House cuts major weapons efforts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is counting on the Senate to rescue President Bush's defense priorities torn asunder in House votes gutting or cutting back virtually every major strategic weapons program.

In two days of votes on a $295 billion defense authorization bill, the House ignored White House and Pentagon lobbying and turned Bush's defense priorities on their head.

It restored funds for conventional aircraft discarded by the Pentagon while suspending most production of the radar-evading stealth bomber. It cut money for the Star Wars missile defense system, stripped funds intended to make the MX missile a mobile weapon and eliminated all of the $100 million provided for the Midgetman missile.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., said the House had "shredded" Bush's defense priorities to produce "a Michael Dukakis defense bill."

The Senate, meanwhile, only narrowly turned aside a strong bid to freeze research and development of the Star Wars strategic defense initiative. It tabled the amendment offered by Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., 50-47.

But that action may result in the chamber retaining needed leverage to resist House cuts on that and other weapons systems.

The Senate will need all the leverage it can muster when representatives of the two bodies meet in conference to resolve the many differences between the two bills.

Senators are to continue their consideration of the measure next week.

"We are watching the strategic position of the administration unwind step by step on the floor of the House," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"It is important that we not emasculate this program," Nunn said as the vote neared on an amendment to cut Star Wars by $558 million in addition to the $400 million trimmed earlier by the Senate panel.

"If the Senate does not come out with a reasonable budget on all strategic programs, then we are going to be going to conference in a hopeless situation," he said.

The House adopted its version of the bill, 261-162.

In the final minutes of debate, an unusual coalition of Republicans and liberals turned against the Midgetman.

Republicans were prompted by anger at an earlier vote cutting $502 million from the $1.1 billion the administration had asked for the rail lines needed to make the MX a mobile and less vulnerable weapon. Joining them were many liberal members.

Aspin appealed to members not to reject Minuteman "on a motion of spite."

But on a head-count vote of 176-90 the House approved the change, removing all the money for the single-warhead missile.

The House also revived money for the Navy's F-14D jet fighter and the Marine Corps' V-22 Osprey vertical takeoff assault transport — two programs Bush planned to eliminate as low priority items in a tight-money budget.

Summing up the result, Aspin told reporters that in effect, "Mike (Dukakis) won the election. No Midgetman. No rail MX ... Big cuts in SDI, and slow up the B-2 (stealth) bomber."

Dukakis, the Democratic governor of Massachusetts, was soundly defeated by Bush in the 1988 presidential election after a campaign in which the Republican portrayed the Democrat as weak on defense.

As Aspin saw it, the Democratic majority which controls the House carried out the defeated candidate's campaign promises in writing its version of the defense bill.

City of Midland Animal Control Director Coy Willis, left, and Permian Basin Humane Society Vice President June Dotson discussed construction of a new animal shelter Thursday night at a town hall meeting.

New pet licensing fees would fund animal shelter

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

One method of raising funds the city will employ to finance a new Animal Control shelter concerns some local veterinarians who do concur, however, the building is desperately needed.

The shelter's latest bout with the unsanitary conditions' resulting disease was the mass euthanasia of 25 dogs two weeks ago.

A group of local veterinarians met with three officials Thursday night to air opinions concerning the city's proposal to raise pet licensing fees from $4 to $5.

The additional revenue expected from the license fee hike will help subsidize construction next fall of a $400,000 new Animal Control shelter in northeast Midland.

"I don't think there is a veterinarian here who thinks we don't need a new animal facility," Dr. Tom Green said at Thursday night's meeting.

"But animal control is a concern to every citizen and not just those who comply with the law."

Green represented several veterinarians' belief that every citizen — not only pet owners — should contribute to financing construction of the new shelter.

Veterinarians in Midland include the $4 fee in animal vaccination bills to customers.

The physicians do not receive compensation for assisting the city in the annual licensing procedure in which only 30 percent of dog owners participate, officials say.

A facility to replace the 30-year-old shelter in southeast Midland has been needed for many years, Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor explained Thursday night.

A Texas Department of Health (TDH) review in early spring exposed instances of poisonous gas leaks and filthy conditions at the shelter which stands on a toxic landfill on Orchard Avenue.

Conditions are so unhealthy, 11 employees during February 1988 tallied 165 hours of sick leave, records show.

Last June, shelter employees were forced to evacuate the building 22 times because of methane, carbon monoxide and H2S gas seepage from the landfill, records show.

"It's just a sickening situation," said at-large City Council member J.D. Faircloth. "I'm concerned about the employees and I'm certainly concerned about the animals.

"I wouldn't bring my son out here because of the health situation," the councilman said Thursday night.

SSC work could begin in fall

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements is predicting construction of the super collider could begin as early as November, and backers say the high-energy physics project will bring "immediate jobs for hard pressed Texans."

The Senate agreed late Thursday to spend $225 million to begin building the particle accelerator at a site south of Dallas, while the House has voted to spend $200 million on the project in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

"Investments in basic research pay rich dividends and the Senate today made a big investment in the future of America," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas. "It's a good feeling to be over that last big hurdle, to be assured that construction will start on the SSC sometime this fall."

Clements, who met with Energy Secretary James A. Watkins for nearly an hour Thursday, said they discussed "getting construction under way. We're going to do it.

"I wouldn't be surprised if we didn't get something under way in November," Clements said. "Time is running out on us in this regard. We need to get some tangible effort out there on the site."

State of Texas lobbyist Henry Gandy said Clements is concerned there be substantial evidence that progress on the project is "well under way by next fiscal year," when debate begins on fiscal 1991 funding for the high-energy physics project.

Funds for the collider were included in an $18.4 billion energy and water appropriations package that passed the Senate by voice vote.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, called the project "a daring project of almost unimaginable scope."

MCHD foresees higher taxes, bigger budget

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

A tax hike for the Midland County Hospital District could accompany a bolstered hospital budget during the 1989-90 fiscal year, Board President Margaret Purvis said Thursday.

The additional levy probably would go beyond that needed to equal the past year's district revenues, used strictly for indigent care patients, Ms. Purvis said.

Because the district tax base's value dropped from $3.96 billion last year to $3.74 billion — a 6 percent decrease — it would take a hike of from 12.48 cents per $100 valuation to 13.22 cents just to bring in the 1989-90 funds.

"We need as many dollars as we did this year, plus a few," Ms. Purvis said, adding that it has not been specified how high the tax rate could go.

The director said projections show an increased number of indigent patients during the coming year. In addition, physicians handling the patients will be paid a minimum amount for their services, she said.

The doctors in the past have been paid about $2,000 strictly for malpractice insurance coverage. The amount of proposed additional pay has not been set.

"Our thinking is that with the indigent population growing, it is an unfair burden to the physicians to carry that 100 percent free," Ms. Purvis said.

In some cases, only a handful of specialists — or even one — must attend to all indigent cases in their specialty areas, she said.

The district was $2.2 million in debt to Midland Memorial Hospital after the 1986-87 fiscal year, forcing directors to raise taxes from 8 cents per $100 valuation to 12 cents.

Odessa schools have higher student loan default rate

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Too many trade schools are making high-risk loans to low-income students who have little chance of paying back the money, a state agency reported.

Three Odessa institutions had higher than average default rates, the report showed, while Midland College had a non-payment rate that was less than half the statewide average for community colleges.

In a letter to Gov. Bill Clements, Joe L. McCormick, executive director of the Texas Guaranteed Student Loan Corp., said the agency is alarmed by the rise in default rates, particularly in private, for-profit trade and commercial schools.

In many cases, "These schools offer a questionable quality of training which leads the unsuspecting students into large student loan debts ... and not to the high paying jobs the schools advertised," said the accompanying report, written by McCormack.

23-year-old Midland man charged with four counts of sexual assault

From Staff Reports

A 23-year-old Midland man is free on bond today after being charged with the sexual assault of two young boys. The charges against Roger Dale Sanders, a Big Brothers/Big Sisters volunteer, did not involve youngsters in that program.

Sanders, 2910 Michigan Ave., turned himself over to detectives at about 2:30 p.m. Thursday.

He was arraigned on two counts of indecency with a child and two of aggravated sexual assault.

Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe set Sanders' bond at $1,000 on each count.

'Tree wizard' claims 'cure' killed Treaty Oak

AUSTIN (AP) — The battle of the poisoned Treaty Oak goes on, with a self-described tree wizard claiming the centuries-old majestic oak is dead and city forestry experts disagreeing.

The wizard, who rode to the rescue from his home in Pennsylvania on $1,000 raised by friends, said the city's latest antidote "was the final nail in the coffin."

"I felt the spirit of the tree leave," said Stephen Redding, 42, of Green Lane, Pa., who stayed near the tree for six days, sleeping on a park bench.

City officials Thursday insisted the tree is clinging to life and that their rescue attempts were devised by experts.

> "If that tree is alive a year from now, I'll invite the public to throw rotten tomatoes at me."
> — Stephen Redding, 'tree wizard'

The tree was poisoned at least four months ago with an herbicide. A 45-year-old man has been charged with felony criminal mischief in what authorities say was a ritual poisoning.

The tree is called Treaty Oak because legend has it that Texas patriarch Stephen F. Austin made peace with Indians under its branches.

John Giedraitis, city forester, and several experts ordered the injection of a saltwater solution into Treaty Oak in more than 100 places earlier this week to offset the herbicide, Velpar.

"The tree has huge amounts of poison in it," Giedraitis said.

Experts decided to use the saltwater solution after tests showed twigs on the tree had no carbohydrates, or energy reserves, he said.

He said the injection process is standard technology.

Redding, who says he owns a tree maintenance business, said the treatment hurt the tree.

"In my opinion that oak expired at 5:20 p.m. Tuesday," when the crews started injecting the solution, he said.

He also complained that the city applied sewer sludge around the roots. But Giedraitis said the sludge is a mild organic fertilizer that to trees is like "chicken broth."

Geidraitis said Redding is a tree lover, but "he doesn't understand what is exactly going on in the tree. He's a little on the wrong track."

Redding said, "If that tree is alive a year from now, I'll invite the public to throw rotten tomatoes at me."

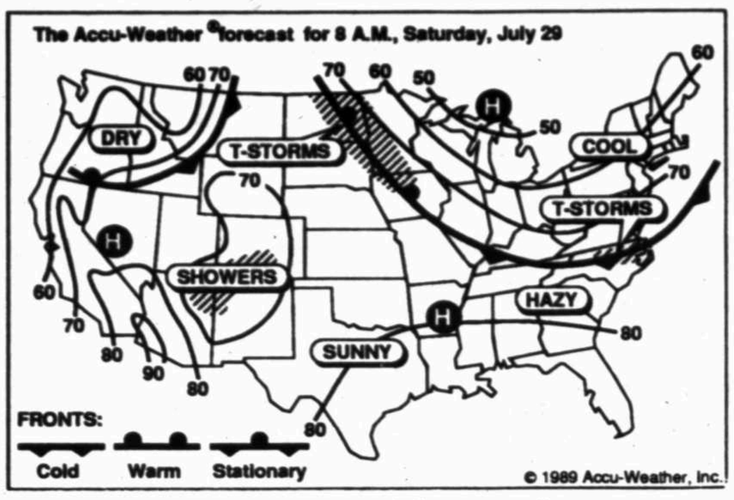
WEATHER SUMMARY



Forecast remains about the same

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies with a less than 20 percent chance of evening thunderstorms turning to fair is in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 60s and light winds will be from the southeast.

Saturday is expected to be much the same with partly cloudy skies and a less than 20 percent chance of late afternoon thunderstorms. The high will be in the middle 90s and winds will be southerly 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 87 was 19 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 106 set for that date in 1954. The overnight low of 66 was five degrees warmer than the record low of 61 set for this date in 1933.

STATE

Clouds dotted skies across the state today as a high pressure system continued to gain strength to the northeast, sending temperatures back into more seasonable 90s and signalling an end to a brief reprieve from hot weather.

Much of the state was cooled by a light southerly breeze while the coast and trans-Pecos had variable winds.

Humidity remained high as moisture stagnated over the state.

Temperatures rose into the 70s across the state by 4 this morning, signalling a return to hot, humid seasonable weather across much of Texas.

The National Weather Service said the weather should be partly cloudy and warmer through Saturday. Widely scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms and higher humidity levels were forecast.

Highs were expected to reach into the 90s across Texas except along the coast, where readings should stay in the 80s, the NWS said.

Parts of West Texas, particularly the mountains, were expected to remain about 10 degrees cooler than the rest of the state.

NATION

Scattered thunderstorms along the mid-Atlantic Coast early today produced high winds and drenched several areas, while forecasters predicted a slight break in the Northeast's heat.

Nearly 3 inches of rain fell in Meridian, Miss., in less than two hours late Thursday. Scattered thunderstorms lingered over parts of Ohio, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida early this morning.

Thunderstorms developing ahead of a cold front crossing the Great Lakes region weakened Thursday night.

Earlier, the storms produced large hail and damaging winds in Wisconsin and Illinois.

In the Northeast, thunderstorms produced severe weather in New York and Vermont.

Hail the size of dimes fell in Ira, Vt., while in the northern part of the state, winds gusted to 58 mph at Milton. Also in Vermont, winds blew down trees in at least five northern communities, including Stowe.

Evening thunderstorms in New York produced high winds that downed trees and power lines at Rensselaer, while thunderstorms in Massachusetts downed trees at Pittsfield.

Inventive Texas student third-time winner

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Sachin Patel, an 11-year-old Texas student and a wizard with fiber optics, has won his second national award in three winning years of participation in the "Invent America" competition.

The fourth grader from Flatonia, Texas, whose parents immigrated from India, invented an indoor lighting system using fiber optics. The system relies on sunlight and can transmit light for use indoors during the day.

The Invent America contest encourages an inventive spirit among schoolchildren. Students in more than 30,000 U.S. schools participated in this year's competition.

Last year, Patel was a regional Invent America winner for his invention of a transportation system based on superconductivity. In 1987, he was a national winner with a solar energy device.

Patel's parents own and operate a motel, restaurant and gasoline service station in Flatonia, a small town between Houston and San Antonio. He was born in Baltimore, Md.

During award ceremonies here on Thursday, J. Morgan Greene, chairman of the Invent America Foundation, introduced the youngster as "Doctor Patel," and predicted he will become an accomplished scientist.

Patel's invention earned him $1000 in bonds and will also result in grants totaling $3,750 for his teacher, Theresa Wagner, and his school, Saint Rose Catholic School in Schulenburg, Texas.

Nine national winners — one each for grades from kindergarten through eighth — were named at the awards lunch from among 45 regional winners attending. Each won weeklong expense-paid trips here with their parents and teachers.

Invent America awards grants to winning schools and teachers at state, regional and national levels. These grants allow other teachers at the winning schools to receive training and attend conferences.

Greene named C. Gilbert Rowe, an enrichment and gifted resource teacher at Dommerich Elementary School in Orange County, Fla., as national outstanding educator of the year. He will serve as spokesman for Invent America for the next year.

In addition to Patel, the national student winners included:

■ Erin Amos, kindergarten, Tecumsah Elementary School, Tecumsah, Nebraska, for "Thumb Huggers," a device that she said keeps her company in bed so she doesn't have to suck her thumb.

■ Nina Zimmerman, first grade, Anderson School, Bozeman, Mont., for a pencil holder that encourages students to hold their pencils or crayons in a position that helps them write better.

■ David Sharp, second grade, Halmstad Elementary School, Chippewa Falls, Wis., for an invention called "Slick-Stick" that he says "gives people who use a cane freedom to walk on most surfaces with just the touch of a button."

■ Jeff Meredith, third grade, Hoover Elementary School, Council Bluffs, Iowa, for "Roller Savers," a protector for roller skate wheels used outside that can be removed for skating inside or at a rink.

■ Casey Golden, Bergen Elementary School, Evergreen, Colo., for the "Bio-D-Tee," a biodegradable golf tee. "If the Bio-D-Tee is broken during the tee shot," explained Casey, "it stays on the grass and will degrade when the grass is watered." He also suggested placing grass seeds inside the tee to help seed a golf course turf.

■ Brad Bolerjack, sixth grade, Luther J. Schilling School, Lockport, Ill., for "Jables Careful Jumper Cables." He says his invention prevents electrical current from passing through jumper cables, used to start stalled automobiles, until the "male" and "female" outlets are connected.

■ Dylan Wiley, seventh grade, Dunstan Junior High, Lakewood, Colo., for an invention called "The Double Feature." It weighs down a theater seat while raising its height so a small child can see over adult heads in front.

As examples, the report said, one student paid more than $5,000 to take a 300-hour truck driving course, only to be told by the Texas Department of Public Safety after she completed the course that she was ineligible for a license because she has only one foot, the report said.

In another case a school in Houston sent buses and recruiters to homeless shelters in Dallas, San Antonio and New Orleans to enroll students with the promise of free housing and a living allowance.

When, after a few weeks, the living allowance ran out, state officials, responding to the complaint of a local food bank deluged with students from the school, found classrooms lacked equipment and instructors had inadequate training.

Default rates have increased at what the report called "alarming rates" during the past three years, particularly among proprietary schools. "During the first eight months of this year, 48.6 percent of defaulted claims paid by TGSLC have been on loans made to students attending proprietary schools."

The agency found the proprietary schools enroll a significantly higher percentage of lower income, female and minority students than traditional four-year universities and two-year community colleges.

But the agency also found that of 76 schools participating in the student loan program in Texas with default rates of 30 percent or above, 64 are proprietary schools.

While the Texas report outlined problems with schools, it also noted that many proprietary schools support the efforts to address the default rates and have asked for assistance in developing plans to reduce default rates on their campuses.

Among two-year schools, where the average default rate was 21.71 percent as of March 31, Odessa College had a default rate of 23.15 percent, with $1 million in mature guaranteed loans, Howard County Junior College in Big Spring had a 13.69 percent default rate, with $996,043 in mature loans, and Midland College had a 10.41 percent default rate, with $340,044 in mature loans.

Among four-year and upper division schools, where the average default rate was 8.38 percent, the University of Texas of the Permian Basin had an 8.87 percent default rate, with $779,379 in mature loans.

Among proprietary schools, where the average default rate was 20.12 percent, American Commercial College of Odessa had a 24.46 percent default rate, with $1,279,894 in mature loans, the only local school above the state average.

The corporation, which the Legislature created in 1979 to administer the third largest student loan program in the country, has begun its own efforts to address the default rates, but the report recommends better oversight of the loan program, with tighter rules that would reduce loopholes, while Congress should enact legislation U.S. Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos has proposed to address fraud and abuse in the loan programs.

The agency, which will guarantee more than $800 million in Texas loans this year, has no authority to investigate the quality of a school's curriculum, although it can ensure that the school is administering the loan program correctly.

The loans are made by private lenders to student borrowers who attend postsecondary educational institutions, from traditional four-year colleges and universities to two-year community colleges and private trade and technical schools.

Congress established the Guaranteed Student Loan Program in 1965 as a minimally subsidized loan program for middle class families. During the 1980s, however, Congress restricted the subsidized loans to students who could show need. The new requirements changed the population served by the loan program to very low-income needy students, virtually eliminating students from middle-income families.

Almost 90 percent of the students receiving loans in Texas this year came from families with incomes below $30,000 a year, with 55 percent of them coming from family incomes below $10,000 a year.

The late 1980s also saw a dramatic shift in the mix of schools served by the loan program in Texas, from 73 percent going to four-year schools in 1986 to 61 percent going to trade schools as of May 1989.

Proprietary schools also have more than doubled their participation in the subsidized loan program, from 167 schools in 1985 to 347 currently.

The agency noted "a dramatic and alarming trend in which an increasing number of guaranteed student loans are being made to high-risk students from low-income families attending private trade and technical schools."

Some schools expand the number of course hours required for a subject to qualify for government loans. The report noted that while the Houston Community College offers a two-week course to qualify for a private investigator license to meet the state requirement of 40 hours of instruction, some proprietary schools require 300 hours of instruction — the minimum hours required for students to receive guaranteed loans.

Proprietary schools also charge significantly higher tuition and fees than two-year public colleges offering similar courses, the agency found. In the example of the private investigator's course, the community college charged $70 while a commercial school would charge between $2,000 and $4,000 for the course.

The schools often refuse to divulge basic information concerning student completion rates, dropout rates and tuition and fees to prospective students.

Many are "franchise institutions" owned by individuals in other states. Texas branch campuses often are not fully staffed and are unable to provide students with sufficient information or guidance. Some recruiting and admissions practices are misleading and confusing and border on fraud, the report suggests.

HOSPITAL

"Prior to this year we had a volume (of indigent patients) that wasn't anticipated," Ms. Purvis said. "Plus we didn't bite the bullet and raise the tax sufficiently.

"Last year we knew we had to raise the taxes and not burden the patients in the hospital."

Increased health care costs, she said, also contributed to the volume of red ink.

However, Purvis said the district will finish $400,000 over projections when the 1988-89 fiscal year ends in September. The money will be used to put a dent in the district's debt to the hospital, she said.

In a move to help taxpayers, the district will not levy taxes on boats, recreational vehicles and aircraft used only for pleasure, directors said.

During the recent legislative session, lawmakers passed a bill allowing entities to tax the pleasure crafts only if a public hearing is held.

Purvis said taxing those items within the district would bring in only $19,000. She said losing community "goodwill" would be far more costly to the district than the loss of money.

Directors at a monthly meeting Thursday previewed a proposed 1989-90 MMH budget which reflects $11.5 million more in projected revenues over the past year. The $87.8 million in 1989-90 estimated revenues is anticipated to be $2 million over expected operating expenses.

Figures show MMH ending this fiscal year with an extra $2.2 million over total expenses, with the hospital revenues totaling $76.3 million.

"That money goes into continually upgrading equipment," MMH spokesperson Laurie Johnson said of the extra revenues. 'It's generated back into the hospital."

The proposal also includes hikes in room rates and employee salaries.

Daily private room rates would be raised from $215 to $225, semiprivate from $210 to $220, intensive care from $495 to $525, telemetry from $425 to $450, pediatrics and oncology from $235 to $250 and rehabilitation unit from $278 to $305.

Room rates for two new additions, the skilled nursing unit and neonatal intensive care unit, will be set at $150 and $600, respectively.

The budget also includes $453,010 in salary hikes for nurses and thereapists.

A registered nurse's average hourly rates would increase from $14.35 to $15.07, while a licensed vocational nurse would see a raise of from $9.43 per hour to $9.90.

The average salary for respiratory therapists would rise from an $12.83 per hour to $13.47, while physical therapists would go from $18.16 to $19.07.

MMH President Ray Branson said that although operating expenses will continue to climb, revenues still should outpace them.

"Health care is a real growth field in Midland," Branson said, adding that it is also one of the best economic diversification strategies.

Johnson said the additional costs and revenues also include Clearview Hospital, which wasn't in the 1988-89 budget, and a projected increase in patient stays. The budget also reflects 7.5 percent inflation in pharmaceuticals and medical supplies.

Directors and MMH administrators will continue studying the budget through August. It is slated to go before MMH board members and district directors at an Aug. 31 meeting.

Veterinarians said they are concerned that their customers will think it is an industry increase in the price of vaccinations.

They are less concerned with the actual $1 increase, said Dr. Greg Adkins, a member of the city's Animal Control Advisory board.

"People will perceive the veterinarian has raised his price during a time of economic hardship," Green pointed out.

McGregor told veterinarians Thursday night "there will never be a good economic time" to build the shelter.

"At least consider our side," the deputy city manger implored of the doctors.

"We're having to evacuate that building for the safety of our people."

The shelter essentially is rotting away, Animal Control Director Coy Willis explained Thursday night.

Walls and the foundation is cracked in many instances because of the shifting landfill underneath. Drainage is worst at best and harbors disease, the director continued.

"This is what scares me more than anything else," Willis said Thursday night pointing out shoddy drainage systems which border the animal pens.

"We have the conditions to grow any kind of bacteria here you want."

When a dog was infected two weeks ago with what Willis believed was "kennel cough," 25 contaminated dogs had to be killed so shelter employees could spray bleach and other disinfectants throughout the facility, he said.

Plans call for the construction of a 7,700-square foot shelter near the intersection of Loop 250 and the proposed extension of Lamesa Road. The site is west of Angel Stadium.

Willis is elated at the thought of a new shelter.

The facility will be ultimately be financed with general fund or animal control shelter licensing and fee revenues, Faircloth explained.

In the meantime, the construction contractor or a bank may provide interim financing, the councilman explained.

Veterinarians will support construction, they said Thursday night, but will inform their customers the $1 increase is a function of city policy.

ASSAULT

Police said the arrest stemmed from an incident that allegedly occurred July 17 involving two boys between the ages of nine and 11 and not connected to the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program.

In a statement released today Linda Macias, executive director of Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Midland, said "Based on the allegations that have been made and the charges that were filed, Mr. Sanders' role as a volunteer 'Big Brother' was terminated Thursday," an action taken in accordance with the organization's national and local policies.

In regard to the charges against Sanders, Ms. Macias expressed the organization's regret and stressed that all program volunteers undergo an extensive background investigation.

Police spokesman Cpl. Jim White gave no other details, but indicated today that the investigation could involve other possible vicitims.

"The implications for this investment in terms of transportation and medicine and science and productivity, in thousands of new products and millions of new jobs, cannot be measured today," Gramm said.

"This was a major investment in America's future, that creates immediate jobs for hard pressed Texans and the research that comes from it will create jobs for America's future, increase our productivity, and help restore our technological leadership. And I'm exuberant," Bentsen said after the vote.

In a statement, Clements said the Senate's decision "moves us one step closer to ensuring our country remains on the cutting edge of high-energy physics."

Under the Senate version of the bill, foreign participation in construction of the $4.4 billion project at a site south of Dallas would have to be reviewed by the administration.

The Appropriations Committee imposed the restrictions after some senators questioned whether participation by foreign countries might jeopardize the contributions of U.S. industry.

Differences in the House and Senate versions of the bill will be worked out in a conference committee that could meet as early as next week.

"What we are doing today is taking the next logical step toward building a machine that will be a quantum jump in terms of our capacity to understand the nature of matter," Gramm told the Senate.

Gramm called the super collider a "great, new, magnificient machine" and said it will give the country the ability to test new ideas and use them in research that can be "industrialized and made commercial not by government, but by the private sector economy."

Gramm said the collider, over the next several decades, would make the country more competitive and would raise the standard of living.

Study shows health workers fail to protect themselves from AIDS

CHICAGO (AP) — Hospital workers are doing too little to protect themselves from the AIDS virus, even though one in 16 emergency-room patients was found to be infected at a major medical center last year, a study has found.

Health workers failed to take adequate precautions, such as wearing gloves, masks and gowns, 66 percent of the time during a six-week study period in the emergency room at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, researchers said.

The failure rate for taking precautions rose to more than 80 percent when patients were bleeding rapidly, said the researchers, led by Dr. Gabor D. Kelen of the hospital's emergency department.

Many of the workers — who included doctors, nurses and technicians — said putting on protective gear was too difficult or time-consuming, or they believed the gear might get in their way, the researchers said.

Such responses were made even though it had been reported that 5.2 percent of emergency-room patients at Johns Hopkins were infected with the AIDS virus in 1987, up to 6 percent by 1988, the researchers said.

The AIDS virus is believed to be passed mainly through sexual intercourse and the sharing of contaminated hypodermic needles among drug abusers. But health-care workers are in danger of catching it from needle pricks, blood sprayed to the eyes, nose or mouth or from getting infected fluids on skin cuts.

At least 169 health care workers nationwide have become infected with the virus through contact with patients, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Johns Hopkins had tried to educate staffers at all levels about the need to wear protective clothing.

New AIDS drug called powerful weapon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Early tests of a new AIDS drug are so promising that federal scientists are expressing hope it may become a powerful new weapon against the epidemic that now numbers 100,000 cases.

Scientists say they hope to start an expanded second phase of tests this fall and perhaps have the drug available for wide use next year.

Phase I trials, described in a report published today in the journal Science, showed that the drug, called DDI, controlled the growth of the AIDS virus and enabled patients to gain weight, feel better and develop some resistance to infection.

"This is not a cure for AIDS," said Dr. Robert Yarchoan, a National Cancer Institute researcher who helped direct the Phase I trials. "But it appears to control the disease."

The number of AIDS cases reached the 100,000 mark in recent weeks, the Centers for Disease Control said, and 58,014 AIDS patients had died as of June 30. No one is known to have recovered from the disease.

DDI, laboratory shorthand for 2',3'-dideoxyinosine, combats AIDS by blocking reproduction of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) which causes the disease. This action is similar to AZT, or zidovudine, the only drug now approved to directly treat AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"Like AZT, it (DDI) appears to reduce the replication of the virus and controls the disease," Yarchoan said in an interview. "It can keep the virus from replicating, but it can't rid the body of the virus."

Yarchoan said NCI researchers hope to receive Food and Drug Administration approval by September to start Phase II clinical trials involving some 1,000 patients and 20 centers around the country.

He said these trials could last six months to a year, and, if they go well, could lead to FDA approval for wide use of DDI.

The journal Science said that after the new clinical trials are underway, DDI manufacturer Bristol-Myers hopes to distribute the drug without charge to patients who are in critical need. No agreement for this distribution has been reached with the FDA, however, the magazine said.

Yarchoan said DDI's action of blocking reproduction of the AIDS virus enables patients to recover some ability to fight infection. This could prolong life since most AIDS patients die because immune systems weakened by the HIV virus cannot combat infection.

DDI, said Yarchoan, has important advantages over AZT: it is less toxic, better tolerated by patients, and needs to be taken only two or three times a day. AZT must be taken six times daily without fail, which requires patients to awaken during the night.

Yarchoan said the clinical trials of DDI started 47 weeks ago for 26 patients. Five patients, who earlier were taking a closely related compound called DDA, were added later.

"We started at very low doses and as the patients tolerated each dose we worked our way up," Yarchoan said. "After the first four doses, we found hints of activity, but nothing that was too substantial.

"But in our fifth dose, we found very consistent improvement in immunologic function and at the same time evidence that the amount of virus in the people was going down," he added.

