Execution date set for Simmons

CLARKSVILLE, Ark. (AP) — An execution date of March 16 was set for R. Gene Simmons minutes after the jury that convicted him said he should be put to death by lethal injection.

The jury's sentence, read in court at 11:08 p.m. Friday, ended a five-day trial of Simmons, 48, on a capital murder charge that accused him of 14 murders — the extermination of his family, including his wife, their seven children, two of the children's spouses, and four grandchildren.

A person is deemed guilty of the charge if the jury finds him guilty of at least two of the murders. Juries do not specify whether they find the defendant guilty of all of the murders or not.

Judge John Patterson set the execution date in Johnson County Circuit Court after asking Simmons whether Simmons knew of any reason why the sentence should not be passed. "I do not," Simmons answered.

The judge asked whether Simmons understood that he had a right to appeal. Simmons answered, "I do."

Simmons was convicted May 12 in Franklin County Circuit Court in Ozark of capital murder for two other deaths and was sentenced to die for them. He did not appeal, asking, instead, to be executed as soon as possible — "Let the torture and suffering in me end," he pleaded to Patterson, who also presided at that trial.

The June 27, 1988, execution date that Patterson set in that case was postponed after a death penalty foe — the Rev. Louis Franz, 54, of Star City, a Roman Catholic priest — petitioned state and federal courts and contended that Simmons was not competent to waive the appeal and that the appeal was not made knowingly and intelligently. Simmons opposed Franz's attempt to intervene in the case.

Patterson had found Simmons to be competent on the basis of Simmons' courtroom behavior and the testimony of two psychiatrists who said he was competent. State and federal judges in Little Rock agreed.

But the federal judge set up a procedure to establish that Simmons' waiver is knowing and intelligent — he appointed an attorney to review the six volumes of transcript from the 1988 trial and inform Simmons of arguments he could make if he chose to appeal that verdict. The review process still is going on.

Defense attorney Robert E. "Doc" Irwin said Simmons would appeal the conviction and death sentence that was handed down Friday. Irwin's co-counsel, John C. Harris, said he had not heard that Simmons intended to appeal the new conviction, but Irwin said Simmons gave permission weeks ago.

The defendant has 30 days in which to file a notice of appeal.

After the verdict, Simmons was rushed back to the Pope County Detention Center at Russellville, where he was held at night during the trial. He will be taken back to state prison, probably on Monday, jailer Jack Branch said.

Iranians celebrate 10th anniversary of revolution

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — A crowd estimated at 3 to 4 million celebrated the Islamic revolution's 10th anniversary Saturday by taking to the streets for a rally and roaring "Death To America!"

Men, women and children braved snow and icy winds whistling down from the Alborz mountains to attend the rally around the towering independence monument in Freedom Square.

A 10-story-high portrait of Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini served as a backdrop.

President Ali Khamenei told the revelers their nation is ready for relations with "every country that doesn't plot against us."

But a resolution read aloud said Iran should never have ties with Israel, South Africa and "their godfather, the Great Satan," the Iranian epithet for the United States.

The rally and others across Iran marked the climax of 10 days of celebrations that began Feb. 1, the date in 1979 when Khomeini returned to Tehran in triumph after 15 years in exile.

Ten days later, the last government appointed by Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi collapsed. Khomeini's revolutionaries took power and proclaimed the Islamic republic.

In November of that year, fundamentalists took over the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and held 52 Americans hostage 444 days.

The revolution has survived bloody internal strife, an eight-year war with Iraq and the hostility of much of the world.

Beneath the huge portrait of Khomeini hoisted for the rally, a slogan in Farsi and English said: "The Victory of the Revolution Needs Safeguarding."

Khomeini did not attend the rally, which police estimated drew 3 to 4 million people. The 88-year-old leader reportedly is in poor health and rarely leaves his home in north Tehran.

He was represented by his son Ahmed, who is emerging as an increasingly powerful political figure.

Khamenei, speaking from a platform draped in blue and green streamers, said the turnout was proof of Iranians' faith in the revolution and "a warning to the world oppressor powers who conspire against the revolution."

"Today our revolution is stronger than ever despite the many obstacles placed in its way during the first 10 years by the oppressor powers," he said.

Cheerleader Ali Mozavardi, known to Iranians as "the minister of slogans," whipped the masses into a frenzy by leading them in his deep baritone voice in shouting anti-American slogans.

Iranians stabbed their fists in the air in time with their roaring chant of "Marg Bar Amrika!" or "Death to America!"

The bearded Khamenei, speaking in a flat, unemotional voice, said "there may be differences of opinion and taste between individuals" in the Iranian government, but denied there was a power struggle.

Nonetheless, there have been clear signs of a split, particularly since the Aug. 20 cease-fire in the Iran-Iraq war.

One divisive issue is the campaign by Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani, the most powerful figure after Khomeini, to normalize Iran's relations with Western countries and end its self-imposed isolation.

The differences were illustrated last week when Interior Minister Ali Aakbar Mohtashemi criticized a two-day visit to Iran by French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas.

He said France was Iraq's second-biggest arms supplier after the Soviet Union during the war with Iran. "Instead of clasping the hands of such foreigners we should join hands with our people to get rid of foreigners," Mohtashemi said.

FDIC head may have tough time with S&L crisis

WASHINGTON (AP) — L. William Seidman, a tough-talking bank regulator who looks a little like Daddy Warbucks, is braced for his good name to get splattered quickly now that President Bush has made him deposit insurance czar and plopped the savings and loan crisis in his lap.

In more than three years at the helm of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which backs commercial bank deposits, Seidman, 67, has acquired a reputation as a straight shooter.

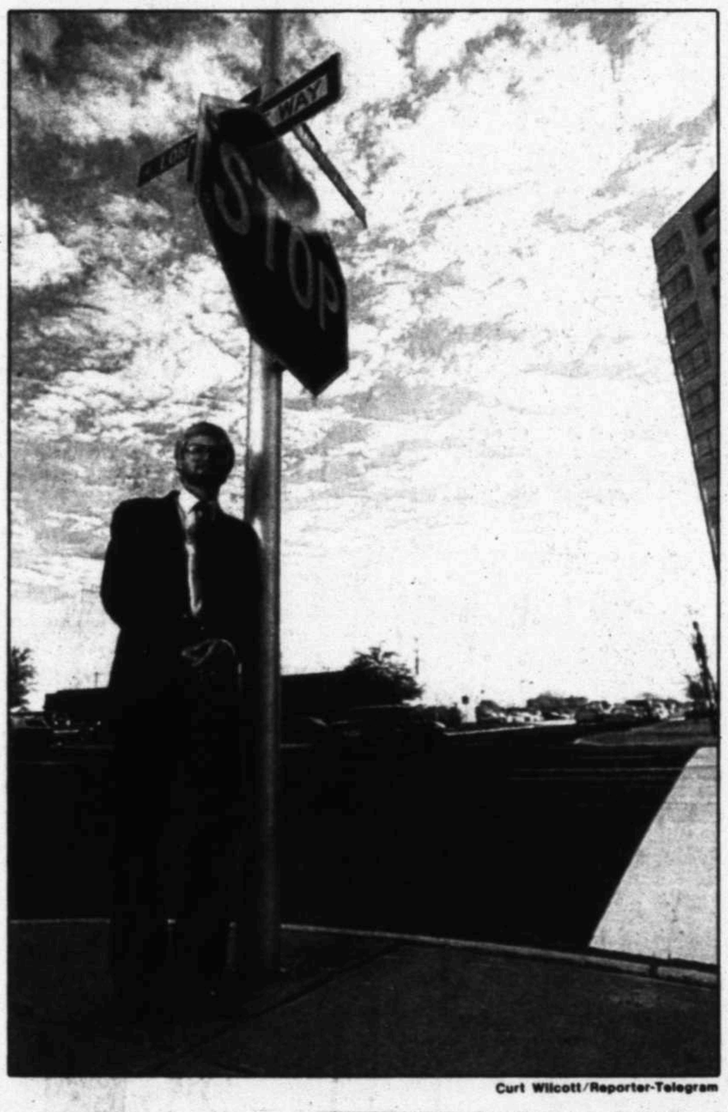

When his agency announces good news such as a jump in bank profits, he's more likely to focus on negatives, such as an uptick in bad loans in the Northeast or banks' growing dependence on leveraged buyouts.

Over the past year, congressional committees, unhappy with what they viewed as overly rosy estimates from S&L regulators at the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, increasingly have turned to Seidman for information about savings and loans, even though they weren't under his jurisdiction.

"His personality is very blunt. He's a no-nonsense guy and he doesn't mince words," said Robert Litan, a banking expert at the Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank. "I think a lot of politicians appreciate that."

"Seidman is an old hand and has the confidence of people in Washington," explained Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., a member of the House Banking Committee.

Gary Saunders, senior traffic technician for the city of Midland, says accidents that occur at this intersection at Loraine Street and Michigan Avenue have engineers baffled.

Loraine, Michigan city's most dangerous spot, survey indicates

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Midland motorists have come up with their own version of dead man's curve and surprising or not it's smack dab downtown at the intersection of Loraine Street and Michigan Avenue.

Forget Loop 250 at Midkiff or Midland Drive at Andrews Highway. Granted, motorists' chances of getting in a wreck are significantly greater in those areas, but on a traveled-percentage basis Loraine and Michigan make by far the deadliest combination.

Such were the findings of a city-wide traffic-accident survey conducted by Midland's traffic engineering division for 1988 — a survey that among other things, showed a 22 percent reduction in the number of alcohol-related accidents.

"It's a continual process...we look at every intersection in town to determine what, if any improvements can be made," said Harvey Hansen, director of streets, traffic and engineering.

Certainly it makes sense. With Midland's traffic now increasing at a rate of 3 percent annually, professionals say there is a constant need to evaluate the numbers — numbers like 35 accidents that occurred over a four-year period at the Loraine and Michigan intersection — 14 of which occurred in 1988.

And that baffles people like Senior Traffic Technician Gary Saunders. "We've used the largest stop signs we have...it's gotten to the point where we're going to have to look at flashers or even a four-way stop."

For now, Saunders just tags it to the list — a list that has fingered 23 other problem intersections in town rated in order of frequency.

Falling behind Loraine and Michigan, was Main Street at Scharbauer Drive, Illinois Avenue at Loraine Street, Marienfield Street at Michigan Avenue, Illinois Avenue at Main Street, Andrews Highway at Loop 250, Lamesa Road at Scharbauer Drive, Loop 250 at Midkiff Road, Andrews Highway at Cuthbert Avenue and Front Street at Lee Street.

One intersection that the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation is expected to address over the next year is Andrews Highway at Loop 250.

"That will be our next project," said Charles Webb, assistant district engineer in Odessa. "We plan to build an underpass there and let the project sometime later this year."

When completed, motorists will be able to travel non-stop from Midland Drive at Andrews Highway to Parkway Boulevard via Texas 191 to Odessa.

Officers to ask 'Unsolved Mysteries' producers to cover Gilkerson case

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The most famous case in the history of Midland police, or a puzzling missing persons case, may appear on prime-time television soon.

Midland investigators have decided to ask producers of "Unsolved Mysteries," the popular NBC-TV program hosted by Robert Stack, to broadcast a narrative of the June Gilkerson kidnapping in an upcoming show.

Police have also decided to ask show producers to air a narrative of the Kristy Lynn Booth disappearance. Ms. Booth was 19 when she vanished from a Midland nightclub on a snowy night in February, 1980.

The detective still assigned to the Booth case, who watches the hourlong program, admits it is a "shot in the dark."

"We haven't heard anything since last year, which was a Crime Stoppers tip about a person who might have been involved," police Sgt. Ronnie Wilson said. "There was nothing to it."

Wilson said the Booth case still baffles detectives.

The young woman, a 1979 graduate of Lee High School, was at the Dimensions nightclub in north Midland until about 10:30 p.m. on Feb. 2, 1980. She had gone there with friends in her car, and when she was noticed missing her shoes, and coat were found left at her table.

Her car was found by a Midland constable two days later, just outside the city limits with more than 250 unaccounted for miles on the odometer.

Police Chief Richard Czech says the show may lead to something — though he knows not what.

"They have had some success on the show," Czech said. "We may be able to find some more evidence."

Cpl. Jim White said he has contacted people associated with the show, but has not heard back from them.

The decision to include the Gilkerson case in the proposal was less than unanimous, police say because the man who they believe abducted the 24-year-old woman — and is serving two consecutive life terms in a federal prison for that and another crime — is the only one who knows her whereabouts, officers said.

Hospitals' treatment programs to be parallel

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Although Midland's Clearview and Glenwood hospitals are less than 10 miles apart, the realm of treatment the two were known for used to be somewhat distant.

But a quest for new patients and an awareness of the "need" for new services in the Permian Basin has brought the two hospitals' treatment programs within a breath of each other.

The patient stands to gain the most.

The Midland County Hospital District bought Clearview, a chemical dependency unit, last December and then announced it would treat patients' psychological problems.

Less than a month later, Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital announced it would begin treating patients with a dependence on alcohol and drugs.

Glenwood's new program, based on the 12 tenets of Alcoholics Anonymous, is called STEPS (Sobriety Together: Emotionally, Physically and Spiritually).

"We knew that alcohol and drug dependency was a part of psychiatric problems," explained Donna Rogers, Glenwood's coordinator of addictive disorders.

"We don't care which came first, you have to treat both of them."

Ms. Rogers estimates that as many as half of of the psychiatric patients Glenwood admits have a related chemical dependency problem.

Medical treatment in the STEPS program may consist of the use of drugs to ease the physical dangers associated with detoxification, Ms. Rogers said.

A patient receives seven hours of therapy a day, she said. There is group and individual counseling, daily Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, occupation, recreational, music and art therapies and "addictive education" classes.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Weather today should be just as nice as Saturday's, though the high today should only reach into the upper 60s.

Winds will be from the southeast at 5-15 mph.

Tonight and Monday will also be partly cloudy with a low tonight in the upper 30s. Monday's high should be in the mid 60s.

The record high temperature for a Feb. 11 was set in 1962 when it reached 85, while the record low for today was set one year later when it dropped to 14.

STATE

A surface ridge of high pressure over the Gulf of Mexico weakened, allowing a return of low level moisture to South Texas, while skies were fair to partly cloudy over much of the state.

A weak stationary cold front stretched across the western Red River Valley into the South Plains holding low level clouds over the eastern and southeastern parts of the state.

Extremes ranged from 50 degrees at Dalhart to 77 degrees at Brownsville.

The forecast calls for mostly fair skies over West Texas and mostly cloudy elsewhere. Fog with intermittent drizzle is predicted for most sections of South Texas with some drizzle or light rain possible over North Texas and the Panhandle.

NATION

Light snow was widely scattered Saturday with little significant accumulation.

Snow showers and squalls spread flakes during the afternoon over northern New York state, northern Maine and Michigan.

Advisories for snow squalls were posted over north-central New York state, near Lake Ontario.

Snow also was scattered from eastern Idaho across Utah and western Colorado, as well as from east-central across west-central Nevada.

For today, showers were forecast from northeastern Texas across Arkansas, northern Louisiana, central Mississippi and central Alabama. Snow was forecast from northern New England across northern and western New York state, over Upper Michigan, and from eastern Nevada across Utah.

SIMMONS

Relatives of some of Simmons' victims were relieved that the jury convicted Simmons and sentenced him to die.

"I'm glad it's over," said Viola O'Shields of Fort Payne, Ala., whose sister was Simmons' wife.

"I can't say I'm happy, but I feel like justice has been done," said Pat McNulty, 64, of Camden, father of a victim who was Simmons' son-in-law.

Prosecuting Attorney John Bynum said "the jury did right. If ever there was a case that deserved the death penalty, this was it."

Irwin said the defense appeal would be based on motions that police violated Simmons' rights by searching his house and grounds without a warrant, finding the bodies that led to this charge, and that Bynum violated Simmons' rights by splitting the 16 slayings into two cases against Simmons instead of trying him for all 16 deaths as a single charge.

There was a smattering of applause from a few of the 250 people in the courtroom when the verdict of guilty was read and again later when the crowd had dwindled to 150 when the sentence of death was read.

Simmons, gray-bearded and blue-eyed, showed no reaction at either verdict.

The jury deliberated just over four hours to convict Simmons and more than two hours more to set his punishment. The state presented 19 witnesses and 88 exhibits. The defense offered no witnesses.

Simmons startled Bynum during Friday's proceedings by socking the prosecutor on the chin. The punch was thrown without warning at the end of a huddled conference at the judge's bench between lawyers. Simmons, as has been his custom attended that conference, which contained nothing to provoke the attack, all the lawyers, as well as the judge, said later.

Simmons caught Bynum with one punch, tried to hit him once or twice more, but missed as Bynum leaned back and as police rushing in began to scuffle with Simmons. A voice in the scuffle said "He's trying to get a gun," but they wrestled Simmons' arms behind his back and handcuffed his hands there. Police hustled him out of the room.

Jurors — some of them having jumped out of their seats in alarm — watched wide-eyed and horrified as the struggle took place about 20 feet in front of them. Shrieks came from the audience. A few of the relatives of Simmons' victims threw themselves to the floor, huddling protectively over each other, while police wrestled with Simmons.

"We were scared to death," said Charlotte Crosston of Waldron, a mother of a victim who was Simmons' daughter-in-law. "We were panic-stricken. Our legs were like rubber."

The judge told the jury to disregard the incident. He said the trial needed to go on to its conclusion and then he dismissed the jury for lunch.

After lunch, the judge asked Simmons in a closed proceeding to assure the judge that there would be no more outbursts. Simmons wouldn't give the assurance.

TREATMENT

"We're going to hit them from all angles. They don't miss a beat," Ms. Rogers said.

Neither did Clearview's new owners when announcing psychiatric treatment would be available to patients with a chemical dependency.

In 12 days, Clearview will begin a "co-dependency" program which will address the "dysfunctional" patterns present in a family which may or may not contain a chemically dependent person.

Early research found that certain symptoms — rationalizing, compensating, denial and minimizing of problems — were found in families where alcoholism was evident.

Reese Carroll, coordinator of Clearview's new co-dependency program, said researchers believe that "coping incorrectly with a problem can get us stuck in dysfunctional lifestyles."

Abusing substances may be one family member's first brush with incorrect coping skills. Later, as the situation worsens and the family member becomes dependent on a substance or action, others find themselves accommodating the problem rather than curing it.

The co-dependent lifestyle has cemented itself within a family structure when an individual finds himself pleasing or living for others; a situation that creates a loss of self-identity for the family member.

In a dysfunctional family there are usually three unwritten canons members live by: don't talk, don't trust and don't feel, he said.

Carroll stressed that abusing drugs is not the only manner in which family members may become co-dependent. People who overeat, spend too much money or are self-professed workaholics may also "go down the addictive spiral."

In fact, the coordinator said co-dependent people usually have one or more addictions.

As many as 90 percent of U.S. families may have dysfunctional or co-dependent traits, Carroll said.

During initial treating of the co-dependent problem, people are taught to recognize the fact they exhibit self-defeating characteristics, Carroll said.

Secondly, people "take a journey" inside themselves and "discover the child within us that never got to be."

Ideally, a family will attempt to heal the problem together, but a lot of people can live peaceful lives once they detach themselves from the person they are focusing on," Carroll said.

Detachment, Carroll pointed out, isn't necessarily equitable with a physical move. Instead, someone may detach by taking care of his own needs first.

"Separate yourself from enmeshment with the other person...and put healthy boundaries around yourself. Let them know if you are angry, hurt, sad and ashamed and that you are not going to allow them to abuse you."

GILKERSON

But, "I don't see anything wrong with it," Detective Sgt. B.G. Johnson said of the proposal.

But the attorney for Kenneth Wayne Parker, who along with another man was convicted of abducting the woman, said a national broadcast would damage his client.

"The case is still on appeal," Tom Morgan said. "There is no final conviction. I don't feel it is appropriate to do anything along these lines until the appeal is exhausted."

Morgan has appealed the conviction to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, and the court has not yet ruled on the appeal.

"One big concern of mine in them doing this is if the conviction is reversed, releasing this to the nation might possibly destroy his presumption of innocence," he continued. "He might not get a fair trial" if the appellate court orders a re-trial, the attorney said.

During Parker's June 1988 trial in Midland federal court, a defense witness testified that he saw Ms. Gilkerson alive in Mexico. Morgan conceded if the show is broadcast, information to bolster Parker's case might be uncovered.

"I would say it is possible" Parker's case could be helped, Morgan said.

S&Ls

"And he's been right on the issue. Unlike the bank board he has not had to change his tune every few months."

Although Seidman has presided over the worst three years for bank failures since the Depression, he also has had two important advantages not enjoyed by M. Danny Wall, his counterpart for S&Ls: a large, experienced staff that had escaped Reagan-era budget cuts, and a solvent insurance fund.

Now that Seidman, under Bush's plan to resolve the savings and loan crisis, gets actual, not just defacto, authority over S&Ls, he may be in for tougher times.

Many people, including the FDIC chairman himself, think the era of good feelings could quickly end as the FDIC wrestles with the intractable thrift problem.

"I think you will shortly be doing a story on this guy's the most inept, mud-covered regulator we've ever seen. How could we have ever thought he's reasonably good," Seidman, a short, nearly-bald, craggy-featured man, predicted in a recent interview.

Commercial banking, despite all the failures, is relatively healthy, posting record high earnings last year. The savings industry, by any measure, is ailing. About 350 of the 3,000 S&Ls in the nation are insolvent. The business lost more money in 1988 than at any time in 50 years. And, only one in four institutions now have enough money invested by their owners to meet the stricter capital standards Bush's plan would require in two years.

"We're going...into a very difficult situation to which every answer will be painful...and which contains all kinds of booby traps and not many rewards," Seidman said. "There aren't going to be any miracles."

Others aren't as pessimistic, at least about the prospects for Seidman's reputation.

"Seidman is coming in at the right time," said former Senate Banking Committee Chairman William Proxmire, who retired this year after 30 years in the Senate. "People realize S&Ls are in horrible shape...It's like coming in to coach a football team that has had a disastrous season...If he wins three or four games, he's a genius."

Some in Washington think Seidman is already a genius for having doubled his power and simultaneously protected the bank insurance fund from being raided to pay for S&L problems.

When asked, in the months leading up to the announcement of Bush's S&L proposal, whether he wanted jurisdiction over thrift institutions, Seidman had a stock answer, "We prefer to go it alone, but we're willing to help if asked."

Even now he insists, "It was not a job we wanted. We never asked for it...There was no hidden agenda for us to end up where we are now."

IRAN

At the rally, many women — who stood separately from the men in accordance with religious code — carried photographs of husbands or sons killed in the war.

There were hundreds of war veterans in wheelchairs or on crutches, and one group was given a position of honor in front of the speaker's platform.

Khamenei said that although Iran's postwar reconstruction will depend mainly on Iranians, "we also need the cooperation of those countries which are not motivated by plots or conspiracies against us."

The six wide avenues converging on Freedom Square were crammed with people after the rally, one of the biggest in the capital in recent years.

Sixteen helicopters, including some identified by officials as Iranian-built Shabaviz craft, showered the crowds with flowers and revolutionary leaflets.

Correction

In Saturday's Reporter-Telegram it was stated that someone who buys an automatic weapon may leave the store with it. The article should have referred to a semi-automatic weapon in that instance.

TRAFFIC

For the year Midland recorded 2,656 accidents or 7.27 per day in 1988, compared to 2,459 in 1987 or 6.73 per day.

Of that number in 1988, 851 resulted in injury to 1,310 drivers and passengers. There were six fatalities. Comparatively, there were 787 accidents that injured 904 people in 1987. Four of the total were fatalities.

And where did the majority of accidents occur? Topping the list was Loop 250 north at Midkiff Drive.

