Friends, family remember those who have died

FUMC hosts veterans display

A desire to provide the younger generation with a connection to those who fought World War II gave Midlander Ed Thomas the idea for a veterans Memorial Day display that opened Friday at First United Methodist Church.

His idea was not to glorify war, but to honor those who served, Thomas said. "When they were young they saved the world."

Thomas

But he also realized that the younger generation might be unaware of the outstanding duty performed by those who were part of the "younger generation" when the world went to war in 1941.

So Thomas proposed such a display to The Rev. Lane Boyd, minister of First United Methodist Church. Boyd agreed it was a great idea and promptly gave Thomas the project.

Thomas solicited the help of Brittie Holster and John Stringer and they began putting notices in the church bulletin and getting the word out in other ways.

Thomas said there are many reasons for this project.

These include recognizing "members and former members of First United Methodist Church for their service in the armed forces in World War II, to remind the America had not yet entered the Great War in Europe in 1915 when John McCrea, a Canadian physician who was greatly bereaved over battlefield deaths, penned his enduring patriotic poem, "In Flanders Fields."

We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders Fields.

Yet, by the end of World War I in 1918, America had lost more than 116,000 soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines. More than 405,000 American servicemen and servicewomen were to die a generation later in World War II.

McCrea's sorrowful poem inspired patriots from Europe to America to take up "the torch" of the fallen. It was, and remains, a tribute to the war dead and a call to duty.

Like Memorial Day, the poem pays homage to the war dead and exhorts the living never to forget their sacrifice.

The holiday, once termed Decoration Day, was inspired by the American Civil War and was marked by the placing of flowers and, later, flags at the graves of the fallen soldiers.

Since then, Memorial Day has been established as a memorial to all American war dead.

Their numbers well exceed 1 million in wars including the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, World War I, World War II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War and subsequent action involving the U.S. armed forces.

For Midlander Jack Edwards, Memorial Day is "especially poignant.

"It is the day I recall memories of friends of my youth who answered their country's call to duty in World War II and died for it."

Magnet school sites, themes may be settled this Tuesday

MISD prepares to hire attorney

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

The days of Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe and Dawson representing the Midland Independent School District may be numbered.

On April 25, the board of trustees voted to hire its own in-house attorney, thus negating the need for most independent legal representation. Such a move would effectively end a relationship between MISD and Cotton, Bledsoe that has lasted some 24 years.

According to Board President George Lara, who instigated the issue, an in-house attorney would save the district money and could offer better legal representation.

"Someone that will be proactive in our district and will do preventative measures in regard to the district," Lara said.

Cotton, Bledsoe has represented MISD since 1976, when the firm took on MISD's desegregation lawsuit. That original lawsuit was settled in November and is set to end in January 2001. The firm also represents the district in several other aspects. For instance, Cotton, Bledsoe, advised the district in the recent federal lawsuit involving past student Casey Riggan. Additionally, Ellen House, an attorney with the firm, sits in on all board meetings advising the board as issues arise.

Lara explained that the administration is working on a job description for the position, which will pay in the range of $70,000 to $100,000 a year.

Currently, the district has $76,000 a year budgeted for legal service but has overspent that budget for the past several years.

"It's over $100,000 that we've already spent on legal services this year," Lara said.

According to district documents, MISD has spent $190,795.50 for legal services for the 1999-2000 school year. Of that, $166,640.86 was paid to Cotton, Bledsoe with $50,566.07 representing unitary status costs.

Upon hiring an in-house attorney, MISD would still use Cotton, Bledsoe for any pre-existing litigation such as the unitary status lawsuit. Lara, however, sees the district saving money on those other legal costs totaling $140,229.43.

In addition to potential cost savings and perhaps because of cost concerns,

The Midland Independent School District is set to decide a few key issues at Tuesday's school board meeting, including that of magnet school themes and locations and a possible decision on the Midland High School site selection.

MISD's administration is recommending the board choose a math and science theme for one of the schools and computers and technology as the theme for the second magnet.

"Those were the two most popular ones on our survey. As we develop the details of the program, we may add some other enticements, as well," said Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. "I saw it as crucial that we acknowledge and recommend the most popular choices."

In March, MISD sent surveys out to parents of elementary school children, asking them to choose what would be the most desirable choice in a magnet school theme. The top vote-getters were math and science and computers and technology.

Board President George Lara said he would like to discuss the future of MISD's dual language programs and performing arts in elementary schools. He even suggested that perhaps the district consider a third magnet program to establish a performing arts school that could incorporate the district's strings program and Foreign Language program for elementary students.

As for the sites, MISD is recommending the magnets be placed at Washington Elementary and Pease Elementary. "I felt they have the smallest enrollment and would have the greatest capacity to take additional students," Baressi said.

The projected enrollment at Washington and Pease for the coming school year is about 250 students each. "That way if we get 125 Anglo students, we would have a school that is at least 30 percent Anglo," Baressi said, adding that each magnet school could accept as many as 250 additional students.

The schools will be open enrollment and available to any student in Midland. There will be no testing requirements for entrance and the only way students would not be allowed to attend is if the response is greater than the capacity of the school. In that case, Baressi has said a lottery might be used to choose students.

Additionally, if the response is so great, the district could even consider a third magnet school.

On campaign trail, Gore appeals to veterans

WASHINGTON (AP) — In campaign ads, Al Gore displays a photo of his Vietnam-era self in fatigues with an M-16 slung over his shoulder. On the trail, he asks campaign crowds, "How many other Vietnam veterans are here? Welcome home. I'm a Vietnam veteran."

Among veterans, Gore is running as one of them — right down to the American Legion hat he likes to wear at a jaunty angle when campaigning at Legion halls — although he was a noncombat information officer.

As an Army journalist, Gore said he "carried a reporter's notepad and pencil in one pocket and a fully loaded M-16," which he said he never aimed or fired.

"You carry an M-16, a fully loaded M-16, for a reason. You hope to never have to use it," he told The Associated Press in an interview.

The campaign sees his Vietnam service as "an important piece of his biography and background," Gore spokesman Chris Lehane said.

Republican George W. Bush, on the other hand, rarely talks about his stateside service with the Texas Air National Guard during the Vietnam years.

Bush

He is far from nostalgic in public about his days as a pilot. Asked recently if he still flies, Bush brusquely answered "no" and walked past.

Bush, who in a bitter GOP primary had to face Sen. John McCain's heroic story of being a POW in Vietnam, instead talks about restoring morale to U.S. troops by bringing honor and dignity back to the Oval Office.

He also promises to rebuild the military and stresses, through a proposed $3 billion-per-year spending increase on veterans' health care, repayment of a "debt of honor" to American veterans who he says have been neglected by the Clinton administration.

Gore

The separate appeals to veterans are offshoots of each candidate's drive to be seen as having what it takes to be commander in chief. For now, national polls give Bush the lead among veterans, almost 2-to-1 in a recent CNN/USA Today/Gallup survey.

The contest played out again this weekend in Memorial Day appearances: Gore gave the commencement address Saturday at the U.S. Military Academy in West Point, N.Y., and

Peru's Fujimori appears headed to lopsided re-election

Peru's President Alberto Fujimori celebrates his vote with his two daughters Keiko Sofia, left, and Sachi Marcela, right, after voting in Lima, Peru on Sunday. Fujimori risked the threat of international isolation in his quest for an unprecedented third term Sunday, going ahead with a runoff election boycotted by his rival.

LIMA, Peru (AP) — President Alberto Fujimori appeared on Sunday to be headed for a lopsided re-election victory in a runoff vote questioned by foreign observers and boycotted by his opponent.

Angered at what they considered a rigged election process, hundreds of demonstrators trying to march to the presidential palace were pushed back by riot police firing volleys of tear gas.

With 26.9 percent of the vote counted, Fujimori had 50.1 percent of the ballot to Alejandro Toledo's 16.5 percent, election officials said. They said 32.4 percent of the ballots had been intentionally spoiled and 1 percent left blank.

Tens of thousands of Toledo supporters massed on a central Lima plaza in a nighttime outpouring to noisily shout their opposition to a Fujimori victory.

A breakaway group of students tried to march toward the palace, Fujimori's official residence, but were repeatedly driven back by riot police. Some 1,000 riot police guarded the palace and blocked the way.

On the San Martin Plaza six blocks away, the scene was peaceful.

Toledo had originally urged Peruvians to boycott the runoff election, forced after Fujimori failed to get a majority in the first round. But voting is compulsory, and he later told them to spoil their ballots by scrawling on them the words, "no to fraud."

Failure to vote was punishable by a fine equivalent to $33 in a country where the monthly minimum wage is less than $120.

"For me, there is no electoral process. Two days ago, President Fujimori killed democracy in Peru," said a defiant Toledo, referring to a government decision to disregard international monitors and go ahead with a vote observers said would have no guarantee of fairness.

Asked if he would accept the outcome of Sunday's vote, Toledo responded loudly: "No way!"

"Fujimori is going through the second round alone. We are now starting the third round, a round for democracy," said Toledo, who added he didn't cast a ballot. "We have called for peaceful resistance."

Foreign monitors wanted to delay the runoff in order to be able to evaluate new software for tabulating votes. During the April 9 first-round election, in which Fujimori won 49.9 percent of the vote, officials could not satisfactorily explain how the number of ballots cast exceeded the number of voters by more than 1.4 million.

Fujimori, who came to power in 1990, counted on solid support among Peru's poor majority to deliver certain victory and weather the international storm provoked by the refusal of election officials to delay the disputed poll.

Israeli official resigns in light of investigation

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's transportation minister resigned Sunday in light of sexual assault and harassment charges filed by three former subordinates.

The resignation of Yitzhak Mordechai, a former defense minister and highly decorated army officer, was expected to hamper Prime Minister Ehud Barak's efforts to pull his coalition together after two partners threatened to resign over the government's peace policies. The coalition troubles could cloud Barak's peace process plans.

Mordechai's resignation from the ministry was accepted in a Cabinet meeting Sunday and will take effect Tuesday, Barak's office said in a statement.

Mordechai will continue to serve as a member of the parliament, the Knesset, but has also resigned from the leadership of the Center Party, said Leor Horev, a spokesman. He will not try to prevent the lifting of his immunity as a parliament member, Horev added.

The resignation came two days after Attorney General Elyakim Rubinstein announced that charges would be pressed against Mordechai. The charges centered on accusations by a former employee that Mordechai shoved her onto a couch and put his hand under her shirt on Feb. 25.

After the accusations were made public, two other women came forward with accounts of unwanted sexual advances from Mordechai.

Mordechai did not make any public statement in his resignation. Previously, he has denied all charges.

According to Israeli law, the names of the three women have not been made public. Rubinstein said Mordechai, 55, would be charged with aggravated sexual assault, sexual assault and sexual harassment.

Serb opposition seeks Russia's support against Milosevic

MOSCOW (AP) — Top Serbian opposition leaders arrived Sunday in Moscow to ask Russia to end its support for Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic.

Zoran Djindjic, Vuk Draskovic and Vojislav Kostunica were expected to meet with members of Russia's liberal Yabloko party and possibly with the head of Russia's Orthodox Church, Patriarch Alexy II.

The three also hoped to talk with Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov, but had no official confirmation of a meeting. They came to Moscow on an invitation from Yabloko leaders.

Tensions are on the rise in Serbia, the main republic of the Yugoslav federation. Milosevic has intensified his crackdown on opponents by shutting down independent media and arresting activists, sparking violence and massive street protests.

The opposition wants Moscow to "put an end to its support of the Belgrade regime and do its best to transform Serbia into a democratic state," Draskovic said in an interview with the NTV television station after arriving in Moscow.

"We have come to Moscow because Serbia today is a state of terror where the rights of the opposition and of the people whose opinion differs from Milosevic's are not observed," he said.

Draskovic said Russia must use its close political and economic ties with Milosevic to pressure him into holding early parliamentary elections.

Russia has expressed concern about the rise in tensions, but has shown little sign of reversing its support for Milosevic. Moscow vehemently opposed NATO's 78-day air campaign last year against Yugoslavia, and recently said it was prepared to extend a $102 million loan to help repair damage from the bombing.

U.N. spokesman: Rebels free remaining hostages

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (AP) — Sierra Leonean rebels on Sunday freed what appeared to be the last of some 500 U.N. hostages seized earlier this month, signaling "a positive change of direction" among the rebels toward bringing peace to the war-torn West African nation, a U.N. spokesman said.

Eighty-five former captives arrived in Freetown Sunday night from Monrovia, the capital of neighboring Liberia, said U.N. spokesman David Wimhurst.

A senior Liberian military official who spoke on condition he not be named said more freed hostages were still on the Sierra Leone-Liberia border and would be flown out today. Wimhurst could not confirm whether there were more hostages awaiting evacuation from the remote area.

Four peacekeepers unaccounted for were believed to have been killed in fighting when the hostage crisis began on May 6, Wimhurst said.

"The release signals a positive change of direction by the RUF in resolving the present crisis," Wimhurst said of the Revolutionary United Front, a secretive and isolated rebel group notorious for its diamond dealing and atrocities against civilians.

An additional 23 Indian peacekeepers remained surrounded by rebels in the eastern Sierra Leonean village of Quiver, but had been allowed to keep their weapons and were not considered hostages "as such," Wimhurst said.

"We would like that restriction to be removed," he said.

While hundreds of hostages had been released in a trickle during the previous weeks, it was not clear why the rebels decided to free the last of their captives this weekend. The United Nations did not release any new information about the negotiations that led to the last releases, which were led by Liberian President Charles Taylor. Taylor is the closest regional ally to the RUF.

On Friday and Saturday, 143 hostages were flown from Monrovia to Freetown.

Dressed in military uniforms and clutching bottles of mineral water, some of the former hostages freed Sunday were relieved and joyful as they arrived in Monrovia from remote northeastern Sierra Leone, where rebels had handed them over. Most were in good physical condition, although some were being treated for malaria, minor injuries and fatigue, Liberian medical officials said.

"I feel very happy. I thought we were never going to reach this place. Thank God we are here," said Zambian Lance Cpl. Elias Mwanza, who suffered from a swollen jaw and other injuries.

Mwanza said some of the captors had tormented the hostages while others were more kind and promised not to kill them "because we are their African brothers." Most of those freed Sunday were Zambian.

Zambian Pvt. Goma Justin, who had deep cuts on his foot from stepping on broken glass, described his captivity as "rough."

Despite the releases, fighting between rebels and pro-government forces was reported over the weekend at the strategic crossroads of Rogberi Junction, about 50 miles east of Freetown, Wimhurst said. He had no further details.

Meanwhile, West African heads of state were gathering for weekend meetings in the Nigerian capital, Abuja, to discuss the crisis in Sierra Leone. Informal talks were held Saturday and the main gathering was being held Sunday.

The rebels have killed tens of thousands of people and intentionally mutilated many more during Sierra Leone's eight-year civil war. The conflict reignited earlier this month when the RUF rebels took the U.N. peacekeepers hostage and began advancing toward Freetown.

Since then, a ragtag alliance of pro-government forces has tried to push the rebels away from the capital. The rebels' leader Foday Sankoh is in government custody and officials have said they may prosecute him for illegal diamond dealing and the killings of 21 people during a public demonstration outside his home earlier this month.

Any prosecution of Sankoh threatens to spark an escalation of war. Sankoh's rebels have reportedly demanded his release.

Associated Press Television News cameraman Miguel Gil Moreno de Mora and Reuters correspondent Kurt Schork were killed Wednesday in a rebel ambush in Sierra Leone. South African cameraman Mark Chisholm and Greek photographer Yannis Behrakis suffered light injuries in the same attack.

Heavy fighting reported on eve of peace talks with Ethiopia

ASMARA, Eritrea (AP) — The eve of peace talks found Eritrea and Ethiopia locked in battle in the south Sunday, with Eritrea accusing its neighbor of bombing a power plant in an act of "senseless destruction." Ethiopia denied the accusation.

Meanwhile, a new front opened in Eritrea's humanitarian crisis.

Ongoing fighting near the central city of Mendefera threatens to uproot 200,000 people, U.N. Eritrea coordinator Simon Nhongo warned, dramatically intensifying the civilian flight from a 2-week-old offensive that already has sent an estimated one-seventh of the nation's people fleeing.

Trucks, buses and vans commandeered by the government poured into the grounds of a school 22 miles south of the capital Sunday, disgorging hundreds of women and children, each carrying a bulging bag or two of their belongings.

Boys clambered off the high-paneled, open-backed trucks first. Parcels, babies and women — clasping their skirts to protect their modesty — followed.

"We have only these pieces of clothes," said 70-year-old Bisrat Berhe. Her son was fighting on the front, she said.

The primary school grounds — deserted the day before — held at least 18,000 people Sunday morning, with 6,000 more arrivals expected by day's end.

The civilians fled ahead of Ethiopia's artillery and aircraft-backed pursuit of Eritrean forces retreating from the two countries' disputed border.

Eritrea said last week that the fighting already had uprooted 555,000 of its 4 million people.

Punished by the offensive, Eritrea agreed to withdraw from all disputed territory and to talks due to start Monday in Algiers on resolving the neighbors' 2-year-old war over their ill-delineated border in the Horn of Africa.

Ethiopia, however, says it will keep up its attack until it is satisfied Eritrea has indeed withdrawn from all land Ethiopia claims as its own.

Sunday morning, Ethiopian warplanes bombed a nearly completed power plant near the port city of Massawa, Eritrea's Foreign Ministry said, calling the attack "vandalism and senseless destruction."

Ethiopia said it was a military installation — not a power plant.

"What we have bombed is a military target," said government spokeswoman Selome Taddesse in the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa.

Ethiopia late Saturday accused Eritrea of launching an offensive from one of the points from which it had promised to withdraw, saying the countries' artillery gunners exchanged fire at the eastern town of Bure.

In Asmara, Eritrea's capital, presidential spokesman Yemane Gebremeskel said early Sunday there was fighting on all fronts. He later corrected himself, saying there was fighting in the south.

Sunday was also the ninth anniversary overthrow of the military regime that once ruled Ethiopia, which in 1991 still included the province of Eritrea.

MEMORIAL: Day is time to recall war dead

(From 1A)

Texas, was a naval aviator who piloted Wildcat and Corsair fighters in the war in the Pacific.

"Vividly, I remember when Briggs was last seen going into a cloud deck over the western Pacific in his smoking Hellcat after a dogfight with the (Japanese).

"Duane was a gunner's mate on the cruiser 'New Orleans' when it took a shell on his forward gun turret.

"Then there was Monroe, a Marine rifleman, who survived the brutal Bougainville campaign only to die during the invasion of Guam.

"Ol' Charley was 26 when he 'bought it' when his shot-up Avenger spun-in on the final approach to our carrier.

"My (Seagraves) high school buddy, Buford, died on Bataan early in the war."

There were more, many more.

"They were all true heroes of what is now being called 'The Greatest Generation,'" Edwards said.

On the war's European front, Midlander Ciro Sanchez was a U.S. Army rifleman in France.

"We were always united," Sanchez said of American fighting men regardless of their backgrounds. "Everybody was equal over there. We pulled for each other."

