Murder of rancher in calving shed shatters county, Old West image

HOBSON, Mont. — Wayne Stevenson didn't have to check his cows every night. As one of Montana's most prosperous ranchers, the nation's biggest breeder of Black Angus cattle, he had hired hands for that.

But he also was a man who fussed over his cows as if they were children, especially in calving season. A breeched calf might have to be pulled out of its mother. A cow could steal another's newborn calf. There's no telling what might happen.

And so at 9 p.m. on March 27, Stevenson climbed into his mud-caked truck and drove 10 miles out to his calving shed, a dark and cavernous barn packed with pregnant cows.

Texas felons' time in prison jumps in 1993

■ In '93, prisoners served average 2.4 years of total sentence, up 26 percent over previous year.

Associated Press

HUNTSVILLE — Ever so slowly, it appears prison time served by Texas felons is going up.

In 1993, Texas inmates served an average 2.4 years of their total sentence, which averaged 11.3 years.

The time served was 26 percent more than the previous year's average, 1.9 years for sentences averaging 11.1 years.

"The combination of more beds and parole policies slowed down the flow of releases," Texas Department of Criminal Justice spokesman David Nunnelee says.

The statistics, compiled in the agency's 1993 annual report for the year ending Aug. 31, show a life term in Texas generally means 13.2 years behind bars. For 1992, life equaled 12.7 years before parole or some form of probation.

Carol Vance, chairman of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice, noted in the report that more than 500,000 Texans are in prison, on parole or on probation for serious crimes.

"This is one out of every 34 Texans and roughly one out of every 18 males," he said. "This is a shocking and disturbing fact of life.

"The home has been severely weakened and too often is found to be dysfunctional or non-existent. The lack of sound family values and morals leads to dropouts, alcohol and drug use, unemployment, and theft and violence.

"Until some massive societal changes can reverse this pattern and restore our collective sense of right and wrong, especially with our youth, more prisons will be a way of life," Vance said.

Some 32,364 inmates were received in 1993, swelling the state's prison population to 64,313. Of those, 14,104 were returned as parole violators.

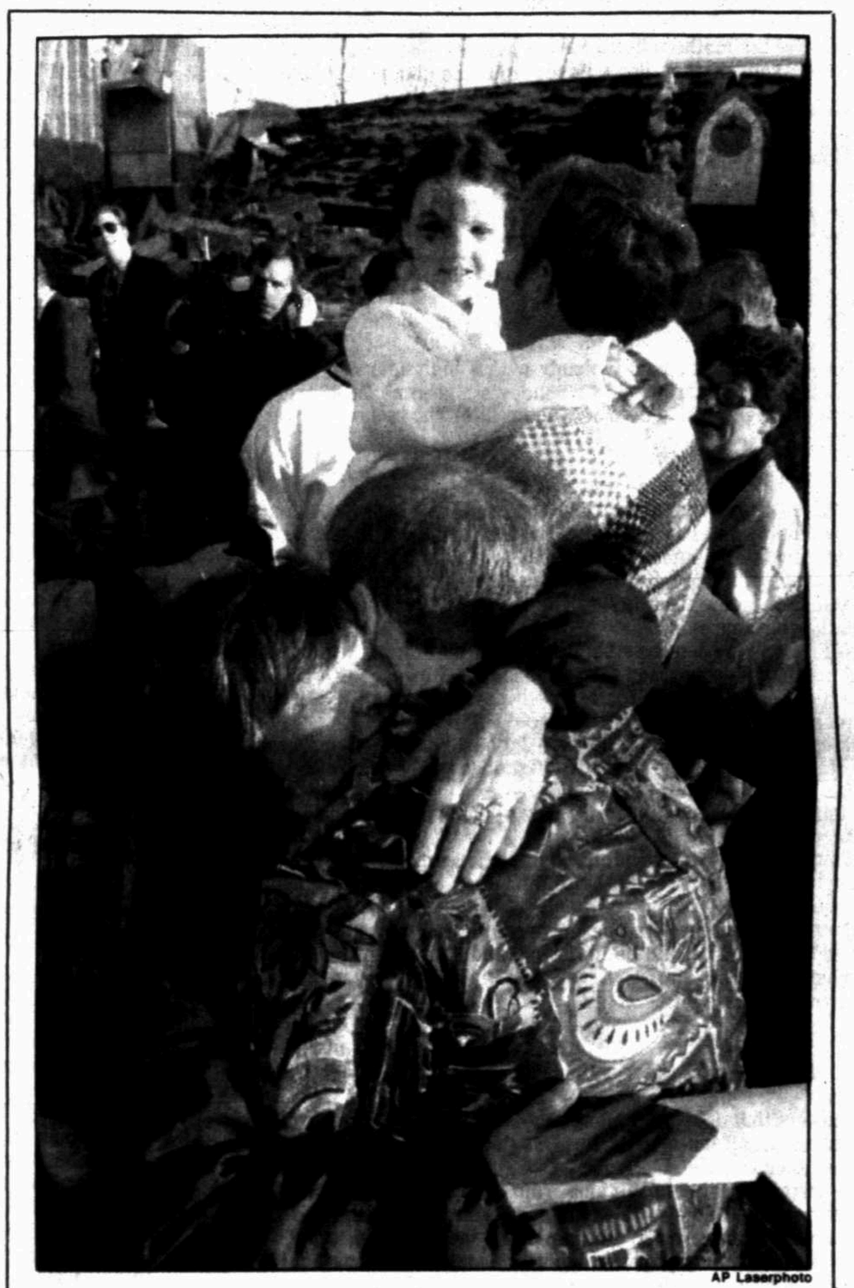

Ninety-five percent of all inmates were male; 47 percent were black, 28 percent white and 24 percent Hispanic.

The average inmate was almost 33 years old, had an IQ of 92 and quit school in the 10th grade. Fifty-five percent had served time before in a Texas prison and 70 percent previously had been on probation.

Twenty-three percent came from the Houston area and 21 percent from the Dallas metropolitan area. Fort Worth and San Antonio each accounted for 7 percent of the prison population.

Almost half of the people locked up — 47 percent — were there for violent offenses. Property offenses accounted for 28 percent of the inmates and 18 percent were incarcerated for drug offenses.

The number of paroles dropped 37 percent, from 29,860 in 1992 to 18,887 in 1993. At the same time, the backup of state inmates in county jails increased 41 percent.

Immigration becomes rising, sensitive debate

MIAMI (AP) — As an emotional debate over immigration spills into the policy and political arena, consider this snapshot from Florida: in the span of a few days, President Clinton was sued by one friend and labeled a racist by another.

In Florida, California, Texas, a handful of other states and in Washington, illegal immigrants are frequent targets in the debate over health care, welfare reform, prison costs and education spending.

More broadly, the question is whether a country settled and populated by immigrants should close its doors to the newcomers.

The debate was perhaps inevitable, given state and federal budget constraints, and the skyrocketing cost of aid to illegal immigrants. "Because of these costs we are unable to provide some of these same needed services to our legal residents," complains California Gov. Pete Wilson.

These points have been argued quietly for years

Possibly volatile day looms in stock market

NEW YORK (AP) — The worst may not be over for the U.S. stock market, pummeled last week by a barrage of economic and political news that investors have increasingly viewed as omens of rising inflation and uncertainty.

Many professionals don't rule out a renewed selling assault today when the market reopens from a three-day Easter weekend. But others say the respite gave investors an opportunity to rethink the impulse of dumping stocks. Some forecasters are even expecting stocks to rebound somewhat.

"I think it's hard to know," said Marc Chandler, research director at Ezra Zask Associates, a money management firm in Norfolk, Conn. "We've seen some indiscriminate selling. That's created some buying opportunities."

Sellers overran the market last week, depressing the Dow Jones industrial average by nearly 139 points, or 4 percent, from the week before. The

Stolen babies

Many parents can only grieve when their children are taken from them, out of U.S.

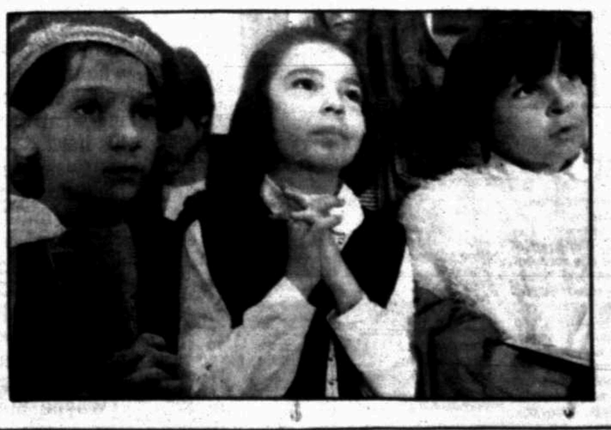

By Connie Cass

WASHINGTON — Lilly Waken's husband and two young daughters left home for a party and never came back. Frantically she called police, she called hospitals — then she learned her Arab husband had bought three one-way tickets to Damascus, Syria.

That was 18 months ago, and Waken hasn't seen her children since.

Her husband returned to Miami once — without the children — for a divorce hearing. A judge awarded Waken custody of their two girls, but her husband Mohammed ignored the court order and slipped out of the country.

STOLEN: Parents receive little help finding children

(From 1A)

Lamia has since turned 3; Dalal is 6. Waken wonders where they are, and whether they remember her.

"My heart is stolen, my soul is gone," she said from her Miami home, where she keeps the girls' room ready for them. "Unless your children were taken, no one can know the pain I live with."

There are others who know. U.S. parents are seeking to bring home more than 1,000 children taken from this country by a mother or father, according to State Department records. And children's advocates believe many more cases go unreported.

Often the children are snatched during a divorce. The abducting parents usually have strong ties in the other country. But sometimes an American-born mother or father will take off for an unfamiliar nation to flee U.S. law.

Left-behind parents suddenly find a maze of foreign laws and customs standing between them and their children.

Finding a missing child within the United States is daunting. But finding a missing child abroad often seems hopeless — especially for those like Waken who cannot afford specialized attorneys and private detectives and international travel.

"Most of the mothers live a kind of quiet agony if they don't have the money," said Shayna Gluck Lazarevich, who has searched Serbia for her two children for 4½ years.

Even those with money to spend often find it's not enough. After Lazarevich's ex-husband kidnapped their two children from her home in Santa Cruz, Calif., a bank seized his $70,000 account and turned it over to her.

The money paid 10 lawyers, and helped Lazarevich take her custody case all the way to Serbia's highest court — winning at each step. It helped her travel to Serbia to search for the children. It took her to Washington to seek help.

Former Secretary of State James Baker championed her cause, and 90 members of Congress signed a petition for the return of her children. She met with Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic.

Yet 11-year-old Sasha and 8-year-old Andre are still missing.

Serbian officials have been unable or unwilling to find the children and turn them over to her. The civil war in Bosnia only makes things worse. And her money has run out.

"I've done everything right and still I don't have my children," Lazarevich, 32, said during one of many visits to Washington.

"People don't sense the agony, the anguish, the desperation that parents feel," she said. "That must be understood before we will get any real help."

Parents searching for their children in other countries get only limited help from the U.S. government. A State Department brochure warns them, "You must direct the search and recovery operation yourself."

The department does offer some basic help finding children. "We will attempt as best we can to locate the child and visit them and report on their health," said State Department spokeswoman Nyda Budig.

The department will ask another nation to check travel and school records for a missing child's name, for example. But some nations don't keep complete records. And some missing children live under false names.

And, Budig points out, some parents don't even know which nation their children are living in.

Many parents complain that consular officials don't do enough to help them. Maria Rojas of Centreville, Va., is organizing a march in Washington this summer to demand more help for parents searching for internationally abducted children.

"My children are U.S. citizens, but the people at the State Department don't want to be bothered with them," she said. "They just don't care."

Finding a missing child is only the start.

A parent must then take his or her case to the foreign country's legal system. Most nations do not recognize custody orders from U.S. courts. Even when criminal charges have been filed against the abducting parent in America, many nations will not honor a U.S. request for extradition.

And some nations may discriminate against women or Americans.

The State Department will give a parent information about a foreign legal system, but cannot intercede in court on the parent's behalf, Budig said.

"Most children who are taken abroad are not returned," said Betty Mahmoody, an American who escaped with her daughter from an abusive husband in Iran.

She formed an organization to help parents of children kidnapped abroad, called One World: For Children. Mahmoody said the group has helped parents of 900 children taken to "difficult" countries; only 49 were returned.

"Most of the time, it's an impossible situation," she said.

The State Department has logged 5,500 cases of international child abduction by parents since it began keeping records in 1978. The number rises each year.

Eighty percent of the cases are now considered inactive. But it's unclear how many of the children have come home.

Some cases were dropped from the files when the State Department didn't hear from the left-behind parent for two years; others were closed when the missing child turned 18. Officials are sifting through the files to compile statistics, Budig said.

Although it's difficult to document, the State Department says the odds of bringing a kidnapped child home from abroad are improving.

In December, President Clinton signed a law making it a federal felony to kidnap a child to another country. But it's too early to assess the impact that will have, said Howard Davidson, director of the American Bar Association.

"It's very easy to pass a law to say certain things will become federal crimes without providing the resources to investigators and U.S. attorneys and federal courts to fulfill the intent of the law," he said.

Mahmoody said, "Every deterrent we have is helpful."

Perhaps the biggest advance came in 1988, when the United States signed a treaty with 30 other nations, agreeing to return kidnapped children to their home countries. Courts in the home country then will resolve any remaining custody disputes.

The Hague treaty has been proven successful in returning children to the United States mostly from the Western nations that have ratified it.

But almost half of the 806 abductions reported to the State Department in 1993 were not covered by the Hague treaty. The Middle Eastern countries of Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and Syria — among the nations least cooperative in returning children to the United States — have not signed.

"The State Department isn't doing a whole heck of a lot to give the parents in non-Hague countries any hope," said Frederick Rooney, a Bethlehem, Pa., attorney who does pro bono work for women whose children are in the Middle East.

There is another treaty in which nations agree to work together on children's issues, including international kidnapping. It is the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted in 1989.

The treaty has been signed or ratified by 170 nations, including some Mideast countries such as Syria and Iran. But the United States has yet to sign it, so it's of no help to U.S. parents.

President Clinton has ordered a review of the treaty, to be completed this spring.

Meanwhile, the American Bar Association has been educating judges and attorneys about the risk of child abduction during divorce cases. Often parents' fears are dismissed, Davidson said.

Lazarevich, for example, told the court that her former husband, Dragisa, had threatened to take their children to Yugoslavia. But the judge granted him unsupervised visits anyway. During one of those weekend visits, he abducted the children.

Children's advocates say stricter controls on passports and children's travel would make it tougher to sneak a child out of the United States.

WEATHER WATCH

Today to warm up to lower 80s

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the lower 80s and south to southwest winds at 15-25 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 50s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be partly cloudy with a high near 80.

After an overnight low of 35, Sunday's high reached 70, compared to the record high for that date of 94 set in 1946. The record low was 28 set in 1945.

STATE

Isolated heavy thunderstorms triggered by a cool front gave way to mostly sunny skies in Texas for Easter Sunday, with more rainfall expected for the beginning of the week as colder air enters the state.

A chance of thunderstorms was forecast statewide, with rain possibly mixed with snow Tuesday in the northern Panhandle, the National Weather Service said.

High winds in Glen Rose Saturday night blew down part of a billboard and broke numerous tree limbs in the city southwest of Fort Worth, with hail in other areas as the latest front passed through, according to the weather service.

Skies cleared by Sunday under a high-pressure system over most of the state except for the lower Rio Grande Valley, where the cold front stalled.

High temperatures ranged from 62 degrees at Guadalupe Pass to 80s in deep South Texas.

Winds were mostly variable at five to 20 mph but gusty in northern parts of the Panhandle to near 30 mph. Speeds were less than 6 mph in the west.

Overnight lows through Tuesday were expected to range from the high 30s to 50s. Highs should be in the 70s and 80s, except for the 40s in the Panhandle and 50s and 60s in the South Plains Tuesday in the wake of the cold front's passage.

NATION

Rain was scattered across the East and South on Sunday. Snow fell in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Showers that developed along a slow-moving cold front stretched from Alabama and Tennessee to New England. Strong southerly winds prevailed ahead of the cold front.

In northwestern Pennsylvania, rain changed to snow by mid-morning. Northwestern Ohio also received snow, and Toledo reported 1.7 inches, surpassing its record for the date of 1.5 inches set in 1975.

A few thunderstorms pelted Louisiana and the east coast of Florida, as well as Montana, Washington and the Lake Tahoe area of Nevada and California. Hail was reported east of Kalispell, Mont.

Dense fog hung over parts of Southern California, reducing visibility to near zero early Sunday morning along Interstate 10.

Dry weather prevailed across the rest of the nation.

Temperatures were in the 80s across Florida and in the 70s as far north as the middle Atlantic Coast region. It was a cool afternoon for the upper Midwest, with temperatures in the 30s in northern Minnesota, northern Wisconsin and Upper Michigan.

In Alaska, temperatures were in the upper 20s to lower 40s, with no subzero readings.

Early morning lows dipped below freezing from the Rocky Mountain region to the upper Great Lakes and across much of Maine. Ely, Minn., reported a low of 9 degrees.

ISSUE: Immigration sparks heated debates

but state officials like Wilson and Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles have been increasingly vocal about their opinions — despite the racial overtones.

