger said, the loss of billions of dollars in government-to-goverment economic aid from the United States and other Western nations is putting more economic pressure on Warsaw.

"The economy was bad before the Dec. 13 coup," he said. "It certainly can't be any better now."

But, he said, there are no signs of any significant behind-the-scenes negotiations between leaders of Poland's 10-million-member Solidarity labor movement and the Communist party or military regime.

Eagleburger said "substantial passive resistance" will continue in Poland until Gen. Wojiech Jaruzelski, the Polish premier, ends martial law, frees detainees and resumes negotiations with Solidarity leaders.

Editor's Report

ble spots.

We Americans have just finished the first year of a new administration, which a majority of us wanted. President Reagan has made a good start toward fulfilling his campaign promises to get this country back on the track of economic stability. He has not had the time to do everything he wanted to do, and he himself would be the first to admit that he has made some mistakes.

The important part of the Reagan administration's picture is that a solid foundation has been built for future progress. Those seven consecutive favorable votes in the Congress speak eloquently of the support the new president has for his goals of cutting federal costs and trimming waste in the federal bureaucracy.

Also to the president's credit is his ability and willingness to change his mind when conditions warrant. He is anything but a stubborn administrator, except in matters of principle. When he is convinced his policies can be improved upon, as in the Social Security debate, he shifts gears and works for those improvements. The Old Year has not been one of great achievements, but it certainly has been a year of encouragement for the future of the economy and political stability for our country.

President Reagan has established rapport with the leaders of Canada and Mexico and set the stage for what I believe will be greater friendship between Washington and our two neighbors and therefore the rest of the hemisphere.

The president's foreign policy has been mercilessly and erroneously faulted by his critics. To say that he has no foreign policy is malicious nonsense. Our foreign policy has been consistent since 1945 in its opposition to aggression, its advocacy of human rights and its awareness of the danger of communist expansion.

The major changes in our foreign policy have not been the result of any vacillation in Washington. Whatever changes that have taken place have been the direct result of the changes of the foreign policy of other nations. We can look forward to a continuation of this pattern of consistency in 1982.

My greatest wish for the New Year is that we can continue to march down the roads of domestic stability and international good will, and that the integrity of American leadership will have an influence in those nations oppressed or enslaved by aggressors. It is not unrealistic to believe a nation with the will can find a way to make 1982 better than its predecessor.

I know that all of you join me in this wish for a healthy, successful and peaceful New Year.

Polish yearn to come to US

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer

TRAISKIRCHEN, Austria (AP) — "Help me get to America," pleaded Tekla Toporoska, a Polish woman crammed with 2,000 other refugees at this graffiti-splashed transit camp outside Vienna.

That was all the elderly Mrs. Toporoska, her spirits broken after months of waiting in this crowded barracks, had to say to a reporter recently visiting.

Her friend Wanda Poleska, saying her Catholic prayers on her metal bunk across the dingy and drafty hall, wanted to know why she and Mrs. Toporoska — both 60 — were apparently not wanted in America.

After four months in Austria, "I still haven't been to the embassy," she said. Even those lucky enough to be asked for an interview with U.S. officials "wait for more than two months."

It seemed to Mrs. Poleska that only young men got the long-awaited papers to go to the United States.

Most of the 33,000 officially registered Polish refugees who entered Austria in 1981 said they wanted to go to America, Canada or Australia.

But all three countries have fixed immigration quotas, and they are at the end of a long line.

Life is not comfortable in the Traiskirchen camp, a collection of battered buildings that once served as an imperial barracks.

As camp director Karl Radek says, life here "can never be a good time" because the refugees may lose motivation to move on.

Mrs. Toporoska and Mrs. Poleska are crowded into a cavernous room with 200 other ill-clad refugees — from many Eastern Europe countries as well as Africa and Asia.

"I am old, and I cannot be in my country," said Mrs. Poleska. "I left my whole family in Poland, my children, they are married, have children." She began to sob.

Why did they leave?

"Communism is good in pictures," said a 52-year-old man who would give only his last name, Machinowski.

"But what hapens is different. It's not practical. Work, work, and tomorrow will be good," he snorted. "That's gone on for 37 years."

"Communists are not good for people," said Mrs. Poleska. People have no say in communism."

Antonia Biedaha, who fled Wroclaw 15 months ago and has waited to join her son in America, declared she is "anti-communist."

"I am Catholic," she proclaimed. "Real Poles are Catholic." She denounced the Soviets at length.

"The only people who help us are Americans, French, Germans," she shouted, the curlers in her hair shaking as she warmed to her topic.

"This," she tugged at a flower-print dressing gown, "came from Germany. Poles have nothing from Poland. All to Russia."

Frustrations at camp routine, the cultural differences among the 2,000-plus refugees of more than a dozen nationalities and the incomprehension of the bureauracies they must deal with often erupt in violence.

Policemen oversee the noon meal handouts, for example. Officials report there are sometimes "terrible scenes," but won't elaborate.

Food is handed out in tin pots. Supper comes in brown paper bags. There are no plates. As for the nourishment itself, an Afghan named Whaed said, "If you go to the pig farm, they eat better than this."

Everywhere in the camp there is noise from radios, crying children. Broken windows make for drafty stairways.

Until martial law was imposed in Poland Dec. 13, Austrians were visibly losing patience with their Polish guests, many fleeing in search of a better economic lot.

Desperate to stem new arrivals, the Austrians reinstated visa requirements for Poles.

Vienna's tabloids took to daily chronicles of horror — an Austrian mother keeping her daughter home at night in fear of Poles, a Pole beating a policeman, Poles draining state resources and threatening jobs as Austria grappled with its first signs of recession.

But since the marital crackdown, good will has returned.

"It was a complete change," said a 29-year-old Polish auto mechanic from Kolobrzeg who has received his papers for emigration to Australia.

At Christmas, Austrians responded to a national appeal to help Poland by donating food and gifts worth about $950,000.

"A Viennese woman who unfortunately has no money wishes you a lovely Christmas and a better New Year," said a message pinned to a camp bulletin board. "I hope there is a better future for all Poles."

Filipino athlete abducted after marrying Marcos' daughter

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A noted Filipino athlete was kidnapped after he reportedly divorced a beauty queen and secretly wed a daughter of President Ferdinand E. Marcos, and the sportsman's family today accused Marcos of arranging his abduction.

Members of Tommy Manotoc's family claimed at a news conference that a ransom note they received today demanding a $2.5 million payoff was a fake. They said Marcos' security men may have kidnapped Manotoc because the Philippines' first family disapproved of the marriage, contending Manotoc was not legally divorced.

"Considering that they (the Marcos family) were opposed to the marriage, I don't think that it could be anybody else," Manotoc's mother Carmen told reporters.

Manotoc is a 32-year-old top amateur golfer and basketball coach. He was last seen Tuesday after he dined with his new bride, 26-year-old Maria Imelda Marcos, the president's eldest daughter.

Presidential spokesman Gregorio Cendana said police intelligence agents believed Manotoc had been kidnapped by subversives or criminals. He did not elaborate.

Manotoc's lawyer Roberto San Jose said the golfer divorced his first wife Aurora Pijuan, 1969 Miss International, before marrying Ms. Marcos secretly at a ceremony in Arlington, Va., in early December.

The sportsman had dated Ms. Marcos for several months, despite objections by Marcos and his wife Imelda who said he was still married, Manotoc's family said.

San Jose said Manotoc had obtained a divorce from Ms. Pijuan in the Dominican Republic. But Ms. Pijuan has said she never signed any divorce papers.

Divorce is illegal in the Philippines, which is predominantly Roman Catholic.

Maria Imelda Marcos, also known as Imee, has not been available for comment since Manotoc's disappearance.

Manotoc's family said they had earlier reported Manotoc's disappearance to police but had not received a ransom note until today. The note demanded $2.5 million and release of several jailed members of the outlawed New People's Army, a communist insurgent group, they said.

Manotoc's father Ricardo said he thought the note was a hoax.

"What will they get by taking Tommy?," he said. "If I were a billionaire, yes. But I have no money."

Canada considers sanctions against Soviet Union

WINDSOR, Ontario (AP) — Canada is considering introducing its own sanctions against the Soviet Union as a result of the imposition of martial law in Poland, according to Foreign Minister Mark MacGuigan.

"We haven't taken any steps as such," he said in an interview Friday. "We haven't yet made any sanctions, but we are considering the subject."

He did not say what measures were being discussed.

MacGuigan also said he told the Reagan administration last week that Canada will not undermine the sanctions imposed by President Reagan last Tuesday in retaliation for alleged Soviet involvement in the crackdown in Poland.

Pravda says sanctions blackmail Western Europe

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union's leading newspaper today accused the United States of using economic sanctions against Moscow to force Western Europe to cooperate or face cancellation of nuclear missile talks.

The Communist Party daily Pravda said the sanctions imposed Wednesday by President Reagan in response to the Polish crisis "directly blackmails West European governments: either you support the sanctions or we will go further — and stop the Geneva talks on the limitation of nuclear weapons in Europe."

The paper said Reagan showed "undisguised disregard for the interests of U.S. allies and the aspiratins of millions of West Europeans."

Western diplomats said the Soviet article appeared aimed at driving a wedge between the United States and its Western allies over the sanctions.

Reagan blamed the Soviets for Poland's Dec. 13 martial law crackdown. He delayed U.S.-Soviet talks on future grain shipments, banned sales of high-technology and other items and canceled commercial airline flights.

Most U.S. allies said they would not go along with the sanctions. Some such as West Germany contend the Soviet Union was not responsible for Poland's military rule.

"Despite the obvious flop of the collective sanctions, (an) anti-Soviet and anti-Polish psychosis continues its reign in Washington at the present time, administration officials are frenziedly trying to justify the necessity of the measures taken by the USA and hint there may be further steps," Pravda said.

The United States has not said it will cancel the Geneva talks on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe if allies do not agree to the sanctions.

Chinese hangover cure

PEKING (AP) — A Peking food research laboratory has reported finding a cure for the hangover, the Peking Evening News said Saturday.

The sweet syrup can be taken either before or after drinking, the paper said. It said the syrup will double the drinker's capacity for liquor or relieve a hangover.

The "relief and sobriety" syrup is being prepared for production and sale, it added.

The paper said the syrup attracted interest at a recent Peking meeting to exchange scientific research results.

The report comes at a time when Chinese leaders are urging frugality in wedding celebrations and feasts for the lunar new year on Jan. 25.

Typhoon kills three Iranians

BEIRUT, Lebanon (ap) — A typhoon struck Hormuz Island at the entrance to the oil-rich Persian Gulf, killing three Iranians and injuring four, Iran's official Pars news agency reported Saturday.

It said the typhoon, which hit Thursday, involved several lightning storms and a tidal wave. The storm caused "extensive damage which could not be clearly assessed yet," the reported added.

Embassy bombing total rises

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rescue teams dug out three bodies from the rubble of Iraq's devastated embassy in Beirut Saturday, bringing to 51 the number killed in the Dec. 15 bombing that destroyed the mission, police said.

They also reported pieces of a car believed to be a Swedish-made Volvo, including the car's motor, were recovered from the debris.

They said investigators were trying to establish whether the pieces corroborated a police theory that the five-story embassy building was blown up by a suicide terrorist driving a bomb-laden car.

Among the victims were Ambassador Abdul-Razzak Lafta and 23 members of his staff.

Students attack soldiers

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — High school students in the occupied Gaza Strip burned tires and threw stones at Israeli soldiers Saturday, Israel Radio reported.

The student protest in the southern Gaza town of Rafah was quickly dispersed by Israeli troops, the state radio reported. No injuries or arrests were reported.

Last month a 17-year-old Arab youth was shot dead by Israeli soldiers when young protesters assulted an Israeli patrol in Rafah.

Policeman fires on protestors

RENTERIA, Spain (AP) — A policeman fired his submachine gun at attacking demonstrators and three people were wounded, including a 7-year-old boy, officials said Saturday.

The incident occurred shortly after hundreds of people marched through Renteria shouting for amnesty for Basque activists serving prison terms for political terrorism.

The people of Poland still waiting

News of martial law strikes fear in hearts of some Midlanders, too

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

On Dec. 13 as the Christmas holiday and the close of another year approached, the people of Poland were hoping for a beginning of freedom. Instead, a darkness fell over Poland, bringing a bloody battle against repression.

Solidarity and the Polish Communist government have been struggling for almost 1½ years to gain control of the country's destiny. In the end, Solidarity's increasing demands for a voice in government resulted in complete isolation for the Poles. Overnight, the government cracked down on the movement and its leaders — all communications to the Western world were closed.

Lech Walesa, Solidarity's leader, was seized by the government and hasn't been heard from since. Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, leader of the Polish Communist government, declared a state of emergency, placing the nation under martial law.

The proud Polish nation became a country of despair. And half a world away, several Midlanders viewed the events with fear.

POLISH-AMERICANS now living in Midland display an array of emotions about the country of their heritage.

Wanda Troyanowski Mohr's parents fled Poland after her father had been imprisoned in Siberia three times. They went to Germany, where Mrs. Mohr was born, and then to England where they waited for a quota to come to the U.S. Many of her relatives are living in Poland. Some are active in Solidarity.

John Dzbunski is a second generation Pole. His interests in Poland heightened when media attention brought the small nation into American homes.

All four of Arlene Jara Strickland's grandparents were born in Poland and emigrated to the U.S. It was "fashionable" when she was growing up to hide her heritage, but after her marriage and the birth of her son, she became proud and interested in her Polish background.

ANOTHER MIDLANDER, Richard J. Szczawinski, has relatives in Poland. He feels that although the people are fighting for their lives, they will survive because of their strength.

Mark Lubianski, a third generation Pole, has about 40 members of his family in Poland. From the last communication with them, he said his relatives knew the crackdown by the government would happen.

"I'm having a kaleidoscope of reactions about the current situation," Mrs. Mohr said. "When General Jaruzelski took over three months ago, I knew it was inevitable. He's Polish, but he was transferred to Russia and spent 12 years there," she added.

"He and his troops are special forces, like our Green Berets, but he and his troops are Communists. His interests are not in Poland; they're in preserving Communism."

Half of her family live in Gdansk and the other half in Katowice.

"There's a lot of activity in these areas. I have family in Solidarity. I am very worried," she said.

MRS. MOHR AND her husband visited Poland nine years ago.

"Even then you could tell they hated the Russians," she said. "In fact, the Communists in Warsaw built underground tunnels in their party headquarters in case of a mass revolt."

"In the United States people have guns; if something like this were to happen here, the people would revolt," Dzbunski said. "The people in Poland do not have the right to bear arms."

"I feel a great sense of anger and dismay," Mrs. Strickland said. "While I am comfortable (in the U.S.), the Poles who are part of my heritage are lacking freedom of expression."

"These people are fighting for their lives," Szczawinski said. "But they are a very strong-willed people and if Solidarity can continue, the people will hold out — it's going to be tough."

THE MIDLANDERS expressed their feelings with a sadness in the tone of their voices. Some felt helpless, sorry and somewhat guilty.

"The people have been oppressed for so long," Szczawinski said. "You can only take so much. I remember my family sending clothes to my Polish relatives when I was growing up. Even then, some of the boxes were not received. This holiday season is an important time for the Poles."

"I'm having a kaleidoscope of reactions about the current situation. When General Jaruzelski took over three months ago, I knew it was inevitable. He's Polish, but he was transferred to Russia and spent 12 years there."

— Wanda Mohr

"If we could get a worldwide or Western nation embargo it may help. Let's face it, Japan trades with Russia and so do other Western nations. The Russians are in a position where they can trade with other countries because of the economic situation."

— Richard J. Szczawinski

"During this time I've felt anger mixed with anxiety and somewhat guilty knowing there is so little you can do." — Arlene Strickland

"During this time I've felt anger mixed with anxiety and somewhat guilty knowing there is so little you can do," Mrs. Strickland said.

"I felt awful and helpless over the holidays," Mrs. Mohr said. "This has been a sad time. On Christmas Eve, my relatives would send us wafers to celebrate the new year. This year they did not come. We lit our candles as President Reagan asked. We're helpless."

But the reactions of these Polish descendants were more aggressive when they spoke about the U.S. administration's cutoff to the Soviet Union of about $300 million in annual sales of high technology products, including computers and oil and gas equipment.

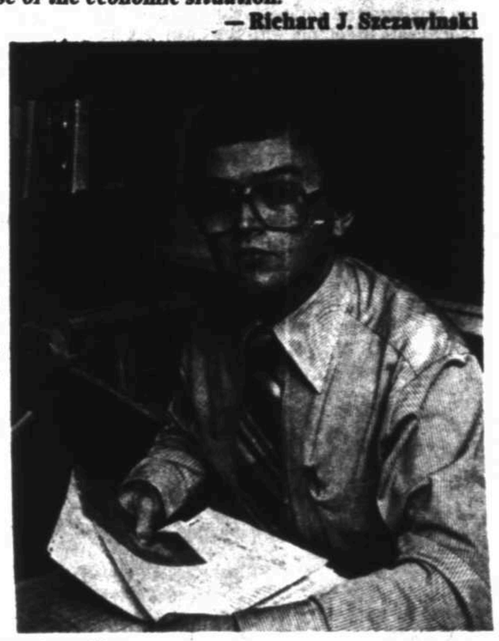

"IF WE COULD get a worldwide or Western nation embargo it may help," Szczawinski said. "Let's face it, Japan trades with Russia and so do other Western nations. The Russians are in a position where they can trade with other countries because of the economic situation. We need to say it's wrong, but sanctions are not going to do anything.

Dzubinski's reaction was similar.

"Sanctions will not work," Dzubinski said. "Whatever the Soviets need, they will get from West Germany. I don't feel the European governments will go along with the U.S. sanctions because of their economic problems and contracts with the Soviet Union. The biggest one is the 3,000-mile Trans-Siberian pipeline the West Germans are building for the Soviet Union. It involves so much money needed to keep their economy going."

Because Mrs. Mohr grew up hearing the political plight of Poland, she felt very strongly about Reagan's position.

"Reagan's hands are tied," she said. "What can he do? He can talk — same as with Iran. We don't send much to Russia except grain. The high technology comes from Austria and Japan. This situation is similar to what happened to Czechoslovakia and Hungary during World War II — economics are more important than human life."

"...If something like this were to happen here, the people would revolt. The people in Poland do not have the right to bear arms."

— John Dzubinski

LUBIANSKI AGREED the sanctions are a waste of time.

"We can tell them whatever we want to, but it won't do any good," he said. The U.S. can boycott, but Russia will just turn around and do what they want. A Western world embargo will never happen. They are too afraid. They need Russia for economic reasons."

Mrs. Mohr and Szczawinski both believe the crackdown on Solidarity was carefully planned.

"The timing was perfect," Szczawinski said. "It was done in the winter to set up more hardships for the people."

"If it was not so tragic, it would be beautiful," Mrs. Mohr said, referring to the psychological aspect of martial law. "There are more hardships in the winter. The spirit is more likely to break and people are less likely to gather in large crowds."

Mrs. Mohr heard from her relatives about three weeks ago, which would have made the letters written about 3½ weeks ago.

"They are full of despair," she said. "My aunts and uncles said 'we are tired. Tired of standing in line. Tired of waiting.' "

It's beginning to look like Barton has arrived

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Behind the good ol' boy drawl lies the persevering mind of a novelist.

But 37-year-old Wayne Barton of Midland already has proven himself as more than just another hack writer of westerns: He was a winner last June of the prestigious Spur Award for Short Fiction given annually by the Western Writers of America, which has among its members Louis L'amour, Elmer Kelton and other major names among western writers today.

A Spur Award last June, his first published novel ("Ride Down the Wind", Doubleday) in October, and assignment as a Spur judge in the juvenile category today. An "overnight" success in the writing field, right?

Not quite. Ask any published writer and he'll tell you his "overnight" success was the culmination of years of hard work, dedication and unyielding perseverance.

Barton's big breakthrough came with the Spur Award, but preceding that event were 10 years of steady writing, publication in "a great number of magazines no one has ever heard of" and a constant striving to polish his craft.

The Odessa native graduated from Texas Tech University in 1967 with a degree in chemical engineering and no writing courses under his belt. But the seed of a future writer already had been planted — he was an omnivorous reader who became fascinated by the history of the Old West, especially as it related to places he had seen first-hand.

ALTHOUGH FICTION writing was something he had "wanted to do as long as I could remember," he says, the painting of blank pages with words bided its time as Barton assumed a position with Arco. In the next few years his job took him to New Mexico and Wyoming, where the ideas for several stories became imprinted in his mind.

But it was not until some 10 years ago that the creative urge finally surfaced, never to be submerged completely again.

"I wrote a very bad first novel," he recalls. "I didn't know much about writing or the publishing business, but by the time I finished I knew quite a bit. After that I wrote several short stories."

One of them proved a pivotal point in his writing career. Many writers are plagued by self-doubts and often never gain the needed self-confidence because rejection slips and discouragement confront them at every turn. But when "The Wild One," a short story about an old Apache chief going home to die in New Mexico's Memories Valley, was named one of three finalists for the Spur Award for short fiction in 1972, Barton knew he had the inherent talent necessary to be a successful writer.

And while he occasionally still delved into other writing fields — including science fiction as evidenced by publication of a story in Analog — he realized he had found his genre as well. "I enjoy writing western stories, so that's what I write most of right now," he notes.

Wayne Barton reflects on his suddenly blossoming career as a writer of western fiction. The 37-year-old Midland resident garnered the 1980 Spur Award for Short Fiction and saw his first novel, "Ride Down the Wind," attain publication in October.

Much of his western fiction during the past decade appeared in the California publication "Far West." It was this magazine in which his short story "One Man's Code" received publication in 1980, and Barton believed so much in its potential that it became his entry in the Spur competition.

It won — and on the heels of it came his first published novel. And his long-awaited "overnight success" became reality.

THE GENESIS OF "Ride Down the Wind" was as a short story idea in 1974, but it quickly exploded beyond the confining realm of a few thousand-words piece. The concepts germinated beneath the curly shock of sandy hair for a long while before the actual gut-wrenching work of putting it down on paper began. And it was then he discovered the difficulties of making the transformation from short story writer to novelist.

"I innocently started out thinking of a novel as a long short story, but I found out it's quite a bit different," he recalls. "I found that detour through short stories as helpful in a lot of ways (but) a novel's a different form. You have more room to work in.... I'm having a certain amount of trouble making the transition."

Barton says he finally learned for himself what he had long heard: A writer must establish minimum productivity standards to be met daily — and then stick with it.

"My minimum amount is one page," he notes. "I decided to set an easy goal and supercede it. You can get behind that way, but you can never catch up — just because I get five pages done one day doesn't mean I don't have to do any for the next four days.... Being a writer is a lot more fun than writing."

Married and with a son 13 and a daughter 9, Barton has found that the optimum time to write is late at night when the children are in bed — usually from 10 p.m. on into the wee hours. It was this grind-it-out method he employed in the 18 months it took "Ride Down the Wind" to reach fruition.

But those details concern only the mechanics of writing. The actual creative processes involve his knowledge of geography, history and determination of his themes.

"I can say just about everything I want to say through a western story," he says.

BUT THE GEOGRAPHY of the places he has roamed form the framework for those themes. "Ride Down the Wind", for example, is set in Big Bend and in the adjacent badlands across the Rio Grande in Mexico — locales he carefully studied prior to attacking his project.

Barton currently is working on a second novel, the first four chapters of which already are in the hands of his publisher, while several new short stories are scheduled for publication in "Far West" during the next few months. He also has sold subsidiary rights on 12 to 15 additional short stories to a magazine in Norway, where interest in Old West fiction is immense.

But writing is not all that raises his eyebrows. He enjoys camping and backpacking in such wildernesses as Bandelier National Monument and Gila Wilderness in New Mexico, though even then he cannot escape the scrutinizing gaze inherent in a writer.

"I go looking for detail," he says. "A lot of times I can get a story or a setting out of a trip like that." For instance, he explains, he and his son recently spent an afternoon browsing through a Buffalo Gap cemetery that proved inspiration for a story about a tombstone salesman.

Barton's involvement with Western Writers of America goes back to 1972, and in the ensuing years he has served as awards chairman and twice as juvenile book judge. "Western Writers of America is a great organization," he says. "Because whether you're coming in as an established name or as a first-time author, they're uniformly helpful."

Barton intends to remain a part of WWA functions, but he also intends to continue writing. His goals for the future, he says, are to "stay close to the things I know" and put on paper "several more good stories" roaming through his mind.

That, in a word, means "Westerns."

Cases cleared, escapees captured on 1981 law enforcement front

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Midland police and sheriff's deputies enjoyed a relatively good year in 1981, with both departments clearing major cases, recapturing escaped prisoners and getting much-needed pay increases to boot.

In what was no doubt the most sensational murder case last year, 17-year-old Midland High School student Karen Rickey's body was found run over by her own car and bludgeoned to death with a large rock in a field east of the city about 8 a.m. the morning of Feb. 18.

By noon that day, 19-year-old Stephen Andrew Morse of Vacaville, Calif., was arrested by sheriff's deputies and Texas Rangers in Midland Park Mall, his capture resulting from one of the most intensive murder investigation ever conducted by the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

Morse waived his right to a jury trial and pleaded guilty Dec. 11 to the second charge in a two-count murder indictment: "Engaging in an act clearly dangerous to human life." No firm motive was ever established in the slaying, and Morse received a 25-year sentence in return for his guilty plea.

City police captured the spotlight later in the year when they arrested two men and recovered some $40,000 worth of goods allegedly taken in numerous local burglaries over a period of several months.

Officers responding to a "burglary in progress" call from a citizen arrested 40-year-old Billy Wayne Matthews of Midland and 20-year-old James Edward Allen, who had been staying with Matthews.

Police searched Matthews' home and said they found everything from Persian rugs to television sets and camera equipment. It took several hours and 14 pages to catalog the items.

Officers Terry Lowe, John Urby, Dusty Land and Ofelia Lowe — along with the neighbor who called police — were credited with "cracking" one of the largest burglary cases in city history.

Being able to keep people behind bars proved embarrassingly difficult for both city and county police during 1981.

On June 11, four prisoners being held for federal authorities at the city jail sawed their way to freedom in what police said was the first major jail break in city history.

Two of the escapees were subsequently captured and had felony escape added to the list of charges against them. One is known to be still at large, while the fourth may have been picked up recently in another state by federal marshals who haven't yet notified local authorities of his capture.

Not to be outdone, the sheriff's department also had four inmates get away during the year. A trusty who "walked" from an outside trash detail May 5 was captured near the downtown area within hours of his escape.

Three other prisoners who overpowered jailers and got away July 5 were back in custody before the week was out. One of them, 21-year-old Frank Sidney Smith, was captured by Odessa police after an armed robbery at an Odessa super market.

Inadequate pay was given as a major factor in low police morale and the departure of nearly 30 percent of the city force during 1981.

Responding to the complaints, city officials announced Aug. 13 that various measures were being undertaken to improve the salary and fringe benefit program for their employees. Among the improvements was a 12 percent pay hike that went into effect in October.

A 6 percent increase already had been scheduled for that month, with another 6 percent to follow this April. Instead, the entire 12 percent was granted at once, giving police and other city employees the advantage of an extra six months at the 12 percent rate.

Sheriff's deputies also received a pay increase during 1981. A 6 percent hike went into effect earlier in the year, while a 19 percent increment was added to their checks Jan. 1 of this year.

Capping 1981 for city police was the arrest of two men for allegedly stealing a 12-pack of beer from a convenience store on FM 868 Dec. 23.

When officers searched the men's car, they said they found two loaded guns and six ounces of cocaine — the largest amount of cocaine ever recovered in city police annals.

Sheriff's Department Investigator Bret Grove examines a large rock used to bludgeon 17-year-old Karen Rickey to death last February. The murder was one of the top local news stories in 1981. On Dec. 11, Stephen Morse, 19, of Vacaville, Calif., was sentenced to 25 years in prison for the slaying, the motive for which was never definitely established.

It wasn't great year for steel

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The steel industry had high hopes for recovery in 1981, but as the economy soured, orders plunged, tens of thousands of workers were laid off, and imports increased.

The war with the federal government, however, eased. "We've finally stopped being the whipping boys for Washington," said Harry Holiday, chief executive officer of Armco Inc.

Steel executives were elated with Ronald Reagan's election, his tax program and anti-regulatory stance. The industry also got three more years to comply with the Clean Air Act.

Steelmakers drew up capital spending plans totaling some $5.5 billion. "U.S. Steel (Corp.) is, in effect, putting its money where its mouth is — a $1.3 billion vote of confidence in the Reagan economy recovery program," Chairman David Roderick said. U.S. Steel also made a $6.3 billion bid to get into the oil business, challenging Mobil Corp. for Marathon Oil Co. The case went to court.

The year began on a modestly upbeat note. But after mid-year, the markets sagged except for steel used in oil and gas drilling. Experts estimated shipping at 87 million to 89 million tons for 1981, down from the 91 million to 95 million expected. In 1980, shipping totaled 84 million tons.

Toward year's end, raw steel production was running about 65 percent of capacity and some 50,000 steelworkers were out of work.

Steel executives worried over imports, up 25 percent in the first nine months of 1981. Industry leaders say the imported steel is unfairly priced.

County plays adversary role in 1981 local politics

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners jumped into 1981 as the city's adversary and ended it that way, too.

Effluent flowing out of the city's holding ponds and down Midland Draw during the winter months prompted complaints from the county to city councilmen, and the complaints continued all year.

By late December, county commissioners were up in arms over the city's proposal to release some of the effluent out of the holding ponds before the dikes would break. The county challenged the city's ability to do this before a state water board hearing in late December and lost. But as 1982 began, the battle wasn't over yet between the two governments.

In addition to the city, the county also sparred with Odessa over its dumping of effluent down Monahans Draw, and by the end of the year had served notice on Odessa that it intended to file suit.

After giving years of lip service to the need for a new public library, the county commissioners decided to go with a proposal from The First National Bank of Midland. That plan called for locating a new library in the new bank's plaza, but the bank needed the current library location. It was put up for sale, and the The First National's bid was the winner. The bank later offered $5.5 million toward construction of a proposed three-story county library.

In addition to a larger library, the commissioners began looking at ways to expand the courthouse space — whether it be by putting up an addition or a whole new building.

In December, the commissioners took another hesitant step toward making a decision by hiring an architect to design a courthouse annex.

County commissioners took a look at the way in which some of the county residents were living and applied for a three-year federal grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to fix up one specific area. That windowpane section is bounded by the city limits, but the county has jurisdiction over it.

The federal money is going to rehabilitate homes in that area and to construct a day-care center after doing some horse-trading with the City Council over locating the center in a city park.

Problems with the county jail were resolved at one point during the year, and then cropped up again by the end of 1981. The jail had been brought up to meet state standards for jailhouses. But as the influx of people into Midland also brought an increase in criminals, the jail became overcrowded and fell below state standards.

Commissioners also dealt with the problem of redistricting last year. And after weeks of studying various plans, the panel adopted a plan which changed the districts slightly, eventhough it wasn't the favored proposal of some county residents.

In the last days of 1981, elected county officials began looking toward the new political year by filing their intentions to run for office again.

'Bucks matter as much as the bucking'

New Humane Society statement says cruelty part of rodeo 'business'

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Rodeos don't sit well with the Humane Society of the United States, which claims animals are subjected to physical and psychological mistreatment largely for the sake of "big business."

In a statement titled "Cruelty, Not Sport," which was drafted by the society's regional office in Corpus Christi, the group states: "Rodeo is big business, where the bucks matter as much as the bucking.

"In 1979, the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association Inc. sanctioned 618 rodeos. An estimated 14 million spectators paid to see them. Competing cowboys received almost $7 million in prize money.

"The big losers, as usual, were the hundreds of animals furnished by stock contractors to be roped, ridden, wrestled and busted on the rodeo circuit."

In addition to cuts, bruises and internal injuries, the society cites "the pain and terror of being shocked out of the chute with an electric prod" and takes issue with the use of flank straps:

"The flank strap is used to (ensure) a wildly bucking horse. It is tightened around the animal's sensitive groin area, pressing on the nerves in the lumbar region.

"As the horse writhes and bucks to rid itself of the painful annoyance, the strap rubs against the animal, often causing raw spots where its skin has been rubbed away.

"These spots will hardly get a chance to heal before the animal's next bout with the flank strap two days hence."

CALF-ROPING is especially harsh, according to the Humane Society, which calls it "possibly the most pitiful event in rodeo. The calf may be moving at as much as 27 mph when the lasso tightens around its neck.

"When things go right, the calf is apt to be injured; when things go wrong, the injuries get more and more severe. If the calf hits the end of the rope with enough force, it will be jerked off its feet and slammed to the ground, causing bruises and possibly internal hemorrhaging."

Since many injuries may not be visible, the group feels the public is largely unaware of the damage animals can suffer in rodeo arenas. "We're speaking out so people can see the other side and decide if they still want to attend rodeos," said R'Evelyn Childers, a member of the Permian Basin chapter of the national Humane Society.

While the group credits the PRCA for having rules governing the treatment of livestock — rules the Humane Society helped draft — they contend "some of the rules are too lax, and some inherently cruel acts are overlooked altogether.

"Still, it is certainly better to have some rules than none, and PRCA-sanctioned rodeos compare favorably in this regard with the non-sanctioned, 'anything goes' events which account for almost 70 percent of all rodeos in this country.

"These bush-league rodeos rarely have humane supervision of any kind. Veterinary care and inspection (are) not available for injured animals. Conditions such as overgrown or cracked hooves, open wounds, skin infections, malnutrition, internal parasites and improper loading or unloading of animals receive little or no attention."

RODEO ADVOCATES argue that the events portray the reality of current and past livestock management on the range and that more cowboys than animals are injured in the ring.

"People don't say anything when riders get hurt," said Ray Wittie, a rancher who is president of the Sand Hills Hereford and Quarterhorse Show, which is sponsoring a PRCA-sanctioned rodeo that began Saturday at the Ector County Coliseum and will run through next Saturday.

"We abide by the rules," he added. "We don't mistreat the animals and have never had one hurt — as far as roping goes. And (range animals) are still roped, dragged and branded on ranches today."

While more cowboys than animals get hurt during rodeos, the Humane Society points out that animals are unwitting and often unwilling participants that sometimes have to be shocked out of the chutes with electric prods.

Such arguments don't impress rodeo critics like Dale Hylton, however. "They'll defend themselves by saying it's a re-enactment of the Old West," said Hylton, a Humane Society spokesman at the group's national headquarters in Washington, D.C.

"But that's bunk. The keen competition in rodeo events makes them really quite different from range activity. Ranchers can't afford injured animals."

THERE'S NO WAY to collect national statistics on the incidence of animal injury, according to Hylton, because there are no agencies equipped to cover the multitude of rodeos around the country.

"But," he said, "spot checks have shown some rodeo management is cautious and concerned, yet there are a lot of cases where anything can happen."

Recalling one event where a calf suffered a broken leg and the announcer assured the audience the animal would be taken care of quickly, Hylton said it was simply removed from the arena and left to suffer where the crowd couldn't see it.

It's during training and other "behind-the-scenes" activity where most injuries occur, he added.

The PRCA could not be reached for comment at their Colorado Springs, Colo., offices.

But, said Pat Hooks, a Midland man who rode the professional cowboy circuit for years: "It's been my experience — at rodeos big and small, sanctioned and non-sanctioned — that not many animals are injured. Livestock is too valuable, both on ranches and in rodeos.

"The flank strap my be uncomfortable, but it can't actually hurt because animals won't pitch if they're hurt."

E.F. Hutton on how the new tax law affects IRA

All IRA's may look the same.
Until you retire.

What makes an IRA from E.F. Hutton different?
Hutton offers a wide range of investment opportunities to help your money work harder. It's a difference you'll see when you retire. When you need it most.

Because your investment grows tax free, it can grow rapidly. Chart based on a 12% annual assumed rate of return. Your results may be more or less, depending on actual rate.

The new tax law makes the Individual Retirement Account (IRA) available to everyone. Even people who belong to company pension plans.

Thanks to this legislation, not only is everyone eligible, but the benefits have been increased.

An IRA gives you the tax break you need now. With allowed tax deductions having risen from $1500 to $2000. If husband and wife both work, the deduction can total up to $4000.

Because taxes are deferred, your money grows faster. And it can provide the added income you'll need later. But how much added income there'll be depends on when you open your IRA and the results of your investment program.

The IRA that changes with the market.

With many IRA's, your investment choices are limited. But with E.F. Hutton you have access to a vast array of investment opportunities. Including money-market investments. Growth stocks. Mutual funds. Annuities. Treasury Bills. C.D.'s, and more.

Your E.F. Hutton Account Executive is there to assist. He or she can help you change your investment strategy as the market changes. So you have a better chance of getting the highest possible return each year.

No one can forecast the future, but we believe the more investment opportunities you have available the better chance you have to achieve more than average performance.

Retire on your terms, not just your company's.

The new tax law gives you more control over your retirement than ever before.

If you don't have a company pension plan, an IRA is essential. As we all know, Social Security benefits just aren't enough anymore.

If you have a company plan, an IRA could mean the difference between simply retiring, and retiring well. It's never too early to start planning. Just fill in the coupon or call toll-free.

Jaycees will soon close nominations

Friday is the deadline for submitting nominations for the Midland Jaycees Distinguished Service Award, according to Alan Hale, Midland Jaycee.

Each year the Midland Jaycees coordinate the selection of Midland's Outstanding Young Man. The judging committee consists of civic, religious and business leaders from the community.

The award is presented to one man between the ages of 21 and 35 in recognition of his contributions to the community and his profession.