Frank Cole, now 75, was a mortar platoon leader with the 740th Tank Battalion at the Battle of the Bulge in 1944 and 1945.

"I am proudly flying the flag," Cole said of the Memorial Day weekend that "memorializes all of the fallen heroes.

"I am a proud American," he said. "I served my country well — proud of my achievement. When you participated in it (war) and came through it, you are just thankful you weren't one of them to be memorialized."

George O'Brien was a 26-year-old Marine Corps lieutenant in Korea in 1952 when his battlefield heroism and valor won him the Medal of Honor, the nation's highest military decoration.

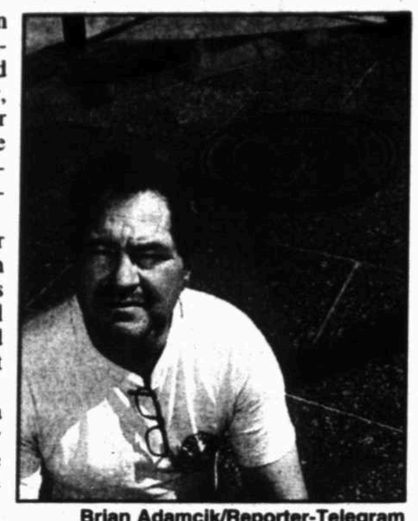
O'Brien saluted his fallen comrades.

"We can just thank God that we had them — people to give their lives for our country," O'Brien, 73, said. "They gave their all. They certainly need to be remembered."

Businessman John Nute, a 53-year-old Vietnam War veteran and retired naval officer, reflected on the war dead, those whom he knew personally and others "who died in the service of our country.

"I also remember those who escaped death at great personal costs through either physical or mental wounds and my compassion goes out to them," he said.

Richard Chapman, a 54-year-old U.S. Navy gunner's mate in the Vietnam War-era, quietly kneeled at the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial at Midland International Airport.



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram
Former Odessan Richard Chapman of Louisiana visited the Permian Basin Vietnam Memorial Friday to remember his high school friend, Dale Farris.

Chapman, a former Odessan who now lives in Louisiana, said that Dale Wayne Farris, "one of my best friends" and a high school buddy, died in Vietnam at age 25 in a rocket attack while he was refueling a helicopter.

"There were several in our (1965) high school class that didn't make it," Chapman lamented.

Memorial Day ceremonies honor those servicemen and servicewomen who died "not only in Vietnam but in the other wars," Chapman noted. "People went out there. They believed in their country and they were just trying to do their duty. Some of them lost their lives. They gave it all."

Vietnam War veteran Bill McNeill, 53, of Midland lost a high school buddy, Curtis McKinney, in the Army in Vietnam. His father, Ray McNeill, served in the U.S. Army Air Corps in World War II.

"Thousands of men have given their lives for our country and flag," said McNeill, a Purple Heart recipient who served with the U.S. Navy Special Forces on river duty. "We all have lost parts of ourselves wherever we did battle. Other than your life, I think the worst things we lose are our youth and innocence."

Of honoring the war dead on Memorial Day, Vietnam War-era veteran John Philbeck of Midland said, "It's our responsibility to carry on traditions that have been passed down to us by our forefathers." Otherwise, "then we run the risk of losing that freedom."

To Korean War veteran James Beatty, 68, Memorial Day is "a wake-up call to people" to understand and appreciate "the cost of freedom."

Ron Henderson, a Korean War veteran who is commander of American Legion Post 19, cited the importance of remembering "the ones that fought and died to give freedom, to allow people to walk down the street without fear — just free, period, to do the things they really desire to do ... without being watched and monitored everywhere they go. It's just freedom."

Jerry Wall, who served in the U.S. Army's infantry in Vietnam, said that the "heaviest thing on my mind are the ones who have never been accounted for — the missing in action.

John Hyde, presiding judge of the 238th Texas District Court for Midland County, served in the U.S. Army in the Vietnam War. His father fought in Europe in World War II.

"As I child, I remember when the soldiers came home after World War II," reflected Hyde, who was born on Memorial Day, May 30, 1942.

"Memorial Day always takes me back to those soldiers in World War II who went overseas and fought, and so many did not return.

"My thoughts are always of World War II when I think of Memorial Day," Hyde said. "I know we pay tribute to more than that. I remember the parade and the soldiers. I remember going to the parade and seeing them march down the street after the war was over."

GORE: Campaign ads to include spots from Army days

planned to visit with veterans in western Pennsylvania veterans today, while Bush was to spend the holiday with soldiers at Fort Hood.

Gore recently told a veterans' gathering in Little Rock, Ark., that he has made it his project in the White House to give President Clinton recommendations on how to resolve the problem of armed services personnel who make so little that they are eligible for food stamps. The Gore camp has not offered details.

By way of connecting with veterans, Gore notes that, as a member of Congress from Tennessee, he co-founded a caucus of Vietnam-era veterans.

For Gore, images from his Army days also are part of a broader attempt to introduce his life story to voters who have gotten to know him only as Clinton's No. 2.

Gore's strategists blame his stagnant poll numbers on what they say is the public's unfamiliarity with the candidate, and they are expected to focus their first wave of general-election TV ads on his biography. Those biographical spots, as during the primaries and in his 1988 presidential campaign, are likely to feature a snapshot of him in Army fatigues.

During the primaries, Bush said war stories are less likely to influence veterans' votes than leadership experience.

"I think voters are going to say I'd be a better commander in chief because I've had chief executive experience. I know how to set goals. I know how to make decisions. I know how to rally people," Bush said, at the time comparing himself to McCain.

Said his spokesman, Ari Fleischer, "The governor has military service, the governor is a veteran. ... But he does not view this election as a personal referendum on his resume, and he doesn't think the voters are going to base their choice on Al Gore's resume. They're going to base it on who they think will make a stronger leader."

Gore's biography — right out of Harvard, he enlisted in the Army, then volunteered for Vietnam duty — includes five months in-country as a military information specialist, a non-combatant role that he says included brushes with enemy fire.

Gore and his aides are sensitive about not over-trumpeting his military days.

Friends have said that one reason that Gore, who opposed the war, enlisted was his fear that dodging the draft might hurt his father's chances for re-election to the Senate. As it turned out, the late Al Gore Sr. lost anyway.

Gore shies away from talking about Bush's National Guard service.

"I don't pass judgment on the decisions that anybody else made during that time of the Vietnam War, because everybody faced a different situation, and the country was in the midst of a big mistake," he said. "So much time has passed we ought to give everybody a break on whatever decisions they made considering whether to serve or not to serve."

How much does military background matter? Not that much, suggested Charles Wright of Corning, Ark., a past state commander for the Veterans of Foreign Wars who recently turned out to hear Gore in Little Rock.

"I don't support Gore. I support the man in office who supports veterans' issues," said Wright, who served in the Navy in Vietnam. "I vote for the person who is going to do the job properly."

FUMC: Display includes personal stories

younger generations that the elderly were once their age (that most entered the service as teenagers), to bring to their attention the significance of participation of the United States in the war (and) to stimulate an interest in learning about World War II, thereby keeping alive the legacy left us through the sacrifices made by civilians as well as those who served in the armed forces."

The three solicited from church members stories, photographs and wartime memorabilia. They said it was an overwhelming project and what they learned was staggering.

Among the membership of First United Methodist Church were people like Bruce E. Wallace, who joined the 8th Air Force at the age of 17 and served as a tail-gunner on a B-17 during the war.

Wallace flew on 48 missions and was shot down or crash landed three times.

Then there was Ernest W. Alexander Jr., who was assigned to Calcutta, India, for the Army Air Corps. He flew cargo, passengers and mail, and later was a test pilot.

There were all types of personal stories to embellish the display. Thomas was an Army Air Corps pilot who bailed out over Burma, parachuted to safety and saved his parachute. After the war Thomas returned home with the parachute, which his mother used to make a wedding gown for his fiancee, Bea Hoffman. They were married on March 23, 1946.

When the display came together, Thomas was surprised there were only two women included. One of them was Geneva Monkress who recently moved out of Midland.

Yet their roles in the war effort were significant. Ms. Monkress, who was a captain in the U.S. Marine Corps, worked as a decoder and decoded the message that resulted in the end of the war in the Pacific.

The display of 81 wartime experiences will be available for viewing at the church for the next three or four weeks, said Thomas.

Those who are not members of First United Methodist Church, but who wish to see the display, are asked to stop by the church office.

"Let's take a long, last look at these people now while we still have the chance," said Thomas. "No one has ever done anything like their achievement before and, God willing, no one will ever have to do anything like it again."

HIRE: Wichita Falls district has in-house attorney

(From 1A)

Lara sees a greater range of coverage involved with an in-house attorney. Because MISD's current law firm charges the district by the hour, Lara believes board members might not seek advice as often as they would like.

According to Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr., MISD pays Cotton, Bledsoe differing rates depending on what attorney is doing the work. For example, he said Ms. House charges the district $135 an hour to monitor board meetings and advise the board. Baressi added that the general hourly charge for legal service through the firm is $165.

"We would hesitate to call an attorney late in the evening, for example, because we are trying to be cautious about spending on legal service," Lara said, adding that an in-house attorney would always be on call.

When asked if he has been pleased with Cotton, Bledsoe's service, Lara would not comment.

Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe and Dawson partner and newly elected school board trustee Charles Tighe would not comment on the issue either.

"That's an issue I would stay away from," Tighe said. "I wouldn't feel that it's appropriate for me to take part in a discussion or a vote."

Although Midland has never had its own in-house attorney, there is precedent for the idea in Texas. Wichita Falls Independent School District has had its own in-house attorney for the past two years.

"We had some actual administrative reorganization and as I looked at what were the needs to service not only our board but our staff as a whole, many of those needs centered around legal issues," said Connie Welsh, superintendent at WFISD.

Wichita Falls pays its attorney $70,000 a year and has found that having an attorney on staff saves money. "As a frugal budget manager, I could see how we could actually save money by replacing a position. We put in an attorney and actually have more service."

WFISD's attorney handles about 80 percent of all the district's legal service, including student and employee grievances and discipline matters, contract negotiations, interpretation of board policies and open records request. Like MISD, Wichita Falls also is involved in a desegregation lawsuit and uses an outside law firm for that litigation.

SETTLED: MHS site is on agenda

agenda, is another item addressing site selection, this one for the proposed new Midland High School. The agenda shows an action item, but Baressi isn't sure the full board is ready to make a decision.

"I've got an inkling that the new board members may need more time," Baressi said. "I do think we need direction and if the new board members think they need more time, we need to adjust accordingly."

Two arraigned in five murders at NYC Wendy's

By Beth Harpaz
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Two men accused of the execution-style slayings of five people during a robbery at a Wendy's restaurant — one of the most shocking crimes in recent New York memory — were charged Sunday with multiple counts of murder, attempted robbery and weapons possession.

Queens Assistant District Attorney Greg Lasak described in chilling detail how John Taylor, 36, and Craig Godineaux, 30, allegedly bound and gagged their victims with duct tape, then executed them one by one.

"They were marched single file into a big freezer box. They were told to get on their knees, and they were each shot by the defendants once in the head," Lasak said, his voice filled with emotion.

Lasak told Queens Criminal Court Judge Michael Aloise that the defendants had given videotaped statements admitting the shootings at the fast-food restaurant in Queens last Wednesday night. In addition, he said, witnesses picked them out of a police lineup, and detectives seized money, a security tape from the restaurant's camera and other evidence.

"The evidence we have to tie these defendants to the case is overwhelming," Lasak said.

All seven people shot were employees of the restaurant. Five were killed and two others survived with wounds, one of them by playing dead until the bandits left.

Queens District Attorney Richard Brown has 120 days to decide whether to seek the death penalty. Brown, who has twice before recommended the death penalty, said he would use the time to investigate, talk to victims' families and evaluate the defendants' backgrounds, state of mind and mental capacity.

"The decision in regard to the death penalty is a decision I do not take lightly," he said.

Brown refused to comment on media reports that Taylor had said, "no witnesses," as his reason for shooting the workers after taking $2,300. Most of the money, recovered at Taylor's house, was in coins, according to the reports.

Aloise set the next hearing for June 26 and remanded the pair without bail. Lasak asked for no bail, saying there was "no greater risk of flight" than a potential death penalty. Court-appointed attorneys John Youngblood and Heidi Segal reserved the right to request bail in the future.

Taylor and Godineaux were each charged with 10 counts of murder in the first degree and 10 counts of murder in the second degree, plus the lesser charges.

Taylor later was placed on suicide watch, officials said.

Taylor, a short, heavyset man, stood during the proceeding, staring straight ahead. Godineaux, tall and lanky, gazed at the floor.

A woman who appeared to be a friend of Godineaux walked in and out of the courtroom, wearing a red sweater over her head. She refused to identify herself to reporters, but as the defendants were led away, she cried out, "I love you, Craig," broke down in sobs and wailed, "Oh, God."

Police say Taylor was a fugitive who jumped bail in a previous fast-food robbery and had a record stretching back to 1996, when he was accused of trying to break into a safe at a McDonald's where he was assistant manager, and sentenced to five years probation.

In one week last June, he was linked to robberies or attempted robberies at four fast-food businesses in Queens.

Military confronts a shortage of buglers for veterans' funerals

WASHINGTON (AP) — As World War II veterans reach their twilight years, the military is battling a shortage of buglers to play "Taps" at funerals. As a result, the Defense Department has called in reserves — compact disc players.

"It used to be that every installation or division would have a band, and the bugler would come from the band. With the downsizing of the military, well, we don't have the bands in the numbers that we used to," Defense Department spokeswoman Lt. Col. Catherine Abbott said. "And unfortunately, our veterans are reaching that age."

The Department of Veterans Affairs estimates that of approximately 25 million U.S. military veterans, about 1,500 die each day, two-thirds veterans of World War II. Last year, more than 550,000 veterans died, the department said.

Not every family requests a military funeral honors ceremony, but the Pentagon tries to honor the wishes of the 10 percent to 15 percent who do.

Families of honorably discharged veterans are entitled to a two-person uniformed funeral honor guard, the folding and presentation of the U.S. flag and a rendition of "Taps."

With the bugler shortage in mind, Congress passed a law that took effect in January and allows "a recorded version of 'Taps' using audio equipment" if a live horn player is not available.

Abbott said "funeral kits," which include a compact disc of "Taps," have been sent to 450 funeral directors across the country, as well as to all offices that deal with such matters at the nation's military bases.

She said she was not aware of any complaints about the recorded Taps thus far. "The feedback we have gotten is that folks are pretty happy with it," Abbott said.

VA spokesman Steven Westerfeld said the National Cemetery Administration tries to avoid using the compact disc and portable stereo, often by enlisting a bugler from a local military service group, veterans' organization or a high school band.

The problem is expected to get worse, Westerfeld said. He noted the agency has created five new national cemeteries since 1997 and is looking at an additional six sites.

The use of recordings is not entirely new. Tapes or CDs have had to be used in the past, officials said, but the law now officially authorizes the practice.

The original rendition of "Taps" was composed during the Civil War, in July 1862, when a wounded Union general, Daniel Adams Butterfield, directed brigade bugler Oliver Wilcox Norton to honor his 600 troops who died in the battle by playing some notes he had written on the back of an envelope.

"The music was beautiful on that still summer night and was heard far beyond the limits of our brigade," Norton would say later. "The next day I was visited by several buglers from neighboring brigades, asking for copies of the music, which I gladly furnished."

The piece was soon adopted throughout the military. In 1874, it was officially recognized by the Army, and it became standard at military funerals in 1891.

The compact disc version was recorded on Memorial Day 1999 at Arlington National Cemetery. A member of the United States Army Band, Master Sgt. Woodrow English, played the bugle that day.

Western District will miss judge's wit, diligent work

The retirement of U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton III sets a particularly difficult challenge for those who will attempt to follow in his footsteps. Bunton was a tireless workhorse, and the Midland court still faces tough years ahead with the number of cases that originate here.

During his 20 years on the federal bench for the Western District of Texas, presiding mainly over cases heard in the Midland and Pecos federal courts, Bunton established an outstanding record for moving cases at an unusually rapid pace, and for dispensing justice in a fair and strikingly independent manner. Lucius Bunton was no carbon copy of the typical federal jurist.

Bunton already possessed a fine reputation among his colleagues when President Jimmy Carter appointed him to the federal bench in 1979. As such, he was the first federal judge to be assigned permanently to the U.S. District Court for the Western District serving the Midland and Pecos Division.

The fact that he did a superb job for the Midland court is apparent from his well-known reputation as a tough, but fair judge with a biting wit that scalded more than a few attorneys and scores of defendants. He moved the cases off of his docket in record time and in a district with a heavier than normal number of federal drug cases, he was known as a workhorse.

Judge Bunton served the Midland and Pecos courts in exemplary fashion. He shouldered a load of cases in the Western District of Texas at a time when drug activity and white-collar crime was increasing rapidly, and he never slowed down.

His intelligence, wit and hard work will be sorely missed. We wish Judge Bunton the best in his retirement.

The drug war is being lost in America

WASHINGTON — We must fight the drug war or surrender. Surrender would be the legalization of drugs, which is simply the acknowledgement by government that individuals are responsible for what they consume or inject into their own bodies. On the other hand, drugs are poison, and if it is a poison we wish to eliminate, then we had better accept the idea that we are fighting a losing war.

Anderson

And make no mistake, the drug war is here, not in the endless jungles of South America. The front lines of the drug war are in America's inner cities. It is an urban war, not a jungle war, and our resources should be allocated accordingly.

Whereas a 50,000-man expeditionary force could not begin to search and hold the vast jungle areas of the drug-producing countries, a million-man force might be able to do so — but at what cost in lives and money? In short, the conquest of the producers and the occupation of their lands are not viable objectives, at least not until the criminals have been separated from the populace. First a wedge must be driven between them, and that wedge is the absence of money.

It is on the demand front, not the supply front, upon which the primary battles must be waged, and two tools are required: education and governmental presence (the second being a prerequisite for the first). After all, how much drug buying, selling and using can go on when policemen are standing on every other street corner?

Presence — the implied threat of force rather than the actual use of force — is the key. Just as a military presence provided a deterrence in the Cold War, so such a presence can provide deterrence in the drug war.

Consider, for example, the deterrence factor that would be provided by 2,000 additional policemen in each of 100 American cities. That is only 200,000 officers. It would be a force sufficient to do the job, to overawe drug users and pushers alike. Combined with existing police forces, these 200,000 reinforcements would appear overwhelming, thereby making confrontations less likely and casualties accordingly few.

This would not be tantamount to martial law, nor would any rights be suspended. It would simply be the reinforcing of America's law enforcement personnel, which currently only number approximately one officer on duty for every 2,000 citizens. The police of America are simply outnumbered.

Rather than fighting a jungle war against an enemy whose lines of retreat are virtually unending, the war needs to be fought in the finite jungles of America's cities, where reinforced police forces can transform the war into a pacification effort.

