OPEC pact would hold price at $18

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — All OPEC members except Iraq on Saturday ratified a six-month plan designed to boost the cartel's oil exports while keeping prices at $18 a barrel.

"Yes, we have an agreement," said Mana Saeed Oteiba, the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, as he left the final three-hour meeting.

Iraq refused to sign because it was denied its demand for production equality with its war rival, Iran.

The decision ended three days of talks among the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' oil ministers at the cartel's headquarters.

Independent analysts in Vienna said they believed the agreement was likely to succeed in holding oil prices steady, at least through the summer.

The deal calls for OPEC's oil production ceiling to rise to 16.6 million barrels a day on July 1 from the current 15.8 million, which the cartel already is exceeding. The new limit is to remain until year's end.

Rilwanu Lukman, OPEC's president and Nigeria's oil minister, told a news conference that some members had been violating the existing agreement. He said a special three-member committee was established to "motivate" all members to abide by the new limits.

The panel's members are Indonesia, Nigeria and Venezuela.

Under the agreement, a further increase in the production ceiling on Sept. 1 — as envisioned by an OPEC accord that took effect in January — was canceled. Lukman said the ministers decided it could create an oversupply that would drive prices lower.

Hisham Nazer, Saudi Arabia's oil ministerr, said as he left the meeting that he was "very happy" with its outcome. He did not elaborate.

The Iranian oil minister, Gholamreza Aghazadeh, said he considered the deal "a very good, nice compromise."

Arturo Hernandez Grisanti, Venezuela's oil minister, told reporters OPEC had demonstrated a newfound strength by wrapping up an agreement in just three days. All of OPEC's recent meetings had lasted a week or more.

Lukman said the ministers also created a special five-member committee to monitor oil price movements.

The committee members are Lukman and his counterparts from Saudi Arabia, Algeria, Venezuela and Indonesia.

OPEC's next scheduled meeting is Dec. 9 in Vienna.

During last week's meeting, Kuwait raised objections to cancelling the production increase originally scheduled for Sept. 1, fearing the move might push prices well above $18 a barrel.

Ted Kruger has been a constant supporter of the fine arts and performing arts in Midland for more than half of his 80 years.

Midlander Ted Kruger's name coupled with arts

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Ted Kruger gives living meaning to the phrase "genteel soul of the arts."

He is one.

This modest, stout-hearted man has been supporting and promoting the fine arts and performing arts in Midland for more than half of his 80 years. He does it quietly and without fanfare.

But Kruger, a Midland businessman whose name is synonymous with the arts, views himself as merely one of the many volunteers who support and promote the arts in Midland.

"If you feel rather strongly about the arts the way I do and so many people like me," he said, "it's just a joy to do something for the theater, either appearing on stage or backstage.

"None of us got paid for any of the work that we did," Kruger said of one of his causes — Midland Community Theatre. "Everything was purely volunteer work. If you couldn't appear on stage, then you appeared backstage painting or something to do with the scenery, the props, the lighting or house management. There are so many jobs. They figure today that for every man or woman that appears on stage, there has got to be at least eight to 10 people in the background."

Kruger, an avid supporter of the arts and civic causes in Midland, was at the forefront but was quietly in the background in his helping to establish and support fine arts and performing arts groups — such as Midland Community Theatre, Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, and Midland Civic Ballet (Ballet Midland). He was president of the old Midland Civic Concerts Association, which brought to Midland prominent artists — pianists, violinists and internationally-known ballet groups.

"It was just such a pleasure to be active and to help in bringing some of these organizations to Midland," he said.

In the 1940s and 1950s, "Midland was growing because of the oil activity," Kruger said. "Midland did not have a lot of the (cultural) things that we wanted it to have simply because we were too small and couldn't afford to have a lot of the things."

The cultural spirit grabbed hold in Midland, which became a haven for the performing arts in West Texas.

"Quite frankly, we thought that Midland was much more attuned to having more of the arts than the rest of the Permian Basin...without reflecting on the Permian Basin at all," he said.

In his early years in Midland, Kruger helped bring ballet to West Texas. At first, the idea of ballet and all its finesse in an oil-patch town seemed incongruous. "To a lot of people, it just didn't seem proper." Whether it was or wasn't, Midland was eager for and receptive to resplendent culture.

Meese approved North's actions, grand jury told

WASHINGTON (AP) — The grand jury investigating the Iran-Contra affair has heard testimony that White House aides who complained Lt. Col. Oliver North may have been violating the law were told Attorney General Edwin Meese III had approved North's actions, The Associated Press has learned.

Sources familiar with the investigation described at least two National Security Council staffers who made such complaints. The complaints centered on the involvement of North, while an NSC aide, in support of the Nicaraguan Contra rebels at a time when Congress had banned U.S. military aid.

These sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, described "a bill of particulars" warning of potential trouble in North's actions that was taken directly to National Security Adviser Adm. John M. Poindexter, or through his aides for relay to the admiral.

One source said the grand jury was told of a case in early 1986 in which a complaint was taken in person to Poindexter's military aide and staff counsel, Cmdr. Paul B. Thompson, who in turn took the matter to Poindexter while the complaining staffer awaited a response.

Iran-Contra Affair

The grand jury was told that Thompson returned from the meeting with Poindexter and informed the NSC staffer who was complaining about North that "the attorney general had checked it," that all was legal and "don't be concerned with it," this source reported.

There was no way to know whether it was true that the attorney general had provided an opinion on the matter, or whether the statements were an exaggeration intended to forestall criticism of North's activities. Meese's spokesman declined comment.

The information provided to the grand jury about Meese's alleged approval of North's activities was solicited by the staff of Independent Counsel Lawrence Walsh, the source said. Previously, Walsh was known to have been looking at possible obstruction of justice in the attorney general's fact-finding inquiry last November into the sale of U.S.-made arms to Iran.

In a related matter that raises further questions about Meese's inquiry into North's activities last fall, sources said that Meese and North held meetings on a regular basis before the Iran-Contra scandal unraveled.

According to current and former administration sources, who insisted on anonymity, the attorney general met often with North and, according to one administration source, they met almost every week during a period from late 1985 through much of 1986.

Oil line drawn between Texans

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Beleaguered U.S. oil producers, who hoped all oil state members of Congress would unite behind legislation to stem foreign imports and raise domestic prices, are dismayed by a standoff between Texas' two powerful senators, Democrat Lloyd Bentsen and Republican Phil Gramm.

Finance Committee chairman Bentsen is managing an omnibus trade bill before the Senate that contains his amendment requiring the president to act to decrease oil imports once they reach the "peril point" of 50 percent of domestic consumption.

Gramm has introduced his own "energy security" bill aimed at restoring oil industry tax breaks taken away by tax reform legislation last year and creating tax credits to encourage exploration. So far, Bentsen's name does not appear as a cosponsor.

Of the producing-state senators, it appears only Gramm may not be backing Bentsen, according to vote counters interviewed at the end of the week. They speculated that Gramm will try to find at least one other energy state senator to join him.

Consumer-state senators fear Bentsen's amendment would result in higher gasoline and home heating costs. They vow to wage a furious fight against the measure on the Senate floor.

Bensten and Gramm have numerous friends in the oil industry who are trying to get them to work together.

Slim majority believes spending cuts enough

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bolstered by new survey results, Gov. Bill Clements Friday called on House conservatives to "pull their act together" and unite to cut spending during next week's debate over a proposed $38.2 billion state budget.

A slim majority of Texans surveyed in last week's Texas Poll said lawmakers should handle "the state's budget problem" only by cutting spending during the special session. The quarterly poll of 601 state residents is conducted by Texas A&M University' Public Policy Resources Laboratory.

"The poll clearly confirms what I've been saying for the last several months, that the people of Texas do not want this huge tax bill that some of the leadership down here's been talking about," the governor told reporters Friday. Clements said he was pleased to see 53 percent of the respondants believe the Legislature should take what he called the "distasteful but necessary" action of extending the temporary sales and gasoline tax increases enacted last year.

"They show great perception when they say, 'But that's all. We Texans are opposed to increased taxes. We don't want the taxes to go up 5 percent, 10 percent, 12 percent like (Lt. Gov. Bill) Hobby's been talking about. We want to hold the line on increased spending.'"

The House has scheduled debate for Tuesday on the $38.2 billion spending bill for 1988-1989 and an estimated $6 billion tax and revenue package to pay for it. Clements said he sees "a very distinct possibility" that House members will vote to reduce that budget in what he predicted would be "the most interesting day" of the five-and-a-half-month deadlock over the budget.

"I think that there are probably 75 or 80, maybe 85, (of 150) votes in the House that are definitely determined to try and curtail spending," the governor said. "It's going to take a real sense of unity and a cohesiveness for those that are against increased spending to pull their act to together, act in unison and mobilize those 75, 80, 85 votes."

The tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee is scheduled to draft a revenue package during a Monday afternoon meeting. Currently discussed options include increasing the state sales tax rate from 5.25 percent to 6 percent, adding untaxed services to the sales tax base, the sale of state lands and a state-run lottery.

Earlier this week, the Senate approved a $39.6 billion appropriations bill. Senators have discussed a form of corporate income tax as one option for raising the $6.6 billion in new revenue necessary to balance that budget.

Form of soda blamed for gasoline troubles

From Staff and Wire Reports

A white powder similar to baking soda that was accidentally mixed with more than a million gallons of gasoline has been traced as the culprit for engine troubles experienced by about 500 Midland-Odessa area drivers.

All told, at least 4,000 motorists — including thousands in the Dallas-Fort Worth area — were forced to have their cars serviced because of the bad gas, which contained a small amount of sodium hydroxide, authorities said.

Carl A. Pescosolido Jr., co-owner of Tropicana Energy Co. Inc. of Euless, said the powder was mixed inadvertently into 1.2 million gallons of gasoline Tropicana had purchased from a supplier. The chemical clogs automobile fuel lines.

The chemical dissolves in liquids and was not detected by tests Tropicana routinely conducts to determine gasoline quality before it is shipped to retailers, he said.

National Convenience Stores Inc. of Houston, the distributors of more than 600,000 gallons of contaminated gasoline sold at about 50 Dallas-Fort Worth and Midland-Odessa stations last week, said it would pay for engine problems caused by the tainted gas.

NCS, parent of the Stop N Go chain, said that immediately after discovering the problem, it ceased the sale of the product, removed it from the tanks and replaced it.

"In the company's 25-year history, it has sold billions of gallons of gasoline without a major problem," said NCS Vice President A.J. Gallerano. "In a two-day span, we get a (tainted) gas delivery to 50 stores. That's the hard part to swallow."

Although the chemical dissolves in the gasoline, the engine's heat causes it to revert back to its solid form, clogging carburetors, fuel injectors, engine valves and gas lines.

Midland-area auto-repair stations contacted last week reported servicing dozens of cars with clogged fuel systems at costs ranging from less than $200 to more than $800.

Normal petroleum-based solvents are not effective in flushing the substance from the gas lines, and Pescosolido said it is best removed with soap and water. But he warned that the repairs are complicated and should be performed only by qualified mechanics.

Pescosolido said the unsold tainted gasoline has been returned to Tropicana, which he said is filing a lawsuit against the distributor who sold the company the gas.

Iranian gunboats attack tankers

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iranian gunboats attacked two Scandinavian supertankers in the central Persian Gulf early Saturday, setting both on fire and critically injuring a Norwegian engineer, shipping and salvage executives reported. They said two other seamen were slightly injured.

Rockets hit the 122,445-ton Norwegian-owned Mia Margrethe shortly after Friday midnight and the 273,616-ton Swedish-operated Stena Concordia less than an hour later, said the executives, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The raids apparently were in retaliation for Iraqi attacks on two vessels in Iranian shipping lanes over the past week.

Both sides have attacked foreign shipping during their 6½-year war. The United States said Friday it would send the battleship Missouri and three escorts into the gulf next month to reinforce six U.S. warships now on patrol.

The engineer of the 21-member Norwegian crew of the Mia Margrethe was seriously burned, said officials of the ship's agent, Barbar Shipping of Damman, Saudi Arabia. The victim was not identified.

The officials said a helicopter took him to the Arabian-American Oil Co. hospital 80 miles southwest on the Saudi Arabian mainland, where he was in intensive care, in critical but stable condition.

Rockets hit the 122,445-ton Norwegian-owned Mia Margrethe shortly after Friday midnight and the 273,616-ton Swedish-operated Stena Concordia less than an hour later.

A number of Iranian gunboats fired three small rockets straight into the engine room and the engineer was caught in the fire that erupted, they said.

The tanker was about 60 miles east of Saudi Arabia and about 120 miles south of Kuwait's al-Ahmadi oil loading terminal.

Saudi vessels rushed to aid the Mia Margrethe after its captain radioed a distress signal, and they helped the Norwegians fight a fire that blazed for hours.

As the Mia Margrethe burned, Iranian gunboats swept out of the darkness to hit the Stena Concordia about 20 miles to the west, the salvage executives reported.

There were two minor injuries among the Stena Concordia crew, they said.

The attack damaged the ship's bridge, radio room and steering gear, but the crew canceled a request for help after managing to put out a small fire.

The shipping officials believe the gunboats darted out from the small Iranian island of Farsiyah about 40 miles east of where the Mia Margrethe was attacked.

The Mia Margrethe was partially loaded with 90,000 tons of Kuwaiti crude oil and was bound for Saudi Arabia's Ras Tanura terminal to load more oil. The Stena Concordia was en route to Kuwait.

It was the first time the Iranians have hit two ships within an hour of each other in the "tanker war."

There have been more than 320 attacks by Iran and Iraq on merchant shipping in the gulf since May 1981, including ships damaged by mines, in which about 200 people have been killed.

The latest Iraqi raids ended a 34-day lull in the tanker war that followed Iraq's May 17 air strike on the USS Stark, a U.S. Navy missile frigate.

Iraq said the Stark was mistaken for an Iranian warship and apologized for the attack, which killed 37 American sailors.

Despite the attack, the United States considers Iran the greater threat to foreign shipping.

The first of 11 Kuwaiti tankers registered in the United States to give them the protection of the American flag were expected in the waterway early next month.

U.S. warships will escort the chartered and reflagged tankers.

Kuwait also has chartered three tankers from Moscow to carry its oil exports under the protection of the Soviet flag.

The Iranians have concentrated on Kuwaiti tankers in their ship attacks in recent months. Tehran accuses Kuwait of aiding Iraq's war effort.

On Friday, Iran's powerful Parliament speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, declared that if America sheds "one drop of blood in the Persian Gulf, there will be a river of blood flowing in the world."

Rafsanjani's warning came as the Pentagon announced it was sending the Missouri and three escorts into the gulf.

Iran says it has reinforced its Revolutionary Guards forces along the Iranian side of gulf and will carry out suicide attacks against U.S. ships if the Americans take any military action.

KRUGER

Ballet was well received in Midland.

"BY THEN, we were budding out. Children were taking ballet. And mothers were bringing their daughters down to learn something about ballet."

Kruger's "budding out" in Midland began in 1946, when he settled in Midland after buying a jewelry store on Main Street downtown.

He was from a family of jewelers and lovers of music and the arts. His father, Julius Kruger, and his father's brother, Sam Kruger, immigrated to the United States from Russia in 1906, when they — both watchmakers — established Kruger Brothers Jewelry Store in Fort Worth. Ted Kruger was born in Fort Worth in June 1907.

"There were four of us brothers (Morris, Ted, Max, David)," Kruger said smilingly, "and then when Sis came along, we fulfilled our obligation of spoiling her."

Sis is Julie Kruger Rozan, a former ballerina and professor of theater and ballet at the University of Houston. Kruger and his sister today are in partnership in a Midland gift shop simply called The Shop, which they started several years ago after Kruger sold his three Midland jewelry stores.

The arts was Kruger's heritage.

"I guess it goes into our background," he said. "Everyone of us as kids had to take music lessons. We had our choice of piano or violin or cello, flute or saxophone — whatever we wanted."

Kruger elected to study the violin. His sister studied ballet.

"She became a very, very wonderful ballerina, and she started teaching ballet," Kruger said. "Sis has just loved ballet from the day we took her to her first class. She taught my daughter, and then my daughter started teaching ballet."

Ms. Rozan, who said she adores her brother, said Kruger "literally lives for other people and expects nothing in return."

"IN OUR FAMILY, it was sort of a mandatory thing to at least give us a chance for an education," Kruger said. "We had the chance to learn to appreciate good music."

Kruger studied business administration at the University of Arizona.

"Jewish people always wanted to give their children the best education they possibly could even if they had to forfeit a lot," he said. He worked his way through school as a "shoe dog" — a shoe salesman.

After serving in the U.S. Army's special services in World War II, Kruger moved to Midland from Wichita Falls, where he and his brother, Max, were in the jewelry business.

Jim Allison Sr., former Midland Reporter-Telegram publisher and Wichita Falls, in 1946 told the Kruger brothers of the economic promises of Midland.

" 'Ted and Max, I know this is going to be the headquarters of the Permian Basin area,' " Kruger recalled Allison saying. " 'And from my understanding, this is going to be the center of all the oil activity,. ' " Allison was "absolutely right," Kruger said.

Kruger sold his Midland jewelry stores in 1980 — the year his wife, Lois, died. His interest in the arts continued.

Marty Conine, who served on the theater board with Kruger, described Kruger as "mild mannered and precious. He's just a very low-key and charming man but he gets things done. Ted was very low-key even when he had his (television) program and "did an excellent job as interviewer."

SINCE THE 1950s, Kruger has sponsored television programs keyed to the arts and to community service.

Betty King, account executive for KMID-TV — Channel 2 — said that Kruger "has always been a big supporter of and always interested in the arts and culture." Kruger was a "mellow and sweet" man who 'never got riled about anything," she said.

W.H. "Bill" Collyns, retired editor of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, said Kruger "is a gentleman and a scholar and a dog-gone good windmill man. Ted is one of Midland's top boosters. He still is one of Midland's finest retail merchants. He is very interested in civic affair and is very cooperative in civic endeavors. He had quite a following on his television show."

Arts supporter Ed Vogler said Kruger, who was "was always reliable," often "came forth looking" to contribute to the arts. "He's a true volunteer."

Harriet Herd, former commissioner of the Texas Commission of the Arts, said Kruger "has done much for our community. He's genteel and knowledgeable and very unassuming. He has been on all the fine arts boards and has done a splendid job."

Art Cole, founding director of Midland Community Theatre and currently an artist in Colorado, said Kruger "is a gentleman, is very sensitive, very thoughtful, very understanding."

Kruger, enjoyed on-stage walk-ons, played in such productions as "The Visit" and "Fiddler on the Roof" in which he played a rabbi. He "always cared about the arts in Midland and committed himself and part of his profits to the arts — always," Cole said. "He's the sweetest guy who ever came down the pike."

Kruger's appreciation of the arts blended with his work toward "betterment of the city," Cole said.

"If you are going to live in a town," Kruger said, "try to make it a better town."

ENERGY

"What I would most like to see is some policy position that could be signed by all oil state senators, both Republican and Democrats," said Charles Perry, of Odessa, president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "That would be utopia as far as I am concerned."

But among oil industry lobbyists in Washington, it is no secret that — in the words of one lobbyist — "Bentsen and Gramm hate each other's guts."

Hostility between the two dates to the 1976 U.S. Senate race.

Gramm, then an economics professor at Texas A&M, challenged Bentsen for the Democratic nomination to the Senate. Some of Gramm's accusations riled the older, veteran senator, who still hasn't forgotten them.

After losing that race, Gramm was elected to the House in 1978 as a Democrat, became a Republican in 1983, and was elected to the Senate the following year.

The senators and their staffs, however, deny that they are handicapped in representing the state by personal or political animosity.

They are working together to try to bring the proposed Superconducting Super Collider — a physics research facility promising thousands of jobs — to the state. Together they are fighting to avoid Texas being selected as a nuclear waste depository. And they worked successfully to bring a Navy battleship, the USS Wisconsin, to a home port on the Texas Gulf Coast.

A Washington-based representative of the oil industry discounted "any perceived or real" animosity as a reason for Bentsen's and Gramm's failure to see eye-to-eye on oil legislation. In his view, "It is a matter of consistent political philosophy."

Gramm, Bentsen, and their aides talked last week, trying to find a way for Gramm to support Bentsen's bill. But on Friday Gramm said he couldn't support the measure "as it is written." He believes it gives the president too much authority.

As it went to the Senate floor, Bentsen's bill requires the president to submit to Congress, with his annual budget, a forecast of oil imports for the following three years. If import dependency would exceed 50 percent in any of the three years, the president would be required to send Congress within 90 days a plan to prevent it. Congress would have 90 days in which to disapprove or modify the plan, or it would go into effect.

Gramm conceded the measure wouldn't be so bad if Ronald Reagan were president, but he suggested in conversations quoted by Texas oil men that a "pro tax" Democrat in the White House might skew the forecast to justify a tax on oil imports, which Bentsen favors.

Also, Gramm points out that raising oil prices through an import tax would cost jobs in the booming petrochemical industry in Beaumont, Galveston, Houston and other Texas cities.

Underscoring his reputation for consistency, even when it hurts him with some groups, Gramm made that point in an April meeting with the Permian Basin Petroleum Association in Midland and was roundly booed. "Those guys (West Texas producers) didn't want to hear about someone else losing his job; they just want to go back to work themselves," said one man who was present.

Gramm's "energy security" legislation, introduced June 11, has attracted only two co-sponsors thus far — Sens. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., and Don Nickles, R-Okla. But Gramm's spokesman, Larry Neal, said the senator has been busy with budget legislation and has not had time to solicit co-sponsors.

Gramm's bill includes recommendations for tax relief and tax credits, proposed by the Independent Petroleum Association of America, and incorporates most of the Reagan administration's proposals for heading off excess imports that could imperil national security.

Bentsen does not oppose most of the recommendations, but as Finance Committee chairman he is concerned by the estimated $1 billion cost to the U.S. Treasury.

At the same time, Gramm — possibly the nation's best-known watchdog on federal spending — has not said how he would replace the $1 billion that would be drained from the treasury by new tax incentives to encourage oil drilling. However, he supports the president's plan to sell the Elk Hills Oil Reserve in California and to open up the Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas leasing, both of which would produce revenues for the government.

POLL

Hobby, presiding officer of the Senate, said he doesn't see how the survey is "relevant" to the Legislature's decisions on the budget. "Poll results don't basically have anything to do with what you have to do to operate schools and prisons," said Hobby, who added that the unavoidable costs of providing those services have increased while state income has declined.

"Those are the facts of life."

Meanwhile, a member of the University of Texas board of regents said the $317 million increase in higher education spending proposed in the House appropriations bill falls $350 million short of bringing state support for colleges and university back to 1985 levels.

"In fact, although it appears to represent a small gesture in the direction of enhancing funding for higher education, the Appropriations Committee's action, in relationship to the long-term interests of Texas and its citizens, actually is more like the godfather's kiss on the cheek than a passionate embrace of the full potential of Texas' future," regent Jess Hay said.

GAS

The unsold fuel was flushed from the tanks and purged from the lines at local stations, Stop-N-Go District Manager Kevin Miller told the Reporter-Telegram last week.

Because of the pending lawsuit, Pescosolido refused to name the distributor and declined to speculate on how the gasoline became contaminated.

"We've no intention of passing the buck," Pescosolido said. "We sold the product. We are accountable for it."

Pescosolido said it was the first time in Tropicana's four-year history that the company has had problems with contaminated gasoline. He said motorists whose cars were damaged by the fuel can file claims against Tropicana by calling the American International Adjustment Co. Inc. at (800) 492-9732 or (214) 902-3004.

In San Angelo, meanwhile, symptoms of damage to more than 300 cars are identical to the problems that surfaced in Dallas and Odessa.

Authorities have not yet determined if Tropicana was involved in San Angelo deliveries or if other distributors have purchased the same tainted gasoline.

The Environmental Protection Agency is conducting its own investigation into the tainted fuel, James Kellerstroff of the Denver field office confirmed Friday.

Kellerstroff would not discuss the specifics of the ongoing investigation.

MEESE

This last period was the time when North was arranging the sale of U.S.-made weapons to Iran and developing a private network to supply the Contras.

Thompson, the staff counsel on the NSC and Poindexter's military aide, was present for many of those meetings, the sources said.

The agenda and subject of discussion at the sessions were not disclosed, but their existence raises new questions for investigators about how much Meese knew of North's activities before his investigation the weekend of Nov. 22-23, 1986. They suggest that Meese was more familiar with North and that they held discussions together more frequently than the attorney general has previously acknowledged.

Meese spokesman Terry Eastland, asked about the disclosures, cited Meese's earlier statements that he had met with North perhaps a dozen times but did not recall discussing the Contras. He said that the attorney general was in Europe and would have no comment.

Eastland declined to answer questions regarding the agenda of the meetings between Meese and North, except to say counterterrorism "is one of the matters they typically discussed." North was responsible for counterterrorism matters at the NSC on paper, although in fact his duties ranged from aid to the Contras to efforts to secure release of the U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

Thompson declined to comment through a White House spokesman, Roman Popadiuk.

France's role in Gulf war paradoxical

WORLD

PARIS (AP) — France is a major weapons supplier to Iraq and a powerful presence in the Persian Gulf war.

The French role in the Iran-Iraq conflict is both financially lucrative and politically costly. Analysts say it is growing burdensome as French-made missiles find their mark on foreign tankers and as French hostages remain captives of pro-Iranian groups.

"We are in fact becoming hostages of our own policy, trying to re-establish links with the Iranians without cutting with Iraq," said Dominique Moisi, assistant director of the French Institute of International Relations.

While France now tries to befriend Iran, its weapons help keep Iraq combat-ready and France appears unprepared to abandon the relationship with Baghdad.

The May 17 attack on the USS Stark, killing 37 American sailors, was carried out with a French-made missile fired from a French-built jet fighter by a French-trained Iraqi pilot.

Iraq procures vast amounts of military equipment from France, from planes to sleeping bags for Iraqi soldiers.

The French government, following custom, refuses to make its weapons sales to Iraq public.

But various diplomatic and military sources in Baghdad who spoke on condition of anonymity said France has sold Iraq an estimated $6 billion worth of weaponry since the war began in September 1980.

Despite Iranian demands that France end arms sales to Iraq, Defense Minister Andre Giraud of France told the Saudi Arabian daily Al Majalla recently that "furnishing Iraq with French arms presents no particular political problem, although France also wants to normalize its relations with Iran."

The lucrative connection between France and Iraq dates to 1975, when the French agreed to build the Osiris nuclear reactor outside Baghdad. It was bombed and destroyed by the Israelis in June 1981.

Premier Jacques Chirac, then serving under former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, was the main architect of the relationship.

Its initial aim was "a mixture of political ambition, economics and strategic design," said Moisi. He said there was a French desire to "penetrate a country largely controlled by the Soviet Union...a feeling that France's Arab policy could be reinforced."

The 1979 Iranian revolution and the spread of Islamic fundamentalism reinforced that view. But now, other experts say, economic reasons prevail.

An Iraqi defeat in the war could be a financial blow to France.

At the beginning of 1986, Iraq owed France about $3 billion, nearly half of it in military contracts.

"This is a commercial deal. It's a question of pure, pragmatic French mercantilism," said Robert Elliot, spokesman for the London-based International Institute of Strategic Studies.

"They (the French) have also pinned themselves into a corner," he said. "The only way they can get their money back is to make sure that Iraq survives."

"There are always negotiations between Iraq and France on arms contracts," Iraqi Vice Premier Tariq Aziz said during a visit to Paris a year ago.

Elliot said that over the past three years Iraq has received 90 Mirage F1 warplanes, at least 60 Roland missiles and an unaccountable number of Exocet missiles, "used like confetti."

Iraq has also received numerous helicopters equipped with air-to-surface missiles, transport helicopters, anti-tank vehicles, ammunition, trucks, bedrolls and other military supplies, Elliot said.

Thomas Ohlson of the usually well-informed Stockholm International Peace Research Institute said that between 1981 and 1985 France accounted for an estimated 22 percent of major weapons transfers to Iraq, and the Soviet Union accounted for 55 percent.

There was no official French statement following the apparently mistaken Iraqi attack on the Stark.

U.S. pilot expected to be released

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Angola will release on Sunday a U.S. pilot whose plane reportedly strayed over the war-torn nation two months ago while en route to South Africa, Angola's state-run news agency ANGOP reported .

In a dispatch from Luanda, ANGOP quoted an unidentified official source as saying Joseph Frank Longo, 33, of Greensburg, Pa., would be released in the care of a U.S. congressional delegation expected in the Angolan capital Sunday.

The release represented "an act of good faith...in keeping with Angola's principle of maintaining good relations with all peoples of the world," the source told ANGOP on Saturday.

Longo's privately registered Beechcraft Bonanza aircraft was shot down April 21 by Angolan forces over Cunene province in southern Angolan. It is a region where South African troops frequently stage cross-border raids from neighboring South-West Africa, also known as Namibia.

Longo told Angolan authorities he was flying the plane for delivery to South Africa and strayed over Angolan airspace unintentionally.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Tower of Pisa leaning more

PISA, Italy (AP) — The leaning tower of Pisa leaned another small fraction of an inch in the past 12 months, and slightly more than the year before, two Italian professors reported.

The annual measurements on the 814-year-old marble landmark were conducted this week by Geri Gero and Brunetto Palla, professors at the University of Pisa.

They said Friday the inclination increased .052 inches, slightly more than the .051 inches recorded from June 1985 to June 1986, but down from the .068 inches of the year before that.

The professors gave no explanation for the slight increase in tilt, but said it was not alarming.

The tower, begun in 1173, started to lean almost immediately after it was built because the ground shifted underneath. It is about 16.8 feet off plumb.

Woman sentenced to death

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — A cosmetics saleswoman was sentenced to death Saturday after she was found guilty of trafficking in 9½ pounds of heroin.

Lim Beng Ngoh, 28, received the only penalty provided under Malaysia's dangerous drugs law.

Forty-nine people have been hanged since Malaysia passed laws in 1975 allowing the death sentence for drug trafficking. Others are awaiting appeals or execution dates.

Fireworks may set record

MACAO (AP) — A 2½-mile string of firecrackers snapped, crackled and popped for six hours Saturday in what organizers hope will be a world record.

The $25,640 firework was made up of 2,788,000 firecrackers tied end to end. Forty workers in Chinese factory spent 40 days making it from 1,320 pounds of gunpowder and 880 pounds of string.

The display was organized by two hotels, the Macao gambling syndicate and the government's Tourism Department.

Macao's Acting Gov. Carlos Monjardino set off the fireworks display.

Elections may be called to halt anti-government unrest

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The government appealed to the opposition Saturday for new talks to end 18 days of massive anti-government protests and said it may call elections to halt the violent unrest.

Opposition leaders, who abandoned talks with the government last Wednesday, immediately expressed doubt about new talks and vowed to press for a referendum on holding direct presidential elections.

Students armed with firebombs and rocks fought riot police in small, scattered clashes in Seoul and other cities on Saturday, but the country appeared relatively quiet after huge protests the day before.

Officials of the government and of President Chun Doo-hwan's Democratic Justice Party, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the government was considering new elections for the National Assembly.

They also said that Roh Tae-woo, head of the Democratic Justice Party, may give up his nomination to succeed Chun next February.

"The government and the ruling party has humbly listened to public opinion since June 10 and are exerting their best efforts to resolve all issues in a peaceful manner," a government statement said.

The Democratic Justice Party would have little trouble winning new National Assembly elections because of its strong control over the electoral system and extensive patronage in many areas.

Most observers say the government would have little chance of winning any direct election or referendum.

Chun says he will step down when his seven-year term expires in February, but has hand-picked Roh to succeed him.

AIDS taking health commissioner's time

AUSTIN (AP) — State Health Commissioner Dr. Robert Bernstein told the Texas Board of Health Saturday that dealing with the AIDS problem takes up about 40 percent of his time.

Bernstein's regular report to the board sounded like an agenda of the month's AIDS meetings and developments. He mentioned a Bethesda, Md., meeting he attended concerning AIDS and drug abusers, and Lubbock, Austin and Tyler sessions on the fatal disease.

The commissioner said he is not alone in having to dedicate more and more time to Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, which attacks the body's immune system.

"This seems to be true in virtually every organization, whether it's the schools or what. I am personally spending 40 percent of my time, maybe, on AIDS and it's just getting to be that way with everything," he told the board.

Bernstein also said he is concerned that efforts to battle AIDS could be interfering with other important health-care initiatives. He specifically mentioned the Maryland meeting he attended that was sponsored by the National Institute of Drug Abuse.

"It was an excellent meeting...(but) it seems to me that AIDS is now getting so mixed up into everybody's agenda that I wonder whether, for example, this group is forgetting their basic mission of treating drug abusers," he said.

The commissioner said he and Board of Health Chairman Dr. Frank Bryant Jr. spent time talking about AIDS with Gov. Bill Clements.

"The governor is interested in us drawing up a plan for the state in terms of AIDS. It is very difficult, in my view, to draw up a plan until you know what kind of money you are going to have to spend, if any," Bernstein said.

AIDS also came up during Bernstein's monthly report on litigation involving his agency, which has filed lawsuits charging two companies with violating the Texas Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act by making fraudulent claims about AIDS treatments.

In reviewing correspondence received, Bernstein read from a letter sent to a board member by the Eagle Forum, a Washington-based group that credits itself with "leading the pro-family movement since 1972."

"They don't think we're doing enough" about AIDS, Bernstein said, dismissing the group's suggestions as "kind of the LaRouche approach to things."

The reference was to Lyndon LaRouche, a politician who has advocated widespread testing for AIDS.

The Eagle Forum letter, signed by Colleen Parro, the group's Dallas field director, calls for mandatory AIDS tests for marriage license applicants (with licenses denied to applicants who test positive), inmates entering and leaving prison, people seeking medical treatment, pregnant women, applicants for medical or dental licenses (with licenses denied to applicants who test positive), health care workers, professional food handlers and prostitutes.

STATE

Texas beaches not affected by ruling

AUSTIN (AP) — A U.S. Supreme Court ruling restricting government control of public access to beaches should have no effect on Texans' right to sun and swim on the state's beaches, an assistant attorney general said Saturday.

In a California case, the high court ruled Friday that state officials have no right to force a homeowner to allow public access to his beachfront property.

But Ken Cross, coordinator of the open beaches enforcement program for state Attorney General Jim Mattox, said the decision should not affect Texas because the state's open-beaches process differs from California's.

"The Texas Open Beaches Act is based on long-standing, historical public use of the beach, which has ripened over time into a common-law right for the public," Cross said.

The California procedure for guaranteeing public access to beaches is a regulatory one in which beach access is a consideration in the granting of building permits for shoreline property. That is a key difference from the Texas process, according to Cross.

"The access right in California was premised on the regulatory power of the state. In Texas it is based on common-law rights of the public."

Ads for nuke dump sites 'prohibited'

LAREDO (AP) — A state district judge granted a temporary injunction prohibiting the Texas Low Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority from advertising for sites for a low level nuclear dump.

The order, granted by Judge Manuel Flores, prevents the agency from re-publishing the advertisements that ran two weeks ago promising confidentiality to Texas landowners who came forward with land that might be suitable for a waste site.

Flores also instructed agency officials not to enter into negotiations with any Webb County landowners unless county officials were notified first.

The order stands until an August trial resolves a lawsuit brought by Webb County against the agency.

In a preliminary hearing on the suit that lasted seven hours Friday, county attorneys argued that, under the state's Open Records Act, the state authority must release the names of any potential land sellers.

State attorneys argued, however, that the names fell under an exception to the act that allows real estate negotiations to remain confidential.

They argued that potential sellers would suffer harassment and harm if their names were released.

Flores did not accept the argument that the real estate exception could be used, the Laredo Times reported.

"You can have more than one option (on land), purchase numerous sites at whatever price and sit on it. You shouldn't be able to hide behind the real estate exception," Flores said.

Flores said the agency could again advertise for sites if it did not promise confidentiality to prospective sellers, if it specifically identified wastes to be deposited at the site, and if it indicated the land might be bought on an option-basis.

STATE in brief

LTV, union make pact

DALLAS (AP) — The steel unit of LTV Corp. has reached a tentative pact with the United Steelworkers of America that would freeze wages at current levels and eliminate about 500 jobs through attrition, according to LTV Corp.

The proposed contract could save LTV, the nation's second-largest steelmaker, up to $50 million a year. The measure would reinstate certain benefits, including some to retirees, officials of the Dallas-based company said Friday.

The tentative agreement, almost identical to a proposed contract that was narrowly rejected May 14 by the union's local presidents, also would eliminate early retirement incentives and provides work-rule changes aimed at improving productivity.

The union's rank-and-file members must ratify the proposal and it must also be approved by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York. LTV and its subsidiaries have been operating under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy law since July.

Gun-toting worker rehired

HOUSTON (AP) — A city employee fired for carrying a gun to work will be back at her job Monday after being reinstated by the Civil Service Commission.

Vilma Washington was fired May 22 by Mayor Kathy Whitmire after Ms. Washington's supervisor found a small handgun in the employee's purse, which had been in a locked desk.

City regulations prohibit employees from carrying guns on the job, with the exception of those whose jobs require it. Ms. Washington said she carried the gun for protection to and from work.

After Ms. Washington's firing, all 14 Houston City Council members signed a letter to the commission urging it to overturn the firing. The council members noted Ms. Whitmire only verbally reprimanded Municipal Courts Administrator Richard Parris in an earlier incident in which he waved an unloaded gun during a budget meeting in his office.

The council members criticized the disparate punishment meted out in the two cases.

Vet convoy passes through

AMARILLO (AP) — A 22-mile-long convoy of Vietnam veterans and their families was to roll through the Panhandle Saturday on a cross-country trek that will culminate with a July 4th rally at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington.

Three contingents left the West Coast Friday, one from Central Point, Ore., and the others from Los Angeles. One of the Los Angeles groups was scheduled to pass through Amarillo Saturday, where it will spend the night before going on.

A city official says the convoy of cars may be 22 miles long by the time it reached Amarillo.

Organizers who are hoping for as many as 150,000 veterans at the rally have called the gathering "the welcome home a lot of vets from Vietnam never got."

Chopper performed like in 'air show'

FORT HOOD (AP) — An Army Reserve helicopter repeatedly banked steeply and dived to tree-top level while giving rides to part-time soldiers before crashing Monday and killing 10 people, witnesses say.

One witness said he believes the pilot of the UH-1 Huey helicopter was "trying to put on an air show" before the crash.

Witnesses have told investigators that it appeared something fell off the tail section of the helicopter before the aircraft went into a series of 360-degree spins, crashed and caught fire, said Thomas D. Ice, chaplain of the 1st Forward Support Battalion of the 49th Armored Division of the Texas Army National Guard.

The accident occurred on the 10th day of the annual summer training exercise for 20,000 men and women of the guard and its Army Reserve support units from 18 states. The exercise, code-named Starburst '87, ends Sunday.

Ice told the Austin American-Statesman he saw the final flight of the Huey from liftoff until it fell to the ground no more than five minutes later and less than a mile from where he was standing. Ice said he also served as stenographer for the statements witnesses made to a team of Army investigators.

Ice described the manuevers performed by the helicopter pilot but declined to characterize them.

"I couldn't give you an evaluation on what would be normal or abnormal and things like that," Ice said. "In other words, I don't know. I don't know what's standard operating procedure for one of those guys."

The Huey was based in Norman, Okla., and was assigned to the 353rd Engineering Group of the Army Reserve in Oklahoma City. Guard spokesmen at Fort Hood described the helicopter's mission as an orientation flight.

Another witness, guardsman Bruce Wojahn of Austin, said the helicopter was "trying to put on an air show."

"I'd been watching this guy for 30 minutes," said Wojahn. "He was just flying maybe 100 feet off the ground. He dove at us. Scared hell out of me. He was pushing it to the max, cooking. He stayed in a quarter-mile area. You could hear the motor strain when he banked it."

Wojahn said the helicopter went out of sight behind a tree line after diving over the area where he was waiting to pick up supplies for his unit.

"I heard a pop," he said. "The motor went out completely. I didn't hear a crash or explosion."

Case against tax hikes 'out of touch'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

Levine

AUSTIN — Perhaps the best evidence of how out of touch what's left of the conservative case against raising taxes has become lies in the ludicrous arguments presented.

The chief defender of the cause, Gov. Bill Clements, is losing credibility by the shovel-full with each passing revelation of his involvement in the SMU pay-to-play football recruiting scandal. Lawmakers have to wonder just where the governor's coming from when he simultaneously praises and denies a report that places him at the center of the Ponygate coverup.

"I don't see where there's any credibility," says one disgruntled House member looking for a way around, over, or through Clements' obstinance on the budget. "Whether we like it or not, he's our governor and he should be part of the process to solve the problem."

So while the governor scratches for a foothold, the far-right wing of Texas' politics tries to bolster his philosophical ground. When fiscal conservatives like Bill Hobby, Gib Lewis, Grant Jones and Jim Rudd end up on the pro-spending side, you've got to wonder about who's left standing with the governor.

Take, for instance, Sen. John Leedom, the stalwart Dallas Republican. Leedom got torn to pieces the other day when he brought no ammunition to his battle to trim higher education spending. Citing un-named "experts" and no statistics, Leedom called for a reduction in the "great giveaway" of tuition for medical students.

"We've got more doctors than we need," he said.

That brought one senator charging out of his chair. "When was the last time you got out of your silk-stocking district and went down to one of the ghetto districts?" asked Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur. Parker went on to point out that many poor people cannot find doctors to treat their children or elderly parents.

A look at the most-recent census statistics shows Texas had 23,481 physicians in 1982. At 154 doctors per 100,000 population, Texas falls nearly 20 percent below the national average of 191 per 100,000 and anywhere from 2.5 to 49 percent under the rates in the nine other most-populous states.

Or take the argument against spending an additional $2.3 million — that's .006 percent of the total state budget — to provide in-home, follow-up services to abused children. Rep. Foster Whaley, the Pampa Democrat who thinks the poor should pay more taxes because they use more state services, wondered about the propriety of state involvement in the program.

"Aren't a lot of these cases...one relative is mad at another relative?" Whaley asked.

Republican Rep. Bill Ceverha of Dallas chalked it up to bureaucratic greed. "We could spend the entire budget on this agency and they would still say it's not enough," he said.

Rep. Frank Madla, D-San Antonio and budget chairman for public health agencies, matter of factly put both those outrageous arguments to rest. "These are valid cases of child abuse that are not being taken care of...simply because the dollars are not being appropriated."

Then we've got the head-in-the-sand approach taken by the 58-member Texas Conservative Coalition. Using the old government-should-be-run-like-a-business argument, coalition leaders point out that the recession has forced private employers to tighten their belts and lay off workers.

"The only group that hasn't laid off anybody is the state government," says Rep. Gerald Geistweidt, R-Mason. Well that makes lots of sense. State government could lay off some of its employees, add to the unemployment lines, cut back on the services other out-of-work Texans are relying on.

Certainly state government still has a few frills left: the $3.5 billion highway program, for example, could stand some cuts while the economy is down. But with their leader under siege, conservatives have got to come up with more than misguided budget cuts and empty arguments if they expect to offer anything constructive to the fiscal debate.

Otherwise, their windmill tilting just distracts from an honest effort to balance the budget and develop a fair revenue-raising plan.

Steve Levine heads up the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau. When opinion appears in this column, it is the opinion of the writer and not necessarily that of the newspaper.

Hispanics 'promised' Cabinet positions

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt promised members of the League of United Latin American Citizens on Saturday that he will name Hispanics to Cabinet positions if elected president.

The 49-year-old Democrat, who was governor of Arizona from 1978 until this year, was the sixth presidential candidate to address the convention this week. All have geared their speeches specifically to the Hispanic audience.

Babbitt, in a speech alternating between English and Spanish, stressed his record as a civil rights lawyer in South Texas during the 1960s and said it left a lasting impression.

"I'll never forget the first time I entered a colonia (rural, unincorporated neighborhood) and walked along the streets where people lived without water or electricity," Babbitt said.

He said the nation's No. 1 priority should be funding a system that provides day-care vouchers for every child, which would cost several billion dollars.

"But we have to do it if we believe in our future," he said.

Babbitt also said health-care funding for children should be increased.

"Surely we have a moral obligation to provide health care for children who did not determine their fate," he said.

Closer economic and cultural ties with Mexico are needed to solve the economic problems of the two countries, he said.

U.S. banks, he said, should cut in half the debt Mexico owes them.

"The situation in Mexico is grave," Babbitt said. "When Mexico suffers, we suffer. When Mexico has so many problems, we will also suffer."

He called for ending aid for the Nicaraguan contras battling the Sandinista government.

"The real issue is Mexico," he said. "Nicaragua has 3 million people, Mexico, 83 million people."

A bond between the cultures of Mexico and the United States, he said, is necessary and would create "a culture different from any culture we have seen in the past."

He said the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 should be revised to make all undocumented alien family members eligible for residency if one member is eligible.

All of the candidates appearing this week have criticized some aspect of the new immigration law.

In a related matter, several LULAC leaders on Saturday called for the resignation INS Commissioner Alan Nelson.

"We as a LULAC organization are asking for the resignation or replacement of Immigration and Naturalization Service Commissioner Alan Nelson because of attempts to selctively enforce the immigration law," said Oscar Moran, national president of LULAC.

"The law is aimed at Hispanics and don't let anybody tell you differently," Moran said.

NATION in brief

Homeless aid bill OK'd by Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted 65-8 Saturday to approve legislation that would authorize $443 million in aid to the homeless this year.

"The homeless population in our country is growing, and I think it is a blight on our nation," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., declared as lawmakers approved the measure produced by a House-Senate conference committee.

The House is expected to vote next week on the measure, which also would furnish $654 million for the homeless next year.

Kennedy called the bill, which is named in honor of the late Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, D-Conn., "a down payment by the Congress in coming to grips with the problem."

McKinney, who died May 7, had long worked for measures to help the homeless.

The bill includes provisions to expand emergency housing, nutrition, health care education and job training.

It also would create an interagency council on the homeless to coordinate federal services, provide technical assistance to state and local programs and compile an annual report on the problem to the president.

Quake shakes community

RIALTO, Calif. (AP) — A small earthquake rattled this San Bernardino County community, but police reported no injuries or damage from the late night temblor.

"The building just shook a little," said Barbara Dellinger, a dispatcher at the Rialto Police Department, 60 miles east of downtown Los Angeles and four miles south of San Bernardino.

A spokesman for the the Seismology Department at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena said the quake at 11:23 p.m. Friday measured 3.4 on the Richter scale. Its epicenter was about eight miles west of San Bernardino, said spokesman Robert Finn.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in the strenth of the shaking.

An earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage in the local area.

Two jetliners shaken

MIAMI (AP) — An Eastern Airlines jet had to dive five miles when it lost cabin pressure, just three hours after six people were slightly injured when a Delta Air Lines plane hit turbulence, authorities said.

An Eastern DC-10, 20 minutes out of Miami International Airport on a flight from Los Angeles, suddenly lost pressure at 37,000 feet Friday night, releasing oxygen masks for passengers. The pilot had to put the plane into a five-mile dive to reach a breathable level of the atmosphere.

Eastern Flight 23 with 11 crew members and 198 passengers landed safely, however, said company spokesman Robin Matell. One passenger fainted and another complained of an eardrum injury, but neither was hospitalized, he said.

The cause of the depressurization remained under investigation today, he said.

Delta's Flight 877 from Atlanta, carrying 239 passengers, hit rough air north of its destination of Fort Lauderdale on Friday evening, while many passengers were eating dinner.

"It was shake, rattle and roll," said Pat Healy of Phoenix, Ariz., who was flying to Fort Lauderdale for a medical conference.

Two passengers, three flight attendants, and an off-duty Delta employee were shaken up, with the most serious injury a sprained neck, said a spokesman for the Broward County sheriff's department. Ambulances met the Boeing 767 at Hollywood-Fort Lauderdale International Airport, but most were not needed.