"This coveted award is symbolic of the contribution of all young men to the ideal of service," Hale said.

Nomination forms are available at the Midland Chamber of Commerce and from Bill Stovall, Jaycee president, at 683-5153.

This year's winner will be announced and honored at the Midland Jaycees' 25th Annual Distinguished Service Award and Bosses Night Banquet Jan. 19 at the Petroleum Club.

1981: It was year of 'too much' for Midland City Council

the year in review

It was a year of "too much" for the Midland City Council: Too much sewage, too many people, too many bad streets, too much traffic.

Problems with Midland Draw ebbed and flowed like the tide, furious one day and an unsettling calm the next week.

Source of the angry flow actually was traced back to the rush of outsiders crowding into the Tall City and pushing an increasing amount of sewage down to the Sewage Treatment Plant southeast of the city. Ponds holding the treated effluent became overloaded last winter and complaints about the effluent floating down Midland Draw flooded the offices of City Hall.

When spring came, farmers who had contracted with the city began using the effluent in large quantities for irrigating alfalfa fields.

Meanwhile, hydrologists and an engineering firm sprang up with the idea of pumping the treated effluent to a salt lake south of the city, thus keeping it out of the draw. But residents in the area objected, and at the end of the year the city was on the road to finding another dumping location.

In late December, more problems arose as the holding ponds began overflowing and the city attempted to drain part of the effluent down the draw. However, the county commissioners protested and the case went before the state water board. The city was granted a temporary permit to dump down the draw, but the city's problems with sewage remained in the same position as 1982 began.

But the city's problems with sewage weren't all focused on Midland Draw. Breaks in the sewage line east of Fairgrounds Road brought sewage flowing out of the line and down Midland Draw in that area throughout the year. In December, the council approved installing a new 42-inch line to rectify the problems.

Demand by the public on Midland Regional Airport facilities put the council on the spot of looking at ways to expand the airport. After studying various Master Plans, the city council selected a method of adding to the airport in various phases up through the year 2000. The first phase will increase the parking area and construction could start in late 1982 if the council finds a ways to finance it.

Streets reflected the increasing number of vehicles hitting the roads last year, and complaints from the public prompted the council to earmark $800,000 in this year's budget for street repairs.

To ease that traffic on congested streets in an easier manner, the council approved one-way streets into the downtown area after lengthy hearings on the subject.

When budgeting time came around, the council found it had to raise the tax rate by five cents this year to cover a judgment handed down by the Texas Supreme Court in which the city has to pay over $900,000 to the Jesek family.

The city found itself in the situation of plenty of jobs, lots of people willing to work and no place to house them as Midland became the mecca for Midwesterners and Northeasterners seeking jobs. Reports of people sleeping in tents or in their cars became the major topic of conversation last summer.

To give a small boost to housing, the council decided to apply for federal funds from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. But a snag hit the application in mid-summer when HUD asked for modifications to the $1.09 million application, and the council refused. By the end of the year, the situation remained deadlocked.

Other solutions to housing were being sought by private builders, who began building smaller homes, using smaller lots, constructing a dormitory style living arrangement for workers and developing mobile home districts within the city, with the council's approval.

Toward the end of 1981, a proposed housing subdivision between Midland Regional Airport and Odessa city limits placed the Midland City Council at odds with Odessa as the two fought over who would take jurisdiction of the development. The Extra-Territorial Jurisdiction line fell in the middle of that subdivision.

In its last meeting for 1981, the matter was settled, with Odessa gaining control of the subdivision and Midland being given jurisdiction over a larger area of land.

Cancer machine fight leads MMH news

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Hospital news is the kind that sometimes can be full of dry financial figures, heartwarming human interest stories or routine decisions within the administration and governing boards.

Probably one of the most exciting hospital stories in 1981 was Midland Memorial Hospital's standoff with Odessa Medical Center over a 6 Million Electron Volt state-of-the-art cancer treatment machine. Midland and Odessa had maintained a continuous battle for the machine since Midland first applied for a certificate of need in 1979. Since November 1980, when Odessa applied for the same machine, the controversy turned into a heated fight between the sister cities.

And on June 26 the Texas Health Facilities Commission denied MCH's bid for the linear accelerator. However, the certificate of need maximum purchasing limits were raised because of a change in the THFC rules through a federal amendment that relaxed the regulations. As of Oct. 1, MCH was allowed to purchase a $368,000 linear accelerator. Consequently, during November and December Odessa was in the process of installing its new equipment so cancer patients were referred to Midland.

On the same day of the THFC's ruling, the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center was dedicated with Dr. Lee Schlichtemeier, radiation oncologist, as its director. The center was under construction for 1⅛ years and cost $3.5 million. It was formulated as the dream of major donor Helon Y. Allison and it grew with the aid of memorial gifts into a regional cancer therapy center for a 17-county area.

With the latest equipment housed in the center, everything ran smoothly until one month later when Schlichtemeier decided to leave in the first part of October.

The Allison Center was left without a radiation oncologist and director, but MMH administration and governing boards devised an alternative plan using a radiation oncology group to cover the center. On Dec. 8, the hospital's search team announced Dr. Eric Svenson, a radiation oncologist, as the Allison Center's director.

A national problem that also affected Midland was the shortage of nurses. As a result, MMH increased nurses' wages by 11 percent and the Midland Memorial Foundation contributed money for a cash incentive program to hire additional nurses. On the other hand, Midland's private hospital, Parkview, claimed its facility did not have a shortage, but intended to remain competitive with the nurses' salaries.

Midland elected a former nurse, Wanda Mohr, to the MMH board of directors. In her campaign she cited objectives to open more beds at the hospital and to recruit more nurses. She was elected over incumbent Thomas P. Ingram. Other incumbents who were re-elected were Edwin H. Magruder and Dr. Henrie E. Mast.

In May, using a more direct management principle and the TriBrook Group Inc., efficiency study on the hospital's governance system, the hospital boards developed a new agreement. In the agreement, the directors have authority over the assets and operations of the hospital, while the trustees manage the hospital.

MMH was given good news in 1981 from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals. The JCAH gave its stamp of approval for a standard of excellence among hospital care nationwide in the latter part of June. Previously, MMH had difficulty obtaining the accreditation, having more than 100 violations in almost all areas of the hospital.

President Ray Branson celebrated his first year as MMH administrator in October. He summarized the accomplishments that had been made, including health care improvement which encompassed a new admissions procedure, a triage system for the emergency room, relocating outpatient registration and implementing a new social service department.

In July, Alan Schroeder became the new director of the social services department, bringing a holistic health concept of treating the patient not only physically, but also emotionally.

Other improvements Branson accomplished in 1981 were employee/employer relations, nurse recruitment and rentention and financial management.

In the latter part of 1981, MMH began planning for expansion of the hosptial and a separate facility for a chemical dependency, alcohol and drug abuse, center.

Parkview also began plans for expansion. In March, former administrator Steve Wallach announced the hospital's acquisition of land and plans to construct a medical office building on Wadley Avenue, between Lamesa Road and Sage Street.

Although Parkview gained a new administrator, Dick Liley, in July, plans for the medical building was ongoing. In fact, Liley announced plans to convert the 60-bed Parkview into a general psychiatric/substance abuse project. Plans were intended to transfer the 60-bed acute care existing facility to a new location, adding 60 beds.

1981 bond election results in new schools for MISD

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Due to the rapid growth of Midland and the overcrowding of schools, Midland Independent School District trustees began their first board meeting in 1981 with plans for a bond election to construct two new elementary schools.

After suffering the defeat of a $10 million bond issue in an all-or-nothing proposal the year before, apprehensive trustees carefully outlined reasons and costs for putting a bond issue on the April ballot.

On April 4, city voters approved the entire $6.6 million package, which designated $5.6 million for construction of two new elementary schools, one near the De Zavala site in east Midland and one in northwest Midland south of FM 868, in addition to $1.05 million for improvements on both high schools.

By October, though, Dr. James H. Mailey, superintendent, was hinting at the possibility of another bond election for construction of additional schools while giving a report on Midland school enrollment projections. At that time, Mailey was quoted as saying, "With the three-year time lag (for construction), if we started building today, we would be a school short each year beginning in 1984."

On Dec. 18, eight months after the April bond election was passed, school board members awarded the contract for construction of the two new elementary schools and the improvements on the two high schools to HBF Construction, Inc. It is expected to take 400 days to complete the two elementary schools.

In an effort to meet the 1981-82 budget after discovering they were $1.3 million short, trustees voted in July to cut the school district's public relations department, a contract with the Human Relations Council, the new gifted and talented program, school supplies, materials and field trips. The cuts deleted $445,000 from the budget.

In addition, board members voted to discontinue the use of Social Security, saving the district $960,000, and to begin a sick leave rebate program that would reimburse employees for unused sick leave days, reducing the budget by $182,000.

The three proposals added $1.4 million to the school district's working fund.

A highlight for Midland High School came early last spring when the school's band was invited to participate in the 1982 Tournament of Roses Parade in Pasadena, Calif. Band members and the booster club worked vigorously throughout the year in an effort to collect the $130,000 necessary to make the trip.

Midland College had a busy year, seeing a major change of leadership when the founding president of 12 years, Dr. Al G. Langford, announced his resignation plans last spring. Dr. Jess H. Parrish took over Aug. 1, coming to Midland after serving for 10 years as the founding president of Shelby Community College in Memphis, Tenn.

Answer Line

By Franchelle Moore P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702

A problem exists on Ohio Avenue between North Big Spring and Colorado Streets. On the north side, between the street curb and a cement sidewalk are three ideal parking spots. Wheel tracks in the weeds and grass indicate that vehicles have parked there for years.

Every work day, three vehicles park there. As you know, spaces in Midland are scarce. Vehicles parked there are some three feet from the street curb and an equal distance from the cement sidewalk (see picture enclosed). No sign prohibits parking there. Parking meters on the street curb face the street. Except for cars parking there, the area would grow over with sandburs and tumbleweeds.

Nevertheless, every day vehicles there are given traffic violation tickets for "violation of sidewalk area." No violation can be seen.

Why is it illegal? — R. L. Denton

ANSWER: Lt. Herman Wicker with the Traffic Division of the Midland Police Department says that violation tickets are issued in this area because the property belongs to the city, making it illegal to use the space for vehicle parking.

Lt. Wicker also said that the only area where parking behind the curb is permitted is on private property.

A spokesman with the Municipal Court states that if a question regarding the issuing of tickets for any area is raised, the court investigates the area before acting on the violation.

These questions concern the status of the drainage ditch north of Wadley which has been under reconstruction for more than a year:

1. When will Ward Street be opened?

2. How long does this construction company have to finish the entire job?

3. Will Whitney be the next street closed?

4. Does the contract have any sort of penalty for running over time?

5. Why are they so slow? — Mrs. J.H.

ANSWER: The only response we received for your question from George Medley, city engineer of the City of Midland, was that the construction should have been completed by Dec. 31. This information was contained in a letter from the engineers with the contractors for the project.

There is a manger scene up on what appears to be city or Chamber of Commerce property just east of the courthouse. The Chamber is tax-supported. Is it proper or even legal for the state to be promoting one form of religion over another? — F.O.

ANSWER: The Christmas tree and the scene, which happens to be Santa Claus' residence, not a manager scene, is an annual project of the City Parks and Recreation Department, with the assistance of the Midland Jaycees. This has been a citywide endeavor some 14 years.

When I took out a fairly large life insurance policy several years ago, I stated that I had never been and had no intention of ever becoming an airplane pilot or crewman.

Since then, however, I have become interested in flying and am now taking flying lessons. Does that mean my policy can be cancelled? — J.M.

ANSWER: If your application statements were truthful, then your life insurance protection cannot be affected by any subsequent change in your situation, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

Moreover, the council continues, after a policy is in force for two years, it becomes uncontestable.

Bond program to be reviewed

The bond program designed for apartment builders will be reviewed at 2 p.m. Wednesday when the Housing Authority of the City of Midland meets in City Hall for a regular session.

A report on the Midland Housing Finance Corporation's Multi-Family Mortgage Revenue Bond program will highlight the meeting. Under this program, apartment developers can obtain bond money at a lower interest rate to finace their projects.

The panel also will look at receipts and expenditures for October and November and review the authority's financial condition.

Residential construction leads last week's permits

The city of Midland closed out the year by issuing building permits representing investments of $3,752,740 last week.

As during much of the year, permits issued for construction of new residences accounted for a great percentage of that total. Some $3,535,500 in new homes were OK'd, including permits issued to Jody Austin Builder Inc., 5425 Basswood, $200,000; D.M. Grissom, 6206 Driftwood, $120,000; Quality Built Homes, 4511 Teakwood, $110,000, 4815 Teakwood, $100,000, and 5504 Cypress Court, $150,000; Pine Construction, 4303 Crestgate, $112,000; F&J Investment, 4907 Sunshine Parkway, $105,000, and 4557 Shady Oak, $125,000;

Visiting speakers reflect religious leanings

Religious conservatism continues to reign

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Midland, by and large, is theologically conservative. The pews of mainstream churches such as Baptists, Methodists, Churches of Christ historically have been most crowded in a city recently subjected to a vast influx of persons of varying race, culture, upbringing.

Despite the increasingly transient nature of persons calling themselves Midlanders, that conservatism continued to reign throughout most of 1981, although there were intimations that the future might see a broadening of religious views.

the year in review

These intimations were revealed in the appearances of two widely differing evangelists in the city during 1981: James Robison of Fort Worth and Dr. C.B.T. Smith of Dallas.

ROBISON

Robison, who has become noted as a leader of the so-called "New Christian Right" in American politics, paid two visits to the city. In his initial appearance in late March he deplored the dangers of humanism in American education and discussed his involvement in the political scene.

Robison first burst into prominence in political circles during the elections of 1980, and in an exclusive interview with The Reporter-Telegram he discussed the event which prompted this unprecedented involvement.

"First of all I saw the degradation of the country," he said. "But then I saw me possibly losing my freedom...It was my confrontation with a major television station on the fact I had spoken on homosexual (sins) as it is in the Bible."

The confrontation in 1979 between WFAA in Dallas-Fort Worth and Robison was intense and greatly publicized. WFAA banished the evangelist from its airways, claiming his denouncement of homosexuality meant equal time would have to be granted advocates of the lifestyle.

Robison fought back savagely at what he believed to be erosion of his First Amendment rights of freedom of speech and freedom of religion. He spurred himself onward into a ministry of getting Americans to speak out on issues lest the nation crumble.

"I think it's the responsibility of all people to be involved, a citizen's responsibility in a democracy," he told The Reporter-Telegram. "He has the privilege to change his leaders, and therefore, he has a responsibility to do it in a knowledgeable (manner). He shouldn't just believe what everybody says. He ought to get in there and learn. He ought to listen to the candidates, attend seminars and read books."

In the sermon delivered during that March visit, Robison instilled the thousand persons in attendance with what he felt was the awesome responsibility they faced in uniting to make America strong again.

"One day God may call His people to stand over a memorial that marks a dead nation and say to his people, 'Why didn't you join hands sooner?' " he said.

Robison returned to Midland Nov. 8 to speak at Kelview Heights Baptist Church and First Baptist Church, and in another exclusive interview discussed his association with President Ronald Reagan.

"Somehow government has been perceived as the solution when in actuality it is not — it's been part of the problem," said the evanglist.

"The only hope the country has is for individuals to come into a right relationship with God so that they're willing to make the sacrifices necessary to turn this ship around, to get us back where we belong. And I've tried to impress upon (President Reagan) that I thought the only people who would really follow through (are those) committed not necessarily to political parties or philosophies, but to what is right. I think he is seeing that."

Robison noted that he speaks occasionally with the president via telephone.

"Every time that Mr. Reagan and I have ever met, it was simply for him to share his views and me to share my views as a citizen and a Christian, and to pray together," he noted.

SMITH

In a much different vein, the little publicized crusade conducted in late August by 58-year-old Dr. C.B.T. Smith — for 29 years the pastor of Golden Gate Baptist Church in Dallas — may have been just as noteworthy, for nowhere else were gut-wrenching emotions aroused so intensely.

His imposing James Earl Jones-like appearance carries with it a charismatic quality that packed the pews of Greater St. Luke's AME Church for several nights. The ubiquitous music inherent in black worship found its way into his sermon in the form of musical inflections which, in turn, were echoed by the congregation.

He began by reading, with due reverence, Luke 23:39-43:

"One of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, if thou be Christ, save thyself and us. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss.

"And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom, and Jesus said unto him, verily I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

In his own unique oratorial style, Dr. Smith brought the sermon to a climax that aroused emotions to a fever pitch.

Brimstone flowed molten through the throng. Old-style Baptist fist-pounding thunder reigned on the heels of a Pentecostal-brand of lightning. Like a boxer lying on the ropes and counter-punching, he played off the emotions of the people, and they off his.

"He came close to salvation!" sang the evangelist.
"Yeah, he did! He did!" answered the congregation.
"I know one who did — he was hanging so close to Jesus!"
"Hanging close! He was hanging close!"
"He was so close he could even see the blood running out of His side!"
"The blood — His side!"
"He was so close he could even hear Jesus breathing!"
"Breathing! Breathing!"
"He could hear Him say, 'I thirst!'"
"He heard him! He heard him!"
"So close to Jesus! Am I right, Jesus!"
"You're right! You're right!"
"Walk down the aisle! So close! A chance of a lifetime!"
"Praise God! Oh, praise God!"
"The thief said, if you be the Christ, come down and pull a stunt! Unless you get off that cross and come down, I won't believe! Am I right, children!"
"You're right! Oh Jesus, praise Jesus!"
"A chance of a lifetime! You may never get the chance of a lifetime again! So close, young people, so close! You could be in jail! You could be on drugs somewhere! But the Lord gave you another chance! So close! Am I right, children. The chance of a lifetime!"

And as the congregation sang, "Lord, I'm Coming Home," two women walked down the aisle to come home to the awaiting arms of Jesus, opened wide in a mural just beyond the pulpit.

Midland sees some of best, worst in the arts

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of dispair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to Heaven, we were all going direct the other way — in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on its being received, for good or for evil, in the superlative degree of comparison."

— Charles Dickens,
"A Tale of TwoCities"

A characteristic of a great work of art is the truth it speaks, whether on canvas, in print or to the ear; the message it transmits to the hearts and souls of those it touches; its timeless quality. Dickens' works were of such a timbre. He was a master. His words spoke for his days, for those past and for those yet to come.

The attitudes, ideas and dreams of Midland's citizenry in 1981 could not have been stated more concisely than in Dickens' words. These thoughts, both good and bad, manifested themselves in all areas of life, including entertainment.

This past year brought the curtain up on the best executed ballet performance seen live here in many years, when Yoko Ichino and Helgi Tomasson performed two pas de deux accompanied by the Midland-Odessa Symphony in February.

It also brought the curtain down on Midland's large scale local opera endeavors the 24th of April when Midland College's production of "The Merry Widow," complete with professional sets, costumes and a gala $35 per-person premiere, opened, bringing in for three days Midland's cultural season of darkness.

IT WAS TRULY a season of light for Midland via the performances here and in New York City of the Thouvenel String Quartet, especially when the quartet performed a series of four concerts at Carnegie Recital Hall, the last of which was a premiere performance of a work by Krenek, a major 20th century composer, written especially for the quartet.

Midland Community Theatre offered several rewarding evenings during 1981."On Golden Pond" brought humor and truth to the stage last spring, Moliere's "Tartuffe" embodied wisdom and foolishness via the age of enlightment, while last fall "Lu Ann Hampton Laverty Oberlander" presented pathos in the midst of humor, affording theater-goers one of the best of times.

The worst of times came to the Country Squire Dinner Theatre, forcing the theater to close after a year under new management.

CHAPARRAL CENTER also experienced bad times, with its only sold-out entertainment event of the year occurring March 1 with the Oak Ridge Boys. From the spring of hope came the winter of despair as Chaparral Center management saw Steppenwolf, ZZ Top, Three Dog Night, Kenny Rogers, Crystal Gayle, Eddie Rabbitt and Pat Benatar perform not in Midland, but at Ector County Coliseum in Odessa.

At Chaparral Center basketball, or anything connected with Midland College comes before concert bookings. The center was also hampered in 1981 by simple economic factors — fewer performers were touring than the previous year, plus Ector County Coliseum holds about 1,200 more seats.

Still, the Statler Brothers and Brenda Lee did not draw as big a crowd as the Statlers and Barbara Mandrell had the previous year. But the rock concerts of Fog Hat and Nazareth brought a good house.

Not to be overlooked last summer was a delightful small scale opera endeavor presented at Theatre Midland by The Friends of Music, a newly formed local group, who started with nothing before it but the desire to entertain.

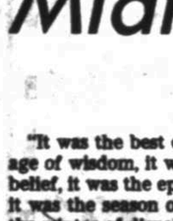

Throughout the year, the Museum of the Southwest brought several noteworthy exhibits to town, including one on the culture of Afghanistan; the Eiteljorg Collection, works by the Taos painters; and the Quilt Show, the history of quiltmaking complete with demonstrations and workshops.

THE LAST MONTHS of 1981 brought Metropolitan Opera star Roberta Peters to Midland for a spellbinding evening before sending the Midland-Odessa Symphony to Mexico for its first paid performances outside of West Texas.

Also during the fall months, an independent motion picture, "Waltz Across Texas," was filmed entirely in Midland, utilizing around 300 locals in front of and behind the camera.

Rounding out the entertainment schedule last year were the Permian Civic Ballet and Community Concerts.

Entertainment in Midland spanned the range from the best to the worst, with most performances falling at points in between. Thus not all can be rated in the superlative degree of comparison, no matter how insistent its supporters or its distractors may be. And it is in viewing the best that we recognize what is less than fine, and in viewing the worst that we hopefully see the need for improvement.

RINGING THE BELL
A look at our mood

With BOB TIEUEL

A White Brother Minister Looks at Our National Mood Today: Dear Bob — "The essential elements of our society are in the throes of disintegration — indeed their very value to society is increasingly questioned. The traditional Christian family seems now to be a very endangered species, and we hear calls continually for recognition of 'alternative' family structures, including homosexual arrangements, living together relationships and even polygamous families.

"The church is increasingly regarded as irrelevant to this modern age, even as it either speaks weakly to the society or simply reflects the current fads and fashions of the society about it.... Truly the future is uncertain from our vantage point as we face a New Year, yet certain to be chaotic unless some miracle brings about a restoration of our national sanity.

"It is not difficult at all for a Christian, whether he be black or white or other, to see that at the root of our grave national and social ills lies this unholy affection that St. Paul spoke of — Self-Love — or 'lovers of our own selves.' It is the assumption of thousands of so-called Christians that self-fulfillment, self-expression and self-assertion are proper ends of the great salvation wrought out by the suffering Saviour of Calvary. We can explain the possibility of coming chaos, when we have come to the sad condition of always responding to life with the question, 'What is in it for me?'

"Truly this unholy self-centeredness is the curse of our age. The only hope for us as a society and individually is to deny ourselves and living under Jesus Christ as Lord in all of life. Then and only then can we face 1982 and the future unafraid. Have a prosperous New Year!" — Yours truly, Bill Sprinkle.

native peoples and rugged explorers. This exhibition was organized by Harmon's granddaughter, Carole Harmon, and the Whyte Gallery at Banff, Alberta. The premiere showing in the U.S. is at the museum here.

Sketches of Bell, who lives in Alpine, deal with his view of and perspective on the cowboy way of life in West Texas.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. There is no charge.

Symphony chorale holding auditions

The Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale will hold auditions for new personnel at 7 to 7:30 p.m. Tuesday and Jan. 12.

The auditions, for which no solos are required, will be held at the Symphony Rehearsal Hall at Terminal. Other audition times are available by appointment by calling the Midland-Odessa Symphony or its chorale director, Dr. Stanley Engebretson.

The 80-voice chorale will begin its spring season with a special concert celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, featuring its founder, Dr. Lara Hoggard, as guest conductor. Other performances include an Easter season performance of Brahms' "German Requiem," a cabaret pops "Evening of Rodgers and Hammerstein" and a concert version of Bizet's "Carmen" as the finale to the symphony's season.

Country-western entertainer Moe Bandy will perform at the Sand Hills Hereford and Quarter Horse Show and World's Championship Indoor Rodeo Tuesday during the rodeo and at a dance immediately following. Other entertainers scheduled to perform during the week-long rodeo include Hoyle Nix, Rex Allen Jr., Fiddlin' Frenchie Burke and Darrell McCall.

Real Estate Today

By Don Harvey Realtor

ON OVERIMPROVEMENT

One of the most frequent pieces of advice from Realtors and appraisers around the country is not to OVER-IMPROVE a house in terms of its neighborhood. Don't put $80,000 (cost plus improvements) into a house located in an area of $60,000 homes. Home buyer psychology rules out paying much more than the top value of the houses around it. Someone who wants a $60,000 house will shop for it in an area of $60,000 homes.

The over-improvement rule may be broken in two special situations. One is when the house is in an area where most of the homes are rising in value primarily because the other owners are continually expanding and improving their homes.

The second exception concerns remodeling and rehabilitation of run-down, old houses, particularly in old neighborhoods that are now making a come-back. People have taken over relics and modernized them, boosting the value of the houses considerably more than the cost of the improvements. But beware, this area is normally reserved for specialists./

Play on Texans to open at Yucca

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

Tuesday night marks the opening of a new play in Midland written by Texas playwright James McClure. The subject — "Lone Star/Laundry and Bourbon."

In short — Texans.

"The author is from Dallas and a SMU (Southern Methodist University) graduate," the play's director, Bill Rhoten, said in a December trip to Midland.

He and the play's producer, Pam Pendleton, were in town promoting the production, which will be onstage at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado St., from Tuesday through Jan. 17. Performances are set for 8 p.m. with 2:30 p.m. matinees Jan. 10 and 17. Tickets, priced at $8, may be purchased at Music Haul.

"The play was originally produced in 1978-79 and is just now coming into print. It is also being made into a film," Rhoten said.

The action "takes place in Menard, Texas, in the late 70s," Rhoten said. "Lone Star" is the story of "good ole boys" on a Saturday night carouse. "Laundry and Bourbon" presents the female counterparts to "Lone Star."

The two segments of the play deal with the "backporch humor of Texas. It ('Laundry and Bourbon') involves the ladies and the cattiness about things that happen among women in a small town," Rhoten said.

"And it is also a nostalgia play," Ms. Pendleton interjected.

"Both," Rhoten added. " 'Lone Star' deals with trying to relive what you can't relive. The central character is trying to figure out where everyone's gone. He went to Nam (Vietnam), came back and everything's changed. Everyone's married or moved off."

"But it is a comedy," Ms. Pendleton said.

The play will be done by a "professional quality touring company from Dallas," Rhoten said.

The play was cast in Dallas in open auditions, Rhoten said. All of the cast members have "done theater work in Dallas, including Theatre III, New Arts and the Dallas Repertory Theatre.

"There's a lot of good talent out there that's not getting the work and we're trying to provide an opportunity for them," Rhoten said.

"The people cast in 'Lone Star' and 'Laundry and Bourbon' do work professionally as actors — they all do commercial work.

"For example, Michael Weston in a supporting role in "Tender Mercies" (a movie) with Robert Duvall plays Roy in 'Lone Star.' He has also had lines in 'Dallas' (the television series) several times."

Bill Rhoten

Pam Pendleton

Ms. Pendleton and Rhoten are among the cast members. Rhoten has directed several theaters in Dallas and Ms. Pendleton is the president of Addison Community Theatre.

The play is somewhat bawdy in parts making the language possibly offensive to some, Ms. Pendleton said. It is definitely for mature audiences, she added.

Symphony will host bassoonist

The Midland-Odessa Symphony opens the new year with bassoon virtuoso Robert Thompson, Jan. 18 and 19.

The 8 p.m. concerts will be held in Odessa's Permian High School Auditorium and at Midland's Lee High Auditorium, respectively.

Thompson, a native of Texas, is considered one of the world's foremost bassoonists.

For more information call the symphony's office at 563-0921.

Dallas humiliates incompetent Buccaneers, 38-0

Poke defense mauls Bucs' long-play quarterback

AP Laserphoto

Tampa Bay quarterback Doug Williams (12) tries to release a pass under heavy pressure from Dallas defensive end Ed Jones (72) during first quarter action Saturday in Texas Stadium. Dallas won the NFC playoff game in a romp, 38-0.

IRVING — As far as the Dallas Cowboys were concerned, the NFC Central was truely the Black and Blue Division of yore this year. The Cowboys lost to Detroit, 27-24, and just barely beat Chicago, 10-9.

Maybe that's the reason one fan's immediate reaction to the Cowboys' 38-0 lark against the NFC Central champion Tampa Bay Buccaneers was, "How did this team ever get into the playoffs?"

One suspected the Bucs must have used mirrors to win the Central, so futile and incompetent were they at Texas Stadium Saturday.

This semifinal NFC playoff was the kind of horse whipping that prompted Tampa Bay coach John McKay to curtly dimiss the press with a, "I don't have much to say. We didn't play well. I guess that's the understatement of the year. They just kicked hell out of us."

THE COWBOYS, who have lost to such teams as the Lions and Cardinals this year, had a different view. Coach Tom Landry called it a case of playing with "intensity".

Tight end Jay Saldi declared that, "We had a great offensive game plan. If we executed it, there was no way we could lose."

Dennis Thurman, defensive back, asserted, "We knew we could shut them out. The defense felt that if we could score 10 or 17 we could win."

Veteran linebacker D.D. Lewis said it was something that built up over two weeks. "Everybody was telling us how tough their defense was and we talked it up and decided we would have to be just as tough."

One thing all the Cowboys seemed to agree upon was that it wasn't so much that Tampa Bay was so bad, as it was that the Cowboys came up with their best defensive game of the season.

After a scoreless first period, Dallas struck for a touchdown 2:22 into the second period when quarterback Danny White, who went 15 of 26 for 143 yards, found Tony Hill on a nine-yard pass to close out an 11-play, 47-yard drive. With less than a minute left in the half, Rafael Septein's 32-yard field goal made it 10-0.

Four minutes into the third period, Ron Springs punched in from the one after a nine-play, 80-yard drive that Landry labeled as significant. "When you drive 80 yards against a good defensive team, it takes a lot out of them and that's what happened to Tampa Bay."

AFTER THAT it was all down hill. Tony Dorsett's five-yard run with 13:32 gone in the third period made it 24-0 and on the first play after the kickoff, tackle John Dutton batted quarterback Doug Williams' pass and Ed "Too Tall" Jones intercepted it at the Tampa Bay 24. Three plays later James Jones took it in from five yards out to give Dallas a demoralizing 31-0 lead going into the final period.

The final TD came with 9:33 elapsed in the final period with Timmy Newsome going over from the one after a 90-yard hike in 12 plays.

The Cowboys' game plan, according to wide receiver Drew Pearson, was to mount "ball control drives and keep the ball away from Williams and the explosive Tampa Bay offense."

That the Cowboys successfully thwarted Williams was illustrated in the statistics. The Bucs' celebrated long-play quarterback managed just 10 completions in 29 attempts for 187 yards and 75 of those came on a bomb to tight end Jimmie Giles that gave the Bucs a first down on the Dallas five early in the fourth quarter. But Harvey Martin took the steam out of the drive by sacking Williams for a nine-yard loss as the Cowboys preserved their third shutout ever in a playoff game.

The 38-point margin also equalled the Cowboys' most decisive playoff win, a 52-14 shellacking of the Cleveland Browns in 1967.

DESPITE THE lopsidedness of the contest, it was a game about which Landry was concerned. "After the Giants game and the two-week layoff, I was concerned about the intensity of our players. It was our best defensive effort all year."

Landry said the Cowboys' primary defensive concern was keeping their defensive lanes on the pass rush to prevent Williams from running up the gut. Obviously, the Cowboys were successful. By the end of the unseasonably warm afternoon, Williams was a harried, frustrated young man. In addition to Jones' interception of a deflected pass, Dennis Thurman picked off two passes and Mike Downs another.

Meanwhile, Dorsett and Ron Springs combined with White to give the Cowboys more offensive firepower than the vaunted Tampa Bay defense could handle. Dorsett carried 16 times for 86 yards and caught four passes for 48 while Springs lugged leather 15 times for 70 yards.

But again, second year man Springs credited the Cowboys' inspired defensive effort for much of the offensive success, "The defense kept the offense pumped up with those turnovers."

Whether the Cowboys play at home against the Giants next Sunday or on the road against San Francisco, will be determined today. The Cowboys have lost to both, but linebacker Lewis may have hinted at the general feeling among the Cowboys as to their preference. "After that lopsided victory (31 points), we have a point to prove." — TED BATTLES

Benirschke saves Chargers, 41-38

MIAMI (AP) — Rolf Benirschke was so intent on giving his teammates a hard-fought victory Saturday night in the American Football Conference playoff that he nearly blew it and gave it to Miami instead. But, ultimately, the San Diego Chargers' placekicker came through.

After missing a chip shot 27-yard field goal attempt early in overtime, he connected on a 29-yarder with 13:52 gone in the extra period to boost the Chargers to a 41-38 victory in a game which set scoring records.

He was asked whether, as he trotted onto the field to get the game-winner, his earlier miss was on his mind.

"No," Benirschke replied. "I just wanted to kick it so badly for the other players. The offense was moving the ball with some tremendous individual efforts, really unbelieveable. So you block what went before out of your mind.

"Everybody misses some, and I was just fortunate to get another chance," he added.

Benirschke's decisive field goal came not only after he had missed one in overtime, but after Miami's Uwe von Schamann had missed one as well.

"You get that close after such a great effort and you wonder if that's the way it should be," von Schamann philosophized after the Dolphins had nearly pulled out the victory after having trailed by 24 points.

The triumph by the Chargers wiped out what might have been a most heroic comeback by quarterback Don Strock and the Dolphins, who rallied from a 24-0 deficit to take a 38-31 lead early in the fourth quarter.

Fouts set two playoff records, throwing the ball 53 times and completing 33 for 433 yards. The old record for most passes thrown was 49, set by Billy Kilmer of Washington, while Kilmer and Joe Kapp of Minnesota shared the record for most completions with 26.

Strock completed 28 of 42 passes for 397 yards despite missing all of the first quarter and the first two minutes of the second.

The Chargers, champions of the AFC West, will play in their second consecutive conference championship on Jan. 10. Their opponent will be the winner of Sunday's AFC playoff between the Buffalo Bills and Cincinnati Bengals.

The Chargers tied it 38-38 with 58 seconds remaining in the fourth quarter on Dan Fouts' third touchdown pass of the game, his second to rookie running back James Brooks.

Following that 9-yard scoring pass, the Dolphins drove to the San Diego 25-yard line. But, on the final play of regulation time, Uwe von Schamann's 43-yard field goal attempt was short, barely deflected by Chargers tight end Kellen Winslow.

The game went into overtime, the Chargers winning the coin toss, taking the kickoff and marching from their 13-yard line to the Miami 8. The big play came on a third-and-20 at the Chargers' 45. Fouts completed a pass to Winslow, who dragged a Miami tackler 5 yards to gain 21 and a first down. But four plays later, with 11:09 gone in overtime, Benirschke, who had hit all nine of his field-goal tries from inside the 30 this season, hooked a routine 27-yarder to the left.

The Dolphins charged back late in the overtime, reaching the San Diego 17-yard line. But, with 11:27 gone, von Schamann's 34-yard field goal attempt was blocked, this time by Leroy Jones.

After von Schamann's overtime miss, Fouts began the Chargers' winning drive from their own 16 with a couple of short passes, a 7-yarder to Brooks and an 8-yarder to Wes Chandler.

After an incompletion, Fouts and Chandler hooked up on a 20-yard pass play to the Miami 49. On the next play, Fouts found Charlie Joiner on a play that carried 39 yards to the Miami 10. And, on first down, Benirschke ended this wildest, highest-scoring of playoff games.

The 79 points by the two teams surpassed the all-time playoff record of 73 first established by Washington and Chicago in the Bears' 73-0 National Football League championship victory in 1940, and equaled in 1957 when Detroit beat Cleveland 59-14.

The Dolphins appeared to be out of it after the Chargers rolled up their 24-point lead in the first quarter.

But Strock, replacing young and ineffective David Woodley at quarterback for Miami, rallied them within a touchdown at halftime, then drove the Dolphins to a 38-31 lead early in the fourth quarter.

Strock threw three touchdown passes, two to reserve tight end Joe Rose and a 50-yard bomb to Bruce Hardy.

The Miami comeback began with a 35-yard field goal by von Schamann, then Strock found Rose on a 1-yard scoring toss.

The most electrifying play of the game came on the final play of the first half and had the Orange Bowl crowd of 73,735 rocking. Strock, with six seconds left and the ball on the San Diego 40, tossed 15 yards to Duriel Harris, who then wheeled and lateraled the ball to Tony Nathan. The Miami running back sprinted the remaining 25 yards untouched to cut San Diego's lead to 24-17.

The Chargers came within four points of Oakland's record of 28 scored in the first quarter of a playoff, and they appeared poised to blow the Dolphins out of the Orange Bowl.

The 24 points in one period matched the most ever given up by the Dolphins, the feat first achieved by Kansas City in 1968.

Woodley, an eighth-round draft choice by the Dolphins in 1980, completed just two of five passes for 20 yards and was sacked three times for 29 yards in losses before Strock replaced him 2:55 into the second quarter.

It was the sixth time Strock had come to Woodley's rescue this season, once because of an injury.

Clemson given national title

By The Associated Press

The Clemson Tigers, unranked before the season but unbeaten at the end, are college football's national champions for the first time in the university's 86 years on the gridiron.