Pacify the cities, and the problem in the suburbs will wither away. Interdiction of the demand end of the chain will dry up the money that drives the drug cartels. And the absence of money will quickly erode their support among the thousands of people employed in the harvest, transportation and processing of the poison.

But reverse the procedure, make war against the supply side of the problem, and the war will be lost — and at a terribly high price.

Zone is Off Broadway of Arab-Israeli conflict

The last time I was in Israel's former southern Lebanon security zone I was being driven around by a nervous Israeli army press officer called Alex in his beat-up old Mercedes. We were barreling down some road near Merj 'Uyun when an armored personnel carrier belonging to the Israeli-backed South Lebanon Army came barreling along the other way. The Lebanese militiamen in the APC weren't very good drivers and their vehicle swerved and scraped our Mercedes. We were both going so fast, and the APC was so heavy, that it knocked the driver's door right off our car. It just went flying off the hinges.

And that was my last image of the security zone — being driven around by an Israeli officer in a beat-up Mercedes with no door.

The Israeli security zone in Lebanon was that kind of a place — slightly makeshift, slightly madcap, part killing field, part theater of the absurd, a place where everything goes and everything went. Anyone who thought the Israeli withdrawal there was going to be neat and clean has simply never been to southern Lebanon. But don't get caught up in the momentary messiness. That's not the story. The story is that this Israeli withdrawal is of huge geopolitical significance for the Middle East.

Anyone who thought the Israeli withdrawal there was going to be neat and clean has simply never been to southern Lebanon... . The story is that this Israeli withdrawal is of huge geopolitical significance for the Middle East.

In its own weird way, southern Lebanon has been the keystone of recent Middle East politics. It held together a whole set of relationships and made possible the avoidance of a whole set of big questions. And guess what? Prime Minister Ehud Barak's gutsy and strategic decision to withdraw Israeli forces unilaterally from the security zone has just removed this keystone, and now everyone in the region will have to adjust.

For the past 20 years the security zone has been the Off Broadway of the Arab-Israeli conflict. It was the place where Israel and Syria could fight a proxy war, and let off steam, by killing Lebanese instead of each other. It was a place where the Syrians could keep the Lebanese Hezbollah fighters busy so they wouldn't shoot at the Syrians in Lebanon. It was the one border where Iran, working through Lebanese guerrillas, could draw Israeli blood. And it was the Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon that allowed all the Arab governments to tolerate Syria's occupation of Lebanon. If southern Lebanon hadn't existed, the Arabs and Israelis would have had to rent Cyprus for the same purposes.

But now watch what happens with the Israelis gone: Syria, without being able to bleed Israel through southern Lebanon, now has much less leverage. It either has to go to war with Israel directly, and risk everything, or move decisively on peace by accepting Israel's basic terms for a Golan Heights deal. Without Israel in Lebanon, Syria not only will have a much harder time justifying and explaining its continued occupation, but the other Arab states will also have a much harder time explaining why they could not tolerate Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, but can tolerate Syria's occupation of Lebanon.

Hezbollah, meanwhile, has to decide what to do with its victory. It just evicted Israel from Lebanon, and has earned enormous prestige from that. Hezbollah has two choices: Push on to Jerusalem and get totally chewed apart by Israel or turn to Beirut and use this military victory to leverage a bigger slice of power in governing Lebanon. My bet: Hezbollah eventually turns toward Beirut.

At the same time, Hezbollah's main backer, Iran, must decide whether to push Hezbollah into war against Israel proper, in which case Iran will be denounced by France, Lebanon's patron saint, as well as the United Nations and the whole world community. Or Iran could focus on strengthening Hezbollah's influence in Lebanon, which will put it in competition with Syria.

Finally, if the border between Israel and Lebanon stabilizes, Barak may conclude that unilateral withdrawal might be the best way to deal with the West Bank as well — just draw the line that Israel wants, say goodbye and forget trying to reach a deal with the Palestinians. Remember: Now that Hezbollah has evicted the Israelis from southern Lebanon by force, instead of by negotiation, this will make it much harder for Yasser Arafat to give up any territory to Israel or make any compromises. He will look like a wimp in Arab eyes.

And you thought southern Lebanon was just some insignificant little backwater.

CHARLEY REESE

Trade relations with China is a big-money issue

My guess is that by the time you read this, The House will have granted China permanent favorable trade relations. It's a money issue, and big money usually wins in the House.

The so-called watchdog committee on human rights is pure puffery, an attempt to cover congressional behinds. Let's face it: the House has no legal right, no moral authority and no ability to interfere with the internal affairs of China or of any other sovereign state. This foolish committee is just one more pathetic example of politicians trying to please everybody.

Reese

"Well, I gave the communist bosses exactly what they wanted, but, hey, you human-rights types, I also voted for a watchdog committee." Give us a break. Why don't you have the decency at least to tell the truth — you sold out to the big corporations, which have always been the movers and shakers behind this trade issue.

Actually, I have no objection to Americans buying Chinese products — if China had any. What I object to is American corporations laying off American workers and cutting deals with communist bosses in China for their cheap labor.

Don't think for one minute that the huge trade deficit we have with China is because we are buying so many Chinese herbs, firecrackers and kung fu shoes. No, the deficit is a result of products ordered by American manufacturers. That flood of "imports" from China is all American brand-name products that used to be made in this country and ought to be made in this country.

I'm ashamed to say that the other day I noticed that my Confederate coffee mug was made in China. For Jeff Davis' sake, don't tell me we don't have Americans capable of manufacturing ceramic coffee mugs.

As I've said before, America suffers from a highly immoral and selfish elite, and none is more immoral and indecent than the heads of multinational corporations. They are three-way exploiters. They exploit American workers by laying them off, they exploit Chinese workers by cutting deals with their commissars who pay the workers dirt-cheap wages, and they exploit the American consumers by selling their products for the same high prices as if they had been made in America.

But the House is largely the whore of big business these days. There might be a welfare queen or two in the housing projects, but the real welfare royalty is in the boardrooms of American corporations. They have ruthlessly exploited the American taxpayers through their bought congressmen and senators.

They get tax breaks that a working man or woman can only dream of. They have the Overseas Private Investment Corp. that guarantees the taxpayers will pick up the tab if any of their overseas investments are nationalized or confiscated. They have the Export-Import Bank, by which the generous taxpayers grant — and guarantee — below-market loans to the big corporations' overseas customers. And by means of foundations they manipulate the heck out of America's political system. Without corporate or foundation funding, the swarm of radical environmental, feminist and other minority outfits would vanish like pine cones in a wildfire.

I have no objection at all to genuine free trade by which we buy genuine Chinese products and China buys American products. But that's not the deal, folks. That's not the deal at all.

What the House is doing in the name of so-called trade policy is creating new sweatshop zones for American corporations so that they can exploit the poverty and lack of freedom of workers the world over. It's sickening, really, since it both harms Americans and provides no benefits to the overseas workers.

After 55 years, family hopes to bring home remains of WWII pilot

ONTARIO, Calif. (AP) — For weeks, Gladie DeFouw used stolen moments to write a letter to her brother, a pilot fighting in World War II, with news of the family.

A month later, the letter was returned — unopened.

Her brother, 2nd Lt. Harvey Bos, and two others were reported missing in action Jan. 6, 1945, after their C-46 disappeared between China and India.

"We treated it like a nightmare," DeFouw said in a recent interview at her Southern California home. "We didn't have a memorial for him. We thought he would come back. There were lots of soldiers who were reported missing and ended up coming back."

Fifty-five years later, Bos may be coming home. His family is trying to return what they believe to be his remains from an unmarked grave in the Philippines.

But first they have to get through the military bureaucracy.

Military documents uncovered by the family suggest the pilot's remains, along with those of two crew members, appear to be buried in unmarked graves at the American Cemetery in Manila, a few hundred yards from where their names are etched in the Tablets of the Missing.

Sens. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., and Carl Levin, D-Mich., reviewed the documents and have petitioned the Department of the Army to exhume the remains and conduct DNA tests.

"We have been in contact with the Army and we are seeking assistance for the family," said Feinstein spokesman Howard Gantman. "We are waiting to hear back."

A telephone call to the Army's Director of Mortuary Affairs and Casualty Support Division in Hawaii for comment was not returned.

As the family waits for an answer from the Army, they are honoring Bos and the other two men Monday. They have paid an Internet company to have flowers placed on the unmarked graves in Manila and pictures taken of the markers.

The family's journey to find Bos began last year after DeFouw, now 75, was diagnosed with cancer. She later went into remission.

"I asked my mom if there was anything I could do for her and she said, 'I'd like to know what happened to my brother,'" Apodaca said.

So Apodaca picked the memory of Bos' widow and then took to the Internet to see if she could find somebody who may have known Bos during the war or flown with him — anybody who might be able to shed light on his last days.

But with little knowledge of the crash or even Bos' unit and squadron number, the search was in vain until she was advised by a friend to make a Freedom of Information Act request for his records.

Although most of Bos' military files, like thousands of others, were destroyed in a 1972 fire, the Army found and forwarded to the family a copy of a casualty and case review report filed by the Army's American Graves Registration Service on Jan. 9, 1948.

For the first time, DeFouw learned the details of Bos' disappearance. He had been flying a cargo mission around the Himalayas, known to pilots as the "Hump," from a base near Sookerating, India, to Chanyi, China, on Jan. 6, 1945, the report said.

Flying with the 23-year-old Bos, according to the report, were 2nd Lt. Ray C. Taylor and Pvt. Robert L. Crowder. Their ages and hometowns were not listed on the report.

"That was the first time I heard that he wasn't alone, that there were others missing with him," DeFouw said.

The report, signed by Maj. Edward Winterling, concluded the cargo plane, carrying gasoline, was either forced down in bad weather or crashed into the side of a mountain.

But it was the report's details about the remains that most stunned the family.

The report says the remains of the three crewmen were believed to have been recovered "unidentified" from Lien San Po Mountain in western China and buried in China's Kunming Cemetery as unknowns in November 1945. The bodies later were evacuated during the communist takeover to the Remains Depot in Shanghai, and then moved and reburied by 1947 in the Manila cemetery, the report said.

The report recommended "further research be made on unknowns X-818 through X-820 (grave markers) to determine whether these remains are those of the crew members."

But when DeFouw and Apodaca contacted the military to request information about the three unmarked graves, they said they were told the burial records no longer existed.

Then a chance conversation with the director of the National Archives in Washington, D.C., revealed the records did exist. Although the family hasn't seen the records, they believe they have sufficient proof for the Army to test the remains.

If the remains are identified, the family plans to bury Bos next to his parents in the family plot in Standale, Mich.

"One of my dad's last requests was for a headstone to be placed on one of these grave sites to be ready for when Harvey came home," DeFouw said. "If he comes home, I'll bury him there and tell him to rest in peace. He deserves that much."

Flower interrupts road renovations

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The biggest obstacle to improving a seven-mile stretch of treacherous Aggieland highway is a single flower that may not even be there.

Whether or not the endangered Navasota ladies tress grows along State Highway 6 — from FM 159, about 13 miles southeast of College Station, to the Navasota River — could determine whether the undivided, four-lane highway is made safer.

"This is the first I've heard of this, and it's frustrating," said state Sen. Steve Odgen, R-Bryan, long a proponent of improving the road. "It sounds absurd that they can't improve the highway because of some flower they don't even know is out there.

"Sometimes there's a true environmental problem, other times it's a convenient excuse. I don't know which it is in this case," he told the Bryan-College Station Eagle.

Like Ogden, Brazos County Volunteer Fire Department Chief Emily Staples also has campaigned for a concrete or grass barrier to be constructed, a move they say could significantly reduce the number of fatal accidents in the area.

Since January, 20 accidents have wrecked 39 vehicles, injuring 15 people and killing two.

Staples, who has been responding to accidents in the area for 18 years, says the majority of the 20,000 motorists who drive through the area daily exceed the 70 mph speed limit and often drive too close to each other.

One of the biggest problems, she said, is the condition of the road during rain.

Staples blames the Texas Department of Transportation for not being prepared to improve the stretch after an initial phase of roadwork on other sections of Texas 6.

Staples has resorted to sending graphic accident-scene photos to politicians ranging from Brazos County Judge Al Jones to Gov. George W. Bush.

The agency has moved the roadway up its priority list, but found during a routine environmental check last year that the area could support the Navasota ladies tress. Plans were put on hold, said Transportation Department area engineer Pat Williams said.

If not for the flower, construction would have begun around 2004 at the earliest. Now they must wait for an environmental survey, which means waiting for enough summer rain to fall to satisfy Texas Parks and Wildlife Department standards.

State officials want to see enough rain to grow the early autumn flower. If enough rain falls and the flower doesn't appear, it can be determined that the flower is not found in the area.

The last time wildlife officials were satisfied with the amount of rain was in 1993, said Michael A. Carpenter, environmental coordinator at the Bryan TxDOT office.

In the meantime, Williams said his agency has taken other steps, including new turn lanes and texturing stripes to alert motorists who are veering out of their lanes. Last week, a seal coat was applied from the end of the current concrete barrier to south of FM 159.

Staples, the fire chief, isn't satisfied.

Building a deck is easy chore if you're Bob Vila

Today's Do-It-Yourself Project Is: How To Build a Deck. There's nothing like adding a deck to transform an ordinary home into a home attached to a mass of inexpertly nailed wood.

And just imagine the family fun you'll have this summer with a deck.

"Come on, kids!" you'll call to your children. "Let's go out on the deck and have some fun!"

"Shut UP," they'll gaily reply, because they are engrossed in a Sony PlayStation video game that they've been playing for 11 consecutive weeks.

Barry

"OK then!" you'll say, stepping out onto your new deck. "You kids are just going to miss out on all the AAIIIEEE." This is the noise you make when you pick up a splinter the size of a harpoon.

Yes, a deck would certainly be a great addition to your home. But if you're like most people, you're reluctant to tackle such an ambitious project, for fear that you lack the "know-how," or will sever an important limb.

Well, you can stop worrying. For one thing, they are making amazing progress in the field of prosthetics. For another thing, building a deck is not as hard as you think! I've watched TV personality Bob Vila do it many times, and he is a regular "do-it-yourselfer" just like you, except that he has knowledge, skill, an unlimited budget and a large staff of experts. So let's get started.

Step one is to select a site for your deck. You should do this in accordance with the principles of "feng shui," an ancient Chinese philosophy whose name means, literally, "new fad." Feng shui (pronounced "wang chung") teaches us that where we locate our household items affects our happiness by controlling the flow of "ch'i," which is a life force that is always around us, everywhere, all the time, like Regis Philbin.

You may be skeptical, but feng shui is actually based on solid astrological principles that have been scientifically verified by Shirley MacLaine and other leading Californians. These people pay feng shui consultants serious money to come to their houses and tell them things like what direction their beds should be pointing. If you think I'm making this up, check out any feng shui publication, such as Feng Shui for Modern Living ("The World's Biggest Selling Feng Shui Magazine") which is filled with useful tips, such as this one from the April issue: "Keep your toilet seat down ... to prevent ch'i being unnecessarily 'flushed away.'" (You know how true this is if you've ever had to pay a plumber to fix a toilet clogged by a big glob of escaped ch'i.)

My point is that, unless you want all your ch'i flowing onto your neighbor's driveway, you need to locate your deck in exactly the right place. In my experience, the ideal location for a deck, considering all factors, is: indoors. Just lay some boards on your living-room floor and tell everybody it's a deck. This way, you can enjoy your deck without going outdoors.

Begin by marking the corners by driving stakes into the ground, using a No. 6 whacking hammer. If you hear screaming, you have lawn vampires, and you should call your Realtor immediately.

Then drive to a giant mega-warehouse home-fixin's superstore that runs TV commercials wherein cheerful, knowledgeable employees help you find exactly what you need. Take beef jerky, as you will be wandering the aisles for days, because those commercials are a big pile of ch'i. You will need to purchase the following deck parts: beams, joists, posts, bevels, headers, footers, thrusters, barristers and 8,000 metric feet of galvanized mahogany.

Finally nail these items together in the shape of a deck, as shown on the Bob Vila show.

That's all there is to it! Time to invite the gang over to enjoy some outdoor fun on your deck!

Important safety tip: Send smaller, more-expendable members of the gang out onto the deck before you try it.

Nighttime safety tip: Everybody should wear garlic.

Next week's homeowner's topic: Faster gardening through dynamite.

With Johnnye Montgomery

Kathy Scarafile is chapter leader of Compassionate Friends, a support group for parents who have lost a child. Mrs. Scarafile's son, Ryan Crawford, died unexpectedly on Oct. 4, 1997. He was 15. About 17 years before that, she was in a car accident that killed her 8-month-old daughter, Carly.

Brian Adamcik
Reporter-Telegram

Kathy Scarafile . . .

. . . chapter leader of Compassionate Friends

It's funny the little things you remember after a tragedy. Kathleen Scarafile remembers how the buzz cut worn by her son, Ryan Crawford, was just growing out.

"We called it a 'tweener," she says. "I ran my hand over his head, and said, 'See you later, Bud,' and he was sitting on the end of the couch.

"He said, 'OK, Mom,' and we left him."

Ryan was 15, a sophomore and a trombone player in the Lee High School band.

He died unexpectedly on Oct. 4, 1997.

Kathleen, chapter leader of Compassionate Friends — a support group for the parents of children who have died — doesn't mind talking about it. She has always been willing to talk about it.

"He had had asthma since the age of 3 or 4, but we had been able to control it with medication," she said. "He had played for the football game the day before and that day, they had dress rehearsal for the Midland Marching Festival."

It was going to be a busy day for Kathleen, who is a hair stylist,

"I was moving from one hair salon to another, but I had taken Ryan to practice and had stayed to watch him march that morning because I wanted to see exactly where he'd be on the field. It's hard to tell them apart when they're all in uniform, unless you know where to look.

"I watched him for about an hour, then I went home for awhile, and went back to pick him up, dropped him off at home and left to drop a load of things off at the new salon.

"By the time I got back home, he had showered and gotten ready to go. But the Lee High band wasn't marching until later, and my stepson was marching in the Midland High band first, so my husband and I left about 4:15, and my mother planned to pick Ryan up about 20 to 25 minutes later.

"When she got to the house she found him blue and diaphoretic. She called 911 and tried to give him CPR, but neither she nor the EMTs could revive him."

Kathleen said as is customary in the case of sudden teen deaths, there was an autopsy.

"They could tell he had a history of asthma and so they listed asthma as the cause of death, but I still don't think that's what it was because he wouldn't have been able to play trombone if his asthma had been that severe.

"It's not exactly that it would make me feel a lot better if I knew exactly what it was, but I wanted to know if there is something medically wrong that my other son, Ross, should be checked for. There's always so much mystery surrounding death," Kathleen said.

Mystery and pain and a need to touch an untouchable place in the heart.

For Kathleen, the process was all too familiar. This was her second experience with the sudden death of a child. Some 17 years before, when she was 21, her 8-month-old daughter, Carly, had died in a car accident.

"I can remember that accident as if it were yesterday," Kathleen said. "I was on my way to church on Labor Day weekend Sunday. She was fussing, and I turned to hand her a pacifier and the car went off the road. She died instantly and I survived."