Truck obstructed train

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — Investigators were sent to the scene of an Amtrak crash that killed a truck driver and injured 29 people, but a railroad spokesman said that there was no evidence that anything went wrong except "the truck getting in the way of the train."

Robert L. Dieter, 54, of Rockdale was killed Friday when the train, bound for Springfield from Chicago, hit his garbage truck and derailed at an unguarded crossing south of Joliet.

"It's a really long, loud (train) whistle," said Marci Larson, spokeswoman for Amtrak in Arlington, Va. "And there were cornfields all around. There's no way he couldn't have seen it."

Twenty-six passengers and three crew members suffered minor injuries, Ms. Larson said. All were treated and released from Joliet hospitals by Friday evening.

The three-car train, with an engine pushing from the rear, had just left the Joliet depot carrying 28 passengers and a crew of four when it crashed into the truck about 9:15 a.m., Amtrak officials said.

The train's speed at the time of the crash was not immediately known, but officials said the top speed for trains passing through the area is 79 mph.

Budget balancing proposal OK'd, amended to trade bill

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted 59-11 Saturday to require a vote in both houses of Congress this year on a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget.

"Balanced budgets are like going to heaven, everybody wants a balanced budget but nobody wants to do what you have to do to balance the budget," Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said as the Senate approved his proposal.

The measure was adopted as an amendment to the sweeping, 1,013-page trade bill that has been on the Senate floor since Thursday.

The budget proposal would require the House and Senate each to act by Oct. 1 on a proposed constitutional amendment to end budget deficits, which Gramm said are a major cause of the record $166.3 billion U.S. trade deficit.

It also would require the president to submit a balanced budget to Congress by Sept. 15.

Approval followed more than an hour of parliamentary wrangling in which Gramm said the Senate resembled "a frightened rabbit chased by a wily old fox."

Earlier, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said the Senate is likely to approve a ban on imports of Toshiba products as part of the bill, a move aimed at punishing the Japanese company for selling submarine silencing equipment to the Soviets.

"If you're asking me to guess what they'll do, I'd guess it'll carry," Bentsen told a news conference outside the door of a Senate plagued by steadily worsening absenteeism.

"The fact that senators are leaving is no reflection on me or on the Senate," Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., told the Senate. He said many had left for good reasons. "...We've done business in here with less than 10 senators."

He said the unusual Saturday meeting was needed because of an enormous workload facing the Senate.

Bentsen said he still has not decided whether to support the Toshiba measure, which could come to the floor as an amendment to the trade bill as early as Tuesday. He said the Japanese government has taken strong steps to punish executives involved in the sale by a Toshiba subsidiary of giant, computer-controlled milling machines to the Soviets.

According to the Reagan administration, the result of the sale is that the Soviets are now building ultra-quiet submarine propellers that make the submarines more difficult to detect.

Bentsen, Democratic floor manager of the trade bill, said a number of senators have strong feelings about the sale to the Soviets and are in a mood to mete out discipline against Toshiba.

The corporation sells a wide array of consumer goods in the United States, ranging from videocasette recorders to toaster ovens.

Bentsen conceded that the absentee-plagued Senate was unable to focus in its weekend meeting on any of the major amendments that are at the core of its debate over trade legislation. Instead, it was plodding away on secondary matters, he said.

"We're clearing away a lot of the underbrush," Bentsen said.

He said major action would have to wait until Tuesday and Wednesday, when Byrd is hoping to wind up action on the bill. He added, however, that he saw only an outside chance that the lawmakers would finish with the bill before leaving on the July Fourth recess.

He said Sens. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., are working on a measure designed to eliminate some opposition to a feature of the trade bill dealing with plant closings.

Business groups have been especially adamant in opposition to the plant-closing feature, which would require a 180-day notice of layoffs.

As Bentsen described the Metzenbaum-Kennedy measure, it would alter the time period to 90 days and insert exceptions for part-time workers and failing companies that are attempting to gain new financing.

He said Sens. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., and John Danforth, R-Mo., are continuing to seek a compromise measure that would avoid a debate over the so-called Gephardt amendment that is part of sweeping trade legislation approved April 30 by the House. It would require dollar-for-dollar retaliation against unfair foreign trade practices if they could not be negotiated away.

The Reagan administration, which has been threatening a veto of both the House and Senate versions of the measure if they reach the president's desk, has been particularly pointed in opposition to the Gephardt plan.

Advice on move to send envoy to Syria 'divided'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan had divided advice from the U.S. bureaucracy before he decided to send a special emissary to meet with Syrian leader Hafez Assad.

While the White House and State Department were mostly in favor of the move, which automatically raises Assad's status, some U.S. experts on terrorism were against it.

They did not want to ease the pressure applied by Reagan last November when he barred high-level visits to Damascus and ordered a series of sanctions to punish Syria for what the White House said was "continued support for international terrorism."

But the United States is nearing a decision on whether to push for a Mideast peace conference and on who should attend besides the principal parties, Israel and Jordan.

The sanctions Reagan ordered against Syria Nov. 14 sharply reduced the U.S. embassy in Damascus. Ambassador William L. Eagleton Jr., who had been withdrawn earlier, was not returned to his post.

It's been nearly a year since a high-level U.S. official, Assistant Secretary of State Richard W. Murphy, met with President Assad. In the meantime, the Syrian leader indicated during a visit to Moscow that he might support negotiations between Jordan and Israel.

"There's only one person who can tell you what Syria wants to do and that's Assad," a U.S. official, who demanded anonymity, said Friday.

Murphy intends to have that information in hand when he meets July 7 in Geneva with Vladimir Polyakov, a senior Soviet specialist on the Middle East.

It is not clear yet whether the Soviets would be welcome at peace talks, let along Syria, their closest ally in the area.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Secretary of State George P. Shultz have expressed skepticism of Soviet motives and intentions.

The identity of the special emissary, meanwhile, was not disclosed by the administration, although officials hinted the choice was Vernon Walters, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations and a former deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Officials acknowledged privately that Reagan's decision overrode the advice of some counter-terrorism experts in the administration. Over the years, they have compiled a thick file of terrorism incidents to which Syria was linked.

Yet they also said Assad had closed down the Damascus office of Abu Nidal, a Palestinian leader suspected of arranging the massacres at the Rome and Vienna airports in December 1985.

"We have not found them linked to any terrorist act recently," an official, who demanded anonymity, said of the Syrians.

Charles E. Redman, the State Department spokesman, told reporters: "We don't make deals with hostage-takers, we don't negotiate for hostages. That's our policy."

Powell's successor to shape future law

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is on the threshold of making a Supreme Court appointment that could shape American life and the nation's law well into the 21st century.

The legality of abortion and future vitality of programs advancing minorities and women, among numerous other critical issues, may be at stake when the president picks a successor to Justice Lewis F. Powell.

Reagan said he will move swiftly to fulfill what he called "one of the most significant duties of my office."

Powell, who will be 80 on Sept. 19 and has suffered from prostate cancer, announced his retirement Friday.

His departure leaves a temporary void at the very center of the court ideologically. Powell was a pivotal figure for 15 years on the bench, particulary in supplying the deciding vote in upholding affirmative action programs and abortion rights.

"The right to safe and legal abortion has never been in greater jeopardy," said Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League. "The next appointee will determine the future health and well-being of American women and their families."

A bruising battle could be shaping up in the Democratic-controlled Senate, which has the power to confirm or reject Reagan's appointee.

But Democratic leaders conceded that the president, with 18 months left in office, has the upper hand and a filibuster or other delaying tactics stand little chance of success.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said if Reagan "wants to expend an enormous amount of political capital" he probably will win confirmation of someone whose qualifications are mainly sturdy conservative credentials.

The Judiciary Committee's chairman, Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said in a statement: "A major issue upon which this nomination could turn is whether the nominee would alter significantly the balance of the court....

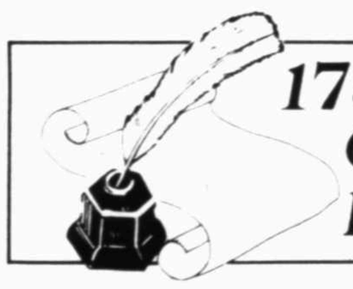
"The scales of justice should not be tipped by ideological biases," said Biden, a presidential contender. "I will resist any efforts by this administration to do indirectly what it has failed to do directly in the Congress — and that is, impose an ideological agenda upon our jurisprudence."

A strongly conservative Supreme Court for years to come is a legacy the president and his supporters likely would regard as a matter of paramount importance.

Reagan has named two justices, Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia, and elevated a third, William H. Rehnquist, to chief justice. On many issues they comprise the conservative wing of the court.

Scalia's selection by Reagan came as no surprise.

O'Connor, unkown on the national scene at the time, was picked in 1981 as Reagan made good on a campaign promise to place a woman on the court for the first time.



1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Thursday, June 28, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The day was clear and pleasant. Farmer and stablekeeper Jacob Hiltzheimer went with this old colleague from the Revolutionary Army's supply system, Col. Timothy Pickering, to look at his meadow.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Once again, only Massachusetts, New York and Virginia and Mr. Kean from South Carolina attended Congress.

CONVENTION TODAY

Luther Martin (Md.) finished the speech he had started yesterday, arguing that the general government should be formed for the states and therefore they should be represented equally. John Lansing (N.Y.), seconded by Jonathan Dayton (N.J.), moved to amend the Resolution 7 to read, "the right of sufferage in the first branch ought to be according to the rule established by the Confederation," one vote per state.

Hugh Williamson (N.C.) opposed the motion — if the states were equally sovereign now and parted with equal proportions of sovereignty — they would remain equally sovereign. James Madison (Va.) also opposed it; even David Brearley (N.J.) and William Paterson (N.J.) had agreed an equal vote was unjust to the larger states. James Wilson (Pa.) chimed in that if the small state argument was followed, instead of London complaining because the rotten borough of Old Sarum had one vote, Old Sarum should complain because London had four. Roger Sherman (Conn.) observed that it wasn't a question of natural rights, but one of how rights may be guarded in society. The question was postponed at the request of the deputies of New York.

Benjamin Franklin (Pa.) then suggested in view of the small progress made and the different sentiments, that the Convention should be opened each day with prayer, as the Congress had been. Sherman seconded. Alexander Hamilton (N.Y.) and others opposed the motion because the practice might rouse fears in the community. Williamson remarked that the Convention had no money to hire a chaplain. Edmund Randolph (Va.) proposed a Fourth of July sermon instead; Franklin seconded. The Convention then managed to adjourn without voting on the motion.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson (Conn.) dined with William and Ann Bingham, and had expenses of 9 shillings.

George Washington dined with the Morrises in a large company, a company which the general noted was not appropriate since news arrived last night that Morris' bills had been protested (the equivalent of having checks bounce). He took tea with the Morrises and spent the evening in his room.

William Blount (N.C.) wrote from Philadelphia to his brother in Washington, N.C.: "I am not at Liberty to say what is done or doing in Convention but I can say things are so much in Embryo that I could give you no Satisfactory account if I was ever so much at Liberty. It is generaly supposed the Convention will continue to sit for two months at least."

LOOKING BACK
Franklin Prayer Proposal

It is ironic that a motion which had nothing to do with the provisions of the proposed Constitution, and which was not voted on, is probably the best known of the hundreds brought before the Convention. However, that is the case with Franklin's motion to open the sessions with prayer.

Some of the fame of this motion may derive from its incongruous source — was not among the most devout or formally religious of the delegates. Some of it may derive from the timing, at the end of a day of heated, even ill-tempered, debate. Some of it probably derives from its susceptibility to improvement, such as the story that Hamilton argued against the motion because the delegates were competent to transact the business entrusted to them and did not need to call in foreign aid.

Once made, the motion was seconded by Roger Sherman, a devout Puritan. Hamilton and others objected — word that the Convention had called for prayer would leak out and alarm the public. However, it was a firm Presbyterian minister who voiced the strongest argument. Hugh Williamson noted that the Convention had no funds and therefore couldn't offer honoraria.

'Someone knew' pediatrician's little secret

By PAIGE St. JOHN

Haynes

BRAMWELL, W.Va. (AP) — Through a distinguished 37-year career, pediatrician Ralph Haynes hid a dark secret from medical watchdogs — until the day he shot himself as police arrived on his doorstep to serve 21 child molestation charges.

"Somewhere in this man's career, someone knew there was a problem and ignored it," said Sgt. Steven Fritz, the suburban Dayton police detective who finally investigated the complaints.

Ohio authorities traveled to Haynes' southern West Virginia hometown June 18 to arrest the bespectacled, white-haired 62-year-old doctor on 10 counts of gross sexual imposition, 10 counts of corruption of a minor and one count of rape.

The doctor walked onto his front porch to greet the cars coming up the drive, then bolted back inside the house when he saw one was a West Virginia state police cruiser.

Seconds later, three shots echoed from Haynes' basement. With three .38-caliber bullet holes in his heart, the doctor was pronounced dead at the scene.

Haynes spared himself the anguish of criminal charges but left licensing boards and fellow physicians to answer how such incidents could go unreported and ignored.

"To know and not report it — I'd call that negligence. That's certainly not legally right," said Dr. P.R. Higgenbotham, board chairman for Southern West Virginia Regional Health Council, which ran the public clinic where Haynes worked.

Higgenbotham said he was unaware of the cloud following Haynes from job to job. Haynes' immediate previous employer, Dr. Maurice Kogut, medical director at Children's Medical Center, affiliated with Wright State University Medical School in Dayton, Ohio, said no one from the West Virginia clinic ever called him for a job refeence.

Others acknowledge they knew of Haynes' problem but did nothing to stop his pediatric work. John Beljan, a former Wright State dean, said he hired Haynes for Children's Medical Center in 1978 even after allegations of molestation surfaced in the screening process.

Instead of rejecting Haynes, Beljan said, the school required him to continue the psychiatric treatment he had begun earlier.

"Ralph had an incredible reputation as a pediatrician," Beljan said, then added, "I think I would run the risk again.

"I think it was knowing that we knew that facilitated his psychiatric care," Beljan said. "From my point of view, that was more than adequate protection for the public."

Haynes specialized in infectious childhood diseases and joined a research team working with encephalitis cases. In 1981, his students voted him Outstanding Faculty Member of the Year.

But the problem surfaced again. Kogut said he confronted Haynes in October 1981 about allegations of homosexual activity, and the doctor admitted being bisexual and submitted his resignation.

Nevertheless, Kogut and Beljan did not report the new allegations to Ohio's medical board, a step now required by Ohio state law.

The criminal charges that police were trying to serve when Haynes shot himself involved "fewer than 10" teen-age boys, none of them patients, Fritz said. Fritz would not specify how many teens were involved but said investigators believed they could prove as many as 170 counts against the doctor in incidents occurring from 1979 to 1986.

The teens' parents turned the doctor in when the boys finally told them what had happened. Fritz said the youths involved had kept quiet because, as one told him, "There are certain people you are brought up in life to respect."

"Dr. Haynes was good to them. He took them to ball games, to King's Island (an amusement park), bought them things," Fritz said. "He had video games, so they would come over and play those. Everyone I talked to said nothing was said because 'he was good to me and treated my family good.'"

Haynes returned to Dayton on Memorial Day, and it was there, in the home of one of the youths, that the teen-ager confronted the doctor about what had happened, Fritz said. Police secretly videotaped the episode as Haynes, desperate to avoid discovery, pleaded with the young man to keep his secret.

"We got Dr. Haynes on his knees three times begging this kid not to tell anybody," Fritz said. "He said he was planning to go straight.

"It's really scary to think he had unlimited access to children."

Haynes was licensed in West Virginia in 1950 after graduating from the Medical College of Richmond, Va., interning at Cincinnati General Hospital and completing his residency at Children's Hospital at Cincinnati. He opened a children's clinic in the early 1960s in partnership with Dr. William Bruck at Bluefield, W.Va., not far from Bramwell.

Haynes left the Bluefield clinic in 1966 for "personal reasons," according to Bruck, who in an interview refused to say anything more about his former partner. Later that year, Haynes was hired at Ohio State University in Columbus. In 1978, he joined Wright State's medical faculty.

Three years later, Dr. Emanuel Kauder, the former chief executive at Children's Medical Center, became concerned that Haynes was spending too much time with a patient, taking the youth to outside activities.

When Kauder confronted Haynes, the pediatrician resigned and retreated to the family homestead outside Bramwell, where his father, a coal hauler and later a Sunday school teacher, had raised three daughters and six sons, with Haynes in the middle.

In Bramwell, Haynes befriended a local high school youth, according to Mayor Glenn Scott, who said the doctor took the boy to baseball games and bought him clothes. Scott said residents admired the quiet, almost shy doctor for his church work and turned their eyes from all else.

Loss of panda cub mourned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Heartbroken zookeepers said Saturday that a panda cub died of respiratory arrest less than four days after its seemingly healthy birth to Ling-Ling at the National Zoo.

Doctors who examined the female cub said it apparently developed an infection that caused fluid to fill its abdomen and lungs, killing it shortly before midnight Friday while it was in its mother's arms.

"The fluid in the abdominal cavity for the size of that cub was quite large. Fluid in the cavity was the terminal event," said Richard Montali, the zoo's chief pathologist.

He said it apparently was caused by an infection, perhaps peritonitis, although tests are still being done. Final results on the cause of death may not be known for several days.

Montali said there was no sign that the cub, which weighed 140.6 grams, or about 5 ounces, had been crushed or injured in her mother's large paws.

Ling-Ling, who had three other cubs which died, had been extremely protective of her offspring after its birth early Tuesday morning. She nursed the cub, left it for only a few seconds at a time and always rushed back when it kicked and squealed.

The cub's loud squealing faded into silence at 11:41 p.m. Friday and the zoo staff became alarmed when it did not move. Ling-Ling licked and cradled the cub for almost an hour and a half before her cage was opened at 1:43 a.m. and she went outdoors, allowing zookeepers to recover the cub's body.

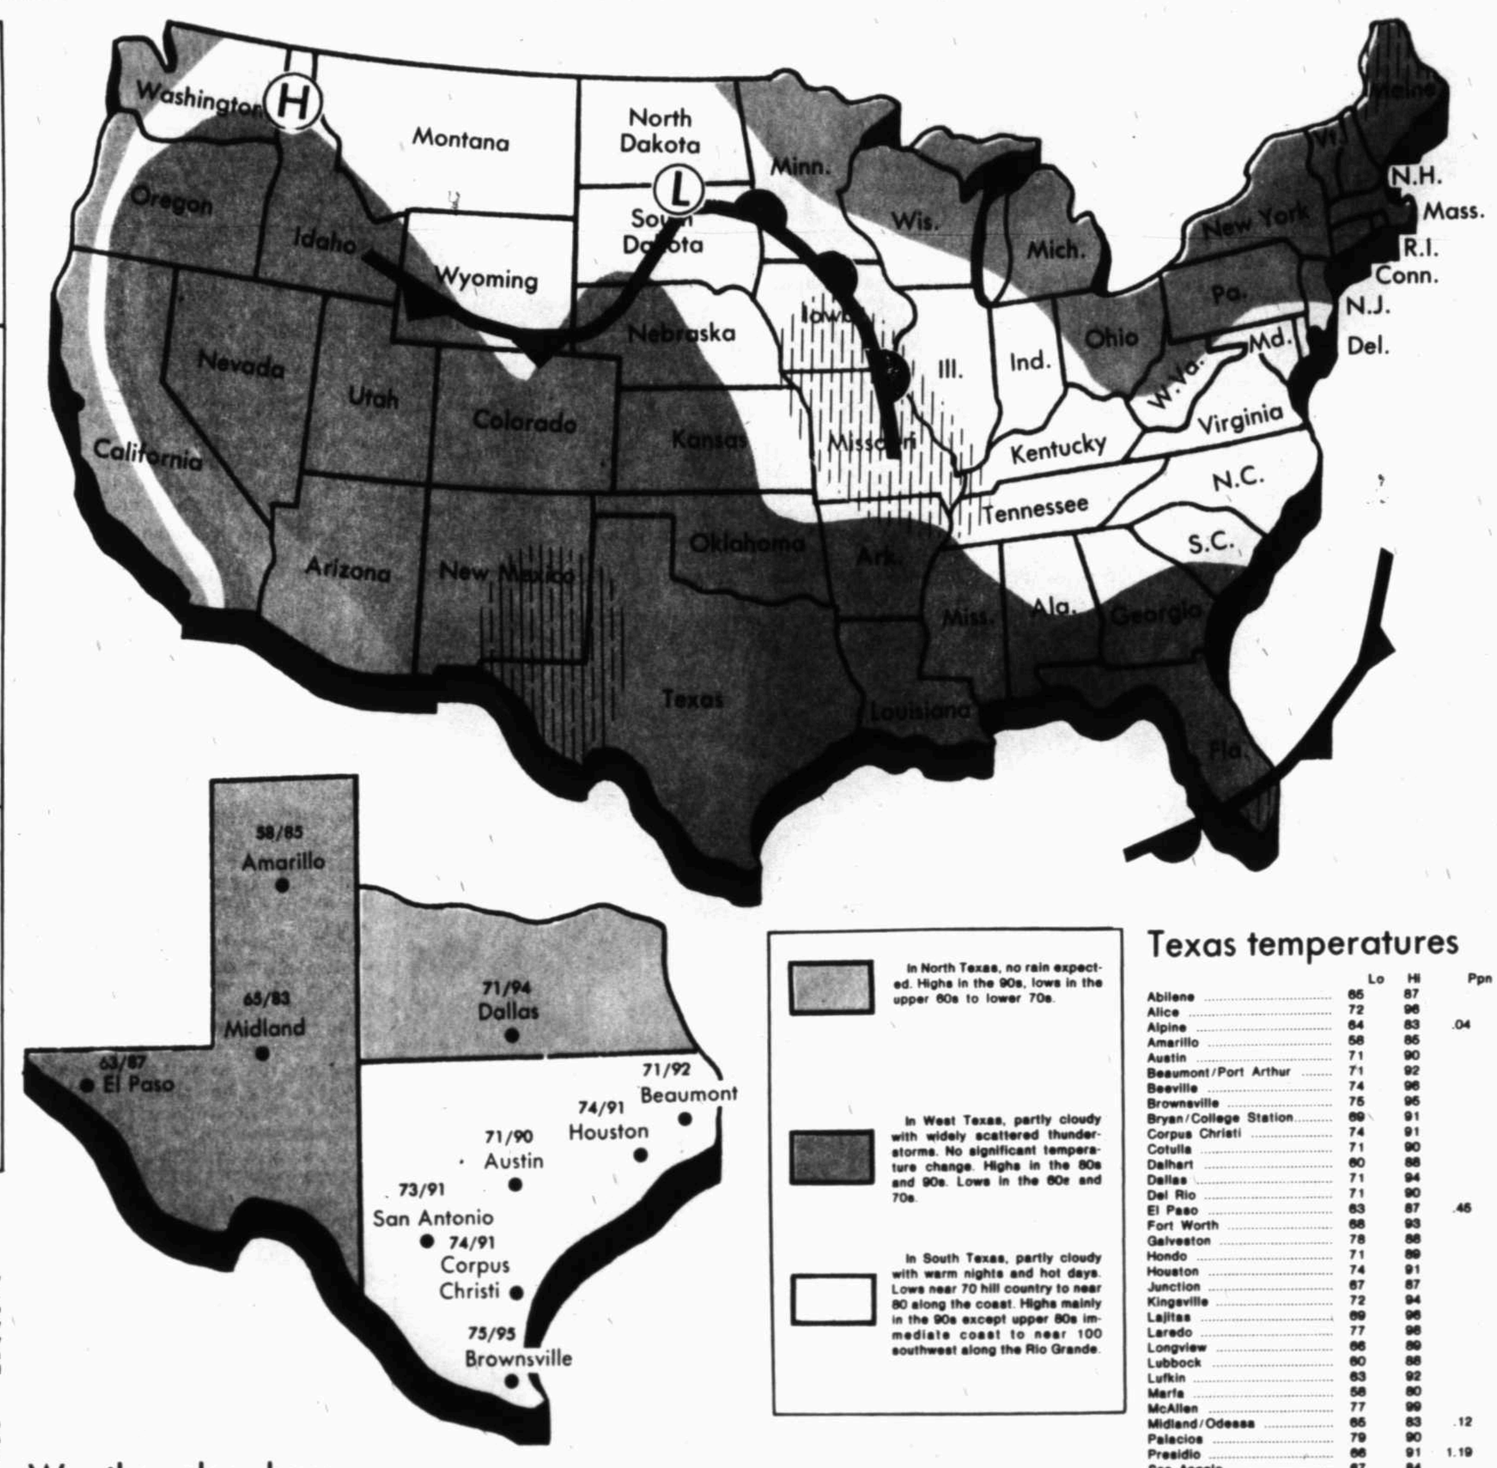
WEATHER SUMMARY

Forecast for 8 PM Sunday



Thunderstorms possible in area

From Staff Reports

Midlanders might want to keep their umbrellas handy throughout the weekend because the forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies this morning with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport predicts skies will become partly cloudy this afternoon. Winds will be from the south at 10 to 15 mph. The high should be in the upper 80s.

Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms. A low in the mid 60s is expected.

On Monday, skies will be partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high should reach the lower 90s.

Saturday's high of 83 was 23 degrees cooler than the record of 106, set in 1980. The low of 65 was 13 degrees warmer than the record of 52, set in 1985.

STATE

Scattered showers dampened the Trans-Pecos and the Edwards Plateau Saturday because of a weak upper-level disturbance over the far west, while a high-pressure system brought fair skies to most of North and South Texas.

Bands of high-level clouds streaked across the southern sections of the Panhandle, the National Weather Service reported.

Afternoon temperature were in the upper 80s and lower 90s across most of the state. West Texas was a little bit cooler, with temperatures in the low to middle 80s.

The 3 p.m. extremes ranged from 68 degrees at Guadalupe Pass in the Trans-Pecos to 96 degrees at Laredo in the Rio Grande Plains, the weather service said.

South to southeast winds prevailed in north Central Texas, the Low Rolling Plains and the High Plains. East to northeast winds were common across South Texas. Light and variable winds were reported elsewhere.

A chance of thunderstorms is forecast across the western two-thirds of Texas Sunday. Generally fair skies were expected elsewhere. High temperatures in the 90s should prevail through much of the state, with the Big Bend reaching the lower 100s.

NATION

Locally heavy rain fell Saturday on northern New England, producing a threat of floods, and rain also was scattered elsewhere over a large part of the eastern half of the nation.

A flood watch was issued for all of New Hampshire except coastal sections of Rockingham County. The state had gotten 2 to 2½ inches of rain by midafternoon and rain continued falling heavily.

Sharp reaction may greet pruning orders

City traffic inspectors are battling with Midland green thumbs to keep vegetation from blocking views and signs at intersections, and the rules are making some Midlanders unhappy.

Traffic engineer Fred McGrary said his fight to keep mother nature's green growth from blinding drivers at intersections has become all the harder during the last two years because of heavy rains causing local foliage to flourish.

City officials are negotiating this month with two Midland families who do not want to cut down trees blocking views at intersections, McGrary said.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram was unable to reach the two residents for comment.

Getting people to cut down the blinding greenery is "tough," McGrary admits.

"Ninety percent of the people you feel sorry for because they don't know what's going on," he said.

McGrary advised gardeners to, "Watch where you are planting or call us and ask us."

The city's traffic department handles about 150 cases a month — half which are called in by irate drivers, McGrary said.

During the summer three traffic employees work full time hacking away at branches blocking stop signs and notifying homeowners about errant plants blocking vision at intersections, McGrary said.

The two ordinances prohibiting anything but grass in the city's right of way and shrubbery taller than three feet from blocking views at intersections is to protect the public's safety and the city from lawsuits, explained City Attorney David Reagan.

At the request of City Council last week, the legal staff is reviewing changing one rule to allow small shrubs and planters in the rights of way, Reagan said.

The ordinance restricting where people can plant was passed in 1979 during the case Jezek vs. the City of Midland.

The case involved a young Midland man, who was hit and became paraplegic after he pulled out of an intersection where the view was blocked by bushes, Reagan said.

Ruling on the Jezek case in 1980, the Texas Supreme Court found that cities were liable for "obstructions to view" at intersections and Midland had to pay a $1.2 million settlement, Reagan said.

Since the ordinance was passed, the city has had to settle a few minor claims, but no major lawsuits involving traffic accidents caused by obstructions of view, he said.

Most people will clear the trees or plants once they are notified by the city, McGrary said.

However, there are a few gardeners every year who refuse to part with their foliage, and the cases are taken to municipal court, McGrary said.

"People are still going to be mad because you didn't tell them about it earlier," he said.

"They say, 'I can see the problem, but look at all the money I wasted.'"

One violation brought before the council last week included a Green Tree Country Club yard of the month, prompting Councillor Katie Heck to suggest that the city work with nursery and landscape companies to educate them about the ordinance.

"The individual citizens are getting a bad break. They're putting together some beautiful stuff that might have to be pulled out," Ms. Heck said.

Foresight is the key to preventing having to dig up one's favorite new tree or bush, McGrary said.

"It's just that people don't think about it until it already happened," he said.

You might say that Vannah Kleinbeck, left, and her husband, David, are trading in one set of china for another. The pair, Midland school teachers during most of the year, will leave their part-time jobs as dish salespersons at a local department store later this season for a visit to the exotic far East.

Who ya' gonna call?

At 10:15 p.m. June 14, a Midland convenience store was robbed, but the robbery was not reported until 4:30 p.m. the next day.

That is an extreme example of a festering problem that police say is hampering their efforts to catch crooks.

"The problem is crimes aren't being reported right after they occur," said Tonna Rice, MPD communications supervisor. "And the problem is mainly with major crimes, such as robbery."

Police estimate that the lack of quick action by citizens costs four to five minutes in response time, which Ms. Rice terms "not a great amount, but it is critical.

"When we have that kind of delay, by then usually the actor has left the scene," she said. "The chances for apprehension are lessened."

Veteran police officer B.K. Lann, a sergeant, said the problem has happened "with every crime that comes up."

"We've had burglary calls — when the burglar is still in the house — and a woman will call her husband first, talk to him, and then he will call the police," Lann said.

"It doesn't make any difference what kind of response time you have when that happens. The burglar is going to be gone."

Lann said victims frequently will call a friend, a relative, or co-worker before calling police.

Significant delays were noted in at least three of the 11 robberies reported to police so far this month, Ms. Rice said.

Two of the robberies occurred at businesses and the other at a private residence, she said.

An Austin-based loss prevention expert for Southland Corp., owner of 7-Eleven convenience stores, says clerks are required to call police immediately after a robbery.

"We never have them call the manager first," said Larry Morgan. "As soon as it happens, as soon as it happens, they are required to call the police."

Morgan said he has heard of flustered clerks who will call their bosses before police, but he said it happens "very seldom."

Ms. Rice disagreed.

"We have been having this problem for years," she said. "I've never taken a robbery call where the manager was not already there when we got there."

So far in 1987, five 7-Eleven stores in Midland and Odessa have been robbed, and each time police have been notified immediately, Morgan said.

Immediate notification is a key to police effectiveness, Ms. Rice agreed.

"Calling someone else is not going to help in the apprehension of a criminal. You need to get help on the way," she said."

Midland teachers reveal what they do on vacation

By JANE MARLER DEES

During the three hottest months of the year, a teacher's outward appearance and lower spinal region lack any horizontal evidence of chalk board leanings.

At the end of the day, he finds no blotches of blue mimeo machine ink which have so artfully ruined his Father's Day cardigan from two years ago.

Or in another case, her hair no longer reeks of the Turkish tobacco a certain crusty-skinned biology teacher insists on smoking during his intense lounge comparisons of a pig's and a frog's reproductive systems.

There are no more chicken spaghetti, tator tot and fruit cup lunches.

It is summer.

Most teachers like to unwind during the summer, said David Kleinbeck, a Lee High School German and French instructor.

"I enjoy teaching...it's a blast and I love the kids...but you need to get revitalized so you don't come back dull.

"If you're dead when you're teaching it doesn't work," Kleinbeck said. Wife and professional peer Vannah Kleinbeck, a science teacher at San Jacinto Junior High, agreed.

And the two of them — paying heed to their travel bug — will leave their part-time jobs at a local department store and jet to China later in the season to unwind and see more of the world.

Midland High English Department Chairman Sarah Macina plans to enjoy one specific region of the world — namely, the clouds that hover over her mountaintop cabin in Eagle's Nest, N.M.

"When I was a little girl I used to say to my mother, 'Oh goody, here come the afternoon thunderstorms,'" the English teacher remembered.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

English teacher Sarah Macina likely was disappointed during this day of cloud watching, a summertime practice she enjoys.

"With the dryness, the clouds form readily and rapidly. It fascinates me; their color ranges from white to dark gray to the blue on the underside of thunderstorm clouds.

"It just gives the landscape that 'Monet look,'" Mrs. Macina said, refering to the etheral look of French expressionist painter Claude Monet. "There are few mechanical sounds around."

Mrs. Macina said unwinding after the school year takes a while, and sometimes "dirty literature 102" — maybe a juicy mystery novel — helps.

The bureaucratic end of teaching can get tough, she explained, citing grading deadlines and personnel problems. "Constant decisions have to be made."

All three educators agreed their calming summer endeavors positively affect — in varying degrees — their subsequent teaching attitudes the following fall.

"It keeps my mind open to cultural differences. I'm more aware of the ways people think," Kleinbeck explained.

"A lot of kids have stayed here too long." Kleinbeck said he remembered the case of a 17-year-old who'd "never been further than Stanton to the east and Odessa to the west."

Kleinbeck believes in his philosophy so much that he is organizing a student trip to Bavaria next year, he added.

Mrs. Kleinbeck uses photos she takes in Europe to illustrate points she makes in her science class.

While Mrs. Macina doesn't talk much about cloud formations in her classes, the peace she finds in the mountains does make for a more pleasant class come fall, she said.

Local parents fill the bill with Project Self-Sufficiency

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Dozens of local single parents achieved their desire to get off welfare last year when the federal government stepped in and offered $100,000 to help them become self-sufficient.

Officials have little doubt that the government got its money's worth when it selected Midland to join 76 other U.S. cities in the nationwide Department of Housing and Urban Development program last April.

With a 75 percent local success rate, Project Self-Sufficiency has aided single parents with their rent while training them for better paying jobs.

Of the 275 families waiting for housing assistance in Midland County, most are headed by one parent, said Jerrie Westmoreland, executive director of Housing Community Development.

Project Self-Sufficiency screens male and female low income applicants who are faced with supporting their families on minimum wages and state assistance, but aspire to obtain more education and better jobs.

"Our purpose is to break the poverty cycle and help people get off welfare," Ms. Westmoreland said.

Midland Housing Community Development administers the HUD funds which provides the 30 single parents with housing assistance while they complete job training or education.

Ms. Westmoreland has applied for a $60,000 grant from the Midland City Council to complete the pilot project this year and extend it another 12 months.

"Welfare was started to allow the upward mobility of low income people. But it wasn't doing its job. It created welfare dependency," Ms. Westmoreland said.

Project Self-Sufficiency — part of welfare reform — is a "step in the right direction" because it encourages people to "make it on their own," she added.

A task force comprised of community and civic leaders screen and select participants for Project Self-Sufficiency. The task force also coordinates free services and programs singles are eligible for, but don't know they exist.

Such services include job training, scholarships and courses to prepare for the General Equivalency Degree exam.

"It (Project Self-Sufficiency) is contolled by local people. It's only as good as we make it," Ms. Westmoreland said.

Of the persons who work and receive housing assistance, most make minimum wages that amount to a yearly income of less than $7,000, according to Ms. Westmoreland.

Those who want to acquire improved educational opportunities and better wages usually drop out of training programs because they can't earn enough part-time wages to support their families, she added.

Finding baby sitters and transportation also hold many parents back, Ms. Westmoreland said.

With volunteer help, Project Self-Sufficiency aids in getting these persons into jobs and school.

Of the more than 100 applicants, 40 have moved on to better opportunities, 16 are enrolled in post-secondary education, five received General Educational Development certificates, two are in vocational training and one dropped out of the program because of an illness, Ms. Westmoreland said.

Project Self-Sufficiency also celebrated its first graduate of Midland College in May when a single mother received an associates degree in nursing with honors.

"She was actually starving to death when she walked into this office. Now she's making it on her own," Ms. Westmoreland said.

"These are the kinds of the things we're doing to help."

Jackie Gleason: Like everyone else, I was his 'biggest fan'

Ott

When I walked into the office Thursday morning, the first thing I heard was the editor in charge of monitoring the Associated Press wire discussing with one of her assistants what kind of play to give the Jackie Gleason obituary.

I was stunned.

"Jackie Gleason died?"

"Yeah," she replied. "Cancer."

I lit a cigarette — sort of in his honor, I guess — and stared at the wall.

Jackie Gleason was one of my heroes. I don't have many, mind you, but he was definitely near the top of the list. Now, he's gone. It doesn't seem fair.

What surprised me, however, was how his death affected other people, especially those who are relatively young and wouldn't seem to have a strong reason for being attracted to the "Great One."

Still, everywhere I went Thursday I heard people talking about him.

Everyone, it seemed, was his "biggest fan."

I suppose the recent airing of his "Honeymooners" reruns helped his popularity. After all, Ralph Kramden can now be seen twice daily on cable television. And, since we're a nostalgic breed by nature, the old black-and-white classics provide us with a reason to remember how great old television really was.

And no one was better than Jackie Gleason.

His show, based in Miami, Fla., was considered a must in our home when I was growing up. The entire family would gather around the TV and laugh as he said, "And, away we go!" or "How sweet it is!"

I once asked my mother, one of the great teetotalers of all time, what was in that cup he would drink from before saying "How sweet it is!"

She cleared her throat, blushed slightly and said, "Why coffee, of course."

Out of the corner of my eye, I could see my dad laughing.

Now that I know a little more about Jackie Gleason's lifestyle, I think I can safely assume the cup contained a substance called Scotch.

Indeed, in one of the obituaries about him it stated that his five passions in life were food, booze, cigarettes, music and golf.

I knew right then why I liked him.

To borrow an old cliche, he lived life by his own rules and I respect people who do that.

There was a recent interview with him on "60 Minutes." During the entire 20-minute segment, he played pool, smoked cigarettes and laughed a lot. He kept the interviewer, Morley Safer, in stitches with stories from the past. He openly admitted his love of liquor and pretty girls.

After undergoing triple coronary bypass surgery a few years ago, he scarcely cut back on his six-pack-a-day cigarette habit.

"You only live once," he said at the time. "Let's live it up."

Obviously, there are those who will say his bad habits, especially the cigarettes, did him in. After all, he died of cancer.

But, did he really lose?

When he died he was 71 and his wife said, "He had been in high spirits."

If Oral Roberts, who seems to have a lot to say about who lives and dies these days, wants to make me that same offer, I'll take him up on it in a New York second.

Attack on minister's wife leaves questions

DALLAS (AP) — Nine weeks after the Rev. Walker Railey's wife was attacked and almost choked to death, she remains in a coma and the minister, recovered from a drug overdose taken when police wanted to question him, has a lawyer and isn't talking to authorities.

Railey

He says he didn't assault his wife and didn't write threatening letters received before the attack. He has not been charged with any crime.

Diane Yarrington, a friend and member of his congregation at First United Methodist Church, said she worries that police may be looking no further than Railey, while the real attacker may be "off laughing."

Railey realizes that suspicion was cast upon him when he tried to kill himself.

"There are people who are playing 'Murder She Wrote' with my life and the lives of my family," he said in a recent interview at his home. "Everyone on the street corner seems to have some speculation on what happened and who did it. I didn't do it, but there are times when I feel I'm the only one in the world that thinks that."

Early on April 22, Mrs. Yarrington and her husband, John, got an urgent call from Railey.

"He said: 'Come quick! Something awful has happened to Peggy!' " Mrs. Yarrington said. "He was terrified when he called us."

The pastor's 38-year-old wife was unconscious, choked almost to death.

Railey, 40, who had been receiving threatening, racist letters, said he found her on the floor of their garage after returning from a college library about midnight.

The attack shocked Dallas. It was especially hard on members of First United Methodist, where Walker and Margaret "Peggy" Railey had been central figures since he became senior pastor in 1980.

Then on May 1, as police prepared to question Railey about discrepancies in his account of events the night of the attack, he took an overdose of tranquilizers.

Police revealed that six threatening letters, believed to have been sent to Railey because of his sermons on civil rights, were written on a typewriter at First Methodist Church.

Railey, who had preached Easter Sunday wearing a bulletproof vest, had written a journal saying he was struggling with demons.

He checked himself into a psychiatric hospital for seven weeks after recovering from the drug overdose.

"I didn't do it," Railey says of the attack on his wife. He also denies writing threatening letters to himself, saying he'd be too smart to type them on a church typewriter.

The Raileys' children, Megan, 2, and Ryan, 5, are staying with the Yarringtons.

Railey choked back tears as he looked at their pictures. "It's real scary thinking that they may have just one parent," he said.

"I'm not a pessimist," he said. "I'm not a blind optimist, either. The doctors are not very encouraging."

Police Capt. John Holt said investigators still find discrepancies in Railey's account of his actions and whereabouts the night Mrs. Railey was attacked.

They want to question him again, but Railey said he would talk to police only on the advice of his attorney, Doug Mulder.

Retained by Railey's friends, Mulder said the pastor passed a lie detector test administered by an independent examiner. Police said results of a test given by them were inconclusive.

On June 10, Railey and Mulder flew to Salt Lake City where another polygraph exam was given. Results were not disclosed, but Mulder said he would continue to consult experts to clear Railey of any involvement in the attack.

Holt said regardless of who gives a polygraph exam or the outcome, "there are still discrepancies that need to be cleared up."

"What we need is to sit down and go over his account of what transpired the night of the attack on his wife and try to resolve these very serious concerns we have so that the investigation can continue."

Railey became assistant pastor at First Methodist after earning his degree. Within three years, he was appointed senior minister of a church in suburban Farmers Branch.

He returned to First Methodist in 1980 and was credited with a surge of growth at the old downtown church, whose membership now is about 6,000.

The United Methodist Publishing House had planned to publish two books by Railey, one on preaching and the other a collection of sermons. Those have been put on hold since his suicide attempt.

Railey said he had always believed he would spend the rest of his life preaching.

Mosquito control begins with a few precautions

By LYN MILLER

Summer is here again and with it comes some not-so-welcomed visitors to Midland...mosquitoes.

The Midland Health Department would like to remind everyone of a few precautions to take to get rid of breeding places of these pests:

— Discard any containers with water standing in them.

— Flatten or dispose of tin cans.

— Drain or properly maintain swimming pools.

— Place old tires where the water cannot get into them.

— Empty and wash birdbaths often.

— Be sure that any container in which water is stored is tightly closed.

— Clean out water gutters.

— Cut weeds and tall grass around your home.

Should you find mosquitoes inside your house, a good household spray designed for the control of flying insects may be used to rid your house of the intruders.

Repellants should be used anytime mosquitoes are present outside to protect humans, as well as pets.

Horses may be vaccinated against Western Equine Encephalitis, which is transmitted by mosquitoes.

The health department operates a mosquito control program and encourages the public to inform them of any areas having a problem with mosquitoes. Their surveillance program includes checking and spraying the parks and other areas for standing water which might encourage mosquito growth activity.

Call 683-4281, Ext. 423-425, if you have a problem with unwanted mosquitoes.

Although summer is just beginning, the Midland Health Department would like to remind parents that in Texas, state law requires that immunizations for polio, tetanus, measles, rubella, mumps and diphtheria be given to children before they register in public schools.

While the beginning of school may seem a long time away, it is best to obtain any needed immunizations as soon as possible and not wait until the final days of vacation. By doing so, the rush just before school starts can be avoided.

All parents of school age children are urged to review their children's shot records and ascertain if immunizations are needed.

Immunizations may be obtained at your family physician's office or at the Midland Health Department, 501 Andrews Highway.

The Health Department Immunization Clinic's special summer hours, July 20 through September, are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Mondays only. The fee is $5 per child, however, a fee of $7.50 per child will be charged during the month of August.

Regular hours of 8 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m., on Mondays only, will resume after September.

A parent or guardian must accompany a student under 18 years of age in order to sign consent forms. Previous shot records or a letter from the school nurse indicating what shots are needed is required.

So, take a tip from your Health Department, immunize early and avoid the rush.

Lyn Miller, an employee at Midland City Hall, coordinates the information for this columns.

Parents plan to pursue Davis suit

FORT WORTH (AP) — The parents of a 12-year-old girl killed at the Cullen Davis mansion say they want to continue pursuing a multimillion-dollar civil suit against the Fort Worth oil heir.

Jack Wilborn says the money is secondary to the opportunity to hold Davis legally responsible for the shooting spree in which Wilborn's daughter, Andrea, was killed.

A Tarrant County jury deadlocked at 8-4 Monday after trial of combined lawsuits seeking $16.5 million for wrongful death and personal injury. The lawsuits were filed against Davis by Wilborn and Priscilla Davis, his ex-wife and Andrea's mother

Pilot killed in Monahans air crash

From Staff Reports

MONAHANS — An airplane stalled 200 feet into a vertical aerobatic maneuver and crashed nose first at Hurd Memorial Airport Saturday, killing the pilot on board, authorities said.

Michael Parker, 29, of Miami, Fla., was enroute to Riverside, Calif. in his Citraba — a small aerobatic aircraft — when he landed at the airport for fuel, a Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman said.

According to DPS reports, Parker took off to check weather conditions by climbing vertically in the aircraft. At 200 feet into the climb, the plane stalled and plunged nose first into a nearby field.

Parker was pronounced dead at 6:44 p.m. by Ward County Justice of the Peace Ronald Ray.

The Federal Aviation Administration is investigating the crash.

The DPS report said Miss Gaskins was traveling west on County Road 28 when she collided with a 1973 Chevrolet pickup driven by Allen Edward Sundy, 60, of Big Spring.

Developments make SSC plan viable

In a surprising development this week, the Garden City superconducting super collider got a fresh breath of life and an independent proposal will be presented directly to the Department of Energy.

A number of developments affected that decision. One was receipt of a $50,000 anonymous donation to be used in polishing the Garden City proposal. Another was announcement that two national firms are interested in constructing the physics laboratory at the Garden City site and leasing it to the federal government, an interesting prospect. A third — and certainly one of the most important — is revelation that wording was altered in a letter signed that was intended to show local support for the state's SSC choices of Dallas and Amarillo, in effect invalidating the pledge to support those sites.

Representatives of the Garden City SSC Commission from Odessa and San Angelo chose to not support a direct-to-DOE submission. That left Midland and Big Spring backing the submission. Of course, the bottom line of the decision to make a direct submission to the Department of Energy is the belief that the Garden City proposal offers definite advantages even though it wasn't one of the two sites chosen by the Texas National Laboratory Commission in May. We agree that the Garden City site offers advantages that may not be available elsewhere in the nation and that those factors might be enough to get the attention of individuals in Washington, D.C.

One used earlier was the cost of construction. The Garden City site offered a geology conducive to tunneling, no rivers or highways to cross, and above-average transportation access. The cost advantage may now be diminished in light of the proposal to build the facility privately and lease it to the federal government, but that feature in itself offers a definite advantage. Privatization has been one of the "calling cards" of the Reagan Administration and that's exactly what the Garden City proposal involves.

Earlier we had expressed concerns that taking a proposal directly to DOE would be a mistake because of the additional money that would have to be raised on a "long shot" and the promise to support the state's choice of sites. Those concerns have been resolved now and we agree that a case should be made to the federal government for an alternative proposal that is attractive because it is reasonable. It keeps costs in line and offers a facility in an environment that is favorable.

Even more than that, though, the people of this region are willing to go an extra mile — or two — to show the federal government that we want to be home to the superconducting super collider.

Another View:

Negative advertising

It's probably true, as some members of the U.S. Senate and some political scientists assert, that the use of negative televised political advertising, so prominent in recent campaigns around the country, has contributed to public cynicism about politicians and government.

If all the voters ever hear are negative messages about candidates for office, it's easy to conclude that all candidates are equally untrustworthy. As a consequence, the Senate is considering a crackdown on what its members see as an epidemic of negative campaign advertising.

