U.S. strikes alleged terrorists

■ President Clinton cuts vacation short to order cruise missile strikes against sites in Sudan and Afghanistan, citing the threat of more terrorist acts like the recent embassy bombings.

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Retaliating 13 days after the deadly embassy bombings in East Africa, U.S. forces launched cruise missile strikes against alleged terrorist camps in Afghanistan and a chemical plant in Sudan on Thursday. "Our target was terror, our mission was clear," President Clinton declared.

In an address from the Oval Office after interrupting his vacation to return to Washington, Clinton said he acted to "counter an immediate threat" of more terrorist acts.

"Let our actions today send this message loud and clear: There are no expendable American targets. There will be no sanctuary for terrorists," Clinton said.

He said the attack's timing was based on U.S. intelligence that a "gathering of key terrorist leaders" was planned Thursday at the site in Afghanistan. He called the site "one of the most active terrorist bases in the world."

Clinton said the facilities attacked were linked to Osama bin Laden, a Saudi millionaire whom Clinton called the "preeminent organizer and financier of international terrorism in the world today." He said groups affiliated with bin Laden were behind the Aug. 7 bombings of the U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania that killed more than 200 people, including 12 Americans.

According to a spokesman for Afghanistan's Taliban rulers, bin Laden was unharmed in Thursday's attack.

President Clinton boards Air Force One Thursday, cutting short a vacation at Martha's Vineyard, after ordering air strikes against facilities in Sudan and Afghanistan. Officials said the targets had ties to exiled Saudi millionaire dissident Osama bin Laden, shown at right in a 1998 file photo. Experts say bin Laden is funding attacks against the United States, like the recent bombings of U.S. embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.

National security adviser Samuel Berger said U.S. officials were not targeting bin Laden and were unsure of his fate. "We have no idea of bin Laden's whereabouts or whether he was in the camp at that time," Berger said.

Reflecting worry about possible retaliation against targets inside the United States, Berger told reporters the FBI had issued an alert to "all local law enforcement officials about the heightened degree of concern" they should have for terrorist attacks.

The Federal Aviation Administration issued an advisory prohibiting domestic carriers from flying over the two countries. Foreign carriers with code-sharing agreements with U.S. carriers also cannot take passengers with a U.S.-issued ticket over the affected air space as well.

Some U.S. airports with international flights also implemented more stringent security measures in the wake of the military strikes. Chicago's O'Hare International Airport added foot patrols, more canine units for bomb sniffing and more tow trucks to remove unattended vehicles.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich was one of many of President Clinton's critics who supported the air strikes. Gingrich said the United States "did exactly the right thing."

Initial reaction from president's political foes mostly positive in wake of bombing

Many of President Clinton's severest critics cast aside their differences over his Monica Lewinsky confession and rallied behind Thursday's attack on terrorist targets in Afghanistan and Sudan.

In the first test of the impact of Clinton's Lewinsky testimony just three days before, a few questioned whether it was a "Wag the Dog" maneuver to divert attention from the White House sex scandal. Others, however, said it was important to show a nation united against terrorism if divided on the president's personal life.

"Sooner or later, terrorists around the world will realize that America's differences end at the water's edge and that the United States' political leadership always has, and always will, stand united in the face of international terrorism," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Added Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y.: "If people think the Congress is not going to be totally supportive of the commander in chief, they're just mistaken.

"This may serve notice that whatever our local disagreements, we stand with our commander in chief, and he was absolutely proper and forceful," D'Amato said.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich dismissed as "sick" suggestions that Clinton was simply trying to change the subject from the Lewinsky investigation.

The United States "did exactly the right thing today," said Gingrich, R-Ga. "We cannot allow any terrorist group to attack our citizens or our interests without forceful and focused retaliation."

Midland trio faces charges in multimillion-dollar fraud case

By Alice Ashmore
Staff Writer

A former Midland interior decorator, his business partner and a Midland woman face federal charges stemming from a 16-count indictment issued late Wednesday by a Midland grand jury.

David Porras, William H. "Bill" Edmiston and Lucille Christie Blakely were charged with multiple conspiracies to commit money laundering, bank fraud and bankruptcy fraud, as well as aiding and abetting each other in those conspiracies.

Porras and Edmiston had both filed for bankruptcy protection in May of 1995. Many of their assets were seized by the IRS to satisfy the $40 million tax bill owed by Porras. Edmiston's tax bill at the time was $16 million, according to the indictment. Their known assets were seized by the IRS, and auctioned off in 1997.

Porras and Edmiston operated a decorating business in Midland from 1977 through 1985 under the business name "I. David Porras." From 1985 to 1992 the two men operated a ranching business using the name Pyramid Land and Cattle Co. and Pharaoh Corp. "Neither (business) ever filed a tax return," the indictment said.

During the same time period, the men also formed another decorating business called HWD Corp., "a shell corporation that never filed tax returns," according to the indictment.

Starting in 1990 through 1996, Porras and Edmiston operated a decorating and real estate business using the names Lucille Christie Blakely Trust and LCBT Operating. "This change in business name was done in order to further hide their assets and income from creditors including the United States Internal Revenue Service," the indictment alleged.

From November of 1996 until now Porras and Edmiston operated their interior decorating business as "Willy, Inc." The indictment alleges Willy, Inc. has also never paid taxes. According to the indictment, the men operated their real estate business using accounts and properties in Ms. Blakely's name.

Arrest warrants have been issued for Porras, Edmiston and Ms. Blakely. Porras' and Edmiston's whereabouts are unknown, according to court papers.

According to the indictment, "On or about April 10, 1990, the defendants conspired to commit money laundering by conducting financial transactions knowing that the property involved in the financial transactions represented the proceeds of some form of unlawful activity ... in this case both bankruptcy fraud and bank fraud, knowing the transactions were designed in whole or in part to conceal and disguise the nature, the location, the source, the ownership and the control of the proceeds of these specified unlawful activity."

The three are also alleged to have used money belonging to a Midland woman, Audrey Hays, leaving her destitute, according to the indictment. "Defendant Edmiston in his position as Ms. Hays' guardian, wrote checks from Ms. Hays' bank accounts for their personal benefit." The defendants obtained approximately $42,000 from Ms. Hays, according to court documents.

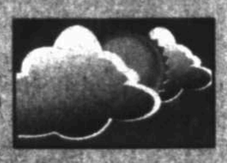

The defendants used at least six separate bank accounts to "knowingly hide assets and income from the bankruptcy trustee" and falsely reported assets and income under the penalty of perjury. "The defendants then used these trusts, bank accounts and other entities held in nominee names to pay for personal expenses and to purchase real property for their own benefit," the indictment states.

The indictment alleges that Porras failed to disclose joint interests in several condominiums in Cloudcroft, N.M., a condominium in Santa Fe, N.M., two single-family dwellings in Midland, a ranch and rental property in Freestone County, a Mercedes 500 SEL, a $410,000 hat band from Neiman-Marcus, a $79,900 belt buckle from Neiman-Marcus and a 1995 Toyota Land Cruiser and

For years, Ryan Reddell never paid much mind to the old vacant building that once had housed a hardware store.Then one day, as he thought of how well off Midland is and how the town is stocked with big, powerful churches and wealthy parishioners, his thoughts drifted to the other side of town, where the churches are small and the congregations spirit-filled not as well-off. It was then that Reddell noticed the old vacant building at 401 S. Main St.

Floods swamp key Chinese oil field, threaten major cities

By John Leicester
Associated Press

HARBIN, China — Rivers raging from weeks of rain engulfed parts of China's largest oil field Thursday and smothered farming villages outside a key industrial center.

Tens of thousands of soldiers and civilians rushed sandbags to plug leaky dikes — already piled six feet high with the dirt-filled sacks — to keep the Songhua River from flooding Harbin, capital of northeast Heilongjiang province.

On the north bank, opposite the city, the river swallowed dikes and covered fields, leaving only village roofs poking through the waters. Families took shelter in trains parked on sidings atop raised rail beds. One couple, along with their two children and four cows, camped on a garbage heap between the rail beds.

"The lives of a family of four have been saved. All the rest has been tossed away," said farmer Sun Shifa, crouching by a smoldering fire on the garbage-strewn mound.

Surging waters in the northeast have compounded the misery of China's worst flood season in at least 40 years. Much of the Yangtze River in central China has stood above the emergency stage for three weeks or longer, waterlogging and weakening levees.

The Yangtze's sixth flood crest since early July bore down on Wuhan, a major industrial hub with 7 million people. More than 280,000 soldiers, police and city residents braved thunderstorms Thursday night to patrol shaky embankments, the official Xinhua News Agency reported.

Flooding has killed more than 2,000 people nationwide, left millions homeless and caused $24 billion in economic losses. Those tallies were expected to grow.

In the northeast, around the Daqing oil field, the Nen River overwhelmed dikes this week, forcing more than 100,000 people living up to 25 miles south of Xingzhan town to flee, the official China Daily said. A railway line needed to bring in relief supplies was destroyed Wednesday.

More than 1,200 wells at Daqing — which has 25,000 wells producing more than a third of the nation's oil — were submerged, and 527 others stopped pumping altogether, the People's Daily said.

Soldiers lugged more sandbags on to a third embankment, the last defense protecting the oil fields and Daqing city's 2.3 million people, China Central Television reported.

Vice Premier Wen Jiabao, under orders from Communist Party leader Jiang Zemin, used a bullhorn to exhort the soldiers, reminding them of what is at stake.

"At our backs are the crucial cities of the north — Harbin, Qiqihar — and our country's greatest oil field, Daqing," Wen told the soldiers during a visit Wednesday.

In Harbin, the provincial capital 100 miles to the southeast, Wen told officials and soldiers that the area was facing its worst flooding in a century, CCTV reported.

Waters seeped through the city's 15 miles of dikes and flooded roads and parks next to the Songhua.

Soldiers shoveled dirt into sandbags to stop the leaks. Trucks with loudspeakers played folk songs and encouraging slogans to boost morale and break the monotony of the work.

As the weather turned colder, the Ministry of Civil Affairs made an urgent appeal for warm clothing, tents and blankets for flood victims in the northeast.

Chinese leaders also began addressing the flooding's long-term consequences. The Health Ministry renewed orders to local governments to prevent outbreaks of diseases as health workers, including medical students, fanned out in the flood areas.

Hospital loses its only ambulance — a horse

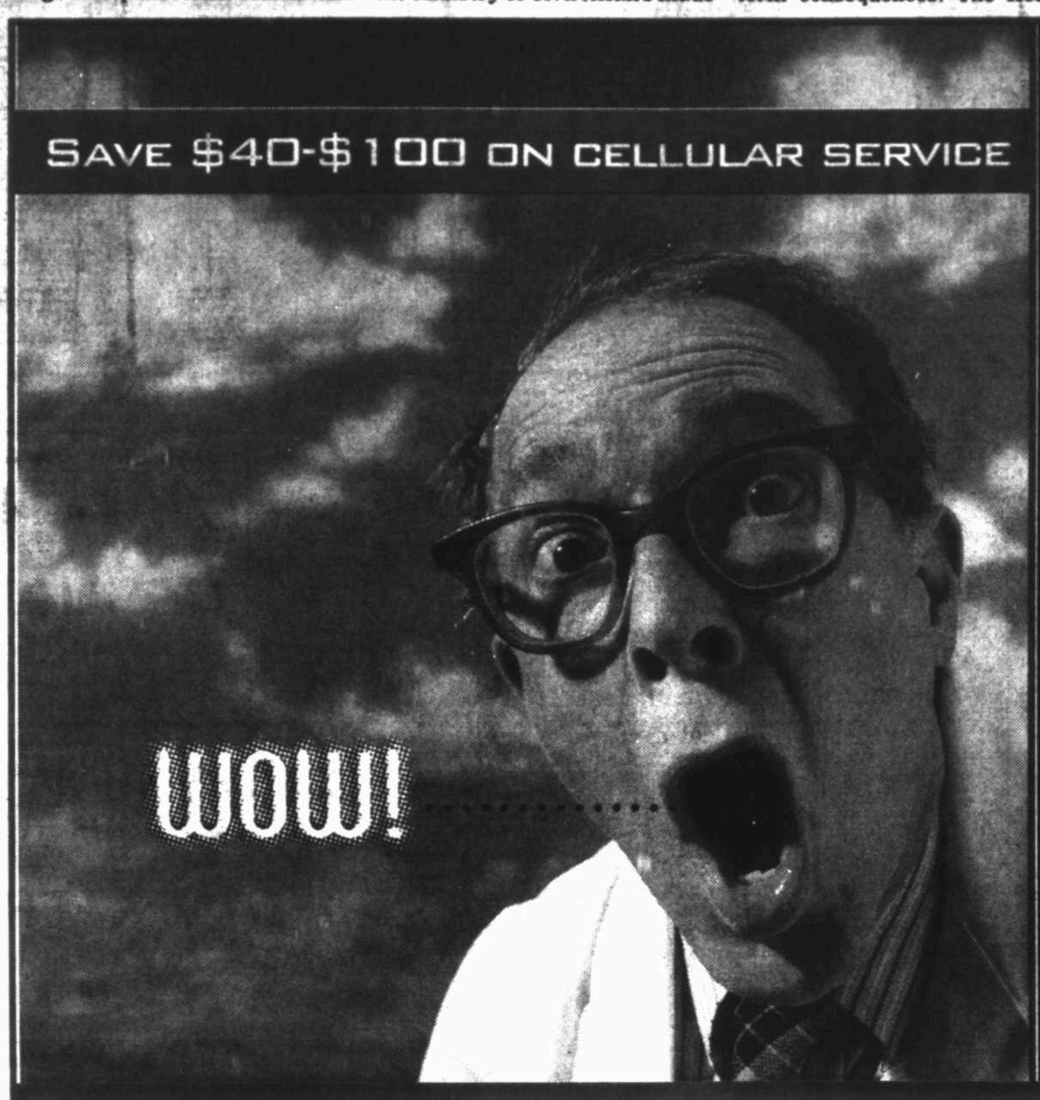

KIEV, Ukraine (AP) — It was a low-cost if old-fashioned solution. And it worked — for a while.

A cash-strapped hospital in southern Ukraine decided to avoid the rising costs of gas and auto parts by buying a horse and carriage to use as an ambulance and for routine house calls, the daily Kievskiye Vedomosti said Thursday.

A thief, however, has made off with the horse that served the people in the Nova Mayachka settlement of Kherson region, Kievskiye Vedomosti said.

And the hospital's financial woes haven't improved; the newspaper said they are unable to come up with $100 to buy another horse.

Experts say bombings will combat terrorism

N.Y. Times News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — Thursday's bombings of targets in Sudan and Afghanistan represents a new paradigm for how the United States will combat terrorism, experts say.

The strikes are a clear demonstration that the United States can, without the slow coalition-building of the Gulf War, reach deep inside foreign borders and up the ante in a war of terrorism.

"What we have with the terrorist groups is a major change in the nature of war," said Tom Kelly, a Siena College history professor who follows military issues. By launching missiles from sea with no risk to U.S. troops, the strikes sent a message to the effect that "we can kill a whole bunch of you without risking any of our own people," he explained.

"We're in the post-Cold War era now," said Steven Hoffmann, a Skidmore College political science professor. Terrorism, he said, is "the primary warfare that we in the U.S. have to worry about right now." Battling terrorists requires a shift in military and political strategy.

"You are trying to combat an amorphous opponent," said Abdo Baaklini, director of the Center for Legislative Development at the University at Albany's Rockefeller College.

The Aug. 7 bombings of U.S. embassies in Tanzania and Kenya represent a new style of terrorism-driven warfare, experts say.

"In (most of) the 20th Century, the nation-state had a monopoly on organized violence. Now we are looking at organized violence by ethnic groups, religious groups and terrorists groups," Kelly said.

Osama bin Laden, suspected of masterminding the embassy bombings, embodies this kind of post-Cold War enemy.

The embassy bombings represent what military tacticians call an "asymmetric" strategy in which the attacker doesn't try to match the enemy in pound-for-pound firepower or troop strength, said Hoffmann.

This shift requires a change in the way the United States fights back. The U.S. airstrike against one of bin Laden's suspected bases sends a message that it won't be easy to hide and that the U.S. will strike back wherever it can, despite the lack of clear battle lines.

"It says, 'they cannot hide and we're not going to wait until a court proves who is responsible,'" noted Baaklini. "When you are trying to combat an amorphous opponent ... you widen the circle sometimes, and you narrow it other times."

"What they've done is the only thing available," Kelly said of Thursday's attack. "They have said to him, 'yes, we can touch you and, yes, we can defend ourselves.'"

Kelly added that military and intelligence planners have long known that the factory in the Sudanese capital of Khartoum was suspected of harboring chemical weapon components.

"I'm sure they satellite-viewed this for a long time," Kelly said.

STRIKES: Official calls site 'terrorist university'

(From 1A)

York, Ambassador Bill Richardson informed the Security Council that the United States acted in self-defense, in accord with the U.N. charter.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said Thursday's air strikes were part of an ongoing fight against terrorism and that Americans should not think it will be easily won.

"It is part of a long-term battle against terrorism, terrorists who have, in fact, declared war on us," Albright said.

A federal grand jury and the FBI field office in New York have been investigating bin Laden's role in at least three terrorist attacks or plots, officials said. They said investigators are trying to determine whether he provided financial backing for the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, an aborted plot in New York to bomb bridges and tunnels, and a November 1995 car bombing in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, that killed five Americans.

Clinton said the groups associated with bin Laden "share a hatred for democracy, a fanatical glorification of violence and a horrible distortion of their religion to justify the murder of innocents."

"...Our actions today were not aimed against Islam, the faith of hundreds of millions of good, peace-loving people all around the world, including the United States. Our actions were aimed at fanatics and killers who wrap murder in the cloak of righteousness, and in so doing, profane the great religion in whose name they claim to act," Clinton said.

The U.S. strikes involved Tomahawk cruise missiles fired by Navy ships in the Red Sea and the Arabian Sea, according to administration and congressional officials. Between 75 and 100 cruise missiles were fired. No aircraft were involved and there were no U.S. casualties, said defense officials.

Clinton said he ordered the strikes based on the unanimous recommendation of his national security team.

"The countries that persistently host terrorism have no right to be safe havens," said Clinton, who interrupted a Martha's Vineyard vacation in Massachusetts to rush back to Washington. "No religion condones the murder of innocent men, women and children." Clinton planned to return to Martha's Vineyard on Friday, the White House said.

The nation's top intelligence officials warned "that the prospect of retaliation against Americans is very, very high." One senior intelligence official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said, "People ought to understand that this is not a one-shot deal. There is a high probability of retaliation."

Because of the nature of the U.S. confrontation with the bin Laden terrorist network, the administration would not discuss details of Thursday's attacks. Defense Secretary William Cohen said they were carried out beginning at 1:30 p.m. EDT and took less than an hour.

Cohen said U.S. forces alone were involved in the attacks on what he called a terrorist training and support compound in Afghanistan, 94 miles south of Kabul near the Pakistani border, and on the Shifa Pharmaceutical plant in Khartoum, suspected of making agents for chemical weapons, including VX nerve gas.

Television images from Sudan showed twisted girders, shattered concrete and orange-glowing flames from the El Shifa Pharmaceutical Plant, a fenced and heavily guarded complex in the Sudanese capital.

Lawmakers from both parties rallied behind Clinton's decision. House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., called it "the right thing to do."

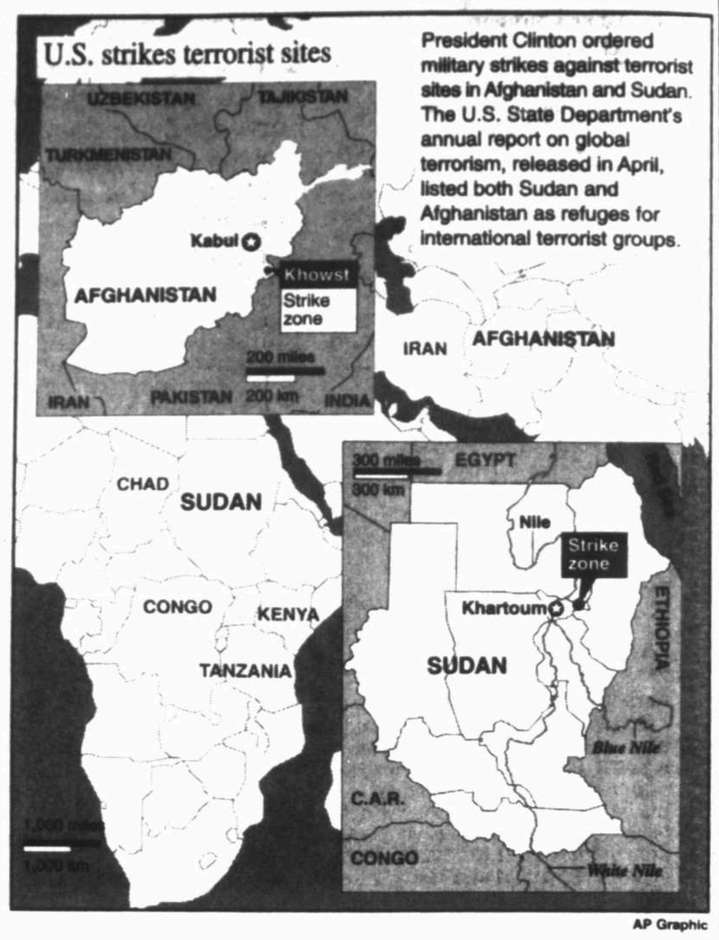

"We just had to do it, we just had to," said Rep. Ike Skelton, ranking Democrat on the House National Security Committee. "We're quite sure the attacks in Africa came from these two places, and we had to strike back."

Clinton telephoned several congressional leaders before the strikes, including Gingrich and Senate Republican leader Trent Lott of Mississippi. En route to Washington, Clinton again called congressional leaders as well as British Prime Minister Tony Blair, said White House press secretary Mike McCurry.

In a confluence of dramatic moments, Clinton announced the U.S. bombings on the same day that former White House intern Monica Lewinsky testified for a second time to the grand jury investigating her relationship with Clinton. On Monday, Clinton had made a nationally televised admission of having had sexual relations with Ms. Lewinksy.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., suggested that Clinton may have acted precipitously in an attempt to "focus attention away from his own personal problems."

Asked about that possibility, Cohen said, "The only motivation driving this action today was our absolute obligation to protect the American people from terrorist activities." He said the administration believed it had to act quickly after learning that more terrorist attacks might be forthcoming.

AP Graphic

A senior U.S. intelligence official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Sudanese target, the Shifa Pharmaceutical plant, is used to make precursor chemicals for the deadly nerve gas VX. The official said there is no evidence that the plant actually makes commercial pharmaceuticals. It is fenced and guarded by the Sudanese military.

Berger said bin Laden had financed the Sudanese military-industrial compound of which the chemical plant is a part.

The sites in eastern Afghanistan are all part of what the intelligence official called the largest and most extensive Sunni Muslim "terrorist university" in the world. The official said the site operates with the blessing, if not the outright support, of the Taliban, the group that controls Afghanistan.

The timing of the strikes — 7:30 p.m. in Sudan and 10 p.m. in Afghanistan — was chosen for three key reasons, the official said: The United States had information pointing to impending terrorist attacks coordinated by bin Laden's organization; there would be a reduced risk of civilian casualties in Khartoum at that time of night, and U.S. intelligence was informed that there would be more terrorists at the training camp in Afghanistan than usual. The training camp, spread over six sites, was said to include as many as 600 terrorists and trainers.

In Khartoum, Interior Minister Abdul Rahim Mohammed Hussein said two American planes dropped about five bombs in three or four attacks on a privately owned factory in an industrial part of the capital.

"It is not chemical weapons. It is a factory for medical drugs," he told CNN.

Hundreds of rock-throwing protesters shouting "Down USA" stormed the empty U.S. embassy in Khartoum, which had been closed since January 1996.

'Islamic International' now in sights of a superpower

By Anthony Shadid
Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — They helped win a distant war against Soviet troops in Afghanistan. Their exploits were celebrated across the Muslim world. Now, in a rain of bombs on two continents, this battle-hardened, devout corps, an "Islamic International," has become the No. 1 target of the world's No. 1 power.

These Arab veterans of the 1980s Afghan war transformed their old crusade in recent years into a new one against "illegitimate" Arab rulers, against an Israel that occupies Muslim land, against an America that supports both.

It was an attack against America, the deadly U.S. embassy bombings in Africa on Aug. 7, that led to U.S. air strikes Thursday against locations in Afghanistan and Sudan linked to followers of one of the leading "Arab Afghans," Osama bin Laden, an exiled Saudi millionaire.

President Clinton said bin Laden's followers were believed to have played a "key role" in the embassy bloodshed.

These militants are a small cluster of as many as 25,000 Arabs and other Muslims who left home to fight in Afghanistan. But their campaign, both in its bloodshed and fervor, may help define the 1990s. Their paramilitary skills, growing sophistication and ample finance set them apart from an earlier generation.

An eclectic group, the Arab Afghans bombed the World Trade Center in New York in 1993 and the Egyptian Embassy in Pakistan two years later. They are suspected of attacking U.S.-run facilities in Saudi Arabia. They tried to kill Egypt's president in Ethiopia. And they have fought in wars and insurgencies in some of the world's most troubled spots — Bosnia, Chechnya, Kashmir and Tajikistan.

Now, in the wake of the embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania, which killed 257 people, a group of those Arab Afghans has sent another stark message: Their war has just begun.

"Strikes will continue from everywhere, and Islamic groups will appear one after the other to fight American interests," said a statement last week from the World Islamic Front for Jihad Against Jews and Crusaders, a group formed in February.

The group stopped short of claiming responsibility, but its message was sent to Al-Hayat, the Arab world's leading newspaper, with several statements from a little-known group that did. Many Arab experts believe they may be one and the same.

From the Arab Afghan ranks have emerged some of the militants Arab governments and others consider the most dangerous today.

Osama bin Laden stands as perhaps the most notorious of the new generation of Islamic militant.

Like thousands of other Saudis of his generation, he journeyed to Afghanistan soon after the 1979 Soviet invasion of that poor Muslim nation in central Asia, joining activists who would later form the nucleus of militant Islam, in such groups as Hamas, Egypt's Islamic Group, Algeria's Islamic Salvation Front and the Moro Liberation Front in the Philippines.

The war was heavily financed by an estimated $3 billion from America, the biggest covert operation since Vietnam.

To Americans, it was a fight against Soviet aggression. To pious Arabs, it was a sacred fight against an atheist ideology — a conflict redolent of the international pilgrimage of leftists in the 1930s to fight fascism during the Spanish Civil War.

"It was very romantic, it was everybody's cause. There was so much poetry about the crusade in Afghanistan," recalled Jamal Khashoggi, a Saudi journalist who covered the war.

FOES: President's critics present solid political front

(From 1A)

Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said: "Our response appears to be appropriate and just."

"I take the action for what it was — to stop the terrorists and to make them pay for what they did," said Rep. Dan Burton R-Ind. "And that was the right thing to do. That's coming from one of the president's severest critics."

Rep. Jim Saxton, R-N.J., chairman of the House Task Force on Terrorism and Unconventional Warfare, said the attack was appropriate and maybe overdue since the United States has known about terrorist training facilities for some time.

Saxton commended Clinton "for finally taking a proactive stance in the area of counter-terrorism."

In a measure of the fallout from Clinton's admission that he misled the public and his family about the Lewinsky affair, a handful of legislators and state Republican Party leaders questioned his motivation for the bombings.

In the movie "Wag the Dog," a president stages a fake war to divert attention from an Oval Office sex scandal.

"While there is clearly much more we need to learn about this attack and why it was ordered today, given the president's personal difficulties this week, it is legitimate to question the timing of this action," Sen. Dan Coats, R-Ind., said.

"The president in his statement indicated that these were groups that had attacked Americans before, so then why did we wait until now to do something?" he said. "Once the president has broken the bond of trust with the American people ... it raises questions about everything he does or does not do."

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., echoed those sentiments, saying: "The president's current problems have to be on the minds of many people."

Rep. Bob Ney, R-Ohio, said that alone made it unlikely.

"The White House had to know this would be speculated on," Ney said. "I don't think the president would be foolish enough to do a 'Wag the Dog.' I will stand by the White House."

Others said they supported Clinton, if only because they trusted his advisers, including Defense Secretary William Cohen; Gen. Henry Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Air Force Gen. Joe Ralston, the vice chair.

"They were all a part of this planning," said Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. "I think they would be the first to jump up if our military people were being put in danger for political reasons. I just discount that entirely."

Democrats called the "Wag the Dog" theory naive, saying the attack was in the works long before Clinton's Lewinsky confession.

"There just was a bombing in Nairobi, there was a bombing in Dar es Salaam, the bodies came home one week ago," said Rep. Tom Allen, D-Maine.

Osama bin Laden determined, wealthy dissident

By Donna Bryson
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — It wasn't unusual to find wealthy Saudis on the periphery of the Afghan struggle against the Soviet Union. They'd arrive in Afghan refugee camps, open briefcases full of cash, and distribute dollars to war widows and wounded veterans.

Osama bin Laden was unusual. The son of a Saudi construction magnate went into the rugged Afghan mountains to fight, gaining a reputation for bravery and determination. He used his millions to buy bulldozers to gouge guerrilla trails in the heart of Afghanistan, and to bring in, by his count, thousands of Egyptians, Lebanese, Turks and others to join their Afghan Muslim brothers in the struggle against an ideology that spurned religion.

Bin Laden has laid out his case against the United States: its soldiers protecting oil in his homeland are desecrating Muslim holy sites with their very presence; its power has emasculated Arab countries; its friend is Israel.

Nine years after the Soviets retreated from Afghanistan, terrorism experts say bin Laden is using his millions to fund attacks against the United States like, perhaps, the Aug. 7 twin bombings of U.S. embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, that killed 257 people. Veterans of the pan-Muslim army bin Laden raised to fight the Soviets remain loyal to the tall, robed figure some call a hero.

Throughout the 1980s, the United States and bin Laden were on the same side against the now-collapsed Soviet state. Bin Laden made no secret that he saw secular, powerful Washington as much an infidel as Moscow. But his first priority was Moscow, which invaded Afghanistan to prop up a communist government in December, 1979.

The few outsiders who have met bin Laden describe him as modest — almost shy. He rarely gives interviews. But he has allowed himself to be photographed, narrow eyes staring intently into the camera under a white turban.

He is believed to be in his late 40s, and to have at least three wives.

In a series of fatwas, or religious edicts, faxed to the outside world from his hideout in Afghanistan, bin Laden has laid out his case against the United States: its soldiers protecting oil in his homeland are desecrating Muslim holy sites with their very presence; its power has emasculated Arab countries, turning them into client states; its friend is Israel.

"We — with God's help — call on every Muslim who believes in God and wishes to be rewarded to comply with God's order to kill the Americans and plunder their money wherever and whenever they find it," read a February fatwa.

Porras is alleged to have fraudulently claimed his annual income was $26,000 for 1993, $26,000 for 1994 and 10,500 for 1995 "... when in fact his partnership income for which he had a one-half interest, was approximately $1,672,822 for 1993, $1,076,914 for 1994 and $680,056 for 1995," the indictment states.

Edmiston is also charged with fraudulently failing to report assets including joint interest in two condominiums in Cloudcroft, a condominium in Santa Fe, a single-family dwelling in Midland, joint interest in property in Freestone County, a 1993 Mercedes 500 SEL, two Cadillac Sevilles and a diamond necklace.

Edmiston reported his income for 1993 at $13,000, for 1994 at $13,000 and for 1995 at $5,250. The indictment alleges that Porras and Ms. Blakely aided and abetted Edmiston in the conspiracy to conceal assets.

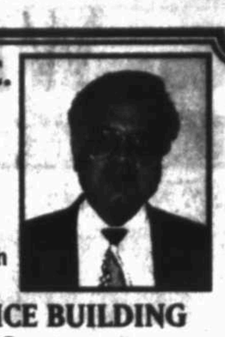

Porras operated home and commercial decorating businesses in Dallas and Midland during the boom years of the late 1970s and early 1980s, and was responsible for decorating some of Midland's most lavish homes. He also developed One Petroleum Center at Wadley and A Street.

The Dallas native started in Midland in the early 1960s by working as a salesman at a landscape company. He followed that with a four-month stint on Sear's interior decorating staff. "I decided I did not like that very much," Porras said in a 1982 interview with the Reporter-Telegram.

The case is expected to come to trial on the next docket, said Assistant U. S. Attorney Mark Roomeberg.

The range of punishment under federal law is from zero up to 20 years imprisonment and up to a $500,000 fine on each of the money laundering charges, zero to 30 years, and fines of up to $1 million dollars on the charges of bank fraud, and up to five years imprisonment up to a $250,000 fine on each charge of bankruptcy fraud.

Canada's Supreme Court says Quebec cannot secede

By David Crary
Associated Press

OTTAWA — In the first legal ruling on Canada's most divisive issue, the Supreme Court said Thursday that Quebec — home to a powerful separatist movement — cannot secede without seeking the federal government's consent.

But the high court left open the possibility of a breakaway arranged at the bargaining table. It said federal officials would be obligated to negotiate if, as separatist leaders hope, a clear majority of voters in mostly French-speaking Quebec approved secession in a referendum.

"The constitution is not a straitjacket," the court said in a unanimous ruling.

It said political leaders, not the court, would have to determine the standards for a fair referendum, as well as the guidelines for any secession negotiations.

"No one suggests that it would be an easy set of negotiations," said the court, which did not address the possibility of an impasse in such bargaining.

Quebec's pro-independence provincial government, which hopes to hold a secession referendum in the next couple of years, reacted by insisting Quebeckers have the right to make their own decision.

"The Quebec people have always had and continue to have the inalienable right to decide their future for themselves," said Jacques Brassard, Quebec's intergovernmental affairs minister. "Their democratic decision in any referendum must be respected."

Though separatist leaders rejected the high court's intrusion into the debate, they were encouraged by parts of the ruling.

"The court recognized the legitimacy of the separatist movement and the obligation of the federal government to negotiate," said Gilles Duceppe, leader of the separatist faction in Parliament.