Kathleen said the experience of Carly's death prepared her somewhat for the aftermath of Ryan's dying.

"I remember walking through the emergency room corridor after we had told them they could stop CPR and thinking, 'how can I go through this again?' But shock allows you to do that. Carly's funeral was a blur. I remember picking out her casket, but I don't remember anything the minister said at her funeral.

"With Ryan, I made very conscious decisions. I wanted (his funeral) to be a celebration of his life. I knew there would be a lot of young people who would be very affected by what happened and I wanted them to know that since Ryan was a Christian, this wasn't the end. There was hope.

"We had a beautiful ceremony and this time I remember it."

Kathleen said that her husband, Nick, and Ryan's father, Allen Crawford, planned the funeral. Their sons, Nick Scarafile Jr. and Ross Crawford, were also involved in the planning.

But then the funeral was over and the shock that had insulated the family began to wear off, leaving the raw edges of grief. Kathleen said friends tried to help.

"But it's hard to know what to say," she said. "A lot of people want to say magic words that will fix things for you, but nothing can. You just have to be patient.

"Grief takes up a tremendous amount of physical energy. It's not only an emotional battle, but a physical endurance test.

"In the beginning of my grief, I wore a lot of Ryan's T-shirts. I'd put on blue jeans and it was a real effort to put on makeup. It was as if I wanted my outside to reflect how raw I felt on the inside.

"One of the things I tell people early on in grief is that they should put a big star on their calendar for every day they manage to get out of bed, get into the shower, get dressed. People don't understand how really debilitating grief can be, especially the first six months. Shortly after Ryan's death, I started to write a check at the grocery store,

Humor to start your week ...

A pregnant woman was rushed to the hospital with a head injury. She gave birth and fell into a coma shortly afterward. Her husband was out of town, but her not-so-bright brother came to the hospital upon hearing that she had given birth. When the woman awoke from her coma, she learned that she had healthy twins: a boy and a girl.

"Your brother came and named them," the nurse said.

"My brother? But he's an idiot!" she cried. "What did he name them?"

"Well, he named the girl Denise."

"Denise, huh? That's not bad. What about the boy?"

"Denephew."

Everest climber corrects record

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — A Sherpa guide who set a new record for the fastest ascent of Mount Everest said Sunday that he took an hour longer to climb the world's highest peak than had been reported earlier.

Babu Chhiri, 34, scaled the 29,035-foot mountain to its summit on May 21 through icy winds.

"I climbed the mountain in 16 hours and 56 minutes and not 15 hours and 56 minutes as reported due to communication problems between the base camp and me," Chhiri told reporters when he arrived in Katmandu.

Even with the extra hour he said he took, Chhiri still broke the record for the fastest climb, set two years ago by Kaji Sherpa, who climbed Everest in 20 hours and 24 minutes.

Most climbers take two to four days to cover the distance from the base camp at 17,500 feet to the summit, depending on the weather.

This was Chhiri's 10th successful summit of Everest. Only two others have achieved this feat.

Siblings reunited 74 years after brother put up for adoption

SCHNECKSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Irene Spitko was 8 years old on the cold February day in 1926 when her 13-month-old brother was taken away to be adopted.

"I ran after him crying," said Ms. Spitko, who will turn 83 today. "Many days didn't go by that I didn't wonder about him and if he got a good home."

Her questions were answered Saturday, when the Reading woman was reunited with her brother Jim Beatty, 74 years after tragedy pulled their family apart.

Murmuring "after all these years," Jim Beatty fell into his sister's arms, crushing the bouquet of roses he was carrying.

"I can't believe it," Ms. Spitko said. "My last memory of you was of a strange lady carrying you out the door."

The reunion at the Schnecksville home of Arthur Spitko, Irene's son, happened after four years of research by Beatty's son, John, and his wife, Karen.

The couple started their search after Jim Beatty received his adoption papers when his father died.

The papers named Beatty's birth parents and said he was born in Bethlehem. Beatty, who lives with his wife, Dorothy, in Barnegat, N.J., told his son he wanted to see a photograph of his birth mother, Erma Waters.

John and Karen Beatty headed to Bethlehem to sift through county records, church listings and newspaper archives for clues. In census records from 1920, five years before Beatty was born, they discovered Erma Waters had lived in Bethlehem with a son and daughter. It seemed Beatty had a brother and sister.

"There was a lot of detective work," the younger Beatty said. "But things were beginning to fall into place like someone was guiding us."

It took a few more trips to Bethlehem, but the couple found Beatty's parents' marriage certificate. That led him to the name Spitko, and searches through phone books finally led to his long-lost sister.

"I was in shock," Ms. Spitko said. "I start to cry every time I think of it."

The two then made plans for their meeting Saturday, where the brother and sister clung tightly to each other and marveled at the coincidences.

"I'm a statistics teacher," said Jim Beatty, a math professor at Burlington County Community College. "What's the possibility of this happening?"

Ms. Spitko said she had tried to find her brother but was stopped cold by the sealed adoption records. She said her mother had given Beatty up for adoption because she had him out of wedlock — her husband had been dead five years when she became pregnant — and she discovered she was dying of cancer after Jim, then called Neal, was born.

"She was sick and couldn't take care of a baby," Ms. Spitko said.

Seven months after the adoption, her mother died and Ms. Spitko went to live with her grandmother.

TALKIN' TEXAN

Jim Hogg can be considered father of education in Texas

By Tumbleweed Smith

Jim Hogg was the first native-born governor of Texas.

"This park is his birthplace," says John Garbutt, superintendent of the Jim Hogg State Park northeast of Rusk. "One can come here and enjoy the serenity and beauty of East Texas in a microcosm, walking our beautiful trail system, especially in the spring and fall.

"We have the Hogg family cemetery here and we also have a replica of the home where Governor James Stephen Hogg was born on March 24, 1851."

Smith

Garbutt has great respect for Hogg.

"At the age of 16 he began working at our local newspaper here. It was known then as the Texas Observer. Today it's known as the Cherokeean Herald, which is the oldest continually owned and operated weekly newspaper in the state.

"Jim Hogg started working as a gofor, doing this, that and other things, then learned how to be a printer. By the age of 20 he owned his own newspaper in Longview and urged people to be active and responsible citizens of their communities. He stayed basically in the newspaper business until 1875 when he passed the bar. He wanted to practice law as his father had done. His years as newspaper person and lawyer propelled him into the limelight and the public grabbed hold of him and never let go," he said.

Hogg was governor from 1891 to 1895. He was attorney general four years before becoming governor and had a major impact on Texas.

"I call him the father of education in our state because he was the one who established our free public education system. He told people that education means liberty and success."

Hogg died in 1906 at the age of 55. A few years before his death he was involved in Spindletop, the first oil field in Texas.

"He was the largest producer down there and was very successful. He later merged his oil business with another one and created a new company called the Texas Company, which sold gas under the name Texaco."

In 1941, Hogg's children, Ima Hogg, Thomas Hogg and Mike Hogg presented the Hogg homeplace to the city of Rusk, which turned over the deed to the Texas Parks Board. The area was originally settled in 1839 by Hogg's parents, Lucanda and Joseph Hogg. Part of the family estate had to be sold to pay taxes and buy food, clothing and books while Jim and his brother, Thomas, were studying law and earning an income as farmers.

Jim Hogg was heavily in debt when he stepped down as governor, but built a sizable fortune by the time of his death. He insisted that his children take a worthy interest in individual and public welfare, as evidenced by the number of gifts to universities, cities and cultural entities around the state.

Hogg brought railroad shops and headquarters to Texas, established the railroad commission and brought about the alien land law that prevented foreign corporations from owning land in Texas. He also established the state archives to preserve historic materials.

While governor he traveled the country explaining the benefits of doing business in Texas.

DEAR ABBY

Sacrifices of military personnel, their spouses are appreciated

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The letters you have printed from men and women in the armed Forces reminded me of an experience I would like to share.

Van Buren

My husband is in the service. One day last fall, we made a quick stop on our way to a formal Marine Corps event. As we walked through the store, many people looked at my husband in his dress blues. One woman approached and thanked him for what he does and the sacrifices he makes. She said her husband was in the Army for many years and that he now rests in Arlington Cemetery. Then she thanked me and said she understood what a difficult job I had being his wife.

My husband and I walked away touched by the sincerity in her words. I will never forget her, not only because she took the initiative to thank my husband, but because she also recognized a large group of people who are usually overlooked: the spouses.

To all of those other military wives (and husbands) out there: You are appreciated! All of you who faithfully wait for reunions, who have lost count of the tearful goodbyes, those who sleep in empty beds that suddenly seem so large, who comfort the children because they miss Dad or Mom, and those afraid to leave the house because they might miss that weekly phone call from thousands of miles away.

Thanks to all who, like my husband, leave their loved ones for sometimes months at a time and wipe the tears as they go. Thanks to all of those who share my job of supporting their spouses over the miles and keeping them strong.

And last, thank you, Abby, for shedding light on this subject. A lot of hard work and heartache go with being involved in the service. These men and women deserve our thanks. — PROUD AND LOVING WIFE IN GEORGIA

DEAR PROUD: You have a right to be proud. My hat is off to the families of our servicemen and women, because the home fires often require a lot of stoking and the task falls upon them. Your letter reminds me of a quotation first uttered by John Milton: "They also serve who only stand and wait."

DEAR ABBY: I was touched by the letter you printed from Ula Pendleton, the retired teacher from Westchester High School in Los Angeles, who received praise from a student years after she had taught him. How wonderful for her to know the fruit of her labor.

Teachers are truly the unsung heroes of our lives. No, I'm not a teacher, but I know many teachers, and I always tell them, "I could never do what you do." Most of them labor at an incredibly tough job for years and may never know the results of their work.

As an ER nurse, I, too, have a tough job. However, I can see the results of my efforts — mostly positive — on a daily basis. Not so for most teachers, who face many obstacles and may not know if they have made a difference. They deserve our highest praise. — B.O.G., BASS LAKE, CALIF.

DEAR B.O.G.: I agree. I have received many letters from readers praising their former teachers — usually because the teachers were fair-minded, caring, and helped their students master a subject.

Teaching is an art, and I, too, admire those gifted individuals in the field of education who have made a positive difference in the lives of their students.

KATHY: Newsletter pays tribute to her children

and I didn't know what year it was."

Each member of the family experienced Ryan's death in a different way. Both Nick and Nick Jr. grieved openly. Ross (now 15) kept his feelings to himself, Kathleen said, yet recently he came to her and said, "Mom, I'm older than Ryan."

Although the fourth day of each month reawakened Kathleen's pain, she said she had thought she was beginning to see some light until the beginning of the 1999-2000 school year, when Ryan would have been a senior.

"I was back in a pit again. Everything made me angry. Finally, Nick, my husband, said, 'I think you really need to talk to somebody about this anger,' and I realized that he was right.

"I went to counseling for about six months. It's hard work, talking through all those feelings, but it's really important. Your family members sometimes have to say some hard things to help you, and I'm so grateful that I have Nick."

Kathleen had first learned about Compassionate Friends through a grief recovery group at Hospice of Midland. She began to attend meetings, and found that the other parents there would listen, knowing all the while that they could not fix the grief. Yet they reminded her by their presence that she would get through that dark valley.

"It's really important to people new in grief to see people who are further along," she explained. "You can see that even though that person's daughter or son has died, she can smile or laugh or get dressed and do her hair."

At the Compassionate Friends meetings, they knew what Kathleen meant when she said those things. They had been there.

Now chapter leader of Compassionate Friends, Kathleen publishes a newsletter that she said is one of her ways to pay tribute to Carly and Ryan.

"I didn't do very well in English in high school and I didn't know how I was going to put out a newsletter, but I managed."

The first newsletter was dated Oct. 4, 1999, the second anniversary of Ryan's death.

"I think the newsletter is an immense help to people who may not be comfortable in a support group setting," said Kathleen. "We also have more than 300 books in our Compassionate Friends lending library and brochures — not only to help the person grieving but the people around this person.

"Grief is like raising a child. It doesn't come with instructions."

Kathleen said members of Compassionate Friends are available by telephone or will go to the homes of grieving parents.

"We're not licensed counselors — just bereaved parents who want to reach out and help. We realize that you can't go over the pain, you can't go around it and you can't get under it. You just have to go through it. And it validates those feelings when you talk about them."

This year, the Compassionate Friends staged a candlelight memorial ceremony for the lost children. Kathleen said plans are to make it an annual event.

"We don't want our children to be forgotten. I love it when people tell me a story about Ryan or tell me how much Carly looks like me.

"I like to tell people if they know someone who has lost a child — whether the child died by accident, by suicide, by a long illness, it doesn't matter — it still hurts. Keep being there. Keep asking us to lunch, send us a card, buy a book and give it to us. And if you can do something positive to remember that child, that's great. Make a donation to your favorite charity in the child's memory, donate books to the library. Let a balloon go into the sky. Eat pink bubble gum ice cream. Hug a child. Do this and remember that child."

Compassionate Friends meets at 7:30 p.m. the first Monday of each month at First Presbyterian Church, Room 201 in the Family Life Center.

Summer brings opportuity for eye-opening church youth trips

By Jaime Jordan
N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH — Mike McDonough couldn't believe the poverty he saw in the small villages outside Nairobi, Kenya. The 16-year-old saw people living in homes that could fit inside his bedroom. They were without the luxuries of dependable electricity or supermarkets filled with every food imaginable.

"But they survive and they're happy, the happiest people in the world," said McDonough, 18. "The material means nothing to them."

McDonough and other young people from Woods Chapel Baptist Church in Arlington spent part of last summer putting roofs on unfinished churches in Kenya during a mission trip. He plans to go to Nicaragua with his church this summer, joining the thousands of youth who participate in mission trips in and out of the United States each year.

The mission trips McDonough takes are organized through the Challengers program, sponsored by Texas Baptist Men. It's a program for young men in grades seven through 12, said Al Wise, pastor at Woods Chapel. Churches determine where the greatest need is and gather volunteers to meet it. "This time period is a spiritual rite of passage," Wise said. "This is a chance for them spiritually to grow, so when they do become adults doing missions, it's like breathing. It just comes naturally."

Curt Grice, youth minister at First Baptist Church in Arlington, said the trips prepare young people for a life of service. "For us as a church, it helps to train missionaries," he said. "It gives life experience to kids who will be concerned about their world as adults because they had this experience as teen-agers."

First Baptist's high-school-age students will take trips to Mexico and the border town of Laredo. Its junior-high youth will go on a weekend trip to Houston, which will prepare them for the more intense 10-day trips in high school.

Other religious-group youth trips focus on educational enrichment.

Jewish youth often participate in cultural exchanges to Israel during the summer, said Rabbi Jeffrey Kaye of Congregation Beth Shalom. The trips are taken through the Jewish Reform Movement. Each year, high school sophomores join with others from across the country and spend six weeks in cultural-exchange programs with Israeli teens. "Literally, there are thousands of Jewish teens from all over the country who participate," he said.

For teens, trips abroad are important because it exposes them to different cultures, Grice said. "The obvious thing is, it causes them to re-examine their life," he said. "It helps them appreciate what they have. It helps them realize they don't need everything they want, and it gives them a concern for the rest of the world."

The trips that Grice's groups take usually center on manual labor, evangelism and Scripture distribution, backyard Bible clubs or vacation Bible schools. When the group goes to Mexico this summer, it will hold a basketball clinic for the native youth, he said.

The toughest work for the group is the construction or renovation of buildings for church sites. "Last year in San Antonio, the junior high kids spent two days landscaping a little church down there, and that's as hard as most of them have ever worked in their life," Grice said. "In fact, it may have been as hard as I've worked in my life."

One of the stumbling blocks for youth is the cost. The trips can be as much as $2,500 per person, he said. First Baptist tries to subsidize its trips. Churches often have funds set aside for trips and can guide youth toward fund-raising opportunities, he said.

World Changers, a program under the North American Mission Board in Georgia, charges $235 for its trips to cities in the United States and in other countries, Stephanie Lim said. The cost covers food and lodging while the youth are working, she said.

Many churches undertake fund-raising projects throughout the year to offset the costs. This summer, high school students from First Christian Church in Arlington will do flood-relief work in North Carolina for a week. The church recently held a yard sale to raise money for the trip and other projects.

Working toward a goal, as well as eye-opening experiences with different cultures, are all part of the spiritual journey, Wise said.

Backstreet Boys perform in Dallas

By Addie Donnell

Their music has invaded radio waves all over the world for over seven long years. Winning more than 20 world awards and receiving keys to three different cities, Orlando, Florida's own Backstreet Boys keep their pride alive.

On March 3 in Dallas, the Backstreet Boys performed in Reunion Arena. The huge arena overflowed with thousands and thousands of teen-age girls, each screaming her favorite Boy's name as the lights began to dim. The world's most well-known boy band was yet to come out; first the opening acts were announced.

The two opening acts were new to the music business: Jungle Brothers, and upbeat teen-ager, Willa Ford. Doing some hip-hop and fast pace rapping, the Jungle Brothers hyped the crowd, while Willa, sporting stylish clothes and the latest hair-do, pumped up the audience with her great voice and hot dance moves.

After the short performances by the two opening acts and a short intermission, the arena went dark and smoke arose from the five-sided stage. At that moment, the audience erupted into a sea of cheering, screaming fans.

The loud, shrill cries continued as five illuminated surfboards, carrying five eager musicians, rose from behind a black tarp. Kevin Richardson, Nick Carter, A.J. Mclean, Howie Dorough and Brian Littrell "flew" over the roaring crowd, making their way to the stage. After a short army march to the "Star Wars" theme, Mclean's shrill laughter filled the jam-packed arena.

The Backstreet Boys sang all of their European and U.S. chart-topping singles. They sang songs slow and fast as they danced with everything from girls to hats, to chairs. While performing "Quit Playing Games With My Heart," the Boys' second hit single, they flew over the crowd once more, but this time on harnesses. Dorough held a small bag with candy and different treats inside, which he tossed throughout the arena. The rendition of "The Perfect Fan," the heart-warming song that Littrell wrote for his mother, was memorable for five lucky fans. Previously chosen, five randomly picked girls and their mothers were awarded the opportunity to go onto the stage with the Boys while Brian's song was being sung.

But sadly, the time came for the Boys to end their concert in Dallas, leaving some of their young fans in tears. But before they left the stage, the Backstreet Boys broke into the first verse of "I Want It That Way," the biggest song of their fourth album, "Millennium."

With great music, wonderful dancing, talented musicians, and an extremely large, excited crowd, that was one night that all will remember until the next millennium.