Meanwhile, a coalition of activists on Thursday said government inaction regarding AIDS threatens to isolate people with the disease and overburden the nation's health-care system.

"The greatest threat we face may not be the virus itself but the complacency we see around us," said Jean McGuire, executive director of the AIDS Action Council and head of the National Organization Responding to AIDS.

The groups called for federal anti-discrimination protections for people with AIDS, more aggressive health-care planning and more money for research and early intervention efforts with life-prolonging therapies.

The federal government is spending about $1.3 billion this year on AIDS research, prevention and education. President Bush proposed to spend $1.6 billion in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, but the groups said more is needed.

Science is the journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Coauthors of the paper were Yarchoan, Samuel Broder, Hiroaki Mitsuya, Rose V. Thomas, James M. Pluda, Neil R. Hartman, Carlo-Federico Perno, Kathy S. Marczyk and David G. Johns, all of NCI, and Jean-Pierre Allain of Abbott Laboratories.

Tests show genetic disorders may be diagnosed by blood

BAR HARBOR, Maine (AP) — Researchers have isolated fetal cells from pregnant women's bloodstreams, suggesting it should be possible to diagnose genetic disorders in a fetus simply by taking a blood sample from the mother.

If the preliminary finding of fetal cells in mother's bloodstreams is confirmed, it should be possible to do the same kind of genetic tests on those fetal cells as are now done on fetal tissue samples obtained through amniocentesis. That procedure involves the withdrawal of some of the fluid surrounding the fetus.

Making the diagnosis from a blood sample would eliminate the small risk associated with amniocentesis, the researchers said.

The method, however, cannot be used to screen for Down's syndrome and other disorders in which the chromosomes must be examined under a microscope, because the fetal cells isolated from the mother's bloodstream do not allow chromosome diagnosis.

The method could be useful for diagnosing such disorders as sickle cell anemia, cystic fibrosis and phenylketonuria, in which the precise genetic defect is known, the study's authors said.

In those cases, the genetic defect can be detected chemically, and examination of chromosomes under a microscope is unnecessary.

Researchers have known that fetal cells could occasionally break off of the placenta and get into a pregnant woman's bloodstream. But no one had demonstrated that this occurred often enough so that fetal cells could be routinely found in the mothers' blood.

The study, headed by Dr. Diana Bianchi of Boston Children's Hospital, shows that the fetal cells can be regularly isolated from mothers' blood, but not 100 percent of the time.

That accuracy must be improved, and it may be some years before the method is reliable enough for routine use, Bianchi said in a telephone interview.

Furthermore, researchers need better ways to be certain that the cells they isolate are from the fetus, she said Thursday.

Bianchi's results will be discussed Saturday at a meeting of geneticists at the Jackson Laboratory in Bar Harbor. She presented preliminary findings at a meeting in Washington of the Society for Pediatric Research in May and has submitted more detailed findings for publication in a medical journal.

Dr. Laird Jackson of Thomas Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia said that Bianchi's research provides the most convincing evidence yet that a blood sample from the mother can be used to diagnose fetal disorders. He noted, however, that the method is not yet perfected.

Bianchi and her colleagues, who sampled the blood of four pregnant women, said looking for the fetal cells was far worse than looking for a needle in a haystack. The mothers' blood contained roughly one fetal cell for every billion mothers' cells.

"You're really at the limits of technology," Bianchi said.

Toilets, sinks pledged to Mississippi town

BLUE HILL, Miss. (AP) — This poverty-stricken rural town has received pledges of toilets, sinks and bathtubs from Florida to Alaska for residents who only a few days ago had to haul water from a muddy creek.

"We've come a long way in a short time, but we've still got a long way to go," said Janie Cole, who with her husband have led a decade-old fight to bring the community of about 40 homes into the 20th century. "It's a warm feeling to know people still care about each other."

Running water came only a week ago to the town of weathered shacks and mobile homes sprinkled along a twisting gravel road in southwest Mississippi.

Until then, most residents hauled water from a creek or collected rainwater from rooftops.

Federal money was used to pipe water into the community, and appeals by Cole and others resulted in a donations to pipe the water from the main line along the road to front porches of each home.

But there progress has stopped.

"There are about 20 homes that have no inside plumbing, so they are still getting their water for cooking and bathing from the outside tap," Cole said.

"Many of these people are old and they have no money to take care of the problem themselves," said Cole, whose family has a private well. "Without help, there is litle they can do."

News coverage focused on the community's plight resulted in at least 25 calls from groups and individuals offering donations of fixtures and money, Cole said.

"A man in Florida has said he may provide water heaters, a woman with an advertising agency in Kentucky pledged commodes, and a man in Ohio has said he can help us with fixtures and possibly to install sewer lines," she said.

If the pledged fixtures show up, the major need would be plumbing work for the homes, obtaining fittings to install fixtures and a sewage system.

Perhaps the most impressive offer, Cole said, came from officials with the Alaska State Housing Authority.

"We have 150 substandard, low-income housing units we are demolishing and replacing them with newer units and as a result we will have fixtures and items we will be surplusing," said Ray Price, the authority's executive director in Anchorage. "Rather than put these items in the shelf or auction them off, we felt it would be best to send them down to those who need them.

"As you know, our state has been through some tough times the last few years and we have rural communities here — we are not oblivious to what these guys are going through."

Mike Wadell, the authority's project manager, said officials were negotiating with Federal Express to transport tubs and other fixtures to Memphis, Tenn., and with a truck line to haul them to Blue Hill.

"You really don't think people care that much any more but now you see that they just needed to be made aware of your problems," said Mary Moore, who is raising her three sons in a mobile home in Blue Hill.

Moore said water had been piped inside her trailer "and you cannot believe how thrilled we are. But we are the lucky ones."

John W. Engerd, who owns a furniture plant and store in Berlin, Ohio, called offering his help with plumbing and fixtures, but said he may end up financing septic tanks and field lines.

"There are always people heading to South America or somewhere else to help out, " Engerd said. "When I read about their problems, I thought it would do more good to help someone right here at home."

Official says Bloch admitted Soviets paid him 'a lot of money'

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Felix S. Bloch, the State Department official under investigation for espionage, told the Federal Bureau of Investigation in his one brief interview that he had been paid "a lot of money" by the Soviet Union, an official involved in the case said on Thursday.

Bloch, the former No.2 official in the U.S. Embassy in Vienna, also said that he had been working with the Soviets for "many years," the official said.

But Bloch refused to elaborate on any possible espionage activities, or on his motives, the official said, and the gOvernment lacked sufficient corroboration for a prosecution. A sweeping investigation is said to be under way.

In Washington, several government officials who have been briefed on the case said they were not aware of any such admission by Bloch. One said he doubted that the FBI had in hand an explicit admission about money and said that the question of motivation remained unanswered.

An official said that Bloch's activities first came to the attention of American intelligence officials in a tip before Bloch travelled to Europe last month.

During the visit, he was reportedly videotaped by French counterintelligence officials while passing a briefcase to a Soviet agent. Bloch was reportedly tipped off later about the investigation.

Counterintelligence experts said that they believed that the 54-year-old career diplomat, who was placed on leave from his administrative post on June 22, was first recruited as a spy about 15 years ago while serving in Berlin, government officials said.

Bloch has not been charged in the case and has refused to make any comment directly or through his lawyer.

He moved on Thursday from his parents' apartment on the East Side of Manhattan to a daughter's house in Chappaqua, N.Y., in Westchester County, under heavy FBI surveillance.

One official who had been briefed on the case gave this account:

American officials were initially told that Bloch had been detected in contact with the KGB as long as three years ago, but they now discount the information.

Actually, they said, his activities first came to attention last month. Information provided to the FBI prompted major interest in a trip Bloch was making from his home in Washington to Europe.

The FBI prepared to mount a quick surveillance operation and, because the target was a State Department official traveling overseas, notified congressional intelligence panels and foreign intelligence services.

Somehow, the information was disclosed, the official said.

American counterintelligence eavesdropping picked up a Soviet agent warning Bloch: "A bad virus is going around, and we believe you are now infected."

Agents of the FBI subsequently sought to interview Bloch and he consented, the official said, admitting that he had worked with the KGB "many years" and that they "paid me a lot of money."

But the official said that the agents were unable to obtain further information. The agents also sought and obtained permission to search Bloch's home but found nothing incriminating.

Calico cat ordained as minister

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Teddy is an ordained minister who can perform religious services, marry people and baptize them — provided he doesn't get distracted by a mouse.

Teddy happens to be a calico cat who got a preacher's credentials after the Better Business Bureau in Huntsville decided to check out a mail-order business.

Kathleen Calligan, Teddy's owner and the president of the Huntsville Better Business Bureau, said she spotted an ad in a free-circulation newspaper for United Christian Church and Ministerial Association in Cleveland, Tenn.

Ms. Calligan filled out an application for her cat, mailed in $20 cash and waited about a month. Teddy received his preacher's license last week by return mail.

Ms. Calligan stressed that nothing illegal was found with the way United ordains people, or pets. But she added that she sent in the bogus application to point out the nature of the business.

"I don't want to say this is good or this is bad, but they just ordained a cat. This could be Charles Manson," Ms. Calligan said.

The founder and president of the United Christian Church & Ministerial Association rejected her criticism, saying Ms. Calligan lied and fraudulently obtained the license.

"I can't check all these licenses. This is a master liar," the Rev. H. Richard Hall said of Ms. Calligan's application.

The Better Business Bureau office in Chattanooga, Tenn., has received a few calls about Hall's organization since the beginning of the year, according to John Myers, president of the office.

"We have questioned them about whether this is a diploma mill," Myers said. "They offer phony credentials."

Myers said such licenses granted through the mail give the false impression that the holder has been through a post-secondary school education.

Hall said his organization checks out most applications, but this one slipped through.

While Ms. Calligan did not state that the applicant was a cat, she did provide enough unusual information to raise questions, she said.

On the application, Ms. Calligan wrote that the applicant's birthdate was April 2, 1989, and that the cat's calling to the ministry was "to make people happy and not hunt birds."

She listed two Huntsville preachers as references to be contacted. Both had been briefed on the application and were told to tell United officials that the applicant was a cat. Neither was contacted, Ms. Calligan said.

Mortality rate from lung cancer rising for women

ATLANTA (AP) — Smoking among American men has been dropping since the early 1950s, but federal researchers say women kept taking up the habit into the next decade and are now paying the price with higher rates of lung cancer.

"Unless women start quitting in significant numbers, the public health problem is going to get more significant — no question about it," said Dr. Edward J. Sondik, a National Cancer Institute specialist who helped prepare a federal health report on smoking and cancer.

The Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday that lung cancer deaths increased 15 percent in the United States between 1979 and 1986, to a rate of about 50 deaths per 100,000 people. More men than women die of lung cancer — about 74 deaths per 100,000 for males in 1986, compared to 27 per 100,000 for women.

But the mortality rate from lung cancer among women is soaring compared to the rate for men. Between 1979 and 1986, the lung cancer death rate for women jumped 44 percent, while the rate for men was up just 7 percent.

The CDC said male smoking has been on the decline since the early 1950s, but smoking among women peaked at about 1965. The recent dropoff in smoking among women — from 32 percent in 1965 to 27 percent in 1987 studies — isn't nearly as sharp as the drop in smoking by men — from 50 percent to 32 percent.

"The men are in a very significant downward trend, while the women — a lot of them were taking up smoking (in the 1950s and '60s)," Sondik said.

Statistically, the CDC reported, peaks in smoking seem to be followed by peaks in lung cancer deaths about 35 years later. More than eight out of 10 lung cancer deaths are believed to be caused by smoking.

"The burden of lung cancer and other smoking-related chronic diseases (such as bronchitis and emphysema) will be substantially higher-...for many decades because of the long latency periods between exposure to tobacco and onset of these diseases," the CDC said.

That, the agency said, means the death rate from lung cancer among women continues to climb, and will do so until the turn of the century or possibly longer, assuming the 35-year lag between peak smoking and peak deaths.

The CDC noted that lung cancer already has passed breast cancer as the most common cause of cancer death among women.

While almost half of all Americans who ever took up smoking have quit, the CDC said, more than 50 million people in the United States continue to smoke.

In 1986, the last year statistics are available, 85,050 men died of lung cancer in the United States, compared to 40,461 women, the CDC said. Nearly two-thirds of those deaths were people over 65.

The lung cancer death rates are about the same for white females and black females — 27.4 per 100,000 for white women and 26.4 for black women in 1986. The death rate among males, however, is higher for blacks, 98.4 to 72.3.

The highest lung cancer death rate among the states in 1986 was in Alaska, with 148 such deaths for a rate of 70.5 per 100,000 people. The lowest was in Utah, with 275 such deaths, or a rate of 24.3.

Atlantic City mayor, 13 others released on own recognizance

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The seaside resort that once looked to Mayor James L. Usry to end a legacy of corruption has seen him and 13 others charged in conspiracies that include bribes, illegal gifts and extortion.

The City Council president and zoning board chairman also were among those arrested on corruption charges Thursday after an eight-month state investigation. A 14th person has not yet been arrested.

The mayor said nothing in court during a bail hearing. Usry and the other city officials were released on their own recognizance.

"We've been the laughingstock of the country for a long time," said Republican Assemblywoman Dolores Cooper, who lost the last non-partisan mayoral election to Usry. "This sets us back another decade."

Usry, president of the National Conference of Black Mayors, was elected Atlantic City mayor five years ago as a reformist candidate after his predecessor was implicated in an influence-peddling scandal and lost a recall election.

The 67-year-old Republican mayor is charged with bribery, conspiracy, official misconduct and accepting unlawful gifts.

A criminal complaint against the 14 people alleged five overlapping conspiracies, including an attempt to gain control of a lucrative Boardwalk electric cart business and a gift shop franchise at the Atlantic City International Airport. The carts are used by tourists to travel the Boardwalk.

State police Superintendent Col. Clinton L. Pagano said the complaints "charge that the regulation of economic activity in Atlantic City, as administered by those arrested, has been up for sale."

State Attorney General Peter Perretti Jr. said none of the investigations involved the casino industry.

Attorneys from the state Division of Criminal Justice are expected to present a case to a state grand jury within several weeks. Usry and the others do not have to forfeit their public offices on the basis of a criminal complaint, Perretti said.

In a search of Usry's home on Thursday, police confiscated $6,000 in cash, alleged to be conspiracy money, Pagano said.

Usry is in his second term as mayor. He won his first term on May 13, 1984. His predecessor, Michael Matthews, was ousted in a recall election. Matthews was found guilty in an influence-peddling scheme involving casino-zoned land, and and was sentenced to a 15-year prison term for extortion.

According to the attorney general, the arrests resulted from an investigation that began in November, prompted by a complaint by Atlantic City businessman Albert Black. Black said some city officials had demanded a bribe from him to get a business proposal approved by the zoning board.

The others arrested Thursday included Walter Collette, 61, City Council president; Kaleem Shabazz, 52, chairman of the Atlantic City zoning board; Lillian Bryant, 45, an Atlantic County freeholder; Gene Dorn, 47, councilman; Arnold Orsatti Jr., 46, chairman of the Atlantic City council's transportation committee; and Sylvetta Pilgrim, 44, an administrative assistant with the city landlord-tenant affairs board.

Also charged were: W. Oscar Harris Jr., 46, former director of the Atlantic City Housing Authority; Harold Mosee, 47, former councilman and an aide to Collette; Robert McCurdy, 46, a former business partner of Harris; Jack Wolf, 57, a business consultant; Ernest English, 32, a local businessman; and Clarence Gillard, no age or occupation available.

Khashoggi posts $10 million bail

NEW YORK (AP) — Saudi financier Adnan Khashoggi has traded his jail cell for a 30,000-square-foot luxury apartment and an electronic monitoring device he must wear after posting $10 million bail.

Khashoggi, who had been jailed in New York since Switzerland extradited him to the United States on July 19, was released Thursday after his brothers posted two $5 million checks.

As he left the federal courthouse, Khashoggi smiled for cameras and promised he would stay in the United States to face charges that he helped former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife Imelda defraud the Philippine treasury.

"I am pleased that the courts have granted me bail," he said before being driven away in a silver limousine to his Fifth Avenue apartment. "I am anxious to begin work for my defense and look forward to clearing my name at trial."

Khashoggi, Mrs. Marcos and another defendant, the California Overseas Bank of Los Angeles, are scheduled to go on trial in March. Marcos has been severed from the trial for health reasons. The Marcoses are charged with stealing more than $100 million from their government's treasury.

Chinese dissident leader says he's not afraid of government

By IRIS CHANG

CHICAGO (AP) — A Chinese dissident leader, who fled his homeland after the crackdown on student protests in Tiananmen Square, appeared on a television news show Thursday and said he was no longer afraid of the Chinese government.

"I can no longer be afraid," Wu'er Kaixi said on the ABC News program "Nightline" late Thursday. "I've already said what I have to do is to carry forward the cause of those who died.

"I must do what they cannot have done. I have no time to fear," he said.

Wu'er and Yan Jiaqi, pro-democracy fugitives from China, arrived in Chicago on Wednesday for the first Chinese Students Congress in the United States, but failed to appear as scheduled at two news conferences.

Wu'er, speaking from a television studio in Chicago, said conditions in China have grown more dangerous in recent weeks as the government continues its crackdown on students who led the pro-democracy demonstrations in Beijing and other Chinese cities.

He said it may not be possible for all student leaders to escape the country as he did.

"I'm not sure anyone else will be able to come out," he said. "But those who manage to come out should carry forward the tasks that they wish to carry out, and those who died wished to carry out."

Earlier Thursday, organizers of the student congress said Wu'er and Yan were in danger.

"They are in physical danger. They're really hiding," Minxin Pei, a Harvard political science student and spokesman for the fledgling congress, said at a news conference.

The visitors escaped from China after the military crushed student protests in Beijing's Tiananmen Square on June 4. They later surfaced in Paris, where they have been trying to rally worldwide support for the democracy movement in their homeland.

Minxin Pei of Harvard University, left, and Pan Zhongdang of the University of Wisconsin go over their notes during a press conference Thursday in Chicago.

The pair were scheduled to participate in Friday's formal opening of the three-day meeting of Chinese students at American schools. Pei said the FBI is protecting the two leaders and he did not know their whereabouts.

Wu'er, 21, was an organizer of the student demonstrations, and Yan, 47, is the former director of the Political Science Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

"They are honored guests. We want them to arrive safely and leave safely," Pei said.

Pei said Chinese officials have been harassing Chinese student activists at U.S. universities by making death threats during anonymous telephone calls. He said officials from the Chinese consulate in New York even visited his apartment, called him a traitor and a fool for his pro-democracy activities and threatened "big trouble" if he persisted.

The Congress of Chinese Students in the United States, held at the Chicago campus of the University of Illinois, is expected to draw 500 Chinese students attending 154 U.S. colleges and universities to discuss the democracy movement in China, Pei said.

No scrap parts used in DC-10, firm says

EVENDALE, Ohio (AP) — No scrap parts were used in the engine that apparently failed in last week's United Airlines DC-10 crash in Sioux City, Iowa, the engine's maker, General Electric Co., said Thursday.

Dwight Weber, a spokesman at the GE plant in suburban Cincinnati which produced the crashed jet's three CF6-6 engines, rejected a suggestion by Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., that GE used old parts in new production engines.

■ Related story — 7A

"The parts Dingell refers to, we can categorically say, were not used in the Flight 232 engine," Weber said. "GE does not use recycled parts in new production engines. However, repaired parts are commonly used in overhauled engines."

Dingell, in a letter Wednesday asked the Federal Aviation Administration to investigate whether scrap parts were used in the tail engine of the United jet that crashed July 19, Iowa, killing 111 people. Dingell chairs a House Energy and Commerce subcomittee which oversees such investigations.

GE says the CF6-6 engine, produced from 1971 to 1981 for use specifically on DC-10 series 10 jets such as the crashed United jet, has established a reliable safety record during 17 million hours of commercial flight. GE stopped making the CF6-6 engine and started producing successor models after McDonnell Douglas sold the last of its DC-10 series 10 jets, Weber said.

Dingell's letter asks a response from the FAA by Aug. 4. Dingell told reporters Thursday in Washington that he is not making allegations against manufacturers, but wants a government assessment of the issue.

Redford upstages Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — After spending years in Ronald Reagan's shadow, George Bush is getting upstaged at the White House by another actor.

Robert Redford dropped by Thursday to discuss environmental issues, causing staffers accustomed to seeing high-powered people to crane their necks for a glimpse of the blond superstar.

Redford came to the Capitol on Wednesday to confer with House Speaker Thomas Foley about his efforts to obtain U.S. permission to go to Cuba to work on a movie. Rep. Robert Dornan, R-Calif., a one-time neighbor of the actor in Santa Monica, agreed to help.

Dornan, Redford in tow, burst into the room where Vice President Dan Quayle was meeting with some members of Congress. Some say Quayle resembles Redford.

When Quayle asked what Redford was doing there, the actor quipped, "I'm looking for a double."

President Bush saw Dornan at a dinner Wednesday night and asked why he hadn't brought the actor to the White House.

Family remembered at fair

MENOMINEE, Mich. (AP) — The opening of the Menominee County Fair centers once again around the Theuerkauf family.

Last year, fair manager Shirley Charlier began the festival by handing Carl Theuerkauf a plaque commemorating the centennial of his family's dairy farm.

Today, Charlier planned to start the fair with a moment of silence. Theuerkauf and four family members died one by one Wednesday as they tried to save each other from suffocating in a manure storage pit.

Dead were farm patriarch Carl Theuerkauf Sr., 65; sons Carl Jr., 37, and Tom, 28; grandson Daniel, 15; and nephew Bill Hofer, 63.

The elder Theuerkauf would have celebrated his 66th birthday Saturday, a sheriff's deputy said. Instead, the farmer will be buried that day.

Slot-rigging suspected

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — The licenses of two Las Vegas slot machine companies were suspended after gaming authorities found evidence that keno and video poker games were rigged to prevent players from hitting jackpots.

The alleged slot-rigging involved American Coin Enterprises and American Coin Machine Co.

The Nevada Gaming Commission voted Thursday to temporarily suspend more than 30 licenses held by the two companies after getting an emergency request Wednesday from its enforcement arm, the state Gaming Control Board.

The principals in the companies are Rudolph LaVecchia and Frank Romano. LaVecchia's son, also named Rudolph, is a principal in American Coin Enterprises.

Labeling act supported

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Howard Metzenbaum's recipe for better health has one major ingredient: a heaping measure of accurate nutritional information.

"For far too long, we Americans have been shopping in the dark," the Ohio Democrat said Thursday as he and other lawmakers joined together to support the proposed Nutrition Labeling and Education Act.

"Today we're here to shine a little light on the food that lines our supermarket aisles."

The bill comes as food companies try to attract an increasingly health-conscious American public with products that are labeled "lite" or "cholesterol free."

Nominee denies new allegation

WASHINGTON (AP) — William Lucas, President Bush's embattled nominee to be the chief civil rights enforcer, is denying a new but unverified allegation that he once complained about a federal housing discrimination suit against a predominantly white Detroit suburb.

Justice Department spokesman David Runkel said late Thursday that Lucas, nominated as assistant attorney general for civil rights, denied urging the government to drop a housing discrimination suit against the city of Birmingham, Mich.

The allegation was contained in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee from Michael Sussman, a former Justice Department civil rights lawyer who now represents black plaintiffs in the landmark desegregation case against Yonkers, N.Y.

"This kind of a last-minute tactic is reprehensible from somebody who is certainly aware of the system to raise an issue without any substance at all at this point," Runkel said, calling Sussman "a disgruntled former employee of the department."

Civil rights organizations have questioned Lucas' qualifications to serve in the post. The 61-year-old black Republican from Detroit was sheriff and later chief executive of Wayne County, Mich. He is a lawyer who has never appeared in court.

Sussman's letter describing a 1980 telephone call by Lucas was circulated Thursday by congressional sources after the Judiciary Committee postponed a vote on the nomination until Tuesday at the request of Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala.

Heflin, whose vote could decide whether the panel gives Lucas a favorable recommendation to the full Senate, said he wanted time to study the new information.

Lawmakers, lobbyists and Justice Department officials professed ignorance about the new information to which Heflin referred. The Alabama senator told colleagues he would not necessarily support Lucas if forced to vote Thursday.

Flag-protection bill won't come before House until September

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House apparently will begin its August recess without voting on a Democratic-backed statute designed to overcome the Supreme Court ruling that allows flag burning.

The House Judiciary Committee approved the flag-protection bill on Thursday, 28-6, with Republican support. But the GOP turned around and made parliamentary objections that blocked Speaker Thomas S. Foley's plan to bring the bill to the full House next week.

Foley, D-Wash., told reporters he would bring the bill to the floor in September.

But the lack of full House action before the Aug. 5 recess hurts the Democrats' strategy of making their argument to the public that Congress should pursue a statute before any constitutional amendment.

The bill includes penalties of up to a year in prison plus an unspecified fine for physically desecrating a flag, and it was drafted to address the high court's decision that existing statutes against flag burning were an attempt to squelch free speech.

"It protects the flag and it protects the Constitution," said Rep. Steny Hoyer, D-Md., chairman of the House Democratic Caucus.

Republicans insist that only a constitutional amendment can overcome the Supreme Court ruling that flag burning was a protected form of free speech.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., said GOP refusal to try a statute before a constitutional amendment showed that the Republicans were mostly interested in partisan advantage.

"The people who pose as the most vigilant supporters of flag protection ... seem more interested in adding political graffiti to the Constitution than in protecting the physical integrity of the American flag," he said.

House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., told reporters that Bush's chief of staff, John Sununu, urged Republican leaders at a White House meeting Tuesday to push the flag amendment because it's a "wedge issue" — one that divides and injures the Democratic Party.

Although to protect themselves politically they're voting for the statute also — 12-1 in the Judiciary Committee — Republicans ridicule the Democrats for pursuing it.

"This bill is essentially useless," said Rep. Carlos Moorhead, R-Calif., who voted for it in committee along with 12 of 13 voting Republicans.

"It's obviously going to get a try. And I may end up voting for it," Michel said, but said it would be "a meaningless vote."

Democratic leaders Thursday defended their position at a news conference, toting along with them the flag that flew over the Capitol on the day Pearl Harbor was attacked by the Japanese.

Judiciary Committee chairman Jack Brooks, a decorated Marine in World War II, said he would sponsor a constitutional amendment if the statute didn't work, but said it would be foolish not to try.

Airline passengers group wants DC-10s grounded, then flaws fixed

DALLAS (AP) — In the wake of a ery DC-10 crash in Iowa, an airline assengers association is calling for ne grounding of all such McDonnell ouglas aircraft and says it is ready o take legal action to get the jets out f service.

The International Airline Passeners Association said Thursday it ants the planes grounded until tructural deficiencies are correctd. But federal regulators and the ircraft manufacturer rejected that all.

The passengers group wants the ederal Aviation Administration to rder the planes out of use in light of ne July 19 crash of a United Airlines C-10 in Sioux City, Iowa, that killed 11, said spokesman Daniel Smith.

It is evident that the aircraft's dual ydraulic systems, necessary for light control, do not work and need o be separated, Smith said.

In a letter delivered Thursday to AA chief James Busey in Washingon, IAPA said it wants to "first, find ut what's wrong with the aircraft; nd secondly, get it fixed."

Although IAPA has not ruled out ourt action, the group said it hopes he plane will be grounded without aving to resort to legal means.

"We believe it is far better for you o act independently, free of any imosed direction from outside the AA," the group's letter said.

After a DC-10 crash in Chicago in 979, the IAPA won a federal court rder grounding the DC-10 fleet for nore than a month while inspecions were performed on some parts f the aircraft.

IAPA then had asked the FAA to eparate the hydraulic systems of he aircraft.

In addition to the hydraulic probems, Smith also claimed there are ther design deficiencies in the lanes, which entered commercial leets in 1971.

At least 17, or 3.8 percent, of the 45 DC-10s built have been wrecked ecause of their problems, Smith aid. By comparison, 1.2 percent of he Lockheed L-1011's have been recked, and 1.5 percent of the oeing 747s have crashed, he said.

FAA spokesman Jay Leyden disissed the passenger group's claim.

"There's nothing that's come out f the Sioux City accident indicating basic design flaw that would warant such an action," Leyden said.

In another DC-10 accident, a Korean Air DC-10 crashed short of a fogbound airport Thursday in Tripoli,

Daniel Smith, spokesman for IAPA

Libya, killing at least 82 people. But a spokesman for the South Korean embassy there said no mechanical problem was reported before the crash.

McDonnell Douglas, maker of the DC-10, countered the IAPA statements Thursday in its own news conference at the Long Beach headquarters of Douglas Aircraft.

"I find it difficult to believe that a rational public, a rational FAA and even a rational Congress will put very much credence in the statements of the IAPA," said Dale Warren, a McDonnell Douglas vice president.

"The real concern, in my opinion, is that we worry about the credibility of our aircraft to the traveling public," Warren said. "We'd like to assure the traveling public that we have a fine piece of aircraft that is safe to travel in."

Nevertheless, Warren said, engineers are studying the crashes to determine whether a design modification is needed.

"It would appear at this time that some action is appropriate," Warren said.

Changes under consideration are additional backup controls, ways of containing the damage from a jet engine explosion and methods of shielding the hydraulic system from such damage.

In the Iowa crash, an explosion in the plane's rear engine threw pieces of the turbine through the tail section, rupturing the hydraulic controls and backup systems, an initial investigation into the accident indicates.

At least 17, or 3.8 percent, of the 445 DC-10s built have been wrecked because of their problems, Smith said. By comparison, 1.2 percent of the Lockheed L-1011's have been wrecked, and 1.5 percent of the Boeing 747s have crashed, Daniel Smith said.

In addition to that crash, the passengers association cited other DC-10 accidents:

■ 1974, a Turkish Airlines jet near Paris crashed after explosive decompression and severed hydraulic lines; 346 killed.

■ 1979, an American Airlines jet crashed on takeoff in Chicago after the number one engine separated from the wing, rupturing hydraulic lines connected to the wing slats; 273 died.

Smith, whose organization claims about 27,000 members in the United States and 110,000 worldwide, declined to say whether the group was advising people not to fly DC-10s.