Prime Minister Jean Chretien — a native Quebecker who staunchly opposes secession — said the ruling supported the essence of the federal government's arguments.

"The court has confirmed that any possible process of independence must proceed in a manner that respects shared values that include federalism, democracy, constitutionalism and the rule of law," Chretien said in a statement.

"In particular, it has found that the government of Quebec does not have the authority in Canadian law to effect independence unilaterally nor does it have such a right in international law."

Chretien's government turned to the Supreme Court after being shaken by the separatists' near-victory in a 1995 referendum. The government hoped a favorable court ruling would convince middle-ground Quebec voters that secession would not be quick and painless.

The court was asked to rule on three questions. Can Quebec legally declare unilateral independence under Canadian law? Can it secede under international law? If there is a conflict, which law prevails?

The court said that under Canada's Constitution, Quebec was required to negotiate with the federal government and the other nine provinces if it sought to secede. It said international law did not apply because Quebeckers were not a colonized or suppressed people.

However, the court broke new legal ground by declaring that a legitimate pro-secession referendum result in Quebec could not be ignored.

Quebec's separatist premier, Lucien Bouchard, is expected to use the court ruling as ammunition as his Parti Quebecois runs for re-election either late this year or next spring.

Bouchard was the separatists' charismatic campaign chief for the 1995 referendum, when they received 49.4 percent of the votes.

Grief-stricken Omagh, Northern Ireland asks why

OMAGH, Northern Ireland (AP) — A choir singer, a beautician, a Sunday school teacher, a charity worker, a shopkeeper, a farmer, a cashier and a student. The final eight people slain in Northern Ireland's deadliest attack were laid to rest Thursday in this grief-seared town.

Methodist President David Kerr told the weeping parents of Julie Hughes that there was "no answer on this side of eternity" why their 21-year-old daughter and 27 others had to die Saturday in an attack by Irish Republican Army dissidents.

Medical officials on Thursday raised the number of people injured to 330, 78 of whom remained hospitalized, seven in critical condition.

Police appealing for more information also disclosed that two men were seen walking away from the car packed with 500 pounds of explosives 40 minutes before the blast.

Like many other victims, Hughes — who had come home from Scotland's Dundee University to work for the summer for a film processor — died because phoned warnings misled police into evacuating workers and shoppers toward the bomb.

Kerr said the past few days of horror, however, had demonstrated "that compassion has far greater power than a 500-pound bomb."

At service after service, ministers and mourners committed themselves to work harder for Christian forgiveness and the success of April's agreement on how Protestants and Catholics should jointly govern Northern Ireland.

"Omagh must mark the moment when our people stopped spilling blood together, and began spilling sweat together in building a new society," said Seamus Mallon, Catholic deputy leader of Northern Ireland's new cross-community Assembly, who attended Hughes' funeral at Omagh Methodist.

At the rural Anglican Church of the Holy Trinity, Catholic priest Kevin Mullan took part in remembrance of Samantha McFarland, a 17-year-old volunteer for the foreign aid charity Oxfam.

She and 15-year-old Lorraine Wilson, who was buried Wednesday, often talked about traveling the world together — and were both evacuated from Omagh's Oxfam shop into the line of fire.

Rescued balloonist returns to land

TOWNSVILLE, Australia (AP) — American adventurer Steve Fossett, on solid ground Thursday for the first time since his around-the-world attempt ended with a plunge into the sea, says he'll think twice before trying again.

"It was a sobering experience," the Chicago millionaire said at a news conference after being delivered to shore four days after his 29,000-foot plunge into the Coral Sea.

"This is the closest I have come in my entire life to being killed," said Fossett, 54, who has run marathons, climbed mountains and raced dog sleds in Alaska.

"The consequences in this around-the-world ballooning are so severe. I'm not sure I should keep doing it every year, taking this risk," he said.

Fossett is among an elite handful of adventurers who for years have been trying to beat one another to become the first to go around the world in a balloon. Others include British millionaire Richard Branson and Swiss pilot Bertrand Piccard, who announced Thursday he would make another attempt this winter with a Concorde flight engineer.

Fossett's dramatic plunge Monday ended the attempt that has come closest so far. He had traveled two-thirds of the Earth's circumference before becoming caught in a severe storm that ruptured his balloon.

On Thursday, Fossett described frantically trying to save himself as he hurtled toward Earth at about 2,500 feet per minute. "I am going to die," he recalled saying aloud.

"But I figured I would keep working on (fixing) the problem, and did. All the way down," he said.

His efforts included firing all the balloon's burners, which caused part of the canopy to melt, and leaving the protective capsule as it was being pummeled by "sheets of hail" to dump fuel and oxygen tanks weighing down the balloon.

Fossett said he blacked out and his next memory was "waking up with the capsule upside down, half full of water and on fire."

Fossett scrambled into a life raft and set off emergency beacons. Within hours a French military plane from New Caledonia had found him — in reef-strewn, shark-infested waters about 500 miles off Australia's east coast — and ships had been diverted to pick him up.

German firms feel pressure from victims

BONN, Germany (AP) — German companies have usually rebuffed demands to compensate Holocaust victims, but settlements by Swiss banks and an Italian insurance company have put pressure on German firms to settle claims from those forced into slave labor in World War II.

More than 7 million people were coerced to work in Germany under Hitler's regime, but the government and German companies have so far turned down survivors' demands for back wages.

But fearing lawsuits similar to those that have dogged Swiss banks, some large German firms are searching for ways to head off an onslaught of compensation demands. Experts believe at least 500,000 ex-laborers are still alive.

One suggestion, raised in a newspaper report Thursday, is a government-sponsored fund to which industry would contribute.

Daimler-Benz, Germany's biggest industrial group, has pledged to participate. Automaker BMW, electronics giant Siemens and the Hochtief construction company also have signaled their readiness to contribute to such an endowment, the daily Frankfurter Rundschau said.

Spokespeople for BMW and Hochtief confirmed Thursday they would consider such payments; the BMW spokesman denied his company was acting under pressure. Siemens had no comment.

Until recently, most German companies have rejected demands for compensation, arguing that the Nazi regime was responsible for wartime slave labor, and that claims should be directed to the regime's successor — the current German government.

The Bonn government, while paying billions to concentration camp survivors as recompense for their loss of liberty and health damages, has refused to honor wage claims, saying laborers worked for private companies.

But the pressure on both the government and private firms began to build after Volkswagen broke ranks and announced last month it would pay its World War II slave laborers.

That pressure escalated further last week, when two Swiss banks agreed to pay $1.25 billion in an out-of-court settlement of Holocaust claims, although slave labor was not the issue there.

Some companies have made donations to help former slave workers. Daimler has given about $15 million over the last decade and has kept up a dialogue with the former laborers.

Michel Friedman, board member of the Central Council of Jews in Germany, said he could support an industry-financed fund.

"I believe the German companies feel under pressure, but that responsible managers understand there is no alternative to the truth," he said in a telephone interview. "The time to act is now."

Allianz, Germany's biggest insurer, is also under pressure to act after Wednesday's $100 million settlement between Italian insurance company Assicurazioni Generali and Jewish organizations.

Allianz is among European insurers negotiating a settlement of claims for policies sold to Jews who later died in the Holocaust.

Overall, those claims could pass the $1 billion mark, a leading U.S. insurance official said Thursday.

Deborah Senn, insurance commissioner for the state of Washington, told a news conference in Jerusalem that the Generali settlement did not set a limit on the Italian company's total debt to the survivors and heirs.

Even German banks, long reticent about their dealings under the Nazis, have started opening up their past.

Last month, historians tracing the origin of gold bars Deutsche Bank traded during the Nazi era said the bank profited from gold plundered from Holocaust victims, and that it is "likely" top bank officials knew the origins.

Anger, fear brew in Congo capital city as army of rebels draws near

By Ian Stewart
Associated Press

KINSHASA, Congo — Rebels may be looking to talk peace, but war remains the reality in Congo's troubled capital.

With an army of rebels on the march toward Kinshasa, fear and uncertainty now fill a city that 15 months ago rejoiced when former dictator Mobutu Sese Seko was ousted from power.

Residents struggled through much of the week without electricity, which also caused shortages of water and fuel. Where dwindling food stocks were still available, prices have spiraled.

Dilapidated hospitals have filled with the wounded and dead from battles 100 miles from here.

"How much, just how much do we have to take?" says Ngengele Sukusuku, a shop owner who closed his store earlier in the week for fear of looting. "We can't run like the Americans can. We're stuck here, and this is our lives."

Fearing the worst, many countries including the United States have closed their embassies and evacuated many of their nationals.

Rebel leaders said Wednesday they were willing to negotiate a political solution and even a cease-fire with President Laurent Kabila.

Threats of a military intervention by Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe to back Kabila appeared to have softened normally tough rebel talk.

In South Africa, President Nelson Mandela, apparently angered by Zimbabwe's action, said he had asked his Deputy President Thabo Mbeki to speak to Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni and that Museveni would call a cease-fire by the rebels, the South African Press Association reported.

Kabila has throughout insisted that neighboring Rwanda orchestrated the revolt with the support of Uganda — a charge both countries deny.

By night, gunfire echoes from some neighborhoods, where unrest accompanies fear and anger.

Trying to make sense of their plight, people cluster around transistor radios to listen to news dispatches. Shortwave broadcasts from foreign journalists tell stories of advancing rebels and Kabila's troubled government.

Local state-run radio says those reports are lies, inciting anger at the West.

Throughout the city, there is a sense that Kinshasa is under siege.

The city's power supply was cut off for three days by rebels who control a key power dam 125 miles away. Power came back on briefly Thursday morning before going out again.

The rebels, an army made up of ethnic Tutsis, Rwandan soldiers and disenchanted members of Kabila's own military, apparently restored power for a bit Thursday.

"This was the act of a terrorist group," Congo's Minister for Human Rights Leonard She Okitundu said before the power switched back on. "We have been cut off from clean water, our hospitals are not able to function. The aggressors say they want to liberate the people, but they are killing those people they want liberate."

At Kinshasa's General Hospital, the power outage prevented all blood transfusions and made infant incubators useless. A small back-up generator kept the main operating room running.

By day, streets fill with people in a frenetic scramble to stock up on provisions. Platoons of camouflage-clad soldiers roam sidewalks, while truckloads of armed troops race past.

Many are supporting the president because they fear their future if Kabila's regime falls to the rebels. But many also agree that in his 15 months as president, Kabila has done little to help the country's crippled economy.

The majority of the city's population is jobless, and street kids dart between cars in search of a handout.

Kabila's rule also has been marked by a crackdown on dissent. Journalists, opposition and human rights activists and even a U.N. official have been detained.

"You can never install democracy by war," Kinshasa resident Alain Naweg said.

First Salvador Dali exhibit in Poland opens

WROCLAW, Poland (AP) — The black, 33-foot mustache hanging from town hall can mean only one thing: The Salvador Dali exhibition has begun.

The exhibition, which opened Thursday, is the first show of surrealist Dali's work in post-communist Poland. During the decades of communist rule, the government banned Dali's art, calling it a sign of the decay and excess of capitalist culture.

Dali, who died in 1989, created the almost 400 graphics on display from 1935-78 to illustrate literary classics including Dante Alighieri's "Divine Comedy" and Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland."

The graphics come from the collection of Heinz Ess of Germany, whose father was Dali's doctor. Dali paid for his medical care with the graphics.

Unabomber's brother gets $1 million reward

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — David Kaczynski got a $1 million government reward Thursday for turning in his older brother, Theodore, as the Unabomber. He plans to give most of the money to families victimized by his brother's 16 bombings.

'There's no question the money could never compensate for the loss of a loved one. Our family feels it might help us resolve our grief over what happened.'
— David Kaczynski

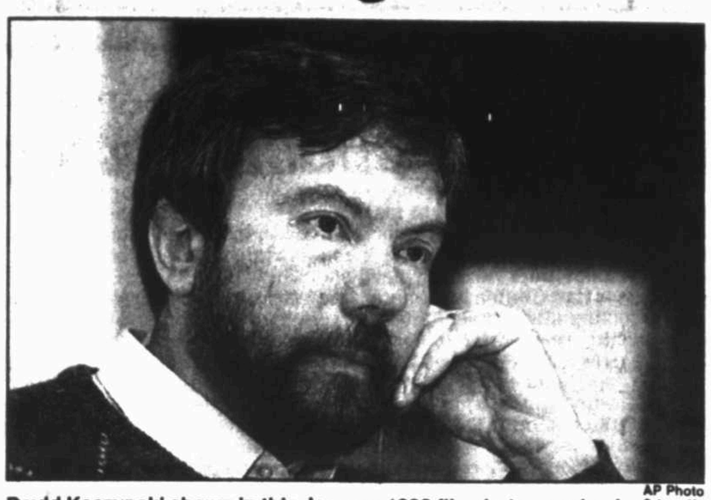

The FBI check for $1 million was turned over to David's attorney, Justice Department spokesman John Russell announced.

In 16 attacks from 1978 through 1995, the Unabomber killed three men and injured 29 other people.

"There's no question the money could never compensate for the loss of a loved one," Kaczynski, 47, a social worker, said in an interview from his job at a youth shelter in Albany, N.Y.

He said most of the money would go to victims' families. "Our family feels it might help us resolve our grief over what happened."

But he added that he needs to use some of the money to pay off the family's legal bills from his brother's trial. David and a family attorney lobbied the government for months last year not to execute his brother

AP Photo

David Kaczynski shown in this January 1998 file photo, received a $1 million reward to David Kaczynski for turning in his brother, Theodore, as the Unabomber. He said he would use the money to ease the grief of families victimized by his brother's bombs.

In January, a plea bargain was reached ending Theodore's trial. In return for Theodore's guilty plea, the government, citing his apparent mental illness, agreed not to seek the death penalty. He was given four life sentences in May.

The reward is taxable, Russell said. And David Kaczynski said he has been looking for a way to reduce the tax burden on the money, so he could give more money to the families. A law firm offered last fall to help him set up a trust fund to help survivors of the bombings.

The FBI had tracked the Unabomber for 18 years before his capture in a remote, hermit's shack in Montana in April 1996. Agents involved in the hunt said they might never have found the reclusive, 55-year-old ex-mathematics professor without the help provided by his brother.

David Kaczynski approached the FBI through an attorney after he read portions of the Unabomber's 35,000-word manifesto that federal agents had prevailed upon The Washington Post to publish. Its attack on modern technology reminded him of passages in letters from his brother, who had moved to Montana after quitting a job at the University of California at Berkeley.

Last September, David Kaczynski said, if he got the reward, he would use it to try to ease the grief of bomb victims' families.

"My mother and I respect their loss and wish to do whatever we can to ease their grief," David said then as he accepted a separate award for having the courage to notify authorities about his brother.

"I know that mere money cannot compensate for the loss of a loved one or rebuild a shattered life," David added.

The "Courage of Convictions" award was presented in September by Equinox, which runs the Albany-based youth shelter where he works.

He minimized his own courage, saying that ideal is more embodied in the homeless youngsters he counsels in his job.

He focused instead on thanking his mother, his wife and the friends who helped him out during the "bleak and hopeless" period when he began suspecting his brother was the Unabomber.

The pain of realizing his brother might be the Unabomber still lingers, David Kaczynski said then.

"The horror is with us now, and I very much doubt that it will ever leave us completely," he said. "Someone we love went over the edge — or so it seems."

"I hope that Ted will someday forgive me."

Attack against terrorist targets was in order

The stunning retaliatory attack launched by the U.S. Armed Forces Thursday morning against terrorist-related facilities in Afghanistan and Sudan for the embassy bombings in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam was a signal to all terrorist organizations that even with its president under fire, the United States will not hesitate to respond to a such an assault.

Targets of the assault were a terrorist base in Afghanistan operated by groups affiliated with Osama bin Laden, a network Clinton said is not sponsored by any state but extremely dangerous, and a chemical weapons-related facility in Sudan.

In ordering the strike, President Clinton showed he is still willing to meet aggression from terrorists head on despite the distraction caused by the investigations into a sexual relationship Clinton admits having had with White House intern Monica Lewinsky. That will probably raise his job approval rating with Americans.

The casualties from the embassy bombings illustrate the dangers that the United States and its citizens — at home or abroad — face from terrorist organizations.

But Defense Secretary William Cohen had already indicated that the United States would launch such a strike against those responsible for the embassy bombings that killed 11 Americans and numerous others two weeks ago once their identifies were known. Thousands were injured in those bombings.

During Thursday's press conference, Clinton listed four reasons for the retaliatory strike. He said:

- First, there is convincing evidence these groups played the key role in the embassy bombings.
- Second, the groups have executed terrorist attacks against Americans in the past.
- Third, there is compelling evidence the groups were planning additional attacks against U.S. citizens.
- Fourth, the groups are attempting to acquire chemical weapons and other dangerous weapons.

It's clear from the information that a military strike was in order. The casualties from the embassy bombings illustrate the dangers that the United States and its citizens — at home or abroad — face from terrorist organizations.

If anything, former staffers should apologize to Clinton

Over the last seven months, we've mostly refrained from entering the fray in the tawdry saga of Monica Lewinsky and the president.

Anderson

Pundits are supposed to have a point of view. We're supposed to be contrarians, challengers of conventional wisdom. But it's hard to do that when you agree with both sides.

We agree with those who say Ken Starr is an overzealous prosecutor who's trampled on civil liberties and defied common decency in his quest to bring the president to his knees. We also agree with those who say President Clinton is a prevaricating rogue whose behavior has undermined any pretense to moral leadership.

We agree with those who say Starr's four-year probe has been a costly squandering of scarce public resources; and we concur with those who claim much of the blame falls on the president and his henchmen, whose cover-ups and delays have contributed immeasurably to the cost and duration of the probe.

But we do not agree with the parade of former White House insiders who appeared in the press this week to whine about the tone of Clinton's apology. There was George Stephanopoulos, cashing in as an ABC commentator and complaining that Clinton wasn't "contrite" enough for his tastes. And there was the toe-sucking former confidante Dick Morris, the architect of Clinton's 1996 comeback, telling the Washington Post that "any (staffers) who were dumb enough to actually believe Clinton's stories deserve what happens to them."

With friends like Morris and Stephanopoulos, who've made millions off their relationship with the president, does he really need enemies?

Now that Clinton has finally said his peace, a host of former staffers seem to think they're owed some special presidential apology for defending his original story. Never mind that most of them will be eating free lunches for years based on their relationship with Clinton. They'll leave the White House and get fat consulting jobs or six-figure book advances because they once shared the president's confidence. They'll become lobbyists or open public-relations firms or hit the speaking circuit or get professorships at Harvard, all because they were once part of the president's inner circle. And now they want a special apology?

If anything, it is they who should apologize to Clinton.

After seven long months of watching the Lewinsky saga unfold, we find ourselves agreeing with the president. He took responsibility for his actions and apologized to his family, who are the ones most hurt by his tawdry affair with the tubby intern.

He eloquently expressed his frustration with the length and focus of the Starr probe. Though Stephanopoulos didn't like it, this was probably the most honest part of his five-minute statement.

And he expressed a hope shared by many: That this awful and embarrassing chapter can finally be put to rest. We couldn't agree more.

PARTY POLITICS — If you enjoy yoga and believe in the power of positive thinking, you may find a local hobby group or a website that helps you find others who share your interests.

In Germany, you'd start a political party.

The "Yoga Springers" is just one of 133 parties that have applied for placement on the ballot for the September elections. Their platform is based on the belief that the world would be a better place if everyone would just practice yoga and "jumping" more often.

Unfortunately, German authorities didn't share these people's enthusiasm for yoga and denied their place on the ballot. A federal board, empowered by the German constitution, decides which parties get a place on the ballot to fill 672 seats in the national parliament. Apparently the Yoga Springers didn't meet the required constitutional standards, which include "general benefit" to the German people.

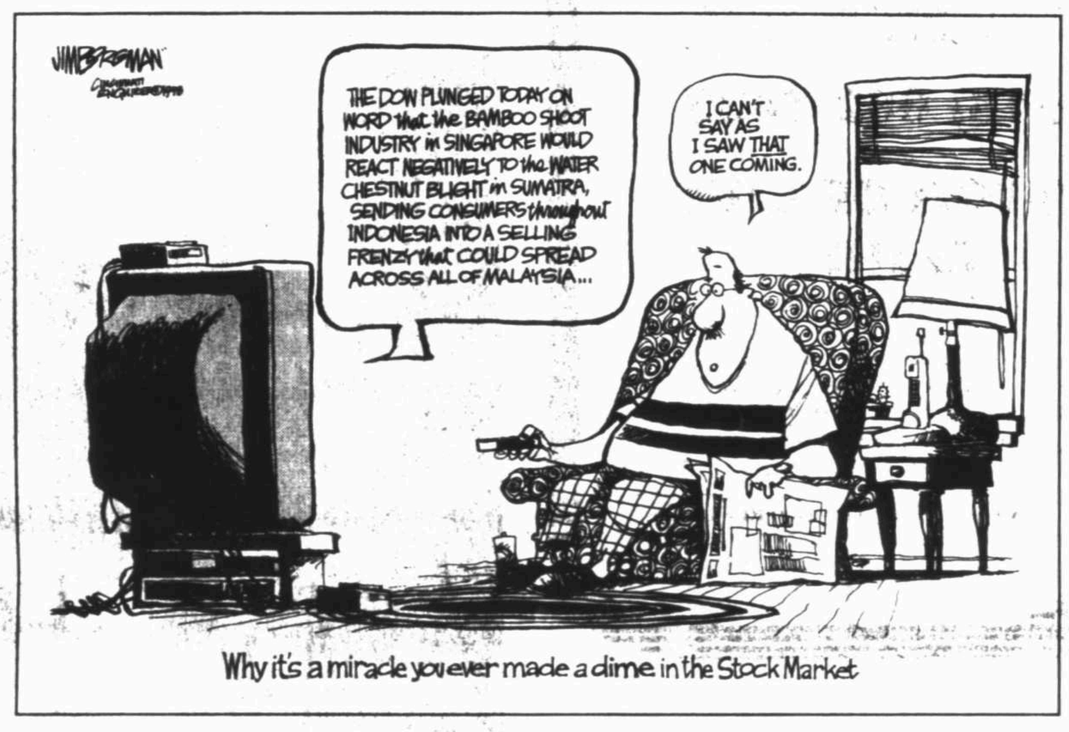

Nor will the Bike Riders Party, the I.N.V.A.L.I.D party (an acronym that translates loosely into "The union of people who look dumb but are really geniuses"), the Protesters and the APPD — a party that's against work but favors sex, booze and rock n' roll — have a place on the German ballot.

But 33 parties did find their way onto the lengthy ballot for Germany's late September elections. Which suggests that this largely homogeneous country may have something to teach the United States about multi-party elections.

Most of these parties will have little, if any, say in national affairs. To win even a single seat in Parliament, a party needs 5 percent of the popular vote. Only five parties met that test in the last elections four years ago. That means the Anarchists, the Cat Drivers of Hamburg and the Marxists probably won't be passing any bills.

Even the ubiquitous Green party, which usually attracts between 5 and 10 percent of voters for its environmentalist stands, won't be making much policy. One plank in its platform calls for a law limiting Germans to one airplane flight every five years as a way to save fuel.

Boomers headed for their own Great Depression

Baby boomers who missed the Great Depression are going to be treated by Fate to their very own, or so it looks to me.

Whether it will be as severe as the 1930 Depression, I don't know, but that's what is starting, slowly but surely. Production capacity now exceeds demand. Too many factories around the world are making more stuff than people want or can afford to buy.

It's that "can afford" element of demand that confuses people whose vision is blurred by greed. Gee, 1 billion Chinese customers. No, there's more than 1 billion Chinese people but considerably fewer who can afford to buy much of anything.

That's why people can starve while grain rots in storage bins. How can people starve when there's so much food in the world? Because they can't afford to buy it, that's why. That's also the fallacy of the don't-worry-about-population-increase crowd. Why, look at the statistics on food production. Well, you can look at them, but what counts is what people can afford to buy, not how much somebody 5,000 miles away can produce.

Reese

Let me pause and give you a great tip that will help you wade through the postmodern horse manure that is being mass manufactured by special pleaders in this country.

Statistics count things and measure things. They do not and cannot prove anything. Furthermore, they are abstract mental concepts. They are not real. Wheat in Nebraska is real. A starving child in Sudan is real. Statistically you can show that food production equals food needs, but that has nothing, and I mean nothing, to do with the wheat in Nebraska and a dying child in Sudan.

So what happens when demand falls is that the producers begin to cut prices. As they cut prices, and bid for the shrinking number of buyers, they have to start cutting expenses, which means layoffs. Some go bankrupt. More lose jobs. Every lost job is a reduction in demand because people out of work can't afford to buy much.

That's a truth American corporations seem to have forgotten. They seem to long for the day when they can produce their product without any workers. They do not seem to understand that if they ever do, they will also be producing a product for which there are no customers.

And, as the supply of jobs shrink relative to the number of people who need jobs, the price of labor is bid down, so even when you get a job, you don't make as much. That's more reduction in demand. So many married women work today not because of feminism but because it's harder and harder for a single paycheck to maintain a decent standard of living.

Don't worry too much about the Dow Jones index. Heck, that's only 30 stocks of blue-chip companies. Watch how many stocks go down as opposed to how many go up. Watch commodity prices. They are way down. Oil, as of this writing, is about $11 a barrel. That's below what it costs an American oil producer to pump it. That tells you there isn't a great demand for oil right now.

Here's a told-you-so: Keep that $11-a-barrel oil in mind and go back to 1976-77, when Jimmy Carter and his CIA were telling the American people that the world was fast running out of oil and that it would soon be unaffordable. The independent petroleum producers pointed out some years ago that American politicians have been proclaiming the imminent end of oil production periodically since the turn of the century. Kind of like those end-of-the-world guys.

Anyway, what you baby boomers will discover is that depression means that the price of everything goes down – both products and labor. The cycle won't start again until there is some balance between production and demand.

Contrary to popular belief, Franklin Roosevelt didn't end the Great Depression. Adolf Hitler and World War II ended it. Maybe you'll get your own great war, too.

Act of contrition had nothing to do with contrition

So went the president's Monday night act of contrition, which turned out to have almost nothing to do with contrition and almost everything to do with saving the presidential hide -- again.

We have been down this same road often, hand in hand with our confessional president -- though never before perhaps when the stakes were so high. Saddam Hussein hurls defiance at the world and builds weapons of mass destruction; American embassies are bombed in Africa; no sense of national purpose informs us. And our president summons us to take in his latest Houdini act. Irony of ironies, I left a Boy Scout meeting early to watch.

Murchison

Of course, in the Clinton worldview, this thing isn't his fault, certainly not! The cause of national distraction is the special prosecutor and an investigation that needs to be ended now. Clinton forgets why cats sniff around trash heaps: because of the trash someone threw there.

Bill Clinton, self-obsessed, self-seeking, is in some degree the ideal president for a self-obsessed, self-seeking time. His poll ratings are no shock: If there is anything that good modern folk don't believe in, that thing is the singling out of actions, beliefs, and "lifestyles" for approval or disapproval.

Still, one doesn't want to blame the American people for the derelictions of an elected leader. A plurality of voters – for reasons unclear to other voters, but that's why we have elections -- saw something in Bill Clinton: warmth, compassion, commitment. They hoped for a better America under his leadership.

It turns out he was incapable of fulfilling such hopes. This president is not strong at all; he is weak -- unable to control his impulses; prone to blame others for his troubles and shortcomings. The president's physical bulk deceives; he is not a big man at all -- he is in many sorrowful ways a boy of about 15.

Something generous in the American spirit wants to make excuses for the weak. Inability to control impulses – why, it could happen to anybody ; all that Clinton's inability means is that he is very like the rest of us.

Possibly. That is not the point, even so. The point is, we the people of the United States do not elect presidents to be just like us. We elect them to be better -- stronger, wiser, more attuned to the age's needs and opportunities. This is why we read and sing about such figures; observe their birthdays; name streets and buildings after them.

Average Joe-ness stops at the Oval Office door, or anyway is supposed to as the legacy of George Washington and his successors transforms and transmutes.

How came this not to happen in Bill Clinton's case? Sidewalk psychologizing is not of much help. In any case, the president himself is the legitimate parent of what is blossoming into a cottage industry -- the endless analysis of Clintonian frailties and complexities. His place in history? That's it, probably -- the president who, at his wrongest, was never wrong; just misunderstood; just unfairly criticized -- and -- and -- make them stop picking on me, Ma!

How ineffably sad it all is. There is good in Billy Blythe Clinton. He just doesn't know how to make the most of it. His adult qualities never quite overwhelm his adolescent ones. The old Greeks referred to this condition as tragedy.

Well, the time for despair isn't yet. The next presidential election may rescue us -- politically at least. (Spiritually, is something else.) Whoever wins will likely have run as the Un-Clinton, full of solemn moral purpose. Gov. George W. Bush set the tone with a non-political political ad that ran the day of Clinton's mea-not-very-culpa. The ad plugged moral responsibility and the political leadership's duty to put those words into effect. The ad never mentioned Clinton: no need of that.

Divorced couple are forced to live together

By John Affleck
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — For three years, Alain and Cheryl Doucet were like a cat and dog forced to live in the same cage.

The couple divorced in 1995, but the judge ordered them to reside together until their youngest child turned 18.

The result? Separate phone lines, separate televisions, separate refrigerator shelves for his food and hers. Even a padlock on Ms. Doucet's bedroom door.

The Doucets tried to avoid crossing paths in the four-bedroom house. They spoke only when absolutely necessary. And as much as possible, they tried to stay away from the tension-filled place, still adorned with a quaint "Home Sweet Home" sign on the front door.

"It's been hell," Ms. Doucet said.

The Doucets met in 1975 in Niagara Falls, N.Y., the Honeymoon Capital of the World, and married a few months later. Things soon turned sour. He says she was irresponsible. She says he was domineering. They filed for divorce in 1992.

After three more years of feuding, Cuyahoga County Judge Stanley Fisher issued a divorce decree in which he ordered that "both parties are to remain in residential property until the youngest child, Stacey, reaches the age of 18 years and/or graduates from high school."

Fisher refused to say this week why he gave such an order or comment on the case.

A student, Ms. Doucet, 48, spent a good deal of time at her community college classes. Sometimes she would head out for the movies, sneaking back in only after everybody was asleep. Her ex-husband, 51, took refuge in his job helping direct shipping and receiving for a rail manufacturer.

But there were times when the pair couldn't avoid each other.

"If you went to the bathroom and the door was closed, you just had to wait there," Ms. Doucet said.

Ms. Doucet said the setup eventually caused "plenty of screaming and yelling" between her and her children, and "our relationship is totally gone."

According to Fisher's original order, the Doucets were to finally get rid of each other last Friday, when Stacey turned 18. But Doucet left early, remarrying and moving out on May 2. Despite their misery, Ms. Doucet tried unsuccessfully to block him from leaving.

"I didn't care that he was getting married, but he was breaking a court order," she said.

As for Stacey, he moved in with his father on his birthday. "It feels like dropping a load off my back," he said. "I sleep better now."

Although the Doucets have little in common these days, they do agree on one thing: Their divorce didn't have to be this bad.

"If I had known what the judicial system was going to do to us, I would have packed my bags," Doucet said.

NOW to protest Promise Keepers rally in Houston

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — The Texas president of the National Organization for Women joined some local clergy members and others Thursday in criticizing the Promise Keepers organization, which is starting a conference Friday night in the Astrodome.

NOW and others will protest the event at 5 p.m., CDT, Saturday, said Houston attorney Jeanne Sommerfeld.

Promise Keepers, a "Christian outreach for men," was founded by former University of Colorado football coach Bill McCartney. Its emotional rallies fill sports stadiums nationwide, featuring men of all races praying together, confessing their failings, and promising to be better husbands and fathers.

The problem with that, said Sommerfeld and the pastors, is that the aims are promoted through an intolerant fundamentalism that subordinates women, oppresses homosexuals and promotes right-wing political aims.

Promise Keepers, a Denver-based group, urges men to make seven promises, including "practicing spiritual, moral, ethical and sexual purity" and "building strong marriages and families through love, protection and biblical values."

Horror stories drive debate over HMO bills

Associated Press

Stephanie Ulrich has a horror story to tell about how two insurers wouldn't pay for the rehabilitation that helped her walk and speak again.

She has told the tale in thousands of newspapers. She has told it on Capitol Hill. She has told it on "Good Morning America." It has also been sent to 1,000 federal and state legislators and reporters, rolling off the fax machines of California senators last month as they pondered a bill giving patients the right to sue HMOs.

America's health care debate is being fought out via horror stories and personal anecdotes from both sides.

Consumer groups are marketing stories like Ms. Ulrich's in one-page faxes, complete with name and photo, in an effort to win support from legislators and the public for proposed HMO reforms.

Managed care companies have long lamented "legislation by anecdote." But apparently conceding that personal stories hold the power to drive the health care debate, they, too, are telling some tales of their own.

The patient advocacy group Consumers for Quality Care circulated Ms. Ulrich's tale as part of a daily HMO "Casualty of the Day" campaign. That effort inspired an employer group, the Healthcare Leadership Council, to counter with its own daily fax to reporters and legislators, dubbed "Medical Miracles." And Aetna U.S. Healthcare plans to weigh in with an advertising campaign this fall featuring member testimonials.

Among the recent "Medical Miracles" headlines: "California Woman Praises Health Plan"; "Clinic Helps Little Girl Beat Odds"; and "Ohio Woman, Once Homeless, Now Plays in Symphony Orchestra."

The stories are anonymous, and they face stiff competition from patients willing to offer the consumer group stories of insurers who choose money over medicine.

Among the recent "Casualty of the Day" entries: "Cancer Patient Dies from HMO Delays"; "HMO Delays Bone Marrow Treatment and Patient Dies"; and Ms. Ulrich's story, "HMO Denies Hospital Care for Aneurysm, Then Rehabilitation Costs."

"I want the insurance companies to know that they're dealing with real people, and that real people shouldn't be treated this way," said Ms. Ulrich, a 23-year-old Southwest Texas State University graduate student whose slight slur reminds listeners of her ordeal. "I want to protect people from what the insurance companies are doing."