"Illegal immigration is certainly a legitimate issue," says Miami attorney Simon Ferro, a Cuban-American and former chairman of the Florida Democratic Party. "But I would hope people talk about it in a more human and much less explosive way. I worry that some are too eager to take advantage of the darker side of the immigration problem and play to fear and resentment."

Chiles chose his words carefully as he announced his lawsuit against Clinton and the federal government this month. No one can blame illegal immigrants for seeking the American dream, Chiles said, but by not policing the borders and forcing states to foot the bills, "federal immigration policy has made a nightmare."

Chiles faces a tough re-election campaign this year, and some critics say he has watched Wilson's poll numbers rise as he rails against illegal immigration.

Chiles pollster Geoffrey Garin said Chiles is "not beating up immigrants." Still, Garin acknowledged the political appeal of the move: "He is standing up for his state, which is something voters want very much. This is a Democratic governor suing a Democratic administration."

Across the country in California, Republican Wilson makes the same case.

In an interview at his Los Angeles office, Wilson said it costs his state $3 billion a year to pay for health care, education, criminal justice and other costs associated with illegal immigration — "and the borders are plain and simply the federal government's domain."

Wilson said the steady influx of illegal aliens willing to work for low wages exacerbates unemployment in a state struggling to dig itself out of a punishing recession. As for the Clinton administration, Wilson says it can't be blamed for a problem it inherited but "I see them doing damn near nothing" to fix it.

In Texas, stops at the border are frequent for politicians though many tread delicately on the issue because of the voting power of Hispanics. Democratic Gov. Ann Richards has joined fellow governors in complaining that the federal government should pay the costs of illegal immigration and she endorses tighter border control.

Clinton has taken modest steps to answer complaints from the border states. Calling the Border Patrol "breathtakingly understaffed," Clinton offered $172 million in increase spending for more agents and equipment to police the border, as well as other steps designed to streamline the asylum process.

His effort won bipartisan applause, but it looks rather timid compared with a blizzard of immigration proposals put forth in recent months.

MARKET: Professionals don't rule out selling assault

best-known barometer of U.S. stock prices, which now stands at 3,635.96, is off more than 8 percent from its all-time high of 3,978.36 reached Jan. 31.

Broader measurements of stock values also tumbled last week, a possible sign that a 3½-year-old Wall Street rally is undergoing or has undergone what strategists call a correction, or a pullback to more realistic levels.

A key reason for the drop has been the Federal Reserve's moves to raise short-term interest rates Feb. 4 and March 23, reversing a five-year strategy of keeping rates low to stimulate the economy. The Fed has said interest rates must be raised to thwart inflation, a step that ought to reassure investors.

But the Fed aroused the opposite reaction by creating uncertainty over when interest rates will stop rising. That means strong economic news has been viewed with increased apprehension in the financial markets. Last week, for example, stocks and bonds tumbled on a report of rising consumer confidence.

The market's behavior was complicated by the Good Friday holiday, when the Labor Department said job creation surged in March, another possible warning of higher inflation. Investors had to delay their reaction until today.

Further complicating the picture is today's release of another potential market-moving piece of information, a monthly assessment of the manufacturing economy by the National Association of Purchasing Management, a trade group. If its report shows unexpectedly strong March growth or much higher prices paid by factories for raw materials, the market could fall.

Against the backdrop of fear over higher interest rates and inflation, political concerns have crept into Wall Street's collective thinking as possible reasons to sell.

In the past week, for example, traders have mentioned President Clinton's preoccupation with the so-called Whitewater inquiries into his family's personal finances, including Hillary Rodham Clinton's profits in cattle futures dabbling. While that issue might seem unrelated to the stock market, it is viewed by some as an unknown in determining Clinton's political longevity.

"People wonder if it will ever go away, or if there are problems that will make Bill Clinton's tenure questionable," said Tracy Herrick, chief investment strategist at Jefferies & Co., an investment firm in San Francisco. "There always seems to be something more."

DEATH: Murder of rancher shatters community

(From 1A)

It was just like any other night — until the ransom call at 11:41.

"I've got your husband and his red pickup, and I want $1 million in 24 hours," a man told Stevenson's wife, Marian.

Two days later, searchers dug Stevenson's bullet-riddled body out of a manure pile in a lean-to near the calving shed. Last Thursday, a trusted ranch hand was charged with the crime.

Stevenson's death was unsettling enough for the 226 people of Hobson, a speck on the map in central Montana.

But the shock reached far beyond Judith Basin County, which hadn't seen a murder since 1945. As more than 1,000 mourners poured into town for Saturday's funeral, Stevenson's stature in the ranching world became clear.

In an age when the Old West image of rugged ranchers has been diluted by absentee landlords and agribusiness conglomerates, Wayne Stevenson was the real item: a cattleman's cattleman who thrived on the harsh Montana range only to be betrayed while doing what he loved best — tending his herd.

It was as if Ben Cartwright had been murdered.

"He didn't want money," his daughter, Valerie said. "All he wanted was better cows."

"Everybody went to him for advice on cattle," said Tess Brady, an old friend. "If they needed a bull, he'd loan them a bull. If they needed help, he'd help them."

Wayne Stevenson was born 51 years ago, the third of five sons in a Hobson ranching family. He never strayed from the Judith Basin, a broad and grassy plain ringed by low mountains.

He married Marian when he was 18 and she was 16, and they moved into an 8-by-30-foot trailer on his parents' ranch. Stevenson worked for his father but was paid only in livestock, so the newlyweds raised cash by hand-milking cows and raising bum lambs, castoffs rejected by ewes.

They also raised a family: first Valerie, then Doug and Clint.

By 1972, they had saved enough to buy their own ranch, a modest spread of about 1,500 acres and 150 cattle. They named it the Basin Angus Ranch and raised purebred Black Angus cattle for breeding stock.

With an unerring eye for cows, a knack for salesmanship and an enthusiasm for 15-hour work days, Stevenson steadily expanded his ranch to 25,000 acres. The trailer home is long gone, replaced by a big house with five bathrooms and an indoor swimming pool.

But Stevenson was not softened by success. At 51 he was still as sturdy as a post, with calloused hands and a rancher's tan, his forehead white beneath the shade of an ever-present cap.

He'd rouse friends with phone calls before dawn, declaring "Early's all over by 6 a.m." Last winter, when it was 40 below, he was outside all day, hustling pregnant cows to shelter until his hands turned numb.

Ranch hands say Stevenson never asked them to work harder than he did, and he was as loyal to them as they were to him.

"He never fired a person, even when some of us thought he should," Marian said.

He hired 32-year-old David Llamas Blake last year, putting him and his family up in a house across the road from the calving shed. Stevenson liked Blake. He worked hard and kept the house in good repair.

What Stevenson didn't know was that Blake was a wanted man. California authorities say he was a "coyote" who smuggled Mexicans across the U.S. border for a fee. They believe he killed a man in 1986, shooting him in the head because he didn't pay.

The night of March 27, soon after Marian Stevenson got the ransom call, she phoned Blake at his house. No, Blake said, he hadn't seen her husband, but he promised to go look.

He didn't find him. Neither did the army of ranch hands, FBI agents, sheriff's officers, tracking dogs and pilots who scoured the ranch for the next 36 hours.

It wasn't until Tuesday afternoon, when a skittish horse pawed up some manure in its lean-to, that Stevenson's body was found.

Investigators quickly zeroed in on Blake. FBI agents traced the ransom call back to Blake's house, and authorities say there was blood on Blake's clothing, blood in the calving shed, and blood on a front-end loader sitting next to Blake's house.

Charged with murder and kidnapping, Blake is being held without bail while awaiting trial. Authorities say they're still trying to determine whether others were involved in what one called "a bungled abduction."

In the meantime, Stevenson's family and friends, nearly everyone within a 50-mile radius of Hobson, struggled with questions of their own.

"There's no explanation," Marian Stevenson said Friday, surrounded by relatives at the family ranch. "It's just an evil, and we can't find why."

Pope condemns violence in traditional Easter message

Associated Press

Christians awoke on Easter Sunday amid violence and political uncertainty, then went to church to hear messages of renewed hope for overcoming such problems.

Pope John Paul II told the 60,000 people who crammed St. Peter's Square that he hoped the joy of Christianity's most important holiday would overwhelm the din of violence and hate.

But some Christians in Lebanon spent the day in bunkers, and Palestinians were conspicuously absent from services in Jerusalem. Roman Catholics in a Sarajevo suburb celebrated Easter in a sandbagged sporting goods store.

In South Africa, political leaders joined more than 1 million people for a service on the scrub-covered hillsides of Moria, where a church leader called for tolerance to end the country's political violence.

In his traditional Easter message, delivered from a balcony at St. Peter's Basilica, the pope expressed hope that joy would "resound especially in Jerusalem, as it did the first time."

"May it resound in the Balkans, in the Caucasus, in Africa and in Asia and in all the nations where the din of weapons still continues, where nationalism arouses dangerous forms of evil extremism, where races and social classes endlessly oppose one another," he said.

Leading a peace march from Rome's city hall on the Capitoline Hill to St. Peter's Square in time to hear the pontiff was Sarajevo Mayor Muhamed Kresevljakovic, whose city has enjoyed an 8-week-old cease-fire.

In other Easter celebrations:

■ Church bells in Jerusalem called Roman Catholics to services to mark the resurrection of Jesus after his crucifixion. Palestinian Christians from the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, whose residents have been barred from Israel since the Feb. 25 massacre in Hebron, were absent from the services.

■ In an Israeli-held border enclave in southern Lebanon, rocket fire from Iranian-backed guerrillas forced Christians to cancel Easter celebrations.

Security forces said that most of the 30,000 Christians living in Marjayoun and surrounding villages chose to stay indoors or in bomb shelters rather than risk going out for Mass.

■ Thousands jammed Sarajevo's cathedral on the city's first peaceful Easter Sunday in two years.

Serb leader orders probe of reported ethnic terror

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic ordered an investigation into events in Prijedor in northern Bosnia, where 20 Muslims and Croats were reported killed in ethnic terror.

Earlier some Bosnian Serb officials denied the killings and denounced the U.N. relief agency reporting them as biased.

But the Bosnian Serbs' self-declared interior ministry later confirmed that 16 people were killed between March 29 and April 1, and said it was a "criminal act by so far unidentified perpetrators."

In the eastern Muslim enclave of Gorazde, residents cowered in shelters under heavy Serb bombardment, Bosnian radio reported. The town has been under Serb siege for more than a year.

Bosnian Premier Haris Silajdzic appealed for international help in Gorazde and Prijedor and warned that "the whole peace process is seriously at stake."

He spoke after meeting with U.S. congressman Frank McCloskey, D-Ind., who attended Easter services at Sarajevo cathedral. It was the first Easter not marred by shelling in two years in the multiethnic Bosnian capital, where a cease-fire is in its eighth week. About 17 percent of Sarajevo's pre-war population of 600,000 was Roman Catholic Croats.

Although Sarajevo is quieter, "It is obvious that this war is still not so close to its end," McCloskey said.

Bosnian radio reported Serbs had launched a heavy tank and infantry attack on Muslim-led government forces around Gorazde and said a new tank battalion had moved in Saturday night.

U.N. military observers reported shelling and infantry and artillery battles on Saturday. One person was killed and two wounded in shelling of a refugee camp, U.N. spokesman Maj. Rob Annink said.

The shelling of Gorazde resumed in recent days after government troops made inroads against Serb forces in northern Bosnia, where the Serbs are trying to keep control of a narrow land corridor linking their holdings in the east and west of the war-ravaged republic.

Serb forces who hold 70 percent of Bosnia fear that the new federation between Muslims and Croats may turn into a military alliance. They have rejected offers to join the federation, opting instead for union with neighboring Serbia.

The Bosnian Serb military claimed Sunday that a "general Muslim offensive" was continuing on all fronts.

In northern Prijedor, the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees reported the killings of 20 non-Serbs and accused Bosnian Serb authorities of acquiescing in the attacks.

Vladimir Lukic, head of the Bosnian Serbs' self-proclaimed government, wrote the agency saying its reports were "completely inaccurate and biased."

But Karadzic, who is far more powerful, took a different tone.

He ordered an investigation and urged local officials "to ensure full safety to members of minorities in the town and to offer every assistance" to the Red Cross, which plans to evacuate thousands of Muslims and Croats from Prijedor, the Bosnian Serb news agency Srna said.

Prijedor police chief Bogdan Delic said a Serb and a Muslim were detained for questioning within hours of Karadzic's order. They were released later but several others are under suspicion, he said.

A Red Cross official is to meet Karadzic today to seek guarantees that non-Serbs who want to can leave and those who stay behind will not be harassed. Chris Janowski, a spokesman for the U.N. relief agency in Sarajevo, said at least 7,000 people would likely be evacuated.

Critics say such evacuations by international relief agencies effectively help the Serbs clear the region of non-Serbs.

More people were forced from their homes in Prijedor on Saturday, and one person died of wounds suffered Thursday, bringing the toll in recent days to 20, Janowski said.

Prijedor, 110 miles northwest of Sarajevo near the Serb stronghold of Banja Luka, has been the site of some of the worst ethnic terror of Bosnia's two-year war. It had 112,000 inhabitants before the war, about 44 percent Muslim and 5.6 percent Croat. U.N. aid officials say about 6,000 Muslims and 3,000 Croats remain, along with 55,000 Serbs.

Commission judges in mosque killings consider theory of second gunman

JERUSALEM (AP) — There may have been a second gunman at the Hebron mosque massacre who used elaborate methods to cover his tracks, judges on the commission of inquiry suggested Sunday.

Muslim witnesses have said the shooting came from more than one point in the mosque, but Sunday was the first time the judges indicated they were seriously considering the theory.

Commission president Judge Meir Shamgar told army investigator Brig. Gen. David Agmon of a "thesis" the judges had that a second man opened fire on the worshipers from the far side of Ibrahim mosque.

Judge Abdel-Rahman Zoabi said the judges pressed Agmon on gaps in his investigation of the Feb. 25 massacre of at least 30 Muslim worshipers.

The judges noted that Agmon's report used ballistic and trajectory findings to place killer Baruch Goldstein at three different positions in the mosque, the main room in the Tomb of the Patriarchs.

Judge Eliezer Goldberg asked Agmon how Goldstein could have entered through the main entrance, shot several rounds, and traveled 25 yards without being attacked — unless there was an accomplice.

Agmon, who described the possibility of an accomplice as "possible, but not probable," said he believed Goldstein protected himself by shooting until he had returned to his point of entry, when he was set upon while switching clips.

Worshipers beat Goldstein to death. A Glilon assault rifle and seven clips were found next to Goldstein's body in the Ibrahim mosque after the attack.

The judges also raised earlier testimony from two soldiers guarding the site, who said they saw Goldstein enter the Tomb with an M-16 assault rifle, and said they saw a second mystery settler carrying a Glilon.

Agmon noted that Goldstein's assigned weapon, as a reserves major in the army's medical corps, was the Glilon found in the mosque. But he acknowledged that many witnesses had seen Goldstein carrying an M-16 in the weeks prior to the massacre.

The shells recovered at the site were all from the Glilon, Agmon said. But Zoabi suggested that the second gunman might have switched guns with Goldstein, and used a special sack to retain the shells from the M-16.

Agmon countered that a shell-retaining sack would have been cumbersome. But the extremist Kach movement, with which Goldstein was associated, has advertised specially made sacks to avoid police detection.

Sunday opened the fifth week of hearings. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is expected to testify behind closed doors on Wednesday. Israeli news reports said Rabin was considering allowing news coverage of some of his appearance.

Goldstein's widow, Miriam, was scheduled to testify Sunday, but refused to show.

Artist's mural captures style, charm of Mexico

By Jenny Strasburg
San Angelo Standard-Times

SAN ANGELO — Lorenzo Castaneda's brush has captured the ageless charm of Mexico on a wall in San Angelo.

After La Esperanza medical clinic's projected opening in April, visitors will see, inside the clinic's east wall, Castaneda's depiction of a warm, timeless community.

The longtime San Angelo artist said his newest mural is a combination of elements taken from two Mexican streets seen on his travels.

One street lies in Oaxaca, the other in Taxco, he said, both towns not far from Mexico City.

Spaniards built the architectural hearts of Mexican communities near to those as early as the 16th century, and townspeople for centuries have strived to maintain their ageless beauty, Castaneda explained.

Oaxaca's origin, though, began long before that, he added.

Streets are sided by shops, schools, churches and other buildings that not only remain standing but still are active centers of community life.

"That's a little history," Castaneda said, interrupted from his painting on a recent sunny afternoon.

"I like to know who I am, where I come from," he added, explaining that he has researched areas of Mexican history extensively.

Castaneda's subjects in the clinic mural represent present-day townspeople. Specifically, they are mestizos — people of mixed parentage, in this case Spanish and American Indian, he said — in whose culture he is particularly interested.

Castaneda hopes his newest characters will "walk" along the east wall of La Esperanza for decades to come.

The ceiling, walls and floor that surround the mural will be its frame.

Castaneda de-emphasized his typical dashingly bright colors for the clinic mural. A mural he painted several years ago in a nearby restaurant shows he allowed a subtler side of his impressionistic style to surface in La Esperanza.

The older mural can be seen in what's now called The Whole Enchilada, in the same plaza as the clinic.

Clinic organizers asked him to tone colors down a little for this project.

"They wanted soft colors, something not too harsh," he said, surveying his work. "This is very low in intensity. It's mostly values of dark and light."