However, he said, "I will not fly the DC-10 until substantial structural modifications are made to the airplane."

Elaine Hardy, manager of Blue Moon Travel in Dallas, said some of her customers are requesting not to be booked on DC-10s.

"They ask me what kind of flight it is. They don't want to go on the DC-10," she said.

With the largest DC-10 fleet in the world, Fort Worth-based American Airlines called IAPA's statements "a staged media event ... completely inappropriate and uncalled-for."

"At the first suggestion of any flaw in the DC-10, American would immediately ground the fleet," said Al Becker, American spokesman.

"But, absolutely nothing has been discovered at this point to suggest that any such action is appropriate."

Becker also took issue with Smith's figures, saying 370 DC-10s have been built and that only nine have been involved in fatal accidents worldwide.

Avoiding mistakes job of legislators

Gov. Bill Clements has signed a bill repealing one passed in the regular legislative session which had the effect of making information about felony crimes committed in the state unavailable to the news media and thus the public.

Approval of the original bill, sponsored by Dallas democrat Fred Blair, was a major mistake. But from all indications, including the admission of Blair himself, it was a matter of a bill passed under good intentions being wrongly interpreted by law enforcement agencies.

The bill's actual intent, Blair said, was to keep victims of felony crimes from being "harassed" by businesses looking to capitalize on the losses of those individuals. Several instances of that type of activity had been reported in the Dallas area and the bill was written with the intent of addressing the problem.

But that legitimate and arguably worthwhile intent was derailed when, after the bill was passed unanimously by the legislators, law enforcement agencies began to interpret the bill's meaning as more restrictive than Blair intended. The result was that law enforcement began to close the media's access to felony crimes — an open violation of the intent of the Open Records Act. (In all fairness, it must be noted that considering the wording of the legislation it is not surprising that such misinterpretations came about!)

The media began to cry "foul," citing the provisions of that act and, to make a rather lengthy, unnecessary saga shorter, embarrassed legislators and Gov. Clements hurried the repeal measure through the House and Senate.

Justifiably, the media bears some blame for the situation. Media lobbies and news organizations and their Austin bureau staffs should have stayed more attuned to what was being proposed in Austin. The media have a responsibility to do that — in the public's interest.

But the ones who must bear the most blame are representatives and senators — all of them — who failed to ask a simple question: "Will this impact the public's right to get information it needs?" These "public" servants have a duty to ask that question many times every session and to act on proposals accordingly. That is what the taxpayers pay them to do. In fact, had our own elected representatives in Austin even advised us of the proposal, we would have moved to investigate on our own.

They have a duty to ensure that, above all else, the lines of access between the public and officialdom remain open. When they fail to do so, one of the public's basic rights is violated.

Legislators didn't uphold their responsibility this time, and it cost the people of Texas many hundreds of hours of time and thousands of tax dollars to remedy the oversight.

Testimony sheds new light on bombing

WASHINGTON — The bomb that brought down Pan Am Flight 103 was traced to a cassette recorder in the wreckage. But the most explosive evidence in the resulting lawsuit against Pan Am may have been found the day after the crash at the bottom of a stack of papers on a desk in Frankfurt, West Germany.

Jack Anderson

A young West German who worked in Pan Am baggage security reportedly has testified in a secret deposition that the State Department warned the airline in early December about a possible terrorist bombing, but that he didn't see the warning until Dec. 22, the day after the crash.

Two West Germans were flown to New York last month to give secret depositions in the lawsuit brought against Pan Am by the families of the victims. The two men, Oliver Koch and Werner Schutz, worked for Alert Management Systems, Pan Am's security affiliate at the Frankfurt airport, where investigators suspect the deadly baggage was loaded Dec. 21.

Their testimony has been sealed at Pan Am's insistence, but our associate Jim Lynch has obtained some of the details.

Koch's job was to train Alert Management employees on how to search baggage for bombs. He allegedly testified that he did not see the letter, known as the "Helsinki warning," until the morning after the plane exploded over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing 270 people. The warning to the U.S. Embassy in Helsinki from an anonymous tipster specified that a bomb would be loaded on a Pan Am flight in Frankfurt.

Lee Kreindler, an attorney for the relatives of Flight 103 victims, summarized Koch's story in a meeting with U.S. District Judge Thomas Platt: "The night of Lockerbie he (Koch) got an emergency call from his boss, (Ulrich) Weber. And Weber said come in early the next morning. And he comes in early the next morning, 6 o'clock the next morning, and there is, obviously, confusion and concern. And he is asked to do a number of things. And he is asked to work on Weber's desk with his computer. And he looks down and he sees the Helsinki warning on Weber's desk. And he goes crazy. And he says what is this?...

"And Weber says: Oh, my God, don't worry, don't worry, it's nothing, forget it.

"So Koch says, how can I forget it? This is a warning of a potential bomb. It is my job.

"Just forget it. Be quiet or you will get in trouble."

Alert Management's procedure in Frankfurt reportedly was to stamp all correspondence with the date that it was received and then distribute it to security people. But Koch reportedly testified in his deposition that there was no date stamp on the Helsinki warning when he found it.

Attorney Kreindler continued with Koch's account for Judge Platt: "A few days later the FAA was supposed to arrive, and in Koch's presence Weber takes out a date stamp, backdates it to Dec. 9, which is when he received it, and stamps the Dec. 9 on it. And that apparently was the one given to the FAA.

"Koch has the original one without the date stamp, and it will be marked as an exhibit," Kreindler told Judge Platt.

Kriendler would not talk to us about the specifics of the depositions. It is not clear whether the other worker, Schutz, verified Koch's account in his deposition. Koch, Schutz and Weber have since been fired, but a Pan Am spokesman told us the firings had nothing to do with Flight 103.

The spokesman said that Koch's account "is simply not true. There is no reason to believe Mr. Koch is credible." He speculated that Koch's undated copy of the warning "could be a fabrication." Pan Am claims the Helsinki warning was distributed to security people.

CHARLEY REESE

Society deluded in believing value of credit

Over the centuries, people have been caught up in one wrong idea after another, and our generation is no different.

Our mass delusion is the belief — widely shared by capitalists and communists, industrialists and peasants, learned professors and teen-agers — that standards of living can be raised by credit.

Charley Reese

Belief in credit is as strong in our time as belief in alchemy was in the Dark Ages. People will swear on a stack of academic studies that credit can indeed raise the standard of living.

As with all illusions it's difficult to see the truth until it's too late to do anything about it, but just for the exercise let's take a crack at it.

First all, let us recognize the reason why credit can't raise a standard of living except in a most illusory manner. Credit — the ability to borrow at interest — becomes debt when used. Debt at interest means present income must be used to pay for past consumption.

For credit to increase the standard of living, the borrowed money must be invested in something which will yield a return higher than the total cost of principal and interest. In other words, when the debt is paid, if you are better off than before you borrowed the money, your standard of living is raised.

Unfortunately, by far and away, most credit is used to purchase things that are consumed or used up before or by the time the debt is repaid. This is as true of governments as it is of individuals and families. Inflation helps to disguise this fact but it is a fact.

It's the law of compound interest that makes it so difficult to beat the credit game. Take the rule of 72. Divide the interest rate into 72 and that will tell you how many years, at compound interest, it takes for the interest to equal the principal.

If you borrow $10,000 at 10 percent compound interest, then in 7.2 years interest will equal $10,000 and you will then owe $20,000; in another 7.2 years, new interest owed will be $20,000 and you will then — 14.4 years after you borrowed $10,000 — owe $40,000.

It's hard to find an investment with a yield that can outrun compound interest.

Most of the things we buy on credit, whether they are arenas, roads or the family car, will be worn out and nearly worthless by the time they are paid for. In the meantime, all too often so much of our present income is spent paying the debts, that we have saved nothing.

If humans were sensible, then no one ever would borrow money to purchase a depreciating asset. Yet we all do, including kings, presidents and commissars, and thus a sizeable majority in the world in 1989 are drowning in a sea of debt we ourselves created.

Like sailors whose ship has sunk, some are sinking sooner than others but eventually all will sink unless we find a way to drain the sea.

If the trillions owed just by Americans fell due, the United States would collapse. Every year, Americans are taxed billions of dollars just to pay interest on debts contracted to finance past consumption.

I knew a friendly old banker once who had an extravagantly purple nose on account of his fondness for martinis. He often said the world is divided into only two groups — those who pay interest and those who collect it.

There is certainly some truth to his observation. Worldwide debt today is simply unpayable, and what the banks and pols are scheming about now is who is going to take the hit and how much. It is not a plot by bankers. Bankers are no different than anyone else. It's their business to lend money and they do, sometimes wisely and sometimes foolishly. There are no vocations in which one finds infallible people.

The way out is the old way: frugality, thrift, prudence. Those old virtues seem about as popular as AIDS. After the great pain of liquidation, however, they will make a comeback.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Getting revenge one of life's pleasures

A reader named Louise Penberthy of Atlanta, who described herself as a Northerner, was concerned about a recent column in which it was my intent to get even with some dimwit in Chicago who circulated a bogus "Application to Live in North Carolina." This putrid piece went the rounds among the employees of Sears in Chicago after it was rumored the company might be moving to Charlotte.

Lewis Grizzard

The move has since been called off, but it was a nasty little thing, the bogus application. As a Southerner, it offended me.

The application dealt in numerous Southern stereotypes and in my offended and wounded state, I decided to do the only sensible thing. Take revenge.

So I wrote a column dealing in Northern stereotypes (Northern women don't shave their legs, etc.), and reader Penberthy responded: "As a Northerner, I was appalled to read the nasty stereotypes put forth by Northerners concerning Southerners.

"However, there was no reason for you to turn around and do what you decried so loudly and at such length."

Au contraire — which is French for an American word involving the horned bovine.

In the first place, taking revenge is the best way I know to get even, and getting even is one of life's greatest pleasures.

After I wrote the aforementioned column, my spirits lifted and I celebrated by burning a copy of The New York Times, which the Supreme Court recently ruled was OK as long as you weren't pregnant and thinking of having an abortion.

In the second place, the stereotyping and insulting balance has hung in favor of the North for over a century.

It was H.L. Mencken who described the South as an "intellectual Gobi," or words to that effect. (You aren't reading George Will here.)

I was reading a book recently by a man from the North who traveled the country by train. In one section, he dismissed the South as the rest of the country's "poor cousin."

Southerners have been called rednecks, hicks, hillbillies and worse. We've been humiliated in movies that depict us as one great collection of drawling, drooling, dregs of the earth.

And I'm tired of all that, so no matter what Louise Penberthy has to say, I wasn't about to miss out on the opportunity to demonstrate two can play the game of peering-down-a-nose.

Charlotte's a nice town. The roads are paved there and I doubt a single resident allows pigs in his or her home.

You can even fly nonstop to London from Charlotte. There's a major league basketball franchise there, and from the mountains in the west to the shore in the east, North Carolina is filled with good people who do not deserve the treatment that came out of Chicago.

Suddenly my spirits are lifted again. One of my neighbors in Atlanta is originally from Milwaukee. I think I'll go over to his house and kick his dog.

MARIANNE MEANS

Paying for war on drugs will not be easy

WASHINGTON — President George Bush, under criticism for not putting any money where his mouth is, bumps up soon against another potential conflict between reality and rhetoric when he unveils what he promises will be a serious, sweeping war on drugs.

Marianne Means

Drug czar William Bennett, who is already on the road trying out ideas for the administration's long-awaited anti-drug strategy, is dependent upon the White House to decide what to spend and how to get it. He says those particular inconvenient details are still up in the air.

The president will officially present his anti-drug manifesto in a major televised national address on September 5.

The focus of the Bush plan will be stopping the disastrous spread of crack, a highly addictive, cheap and easily available drug that plagues the impoverished, mostly black and increasingly violent inner cities. He will also propose tougher law enforcement and expanded treatment and education efforts for drug violations of all kinds.

But deciding what to do is the relatively easy part. Paying for it is tougher.

The president, sticking to his campaign pledge never to raise taxes, has already earned a reputation for talking a good game without putting anything on the line.

Bush says he wants to be the "education president," but proposes little new funding for education programs. He says he wants to be the "environment president," but his clean air proposals duck tough pollution standards that would be costly to enforce and offend big campaign contributors.

He says he wants to inspire Poland to become more democratic but he proposes only a pittance in actual financial aid. He says he wants to establish a colony on the moon and soar beyond to Mars but he doesn't volunteer any budget figures.

Congress, which is unwilling to spend big bucks unless the president sets clear spending priorities, is concerned that Bush is going to pull a fast one on the drug issue as well.

Even though there is a heightened sense of urgency and a lot of political sentiment for throwing money at this one, federal budget constraints are so tight that only $900 million has been appropriated of the $2.8 billion already earmarked to battle drugs.

Although there are few ideological differences between Democrats and Republicans on this issue, both parties are jockeying for the political credit of being the most angry about drugs. Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, for example, has his own anti-drug package that features more funds for police and prosecutors to be paid by higher excise taxes on tobacco and alcohol.

Bennett, officially called the National Drug Control Policy Director, is outspoken about everything but financing his crusade. He indicates that he likes a new congressional proposal to issue special bonds to raise money for anti-drug efforts, but passes the buck to Office of Management and Budget Director Richard Darman. Funding the program, Bennett shrugs, "is not set until the president says its set."

The impact of "war" bonds on the federal budget is not clear. Since their major appeal would be a tax-free status, they might drain revenue from the Treasury that is desperately needed to help reduce the deficits. It also represents just another form of borrowing, which would eventually have to be repaid with interest.

In the meantime, Bennett is out drumming up excitement over the president's pending battle against the drug lords, talking tough and vowing results. He might take care, however, not to oversell the effort just in case it falls victim to the president's penchant for operating major programs on the cheap.

ITEM: President Bush is supposed to be furious that former campaign advisors are quoted in a new book as depicting his vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle as immature and inept. But the president's vaunted anger is not nearly as telling as the fact that neither he nor anyone else has tried to dispute the accuracy of the aides' complaints.

The book, "Whose Broad Stripes and Bright Stars?" by columnists Jack Germond and Jules Witcover, has created a political tempest because it quotes Quayle advisors, Republican senators and longtime party pros as questioning Quayle's intellectual and political abilities. This comes as a shock to no one who participated in or covered the campaign, since similar comments from similar sources were rampant. I recorded some of them myself.

But the timing has embarrassed Bush, who has been trying to groom Quayle in office and has steadfastly insisted he made a wise choice in picking a young man of slender political credentials and a controversial background. White House chief of staff John Sununu even vowed revenge, particularly against campaign strategist Joe Canzeri, a candid veteran who had ventured a colorful description of Quayle as "a kid" who required a "script".

The president said he was "personally offended" by the criticism. But he did not go so far as to risk his own credibility by contending that Canzeri and the others were not telling the simple truth. Too many people know they were.

What seems to have offended Bush the most was the fact that those key Republicans were not prepared to cover up Quayle's shortcomings. Bush sees it as a breach of loyalty to himself, not a question of free speech and individual honesty.

This is a dangerous attitude. If Bush cannot tolerate honest public criticism from friends, he will become isolated from the truth. And a good presidency depends upon good information.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, July 28, the 209th day of 1989. There are 156 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 28, 1976, one of the worst earthquakes on record devastated northern China, killing at least 242,000 people, according to an official estimate.

On this date:

In 1540, King Henry VIII's chief minister, Thomas Cromwell, was executed.

In 1588, the Spanish Armada, which had sailed to England in hopes of overthrowing Queen Elizabeth I, came under attack off Calais by the English navy.

In 1655, French dramatist and novelist Cyrano de Bergerac, the inspiration for a play by Edmond Rostand, died in Paris.

In 1750, composer Johann Sebastian Bach died in Leipzig.

In 1821, Peru declared its independence from Spain.

In 1868, the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, guaranteeing due process of law, was declared in effect.

In 1932, Federal troops dispersed the so-called "Bonus Army" of World War I veterans who had gathered in Washington, D.C., since May, demanding money they were scheduled to receive in 1945.

Convent on Auschwitz grounds still causing controversy

By JOHN TAGLIABUE
New York Times News Service

OSWIECIM, Poland — An impassioned debate has been revived here over the presence of a Roman Catholic convent at the site of the Auschwitz death camp.

The dispute goes back to 1984, when the convent was founded, and has been rekindled lately by demonstrations by Jewish groups.

The protesters say the Catholic Church has failed to abide by a 1987 agreement to remove the convent.

Sunday, about 100 young Jews representing four Jewish student organizations in Western Europe marched to the site of the convent, bearing banners that read, in Polish, "Carmelites, Leave Auschwitz," and "Today's Prayers Cannot Atone for the Silence of the Past."

The students, young men and women, sat in the street in the front of the convent, while their leader, Bernhard Suchecky, a Belgian historian, read a statement in French calling for the nuns to leave.

The Jews were met by a crowd of local residents who had milled about the convent grounds for most of the morning.

Some shouted angry insults like "Back to Palestine!" while others begged the Jews to comprehend the convent's purpose.

"They are praying for the people who died here," an elderly Pole shouted. "They are praying for everyone."

The debate has affected relations between Jewish communities and the Polish church and government and between Poland and Israel.

It has also stirred lingering concern over Polish anti-Semitism.

A group of Carmelite nuns has been living in a building just outside the Auschwitz site in southern Poland since late 1984.

The 1987 agreement to move them, later accepted by the Carmelite order, recognized the special significance of the site to Jews and pledged to remove the convent by February 1989 and replace it with a center for Christian-Jewish dialogue nearby.

But construction of the center has not yet begun.

This month several Jews from the U.S. clambered over a fence surrounding the cloister.

Polish workers poured buckets of water on them and dragged them from the site while the Polish police and the nuns looked on.

The reaction in Poland's press divided along party lines. The Communist government newspaper, Rzeczpospolita, accused the American Jews, led by Rabbi Avraham Weiss of New York, of "organized provocation."

But the daily newspaper of the Solidarity opposition, Gazeta Wyborcza, published a factual description of the events.

The reporter who wrote the article, Anna Husarska, later said she had received insulting telephone calls accusing her of defending the Jews.

The event that set off the current phase of the dispute was a demonstration at the convent site in May by several hundred Jewish women from about 40 Western countries.

At the time, Kalman Sultanik, vice president of the World Jewish Congress, met with Deputy Prime Minister Ireneusz Sekula and warned that more demonstrations would follow if the Polish church did not abide by the 1987 agreement.

The dispute has threatened to upset delicate efforts to restore full diplomatic ties between Poland and Israel, which were severed by Warsaw to protest Israeli actions in the 1967 Middle East war.

Last week, after Israeli newspapers published photographs of Polish workers dragging Rabbi Weiss from the convent grounds, the convent dispute was discussed in Israel's parliament and Poland's Deputy Foreign Minister Jan Majewski, empowered the Israelis to announce that Warsaw would take steps to assure the convent's removal.

A day later, the Polish press agency announced details on construction of the new religious center, saying work on the project would begin early next year.

On July 18, a delegation of American Jews from the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, led by Rabbi Marvin Hier, traveled to Rome to present a letter to Vatican Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, saying the dispute "continues to erode relations between our faith communities."

Hier, who demanded that Pope John Paul II intervene to force the convent's removal, later said Vatican officials had urged patience, arguing that the matter was in the hands of local Polish church officials.

Europeans wary of U.S. mistakes in fighting crack

New York Times News Service

LONDON — Crack, unknown on this side of the Atlantic until recently, has begun to turn up in Western Europe, where the authorities are trying to avoid what they regard as American mistakes in failing to keep the problem from exploding into epidemic proportions.

The sense of urgency is most acute in Britain. Home Secretary Douglas Hurd recently told a meeting of government officials involved in drug enforcement, "Crack is the specter I see hanging over Europe."

The British police and customs officers have added more than 1,000 people to drug detection and intelligence in anticipation of a crack problem, the Home Office says.

So far, widespread prevalence of the drug has not been found, according to authorities interviewed in Britain, France, West Germany, Spain and Italy.

But where it has appeared, the pattern indicates to law-enforcement officials that the potential does exist for a rapid spread from urban areas to the entire countryside.

In England, the police in Nottinghamshire seized 113 vials in recent weeks containing a total of about four ounces of crack, said Ronald Hadfield, the police chief of the region.

"Had we been asked last Christmas, we would have said that there was no crack in the county," he told a legislative oversight committee late last month.

"I'm terrified of this thing growing in the county. If it does, we shall have a crime wave on our hands equal to America."

The main reason for the concern is the rapid development recently of the European market for the drug from which crack is made: cocaine, supplied chiefly by the Colombian drug cartels through entry ports in Spain.

Spain seized more than three tons of cocaine last year, more than the rest of the European Community combined.

Leaders of seven industrial democracies who held a summit meeting in Paris this month said the drug problem had reached "devastating proportions" worldwide, and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher got support for a conference in London late next year to explore ways of reducing demand in the major countries.

Most of the concern centered on the rise in availability of cocaine.

Throughout Western Europe, the street price of cocaine has been dropping to the point where crack, made by heating pure cocaine with water and bicarbonate of soda, becomes economically viable.

In West Germany, nearly all the 20 cases involving crack that were developed last year involved people connected with the 246,000 American troops stationed there, said Prof. Manfred Franke, a drug expert in the Family Ministry in Bonn.

Klaus Mellenthin, head of the drug department of the Baden-Wurttemberg state crime office in Stuttgart, said, "So far there has been no crack wave or crack epidemic."

But "cocaine is getting cheaper and more widespread," he said. "I take it for granted that if the cocaine market is saturated, crack will start coming in."

Isolated instances of crack use have been reported in the Netherlands, Switzerland and Spain.

The authorities in Spain estimate that as many as 2,000 may be regular users, but say they have not seized any of the drug yet.

In France, Dr. Claude Olievenstein, director of the Hopital Marmottan drug clinic in Paris, said his patients had told him of locations in eastern Paris where they could buy crack.

But a police inspector who supervises the districts of central and northern Paris where crime is highest said he had not heard that the drug was available there.

"We think it will come — it's only a matter of months," said a spokesman for the central office of narcotics trafficking at the French Ministry of the Interior.

In Italy, the authorities say there have also been no seizures of crack.

"I imagine the reason is that there is still so much pure cocaine on the market at a good price," a foreign narcotics expert said.

"It's an eye-opener when you know there were 15 arrests for crack in New York City in 1985 and there were more than 18,000 arrests in the first six months of 1988. That's how fast it can catch on."

Stephen Tippell, director of the Community Drug Project, an information clinic for drug users in the poor neighborhoods of southeast London, said:

"We're just at the beginning. There has been a general increase in the level of cocaine use over the last two years, and the street price has dropped."

Woman convicted of indecency with a child

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Deliberating past midnight Thursday, a jury could not decide if a 19-year-old Odessa woman was guilty of forcing two children to have sex at gunpoint. The panel also failed to convict her of aggravated assault, but early today found Sandra Jo Pyeatt had committed indecency with a child.

Jurors in Judge Pat Baskin's 142nd State District Court are scheduled to decide punishment today for the crime, a second-degree felony punishable by a prison term of two to 20 years. Baskin declared a mistrial on the other two counts.

Ms. Pyeatt, a cousin by marriage of the three children, frequently babysat the 9-year-old boy and two girls, ages 8 and 11. According to the children's testimony, the defendant threatened and forced the boy to have sex with both of his sisters at gunpoint. The boy also claimed she performed oral sex on him.

But Ms. Pyeatt denied the claims, and other defense witnesses suggested the children's accusations may have erupted from a family feud.

The jury began deliberations about 4 p.m. Thursday, and remained closeted almost nine hours.

In closing arguments, prosecutor Randy Fluke urged the jury to concentrate on the sincerity of the three children, and to reject defense arguments that they had been coached.

Some inconsistency in the children's stories was to be expected, he argued.

"The things that are inconsistent show the defense theory of things can't hold water," Fluke said. "If you wanted to make up a story or coach kids, you could do it a whole lot better. ... Do you believe the children? Had this been a coached deal, had it been a made-up deal, the people that made it up should be on trial. That's pathetic."

The children were describing events "foreign" to them, and could not have known about the details of sexual matters unless the attacks actually happened, the prosecutor said.

"Who would make up such a story and why?" Fluke asked.

McCormack implored the jury to ignore the fact that the victims were "cute, lovable and likable children."

"The assumption is the children wouldn't make it up," which destroys his client's presumption of innocence, McCormack said.

"Children can make stories up ... they can imagine these things," he said. "We all saw examples about how children can be coached in this witness room.

"For the most part, we let Mr. Fluke ask leading questions to show you it can be done."

McCormack surmised that, once the children's stories had been told to adults in their family, they couldn't admit that the tales about Ms. Pyeatt were generated by their imagination.

"At a certain point in time, these children couldn't retract their statements," McCormack said. "They couldn't go back."

Evidence during the three-day trial showed that no one — except the children — ever saw the defendant with a handgun, McCormack told jurors. And, the worst behavior Ms. Pyeatt exhibited was probably talking to the children about "making babies," and breast feeding, he said.

"If there is no gun, doesn't that create a reasonable doubt in your mind as to what's going on here?" McCormack queried. "She is not charged with foolishly and immaturely talking about sex with these children."

But prosecutor Fluke said the jury should accept that the children testified about "a bizarre story." In the evidence that counted — allegations in the indictment against Ms. Pyeatt — the children agreed, he said.

"The things that are consistent cry out so loudly in this case," Fluke said.

Earlier Thursday, the defendant took the stand and in plain language told the jury she was innocent.

The blond defendant, who spoke so quietly Baskin twice had to ask her to speak up, denied she ever had owned or possessed a handgun.

Ms. Pyeatt said she was "stunned" when her husband described her as a "child molester."

"Why were they saying these things about me?" she asked rhetorically. "Who was behind it?"

On cross-examination, she agreed with Fluke that her apartment at the Sandstone complex, 4513 Neely Ave., had become known as a "Kool-Aid" house, where area children could come any time and be taken care of and fed.

But she rejected the children's allegations, and wondered aloud why the charges were made.

"I don't know what it came out of; I'm not in those little kids' heads."

When Ms. Pyeatt said bitterness likely remains between the families, Fluke agreed out loud, "I imagine."

McCormack objected, and Baskin told the prosecutor to keep "sidebar remarks" to himself.

Evidence during the trial, which began Tuesday, showed Ms. Pyeatt and her estranged husband, Scott Pyeatt, took a credit card from Ms. Pyeatt's mother and charged more than $2,000 worth of goods and services on it.

Pyeatt, the cousin of the children who testified, has filed for divorce from Ms. Pyeatt.

Rains brings GOP campaign for governor to Midland

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Former Secretary of State Jack Rains, calling for education revival in Texas, Thursday brought his gubernatorial campaign to Midland — the home of another Texas Aggie and Republican opponent.

Rains

The 51-year-old Houston businessman, who resigned his post as secretary of state earlier this summer in preparation for the race, said he wants to run an issue-oriented campaign without concern for public opinion polls.

Those instruments show Rains with lower-than-average name identification across the state, but the candidate said he isn't worried, that he will work throughout the primary season to reach new constituencies and broaden his political base.

Taking a jab at Republican Party opponent Clayton Williams, Rains said he couldn't begin to match Williams' $3 million campaign spending proposals and won't run a politicial-rhetoric-only campaign.

"I'm going to offer this state leadership, not politics," said Rains. "I want to lead Texas to a period of unparalleled prosperity, and in doing so, I'll be taking that message not only to traditional Republican voters, but to every Texan."

In his local announcement, Rains touted the issue of public education, saying it directly affects the business climate, job creation and the soaring crime rate in the state.

He called prison and jail overcrowding and the state's high recidivism rate "the price of ignorance."

"We have to compete in a global economy, yet we're graduating people who are woefully unprepared," Rains said. "We must be willing to take decisive action if our state is to successfully cope with changing circumstances in the world around us."

Although Rains advocates elevating teacher salaries and giving them greater tools in the classroom, he said as governor he wouldn't commit additional funds until "we correct a flawed system."

"I think we're in serious trouble in education in this state," Rains said. "We'll have to commit additional funds and I'll fight to create those funds and get them into education, but I want to first make sure we're getting a return on the investment of the funds that we're spending today."

"If school districts want to have air-conditioned sports arenas, heated swimming pools and heated towel racks, they can raise that money locally. If they want to have a whole lot of non-teaching personnel, they can raise that money locally.

"But the state money has to go into core curriculum and teacher salaries," he added.

Accompanying the gubernatorial candidate on his 23-city tour of Texas was his wife of 27 years, Aileen, and former Houston Oilers head coach Bum Phillips, who is Rains' campaign treasure.

Phillips, who has known the former secretary of state since the late 1950s, said he's glad to be a part of Rains' campaign team.

"I've been on the road with Jack for about 72 hours and I've heard him answer 9 million questions. Believe me, he has the right answers and I think that's important," Phillips said.

Respiratory therapy students will be able to get training, Parrish says

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland College respiratory therapy students needn't worry about a scheduling conflict that may threaten their ability to obtain clinical training at Odessa's Medical Center Hospital, Midland College President Dr. Jess Parrish said today.

"There will be enough spots for all of our students elsewhere," said Parrish's in response to Tuesday's decision by the Medical Center Hospital Board of Managers to table the renewal of its contract with Midland College.

Although the Odessa College contract also is up for renewal, it was not received in time for board review.

MCH has a contract with both colleges to offer clinical experience in respiratory therapy, but space and scheduling conflicts have caused the MCH program to become over-saturated, officials said.

Hospital Administrator J. Michael Stephens told the MCH Board of Managers Tuesday that Midland College first contracted with MCH in 1983 to provide eight respiratory therapy students. Today, that figure has risen to 32 student clinicians.

Midland Memorial Hospital, which offers a similar contract with both colleges, isn't experiencing scheduling conflicts, according to MMH spokeswoman Laurie Johnson.

The MCH contract has a termination clause of one year, making it a two-year contract, Stephens said in recommending that the hospital not vote for renewal, using the termination clause.

If the board takes no action, the contract will go into the termination phase, he added.

Said Parrish in reaction to Stephens' recommendation: "It's always a struggle to find enough clinical spots and we understand that they are making the preferred spots available to to Odessa College.