But more than concern for the public interest moves the senators. As incumbents, they are most frequently the target of negative election campaigns.

It's a relatively simple matter for a challenger to pick out a controversial vote by an incumbent, often distorting its context, and highlight it in a negative TV commercial.

Restrictions on "negative" ads would tend to favor incumbents, who are already blessed with many political advantages. For senators to write rules that give them an another advantage in campaigns is scarcely the best way to make voters less cynical about the political process.

More important, it's a serious danger to free speech. The First Amendment prohibits government from telling citizens what they may say or hear about public matters. The reform bill's legal requirement that senatorial candidates appear on the air in at least 50 percent of any TV commercial and personally deliver any attack on their opponent is not likely to withstand court challenge.

Who's to say what's an attack and what merely a declaration of one's own virtues? What agency will be empowered to review these messages for acceptable content? If senators can make it difficult for rival candidates to attack their record in campaign advertisments, what is to keep them from putting similar restraints on political interest groups, the press and individual citizens?

Controlling how candidates raise and spend money is a vital element of campaign reform; restricting what candidates may say or how they say it is a self-interested excursion into constitutionally dangerous waters. The Constitution has always trusted the electorate to make proper judgments about improper political attacks and to register them at the polls. It's still hard to imagine a better way.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 28, the 179th day of 1987. There are 186 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 28, 1914, Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, Sofia, were assassinated in present-day Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, by a Serbian revolutionary. The event triggered World War I. Exactly five years later, the Treaty of Versailles was signed in France, officially ending the international conflict.

On this date:

In 1491, England's King Henry VIII was born in Greenwich.

In 1778, Mary Ludwig Hays gained the name "Molly Pitcher" and a place in U.S. history by aiding American forces at the Revolutionary War Battle of Monmouth in New Jersey.

In 1836, James Madison, the fourth president of the United States, died.

In 1838, Britain's Queen Victoria was crowned in Westminster Abbey.

In 1919, Harry S. Truman married Elizabeth Virginia Wallace in Independence, Mo.

In 1939, Pan American Airways began regular transatlantic air service as the Dixie Clipper left Port Washington, N.Y., for Portugal.

In 1950, North Korean forces captured Seoul, South Korea.

In 1978, the Supreme Court ordered a California medical school to admit Allan Bakke, a white man who claimed he was a victim of reverse discrimination when the school rejected his application.

In 1983, a section of bridge along Interstate 95 in Connecticut collapsed, killing three people.

Ten years ago: The Supreme Court upheld a 1974 law giving the government control over former President Richard M. Nixon's White House papers and tape recordings.

Five years ago: Britain's Prince Charles and Princess Diana ended a week of speculation over what they were going to call their newborn son by announcing they had chosen the name "William."

One year ago: President Reagan used his weekly radio address to blast sweeping trade legislation passed by the House, saying it would "jeopardize our hard-won economic prosperity."

Today's Birthdays: Comedian-movie director Mel Brooks is 61.

Refugee aid may have gone to contras

WASHINGTON — Was U.S. government aid intended for refugees misdirected to support the Nicaraguan contras during the time when Congress had cut off official funding of the anti-Sandinista rebels? A private relief agency's report, kept under wraps for two years, suggests that this was the case.

Jack Anderson

Our reporter Lisa Sylvester obtained a copy of the eight-page Catholic Relief Services report, written in March 1985 by a CRS field worker who had visited refugee camps in the Honduran-Nicaraguan border area. It offers further evidence to support the stories we reported then about how humanitarian aid funds were helping the contras. CRS had no role in the distribution of the funds but was on an observation mission in the area.

The Catholic Relief report was critical of the handling of $7.5 million in Agency for International Development funds, most of which ended up in refugee camps operated by ultra-conservative groups working with the contras. In fact, the report charges, much of the AID money could be traced directly to contra groups based in the area near the camps.

After two years, memories differ over the Catholic Relief report and the stir it caused in Foggy Bottom.

A congressional staffer familiar with the report said it had been "a great headache" for Catholic Relief Services director Lawrence Pezzullo. The storm abated, the congressional aide recalled, when Pezzullo assured AID officials that the report did not reflect Catholic Relief's official position.

When asked about this, Pezzullo said he wasn't aware that the 1985 report had prompted any grumbling at AID. He said our inquiry was the first he has ever had on the report. When asked if Catholic Relief and AID had exchanged letters about the report or its contents, Pezzullo said he couldn't remember. He did repeat the earlier position attributed to him: that the report did not reflect official Catholic Relief views.

Peter Shiras, the Catholic Relief employee who wrote the 1985 report, would say for the record only what his boss, Pezzullo, had stated about the report: "It was an internal memo which in no way represents the official position of the Catholic Relief Services."

It's understandable why Catholic Relief would be reluctant to stir up a ruckus with the Agency for International Development. AID gives Catholic Relief more commodities and other support than it gives any other private relief agency, according to an AID spokesman.

Calls to AID administrator Peter McPherson were returned by an information officer, who found a memo that AID staffers sent to McPherson in April 1985. The memo told McPherson that the Catholic Relief report was critical "of the objectives and administration of the AID program" for Nicaraguan refugees.

The AID memo goes on to mention an upcoming meeting of AID, State Department and Pentagon officials with congressional aides to discuss the Nicaraguan refugee assistance program. But the criticisms in the Catholic Relief report were not discussed at the meeting. A prepared statement from AID explains why:

"Classified documents indicate that in April 1985, 10 days prior to the congressional briefing, AID officials learned from a third party in Costa Rica that CRS director Lawrence Pezzullo had strongly disavowed the report. AID was told that Pezzullo rejected it as misrepresenting the official view of the CRS. The issue subsequently lost its immediacy and effectively became a non-issue by the time of the congressional briefing."

There was no explanation why such a roundabout route was needed to learn the views of Pezzullo, whose office is in New York. Were it not for a fortuitous conversation in Central America, Shiras' criticisms would presumably have been discussed at the congressional briefing.

In addition, the report notes, some refugees complained that they had been lied to about the aid available in the border region.

A bicentennial event: Discussion of powers

WASHINGTON — Serendipity has reared its lovely head in the Supreme Court, illuminating the continuity of our constitutional life. At the close of the Court's term this bicentennial summer, there came a case that turned the Court's mind, like the needle of a compass, to the kind of question that vexed the Constitution's framers.

George F. Will

In 1982, Congress declared that a percentage of federal highway funds should be withheld from states that do not have a drinking age of 21. Congress was addressing an obvious problem: Young people drink and drive when they drive across state lines in quest of drink.

South Dakota, where 19-year-olds can drink 3.2 percent alcohol beer, decided that Congress' action was inconsistent with the Constitution's allocation of powers. South Dakota cited the 21st Amendment, which repealed Prohibition and gave states the power to regulate alcohol. Now, South Dakota rising in righteousness is a stirring sight, but if the state thought it had a chance of winning, it has been drinking stuff stronger than "near beer."

Justice O'Connor, dissenting (the only other dissenter was Justice Brennan), acknowledged that Congress may attach conditions to the receipt of federal funds. However, she said, the conditions must be reasonably related to the purpose of the particular federal program. And she said the establishment of a national drinking age is not "sufficiently related to interstate highway construction." Surely she was wrong. Safe interstate travel is a goal of the highway program.

Chief Justice Rehnquist, in a limp opinion for the 7-2 majority, skirted the large, interesting issues. He said the withholding of a piddling 5 percent of South Dakota's highway funds is tolerable. But, he added, anxiously, there might be a financial inducement so coercive as to turn a mere incentive into compulsion.

Such hairsplitting miniaturizes the disputes. Better he had said: "Colorado and South Dakota will soon be in compliance with Congress' wishes regarding drinking. Only Ohio and Wyoming remain defiant. A Cromwellian approach is needed for the two recalcitrant legislatures. Paratroopers deployed with fixed bayonets along the walls of the legislative chambers should suffice."

Just kidding. But seriously, folks, it is fun, 200 years into our experiment, to see a continuation of the old debate on the nature of the sovereignty of the central government.

Rehnquist was right as far as he went, but his argument lacked vim. The Court should have seized the occasion for a thumping affirmation of Hamiltonianism.

However, before Rehnquist was elevated to the glory of the Court, before he put aside all merely political philosophy in favor of constitutional doctrines, he was a conservative of the Jeffersonian stripe. He was suspicious of the central government and hot for local authority and states' rights.

Ours is now a Hamiltonian country with, unreasonably, an uneasy conscience about that. It has a strong central government, as required for an industrial, continental republic. But the tuning forks in our minds vibrate most naturally to Jeffersonian cadences.

These following words (from O'Connor's dissent; she, like Rehnquist, is from Arizona, a haven of Jeffersonianism) are an example of Jeffersonian cadences: "The immense size and power of the government of the United States ought not obscure its fundamental character. It remains a government of enumerated powers."

Yes, yes, of course. But immediately after those words, O'Connor cited, as a source of the thought, the case of McCulloch v. Maryland (1819). However, it is we Hamiltonians — we strong central government conservatives — who applaud the McCulloch opinion written by Jefferson's great rival, Chief Justice Marshall. In it, Marshall firmly established the doctrine of the implied powers of Congress.

Yes, Marshall said, Congress has only enumerated powers. But Congress is entitled to considerable discretion "with respect to the means by which the powers (the Constitution) confers are to be carried into execution." The central government's powers should be interpreted to comport with the central government's tasks.

If the task (e.g., promoting highway safety) is legitimate, all appropriate means adapted to that task not explicitly prohibited are permitted.

This small case was a timely and deeply satisfying bicentennial event. The 21st Amendment gives states the power to control alcohol. Is it legitimate for Congress to legislate an incentive for the states to voluntarily abridge their constitutional rights? The vocabulary for discussing even this minor matter drives us back deep into a perennial theme of our history: the tensions inherent in our system of limited, delegated, enumerated — and implied — powers. The presence of the perennial is soothing to the conservative temperament, which is pleased by continuities.

RUSSELL BAKER

Having a style can make life unlivable!

In New York I always hung out with a swell crowd and worried about my life style. We all had impeccable life styles. If your life style got sloppy, if word got around that you'd been seen sitting on the curbstone on Seventh Avenue sipping muscatel and saying, "To hell with life style," you were in trouble.

Russell Baker

Things never got this bad for me, though there were awkward moments the year goat cheese became important in life style. Remember? The life-style journals issued orders to eat goat cheese or lose the high-gloss finish on your personal life style.

Having been a hayseed long before life styling was invented, I had seen what goats eat and knew that nothing good could come of it. "No thanks," I said whenever the goat cheese came around, which was almost constantly.

People with styled lives don't like rebellion in the crowd. You can't blame them. Put yourself in their shoes:

You are sitting in the restaurant Life Style Magazine said was the only restaurant in New York that true connoisseurs of life stylings could patronize for the next two weeks, and you are eating goat cheese as ordered by the Joint Council of Life Style Newspaper and Magazine Editors.

And somebody you once thought of as a companion of the well-styled life is saying, "You don't really intend to eat that goat cheese just because ...."

It is being suggested that you are being led like sheep to the goat cheese. In fact, I asked goat-cheese eaters once or twice why they didn't eat sheep cheese.

"So you've seen what goats eat, and so what?" a short-tempered life-styled friend told me one night. "You've probably seen what hogs eat, too, but it doesn't stop you from gorging on pork chops."

This was a warning shot across the bow, a notice that my passion for pork chops had been noted in life-style circles. In those circles, being a pork-chop fancier was like being a Karl Marx fan at FBI College. If goat cheese was the most vital sign of a superb life style, pork chops were evidence of an utterly and shamefully unstyled life.

All that was several years ago, but commands from life-style headquarters change constantly and without advance warning. For all I know maybe nobody toiling on his life style would dream of a meal nowadays without pork chops.

Of one thing, however, I am reasonably sure. If pork chops are now de rigueur, you can bet they are not served during the main course. They might be served diced into tiny pieces in cold cucumber soup or perhaps, in lieu of dessert, beautifully boned and trimmed with scoops of imported gelatin on top.

The gelatin would have to come from Eastern Europe. Almost certainly Bulgaria, because, you see, we are talking life style, and can any life be truly styled when the gelatin on the pork chops comes from places like Dayton, Ohio, or Paducah, Ky.? Bulgaria it must be. Possibly Turkey.

Now, all this about the food requirements of life style has distracted me from the confession I intended at the outset, which deals with the unstyling of life that has befallen me since I fled New York's real-estate extortionists three years ago. It is astonishing how rapidly a life can lose the last vestige of style outside New York.

Returning for a visit this spring I was distressed to realize that I was driving a Detroit car and, even worse, one of those Detroit cars that make absolutely no statements whatever about their owners, except for the worst statement a car can make:

"My owner has no life style whatever."

My clothes spoke a similar message: "Can you imagine the bozo wrapped in these baggy off-the-racks getting a table in any restaurant in town approved for life-style dining?"

I went around to see the old crowd, and they were sweet as could be, all of them looking terrific with the right haircuts and hair dyes, all of them having just seen the right movie and right play and just bought the right music-reproduction equipment as well as the right book.

They seemed happier than I remembered them. A friend said this was because they hadn't had to play tennis for years and didn't have to jog anymore unless they really wanted to. Apparently having a life style isn't as brutally demanding as it used to be.

Goat cheese? Forgotten except by the handful who really liked it all along, a friend told me. "Nowadays for an enviable life style, the secret is imported vegetables."

"From Bulgaria?"

"Just so it's baffling," he said. "Radicchio went out two years ago when everybody learned to pronounce it."

Punishment may not fit the crime — or its victim

Crime and punishment.

Those have been topics of concern for man since he awoke to the realization that taking something that belonged to someone else — his tools, his home, his wife, his life — was wrong and the criminal would have to repay, in some manner, the person victimized. Over centuries of refinement, that philosophy became the basis for our system of justice, criminal and civil.

Modisett

In their infinite wisdom, the individuals who designed that system placed the burden of proof on the authorities and specified that no man would be presumed guilty of a crime. Rather, an accused person would be presumed innocent until the state could establish his guilt. That imminent protection for the accused has been the bedrock of our criminal justice system. It is a valid and cherished system because it prevents wholesale jailing of individuals at the whim of the state.

But in one day of zeal for the accused and the convicted decades ago, the rights of the accused were elevated above the rights of the victim. From that moment, the emphasis in criminal justice has been on the accused and the convicted to the detriment of the victim. The result has been predictably tragic: Murderers have walked free because of legal technicalities. Criminals that should have never been released have been sent back to the streets because a judge believed their rights were being violated by prison conditions, etc. The voices of victims and their families have been closed out of judicial proceedings because their comments were deemed prejudicial. The list goes on.

During the last few years, however, it has become obvious that the public was getting fed up with the twisted way in which justice — or what passes for it — is being dispensed. Some signals of this include:

■ The explosion of victims' rights advocacy groups such as ATAC (Associated Texans Against Crime), MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers), WIN (Women's Issues Network) and many more.

■ Bernhard Goetz's notorious shooting of four thugs on a New York City subway and the public applause he received for his willingness to fight back against crime.

■ The outrage displayed by a crowd in Rodeo, Calif. that rose up and forced from their apartment complex Lawrence Singleton, who had served time in prison for raping and then cutting off the arms of a 14-year-old girl. They obviously did not want him around to endanger their children.

In these instances and hundreds more around the nation, the public is speaking out against crime. People are telling the courts in no quiet voice, "If you don't do something about crime and criminals, and start dispensing justice, we will."

I believe that most Americans fully appreciate the innocent-until-proven-guilty tenet of our judicial system. And I believe that most are willing to give a second chance to criminals who've paid their debt to society. But most people are also aware of the way in which the system of justice has become twisted in recent years and they are wary of where that trend will lead.

A man who has had quite a wealth of experience with injustice and who has studied justice, Alexander I. Solzhenitsyn, wrote on the topic:

"We have to condemn publicly the very idea that some people have the right to repress others. In keeping silent about evil, in burying it so deep within us that no sign of it appears on the surface, we are implanting it, and it will rise up a thousandfold in the future. When we neither punish nor reproach evildoers...we are ripping the foundations of justice from beneath new generations."

Although Solzhenitsyn, a Russian by birth and author of The Gulag Archipelago, a work that studies the Soviet prison camp system, may have been thinking about injustice from another perspective, a parallel can still be drawn to the variety of justice in America today when criminals' rights are overemphasized.

Are we destroying justice for future generations of Americans because of our overbearing emphasis today on the rights of criminals? Victims do not want vigilante justice, merely justice.

Comments puzzle Little League parent

I would just like to make a few comments about this year's Little League. Recently we had two games, one on a Friday night and one on a Saturday afternoon. We played the same team.

I love Little League and watching those kids. I have a 15-year old who has been playing ball since he was seven and a nine-year-old who has been playing ball for the last few years.

I realize this year has been a little difficult having the dads ump. They're under pressure with a son playing and the kids are upset when they are up to bat and dad calls them out on strikes — and then there are the spectators.

Friday night was a tough game for us. We felt the ump behind home plate was not calling a fair game. There were six different people that stood behind home plate at different times during the game and said it didn't look fair. The pitch was either down the middle and a strike or it was a ball, period.

That's hard for a C-League pitcher. But the ump makes the calls and he is the one in control. We lost the game and that's OK — no hard feelings, ump. It's tough out there and I wouldn't want to do it. The other team played real good and I commend them.

But the reason I am writing is that on Saturday we met up again — fresh and ready for a new ballgame. I sat in the stands and I'm sorry to say I heard comments from a couple of mothers of kids on the other team that I wish I hadn't heard.

I was crushed by the things they said about our kids, our coaches, our team. What hurt is that I know one of these women and in my opinion it didn't seem to matter if they were overheard or not.

I pray that they don't talk to their children about their teammates and friends like they talk to each other about them. You know a lot of the kids are good friends on and off the field.

Parents, please be careful what you say about those kids out there — you may not know who you're sitting next to. It really doesn't matter anyway. It's up to us to set the example.

You might wonder why they would be making comments — maybe they were losing and upset with us? No, they were winning and the kids did a great job playing ball.

Puzzled? So am I.

'Deferred adjudication' negates 'involvement'

In May we had our four-year old granddaughter at the mall in a shoe store. A clerk who worked there used a tilted mirror to expose himself to her. No one could see him but a small child.

We debated whether to turn him in to the police, and have her go through all the hassle that would be required.

We have been urged through the media, the police, and other sources to "get involved," to report things like this so they can be taken off the streets, so we turned him in.

The police and detectives did a good job in getting a good case against him. Our little girl did her part, she told her story to the police, the detective, the lawyer, the district attorney, us, and her parents. She went to the police station and made a video of what he had done.

But somewhere along the line, even his pleading "guilty" did nothing to get him off the streets of our town.

He was given five years deferred adjudication, which means if he is caught again he will start his five-year probation. Then if he is caught again in that five years he will go to jail for the rest of his probation.

So, he has at least two more chances to do this, or worse, again to someone else. (She didn't get but one chance.)

It is no wonder we don't get "involved" and that people have no respect for law and order. They have learned the victim has no rights because we have to protect the criminals.

When our granddaughter's dad objected to the authorities, he was told he needed counseling for his frustrations. What parent or grandparent wouldn't be frustrated?

I am just sorry we put our little girl through all this for nothing.

Mummers will open season with party

Toga! Toga! Toga! It's Summer Mummers time again! This year's epic melodrama, "Tribulation on the Tiber," is set in ancient Rome, but still features our Hero and Heroine, Villain and Henchman, Sidekick and Chaperon, and the ever-beauteous Madam and Bar Girls. Opening night only, Friday, July 3, will feature a toga-party atmosphere for our guests with all patrons suitably attired promised free prizes and special recognition.

As usual, advance reservations have been made by those familiar with the way Summer Mummers' choice seats disappear early, but also as usual, great seats early in July are still available. With the advent of August will come the pitiable pleas of latecomers begging for a table which was readily available in July. With an "extra" weekend in September (thanks to a late Labor Day) and a "dry" matinee Aug. 16, this will be a GREAT year for the Summer Mummers.

We'll see you at the Yucca Theatre this summer!

Central America stumbles away from settlement

PARIS — Attempts to force some clarity on whether or not a chance exists for a political settlement in Central America are stumbling again. Evidence points to another muted fight between Secretary of State George Shultz and the National Security Council, despite the change in White House advisers.

Lewis

The focus is the plan of Costa Rica's President Oscar Arias Sanchez, which calls for cease-fires in the region, an end to all foreign military aid, and free elections with full political guarantees. Europeans and most Latin American states support the Arias plan. Officially, so does the U.S., but....

Arias was called to see President Reagan last week in a meeting with six senior advisers from the White House and the State Department. Afterward, a report apparently issued by someone on the White House staff said Reagan strongly criticized the plan. There were different versions, both from State and the Costa Rican president, reached by telephone at his home in San Jose.

Arias said Reagan expressed support for the plan but wanted some "loopholes" corrected. He said Reagan did not discuss details, and that he felt encouraged because the president "listened a lot" and said little. Privately, a State official criticized the White House version as being too negative. A meeting of the five Central American presidents, scheduled for this month in Guatemala, has been put off to Aug. 6 at the request of El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte, but not postponed indefinitely as first claimed in Washington.

Arias is pushing for the meeting as a way of putting Daniel Ortega Saavedra, the Sandinista leader, to a straightforward test: Will he make serious political concessions to end what has become America's proxy war? Ortega has used the excuse of the delay, which he claimed was at U.S. insistence, to say he won't come next month. But Arias believes that the Nicaraguan will back down.

Meanwhile, State has been fighting the White House over appointment of a new U.S. ambassador to Nicaragua. Harry E. Bergold Jr., the veteran career ambassador, wants to leave by July, and was to be replaced by Mary V. Mochary, a Republican former mayor of Montclair, N.J., who has no background for the job and does not speak Spanish. It has been settled now that a Foreign Service officer will go, but there's still a dispute about who.

On the face of it, the internal administration quarrel seems to be on minor points. Arias' plan calls for a simultaneous cease-fire and start of internal negotiations. Both State and the NSC object because that would cut off aid to the contras before Sandinista concessions were assured. This is the main so-called loophole.

According to Arias, Reagan is still determined to ask for more contra military aid from Congress in September. But there is strong opposition on the Hill, and the administration would have a far better chance of getting its request if it showed clear support for a modified Arias plan.

What really seems to be going on here, beneath the word games, is an argument over whether to give diplomacy a real try or whether the U.S. should keep the war going by hook or by crook until the Sandinistas collapse. A key figure is Jose S. Sorzano, Latin American expert on the NSC. He was formerly head of the Cuban-American Foundation, a right-wing organization of Cuban emigres that is building a well-funded, vocal lobby reminiscent of the China lobby of the 1950s.

He is said to have been named to the NSC at the insistence of former U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick. Frank Carlucci, the national security adviser, told friends that he has to take care to stay out of trouble with Kirkpatrick.

This is another example of the new White House staff worrying more about pressure from the right than about working out compromises with Congress to end current friction. It's the opposite of what Chief of Staff Howard Baker said would be his priority.

In terms of Nicaraguan policy, the upshot is a kind of tacit alliance between the Sandinistas and the hardline contra supporters to keep fighting so each can avoid compromise. It doesn't serve moderates on either side.

Sen. Dave Durenberger, who opposes both the Sandinistas and the contras, points out that "the real question is not whether we support democracy in Nicaragua. The question is how best to achieve it. Specifically, how will $40 million (or more) in military aid support the fostering of democracy in Nicaragua? I have never, in six years of debate, heard a satisfactory answer to this question."

There is no such answer. So the next question is how hard Shultz will push, this time around, to save the NSC and the White House from repeating the follies now on display at the congressional hearings.

France, Germany finally ready to work side-by-side

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — A bold and imaginative proposal for a joint Franco-German army brigade has been made by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and enthusiastically approved by French President Francois Mitterrand.

Hearst

The idea which has quickly found favor among NATO members in Europe still has a long way to go before it receives full backing from all the allies. But the paramount significance is that both the French and the Germans, enemies for more than a century, have agreed to work side-by-side.

Chancellor Kohl, proposing that an integrated brigade of 6,000 troops be commanded by a French general, received approval both at home and in France where any German suggestion on military matters was bound to be examined with a microscope. The French, to date, have found no built-in obstacles.

What happens later with a view toward a fully integrated Franco-German force totaling hundreds of thousands rather than one brigade, remains to be seen.

But this is certainly a remarkable start for these two countries in the heart of Europe which have so long been at war. Only in World War II, for example, German occupation terminated within the invasion on D-Day just 43 years and a few weeks ago when the allies stormed onto the beaches of Normandy.

The fighting still continued for nearly a year thereafter throughout France, and the nationalist hatreds and rivalries went on for nearly four decades.

The Soviet Union will certainly be confounded by this turn of events with the West German proposal and the French acceptance. Moscow has an enormous preponderance of conventional land-based forces in tanks, troops and non-nuclear missiles as well as satellite forces of uncertain quality.

The U.S.S.R., negotiating with America in Geneva on nuclear disarmament which seems to be reaching a conclusive point and a trip by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to Washington for a summit conference with President Reagan in the autumn, clearly has no answer to this French-German concept.

Its propaganda machines spewed out a typical line on Wednesday claiming that the French would in the end reject the Kohl plan. Still, there is no sign that any French general of World War II experience sees the idea as a German Trojan Horse. It may be that the Russians will be the first to climb out of their own self-created wooden steed and try another gambit.

The West German media have been full of the proposal which is of historic dimension. Newspapers like the Frankfurtur Allgemeine Zeitung, the most prestigious paper in West Germany, referred to the Kohl concept as "momentous," and "breath-taking." Another paper, Die Welt, applauded the Kohl offer and also made banner headlines of the swift acceptance of the idea by French President Mitterrand.

The West Germans, casting around for a new NATO alternative to the possible reduction in medium-range missiles resulting from any U.S.-U.S.S.R. arrangement, have wasted no time in seeking to mend European defenses.

While the Kohl proposal obviously requires more study, it should serve as a guideline for European defenses in the immediate future.

Bernard D. Kaplan, Hearst Newspapers' European correspondent reported that an immediate obstacle to the joint brigade is the fact that West Germany's army is part of NATO'S integrated comand, taking orders from the U.S.-appointed Supreme Allied Commander. France, although a NATO member, has kept its forces independent of the alliance for the past generation, since General De Gaulle refused to permit France's troops from participating.

But, Kaplan reported, observers in Paris expect the problem to be solved without undue difficulty. The outcome is actually likely to bring France closer to the NATO military command, with which it has been recently cooperating.

One long-term, but seriously advanced prediction is that the Kohl plan may be the first step toward creating a Western European Army, which would be fully responsible for the non-nuclear defense of all of Europe.

That may be the only way to gradually reduce the heavy Soviet superiority in conventional land-based forces in central Europe, a superiority that will count more than ever once the medium range nuclear missiles are all gone.

The Soviet Union has for years attempted to reduce any dependence on NATO by Western Europe but this step towards a long-range Franco-German alliance leading to full integration could well throw a monkey wrench into the Russian plan to impede any European reliance on NATO.

One of those statesmen who have called for the creation of such a Western European group is Helmut Schmidt, long-time Social Democratic Chancellor of West Germany and close political friend of Mitterrand.

He also believes that having a Franco-German brigade under the command of a French general is a fine idea.

The plan would certainly help America by relieving the U.S. of an excessive share of the common burden both in terms of dollars and manpower, and place Western Europe in a position of responsibility ultimately for its own defense.

OUTDOORS IS IN
Builders are no longer limiting themselves to the areas inside the home. Having made the most of limited interior space, they are now turning their attention to the backyard and indoor/outdoor connections. Decks, patios, and terraces extend a house's usable area. In addition, such outdoor structures as gazebos, beamed colonnades, walled pavilions, and even walled courtyards provide enclosure, privacy, and protection from chilling breezes and intense sun. Seen through enlarged windows and French doors, these mini-buildings also improve the home's view and enhance the landscape. Styles vary greatly. Sometimes they follow the style of the house. Other times, they make a distinctly different architectural statement.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Midland College to honor GED 'graduates' at Tuesday program

By H.A. TUCK

Students who have completed their GED (General Educational Development) requirements this year will be honored Tuesday with a dinner and program at the Student Center.

There are 161 people who have completed their GED through Midland College during the past 12 months.

The college's Adult Learning Center hosts the annual event, which also recognizes those who have completed English As A Second Language studies.

Cindy Turland is coordinator for the learning center, which operates both at the campus and at off-campus locations.

The program and dinner begin at 6:30 p.m.

College president Dr. Jess Parrish is slated to speak at the ceremony. Gospel music entertainment also is planned during the evening.

GED is a national program of study to provide the equivalent of a high school education to those who didn't complete high school.

The GED certificate is accepted in lieu of a high school diploma. For some, it's the ticket for admission to college, others use it to obtain employment or job advancement. And for some it's simply a way to complete something they've always wanted.

There's no cost for the GED classes at MC, most of which are taught on a one-to-one basis. A small fee is charged for taking the GED tests, which measure skills in language, math, science, and social sciences.

This is the final week of pre-registration for the college's second summer session. Prospective students should pre-register in the Student Services Office, Administration Building, Monday through Thursday from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Pre-registration allows students to obtain a time permit for a specific time to register. Official registration is set for Wednesday, July 8, with classes starting the following day.

Those who don't pre-register will have to register July 8 during the final hour and may not get signed up for the classes they want or at the times most convenient for them.

First session of Kids' College started last week and it was quite different to see the first, second, and third graders here. In the three previous years, Kids' College was limited to those who had completed fourth through sixth grades. With tiny folks making occasional forays around the campus on field trips from the college's pre-school child development center, we seem to have all ages here...and that's what a community college is all about.

Despite the additional children, the opening of Kids' College was very smooth. Director Sue Alford, the Continuing Education staff, and the faculty of Kids' College had everything well-organized.

A second session of Kids' College is scheduled July 13-23. There are a few openings in this second session for those who have finished fourth, fifth, or sixth grades. There are three classes each afternoon Monday through Thursday and children may register for one, two, or three classes. For information about the classes which have openings, call 685-4518.

• • •

Only one course is starting this week through the Continuing Education Department. It's a two-night class on how to install resilient flooring. The class meets from 7-9 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday at a cost of $7. If you would like to enroll, visit the Continuing Education office in the Administration Building Monday between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m.

Two of the basic art courses, Drawing I and II (Art 1301 and 1302), were omitted from the Summer II course bulletin. But Dr. Stan Jacobs is going to teach the two courses from 9 a.m.-12:40 p.m. Monday through Thursday during the second summer term.

• • •

Stan brought by a copy of Equine Images magazine, Vol. I No. 2, which includes an article by former MC art instructor Marilyn Todd-Daniels, who now lives in Denison. Most of her work now is equine portraiture. She's also planning to conduct a tour to London for artists and photographers in August. Several Midlanders own works by Ms. Todd-Daniels and hundreds more took one or more of her classes.

To most of us, TOEFL might be another of those strange-tasting foreign foods. But it's really an acronym for Test Of English as a Foreign Language.

And most colleges require those who aren't native English-speakers to take the TOEFL before admission.

The MC Adult Learning Center is presenting a TOEFL class July 1-Aug. 13 in Room 136, Occupational-Technical Building. The class will meet Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 12 noon and if at least 12 people are interested, an evening class from 7-9 p.m. also will be taught.

There's no charge for the class, but a fee is required to take the TOEFL exam.

For more information, call 685-4566.

Crockett sixth-grader given NASA award

From Staff Reports

Shannon Augsburger, a sixth grader from Crockett Elementary, received the NASA Award at the Permian Basin Science Fair.

Her project dealt with solar heat absorption. She was invited to attend a reception honoring recipients of the NASA award in Houston on May 8, 1987.

Shannon and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Augsburger, attended the reception.

There were students from many other states, even from as far away as South Dakota, in attendance.

Astronaut Pierre J. Thuot met with the students and presented Shannon an autographed copy of "A Meeting with the Universe."

The book covers science discoveries from the space programs. The students then toured the Johnson Space Center.

Men create 'wide open' title mood at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — With the battle for Wimbledon men's singles title now wide open, two of the pre-tournament favorites, Ivan Lendl and Tim Mayotte, struggled Saturday before moving to the next round.

The upset of two-time defending champion and overwhelming favorite Boris Becker by Australian Peter Doohan on Friday created a new mood at the All-England Lawn Tennis Club.

"Anybody can win now. It's an open tournament," said Sweden's Stefan Edberg, the No. 4 seed and reigning Australian Open champion. He moved into the fourth round Saturday with a 7-6, 6-2, 6-2 victory over American Matt Anger.

Lendl, the world's top-ranked player from Czechoslovakia and the No. 2 seed at Wimbledon, needed four sets in the third round to outlast Richey Reneberg 6-4, 6-7, 6-3, 7-6. The American was playing in only his second tournament as a professional.

Mayotte was extended even further, coming from behind to defeat fellow American Tim Wilkison 6-3, 4-6, 6-7, 6-2, 6-4 in the second round.

Meanwhile, Soviet qualifier Alexander Volkov, ranked 503rd in the world, upset 12th-seeded Brad Gilbert of the United States 7-6, 0-6, 6-3, 6-4; and Switzerland's Jakob Hlasek eliminated Sweden's Joakim Nystrom, the 13th seed, 5-7, 6-3, 6-0, 7-6.

In the women's singles, No. 2 Steffi Graf of West Germany continued her rapid match towards a possible second consecutive Grand Slam tournament title — she won the French Open earlier this month — by crushing Laura Gildemeister of Peru 6-2, 6-1. The only women's seed to fall Saturday was No. 13 Barbara Potter, ousted by fellow American Mary Joe Fernandez 6-0, 6-1.

No. 9 Henri Leconte of France, who downed Israel's Gilad Bloom 6-3, 7-6, 7-5, said Becker's demise was a shock to all of the players.

"Nobody in the locker room is talking about Boris' defeat," Leconte said. "I think it was such a big surprise that no one's talking about it. ... All the players left in now can win."

The 25 remaining men include just one former chamnpion, Jimmy Connors, winner in 1974 and 1982.

"Becker was the favorite and No. 1 seed, so I think his being knocked out has opened up the tournament a little bit," Edberg said.

Other seeded men to advance on a partly cloudy day were No. 8 Andres Gomez of Ecuador and No. 11 Pat Cash of Australia.

Graf led a bevy of seeded women who advanced. Others who won were No. 4 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, No. 6 Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina, No. 8 Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany, No. 15 Raffaella Regii of Italy and No. 16 Sylvia Hanika of West Germany.

After winning with a struggle for the third consecutive match, Lendl said the grass courts were the culprit, for both his performance and the wide-open tournament.

"It (Becker's loss) is just another thing that happens on grass because grass is such an equalizer," Lendl said. "On a bad day you can lose to anyone.

"For me, when something is going wrong, I have no alternative. On clay I could rush the net or hit the ball harder. There is no such thing on grass. When things don't go well on grass, it is extremely hard to change anything."

Lendl just changed the direction his match was going. He never dropped serve the entire day, Reneberg taking the second-set tiebreak 7-5. And he blasted 18 aces and 34 service winners in overpowering his opponent.

So far, Lendl has played two four-set matches and one five-setter in reaching the fourth round.

"I like easy matches and would obviously like to win in straight sets, but it is not by my choice that I play such tough matches," he said. "But they make me mentally tough for the next time it happens.

"Sometimes when you have easy matches and are confident like Boris was, you are not ready for when you get into trouble."

Greenwood sprinter Steve Popham lines up for a series of international junior meets in Europe this summer.

Greenwood's Popham to run in European meets

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Greenwood's Steve Popham is taking his show on the road, all the way to Europe for a series of international junior track meets in July.

The just-graduated Popham is part of a 40-50 member contingent from California and Texas invited to compete by the International Sports Exchange in a series of meets begining in Amsterdam July 10-19.

Popham, an All District 4-3A choice as a running back in football last fall, has never been out of the country and will not know a soul on the trip.

"It's kind of like a blind date but with a lot more people," Popham said. "It's going to be a series of three meets, one in Amsterdam, Holland; one in Cologne, West Germany; and one in Brussels, Belgium. We're supposed to stay three days in each place."

While the impetus for the meets is the competition among junior athletes from all over Europe, the chance for travel and interaction between the different cultures is the main goal.

But for Popham, it's a chance for redemption in his running career.

You see, the 5-8 sprinter was slowed his entire senior track season by a nagging hamstring pull. The pull, suffered in the first meet of the season, kept him from following up his District 8-2A titles in the 100 and 200 meters when he was a junior.

The Rangers moved up to Class 3A his senior year, and after setting a Class 3A meet record 10.7 clocking in the preliminaries of the West Texas Relays in March, Popham never regained his health — or his form.

"This is kind of a payback for me," Popham said. "Because of the pulled hamstring, I didn't get to run at top speed all year. I took a lot of teasing all year, but the guys knew I was fast, so it was all in good fun."

Popham was introduced to the program by his track coach Micky Baker who had recommended him on a form letter the ISE sends out each year.

With his senior season all but written off, Popham was looking for some summer competition in the area. What he didn't expect was to be going overseas to get it.

"Two days before I graduated, I got a letter from ISE," Popham recalls. "I read it and I thought that it just couldn't be true. My dad called up a coach from Richardson and he said it was no fluke, they'd been doing this exchange for more than 10 years."

Popham expects to run his usual 100 meter distance and join in on any sprint relay squads. But that is likely to be the end of his track career, at least for the time being.

"I'm planning on going to Midland College for the first two years," Popham said, "but, hopefully, I can stay in shape and transfer to Sul Ross or Howard Payne or maybe even a major college if I do well enough."

Texas League names All-Star units

Midland to host squads July 7

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Three Midland Angels and seven first half Western Division champion Wichita Pilots are among the 30 players from two divisions on the All-Star teams for the 1987 Texas League All-Star game to be played in Midland, July 7.

The squad, which was released today, was selected by a vote of the league's general managers and field managers.

It is the first time Midland has played host to the TL All-Star game, and Midland Angels General Manager Bill Davidson plans on it being a showcase for the Texas League franchise, the Tall City's regional image and for its loyal fans.

"This is a tremendous showcase for the city, for the team and the facility and it's a big treat for our fans," Davidson said. "We began to campaign for the game two years ago when we got here, and though there was some reluctance on the part of the league, we were able to overcome that."

Topping the list for the hometown Angels are designated hitter/outfielder Doug Jennings, third baseman Joe Redfield and pitcher Marty Reed.

Jennings is Midland's leading hitter with a team leading .339 average and 19 homers, also tops on the Angels. He also leads the league in bases on balls with 58.

Redfield was acquired from Atlanta just prior to the start of the season, and his early season hitting kept Midland in the first half race. He now sports a .305 average, 17 homers and a team-high 60 RBI, third best in the league.

Reed has been a reclamation project for the organization. After nearly giving up on him after 1985, Reed responded with a 16-6 record for unaffiliated Kinston in 1986. He is tied for the club-high in wins with seven and his 4.92 ERA is best among starters.

Seven Pilots will team with the Angel trio and three apiece from the other West Division clubs San Antonio and El Paso. For the fifth straight season, the All Star game will have the stars from the league's two divisions facing each other.

Wichita's contingent includes catcher Sandy Alomar, first baseman Brad Pounders, second baseman Mike Debutch, shortstop Roberto Alomar, outfielder Thomas Howard and pitchers Joe Lynch and Greg Harris.

For the East Divsion, Jackson placed six players, first half champ Shreveport has four, Arkansas has four and Tulsa has two.

The East squad will be managed by Shreveport's Jack Mull, while Wichita's Steve Smith will pilot the West Division.

The West appears to have an advantage on offense, boasting the league's top five home run hitters and the top four RBI men. The fifth, Wichita's Jerald Clark, did not make the team. Wichita's Pounders leads the way in both categories with 22 round-trippers and 76 runs batted in.

The 11 West Division hitters combine for a .328 average, five are double figures in homers and four are double figures in stolen bases. By contrast, the East averages .271, has just two players in double figure homers and three in stolen bases.

ANNIVERSARY

Editor's Note: The Reporter-Telegram will preview three Texas League All-Stars each day leading up to the July 7 All-Star game, which will be held at Angels Stadium this year for the first time.

Jennings

Doug Jennings, of-dh, Midland: Has turned into the hitting star for the Angels in 1987, compiling numbers of .339, 19 homers and 48 RBI in little more than half a season. Jennings, 22, was a second round choice out of Brevard JC in Florida in the 1984 January draft and has turned into a top hitting prospect in the Angel organization.

A muscular 5-10, 170-pound lefty, Jennings is among the TL leaders in three categories, homers, average and walks. He was selected as the designated hitter for the TL West.

Dennis Cook, p, Shreveport: One of the top pitching prospects in the TL circuit after stellar career as outfielder at Texas. Was odd-man out on staff that included future major leaguers Greg Swindell and Bruce Ruffin and first-round pick Mike Poehl in Austin, but Cook's hitting made him an 18th-round pick.

Cook's 9-2 record and 1.98 ERA helped lead the Captains to a first half title in the TL East. His experience with a bat has also helped, slugging a three-run homer in one Shreveport victory already. One of two Captains hurlers on the TL East, he's tied for first in the league in wins, and is second in strikouts with 90 in 100 innings pitched.

Jeff Gardner, second base, Jackson: One of the best double play men in the business, Gardner is also a pesky hitter at the plate. His .286 average for Jackson goes with 39 bases on balls. In 1985, Gardner walked a whopping 142 times in Class A. Also stole 31 bases that year, but has none this year while being caught five times.

Twisted irony puts NCAA in Dallas

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

First, there were disclosures of steroid use at Vanderbilt, and the NCAA held a convention in Nashville.

Next, the Tulane basketball program was dismantled by a point-shaving scandal, and the NCAA fathers met in New Orleans.

Now, the NCAA will convene in Dallas, home of both the Southwest Conference and Southern Methodist University, the most penalized conference and school in NCAA history.

"There is some irony that we'll be in that city," NCAA President Wilford Bailey of Auburn said. "In the future, some cities might be gun shy about hosting our conventions."

Yet, Bailey maintains, "there's no relationship. It's just a coincidence."

While the outlaws of college sports are not the stated object of this special convention, the issues discussed in Dallas could have a direct bearing on some of the major causes of cheating — big money and big pressure to win.

That's no coincidence.

The powerful Presidents Commission called this session for Monday and Tuesday to discuss cost cutting, which could have the effect also of cutting into the importance of athletics at universities. One of the highlights of this convention will be a forum of college administrators arguing the place of big-time college sports in America.

Cost cutting was the original terminology, Bailey said. Now, based on a Presidents Commission resolution, "it is more appropriate to view it as two topics, cost cutting and the balance between athletics and academics."

Many feel the debate on athletics and academics will overshadow other concerns since it deals directly with efforts to de-emphasize college sports. And such a de-emphasis may help prevent practices like under-the-table payments to athletes that caused the NCAA to ban SMU from playing football.

"The important thing at this convention will be the forum," said Georgia Tech athletic director Homer Rice, chairman of the Division I-A Athletic Directors Association. "This will start a dialogue regarding the role of athletics in higher education. We'll put the thing on the table for everyone to look at."

Five of nine SWC schools — Texas, Baylor, Texas Tech, Texas Christian and SMU — are under sanctions or on probation, and Texas A&M and Houston are under investigation. Last February, SMU became the first institution tagged with the death penalty for repeated infractions.

In a sense, SMU will have dual representation at the convention, and despite the school's record of NCAA infractions, both representatives will support the Presidents Commission proposals.

Lonnie Kliever, the faculty representive, will cast his school's votes, while A. Kenneth Pye, the school's president-elect, will represent his current institution, Duke University.

"Basically, we'll be supporting the key cost containment legislation," Kliever said.

While opposed on other issues such as the death penalty and Proposition 48, which set minimum academic standards for incoming freshman athletes, the Presidents Commission is as yet undefeated on its major proposals.

This time, however, lines are being drawn for what could evolve into the commission's first close battle. On one side of the formal debate will be Ira Michael Heyman, chancellor at California-Berkeley and a charter member of the Presidents Commission. On the other side will be Oklahoma President Frank Horton, speaking for the big sports schools.

"We believe the national forum will give all of us a very real opportunity to address the questions that never seem to get answered regarding college athletics and, we hope, to reach consensus regarding its proper role in higher education," the commission said in a newsletter to all presidents and chancellors.

The questions implicit in the commission's statement include:

— Have supporters for big football schools such as SMU and Texas applied too much pressure to win?

— Has this pressure led recruiters to dodge NCAA rules in an effort to build winning programs?

— And have schools, once used to winning, tried to hold onto success by paying players, by turning their once-Corinthian programs into professional endeavors?

"We had to do it this way because we have a real division in feelings among the presidents and chancellors," Heyman told the San Francisco Chronicle. "We've done all the easy things — setting minimum (academic) standards, making obvious cost-cutting changes — that everybody agrees on. Now, we'll have to make some tough choices."

Wilkison's zipper fails on Centre Court

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Tim Wilkison was ready when the zipper of his tennis shorts split open as he lunged for a volley in his second-round match with Tim Mayotte at Wimbledon Saturday.

Mayotte called it "a great moment." Wilkison said he had been in a similar situation before, although never on Centre Court at Wimbledon.

While Wilkison was able to deal with the embarrassing situation, he was not as fortunate in the match.

Mayotte, seeded No. 10, overcame a pumped-up Wilkison 6-3, 4-6, 6-7, 6-2, 6-4.

The sixth game sent Wilkison running off court.

At 30-15, Wilkison dove for a backhand volley. The shot went long as Wilkison sprawled on the grass.

When he got back to the baseline, he noticed that the zipper of his white shorts had ripped open. With a hand strategically placed to preserve his modesty, he asked the umpire if he could change.

Picking a spare pair from his racket bag, Wilkison dashed into the locker room and was back within a minute, quickly putting away a forehand smash for 40-30.

"I had experience with my pants going because once I walked out on court for a match that was being shown on TV with my zipper undone," Wilkison said. "It was broken this time, but luckily I'd brought another pair."

"It was just a question of attrition out there," Mayotte said after the 3¾-hour match. "It was a very difficult match. But it was the kind of match you have to expect here on Centre Court."

Eastern Optimist first baseman Noel Romero makes a stab at a line drive during first day action of the Joe Mowles Memorial American League City Championship Little League tournament Saturday in a game against the Western Orioles.

Mid City, Tower stay unbeaten in city tourney

From Staff Reports

The Mid City Upstairs/Downstairs Angels and the Tower Braves have emerged as the only unbeaten teams left in the Joe Mowles Memorial City American Little League City Championship tournament after two days of play at Henderson Park.

The two teams will meet each other at 6 p.m. Monday with the winner earning a berth in the championship finals, which is set for 6 p.m. Wednesday.

TOWER TOPPED the Greenwood Bears by a 14-8 margin in a first round game and drew the second round bye. Brian Graham was the winning pitcher while Rusty Gunter absorbed the loss for the Bears. Tower's Rusty Graham led the attack with three hits, including a homer while Sean McIntosh added a homer. Jarrod Lawson led Greenwood with two doubles.

Mid City had to win two games to earn the right to face Tower Monday. Mid City rapped North Central's Pride Pipeline Cubs, 18-5, in the first round with Kerry Doan picking up the win and Jason Baker getting the loss. Abel Sanchez led Mid City with three hits, including a double. Travis Baumgardner and Todd Tredaway each had two hits. Mike Melzer got three hits for North Central and Jamie Guerra had two.

Mid City later stayed in the winner's bracket with a 4-1 win over Eastern Optimist as Tony Galan's brillant four-hit pitching was backed with homers by Joseph Golding, a two-run shot, and a solo blast by Cory Emerson. Noel Romero hit a homer for Eastern.

Eastern, the defending champion, had beaten Western's Stanton Exploration Orioles by an 11-1 count in the first round as Cory Watson teamed with Romero on a three-hitter. Romero hit two homers and Mario Rodriquez and Juan Loysa added homers for Eastern. Jamie Willingham got two of Western's three hits, one a homer for the only run.