Castaneda first treated the plasterboard with gesso, or plaster of Paris, to prevent mildew, then sketched his figures in pencil.

Details of his subjects develop as the work progresses: a man gazing thoughtfully into the distance, a younger man pulling a toddler along by the hand, a young woman toting a bag of fruit, an old woman carrying a bouquet of flowers ...

The impressionistic style means "details" perceived by a viewer's eye are better grasped from several feet away.

Elements that appear to be detailed and fine-tuned prove to be soft and gradual up close.

Castaneda, a full-time artist, was born in San Angelo. He dropped out of high school to pursue art and has shown his work in San Angelo for many years.

He is accustomed to spending most weekends in San Antonio. There he sells watercolors, most of them with western themes — and most of them in sizes he can paint in a day.

Working daylight hours seven days a week, the barrio clinic mural still claimed several weeks' time, he said.

Reader-rigged cabinets to trap snoopy guests

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your reader asked how one gets marbles into a medicine cabinet to catch snoopy guests. Easy.

Take a long, sturdy piece of thin cardboard and hold it in front of the bottom shelf to act as a "dam." Drop in the marbles and raise the cardboard to the next shelf and repeat the action. Close the door and gently slide the dam out. Your booby trap is set.

My grandmother, Julia Pullen, laughed when she heard about this. She thought you should know that a variation of this saved her crystal after the recent Northridge earthquake. The china cabinet didn't fall over, but the crystal fell against the glass door. Three grandchildren, using long knives and working one shelf at a time, slid the knives between the door and the crystal to hold the crystal in place. My husband slipped his hand in and nudged each piece securely back onto the shelf. We saved all but one piece, which was broken in the earthquake.

The "knife method" might also work to get the marbles in the medicine cabinet, but be careful — you wouldn't want to lose your marbles. — JULIA IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR JULIA: I could not believe the number of readers who wrote to explain how to booby-trap a medicine cabinet. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: The solution to putting marbles into the medicine cabinet is very simple. Tie a string to the bottom of a plastic bag; fill the bag with marbles and place the bag on a shelf with the string coming out over the top of the door. Close the door and pull the string and bag out the top. — PHIL IN A MOBILE HOME PARK

DEAR ABBY: For the man who wanted to know how to booby-trap a medicine cabinet: Cut both ends out of a soup can and tape a string to the top. Place the soup can on an empty shelf and fill with marbles. Tape the other end of the string to the partially closed door so that when it is opened it will pull the can out and release the marbles. Warning: Don't forget the trap, or you will be the one who gets caught. — MARLIN HUTMAKER IN WAHPETON, N.D.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the letter about the snoopy guest who had a habit of looking in everybody's medicine cabinet, the guest probably needs help. I used to do that, too, because I was a drug addict looking for Valium or Percodan or whatever my host had that was better than what I had. I'm in recovery (AA) now. — BIG MIKE IN ATLANTA

DEAR ABBY: About marbles in the medicine cabinet: I saw that on a hidden-camera TV show when I was a kid, and yes, I used to open everyone's medicine cabinet. However, after that show, I have never snooped in a friend's cabinet again. I must admit that it is not out of respect for their privacy, but out of fear of embarrassment in case they pull that joke. — LOST MY MARBLES IN WICHITA

DEAR ABBY: Tell "Dick in Walnut Creek, Calif." to empty a shelf in his medicine cabinet and hold a piece of cardboard against the space to make a pocket into which he can put marbles. Close the door on the cardboard, then pull the cardboard out. Be prepared for some laughs.

I did it once to see if I had any snoopy guests, and it paid off. A guest was in the bathroom when my wife and I heard the racket of marbles hitting the sink!

The guest came out with a red face and walked right out of the front door. We couldn't stop laughing. — RICK M., WEST CONCORD, MASS.

DEAR ABBY: I have a suggestion for the man who wanted to know how to get marbles in the medicine cabinet. Make a "jar" out of ice; fill it with marbles and place it in the cabinet. When the ice melts, you have marbles loose in the cabinet. — STEVE FROM CENTER CITY

DEAR STEVE: How do you make a "jar" out of ice?

The World in brief

■ Radio report: U.S. serviceman kills self

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — An American serviceman holding what he thought was a fake grenade accidentally caused it to explode Sunday, killing himself and injuring four people, a radio station reported.

Lt. Col. Julio Ramon Rivera, who was assigned to the U.S. Embassy, went to a police barracks in the capital to press for the release of three of his Salvadoran employees, YSKL radio station said.

The unidentified employees had been detained for drinking and carrying weapons, including grenades.

The radio said Rivera, trying to prove to police that the weapons were fake, pulled the pin on a grenade. It exploded, killing the 47-year-old serviceman.

A forensic doctor at the Institute of Legal Medicine, where the body was taken, said the explosion also injured two of the arrested employees and two policemen. The doctor spoke on condition of anonymity.

The death could not be confirmed immediately by the U.S. Embassy.

■ Guerrilas hold American for ransom

BANGKOK, Thailand — Khmer Rouge guerrillas were holding a young American woman and several Cambodians for ransom Sunday along Cambodia's southern coast, a U.S. Embassy spokesman in Phnom Penh said.

The spokesman, who asked not to be named, said Melissa Heinz and probably three Cambodians were being held in the Kampot area, and the Khmer Rouge was asking for wells to be dug for the group before it would release the hostages.

"We are following this very closely and trying with the Cambodian government to effect a release," said the spokesman, who was contacted by telephone from Bangkok. He said the hostages had not been heard of since last Thursday.

Ms. Heinz was working for Food for the Hungry International, a private organization active in Cambodia and based in Thailand's capital of Bangkok, the spokesman said.

The spokesman said he had no further details of the incident and did not give her hometown.

Other unconfirmed reports said she and Cambodian staffers of the organization were seized after they traveled to Kampot, 75 miles southwest of Phnom Penh, to negotiate the release of a Food for the Hungry vehicle allegedly stolen by the Khmer Rouge.

Numerous vehicles have been stolen from international agencies operating in Cambodia, but bandits and renegade government policemen rather than the Khmer Rouge have usually been blamed.

Although wells are scarce and badly needed in the countryside, kidnappers in Cambodia normally have asked for money rather than assistance of this kind.

■ 850,000 in Rwanda face starvation

NAIROBI, Kenya — More than 850,000 people in Rwanda — about one of every eight people in the country — urgently need food to prevent starvation due to drought, a new report says.

The report, prepared by aid agencies, including Oxfam, said the 854,873 needy were scattered in seven regions in the tiny central African nation.

The report was released in Rwanda's capital, Kigali, on Friday and summaries made available to the Associated Press on Sunday.

According to the report, 56,000 tons of grain, beans and cooking oil are needed over the next three months.

In some places, the rate of malnutrition among Rwandans is increasing, while aid workers report a decline a decline among refugees from neighboring Burundi, the report said.

"While donors are preoccupied with defining the severity of the famine, they have done little to address the problem," the report said.

Rwanda first appealed for 104,500 tons of food for 900,000 people in November. Faced with such a large request, donors asked for more information.

In addition to the drought, the report said political instability has prevented people from migrating in search of jobs.

Ten die in Natal attacks; Mandela urges patience

PIETERSBURG, South Africa (AP) — Assailants posing as policemen killed a family of ANC supporters in Natal, and Nelson Mandela warned Sunday it would take time for the state of emergency to end the Zulu-ANC violence that threatens this month's all-race elections.

Mandela, head of the African National Congress, said he hoped a summit this week with President F.W. de Klerk and Zulu leaders would dissipate tension so the emergency measures could be lifted, and Natal — which includes the volatile KwaZulu black homeland — could participate in the first April 26-28 voting.

A spokesman for de Klerk said the summit would take place Friday. No other details were announced.

The nine deaths in Port Shepstone, on Natal's south coast, and at least nine other killings Saturday and early Sunday brought the death toll in Natal to 37 since de Klerk declared the state of emergency Thursday, police said.

The attackers in Port Shepstone identified themselves as policemen to enter a hut on Saturday night, then hacked and stabbed nine people to death, including a 5-month-old infant and two older children. The family was identified as ANC supporters, Police Lt. Col. Marzedt de Beer said.

In another incident, bullets fired from an ANC-controlled area killed one woman and injured another as they prayed Easter Sunday at a cross set up in the streets of Bhambayi, near Durban, de Beer said.

The attacks were part of the daily violence that has wracked Natal, where the ANC and the Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party have fought since 1990. Inkatha is boycotting the election.

De Klerk, in conjunction with the multiracial Transitional Executive Council helping run the country until the vote, declared the state of emergency because of the escalating political violence.

Mandela's ANC is expected to win the election and has pledged to get rid of black homelands, including KwaZulu, which were established under the apartheid system of racial segregation.

Zulu nationalists led by Mangosuthu Buthelezi, the Inkatha Freedom Party leader, oppose the vote, fearing an ANC victory will allow it to crush the rights of South Africa's 7 million Zulus, most of whom live in Natal.

More than 1,000 South African soldiers have been sent to Natal to try to secure the province, especially KwaZulu, so political campaigning and voting can proceed unhindered.

Mandela, speaking to reporters as he traveled to a church meeting near Pietersburg, 210 miles north of Johannesburg, said soldiers needed time to bring violence under control.

Public records raise questions about Zhirinovsky's past

ALMA-ATA, Kazakhstan (AP) — Public records show that Vladimir Zhirinovsky, the Russian nationalist leader who campaigns on anti-Semitic themes, had a Jewish last name until age 18.

Zhirinovsky vehemently denies that he or his parents were Jewish. Zhirinovsky's origins have political significance in Russia because of his attacks on Jews, and the documents raise questions about his candor.

The public records were found by a reporter working for The Associated Press and Cable News Network in four archives in Alma-Ata, Kazakhstan, the city where Zhirinovsky was born and raised.

Zhirinovsky's Liberal Democratic Party won 23.5 percent of the national vote in December's parliamentary elections, and he has said he will run for Russia's presidency in 1996. Much of his political strength rests on extreme nationalists who are virulently anti-Semitic.

Although the records do not say specifically who his father was, Zhirinovsky's surname was listed on his birth registration as Eidelshtein. Documents show he applied for and received permission to change his name from Eidelshtein to Zhirinovsky in June 1964.

That was just before he moved to Moscow from Kazakhstan, in what was then Soviet Central Asia, for higher education. Ethnic quotas for universities at the time held back many Jewish or Jewish-sounding students. Zhirinovsky won a place in the prestigious Institute of Oriental Languages, affiliated with Moscow State University.

The worn, hand-written documents at the Alma-Ata archives were retrieved from dusty shelves and cardboard boxes in response to a reporter's inquiries. Officials at the archives said they were authentic.

In Moscow, Grigory Serebrennikov, a spokesman for Zhirinovsky's party, told the AP, "The documents clearly have been forged."

"Ever since his birth, his only last name has been Zhirinovsky. This name (Eidelshtein) never figured in his documents," Serebrennikov said.

Serebrennikov said Zhirinovsky would answer questions, but would charge $5,000 for a half-hour interview. He ruled out a meeting without payment.

Zhirinovsky's autobiography, "The Final March South," claims his father was named Volf Andreyevich Zhirinovsky, but no records could be found for such a man in Alma-Ata. Details about the father in the autobiography seem to combine elements from his mother's two husbands.

One husband was Andrei Vasilyevich Zhirinovsky who, documents show, died of tuberculosis in August 1944, 18 months before Zhirinovsky's birth on April 25, 1946.

In the autobiography, Zhirinovsky mentions that his mother had five children by her first husband, but never names him.

A marriage registration shows that five months before Zhirinovsky was born, his mother married Volf Isakovich Eidelshtein, who was officially listed as Jewish.

Report: China may send envoy to N. Korea over nuclear crisis

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — China is expected to send a high-ranking delegation to North Korea this month to help defuse a standoff over nuclear inspections, South Korea's national news agency reported Sunday.

China, as North Korea's only major ally, is potentially influential in resolving the dispute that has raised international tensions and fears of conflict.

The Yonhap news agency also reported that South Korea will hold off until at least May on its annual war games with the United States.

Yonhap, quoting an unnamed Foreign Ministry official, said the Chinese delegation will visit Pyongyang for North Korean President Kim Il Sung's 82nd birthday on April 15.

"Chinese delegates are expected to urge North Korean leaders to resolve the nuclear issue through dialogue," Yonhap quoted the official as saying.

Officials could not be reached for comment Sunday.

North Korea has refused to allow full U.N. inspections of its nuclear facilities, deepening suspicions that it is developing atomic weapons. Pyongyang insists its nuclear program is peaceful.

On Friday, South Korean President Kim Young-sam said China would feel obligated to help resolve the nuclear dispute since the U.N. Security Council had gone along with its wish that North Korea not be threatened with sanctions. Instead, the Security Council urged Pyongyang to accept full nuclear inspections and only hinted at further action if it continues to refuse to cooperate.

The official also predicted that North Korea and the United States would resume contacts, also around mid-April, Yonhap said.

In a separate report, Yonhap said South Korea will postpone its joint annual military exercises with the United States at least until mid-May, by which time it expects North Korea's intentions to be clearer.

A final decision will be made when U.S. Defense Secretary William Perry visits Seoul on April 17, it said.

Rabin, Arafat put peace on track

Thursday's agreement in Cairo between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization promises to recapture the lost momentum toward peace. The two sides agreed to resume peace talks, deploy international monitors in troubled Hebron and speed the Israeli troop withdrawals from Gaza and Jericho as provided in the September framework peace accords.

Extremists on both sides protested. Militant Palestinians object that some 450 Jewish settlers are still permitted to live amid the 80,000 Arabs of the Hebron area. Hardline Israelis worry about the precedent set by admitting outside observers to territory where Israel claims authority. Months of delay and violence have clearly swelled the ranks of skeptics on both sides. Yet if violence and delay have become the main threats to peace, the security measures and accelerated timetable worked out in Cairo are the right response.

Most of the substantive concessions were made by Israel. For the first time ever, Israel will accept an armed international presence in the occupied territories — a uniformed force of 160 Norwegians, Danes and Italians whose mission is to provide a feeling of security to Palestinian residents of Hebron and monitor events there. These observers, who will have no military or police powers, will report to a joint Israeli-Palestinian committee. Their initial mandate is for three months but can be extended with the agreement of both sides.

Israel also has agreed to permit the deployment of a Palestinian police force in Gaza and Jericho, even before formal agreement is reached on the details of autonomy. That is an effective way to increase Palestinian civilian security, discourage further settler violence and avoid mistaken-identity killings by Israeli soldiers, as occurred on March 28 in Gaza.

In addition, in a gesture of immense psychological importance, Israel will speed up its troop withdrawals in an effort to complete them by the original target date of April 13.

In return for these concessions, the PLO has now returned to the autonomy talks that it broke off after the Hebron mosque massacre in February. It has dropped demands, like its calls for removing or disarming Jewish settlers, that threatened to unravel the September peace formula. The essence of that formula is to give Palestinians authority over their own lives now, and leave issues like territory and settlers for later.

From the day Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and the PLO chairman, Yasser Arafat, initialed the framework peace agreement on the White House lawn, both understood that their resolve would be tested again and again by violent enemies of peace on both sides. Their fears have been amply fulfilled, not just by Baruch Goldstein but also by Palestinian terrorists who see Arafat as a traitor. The encouraging news is that Israeli and Palestinian leaders have now made clear their determination not to be deflected from the path of peace.

Opportunistic KGB chief enjoys life at top

WASHINGTON — The head of the new KGB, Yevgeny Primakov, is a chameleon-like man who will do anything to keep his job because he enjoys the power — and the trappings of it.

Little has been published in the United States about Primakov, who as head of the Russian Foreign Intelligence Service, the SVR, continues to run an active spy network in the United States. If the Aldrich Ames affair is any indication, Primakov has at least one more mole buried in the bowels of the Central Intelligence Agency, leaking secrets in a treasonous manner to a country whose hundreds of nuclear missiles are still pointed at the United States.

Anderson

In choosing Primakov to head the new Russian intelligence service, Russian President Boris Yeltsin emphasized Primakov's longtime credentials as a prominent academician and former Pravda correspondent. What Yeltsin neglected to mention publicly is that Primakov, according to several knowledgeable Russian and U.S. intelligence sources, was a long-time agent for the old KGB — at least since 1959. His codename was "Maxim."

Even today, when Yeltsin's inner circle seems to change as often as the weather, Primakov remains one of the few constants. When Yeltsin originally tapped him to head the SVR, it was partly because the old KGB bureaucracy felt comfortable with him in charge. He is a man who has managed to please such disparate masters as Leonid Brezhnev and Mikhail Gorbachev.

Even in his early days with the KGB, Primakov's political skills permitted him many perquisites, with little grumbling from his colleagues.

One source noted that whenever Primakov would make a visit to a Middle East country, in his front role as an academician, the KGB contingent there "would receive a cable in advance, and were told they were responsible for his security in these countries, and to keep him happy. When he was there, he always asked the KGB personnel to buy him expensive presents from the KGB budget. Usually he returned from Moscow with huge luggage."

That's the kind of attention that Primakov has always savored. One top SVR official noted how much Primakov lusted after the top new KGB job because he didn't want to be anybody's No. 2 anymore.

To keep the job, Primakov has deliberately suppressed personal information that might be seen as adverse, and tried to advance the myth that he was a courageous Yeltsin-style reformer all along.