Over a four-year period, engineers recorded 42 accidents — 21 in 1988 alone. "Mostly it's just high volume," said Saunders. "Plus you have a number of conditions there...speed off the loop, conflicting left turns, U-turns and the mall traffic."

Engineers say the problem could be alleviated with an overpass, which already has been proposed by the state. "We'd like to build a pair of overpasses there, but that will depend when funds become available," said Webb.

Other high-accident locations among 30 surveyed, include Andrews Highway at Loop 250, Main at Scharbauer, Loraine at Michigan, Andrews Highway at Louisiana, Midkiff at Wadley, Andrews Highway at Midkiff, Andrews Highway at Illinois, Big Spring at Loop 250 and Big Spring at Scharbauer.

Some of those locations are not so surprising. For example at Midkiff Road and Andrews Highway, engineers counted an average of 47,213 motorists traveling through that area per day, followed closely by Andrews Highway at Midland Drive, where engineers counted an average of 44,382 vehicles per day in 1988. From then on, there's a steep and progressing drop in traffic counts in other areas.

One of the most surprising statistics engineers found involved alcohol-related accidents — down 22 percent from 240 in 1987 to 188 in 1988. While the number was significant, total related-injuries barely nudged from 172 in 1987 to just 170 in 1988.

The drop in alcohol-related figures surprised Midland Police Lt. Jerry Morris, who heads up the department's traffic division. "The only thing I can figure is we've taken a more agressive approach where DWIs are concerned...people know out there that we're looking harder than ever."

Morris said he doubted less people are drinking. "But maybe we're getting some voluntary compliance...at least I'd like to think that. That's quite a drop...I hope it drops 22 percent again next year."

Bentsen wants expansion of anti-terrorism measures

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is urging the Transportation Department to expand tough new anti-terrorism precautions to foreign air carriers with landing rights in the United States.

In a letter to Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner released Saturday, Bentsen said he was "dismayed" emergency security precautions taken after the Christmas holiday bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, which killed 270 people, apply only to domestic carriers with international flights.

"I do not think it requires a quantum leap in logic to conclude that as it becomes more difficult to penetrate the security of U.S. flag carriers because of their superior security systems, the terrorist threat may well shift to foreign air carriers which carry a large number of American passengers," Bentsen told Skinner in a letter released Saturday.

Approximately half of Americans traveling abroad fly on foreign carriers, said Bentsen, a Texas Democrat and chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

"If the primary basis for the emergency rulemaking is to minimize terrorism aimed at Americans particularly and the international traveling public generally, then I do not see how it is accomplished by a blanket exemption to foreign air carriers to the requirement for improved security operations," Bentsen said.

The Federal Aviation Administration in late December announced tightened security procedures by U.S. air carriers at 103 airports in the Middle East and Western Europe, including X-ray or physical inspection of all checked baggage and random physical checks of some carry-on baggage.

"The problem is that they (FAA) offered a half a loaf, and half a loaf is just not good enough when you're talking about terrorism," Bentsen said.

Skinner will head a U.S. delegation to a special session of the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization on Wednesday and Thursday in Montreal, where protecting aviation from terrorists will be discussed.

Report: Land Office Building in disrepair

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' oldest state office structure — the 134-year-old General Land Office Building — is plagued by safety and health hazards and could be lost if it is not renovated soon, state consultants said.

The three-story masonry building just southeast of the Capitol is targeted for a $4.5 million restoration project.

In a preliminary report Friday to a State Preservation Board advisory committee, San Antonio architect Patrick Chumney said problems range from an attic contaminated by asbestos and bird droppings to a deteriorated stucco exterior.

Allen McCree, Capitol architect, said the problems are not great enough to force closure of the building. It houses two small state museums that do not attract large numbers of visitors, he said.

As a prelude to the restoration, a team of consultants headed by Chumney & Associates is combing the building to decide how the problems should be corrected. McCree said a final report is expected with a month, and restoration work could begin by mid-1990.

Chumney said the building has electrical and plumbing problems, no fire sprinkler system or fire alarms, and no handicapped access.

In other action, the committee authorized a long-awaited step to move the Goddess of Liberty statue from storage in a state airplane hangar to the Texas Memorial Museum at the University of Texas.

McCree said the transfer is to be completed in time for an April 20-21 dedication, to coincide with San Jacinto Day.

The 15-foot, 7-inch zinc statue stood atop the Capitol for 97 years. It was removed in 1985 and replaced with an aluminum replica.

The statue is expected to remain at the museum for at least three years. Its appearance there will mark the first time it has been on display since a brief showing last year during the Capitol centennial celebration.

The project will cost about $32,800, McCree said. It will be funded through a $25,000 donation from Chevron USA; $1,800 in donations to a Goddess Display Fund; and other contributions.

UIL rule changes approved

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education Saturday approved the addition of four members to the University Interscholastic League's Legislative Council, with attention to representation of women and minorities.

The UIL rule change was among dozens approved by the board. The Texas Education Code requires the UIL — which regulates interscholastic athletic, academic and musical contests — to submit its rules and procedures to the board for action.

The Legislative Council has 20 members elected by school superintendents. The new members, to be appointed by the chairman, will include one public school administrator from each of the state's four regions.

The rule change says the new members' selection "shall reflect a sensitivity to ethnicity, gender and student population issues."

Action was deferred on a rule change that would — effective next year — delay the regular season, state playoffs and state tournament for Class A, 2A and 3A high school baseball teams.

UIL Director Bailey Marshall asked for the delay. He said that in response to concerns, the league was surveying school administrators to see if they still want the revised schedule.

An ad hoc committee is studying a provision in a rule change that would establish more consistent off-season rules for baseball, basketball, seven-man flag football, soccer and volleyball.

Representatives of American Legion Baseball opposed the provision, which would allow a school coach to coach an American Legion baseball team only if no more than six students from that coach's school participate on that team.

The board also delayed action on a rule change to allow Conference A schools to permit students in the sixth grade and below to participate on a combined seventh- and eighth-grade baseball, basketball or volleyball team, if the school would not be able to field a team without their participation.

Students in sixth grade could participate on a combined seventh-and eighth-grade football team under the same circumstances, under the rule.

A proposal that would relax a number of existing restrictions relating to students participating in summer athletic camps also was deferred.

Among UIL rule changes approved by the board were referendum ballot items, which also must be approved by UIL members, to:

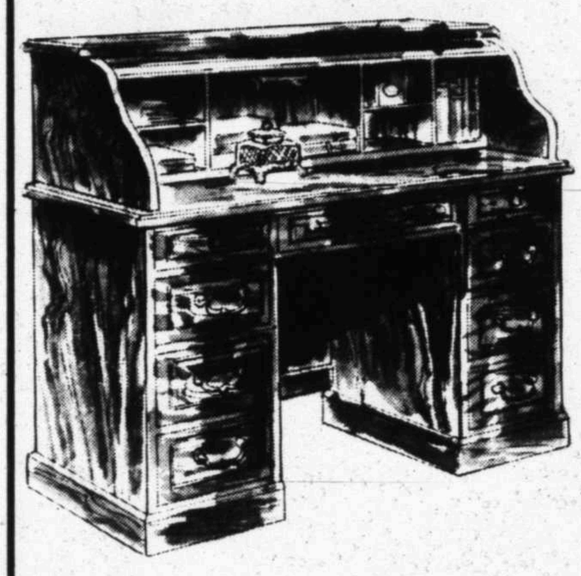

- Implement a retroactive waiver procedure.
- Broaden the criteria for granting waivers of the parent residence rule and add a restriction to the waiver of the four-year rule.
- Clarify the gift awards rule for sponsors and raise the annual limit from $200 to $300. The proposal also would change the penalty provision to apply to the violator instead of to the school.

Some other rule changes approved by the board would:

- Authorize the education commissioner to appoint the State Executive Committee. The president of the University of Texas at Austin has appointed the committee in the past, but the university asked the Legislative Council to determine another method of appointment.
- Prohibit noisemakers at indoor athletic competitions.
- Make it a violation for a coach or sponsor to solicit a change in a student's grades for eligibility purposes, and for a UIL director-sponsor-coach to pressure students to participate in non-school activities.
- Permit seniors to participate in college tryouts, under certain restrictions, and include certain games within the definition of a college tryout.
- Allow elementary school children to attend local non-contact summer football camps.
- Permit schools to play three matched volleyball contests during the first two weeks of the season, only in school year 1989-90.

Men found guilty in murder of mistakenly accused teen

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Two men have been found guilty in the 1987 slaying of a Fort Worth teenager they mistakenly accused of raping one of the men's 80-year-old grandmother.

A prosecutor called the two men "vigilantes and terrorists" who invaded the home of Jeffery Donnelle and threatened his family because they decided he had committed the sexual attack.

"It's a shame, because he wasn't guilty," said Terri Moore in closing arguments. "This 17-year-old kid absolutely died for nothing."

A Tarrant County jury needed less than 40 minutes on Friday before convicting Norris Wayne Hicks and Boyd Ballard of murder in the Nov. 27, 1987, shooting.

Donnelle died eight days after the shooting.

After Donnelle's death, police determined his blood type did not match the blood type of the person who raped the elderly woman. No one has been charged in the rape.

The jury will return to the Tarrant County District Court on Monday to set punishment for Hicks, 36, of Arlington, and Ballard, 35, of Alabama. The men face sentences of five to 99 years or life in prison.

During the three-day trial, witnesses testified that Donnelle was killed because the two defendants were under the impression that Donnelle had raped Ballard's grandmother two days before the shooting.

Hicks is Ballard's brother-in-law and is married to Ruby Nell Gay Hicks, who faces a charge of conspiracy to commit murder in connection with the same incident.

Defense attorneys argued unsuccessfully during the trial that prosecution witnesses were doing the same thing that the two men had done — mistakenly identifying them as killers, just because they had confronted him about the rape earlier.

A stepdaughter of Hicks testified that her mother, a father and a cousin had gone to Donnelle's apartment the night before Thanksgiving to get Donnelle to give himself up. She said the 80-year-old woman had identified Donnelle as her attacker from a television news report and a photograph.

Mother of 'girl of darkness' amazed at outpouring of love

ATHENS, Texas (AP) — The mother of Wendy Thomas, the 4-year-old Athens girl who cannot go out in sunlight because of a deadly disease, says she is "touched by an outpouring of love from across the nation."

Jackie Thomas says she is receiving calls of support from around the country after people learned Wendy was beginning an extremely costly and painful process to replace all the skin on her face and scalp.

"It's amazing," said Mrs. Thomas, who said she also is hearing from parents of other children who have the same disease. "I was shocked to find out that people care about us."

Wendy is one of only about 200 people in the United States afflicted with xeroderma pigmentosum. She cannot venture outside without a special sunbonnet and sunglasses, or the sun's rays will cause more cancers to form on her skin.

She already has undergone seven surgeries to remove about 40 cancers from her face and scalp, and father Ronnie and her mother feel a massive skin graft probably is the only way to give her a fresh start.

Wendy returned home to Athens Friday after undergoing surgery a day earlier at Dallas' Baylor University Medical Center to have a skin extender inserted into her abdomen. Some stretched skin will later be removed and grafted onto her face.

Mrs. Thomas said Wendy was up and running around the house on Saturday — but not quite as fast as usual.

"She's going a little slow, but nothing keeps her down," Mrs. Thomas said.

Mrs. Thomas earlier had complained that she and her husband had long wished there was some kind of support group for XP patients, but so few people have the disease that none exists.

But after news was spread of Wendy's upcoming surgery and her life away from sunlight, Mrs. Thomas has heard from three XP patients in Michigan and others in San Antonio and Seattle.

Others have called to send words of encouragement.

One man from Pennsylvania said he plans a fund-raiser in his hometown to raise money for Wendy's medical bills. A florist from Massachusetts sent a stuffed bear and flowers to her hospital room in Dallas.

And a group of children from an Arizona church say they want to be Wendy's pen pals and are sending her get-well cards.

"I talked to the family in Michigan that has three with XP," Mrs. Thomas said. "They told me that their hearts went out to us. They knew what I've been going through."

Bandidos sentenced in bombings

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge sentenced 10 members of the Bandido Motorcycle Club for their roles in a 1983 conspiracy to bomb two Dallas-area homes of rival gang members.

Fifteen members of the motorcycle gang were convicted or pleaded guilty in December to a conspiracy to set off bombs in houses occupied by members of the Banshees Motorcyle Club in July 1983.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer on Friday sentenced six of the 10 club members to five years in prison, the maximum under their one-count conspiracy convictions or pleas.

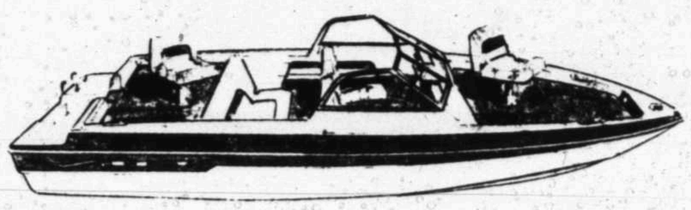

The bombings were retaliatory attacks that came three months after a club member was killed in a Montgomery County gunfight with Banshees.

George Milner, a Dallas lawyer representing one of the Bandido club members, told Buchmeyer that the bombings were the result of the gang's closeness and frustration over the slaying.

Federal officials say the convictions and guilty pleas, including a plea by the group's national president, have severely damaged the gang's national organization. Several other national and chapter officials were convicted or pleaded guilty in the conspiracy.

The Bandido club, which has some of its strongest chapters in Texas, now has between 250 and 350 members across the country, federal officials told The Dallas Morning News.

The Bandidos sentenced to five years are: Joe Edward Benavides of Lubbock; Dale Lynn Brewer of Reseda, Calif.; Franklin D. Schmick of Lubbock; Danny Franklin Johnson of Lubbock; Crandle Phillip Lamonte Presnel of Brazoria County; and Glen Alan Wilhelm of Nederland, Texas.

Southmark to sell part of realty firm

DALLAS (AP) — Southmark Corp. will sell part of its ownership in American Realty Trust Inc. to the real estate investment trust in an effort to raise cash.

Southmark will be released from guaranteeing about $115 million in mortgages held by American Realty Trust, which is an affiliate of Dallas-based Southmark.

In addition to raising cash for liquidity-strapped Southmark, the transaction further concentrates control of American Realty Trust in the hands of former Southmark top executives Gene Phillips and William Friedman, and eliminates a major potential obligation for Southmark.

Susan Seiter, Southmark spokeswoman, said Friday the transactions also give Southmark a stake in $36.2 million worth of mortgage receivables held by American Realty Trust and an additional $12 million from the sale of Southmark-held mortgages to American Realty Trust.

Susan Seiter, a company spokeswoman, said Southmark's liquidity problems were not a major factor in the transaction.

Police chief steps down

CLEVELAND, Texas (AP) — Police Chief Harley Lovings, who has been under fire since a drug informant died in the city jail last year, resigned from the post he has held for 15 years.

Lovings did not discuss his reasons for stepping down as police chief, but Cleveland Mayor Richard Boyett said "a lot of" Lovings' problems began when Kenneth Earl Simpson was found dead last March 16.

"It seemed that department as a whole never got over that thing," Boyett said Friday. "He (Lovings) couldn't pull it together."

Lovings, 57, submitted his resignation to the city council Thursday. He was just three years short of early retirement.

Simpson, a 30-year-old unemployed construction worker and occasional drug informant, was found dead in his cell the morning after he was involved in a fight with police officers at the jail. Officials have ruled he died from asphyxiation due to trauma to his neck.

The fight broke out when police officers tried to search Simpson after he was caught smoking marijuana in the cell, authorities said. His death sparked several protests from the black community in Cleveland, which is about 30 miles north of Houston.

Insurance fund empty

HOUSTON (AP) — The embattled North Forest Independent School District is facing a nearly empty health insurance fund and unpaid January bills just five months into the fiscal year, school officials said.

The $1.5 million budgeted for the self-funded insurance program by school board trustees last summer is gone, leaving only about $300,000 in employee contributions, officials said Friday.

"We're getting to the danger point, although it's evidently not such an emergency that it can't wait another week," school district trustee Edward King said. "We'll have to come up with the money some place."

School board members plan to hold a special meeting this week to determine what caused the problem and to find a solution.

The issue is the latest in a string of troubles for the financially strapped district, which is under investigation by a Harris County grand jury and the FBI for possible misuse of district money.

More school funds urged

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas should spend $1.2 billion more in the next two years on public education and work toward reaching the national average in public school funding over six years, the State Board of Education said Saturday.

"I think it's absolutely essential that it pass (the Legislature). Otherwise, the public schools and education are going to be in serious trouble," said board member Will Davis of Austin.

The Texas public school funding system relies on a combination of local property taxes and state funds, and some money is contributed by the federal government. The system is being challenged in court by property-poor districts, which have a more difficult time raising money through local taxes.

By 1995, the equity level of the the public school finance program should be raised from 70 percent to 95 percent, said the school finance reform resolution approved unanimously by the board.

That means 95 percent of students would be "getting adequate funding for a minimum quality education," said Davis, who heads the board's school finance committee.

Man arrested in slaying

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — A man wanted by Dallas police in a 1986 slaying has been arrested in Manassas, police said.

Edward Hernandez was arrested at 4:30 a.m. Friday by Manassas police on an outstanding warrant of failing to appear in court to face charges of driving with a revoked license and reckless driving.

Further investigation showed that Dallas police had a warrant for the arrest of Hernandez in the Jan. 25, 1986, stabbing death of Arthur Vasquez, 26, of Dallas.

Dallas police Detective Stan McNear is to arrive in Manassas Monday to question Hernandez.

Skyscraper evacuees apparently not exposed to asbestos

HOUSTON (AP) — Skyscraper tenants forced to evacuate their building when a fire broke on an empty floor apparently were not exposed to high levels of the carcinogen asbestos as was earlier feared, health officials said.

Air samplings from One Allen Center showed that the highest asbestos levels were well within federal safety guidelines, representatives of the Houston health department and the Texas Department of Health said Friday.

A fire broke out Tuesday afternoon in the 34-story building in downtown Houston on the fourth floor where workers were removing asbestos. The fire was contained in less than an hour and caused no injuries, but the smoke funneled quickly up through every floor — carrying the tiny fibers to several locations throughout the building.

Employees of the building's tenants reported choking on the smoke as they evacuated.

Stephen A. Flannigan, occupational health chief for Houston, said Friday that more test results within the next few days will determine how many floors actually sustained contamination.

But Raymond V. Kotowski, asbestos licensing administrator for the Texas health department, said contamination levels are not serious and should not be "detrimental to human health."

Medical evidence shows that exposure to asbestos increases the risk of lung cancer and pulmonary diseases. Research indicates that asbestos-related health problems don't become evident until about 20 years after exposure.

One Allen Center has been closed so the asbestos fibers can be removed, and the skyscraper's occupants have had to find other places to work. Two of the tenants obtained a temporary court order Friday that will permit them access to their offices at their own risk.

The office building's owner, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., and management firm, Century Development Corp., were ordered by visiting state District Judge Juan Gallardo to provide information about the contamination levels so that Pelto Oil Co. and Total American Mining Inc. could could prepare to safely enter the space.

Tenants entering the building are required to wear protective clothing and must be accompanied by asbestos abatement experts, said Glenn Ballard, attorney for Pelto and Total.

Steven Cates, vice president of real estate investments at Metropolitan Life, said the restraining order was the product of a misunderstanding.

"The tenants could have been allowed to do what they wanted to do without a court order," Cates said.

Century Development has been sending workers in protective clothing into the building to retrieve personal belongings and business materials for tenants, but Pelto and Total wanted to send in some of their own employees so they could get critical business documents, Ballard said.

Woman in coma described as outgoing, model mother

By PAT MILTON

UPPER BROOKVILLE, N.Y. (AP) — To the public, Nancy Klein is a silent victim, a comatose woman who was at the center of a highly publicized legal whirlwind over whether her husband could order an abortion.

But to her friends and family she is outgoing, a fashion designer, a gourmet cook, a model mother who wouldn't welcome the publicity.

"It's very frustrating not being able to tell Nancy about all of this," said her husband, Martin, as he tried to avoid hordes of television camera crews and reporters outside court. "She just wouldn't believe this."

Nancy Klein, 32, lost consciousness on Dec. 13 when her car skidded on snow and was struck by an oncoming car. She suffered massive brain damage.

NATION

Doctors told her husband of nine years, a 34-year-old accountant, that she stood a better chance of surviving if the fetus she was carrying was aborted. Klein went to court to be named her guardian so he could arrange an abortion.

Guardianship was granted, but abortion opponents challenged the ruling, delaying the procedure by appeals. On Friday, the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, refused to hear the case and U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall did the same.

Early Saturday, the abortion was performed on Mrs. Klein, who friends said would be mortified if she knew of the attention paid to her case.

"We were uncomfortable at first going to her hospital room when we heard she was in the accident," said Nat Borg, a close friend. "We knew she would be embarrassed to have people see her that way."

She was described as the first to help out, slow to anger, an eager hostess.

"You could drop in for a surprise visit at 11 o'clock at night," Borg recalls. "Nancy would pull out an unbelievable spread of food from the refrigerator — gourmet dishes which she had made herself."

Nancy Klein worked as a freelance textile designer, designing embroidered patterns. Most of her designs were for expensive silk blouses made by major manufacturers.

"It's very frustrating not being able to tell Nancy about all of this. She just wouldn't believe this."
—Martin Klein

Mostly, she spent time with the couple's 3-year-old daughter, Arielle.

"They would bake brownies and sit for hours together in Nancy's art studio drawing puppets and pictures," said a friend, Jodie Kleinman.

"She would dress Arielle up in outfits that she'd make prettier by painting pictures on a blouse or sticking rhinestone designs on," she said.

She cooks — "quiches, breads, pastry — everything was made from scratch," said Mrs. Kleinman — and decorates the family home.

She sends balloons to friends on birthdays, devises ways to cheer others when they are down.

Last year, as a birthday present for Jodie Kleinman's husband, Alan, Mrs. Klein took him breakfast in bed.

"We couldn't believe it," Mrs. Kleinman said. "She came with Arielle real early in the morning with a beautifully decorated tray with an outrageous feast she had prepared."

Her friends wish they could turn the clock back, Borg said.

"She was so full of life," Mrs. Kleinman said.

Comatose woman gets abortion

MANHASSET, N.Y. (AP) — A comatose woman on Saturday underwent an abortion ordered by her husband in hopes of saving her life, ending a two-week legal fight with anti-abortionists that reached the U.S. Supreme Court.

Klein

"It's been a major battle. I am tired and wounded. I want to go on with my life," Martin Klein said shortly after his wife's abortion. "No other family should ever have to go through what we have gone through."

Nancy Klein, 32, remained comatose and was listed in guarded condition after the abortion but her vital signs were stable, said spokeswoman Carol Hauptman of North Shore University Hospital. A team of doctors, including an expert on second-trimester abortions, handled the procedure, she said. Mrs. Klein was 18 weeks pregnant.

"We have one other hurdle to overcome, and that is Nancy's recovery," Klein said. "I will live with this decision, but the decision had to be mine."

Mrs. Klein has been in a coma at the hospital since a Dec. 13 car accident.

Klein said doctors told him that terminating his wife's pregnancy could give her a better chance of recovering, so he asked a judge on Jan. 26 to declare him her legal guardian so he could authorize the abortion.

Although a judge granted Klein's request, the ruling was challenged by right-to-life advocates who appealed the decision at each court level until U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall rejected their stay request Friday.

Klein, 34, of Upper Brookville on Long Island, quickly approved the abortion and the procedure was completed Saturday morning.

Although medical experts testified on Klein's behalf that the abortion could help his wife's recovery, Ms. Hauptman said it was unclear what effect the abortion would have on Mrs. Klein.

The two anti-abortionists, who had sought to be named Mrs. Klein's guardian themselves, said an abortion would threaten her emotional well-being.