It became obvious Friday night that Clemson would succeed Georgia as national champion when the top-ranked Tigers completed a 12-0 campaign, the best in their history, with a 22-15 victory over Nebraska in the Orange Bowl, while runner-up Georgia was losing to Pittsburgh 24-20 in the Sugar Bowl.

It became official Saturday when 449 voters in The Associated Press' nation wide poll of sports writers and sportscasters made the Tigers runaway winners in the balloting to decide the national champion for 1981, with 977 of a possible 980 points.

Clemson far outdistanced Texas and Penn State for the top spot.

Texas, a 14-12 winner over Alabama in the Cotton Bowl, jumped from sixth to second with 862 points, while the Crimson Tide slipped from third to seventh. Penn State, which trounced Southern California 26-10 in the Fiesta Bowl, climbed from seventh to third with 845 points, while dropping the Trojans from eighth to 14th.

Pitt, which had been No. 1 before Clemson but lost its regular-season finale to Penn State and skidded to 10th place, vaulted to fourth with 834 points for its Sugar Bowl triumph over Georgia.

The final AP Top 10 was Clemson, Texas, Penn State, Pittsburgh, SMU, Georgia, Alabama, Miami, Fla., North Carolina and Washington.

The final regular-season Top Ten consisted of Clemson, Georgia, Alabama, Nebraska, SMU, Texas, Penn State, Southern Cal, Miami and Pitt.

Making up the postbowl Second Ten are Nebraska, Michigan, Brigham Young, Southern Cal, Ohio State, Arizona State, West Virginia, Iowa, Missouri and Oklahoma. Michigan was the preseason choice to win the national championship.

The Second Ten in the final regular-season poll consisted of North Carolina, Washington, Iowa, BYU, Ohio State, Michigan, Arizona State, Southern Mississippi, UCLA annd Washington State.

However, Southern Mississippi lost to Missouri 19-17 in the Tangerine Bowl, UCLA was drubbed by Michigan 33-14 in the Bluebonnet Bowl and Washington State bowed to BYU 38-36 in the Holiday Bowl. Meanwhile, West Virginia cracked the rankings for the first time all year by trimming Florida 26-6 in the Peach Bowl, Missouri returned via its Tangerine Bowl triumph and Oklahoma also reappeared thanks to a 404 licing of Houston in the Sun Bowl.

Clemson was the seventh team to be rated No. 1 during the 1981 season. The most No. 1 teams in a previous year was five.

Sports banquet will feature top names

He once managed a baseball team that played in shorts and his harrassment of umpires during his managerial career still is recalled with a chuckle. Of course, he reformed when he became president of the Texas League and became one of the staunchest supporters and defenders of the men-in-blue.

On Feb. 9, the once-impertinent Bobby Bragan will be the master-of-ceremonies for the fourth annual Midland Sports Banquet, scheduled again for Green Tree Country Club and put on by the Midland Cubs.

It's task for which Bragan has warmed up by serving as MC or After-Dinner Speaker some 125 times in 1979 alone.

AS IN THE past, the MC's job will be to introduce a seemingly unending stream of sports celebrities and immortals. The names from the past have included such as Lefty Gomez, Warren Spahn, Johnny Rutherford, Al Unser, Don Sutton, Kyle Rote, Bobby Layne, Eddie LeBaron, Jim Hall, Bobby Hillin, Buddy Bell, Brad Corbett, Bobby Winkles, Ernie Banks, Art Howe, Earl Campbell, Tom Brahaney, Junior Miller...the list stretches interminably...and this year will be no different.

The list of distinguished guests will be revealed over the next few weeks, but for appetizers, how do Dick Williams and Alan Ashby sound?

BRAGAN BEGAN his career in the Alabama-Florida League back in 1937 and he reached the majors in 1940, playing seven years for the Dodgers and Phillies.

A native Alabaman, Bragan began his managerial career with the old Fort Worth Cats of the Texas League in 1948 and was promoted to the Hollywood Stars of the Pacific Coast League in 1953. Where else would a team wear shorts?

His major league managerial credits include Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Milwaukee's Braves and finally the Atlanta Braves in 1968.

He served as Texas League president from 1967 to 1976 and it was through his efforts that the DH was introduced to the league, for better or for worse.

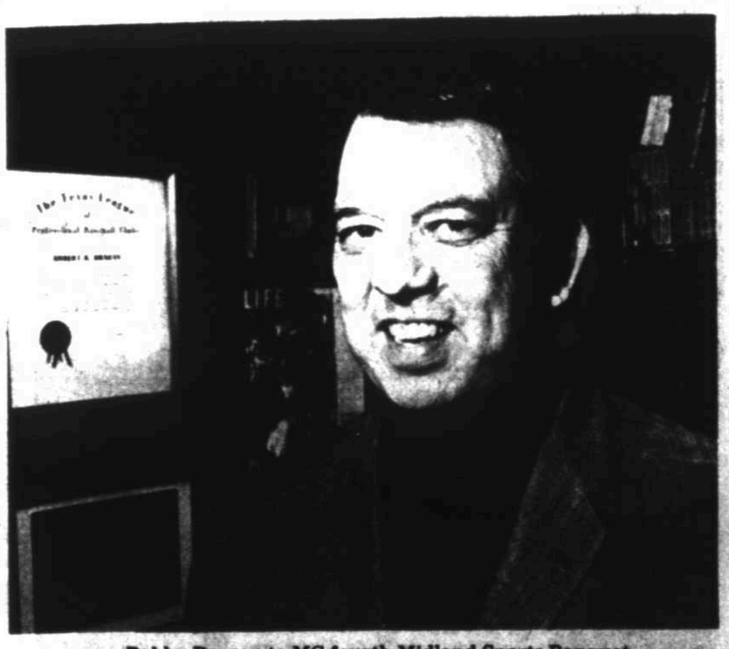

He served as president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues from 1975 to 1979 and has been a member of baseball's executive committee for eight years.

BRAGAN'S versatility extends well beyond the limits of baseball. Over the years he has been a sportscaster and has been guest color commentator for several major league teams. He had his own weekly TV show in Hollywood and has been a columnist for the Baseball Bulletin, Houston Post and Birmingham Post.

He was elected to the Alabama Sports Hall of Fame, but that's not all. He's a sometimes thespian, appearing in Promises, Promises at Casa Manana in 1972 and then in Tom Sawyer in 1979.

Last year he was named Business and Professional Man of the Year in 1981 by Religious Heritage of America.

If that isn't enough...Bobby also is a piano player of no little note.

Akins' free throw lifts Rebels to 5-5A win over Bulldogs

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

Maudie Akins canned a pressure-packed free throw with three seconds left to lift the Midland Lee Rebels to a 69-67 wild and wooly win over Midland High Saturday night at Chaparral Center in front of a small, but vocal crowd as both teams tipped off the District 5-5A girls race.

The victory runs the Reb record to 12-6 while the Bulldogs fall to 11-6.

Lee coach Shirley Stephenson said, "It's hard to believe. We played well and kept our composure." She added, "We lost two of three games in the Slaton tournament earlier in the week but I think the games really helped us. Although we lost, we came-from-behind in all three games and I believe we gained some confidence."

A dejected Bulldog coach, Jane Young, said, "We played super but got into foul trouble. All our girls played well. Sheila Christian played an outstanding game." Young added, "We shot poorly from the free throw line in the first half and we had trouble staying on the boards with Lee, but we had our chances to win."

The situation looked bright for Midland High when Cindy Besek drilled a 15-foot baseline jumper to give the Purple Pack a 65-61 lead with 1:18 to play in the game.

Lee's pressure defense came through with two turnovers and Harris and Akins ripped the cords with two-points to knot the game at 65-65 with 39 seconds remaining.

Christian pushed the Bulldogs back in front with 28 ticks left when she dropped in two free throws.

The Rebels were staring defeat in the face 18 seconds later when Loudres Duran forced a shot that went out-of-bounds.

On the in-bounds play, Duan tipped the pass and Akins intercepted at the free throw line and calmly hit the jumper to tie the contest, 67-67, with 10 seconds to play.

Lee again forced a turnover on the in-bounds attempt and in the wild scramble for the loose ball, Akins was fouled. She stepped to the charity stripe and hit the first shot but missed on the second.

Christian grabbed the rebound, but her 40-foot shot was well off the mark as the Rebels escaped with their first district victory.

Shun Harris led the Rebs in scoring with 16 points while Yshun King added 15 and Akins pitched in 12. Christian was took game scoring honors with 29 points. She was the only Bulldog to break into double figures.

Midland High had broke from the gate quickly, taking a 9-2 lead with three minutes left in the opening frame behind the inside shooting of Rebecca Caton, called up from the junior varsity a couple of weeks ago. Lee cut the margin to two, 12-10, at the end of one as King and Harris netted baskets in the last 29 seconds.

In the second quarter, the contest was tied at 12, 14, and 16 before Christian led a Bulldog charge. Christian dropped in 10 of her game-high 29 points as the Bulldogs outscored the Rebels 12-0 over a five minute stretch to take a 28-16 lead.

Duran and YoYo Goodley, thorns in the Bulldogs' paw all night with their quick hands, led a Rebel rally that saw Lee trim the halftime deficit to 27-26.

Lee took the lead for the first time in the third stanza. Duran, who had missed four straight charity tosses, canned a one-and-one opportunity to tie the game at 31 before King hit a short jumper to give Lee a 33-31 advantage.

The Rebels opened up their biggest lead of the game, 36-31, with six minutes left in the third period only to see the Purple Pack come scratching back. Midland High caught the Rebels at 37 when Christain scored on a three-point play with 1:58 remaining in the quarter.

A charity toss by Vergie Cooks with 13 seconds left in the stanza put the Bulldogs up by one, 43-42, heading into the final eight minutes of action.

Twice in the final eight minutes, MHS built up five point leads, 47-42 and 51-46, only to have the Rebels crawl back into contention.

Foul trouble began to take its toll on the Purple Pack in the final period. In the first four minutes of the fourth quarter, coach Young watched as ball-handling point guards Missy Larremore, Janice Littlefield and Denette Parker were whistled to the sidelines. With MHS' point guards on the pines, Lee's press begin to force critical turnovers.

In the junior varsity tilt, Midland High ran its record to 13-2 with a 62-50 win over the Rebels. Margaret Stanley led the Bulldog scoring parade with 14 points while Sharon Mendenhall added 12 and Claire Hardy and Tammy Smith netted 10 each. Faye Oudems topped Lee with 15 points and Deanda Rhoads tossed in 10. Lee's junior varisty fell to 6-9 with the defeat.

Elsewhere in district action Saturday, Odessa Permain stopped Odessa High 51-48; San Angelo upped its season mark to 9-7 by ripping Big Spring 64-42, now 9-10, and Abilene High ran its record to 9-4 with a 68-53 win over Abilene Cooper, now 10-6.

Midland High (67): Sheila Christian, 9-11-29; Denette Parker, 2-0-4; Cindy Besek, 3-0-6; Janice Littlefield, 2-2-6; Penny Griffin, 0-4-4; Missy Larremore, 0-0-0; Shelly Parker, 2-1-5; Rebecca Caton, 3-0-6; Vergie Cooks, 3-3-9. Totals 23-21-67.

Midland Lee (69): Loudres Duran, 3-4-10; YoYo Goodley, 2-0-4; Ellen Matson, 0-0-0; Laurel Belknap, 0-0-0; Felicia Farias, 2-2-6; Roxana McCabe, 2-2-6; Suzanne McGaha, 2-1-5; Frances Gavin, 0-0-0; Yshun King, 5-5-15; Shun Harris, 6-0-12; Maudie Akins, 4-4-12. Totals: 25-18-27-69.

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Eddie Harris scored a game-high 17 points and Bob Steppes added 16 in leading West Texas State to a 79-57 win over Creighton in the Missouri Valley Conference opener for both schools.

Clemson football fans pour into town streets

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Hundreds of Clemson University football fans poured into the streets of this small college town for a wild celebration early Saturday after their Tigers capped a perfect season with an Orange Bowl victory which seemed likely to give them a national championship.

Ten people, including two students, were arrested on disorderly conduct charges shortly after Clemson finished a 12-0 season with a 22-15 victory over Nebraska, authorities said, but nobody was hurt.

"They were blocking the street, stopping traffic, standing in the roadway, drinking and hollering and just being happy," said Sgt. Jerry Crenshaw of the Clemson Police Department.

Crenshaw said between 250 and 300 people jammed the downtown area after the game.

Many were from neighboring towns in the rolling hills of the South Carolina Piedmont. Most Clemson students were either at home for the holiday break or still in Miami.

"Quite a number of fans or young people had got a little bit overenthused," said Crenshaw. Many had been drinking, he said.

The boisterous fans were slapping passing cars and "beating on them with their open fists," the sergeant said.

One car was badly dented when an overzealous fan jumped on the hood.

Crenshaw said city police made seven arrests and Pickens County sheriff's deputies, who were called in to assist the police, arrested three others.

Crenshaw said things may liven up again this week, when students return to register for classes.

"By night I think everyone will have burned off their excess energy," he added. "I think it will be much quieter tonight."

Buccaneers cancel one celebration

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The Tampa Sports Authority received an ominous phone call Saturday when the Bucs trailed 31-0 against the Dallas Cowboys in the third quarter of their National Football League playoff contest.

And when time ran out as the Cowboys chalked up a 38-0 NFC whitewash in Irving, Texas, Rick Nafe, director of operations for the Tampa Sports Authority, had his worst fears confirmed by the Bucs management.

A post-game celebration scheduled "win or lose" at Tampa Stadium for fans after the team returned from Texas Saturday night was canceled.

"What can I say?" an exasperated Nafe said. "We had taken the goal posts down, had stands out, had hired police ... but now we'll just have to get ready for the soccer season."

Nafe said the Bucs had announced earlier in the week they would hold a "win or lose" celebration for fans after more than 10,000 Bucs rooters showed up at the airport to celebrate Tampa Bay's victory over the Detroit Lions.

Tech upsets No. 5 Arkansas

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — It only took one game for Southwest Conference basketball to get wild and wooly and strange this year.

The first conference matchup of the season came Saturday night in Lubbock, and the heavily favored, nationally ranked Arkansas Razorbacks took their first loss of the year, 79-74 at the hands of surprising Texas Tech.

Eddie Sutton, coach of the No. 5 Razorbacks, swears he is not surprised.

"I think things in the Southwest Conference will be this way all season," said Sutton. "Texas Tech played a whale of a game."

Tech coach Gerald Myers couldn't agree more.

"It wasn't necessarily pretty," said Myers, "but it is a win and it's been a long time since we've beaten Arkansas."

Myers beamed at the performance of freshman forward Vince Taylor, who blocked three shots and scored six big points in Tech's second-half rally.

"Vince Taylor came in and hit some big outside buckets for us that brought us back," said the coach.

"The biggest thing about this win that we had a bunch of kids that wouldn't quit," he continued. "The guys stayed after it all 40 minutes. That was the difference. We had all kinds of opportunities to fold when they had those leads but we stayed with it."

Tech, 9-2, had not beaten Arkansas since 1976, a string of 11 straight games. It was the first loss of the season for the Razorbacks, 8-1.

Arkansas led 37-33 at the half, thanks largely to 14 first-period points from center Scott Hastings, and widened the margin to 56-45 on some hot outside shooting by Tony Brown in the first eight minutes of the second half.

But Taylor's rejections helped the Red Raiders put their running game in gear. Taylor scored three field goals off breaks and former Midland High star and Midland College All-American Charles Johnson added three long-range jumpers as Tech pulled within a point, 67-66, with six minutes to play.

Tech jumped in front for good, 70-69, on Jeff Taylor's with two minutes left, and late Arkansas turnovers kept the Razorbacks from rallying.

Johnson got 12 of his 14 points in the second half for Tech. Clarence Swannegan led all Raider scorers with 23.

Hastings took game scoring honors with 24 points for the Hogs, Tony Brown had 17 and Darrell Walker added 14.

Spurs spill Denver as Gervin hits 38

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — George Gervin hit 38 points and Johnny Moore dealt off a club-record 20 assists Saturday night to trigger San Antonio to a 148-133 National Basketball Association victory over Denver in a shootot between Midwest Division foes.

Gervin scored 12 of his points in a 42-point Spurs outburst in the third quarter, the highest point production in a quarter for the team this year. That sent San Antonio up by as many as 19 and put the game out of reach.

Denver led only one time throughout the contest, 34-33 with 1:15 left in the first period.

The score was tied eight times, the last time at 38-38 as the first quarter ended.

Gervin scored 10 points in the second period to lead a San Antonio blitz that put the Spurs up 71-64 at the half and San Antonio led 113-99 after three periods.

Moore racked up his 20 assists, the highest in the NBA this year, through the first three quarters before fouling out in the fourth period.

Backup center Dave Corzine and rookie Gene Banks added season highs of 21 points apiece as seven Spurs scored in double figures.

David Thompson came off the bench to lead the Nuggets with a season-high 41 points, Alex English added 23 and Kiki Vandeweghe had 17.

The victory lifted division-leader San Antonio to a 20-9 record, its best start ever, 6½ games ahead of second-place Denver, which dropped to 14-15.

Texas A&M defeats SFA

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Reggie Roberts scored 21 points, 15 of them in the second half, as Texas A&M beat Stephen F. Austin 51-45 Saturday night in a non-conference college basketball game.

A&M, 7-3, closed outs its non-conference slate by knocking the Lumberjacks, 8-1, out of the unbeaten ranks.

SFA had led by as many as nine points in the first period until Milton Woodley hit a pair of free throws to pull the Aggies even at 20-20. Roberts hit three more free shots before the half and the Aggies took a 23-22 lead into the locker room at intermission.

A&M widened its lead throughout the second half. Claude Riley aided the Aggie cause with 11 points.

Hiram Harrison led the Lumberjacks with 14.

SMU rips Angelo State

DALLAS (AP) — Freshman Jon Koncak scored 18 points Saturday night to lead Southern Methodist to a 77-66 victory over Angelo State in a non-conference college basketball game.

Southern Methodist led 32-31 at halftime. With seven minutes 12 seconds left to go in the game, the Mustangs' John Briggs hit a pair of free throws to put SMU ahead to stay at 54-52.

Al Stillman of Angelo State led all scorer with 24 points. Dave Piehler had 14 and John Addison 12 for SMU.

The Mustangs are now 5-5, while Angelo State drops to 7-3.

Clemson falls, 75-59

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Derek Whittenburg, who would rather win games than look neat, scored 18 points Saturday night as 20th-ranked North Carolina State romped to a 75-59 victory over Clemson in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball action.

Whittenburg, who plays with his shirttail out, said he was told at the season's start to keep his shirt tucked into his pants by coach Jim Valvano, but the 6-foot-1 junior guard refused, saying it affected his game.

"It may look bummy and it may not be neat, but we're trying to win ballgames," Whittenburg said.

N.C. State shot 54 percent and Whittenburg contributed 7 of 12 from the floor, mostly on long-range jump shots.

"We're probably one of the deepest shooting teams I know. They let us have our shots. We just moved around and we took them," Whittenburg said.

Valvano said he wasn't certain that the victory was his team's best effort, but he added that it was good enough considering the Wolfpack's recent trip to the Rainbow Classic in Hawaii.

"Until you've taken a trip like that, you don't realize how fatiguing it can be. But they gave a great effort," Valvano said.

Midland High Bulldog Marc Noland brings the ball down court ahead of the defense of Lubbock Estacado Matador Harold McGruder during Saturday's game between the two schools at Chaparral Center. MHS closed out non-conference play with a 67-47 victory for a 13-4 record.

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

It was a rough first quarter for Midland High Saturday against Lubbock Estacado at Chaparral Center.

Not only did the Bulldogs end up trailing the Matadors 16-14 at the end of the frame, they were also faced with three quarters of play without their leading scorer, senior forward Preston Robertson.

Robertson, going into the game, led MHS in scoring with a 21.6 average but added only two points to his season total because of an injury to his right ankle after only two minutes of play.

"We won't know until Monday," said MHS head coach Jack Stephenson about the seriousness of the injury. Bulldog trainer James "Doc" Dodson echoed the same thought. Both were waiting to see what the X-rays would reveal before making any speculation about the injury.

WITH A player like Robertson out of the lineup, a lot of coaches might be tempted to change their style of play, but Stephenson didn't allow his team to break stride in the least. The Bulldogs ran their offense and defense in the same wave attack they've used all season and the result was a 67-47 victory which closes out the non-conference season for MHS with a 13-4 record.

"We have players that are so close and so many can play that without Preston we're still a good basketball team," said Stephenson. "Don't get me wrong. Preston adds a whole, whole bunch to our team. But, when you take a top scorer out and you can still beat a good team by 20 points, that says something about your program."

When the Bulldogs started the second quarter, they quickly dissolved Estacado's lead and in the process lost a second starter as senior forward Raymond Parker went to the bench with his third personal foul.

The wave attack kept coming off the bench and by halftime all 16 players on the varsity roster had seen action. They also helped build up a 31-24 lead which increased to 49-34 at the end of three and 67-47 at the final buzzer.

"This was a good ball game for us," said Stephenson. "I hate to lose Preston, but we played a good game. We made some mistakes and we made some good plays. This was a tune up game for Permian."

ONE AREA Stephenson was pleased with was his team's defensive effort. "We have a goal on defense and that is to see if we can hold a team to less than 50 points. If we do that, we can win the ball game. The kids take a lot of pride in that. We've played 17 games this year and probably 10 have been like that."

Don Sharnowski led the Bulldogs in scoring with 20 points and was backed up by Jim Gunnels (who got his first slam dunk of the season to the approval of the crowd) with 14 and Parker with 10. Eight other Midland players also contributed points to the scoreboard.

Not only did Sharnowski lead the team in total points, he was also the top rebounder on the night with 10 and tied for the most assists and steals with five and four respectively. Gunnels added eight rebounds, five assists and four steals while Barr Bolger was credited with five asists.

For Estacado (8-11 on the year), Clint Armstead was the only player in double figures with 20 points. Freddie Harris and Danny Boyd chipped in seven each.

WITH THE non-conference schedule complete, it's time for the Bulldogs to turn their attention to District 5-5A. Their first test of the new season will be against Odessa Permian on Tuesday at 8 p.m. at Chap Center.

Stephenson feels his team has made progress since the start of the season 17 games ago. "We won two tournaments and we could be unbeaten right now. We haven't been out of any ball game yet. We made some progress. We have only one starter back from last year and because of that we've got to be pleased. I'm pleased with the relationships the players have for one another. When you have that kind of relationship you'll have a winning season, winning years. I've got to be pleased with that."

In junior varsity action, the MHS Bullpups overcame a four-point defecit in the final seconds of regulation play to tie the game at 71 and go on to win 80-72 in overtime. David Stockton and Fred Franklin were the leading scorers with 14 points apiece while Terry McGowan and Jerry Johnson added 12 each.

For Estacado, Terry Upshaw scored 21 and Johnny Williams added 17.

Kentucky escapes Georgia

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Kentucky's Melvin Turpin tipped in a missed shot with two seconds remaining to give the fourth-ranked Wildcats a 68-66 college basketball victory over the Georgia Bulldogs Saturday night.

After Turpin had tied the game 39-39 with a short jumper at the end of the first half, Georgia took a 46-39 lead with a series of steals and slam-dunks by Dominque Wilkins and a technical foul against Kentucky Coach Joe Hall.

But Kentucky, using a zone defense, fought back and took a 55-54 lead with 8:30 remaining in the game when Dirk Minniefield stole the ball from the Bulldogs and drove in for a basket.

Sampson leads Virginia win

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Sophomore Othell Wilson and junior All-American Ralph Sampson led the way as Virginia's unbeaten third-ranked Cavaliers slowly pulled away in the second half Saturday night for a 73-65 college basketball victory over James Madison's Dukes.

It was the 11th triumph for the Cavaliers and their second in four nights over James Madison, now 8-2. Virginia had beaten James Madison 57-44 Wednesday night in the finals of the Richmond Times-Dispatch Invitational tournament.

Wilson finished with 17 points and Sampson with 15, all but two in the second half. Sampson also pulled down a game-high 14 rebounds, grabbing all but two in the last 20 minutes. Sampson, who also blocked three shots, took only five shots and made them all.

The Cavaliers also got 12 points each from junior Craig Robinson and senioir Jeff Jones.

Virginia scored the game's first six points, but James Madison went on a 13-2 run to take a 13-8 lead, sparked by a steal and three-point play by Derek Steele.

The Dukes led by six points on three occasions in the first half before Virginia tied it at 24 on Sampson's only shot in the first half, a dunk with 3:07 left.

There were two more ties before Virginia went ahead 32-28 at intermission on baskets by Jones and Ricky Stokes.

The Cavaliers opened the second half with a 12-6 run that included a three-point play by Stokes that made it 44-34 with 14:53 to play. The lead reached 12 points twice, the last time with 11:13 remaining.

Dan Ruland led the Dukes, whose only two defeats have been to Virgnia, with 18 points and 12 rebounds. Charles Fisher added 12 points and Linton Townes had 11.

Attend Our Free IRA Seminar!
The Biggest Tax/Retirement Break In History!
Save $348,915 In Taxes, Earn $561,046 In Interest*

Beginning January 1, 1982, all wage earners qualify to take advantage of the benefits of the Individual Retirement Account. IRA permits individual planning of your retirement, even if you're covered by another pension plan.

Just deposit up to $2,000 a year of tax-deferred income in an IRA and start earning interest that's tax-deferred until you begin withdrawing at retirement. That means big money saved and earned toward a secure future. If you are married with a non-working spouse or both you and your spouse work, you can deposit even larger amounts.

No front fees or administrative fees.

Our New 25% Rate!

Beginning January 1st, we'll pay you 25% interest for 30 days. After that, you'll earn 1.75% below the Chase Manhattan Prime Lending Rate (currently 15.3/4%), adjusted every six months. Of course, there's a substantial penalty for early withdrawal. Deposit now to get the jump on next year. Interest Compounded Daily.

Come and see us for the complete story on IRA's and their many advantages to you. Our complete line of services, from money market certificates and no-service-charge checking to home mortgages and collateral loans, plus eight area locations makes us more convenient than any bank!

Former sadsacks seek playoff victories

By The Associated Press

A year ago, you'd have had to turn the National Football League standings upside down to get the San Francisco 49ers and Cincinnati Bengals into the playoffs. But that's exactly where these two perennial NFL sadsacks are today after posting the best records in their conferences in 1981.

The 49ers make their first visit to the playoffs since 1972, opening against the New York Giants, and the Bengals face the Buffalo Bills as the NFL playoffs continue today.

The Giants and Bills advanced with wild-card victories in the opening round of the postseason tournament. New York eliminated defending NFC champion Philadelphia 27-21 and Buffalo hung on for a 31-27 victory over the New York Jets.

The weekend's winners advance to conference championship games on Jan. 10, with the survivors meeting in Super Bowl XVI at Pontiac, Mich., Jan. 24.

CINCINNATI AND San Francisco are rather infrequent visitors to the playoffs. Both teams have made it just three times before and both were coming off 6-10 seasons in 1980, the Bengals finishing last in the AFC Central and the 49ers third in the NFC West.

But they turned it around and won their divisions this season, the 49ers posting the best record in the NFL with a 13-3 mark, and the Bengals going 12-4 in the AFC.

Today's game against the Giants will be the first postseason action for San Francisco in nine years. The 49ers made the playoffs three straight times from 1970-1972 — the only postseason appearances in the franchise's 31 seasons in the NFL.

Cincinnati hasn't suffered quite as much frustration as the 49ers, simply because the Bengals were not born until 1968. The club's last postseason appearance came in 1975.

Ironically, there is a link between the two host have-nots who suddenly became haves this season. San Francisco Coach Bill Walsh, who orchestrated the 49er turnaround, served his NFL coaching apprenticeship as an assistant with Cincinnati from 1968-1975.

SAN FRANCISCO and Cincinnati have taken different roads to the playoffs. The 49ers do it with defense, ranked second in the NFC with a per-game yield of 297.7 yards and 250 points allowed all season. The Bengals are terrors on offense, ranked second in the NFL with a 373-yard average per game and third in passing yardage with 249.6 yards gained per game through the air.

Their opponents today have had their own problems reaching the playoffs. The Giants are there for the first time in 18 years and the Bills had made it to that plateau only once since 1966 before winning the AFC East last year.

San Francisco and the Giants finished 2-3 in NFC defense this season and their contest could be a low-scoring, grind-it-out affair. Both teams had outstanding defensive rookies who made huge contributions to their success.

Linebacker Lawrence Taylor and nose tackle Bill Neill helped the Giants reduce their points and touchdowns allowed from 425 and 55 in 1980 to 257 and 27 this season. The 49ers used three first year players — No. 1 draft choice Ronnie Lott, Eric Wright and Carlton Williamson to solidify their secondary.

The Giants have been depending on running back Rob Carpenter for much of their offense. Carpenter, acquired from Houston early in the season, gained 161 yards in the wild card victory over the Eagles and had 822 for the regular season.

San Francisco travels mostly on the strong right arm of quarterback Joe Montana, the NFC passing champion, who completed 311 of 488 for 3,565 yards and 19 TDs. Wide receiver Dwight Clark was the conference's leading pass catcher with 85 for 1,105 yards.

THE BENGALS and Bills both have similiar offenses with explosive individual players.

Cincinnati's attack is constructed around quarterback Ken Anderson, who won his third passing championship and set club records for attempts (479), completions (300), yards (3,754) and touchdowns (29).

Buffalo counters with Joe Ferguson, who also set club records in three categories with 252 completions in 498 attempts for 3,652 yards.

Both quarterbacks have inviting targets. Frank Lewis set Buffalo club records with 70 catches for 1,144 yards and Jerry Butler was 55-842. For Cincinnati, rookie Cris Collinsworth caught 67 for a Bengal record 1,009 yards and tight end Dan Ross had a club record 71 receptions for 910 yards.

Each team has a 1,000-yard rusher in its backfield with Joe Cribbs (257-1,097) for the Bills, and Pete Johnson (274-1,077) for the Bengals.

Jess Stiles back to alma mater

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Former Texas A&M defensive coordinator Jess Stiles has returned to his alma mater, Texas Tech, to be an assistant athletic director, Tech officials announced Saturday.

Stiles, an assistant coach at A&M the past three seasons, will work with Tech's athletic money-raising group, the Red Raider Club, said Tech athletic director John Conley.

After 15 years in Texas high school coaching ranks, Stiles joined the Tech staff as an assistant football coach under J.T. King in 1969, where he stayed for 10 seasons.

For NBC, it was a long day capped by the No. 1 team winning amid some confusion.

For ABC, it was a down-to-the-wire thriller that even it acknowledged wouldn't mean a thing unless another team on another network was upset.

For CBS, it was visions of Heidi.

For fans, New Year's Day was a bigger than ever feast of college football on television.

The day started while many TV watchers undoubtedly were nursing memories of the night before. And NBC, with the Fiesta Bowl, the first of its three games, brought the headache of Southern California's Marcus Allen to the nation as he fumbled on the first play from scrimmage against Penn State.

Like the Penn State linebackers, NBC cameras keyed on Allen, the Heisman Trophy winning tailback. He wound up with just 85 yards rushing but the constant attention paid him by the cameras and announcers Charlie Jones and Len Dawson vividly told why Southern Cal was getting beaten.

"The key to stopping Marcus Allen is defensive penetration and taking away his ability to cut back," Dawson said at one point, and there was an isolated replay of thre Nittany Lions doing just that, throwing Allen for a loss.

IN THE Cotton Bowl, Texas rallied to beat Alabama 14-12 — and helped produce TV's most embarrassing moment.

CBS announcers Lindsay Nelson and Roger Staubach kept their words to a well-chosen few as the Longhorns rallied, and producer Bob Rowe wove shots of the field, the bench and the crowd into a colorful picture when Texas took the lead 14-10. After the Longhorns inntercepted a pass on their 1-yard line, Staubach questioned their strategy in taking a deliberate safety rather than risking a blocked punt.

"A safety means Alabama can win with a field goal," Staubach said. Alabama had the same thought when it took the free kick and started to drive toward field goal position.

That's when the Heidi suddenly loomed over CBS.

A telephone company patch was pulled, and portions of the south and southeast — including state of Alabama — missed the final 20 seconds of the game as the clock ran out on the Crimson Tide. It was reminiscent of a game between the New York Jets and Oakland in 1969 when NBC cut away to "Heidi" and viewers missed an incredible Raiders' comeback in the closing minutes.

CBS said the phone company erronerously pulled the plug. The phone company said it was unable to give CBS more time on the circuit and had insufficient notice when the network asked for an extension.

Almost 10 hours later, football's longest day ended in southern Florida. A Clemson defensive back swatted a Nebraska pass to the ground in the Orange Bowl and the Tigers had their first unbeaten season and an apparent national title wrapped up.

Again, it was NBC covering the game, with John Brodie and Don Criqui in the announcing booth and Bob Trumpy involved in an innovation that proved enlightening to viewers.

Trumpy was stationed in the coaching boxes of the two teams, high above the field, where assistants plot strategy and tell the benches what should and should not work. He was able to pass along information on several key plays before they happened, and in the second quarter it became clear that Clemson was taking the edge when the Tigers proceded to do exactly what Trumpy reported they would do seconds earlier.

Trumpy's presence in the coaches booth was most appreciated on an end zone play in the first half. Clemson's Harry Tuttle dove for a pass from Homer Jordan, but a Nebraska defender came up with the ball and the officials ruled it an interception. Replays from three angles were inconclusive on whether Tuttle had possession for a touchdown, and Brodie admitted that "I couldn't tell if I looked at the replays from now until next month."

But Trumpy reported that Tuttle had told his coaches he never had the football in his grasp. End of second guessing and a big plus for NBC. The network must get a minus, however, for its handling of the game's final seconds. Clemson had the ball with a fourth down and less than 20 seconds remaining, and on the sideline, Coach Danny Ford was huddling with Jordan. "I think they've finally convinced Jordan to just fall down with the football," Brodie said. And when Jordan then scrambled around before being tackled with six seconds remaining, Brodie and Criqui said that was the final play, since Nebraska had no timeouts left.

BUT UNDER college rules, the clock stops on change of possession, so the Cornhuskers had a chance at the desperation pass. Many viewers may have tuned out before the ball was thrown and conceivably could have missed the unbeaten season slip from Clemson's hands.

Clemson's victory made speculation about who will be No. 1 in the final poll out of the question, but it was a question raised often on ABC.

There, announcers Keith Jackson and Frank Broyles were doing the Sugar Bowl head to head with the Orange. The Sugar Bowl featured the nation's No. 2 team Georgia, against 10th-ranked Pittsburgh.

If Clemson had lost, Georgia would have had a shot at a second straight national crown. But that was a big if and Jackson made no bones about it.

"If Clemson wins, it's obvious," Jackson said. "The Tigers should be ranked No. 1 — 12-0. That's it." ABC frequently gave the score off the Orange Bowl game, while NBC mentioned the Sugar Bowl score just once in the first half and again after Pitt had scored in the final seconds to defeat the Bulldogs.

ABC's strong points were Jackson's announcing and its experience from telecasting NCAA games each Saturday during the regular season.

Ohtruck pulls off rally to win Sunland feature

SUNLAND PARK (AP) — Ohtruck rallied in the final yards to post a nose victory over Brendas Cupa Te in Saturday's featured race at Sunland Park horse track.

The 4-year-old Truckie Feature gelding made up considerable ground from the outside under a strong ride from Bobbie Don Harmon to catch Brendas Cupa Te at the wire. Justa Natural ran third as outsiders dominated the finish of the 350-yard dash for 3-year-old and older quarter horses.

The time was the best this season as Ohtruck recorded a 17.51, aided greatly by an extremely strong tailwind. The win marked the 4-year-old racing debut of Ohtruck. In 1981, he won three of 13 starts with one second.

Ohtruck paid $20.40, $6.60 and $6.60. Brendas Cupa Te returned $14.80 and $8.80 while Justa Natural paid $7.40. The two favorites, Tewatee and Just A Play Mate, were not in contention at the end.

IRAs Now - For The Future

Looking for an unusual, but timely and thoughtful birthday gift? Why not open an IRA for you and your spouse? America is getting older. The percentage of our population nearing retirement age gets bigger every year. And the economic problems they face get tougher every year.

These days you probably cannot retire in total comfort on Social Security or a pension. Knowing this to be the case, new tax laws have been enacted effective January 1, 1982, to help you plan for the future.

What?

An IRA is an Individual Retirement Account, which is a personal, tax-deferred retirement savings plan.

Who?

All workers will become eligible whether participating in a retirement plan or not.

Types?

There are several ways to establish accounts. Contributory IRAs are for wage-earning individuals, especially convenient with payroll deduction. Spousal IRAs are for married couples where only one spouse is employed. Rollover IRAs are for the retiree with a lump sum retirement.

How Much?

If both spouses work, each may contribute up to 100% of compensation or a maximum of $2,000 per year. For spousal accounts, a maximum total contribution of $2,250 is allowed. It may be divided between them as they wish. Rollover lump sum retirement monies must be deposited with 60 days of receipt.

Taxes?

For Federal income tax purposes, contributions to your IRA are fully deductible from gross income and tax-deferred, up to the maximum allowed by law. You may make this deduction even though you do not itemize other deductions. Interest earned on the account is also tax-deferred. Compounding of the interest over the years generates more dollars to build a retirement fund significantly larger than would be possible with taxed dollars. In addition, your IRA contributions put you in a lower tax bracket. Taxes are not paid until distribution begins, and are figured on a regular income basis. By that time, you should be in a lower tax bracket.

Early Withdrawals?

Withdrawals made before age 59½ are not only taxable at your current rate, but there is also a 10% Federal exise penalty on the amount withdrawn. Thereafter the money may be withdrawn without any Federal penalty and you must begin withdrawing at age 70½.