He doesn't talk about his KGB career, and has even publicly denied it in several Russian press reports. More curious, he has ducked any confirmation that he is part-Jewish. In Muscovite power circles, this is not a useful aspect for Primakov, who has taken note of the rise of ultranationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky on the back of anti-Semitic remarks.

It is a question that dates back to the eve of the Gulf War, when Gorbachev sent Primakov to meet with Saddam Hussein as a last minute effort to prevent the war.

At the time, we were aware of a highly classified CIA report that concluded Primakov was part-Jewish, and which speculated on the negative effect that information might have on Saddam. One CIA source later said that there was some discussion at headquarters about leaking this information to Saddam as a way of scuttling the peace mission. Several CIA officials

The plan was never put into action, the source said, because Primakov's mission proved unsuccessful, and the war was on.

CHARLEY REESE

Gun laws help elitists, hurt common people

It may surprise some folks, in view of my vehement opposition to gun control, but I am not a gun collector or a regular sports shooter, nor do I have or desire to have any of the semi-automatics dumb politicians mislabel as assault weapons.

Reese

I do a little hunting and recreational shooting. I have a couple of lever-action deer rifles and pump shotguns and a pistol or two. The latter are for the purposes of recreation and self-defense.

So all these proposals to ban certain types of firearms wouldn't inconvenience me in the least, yet I oppose them. Why? The reasons are several.

First of all, we have a constitutional right to keep and bear arms. The lies and idiot interpretations of elitists and shyster lawyers notwithstanding, the Second Amendment is crystal clear: The people have a right to keep and bear arms.

After all, the Bill of Rights was written and passed by people who had just finished fighting a bloody revolution. The philosophy, expressed in the Declaration of Independence, was that people's rights came from God and that when a government abused those rights, they — the people — had the right to overthrow it.

It would therefore have been both illogical and stupid for those revolutionaries to have denied the people the right to keep and bear arms, and they were neither. Not only is the language of the amendment clear, the public record of the founders' statements is ice clear.

So, I will not allow jackleg politicians to usurp the Bill of Rights without protesting.

It is also both illogical and inconsistent for a government to say people have a right to life and a right to self-defense but no right to own the tools necessary to defend their lives. It is illogical for a government that says its police have no obligation to provide individual protection to deny people the means to protect themselves. It is immoral for a government that repeatedly releases predators to pray on people to tell those victims they cannot have a weapon for self-defense. It's stupid for a government that can't control criminals, drugs or illegal immigrants to claim it can take guns away from criminals if only honest folks will give up theirs.

Gun control proposals are also an insult. Gun control by definition only affects honest people. When a politician tells you he wants to forbid you from owning a firearm or force you to get a license, he is telling you he doesn't trust you. That's an insult.

The government trusted me with an M-48 heavy battle tank and assorted small arms when it claimed to have need of my services. It trusts common Americans with all kinds of arms when it wants them to go kill foreigners somewhere — usually for the financial benefit of some corporations.

But when the men and women take off their uniforms and return to their homes and assume responsibility for their own and their families' safety, all of sudden, the politicians don't trust them to own a gun. This is pure elitism. Elitists think we common folk are stupid or mad, and that if we have a firearm, we are going to shoot the check-out girl at the supermarket when she makes a mistake on the register. Or, knowing what they intend for our future, maybe they fear we will shoot them.

The fact that gun control is an elitist effort at people control is easily verifiable. Go to New York or any big city and see who gets the gun permits. The small shopkeeper or the retail clerk actually exposed to crime? No, the elite, like William F. Buckley and the publisher of the New York Times.

Gun control is not about guns or crime. It is about an elite that fears and despises the common people, just as Thomas Jefferson said they always do, no matter what they call themselves.

Liberal reformers turn their wrath on smokers

There seems to be no limit to the abuse being heaped on those 40 million Americans who still smoke.

They have been banned from public buildings, many workplaces, restaurants, sports arenas and are threatened with higher taxes.

As one who has shaken tobacco, I have now joined in stomping those who still indulge in their disgusting habit.

The other day, I visited a tavern and saw an old friend at the bar. He waved at me to join him, but I sat down at the other end.

He walked over and said: "You mad about something?"

"No," I said, looking down my nose at him. "I am not angry at you. It's just that you are my social inferior, lacking high station or birth."

"I'm what?"

"Well, to put it another way, you are of inferior social status. You have been lowered in class, rank and social position."

"When did all this happen?"

So I explained that I had watched a Sunday-morning, deep-think TV show.

They talked about the national anti-smoking crusade. And George Will, one of Washington's deepest thinkers, said that those who still smoked had become "declasse."

Not being of the French-speaking persuasion, I looked up "declasse" in a dictionary.

"And," as I told my friend, "the definition included all the things I have said about you. What it amounts to is that because you smoke, you ain't got no class."

A look of sadness and defeat fell across his face.

"I don't know how much more of this I can take," he said. "I can't smoke where I work.

"I can't smoke at home, even on the back porch, because my wife says the second-hand smoke endangers the health of her cat.

"Some of my favorite restaurants have banned smoking, but they still eagerly sell me all the vodka martinis needed to destroy my liver and enough cholesterol to clog a cannon.

"How did we suddenly become society's favorite whipping boy?"

Because somebody has to satisfy the craving of the modern liberal reformer.

Criminals should pay for acts

In recent events in the City of Midland and our nation, violent crime has gone blatantly unpunished, or with just a slap on the hand. The criminals' defense lawyers claim temporary insanity, abuse or self defense when in reality, it is just an injustice to society. For our country to prosper and grow, this must stop!

It is high time for our criminal justice system to stand by the law and make every person responsible for his or her actions.

Church issues 'unfortunate' ad

It is unfortunate that the pastors of Midland Bible Church felt the need to place their open letter in an ad in your paper yesterday (Sunday, March 27, page 6B). While all Christians are against "un-Christ-like" actions in politics (or any other area) and do not want to be one of the "extreme political radicals" mentioned, this letter plays into the hands of those who would identify any Christian, active in politics, this way. While many may think of "un-Christ-like" and "extreme political radicals" as those who are cruel, unscrupulous or unprincipled in politics, others think of politics or anything not overly "Christian" as somehow sin.

Confused Christians may read this article and not vote, be active in upcoming elections or debates and leave the public square to ungodliness. We need moral principles in government and politics. Laws are always based on some morality — it is best if they are based on the truth of the Bible and not humanistic relativism. Others, political enemies of Christian morality in the public life, will use words, like those from the pastors at Midland Bible who should be our allies, against we Christians active in public debate.

Furthermore, I know of no Christians, active in our local political scene, who can be characterized as "un-Christ-like" or "extreme political radicals." To publish this ad, the Midland paper slanders many good people who are working hard to do that which all Christians should be doing: recognizing and extending Christ's Lordship into all of life rather than living in a self imposed religious ghetto.

Report: Teens don't get help with questions about sex

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 700 million teen-agers around the world are struggling with increasingly complex questions about sex, but a new report says most are not getting the help they need to find answers.

Evolving cultural standards, the spread of AIDS, changing laws on abortion, a worldwide trend to delay marriage and economic changes are all affecting the way young people deal with burgeoning sexuality.

In a report released Sunday, Population Action International — a non-profit family planning advocacy group — concluded that millions, if not hundreds of millions, of teens are at risk.

Around the world, adults are reluctant to admit that their children are having sex, but studies in several countries show that most adolescents, no matter what their culture, are sexually active before age 20.

And the age at which sexual activity begins is decreasing as overall health improves, according to international studies. By 2000, a billion teen-agers will be facing sexual challenges and desires.

"The school systems in most countries . . . have largely failed to meet the sexual health education needs of youth and children," said the Population Action report, "Youth at Risk."

Adolescents are less likely to use contraceptives than adults, particularly in developing countries, and many young people have little knowledge of reproductive physiology, the report found.

Approaches to sex are often affected by culture, but social forces are changing attitudes, the report said, citing the impact of urbanization, changing family structures and mass media.

"Government support for adolescent programs has been constrained by societal discomfort in acknowledging adolescent sexual activity and by the misconception that access to sexuality education or contraception promotes sexual activity among youth," the report said.

It cited World Health Organization studies in several countries to show that children with a good sex education are more likely to delay their first intercourse.

The best approach, the report concluded, is to encourage a delay in sexual activity while providing birth control counseling and contraceptives.

But the report said most family planning programs do little to reach adolescents; laws and practices often restrict youngsters' access to contraception and abortion services.

Even marriage does not resolve all the problems of teen-age sex.

In South Asia, for example, where marriages occur early, complications in pregnancy and childbirth are greater for adolescent mothers. Unsafe abortions are also a major cause of adolescent mothers' deaths, the report said.

Early childbearing, with or without marriage, often limits educational and employment opportunities for young women and contributes to rapid population growth, the report said.

WHO estimates that one in 20 teen-agers worldwide acquires a sexually transmitted disease each year. In the United States, the risk is one in eight.

Convict dies during escape, would have been free in 7 months

BOSTON (AP) — Robert Stewart was a model prisoner who could have been free in seven months after serving 14 years for murder.

Instead, he escaped from prison, stole a car, shot a police officer and died Sunday in a wreck during a police chase in southern New Hampshire.

Stewart walked out of a pre-release program March 26 at the minimum security state prison in Lancaster, about 30 miles west of Boston.

"A guy who is 61 years old, has served 14-plus years and has a parole hearing coming up in a matter of months is one of the last people who walks away," said Department of Corrections spokesman Tony Carnevale.

Stewart did have a history of escapes, but Carnevale said none were from a state prison.

Police spotted Stewart Saturday night arguing with a woman in the parking lot of a restaurant in Leominster, about 10 miles from the prison. When an officer approached him, he jumped into a stolen Jeep and sped away.

Stewart drove to nearby Shirley, where police Sgt. James Mickel pulled him over. As Mickel approached the Jeep, Stewart shot him in the chest, police said.

It was unclear whether Mickel knew Stewart was an escapee. Police sent out a radio bulletin about Stewart, but Mickel might have pulled him over because the Jeep was missing a headlight, Officer William Wright said.

Mickel, 45, was in fair condition at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester. Doctors removed bullet fragments that were within an inch of his heart and he was expected to recover.

After the shooting, Stewart drove about 40 miles northwest to Keene, N.H., where an officer spotted the missing headlight early Sunday morning.

Cpl. Jack Zeller said he was ready to pull Stewart over when he heard a radio bulletin.

"This was my Easter present that I did not make that stop," Zeller said. "You never know when it's going to happen."

Zeller followed Stewart and then gave chase with help from other officers.

Stewart died after he intentionally rammed a state police cruiser in Swanzey, N.H., just outside Keene, police said. The Jeep rolled over several times.

■ Two women die in skydiving accident

BELEN, N.M. — Two skydivers, including one making her first jump, died Saturday when their tandem parachute failed to open.

Jan McNeal, 43, and novice Polly Perry, 55, both of Santa Fe, made the tandem jump from about 8,500 feet.

Valencia County Sheriff Billy Saxon said it appeared only one of two rip cords had been pulled for the reserve parachute.

Trainer Mike Bode of the Coronado Skydiving Center in Belen, about 25 miles south of Albuquerque, said the main parachute apparently failed to open. He said it appeared the reserve chute had begun to open when the women hit the ground.

Tandem jumping is common when one jumper is a novice.

■ Group hopes to televise executions

TYSON'S CORNER, Va. — Perhaps it's a crassly commercial appeal to public bloodlust. Or perhaps it's the natural extension of a society that already televises courtroom battles and police patrols.

"We want to put on pay-TV an actual execution," said Mark B. Sandground, a Virginia lawyer. He has founded a production group that hopes to eventually air a pay-per-view "execution of the month."

So far, the idea has found plenty of critics and no takers.

"I find the idea abhorrent. I want no part of it," Warner Bros. executive Edward Bleier wrote to Sandground's partner, Los Angeles entertainment laywer Michael Shapiro.

"It's going back to Roman times. I think it is an assault on our civilization," said state Del. Bernard S. Cohen, a death penalty supporter.

Sandground said he thinks the notion of paying $9.95 to watch a killer pay for his crime would have "worldwide appeal." He's not the first. The NBC movie "Witness to the Execution," which aired in February, was a fictional account of a TV executive who had the same idea.

The issue of televised executions also arose in 1990 when San Francisco public television station KQED requested permission to broadcast the execution of Robert Alton Harris. The request was denied.

■ Poll: Most believe IRS abuses power

NEW YORK — About two in three Americans believe the Internal Revenue Service abuses its power, but only 6 percent fear an audit this year, according to a new poll.

The poll was taken by Gallup for CNBC, a cable TV business and financial network, which is reporting the results this week.

CNBC said the poll found a link between skepticism about the IRS and a widespread belief that government wastes a significant portion of tax dollars.

The belief that the IRS mostly or sometimes abuses its power was held by 64 percent of all those polled, and by 77 percent of those who think the government wastes more than 50 cents of every federal tax dollar.

The average response was that government wastes 47 cents of every federal tax dollar, 38 cents of every state tax dollar and 36 cents of every local tax dollar.

Nevertheless, seven in 10 are willing to pay higher federal taxes for either crime prevention or an improved educational system. Support for tax increases for specific programs drops only modestly among those who feel most taxes are wasted, Gallup pollsters said.

Results, based on a nationwide random sample of 1,001 adults March 1-3, have a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Perry: U.S. risks provocation of war with North Korea over nuclear issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is willing to risk provoking war to stop North Korea's program to develop nuclear weapons, but "we're not on the brink of crisis," Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday.

"We do not want and will not provoke a war over this or any other issue in Korea," Perry said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press." "But we will take a very firm stand and strong actions. It's conceivable where those actions might provoke the North Koreans into unleashing a war, and that is a risk that we're taking."

Perry said the CIA believes that North Korea already has as many as two nuclear bombs and is continuing to develop atomic weapons.

"I know they're lying when they say they're not developing a nuclear program," Perry said. "I do not know they're lying in saying they could very well conceive that having a nuclear-free peninsula would be to their advantage."

The United States and the United Nations have been pressing North Korea to allow international inspectors to examine its nuclear sites. North Korea has given no public indication that it is willing to do so.

In the meantime, the United States and South Korea have postponed deciding on whether to resume joint military exercises — although Perry said both sides were discussing a schedule Sunday.

The Washington Post reported Saturday that North Korea is about six months from doubling its capacity to produce plutonium for atomic weapons.

Homeless man saves people in burning car

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A homeless, unemployed man who was begging for quarters plunged twice into a burning car to rescue the two people trapped inside.

"It wasn't no big deal," Michael Dennis said. "It was just the right thing. I saw two old people burning up. You can't just ignore that."

Dennis was begging Saturday afternoon when a car driven by Margaret Waltzer, 67, struck a truck and a traffic signal pole and caught fire.

Dennis rescued Mrs. Waltzer, then returned to the car to save her 79-year-old husband, Elmo. He said he did not stop to think that he was risking his own life.

"I was worried about their safety," he said. "My grandmother and grandfather died in a car accident. No one was around to help them. I did what I had to do."

The Waltzers were in stable condition at Baptist-Mercy Medical Center.

Dennis said he has been sleeping under overpasses and begging money since he was laid off two years ago by NASA, where he performed general maintenance and operated a forklift.

Worshipers reunite at storm-devastated church

By Dan Sewell
Associated Press

PIEDMONT, Ala. — Thirteen-year-old Marcus Woods fidgeted in his wheelchair and shivered in the predawn chill. He had insisted on attending Easter sunrise service at the church where he lost half his family a week earlier.

"I just wanted to be here," he said softly.

His father, Buddy, and 9-year-old sister, Amy, were among 20 people killed when a tornado leveled the Goshen United Methodist Church during Palm Sunday services last week.

Marcus, who tried to pull his little sister out of the rubble that covered her, suffered a badly bruised right knee. His mother is still hospitalized in intensive care; she suffered a crushed pelvis and broken legs.

As much as a celebration of Jesus Christ's resurrection, Sunday's half-hour service was an emotional reunion of tears and lengthy hugs.

About 200 people attended, sitting on folding chairs in the parking lot of the ruined church.

The Rev. Kelly Clem greeted parishioners, some for the first time since the tornado. Mrs. Clem's dress was dark red, her lace collar white, and her forehead and eyes purple and crimson.

Battered by whirling bricks, the 34-year-old pastor lost her 4-year-old daughter, Hannah, one of six children killed while waiting to participate in an Easter program.

Friends and relatives took turns hugging her and her 2-year-old girl, Sarah.

"There's no place I'd rather be today," Mrs. Clem said.

"We kind of need each other," added her husband, the Rev. Dale Clem.

Mrs. Clem read from the New Testament Book of Romans and chatted over a microphone with small children. She presented the children with wrapped Easter baskets, among the many donations of money, supplies and children's gifts that have streamed in from around the country.

"Do you know how many people love you?" she asked.

"A lot?" suggested one child.

"That's an understatement," Mrs. Clem replied.

The wooden cross behind her pulpit was made last week by a friend she hadn't seen in years, she said, and four new stained glass windows that made a backdrop were sent by a Roman Catholic church. A painting of Jesus, flowers and stacks of cards and letters also have arrived.

"I feel like we're like a symbol of hope right now," Mrs. Clem said afterward. She pledged to rebuild the northeastern Alabama church, the hardest-hit site in the series of tornadoes and storms that killed at least 44 people across the Southeast.

For parishioners, the service was a confrontation with traumatic memories.