Greenwood fell from the tournament in a loser's bracket game, falling to North Central by a 7-4 count. Jamie Guerra picked up the win while Jody Shew took the loss. Guerra, Brian Henderson, Chris Connally and Melzer all had big hits to keep North Central alive.

NORTH CENTRAL went on to eliminate Western in a wild 3-2 game. The game was saved in the first inning by Jason Baker who reached over the fence to rob Benny Hernandez of a grand slam homerun. Alex Hale went on to get the win while Jeromy Shankle took the heart-breaking loss with a three-hitter, including a double to Brian Henderson. Caesar Fuentes had a homer for Western in the game.

North Central will now take on Eastern at 6 p.m. Monday in another elimination trial. The winner will meet the loser of the Mid City-Tower game at 6 p.m. Tuesday. The winner there will vault back into the championship finals on Wednesday.

Eastern has its work cut out to become a repeat champion, now having to win four consecutive games to claim the title. Eastern went through the tournament undefeated last year.

The tournament is composed of league champions in the city and is really a kickoff to the Little League national tournament playoffs, which begin next month.

Edmonton rips Calgary, 54-16

EDMONTON (AP) — Henry Williams returned punts 91 and 72 yards for touchdowns Saturday, pacing the Edmonton Eskimos' to a 54-16 Canadian Football League victory over the Calgary Stampeders.

Williams scored his first touchdown on his 91-yard return at 3:33 of the third quarter and followed several key blocks to thread his way through traffic for a 72-yard score eight minutes later.

Williams returned six punts for 221 yards to break the record of 208 yards by Moody Jackson of Ottawa in 1976.

The pitching belongs to the East, where the staff's combined ERA is 3.28, while in the West, it is 4.46.

There are still reserved and general admission tickets left on sale for the July 7 game at Angel Stadium, and that fact has Davidson a little worried.

"It's a crap shoot, it makes us nervous," Davidson said. "We never have much advance sale for any of our promotions, and from what I understand, that goes for most all the events in Midland. But this is the biggest thing we have going on all year.

"Usually all of our promotions center on off-the-field activities, but this is something that is all based on the field. I just hope there are enough true baseball fans that we can fill the ballpark."

Azinger at pin-point best

Hartford Open

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Paul Azinger, benefitting from pin-point accuracy, shot an 8-under-par 63 on a rainy Saturday to take a three-stroke lead over Wayne Levi after three rounds of the $700,000 Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open.

Azinger, the PGA Tour's No. 2 money-winner, birdied the third through fifth holes, added birdies on Nos. 7, 10 and 11, then closed his round with birdies on 17 and 18.

His bogey-free round fell one stroke short of the course record set by last year's tournament winner, Mac O'Grady.

"It was by far the best round of my life," Azinger said. "Every drive I hit went exactly where I wanted. Every iron I hit went exactly where I wanted."

Azinger was at 16-under-par 197 after three rounds over the par-71, 6,786-yard Tournament Players Club of Connecticut course. His score through three rounds was two shots better than the previous 54-hole standard for the tournament, established in 1984 by Peter Jacobsen.

Levi, the first-round leader, shot a 3-under 68 on Saturday and was at 200. West German Bernhard Langer, the 36-hole leader, faltered to a 1-over-par 72 to drop into a tie with Gene Sauers at 202. Sauers had a 68 Saturday.

Dan Forsman, John Inman and Robert Lohr were all at 203, 10 under par and six strokes off the lead. Inman and Lohr each shot 67s and Forsman had a 69.

Gil Morgan and Tim Simpson, with 67s, and Doug Tewell, with a 68, were at 204. Open runner-up Tom Watson had a 70 and was among three players at 205.

Azinger, who tied for third in last year's Greater Hartford Open, fell from the money-winning lead last week when he missed the cut in the U.S. Open. Open winner Scott Simpson moved into the earnings lead, but is sitting out this tournament.

Azinger, a lanky 27-year-old from Holyoke, Mass., has struggled, finishing no higher than 25th since winning the Las Vegas Invitational in May.

"The reason I shot so well today was because my driver set me up," Azinger said. "Every tee shot was solid, right where I wanted it."

Heavy rain interrupted play for 1 hour, 40 minutes before the leaders teed off, and it rained through most of the afternoon. Aki Ohmachi of Tokyo was disqualified when he began play before the siren sounded to officially resume the tournament.

Richard over par, but leads

LPGA Rochester

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Deb Richard shot a 1-over-par 73 Saturday but managed to hold a one-stroke lead over Lori Garbacz after three rounds of the LPGA's $300,000 Rochester International tournament.

Richard, who has held the lead since the first round, bogeyed the last two holes to finish at 8-under-par 208 for three rounds.

Laurie Rinker and Patty Sheehan were one behind Garbacz at six under, while Susan Tonkin, Shirley Furlong and Sally Little entered Sunday's final round at five under.

Richard, a two-year pro seeking her first professional victory, said her rhythm was off because she had to play the final hole of her second round early Saturday because of Friday's rain delays.

"I think it was very obvious if you watched people's rounds today that no one else on that leader board had to play this morning," she said. "I was up at 5:30 this morning, I was real tired and I fought it all day."

Considering that, Richard said that she was "fortunate to still be on top."

She promised that "tomorrow, there's going to be one angry person on the golf course and, hopefully, that's the Deb that's going to go out and make a lot of birdies."

Garbacz, who was three strokes behind Richard at the start of the day, bogeyed twice on the front nine, but recovered with four birdies to close to within one.

"I stunk on the front nine, then I was great, then I stunk again," said Garbacz, still seeking her first victory in her ninth year on the Tour. She said she couldn't sympathize with Richard.

"That's part of the Tour and you've got to learn how to deal with those things," Garbacz said.

Casper fires another 68 round

Seniors Golf

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Billy Casper shot his second consecutive round of three three-under-par 68 Saturday, taking a two-stroke lead after two rounds of the $250,000 Greater Grand Rapids Open in the PGA Seniors Tour.

Tommy Aaron, who shot a six-under 65 to lead Friday's first round, shot a two-over-par 73 for a two-day total of 138, tying him with Dave Hill, who had consecutive rounds of 69.

Four players — Bobby Nichols, Jim King, J.C. Goosie and Orville Moody — were tied for third at 139.

"It's one of the finest rounds of golf I've played," Casper said. "I had the ball close to the hole."

Casper had four birdies and a bogey during his round, played in winds gusting to 30 mph.

"The winds have been severe both days," Nichols said. "It comes in and it starts twirling on you. It makes a U-turn like a hurricane does. You don't know what it's doing."

But Casper said he's grown accustomed to such conditions.

"We've had so much wind (this season) that I've become a good wind player again," he said.

Moses gets revenge; Witherspoon upsets Lewis

Mobil Track

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Edwin Moses avenged his only loss in 10 years by decisively beating Danny Harris in the men's 400-meter intermediate hurdles, and Mark Witherspoon upset Carl Lewis in the men's 100-meter dash Saturday in the USA-Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

Harris ended Moses' 122-race winning streak on June 4 at Madrid, the first loss for the two-time Olympic champion since August 1977.

On Saturday, Harris was no match for Moses.

Harris, 21, the three-time NCAA champion from Iowa State, led at the first hurdle. But that was the only time he was in front.

Moses took a slight lead by the second hurdle and moved smartly away from Harris the rest of the way.

When Harris went over the seventh hurdle slightly off balance, the battle was over.

Moses, 31, was timed in 47.99 seconds in beating Harris by about 10 yards. Harris, the Olympic silver medalist, was clocked in 48.70, just ahead of David Patrick, third in 48.76.

Moses had said if he didn't make any technical mistakes, he could beat Harris, who was in the sixth grade when Moses began the longest winning streak ever by a track athlete.

Moses' form on Saturday was nearly flawless, although he didn't come close to his world record of 47.02.

"I hit the first hurdle and probably another," Moses said. "I lost a whole step at the start, just like yesteday."

But there were no other mistakes, and he won impressively to the cheers of a crowd of 13,724 at San Jose City College.

Harris paid tribute to Moses, but said Moses could be beaten again.

"You have to give him credit," Harris said. "He came back and ran like a champion.

Angels beat Pilots in ninth

Carrasco's single avoids extra innings

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Suddenly refinding his batting stroke after more than a week of struggling in the Texas League, Norm Carrasco ended a four-and-a-half hour, rain-marred marathon Saturday night with a slap single to right field to score the winning run in the ninth inning.

Carrasco's hit, his fourth of the night, gave the Angels a hard-fought 4-3 victory over Wichita after the longest rain delay in Midland Angels history. It came after play had restarted 90 minutes after a fierce storm converged on Angel Stadium with the game 5½ innings old and Midland holding a 3-1 edge.

Everyone thought it would end that way as the blackened skies poured out more rain. But with patience and an impromptu ground crew working doubletime, the game was completed, with the same end result.

Carrasco, who was sent down to the Texas League from Edmonton in the Pacific Coast League, was hitting .214 two nights ago. Now, with six hits in his last eight trips, he has raised his mark to .333.

Damon Farmar, who had knocked a two-run homer in the second inning to give the Angels their initial lead, started the clinching rally by working Wichita's Tommy Alexander, 3-5, for a walk to open the ninth. Farmar moved to second on a sacrifice bunt by Edwin Marquez.

Then after Bill Geivett's routine grounder to short was thrown away by Roberto Alomar, Carrasco slapped a seeing-eye single to right to earn Midland's second straight win over the Pilots. Miguel Garcia, 6-3, took credit for the win.

It was the conclusion that almost happened two hours earlier. But when play resumed after the delay, the Angels almost gave it away.

It didn't take Wichita long to take advantage of their second opportunity, touching Garcia for a pair of runs in the Pilots first chance to bat after the delay. But it was Garcia's wildness and the soggy turf that led to the tying runs.

Mike DeButch and Alomar led off the seventh with singles, then a fielder's choice put runners on first and third. A bloop single by Brad Pounders that Mark Doran couldn't run down on the wet turf dropped in for one run, and a passed ball and a wild pitch led to the tying run.

The Wichita rally deprived Midland starter David Martinez of a win in his first appearance in nearly a month. Martinez went the first five, allowing five hits and four walks, but working out of jams when he needed to.

"I felt pretty good, the shoulder has been getting better every day for about two weeks," Martinez said. "I think in two or three more starts I should be back to where I was when I got hurt."

Martinez worked through some early wildness, walking two batters in each of the first two innings. DeButch opened the game with a walk, went to third on Alomar's double and scored on a fielder's choice by Jerald Clark.

But Farmar, playing just his second game of the season in right field, took Martinez off the hook with his eighth home run with the newly implanted center fielder Mark Doran on base in the second.

"I didn't even know I would be playing right field, you kind of take for granted that I'll be in center so I didn't even glance at the scorecard," Farmar said. "I'm not upset about it or anything, I just have to concentrate more in right. Obviously I'm more comfortable in center."

Farmar has been showing signs of coming to life in the second half and has collected extra base hits in each of the last three games.

"I look at the second half as a brand new season for me," Farmar said. "I had a good series in El Paso and I just wanted to keep that going on this homestand.

ANGEL NOTES: Midland has shown life themselves on this homestand. Teams interested in LaMarr Hoyt

BALTIMORE (AP) — Former San Diego Padres pitcher LaMarr Hoyt is the subject of "considerable interest" by several major-league teams, according to the player's agent, Ron Shapiro.

"We've had calls from a number of teams, particularly this weekend, and we've been talking with them," Shapiro said. "Among those who have called are Texas, Atlanta, Toronto, Baltimore, the Chicago White Sox.

"There's been considerable interest," Shapiro said. "We're listening to people, analyzing, this weekend."

The 32-year-old Hoyt, winner of the American League Cy Young Award with the White Sox in 1983, cleared waivers on Friday after being released by the Padres.

Hoyt, who has suffered substance abuse problems, was put on waivers by the Padres hours after an arbitrator said the club was wrong in dropping the right-hander last January, and ordered him restored to the roster.

The Padres' attempt to nullify their contract with Hoyt also was rescinded and the team was held liable for $2.8 million in salary through 1989.

After the arbiter's decision, Shapiro said Hoyt's first impulse was to rejoin the Padres.

"Certainly, when the decision of the arbiter was rendered, his desire was to go back to San Diego. But when the door is shut so tightly in your face, your interest ebbs somewhat."

Because his salary is guaranteed through 1989, Hoyt "doesn't have to play baseball," Shapiro said.

"He's listening to the clubs' approach to him ... how they see him putting his career back together."

Shapiro said that "something's got to happen real soon" if Hoyt is to pitch this season. "It's a question of how his arm is, and how his body is, and getting back into shape. I should think something would have to happen in the next week."

Hoyt, who must follow a rehabilitation plan filed with the commissioner's office in order to stay in baseball, can be signed for the pro-rated portion of the minimum annual salary of $62,500. The Padres are obligated to pay the rest, with an amount already deducted to cover the period of 60-day suspension ordered by Commissioner Peter Ueberroth.

The Padres said Hoyt's release was in keeping with the team's no-second-chance policy for players with drug problems. Hoyt had three drug-related brushes with the law in 1986 and spent 30 days in jail following a misdemeanor drug conviction.

Ueberroth had originally suspended Hoyt for a year, but arbitrator George Nicolau termed the punishment excessive and reduced it.

Becker's loss real stunner

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Boris Becker, smarting from his second-round upset at Wimbledon, flew out of Britain Saturday leaving questions about his future and whether he can be a long-term champion.

As British newspapers front-paged Becker's 7-6, 4-6, 6-2, 6-4 defeat Friday by Peter Doohan, other players said they were still trying to come to terms with the result.

"There is a silence in the locker room about it. I think the players are still shocked," Frenchman Henri Leconte said.

Australian Rod Laver, the last man to win the Grand Slam of tennis and a four-time Wimbledon champion in the 1960s, said Becker put pressure on himself by talking too much about his love for the tournament.

The 19-year-old West German said before the event that Wimbledon was where he was born as a tennis player, when he became the youngest men's champion two years ago at 17 and retained the crown last year.

He said he knew he would have to lose sometime but hoped it would not be this year.

"I think he expounded too much about coming back to Wimbledon," Laver said. "Saying what he said, the pressure was on. The more you open your mouth, the more it comes back to haunt you. He could have just said that if he got a good draw, he'd have a good shot."

But, Laver said, there were no weaknesses either on or off the court to prevent Becker from winning the grasscourt event again next year.

"Boris is here to stay," Laver said. "He's a great champion, great for the game and a breath of fresh air. I don't think he has anything to work on. History is full of champions who have one bad Wimbledon, and come back the following year."

As the tournament continued with a big hole where Becker should have been, the vanquished West German hurried away with his Romanian manager, Ion Tiriac.

To avoid the pursuing news media, Becker left his downtown hotel by a back entrance and changed cars three times on the way to Heathrow airport.

In his haste, Becker went to the wrong terminal and had to make a quick switch for the flight to Frankfurt.

Wearing dark glasses, Becker ignored all questions when he entered the airport, giving reporters an icy glare. He stayed tight-lipped all the way to his plane.

By the time Becker rose from his bed Saturday, his defeat by Doohan, ranked 70th in the world, was splashed across the front and back pages of the national newspapers.

The Mail questioned whether the absence of Becker's girlfriend, Benedicte Courtin, had affected the West German's performance.

Tiriac, the paper said, had asked her to stay away from Wimbledon because "he believed her presence would adversely affect his (Becker's) game."

Two weeks ago, Courtin was at Queens Club to see Becker win the Stella Artois tournament. On Friday, she was not at Wimbledon, and he lost.

In the build-up to Wimbledon, Becker made constant reference to the importance of the serve, especially the second serve, on grass. He said that in an emergency, he could probably outserve any opponent.

But against Doohan, an Australian who lives in Little Rock, Ark., he had to eat his words.

The West German made only 58 percent of his first serves, against 71 percent by the Australian. He produced 21 service winners compared with Doohan's 37, and double-faulted seven times.

Laver said Becker would learn from those stastistics.

"I don't see his serve disappearing, only getting better," Laver said. "He'll improve knowing how to serve in the different conditions. He blasts the first serve more than he should. He has variety but he did not use it against Doohan because he was not allowed to play his way. He was playing catch-up."

He said Becker also paid the penalty for under-estimating his opponent.

Andretti wins 60th pole

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Wet weather Saturday helped Mario Andretti nail down the 60th pole of his Indy-car career and his third in four years at the Meadowlands Indy.

Andretti's 99.108 mph qualifying lap from Friday held up as the weekend's best after rain washed down the track most of Saturday morning.

The 1.682-mile, 11-turn circuit winding through the parking lots and access roads of the New Jersey sports complex was drying as Saturday's time trials began, but never was dry enough for most of the drivers to challenge their first-day laps.

The only driver to improve on his Friday effort was rookie Ludwig Heimrath of Canada, who turned only a 62.148 on Friday because of a mechanical problems. He managed to increase that to 77.531 mph, but remained last on the 26-car grid for Sunday's 100-lap race.

The race is scheduled to start at 1 p.m. EDT and will be videotaped by NBC for telecast beginning at 4 p.m.

Meadowlands officials said more than 30,000 tickets had been sold for the race, which has an uncertain future.

CART, the major Indy-car sanctioning body, still is hoping the event in the biggest market in the United States will continue, but track officials said the Meadowlands Indy must reverse the financial losses of the previous three years in order to continue.

"I certainly hope it continues," said Andretti, who won the inaugural event on the narrow circuit in 1984. "It is my kind of track, very demanding. You have to be very precise. I like it and I like to race in this area."

Andretti's career pole total is a record, as is his road course mark of 23 pole position starts. He also has won four of six poles this season, though he has only a victory in the season-opener at Long Beach, Calif., to show for it.

"Starting up front is particularly important in road courses like this one because passing is so difficult," he said. "This way, you at least start with a clear track ahead of you and everybody else has to worry about getting past you."

One of the chasers Sunday will be Michael Andretti, Mario's son and the current CART-PPG series point leader, who qualified third at 97.712.

The younger Andretti is the track record-holder with his 1986 pole-winning speed of 100.023 mph.

Bobby Rahal, the defending series champion and the winner of the Indy-car event two weeks ago at Portland, Ore., will start from the outside of the second row after qualifying Friday at 97.933.

Unser, Porsche make team

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Al Unser says the challenge of developing a new car for Porsche on the Indy-car circuit appealed to him from the time the project was first announced last year.

The four-time Indianapolis 500 winner Saturday was officially named the driver of the German-built car that is scheduled to debut in a race at Nazareth, Pa., in Septmber.

Unser, 48, from Albuquerque, N.M., met with the media Saturday at the Meadowlands Sports Complex, where the Indy cars are running this weekend.

"I'm interested in any team that puts 100 percent effort toward racing," said Unser. "This is a challenge, a new team, a new car. But, as we have all heard and seen, Porsche does not come over to run last or second.

"I was hoping I would have a chance to run with Porsche. We talked before Indy," he added.

Unser, who started the season with no ride, won Indianapolis in May in a last-minute deal with former boss Roger Penske, then resumed his careful hunt for a full-time ride.

"I've said all along I wasn't about to do anything that wasn't a good effort and a good thing for me," said Unser, who stands third on the all-time Indy-car list with 38 victories. "Things didn't look too good for me in May, but it turned out very well. I'm a very lucky and fortunate man."

After Unser won Indianapolis, Penske, who has Rick Mears and Danny Sullivan as his regular drivers, offered Unser a ride in the two remaining 500-mile races and the $750,000 Marlboro Challenge, a special event prior to the final race of the season in Miami, Fla.

Al Holbert, an endurance racing star, winner of the recent LeMans 24 Hours race and the director of Porsche Motorsport North America, said the new commitment will not change Unser's deal with Penske.

"There's no problem with that," Holbert said. "I've talked with Roger (Penske) and this should not change anything."

Rusty Wallace captures pole for NASCAR's Miller American 400

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Rusty Wallace overcame gusty winds Saturday and captured the pole position for today's Miller American 400 NASCAR race at the Michigan International Speedway.

The big-name favorites took a back seat in qualifying for the $400,000 stock car race to Wallace, who took first with a speed of 170.746 mph.

It was the first time in his 110 Winston Cup races that the 30-year-old Wallace, of Fenton, Mo., won the right to start on the inside of the front row.

Another surprise was Derrike Cope of Spokane, who was second at 170.313 mph. Cope will start on the front row of a major race for the first time.

Bill Elliott, who has won four straight races here, was third at 170.257 mph.

Bass' extra base binge lifts Astros

Associated Press

If Kevin Bass had been more cautious Saturday, he would have hit for the cycle.

The Houston outfielder belted a two-run double in the first, tripled in the third, hit a two-run homer in the fifth and turned a blooper into a double in the seventh as the Astros defeated the San Francisco Giants 6-5.

"I couldn't stop at first base," Bass said of his final hit. "It's something you do instinctively. You go as far as you can. Actually, I was in a fog. I didn't even realize I was at second."

Bass became the first Astros player ever to get four extra-base hits in a game.

The Astros overcame two home runs apiece by Chili Davis and Matt Williams of the Giants. Davis' two-run homer in the ninth ended a string of 11 consecutive solo homers by the Giants.

The Giants, who dropped below .500 for the first time since last Sept. 7, lost slugger Candy Maldonado for a minimum of six weeks when he fractured a finger in his right hand while chasing Bass' triple.

"I feel especially bad for Candy," Giants Manager Roger Craig said. "He's worked so hard to be an everyday player. He had a chance to put some big numbers on the board, and then this happens."

Maldonado, who was placed on the 21-day disabled list, was hitting .332. He was among the National League leaders with 92 hits, 22 doubles, and nine game-winning RBI.

Starter Jim Deshaies, 8-2, won his sixth straight game for the Astros. He pitched seven innings, giving up five hits and striking out five.

Davis' two-run homer in the ninth off Danny Darwin cut the Astros lead to 6-5. But Dave Meads came in to strike out pinch-hitter Harry Spilman, and Larry Andersen got the final two outs to pick up his first save of the season.

Mets 5, Phillies 4

Terry Leach pitched a four-hitter over eight innings, leading the New York Mets over Philadelphia.

The victory was the Mets' seventh in their last nine games and the ninth loss for the Phillies in their last 11.

Leach, 6-0, who has appeared in 23 games — 19 in relief, is 3-0 as a starting pitcher. The 33-year-old right-hander allowed two runs, struck out three and did not walk a batter. After a two-out single by Darren Daulton in the fourth, Leach retired 13 of the last 14 men he faced.

Jesse Orosco started the ninth and allowed a leadoff pinch homer to Chris James, his fifth, and a one-out double to Mike Schmidt before Roger McDowell entered. McDowell allowed a two-out, RBI single to Glenn Wilson before getting Lance Parrish to ground out for the final out and his ninth save.

Shane Rawley, 8-5, allowed five runs and nine hits in 4⅔ innings.

Pirates 7, Cubs 0

Rick Reuschel pitched a four-hitter for his 21st career shutout and Junior Ortiz drove in three runs as Pittsburgh defeated the Chicago Cubs.

Reuschel, 6-4, pitched his sixth complete game and first shutout of the season. It was the ninth time in 16 starts this year that he has allowed one earned run or less. Reuschel, 38, walked two and struck out six. He has an earned run average of 2.33, second in the National League to Mike Scott's 2.28.

The Cubs have lost four straight games and have scored only five runs during the losing streak.

Ortiz singled in the Pirates' first run in the fourth inning after Andy Van Slyke walked and stole second.

The Pirates scored five runs in the fourth against starter Jamie Moyer, 8-5. Barry Bonds hit his 12th home run and third in the last four games to make it 2-0.

Singles by Bobby Bonilla and Johnny Ray and a walk to former Midland Cub Mike Diaz loaded the bases before Jim Morrison walked to force in a run. Ortiz then lined a two-run single to left and Al Pedrique followed with an RBI single. Ortiz entered the game with seven RBI in 81 at-bats.

NL Roundup

Cardinals 15, Expos 5

Curt Ford hit two home runs, including a two-run shot during a six-run third inning as St. Louis routed Montreal.

Ford entered the game with three homers in 345 major-league at-bats.

St. Louis starter Bob Forsch, 6-3, pitched six innings and allowed nine hits as the Cardinals beat the Expos for only the second time in seven meetings this season. Ricky Horton pitched the final three innings for his seventh save.

Vince Coleman led off the game against Montreal's Bryn Smith, 5-3, and reached on Andres Galarraga's fielding error at first. Coleman then stole second and took third on a fly ball. Tommy Herr singled to to score Coleman and Jack Clark followed with a single, sending Herr to third.

Willie McGee's ground out to second scored Herr and advanced Clark to second. Terry Pendleton followed with a single to right, sending Clark home for a 3-0 lead.

In the third with one out, Herr walked and took third on Clark's double. McGee followed with a single, scoring Herr and sending Clark to third. After McGee stole second, Pendleton followed with a two-run single and took second on the throw home.

Law, an infielder, pitched the final 1⅓ for Montreal allowing three hits including Jose Oquendo's RBI single in the ninth.

Padres 8, Braves 4

Tony Gwynn had a run-scoring triple and singled to help break a seventh-inning tie as San Diego won its 11th victory in 14 games.

Gwynn increased his major league-leading average to .383 with three hits and has hit in eight straight games.

The Padres broke a 4-4 tie in the seventh when Tim Flannery led off with a walk, the fifth in two innings by Atlanta reliever Jeff Dedmon, 2-2. Flannery went to third on Gwynn's single to right and scored on Shane Mack's double play grounder.

The Padres added three runs in the eighth on Randy Ready's two-run pinch single and a double-play grounder.

Reliever Lance McCullers, 4-5, shut down a Braves rally in the sixth, but allowed Atlanta to tie the game in the seventh. Rich Gossage pitched the ninth inning and struck out the side. He has not allowed a run in 15 2-3 innings.

Rafael Ramirez started the seventh with a single, stole second, and took third when shortstop Garry Templeton failed to cover the bag in time as Gerald Perry struck out. With Dale Murphy at the plate, Ramirez scored on a wild pitch. Murphy then hit his 24th homer of the season, taking the National League lead.

The Padres broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth with two runs off starter Randy O'Neal. After Flannery's leadoff single off a charging Glenn Hubbard at second base, Gwynn tripled. Following a walk to Carmelo Martinez, Gwynn scored on a John Kruk's fielder's choice groundout.

Atlanta's Graig Nettles hit his third homer in the sixth to narrow the margin to 3-2.

Oakland rookie Mark McGwire connects for his third homer Saturday against the Cleveland Indians. He now has 25 on the year, one short of AL leader George Bell, who has 26.

White's homer keeps streak alive

Associated Press

Former Midland Angel Devon White hit a home run and scored from first base on a sacrifice and an error as California won its sixth consecutive victory with a 3-1 win over the Chicago White Sox Saturday afternoon.

The winning streak is the Angels' longest since last Aug. 24-31, when they won seven in a row.

White, whose wife Colleen gave birth to a son on Friday, broke a 1-1 tie in the sixth inning after drawing a walk. Dick Schofield bunted and White continued to third and scored on first baseman Greg Walker's wild throw past third base.

White hit his 14th home run in the eighth inning off starter Floyd Bannister, 3-7, for an insurance run. Bannister's last victory was against Boston on May 23.

California's Mike Witt, 9-5, allowed eight hits in 7⅔ innings and struck out eight. DeWayne Buice pitched the last 1⅓ for his sixth save.

Chicago Manager Jim Fregosi was ejected from the game in the seventh inning by home plate umpire Ken Kaiser for arguing on a called third strike on Steve Lyons.

Rangers 11, Twins 6

Ruben Sierra hit a three-run homer and Larry Parrish added a two-run shot in the fourth inning as Texas rallied for an victory over Minnesota in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader.

Edwin Correa, 3-5, got the victory despite giving up 10 hits and six runs in the first four innings. He went five innings before giving way to Jeff Russell.

Prior to the Rangers' five-run fourth, Twins starter Joe Niekro wild- pitched two runners home and another scored on catcher Tim Laudner's passed ball.

The Twins, however, overcame all of this with Kent Hrbek's 19th home run of the season, a two-run shot in the third, and Laudner's two-run homer and Greg Gagne's solo shot in the fourth, which gave Minnesota a 6-4 lead. The homers were Laudner's eighth and Gagne's fifth.

Then in the Ranger fourth, Mike Stanley led off with a single and stole second. After Niekro got the next two outs, he walked Scott Fletcher and was replaced by George Frazier, 5-3, who was greeted by Sierra's 10th homer of the season, giving Texas a 7-6 lead.

Pete O'Brien then walked and Parrish hit his 18th of the year to stretch the Ranger lead to 9-6.

O'Brien drove in the final two runs with a sacrifice fly in the sixth and single in the eighth. The single stretched his hitting streak to 14 games.

Niekro went 3⅔ innings, allowed four hits, six runs, walked five and struck out three. Frazier allowed four hits and four runs in 2⅓ innings. Dan Schatzeder finished up for the Twins.

Athletics 13, Indians 3

Mark McGwire slugged three home runs and drove in five runs as Oakland routed slumping Cleveland.

McGwire hit a two-run homer in the first, a solo shot in the fifth and another two-run blast in the ninth to raise his season total to 24, second in the American League behind George Bell's 26.

McGwire also had a single and scored five runs. Carney Lansford and Reggie Jackson added home runs for the Athletics.

Joaquin Andujar, making his first start since going on the disabled list with a pulled left hamstring June 10, went the first five innings to raise his record to 2-1.

Ken Schrom, winless since May 24, took the loss for Cleveland, which dropped its sixth straight game.

Jackson hit his ninth home run of the season and 557th of his career in the seventh of Rich Yett. Jackson has five home runs and 17 RBI in his last 15 games.

AL Roundup

Royals 6, Mariners 0

Bret Saberhagen pitched a three-hitter for his major-league-leading 13th victory as Kansas City shutout Seattle.

Saberhagen, who also leads the majors in ERA with 2.17, shut down the Mariners on just three singles.

Rebounding from only his second loss of the season, Saberhagen struck out four and walked two. It was the third shutout and ninth complete game for Saberhagen, a 23-year-old right-hander coming off a disappointing 7-12 campaign after winning the 1985 Cy Young Award.

Lee Guetterman suffered his first loss in six decisions since being called up May 21.

Orioles 4, Tigers 2

Lee Lacy's two-run double with two outs in the ninth inning sparked Baltimore over Detroit and snapped an eight-game road losing streak for the Orioles.

Darrell Evans homered in the first inning to become the 154th player in major-league history to achieve 2,000 hits. The 19-year veteran hit a 2-1 delivery from Mike Boddicker into the upper deck to score Lou Whitaker and give the Tigers a 2-0 lead.

Baltimore scored an unearned run in the seventh, snapping its streak of 22⅓ scoreless innings and ending Tanana's string of shutout innings at 15⅓. Tanana shut out Toronto 2-0 Monday.

Yankees 9, Red Sox 1

Don Mattingly hit a three-run homer and Bob Tewksbury pitched seven strong innings, leading the Yankees over Boston.

Mattingly connected during a four-run first inning against Dennis Boyd, 1-1. Mattingly's seventh home run of the season was his first since May 22, a span interrupted by an 18-day stay on the disabled list that ended Wednesday.

Boyd, in his second start of the year, gave up six runs, four earned, on nine hits in five-plus innings. He missed the first part of the season with a sore right shoulder and left the game with slight discomfort in his shoulder, but is not expected to miss any action.

Don Baylor tied a major-league record when he was hit by a pitch for the 243rd time in his career. Baylor tied Ron Hunt's mark when he was hit in the left shoulder by Tewksbury in the sixth.

The game drew 47,829 and put the Yankees' home attendance at 1,018,918, the 15th straight year the club has drawn more than 1 million.

Blue Jays 8, Brewers 1

Jim Clancy pitched a four-hitter and Lloyd Moseby drove in five runs, including three with a homer to lead Toronto.

Clancy, 8-5, struck out seven and walked three as he finally gained his eighth victory after six straight failures.

The Blue Jays scored twice in the second off Juan Nieves, 5-5, to take a 3-1 lead. They added two runs on Moseby's bases-loaded single in the seventh and three more in the ninth on a homer by Moseby, his 12th.

Nieves was relieved in the seventh by Jay Aldrich after Moseby's single. Nieves gave up seven hits while walking six. He has not pitched a complete game since throwing a no-hitter against Baltimore on April 15.

ASA celebrates 100th anniversary Monday

CHICAGO (AP) — From its beginning exactly 100 years ago with a stick swatting a boxing glove, softball has developed into a sport played by an estimated 50 million people in 75 countries.

"It's an easy game to play. It doesn't take too much energy. And it's a time-killer," says Billy Carter, brother of ex-President Jimmy Carter and one-time softball player in southwestern Georgia.

To toast the sports' 100th anniversary, the Amateur Softball Association, headquartered in Oklahoma City, unveils a plaque Monday to mark the spot where the game was born on Chicago's Near South Side.

The ex-First Brother is only one of many celebraties who have enjoyed softball. Others include movie-maker Woody Allen, actor George C. Scott, singer Barbara Mandrell and syndicated newspaper columnist Mike Royko.

"I'm not playing any more — too old," says Royko, 54. He started in the sport as a youngster "because I didn't want to break a leg playing football."

Billy Carter once played for a league in Americus, Ga., and later pitched on the news media team that played in Plains, Ga., when his brother was at the Southern White House in the late 1970s. He also has retired from the game.

"I'm too old to slide. And it takes me too long to get out of bed when I do slide," said Carter, 50.

Still very much in the softball spotlight, however, is pitcher Kathy Arendsen, who was once able to strike out baseball slugger Reggie Jackson in his prime. In a one-on-one exhibition, Jackson fanned three times in a row in 1981 at Syracuse, N.Y.

"She can control the ball at 96 mph and do more with it than most major league pitchers," says Bill Plummer, spokesman for the Amateur Softball Association.

Arendsen, 29, an assistant coach at Northwestern Unversity in suburban Evanston and pitcher for the perennial national champion Hi-Ho Brakettes of Stratford, Conn., since 1978, is proud of her individual accomplishments. They include 2,813 strikeouts in 1,834 innings and an earned run average of 0.14.

But, the 6-foot-2 pitcher gets her biggest kick out of winning for the Brakettes, with whom she has fashioned a 218-20 record in nine seasons.

"I love the challenges pitching gives me. There's a lot of pressure, but there's a lot of glory in winning," says Arendsen.

The average softballer plays the sport for a variety of reasons.

"Softball is a very social sport. It gets you outside," says Penny Warter, 29, a systems engineer with IBM who has played organized softball in New York and now Chicago. "You're exercising but it's a group sport. Afterwards you go out and drink beer and socialize."

There are slow or fast-pitch leagues, with all-male, all-female or coed players. Leagues are often sponsored by businesses or a park district. Most regions play with a 12-inch ball but the Chicago speciality is the 16-incher.

It was in 1887 at the Farragut Boathouse on Chicago's Near South Side where George Hancock, an employee of the Chicago Board of Trade, became the father of softball, according to the sport's historians.

Today, even Florence Nightingale would ask more.

And we wouldn't blame her a bit.

Nursing in 1987 continues the spirit of compassion that Florence Nightingale showed more than 100 years ago. But times have changed. The job is far more complex, the judgement calls are tougher, the educational requirements stiffer. Nurses expect more rewards and respect. And because they are in short supply everywhere, they can be extremely picky. It's a competitive field, and that's why Hendrick Medical Center is offering you a variety of benefits. Many benefits during hours, and after hours.

Your Opportunities
Hendrick Medical Center is a licensed 464-bed regional acute care facility providing care for a 19-county region of West Texas. Our nursing units include:
- General med/surg
- Critical care, Trauma Center
- Progressive care
- Pediatrics
- Oncology
- Cardiac catheterization
- Chemical dependency
- Day surgery
- Labor and delivery, post-partum and level II nursery

Your Benefits
Our aggressive benefit package includes: $1000 bonus for RNs in direct patient care (thru Sept. 21, 1987)
- Relocation assistance
- $1.73 shift differential
- 25 percent weekend/holiday differential
- Extensive orientation
- Continuing medical education, CEARP points offered through staff development program
- Tuition assistance
- Free hospitalization and life insurance.
- Pharmacy, meal discounts
- Paid holidays, sick days, vacation
- Credit Union on Campus

Perfectly Portable

Next weekend is Fourth of July weekend, the holiday that most symbolizes American's love of freedom — including the freedom to break out from the weekday, indoor drudgery and spend some time in the Great American Outdoors. Traditional July 4 activities include cooking outdoors, playing sports and games outdoors, swimming and tanning outdoors, relaxing outdoors and exploding fireworks — outdoors, of course.

If you're one who appreciates the beauty and openness of the outdoors but hates to give up the conveniences of the indoors, now you can have the best of both worlds. Thanks to the marvels of modern technology, you can take your creature comforts with you when you venture outside to hear the wind whistle through the trees and the birds sing.

Of course, because of some of these modern comforts, instead of birds you may hear Roger Williams whistling or Whitney Houston singing via portable cassette players and radios. From tiny ones you can hear only through earphones to 20-pound "boom boxes" that can blast the eardrums of casual listeners 100 feet away, these moveable music makers have allowed music lovers to take their music "wherever they go" for years.

If just audio isn't enough, never fear. Modern technology hasn't let you down. Portable battery-operated televisions — with or without AM-FM radios and cassette tape players in the same unit — are available in both color and black and white. These versatile five- to seven-inch-screen sets can operate on regular house current or batteries, usually size D, according to John Burns, manager of Radio Shack. "Good alkaline batteries" will operate these tiny televisions for about eight to 10 hours, he added, depending on whether or not the built-in radios or tape players have been used, too.

And while you are watching your portable television, you can light the coals in your portable charcoal grill — another must for a July 4 barbecue. These grills come in one-, two- or four-steak size, and you can pack them in the trunk of a car to be transported to a Fourth of July cookout or picnic or even to a campsite (of course, some grills — and some car trunks — are larger than others).

Another tradition for the Fourth is homemade ice cream. Portable ice cream freezers are operated with a crank and a lot of elbow grease, but that's half of the fun. Although this is not a feasible idea for picnicking because the ice cream freezer must be stored in the home freezer at least seven hours or overnight before use, it could add a tasty treat to a backyard barbecue.

If you would rather picnic in "unexplored" territory instead of an already-established park, picnic area or backyard, folding picnic tables with seating for four and overhead umbrella are the perfect portables to make "roughing it" a little easier. These table and seating ensembles with an umbrella will provide shade and eating space, and fit easily in the back of a car.

But if you prefer really to rough it over the coming holiday weekend, you can still take "home" with you. Rod Bruce, manager of Oshman's, said Midland's slow economy has caused a drop-off in the number of "big vacations" and an increase in the number of weekend camping trips.

To really "rough it" today usually includes camping-out overnight in a tent. Although these portable "mini-homes" are available in a variety of sizes, shapes and colors, Bruce said the most popular size is the cabin tent, which will sleep between four and 10 campers. "The smallest is 8x10-feet," he said. "The largest is 14x14 — as big as somebody's den."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

"Hurry up and wait" is said to be the philosophy of the military and movie making. We experienced a taste of the latter when sequences of the Summer Mummers moviela were being filmed. I got a brief taste of "stardom" playing the society reporter at the orgy (ostensibly taking notes for this column).

Much of our time was spent watching the creative juices flowing as moviemakers, including cinematographer Larry Mitchell, director Ron Hughes and second unit director Harry Harrison figured out what to do next. Gilley Estes and Jody McElligott were the key grips.

This year's melodrama, "Tribulation on the Tiber," is set in ancient Rome, so the film naturally has an orgy scene. It was shot poolside at the home of Jackie and Wes Perry.

Among the local "celebrities" you'll see enjoying the grapes and the "bubbly" are longtime Midland restauranteurs Zelda and Louie Hochman, Sheriff Gary Painter, new Chief of Police Dick Czech and his wife, Karen, City Councilwoman Katie Heck, oilman Arlen Edgar, geologist Scotty Alcorn and Judges Pat Baskin and Vann Culp.

To kick off this year's Mummers, a toga party has been planned for the July 3rd opening. Those attending in costume will receive special recognition and prizes. The play and the ever-popular olio which follows will be staged at the historic Yucca Theatre in Downtown Midland on weekends throughout the summer.

"FEELING COOPED UP?" So began the clever, chicken-shaped invitations to a "Girls' Weekend Away." Hostess Marion Lindley Goudeau hand delivered the invites, to which she had attached plastic sailboats and sunglasses, in March, so her friends could begin making arrangements for their families well in advance of the June 12 getaway.

The fun event took place at the Possum Kingdom Lake house of Marion's father, Sid Lindley.

The guests, Kelly Shaw Cunningham, Elizabeth Montgomery Newell, Holly Holt Williamson, Lyn Thomason Brown, Peggy O'Shaughnessy Eckley, all of Midland, and Lucy Dean Yancy of Dallas, were classmates at Trinity School and have remained close friends through the years. Joining them was Marion's sister, Sydney Lindley Stickney.

Good conversation, perfect weather and the relaxing pace made it a delightful weekend for the young women. Leisure-time activities included boating, fishing, sunbathing and board games.

ANDREA COMOLA, daughter of Jackie and Wilson Comola, was honored with a recent swimming and supper party at the home of Corinne and Toby Carleton.

Andrea is a graduate of the National Academy of Arts in Champaign, Ill. She will join the Nevada Dance Theatre in September.

EMILY GEORGE, bride-elect of Scott Hall of Dallas, was honored with a display shower recently in the home of Helen (Mrs. Alan) Spinks.

The daughter of Lou Nelle and Jeff George, Emily and her fiance are planning to be married Aug. 1 in the First Baptist Church here.

Co-hostesses for the shower were Kathryn (Mrs. Jim) Nichols, Iris (Mrs. Bob) Todd, Lu (Mrs. Gerald) Calhoun, Kay (Mrs. Bill) Burchard, Betty (Mrs. Willard) Dellis, Gwen (Mrs. Roy, Jr.) Carley, Hazel (Mrs. Glenn) Pierce, Gail (Mrs. Jim) Storrie and Jan (Mrs. Gary) Owen.

Out-of-town guests included Emily's grandmother, Luetta (Mrs. Oscar) Kost, and her great-aunt, Leta Powell, both of Ozona; her cousin, Kristi Kirby of Crane, and her sister, Katherine (Mrs. Torey) Nalbone, with her infant daughter, Adrienne, of Dallas.

Emily also was honored by her fellow teachers at Heather Glen Elementary School in Garland with a surprise party and miscellaneous shower on the last day of classes.

PAULINE (PAULS) and Leo Grace hosted the Pauls' family reunion in Midland recently.

Approximately 85 family members gathered at Ulmer Park for the June 13 occasion. They came from throughout Texas, as well as Kansas, New Mexico, Colorado, Massachusetts and Washington.

A potluck meal was served at noon, and the day's activities included a sing-along, horseshoes, volleyball, swimming, playground equipment, and a softball game.

The host couple moved to Midland in 1956 from Selden, Kan., when Mr. Grace accepted a job with Halliburton during one of Midland's boom times.

The Graces have eight children, all of whom were present with their families for the reunion. The first four were born in Colby, Kan., Donna Grace Riggall of Arlington, Kathy Grace Wolf and Duane Grace, both of Midland, and Pete Grace of San Angelo. Their remaining four are Midland natives, Cheryl Grace Urban, Tommy Grace and Johnny Grace, all who continue to reside here, and Jeanine Grace Hooper of Arlington.

Mrs. Grace tells us they have always enjoyed bragging about their "even" family — namely, four Kansans, four Texans, four pairs of brown eyes, four pairs of blue eyes, four boys and four girls.

All eight graduated from Midland High School, and the Graces had the pleasure of seeing their first grandchild, Terry Lynn Gammage, graduate from MHS earlier this month. They also have 11 other grandchildren.

Summer food poisoning common, but avoidable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beaches and backyards, parks and public gardens beckon Americans from their homes in summer, drawing them outdoors for the picnic enjoyed in nature.

Don't let nature take over and spoil the event, though, food experts warn. Food poisoning can become a major problem in warm weather, and the fault, more often than not, is simple carelessness.

Few foods are sterile, warns the Food and Drug Administration. No matter how carefully processed, there is most often some low level of bacteria that remain behind. The important thing is not to allow them to multiply to dangerous levels.

In warm summer weather, "one cell can multiply into 281 trillion bacteria after 24 hours," reports Michael P. O'Neill, executive chef at the Thomas Jefferson University Hospital in Philadelphia.

To avoid this sort of thing, the U.S. Department of Agriculture urges following a simple but effective rule: keep hot food hot, keep cold food cold, keep all food clean.

Recommended temperatures are below 40 degrees for cold items, above 140 degrees for hot ones — 160 for pork. Sounds elementary, sure, but people don't always do it, and the result is that during the course of a year some 2 million Americans suffer some food poisoning episode, according to the department.

And be warned, you can't detect food poisoning bacteria. The bacteria don't change the taste or smell of the food. So you may not be aware of their presence until later, when the result is diarrhea, vomiting or stomach cramps.

To start with, buy fresh foods, says Chef O'Neill: "Meat should look fresh, be deep red in color and not brown around the edges. Whole fish shouldn't have a sheen on the skin, because that means bacteria is already starting to form; and the eyes should be clear, not clouded."

Here is a rundown of some other outdoor meal safety thoughts from the Food and Drug Administration:

- Be especially careful with moist protein foods, these are the most popular places among bacteria. Such items include meat, poultry, eggs, seafood, custards, cream pies, potato salads, milk and milk products.
- Buy only pasteurized milk, cream, cheese and milk products.
- Clean knives, plates, cutting boards and other utensils after their use on susceptible foods, such as meats. If possible use separate cutting boards for meats and vegetables.
- If you kill wild game, cook it as completely as pork. Gut fresh fish, keep them cool and cook as soon as possible. Don't forage for clams, oysters or crabs in polluted waters.

Tubing favorite summer activity in Central Texas

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Summertime and the tubing is easy. Find some beer, find a river, find a tube. Plunk down your money, plunk down your tube, plunk down your rear end and you're ready for several hours of lazy, carefree drifting, right?

Wrong.

Even tubing, a water sport that would seem to require the IQ of a gerbil and the coordination of Gerald Ford, demands common sense and precautions.

The Guadalupe River, the area's most popular tubing spot, is a picturesque and guileless-looking river. On hot, sunny weekends, as many as 50,000 people partake of the waters of the Guadalupe and Comal rivers near New Braunfels, with that number soaring even higher on holiday weekends.

One thing the masses have in common is a large, black inner tube that allows backsides to trail through 60-degree water while front sides are exposed to a blistering sun.

Hypothermia and sunburn are very real risks on the river. Yet the most serious mistake any tuber can make is forgetting just how strong that lazy current is.

Earlier this month, 25-year-old Sherri Baker of New Braunfels drowned in the Guadalupe River after falling out of an inner tube. An employee of White Water Sports, Ms. Baker was tubing with several friends who apparently were unable to rescue her.

SUCH ACCIDENTS are rare on the Guadalupe, but almost every tubing veteran has an anecdote, whether it was a near-miss with one of the hydraulic dams, a collision with a tree, or a current that knocked someone flat when he tried to disembark.

"The important thing is, not to panic," Doug Guerrant, manager of Texas Canoe Trails, said of tubing travails. "If you just lay back, the water's going to carry you along."

The savvy tuber begins planning a weekend expedition Friday by checking out the river flow reports with the Corps of Engineers at 512-964-3342.

Given in cubic feet per second, the flow rate is regulated by the release of water from Canyon Dam. Anything above 400 cfs is considered good for tubing, with 300 cfs ranking as average.

This has been an exceptionally wet year, which would make for good tubing except that water releases from Canyon Dam made necessary by the heavy rainfall has made the flow rate exceptionally dangerous.

At midweek the Corps of Engineers reported the Guadalupe flow rate at 5,460 cfs, which the Corps terms "extremely dangerous for river recreation." The Corps estimates that level could be maintained for six weeks.

River outfitters recommend against tubing when the flow rate is high, and most have been offering guided raft trips lately instead of renting equipment to individuals. They recommend against going alone without a guide.