"I would hope that Midland Memorial Hospital would give preference to our students."

The president said clinical spots will be provided to all MC students in the college's health care fields, even if they have to go to Lubbock to receive their clinical training.

Nevertheless, Parrish welcomed the chance to work with Odessa College and MCH and talk about the space limitations, he said.

Railroad commissioner criticizes Congress for drilling moratorium

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Railroad Commission chairman Kent Hance Thursday criticized Congress for placing a moratorium on coastal drilling, saying the action could increase the chance of a spill.

Of the 60 largest oil spills that have occurred in the waters of this nation, 98.3 percent were caused by tankers, not offshore wells, Hance said.

"It is amazing to me that they would take such an action detrimental to our environment in view of the recent disastrous spill in Alaskan waters," Hance said, referring to the Exxon Valdez spill.

"Alaska has experienced the damage one tanker can do. The last thing we want is a policy that will create the possibility of more tankers and more spills along our coastlines.

Please see SPILL, Page 2B

Hance says election debts paid off

AUSTIN (AP) — Railroad Commissioner Chairman Kent Hance, preparing to bid for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, says he has paid off debts from two earlier, unsuccessful political campaigns.

Hance said Thursday that he had paid off about $300,000 still owed from his 1984 bid for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination and his 1986 run for the GOP gubernatorial nod.

"The debts are history," Hance said, adding that he has received commitments totaling $1.25 million for a 1990 governor's race. He also said he expects that primary battle to cost at least $3 million.

Two Republicans already have formally declared for governor — Midland oil man Clayton Williams and former Secretary of State Jack Rains, a Houston lawyer.

Hance, then still a Democrat, lost the 1984 Senate primary to Lloyd Doggett, who was defeated that November by Republican Phil Gramm.

He changed parties in 1985. In 1986, Hance and former congressman Tom Loeffler both were defeated in the GOP primary by Gov. Bill Clements.

"With the debts now behind us and with a campaign machine in place, I will raise the money to get out our message about the need for strong, experienced leadership in Texas," Hance said Wednesday of his upcoming bid.

Underground blast near Del Rio opposed

DEL RIO (AP) — A U.S. Defense Department proposal to detonate 300 tons of nuclear explosives underground near Lake Amistad has angered local officials and a loose-knit citizens' group.

The city was notified July 11 that the Defense Department's Defense Nuclear Agency plans to detonate 300 tons of ammonium nitrate some 400 feet below the surface to simulate the impact of a nuclear explosion on missile silos.

But city and local officials fear the blast will damage the city's water supply at San Felipe Springs and tourism at Lake Amistad and the Devil's River, which is located 1¾ miles east of the proposed blast site and serves as a tributary to the lake and thus the Rio Grande, the Del Rio News-Herald reported.

"It's incomprehensible to me that we, as Del Rio, would even consider allowing such a project to be done so close to our region's greatest asset, which is our water supply," said former state Rep. Susan McBeen.

"The Devil's River, Lake Amistad and our only reliable source of drinking water — our springs — are being put in jeopardy unnecessarily, in my opinion, by these proposals," Ms. McBeen told the Del Rio City Council earlier this week. "If they can't accurately predict or guarantee what's going to happen, then there's no need to conduct the test in the first place."

The subterranean blast, which has yet to be scheduled, is part of the government's Deep Underground High Explosive Simulation Test, DUGHEST. Federal officials have said data gathered from the test will be used to extrapolate the effects of larger, more devastating nuclear explosion.

While DNA officials have told Del Rio officials the blast some 20 miles from Lake Amistad will not affect the San Felipe Springs drinking supply, the federal sources have declined to offer any contingency plans should such a problem occur, the News-Herald reported.

U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, whose district includes Del Rio, is angered he was not notified of the Defense Department's plans and said he wants more information about the blast.

"What is a 300-ton blast going to do? That's 600,000 pounds — a lot of explosives," he told the News-Herald. "What can we expect from that type of explosion and what about the area in and around the dam?"

Bustamante said he is seeking details on the project from Vice Adm. John Parker, director of the Defense Nuclear Agency, "because the information I have so far leaves me up in the air."

The Del Rio City Council, meanwhile, has voted 6-0 with one abstention to oppose the project.

Councilman Dan Burr, who abstained from the Tuesday night vote, said he also wanted more information on the project.

"I'm opposed to this, but I'll know how hard to oppose it when I have more information," Burr said.

IRS ready to put state senator's goods on block

EL PASO (AP) — State Sen. Tati Santiesteban said Thursday he hopes to pay off federal back taxes he owes to the Internal Revenue Service before his law office furniture is auctioned off next month.

The IRS posted a notice Thursday at the entrance of the City-County Building, saying that the senator's office furniture, including a mounted deer head and black bass, lamps, a love seat and desks are among items slated for auction Aug. 23.

Santiesteban, D-El Paso, who is on the Senate Finance Committee, said Thursday he started off owing the IRS about $35,000 in 1987 because an administrative assistant didn't pay the Social Security and withholding taxes.

He was not aware of the matter because he was busy with the Texas Legislature, the senator said.

"I have already paid $60,000, but it's the 25 percent in interest and penalty that's made it hard to pay off," Santiesteban said. "What really hurts is my deer head being sold off and other personal things like that."

But things are looking up now that the legislative session is over and he says he expects his law practice to pick up.

"I'm starting to make money again," he said.

DEATHS

Arcadio Rodriguez

Rosary for Arcadio Rodriguez will be recited at 7 p.m. today at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Jesse Guajardo officiating.

Services will be held 11 a.m. Saturday at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church with Father Michael Slattery officiating. Interment will follow at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Rodriguez died Thursday at his Midland home.

He was born Jan. 1, 1901, in Fort Davis, where he was reared. He met Louisa McIntire in Fort Davis and they were married June 28, 1920. He worked as a cowboy on the Coconut Herbert and the 06 ranches.

The family moved to Pecos and lived there for 10 years. They lived in Midland and Odessa for a short time before moving to Santa Fe, N.M., in the late 1950s.

He worked for the New Mexico State Highway Department in the road construction department. He retired in 1983. They moved to Midland in December 1987.

Survivors include his wife, Louisa Rodriguez of Midland; two sons, Fred Rodriguez and Henry Rodriguez of Midland; four daughters, Anita Patterson and Aurora Calvert of Midland; Candy Yvarra of El Paso, Eva Chavez of Odessa; two brothers, Frank Rodriguez of Abilene and Ismael Rodriguez of Fort Davis; three sisters, Dulces Jimenez of Fort Davis, Consuelo Groado of El Paso and Librada Alvarado of Carlsbad, N.M.; and 37 grandchildren, 47 great-grandchildren and two great-great-grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, Inc., P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas, 79702.

Terry Neal Young

Services for Terry Neal Young, 35, of Oakland, Calif., are set for 2 p.m. Saturday at Community First Missionary Baptist Church with Dr. O.L. Taylor officiating. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Jackson Mortuary.

Young died Saturday at an Oakland area hospital.

Born July 12, 1954, at Santa Anna, Young moved with his family to northern California in 1960. He graduated from Fremont High School in Oakland. He maintained his interest in theater after graduation, particularly in set design and construction.

An auto mechanic by trade, he was an auto and motorcycle racing enthusiast and particpant, as well as a Scout leader.

Survivors include his parents, Octavia C. Young of Midland and Randolph Young Jr. of Oakland; four brothers, Bobby L. Young and Randolph Young III, both of Midland and Ronnie Young of Austin, and Murray D. Young and Randolph Faustine, of California; one sister, Kiska Mona Young of California; and his grandmother Elsie Mae Coley of Midland.

W.D. Sage

GRAHAM — W.D. Sage, 69, of Graham, formerly of Midland, died Wednesday in a local hospital.

Funeral services will be Saturday at 6 p.m. in the First Baptist Church with the Rev. Edgar Jones officiating.

Burial will follow at Pioneer Cemetery under the direction of Morrison Funeral Home.

He was born Aug. 1, 1920, in DeKalb and married Martha Carlisle on Nov. 2, 1940, in Cass County.

He retired from Mobil Oil Corp. and moved to Graham in November 1981 from Midland.

Sage was a member of the First Baptist Church of Graham where he was an ordained deacon and a teacher of the adult Sunday school class.

He served in the U.S. Navy during World War II.

Survivors include his wife, Martha Sage of Graham; two sons, Wayne Sage of Waco, Dan Sage of Graham; one daughter, Jane Stevens of Graham; three sisters, Thelma Harty of Mount Pleasant, Voncile Tidwell of DeKalb, Faye Griffis of DeKalb; nine grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Dorothy Chase

Memorial services for Dorothy Chase of Midland have been set for 1 p.m. Saturday at Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with Tom Johnson officiating.

She died Wednesday at a local hospital.

Born May 26, 1917, in Dallas, she was reared in Oklahoma City. She married Dean Chase Jan. 10, 1935.

Prior to moving to Midland in the early 1950s, they had lived in several towns in Oklahoma and Kansas.

Chase was employed with Phillips and later went to work for Lario Oil and Gas in Midland. Mrs. Chase was a member of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Survivors include her husband, Dean Chase of Midland; two sons, Mike Chase of Midland and Dean Chase Jr. of St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; one daughter, Kathleen Chase Grimes of Midland; nine grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be sent to the Midland Council on Alcoholism, PO Box 1829, Midland, Texas, 79702.

Robert S. Archer

LAMESA — Former Midlander Robert Stephen Archer, 28, died Wednesday in a Lubbock hospital.

Memorial services were to be at 11 a.m. today at the First Presbyterian Church with the Revs. Dick Schmidt of Fort Worth and Tommy Alford of Farmington, Ill., officiating.

He was Assistant County Supervisor for Farmers Home Administration in Stanton and a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Midland.

Archer was a graduate of Angelo State University, an Eagle Scout and the southwest regional president of the Angelo State University Block and Bridle Association.

Survivors include his parents, Maurice and Barbara Archer of Lamesa and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Alford and Mr. and Mrs. O.M. Archer, all of Lamesa.

He was preceded in death by his twin brother, Michael Archer, in 1978.

Democratic officials appeal to labor leaders for unity

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Democratic party officials Thursday appealed for partisans in organized labor to avoid bitter primary election fights so they can unify in support of the Democratic ticket in the general election.

"I don't really care who the Democratic nominee for governor or any other office is for 1990," Texas Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle told the Texas AFL-CIO convention.

"But I care deeply that those nominees win those offices, because I know the difference between working with Democratic officeholders and working with Republicans."

The party faces a potentially bitter fight for governor between State Treasurer Ann Richards and Attorney General Jim Mattox and for lieutenant governor between Comptroller Bob Bullock and Duncanville Sen. Chet Edwards. All have close ties with organized labor.

"I'm asking you to keep your passions within due bounds in this primary season," Slagle said. "Be ready to come out of the starting blocks as soon as we have a nominee."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who is not seeking re-election, said the Republican party has been preparing for more than five years to gain a majority in the Legislature in 1990, so they can control redistricting in 1991 and undo the progress the labor federation has helped to achieve.

"If they succeed, it will take decades for Democrats to regain the majorities we now have in the Congress and the Texas Legislature," Hobby said. "We can't get so caught up in intra-party battles that we lose the war."

Hobby also applauded Harry Hubbard, who is retiring after 16 years as president of the Texas AFL-CIO.

"During that time the labor movement in Texas has grown in pride and influence," said Hobby, who also is retiring after 16 years as lieutenant governor.

Hobby cited the support of Hubbard and the AFL-CIO for legislation that created the Public Utility Commission and approved education reforms, indigent health care and workers compensation for farm workers.

Hubbard, 64, said he will work on labor-management issues with the John Gray Institute at Lamar University in Beaumont.

Joe Gunn, secretary-treasurer of the state labor federation, is expected to succeed Hubbard as president Saturday. Hobby said Gunn has worked closely with him, trying to hammer out a workers compensation bill that would improve the system while protecting the rights of workers.

"We all know what's wrong. We have an unsafe workplace — more on-the-job injuries than any other state," Hobby said. "We need stronger safety regulations," with penalties for hazardous employers, he said.

"We need to preserve jury trials, but we don't need trial de novo," he said. But he endorsed the Senate proposal that would allow the jury to see what the Industrial Accident Board, or its successor, awarded the injured worker.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, advised the 900 labor delegates to make their feelings known to local business leaders who are writing him on behalf of the House version of workers compensation reform.

"They want a system that will be a lapdog for the insurance companies, not a watchdog for justice," Parker said.

House leaders think workers are looking for an excuse to sue their employers, Parker said, but he added of workers, "I don't know any of them who wouldn't rather have a good job than a good lawsuit."

While Gov. Bill Clements blames lawyers and jury trials, Parker said, "Lawyers don't get people hurt. Juries don't get people hurt. Unsafe workplaces get people hurt."

Massachusetts resident named to head Sam Houston State

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Dr. Martin J. Anisman, vice president for academic affairs and dean of the faculty at Springfield College, will take over as president of Sam Houston State University on Sept. 1, the school announced.

Anisman, 48, was named Thursday as the replacement for the retiring Dr. Elliott T. Bowers, who has served 21 years as president of the southeast Texas school.

Bowers has spent 52 years at Sam Houston as a student, faculty member and administrator. He will turn 70 in August, his last month as president.

"We are convinced that Dr. Anisman has the vision, experience and leadership qualities to help Sam Houston achieve its potential as a great, comprehensive university," said Norman D. Elder, chairman of the Texas State University System regents.

Elder also recognized Anisman's involvement in professional and civic activities while at the Massachusetts college, including service on library and bank boards.

Anisman was one of four finalists brought to the campus for interviews with the regents Thursday and was chosen in a subsequent vote by the board.

Donald Dapelo, the newly installed grand exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, answers questions at a news conference in New Orleans Thursday. The all-male organization voted to remain all-male and approved a proposal that could make it easier for non-white men to join the fraternal order.

Elks to remain all-male, but end 'blackball rule'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Elks is still a "men-only" organization, but in the future more of those men may be non-white.

Members voted against admitting women and for doing away with the Elk's "blackball rule" at a closed business meeting Thursday on the final day of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks 125th annual convention.

Repeal of the blackball rule was approved at the urging of the Elks Lodge at Lompoc, Calif. Two black applicants there were blackballed recently, and as a result the California Attorney General's Office is investigating possible civil rights violations.

The old policy allowed any three members of an Elks lodge to reject, or "blackball" a prospective member. Some said that made it difficult for blacks to join the Elks.

Under the new policy, a two-thirds majority of a lodge's membership could approve a new member.

"I think it was a step forward. It was a rule that has caused problems for a number of lodges. I think everyone felt it was time to change," said William Wodarczak, the exalted ruler of the 1,800-member Santa Barbara lodge.

In Lompoc, about 35 miles northwest of Santa Barbara, two black men whose membership bids were rejected said they planned to reapply.

"I'm elated at the outcome," said Ernie Hutchinson, 57, a local housing official. "I'm proud of the lodge here because they spearheaded this thing."

Hutchinson said he plans to reapply immediately. Should he be accepted, "I don't think there will be a strain. I am not going in with any animosity."

Joe Martin, 56, also said he was pleased by the vote.

"I am a bit surprised, though, but it restores my faith in America," said Martin, a real estate agent.

While the Elks do have some black members nationally, several California lodges threatened legal action if rules were not changed to allow more minority representation in the group's 2,300 lodges.

Members also voted overwhelmingly against the resolution to admit women, said Donald D. Dapelo, the newly installed grand exalted ruler.

Sexism was not behind the rejection of female membership, Dapelo said.

"I think perhaps it could also be considered that the Elks are interested in protecting the rights of women to have their own organization just like we have," Dapelo said. "And there are twice as many of those, so I am told."

Elks boast a nationwide membership of roughly 1.5 million, but membership has been declining and those who wanted to admit women said that might remedy the problem.

Water shortage not only source of woes, man says

DENVER (AP) — The Pecos River water shortfalls suffered by Texas from 1952 to 1986 should not be blamed for all the economic problems of West Texas, a Washington State University agriculture economics professor testified Thursday.

Norman Whittlesey, testifying on behalf of New Mexico during a special hearing on the Pecos River dispute, said the Texas economy lost $7.8 million because of the short deliveries.

Texas has maintained that the water loss caused $51 million in damage.

Whittlesey said other factors that contributed to the economic conditions in Texas were bad weather, rising energy costs, and declining farm productivity and profitability.

Special Master Monte Pascoe is presiding over hearings to determine the method of reimbursement for water that New Mexico used from the Pecos River in violation of a compact with Texas.

In 1987, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled New Mexico used 340,100 acre-feet of water during the 1950s that it was not entitled to under the 1949 Pecos River Compact.

New Mexico has offered to repay Texas for its loss in cash, but Texas wants water.

In a later interview, special Texas Assistant Attorney General Renea Hicks said he believes Whittlesey's figures are inaccurate.

New Mexico is taking a "back to the future" approach to the loss figure, Hicks said, and is trying to establish what the Texas economy would have been like if there had been no water shortfalls.

If New Mexico would have delivered the water as required under the compact, Whittlesey testified, it would not have had a great effect on Texas' economy.

"If you translate the net (water) departures over time that are now owed to Texas, this translates into ... enough water to irrigate maybe 1,000 acres or maybe two to three full-time farms," he said. "We're talking about pretty small amounts of water here."

Earlier Thursday, John Ellis, an assistant professor of agriculture economics at Washington State University, testified that he was not allowed to talk with the Texas Agriculture Experimental Station's director to gather research for a study about the Pecos River dispute.

Man threatens to sue over imprisonment

ARDMORE, Okla. (AP) — An Inola, Okla., man free of a murder charge in the slaying of a flower shop employee says he was shocked by his arrest and may sue Carter County authorities for false imprisonment.

"They had me guilty before I could prove I was innocent. I told them I didn't do it and told them where I was at the time. It was really hard on my family, and it ruined my name," Michael Frank Greene said Thursday.

Prosecutors decided Wednesday to drop the first-degree murder charge they had filed against Greene, 37, because of new evidence and records that showed he was in a hospital in Wichita Falls, Texas, on the day Gwen Miller was killed at the flower shop.

"They walked into my room and told me I was under arrest. When they told me it was for capital murder, I like to have fell out of that bed," said Greene, who was arrested Sunday at a Lawton hospital.

Greene, who appeared in Carter County District Court Thursday to waive extradition to Garden City, Kan., on a theft of services charge, said he knew all along he would be freed of the charges in Ardmore.

"About 3 a.m. that morning (Monday), they (Ardmore police) got a flier that said they caught the guy who really did it out in New Mexico. They told me I would be released the next day, but nothing happened," Greene said. "They took their sweet time about it."

Ms. Miller was shot and killed and two other women were wounded Friday in an execution-style shooting at the flower shop. The slayings resemble shootings in Garden City, Kan., Pampa, Texas and Springer, N.M.

Prosecutors in New Mexico and Kansas have filed murder charges against Gregg Francis Braun, 28, of Garden City.

District Attorney Fred Collins of Ardmore said he was awaiting a final ballistics and fingerprint report before deciding whether to file charges against Braun in the Ardmore case.

Greene waived extradition, but not before Collins deleted from the paperwork a statement that Greene would not hold anyone in Carter County liable for his arrest.

As he went to court on the extradition matter, Greene said he might get a lawyer and file a lawsuit against Carter County and the city of Ardmore.

Meanwhile, the judge who issued the arrest warrant for Greene Sunday said if he were given the same information again he would approve an arrest warrant.

"It sounded like a good circumstantial case, assuming all that was true," Judge Lee Card said. "Apparently it was not."

Card said the affidavit said officers could prove Greene was in Kansas and Texas at the time of the killings there, and that he had spent some marked money associated with the Kansas killing.

Collins said information obtained from a Claredon, Texas, deputy about the marked money later was determined not to be true.

Meanwhile, District Attorney Harold Comer in Pampa said Thursday he is awaiting the results of tests comparing a bullet and shell casing found there with a test round from a gun recovered in New Mexico before deciding whether to drop the murder charge he filed against Greene. He said he may have those results by the end of the week.

Greene is accused there in last week's shooting death of Edley Perry Spurrier, a photo processing shop employee. Comer said Braun now is a suspect in that slaying.

Braun is being held on $1 million bond in Raton, N.M., on an open charge of murder in the New Mexico slaying. He was charged Wednesday in Garden City with two counts each of felony murder, aggravated robbery and aggravated kidnapping in the July 19 slayings of Barbara Kochendorfer, 27, and Mary Rains, 28, who were working alone in the middle of the night at Garden City convenience stores.

New Mexico authorities recovered a .25-caliber handgun from Braun's car after his arrest Sunday night. The killings in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas were believed to have been carried out with the same weapon.

Greene said Thursday he didn't know Braun, although prosecutors have said it was thought the two men — who resemble each other — ran in the same circles.

"I believe I can place him in Ardmore last Friday. Maybe not at the time of the killing, but sometime prior to or afterward. I think there is some kind of connection between the two (Greene and Braun)," Collins said.

"You know they're running in the same circles because they went into the same bars. It's incredible to think here's a fellow that's going to these three places at the same time these homicides are taking place. It's such a coincidence ... almost unbelievable. It's almost more believable to think there is a connection."

Houston's First Baptist deacons defend pastor's plagarism

HOUSTON (AP) — The chairman of the board of deacons at Houston's First Baptist Church is defending a book written by the church's pastor, even though portions of the book were taken without attribution from another writer.

"We think he seeks divine guidance when he writes," J.W. McGinty said of the book "Charismatic Theology Under the Spotlight," written by the Rev. John Bisagno.

First Baptist, with more than 20,000 members, is Houston's largest Baptist church.

The Houston Post reported Thursday that portions of the book, written in 1983, were lifted almost verbatim from a 1978 book, "The Charismatics," by the Rev. John MacArthur Jr.

Bisagno has apologized for using parts of the earlier book without attributions, but told the newspaper he was proud to have done it because of his admiration for MacArthur, a California minister.

Lance Quinn, a MacArthur assistant, said the minister was on vacation and would not comment about the book controversy.

McGinty said Thursday all 216 deacons at First Baptist supported Bisagno 100 percent and said church members would believe divine guidance would lead him to use the copied material.

Bisagno said he's written 18 or 19 books and used other authors' writings in those books as well and that he was unaware that it was necessary to credit those works in his own books.

SPILL

"Not to drill in our own waters may be the most environmentally dangerous course of action of all," he said.

He said the ban would reduce domestic production and make the nation more dependent on foreign oil.

"In this global economy, Congress can no longer play politics with these crucial issues," he said.

Hance, a Republican, praised President Bush for directing the U.S. Department of Energy to develop an "action plan" for energy security.

Darkroom technician doesn't let blindness stand in his way

By VALERIE CULP WILKERSON

LUFKIN (AP) — Steve Stewart counts driveways so he will know when he's home.

"I count driveways between my house and the road. There are 19 driveways from the road to my house, which is about two-tenths of a mile," he said.

Counting down driveways is just one of the ways Stewart has found to successfully live alone even though he is totally blind.

Stewart, 31, is a darkroom technician in the radiology department at Memorial Medical Center of East Texas. He is also a member of the Lufkin Advisory Committee for the Disabled.

He was born with congenital glaucoma and had his first eye surgery at age 4. By age 4½ he was blind in his left eye.

"I did fine until May of 1968, when a detached retina just happened. I was outside. It was a real pretty evening. I got to looking around and everything was a red color. I said, 'Daddy, does everything look red to you? Well, everything looks red to me.'"

That surgery was successful and so were many others. But he continued to have a detached retina and battled an eye infection. He underwent 18 surgeries on his right eye.

In May of 1973 he went blind. He was almost 16.

Stewart graduated from Texas School of the Blind in May of 1977 with his high school diploma. A year in a rehabilitation center taught him living and mobility skills. He learned to develop X-ray films at Parkland Hospital in Dallas and earned a certificate that qualifies him to work in any X-ray darkroom he desires.

He has worked at Memorial for about 10 years, spending the bulk of his eight-hour shifts working in the dark.

"I love my job. I enjoy it so much that a lot of times I am ready to go back after I get home."

Home is a two-bedroom mobile home in a Lufkin trailer park.

Stewart's alarm clock rings at 5 a.m. every day, whether he has to get up for work that day or not. He keeps his alarm on the same setting every day rather than have to have help with resetting it.

He shaves with a safety razor, skimming the familiar contour of his face by feel.

His clothes are kept color-segregated from the moment he buys them.

"I have white clothes to wear to work. I keep my white pants and white shirts together in my closet by the dryer. I put my white clothes and towels only in the hamper," he said.

Colored clothes go into a paper sack beside the hamper.

Some of his colored clothes have been fitted with little metal tags with Braille markings such as "BL" for blue and "BR" for brown so that he will stay color coordinated. His washer and dryer are marked in Braille as well.

Breakfast is usually eggs or toast and then Stewart unfolds his 52-inch fiberglass cane and begins his trek to the trolley stop.

"I walk out of the house at five minutes after six, so I can catch the trolley at 6:17 a.m. I usually have about five or six minutes to wait for them. This way if I get lost I have a little time to find myself."

Stewart has lived alone since 1979. But it was only when the Lufkin Transit System trolleys began running regularly last spring that he began to live more independently, released from the need to constantly rely on friends and family for his transportation.

"I feel more freedom now. When those buses came in it was the best thing that has hit town. I really enjoy those buses. I really do. All the drivers are very nice to help handicapped people," he said.

"When I am off and don't have anything to do I get up and go riding on the trolleys, sometimes for four and five hours."

Stewart has the trolley schedules memorized. His memory has grown keener since he lost his sight, he said.

"I can remember phone numbers I had back when I was in Austin, and that was in the middle '70s," he said. He relies on his memory heavily at work to handle telephone messages and film numbers. He eats his main meal of the day in the hospital cafeteria, taking advantage of the hot, wholesome food.

Home by 4:17 p.m. — trolley time — he changes into blue jeans and relaxes in front of his television.

Potter uses his art to maintain mental health

By JOE OLVERA

EL PASO (AP) — George Gonzalez looks suspiciously out at a world that almost rejected him, where he felt worthless until he discovered he had a talent.

"I was a patient in the psychiatric ward at March Air Force Base, California, when I discovered that I could draw and that I could be an artist," Gonzalez said.

Gonzalez, who has a studio in Sunland, N.M., is fast becoming one of El Paso's best potters. Many galleries throughout the United States handle his work.

Besides crafting pottery, he paints, and that seems to help him cope with the world.

"I paint about isolation, about fear and about other emotions I'm feeling," Gonzalez said. "My work reflects the way I feel. Sometimes I'm very empty inside. My art helps me express myself. It keeps me sane."

His studio, filled with finished works and works-in-progress, is a cornucopia of art. It's small and dusty, but Mexican music blaring from a radio and a big air conditioner keep the shop comfortable even in midday heat.

Gonzalez, who says he is just older than 30, spent three years in the Army. He was discharged in May 1987. He spent more than a year and a half in virtual isolation at the psychiatric hospital.

"So the Army discharged me and left me to my own designs. Unfortunately, those designs included my life in the gutter. I was literally a street person. I wouldn't shave, wouldn't bathe. In short, I was a heavy-duty alcoholic and twice I suffered through respiratory arrest.

"Those two times I had drunk an entire bottle of vodka. I was trying to kill myself, but it didn't work. I still haven't reached the point where I want to keep on living," he said. "But life does look better."

Gonzalez said the Army has declared him 100 percent disabled.

His wife, Marion, handles all the bookkeeping for the burgeoning business.

"I can't retire yet from my job with J.C. Penney, but we're hoping that real soon our business will bring in enough to support all of us," she said. The couple has two daughters, Dominique, 10, and Stephanie, 3.

"So far this year, we've grossed about $8,000, but his work sells as fast as he can make it," Mrs. Gonzalez said. "When he first started doing pottery, we had his paintings and pots all over the house. Finally we decided we had to sell some of the work."

Mrs. Gonzalez said her husband has sold his work to Macy's in New York and Neiman Marcus and the World Trade Fair in Dallas.

"What started out as art for therapy now sells throughout the U.S. and he is rapidly becoming one of El Paso's best-known potters," Mrs. Gonzalez said. "Maybe someday he can devote full time to this business."

"Right now my life is like a runaway train without any brakes. But as long as I can continue doing my pottery, I will survive," he said. "Even if people stopped buying my work tomorrow, I would still keep on doing it. I really don't care if it doesn't sell."

Gonzalez said he gets his clay from Mount Cristo Rey, which he says gives his work a certain mysticism.

"I don't know of anyone else working with Cristo Rey clay," he said. "But I don't get anything for nothing. Every time I make the trip to get more clay, I leave behind one of my pots. This is a small offering I'm making to Mother Earth.

"I'm very much into Native American traditions, and I believe we should always leave something of ourselves behind.

"If anyone should come across one of my offerings and they take it with them, I'm gratified. My gift has been accepted.

"I feel like I'm taking the best from the mountain, and I should leave my best behind. I don't want my studio to become a little factory.

"Some people have suggested I do that. But mass production is not my way. My thing is everything must be handmade."

"Right now my life is like a runaway train without any brakes. But as long as I can continue doing my pottery, I will survive. Even if people stopped buying my work tomorrow, I would still keep on doing it."

— George Gonzalez, El Paso potter

Paper wants meeting on jail open to public

HOUSTON (AP) — A meeting between Gov. Bill Clements and U.S. District Judge James DeAnda, to be held today to discuss conditions at the Harris County Jail, should be open to the public and the news media, a Houston newspaper says.

The Houston Chronicle Thursday filed a motion in federal court in an attempt to keep DeAnda from closing the meeting to the public.

Houston Chronicle lawyer John B. Hall said the meeting is essentially a pretrial conference in a pending lawsuit involving jail crowding and should be open to the public.

Harris County has filed a federal suit asking that the state be forced to accept prisoners into the Texas Department of Corrections.

The TDC, at times when the inmate population reaches 95 percent of capacity, is forced by federal court order to stop admitting new prisoners.

The suit names Clements, the Texas Department of Corrections and TDC officials as defendants.

Since Clements is expected to discuss the state's policy on prison crowding and possible legislative solutions, Hall said, the news media and members of the public have a right to hear what the governor has to say.