"We had a moment when we got out in the parking lot and looked at the church. I guess we had a special cry," said Craig Rhinehart, 22, whose fiancee Denise Parker was on crutches because of a pelvis fracture. Two of Rhinehart's uncles and two cousins were killed by the tornado.

Charles Kuralt retires from CBS News after 37 years

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Charles Kuralt, who led a loyal "Sunday Morning" congregation for 15 years, has stepped down from the pulpit.

The broadcast veteran called it a day at the close of this week's edition of the 90-minute news and features program, which he has anchored since its inception in 1979.

"Time for us to part, you and I," said Kuralt, who only three weeks ago announced his retirement from CBS News after 37 years.

"I aim to do some traveling and reading and writing," he told his audience, "and to watch this program the civilized way for a change — in my bathrobe, while having breakfast."

Displaying modesty that politicians and Oscar winners could learn from, Kuralt kept his signoff to a tight 60 seconds, including the recitation of a poem by Clarence Day that goes, in part: "Farewell, my friends, farewell and hail; I'm off to seek the Holy Grail ... Tiddly-widdly-toodle-oo."

After the final fadeout, Kuralt was met with cheers from 50 current and former colleagues, who had gathered, some with their families, in Studio 42 at CBS' West 57th Street Broadcast Center.

"I was careful not to be at all emotional on the air," Kuralt reported by telephone later from his office. "But when I said 'Goodbye' and the show was off the air and everybody applauded, it did sort of get to me."

At the party, champagne glasses were raised in a toast, and a cake came adorned with a model of the van that Kuralt made famous with the "On the Road" reports that he launched in 1967. Atop the miniature van sat a tiny replica of Kuralt with fishing pole deployed.

The 59-year-old Kuralt's unexpected decision to leave CBS News initially dismayed "Sunday Morning" fans, who feared he might take with him the low-key, contemplative quality that so distinguished the program from most TV fare.

CBS News President Eric Ober pledged otherwise.

"The last thing I want to do is change (the show)," he said last week as he sifted through dozens of possible successors.

Ober must have meant what he said, even sticking with the first name "Charles" when he named Kuralt's replacement late Friday afternoon.

The anchor-elect, Charles Osgood, another longtime CBS News correspondent, appeared briefly Sunday with Kuralt.

New ads urge health reform to cover all care for women

WASHINGTON (AP) — Planned Parenthood begins a $10 million ad campaign Tuesday with a clear message for Congress: Health reform must cover all women's medical needs, including contraception and abortion, or lawmakers will pay at election time.

"For women, reproductive health care is basic health care," said Planned Parenthood President Pamela Maraldo. "Congress must not turn its back on the women of America."

Anti-abortion groups denounced the campaign, and are asking lawmakers to sign pledges to oppose any plan that covers abortion.

"Don't try to make abortion the same medical need as bone marrow transplant or open-heart surgery," said Janet Parshall of the conservative Concerned Women for America.

Planned Parenthood's ads don't directly mention abortion, instead saying that all reproductive health care must be covered under any national health system.

But they are meant to counter anti-abortion efforts, including $1.4 million that the Christian Coalition, a Pat Robertson group, spent in newspaper ads this winter, said spokeswoman Bebe Bahnsen.

And they're meant to help Americans focus on just what will be covered under a new system, a question that got lost in the uproar over how to fund health reform, she said. "If we don't focus now, it could be too late," she said.

The campaign begins Tuesday with a full-page ad in The New York Times in which 19 female members of Congress support full coverage of reproductive care — and warn that 50 percent of voters are women.

"Our daughters and our mothers, our sisters and our nieces have a right to comprehensive reproductive health services," Rep. Maxine Waters, D-Calif., says in the ad.

On Wednesday, television commercials begin in Tennessee, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, New York City and Washington, D.C., featuring local women.

Spring homebuying begins on cautious note

By Vivian Marino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — The markings of spring are here: Temperatures are rising, flowers are blooming, and "open house" signs are popping up in neighborhoods across the country.

It's an annual rite. As the weather gets milder, families make plans to move on.

This spring, homebuying season begins on a cautious note because of rising interest rates, which have hiked the cost of financing a home. But the professionals who make a business out of selling homes insist prospective customers shouldn't be scared away. They argue that rates remain historically low and that home prices are relatively stable through most of the nation.

'It's just a good time to buy. The economy is improving and interest rates are low.'
— Robert Elrod, president, National Association of Realtors.

"It's just a good time to buy. The economy is improving and interest rates are reasonably low," said Robert H. Elrod, president of the National Association of Realtors, a Washington-based trade group.

He said fewer restrictions in federal home mortgage applications also will help buyers.

Elrod said recent rate hikes — initiated by the Federal Reserve Board to keep the economy from overheating and inflation from rising — "will only bring the undecided off the fence who want to buy soon before there's another rate increase."

By the end of March, the 30-year fixed-rate mortgage averaged 7.8 percent, according to a national survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., or Fannie Mae. That's about three-quarters of a percentage point up from the start of the year and more than a point above the 25-year low of 6.74 percent in October, though still well below the double-digit levels of the late 1980s.

One-year adjustable rate mortgages averaged 4.6 percent for the initial year.

"Certainly rates are higher ... but we're also dealing with a very strong economy, more consumer confidence.

Students get creative

■ Collegians are having to dream up new ways to get work as job opportunities continue on the decline.

By Jon Marcus
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — They're graduating seniors, but the students in this Simmons College seminar look as apprehensive as freshmen.

The subject: how to get a job.

"I've gotten three rejection letters already," said Sabrina Greenberg, who is boning up on how to network, dress for interviews and write a cover letter. "Looking in the Sunday paper for a job, you're one in a million."

College and university students like Greenberg, an education major, have been looking for creative ways to draw attention to themselves.

Students in an international business program at the Monterey Institute in California mail their credentials both in English and Chinese to prospective employers. Seniors in an environmental studies program at St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y., wrote their cover letters on one side of a sheet of recycled paper and their resumes on the other, then sent it as a self-mailer to environmentally conscious employers.

"They will almost send you a bushel basket worth of fruit and make it look like a resume," said Roy Chapman, head of college recruiting for J.C. Penney.

Why be creative? "They have to. They don't have a choice," said Dawn Oberman, a statistician for the College Placement Council.

Low-tax funds for college available

By Carole Gould
N.Y. Times News Service

Congress created the 'kiddie tax" in 1986 to stop parents from shifting income to their children solely to reduce taxes. Last year, it bumped up the tax rates on trust income, greatly diminishing the use of another tax-saving tool.

"I used to be a magician," said Edward Mendlowitz, a partner in Mendlowitz Weitsen, a New York accounting firm.

"Years ago, I could save people seven times my fee — no more."

Although the opportunities have been greatly limited, there are still ways to sidestep some taxes while building college funds for children.

John and Sue Ferguson, of St. Louis, have constructed a detailed savings plan for their three daughters, Kelly, Katherine and Courtney.

First, the couple made gifts of income-producing assets to them. Each daughter will pay tax on $1,200 of income a year. When children under 14 have dividends, interest and unearned income exceeding that amount, the excess is taxed at the parents' rate. This is known as the kiddie tax.

But these children pay just $90 on the first $1,200 of income. The first $600 is sheltered by the personal exemption amount, and the next $600 is taxed at the low rate of 15 percent.

Shifting this income saves the Fergusons $385 per child each year. That is the difference between the tax owed on $1,200 at the parents' 39.6 percent rate and the $90 owed by the children, said Anna Polizzi-Keller, the partner at Ernst & Young in St. Louis who devised the plan.

The parents gave the girls stock and stock mutual funds, knowing that taxes on gains can largely be deferred until the shares are sold. The Fergusons also bought tax-free bonds in the girls' names, and Series EE Savings Bonds.

Although income tax is not a concern on these instruments, shifting ownership to the daughters allowed the couple to reduce the size of their estate, and thereby any estate tax should they die. They can give each girl up to $20,000 a year without incurring a gift tax.

Because the kiddie tax stops at age 14, the daughters can sell appreciated assets and reinvest the proceeds in other financial instruments.

Refinancing less attractive with cars

■ Savings don't compare with those receives on home mortgages.

By Pamela Yip
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — We've heard a lot of news about how low interest rates have made it an ideal time to refinance your mortgage.

But what if you're still shouldering a double-digit interest rate on a car loan?

While you can certainly refinance your auto loan at today's rate, the savings don't compare with those you can receive from refinancing a mortgage on your house because a car loan has a much shorter term than a mortgage.

"Auto loans typically are considered not the greatest thing to refinance," says Gail Liberman, an editor at Bank Rate Monitor in North Palm Beach, Fla., a newsletter that tracks consumer interest rates. "It could be a good idea if there is a definite dramatic drop in terms of the rate that you've already contracted for."

Certainly, interest rates on car loans have fallen dramatically since the rate on a four-year new car loan averaged 12.54 percent nationwide in early 1989, says Bob Heady, publisher of Bank Rate Monitor.

The average rate on a four-year new car loan was 7.9 percent nationwide as of the end of March 18, he says.

If the numbers work out, now could be the best time to refinance your car, because rates are going up.

"If they're going to do it, they'd better do it soon or else it's going to be too late," says Dan Hauser, senior vice president of retail sales at Bank One Texas.

Refinancing could save you a lot of money.

For example, let's say you took out a three-year car loan for $10,000 at a 10.5 percent interest rate. The monthly payment would total about $326 and finance charges would be about $1,753 over 36 months, according to NationsBank.

If you refinanced that loan to 7.5 percent, you'd pay about $312 a month and about $1,234 in finance charges over 36 months, a savings of $519 over that period.

But before you try to take the refinancing plunge, consider the value of your car.

"The value of the car is important not only to the consumer but to the lender, because it represents collateral," says Bob New, a regional executive with NationsBank in Houston. The current market value of your machine may be less than you want to borrow.

The best time to refinance is within the first year of buying a car, says Stephanie Hall, manager of the Woodlands

Three years ago, 4.3 percent of job candidates and 5 percent of employees tested positive.

Consultant William M. Mercer Inc., which surveyed 183 companies, says more businesses are using drug tests to screen job applicants.

IRAs still OK

A survey by Prudential Securities finds Individual Retirement Accounts still attract a high percentage of retirement dollars. Seventy percent of the more than 400 investors questioned said they had IRAs.

Two-thirds had more than one account. The interest in IRAs continues even though tax deductions for annual contributions have been significantly curtailed.

They clothe them, feed them, give them a roof over their heads. But should parents also give their kids a weekly allowance?

Ninety percent of parents polled by the Lutheran Brotherhood insurance company think so. Sixty-three percent think grade school children should get $5 or less a week, but most feel that should be raised by the time they reach junior high.

Some 34 percent believe $6 to $10 is fair. Thirty-one percent say high school students should get between $11 and $20.

IRA contributions

Q. I want to make a contribution to my individual retirement account but do not have $2,000 right now. Can I file my return, claim the deduction and contribute the $2,000 to an IRA with my tax re-fund?
— Evelyn Miller, Manhattan

A. Unless you have already filed your return, you probably won't get a refund in time to make this work.

But if you are eligible for a tax deduction for an IRA contribution, you can file your return and take the deduction even if you have not yet set up an account. The money simply must go into the IRA by April 15.

"When you receive your refund, you can use that money, or other money, to fund the IRA," said Julian Block, a tax lawyer in Larchmont, N.Y. "If you obtain an extension until Aug. 15 to file your return, that does not extend the April 15 deadline for contributing to the IRA."

As an alternative, you might consider a short-term loan to obtain funds for your IRA For more information, consult Publication 590, available by calling 800-TAX-FORM or visiting a local office of the Internal Revenue Service.

Protection of CDs

Q. When a person instructs a broker to purchase certificates of deposit at various banks across the country, are each of the bank investments covered to the $100,000 FDIC limit? Where would the SIPC coverage come into play, assuming either a bank failure or brokerage failure?
— Michael C. Lefkowitz, East Meadow, N.Y.

A. The certificates are recorded on the books of the brokerage firm, and the cash is maintained at the bank. Should the bank fail, an investor is protected up to $100,000 per bank by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

"In the event of failure of the brokerage firm, the CD would be considered a security," said Timothy S. Scheve, treasurer of Legg Mason Wood Walker, a securities concern in Baltimore. Brokerage accounts are insured up to $500,000 through the Securities Investor Protection Corp.

Taxes, uncollected fees

Q. Can losses for uncollectible professional fees be deducted from a self-employed consultant's taxes?
— Robert A. Marino, Manhattan

A. Most self-employed people use the cash method to report income and expenses. Under this method, income is reported when money is received, rather than when services are done. Since the uncollected fee was never reported as income, no deduction for losses would be allowable.

"If a self-employed individual happens to use the accrual method of accounting, the income would be reported when the services are performed and the invoice is rendered, regardless of when the money is received," said Robert A. Clarfeld, a partner in Clarfeld & Co., New York accounting concern.

"If a fee is included in income under the accrual method and is subsequently uncollected," he added, "the individual would be entitled to a bad-debt deduction in the year that it was deemed to be uncollectible."

Experts wait to see if higher CD rates bring rollovers

N.Y. Times News Service

With rates paid on bank certificates of deposit creeping higher, holders of close to $100 billion in CDs will have to decide next month whether those rates are high enough to earn their business.

Since Feb. 4, when the Federal Reserve made the first of its two increases in short-term interest rates totaling one-half percentage point, CDs have risen roughly one-tenth of a percentage point, according to Bank Rate Monitor of North Palm Beach, Fla.

For example, as of March 23, the national average for a one-year CD was 3.19 percent, up 0.11 percentage points from Feb. 2. The five-year CD has risen to 4.76 percent from 4.65 percent.

Whether that's enough of an improvement to persuade investors to put their money in CDs remains to be seen, said Hugo Ottolenghi, editorial director of Bank Rate Monitor.

He said the first good look at the answer will come in April, when between $90 billion and $100 billion worth of CDs will mature. April is the year's second-biggest CD rollover month, behind only October.

"These aren't earth-shattering moves," Ottolenghi said of the recent CD rate increases. "The biggest determinant is what happens to the stock market. If it takes a downturn and CD rates are going up, the money will go to CDs."

Investors already have gotten nervous about the stock market's seesaw performance this year.

Since Jan. 1 investors have withdrawn $14 billion worth of CDs from U.S. banks, more than 40 percent less than the $24 billion they withdrew in the same period in 1993, according to Money magazine. Mutual funds investing in stocks have been the principal beneficiaries of those ex-CD dollars.

Just how good today's CD rates look also depends on one's perspective. The one-year CD pays more than it did a year ago, but a five-year CD pays about half what it paid five years ago.

So where should you put your money?

The answer depends on your outlook for inflation and how much risk you can live with.

'If (the stock market) takes a downturn and CD rates are going up, the money will go to CDs.'

Hugo Ottolenghi,
Editorial Director, Bank Rate Monitor

Observers say they expect CD rates to continue to climb. One common prediction calls for CD rates to climb by roughly one-half percentage point by the end of the year, slowly matching up the Fed's increase earlier.

Bruce Wertz, a financial planner in the Fort Worth suburb of Hurst, said he expects some risk-averse savers, finally driven out of CDs by their low yields but now spooked by the stock market's gyrations, to jump back into CDs fairly quickly. But that's not necessarily what he would recommend.

"A downturn after the Fed raises rates is to be expected, as is an upturn in stock prices six to 12 months later," Wertz said. "Don't just go and bail out of the market and go into CDs to cut your losses," he said, because at today's still-low rates "it will take a couple of years to make up those losses."

Likewise, if inflation is indeed heating up, as Wertz believes it is, locking up your money in a five-year CD is not a good idea.

"Don't go into anything longer than six months to one year if you believe interest rates are going higher," Wertz said.

Some banks try to let you have your cake and eat it, too.

For example, Texas Commerce Bank currently is promoting a one-year CD that allows preferred customers a one-time opportunity to receive a higher rate if the market goes higher.

"Obviously, interest rates are edging up. We're trying to keep our deposits," said Elaine Agather, chairman of Texas Commerce Bank-Fort Worth.

Wertz sees mutual funds that invest in adjustable-rate, government-backed mortgages as another low-risk alternative. Investors who can tolerate more risk might also look at assets, such as real estate and petroleum, that appreciate in times of inflation, he said.

"If rates go high enough I'd recommend (U.S.) Treasuries," he said.

Long-term rates generally move faster than short-term rates because investors want to be compensated for future inflation before they commit money for up to 30 years. Mortgage rates also have moved higher, from an average 6.83 percent on Feb. 2 to 7.67 percent last week, according to Bank Rate Monitor.

Clearly, CD rates have not only lagged far behind the gains in those long-term rates, they have also lagged behind even the one-half percentage point rise in the important federal funds rate, the rate banks charge each other for loans. Why?

The banks "have been making money as interest rates came down and they don't want to give it back," Ottolenghi said. "And because the loan demand is soft, banks don't want to raise their prime rates," he said. Because the interest paid on bank CD's represents a bank's cost of money that it then loans out, "I think we'll see very slow movement in CD rates," he said.

Philip Norwood, president of Summit Bancshares in Fort Worth, said most Texas banks have lent out only about 50 percent of their deposits. Banks have little incentive to pay depositors more for their money if the chances of lending it out are so limited, he said.

But CD rates will rise eventually, he predicted.

Q: The Series EE U.S. savings bonds I bought in February 1992 accumulate interest at 6 percent annually. I have a new grandson and would like to give some of those bonds to him.