Questions?

Don't hesitate to call or go by your credit union if you have any questions. We are always ready to serve you and to help you find the plan that is right for you.

After the deer hunting trip, enjoy valuable venison catch

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

There are so many hunters in this state that enjoy the sport of deer hunting, but once the hunting trip is over they are confused at what to do with the valuable venison. Too many sportsmen often let their meat ruin or get old before it has been processed. And; again, there's more meat on a deer than just the backstrap, hind and front quarters.

The most important step in preparing a deer for the dinner table starts immediately after the kill. It is very important that you field dress the animal properly and get it to cold storage before the meat has a chance to spoil. And that old business of bagging a deer, quickly field dress the animal and tie him to the hood of the car for the long trip home is a no-no!

The moment you shoot your prized buck, get to him as quick as possible. Begin field dressing the animal without hesitation. Field dressing can be simple, but some basics should be applied. Some people might disagree with me on my techniques, but I've been very well pleased with my field dressing performances over the years and my venison has always tasted good.

And, do you know that I get tired of people saying they don't like deer because of the 'game' flavor.

Or it tastes too wild! That's simply not the case. If a person enjoys eating beef, then he or she should enjoy eating venison. It's all in the way the deer has been taken care of in the field. That's the most important thing! If you can cook chicken fried steak, then you can cook deer meat.

As soon as I've shot the animal, I quickly rush to field dress him. If a tree is nearby and I have some rope, I will hang the animal up. But that's not always the case. Most of the time, I will have to field dress the deer on the ground, first to remove some weight so that I might hoist it up in a tree if I don't have any rope available.

For instance, If I've field dressed the animal on the ground, I will then transfer it to a place to hang to let the remainder of the blood drain. When field dressing the deer, be sure you remove all the innards: stomach, intestines, lungs and all the rest of the major organs. Don't leave anything inside the animal. And be careful on your initial incesion so that you don't puncture the stomach. Puncturing the stomach has a way of turning you off while field dressing the deer.

To keep from splitting the stomach, just be careful with the first incesion. I always cut the deer from the genitals to the neck with a precisioned slice just under the skin. Don't go to deep with your slice because you could puncture the stomach. And be sure and remove all innards, genitals included.

Once this procedure is finished, get the animal to a tree or somewhere you might hang him to let him bleed. This is another good time to begin skinning operations. A lot of hunners do not skin their animals, but I would suggest if you are on a two or three-day hunting trip and you bag an animal early, don't let the animal hang very long with the skin on. I know you've heard many hunters talk and have seen hunters leave the skin on the animal for two or three days, but that's not smart. If you want that meat to eat, get the skin off as quick as possible. With the skin removed, the animal will get cold quicker and there's not much of a chance of parasites getting on the meat.

Now there's a thousand and one ways to process the deer for eating. Some huners choose to quarter and steak their own, while others prefer to take the animal to a commercial meat processor. It's not that important how the deer is processed as long as you are satisfied. But one thing to remember, there's a lot of meat on that deer that most people either throw away or they don't know it's there.

Commercial meat processors will normally cut the deer into steaks, chops and roasts. And upon special request use some of the other mat for chili with pork sausage added. All those make for some tasty eating, but there's still more meat that can be salvaged.

A good friend of mine, John Adams, has the perfect solution and recipe for all that extra meat that is normally not salvaged for the deer's carcus.

Adams Deer Jerky Recipe:

Use thickly sliced meat, preferably from the neck, ribs or shoulders or certain parts of the hindquarter. The rest of the meat can be used for steaks and roasts.

Recipe for one pound of meat:

1 teaspoon salt.
½ teaspoon garlic powder.
½ teaspoon black pepper.
2 tablespoons wonchestershire sauce.
2 tablespoons soy sauce.
2 tablespoons of liquid smoke (optional).

Marinate six to 12 hours in refrigerator in non-metal container.

Line large pan with foil and spread meat out on foil, cook in oven for two hours at 175 degrees. Drain off moisture, continue cooking at 125 degrees for approximately eight hours with oven door cracked slightly. Turn meat every two hours.

Now, that's simple! And it's a good way to use that normally disregarded meat and it makes the finest venison jerky in the world. You can use the same recipe for jerky if you use an electric or charcoal smoker.

As a reminder. To prepare good tasting venison recipies, whether it be jerky, chicken fried venison, smothered venison steaks or venison roasts, the care of the deer in the field and in transport is the most important aspect of fine dining opportunities.

Miller charges to Sun City tie

SUN CITY, Bophuthatswana (AP) — Johnny Miller, whose brilliant, 6-under-par 66 has elevated him into a tie for the lead going into today's final round of the world's richest golf tournament, would like to see the chase get even tighter.

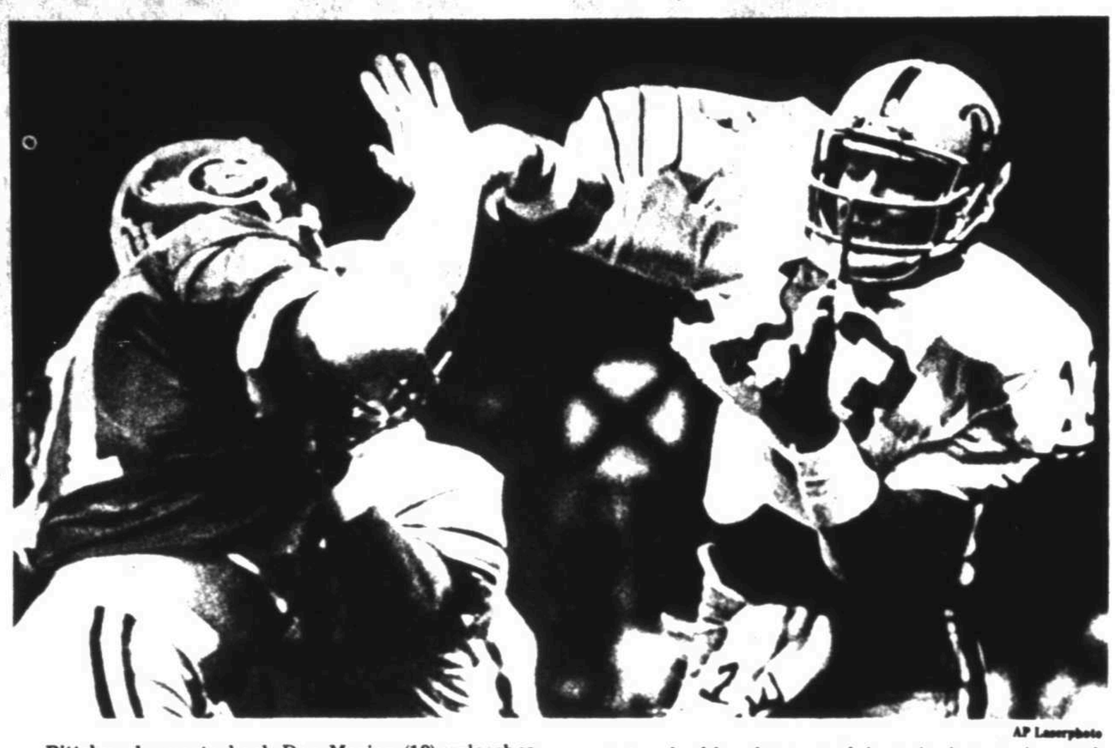

"It's exciting," the usually low-key Miller said Saturday after his 54-hole total of 206 had lifted him into a tie with Seve Ballesteros of Spain, who had led alone through the first two rounds of the Sun City $1 million Golf Challenge.

"I'd really like to see it come down to the last two holes with all three of us, me and Seve and Jack (Nicklaus) tied for the lead," miller said. Then he noticed Ballesteros standing in a crowd of reporters.

"Wouldn't you like that, Seve?" he asked. "Wouldn't that be fun?"

"I think I'd rather be leading," answered the young Spaniard, who rallied with a 32 on the back nine to salvage a 69 and a tie for the lead.

Trevino three-putted the first three holes, "the first time I've done that in my pro career," he said, and finished with a 74 that left him at 218. "I just put myself behind the eight ball immediateatly."

Moose population drops in Colorado North Park

DENVER (AP) — When Colorado wildlife officials re-introduced moose to the state, they knew hunters were a danger to the fledgling herd.

In March 1978, 12 of the animals were brought from Utah to a sparsely populated mountain area called North Park. In 1979, 12 more were imported. They adjusted well to the Northern Colorado high country, and the population grew to more than 70.

But now, four big-game hunting seasons later, wildlife specialists know that hunters — or at least ill-informed hunters — the population is falling.

Seven of the large animals were killed during the past season, bringing to 12 the toll in the past two years. Their numbers have dropped to around 60.

The stately animal was once native to Colorado. When the first moose were imported from Utah four years ago, wildlife officials projected that a special hunting season could be held in about 10 years. Then they hoped they might have one sooner.

Now they say that season may have to be delayed.

"We anticipated, when we brought moose in, that we would have losses," said Bob Tully, wildlife manager for the Colorado Division of Wildlife. "It is well documented that the loss may run about 30 percent. The illegal kill is very high in Western states with moose. But we did get by several years without a loss."

Tully said Colorado's losses have not been staggering, but that they are significant.

Last gasp Marino will be back at Pitt

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — "He's the greatest — he always knows where the dots are."

For Pittsburgh Coach Jackie Sherrill, that is the supreme compliment that could be paid his quarterback who led the Panthers to a pulse-jabbing 24-20 victory over the Georgia Bulldogs Friday night in the 48th Sugar Bowl.

Young Dan Marino knew exactly where all the dots — his own players as well as those of the enemy — when he laid a magnificent arching, last-gasp pass into the hands of John Brown with 35 seconds left in the game at the Superdome.

Marino is the college player which the football world, particularly the pro scouts, will be watching with interest in 1982.

Sherrill, who played under Bear Bryant at Alabama and alongside such quarterback geniuses as Joe Namath and Ken Stabler, says without equivocation:

"Marino is the best of all. I've never seen his equal."

The Sugar Bowl stacked up as the "Marino-Herschel Walker Show," with the Pitt field general going against the bull-strong, gazelle-swift tailback of the Bulldogs who in his first two years brought new ball-running exitement to the game.

Walker has been acclaimed "the new Jim Brown."

Just as Pitt eked out the victory, so its junior quarterback won the individual sideshow, directing the Panthers to a total of 469 yards, more than twice that of Georgia, and personally completing 26 of 41 passes for 261 yards and three touchdowns. Pitt made 27 first downs to Georgia's 11.

Meanwhile, the 6-foot-1, 222-pound Walker, who can run the 100 meters in 10.2, was held under 100 yards for the first time in 11 games, limited to 84 yards in 25 carries — a testament to Pitt's fierce, ball-hawking defense.

Marino was named the game's MVP.

Marino and Walker loom as the natural chief rivals for the 1982 Heisman Trophy, an honor that has basely escaped Walker his first two seasons possibly because traditionally they don't give the award to callow freshmen and sophomores. Now Marino, you might say, has a leg up in the competition.

This could provoke so much frustration in Walker's burly chest that he might be inclined — as some predict — to go to court to test the National Football League's rule barring the draft of a college player until his class has graduated.

"I'm just gonna wait and see," Walker keeps telling everybody. Under the current rule, he could't go pro until 1984.

Marino definitely has no such plans although he is an athlete of such rare all-around endowments that he already has been drafted by the Kansas City Royals baseball team.

The Royals must wait in the wings and fight it out with the NFL for the youngster's services. He is a combination pitcher-outfielder.

Marino is a rare specimen, 6-4 and 215 pounds of quickness and unshakeable poise. Everyone who has seen him in action — a career that so far includes 19 200-yard games — marvels at his coolness, quick delivery and pinpoint accuracy. He is rarely sacked.

He is blessed with a peripheral vision that is also attributed to John McEnroe, the tennis champion. He can diagnose a scattered field and pick an open target in a flash. He is aware of where everyone is at all times - a remarkable faculty.

"The greatest release I've ever seen," says West Virginia's defensive coordinator Denny Brown. "He will dominate college quarterbacks as long as he's around," adds Florida State's Bobby Bowden." "A pro quarterback in college," say others.

The tip for '82. Watch Danny Marino.

Joe Paterno wants college playoff

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Penn State Coach Joe Paterno, after seeing his seventh-ranked Nittany Lions beat No. 8 Southern Cal 26-10 in Friday's Fiesta Bowl here, says a series of playoffs should decide the national collegiate football champion and not a voting system.

"I've always resented the fact that everybody else has a chance to win the title on the playing field and we're the victim of opinion," Paterno said Saturday. "I think we should have a playoff.

"After all the bowl games are over, someone ought to pick four teams — by a point system or coaches getting together or whatever. You take those four teams and play on consecutive Saturdays. That way, you finish the day before the Super Bowl," added Paterno. "You may not wind up with the best football team all time."

USC coach John Robinson said he has "some mixed feelings" about Paterno's proposed playoff plan.

"I'd love to be in it. I'd hate to be voted out of it," he said. "The problem with that four-team format is there will always be 10 schools who say 'We were robbed.'

"Who do you leave out?," added Robinson. "If we were the Pacific-10 Conference champions, I'd hate to have somebody say, 'You guys aren't in it.'

DRILLING FLUIDS REPRESENTATIVES

A Position That Adds Up To Responsibility and Challenge

Our IMCO sales and service representatives are known as Mud Engineers in the oilfield. Their job responsibilities include on-site well testing and analysis of drilling fluid preparation and maintenance. They are trained to respond to any drilling complications and recommend appropriate steps to take. It's a demanding job and the demand for Mud Engineers is growing all the time.

We have an immediate need for individuals interested in a career in this field. Qualified candidates should ideally have a college degree and rig experience as well as a desire to work outdoors. A HS diploma is required.

At IMCO, you will have a starting salary of $18,000 per year, a company car, a year-end performance bonus, plus a comprehensive benefits package. Upon completion of an 8-week training program, you will be relocated at company expense to one of our field locations within the continental 48 states.

We at IMCO are concerned about the future of talented college graduates as well as individuals presently considering a career change. If you would like further information about career opportunities with us, please send your resume including salary history to:

SENIOR ACCOUNTANT

To an innovative Accountant with the drive and capability for working with limited supervision, Superior Oil will offer growth-oriented opportunity in its Midland Production District Office. As this major facility of the nation's largest independent oil and gas producer, you'll perform cost accounting functions for wells in progress, accumulate and report daily well costs, and closely monitor drilling AFE's.

Successful candidate will match technical skills with communications ability to assist and train drilling site supervisors in cost accumulating procedures. Must be willing to travel and spend considerable time at well sites in West Texas and New Mexico areas.

Qualifications also include 2 or more years related oil and gas accounting experience. Excellent salary and benefits are coupled with strong prospects for advancement. For consideration, forward resume with salary history in confidence to our Headquarters office.

If You Know What An Owner/Operator Is...

You Know It's Worth $2,500 To Become One.

The only thing stopping a lot of good truckers from becoming owner/operators is the tractor cost. That's why Aero-Mayflower developed a new tractor lease program. It's a way for owner/operators to get started. All it takes to begin is $2,500. As an owner/operator with Mayflower you'll get:

1. 56% of the line haul ($560 out of every $1,000.)
2. If the fuel goes up, so does your fuel surcharge.
3. Training (if you need it) at our expense.
4. Your own business with a very successful company behind you.

We'd like to tell you more. Call 1-800-428-1220 (in INDIANA call 1-800-382-1212) between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

Texas Rehabilitation Commission: Helping people help themselves

By NANCY LORD
Lifestyle Writer

Helping disabled persons help themselves. That's what the Vocational Rehabilitation Division of the Texas Rehabilitation Commission is all about, according to Ione Priest, who works as a counselor at the local office.

The agency works to help persons with disabilities go to work through the following services:

1. Medical, psychological and vocational evaluation to determine the nature and degree of disability.
2. Counseling and guidance to help a person and family deal with the problems facing the handicapped individual and to select and plan for proper vocational goals.
3. Interpreter services for the deaf.
4. Medical treatment including hospitalization, surgery and other therapy to lessen or remove the disability.
5. Assistive devises such as artificial limbs, braces, wheelchairs and hearing aids to stabilize or improve function.
6. Training in a trade school, business school, college, university, rehabilitation center, on the job or at home.
7. Halfway house services.
8. Selective job placement compatible with the individual's physical and mental ability.
9. Follow-up after placement to ensure job success.

In 1980, the Vocational Rehabilitation program served a total of 100,264 clients in Texas, 14,876 of which were classified as successfully rehabilitated. Average cost for vocational rehabilitation per person was $3,880.

Locally, in 1981, 368 persons received aid from the program, with 69 of these being successfully rehabilitated.

Types of disabilities served include orthopedic deformities (including amputations), mental health (including alcoholism, drug addiction and character disorders), internal medical conditions (including epilepsy), mental retardation, deaf and hearing impaired and speech and language/learning disabilities.

"The Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the 1978 amendments to the act placed priority in the delivery of vocational rehabilitation services to clients with the most severe disabling conditions," Miss Priest noted. "During 1980, Texas Rehabilitation Commission focused on refinement of such complex services as vehicle modification."

Bill Mims of Midland was one client who received help from the program through vehicle modification. Mims, a quadriplegic, said that the program provided some mechanical attachments, including a wheelchair lift, to the specially-designed van he drives, enabling him more freedom in getting to and from work.

Mims, who works as Emergency Services Coordinator with the local Mental Health Clinic, said he found out about the Vocational Rehabilitation Division through his work.

He said that the staff at the agency also helped him through "providing some impetus" to explore new possibilities as far as his disability is concerned. "They help you get off the ground."

Mims also sells real estate in his spare time and is working toward his master's degree in behaviorial science at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Miss Priest said that the Commission also works closely with local and municipal transpotation programs, housing authorities and other groups to develop transportation and housing resources around the state.

She also noted that job site modification and related rehabilitation engineering services are available to employers and persons with disabilities. These services enable employers and local services to comply with sections 503 and 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, which provide for "affirmative action" in hiring disabled persons and for "non-discrimination" and accessibility to businesses and services for all individuals with disabilities.

Another Midlander who has been helped by the agency is Bennie Burchfield. Ms. Burchfield said she needed help after suffering a nervous breakdown.

"I felt like everyone had deserted me," she remembered.

"They helped me," she said of the Vocational Rehabilitation program. "It was great to know that someone was there who cared."

The agency provided Ms. Burchfield with counseling services and financial aid. She is now employed by Reynold's Brothers as a delivery person — a job she has held for the past six months.

More importantly, Ms. Burchfield explained, "I found some friends (at the Texas Rehabilitation Commission)."

Murry Harris, who works at Trinity Towers, said she has the Texas Rehabilitation Commission to thank for the fact that she is now a graduate vocational nurse.

Ms. Harris said that the Commission paid the tuition for the 12-month nursing course she took at Midland College. She said that she became interested in nursing while she was in the hospital after having a stroke.

"I noticed there were a lot of disabled persons working in the hospitals," she explained.

"I love it — every minute of it," she said of her job. She graduated from the course in August of 1981 and plans to take the state board examination in April.

In addition to paying her tuition, Ms. Harris said that the agency offered her counseling and encouragement while she was going to school.

"It's great," she said of the program. "They (the staff) will just talk to you about anything."

Ms. Harris said that she found out about the programs offered by the Commissionthrough a booklet she received when she applied for Social Security benefits.

Miss Priest said they get referral from various sources.

"Texas Rehabilitation Commission has working agreements with organizations such as Mental Health/Mental Retardation Centers, Crippled Children's, Heart, Epilepsy, Diabetes, Multiple Sclerosis and many others to facilitate case service and those appropriate referrals are made," Miss Priest said. "Individual counselors also work closely with medical doctors, speech pathologists, physical therapists and other persons who come in contact with disabled persons who may need help in order to go to work."

She said that in places where necessary services are not available in the community, the Commission works very closely with local consumer groups and interested persons to develop those services.

Miss Priest noted that since 1977, Extended Rehabilitation Services program has provided work and residential living for persons whose physical and/or mental handicaps are too severe for them to benefit from regular rehabilitation services. Persons in this program are usually multiply handicapped, she explained, and work in sheltered workshops and live in sheltered housing. She said that these programs enable the severely disabled individual to stay out of an institution.

Miss Priest said that the local office has counselors who speak American Sign Language and Spanish to better serve the disabled. She also said that counselors are available to present programs for organizations in Midland.

Although the Commission offers many services to disabled individuals to help them get a job, Miss Priest was quick to point out that the Commission can't help someone if they don't want to go to work. "They (the disabled clients) are really the ones that do all the work."

For more information on the Commission, contact Miss Priest at 684-5791.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Getting burner pans clean— the easy way

DEAR HELOISE:

To clean stove burner pans, put them in a large pan, cover with water and add a large amount of baking soda. Simmer for an hour, then wash as usual with detergent and a steel wool soap pad if necessary.

It's amazing how clean they will be with very little scrubbing. — E. Namanny

What is equally amazing is how clean the burner pans will remain if you wash them in hot, sudsy water after every meal. In other words, don't let the food or grease left on them after one meal, be cooked onto the pans the next meal and the next, etc.

The first thing you know, you have a carbon build-up that is very difficult to remove and, in some cases, virtually impossible. Your hint will help to remove minor carbon build-up before it gets to the stubborn stage. Hugs for writing. — Heloise

DRY SHAMPOO

Dear Heloise: Instead of using cornstarch as a dry shampoo, try cornmeal. I have dark brown hair and have been using it for years.

It is much easier to remove and, after a good brushing, will not leave your hair gray-looking. — Kris Wood

SPICE STORING

Dear Heloise: Don't store spices in a cabinet above the stove...

Besides the possibility that a box could drop into hot oil or boiling water when you reach for it, the spices will deteriorate much more rapidly over heat than they would if stored in a cooler, drier place.

It's the heat and the high humidity above the stove that does them in. — Mary Benham

RUST PREVENTION

Dear Heloise: Is there any way to keep the tops of bottles and jars from rusting? The caps from steak sauce bottles and products which are not used too often seem to rust almost through and through.

Any suggestions? — D.L.

One of the cardinal rules for these products is that you wipe the surface completely clean after each use. There should be no residue on either the bottle or the lid, especially if the contents are infrequently used.

You say you've done all this and the tops still rust?

Then, place a small piece of plastic wrap over the bottle before screwing on the lid. While this won't prevent its rusting, at least there will be less gunk on the bottle and less chance of the rust contaminating the contents. — Heloise

PENNY-SAVER HINT

Dear Heloise: Never throw away an old room deodorizer. Put new life into it by placing it in a pan of water and boil away.

The steam permeates the house in a matter of minutes. Especially good after cooking seafoods etc.

I put mine on while doing the dishes and it leaves the kitchen with a clean smell. — Susie Freeman

SNAP-SEWING TIP

Dear Heloise: When sewing on a snap, sew the top side on first, then apply chalk to the tip of the snap and press it on the spot when the bottom half of the snap is to be sewn on.

This will insure your getting the snaps exactly opposite each other for a proper fit. — Vi Cobb

DEAR FELLOW COOKS:

We recently printed a recipe in the column for "Famous Chocolate Fudge." From your responses, this is a classic example of how easy it is sometimes to look at a recipe and mis-read or not understand the directions, and end up with a failure or less than perfect results.

One of the ingredients listed in the recipe was "eight ounces of marshmallows, finely cut," and here is where the confusion came in.

We all know one cup contains eight fluid ounces, but it's not the same as eight ounces of marshmallows by weight which, of course, is one-half pound. If only one cup of marshmallows is added, the fudge will not be sufficiently creamy, nor will it set or harden.

If this is what happened to your fudge, you weren't alone. Even one of my staff tried the recipe and made the exact same mistake. Guess these things do happen to all of us at one time or another.

If you didn't get the recipe the first time, send a business size self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216, and we will put it in the mail to you. — Hugs, Heloise

BIRDIE BOUNTY

Dear Heloise — and Bird Lovers: Would you like to make a yummy treat for those birds you feed and enjoy watching?

Save bacon dripping and other solid fats that get firm when cold.

Mix the drippings with bird seed in a bowl, then spoon it onto a large pine cone, filling all the cracks and crevices.

Tie the cone to a tree and watch the excitement the birds get from it!

Surprisingly, the first bird to partake of my treat was a downy woodpecker, and I didn't even know we had any around here!

This mixture lasts longer than seed balls or feed in a feeder, and the solid fats help keep the birds warm these cold days. — Ina Myers

MELTING BUTTER

Dear Heloise: Just had to share my way of melting butter or shortening for recipes without burning it.

I turn my automatic coffeemaker warmer switch on and place a small pie tin or dish with the butter on the warming plate.

The butter will slowly melt and there's no risk of scorching or burning it, as I always manage to do on the stove burner. — Marilyn Absolutely great! I tried it and I like it! — Heloise

SINK STRAINER

Dear Heloise: When my kitchen sink strainer became bent and out of shape, I took an 18-inch square of nylon net and wadded it into a ball.

I stuffed it into the drain as a strainer. The water can easily run through it but the netting catches any bits of food or objects that would otherwise go down the drain.

Of course, it won't hold in water for dishwashing, but it sure saves getting a clogged-up sink. — Mabel Biddle

COLORED WALLS

Dear Heloise: My 2-year-old son used a red crayon to draw on his white wall.

I couldn't find a frame large enough to frame his art work so I tried something else.

A can of spray foam bathroom cleaner, to my surprise, not only took the crayon marks off the wall but was an easy way to clean the entire wall.

Just be sure to follow the directions on the can. — Maria Wright

Standing on its own three feet

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — This boat has legs.

The "jack-up," or elevating boat, has three legs that can be hydraulically moved up and down to a length of 70 feet. At the bottom of the legs are "feet," square pads which stabilize the boat so that it can be lifted above the water.

The Georgia-Pacific boat acts as a working platform for people and equipment next to a producing offshore well in the Gulf of Mexico.

The "Walter Alfonso" is 35 feet long and attains a top speed of 10 mph.

Coal-burning stoves heat homes

BRAINTREE, Mass. (AP) — Anthracite coal is used in coal-burning stoves for home heating.

A typical home here when heated by a coal burning stove requires 2 tons of anthracite for an entire heating season, says Crane Stove Works. One ton of coal fills an area 3 feet long, 3 feet wide and 4 feet deep.

There are 7 to 8 billion tons of recoverable anthracite coal reserves in this country, with 96 percent located in northeast Pennsylvania.

Lifestyle guidelines

The following are suggested guidelines for publication of stories in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday; or two days before publication in a daily paper.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within a week of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for engagement and wedding announcement stories.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

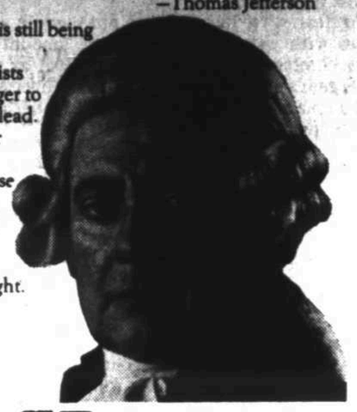

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Helping colleges fight rising costs is one way to preserve American independence.
—Thomas Jefferson

Our country's independence is still being challenged today.
By foreign researchers, scientists and industrial rivals who are eager to whittle down our technological lead.
But we can help preserve our independence by giving aid to colleges and universities. Because a large portion of the research done in this country is done on college campuses.
Economic independence requires independence of thought.

Help! Give to the college of your choice.

AMERICA INSIDE

Are America's judges now abusing our rights?

By REP. JOHN ASHBROOK (R., OHIO)
(Special from Reader's Digest)

Federal marshals clapped handcuffs on University of Georgia Prof. James A. Dinnan recently and hauled him off to prison. What had this 52-year-old academician done? Dinnan had served on a faculty committee that voted 6-to-3 against promoting a young woman assistant professor.

The woman sued, alleging sex discrimination. In pretrial proceedings, Dinnan readily described the criteria he used in his decision but refused to say how he had voted. For that refusal, federal Judge Wilbur D. Owens Jr. held him in civil contempt and ordered him to pay $100 a day for 30 days and then spend 90 days in jail unless he answered the question.

Released three months later, Dinnan discovered that he faced another jail term if he refused to reveal his vote in further proceedings. Vowing to move to another country first, he proclaimed, "If academic freedom is not the right to judge one's peers free from outside pressure or intimidation, then what is it? Once the courts control the schools of America, you're headed toward totalitarianism."

There are complaints nationwide of judges overreaching their constitutional authority. "We have," declares Harvard Professor Emeritus Nathan Glazer, developed "an imperial judiciary" in which judges "now reach into the lives of the people, against the will of the people, more than ever in American history."

Today, a judge can overrule the President and Congress as well as state and local legislatures. He can seize a school system, prison or mental hospital, appropriate public funds, and set policy. In Atlanta, parents, outraged by "head shops" pushing drug paraphernalia aimed at youngsters, persuaded the Georgia legislature to outlaw such sales. But a federal judge voided the statute as "vague," even though similar wording has been upheld in laws outlawing counterfeiting, gambling and bootlegging paraphernalia.

Outside Albany, N.Y., high-school students sought to hold a voluntary prayer session in their classrooms before the start of the school day. Outlawing the practice as "too dangerous to permit," federal Judge Irving R. Kaufman argued that it "might indicate the state has placed its imprimatur on a particular religious creed."

In Parma, Ohio, voters chose to require a referendum on all zoning variances. A federal judge treated this vote as evidence of intentional racial discrimination, and ordered the community to provide low-income housing.

Decisions of this sort have altered the nation's basic governmental structure. They strip power from elected officials and transfer it to appointed judges, who serve for life.

Keeping judges in their proper sphere is an old problem. In 1625, Francis Bacon warned: "Judges ought to remember that their office is to interpret law and not to make or give law."

For generations, the federal judiciary upheld the position that education is a field reserved for the states. Then, in 1969, an "activist" on the Supreme Court decreed that the due-process clause gave federal judges the right to oversee public-school discipline - supplanting elected legislators and school boards.

In 1975, the Court expanded the trend by overturning an Ohio law allowing school principals to suspend disruptive students for up to 10 days. Such actions have contributed to an epidemic of violence in the nation's high schools.

No mandates have stirred more controversy than those directing school busing. In 1971, the Supreme Court declared that a local federal judge had seemingly unlimited power to force a racial balance to his satisfaction. Soon judges were ordering large-scale busing.

State legislatures seeking to deter murder by imposing the death penalty have been thwarted again and again by a Court that arbitrarily changes the rules.

In 1972, five Justices decreed that the death-penalty laws of 41 states were unconstitutional because they left to the uncontrolled discretion of judges or jurors whether defendants should be imprisoned or die. Thirty-six states promptly enacted new laws making death mandatory for specified categories of murder and other crimes. Then the Justices did a U-turn in 1978, holding Ohio's death-penalty law invalid because it failed to give the sentencing judge enough discretion.

Many legal authorities feel today's rampant judicial activism deprives the American people of the right to be governed by elected representatives. At stake, then, is nothing less than the sanctity of law itself in our constitutional system.

Keep Christmas azalea healthy

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Probably the most expensive of the flowering houseplants that are commonly presented as Christmas gifts is the very beautiful azalea and if you were fortunate enough to have been the recipient of one, you'll want to make every effort to keep it in sound health.

In nature, this plant is a dwarf evergreen flowering shrub and therefore is capable of providing years of enjoyment. Unfortunately, too often these gift plants, after their festive season period of glory, meet an early demise.

When an azalea dies, it is very often the result of being given ordinary tap water which, in many communities, contains such things as fluorine, chlorine, calcium and other alkaline mineral salts, all of which this plant dislikes. The only really safe water to use for an azalea is rainwater, or melted snow or the defrostings from a refrigerator or deep freeze.

Like so many other houseplants, the azalea strongly resents soggy soil so water should only be applied when the peaty soil feels definitely dry to the touch. It should be kept evenly but only just barely moist at all times.

Your azalea enjoys liberal doses of sunshine during the winter months but in summer it will insist upon light or partial shade. Giving it the temperature it likes can be a problem because it prefers about 64 F, cooler than most of us keep our homes. Adequate ventilation and plenty of fresh air are also requirements of this rather fussy plant.

Because azaleas are generally potted in peaty soil that contains little plant food, some feeding is desirable. One formula would be to feed it once a week, with straight ammonium sulphate one week and a regular soluble or liquid houseplant food the next. Use of the ammonium sulphate will maintain the soil in a slightly acid condition, which the azalea insists upon. In feeding, use a half-teaspoon of fertilizer per pint of lukewarm water, giving only enough of the solution to maintain the slightly moist condition.

While your azalea won't tolerate overly moist soil conditions, it does enjoy a humid atmosphere, often difficult to provide in our centrally heated apartments and houses. So, especially at this time of year when the furnace is cranked up, your plant will appreciate regular spray-misting (using soft water, of course) of its leaves, buds and blossoms.

This misting really should be done every day which can be a bit bothersome but some people I know kill two birds with one stone by taking the plant with them into the bathroom when they shower. The steamy atmosphere is something your pet azalea will revel in.

Now, diligent as you are in following this routine for your Christmas gift plant, the azalea will survive the winter and the next question is how to deal with it when summer arrives.

Like many other houseplants, the azalea really enjoys a summer holiday outdoors. It can be sunk in its pot up to the rim in the outdoor garden, a lightly shaded spot being ideal — a touch of morning sun is not harmful.

Maintain yuour regular watering and feeding program throughout the summer and try to remember to freshen the leaves with a fine nozzle spray whenever you pass by with the garden hose. Nip off the soft green branch tips to maintain a pleasing shape and the compact size.

In the fall, bring the plant indoors before a frost. This will be the azalea's semi-dormant period and it should be kept a mite cooler and drier than normal so the plant has a brief resting period to induce prolific bloom.

A temperature range of 40 to 50 F, plenty of light and only just enough water to keep the leaves from falling is best at this time. After four weeks of rest, your azalea can be restored to its normal cool room temperature and its regular feeding and watering program.

Here's the answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Our house has louvers at both ends of the attic. They keep the air circulating in the hot weather and prevent a heat buildup. The attic is not finished and is used only for storage. There is insulation in the attic floor so that heat doesn't escape from the regular living quarters. What I want to know is whether we can keep the louvers closed during the winter. It seems to me they let in a lot of cold air. Am I right?

A. — No. The air that the opened louvers lets in is necessary to prevent condensation forming under the roof. Louvers should be kept open during all seasons of the year.

Q. — Is it true some woods can be glued more easily than others? This question came up recently during a discussion about gluing maple. One person said maple is not easy to attach with adhesive.

A. — Yes, some woods can be glued more easily than others. As for maple, it depends on the kind of maple. What is known as soft maple can be glued fairly well. Hard maple is more difficult to hold together with an adhesive, but even that can be handled successfully if sufficient care is taken.

Q. — I have to do some wall work with concrete block. I would like to make my own mortar mix. What are the correct proportions?

A. — One part of cement to three parts of fine sand is good. Add just enough water to make the mixture workable. While lime is sometimes added, it isn't necessary for ordinary jobs, such as a wall. Lay the corner blocks first, then fill in the rest of the wall. Be sure you use a guiding chalk line for proper alignment.

Q. — I would like to pass along a tip for people who paint their own houses. Many years ago, I just painted the outside at one time. As the years passed and it became more of a chore, I found that it was easier to paint only one side of the house at a time. For instance, I do one side in the spring, one side in the fall, a third side the following spring and the fourth side the following fall. In that way, it never is one great big task and the house never looks bad. After finishing the fourth side at the end of two years, I let it alone for two years and then start the same routine.

Q. — I know that most authorities suggest painting ceilings with a roller, but I have painted them all my life with brushes and I still like to do it that way. However, I still haven't been able to conquer the problem of paint dripping down the brush handle. Is there any way to avoid that?

A. — Some paint dealers carry gadgets that can be attached to your wrist to catch drippings or you can make one of your own. Better yet, minimize the drippings by the way you handle the brush. Dip the bristles into the paint just about an inch. The brush won't handle as much paint at one time, but there will be less dripping. Also, wipe the bristles on the rim of the container more often than you have been doing. Still further, don't thin the paint too much.

(Details about kinds of paints for different surfaces and the techniques of using rollers and brushes are contained in Andy Lang's booklet, "Paint Your House Inside and Out," available by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

AT WIT'S END

She needs a fix

By ERMA BOMBECK

Last week, I began shivering uncontrollably. My mouth became dry, I could not concentrate. My nerves were like a cavity exposed to an ice cube.

Then I realized why. I had gone through an entire day without seeing Brooke Shields. The withdrawal symptoms were predictable.

It brought back memories of an overdose of Farrah Fawcett in 1978, and of 1979, when I picked up a magazine that did not have John Travolta on it and I couldn't stop crying. Every year, the media blitz in on someone and we are saturated with all there is to know about them. In some instances, the depth of the person deserves no longer than 15 minutes, yet week in and week out they create a supply of facts for which there is no demand.

For eight months once I followed closely the dating habits of Princess Caroline of Monaco. I knew what time Caroline got up in the morning, who she was with, what they did and what they were charged with. I should have known so much about my own daughter.

At one time, I kept pace with every move of Jacqueline Onassis. She didn't floss without my knowing about it. Then it was Marie Osmond who dominated my life and last year, the face that made pork a four-letter word: Miss Piggy.

For awhile, I didn't think I could survive Miss Piggy. She had her own TV show, wrote books, guested on talk shows, appeared on the cover of Time and every other major publication while her likeness was reproduced on glasses, pillows, sheets, cocktail napkins, toothbrushes, stationery, posters, T-shirts, ashtrays, banks, bookends, beach towels and bumper stickers. I was a full-grown woman who couldn't face the morning news without coffee from a mug with a pig in a blonde wig, for God's sake.