Priest still on hunger strike

DALLAS (AP) — Until a bishop agrees to his terms for a meeting about sexual misconduct and embezzlement allegations, a Catholic priest is vowing to maintain a hunger strike.

The Rev. Justin Lucio started fasting July 21 to end what he called an "impasse" between him Bishop Thomas Tschoepe over Lucio's 16-week leave of absence, which the priest claims was forced.

Lucio has maintained that, after he stepped down as priest of St. James Catholic Church in Oak Cliff in April, Tschoepe denied him a new assignment because of allegations he is a homosexual, had raped a woman and embezzled church money.

The bishop has denied that Lucio was forced into a leave of absence. He said the priest left voluntarily at his suggestion and that of Monsignor Robert Rehkemper, because Lucio suffers from diabetes and an ulcer.

Although Tschoepe agreed Wednesday to general meeting terms demanded by Lucio, the priest later added another requirement. The bishop has not said whether he would accept the added condition.

Tschoepe announced Wednesday that he would meet with Lucio on terms the priest set two weeks ago.

Some B-52 work halted

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Air Force has temporarily suspended some bomber refueling operations at Kelly Air Force Base in the wake of a fire and explosion aboard a B-52 that left one civilian worker dead and 11 others injured, a military spokesperson says.

A government employees union had earlier called for a halt of all work on B-52s at the base until investigators determine the cause of Monday's blaze and blast.

"We have temporarily suspended depot-level maintenance refueling operations from the second and third work shifts as a precautionary measure," base spokeswoman Phebe Brown said.

Ramiro Martinez, president of the Kelly chapter of the American Federation of Government Employees, said he was pleased that some work had been suspended, but said the entire program should have been halted pending the outcome of the investigation.

Cats break into big house

ANTHONY (AP) — Smokey the cat has finally broken into the big house with help from Warden J.D. Williams.

Corrections officials have been rounding up strays and offering them for adoption. Williams was the first to fall for the fuzzy felines that prowl the grounds of La Tuna Federal Correctional Institution.

So far, three of the 10 cats have been caught: Smokey, Catfish and the prison's namesake, Tunafish, said Barbara Pech, president of the Animal Alliance Society of El Paso.

"They were very docile cats and walked up to the people who caught them," she said.

The alliance plans to put out live traps to catch the seven cats still at large, Ms. Pech said.

ABA to offer asylum-seekers legal services

HARLINGEN (AP) — Central Americans and other political asylum-seekers will be able to get free legal services through an office the American Bar Association and other organizations officially open here today.

The groups began providing free legal service because of a shortage of attorneys available to represent the detained, often destitute asylum-seekers in South Texas, the closest border point to Central America, said Robert Lang, project coordinator for the ABA.

It is cosponsored by the State Bar of Texas and American Immigration Lawyers Association.

Few lawyers previously were available to provide pro bono (free) legal aid in the Immigration and Naturalization Service's Harlingen District.

"The key thing is to get representation for the refugees so that they do get their day in court," Lang said.

"It's almost impossible for refugees to represent themselves in a system in which they don't understand the language, and even when it's translated it's very confusing to them."

Lawyers greatly enhance an applicant's chances for political asylum, he said, because they understand the system and know how to elicit the type of information that builds cases.

Since February, the INS has conducted one-day adjudication of political asylum applicants in the Harlingen District. Those denied asylum are detained and placed in deportation proceedings in which they are guaranteed at least one appearance before a judge and a chance to reapply for asylum.

Asylum is granted to those able to show they are fleeing persecution. INS officials say most Central Americans cross the U.S. border illegally to find work, but immigration attorneys say many have valid asylum cases.

The INS provides detainees a list of legal aid groups and their telephone numbers, but attorneys say the area's handful of lawyers and paralegals who do pro bono work do not have the time to help most of the detainees.

Darrell Jordan, president of the Texas State Bar, said a federal judge's ruling last week indicates that some unrepresented applicants may not be getting a fair chance at the asylum process.

> "The key thing is to get representation for the refugees so that they do get their day in court."
>
> — Robert Lang, ABA project coordinator

Judge William Wayne Justice in Tyler determined the INS too quickly dismissed some Salvadorans' requests for work permits and ordered the agency to reconsider their cases.

Jordan said at least 40 attorneys from around the country have volunteered to do stints in South Texas for the legal aid project, which is still looking for lawyers who will work for free for at least two weeks.

Although its office officially opens today, two lawyers sponsored by two San Francisco law firms have been working with the project for the past three weeks, and won their first two asylum cases.

One of the attorneys, Joe Kennedy, said he volunteered because he had heard that "people were having asylum hearings without representation and that they needed lawyers badly. They have no knowledge of the law, they're operating with a translator and (without a lawyer) they're not going to get a fair hearing."

Setting up the pro brono office was a key recommendation in an ABA report released this week.

The report was based on a visit last March to the INS' Harlingen District and its South Texas detention center.

The report stated that applicants with legal representation are more than three times as likely to receive asylum from immigration judges as those without attorneys, yet "the level of available free legal representation is grossly inadequate given the size of the detained population."

The detention camp's population reached nearly 2,500 in March. About 1,100 were detained there this week.

Jorge Luis Perez Magdaleno, a Cuban inmate at the Webb County Law Enforcement Center in Laredo, rests his head on his hand after speaking with reporters at the center Thursday. He is one of 71 inmates on a hunger strike — which began July 19 — to protest the pace at which the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service is handling their cases. The strikers are asking to be released, since they've already served sentences for the crimes they committed.

INS spokesman attacks ruling

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — A judge's ruling in a political asylum case involving seven Salvadorans could trigger an influx of illegal aliens, U.S. authorities have warned.

Duke Austin, a spokesman for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington, suggested that the federal judge's order last week could lead to a "de facto" temporary work force in the United States made up of illegal immigrants.

In his ruling last Friday, Judge William Wayne Justice ordered the INS to reconsider work permit requests for six Salvadorans and to grant a permit for another Salvadoran while U.S. authorities review their applications for political asylum.

Justice ruled that the office of U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, which represents the INS in the case, offered "no evidence in support of these extreme predictions (that an injunction would cause a flood of illegal aliens)."

At issue is the way the INS determines if an alien should be granted authority to work here while his or her political asylum application is going through the legal process.

The request is granted only if the person's political asylum application is deemed "non-frivolous."

In the cases of the seven Salvadoran refugees, Justice ruled the INS could deny requests for work authorization only if their asylum applications were found to be "indisputably meritless" or lacked "an arguable basis in law or fact."

Austin warned that Justice's ruling could "create a program where we have no discretion on deciding which claims are frivolous."

San Antonio HUD official sent to Fort Worth as probe continues

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The manager of the local office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development has been called to the regional office of HUD in Fort Worth while an investigation into allegations of wrongdoing continues, a federal official says.

Simon Castillo, manager of the San Antonio office, has been temporarily assigned to work in the Fort Worth office, Deputy Regional HUD Administrator Walter Sevier said Thursday.

Sevier said the temporary assignment would be effective while HUD investigators look into Castillo's operation.

"I've asked him to come up to the Fort Worth office for a while," Sevier told the San Antonio Light in a telephone interview from his Fort Worth office. "He is going to be working on some housing procedures relative to property dispositions."

"The second reason I've called him here is to remove him from San Antonio because of the controversies that have been going on down there," Sevier said. "I want to get Simon Castillo out of the way for a while."

Sevier said that, while he was unsure how long Castillo would be in Fort Worth, "I told him to plan on (staying) this week and next week."

The San Antonio investigation centers includes checks into the status of an employee indicted in connection with the disappearance of funds from union coffers, Sevier said, as well as allegations of mismanagement by U.S. Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez's office.

"The program (investigation) people here have started pulling together records relative to the issues," Sevier said.

Earlier this month, Gonzalez sent a letter to HUD Secretary Jack Kemp, urging him to launch an investigation into charges that the local office was using inadequate auditing procedures, mismanaging funds, granting patronage contracts and deviating from standard procedures to protect favored employees.

Gonzalez, chairman of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, also said he was dissatisfied with what he saw as inaction on HUD's part in investigating his charges, and called on the General Accounting Office to look into the allegations.

Brown calls Bentsen good candidate for '92

AUSTIN (AP) — While saying he's not taking sides, Democratic national Chairman Ron Brown says Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen could make an appealing presidential candidate in 1992.

"I have tremendously high regard for Sen. Bentsen. He is clearly one of the leaders of our party," Brown said Thursday, midway through a three-day tour of the state.

Brown lauded Bentsen's performance in 1988 as the party's vice presidential candidate for Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis.

Asked if Bentsen could lure moderate and conservative Democrats back into the national party fold, Brown said, "Many Democrats would welcome him." But the party chairman said he remains neutral in any presidential jockeying.

"Running for president is a decision the individual himself has to make," Brown said.

Brown, who visited Houston Wednesday and heads for Dallas today, said the trip indicates how much importance the national party places on Texas. No Democrat has been elected president without carrying Texas, he noted.

"Clearly and unequivocally, Texas is absolutely critical to the Democratic Party," he said. "We have got to recapture (the governor's office) here. We've got to have both (U.S.) senators as Democrats."

Texas Democrats are poised to win back the governor's office since Gov. Bill Clements, the only Republican to hold it in the 20th century, is retiring next year, Brown insisted. Both state Treasurer Ann Richards and Attorney General Jim Mattox want the job.

"We've got formidable candidates seeking the Democratic nomination ... We've got to have a Democratic governor in the state of Texas," he said.

On another issue, Brown said he sees no reason for the party to shift from its pro-choice stance on abortion.

With polls showing majorities favoring abortion and in light of the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling that gave state legislatures more authority to regulate them, Brown said, "We now see Republicans scampering around looking for new positions" on the issue.

Miss West Texas to be crowned

From Staff Reports

Fourteen women from seven cities will vie for the title of Miss West Texas 1989 7 p.m. Saturday at the Holiday Inn Centre, 6201 E. Hwy. 80 in Odessa, during the annual Miss West Texas Scholarship Pageant sponsored by the Odessa Jaycees. The winner of the pageant will compete in the Miss Texas America Pageant in Fort Worth next July.

Bloodworth

Each contestant will participate in evening gown, swimsuit, talent and interview competition.

Special guest for this year's pageant will be the newly crowned Miss Texas 1989 Leah Kay Lyle of Plainview, who will represent the Lone Star State in the Miss America Scholarship Pageant Sept. 9. Mistress of ceremonies will be Gloria Gilbert Baron, Miss Texas 1982. Ms. Lyle and Miss West Texas 1988 Lori Bloodworth of Odessa will crown a new Miss West Texas.

The pageant also include entertainment performed by several local celebraties.

Along with the crown and title of Miss West Texas, the winner will receive tuition and fees paid to the University of Texas at the Permian Basin, Odessa College or Midland College, a cash scholarship, a complete competition wardrobe for the Miss Texas Pageant, a trip to compete in the state pageant and other prizes.

Three Midlanders will be competing for the crown. They are Paige Prado, Allison Kirkpatrick and Felecia Long. Other contestants are Christine Friedel, Darcey Rushing and Kara Evenson, all of Odessa; Jodie Brownd, Karen Higgins and Julie Brownd, all of Monahans; Eloise Jones of Kermit; Stacy Long of Stanton; Cary Brooks of Big Spring, and Chiva McKinley and Kristy Kitchens, both of Lubbock.

Ms. Bloodworth, the reigning Miss West Texas, placed 11th out of 69 contestants at the Miss Texas Scholarship Pageant July 8 in Fort Worth. She also received a non-finalist talent award and a newcomer award. She was awarded a total of $1,200 in scholarship money for the three awards.

Tickets for the 1989 Miss West Texas Pageant will be available at the door. Adults tickets are $5, children's tickets are $3.

Experts shine light on unending maze of suntanning protection lotions, oils

By DONNA KATO
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Suntanning lotions and suntanning oils.

Super sunblock, total sunblock and waterproof sunblock.

Sun protective factors — commonly called SPF — of 2, 15, 30 and 50.

Preparations for pre-sun, after sun and no sun.

Formulas designed just for noses, eyes, children and sensitive skin.

Although tans have been equated with fashion and beauty ever since a bronzed Coco Chanel came back from a cruise 60 years ago, sunbathing rituals have changed in light of modern evidence linking sun exposure to skin cancer.

"There's been a pronounced switch in sun products recently from those that promote tanning to those that screen," said Mitzi Moults, a spokeswoman for the Skin Cancer Foundation, a non-profit educational organization that concentrates its efforts on prevention and early detection of the disease.

"There are many marketing techniques that the consumer must weed through to find the right personal protection."

THERE IS indeed a growing array of sun products lining supermarket and drugstore shelves and cosmetic counters. How you choose among them depends on your sensitivity to the sun, your skin type and how much time you spend outdoors, said Dr. Jack McCleary, a Los Angeles-area dermatologist.

"Beyond that, the do's and don'ts get too complicated, and people tend to shy away and not use anything at all — which is probably worse when the sun is a concern," he said.

Physicians generally recommend that everyone use a sunscreen with a sun protective factor of at least 15, which technically means you should be able to stay under the sun 15 times longer than the usual time it takes for you to burn. The SPF number indicates the sunscreen's ability to absorb the sun's ultraviolet B rays; the higher the SPF number, the more protection.

Although some doctors say sunscreens containing chemicals that filter the B rays provide enough protection, others say a sunblock should also screen ultraviolet A rays, which penetrate at a deeper level.

"These rays are strong all yearround, even through the car window while you're driving," said Dr. Nicholas Lowe, a clinical professor of dermatology at the University of California, Los Angeles, and director of the Southern California Dermatology and Psoriasis Treatment Center in Santa Monica.

"Up until recently, no one really knew that UVA rays, the so-called tanning rays, were damaging," added Dr. Paul Wolfish, chief of dermatology at Kaiser Permanente Medical Center, Woodland Hills, and an assistant clinical professor of dermatology at UCLA. "Now we know that it affects the immune system and perhaps even the blood vessels."

CONSUMERS ARE advised to look for sunscreens containing benzophenones, which zap both A and B rays.

Lowe and Wolfish also recommend a relatively new product, Photoplex, currently the only sunscreen marketed in the United States that contains Parsol 1789, a chemical developed in Europe and considered the best at absorbing the A rays.

Before you even begin examining the bewildering number of bottles at the store, Wolfish suggests you have an idea of what you need to make the selection process simpler:

The most important information on a label is the SPF number. Until recently, the highest rating was 15, and this is the number most often recommended by physicians.

Obviously, the fairer your skin is, the higher the SPF-number lotion you should be using. (The Food and Drug Administration, which monitors sun lotions as a drug, still is analyzing the information for SPFs over 15.)

Consider personal characteristics, such as skin condition, allergies to certain ingredients and the circumstances you'll be in.

Use lotions marked non-comedogenic or those that are alcohol-based on your problem areas.

There have been reports of allergic reactions to para-aminobenzoic acid (PABA), the main ingredient that absorbs the UVB rays.

In addition, there were recent reports that padimate O, a derivative of PABA and a known nitrosamine, is carcinogenic. The FDA denies this information, claiming that its studies of padimate O have not shown any toxicity to human beings.

"The FDA has done some testing, but nothing has confirmed (padimate O) to be a carcinogen," said Susan Cruzan, an FDA public information official.

THE COMMON concern about PABA is whether the user is allergic to it, Wolfish said. If you are allergic to PABA, look for a label that indicates the product is PABA-free.

If you plan on swimming or participating in sports, choose a waterproof sunblock.

Sunscreens must pass FDA guidelines, and an expensive one is no more effective than a house brand. However, like cars, one may feel or smell more luxurious than another, Wolfish said.

Formulas for children contain the same active ingredients but probably eliminate irritating substances, such as perfumes.

After-sun and pre-sun lotions are more or less marketing gimmicks and don't enhance protection, Wolfish said.

FAMILY MATTERS

Communication key to healthy relationship

By JIM MAY

DEAR FAMILY: My husband and I never talk anymore. He is a good man and works very hard for all of us so that I can stay home with the children. When he got laid off when his company shut down, he went out and got two jobs. He has worked two jobs for almost three years now. He works his regular job from 8 to 5 (a.m.) and then works parttime at (convenience store) from 6 to 11 (p.m.).

May

I really do appreciate his working so hard, but we never get to see him. On the weekends he is exhausted and just wants to sleep. I try to keep the children away from him but they want to see their daddy. He gets mad at them for making too much noise and for what I think is just being kids. Whenever I try to tell him that we never get to see him, he just says that I nag him all the time and that he's doing the best that he can. I want to help him but I don't know what to do. What can I do? GIVING UP

DEAR GIVING UP: You and your husband are past due for an honest sharing meeting.

Schedule a weekend meeting with your husband, when the children and other distractions, are not around. In the meeting share your feelings as well as your thoughts, just as you did in your letter to me. For example: "The kids and I are very grateful for all your hard work, but we feel lonely without you and want to live on less so we can be with you more."

Share your feelings so your husband can feel somewhat free to share his. We males aren't taught to share our feelings, but we do have them. I bet your husband would be touched to know that "who he is" (husband, father, friend) is more important to you and the children than "what he does."

DEAR FAMILY: I am in the process of getting divorced from my husband. He had been drinking for years and I finally had enough. He was never a good husband or father but I stayed married becuase I don't believe in divorce. I kept talking to my pastor, but things finally got so bad I just had to get out.

I am having a very hard time with this divorce. Even though I know that I am doing the right thing, he keeps coming over "to see the kids" and winds up staying for dinner. I am ashamed to say that sometimes he spends the night.

I am very confused. I know that I should be away from him and his drinking and yelling, but right now he is being so nice.

He keeps saying that he wants to work on the marriage but won't go talk to a counselor. He says that he will just stop drinking and things will be fine. I tell him that we have done all this before at least three times. I do love him but I know that it won't work if we don't get some help. Am I right? CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: You are right. I strongly encourage you to run, don't walk, to the next available Al-Anon meeting. Whether your "almost ex-" is an alcoholic or not, you are interacting with alcoholic behavior patterns. You deserve to be treated as a worthwhile woman.

When we live in a dysfunctional situation long enough, we begin to think it is normal. You have a God-given blessing to be respected as a human being — claim that blessing.

While you are working in Al-Anon, you can take a realistic look at your marriage. Your husband says he wants to stay married, yet he is unwilling to seek professional help. If you decide that you want to work on the marriage, make seeking professional help as a couple a requirement. Make certain the professional you choose actively works with alcoholic familes.

You are stuck in a difficult situation. He has taught you that your "job" is to enable his drinking — that you aren't worth very much as a person and have no rights. That's not true. Break the lie. Go to Al-Anon quick. Let me know how you are doing. I know from experience how damaging these family situations can be.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

DEAR ABBY

Home-study course way off track, grandma thinks

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please help me. My daughter has taken her children out of public school to teach them herself. I called the Board of Education, and I was told it is legal to use a home-study course for children.

Abby, my daughter didn't graduate from high school herself. She was very headstrong and refused to attend classes, so when she was old enough to quit school, she quit.

Her children are 7, 8 and 12 years old, and they've all had difficulties with their studies. The 7-year-old is repeating first grade next year, the 8-year-old has just completed two years in the first grade, and the 12-year-old will have to repeat the fifth grade.

This home-study course requires only 4½ hours of schooling per day, and I doubt if these children will get the education they need in this little time. Also, my daughter is no teacher.

She says she wants her children to have a good Christian education, free from drugs and the bad influence of classmates whose upbringing she considers inferior to her children's.

I told her that I do not approve of isolating her children in this manner, but she insists that I don't know what I am talking about. Please give me your opinion for the sake of these children. — WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: Some home-study programs have worked very well; others have not. It depends upon the competence of the teacher. (It's usually the mother.)

In view of the problems your grandchildren have encountered thus far in school, I suggest that they be tested for reading (and learning) disabilities — regardless of whether they are taught at home or in a public school.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter was born with a cleft palate (harelip). At 4 months of age, this birth defect was corrected beautifully with surgery. She's now 2½ years old and the thin scar under her nose is barely noticeable.

Before her surgery, I took pictures of her and was not ashamed of her defect. I thought she was just as beautiful as my other children. The other day we were looking through the family album, and my husband said he thought we should put away the pictures of our daughter before she had her surgery.

I don't see anything wrong with showing our daughter, and others, those pictures. What do you think, Abby?

Would parents who have had children with facial abnormalities that were later corrected please respond? Better yet, any readers who were children who saw their "before and after" pictures, please respond. — COMMON-SENSE MOM

DEAR MOM: I would put those pictures away until your daughter is old enough to make that decision herself. You had the abnormality corrected because you didn't want her to be "different"; since it was corrected and no longer exists, I see no point in immortalizing it in a family album. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: I am a senior citizen. Several years ago, I made arrangements with my bank for a safe deposit box to be jointly shared with my son. All the paperwork completed, I never gave it a second thought. I have had an account with that bank for 43 years.

Yesterday when my son went to the bank to remove an item from our safe deposit box, he learned that he did not have access to it! The card with his signature on it was not on file. Fortunately he discovered this yesterday, phoned me immediately and it was straightened out. (Misfiling his card was an error on the part of the bank.)

Abby, I am writing this to suggest that everyone who has a safe deposit box pay a test visit to the bank to ensure that he or she has access to it.

Thanks for all the years of enjoyable and helpful reading. — SENIOR CITIZEN, CORONA DEL MAR

Biofeedback therapy tried on syndrome

By REX DALTON
Copley News Service

At night in bedrooms across America, the sleeping phenomenon strikes.

One dozing mate kicks, and a stricken bedmate awakes with a howl.

For as yet unexplained reasons, some people kick, jerk or move their legs at night, disrupting their rest and sapping their daytime energy. The little-understood syndrome is called periodic leg movements during sleep, or nocturnal myoclonus.

"It is often the bed partner that tells you about the problem," said psychologist Sonia Ancoli-Israel, assistant director of the sleep disorders clinic at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in La Jolla, Calif. "Some couples sleep in separate beds the problem is so severe."

Scientists at the VA are focusing on periodic leg movements as a sleep-disrupting force, particularly among older people.

Although a 1982 study of 100 subjects from the general population found the nighttime leg movements were absent in those under 30 and were found in only 5 percent of those 30 to 50 years old, they were seen in 29 percent of those 50 years or older. Leg movement also is seen sometimes in pregnant women.

"The side effects of this disorder can be excessive daytime sleepiness or insomnia," said Ancoli-Israel. "We feel this is probably a very prevalent problem that can be extremely debilitating, since daytime functioning is hampered."

THERE CURRENTLY is no sufficient therapy for nocturnal leg movements, Ancoli-Israel said, noting sleep-inducing medications exacerbate other more severe problems.

Researchers are considering behavior modification, through biofeedback, as one treatment.

Estimates vary, but authorities say that from 10 percent to 45 percent of the general population has insomnia in varying degrees and for different reasons.

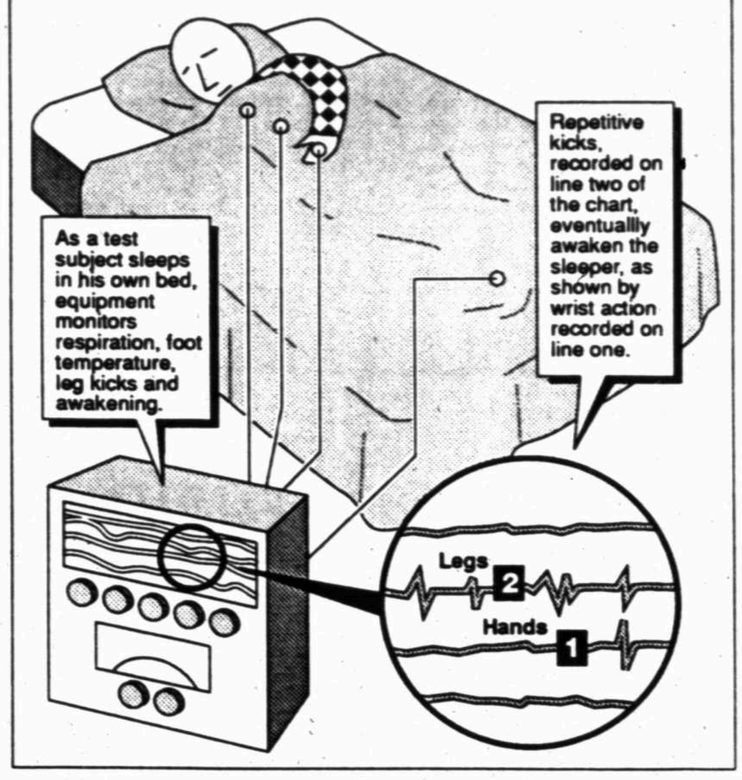
Ancoli-Israel hypothesizes that some people who feel they suffer from insomnia actually may fall asleep, but continually are awakened by their leg movements.

Reviewing records of more than 1,200 insomniacs who had been seen at VA in recent years, the VA doctors found that 14 percent of the patients complaining of inability to sleep ended up with a diagnosis of leg kicks, Ancoli-Israel said.

The kicks and leg jerks vary in intensity. Some individuals periodically kick a few times; others do it hundreds of times throughout the night, prompting almost a twilight sleep, where the individual doesn't know if he or she has slept at all.

Kicking the habit

Many people fail to get a good night's sleep due to uncontrolled kicking and leg movements. Researchers have found that the victims often have cold feet. Biofeedback techniques may increase blood flow in the legs during the night, reducing leg movements.



CNS Graphic

WHAT CAUSES the leg kicks and jerks is unknown, authorities say.

Ancoli-Israel and colleagues are studying a group of 25 individuals to test preliminary findings that the leg movements in sleep are tied to lower-than-normal temperatures in the legs.

They theorize that these lower temperatures may be linked to circulatory problems. Because of circulatory abnormalities, the normal blood flow is disrupted, prompting the temperature of the leg to drop slightly. This then leads the body to initiate the leg kicks, which may increase blood flow and raise temperature, according to the theory.

If their theory is true, they will be looking to develop a therapy to raise leg temperature, possibly using biofeedback.

"For me," the psychologist said, "it is very exciting that there might be a treatment in a behavioral method."

Ancoli-Israel said discussions on the rate of leg kicks at a national workshop of the Biofeedback Society (now called the Association of Applied Psychophysiology and Biofeedback) in Albuquerque, N.M., led to her research on the topic.

A. Ronald Seifert, a clinical psychologist now in Atlanta who was attending the workshop, told her about a patient who had night kicks and suffered from lower leg temperatures.

The two then collaborated on a 1986 study examining the correlation between the two symptoms.

The VA's Dr. Mary Lemon, another collaborator, called all the La Jolla sleep clinic's patients who had complained of night kicks.

"We found people with leg kicks had a higher rate of complaints of cold feet," said Ancoli-Israel. Many of these had severe night chills, she said, noting some slept "with an electric blanket in the middle of a Santa Ana (a hot, dry weather condition) in San Diego."

One 79-year-old patient with cold feet and a particularly high rate of night jerks — more than 500 per night — was brought in for biofeedback training to warm his feet, she said.

BIOFEEDBACK WORKS like a physiological mirror, making a patient aware of what is going on internally in his or her body.

A series of monitors is hooked to a patient's skin. These monitors are connected to a machine that produces signals representing internal functions. By having a patient concentrate on images, physiological changes can be achieved in muscle tension, blood pressure or body temperature. As the signals change, the patient can monitor the impact of thoughts on how the body is functioning.

A person might imagine himself on a beach in a hot sun as a way of influencing body temperature, Ancoli-Israel noted.

These methods were used with the 79-year-old man, reducing his kicks from 536 per night to about 20, according to a 1986 published report on the method.

This case prompted the study of the 25 patients to see if these results can be achieved in a larger population.

At home in their bedrooms, patients in the study are hooked through tiny monitors to a small device that measures respiration, wrist movement (an indicator of a patient waking up) and leg movement on the first night.

Then during the second night of the study, the doctors monitor when a patient awakens, the movement of each leg and the temperature of each leg.

The 25 patients include those with cold feet and night leg kicks, those with leg movement and no cold feet, and those who are healthy, Ancoli-Israel said.

None of the patients has circulatory problems, diabetes or potentially more severe sleep disorders, she said.

ANCOLI-ISRAEL SAID she hopes to have results of the study completed and published later this year. If there is a significant correlation between leg temperature and night kicks, the researchers will seek funding for a bigger study, one that may lead to a therapy and a good night's sleep.

More parents are putting families ahead of careers

New York Times News Service

A new kind of family may be moving onto your block:

■ Dad, working part-time, gets the kids up and fed and off to school while mom, also a part-time worker, takes over in the afternoons.

■ A mother with an MBA accepts a part-time bookkeeping job so she can spend time with her kids.

■ Six working mothers at a major financial institution share three jobs.

■ And several full-time mothers don't believe that a day-care provider should be bringing up their babies.

Publishers predict the next trend in books will have to do with getting off the fast track.

If you are female, the birth of your child might send you reeling back into the family room never to emerge again.

If you do return to work, you are still in the majority, but just barely — 50.8 percent of married women rejoined the workforce in 1987 within a year of having babies.

That trend may have reached a plateau. Figures from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics show that, after rising steadily for 10 years, the number of women entering the workforce who have children under 5 has "paused."

The number of mothers working or looking for work was the same in 1987 as in 1988, indicating that perhaps the influx of working mothers into the labor force has leveled out.

While some of these women may feel a pang of envy at their neighbor's new Mazda and cringe whenever they see their worn-out couch, they have concluded that they can't have a well-paying, full-time job and spend enough time with their family.

NANCY BRONSTEIN, who lives in the San Francisco suburb of Belmont, is on the "mommy track" at work, which is exactly where she wants to be.

"Family comes first," says Bronstein, 34, who is the manager of human resources systems planning at Bank of America in San Francisco, where she works three days a week, and has three children at home under the age of 5.

"I didn't want to look back at my life 20 years from now and say I could have spent more time with my family."

Besides, she confesses, she was envious of her husband, Max Gisko, a free-lance illustrator who works at home.

"The kids were seeing him more than they were seeing me," she says.