But I was told by an employee of a local bank that I would have to cash the bonds and use the proceeds to buy new bonds in my grandson's name.

If I do that, it seems to me that the guaranteed interest rate would drop to the 4 percent on EEs issued since March 1, 1993. I definitely do not want that to happen.

Please advise.

A: The bank employee is only partly right and put mouth in motion before putting brain completely in gear.

Ownership of U.S. savings bonds cannot be transferred from one living person to another without paying federal income tax on all the interest accrued on the bonds up to the date of the transfer.

But do not despair. You can have the 6 percent bonds reissued in co-ownership form -- in your name "or" the wee wane's name. Then, he will own them just as much as you do. That is accomplished by sending the bonds and Form PD F 4000 to the district Federal Reserve Bank serving your area of the country.

Either co-owner can cash the bonds. And when one co-owner dies, the survivor becomes sole owner.

If you have left this mortal life when the bonds are redeemed, your grandson will have to pay income tax on the accrued interest.

If your grandson cashes the bonds while you are still breathing Earth's air, you -- the co-owner who bought the bonds with your money -- are supposed to pay that tax. That applies even though he would receive a Form 1099-INT listing the amount of interest.

The complicated rules are spelled out in IRS Publication 17, "Your Income Tax."

Q: I have many EE bonds, all in my name alone. I would hate to cash them now and pay the government a lot of income tax on the interest. But I am getting up in years and am afraid the bonds will die a natural death when I do.

Is there any way my children can inherit my bonds?

A: Of course. U.S. savings bonds and other securities do not expire when their owners do.

You can leave the bonds to your offspring in your will. Even if you die "intestate" -- without a will -- your heirs will get what you leave behind.

Alternatively, as mentioned above, you can have the bonds reissued in co-ownership form or in beneficiary form -- in your name, "payable on death" to your children. Form PD F is used for both.

Your local bank should be able to supply copies of that form, then send it and the bonds to the Fed.

Q: Our EE bonds are in my name "or" my spouse's name. We have three adult children.

What steps should we take to ensure that, assuming our deaths precede theirs, any one of them will be able to redeem the bonds?

A: The only way you can set it up that way would be to leave the bonds in your wills and name the three children coexecutors.

Here's a simpler solution: Divide the bonds into three equal parts. Have each third reissued with one of your children as co-owner or beneficiary.

Q: Can I have a U.S. savings bond in co-ownership with a minor, or must I title the bond in an adult's name, "in trust for" the minor?

A: A youngster can be a savings bond owner or co-owner. There is no age restriction.

CREATIVE: Job hunters use imagination

(From 1B)

Eight out of 10 graduates take from one to six months to find a job, according to the placement council. The Bureau of Labor Statistics says 20 percent of college graduates are toiling in positions that require no college education.

"The whole business of getting a job out of college is a lot tougher than it used to be," Oberman said.

And things aren't likely to get better soon.

"It might get a little more competitive, if anything," said Dan Hecker, am economist at the Bureau of Labor Statistics. "There will continue to be people with college degrees doing word processing or driving vehicles or working in retail stores."

So this year's graduates are striving for new ways of getting their resumes to the top of the pile.

"If you want to find a job, you can find something," said Chris MacGill, director of career development at Lycoming College in Williamsport, Pa. "Sometimes it means being a little creative."

Lycoming offers a seminar called "Wine, Dine and Act Fine," to teach students how to dress and even how to eat in front of a recruiter.

"We may assume that everybody just obviously knows this," said MacGill. "But some of the real basic things are what nobody has told them about, all the way down to which fork you pick up first at the interview luncheon."

The "final exam" in the noncredit course is a formal dinner with Lycoming's president and deans playing the parts of company recruiters.

Lee Costic, a student at James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Va., sent out animated video resumes titled "Don't Make Lee Costic Move Back Home With His Parents." A sequel, "Don't Make Lee Costic Work in a Department Store," landed him a video graphics job.

"I figured it would be a unique way to get some peoples' attention," Costic said.

Christine Lukasik, who graduated last year from the Kent State University College of Business, walked into a business seminar in Cleveland and handed out 300 copies of her resume. So impressed was the speaker that he read the resume out loud. Lukasik got five job offers.

"I don't think I should be grouped in with the rest of the masses sending out resumes, so I wanted to do something innovative," she said.

Some placement officials tell students who want to get a foot in the door to consider working for a temporary agency or nonprofit organization, or volunteering; or to suggest to potential employers that they are willing to cover the cost of traveling to the employer's office for an interview.

But students, who have to repay college loans and are concerned about health benefits, resist the idea of working for free.

"I've been doing that too much already," said Janel Clague, a Simmons senior who has held four internships. "I want a job that pays."

The tight job situation also can encourage cheating, according to a study that found students stretched the truth to interviewers or backed out after accepting a job.

"The majority of them were ranking certain things as appropriate that we thought were not," said Margie Bogenschutz, director of undergraduate career services at Ohio State University's College of Business and co-author of the study.

Two-thirds of the students surveyed said it was OK to renege after accepting a job offer, or to interview with a recruiter even if they had no interest in the job. A third said it was acceptable to stretch the truth when dealing with a prospective employer.

HOMES: Experts watch buying trends

(From 1B)

One offsets the other," said John Tuccillo, the Realtors' chief economist.

Robert Van Order, Freddie Mac's chief economist, agreed: "I think the strength of the economy will be more important than the rise in interest rates."

"If you think of housing as an investment, then one of the things people care about is not just the borrowing rate; it's how much their homes are going to appreciate. The same thing that makes interest rates go up will make housing look good."

Most economists say the economy will continue to grow at a moderate pace in 1994, while inflation remains low. While many believe rates will rise some more this summer, they predict rates should end the year at around the same level as they began.

The Realtors group predicts an increase in home sales in 1994, forecasting 3.94 million exisiting single-family homes and 734,000 new homes will be sold. Last year, 3.79 million existing and 669,000 new homes were sold.

Industry professionals already are reporting healthy business. "Realtors are telling us they are seeing many more people at open houses," said Gregory Samp, president and chief operating officer for Sibley Corp. in Rochester, N.Y., which does business in upstate New York, Connecticut, Ohio and Kentucky.

Samp says he expects the majority of the mortgage activity this year to center on purchases as opposed to refinancings.

Home prices, meanwhile, are expected to increase around 3.5 percent over last year, with the median price of a previously owned home at $110,400 and a new home $129,600, the Realtors group has predicted.

Parts of the country, such as the Midwest and Rocky Mountain region, are seeing price increases in the neighborhood of 5 percent to 7 percent, while others, like California, are seeing prices unchanged or slightly lower.

In the view of the Realtors group, the conditions that have made home-buying more affordable still prevail.

CARS: Refinancing doesn't always pay

(From 1B)

branch of First Interstate Bank.

"If it's over a year old, we start looking at the value of the car," she says. "You're not going to lend more money than the car is worth."

This one-year rule of thumb is enough to convince a lot of people that refinancing isn't worth the effort.

"New-car rates over the past year have been lower than used-car rates," New said. "People who have bought cars within the last year and a half who paid the lowest rates on the street probably would not be a good candidate for refinance. The question people must ask themselves is, did I really get the best rate when I got the automobile?"

Getting a great interest rate on even a late-model car is tough because a car's value skids as soon as you drive it off the dealer's lot.

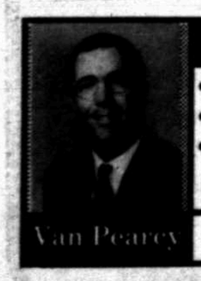

"You lose anywhere from 10 to 20 percent of a car's value the minute you drive off the lot," says Alan Helfman, general manager at River Oaks Chrysler Plymouth Jeep Eagle in Houston.

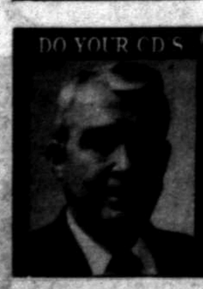

At that moment, your brand-new car instantly becomes a used car.

"When you title a car, you consider it a used automobile," Helfman said. "Somebody's used it. You start racking up miles on that car, the value starts going down."

The rate of decline in value depends on the whims of the used-car market.

An older car typically means a higher rate on refinancing. "There is the assumption (by the lender) that you have a little bit higher risk and a lower loan amount," New says. "The loan balance is smaller, so (but) you have the same administrative costs of doing a smaller loan as you would to do a large loan. Your profit margin is smaller, so you make that up a little bit on the rate."

POLICE REPORTS

Stabbing

A Midland man's condition was unknown Sunday after he suffered multiple stabs wounds to the torso Saturday evening.

Leslie Taylor was taken to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Saturday after he was stabbed at 815 Devonian Ave. about 6 p.m. He was in serious condition Saturday, but family members requested his condition not be given to the media on Sunday, according to hospital officials.

According to a police report, a white male went to Taylor's residence to discuss a prior incident and was asked to leave. The male left, but returned about 10 minutes later and made threats to Taylor. The man was asked to leave again and as Taylor escorted him to the door, the man stabbed Taylor, the report stated.

Fire at haunted house injures nine people

EL PASO (AP) — A fire gutted an amusement park's haunted house ride Sunday, seriously burning four passengers aboard two cars, including a mother and her 12-year-old daughter, officials said.

Nine people, including a firefighter, were injured in the blaze that closed Western Playland, El Paso's only amusement park, shortly after the 4 p.m. MDT fire in the Gold Nugget haunted house ride.

The cause of the blaze is under investigation, said Raul Tarango, administrative chief of the El Paso Fire Department. Park officials did not immediately return a phone call Sunday by The Associated Press.

The mother and a boy were taken to Thomason Hospital for treatment of first- and second-degree burns, officials said.

Her daughter and a 15-year-old boy were in stable condition with second-degree burns at Columbia Medical Center-West, said spokeswoman Arlene Ormsby hospital.

One victim at Thomason was in stable condition and the other was in guarded condition Sunday night, and both could be transferred to Columbia's burn unit, said nursing supervisor Lela Owens.

Two more victims were treated at Columbia Medical Center-East. A 20-year-old woman was released after being treated for unknown minor injuries, and a 20-year-old man suffering from smoke inhalation was in stable condition but expected to be released, officials said. Another two were treated at the scene for smoke inhalation.

A firefighter was treated at the scene for burns to the chest he received while battling the blaze, fire officials said.

"The employee (at the ride) said that when the smoke detector went off, there was one car inside and one just coming out," Western Playland general manager Patrick Thomson told the El Paso Times.

Thomson also said passengers on a sky ride that passes about 10 feet in front of the haunted house and 30 feet over it were frightened by the flames that destroyed the building.

"Some of them were yelling," he said. "Some of them wanted to jump."

No other buildings were damaged in the two-alarm blaze, which took 35 firefighters about 30 or 45 minutes to extinguish, Tarango said.

Convicted killer's execution set for early today

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A convicted killer who shunned efforts to halt his execution and said Easter would be great as the final day of his life was scheduled for lethal injection early today.

Richard Lee Beavers was condemned for the August 1986 abduction and killing of Douglas Odle, a 24-year-old Houston restaurant manager. He would be the second death-row inmate in Texas to be put to death in a week.

Beavers, 38, told a Houston judge he wanted go ahead with his execution and asked attorneys opposed to the death penalty to stay away.

"I just don't want lawyers going in there lying on my behalf," he said. "That's why I made my own motions to make myself known what my wishes are."

Despite his resistance, the Texas Resource Center, which arranges legal help for condemned inmates, asked the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals to halt Beavers' execution last week. The court refused.

Sunday night, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to halt the execution, denying a stay request by the center and dismissing an accompanying petition.

Center lawyers last September won a reprieve for Beavers just hours before he was to die when he was persuaded to change his mind about dropping appeals.

Beavers' desire is not unprecedented. At least seven of the 73 Texas inmates executed since the state resumed the death penalty in 1982 have ordered appeals stopped and volunteered to die.

Odle's mother, Sharron Odle, last week said the pending execution was "not really closing anything for me."

"I think it's awful somebody has to be put to death, but they sure didn't think about what they were doing, shattering other lives," Mrs. Odle said.

Douglas Odle and his wife let Beavers, a sixth-grade dropout from Alexandria, Va., into their Houston apartment on Aug. 18, 1986, to use the telephone.

Government spends $200 more per person in 1993

WASHINGTON (AP) — Uncle Sam spent an average of $4,599 for every American last year, handing out money for grants and benefits, to buy goods and services and to pay government salaries.

That was up more than $200 per person from the year before.

Overall, the federal government spent $1.25 trillion last fiscal year, according to new Census Bureau reports on federal spending. Entitlement programs and grants for Medicaid, family support payments and housing accounted for 60 percent of domestic spending, said U.S. Census analyst Robert McArthur.

Grants, benefits and subsidies were up 7.6 percent to $892.6 billion, while purchasing rose 1 percent to $201.4 billion. Pay for federal workers rose 2.8 percent to $166.2 billion.

Alaska, where military salaries give the economy a big boost, remained the top recipient of federal dollars, receiving $7,697 per resident in 1993, according to the reports.

Nine of the top 10 states, and all of the bottom 10, were unchanged from 1992, which surprised McArthur. He pointed to population migrations to the South and West, decreasing military spending and a more emphasis on social programs.

Nonetheless, "nothing just shook loose and moved from one region to another," he said.

Second in spending per resident was New Mexico at $6,929, up one spot from 1992 thanks to Department of Energy procurement in the state.

Virginia, home to major naval facilities as well as federal agencies in the Washington suburbs, climbed from fourth to third, receiving $6,824 per resident last year.

Maryland, No. 2 in 1992, dropped to fourth with federal spending of $6,803 per person in 1993. Hawaii was next, at $6,017.

Rounding out the top 10 were North Dakota, Massachusetts, Missouri, Maine and Rhode Island. Missouri was a newcomer, up from 11th place, while Mississippi dropped out of the top 10.

The bottom 10, same as 1992, were: Illinois, Delaware, Vermont, Utah, Minnesota, North Carolina, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin and New Hampshire.

Not ranked was the District of Columbia, home of the federal government, where federal spending averaged $35,034 per person.

Other findings in the three-volume federal spending studies:

- The Department of Health and Human Services spent the most on federal grants — $23.7 billion — followed by $22.2 billion from the Transportation Department.
- The Postal Service had the biggest federal payroll at $39.9 billion, although it is self-supporting and doesn't receive tax money.

Former secretary of state ponders bid for White House

HOUSTON (AP) — James Baker isn't ready to declare his bid for the 1996 Republican presidential nomination, but the former White House chief of staff says he is definitely "thinking long and hard about it."

The lawyer, financier and diplomat who served in key positions in the Ford, Reagan and Bush administrations has been widely touted for the job he spent nearly 20 years helping others win.

"While I haven't decided I'm going to run, I haven't decided I'm not going to run," Baker told The Houston Post for Sunday editions. "I have to decide if that's what I want to do with a good portion of the rest of my life."

Baker, who turns 64 this month, spent a year "laying low" after moving back to his native Houston from Washington. Just recently he has begun to criticize President Clinton, and not just on foreign policy, but also on crime, health care and the economy.

He also has started making rounds of the country, helping "our good Republican candidates" raise money and support and possibly amassing some political chits of his own.

Perhaps most telling was Baker's response when asked about his relationship with Texas Sen. Phil Gramm, a likely Republican candidate in 1996.

"I've always gotten along very well with the senator," Baker told The Post. "And — well, let me just leave it this way — I don't anticipate that that's going to change for the balance of this year."

Unlike Gramm or Sen. Bob Dole, Baker has no national political organization or campaign funds ready, and his only run for public office was an unsuccessful bid for Texas attorney general in 1978.

But Baker, who managed campaigns for Ford and Bush and served in cabinet positions and as chief of staff for Reagan and Bush, believes he would be well-prepared for the run. He said he's "thinking long and hard about it."

"I'll tell you this: I know what's involved," Baker said. "I know better than most what's involved."

The Midland High soccer teams will face Tyler Lee Friday at 5:30 p.m. in the Class 5A state semifinals at Pflugerville High School.

Midland High (21-1) advanced to the semifinals after defeating Arlington Martin 1-0 on a goal by Tyler Krueger with 11:11 remaining in the game Saturday in Bedford. Tyler Lee (18-2-2) advanced to the final four with a shootout win over Tyler John Tyler Saturday.

The winner will face either Klein (25-0) or New Braunfels (18-3-4) Saturday at 2:30 p.m.

Dodger blues

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Darryl Strawberry, whose disappearance prompted an all-day search by the Los Angeles Dodgers, was located by the team Sunday night.

The Dodgers said he was safe and with his family, but did not offer further details. The team, however, was not happy with his reason for leaving.

"I have spoken to Darryl and he is with his family," general manager Fred Claire said in a statement. "I am not satisfied with the explanation he has given me for his failure to report for the game today."

Claire said he will speak to Strawberry on Monday about the incident and to determine the "appropriate disciplinary action."

McDonald's game

NEW YORK — Felipe Lopez, the nation's top high school player and headed for St. John's, scored 24 points Sunday to lead the East to a 112-110 victory over the West in the McDonald's All-American game.

Jerod Ward led the West with 23 points and nine rebounds. Former Abilene Cooper center Andrae Patterson, who will attend Indiana next season, added nine points and seven rebounds for the West.

Tar Heels sink Lady Techsters

■ Charlotte Smith buzzer-beater gives women's national title to North Carolina.