I know more about Brooke than any person has a right to know. People have entered a marriage knowing a lot less. I thought a long time before we planned a trip to South America for a vacation. What if they had never heard of Brooke Shields? How could I handle ten no-dimple-no-Calvin-Klein days?

Over Rio, my palms began to sweat and itch. I needed a drink of water. I felt lightheaded. Then I saw a man next to me thumbing through a Portuguese newspaper. I saw a small face surrounded by fat hair and said out loud, "Thanks. I needed that."

I could make it through the night now.

Stitching Witchery: Face up to facings

By BETTY KINSER
Copley News Service

Facings — neckline, lapel, sleeve, pocket, hem — no matter where these little stinkers go, they can cause trouble.

Let us walk through the process of putting a facing and see if we can eliminate some of the frustration and boo-boos.

Cutting: There will be pattern pieces, of course, for each facing you need, but don't forget — if you have altered a pattern piece to which the facing is to be stitched, you must also alter the facing or it will not 3it.

Stitching: When attaching facings (especialy at necklines), it is not always a good idea to start at one end and stitch all the way to the other. Funny things can happen on the way. On necklines, for example, stitch from shoulder to center back on each side, then from shoulder to center front on each side. This prevents shifting of the layers and does away with facings that "don't lay right."

Trimming: Trim the seam allowances in graduated widths (called grading) so you do not have a thick ridge. Clip close to the stitching around all curves.

Pressing: Press facing and seam allowances away from garment.

Understitching: Topstitch through facing and seam allowances close to seam. (I don't know why it is called understitching.)

Tacking: Turn facing to underside, making sure a teeny bit of the garment shows to the underside rather than vice-versa. Pin then hand tack facing at shoulder seam, side seam, etc. Do not hand tack facing all the way around! On casual garments you may tack facings by stitching in the ditch along seams.

Remember: If the facing doesn't "lay right" after being pressed that first time, it is not going to "lay right" when it is all finished, so be sure you have clipped properly, stitched properly and pressed properly so your facing has every chance of being a winner.

Antique or junque?

By JAMES G. McCOLLAM

Dear Mr. McCollam: This pitcher is 12 inches high and marked WELLER in ink on the bottom.

The scene on the pitcher is a naked nymph dancing to music played by a satyr; the outline is engraved into the clay. Finally, the name FERRELL is engraved on the opposite side.

I would like to know about Ferrell, the origin of this pitcher, and its value. — K.W., Hollywood, Calif.

Dear K.W.: This art noveau pitcher was made by the Weller pottery in Zanesville, Ohio, around the turn of the century.

The mark is not the usual one and would make me suspicious except for the fact that it is signed by Ferrell. Frank Ferrell was an artist at Weller for several years.

The value would be a least $300 — possibly more due to the erotic nature which was unusual for the period.

Dear Mr. McCollam: I believe this is a Victorian desk.

We have refinished it after having had it for many years.

The top lifts off and there are no markings.

I would like to know about its value and age. — D.J.B., Chula Vista, Calif.

Dear D.J.B.: This desk was made during the Victorian era, about 1880. It is called a fall-front desk and is very popular with collectors.

The value would be in the $800 to $1,000 range.

BOOK REVIEW: "Folk Kilns II," by Kichiemon Okamura, Kodansha International, 10 E. 53rd St., New York, N.Y. 10022, $15.50, plus $1 postage or at your local bookstore.

This fills a long-felt need for books about Japanese pottery as opposed to porcelain. There are many books about Japanese porcelain, but too few about the beautiful ceramic pieces made in family kilns.

Folk pottery from the 16th century to modern times is illustrated in 74 color plates of exceptional quality.

There is a sense of stability about these ceramics that can come only from honest workmanship born out of the environment in which the potter lives.

AP Newsfeatures

When a door begins to stick, it rarely gets immediate attention. That's because the home owner knows that removing it and planing one of the edges is a nuisance.

Planing a door is an especially nasty chore if it is the top or bottom that requires planing, since then you are going against the grain and risking the possibility of splintering the wood. It's a remedy that should only be a last resort. Once some wood has been taken off in the area where the door sticks, a change in the weather may dry out the wood and leave an unwelcome gap.

Balky doors would be given much quicker attention if it were generally known that the most likely cause is one or more of the hinges. Sometimes nothing more than tightening one of the hinge screws will correct the trouble.

To find a screw that is even the least bit loose, move the door back and forth several times, carefully observing whether there is any movement. Be sure to check every screw on every hinge.

If you find a screw that is loose, tighten it and then go through the door-movement routine once again. If the same screw is still loose, take it out.

While replacing it with a longer or larger-diameter screw will sometimes work, it is better to fill the hole with wood putty or plastic wood, steel wool or broken pieces of toothpick. Reset the screw at once if you use steel wool or toothpick bits. If you use a wood filler, wait until it hardens.

While this will correct the condition most of the time, occasionally you will have to reset one or more of the hinges. A hinge must be reset more deeply if the door is sticking on the side where the lock is. If the binding is on the hinge side, then the hinge is already set too deeply into the recess or mortise in the wood. In that event, shim the hinge; that is, place a layer of cardboard under the leaf and set the screw right through the hinge and the cardboard. One way to determine exactly where the repair is necessary is to place a wedge or something similar under the door to get it into the proper position. Examine each hinge carefully, and common sense will tell you where the slack must be taken up.

In an extreme case, the door is warped so badly that none of these measures will work. The door can be straightened out only by removing it and placing it on sawhorses. With the bowed side up, place weights on the door. Leave it that way for as long as necessary to get out the warp, but you will have to inspect it every 12 hours.

Be certain you remove the weights as soon as the door appears straight. Leave them there too long and you may have a warp the opposite way.

When you have a situation where planing the door edges is necessary, do it very carefully. Splintering occurs when you go against the grain, so follow the general principle of planing by cutting on the forward stroke and lifting the plane as you draw it backwards. Plane from the edges toward the center. Be sure the door is well anchored as you do the planing.

Sometimes a door will move easily without binding, yet not stay closed. This means the latch is not setting properly, if at all, in the strike plate. Resetting the strike plate then will be necessary. When a repair of this kind cannot be made immediately, tie a small towel or handkerchief or any piece of cloth around one knob and then around the other. When you shut the door, the cloth will keep it in place.

Chanel created style, not fashion, biographer-friend says

By NINA HYDE
The Washington Post

Like Chanel, the subject of her book, Edmonde Charles-Roux epitomizes French style. She is an aristocratically handsome woman of 61, wearing a navy jersey dress by Chanel, strands of pearls, pearl button earrings. A brown Gucci bag rests by the foot of her chair. She appears to be wearing only lipstick as makeup; her hair is pulled back neatly in a bun.

Charles-Roux has spent her life at centers of glamor and power: daughter of a French diplomat who grew up in Prague and Rome; twice-wounded nurse while serving in the French Resistance; journalist extraordinaire, involved in the early days of the magazine Elle and longtime editor-in-chief of French Vogue; award-winning novelist; wife of the French minister of the interior, the No. 3-ranking official in the new Socialist government.

But of all her accomplishments, she is best known as the friend and official biographer of Chanel, the woman who brought fashion into the 20th century by paring clothing to a pure, modern form that has enabled the Chanel empire to flourish to this day. Chanel — who modified the elaborate hat of the day, designed dresses so simple they made the corset obsolete, led women to bobbed hair, introduced fake jewelry and the little black dress at a time when black was the color only of mourning, started women wearing jersey and simple knit suits, conceived the woman's bathing suit and invented a renowned fragrance, No. 5, her lucky number.

"She didn't create fashion, she created style," says Charles-Roux, who dined with Chanel, attended films with her, and, ultimately, learned the lies Chanel confected about herself, lived and took to her grave.

"She never told the truth — never," says Charles-Roux. "She was living, hoping that the right man would ask her the right question — will you marry me? But her background absolutely prevented the right man from asking the question. She was the daughter of a peddler and a poor woman, born in a hospital at a time when a decent girl even of modest origins would have a child at home. Everything in her past was upsetting to Gabrielle Chanel."

Gabrielle Chanel, who died in 1971 at the age of 87, unmarried and alone, had woven such a legend about her life that, according to Charles-Roux, she had come to believe the Cinderella myth: that she had left her native province, Auvergne, in a simple cotton apron and wooden shoes, that her father had been a horse breeder, that she had been raised by lovely old aunts and had eloped with a handsome officer. "She got obsessed by that creation that was her legend and couldn't face the truth, even when there was no more hope of marriage," says Charles-Roux.

Charles-Roux discovered that Chanel had been born a peasant, illegitimate, and left in a convent orphanage. At 18, she worked as an assistant shopkeeper in Moulins. After a false start as a singer in a concert hall, where she got her nickname Coco, she moved to a chateau near Paris as the mistress of a gentleman horse breeder and discovered her own talent through the admiration others had for the clothes and hats she made for herself. With the financial help of yet another wealthy lover, she opened shops selling hats and some clothes in 1913 in Deauville and, when the war neared, in Biarritz. By the mid-1920s, when she was approaching 30, she was, as Charles-Roux has called her, "the empress of creation in France," head of a prestige house in Paris with international clients.

When Charles-Roux published her Chanel biography in 1975, many French were angry. She is still sensitive to criticism she received in Le Figaro. "I know how much a certain press prefers legends to the truth," she says. She has responded with still more insight into Chanel, a massive and remarkable photo-documentation, "Chanel and Her World," published first in France two years ago and available now in English and Japanese at a time when the Chanel style is particularly flourishing.

Both the Chanel fashion and perfume businesses continue to grow; the accessories are being exquisitely renewed. There is even a new Chanel film, "Chanel Solitaire." Thousands of women in Japan turned out to hear Charles-Roux discuss Chanel on a recent tour. Early this year, the Chanel boutique on the rue Cambon was bombed by liberationists — they wanted to strike at the heart of French prestige.

"Fashion is not what one thinks it is," said Charles-Roux, during a brief stay at the French Embassy. "It is not frivolity, but one of the signs of change, of the time, of the way of living. And, with Chanel, of the possibilities of women."

Nor is she surprised that women today, Nancy Reagan among them, have adopted the Chanel style as a daily uniform. "Extravagant fashion in times of recession and economic difficulty all around the world is just not the thing to do, no matter how beautiful it is," she says. "Women now have an active life and the Chanel clothes were created for an active life. Chanel became what she was in 1919 when women were (first) free to walk alone in the streets, to have jobs ... the first steps in an active life."

Today's woman, she says, can find comfort in a time of change with things that are familiar. "I want to look simple and I know how I look in a Chanel suit. I don't know exactly how I will look in something else," says Charles-Roux. And when there is much that is disturbing in the world "these clothes are not disturbing anybody. Are we (not) in a mood when nobody wants to be disturbed because there are so many disturbing things?"

Fashion, like politics, survives when it reflects the needs of the people. "When power loses the music of the streets it is the downfall. Especially in a country like France, where everything comes from the streets. Fashion comes from the street. The best songs come from the street — not the Rolling Stones system, but Piaf, Mistinguett, Chevalier. If you don't listen to that you are done for.

"Chanel understood that things would never go backwards. Even (after) winning a war one would never go back to the pompous, frivolous life of before. The whole changes of chanel have been inspired by the reality of life and of politics."

Charles-Roux was the sixth person Chanel asked to write her official biography. The others gave up in frustration. "Could I ask where you were born?" Charles-Roux asked Chanel. Chanel answered with the name of a town that never existed. "I realized she was working against the writer, hoping it would never be learned, for example, that she was born in Saumur. It would be like a stocking when you catch the first stitch."

In 1969 Charles-Roux discovered the address and went to see a first cousin of Chanel's who was a train-crossing guard. "I knocked on the door and his wife said that he will never see me. I said I would like to know how he spent his holidays with her, what games they played, nothing more." But he refused.

The next day Chanel received a letter from the cousin. "She had never seen this man for 50 years, and still he was of that strong French peasant family that (believes) whatever happens we stick together," says Charles-Roux. The letter told Chanel of the Charles-Roux visit and enclosed the letter he had received requesting the interview.

"Canel exploded in public. She called me awful French words. I thought, it is her right. From 1969 to her death (in 1971), we were brouillee (estranged). But I was free. I could go on with my research without betraying her."

The new book chronicles the developing style of Chanel and how it sprang from the life of the time. It includes her birth certificate and the program from her debut in a concert hall in 1905 and the music and words to the song "Qui Qu'A Vu Coco," from which she got the name Coco. One photograph, taken by Richard Avedon, then 16, shows Chanel posed, unbeknownst to her, under a poster reading "Pourquoi Hitler." Chanel spent 13 years in self-exile following a liaison with a German officer during World War II. But then, provoked by Dior's success, she returned to Paris and reopened her shop in 1954 at the age of 71. Shortly after, says Charles-Roux, "the street became entirely dressed in Chanel copies."

The book also includes a photo of a nude young woman collaborator being led through the streets by jeering Frenchmen after the liberation in 1944 — treatment Chanel barely escaped, says Charles-Roux, who suggests that Chanel was spared through the intervention of her former lover, the duke of Westminster, with the help of his friend Winston Churchill.

Charles-Roux's career as a journalist and author began at France Soir and Elle, and took off after Christian Dior encouraged her to go to French Vogue. She wrote about theater at first. But soon after she started the editor, Michel de Brunhoff, to whom she has dedicated her latest Chanel book, felt he couldn't go on after his 16-year-old son had been shot by the Nazis. "He sat me next to him for two years, listening, choosing photos, going into the fabrication of the magazine and one day he said, 'Well, I am going. Try and do the job.'"

She did it for 16 years, but says she had a falling-out with the ownership over the declining space devoted to culture. And she was told the magazine was not frivolous enough. "Why should the rich woman be frivolous? They said (the readers) are rich so they don't read. No, I don't think so. I think they read because they are rich. She has more time to read a book. Why should a woman who is well off be considered like a doll, just occupied in dressing? I think it is wrong. For France it is certainly wrong."

She left the magazine at age 45 — "It was embarrassing." But in her spare time she had written a book, a biography of Don Juan of Austria, and two months later she had a contract. Her novel "Forget Palermo," translated into 17 languages, won the prestigious Prix Goncourt. Her latest success, "A Sicilian Childhood," was inspired by the memoirs of the duke of Verdura, Sicilian grandee and 20th-century jewelry designer.

But the stories of Chanel continue to fascinate Charles-Roux, and the audiences she attracts. As she noted in a recent speech at the Maison Francaise at Columbia University, "When women's hats were covered with jewels and bows and even birds in nests, yes, really, she made light hats. And when asked why, Chanel answered, 'How could women think with such a thing on their heads?' " Hats were important, Charles-Roux reminded the audience, because they were a sign that one was not a member of the working class.

Chanel cut her hair short, Charles-Roux remembers her saying, "because it is a crashing bore to stay more than an hour to coif one's hair." When Chanel showed up at a Diaghelev ballet with her hair short, other women followed.

"Chanel thought false jewelry could be truer than true jewelry and felt ashamed when she saw women in the street with rich diamonds. It obliged her to think about people who cannot pay, and so she would invent something quite as beautiful that anyone could buy," says Charles-Roux.

Chanel decided that it was normal for several people to have the same dress. She reasoned, "Why shouldn't the dress be like the body of a car? I think women have many other ways of changing a dress by invention and imagination and making their own creation by adding things. Wearing it in an intelligent way will make the dress different." The American press dubbed her simple black dress "the little Ford."

Now Charles-Roux is occupied with the new Socialist government. She works at the ministry of the interior five days a week and two days in Marseille, where her husband, Gaston Defferre, is still mayor.

She answers letters, "25 to 30 letters a day of sheer misery. 'My husband is in prison and I can't pay the rent and the children are left alone' ... 'My boy of 15 has been opening a car, I don't think he is a real burglar' ... "

Danielle Mitterrand, wife of the president, spends 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day "answering every single letter of that sort," Charles-Roux says. Charles-Roux has told Madame Mitterrand that the couturiers would like to make clothes for her as they have for the wives of other presidents, but her choice — a sign of the times, perhaps — is to shop quickly at Louis Feraud and Torrente, two shops near the Elysee Palace.

Charles-Roux would like to redecorate the ministry but, she says, the word is out that no redecorating should be done. Unlike at the White House, the rule is, "If it is clean you keep it the way it is," she says a bit unhappily. "The ministry is delicious but it is certainly not decorated."

Such a time as this, of cutting back, is in keeping with French style, she says. "Young girls I know are not upset about wearing the same thing a long time." She quotes Chanel: "One of my suits is at its best after four years of wearing it — like a good wine." And adds, "I think she is right."

Q. Our family is now just about grown and out of the nest most of the time.

I want to refurnish our living room to accommodate more intimate entertaining that my husband and I enjoy with friends. Our living room is rather large so we need to create a warm and relaxing conversation area.

Please give me some ideas for refurnishing. What should I buy or at least consider for easy entertaining and care, yet a somewhat elegant look? — R.B.

A. The most commfortable kind of conversation area is usually created in a U shape with the open end of the U providing the access. This open end can be used, too, for small, rather mobile seating su'h as ottoman or light chairs on casters.

Anchor your conversation area with a handsome and comfortable sofa of medium length. Perpendicular to this you might have a pair of open armed chairs. Across from the pair you might place a very loungey chair, bulky in shape to balance the arrangement.

Tie all the seating together with a large, attractive coffee table that can be reached by those in the conversation area. Provide, if possible, end tables for the seating with table height just slightly lower than the arm height of the seating.

Select end and coffee tables carefully with an eye to entertaining. Glass or tile tops take the worry out of serving drinks and food.

Give attention to lighting in this area because that can enhance any environment. Table lamps which furnish adequate down light can be supplemented with a floor lamp or two.

Accessorize with your favorite treasures and you should have an inviting spot.

American Style: The adventures of an orchid man

By MICHAEL BEZDEK
Associated Press Writer

WARREN GROVE, N.J. (AP) — Bill Smith got a midnight call several months ago from Chicago. The caller said someone there had heard of Smith, and that he might want to deal.

The caller said he had "scored" through an "African connection" and could let Smith have some of the goods on an upcoming trip to the Jersey Shore. The price sounded good to Smith, and the deal went down.

Such is the drama of dealing in the often secret and exotic world of the orchid. The intrigue is especially appropriate for A. William Smith, who discovered his profession in a storybook fashion.

A child genius swayed by the beat generation, Smith made his first major career decision by turning down a scholarship to an Ivy League college because he thought it would be too restrictive.

He attended Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania, and graduated from Glassboro State College before he moved into a log cabin deep in the Pinelands of New Jersey nearly 20 years ago.

He tried his hand at artwork and other crafts and started growing vegetables for his family. Then he met an old man near the woods who told him about flowers — and left him spellbound with an essay on orchids.

Smith, 41, built a greenhouse that was expanded into two much larger greenhouses on the border of the Pinelands core region, the most remote and protected region of the vast forest of sandy turf, pines and streams.

Bill Smith had "found himself." And now orchid lovers from as far away as Hawaii and Japan know his name. Still, he said he feels a long way from the suburbs of Philadelphia, where he grew up.

"I meet some old friends now and then and, knowing that I was a little weird, they want to know what happened. I tell them I'm an orchid grower, and it doesn't seem to compute with most of them," said Smith, owner of Rainforest Orchids, "Where Nero Wolfe Shops," a reference to Rex Stout's fictional detective known for his passion for orchids.

Bill Smith said his old friends might be able to understand him better if they could see him standing in the middle of history — that is, in his self-designed solar greenhouse.

"This one is called 'Alcides.' It's part of the plant that was brought back here from England in the 1800s by the Roeblings (of Roebling Steel Corp. in Trenton)," he said, indicating one of his precious plants.

With a slight shift in direction he can point to "The Battle of Egypt Alpha," one of his first-class prize winners in a national contest; to hard-to-get African varieties; to a large plant started in the 1930s which he recently rented to a nationally known designer for a special display.

He said orchid collecting came into vogue in the mid-1800s in England and that New Jersey, with huge greenhouses in Middlesex and Bergen counties feeding a New York demand, became the orchid-growing capital of the United States.

But interest and many plants themselves were lost through two world wars and Smith is part of an orchid renaissance.

"People are going out again to places like the jungles of Borneo and the Phillipines to find the plants that were lost. We know they are there because all the varieties of orchids have been catalogued in England. It's the only kind of plant in the world that has that kind of record-keeping," he said.

Orchids are seeded in a laboratory and take from four to seven years to flower. The time spent on them is what makes them costly, often several hundred dollars for a medium-sized plant.

Morris — the cat executive

By MARGE COCKER
Hearst Feature Service

Morris the Cat, an executive with 9-Lives Cat Food Co., and a spokescat for the nation's felines, is now promoting a new line of cat food and reminding humans that people need cats more than cats need people.

Known as the most finicky of cats, Morris achieved national stardom by adopting an expression of pained tolerance towards human behavior in television commercials.

Morris may seem good-natured, but the big, orange cat's arrogant eyes send an unmistakable message: Dogs do tricks, cats do not.

Says trainer and housemate, Bob Martwick: "I do train animals but nobody trains a cat."

Morris was discovered in a New England animal shelter two years after the original Morris died in July 1978 at the age of 17. Obituaries ran in newspapers across the country, mourning the loss of the lovable, aloof feline.

The original Morris, also discovered in an animal shelter, was an alley cat who never forgot his roots, says Martwick. With the help of other executives at 9-Lives, the cat co-authored "The Morris Approach," a guide to cat care from a cat's point of view; established the Morris Award, a trophy awarded not to pampered purebreds but to mixed-breed cats at 350 cat shows each year; and lent his support to the Adopt-a-Cat-Month promotion, in which 750 animal shelters across the country participate each June and which results in the adoption of 70,000 kittens a year.

It was decided that the new Morris would also come from humble beginnings, says Martwick. "We not only wanted a look-alike, we had to find a cat with the Morris personality," he says. "It took five years.

This cat has been perfect. We made a test commercial a year and a half ago and we knew the minute we put him in front of the camera we had a winner."

And, Martwick adds, Morris is always "on." "He is cool and calm before the cameras and he loves the attention he gets when crowds of fans press in on him at personal appearances."

Martwick says fans have sent Morris all kinds of fancy baskets and embroidered pillows, which he tends to ignore.

At home, on Martwick's Chicago estate, Morris has the run of the house, eats once a day, and sleeps "anywhere he wants."

When traveling with Martwick, Morris rides in a traveling case which fits under the trainer's first-class seat. He never, never goes in the baggage compartment.

Weary from attending supermarket promotions and cocktail parties staged for cat-food buyers, Morris sometimes does through interviews. However, he always has a few words of advice for cats who may have missed his latest book:

"When you haven't been fed lately and your human is walking in the direction of the kitchen, weave in and out around his legs until noticed. Do not trip him, but do not give up.

"If your human is sleeping comfortably and you aren't, curl around his pillow until he has trouble breathing. When he wakes furr.

"If a human gets a puppy, offer to make him feel at home. Show him what part of the house is his (the basement) and what part is yours (everything else).

"If a human approaches you as if to shake hands, turn away. He wants a dog.

"When your human comes home from the market, watch what he puts away on the cat food shelf. If you're pleased, sneak into the empty paper bag. This will amuse him. If you are not pleased, flick your tail and leave the room.

DEAR ABBY

Nurse finds prayer power stronger than pill power

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I started taking diet pills two years ago. They killed my hunger and made me feel great. Too great — that was the trouble. By nighttime I was overstimulated and couldn't sleep, so I started taking sleeping pills. Then more diet pills the next day. I soon found myself so hooked I couldn't stop. (As a registered nurse, I should have known better.)

Finally my nerves were shot from all the highs and lows, and I knew something had to be done. Even though I'm not a religious person, I did something I hadn't done in years. I prayed. And by God (literally) I somehow found the strength to take all those pills and flush them down the toilet!

I'd be lying if I said the next few weeks were easy. I've never had two more difficult weeks in all my life. More than once I was tempted to get more pills, but I prayed for the strength to keep me from it, and miraculously the strength came to me!

It's been five months since I've taken a pill, and I feel like a new person. I'm "high" on being free from artificial stimulation, which always ends in depression.

I know all of this is too long for your column, Abby, but I hope you'll find space to print part of it. I'm sure there are others out there who are hooked as much as I was, and if I could kick the habit with prayer, so can they. Sign me ... FREE IN TUCSON

DEAR FREE: Your inspiring message is well worth the space in this column. Thanks for confirming that the power of prayer can move mountains.

DEAR ABBY: Your flippant answer to "For Natural Family Planning" reflects the pill-pushing, mechanical-solution mentality of Planned Parenthood. It also puts down women by implying that the majority of us are not intelligent enough to read clear signals from our own bodies.

Certainly some abstinence and self-control are necessary for natural family planning to succeed, but implying that this is such a great hardship reduces humans to little more than animals in heat. Besides, Abby, a little "abstinence makes the heart grow fonder." — ALSO FOR NATURAL FAMILY PLANNING

DEAR ALSO: The Planned Parenthood people wrote me to ask that I recommend natural family planning as a safe, effective alternative to other methods of birth control.

DEAR ABBY: Your evaluation of teachers who get crushes on their students ("They are immature — the same as students who get crushes on their teachers.") was NOT shallow despite the few objections you received!

It is dangerous and unethical for teachers to become romantically involved with their students, who are usually naive children in a very confused period of their lives. The fact that occasionally these involvements produce long-lived relationships does not excuse the lack of ethics inherent in such conduct. Don't back down, Abby. You were right the first time. — TOM SMITH (MY REAL NAME)

DEAR TOM: Thanks. I needed that.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250.)

Try these helpful hints when painting houses

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. We're planning to repaint the interior of our house, but must admit we are amateurs at this work.

Your column seems to provide so many helpful hints, I wonder if you could supply us wiTh some good tips before we start the project. — Mark C.B.

A. Before beginning a new project, assemble all the items you will need to complete the paint job.

This handy checklist may help you: appropriate applicators such as brushes, rollers and pads; drop cloths (old sheets are fine); all the paint you will need to do the entire job, and yoq can get this information from your paint dealer after measuring the area you wish to paint; Stetladder; screwdriver to remove wall hooks, doorknobs and switchplates; masking tape to cover window panes and other areas that you don't want painted; protective cream to rub on your hands to make paint removal easier; turpentine or paint thinner, when using oil-based paint.

Also, when painting a ceiling, work across the width rather than the length, and paint about two-foot-wide strips. This will prevent one lap drying before you paint the next lap.

Q. You have had articles about treating slate floors recently. I would like to tell you of a treatment that a builder in Michigan ad%isdd me about when I had an 18-foot slate hall running through the center of my house. It did get a great deal of traffic.

For cleaning and treatment of slate, the builder suggested that I use one-half turpentine and one-half boiled 6inseed oil. Heat this over boiling water and then apply the solution to the slate floor and let it remain for an hour. Wipe off the surplus. Apply three coats of this preparation.

I did this. It is not an easy process, but for the five years I lived in the house with four small children, I did not have to do anything else to the floor and received many compliments about the beauty of the floor. It was a warm soft color. — Dorothea A.G.

A. Thank you very much for the information. We appreciate tips contributed by readers.

Q. I used a toilet bowl brush that had fiber bristles entwined in a twisted wire loop, and now the toilet bowl is scratched. Even a scouring cleanser failed to remove it.

How do I remove the marks and what can be put into the bowl to prevent discoloration? — R.C.M., Chula Vista, Calif.

A. First remove all the water from the toilet bowl, then apply a strong solution of oxalic acid with a dish mop, followed by rinsing with clear water after waiting about 10 minutes.

Prepare a poultice of scratchless scouring powder and peroxide, adding a small quantity of cream of tartar. Then rub the paste on the stained area and allow to remain about one-half hour. Rub again, then rinse with clear water.

If the surface finish of the bowl is deeply scratched, nothing short of replacing the bowl would be a satisfactory answer.

A bowl cleaner that can be installed in the water tank may help with the stain problem, but not the damaged porcelain surface.

Q. I have no question but thought I would pass along a tip for your readers.

In putting up ceiling tile zecently, I found I could avoid getting dirt on the tiles by dusting my hands with talcum powder every 15 minutes or so. — A.G.

A. Simple, but ingenious. Thanks a lot.

Marbles mean a lot to him

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

PARKERSBURG, W.Va. (AP) — John Masters thinks the days when Tom Sawyer and millions of real American children carried a prized marble or two in their pockets are over.

A trim, elderly man with silvering hair and a trim goatee, Masters is manager of one of the nation's last marble factories. Ask him about marbles and he'll happily talk away the afternoon, telling you about making cat eyes, all reds and aqua jewels.

"Marbles mean a lot to me," he says. "They're as random as snowflakes."

At the Vitro Agate plant near the Ohio River, Masters and a small group of workers turn out millions of marbles that are shipped to toy stores and children around the world.

But the game that once was played by George Washington and Abraham Lincoln and generations of American children since has been all but forgotten in recent years, Masters says.

"Marbles are mainly an outdoor game. You find a flat spot in the dirt or grass and make your circle," he says. The marbles are put in the center and the players try to knock them out with their shooters.

"The art of shooting marbles is virtually lost," he says.

Once there were dozens of factories in the United States turning out marbles, Masters says. Now there are just four factories left that make nothing but marbles, all of them in West Virginia, he says.

"Mothers seem to object now to children getting down on their hands and knees in the dirt to shoot marbles," Masters says with a sigh.

In the factory beyond Masters' office, workers stir vats of white hot, molten glass in furnaces. The marble machines turn flaming drops of liquid glass into a revolving pair of steel cylinders.

The cylinders look like giant, interlocking corkscrews. The drops of glass are caught in the teeth of the revolving cylinders, to be sent rushing along the turning vanes.

As workmen watch, the shapeless droplets are shaped and smoothed into perfect globes that come rolling off the machines and clunking into bins filled with thousands of gleaming marbles.

But marbles don't have much attraction to children surrounded by electronic games, television, train sets, stereos and a hundred other toys and amusements.

"I wish more kids played marbles ..." Masters says. "They don't play like they used to. There are just so many things available to kids today."

Even the cheapness and simplicity of marbles seem to work against them, Masters says. "There aren't many toys you can buy for under a dollar. But most stores don't even sell them anymore. The markup is too low."

Although Vitro Agate makes about 400 million marbles a year, the small factory is capable of producing many more, Masters says.

"Each of these machines put out about 300,000 marbles a day," says Masters, proudly patting one of the chugging engines. "We never turn them off."

Stray marbles are scattered around the plant and Masters and his staff say there is a special art to walking around a marble factory.

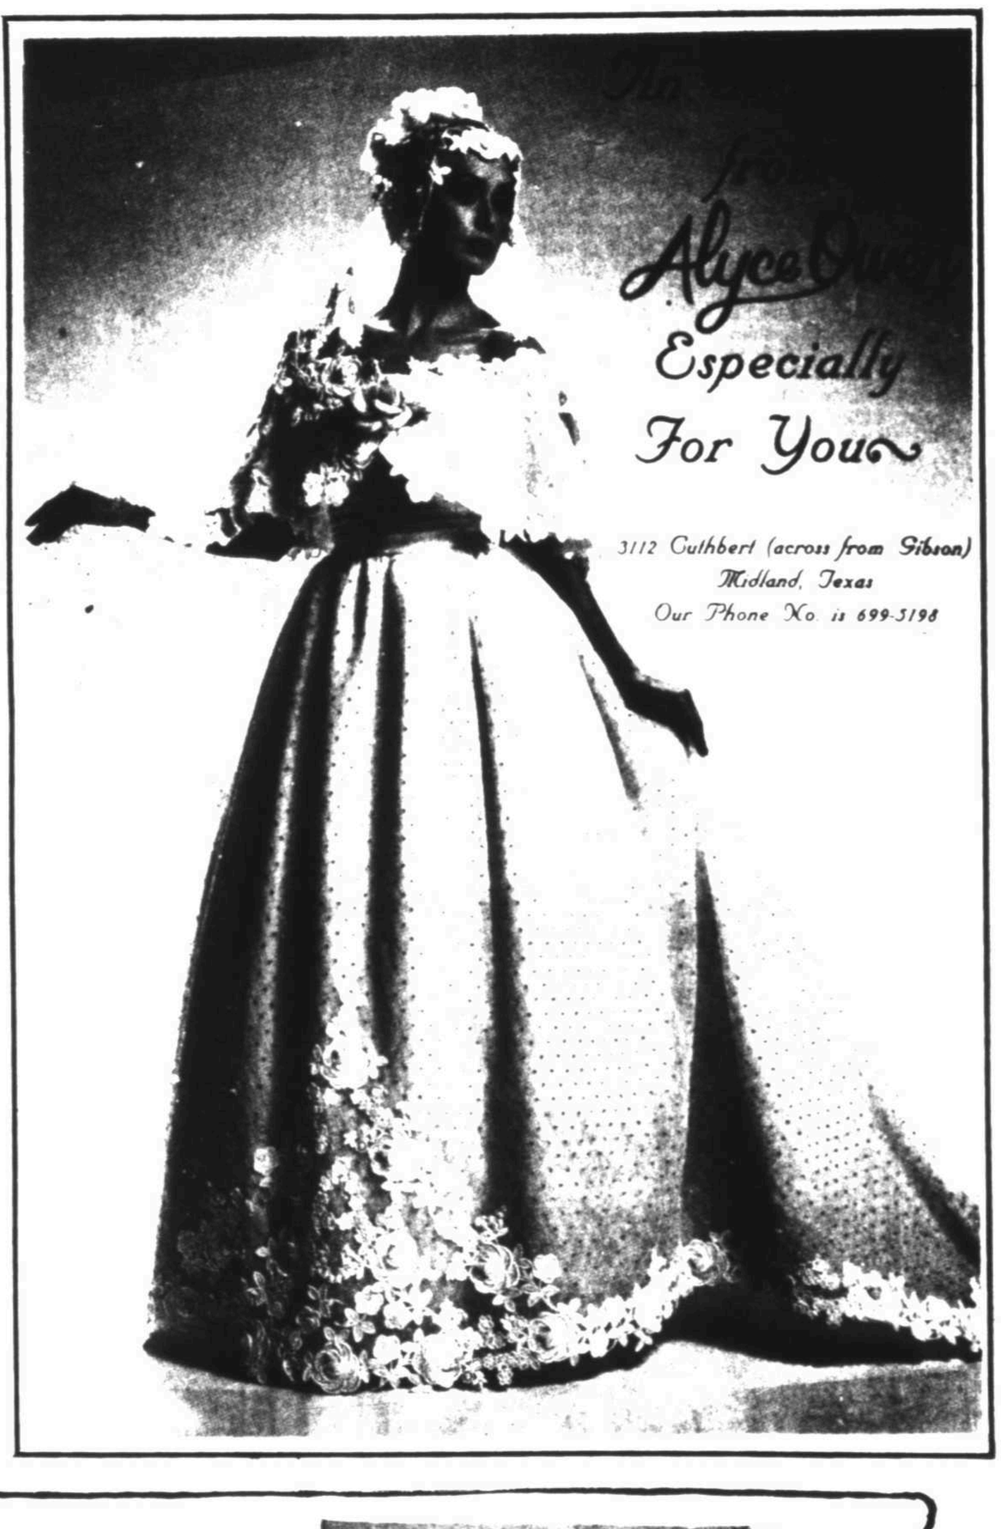

"You learn instinctively to feel with your feet before you bring your weight down," Masters says.

"Unfortunately, mothers and fathers have a very sharp aversion to walking on a rug in bare feet and coming across a marble," he adds.

"I never have less than 30 million marbles in stock," says Masters as he gestures at rows and rows of stacked boxes in his warehouse. "I got 12 million ready to go out here. Interested?"

Super Handyman: Get more efficiency from water tank

By AL CARRELL

In most homes the water heater is about the sturdiest appliance around. A good unit will carry a very hefty warranty of up to 10 years on the tank. A whole lot of water heaters have outlived that guarantee period by many years. Proper care and maintenance as well as proper use can make your unit live to its fullest, and also to operate at peak efficiency. Since the water heater is the second largest energy user in most homes, efficiency is almost as big a consideration as long life.

In most cases about all the maintenace needed is to periodically drain water from the tank to remove sediment and mineral deposits. These deposits can cut efficiency, do damage, and cause weird noises. When we talk about draining the tank, we're not talking about draining anywhere near all the water out. We want to drain water until it starts to run clear. When there's no more sediment, stop draining. Here's the procedure.

Attach a garden hose to the drain valve located near the bottom of the tank. Let the water drain into a sink. Turn the drain valve to open. It's best to do the draining early in the morning or some time when the water heater hasn't been in use. That way, the sediment will have settled. It's a good idea to have some sort of hot pad or glove for your hand because if very much hot water has gone through the hose and the drain valve, they'll be too hot to handle. If you haven't drained the tank before, and if the unit is an old one, you may have difficulty in turning the valve, and if so, do damage to it. It would probably be better to have sediment in the tank than to have a tank with the drain valve ripped out. A new valve may be in order.

It's also a good idea to invest in a small device called a hose cap. This can be screwed onto the drain valve if it drips after the draining.

Afer the first draining, you should establish a regular schedule for this. How often depends on how bad the chemicals are in the water. In some locales, it has to be done every month, and in others maybe only every six months.

There are some things you should do to conserve energy. First of all, keep the temperature control at a reasonable setting. Some don't have degrees indicated, just something like "Medium," "Hot" and "Warm." In such a case, you might wish to take the temperature at the tap nearest to the heater. If you have a dishwasher, check the owner's manual for the desired setting. If you don't have a dishwasher, you can get by with the setting down to around 120 degrees F. or maybe even lower.