Abortions have been performed before on comatose pregnant women, but never involving the same type of injury or coma, Ms. Hauptman said.

"This is not only landmark legal terrain but also medical. There's nothing in the medical literature like this," Ms. Hauptman said.

The operation ended two weeks of strain for Klein and his family.

"We are extremely relieved that the court battle is over and the operation went smoothly," said Anne Zusselman of Del Ray Beach, Fla., Mrs. Klein's mother.

"Now we are hopeful that Nancy's condition will improve and that we can move on to therapy for her," Mrs. Zusselman added. She and her husband visit their daughter daily at the hospital.

Pro-choice advocate Bill Baird said the case was not about abortion rights.

"This was an issue of husband and family rights, not abortion," Baird said. "It's a pity this family had to go through the pain and the suffering."

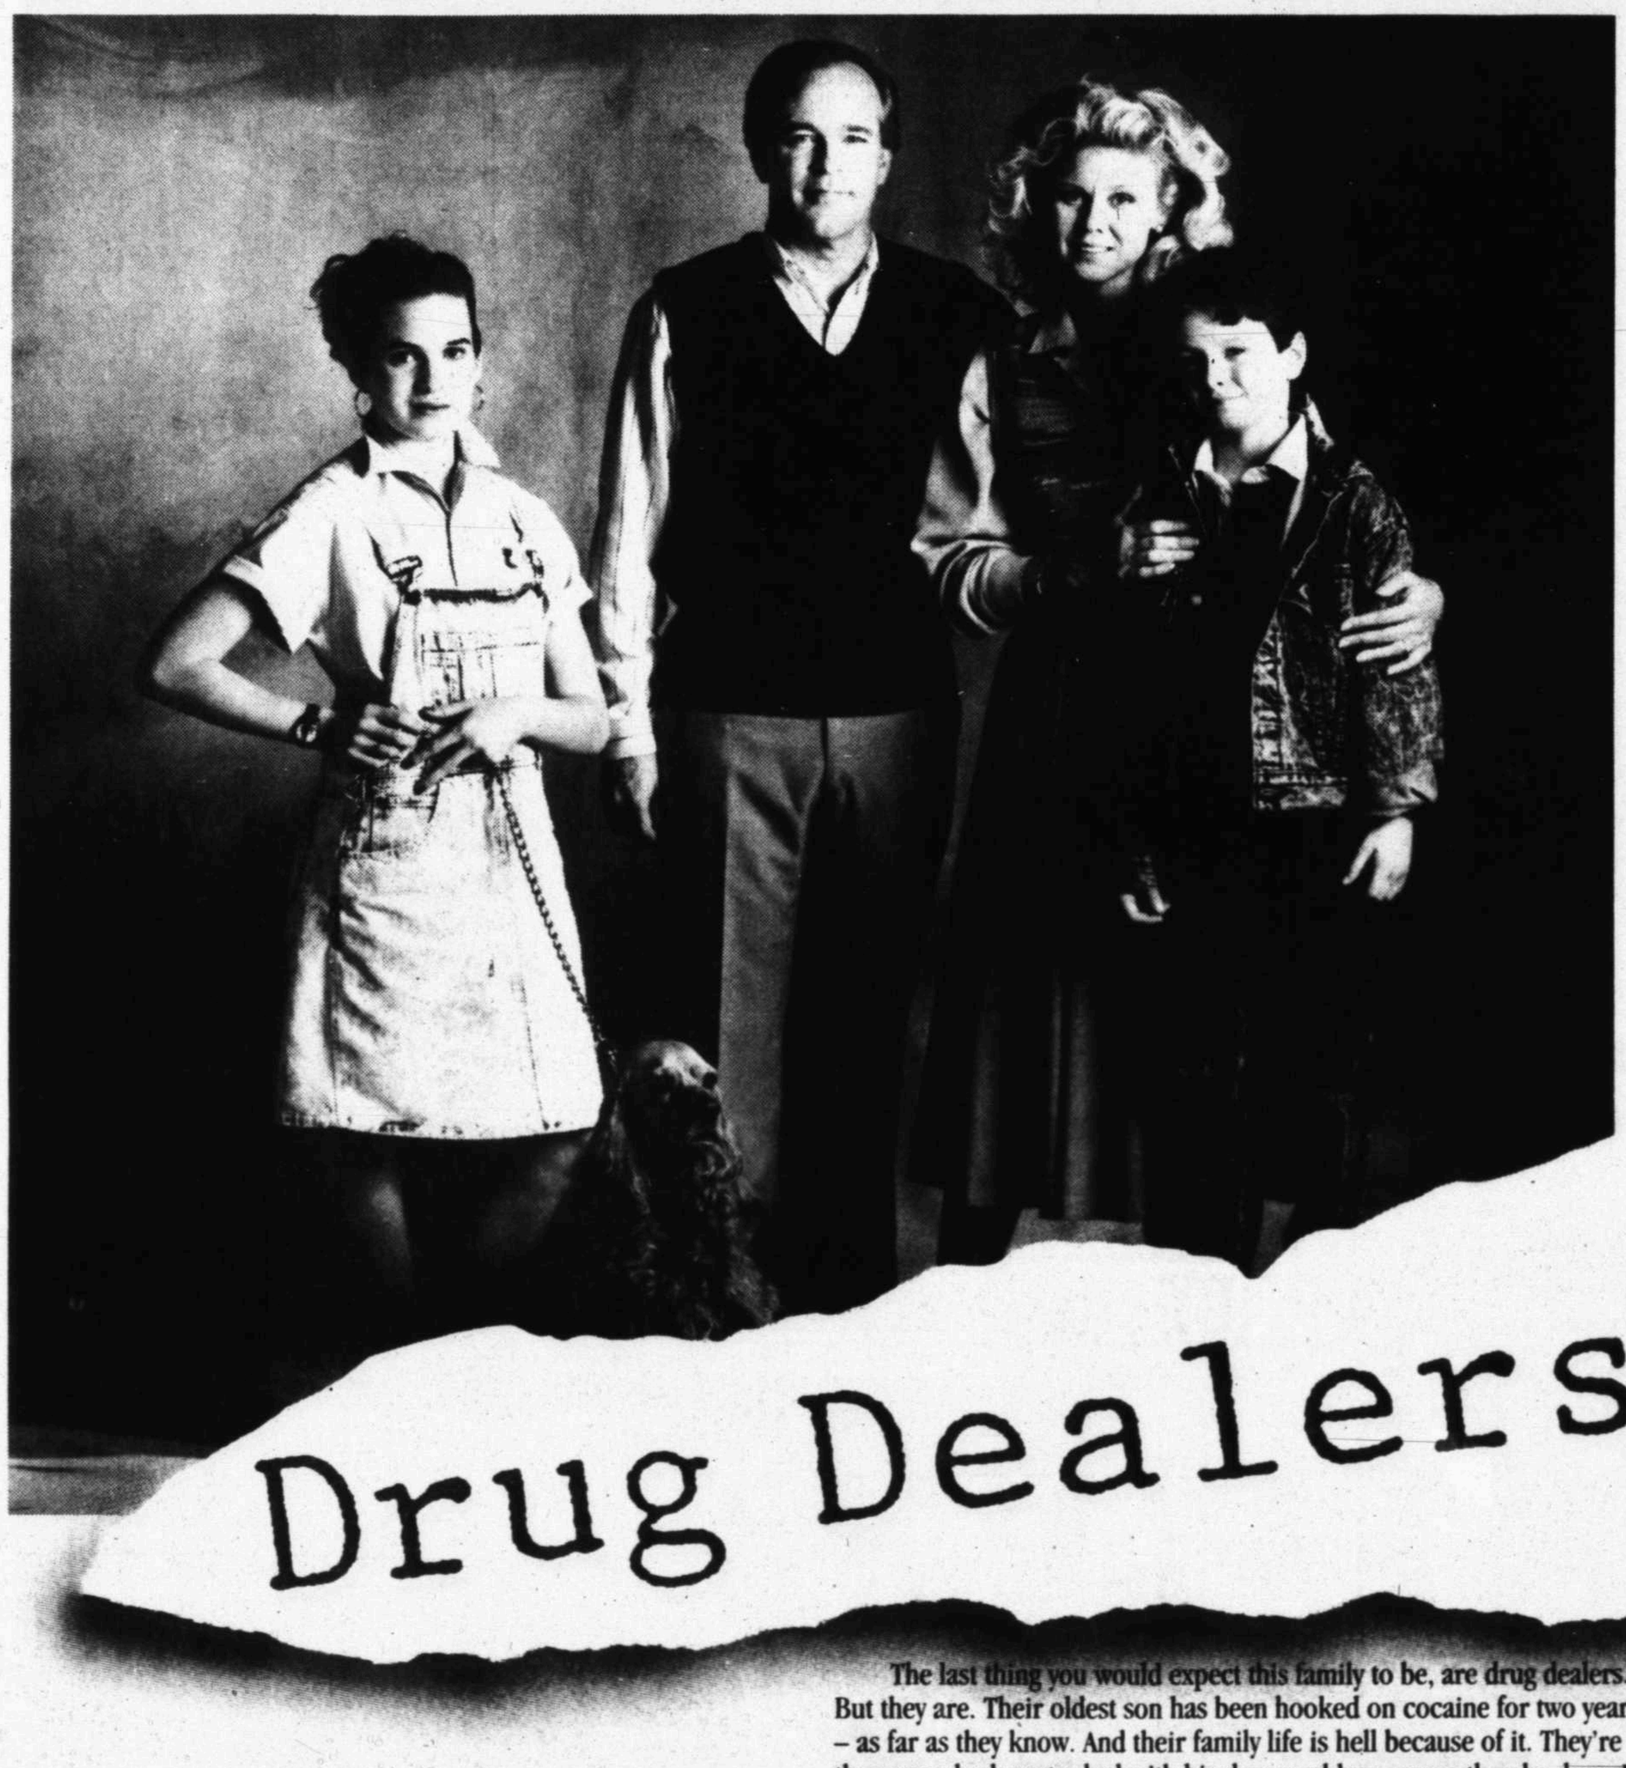

Baird suggested Klein sue anti-abortion activists John Short of Farmingdale and John Broderick of Syosset for the anguish their extended legal efforts caused, but Klein said it was too soon to consider such a case.

"This is the most tragic thing that ever could have happened," Short said Saturday afternoon. "We tried very hard up to the last second. We had a person standing on a phone at the hospital and one standing at a phone in Washington, but we couldn't do it."

Short vowed to work to persuade the full U.S. Supreme Court to hear the case in an effort to prevent such cases from happening again.

A half-dozen activists supporting a woman's right to choose an abortion carried placards outside the hospital, including one that read: "Right to Life — Your name is a lie. You were willing to let Nancy die."

Several Nassau County police cars were stationed at the hospital in case anti-abortion activists staged any protest, but none showed up.

The last thing you would expect this family to be, are drug dealers. But they are. Their oldest son has been hooked on cocaine for two years – as far as they know. And their family life is hell because of it. They're the ones who have to deal with his drug problem...more than he does. He gets all their attention – and they get all the pain. They have a right to be resentful. But what they are is Co-Dependent to his emotional problem – but they still love him.

Co-Dependency is a lifestyle in which a family's self-esteem and validity is determined by pleasing or living for others. With proper attention, they can reaffirm their family identity and enjoy a fuller, more rewarding life...for themselves and their family.

Clearview, a fully accredited leader in chemical dependency and family treatment for over 3 years, has begun a program to help find the answers to Co-Dependency and restore intimacy in the normal family relationship. If you, or someone you know, could be dealing with Co-Dependency, call Reese Carroll at Clearview for information. Just call 697-5200 or 561-5200. The program works and you can finally be free.

Co-Dependency sessions begin February 24.

Will Tower resign from nomination?

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The stalemate over John Tower's Senate confirmation as defense secretary is stirring speculation that he may withdraw from consideration and that his successor for the nomination will be a former occupant of the powerful post.

Tower

Senate Republicans and senior White House officials are using an 11-day Senate recess that began Friday to try to stem the erosion of support for the Texas Republican among Democratic members of the influential Senate Armed Services Committee. A showdown on Tower's nomination is expected within the 20-member panel shortly after the Senate returns to work on Feb. 21.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation expects by then to have completed yet another field investigation prompted by fresh allegations including alcoholism, womanizing and possible conflicts of interest. was a $25,000-a-month defense consultant.

Tower, 63, a former chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee turned $25,000-a-month defense consultant, had expected wholehearted support from his former colleagues on the committee. Instead, the new allegations and White House maneuvering to speed confirmation have sparked a partisan backlash in the clubby Senate.

Now even supporters concede that discussion of possible replacements has begun in administration and congressional circles.

Should a replacement be necessary, said a Republican supporter of Tower, "I think that it would be somebody who has the previous experience (in defense) so that person could hit the ground running."

Among those most prominently mentioned is Donald Rumsfeld, 56, a graduate of Princeton University and former Illinois congressman who served in the White House under President Ford before being named defense secretary from 1975 to 1977.

Rumsfeld has wide management experience, having served as chief executive officer of the drug giant G.D. Searle & Co., from 1977 to 1985. He also has credentials as a troubleshooter after his brief stint as President Reagan's special envoy in the Middle East.

Rumsfeld's candidacy may be impaired, however, because of Bush's suspicions that the former Ford aide masterminded job changes in the mid-1970s that kept Bush from being chosen as vice presidential candidate with Ford in 1976 — a political opportunity that went instead to Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan.

Also mentioned as a possible Pentagon chief is James R. Schlesinger, 59, a Harvard-educated economist who served as chairman of the old Atomic Energy Commission, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, defense secretary and energy secretary under three presidents in the 1970s. Schlesinger was passed over for the post of energy secretary by Bush in December.

To avert the need for a new candidate, the White House enlisted Vice President Dan Quayle late last week to help assure key senators that Bush was holding firm. In Palm Beach, Fla., to deliver a speech Friday, Quayle emphasized: "There is absolutely no reason he (Tower) should not be confirmed."

Tower's backers predict that the Senate recess, with members of Congress returning to their districts, will help alleviate some of the pressure on Tower to withdraw. Said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.: "I would expect that with all of us back home or junketing, there's not quite the concentration and the focus that there has been."

Judge facing impeachment hits road seeking support

MIAMI (AP) — U.S. District Judge Alcee L. Hastings, his impeachment trial in the U.S. Senate near, has been on the road trying to rally support for what he concedes is a come-from-behind effort.

"I have an uphill battle, all the way ...," Hastings told listeners on a Miami radio station talk show last week. "It's going to be very difficult for me to extricate myself from this. History demands that I try."

It was typical of the speaking appearances he's been making each week on radio shows and at churches, colleges and civil rights groups.

With his Senate trial expected to begin as early as mid-March, Hastings, 52, has been urging listeners to write their senators to express interest in his case and contribute to his legal defense fund.

Although the judge is often warmly received, he has raised only $4,000. He unsuccessfully asked for government help for his defense expenses, saying the Justice Department has spent $2 million for "a witch hunt" or "fishing expedition" against him.

Hastings became the first black federal judge from Florida when he was appointed by then-President Carter in 1979.

He marked another, less happy first last August when he became the only person ever to be impeached after he was already cleared of similar charges in a criminal trial. The House vote to impeach, or send the case to the Senate for trial, was 413-3.

He is accused of conspiring with a former friend, attorney William A. Borders, to reduce a sentence of two convicted racketeers, and of lying and fabricating his defense during his 1983 criminal trial. Though Hastings was acquitted in that trial, Borders was convicted of bribery conspiracy in a separate trial.

Last month, the Senate Rules Committee dealt Hastings another setback by deciding his trial would be largely conducted by a 12-member special committee before the full Senate votes on whether to convict.

'Fast lane' lifestyle leads to teen's arrest

GRESHAM, Ore. (AP) — It was the $2,500 watch and the $13,000 Mustang that put authorities on the trail of 18-year-old Frank Riley Wolsky.

Investigators say the high school senior attended school regularly while running a cocaine business on the side and spending thousands of dollars on cars, clothes and jewelry.

The teen-ager's fast-lane lifestyle came to a halt Jan. 18 as he prepared to go to school in this suburb east of Portland. Undercover police surrounded his car and arrested him on charges of possession and delivery of a controlled substance.

Officers found 4 ounces of cocaine, five firearms and $18,000 in cash. Also seized was a Chevrolet Corvette, customized Ford Mustang and a Chevrolet Blazer.

In November 1987, when he was 16, Wolsky was arrested on a drug-possession charge. His mother, Myra Wolsky, told authorities at the time she thought he was a dealer, but the possession case never went to trial.

The Regional Organized Crime Task Force, an interagency law enforcement group, began investigating Wolsky in earnest last year after parents and businessmen told police about his spending sprees, said investigator Bob Peterson.

Reports of an $1,800 clothes buying trip and the purchase of the $2,500 watch crossed detectives' desks.

"We began looking at his activities and found that he was purchasing vehicles for cash," Peterson said. "He purchased a 1986 Mustang on Sept. 24, 10 days after his 18th birthday, for $13,000 cash.

"He moved into a $1,000-a-month apartment on Aug. 8. We looked at cash expenditures of $25,000 over a one-month period," he said.

Peterson said Wolsky did most of his business from his third-floor apartment at Johns Landing, a trendy section of Portland a world away from Gresham.

Wolsky didn't use drugs himself, maintained a low profile at the apartment and was known as a "nice guy" at school, Peterson said.

"Four or five primary customers of Wolsky's were the only ones who came to the apartment," Peterson said. "There were no wild parties."

Investigators believe Wolsky was a relatively small-scale dealer until he met Narcisa L. Savinovich, who was at the time free pending appeal after being sentenced to five years in prison for selling cocaine. The night before his arrest last month, Wolsky stopped at the 26-year-old woman's house and emerged with two paper bags, Peterson said.

Savinovich was arrested, indicted on new drug charges, and immediately began serving her previously imposed sentence.

1989 deficit expected to be $170 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The unveiling of President Bush's 1990 spending plan focuses the budget spotlight on the coming fiscal year — just as the deficit figures for this year are getting more and more embarrassing.

The imbalance is not only expanding like a wet blot of red ink on a piece of paper. But once again — as has happened every year since the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law was passed in 1985 — the actual deficit is going to be far higher than the deficit ceiling the legislation sets.

The budget Bush presented to Congress for fiscal 1990 last Thursday revealed that the administration now expects the 1989 deficit to be $170.2 billion. Less than four months ago, the outgoing Reagan administration forecast that the imbalance would be $145.5 billion — $500 million below the $146 billion target set in the Gramm-Rudman law.

"It's a co-conspiracy between Congress and the administration," says Rudolph G. Penner, former director of the Congressional Budget Office. "And it's hard to think of any other word to describe it than dishonest."

Penner, now a senior fellow at The Urban Institute in Washington, was referring to the process set in law that is designed to force Congress and the White House to reduce the federal deficit.

Lawmakers and the president spend most of each year dueling with each other over the budget, with much of their battling devoted to deciding how they will produce a spending plan that meets the deficit target of the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law.

Every year, the smoke clears in the fall or winter to reveal an agreement in which the projected red ink falls just within the deficit target. And the awesome hammer of the law — forced spending cuts on domestic and defense programs, totaling billions of dollars — is avoided.

But the key word here is "projected." The Gramm-Rudman law is a process that deals with the projected deficit for the coming year, setting declining ceilings for each year until the budget is supposed to be balanced in 1993.

If the final projection for each fiscal year — made in mid-October, two weeks into that year — falls within the target, the automatic cuts are avoided.

But once the projected deficit is certified as falling within the target, the law's machinery grinds to a halt. The law sets no consequences if the actual deficit at the end of the year turns out to be higher than the Gramm-Rudman target.

Budget experts say the deficit projections are off because of the difficulties of predicting how the economy will perform and how quickly some programs will spend money.

They say that in addition, the economic forecasts used are optimistic and thus underestimate the magnitude of the shortfall. After all, it's easier to pronounce the deficit smaller than it is to say it is larger and then have to enact spending cuts and tax increases to shrink it.

"They're avoiding political pain," said Stanley Collender, who oversees budget policy for the Price Waterhouse accounting firm.

Some say the way Congress and the White House focus each year on deficit projections is such a charade that the press is partially to blame for paying so much attention to it.

"We're all a little surprised that you all report that in such a straight-faced manner," says Carol Cox, president of the bipartisan watchdog group, The Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget.

Experts are divided over just how significant it is that the target is consistently missed.

Some, like Penner, say it is deceptive and postpones true deficit-reduction decisions. Others, like Collender, say a deficit difference of a few billion dollars in a $5 trillion economy is relatively harmless.

Following are the deficit targets for each fiscal year since Gramm-Rudman took effect, and the actual deficits that occurred:

- 1986: target $171.9 billion, deficit $221 billion.
- 1987: target $144 billion, deficit $150.4 billion.
- 1988: target $144 billion, deficit $155 billion.

Only in 1986 were automatic spending cuts triggered by the Gramm-Rudman law.

Justice asks Supreme Court to delay trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department asked the Supreme Court on Saturday to delay former White House aide Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial, citing a danger he would divulge too many national security secrets.

"Proceeding with the trial on those terms will make it impossible for the attorney general to fulfill his responsibility to safeguard classified information," the department said in asking for a stay.

Independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, who is prosecuting North, urged the Supreme Court to reject the Justice Department's request, saying the department has no legal authority to seek a delay.

Walsh said the attorney general "comes before this court in an attempt to assume a role that the Ethics in Government Act and his own Independent Counsel Regulation deny him: that of prosecutor in this case."

The independent counsel called the Justice Department request an "eleventh-hour application" and said the department "has sought to interfere in this trial at the final hour."

A jury was chosen Thursday in North's trial on 12 felony charges stemming from the Iran-Contra affair, and U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell has asked the jurors to report to the courtroom Monday.

Tampa police hogtie

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Police say they will continue hogtying unruly prisoners even though the restraining technique contributed to the death of a black drug suspect in police custody, triggering two nights of racial violence.

Many law enforcement agencies use the same technique cited in the death last week of Edgar Allen Price, 40, but some of the nation's largest police agencies have found alternatives.

Price fought with police, who handcuffed him and tied his wrists to his ankles behind his back before placing him face down in the back of a police cruiser Feb. 1.

The 6-foot-3, 296-pound Houston man suffocated because of the combination of his weight, exhaustion and his position in the rear seat, Dr. Charles Diggs, associate Hillsborough County medical examiner, concluded in an autopsy report released Friday.

"Under normal circumstances, this method of binding an individual to prevent injury to others is relatively innocuous," Diggs wrote in a news release.

Price's arrest and death ignited two nights of civil unrest in the predominantly black College Hill public housing project. Five officers were injured and 11 people were arrested. week.

Marcos suffers relapse

HONOLULU (AP) — Former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos was in critical but stable condition Saturday after suffering a relapse in his bout with pneumonia and bronchial asthma, hospital officials said.

Marcos, 71, had been in guarded condition Friday, but began running a fever, said Norma Kop, a spokeswoman for St. Francis Medical Center where Marcos has been confined since Jan. 19.

Marcos remained in the hospital's intensive care unit and was still breathing with the aid of a respirator, according to a statement issued Saturday morning.

Marcos' worsened condition "means there is infection again," said Gemmo Trinidad, a Marcos family spokesman. "I would suspect it's the lungs because of the tracheostomy."

A tracheostomy, a surgical incision in the trachea, was done Feb. 1 to relieve a buildup of fluid in Marcos' lungs.

Ledger shows poachings

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — A man who has pleaded guilty to wild animal poaching charges kept a ledger that shows he netted about $600,000 from the illegal slaughter of hundreds of animals, including bald eagles, officials said.

The ledger taken from the home of Ralph J. Jackson in Sequim indicates he poached at least 25 bald eagles and hundreds of other wild animals, Ron Perregrin of the state Department of Wildlife said at a news conference Friday.