By Chuck Schoffner
AP Sports Writer

RICHMOND, Va. — North Carolina has won another national basketball championship. Only this time, Dean Smith wasn't involved.

This one belongs to the Tar Heel women, and they won it in dramatic fashion.

Charlotte Smith swished a 3-point shot at the buzzer to give North Carolina a 60-59 victory over Louisiana Tech on Sunday and its first NCAA women's championship.

■ Women's Final

With the Carolina men eliminated in the second round of the NCAA tournament, it was up to the women to carry the Tar Heel banner and they did it well, although they had to take their title drive to the last tick of the clock. Only seven-tenths of a second remained when North Carolina inbound under their own basket for the winning shot, which denied Tech a third national title.

Tech, which had led by five points with less than four minutes to play, took a 59-57 lead on Pam Thomas' 19-foot jump shot against a double team in the right corner with 15.5 seconds left.

North Carolina's Tonya Sampson then missed badly on a leaner and a jump ball resulted from the ensuing scramble. The possession arrow was pointing to the Tar Heels and they got the ball under their basket, but had less than a second to score. They somehow pulled it off.

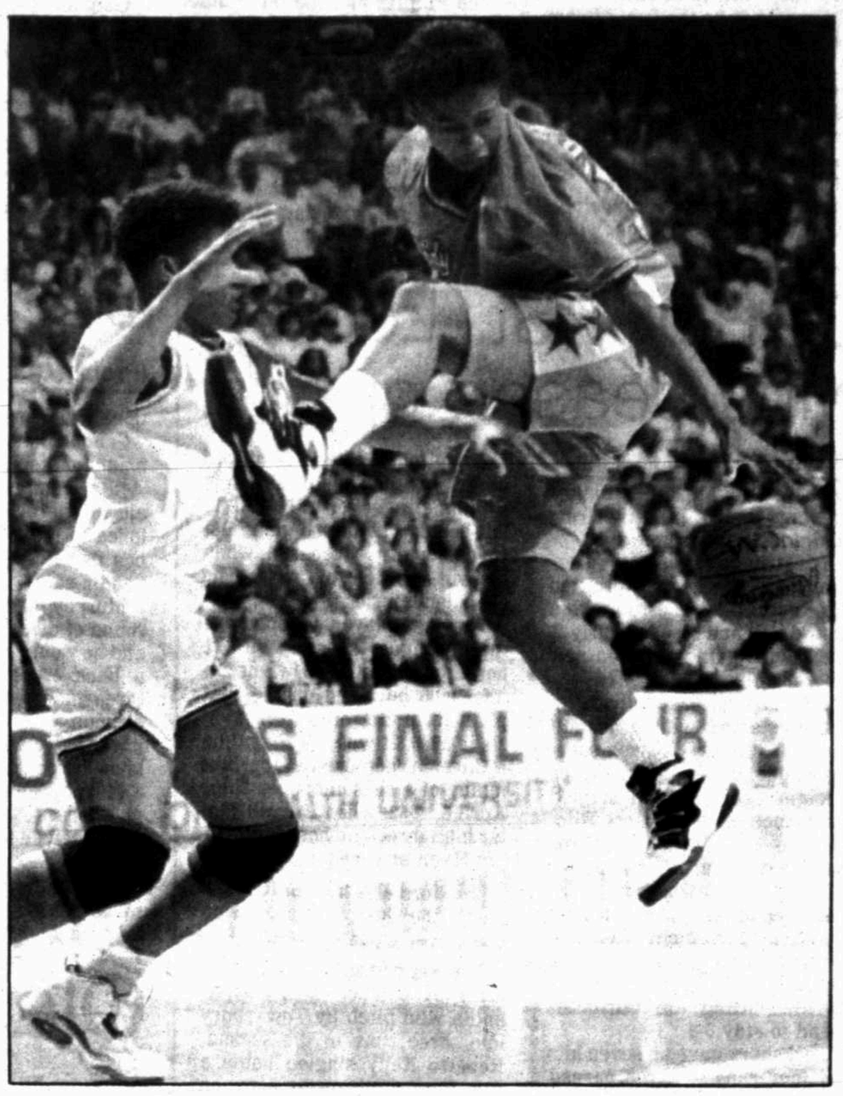

Stephanie Lawrence first tried to hit Sampson flashing across the lane, but she was covered. Lawrence then found Smith on the right wing and the 6-foot junior, a 27 percent shooter from 3-point range, buried the shot. Immediately, she was buried herself under a crush of jubliant teammates.

Smith finished with 20 points and grabbed 23 rebounds to set a championship game record, breaking the old mark of 20 by Tracy Claxton of Old Dominion against Georgia in 1985. Smith was named the outstanding player in the Final Four.

Sampson led Carolina (33-2) with 21 points, 17 in the first half, and Sylvia Crawley added 14. Thomas' 14 points led Tech (31-4), which saw a 25-game winning streak end.

The women's championship game is played only 24 hours after semifinals and fatigue showed in both teams early. After 7½ minutes, Tech was 2-for-14 from the field, North Carolina 1-for-11 and Tech led 8-6.

The foul troubles of the point guards — Marion Jones for North Carolina and Thomas for Tech — compounded the early woes.

Hogs, Devils pit different styles for title

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Duke and Arkansas have so little in common that it should make for a great NCAA championship game.

The Blue Devils are going for their third national title in four years with a team dominated by seniors who got them to Monday night's championship game with a great second half against Florida.

Arkansas is looking for its first national championship, and the Razorbacks go after it with no seniors in the nine-man rotation which wore down Arizona in the semifinals.

Duke is known for its crazy fans, Arkansas for a pretty powerful head cheerleader from Washington, D.C.

Blue Devils coach Mike Krzyzewski is one title away from tying Bob Knight with three championships, behind only John Wooden's 10 and Adolph Rupp's four.

Razorbacks coach Nolan Richardson is one win away from being able to silence the critics he openly confronts.

Neither team was ranked below sixth all season and both were No. 1; Duke for one week, Arkansas for a national-best nine.

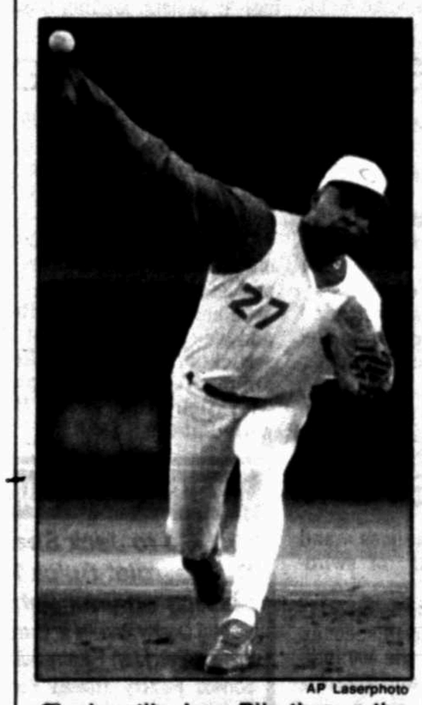

It will all come down to matchups.

CINCINNATI — Ray Lankford opened baseball's new era with a home run — not that too many people were there to see it.

Marge Schott treated the first-ever night game to start a season like an exhibition. Her team played it that way, too.

Bob Tewksbury pitched six innings and doubled home the go-ahead runs as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the bumbling Cincinnati Reds 6-4.

The game launched a season of realigned divisions, a new playoff format and a new television contract featuring the ESPN Sunday night opener. It also replayed an old theme — controversy caused by the Reds' owner.

Unhappy that the city couldn't put together a pre-game parade, Schott snubbed the opener. There was none of the usual opening day window dressing — no bunting, no fanfare. Her attitude rubbed off on the fans: only 32,803 turned out on a

Barry Bonds and Greg Maddux begin their bids for more awards, the Cleveland Indians open their new park and the Colorado Rockies start to close out their old one Monday on the first full day of the 1994 season.

The two-time World Series champion Toronto Blue Jays and the Chicago White Sox, who will not get to defend their AL West title because they're now in the AL Central, meet at SkyDome. The Blue Jays are trying to become the first team since the 1972-73-74 Oakland A's to win three straight titles. To reach the postseason, all they'll need is the league's top second-place finish to win the wild card.

Nancy Kerrigan will throw out the first ball in Boston when Roger Clemens and the Red Sox face Detroit and its major league-high 15 millionaires, and Joe DiMaggio was to make the ceremonial pitch at Yankee Stadium when New York takes on Texas, minus retired Nolan Ryan.

Bonds, trying to win an unprecedented third straight MVP award — and fourth overall — will lead San Francisco against visiting Pittsburgh and Zane Smith, a three-game winner last season. Maddux, hoping to win a record third straight Cy Young Award, will pitch for the Atlanta Braves in San Diego, where a half-full stadium of 30,000 is expected to watch the depleted Padres.

Pitching in Cleveland will be President Clinton, who spent opening day last year in Baltimore. He'll be on hand when the Indians, now with Dennis Martinez, Jack Morris and Eddie Murray, play their first game at Jacobs Field against Randy Johnson and the Seattle Mariners.

Cajun consistency gives divers ticket to nationals

Amid solid competition, the winners of the men's and women's 10-meter platform diving used unshaking calm and consistency to plug away at the rest of the field and earn titles in the Texas Commerce Bank Zone C Diving Championships Sunday at the Mabee Memorial Aquatic Center.

Guy Sandin for the men and Kelley Redwine for the women, both of Louisiana State diving in Baton Rouge, used a consistently strong program to outshine some spectacular individual dives from the field. Sandin had a strong final dive, however, to score 460.17 to nip P.J. Murphy with a 457.89. Redwine qualified in her third event with a score of 359.73 over the University of Texas' Robin Carter 349.14.

For Sandin, the victory was particularly sweet after he missed making the top four in the 1-meter and 3-meter events and qualifying to the U.S. Na-

Crenshaw puts gentle touch to New Orleans course for victory

By Mary Foster
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS — Ben Crenshaw, his putting touch especially sharp, shot his third straight round of 68 Sunday to win the Freeport-McMoRan Golf Classic by three strokes.

Crenshaw

"I was really proud of the way I played this week on this course," said Crenshaw, who finished with a total of 15-under-par of 273. "I was really glad to get through today."

The victory, the 18th in his 22-year career, earned Crenshaw $216,000. His last three top 10 finishes have been victories.

Jose Maria Olazabal, with birdies on three of the last four holes, sneaked into second place after Sam Torrance, who battled Crenshaw all day, bogeyed No. 17 and double-bogeyed No. 18.

"That was a killer," Torrance said. "I still felt I had it going into 16."

Crenshaw and Torrance started the day at 11-under. Crenshaw, despite swirling winds, opened his round with birdies on Nos. 1, 2 and 5 to make the turn at 14-under.

On the 10th hole, a 420-yard, par-4, Crenshaw hit into the water for a double-bogey, dropping him back to 12-under — tied again with Torrance.

"I hit a three-iron and hit it fat into the wind and in the water," Crenshaw said. "That was terribly upsetting. It preyed on me (on) the whole back nine."

But Crenshaw came back quickly, getting birdies on Nos. 11, 13, and 14 — where he putted in 25 feet from the fringe to go 15-under.

Torrance had only one birdie on the front nine, putting him at 12-under, two behind Crenshaw. He birdied 11 to tie Crenshaw at 13-under, but on 14, his putt stopped inches from the hole for a bogey, dropping him three strokes back.

While Crenshaw played steady pars on the last four holes, Torrance

BASEBALL: Dignitaries throw out first ball

(From 1C)

"It's an honor to be the opening day pitcher for any club. I'm happy it's me," Martinez said.

"It's great to be the first pitcher in a new park. You get to make history," he said.

Meanwhile, Hillary Rodham Clinton will be at Wrigley Field to throw out the first ball when her favorite Chicago Cubs open against the New York Mets.

The NL champion Philadelphia Phillies will be in Colorado, where the Rockies start their second and last season at Mile High Stadium. Next year, they'll move to Coors Field.

The Phillies and the three other 1993 division champions all begin the year missing key players. Philadelphia will start without first baseman John Kruk, being treated for testicular cancer; the White Sox are without reliever Scott Radinsky, who has Hodgkin's disease; Toronto is without closer Duane Ward, who has bicep tendinitis; and Atlanta does not have left fielder Ron Gant, who broke his leg during the winter and was released.

Gant and George Bell are among two of the big-name players who begin the 1994 season without a team. Michael Jordan, the big story in spring training, didn't make the White Sox, but will begin his pro career on Friday night for Double-A Birmingham.

Martinez, a free agent who went from Montreal to Cleveland and Mitch Williams, traded from Philadelphia to Houston, are among the top players now with new teams. Rafael Palmeiro, Will Clark and Julio Franco are others.

Baltimore, which spent $42.85 million for free agents such as Palmeiro, Chris Sabo, Lee Smith and Sid Fernandez, will be at home against Kansas City, starting its first season since 1973 without George Brett.

Williams, who threw the final pitch of the 1993 season — hit by Joe Carter for a three-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning in Game 6 of the World Series — will be with the Houston Astros, now wearing new uniforms, at home against the hot, young Montreal Expos. Carter, by the way, intends to play despite breaking his thumb when he was recently hit by a pitch.

Monday is the 20th anniversary of Hank Aaron's 714th home run, which came in Cincinnati against Jack Billingham and tied Babe Ruth's career mark. The Reds will be at home against St. Louis in Monday's other game — which Cincinnati owner Marge Schott is promoting as her team's real opener.

On Tuesday, Florida is at Los Angeles, Oakland is at Milwaukee and California is at Minnesota as everyone else begins play in baseball's 125th season, being commemorated by arm patches on players' uniforms.

39-degree night, the smallest opening crowd in Riverfront Stadium's 24-year history.

Her attitude rubbed off on her team, too. The Reds committed three errors, let in a run with a passed ball and blew an early 3-1 lead in a game between new NL Central rivals.

Lankford got baseball's 125th season started with a leadoff homer — the first season-opening homer in the major leagues in eight years — and singled home another run off Jose Rijo, who has lost two of his three opening day starts.

But it was Tewksbury, a career .147 hitter, who provided the defining moment. He lined the first pitch from Rijo for a two-out, two-run double in the fourth, putting the Cardinals ahead to stay 5-3.

Tewksbury gave up seven hits and four runs — three earned — over six innings. Vicente Palacios struck out Reggie Sanders to end a bases-loaded threat in the seventh, and Mike Perez pitched the ninth for a save.

So much was new on this night.

It was the first game between members of the NL Central, created under an offseason realignment. Len Coleman threw out the first pitch, his first official act as NL president.

Six pitches later, Lankford added another historical note by homering over the wall in left-center. Lankford had just seven homers last season, when he was limited by wrist and shoulder injuries.

The last player to open the major-league season with a homer was Boston's Dwight Evans, who homered on the first pitch from Detroit's Jack Morris in 1986. It was the first time a Cardinal homered in the first inning of a season opener since April 6, 1982, when Darrell Porter hit a three-run homer off Nolan Ryan at Houston.

Lankford also had an RBI single in the third and scored on Joe Oliver's passed ball.

The Reds turned four hits, an error by catcher Erik Pappas and a wild pitch by Tewksbury into three runs in the second. Roberto Kelly singled home a run, Pappas' throwing error on a steal by Kelly let in another, and Oliver had an RBI single.

Tewksbury, who drove in five runs last season and led the Cardinals with 14 hits, provided the decisive one in the fifth. With runners on second and third and two out, Rijo threw Tewksbury a first-pitch fastball. The pitcher lined it to left-center, over the head of a drawn-in Kelly in center.

tionals in Minneapolis.

Sandin finished fifth in the 1-meter by two points and sixth in the 3-meter by 13 points.

"I've competed at the last four senior nationals in one event or another so I would have loved to make it in one or both of the springboards but it will be fine to go in the platform," Sandin said.

Murphy had the lead going into the final round of dives but Sandin was in good position and he would be the last to dive. Murphy chose a back two-and-one-half somersault with a three-and-one-half twist with a 3.2 degree of difficulty. Sandin chose the somewhat easier inward two-and-a-half somersault, a dive he knew he could hit, he said.

Murphy scored mostly 5.5's and 5.0's on his dive for a total of 81.6. Sandin nailed his dive and received 93.8, just enough to put him over the top.

"I definitely wish I could be this consistent more often," Sandin said. "I wasn't able to train well for the last couple of months because my coach was going out of town for meets. The last couple of weeks I really got after it and it helped, but it hurt in the springboard."

Also qualifying to nationals in their first event were Paco Rivera of The Woodlands and Sam Arieff of UT, who finished third and fourth.

In the women's division, Redwine showed her all-around talent by qualifying in all three events. She finished fourth in the 1-meter and second in the 3-meter. Redwine, who is a 19-year-old sophomore, said her motto was just to have fun. She had a party Sunday.

Redwine had only one dive on which she failed to score at least a 6.0 from each judge and the lowest and highest scores are thrown out to determine the final score.

"I try to stay consistent and try not to go for too much on one dive," Redwine said. "This is just a qualifying meet and if you're consistent, you'll qualify. The most important thing is to have fun. If you miss one dive, don't get down because chances are, everyone else will probably miss at least one dive."

Some of the more spectacular single dive performances came from the women's competition. Carter, the NCAA national champion in the 3-meter event in 1994, nailed a beautiful, no-splash backwards two-and-one-half somersault which the judges rewarded with six 8's. Then Lara Jacobson, of Texas Diving, reeled off three straight rip dives which drew a loud response from the small crowd to finish the competition in fourth with 343.65.