LITTLE TOOTH LOST
by Melanie Mims

I remember vacations as a small child as if they were yesterday;
I always seemed to hurt myself no matter where we stayed.
In Disneyland the chicken pox; in Vicksburg, a flight of stairs,
Fort Davis was the cactus plant stuck in my leg because of a dare.
One vacation sticks out in my mind
Of course I got an injury, but of a most unusual kind.
It started with my parents fighting over the AC
My sister staring out the window, making sure to ignore me.
I got sick to my stomach and my head began to pound.
I was very relieved when we got on still ground.
My parents used to call me "Fish" because I love to swim all day
And when we got to the hotel, I was happily on my way
To the first floor again with my dad at my side
And walked into the pool room with a great sense of pride.
I assumed my position at the side of the pool
Wearing my pink and blue goggles; man I felt COOL!
I jumped right in and was on my happy way
When I noticed something I'd not ever noticed before that day.
The bottom seemed about 2 feet away, but was really 1.
I kept going down more and more until I tasted with my tongue
The rough concrete that encased the pool all the way around.
I shot up to the surface with blood gushing down.
I came to notice fairly soon the unfortunate truth...
I discovered I was missing almost half of my tooth!!

UNNAMED
by Robert T. Hahn

We got off the plane and I could tell that we were some place really swell.
The time had come for me to learn
(my parents had been very stern) to finally swim all by myself.
For me, for fun, and for my health.
The Canaries offered a perfect place for God to work His amazing grace.
I slowly ventured to the pool, armed with floaties as my tool.
To the deep-end I nervously went,
a solid 5 minutes there I must have spent.
As quick as a blink my floaties came off,
I swam like a chicken with his head cut off.
I huffed and puffed to get to the ledge, tired and scared I'd lost my edge.
At last I made it back to land,
my dad was there to shake my hand.
This is the story of one fine day when I learned to swim near the Moroccan Bay.

RED TULIPS
by Jennifer Grandy

Sun peaks through Large, shady tree limbs.
Thin green grass
Moves between my toes.
Red tulips
How beautiful!
At the house
Across the street.
Rip! Roots dangle.
Hands fill with flowers.
The door creeks open
My heart pounds
I dart across the street.
Her voice still echoes.
"My red tulips!"

THE BEST CHILDHOOD MEMORY: HALEY HIGHTOWER
By Rebecca Nobles

Eighteen years of birthday parties together to screaming arguments over the way I breathe —
Began our journey of friendship that we now have reached.

From matching California Raisin Halloween costumes to matching school outfits the friendship that it has turned out to be has made wonderful memories for me to keep!

Beginning from the day I was born to 11 hours later when Haley was born our memories had yet to come,
And the stupid jokes such as "beep beep nroom" to Matilda and Bertha Lou will always be considered dumb.

But the dumb inside jokes and the childish tiffs are what have brought us closer;
For we have since matured and needless to say have't turned them any grosser.

Dance performances with DeeAnn to jokes about bra size have paved the road for me;
That will never grow old and are already used as pastime hee-hees.

The perfect best friend that everyone dreams to have lies within my reach,
For I could never ask for a better friend who took me to the beach!

No longer can we play World Runner on Nintendo and have Robin's ritual bedtime prayer,
But to think I can write them on paper that no one will ever be able to tear.

Every one of my deep, dark secrets and horrible tragic times lie unfortunately within her,
But this is how our friendship continues to get closer.

I continually thank God for this wonderful friend of mine,
Gosh! if only He would allow us to travel back to those fun-filled times!

COWABUNGA: Gateway offers superior price protection

(From 6B)

MHz. Intel also cut prices on the 800-MHz chip.

What to do? Because of high demand and parts shortages, it usually takes several weeks from the time of the order for Dell and other PC makers to build and ship a high-end consumer system — a long time, given the recent frantic pace of chip introductions. (Corporate clients who buy dozens of PC's at a time seem to get swifter service.) Dell does not charge me for the computer until it leaves the factory, so until the machine is sent to me, I can cancel with no penalty.

Joni Jennings, my Dell online sales representative, told me in an e-mail message that once a PC was shipped, the buyer was protected from price cuts for 30 days. That means that if the price of a new system is reduced, say, by $200 two weeks after you open the box, Dell will honor the new, lower price and send a refund check. But she wrote, "It is up to you to request it, it can only be requested once, and it needs to be over $50 for Dell to process it."

What if I was merely lusting after a faster PC? "Well, you can always cancel the order and reorder, but that would delay your receiving the shipment because we would be starting over," she wrote.

Compaq offers price protection for a measly 14 days from the invoice date.

Gateway has a superior plan, offering the 30-day price guarantee from the time the customer receives the computer, not from when it leaves the factory. Since shipping can take up to five business days, the protection lasts a bit longer.

The Gateway guarantee covers price cuts within 30 days on identically configured systems. If you simply want to upgrade to a faster or better system within 30 days, Gateway offers a full refund, but you have to pay $99 to ship the "old" computer back and another $99 to have the new system shipped to you, plus the extra cost of the faster computer.

Gateway also promises that if it upgrades the components of a preconfigured system within 30 days — for example, by raising the standard hard disk capacity to 20 gigabytes from 10 GB — it will send the customer the larger hard drive. Again, the customer pays shipping charges both to receive the new drive and to send back the old one.

There is essentially no protection from rapid price cuts or processor upgrades if you buy a system off the shelf at a local CompUSA store. Like some other retail computer stores, CompUSA's standard policy is to refund the full purchase price within 14 days of the sale, but it charges a 15 percent restocking fee unless the system is defective. (Slow is not the same as defective.) On a $1,500 computer system, the $225 return charge will almost certainly outweigh any price cuts you might see within 14 days, not to mention the hassle factor.

Perhaps not surprisingly, given its stingy return policy, CompUSA said returns based on new-PC envy were rare. But Suzanne Shelton, a spokeswoman, said that was probably because the newest, fastest computers were typically much more expensive. "It's like saying, 'Gee, I just bought this perfectly lovely Honda Accord, but I really like that Mercedes sitting over there,'" she said.

In the end, I realized that my "old" 500-MHz Pentium system had been quietly and steadily meeting all my needs even as I was out embarrassing myself, playing the fool by chasing after a succession of younger, flashier computers.

Unfortunately, I forgot to cancel my last order. My new 800-MHz Dell system showed up at my door this week. It is not even out of the box, and it already is way behind on the power curve. But there is something comforting in that. It is too much work trying to live in the future.

Museum getting a faster way to detect when stars collide

N.Y. Times News Service

Computer-game players know that a graphics card is a necessity to give a game a realistic look.

Astrophysicists who study the behavior of globular star clusters — dense masses of a million or so stars that are scattered through galaxies like so many lumps in a heap of mashed potatoes — need a graphics card of their own.

But rather than shaping the contours of Lara Croft's face, their card must calculate the gravitational interactions among all the stars in the cluster. It is a daunting proposition. To make such a calculation for any point in time requires on the order of a million million individual operations.

Such a card exists, and next week the astrophysicists at the American Museum of Natural History in New York will receive the latest version. Known as Grape6, the card is a specialized processor that can perform only one kind of operation — calculating the gravitational attraction between two bodies. It can do this work at a speed of about half a teraflop, or half a trillion floating point operations, per second.

That makes it among the faster computers in the world even though, unlike a general-purpose computer, it is of no use to anyone outside of astrophysics.

Those limits are part of the machine's beauty, said one of its designers, Piet Hut, a professor of astrophysics at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, N.J.

"Of course it can do only one thing," Hut said, "but it is exactly the thing you want it to do."

Grape (which is short for "gravity pipeline") originated about 15 years ago, when Hut was hanging out, as he described it, with computer scientists at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. One of the scientists, Gerald Sussman, had created a special-purpose machine to calculate the evolution of the solar system. Hut thought the same concept could be applied to star clusters.

But a computer used to calculate star clusters would need to be much faster than a solar system machine (the solar system, after all, only has 10 bodies, not a million, and at 4.5 billion years old is less than half the age of the typical cluster).

So with the help of a Japanese graduate student, Jun Makino, Hut set out to design a special-purpose chip. "It was a gravity card, so to speak," he said, "that would set Newtonian calculations in silicon and let the data stream through it."

Their first board, developed like the others at the University of Tokyo, had a peak speed of about 240 megaflops. They broke the gigaflop barrier in 1991 with Grape3, and speed increases have continued since.

The Grape6 board that is being donated to the natural history museum is among the first of several hundred that are being produced by Toshiba. Sometime next year, about 200 boards will be combined at the University of Tokyo to make a machine with a speed of 200 teraflops.

The museum has been promised computing time on that machine, but in the meantime will use the board, which is about a foot square and connects to a regular, though rather powerful, PC, in its studies of what happens when stars in a cluster collide. (The board is being donated during a conference on stellar collisions at the museum's Rose Center for Earth and Space.)

Like the brute that it is, the board just provides raw data for this kind of work. "All the Grape does is let you calculate where the star is, how fast it's moving," Shara said.

From that data, it becomes clear that two stars will pass near each other, or collide.

Wavs send you back in time to World War II

■ Sound files ranging from World War II battles to celebrity sound bites are free for the taking on the Internet.

By Johnnye Montgomery

Eerie.

The stuttery fluted sound of Morse Code comes through the left speaker while the graphic pulses of wavs race up and down on the computer monitor. Seconds behind the Code comes the voice, 60 years after the fact, of a harried stranger, translating the message of Lt. Irving Stroebing, sending word to the world of the impending fall of Corregidor to Japanese forces in World War II.

"We've got about 55 minutes and I feel sick at my stomach. I am real low down. They are around, now, smashing rifles...they bring in the wounded every minute. It is a horrible sight. We will be waiting for you guys to help...This is the only thing I guess that can be done."

Only the reading of William Barrett Travis' plea "Texas and the World" to send help to the Alamo comes near the drama of that moment in time.

Listen to the next clip:

"General Wainwright....is a right guy...and we are...willing to go on for him. But shells were dropping all night...faster than hell. Damage terrific. Too much...for guys...to take. Enemy heavy cross shelling and bombing. They have got us all around and from skies."

The best part is, it's free for the taking, from www.earthstation1.com. The archived wavs of the fall of Corregidor are just the beginning for the history buff, however. Although World War II archives can take you through the war in pictures from the perspective of almost every country involved, the award-winning EarthStation1 also offers up a library of space sounds, audio and video clips from television and radio shows and even a range of personal Web pages from people who have done research worth preserving.

EarthStation1 also has its lighter side. Try clicking on its links, for a variety of pure delights.

My favorite is www.dailywav.com, a daily dose of vintage audio clips from the best and the worst of our daily obsessions.

May 17's was Mission Impossible's terse reminder "As always, should you or any of your IM force be caught or killed, the secretary will disavow any knowledge of your action."

Another May offering is Groucho Marx at his best, saying "I'm going back and clean the crackers out of my bed. I'm expecting company."

Of course, for a smorgasbord that can keep you busy surfing — and listening — for years, you really need look no farther than the Library of Congress (http://lcweb.loc.gov), supported by our tax dollars and fed material by our national creativity. Or, surf on over to the National Archives (www.nara.gov), where you'll find such gems as Franklin Delano Roosevelt's "Fala" speech, expressing his indignation at the Republicans for having accused him of spending too much money to take his dog, Fala, with him wherever he went.

One caveat, however: sound files are real memory hogs. If you download many of the gems mentioned here, you'll notice the difference in how your system works. So unless you're blessed with memory to burn, it's best to love them and leave them, or download, enjoy, then delete.

WHAT'S NEW

GAMES

Isabelle

NEW YORK (NYT) — If system requirements were an accurate measure of a game's value, then France's latest contribution to the adventure game genre, Belisa Media's Isabelle, would be terrific. You need at least a Pentium 166, 32 megabytes of RAM and the latest version of DirectX.

So it's a little surprising to start playing and see what looks like blocky virtual reality simulations from 1985. People are a loose collection of joints that don't quite connect. Heads are round balls with faces painted on them with what appears to be crayon.

The path you're walking down appears to end at the edge of a cliff, but if you walk forward, you see that the graphics engine just hasn't bothered to render the path beyond that point. And to complete the effect, there's a cheesy synthesizer score.

The first reaction, I suspect, of many gamers encountering Isabelle will be, "Huh?" Hold on to that. You'll be using it a lot.

In the beginning of Isabelle, a large, fake-looking boulder hits a couple of fake-looking people. One is blinded and the other goes into a coma. That was as much of the story as I could figure out on my own.

The only intelligible dialogue is in English between the blinded man, George, and his lover, Isabelle, who reminisce about the events of the game. George will describe a character or an event, and Isabelle will say that's not the way it happened at all. Isabelle and George don't have a very good relationship.

The designers must have realized that the game is barely playable because they included a walk-through, a file that explains all the steps necessary to complete the game. So Isabelle is a failure in terms of game play, graphics and music,but unlike most games, Isabelle has one additional criterion to be judged on: Does it succeed as art?

Isabelle is far closer in spirit to an arty French film than it is to any traditional game. While other games have had elements of art — the shifting realities of Sanitarium or the twisted bitterness of I Have No Mouth and I Must Scream — Isabelle is the first adventure game to wear its art on its sleeve.

Isabelle, from Belisa Media; Windows 95 and 98; $35; not rated.

KSEWL SITE

Sissyfight2000.com

Ever fall victim to a pack of ruthless, vicious little girls on the school playground? Sissyfight.com may finally be your chance to get revenge.

This adult-only site lets users grab, scratch, tease and tattle on others until their victims lose all their self-esteem and collapse in tears. The one or two girls left at the end of a round accumulate points good for nothing whatsoever, but who cares?

There are three schools to choose from to attend: Benjamin Franklin Washington Jefferson Lincoln Junior High, Sweet Sunny Angel Valley Middle School and PS 666.

Shockwave is required to play, and first-time users are required to register a name and password.

After picking a school and registering, you are sent to a dressing room to decide your girl's appearance, then it's off to homeroom. Here, a list of rooms is displayed on the chalk board. Each room can hold up to six girls. Once in the room, the fight is on.

Parents be warned: Although the game features nothing controversial, the users who log on to play can be quite creative with vulgar language in choosing a name and in the chat areas.

COWABUNGA

Buying computer online prevents PC envy and upgrades are easier to get

By Peter H. Lewis

Rapid change and premature obsolescence have always been hazards for computer shoppers, but the pace has escalated in the last few months. The processing speed of new Windows-based computers has doubled in the past year, lurching forward every few weeks and outpacing the ability of some personal computer makers to build and ship their top-end models before a faster chip arrives.

For someone trying to catch the crest of the wave in computing power — trying to buy a cutting-edge PC that will not be dull by the time it is out of the box and trying to take advantage of falling prices — the waves are getting taller and coming faster. In the past four months, in a pattern that some computer makers say is becoming more familiar, I have ordered a fast computer only to cancel the order when an even faster model became available at the same price.

Twice.

Three times.

Order, cancel, order, cancel, order. It's like day trading and short-selling with computers instead of stocks. Once into the pattern, you can find the concept of buying and holding almost frightening.

Not too long ago, consumers grudgingly accepted the fact that their new PC's would be considered trailing edge in just a year or two. Today, a PC can be on the downward slope before it is even built.

One year ago, the hottest chip in town was the 500-megahertz Pentium III. In May, Intel goosed it to 550 MHz. By August, it was 600 MHz. By late October, it was 733 MHz. By late December, 800 MHz. In January, the newest chip hit 1,000 MHz.

In calmer times, your one-year-old computer may have lagged behind your obnoxious neighbor's brand-new PC by maybe 66 MHz. These days, the gap is potentially at least several hundred megahertz, which can cause serious cases of PC envy. Last November I ordered an expensive new computer from Dell, one that had a top-of-the-line 733-megahertz Pentium III chip and a fancy, high-speed memory subsystem from a company called Rambus. But the Rambus system depended on a special Intel chip set that Intel had trouble producing. Although Dell had said the computer would be shipped by Dec. 15, all I got for Christmas was an e-mail message saying Dell could not even give an estimate of the delivery date until mid-February.

The message actually came as a relief. Within minutes after placing my order, I had been afflicted by buyer's remorse. The Rambus memory system is extravagantly expensive, more than twice the cost of conventional memory chips. Given a second chance, I ordered a faster but cheaper and less exotic machine.

Three days later, Intel announced that it was cutting chip prices by as much as 29 percent. Because Dell, Gateway and other direct-sale companies usually buy components only after an order is received, any reduction in component prices can quickly lead to a price reduction for the entire system. So I canceled my second order and went to the back of the line yet again.

By this time, Dell was selling an 800-MHz system for essentially the same price I had originally planned to spend on the 733-MHz system. The area of my brain that regulates fast-twitch shopping impulses began to spasm, and before I could come to my senses, I had ordered the faster machine. Dell promised to ship it to me in six weeks.

Two weeks later, both Intel and Advanced Micro Devices unexpectedly announced a profound leap ahead in processing speed, to 1 gigahertz, or 1,000

O'Neal's perfect free-throw shooting helps boost Lakers to 3-1 advantage

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — So many coaches have tried to make Shaquille O'Neal a better free throw shooter. After his 3-year-old daughter Taahirah's advice, he was perfect.

"Of course she really doesn't know the game, but today I called her and said 'Daddy loves you,'" O'Neal said, "and she said 'Good luck Daddy, and bend your knees,' so that game is for her."

O'Neal, who usually shoots about 50 percent from the line, was 9-for-9 from there Sunday, including 6-for-6 in the fourth quarter, as the Los Angeles Lakers used a dominant second half to beat the Portland Trail Blazers 103-91 and take a 3-1 lead in the Western Conference finals.

"I felt like Pete Maravich — that guy from LSU," O'Neal said, grinning at the reference to his old school.

Glen Rice celebrated his 33rd birthday with his biggest game of the playoffs for the Lakers, who can advance to the finals for the first time since 1991 with a homecourt victory on Tuesday.

"We always knew if we play the type of game that we're capable of playing, we can win anywhere," O'Neal said. "I think certain people forgot that we were a pretty good road team."

Rice scored 21 points as the Lakers swept two on the road from the Blazers, who had been 5-0 at home in the postseason before this awful weekend.

"I told Glen to do the same thing I did on my birthday," O'Neal said. "On my birthday, I shot it every time. I told him 'When you get it, shoot it.'"

Rice scored 12 points in the decisive third quarter. Since his arrival in Los Angeles last season, Rice has had a hard time fitting in. Not so Sunday.

"The third quarter was definitely the most I've felt being in the flow," Rice said. "They were looking for me and setting screens. It was a lot of fun. ... If I can get people to set screens like that for me,

INDIANAPOLIS 500

Montoya dominates Indy

CART driver breezes to victory lane

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Juan Montoya looked in his rearview mirror as he crossed the finish line and saw nothing but asphalt and sky.

That's how dominant he was in winning the Indianapolis 500, which found its newest star in its old establishment.

Montoya detoured from auto racing's civil war Sunday with a victory that was the strongest case yet for which side is best.

The defending champion of Championship Auto Racing Teams series made car owner Chip Ganassi look brilliant for his decision to return to the Indy Racing League's biggest event after a four-year absence.

Montoya overwhelmed the rest of the 33-car field, leading 167 of the 200 laps and taking the checkered flag with his closest competitor still in the fourth turn on the 2 1/2-mile oval.

As the driver he plucked from virtual obscurity a year earlier crossed the finish line while thrusting his fist in the air, Ganassi shouted into his radio: "You're world famous now."