Another thing to do is make sure all hot water faucets are drip-free. A drip per second wastes about 650 gallons of water per year. Not only is the water going down the drain, so is the energy used to heat that water.

The pipes that carry water to the fixture should be wrapped to retain as much of the heat as possible. Wraps are inexpensive and easily applied, so you should wrap all the pipes you can get to. It's really a waste of energy if the pipes are unwrapped and go through a non-heated area such as a basement or crawl space.

A water heater insulation jacket is also a good investment in most cases. Even if the tank feels cool to the touch, it could be warmer than the air around it and be wasting energy. Check the surface temperature of the tank and compare it to the air around it.

There are ways to save as you employ such big water users as the dishwasher or clothes washer. Don't run either of these machines until you have a full load. Use the shortest cycle that will get the job done. With the clothes washer, many fabrics can be washed in cold or warm water, so use the coldest water that will do the cleaning. If you have heavily soiled clothes, use a prewash or soak to cut down on the required washing time.

Of course, you know that a quick shower uses less water than a bath, and you know not to leave the hot water running during the entire time you're shaving. There are also water saver devices that can be added to showers and faucets to cut the flow without your being able to notice.

Since the water heater is such a big user, it means you have a bigger opportunity to save energy, and that means big dollars in your pocket.

Designer transforms tree burl into art

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Talk about a bump on a log and you'll have Rob Roy Kelly's attention. He hunts them in the woods of Minnesota, in Pittsburgh parks, in his neighbor's back yard.

The associate professor of design at Carnegie-Mellon University hunts bumps, technically called burls, "because they're beautiful, they're interesting, they're good therapy to work on while I'm watching football."

A kind of knot or bump found on tree trunks, limbs and even roots, "burls," Kelly explains, "are caused by a virus that will eventually kill the tree. They're contagious, too. If you find one, you'll find another within 150 feet.

"Usually," Kelly says, "I take the tree down, remove the bark and let the burl cure for six months to a year. My best tools are an oyster knife and a nut pick."

After removing the bark and curing the burl, Kelly cleans it, sands it by hand, rubs it with a soft cloth similar to one used by a jeweler, and finishes the job by applying a mineral oil with wax suspended in it.

In his garage in the Squirrel Hill section of Pittsburgh, Kelly shows off a Minnesota spruce with burls bulging out all over the trunk.

"I went looking for burls up near Grand Marais, Minn.," he said, "I couldn't understand why I couldn't find any. Then I drove down a street in town and people were using them for mailboxes or they planted them in the front yard and grew petunias around them, or hung bird houses on them, put a plastic windmill on top. They had cut down all the trees with burls in the neighborhood."

To Kelly, the misshapen lumps with their convoluted patterns have become objects of art. The artist in him has taken to shaping the ends of the burls but not really interfering with the design that nature itself has stamped on the burl.

He doesn't sell them — just keeps them around his apartment, and even has names for his favorites. There's "Big Otis," a cranium-shaped one dubbed "Socrates," a black walnut named "Ringo" and a hunchbacked "Quasimodo."

Kelly's biggest bag so far is a 300-pound-plus rock maple burl that's as large as a small coffee table.

"It was 25 feet off the ground," says Kelly. When he brought it down, he couldn't even move it. "It took six teen-agers and me to load it onto a pickup truck," he says.

Kelly's apartment is lined with burls from different parts of the country — a pepper tree from Kansas, a willow from West Virginia, a maple from Michigan, a sassafras from Minnesota.

Kelly admits burl-collecting is rather a strange hobby that has occupied his spare time for the past five years. When he gets involved, he gets involved.

"A while back I started collecting large letter wood type used for Wild West posters," Kelly said, "and ended up with two and a half tons of type."

He spent 13 years at that avocation and wrote the definitive work on the subject, "American Wood Type: 1828-1900: Notes on the Evolution of Decorated and Large Types." Kelly is currently cataloging the Morgan Collection of wood and other type paraphernalia for the Smithsonian Institution.

Kelly's forays into the woods are not completely out of his bailiwick. At Carnegie-Mellon, he also works as staff designer for the internationally recognized Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation.

Through the institute, he's discovered that "little is known about these burls. They have certain growth structures which are repeated in different kinds of trees. Maybe each virus has a particular growth pattern," he suggests.

In the past, Kelly observes, "craftsmen have used burls for bowls, lamps, pipes, even for furniture decoration." But he's happy using them just for themselves — as pieces of nature that he polishes, carves into art and enjoys.

Ultrarefined powder helps cheesemakers

Cheesemakers can increase their efficiency and expand production by using ultrafiltered milk powder instead of fresh milk, researchers at Laval University in Quebec City contend.

Ultrafiltration involves passing milk through a very fine membrane. Large amounts of water are removed, leaving only the useful milk solids and thus reducing the volume of milk to be stored and processed when making cheese. In a cheddar-making study the milk volume was halved by ultrafiltration, making it possible to produce twice as much cheese in the same vat.

Build your own teepee for tots

Forget housing costs and interest rates — any child CAN own his own home. More or less. Maybe you can't buy him his own mansion, but you can probably make him his own teepee.

A teepee for tots is a tidy alternative to letting the children "play house" by draping your furniture with blankets and bedspreads. And a teepee folds up into a broom-size bundle.

The instructions for this tot-size teepee are from a home-making book prepared by the Relief Society, the women's organization of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The teepee requires three yards of 45-inch-wide heavy woven fabric, plain or printed, and five five-feet-long wood poles. The poles can be narrow dowels or of "parting stop" (ask for them at a hardware store). Smooth the edges of the poles with sandpaper.

Open the fabric and press out the center crease. Lay the fabric flat and fold it in half lengthwise, right sides together, selvages matching. Starting in a corner point, mark a wide circular cutting line by using a string tied to a piece of chalk. Cut two front flaps from the remaining fabric. (See Figure 1). Mark a circle six inches from the corner point on the main cirle of the teepee and on the flap pieces. Cut out the six-inch circle to allow space for the poles to fit through the top of the teepee.

Sew the front flaps on each side of the tent fronts. Hem or use bias tape on all edges.

To create casings for the teepee poles, fold the circle in half to form a fold the length of the teepee, from top to bottom. Mark that fold, and fold the fabric again for two additional casings. Also fold the fabric to make casings by the flaps.

Drill a hole in each pole 10-1/2-inches from the top end. Push a shoelace or leather lace through each hole, arrange the poles in teepee formation and tie securely. Fit the teepee fabric around the poles and pin the casings snugly. Remove the poles and sew the casings. Also sew the teepee front flaps together partway, leaving an entrance.

The front flaps can be held closed with ties.

Household items aid in car care

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A special emergency car care kit made from common household items can be used temporarily until proper repairs are made, according to a manufacturer of automotive parts.

"Used correctly, they can provide emergency solutions to roadside breakdowns," says Dave Bowman, technical services manager for Fram Corp. "While you would not be able to drive long distances with these tools, they will be enough to get you off the road and to the nearest service station. Just remember that these are temporary solutions," he adds.

Bowman suggests keeping these items in the trunk to help get your car from the road to the garage or out of a "sticky" situation:

—Scarf or handkerchief. If a leaky or broken hose causes your cooling system to overheat, a scarf or handkerchief can remedy the problem long enough to get you to a station. Wrap the cloth tightly around the hose where it is cut or leaking. Then secure it with a belt. This will slow the leak down.

—Coat hanger. If your tail pipe or any part of your exhaust system drops, a coat hanger can help. Unravel the hanger and wrap one end around the tail pipe. Fasten the other end to the underside of your rear bumper. This will prevent the muffler from falling off and avoid leaving a shower of sparks as your exhaust system drags.

—Pantyhose. A broken fan belt can be temporarily replaced with a pair of pantyhose. Wrap them tightly around the pulleys where the fan was located and tie them in a knot. This will keep the engine going until you get to a garage.

—Shower curtain. If your car breaks down and you have to get under the vehicle to work, use a shower curtain as a ground cloth to spread under your car so you won't get dirty.

—Litter box filler. This is helpful when you are stuck on snow or ice. Spread the litter under the spinning tire for additional traction. Also, the extra weight of a sack of litter box filler in your trunk can prevent the rear end of your car from skidding on slippery surfaces.

—Newspapers or burlap sacks. When you are stuck in sand or mud, slide newspapers or a burlap sack under the stuck tire for traction.

—Funnel. Keep a funnel in your trunk in case you need to add fluids to the engine.

— Rags. When your defroster isn't working, use the rags to wipe the inside of your windshield clean.

"Also, some standard items that should always be in an emergency car care kit," adds Bowman, "are a screwdriver, pliers, a fire extinguisher; an address book containing emergency phone numbers; old gloves to protect your hands while working under the hood; a white handkerchief to use as a distress signal, small change for emergency calls and a pencil and paper for taking down important information."

Women urged to consider career in sales

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Women at the crossroads of their careers should consider sales and sales management as a way of adding momentum to their professional lives, says Nina Aversano, a sales executive.

Ms. Aversano, who has worked in business for 15 years, said she had worked her way up to a "low middle manager" position in a corporation, when she decided that if she was ever going to "make it big," she had to get into sales.

She worked in line sales and staff management jobs before joining American Telephone & Telegraph Co. in 1976 as a marketing supervisor. Since 1980, she has been division marketing manager for corporate office products for AT&T's Long Lines division.

"From my point of view," she said, "the years I have spent in sales and sales management have been the greatest key to helping me get a position in the corporate environment that I think is both financially and professionally satisfying."

She made her remarks in a seminar held here recently, sponsored by the Women Business Owners of New York and the Clairol Corp.'s Loving Care Scholarship Program.

Ms. Aversano said that, in general, the people who held positions of responsibility in the companies that she had worked for, were people who had done something that clearly marked their contribution to the corporation's overall profitability.

Ms. Aversano urged her audience to look at their jobs and to determine how they could make a significant profit contribution to their companies. She said one way of doing this would be to work in sales.

"I have, in my 15 years of business, never seen a successful sales representative terminated, even in the worst of economies," she said. "Clearly, you are more valuable to the corporation."

Ms. Aversano said a career in sales wasn't for everyone, but that for her it was an exciting and rewarding job, where no two days were alike and where she enjoyed an interchange between and among her customers and co-workers.

Beauty by Choice: Beauty & emotions

By TRISHA YEAGER
Copley News Service

Beauty, in the context of this column, means looking good, feeling good and being able to express ourselves in a meaningful way. There is a correlation between this kind of beauty and our emotions.

Happiness, serenity and confidence lift the contours of the face, smooth the complexion and enhance the general functioning of our bodies.

Negative emotions, on the other hand, rob us of our looks, health and the ability to express ourselves the way we want to.

Consider the following letter:

Dear Trisha: I am an emotional person with a terrible temper. It affects my whole life, and especially the way I play tennis. Please help. — S.L.

Dear S.L.: Your letter made me think of a tennis lesson I once had. It was one of those times when I just couldn't do anything right.

My racket felt like it weighed 20 pounds and the ball a good 15. As I missed shot after easy shot, my frustration and anger mounted. But as the anger got worse, so did my ability to connect with the ball.

Finally, the instructor said, "Can you see what you are doing to yourself?"

Oh I could indeed! By dramatizing my anger and frustration, I was preventing my body from moving the way it would normally. I was tight and restricted — in total bondage to the anger.

"But I can't help it," I fumed. "The angrier I get, the worse I hit the ball, and the worse I hit, the madder I get!"

"Just calm down," said the pro in an infuriatingly patient tone. (Besides being a tennis pro, this man was a practicing psychologist.)

"Some people can effectively express their anger through tennis. Not you. In your case, your anger is controlling you.

"You know, Trisha, you have the freedom to choose whether you'll give in to this emotion or overpower it with a stronger emotion."

Ignoring my baleful expression, he continued, "Look at the sky. Even though the sun is shining, you can still see the moon. Well, the sun doesn't say to the moon, 'Get the heck out of my sky.' No, it just shines. And when it does, the moon is completely overshadowed.

"Think of the moon as your negative emotions and the sun as your positive ones. When the negative feelings start dominating, don't try to suppress them. Acknowledge them; then exercise your power of choice to allow your positive emotions to dominate."

The lesson ended before I could practice his good advice. But I tried it out later and to my surprise it worked.

I found that by concentrating on enjoying the experience or some part of it, I can release the grip my anger has on me. What do I find to enjoy? I think about how good the sun feels on my skin, or how fresh the air smells, or about the pleasure of movement itself.

As a direct result, I feel better, I play better and I know I look better too.

Please send your questions about beauty to Trisha Yeager, Copley News Service, in care of this newspaper. Questions of general interest will be answered in this column. Volume of mail prohibits individual replies.

Board games are still popular

By FRED LEBRUN
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — Even with the invasion of electronic games, board games are hardly old-fashioned, forgotten artifacts these days.

All those boxes clogging the aisles in toy stores across the country are a clue that board games alone are a half-billion-dollar-a-year business, a healthy part of the nation's $7 billion-a-year toy industry.

The average good board game sells for $20 — and sales are as strong now as they were before Space Invaders and the advent of the electronic television game. One toy store reports $10,000 worth of sales during the past six weeks of this year's biggest hit, Dungeons and Dragons, a modified board game.

And with so much money at stake, it is understandable that games publishing is a high-pressure, cutthroat business where millions are speculated on unlikely titles like The Creature that Ate Sheboyagan and The Day They Invaded Pleasantville. It is a hard-bitten, cynical trade, comparable in every way to the book publishing business, where hard-as-steel agents ravenously look for new titles and where the "authors" are often lambs led to the slaughter.

The major board games publishers (there are fewer than a dozen) have full-time inventors on their payrolls coming up with new ideas all the time. Three of the majors, SPI of New York, GDW of Texas and TSR of Wisconsin, have an estimated 850 board games out. Top volume, however, goes to Parker Bros., Milton-Bradley, Avalon Hill and Selchow & Righter. Selchow & Righter puts out a little game called Scrabble, still considered the best of the commercial word games.

And Parker Bros. has a solid hold on a number of important board games, not the least of which is Monopoly, probably the most popular board game in the world.

Paul Tymchon's experiences in the games publisher's world drove him to the desperate move of creating, marketing and distributing his own game, Cope. Tymchyn, 34, took four and a half years to develop his game.

"I wanted to create a board game that would teach my children the pluses and minuses of life, about the birds and bees, about responsibility, about making decisions and having to live with the consequences," he says.

In his spare time, he created his game of four families, each with a separate young child, a teenager, parent and senior citizen, all trying to get through life, dealing with good and bad news cards, trying to cope. The first family to get home wins. Finally, he was ready to try the games publishing market.

" 'Describe your game to me in one minute,' is what one agent told me over the phone," he says. "She didn't want to see any financial games, any sports games, any property or acquisition games, and she didn't want to see any TV shows."

Then came the bad news: The standard industry contract is 95 percent to the publisher, 5 percent to the creator.

The agent was glad to explain the financial rationale behind these figures. "Listen," she said, "if we like your game, we'll put between $800,000 to $1 million behind it in distribution and saturate magazine and television advertising. You could spend $200,000 of your own money and waste five years of your life trying to see the people who make the decisions in the games busines."

"But," says Tymchyn, "when they gave no guarantees my idea wouldn't be stolen, I decided to do the whole thing myself."

With $15,000 in start-up money, he assembled 500 games, using parts from unlikely sources. The "people" in Cope are tops from magic markers, the tube the game comes in is thick plexiglass, while the board itself is laminated plastic and rolls up.

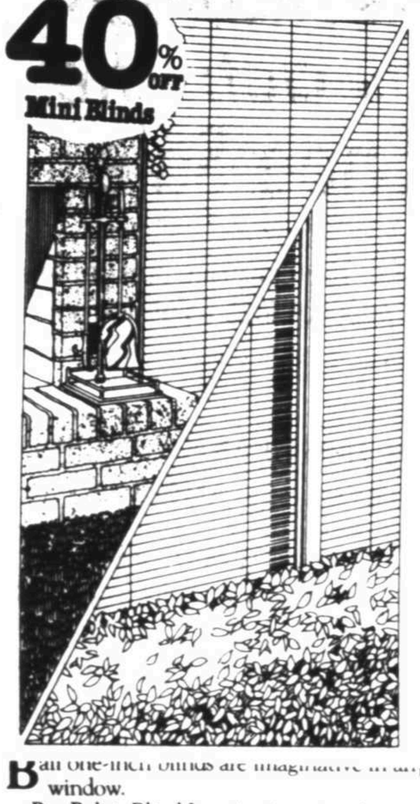

To date, Tymchyn has sold 200 games at $14.95 each in local outlets near his home, recouping about a third of his investment.

Little known as a fuel exporter

China takes on major role in gasoline

By BRUCE KEPPEL
and
MICHAEL PARKS
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — China, a country little known as a fuel exporter, has quietly begun to play a significant role in the gasoline market in the Western states — to the advantage of consumers and the irritation of some U.S. oilmen.

Analysts say that imports of leaded, regular-grade fuel from China have played a significant role in the decline in wholesale and retail prices of about 5 cents a gallon since April, and have provided independent refiners and marketers with a ready supply of fuel.

"There has not been a week since March when the wholesale price has not dropped," said Dan Lundberg, publisher of an oil industry newsletter.

Average retail prices nationwide for all grades of gasoline, which closely follow movement in wholesale prices, Lundberg said, fell from $1.37.82 in April to $1.32.51 in December.

Despite the tenfold increase in imports of Chinese gasoline since 1979, the estimated 220 million gallons of fuel imported so far in 1981 accounts for less than 2 percent of the gasoline sold in California.

"We have been bringing in Chinese gasoline since last May or June, and we'll continue to bring it in next year," said a spokesman for Wickland Oil Co., an independent refiner in Sacramento.

Wickland receives about a tankerload a month — 160,000 barrels — for additional processing and retailing through its own network of Regal Stations in Northern California. Chinese regular accounts for about 25 percent of its product, the spokesman said.

Landsea Oil Co. of Irvine, Calif., (formerly known as UCO and Ulrich Oil Co.), which blends and markets gasoline, has been importing Chinese gasoline "for several years," a spokesman said. The company adds lead to boost the octane of the imported fuel before selling it to customers, the spokesman said.

The U.S. Department of Commerce reported that, through November, the Chinese had sold gasoline valued at $228.2 million to U.S. independent oil companies. That compares to only $81.8 million in all of 1980 and $21.6 million in 1979.

Before domestic wholesale gasoline prices began their downward slide in April, the price differential between China's leaded regular and U.S.-produced regular approached 10 cents a gallon. Upgrading the Chinese product to American octane standards added another 1.5 cents to 2 cents to the gallon price for a differential of about 8 cents.

But in the last few months, an official at a major U.S. oil company said, that differential has shrunk to only a few cents as domestic storage tanks have bulged with unsold gasoline.

"I don't know what they're going to do with the stuff," the source said, referring to the lack of available storage space.

Some of the importing companies, he explained, must send the Chinese gasoline to another oil firm's refinery for blending and may have to stop importing the fuel if they have no place to store it.

"The Chinese know what their market is over here," the Wickland spokesman said. "They're certainly not giving the stuff away at any great discount.

No ruling on Marathon motion

By TERRY KINNEY
Associated Press Writer

CINCINNATI (AP) — Mobil Corp., barred by a court order from bidding for Marathon Oil Co., apparently will have to wait until at least Monday to find out if a federal appeals court will stop U.S. Steel Corp. from buying the company.

Mobil sought such an order in two lower courts Thursday after being rebuffed by the U.S. Supreme Court.

U.S. District Judge John Manos in Cleveland refused Mobil's request and the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati did not respond before the clerk's office closed at mid-afternoon for the New Year's holiday weekend.

The appeals court was asked to hold up the sale of Marathon, the nation's 17th-largest oil company, until the U.S. Supreme Court rules on another appeal by Mobil.

The nation's No. 2 oil company is barred from acquiring Marathon by an injunction issued by Manos, who ruled that the merger likely would violate antitrust laws. Mobil lost its appeal of that injunction in the 6th Circuit last week, and is appealing it in the Supreme Court.

A majority of Marathon shareholders have said they would tender their stock to U.S. Steel, which is barred from completing the deal until midnight Jan. 6 by a decree from U.S. District Judge Joseph Kinneary in Columbus.

Mobil, in its petition Thursday, also asked the appeals court to make U.S. Steel a third-party defendant in its antitrust case.

"In this case, the legality or illegality of Mobil's efforts to purchase Marathon is solely an issue between Marathon and Mobil," Marathon's attorneys argued in a letter to the appeals court.

Marathon characterized the emergency motion as "another last-minute gambit by Mobil to delay further U.S. Steel's acquisition of Marathon and to deny Marathon shareholders the benefit of the U.S. Steel offer."

Analysts estimate that U.S. Steel's offer to acquire 51 percent of Marathon at $125 a share is worth $6.3 billion. Marathon officials favor the acquisition because the steelmaker has said it would leave the oil company's management intact and in Findlay, Ohio, where it is based.

The Mobil offer of $126 a share is slightly larger, worth about $6.5 billion, but is opposed by Marathon management because the merger is predicated on dismantling Marathon to avert government opposition on antitrust grounds.

N.M. receives $975.9 million from 1981 oil, gas activities

SANTA FE — New Mexico received an estimated $975.9 million in 1981 as a result of direct taxes and other direct revenues from oil and gas activities according to Peter Hanagan, Executive Vice President of the New Mexico Oil & Gas Association. By comparison, the state expects to receive $1.1 billion in general fund revenues this fiscal year.

The $975.9 million averaged out to $2.7 million a day, or $111.400 an hour, and was almost 10 times the $100.5 million the state received from these sources in 1971.

Total direct taxes and revenues from 1971 through 1981 have exceeded $3.8 billion.

The $975.9 million total for the year included $365.4 million from the 6 taxes the state assesses directly on the oil and gas industry, and $610.5 million from other sources, such as leases, royalties and earnings from state Permanent Fund investments.

While the rise in taxes and other revenues has been dramatic, Hanagan pointed out that oil production continued to decline in 1981 as it has every year since 1969. From 1971 through 1981, oil production decreased 39 percent. The estimated 1981 decline was 4.3 percent for a total year's production of 72.1 million barrels. Natural gas production in 1981 was 1.11 trillion cubic feet, a 2.0% decline from 1980. Nevertheless, the number of wells drilled and the footage of hole drilled continue at record pace. 2 - State Received $2.7 Million a day from Oil and Gas in 1981.

The $975.9 million figure for direct taxes and revenues attributable to the oil and gas industry in 1981 does not include the additional large amounts of indirect taxes on the industry arising from gross receipts tax on goods and services, income and franchise taxes, and property taxes on 42 natural gas processing plants, eight refineries, 25,000 miles of pipelines and other oil and gas facilities. Nor does it include the taxes paid by the 24,000 people employed in the various segments of the petroleum industry in New Mexico.

The $365.4 million total from the six direct taxes imposed on the oil and gas industry (Severance, Emergency School, Conservation, Ad Valorem Production, Ad Valorem Equipment, and Natural Gas Processors) was a $329.3 million (912 percent) increase from the $36.1 million paid in 1971.

The Severance Tax alone during this period rose from $12.9 million to $187.3 million, an increase of 1,352 percent. Similarly, the Conservation Tax, which funds the state Energy and Minerals Department, increased from $700 thousand to $8 million, a 1,043 percnet increase.

Tax growth for the 11-year period also included: Emergency School Tax, $13.2 million to $107.9 million, 717 percent increase; Ad Valorem Production Tax, $7 million to $47.8 million, 583 percent increase; Ad Valorem Equipment Tax, $1.4 million to $6.2 million, 343 percent increase; and Natural Gas Processors Tax, $900 thousand to $8.2 million, 811 percnet increase.

The $610.5 million from direct revenues other than taxes marked an 848 percent increase over the $64.4 million collected from these sources in 1971. The 3,096 percnet rise in oil and gas lease rentals and bonuses (from $4.7 million to $150.2 million) reflected the growth in exploration and drilling on state-owned lands made possible by higher oil and gas prices in recent years.

Other gains from non-tax sources includes: royalty from oil and gas production on state-owned lands, $193.1 million, an increase of 590 percent, the state's share of federal royalty from oil and gas production on federal lands, $120.5 million, an increase of 939 percent; earnings on Permanent Fund investments, $111.5 million, an increase of 455 percent; and earnings on the Severance Tax Fund, $35.2 million. This fund is only five years old so there is no comparable 1971 figure.

3 - State Received $2.7 Million a Day from Oil and Gas in 1981.

The petroleum industry is the state's greatest single source of tax revenues and ranks second in the state's general fund revenue sources, exceeded only by gross receipts (sales) taxes. New Mexico ranks fourth in the nation in natural gas production and seventh in oil production.

According to Peter Hanagan, the statistical compilation was derived from the records of various public agencies such as the Oil and Gas Accounting Division, Oil Conservation Division, the State Land Office, the Department of Finance and Administration, the State Investment Council, and the State Treasurer's office.

Rig count setting new record — 521

It appears 1982 will be a very good year for Permian Basin drillers. According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co., there were 521 rotary rigs plying the region as the old year rang out, that's six more than the all-time record high count of 515 set in 1957.

The figure represents a hefty increase in activity over the past year. There were only 364 rigs digging in the Basin the last week of 1980.

The new year is certain to be a record setting one nationally, as the rig count continues to inch upward. The International Association of Drilling Contractors tallied 4,530 rotary rigs across the country actually making hole Dec. 28.

Of the total, 1,373 were land rigs working throughout Texas, and an additional 160 were drilling in New Mexico.

Some are saying the 1957 Permian Basin record was tied Christmas week. They are, however, in error. Reed sometimes includes in its tally rigs working outside the region. Such was the case the week ending Dec. 25, when a rotary working in Luna County, N.M. (way out on the otherside of White Sands missle range) was included in the count.

Last week, for instance, Reeds own count was 523, but two of these are actually working outside the area generally considered to be the Permian Basin.

RRC adopts new ruling to deal with injections

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission recently adopted amendments and a new rule dealing with the underground injection of fluids in the state's oil and gas fields. The changes were designed to qualify the RRC-administered program with federal guidelines.

If the rules are approved by the federal Environmental Protection Agency, they will be used to regulate such operations in the state. If the RRC rules are not approved by the EPA, federal regulations as well as current state regulations will apply to underground injection operations in Texas.

In recommending adoption of the rules to the commission, examiner Glenn Jordan said that the RRC's rules accomplish "the main purposes of federal and state law — protection of fresh water and prevention of waste — without adopting the unwieldly and lengthy federal UIC (underground injection control) procedural rules."

The new rules establish permit requirements and standards for enhanced recovery and disposal wells and hydrocarbon storage facilities. They also provide for increased notice of injection well permit applications to local governments and other interested persons.

The technical standards include requirements for casing and cementing, tubing, and valves, as well as for testing, monitoring and plugging. Review provisions for unplugged wells were also established.

Jordan added that the rules will "satisfy the federal requirements and allow us to submit a UIC program by Jan. 15, 1982, as required by federal rules."

They were published for public comment on June 9, and a hearing was held Sept. 10. The rules will be effective in Texas on April 1 of next year.

The commission recently denied motions by both sides involved in the application of Phillips Petroleum to amend field rules in 11 Panhandle oil and gas fields.

The motions were filed at a pre-hearing conference Nov. 10. The Panhandle Independent Producers Group asked that Phillips' rule change application be dismissed. Phillips asked for an interim order that would put most of its proposed rules changes into effect pending a hearing on the application.

The Phillips application asks that natural gas liquids recovered from casinghead gas or oil well gas not be reported as crude oil production. The Panhandle Independent Producers Group says adoption of that interpretation of the field rules will result in the reclassification of many wells from oil to gas wells, forcing many independent producers to shut in their wells because of existing spacing rules.

The next step in the case is expected to be a paper by Commission hearings examiner Susan Cory Kovar formally stating the issues to be considered by the Commission. After that, attorneys for the parties to the case will discuss what information they will exchange. A public hearing date will be set following the exchange.

The fields involved in the proposed rule change are the Panhandle oil fields in Carson, Collingsworth, Gray, Hutchinson, Moore, Wheeler, and Potter counties, and the Panhandle East and Panhandle West gas fields.

Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent announced that Texas crude oil production totaled 74,948,780 barrels in October.

The figure compares with reported September 1981 production totaling 72,985,325 barrels and October 1980 production of 78,008,503 barrels.

Texas oil production averaged 2,417,703 barrels daily in October 1981, down from 2,432,844 barrels daily in September 1981 and down from 2,516,403 barrels daily in October 1980.

The October 1981 allowable totaled 100,012,950 barrels.

The preliminary October summary indicated Texas oil production was 25.06 percent under the allowable for the month.

Nugent also announced recently state leases in bays, inlets and the Gulf of Mexico produced 82,923 barrels of crude oil during October 1981, in contrast to 44,261 barrels in the same month of 1980 and 71,206 barrels in September 1981.

Gas well gas production from state leases amounted to 18,251,260 Mcf in October against 21,303,730 Mcf a year earlier and 18,297,146 Mcf in September.

Casinghead gas production totaled 596,265 Mcf in October against 172,347 Mcf in the same month of 1980 and 223,474 Mcf in September.

Condensate production from state leases amounted to 58,716 barrels in October, down from 98,257 barrels a year earlier and down from 58,898 barrels in September.

In October, offshore crude production was approximately .11 percent of total estimated crude production in Texas. Offshore gas well gas production was approximately four percent of the state total.

Oil companies planning new Arizona ventures

PHOENIX (AP) — Oil companies are still interested in Arizona despite the failure of two deep wells drilled in the state in the last two years to strike oil, oil company officials said.

"Everyone's keeping an eye on what's happening in Arizona. It's a frontier. Until dug those wells, nothing had been done," Dan Harrison, a spokesman for Phillips Petroleum Co., said Thursday.

Phillips drilled 18,000 feet near Florence in 1980 and 10,600 feet last year near Tombstone.

The first well ended in granite and the second was abandoned because equipment became lodged in the hole, Harrison said.

He said the Tombstone well did run into sedimentary rock, which often contains oil.

"Just because you find sedimentary rock doesn't mean you find oil. But your chances of finding oil are better in sedimentary rock than granite," he said.

Oil exploration in Arizona is based on an assumption that the state is part of a huge underground geological complex known as the Overthrust Belt, which hides oil-bearing rocks. The belt is belived by some geologists to extend from Wyoming to Arizona.

"We don't have a major interest in the area, but we're keeping an eye on it. That's what most of the industry is doing," said Harry J. Briscoe Jr.,

NACE meeting set Tuesday

The regular monthly meeting of the Permian Basin Section of the National Association of Corrosion Engineers will be Tuesday, Jan. 5, at the Holiday Inn-Country Villa (the most westerly of the two Holiday Inns) in Midland.

The meeting will begin at 6:30 p.m., with dinner served at 7 p.m. The charge is $9 for members and $10 for guests.

Mike Perkins, coatings technical service manager for C.E. Vetco, Houston, will talk about internal pipe coatings for oil field tubulars. He has had 14 years experience in coatings of oil field products.

Project to produce 105,000 barrels

HOUSTON — Texaco expects to recover about 105,000 barrels of additional oil using a two-well steam flooding project at the Humble Field in Harris County, about 20 miles northeast of Houston.

The Humble Thermal Project is now underway and utilizes a new, double-walled insulated tubing casing arrangement developed by General Electric Company. Steam is being injected at 3,900 feet into a reservoir containing 45-degree API gravity crude. Steam flooding causes the high gravity crude to flow more easily to a production well where the crude is pumped to the surface. This is the first known instance in Texas that steam injection has been used on high-gravity crude at this depth.

The $1.7million project encompasses an 11.8 acre portion of the Humble Field where oil recovery through primary production methods has been depleted. Steam will be injected into the reservoir for about one and one-half years, and it is expected that commercial quantities of crude will be recovered over the four-year course of the project. Rome said that expansion of the project to the other portions of the field will be based on the success of this initial application.

The Humble Field was discovered in 1905 and to date has produced about 102 million barrels of oil. Texaco has produced about 73 million barrels of that production. Average daily production at the field now is 1,200 barrels of oil, of which Texaco produces 900 barrels a day.

Shale oil demonstration produces 23,000 barrels

AURORA, COLO. — The Rio Blanco Oil Shale Company has produced about 23,000 barrels of shale oil from its second underground modified in-situ demonstration retort on Federal Prototype Oil Shale Tract C-a in Rio Blanco County, Colorado, according to company president J. Blaine Miller.

The 400-foot high, 60-foot-square retort was ignited on June 20 of this year and burned until December 14. Miller said the volume of shale oil produced by the retort was within the expected range, and the company is pleased with the results. He said the $140 million program to demonstrate Rio Blanco's modified in-situ technology will be complete when the data from the two retort burns are completely analyzed over the next several months.

Rio Blanco's first retort was completed earlier this year. The latest production analysis shows that retort produced 1,876 barrels of shale oil, about 125 barrels more than initial estimates. The oil from both retorts will be used for research purposes.

Miller said that even though the demonstration program was successful, no additional modified in-situ retorts are planned. The company is interested in developing the 5,100-acre tract by open pit mining and surface retorting. He said Rio Blanco estimates that the open pit could produce more than five billion barrels from the tract while modified in-situ could produce some two billion barrels.

However, in order to make the open pit plan economically feasible, additional federal land must be leased near Tract C-a for processing facilities and disposal of processed shale and overburden. Because the Secretary of the interior does not now have the authority to lease such surface land, congressional legislation is needed to give him that authority.

A bill which would do that has passed the House of Representatives, and a similar measure is pending in the Senate.

Miller said Rio Blanco would need surface retorting for either open pit or modified in-situ tract development.

Workmen begin replacing section of damaged pipeline

OTTAWA, Kan. (AP) — More than 100 residents returned to their homes early Friday after being forced to flee when a ruptured pipeline touched off an explosion and fire that was visible for 30 miles.

The fire raged for five hours Thursday evening until officials could close gas valves. No injuries were reported, but two mobile homes were destroyed and a pickup truck was damaged.

The new IRA plans are here and there's one for everyone.
Now you, too, can retire a millionaire.

It's here. The new Individual Retirement Account. The IRA. A personal tax sheltered retirement savings plan for everyone. And it's available at First Savings & Loan Association of Midland. You can literally retire a millionaire, assuming you begin the plan in your late twenties. Not bad. Huh? Accumulations can be very substantial regardless of the age you begin.

Accumulations at retirement based on age of enrollment*

At Age 27 — $1,044,533 At Age 45 — $142,530
At Age 30 — $758,329 At Age 50 — $76,380
At Age 35 — $441,826 At Age 55 — $37,123
At Age 40 — $253,998 At Age 60 — $13,826

How much does it cost?
It's your choice. You decide what you want to contribute annually up to $2,000. At First Savings, we help you tailor your contributions so you can get the results you want at retirement.

How do you start:
Start by coming into First Savings. All IRA's are not the same. And First Savings IRA's have distinct advantages. For complete information, come by, or call us at 683-5681, and ask for a free brochure. And start making plans to retire rich.

*Figures above are based on the assumptions that $2,000 is invested in the account every year until age 65 and that the funds invested draw interest at 11% compounded annually until that age. Your interest rate may be higher or lower than 11%. Substantial penalties are required for early withdrawal.

Britain's first major inland oil rig, which exploded Dec. 21, burns with a 60-foot flame reflected in a pond at Hatfield Moor in England last week. It could be another week before the flame is snuffed out using dynamite. The well developers, Taylor Woodward Energy, were hoping to strike oil at 4,500 feet, but hit a high pressure pocket of gas at 1,500 feet.

C&K Petroleum completes Louisiana dual producer

C & K Petroleum, Inc., Midland, a subsidiary of Alaska Interstate Company, announced recently the Duplantier A-10 well in the University Field, East Baton Rouge Parish, La. was completed as a dual oil and gas well. The lower sand, perforated between 9,890 and 9,892 feet, flowed at a rate of 100 barrels of oil and 35,000 cubic feet of gas per day on an 8/64 inch choke with 725 pounds per square inch flowing tubing pressure. The upper sand, perforated between 9,792 and 9,800 feet, flowed at a rate of 2,750,000 cubic feet of gas and 155 barrels of condensate per day on a 10/64 inch choke with 2,600 psi flowing tubing pressure. The well contains a total of 46 feet of productive zone in four sands; two sands have been completed when the present sands are depleted.

The University Field was originally discovered and developed in the 1930's. C & K Petroleum and a group of partners purchased 67.2 percent interest in the field in November 1979. Since then, a program of workovers and the completion of the A-10 well has resulted in a doubling of liquids production to 590 barrels per day. The A-10 well was the first well drilled in the field since 1963.

C & K Petroleum, Inc. is the operator and has a 28.1 percent working interest in the A-10 well. Other working interest owners in the A-10 well are: Petroleum Engineers, Inc. 9.4 percent, Montejas Energy Resources, Inc. 10.9 percent, Marion Oil Corp. 32.8 percent, Philip B. Berry 9.4 percent, Mizel Production Co. 9.4 percent.

AMARILLO — Diamond Shamrock Corporation recently reported the completion of a natural gas discovery in the Quachita Parish, Louisiana.

The discovery well, designated the Verlee German No. 1 flowed at a rate of 7.3 million cubic feet of gas per day from a 16/64-inch choke. Flowing tubing pressure was 4,675 pounds per square inch.

Drilled to a depth of 14,378 feet, the well was perforated for testing a lower Cotton Valley sand formation between 10,689 and 10,735 feet. The well is located about 12 miles southwest of Monroe, Louisiana.

Diamond Shamrock, the operator, holds 50 percent interest in the well. Weaver Oil and Gas Corp. holds 25 percent and Pennaco Resources Corp. and Heston Oil Co. together hold the remaining 25 percent interest. Additional drilling is underway in the area where Diamond Shamrock holds an interest in 7,700 acres.