Jacobson got three 9.5's and three 9's on one dive and scored 8's and 7's on her next two. Megan McDowell of UT, finished third with a score of 346.92.

Here are results Sunday of the Texas Commerce Bank Zone C Diving Championships at the City of Midland Aquatic Center:

Men's 10-meter platform: 1. Guy Sandin, Louisiana State Diving, Baton Rouge, La., 460.17; 2. P.J. Murphy, unattached, 457.89; 3. Paco Rivera, The Woodlands, 413.01; 4. Sam Arieff, University of Texas, 406.89; 5. Mark Naftanel, Texas Diving, Austin, 385.53.

Women's 10-meter platform: 1. Kelley Redwine, LSU, 359.73; 2. Robin Carter, UT, 349.14; 3. Megan McDowell, UT, 346.92; 4. Lara Jacobson, Texas Diving, 343.65; 5. Ashley Culpepper, Texas Diving, 335.13; 6. Kerrie Presgrove, The Woodlands, 314.26; 7. Heather Lawrence, Emerald Diving, Issaquah, Wash., 286.66; 8. Keely Cassano, LSU, 262.80; 9. Kelly Crowell, Mustang Diving, Fort Worth, 246.54.

Olajuwon, Rockets sweep Clippers

■ Houston stays within a half game of Midwest leading San Antonio with win.

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Hakeem Olajuwon had 39 points and 11 rebounds Sunday as Houston beat the Los Angeles Clippers for the eighth straight time and completed their second consecutive season sweep with a 106-98 victory.

The Rockets pulled within a half-game of idle San Antonio in their seesaw battle for the Midwest Division lead.

The Clippers' loss was their fifth in a row and 20th at home this season, the sixth time they've reached that figure in 10 seasons in Los Angeles, but the first time since 1989-90. Last season, they had 14 home losses, the franchise's lowest total since 1978-79 in San Diego.

Dominique Wilkins had 36 points and 11 rebounds for the Clippers in his 900th NBA game. Gary Grant played 16 scoreless minutes in the first half and finished with 10 points and 10 assists in place of Ron Harper, who injured his right knee in a collision Thursday night with Charles Barkley.

Houston forward Robert Horry left the court for good after straining his back with 30 seconds left in the second quarter.

Trail Blazers 109, Nets 105

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Portland clinched its 12th straight playoff berth as Clyde Drexler hit five free throws in the final 26.9 seconds to lead the Trail Blazers to a victory over New Jersey.

Drexler scored 25 of his 34 points in the second half and the Trail Blazers rallied from a 10-point halftime deficit, then held off a late bid by New Jersey to beat the Nets for fourth straight time and 15th in 16 games.

Drexler's biggest points came with 26.9 seconds to go when he hit two free throws after being fouled by P.J. Brown on a scramble for a loose ball. That put the Trail Blazers ahead 104-102.

A three-pointer by Derrick Coleman, who 29 points, got New Jersey within 107-105 with 4.2 seconds to play. Then Drexler opened the door for the Nets by hitting 1 of 2 free throws after being fouled on the ensuing inbounds play.

Bulls 96, Pistons 93

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Scottie Pippen had 26 points, nine rebounds and nine assists as Chicago held off a late Detroit rally, beating the Pistons for their fourth straight victory.

Horace Grant and B.J. Armstrong each scored 16 points for the Bulls. Armstrong hit four free throws in the last eight seconds.

Chicago hit 25 of 33 attempts from the free throw line, while Detroit made only 6 of 11.

Celtics 135, 76ers 112

PHILADELPHIA — Sherman Douglas scored a season-high 27 points and passed for a career-high 22 assists, leading Boston to a victory over Philadelphia.

It was the 10th straight defeat and the 25th loss in 26 games for the 76ers, who also have dropped 11 consecutive games at home — a franchise record. The team lost 10 straight at home in 1971-72.

Lakers 102, Hawks 89

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Elden Campbell scored 17 points before injuring his left eye and the Los Angeles Lakers improved to 4-1 under coach Magic Johnson, defeating Atlanta.

It was the Lakers' season-high sixth straight home victory. They went 2-1 playing three straight games against division leaders, defeating then-Midwest leader Houston, losing to Pacific leader Seattle and beating the Hawks, who top the Central Division.

Suns 108, Nuggets 98

PHOENIX (AP) — Kevin Johnson scored a career-high 42 points as Phoenix beat Denver and tightened the NBA's Western Conference playoff race.

NCAA: Duke big man is probable for game

as it did Purdue's Glenn Robinson, the Big Dog? Can the Blue Devils keep Arkansas from going on one of its runs? Can seven players, and maybe less with a swollen left knee slowing down center Cherokee Parks on Sunday, take on the depth that has worn down team after team all season?

Can the Razorbacks control Grant Hill, maybe college basketball's most versatile player, and the one who sets the tone for Duke at both ends of the court? Can Arkansas get the game going at a quicker pace to take advantage of those extra bodies? Can the players who have never been in a game this big handle the poise of a group looking for ring No. 3?

No one has the answers, but there are a lot of theories.

"We'll do what we have to do, whether it's 40 minutes of hell or 30 minutes of maybe hell," Richardson said referring to the description of his practices that have become the trademark of his program. "We want our guys to feel this is another day at the office, another game, another tournament. The attitude is so important at this level."

For Duke it could be considered another day at the office to be playing in the season's final game. But don't believe it.

"It's been fantastic," Hill said of his career that features a 17-1 record in the NCAA tournament. "Hopefully, we'll have one more fantastic night."

"It can never be old hat," Krzyzewski said. "We are anxious. For these kids to put us in this position we want to make the most of the opportunity."

Hill led Duke's rally from a 13-point deficit in the second half and finished with 25 points against Florida. Seniors Marty Clark and Antonio Lang each came up big down the stretch as the Blue Devils, in the Final Four for the seventh time in nine years, reached the title game for the fourth times in five years.

"The seniors stepped it up with leadership," said Clark who had eight points and four steals. "Defensively, we set the tone in the second half and it came together."

Arkansas didn't take the lead for good against Arizona until there were seven minutes to play, but throughout Williamson was outstanding, finishing with 29 points, 13 rebounds and five assists as he dominated down low.

"I think Big Nasty is every coach's dream," Richardson said. "He's getting better every game because of the players around him as he has improved his game."

He doesn't seem worried about the tradition of Duke against a school which has been to five Final Fours and never reached the championship game.

Richardson won the junior college national championship at Western Texas in 1980 and led Tulsa to the NIT title the next season.

dropped back another stroke on 17 after leaving his putt inches from the hole. On 18, he put it in the water and then missed his putt.

Olazabal, who opened the tournament with a course-record 63, was nine back, two strokes behind Crenshaw and Torrance.

Olazabal still trailed by nine after 14 holes Sunday, alternating birdies and bogeys. Then birdies on Nos. 15, 17 and 18 gave him a 69 for the day and second place.

The second place finish was worth $129,600. Torrance picked up $81,600 for third.

The Tradition

PHOENIX — Raymond Floyd birdied the 18th hole twice in 20 minutes Sunday, once to stay abreast of Dale Douglass and again to win The Tradition in the first playoff in the tournament's six-year history.

Floyd, who won his sixth crown in just 24 senior events since September 1992, won $127,500 and became the first Tradition winner to lead from start to finish. But he had to birdie two of the last three holes to do it.

Floyd, 51, shot a 4-under-par 68 on the 6,869-yard Cochise Course at Desert Mountain.

Colbert shot a 70 for the round and was alone in third at 274.

Nicklaus, Tom Weiskopf and Jimmy Powell were next at 278, with Gibby Gilbert and Mike Hill paired at 279.

Dolan dominates swim event

FEDERAL WAY, Wash. (AP) — Tom Dolan, the University of Michigan freshman sensation, Sunday became the sixth swimmer to win four U.S. national individual titles in one meet.

In dominating the U.S. Swimming Championships, Dolan matched the feat set by Mark Spitz, Tracy Caulkins, Shirley Babashoff, Kristine Quance and Janet Evans.

Evans and Tom Jager also delivered strong performances, and showed there is plenty of swimming left in their futures.

Dolan won the 1,500-meter freestyle in 15 minutes, 18.18 seconds to go with victories in the 400 individual medley and 400 and 800 freestyles.

Janet Evans won the 400 and 800 freestyle events and moved to within nine national championships of equaling Caulkins' record of 48.

Martinez captures Family Circle tourney

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. — Conchita Martinez rolled past Natalia Zvereva and on to her first Family Circle Magazine Cup title on Sunday.

Martinez, the third-ranked player in the world, won the final eight games of the match for her 6-4, 6-0 victory. No. 6 Zvereva, who dropped her first set in the semifinals 6-0 before beating Mary Pierce on Saturday, could not recover from Martinez's steady stream of groundstrokes.

It was the first title of 1994 for Martinez, who won five tournaments last year. She earned $150,000, while Zvereva took home $60,000.

Estoril Open

LISBON, Portugal — Spain's Carlos Costa fought back to overcome defending champion Andrei Medvedev of Ukraine, 4-6, 7-5, 6-4 and win the Estoril Open.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK ♡J95 ◇73 ♣AKJ872
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a concentration of high cards in your long suit and the ace and king on the side are in the same suit. That makes your hand even better than the 16 points it counts in high cards. An invitational jump to three clubs describes this hand nicely.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ9542 ♡KQ3 ◇Q105 ♣7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You are torn between two bids—a rebid of your spades and a raise of partner's hearts. Since you are better than dead minimum and might have trouble convincing partner of the quality of your heart support if you delay the raise, our choice would be three hearts—you know you have an eight-card fit.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK93 ♡K108 ◇AK7 ♣KQ4
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	3 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—That depends on your no-trump range. If it is 22-24, you have a minimum for your bid and should do no more than raise to four hearts. If you play 21-22, then you have an absolute maximum and can show it with the cheapest cue-bid available—in this case three spades.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q652 ♡Q84 ◇A876 ♣K5
Partner opens with a demand bid of two hearts. What do you respond?
A.—While you have a balanced hand with stoppers in all suits, partner almost surely is unbalanced. Therefore, don't even think of bidding some number of no trump now. Your first chore is to set the trump suit, so raise to three hearts.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q876 ♡A985 ◇95 ♣843
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North

What action do you take?
A.—While you don't have much, you should treat partner's overcall as if it were an opening bid. Had partner opened one spade you would surely raise to two spades, so make that bid now.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q7 ♡9 ◇QJ10862 ♣Q652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Your values are soft, but game is not going to depend on whether you have 7 or 9 points, or hard or soft values. The key to the outcome is whether partner can set up and run your diamonds. Your queen of clubs quite likely is an entry and the ten of diamonds is a big card. We would gamble out three no trump. Don't even think about five of a minor.

Reagan thinks harmonica rumors are April Fool's joke

NEW YORK — Connie Chung wanted videotape. The New York Times wanted the whole story from the horse's mouth: Is Ronald Reagan spending his post-White House years learning to play "Git Along Little Dogie" on the harmonica?

Reagan

Word was that retirement was allowing Reagan time to pursue his love of the Old West's most revered musical instrument, the Times reported Sunday.

"I heard he has a tutor coming two or three times a week to teach him how to play," said James Cannon, a Republican who once worked in the Reagan White House.

"It's so typical of the man. Jimmy Carter builds houses with the Habitat for Humanity, or whatever the hell it was," Cannon said. "And Ronald Reagan learns to play the harmonica."

Not so, according to the ex-president.

A Times call to Reagan's office last week for confirmation drew a handwritten denial sent by fax that referred to Chung's request to film a harmonica lesson for her TV news magazine, "Eye to Eye."

"Is this an April Fools' spoof?" asked Reagan, 83. "You're the second person inquiring about my harmonica playing ability — or lack thereof."

Reagan likes the harmonica, but says he isn't taking lessons.

"My repertoire is limited to 'Red River Valley' and I play for my own self amusement exclusively — usually when I don't have my hearing aids in."

PITTSBURGH — Jerry Mathers doesn't mind when total strangers walk up and say, "Hi, Beave."

"It's like having friends all over the world," Mathers said.

Mathers

The 45-year-old former child star of "Leave It To Beaver" is glad people haven't forgotten him, although his everyday life might not be as exciting as some expect.

Recently he surprised shoppers when he took over at a friend's store so the friend could run to the dentist.

"I went there to help him manage behind the counter — basically make sure people didn't steal things. All these people were coming up going, 'You work here?'" Mathers said.

Actually, he makes a living through acting, lecturing and running his own computer business in California. His most recent acting job was a guest spot on an episode of ABC's "Phenom" that airs Tuesday.

Next weekend, he'll be at the Carnegie Science Center in Pittsburgh to promote a new Omnimax film, "Beavers." He also will visit an elementary school in neighboring Beaver County and award the title "Honorary Beaver" to the winner of a drawing contest.

ELDON, Iowa — On the road for a national book-signing tour, Roseanne Arnold wasn't about to skip her adopted home away from home.

Eldon, population 1,200, previously was known solely as the setting for the famed painting, "American Gothic." The gothic house still stands, now overshadowed as the town's top attraction by the Arnolds' Big Food Diner.

Arnold

Tom and Roseanne Arnold were celebrating the first anniversary of the diner with the book-signing and other weekend festivities. Ms. Arnold's book, "My Lives," chronicles her rise from obscurity to TV stardom.

Hundreds of people lined up early Saturday for autographs and brief chats. One young boy offered a corsage to Roseanne, who pinned it to her denim overalls and resumed signing books, caps, shirts and other souvenirs. Another fan came bearing an Easter basket.

The Arnolds held a brief news conference before Saturday's festivities. Tom, who grew up in the area, said they plan a national chain of Big Food Diners.

His wife was had few words for the crowd, and a few choice ones for talkative Tom.

"Well, you have all the answers so I'll just stand here," she said.

LOS ANGELES — Soap opera star Brian Patrick Clarke, who plays Storm on "The Bold and the Beautiful," is suing the police department, claiming he was roughed up when he complained about his car being towed.

Clarke, 41, on Friday sued Police Chief Willie Williams and the two officers who arrested him last summer, Darren Holst and Samuel Huizar.

The lawsuit seeks unspecified damages for alleged assault and battery, negligence, false imprisonment and civil rights violations.

ITEMS, GOVERNMENT, ASSORTED

Rows of ammo boxes and "jerry cans," two of the most popular items, above. A gas mask of unknown vintage at right.

Whether it's used to fix a tank or a Toyota, a wrench is a wrench, but also at the Army surplus store, a mortar-rocket carrier can be a time capsule and a foot locker can be a toy box.

Gary Baxter prides himself on carrying only real military items at his store at 1600 Garden City Highway in Midland. Most of the items are U.S. military, but with the fall of Soviet influence in eastern Europe, Baxter has included a few pieces from former East Germany.

"Several people came in here and said: 'this is a real army surplus store,' so I put it on my business cards," Baxter said.

Merchandise available at Baxter Army Surplus varies with time. Buying large lots of assorted merchandise at military auctions, buyers not only get the merchandise they want, but a bizarre assortment of military surplus items as well.

Tools often go quickly, Baxter said. Used tools from the military range from precision micrometers to 36-inch pipe wrenches.

The interesting stuff, according to Baxter, is the myriad of military packaging which, after its single use, can have a second life.

There are many uses for sturdy pine boxes of various sizes and shapes, Baxter said. The boxes bear stenciled brands proclaiming: 30 Grenade, Hand, Frag delay, or: Cartridge, 105mm, for gunM68, which adds a certain charm, he explained. One box marked "Detonating Fuses, Explosive," has the additional legend: "Handle Carefully."

You never can tell what items are going to sell, Baxter said. He has East German tanker battle uniforms with an odd camouflage pattern. These sparked sudden interest at a recent knife and gun show in Odessa, but later sales stagnated.

Baxter obtained insulated boxes measuring 3 feet by 3 feet by 3 feet. Easily used as coolers for camping, Baxter painted one box red, intending to increase the diversity of his wares and create a kind of "Coca Cola" appeal to the cooler, he said. The military green boxes are all gone with only the red box remaining. "I guess at some point I'm going to have to paint it back green," he lamented.

After many years in the oil field in charge of a casing-pulling operation, Baxter's dream eas to open an Army surplus store. On Nov. 1, Baxter did just that, saying goodbye to the heat and cold of the oil patch.

Some of his customers, however, are oil-field personnel. Baxter had a pile of camouflage hoods with face masks, which he believed he would never sell. "When that first cold snap hit, I sold $71 worth of these suckers before 8," he said.

One crack drilling-rig crew purchased black berets for all three shifts or "towers" on that rig.

Some of the more unusual objects in the store include enormous weather balloons and airtight cylindrical cases for mortar shells. Some use these cases as a means of burying materials for later use.

Cylindrical canisters for Howitzer rounds are used by some as map protectors. One customer purchased a canister to store a telescope.

Airtight metal ammunition boxes have many uses, storing items such as ammunition and welding rods that can be damaged by moisture. One customer uses a box originally used to carry 50-caliber machine-gun rounds as an impact and water resistant case for his camcorder, Baxter said.

Other items; such as military sleeping bags, can be used as they were intended. Outdated gas masks can make interesting gag gifts or costumes, along with the profusion of military clothing.

Owner Gary Baxter fields one of many phone calls from shoppers looking for specific items.

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
- ★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
- ★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
- ★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- ★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

An initial $100 refundable deposit is required.