Jackson, 38, was charged with poaching 13 elk in late September after an anonymous caller told officials Jackson had an illegally obtained polar bear skin, Perregrin said.

Investigators never found the polar bear skin, but they discovered illegally obtained elk and deer, and the ledger, Perregrin said.

Sales listed in the ledger over 3½ years include 25 eagles sold for $512,650, 135 elk for $28,500, 286 deer for $24,270, 18 native cats for $15,150, 12 seals for $14,500 and nine hawks for $2,775.

The ledger also listed purchasers and the investigation continues, Perregrin said.

Federal authorities arrested Jackson in October after he threatened the lives of a witness in the eagle transactions and several investigating officers and their families, Perregrin said.

Pomp and ceremony surrounds consecreation of first female bishop

BOSTON (AP) — The Rev. Barbara Harris, with the voices of dissidents overwhelmed by cheers from thousands of fellow Episcopalians, on Saturday became the first woman elevated to bishop in a 2,000-year succession dating back to the apostles.

Harris was greeted with a roar of approval from about 8,000 people when she walked down the aisle for a consecration that has drawn world attention because of her gender, background and liberal views.

She was faulted by a conservative church member who said in a brief speech that her elevation would be a sacrilege. But when the chief consecrator, the Most Rev. Edmond Browning, asked the congregation if it was their will that Harris be ordained, they thundered out: "That is our will."

"I will obey Christ and serve in his name," Harris said.

"Men and women now stand together before God, in today's world, a world that needs that," First Bishop David Johnson of the Boston Episcopal Diocese said before the consecration, held in a convention center to accommodate the crowd.

After the ceremony, she said she would try to reach out to her opponents and others to try to allay their fears. "We will be in contact. We will do that to the best of our abilities," she said.

"Just say I'm very proud and very happy. That's all," said Harris' mother, Beatrice Harris.

S&Ls raises interest in ampersand

WASHINGTON (AP) — Say what you will it about the savings and loan crisis, it has done wonders for the ampersand.

Vaguely old fashioned, the ampersand — that curly little symbol that stands for "and" — seemed to be in a decline until the financial difficulties of the S&L industry put it on every front page. For some reason, S&Ls are always abbreviated with an ampersand, just as superbowls are numbered with Roman numerals.

Like everything else, the ampersand has a history. According to Robert Hendrickson, who wrote the Encyclopedia of Word and Phrase Origins, it was invented by Marcus Tiro, a freed slave and secretary to Cicero, a Roman statesman, orator and author.

Tiro's job was taking down Cicero's dictation. Cicero talked fast, so Tiro created the first known system of shorthand, including the ampersand. Tiro's "Tironian Notes" saw wide use in Europe for nearly a thousand years.

The & itself was just a quick way of writing "et," which means "and" in Latin. The name "ampersand" is a corruption of the term "and per se and," which means "as follows."

The Harper Dictionary of Contemporary Usage by William Morris and Mary Morris laments the tendency of corporations to go modern and abandon their ampersands.

The Morrises note that the ad firm of Batten, Barton, Durstin & Osborne switched to simply Batten, Barton, Durstin, Osborne, dropping the ampersand and losing "part of the charm which led Heywood Broun to say that the corporate name sounded to him like 'a beer barrel rolling down a flight of steps.'"

In any event, the Morrises, getting down to business, decree that the ampersand is to be avoided "in writing of formal or semiformal nature, save for the most impromptu personal notes."

However, the ampersand may be staging a corporate comeback, even without te S&L crisis' spur of conspicuousness, says Rick Bragdon, senior vice president in the San Francisco firm which does "name development" for companies changing their images.

He said after stiff debate during a yearlong "identity program" for Pacific Gas and Electric, it was decided to abandon the "and" in "PG and E," its old symbol, in favor of "PG&E."

"We had to resolve once and for all how to represent 'and,'" Bragdon said.

Iran-based Shiite rebels seek major role in Afghanistan

WORLD

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan Shiite Moslem guerrillas supported by Iran are demanding a major voice in the future of Afghanistan, despite opposition from more powerful, rival Sunni guerrilla groups.

Iran's revolutionary Shiite government wants to use the Afghan Shiites to exert influence in neighboring Afghanistan and try to block the influence of the United States and Pakistan, according to Afghan analysts.

"Iran wants to play the Shiite card in Afghanistan," said a senior independent guerrilla official, who declined to be named.

The United States and Pakistan have backed the Pakistan-based Sunni groups who have been battling the Afghan government nearly a decade.

Shiite guerrilla leaders pulled out Friday from a meeting of Afghan guerrilla leaders in Islamabad , which was held to try to form an interim government to replace Afghanistan's tottering communist regime.

Sunni Afghan guerrilla groups refused to recognize an earlier agreement to seat 100 Shiite representatives at the council because they wanted to reduce the number of Shiite delegates.

Eight Shiite Afghan guerrilla organizations are based in Iran, but little is known about them. The groups are armed, supplied and trained by Iran and appear to be under Iranian control.

Seven Sunni Afghan guerrilla groups are based in Pakistan with headquarters in the frontier city of Peshawar. But the much larger Sunni groups are not based primarily on religious loyalties.

Occasional reports of friction and clashes between Sunni and Shiite guerrillas have come out of Afghanistan.

Iranian Revolutionary Guards reportedly have operated at times in Shiite areas of Afghanistan, aiding the Iranian-based guerrillas against conservative Shiites who oppose Tehran's revolutionary fundamentalism.

Mohammad Karim Khalili, chairman of the alliance of the Iranian based groups, said the groups are not primarily promoted by Shiite loyalties despite their religious base. The Shiite groups, he said, are only seeking equal rights for all religious and ethnic groups and an end to discrimination they suffered in the past.

"We want an Islamic government in Afghanistan, it must be independent and it must be non-aligned," he said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Shiites were discriminated against by past Sunni-dominated Afghan governments before the Communists seized power in 1978.

Najib accuses Pakistan of invasion plans

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — President Najib on Saturday accused Pakistan of massing troops along the border in preparation for an invasion and eventual annexation of Afghanistan.

In a speech broadcast on national radio and television, Najib said his government had received information Pakistan planned first to attack Jalalabad, about 80 miles east of Kabul and 50 miles west of the Pakistan border.

"Militarist and reactionary parties envisage swallowing our country and turning it into a fifth province of Pakistan," the president said in his strongest attack yet on Afghanistan's neighbor.

Pakistan has allowed Moslem guerrillas fighting Najib's Soviet-backed government to operate from Pakistan.

Pakistan, the United States and Iran have supported the guerrillas, who began fighting in 1978 after the communists took power in a coup. In 1979, the Soviets sent troops into Afghanistan to prop up the pro-Marxist government.

Under a U.N.-mediated accord, all Soviet troops must be withdrawn by Wednesday. Radio Moscow reported Saturday the last motorized army unit was within 125 miles of the Soviet border.

The guerrillas are not party to the U.N. accord and want to overthrow Najib's government when the Soviets are gone.

With the withdrawal deadline approaching, Najib exhorted the Afghan people to protect their nation's sovereignty.

"Say in one voice: 'Country or death,'" he said.

He also accused the Pakistani military of controlling the guerrillas.

In Islamabad, Pakistan, there appeared to be no end to the bitter disputes among guerrilla factions over the composition of a provisional Islamic government they want to form.

At issue is how power would be shared by the seven insurgent groups in Pakistan and the eight factions based in Iran.

On Friday, 526 guerrillas and other Afghans met as a council to decide the matter but the Iranian-based alliance walked out.

Canadians want specifics on Bush's promise on acid rain

OTTAWA (AP) — Running under Canadian satisfaction with President Bush's promise to act on acid rain is a bitter current that says, "It's about time."

There also is considerable reluctance to get too complacent until specifics of Bush's program are known.

On Bush's first trip outside the United States since his inauguration, he promised Friday to move quickly with congressional legislation to control acid rain.

He also said after his meetings with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney that the United States would move toward discussions with Canada for an accord on the controversial issue.

"The president's comments on the subject mark a small step forward in the longstanding environmental dispute between the two countries," The Globe and Mail newspaper wrote Saturday.

"However, without an exact U.S. timetable for the discussions, or commitments on the amount or timing of any cuts on transborder air pollution, Canada may still have to wait years before there is tangible relief on the issue," the Toronto daily wrote in front-page coverage of the visit.

Canadian concern about the acid rain, blamed for killing some 14,000 lakes in the eastern part of the country and defoliating millions of acres of forests, has been a dominant issue in relations with the United States for the past decade.

One of Bush's two official visits to Canada as vice president was in January 1987, when he came to Ottawa to hear Mulroney's complaints that the United States was holding back on acid rain cleanup.

Frustration grew in Canada during the eight years of the Reagan administration, when the pomp of summit meetings produced virtually no results on the issue.

For example, the Reagan administration did not once propose legislation to strengthen the U.S. federal Clean Air Act.

More than half the acid rain in eastern Canada comes from the United States, and in some areas U.S. emissions of sulphur dioxide and other materials cause 70 percent of acid fallout, according to the Canadian government.

The program to control Canadian emissions takes full effect in 1994.

"I think Mr. Bush's approach is a 180-degree reversal in U.S. policy," said Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain lobbying group.

He told reporters that while Reagan did not even recognize acid rain as a problem, the situation now is that "we've got the right principle, the right approach."

Perley also said the specific amount of emissions to be cut and the timetable for doing so are critical.

Senior Canadian diplomatic officials, speaking on condition they not be further identified, said they understand Bush's need to outline the specifics to Congress first.

At a joint news conference with Bush, Mulroney said the president's position "represents quite substantial progress. You know, it wasn't so long ago that Canada was sort of going it alone in many ways in this area."

Bush said he assured Mulroney "that the time for just pure study was over and that we've now approached the time for legislative action."

The United States apparently would be willing to start talks for the bilateral agreement Canada long has sought on acid rain after the legislation is moving forward, possibly as early as this year.

Environmental concerns ran strong among Canadian voters polled during the campaign last fall that returned Mulroney's Progressive Conservative Party for a second consecutive majority government.

Indeed, Barbara Bush was reminded by a reporter as she toured the National Gallery of Canada that lakes portrayed in the paintings she was seeing were endangered by acid rain.

Pakistani prime minister vows close ties with China

BEIJING (AP) — Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto arrived Saturday for her first official trip abroad and gave assurances that China, long a close ally of her country, will remain a cornerstone of Pakistan's foreign policy.

Ms. Bhutto, speaking at a banquet put on by Premier Li Peng, said her visit had special significance in that she was fulfilling a promise made after her electn November to make China her first foreign stop.

"This demonstrates that the democratic government attaches special importance and priority to Pakistan's time-tested relations with China," she said.

Ms. Bhutto received a boisterous welcome from about 200 Pakistani diplomats, residents and schoolchildren at the airport.

She broke with normal procedure, walking away from a waiting limousine to shake hands with the Pakistanis. Many shouted her name and waved banners in English, Arabic and Chinese reading "Long Live Benazir Bhutto" and "Long Live Sino-Pakistan Friendship."

The Pakistani leader will spend three days in China. In addition to Li, she plans to meet with senior leader Deng Xiaoping and the general secretary of the Communist Party, Zhao Ziyang.

The official Xinhua News Agency said Afghanistan will be the main focus of talks, but another topic is expected to be Chinese arms sales to Pakistan. The Muslim Newspaper in Islamabad reported Saturday that Pakistan had reacned agreement with China to purchase 75 F-7 jets, a Chinese version of the MiG-21, at a cost of about $225 million.

China is second only to the United States in providing military equipment to Pakistan and is now helping Pakistan develop its nuclear industry. Both Pakistan and China have denied persistent reports the nuclear aid has military applications.

Ms. Bhutto, in her banquet remarks, recalled how her father, the late Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, made his first foreign trip to China in 1972.

She said her father had sent all four of his children to China for a month in 1972, when she was a student in the United States. She returned to China with Bhutto on his 1976 state visit.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Small fire breaks out on oil platform

LONDON (AP) — A small fire broke out on an oil platform in the North Sea, but it was extinguished quickly and caused no injuries, officials said.

The fire flared late Friday on a platform owned by Texaco Inc., said a company spokesman. He said a crewman on the rig put it out.

The 180 workers on the platform 118 miles off the east coast of Scotland were sent to lifeboat stations but were not evacuated, said the spokesman, speaking anonymously in keeping with British custom.

He said the platform was not damaged and the cause of the blaze was being investigated.

The platform is in the Tartan field, near the Piper Alpha oil platform, which was destroyed by fiery explosions that killed 167 men in July.

Government bans meetings

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Human rights activists Saturday threatened defiance and warned of rising black anger after police banned meetings intended to support a hunger strike by 300 blacks detained without charge.

Some of the strikers have gone 20 days without food, and lawyers say 13 have been hospitalized. A support committee said many were in danger of dying or suffering irreparable physical damage.

The ban specifically prohibited a protest meeting scheduled Saturday at a Johannesburg church by civil rights lawyers who represent strikers.

The order, signed by Police Commissioner Hennie de Witt, also outlawed all other gatherings protesting detentions or expressing support for detainees.

"The banning is the act of frightened little men who fondly hope that the problem will now go away," said the Human Rights Commission, formed by anti-apartheid activists last year.

The Hunger Strikers Support Committee, a coalition established last week, said the ban "will not prevent public expressions of solidarity with detainees. The issue is far too serious."

More than 40 Johannesburg lawyers started a 48-hour fast Thursday in solidarity with the detainees. They had planned to end the fast at Saturday's meeting.

Hurricane Harry hits

NOUMEA, New Caledonia (AP) — A hurricane with winds up to 125 mph struck the north coast of this French Pacific island territory Saturday, causing heavy damage but no injuries or deaths, authorities said.

Roads were closed, electricity, water and telephone service were cut and villages were isolated in the heavy rains dumped on the archipelego by Hurricane Harry, according to officials in the capital, Noumea.

A large number of trees were uprooted, police sid.

The eye of the hurricane passed over the island about 9 p.m., and the storm seemed to take a turn toward the east, New Caledonia's weather service reported.

It blew over Fiji on Friday, killing four people and devastating several hundred acres of sugar cane, according to the Fiji weather service.

Bomb explosion kills 20

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A bomb exploded on a bus in the northeastern state of Assam, killing 20 people and injuring several others, government-owned television said Saturday.

The Doordarshan television network said the explosion Friday killed two people on the spot. The others died in hospitals, it said.

The blast near the town of Bongaigaon was blamed on extremists from the Bodo tribe, said Doordarshan.

The Bodos live in the Himalayan foothills near the Bhutan border.

Some Bodo militants, like their counterparts in other Indian tribal groups, have sought a separate homeland to preserve their cultural identity.

Grenades thrown at police

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Grenades exploded in the police station of a small Guatemalan town on the Mexican border and injured 30 people, federal police said Saturday.

Five police officers were among the injured, and two were in serious condition in a hospital, authorities said.

The grenade attack was on the police station in Tecun Uman shortly before midnight Thursday. The town is near the Mexican city of Tapachula and about 155 miles west of Guatemala City.

Federal police said no individual or organization claimed responsibility for the attack and they refused to say, whether they had any suspects.

At least four rebel groups operate in rural areas of Guatemala, but terrorist attacks are sporadic.

Valencia not afraid to handle new challenges

By JULIE HILLRICHS

When it comes to politics, Midland's newest county commissioner believes she has enough common sense to make up for her lack of experience.

"If I work hard at it, I'll make it," said Precinct 3 Commissioner Louisa Valencia, an upholstery shop owner and grandmother of seven.

The new commissioner represents Midland County residents of Precinct 3, which spans all of East and Southeast Midland, including areas stretching north to Loop 250 and south to U.S. Interstate 20.

Mrs. Valencia is only the second woman and the first Hispanic to serve on the court. Former County Judge Barbara Culver was the first woman to hold office during the 1960s; and went on to become a state district judge and Texas Supreme Court justice.

"I have a lot of work to do," she said. "We all do."

Mrs. Valencia, now 55, became a county commissioner last month after she defeated her Republican opponent, Gerald Cox Jr., in the November general election. In March of last year, she thwarted incumbent Scott Welch's bid for re-election, beating out the fellow Democrat after a rough primary and run-off campaign.

She lives just south of I-20 and east of Midkiff Road and was involved in the upholstery business for more than three decades until she caught the political fever.

"I really didn't have any intention of running for office. In fact, I was perfectly happy running my business. We're not wealthy, but we've made a nice living," she said.

The commissioner was attracted to the county commissioner race out of a sense of duty.

"When he (Welch) made the remark that he wouldn't spend taxpayers' money to fix our drainage problem, I knew we couldn't expect any help from him. So, I filed (for office)," she said. "I didn't think the other candidates were strong enough to beat him."

In accepting the commissioner's job, Mrs. Valencia asserts that she's not afraid of the many challenges that lay ahead. She and her husband, Domingo, are accustomed to hard work.

"I can get in there and whip that work out," she said. "I'm here to help people; I'm not here for the money because I don't need the paycheck."

Mrs. Valencia comes from a farming background. She and her husband farmed near Stanton — on the Heidelberg lease — but moved to Midland shortly before the birth of her youngest daughter 33 years ago.

Landscape work, beginning with the laying of topsoil, is under way at Midland International Airport. Airport boulevards and roadways leading to the airport are to be adorned with trees, shrubs and grasses.

Vogler raising funds to beautify airport

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Ed Vogler, characterized as "the Johnny Appleseed of Midland," has a "goal in mind" to make Midland green with trees, shrubs and grasses.

In that effort, Vogler and others are intent on creating a thrivingly green "first impression" of Midland when travelers and visitors fly into and out of Midland International Airport between Midland and Odessa.

"The airport is one of the more viable and visible aspects of the city of Midland," said Vogler, a Midland consulting geologist who is chairman of the city's Airport Planning and Development Advisory Board to the Midland City Council.

When people arrive at the airport or leave the airport, Vogler reasoned, their impressions of Midland largely will be influenced by the scenery in and bordering the airport.

"If you have a barren, desolate-looking area, then that's the concept they have of what this country looks like," Vogler said. "I don't mean that the entire area of Midland is desolate or anything," he said, "but there are areas of the city where we have well-manicured lawns and landscaped facilities to improve the image of West Texas."

And an airport landscaped in verdant grass, shrubs and trees could take on the attractive greenery which Vogler enjoys when he is flying over or visiting the Midland College campus, which is adorned by shrubs and trees.

"I think it could be an economic boost to the entire Permian Basin," he said.

VOGLER'S CONCEPT, which is "old news" by now, is shaping into reality.

"It's a forest fire," he said of the tree contagion. "A seed of planting has germinated."

In his efforts, he has raised more than $26,000, including a $12,500 matching grant by Mr. and Mrs. Cy Wagner, to plant shrubs and trees, along airport boulevards.

And Vogler's steadfastness in his tree advocacy has prompted the Texas State Department of Highways and Public Transportation to move quickly on implementing a scheme to adorn two airport entrance-ways — U.S. Highway 80 and Spur 217 — with greenery.

Cowboy poetry riding tall in saddle

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

Starry nights, cold as frosted breath; the sharp smell of coffee boiling in the still dawn air; the creak of saddles as horses pick their tired way along the trail at day's end; the sizzle of red-hot iron leaving its mark on hide; these are the raw materials of cowboy poetry.

Although most popular verse today is limited to advertising jingles and Top-40 songs, cowboy poetry is riding tall in the saddle.

More than 7,000 people jammed the small town of Elko, Nev., two weeks ago to hear some 250 cowboys recite their works at the Fifth Cowboy Poetry Gathering, sponsored by the Western Folklife Center.

One of those visitors was Larry Griffin, an instructor of English at Midland College and a published poet.

He speculated about the growing appeal of cowboy poetry.

"Everybody has experience with the cowboy myth in one way or another," Griffin, 37, said. "If they don't have a big belt buckle and boots, they want a pair."

Although there may be fewer people tending cows, "there are more cowboys today than there were 100 years ago."

And cowboys "bounce off the medieval myth" of chivalrous knights, fair ladies and difficult quests.

"Cowboys are within the realm of romance. If you find self-value in nature, then by being close to nature you can find self value," Griffin said.

"That has some broad appeal. Most cowboys are pretty ecologically minded. If you poison the water, the cows die.

"The cowboy — he's clean cut, he's honest, he's caring, he likes animals and nature."

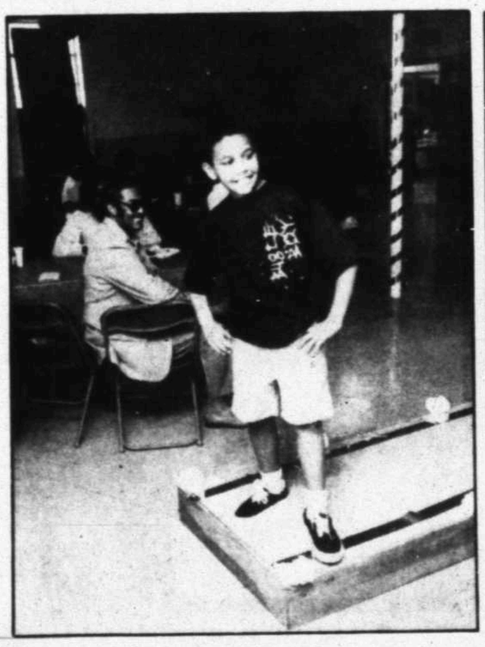

Griffin's first exposure to cowboy poetry came during a regional poetry gathering in Alpine last year.

Midland has some of the worst excuses for drivers

Ott

One of the first columns I ever wrote for this newspaper some five years ago was about the lousy drivers that abound on our city's streets.

I poked fun at them and said they should be run out of town before they kill some innocent bystander — namely me.

Several of the readers took exception to my comments. They said I deserved anything I got even if that included being run over by an out-of-control Midland driver.

They said because I was a newcomer here I had no right to criticize. If I didn't like it in Midland I was certainly welcomed to high-tail it back from whence I came.

They weren't kidding.

So I licked my wounds and remained mum on the subject.

But the silence must end. I have lived in Midland for more than five years now, enjoy the people immensely and have no burning desire to leave. I am, I have decided, a true-blue Midlander. I will defend its name and honor to the end. And so, I'm sure, would you.

Still, we must face the distressing truth.

That is, we have among us some of the worst excuses for drivers who ever crawled behind the wheel of red-on-white '57 Chevy.

It's sad but true.

If they're not going 10 mph in the fast lane, then they're cruising west on an eastbound one-way street — usually heading straight for you, the innocent bystander.

It's mind-boggling.

We do other things so well. We can raise millions for charity, rally behind the plight of an 18-month-old child stuck in a well and represent the free enterprise system at its best, but for some unknown reason we can't drive cars worth a darn.

You're safer on the streets of Houston, which is a frightening thought in itself.

Think about it. Don't you recognize any of these Midland drivers?

■ Mr. Look How Stupid I Look. This is the person who drives 20 blocks in the right-hand lane with his left blinker on. The poor person stuck behind him is doomed. If he tries to pass, he may be side-swiped. If he remains behind the driver, he will be 30 minutes late for his important business meeting. So he just steams and cusses a lot.

■ Ms. I Think I'll Take This Opportunity To Put On Lipstick Instead Of Going Through This Green Light. Enough said.

■ Mr. I'm A Hog. This is the guy who insists on using two lanes of traffic when driving. He straddles the line and dares anyone to try and pass him.

■ Mrs. Oops, I'd Better Wait. This is usually a kindly woman you would be proud to call your mother. Unfortunately, she has no guts. So she will not cross a busy intersection unless there are no cars within 12 blocks of her — in either direction. A person could read "Lonesome Dove" in the time it takes her to cross the street.

■ Mr. Don't Bother Me, I'm Rockin' To The Music. Try and get this guy's attention when the light changes from red to green. It's impossible. There's not a horn loud enough. He'll go when the song ends.