Michael Freeman of the Washington-based Healthcare Leadership Council said the group started its "Medical Miracles" campaign to point out that in millions of daily transactions, patients are satisfied with their treatment.

"The health care system is not 100 percent perfect. There are mistakes made and tragedies are horrible when they happen," he said. "But they're not characteristic of the American health system, and that's what the authors of the horror stories are trying to say."

■ More nation news/8B

Jamie Court, author of many of the "Casualty of the Day" faxes, disagrees.

"The fact that managed care is calling it a 'miracle' when patients get their care right is an admission that tragedies occur often," he said. "The HMO campaign is like the automobile industry writing a daily letter about all the Pintos that didn't explode."

After she suffered an aneurysm in her brain, Ms. Ulrich's insurer, NYLCare — now part of Aetna U.S. Healthcare — declined to pay for a costly stay in a rehabilitation center and wanted to put the then-22-year-old in a nursing home, she recalled. It said that because of the aneurysm, she could not be rehabilitated.

She can now walk and talk again after a rehabilitation program paid for under a Blue Cross and Blue Shield plan she joined later. An Aetna spokeswoman said the company needed more time to review her files.

On the strength of such stories, Texas last year became the first state to allow individuals to sue their HMOs.

In California, Democratic Assemblywoman Liz Figeroa said the true tales of real people have helped her press for bills like the HMO liability measure she wrote. The legislation has been approved by the state Assembly.

City gets rain, but drought not over

Jan Florer walks through rain-swollen Grafa Park on Thursday. Midland received up to three-quarters of an inch of rain Thursday.

Mother Nature dumped as much as three-quarters of an inch of rain in Midland on Thursday, but moisture over the past two days hasn't been enough for area nurseries or farmers.

T.J. Turnage, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service, said the rain won't end the 1998 drought, which some experts are saying is the worst since the 1950s.

"Our total rainfall for the year is still under three inches, almost as little as a third of what we should have," Turnage said. "We really should almost be near nine (inches). It helps the drought but it certainly doesn't end it."

Turnage said for Thursday's rain, the area had a lot of tropical moisture in place from the Gulf of Mexico. An upper level atmosphere disturbance moved from east to west and helped bring rain to the area.

It's too little, too late for cotton farmers like Vernon Chandler, who has a farm four miles south of Midland International Airport.

Chandler said the year has been so dry that he wasn't able to grow any cotton and this week's rain came too late into the growing season.

It just helps him plant cover crop to keep the soil in place for next year's crop.

"It looks better today than yesterday, one inch of rain," he said. "I guess we'll be planting some kind of cover crop like maize and sudan."

The year has been terrible for cotton farmers.

"There's no dryland cotton in any part of the county. It just didn't rain enough for it to ever come up," he said. "You've got to plant cotton in May or the first of June, so we never did get it started. We've just been plowing the ground to keep the weeds cut down. We don't have anything growing.

"We won't have a cash crop this year."

At Alldredge Gardens nursery, manager Karen Schneider said most of the rain has fallen on other parts of town and hasn't helped the business at 3300 N. Fairgrounds Rd.

"We got probably a 10-minute shower. We've gotten probably enough to wet the ground, and that's it," Ms. Schneider said. "Out here, it either skirts north or south of us.

AmeriCorps tutors

Volunteers are sought to serve as reading tutors for the AmeriCorps' program at Casa de Amigos. Volunteers would be working with kindergartners through third-graders and must be able to work part time Sept. 1 through August 1999. Applicants must be at least 18, pass a literacy test, undergo a criminal history check and have at least a high school diploma or GED certificate. AmeriCorps volunteers receive a monthly living allowance and an educational award of $2,363 at the end of their service. Applications may be submitted at Casa, 1101 E. Garden Lane. For more information call 682-9701.

Hate crimes

ARLINGTON — Hate crimes will increasingly be committed by lone wolves who hold bigoted beliefs, not by organized groups such as the Ku Klux Klan, a former hate-group member said Thursday. "Those who are reading the literature, getting into the philosophy ... that's the danger right now," Kerry Noble, who once plotted to bomb a gay and lesbian church, told a conference on hate crime. Lone wolves will be harder to catch, he predicted.

Corn fungus

HARLINGEN — The drought has dealt a two-fisted blow to corn growers in South Texas — not only do they have reduced yields because of the drought, but most of what's left is contaminated with toxin-making fungi exacerbated by dry weather. The hot, dry weather has caused corn kernels to crack open, clearing a path for aspergillus flavus and aspergillus parasiticus to grow. The fungi produce aflatoxin, a cancer-causing chemical that can cause liver damage in humans and animals.

DENTON — The bugs have gone to college. Unfortunately, they've died there, too. Anyone living in, or even passing through, Denton County over the past few weeks has certainly noticed the little buggers — crickets and grasshoppers mainly — that have gone from being country dwellers to city folk. And they've moved up the educational ladder, attracted to the University of North Texas and Texas Woman's University for their own unique reasons.

Welfare rolls

HOUSTON (AP) — Correcting human error is one of the contributing reasons welfare rolls are dropping statewide and locally, according to state human services statistics.

In Harris County, Texas' most populous, the number of welfare cases has dropped 64 percent over the five-year period ending last month. That decrease outpaces the nation, where caseloads have shrunk by as much as 40 percent.

In addition to a booming economy and welfare reform — in which government entices welfare applicants to apply for jobs instead of cash benefits — officials cite a five-year effort to reduce the number of ineligible recipients making on the rolls.

"We had a really high error rate," said Mamie Ewing, the Houston-based state human services administrator. "We've done a lot to improve that."

Initiatives such as visits to applicants' homes, better interviewing techniques by caseworkers and regular review of current caseloads, have been in place since 1993, she said.

The Lumberyard Church

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Ryan Reddell has purchased a building at 401 S. Main St. and, with the help of volunteers from Brothers and Sisters in Christ (BASIC) Ministries, converted it into a church. Janet Pollard is a BASIC Ministries board member and was a key player in the project.

Group converts building for use by local churches

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff Writer

For years, Ryan Reddell drove to and from work down Main Street, never paying much mind to an old vacant building that once had housed a hardware store.

Then one day, as he thought of how well-off Midland is and how the town is stocked with big, powerful churches and wealthy parishioners, Reddell's thoughts drifted to the other side of town, where the churches are small and the congregations spirit-filled but maybe not as well-off as many others in town.

It was then that Reddell noticed the old vacant building at 401 S. Main St.

"I can't help but notice the scores of churches in our community that are truly doing without," Reddell said. "And the problem is magnified in Midland since it is such a wealthy city and the contrast is so obvious."

With the problem identified, Reddell, subconsciously perhaps, set about to find a solution. Several months ago, he made an offer to a Realtor. Two days later his phone rang.

Police in Odessa investigate alleged attempted murder

By Richard Enos
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Odessa police are investigating an alleged attempted murder case where a car was driven over an Odessa man.

Mark Mason Cottrell, 37, remained in critical condition on Thursday in the intensive care unit at Medical Center Hospital.

Odessa Police Cpl. Bob Hammerman, public information officer, said police have a suspect, but have made no arrests. They plan to interview more people first.

"We're waiting to finalize a lot of the affidavits and witness statements," Hammerman said.

The main suspect is a man in his 20s and is 5'8" tall and weighs 218 pounds. He has black hair and hazel eyes and lives in Odessa.

Hammerman said the crime occurred at about 10:30 p.m. on Wednesday at Springwood Apartments on 1401 Harless Road. Cottrell was in the parking lot when a gray Ford Thunderbird struck him.

Theater by children focuses on girl who turns her life around

By Richard Enos
Staff Writer

Midlanders can come watch the theatrical talent of children on Saturday.

More than 30 children ages 6 to 18 will treat audiences to the play "Bit by Bit" at 7 p.m. at Washington Park on 1601 E. Indiana. The play is made possible by an alliance of Midland organizations and a state arts grant.

Genny Bynum, a representative of the Midland Fine Arts Center, said the play will focus on the life of a girl who is graduating from high school and is reflecting on her stormy past.

"There is a young girl who grows up in a fairly normal family," Ms. Bynum said. "She ends up getting involved with the wrong group of kids. It kind of snowballs. She ends up being involved in gang, she gets pregnant, gets involved in crime. She ends up deciding that 'hey, this isn't how I want to live my life.'"

Miss America talks to students about AIDS

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Kate Shindle, the latest product of the changing Miss America Pageant, came to Midland Thursday to talk about the changing face of AIDS and the need for public discussion.

As the reigning Miss America, Ms. Shindle has devoted herself and her position to AIDS activism around the world.

The Miss America Pageant is no longer a simple beauty contest, she said at a Thursday gathering at the Midland Hilton and Towers. "It's about social activism and taking your personal commitments to a national level," she said.

Ms. Shindle said it was simple to bring her long-time desire to fight against the spread of AIDS and HIV. "The two were really married all along," she said.

As a teenager in Evanston, Ill., Ms. Shindle traveled to San Francisco with her classmates and spent her spring break helping prepare and display the massive quilt knitted from panels dedicated to those who have died from the disease.

The overwhelming effect of visualizing the numbers of dead in this endless sea of quilt made such an impact on the young woman, she vowed to fight against this killer, she said.

"Two roads in my life met earlier this year. As an AIDS volunteer pursuing the title of Miss

Duct tape the luggage and fill a trash can with cat food — it's vacation time

López

God willing, I should be going on vacation soon. I bet the readers are just as thankful as our staff that I'm finally leaving.

I forgot how much time and energy it takes to plan a trip, since I haven't taken one in about three years. Here's something a lot of people could probably relate to — my list of things I need to take care of before going:

1) Get my car's new inspection sticker. It lapsed two months ago, but I'm still convinced it's actually within the grace period. I might have to park two blocks from the garage, let my car cool down for three hours and then drive it to the shop. That way, the drive won't be long enough for my motor to burn oil and my car has a better chance of passing the emissions test.

2) Wash clothes. All of them, not just the piles outside the hamper. I could go to the laundromat and get 10 loads done at once. Then again, I can just pack dirty clothes, let Mom wash them, wear them during my stay and then have Mom wash them again before I leave.

3) Buy cat food. Lots of it. Like two bucketfuls. If not, I will find shredded carpet, bedding and furniture as a welcome-home-you-dimwit gift from my cat, Smokey. I might dump four large bags of dry food into a garbage can and hope that it will be enough to sustain his life for a week.

4) Throw out the trash. I wouldn't want to have the neighbors call 911 because they think they smell my rotting corpse, which in fact, would be last week's left-over pot roast.

5) Cancel newspaper and magazine subscriptions. Forget doing it for security reasons. I wouldn't want anyone to steal and enjoy my publications after I paid for them.

6) Turn in video rentals. I forgot to turn in a copy of "The Doom Generation" last time I went on vacation, and ended up paying more than $50 in late fees.

7) Empty the fridge. (See number 4).

8) Pay the bills ... or at least some of them. Let's face it. I'm gonna have some bill backlog after the trip, so I might as well pay for the important ones, like electricity, phone and Internet service, etc ... I could hold out on the remaining ones until Mafia debt collectors show up at my front door.

9) Prepare luggage. I have to seal up the rips and frayed seams in my luggage with duct tape. I wonder when the day will come that the airline says, "Sir, your luggage is not safe for our handling." Oh yeah, when I'm done fixing them, I have to stuff things inside them.

10) Beg a friend for a ride to the airport. I called taxi cabs around this area and discovered that their prices from my apartment to the airport would be one-fifth of my plane ticket. It would be cheaper and easier to bribe a pal with breakfast or lunch than pay cab fare. It only works once, so I guess I'll have to figure something else out when I get back in town.

BASIC: Facility available for use by local churches

(From 1B)

"The Realtor called me and asked me if I was interested in the building, and if I would make an offer," Reddell said. The Realtor said the offer was low, but that the previous owners had indicated their eagerness to part with the property. The next day, the building belonged to Reddell. Or — maybe to someone else, as Reddell explained.

"When it finally became a reality, I sensed that God had a purpose for this building," he said.

Volunteer workers with Brothers and Sisters in Christ (BASIC) Ministries will watch the result of six months of work come to fruition Saturday as "The Lumberyard Church" hosts a fund-raiser complete with a full day of Christian music and food. Proceeds from ticket sales ($6 for adults, $5 for children) will go toward the creation of an outside recreational facility that includes a full-size basketball court, sandlot volleyball, a children's playground and a picnic area. All outdoor recreational facilities are located south of the main structure.

Dinner at the fund-raiser will be served from 4-6 p.m. Entertainment begins at 2 p.m. and concludes with a 7:30 p.m. concert by First Baptist Praise. Miss Texas, Regan Hughes, and Karen Fisher, will sing at 6 p.m.

Inside The Lumberyard Church is ample seating, a stage, pulpit, and a recreation area on the east side of the interior of the structure.

The building is the home church building for Iglesia Bautista Antioquia, and Reddell's and BASIC's main goal is to offer a facility not only for the Antioquia church, but for churches that may not have adequate space or funding for larger gatherings, according to Janet Pollard, a key player in the project and a BASIC Ministries board member.

In addition to reaching out to the estimated 30,000-plus Protestant Hispanics in Midland who do not regularly attend church, Reddell said the church's other ministry is to provide.

"We feel there is a need to make this facility available to the Christian community, making the building available for events such as revivals, Christian concerts and other activities," Reddell said.

Already, the building has hosted a Vacation Bible School — attended by more than 100 children — and a community-wide Praise and Worship Concert, a well-attended event in June when choir members and singers from many churches in Midland joined together to form one large choir.

In late October, the Lumberyard Church will be the site of Hallowed House, a Christian alternative to haunted houses that last year was hosted by Fannin Terrace Baptist Church.

"This is God at work," Ms. Pollard said during a recent tour of the structure. Ms. Pollard said the only thing the building doesn't have, but is in need of, is a baptistery behind the podium.

"My deepest concern is that we are living in the last days before Christ's return, and the harvest time is now," Reddell said. "My prayer is that this building will be used as a place of harvest."

'Lumberyard Church' fund-raiser schedule

Tickets for Saturday's fund-raiser can be purchased at the door, or in advance by calling Reddell (683-3919) or Lynn Paul (685-0747). For more information, or to help with future events at the church, call Reddell, Ms. Pollard (682-9008), Sergio Alvarado, pastor of Iglesia Bautista Antioquia (699-4748) or Deborah Fikes (694-8636).

(From 2B)

America, I recognized the possibility for my personal commitment to touch the lives of young people nationwide. I also saw an opportunity to turn the spotlight where I felt it was most needed — HIV prevention," she said.

It is this devotion that brought the 21-year-old celebrity to Midland — responding to an invitation from Judy Warren, executive director of the Midland Area AIDS Support association.

"I was invited to come and speak and I was happy to accept," said Ms. Shindle, who has attended the World AIDS Conference in Geneva and travels an average of 20,000 miles each month.

Because of her title, Ms. Shindle is finding that she can reach groups that may not be exposed to AIDS prevention information. She tailors her frankness on the topic, however, depending on the nature of her audience, she said.

'A lot of communities have a hard time (with AIDS education), but feel safe inviting Miss America to speak.'

— Miss America, Kate Schindle

"A lot of communities have a hard time (with AIDS education), but feel safe inviting Miss America to speak," she said.

Her main focus is sparking dialogue about AIDS and the latest scientific information about its spread and its prevention, she said.

"It's important to open dialogue ... to have parents talk to children and talk to the school board members," she said.

"Its important that people not be afraid to be proactive, and even somewhat aggressive," she said.

Of the 60,000 new HIV infections each month, half are in people 25 and younger, she said. It is important to reach people at a young age with this information, she said.

"HIV as a disease is changing — it's not just a gay disease any more," she said.

Ms. Shindle spoke to students at both Midland High School and Lee High School on Friday, and was well received there.

"She did the most beautiful job," Ms. Warren said of the pageant-winner's speech to local students.

From Midland, Ms. Shindle will travel to Atlanta, Ga., then to Hartford, Conn. From there she will visit Columbus, Ohio, Chicago and Boston as her year of traveling and speaking continues.

Her final talk during her stay in Midland, at the Hilton ballroom, was a fund-raiser for Midland Area AIDS Support, providing funds to help AIDS victims and their families in the Permian Basin.

PLAY: Girl gives speech at graduation about how life has changed

(From 1B)

The girl decides to stay in school and improve her grades and take care of her child.

The play opens at the young woman's high school graduation, and she reflects on her past.

"She has turned her life around so much, they ask her to give a speech at graduation," Ms. Bynum said.

A key part of the play is a mural the children painted at the park.

Everything in the play was the children's idea, Ms. Bynum said.

"The kids have written the whole play, they have painted the whole mural," she said. "They're getting their costumes together. They're getting their props together."

The play was made possible with a $7,000 grant from Texas Network of Youth Services, a state fine arts organization. Local organizers decided a mural would be a great way to mark the event.

"It's to promote the arts to youth..." Ms. Bynum said. "What we wanted to do with our (grant) is not only put on a production for the youth, but also have a permanent structure.....so that it would be there for them to enjoy permanently."

Local organizations involved in the project include the Arts Assembly of Midland, Mental Health & Mental Retardation Center of Midland, Casa de Amigos, High Sky Children's Ranch and Campfire Boys and Girls.

Free refreshments will be served after the show. For more information, call 687-1149.

RAIN: Nurseries still very dry

(From 1B)

She said the drought has had some impact on the nursery.

"When you have drought conditions it brings on other problems, like (watering) with trees," she said. "It's also created another avenue where people come out for advice."

Still, business has been steady this year for the 11-acre nursery. But a rain would help.

"Our water is pretty good out here, you need a good rain to leech the salt and minerals through the soil," she said. "We could definitely take a couple of inches. It's dry as a bone out here."

At Garden View Greenhouses, Jorge Hernandez said he didn't get much rain, either.

"We got about an inch (yesterday)," he said. "Today we got nothing. It's been like that for a year."

Today's National Weather Service forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a less than 20 percent chance of rain and a high near 90 degrees.

ATTEMPT: Police do not know motive, but do have a suspect

(From 1B)

"The individual was lodged under the front of the vehicle, until the vehicle backed up and struck him a second time," Hammerman said. "The vehicle backed up and left the scene southboard on Harless."

Police originally thought the incident was a hit-and-run pedestrian accident, but learned more after arriving on the scene.

Several people witnessed the attack and knew the suspect driving the car, Hammerman said. Police later found the suspect at West L.A. bar on 2101 E. 8 St.

The motive at this time is a mystery, Hammerman said. Because of Cotrell's injuries, police haven't had a chance to interview him.

"(There's) no indication right away as to what the motive was," he said. "From the police report it's apparent that they knew each other."

The case remains under investigation.

"Due to the extent of injuries, this was handled as a major criminal investigation," Hammerman said. "We are still in the process of interviewing people. It will eventually be presented to the district attorney or through him to the grand jury."

DENTON (AP) — The bugs have gone to college. Unfortunately, they've died there, too.

Anyone living in, or even passing through, Denton County over the past few weeks has certainly noticed the little buggers — crickets and grasshoppers mainly — that have gone from being country dwellers to city folk.

And they've moved up the educational ladder, attracted to the University of North Texas and Texas Woman's University for their own unique reasons.

Mainly, people say, they're there because the campuses have lots of tasty green grass to munch on and bright outdoor lights to hang around at night.

Granted, there have been hordes of crickets and grasshoppers at other places around town — the county courthouse, schools, most people's living rooms and kitchens — but the piles of them at UNT and TWU are attracting a lot of attention.

"I hate it. It's been like a horror movie with me as the star and all these crickets," lamented Lyana Barrera, a TWU junior and lifeguard at TWU's outdoor pool.

She works the early shift at the pool, arriving when the crickets are jumping and the stench of rotting carcasses is beginning to fill the morning air.

"I've gotten used to the smell," she said with a rueful grin at the pool. Others haven't.

"The stench is so bad it smells like a dead mammal of some type," said Shirley Price, a professional counselor who goes to TWU's Pioneer Hall each day for an afternoon swim and aerobics workout at the Wellness Center. "It's a shame TWU would let such a situation exist."

Well, TWU is doing all it can, said Larry Harrison, director of the TWU physical plant. Problem is, he said, there are just too many dead bugs to handle.

"We have got a terrific number of carcasses out there," Harrison said. "There's just no way you can get all of them."

Harrison said the Terminix company, which does work on a contract basis for the university, has sprayed insecticides on the bugs, which probably has led to many of them dying and piling up around campus.

Plus, the crickets and grasshoppers who have moved into Denton are nearing the end of their natural life spans anyway, according to Rebecca Parker, the extension agent with the Denton County agricultural extension office. She said that as the city slickers die off, the problem will shift even more from being one of jumping bugs to being a nuisance of smelly decomposing bugs. Either way, it isn't pleasant.

"It's something we're just going to have to live through," Ms. Parker said.

There are things to counter some of the smell. Ms. Parker said people can dust the dead bugs with lime, which causes them to decompose more rapidly.

Harrison said TWU has taken a two-pronged approach. Grounds crews are using vacuum-powered backpacks to suck up many of the small bodies, and they're sweeping and power-blowing some into the grass. Plus, they're spreading a deodorizer over as many rotting bugs as they can.

"It's my belief that's about as much as you can do," he said. "I'm more than willing to listen to any recommendations."

Michael Woodby, an assistant grounds supervisor at UNT, said crews are doing all they can to remedy the situation. UNT used an insecticide on the lawns and on as many bugs as they could, but he admits that it's a tough problem to control.

"Wherever they pile up, we've been shoveling them up and trying to dispose of them," he said.

"It takes more manpower than we would like to spend on it, but we have no choice. It's a health issue, plus it really does stink," he said.

On the brighter side, there are some area dwellers who appear to be happy with the bugs, Harrison said.

"To Tell The Truth"
It was a TV feature show of the 50s and 60s on the old b/w box screens of those early days. Remember? Three people would take the stage, all claiming to be "John Doe." Contestants would dig and search with questions that might uncover the truth. Then the quizmaster would say, "now, will the real John Doe please stand?" Often, it was a real surprise. Folks can be mighty convincing even when they're lying! But listen to God. "A false witness shall not be unpunished: and he that speaketh lies shall not escape." Proverbs 19:5.
Is it all over in Washington? Do we believe "newsmakers" whose spin on the truth says that "average Americans" don't really care... "his private life is his business." Blame for lying was shifted by President Clinton to three other problems...his own shame, having to hurt his family, and the unfair investigation. Well, sir, you could have saved us $50 million by just telling the truth nine months ago!
"And they will deceive every one his neighbor, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity." Jeremiah 9:5. Now, will the real man of truth please stand up!

Police officers and educators discuss ways to prevent hate crimes

ARLINGTON (AP) — Hate crimes will increasingly be committed by lone wolves who hold bigoted beliefs, not by organized groups such as the Ku Klux Klan, a former hate-group member said Thursday.

"Those who are reading the literature, getting into the philosophy ... that's the danger right now," Kerry Noble, who once plotted to bomb a gay and lesbian church, told a conference on hate crime. Lone wolves will be harder to catch, he predicted.

Noble, federal prosecutors and others addressed a conference on hate crime, which was attended by about 200 local law enforcement officials and educators.

The speakers called for earlier identification and counseling of youngsters who might commit hate crimes.

"When you look at people charged with hate crimes, what you see are high school dropouts, broken homes, people who never had a chance," said Bill Lann Lee, acting assistant U.S. attorney general for civil rights.

"By the time it gets to the criminal prosecution stage, there have been a lot of failures," Lee said in an interview during a conference on hate crimes.

Texas became Ground Zero for hate crimes in late June, when three white men in Jasper were accused of beating a black man, chaining him to their truck and dragging him to his death. In the weeks after the killing of James Byrd Jr., the Klan and the New Black Panthers staged dueling protests.

Walker Diggles, an economic development official from Jasper, said the quick arrest of suspects eased blacks' fear of a cover-up.

"I think the community has really come together with the tragedy. I think we're going to see our way through it," Diggles said.

Others at the conference warned of the lasting damage left by hate crimes — among both victims and the entire community.

"It's a terrorist act that hits the whole community, creating fear," said Mark Briskman, director of the Anti-Defamation League in North Texas.

The Texas Department of Public Safety reported 331 hate crimes last year, about three-quarters of them racially motivated. Hate crimes have declined in Dallas, a police lieutenant said, from 70 in 1996 to 42 last year and 17 so far this year. But only two arrests have been made in those 17 cases this year.

Nationwide, the FBI reported 8,759 hate crimes in 1996, with 5,396 based on race, 1,401 on religion, 1,016 on sexual orientation, 940 on ethnic background and six for multiple motives.

Lee, the acting U.S. attorney general, and U.S. Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas, called for expanding the definition of a hate crime to allow federal prosecution of crimes motivated by the victim's sex, sexual orientation or disability.

President Clinton has endorsed the legislation, but it has run into opposition from Republicans who say state hate-crime laws already protect gays, women and the disabled. According to the Human Rights Campaign, a gay-rights advocacy group, 22 states have hate-crime laws covering gays.

Thursday's conference drew about 200 people from local police agencies, school districts and community groups.

Petition to put prairie dog on endangered list angers some

By Chris Newton
Associated Press

'I'd have to see some hard data to convince me they need to be endangered species. I mean, come on — those things are everywhere.'
— rancher Jim McAdams

They tried poisoning the furry brown gopher-sized burrowers. Drowning them. Even yanking them out of the ground with their bare hands.

The pesky prairie dogs still run rampant.

"We couldn't keep them off the land," said McAdams, who now works as employee on a company-owned ranch outside of Lubbock. "All you could do was control the population and try to keep it to a reasonable level."

So McAdams thought it was a bad joke when he learned the National Wildlife Federation has petitioned the Office of Endangered Species of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, claiming the black-tailed prairie dogs are nearly extinct and asking that they be protected.

"I'd have to see some hard data to convince me they need to be endangered species," McAdams said. "I mean, come on — those things are everywhere."

Some Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association officials have vowed to resist the effort, which they brand conservation overkill.

If prairie dogs were given the status of endangered species, they would be protected by law and farmers and ranchers could be forced to meet strict regulations on attempts to control their population — even on their own property.

"We'll fight it," Ron Helm, a rancher in Van Horn who is vice president of the organization's wildlife committee, told the Wichita Falls Times Record News. "As an association, we haven't taken a full-blown stance against it. But we will."

The Fish and Wildlife Service has until the end of October to decide if a full investigation is warranted and then would have a year to decide whether the animal should make the list.

While cute, even endearing, from a distance, prairie dogs irritate landowners who say their tunnel networks kill grass and turn hay fields into dusty, useless deserts. The dogs' homes, which are small, hand-sized holes, also are a danger to cattle and horses who could break their legs if they step in while running, cattlemen say.

Tom France, a National Wildlife Federation official who helped forward the petition, says ranchers and farmers supply only anecdotal evidence that the dogs are not near extinction.

"Just because there are a dozen dogs on someone's property doesn't mean that the animal isn't in danger," he said. Instead, he contends the group's studies show the prairie dogs' days could be numbered.

Less than three years ago, there were 100 million to 250 million acres of prairie dog colonies, called towns, across the United States, according to a National Wildlife Federation report. Now there are only about 800,000 acres of dog towns.

Those that remain are smaller and farther apart then they used to be, France said. Wildlife experts say that means the dog colonies are more likely to be completely wiped out by a disease.

The dogs also have been affected by the encroachment of farmland into their habitat.

"When you look at the factors that cause a species to go extinct, the prairie dog faces all of them," France said. "We have to take a look at what we have done to the animal and decide that it is worth saving."

It's easy to see why even city-dwelling West Texans would scoff at the notion of a prairie dog shortage.

In Lubbock, a field in front of a local television station has long been the home of a vast prairie dog village that often draws neighborhood children.

Gay Balfour, who became famous among farmers for inventing a vacuum-like contraption to catch prairie dogs, says he sees plenty of prairie dogs.

"Well, to the places I go, you'd almost think the dogs outnumber the people," Balfour said. "Maybe I should be involved in the count."

Marine flier killed in aircraft carrier accident

KINGSVILLE (AP) — A Texas-based Marine student pilot was killed Wednesday when he crashed attempting a landing on the aircraft carrier USS John F. Kennedy off the Florida coast.

The body of Marine 1st Lt. Bryan J. Shelleby of Pittsburgh was recovered by a search and rescue helicopter shortly after the crash about 70 miles northeast of Jacksonville, said Navy spokesman Cmdr. Jack Papp at Pensacola, Fla.

The aircraft carrier suffered minor damage, but none of its crew was hurt, Papp said. No one else was aboard the two-seat trainer, a T-45 Goshawk.

The circumstances of the crash are under investigation, he said.

Valley corn crop devalued by dangerous fungus

HARLINGEN (AP) — The drought has dealt a two-fisted blow to corn growers in South Texas — not only do they have reduced yields because of the drought, but most of what's left is contaminated with toxin-making fungi exacerbated by dry weather.

The hot, dry weather has caused corn kernels to crack open, clearing a path for aspergillus flavus and aspergillus parasiticus to grow. The fungi produce aflatoxin, a cancer-causing chemical that can cause liver damage in humans and animals.

According to federal restrictions, corn with aflatoxin levels at or above 20 parts per billion can't be sold for human consumption or as dairy cattle feed. The maximum level for livestock feed is 300 parts per billion. Corn with levels over 1,000 parts per billion must be destroyed.

"Aflatoxin is a chronic problem in South Texas," said Tom Isakeit, a plant pathologist with the Texas A&M Agricultural Research and Extension Service. "We really don't have any good news for control of it."

Mark Waller, an extension economist, said the indication from South Texas grain elevators this year is that at least 60 percent of the corn coming in is infected with aflatoxin, which can also be found on peanuts, cottonseed and sorghum.

The hot, dry weather has caused corn kernels to crack open, clearing a path for a fungus that produces a cancer-causing chemical that can cause liver damage in humans and animals.

Most growers didn't know their corn was infected until they tried to sell it and it was chemically tested.

"You can't see that you have a problem," Isakeit said. "The corn looks fine but then you analyze it and it's filled with aflatoxin."

The amount of aflatoxin in the corn determines how much money growers can make. Corn that's safe for human consumption sells for more than lesser grades used for livestock feed.

Growers are currently getting anywhere from $2 to $2.50 per bushel for their corn, Waller said. If the corn is infected, they have to sell it at a discount. Although growers can put the corn through a detoxification process, that also costs money.

"If you only had half a crop to begin with, all of a sudden you're in a whole lot worse shape," Waller said.

On top of that, other southern states, like Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana are contending with aflatoxin-contaminated crops and are trying to sell the lower grade corn to the same feedlots as Texas growers. The increased competition means lower prices, even lower than during the 1996 drought.

"Two years later, we're looking at very large supplies," Waller said. "It's very easy to get corn. The discounts that we're taking on this new crop of corn are much higher this time."

Although aflatoxin can cause liver cancer in humans, there are few documented cases in the United States since grains meant for human consumption are first tested, Isakeit said.

In less developed countries with higher aflatoxin levels in food, there are higher rates of liver cancer, Isakeit said.

Aflatoxin also causes liver damage in animals and can be passed into the milk of dairy cows. Cattle raised for food, however, can be fed higher amounts of aflatoxin-contaminated grain because they are not going to live very long, Isakeit said. The carcinogen is not passed on to humans who eat the meat because it doesn't accumulate in the muscle.

Isakeit said researchers are trying to develop an aflatoxin-resistant strain of corn. So far, however, they've been unsuccessful.

Discovery could lead to drug that mimics exercise effects

Associated Press

DALLAS — Researchers say they have found a genetic switch that tells muscle to convert into the slow endurance tissue seen in aerobics enthusiasts — a discovery that could lead to a drug that would stimulate exercise's natural effects.

But researchers warn people not to expect a work out by popping a pill instead of breaking a sweat.

The researchers, whose work was published Thursday in the journal Genes and Development, believe the genetic switch could help create a drug that would help diabetics and heart patients.

"When people go jogging, molecular events happen in the muscles they are exercising that both enhance their capability to exercise further and improve their health," said Dr. Sanders Williams, leader of a research team at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas.

"We believe it is possible to design a drug which would have this effect."

The researchers studied human genetic information introduced into mouse cells. They found evidence that three proteins are involved in a chain reaction that activates a specific subset of genes that convert fast strength muscle cells — like those seen in weightlifters — to slow muscle cells.

Dr. Rhonda Bassel-Duby, an associate professor of internal medicine also on the study team, said the research applies only to skeletal muscles, not heart or other muscle, and is "not a substitute for exercise."

"I know what kind of headline you want, 'OK you couch potatoes, we've got the drug for you.' That's not where it's going. That's really not the goal of this drug," she said.

She said that if a drug is developed, it could help people with muscle fatigue caused by congestive heart failure recover enough stamina to get on an exercise program.

"It will give them the strength and endurance to think about getting on that treadmill," she said.

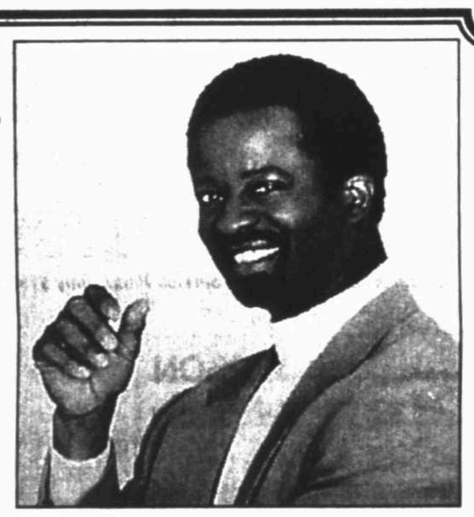

People with Type II diabetes also might benefit from a drug that would enhance slow endurance-promoting muscle, which is more sensitive to insulin. In such diabetics, the body's natural insulin — a hormone that converts blood sugar into energy — gradually loses its ability to work. Blood sugar rises, risking kidney damage, blindness, heart disease and other complications.

Other scientists said the work was noteworthy.

"From my perception, this is a very novel and important insight into muscle fiber motion and control," said Stephen Hauschka, a biochemistry professor at the University of Washington. "I think it's going to make a big impact on the field."