The 24-year-old Colombian fended off a late challenge from 1996 winner Buddy Lazier, passed teammate Jimmy Vasser to retake the lead 21 laps from the end and raced on to become Indy's first rookie champion since Graham Hill in 1966.

Many will view the victory by Target/Chip Ganassi Racing as a win for CART, whose big-name teams and drivers had boycotted Indy since the IRL began in 1996.

But there was nothing political about the slow post-race ride that Montoya and Ganassi took around the track atop a convertible, with many of the 400,000 spectators screaming their approval of the win by CART's most dominant team.

"We're here like any other IRL team," said Montoya, a seven-time CART winner last year

Ganassi, Montoya prove CART is better

■ Commentary

INDIANAPOLIS — Case closed.

There is no more doubting where the best teams in open-wheel racing work. Four years after speedway boss Tony George chased away the Championship Auto Racing Teams drivers and owners and started a rival circuit, CART owner Chip Ganassi was back home again in Indiana with Juan Montoya in tow and kicking the door back in.

Until now, the alphabet war between CART and George's Indy Racing League produced half-truths from guys with axes to grind. Montoya proved just how much louder action can be, winning the Indianapolis 500 on his first try.

"I feel the same," he said, "just happier."

Ganassi drove in the race himself five times in the mid-1980s, but grudgingly stayed away from the track as the CART-IRL war escalated. He still bases his racing operation here, though, and when two of his biggest sponsors insisted he go, then ponied up $2.4 million to ease the transition, Ganassi jumped at the opportunity.

"Everybody here welcomed us back with open arms," Ganassi said afterward. "This is the biggest moment of my life."

But Montoya was much less impressed.

He cracked jokes over the two-way radio in the middle of the race. His car needed so little service most of the way — just fuel and fresh tires — that the guys from the neighborhood garage could have manned the pit. He toyed with Buddy Lazier, his closest pursuer at the end, as if they were in line in the drive-through at McDonald's.

The only thing that would have made Montoya's win more dominating is if he revealed he had the car on cruise-control when he took the checkered flag.

The IRL has been locked in a struggle with CART for credibility

Nelson will stay with Mavericks

Associated Press

DALLAS — Don Nelson has reached agreement with owner Mark Cuban to coach the Dallas Mavericks for three more years, followed by three more as general manager.

For the first three years, Nelson will make $5 million a year as coach and GM, Cuban, an Internet billionaire, told The Associated Press on Sunday. For the last three years, Nelson will receive $1.6 million a year to serve only as GM.

"We are incredibly excited to have him back," Cuban said. "He is an innovator and a great basketball man."

The extended agreement, reached Saturday, will give the 60-year-old Nelson an opportunity to groom new assistant Sidney Moncrief for the top job.

"Mark wants me to be a part of it, and I want to be a part of it," Nelson said. "After three years, someone else will take over. Hopefully, it will be Sid. That's the plan. I think Sid will be more than ready."

When Cuban reached an agreement to purchase majority control of the franchise Jan. 3, Nelson's 22-season coaching career appeared over. The Mavericks were 9-21, and fans urged Cuban to get rid of the coach immediately.

In a surprising turnaround, the Mavericks went 31-21 after Cuban's arrival to finish 40-42 — their best record since going 47-35 in 1989-90, their last postseason appearance.

Dallas' unlikely playoff charge ultimately fell short, but Mavericks players Michael Finley, Dirk Nowitzki and Gary Trent publicly lobbied Nelson to reconsider retirement plans.

"Nellie is a great bench coach, and the longer I can keep him the better," Cuban said.

Trainer pulls Bullet from Belmont field

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Preakness winner Red Bullet will skip a rubber match with Kentucky Derby winner Fusaichi Pegasus in the Belmont Stakes on June 10.

"We don't want to squeeze the lemon," trainer Joe Orseno said Sunday at Belmont Park of the decision to withhold Red Bullet from the 1 1/2-mile finale of the Triple Crown.

"We've already won the Preakness with a horse that didn't run as a 2-year-old, and we think it's best to give him more time in between in races right now. If you run in a mile-and-a-half race, that knocks you out for three months. It's pointless."

The Preakness was Red Bullet's fourth win in five races.

Orseno has talked about starting Red Bullet in the 1 1-8-mile Haskell Handicap on Aug. 6 at Monmouth and-or the 1 1/4-mile Travers on Aug. 26 at Saratoga.

Terry Meyocks, president and chief operating officer of the New York Racing Association, said

Stars need four more wins for Cup

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — Across the top of the chalkboard in the Dallas Stars' locker room at Reunion Arena, there's a number written inside a square. Next to it is the message, "Do not erase!"

When the playoffs began, the figure inside the box was 16; that's how many victories the Stars needed to keep the Stanley Cup in Dallas.

Now, with the help of a late shot off the goalpost, the number is down to four.

The defending champions earned a return to the NHL's final round by beating the Colorado Avalanche 3-2 in Game 7 of the Western Conference finals Saturday night.

The final hurdle in the Stars' quest to remain champions — and to earn the respect they don't feel followed last year's title — is a best-of-seven series with the New Jersey Devils that begins on the road Tuesday night.

"We know as a group of 25 guys that we're one step closer," Dallas defenseman Richard Matvichuk said. "When you win a championship back-to-back, you earn a little more respect."

The Devils won the Cup in 1995 and haven't been back since. Neither has Colorado, which won it all in 1996. Detroit successfully defended its 1997 championship in '98, and that's the model Dallas hopes to follow.

"It's a chance very few people have," Stars center Mike Modano said. "Pittsburgh and Detroit did it. Now we've put ourselves in position to do it."

After Dallas beat Buffalo in six games to win the Cup last summer, Stars coach Ken Hitchcock told a pep rally that he wanted to win another — and another after that.

Then he spent the offseason studying teams that won multiple titles. His research included dynasty teams from other sports, too.

Among the lessons he learned was that the dynamics of the team change every year and it's imperative to find the right mix of players. That was a challenge early, with Dallas' injury list soaring, but things clicked in time for the playoffs.

The Stars have not lost consecutive games, thanks in part to a 9-1

Rookie Kenseth claims Coke 600

Associated Press

CONCORD, N.C. — Matt Kenseth proved there's more than one outstanding NASCAR rookie this year, racing to his first Winston Cup victory Sunday night in the Coca-Cola 600.

Kenseth passed leader Bobby Labonte on lap 374 and slowly pulled away to beat him to the finish line by about two car-lengths. After taking the checkered flag, Kenseth circled back around the track and cut doughnuts in the grass on the Coca-Cola logo.

Kenseth, who started 21st, came back from farther in the field than any other previous winner.

Dale Earnhardt finished third and was followed in the top five by Dale Earnhardt Jr., another rookie, and Dale Jarrett.

The victory was sweet redemption for Kenseth, who dominated last month at California and had a late lead but lost it on a caution and finished third, his previous best finish of the season.

"My heart started beating pretty hard as soon as I took the lead from Bobby," Kenseth said. "I remembered California when I thought we had that won, too, so I got a little nervous. I didn't think we had it in the bank until there was two to go."

Although California had been his only top-five finish of the season, Kenseth came into the Coca-Cola 600 leading Earnhardt Jr. in the rookie points standings. Earnhardt Jr. has won two races this season, but Kenseth has been more consistent.

Still, he's struggled to get even a piece of the spotlight Earnhardt Jr. has claimed, so he quietly went about his business.

"I'm used to kind of being overshadowed by Dale Jr.," Kenseth said. "He's beat me in the (Busch) championships, he's won races this year, I'm used to it."

He used a 15-second pit stop on lap 309 to beat Earnhardt Jr. off pit road and take his first lead of the night. But Earnhardt Jr., who led a race-high 175 laps, passed him eight laps later and looked to be running away with the race.

Earnhardt Jr. had about a four-second lead on the rest of the field when the seventh caution flag of the night came out on lap 362. Five cars beat Earnhardt Jr. out of the pits, including Kenseth, who came out in third.

Raider dies of cancer; Car wreck kills Aggie

Associated Press

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Oakland Raiders defensive back Eric Turner, who denied earlier this month that he was gravely ill, died Sunday. He was 31.

Turner died Sunday afternoon at Los Robles Hospital, according to a nursing supervisor who declined to give her name. The cause of death appeared to be complications of abdominal cancer, according to Craig Stevens, medical examiner at the Ventura County Coroner's office

Turner, a nine-year veteran out of UCLA, issued a statement through his agents on May 15 that reports concerning his illness were unfounded.

"I realize people are concerned, but I have chosen to keep this issue within my family," Turner said in the statement. "Contrary to published reports I have not lost 70 pounds and am not gravely ill. ... I will make another statement when my family and I deem it appropriate."

The Raiders had refused to comment on the free safety, who did not attend the team's minicamp in late April for personal reasons.

The Los Angeles Daily News first reported the story, saying in early May the former Pro Bowl player has a serious stomach illness.

The newspaper quoted an unidentified Raiders official as saying, "It's a terrible, terrible situation ... people should really be concerned for this kid."

"It started out as an ulcer and it's developed into something worse," the Raiders official told the Daily News.

Aggie DE dies in accident

EL PASO — Terry Nichols, a backup defensive lineman at Texas A&M, has been killed in a traffic accident in El Paso that left three other people injured.

Nichols, 21, was killed about 11:15 p.m. Saturday when a car crossed the center median in east El Paso and collided with the car in which he was riding in the front seat, the El Paso Times reported.

Police said Gordon Polley Jr., 19, of El Paso was westbound when he struck the median and lost control of his 1991 Mitsubishi, which crossed into the eastbound lanes and crashed into a 1993 Honda driven by Ruby Williams, 21, of El Paso.

Nichols, a former standout at Irvin High School in El Paso, died at the scene, police said.

Basin Bulldogs rout Wranglers

ODESSA — The Basin Bulldogs rolled past the Garland Wranglers 28-6 at Ratliff Stadium Saturday night to clinch second place in the United Professional Football League South Division.

The team will most likely host the first round of playoffs in three weeks, coach Ray Pierson.

Shemond Davis, who played at Midland High as recently as 1998, had six carries for 133 yards and scored on touchdown runs of three yards in the second quarter and 95 yards in the third quarter.

Philip Matthews scored on an 11-yard run in the second quarter, and John Butts returned a fumble 26 yards for a touchdown in the third quarter for the Bulldogs' other scores.

Defensively, Patrick Wilbert had six tackles and one sack, John Butts recovered two fumbles and blocked a punt and Mark Johnson had a sack. Anthony Pertile, Joe Webster and Lenny Long all had interceptions for the Bulldogs.

LITKE: Montoya makes IRL, George look bad

and audience share. But until Sunday's race, the only thing neither side disputed was how much they were damaging each other — to the continuing benefit of NASCAR.

Now there is at least one more point of agreement.

"He's the best of the best," George said about Montoya, just moments after handing over the trophy in Victory Lane. "He's raced against the best, and whatever level he's been at, he's won.

"The best team won today, with the best driver. He was just on it — smooth, collected. My guess is this was just another day for him."

Good guess.

"I had fun out there, to be honest," Montoya admitted.

The 24-year-old Colombian won the CART championship as a rookie last year, his victory dovetailing with Ganassi's fourth consecutive title as an owner. Montoya may be headed for the Formula One circuit, perhaps as early as the end of the year.

If so, his Indy debut won't soon be forgotten.

Montoya showed the complete range of skills needed to master CART's different tracks — ovals, road courses and street circuits. IRL drivers, running strictly on ovals, rarely master those skills. Montoya got into dogfights when he had to, ran and hid with the lead when he could and, in the single most impressive maneuver in Sunday's race, fended off Lazier coming out of a restart on Lap 149.

As the green flag dropped, Lazier tried to jump Montoya on the low side of the track, using the slower car of Steve Knapp in the middle to seal off Montoya. In a daring move, Montoya swooped into the space just ahead of Lazier before the gap closed.

"You've got to keep aggressive," Montoya said though a wide smile.

The good news is that Montoya wasn't the only one who felt that way.

Several attempts at a CART-IRL reconciliation have fallen through, and there were signs in the days leading up to the race that the rift was still very much on people's minds. When defending IRL champion Greg Ray bumped Montoya off the pole, high-fives were exchanged by IRL crew members, and several of the league's drivers made a very public show of congratulating him.

But on race day, everybody got the same treatment — rough — whether they were IRL or CART drivers the rest of the year.

"I got shut out. I got hammered," Lazier said. "I got boxed in, and the guys that did it were IRL drivers."

But he wasn't complaining. What Lazier wanted was the chance to run against the best, fair and square, and he finally got it.

The best won, but then they usually do.

For four long years, we've heard George deny that something was missing from the race and CART deny that it missed running on the most storied oval open-wheel racing has to offer. Sunday proved honesty is still a pretty good policy.

"Hats off to the IRL," said Vasser, a former CART champion himself. "They did a great job and provided tough competition."

As George watched Montoya take off for a victory lap, he had to wonder what message that victory was going to send. Somebody broke into his reverie to ask whether Montoya's showing should encourage more CART teams to make the considerable investment — different chassis and engines are required in the IRL — to run at Indy.

George swallowed hard.

"I'd like to see," he said bravely, "whoever wants to run."

NBA: Shaq puts on clinic

(From 1C)

I can have a field day."

O'Neal had 25 points and 11 rebounds, but his most remarkable statistic came from the foul line.

"I told him he needs to frame that little stat sheet," teammate Kobe Bryant said. "He told me he was hot. He said, 'Bring it to me. I feel good. I'm feeling it.'"

A 52 percent free throw shooter in the regular season and 45 percent in the playoffs, O'Neal made Portland coach Mike Dunleavy's Hack-a-Shaq tactic look silly with his perfection at the line.

"The defensive strategy to foul Shaq really backfired today on them," Lakers coach Phil Jackson said, "and it really sewed the game up for us."

Bryant had 18 points, despite 5-for-15 shooting, along with seven assists for the Lakers, while Ron Harper, who hit the game-winner in Game 3, also scored 18 points, his most in these playoffs.

"They made a lot of shots," Dunleavy said. "They made all their free throws. We played an excellent first half but shot ourselves in the foot. We missed five or six open layups."

The Lakers were 31-for-34 at the foul line and could have set a franchise record had John Salley not missed two free throws late in the game.

INDY: Montoya shows little emotion in victory

(From 1C)

as a rookie. "We're not here with a CART flag."

But John Menard, one of the original IRL team owners, saw Montoya's overwhelming victory as proof that the newer open-wheel series is not yet a match for CART.

"They raised the level of competition to a whole new level," said Menard, who fielded cars Sunday for pole-winner Greg Ray, the defending IRL champion, and Robby Gordon. "It's certainly going to raise some questions about the ability of the IRL teams to compete with CART.

"But they were the best of the best; a very powerful team, a very organized team."

Tony George, president of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway and founder of the IRL, defended his creation and said he doesn't care who wins — as long as it's good racing.

"I'd like to see whoever wants to run," he said. "It takes a commitment. We have a whole year to see who's interested."

Montoya seemed unaffected by the tradition of Indy and the electricity at the 84th running of the event billed as "the greatest spectacle in racing."

Smiling, but not appearing very excited, Montoya said he doesn't feel world famous.

"But I'm happier than I was about an hour ago," he said while eating cookies during the post-race news conference. "To be honest, I was joking with Chip over the radio. The car was perfect. We didn't have to risk anything."

"This is still the biggest race in the world," he said.

Montoya and Vasser had a right to be more tired than the other drivers. They drove Saturday in the CART race in Nazareth, Pa., postponed last month by snow.

Everything seemed to work for Ganassi on Sunday, even the three-hour rain delay at the start of the race.

Ganassi, co-owner of the team that won Indy with Emerson Fittipaldi in 1989, said it helped his drivers loosen up.

Vasser was almost as strong as Montoya. The 1996 CART champion wound up a lap down in seventh after a late stop for fuel.

It was an incredible performance for Ganassi's team, which had to adapt to different chassis and engines than used in its regular series. Ganassi is the only CART owner to bring his regular drivers to Indy since 1996.

Montoya dueled early with Ray and made a spectacular pass in the middle of slower traffic to take the lead for the first time on lap 27.

Ray regained the lead the next time around, passing Montoya on the backstretch, but the Colombian came out of the first series of pit stops in front and was hardly challenged the rest of the way.

Lazier, whose win in the 500 came in the first year CART boycotted Indy, made the biggest run at Montoya.

He passed Jeff Ward to take second place on lap 151 and began to chase Montoya's G Force-Aurora in earnest.

Indy women KO each other

"With so much focus on the two women in the field, the last thing we needed was for that to happen," said St. James, 53, who was racing at Indy for the seventh time. "Why in the heck did this have to happen?"

BELMONT: Fusaichi Pegasus may not run

last week that Orseno told him he was planning to start the colt in the Belmont.

Orseno said the decision not to run was reached in consultation with Frank Stronach, Red Bullet's owner, and Stronach's son, Andy.

The Belmont status of Fusaichi Pegasus, runner-up in the Preakness, is still not clear. Trainer Neil Drysdale watched the colt canter Saturday at Aqueduct and said the colt was doing well but it was too soon to make a decision.

The colt, purchased for $4 million as a yearling by Fusao Sekiguchi of Japan, did come to New York after the Preakness instead of returning to Drysdale's California base.

If he does start in the Belmont, he would have a short van ride to Belmont Park the week of the race.

"Our goal is to win the 3-year-old championship with him and we fully understand that if Fusaichi Pegasus wins the Belmont Stakes, we'll be behind him in the run for the Eclipse Award," Orseno said.

The last time a Preakness winner didn't start in the Belmont Stakes was in 1995 when Timber Country was scratched the day before the race because of injury. The last Derby winner to miss the Belmont was Grindstone, who was retired because of injury after his victory in Kentucky.

The last Belmont to have neither the Derby winner (Dust Commander) nor the Preakness winner (Personality) was in 1970 when the race was won by High Echelon, Personality's stablemate.

STARS: Belfour plays well in conference finals

record at Reunion Arena. Dallas has won 11 of 12 postseason games there dating to last year's finals.

Another impressive streak is their 11-0 playoff record when taking a lead into the third period. Although it grew Saturday night, it wasn't easy.

Early power-play goals by Sergei Zubov and Modano, plus a fluke goal off the back of Roman Lyashenko's skate, put Dallas up 3-0 with 35 minutes left. Colorado came back to life with two goals within three minutes early in the third period, forcing a white-knuckle final 11 minutes for the sellout crowd at Reunion Arena.

The Stars pulled it out, though, as goalie Ed Belfour made several outstanding saves and the right post of the goal produced a hometown bounce on Ray Bourque's blast from the right point with about eight seconds left.

"We had a great start and a great end," Hitchcock said. "I thought our passion and enthusiasm to compete were just terrific."

Belfour was pretty special, too.

He held the Avalanche to two goals or less in all seven games and was the steadying influence the Stars needed, just as he was throughout the rocky regular season.

"I feel better and stronger and more confident with each game," said Belfour, whom many still think of as "Crazy Eddie" rather than the elite goalie he's become. "I'm seeing the puck well and the defensemen are clearing rebounds for me."