■ Mr. I'm Too Cool To Worry About You Because I'm Making An Important Phone Call. Simply put, telephones should not be allowed in cars. If your mind is on that conversation instead of more important things — like staying out of my way — then the telephone has become a health hazard. Get rid of them.

There are other others.

We have the sightseers, for example, who wander all over the street while driving around residential areas looking at old homes. We have the imitation A.J. Foyts, who like to pull up behind you and then screech their brakes loudly. We have those who ignore stop signs and then look at you with disdain when you almost collide. We have the daredevils who figure if they are within a block-and-a-half of a yellow light they can make it. And, of course, we have the daydreamers who think it is perfectly normal to make a right-hand turn from the far left lane.

Yes, fellow Midlanders, we have them all. They are everywhere. Let down your guard for even a second, and they'll get you.

And if they do miss, don't get cocky. You're not out of the woods. They'll just call ahead on their car telephone and have a partner get you at the next intersection.

TREES

Spur 217, which links the airport to Farm-to-Market Road 1788, is an extension of Sloan Field Boulevard, which is maintained by the city of Midland.

The highway department already is laying down topsoil in preparing for planting grasses and trees.

The highway department is to plant the evergreen live oaks along the spur, which fronts the new U.S. Postal Service facility at the airport.

Additionally, the department is to plant the yucca; evergreen shrubs, including the mountain laurel and cenizo; and trees, such as the Hollywood juniper, Arizona cypress and elderica (Afghan) pine, along U.S. Highway 80's service road running by the airport.

"They are all native-plant species," said Steve Patton, landscape architect for the highway department, and will be irrigated.

The plantings are part of Texas' scheme to enhance tourism.

"The state of Texas is making a big thrust on tourism," Patton said.

BUT IN ADDITION to their aesthetic value, the trees and shrubs along Texas highways will screen headlights for night-time driving safety, control soil erosion and block undesirable views, Patton said.

"When designed correctly, it cuts down on maintenance expenses," he said.

Marcy Blauvelt, administrative services/property manager for the airport, noted the importance of the airport creating a "good impression" of Midland and West Texas.

"It is our responsibility to the community to ensure" favorable first impressions at the airport, she said.

Sharla Hotchkiss, executive director of Keep Midland Beautiful, said that she is impressed with "the cooperation that came about between Midland and the highway department" to dress up airport boulevards and entrances to the airport.

"It really enhances Ed Vogler's dream — the dream of the trees along the boulevards," she said. "They (highway department officials) bought into the dream. They made it even better."

Mrs. Hotchkiss said that Vogler "has done such a wonderful job" in carrying out the dream and in raising money and working with the highway department.

"That's the only way we get anything done — working together. It's a wonderful example of a partnership in which the citizens of Midland will benefit."

VOGLER'S VISION of making the airport's landscape green with trees, shrubs and grasses was conceived last year, as he was returning to Midland on a flight. In scanning the landscape, he noticed the greenery abounding on the Midland College campus. Not much later, he mentioned the project to Cy Wagner, and Wagner and his wife pledged their support.

Midland College's landscaping was "mainly done by volunteer donations," he said.

Vogler is seeking a second $25,000 gift to help get the airport tree-planting project and landscaping under way this year without benefit of tax dollars.

Those who wish to contribute to the "Tree Project" at Midland International Airport may mail checks, payable to the city of Midland, to Midland's Department of Airports, P.O. Box 60305, Midland, Texas 79711.

"We do appreciate all gifts, both large and small, that have been contributed," Vogler said. "We are thankful that many people, even in today's economy, have wanted to be a part of this program."

"What is more fitting," Vogler asked, "than to give something living, such as a tree or group of trees, as a memorial to a loved one?"

For those who can't afford to or rather not contribute toward planting trees at the airport, Vogler suggested that they "go home" and plant trees in their own yards.

Some have done just that.

"Through an effort of the people joining together," Vogler said, "a lot can be accomplished."

POETS

The Museum of the Big Bend at Sul Ross University was "ramrodding it," he said, using cowboy lingo.

Griffin had some reservations about cowboy poetry before he went to Alpine.

Many cowboy poets, he claimed, have "a very conservative posture, to memorize poetry by people who are already dead" rather than writing their own poems. And the poets must have some kind of working cowboy experience.

Some purists are "even a little opposed to buckaroos — rodeo cowboys. It seemed a little bit limiting to me," he added.

But Griffin enjoyed the Alpine meeting, especially the friendly, down-home atmosphere. He kept hearing about the national gathering of poets each year in Elko, Nev.

He was particularly intrigued by the large number of people who would come out to listen to poetry of any kind.

If cowboy poetry can appeal to an audience of several thousand people, it's going to succeed, Griffin said.

"Poetry is such a small niche in the universe," he continued. "Poets get real scrappy with each other, but they don't need to get to fighting among themselves. Most people don't give a damn about poetry."

The five-day event in Elko lived up to his expectations.

"You could have done 1,000 Marlboro commercials" in the town of 13,000 people, he said.

"There were a lot of good people there and there were a lot of good poets there. No prima donnas, but a lot of humility, sense of community, of doing this for a good thing and a good time.

"I learned from going," Griffin said. "I opened my ear and tried to steal some good lines when I heard them."

At the gathering, invited poets from various states recited poetry. There were also open sessions, where any cowboy poets could sign up and recite their works.

The Oklahoma native was a bit disappointed that his state wasn't represented in the formal sessions, although Texas, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada and even midwestern states such as Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska were.

Other sessions included "Good Horses and Bad Rides," "Modern Cowboy Life," "Women on the Ranch," "Cowboy Yodeling" and "Spanish is the Loving Tongue."

"What I liked about the gathering was people's insistence on sincerity and honesty," Griffin continued. "They were genuinely concerned about the expression of emotions.

"Cowboy poetry doesn't have the artificiality of a lot of academic poetry. It deals with basics."

According to Hal Cannon, director of Salt Lake City's Western Folklife Center and a prime force behind the gatherings, cowboy poetry's strength lies in its sound. Verses which may look awkward when read silently regain their almost musical magic when recited.

"Recitation of these poems has become a viable performance art," Cannon said in an interview published in this month's Writer's Digest. "This is definitely poetry to be heard."

And it has a long history, dating back to the 1870s and 1880s.

"They're a lot of great cowboy songs," Griffin said. "They've been around a long time. Work songs and ballads have a long tradition in the west.

"You can sure hear the Scottish in them, the Scotch-Irish in the old cowboy songs. You hear that same sound in country music today. It's a lot stronger in the old cowboy songs."

But country music shouldn't be the only way to preserve this Western tradition.

"The good thing is not that these are cowboys getting together and writing about the past, but that they do get together and do this," Griffin stressed.

"They would have you believe that they do write this out on the ranch. But if they had an audience out on the ranch then they wouldn't have to get together and have conventions."

One more old saddle empty now,
One more old cowboy gone,
No more to talk of horse and cow,
No more to see the dawn
Rise red across wide mesas where
The slim gray coyotes cry,
No more to smell brand-burning hair
Beneath cow-country sky.

Ridin'

There is some that like the city --
Grass that's curried smooth and green
Theaytres and stranglin' collars,
Wagons run by gasoline --
But for me it's hawse and saddle
Every day without a change,
And a desert sun a-blazin'
On a hundred miles of range.

Just a-ridin', a-ridin' --
Desert ripplin' in the sun,
Mountains blue along the skyline --
I don't envy anyone
When I'm ridin'...

VALENCIA

The commissioner's interest in politics goes back to her childhood days when her father was a lawman during Wayne Cummings' tenure as sheriff of Grandfalls, a small community located about 20 miles south of Monahans on State Highway 18.

As a young wife and mother, she got even more involved in politics, serving first as an interpreter at her voting box and later as an election judge.

Her own business, Valencia's Upholstery, served voters as a precinct polling place until last year when her candidacy for county commissioner forced election officials to find another location to avoid the appearance of conflict of interest.

At present, Mrs. Valencia is helping Midland County Election Administer Bettye Calvert find a new polling place for those voters.

Mrs. Valencia's idea of the commissioner's job is working among her constituents and not doing so much administrative paperwork.

One of her first priorities is to pave a stretch of roadway located on County Road 116 West, which "has been ignored for years," she said.

Also, she plans to continue lobbying the Texas Department of Commerce for funding to refurbish the Windowpane II area — the last remaining pocket of county land surrounded by the city limits.

In that area, residents are living among open cesspools because there are no water and sewer hookups.

If the state were to allocate funding, water and sewer lines could be installed and the city would consider annexation of that property, Mrs. Valencia said.

Because the money is slow in coming, the commissioner acknowledges that the problems in Windowpane II won't be resolved overnight; that it will have to be completed in stages.

"Still, you feel something when you see this," she said. "You just have to do something about it."

Small plane shears off car's roof

YARMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — A small plane trying to make an emergency landing at an airport Saturday sheared off the roof of a car traveling on a nearby highway, killing a woman inside, police said.

Doris L. Chase, 63, of South Yarmouth, died of massive head trauma when the Piper Cherokee plane peeled off the roof of the car in which she was a passenger, said state Trooper William Cisternelli.

Her husband, who was driving, and the plane's three passengers were taken to Cape Cod Hospital, where they were treated for minor injuries and released, officials said.

The pilot, Robert A. Feversanger, 27, tried to bring the plane down on a highway near the airport when his airplane's throttle apparently jammed, said state Trooper Robert Knott. The plane crashed about 250 yards from the Barnstable Muncipal Airport, he said.

Police said Saturday evening the incident was still under investigation and there were no charges pending against Feversanger.

Council to OK vehicle purchases

From Staff Reports

Midland City Council is expected to approve nearly $1 million in vehicle purchases when it holds its regularly scheduled meeting Tuesday.

The city is expected to spend $155,000 to purchase a new pumper truck for the fire department with an output range of 1,250 gallons per minute.

According to Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor, the city has also proposed spending $172,825 to purchase several heavy duty trucks for its Fleet Services Department and another $630,357 to purchase several light duty vehicles, including 21 new patrol cars for the police department.

In other business, council is expected to approve:

■ Funding for new fencing as well as a sprinkler system for a new 33-acre park now under construction just north of Loop 250 off Bluebird Lane.

When finished the park will supply the city with seven new T-ball fields, 13 soccer fields, four Little League fields and a neighborhood park for the Crestgate development.

The city has proposed spending $19,000 on the chain-link fencing and $71,000 on the irrigation system.

City officials estimate that a complete facility, including trees, trails and playground equipment could boast a price tag as high as $750,000, although actual cost figures are still being worked out.

■ A $10,000 expenditure as part of a joint-project with the Federal Aviation Administration to improve runway lighting at Midland International Airport.

The airport already has closed two small light aircraft runways and is expected to close a third in the next two weeks that now services commercial carriers. The project is expected to be completed by September.

■ A resolution on plans and specifications related to improvements that will be made at the city's water purificiation plant.

■ A lease between the city and the Permian Basin Farmer's Market, which is establishing a west side location at Princeton Avenue and Loop 250, formerly known as Wild River Canyon.

City officials say they'll lease the property at a cost of $100 per month.

■ A resolution authorizing its finance department to make formal application for $15 million in Texas Capital Access Program funds, better known at Texcap.

■ An ordinance establishing a four way stop at the intersection of Eisenhower and Edgewood drives.

Bush's oil plan one step forward

Reaction from the Midland oil community to President George Bush's proposed package of tax incentives aimed at helping the industry get back on its feet was essentially positive — as far as the plan went. But it was clear from the comments that the Bush plan, unveiled Thursday, isn't a cure-all for the ills plaguing the domestic oil industry. Moreover, it is a "band-aid" solution, but in these times even a band-aid is welcome.

No one realistically should have expected, in advance of the plan's unveiling, that Bush's proposals would immediately solve the industry's problems. Basically the problem is a surplus in the world oil supply and it exists in the wrong part of the world as far as U.S. interests are concerned.

But even beyond the oil glut, there are the political realities to consider involving Bush's effort to help the industry. The Democratic Congress isn't likely to rubber-stamp every Bush plan simply because he says it will be good for the nation.

Bush's proposal was greeted, generally, as a step in the right direction. It calls for a 10% credit on the first $10 million of a company's exploratory intangible drilling costs with 5% thereafter, elimination of 80% of intangible drilling costs as a preference item for alternative minimum tax purposes, a tax credit for capital expenditures for all tertiary recovery projects, modification of the depletion rules to allow the transfer of stripper properties to independent producers and raising the net income restriction to 100%, complete deregulation of natural gas, and the re-examination of the policy concerning drilling in environmentally sensitive areas including the Arctic National Wildlife Reserve.

It goes without saying that some parts of Bush's plan will draw fire from affected groups, notably environmentalists on any proposal to further open the Artic wildlife reserve to drilling. But that's to be expected.

The point is that Bush's plan is essentially sound, although not reaching to the heart of the oil industry's problem which is the lack of a stable price for oil. While many oilmen may be disappointed in the plan, to a degree, it does express political reality in that there currently are more oil-consuming states than oil-producing ones and more people who have a vested interest in cheap oil than those who have a vested interest in the health of the domestic oil industry.

The plan, if enacted, would move the nation one more step along the long road toward energy security, but only a step. That, sadly, is political reality.

Was Tower delegation compromised?

WASHINGTON — A key reason for the holdup of Sen. John Tower's confirmation as secretary of defense is a disputed investigation into the possibility that several years ago in Geneva he cavorted with a woman who, unknown to him, was a KGB agent. At the time Tower was the chief U.S. negotiator in strategic arms talks with the Soviets.

Jack Anderson

The man who began this investigation was a former Central Intelligence Agency officer who went to work with the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency as a high-level security officer. His name is Berne Indahl, and he says that, as a result of his single-minded pursuit of the investigation, he was banished to an outpost in Africa.

Indahl was tipped off to the possibility that Tower might have been compromised. Our intelligence sources tell us that one tipster was the CIA station chief in Geneva from 1985 to 1986. Indahl and the CIA officer shared information while Indahl was working with the Air Force Office of Special Investigations on a related inquiry.

Indahl and the station chief investigated the possibility that Tower had slept with a foreign woman whom they suspected was a KGB "swallow" — an agent whose specialty is pillow talk. Our sources say the suspicions about Tower were not included in any of the official investigative reports, or Central Intelligence Agency cables because of the sensitivity of Tower's position.

We talked to Indahl, who is now serving on the U.S. Embassy staff in the Ivory Coast in west Africa. He referred us to the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, but they declined to comment. Indahl did tell us the investigation took its toll on him: "They were two very difficult years. I sleep well every night knowing we did the right thing for those two years."

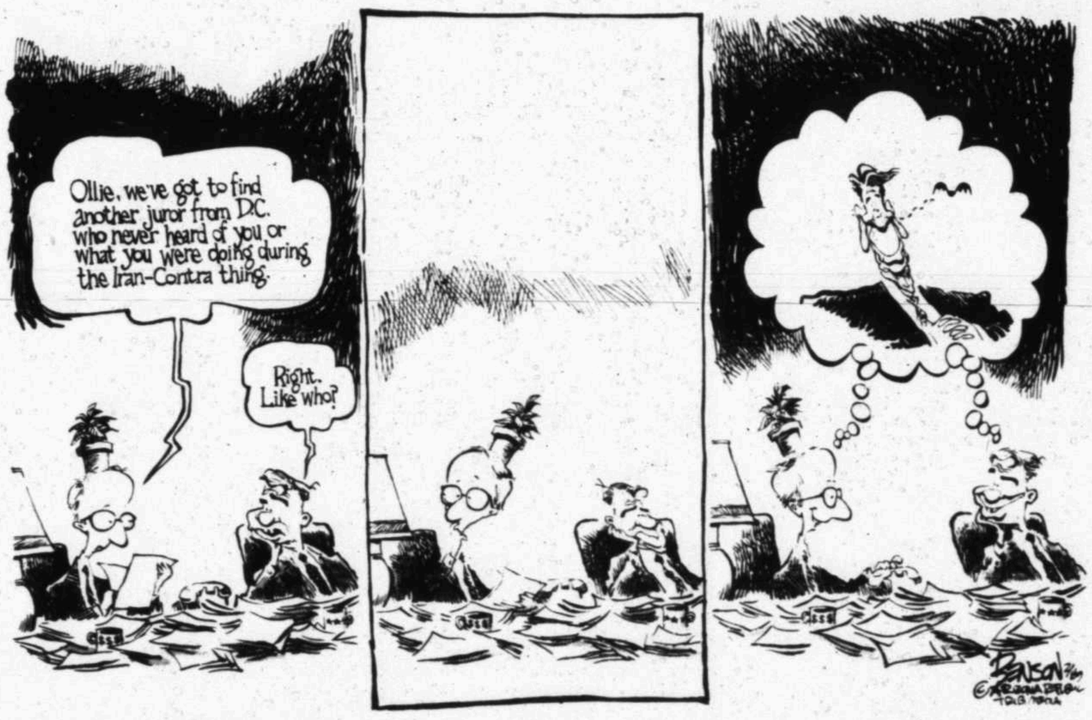

The Air Force Office of Special Investigations inquiry focused on an Air Force colonel in the 100-member arms control delegation who was accused of a variety of activities, including adultery with a woman who had Soviet-bloc connections and sloppiness with classified documents.

The colonel admitted to a sexual relationship with the woman, who had Czechoslovakian relatives, but strenuously refuted all the other allegations. We have reviewed the three-part, 3½-inch-thick OSI report.

The colonel said, in his defense, that adulterous relationships were par for the course for members of the delegation. He listed 14 married military officers, employees of the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency and the State Department, and other delegation members who were having affairs in Geneva — to his knowledge. He did not name them, and none of the descriptions fit Tower.

But Indahl saw the colonel's charges as the canny reaction of a man trying to protect his own career by threatening to name others. A later inquiry into the case by the Office of Personnel Management reported that the colonel may have tried to call in favors to save his career:

"After (the colonel) became aware of the seriousness of the allegations against him, he solicited a number of written endorsements from several ambassadors involved in the arms negotiations and from a great many high-ranking officials at ACDA. One or two of these individuals had initially made statements damaging to (the colonel), but later on revised their statements to fully support (his) character, actions and loyalty. Indahl said he has information to suggest that (the colonel) had assisted and accommodated several of these individuals in personal and professional matters, and their support of (him) may have been influenced by the assistance he had given them in the past, some of which bordered on improper conduct."

RUSSELL BAKER

Sunday School lessons trampled by greed

Alvin T. of Mattoon, Illinois, writes that he is 11, wants to be a consultant when he grows up, and asks which colleges have the best courses in consulting.

Russell Baker

"Until recently," he says, "I wanted to grow up and be an investment banker so I could make hundreds of millions of dollars by pointless merging and acquiring. Then my Sunday school teacher said if people were meant to get rich by pointless merging and acquiring, why were the money changers driven out of the temple?"

Alvin says he took the hint and "decided to moderate my greed and become a consultant." Will I advise him how to proceed?

Yes, Alvin, I will. And my first piece of advice is to quit trying to fool old-timers. Meaning me.

I can tell from the cynical way you talk about Sunday school that you are not an innocent, ambitious, 11-year-old boy from Mattoon.

You are a grown-up sorehead, at least 37, and you are as mad as a wet hen because you haven't made a fortune by consulting.

Alvin, if you have really been to Sunday school, you know that nothing withers an upright soul like a bitter heart. Yes, a bitter heart, Alvin. Don't deny it. I can read between the lines and I tell you that your heart is embittered.

I can even tell you what has embittered it.

You have been reading about John Tower, haven't you? Nominated to be secretary of defense. Former U.S. senator and chairman of the Armed Services Committee. A man of whom people once said, "He loves everything that kills."

Yes, that John Tower, fiscal father of futuristic firepower.

I will even tell you why you were reading about John Tower: Watching the TV news one night you heard somebody say that Tower was going to be interrogated about "womanizing," and you thought, "Hey, this could be spicy stuff; I'd better buy some newspapers and get the fuller coverage which TV leaves out on account of Brokaw and those fellows being confined to the TV family hour."

And in the newspapers you read that Tower, after leaving the Senate, was paid $750,000 over three years by serving as a consultant for Pentagon contractors. That embittered your heart, didn't it, Alvin?

Sure it did. You wondered why in the world our Pentagon's great contractors were so desperate for consultants that they had to hire an old, out-of-work ex-senator.

You asked yourself what was wrong with American youth. Didn't they want to serve their country by studying hard and getting their master's degrees from the Harvard School of Pentagon Consultancy or the Stanford Institute of Advanced Consulting Moxie and Pentagon Know-How?

You probably said to yourself, "Golly, if my teachers back in elementary school had only told me I could make $250,000 a year by going into consulting, I'd never have spent 25 years sitting around Mattoon struggling to write the great American novel."

And then you became embittered about the American education system because the teachers never told you about the terrible consultant shortage, a shortage so severe that defense contractors were reduced to hiring used-up old ex-senators to do the work.

But you are not a complete dunce, Alvin, are you? You wouldn't have written your letter with its hamhanded sarcasm if you were. Hamhanded sarcasm is the telltale mark of the incomplete dunce.

One day, thinking of Tower collecting that $750,000, you said to yourself, and I quote: "Hold on a minute now. This bird is about to become Secretary of Defense, and he is coming off a three-year season during which companies from which the Defense Department buys its famous futuristic firepower paid him $750,000."

At that moment, of course, you realized that no matter how many graduate degrees in consulting you might have collected by hard study in youth, no defense contractor would ever retain Alvin T. of Mattoon, Illinois, unless he had a friend in Washington capable of strategically placing him in the Pentagon spending department.

So you wrote to me, Alvin, bitterly, cynically, using ham-handed sarcasm about filthy-rich investment bankers and mocking the sweet lesson of your dear old Sunday school teacher.

And what was at the bottom of it, Alvin? Vicious envy of a fellow man of yours. A man to whom life has not been unvaryingly kind, considering the afflicting rumors about "womanizing."

A man who, becoming secretary of defense, must sacrifice his excellent consulting fees. You have come far from Sunday school days, Alvin. Shame. Shame.

JACK CASSERLY

Even Manhattan fears dark streets

NEW YORK — The Upper East Side of Manhattan is often viewed as one step this side of Fort Knox. It is more like Fort Apache.

One learns about such things at bubbly cocktail parties. This newcomer recently attended his first such soiree on the Upper East Side in my best suit and tie. To meet these elite, I studied The Sunday New York Times' Book Review, Travel and Leisure sections. And read the latest Sports section on the subway ride uptown.

The hosts, native New Yorkers, warmly greeted about 50 guests, arrayed in enough rich stones and metal to give Liz Taylor a run for her diamonds. Their two-story apartment, in the mid-60s just off Madison Avenue, was stunningly lit with beautiful Italian mirrors gleaming above polished marble floors.

The occasion was the promotion of the host to a top position in the publishing world. The splendid buffet indicated he had, indeed, rocketed to the heights of word and wisdom.

The guests ranged widely — authors and publishers, actors and actresses, advertising and public relations executives, numerous businessmen and their wives, and a large assortment of others.

I had just seen the movie, Crossing Delancey, a schmaltzy flick about a young Jewish girl suffering the vagaries of love in the Big Apple. So I discussed it with a PR man and his wife who had never been to Delancey. I talked about the great bargains.

As the evening wore on, the conversation ranged from books and authors to Broadway plays and the stock market. As yet, I hadn't hit on a subject that was really avant garde until — crime.

I mentioned that a cabbie had been shot to death in back of our apartment building a few nights earlier. Then came the deluge. Everybody was talking robbery, rape and burglary.

A woman told me that the Upper East Side was no longer safe. She no longer walked her dog on the Central Park side of Fifth Avenue after dark. The thieves would grab your purse or jewelry and run into the park. It was an easy escape route.