Texas Republicans, Democrats alike endorse U.S. military action

WASHINGTON (AP) — Setting aside their political differences with an embattled President Clinton, Texas Republicans voiced support Thursday for the commander-in-chief's decision to launch military strikes against suspected terrorist targets in Afghanistan and Sudan.

Speaking from the Oval Office, just three days after an extraordinary address to the nation about his relationship with Monica Lewinsky, Clinton said he ordered the strikes to "counter an immediate threat."

Texas politicians endorsed the military action against targets linked to Osama bin Laden, a Saudi millionaire whom U.S. officials believe sponsored the terrorist network responsible for the U.S. embassy bombings in Africa.

"I think it's very appropriate and I support the president's strong action and hope it continues," said Rep. Henry Bonilla, R-San Antonio.

"The only thing terrorists understand, unfortunately, is force," added Bonilla. "They often only understand the other end of a gun barrel."

A longtime Clinton critic, Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, pronounced himself "highly supportive" of the military strikes. "If we have credible information that these are the responsible parties, which it seems our intelligence agencies have provided, these bombings are absolutely justified," Barton said.

Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, was slightly more circumspect. "If the targets we struck today were in fact directly involved in the embassy bombings, then the actions are appropriate and the timing is justified," she said.

Rep. Mac Thornberry, a Clarendon Republican who serves on the House National Security Committee, took a similar tack. "Assuming we've got the information to link this group with the bombings in fact, I think it's absolutely the right thing to do to strike them hard."

Thornberry and the other congressional Republicans refused to question the timing of the military action at a time when Clinton is struggling domestically.

"I've got to assume that any president is going to only risk U.S. servicemens' lives when national security interests are at stake," Thornberry said. "And until I get evidence to the contrary, that's what I'm going to continue to assume."

But, he added: "A lot of people are saying these are exactly the kinds of situations that point out why trust in a leader is important. And anything that diminishes from that trust is disturbing in a very dangerous world."

Texas Republican Party Chairwoman Susan Weddington termed the timing of the attacks "a little suspect given recent events at the White House." Yet she endorsed the "strong signal" sent to terrorists.

Gov. George W. Bush, who is touted as a top Republican presidential prospect, declined to speculate on the domestic political implications.

"This is a foreign policy initiative," Bush said during a San Antonio appearance. "You have to give the commander-in-chief the benefit of the doubt. He has much more intelligence and information than any of us in this room."

Democrats praised the president's action.

"In light of the extensive and compelling evidence against the targeted groups, the United States could not sit back and fail to respond to terrorist attacks and threats," said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford.

Rep. Jim Turner, a Crockett Democrat who serves on the National Security Committee, said committee members have been aware of bin Laden "and the threat that he represents to our security."

"This is a very serious matter of national security and I feel comfortable that the decision that was made was based upon our national interest," Turner said.

Referring to the U.S. bombing casualties, Rep. Nick Lampson, D-Beaumont, said: "I can't imagine looking into the eyes of a mother of one of the 12 Americans who were sent home in caskets last week and telling her that no response is necessary."

Man sentenced to 50 years for day care siege

McKINNEY (AP) — A gunman who held dozens of children in a 30-hour standoff with police at a day care center should spend 50 years behind bars, a jury decided Thursday.

James Monroe Lipscomb Jr. received multiple prison sentences that will run concurrently. They include a 50-term for aggravated assault of a public servant.

Lipscomb, 34, also received 20 years' imprisonment for aggravated kidnapping involving one of the children, and a pair of 15-year prison terms for aggravated kidnapping of two adults.

Testimony in the sentencing phase began Wednesday afternoon after Lipscomb was convicted on three kidnapping counts and the aggravated assault count in the Dec. 17, 1997 day-care siege at Plano.

After spending much of the week in court leaning back in his chair with his eyes closed, Lipscomb showed little emotion when the verdict was read Wednesday.

His attorney, Frank Jackson, said he was disappointed but not surprised by the verdict.

Kristen Shaw Lipscomb, 28, was visibly upset after the verdict.

Her husband held about 85 people — mostly children — hostage. But nobody was hurt.

Internet voting project planned in Dallas County

AUSTIN (AP) — Some Texans stationed in the military overseas could vote for president in 2000 via the Internet under a five-state federal pilot project that's part of an effort to translate high technology into higher numbers of voters.

The Internet voting pilot project conducted by the Federal Voting Assistance Program is slated for those in the military who are registered in Dallas County and could be expanded to other counties. A mock election to test the system is planned for January.

"This is a tremendous step forward in implementing new technology for increased voter turnout," state Rep. Tony Goolsby, R-Dallas, said Thursday.

Other states involved are Florida, South Carolina, Utah and Missouri, said Ann McGeehan, deputy assistant secretary of state for elections. FVAP Director Polli Brunelli said the project is one of federal and state cooperation.

The National Security Agency and Defense Information Systems Agency will assist the voter program in devising security measures for the pilot project to ensure the election's integrity. Military voters currently are the only ones authorized under Texas law to vote by Internet, Ms. McGeehan said.

In another high-tech proposal, Goolsby said he'll ask the 1999 Legislature to consider a pilot program in Dallas County to test an electronic voting device similar to an automated-teller machine.

The voting kiosks would require voters to insert a card with an embedded computer chip to access the machines.

The kiosks also would have special technology to ensure positive voter identification and election security through such means as automated methods of recognizing a person based on physiological or behavioral characteristics.

"Technology is advancing so rapidly that it would be foolish for the state not to look at implementing new technology to conduct elections. However, the underlying criteria for the Legislature to seriously consider any new technology is whether adequate safeguards are in place to protect the integrity of an election," Goolsby said.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Friday, Aug. 21, 1998:

You can change what you don't like about your life. A solar eclipse empowers you. Maintain good health patterns because your energy could be drained more easily in this highly significant year. You are now in position to adjust your life as you like. Do not resist changes. Some of you might go through an identity crisis. If you are single, your status is subject to change. 1999 brings a special someone into your life. If attached, improve or even transform your relationship. A partner is unpredictable, though lovable. Continue to give him space, and allow yourself to manifest more of your independent ways. LEO can be depleting.

BORN TODAY

Actress Kim Cattrall (1956), football player Jim McMahon (1959), actress Alicia Witt (1975)

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ Lighten up about love and money. A friend once more presents a provocative point of view. New, creative resolutions are needed, to help loved ones. It is time for a change in attitude. If single, you could be walking into a new relationship soon. Tonight: Let wildness in.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★ You cannot continue as you have been. A loved one announces his limits. You weren't juggling two different interests as successfully as you thought. Feedback comes in clear. Make long-overdue decisions, or someone else will make them for you. Tonight: Be a homebody.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★★★ Communications could startle you. Act spontaneously to make what you want happen. Surprises lurk, no matter which direction you turn. Have you considered that your messages are off? Seek to improve the way you express yourself. Tonight: Hang out with pals.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★★ You pull the financial wild card. Make security primary in any decision. Remember, you need to take care of yourself first. New beginnings are more than possible. Examine new options by investigating different choices. Be creative, and remain inquiring and open. Tonight: Indulge a little.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★★★ New beginnings come from letting go and making things happen. Examine your objectives. You could be compulsive. Your sense of humor will emerge, if you can relax. Make a decision uniquely for yourself, not for anyone else. Success will be yours. Tonight: It's your call.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★ Take a back seat, though with your strong mental qualities you co 'd find that task close to impossible. Realize current limits, and work within those constraints. Make internal decisions for you and your life. You need to take better care of yourself. Tonight: Vanish quickly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★★ Pull back and think or, perhaps, even laugh. A loved one or potential new relationship does something unexpected. It is appropriate to seek a greater commitment, or perhaps move on to a coveted long-term goal. Plot your direction with care. Tonight: Time to let go and enjoy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★ Again, you get evidence and feedback that confirms that you cannot exist in the current pressure cooker. Remain self-confident, but break free from the status quo. Make your personal life more of the caliber you need for it to flourish. Tonight: Do what makes you feel good.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★★★ Make sure you are ready for the unexpected because it is about to appear at your door. Your quickness and sense of humor come forward. Listen to offers, give in to spontaneity and let go of rigidity. Make resolutions that empower your mind. Tonight: Weekend escape.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★★★ Understand what is happening between you and a partner. You might feel shaky, as wildness continues with your piggy bank and checkbook. Take control, and let a partner handle his own problems. Make decisions that work for you now. Tonight: Turn on the fan!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ Your energy slumps with a draining solar eclipse. But new relationships result. If you are single, your status could change. Excitement and the unexpected run through your personal connections. Go with the flow. Tonight: Where the fun is.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★ Give that work project a final push. Listen carefully to your inner voice. You might feel you need to give up something. A flirtation at work could be developing into something more. Do you want this to happen? Be realistic. Tonight: You need exercise!

The bidding:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1♡	Dbl	Pass	4♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡

The defenders usually are declarer's mortal enemies, eager to seize any opportunity to do harm to the contract. But once in a while their unwilling cooperation can be enlisted.

North had as little as the law allows for a vulnerable takeout double. With values for an opening bid, South's jump to game in spades was automatic.

West led the king of hearts. The opening bid was good news and bad — bad because it meant that every important card was going to be badly placed; good, because West might have a bit too much for the defender's well-being.

Declarer saw at once that it would not help to win the ace of hearts and start on trumps. West would win, cash a heart trick and then exit with either a trump or a club and sit back and wait to collect two diamond tricks. After some thought, declarer found a distribution that would allow the contract to make — West would have to hold specifically a singleton ace of spades and no more than three clubs!

After winning the ace of hearts, declarer played off three rounds of clubs and was delighted when everyone followed. Now a trump to the ace left West in an untenable position. The defender could cash the queen of hearts, but then would have to give succor to the needy. Since another heart would allow declarer to ruff in dummy and sluff a diamond from hand (dummy's fourth club would subsequently permit declarer to get rid of another diamond after drawing trumps), West had to cash the ace of diamonds and lead another, in the vain hope that East would hold the king of diamonds. Four spades bid and made.

PEOPLE TODAY

Rock breaks new verbal television ground

NEW YORK — Chris Rock somehow managed to cross the line between what can and cannot be said on televison about the Monica Lewinsky matter.

Rock offered to "whup" a part of Kenneth Starr's anatomy.

On NBC's "Today" show Wednesday, the comedian used the word "ass" four times and referred to independent counsel Kenneth Starr as a "scumbag."

Matt Lauer's interview with Rock ran live in front of about 70 percent of the country but was deleted from the taped West Coast broadcast. Western viewers were given a segment about a rodeo school instead.

"I find it odd that the people at 'Today' felt that talk of stained dresses and violent crimes was more suitable for morning TV than me joking about whupping Ken Starr," Rock said in a statement.

During the show, Rock joked that if President Clinton gave the comedian a pardon, "I would whup Starr's ass right now."

A nervous Lauer interrupted Rock, reminding him it was morning television. "You see the clock?" he said. "That's 7:53. That's a.m."

VICTORIA, British Columbia — Merv Griffin says it's not his fault his 130-foot yacht, the Griff, blocked some spectators' views during last weekend's boat races.

The harbor master assigned the berth, said Griffin, who stopped at the Victoria Dragon Boat Festival after a cruise in British Columbia.

Some spectators yelled abuse at Griffin and his guests and threatened to throw eggs at his boat, which was blocking an area that included spots for spectators with disabilities. Eventually, the crew moved the yacht.

"I was a little embarrassed because there was nothing we could do about it," said the 73-year-old "Wheel of Fortune" producer and former talk show host.

NEW YORK — DNA saved DMX.

Charges that the rap star raped and sodomized a 29-year-old stripper were dropped Thursday after genetic tests showed that semen on the woman was not DMX's.

"I never met the girl," DMX, aka Earl Simmons, said outside court.

Simmons, 27, was arrested in June. The woman claimed she was attacked after meeting the rap star at a club.

Simmons' album "It's Dark and Hell Is Hot" debuted at the top of the Billboard pop charts at the start of the summer.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. — A man accused of sending threatening e-mail to radio personality Don Imus has reached an agreement with prosecutors that will keep him out of jail.

Man who threatened Imus reached an agreement with prosecutors.

According to police, Michael P. Michalski, 43, of Cromwell, sent the wisecracking New York radio personality this e-mail after listening to a January show on the Monica Lewinsky case: "I hope that one day as you walk out of the studio, someone is on the street with a deer gun."

Later that day, another e-mail indicated Michalski was on his way to New York.

Under the agreement reached Tuesday, charges of threatening and harassment will be wiped from Michalski's record if he stays out of trouble for the next two years.

PITTSBURGH — A prosecutor used her powers of persuasion to land a one-night gig as Jimmy Buffett's backup singer.

Debra Barnisin sent in a 20-second contest entry and was named a finalist along with four others to perform with the "Margaritaville" crooner when he appeared in suburban Pittsburgh on July 27.

But she missed a telephone message at her office informing her that she had made the short list. When she found out after the concert what had happened, she tracked down Buffett and made her plea.

"He said, 'That's the saddest concert story I've ever heard. You can sing backup with me anytime,'" said Ms. Barnisin, who heads to Columbia, Md., this weekend to perform with Buffett.

Monica Lewinsky returns to testify before grand jury

By Pete Yost
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Monica Lewinsky provided prosecutors a second round of explicit testimony Thursday about her White House trysts with President Clinton — then left the courthouse to begin "rebuilding her life."

Three days after the 52-year-old president admitted that his relationship with the former intern was "wrong," Ms. Lewinsky, 25, returned to the courthouse for five hours to give testimony prosecutors will use to assess Clinton's account.

It likely was her last grand jury appearance, spokeswoman Judy Smith said, and "she answered all the questions truthfully and completely."

Prosecutors were particularly interested in details of their sexual encounters and Ms. Lewinsky's decision to return presidential gifts after she became a potential witness in the Paula Jones sexual harassment case.

Before her testimony Thursday, friends and associates said Ms. Lewinsky was hurt by what she thought was Clinton's dismissive characterization of their relationship. Believing their affair was rooted in strong emotional ties, Ms. Lewinsky was upset that Clinton "made it out to be just a sexual relationship," said one associate.

Those close to Ms. Lewinsky, all speaking on condition of anonymity, said she was also dismayed that Clinton talked about reclaiming his privacy, when her personal life has been laid bare to the world.

She was disappointed that the speech made no reference to her travails, the associates said.

Presidential advisers involved in drafting Clinton's brief address Monday night said they couldn't recall any discussions about inserting an apology or even a vague nod toward the former White House intern. "What do you think Mrs. Clinton would have thought of that?" said one participant. Others said that, even on reflection, it probably would have been unwise to allude to Ms. Lewinsky during an address designed to show the president's feelings of contrition to his family and country.

As Ms. Lewinsky finished her testimony, the president was announcing a military strike against what he said were terrorist sites in Afghanistan and Sudan, and live television coverage switched to the attack rather than the now-familiar footage of the federal courthouse where the grand jury is meeting. Press secretary Mike McCurry told reporters Clinton was not taking advantage of the African embassy bombings to draw attention away from his personal problems.

"The timing was not his," McCurry said.

Ms. Lewinsky's testimony is critical to Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr, who is investigating whether Clinton lied about the affair under oath during the Jones case and obstructed justice in trying to cover it up. Ms. Lewinsky was granted immunity from prosecution before her first day of testimony Aug. 6.

A part of her testimony the prosecutors and grand jurors asked her about again Thursday concerned gifts the president gave the former intern during their affair.

Previously, Ms. Lewinsky testified she and Clinton agreed that she should hand over the gifts to his secretary, Betty Currie, sources familiar with her account have said. Mrs. Currie retrieved the gifts after a subpoena in the sexual harassment lawsuit against Clinton raised the possibility Ms. Lewinsky would be asked to reveal the gifts to Mrs. Jones' lawyers.

On the gifts, Clinton told the grand jury he never instructed Currie to retrieve them, didn't know she had them and "didn't consider them a big deal," said a Clinton adviser who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Providing a possible explanation for why Mrs. Currie would retrieve the gifts on her own, other Clinton backers have said that the president would often ask Currie to pass along gifts for him and she was "sort of his facilitator" of gifts.

Testimony about the gifts could be central if prosecutors try to build a case that Clinton attempted to obstruct justice.

Ms. Lewinsky also had testified that she performed oral sex on Clinton in the White House. Clinton generally acknowledged sexual improprieties, but would not answer specific questions about his physical contact with Ms. Lewinsky, the adviser said.

Clinton has maintained that his testimony in the Jones deposition, in which he denied sexual relations with her, was "legally accurate."

Stymied by his refusal to answer sexual questions, prosecutors asked Clinton a series of questions about his understanding of the definition of "sexual relations" used in the Jones case, the adviser said. Clinton said that oral sex was one of the acts not covered in that definition.

Ms. Lewinsky also told grand jurors that Clinton fondled her breasts and other parts of her body, according to several friends of the former White House intern.

When asked about this, Clinton gave a vague answer, neither confirming or denying her allegation, his adviser said.

After her appearance Thursday, her spokeswoman said, "Ms. Lewinsky is now looking forward to beginning the process of rebuilding her life."

Her second day of testimony didn't draw the same frenzied media attention as her first, though TV cameras and passersby still tracked her movements.

"I don't think that the president or the White House has been particularly following her business today," McCurry told reporters covering the president in Martha's Vineyard, Mass.

Up to the minute Clinton announced the U.S. attacks, political advisers were planning presidential events away from Martha's Vineyard and were mulling several options to defuse the Lewinsky matter, including a one-on-one TV interview. The attack managed to get him out of seclusion and provide a distraction from the sex scandal.

A few calls for Clinton's resignation or impeachment continued Thursday — even as leaders in both parties argued that it was too early to gauge the political impact of the controversy.

The Democratic National Committee circulated suggested quotes that party officials across the country could share with reporters. "Now more than ever, Democrats must support the president," chairman Steve Grossman wrote in a cover letter.

Woman who gave birth at prom pleads guilty

FREEHOLD, N.J. (AP) — In an emotionless and childlike voice, a young woman described Thursday how she gave birth in a bathroom at her senior prom last year, fished the baby out of the toilet bowl, wrapped him in plastic bags and dumped him in the trash.

As her parents looked on, 20-year-old Melissa Drexler pleaded guilty to aggravated manslaughter in the baby boy's death, sparing herself a murder trial and a possible life sentence.

She could get up to 15 years in prison at sentencing Oct. 29 and could be out in as little as three with good behavior.

"The baby was born alive," Ms. Drexler told the judge, reading from a handwritten statement. "I was aware of what I was doing when I placed the baby in the bag, and I was further aware that what I did would most certainly result in the death of the baby."

After giving birth at the catering hall on June 6, 1997, Ms. Drexler washed up and returned to the dance floor with her date. Maintenance workers who were called to clean up blood on the bathroom floor discovered the dead baby.

"I knew I was pregnant," Ms. Drexler said. "I concealed the pregnancy from everyone. On the morning of the prom, my water broke."

She made no apology and offered no explanation.

FAMILY MATTERS

Mother constantly critical of daughters, grandchildren

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: My children just spent a week at my mother's house. When I went to pick them up, I already knew that she would have plenty to say about how badly they acted and what a bad mother I was. She had already started the complaining when I called her the one time I felt that I had to.

May

As soon as I walked in the door, she started in on the kids and then me. The first thing she said was, "Well I hope that you can wade in through all the mess that your kids made." This was before any "hello" or anything. Of course my girls were embarrassed, but they were very glad to see me.

I only stayed long enough to gather up the girls' clothes and help them pick up the house. Of course my mother complained about that too. She doesn't want us there, but then complains when we leave. Go figure!

On the ride home, my girls started telling me some of the things that mother said to them. It was the same put-downs that she used to dump on me.

Mother thinks that one of my daughters is overweight like I was as a child. My daughter said that mother constantly said things to her about her weight, and even wouldn't let her have the same snacks her sister had. That brought back lots of painful, painful memories of battles over eating and my weight. The strange thing is that when I discussed my daughter's weight with her pediatrician, she wasn't overweight at all according to his chart. Because of the way mother treated my weight, I developed an eating disorder that took me years to overcome.

Mother also constantly told both my girls how lazy they were. She had them doing the dishes morning and evening, as well as helping her clean the house. I don't think that it hurts for the girls to help mother, but I do think that it's wrong for her to tell them that they are lazy when they're just not enthusiastic about working on summer vacation.

She wouldn't take them anywhere because it was too hot; well, then, that's why you go to the swimming pool. Fortunately, my sister did pick them up and they got to play with their cousins at their house. Mother would only let her other grandchildren come over twice, in the afternoon, for two hours each time because they all made too much of a mess. When their cousins left, mother put them down too.

I didn't mean for this to be a whiny letter, but I could go on and on about the negative, critical, put-downs from my mother. As a result, it has taken me years of hard work and counseling to see myself as a worthy human being. My question is: Should I let the girls stay with my mother anymore? They are 7 and 9. I work so hard to help them have high self-esteem and they do! I don't want my mother to destroy their self-esteem like she did mine and my sister's. PUT DOWN AGAIN

DEAR PUT DOWN: Congratulations on working hard to overcome the childhood wounds created by your mother! A parent's criticizing or putting down his or her child is wrong. As Christ said, "It would be better for him to be thrown into the sea with a millstone put round his neck than he should lead astray a single one of these little ones."

Parents have a sacred responsibility to take the children who are on loan from God and help them grow in body and spirit.

Your mother has violated this trust. If you want your daughters to continue to visit your mother, you may want to restrict their visits to shorter times. You may also want to help "arm them" for what they will have to endure by explaining to them how your mother treated you and your sister when you were children.

Be kind but direct. Try to separate your mother — their grandmother — from her actions. You can all love her, but dislike what she says. If you can get to: "Oh well, you know how your grandmother is," that usually will defuse the situation for children.

God bless and continue to nurture and praise your daughters.

THE FOLLOWING TIPS ON "PARENTAL EXPECTATIONS" ARE PRESENTED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Tell children that you have expectations, but you really feel confident that they will try their best.
- Be specific about how you expect them to behave in various situations.
- Let them make decisions about manageable situations, and encourage them to "talk it over" with you when they are confused.
- Trust them with regular jobs without reminding them all of the time. See what happens.
- Talk openly about good things you see in them.
- Don't withhold compliments you've received from others about them.
- Give credit for trying to do one's best, even when there are mistakes or accidents.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Is there a checklist of things to look for in a roommate? I need one.

After years of living alone, I was forced by economics and safety concerns to share a house with a friend of two years' standing. A kindergarten teacher who sings in the church choir and is devoted to her friends, "Donna" appeared to be the perfect roommate. That is, until I moved in.

Van Buren

Donna is a slob! She never washes a dish, empties a wastebasket or takes out the garbage. She leaves her shoes in the living room, uses the dining room table as her desk —littered with paper, bills, hairbrush — and has converted the den into her personal parlor. It's littered with dirty dishes and open food containers. We have one bath with a shower. Dirty clothes and wet towels cover the floor or are left in the shower.

In previous visits to her home, I'd always found it to be very neat. It turns out that her former roommate — possibly as disgusted as I've become — took it upon herself to clean up after Donna. I have neither the time nor the patience.

I'm looking for a new place to live. How can I protect myself from another roommate nightmare? — DONNA'S SOON-TO-BE-EX-ROOMMATE, NEW ORLEANS

DEAR SOON-TO-BE-EX-ROOMMATE: Make it clear during the interview process that you're a "neat-nik" who is looking for a like-minded roommate. If you're placing an ad, mention it prominently in the ad. If you're using a search service, list neatness among your highest priorities. If all else fails, try to locate Donna's ex-roommate. The two of you would be ideal for each other.

DEAR ABBY: I have an 8-year-old son who has shown me the power of television.

Recently on a "Simpsons" cartoon, there was a segment about eating meat. In this segment, Lisa had a dream about a lamb who said to her, "Don't eat me, Lisa." Since that day, my son has not touched meat.

I have tried everything I can think of. He tried to eat a lunch-meat sandwich one day, but he gagged on it. He said he keeps thinking about that show.

My son is a picky eater anyway and it's hard to please him. He eats lots of veggies, but it's hard to get him to eat enough fruit and proteins to be well nourished. (He loved meat before that show.)

Abby, what can I do to ensure that my son eats properly under these circumstances? — LINDA IN HOWELL, MICH.

DEAR LINDA: Where there's a will, there's a way. Talk to your pediatrician about a vegetarian diet that will supply all of your son's nutritional needs, and then visit your bookstore. There are many vegetarian cookbooks on the market, many written with children's tastes in mind.

DEAR ABBY: My girlfriend expects me to wear a condom because she's scared of getting pregnant. Obviously, she's putting her own welfare before my sexual satisfaction. What kind of girlfriend does that? — AUSSIE BOB

DEAR AUSSIE BOB: A SMART one!

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem. My husband and I recently moved to New York City where there are lots of elevators. We're having a minor disagreement over elevator etiquette.

My husband lets all the women exit the elevator before going out himself. This means I have to wait outside the elevator for him to join me so we can continue on our way. He insists he is being polite. I say he is being rude to me by making me wait for him. — IMPATIENT IN NEW YORK

DEAR IMPATIENT: Your husband is showing good manners by allowing the women to exit the elevator first. The obvious solution to your problem is to remain inside the elevator with your husband and exit with him, or just ahead of him.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the reader who was upset with her doctor's receptionist for asking too many questions. I work for a large medical practice as a phone receptionist. It is my job to prioritize incoming calls and determine which are emergencies, how soon patients need to be seen, and how much time the doctor will need with them. I'm dedicated to making sure our patients get the care they need, and it's my duty to ask as many questions as I deem necessary to accomplish that. I am not being nosy, and I am never rude to patients — but I am often told that a problem is "none of my business."

I answer hundreds of phone calls a day — with problems ranging from colds to heart attacks, acne to suicide attempts. I've had people with chest pains tell me they can wait two weeks to see the doctor, and people with warts tell me they need an emergency appointment. I've had a patient schedule an appointment for a cough who was actually suffering from depression — both would need to be seen quickly, but one is for 15 minutes and the other needs an hour appointment.

Most people who call do not have a medical background, and cannot be objective about their problems. At least 25 percent of the callers do not want to give me any information. I am legally bound to keep all patient information private, and there's nothing any of them could tell me that I haven't heard before.

If you are uncomfortable with certain words, be a little creative: Say "stress" if depression makes you uncomfortable, "diet counseling" if you suffer from obesity. But please don't tell me "allergies" if you mean substance abuse, and "I'm sick" isn't quite enough information.

Abby, every call we receive is important, and I don't want to keep callers on the line any longer than I have to, so please inform your readers that if I stop to ask a few questions about a patient's condition, it's because I'm concerned about them and am trying to help. This is what the doctor hired me to do. — MEDICAL RECEPTIONIST

DEAR RECEPTIONIST: Perhaps this is a problem of perception, but many patients regard their medical problems as something very personal. They perceive questions from a receptionist — however well-intentioned — as an attempt to intervene in their relationship with their doctor, and they react defensively. I hope your letter will give these people some food for thought.

I have heard from other medical receptionists who also felt I was too harsh in labeling the receptionist mentioned in the letter as "undiplomatic" without hearing her side first, and advising the writer to discuss her feelings with her doctor. However, if I were the doctor, and one of my employees was perceived as heavy-handed, I would want to know so that I could counsel that person.

Gardener works by touch, memory

By Mac Griswold
N.Y. Times News Service

SHELTER ISLAND, N.Y. — Gardening has few heroes, being generally an unheroic pastime, but William Price, 84, is surely one of them. Blind for more than 50 years, he does all his gardening by himself, once someone else turns the soil with a rototiller in the spring.

"Nobody else has set foot in this garden to work in it except me," Price said with uncharacteristic fierceness the other day, standing in his 45x50-foot plot of vegetables and flowers.

Raising plants from seed (he collects some himself), laying out rows, planting, weeding, watering, picking, staking the remarkable dahlias he has grown for years and finding and squishing tomato worms — surely, one of a gardener's most satisfying and grisly tasks — Price does it all. "I found a 4-inch one the other day, and it really gave me the chills," he said.

Like some modest 19th-century hero who acted as if it was all in a day's work, Price will complain about tomato worms but not much else. Certainly not about the osteoporosis that is doubling him over, nor the arthritis in his feet, nor the fact that he is among the 10 percent in the world of the visually impaired who are totally without sight. He does not want to emphasize the difficulties of blindness but simply to point out that there are lots of ways to get around them.

"Because he's a resourceful and courageous man, Bill figures out ways to do these things on his own," said Betty Bird, the senior vice president for rehabilitation at the Lighthouse, the national nonprofit association for the visually impaired and who is also blind. "Most people, when they lose their vision, don't know what their options are. They don't believe they can do it. It's beyond their imagining that they could garden for pleasure. They need encouragement. Bill got past that point. He took life and ran with it."

PRICE HAS retinitis pigmentosa, a hereditary progressive degenerative disease of the retina, which slowly narrows vision to a pinpoint and, in his case, after that to nothing. By the age of 30, he had lost his sight entirely.

Before that happened, however, he worked in a brokerage house and went to the State University Agricultural and Technical College at Farmingdale, N.Y., which explains how he learned garden techniques, but not how he learned to adapt them to his darkened world or how he developed his remarkable memory.

After agriculture school, he farmed and gardened, bracing himself for the day when the lights would go out. During those years, he amassed a large visual vocabulary of plants and flowers and developed a grasp of space, mass and volume.

The 1880s farmhouse where he lives for six months of the year with his wife, Elaine (who is sighted), stands at the edge of Coecles Harbor. (They spend the other months on Johns Island, S.C.) They married, he for the first time, 22 years ago, and moved to this house in 1981, but Price has known summer on Shelter Island since he was a boy growing up in Brooklyn, where his father was a surgeon.

The screened porch looks over a sunburned lawn to a water view crowded with sailboats. "I can see where I am out there," Price said, remembering his childhood sailing days and adding that his disability gives him certain advantages, like being able to garden at night and not having to see the large television satellite dish that is now part of the view.

The usual shrubs that flower in August — rose of Sharon, buddleia, abelia, hydrangea, perpetual flowering roses — were cheerfully blooming their heads off. Price gets up early and waters them.

Walking through the garden, Price picked lettuce and dill, so he could make egg salad sandwiches for lunch. (He does all the cooking for the two of them.) Then he made a beeline for his pride and joy, his dahlias. Most are named after friends or donors.

"There's Allie, tall and yellow, with a large flower," he said. "And there's Andy, short, but also with a large flower." He has known some of these varieties since the time when he could see them.

From the shapely look of his dahlias, it is clear that Price also knows the architecture of plants. Disbudding, dropping off some buds to insure that the ones that remain will be big, means gauging which buds to lop off. More remarkable for someone who cannot see is his instinctive judgment about form, being aware of each bud and balancing the framework of stem and foliage to get maximum sun and space for the flowers. Texture and form, he says, are what he is after in the garden, far more than fragrance.

"Fragrance is a sighted person's concept of what a blind person would enjoy," Ms. Bird said. "Texture is more important to the blind. But they leave lacy or tiny flowers — those little gossamer-type plants — to the sighted. The visually impaired usually like things such as tulips, sedums or roses, things they can get their hands round to feel the shape."

THERE ARE NO obvious clues that Price's garden belongs to a blind person, but subtle indications are there. The paths are Braille for his feet: one path is floored with wood chips; another with old boards, and still others are plain dirt. In the spring, Price lays out two fishing lines and plants seeds between them to get his rows straight.

He once had dreams of becoming an architect, and he annually memorizes his handsome garden layout: New Zealand spinach, rows of green beans, limas, tomatoes neatly staked and tied, eggplant, peppers, zucchini. Finding the ripe vegetables is done by touch he said. He pointed out the wax and yellow beans, the chard and carrots. Marigolds and orange cosmos filled out his rows; he grows them from seed he saves every year. He also knows his way by the texture and shape of flower and foliage.

Like everyone else who gardens in the Northeast, he has a mortal enemy: hungry deer. So, with a little help from Mrs. Price, he strung the top of his garden fence with electric wire.

The bright yellow of the wire and the red of the conductors seem to add something to the garden, a doughty sense of enclosure and protection. Inside the fence is a thick border of cosmos and invasive purple loosestrife, which he concedes is hard to control.

As he headed across the lawn to the house to make lunch, he commented that he thought the hydrangeas someone gave him were too high for the scale of the yard. How did he know? By touch, of course, he said, but also by an innate faculty that helps him understand proportion and space.

Volunteer 'wealthy' with good will

By Lana Cunningham

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Howard Palmer found a wealth of good will and satisfaction when he became a volunteer for Memorial Hospital and Medical Center's Auxiliary. He works in the hospital's Gift Shop every Friday afternoon. He also serves as a volunteer for other Midland agencies, including the local chapter of National Organization of Retired Federal Employees, and as president of Hearts Alive.

Each Friday afternoon when Howard Palmer leaves the Gift Shop at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, he takes something home with him. The Internal Revenue Service will never be able to find it or make Palmer pay taxes.

What goes with Palmer are the good feelings he earns as a volunteer and the satisfaction of helping others. "When I get home, I feel good. I don't ever have to pay income taxes on it. What you get (from being a volunteer), they can't tax," he said with a laugh.

Good will, not money, is what Palmer focuses on these days. "There's no greed to this, no politics. It's just people helping people."

He begins to recite a brief list of activities Auxiliary members perform, including selling popcorn and soft drinks, delivering flowers to the patients, assisting families and physicians in the surgical waiting rooms, directing incoming patients and families or friends to where they need to go.

Ultimately, the Auxiliary does deal with money — raising what it can to buy expensive equipment needed by patients. Pulling out a list of purchases in recent years, Palmer pointed to the most recent: a $212,000 stereotactic breast biopsy unit. Other items included two ambulances, $101,000; labor and delivery monitoring equipment, $150,000; medical library, $125,000; Mue EKG system, $138,000; and a heart, lung perfusion system, $72,000.

The breast biopsy unit is the only such equipment in the Permian Basin, according to Palmer. Until now, women had to go to Dallas for the procedure, which uses a needle to extract necessary tissue.

Palmer discussed how all the Auxiliary's fundraisers go to purchase these pieces of equipment. "People ask why a soft drink costs a dollar at the shop when they can go somewhere else in town and pay 79 cents. Well, that dollar goes to buy this equipment to help patients."