Diamond Shamrock, an international energy and chemicals firm headquartered in Dallas, is committing over $560 million for the exploration and production of oil and natural gas in 1981 and 1982.

NEW ORLEANS — Texaco has made two significant new discoveries of natural gas on Federal lease blocks offshore Louisiana.

The wildcat well No. 1 OCS-G-4464 is located in the central Gulf of Mexico about 90 miles south of Houma on South Timbalier Block 200. The well tested at a rate of 12.6 million cubic feet of natural gas and 95 barrels of condensate per day through a 14/64-inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 6,750 pounds per square inch from Pliocene sands at an interval between 14,019 and 14,058 feet. The well was drilled to a total depth of 15,592 feet.

Following an additional test at a deeper zone, Texaco will install a 24-well drilling and production platform in water depth of approximately 135 feet. The platform is scheduled to be installed in mid-1983 and production is planned to begin late in the year. Texaco is operator of the No. 1 OCS-G-4464 and holds a 50 percent interest in the well and Block 200. Pogo Producing Company holds a 30 percent interest. The companies acquired the block at the September 1980 OCS Federal Lease Sale.

In the Western Gulf of Mexico, Texaco discovered gas in its OCS-G-4408 well No. 1 in West Cameron Block 547, located approximately 150 miles south of Lake Charles, La. The discovery well was drilled to a total depth of 11,435 feet and encountered a lower Pleistocene age gas sand at approximately 190 feet.

A production platform is scheduled to be installed on West Cameron Block 547 in late 1982 and production is scheduled to begin in 1983. Texaco, as operator, holds a 50 percent interest in the well and Block 547, while Pogo Producing Company holds a 30 percent interest and Diamond Shamrock Corporation 20 percent. Block 547 also was acquired at the September 1980 OCS Federal Lease Sale.

HOUSTON — Texaco U. S. A. recently announced two significant wildcat discoveries of oil and natural gas in McKenzie County, North Dakota, within the prolific Williston Basin.

The Texaco-Amerada Hess A. N. Nelson No. 2 well tested at a rate of 685 barrels of 46.3-degree API gravity oil and 782 thousand cubic feet of natural gas a day through a 20/64-inch choke, said Gerald F. Rome, Vice President in charge of the Producing Department-West for Texaco U.S.A.

The well was drilled to a total depth of 13,610 feet on a 1,280-acre pooled area in the Blue Buttes North area of the Keene-Nesson anticlinal trend. Texaco is the operator of the pooled area. The discovery was made in the Devonian Duperow formation in an interval between 11,204 and 11,241 feet. Texaco, as operator, holds a 62.5 percent interest in the well and Amerada Hess Corp. holds a 37.5 percent interest. Additional drilling in the area is planned.

Texaco also has participated in another discovery in the Blue Buttes North area about 17 miles southeast of Williston, Mr. Rome stated. The exploratory well, named No. 11-31 Hystad, tested at a rate of about 6 million cubic feet of natural gas and 500 barrels of condensate a day through a 20/64-inch choke from the Ordovician Red River formation at a depth of approximately 14,200 feet.

Shallower zones in the area are now being tested. Exeter Exploration Company is operator of the No. 11-31 Hystad well and holds a 24.9 percent interest. Texaco holds a 40.7 percent interest; Kenai Oil and Gas, Inc. 24.9 percent; and True Oil Company 9.5 percent.

The Williston Basin encompasses parts of Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota in the United States and portions of Manitoba and Saskatchewan in Canada. Texaco holds approximately 600,000 acres in the North Dakota and Montana area of the Williston Basin, which is one of the company's most active exploration areas. Including the Texaco-Amerada Hess A. N. Nelson No. 2 well an the No. 11-31 Hystad well, Texaco has operated or participated in seven discoveries in this area this year, mostly at deeper horizons than those drilled in the past.

FORT WORTH — Champlin Petroleum Company, a subsidiary of Union Pacific Corporation, recently announced the completion of its first operated offshore discovery. The well is located in Texas State Block 438 L, a 1,635-acre tract in 60 feet of water 10 miles offshore, Matagorda County, Texas.

The well has been completed from the lower Miocene as a dual gas well with initial flow tests and deliverability of 6 million cubic feet of gas per day with small amounts of condensate. The well is completed from two zones at depths of approximately 6,700 and 7,000 feet. Stabilized flow tests from the lower zone produced 4,000,000 cubic feet per day at a flowing tubing pressure of 2,275 pounds per square inch, with a shut-in tubing pressure of 2,598 pounds per square inch. The upper zone flowed 1,640,000 cubic feet per day at 2,498 pounds per square inch. The calculated absolute open flow potentials were 10,200,000 cubic feet per day and 33,400,000 cubic feet per day for the upper and lower zones, respectively. The lease is jointly held by Champlin and TXO production.

DALLAS (SWN) — May Petroleum Inc., a Dallas-based domestic oil and gas exploration and production company, today announced the completion of two development wells on the Perry Prospect drilled by May and its 1980-1 and 1980-A Drilling Partnerships.

May, as operator, completed the Vann C No. 1 and Vann No. 2 wells in Noble County, Oklahoma. The Vann No. 2 flowed at a rate of 750 thousand cubic feet of gas per day and 240 barrels of oil per day from the perforated interval of 4971 feet to 4991 feet in Misener formation. Flow was through a 24/64 inch choke at 250 pounds per square inch flowing tubing pressure. MAY and its partnerships own 85.4 percent working interest in this well. The Vann C No. 1 is a dual completion well. In the Osage Layton formation, the well flowed at a rate of 3.5 million cubic feet of gas per day from the perforated interval of 3754 feet to 3772 feet.

Sun Gas gets piece of history along with gas property lease

DALLAS — When Sun Gas acquired Texas Pacific Oil Co.'s gas properties last summer, it got some Texas history along with the natural gas. The files included an original land grant, dated Sept. 1, 1860, signed by Governor Sam Houston.

The document granted to John C. Lowe "320 acres of land in Palo Pinto County about 17.5 miles from the town of Palo Pinto ... on the waters of Barton's Creek." Governor Houston granted to Lowe and his heirs the rights and title to land that originally had been issued by the "adjutant general" of Texas in 1855.

Sun now holds the mineral lease, and is taking care to preserve the historic document.

"It's unusual to have an original document like this," says Judy Harding, senior contract/lease consultant who spotted the 121-year-old grant. "we usually just have certified copies of the original papers."

Many of the Texas Pacific lease contracts were acquired in the 19th century when the company operated under the name Texas Pacific Coal Co. Sun Gas gained about 100 employees, 260 active wells and an interest in 14 gas processing plants as a result of a division of Texas Pacific assets among Sun Company operating units.

Sun Gas is a division of Sun Exploration and Production Company and one of the nation's leading suppliers of natural gas and natural gas liquids.

Raymond awarded contract

HOUSTON (SWN) — A unit of Raymond International Inc. has been awarded a contract in excess of $50 million for the fabrication and installation of an offshore drilling/production platform for Chevron U.S.A., Henry F. LeMieux, chairman and chief executive officer, said.

The contract, which was awarded to Raymond Offshore Constructors, Inc., involves the Edith production platform as well as the installation of eight miles of interconnecting submarine pipeline and submarine power cable to the shore.

The 12-pile, 6,600-ton platform is being installed in San Pedro Bay in 161 feet of water, approximately 9-1/2 miles offshore Huntington Beach, California. The project is scheduled for completion in April of 1983.

Raymond International Inc. is a worldwide engineering and construction company.

Aminoil completes improvements

HOUSTON - Aminoil USA, Inc. recently completed improvements to significantly boost the gas processing capabilities of its Lucien, Okla., plant.

The improvements, costing about $2 million, involved the installation of a refrigeration plant and the addition of field compression equipment.

The facitlity additions increased the gas processing capacity of the plant from 12-to-22 million cubic feet per day.

Additionally, liquids production — including propane, butane and gasoline — has been increased by 65 percent to about 60,000 gallons per day.

The Lucien plant is located in an area of increasing oil and gas drilling activity, primarily involved small producers.

Until recently, this production was marginal because of restricted petroleum pricing.

The Lucien facility is one of three gas processing plants operated by Aminoil in Oklahoma. The others are located at Aline and Fox.

The cost of freedom

President Ronald Reagan's punitive sanctions against the Soviet Union for "the repression in Poland" should be interpreted as strongly supportive of the current Polish revolution. Imposition of the sanctions, announced Tuesday, is commendable. The only question at this point is whether trade sanctions will be enough.

The crackdown in Poland threatens to undermine the truly democratic revolution taking place there. The end is definable: To bring the unruly Soviet satellite state back into the fold of communist repression and to set an example for other nations in the Soviet bloc.

A question repeatedly asked during the two-year Polish revolution has been what response would be appropriate by the nations of the Free World in the Event of a Soviet move into Poland. A response such as that chosen by President Reagan — a sharp curtailment of Soviet-U.S. trade activities and scientific exchanges — certainly is appropriate and will have an impact, although that impact likely will not be severe enough to bring about a quick change in Soviet-Polish relations.

But it is the battle of political philosophies that makes U.S. involvement at some level in the Polish crisis so crucial. The revolution is broadly based, with Solidarity — the free trade union — boasting more than nine million members. And Solidarity long ago metamorphosized into more than a trade union. It's now a political organization seeking political reforms.

This revolution is so fundamental to everything the United States stands for that American support for the Polish people should be unquestioned. Americans must support the Polish cause because belief in the right of people to govern themselves is the thread from which our entire social system is woven. That belief is not that the right of a people to govern themselves and to determine their own course is solely a right of Americans, but, rather, an inalieable right of mankind.

To not support the Polish people in their quest for freedom and to throw aside the shackles of communism is to say that freedom is not worth the cost. It is worth the cost, every American knows, and to fully support freedom fighters such as Lech Walesa and his Polish millions is a burden all free people must bear together.

A wish for less violence

Is this the most civilized period in the world's history? Some think so. Can this be called, as some do, an "age of violence?"

As we put together our wishes for the New Year, we would like to believe the former is true. We have a right to take great pride in the many achievements of our Twentieth Century civilization.

Such a belief, however, must be tempered by reality, balanced by the knowledge that in this generation too many acts of violence have jolted what we had hoped would be the even tenor of our ways. In the past year alone we have awakened to reports of gunfire, of bullets fired at good men entrusted with shaping the destiny of the world.

— We could hardly believe it, but one of the victims was Pope John Paul II, Christ's Vicar who was been doing so much to bring good will to men, and peace on earth. Happily he fought his wounds, and won.

— The President of the United States was not immune. Ronald Reagan's complete recovery is one of the most joyful stories of 1981.

— Egypt's President Sadat, alas, was not so fortunate. He who made possible the hope of a lasting peace in the Middle East did not live to enjoy the progress of that courageous effort. His memory, however, will inspire peace-makers of future generations.

Prior to these tragedies were the assassinations of President John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, and the wounding of former Alabama Governor George Wallace. Yes, this generation has known too much violence.

As we enter 1982, we must keep our perspective. A priority wish for the New Year is that we will have less violence. But let us remember that a demented few does not mean a demented all. Just because there are a few sick people around does not mean that the world is sick, even though on a given day people are heard to exaggerate in that direction.

Let us indeed wish for less violence, less of the brutality and hatred that has marred the tranquility of our existence. Let us also remember that we do live in a civilized society, where the good qualities of life like peace and justice and humane instincts are honored more than ever before in history. In 1982 let us pray for more of the good, and less of the bad.

BIBLE VERSE

Oil and perfume rejoice the heart; so doth the sweetness of a man's friend that cometh of hearty counsel. Prov. 27:9

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Hispanics still searching for political clout

WASHINGTON — The huddled masses who were washed upon our shores in the wake of Europe's industrial revolution eventually forged tightly knit political machines organized along ethnic lines. They succeeded in wresting political control of big cities and occasional states from the old-line Yankees.

Jack Anderson

By their cohesiveness, the Irish, Italians, Poles and Jews made their power felt in the nation. They were followed by the blacks who straggled into the big cities from Southern tenant farms and began electing aldermen, mayors and other public officials.

But potentially the most powerful political bloc of them all should be the Hispanic Americans who by the turn of the century will constitute the largest minority in the nation. They already number 20 million, including about five million illegal aliens, or about 9 percent of the U.S. population.

The Irish have shown the most savvy in coping with the rough-and-tumble American political system. James Michael Curley and Richard Daley extended the Irish-American influence to the state and national level. In 1960, John F. Kennedy, grandson of Boston political boss John F. "Honey Fitz" Fitzgerald, achieved the pinnacle of political power. Though polished by a Harvard education, Jack Kennedy still showed the tough ethnic heritage of his Irish roots; his kid brother Ted still commands the fierce, unwavering devotion of most Irish-Americans.

In contrast, the Hispanics have yet to transform their impressive numbers into actual political power. But the first ripples of their developing political muscle are perceptible in a few cities where they have congregated. My reporter Rafael Poveda has spent the last two months examining the Hispanic community and assessing their political potential.

At the outset, it's important to note that the United States is a far different place from the land of limitless opportunity that greeted the immigrants of a century ago. The old political machines, which protected the newcomers and helped them find jobs in return for their votes, have disappeared. Politics is now a more middle-class, loosely organized game, operating without the unquestioned party fealty of the old days.

Like earlier ethnic immigrants, the Hispanics find themselves at the bottom of the economic ladder, resented by those who have clawed their way up a few rungs. The difference is that there is no longer an open frontier or expanding industry to welcome these latest immigrants.

Having noted this, it is still clear that the Hispanic population has created many of its own problems. The term itself is misleading: There is no homogeneous Hispanic community. Hispanics are geographically and culturally diverse — and remain as separate in this country as they were before they immigrated.

Essentially, the fragmented Hispanic population is divided into four main groups: Cubans, Mexicans, Puerto Ricans and "none of the above." Even this categorization is a bit facile: Immigrants from Central and South America do not all share the same backgrounds and the same socially useful skills.

What virtually all Hispanic immigrants do share, though, is a view of the United States as the end of the rainbow, offering opportunities they could never find in the grinding poverty and repression of their native countries. They don't think our streets are paved with gold, but they believe that hard work will still pay off here — even if the only jobs are the meanest and dirtiest ones. They can still live better than they did back home — and afford to send money to those who stayed behind. It's this that keeps the flood of illegal immigrants pouring in.

The Hispanics are as fragmented politically as they are culturally. There are dozens of organizations that claim to represent Hispanics at the national level, and hundreds more at the grass roots. They focus their attention on important social programs, but acknowledge that they reach only about 8 percent of the Hispanic population.

My reporter found that the leaders of the various Hispanic groups spend too much time and energy pursuing conflicting goals, encouraging petty jealousies and ethnic prejudices — and above all, protecting their organizations' turf.

The Forum of National Hispanic Organizations, which claims to speak for 32 groups, has little political clout, for the simple reason that few of the individual organizations will cede any real power to the overall body.

The situation is exacerbated by the Reagan administration's determined cutbacks in social programs. There is less federal money to be spread around, and each Hispanic group is trying to see that it gets its share. That's why "turf" is so important.

Another problem is that Hispanics have not yet learned the connection between political influence and economic betterment. They haven't grasped the central fact of American politics: In union there is strength.

This failure is reflected in the Hispanics' voting record. In the last presidential election, only about 48 percent of the eligible Hispanic population voted, well below the 59 percent national average.

If the country's burgeoning Hispanic population is to gain its rightful share of what the United States has to offer, it must first of all submerge its cultural and historic differences, and unite under a single political banner. When they speak with a single voice, the political power brokers will listen.

Failing that, the Hispanics' only hope of getting ahead will be slow and laborious assimilation, a process that would deprive them of their heritage.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Jan. 3, the third day of 1982. There are 362 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 3, 1961, the United States severed relations with Cuba.

On this date:

In 1921, India's first session of parliament convened.

In 1942, Japanese troops began the siege of Bataan in World War II.

In 1967, Jack Ruby, the slayer of presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald, died of cancer in Dallas.

And in 1980, President Carter asked the Senate to refrain from action on the SALT II arms treaty because of Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Ten years ago: With the Nixon administration wage and price controls in effect, the AFL-CIO said it would report every retail price increase to the Internal Revenue Service as a possible violation.

Five years ago: The International Monetary Fund granted the largest loan in its 30-year history — nearly $4 billion for Britain to bolster its currency.

One year ago: Iranian radio broadcasts said it was "improbable" the 52 American hostages would be freed before President-elect Ronald Reagan took office. As it turned out, the release concided with Reagan's inauguration.

Today's birthdays: actor Ray Milland is 74; former Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal is 56.

ART BUCHWALD

Memorable statements made in '81!

Once again 1981 was a year during which many people said things they wish they hadn't.

Art Buchwald

For example, how would you like to have been the person in the White House Situation Room who said to Al Haig, "Mr. Secretary, I think you better go upstairs and tell the American people who's in charge"?

Or the official in the Department of Agriculture, who told his superiors, "I think we better stock up on cheese. My people are predicting a shortage."

Or the press aide to David Stockman who said, "Dave, do you have a few minutes to speak to a writer from the Atlantic Monthly?"

What about the reporter who rushed into the office of the editors of the Washington Post and shouted, "Guess what the Carters did, while the Reagans were living in Blair House?"

Or the aide who told Tip O'Neill, "The Republicans control the Senate, but don't forget, you control the House."

Let's not forget the poor chap who told Senator John Warner, "Your wife called, and she has something exciting to tell you."

Or the television executive who said to his wife, "Freddie Silverman, the head of NBC, got me to quit my job and go over to his shop to be his assistant."

And the president's economic adviser who said to Mr. Reagan, "You can announce we're going to balance the budget by 1984."

And the friend of Richard Nixon who said, "John Ehrlichman has written a book about his years in the White House and you come out smelling like a rose."

Then there was the fellow who said, "Congressman, I would like you to meet Paula Parkinson. She's a very discreet lobbyist, who likes to have a good time."

Or the person who said to Nancy Reagan, "We've run out of tablecloths."

We almost forgot the agricultural expert who told Governor Jerry Brown, "I can get you a good buy on sterile Mediterranean fruit flies."

And the toy manufacturer who said to Erno Rubik, "Whoever heard of anyone paying money for a colored plastic cube?"

As well as Giscard d'Estaing's political adviser: "The French will never vote for a Socialist supported by the Communists. The best way to beat Mitterrand is to ignore him."

And the priest who said to Cardinal Cody of Chicago, "Have you ever thought of buying a hideaway house in Florida?"

Or the friend of Governor Carey's new wife who told her, "Tell him you've been married twice. He'll never find out about the third one."

Not to mention the Japanese friend of Richard Allen who said to him on Inauguration Day, "Dick, can you do me a small favor?"

And the Middle East expert in the State Department who told the president, "If we sign a defense pact with Israel, Begin can't do anything without first consulting us."

Or the chairman of the Mobil Oil Company who called up the chairman of the Marathon Oil Company and said, "Howdy, partner."

Lest we forget — the Russian submarine captain in Swedish waters who said to his helmsman, as he peered through his periscope, "Hard right, rudder. Now, steady as she goes."

And the baseball scout for a major league baseball team (not the Dodgers) who told his bosses, "I took a look at Fernando Valenzuela and you can forget him. The kid will never make it in the big time because he don't speak English."

And finally, one of the White House top aides who told another top aide, "The Navy just shot down two Libyan airplanes. But keep your voice down — the president is sleeping."

GEORGE F. WILL

Aura of vanished supremacy hangs over Highland Park

DETROIT — In a neighborhood that has seen better days, in a city that may never again see anything like those salad days now wistfully remembered, there is a building that can be called the birthplace of modern America. It bears a plaque that reads:

"Home of the Model T. Here at his Highland Park plant, Henry Ford in 1913 began the mass production of automobiles on a moving assembly line....Mass production soon moved from here to all phases of American industry and set the pattern of abundance for 20th century living."

George F. Will

No vehicle has been produced there since 1973 and the complex probably will be razed by developers. A commercial civilization is aggressively unsentimental about things that are casualties of capitalism's dynamism, and hence often has only a watery memory of what made it what it is. But the passing of Highland Park is especially poignant. Ten thousand men flocked there looking for work on Jan. 8, 1914, the day after Henry Ford announced that he would pay $5 for an eight-hour day — double the prevailing basic wage for a nine-hour day.

When it became clear that there were not nearly enough jobs for all the applicants, the crowd rioted and police sprayed it with freezing water, a melancholy end to Day One of labor's new golden age. Ford's new pay policy was not, of course, altruistic. His assembly line was going to get more from the men to whom he was going to give more. And he was going to make something even more important than automobiles, something indispensable to the automobile industry: a middle class that could afford to buy automobiles.

First of two parts

At Highland Park, the time needed to assemble a Model T was quickly cut from 14 hours to 93 minutes. A flywheel magneto had been assembled by one man who took 20 minutes to do it. Ford broke the task into 29 operations and cut assembly time to four minutes. Critics were quick to deplore this:

"As to machinists, old-time, all-round men, perish the thought: The Ford Company has no use for experience, in the working ranks anyway. It desires and prefers machine-tool operators who have nothing to unlearn, who...will simply do as they are told to do, over and over again, from bell-time to bell-time...."

But as a modern scholar has noted, more complaints probably came from sociologists than from the working ranks. Few people who actually did it thought that spending 20 minutes assembling a magneto was soul-enlarging craftsmanship they should regret abandoning.

Granted, the Ford Company was not run by soft spirits. When on Christmas Eve, 1915, a subordinate had the temerity to wish a senior executive a merry Christmas, the executive looked up from his work, thought a bit, and replied grudgingly: "Well, all right."

But the public was not inclined to render moral or aesthetic judgments against the men and processes that already had reduced the price of a "Tin Lizzie" from $950 in 1909 to $600 in 1913. The future was here: By 1912 a whippersnapper running for the New York State Senate conducted an "automobile campaign." What would young Franklin Roosevelt do next?

Today, in America's biggest market — California, the freeway state, where the future often is foreshadowed — half the new cars sold are Japanese. The thing that Ford's assembly line revolutionized — productivity — is lagging behind that of Detroit's competitors; and Detroit's wages, which productivity once justified, are higher than those of Detroit's competitors. So unemployment is at Depression levels, especially among the children and grandchildren of blacks who came north to find opportunity in Henry Ford's factories. Stagnation seems so permanent that some stores advertise special long-term credit arrangements for the unemployed.

It may be not only foolish to expect, but misguided to hope, that America's automobile industry regains its old vigor. Perhaps other nations now have a substantial and unassailable advantage in automobile manufacturing, and Americans should cheerfully drive Datsuns into a future of newer industries. Nationalism and the national interest may now diverge where automobiles are concerned.

But the road to that future is bound to be bumpy, steep and winding in a nation in which the automobile industry is the primary purchaser from 2,000 companies. And anyone with a spark of feeling for the romance of this nation's muscular history must be saddened and sobered by the aura of vanished supremacy that hovers like a ghost over the shell of Highland Park.

Governor's Mansion, State Capitol matters of Texas pride

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Regardless of their feelings about the occupants, most Texans take great pride in the Governor's Mansion and the State Capitol.

And it's pleasant to note that both those historic buildings will be coming in for special attention during 1982.

Renovation and restoration of the Governor's Mansion is wrapping up, and Gov. and Mrs. Bill Clements will be able to move into the official residence this year.

Legislators approved construction of the mansion in 1854, with an appropriation of $17,000 (to include furnishings), with the money to come from sale of Austin city lots then owned by the State.

The house was first occupied by Gov. Elisha Marshall Peace (who later resigned, according to one history, because of his "inability to promote (the) best interests of Texas under carpet bag-Republican Party domination.")

During the 1960s, there were complaints that the mansion had deteriorated to the extent that it was even a danger to its occupants — with complaints of rats (which were shot by Gov. Dan Moody), bad plumbing, falling mantles and even a carpenter plunging through the roof and onto a secretary's desk.

The current overhaul, funded by legislative appropriations and private donations, is expected to run around $3 million — and should be completed in time for tourists to visit the building this summer.

On Feb. 1, the Capitol will note its 100th birthday — or at least the 100th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone.

The occasion also will be used to help promote the Texas Sesquicentennial, which will climax in 1986, marking the 150th anniversary of Texas independence.

The celebration should be a lot of fun — with a Capitol-shaped cake, appearances by the University of Texas at Austin Longhorn Band and the Texas A&M University Mounted Calvary, and bagpipe music.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

The bagpipe music is in honor of the visit of the Lord Provost of Aberdeen — who will be driven to the Capitol in a horse-drawn carriage once used to transport Presidents William McKinley and Teddy Roosevelt.

Aberdeen was the hometown for the Scottish stone masons who came to Austin to work the pink Texas granite used for the exterior of the Capitol.

Presumably, Lord Provost Alexander Collie will find a warmer welcome and have fewer problems in Texas than did his countrymen a century ago.

During construction of the Capitol, trouble developed between the contractor and the International Association of Granite Cutters — who voted 500 to 1 to declare a boycott, and to order all granite cutters to stay away from Austin.

The 85 Scottish granite cutters were met in New York by union representatives, and a U.S. marshal, who attempted to prevent the workers from entering the U.S. as being a violation of the Alien Contract Labor Law.

The matter ended up in Federal Court after 62 of the workers continued on to Austin — with judgments against the contractor, and the union — proving, perhaps, that Federal lawsuits and problems with alien workers should come as no surprise for Texas officials.

Construction of the Capitol was financed along a plan similar to that used for the Governor's Mansion — sale of State-owned land.

Texas gave 3,000,000 acres of land for the Capitol, with the land becoming the XIT Ranch.

Cost of constructing the Capitol came to $3,744,630.60, and since the State had been asking just over $1 an acre for the land (twice what it was worth at the time, accounts say), lawmakers probably got a bargain.

At least most folks seemed to be pleased with the deal, although there was some grumbling that the building was too large, and that the State government would never be able to use all the space.

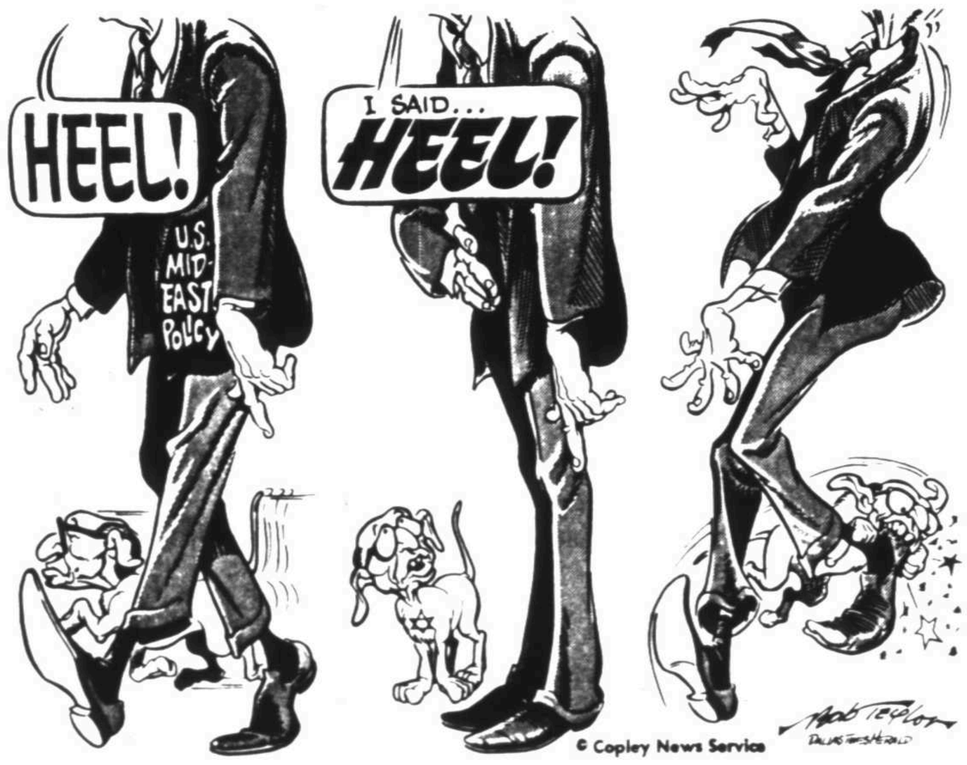

Formal dedication of the Capitol didn't take place until May 16, 1888, but the dedication was done in style — with parades, dancing in the House and Senate chambers, and a number of speeches.

Among those speeches was that of Sen. Temple Houston, son of Sam Houston, who accepted the building on behalf of the people of Texas.

"It would seem," he said, "that here glitters a structure that shall stand as a sentinel of eternity, to gaze upon passing ages, and, surviving, shall mourn as each separate star expires."

"It and the features of our civilization are all that we can leave our posterity, and even should they prove unworthy of our bequest, we can at least pass from life's stage with the proud reflections that we leave behind us a purer civilization and a nobler edifice than has been bequeathed to us by preceding ages."

So, with that in mind, let's wish the Capitol a happy birthday.

Would U.S. fight to save Gulf oil fields? Let's find out

By GEORGE C. WILSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Both President Carter and President Reagan have threatened to go to war to save Persian Gulf oil fields. Could our military really do this? I say let's find out in the New Year.

The way to find out is not through the carefully planned and rehearsed military exercises of the past, like the recent Bright Star 2 mission to the Middle East and Africa which only involved about 6,000 troops spread thinly over four different countries. The Pentagon knew full well ahead of time that the exercise could not fail.

Let's do something realistic, an exercise that bears enough resemblance to the real thing so we all know how good or how bad we are at putting out fires that suddenly break out 10,000 miles away. "It would tell the policy makers what the generals don't know: whether we can answer the fire bell," said one Army colonel who endorsed the idea.

Here is my proposal, set down after consultation with some military specialists who also would like to know where we stand, before they are sent to some hostile desert thousands of miles from any friendly base:

Assume that the oil fields in Iran are in danger of being taken over by the Soviets and their surrogates. Intelligence has warned that a Soviet armored column is forming up near Iran's northern border at the same time the Iranian military is moving to occupy Iranian oil fields. Assume further that the American president wants to rush a strong enough force to the scene to freeze the situation and, if negotiations fail, take over the oil fields.

There are paper plans lodged with the Joint Chiefs of Staff to deal with just such a situation. But unless these plans are tested realistically, thousands of Americans might die needlessly because nobody anticipated the real-life problems they and their weaponry would run into once they went into extended combat on a distant desert. If the Iranian rescue mission proved anything, it proved that what can go wrong usually does go wrong on military operations.

Since foreign governments in the Persian Gulf area would not approve an American military exercise on their ground that would be big enough to be realistic, I say conduct the test right here at home. The United States has deserts just as challenging to troops and weaponry as ones in Iran or Saudi Arabia. And getting Marines and paratroopers from one coast of this country to another would be a fair approximation of the problems of doing this in the Indian Ocean area.

Specifically, establish a bright military-planning group to work out the details around this general scenario: The contested oil fields are at specified spots on three military bases in Southern California — the Marines' Twenty Nine Palms training ground in the Mojave Desert, the China Lake Naval Weapons Center southwest of Death Valley, and the inactive Fort Irwin Military Reserva tion. Different U.S. outfits will be designated as aggressors and defenders in as realistic a struggle as can be devised for these oil fields. Monitors on the scene will determine who won and who lost, and why.

Because the Marines are expected to be the spearhead of any U.S. action to save Persian Gulf oil fields, they should play a big part in the exercise. My suggestion is to designate Marines already stationed at Twenty Nine Palms as the native military outfit which has taken the oil fields away from its government and asked the Soviets to block any American attempt to intervene.

For realism, again, I would designate a U.S. armored force to act as the "Soviet" one, complete with as much heavy equipment as environmentalists would allow on the deserts of California. The "Soviet" armored force would be an American armored brigade in Europe suddenly ordered to fly to a staging area in Nevada, perhaps an airstrip on the vast Nellis Air Force Range, tanks and all. From Nellis, the "Soviet" column would drive across the mountains and desert to the oil fields at China Lake and Twenty Nine Palms, providing a valuable test of men and weapons along the way. If environmentalists objected to tank columns crossing Death Valley, jeeps could be used as "tanks" for this part of the exercise.

If 10 percent of the horror stories I have heard over the years about our readiness are correct, the designated European brigade would have to strip the rest of its division to show up at Nellis with the equipment, ammunition and spare parts the book calls for. Let's find this out, too, while there is time. And flying the brigade east to west would also test the state of our military airlift.

My candidates for the American rescue forces are some of the ones already assigned this fire extinguisher role as part of the Rapid Deployment Force: amphibious Marine units from Camp Lejeune, N.C., and the Army's 82nd Airborne Division from Fort Bragg, N.C. I would let the Marines show what they could do coming toward the desert "oil fields" from the sea, landing, say, near Oceanside, Calif., just outside the Marine base at Camp Pendleton. No fair stocking up on food and water and ammunition at Pendleton. The Marines have advertised themselves as ready for a come-as-you-are war. Let's see how ready.

After oming in over the beach near Oceanside, no mean feat in itself given the hilly terrain around there, the Marines would drive overland toward the oil fields with as much heavy stuff as California officials would allow. They might have to travel at night until they reached the desert to keep from clogging up main roads. But there must be a reasonable and realistic way to run this part of the test. We're not talking, after all, about laying an Alaskan pipeline — just a test of what we could really do in those distant trouble spots.

The 82nd Airborne would be given only as much warning as might be expected from a sudden crisis in the Persian Gulf. How soon could the full division, not just a few parade units, get from one coast to another with enough water, beans and bullets to fight 30 days without resupply? One former 82nd Airborne officer predicted it would take far longer than advertised — again, something worth knowing for generals and policy makers alike. The 82nd could be landed east of the oil fields in Arizona and drive overland from there in another challenge to desert troops, tactics and equipment.

Because so many Persian Gulf hotspots are far from U.S. air bases and out of range of carrier-based aircraft, I am tempted to leave aviation out of this exercise. But it would not hurt the lessons of the exercise if warplanes were included under a realistic scenario. And I would not give any of the combatants the option to use nuclear weapons. However, a lesson might be that survival of one side or the other boiled down to using nukes.

To test today's ability to keep the fighting man on the hot desert supplied with water, ammunition and food, I would make sure the exercise was no overnight affair. The troops would be kept engaged for about six weeks so they could survive on just what they had brought along. Let's see how well our logistical tail, which gets a big slice of the military budget, can swing into action. The president and the generals need to know.

The post-audit of the exercise would be conducted by merciless "murder boards" of specialists outside the chain of command of the participants. Their task would be to determine what worked, what didn't, and why. Everyone from sergeants to generals would have a chance to describe into tape recorders what they found out about their men and equipment out on the desert. Their un censored remarks would be transcribed for study by civilian policy makers, military commands, Congress and, with minimal deletions for legitimate security reasons, the public. Lessons from such past computer readiness exercises as Nifty Nugget have been kept secret. Besides, how well or poorly armies do on paper does not tell you much about how they would do on the battlefield.

Sure, it would cost money. That manicure of an exercise known as Bright Star 2 cost about $69 million, without telling policy-makers much of what they need to know. If money for the exercise looms as the big problem, why not cancel that other rote annual drill called Reforger, which sends American troops to Europe to do the same things year after year? Or are we afraid to find out what we can actually do about saving Persian Gulf oil? It's time to focus a bright light on our capabilities in a laboratory whee the hard facts cannot be hidden.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

● Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication.

Letters may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must bear the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

For valid reasons, at the discretion of the editor, the name will be withheld but must be included in the original letter.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved.

Letters must be received by noon Thursday for Sunday publication. If necessary, the latest received may be held for publication the following Tuesday or Thursday.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702.

Spell it 'hospice'

To The Editor:

From the heavenly perspective on the part of the redeemed, the word that time on earth is short often is cause for rejoicing. This is in accord with the Apostle's, "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain." Nevertheless, from the human perspective, such a word of finality is sometimes quite devastating to those who must remain behind for a time.

It is at this point that Midland's new and beautiful people who are called HOSPICE enter the picture. The wonderful ladies then come to comfort those whose time is short. They do this by their understanding and compassionate conversation, careful care of many appropriate sorts, and with experienced expertise in their own professional fields.

They come, also, to encourage those of us who will remain or stay behind in the flesh for a time. This they accomplish with a bright and positive word, an occasional and timely offering of food or culinary treat, and the assurance of their constant and continuing availability.

From the human perspective, it is sad that we have needed them. Yet, we who must live in the presence of the dying and who have been privileged to know of HOSPICE and the beautiful people involved, owe a debt of gratitude that we shall never be able to repay. So long as we who remain continue to live, our heart will be undyingly thankful toward Barbara, Nell, Shirley, Gail, Susie, and others who have been compassionate comrades in concern.

Too, we remember ever the many community-minded concerned people of Midland who have made HOSPICE to become a reality in this year of 1981.

Their counsel and contributions of time, talents, and money have made HOSPICE a reality in 1981 and a wonderful opportunity for service and for giving of selves and substance in 1982.

Name Withheld

It's no 'bargain'

To The Editor:

There was much injustice based on the Karen Rickey murder. It is hard to believe the public would sympathize with the murderer of such a crime. A blown up picture, an article with sympathy and a sentence of 25 years; one third off for good behavior. (In seven years he can be allowed to commit this crime all over again). There is much to be said about how this case was handled. Many unanswered questions concerning this "plea bargaining" sentence.

The public has the right to demand more from our courts. Much of our future depends on them. It is my opinion plea bargaining with a sadistic brutal murderer is a farce.

Note of thanks

To The Editor:

The Parks and Recreation Commission and Department extends a hearty and sincere "thank you" to all the service organizations, athletic associations, businesses, and to the hundreds of individual Midland citizens who have contributed their time and resources toward making Midland a better place to live.