Rookie Kenseth claims Coke 600

Associated Press

CONCORD, N.C. — Matt Kenseth proved there's more than one outstanding NASCAR rookie this year, racing to his first Winston Cup victory Sunday night in the Coca-Cola 600.

Kenseth passed leader Bobby Labonte on lap 374 and slowly pulled away to beat him to the finish line by about two car-lengths. After taking the checkered flag, Kenseth circled back around the track and cut doughnuts in the grass on the Coca-Cola logo.

Kenseth, who started 21st, came back from farther in the field than any other previous winner.

Dale Earnhardt finished third and was followed in the top five by Dale Earnhardt Jr., another rookie, and Dale Jarrett.

The victory was sweet redemption for Kenseth, who dominated last month at California and had a late lead but lost it on a caution and finished third, his previous best finish of the season.

"My heart started beating pretty hard as soon as I took the lead from Bobby," Kenseth said. "I remembered California when I thought we had that won, too, so I got a little nervous. I didn't think we had it in the bank until there was two to go."

Although California had been his only top-five finish of the season, Kenseth came into the Coca-Cola 600 leading Earnhardt Jr. in the rookie points standings. Earnhardt Jr. has won two races this season, but Kenseth has been more consistent.

Still, he's struggled to get even a piece of the spotlight Earnhardt Jr. has claimed, so he quietly went about his business.

"I'm used to kind of being overshadowed by Dale Jr.," Kenseth said. "He's beat me in the (Busch) championships, he's won races this year, I'm used to it."

He used a 15-second pit stop on lap 309 to beat Earnhardt Jr. off pit road and take his first lead of the night. But Earnhardt Jr., who led a race-high 175 laps, passed him eight laps later and looked to be running away with the race.

Earnhardt Jr. had about a four-second lead on the rest of the field when the seventh caution flag of the night came out on lap 362. Five cars beat Earnhardt Jr. out of the pits, including Kenseth, who came out in third.

Raider dies of cancer; Car wreck kills Aggie

Associated Press

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Oakland Raiders defensive back Eric Turner, who denied earlier this month that he was gravely ill, died Sunday. He was 31.

Turner died Sunday afternoon at Los Robles Hospital, according to a nursing supervisor who declined to give her name. The cause of death appeared to be complications of abdominal cancer, according to Craig Stevens, medical examiner at the Ventura County Coroner's office

Turner, a nine-year veteran out of UCLA, issued a statement through his agents on May 15 that reports concerning his illness were unfounded.

"I realize people are concerned, but I have chosen to keep this issue within my family," Turner said in the statement. "Contrary to published reports I have not lost 70 pounds and am not gravely ill. ... I will make another statement when my family and I deem it appropriate."

The Raiders had refused to comment on the free safety, who did not attend the team's minicamp in late April for personal reasons.

The Los Angeles Daily News first reported the story, saying in early May the former Pro Bowl player has a serious stomach illness.

The newspaper quoted an unidentified Raiders official as saying, "It's a terrible, terrible situation ... people should really be concerned for this kid."

"It started out as an ulcer and it's developed into something worse," the Raiders official told the Daily News.

Aggie DE dies in accident

EL PASO — Terry Nichols, a backup defensive lineman at Texas A&M, has been killed in a traffic accident in El Paso that left three other people injured.

Nichols, 21, was killed about 11:15 p.m. Saturday when a car crossed the center median in east El Paso and collided with the car in which he was riding in the front seat, the El Paso Times reported.

Police said Gordon Polley Jr., 19, of El Paso was westbound when he struck the median and lost control of his 1991 Mitsubishi, which crossed into the eastbound lanes and crashed into a 1993 Honda driven by Ruby Williams, 21, of El Paso.

Nichols, a former standout at Irvin High School in El Paso, died at the scene, police said.

Basin Bulldogs rout Wranglers

ODESSA — The Basin Bulldogs rolled past the Garland Wranglers 28-6 at Ratliff Stadium Saturday night to clinch second place in the United Professional Football League South Division.

The team will most likely host the first round of playoffs in three weeks, coach Ray Pierson.

Shemond Davis, who played at Midland High as recently as 1998, had six carries for 133 yards and scored on touchdown runs of three yards in the second quarter and 95 yards in the third quarter.

Philip Matthews scored on an 11-yard run in the second quarter, and John Butts returned a fumble 26 yards for a touchdown in the third quarter for the Bulldogs' other scores.

Defensively, Patrick Wilbert had six tackles and one sack, John Butts recovered two fumbles and blocked a punt and Mark Johnson had a sack. Anthony Pertile, Joe Webster and Lenny Long all had interceptions for the Bulldogs.

LITKE: Montoya makes IRL, George look bad

(From 1C)

and audience share. But until Sunday's race, the only thing neither side disputed was how much they were damaging each other — to the continuing benefit of NASCAR.

Now there is at least one more point of agreement.

"He's the best of the best," George said about Montoya, just moments after handing over the trophy in Victory Lane. "He's raced against the best, and whatever level he's been at, he's won.

"The best team won today, with the best driver. He was just on it — smooth, collected. My guess is this was just another day for him."

Good guess.

"I had fun out there, to be honest," Montoya admitted.

The 24-year-old Colombian won the CART championship as a rookie last year, his victory dovetailing with Ganassi's fourth consecutive title as an owner. Montoya may be headed for the Formula One circuit, perhaps as early as the end of the year.

If so, his Indy debut won't soon be forgotten.

Montoya showed the complete range of skills needed to master CART's different tracks — ovals, road courses and street circuits. IRL drivers, running strictly on ovals, rarely master those skills. Montoya got into dogfights when he had to, ran and hid with the lead when he could and, in the single most impressive maneuver in Sunday's race, fended off Lazier coming out of a restart on Lap 149.

As the green flag dropped, Lazier tried to jump Montoya on the low side of the track, using the slower car of Steve Knapp in the middle to seal off Montoya. In a daring move, Montoya swooped into the space just ahead of Lazier before the gap closed.

"You've got to keep aggressive," Montoya said though a wide smile.

The good news is that Montoya wasn't the only one who felt that way.

Several attempts at a CART-IRL reconciliation have fallen through, and there were signs in the days leading up to the race that the rift was still very much on people's minds. When defending IRL champion Greg Ray bumped Montoya off the pole, high-fives were exchanged by IRL crew members, and several of the league's drivers made a very public show of congratulating him.

But on race day, everybody got the same treatment — rough — whether they were IRL or CART drivers the rest of the year.

"I got shut out. I got hammered," Lazier said. "I got boxed in, and the guys that did it were IRL drivers."

But he wasn't complaining. What Lazier wanted was the chance to run against the best, fair and square, and he finally got it.

The best won, but then they usually do.

For four long years, we've heard George deny that something was missing from the race and CART deny that it missed running on the most storied oval open-wheel racing has to offer. Sunday proved honesty is still a pretty good policy.

"Hats off to the IRL," said Vasser, a former CART champion himself. "They did a great job and provided tough competition."

As George watched Montoya take off for a victory lap, he had to wonder what message that victory was going to send. Somebody broke into his reverie to ask whether Montoya's showing should encourage more CART teams to make the considerable investment — different chassis and engines are required in the IRL — to run at Indy.

George swallowed hard.

"I'd like to see," he said bravely, "whoever wants to run."

INDY: Montoya shows little emotion in victory

(From 1C)

as a rookie. "We're not here with a CART flag."

But John Menard, one of the original IRL team owners, saw Montoya's overwhelming victory as proof that the newer open-wheel series is not yet a match for CART.

"They raised the level of competition to a whole new level," said Menard, who fielded cars Sunday for pole-winner Greg Ray, the defending IRL champion, and Robby Gordon. "It's certainly going to raise some questions about the ability of the IRL teams to compete with CART.

"But they were the best of the best; a very powerful team, a very organized team."

Tony George, president of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway and founder of the IRL, defended his creation and said he doesn't care who wins — as long as it's good racing.

"I'd like to see whoever wants to run," he said. "It takes a commitment. We have a whole year to see who's interested."

Montoya seemed unaffected by the tradition of Indy and the electricity at the 84th running of the event billed as "the greatest spectacle in racing."

Smiling, but not appearing very excited, Montoya said he doesn't feel world famous.

"But I'm happier than I was about an hour ago," he said while eating cookies during the post-race news conference. "To be honest, I was joking with Chip over the radio. The car was perfect. We didn't have to risk anything."

Ganassi, whose team has won an unprecedented four straight CART titles, called the victory the "biggest moment of my life right now."

"This is still the biggest race in the world," he said.

Montoya and Vasser had a right to be more tired than the other drivers. They drove Saturday in the CART race in Nazareth, Pa., postponed last month by snow.

Everything seemed to work for Ganassi on Sunday, even the three-hour rain delay at the start of the race.

Ganassi, co-owner of the team that won Indy with Emerson Fittipaldi in 1989, said it helped his drivers loosen up.

Vasser was almost as strong as Montoya. The 1996 CART champion wound up a lap down in seventh after a late stop for fuel.

It was an incredible performance for Ganassi's team, which had to adapt to different chassis and engines than used in its regular series. Ganassi is the only CART owner to bring his regular drivers to Indy since 1996.

Montoya dueled early with Ray and made a spectacular pass in the middle of slower traffic to take the lead for the first time on lap 27.

Ray regained the lead the next time around, passing Montoya on the backstretch, but the Colombian came out of the first series of pit stops in front and was hardly challenged the rest of the way.

Lazier, whose win in the 500 came in the first year CART boycotted Indy, made the biggest run at Montoya.

He passed Jeff Ward to take second place on lap 151 and began to chase Montoya's G Force-Aurora in earnest.

Indy women KO each other

INDIANAPOLIS — There wasn't enough room for two women at Indy.

Sarah Fisher and Lyn St. James, who gave the Indianapolis 500 its first two-woman field, wound up squeezing each other out of the race Sunday when they collided on lap 74.

"With so much focus on the two women in the field, the last thing we needed was for that to happen," said St. James, 53, who was racing at Indy for the seventh time. "Why in the heck did this have to happen?"

NBA: Shaq puts on clinic

(From 1C)

I can have a field day."

O'Neal had 25 points and 11 rebounds, but his most remarkable statistic came from the foul line.

"I told him he needs to frame that little stat sheet," teammate Kobe Bryant said. "He told me he was hot. He said, 'Bring it to me. I feel good. I'm feeling it.'"

A 52 percent free throw shooter in the regular season and 45 percent in the playoffs, O'Neal made Portland coach Mike Dunleavy's Hack-a-Shaq tactic look silly with his perfection at the line.

"The defensive strategy to foul Shaq really backfired today on them," Lakers coach Phil Jackson said, "and it really sewed the game up for us."

Bryant had 18 points, despite 5-for-15 shooting, along with seven assists for the Lakers, while Ron Harper, who hit the game-winner in Game 3, also scored 18 points, his most in these playoffs.

"They made a lot of shots," Dunleavy said. "They made all their free throws. We played an excellent first half but shot ourselves in the foot. We missed five or six open layups."

The Lakers were 31-for-34 at the foul line and could have set a franchise record had John Salley not missed two free throws late in the game.

BELMONT: Fusaichi Pegasus may not run

(From 1C)

last week that Orseno told him he was planning to start the colt in the Belmont.

Orseno said the decision not to run was reached in consultation with Frank Stronach, Red Bullet's owner, and Stronach's son, Andy.

The Belmont status of Fusaichi Pegasus, runner-up in the Preakness, is still not clear. Trainer Neil Drysdale watched the colt canter Saturday at Aqueduct and said the colt was doing well but it was too soon to make a decision.

The colt, purchased for $4 million as a yearling by Fusao Sekiguchi of Japan, did come to New York after the Preakness instead of returning to Drysdale's California base.

If he does start in the Belmont, he would have a short van ride to Belmont Park the week of the race.

"Our goal is to win the 3-year-old championship with him and we fully understand that if Fusaichi Pegasus wins the Belmont Stakes, we'll be behind him in the run for the Eclipse Award," Orseno said.

The last time a Preakness winner didn't start in the Belmont Stakes was in 1995 when Timber Country was scratched the day before the race because of injury. The last Derby winner to miss the Belmont was Grindstone, who was retired because of injury after his victory in Kentucky.

The last Belmont to have neither the Derby winner (Dust Commander) nor the Preakness winner (Personality) was in 1970 when the race was won by High Echelon, Personality's stablemate.

STARS: Belfour plays well in conference finals

(From 1C)

record at Reunion Arena. Dallas has won 11 of 12 postseason games there dating to last year's finals.

Another impressive streak is their 11-0 playoff record when taking a lead into the third period. Although it grew Saturday night, it wasn't easy.

Early power-play goals by Sergei Zubov and Modano, plus a fluke goal off the back of Roman Lyashenko's skate, put Dallas up 3-0 with 35 minutes left. Colorado came back to life with two goals within three minutes early in the third period, forcing a white-knuckle final 11 minutes for the sellout crowd at Reunion Arena.

The Stars pulled it out, though, as goalie Ed Belfour made several outstanding saves and the right post of the goal produced a hometown bounce on Ray Bourque's blast from the right point with about eight seconds left.

"We had a great start and a great end," Hitchcock said. "I thought our passion and enthusiasm to compete were just terrific."

Belfour was pretty special, too.

He held the Avalanche to two goals or less in all seven games and was the steadying influence the Stars needed, just as he was throughout the rocky regular season.

"I feel better and stronger and more confident with each game," said Belfour, whom many still think of as "Crazy Eddie" rather than the elite goalie he's become. "I'm seeing the puck well and the defensemen are clearing rebounds for me."

Cougars survive vs. Owls

Associated Press

Splitting a doubleheader with crosstown rival Rice has pushed the Houston Cougars to the NCAA Super Regional, but it'll be Monday before the Cougars will know who they'll play next.

The opponent will be the winner of the Waco regional, but the winner won't emerge until after an 11 a.m. game Monday between Florida and San Jose State.

Rice emerged from the loser's bracket to beat Houston 5-4 on Sunday and force a second game, since the tournament was double-elimination and the Cougars hadn't lost. Houston battled back for a 9-5 victory in the second game to oust the Owls.

Rice reliever Philip Barzilla limited Houston to one run in the final three innings in the opener. Jesse Roman, Mitch Ackal and Jayme Sperring drove in runs during the Owls' four-run sixth inning.

In the second game, with everything on the line, Houston returned the favor with a four-run sixth of its own, giving the Cougars an 8-4 lead that Rice couldn't overcome. Houston's Kyle Crowell pitched six strong innings and the Cougars got back-to-back homers from Sean Allen and Aaron Melebeck.

Texas Tech was also in the Houston bracket, but bowed out Saturday night with a loss to Rice, the Red Raiders' second loss in the tournament.

At Waco, neither of two Texas teams made it to the finals. Baylor, the nation's fifth-ranked team, lost an opening game to Southwest Texas State 6-0 and then lost to Florida 10-1. Southwest Texas lost to San Jose State on Saturday afternoon, then was eliminated by Florida on Sunday, in a game that was suspended by bad weather Saturday night.

Florida carried a second-inning 3-0 lead into Sunday's resumption of play and then quickly put the game under wraps. Southwest Texas State's Bobcats managed just five hits and one walk of Florida pitching, and the Gators exploded for a 14-0 victory.

Texas stayed alive in an NCAA West regional at Tempe, Ariz., beating Arizona State 6-4 on Sunday. That forced the teams to take the field for a second game late Sunday night to determine the title.

Astros power past Braves

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Astros set a team record by homering in their 15th straight game, with Ken Caminiti and Lance Berkman connecting in the eighth inning Sunday for a 4-3 win over the Atlanta Braves.

Braves starter Kevin Millwood pitched three-hit ball for seven innings and left with a 3-1 lead.

Berkman hit a solo shot with one out in the eighth off Rudy Seanez (2-3). After Jeff Bagwell walked, Caminiti followed with his 13th homer for a 4-3 lead.

Marc Valdes (1-0), acquired Saturday from Tampa Bay, made his first major league appearance since June 22, 1998, and worked the eighth for the victory.

Billy Wagner, who had blown his last five save chances, pitched the ninth for his fifth save.

Mets 6, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — Todd Pratt, Todd Zeile and Edgardo Alfonzo homered and the New York Mets finished off a three-game sweep.

The Cardinals hit just two home runs in the series, none on Sunday. They lead the majors with 98, and need two Monday at Arizona to tie the record for quickest to 100 — Seattle hit 100 in 50 games last season.

Marlins 3, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Danny Bautista hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning as Florida beat Cincinnati.

The Marlins, who snapped an eight-game skid Saturday night, won a series at Cinergy Field for the first time since September 1996.

Rockies 11, Pirates 2

DENVER — Rolando Arrojo pitched seven innings for his first victory in nearly seven weeks as Colorado beat Pittsburgh.

Tom Goodwin was 3-for-4 with three runs, and Mike Lansing homered and had three RBIs for the Rockies, who improved to 16-6 at Coors Field. Todd Helton went 3-for-4 to raise his major league-leading average to .415.

Phillies 4, Dodgers 2

LOS ANGELES — Randy Wolf, pitching at Dodger Stadium for the first time since his high school championship game, threw his first complete game in the majors.

Wolf (4-3), who was drafted by the Dodgers out of high school but did not sign, pitched a six-hitter. He struck out four and walked four in his 31st big league start.

Cubs 4, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Kerry Wood pitched seven strong innings, using an unusual double play to get out of a fifth-inning jam, and Sammy Sosa homered for Chicago.

Wood (2-2), who missed all of last season after undergoing reconstructive elbow surgery, allowed three hits to win for the second time in five starts since his May 2 return from the disabled list.

Padres 4, Expos 3

SAN DIEGO — Al Martin drove in San Diego's first three runs, and the go-ahead run scored when Montreal third baseman Andy Tracy dropped a popup.

Brewers 4, Diamondbacks 3, 11 innings

PHOENIX — Marquis Grissom hit an RBI single in the 11th inning off Greg Swindell (1-1) and Milwaukee stopped Arizona's team-record 11-game home winning streak.

Martinez outduels Clemens

Associated Press

NEW YORK — This was a game that belonged in October instead of May with Boston's Pedro Martinez and New York's Roger Clemens locked in a brilliant pitchers' duel that had a postseason feel about it.

With first place in the American League East at stake, Martinez beat Clemens 2-0 Sunday night on a two-out, ninth-inning home run by Trot Nixon.

Martinez (8-2) limited New York to four hits and struck out nine. He retired 10 batters in a row before Chuck Knoblauch was hit by a pitch leading off the ninth.

Clemens (4-5) matched him until the ninth, also working on a three-hitter and striking out 13. With two outs, Jeff Frye hit a ball back at the pitcher. It glanced off Clemens and Frye was able to beat it out for an infield hit.

That brought up Nixon, who had tripled in the seventh but was stranded when Clemens struck out Brian Daubach and Nomar Garciaparra.

This time Nixon hit a 2-1 pitch into the right-field bleachers for his sixth home run of the season, breaking up the scoreless battle.