He stepped into the Auxiliary by accident. In 1990 there was an appeal at his church (Westside Church of Christ) for people who wanted to start doing hospital visitation. For some reason, he signed up and soon was going through Chaplain Alan Williams' Shepherds training. As he did the work, Palmer noticed the Auxiliary members and how much help they were to the staff and patients. In 1995, he asked Auxiliary Director Kim Modisett about joining the group, and she told Palmer to find a position he might like. "There was a vacancy in the Gift Shop," and he signed up for it.

He now works every Friday afternoon in the Gift Shop, in addition to helping with training new volunteers and serving as recording secretary for the Auxiliary board. Next month Palmer will receive his 1,000-pin.

At the same time, he takes on the presidency of another group, also health-related. The Hearts Alive organization helps people who have heart disease and their caregivers. "They offer support and fellowship, and help people regain their normal lives," he said.

And he serves as secretary of the local chapter of the National Organization of Retired Federal Employees. "One thing leads to another," he said with a laugh.

"Some people my age just sit in a rocking chair," said the 75-year-old Palmer. He's never been one for sitting.

He moved to Midland at the age of 6 in March 1929. "Odessa, Midland and Stanton were all about the same size then," he recalled. "Big Spring was pretty big and San Angelo was a metropolis. They had a hotel and a dance band."

Palmer watched the Depression and Dust Bowl years through the eyes of a child. Midland's downtown sidewalks were built of wood slats with spaces between. "A penny meant something back then," he said in starting his tale. "I'd go downtown and look for pennies under the sidewalk. Then I'd get a stick, put some chewing gum on the end and get that penny. A penny would buy me a handful of red hots. A nickel would buy a triple-dip ice cream cone. But those nickels were hard to come by."

He graduated at the age of 17 from Midland High School, worked on oil well elevation surveys and then served three years in the Army Air Force during World War II, leaving wife Leola behind during his service in England.

When he returned, Palmer went to work for Honolulu Oil Company for 18 years (with a one-year leave during the Korean Conflict when he was recalled into active duty). Then came 32 years with the U.S. Postal Service, from which he retired on July 1, 1988.

"I retired on a Friday and on Monday I had a job mowing the yard at a Church of Christ. I've never had a boring day in my life."

One of six men in the Memorial Hospital Auxiliary, Palmer enjoys dealing with the patients, employees and visitors. "I like working at the hospital because of the people. Any time Kim calls, I'll go."

That is ironic because for much of his life, Palmer never went to a hospital. "I wouldn't go to the hospital on a bet. I didn't like to be around sick people. Now," he laughed, "I'm there all the time."

And every time Palmer heads out the door, he hauls a few more pounds of good will with him — non-taxable, of course.

COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS

Santa Rita Club offers volunteer opportunities

By Alexandria L. Rose

The Petroleum Museum of the Permian Basin is an awesome place that tells the story of the oil industry and preserves the history of the Permian Basin.

Rose

The right arm of the museum is the Santa Rita Club. Membership in this club consists of volunteers who have found the museum to be a place away from home that is most inviting. To sum up the experience of volunteering at the Petroleum Museum: It's fun!

Volunteers can do many jobs at the museum. For instance, the Gift Shop needs volunteers to work behind the counter. Volunteers extended a friendly West Texas welcome to visitors, who come from all over the world. What an education in itself, just to meet and greet those who stop and want to learn about the history of the oil industry in this area.

Volunteer docents also conduct tours through the museum. School students from Midland, Odessa and many of the surrounding communities come every year to tour the facility, and trained docents are needed to assist in this endeavor. The students really enjoy the tour, so docents can really have fun.

Tours are also available for adult groups, many of whom are from foreign countries. Retired oilmen, retired teachers and anyone else interested in learning about the oil industry can find docenting an interesting and exciting challenge.

Those who have spent many years working on oil rigs can find it to be a job that needs no training. Rig docents are needed to answer the questions asked by visitors who have little or no knowledge about the oil industry. The rigs are located on the grounds of the museum, and rig tours are given on Sunday afternoons.

Those who are history buffs have a golden opportunity to work in the archives, researching and organizing material. The archives are located on the bottom floor of the museum.

Another area where volunteers are needed is with the puppet theater. Volunteer puppeteers visit the schools with a show that presents the story of the oil industry.

The museum's volunteer jobs are endless. Even the office staff welcomes assistance.

Being a Santa Rita volunteer requires a minimum of 12 hours per year of work. Dues are $7.50 per year; the group has one meeting a year.

Please consider the Santa Rita Club as your place away from home this fall. Volunteer!

To learn more about this fun, friendly group, visit the Santa Rita Diamond Jubilee open house at 10 a.m. Sept. 15 at the museum. The theme of this celebration is the 75th anniversary of the Santa Rita Discovery Well. For more information call 683-4403.

Expert advises reviewing 1999 taxes now

DENVER (AP) — Most people don't want to think about income taxes in summer. Except for taxpayers who extended filing, the rest of us put away our tax files in April and have no desire to pull them out again until next April.

But now is an excellent time to review your tax situation, a review that could save you not only grief next April but money, according to a tax expert from the College for Financial Planning.

"There have been several changes in our tax code in the last couple of years that particularly affect older taxpayers," says Mike Cates, a professional tax preparer and an academic assistant at the college.

"It's important to review some of these issues now because by the end of the year or after the first of the year, it may be too late to make adjustments," he adds.

Cates highlighted several issues older taxpayers should look at.

■ Changes in personal situation. This is good advice for taxpayers of any age. For example, marriage, divorce, death of a spouse, loss or change of a job, or the sale of a home can affect your tax liability — and your tax strategies.

■ Earnings impact on Social Security. Estimate what your total earnings will be for the year and whether those earnings could reduce your Social Security benefits. If you haven't turned 65 yet, you can earn up to $9,120 a year without reducing benefits. For every $2 you earn above that limit, you lose $1 in benefits. For those 65 to 69, you lose $1 for every $3 you earn above $14,500.

■ Check estimated payments and withholding. "Retired people receive distributions from retirement plans, annuities, IRAs, Social Security payments, interest and dividends, and other investment income, which is not subject to withholding. They'll need to make quarterly estimated tax payments," Cates says.

He finds, however, that many older taxpayers don't realize until it's too late that they have underpaid. Now is the time to make sure that withholding from your earned income, plus any estimated payments, will equal at least 90 percent of the year's tax bill or 100 percent of last year's tax bill. Don't overlook those Social Security benefits, either, Cates warns. As much as 85 percent of the benefits can be taxed if your income is high enough.

■ Assess your portfolio. Don't let taxes dictate your investment decisions. Nonetheless, taxes can be a factor. Cates says investors who are edgy about the market may want to lock in some of their gains by selling winners, and offset some of those gains by selling perennial losers. You'll want to talk to your investment adviser before making a final decision.

■ Keep in mind the new holding period rules, too. Cates says that in order to have the profits you earn from selling an investment face the lowest capital gains tax rate (10 percent to 20 percent depending on your income tax bracket), you must have held that investment for more than 18 months. This means 18 months plus at least one day.

■ Check house sale rules. Thinking of moving this year? Cates says some taxpayers still aren't familiar with the new home-sale tax rules. It's common for older people to move to a more modest home for retirement or once their children have left.

This was a problem when the law said that in order to avoid taxation of your home-sale profits you needed to roll over those profits into a home of equal or greater value. People 55 and older could protect up to $125,000 of gains under the old exclusion rules, but it was a complicated, one-time rule. Now you can shelter up to $500,000 in profit from the sale of a home, and you can do it more than one time.

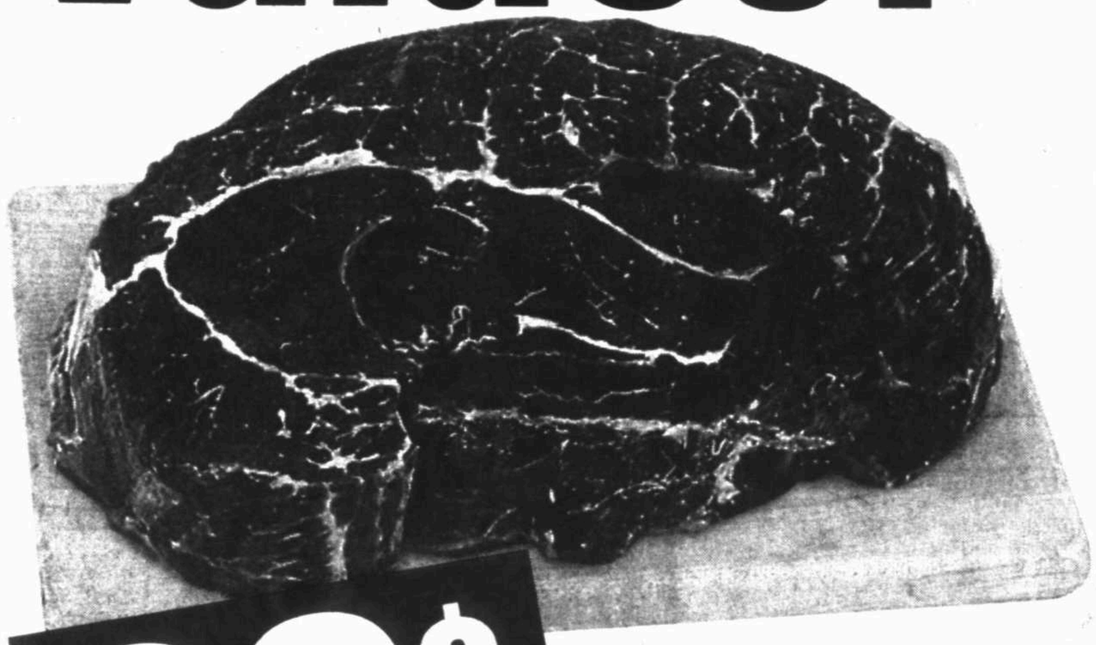

Cates says there are still several rules you have to be sure to follow, so if you're thinking of selling this year, review the rules so you can make the best use of them. One of the big benefits for older taxpayers, Cates notes, is that they now can sell their current residence, move into their vacation home or rental property, live there for two years and then sell it under the exclusion rules.

■ Consider a Roth IRA. Converting a traditional tax-deductible IRA into the new Roth IRA does not work out for everyone. You'll need to run the numbers to see if it works for you. However, if you plan to convert, now is probably the time to do it, since you can spread the tax bite out over four years for conversions made in 1998.

Another tax factor to consider at midyear is that you can't convert to a Roth if your adjusted gross income for the year exceeds $100,000. (Income from the rollover itself does not count toward the $100,000, Cates says.) Volunteer 'wealthy' with good will

By Lana Cunningham

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Howard Palmer found a wealth of good will and satisfaction when he became a volunteer for Memorial Hospital and Medical Center's Auxiliary. He works in the hospital's Gift Shop every Friday afternoon. He also serves as a volunteer for other Midland agencies, including the local chapter of National Organization of Retired Federal Employees, and as president of Hearts Alive.

Each Friday afternoon when Howard Palmer leaves the Gift Shop at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, he takes something home with him. The Internal Revenue Service will never be able to find it or make Palmer pay taxes.

What goes with Palmer are the good feelings he earns as a volunteer and the satisfaction of helping others. "When I get home, I feel good. I don't ever have to pay income taxes on it. What you get (from being a volunteer), they can't tax," he said with a laugh.

Good will, not money, is what Palmer focuses on these days. "There's no greed to this, no politics. It's just people helping people."

He begins to recite a brief list of activities Auxiliary members perform, including selling popcorn and soft drinks, delivering flowers to the patients, assisting families and physicians in the surgical waiting rooms, directing incoming patients and families or friends to where they need to go.

Ultimately, the Auxiliary does deal with money — raising what it can to buy expensive equipment needed by patients. Pulling out a list of purchases in recent years, Palmer pointed to the most recent: a $212,000 stereotactic breast biopsy unit. Other items included two ambulances, $101,000; labor and delivery monitoring equipment, $150,000; medical library, $125,000; Mue EKG system, $138,000; and a heart, lung perfusion system, $72,000.

The breast biopsy unit is the only such equipment in the Permian Basin, according to Palmer. Until now, women had to go to Dallas for the procedure, which uses a needle to extract necessary tissue.

Palmer discussed how all the Auxiliary's fundraisers go to purchase these pieces of equipment. "People ask why a soft drink costs a dollar at the shop when they can go somewhere else in town and pay 79 cents. Well, that dollar goes to buy this equipment to help patients."

He stepped into the Auxiliary by accident. In 1990 there was an appeal at his church (Westside Church of Christ) for people who wanted to start doing hospital visitation. For some reason, he signed up and soon was going through Chaplain Alan Williams' Shepherds training. As he did the work, Palmer noticed the Auxiliary members and how much help they were to the staff and patients. In 1995, he asked Auxiliary Director Kim Modisett about joining the group, and she told Palmer to find a position he might like. "There was a vacancy in the Gift Shop," and he signed up for it.

He now works every Friday afternoon in the Gift Shop, in addition to helping with training new volunteers and serving as recording secretary for the Auxiliary board. Next month Palmer will receive his 1,000-pin.

At the same time, he takes on the presidency of another group, also health-related. The Hearts Alive organization helps people who have heart disease and their caregivers. "They offer support and fellowship, and help people regain their normal lives," he said.

And he serves as secretary of the local chapter of the National Organization of Retired Federal Employees. "One thing leads to another," he said with a laugh.

"Some people my age just sit in a rocking chair," said the 75-year-old Palmer. He's never been one for sitting.

He moved to Midland at the age of 6 in March 1929. "Odessa, Midland and Stanton were all about the same size then," he recalled. "Big Spring was pretty big and San Angelo was a metropolis. They had a hotel and a dance band."

Palmer watched the Depression and Dust Bowl years through the eyes of a child. Midland's downtown sidewalks were built of wood slats with spaces between. "A penny meant something back then," he said in starting his tale. "I'd go downtown and look for pennies under the sidewalk. Then I'd get a stick, put some chewing gum on the end and get that penny. A penny would buy me a handful of red hots. A nickel would buy a triple-dip ice cream cone. But those nickels were hard to come by."

He graduated at the age of 17 from Midland High School, worked on oil well elevation surveys and then served three years in the Army Air Force during World War II, leaving wife Leola behind during his service in England.

When he returned, Palmer went to work for Honolulu Oil Company for 18 years (with a one-year leave during the Korean Conflict when he was recalled into active duty). Then came 32 years with the U.S. Postal Service, from which he retired on July 1, 1988.

"I retired on a Friday and on Monday I had a job mowing the yard at a Church of Christ. I've never had a boring day in my life."

One of six men in the Memorial Hospital Auxiliary, Palmer enjoys dealing with the patients, employees and visitors. "I like working at the hospital because of the people. Any time Kim calls, I'll go."

That is ironic because for much of his life, Palmer never went to a hospital. "I wouldn't go to the hospital on a bet. I didn't like to be around sick people. Now," he laughed, "I'm there all the time."

And every time Palmer heads out the door, he hauls a few more pounds of good will with him — non-taxable, of course.

COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS

By Alexandria L. Rose

The Petroleum Museum of the Permian Basin is an awesome place that tells the story of the oil industry and preserves the history of the Permian Basin.

Rose

The right arm of the museum is the Santa Rita Club. Membership in this club consists of volunteers who have found the museum to be a place away from home that is most inviting. To sum up the experience of volunteering at the Petroleum Museum: It's fun!

Volunteers can do many jobs at the museum. For instance, the Gift Shop needs volunteers to work behind the counter. Volunteers extended a friendly West Texas welcome to visitors, who come from all over the world. What an education in itself, just to meet and greet those who stop and want to learn about the history of the oil industry in this area.

Volunteer docents also conduct tours through the museum. School students from Midland, Odessa and many of the surrounding communities come every year to tour the facility, and trained docents are needed to assist in this endeavor. The students really enjoy the tour, so docents can really have fun.

Tours are also available for adult groups, many of whom are from foreign countries. Retired oilmen, retired teachers and anyone else interested in learning about the oil industry can find docenting an interesting and exciting challenge.

Those who have spent many years working on oil rigs can find it to be a job that needs no training. Rig docents are needed to answer the questions asked by visitors who have little or no knowledge about the oil industry. The rigs are located on the grounds of the museum, and rig tours are given on Sunday afternoons.

Those who are history buffs have a golden opportunity to work in the archives, researching and organizing material. The archives are located on the bottom floor of the museum.

Another area where volunteers are needed is with the puppet theater. Volunteer puppeteers visit the schools with a show that presents the story of the oil industry.

The museum's volunteer jobs are endless. Even the office staff welcomes assistance.

Being a Santa Rita volunteer requires a minimum of 12 hours per year of work. Dues are $7.50 per year; the group has one meeting a year.

Please consider the Santa Rita Club as your place away from home this fall. Volunteer!

To learn more about this fun, friendly group, visit the Santa Rita Diamond Jubilee open house at 10 a.m. Sept. 15 at the museum. The theme of this celebration is the 75th anniversary of the Santa Rita Discovery Well. For more information call 683-4403.

Expert advises reviewing 1999 taxes now

DENVER (AP) — Most people don't want to think about income taxes in summer. Except for taxpayers who extended filing, the rest of us put away our tax files in April and have no desire to pull them out again until next April.

But now is an excellent time to review your tax situation, a review that could save you not only grief next April but money, according to a tax expert from the College for Financial Planning.

"There have been several changes in our tax code in the last couple of years that particularly affect older taxpayers," says Mike Cates, a professional tax preparer and an academic assistant at the college.

"It's important to review some of these issues now because by the end of the year or after the first of the year, it may be too late to make adjustments," he adds.

Cates highlighted several issues older taxpayers should look at.

■ Changes in personal situation. This is good advice for taxpayers of any age. For example, marriage, divorce, death of a spouse, loss or change of a job, or the sale of a home can affect your tax liability — and your tax strategies.

■ Earnings impact on Social Security. Estimate what your total earnings will be for the year and whether those earnings could reduce your Social Security benefits. If you haven't turned 65 yet, you can earn up to $9,120 a year without reducing benefits. For every $2 you earn above that limit, you lose $1 in benefits. For those 65 to 69, you lose $1 for every $3 you earn above $14,500.

■ Check estimated payments and withholding. "Retired people receive distributions from retirement plans, annuities, IRAs, Social Security payments, interest and dividends, and other investment income, which is not subject to withholding. They'll need to make quarterly estimated tax payments," Cates says.

He finds, however, that many older taxpayers don't realize until it's too late that they have underpaid. Now is the time to make sure that withholding from your earned income, plus any estimated payments, will equal at least 90 percent of the year's tax bill or 100 percent of last year's tax bill. Don't overlook those Social Security benefits, either, Cates warns. As much as 85 percent of the benefits can be taxed if your income is high enough.

■ Assess your portfolio. Don't let taxes dictate your investment decisions. Nonetheless, taxes can be a factor. Cates says investors who are edgy about the market may want to lock in some of their gains by selling winners, and offset some of those gains by selling perennial losers. You'll want to talk to your investment adviser before making a final decision.

■ Keep in mind the new holding period rules, too. Cates says that in order to have the profits you earn from selling an investment face the lowest capital gains tax rate (10 percent to 20 percent depending on your income tax bracket), you must have held that investment for more than 18 months. This means 18 months plus at least one day.

■ Check house sale rules. Thinking of moving this year? Cates says some taxpayers still aren't familiar with the new home-sale tax rules. It's common for older people to move to a more modest home for retirement or once their children have left.

This was a problem when the law said that in order to avoid taxation of your home-sale profits you needed to roll over those profits into a home of equal or greater value. People 55 and older could protect up to $125,000 of gains under the old exclusion rules, but it was a complicated, one-time rule. Now you can shelter up to $500,000 in profit from the sale of a home, and you can do it more than one time.

Cates says there are still several rules you have to be sure to follow, so if you're thinking of selling this year, review the rules so you can make the best use of them. One of the big benefits for older taxpayers, Cates notes, is that they now can sell their current residence, move into their vacation home or rental property, live there for two years and then sell it under the exclusion rules.

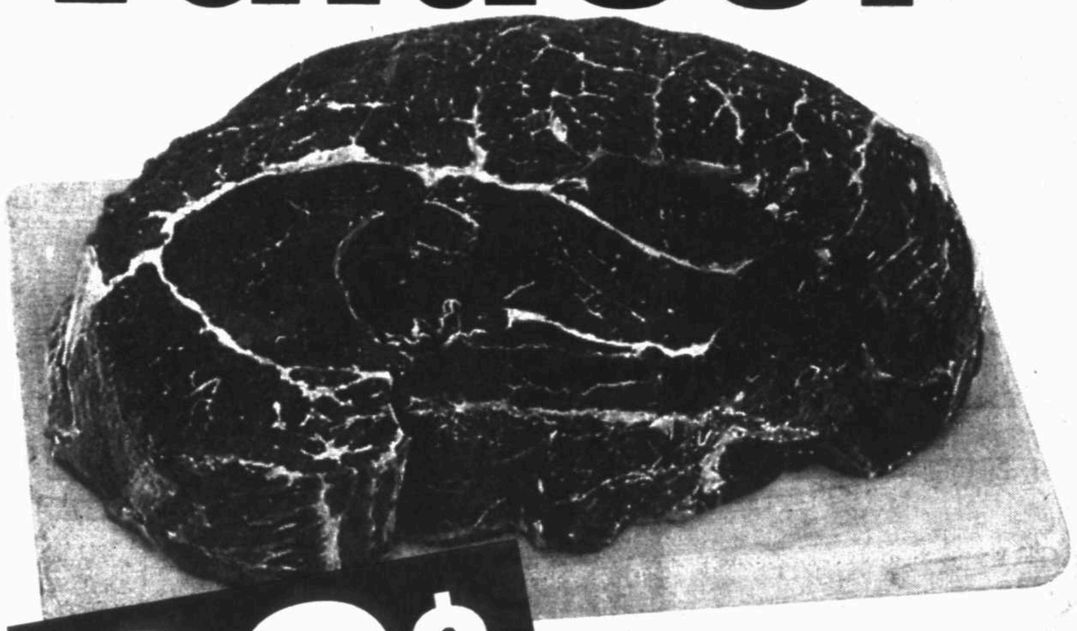

■ Consider a Roth IRA. Converting a traditional tax-deductible IRA into the new Roth IRA does not work out for everyone. You'll need to run the numbers to see if it works for you. However, if you plan to convert, now is probably the time to do it, since you can spread the tax bite out over four years for conversions made in 1998.

Another tax factor to consider at midyear is that you can't convert to a Roth if your adjusted gross income for the year exceeds $100,000. (Income from the rollover itself does not count toward the $100,000, Cates says.) If you want to stay under the $100,000 limit in order to convert, now is the perfect time to plan any necessary income-reduction strategies.

All American

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — Old Habits is a foul-weather kind of race horse.

The 2-year-old colt overcame a muddy and windswept Ruidoso Downs track Thursday to post the top qualifying time for the $2 million All American Futurity, to be run Labor Day.

Old Habits' time of 21.555 seconds in winning the final of 18 trial races over 440 yards was the fastest of the 180 horses trying to get into the elite field. The winner of the futurity, the world's richest quarter horse race, will earn $1 million.

In Thursday's trials, the horses were running against the clock. Each horse's time was electronically recorded, and the 10 fastest of the day make the finals.

Bred at the Vessels Stallion Farm in southern California, Old Habits has won his last three races and four of his six starts.

Chicks Infinity, a grey filly, had the second-fastest qualifying time of 21.650, with the third-fastest posted by the unbeaten colt Hes My Dasher.

Chicks Infinity, running in the ninth trial, broke alertly from the No. 1 post and led every step. The runner-up in the race, Party Girl Affair, also qualified with the seventh-fastest time of the day.

Hes My Dasher, winner of more than $271,000 this summer, had to overcome plenty of trouble to win his sixth straight race. The brown colt broke slowly from the No. 3 post and was bumped by another horse 100 yards into the race. He found an opening and was pulling away when he hit the wire in front in 21.665.

Gol, winner of the Heritage Place Futurity at Remington Park and the Retama Park Futurity in Texas earlier this summer, finished second behind Hes My Dasher, but his time of 21.820 was too slow to get him into the finals.

Trainer John M. Gonzales saddled two futurity finalists with Chicks Infinity and the colt Special Advice. Special Advice, making only his third start this season, won the eighth trial in 21.720.

Seven owners whose horses weren't nominated for the futurity paid a supplemental fee of $50,000 to get their 2-year-olds into Thursday's trials.

50, 51: McGwire getting close

By Tom Withers
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Start the countdown at 11.

Mark McGwire is quickly closing in on Roger Maris, and with two more home runs Thursday night he gave baseball fans more reason to believe this is the year.

McGwire hit his 50th and 51st homers to creep nearer to breaking Maris' record of 61 homers in a season as the St. Louis Cardinals split a doubleheader with the New York Mets.

In the first game, McGwire became the first player in history to hit 50 home runs in three consecutive seasons with a high drive in the seventh inning of the Cardinals' 2-0 win.

McGwire wasted no time hitting No. 51, connecting in the first inning of the second game, but St. Louis blew a three-run lead and lost 5-4.

Since spring training, McGwire has been hounded by questions asking whether he or anyone else could break baseball's most hallowed record. He's maintained all along that getting to 50 early would be the key.

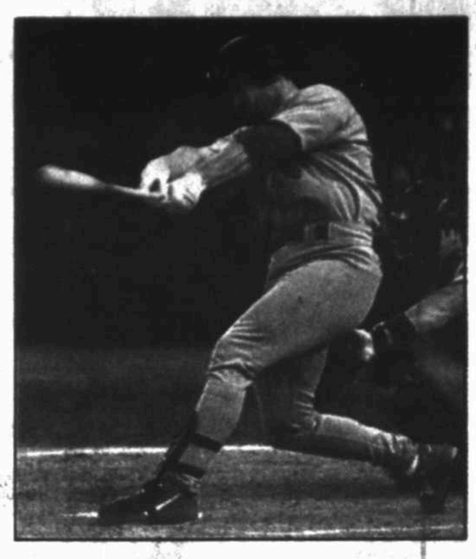

"That's what I truly believe," he said Thursday afternoon. "Ever since I was a young kid hitting home runs. I mean if someone gets to 50 by September 1, they have a shot down the stretch run."

If McGwire believes, then so should everyone else. After all, he hit 15 homers last September for St. Louis.

Brian Jordan homered in both games for the Cardinals.

Mike Piazza hit a two-run homer in the second game for New York, which rallied to win with two runs in the seventh.

FOOTBALL 1998: LAMESA GOLDEN TORNADOES

Time for a Turnaround

Lamesa players want to put stop to losing streak

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

LAMESA — The Lamesa Golden Tornadoes want everyone to know that they're sick and tired of losing.

"I think the kids and I think we're the only ones that have a chance, but we feel good about this season," said third-year Lamesa coach Tim James. "I feel that we can give it a run toward a playoff spot, I really do. That's what we're preparing to do."

A renewed attitude thanks to a new district has Lamesa thinking its fortunes will turn around sooner rather than later. Getting bumped down from Class 4A to Class 3A should help the Golden Tors in accomplishing their goals of winning games and maybe making the playoffs. Lamesa knows, however, that there is still an uphill battle to climb for respectability from foes and fans alike.

Winning may still be tough for the Golden Tors since numbers still present a dilemma. A total of 26 kids, including 12 seniors, will suit up for the varsity team this fall which may create a depth problem late in games.

"When you haven't won in a long time, a lot of kids don't want to come out," James said. "But winning will take care of that. Just look at Stanton."

The last time Lamesa had a winning record was in 1991 when the Golden Tors went 6-4. It's been even longer since Lamesa has even thought about the playoffs. In 1989, the Golden Tors went 6-3-1 and just barely missed the post-season.

Moving to District 3-3A with Brownfield, Seminole, Denver City, Slaton and Colorado City should give Lamesa a better shot at making the playoffs. It's a far cry from competing in District 2-4A with schools that had double the enrollment of Lamesa.

"For example, in our last game last year with Planview, we had 688 kids in our school. They turned in 1,632 and that's not fair," James said.

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram
Lamesa will be led by players like (clockwise from top left) Daniel Hernandez, Josh Wade, Donny Hernandez, Greg Lackey and Joseph Seale.

Competition should be closer to Lamesa's level this year but the wins won't come much easier with Seminole, Denver City and Colorado City all having playoff experience.

"Denver City probably has the most winning tradition out of any team in this area. They've got a new coach this year so we'll see how they respond to that," James said. "Seminole played 13 games last year and Colorado City also made the playoffs last year."

The above mentioned teams not only possess talent but also know how to win. Developing confidence, or a "winning attitude", is probably the biggest obstacle facing the Golden Tors.

"Just developing confidence in themselves and in their teammates has been hard to come by," James said. "Mental preparation is a big key. Dropping down to 3A has helped the kids some in that area. The attitude of the kids so far has been great. They've done everything we've asked them to do and more.

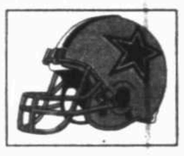

"I stress to these kids every day, 'to have the confidence in what you do.' And I think that's important. You have to build confidence in these kids by giving them positive re-enforcement. Don't get me wrong, I'll still chew them out, but I'll also pat them on the back when they do good and show that we are improving."

Special teams concern Cowboys

Associated Press

IRVING — The season hasn't even started yet, but the Cowboys realize they need help.

That's why they're calling back their special teams starters — including Billy Davis, who is battling Ernie Mills for the No. 2 receiver position — for Saturday's exhibition game against the St. Louis Rams.

Davis, who hopes to start opposite Michael Irvin this season, is none too thrilled about the assignment.

"It is definitely going to set me back as far as competing with Ernie for the second wide receiver position," Davis told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in Thursday's editions. "I really don't know what it means. I've come to a point of where I'm tired of figuring it out, of asking where I stand on the field."

Wide receivers coach Dwain Painter told the Star-Telegram Mills "has the slight edge" over Davis because of his experience with the offense. Head coach Chan Gailey said he has yet to decide who will fill the spot.

The decision follows the Cowboys' 21-3 exhibition loss to New England Monday night in Mexico City. In the first half alone, special teams bobbled two punts and a kickoff, committed a penalty and allowed a 74-yard punt return for a touchdown which officials called back because of holding.

Gailey and special teams coach Joe Avezzano hope to prevent those kinds of errors by having several offensive and defensive starters double up on special teams. That's a longstanding Cowboys practice, but Gailey had free agents and rookies playing against the Patriots so he could evaluate them.

"We took a look at a lot of young guys Monday, which is what we needed to do

August gets even worse for Angels

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

The Midland Angels were hoping to get off to a good start in their last homestand of the year Thursday night. What they got instead were just more headaches in a horrendous August.

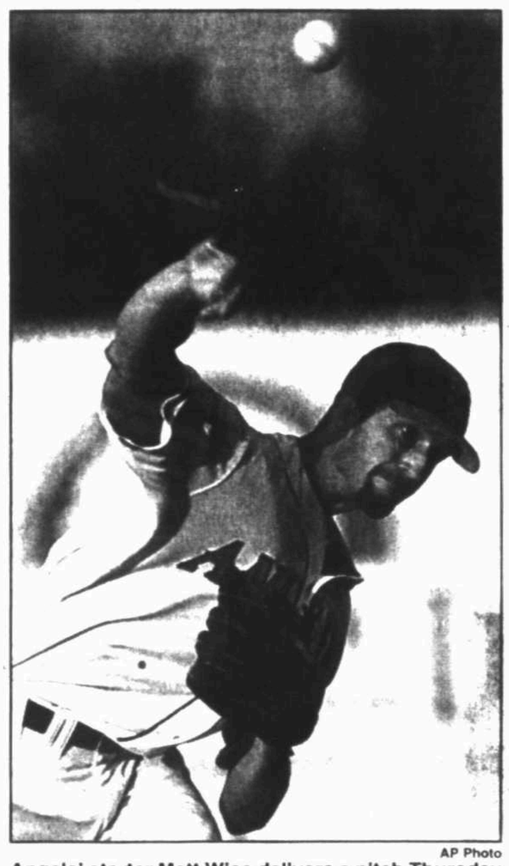

The Angels were shut down by Missions pitcher Luke Prokopec (3-0) on offense, while giving up 14 hits on the way to an 8-3 loss to San Antonio at Christensen Stadium.

Scoring just a handful of runs seem to be all to common in what can only be called as an awful August for the Halos, who have gone 3-15 this month, getting buried even deeper in the Texas League West division standings.

With the team depleted of its talent over the season, Angels manager Don Long and his troops can only grin and bear it. The Missions, who have also been drained of talent over the past few months, still appear to have some pop and hunger. That remaining hunger should help since the Missions have a spot in the Texas League playoffs because of their first half West division title.

San Antonio got to Angel starter Matt Wise (8-9) in the first inning, taking advantage of two walks and two hits for a 2-0 lead.

The Missions added a run in the second and fourth before Midland had an answer. Eddie Christian led off with a walk and moved over to second on a balk by Prokopec. After Keith Luuloa flied out to first and Larry Barnes struck out, Jamie Burke got the Angels' second hit of the night with a single to right to score Christian and cut the Missions' advantage to 4-1.

Outside of that inning, the Angels had a hard time getting to Prokopec. The free agent from South Australia came in with a 1.00 ERA and he certainly didn't disappoint. Prokopec allowed just one run on two hits in five innings of work.

Even when Prokopec wasn't on the mound, the Angels had trouble scoring runs. Down 5-1, Mid-

Royals call on locals to join Prentice group

Staff and Wire Reports

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With Kansas City's major league status in the balance, citizens were urged Thursday to "step up to the plate" and support a New Yorker's bid to buy the Royals.

"If people in Kansas City don't want baseball in Kansas City, what can we do?" Royals president Mike Herman said at a news conference. "If we can't find local buyers, we are permitted to move the team. It's something we don't want to do."

The team's board met Thursday and declared that the group headed by New York lawyer Miles Prentice III had "the superior bid" but failed to meet the requirement of 50 percent local investment.

Prentice, 55, a lawyer with the New York firm of Eaton and Van Winkle, wears a cap when he's in Kansas City with the logo of his other baseball team, the Midland Angels. He also co-owns the Odessa Jackalopes, a minor league hockey team, and he made an unsuccessful bid earlier this year with another group for the Los Angeles Dodgers. Prentice's wealth comes from investments, mostly in real estate.