A middle-aged PR executive mentioned he lived on Park Avenue. He said it was once the "safest" avenue in the 19th Police Precinct. The precinct runs from 59th Street to 96th Street, and from Fifth Avenue to the East River. But, shaking his head, the gentleman said, the homeless had invaded Park Avenue. Affluence was attracting more robbers. He reported they wanted the best jewelry and the most quick cash. The man confided:

"Many of them are from Brooklyn."

"How do you know?" I asked.

"Because one of them robbed my neighbor," he said, "and told him: 'Manhattan makes it; Brooklyn takes it.'"

The hostess mentioned that Madison Avenue, the heartbeat of U.S. advertising and PR, was safe during the day but "desolate and foreboding" after dark. She said robbery had risen there.

A young businessman said nearby Lexington Avenue was unsafe once the security gates came crashing down at the end of the work day. He reported assaults and robberies had increased.

Second, Third and Park Avenues were called the safest streets in the area. The reasons were unique. Second and Third were safer because of their many late-night stores, restaurants, and heavy pedestrian traffic. Park was safest because all the buildings, on both sides of the avenue, have doormen who watch for potential robbers and are quick to blow the whistle on them.

New York City set a record in all violent crimes in 1988 — 162,600 murders, rapes, robberies and assaults. Manhattan's wealthiest neighborhood had more than 12,000 major crimes on its streets last year. On that note, the subject and guests seemed exhausted. Such is real life in one of America's richest slums.

Lack of spending on children setting trap

WASHINGTON — A delightful joke stopped being delightful when it became national policy. The joke was: Two politicians fall into a deep ravine with steep, sheer sides. "We're trapped!" cries one. "No," says the other, "we'll just assume a ladder."

George F. Will

Imaginative assuming, once a cottage industry in Washington, is now, because of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction requirements, a sacrament. President Bush is assuming more rapid economic growth than most economists assume, more rapid increases in productivity than have usually been achieved in the postwar era, and interest rates plunging enough to produce 7 percent mortgages.

Sen. Fritz Hollings (D-S.C.) is so fed up with the fudging of figures and cooking of books provoked by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings that he proposes, in effect, blowing it up. He would remove the Social Security trust fund surplus from the budget. That would turn the entire Congress' hair as white as Hollings'.

In the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, the advertised deficit was $155 billion. However, the real deficit for all government activities other than Social Security (which had a $39 billion surplus) was $194 billion. Take Social Security (the surplus is growing $72,000 a minute) and other trust funds (highways, airports) out of the budget and suddenly the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit target ($150 billion) is about $135 billion more distant.

To attack the true deficit of $285 billion, Hollings proposes freezing all spending (exempting COLAs and new entitlement beneficiaries) and enacting a 5 percent value-added tax to fill a Deficit Reduction Trust Fund. You are thinking: He can't be serious. He is. But popular government will not permit that.

This is the kind of crisis democracies deal with poorly. The cost of living off seed corn is slowly cumulative anemia, quiet and virtually invisible. Of course, a recession would get everyone's attention. Would? Will.

The current expansion was 74 months old on Inauguration Day. If it lasts until the next inauguration, it will be 122 months old. It has already run 42 months longer than the average of the 30 cyclical expansions since the middle of the 19th century.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan is in charge of keeping the expansion going without allowing inflation to get going. The Fed is one of the few federal institutions that can achieve what it intends. Its intentions pertain to interest rates. Greenspan is a serious inflation-fighter, but his room for maneuver with rising rates is severely limited because a recession has never been riskier than one would be now.

In a recession, the $300 billion deficit leaves the government without the option of countercyclical spending. Even if you assume (perhaps imaginatively) that the problem of insolvent savings and loans has been solved, recession or rising interest rates could produce a huge new problem from today's marginally solvent savings and loans. The servicing of Third World debts, and hence the health of important U.S. banks, depends on Third World exports to a growing U.S. economy. Leveraged buyouts, and borrowing by corporations resisting hostile takeovers, have produced debts that cannot be serviced unless the economy is growing.

For a perspective on our current vulnerability, consider this: The Carter budget submitted in January, 1980, proposed a deficit of $15.6 billion. The interest costs on the debt this year will be $130 billion more than in 1980. That is, as Hollings says, like a new $130 billion spending program. It redistributes revenues regressively to buyers of government bonds.

Much of the federal budget is a mechanism administering a huge and regressive intergenerational transfer of wealth. The 12 percent of Americans over 65 receive 27 percent of federal spending and are, as a group, better off than the rest of the population.

Forbes magazine calculates that the federal government spends more than ten times as much per capita on the elderly as on children. Sen. Pat Moynihan (D-N.Y.) notes that ours is the first society in history in which the poorest group is children, not the elderly. Twelve percent of the elderly are in poverty. Twenty percent of children are. Guess which group votes at a higher rate than the rest of the population, and which group does not vote at all.

We are spending less per capita to enhance the productivity (and thus to enlarge the income) of our children than our parents spent on us. Here is a question for the fellow who says he wants to be "the education President": Do you want to increase spending on education?

Coming to the heart of the deficit problem, productivity, American children spend 180 days a year in school, Japanese children spend 240 days — longer days. Japanese students outperform American children in math, science, engineering. American children do better than Japanese children in English. For now.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Feb. 12, the 43rd day of 1989. There are 322 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 12, 1809, Abraham Lincoln, 16th president of the United States, was born in a log cabin in what is now Larue County, Kentucky.

On this date:

In 1554, Lady Jane Grey, who had been queen of England for nine days, was beheaded after being charged with treason.

In 1733, English colonists led by James Oglethorpe landed at Savannah, Ga.

In 1870, women in the Utah Territory were granted the right to vote.

In 1892, Lincoln's birthday was declared a national holiday.

In 1907, more than 300 people died when the steamer Larchmont collided with a schooner off Block Island in New England.

In 1908, the first 'round-the-world automobile race began in New York. It ended in Paris the following August.

Teddy bear clinic helps introduce children to hospital

Modisett

This column is for young readers. In fact, some of the readers may be so young that their parents will have to read it for them. It concerns a matter of vital interest to both children and their parents — child health care.

Anyone who has ever had the unpleasant experience of taking a child to the hospital knows exactly what I'm talking about. Children and hospitals mix about as well as oil blends with water. Aside from that fact, though, it's undeniable that most parents will need to take their youngsters to the hospital at one time or another.

Because of that fact, parents and youngsters should take steps to make themselves familiar with what goes on at the hospital to minimize the trauma that typically results when the need for a hospital visit arises.

Thanks to Midland Memorial Hospital's Auxiliary force, that opportunity is available today to all Midland parents who have children ages 12 and under.

The auxiliary calls the hospital orientation a "Teddy Bear Clinic," and it's staged on the premise that kids can bring their teddy bears to the hospital if the bears have suffered nasty falls or tears, or perhaps have lost an eye or need their fur patched.

The bears may simply not be feeling up to par and need a little tender loving care. Regardless, the auxiliary members will put them in tip-top shape in no time at all and while that's happening, the youngsters and their parents can tour the hospital.

On the tours, both parents and children will be given valuable information about what happens in an ambulance, the emergency room, surgery, and in the testing and diagnostic center.

The children, specifically, are instructed in how the surgery room looks and how the physicians and other personnel will look when they "wake up." They're also instructed about anesthesia so they'll comprehend what is happening in that medical procedure.

The tours, to be conducted from 2 p.m. until 4:30 p.m. today, should help alleviate the fears of the unknown that a hospital visit can create. The Midland Memorial auxiliary started the Teddy Bear Clinic here last year, taking their cue from the hospital in Pecos. In fact, hospital officials say the clinic idea appears to be only in use now in Midland and Pecos, but if the Midland turnout is any indication of public interest, it won't remain that isolated for long.

Two-hundred nineteen youngsters toured Midland Memorial in 1988 and, along with their parents, learned that there isn't anything to fear. The people in a hospital are there to help you, not to hurt you.

What's more, plenty of healthy "teddy bears" went home after last year's clinic and more will do the same this year. They'll be given a new lease on life. That's what a stay at the hospital can do for a teddy bear — or a youngster.

Even more than that, though, the Teddy Bear Clinic should help give youngsters the subtle idea that good health is vitally important and that hospitals are there to help a person get the medical attention he needs when his health condition demands it.

That's a lesson everyone, regardless of their age, needs to understand.

Reagan deserves third term for job well done

In looking back at the past eight years Ronald Reagan has been in office, it's a job that has been done well. I think that President Reagan has done a great job economically as well as politically. His foreign policy has been overwhelming.

It's a shame Reagan couldn't go on for four more years. I think Reagan should be congratulated and patted on the back for what he has done. I only hope the next eight years can be as good as the last eight. Ronald Reagan has been a great President!

Group will take your name off phone list

Last year the Reporter-Telegram published a letter by me concerning the use of the telephone for selling purposes for every type of business under the sun. As a direct result of that letter, I received 87 letters that agreed with my feeling that my privacy was being invaded by these calls and that the telephone should be under the control of the person that pays for it.

I also received one letter calling me "an inconsiderate SOB" for suggesting that these calls be banned by law. That letter was not signed.

Now I learn that there is an association that will take your telephone number(s) off the calling list for most of the "junk" calls. It is called the Direct Marketing Association Telephone Preference Service and readers can write to them at 6 East 43rd St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

This trade organization keeps a list of people who don't want to be bothered by sales calls.

Childbirth at home can be free from fear

I am writing in response to the article "Home or Hospital? Childbirth options, opinions debated."

Seven weeks ago I gave birth to a healthy seven pound baby girl in my home in Midland. She is my first child.

I am grateful that I had the very competent and loving help of a lay midwife and her assistant, and, since I am a student of Christian Science, the help of a Christian Science practitioner and a Christian Science obstetrical nurse.

My husband and I, both college graduates with advanced degrees, made an informed decision to have the baby at home after extensive research about the birth process and about the birthing options available in Midland. The home birth experience was beautiful and free from fear.

Column on public lands reflects writer's bias

While newspaper columns are an expression of the writer's beliefs and attitudes it would seem that a prudent, responsible writer would insure that he was well informed about the subject that he has elected to write about. Such is not the case in the column of Jan. 29, in which Bill Modisett's lack of understanding for his subject is only exceeded by his naivete.

Modisett would do well to study his subject and to develop a more realistic perspective. A few points worthy of study are:

- What impact does the removal of vast land areas (such as the Big Bend Ranch) from tax rolls have on county, school, or hospital districts?
- How often has the park bureaucracy, whether it be the National Park Service or the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, modified the course of nature by regulation, ordinance, law or interference to the detriment of nature (note James Canyon, Otero Co., N.M., the 1988 forest fire at Yellowstone National Park)?
- How often has a park modified habitat to the detriment of wildlife and man (note the killing of a backpacker in Big Bend National Park by a radio transmitter-tagged mountain lion, the lion was subsequently destroyed by government personnel)?
- What is the average income level of persons enjoying rural state and federal parks? Are those people most in need of accessible recreational facilities — lower income urban dwellers — benefiting from the acquisition of land in remote rural settings?
- How much land in the United States is designated as public? Is it true that roughly one-third of the land in the U.S. is currently owned and managed by the federal government? How much additional land is owned by state and local governments?
- The scenic and natural areas currently found on privately owned land has been protected by private ownership. Why would one assume that an understaffed, underfinanced, uninformed and ill-managed parks bureaucracy could protect these areas from a vandalous public?
- How would park acquisition and the requisite added staffing be funded if not through increased taxes?

Modisett's column rings of a singular and self-interested theme i.e. "I enjoy hiking, backpacking and camping in the great outdoors and the state owes it to me to provide me with these outdoor opportunities — taxes, need, private rights and ownership be damned." This "give me" attitude, so prevalent in this country today will only give us more taxes and less control of local and private destinies.

Census Bureau's prediction puts problems in perspective

Gazing far into the future tends to diminish the events of the present. When the Census Bureau predicted recently that in a half-century the U.S. population would peak at about 302 million and shrink thereafter, such matters as John Tower's troubled nomination or Dwight Gooden's new contract or Mayor Koch's election prospects began to seem ephemeral.

Wicker

That's not because a declining population necessarily means a declining nation, or threatens some form of cataclysm. Rather, the idea of the future arouses a certain sense of awe, as if peering too far into it were intruding on forbidden ground.

Who, in any case, can imagine the world of 50 years from now? Or 100? Who knows if the world will even exist then? Or be inhabitable? Where will we all be, Kurt Weill's plaintive song inquires, on Coronation Day?

Demography, of course, depends on human behavior; so little in it can be certain. The Census Bureau insisted that its "prediction" was only what its experts considered the "most realistic" of numerous possible population paths. The forecast might even be too optimistic; such variables as war, pestilence, immigration restraints, starvation, contraceptive techniques and guns can and probably will confound even the ubiquitous computer.

Or the curve might go the other way. After many centuries of low population growth worldwide, after all, a declining death rate attributable mostly to medical advances was a major factor in the population explosion that began about 1950. It took more than a century before that year for the number of people in the world to double from 1.25 to about 2.5 billion people; but in the mere 38 years since, and despite considerable emphasis on birth control, world population has doubled again, to approximately five billion people.

The Census Bureau's "most realistic" estimate for the United States contrasts sharply with other population 'experts' predictions for the world. Globally, three billion more people will be added by 2025, if a United Nations projection proves accurate; and the world's population will have doubled again.

The Census Bureau also projected a drastic drop in the number of Americans under 35, from 55 percent of the total now to 41 by the year 2030. That's the so-called "crime-prone age group"; so a decline in crime rates may be some compensation for the many problems to be caused by a rising proportion — up to 22 percent — of people over 65.

Still, the prospect of a falling population is daunting. Our forebears had to get used to the idea that the frontier had vanished, leaving no further escape to the mythic West; in recent times Americans have had to face, none too happily, the end of the nation's economic pre-eminence. These may be minor trials compared with that awaiting the first Americans who will have to live in the knowledge that their numbers are growing smaller, that the ever-expansive notion of an ever-expanding America has faded with the frontier and the smokestack into history.

Our children — in many cases our grandchildren — will be elderly in the unimaginable year 2038. Few of them may remember that from the early 1930s to now the nation's population doubled, to the present 246 million. They will have lived, instead, through a half-century during which growth is expected to have dropped by 25 percent, reaching its apogee at 302 million.

That, and the decline projected to follow — not just in growth rates but in actual numbers — surely would have a profound effect on the optimistic boomer's psychology that has been so nearly the driving force of Americans' brief, remarkable history.

Journalism's Bigfeet trample embarrassing story into ground

WASHINGTON — Let's lift the veil and sneak a look at how an adept White House can set the Bigfeet of journalism tromping on each other's toes.

William Safire

Acting on a tip a few weeks ago, I called C. Boyden Gray, the president's lawyer and ethics overseer, and asked him for his financial disclosure forms for the past three years. He said sure. Ten days passed; I called again. This time he turned over the papers — but with the top sheets missing for the most recent year.

That piqued my curiosity. I obtained the missing pages for the year 1987 from the Office of Government Ethics, and was immediately struck by the date of the submission: the day before Election Day 1988, six months after the deadline. What was buried in this document worth keeping from issue-hungry Democrats throughout the election campaign?

That was too complicated for a pundit who has trouble filling out his application for a White House press pass; the Times bureau decided it was a job for Jeff Gerth, a reportorial Hawkshawe.

Sure enough, after probing and sifting, my colleague discovered that the vice president's lawyer had not only been serving as board chairman of a half-billion-dollar media conglomerate, but had been receiving substantial outside earned income, in violation of White House policy and George Bush's campaign promises. Good story; hypocrisy in high places.

But the reporter wanted to be extra-responsible and go over all the details with Gray. On a Thursday, like a couple of ethical schnooks, we laid out our troubling information and were promised detailed answers. No need to rush into print with a lot of loose ends; give the guy a chance.

Next day, Friday, unbeknownst to us, the White House arranged an interview with Bob Woodward (like me, a certified Bigfoot, the sobriquet of media biggies) and Walter Pincus of The Washington Post. Gray gave these two old pros what sophisticated news handlers call an Inoculation Story.

What a joy it is to see really professional media manipulation. An "inoculation story" is an authorized leak of just enough embarrassing information to justify a front-page story (below the fold) — but because the source is so forthcoming, he gets full credit for candor. The reporters so used are not told that the White House purpose is to take the wind out of the sails of a much more thorough story about to break.

On the night of Feb. 3, the half-story appears in The Post; the headline tut-tuts about Gray's unwillingness to put his miscellaneous holdings in a blind trust, hardly significant. The New York Times, for competitive reasons, must then run the full and damning story by Gerth in its late Saturday editions, not distributed in Washington. A second-day Times story, on Feb. 5, received a necessarily lesser display. The "inoculation" did the trick.

Meanwhile, the same day, Boyden Gray called me at home to determine whether I planned to write for the next day. A trusting soul, I said yes. He then called The Wall Street Journal and pulled the editorial trigger of Bigfoot Robert Bartley.

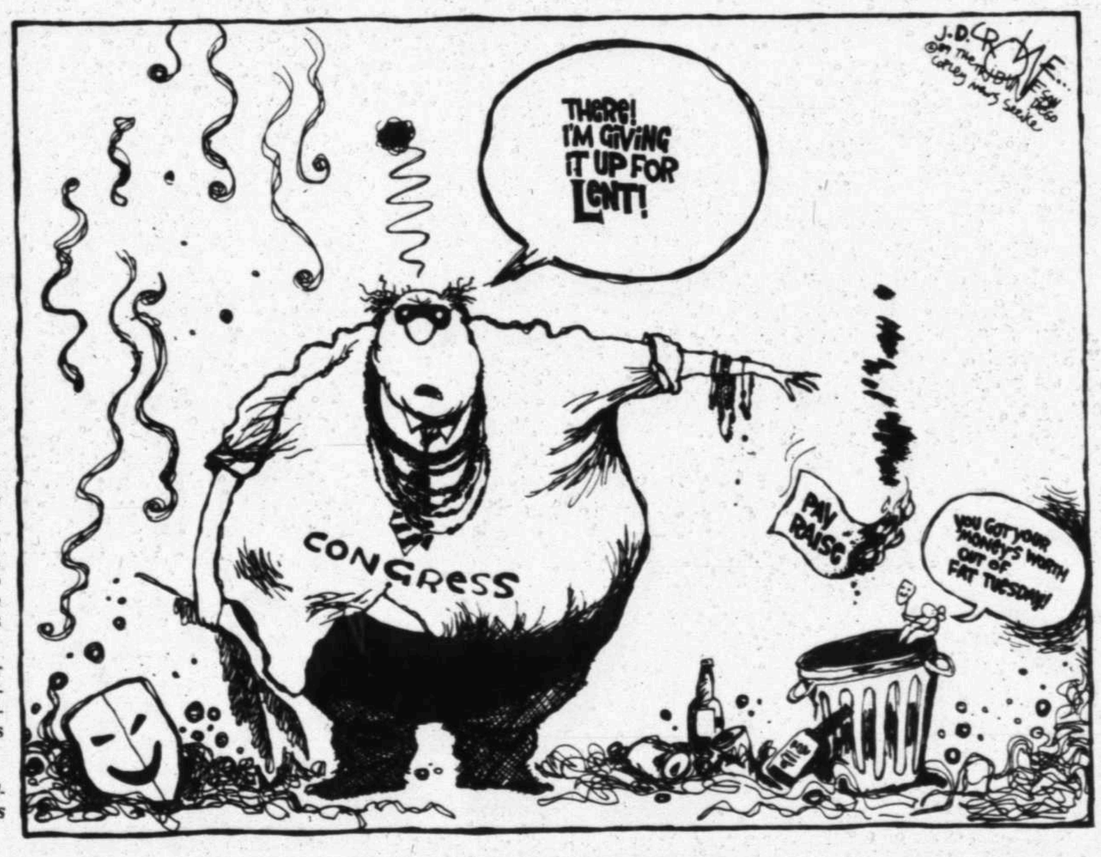

On Monday morning, The Journal was in print denouncing a column its editorialist had not yet read. At the White House press secretary's morning briefing, this pre-emptive defense by a respected Bigfoot was cited as proof of rectitude, along with the announcement that Gray would resign his board chairmanship only for appearance' sake.

Another PR triumph. President Bush could then say, without being challenged, that his lawyer "did the correct thing every year in asking what was proper."

He is at best misinformed. Gray had good reason to drag a foot in submitting his forms throughout the campaign year, without the required extensions; only now do we discover, from the close inspection of those documents, that he failed to disclose $87,000 in deferred income from his corporation in previous years.

The chief Bush ethics adviser doesn't even have to admit a mistake, and the new president is entitled to a hearty laugh at all us Bigfeet.

Bush's first address to joint session impressive, astute

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN FRANCISCO — President George Bush's first address to the joint session of Congress Thursday was an impressive example of the astuteness with which he intends to deal with a Democratic-controlled Congress.

He promised to cut defense spending and offered to increase spending for highly favored Democratic domestic programs such as education, Medicaid, environmental cleanup, air and water pollution, and child health care.

However, in return he wants to reduce the capital gains income tax from 28 percent to 15 percent. That is anathema to the liberal Democrats who would like to abolish any special treatment for capital gains income.

The president has already offered to compromise with Congress on his previous plan to permanently reduce to 15 percent the capital gains tax. The president is willing to apply the 15 percent rate in the first year to assets held for one year or longer.

In later years, he hopes to encourage investors to be more long-term minded by applying the 15 percent rate to gains on assets held for three years or longer. The tax on assets held fewer than three years would be above 15 percent but still below the current rate.

There is likely to be a battle royal in Congress over this issue when the budget debate gets underway, starting this coming week. However, I believe there will eventually be a compromise with the capital gains tax reduced to about 20 or 25 percent.

The president estimates a 15 percent capital gains tax would result in $5 billion additional revenue in the first year and smaller revenue increases in additional years.

While limiting defense spending to 1 or 2 percent over inflation during the next four fiscal years, the president is confident he can maintain sufficient military balance with the Soviets to deter aggression while he seeks to negotiate further reductions in nuclear weapons and start paring both NATO and Warsaw Pact conventional forces to a level that will end the Soviet bloc's overwhelming superiority in the latter.

He hopes to preserve prosperity not only by cutting about $50 billion in defense spending over the next four years and trimming some welfare programs, but primarily by tax-related incentives to spur capital investment that will create new jobs and additional revenue for the government. He strongly believes a lower capital gains tax would prove a major incentive to economic growth.

While promising to cooperate with the president, the Democratic leadership complained that he gave no specifics as to what domestic programs he would cut and how much. He wants those issues to be decided during bipartisan negotiations in which the Democrats would share the responsibility, or what they call the blame, for unpopular cutbacks.

The president's program would bring the currently estimated $163.3 billion deficit for the 1990 fiscal year starting Oct. 1 down to $91.1 billion, thus more than meeting the congressional amendment that provides it must be reduced to $100 billion by Oct. 1 to avert across-the-board cuts.

I am cautiously confident that after some haggling, the Congress and the president will achieve a compromise agreement to meet the $100 billion deficit target by Oct. 1 and to do so without any increase in income taxes.

While President Bush will cut back substantially on the $5 billion Ronald Reagan wanted spent in the coming fiscal year on the Strategic Defense Initiative program to help defend America against nuclear attack, he intends to continue substantial funding of research on the program.

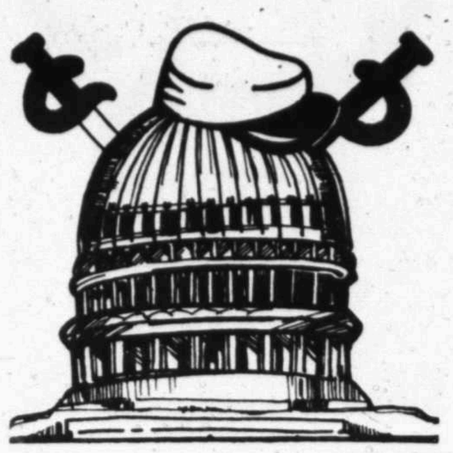

What we must be careful about is not to let the Soviets get so far ahead of us with their own SDI program that they would be able to deploy a space defense system that would give them first strike capability. That might encourage some future Stalin to risk nuclear war with us.