Without the efforts of generous and gracious people throughout our community, Midlanders would not have the opportunities they do to recreate and enjoy leisure activities of their choosing.

Your time and efforts have been appreciated this past year, and we look forward to working with you during 1982. Thank you "all" very much!

What rationale?

To The Editor:

It is difficult to understand the rationale of cutting off food supplies and other life essentials to Poland when the effects of it hurt only its people and not its Communist government.

Only if it is objectively believed that the government would not distribute such supplies to the people does it make any sense. It is hard to beleive it would go that far. But then it is communistic. Of the Russian persuasion, that is.

The U.S. Government's sanctions against Poland would seem to seriously affect the Polish peoples ability, if not their resolve, to stand up to Communist dictated martial law. It is shame upon the Polish Government that it would do such things to Poles, but then it is made up of people who are party members (Communists) first and Poles second.

It might be well for some members of our own Congress who place party first and country second to dwell on this.

Monetary morsel

To The Editor:

Most of us look upon the shenanigans and stupidities that go on in Austin as a rather comical farce at best; we are never surprised at what takes place in those prodigious halls of state government. But here is a little tidbit especially worth noting because of today's high interest rates.

Bob Bullock, our awesome Comptroller of Public Accounts, is allowed to charge only seven percent interest to those fearless procrastinators who dilly dally in turning over their sales tax collections.

The same law provides a ten percent penalty (the Internal Revenue Service charges twenty-five percent penalty and twenty percent interest on late payments), but a little bit of elementary arithmetic shows us Bullock is better than our bankers when looking for a cheap source of longer term loans.

KINGSBURY-SMITH

U.S. relationship with West Germany may be on line in next week's talks

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Western allied unity and the stability of America's relations with West Germany will be at stake when President Reagan meets with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in the White House next Tuesday.

The West German leader, now vacationing in Florida, is obviously coming to Washington to try to con the American people into believing that his acquiesence to the Soviet-inspired crushing of the Polish workers' freedom movement is the right policy and President Reagan's sanctions against the Polish puppet military dictatorship and the Soviet Government is the wrong policy.

He will probably give assurances that West Germany remains loyal to the Atlantic Alliance, but he is likely to say little about the German lust for trade with the Soviet bloc that is a major reason for his appeasement policy. The meeting between the German socialist Chancellor and the president is likely to be a cool, if not tense one, and for personality as well as policy reasons.

The President has not forgotten that Schmidt let it be known in Bonn before tne 1980 presidential election that he favored the re-electoin of Jimmy Carter despite the fact he was also critical of Carter's policies, considering them confused, unpredictable and potentially dangerous. He rejected Carter's appeal to join with the U.S. in economic sanctions against Russia for its invasion of Afghanistan, just as he has now refused to join in sanctions against the Polish and Soviet governments.

Chancellor Schmidt also irritated Mr. Reagan when he took political advantage of a private meeting with him when he was president-elect. Reagan had announced he would hold no meetings with foreign leaders until after his inauguraton, but at the request of then transition adviser William Casey, he made an exception and granted Schmidt what was supposed to be a brief courtesy visit. When Schmidt returned to Bonn, he told the German parliament he had had an important "dialogue" with the president-elect on major issues. He created the impression Reagan agreed with his policy toward Russia, which was later flatly denied by a spokesman for the president-elect.

It is the astonishingly blunt and critical reaction of the Bonn Government to President Reagan's attitude toward the repression in Poland that must have caused his Irish temper to flare up.

The president has said the Soviet Union was responsible, "directly or indirectly," for the ruthless crushing of the Solidarity Union's freedom movement by Soviet-trained Gen. Jaruzelski. That view is shared by the British and French leaders and certainly by almost every other government leader in the free world.

Nevertheless, an official spokesman for Chancellor Schmidt said Wednesday the West German government "does not share the American view." In what Schmidt must have known would arouse ridicule in other allied chancelleries, the Bonn spokesman said the West German government believes the imposition of martial law was "an autonomous Polish decision" and does not believe the Soviet Government was behind the action.

What he was saying, in effect, was that President Reagan doesn't know what he is talking about, and that West Germany does not accept and will not follow American leadership of the free world.

Coming within a week of Chancellor Schmidt's meeting with President Reagan, that official German declaration of lack of confidence in the American president will hardly create a friendly atmosphere for talks which could have a crucial effect on German-American relations.

It tends to reflect what American and other western allied officials have long regarded as the arrogant trait in Chancellor Schmidt's character. Schmidt's Nazi background — he was a member of the Hitler Youth organization — was recalled earlier this year by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. The Polish-born Jewish leader said in a radio interview that Schmidt, during World War II, had "served in an army that was ordered to surround cities and maintain order while other special units entered to liquidate Jews.

Even a leading German newspaper this week compared Schmidt's toleration of the Polish repression with the rape of Poland by Nazi Germany. In one of the strongest editorials against Schmidt's policy that has ever appeared in a West German newspaper, the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung wrote:

"It has been a long time since there has been such German support for totalitarian violence. Whoever recalls the 1930's will have to count in the German position of the 1980's."

Under Schmidt's leadership, West Germany has now become the weakest link in the Atlantic Alliance.

See Chevrolet participates in 1982 GM sweepstakes

Frank See Chevrolet announced recently it is participating in the giant General Motors 1982 Sweepstakes, which runs from January 11 through February 12. The dealership is located at 4100 West Wall.

"Showroom visitors during the Sweepstakes can become eligible to win 1982 GM cars and other valuable prizes just by filling out an entry form," said Frank See. "They also can receive a free 96-page Rand McNally Road Atlas if they take a demonstration drive in any of our 1982 models."

See said this is the largest promotional activity of its kind in General Motors history. It is to focus attention on the unparalleled number of new cars dealers are offering for 1982 — particualrly the new Chevrolet Celebrity, Pontiac 6000, Oldsmobile Cutlass Ciera, Buick Century, Chevrolet Camaro, Pntiac Firebird and the Cimmaron by Cadillac, which are among the 15 new cars being awarded nationally during the Sweepstakes.

Over 1,300 other Sweepstakes prizes include RCA video cassette recorders, 19-inch Zenith television sets, Atari video computer systems and Polaroid camera kits.

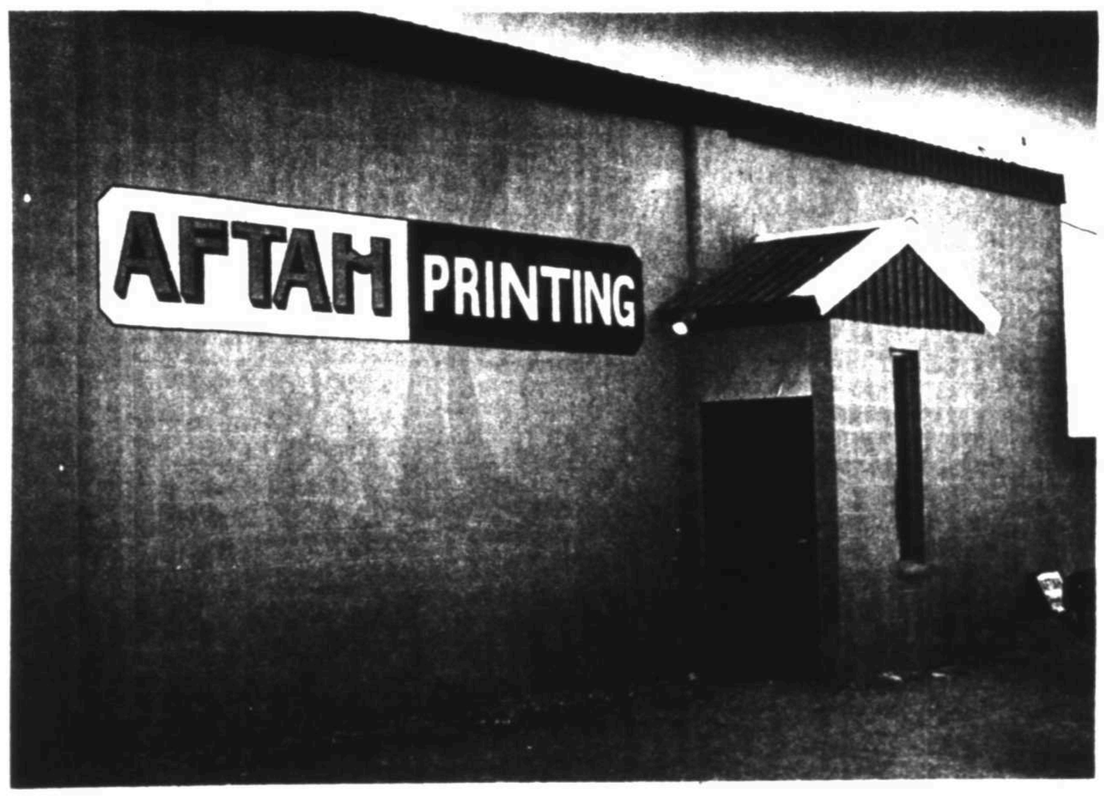

"We're using the Sweepstakes to call the attention of families in Midland to the fuel economy, advanced technology and value of our 1982 models," See said. "Everyone at our dealership is looking forward to welcoming old friends and meeting new ones during the gala month-long event."

AFTAH offers you experienced printing

AFTAH Printing's combination of professional printing experience with modern typesetting equipment continues to offer customers solutions to all of their printing needs. To reach AFTAH's new location, drive south of Midkiff to the north service road of Interstate 20, turn right and travel a short distance to Warehouse Road. Another right turn brings you to the long, low brown building which is AFTAH's home. This fine printing operation owned by A.D. "Skeet" Hall is open for business from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. five days a week. Phone number is 697-0319.

Although AFTAH recently celebrated its eighth birthday, Skeet is a long-time printing man, who has provided top quality commercial printing service to xany, many Midland firms over the years. One real advantage of doing business with AFTAH is the ease with which repeat orders can be filled, as the printers keep a complete set of records of customer orders.

Make a good impression on your clients by ordering business cards, brochures, letterhead stationary and forms from the professional printers at AFTAH Printing. Fine quality paper and ink assure you of clearly printed work, and AFTAH's stock includes snap-out and carbonless fan-apart forms.

AFTAH Printing is now to be found at 2500-B Warehouse Road, just off the north service road of I-20, west of Midkiff.

Monterrey Cocina has traditional food

Visit the Monterrey Cocina Mexicana at 1501 N. Big Spring and enjoy the traditional dishes of Mexico. Tacos, enchiladas, tanales, quisadillas, chile rellenos, quadalajaras, flautas, carne quisada and quacamole salad are prepared now as they were in 1953 when Manuel and Feliz Veloz originated the recipes and the Monterrey Cocina at its former Illinois Street location.

George Veloz, son of the original owners, and his wife Gloria are very proud of the restaurant they now own. Beautifully run, it combines an old fashioned warmth and friendliness with modern, efficient restaurant practices. Gili Lopez is the "man on the spot," insuring that all goes smoothly. Customers from the old Monterrey of the 50's through 70's mingle with Midland newcomers seeking the pleasures of properly prepared Mexican food, and all are welcomed as friends at the Monterrey Cocina.

Now, the menu also includes steaks, and a children's menu offers cheeseburgers along with Mexican dishes.

From the bar? How about a Monterrey Margarita or Pepe's Pina Colada? Also recommended are Bloody Maria, Tequila Sunrise and Jorge's Sangria. Wine by the glass, domestic and imported beer, and mixed drinks complete the list.

If you care to make a luncheon reservation, call 684-9447 before noon; they are not required, but are suggested for your convenience. A moveable partition easily makes a private dining room wich can be reserved for luncheons, dinners, meetings and social occasions. If you want separate checks, just ask for them.

The Monterrey Cocina Mexicana opens every day at 11:00. On Monday the closing hour is 2:00 p.m., Tuesday through Friday, 10:00 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday, open until 10:30 p.m.

The noon hour finds Monterrey Cocina Mexicana's dining room bustling with activity as hungry Midlanders enjoy delicious Mexican food in a warm and welcoming atmosphere. Monterrey Cocina Mexicana at 1501 N. Big Spring is open Monday from 11 a.m.-2 p.m.; Tuesday through Friday from 11 a.m.-10 p.m.; Saturday and Sunday from 11 a.m.-10:30 p.m.

Wallum alignes wheels with space-age lasers

How many wheels do you have on your car? Dwight Wallum of Wallum Paint & Body stresses checking and aligning all four wheels. "This is critical on the newer front wheel drive cars," says Wallum. "With our new laser measurement and alignment machine, we can align all four wheels to the center line of the vehicle." This is a great improvement over the old method of aligning the front wheels to the rear wheels and the rear wheels to the front, based on an assumption that one or the other was correct.

Space-age technology is becoming more relevant to the ordinary person every day. Now local automobile owners can push the technological horizon even farther due to recent acquisition by Wallum Paint & Body of laser equipment that allows mechanics to align cars and trucks to te point of perfection. The Kansas Jack Laser Measuring and Aligning System is the most accurate frame-centering guage available for automotive repairs.

The Lazer Beam Aligner works on a three-dimensional basis. It allows technicians to inspect with greater precision the underbody frame and body control points; all body panel locations - roof, trunk and hood openings; wheel alignment angles; the steering axis; and the wheel and axle relationship to the chassis.

The Lazer Beam will give you exact measurements according to factory specifications. In fact, different makes of new cars have been measured with the Lazer and found to be slightly out of alignment.

Lazer equipment simultaneously constitutes a square, level and tape measure. It is mounted on a calibrated pivot axis and scans measurements to determine correct alignments. Any part of a car or truck can be aligned, even some vehicles that could be declared "totaled" by insurance companies.

For example, according to Wallum, in the past when a shop took in a "side-damge," where a door was crushed in, they would buy a new door and rebuild the car to fit around the door. With the new Lazer, Wallum can correct the side damage to pinpoint accuracy and then install the door, a proceedure which not only saves a lot of time and frustration, but insures far more accuracy.

Wallum Paint & Body is located at 907 S. Goode. Turn west on Florida from Big Spring Street for about one-half mile and south on Goode. The shop is in the first block on the left. Open about four months, it is well-outfitted with complete frame and body equipment and offers fiberglass work, glass installation, truck and auto body painting and reair, insurance claim work and free estimates.

Call Dwight Wallum at 686-0317. Wallum Paint & Body is open Monday through Friday until 6:00 p.m.; also, call for estimates Saturday.

Oilfield light firm new in Odessa

Ray T. Rigney, president of Lighting Systems International, Houston, announced recently that the firm has opened a fully-stocked sales and warehouse office in Odessa for oilfield rig power supplies. Located at 5600 Andrews Highway in Odessa, the warehouse facility will make ITT Suprenant Exane cable and CAM-LOK "Roughneck" connectors and receptacles available locally.

The new Odessa facility is part of a four-branch expansion for the Houston firm.

Already well known for serving the Gulf Coast area rig building and repowering industry with experience and ready availability of power needs, LSI has opened branch facilities in Lafayette and Oklahoma City too. A fourth branch will open in Casper, Wyoming in Early 1982.

The facility in Odessa will be the site of an official open house presently being planned. The new telephone number is (915) 367-7537.

Conoco refinery

LAKE CHARLES, La. - Conoco Jnc. has awarded a multi-million dollar contract to a Texas firm to design and build a 12,000 barrel per day continuous reformer Conoco's refinery at Westlake, La.

S.I.P. Engineering, Inc., of Houston, Texas, a wholly owned subsidiary of the Parsons Corporation, will be responsible for design, equipment and materials procurement and field construction. The project is scheduled for completion in 1982.

Government-mandated requirements that less lead be used to boost gasoline octane have forced refiners to invest heavily in new processing equipment.

Federal, state officials working out differences

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

Federal and state officials are attempting to work out differences in hazardous waste disposal requirments to allow delegation to Texas of the second phase of the nationwide program.

Texas is the first state to submit its application for such authority to the Environmental Protection Agency, and EPA officals, at a public hearing in December, commented that Texas' effort is being watched closely by other states.

Texas is seeking delegation of the authority in order to avoid having a dual State-Federal permitting system.

EPA has drafted interim regultions on land disposal of hazardous wastes, and Texas has requested authority to operate the program under those temporary standards.

However, EPA isn't enthusiastic over the request — although Texas officials are contending that congress intended such authority to be delegated to states which deomonstrate their ability to enforce standards.

Several differences remain between state and Federal officials over specifications of the program, including persons who are entitled to particiapte in hearings relating to hazardous waste disposal, whether notices of applications for hazardous waste sites must be broadcast on the radio, providing summaries of applications, and specific hearing procedures.

Texas Chemical Council and a number of chemical industry representatives appeared at last months's hearing to support delegation of authority to the Texas Department of Health and Department of Water Resources, although some environmental groups indicated they are less certain of the agencies ability to enforce the standards.

The State Finance Commission has authorized the office of the Consumer Finance Commissioner to hold a public hearing on proposed regulations for debt collection practices by consumer loan companies.

Commissioner Sam Kelly was requested to hold the hearings by Consumer Union and Central Texas Legal Aid Society, but concluded that he did not have the authority to do so without approval from the finance commission.

Kelly also received authority to publish the proposed regualtions prior to the hearing, which is expected to be set later this month.

Steve Gardener, who filed the request on behalf of CTLAS, Said the regulations are an attempt to halt "abusive and obnoxious" collection efforts.

The banking section of the finance commission approved new regulations for the Department of Banking, intending to keep state-chartered and federally chartered banks competitive with one another.

The regulations deal with such matters as sale of loan participations, interest or discounts on loans, loans to industrial development authorities, pension plans real estate loans, issuance of credit cards and operating subsidiaries.

Th commission also ratified the action of Savings and Loan Section in reducing the assessment on saving and loan associations made by the saving and Loan Department from $15 per million to $2 million.

Savings and Loan Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff said the reduction, made to "recognize the current economic status" of the saving and loan industry, will put the department's operations into the red, but that a surplus from the prior fiscal period will provide sufficient funds for the department to operate.

Banking Commissioner Robert E. Stewart reported the Department of Banking is working on a memorandum of agreement with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for a divided examination schedule," under which Texas and FDIC offiials will accept examinations performed by the other agency to meet requirments for periodic examinations of banks.

The change is expected to reduce costs for both the banks and the agencies. FDIC has agreed to the idea, with a formal agreement to be signed.

Anticipaltion of the mandatory auto liability insurance law which went into effect Jan. 1 has reversed a downward trend in the auto assigned risk pool, reports Howard Haun, Dallas, chairman of the Texas Automobile Insurance Plan.

Haun says that from August, 1980, to August 1981, there was 9.8 percent decline in the number of applications assigned throught the plan — but in the three months after August, 1980, the number rose 18.4 percent.

Haun feels the increase in applications has been due primarily to requests from persons who have been driving without insurance, and has been due to anticipation of the compulsory auto liability law.

The total of applications to the plan through November was 122,872, compared to 132,833 for the comparabel period in

Peddlers taking over NYC streets

By DAVID W. DEITCH
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — You can hardly walk down some New York City streets these days without tripping over a street peddler, or "vendor" as the polite expression has it. But don't blame it on the Christmas season.

Street commerce has gone way beyond seasonality.

People are selling just about everything — scents, egg rolls, toys, wallets, posters — on the streets as never before. The reasons: hard times, growing unemployment and the growth of an "underground" economy.

It's a national phenomenon.

New York City police say that the peddling "problem" has grown ten-fold in the last five years. Nationally, according to the Retail Bureau of Washington, D.C.'s Board of Trade, the commercial street scene has expanded on a "very lucrative" scale in San Francisco, Houston, Philadelphia, Washington, D.C., Chicago, Dallas, Seattle, Denver, Atlanta, San Diego, St. Louis, Boston and New York.

Street peddlers are competing on a scale that bothers the conventional retail merchants in every big city, with busy central business districts, heavy pedestrian traffic and large minority populations.

Big retailers have always been annoyed by sidewalk peddlers operating without the overhead cost of rent, insurance, services and taxes. They've enlisted the support of local politicians and police departments in an effort to control "outlaw" businesses and maintain their own profit margins.

But the recession of 1974-75, the biggest of the post-World War II era, seems to have created new conditions. More and more people have been attempting to make money through peddling their wares on the street in the effort to avoid the bite of heavy taxes and other overhead costs.

Because peddlers rarely pay sales and income taxes, tax authorities have been probing various sectors of the underground economy.

One means of regulating and limiting street peddling is licensing.

Beginning Jan. 1, 1982, New York City's street venors will have to furnish a $2,500 bond to obtain a license, up $2,000 from the current fee. Vendors charge the bond requirement is another form of harassment.

On Harlem's congested 125th Street, street peddling has long been a sign of economic depression and unemployment. The state-financed Harlem Urban Development Corporation is erecting a two-story building opposite the famed Apollo Theater that will house 75-85 merchants. But, says a HUDC spokesman, "once the MART is completed the police will crack down harder."

Street vendors "popped" with a police summons are subjected to a fine after a hearing by the city's Environmental Control Board, an administrative procedure designed to minimize litigation.

Unlicensed street peddlers have been known to receive as many as two or three summonses a day from New York police. At $65 per "removal fee," it's clear the street market is very profitable.

Ronald Podolsky, a lawyer who has defended groups of street peddlers on several occasions, says "this is the quintessential free enterprise issue. You'll never get rid of the street peddlers, never. It's guerrilla warfare on the streets. The city is cracking down in all sorts of ways, but people are still peddling more than ever."

THE NEW IRA:

The difference between simply retiring, and retiring well.

Ring Out the Old.
IRA's (Individual Retirement Accounts) have been around for a couple of years. Originally, IRA's were designed to provide people with tax deductions now, and additional income beyond Social Security benefits upon retirement. Unfortunately, only a limited group of people qualified.

Ring Up the New.
Under the New IRA, every working American is eligible. Financial consultants call it Congress' greatest gift to working Americans in 50 years. Indeed, the New IRA could mean the difference between simply retiring, and retiring well.

Beginning January 1, 1982, you can invest up to $2,000 ($2,250 per couple with one working spouse; $4,000 with both husband and wife employed) in an IRA and deduct this investment on your income tax return. By the time a 25-year-old reaches retirement at 65, for example, he or she could retire with over a million dollars.

Age	$4,000 Annually*	$2,250 Annually*	$2,000 Annually*
25	$3,436,569	$1,933,070	$1,718,285
30	$1,933,852	$1,087,792	$ 966,926
35	$1,081,170	$ 608,158	$ 540,585
40	$ 597,336	$ 336,001	$ 298,668
45	$ 322,795	$ 181,572	$ 161,397
50	$ 167,013	$ 93,945	$ 83,506
55	$ 78,618	$ 44,223	$ 39,309
60	$ 28,461	$ 16,009	$ 14,230
65	$ 4,480	$ 2,520	$ 2,240

Based on an average rate of 12%. Federal regulations require a substantial penalty for early withdrawal.
*Future value of dollars invested with annual deposits, annual compounding and annual interest rate of 12%. This table is for example purposes only. Actual rates, investment amounts, frequency of deposits and method of compounding interest may vary.

The Midland National Advantage.
To broaden your investment option, Midland National is introducing an 18-Month Certificate of Deposit for the New IRA. You simply open this IRA with a CD (minimum of $500), and you may add to it with deposits of $100 or more without extending maturity. The floating weekly rate is tied to the 6-Month Money Market CD.

Real Security vs. Social Security.
Midland National's 18-Month CD for the New IRA, unlike Social Security, is insured by the FDIC. And it's a sure way to get the tax break you need now, while assuring yourself a comfortable retirement later. For more information, call our IRA specialist, Venita Gaston, Assistant Cashier, 685-5292.

energy answers

from the Texas Energy Extension Service

I have two energy-related questions for which I'd appreciate your comments: (1) The south wall of our house is composed of conventional 2 x 4 studs with 2 ½ inch fiberglass batts then covered with 12 pound felt and finally 10 inch lap and gap cedar siding vertical. The siding is 12 years old and has warped and opened along many of the vertical lap joints. To improve thermal efficiency the wall needs some foil-faced sheathing and then new exterior siding. Do you recommend removing the cedar siding to put on sheathing and then new siding? Or can I save labor by adding sheathing over the existing siding and adding the new siding to that?

(2) Also, I have a skylight in the ceiling that lets diffused light from the attic into the house. The skylight is a 2 foot by 4 foot sheet of patterned plastic about ⅛ inch to ⅜ inch thick. At times due to ventilation flows, the lightweight sheet flops in its recess. Does this material represent a heat loss area? What corrective measures do you recommend? R. P., Austin.

It is recommended that you remove the old siding first before adding your foil-faced sheathing. There are three reasons for this:

(1) You will get a more even fit if the warped surface is removed. This will make it easier for you to tape all the joints with foil tape, which will significantly reduce your infiltration. If you do not remove the old cedar siding, you will still get air under the lower edge which will leak into the house.

(2) If the old siding is left in place, you might trap moisture behind the new sheathing board and cause future problems with rotting of the old cedar.

(3) By removing the old siding you will have a chance to inspect the amount of insulation in the wall cavity. If you find areas with sparse or no insulation, you can add some.

On your second question concerning the skylight, it is obvious that there are a lot of air currents directly above the plastic sheet. Some of this air may actually infiltrate into the living space. Your letter does not make clear where the light enters the attic, but if it is immediately above the sheet of plastic, you should go into the attic and build a 2 foot by 4 foot shaft from the sheet in the ceiling up to the opening in the roof.

This will eliminate the air currents, reduce the conducted heat losses and gains, and if you paint the interior of the shaft white, it will actually give you more natural lighting.

If you have a question about energy conservation in the home, send it to ENERGY ANSWERS, Texas Energy Extension Service, Center for Energy and Mineral Resources, Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas 77843 or phone (713) 845-8025. Funds for this program were made available from the Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council.

Stockholders end year helping some companies restructure

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market moved into 1982 on a rather dull note, but many stockholders briefly put their holiday season on hold this past week to tie up some important loose ends.

Among other activity, holders helped a major retailer also become a major financial services company, a casino operator to keep working in New Jersey and a diversified metals and consumer products concern to diversify further — into appliances.

But some other holders currently in the spotlight — those owning shares of Marathon Oil Co. — were forced to wait further before knowing whether their stock will be bought by U.S. Steel Corp. or Mobil Corp.

It was a busy week for Sears, Roebuck & Co., the nation's leading general-merchandise retailer that is becoming an industry leader in offering a broad range of financial services.

In Los Angeles, stockholders of Coldwell, Banker & Co., the nation's largest real estate brokerage company, approved their company's acquisition by Chicago-based Sears.

The next day, people owning stock in Dean Witter Reynolds Organization Inc., the fifth-largest U.S. securities firm, also approved their company's purchase by Sears.

In just two days Sears, for an investment of just under $800 million, became a vigorous competitor against other financial services giants such as American Express Co. and Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

At the same time, holders of Allegheny International Inc. and Sunbeam Corp. were approving, in separate meetings, their companies' merger in a transaction valued at about $550 million.

Allegheny, headquartered in Pittsburgh, already operates in several industries, including metals and consumer products. With Sunbeam, Allegheny now will be a leading maker of small appliances and outdoor products both at home and abroad.

A proposal by Caesars World Inc. to buy the stock held by its founders also was approved handily, but not before some holders loudly criticized the move.

Caesars was told by New Jersey gaming authorities that the 18 percent interest in the company held by founders Clifford and Stuart Perlman had to be divested, otherwise Caesars could not get a permanent license to operate its Atlantic City casino. The authorities cited alleged ties between the Perlmans and reputed underworld figures.

Caesars agreed to buy the Perlmans' stock for about twice its current market value, which infuriated several holders. Several related lawsuits filed by holders still are pending.

Most Marathon holders, meanwhile, already have tendered their shares to U.S. Steel, but the steelmaker under court order is not allowed to pay them a cent of its $6.3 billion offer until midnight Wednesday.

Until then, Marathon holders could withdraw their shares and tender them instead to Mobil, but that is only if Mobil can convince the courts to postpone the date U.S. Steel can begin buying shares and then convince them that its buying of Marathon would not violate antitrust laws.

In other developments this past week:

—The government's leading economic indicators fell a modest 0.3 percent in November, following declines of 1.6 percent in October and 2.1 percent in September. Some economists said that suggested the recession might be slowing, but others argued the November drop was a temporary pause in the economy's decline.

—Savings and loan industry losses mounted in November as sales of All Savers Certificates slumped, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said. The net worth of the nation's 3,800 federally insured S&Ls fell $636 million in November to $27.9 billion as the industry continued to struggle to capture deposits going to higher-yielding investments.

—Home sales rose 11.3 percent in November from October, the Commerce Department reported, to an adjusted annual rate of 403,000 units.

Economists attributed the gain to "creative financing" techniques, and said lower interest rates could boost sales this year. The increase still left the number of new homes sold 28 percent below the level of Novembe 1980.

Meanwhile, new construction contracts fell for the second straight month in November, by an adjusted 10 percent, to $9.7 billion, the F.W. Dodge unit of McGraw-Hill Inc. said.

—A federal judge ruled that Merrill Lynch & Co.'s fees for managing its money market funds are not excessive, saying the marketplace and not the judicial system should determine the fairness of such fees.

—Orders for new manufactured goods from U.S. factories rose 0.2 percent in November, the first gain since July, the Commerce Department said.

The increase — combined with an earlier Commerce Department report showing orders for durable goods up 1.1 percent in November — was welcomed by economists, but many remained skeptical that it indicated the recession was quickly abating.

Market's 1981 losers list is a long one

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market produced a long list of losers in 1981, ranging from savings and loan and energy issues to silver-mining stocks and several individual companies that fell on hard times.

But there were big winners as well, most notably among companies that became takeover targets in another year of merger mania.

"It wasn't a very good way to start a new decad said Argus Research Corp. in its summary of 1981.

Even the "traditional" yearend rally, when it finally arrived in the last two sessions Wednesday and Thursday, was unimpressive. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, with a 1.62 gain to 875.00 in the past week, finished the year with a loss of 88.99 points, or 9.2 percent.

Other readings for the week showed the New York Stock Exchange composite index unchanged at 71.11, and the American Stock Exchange market value index down 0.61 at 320.63.

Big Board volume, which had already established a record for the fourth consecutive year, averaged 36.84 million shares a day in the final week, against 39.11 million the week before.

In a computer tally of 1981's biggest percentage changes in the waning hours of the year, several savings and loans — with their much-publicized problems with high interest rates — placed prominently among the losers.

Fidelity Financial, Financial Federation, Biscayne Federal Savings & Loan and Financial Corp. of Santa Barbara all showed declines of more than 50 percent.

The same was true for such prominent silver issues as Hecla Mining and Callahan Mining, as the price of silver tumbled to a 2½-year low in late December.

Just two years before, Hecla had been the No. 1 performer of the year among NYSE issues, climbing from 3½ to 30, adjusted for a subsequent split. In the past week, the stock was back down to just above 10.

Among individual companies plagued by steep losses, AM International fell from 16⅞ early in the year to below 5, and International Harvester tumbled from a high of 26⅛ to the neighborhood of 7½.

Energy stocks, which produced some of the best gains of 1981, meanwhile did a dramatic turnabout. The list of the sharpest declines at the American Stock Exchange was dotted with such names as Great Basins Petroleum, Ranger Oil of Canada, Damson Oil, Juniper Petroleum, Sundance Oil, and Tubos of Mexico.

Declines of 30 to 40 percent were common among the big-name international oils listed on the Big Board.

There were some dramatic exceptions in the energy group, however — companies that became takeover targets. Santa Fe International rose 19¾ to 50¾, and Clark Oil 9⅛ to 36¾. Conoco, involved in the year's most celebrated merger battle, soared from 47½ to 96 before settling back to 64¾ as DuPont Co. completed its acquisition of the company.

Takeovers also touched off gains in such other natural-resource stocks as Kennecott, up 34⅞ at 61¾; Texasgulf, up 26¼ at 55¾, and St. Joe Minerals, up 9⅝ at 43⅛.

Among securities firms, which ranked as another prime catch during the year, Dean Witter Reynolds more than doubled in price pending completion of its takeover by Sears Roebuck and Shearson Loeb Rhoades gained almost as much before it was absorbed into American Express.

No computer program was at hand to print out 1982's biggest winners and losers in advance.

Swiftships sold

FALLS CHURCH, VA.— UNC Resources recently announced it has executed an agreement to acquire Swiftships, Inc., a privately-owned company headquartered in Morgan City, Louisiana.

Swiftships is the world's leading producer of large aluminum marine vessels (over 100 feet in length) which are used primarily in offshore oil service and military applications. Swiftships also produce steel vessels and provides vessel repair services.

"This acquisition is a major further step in UNC's transition into a diversified company less dependent on a single market or customer," said Keith A. Cunningham, UNC Resources' President and Chief Executive Officer. "Swiftships fits well with our Normco subsidiary, acquired in August, and makes UNC a substantial factor in the rapidly growing offshire oil and gas support business.

Bunkhouse attracts attention

Construction on the Texas Bunkhouse is in the preliminary stages, but interest in the innovative concept of transitional housing is growing, according to John Salisbury, who conceived the idea.

The project, which will bring an additional 150 rooms to working men and women in Midland by May 1, 1982, has been drawing attention in Dallas-Fort Worth, Austin, Tyler, Albuquerque, N.M. and Ruidoso, N.M.

Salisbury, president of The John Salisbury Company, said response to the project has been phenomenal "because the economy nationwide has demanded economy in all basic projects."

He added that the project has been hailed as "an intelligent approach" to the housing market in rapid-growth cities with a "potential for mass marketing."

Salisbury noted that "this concept a year ago would have been a laughable situation, but because of the current economic situation the time has arrived for the Texas Bunkhouse."

The concept calls for a dormitory type of building with single rooms to be rented nightly and a "community bathroom." There will be a cafeteria-type restaurant and laundry facilities.

The seven acre tract at the intersection of Interstate 20 and Rankin Highway has been surveyed and leveled.

Employers who would like to reserve rooms for incoming employees may call The Salisbury Company, 686-7024. Nightly rates will be $10 and $12.

El Paso Natural Gas asks first rate hike since 1979

HOUSTON (SWN) — The El Paso Company announced Thursday its natural gas transmission unit, El Paso Natural Gas Company, has made a filing with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to increase rates charged for natural gas sales to its customers served from its interstate system. El Paso has not had a general rate increase since 1979.

The Company said that, under FERC regulations, it is required to re-establish its base natural gas rates at least once every three years.

The proposed increase is $198 million or 6.7 percent. The new rates would cover the expense of a new storage facility to safeguard gas deliveries to residential and small commercial customers, and provide a return on equity of 21 percent to reflect current economic conditions. Additionally El Paso is seeking an increase in depreciation rates.

El Paso Natural has an interstate natural gas pipeline system which serves west Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, southern Nevada and California.

LCRA buys low-grade coal

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Lower Colorado River Authority has exercised its option to buy a portion of lignite reserves in Bastrop, Fayette and Washington counties.

The reserves of up to 191 million tons of lignite were made available to LCRA and three other utilities as part of a 1978 contract settlement with Coastal States Gas Corp. and Lo-Vaca Gathering Co.

LCRA paid Valero Energy Corp., Lo-Vaca's successor, $780,053 for its 16.8 percent share of the reserves.

Austin bought 18.1 percent of the reserves, City Public Service of San Antonio purchased 35.5 percent and Central Power and Light Co. of Corpus Christi 29.6 percent.

FNB declares cash dividend

The Board of Directors of the First National Bank of Midland has declared a cash dividend of 30 cents per share and a 10 percent stock dividend for shareholders of record on December 23, 1981, according to Charles D. Fraser, Chairman of the Board. The cash dividend brings the annual dividends to $1.20 per share on the capital stock traded over-the-counter at a quoted price of $75 per share.

The Board of Directors also announced the Bank plans to file a registration with the Comptroller of the Currency in the first quarter of 1982 to sell an additional $30 million of capital stock at a price to be determined at the time of the offering. The shareholders of the bank will have a preferential right to purchase their pro rata share of the additional capital stock, and also the right to purchase any shares not purchased by other shareholders before the stock is offered to non-shareholders. The method of offering any remaining shares to non-shareholders has not yet been determined.

Net earnings as of the end of the third quarter of 1981 were $16,320,000, up 64 percent from the third quarter of 1980. In total deposits, First National ranks as Texas' 10th largest bank, and 145nd among the nation's 14,300 commercial banks.

When you decide on a Sharp SF-770 Copier
IT'S A VALUE JUDGMENT.

Matter of fact, as you read on, you can't help but see with your own eyes why our new Sharp SF-770 Copier is just more valuable, period.

Maybe that's because it's got more going for it, more raw potential, more features featured, than any other copier in its class.

Maybe it's our self-diagnosis.
The Sharp SF-770, with its own self-diagnostic capabilities, can tell you all by itself when it's hungry or thirsty for more paper or toner (dry toner, of course).

Or if something went down the wrong pipe (which is rare).

Point is, you know just how your copier is feeling at all times. That's because we believe in preventive medicine.

Maybe it's our split personality.
Paper-size-wise, that is. We can copy 11" x 17" or 8½" x 11" or even down to invoice size just by switching paper cassettes.

We can even be a 2-faced copier as well, because you can copy on both sides of our 2-sized paper. Double-duty!

Maybe it's our flip-top box.
The Sharp SF-770 doesn't clam-up on you when you've got a problem. Quite to the contrary.

If your copier is on the blink, our easy-to-service "clamshell design" makes the job a breeze for rapid repairs.

Maybe it's just because we're Sharp.
That's a good enough reason right there to look into a new Sharp SF-770 Copier. It gives you much more for much less.

And isn't that what value is all about?