Herman indicated that had always been a requirement for purchasing the team, which has been in ownership limbo since founder Ewing Kauffman died in 1993.

But Prentice, saying he was "very close" to what he needs, said the board advised him of that prerequisite only about three weeks ago.

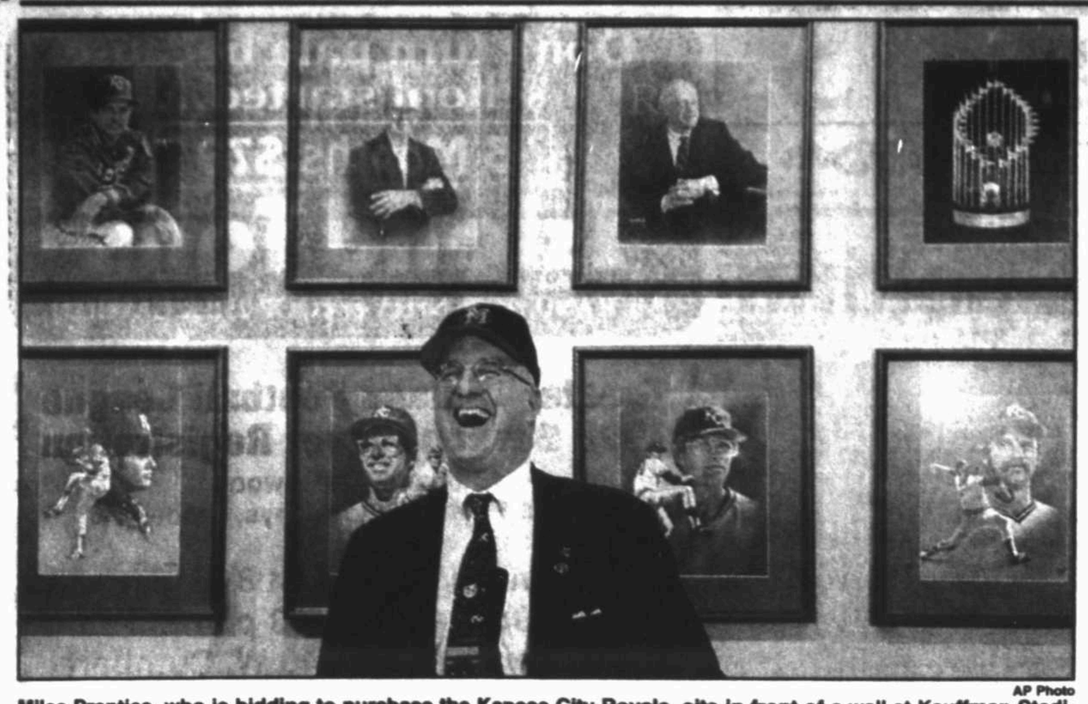

"I think we'll get it done," said Prentice. "I love baseball. I'm still having fun. This has been an interesting odyssey."

Prentice has persuaded some of Kansas City's most prominent families to join him in reaching the board's minimum price of $75 million, including Kauffman's adopted daughter and daughter-in-law. His only competition is a partnership between Lamar Hunt, owner of the Kansas City Chiefs, and Western Resources, Inc., a utility giant headquartered in Topeka, Kan.

The Hunt group, however, has bid only $25 million up front plus $27 million conditional upon taxpayers making millions of dollars worth of improvements to Kauffman Stadium.

"The Miles Prentice group has submitted the superior bid," Herman said. "Our articles of incorporation require that we have to have 50 percent local ownership. The board is now challenging the citizens of Kansas City to step up to the plate and support the Prentice bid."

Herman refused to say how much more local investment Prentice needs, or whether the Hunt group was still in the running.

Hunt's office said he was traveling and not available for comment. A spokesman for John Hayes Jr., chairman of Western Resources, would only issue this one-sentence statement:

"We're continuing to work at the process."

There would appently be no problem with Prentice owning a Major League team and a minor league team, even if the minor league team is an affiliate of a different major league parent. Monty Hoppel, general manager of the Midland Angels, said Thursday that Prentice has no plans to sell the Double-A team.

"It would have no effect whatsoever on the local club," Hoppel said.

Prentice, who has promised all along that he has no intention to move the Royals out of Kansas City, said he was not upset when the 50 percent local investment condition was added.

"Not when I understood the reasons," he said. "It's very rational. I have no problem with it."

Many Kansas City residents recall that the late Charlie Finley, who was not a local resident, moved the Athletics to Oakland in 1967.

"You were burned once," Prentice said. "I understand the concern."

Founded as an American League expansion team in 1969, the Royals were hugely successful through the 1980s, winning the 1980 pennant and the 1985 World Series. But attendance has dipped and they have been consistent money losers since slipping into mediocrity and finishing in the AL Central cellar the past two seasons.

Kauffman, one of Kansas City's most generous philanthropists, set aside more than $50 million to shore up losses until a local buyer was found, and stipulated that all proceeds from the sale would go to local charities. Although they are committed by lease to stay in Kansas City through 2015, no owner would be required to remain if the team is not adequately supported.

Gonzalez' 35th homer makes him Rangers' career hit leader

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Juan Gonzalez became Texas' career hit leader when he connected for his 35th home run Thursday night as the Rangers defeated the Cleveland Indians 8-2.

Pinch-hitter Roberto Kelly had three-run homer, Ivan Rodriguez hit a two-run homer and Rusty Greer had a solo shot for Texas.

Gonzalez gave the Rangers a 1-0 lead in the second inning with his homer off Dave Burba (10-9). It was Gonzalez's 1,181st career hit, pushing him past Jim Sundberg for the most in Rangers' history.

With the homer, Gonzalez tied Sammy Sosa of the Chicago Cubs for the major league RBIs lead at 121.

Rodriguez hit 11th home run — and first since May 23 — in the eighth.

Todd Stottlemyre (3-1), who had a 6.89 ERA in three starts since being traded from St. Louis to Texas on July 31, allowed two runs in 5 1-3 innings. He worked around 10 hits and three walks.

Stottlemyre blanked the Indians for the first four innings, gave up an RBI double to Brian Giles in the fifth and left with the bases loaded and one out in the sixth.

The Indians had filled the bases on singles by David Justice, Sandy Alomar and Omar Vizquel, and cut the deficit to 3-2 when Kenny Lofton grounded into a forceout.

Greer's 11th homer leading off the fourth and Todd Zeile's sacrifice fly later in the inning gave the Rangers a 3-0 lead.

AL Roundup

Twins 9, Yankees 4

MINNEAPOLIS — The New York Yankees' modern major league record of 48 consecutive games with a lead ended Thursday night as Ron Coomer's solo home run in the second inning started the Minnesota Twins to a 9-4 victory.

Coomer drove in three runs as the Twins swept the two-game series, the first time the Yankees have been swept since losing a season-opening two-game set at Anaheim.

Minnesota became the first team to beat the Yankees four times this year.

New York, which has lost only four series all season, committed a season-high five errors that led to four unearned runs. This was the first game the Yankees haven't held a lead at some point since a June 28 loss to the New York Mets.

Frank Rodriguez (3-2) allowed two runs on five hits in seven innings, atoning for a 7-3 loss in New York last week. The Yankees swept that three-game series by a combined score of 25-5.

Devil Rays 4, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Tony Saunders pitched seven innings of four-hit ball and Bobby Smith snapped an eighth-inning tie with a sacrifice fly as Tampa Bay blunted the Baltimore Orioles' second-half surge with a victory.

Bubba Trammell homered for Tampa Bay, which became only the second expansion team in major league history to win a season series from a reigning division or league champion. The Devils Rays went 7-5 against the defending AL East titlists, including 5-1 in Baltimore.

Cal Ripken tied Brooks Robinson's franchise record of 2,848 hits with his 10th homer of the season, and B.J. Surhoff went 3-for-3 with a home run for Baltimore.

Saunders (4-11) allowed two runs and three walks. The Baltimore native struck out six to win for the first time in four starts since July 29.

Royals 8, Red Sox 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Terry Pendleton hit a three-run homer and drove in four runs as the Kansas City Royals beat the Boston Red Sox and snapped a five-game losing streak.

Pendleton's home run, only his second of the year, gave the Royals a 3-2 lead in the first inning. He added an RBI groundout for an 8-2 lead in Kansas City's three-run fifth.

Brewers nip Astros in 10th

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Fernando Vina's fourth hit, a one-out single in the 10th inning, gave the Milwaukee Brewers a 6-5 victory over the Houston Astros.

Bob Wickman (6-6) pitched the 10th for the win as the Brewers improved to 9-2 in extra innings.

The Astros took a 5-4 lead into the ninth. Marquis Grissom led off with a grounder to first baseman Jeff Bagwell, but his throw was dropped by Wagner as he covered the bag.

Mark Loretta sacrificed and Marc Newfield hit a two-out double that tied it. It was Wagner's third blown save in 27 chances.

Jeff Bagwell hit his 27th home run and singled twice for Houston. The Astros scored all of their runs with two outs.

Trailing 5-4, the Brewers loaded the bases in the eighth off Scott Elarton, and Doug Henry relieved. Vina flied out to center fielder Richard Hidalgo, whose throw home nailed Jenkins and preserved the one-run lead.

Bagwell hit a solo home run in the seventh that finished Brewers starter Scott Karl. Reliever Eric Plunk gave up an RBI single to Hidalgo that made it 5-2.

Milwaukee scored twice in the bottom of the seventh. Bobby Hughes and Vina singled off Astros starter Mike Hampton, and Elarton gave up Loretta's two-run double.

Sean Berry hit a solo home run in the Houston second.

Cubs 7, Giants 3

CHICAGO — Glenallen Hill hit a pinch-hit grand slam as Chicago beat San Francisco.

It was Hill's third home run of the year and the fifth grand slam of his career.

Kevin Tapani (15-7) gave up four hits and three runs — including two homers — in five innings for the win. He also struck out five and walked three. The Cubs shelled Russ Ortiz (1-3) for seven hits and five runs in 4 2-3 innings.

Sammy Sosa was 0-for-5 with three strikeouts, one day after hitting his 48th home run.

Phillies 11, Diamondbacks 1, 1st game

PHILADELPHIA — Curt Schilling struck out 14 and tossed a four-hitter and Scott Rolen and Bobby Abreu each hit three-run homers to pace Philadelphia to a rout over Arizona in the first game of a doubleheader.

Schilling (12-11), one strikeout shy of his season-high, walked two en route to his 12th complete game of the season. He is 3-0 with a 0.72 ERA in 25 innings against Arizona. He raised his season strikeout total to 247.

Rockies 6, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Darryl Kile struck out a career-high 14 on the way to his first road win since May as the Colorado beat Montreal.

Kile (10-14) allowed three runs on nine hits in seven innings to win his third straight start as Colorado snapped a four-game losing streak.

Pirates 6, Reds 5

PITTSBURGH — Manny Martinez hit an RBI single in the ninth over a drawn-in outfield to give Pittsburgh a victory over Cincinnati.

Padres 2, Braves 0

ATLANTA — Kevin Brown combined with three relievers on an 11-hit shutout and San Diego once again pulled within a game of Atlanta for the best record in the National League.

Brown (16-4), who pitched a one-hitter against Milwaukee in his last start, extended his scoreless streak to 16 innings. He struck out nine but gave up eight hits in 6 1-3 innings.

Dodgers 2, Marlins 1, 10 innings

MIAMI — Jim Eisenreich walked with two outs and the bases loaded against his former teammates to break a 10th-inning tie, as Los Angeles beat Florida.

Gary Sheffield homered in his first at-bat in Miami since being traded by the Marlins to Los Angeles on May 15.

Hall lands UDM position

DETROIT, Mich. — Former Midland High tennis player Kristin Hall has been named as the women's tennis coach at the University of Detroit Mercy, according to Brad Kinsman, UDM athletic director.

Hall, a 1989 graduate of Midland High who played tennis under Steve Hoover, played collegiately at Texas Tech before graduating in 1993 and she is a USTPA certified professional.

Before taking on the tennis coaching duties for the Detroit Titans, Hall was a teaching professional at the nearby Farmington Tennis Club and the Beachview Swim and Tennis Club.

"I'm extremely excited to be here at the University of Detroit Mercy," Hall said. "I think working with the team will be a great experience and a positive experience. Hopefully, I'll bring a fresh outlook and some new ideas to the team.

"As a recent player, I've been there and I know what our players will be going through. We've got an up and coming program with a good recruiting class. I think we have the potential to compete in the MCC right away."

The 1998-99 Titans will boast the likes of All-MCC sophomore Maria Pandele, who was 21-1 at the No. 1 singles last year. Senior Yvonne Villemure, who last week was named an Intercollegiate Tennis Association 1998 Scholar-Athlete, also returns. UDM also has a recruiting class which includes three All-State players.

Smith moves on to Baylor

Crystal Smith, a former standout pitcher for Midland Lee, is transferring from Southwest Texas State to Baylor and will be eligible to pitch in the 1999 season.

Smith, a 1997 Lee graduate, pitched 221 innings in 35 appearances at Southwest last season and posted a 1.96 ERA. According to her father Stan, Smith wasn't happy with the school's program.

At Baylor, Smith will be joining another former Midlander, former MHS coach Rich Wieligman, who was hired as an assistant coach earlier this summer.

San Angelo hosts races

SAN ANGELO — San Angelo Speedway is holding a shootout Sunday between racers from Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico beginning at 7:30 p.m. Classes include Mini Stock, Street Stock, Super Stock and IMCA Modifieds.

Total purse for the IMCA is $1,775 with $500 going to the winner, $700 for Street Stock with $200 to the winner and $920 for the Super Stock with $300 to the winner.

Race City USA has posted a $100 bounty on Lubbock's Monte Bolton in the IMCA. By beating Bolton, the winner can receive $600 instead of $500. Bolton has won the $500 IMCA feature race three straight weeks.

Pit gates open at 5 p.m. and pit passes are $15. Spectator gates open at 6 p.m. with admission $8 for adults, $2 for children 6-12 and free to those five and under.

MCGWIRE: Slugger adds two homers

(From 1C)

Rey Ordonez hit an RBI double to tie it against Darren Oliver (1-2) and Tony Phillips brought in the go-ahead run with a groundout.

The Mets, who were playing their second of three doubleheaders this week, lead Chicago by one-half game for the wild card. The Cubs beat San Francisco 7-3 Thursday.

After Jordan led off the seventh inning of the first game with a homer off Willie Blair (4-16), McGwire made history by sending a 2-1 pitch over the wall in left-center. McGwire pumped his right fist above his head as he rounded first base as the Shea Stadium crowd of 40,308 saluted him with a rousing standing ovation.

Only Babe Ruth (1920-21 and 1927-28) and McGwire had hit 50 or more homers in back-to-back seasons before McGwire's 369-foot shot. McGwire hit 52 homers in 1996 for Oakland and 58 for the A's and Cardinals last year.

"It's nice to be a part of major league history, and to have done so in such a historic baseball city as New York," McGwire said in a statement. "Ironically, I broke Babe Ruth's record just across town from the stadium he played in."

In the first inning of the second game against Rick Reed (15-7), McGwire lined a 3-2 pitch into the left-field seats for No. 51. It was his fourth homer in three games. He hit Nos. 48 and 49 on Wednesday in Chicago.

With McGwire in town and their club in the NL wild-card chase, Mets fans came out early to see batting practice, two games for the price of one and a little history.

They cheered McGwire during BP and most of them kept it up when he came to the plate in the game. Only a couple of wise guys behind home plate chanted "So-sa, So-sa," referring to the Cubs' Sammy Sosa, who has 48 homers.

Donovan Osborne (3-2) shut out the Mets on four hits in eight innings. The left-hander allowed just a pair of walks through five innings before Phillips flared a single to left with one out in the sixth. One out later, Matt Franco grounded a single to right, but Osborne worked out of the jam by striking out Piazza.

Former Met Juan Acevedo pitched the ninth for his third save.

land mounted the closest to a rally it would see all night in the seventh inning.

The Angels got two men on board with nobody out to start the inning but ended up getting just one run. Burke walked and Marcus Sturdivant singled to put runners on base. Angelo Encarnacion then drove in Burke with a single to right and the 2,320 fans at Christensen were anticipating an Angel rally.

Nope.

Chuck Abbott flied to right and then Sturdivant got thrown out at third base after Norm Hutchins lifted a blooper to center. Sturdivant was apparently waiting to tag at second on what appeared to be a fly ball. Sturdivant waited too long and was thrown out by Missions centerfielder Tony Mota.

Trent Durrington grounded out to second base to end the inning.

The Missions added a run in the eighth and two more in the ninth to put the game out of reach.

Both teams continue their series today at 7:11 p.m. with the Angels Lou Pote (8-8, 5.10 ERA) going on the mound against San Antonio's Casey Denkins (3-8, 4.59).

How do the tropics control icebergs?

Researchers believe cyclical changes in equatorial wind patterns have caused a massive increase in the numbers of icebergs in the North Atlantic. The key to their theory rests with fossil remains of a deep-water algae.

Every 8,400 years, winds (1) that push warm tropical waters west into the Caribbean Sea and Gulf of Mexico relax. This allows the warm waters to be carried with the Gulf Stream (2) into the north Atlantic. When this happened during the last ice age, vast numbers of icebergs calved (3) off the massive ice sheets that covered the Northern Hemisphere.

Scientists analyzing cores of ocean sediments taken off the west coast of Africa found evidence of massive deposits of Florisphaera profunda, a marine algae that thrives in cold, deep waters. The deposits occurred at intervals of about 8,400 years for the last 45,000 years. Increases in this algae occur when westward winds lessen. Researchers suggest that these intervals are linked to variations in the Earth's orbital cycle. High levels of pulverized rock, once frozen into the base of glaciers, were found in sediment cores from the north Atlantic. These coincide nicely with the timing of the increased algae deposits.

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

LAMESA — Optimism has been hard to come by on the Lamesa High School football field.

It's been 25 years since the Golden Tornadoes last made the playoffs and 1991 when they last had a winning record.

So when Feb. 2 rolled around, a sigh of relief could have been heard throughout the halls at LHS. That's when Lamesa, which was competing against bigger 4A schools, got sent down to Class 3A in the University Interscholastic League realignment. It was good news for a sport such as basketball where Lamesa is a state power even at the 4A level, but even better news for the football team, which has had to deal with the hardship of the past couple of years and relies on more players to provide depth.

"Feb. 2 was a big day for us," said football coach and athletic director Tim James. "I think it's really helped our kids mentally. We know that 3A is going to be tough. It's not going to be a cake walk or anything like that, but we feel the playing field is leveled now, especially depth-wise."

For a while it almost seemed unfair for Lamesa to be competing in District 2-4A against schools such as Lubbock Estacado, Levelland and Wolfforth Frenship — all of which have enrollments of more than 1,000 students. Lamesa, which has less than 700 in enrollment, struggled to the tune of winning just one district game the past five years and a combined 1-19 record overall the past two years under James.

"I don't think you're going to find a coach that doesn't want to win," James said. "It takes a lot of hard work and it's not given to anybody."

Replacing the Estacados and Frenships of the Class 4A world, Lamesa faces Seminole, Brownfield, Denver City, Slaton and Colorado City in the revamped District 3-3A.

Instead of being one of the smallest schools in Class 4A, Lamesa is now one of the largest in Class 3A. James and the 1998 version of the Golden Tornadoes are hoping that it all translates to more victories in the near future.

"When we started two-a-days we had some rain and I told these kids that there's been a drought around the farms and the football field," James said. "The farmers got some rain and now it's our turn to end the drought on the football field this year.

"I think good things are going to happen. We're sick of losing and we're ready to make something happen."

Lamesa Golden Tors

Key quote: On trying to make the non-believers into believers this season, coach Tim James said, "I think the kids and I think we're the only ones that have a chance, but we feel good about this season. I feel that we can give it a run toward a playoff spot, I really do. That's what we're preparing to do."

Returning starters: 4 defense; 4 offense.

Last season's record: 0-10 overall, 0-5 in District 2-4A.

Last playoff appearance: 1973.

New wrinkles: Moved down to class 3-3A with Seminole, Denver City, Colorado City, Slaton and Brownfield. The Golden Tors will try implement more of a passing game this year.

Team colors: Brown and gold.

LAMESA: Tors return two starting defensive linemen

(From 1C)

The keys to having a successful season for the Golden Tors will be to remain healthy and improve week to week. Lamesa has 16 lettermen coming back, including four starters on each side of the ball.

On offense, junior Josh Wade, who started last season as a defensive back, will start at quarterback and run the veer/option for the Golden Tors. Wade hasn't played quarterback since he was a freshman but James said he expects good things from him.

"We're going to try and throw more this year than last because of the quarterback and receivers we have," James said. "But we should have a balanced attack by running and throwing the ball."

Catching passes from Wade will be returning starter Chris Arredondo, a player with good hands and speed.

In the backfield, senior running back Juan Barrioz returns from a season-ending knee injury. Barrioz was the team's leading rusher until he got hurt in the third district game of the season. Greg Lackey will help provide a 1-2 punch at running back with his move from the tight end position.

The offensive line is a question mark because of the lack of experience and depth. Most of the line will be made up of players who played on junior varsity last year. The line will also average just 220 pounds.

Defensively, the Golden Tors return Lackey at defensive end and Daniel Hernandez at nose guard. Donnie Hernandez, who averaged five tackles per game in '97 also returns at linebacker. Those three players will be counted on to lead the defense to concentrate on stopping the run and the big play, which continued to burn Lamesa last year.

The secondary might be a strong point in Lamesa's 5-2 defense as it possesses a lot of speed even though there could be a few sophomores starting.

James said he won't be shy of playing sophomores this year considering that those players played on a 9-1 junior varsity team last year — a winning season which James is hoping will carry over onto the varsity.

"Those guys have the attitude that when they walk on the field, they're supposed to win," James said about his former JV players. "That's the kind of attitude we want everybody to have."

Lamesa is hoping to start building that winning attitude with non-district games against Lubbock Cooper, Dimmitt, Kermit, Littlefield and Greenwood. The pre-district schedule should be easier than last year when the Golden Tors traveled 1,500 miles to play away games.

Miami loses Green for season again

Associated Press

Yatil Green, Miami's top draft pick a year ago, will miss his second straight season.

Green ruptured the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee while running a pass route in practice. It was a non-contact injury. It's the third time he's injured the same knee.

"I am disappointed in this setback for Yatil," coach Jimmy Johnson said. "He had worked hard for the past year to put himself in position to be a significant contributor to our 1998 season."

Green, the 15th pick of the 1997 draft, has yet to play a down as a professional. He tore the anterior cruciate ligament in the knee at the outset of last year's training camp, requiring surgery and eight months of rehabilitation.

This summer, Green opted for minor surgery when doctors found a torn lateral meniscus following an Aug. 1 scrimmage. He had been cleared to resume workouts Wednesday.

"I worked hard before to get back out on the practice field this year, and I'll just have to work hard again to be ready to go next season," Green said. "I'm also sorry to disappoint my fans this year. I'm looking forward to making plays for them next year."

It was hoped that Green, a former Miami standout, would be the deep threat missing from the Dolphins' offense the past two seasons. Charles Jordan, a six-year veteran, has been starting opposite O.J. McDuffie, the team's leading receiver last year.

■ NFL Roundup

Saints

Heath Shuler, the top quarterback taken in the 1994 NFL draft, waited Thursday for a doctor's decision that could end his season, if not his disappointing career.

Shuler flew from the Saints training camp in La Crosse, Wis., to Birmingham, Ala., to have his injured left foot examined by orthopedist Dr. James Andrews. Shuler was expected to have his foot placed in a cast for two weeks, but it was not clear if he would be able to salvage this season, let alone a career once expected to see him among the top NFL quarterbacks.

The foot has continued to bother Shuler since he had surgery in December to remove crushed bones and repair torn ligaments, He had a cast on the foot from Aug. 2 to Aug. 6, but that apparently did not help.

"The only other option is surgery again," coach Mike Ditka said. "This is the conservative option. They're going to try to bend the left toe down in a resting position and see what happens. These are some of the best orthopedic surgeons in the country, and they certainly know what they're doing. They think that when he did the vertical jumps at the start of camp that he landed on it and he might have torn some scar tissue."

Shuler was unable to win the starting job in Washington, which drafted him third overall in 1994. He also had a disappointing season with the Saints last year, throwing two TD passes and 14 interceptions before being benched.

Patriots

New England solidified its defense for the future by signing middle linebacker Ted Johnson to a five-year, $25 million contract extension Thursday. Johnson, who has led the Patriots in tackles for the past two seasons, was to make $403,000 this season, the last on his previous contract.

According to Johnson's agent, Jack Mills, the new deal included a guaranteed signing bonus of $8 million, $3 million of which Johnson will receive this year.

"It's a welcome relief," Johnson said. "It was a challenge mentally to block it out. People wanted to talk about it and weren't going to let it go away, but I did the best I could to eliminate those thoughts because I have a job to do."

Packers

The Green Bay Packers' front office now thinks that even if Dorsey Levens signs immediately, he won't be ready for the first two games of the season.

"He would have had to be in last week," general manager Ron Wolf said Thursday of the team's starting running back.

The Packers play two games in four days next week and will only have one day of practice in between. Because running backs get into game shape by getting hit in practice, the team fears Levens won't have time to get in proper condition when, or if, he finally agrees to terms.

In Levens' absence, Travis Jervey and the newly signed Raymont Harris have replaced Levens. Jervey has been having an outstanding preseason.

Steelers

Earl Holmes, who established himself as one of the NFL's most productive inside linebackers in his first season as a starter last year, has signed a three-year contract extension worth $7 million.

The deal includes a signing bonus of at least $1 million.

The Steelers rarely give such extensions to players with so little starting experience, but they are convinced the 6-foot-1, 250-pound Holmes is a star in waiting.

"I'm glad the organization feels that way about me because it's great to be here," Holmes said. "The contract is great but, right now, all I'm concentrating on is football."

Holmes finished second on the team to Levon Kirkland with 96 tackles last season, his first after replacing Chad Brown at right inside linebacker. Brown, an All-Pro linebacker in 1996, left to sign with Seattle.

Holmes also had four sacks during the regular season, and he led the Steelers with 17 tackles in their two playoff games.

Giants lose Sehorn to ugly knee injury

By Barry Wilner
AP Football Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — While all around him people were shaking their heads at Jason Sehorn's misfortune, the injured New York Giants cornerback was matter-of-fact as could be.

"Hey, life goes on. I returned a kickoff and I got hurt," the star cornerback said Thursday night after tearing up his right knee on the opening kickoff of a 27-23 NFL exhibition loss to the New York Jets. "I don't regret anything I did. I wanted to try and help our team out. They pay me to play the game of football. They don't pay me to worry about getting hurt."

Sehorn, one of the league's premier cover men, was returning a kick for the first time in his five-year career. He was hit by Chris Hayes, fumbled the ball and tore both major knee ligaments.

"I went down, hit him and I saw the ball came loose," Hayes said. "I hate the fact that Jason got hurt. That takes away from everything. I'm going to pray for him tonight."

The Giants also blew a 10-point lead in losing their third straight exhibition game against their local rivals.

Dedric Ward caught a short pass from Vinny Testaverde and turned it into an 81-yard touchdown play to give the Jets the winning points with 3:10 left in the third quarter. The rally began when Leon Johnson returned a punt 65 yards for a touchdown.

"I tried to turn to the sideline and there was nothing but open field after that," said Ward, who earlier dropped a perfect bomb in the end zone. "I was kind of thinking I was a decoy and then I turned around and the ball was there. Vinny put it only where I could catch it and you saw the result."

The result seemed so secondary for the Giants. Coach Jim Fassel wouldn't second-guess himself on using Sehorn to run back the kickoff.

"It was my worst nightmare that he would get hurt," Fassel said of the injury. "I don't make decisions worrying about what criticism if it doesn't work out. I've made my living making decisions. ... I'll quit coaching the day I don't try to put all of our players in the best position to win football games."

Even without two of their best players, the Giants' starters played well, especially quarterback Danny Kanell (16-for-25 for 156 yards), receiver Ike Hilliard (seven receptions, 77 yards) and defensive end Michael Strahan.

Leaf survives some hits in first camp

By Bernie Wilson
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO — Ryan Leaf was flattened by Junior Seau and hit the rookie wall. Otherwise, the touted rookie quarterback survived his first training camp with the San Diego Chargers.

Leaf seemed to hit the wall after nearly a month of practice, struggling on Tuesday and Wednesday. But he rebounded on Thursday, when the Chargers broke camp at UC San Diego.

"I may have hit it the last couple of days. I was probably thinking ahead of camp breaking," Leaf said. "But I relaxed and got back to it. Everybody did a tremendous job today. Everybody's just real fired up. I'm fired up to play a game. I'm excited to get a little road trip in there. It'll be interesting."

That road trip just happens to be to Indianapolis, where Leaf and Peyton Manning will go head to head in an exhibition game Saturday night. Manning was the first pick in the NFL draft and Leaf was the second. They'll play again for real on Oct. 4, also at Indianapolis.

Leaf said his camp highlight was getting leveled by Seau early in camp.

"I saw this one blur, No. 55, and I was on the ground over there. I can go back and tell my friends Junior Seau hit me. And I survived."

That incident stemmed from Leaf being angered when the linebacker and some other veterans stuck him with a $2,800 dinner tab as part of rookie hazing.

The Chargers are turning to Leaf to help improve from last year's 4-12 disaster. In order to protect their big investment, the Chargers have rebuilt their line and brought back running back Natrone Means.

When asked his impressions of the team, Leaf said:

"I'm biased. I can't be a coach; a coach will give you, 'We're good, but we've got to make improvements.' I think we're a good football team. Everybody on the team is great. I've just got to get my act together and learn and try to help the team out as best as possible.

"Everybody around me has been doing a hell of a job in making things go really well."

The starters will go about three quarters against the Colts.

The Chargers will be without three rookies because of injuries — defensive tackle Jamal Williams (shoulder) and wide receivers Mikhael Ricks (Achilles) and Anthony Rodgers (groin pull).

McCombs' closes Vikings purchase quietly

By Ron Lesko
AP Sports Writer

MINNEAPOLIS — There were no fist-pumping speeches about "Purple Pride," no impassioned pleas to the fans. No one even got fired on Red McCombs' first official day as owner of the Minnesota Vikings, although one front-office executive resigned.

With point man Gary Woods in town to handle the details, McCombs closed his $250 million purchase of the Vikings on Thursday. That ended a year-long saga that began in secret last summer, when the 10 former owners decided to sell, and included author Tom Clancy's ill-fated bid earlier this year.

"I'm just glad to have that stuff behind us," McCombs said from his San Antonio auto dealership.

The loquacious 70-year-old billionaire feigned sobs when asked how it felt to part with such a large chunk of his fortune — "I'm still crying," he sniffed — but there has been nothing but eager anticipation since McCombs' bid was accepted in early July.

"I think at this stage it was certainly a foregone conclusion, more or less," said Vikings vice president Jeff Diamond, who is considered the likely candidate to take over daily operations of the team in Minnesota. "The excitement was more a month ago when Red got approval from the league and won the bid. Everybody has been excited ever since."

Woods, who will be the team's new president and oversee operations from San Antonio, came to town Wednesday to finalize the deal. The papers were signed Thursday afternoon.

Woods then drove from the downtown Minneapolis office of attorney John Mooty, who represented the 10 former owners, to Eden Prairie to meet with Roger Headrick, one of the outgoing owners and the team's president since 1991.

It was believed that Woods intended to end Headrick's role with the team, but that didn't happen. Woods said he and McCombs still were evaluating what role, if any, Headrick will play.

"I think Roger's situation, as well as other people in the organization, all of that will take a little time," McCombs said. "We'll just work through it."

Before the meeting with Woods, Headrick said he would like to stay on.

"I'd like to see the results of what we put together," he said, referring to the Vikings' high expectations for 1998. "I don't think there's much they can do to change things (on the field). I think we've put the pieces pretty much together. ... I'd like to see this team achieve the results we expect, which is to go all the way."

Although no one was fired, vice president of marketing Stew Widdess resigned. More changes are likely in the next two weeks, McCombs said.

Diamond, who joined the organization 23 years ago as a member of the public relations staff, plans to continue talking with Woods through the weekend about an increased role.

They planned to fly to Charlotte, N.C., on Friday, where the Vikings and Panthers play an exhibition game Saturday night. McCombs, who attended this week's owners meetings in Atlanta, also will fly in for the game.

After such a tumultuous year for the organization, McCombs wants to keep distractions to a minimum now that the sale has been finalized.

"At least my perception is that (coach) Dennis (Green) and the players and all of the people have just, with a lot of energy, worked right through it like it's just another day," McCombs said. "There has to be some apprehension whenever there's a new boss."

Pac-10 tentatively agrees to send its runner-up to Holiday Bowl

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Pacific-10 Conference athletic directors agreed in principle Thursday to send their second-place football team to the Holiday Bowl for the next four years.

Among the significant details still to be worked out before a deal is finalized is securing an opponent for the Pac-10 team. Bowl officials would like to have the choice between the champion of the Western Athletic Conference — which will change dramatically next year — and the third-place team from the Big 12.

"Our guys are very enthusiastic about it," Pac-10 assistant commissioner Jim Muldoon said after the athletic directors agreed via conference call to pursue the Holiday Bowl deal.

A commitment from the Pac-10 was necessary before talks with the other conferences could get serious, Holiday Bowl executive director John Reid said.

The Holiday Bowl last month terminated its agreement with the Cotton Bowl, WAC, Pac-10 and Big 12, citing a clause that allowed any of the parties to back out if the Bowl Alliance was dissolved. The alliance has been replaced by the Bowl Championship Series, which includes the Rose Bowl.

Cowboys get Watkins in trade with Broncos

Fort Worth Star-Telegram

IRVING — The Cowboys traded for Kendell Watkins yesterday, one year after releasing the blocking tight end for salary-cap reasons.

Watkins was in the Denver Broncos' training camp after missing all of 1997. The Cowboys gave up a conditional draft choice to acquire Watkins, who has a three-year deal at the minimum $275,000 per season. Watkins could receive up to $100,000, depending on how much he plays this year.