After Knoblauch reached in the ninth, Derek Jeter had his third hit of the game, giving New York its best chance against Martinez. But the Cy Young winner struck out Paul O'Neill. Bernie Williams backed Nixon to the running track in right field for the second out.

After Knoblauch advanced to third on the long fly, Jeter stole second. With the tying runs in scoring position, Jorge Posada was hit by a pitch, loading the bases.

Tino Martinez then bounced out to second base to end the game. Martinez's brother, Ramon, was the first Red Sox player out of the dugout to celebrate the win.

Twins 4, Rangers 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Sean Bergman won his first game in six starts as the Minnesota Twins beat the Texas Rangers to complete a three-game sweep.

AL Roundup

Minnesota, which outscored Texas 24-10 in the series, is 5-1 against the Rangers this season after losing all 12 games between the team last year. The Twins had not swept Texas since July 1998.

Bergman (3-3) struck out six and gave up seven hits in seven innings, his longest outing of the year, to win for the first time since a 6-1 victory over New York on April 25.

Rick Helling (7-2) lost for the first time in six starts.

Devil Rays 14, Mariners 4

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Mike DiFelice hit a tiebreaking homer that triggered an 11-run eighth inning — the biggest burst in Tampa Bay history — and led the Devil Rays over the Seattle Mariners 14-4 Sunday.

Jose Guillen hit a pair of two-run doubles in the eighth and Ozzie Guillen added a two-run double as Tampa Bay broke a four-game losing streak.

The Devil Rays got 10 hits off Jose Mesa (2-4), who was ejected later in the inning for throwing close to DiFelice, and utilityman John Mabry, who pitched for the first time in the majors.

Indians 12, White Sox 3

CHICAGO — Travis Fryman homered in a five-run sixth inning and the Cleveland Indians salvaged a victory in their three-game series with Chicago.

Bartolo Colon (5-2) threw 118 pitches in five innings, giving up four hits. He struck out eight, walked five and ran his career record to 6-0 against the White Sox.

Angels 8, Royals 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Darin Erstad was 4-for-5 with five RBIs and hit the first of an Anaheim-record four home runs in the fifth inning as the Angels beat the Kansas City Royals.

Mo Vaughn, Tim Salmon and Garret Anderson added consecutive homers in the fifth, giving Anaheim a team-record 48 in May. The Angels broke the record of 44 set in August 1982.

Rookie Brian Cooper (2-0), making his seventh major league start, gave up six hits and three runs in eight innings.

Blue Jays 12, Tigers 7

DETROIT — Carlos Delgado hit two homers to drive in five runs as the Toronto Blue Jays beat Detroit, giving rookie Clayton Andrews his first major league victory.

Luis Polonia, Dean Palmer and Bobby Higginson homered for the Tigers.

Delgado gave the Blue Jays an 8-6 lead with a two-run homer, his 16th, in the sixth. He also had a three-run shot in the eighth.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, May 29, 2000:
Ask for what you want. Give up any coy games. Be direct, and you'll succeed in an unprecedented way this year. In July, you begin a new 11-year lucky cycle. You can make needed changes and expansions. Travel opportunities pop up from out of the blue. On the other hand, traveling might contain an unpredictable element. You break barriers and learn a lot, whether through formal education or through surfing the Internet. If you are single, you no longer need to maintain that status. Someone very important enters the picture. You could meet this person in your day-to-day life. If attached, your relationship benefits from an effort to communicate more effectively. ARIES comes through for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Beam in loved ones and wave in summer frolic. Your high energy helps others make decisions. Breeze around, visit with friends and catch up on news. An associate still proves to be full of surprises. Tonight: Where the gang is.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Listen, think and evaluate. You might not believe what others expect, but you don't need to deliver. Maintain social obligations, but don't push yourself to extremes. Listen carefully to what another has in mind. Tonight: Check in with an older relative.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Use care with your words. You might be a little too fast or insightful for another. Slow down. Remember, the essence is to communicate in an effective manner. News that comes forward makes you think. Join friends. Tonight: Where the gang is.
CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ You know how to get others moving. Take charge; invite friends and family for a spontaneous get-together if you don't already have plans. No matter where you are right now, others depend on you. A partner or close friend makes an unusual choice. Tonight: Try togetherness.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Take a drive, or go out of your way to meet a friend. For some, the best you can do is a long-distance call. Others appreciate your time and caring. A partner still needs more space than you are comfortable with giving. Tonight: Relax your mind as well as your body.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Make an effort toward a partner, who has a lot on his plate. Pitch in and help get a barbecue moving. Be especially sensitive to those you care about. A shoulder rub could mean a lot to the host or hostess in question. Tonight: Do something special for a loved one.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ You don't have to agree with others, but finding a way to creatively merge ideas is the way to go. Break through locked thinking. Reach out for another at a distance. Know that you are cared about. Tonight: Add your personal touch to plans.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Take time to regroup, even if the long weekend isn't quite over. You need some extra R&R. Feel free to discuss needs and desires. A close tie or a partner proves to be responsive. Avoid having others over to your place. Tonight: Think about tomorrow.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Your cheerfulness and willingness to express yourself come out with others. A close friend takes a strong action, but choose not to be offended. Your high-voltage energy draws others. You do the unexpected; be open to the same. Tonight: Heat up the night.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Build on a current relationship. Don't worry so much about others' reactions. You have unusual energy. Pitch in at a party or gathering. You make decisions about money that you normally wouldn't feel comfortable with. Take time for a favorite sport. Tonight: Best at home.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Make an additional effort when a child or loved one seems to be full of it. Your sense of humor and spontaneity helps others work through problems. Make calls; reach out for others. Others appreciate your efforts and caring. Tonight: Whoop it up.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ Indulge another. Get down to what is important to both of you. Discussions need to be heartfelt. Cancel plans if you want; some one-on-one time with this person proves to be even more rewarding. Give up a tendency to be rigid. Tonight: Easy does it.

Bidding Quiz

Q 1 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡10 7 6 5 2 ◇J 9 ♣A K Q 8 2
The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1◇ | 1♠ | ? | |

What do you bid now?

A — Do not fall into the trap of bidding your clubs first because they are so much better than your hearts. If you do that, partner will always believe that clubs are your longer suit. With two five-card suits, show the higher-ranking first. Bid two hearts.

Q 2 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J 9 ♡K Q J 7 5 4 ◇A 8 ♣9 4 2
The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♠ | 2NT * | 3♡ | Pass |
| 4♣ | Pass | ? | |

* unusual — for the minors
What do you bid now?

A — Since East's two no-trump was a minor-suit takeout, North's four clubs must be a cuebid, implicitly setting hearts as trumps. Since you have nothing to be ashamed about your three-heart response, make a return cuebid of four diamonds to show your first-round control.

Q 3 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A J 8 7 2 ♡5 3 ◇8 6 2 ♣K 10 4
The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1◇ | Pass | 1♠ | Pass |
| 2♡ | Pass | ? | |

What do you bid now?

A — In the modern style, North's reverse is forcing for one round. Therefore, a return to opener's first suit is still forcing, since North promised another bid. That gives you a choice of rebids: either three diamonds, to show sound values with three-card or better support, or two spades to announce a reasonable five-card suit. Opt for the latter.

Q 4 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q 5 ♡A Q 10 7 4 ◇K Q J 5 ♣10 4
The bidding has proceeded:

| SOUTH | WEST | NORTH | EAST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♡ | Pass | 2◇ | Pass |
| 3◇ | Pass | 3♠ | Pass |
| ? | | | |

What do you bid now?

A — Partner obviously has a good hand, but you have nothing to add to the auction other than tell partner that you have good diamonds. Bid four diamonds and wait to see what happens next.

Q 5 — East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A 9 ♡J 5 ◇J 8 5 4 2 ♣J 10 9 3
The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♠ | 2♣ | ? | |

What action do you take?

A — Other than the ace of spades, your hand is virtually trickless. You simply do not have the values either to double for penalties or to take positive action. Pass. If partner has a good hand, there is still time to get into the bidding.

Q 6 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A K J 10 7 6 4 ♡K ◇10 ♣6 5 4 2
In third seat, what is your opening bid?

A — While you do have the master suit, you are almost surely outgunned in high cards — perhaps considerably so. We would make it as difficult as possible for the opponents to get into the bidding while minimizing the risk of a catastrophic double. Our choice is three spades.

Ventura thinks he could stage upset

Minnesota Gov. Jesse Ventura says he "could walk in and steal this election at the 11th hour."

NEW YORK — Minnesota Gov. Jesse Ventura says he's the only politician in the country who could stage an upset in November, even though he's not a candidate, has no party, and has no desire to live in Washington.

"I still believe strongly that I could walk in and steal this election at the 11th hour," Ventura told "Newsweek" magazine for its June 5 edition, on newstands today.

Ventura complained that both Vice President Al Gore and Texas Gov. George W. Bush are too cautious and over-spun to snag the sought-after independent vote cut loose when Sen. John McCain withdrew from the race.

"The vice president I see on TV now — I do double takes, because that ain't the one I seen at dinner," Ventura said of Gore, with whom he has hung out at the vice presidential mansion.

"You know, the one I seen at dinner is a very intelligent man, animated, highly emotional. And yet the one I see on TV is drier than toast."

Ventura said that during a recent trip to Chicago, "It was sort of scary, how many people were begging me to run," adding that he'd rather visit Washington than live there as president.

RADNOR, Pa. — Former presidential candidate Bob Dole has signed on as a political commentator for the least serious of news organizations — the Comedy Central cable network.

"I had other offers from serious programs to do (election) analysis," Dole tells the June 3 issue of TV Guide. "I thought, 'Why do I want to go on and second-guess every candidate?' Some people have been picking apart the candidates. That's not my bag."

Jon Stewart, host of the network's "The Daily Show," said Dole is quick-witted.

"That's when I like him best. When he's just riffing," Stewart said. "He's got a bit of (Bob) Newhart in him. It's very dry."

Dole said that during his 1996 campaign, the press didn't report on his brand of humor.

"I don't blame the press," Dole said. "They can't say, 'Bob Dole told a good joke today.'"

RADNOR, Pa. — Longtime game show host Wink Martindale says he likes the hit show "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?" and dismisses critics, such as "Jeopardy" host Alex Trebek, who say the questions are too easy.

"Alex is arrogant and I don't know why he would want to get into it with (host) Regis (Philbin)," Martindale says in the June 3 issue of TV Guide.

Martindale says he likes the show because all ages can enjoy it.

"The thing about 'Millionaire' that really turns me on is that you can sit your whole family in front of the television and not worry about what's going to be said," Martindale says.

PITTSBURGH — Patricia Ward Kelly said she didn't know who Gene Kelly was when she met the "Singin' in the Rain" star in 1985, but when he later asked her to help him write his autobiography, "We worked together and we fell in love."

He was 73, she was 26. The actor's widow told a Gene Kelly Awards ceremony in his hometown Saturday that as they worked on the book, Kelly told her about Pittsburgh — memories of air filled with coal dust, dance classes at a synagogue and arguing philosophy and politics in local taverns.

"He said his childhood in Pittsburgh was the greatest time in his life, almost idyllic — nothing ever compared to it," Mrs. Kelly said.

The Gene Kelly Awards are presented by the Pitts[illegible] Civic Light Opera for excellence in high school [illegible] theater.

Kelly died in 1996.

"It will always be a very special place in his memory and now a very special place in mine," she said of the city.

Businessman Jose Cuevas to chair 2000 Campaign

Jose Cuevas ...
Former City Councilman will chair 2000 United Way campaign

By Mella McEwen
Midland Reporter-Telegram
Staff writer

Outgoing city council member Jose Cuevas will soon turn his attention from city matters to the United Way of Midland after agreeing to chair this year's campaign.

"I have been asked and I have accepted," said Cuevas, founder and president of Jumburrito Restaurants.

Cuevas said his plans are to achieve the organization's financial goals and also, "to bring awareness to the wonderful work the United Way does in our lives and for the 16 agencies, to put a face on it and to inspire people to give."

Putting a face on the United Way and its partner agencies is just one of the goals of this year's campaign, according to Jimmy Patterson, Communications & Marketing Director for the agency.

'As a group, we can achieve anything, and Midland has always been blessed with tremendous volunteerism.'
—Jose Cuevas, 2000 United Way of Midland Campaign Chair

"This is not business as usual," Patterson said of the upcoming campaign. "We've already embarked upon several things that will be different from years past; things we haven't done before."

Of Cuevas' appointment as campaign chair, Patterson said, "We consider ourselves very fortunate to have someone like Jose head up our campaign this year. His leadership and knowledge of Midland, and his keen business sense are such great resources from which the United Way can benefit."

Cuevas said he was surprised and honored by the request, noting that although he has been a Gems giver (donating $1,000 or 1.5 percent of his annual pay) for some time, "I've never been that close to the circle of fundraising volunteers.

"I know it's a wonderful, strong organization and I've always admired them," Cuevas said. "With the extra free time I'm going to have, I think I'm going to enjoy the campaign. I still want to give to the community, and this is a wonderful way to do so.

"I have a passion for everything I commit myself to and I'm excited to be around wonderful people like those at the United Way. As a group, we can achieve anything, and Midland has always been blessed with tremendous volunteerism."

Planning Committee

Members of the United Way of Midland Planning Committee will soon begin researching community needs and offering opportunities to citizens to have input into and involvement in the process.

"Input can be achieved through suggestions, ideas, etc., directed to the committee," said Carole Symonette, planning chair for the United Way of Midland. "Involvement can be achieved through volunteering to serve on short-term committees to be appointed as the committee's needs require."

Persons interested in volunteering in the United Way planning process should contact Mrs. Symonette, at 684-3999, or via e-mail, at symonette.pc@worldnet.att.net.

Need to Read Fundraiser

Midland Community Theater will stage a special performance of the comedy, "The Foreigner," at 2 p.m., Sunday, June 4, at Cole Theatre on Wadley. Admission is $15 per person with proceeds to benefit Midland Need to Read's Adult Literacy Council. Tickets are available at the Need to Read office. For more information, call 685-4572.

Midland Need to Read

Teach someone to read

Midland Need to Read, an adult literacy council, will hold volunteer tutor training from 6:30-9:30 p.m. on Tuesday, June 13 and Thursday, June 15. Please call 685-4572 to reserve your training packet.

Casa de Amigos provides safe place for kids during summer

Beginning June 12 through July 27, Casa de Amigos will turn into a "Casa de Ninos." The program is the start of a 7-week summer program for children that includes all types of activities for children in grades 1-5. The program is a full day, from 9 a.m.-4 p.m., where children will attend six 45-minute sessions which include arts/crafts, computer lab, games, music, storytelling, and field trips.

"The children will have an opportunity to have fun and learn at the same time," said Paul Brooks, Director of Education.

Educational activities will be incorporated through the storytelling session, as well as writing to pen pals around the nation. Each Monday, the county librarian will lead an activity during storytelling that is age appropriate for each grade level, plus every child will have the opportunity to get a library card and visit the library to become familiar with its services.

'Days of Caring' event scheduled for August 28-31

By Jimmy Patterson
Communications & Marketing Director
United Way of Midland

"Days of Caring," a 4-day effort where employees of local companies are matched with United Way agencies to complete needed work projects, will be conducted the week of Aug. 28-31.

Participating United Way of Midland partner agencies include the YMCA, Boys & Girls Club of Midland, the Girl Scouts of the Permian Basin, Midland Rape Crisis Center, Camp Fire Boys & Girls, American Red Cross of Southwest Texas, Freewill Foster Home, Casa de Amigos, Safe Place, Salvation Army, Community & Senior Services, Palmer Drug Abuse Program and the Boy Scouts of America (Buffalo Trail Council).

Companies thus far committed to the project are Marathon Oil, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Burlington Resources, H-E-B, Target and Key Energy, with additional companies expected to follow.

"Days of Caring provides an excellent opportunity for people to get involved in what our agencies do," said Cynthia Y. Benson, Executive Director of the United Way of Midland. "For many, it will be an educational day, for others it will be but a small portion of their yearly volunteer effort and for others, it may serve as an initial spark that will lead to further volunteerism."

Volunteers will spend just one 4-hour work period in either the morning or afternoon, on either Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday, completing the needed projects at participating agencies.

If your company would like to be involved in the Days of Caring effort, call 685-7708 or e-mail jpatterson@uwmidland.org.

Project Los Alamos

Workers load supplies to take to the victims of the recent New Mexico wild fires. The project was the work of Beverly Harwood, pictured below left, and the Midland Amateur Radio Club.

Project Los Alamos, a relief effort headed up by Midlander Beverly Harwood, the Midland Amateur Radio Club, Wal-Mart, and the United Ways of Midland, Santa Fe (N.M) County and North Eddy County (N.M.), saw Midlanders come out in force to collect relief supplies for the over 300 families that lost homes to the recent forest fires in Los Alamos, and in the Sacramento Mountains, in Southern New Mexico. A Mayflower van, donated by Don Twitchell and ABC Moving and Storage of Midland, was filled with new and like-new items such as household goods, small appliances and hygiene products. A student group from Abell Junior High brought $100 in cash, asked volunteers what was needed, took the money inside Wal-Mart, purchased the needed supplies and returned them to the van site. The truck, driven by Fred Prado, left Midland Sunday night, May 21, and delivered the goods to those in need May 22.

Minnesota vocal artist donates proceeds from her CD sales to local United Ways

For the next three years, Minnesota vocalist Pamela McNeill will give proceeds from sales of her album, "2 Sides to Every Sky" to local United Ways across the country.

By Jimmy Patterson
United Way of Midland

Pamela McNeill knows what it feels like to be hungry. Down on her luck several years ago, she sought out the services of a local food bank in her home state of Minnesota.

So years later, when the United Way of Duluth suggested Ms. McNeill record a 10-song project that might eventually lead to helping others in similar situations, she jumped at the chance.

Ms. McNeill was first asked to record a jingle to benefit the United Way of Greater Duluth. So well received was that one song that she was asked to record an entire CD. The disc, "2 Sides to Every Sky," contains songs of the human spirit. Songs that deeply explore life and its ups and downs. Initially inspired by last year's shootings at Columbine High School, Ms. McNeill closed herself off from the world for a four-day period and wrote the songs that are contained on the project.

Ms. McNeill then went one step further, agreeing to donate all proceeds from sales of the album to local United Ways across the country. If, for instance, someone purchases the CD after having read this story on the United Way of Midland's web site, entire proceeds from the $14.95 CD will go to United Way of Midland. After donations are made to local United Ways, moneys raised are then used to fund various programs in communities across the country.

To read Pamela McNeill's complete story, visit our web site, at www.uwmidland.org.

Midland County staffs honored

Eighteen Midland County agencies qualified for awards as county employees together increased pledges to the United Way of Midland by 55 percent during the 1999 campaign.

All but four of those offices were recognized at the United Way's annual meeting in February. Those remaining offices receiving awards were: the staff of the District Clerk's Office (Bronze Award, $25-49 per capita); the staff of the Information Systems Office (Bronze Award); the staff of the Office of the County Treasurer (Century Award, $100-200 per capita) and the office of the County Judge, Commissioners and staff (Gold Award $75-99 per capita).