Now, "I take my oldest to preschool in the morning. I really wanted to do that. And this will sound strange — I wanted to be home to make dinner, because my husband had been doing that.

In her new book, "The Second Shift," University of California at Berkeley sociology professor Arlie Hochschild explored dual-career family life and didn't like what she saw.

In interviews with 50 families throughout the San Francisco Bay Area, Hochschild found that women who work full-time were still putting in 15 hours a week when they came home.

"WHAT I saw were couples with two full-time jobs put together, with the third job of raising children.

"They are the mainstream family and it is here to stay, but this often produces a great deal of strain on the marriage, with women feeling it most directly.

"In my study, all the women worked full-time; some marriages were happy, some not.

"The difference was not caused by the fact that the women worked, the difference was that in the happy marriages, the husband helped out at home taking care of the children."

Part-time work has been the answer for Bob and Kate Lloyd. It not only gives them more time with their two children, it also lets them realize their dream of bringing up their kids in the country.

ON HIS days at home, Bob is the complete househusband, taking care of daughters Colleen, 7, and Meghan, 2.

"I saw my own dad on weekends, basically," Bob says. "I know that I feel closer to my kids than my dad did to me."

Copley News Service

At Stanford University they have already designed a machine that could remove both cholesterol and AIDS from the human body.

Now all they need is some sugar daddy to pay for its construction.

The machine is the brainchild of K. Eric Drexler, and when built it would be about 150 nanometers — or one-fifth of a micro — long.

In other words, one 1/100th the size of your average human body cell.

Drexler's whole field of research, in fact, centers around such tiny measurements — a field he calls nano-technology.

And he's not alone in his theories.

In the early 1960s, the Nobel Prize winner in quantum electrodynamics, Richard Feynman, proposed that humans would one day build ordinary machines that would in turn build smaller ones, which in turn would build even smaller ones and so on until atoms could be rearranged in any fashion we fancy.

Drexler is really only expanding on Feynman's proposal with his notion of nano-size virus zappers.

Drexler says someday we may inject a fleet of miniature computers into a person's blood stream programmed to disarm cholesterol, AIDS, cancer or whatever unwanted particles they come up against.

U.S. farmers suffer from overseas competitors' problems

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Agriculture Department economist says American farmers can suffer when overseas competitors run into severe economic problems. Soybeans and wheat are a case in point.

Gregory Gajewski of the department's Economic Research Service said Brazil and Argentina were examples of countries with large international debt burdens, domestic pressures and rapid inflation.

In Argentina, prices of farm "inputs" rose 17 percent in March, nearly 80 percent in May, and more than 100 percent in June, he said. In Brazil, these inputs, or items needed for farm production, rose more than 1,000 percent last year and are still going up.

Both countries are major exporters of agricultural commodities. Brazil is a prime competitor of the United States in soybeans, and Argentina is a traditional wheat exporter.

Gajewski said a critical factor in the two countries has been their government-controlled exchange rates.

Brazil's currency, the novo cruzado, was overvalued by 20 percent to 40 percent earlier this year, he said. But the government was reluctant to devalue because devaluations add to short-term inflation.

"With the overvalued currency and dropping world soybean prices, the prices Brazilian bean growers received were too low cover costs," Gajewski writes in the August issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine. "To protest, the growers stopped selling their soybeans for two weeks in June."

He added: "Though the government responded with a 12 percent devaluation, half the crop remains to be sold. Sales likely will be concentrated in the next few months."

The USDA has estimated Brazil's 1988-89 soybean harvest at a record 22 million metric tons, and expects exports to be up by about two-thirds from last season. But the department expects 1989-90 production to be down and that exports will remain about the same.

"Brazilian bean output has grown 45 percent in the 1980s," Gajewski said. "But, had the economic growth not faltered under the heavy international debt burden, much of this extra bean output could have gone to support the then-growing chicken industry.

"Instead, with people's incomes off, local demand for meat fell, and soybean exports surged. So U.S. farmers face more competition in the world bean market."

In Argentina, wheat production is expected to increase this year, reflecting a recovery from drought, higher world prices and recent policy reforms by a newly elected president.

Currency was devalued by more than 50 percent this month, and the new government has cut interest rates on short-term agricultural credit.

"Both moves, combined with recent good weather, increased farmers' incentives to grow wheat for export," Gajewski said. Consequently, USDA boosted its projection of Argentine wheat exports in 1989-90 by 7 percent.

"Bottom line: U.S. farmers will feel some extra competition in the world wheat market because of policy decisions made in Buenos Aires," he said.

It's time for conservation program

An open sign-up period for the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) has been announced by the U.S. Department of Agriculture starting this week and ending Aug. 4. During this ninth sign-up, as with the eighth, some cropped wetlands and cropland subject to scour erosion as well as highly erodible lands are eligible to be bid into the CRP.

Kiker

Lands are eligible for the program if the lands were cropped in two of the five crop years from 1981 to 1985 and meet other eligibility criteria. Land subject to scour must have erosion caused by out-of-bank water flows which can be expected to flood at least once every 10 years.

More than 4 million acres of cropped wetlands were in production in the United States in 1982. Bringing these lands into the program is expected to produce additional environmental benefits.

The majority of this acreage is along major rivers. The enrolled land must be planted to trees or another approved vegetative cover.

Persons wishing to participate in the CRP may obtain additional information from their local Agricultural Stablization and Conservation Service county office.

Fresh vegetables are not out of the question, even if planting space is limited to a few flower beds around your home.

Many vegetables do well in flower beds and planter boxes with only a little extra care.

Leaf lettuce makes an ideal border plant and it will grow in many areas that receive only partial sunlight. Harvest time for most varieties is 45 to 60 days after planting. Ruby, the red-leaf variety, not only provides food for the table, but also adds color to your flower bed.

Other vegetables that grow well in flower beds with limited sunlight include onions, chives, leeks, parsley and garlic.

For flower beds that receive five to six hours of sunlight a day, broccoli, cabbage, spinach, beets and carrots do exceptionally well.

If your beds or boxes receive eight or more hours of sunlight a day, tomatoes, eggplants and peppers are a good crop.

Depending on where you live in Texas, harvest may continue through the fall and into the winter.

There are additional considerations for vegetables planted in flower beds:

- Cold-susceptible crops should be planted on the south side of the house for additional protection.
- Water the plants regularly to keep them stress-free, especially during the late summer and fall as the crops near maturity.
- Small amounts of fertilizer sprinkled around the vegetables during the season will help produce high yields and control disease and insects.

Insects, salt, drought killing Sierra's trees

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Insects, salt and drought are killing more than 20 percent of the standing timber in the national forests of the central Sierra Nevada, says the U.S. Forest Service.

Salt used by the California state highway department to control snow and ice is to blame for the most visible tree kills — corridors of dead pine and fir along highways over the crest of the Sierra.

And drought, which stressed and weakened the trees, has set them up for insect kills.

"The bark beetles are just responding to what nature has dealt us, that is, three years of drought," said John Neisess of the U.S. Forest Service. "The only thing we can do is hope for rain."

Drought weakened those trees, too. But state officials acknowledge that the 17,605 tons of salt it mixed with sand and spread on highways in the Sierra area counties last winter was excessive.

The Forest Service estimates that a million board-feet of timber have been lost as a result of salt kill along central Sierra highways above the 4,000-foot level.

"We plan to reduce the amount we use next year," said Pat Miller, a state transportation spokeswoman. "We're continually looking for a substitute for salt."

The Lake Tahoe Basin has been dealt a double whammy: extensive beetle kill and salt damage.

"It's an environmental tragedy," said Tom Martens, executive director of the League to Save Lake Tahoe. The league has counted more than 7,000 dead trees along the 72-mile network of highways around the Tahoe Basin, which crosses the California-Nevada border.

"The bark beetles are just responding to what nature has dealt us, that is, three years of drought. The only thing we can do is hope for rain."

— John Neisess, U.S. Forest Service

James Craine, of the Timber Association of California, said the beetle kill is so extensive that "people who have green timber under contract will probably shift operations into salvage."

Once the trees — ponderosa, Jeffery and sugar pine, incense cedar, and white and red fir — have been infested by beetles, foresters have no practical way to save them.

The tree-killing insects create egg galleries which, when their occupants hatch, destroy the cambium or growth layer. Healthy trees have enough sap to keep the insects out.

"There are some pesticides that are effective on bark beetles, but it's impractical to use them on a forest-wide basis," said David Thomas, a forestry expert.

"Normal weather will bring (the trees) back, but right now the insects are just creating havoc."

Third World debt crushing U.S. farmers' hopes for export market

WASHINGTON (AP) — The emerging Third World was once viewed eagerly as one of the American farmer's best hopes of staying in the export big-time, a foreign market that grew by huge leaps and showed little sign of slackening.

But that was before huge debt problems settled on the Third World. Today, Brazil leads the list with foreign debts totaling $120 billion, and Mexico is not far behind at $107 billion — and there are others.

"The debt problem has proved to be highly intractable, and will probably limit growth in the world economy for years to come," says Agriculture Department economist Matthew Shane.

Estimates indicate Third World debt has reduced U.S. agricultural exports by about $3 billion a year since 1982, Shane said in the August issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine published by the department's Economic Research Service.

"Before the debt problem, developing countries were the fastest growing market for U.S. agricultural exports," said Shane, deputy director of the agency's agricultural trade analysis division. "During the 1970s, developing countries increased their purchases of U.S. farm products by nearly 11 percent per year, after inflation."

But in the 1980s, purchases dropped at an annual rate of 4 percent. Even so, the Third World's share of U.S. commodity exports has risen to more than 40 percent.

"The debt problem has constrained imports (of Third World countries) in two ways," he said. "First, governments' immediate response to a debt repayment problem is to reduce imports, freeing foreign exchange earned from exports for additional debt payments.

"Second, in the longer term, debt payments compete with investment for national savings. Reduced investment lowers long-term economic growth, and thereby shrinks demand for U.S. agricultural products."

Shane said that between 1973 and 1981, U.S. agricultural exports to countries now considered "problem" debtors climbed an average of 15.4 percent a year.

But from 1981 through 1987, exports to those countries fell an average of 10 percent annually.

Although Brazil and Mexico head the list of debt-burdened farm customers, other problem debtors include Argentina, Chile, Morocco, Nigeria and the Philippines.

A problem country in the context of U.S. agricultural exports was defined as one with foreign debt over $10 billion and having repayment problems since 1982.

"The share of total agricultural exports going to problem debtor countries rose to 14 percent in 1980 but has since fallen to 10 percent," Shane said. "Without substantial debt relief, these countries will become stagnant markets for U.S. farm products."

Shane said that — in contrast to the debt-burdened countries — there are "four tigers" in East and Southeast Asia — Hong Kong, South Korea, Singapore and Taiwan — that have used expanding export earnings to increase imports.

From 1986 to 1988, U.S. agricultural sales to the four increased 54 percent, compared with a 34 percent growth in overall U.S. farm exports, he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers soon may be enjoying home-grown cocoa from Puerto Rico instead of relying entirely on foreign production, according to a team of Agriculture Department scientists.

Cocoa, the raw ingredient of chocolate, was tried in the 1940s as a crop in Puerto Rico but failed because of disease and insect problems, said agronomist Edmundo Rivera of the department's Agricultural Research Service.

However, he said in a report Tuesday by the agency, Puerto Rico has been free of black pod fungus, the disease that threatens production in other areas. But problems still persist, including the ability of cocoa crops to tolerate acid soil and resist insect damage.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says a mystery fungus, perhaps from Japan, has riddled gypsy moths in the Northeast this summer and may turn into a new weapon against the destructive pests.

"This is the first time a fungus has been known to cause a massive die-off of gypsy moth caterpillars in North America, said entomologist Ann Hajek of the department's Agricultural Research Service. "I saw single trees with thousands of caterpillar corpses."

Hajek, based at the agency's laboratory in Ithaca, N.Y., has been working to identify the fungus, which was found in the western Connecticut towns of Wilton and Hamden. She said the same fungus probably killed the pests in areas of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New Hampshire.

"Whatever the fungus is, it's definitely an addition to our arsenal of weapons against gypsy moths," she said Wednesday in a report by the agency. "It could provide a new method for biological control for these pests."

WASHINGTON (AP) — A herd of prolific Chinese hogs has been officially admitted into the United States for breeding experiments.

The 140 hogs were released after four months of quarantine and testing at the Agriculture Department's animal import center on Fleming Key near Key West, Fla., James W. Glosser, administrator of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, said Wednesday.

Three breeds with exotic names are involved: Meishan, Ming and Feng-Jing. The animals were obtained through a contract between the department's Agricultural Research Service and the Chinese National Animal Breeding Stock Import and Export Corp.

Amaro, Gonzalez, Alicea lead Angels, 8-3

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

It's hard to say who deserves most of the credit in Midland's 8-3 win over Shreveport Thursday night.

Credit could go to Ruben Amaro, who, for Midland, had three hits in four at bats, a double, scored two runs and stole a base.

It could go to Otto Gonzalez. The Angel catcher had three RBIs in the first two innings.

Or it could go to Miguel Alicea, who struck out seven in four sparkling relief innings for Midland.

But most likely, despite all the Halo heroics, the credit could go to Shreveport starter Scott Gay, who probably would pass on accepting any pats on the back from the Angels.

Gay had a rough, rough outing. After giving up two runs on sacrifice flies in the first, Gay walked four batters in the second, including two with the bases full.

Gay issued six of his seven free passes in the first two innings, sparking Midland manager Max Oliveras to comment after the game that hurlers — whether they be Angels or Captains — cannot do that and get away with it in Angels Stadium.

Yes, Midland finally got a break from the more-than-decent pitching that has been presented them by East division teams this season. The Angels broke a five game losing streak with the win, and retained their hold on first place in the Texas League West. With a 19-18 record, Midland increased its lead to 1½ games over Wichita, which fell to Tulsa, 8-4, Thursday night.

Midland scored six of its eight runs on just three singles in the first two innings.

Shreveport collected all its hits and runs in the second and seventh innings.

In the Shreveport second, Rich Aldrete and Craig Colbert had back-to-back singles. Aldrete came home on an error by second baseman Mark Howie and, on the same play, Colbert came home on a throwing error when Amaro, the Midland center fielder, overthrew third base trying to toss out Colbert. Shreveport catcher Steve Decker, who hit the ball which led to the double error, ended up on third and remained there as Erik Johnson popped out to short to end the inning.

The only other Captain run came five innings later when Decker singled and came home on a Gregg Ritchie double. Those two hits were the only flaws in an otherwise almost perfect four innings for Alicea.

"I had good stuff today," Alicea said. "A lot of sliders, change ups. You have to throw strikes in this ball park."

Alicea had seven Ks in four frames. Midland pitching coach Gary Ruby had nothing but words of praise for Alicea and his 15 ball, 48 strike performance. Thursday's performance, Alicea's first save for Midland, was his longest stint of the year, as he had never thrown more than two innings of relief when with Palm Springs earlier in the season.

"One thing about Miguel," Ruby said, "he doesn't fool around. He just comes in and throws strikes. The thing that we need right now is what Miguel gave us — good middle relief."

Midland starter Frank DiMichele moved his record to 3-4 and also looked promising, allowing just three hits and no earned runs in five innings.

DiMichele was thrown for a scare when, in the first, Shreveport's Ted Wood lined a shot off of DiMichele's right shin. "A beauty" is how Ruby referred to DiMichele's bruise following the game.

"The guys have been working hard, playing hard," Gonzalez said of the Halos. "We just hope we can keep playing the way we did tonight and start another winning streak."

While not accepting full blame for the recent Angel woes, which had resulted in 15 losses in 19 games before Thursday, Oliveras said he can't help but feel he was partly the cause.

"Sometimes," Oliveras said, "the players go the way the manager goes. I've been sidelined because of my (injured) arm. I haven't been able to throw batting practice. I've been having to sit at my desk and do a lot of paperwork (before games) and that's been killing me. It's bugging me, not being able to help out."

Oliveras added that he felt the strong pitching which accompanies East Division teams has been the main downfall of the Angels recently.

"We're going to have a little pizza party tonight," Oliveras said. "Get everybody together, eat some pizza. Hopefully it'll taste better after a win."

Then again, maybe the pizza delivery man should receive some of the

Strong front nine helps Dickson earn win

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Jo Dickson will be the first to tell you that she doesn't put a lot of effort into golf.

Jere Smith wouldn't tell you that at all. Smith plays 36 holes virtually every day in an effort to be the best golfer she can be.

But who won the Midland Women's City Championship Thursday at Hogan Park? The casual golfer — Dickson — took advantage of her strong short game to score a 3 and 2 win over the diligent Smith in the championship flight final.

Dickson also won a city title in 1986 and was the only former champion in this year's field.

Both players play out of Green Tree Country Club.

Neither woman went far in last year's city tournament, but Dickson made the finals this year by beating Phyllis Maxwell 3 and 1 in Wednesday's semifinal action, while Smith took 19 holes to upset former Alaska state amateur champion tourney favorite Marna Raburn in the other semifinal.

Smith said playing such a tough semifinal match may have sapped her Thursday.

Women's Golf

"Yesterday was such a high," she said. "Even before I got here today, I didn't feel good about my game."

Smith and Dickson halved the first hole, before Dickson got rolling with a 15-foot putt on No. 2.

"That's the putt that sticks out in my mind," Dickson said. "She was in good shape, and it took me four strokes to get to the green."

But she made her putt, and went on to be three holes ahead going onto the back nine.

Dickson couldn't inch any further ahead on the back nine, but Smith couldn't catch up, either.

"I thought I could catch back up, even after the front nine," Smith said. "Even the hole that she took me out on, I thought I could have won."

For her part, Dickson said her second city title in three years won't deter her from what she feels is the main point of being on the course.

"A big point of golf is being around other people," Dickson said. It's as much social as anything."

Smith was a self-described weekend golfer until two years ago, when she stopped working and started playing golf nearly every day — two rounds at a clip.

Smith lost to eventual runnerup Susan Britton in the first round last year, while Dickson was defeated by eventual champion Lia Watson in the second round.

Neither Watson nor Britton opted to play this season.

Records fall at Festival

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Mark Lenzi made history in the U.S. Olympic Festival in shaky fashion. Sean O'Neill did it cumulatively. Kathy Arendsen did it perfectly.

Records and barriers were broken in the festival on Thursday, starting with Lenzi, who became the first American diver to do a 4½ front tuck somersault in competition. Even with the momentous dive, Lenzi was just seventh in the 3-meter preliminaries won by Mark Bradshaw. His faltering performance on the dive had a great deal to do with that.

"I was nervous, but I was more concerned with my takeoff," Lenzi, 21, of Fredericksburg, Va., said. "I had already made mistakes before I got on the end of the board. I wanted it to be nice. I wanted to do it perfectly the first time so everyone could see I could do it, but I guess I'll just have to try it again."

O'Neill didn't have to try again to break Greg Louganis' mark for festival gold medals. O'Neill won his 13th on his first try, taking the men's singles in table tennis. He has won five straight singles championships

"It was really worth all the work, the six to eight hours a day for the last two weeks," O'Neill, 21, of McLean Va., said. "I have been looking forward to this night since North Carolina at the festival there (in 1987)."

Arendsen has been looking for a perfect game all year. She got it Thursday, the first by a woman's softball pitcher in a festival. And she did it on her grandmother's birthday.

"She's been to all my national championships," Arendsen, of Holland, Mich., said. "My grandfather and grandmother are two of my biggest fans."

Arendsen fanned 11, including the first six batters of the game, in beating the winless North 5-0. She didn't permit a ball out of the infield.

"This was my first perfect game this year," she said. "I've had a couple of no-hitters, but I always find a way to screw it up."

Peter Meredith of Elkhart, Ind., has had no problems in the festival and is 4-0 this week. He got the second festival perfect game in men's softball as the East defeated the North 10-0. Meredith struck out 11, giving him 39 in four games. He has not allowed a run in 23 innings.

The perfect game was the first since 1985, when Jimmy Moore defeated the South 1-0.

Lance Ringnald of Albuquerque won the men's all-around crown in gymnastics. Ringnald, who last year became the youngest member of the men's Olympic gymnastics team in 20 years, scored 9.85s on the parallel bars and high bar.

"Just being on teams, it was kind of like the Olympics," he said. "This is how I like to perform."

The East got a 47.65 score in the floor exercise from its six members to win the team gold.

The women's 3-meter springboard diving preliminaries were won by favorite Wendy Lucero of Aurora, Colo.

The half-marathons were won by Olympian Bruce Bickford of Wellesley, Mass., and Judy Bogenschutz of Oldenburg, Ind.

Louise Ritter, the 1988 Olympic women's high jump winner, applied for permission to compete in track and field. But the eight head coaches at the festival voted 7-1 against Ritter. That came after a news release late Wednesday night said the addition of Ritter was "a tremendous boost" to the track and field competition.

"I think the coaches felt we weren't in a position to deviate from the normal selection process," the festival's track and field commissioner, Phil Henson, said. "There's always a danger that when you open a can of worms, how do you close it? This is not intended to be an all-comers meet."

Erika deLone of Lincoln, Mass., won two tennis gold medals. She teamed with Susan Sommerville of Dearborn, Mich., for the women's doubles crown, then won the mixed doubles with Rick Witsken of Carmel, Ind.

Deirdre Herman of Lawrence, Kan., lost in both doubles matches but won the women's singles. The men's singles title went to Robbie Wendell of Sunnyvale, Calif.

Peete belies low draft status

Associated Press

For a pretty low draft choice, Rodney Peete right now rates pretty high in the Detroit Lions' quarterback picture.

"He has all the tools to be a pro quarterback," Lions coach Wayne Fontes said Thursday. "Sometimes, when a young man comes from that background, he just becomes a winner. He's been the most accurate passer so far. He gets better with every practice."

Peete, 23, comes from a solid sports family. His brother, Skip, signed with the New York Jets as a free-agent wide receiver in 1987, and professional golfer Calvin Peete, competing in this week's Buick Open 30 miles to the north, is a second cousin.

His father, Willie Peete, is the Green Bay Packers' offensive backfield coach.

"The way I'm approaching this camp is I have as good a chance as anyone to become the starter," Peete said. "Every practice, I'm practicing like I'm going to be the guy. Why not try to be the best?"

Many observers called Peete the steal of last spring's draft when the Lions selected him in the sixth round. During a star-studded career at Southern California, Peete set career records for pass attempts (1,081), completions (630) and passing yards (8,225).

NFL Camps

Peete finished second to the Lions' No. 1 draft pick, Barry Sanders of Oklahoma State, in last year's Heisman Trophy balloting. While he was disappointed not to be drafted earlier than the sixth round, he was glad Green Bay was one of the teams that passed on his services.

"That was the best situation," he said. "I felt, and my dad felt the same way, that it wouldn't be a good situation as far as morale goes to play in Green Bay. Especially considering I'm a quarterback and where he coaches.

"You never know how the players would react to that situation. When I become the starter, a lot of times players would get jealous and say this or that. I didn't want to get caught in that situation."

At USC, Peete led the Trojans to Pac-10 titles and Rose Bowl berths as a junior and senior. In his final season, he was Pac-10 offensive player of the year when Dallas Cowboys receiver Kelvin Martin reaches high for a pass during a recent workout.

'K Mart' offers receiving special for Poke offense

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have their own version of the K mart blue light special.

It's Kelvin Martin taking advantage of double coverage on Michael Irvin to break free deep.

"K mart has been just outstanding," says Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson. "That's why we've elevated him to the number one spot opposite Irvin. Kelvin will make the plays for you."

The 5-foot-9, 161-pound Martin caught 59 passes for 622 yards and three touchdowns last year. He's one of the new breed of small but quick NFL receivers.

"I don't listen to all that stuff about my size and being too small and everything," Martin said. "I think I've proved what I can do."

Martin dispelled any doubts about how tough he is when he played the

Pinkett, Duncan ink pacts

SAN MARCOS (AP) — The Houston Oilers said they agreed to contract terms with running back Allen Pinkett and wide receiver Curtis Duncan Thursday.

The Oilers, in negotiations with veterans on the eve of their training camp, said they also have agreed to terms Thursday with third-round safety Bubba McDowell and fifth-round nose tackle Glenn Montgomery.

The agreements with Pinkett and Duncan leave the Oilers with veteran running back Mike Rozier and defensive end William Fuller still unsigned. Top receiver Drew Hill also has threatened to miss camp unless the team renegotiates his contract.

Pinkett, who has agreed to terms on an undisclosed one-year contract, is entering his fourth year with the Oilers. He finished second in rushing during the 1988 season with 122 carries for 513 yards and scored seven touchdowns while rushing for an average 4.2 yards per carry.

The 1986 third-round pick out of Notre Dame also was the team's leading rusher in the AFC playoffs last year with 95 yards in two games.

Duncan, a 1987 10th-round draft choice out of Northwestern, was third on the team last year with 32 receptions and 302 yards.

McDowell played four years at Miami with a career 99 solo tackles and 82 assists for a total 181 total tackles and four interceptions. The 6-1, 195-pounder also is Miami's all-time leader in blocked punts with nine.

Troubled Reds end loss streak

Associated Press

The Cincinnati Reds are finally in the black. But the team picked by many to win the National League West hardly has a Rosey future.

"It'll take a miracle to win the West," Manager Pete Rose said Thursday after the Reds ended their longest losing streak in 23 years. "I know that. ... You know that."

With what amounted to a concession speech out of the way after the Reds had beaten the San Diego Padres 6-1, Rose praised the effort of his players.

"You've got to give the guys around here credit," he said. "It's been awfully difficult the last week and a half. They're still playing hard."

The victory, only the 11th in 42 games as the Reds have plunged to fifth place in the NL West, did little to brighten the team's prospects. Cincinnati still has six players on the disabled list.

But Rose said he felt a burden lifted from his shoulders.

"It's rough to have to go home every night losing," he said.

At Atlanta, Dale Murphy tied major-league records with two homers and six RBIs in an inning as the Braves routed the San Francisco Giants 10-1.

"Just getting up twice in one inning is unusual," Murphy said. "I don't remember doing that very often. As far as the homers, I'm thrilled but I don't know what else to say."

Tim Leary, 7-9, acquired last week from Los Angeles, allowed eight hits in eight innings for his first victory in two starts with Cincinnati. The only run he allowed came on a solo homer in the fifth inning by Luis Salazar.

"It was nice to get the six-run support," Leary said. "I don't have to worry about one guy or two guys getting on."

Rose was pleased with Leary's effort.

"I'm impressed with the two games he's pitched since he's been here," Rose said. "I know you can't go hog wild with two games. But he puts a lot into it. Obviously he knows how to pitch."

The Reds took a 1-0 lead in the second when rookie Rolando Roomes homered off Greg Harris, 3-6. Roomes also singled home a run as part of a three-run sixth.

Roomes hit his sixth homer after Rose told him to look for a curveballs from Harris.

"He started the game off throwing six straight breaking balls," Rose said. "I told Rolando to go up there looking for a curve until you get two strikes. He threw it and got it up, and he hit it out of the park."

Leary helped himself with an RBI single in the second. He also drew a bases-loaded walk in the sixth from reliever Pat Clements.

Leary, a lifetime .278 hitter before this season, had just two hits and no RBIs entering the game.

"That was nice to get an RBI," Leary said. "It's another aspect. I probably would have more wins this year if I'd gotten more hits earlier in the year."

Braves 10, Giants 1

Murphy's home runs equalled a record shared by 13 other players. The last to do it was Von Hayes of the Philadelphia Phillies on June 11, 1985 in a 26-7 rout of the New York Mets.

The six RBIs matched a record shared by nine other players, the last Andre Dawson of the Montreal Expos on Sept. 24, 1985.

Murphy, who also hit a three-run homer in a 5-4 victory Wednesday night, has hit five homers and driven in 14 runs in his last nine games. He has 11 home runs and 54 RBIs for the season.

It was the 29th multiple-homer game in Murphy's 12 major league seasons. He is the second

Cady switches focus after ban

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Being barred from track and field competition in the United States hasn't kept Carol Cady from the Olympic Festival.

The two-time Olympian just moved to another arena.

"I was weightlifting since 1975," she said, "so it's not really switching."

Cady, 27, from Stanford, Calif., competes tonight in the 82.5-kilogram class in the first year of women's weightlifting in the Olympic Festival.

And don't expect her to talk bitterly about the The Athletics Congress' decision to boot her from track and field for participating in a meet in South Africa last October.

"I enjoyed everything track and field has done for my life," she said. "Athletics has been a great experience for me. Traveling around the world has taught me a lot of things I never would have learned. I have no regrets."

Cady, a former Stanford athlete and two-time national champion in the discus, was among 17 athletes and coaches banned from the sport for taking part in the South African meet. TAC's board of directors took the action in March.

A federal court has upheld the action, concluding that TAC is a private organization and can make its own rules governing membership.

The U.S. federation doesn't allow athletes to compete in South Africa because of that nation's apartheid policies.

Cady doesn't want to talk about her feelings about South Africa.

"I'm in a very touchy situation here," she said.

But she said she "learned a heck of a lot" from the experience.

"I learned about world affairs and politics, all kinds of things," Cady said.

Besides, she said, she had about reached the end of the line in her track career. Her experience in the Olympic Games last year helped convince her of that.

"In track and field, I had the American record at 216 feet," she said. "I was in Seoul and they (the top European competitors) were throwing 258 in the warmups."

"For me as a person, it was hard because I wasn't improving."

In weightlifting, she said, her achievements aren't nearly as far out of range.

"My goal in weightlifting is to eventually try to be world ranked," she said.

Her best world ranking in the discus was 16th.

In the discus and her other track event, the shot put, she was smaller than most of her higher ranked opponents. But at 5-foot-7 and 185 pounds, she gets to compete against others her size in weightlifting.

Cady won national weightlifting championships in 1985, '86, '88 and '89. But she usually used the sport as a conditioning exercise for track. Now, she said, she's trying to change to the Olympic style to improve her marks.

Cady's South African trip won't get her in trouble with the U.S. Weightlifting Federation because it has no official policy on the issue.

Warwick Hills Country Club officials hope Leonard Thompson replaced his divot after this shot in the first round of the Buick Open.