The Cowboys made the move after scouting Watkins' progress with the Broncos this summer. They intend to make him a blocking tight end, putting him third on the depth chart behind David LaFleur and Eric Bjornson.

Reports indicated that the Cowboys released Watkins for defying a club ban on Cowboys Cafe, a Valley Ranch restaurant. But Watkins' agent, Brian Levy, said yesterday that Watkins was cut because of salary considerations.

"Had he made the team in 1997, the Cowboys would have had to pay him a $180,000 reporting bonus," Levy said. "It was a money issue. Kendell was never at Cowboys Cafe after the Cowboys told him not to go. But there were some turmoil-related incidents going on at the time, and they figured that they would scare some of the younger players," by letting people believe that Watkins had violated a team policy.

Watkins, 6-foot-1, 285 pounds, was a second-round draft choice of the Cowboys in 1995. He suffered a season-ending knee injury in the 1996 preseason. After missing last year, he was picked up by the Broncos and played in the preseason.

Cowboys owner Jerry Jones said the salary cap was one reason Watkins was let go last season. While declining to comment on the Cowboys Cafe ban, Jones did say that off-the-field concerns played a part in his decision on Watkins, including Watkins' poor work habits after a 1996 knee injury.

"It was an overall decision," Jones said. "The cap impact had a lot to do with it." Four players back Cowboys coach Chan Gailey said he expects four of the six players who missed Monday night's preseason game to play tomorrow night in St. Louis against the Rams.

Gailey said running backs Emmitt Smith (thigh bruise) and Chris Warren (groin strain) were held out of Monday's 21-3 loss to the New England Patriots because of concerns about the Azteca Stadium field. Both have participated in practice this week and should have no limitations in the game.

SPECIAL: Team shuffles players

because of the cutdown situation, but we've got to get ready for the season," assistant special teams coach Bill Bates told The Dallas Morning News, referring to the Aug. 25 deadline to reduce rosters to 60 players. "You've go to build some consistency."

The game plan calls for Davis, Pro Bowl strong safety Darren Woodson, starting weak-side linebacker Dexter Coakley, starting tight end David LaFleur and starting weak-side defensive end Kavika Pittman to play at least one area of special teams against the Rams.

PGA champ Singh remains hot, takes International lead

Associated Press

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — Newly crowned PGA champion Vijay Singh maintained his hot hand, posting six birdies and an eagle to share the early first-round lead Thursday in the weather-delayed Sprint International.

Four days after capturing his first major, Singh scored 15 points under the modified Stableford system used in this unique event, tying journeyman Jim Carter for the lead.

Tiger Woods, whose long game suits this course and format, was just a point behind at 14, thanks to a pair of eagles. Corey Pavin, having his best round in years, was at 13, along with Davis Love III and David Sutherland.

Lightning caused a suspension of play at mid-afternoon with half the field still on the course.

Play resumed after a delay of 2 hours, 40 minutes, and when darkness fell 36 players remained on the course. They were to complete their rounds early Friday, with the second round beginning as scheduled.

The leader among players still on the course was Brandt Jobe, who had 12 points with three holes remaining.

The field will be cut to the low 70 players and ties for Saturday's third round and to the low 36 and ties for Sunday's final round.

Under a scoring format that awards 5 points for an eagle, 2 points for birdie, zero for par, minus-1 for bogey and minus-3 for double bogey or worse, Singh had a steady round in which he didn't miss a fairway.

He birdied three of his first six holes to get to plus-6, dropped a point with a bogey at No. 7, then birdied three more holes. He eagled the 492-yard, par-5 17th hole, hitting a 5-iron approach shot to 10 feet.

"I hit a lot of good tee shots, a lot of good approach shots and putted nicely," Singh said. "Winning a major like that, I just wanted to get back on the golf course and play again.

"It's a good feeling to go out there and know that the confidence from last week is so high that I could just let it go. I don't worry about the bad shots, I just think about where I'm going to hit the ball. The feeling is good, and you've got to ride it while you can."

Carter, 37, a non-winner in seven full seasons on the PGA Tour whose best finish this year was a tie for third in the Freeport-McDermott Classic, had nine birdies and also finished at 15.

Carter had 11 one-putt greens, including his last eight. He birdied six of those eight holes and had sand saves on the other two, moving him from plus-3 to plus-15.

"Eleven one-putts, I could make that a habit," he said. "I could be addicted to that in no time. All in all, it was a pretty nice day."

He began his birdie barrage after hitting a ball into the water at No. 10 and taking double bogey, dropping 3 points.

"Maybe that was a blessing in disguise," he said. "Sometimes it takes a mistake to get you refocused."

Woods, playing 7,559-yard Castle Pines Golf Club for the first time, started on No. 10 and got his first eagle at the par-4 13th, holing out a sand wedge on the fly from 122 yards. He added 5 more points at the par-5 eighth hole, hitting his 6-iron second shot, 208 yards away, within 15 feet.

Woods, insisting he is struggling with his swing plane, used his driver only three times during his round, saying he is getting enough distance with a high-trajectory 3-wood that soars at Castle Pines' 6,200-foot elevation. He did use driver at No. 1, hitting it 391 yards.

Besides his two eagles, he had four birdies and four bogeys, which would have translated to a much tamer 68 under normal scoring.

Pavin, the 1995 U.S. Open champion who has been in a prolonged slump since winning the Colonial in 1996, finished a distant 169th on the money list last season and currently stands 189th. He has missed the cut in nine of his 15 events this year.

"The most important thing is, I played under control," Pavin said. "This is the best round I've played in a long time."

Steinhauer hopes to ride momentum of British win

MAPLE GROVE, Minn. — Sherri Steinhauer's life has changed dramatically in a week.

Last Friday, Steinhauer started round two of the Women's British Open 10 strokes out of the lead after a first-day 81. It took 54 more holes, but she erased the deficit and claimed a one-stroke victory in one of the most dramatic tournament turnarounds in years. The win earned her a career-best payday of $160,000 and ended a four-year victory drought.

On Friday, Steinhauer begins play in the $600,000 LPGA Rainbow Classic. She's hoping to ride the momentum from last week against a field of 139 in the 54-hole tournament at the Rush Creek Golf Club in pursuit of the $90,000 champion's purse.

Steinhauer finished seventh in LPGA earnings in 1994, on the strength of eight top-10 finishes, but she hasn't been a consistent top-10 player since then. Prior to last week's victory, her last tour top-three finish came at the Minnesota LPGA event in 1995 when she placed third. She had only three top-eight finishes this year before her British Open win.

Sampras, Rafter lose in Pilot Pen tourney

Associated Press

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Pete Sampras, Patrick Rafter and Petr Korda, the top three seeds at the Pilot Pen International, all made a third-round exit.

Sampras, the reigning Wimbledon champ, lost 6-3, 6-4 to qualifier Leander Paes of India, Frenchman Guillaume Raoux ousted U.S. Open defending champion Rafter 7-6 (10-8), 6-3, and Bohdan Ulihrach of the Czech Republic beat Korda 7-6 (8-6), 6-3.

Rafter beat Sampras in the Cincinnati tournament final Sunday, and four days later both men said they were ready for a break.

"I felt very flat. Playing three weeks in a row has taken its toll emotionally. You can't afford to be flat in this league," said Sampras, who plans to return home to Orlando, Fla., to recharge for the U.S. Open.

"Losing before the Slams is not as bad as losing in the Slam," Sampras said.

Sampras, however, will regain his No. 1 ATP ranking on Monday because Chile's Marcelo Rios lost Thursday to Zimbabwe's Byron Black in the third round of the RCA Championships in Indianapolis.

Rafter, whose loss snapped a career-high 11-match winning streak, including victories in his last two tournaments, said he also felt drained.

"You can lose to anyone any given day," said Rafter, the tournament's No. 2 seed and the third-ranked player in the world.

Paes, a doubles specialist ranked 100th in the world in singles, saved five break points in the 74-minute match. He ran Sampras all over the court and used his quick feet and net skills to play a dominating serve-and-volley game. Paes also out-aced Sampras 7-4.

The win was Paes' first against a player ranked in the top five of the ATP Tour. Paes, who won the Pilot Pen doubles title last year with Mahesh Bhupathi, said his strategy was to "chip and charge" and get to the net.

"I think that he served under-par today, and that allowed me to get to the net," said Paes.

Black upsets Rios

INDIANAPOLIS — Byron Black effectively ended the run of Marcelo Rios as the world's top-ranked tennis player by beating the No. 1 seed 5-7, 6-1, 7-5 in the third round of the RCA Championships here Thursday night.

Rios, who will drop 129 points next week from last year's runner-up effort in Boston, needed to reach the semifinals to remain ahead of Pete Sampras, who was upset earlier Thursday at the Pilot Pen International in New Haven, Conn. Sampras will take over the No. 1 spot on Monday.

"It's really difficult for me to play at night," Rios said. "I hit too many unforced errors. It was tough to return his serve to my forehand. I wasn't happy with my serve. It's tough to play from the baseline when you're missing that much.

Graf loses in du Maurier

MONTREAL — Steffi Graf, who dominated women's tennis before injuries proved her downfall, was upset by Spain's Magui Serna 6-4, 6-4 Thursday in the third round of the $1.3-million du Maurier Open.

"I have no consistency in my game at all right now," said the dejected Graf, the former world No. 1 who has battled injuries the last two years. "At the end, I was just trying to get the ball in the court. I had no feel at all.

"It has a lot to do with confidence. I'm not secure with my shots right now. I'm tentative."

Gordon on verge of NASCAR record

By Joe Macenka
AP Sports Writer

BRISTOL, Tenn. — Many have tried. All have failed. Jeff Gordon is next in line for a run at a record that has stood since the dawn of NASCAR's modern era.

A victory in the Goody's 500 Saturday night would give Gordon five consecutive Winston Cup triumphs, something no one has accomplished since NASCAR streamlined the schedule and established a points system in 1972.

At first glance, Gordon would appear to be a strong favorite to win his fifth in a row. He leads the circuit with eight victories and six poles this year, and his 37 career wins include four at Bristol Motor Speedway.

But Gordon knows better than to take anything for granted on the .533-mile, high-banked layout, where first-round qualifying will be held Friday night.

"Bristol has been a good track for us," he said, "and we're going there just hoping for a good finish."

There are several good reasons for Gordon to be in a conservative mode this week. The primary one is the substantial list of accomplished drivers who have preceded him in the chase for five in a row.

Cale Yarborough was the first to win four straight, in 1976, but in his attempt for No. 5, he faded late in a race at Charlotte Motor Speedway and lost to Donnie Allison.

Five years later, Darrell Waltrip's bid for five in a row ended at Atlanta Motor Speedway, where he was beaten by Neil Bonnett in a last-lap duel.

Martin brings up another reason for Gordon to be cautious heading into Saturday night's 500-lap event.

"Anyone can have a bad race at Bristol," Martin said. "It takes more than just a good car to win there. You have to have luck on your side."

Gordon is well aware of the fickle nature of Bristol, which has a well-deserved reputation for producing some of the best racing on the circuit — and some of the worst displays of foul tempers and bad judgment.

The chief culprits are the 36-degree banked turns, which help create 15-second laps. The laps go by so fast and visibility is so limited in the turns that when an accident happens, it rarely involves just one car. The list of "innocent victims" grows as the race progresses, and many start looking for retaliation.

"The primary concern at Bristol is finishing the race and keeping all four fenders on," Gordon said. "If we're in position at the end, then we'll think about going for the win."

Gordon's Bristol victories fit into one category: He has won the track's last four spring races, all of which were run on Sunday afternoons. On Saturday night events, Gordon's fortunes have taken a turn for the worse.

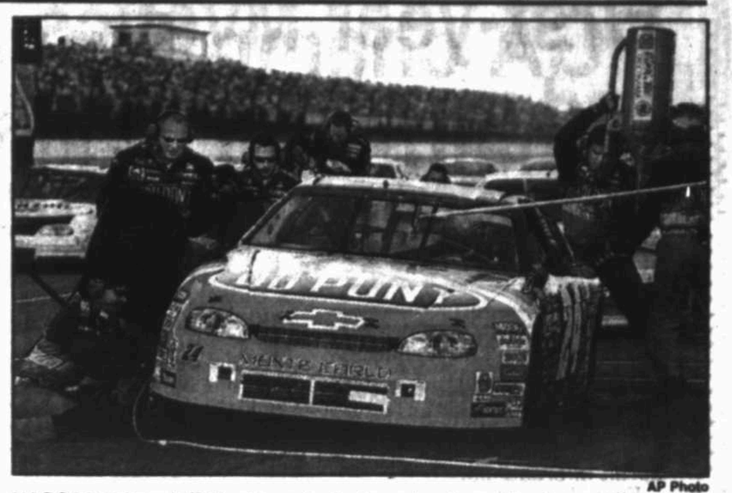

The most recent example was last year's Goody's 500, when Gordon and Jeremy Mayfield crashed down the backstretch on lap 244. Gordon, who went into the event with a 99-point lead over Martin atop the season standings, finished 35th in the race, dropping him to 13 points behind Martin.

"They may think that their roll will continue and it may well until the end of the year," Jarrett said of Gordon's team, "but we have to think that somewhere, someone will have problems."

And if that happens, there's a long list of drivers waiting to capitalize, including Martin, a two-time winner at Bristol, and Jarrett, the defending Goody's 500 champion.

"Things turn around very quickly in this business," Jarrett said. "I would expect a typical Saturday night Bristol show. It should be exciting."

IOC proposes new anti-drug organization

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — Signaling a new resolve in the fight against performance-enhancing drugs, the IOC proposed Thursday to set up a special agency to coordinate drug-testing around the world.

The International Olympic Committee executive board, meeting in emergency session to address the drug scandals which have tarnished the sports world this summer, called for the creation of an "Olympic movement anti-doping agency."

At present, the IOC is directly responsible for drug testing only during the Olympic Games, while international sports federations supervise their own drug controls the rest of the time.

The proposed new body would assist in financing and conducting drug tests for Olympic sports, both during and out of competition, throughout the world.

"These tests are very expensive," IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch told a news conference after the 7 1/2-hour meeting. "We must have this agency to help the international federations which don't have enough money to do this random testing."

The agency also would help set up testing laboratories in Africa and Central and South America and create a "flying lab" that would travel to major events around the world, such as the Pan American Games, African Games and Central American Games.

Samaranch said the agency would be under the aegis of all Olympic bodies, not just the IOC, and would have an independent status. He said it would be headquartered in Lausanne and headed by an IOC official.

The proposed agency will be put forward for approval at a special worldwide drug summit in Lausanne Feb. 2-3.

Samaranch said the project would be funded from Olympic television rights fees. He said it was too early to say how much it would cost.

IOC vice president Dick Pound, who will be in charge of the financial details, estimated that the Olympic movement currently spends $20 million on drug testing.

Pound, who negotiates the IOC's lucrative TV rights deals, said the Olympic networks "would be delighted to know a portion of what they are paying for the rights is contribution to clean aims which they will broadcast."

First-year Mystics end up on both ends of success spectrum

By Joseph White
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON — With 5 1/2 minutes left in the season, Deborah Carter made a layup that brought one of the most inept teams in pro basketball history within a distant 29 points of the lead. Eighteen thousand fans went wild.

Four minutes later, when the score was 100-65, every section in the MCI Center started doing the Wave. Ninety minutes after the 105-69 loss, the players on the team that finished 3-27, a pathetic .100 percentage, were still signing autographs — some hadn't even changed out of their uniforms.

With a winning percentage even lower than the 9-73 (.110) mark of the 1972-73 Philadelphia 76ers — the NBA's all-time symbol of futility — and fan support unparalleled in U.S. women's pro basketball, the WNBA's Washington Mystics can lay claim to both the most, and least, successful basketball season ever.

"They continued to come out and support us with our record," Mystics captain Nikki McCray said after Wednesday's season-finale loss to the Charlotte Sting. "I can't imagine what next year is going to be like. I know the team is going to improve."

The Mystics averaged a U.S. women's record 15,898 fans this season — drawing better than the Stanley Cup runner-up Washington Capitals. The lowest turnout was 10,364, and the the Mystics' two sellouts of 20,674 were the largest crowds ever to attend a women's pro basketball game in the United States.

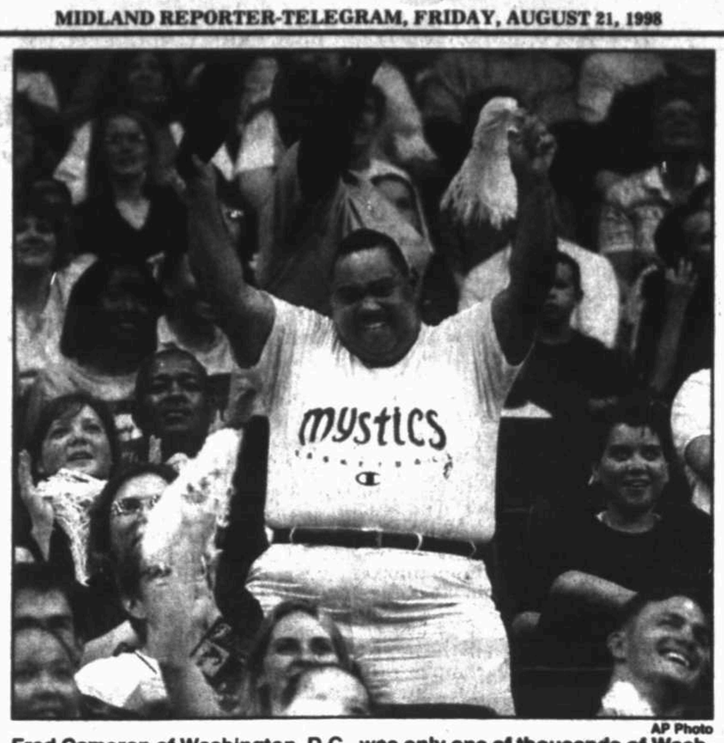

Although most of the games were decided by halftime, nearly everyone would stay and cheer until the final whistle. After Wednesday's game, thousands of fans lingered as the players took turns with the microphone to offer thank yous. It had the feel of a medal ceremony after an Olympics, with the gold awarded to the spectators, not the team.

"This is a long time coming," said season ticket holder Marsha Richardson, who played for Maryland during the 1980s. "We've waited for this all our lives."

The Mystics tapped into a wide fan base: middle- and lower-class people priced out of men's pro sports, affluent women who hold a growing place of power in the nation's capital and families of all sizes. The team also attracted groups of lesbians, who prompted the Mystics to change their "Couple of the Game" promotion to "Fan of the Game" at midseason because all the couples chosen were heterosexual.

And then there were the young girls. Lots of young girls.

"It's special to Washington, the whole 'girl power' theme," Mystics president Susan O'Malley said. "The fact men and women can bring their daughters and say, 'Look, you can be anything you want to be.' Then they got here and realized it wasn't too bad. I'm not sure that beach ball around the stands would work at a hockey game, but it works here."

AP Photo

Fred Cameron of Washington, D.C., was only one of thousands of Washington Mystics fans who helped the team lead the WNBA in attendance — despite an awful record of 3-27.

The rabid fan support contrasted glaringly with the team's performance. The Mystics usually fell behind early and often. Coach Jim Lewis was fired at midseason, but replacement Cathy Parsons didn't fare much better. During an 11-game losing streak, the average margin of defeat was 17 points.

Asked why the team didn't win more often, McCray said, "We didn't have a lot of talent."

"But we had a big heart," she added.

McCray and Murriel Page probably are the only Mystics who could start for any other team in the league. Without a solid point guard, the offense didn't flow. Team defense often was non-existent. Watching the Mystics play, it was obvious in a few minutes that Team A had much better players than Team B.

"It made me re-establish or redefine what success is," said Parsons, whose job status will be addressed during the offseason by general manager Wes Unseld.

The fans didn't seem to care. They liked the affordable ticket prices. They liked the player accessibility. They liked the fact that the Mystics, unlike the NBA's Washington Wizards, didn't make headlines for player arrests or other misbehavior.

"The Wizards, you can't even get close to them," said Mykki Janifer, a D.C. firefighter and season ticket holder. "The Mystics, they talk to you, they're reachable."

Fans lose in dispute by ESPN, Baseball

By Josh Dubow
AP Sports Writer

Viewers will be hurt the most by the dispute between baseball and ESPN that led to the final three Sunday night games being pulled off national television.

Baseball fans will miss three potentially important matchups down the stretch of the season. The first game, San Francisco at Los Angeles, could have wild-card implications, the next two may have historical significance.

At their current pace, the Yankees would tie the record for most wins in a season Sept. 20 against the Orioles, a game that was supposed to be on ESPN, but now will be on only in Baltimore and New York.

The blame for this situation falls on the shoulders of ESPN, which should have set up a contingency plan with baseball to move the games to ESPN2 before signing a $4.8 billion, eight-year deal with the NFL in January.

ESPN instead acted unilaterally after signing the NFL deal. The network was relying on an ambiguous part of its contract with baseball that allows for preemption of up to 10 games for an event of "significant viewer interest." Those preemptions are subject to baseball's approval but can't be "unreasonably withheld."

That's where the dispute arises. ESPN points to ratings that show the Sunday night football games being watched in more than five times as many homes as baseball games last September.

Baseball points to the fact that these are pennant race games and it is not unreasonable to demand that they remain on ESPN, which is in 74 million homes compared to less than 60 million for ESPN2.

ESPN offered a settlement that would have benefited the fans more than baseball's solution, putting the games on over-the-air television locally and ESPN2 nationally.

But with two years left in its contract, baseball was unwilling to set the precedent of moving its premier cable package to accommodate another sport. Baseball also preserves its legal standing to sue ESPN in the offseason for breach of contract.

FOX TRAP: The NHL is not expected to announce its new $600 million television deal with the Walt Disney Co. until at least next week, as Fox is delaying a decision on whether it will match the bid.

Fox, which is entering the final year of a $155 million, five-year deal, has the right to match ABC's $250 million portion of the bid. But after losing $10 million last year, Fox is expected to pass and may even offer to sell the final year of the package to ABC.

Even though Fox's 10-day window to match the contract has passed, the league has not announced its deal with ABC, ESPN and ESPN2.

Fox may be waiting for the league to act first because it is considering suing the league because of a dispute over how Disney's bid is split up between ESPN and ABC.

WHAT'S NEXT: The WNBA finished its second regular season this week and ratings have gone in a slump.

NBC slipped 16 percent, ESPN fell 29 percent and Lifetime dropped 17 percent. But NBC analyst Ann Myers says the league is stronger in its second year, pointing to an improvement in the quality of play, coaching and officiating.

"The fans are identifying more with their teams and the games have been exciting," Myers said. "But people have to understand there will be road bumps in a new league. Fortunately so many of the games are on television, unfortunately people can see the growing pains."

TUBE BITS: ESPN has hired former Cincinnati Bengal Solomon Wilcots as its sideline reporter on "Sunday Night Football." Wilcots, who was a weekend sports anchor in Cincinnati before being hired by ESPN in June, knows it won't be easy to get time with ESPN's new three-man booth of Joe Theismann, Mike Patrick and Paul Maguire this season. "I know they didn't bring me in for filler, because Paul and Joe can certainly take care of that," he said. ... Fox's NFL pregame show will start the season on the road at Giants Stadium, the site of the Washington-New York game. ... USA Network's 17-year run of covering boxing ends Tuesday night. ... The 12th Arena Bowl makes its network TV debut Sunday on ABC.

Comets prepare for WNBA title defense

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Van Chancellor made the best move of the night.

Seconds before the Houston Comets' final regular season game, the coach of the defending WNBA champions realized he'd forgotten his wedding anniversary for the second year in a row.

"I've got to come up with something fast," he said.

Proving he can think on his feet on matters other than basketball, Chancellor asked the announcer at the Compaq Center to thank the fans for their support and to wish his wife, Betty, a happy anniversary.

Satisfied he'd made the right move, Chancellor returned to the Comets bench with a smile on his face and led the Comets to a comeback 80-71 victory over the Los Angeles Sparks Wednesday night.

The Comets have been making the right moves all seaso

They finished the regular season with a 27-3 record that included a 15-game winning streak that gave them the top seed and home court advantage throughout the playoffs.

They set a scoring record by averaging 76 points per game, but Chancellor preached defense all season and they also led the league in defense, allowing 63.3 points per game.

"Coach has stressed that so much and so often that if a game is tied and comes down to the last shot, it's usually not that shot that wins," forward Sheryl Swoopes said. "It's an offensive rebound by the other team. That's something we've definitely got to get better at."

Cynthia Cooper, the league's first MVP, had another glittering season. She led the league in scoring for the second straight year with a 22.7 average and learned to co-exist with Swoopes, despite reports the two did not get along.

A team meeting early in the season seemed to bring the club together and set in motion their highly successful regular season.

Their impressive record could inspire teams to take aim at them with added vigor in postseason play.

"It's already been that way, but there will be a double target on our backs in the playoffs, there's no doubt of that," Chancellor said. "We just have to stay focused and play hard. You can't really let up and take any game lightly."

The Comets have been resilient all season. They suffered their third and biggest loss of the season Saturday 70-54 to the New York Liberty, but came back against Washington two nights later with a WNBA record 110-65 victory for most points and margin of victory.

It took a second-half, full-court press to get by the injured Sparks.

"This game meant nothing to either team but we were both out there fighting it out," Cooper said. "That shows the level of competition in this league."

Forward Tina Thompson doesn't think the Comets record will be a factor in the playoffs.

"We are playing well and have good momentum, but you have to change your personality for the playoffs," Thompson said. "The record is great but was start over at 0-0 now. None of that counts."

The Comets got a blow in Wednesday night's finale against Los Angeles when starting guard Kim Perrot suffered a sprained right ankle late in the game and had to be helped to the locker room.

"If she can't play that's not very good," Chancellor said. "You don't take the best defensive player in the league and not be affected."

Janeth Arcain would start in Perrot's place.

Wacker returns to Southwest as athletic director

By Chip Brown
AP Sports Writer

SAN MARCOS — Jim Wacker is back, and still bouncing off the walls.

Wacker on Thursday took over as athletic director at Southwest Texas State, where he coached the football team to NCAA Division II national championships in 1981 and 1982.

And for those who didn't know him in San Marcos before Thursday, it didn't take long to be introduced.

"Whoa!! Baby!! All right!! Go Bobcats!! Whoa!! Bobcat pride!!" Wacker raved, flailing his arms in the air after being introduced by school president Jerome Supple, who seemed comatose by comparison.

"My heart is pumpin', and my corpuscles are jumpin', baby, I'll tell ya. I'm thrilled," Wacker boomed, leaving the women of the volleyball team, in attendance at his news conference, wide-eyed and in disbelief.

The 61-year-old former coach at Texas Christian and Minnesota pumped his fist like Tiger Woods and repeated the words "Whoa, baby" about a dozen times.

"He's really excited, that's for sure," said sophomore volleyball player Laurie Aubin. "He kind of surprises you with how outgoing he is. It's great."

Prices jump

Energy and precious metals futures prices rose sharply Thursday on the New York Mercantile Exchange after the U.S. military struck suspected terrorist operations in Sudan and Afghanistan in retaliation for attacks on U.S. embassies in Africa.

Energy futures, which had been languishing throughout the session on perceptions of ample U.S. and world supplies, jumped in late trading after the Defense Department announced attacks on facilities linked to Osama bin Laden, a Saudi millionaire whom U.S. officials call a major sponsor of terrorism.

The attacks — and the possibility actions will escalate on both sides — raised the possibility that Arab nations in the Middle East could line up against the United States and cut their flow of oil here. But analysts suggested that was unlikely since oil producers have become more dependent on American oil needs for revenue since the Asian financial crisis.

Crude for September delivery rose 38 cents to $13.54 a barrel; September natural gas rose 3.6 cents to $1.953 for each 1,000 cubic feet.

Chase Bank loans

Chase Bank of Texas announced that in the Permian Basin, 1997 loans in its four Commitment 2000 categories totaled $78 million, an 83 percent increase over 1996. In 1997, 44 percent of its home-related loan customers were minorities and in terms of Small Business Administration lending, Chase is one of the top financial services companies in the state in providing loans to minority and women-owned businesses.

Chase established its Commitment 2000 initiative two years ago with reinvestment goals in small business, community development and loans that help people in low and moderate-income neighborhoods improve existing homes and purchase new ones.

Dollar rises

NEW YORK — The dollar gained against the German mark Thursday on worries that Russia's attempts to renegotiate its foreign debt will be painful to Germany, its major banking partner.

Fears that Venezuela will be the next country to devalue its currency meantime upset Latin American markets and sent Mexico's peso tumbling to a new low against the dollar.

The dollar lost ground against the yen as a Japanese official yet again warned that the government was prepared to intervene in currency markets to defend the yen.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 1.7990 marks, up from 1.7975 marks late Wednesday. It also was trading at 143.19 yen, down from 143.93. The dollar was trading at 9.3400 pesos vs. 9.1940 pesos Wednesday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday: 1.5052 Swiss francs, down from 1.5055; 6.0300 French francs, up from 6.0250; 1,771.38 Italian lire, down from 1,773.20; and 1.5317 Canadian dollars, down from 1.5340.

Markets retreat

NEW YORK — Stocks pulled back again Thursday as hints of new turmoil on world markets and bad news in the computer chip sector threatened to disrupt a fragile recovery on Wall Street.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 81.87 to 8,611.41.

The Nasdaq composite index fell 10.25 to 1,832. The Standard & Poor's 500 fell 6.46 to 1,091.60, the NYSE composite index fell 3.83 to 546.22, and the American Stock Exchange composite index fell 1.99 to 663.60. The Russell 2000 index fell 4.11 to 401.73.

Planned oil royalty changes questioned

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A drive by the energy industry and Oil Patch politicians to change the way companies pay royalties to the federal government for oil and natural gas pumped from federal lands isn't workable at present, congressional investigators have concluded.

The General Accounting Office, in a report issued this week, raised questions about the "royalty-in-kind" concept promoted by congressional Republicans, including Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison and Rep. Mac Thornberry, both of Texas.

Under their proposal, oil and natural gas producers would pay their royalties to the government in product rather than cash. Currently, producers estimate the value of the oil and gas they've pumped and then pay royalties — a system that pleases neither government regulators nor the energy industry itself.

The dispute over royalty collections isn't inconsequential.

The Interior Department's Minerals Management Service collected some $2.5 billion last year in royalties for gas from leases on federal land; and another $1.6 billion in royalties for oil pumped from government-owned lands.

MMS, which contends taxpayers are being shortchanged under existing rules, is pushing a new royalty collection system tied to market prices. But MMS has run afoul of the oil industry and Republicans on Capitol Hill and has been barred by Congress from changing its rules in the near term.

Oil companies have their own problems with the current collection process, which has exposed some of them to lawsuits charging that they've undervalued their royalty payments. But they dislike the changes proposed by MMS even more — pushing the royalty-in-kind concept instead.

But GAO found shortcomings with royalty-in-kind, saying the government doesn't have an appropriate network to accept a flow of oil and gas.

Analysis of past royalty-in-kind programs "indicates that it would not be feasible for the federal government to take its oil and gas royalties in kind except under certain conditions," the investigators wrote.

And those conditions — easy government access to pipelines, expertise in marketing oil and gas, leases that produce relatively large quantities of oil and gas — don't exist at present, GAO found.

MMS estimates royalty-in-kind would cost the government anywhere from $140 million to $367 million yearly — a figure rejected by Thornberry.

Mrs. Hutchison noted that the GAO cited the success of a Texas royalty-in-kind venture. "The Texas program has increased revenues to the state treasury. I believe our program can be adapted to fit the needs of the entire nation, and we need to consider this as one option for creating a fair royalty valuation system," she said.

Two Democrats who have battled the oil industry over royalties, Sen. Barbara Boxer of California and Rep. Carolyn Maloney of New York welcomed the GAO findings.

"This report is a real boost for those of us in Congress who are determined to ensure that the largest oil companies in the world live up to their contracts to pay the correct sum to the American people," said Ms. Boxer.

Royalty-in-kind "is way too 'kind' to Big Oil and would leave the government with additional costs," said Ms. Maloney. "It just doesn't make any sense."

Thornberry and the Independent Petroleum Association of America questioned the GAO's methodology.

The report doesn't examine Thornberry's legislation, said IPAA vice president Ben Dillon. "They just talked about RIK in general, in theory," he said.

AIG buying SunAmerica for $18 billion

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Commercial insurance giant American International Group is buying SunAmerica, a leader in the annuities business, for about $18 billion in stock.

The agreement announced Thursday would be the latest megadeal in the financial services industry which is consolidating rapidly as banks, insurers and securities firms try to expand their base of customers.

New York-based AIG is a leading global provider of commercial and industrial insurance. SunAmerica is a key player in annuities and other financial arrangements popular with individuals saving for retirement.

SunAmerica will continue to be based in Los Angeles, operating as a separate company with existing management and retaining its name under AIG ownership.

The boards of the two companies have agreed to the deal, according to a statement. The deal is subject to approval by the shareholders of both companies as well as by regulators.

Eli Broad, SunAmerica's chairman and chief executive, has agreed to vote his shares in favor of the merger, and is expected to join the AIG board along with Jay S. Wintrob, SunAmerica vice chairman. Broad's family controls about 10 percent of SunAmerica's stock.

M.R. Greenberg, AIG's chairman and chief executive, said the deal "positions AIG in a major market where we have not been well represented" and will enable AIG to introduce SunAmerica's retirement products in worldwide.

"There will be immediate financial benefits, but the real upside will come from our position as the dominant player in the worldwide retirement savings market in the years ahead," he said.

Barnes & Noble to sell shares in Web unit

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Barnes & Noble Inc., the biggest U.S. bo chain, will sell shares of its online unit to the public, seeking to raise cash as other companies rush to sell books on the Web and investors flock to Internet stocks.

The retailer plans to sell as much as 20 percent of barnesandnoble.com, the No. 2 online bookseller behind industry pioneer Amazon.com Inc.

Analysts estimated the IPO could raised $100 million that Barnes & Noble could use to build up its Web business as rivals Amazon and No. 2 bookseller Borders Group Inc. expand their sites. And competition is going to get even more fierce: Bertelsmann AG, the world's biggest English-language publisher, plans to start selling books online.