ANYTIME IMMEDIATELY after a rain, the run-off can make tubing hazardous. Wait until the water is clear again.

When it is safe to go in the water, bathing suits, shorts and T-shirts are obvious choices in dressing for tubing success. What's not obvious to some first-timers is that shoes are essential because of the river's rocky bottom. Old, good-for-nothing sneakers are the ideal footwear.

Tubes are available from a number of entrepreneurs along the Guadalupe, ranging from gas stations to river outfitters. Prices vary from an average of $4 a person to $7.50, according to the services offered. Parking and shuttles are virtual musts.

You can tube seven days a week. The weekends are the most crowded, and Sunday is more crowded than Saturday. Beyond that, the most important guideline is to plan a trip so you can complete the two- to four-hour journey before dark.

Finding a location to tube is a more complicated issue. The Guadalupe may be the most popular river, but it's not the only one. More experienced tubers may went to explore on their own the tubing possibilities of the Blanco, Frio and San Marcos rivers, keeping mind to check on current river conditions. Along the Guadalupe, Farm Road 306 west of Interstate 35 is the road to tubing happiness.

Life vests are a must for children, Guerrant added. Children, in general, make good tubers because they're relaxed, he said. However, smaller children should ride on a parent's stomach.

NOW COMES the easy part. Just lie back, relax and let the river do the work. The northern part of the Guadalupe is full of what Guerrant describes as long, tapering rapids. (However, if you drift ahead of your group and try to paddle back to them, you will find it's almost impossible to travel upstream; the best you can do is remain stationary.)

Along the way, there are places where it's permissible to disembark. But most of the property along the Guadalupe is private and its owners can become fanatical about protecting that privacy.

The final step to a successful tubing trip is knowing where to disembark. If you rent tubes from an outfitter with a shuttle, make sure you know how to find the end of the trail — or you might end up in San Antonio Bay.

All these precautions may make tubing, an essentially frivolous activity, seem as serious and potentially hazardous as any water sport. That's the point — it is.

It also can be a pleasant way to spend a hot afternoon.

PORTABLES

Of course, camping is not the only way to "rough it." Some stay-at-home-type sports, including backyard football or basketball, can get pretty rough when the competition gets hot.

If you are a seasonal armchair quarterback, a portable football goal might just the equipment needed to test your real ability on the field.

Just grab a few friends, add a football — regulation or otherwise — set up your goal on your chosen field and you make the call.

If football isn't your game of choice, portable basketball goals, volleyball and badminton sets, croquet sets, frisbees and even darts sets are easy to carry along for outdoors activities.

After a rousing game, you may need something wet and cool to drink, and there a variety of insulated containers to keep cold drinks cold for just that occasion.

These containers are available in different sizes, from single-drink size complete with individual straws to coolers that can ice-down several cases of your favorite canned drinks.

You can even buy a disposable drink cooler — when the cans are thrown away, so is the cooler.

IF YOU are thirsty and in a hurry, the perfect solution is the thirst-quencher's hat — a plastic hat, similar to a baseball player's batting helmet, fitted with holders for two cans — one on each side of the head — and two plastic straws curved from the cans to the wearer's mouth.

And if baseball is your favorite sport, you'll be right in style at the ballpark and your hands will be free to cheer for the home team.

Unfortunately, not everyone is able to leave the indoor drudgery of work for a weekend outdoors, even on the Fourth of July weekend. But with some of the advances made by modern technology, even a busy business person can get away from the office for a while.

If office duties beckon you all too often, consider making some of those business calls on a cordless telephone. You can make or answer your calls and still be outside at the backyard barbecue.

Dan Haddock, manager of AT&T Phone Center, said the sound quality on the newest cordless phones has been improved to more closely match that of regular telephones.

Cordless phones "operate off FM frequency," he said, and are subject to interference, just like radios are. Because their range is limited, these cordless phones are not useful away from home, but they are ideal for use outside in the yard, Haddock said. "That's what they're for."

IF YOUR ear is not attached to a phone, but your fingers are stuck to a keyboard, you can even do office work in the backyard, using a portable computer.

These portables operate on inexpensive AA batteries. A disadvantage is that portable computers have shorter memories than their office counterparts — 72K, according to Radio Shack's Burns — but your office space would certainly be larger.

If staying home for the Fourth of July weekend is simply out of the question, then do the next best thing — get ready to go to work while you are outside. Thanks to cordless shavers, rechargeable curling irons and other accessories, you are no longer restricted to the bathroom for these tasks.

All of these portable conveniences and more, which are available at many stores in Midland, are just the thing to make your holiday weekend — and your whole summer — a little bit easier.

For those who are lucky enough to have the entire weekend off, July 4 is the time to get outside and enjoy food, friends and fun. And if all else fails, remember — you can make some electric appliances "portable" with an approved, indoor-outdoor 100-foot extension cord.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Senior citizens need proper nutrition for health

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

The fastest growing minority in the United States is the elderly — those 65 and over. While the age marker may be an arbitrary definition, it does define a population of men and women with unique and sometimes difficult health and nutrition problems.

To illustrate the concerns of people trying to meet the health needs of older Americans, consider that there are over 26 million individuals in our country who are over the age of 65. This figure represents 11.1 percent of the total population, yet these elderly account for 29 percent of the countries health care costs; 25 percent of the prescription drugs used; 15 percent of all visits to doctor's offices, and 34 percent of days in short stay hospitals.

Nutrition is a vital factor in the aging process. During aging, the chances of suffering a chronic illness are greater and health experts believe that poor eating habits contribute to some of these ailments. Therefore, improving the elderly's eating habits is being considered as a possible therapy for some conditions.

WHILE IT is still debatable about the recommended daily allowances of nutrients for the elderly, there are some important known facts, the first of which involves intake. As a person gets older the rate at which the body uses energy tends to decrease. Food intake generally is lower and the amount of lean body tissue decreases while the amount of body fat increases.

Secondly, the eating habits of older people also may be adversely affected. Reduced vision, decreased senses of smell and taste, loneliness, depression, poor teeth, income limitations and illness all have profound effects on an individual's eating habits. Increased medicine and alcohol usage also will have an effect. To compensate for taste loss, many older people eat more highly seasoned foods which can lead to salt over use, which only compounds their problems.

Poor teeth and gums may make chewing more difficult which results in a diet limited to foods that are easy to chew, but which may be lacking in essential nutrients.

The gastrointestinal tract, through which all food passes to be digested and absorbed, also undergoes changes as a person grows older. Hydrochloric acid secretion in the stomach generally decreases with age and can certainly interfere with digestion. Changes in the intestinal tract also can result in reduced intestinal absorption of some nutrients including protein, fats, carbohydrates, vitamins and minerals. In addition to this, the kidneys, which must excrete waste products, become less effective.

THESE AND other factors suggest that the elderly do have special dietary requirements and may need more of certain nutrients than they did when they were younger.

An example would be the lack of calcium in the diet as a factor in osteoporosis, a disease which leaves the bones brittle and makes them more easily fractured. Osteoporosis affects far more women than men and calcium supplements are often recommended for post menopausal women. Diets with calcium rich foods such as cheese, milk and other dairy products, along with regular exercise, are important to good bone renewal.

Zinc is another mineral that is lackig in some elderly people. It is essential for various metabolic processes such as the body's ability to heal wounds, its immunity to disease and infection. Seafood and eggs are especially good sources of zinc.

Nutrition experts generally stress that a well-balanced diet will provide most elderly people who are in good health with the nutrients necessary for healthy living. A proper daily diet should include:

- At least two servings of milk or other dairy products.
- Two servings of high protein foods (such as lean meat, poultry, fish, eggs, dried beans, nuts or peanut butter).
- Four servings of fruits and vegetables (including citrus fruits and juices and dark green leafy vegetables).
- Four servings of bread or cereal products — made with whole grain or enriched flour — rice or pasta.

MOST ELDERLY people who follow a proper diet do not need supplemental vitamins. Any supplementals taken should be based upon sound medical advice. Unnecessary and ill advised purchases of supplements not only deprive an older person of funds that could be spent for foods essential to good health, but also could lead to excessive and potentially toxic intake of certain vitamins and minerals.

Brothers suggests positive 'prescription' for lengthy life

By LEONARD J. HANSEN
Copley News Service

NEW YORK — The lady at the podium speaks with the poise and authority of the expert who has made psychology acceptable and human problems and their solutions understandable by the public in a score of years on television and radio, and in interviews in hundreds of feature stories in magazines and newspapers and in her own syndicated newspaper column.

Her subject — sexuality in aging, and even an active sexual life when disabled by arthritis or other afflictions — is one of her particular concerns.

The expert is Joyce Brothers, Ph.D., and she recently addressed a group of health journalists in a special meeting in New York City, reporting from research — her own and the work of others — on the subjects of aging, arthritis and other disabilities, sexuality and sexual experience and preventive methods for positive health.

"Thirty-six million Americans currently suffer from arthritis — and half to two-thirds of those people also suffer from some form of sexual dysfunction. But arthritis doesn't necessarily mean the end of sexual activity, enjoyment and intimacy.

"More than two-thirds of arthritis sufferers are women — women who have a right to intimacy. As a matter of fact, not only can rheumatoid arthritis sufferers have sex, surprising as that may seem to those in constant pain, but doctors have discovered that the very act of sex seems to provide relief of pain in severe cases."

DR. GEORGE Ehrlich, an arthritis specialist in Philadelphia, found that 70 percent of the victims he interviewed reported that the reason pain abates, according to Brothers, "is that sexual arousal stimulates the adrenal glands to produce more cortisone, and cortisone reduces inflammation, the cause of pain in the infected joints."

Osteoarthritis, "the wear and tear" disease and the most common form of arthritis, affects 24 million women, twice as many as men.

Rheumatoid arthritis a more severe form, and the second most common type of arthritis, affects three times as many women as men.

"Arthritis attacks the joints most directly involved in sexual intercourse: knee, hip and lower back. When these joints stiffen," states Brothers, "it is no wonder that interest in sexual activity drops.

Furthermore, the disease can change the appearance of a woman's body and her self-image, making her seem less feminine herself.

Depression and fatigue are natural consequences of the pain and the physical limitation of arthritis. Patients with rheumatoid arthritis have higher divorce rates than patients with any other chronic disease."

BUT IT doesn't have to be this way, according to this expert. "Arthritis almost never affects the sexual parts of the body. All women retain the ability to respond sexually well into their late years.

There are many 'prescriptions' for a long life — consisting mainly of negatives — don't eat too much; don't drink too much; don't smoke; avoid stress. But there is one prescription for a long life that is not only positive, but it is welcomed by a majority of people. It is to have an active, healthy sex life."

Brothers cited research that showed that when you get a cold, it can be because of negative emotion, and that researchers at Johns Hopkins Medical Center found that those people in love have fewer colds than those who are not.

"In other research on the common cold, psycho-immunologists have found that when an entire classroom is exposed to the rhino virus and related viruses that cause sniffles, the child who just won a trip to Disneyland doesn't get the cold at all, but the kid whose parents just got a divorce comes down the hardest with the cold. The same goes for the workplace. When the rhino virus invades that space, it's John, whose mother just died, who gets the worst cold, while Jane, who just got a promotion, escapes the virus.

Brothers cited other research by Richard Totman of Nuffield College at Oxford and Wallace Craig and Sylvia Reed of the British Medical Research Council on the Common Cold, showing the effect that the mind and emotions have on a cold. "Those that developed the most severe colds were those who had experienced stress in the six months prior to the infection.

"The researchers assume with reason that what is true for colds is also true for more severe illnesses. There are therapists who teach cancer patients to imagine their healthy white blood cells devouring cancerous tumors. Anxiety, anger, fear and other negative emotions can affect hormonal secretions so that they impeded the working of the immune system. Love, laughter, hope and joy can have the opposite effect.

CONTINUED SEXUAL activity according to Brothers can be as simple as touching and hugging, and as imaginative as sexual activity — including intercourse — which recognize the partial, limited physical ability. Sexual activity and the continuing awareness of sexuality can continue even to the most advanced ages, the expert states, and can be vitally, even healthfully important to the woman afflicted with arthritis.

"Sexuality can go a long way toward enhancing a woman's quality of life as she grows older," comments Brothers. 'Some surgeons today believe that sexual difficulty caused by hip involvement justifies hip replacement surgery — much can be done. All the woman needs is an interested partner."

Forgetfulness not always fact of aging, study finds

By LISA M. KRIEGER
Hearst News Service

New research findings debunk the traditional assumption that aging always leads to forgetfulness. Over the age of 60, most healthy people face no serious memory problems.

A new National Institutes of Aging study of 60 healthy men between ages of 20 and 80 found no decline in the ability to recall associations between words, reports Elisabeth Koss, Ph.D., of the National Institutes on Aging.

Intuitively, we know that we remember most of what we want to remember and forget what is painful, unneeded or unwanted. Less well understood is why we forget things we want to remember. We remember what's important or interesting, but abandon "clutter."

Albert Einstein, while at Princeton, could never remember his unlisted phone number and once had to call the switchboard to ask which house he lived in. Prominent mathematician Paul Erdos, while lecturing at Washington University in St. Louis, often forgot his Social Security number.

Yet Napoleon knew thousands of his soldiers by name. Toscanini conducted symphonies and operas without a score. The English statesman and historian Thomas Macaulay could recite all of the epic "Paradise Lost" without error, according to Joan Minninger, Ph.D., in her book, "Total Recall."

NEW RESEARCH shows that memory is an intangible pattern of connections. Each recollection is a unique pattern of connections between the brain's 15 to 100 billion neurons. It begins when we experience something for the first time. The new experience sets off a distinct pattern of electrical impulses, called nerve firing, that flash between excited neurons, according to Dr. Larry R. Squire of the University of California-San Diego.

When a person learns something new, the neurons alter their areas of contact so that messages can get across the synapses more easily, reported Dr. Mark Rosenzwieg of UC-Berkeley. New connections form and old ones are removed. In studies, he found that the brains of mice that lived in a stimulating world — full of toys, mazes, and merry-go-rounds — had larger and more dense concentrations of neuronal connections than mice in deprived environments.

Memory occurs when we try to recreate this pattern of neuron firing. The unique original pattern has been filed away and we must retrieve it from the files. But it has been changed or consolidated; the pattern is never exactly the same as the original experience. There is distortion and loss of detail.

HOW DOES information get transferred into our memory banks? What gets transferred and what gets dumped? Researchers believe that the transfer of memories to brain banks follows a neat three-phase process:

- Immediate, lasting two seconds or less. It lets us read a full sentence, complete a thought, or recognize if a person's expression changes.
- Short term, lasting 30 seconds to two days. You remember recent and often useless information, like what clothes you wore yesterday or where you sat at the movies. You look up a phone number, remember it, dial it, then forget it. Some information may survive as long as a year, but is unlikely to endure much longer unless it is refreshed or has special meaning. Studying something — deciding what it means and clustering it together in a logical fashion — boosts the chances that it will be transferred into long-term memory.
- Long term, lasting virtually forever. Some of these memories will be episodic, like what your childhood bedroom looked like. Other memories are semantic; you remember what words or numbers mean or multiplication tables.

In some people, these mental filing systems seem to be defect-free. Although most people can only memorize seven random numbers — a phone number, for instance — there are reports of Buddhists reciting thousands of pages of canonical texts, and a British card player memorized a random sequence of 312 cards on a single sighting, with only four errors.

MOST PEOPLE will recall exciting, stimulating or shocking incidents. These memories are easily and immediately retrievable — perhaps because brain chemicals such as adrenalin may act as a "fixative," locking these events into place. But the average person often loses huge volumes of information as it moves through the step-by-step in the transfer process. There are several ways that this happens:

- Ignoring incoming information. We're not paying attention while we hear or see something, so we don't record it. If it seems trivial or nonsensical, it may be discarded. The image of a man stepping out of a doorway may be discarded; the image of a man stepping out of a doorway with a sack of money would be retained.
- Misfiling. If we misunderstand what we see or hear, it gets misfiled or dumped. The only way to recall it is to let the mind float and seek some random free associations to find it.
- Distraction during retrieval. We may be juggling different activities — picking up laundry, getting the oil changed in the car — and suffer from "information overload." The retrieval process is never completed. The result: something you meant to remember slips through the cracks.

Over age 70, memory does change — but in unexpected ways that are both helpful and damaging. Researchers are learning that elderly people are less able to recall facts out of context, are better at vocabulary memory, have difficulty when asked to process old information. They need environmental or verbal clues to trigger a memory.

If you forget something, don't give up and concede: "I'm losing my memory." Thoughts are rarely lost; just misplaced, and retrievable once you learn how to organize the brain's mental filing cabinets.

Due to the large number Japanese and Chinese residents in Hawaii, life expectancy is higher than in other states.

Statistics show Hawaii best state to live to 100

Associated Press

HONOLULU — Who is the oldest person in Hawaii?

Robert Schmitt, the state statistician, doesn't know who he or she is but he is sure the person is well over 100 years old.

"I would say there may be a couple of people around 110 who are still kicking," he said. "The truth is, few people get by 110."

But the odds of getting by 100 are better in Hawaii than in any other state, according to recent studies.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. concluded that of 100,000 people born today in Hawaii, more of them will live to be 100 years old than in any other state: roughly 1,700 people.

That doesn't mean there are a lot of centenarians in Hawaii right now, Schmitt said.

The optimistic figures refer to people born today, not 100 years ago. Back then, the odds that the people who are 100 today would make it this far were pretty bad.

"There used to be appalling mortality in Hawaii," he said.

And how many centenarians are there today? That's hard to say. According to a recent census, there were 113 people 100 years old or older in Hawaii. But Mainland Social Security figures in 1985 put the number at 88 — 34 men and 54 women.

Schmitt thinks Social Security's figures probably are more realistic than census figures because it requires birth certificates.

As disrespectful as it might seem, historians and statisticians can't rely on the word of the very elderly when it comes to giving their true age.

"There is a lot of fibbing at older age," Schmitt said.

As a result, just about all of the statistics involving the number of centenarians in Hawaii is suspect. It wasn't until 1929 that Hawaii started to keep adequate birth records, Schmitt said.

Nevertheless, the state's attempts to keep track of Hawaii's oldest citizens and the numbers, even if off by a year or two, are impressive.

For instance, the oldest person ever in Hawaii is supposed to have been a 126-year-old Hawaiian woman who died in 1898. The evidence supporting her birthdate, however, was "pretty flimsy," Schmitt said.

The resident of Hawaii who officially lived to be the oldest was 117, Schmitt said.

Hawaii has a higher life expectancy than all other states, probably because of the large number of Japanese and Chinese residents, Schmitt said. Studies have shown that for still unknown reasons, the Japanese in Japan have a very high life expectancy.

In fact, Schmitt said, Japanese women were the first group ever to have an 80-year life expectancy from birth.

People of Japanese ancestry in Hawaii have a lower life expectancy than Japanese in Japan but higher than Japanese in California.

Schmitt said it is suspected that the high life expectancy is tied to diet and other cultural practices. Hawaii residents of Japanese extraction stick more closely to their cultural roots than do their California counterparts.

Schmitt points out that the number of centenarians in Hawaii can change radically in a short amount of time.

The state of Hawaii lost 33 of its residents 100 years old or older in just one year, 1985. Unfortunately, that included two people believed to be Hawaii's oldest citizens, a man aged 110 and a 109-year-old woman, he said.

'Cure' dismissed

Traditional weddings blossom in '80s

Associated Press

Big weddings, white gowns and traditional ceremonies are making the 1980s a billion-dollar boom time for matrimonial pomp and circumstances.

In 1985 about 2.5 million people paid out $23 billion for wedding and matrimonial trappings, according to an article in Town & Country, which is 40 percent more than had been spent in the 10 previous years.

The barefoot freeform weddings of the 1970s are out of fashion, and after a decline in weddings from the late '60s on, the '80s are turning into a marrying decade.

Private planes, sometimes with brides at the controls, have been traveling from Texas, South America, Mexico and Europe to Memphis where Pat Kerr charges up to $30,000 for a wedding dress. Triple-tiered cakes are $1,000 treats. Nearly half the crystal, china and silver sold is bought for brides and they account for a third of the purchases of household appliances.

Caterers, wedding planners, orchestras, florists, wine merchants, hoteliers, stationers and entertainers are all catching a piece of the bridal bouquet.

Brides are getting older today. In the last 10 years, the average age for the first-time bride has risen from 21 to 24, while grooms have gone from 23 to 26. Since almost half the marriages in the United States end in divorce, more than 45 percent of those marrying are repeaters.

The frequency of live-in relationships has changed the pattern of honeymoons. Now, they frequently consist of a long weekend, and those prepared to spend freely may take their friends along.

The ceremonies have returned to the traditional, after more than a decade when engaged couples seemed to shun lifelong commitment.

"They seemed to think there was an exit door there if their marriages didn't work out," said the Rev. Gordon P. Irvine of Chicago's Second Presbyterian Church, "so I changed the vows from 'till death do us part' to 'as long as we share life together.'"

Dr. Charles W. Stewart, professor pastoral theology at Wesley Theological Seminary in Washington, said living together appears to be a precursor to — not a substitute for — marriage.

"There are fewer surprises that way," said Dr. F. Forrester Church at the Unitarian Church of All Souls in New York City.

"The difference is that when the couple marries, they have a covenant with each other; they are no longer playing house. They want to assume the responsibility of having children or have simply grown up, which I define as being able to give away your freedom."

Survey discovers biggest fear about wedding is money

By MICHAEL COLIN
Copley News Service

What's the biggest fear you have about your wedding?

Believe it or not, sex is barely an issue — today or 20 years ago.

That's the word from Marie Rama of Korbel Champagne, which surveyed more than 1,000 people about their wedding anxieties.

At the top of the list is money, or lack of it, for the future. And that's as true in 1987 as it was in 1967.

Next is the concern whether couples are getting Mr. or Mrs. Right. That wasn't such a big deal 20 years ago.

Third on the list is the future relationship with the in-laws. That wasn't even an issue in 1967.

Finally, there's a three-way tie for fourth place between communication, rules of etiquette and divorce.

Some of the engagement rings gaining popularity feature a single diamond in a swirled gold setting (left) or three small diamonds on each side of a center-mount one carat stone (right).

Unusual ring designs latest trend

Associated Press

Romantic wedding traditions are back, complete with religious ceremony, reception, honeymoon — and the diamond engagement ring.

"More than 75 percent of all brides now receive a diamond engagement ring. That's up 9 percent in the last two years," says Kae McCulloch, fashion consultant to the Jewelry Industry Council.

Miss McCulloch discerns a trend toward unusual and individually-designed engagement rings. "The familiar round-cut Tiffany setting (a prong-set solitaire) is being challenged in popularity by new styles that emphasize curved and softer lines," she says.

One current fashion in engagement rings is for the stone to be inset in a gold or platinum band. Sometimes, small diamonds are added to provide more glitter. The diamond chips may be set in rows in what is called a channel setting or in an overall blanket formation known as a pave setting. Another idea is to add a wedding band that frames the engagement ring and surrounds the diamond with a wider band of gold.

Miss McCullogh says industry statistics show a 12 percent rise in total carat weight of new engagement rings between 1984 and 1985. Not surprisingly, the average retail price of an engagement ring also rose in the same period, by about 15 percent to a little more than $950 per ring. Those in the industry believe that the popularity of more expensive rings is because couples are marrying later and they usually are more affluent. Second-time marriages often call for a larger engagement ring as well. Market surveys show that repeat marriages account for almost half the dollar volume for wedding sets, which include an engagement ring and wedding ring.

Miss McCulloch sees a resurgence of the popularity of matching wedding rings for grooms. Men's wedding bands have also been upgraded in cost and styling. Besides heavier-weight gold and textural designs, many now also have inserts of pave or channel-set diamonds.

Miss McCulloch says that since it is often difficult to judge a stone's quality with the naked eye if one is not an expert, it is a good idea to deal with an established, reputable jeweler who will stand behind whatever is sold. Jewelers judge individual diamonds by cut, color, clarity and carat weight.

■ CUT — Refers to both the shape of the diamond and the skill and precision of the cutting, which determines how brilliant the stone will be. A perfect cut refers not only to the number of facets, which is standard, but also to their angles and proportions.

■ COLOR — The ideal color is crystal clear. Such stones are rare and generally go for a premium since most are tinged with yellow or brown. On the other hand, definite color such as the blue Hope diamond enhances the value of the stone. Such stones are called "fancies."

■ CLARITY — Refers to the diamond's internal quality. A flawless diamond shows up under a microscope, but 99 percent of the diamonds over half a carat have some flaws. These can range from a tiny white spot to dark carbon spots, nicks, cracks or cloudy areas. Like the slight tinge of color, these flaws lessen a diamond's value.

■ CARAT — Measures the diamond's weight. A carat equals 1/42nd of an ounce, or 200 milligrams. The word carat comes from the carob seed of the Orient. The carob is so uniform in weight that it became the standard measure for diamonds.

If there is one large and several smaller stones in the ring, ask for the exact weight of the major stone rather than a total carat weight, Miss McCulloch advises.

American blacks who wed Africans experience joy, pain

By JAMES BROOKE
New York Times News Service

MONROVIA, Liberia — Two decades have passed, but the memory is clear. At a civil rights march in Tuscaloosa, Ala., Arlene R. George heard an angry voice shout: "Go back to Africa!"

"Well, here I am," George said with a good-natured chuckle as she took a break recently in Arlene, her soul-food restaurant on Warren Street here.

In the 1950s and 1960s, as a wave of independence swept across Africa, many African men came to the United States to study. These foreigners — handsome, courteous and self-confident — caught the eyes of American women who were their classmates. In due course, bicultural couples set off to make their lives in Ghana, Nigeria, Kenya and other new nations of the continent.

For George and four other black American women who married Liberians, life in Africa has brought both joy and disappointment. The move had its pitfalls — George and another woman are now divorced. But the transition here was probably eased by the historically close ties that bind black America to this West African nation.

Liberia, settled by freed American slaves, largely from Alabama, Maryland, Mississippi and Virginia, became Africa's first independent republic in 1847.

THE AMERICAN women, all Southerners, said they knew none of this history when they were growing up.

"The only thing I knew about Liberia was Liberia Drive in Roberts Park, a Norfolk housing development," said one of the women, Linnie Kesselly, a Norfolk, Va., native.

It was only after marrying Edward B. Kesselly, a young Liberian student of political science, that she learned that the development was named after Joseph Jenkins Roberts, Liberia's first president and a Norfolk native.

Lue Ann Kangar from Crystal Spring, Miss., sitting in the living room of her home as a fan pushed humid air around, reflected on how little she had known of Africa.

"You grow up with Tarzan movies — they just show bush and jungle," she said. "They don't show the cities and supermarkets."

Each of the women said she met her future husband while he was a college student in the United States. To a woman, they said that the Africans' manners impressed them.

"Stephen was more polite than the American boys," recalled Betty J. Carter, a native of Bryan, Tex., who is twice divorced from Liberian men, of her first husband, Stephen A. Tolbert. His brother was Liberia's vice president when the couple dated in the 1950s. "It was more exciting — he was from a country where I had never been."

But the women also recalled that their plans to wed Africans had not always been greeted with enthusiasm by their families.

"My aunt got out a little book — it must have been published in 1914 — and read to me about the scorpions, the heat and how many people each year die of malaria," Marva Cheappoo, a native of Buford, Ga., said with a sigh.

THE AUNT also commented on her choice of husbands, Chea Cheappoo Sr.

"He'd be upstairs running water in a tub and she would whisper to me, 'He's used to bathing in lakes,' " Mrs. Cheappoo recalled. Mr. Cheappoo, a lawyer, has served here as justice minister and a senator.

Kangar, whose husband is a fundamentalist missionary, recalled friends asking incredulously, "You're giving up all this for Africa?"

In many marriages, adjustment to Africa was eased by the American wives' low expectations for the continent.

"I really didn't have any illusions — my husband kept asking me: 'Can you blow coals for a fire, can you go to the creek and get water?' " Kesselly said.

Today she laughs about it. In her 20 years in Liberia, Kesselly has relied largely on a household staff who freed her of many domestic duties as she served as the director of Liberia's civil service and as president of the Liberian Red Cross.

These women of the Deep South found comforts in the physical setting of West Africa that seemed vaguely familiar and in the warmth of the African welcome.

"I'm used to palm trees, red dirt, unpaved roads, humidity, a small community," Cheappoo said as she sat in the storefront office of The Standard, an eight-page daily newspaper she edits here.

Mrs. Kesselly recalled that after her arrival, "Family friends came by with a big tray of food."

"My father-in-law sat me down and traced the family tree back to the 16th century," she said.

THE AMERICANS soon learned that the African concepts of family and hospitality can be quite expansive.

"Americans are very conservative — when they see you are about to eat, they go home," Kangar said. "Africans would be very offended if you didn't invite them to stay for dinner. So I just learned to cook a little extra in case someone stops by."

George, who was married to a Liberian diplomat, said she had been irritated by the loss of private hours with her husband.

"People just drop in — no matter how long I live here, I will never get used to people invading my privacy," she said.

Several of the women said they saw their husbands change on returning to Africa.

"You are just fooling yourself if you think it is going to be just like on the other side," George said. "One morning I was cooking jollof rice," she said, referring to a Liberian dish. "I said, 'Come on in and taste it.' He said, 'We're in Africa — men don't go into the kitchen.' "

By American standards, African women play subservient roles. In many African societies, a powerful man is entitled to have as many wives as he can afford. The women who divorced their Liberian husbands, George and Carter, said that they had refused to adjust to several of the traditions.

The Americans also discoverd that Africa can be the unstable place Cheappoo's aunt had warned her about. Carter's family lost almost all their businesses in 1980, when William R. Tolbert, the clan patriarch who was then Liberia's president, was murdered and disembowled by a group of soldiers led by Master Sgt. Samuel K. Doe, now Liberia's president.

DESPITE ECONOMIC hard times, Carter now fills her restaurant largely on the strength of her outgoing personality. She also makes a comfortable living running Monrovia's only garbage collection service, but five of her six children have moved to the United States to pursue careers.

Hand emboidered wedding albums and wall hangings are gifts with a person touch.

Special wedding gifts have personal touch

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Needlework Association, representing the needlework industry, offers these gift ideas for the bride:

■ As wedding favors for guests, potpourri sachets and garters made of ribbons and lace, embroidered with the name and date, or a handkerchief embroidered with symbols of love and unity.

■ For the bridal party, a hand-embroidered drawstring sachel to coordinate with the bridal colors.

■ For the flower girl and ring bearers, decorative lace embroidered pillows.

■ For the bridal couple, a wedding quilt. Relatives and friends can be sent individual fabric squares to prepare a special message; the personalized squares are then joined together.

■ A hand-embroidered wedding album cover with the names or initials of the bridal couple, or a wall hanging with names, date and a decorative border.

Brides' do-it-yourself projects make weddings more special

Associated Press

After work, recent bride-to-be Sue Forrest of San Francisco made time in a busy schedule to drive to a crafts store for a weekly class in calligraphy. Her goal: to personally address her wedding invitations in script.

Meanwhile, across the country in New York, Carol Frank was taking a class in decorating with ribbons so she would be able to make the pew bows that adorned the church when she got married.

The two women are among many who make some part of their wedding finery themselves, according to Frank Strauss, president of Hobby Industries of America. Strauss says that manufacturer surveys reveal that more brides are doing part of the wedding themselves than in the past.

Among popular do-it-yourself projects are wedding gowns, attendants' gowns, invitations, bridal bouquets and floral decorations, veils, headpieces and cakes.

According to a spokesman from Vogue-Butterick Patterns, close to 40 percent of brides now make their own gowns or have them made by dressmakers. Part of the reason is financial. The pattern company says that a dress that costs $500 to buy could be made at home for $200 by a good seamstress. But achieving a personal style and perfect fit are also motivations.

Having fun is also an important part of the appeal of projects, says Mary Holman, a co-owner of the crafts shop Pleasantries in Spring Lake, Minn. The shop offers in-store classes on how to make a bridal bouquet or a headpiece.

Debbie Craig, vice president and general merchandise manager of Lee Wards, a crafts retailing chain, says that sales of bridal accessories and crafts supplies have been on the increase for the past five years, especially in floral supplies.

This selective resale boutique specializes in consigned ladies current fashions, ranging from sportswear to evening apparel with nearly every leading designer represented.

DEAR ABBY

Younger brother's break-in breaks sister's heart

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am hurt and confused. About a year ago my apartment was broken into. I later learned that it was my own kid brother who had set me up.

He is 19 and has been in jail for almost a year for this crime. He recently wrote me a sad letter saying that he was on drugs at the time — blah, blah, blah. He said he is really sorry now; he's begging for my forgiveness and wants me to write to him.

I am so hurt and so full of anger. My family keeps saying, "Well, he's your brother, and you should try to forgive and forget." My heart keeps saying, "Someday, maybe," and my mind keeps saying, "You're crazy if you do!"

Abby, what do you think? — VIOLATED SISTER

DEAR VIOLATED: Forgive him — for his sake as well as your own. A person cannot completely forgive himself until he is forgiven by the person he has wronged. Your young brother is paying for his crime. Write to him and encourage him to use his time in prison to improve himself so that when he returns to society he will be better equipped to lead a crime-free life. And sign it, "With love." He needs it.

DEAR ABBY: How can you tell a neighbor that he needs to get sound-absorbing material in his apartment?

I have a neighbor in my older apartment building whom I don't know very well. We share a common bedroom wall. He chooses to do much "entertaining" and other loud activities there. One of the building rules under previous management was that all floors had to be covered. This would help a lot. There is also the issue of the pictures rattling on my side of the wall when he has his girlfriend over for the night.

Should I notify management that he needs to have his floors covered to correct the situation? If you think I should approach him, just what are the social amenities that should be used? — FRUSTRATED AND SLEEPLESS

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Skip the management and complain directly to your neighbor. I'll make it easy for you. Clip this article and send it to the raucous Romeo.

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to call attention to a problem that arises generally among older people. I am 76 years old, and for the last five years or so my hearing has become progressively worse, so my family prevailed upon me to get a hearing aid. Before I got the aid I had asked those with whom I was talking to please repeat what they had said, and to speak a little louder.

Now that I have the hearing aid, people know my problem, and they practically shout at me. This includes my barber, dentist, sales clerks and, of course, my family and friends. The sound is amplified through the hearing aid and it's so loud, it's actually painful to my ears.

Sometimes I wonder if maybe I wasn't better off without the hearing aid. Please remind readers to talk normally to people with hearing aids. I dislike asking those who shout to please speak normally. You'd be surprised to know how much some people resent being told to lower their voices. — R.M.R. IN VERO BEACH, FLA.

DEAR R.M.R.: I'll do my share by printing your letter. Now you do yours: Ask the shouters to please modulate their voices. How will they know they are a pain in the ear if you don't tell them?

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Herbal medicine researched

CHICAGO (AP) — It's not just witch doctors who find plants useful in curing diseases, say researchers who gathered to discuss plant remedies from around the world including a possible anti-cancer drug derived from the common yew tree.

Herbal medicine is a misunderstood discipline, said Christopher Beecher, an assistant professor of medicinal chemistry at the University of Illinois-Chicago.

Until the 1950s, nearly all drugs used in medicine were derived from plants, while last year, 48 percent of drugs on the market were developed from natural sources, he said.

"The problem is there's this bias that everything has to be synthetic," he said.

Beecher was one of about 150 doctors, botanists and other scientists attending the annual meeting of the Society of Economic Botany at the University of Illinois.

As part of a broad look at the role of herbal medicine in health care, Beecher said, they discussed a new drug derived from the common yew tree that grows in the northeastern United States.

The inner bark of the yew contains a compound called taxalol, which has shown promise in inhibiting the growth of a form of skin cancer known as malignant melanoma, he said.

Beecher said he is compiling plant remedies, including some stretching back to Chinese cultures of 5,000 years ago, into a single computer data base.

The data base, called Medflor, will eventually consist of botanical texts, tribal lore, medical journal articles and journals kept by anthropologists on their travels to other countries, Beecher said.

"I'm talking about those people who go down into the Amazon and come back saying they use this plant for broken bones, this plant for lesions of the skin, and so on," Beecher said.

Etiquette author names best-mannered celebrities

By ROBERT LEE ZIMMER

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Being famous just is not enough, my dear.

If you want to be admired and adored, you'd better mind your p's and q's, advises an etiquette expert who says Americans expect celebrities' manners to match their money and fame.

"People adore the well-mannered and are less tolerant of those who are rude and abusive," Marjabelle Young Stewart said. "They don't like the ugly American at all. That is out; it just won't play."

Mrs. Stewart, etiquette author and consultant, released her third annual list of the nation's best-mannered celebrities recently, from her home in Kewanee.

On the list for the third year was President Reagan.

"I have never found a more beloved and well-mannered person," Mrs. Stewart said in a telephone interview. "He maintains his poise and has more strength than taking someone else to task for being rude."

Mrs. Stewart polls 68 journalists, television crew members, make-up artists, chauffeurs and maitre d's who frequently have contact with famous people. Important in judging celebrities is not only how they behave in public but also how they treat those around them in private, Mrs. Stewart said.

"I think the nice thing about it is to call attention to people in the public eye and remind them that they are role models," she said. "We're making people aware that we are out there watching them."

This year's list also includes Nancy Reagan, who demonstrated skill, warmth and diplomacy as she traveled the country to fight drug abuse, often fielding questions about her husband and problems in the White House, Mrs. Stewart said.

Others on the list are Sophia Casey, widow of former CIA director William Casey; actor Vincent Price; Princess Yasmin Aga Khan, daughter of the late actress Rita Hayworth; Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens; actress Patty Duke, the president of the Screen Actors Guild; Pat Buckley, wife of author and columnist William F. Buckley; John F. Kennedy Jr.; and actress Liza Minnelli.

"It's important to remember that good manners take you places that money and fame won't," said Mrs. Stewart.

Mrs. Stewart has written several books, counseled former President Nixon's daughters on etiquette and now spends about half her time in Washington as a consultant with clients, including visiting dignitaries.

She just completed a 26-city tour promoting her latest book, "The New Etiquette," an encyclopedia of "real manners for real people in real situations."

The new etiquette is less formal and rigid but still stresses graciousness, she said.

"Manners were put on the shelf during the 1960s," she said. "But manners are back in vogue again — colleges are adding courses and big businesses are insisting on it."

She said people found life empty without manners and now want to learn "what is correct."

"The first rule of etiquette is to relax," Mrs. Stewart said. "Rely on graciousness and your own common sense and you will rarely go wrong."

Simple little expression puts mothers on their feet

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

There are few expressions in this world that will bring a mother to her feet faster than "Don't get up. Just tell me where it is."

Those nine little words will resurrect women from a hospital bed dragging IVs along behind them. It will seduce them from a cliffhanger of their favorite evening soap. It's the ultimate challenge. It's like telling them Tom Selleck is lunching at the next table, but they can't look.

For some reason, a mother is supposed to know where EVERYTHING is. The rationale is she picks up after everyone in the house and puts it away. Therefore, she should remember where she put it.

There is no time limit on this arrangement. A 30-year-old kid can come home and say, "Mom, remember those albums of baseball cards I put together when I was 9? Where did you put them? Don't get up. Just tell me where they are."

Or a husband will knock on the bathroom door and shout through the keyhole, "What did you do with that picture I took of a dog with one ear standing up in Michigan? Don't get up. Just tell me where it is."

I don't know when I became a curator of lost luggage keys, a guardian of sunglasses or a sentinel of new rolls of toilet tissue, but somewhere along the line I became the guru of an inventory of objects waiting to be found.

I say the entire exercise is initiated by boredom. A husband with absolutely nothing to do will wait until you are relaxed and then ask, "Where do you keep the warranty on the coffee maker? Don't get up. Just tell me where it is."

It gets me on my feet in a flash.

"I told you not to get up. I can get it. Just tell me where to look."

"I don't know where to look," I said.

"You mean you're just going to cruise the house?"

"I'm going to look in the catch-all drawer."

"Why didn't you tell me that?"

"Because if it didn't walk over the corn skewers, cold tablets, old church bulletins, hammer, birthday candles and friendship pictures of your son in the 8th grade and throw itself in your arms, you wouldn't find it. You never move anything."

"I got you out of the chair, didn't I?" he snapped.

Getting to your feet when someone wants something is an Edith Bunker reflex that is hard to break. Recently, a child asked me, "Where are your car keys? Don't get up. Just tell me where they are." I was on my feet and starting to move until I realized she was calling me on the phone long distance to Washington.

Celebrity paper dolls from past collected in present

By LINDA ROSENKRANTZ
Copley News Service

A generation or two ago, when little boys were outside playing cops and robbers and cowboys and Indians, and their sisters were occupying themselves indoors, there was nothing most little girls liked better than amusing themselves with paper dolls.

Hours and hours could be spent carefully punching out the two-dimensional figures of their favorite movie stars, then even more carefully cutting out their diversified wardrobes — from Shirley Temple's ruffled party dresses to Jane Powell's tennis outfit to Linda Darnell's elegant gowns.

Vintage paper dolls are now actively collectible with a rare set in pristine condition sometimes selling for as much as $300. Unfortunately, when little Sis was cutting these skating costumes and modest two-piece bathing suits, she also was cutting their value in half; uncut books, sheets and boxed sets bring twice what used examples do.

CNS Graphic

Movie star cutouts date back almost to the beginning of movie history. In the '20s, the Saalfield Publishing Co. issued "Star Sets," featuring images of such early players as Fatty Arbuckle, Mary Miles Minter and Betty Compson. Another series, "Hollywood Dollies," depicted everyone from Tom Mix to Norma Shearer. Many newspapers and magazines ran regular cinema cutouts and clothes.

As paper dolls moved out of these periodicals, the format of the cutout book as we know it today was standardized: perforated portrait doll of the star on the stiff, heavyweight front cover, another pose or two of the star on the back cover and several inside pages offering complete clothing ensembles to cut out, including hats, fur wraps, gloves, shoes and every other glamorous accessory imaginable.

Particularly popular in the '30s were such pre-adolescent and teenage stars as Shirley Temple (the subject of at least two books before 1940), Jane Withers, Gloria Jean and Deanna Durbin. (Key non-Hollywood figures in this category were Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose and the Dionne Quintuplets).

Favorites of the '40s and '50s (when photographed faces began to replace painted ones on covers) included Margaret O'Brien, Diana Lynn, Greer Garson, Betty Grable, Judy Garland, Carmen Miranda, Dorothy Lamour, Lana Turner, June Allyson, Janet Leigh, Natalie Wood, Doris Day, Grace Kelly and Marilyn Monroe.

The '50s even saw some male figures stripped down to their swimming trunks, among them Rock Hudson, Pat Boone and Elvis, as well as the introduction of television personalities.

Several publishing companies were active in the field during its heyday, with some experts considering the artwork produced by the Merrill Publishing Co. particularly outstanding. Other major participants in the market were Lowe, Saalfield and Whitman.

Among the top rarities sought by collectors are the two sets of "Gone With the Wind" dolls issued by Merrill in 1940. One comprised dolls of Clark Gable, Vivien Leigh and Ann Rutherford, the other had 18 different dolls, including two characters that had been cut from the movie before it was released. Each of these sets now goes for over $400, but most motion picture star paper doll books fall into the $30 to $85 range (although prices are escalating rapidly).

Alaska cashing in on frontier age

CNS Photo

The Malemute Saloon in Ester, Alaska, has a rustic frontier atmosphere with sawdust on the floor and a honky tonk piano.

The Gold Rush is still on in Fairbanks, Alaska.

Where grizzled prospectors once vied with huge corporate mining machines for the precious metal, tourists are cashing in on a wealth of experiences from the golden days of the Alaskan frontier.

Travelers can pan gold in streams where miners once eeked out a living, they can sleep in the bunkhouses where they once slept and can drink in the frontier saloons where they spent their hard-earned gold.

The gold rush started in the 1890s with the discovery of the precious metal in creeks north of present-day Fairbanks. The town grew from nothing to some 11,000 people almost overnight. Log cabins sprouted up on muddy streets lining the Chena River as miners, followed by merchants, saloonkeepers and other mining hangers-on paraded into the wilderness.

THIS GLAMORIZED glamorized era of hardship and heartbreak lasted for only a couple of decades, then the corporations moved in. Huge mining companies like the Fairbanks Exploration Co. brought in floating dredges, hydraulic mining machines, giant pumping stations and ore processing complexes.

It is these relics of the mining era that are most prominent to modern-day visitors. The biggest of these is Gold Dredge No. 8, floating in a small pond a few miles north of Fairbanks.

This 1,000-ton monster is 250 feet long and stands five stories high. Its huge line of buckets, like sharp teeth, tore into the gold-bearing gravel of Goldstream and Engineer creeks, then swallowed the paydirt.

Once inside the dredge, huge sluice boxes and other machinery separated the gold from the gravel. This one dredge alone captured $70 million worth of gold while operating from 1928 until operations shut down in 1959.

IRONICALLY, THIS huge machine that could capture even the smallest of gold flakes, could not handle gold nuggets much over an inch in diameter, and these valuable prizes were dumped out the rear of the dredge with the rest of the spoils, where they remain today, buried deep in the debris.

The land in front of the dredge is still virgin territory, loaded with gold flakes. Visitors are given pans and a two-minute lesson in gold panning, then let loose to search for gold. And nearly everyone can strike it rich with at least a few sparkling flakes of the golden treasure to take home for a souvenir.

A short drive away is the Little El Dorado Gold Camp, where visitors get gold fever the way their predecessors did. A narrow-gauge railroad train takes visitors across a wooded valley to the tent city of El Dorado.

A HUGE 30-by-45-foot straight-walled tent is typical of those used as the dining hall in the myriad of tent cities that sprung up in the gold fields. Smaller tents serve as stores and a barbershop, as well as living quarters.

Visitors can also operate some of the old mining equipment — sluice boxes, suction dredge and hydraulics — before exploring the drift mine and open-shaft mines or panning for gold.

Another mining camp, a registered national historic site, can be found deep in the gold fields 27 miles north of Fairbanks. The Old F.E. (Fairbanks Exploration) Company Camp hasn't changed much from the 1920s when 200 miners slept and ate in corrugated metal buildings on a hillside overlooking the gold-bearing creeks.

The camp, which is still undergoing restoration, features home-cooked meals of stuffed baked salmon, sourdough biscuits and corn fritters, all cooked in a giant 12-foot wood-burning camp stove.

Not far away, just off the Steese Highway, sits another of the giant gold dredges, now a deserted ghost among the mounds.

FOR THOSE who want to live the miner's life, they can wander on down to the Cripple Creek Resort in Ester, a short distance from Fairbanks. This old Fairbanks Exploration gold camp has also been preserved, but instead of just looking at the buildings, visitors can sleep in the bunkhouse and chow down in the old mess hall, and at prices considerably less than in a motel in town.

Then, after dinner, mosey on over to the Malemute Saloon for a shot of authentic Alaskan atmosphere. Pass through the swinging doors, walk across the sawdust-littered floor and saunter up to the bar, while listening to honky-tonk piano music.

For those who like their history prepackaged, there is Alaskaland, the only theme park in Alaska devoted to its heritage. Admission is free to this municipal park, which is undergoing restoration work.

A hydraulic gun fires high-pressure water at a gold-bearing hillside, much as the miners of old did to loosen the paydirt.

TUCKED IN behind a hillside is a replica of an underground gold mine, complete with ore cars. Other pieces of mining equipment litter Mining Valley, the site where a nightly outdoor salmon bake is held.

Many of the historic buildings of Fairbanks — mostly log cabins — have been brought to the park and assembled into a village of yesteryear. Most now house gift shops featuring authentic Alaskan handicrafts. Also in Alaskaland are several museums, an Indian village and the authentic sternwheel paddleboat Nenana.

While the Nenana is authentic, it is landlocked. To see how gold miners arrived in olden times, take a modern paddlewheeler, the Discovery, on a four-hour cruise on the Chena River. At a time when there were no roads, steamboats were the principal means of transport.