Grady rebounds from Open loss

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) — Australian Wayne Grady had every right to think he'd used up a lifetime of bad luck last week in the British Open.

But there's just no end to the misery golf can dish out, both on and off the course, as Grady has learned in the days since his playoff loss to Mark Calcavecchia at Royal Troon.

Grady was tied with several golfers at 5-under-par 67, two strokes behind leader Leonard Thompson, heading into today's second round of the $1 million Buick Open. Mark O'Meara, Brad Fabel, Don Shirey Jr. and Richard Zokol were at 66.

The trip from Scotland to Michigan, which should take less than a day, took almost three. As a result, Grady didn't arrive at Warwick Hills, about 55 miles north of Detroit, until Wednesday afternoon, too late for a practice round.

When he showed up for the first round Thursday, he discovered the pro shop had sold out of yardage books. Grady, who finished second to Ken Green here in 1985, thought he had an old yardage book in his bag. Wrong again.

"We eyeballed it today," Grady said. "I was very lucky. I didn't hit the ball too well, but I putted the spots off of it.

"I've got to get my mind on golf and what's at hand."

After leading the British Open for almost two rounds, Grady finished two strokes behind Calcavecchia in the four-hole playoff. Greg Norman, also in the playoff, picked up on the final hole.

"I've got to look at it in a positive light," Grady, who turned 32 on Wednesday, said. "I still don't feel like I lost because I was never behind at any stage. I know I finished second, but I feel like I won it.

"I think I stood up well under the conditions and I feel very good about that."

Grady says the most important thing for him to do now is to put Troon out of his mind.

"We're playing for a million dollars here," Grady said. "That's worth concentrating on. I played well last week, but I've done a good job of keeping my mind off it. I think I've done a good job."

The key to Grady's first round in the Buick Open was a hot putter. He rolled in seven birdie putts — from 20, 20, 40, 25, 30, 25 and 40 feet.

"If I walked the length of the putts I made today, I could probably have gotten back from Scotland without flying," Grady, who needed only 26 putts, said. "That's the best putting round I've ever had."

Grady's game has been improving steadily for the past two years. He feels his game really came into its own in May at Dallas and in June he notched his first PGA Tour victory, the Westchester Classic.

The Buick Open is Grady's 20th PGA start this year. He has been in the money nine times and ranks 29th in earnings with $274,770.

Lopez continues to be overshadowed by King

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — In any other year, Nancy Lopez might have been the No. 1 player on the LPGA tour.

Lopez has finished in the top 10 in 12 of 14 events and earned $371,439 with just one victory.

The year has been spectacular, but nothing compared to what Betsy King has done, winning five times and earning $503,794. Included among those victories is the U.S. Women's Open title. She also has 14 top-10 finishes in 19 events.

"She has been having a really remarkable year," Lopez said Thursday after a final practice round for the $225,000 Atlantic City Classic. "Betsy is playing remarkable golf."

Local youth teams continue down playoff road

From Staff Reports

PECOS — The Mid-City All-Stars open Little League regional playoff action against Pecos here tonight, while the ClayDesta Dodgers traveled to Farmers Branch today for a one-game playoff to decide a berth in the Big League state tournament beginning Sunday in College Station.

Also, Midland American may have a shot at the Junior League state tournament depending on district tournament results from Thursday that were unavailable at press time.

Mid-City coach Joe Nobles will send pitching standout Jeff Bishop in tonight's first game. Tall fireballer Julius Smith is expected to start for Pecos. Bishop won three games in the recently-concluded district tournament.

Rob Lawson will go for Mid-City in Saturday's 3 p.m. game at Windlands Park in Midland. Other available pitchers include Chad Villarreal and Chad Bayley.

Batting leaders for Mid-City in addition to the pitchers have included outfielder Clay Johnston and first baseman Carlos Montes.

In Big League action tonight, either righthander James Madrid or lefthander Jeff Johnston will start for the Dodgers. Madrid posted two wins in the recently-finished Abilene tournament.

Recent Midland Lee graduate Kyle Greeley is the only 18-year-old on the Dodger roster, though most of their opponents start several high school graduates.

Judson grid pair faces charges

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two football players from a high school that competed for this year's Class 5A championship have been charged with burglary, becoming the latest young Texas athletes arrested in criminal cases.

Judson High School officials kicked a potential starter off the team and banned a former player from an upcoming All-Star game after the two were arrested on the charges.

Suburban Universal City police arrested Michael D. Garcia and Destry Lee Ensley on Monday after law officers received a tip that items in some residential burglaries were being sold at pawn shops by teen-agers.

Police say the two may be part of a group of teen-agers that burglarize schoolmates' homes while families are on vacation.

Garcia was released from Bexar County Jail on a personal recognizance bond Monday morning, and Ensley was released on a personal recognizance bond Tuesday afternoon.

Another Judson student, Keith Taylor, 17, also was arrested Monday on the same charge. He was not on the football team.

Garcia, 18, graduated from Judson last spring and was a key member of the Rockets' 1988 Class 5A state finalist team. The former nose guard was a first team member of the San Antonio Express-News Greater San Antonio Class 5A team and was the newspaper's 1988 Greater San Antonio defensive player of the year.

Ensley, 17, was a junior varsity player last season and had a chance at being the team's starting nose guard this year as a senior, Judson football coach D.W. Rutledge told the Express-News.

Harmon named UT aide

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Midland Cubs manager Tommy Harmon has been named new chief assistant to Texas baseball Coach Cliff Gustafson.

Harmon, 40, was appointed Thursday and replaces Bill Bethea, who resigned earlier this summer, school officials announced.

He came to Texas in 1968 as a freshman catcher for first-year coach Gustafson and helped the Longhorns to three straight trips to the College World Series.

Our summer menu items have been drastically reduced.

This summer at El Chico, we're offering weight loss courses.
You see, we've introduced two special dishes that are remarkably low in fat, cholesterol and sodium. So low in fact, they've been endorsed through the Living Lean program at the Cooper Clinic Aerobic Center.
But rest assured, we haven't cut back at all on the fresh, authentic Tex-Mex flavor.
That's one reduction we would never make.

SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your home will be your refuge when everything else seems topsy-turvy. Make your living quarters as comfortable as possible. Highly encouraging developments cement a promising relationship. Make the most of an improved work environment. Beneficial changes will be a big part of your immediate future. Be open to new ideas. Foreign travel is possible if you let an authority figure know you are interested.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: news anchor Peter Jennings, dictator Benito Mussolini, novelist Booth Tarkington, naturalist Charles William Beebe, Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole, comedian "Professor" Irwin Corey, actor Richard Egan, U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, composer Sigmund Romberg.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If you want something done today, do it yourself. Although you are surrounded by willing friends and neighbors, they lack your special knack. A compliment from an old friend is a real ego-booster.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You see the silver lining in a cloud and plan a campaign to benefit from it. Expect some ups and downs when it comes to romance. Travel only if you can truly afford it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Comparison shopping will yield fine bargains. Group entertainment looks more exciting than going it alone this weekend. The relaxed atmosphere adds to your enjoyment. A candid chat closes a generation gap.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): By going places together, loved ones develop a feeling of family unity. Listen attentively to offspring. Avoid someone who tries to impose their will on you. Use any excuse to slip away.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Develop a long-range program that you will want to follow. Boredom can cause slip-ups; vary your routine. If you remain calm in times of crisis, others will admire you even more.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Loved ones who know your weaknesses may try to take advantage. For most of you, financial speculation is a no-no. Stick to tried-and-true methods. Romance takes an interesting twist.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your ability to communicate brilliantly brings you new recognition. Share the limelight with the deserving. A private matter demands immediate attention. Give mate tender loving care. A great evening to dine out.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Attend to important tasks early in the day. A friend could appear with a tale of woe. Try to help this person solve his own problems. Romance begins to heat up again.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Refuse to put any more money into a losing venture. You have your own future to think about. Get expert advice from higher-ups. Call a far-away friend after hours to save money.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Prepare to meet a difficult situation head-on and tension will almost disappear. Trust your instincts. Mate or friends mean well but may not grasp the whole picture. The decision is yours!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A short day trip looks like fun. Choose your traveling companion carefully if you hope to combine business with pleasure. Jot down money-making ideas for future use. Ask someone influential to back a pet project.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try to bring calm to the home front. Spend time with someone who has missed your presence. Difficulties will only add excitement to the love game. Curtail spending so you can afford a vacation.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Dbl	2 ♡	3 ♠
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠

When this hand was dealt in a pair tournament, most declarers failed in their heart game. But some found a simple way to get home by disregarding the obvious.

Note North's raise to two hearts over the takeout double. The modern practice when raising is to treat the double as if didn't exist, and to make a normal raise. With a good deal of the enemy strength marked by the bidding as being in clubs, South's jump to game was a reasonable shot.

West made the normal lead of the top of her honor sequence, taken by declarer's ace. Most South's drew trumps and then tried the diamond finesse, losing to the queen. As long as East did not get active and return a spade, declarer later had to broach that suit and could not avoid losing three spade tricks—down one.

We introduced this theme in the column a few days ago, in a different guise. The secret here is to ignore the finesse completely. Declarer must give up a possible trick in diamonds in favor of a sure trick in spades or a ruff-and-sluff.

Suppose that, after winning the ace of clubs, declarer were to cash a high trump, overtake the nine of trumps in dummy with the ten and then ruff a club high. After returning to dummy with a high diamond to ruff the last club high, declarer continues by cashing the remaining high diamond to see if the queen drops. When the lady does not appear, declarer simply exits with a diamond, and does not care which defender wins the trick.

Whoever is on lead has a choice of losing plays. If the defenders breaks spades, they can take only two tricks in the suit. If they play any other suit, declarer gets to discard a spade from one hand while ruffing in the other. Either way, South loses only two spades and a diamond.

About 350 attend funeral of Janet Lee Auchincloss, Jacqueline Onassis' mother

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — About 350 people jammed Trinity Church and several hundred more braved 90-degree temperatures outside during funeral services Thursday for Janet Lee Auchincloss, mother of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

Mrs. Auchincloss died Saturday at her home on Hammersmith Farm following a lengthy illness. She was 81.

The mourners included Mrs. Onassis; her children, John F. Kennedy Jr. and Carolyn Kennedy Schlossberg; her brother-in-law, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.; her sister, Lee Radziwill Ross; and Mrs. Auchincloss' estranged third husband, Bingham Morris.

Also present were Rear Adm. Ronald Kurth, commander of the Newport Naval War College; Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., a Newport resident; and members of several groups that Mrs. Auchincloss supported over the years, including the Preservation Society of Newport County, the Redwood Library and the Newport Music Festival.

In lieu of a eulogy, Mary B. Johnstone, the church curate, read excerpts of three letters written to Mrs. Auchincloss on her 80th birthday.

The letters, whose authors were not revealed, described Mrs. Auchincloss, an equestrian in her youth, as a woman who loved both people and animals and who embodied the womanly characteristics of "strength and vulnerability."

The crowd that began assembling outside the Episcopal church more than an hour before the 1 p.m. funeral was cordoned off by police and kept 300 feet or more away from the mourners.

Mrs. Auchincloss was cremated and her ashes were buried privately after a service in a Colonial-era cemetery north of town, next to those of her second husband, Hugh D. Auchincloss, who died in 1976.

CHICAGO (AP) — Singer Ella Fitzgerald is among the six musicians chosen as the first inductees to the new Jazz-Blues-Gospel Hall of Fame.

Fitzgerald

Waters

"Chicago has been the seat of gospel music for a long time," said Charles Colbert, the hall's president. "Blues — Muddy Waters, Willie Dixon and many others are from here.

"This is naturally the place where it should be," Colbert said at a ceremony Thursday honoring the hall.

Although similar memorials to each of the three kinds of music exist, the new Hall of Fame is the first single institution honoring all of them, he said.

The initial inductees for jazz are Ms. Fitzgerald and the late trumpeter Louis Armstrong; Waters, the late singer and slide guitarist, and bass player Dixon for blues; and composer Thomas Dorsey, called "the father of gospel music," and the late singer Mahalia Jackson for gospel.

They will be formally inducted at a ceremony later this year.

LONDON (AP) — Ex-Beatle Paul McCartney will begin a world tour in September and promote the environmental group Friends of the Earth along the way.

The tour, McCartney's first in 13 years, begins in Oslo, Norway, Sept. 26 and rolls through nine countries in Europe before heading out to Asia and North and South America, wrapping up in the summer of 1990.

McCartney, 47, said Thursday he will play in the United States in November or December and again later in the tour, but gave no details on schedule dates stops.

Joining the bandwagon of stars campaigning to save the environment from acid rain and to halt the depletion of the atmosphere's ozone layer, he said: "When I was a kid, if you had told me when I grew up there would be a hole in the sky and the rain would have acid in it and the seas would have nuclear pollution in them, I wouldn't have believed you."

His band includes bass player Hamish Stuart, formerly of the Average White Band; guitarist Robbie McIntosh, formerly of The Pretenders; drummer Chris Whitten; and Wix, one of Britain's top session keyboard players.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — David Horning started his day with a swim in Paris and ended it splashing in San Francisco Bay in a marathon dip marking his 41st birthday and the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution.

"Is this San Francisco?" the sports promoter laughed as he emerged from the bay Thursday night after swimming 1¼ miles from Alcatraz Island to Aquatic Park near Fisherman's Wharf.

The swim down the Seine in Paris was "wonderful," he said, but the final leg in San Francisco took 45 minutes, a bit longer than anticipated.

"The ebb tide was stronger than I expected," Horning said.

Horning failed to complete his initial plan, which included an additional swim from the Statue of Liberty in New York to Battery Park at the tip of Manhattan. Airplane connection problems scuttled that effort.

"The swims are the easy part," said Horning. "It's catching the planes that can be tricky."

Anyway, he did manage to swim to one Statue of Liberty.

He swam through Paris from the Bastille to the little-known French Statue of Liberty, on an island in the Seine down river from the Eiffel Tower.

We introduced this theme in the column a few days ago, in a different, guise. The secret here is to ignore the finesse completely. Declarer must give up a possible trick in diamonds in favor of a sure trick in spades or a ruff-and-sluff.

Suppose that, after winning the ace of clubs, declarer were to cash a high trump, overtake the nine of trumps in dummy with the ten and then ruff a club high. After returning to dummy with a high diamond to ruff the last club high, declarer continues by cashing the remaining high diamond to see if the queen drops. When the lady does not appear, declarer simply exits with a diamond, and does not care which defender wins the trick.

Whoever is on lead has a choice of losing plays. If the defenders breaks spades, they can take only two tricks in the suit. If they play any other suit, declarer gets to discard a spade from one hand while ruffing in the other. Either way, South loses only two spades and a diamond.

About 350 attend funeral of Janet Lee Auchincloss, Jacqueline Onassis' mother

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — About 350 people jammed Trinity Church and several hundred more braved 90-degree temperatures outside during funeral services Thursday for Janet Lee Auchincloss, mother of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

Mrs. Auchincloss died Saturday at her home on Hammersmith Farm following a lengthy illness. She was 81.

The mourners included Mrs. Onassis; her children, John F. Kennedy Jr. and Carolyn Kennedy Schlossberg; her brother-in-law, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.; her sister, Lee Radziwill Ross; and Mrs. Auchincloss' estranged third husband, Bingham Morris.

Also present were Rear Adm. Ronald Kurth, commander of the Newport Naval War College; Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., a Newport resident; and members of several groups that Mrs. Auchincloss supported over the years, including the Preservation Society of Newport County, the Redwood Library and the Newport Music Festival.

In lieu of a eulogy, Mary B. Johnstone, the church curate, read excerpts of three letters written to Mrs. Auchincloss on her 80th birthday.

The letters, whose authors were not revealed, described Mrs. Auchincloss, an equestrian in her youth, as a woman who loved both people and animals and who embodied the womanly characteristics of "strength and vulnerability."

The crowd that began assembling outside the Episcopal church more than an hour before the 1 p.m. funeral was cordoned off by police and kept 300 feet or more away from the mourners.

Mrs. Auchincloss was cremated and her ashes were buried privately after a service in a Colonial-era cemetery north of town, next to those of her second husband, Hugh D. Auchincloss, who died in 1976.

CHICAGO (AP) — Singer Ella Fitzgerald is among the six musicians chosen as the first inductees to the new Jazz-Blues-Gospel Hall of Fame.

Waters

"Chicago has been the seat of gospel music for a long time," said Charles Colbert, the hall's president. "Blues — Muddy Waters, Willie Dixon and many others are from here.

"This is naturally the place where it should be," Colbert said at a ceremony Thursday honoring the hall.

Although similar memorials to each of the three kinds of music exist, the new Hall of Fame is the first single institution honoring all of them, he said.

The initial inductees for jazz are Ms. Fitzgerald and the late trumpeter Louis Armstrong; Waters, the late singer and slide guitarist, and bass player Dixon for blues; and composer Thomas Dorsey, called "the father of gospel music," and the late singer Mahalia Jackson for gospel.

They will be formally inducted at a ceremony later this year.

LONDON (AP) — Ex-Beatle Paul McCartney will begin a world tour in September and promote the environmental group Friends of the Earth along the way.

The tour, McCartney's first in 13 years, begins in Oslo, Norway, Sept. 26 and rolls through nine countries in Europe before heading out to Asia and North and South America, wrapping up in the summer of 1990.

McCartney, 47, said Thursday he will play in the United States in November or December and again later in the tour, but gave no details on schedule dstops.

Joining the bandwagon of stars campaigning to save the environment from acid rain and to halt the depletion of the atmosphere's ozone layer, he said: "When I was a kid, if you had told me when I grew up there would be a hole in the sky and the rain would have acid in it and the seas would have nuclear pollution in them, I wouldn't have believed you."

His band includes bass player Hamish Stuart, formerly of the Average White Band; guitarist Robbie McIntosh, formerly of The Pretenders; drummer Chris Whitten; and Wix, one of Britain's top session keyboard players.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — David Horning started his day with a swim in Paris and ended it splashing in San Francisco Bay in a marathon dip marking his 41st birthday and the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution.

"Is this San Francisco?" the sports promoter laughed as he emerged from the bay Thursday night after swimming 1¼ miles from Alcatraz Island to Aquatic Park near Fisherman's Wharf.

The swim down the Seine in Paris was "wonderful," he said, but the final leg in San Francisco took 45 minutes, a bit longer than anticipated.

"The ebb tide was stronger than I expected," Horning said.

Horning failed to complete his initial plan, which included an additional swim from the Statue of Liberty in New York to Battery Park at the tip of Manhattan. Airplane connection problems scuttled that effort.

"The swims are the easy part," said Horning. "It's catching the planes that can be tricky."

Anyway, he did manage to swim to one Statue of Liberty.

NCNB to purchase NCNB Texas

CHA RLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Gaining full ov vnership of NCNB Texas National Bank will position NCNB Corp. to become a more aggressive buyer of failed banks and savings and lo ans in Texas, financial experts say.

NCN IB announced Thursday that it would pay $800 million to buy 51 percent o f its Texas bank now owned by bankin ig regulators. The move comes four y ears ahead of NCNB's original timeta ble for the purchase.

"Co nfidence in Texas and confidence in our earnings stream in Texas" pr ompted the accelerated purchase, NCNB Chairman Hugh McColl Jr. tol d The Charlotte Observer. The banke r was in Dallas to mark the first a nniversary of the purchase of the ho oldings of the former First Republic Bank Corp.

When the purchase is completed, in about 10 days, NCNB will become the nation's ninth-largest bank with around $60 billion in assets.

Last July 29, NCNB agreed to buy 20 percent of the Texas bank and obtained a five-year option to buy the rest from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. In April, it raised its share to 49 percent.

NCNB will pay the FDIC $480 million in cash and $320 million in an interest-bearing note that matures in one year. Helping finance the move is $410 million NCNB received from a stock issue this month.

Timothy Hartman, NCNB Texas vice chairman, acknowledged the Texas bank would be interested in buying failing savings and loans, which are likely to be available soon. The Texas bank would like to expand its deposits from $21 billion to around $30 billion, he said.

In buying the remainder of NCNB Texas from the FDIC, NCNB would be able to keep all of the bank's surprisingly high profits. The Texas bank earned about $120 million in the first half of the year.

"Texas earnings have been very, very good," McColl said. "That's because of the tremendous job our Texas team has done in turning around this situation. And we've been able to do this because of the tremendous earnings by our Southeastern bank."

NCNB dispatched five of its top 10 Charlotte-based managers to Texas, but its profits from North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida have continued to grow.

Investors are likely to react enthusiastically to the move, bank analysts said, though many had predicted NCNB would shortly increase its ownership to around 80 percent. "It's good news for shareholders since earnings will increase immediately," said Richard Fredericks of Montgomery Securities in San Francisco.

NCNB's stock has jumped nearly 125 percent in the year since NCNB announced its Texas deal. In New York Stock Exchange trading Thursday before the announcement, NCNB closed unchanged at $52 per share.

"No one outside the company thought it would work out so well," said Peter Tuz, analyst with Howard, Weil Financial Corp. in New Orleans.

AUTO INDUSTRY

G;M, Ford report lower quarterly profits

New York Times News Service

DE TROIT — The General Motors Corp. and the Ford Motor Co., the natio n's biggest auto makers, said Thurs day that the cost of clearing large inventories of unsold cars and truck s led to declines in profits in the s econd quarter.

GM said its profit was $1.45 billion, or $2. 23 a share, in the quarter, down 4 per cent from $1.51 billion, or $2.26 a sha re, in the period last year. Revenue edged up 1.3 percent, to $33.6 billio n, from $33.18 billion a year earlier.

Fo rd posted a profit of $1.41 billion, or $3 a share, down 15 percent from $1.66 billion, or $3.43 a share, a year earlier. Ford's revenue rose 3.8 perc en t, to $25.9 billion, compared with $ 25 billion a year earlier.

GM and Ford executives blamed increa sed competitive pressures, which have forced the auto makers to dis count their products with rebates and subsidized financing, as well as a decrease in the number of vehi cles sold nationwide as economic g rowth slowed.

David McCammon, Ford's treasurer, estimated that incentives in the period cost the company $600 to $700 for each car and truck sold, up $200 to $300 from a year earlier.

A GM spokesman declined to specify the company's outlays for incentives and subsidized financing in the quarter, but he said they were higher than last year.

GM expects to spend more on incentives in the current year than the $4.3 billion last year.

Chrysler, the No. 3 auto maker in the United States, is also expected to report a decline in profit when it announces its results next week.

"All the domestic manufacturers are suffering from high inventories, reduced demand and therefore the necessity to offer more incentives, but Ford's and G.M.'s earnings aren't suffering as much as you'd think because they're doing well overseas," said Ronald Glantz, who follows the industry for Montgomery Securities in San Francisco.

Chrysler Corp. senior managers pour out of a meeting Thursday after hearing details of the company's long-term cost-cutting program.

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. will retire or lay off 2,300 of its 31,000 salaried workers by year's end as part of $1 billion cost-cutting program mandated by sagging sales and a changing market, Chairman Lee Iacocca announced Thursday.

The cuts are part of a long-term effort to make the third-largest U.S. automaker more competitive, Chrysler said.

The program, which sources had confirmed on Wednesday, was announced to the company's top 600 managers gathered for a regularly scheduled meeting in Detroit.

"This is not simply a reaction to the current sales environment, but rather a response to market changes that have taken place over the last several years," Iacocca said. "Recent sales have merely returned to normal trend projections, and we must take the necessary steps to ensure our profitability.

"This will not be a one-shot deal. It's got to become a part of our culture."

Through July 20, Chrysler's car sales this year were down 14.8 percent from last year, while its light-truck sales were down 0.4 percent. Car sales for all domestic vehicle manufacturers have dropped 5.3 percent for the year while truck sales are off 1.8 percent from 1988.

The work-force reduction will be achieved partly through early retirement benefits being offered to employees 55 or older with at least 10 years at the automaker. Chrysler has 123,000 salaried and hourly employees.

Iacocca also said there would be cuts in a broad range of other segments of the business.

One industry analyst was skeptical of the potential impact of the cuts.

"This is an industry that kills to take a dollar out of the cost of building a car," said Ron Glantz of Montgomery Securities Inc. in San Francisco. "Not very much of this billion-dollar reduction is going to flow to the bottom line.

"They are going to have to reduce advertising and marketing, which will hurt sales," he said.

Exxon promises it will pursue Alaska cleanup

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Exxon Corp. promised today to pursue the cleanup of oil-contaminated beaches in Alaska into 1990 if directed by the U.S. Coast Guard, saying it would go along with any "reasonable request."

W.D. Stevens, president of Exxon Co. USA, told a House subcommittee the oil company stands behind earlier pledges to return to the contaminated shoreline next spring "to reinspect the area to assure the job has been properly done, and if not, to put it right."

Stevens said "we intend to more than achieve" cleanup objectives by mid-September and the company intends to go ahead with plans to demobilize most of its operation then for the winter.

Coast Guard Vice Admiral Clyde Lusk said the contaminated areas would be surveyed in the spring and if additional work needs to be conducted Exxon would be told to resume cleanup efforts. But Lusk suggested if Exxon disagrees, the government's only option is to federalize the effort and assume resposibility.

Lusk said he had "no doubt" that during the spring survey there will be "disagreeements on what should be done."

When pressed by Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., on what Exxon would do if the Coast Guard demanded additional cleanup actions, Stevens stopped short of committing the company to complying with any Coast Guard directive.

FDIC takes nine S&Ls including five in Texas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was named managing agent Thursday for an additional nine savings and loan institutions, bringing the total in the government management program to 253 in 33 states.

The new institutions declared insolvent and placed under government management included five in Texas, two in Louisiana, and one each in Arkansas and Michigan.

Federal regulators transferred all deposits, offices and substantially all of the institutions' assets to the newly created federal mutual institutions.

Depositors are not affected in any way by the action and can continue to transact business as usual, federal regulators said in announcing the action.

Bristol-Myers, Squibb form $8.6 billion firm

NEW YORK (AP) — Bristol-Myers Co. and Squibb Corp. said Thursday they would merge in an $11 billion stock-swap deal that would create the world's second-largest pharmaceutical concern.

Under terms of a definitive agreement approved by the boards of both companies, Squibb will be merged into Bristol-Myers through a tax-free exchange of 2.4 shares of Bristol-Myers common stock for each Squibb share.

Based on the current stock price of Bristol-Myers, maker of Excedrin and Bufferin pain relievers and Clairol hair coloring products, the deal is valued at $11.4 billion.

The merged company will be known as Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., and will offer such consumer products as Bufferin and Excedrin pain relievers, Windex window cleaner and Theragran vitamins, plus a variety of prescription drugs.

Oil futures prices recover

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices rebounded slightly from Thursday's loss, gaining 12 cents to $18.24 at midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Prices fell to a five-month low Thursday, reflecting concern over falling demand and excess crude production.

On the NYMEX, the September contract for West Texas Intermediate fell 18 cents to close at $18.12 a 42-gallon barrel after trading as high as $18.64.

The near-term contract last closed lower on Feb. 24, at a price of $18.07 a barrel. Contracts for later delivery had slightly smaller losses.

In addition, local crude buyers such as Permian Corp. and Texaco Trading and Transportation lowered their posted price for WTI to $17.50, down 50 cents. The posted price began the week at $18.75 a barrel.

Crude prices have fallen steadily since early last week, pressured by falling gasoline prices and rising crude oil production in the face of slackening demand.

Although statistics from the American Petroleum Institute showed an overall decline in crude oil supplies, analysts said there was a buildup in some key areas, including the Gulf of Mexico.

In addition, an estimate this week put OPEC production at more than 21.2 million barrels per day, higher than the 19.5 million barrel quota the cartel set for the second half of 1989.

Gasoline prices have softened recently, reflecting what some analysts say is consumer reaction to the surge in prices at the retail pump.

Dollar holds steady, gold declines

LONDON (AP) — The dollar held steady in thin European trading this morning as the market digested U.S. economic growth figures released Thursday.

Gold prices were lower.

Foreign exchange dealers said the dollar was lacking firm direction following the release of data that showed the U.S. gross national product slowed in the second quarter to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.7 percent from 3.7 percent in the first quarter. A growth rate of 2 percent had been expected.

One dealer in Frankfurt said while the dollar was pushed lower by the news, the figures had not had a drastic impact on the currency.

"It shows that there is still demand," said the dealer at a U.S. bank on condition of anonymity.

Gold opened in London, the major market, at a bid $372 a troy ounce, down from $374 late Thursday. At midmorning, London's dealers recommended a bid price of $371.95.

Gold traded in Zurich at a bid price of $371.60, down from late Thursday's $374.05.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold dropped $1.87 dollars an ounce to close at a bid $373.

Silver bullion traded in London at a bid $5.21 a troy ounce, down from $5.23 late Thursday.

Stock prices set records

NEW YORK — Stock prices continued to set records Thursday, buoyed by higher bond prices and the announcement of a new blockbuster merger.

For the second consecutive day, the Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks, the New York Stock Exchange composite index and the American Stock Exchange continued to reach record highs.

The S&P 500 rose 3.94 points, to 341.99, and the New York composite advanced 2.08, to 190.22. The Amex moved up 2.57, to 375.35.

The Dow Jones industrial average gained 22.38 points, to 2,635.43, its post-crash high.

Volume was strong at 213.7 million shares, up from 188.3 million the day before. Advancing issues far outstripped declines, by 1,021 to 496.

Stocks were buoyed by higher bond prices after a lower-than-expected 1.7 percent gain in gross national product for the second quarter. That development led to renewed hopes that interest rates would move lower.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Three more Texas banks fail

DALLAS (AP) — With the closing of three more Texas banks, the number of total failures in the state this year reached just 14 less than in all of last year.

The bank failure total reached 99 Thursday with the shutdown of Brushy Creek National Bank in Round Rock, The Texas Bank & Trust Co. in Sweetwater and Forestwood National Bank of Dallas.

In the closures of the Round Rock and Sweetwater institutions, all deposits were transferred to new owners. But at Forestwood National Bank only deposits up to the $100,000 insured limit were transferred.

Paramount sells financial services group

NEW YORK (AP) — Paramount Communications Inc. completed its transformation from a conglomerate to a media company, announcing it had sold its financial services arm, The Associates, to Ford Motor Co. for $3.35 billion.