The president spoke with compassion and optimism about the future of our country, concluding his speech by disclaiming those "who say America's best days have passed."

"I remain full of hope," he added. "Americans have only begun on our mission of goodness and greatness. To those timid souls, I repeat the plea — give us the tools and we will do the job."

At the end as at the beginning of his appearance in the House of Representatives, President Bush received a warm, enthusiastic and well-deserved ovation from Democratic as well as Republican senators and House members.

Thanks, West Texas!

Words cannot express the pride and joy that was felt as the Lee High Band passed in review for the President of the United States. To be selected to represent the State of Texas in the Presidential Inaugural Parade was a great honor but the greatest honor was the overwhelming outpouring of support by the entire Permian Basin. The students of the Lee High Band brought honor to Midland and in return we would like to honor those who by their financial and personal contributions made this trip possible. This list does not include the many generous cash donations which were made. THANKS WEST TEXAS! May the unifying spirit that this effort produced live for years to come!

BEE SMART

baf-əl-mənt

bafflement — (noun) "Bafflement" means the state of being confused, perplexed, or subject to disgrace or infamy. "Bafflement" is based on the root word "baffle," which is believed to have a Scottish origin. In the 16th century, "baffle meant" to "discredit or denounce publicly." It is believed the word originally referred to the manner in which a knight was ridiculed for neglecting his oath. Scots would "baffull" such a man. Surely, the spelling bee winner will not be prone to any "bafflement."

kal-ən-dər

calendar — (noun) Don't forget to mark your "calendar" for the spelling bee. "Calendar" is derived from the Latin word "kalendae," which was the first day of each month in the Roman calendar (based on the movement of the moon) and the day on which accounts were to be settled. Julius Caesar, and in 1582, Pope Gregory, made some minor changes to the calendar. However, the basic calendar developed by the Romans is still the one we rely on today. Do you know what months are named for Roman leaders?

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1989 Regional Spelling Bee April 15 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through April 14. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA TROOP 19

Would like to thank the citizens of Midland for their generous donations of newspaper during our paper drive. The boys were earning money for the 1989 National Jamboree, and all of your help and support is appreciated. But at this time, there is no longer a market for recycled newspaper in this area. This is why the paper boxes have been removed from their locations.

Thank You Again---Troop 19

Parker Elementary is attacking illiteracy with the "Chief Quanah Parker Reading Progam."

The program is an incentive driven project to encourage youngsters to read.

Principal Rob Stewart said, "The celebration for the Year of the Young Reader was officially begun in all Midland elementary schools with an every school balloon launch on Friday, January 13. To continue this celebration, we are introducing a reading incentive program to all Parker students. The program, being incentive oriented, is structured in such a way that it will provide a positive, fun reading experience for every child."

He continues, "As with any program, parents are vital participants."

Parents are encouraged to volunteer in the school library, take their children to the public library, and read aloud at home.

The entire program revolves around an Indian them, "capturing books," and "sending smoke signals" to report each book read, and tribes.

LHS to host conference

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Series of classes will start for senior citizens

By H. A. TUCK

Tuck

The very first series of classes for those at least 55 begins Monday. Called "College Classics," these are non-credit courses which meet for an hour or two once a week for four weeks in the afternoon. There will be three sessions this spring and the registration fee is just $25 for as many classes as a person wishes to take. Session I begins Feb. 13 and ends March 10, Session II is March 13-April 7, and Session III is April 10-May 5.

Three of the 17 courses being offered in the first session already are closed because enrollment limits have been reached.

Session I classes which still have openings are: Aerobics, Babysitting, Bookkeeping, Changing Relationships, CPR and Standard First Aid, Fat Busters, Financial Planning, Grief and Recovery, How to Get Barely Out of Town (nearby attractions), How to Record Your Life Story, Learning Healthy Living, Managing Your Health, Typing, and World History.

If you would like to enroll for any of these classes, just visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building on Monday morning. You also can enroll by phoning 685-4518 and then come by the office to pay your fees before the class begins.

Registrations for classes slated for Sessions II and III also may be made now.

The spring semester enrollment counted ended up being the second highest number for any semester. There are 3,718 students enrolled for credit courses, which is a record for the spring. The count in the 1988 spring term was 3,664. And this spring even surpassed the 3,681 who were enrolled during the 1988 fall semester. Normally the spring enrollment is down slightly from the fall, but that wasn't true this year. Since the enrollment for the entire 1988-89 academic year serves as the basis for state funding support, the higher number is good news.

Chaparral basketball players get the grand tour this week as they play three games on the road. Monday's trip is the shortest, as the Chaps venture to Odessa to take on the number one junior college team in the nation, the Odessa College Wranglers. Clarendon College, up in the Texas Panhandle, is the destination on Thursday. On Saturday, the team goes to Roswell for a make-up game with New Mexico Military Institute. The game originally was scheduled for Dec. 9, but was postponed because of weather.

Game time for the Odessa and Clarendon games is 8 p.m., while the NMMI contest is set for 8:30 p.m. Central Time.

After that busy week, the Chaps get an off day on Monday, Feb. 20. Their last game of the season is against Frank Phillips College in Chap Center on Thursday, Feb. 23.

Another art show opens Monday in McCormick Gallery. This one features work by Connie Hudson of Lubbock and Terese Buckley of Midland. The show remains on display through March 10. Hudson does painting on black and white photos, while most of Buckley's work is painting.

A reception for the artists is scheduled for Friday at 7:30 p.m. and the public is invited.

Located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, McCormick Gallery is open Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and Sunday from 1-5 p.m.

Chap Center director Mike Stevens is in contact with a number of other schools who are interested in using the facility for their play-off contests.

Photographer to discuss desert flora, fauna

From Staff Reports

Midland photographer-biologist James Owens will present a program on the flora and fauna of the expansive Chihuahuan Desert at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Sibley Environmental Learning Center in Midland's Hogan Park.

The Chihuahuan Desert takes in much of Mexico between the Sierra Madre Occidental and Sierra Madre Oriental mountain ranges and a chunk of the Great Southwest, including much of West Texas.

Owens began studying the Big Bend area in 1935 when he worked with the Civilian Conservation Corps in what was to become Big Bend National Park.

Owens taught high-school biology for many years and later taught at Howard Junior College in Big Spring.

NBA returns to the Astrodome

By BILL BARNARD

HOUSTON (AP) — Akeem Olajuwon and the Houston Astrodome are NBA history waiting to happen.

Olajuwon, the starting center for the Western Conference, will be the only player from the Houston Rockets in Sunday's NBA All-Star Game. The last two years, and 10 times in 38 previous All-Star games, the most valuable player has come from the host city.

The All-Star Game also comes 21 years after Elvin Hayes of the University of Houston used the Astrodome as his personal showcase.

The Big E led Houston to an upset victory over Kareem Abdul-Jabbar (then Lew Alcindor) and top-ranked UCLA before 52,693 fans at the Astrodome.

Abdul-Jabbar almost didn't make it back this weekend, partly because of the Houston connection since since Olajuwon is one of three centers selected ahead of the retiring Lakers legend.

But, when Laker teammate Magic Johnson tore a hamstring in Wednesday night's game with Golden State, Abdul-Jabbar was named to his 18th All-Star team, replacing Johnson, who will be out 7-10 days.

"Kareem received the next highest total of votes from the coaches in their selection of the All-Star reserves," Commissioner David Stern said. " ... His participation in one more All-Star Game is a fitting tribute to his unequalled NBA career."

Related Stories — 6, 7C

A crowd of up to 45,000 is expected, which would break the previous All-Star record of 43,146 at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis in 1985. A different seating configuration than the one used in 1968 will be in place Sunday.

"It would be nice to be the MVP in Houston," said Olajuwon, the NBA's leading scorer among centers. "But I won't put that kind of pressure on myself. My philosophy is 'no expectation, no disappointment.'"

"I think he'll have a big game, but you never know with so many stars and just one ball," Rockets coach Don Chaney said.

Tom Chambers, then of Seattle, won in 1987 and Chicago's Michael Jordan last year.

Chambers scored 34 points and had four steals as the West defeated the East 154-149 in overtime at the Seattle Kingdome.

"I remember Tom Chambers in that game two years ago," Olajuwon said. "He was shooting from everywhere. Playing center is just a little different, so it might be tougher for me."

Chambers, who now plays for Phoenix, was selected to this year's West team as a backup forward. Although he is an eight-year NBA veteran, Chambers said fans remember him most for his performance in the Seattle All-Star game.

"I'll always cherish that game," Chambers said. "When the crowd gets behind you, you can really get going. For that reason, Akeem has to be the early favorite for the MVP.

"He's the kind of center who can win it because he can do a lot of things. If he gets a lot of points and boards, he can do it. Moses Malone would have won it the year I won if the West hadn't won the game."

Jordan, who had 40 points, eight rebounds and four steals last year as the East won 138-133 in Chicago, predicted that "Olajuwon will be pumped up at home and other guys will want him to do well. My teammates tried to pay me respect at home last year, especially when I got hot and really started to do well."

The West, which will be coached by the Lakers' Pat Riley for the seventh time in eight years, will have forwards Karl Malone and Alex English and guard Dale Ellis in the starting lineup along with Olajuwon.

Jordan will start at guard again for the East along with Isiah Thomas. The East center is Moses Malone and the starting forwards are Charles Barkley and Dominique Wilkins.

Donnell's tough decision

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Sometimes the multi-talented have the most difficult decisions.

Three-sport standout Randy Donnell of Greenwood signed a national letter of intent Wednesday to attend Texas A&I on a football scholarship, as did former Ranger teammate Sean Holcomb.

But while Holcomb verbally committed almost immediately upon receiving an offer from A&I, Donnell's choice was a little harder.

Even though A&I offered the six-footer the only full scholarship offered to a 1989 recruit, Donnell's basketball and track prowess caused him to think long and hard before accepting the Javelina offer, Greenwood coach Bob Purser said.

"It wasn't a matter of being prodded," Purser said. "His other option would have been to wait and see what kind of basketball and track offers, but he would lose this scholarship.

Economics was a major factor in Donnell's decision, the athlete said.

"It was a tough decision, but you can't beat a free education. (I could wait for track), but if I'd mess up my ankle during track, I would have been up a dry creek."

Donnell is considered one of the top basketball guards in West Texas, and will go into track competition this spring as a possible favorite in the Class 3A high jump after jumping 6-8 as a junior.

Baylor athlete killed

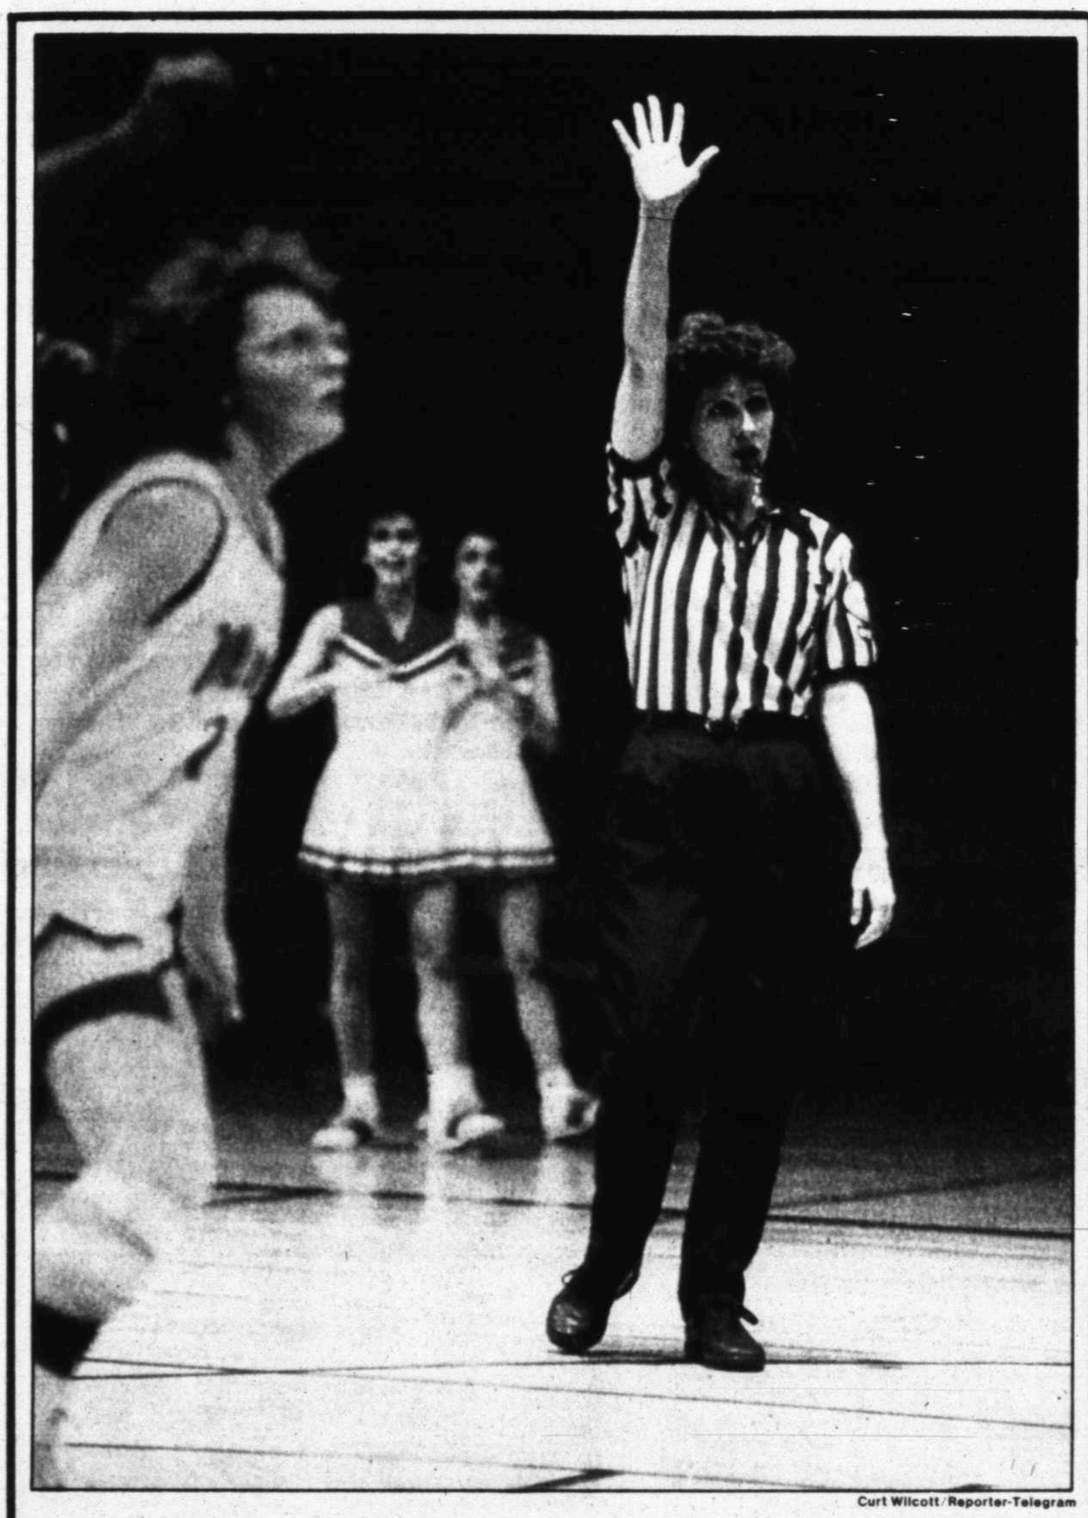

Associated Press

DAWSON, Texas — Two female students from Baylor, one a member of the basketball team, were killed Saturday in a two-vehicle, head on collision.

Heather Ann McNear, 18, and Angel Gist, 19, a freshman center for the Lady Bears, were killed when the car, driven by McNear, crossed into the eastbound lane of Texas Highway 31 and struck a pickup truck, said Andy Falkner of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The accident occurred in Navarro County just east of Dawson, about 30 miles north of Waco, at 8:10 a.m., Falkner said.

McNear, of Duncanville, had apparently fallen asleep at the wheel, according to the DPS accident report. Gist, of West Monroe, La., and McNear were declared dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Badie Stewart.

Stanton's Connie Pardue once officiated during her sixth month of pregnancy.

Blowing the whistle on lady refs

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Connie Pardue and Deena Spivey took a different route after high school graduation. Now, they're in the same boat, yet leading different lives.

Pardue, a 1976 graduate of Stanton High School, married and operates a modest catering business while caring for her two small children.

Spivey opted for college, graduating from Tarleton State in 1984 with a bachelor's degree in accounting. She is presently a CPA with Texaco, Inc. in Midland.

While these two ladies spend their 8-5 hours in different manners, what they do at night is what bonds them togther.

Spivey and Pardue both hit the hardwood floor upwards of four times a week in search of becoming seasoned lady referees.

While both excel at officiating high school and college basketball, Pardue was the one who pulled off a truly amazing feat earlier this decade.

In 1981, Pardue officiated during the sixth month of her first pregnancy.

"The third quarter of the second varsity game I'd start to get real tired," said the 30-year-old Pardue, in her 11th season as a ref. "I could have kept on a little longer, but I felt I wasn't doing the kids a good job."

Not only is officiating while pregnant amazing — and probably unthinkable for plenty of women entering their third trimester — her feat probably deserves some sort of award if only they were presented in an "Officiating While Pregnant" category.

There's just not that many expectant refs on the floor nowadays.

Playoffs feature six area girls squads

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Terry Crocker may be a little modest.

The Greenwood girls basketball coach insists that Coahoma should be favored going into Tuesday's district playoff showdown at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the Greenwood gym.

In other district playoff action Tuesday, Big Spring hosts Sweetwater at 7:30 p.m. in the Howard College gym.

Girls bi-district playoffs commence Thursday with a doubleheader in the Chaparral Center. District 15-A champion Rankin squares off with District 16-A runner-up O'Donnell at 6:30, followed by 15-A runner-up Grandfalls against 16-A champ Borden County.

Also Thursday, District 6-2A runnerup Stanton will face District 5-2A champion Iraan at 7 p.m. in the Odessa College Sports Center.

Friday's area bi-district pairings are dependent on Tuesday's results. A Big Spring win over Sweetwater would spare the Lady Steers from having to play defending state champion Levelland in bi-district. Instead, Big Spring would play District 1-4A runner-up Dumas at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in Abernathy.

The Big Spring-Sweetwater loser will play District 1-4A champion Levelland at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Lamesa.

The Greenwood-Coahoma winner will face District 8-3A runner-up Llano at the San Angelo Central gym, while the loser will face 8-3A runner-up Sonora in the second half of the doubleheader.

Greenwood-Coahoma

"Coahoma must be considered the favorite," Crocker said. "They beat us by seven at their gym, while we won by only one point at ours."

The Rangerettes won the first half of the District 7-3A race, while Coahoma used their win over the Rangers last month as a springboard to the second-half crown.

Coahoma had to eke out a 51-49 win over Crane in their regular-season finale to force Tuesday's game. Greenwood hopes to momentum from a Tuesday win to carry them further that last season's unfortunate three-point loss to eventual state champion Brownfield in the bi-district round.

All-everything Denisa McMullan leads Greenwood with more than 19 points a game.

Big Spring-Sweetwater

A district championship is one thing. What Big Spring and Sweetwater really want is the opportunity to avoid playing Levelland in bi-district action Friday.

Big Spring coach C.E. Carmichael said the Lady Steers need more production from Tami Wise, who has been held to 21 points in the first two Big Spring-Sweetwater.

Even though Sweetwater is sure to sag on Wise (23 ppg, 11 rebounds per game) much as it has in the first two games, Carmichael still feels confident in his six-foot ace.

"We're not going to give up on Tami," he said. "We need 20 to 22 points from her Tuesday. If she isn't able to score, Peggy Smith or Gisila Spears will have to pick up the slack."

Smith, a 5-5 point guard, averages 14 points and almost 10 assists per game, while Spears is a two-year starter.

"We depend on Tami and Peggy for such a large extent," Carmichael said. The senior duo scored 48 of Big Spring's 64 points against Andrews this past Friday.

Panthers down Hoyas

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jason Matthews scored 24 points and Pittsburgh held No. 2 Georgetown to eight points in the final 10 minutes to upset the Hoyas 79-74 in the Big East Conference.

Matthews and Rod Brookin scored six points each during a 12-0 Pittsburgh run midway through the second half that rallied the Panthers from a 10-point deficit to a 68-66 lead on Matthews' fifth 3-pointer of the game with 5:58 to play.

With 6-foot-10 Georgetown freshman star Alonzo Mourning on the bench after fouling out with 8:13 to play, Pitt pulled off its fourth upset victory over a Top Ten team in the last five weeks. The Panthers last month upset then-No. 2 Syracuse, then-No. 3 Oklahoma and then No. 9 Seton Hall.

After leading 66-56 on Dikembe Mutombo's dunk with 10 minutes left, the Hoyas — who had won eight consecutive Big East games — were outscored 23-8 the rest of the way.

Georgetown, 18-3 and losing for just the second time in 11 games, scored 13 consecutive first-half points to take a 38-28 lead. The Hoyas, 8-2 in the Big East, stretched the lead to 12 points at 49-37 early in the second half, but Mourning drew his fourth personal foul with 14 minutes to play.

Mourning fouled out just 10 seconds after re-entering the game with 8:20 to play, helping Pitt run off its 12-0 burst that included two 3-pointers by Brookin and one by Matthews.

Trenary claims second figure skating crown

By BARRY WILNER

BALTIMORE (AP) — Jill Trenary and Kristi Yamaguchi doubled their pleasure Saturday at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

Trenary got her second American title despite finishing second in the free skate to Yamaguchi. The 1987 U.S. champion, Trenary skated a conservative long program that, combined with winning the compulsories and original program, was good enough for the top spot.

Yamaguchi, the sensational 17-year-old rising star of skating, got her second berth on the world championship team. She vaulted from fourth to second overall with seven triple jumps and became the first American woman in 36 years to grab two spots in the worlds — Yamaguchi teamed with Rudi Galindo to win the pairs Friday night.

"Being a two-time national champion makes me already want to be a three-time winner," Trenary said. "I feel I'm the favorite (for the worlds at Paris next month) and I know what I have to do.

"This was a good stepping stone for the world championships."

Also stepping smartly into the worlds were Susan Wynne and Joseph Druar. They swept the three phases of dance, punctuating their victory Saturday night to the rhythm of the samba.

Wynne and Druar took their first national title, with April Sargent and Russ Witherby just behind.

Trenary, 20, of Colorado Springs, Colo., had a nearly insurmountable lead heading into the long program, worth 50 percent of the total score. She skated a clean, smart routine, not gambling.

"Kristi was excellent and I didn't do my ultimate," said Trenary, who was fourth in the Calgary Olympics. "I want to save the performance of my life for the worlds."

Yamaguchi didn't save a thing. Fourth heading into the long program, she climbed past Tonya Harding and Holly Cook with a spectacular performance.

In by far the most exciting of the free skates, Yamaguchi, of Fremont, Calif., cleanly landed six of her seven triples and barely hopped out of the other. She received a long, standing ovation from the crowd of 10,046, but skated right off the ice without acknowledging the applause.

"I wasn't sure I would place this year so high after being 10th last year," she said. "I wasn't worrying about numbers. I just wanted to go out and skate."

Yamaguchi said she took inspiration from Friday night's championship, even though she got only five hours sleep after it.

"Last night definitely was a positive for me," she said. "It was something I could look at and be proud of and it helped me in this performance."

Yamaguchi was just eighth in the compulsories, then climbed up by finishing second in the short.