The Discovery churns its way upriver before stopping at a native camp where salmon are dried on racks and bear skins are cured on the sides of the log buildings.

IN THE river, fish wheels turn by the force of the water and snatch the reddish fish on their yearly migration.

After the cruise, dinner at The Pump House completes the tour of golden heritage sites in and around Fairbanks. The Pump House once was part of a vast system of pumps, sluiceways and irrigation ditches and flumes that served the nearby gold fields. There once were 10 powerful pumps that sucked up river water and lofted it 440 feet over a ridge to feed the hydraulic gold mining equipment.

Contact the Fairbanks Convention and Visitors Bureau, 550 Q First Ave., Fairbanks, Alaska 99701, for more information about the Fairbanks area.

Former boom town becoming ghost town

By CAM ROSSIE
Associated Press

CNS Graphic

REAL DE CATORCE, Mexico — Residents of this former mountain boom town are shaken by a rumor that the district mayor may soon move his headquarters to another village.

Losing the municipal seat, and the public funds and attention that go with it, would be a hard blow for the 1,000 people here who are just starting to see their town awaken from a 77-year hibernation.

"Right now the city is improving, but it's going slowly," said 84-year-old Jose Blanco, who has lived through the town's best and worst of times.

LODGED ON steep slopes 9,000 feet high in the silver-rich mountains of San Luis Potosi state in north central Mexico, Real de Catorce was a thriving economic center when Americans were fighting for independence.

From 1773, the time of the first silver discovery, through the early 1900s, Spanish aristocrats and adventurers flocked to these mountains, opening 117 mines and turning Catorce into one of Mexico's major silver-producing regions.

"There was money for everything," recalls Blanco.

The Spanish founders built lavish theaters, ornate homes, a bull ring, a Roman-style cockfighting arena, a mint and a Roman Catholic church as large and impressive as any found in Mexico's major cities today.

They commissioned a sewer system and hand-laid cobblestone streets. In 1901 they finished construction on a 1½-mile-long tunnel that connects Catorce with the outside world.

MARAUDERS AFTER the Mexican Revolution started in 1910 interrupted the vast mining operations here and flooding saw to it that they stayed closed, most of them permanently.

Most of the 48,000 people who once lived here fled and by the 1930s Catorce had just 200 permanent residents.

"There wasn't much reason to look for anything else," said Blanco.

Broke and nearly abandoned, Catorce suffered the ravages of time.

The theater that once hosted troupes from Mexico City 480 miles south fell into ruin. Many of the stone and wrought-iron balconies and carved granite columns of the Spanish-style homes decayed and tumbled.

The three-story "Money House," that minted silver and copper coins until it was closed in 1869, began to crumble.

Tree-size cacti and fallen stone filled the bedrooms and kitchens of scores of abandoned, roofless homes

"Time forgot us, but God didn't" said Socorro Ibarra, caretaker of the church's 12-year-old museum.

A DEVOTION St. Francis of Assisi, Catorce's patron saint, brings pilgrims from all over Mexico. In the fall thousands of worshippers come for the monthlong celebration surrounding the saint's Oct. 4 feast day.

Lack of hotel accommodations — there are a few rustic bungalows and three tourist-quality hotels offering a total of 20 rooms — force most of the pilgrims to sleep in the streets.

Huichol Indians also come to Catorce from distant Nayarit state on the Pacific coast looking for the sacred peyote plant, a hallucenogen used in their ceremonies.

The lure of peyote and marijuana also attract American and Mexican "hippies," the locals say.

Still, the 20th Century hasn't passed by Catorce.

Electricity arrived a couple of decades ago. Now junior high students can attend classes via television at their school. The town's one rural telephone was installed in the 1970s. Road improvments make travel here by automobile possible now.

DUMP TRUCKS loaded with ore lumber from a mine to the recently expanded processing plant in nearby La Luz.

But tourism, not mining, is bringing better days, residents say.

Retired Americans come in buses on their way south. Archeologists, history buffs, rock hounds, photographers, coin collectors all find something in Catorce.

"People come here looking for something a little different and there's nothing like it in Mexico," said Christina Adenfors, a Swedish immigrant who operates a hotel in a converted 300-year-old mansion.

Meanwhile, hotel and gift shop owners are restoring some buildings. A civic group founded last summer is seeking donations for improvements on the cobblestone streets.

"Everything was deteriorating and nobody did anything or tried to improve the place," said Maria Sanchez, treasurer of the organization.

CATORCE'S SKYLINE is dominated by the freshly painted white dome of Catorce's magnificent church, La Parroquia de la Purisima Concepcion, dedicated in 1817.

Restoration work on the interior of the church is slowing bringing it back to its former splendor.

An abandoned car (above) marks time in the deserted fields of Best, an oil boom town that once boasted a population of 3,000.

Best:
The Worst Little Town in Texas

Text by MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Photos by SCOTT RATHBURN

Best was a town built on fast profits and schemes, a town that never lived up to the plan for it to be a model oil camp. It was known as the "Best Town with the Worst Reputation," and a Saturday night in Best was considered to be a hard-drinking, hard-fighting night on the town.

In 1926, it was estimated that Best had a population of 3,000. Many people, who were in tents and shacks, came to find their fortune in the oil fields of West Texas and found it easy to set up temporary quarters in Best.

TODAY THE word "wild" has a different connotation when applied to Best. It is overgrown with wild plant life, a setting where deer and rattlesnakes are once again plentiful. Today, the only legacies of the now overgrown community named for Tom Best are a post office on U.S. Highway 67, crumbling foundations and (probably the most fitting remnant of the bygone, rip-snorting oil town) the jail.

"Best was doomed to be a ghost town," said John Kovach of Odessa, formerly of Best.

Please see BEST, Page 2F

Gettin' to Best

Best is located on Highway 67 about 10 miles west of Big Lake, and 80 miles southeast of Midland. Take the dirt road behind the general store/post office to get to the jailhouse and several foundations.

"Texas University owned the land and they couldn't sell any of it even if they wanted to. You could only lease it for a certain number of years with an option to renew," Kovach said.

"So people put up 'shotgun' houses (houses built along a straight hall, similar to mobile homes) and tents hoping to make a bunch of money and leave after the drilling ceased," he said.

Bars still guard the windows of the tiny adobe jail which appears too small to have housed a rowdy bunch of men. But according to Kovach, the jail served mainly as a "holding tank."

"Men were kept in the jail only until we could get a sheriff from Big Lake to come transport them back to Big Lake," Kovach said.

Nonetheless, Best's reputation as a dangerous town was only exceeded by the notoriety of Texon's nationally famous baseball team.

"Best got its reputation from the shanty town which existed there in a gravel pit," said Dorothy Way of Big Lake, a former resident of nearby Texon. "It was considered dangerous for women and children to go to Best, even in the daylight," she said.

"THE PROBLEM was, Best had the only post office around, and we couldn't go pick up our mail. We had to wait for the men to come home from the oil fields every day, so they could go get the mail," Ms. Way said.

"The city of Best was a beehive of drillers, contractors, roughnecks, supply men, bootleggers and prostitutes," said James J. Isbell, former resident of Texon, in "The Reagan County Story," sponsored by the Reagan County Historical Society.

"It became hazardous to roam the streets and byways by yourself, even in daylight," Isbell said. "The gravel pit, some called it the 'Hell Hole,' was located north of the railroad tracks and a real tough shanty town. Open saloons were booming day and night. Many murders were committed and people robbed."

Kovach, said, "The gravel pit had shacks with false store fronts and honky- tonks in the rear. I remember one with a drug store front that had a single bottle of Mentholatum on a shelf inside. No one was attending the store, and people were gambling and drinking in the back.

> "Choc beer and moonshine whiskey flowed freely, for a price, as well as gambling and girls. Part of the problem was that Best was not incorporated and it was governed by the county. So, the 'law,' (a few deputies) had to rule with a gun."

> — John Kovach

"CHOC BEER and moonshine whiskey flowed freely, for a price, as well as gambling and girls. Part of the problem was that Best was not incorporated and it was governed by the county," Kovach said. "So, the 'law,' (a few deputies) had to rule with a gun."

Despite its reputation, Kovach said, "There were some shootings and killings but not as bad as some of the other oil boom towns that I have been in, like Ranger. I avoided the danger by minding my own business."

Then in 1925, the Texas Rangers came to Best to "clean it up," according to Kovach. "They dismantled a lot of the 'stores' in the gravel pit and raided a home where choc beer was being brewed, since it was during Prohibition."

Best was planned as a city with easy access to the oil fields like nearby Santa Rita and Texon after the Santa Rita No. 1 oil well gushed oil May 28, 1923. With few roads, living close to the oil fields was a necessity. Kovach inadvertently played a part in furnishing a rig and oilwell equipment for the Santa Rita No. 1.

BEFORE MOVING to Best, Kovach lived in Breckenridge. Just a young man of 19, Kovach arrived in Breckenridge to serve as night clerk for the Continental Supply Company (now LTV Energy Products Company). Carl Cromwell, a famous wildcatter, breezed in late one evening and ordered the oil rig and equipment, saying, "It must be delivered in one night."

Impressed by the big sale and Cromwell's enthusiasm, Kovach worked well into the night to get the equipment on its way to Best. Being inexperienced, Kovach didn't stop to think about the customer's credit rating or the fact that he paid with a post-dated check.

Fortunately, for everyone, Cromwell set up the oil equipment at the Santa Rita No. 1 and struck one of the biggest oil strikes in history making Kovach's unsuspected gamble pay off.

KOVACH WAS later transferred to Best in December 1924 as manager of a branch supply store serving the West Texas oil field. Kovach married the late Mary Jo Edens and they lived above the Continental Supply Store, a wooden frame structure covered with corrugated iron sheeting. Other Continental Supply employees and their families lived in the six rooms of the second story of the store, also.

The supply store had both hot and cold water, was heated by coal and gas stoves, and had an ice box.

"Fresh eggs and vegetables were hard to come by," said Kovach. "When my wife had our first baby, I got a Jersey cow to have milk on hand."

Despite the primitive living conditions in Best in the early '20s, the oil fields were booming and wealth flowed.

"Continental supply had a million dollar month, which was unheard of in those times," Kovach said. "We were the only oil equipment supply store headquartered in West Texas and we sold pipe to Texon, Big Lake and Santa Rita, just to name a few clients."

KOVACH REMEMBERS going to the World's Fair in Chicago in 1928 and seeing the first refrigerator ever made. Later Continental Supply ordered a refrigerator at his request.

"By the time we got an electric cookstove, we felt like we were really living 'high.,' " he said. For recreation, Kovach "sometimes played Bridge, even though I didn't like the game, there just wasn't a whole lot of things to do. We also went to Texon to play golf or attend the baseball games. The best times we had, were attending dances in Best, San Angelo and other nearby towns."

The most harrowing experience Kovach had occurred after a dance. Most of the occupants of the Continental Supply Store had been at a New Year's Eve dance until the wee hours of the morning. About 11:45 a.m. the next day, a young couple attempted to light a gasoline heater. "It blew up when they went to light it," Kovach said.

ALL THE occupants escaped, some with slight burns, but the store was destroyed. It was estimated that Continental Supply lost $200,000, only partially covered by insurance.

Not long after the fire, the flow of oil began to abate. "People began leaving overnight," Kovach said. "There was a time when a barrel of water in Best cost $1 and sour crude was selling for 10 cents a barrel."

Kovach closed the Continental Supply Store in 1934 and moved to Odessa with the company.

Meanwhile, Best, which once boasted of a beauty shop, grocery and merchandise stores, a barber shop, several drug stores, four hotels, a school house, several dry cleaners (there wasn't enough water for laundries to operate), cafes, auto repair shops, a post office and many oil related businesses, was virtually deserted after the Great Depression. By 1945, Best was street after street of vacant land and a town with a population consisting of about twelve families.

NOW THERE are only a few families living in the surrounding area of Best, the jail and a general store/post office on the highway.

Even though the "best" of Best is gone, the town's colorful past has found its place in history as being Texon's rowdier sister.

Kovach also has his niche in history. In 1964, Kovach was awarded a citation from the University of Texas, then under the guidance of Chancellor Dr. Harry Ransom.

The citation commends Kovach's contribution to the first West Texas oil discovery, the Santa Rita No. 1. Because of Kovach's unsuspicious accommodation as a new clerk and his all night work, Cromwell, "a pioneer gambler," was able to hit the jackpot.

Designers say toys promote patriotism

Associated Press

America's leaders often have observed that patriotism begins in the cradle.

Toy manufacturers in the United States, as in other nations, have long offered children a variety of toys designed to provide pleasure and amusement while at the same time instilling a love of their country. Today, according to Country Home magazine, it is possible to amass a collection of such playthings that spans a century or more and can tell us much about America's history.

The first patriotic playthings appeared in the early 19th century when the War of 1812 threatened to put a quick end to America's experiment in democracy. The subsequent United States victory in this war over Great Britain gave the young nation new-founded confidence and an explosion of patriotism ensued.

Uncle Sam, the spirited symbol of liberty who so bedeviled the English crown, was a popular motif in the early 1800s. As a whirligig set upon a house of barn roof, he amused children and bolstered the nationalistic spirits of adults. More than a century later he was still on the market in the form of a popular Kewpie doll, a marionette or even a bank.

As America's manufacturing technology improved, mass-produced toys promoting public-spiritedness began to appear on store shelves across the country. Banks came in the forms of Uncle Sam's top hat, the Statue of Liberty, the Capitol building and a bust of George Washington. They played a dual role, both reminding the young of the country's heritage and encouraging thrift.

Most banks, referred to by collectors as still banks because they had no movable parts, were simply attractive depositories for loose change. Others, known as mechanical banks, worked for their money. They had moving parts and performed elaborate or amusing activities when coins were deposited. Among banks with a patriotic theme was the eagle that accepted money with its beak and deposited it in a nest. The Uncle Sam bank would pack a nickel laid in his hand into a suitcase.

Other early toys included drums, bugles and various horns the young used to exercise musical skills while mimicking the famous painting "Spirit of '76." Appropriately enough, these toys were often painted in red, white and blue. Balls, tops and wooden battleships also were painted a lively array of patriotic hues.

Corny approach to litter problem

Copley News Service

An Illinos research firm is taking a corny approach to the litter problem.

It's trying to design plastics made from cornstarch that would self-destruct.

Polymer science researcher Richard Wool of Agri-Tech Industries claims the corny biodegradable plastics could be made into all sorts of things — including garbage bags and fast-food containers.

He says billions of pounds of plastic garbage litters highways and clogs up landfills because it doesn't break down.

But the new corn-based plastics would solve that problem.

Currently, the corn plastics are in the development stage, but Wool is hopeful that products made from the material will be on the market within two years.

Book restorers battle decay

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — The book is a life's work condensed into 200 pages. It has survived for decades. The next time someone tries to read it, the pages will crumble.

At the University of Illinois Library, director of preservation William Henderson guesses that maybe 2 million of the library's 7 million volumes are in similar danger.

In the library's basement, Jane Gammon takes charge of restoration with basic tools: erasers, scissors, paste, tissue paper.

"All our materials cost just pennies," she says. "We really try to do as little as possible to the pages. One of the key conservation principles is that nothing should be done that cannot be undone."

Many of the university's more valuable works are getting help. Books hundreds of years old — including a Gutenberg Bible — are preserved in a room where temperature and humidity are carefully monitored.

Bookmakers once used rags in paper, hand-crafting volumes and creating prized possessions. Johann Gutenberg's movable press, a 15-century invention, helped spread Renaissance ideas by making books cheaper and more plentiful.

The Industrial Revolution made printing even easier. The unending demand for paper caused a shortage of rags. Publishers began using paper made of wood pulp.

Though pulp is inferior to rag paper, it is not to blame for turning pages to dust, Henderson says. A compound invented 100 years ago to make ink stick better to paper is the culprit. After years, it breaks down into acids, eating away at fibers that hold paper together.

The University of Illinois Press prints its cloth editions on acid-free paper.

Chemicals that remove the acid are cheap, but the job is labor-intensive. Somebody has to turn the pages and apply the chemicals. In a spray booth, Jane Gammon gets to the sheet music, pamphlets and book pages in direst need.

So the school librarians continue waging their slow battle to find the most deserving pages before time and decay take their toll.

'Domestic' violence no laughing matter

By STEPHANIE SALTER
Hearst News Service

Did you laugh when you heard about the Florida man who knifed open his water bed and shoved his wife's head under water, complaining — among other things — that he hated her new hair-do?

The local TV anchorman, who used that news item for his customary "humorous" closer, thought it was amusing. So did his chuckling, off-camera crew. The only person who did not laugh was the female anchor. The look on her face said, "I'm not sure why, but I know this isn't funny."

Domestic violence, as treated by the mainstream media, is at the stage racism was about 20 years ago: many of the reporters and editors in charge of dispensing the news don't even see an incident of it when it occurs.

In the parlance of the '60s, they need a consciousness-raising. The anchorman, for example, is not an insensitive cretin; he's known as one of the more enlightened and empathetic TV journalists around, which is why I'm omitting his name. Besides, his gaffe could have been committed by any number of news directors, writers and editors who saw the word "water bed," read the quote about the hair-do and never looked further.

Yet the incident is classic wife-battering. The out-of-control husband tried to drown his wife and was stopped only by the couple's 13-year-old son. That the violence occurred in the conjugal bed is the sort of detail that makes the story all the more hideously representative.

Until recently, statistics on domestic violence have been sparse. U.S. law enforcement agencies and the justice system are not structured to encourage victims to run from, much less publicly confront, their intimate terrorizers.

But, after a decade-long study, Dr. Angela Brown and the staff of the Family Research Laboratory at the University of New Hampshire have been able to estimate that about one in every three American women will be physically assaulted by a male partner during her adult life.

"Ten years of studies have shown us that in a 12-month period in this country, at least 1.5 million women are beaten by their male partners," said Brown. "And we mean beaten, not shoved."

Brown, the author of "When Battered Women Kill," says most people don't comprehend the widespread severity of the issue.

"I don't even like to use the term 'domestic violence,' because 'domestic' tends to trivialize what are often very severe and lethal incidents of physical aggression and assault. 'Domestic' sounds like 'Can't balance the checkbook' or 'Who's going to take out the garbage?' "

As a woman journalist, I've become acquainted with more wife and girlfriend-battering than I ever imagined existed.

As have many of my female colleagues, I've learned to recognize the behavior of abusive men and know battering when I encounter it.

All members of the media must sensitize themselves in the same way. We, of all groups, have no excuse to laugh at something that isn't remotely funny.

Guidelines designed for dieters

Copley News Service

You love pasta and Grandma's apple pie a la mode, but as it becomes more difficult to look down and see your feet, you start to wonder if maybe it's time to shed a few pounds.

Of course, you've traveled this road before. You've put yourself on the fad diets, the liquid diets, the diet where you ate nothing but that disgusting green stuff. Nothing worked for more than a few weeks.

Now it's time to try Burning Fat 24 Hours a Day, and this freebie from Jazzercise will show you how. An eight-panel pamphlet, Burning Fat 24 Hours a Day has plenty of information about the stuff that grows on you.

Point One, for example, tells you to determine a caloric break-even point for yourself.

Point Two then suggests you reduce your daily caloric intake to up to 1,000 calories below your break-even point.

The remaining seven points involve diet and meal suggestions, as well as tips for exercise.

TV women still seen in sterotype

BY PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — More than 90 percent of the writers for television shows are white males.

That explains why, according to new research, women on TV have not come a long way, baby. In fact, despite an illusion of contemporary upgrading, female characters are still bogged down in stereotype.

"Take the series 'Kate & Allie,' for example," said Dr. Donald Davis, who has studied female roles in prime time TV from video's early days to the present. "Kate & Allie," struggling with the problems of bringing up precocious children in a tough urban world, has a patina of newness. But are they basically different from the femmes of TV more than three decades ago — ladies like Harriet Nelson, Donna Reed and Jane Wyman?

"Uh-uh," Davis maintains. Like the characters of the '50s, today's televised heroines "tend to be young and pretty, mothers, single and sensuous, not as smart as men, and usually in need of help," he said.

Feminists have praised another current series, "Designing Women," a comedy about four partners in an Atlanta decorating firm. In fact, when mostly male CBS abruptly took the series off the air early this year, 50,000 letters successfully demanded its return (and it is now the highest-rated comedy on the network). But is "Designing Women" truly a show about liberated females? Again, Davis's answer is a clear "nope."

"The main characters run their own business, yes," said Davis, who conducted his study at the School of Journalism and Mass Communication, University of Georgia. "But what do these women talk about? Not their business or their careers. They talk about men and relationships," he elaborated.

In defense of the men who write such sitcoms, it might be noted that if the ladies incessantly discussed only their jobs, the shows might evolve into a lot of "sit," with very little "com." There is a possibility, if not a probability, that viewers of both sexes are more intrigued with relationships than with careers.

"Think about the most publicized women on the tube today. Vanna White. Cybill Shepherd. Joan Collins. Linda Evans. Shelley Long. What do they have in common?" Davis asked.

"They are more ornamental than functional," he said, answering his own question. "They are much more defined (than males) in their romantic, marital and parental roles. Women are four and one-half times more likely than men to be provocatively dressed."

There is one notable exception. It is "Cagney & Lacey," about two women police detectives. Well written, tough and realistic, Davis called it "one of the better shows as far as its portrayals of women." The public didn't like "Cagney & Lacey" at first, and CBS yanked it from the schedule four years ago for low ratings. Again, there was a write-in campaign, and after 20,000 protests, the show was revived. Davis's research shows, however, that seven of the drama's ongoing characters are male, "and all the supervisors are men," he said. There is a prevailing presumption "that either women are less interesting than men, or that women are more interested in seeing men on televison," Davis explained.

Nothing particularly surprising about that finding. Far more astonishing is that while women have progressed very little, for all the past generation's sexual liberation, minority groups have fared considerably better. "White male writers have found it easy to integrate blacks into a show," Davis said. With two male characters for every female on television, "the writers just gave a male role to a black man, but find it more difficult to do that with women characters," he stated.

Delaying childbirth not seen risky

Associated Press

Despite talk of dangers in pregnancy over age 35, healthy women who have postponed having children until that age need not fear an unduly high risk of complications, according to a maternal-fetal medicine specialist at New York University Medical Center.

"Many women are under the impression that age 35 represents a cut-off point for successful pregnancy," says Dr. Bruce K. Young, director of the division of maternal-fetal medicine and professor of obstetrics and gynecology. "In fact, there is no magic number, no age at which pregnancy suddenly becomes hazardous. Risks do increase with age, but they do so on a steady continuum, year by year."

He notes, for example, that there is a 20 percent chance of miscarriage in any pregnancy; by one's late 30s, that possibility may only be 21 or 22 percent.

The risk of chromosomal abnormalities also rises with the mother's age, but on a steeper curve.

Fertility in women drops with age, Young adds, so conception after age 30 may be more difficult. Hence, miscarriage or other complications may carry more emotional impact than in younger women.

But he says the foregoing risks are still minimal, and once a woman is pregnant her general state of health is probably a more important factor than age. Young characterizes today's women in their 30s as "fitter and healthier" than prior generations.

Oklahomans preserve part of heritage during threshing bee

By OWEN CANFIELD
Associated Press

The northwest Oklahoma town of Fairview, population 3,500, is in the heart of wheat country. Pass through the surrounding area at this time of year and you're sure to see teams of combines rolling through the fields harvesting the winter wheat crop.

Stop by during the Fourth of July weekend, however, if you want to see how things used to be done.

Promoters are inviting visitors to "Come Back to the Turn of the Century" and attend the second annual Major County Threshing Bee scheduled for that weekend.

About 5,000 people turned out last year in windy conditions, despite the fact that planning began late and the event was not promoted as heavily as this year, said Becky O'Dell of the Fairview Chamber of Commerce. Planners expect twice as many people to attend this year.

"This is definitely a part of our heritage," said 74-year-old David Martens, a Major County Historical Society board member and one of the event's planners. "We have so many young people who know nothing about threshers, nothing at all."

Steam-powered threshers were used a great deal from about 1910 through the late 1930s and early 1940s, before the first gasoline and diesel combines came into vogue, Martens said. Farmers would haul their hay to the thresher, which would "put the straw in a stack and the grain in a wagon. That's what we'll be doing."

Martens will have on display a 1914 thresher he and his brother Henry hauled down to Fairview from Saskatchewan, Canada. Other threshers will be on display, as well as antique tractors and cars, and other replicas from days gone by.

"I grew up with this, my father did this," said David Martens. "But I didn't get much interested until I saw they were junking these old machines."

For a while, it seemed, there would be nothing to keep the history of the area from being junked as well. The historical society was formed in 1967, but "sort of went defunct," according to board president Mack Davis.

Local folks decided about three years ago to give it another try.

"We decided this would be one of the first celebrations," said Davis. "It's one of the things that motivated us to reorganize the historical society.

"We had some steam engine enthusiasts in the area, and last year we got the cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce and put on the thrashing celebration. We had about 5,000 people show up, so we decided to do it again."

The event is held on 160 acres of land owned by the historical society, so there is plenty of room to display the threshers, tractors and machinery used in the early part of this century. There were about 100 different machines on display last year, Davis said, and as many are expected this time around.

The weekend will also feature a fireworks display the evening of the Fourth, and concert by Tom Wopat, formerly of Dukes of Hazard fame, the night of July 3.

Dominoes dominate social life

Associated Press

TERRAL, Okla. — At the Oakie Dokie Diner, one can almost always hear the latest word on which fertilizer is working best for melons this year or what's going on with the schools.

The Oakie Dokie, where a guy sitting on one of the wooden benches out front is close to being in spitting distance of the Red River, is the hub of social activity in this tiny Jefferson County town.

Just down the street from the diner, past two or three padlocked establishments and next door to the barber shop with an open door but no proprietor, stands somewhat of a shrine to the men of Terral.

The little building with wooden shingles and boarded up windows has a concrete floor, with grass growing up through the cracks.

Two bare light bulbs dangle from the ceiling and three or four spit cans dot the floor. What paint is left on the outside is pink, and daylight filters in through holes in the walls.

LOOKS DON'T count, though, when you're talking about the little shack that serves as the town's domino hall — the weekday gathering spot for a handful of fellows long past retirement age.

As soon as winter's gray hints of sweet-smelling sunlit days, the boys drag the wobbly-legged tables and mix-matched chairs outside where shade from the only hackberry left on the town's main street provides a cool spot to play.

On a typical day, tobacco-chewing Ralph Tanner and his dog, Rascal, make a slow journey down the buckled sidewalk toward the game. Jelly Lowrentz is close behind, throwing off a toothless grin, anticipating an afternoon of fun.

Jelly never joins in the games. He's opposed to the boys' monthly dues policy. "I can't see politely giving them $3 to play," he says, as he takes a seat on one of the loafers' benches under the tree.

By 1 p.m., the game is taking shape. Bob Lewis, owner of the Terral Telephone Co., is seated across from Hack Spivey, a retired civil service worker.

THEY'RE TAKING on Robert Cole, the local barber, and pipe-smoking Jack Fulton, whose constant puffing helps keep the buffalo gnats away.

The game is next door to the barber shop, so whenever a customer calls, Cole has to make a quick decision on whether to make a few dollars or stay in the game.

"A lot of times I get 'em to come back the next day," he said.

Right in the middle of this game, someone pulled up in front of the barber shop. Cole excused himself and made his way toward the shop.

"When Robert's behind, he gets right up and leaves," Ralph Tanner said, easing himself into Cole's empty chair.

The rules governing the games are simple. "There's no gambling and there's no bad-mouthing. And, you pay your dues," Spivey said. "Anyone can play long as you pay your dues."

THE MONEY collected goes for rent on the little pink hut, and gas and electricity in the winter.

It's not long before Tommy Williams pulls up and parks his pickup. He checks the score and takes a seat on the bench. Forty years ago, his dad was coming here to play.

There's not much goes on in Terral that can interrupt a game. Trucks piled high with melons and canteloupes in the summer go unnoticed as they rumble past.

Occasional rain showers just drive the boys inside where the game resumes underneath a fairly solid roof. Even the buffalo gnats that leave swollen red spots when they bite don't deter the players much because they all have their favorite remedies to ward off the pesty insects.

Clifton Smith shows up drenched in vanilla extract. Cole brings a Bayer aspirin bottle full of Skin-So-Soft from the barber shop and swears by it.

LOWRENTZ PROUDLY boasts the gnats don't bite him.

"Some things they just can't stand," Spivey says.

After the crooked rows of dominoes have stretched into the late afternoon, the game begins to break up.

Some lawns need mowing and some gardens need hoeing, but most usually, some fish swimming around in the muddy Red River need catching.

"Fish and play dominoes," Spivey said. "It's a rough life."

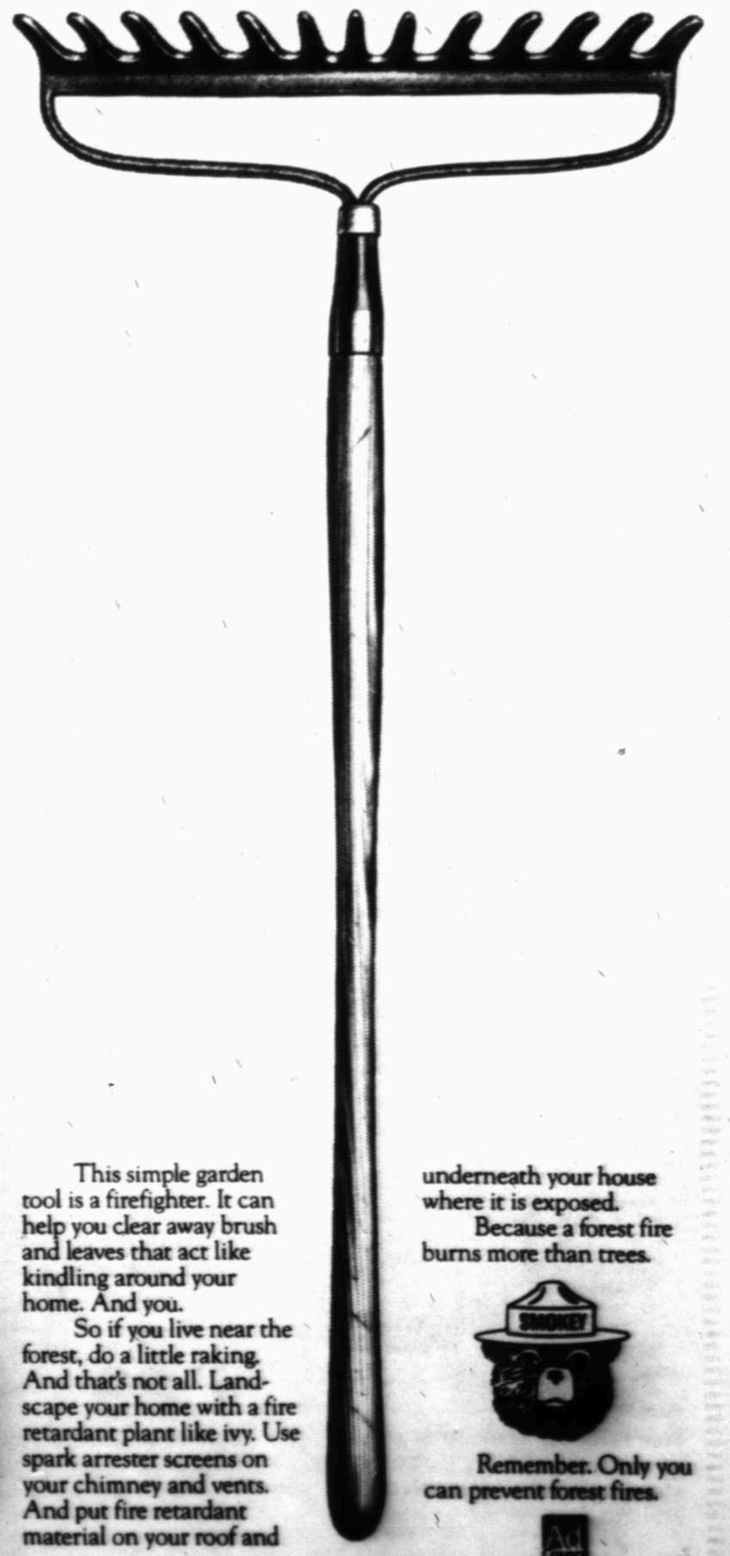
HOW THIS RAKE CAN SAVE YOUR LIFE



This simple garden tool is a firefighter. It can help you clear away brush and leaves that act like kindling around your home. And you.

So if you live near the forest, do a little raking. And that's not all. Landscape your home with a fire retardant plant like ivy. Use spark arrester screens on your chimney and vents. And put fire retardant material on your roof and underneath your house where it is exposed.

Because a forest fire burns more than trees.

Remember. Only you can prevent forest fires.

"As you get older, you get to know yourself a little better. I don't have the dedication to the instrument that I've seen in other people. And, I've found to make me function at my best, I need to have a variation of musical work to look forward to. When I'm playing different music, different dates, it keeps everything working for me. It keeps my mind set properly; it keeps my technique at its top rung."

— Pianist Derek Smith

Derek Smith returns after a two-year absence to play in this year's Midland Jazz Classic.

Jazzy pianist

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment writer

Derek Smith had just finished his latest project — cutting a jazz album — when he came home late one night and found the following message: "You've got to be at ABC television at 6 o'clock in the morning. You've got to accompany (opera star Luciano) Pavarotti on the Good Morning America Show."

"I really haven't practiced much opera in years," Smith says he recalls thinking at the time.

"I went to bed, tossed and turned, got up real early, shaved and went in there like a lamb to the slaughter and thought, 'What have I let myself in for?' "

Smith arrived at the station on time, only to find himself waiting on the Italian tenor. The show went on live, coast to coast, at 7 a.m. At five minutes till the hour, Pavarotti and his manager walked in.

"I ran over to him and I said, 'Mr. Pavarotti, I'm the pianist and what have I got to play? What are you going to sing? Give me a chance to look at the music or something.'

"He says, 'See my manager.'

"I ran across to the manager and I said, 'Come on, we've got to go on in three minutes. What aria is he going to sing? Give me a chance to look at the music.'

"So, he reaches into his briefcase and brings out this sheet of music — "We Wish You a Merry Christmas."

"I didn't know what to do, whether to die or just laugh in relief." He laughs and his laughter overtakes him for a few minutes before he adds, his tone quieter, "I went on, and I played the hell out of it."

Smith is among 20 nationally known jazz musicians who will be performing Oct. 1-4 for the 11th annual Jazz Classic, held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Single admission tickets are not sold at the door. For more information or to purchase tickets, which are on sale now, call Bobby Crues, 683-5208 or 694-2136. Others performing in the 1987 Classic are Carl Fontana, Flip Phillips, Milt Hinton, Snooky Young, Jeff Hamilton, Randy Sandke, Warren Vache Jr., Bill Watrous, Scott Hamilton, Kenny Davern, Jim Galloway, Ross Tompkins, Ralph Sutton, Jack Lesberg, Brian Torff, Howard Alden, Gus Johnson, Jake Hanna and Al Grey.

A Briton by birth, Smith has lived in this country for more years than his wife will allow him to say. During that time, he has worked in bands led by, among others, Benny Goodman, Clark Terry and Don Elliot, as well as playing with Doc Severinsen's band on the Johnny Carson Tonight Show from 1967 until the show moved its home base to California. At that time he moved to ABC and the Dick Cavett Show; later he played on CBS' game show Musical Chairs.

Albums to his credit include "Love for Sale" and "Derek Smith Plays Jerome Kern" on the Progressive Label, and a live recording of a two-piano concert in Saragosa, Fla., with Dick Hyman. In addition, he has played on a number of movie sound tracks, such as, "Hannah and Her Sisters" and "Peggy Sue Got Married." He also spends his time playing jazz festivals, including Newport.

A New Jersey resident today, Smith remembers being told by other players in London, "If you want to be in jazz, you've got to go to the United States. That's where all the best musicians are."

"And so we just came," Smith says during a telephone interview. "It wasn't easy at first, but I'll say this about the musicians here. If they figure you can play, it doesn't matter where you came from, they'll accept you. And luckily they did that to me. I've done very well because of that."

His first break came shortly after moving to the States, when he came across an advertisement for a concert by the Modern Jazz Quartet and decided to check it out.

"A guy was putting programs on the seats, and it turned out that it was John Lewis, who was the leader. I introduced myself to him and he said, 'Oh, I know you.' And I said, 'How could you possibly know me?' He said, 'Well, I remember reading a review of a record that you made in England.' One thing led to another, and I'd been here two weeks, and I was recording with the Modern Jazz Quartet."

The job was short-lived.

"Unfortunately, I guess, the record wasn't working too good because I didn't work again after that for six months."

Smith finds life to be "a series of breaks." His next one came when he was playing at a wedding at an Elks Club near his residence. One of the guys in the band happened to be Doc Severinsen. Not too long after that, Severinsen landed the job of leading the band on the Tonight Show, and he needed a piano player.

"It was a good job because I was highly visible. It was looked upon as the best job in New York, maybe in the country at that time. I developed a different view of it after a number of years. I think seven years doing one job is a long enough section of anybody's life. So when they decided to go to California, I said, 'Goodbye and thanks, it's been nice.' "

The experience of working on the Tonight Show was positive for Smith in other ways as well.

"I feel I've learned everything I know about playing the piano from the pressure of playing in a pressure situation. You've got to read the music, it's got to be good, it's got to be well-interpreted. The Tonight Show put me in a lot of different pressure situations.

"Once I can remember playing with Marilyn Horne, one of the great singers of all time. She wasn't singing with the orchestra, just with me."

When Ms. Horne came on, the piano was pushed onto the middle of the stage and, with Severinsen turning pages for Smith, the performance began.

"Well, Doc got very nervous, and he turned over a couple of pages at once. Here I am trying to fake this marvelous operatic aria with this wonderful singer until Doc finally turned over the right page and got me in the right spot." He pauses and adds, "You learn from these things, and you grow."

Another break which occurred in Smith's life was meeting Mousey Alexander. Alexander is one of Smith's "favorite drummers in all the world, one of the great human beings." At the time the two met, Alexander was the drummer in Benny Goodman's Band. He was instrumental in landing Smith a job with Goodman.

"Benny, without doubt was the greatest jazz clarinet player ever, but he was a very difficult guy to get along with the musicians. I can't say I ever felt really comfortable with him, which is a shame because I don't think I ever played my best."

Smith thrives on variety.

"As you get older, you get to know yourself a little better. I don't have the dedication to the instrument that I've seen in other people. And, I've found to make me function at my best, I need to have a variation of musical work to look forward to. When I'm playing different music, different dates, it keeps everything working for me. It keeps my mind set properly; it keeps my technique at its top rung."

When it comes to playing with a band, Smith has found the greatest satisfaction playing in his own.

Judds proof anything's possible in entertainment business

Temple

"My daddy had a filling station, my mommy was a cook on a riverboat, and we're from small-town America. We never conceived in our wildest dreams that one day we'd be involved in the Technicolor adventure we're living today," says Naomi Judd.

Anything's possible in the entertainment business.

Naomi and her daughter, Wynonna, have discovered that fact since the release of their first single Dec. 2, 1983. In less time than it takes to survive a child to kindergarten age, the two have garnered three consecutive Grammys for Best Country Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal, three consecutive Country Music Association awards for Top Vocal Duet and two CMA's for Vocal Group of the Year (1986 and 1987) along with numerous other awards.

Judd Music plays Odessa's Ector County Coliseum July 18 with special guest Steve Wariner. Between now and then, Midlanders will have the opportunity to hear Mason-Dixon, Janie Fricke and the Charlie Daniels Band July 4th in a free concert being held in the field behind ClayDesta (The Shades will be the opening act), Mylon LeFevre, also on July 4th, at Water Wonderland and Sawyer Brown July 10th at Twin Cities Speedway.

Since winning the $100,000 Star Search Talent Contest in 1984, Sawyer Brown has received the Country Music Association's Horizon Award in 1985 (won by The Judds in 1984), been named by Billboard and Cashbox as the best new vocal group of the year, has had three number one hits and will release it's fourth album, "Somewhere in the Night," in August or September.

Sounds like another overnight (usually backed up by years of hard work) success story in the making.

Today's entertainment cover features piano player Derek Smith. His career may not have skyrocketed at the speed of The Judds or Sawyer Brown, but his life has had its share of breaks and opportunities, as so often is the case in this business, and a chance to brush shoulders with the rich and famous and come away with a story to tell.

He chuckles as he tells of how he came to play for Caroline Kennedy's wedding.

"All the Kennedy family was going to be there at the Kennedy compound at Hyannis on Cape Cod. The music was going to be provided by a 12-piece rock'n'roll band; a very fine band, they're all studio musicians and most of them were my friends in New York. A few days before the wedding somebody got cold feet, or else I think it was Ethel Kennedy, gave them a list of her favorite songs, and all these guys looked around at each other and said, 'None of us know this, we'd better get Derek.

"In a panic, they called me and, I said, 'Well I'd love to come. It sounds interesting, and I've got a daughter who lives in Boston anyway so I'll go visit her and I'll go to the wedding.'

"I played by myself. I knew all the tunes that Ethel wanted, and they knew all the tunes that Caroline wanted. Since then we've done several kinds of things like that."

His association with songwriter Sammy Cahn ("High Hopes," "Love and Marriage" and "The Second Time Around") found him "playing with Sam at the White House."

He admits he's as much of a tourist as anyone and enjoyed the "first class" tour of the White House. He remembers feeling strange being in line to be introduced to President Reagan behind such "fabulously wealthy people" as Ross Perot, who was in front of him, and David Rockefeller, who was in front of Perot.

When the first Marine lieutenant said to Smith, "Principals first." he said, "What does that mean?' The first lieutenant replied, "Well, you've got to go two paces ahead of your wife.' "

"My wife is the local representative of a national organization for women (NOW) so she didn't think much of that for a start. Nevertheless, we had to keep up with protocal so I go two paces forward. Then the next Marine lieutenant said, "How do you wish to be introduced to the president?" I said, "Well, my name's Derek Smith." He said, "Fine."

"When I was introduced, I said, 'I make a living playing the piano for Sammy Cahn.' And that really broke up the president, he thought that was funny."

His wife also had a few comments.

"She didn't tell me what she said. She kept that a secret, and to this day I don't know what it was. I think it was something about her being two paces behind me."

Although Smith misses "certain pubs that you can't seem to duplicate in this country" and "English bacon," he feels he's received more than a fair exchange because he's had the opportunity to work with all the musicians he had admired.

Smith, like The Judds and Sawyer Brown, was in the right place at the right time. Although he and his older brother spent hours playing around on the piano, he got to take lessons and his older brother didn't. Economics. The family didn't have the money at the time.

When I asked him why the piano, his reply was simple — the piano was there. He always meant to ask his mother why she had a piano because the family had no musical history.

More doctors prescribing doses of literary license

EDITOR'S NOTE: Medicine is a demanding profession, and a busy practice would seem to leave little time for anything else. But for some doctors, puzzling over X-rays or pondering treatments is not enough, and the urge to write proves incurable.

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

FARMINGTON, Conn. — Unless the name on the door is "Richard M. Ratzan M.D.," patients flipping through the available reading matter in a doctor's waiting room would hardly expect to have their traumas soothed by applications of medicinal literary trivia.

Ratzan is fascinated by doctors who write, and here are some symptoms of what now may be diagnosed as Ratzan's syndrome:

Hippocrates, the Fourth century B.C. Greek practitioner who wrote the physician's oath, prescribed barley gruel, a precursor of chicken soup, as a remedy for the common cold.

St. Luke, that "dear and glorious" physician, alone among the Gospel authors tells the story of the Good Samaritan.

"Yankee Doodle Dandy" was written by British army surgeon Richard Schuckburg to poke fun at raw colonial recruits in the French and Indian war.

Dr. Benjamin Rush, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and an ardent advocate of bloodletting, wrote tracts on temperance.

Tobias Smollett, creator of "Peregrine Pickle," Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, creator of Sherlock Holmes, and A.J. Cronin, whose "The Citadel" was recently revived as a TV series, all sailed as ship's surgeons.

Sir Thomas Browne, Francois Rabelais and Anton Chekhov were practicing physicians. Poet Oliver Wendell Holmes and lexicographer Peter Roget of thesaurus fame taught anatomy. John Keats and Henrik Ibsen practiced pharmacy. Viennese playwright Arthur Schnitzler was a psychiatrist and friend of Sigmund Freud.

Like W. Somerset Maugham, novelist Walker Percy, now on the best-seller list with "The Thanatos Syndrome," took degrees in medicine but never practiced.

Surgeon Mariano Azuela rode with Pancho Villa and wrote novels by the campfire.

Poet and pediatrician William Carlos Williams delivered 3,000 babies.

This conjures up the thought that patients may be waiting so long in a waiting room not because the doctor is tending to another case, but because the doctor is hunched over his word processor rejiggering the second chapter of a novel or getting a second opinion from the nurse on the dialogue of a torrid love scene.

Richard Ratzan is himself a doctor who writes. In fact, he is in the final editing stages of a book on doctors who write, the outgrowth of a medical congress he staged at the University of Connecticut Health Center two years ago. It drew 400 participants, including a dozen author-physicians, from 27 states and Canada.

"My book is primarily about the relationship between medicine and writing," says Ratzan, on a short break from his duties in the emergency room at the university hospital. "Why do doctors write? When do they write? And how do they or should they handle the ethical implications of using patients as source material?"

Ratzan, an internist specializing in emergency medicine, majored in Greek, Latin and the classics as an undergraduate. He conducts a weekly seminar in literature for medical students. He has four children, ranging in age from 4 to 12, and a wife who is a pediatrician at the same hospital. A prolific essayist with a novel buzzing in his head, he ponders late at night over his word processor the ethical questions raised at the conference about writing taking valuable time away from research, patients and family.

"Are we all selfish brigands, robbing wives, partners, hospitals and patients of their rightful time and care?" he asks.

Doctors, Ratzan has found, write for a number of reasons. Ego gratification. Escape from the grim realities of the operating table. As an outlet for the human dramas enacted in their consulting rooms. Self-therapy for the pain and frustration at being unable to help someone reaching out to them in trust and hope. And, perhaps in the case of the ship's surgeons, a release from boredom.

Some agree with Dr. Johnson that "no man but a blockhead ever wrote except for money." Some follow St. Luke's advice: "Physician heal thyself."

A.J. Cronin had a prosperous London practice until a duodenal ulcer forced a rest of six months in the Highlands of Scotland, where one day he announced to family and friends that he was about to give birth to a novel.

Walker Percy turned to fiction while recuperating from tuberculosis which he contracted cutting up cadavers in pathology class at New York's Bellevue Hospital.

Motivations vary with the amazing variety of their output. Dr. Mary Lake Polan, an obstetrician-gynecologist at Yale University medical school, has just written her second murder mystery as an escape from "the very realistic, often sad and tough profession of medicine." Michael Crichton and Alan Nourse write science fiction.

In the adventure vein, Ratzan points to Marshall Goldberg, a Minnesota surgeon whose second thriller, "Anatomy Class," is about a medical student who sets out to learn the identity of the young, healthy body he has been assigned to dissect, instead of the usual wino.

Psychiatrist Michael Robert Coles won the Pulitzer Prize in non-fiction for "Children of Crisis." Immunologist Lewis Thomas, whose idol is Montaigne, won a National Book award in 1974 for his essays.

These days, Ratzan observes, physician-authors tend to be more serious —"almost angry" — writers than their Victorian counterparts. "Their primary motivation is to create serious works of art. Writing for them is not so much an expiation of guilt as the need to create."

Doctors write whenever they can: late at night, on days off, while waiting for the next patient or the next ambulance to arrive at the emergency entrance. A canceled appointment is often the mother of literary invention.

On the question of violating the confidentiality between doctor and patient, Ratzan finds that most writing doctors "tend to blenderize their materials. There are any number of stories you acquire, either on your own or from colleagues, that with a little modification can be used legitimately. Their fiction characters are composites."