"With the stock market valuations for online businesses, Barnes & Noble can get a lot of money for offering a small part of this business," said analyst Jason Klein of Blackford Securities, who rates the stock "attractive."

Barnes & Noble, the first traditional retailer to offer a stake in its Internet business, is hoping the offering will prompt investors to place a higher value on its stock.

Shares of Seattle-based Amazon are valued at $6.36 billion, more than the combined $4.87 billion for Barnes & Noble and Borders — even though the online book vendor hasn't made money and its sales are just a 12th of its bigger, traditional rivals.

"The offering's going to catch a lot of attention, as it has all the magic going for it," said John Fitzgibbon, editor of the IPO Reporter.

Amazon's shares have surged almost 10-fold the past year on optimism that it's established a clear lead and will prosper as online book sales explode, while Barnes & Noble is up 71 percent.

Barnes & Noble said it will file a registration statement for the offering in the next 30 days.

Area jobless rate declines

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Unemployment in Midland and Odessa shrank in July, according to statistics from the Texas Workforce Commission.

For the commission's Odessa-Midland metropolitan statistical area (MSA), the unemployment rate fell to 5.8 percent from 6.2 percent in June but is above the July 1997 rate of 5.6 percent.

In the city of Midland, the rate dropped to 4.5 percent from 4.9 percent in June but is higher than the 4.1 percent recorded last year.

The city's labor force and total employment continued to grow while the number of unemployed Midlanders fell, the commission said.

The city's civilian labor force rose to 54,637 from 54,173 in June and is above the 52,552 seen last July. The number of employed Midlanders rose to 52,183 from 51,514 in June and up from 50,386 a year ago. The number of unemployed Midlanders fell to 2,454 from 2,659 in June but is above the 2,166 seen last year.

For the Odessa-Midland MSA, the labor force grew to 129,900 from 128,700 in June and is up from 125,100 last year while the number of employed residents rose to 122,400 from 120,800; total employment was 118,200 last year. The number of unemployed residents dropped to 7,500 from 7,900 in June but is above last July's 6,900.

Tim Loncharich, president of Snelling Personnel in Dallas, said that unemployment rates across the state are at 18-year lows and Thursday's results came as no surprise.

"We continue to have the challenge of finding people to fill full-time and part-time jobs, and so do our competitors," he said.

Loncharich cited demand for workers not just across Texas but nationwide and said that as the state's major metropolitan areas and smaller metropolitan cities such as Midland-Odessa continue to grow, 8.9 people are put to work daily.

"That's a wonderful place to be," he said. "I've been in this business when unemployment was high and it was tough, as a personnel service and as a consumer."

According to the Workforce Commission, although total employment rose in July, non-agricultural employment fell by 300 jobs due largely to losses in the service producing sector. The largest gain was in the construction sector, which added 200 jobs in July, the sixth consecutive month of adding jobs. This sector has gained 1,600 jobs or 28.6 percent during the year. The mining sector, which includes the oil and gas industry, lost 100 jobs in July, bringing the total number of jobs lost in this sector to 800 or 5.9 percent for the year.

Odessa-Midland ranked 16th among the state's MSAs. The lowest rate was in Bryan-College Station, 2.1 percent. The highest rate was in McAllen-Edinburg-Mission with 16.8 percent.

Statewide, the unemployment rate fell to 5.3 percent from 5.7 percent in June and down from 5.8 percent a year earlier.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Job loss can be wake-up call to get finances in order

By Eric Tyson

Q: I recently lost my job, and it caught me completely by surprise. Being out of work has highlighted to me how disorganized I am with my money. Now that my income has plummetted to nothing and I still have my monthly spending requirements, I'm in a state of panic.

Please, what should I do to get back on my feet again financially?

Tyson

A: First, remember that most working people suffer the loss of their job at some point in their careers, so you're not alone. Oftentimes, such a loss leads to something better. So, as hard as it might seem now, keep your chin up and try to remain optimistic.

Secondly, take the loss of your job as a wake-up call to get your finances in better shape.

Start by examining your spending behavior. Detail how much you spend in a typical month on various items such as food, clothing, housing and transportation.

Most Americans have some fat in their budgets. If you want to ferret out the fat in your budget, you need to be honest with yourself. Determine what spending is necessary and what is discretionary. Perhaps being unemployed for a time has helped you to make that distinction.

One category of spending you should not skimp on is insurance. Specifically, be sure that you're carrying adequate health and disability coverage. If you have financial dependents, make sure you have some term life insurance coverage too.

If you are to get your feet back on the ground financially, you need to find a job for which your background and training qualifies you. Given your field of interest, consider what additional training and educational work might enhance your employment prospects.

Q: I inherited a home that was rented over the years and fully depreciated. I paid some inheritance tax. Now, when I sell this property, must I also pay capital gains tax to account for the difference between the selling price and the depreciated value?

A: When you inherited the home, the capital gains up until the time when the person who passed you the house died should have been wiped out.

Now, if the house has appreciated since you inherited it, then you would owe tax when you sell it unless you can shelter that profit as coming from your primary residence.

Under current tax laws, when you sell your primary residence, you might be eligible to shelter up to $250,000 of capital gains from taxation if you're single, and up to $500,000 if you're married.

To qualify for that tax break, which was devised by Congress and signed into law by President Clinton last year, you must own and live in the house for two of the five years prior to the sale.

Unlike the old rule whereby homeowners older than 54 could take up to $125,000 of home-sale profit tax-free, the new tax break is not a "once in a lifetime" deal.

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
YTD: Percent change in price since December 31.
How to use: The year-to-date percent change compares the most recent price with the company's price as of Dec. 31. The number is a good way to compare and track the performance of different companies in the same industry or the same town.

Benchmarks are important in investing and the year-to-date percent change can be a useful field of information when used as a benchmark. If you were considering investing in the automotive industry, for example, you could watch to see which auto stock was enjoying the best performance so far this year by looking at this field.

These numbers can be helpful in following stocks but as with all financial data are only one of many factors to use in determining how to invest. Consult your financial advisor before making any investment decision.

REVIEWS AND PREVIEWS EDITOR JIMMY PATTERSON

When phrases that flatter are misused

By Janet Maslin
N.Y. Times News Service

I hope there's some distinction to looking like the biggest fool in the world of film. Because I had that honor in a recent advertisement for the videotape of "John Grisham's 'The Rainmaker,'" one that quoted me as describing "The Rainmaker" as Francis Ford Coppola's "best and sharpest film."

Now you, I, Coppola, Paramount Pictures and the man in the moon all know this is untrue (a certain multipart masterpiece comes to mind), but I had accidentally made the studio's advertising department an offer it couldn't refuse. What I had written months before in my review of the movie was, " 'John Grisham's "The Rainmaker"' is Coppola's best and sharpest film in years."

Fair game. It's cricket today, with print-media movie ads at their most ruthless and breathless, to find phrases yanked from reviews out of context, words picked out of separate paragraphs and strung together, exclamation points sprinkled like confetti. There are even gasps of admiration specially solicited to suit advertising needs.

As The Wall Street Journal pointed out recently in a scarifying piece on the marketing of "Armageddon," Disney so fancied the image of an asteroid hurtling through a vowel that it simply searched for a critic willing to say "Wow!" A friend of mine points out that "Lousy!" would have done the job — and a little more accurately, too.

We all learn the hard way that a flattering phrase tossed off casually can become an advertisement nightmare somewhere down the line. "Can we watch this?" my little sons asked a while ago, waving an evil-looking video in my direction.

"Nope," I said, without even looking closer. "Are you suuuurrre you don't like it?" they asked gleefully, and then they turned over the box. There on the back was my name, attached to the words "It's fun!"

Hasty research on this no-account horror film established that what I had actually written in my review was a wee bit different.

For better and worse, critics find themselves integral to the process of promoting movies, and there are times when we gratefully seize that opportunity. Consider "Western," a beguiling, off-beat French film that I adore.

Currently hanging on semi-desperately at a single Manhattan theater, this little treat has no easy selling points of its own. The director, Manuel Poirier, is a Peruvian raised in France. And like the film's two funny, sheepish stars, he is quite unknown here in the United States.

The title ("Western" is set in western France) is useless to the point of being a deterrent: cowboy fans may not be in the market for a tender French road movie with an ending that prompts tears of Reality hits the homefront:

'Saving Private Ryan' brings tears, torment for veterans

The 82-year-old veteran of World War II had heard about the film's graphic re-enactment of the D-Day invasion at Omaha Beach in Normandy. But he wasn't prepared for the way the sounds of bullets zinging and anguished screams of men dying on the screen brought back his own memories of fighting in Europe.

"It was more realistic than any movie I've ever seen," said Ripps, who served with the 2nd Division of the 38th Infantry Unit in Germany and France. "It really struck home."

Since it opened last month, thousands of moviegoers young and old have flocked to see director Steven Spielberg's testament to the brutality of war. The film has struck a chord with veterans — not only of World War II, but of Vietnam, Korea and the Persian Gulf, as well — unearthing long-forgotten or carefully buried recollections of combat.

Across the country, veterans' hospitals have been inundated with calls from men seeking help coping with disturbing memories uncovered by the movie's realism. In some cases, the film's stark portrayal of torn flesh and frightened soldiers watching their friends die triggered what is called post traumatic stress disorder in veterans who had never experienced such difficulties before, counselors said.

Having already experienced such outpourings of emotion from veterans after the release of Vietnam War movies like "Platoon" and "Full Metal Jacket," the Department of Veterans Affairs in Washington extended the hours of its telephone hot line after "Saving Private Ryan" opened at the theaters. The line, which is normally not staffed over the weekend, received more than 100 calls in three days, said Laurie Tranter.

By Steve Morse
N.Y. Times News Service

The "Titanic" soundtrack: 25 million copies sold and still counting. It's the top-selling soundtrack of all time and the best-selling record of the year. It's the fuel that has propelled Canadian singer Celine Dion into a Streisand-like stratosphere, from which she'll mount a two-year world tour that starts next weekend in Boston ("my lucky city," she says) and will find her using an in-the-round concert stage similar to those employed by Neil Diamond and Stev-ie Wonder.

And the song the crowds will most want to hear?

That's easy: "My Heart Will Go On," the Oscar-winning pop ballad from "Titanic" and its soundtrack. (In case you've worn out your copy, a slightly altered version, with some added dialogue from the movie, will also appear on a sequel CD, "Back to Titanic," due Aug. 25.)

"I'm just very happy that this newborn pleased a lot of hearts," Dion says of the hit tune. "Now it's time for me to deliver it on stage, do a great tour, and do the best I can. It was a big thrill to be associated with such a beautiful song. It's just a gift of show business."

The emotion-drenched "My Heart Will Go On" was recorded in just one take, Dion said in an interview last week from her new Florida home, where she lives with her husband and manager, Rene Angelil. Dion had enjoyed previous soundtrack success with "Beauty and the Beast" (a hit duet with Peabo Bryson), but no one knew how big "My Heart Will Go On" would be.

"What happened was that James Horner," the movie's music supervisor, "talked to me about the story before I sang the song. He got me into it," Dion says. "He put me into the mood and I was in tears by that time. I was very emotional, and that is when I went to

'Air Bud' sequel family friendly, but a dog of a tale

By Robert Philpot
N.Y. Times News Service

It's no easy task, panning a movie with its heart in the right place. Especially when it's a family movie that declines to stoop to cheap jokes. Especially when you're a dog lover and the movie is "Air Bud: Golden Receiver."

But the sad truth is that this "Bud" just isn't very good. A sequel to last year's "Air Bud," it's so by-the-numbers that it makes the already formulaic original look like "Old Yeller." Worse, though, it makes the same mistake as the original: It takes a fun premise — this time, it's a football-playing dog — and surrounds it with a gloppy, sentimental story that's no fun at all.

You could almost forgive the original's maudlin aspects. After all, it needed to introduce us to young hero Josh (Kevin Zegers), who was despondent after his pilot father's death, and to canine sidekick Buddy, an abused golden retriever who bonded with Josh through their mutual love of basketball. But hey, they've bonded already. You'd think the sequel would lighten up a bit.

By Cynthia L. Webb

Anne Heche

The actress speaking with an easy frankness, the actress reflects on a life that seems much longer than her 29 years.

"I'm proud of every single movie that has gotten me here, but I am also proud of the journey that I have taken personally in order to be who I am now," Heche says.

Her Hollywood career has blossomed with recent roles opposite Robert De Niro in the political satire "Wag the Dog" and in the adventure-romance "Six Days Seven Nights" with Harrison Ford. Her latest movie is the drama "Return to Paradise," with Vince Vaughn.

Heche's success on the big screen seems idyllic, but getting there has been tough. She describes her childhood as "evil" and only recently

(From 1D)

Center in Albany, N.Y. "We've seen a lot of these kinds of movies cause some people to go out and get the help they needed. This goes all the way back to films like 'The Deer Hunter' and 'Apocalypse Now.'"

Only about 6.6 million of the 16 million men who fought in World War II are still alive, according to Department of Veterans Affairs records.

It is the opening scene of "Saving Private Ryan," which depicts the first wave of the invasion at Omaha Beach, that evokes the most visceral response from many veterans. The 25-minute scene follows the soldiers as they storm the beach. Scores were mowed down by German machine gunners, and terrified young me begged for their mothers as they dodged bullets and cowered in the water tinged crimson with blood.

"It brought back my most vivid memories of combat; I could even smell the gunpowder," said John Howe, a Vietnam vet who went to see the movie in memory of his father and father-in-law, both of whom fought in World War II. "The dance of death, we used to call it. The smoke, the bodies — it was all there."

Howe was an infantryman in the 101st Airborne Division, the same company to which the fictitious Pvt. James Ryan belonged.

'I sure do think there's a need (for the movie) because it gives people the idea of the hell us fellows went through.'
— Thomas J. Callahan, 84, former warrant officer, U.S.S. Yorktown.

Many have lauded "Saving Private Ryan," saying it is a particularly valuable teaching tool for members of younger generations who have neither lived during wartime nor fought in a battle.

But not all veterans are rushing to join the crowds seeing "Saving Private Ryan." For some, who are aging or infirm, the movie is just not a priority — particularly because it might resurrect memories of an experience so horrifying and personal.

"I sure do think there's a need (for the movie) because it gives people the idea of the hell us fellows went through," said Thomas J. Callahan, 84, who was a warrant officer on the USS Yorktown, an aircraft carrier lost during the Battle of Midway.

"I'm not sure if I want to see it, though. I saw my share of combat, and I saw guys get killed. I know what they went through — you never forget."

(From 1D)

sing the song. And it's actually the demo. I went to sing it for the first time and I never re-sang it. They built the orchestra around it afterward."

So there was no thought of doing more takes of the song?

"Technically I could have done it better, but emotionally, it was there," says Dion. "Everybody was crying (in the studio) and I think there's something good in that. Sometimes you can't push your luck and say, 'Oh, let me do it again, I know I can do better.' If it's all there, don't push it. You can always work on something and refine it and make it better, but sometimes it takes away a lot of things. So just do it and let it out."

Dion let it out, all right, but surprisingly, she didn't track it on radio once it became a runaway hit. "I don't listen to radio, because I'm often too busy," she says, somewhat sheepishly. "But I would hear it in restaurants and shopping malls, things like that."

Some observers are worried about the possibility of overkill with the "Back to Titanic" sequel (which will have some previously unreleased music, including the jig that Leonardo DiCaprio and Kate Winslow danced to before becoming lovers). But Dion is not bothered by it.

"The real fans are going to be happy about it," says Dion, the youngest of 14 children from a Montreal family. "Because if you're a real fan of the movie and the song, you can never be tired of it, especially if (the record) is different, and dialogue and things like that are included."

As for the movie itself: "I've seen it two times and we just built a cinema room in our new home. We have the tape and can't wait to watch it again on our new big screen."

At present, even while preparing for her world tour, Dion is recording a Christmas album. "It's about 102 degrees out and I'm recording a Christmas album!" she says with a laugh. "And I just finished a French album that will come out before the end of the year." (The release date for the French disc is Sept. 3; Nov. 3 for the Christmas disc.)

Where other artists (like Mariah Carey) bring Christmas decorations into the studio to simulate a holiday air for such projects, Dion says she doesn't need them. "It's more inside for me. ... When I go into the studio to sing a Christmas song or a regular ballad, it comes from the inside out. Just decorating the outside doesn't interest me. Maybe I should try it to feel the difference, but I don't miss it."

The Christmas album will have "a few original songs written especially for this album. And there will be some Christmas classics, too," adds Dion. One new song comes from R&B star R. Kelly, who will join her on it for a duet.

Next up is the tour, which starts at Boston's FleetCenter with sold-out shows this Friday and Saturday. It's the third straight Celine tour that will have started in the Boston market. "We're very superstitious people, Celine and me," says her husband/manager, Angelil. "Boston is a city we love and it brings us luck. It's the closest city to Montreal for us."

The in-the-round format, however, is something new for her.

"It's great if you can do it, but it's harder to do," says Angelil, "because the artist can never relax. You're always on — and you have to think 360 degrees instead of just in front of you. So she's going to have to make some adjustments. The first show is going to be something."

"I can't say it scares me, but there's so much more energy involved," says Dion. "There are people all around the stage. It's just a new way of performing for me. I'm just a little nervous about it. ... But with this stage, we're going to have the chance to do different things. And it looks fantastic."

Dion first got turned on by the in-the-round format when, as a young girl, she saw Stevie Wonder perform in Montreal. "It was a long time ago when I saw his show, but it was very spectacular," says Dion, who is now 30.

As for the set list on the tour: "I'm going to definitely sing the new songs and a few French ones and definitely people's favorite songs from the last few years," she says. "I can't do them all, unfortunately, because I have to do a two-hour show. It would take a long time to sing all my songs. I hope we have chosen the right ones for people to hear."

Expect a healthy smattering from her latest studio album, "Let's Talk About Love," which includes collaborations with Barbra Streisand and the Bee Gees. Dion also hopes to work with her idol Streisand again. Perhaps if Streisand will agree to direct her in a movie role, though that will have to wait at least two years for the tour to finish. "Nothing has been planned with Barbra, but if it's a good thing for both of us, I would love to do it," says Dion.

And though she's busier than ever, Dion will take some time soon to visit the recently paralyzed Chinese gymnast Sang Lan in New York. The gymnast expressed the wish to meet two celebrities: DiCaprio (who just visited her) and Dion.

"She's a fan," says Dion, who is known for greeting fans with special needs, such as the woman with cystic fibrosis she met before her last Boston tour opener.

"It's sad what happened," Dion says of the gymnast, who suffered an accident during a warm-up drill at the Goodwill Games. "And it's the least we can do to cheer her up and give her some hope. If she wants to see us, I think we have to go. And it will be a pleasure and an honor to meet her. I hope I can just give her some strength and some hope."

PHRASES: 'Compelling,' 'worthy' and 'engrossing' are danger signs

happiness, and moviegoers who gravitate toward foreign films are perhaps scared away by the thought of cattle drives. So in a case like this, an extra chance to be heard is all too welcome. It's a privilege to help a struggling favorite by being quoted with some version of "Go!"

"Western," Hal Hartley's "Henry Fool" and the reissue of Fellini's "Nights of Cabiria" offered the most transcendent non-battlefield filmgoing experiences I've had this summer. ("The Opposite of Sex" and "There's Something About Mary" delivered the dizziest laughs.)

Yet those first three films, collectively, have grossed not even $2 million in the United States (as compared with about $70 million each for "Six Days, Seven Nights" and "Lost in Space"). For all practical purposes, at a time when audiences surely long for films worth caring about, those three films have barely been seen.

What better opportunity could there be to be involved in a little drumbeating for a good reason? Trouble is, critics can't save their credibility for the movies that matter.

With the mania for rhapsodic quotes in ads at such a feverish pitch, crying wolf is a serious occupational hazard, one to make us wince at appearing to endorse films we think are negligible. Look closely and you'll sometimes see the equivalent of "The lights went down! I watched it!" being trumpeted to the skies.

It's a good thing readers are the savviest participants in the quote-ad sweepstakes. Surely you know the rules of this game. If you can't make out the source of the quote without a magnifying glass, chances are that it isn't your eyesight that's the problem. And you know better than to trust ... any statement ... full of holes ... like this. Beware of any form of quote-ad rapture that originates too far before the film has opened, perhaps even before it has been made.

And know that certain buzzwords are a dead giveaway to so-so sentiment. "Compelling," "worthy" or "engrossing" are not the language of a writer in love.

If the laudatory words have come to sound awfully familiar, that's because the quote-ad vocabulary is notoriously tiny and tired. Even when a film does make the pulse quicken, must it really be as brilliant, heart-stopping, bold and audacious a thrill ride as all that?

Phrases get flogged, borrowed and recycled until even the simplest and mightiest of accolades ("Great!") is reduced to hype. I promise never to call anything "wickedly funny" again. Even if it is.

But there are certain forms of critical shorthand that encapsulate an opinion quickly, even if they do it in all-too-quotable form. "Just saw 'The Horse Whisperer' and found it to be 'voluptuously soapy,'" my best friend from high school wrote in a letter last month. "You are definitely the master of the adverb and adjective combo."

She was an English major, and she naturally takes a wry (another word suffering critical injuries) view of this process. She also knows this: Quotations should come from the sages who wrote "The quality of mercy is not strained" or "Do not go gentle into that good night." Not from the writer who cried "Wow!"

discovered solace — something she attributes to finding joy in her work, being honest and falling in love.

"When I was 12, I was like an old woman. Now I'm getting younger," says Heche, who left home at 17 and began therapy a year later to cope with "a lot of death, and a lot of abuse and homelessness. ...

"I went through eight years of trying to be at peace with who I was and what had happened to me as a child."

The actress jolted the entertainment industry last year when she began a much-publicized relationship with actress-comedian Ellen DeGeneres, whom she met at an Oscar party.

The relationship "has been food for fodder for the last year, but at the same time it seems to be getting back to being focused on what our careers are and who we are as creative people," Heche says.

Before sitting down for a late-afternoon interview, Heche stops to call "Ell" to say she will be home soon. The two moved into a new house this Valentine's Day.

"Hi, baby! How are you?" Heche talks to her lover, holding the phone in one hand and a metallic pen in another to autograph promotional posters for "Return to Paradise."

In the movie, Heche plays a lawyer who tries to save an American man imprisoned on drug charges in Malaysia after a reckless vacation with two friends. She has to persuade the men to return and admit that they are guilty, too, in order to save her client's life through a plea bargain.

Heche says she chose the role because of its message of responsibility and love.

"My brother was killed when he was 18 and I was 13. I never got to fight for his life," she says, recalling the fatal car accident. "This was a movie where I got to fight the fight that I never got to."

The film is a departure for Heche, who played a scientist and Tommy Lee Jones' quirky love interest in "Volcano," Johnny Depp's wife in "Donnie Brasco" and the cynical press aide in "Wag the Dog." She won National Board of Review awards for the latter two roles.

"I fall in love with all my characters," Heche says, puffing on a Camel Light. "I never want to forget that what I am playing is dress-up."

She props her legs on a cushioned chair, her translucent skin contrasting starkly with her maroon nail polish.

"I am a very committed person and I'm committed to the truth of who I am," she says.

"I've worked a long time in order to get there and have gone through a lot of struggles of looking at my nightmares in order to get to a place where I'm comfortable with myself — enough to be able to receive love for everything that I am."

Unfortunately, she says, that love has not come from her family.

Heche was born in Aurora, Ohio, and moved around a lot.

Her family has barely spoken to her since she admitted to being gay. DeGeneres' mother has taken the place of Heche's mother and two sisters.

"They are very religious. Gay is a sin to them," she says.

Perhaps, Heche says, the resentment comes from learning that their father, who had worked as a Baptist church choir director, led a secret gay life. He died of AIDS when Heche was 13, the same year her brother died.

To escape her dreary home life and to make some money, Heche began acting in dinner theater in southern New Jersey. "My home became the theater when I was 12 and I couldn't wait to get there. I loved it," she says. The job carried over into high school drama in Chicago.

At 15, she declined an offer to go to New York to work on the soap opera "As the World Turns" so she could stay in high school. She graduated in 1987 and left the next day for the soap "Another World." The job earned her an Emmy in 1991.

"That kind of started my life as an actress. It was just the most comfortable I felt. It was the freedom of expression for me that I needed," says Heche.

She came to Hollywood, and television work led to small supporting roles in feature films.

In 1995, Heche was noticed in "Pie in the Sky," a hit at film festivals. Her stardom climbed with "The Juror" in 1996 and the next year with "Volcano."

Heche dated comedian Steve Martin for two years before she met DeGeneres. She still has difficulty putting her new relationship into words. "I don't even know how to say it — since I fell in love with Ellen," she says, her other friendships have been tested. "A lot of people stepped back if not an inch, a mile. It was a very quick litmus test for everybody.

"It makes the fearful ones run, and I kind of like that."

She recently got a coveted role in director Gus Van Sant's upcoming remake of "Psycho." She has the part Janet Leigh played in Alfred Hitchcock's original, including the famous blood bath in the shower."

Angela Bassett discovers a new groove

By Mark Kennedy
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Think vulnerable.

Make it soft and tender. Then turn it into a movie role. OK, now cast actresses.

Which of Hollywood's actresses immediately spring to mind?

Chances are Angela Bassett doesn't.

So the 40-year-old actress was fighting a case of nerves in the back of the theater during the premiere of "How Stella Got Her Groove Back," a movie with a mush level that could rival a Hallmark warehouse. Bassett fills the sexy title role in the adaptation of Terry McMillan's go-girl best seller about a 40-year-old stockbroker who falls hard for a 20-year-old Jamaican Adonis.

"I was a little worried, to be honest," admits Bassett, who has played her share of battered, abused and abandoned spouses. "This was quite a new direction for me. How was it going down?"

From the next seat, the answer came with a friendly squeeze from her husband, actor Courtney Vance. He leaned over during one smoochie scene and whispered in delight: "Oh, you look like a little girl here!"

"He's used to seeing me play just strong," Bassett says. "And courageous. And intense. This time, he said it was nice to see the little girl."

That's an unfamiliar side of Bassett, especially after she ignited the screen like an acetylene torch in "What's Love Got to Do With It?" "Malcolm X" and "Waiting to Exhale."

"I love that she allowed her Stella to have fun," says Deborah Schindler, who produced the film. "We see her be playful. We haven't seen that before that I really remember."

It's 10 years since Bassett left the New York stage for Los Angeles to break into film. The Ivy League-educated actress did a few bit movie parts ("Kindergarten Cop," "F/X"), some television ("The Cosby Show," "thirtysomething," "The Guiding Light"), and some straight-to-video clunkers ("Critters 4").

It wasn't until she stepped into a pair of spiky high heels for her strutting, hip-shimmying performance as Tina Turner in "What's Love Got to Do With It?" that Bassett became a star, receiving an Academy Award nomination.

Reared by an aunt in Harlem until she was 5, Bassett moved to St. Petersburg, Fla., with her mother, who struggled alone to raise two daughters.

"My mother was on us 24 hours a day ... She never let us sit back, she was always active because she never wanted me to make the same mistakes she had as a young woman," Bassett says.

After "Love," Bassett's next big role was Bernadine, a mother of two whose husband leaves her for another woman in the 1995 surprise hit, "Waiting to Exhale."

In one blistering scene, Bernadine stuffs all her unfaithful husband's designer duds into his BMW and torches it.

In the flesh, Bassett's fearsome image soon gives way. Those biceps still knot gloriously. And her cheekbones are so chiseled it seems at times as if she's nestling two golf balls up there. But there's a delicateness, too: Her soft, almond-shaped eyes and expressive eyebrows give her an elegant, leonine beauty. She curls up in her chair like a kitten.

Bassett got interested in acting during a class trip to Washington when she was in the 11th grade. One night, she saw James Earl Jones rip up the stage in "Of Mice and Men" at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. Bassett says she left weeping and trembling.

"I knew what I had to do," she says, with an enormous smile.

What she did was go from a Florida housing project to Yale University to Broadway and then on to Hollywood.

"I look back and I can appreciate how far I've come. I sort of stand outside myself and I still feel like the little 8-year-old with her favorite song on the turntable. She's singing into a brush like a microphone and she's acting out the parts for her sister and her aunties," Bassett says.

"There was a girl who came up to me last night. She said, 'I'm an actress. Well, I want to be an actress. And you're my inspiration,'" Bassett recalls. "I'm somebody's inspiration? I was the one looking for inspiration! I'm an inspiration to somebody who's coming behind me? That's what amazes me."

Fall TV tour highlights from 'Full House' to a full moon

By Ken Parish Perkins
N.Y. Times News Service

ABC is trying to rebound from a disastrous season in which it scuttled one of the year's best programs ("Nothing Sacred") and took a PR beating from some gays and lesbians after kicking 'Ellen' off the curb.

So what does it say about the state of television programming when, a week into the annual fall season preview, the most striking visual thus far involved David Cross, co-star of HBO's "Mr. Show With Bob and David," turning to a roomful of journalists, bending over, and yanking down his pants.

Wait, there's more. HBO Chairman and CEO Jeff Bewkes uses the mooning to segue into a Q-and-A session about the cable channel's effectiveness, pointing out that Cross' glowing behind showed not a bit of artificiality. Just like HBO movies and series, you know.

"All of our programming will live up to THAT today," Bewkes promised. Or should that be "warned"?

Pushing the envelope is now cliche in the world of cable, so much so that a naked butt no longer constitutes emotional shock. Thank goodness this came well after a very pregnant Jodie Foster arrived, touting her new Showtime film, "The Baby Dance," a well-crafted, well-written story of adoption, class and love. Or we could have experienced the first live birth at the Television Critics Press Tour, not to mention its first serious lawsuit.

It helped that following cable was PBS, which offered a slew of culturally rich, thoughtful programming: KERA-TV's Sylvia Komatsu was here as executive producer of "The U.S.-Mexican War 1846-1848"; Orlando Bagwell discussed his six-hour project on slavery. (This, of course, presented critics with terrific opportunities to hit the pool or hustle to that 40 percent-off sale at Macy's.)

ABC, meanwhile, is trying to rebound from a disastrous season in which it scuttled one of the year's best programs ("Nothing Sacred") and took a PR beating from some gays and lesbians after kicking "Ellen" to the curb. It waxed the proceedings by sending giant Snickers bars to reporters' rooms. The attached note admitted that, yes, it was a bribe.

Screenings that night included "Maximum Bob," an offbeat, hourlong comedy drama adapted from Elmore Leonard's best-selling novel. Set in the mythical Florida town of Deep Water, it stars Beau Bridges as Bob Gibbs, a power-hungry, slightly crooked judge who meets his match in Liz Vassey, who practices law in figure-flattering blouses, showing how much "Ally McBeal" has raised the fashion bar in courtroom settings. Vassey is actually the normal one. Bob's wife, Leanne (Kiersten Warren) is a local celebrity who starred in a mermaid act until she had a near-death experience with an alligator.

It's better to watch "Maximum Bob," which begins Aug. 4 but is not on the fall schedule, than to try to explain it.

Whether it sinks or swims, this is the kind of risky programming ABC needs. Though one session introduced a very charming Rick Schroder as the replacement for Jimmy Smits on "NYPD Blue," another included the sinking ship called "Good Morning, America," in which Fort Worth's Lisa McRee tried to put a positive spin on its foundering ratings.

The early morning infotainment show set a standard for ratings futility recently; it was 24 percent off its audience numbers from a year ago. "Today" has increased viewership by some 8 percent, and CBS' "This Morning" is gaining ground from the rear; "GMA's" viewers are apparently simply changing the channel.

"I knew the risks coming in," said a tired McRee, who had just flown in from "GMA's" New York studios. Here is a good time to mention that McRee's husband still lives in Los Angeles, in the house they haven't even put on the market. Hmmm.

Changes will continue: Weatherman Spencer Christian is out.

Meanwhile, ABC reloads with eight new series this fall, only one heavily favored to break out. "Two of a Kind" marks the return of Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen, the cutie-pie teeny wee-nies who literally grew up on television's most innocuous series, "Full House."

Now preteens, they play opposites. One is into boys (Ashley) while the other (Mary-Kate) wants to mow them down on the baseball diamond. Their dad (Christopher Sieber) is a college professor and single father who uses a student (Sally Wheeler) as a baby sitter.

The series isn't silly, and it's shrewdly cast. Still, the Olsens are now confronted with having to act. Not that it matters to Olsen fans. Lined up with "Boy Meets World" and "Sabrina, the Teenage Witch," this is the season's sure-shot hit.

BUD: Sequels may never end in this Disney dog story upset because he might be getting a new father. Mom (the watchably quirky Cynthia Stevenson, making the most of a slim role) is dating again, and with the help of Buddy, she's found a good-natured hunk of a veterinarian (Gregory Harrison) whose company she enjoys.

Josh's anxiety at this would be more understandable if the vet weren't such an obviously nice guy; maybe the kid's just perturbed because his potential stepfather has a narrower range of facial expressions than his pet. Even so, Josh's distress is more logical than his solution to his mom's newfound love life: He joins the football team! Of course, the players are so bad that even a team of — oh, film critics — could beat them. And of course, Buddy comes along to save the day.

As forced as it is, the main plot is a gem compared with the "comic relief." Nora Dunn and Perry Anzilotti make like Boris and Natasha as a couple of evil Russian circus wranglers. Guys, "The Bullwinkle Show" was a cool cartoon, but its Bolshevik villains were a product of its time, not ours.

Director Richard Martin (son of '60s "Laugh In" host Dick Martin, who makes a lame cameo performance as an addled sportscaster) had a lot on his hands here: kids, animals, three plot lines that don't really intersect. Considering this, the jagged, uneven product he puts on the screen is probably better than it could have been.

The problem is in the writing, and the premise itself. It is kinda cool to watch a dog play football (Bud, the basketball-playing pooch, died of cancer after the first film; a pack of six dogs takes his place here). But it doesn't fill up a feature film, and when the dog's not on the field, you might wish you could zap to some other sporting event or run to the fridge.

This isn't the final sequel: "Air Bud: World Pup" (you guessed it — Buddy plays soccer) is already in development.