Paramount said Thursday the deal would give it an after-tax gain of $1.3 billion. When the company announced plans to sell The Associates in April, it said it planned to use the money to finance acquisitions.

MCI customers can now charge Visa

WASHINGTON (AP) — Visa cardholders moved closer to the day when a single piece of plastic will enable them to conduct nearly any kind of business, including long-distance calls.

Visa U.S.A and MCI Communications Corp. announced Thursday that beginning Oct. 1 Visa card account numbers also will serve as MCI long-distance calling numbers. Holders of Visa cards will be able to call from any telephone in the United States to nearly anywhere in the world, with monthly charges billed as one line on their Visa accounts.

Japan accused of 'dumping' equipment

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department said a preliminary investigation showed manufacturers in Japan, Taiwan and South Korea were "dumping" small-business telephone equipment in the United States at prices far below their fair value.

In a preliminary finding that could lead to hefty antidumping duties on these phone products, the department's International Trade Administration said Thursday that some Japanese companies were selling phone equipment in the United States at prices more than 1½ times below what comparable equipment was selling for in Japan.

R.J. Reynolds fires McCann-Erickson

NEW YORK (AP) — R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. said it had fired McCann-Erickson as the advertising agency for its Winston and Camel cigarette brands in the United States.

The tobacco company, based in Winston-Salem, N.C., said it was assigning the two brands to two agencies that already handle other domestic cigarette advertising assignments for Reynolds, FCB-Leber Katz Partners and Young & Rubicam, both of New York.

Austin receives some good economic news

AUSTIN (AP) — For a city that has been battered by the recession and real estate collapse, it's having a splendid week, says Mayor Lee Cooke.

First, a national survey of top business executives named Austin as one of the nation's top 10 emerging small cities to locate a business.

Then Thursday, IBM announced plans to expand its Austin facilities by 1 million square feet.

"This is money on the table when our economy has been sinking," Cooke said during IBM's announcement that it will add several buildings to its Austin research and manufacturing facility.

"It's a very, very exciting and important statement they are making about how they feel and about doing business in the city of Austin," Cooke added.

Jerry M. Carlson, IBM's Austin general manager, said the expansion would house 3,400 engineers, programmers and other employees currently scattered among several leased buildings. To be completed by 1991, the project will add 1 million square feet to the 2.6 million IBM already has, he said.

The company's announcement followed by a day Austin's selection by a national group of chief executive officers as a good place to relocate their businesses in the next five years.

The survey ranked cities with long-term growth potential in the eyes of 404 chief executives polled by Louis Harris and Associates Inc.

Topping the list was Charlotte, N.C., followed by Raleigh-Durham, N.C.; Orlando, Fla.; Indianapolis; Memphis and Nashville, Tenn.; Hartford, Conn.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Richmond, Va.; Austin and Salt Lake City.

William Becker, Texas vice president at Cushman & Wakefield, the national real estate firm that hired Harris to conduct the survey, told the Austin American-Statesman the city's selection was significant.

"Austin's ranking is phenomenal because it was unprompted," Becker said. The CEOs weren't given a list of cities to rank, simply asked to name those with the most promise.

Becker said the survey's results indicate that businesses around the country see Austin as having great potential for growth and job opportunities.

PROFITS

But David Healy, a securities analyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert, said he expects the earnings decline at Ford and GM to become steeper in the third quarter when many plants are shut for model change-over.

"Production will be down and incentives will continue, so I think profits from both companies will be down more than 60 percent," he said.

Ford recently lowered its forecast of United States industry sales to a range of 14.7 million to 14.8 million cars and trucks. Its previous forecast was for sales of 15 million.

GM has so far not revised its forecast, also of 15 million in sales, but a spokesman said, "We think we'll be approaching that number from below."

Worldwide factory sales of GM vehicles to dealers totaled 2,184,000 in the quarter, a 2.9 percent drop from a year earlier.

In the United States, GM's retail sales of cars and trucks totaled 1,466,444, down 3.8 percent from a year earlier.

The company said its share of the United States car and truck market was 35.5 percent in the period, compared with 35.7 percent a year earlier.

Neither auto maker expressed disappointment with the results. G.M. said that its net income of $3 billion for the first half of the year was the best in five years, and added that improved quarterly gross operating margins showed that GM was controlling costs better than in the past.

GM announced on Wednesday that earnings increased at its GM Hughes Electronics and Electronic Data Systems subsidiaries, and declined at its General Motors Acceptance Corp., a financing division.

Ford's chairman, Donald E. Petersen, said, "Despite a softening market, we are gratified by our increased U.S. market share and the fact that our earnings were the third best in history for the quarter," Ford said its share of the domestic car and truck market was 24.5 percent in the quarter, compared with 24.3 percent a year earlier.

Ford said it shipped 1,798,052 cars and trucks to dealers worldwide, up 1.7 percent from a year earlier.

Ford's gain in American market share was achieved at a considerable cost. Profit from United States automotive operations declined by $267 million, to $459 million.

Profits from operations in South America, Europe and Asia rose 7.5 percent, or $54 million, to $775 million. Worldwide automotive profits declined by $213 million, to $1.2 billion in the quarter, Profit from Ford's financial service group, which includes First Nationwide, a savings and loan, and the Ford Motor Credit Co., dipped by $43 million, to $173 million, from a year earlier. Ford Motor Credit profit declined to $142.5 million, from $171.3 million, reflecting increased borrowing costs and reduced net interest margins.

CUTS

Shortly after Chrysler acquired American Motors Corp. in August 1987, the company cut its salaried work force by about 3,600 people, mostly through early retirement and attrition.

Company officials and industry observers have said for months that buyer incentives offered by Chrysler, Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. were likely to cut into profits and keep marketing costs high.

That showed up Thursday in the earnings reports of General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., which said second-quarter profits were 3.4 percent and 15.4 percent lower respectively.

Chrysler is to report its second quarter results on Monday.

EXXON

"We will follow through on any reasonable request that is made," said the Exxon executive. He said he could not make "an unequivocal commitment" and told the hearing he "would be naive to do that" in light of expected disagrements within the scientific community on what should constitute a clean shoreline.

Concern about Exxon's cleanup plans arose this week after disclosure of an internal company memorandum that implied Exxon will not commit itself to further cleanup efforts next spring.

The memo said current activity to clean oil from an estimated 700 miles of shoreline along southern Alaska resulting from the Exxon Valdez spill will stop Sept. 15 because of oncoming cold weather.

Stevens said the wording of the memo "was unfortunate" and under questioning from subcommittee chairman Miller, said it was not meant to suggest Exxon was pulling out of the cleanup effort after September.

Miller said the focus of the hearing before the House Interior subcommittee on water power and offshore energy resources was amined at determining Exxon's future cleanup plans and what actions the U.S. Coast Guard intends to take should Exxon not pursue a cleanup.

In separate testimony, Dennis Kelso, Alaska's commissioner of environmental conservation, criticized Exxon's decision to pull its heavy equipment back to Anchorage for the winter, saying there would be no way to launch emergency response efforts should new oil slicks threaten key fishing areas.

The Coast Guard has overall federal authority over the cleanup effort and subcommittee members are looking for an assurance that it will force Exxon to pursue the cleanup into 1990 if necessary.

Most environmentalists believe the cleanup will be far from completed by mid-September, although Exxon officials have said they continue to expect to "stabilize" the contaminated areas by that time.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'Loaded' fund not bad, but not good investment

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My wife and I had $12,000 of paid-up life insurance, on which our agent said we were getting very low interest. He told us to cash our policies and put the money into a bond mutual fund managed by his insurance company.

We bought into the fund at $15.62 per share. Each month, we receive a statement showing we own more shares. I do not understand why. Can you explain? Also, is this a good investment?

Doyle

A. It's obvious that you are reinvesting your dividends — leaving them with the mutual fund to purchase more shares. If you don't need income, that's a sensible thing to do.

The fund you named in your letter uses the money you and other shareholders paid in to invest in bonds — mostly high-grade corporate bonds. The fund collects the interest those bonds pay and, after deducting its operating expenses, passes that money along to fund shareholders as monthly dividends.

As you reinvest your dividends, the number of shares you own naturally increases.

That fund is a "load" fund, with a commission charge on the purchase of new shares but not on reinvested dividends. The commission charge on a $12,000 investment is 7.75 percent. That load comes right off the top. So, when you paid $15.62 a share, you bought shares with net asset value — the actual dollars and cents value behind each share — of $14.41.

As I write this, that fund's per share net asset value is $14.99. That's higher than it was at the time of your purchase. However, it's still below the $15.62 you paid — because of the commission load.

It would be wrong to call your investment "bad." But the numbers show it's far from "good." That's the unhappy story of all too many mutual funds with loads — most of which goes to salespeople. I suggest you talk to your insurance agent again and insist on getting a full explanation of how the fund operates. He got the lion's share of the commission you paid. Make him work for it.

Q. The last week in June was a bad one for the stock market. Yet, the Sunday paper showed my bond mutual fund went up 12 points to 14.98. How can this be explained?

A. First off, the fund did not go up 12 points. Its asset value per share rose 12 cents to $14.98 that week.

That was not the least bit unusual for mutual funds holding bonds as investments. The market values of bonds and mutual funds holding bonds go in the opposite direction of interest rates. Interest rates eased that week, as they have been doing for the past few months, sending bond prices higher. That has boosted the values of bond mutual fund shares.

Q. A few years ago, I invested in two mutual funds. When the market "crash" came, the values of my fund shares naturally went down. I could understand that.

What I don't understand is why the values of my fund shares stay down, even though the market has turned around and is almost back to where it was before the crash. Why?

A. "Almost" is the correct qualifying word. The stock market, as measured by the Dow Jones and other averages, still hasn't returned to the record high it reached in August 1987. Nevertheless, if your mutual funds invest in stocks and have stayed down — with no recovery — fund managements are doing poor jobs. Could be time for you to think about moving your investments elsewhere.

Most mutual funds holding bonds as investments went into tailspins when interest rates headed up early in 1988. Many still haven't come back to their former levels.

If interest rates continue to decline, bond mutual funds should do well. If you own a bond fund that hasn't moved higher lately, you can blame that on dumb fund management — and think about switching.

Israelis capture Shiite linked to Hezbollah

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli commandos today kidnapped a Shiite Moslem leader who is considered Iran's closest ally and who sources say was linked to the abduction of U.S. Lt. Col. William R. Higgins.

Police said Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, 33, was kidnapped from his second-floor apartment in the village of Jibchit, 21 miles north of the border with Israel. A curious neighbor was killed by the commandos, police said.

Obeid is reputed to be the spiritual guide of Hezbollah, or Party of God, in south Lebanon.

However, he has repeatedly denied links with the pro-Iranian group, which is affiliated with factions holding most of the 17 foreign hostages in Lebanon. Nine Americans are among the hostages.

A security source in Lebanon said there was speculation Obeid may have been kidnapped "as a possible swap" for Higgins, who was a U.N. observer when he was abducted, or for three missing Israeli soldiers.

Two of the missing soldiers, Yossi Fink and Rahamin Alsheikh, were captured Feb. 17, 1986, when guerrillas ambushed their patrol in Israel's "security zone" in southern Lebanon. The third, Israeli navigator Ron Arad, was captured by Shiite militiamen on Oct. 16, 1986, when his plane was shot down over southern Lebanon. The pilot was rescued.

Other security sources in south Lebanon, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said Higgins was briefly held at Obeid's apartment after his abduction in south Lebanon on Feb. 17, 1988.

One of these sources said the late leader of the mainstream Shiite Moslem Amal militia in south Lebanon, Daoud Daoud, sent "a group of his followers to obtain Higgins' release from Obeid's apartment, but the force was encircled by Hezbollah gunmen, stripped of its weapons and sent back."

The source said Higgins' kidnappers, the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, later took the American marine out of Jibchit to another village in south Lebanon and then to the slums of south Beirut.

Daoud and Mahmoud Faqih, another Amal leader, were assassinated by unknown gunmen in south Beirut's seaside suburb of Ouzai on Sept. 22, 1988. Amal blamed the killings on Hezbollah.

The two had led a four-day crackdown by Amal on Hezbollah in south Lebanon in April 1988.

On Feb. 21, 1988, Obeid was quoted by Beirut radio stations as saying he believed the kidnappers had managed to smuggle Higgins out of the south. Obeid, speaking to worshippers at a mosque in Jibchit, also claimed that Higgins was in charge of the U.N. peacekeeping forces' "spying operations."

Higgins, 44, of Danville, Ky., a decorated Vietnam veteran, headed an observer group attached to the U.N. peacekeeping force in Lebanon at the time of his abduction. He was kidnapped near Daoud's base in the southern port of Tyre.

Obeid negotiated the safe withdrawal of Hezbollah gunmen and allied Iranian Revolutionary Guards from Jibchit, when the village of 18,000 residents was besieged by Amal after the kidnappers moved Higgins to another hideout.

Higgins' kidnapping was believed to be a major factor behind Amal's crackdown in the south, which left 62 dead and 150 wounded.

A police spokesman said an Israeli helicopter landed a commando force about two miles west of Jibchit at 1 a.m.

He said a force of about 12 commandoes "walked into Jibchit, encircled Sheik Obeid's three-story building on the eastern edge of the village."

The spokesman, who cannot be named in line with police rules, said "someone with the Israelis spoke Arabic. They knocked on the door and someone from the Sheik's family opened.

"The Israelis quickly moved in pointing silencer-equipped pistols at the sheik, his cousin Ahmed Obeid and Majid Fahs, a friend who was staying with them."

Rescue workers, above, use a stretcher to carry a victim from the remains of a Korean Air DC-10 jetliner that crashed and burst into flames while approaching a Tripoli, Libya, airport Thursday. According to a Libyan news agency, 199 were on board the craft and 75 persons died, including four on the ground. The pilot, Kim Ho-jung, 54, left, lies in a hospital bed after his escape from the burning debris. Three crew members are among the missing.

Korean Air begins probe, says pilot not at fault

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Korean Air's president today ruled out pilot error in the crash of an airline DC-10 jetliner near Tripoli's fogbound airport. Officials said the crash killed at least 75 people.

Libyan authorities, meanwhile, defended the actions of the air traffic controllers who were working when the plane crashed Thursday.

In Seoul, an aviation expert of the Transportation Ministry said "each side is trying to say they are not wholly responsible for the accident." He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The crash was the second of a DC-10 in eight days. A United Air Lines DC-10 went down July 19 in Sioux City, Iowa, killing 111 people.

There were conflicting reports on the actual death toll.

The official Libyan news agency JANA and a diplomat at the South Korean Embassy in the Libyan capital — who identified himself only as Mr. Chun — said Thursday that 78 people aboard the plane died. JANA said an additional four people on the ground were killed.

But airline officials said today in Seoul that 71 of the 199 people on board the plane — mostly South Koreans — were unaccounted for and presumed dead.

JANA said more than 110 people were hospitalized. Airline officials in Seoul said 40 people with minor burns were expected to be released today.

South Korean officials arrived in Libya today to join in the investigation of the crash.

Korean Air president Cho Chung-kun told reporters and family members in Seoul today that the pilot apparently confronted "an unexpected situation" while trying to land. He ruled out pilot error or mechanical problems.

Cho did not say wnat he meant by "an unexpected situation," but Korean Air officials privately indicated that the ill-fated plane was improperly aided by the control tower for landing.

South Korea's Yonhap News Agency quoted an unidentified airline official as saying, "The plane was ordered to make a 270-degree turn by the control tower and crashed at the moment of turning when it hit an unidentified object."

Yonhap alsosaid one airline official said the crew told authorities the landing guidance system may have been out of order.

"Each side is trying to say they are not wholly responsible for the accident," said an official with the Korean Transportation Ministry. The pilot apparently confronted "an unexpected situation" while trying to land. He ruled out pilot error or mechanical problems.

JANA in Rome said the airport control tower had told the pilot that there was heavy fog and 800-foot visibility. It said a Soviet Aeroflot jetliner, informed of similar conditions about an hour earlier, went instead to Malta.

Libya's chief investigator said he was not sure if pilot error or mechanical failure caused the plane to crash short of the fogbound Tripoli airport.

Investigator Mustapha Maghrebi said the pilot, one of the 128 people who survived, told officials he may have been wrong to attempt a landing in the fog.

The Korean Air DC-10, with 199 people aboard, hit cars and two houses and split into three pieces before coming to rest about a half-mile from the airport, the official Libyan news agency JANA reported.

Korean officials said most passengers on Flight 803 were South Koreans returning to their jobs on engineering and construction projects in Libya. Flight 803 originated in Seoul and had made stops in Bangkok, Thailand, and Jiddah, Saudi Arabia, the airline said.

Airline officials, investigators and a medical team arrived in Tripoli today and said they would return with survivors.

Survivor Kwon Hyuk-hwi told the Munhwa Broadcasting Corp. he was reading a book in the first-class section when an announcement was made that the plane was about to land.

"Instantly there was a crushing impact and then came shrieks by horrified people. I kept my body as low as possible and lost consciousness," he said.

13 killed in Lebanon's 'night of terror, horror'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian and Christian gunners pounded Beirut today with an estimated 50,000 shells and rockets, killing at least 13 people in what police called "Beirut's night of terror and horror."

A police spokesman said 65 people were wounded in the eight-hour bombardment, which he called the heaviest shelling in the four-month standoff between Gen. Michel Aoun's mainly Christian troops and the Syrian army.

"We're being killed in our beds. ... Beirut is being massacred and no one in the Arab world or the outside world seems to care," said an announcer on the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio, his voice choking with emotion.

The Moslem-controlled Voice of the Nation described the ear-splitting artillery duel as "a night of insane terror."

One Grad rocket crashed into the top floor of the seven-story building that houses the offices of The Associated Press and the television networks CBS and NBC.

"The explosion blew me out of my bed. I found myself flat on the floor with glass shards showering me," said Associated Press correspondent Farouk Nassar, who lives on the sixth floor of the building.

The blast shattered windows and sent pieces of furniture tumbling into the street.

Screams for help echoed from nearby apartment buildings.

"His leg is chopped off!" one woman shouted as she guided civil defense rescuers to the second floor of another building struck by a rocket.

The victim was Jawhar al-Jawhari, a Druse janitor, who was rushed to the American University Hospital. Dozens of stretchers with screaming wounded crowded the hospital's emergency ward.

The U.N. headquarters in west Beirut and the Soviet Embassy compound also took direct hits. But no casualties were reported among their staff, police said.

Shells tore wide holes in scores of high-rise apartment buildings and hundreds of stores and boutiques had their iron shutters blown off.

The International Committee of the Red Cross in Beirut appealed "for an immediate cessation of (the) indiscriminate bombardment."

The casualties raised the overall toll to 494 killed dead and 2,014 injured since the latest round in the 14-year civil war fighting erupted March 8.

The police spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity, said an estimated 50,000 shells and rockets were fired. He called the bombardment "the worst in four months in terms of firepower unleashed and destruction."

It was the third deadliest bombardment. Thirty-nine people were killed on March 14 and 28 people were killed on Thursday.

An electrical tools warehouse in west Beirut's Sadat neighborhood was still blazing midmorning with fire engines unable to put out the blaze because of water shortages. Smoke blackened the facades of neighboring apartment buildings.

The police spokesman said the heavy shelling started around 8 p.m. when Syrian gunners in west Beirut and north Lebanon hit Jounieh, east Beirut and the port of Byblos.

Aoun's troops and the Lebanese Forces, the main Christian militia, retaliated with howitzer fire in west Beirut. The shelling tapered off around 4 a.m., the spokesman added.

Almost every part of Beirut and Jounieh were hit "as if by a killer earthquake," the spokesman said, adding: "It was Beirut's night of horror and terror."

The current confrontation erupted two days after Aoun ordered his gunboats and helicopter gunships to blockade three illegal harbors run by Moslem militias south of Beirut.

He said the blockade was aimed at restoring state authority eroded during the civil war and to recoup an estimated $100 million a year in lost customs revenues.

Jaruzelski: Communists must chart new future

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — President Wojciech Jaruzelski challenged his fellow Communists today to decide what their party stands for in a Poland that has thrown its allegiance to the Solidarity-led opposition.

Jaruzelski, the party chief, opened a crucial session of the Central Committee that is expected to result in a new leader for the first time in eight years and perhaps lead to fundamental changes in the party itself.

Later in the meeting, Politburo member Wladyslaw Baka, considered a candidate to become prime minister and a critic of outgoing Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski, gave up his duties as the party leader in charge of the economy. There was no immediate explanation.

The scheduled two-day meeting comes a month after the candidates backed by the newly legalized Solidarity trade union movement captured 260 out of 261 seats they contested in the parliamentary elections.

Jaruzelski, who opened the meeting by thanking the party for helping to elect him president July 19, was expected to resign from the party leadership post he had held since 1981 in order to devote himself to the new office.

He told the meeting that it ould be "one of the most important" meetings since the last party congress in 1986, the state's PAP news service reported.

Jaruzelski challenged the Central Committee to decide: "What as a party do we stand for? What should we defend against? What do we fight for? And what tasks should we begin in pursuit of social support?"

The party also heard reports on the nation's poor economic situation by Baka, assessing the election results by Politburo member Janusz Reykowski and on the probles and future of the party by Politburo member Marian Orzechowski.

State radio reported that Baka at the end of his speech quit as economic secretary for the Central Committee. The resignation could be to free him to take the prime minister's job, or it could indicate that he has lost out in a power struggle with Rakowski.

In his speech, Baka had pointedly criticized Rakowski's government as lacking "stubbornness and consistency" in its handling of the economy.

Reykowski expressed hope that the elections will have a "curative effect on the party" and spur it to change its ways of functioning "as soon as possible," PAP reported.

"Most of society has had enough of the party as it has been. Secondly, a significant part of the party grass roots has had enough of the style and ways of functioning of the party leadership," Orzechowski said, according to PAP.

Going into today's meeting, some party members said the 230-member Central Committee may call for a party congress, the first in three years, to consider dissolving the 2 million-member party and forming new groupings on the left.

The party also was expected to be consulted on Jaruzelski's choice to succeed Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski, who has submitted his resignation as premier but is believed interested in succeeding Jaruzelski as first secretary.

On Thursday, one unidentified regional official quoted by state radio said the party congress, considered for later this year, "should be the last congress in the history of the (party). I think that new parties should be created where everyone would be able to find a place for himself."

After the party's June thrashing in the parliamentary elections — the freest in 40 years — a Central Committee official told reporters: "This Polish party cannot win elections. This Communist Party will not win elections." The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, suggested that radical reforms were necessary.

Splitting the party into a leftist or social democratic party and a more orthodox Communist Party appeared to be favored by reformists in the party close to Jaruzelski. But Rakowski has opposed such division.

Rakowski argues that a united Communist Party should protect living standards and win support by appealing to economic issues.

Jaruzelski, 66, was appointed party first secretary in October 1981 and ordered martial law two months later to crush Solidarity. But this year, in an effort to pull the nation out of its economic crisis, he urged party leaders to legalize the trade union and ushered in Poland's first free elections in more than four decades.

He has promised Solidarity lawmakers that he would leave his party position if elected president, but he did not specify when.

On July 19, he was elected president by the National Assembly with the minimum majority, thanks to passive support from a handful of Solidarity legislators.

Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak or party ideologist Marian Orzechowski also are considered in the running for party leader, assuming Jaruzelski does resign at the Central Committee meeting.

Jaruzelski had been urging that the next government be a "grand coalition" that would include Solidarity.

Iranian Parliamentary Speaker Ali Akvar Hashemi Rafsanjani votes as an election official looks on.

Rafsanjani preparing for victory

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Hashemi Rafsanjani, all but assured of victory in today's presidential election, has begun forming a Cabinet that includes economists and technocrats to help guide this troubled nation into the post-Khomeini era, sources say.

The early turnout in Tehran was sluggish despite the exhortations of Iranian leaders over the last few days for a massive demonstration of unity. The opposition claimed there was little enthusiasm for the election.

Only a few dozen people were seen at polling stations in Tehran after they opened at 7 a.m., although voting appeared to pick up later.

However, Interior Minister Ali Akbar Mohtashemi told Tehran Radio that voting was so heavy in some provinces that "the polling stations are asking for more personnel ... because of the crowds."

He said polling was extended for two hours beyond the scheduled 5 p.m. closing time.

There was no word on when the results would be announced. The government did not say how many eligible voters there are, but the number was estimated at 25 million — about half the population — during parliamentary elections last year.

The main Iranian opposition group, the Mujahedeen Khalq or People's Holy Warriors, claimed polling was "extremely quiet."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Ethnic Russians end their strike in Estonia

TALLINN, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Ethnic Russians in the Soviet republic of Estonia ended their strike today after officials promised to probe complaints that the Estonian majority seeks to deny them voting rights, Estonian news reports said.

Strike leaders at 30 factories and businesses in the Estonian capital met late Thursday with Estonian President Arnold Ryutel, who agreed to form a commission to investigate the complaints, said Hary Tiido, a correspondent for Estonian Radio.

The workers went on strike to protest what they claim are discriminatory laws recently passed to preserve the Estonian language and limit voting rights of immigrants. Russian speakers make up a third of the Baltic republic's 1.6 million population.

The laws make Estonian the official language of the republic and require two years' residency to vote and at least five years residency to run for office.

The resolution of the week-old strike involving about 1,050 workers came as the national legislature in Moscow handed the Baltic republics of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania their biggest victory yet in a struggle for political and economic autonomy.

The Supreme Soviet on Thursday approved the first reading of two resolutions that would give the republics economic independence by Jan. 1 and free them to trade with other Soviet republics.

DC-10 lands without wheel

TORONTO (AP) — A Canadian Airlines DC-10 with 254 people aboard lost a wheel as it left Rio de Janeiro but landed safely today at Pearson International Airport in Toronto, airport officials said.

Airport spokesman Bruce Reid said the flight crew was aware of the problem and the aircraft circled the control tower to confirm the wheel, one of four on the left wing, was missing. Fire crews and ambulances rushed to the scene before the pilot was given permission to land at 7:30 a.m., said Reid.

"We wanted to be prepared in the event that something went wrong," Reid said.

Airline spokesman Mike Dukelow said passengers were told to assume the crash position. "I'm sure there was apprehension," he added.

No one was injured in the landing.

Sudan's rebels agree to talks

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Sudanese rebels said today they had agreed to peace talks with Sudan's new military rulers but that no date had been set.

Maj. Deng Alor, a spokesman for the Sudan People's Liberation Army, said only that he hoped the talks he described as preliminary would begin soon.

Sudan's leader, Lt. Gen. Omar Hassan el-Bashir, said Thursday that the talks would begin in early August. El-Bashir said the Sudanese government delegation would include one member of the 15-member junta that ousted an elected civilian government in Khartoum June 30.

Deng said the rebel delegation would include a high-ranking member of the rebel's military command but rebel leader John Garang would not take part in the preliminary discussions.

The talks, to be held in Ethiopia's capital, Addis Ababa, are aimed at ending Sudan's 6-year-old civil war, which has killed and displaced millions of people and created waves of refugees into countries neighboring Sudan.

Korean floods kill about 70

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Five days of floods caused by torrential rains along southern coastal areas has killed at least 70 people, disaster relief officials said today.

The National Disaster Center said another 45 people were missing and 54,500 were homeless.

Most of the victims were killed in landslides or drowned in creeks or rivers in the southern provinces of South Cholla and North Cholla and South Kyongsang. Up to 17.6 inches of rain has fallen in the past five days.

Property losses were estimated at $200 million.

Thousands of homes and buildings have been inundated or destroyed, rice paddies submerged and highways and railroad tracks have been washed out, National Disaster Center officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity in keeping with South Korean practice.

Officials feared that the damage from seasonal rains would be worsened by an approaching typhoon. The Central Meteorological Service said Typhoon Judy, packing 78 mph winds, was moving off Japan's Kyushu Island toward the South Korean coast.

The weather service issued typhoon and heavy rain warnings for most of the country. Forecasters said tidal waves were expected along the coastal area already soggy from floods and rain-swollen rivers.

Troop withdrawal debated

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — A deadlock on the withdrawal of Indian soldiers in Sri Lanka will end if India agrees to immediately begin removing some of its 45,000 troops, an official said today.

The two nations have been involved in intense negotiations over the Saturday deadline set by President Ranasinghe Premadasa for the pullout of Indian troops fighting to end a Tamil insurgency in Sri Lanka.

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has refused to meet the deadline, saying a hasty withdrawal could lead to even more bloodshed.

Foreign Minister Ranjan Wijeratne on Thursday said differences had been narrowed to two issues — India should accept Premadasa as the commander-in-chief of all forces in Sri Lanka and it should honor a cease-fire with the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, the largest and the most militant rebel group.

Once India begins moving its troops out and meets the two conditions, Wijeratne said in an interview, "I will take off to India" for further talks.

Palme case questions remain

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The conviction of Christer Pettersson for the 1986 killing of Prime Minister Olof Palme is not likely to lift the aura of mystery that surrounds one of Sweden's most infamous crimes.

Pettersson, a 42-year-old social misfit with a long record of crime, drunkenness and drug abuse, was sentenced Thursday to life imprisonment.

But the Palme file still has plenty of blank pages for advocates of conspiracy theories. It promises to become Sweden's equivalent to the 1963 assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

Palme, a dynamic four-term premier and Sweden's leading political figure for two decades, was shot as he walked home with his wife, Lisbeth, from a downtown movie theater on Feb. 28, 1986.

A PRAYER to the Holy Spirit. You who made me see everything and showed me the way to reach my ideal. You who gave me the divine gift to forgive and forget the wrong that is done to me and you who are in all instances of my life with me. I in this short dialogue want to thank for everything and confirm once more that I never want to be separated from you, no matter how great the material desire may be, I want to be with you and my loved ones in your perpetual glory. Thank you for your love towards me and my loved ones. Amen. Persons must pray this prayer 3 consecutive days without asking your wish. After the third day your wish will be granted, no matter how difficult it may seem to be. Thep promise to publish this dialogue as soon as favor is granted. M.V.