Writing may make doctors more compassionate, suggests Ratzan. "They may be poorer in the knowledge of bretyllium tosylate or understanding nuclear magnetic resonance, but probably richer in understanding why a patient would rather NOT be told a diagnosis and why that decision should be respected."

Sooner or later every author-physician faces what Ratzan calls "the decision," whether to pursue art or science as a career or to continue "leading this demanding double life."

"Medicine is my lawful wife; literature is my mistress," confessed Chekhov, who remained remarkably faithful to both.

"One occupation complements the other," insisted poet-pediatrician William Carlos Williams. "They are two parts of the whole and not two jobs at all. One rests the man when the other fatigues him." Poetry was "the thing which gained me entrance to the secret gardens of the self."

Ratzan's favorite case study is James Gates Percival, a highly praised contemporary of poets Longfellow and Lowell, who quit medicine when five children in one family and five other patients died in a fever epidemic. Unhappy with writing, he resumed practice in Charleston, S.C., after several suicide attempts, but found that "when a person is really ill, he will not send for a poet."

William Carlos Williams also lost patients because of his poetry.

"I love the camaraderie of surgery and the solitude of writing," said Richard Seltzer, the author of "Confessions of a Knife" who eventually gave up medicine.

Still others, like immunologist Thomas, Atlanta's poet-cardiologist John Stone, California playwright-internist Larry Snyderman and essayist Gerald Weissmann, chief of rheumatology at New York University, thrive in both worlds. Weissmann in fact urges his students to read Sherlock Holmes for clues to the art of diagnosis.

Similarly, Ratzan thinks Mary Shelley's "Frankenstein" is a great text to teach medical students ethics.

Novelist Walker Percy, author of "The Thanatos Syndrome" now on the best-seller list, earned a medical degree but never practiced as a physician.

The novel has no end of ethical issues like the need to conduct research responsibly and the whole question of spare parts and organ donations from dead bodies. There is implied child abuse and abandonment when Frankenstein kicks out the monster. There is also what medical ethicists call 'personhood.' Some say it's OK to pull the plug on a brain-dead person, because that really isn't Joe Blow anymore. The monster argues that Victor Frankenstein has no right to kill him, because he is as much a person as the doctor, exhibiting values, likes, dislikes and the use of reason.

As to whether medicine or literature is the higher calling, the jury is still out.

Years after Somerset Maugham became a millionaire with a yacht and villa on the Riviera, an eminent surgeon at St. Thomas's hospital was asked if he remembered the author as an intern. "Ah yes, poor Willie," he replied, "One of our failures I'm afraid."

Dutch dance troupe offers surprising 'Spellbound Child'

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Netherlands Dance Theater returned to the Metropolitan Opera House last week for the first time since 1982 with four works choreographed by its artistic director, Jiri Kylian.

The good news first: "L'Enfant et les Sortileges," the well-known musical theater piece by Maurice Ravel and Colette, choreographed at its 1925 world premiere by George Balanchine, emerges unscathed in Kylian's straightforward new staging and boasts superb performances by Marly Knoben as the little boy antihero and by his singing counterpart in the pit, Evelyn Petros.

One of the delights of this little opera, whose title is usually translated as "The Spellbound Child," is the way the furniture and china around the child come to life. They do so again thanks to the fanciful animated props designed by John Macfarlane and the lighting illusions of Jennifer Tipton.

The other three United States premieres that Kylian ladles out, however, make for a suprisingly thin soup. The choreographer, born in Czechoslovakia, has stirred us in the past with his passionate ensemble pieces — and he has had a special ear for hearing the unrevealed textures in the music of composers of Slavic descent.

By his own account, he is exploring new directions. This is obvious onstage. In "Heart's Labyrinth," he seems to shed the Expressionist formulas that have made him so successful, although he deals with a subject that requires them most. The work was inspired by the suicide of a dancer in the company after she retired from performing.

In "Six Dances," to Mozart's Six German Dances, Kylian has returned to comic ballet, a genre that is alien to him, and in "Silent Cries," a solo dedicated to and danced by his wife, Sabine Kupferberg, he makes an interesting attempt to work against the associations of a familiar score — Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un faune." In each case, the work is danced by a fine company — one that has had a large turnover in personnel and which, except for a few veterans like Knoben, does not quite have the raw power of the past.

Musical tradition home-grown at Crane

By WILLIAM KATES

POTSDAM, N.Y. (AP) — For the last century, deep-sweet melody has flowed from New York's North Country region, a most unlikely place, carried to the hearts and homes of a nation by generations of teachers from the Crane School of Music.

But even with its rich and classically steeped tradition, it is the school's progressiveness that has earned Crane its national reputation and made it the country's most prolific breeding ground for music teachers.

"It's a thread that has flowed through the fabric of Crane for 100 years, the school has always been innovative and in the forefront of things happening in music and music education," says Thomas N. Tyra, dean of the music school, which is part of the State University of New York system at Potsdam.

"It's a very progressive school," agrees Mario A. Gaetano, a 1977 graduate of Crane and currently an instructor of music at Western Carolina University in North Carolina. "It stays on top of music education and it stays on top of the music world. New methods and new equipment, they are on top of it."

Crane has supplied more than 50 percent of the music teachers in New York's public school system and the school has graduates teaching in every state, as well as in Guam and Hong Kong. At least 100 graduates are teaching in colleges and universities around the country.

The 400-student school also has developed a national reputation within the music industry. One Crane graduate, Dave Conner, is the musical director of public television's Sesame Street children's program.

"Surveys have shown that we produce more undergraduates in music education than any other school in the country," says Tyra.

Crane has enjoyed a leadership position in the field of music education since Julia Crane of nearby Hewittville accepted an offer in 1884 from the State Normal and Training School at Potsdam to teach music, according to Ralph Wakefield, who served as the school's top official from 1966 until 1976. Wakefield compiled a history honoring the school's centennial last year.

"She was a pioneer and was influential around the nation," Wakefield says. "When they asked her to teach music she agreed on the condition that she be able to develop her own ideas and curriculum for the preparation of teachers of music. Up to that time, there was no specialized training for teaching music to children."

Following two years of preparation, Crane began teaching her specially designed two-year curriculum to a class of 25 girls in 1886.

"She had four basic principles," Tyra says. "And those four principles were really forward-looking in 1886 and are still part of how we approach teaching today."

Crane believed it was the "democratic birthright" of every person to be trained in music, and it followed then that there needed to be teachers specifically trained to teach music, says Tyra.

She also believed that to be a good teacher, a person had to be a good musician first, and that beyond being a good teacher and a good musician, an instructor needed to have a broad liberal arts background.

There have been other innovations along the way, including the first school-organized trips to Europe to study music and the first teaching practicums in music education, said Tyra.

The school was among the first to bring the great masters, such as composers Aaron Copland and France's Nadia Boulanger, to a campus setting to interact on a more intimate basis with students. And it was among the trendsetters in electronic music and the use of computers in music education.

Unlike the Juilliard School in New York City or the Eastman School in Rochester, Crane is not performance-oriented in that its graduates generally pursue careers as musicians. However, Tyra doesn't hesitate to compare the musical skill of Crane's students with its equally prestigious cousins.

Even music education majors, who make up more than 80 percent of the enrollment at Crane, must concentrate on one instrument and become proficient with several others.

"We feel they can't teach an instrument if they can't perform with it. Besides, it helps them get a feel for what instruments they will want to use with their classes," says Sal Cania, an assistant to the dean, noting that the school has a $3 million inventory of artist-quality and technique-quality instruments available for students to use.

Lessons are given privately with faculty members, not assistants, and each student must perform a solo recital on a primary instrument before graduation.

Crane is also unique in that it has a four-member staff whose chief concern is the maintenance and repair of its instruments and operating facilities, such as the theater and electronic equipment.

Additionally, the school's library is home of one of the most extensive music resource collections in the country with over 17,000 different recordings and 21,500 individual scores available to students.

SMITH

"I've worked with many different people, for many different reasons. Obviously, it was very good for me to work with Benny Goodman because it meant that I'd attained a certain standing in the business and was accepted as such. And the same with the Tonight Show Band, although that was on a commercial rather than an artistic level. I've probably found the greatest satisfaction in working with a band where I'm the leader because that's just your own healthy ego coming forward, I guess. You set down the ground rules, and the other guys follow you. I think I've enjoyed that most."

He spends time at colleges giving talks to young, aspiring musicians. He tries to give tomorrow's musicians a realistic view of the music business.

"I'm afraid it's rather depressing what's going on now because I see the music business, especially as I know it, diminishing every year. It's due to a number of things; probably the biggest thing being technology — synthesizers and things like that. That's putting a lot of people out of work.

"At the same time, I tell the kids, 'If you really feel that music is the only thing you're interested in, then you must give yourself a chance.' I just tell them to get as rounded an education as they possibly can. It's not enough these days to be a wonderful instrumentalist. You really must glean all the knowledge you possibly can at the earliest age.

"If I had my time to live over, I would not only just be a piano player, I would be a singer, I would be a writer, I would be a composer, a publisher. I would know all the angles."

This Cyrano wins 'Roxanne's' smile

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

A winner by more than a nose...is "Roxanne," a funny, soppy comedy starring Steve Martin, who also wrote it (from Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac"). The updated "Cyrano," is Martin as C.D. Bales, a small-town fire chief, martial artist, writer, and stand-up comic who makes quick work of hecklers, verbally and physically.

Totally charming, even with his mammoth schnoz, Martin makes fine use of his comedic talent in "Roxanne," as C.D., an unassuming chief of a volunteer fire department in an Aspen-like mountain village. C.D. is basically satisfied with his simple life until astronomer Roxanne (Darryl Hannah) comes to town for the summer and he is smitten with unrequited love. Matters are complicated further by the arrival of Chris (Rick Rossovich), a dull-witted "hunk" who comes to help whip the fire department volunteers into shape (aptly referred to by C.D. as the "seven banana brothers.")

Roxanne asks C.D. to help her romance with Chris along. C.D. obliges by acting as the voice of Chris — writing letters for him, and prompting his speeches — which creates successfully executed opportunities for farce.

Hannah gives a fine performance, but even the addition of glasses doesn't make her believable as brainy. Shelley Duvall, as the level-headed friend of C.D. seems perfectly cast, and many of the supporting characters are funny and talented.

But the star is always Martin. Thanks to him, "Roxanne" is a warm, witty film. From the opening moments of him wandering down a side-walk, making up a song in a childlike fashion to the bit where he extols the virtues of his co-hort's idea of having a beer-drinking cow as the symbol of the fire-department, Martin's humor is fresh and imaginative.

Though it's hard to accept that in the light of plastic surgery, someone would suffer through life with an oversize proboscous, Martin shoves it off with, "Rhinoplasty and hemorrhoids are just two words you don't want to get involved with." Also his plastic surgeon advises that it "would be too dangerous."

Besides, he is told, "Maybe your nose has a purpose." This concept comes full circle at the end with C.D. performing a heroic deed not unlike "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer."

When C.D. waxes poetic, "Why sip from a cup when we can drink from the river?" it tends to get extremely sappy. But Martin pulls it off with such earnest boyishness that its easy to forgive his syrupy phraseology.

Even better is the film's portrayal of simple folk who constantly confuse astrology with astronomy, the Oktoberfest in July that fizzles, and C.D.'s comedy routine in a bar. And I will never, ever forget "Operation Snowball."

When C.D. laments his love for Roxanne, he says, "It's a long way to fall when you're reaching for a star." Fortunately for the audience, Martin keeps reaching, and will probably become an even greater rising comedic star.

"Roxanne," rated PG for sexual innuendo, is playing at UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

Benji acts out doggone good story

What noble dog can yawn on cue? Defend orphan cougar cubs from timber wolves, hawks and Kodiak bears? What brave canine can cross raging streams, climb steep ravines and leap down mountains in a single bound? Is it Lassie? Is is Rin Tin Tin? No, it's America's own Superdog, Benji, starring in his fourth film, "Benji the Hunted."

Without the aid of humans, in a nearly silent film (thank God, because when there is dialogue it's overly sentimental and bland), Benji performs heroic deeds against the backdrop of the gorgeously filmed moutains and backwoods of Oregon and Washington.

After a fishing accident separates Benji from his trainer, he witnesses the death of a cougar, (shot by a hunter) and befriends the teeny, adorable cubs. Benji takes it upon himself to lead the babies through the woods, trying to find a mother cougar to take them in.

The noble dog eats berries while he brings the cubs game birds. He runs in front of wild animals to distract them from the cubs and hides from his trainer in a helicopter (which had children in the audience screaming "Why are you hiding, Benji?") in order to maintain his vigil as surrogate mother.

We know that most dogs will not be as noble as Benji and pass up birds and rabbits for berries. But the children in the audience seemed to buy every bit of bravery, illogical or not, and every cute cock of Benji's head.

Though it gets a bit ho-hum for adults (Just how many times can someone watch Benji drag another cub up a steep mountainside without yawning?), the children seemed enthralled.

"Benji the Hunted" should have been called "Benji the Hero." Written and directed by Joe Camp, the movie surprises in that so many different expressions and moods are portrayed by the animals. The film, nearly a throw back to "Old Yeller," is great for children and O.K. as far as children's films for adults go.

After all, who can forget the magic of the old days, when Lassie raised his paw during the credits of his television of the same name? "Look, Lassie's waving!" I used to cry gleefully. Unfortunately, as we get older, the glee in seeing cute doggie tricks is more than likely just passed on to the younger set.

The younger set did enjoy the movie, and there were some moist eyes when a "bad" animal got killed, and even some boo-hoos during the farewell scene. Although children will enjoy "Benji the Hunted" more than adults, it is a doggone good adventure for dog lovers of all ages.

"Benji the Hunted," rated G, for mild violence, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Gospel concert set at water park

Mylon LeFevre and Broken Heart will perform at 7:30 p.m. July 4th at Water Wonderland.

LeFevre's first composition, "Without Him," has been recorded by 126 artists, beginning with Elvis Presley. Singer-songwriter LeFevre began singing gospel music when he was 4 and a member of his family's singing gospel troupe.

In 1970, he released his first album, "Mylon," which introduced a band later known as the Atlanta Rhythm Section. On New Year's Eve 1979, he gave his last secular rock'n'roll performance. His current show fuses high-energy rock with old-fashioned preaching.

Tickets, priced at $8 in advance and $10 at the gate, may be purchased at area Christian book stores.

Those purchasing tickets to Water Wonderland, normally $10.50, may also buy a ticket to the concert for a total amount of $15.77. For more information, contact the amusement park, 563-3141.

Mylon LeFevre and Broken Heart have slated a Permian Basin performance.

OKLAHOMA CITY — Artist Jim Wilcox of Jackson, Wyo., won the National Cowboy Hall of Fame's Prix de West Award at the 15th annual exhibition of the National Academy of Western Art, held this month.

The award is a purchase award by the museum for Wilcox's 30-by-60 inch oil painting titled "Three Minutes of Glory."

This year's exhibition includes 142 pieces of art by 51 artists and is the largest in NAWA's history, according to Ed Muno, art director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame. More than 300 people attended the seminar programs June 12-13 and 750 art patrons crowded into the galleries for the exhibition opening and art sale.

Gold and silver medals carrying cash awards of $1,000 and $500, respectively, were awarded by the Hall in four categories, oil, watercolor, drawing and sculpture.

Gold medal winners were Cyrus Afsary, Las Vegas, Nev., oil; Ed Fraughton, South Jordan, Utah, sculpture; Thomas Jones, Bellevue, Wash., watercolor; and Harley Brown, Calgary, Alberta, Canada, drawing.

Silver medalists were VaLoy Eaton, Heber City, Utah, oil; Kenneth Bunn, Denver, Colo., sculpture; Morris Rippel, Albuquerque, N.M., watercolor; and Bettina Steinke, Santa Fe, N.M., drawing.

NAWA members also elected guest artists Afsary and Wilcox to membership in the academy.

Sales on opening night exceeded $400,000. The exhibition will hang through Sept. 13.

At the awards banquet following the opening and sale, Byron Price, the museum's executive director, announced a $100,000 sculpture competition open to NAWA members. The winning design will be used for a bronze trophy to be awarded at the Hall's Best of the West Rodeo slated for December. In addition, an oversized reproduction of the sculpture will be cast for a new entrance to the museum grounds.

Starring in the double-cast production are Tim Rosborough and Frank Mateo as Homer Horatio Hannibal, a poor but honest elephant trainer who has been cast into slavery by the vagaries of harsh circumstances; Scooter Tilley and Terry Collins as Texas Perplexus, a Western barbarian, slave and devoted companion to Horatio; Jody McElligott and Sharron Perkins as Portia Primpucker, lovely, sensitive daughter of the owner of the Roman baths; Gilley Estes and Jane Phares as Octavia Oddbody, Portia's faithful governess, tutor and watchdog; Michael Trost and Harry Harrison as Cassius Nefarious Corruptus, rapacious rake and card cheat; Mark Eells and Bob Volkman as Erroneous Maximum, his lackey, and many other unusual Roman characters.

"Tribulation on the Tiber" is directed by Ron Hughes and the ever popular olio, a series of short sketches, is directed by Cherry Jones. Producer for Mummers is Douglas Heck and stage manager is Karlis Gruzins. Sound is being handled by Richard Kowalski and lights by John Michael Warburton.

Mummers plays at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday, through Sept. 5. For reservations call 682-4111.

Letter campaigns work

NEW YORK (NYC) — By now it is a familiar sight at the offices of network executives — bags of mail arriving daily with pleas from viewers for mercy for their favorite show.

This month, most of the letters are addressed to ABC and ask that "Our World" and "Starman," both canceled for next season, be returned to the air. Earlier this year the letters went to CBS, demanding that "Designing Women" be renewed. In the last year the objects of public affection have included "Scarecrow and Mrs. King" and "Mike Hammer" on CBS, "Spenser: For Hire" on ABC and "St. Elsewhere" on NBC.

"Once upon a time viewers just sat quietly and watched," said one network executive who has been the recipient of tens of thousands of letters in the last few years and who asked, fearing more mail, that his name not be used. "Now they write. They write a lot."

Dorothy Swanson is founder of the Virginia-based Viewers for Quality Television, which coordinates efforts to save television shows. Talking about why viewers write, she said: "They believe they can influence what's on their television set. Look at "Cagney and Lacey."

Ms. Swanson was speaking of the first of the grass-roots campaigns to save a series. Four years ago CBS announced the cancellation of the program about two women who are police detectives and the action was because of poor ratings. CBS received 20,000 letters over the next three months saying the program had fine writing and realistically portrayed working women. "Cagney and Lacey" was renewed that fall — and has been every fall since then.

Even Ms. Swanson, who participated in that crusade, agrees that letters alone, no matter what the quantity, are not enough to return a show to the air. For instance, the ratings for "Cagney and Lacey" rose sharply during the summer between its cancellation and renewal, partly because it ran in a different time slot and partly because of publicity generated by the write-in campaign.

But Swanson and network executives say an avalanche of letters can influence a close call. And with that hope, more viewers are writing more often for more of their favorite programs.

CBS leads news ratings

NEW YORK (AP) — In a week without basketball playoffs and with Dan Rather in the anchor chair, the "CBS Evening News" remained in third place in the Nielsen ratings for the fourth straight week.

CBS had set a record by landing in third in the Nielsens for three weeks in a row. The network chalked up the ratings decline to Rather's absence, plus disruption of its news schedule on the West Coast due to the National Basketball Association championship series.

But for the week ending June 19, "NBC Nightly News" won its 10th week in a row with a rating of 10.1 and a 22 share. ABC's "World News Tonight" remained in second for the fourth week in a row, with a 9.0 and 20. The "CBS Evening News" had an 8.7 and 19.

The rating is a percentage of the nation's estimated 87.4 million households with television. The share is a percentage of the viewers tuned in during a particular time period.

In an interview after he returned from vacation following two weeks of work on documentaries, Rather was philosophical about the ratings.

"Nobody understands the ratings," he said. "So many things affect them. What you can control is what goes into the broadcast. The rest of it, you just have to have a sense of humor about."

Rather said the summer news ratings are historically so erratic that his predecessor, Walter Cronkite, eventually quit doing the evening news in the summer.

All three networks' news ratings — or total audience — have declined, reflecting changes in summer viewing habits.

'Witches' still working ticket-office magic

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "The Witches of Eastwick" worked magic on moviegoers, conjuring up $8.25 million in ticket sales to squeeze out "Predator" and become the most popular movie at the box office last weekend.

The supernatural tale featuring devilish Jack Nicholson seducing three lonely New England witches earned just a fraction more than "Predator," the action yarn about a commando leader who battles an unearthly killer in the Central American jungle.

"Predator" took in $8.2 million compared to "Witches"' $8.25 million.

Both films were in their second week of release and both beat out Eddie Murphy's "Beverly Hills Cop II," which toppled over the $100 million mark after taking in $7.4 million more last weekend.

"Cop II," which finished third, has earned $109.2 in five weeks for Paramount.

Holding strong at fourth place is Brian DePalma's gangster thriller, "The Untouchables."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 29, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Everything you touch could turn to gold in the year ahead. Quietly slip out of a negative relationship and look for more fertile fields to cultivate. You find new peace of mind. Business success depends on your getting better organized. Be more practical about cash and credit. Educational efforts bring surprisingly high rewards. You gain new authority at work.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Famed surgeon William Mayo, Los Angeles Dodgers Rick Honeycutt and Pedro Guerrero, baritone-actor Nelson Eddy, baseball slugger Harmon Killebrew, actor Slim Pickens, pitcher Dizzy Trout, actress Ruth Warrick, musicman Frank Loesser.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make certain to get promises in writing before lending money. Quarreling with a visiting relative will undo all the patience you have shown recently. You need more time to sort things out.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A close friend gives you excellent financial advice. If a compromise goes against your principles, forget it. The price is too high. Insist on having a say in a family budget revision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your competitors miss out when they fail to match your persistence. You see things through to the end no matter what. Contact influential friends. Something good is about to happen. Stay alert.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your stubbornness could land you in hot water. Energy and enthusiasm help you correct bad habits. A young person is very impressed. Partner lets you know now is the time to make a decision.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You could land an important management position. Show those who count that you are both calm and highly responsible. Watch out for a co-worker who has an inflated notion of your personal wealth.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Reach out to someone who needs a helping hand. Do not say "yes" if you think the answer will be "no" later on. Romance deserves a second chance. Speak from the heart.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not push your luck. You will do best if you rely on your own efforts to meet deadlines. Keep an eye on associates who act in an erratic manner. Expect the unexpected!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Friends are very helpful now. Do not be shy about seeking advice or support from people who you know care deeply. Consult a lawyer if uncertain about the small print in contracts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not allow your associates to steamroll you into making up your mind too quickly. Reread your mail — you may have missed an important detail. Romance requires caution. Avoid taking unnecessary risks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Invest in something that will save time and labor. Learning high-tech skills will boost your earning power. Romance is happier and more settled. A special alliance continues to look very promising.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look for increased productivity in artistic and creative areas. Be happy with recent financial gains. A good time to sign contracts and renegotiate agreements.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your staying power — both mental and physical — increases. You turn out more work than usual. A good time to expand a business or buy real estate. Go ahead and make a romantic commitment.

The bidding:

Opening lead: King of ♠ Good defense requires cooperation between partners. East was alive to the possibilities of the hand. Unfortunately, his partner could not find the right continuation.

In modern Goren, South's rebid of three hearts was not 100 percent forcing: North could pass with a complete bust. However, four-card trump support and a side-suit queen does not rank as a trickless hand—either factor could be enough for game. So North's raise to four hearts was automatic.

Against the heart game West made the normal lead of the top of his club sequence. East put the defense on the right track by overtaking with the ace to shift to the nine of spades. The finesse of the ten lost to the jack, and the crucial point of the hand had been reached.

Afraid that he might help declarer by returning a spade or a diamond, West chose to continue with a club. That was the death knell for the defense. Declarer ruffed and cashed the king of hearts to learn he had a trump loser. Now, his only chance was to negotiate an end play. He continued with the ace of hearts, then crossed to dummy by overtaking the jack of diamonds with the queen. Declarer used his only entry to dummy to eliminate clubs with a ruff.

When declarer cashed the king and ace of diamonds, West did the best he could by refusing to ruff. But he was only delaying the inevitable. Declarer threw him in with his master trump, and West was faced with leading a spade into declarer's tenace or else yielding a ruff-sluff by playing a club. Either way, the contract was home.

Observe that the game would have been defeated had West shifted to a diamond at trick three. Declarer is then an entry short for his strip and end play. Try it.

Frustrated singers find recording haven at Center Stage

HOUSTON (AP) — Rick Goldberg says he's always been a frustrated singer so he set out to build a studio for people like him to record their favorite songs.

Goldberg's frustration has grown into a chain called Center Stage that has him singing to a tune of $4 million annually in sales.

"Our feeling really is that everyone has a song inside of them and it's dying to come out," says Goldberg, 29. "A lot of people play racquetball. For me, I like to go down and sing two to three songs."

The California native invested $175,000 to open his first studio in Houston's Galleria mall a year ago. He's since added 11 more nationwide with plans to open another 10 by summer's end.

For less than $10, anyone, regardless of talent, can pick a song off a selection sheet of 175 offerings, enter a studio and sing his heart out. Songs include rock, '50s and '60s hits, rhythm and blues, musicals, country-western and religious.

It has caught on with the famous and not-so-famous.

Professional athletes, who normally stay in Galleria-area hotels when playing in Houston, often frequent Center Stage, says Sid Kahn, a company vice president and manager of the Galleria studio.

One memorable performance came from Philadelphia Phillies player Mike Schmidt — a great baseball talent but a bust as a singer, according to Kahn.

"Mike Schmidt was so bad. He just talked through 'Heard It Through the Grapevine,'" Kahn said.

Center Stage's customers are given lyrics and a set of headphones with background music. Once the song has been recorded on cassette, patrons can listen to the final product through headphones or over loudspeakers.

The sound-proof studios are brightly decorated with aqua and black trim and have portholes so shopping mall patrons can peek inside at the singers.

The most recorded songs include selections by Whitney Houston, Madonna, Beastie Boys, Bon Jovi, U-2, Run DMC and George Strait.

Typically, the would-be singers aren't very good. However, Goldberg says at least two patrons have signed recording contracts with their Center Stage tapes.

Goldberg said an amusement park visit triggered the idea that led to Center Stage.

"I was on my way to my high school reunion in Sacramento and my wife and I went by an amusement park and they had a version of the same kind," Goldberg said. "I, being a frustrated singer, went in and did like four songs with my wife singing backup."

The first studio opened in Houston. Others in Texas are in Austin, Dallas and San Antonio, and across the country from Honolulu to New York.

"I think it's great," Linda Cronkite, a child-life specialist at Texas Children's Hospital, said recently after recording former Supremes' hit "Baby Love" with a friend. "It gives everyone a chance who wants to sing to sing and you don't have to be a good singer."

Her singing partner, Sandie Shiry, 24, giggled as she heard their finished product. "We don't sound that bad," she said, blushing.

Goldberg has teamed with Macy's department stores, setting up a studio in a New York store that so far this year has tallied $285,000 in sales.

Goldberg said he originally was going to continue a real estate job and let his wife handle the day-to-day studio activities. But the change in the tax laws threatened the security of his real estate job and his wife's pregnancy changed things.

He now has a staff of 60 and runs his company through what he calls "management by wandering around."

Has television learned to do it right?

By SUSAN PAYNTER
Hearst News Service

Woody Allen said sex is only dirty when it's done right. But dirty or sanitized, sophomoric or salacious, television has rarely done sex right — until now. It's as if Joan Rivers told TV, "Oh, grow up!" and the more sophisticated shows such as "LA Law," "St. Elsewhere" and "Moonlighting" took the hint, with a little help from Dr. Ruth Westheimer.

A quick TV history shows how much things have changed:

— 1950s: Lucille Ball is pregnant on "I Love Lucy," but she is not allowed to say the word on TV.

— 1960s: Barbara Eden is required to cover her navel on "I Dream of Jeannie."

— 1970s: Cher, too, must cover her navel on her variety show, leading to all sorts of elaborate, cut-out costumes.

Nowadays, local independent TV stations air the movie version of MASH uncut at 8 p.m., including "Hotlips" Hoolihan's full frontal embarassment as pranksters pull down her shower stall.

It's hard to pinpoint when stork flights were canceled between the separate beds of married TV couples like Rob and Laura Petrie of "The Dick Van Dyke Show" and when unwed pairs like David annd Maddie of "Moonlighting" started rolling in sweat-soaked sheets. But palpably during the TV year just ended, increasing instances of noticeably franker sexual actions and adult attitudes started showing up in dialogue and deed in network prime time.

Words that couldn't even be uttered by characters a few years ago are now everyday acts of on-screen lives. Last season. "Cagney and Lacey," "Kate and Allie" and "Valerie" had heart-to-hearts with their kids about condoms and the consequences of sex.

TV's sexual revolutionaries, like "St. Elsewhere" story editors John Tinker and Channing Gibson, are right when they say cutesy "caa caa, toidy" TV euphemisms not only insult the audience's intelligence but help no one wrestle with real-life relationships. But, not surprisingly, some shows are busy abusing TV's new sexual freedom, taking it as a license for excess and bad taste.

— On the new Fox Broadcasting Network comedy "Married, With Children," a neighbor stops by to ask the husband, "Have you got a nutcracker?" The husband replies, "You're lookin' at her," indicating his wife.

— On "Duet," which also airs on Fox: Before going to bed together for the first time, Laura asked her lover, Ben, "Wait a minute, have you ever been to Haiti? — a reference to AIDS.

— And the recent NBC miniseries "Hands of a Stranger" featured a lurid videotaped rape "party" with the leather-masked attacker looming over his bound and writhing victim. NBC program practices Vice President Morrie Goodman says his order to excise the scene went ignored. He said the film editor in question is no longer with the network.

The new freedom is not free. The price is responsibility, and shows like "Hill Street Blues" and "Cagney and Lacey" pay it with scripts that take an honest but (mostly) sensitive approach to sex that others should emulate.

Monitoring TV content is no science. It's a daily battle waged between TV writers and TV censors. Words, acts and body parts allowed in one context are outlawed in another.

In an "LA Law" courtroom scene this year, a rape victim used the word "rammed" to graphically describe her attack. The court atmosphere was kept carefully serious and respectful, so the word amplified but did not exploit the brutality she suffered.

A lot also depends on the expectation the audience brings to a show. George Dessart, CBS program practices vice president, explains that each show creates its own world. Mary Beth Lacey talking about an abortion on "Cagney and Lacey" would barely cause a blink among the audience, while the same subject would horrify viewers of 'Newhart."

Even the best shows walk wobbly lines between what's frank and funny and what's offensive. The audience is the ultimate censor. But TV is a mass medium aiming at a target that is vast, varied and constantly moving. While part of the audience is outraged to see two unmarried people bedding down, another part simply sees a reflection of its own reality.

The "Venus Butterfly," a fictitious technique said to be capable of sexually enslaving women on "LA Law," caused an unprecedented flurry of interest but almost no flak. People still call the show wanting to know what it is. Sex shops sell devices called the Venus Butterfly and Playboy magazine readers recently wrote in their own definitons.

In its first season, "Hill Street Blues" drew fire for a scene of the then-unwed Capt. Furillo and Joyce Davenport in a bathtub. But wrath evaporated as viewers came to understand such loving scenes at the end of each show were more about the sharing of the day's troubles than about sex. It also helped that, in this case, the lovemaking eventually led to marriage.

Writers win some, lose some and get away with some. The more popular a show and the more respected its writers, the more they get away with.

"St. Elsewhere" won one in a good cause with a show on testicular cancer. The American Cancer Society credits the show with saving more than a few lives by encouraging self-examination and early detection.

Initially, NBC told Gibson he couldn't write that show. Later, they relented, but it still came down to a body count. The censors allowed use of the word "testicle" three times and, after that, insisted on euphemisms.

Attitues about what goes on TV can change quickly. Ironically, because of the fear of AIDS and herpes, the once-taboo condom and other symbols of "safe, responsible sex" have become causes celebre nearly overnight, making such nighttime soaps as "Dallas" and "Dynasty" suddenly and irresponsibly dated.

With uncut R-rated movies airing a channel away, audiences are becoming conditioned to accept and even expect fare that's at least PG.

Two British spy thrillers in the works

LONDON (AP) — The game is afoot this summer, as television cameras track spies, counterspies and moles from Mexico City's Presidential Palace to Berlin's Checkpoint Charlie.

Two British miniseries, based on spy thrillers by Len Deighton and John Le Carre, are in production for future broadcast.

"Game, Set and Match," a 13-hour series based on a trilogy by Deighton, is filming in Britain, West Germany and Mexico. It will not complete production until October and probably will open the 1988-89 season of "Mystery!" on public television in the United States.

"A Perfect Spy," which combines espionage with Le Carre's remembrances of his father, winds up filming in July. The seven-hour miniseries is expected to the first offering in the 1988-89 season for Mobil's "Masterpiece Theatre."

"By the time we finish 'Game, Set and Match' it will have taken four months longer than the first world war," said Brian Armstrong, who is producing for Granada Television International.

"We met with Deighton while he was still writing the books. It was simply a case of saying the books are marvelous, how about it? He wanted Granada to do it because he admired what we did with 'Jewel in the Crown' and 'Brideshead Revisited.' I believed he turned down a lot of money from Hollywood."

Armstrong said he wanted Deighton to write the screenplay based on his novels, "Berlin Game," "Mexico Set" and "London Match." But Deighton was already into the next trilogy, using the same characters.

Ian Holm stars in this epic story of treachery and betrayal, with much of the action taking place on either side of the Berlin Wall.

"We traveled 100,000 miles," said Armstrong. "We filmed in the jungle near Acapulco and in Mexico City. We had 48 crewmen, about 10 in the cast and hired 12 to 15 Mexicans. We flew 9½ tons of equipment from Manchester, England, to Mexico."

Armstrong also took his crew into Berlin for scenes at Checkpoint Charlie and along the wall. East German security guards sometimes stood virtually nose-to-nose with the actors doing their scenes. The cameraman had to be careful to keep them out of the picture.

"A Perfect Spy" tells the story of Rick T. Pym, a notorious con man, and his son, Magnus, who grows up to become a British secret agent and practice the deceit he learned from his father. Ray McAnally stars as the father and Peter Egan plays the son from the age of 21 to 53.

Ex-movie star shares wisdom

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — The hotel sound system was playing Alice Faye's throaty rendition of "You'll Never Know," but for the 200-plus seniors who turned out to see the former movie star, "You'll Never Show" was beginning to seem a more appropriate theme.

Faye, due at noon for a program on fitness for "Young Elders," had been delayed more than an hour by a scheduling mixup and snarled traffic. But her mostly female audience, bolstered by periodic bulletins telephoned in by Faye's limousine driver, waited good-naturedly, bursting into applause as soon as they caught a glimpse of the star of "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "In Old Chicago."

The audience responded to 72-year-old Faye as if she were an old friend. They also seemed to respond to her message: Stay active past the age of 50.

"I want all of you to exercise," she said, almost sternly, staring down at her audience over the rim of her bifocals.

Faye, recruited by Pfizer Pharmaceuticals two years ago to be its "Ambassador for Good Helath," is one of the latest celebrities to join the fitness promotion parade. However, Faye does not bill herself as an expert, but as an example. A regular exerciser for 32 years, she boasts a slender waist, enviable energy and, according to husband Phil Harris, the best legs in Hollywood."

It's hard to have an upbeat attitude if you're in bad health, and vice versa," she said. "I do simple stretching, I walk every day and I swim as much as possible."

Faye also is an interesting spokeswoman because she suffers from two scourges of older Americans: low blood pressure and "a touch" of arthritis.

Accompanied by Dr. Michael Freedman, Faye has traveled throughout the country to preach the benefits of fitness to "Young Elders" — her preferred term for those over 50. Their presentation includes a 40-minute film, "We Still Are," which combines information about health with clips from some of Fay's best-known movies.

Faye's tips for good health include:
— Stay active and stay involved.
— Watch intake of salt, sugar and fats.
— Don't smoke.
— Exercise two-three times weekly.
— See a doctor whenever necessary.

Carly Simon is a survivor who's 'coming around again'

Copley News Service

Simon

There are singers who ride the trends, their songs created for them by experts of what's happening now. Ten years later, their records are, for the most part, curios — like Hula Hoops and pet rocks.

A few popular vocalists, however, not only write their own songs, but they write them the way other people keep diaries. Their music is a chronicle of their loves, losses, fears, unexpected delights, growing up, growing sidewise, staring at the ceiling at 3 in the morning. As it was impossible to tell the dancer from the dance in William Butler Yeats' image, so with these singers it is impossible to separate their songs from their real, continually changing, lives.

Carly Simon has been just such a singer-diarist for 17 years now, and because she is as openhearted and candid a writer as she is a performer, those of her songs that have been most autobiographic are as provocative and appealing now as when they were first released — "You're So Vain," "That's the Way I've Always Heard It Should Be," "Anticipation" and "Attitude Dancing."

Her new album, "Coming Around Again" — the first she has made for Arista Records — illuminates further dimensions of the inner and outer lives of this 42-year-old woman who looks and sounds a good deal younger. Sensual in appearance and by temperament, she has been through wastelands, as well as relationships in which "the freight train whistles over my track." And she is still looking for one that will work always. Or most ways.

Above and beneath everything else, Carly Simon is a survivor, and that quality is at the pungent core of the title song of this new set, "Coming Around Again" — a song she wrote for the movie "Heartburn," starring Jack Nicholson and Meryl Streep. "If you're in it for the long haul," Carly said recently, "it will be coming around again."

In the song, which distills the broken rhythms of a disintegrating marriage, she juggles the daily amenities alongside the daily nightmares: "You pay the grocer/fix the toaster/kiss the host goodbye/then you break a window/burn the souffle/scream the lullaby." Yet, at the end she sings — and believes: "I know nothing stays the same/but if you're willing to play the game/it will be coming around again."

Seven of the 11 songs on the album are by Carly, and they range from a desperate need for the most palpable kind of love to a vignette of "Two Hot Girls On A Summer Night." In the former "Give Me All Night," she plays no games: "Don't give me fountains, I need waterfalls." As for the "Two Hot Girls On A Summer Night" — a memory of the adolescent who is always peeking out of her soul — the song is like a marvelously captured snapshot: "Me and Jenny, twinklin' like crystal and pennies."

As a performer, Carly Simon has a strong, clear, flexible voice that is particularly compelling because of the depth of the warmth it generates. It's a knowing warmth. There is no coyness or fake ingenuousness. She has been around the block a few times — as cops say about themselves — so she knows the score.

She has been through a lot, some of it fun, some of it worse than a root canal. Yet, she says through the warmth and spirit of her singing, we're all still here. All of us have been hurt one way or another, but there have been those other times, too, and we'll be coming around again.

Clive Davis, a canny veteran of the recording scene and chief of Arista Records, has an astute description of what it is about Carly Simon that has made her last so long in a field where most of the players are so transient:

"There's a vibrant, truly distinctive quality that shines through everything she does. Her magic as an artist has been an uncommon ability to tap emotions believably, to make every listener feel as if he or she is hearing a point of view that is simultaneously intimate and personal."

She also has another vital quality, especially right for the soft rock she prefers. Some soft rock sounds as if the singer has fallen asleep in the middle of the take, but Carly — even on intimate ballads — has something Louis Armstrong used to prize in performers. He called it "plenty of punch." You don't have to shout to have plenty of punch. It's an inner kind of infectious energy, and it can't be faked.

"Do the walls come down when you think of me?" she asks in a song in this album. Well, yes, Carly, they do.

Whitney's album makes music history

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Whitney Houston, whose 1985 debut album sold eight million copies to become the best-selling debut album by a solo artist, made more pop music history this week when her follow-up album, "Whitney," became the first solo record by a woman to enter Billboard's album chart at No. 1. At the same time, the first single from the album, "I Wanna Dance With Somebody (Who Loves Me)," also climbed to the top of Billboard's singles chart to shatter another record, by making the 23-year-old singer the first woman to have had four consecutive No. 1 pop hits.

Besides "Whitney," only four other albums have entered Billboard's album chart at No. 1: Elton John's "Captain Fantastic and the Brown Dirt Cowboy" and "Rock of the Westies" (both 1975), Stevie Wonder's "Songs in the Key of Life" (1976), and "Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band Live-1975-85" (1986).

"I think this new album is definitely more adventurous than the first one," Houston said in a recent interview. "Though I worked with basically the same people, and the new record is also an album of love songs, the second time around the feeling in the studio was more relaxed and creative."

Houston's favorite song on the new album, "I Know Him So Well," from the hit London musical "Chess," is a duet with her mother, Cissy Houston, a singer in her own right.

"I first heard it three years ago when I was in Germany and fell in love with it," Whitney Houston said. "Three years later, Clive Davis" — the president of Arista Records and executive producer of her album — "and I were going over material in his office, and he said, 'You might like this.' Then he played me the same record I had heard before. There are many talented women I could have sung it with, but since I knew I had one right in my own backyard — my mom — I wouldn't consider recording it with anyone else. I like the fact that the song can be interpreted in different ways — it could be about your love for God or your love for a man. When I go on tour, I plan to sing it with different surprise guests in different cities."

Houston may also make her movie debut in the film version of the Broadway show, "Dreamgirls," in the role of Deena, the Diana Ross-like lead singer of the fictional trio, the Dreams. The role was offered to her by David Geffen, the movie and record mogul whose company owns the film rights.

"Though I loved the show, it's still not definite," Houston said. "Whether I do it depends on how good the script is and what it says. If you're offering someone a specific part, I think the person who plays it should have some input."

On July 4, the singer begins a three-month 45-city United States tour that will bring her to Jones Beach on Aug. 16 and 17, two dates that have already been sold out.

George Michael's 'Sex'

"I was very surprised that so many Americans took such offense to the record, because I thought Americans were more liberal than we were," George Michael said in a telephone interview last week about the continuing controversy over the English pop star's new single, "I Want Your Sex."

The record, which is at No. 28 this week on Billboard's Hot 100, is still being played only at night by the BBC, and is not being played at all by many American Top 40 radio stations. One San Francisco station has dubbed in the word "safe" before "sex" in the title phrase, and other stations are playing an edited version in which "love" is substituted for "sex."

After MTV rejected two versions of a video clip of the song, Michael recorded a 15-second explanatory introduction. "In the past, there were arguments for and against casual sex," Michael explains in the clip. "Then it was a question of morality. These days it can be a question of life and death. It's as simple as that. This record is not about casual sex." In the clip, which has the high-gloss production values of an extended beer advertisement, Michael uses a lipstick to write the words "explore monogamy" on his girlfriend's body.

"My personal view of censorship is that it just amplifies what you're trying to censor," Michael said. "When I wrote the song, I anticipated that there might be a little controversy over the use of the word 'sex,' but nothing like what has happened. Considering all the sexual innuendo on radio and television, the whole fuss over this one song strikes me as rather hypocritical."

Colony Energy expands market

Will supply Iowa Electric Light and Power

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A marketing agreement announced this week between Colony Energy Corp. of Midland and IE Industries Inc. of Cedar Rapids, Iowa will provide new market options for natural gas producers in the Permian Basin, while nearly doubling (in peak months) the gas handling capacity of the Midland-based firm, says Dave Presley, president and chief executive officer of Colony.

Under terms of the agreement, Colony will act as acquisition agent in the natural gas spot market for IE Industries and will create a bid program for interested suppliers to respond to all or part of the needs of the Cedar Rapids firm. IE Industries is the holding company for Iowa Electric Light & Power Co., which supplies natural gas to 127,000 residential, commercial and industrial customers throughout Iowa and in some Nebraska communities.

Much Permian Basin gas now moves through El Paso Natural Gas Co. pipelines to the West Coast, where netback prices are slightly higher, but Presley sees many producers electing to send their gas north this winter when West Coast demand drops.

"This will make an excellent winter market for Permian Basin producers and put a double demand on local gas," said Presley. "Winter heating requirements make demand high in the Midwest, but high demand in California is during the summer because of air conditioning requirements."

Gas going north to Iowa Electric will be transported via Enron's Northern Natural line or MidCon Corp.'s Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America. Presley says both can be reached inexpensively through the El Paso Natural Gas system. "This is a good route, free of many of the bottlenecks encountered on the Oklahoma pipelines," he said.

He said the Iowa Electric market would give local producers access to an average demand of 70 million cubic feet of gas per day (MMcfgd) with peak demand of 200 MMcfgd in the coldest winter months. The market demand will increase Colony's 350 MMcfgd daily gas volume by 25 percent, and will result in the physical growth of the company, adding three more employees in Midland and opening of offices in Houston and the Midwest.

Passbooks for piggy bankers?

Traditional saving plan now favored

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Saving in a tight economy is difficult, but the new found popularity of an old standby — the traditional passbook account — seems to be making it easier for the small saver, say bankers.

Passbook and statement savings lost their popularity in the late 1970s when interest rates soared and other investment opportunities yielded higher returns. Now, with interest rates declining and increasing fees being charged by financial institutions, passbook accounts are suddenly looking attractive once again.

Area bankers, who contend that the passbook saver is the backbone of financial institutions, could not be happier. "The holder of a large certificate of deposit will shop around and take their money down the street for a quarter of a percent more interest," notes Don Rardin, manager at First Federal Savings & Loan's Midland branch. "Banks can't depend on those 'hot dollars' for long.

"On the other hand, the passbook saver historically sticks with one institution and that kind of customer loyalty is very important to banks and savings and loans," he adds.

Rardin agrees that passbook accounts are becoming more attractive. "Particularly in the past few months, when certificate of deposit rates were on the decline, a passbook savings account was more lucrative for customers with relatively small savings," says Rardin.

"With passbook accounts paying 5 percent, it was not worth the extra 2 percent gained by purchasing a $1,000 CD to have the money tied up for a year," Rardin explains.

He notes that money markets are a good investment that historically pay higher interest than a passbook account, without minimum time requirements, but have the drawback of higher opening balance requirements. "The minimum investment for a money market account is $2,500, while a saver can take $100 and open a passbook account."

Fred Cooledge, senior vice president at First Bankers Trust & Savings, says a key consideration in choosing a saving strategy is the purpose for saving. "If the saver's main concern is to have money available for emergency use, then a CD or other account that ties the money up is not a good strategy," Cooledge points out.

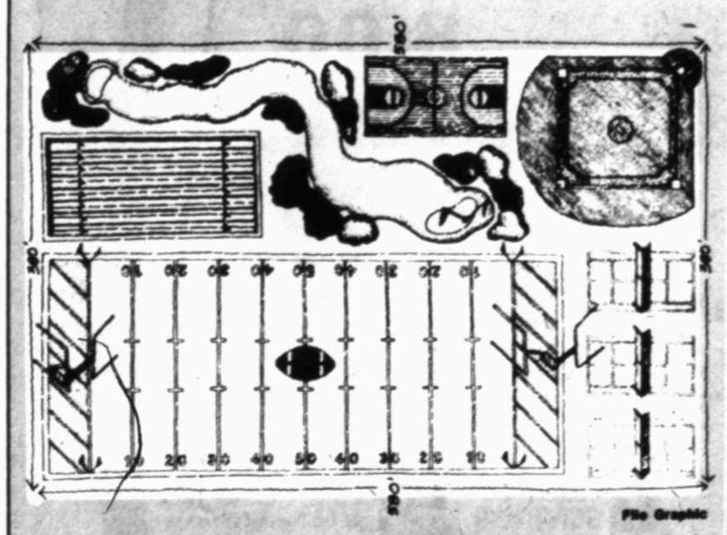
Even a six-year-old saver like Christopher Barroso knows that "small savers" can increase their investment by opening a passbook or statement savings account. Investment counselor/teller Liz Weaver at the downtown branch of Home Savings Association helps Christopher get a good start towards saving.

HYPERMARKET



File Graphic

A rough drawing gives an idea of the size of a hypermarket.

How big is hyper?

Described as a store within a store, Wal-Mart's first hypermarket (one up on super) is set to open later this year in Garland, Texas.

How big is hyper? Wal-Mart officials say the store to be built in conjunction with Cullum Co. will contain 222,000 square feet. That's enough room for a football field, a baseball field, three basketball courts, an olympic-sized swimming pool, three tennis courts and a typical three par golf hole.

Included in the mall-like store will be a giant supermarket, full-sized Wal-Mart, and a variety of fast food stores and service shops. Approximately 500 jobs are expected to be created by the hypermarket which is described as the first of its kind retailing concept. A second hyperstore is under construction in Topeka, Kansas.

Local thrifts bearing up under heavy pressure

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Depressed real estate values and overall stagnant economic activity have taken their toll on local savings and loan institutions. However, in comparison with thrift institutions around the state, Midland associations are holding their own fairly well, officials say.

Examining key ratios compiled by Austin-based Sheshunoff Ratings Service Inc. reveals that four of the seven savings and loan associations with branches in Midland have a better-than-average ratio of net worth to total assets.

The other three institutions — City Savings, Petroplex Savings and Vista Savings — have negative regulatory net worth (RAP) ratios, which is not all that unusual these days in Texas, according to a report by the U.S. General Accounting Office.

In September there were 45 S&Ls in Texas with negative RAPs and another 53 with RAP below 0.5 percent. Nationally, there a total of 219 RAP insolvent (negative net worth) and 250 thrifts with RAP below the 0.5 percent level, the report reveals.

"The FSLIC (Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp.) has restated its criteria for closing institutions in terms of net worth requirements," explained Ben Weibel, former branch manager for Vista Savings in Midland.

"The devaluation of properties — primarily real estate — has caused net worth ratios to deteriorate, not because of 'bad loans' but because of declining asset values behind those loans," said Weibel, who is now assistant vice president of branch operations for Vista.

The net worth ratio is the relationship of regulatory net worth to total asset value at year-end 1986. The repossessed asset ratio is the percentage of total assets which is made up of repossessed assets. The return on asset figure is 1986 earnings divided by the institutions' yearly average asset value.

Forbearance on the part of the FSLIC and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (FHLBB) is not new. Since 1982, the agencies have delayed administrative action against "basically sound, well-managed thrifts whose capital deficiencies are largely the result of problems in the energy, agricultural, natural resource or other distressed sectors of the economy," according to Craig A. Simmons, author of the GAO report on thrifts.

"Decisions are being left to the judgment of the regulators to determine those firms that are victims of local economic conditions," said Jay Norris, senior vice president of Midland's Home Savings Association.

The GAO's Simmons noted in the report to the Senate Banking Committee that "forbearance for problem thrifts may no longer be a matter of choice but a necessity (because of) the financial condition of the FSLIC fund."

Falling fund reserves over the past several years mean that "continuing forbearance is due to the lack of sufficient FSLIC funds to absorb the losses associated with closing or merging failing thrift institutions," Simmons wrote.

Asset quality, as measured by the ratio of repossessed assets to total assets, is far below historic levels for the industry. "Traditionally, we (S&Ls) liked to keep that ratio in the 2 percent range," explained Fred Cooledge, senior vice president for First Bankers Trust & Savings Association. The statewide average at the end of 1986 was almost 5 percent.

"However, with the numerous changes in the thrift industry since deregulation, it's hard to say what a

So this is what public relations has come to?

Pitts

You know what makes me mad — I mean really mad? It's these slick public relations people who think they can use expensive, clever PR packets to trick and bribe seasoned editors, such as myself, into giving them free advertising.

I mean whatever happened to plain professional press releases with straightforward information and 8x10 black and white photographs. They were very professional, and we tossed hundreds of them out each week. But now, for some reason, the public relations people have gone "Hollywood" with their packets?

Take for instance the press release I received last week from Kentucky Fried Chicken — for their new 39-cents "Chicken Little" sandwiches.

Here's what I got: Inside one expensive card board mailing box — not an envelope — was a brochure, looking for all the world like an expensive greeting card, printed and shaped like a juke box with a cute little chicken peeking from behind it. Open up the flat brochure and — so help me Sam Houston — it, mysteriously, plays the old rock and roll favorite, Little Darlin', which seems appropriate, I guess, for Chicken Littles — get it?...Little Darlings-..."Chicken Littles."

I also received a small lapel pen, which says Chicken Little on it and plays Little Darlin' when you flip a little button on the back.

They also sent me a free cassette tape of fifties rock and roll, featuring of course Little Darlin', a soft Nerf-type frisbee that says, "I flip for Chicken Littles," and an automobile window sign — the kind that hangs in the window and says such things as "baby on board" or "drunk on board." This one warns, "I break for Chicken Littles."

The nerve that a PR firm would think that such clever little giveaways, even though they make delightful toys for the kids, could make a business editor compromise his professional ethics and talk about their Chicken Littles, which are only tiny chicken sandwiches made with 100 percent all-meat, seasoned with the Colonel's special blend of 11 herbs and spices and served on a two inch, square dinner roll with a dollop of mayonnaise.

I can see where some less-experienced editors would have caved in to the barrage of freebies, but not even the two $1 gift certificates, included in the press packet would have been enough to make this payola-conscious editor tout the convenient, low-cost, great-tasting addition to the KFC menu — even if Chicken Littles are perfect for lunch and snack times and even if the kids do love them.

Some of us still have ethics, don't ya know, huh.

SPEAKING OF public relations gimmicks, here's another one that may fly. For a long while now, America and the oilpatch have needed their own OPEC. Now they have one.

Stephen Sanders, a former Midland geologist with Gulf Oil Co. (1974), and a pair of petroleum cronies, Dr. Charles Adelseck and Dr. John Halunen, are the founders and principal partners of Oilfield Professionals Exchange Co. U.S.A., a California computer information network for the purpose of trading "who's-got-what-for-sale" information.

Sanders says the trio got together in the Spring of 1986, when crashing oil prices made their drilling prospects uneconomical overnight. They decided what was needed in the oilpatch was one phone number where one could call to find anything from prospects to producing properties and petroleum personnel.

OPEC U.S.A appears to be catching, as memberships keep pouring in. It's famous initials are also catching some unusual comments like these:

"I like the initials, what do they stand for?"

"I want to be a member of OPEC. How do I join?"

"I think my phone is tapped, may I call you back?"

"I'm not sure your company will help or not, but I want to join because you've got 'guts.'"

Two charged in S&L scam

NEW YORK (NYT) — Two men were indicted Thursday on federal charges of defrauding a Queens savings and loan association of more than $1 million by falsifying financial records.

The indictment, announced by Andrew J. Maloney, the U.S. attorney in Brooklyn, and Thomas L. Sheer, head of the New York office of the FBI, is part of a larger investigation into the collapse of the Flushing Federal Savings and Loan Association in November 1985.

The indictment said the men, Harold Farrell and Robert Wolk, represented themselves to Flushing Federal as chairman and president, respectively, of the Teig Corp., a real-estate financing company. Both are former business associates of John A. Zaccaro.

Zaccaro, the husband of Geraldine A. Ferraro, the former representative and the Democratic vice-presidential candidate in 1984, was not implicated in any way, Maloney said.

The indictment said Farrell and Wolk submitted false financial statements in 1984 to the bank showing Teig's assets to exceed $5 million and their combined personal assets to be worth $1.2 million.

They then began drawing on large lines of credit provided by Flushing Federal. "Over the course of three months, Farrell and Wolk walked away with $1,008,000, none of which has been repaid," Maloney said.

The money was among $80 million in bad loans made by the savings association from February 1983 to April 1985, which led to its failure. Flushing Federal was taken over last year by the Long Island Savings Bank of Syosset, N.Y.

If convicted, the defendants face up to 5 years in prison on one conspiracy count and 10 years on each of 10 counts of bank larceny, as well as fines of up to $10,000 on the conspiracy count and $5,000 on each bank larceny count.

Zaccaro's business dealings with Teig and the two men surfaced during Ferraro's vice-presidential campaign and resulted in Zaccaro and Farrell pleading guilty in 1985 to a misdemeanor, scheming to commit financial fraud, in another case.

Neither defendant could be reached by telephone. Calls to Zaccaro's office were not returned. Wolk's lawyer, Hartley Bernstein, said he had not seen the indictment and would not comment. Farrell's lawyer, Elkan Abramowitz, was out of town and could not be reached, his office said.

SAVING

"For some savers, liquidity is important and passbook or statement accounts are the wiser choice." Cooledge says a passbook account currently pays 5 percent. A statement savings account — one where the customer has no book, but receives a quarterly statement of deposits, withdrawals and interest paid — currently pays 5.75 percent.

A recent survey by the Consumer Federation of America reports that statement savings accounts are one of the best bargains available right now for the 40 percent of Americans who have less than $1,000 in savings to invest. The survey said a statement account yields the most money at the lowest cost.

A small saver with just under $1,000 in assets could have earned an average of $45.68 in interest from a statement savings account in the one-year period from April 1986 through April 1987; the same amount in a money market deposit account, with hefty monthly fees, would have netted an average of only $5.35 over the year, according to the survey.

The continued trend toward passbook savings will likely depend on interest rates for CDs.

The popularity of certificates of deposit increased with this spring's rise in interest rates. Crowds of rate-shopping savers have caused banks to bring out CDs with all kinds of pricing gimmicks notes Cooledge. "Some banks are resorting to frills such as variable rates and bonuses for buying more than one CD, and even offering no penalties for early withdrawal."

CD rates have risen three-quarters of a percentage point the past three months and are only now leveling off.

"Many new CDs are for the sophisticated investor who can gamble on interest rate predictions," says Alan Fox of the Consumer Federation of America. He warns against betting on rising rates with a variable-rate CD.

Either CD or passbook savings are safe investments — the saver never loses his principal. The key consideration for a saver is to look at the fees the bank or S&L will assess, compare it to the interest rate being offered and keep in mind any time requirments for leaving the money in the account.

Making money on savings

The yield on savings deposits slowly increased through most of the '60s and '70s. Keeping pace with inflation, returns rose to 7.29 percent in 1979, peaking at 11.19 percent in 1982 before declining to just over 9 percent in 1985.

'reasonable' level of repossessed assets is," Cooledge said.

He said First Bankers' 6.5 ratio is probably "not too bad at this time in this market." He added that the association's long-time involvement in the local residential mortgage business may have helped soften the impact on First Bankers.

A stable base of evenly-aged mortgage loans is an advantage for older savings and loans, compared to newer institutions which have larger portions of post-deregulation loans — such as installment credit and undeveloped real estate loans — in their portfolio.

As with many businesses throughout the oil patch, "cash flow may be a more relevant number than total return, at least from the depositors' stand point," said Home Savings' Norris.

"So long as an S&L has the cash flow to pay depositors and service their business, it can sustain some period of negative earnings provided overall net worth and management are sound," Norris said.

While the results of past forbearance by the FHLBB has been a "mixed success," the GAO said, more than 60 percent of the nation's 916 "barely solvent thrifts" tracked since 1982 either attained strong capital levels above 3 percent or remained barely solvent.

Only about 20 percent (186) deteriorated into insolvency during the four years between 1982-86. The remainder were merged, acquired, reorganized or liquidated, according to the report.

Reports of giant national institutional investors — such as pension funds and major investment houses — pulling out of Texas savings and loans don't have major impact on Permian Basin thrifts, Norris said.

feather in the business hat of Dave Presley, Colony's young founder, who has guided the firm from a two-man operation in April 1982 to multimillion dollar enterprise with 21 employees and interest in 450 miles of gathering systems.

Presley sold Colony in 1986 to AlaTenn Resources Inc., the holding company for Alabama-Tennessee Pipeline for $12 million to be paid out over a four year period but remains firmly in charge of the firm. "It was a good match," he says of the sale. "They want to control supplies, we provide it. We make them money; they pretty much leave us alone."

Raised in Monahans, Presley says he has spent most of his life in the "gas patch." He had hoped to land a baseball scholarship at a major Southwest Conference college following graduation from Monahans High in 1972, but ended up enrolling at Angelo State University.

"The coach told me there were no more available scholarships," said Presley, but the truth of the matter was they found a better baseball player, and didn't let me know until I had only two weeks to enroll."

Following graduation in 1976, he cut his teeth in the gas business with Northern Natural, where he learned the intricacies of moving natural gas from Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas into the Midwest and established some of the contacts that he would later use in forming Colony. But when Northern threatened to move him to Omaha, he jumped ship and went to work for Adobe Oil & Gas (now Adobe Resources) as manager of natural gas sales.

When he formed Colony Energy in 1982, he was just a consultant with a secretary, helping producers straighten out their problems with the Natural Gas Policy Act, but quickly became one of the first in the industry to identify the niche for third-party gas.

"I knew we could use that niche to build a fully integrated natural gas marketing company," said Presley. "There were buyers out there looking for gas and producers with gas to sell. They needed someone to bring them together."

His first deal was a 30 MMcfgd-package between a fertilizer company in Nebraska and an Oklahoma gas producer: "The fertilizer company was about to shut the doors, because 90 percent of its fixed costs were for natural gas and it needed a break to stay open. The producer was about to shut in his gas, because he did not have a market. We put the two together on terms they could both live with."

Presley is confident the new agreement with Iowa Electric will be a similar arrangements in which everyone wins: "Iowa Electric diversifies the direction and cost of its supplies, the Permian Basin adds a gas market, and Colony sells more gas."

FHLBB head questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Home Loan Bank Board confirmed Monday that its chairman, after intervention by House Speaker Jim Wright, held a lengthy meeting with a savings and loan executive being investigated by the board.

Board spokeswoman Becky Vail said Wright contacted board Chairman Edwin J. Gray last fall and "recommended" that Gray meet with real estate developer Thomas Gaubert, a prominent Democratic fundraiser and owner of Independent American Savings Association in Irving, Texas.

"Based on that recommendation, the chairman did meet with Mr. Gaubert for 2½ hours last fall to discuss Mr. Gaubert's concerns that board actions with respect to Independent American were inappropriate or improper," Vail said.

She said Gray agreed to the meeting "because the speaker felt so strongly about this."

At the time, Wright was House majority leader.

The confirmation came after the New York Times and Newsweek magazine reported that Wright, a Texas Democrat, intervened with federal regulators on behalf of longtime supporters, including several well-connected real-estate developers facing legal problems. The reports have not alleged illegal activity.

Wright's interest in the board and the troubled Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., which insures thrift deposits, has long been apparent.

Earlier this year, he helped prod the House Banking Committee into approving a watered down $5 billion rescue plan for the insolvent FSLIC, rather than a $15 billion plan the bank board says is needed. The money comes from industry assessments.

Wright also pushed through language that would make it difficult — some say impossible — for the board to close bankrupt S&Ls in farm and oil states. He and the thrift industry contend many troubled thrifts will revive if they are given time to await the oil industry's recovery.

He later endorsed the $15 billion plan because of the revised language making it difficult to close bankrupt thrifts.

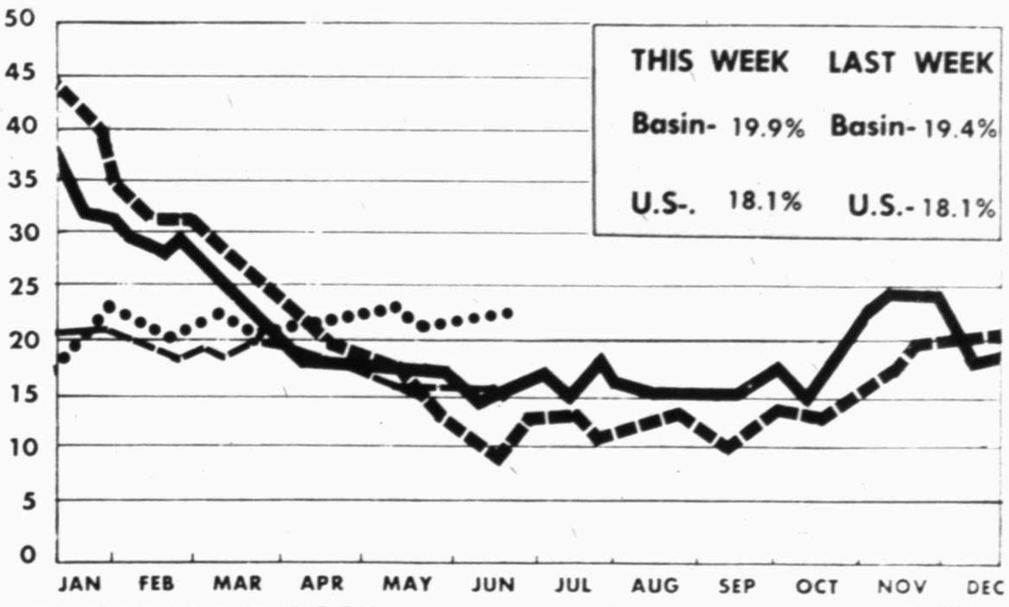
Rig Utilization



Permian Basin rig count up 12 this week

The number of working oil and gas rigs in the Permian Basin climbed by 12 to end the week at 120, according to Baker Hughes Inc. The U.S. rig count totaled 800 this week, a decline of 14 from the previous week.

Last week, the nationwide count was 814 and the Basin count was 108. The year-ago rig count in the Permian Basin was 88, and the national count was 720.

Texas had 12 fewer working rigs this week, but the decline was attributed to recent heavy rains in the area, Baker Hughes spokesman Ike Kerridge said. There also were declines in Wyoming and Kansas, but Kerridge did not know if those were weather-related.

Permian Basin activity was boosted by a 21 rig count for Lea County New Mexico. Nine rigs were making hole in Andrews County and eight were turning to the right in Yoakum County.

The rig count is considered to be the yardstick of drilling activity. Hughes Tool Co., which recently merged with Orange, Calif.-based Baker International Corp., has kept track of the number of working rigs since 1940.

Last July, the count fell to 663 — the lowest since Hughes began compiling figures — as oil prices plunged to less than $10 per 42-gallon barrel.

The rig count reached a peak in December 1981, the height of the oil boom, when 4,500 oil rigs were active.

Price rise

As the price of a barrel of oil broke the $20 mark last week, some oilmen in hard-hit energy producing states greeted the news by popping open the champagne, while others cautioned the price rise means little. A Houston Chamber of Commerce official said, "Now oil is back, our community is back and Texas is back." Although the price has slipped under the $20 mark, most industry officials agree that the key to getting domestic drilling back on the rise is tied to a degree of stability in world oil markets.

Increased Alaskan production outweighed by lower 48 decline

May crude oil production fell 358 thousand barrels per day, or 4.5 percent, year to year, but because lower world oil prices were already depressing production a year ago, the decline from the early 1986 recent year peak amounted to about 740 thousand barrels per day, according to recent reports released by the American Petroleum Institute.

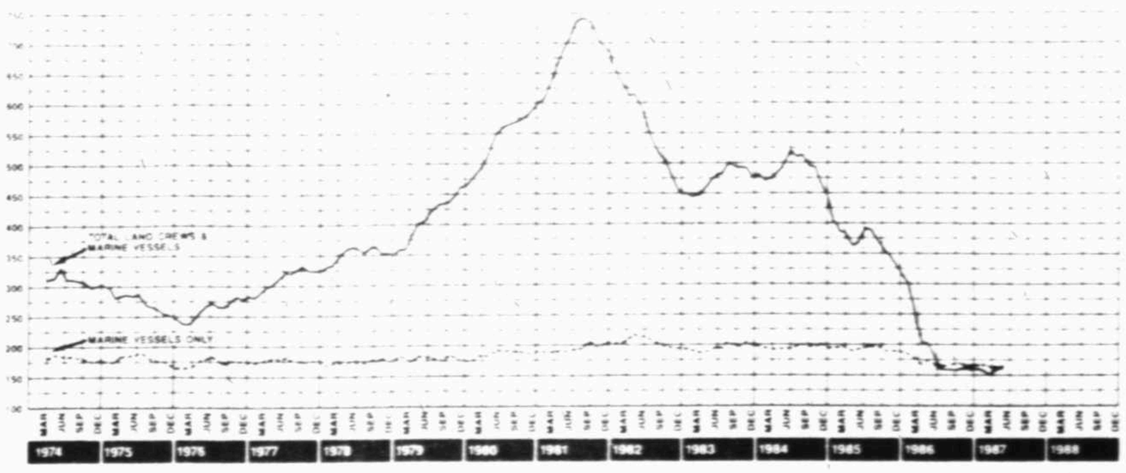
Lower 48 productions remained in the 6.4 million barrels per day range since the beginning of the year, after falling dramatically in 1986. This may indicate that the rapid fall in oil prices in 1986 quickly reduced production from existing marginal wells which had become uneconomic, the effect of reduced drilling, however, at roughly half of what it had been just prior to last year's crude oil price decline, has likely only just begun to become apparent.

The reduced production level in the lower 48 still at about 850 thousand barrels per day below the recent year peak of early 1986 has been only partially compensated for by increased Alaskan production.

Total imports in May roughly equaled those of last May, when imports were accelerating as refiners took advantage of favorable crude oil pricing terms. But while a significant portion of last May's imports went towards building inventories, this May's imports were not enough to keep inventories from falling contraseasonally as a result of lower domestic production and higher demand. Had stock movements been the same both months, this May's imports would have risen more than 1.3 million barrel per day over last May.

Crude oil imports rose close to 175 thousand barrels per day year to year, but product imports fell by a similar amount according to the API. The product decline was mainly due to a 128 thousand barrel per day drop in imports of gasoline and components to 392 thousand barrels per day.

SEISMIC CREW COUNT



According to latest reports from the Society of Exploration Geophysicists, the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and its waters showed an increase for the second consecutive month. The land crew total increased by one, while the marine crew also added one for a net increase of two crews to total 166 in May. The total represents an increase of 1 percent from last month, but a decrease of 13 percent from May 1986.

PERMIAN BASIN INDICATORS

May drilling applications fell six percent from April and were off by 39 percent from the previous year. The number of rigs running fell seven percent, and dropped 17 percent from last year. Well completions fell eight percent over the month, and 42 percent over the year.

Oil production fell one percent during the current month under review and declined nine percent since 1985. Estimated oil revenue was up 16 percent in May, while gas revenue fell two percent.

Chaplain ministers in oilpatch

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — During the oil boom of the 1970s and early '80s, he traveled 150,000 miles a year to 135 rigs in 27 countries.

He's not a geologist. Or a petroleum engineer. Or even a toolpusher.

But he's probably Parker Drilling Co.'s most popular employee.

He's an industrial chaplain. Something uncommon among large corporations. And rare in the oil industry.

"I've been doing this since 1974 and I haven't met another one yet," he says.

Meet Wishard Lemmons. Wish, to anyone who talks with or listens to this oilpatch minister.

In 1975 he almost died of a ruptured appendix on the island of Borneo. He spent four days on the critical list at a Singapore hospital. He says the incident may have been one of his greatest blessings.

"It made me vulnerable. Instead of me coming out to the rig to help all these 'poor' people, word got around in the company that you better watch out for ol' Wish 'cause he's liable to get sick or lost," he says.

"It takes a very unique person to do what we asked him to do, and Wish possesses all of the right qualities," explains Robert L. Parker Sr., the company's chairman and chief executive officer.

It was Parker, a member of Tulsa's First United Methodist Church, who put Wish on the road.

"I'm a little eccentric and he kind of liked my eccentricity," Wish says.

The two became acquainted during the 1970s when Wish was an associate minister at First Methodist, a job he still juggles with his Parker duties.

"He had been thinking about some way to improve the morale, to support employees in these awkward situations overseas," the 69-year-old Wish says. "I'm an Okie, born over here in Muskogee. And I have oil in my veins just like all Okies do even though they might not ever have seen an oil well."

Parker asked Wish to spend a week on a company rig in the jungles of Peru.

"Well, I hadn't been anywhere beyond Broken Arrow for a long time, so that was very exciting," Wish says. "But he had a qualification."

Parker told him to stay away from "churchy" duties.

"I didn't want a minister in a black suit going down there with a Bible in his hand," says Parker. "Our employees are generally very solid people. They didn't need someone to come in and tell them they were doing wrong in life. They needed someone who could relate to them and had time to listen and show some interest."

Since that first successful visit, Wish has handed out his full-color business cards to Parker employees in remote areas of India, the Sudan, Kenya, Chad and China.

"The Lord put oil in the most ungodly places. And Parker's famous for drilling excellent holes in impossible terrain," he says.

"But the stress on young families was just terrible when they'd be sent to some of these remote areas. If people have any problem at all in their personal lives, it's going to show up in the workplace sooner or later. It's directly related to the employee's production. One man can make or break an important project."

And that's where Wish says Parker's business sense shows.

"A lot of people are probably wondering what Mr. Parker's doing with a preacher on his staff. I think it's because he's a little smarter. What's going on at home has a lot to do with productivity. We're in the drilling business but we're also in the people business."

According to Parker, "We wanted employees to know that they were more than a paycheck — to show them that our company was interested in their well being."

Microwave popcorn business heating up

Orville not concerned by kernel war

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Poor Orville Redenbacher. The executives of General Mills, Pillsbury and Nabisco Brands are out to get the king of popcorn.

Their passion for popcorn — or to be more precise, microwave popcorn — is easy to understand. In the last four years, the nation has developed a seemingly insatiable appetite for microwave popcorn, making it the fastest-growing segment of the popcorn business.

Five years ago, microwave popcorn did not exist. In 1983, the first full year that microwave popcorn was available nationally, it generated retail sales of $53 million, according to Packaged Facts, a New York-based consumer research concern. Last year, consumers popped an estimated $250 million worth of the stuff, according to the Popcorn Institute, a Chicago-based trade group.

One pattern in the highly competitive packaged-snack-food industry is that, where there is demand, an abundance of supply will surely follow. Indeed, there are now five major brands slugging it out: Pillsbury's Microwave Popcorn, General Mills' Pop Secret, American Pop Corn's Jolly Time, Nabisco's Planters Premium Select and, of course, Beatrice's Orville Redenbacher's Microwave Popping Corn. Several smaller companies, including the food concern of the actor Paul Newman, have also jumped into the fray.

Calling the market "keenly competitive," Donald L. Knutzen, the general manager of the General Mills snack food division, said: "This is easily the hottest microwave product General Mills has ever introduced."

Two consumer trends are responsible for microwave popcorn's rise: the health craze and the growing popularity of microwave ovens.

Since popcorn (at least in its unadulterated form) is low in calories and sodium and high in fiber, Americans are now annually gobbling up 675 million pounds of all types, or an average of 46 quarts a person — twice the amount consumed in 1970.

With microwave ovens now in about 65 percent of households in the United States, popcorn that can be prepared in those ovens is increasingly the kind of popcorn that Americans are eating. Total popcorn retail sales (popped and unpopped) are expected to double to $2 billion by 1990. And the microwave variety, which now account for 44 percent of unpopped popcorn sold, will probably become the dominant form in its category, with retail sales of $430 million by 1990, said Dennis P. Mitchell, managing editor of Snack Food Magazine.

Given these projections, it is easy to understand why some of the biggest guns of the packaged-foods industry have entered the business.

Consumers are willing to pay an average of $2 for a package of microwave popcorn — or substantially more than the 89 cents that a much larger generic bag of regular popcorn typically costs. Even with their high technology and marketing costs, microwave-popcorn manufacturers have margins of 10 to 20 percent or more, according to several makers.

Pillsbury introduced the first popcorn geared for microwaves in 1982, when it came out with a frozen microwave popcorn. But Orville Redenbacher, the dominant power in the traditional unpopped-popcorn market, burst onto the microwave scene in 1983. By 1985, Redenbacher, a Beatrice Cos. unit, had taken the lead in the microwave segment with its butter and plain offerings.

Since then, General Mills' Betty Crocker Pop Secret has caught up with Redenbacher. Each company now holds about 26 percent of the market, measured in retail dollars.

General Mills, the major player in the $5 billion cereal business, reportedly supported its attack on the market with a $15 million national advertising budget. It promoted Pop Secret as the first popcorn appropriate for all microwave ovens — no matter what the wattage. More of Pop Secret's kernels will pop than the 2ompetition's, General Mills says.

Some of General Mills' competitors disagree — and for understandable reasons. Because packaging is pretty much the same — specially-treated, cellophane-wrapped microwave pouches — "popability" is a big deal.

Redenbacher asserts that virtually every single one of its kernels pops. Nabisco Brands USA, which became the latest entrant last May, makes the same claim for its Planters Premium Select Popcorn.

For its part, the American Pop Corn Co. is trying to distinguish its fourth-ranked Jolly Time Microwave Popcorn from the pack by noting that Jolly Time is the only microwave popcorn to contain butter.

AP LaserPhoto

With Americans' passion for both microwaves and popcorn, it is no surprise that the microwave popcorn business is heating up. Orville Redenbacher, long a favorite in the "fast popping" business, is finding the competition tough in an increasingly competitive market.

Despite the growing popularity of microwave popcorn, many in the industry are already predicting a shakeout. "Like wine coolers, two or three winners will entrench in the microwave market, which will become a big, mainstream staple," said Faith B. Popcorn, chairman of Brainreserve, a marketing consulting firm in New York. "All the others will fall into the ocean."

Indeed, with the packaged-food giants pouring huge sums into promoting their brands, the cost of competing is already steep. Beatrice spent $8.8 million last year advertising its microwave offering, up 93.9 percent from 1985, according to Leading National Advertisers, a New-York based advertising-research concern. American Pop Corn's ad expenditures have increased 51.7 percent, to $450,000. And Nabisco is about to begin a huge advertising blitz, which it hopes will reach 90 percent of American households with televisions. Nabisco will also entice buyers with trial packets and coupons.

Microwave popcorn sales may be booming, but not everyone is cheering. Makers of conventional oil and hot-air poppers saw sales fall 3.6 percent last year, according to Appliance magazine.

Hoping to tame the consumer appetite for microwave popcorn, some popper manufacturers are doing their best to point out that microwave popcorn is not so wonderful as munchers might think. While the microwave type may be easier to make, its old-fashioned cousin has no artificial flavorings or preservatives.

"Microwave popcorn is a fad," said Debra A. Kumm, manager of West Bend Co., a maker of popcorn poppers. "It will last until people read the labels and realize what chemicals microwave manufacturers put into their popcorn."

Houston firm exports fish to Scandinavia

HOUSTON (AP) — A half million Louisiana crawfish prepared by a local Sea Food firm will be shipped to Sweden and Norway, where many of the creatures probably will be consumed during a summer festival.

M. Stuart Lynn, chief executive officer of Sea Fresh Foods Inc. based in Houston, said the firm has been working nearly 24 hours a day for the past two months, cooking and freezing crawfish.

The processing plant is in the fishing community of Oak Island in southern Chambers County. The frozen crawfish will be shipped in 40-foot refrigerated containers, Lynn said.

Sweden has a market for about 7 million pounds a year of crawfish, most of which is consumed during the last two weeks of August during a festival. The rest of Scandinavia consumes 2 to 3 million pounds a year.

Sea Fresh board chairman Alan Harp found out about the opportunity last October at an annual food show in Paris. Financing for the crawfish venture came from Lloyds International Trading Company, based in New York, and a wholly owned subsidiary of Lloyds Bank In London.

Temporary jobs full-time careers for some

HOUSTON (AP) — Victoria Baron does it to build job skills. Deborah James does it for her 9-year-old son. Ann M. Munson does it to pay the rent while she builds the film career that's her first love.

Dennis Davidson, 31, turned to temporary work when a two-month job search turned up nothing. Since then, the certified electronics technician has worked nearly non-stop in a series of computer assembly jobs. This way, Davidson noted, "You don't have to take any guff."

Meet the temps — members of one of the fastest-growing segments of the American work force, and one filled with increasingly skilled and selective employees.

In the past year, nationwide temporary employment has grown by about 14 percent, compared with about 5 percent for all service industries. The number of temporary hires (including those who run the agencies) grew to an about 787,000 in 1986 from about 401,000 in 1982, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Although the numbers represent but a fraction of total U.S. employment, critics charge that rapid growth in the temporary help industry threatens to erode the full-time job base. Temps, according to 9 to 5, the National Association of Working Women, are "working at the margins" of the economy.

Nevertheless, the industry is projected to continue to grow at a rate of 5 percent annually through 1995. Among the reasons:

— Temporary services save companies money.

The company that hires through a temporary service doesn't have to pay for a temp's vacation, sick leave, retirement benefits, health insurance or severance. Kathy Miller, executive director for human resources at M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute, says benefits add up to about 39 percent over an employee's basic wage.

Thus, big companies can significantly trim payroll costs by, say, shifting employment of security or secretarial workers to a temporary agency. Or they can staff up for special projects or production rushes without the added costs of recruiting and training.

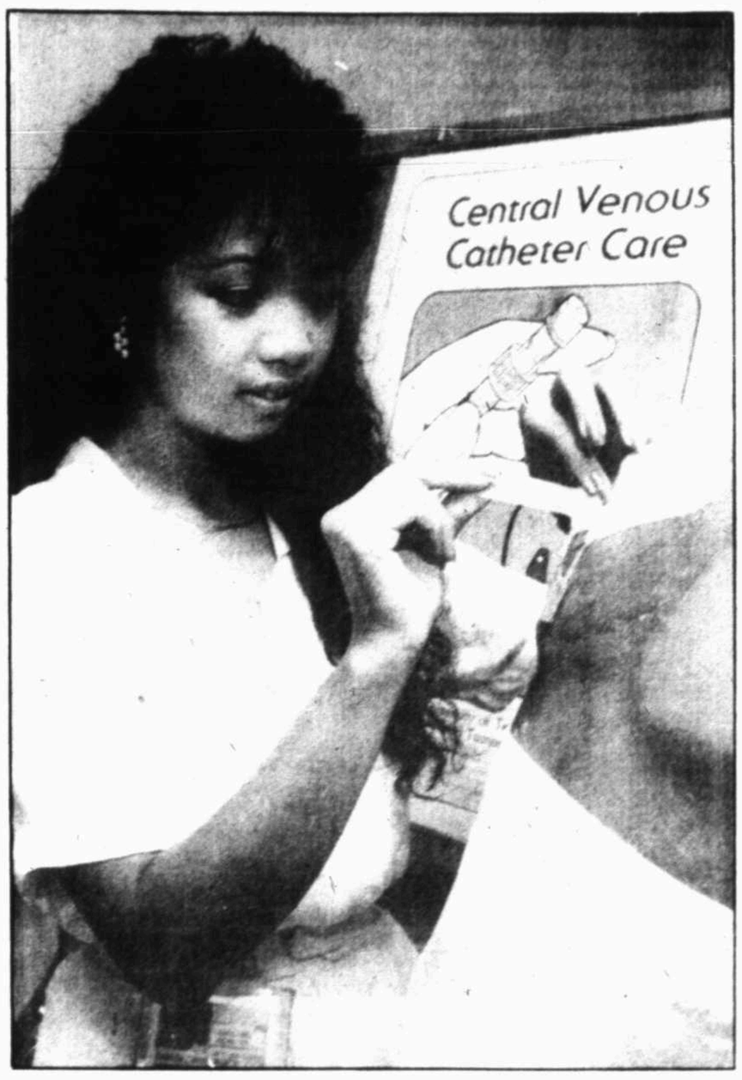
The client pays a fee to the agency, which takes a cut for itself, withdraws for the temp's Social Security, federal taxes and unemployment compensation, and then pays the worker. Although many temp firms offer group health insurance, few help pay premiums. Fewer still offer retirement plans.

— With two-paycheck families the norm, more and more workers can afford to forgo such benefits of permanent jobs. They can set up Individual Retirement Accounts and be covered under the health insurance policies offered by their spouse's permanent employer, for example.

— Workers can avoid commitments.

If she's assigned to a supervisor who turns out to be a jerk, "It's nice to be able to get and leave knowing that this person is not going to affect your salary," noted Ms. James, 32, who has made a career of temping with Temporaries Inc. during the past 10 years.

"Whenever I need time off, I don't have to explain. It doens't hurt my job performance. I'm in control," Ms. James added.



AP LaserPhoto

Some temporary workers, like Victoria Baron, take weekend jobs to expand the skills they utilize in full-time career-oriented jobs.

— Companies can duck commitments.

Houston companies have particularly warmed to the arms-length relationship they can have with a temporary worker.

"After laying off people and realizing there's still work there to do, they're pretty jaundiced about hiring full time," said Bob Rule, executive vice president for the mid-South region of Houston-based Talent Tree temporary service.

"One major company even is working with us as an outreach organization for employees being laid off," said Ken Olanyk, branch manager at Medical Personnel Pool of America, a division of H&R Block, the tax preparation company.

In ironic twists, it's sometimes n employee who was laid off or retired early that Houston companies are hiring back through the buffer of a temporary service. Top Talet Temporaries' pool includes a former personnel manager who frequently returns to the company that asked him to take early retirement some months back, for example.

"When there is any growth in the economy, our industry probably is first to show it because people are more likely to hire on a temporary basis," said Kate Tomlin, executive director of the Temporary Help Services Association of Texas, a group representing about 120 firms with offices in 250 locations throughout the state. Local employers aren't necessarily convinced the Houston economy is snapping back, but "they don't feel it's going to get any worse," Ms. Tomlin said.

Clerical workers, particularly those skilled in word processing, remain most in demand. Light industrial workers and professionals, however, account for a growing portion of local temp firms' business. The Talent Tree temporary service in Houston even has constructed a mock computer assembly line in one of its offices to test and train temporary technical hands.

"We're leaning more and more toward the professional," said Darla P. Haygood, vice president at Top Talent. Among recent requests for workers from her rolls were calls for loan processors, draftsmen, audiovisual technicians, graphic artists and accountants.

Industrial safety engineer Mario Gonzales, 28, likes the flexible hours that come with his assignment at a Bay Port chemical plant. "Basically, I can work my 40 hours whenever I want," Gonzales said. That leaves him more time to be with his sons, aged 14 months and 2½ years.

As is commong among professional-level temps, he signed on with Top Talent after learning the plant would fill the safety engineer's position through that service. Should the position become permanent, Gonzales feels he's likely to get it.

"It's a way to get in the door with a big company," said chemist Dan Jefferson. It's also a way to check out different companies, even different career paths, before picking one.

"The 'job search' syndrome now has a built-in hesitancy: Will this company survive?" said Tony Baldwin, branch manager for Personnel Pool, H&R Block's other temporary business. Jefferson, working through Baldwin's office, arranged a four-day week at Exxon that left him time to explore alternatives to continuing a career in the oil patch. He recently opted to take a permanent job selling life insurance.

Would-be film maker Ms. Munson, 28, on the other hand, turned to temporary clerical work for steady income while she tries to develop a reputation in the local commercial production business. "The money's not great (her pay averages about $5 per hour), but it's consistent and quick," she said.

Professionals such as accountant Marvin Clay, 28, can make upwards of $30 an hour on temporary assignments, according to temp service officials.

Clay joined Houston's temporary work force when his job with Gulf Oil disappeared in the firm's merger with Chevron Corp. He's been on assignment at a gas pipeline company almost since the day he signed on with Phoenix Staffing & Consulting Services Inc. last August. "It's just like I'm working for the company," Clay said.

Perhaps even better. Clay believes, because he's outside internal politics, that his ideas and suggestions are better received than they might be were he a permanent employee. "When you're a temporary, you feel a little bolder," he said.

Many companies, mindful of the information a temp might glean while working with sensitive documents or building a new product, require them to sign non-disclosure promises. Some won't hire temporary workers who have had assignments with competitors.

As a single parent, Ms. James choose a career as a temp for the freedom it gives her to schedule time with her son. She's turned down countless offers for permanent employment at the many offices where she's temporarily filled a variety of secretarial, word processing and clerical positions.

Ms. James says her pay ranges from about $6 to as high as $15 per hour, depending on the client and the job she's assigned. She's worked enough hours with Temporaries Inc. to qualify for vacation and holiday pay, and she receives referral bonuses.

Registered nurse Victoria Baron signed on with Medical Personnel Pool to expand her nursing skills. Ms. Baron, 23, works full time with an infusion therapy team at M.D. Anderson but likes her weekend assignments at other hospitals for the exposure they offer to other specialties.

And what does she do with the extra money she's earning? "I'm saving for vacation," Ms. Baron said with a laugh.

Plans made to lead steel firms from 'the slaughter'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two new legislative plans circulated at a United Steelworkers conference last week were designed to help the steel industry trim liabilities and excess capacity without more bankruptcy filings.

"The problem is that, like lambs to the slaughter, steel companies are beginning to line up and follow one another through bankruptcy," Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., told 700 local union leaders.

"We need to make it possible for the steel industry to reduce costs without going through Chapter 11," he said.

After his 30-minute speech, Heinz released to reporters a plan to help steel firms cope with labor costs associated with shutting down unneeded or antiquated equipment.

Another plan circulated at the conference is soon to be formally announced by Rep. Ben Cardin, D-Md. It would make it against the law for the foreign share of the United States steel market to exceed 20.2 percent during a five-year recovery and modernization period for U.S. firms.

Since steelworkers officials convened last year, the industry has seen a six-month work stoppage at USX Corp. and bankruptcy petitions filed by LTV Corp., parent company of LTV Steel, and Sharon Steel Corp.

Following the LTV petition in July 1986, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige announced that an interagency panel was being established to study how to keep other steel firms from making similar filings. The panel has not yet released recommendations.

Under his proposal, which has not yet been drafted into legislation, the federal government would take responsibility for a wide range of workers' benefits that typically kick in when facilities are shut down. The government's commitment would be backed by stock warrants from the steel companies, with the assumption being that the firms will return to profitability.

One of the aims of Heinz's plan is to save the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation from additional steel-related liabilities. The PBGC, essentially a government-run insurance agency, has about a $7 billion liability — 80 percent of it from steel industry failures.

The two biggest industry failures were a $2.3 billion liability at LTV Steel and nearly $500 million at Wheeling-Pittsburgh. Both companies are in bankruptcy court.

Texas' largest cities feel pinch of belt tightening

DALLAS (AP) — Residents of large Texas cities may find themselves paying more for less in the wake of budget trimming by municipal officals in an economic slump.

"The bottom has rally fallen out of the revenue side and no one's crying wolf," said Daniel Hobbs, director of the office of management and budget for Corpus Christi, which must find $4 million to cover expenses next year.

Most budget officials in eight large Texas cities, including Dallas, said last week that projected revenues are not enough to finance current programs through the next fiscal year if taxes are not raised substantially or if other types of revenues are not found.

Elected officials and paid staff members are worrying over falling revenues and the prospect of axing popular programs that their tax bases no longer can support.

In Austin, officials suggested closing down firehouses and laying off police. City employees in San Antonio will be enticed to leave with early retirement offers and municipal grounds in Fort Worth won't get their regular mowing.

Budget officials in Dallas estimate they would have to find an extra $54 million to provide the same services next year in what could be the largest city budget deficit in the state.

Officials in Houston and Austin predict they will fall $40 million short, while San Antonio needs $33 million.

The cities of Austin and San Antonio, because of smaller tax bases, would be forced to raise property taxes by a greater percentage than Dallas to keep services up to current standards.

Most of these cities are already sufferinig from several rounds of midyear budget cuts forced by plummeting sales tax revenue.

Stock market hot lines bring new meaning to 'dialing for dollars'

By LAURIE ITOW
Hearst News & Feature Service

For fans of recorded telephone messages, Dial an Atheist, Dial a Horoscope and Dial a Soap Opera Update are among the conventional fare. Now there are hot lines for stock market junkies.

Call-in stock reports, which also double as advertising for the sponsoring firms, include the 30-second Dow Jones Market Report at (900) 976-4141, and the 60-second Prudential-Bache Securities round-up at (212) 976-NEWS.

One of the newest and most expensive is Financial Information Network, which is priced at $2.55 for a four-minute spiel by Fred Fox, retail sales manager and an associate director at Bear, Stearns & Co. in San Francisco.

By dialing (900) 660-2222, a caller can hear a recording of Fox rattling off highlights from "the ticker" and other market information services. He also includes his personal assessments based on analysis and stock recommendations by his employer, Bear, Stearns.

The call costs $1.50 for the first minute and 35 cents for each additional minute for a total $2.55 per four-minute report. The 24-hour service is an offering of Castle Communications in Los Angeles in association with American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The system now receives an average of 5,000 calls daily Monday through Friday, up from 1,600 calls the first day of operation on May 4, according to Fred Horn, a Castle general partner. He says the service operates with an AT&T mainframe computer in Kansas City, Mo., which has the capability to handle as many as 7,000 calls per minute.

The computer also allows Fox to record his report by phone and to update it four times daily.

Horn says the company's goal is to generate up to 50,000 calls a day nationwide.

"The key is that it lets the small players get in on what the big players are doing," he says. "Everyone wants to be in on the action."

An American in London can call the line while his U.S. broker is sleeping, Horn says.

"You can get an update without calling your broker and having him hassle you to buy," he says.

But if you do want to talk to a broker, Fox provides a toll-free phone number to contact him at Bear, Stearns.

Fox is counting on inquiries from some well-heeled potential clients to make the venture worthwhile, he says. That's because Fox doesn't directly receive compensation for his efforts. Bear Stearns receives a "nominal fee" from Castle Communications for the use of its name and analysis, and Fox receives commissions from any business generated by the phone line, Fox says.

Since the service began, Fox says as many as 15 callers have opened accounts. He receives between 10 to 15 callers daily.

Fox says he logs his first daily report before the markets open in New York – to recap trading that occurred overnight overseas in such commodities as precious metals and currencies. Two morning updates are made, as well as a final report a half hour after the market closes. His reports, which are impromptu and not from a prepared text, are made in between serving his own clients at Bear, Stearns.

Over the next several months, Horn plans to expand the service to include commentary from other stockbrokers as well as traders of mutual funds and coin experts.

The service has been financed with about $300,000 from Castle Communications and another $200,000 from private investors. Horn declined to say how many calls the service must receive to be profitable. But he says his goal is to either take the company public or sell the operation to a larger firm within a year.

U.S. domestic electronics trade

U.S. domestic sales of electronics goods and services reached $56.1 billion during the first quarter of 1987, falling nearly 10 percent from the previous quarter's total sales. According to the American Electronics Association, fourth quarter sales are traditionally very heavy due to year-end orders and holiday buying.

Interest in AI 'thinking' computers not artificial

By CRAIG D. ROSE
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Neural computing, an approach to building computers that simulates aspects of human brain functions, spent the last two decades bench-warming in technology's dugout. The approach is now getting a chance to hit or miss, from venture capitalists investing in startups and large companies funding internal efforts to determine which problems this approach can solve.

Evidence of the growing interest in neural computing was found at the First International Conference on Neural Networking, in San Diego which attracted more than 1,400 people.

"This conference is a watershed," said Robert Hecht-Nielsen, chairman of Hecht-Nielsen Neurocomputer Corp. in San Diego and a board member of the recently organized International Neural Networking Society. "It's an underground technology that's emerging."

Hecht-Nielsen reports that late last year he began to receive frequent calls from venture capitalists doing "due diligence" and for reference checks on people working in the field. His own company, which was organized in October 1986, expects soon to announce the closing of a round of financing with investors including Battery Ventures of Boston.

A San Diego group, Avalon Ventures in La Jolla, was part of a team of venture investors putting "several million" into San Jose-based Synaptics Inc., which is attempting to develop neural computing chips. Nestor Inc., based in Providence, R.I., the first purely neural computing company to go public, raised $2 million in a stock offering in 1984 and then $5 million in a private financing in 1985.

Neural computing is moving onstage as the limitations of another technological approach — artificial intelligence (AI) — become more apparent.

Experience is teaching that AI is good at solving problems that can be strictly defined by rules. For many applications, however, such as identifying handwritten characters or continuous voice recognition, rules are difficult or impossible to develop.

"When you're not quite sure what the rules are, neural networks offer the possibility that it will do things better than AI," said John Penhume, a senior vice president at Science Applications International Corp.

Neural computing hold the promise of machines that develop their own rules for solving problems, rules that Hecht-Nielsen says no human could develop in an "affordable amount of time."

The military is particularly interested in applications such as target recognition, and has contracted neural computing work to various companies.

Researchers can use these tools to more easily investigate and possibly develop applications that will solve commercial problems efficiently, according to Penhume of SAIC.