Coogs gain revenge over Red Raiders

Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — Craig Upchurch scored 25 points, including 17 in the second half, to lead the Houston Cougars to a 71-67 victory over the Texas Tech Red Raiders Saturday in a Southwest Conference game.

The victory for Houston avenged an earlier 76-74 overtime loss to Texas Tech in Lubbock.

Horace Chaney scored 11 first half points, including three 3-point field goals, to lead the Cougars to a 35-33 halftime lead with Tracy White pacing the Raiders with 7.

The Cougars, 5-5 in SWC and 13-9 overall built, as much as an 11-point lead in the second half only to have to hold on down the stretch as the Raiders fought back to within two points at 69-67 with 52 seconds to play.

Texas Tech fell to 6-5 in conference and 11-11 overall.

Todd Duncan scored three 3-point filed goals in the final six minutes to keep Tech in the game, but center Roger Fernandes hit two pressure free throws with 14 second to play to preserve the victory.

Duncan and fellow guard Sean Gay each scored 15 points to lead the Red Raiders as they continued their torrid field goal shooting percentage by hitting 60.9 percent. This is the ninth concecutive game that Texas Tech hit for more than 50 percent from the field.

Upchurch, who had his low-point game of the year last week against Rice when he scored only 6 points, made up for it against Texas Tech.

"I just wanted to go out there and hustle tonight," Upchurch said. "If you do that and keep working hard, you're going to win."

"We kind of wanted to pay them back for the way they treated us up there," said Houston guard Richard Hollis, who scored 13 points. "We just wanted to get the ball to Craig tonight and we were able to do it."

Houston's five conference losses have come by a total of seven points.

"I thought that overall it was a well-played game, and they played just a little bit better than we did," said Texas Tech coach Gerald Myers.

Southern Meth., Baylor 51

DALLAS — Eric Longino scored 10 points as Southern Methodist opened with a 23-9 run Saturday afternoon and went on to a victory over cold-shooting Baylor.

Longino finished with 20 points, helping SMU even its SWC record at 5-5.

Sophomore guard Melvin Hunt had 14 points to lead the cellar-dwelling Bears, who fell to 1-10 in the SWC. Baylor shot 33 percent from the field.

Longino's 3-pointer with 7:55 to go in the first half lifted the Mustangs to a 23-9 lead. Longino, a senior guard from Gary, Ind., scored eight consecutive points during the Mustangs' early spurt.

Baylor was never able to reduce the SMU lead to less than 10 points in the second half. The Bears came closest when Julius Denton's three-point play pulled BU to 37-26 with 15:54 remaining in the game.

But SMU put on a 7-2 run behind John Colborne's five points and the Mustangs went on to lead by as much as 55-35.

SMU held a 28-18 halftime lead.The 18 points by Baylor was the lowest total for a half by an SMU opponent this season.

Longino, SMU's top backcourt scorer after the departures of Kato Armstrong and Todd Alexander, was seven-of-11 from the field, two-of-three from 3-point range.

Texas 116, Rice 74

AUSTIN, Texas — Lance Blanks and Travis Mays scored 33 points each to lead Texas over Rice, as the Longhorns stayed tied with Arkansas atop the conference.

With the victory, Texas improved to 18-5 on the year and 9-2 in conference. The Owls drop to 9-13 and 3-8.

Mays' and Blanks' output marked the first time in the school's history that two players have scored 30 points in one game.

Andy Gilchrest led the Owls with 17 points.

The Longhorns got off to a quick start, taking a 5-0 lead early, and led by 23 at halftime, 59-36.

Blanks had scored 19 by the half and Mays 18. Mays hit on 3-of-6 shots from 3-point range and was 7-of-11 from the floor in the half.

Mays accounted for 10 of Texas' first 12 points and 14 of the first 22.

Texas led by as many as 47 in the second half and at the same time broke the 100-point barrier for the eighth time this season with 6:17 remaining.

A pair of Alvin Heggs' free throws made it 101-54.

Arkansas 100, Texas Christian 60

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Freshman Todd Day and Lee Mayberry each scored 20 points as Arkansas rolled over Texas Christian.

Arkansas improved to 16-5 and 9-2. TCU drops to 14-9 and 7-4.

Mayberry scored the Razorbacks' first seven points and 10 of its first 11 to keep Arkansas in the game in the early going. Arkansas ignited a fast break for a 23-8 run to put the Razorbacks ahead 39-24 at the half.

TCU missed their first 15 shots in the second half and Arkansas exploited that with a 20-3 run that put the Razorbacks up by 32, 59-27, with 12:59 remaining.

Oliver Miller chipped in 13 points. John Lewis and Danny Hughes led the way for TCU with 13 apiece. Hughes shot only 5-19 from the field.

Texas' win over Rice earlier in the evening kept the conference race deadlocked between Texas and Arkansas with both teams boasting 9-2 SWC marks.

Texas Christian Coach Moe Iba said his team was ready to take on the Razorbacks, but TCU ran into a few obstacles: the Arkansas crowd and the referees. He also ran out of players, with Reggie Smith, Tony Edmond and Rich Antee fouling out.

"Both teams seemed ready for a big game. Our kids were definitely ready. But, when you run out of players, what can you do?" Iba said.

Smith agreed.

"The crowd put pressure on the officials and it went from there," he said.

"It's hard to play when they're (Arkansas) in their hometown environment," said player Danny Hughes, who still recalled the Razorback's 51-45 loss to TCU at Fort Worth.

Frosh get rave reviews

By CHRIS CLAREY
Copley News Service

Dick Vitale is never one to mince superlatives, but mention college basketball's freshman class and the outspoken television commentator loses what little inhibition he possesses.

"It's a tremendous class, just tremendous," Vitale said recently. "I think ultimately it will be one of the premier classes in the history of basketball. This group of front-court players might be the best of all-time when everything's said and done."

Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps also has no doubts about this group's ability.

"If you took all the freshmen from around the country and let them play together for four years and let them go to Barcelona (for the 1992 Olympics), they'll bring back the gold," Phelps said. "We don't need any pro players. These guys can get the job done. They're sensational."

None more sensational than LSU point guard Chris Jackson, an exceptionally quick 19-year-old from Gulfport, Miss.

Jackson has been running the Tigers' offense since he arrived on campus, and his play has been the primary reason for their surprising fast start. He had averaged 28.4 points through Jan. 22.

Jackson scored 48 in his third collegiate game, against Louisiana Tech. Since then, he has been personally responsible for three LSU victories. On Jan. 2, in a 79-77 victory at Maryland, he scored 15 of the Tigers' last 17 points, including the winning basket. On Jan. 14, in a 64-62 victory at Kentucky, he scored his team's last 16 points. On Jan. 18, in an 85-84 victory over Vanderbilt, he made an 18-foot winning jumper at the buzzer.

"Chris plays for the moment," said LSU coach Dale Brown. "He isn't concerned with being an All-America or how many points he's scored. He's just concerned with playing basketball — doing whatever it takes to win."

Although Jackson's play has surprised some, nobody has been caught off guard by Georgetown center Alonzo Mourning.

The final cut off the 1988 U.S. Olympic Team, Mourning arrived in Washington, D.C., awash in press clippings and has done little to disappoint. He was averaging 13.5 points, 8.1 rebounds and 6.3 blocks, which led the nation, through Jan. 22.

In his third game against St. Leo, he blocked 11 shots to break Patrick Ewing's school record of 10. He's also on a pace to break Ewing's single-season school mark (135) and has an outside chance at the NCAA mark held by former Navy center David Robinson (207).

Vitale's already given Mourning a nickname: "Chief Justice."

"He just rules the court," explained Vitale.

There are other exceptional freshmen — all starters and most large: Notre Dame's 6-foot-10 forward, LaPhonso Ellis (15.5 points and 10.8 rebounds per game); UCLA's 6-10 forward, Don MacLean (20.7 and 8.3); Maryland's 6-10 forward, Jerrod Mustaf (13.8 and 8.4); and Indiana's 6-9 forward, Eric Anderson (11.6 and 7.8).

Billy Owens, the 6-9 Sports Illustrated coverboy, has yet to dazzle at Syracuse, but that doesn't bother Vitale.

"Billy's been a little passive, because there are star players all around him, but he'll be a tremendous talent in the next four years," Vitale said.

Others appear destined for illustrious careers: Chris Mills, a 6-7 swingman at Kentucky; Christian Laettner, a 6-10 forward at Duke; Adam Keefe, a 6-9 forward at Stanford; Malik Sealy, a 6-7 forward at St. John's; and Wake Forest's freshman duo: 6-7 forward Chris King and 5-11 guard Derrick McQueen.

McQueen scored 20 in the Deamon Deacons' recent 75-71 upset of then top-ranked Duke.

"Fantastic, just fantastic," said UCLA coach Jim Harrick. "The poise these kids have. Remarkable."

FAMILY PLANNING

Detroit has earned its reputation as a cruel city. The crime rate is among the nation's highest, and poverty is rampant. All of which is making life difficult for Ricky Byrdsong, the University of Detroit's new basketball coach.

"This city's got a slight image problem," Byrdsong said. "Kids outside Detroit are scared to come in. Kids in Detroit, their parents can't wait until they get a scholarship so they can get out. I ended up getting my wife pregnant over it. I figured if we can't keep players here or get them to come in, I'll raise them myself."

The Byrdsongs better not tarry. Detroit started out 3-14.

Big time bucks in big time baseball

By MURRAY CHASS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The answer could be (a) Dwight Gooden, (b) Gary Gaetti, (c) Eddie Murray, (d) Gary Carter or (e) Dan Quisenberry. The question: Just who is the highest-paid player in baseball?

It all depends on one's choice of method. It could be any of the above.

The question is raised because of the flurry of talk generated by Gooden's signing with the Mets last week. The contract, it was written and said, made Gooden the highest-paid player in baseball now and ever. He is neither.

Of the three possible ways of determining such a rank, Gooden falls short of Quisenberry in two and of Gaetti in one. The only way Gooden could be considered the highest paid would be on a one-year basis if Quisenberry were eliminated because he was released by Kansas City in the middle of his contract last season.

More to the point, it has become virtually impossible to determine the highest paid or a list of the highest paid. That won't stop anyone from trying, but unlike batting averages and earned run averages, salaries are not absolutes.

The most common method of determining a player's 1989 figure is the one adopted by the Players Association and its management counterpart, the Player Relations Committee.

They take the player's salary for this season and if there is a signing bonus, they add a prorated share of it, dividing the total bonus by the number of guaranteed years in the contract.

Under that system, which has been used for years, 19 players will earn $2 million or more this year (it will be 21 soon when Orel Hershiser and Roger Clemens join the group this week). Last year, 13 players earned $2 million or more, and the year before six did.

The $1 million or more club has a record 100 members at the moment, with six to eight more on the threshold of joining.

Some people think that adding a prorated share of the signing bonus makes no sense and contend that only the salary should be used.

But what to do with the signing bonus? You can't fairly assess a player's contract if you ignore the signing bonus, especially if it's mammoth, such as Carter's $2 million in 1983.

One possibility would be to include the entire signing bonus in the first year. If that had been done in Carter's case, he would not only have been baseball's first $3 million man but also its first $4 million man — six years ago! — because his total 1983 income would have been $4.1 million: $2 million signing bonus, $600,000 promotional bonus, $500,000 salary, $600,000 deferred with interest, $400,000 for promotional services. Let's see Dwight Gooden top that.

The argument over the treatment of a signing bonus would be rendered moot by adopting another method of evaluation, one that would seem to make the most sense: average annual value of the entire guaranteed part of a contract.

Take the salary for each year, add the signing bonus and deferred payments, if any, and divide by the number of years.

Using that method, Quisenberry is the highest-paid player so far with an average annual value of $2,754,217.

Ironically, Quisenberry has the minimum $68,000 salary with St. Louis this year, but the Kansas City Royals, with whom he signed his record contract in 1985, are still paying off on his guaranteed contract that includes a lucrative real estate deal.

An average annual value would certainly be a more realistic way of assessing Gaetti's contract. The Minnesota third baseman has a $2.4 million salary this year (Gooden's is $2.25 million), but by his choice, that drops drastically to $500,000 next year, when he could lose part of his pay because of a strike.

The total of Gaetti's contract is $4.3 million for an annual average of $1,433,333. The Twins, a year ago, agreed to give Gaetti that total and let him determine how much he would receive each year. On the straight-salary method, Gaetti is No. 1 this year, but he'll be under the average major league salary next year.

One other significant element enters salary-rank computation: how to treat money that is deferred without interest. An example: The figures in Eddie Murray's contract, salary for five years and signing bonus, add up to $13.5 million. Whatever method is used, he would be No. 1 based on those figures.

Soccer teams split

From Staff Reports

WICHITA FALLS — The Midland High Bulldogs had good news and bad news on their weekend trip.

The good news was the 'Dogs 6-0 win over Wichita Falls Hirschi, a game in which Shaun Savas scored five of the six goals for MHS.

Chris Lanning had three assists, David Allen two and Joe Rodriquez one in the shutout victory. Jason Farr scored the sixth goal in Saturday's game.

On Friday, the bad news, as MHS lost to Rider, 1-0, on a penalty kick.

"We should have really won that game," MHS head coach Tom Esikhati said. "Other than the penalty, the game was pretty even."

With the weekend split, the Bulldogs run their record to 3-3-1 on the season.

Midland High faces Midland Lee at the Hogan Park soccer complex Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. Junior varsity soccer action is expected to begin between 3:45 and 4 p.m. Tuesday.

The Lee Rebels defeated Burkburnett 4-1. Goals came from Jordan Reed, Mark Ferguson, Pat Stanley and Sammy Jaso.

Goalies Arthur Donnelly and Chad Skipper combined for 13 combined svaes.

Robert Gonzales, Bryan Wojcik, Russ Moore, Eric Williams and Stanley contributed to the Rebels' excellent defensive work.

Marcus Wallin, Greg Pepper and Chris Jones added excellence on midfield work and offense.

DONNELL

However, the 170-pounder has decided to try his lot as a quarterback for the Javelinas, who have cut a wide swath in NCAA Division II competition recently with a veer attack that has featured running backs Johnny Bailey and Heath Sherman.

Unlike some other colleges that wanted to look at Donnell as either a wide receiver or defensive back, A&I wants Donnell as a quarterback.

"They feel like they can teach him to run a veer," Purser said. "They think he can run the option real well.

"I think I'll have an edge going in because I ran the option in high school," Donnell said. "If it doesn't work out at quarterback, I can move to wide receiver."

A&I coach Ron Harms expects Donnell to challenge for the top QB slot, however.

"We came across Randy real late, but it didn't take our coaching staff five minutes to realize what kind of talent he is," Harms said. "He's the most exciting quarterback that I've seen all season."

Donnell's competition at A&I quarterback will be senior-to-be Rodney Brown, who saw little action last season, and redshirt freshman Billy Bartosh.

Donnell ran Greenwood's Wishbone offense as a senior after playing running back his first two varsity seasons. Despite the added responsibility, he rushed for 1,042 yards and passed for 647 more.

The speedster (sub 4.6 in the 40-yard dash) played less defense than in previous years, but still intercepted four passes and made 63 tackles for the Rangers, who earned their first-ever bi-district playoff berth in 1988.

Donnell was named to the Texas Sports Writers Association all-state team. He was the only quarterback to have signed with the Javelinas and he and Holcomb were the only non-Class 5A athletes to sign at A&I so far this season.

Missouri back in win column as coach remains hospitalized

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Byron Irvin scored 22 points and No. 3 Missouri beat Kansas 93-80, giving assistant coach Rich Daly his first victory in relief of the hospitalized Norm Stewart.

Missouri, 21-4 overall and 7-1 in the Big Eight, won as Stewart watched from a hospital bed for the second straight game. Stewart was stricken with a bleeding ulcer Thursday on Missouri's flight to Oklahoma, one day after the suspension of top assistant Bob Sundvold in the school's first-ever NCAA scandal.

Daly, who had not coached in games since he was at a Florida junior college 12 years ago, lost to fifth-ranked Oklahoma 112-105 on Thursday.

Kansas, 16-8 and 3-6, lost its fifth straight game and remained stuck on 1,399 victories. The 1987-88 NCAA champion Jayhawks again failed to join North Carolina and Kentucky as the only NCAA schools with 1,400 wins.

Missouri was leading 57-51 when Irvin, a senior guard, hit two straight jumpers to make it 61-51. The teams traded baskets until Irvin made a 3-point shot for a 68-57 lead with 8:47 to play.

The Jayhawks rallied back to 68-61 on baskets by Scooter Barry and Mark Randall, but Anthony Peeler converted a three-point play with 7:19 left to restore the lead to 71-61.

No. 7 Illinois 86, Northwestern 69

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Marcus Liberty scored 20 points and No. 7 Illinois broke away in the second half to beat Northwestern.

Illinois led 37-29 at halftime, then went on a 23-4 run to build a 60-35 advantage with 13 minutes remaining. Lowell Hamilton sparked the surge with two quick baskets and Nick Anderson added a free throw before Northwestern could score its first basket of the second half.

Kenny Battle then added two free throws and a basket and Liberty two more baskets, including a three-pointer, before the Wildcats scored again.

Illinois, 20-3 and 7-3 in the conference, reached the 20-victory mark for the seventh straight season. Battle contributed 17 points, Anderson 14 and Hamilton 12.

Northwestern, led by Walker Lambiotte's 24 points, fell to 8-13 and 1-10.

The Illini took the lead for good at 4-3 and were ahead 30-20 with six minutes left in the first half.

Wisconsin 65, No. 8 Iowa 54

MADISON, Wis. — Trent Jackson scored 24 points and Wisconsin held No. 8 Iowa to its lowest point output of the season.

Wisconsin, 13-7 and 5-6 in the Big Ten, outscored the Hawkeyes 17-7 in the final eight minutes of the first half to take a 36-27 lead, then stayed ahead throughout the second half.

Iowa, 17-6 and 5-5, never got closer than five in the second half in suffering its second straight loss. The Hawkeyes entered the game averaging 91 points and had not been held below 67.

No. 9 Syracuse 92, St. John's 69

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Stephen Thompson scored 19 points and No. 9 Syracuse used its fast break to pull away from St. John's.

Syracuse, which avenged a 65-63 loss to St. John's earlier this season, improved to 21-4 and 7-4 in the Big East. St. John's slipped to 13-8 and 5-6.

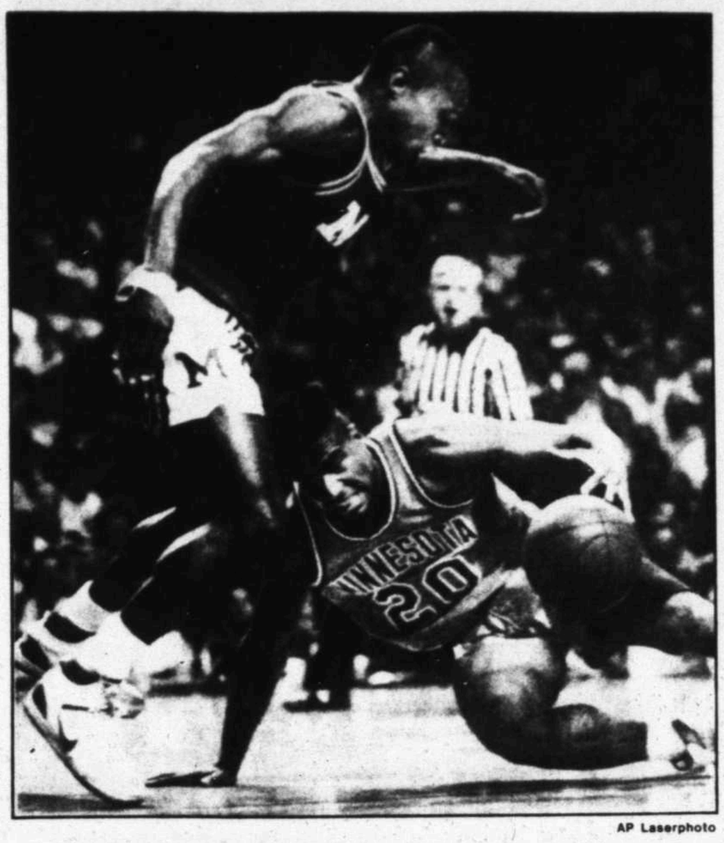

The Orangemen have now registered lopsided victories against three of the four Big East teams that beat them this season. Syracuse plays Connecticut at home on Feb. 28 with a chance to even itself with all four.

Minnesota 88, No. 10 Michigan 80

MINNEAPOLIS — Willie Burton scored five of his 27 points during a 33-second span late in the game to put Minnesota ahead for good, and the Gophers continued their string of home upsets by beating No. 10 Michigan.

Minnesota, 14-7 overall and 6-5 in the Big Ten, has beaten ranked teams in its last four home games — Illinois (at the time No. 1), Iowa (No. 5), Ohio State (No. 15) and Michigan. By beating the Wolverines, Minnesota clinched its first .500 season since 1983-84.

Michigan, 18-5 and 6-4, took its first lead since early in the game at 61-60 on Glen Rice's 3-pointer with 8:07 left.

No. 11 Seton Hall 83, Villanova 77

VILLANOVA, Pa. — John Morton scored 23 points and No. 11 Seton Hall beat Villanova for its first victory on the Wildcats' home court in 15 years.

The Pirates had lost to Villanova eight straight times, last winning at the Villanova Fieldhouse in the 1973-1974 season. Ramon Ramos had 10 points and 12 rebounds for Seton Hall, 21-4 and 8-4 in the Big East.

Seton Hall, helped by 3-point shots by Gerald Greene and Morton, took its first lead three minutes into the second half and was ahead the rest of the way.

No. 14 Duke 86, Maryland 60

DURHAM, N.C. — Danny Ferry scored 24 points as 14th-ranked Duke used a first-half binge to run over Maryland in the Atlantic Coast Conference Saturday.

All five Blue Devils starters contributed to a 16-0 run that covered five minutes and helped Duke take a 22-8 edge. Maryland trailed 40-22 at halftime.

Duke, which hit 60 percent of its field goals in the first half and 57.9 pecent for the game, raised its record to 17-4, 6-4 in the ACC. Maryland dropped to 8-14 and 1-8.

Alaa Abdelnaby started the run with a tip-in at 15:02 and Quin Snyder finished it with a layup off a steal with 10:45 left in the half. The Blue Devils hit seven of nine shots in the decisive stretch.

No. 15 WVU 100, Penn State 67

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Steve Berger scored 22 points, including four 3-pointers, and Chris Brooks added 20 to lead No. 15 West Virginia over Penn State to extend the nation's longest winning streak to 18 games.

Herbie Brooks had 19 points and Ray Foster had 15, 12 of which came during a six-minute, second-half spurt for West Virginia, which improved its record to 18-2 overall and 12-0 in the Atlantic-10.

Darryl Prue scored 12 for the Mountaineers, who never trailed and led by as many as 38.

The Nittany Lions dropped to 13-10 and 8-5 with the loss.

The Mountaineers had a 51-26 lead at the break behind the shooting of Herbie Brooks, who scored 14 points in the first half.

No. 16 Ohio St. 81, Michigan St. 75

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Jerry Francis scored a career-high 27 points and led a late surge that carried No. 16 Ohio State over Michigan State.

Ohio State, unbeaten in nine home games, moved to 17-6 and 6-4 in the conference. Michigan State, which lost its third straight game, dropped to 12-8 and 3-7.

Michigan State led 61-58 with five minutes remaining. But then Grady Mateen, who scored 17 points, hit a short jumper and Jay Burson, who finished with 14, hit consecutive 3-point baskets to give Ohio State a 66-63 lead with 3:39 remaining.

After Steve Smith, who led Michigan State with 24 points, hit a 10-foot jumper to cut the lead to one with 3:29 left, Francis scored the game's next seven points on four free throws and a 3-point shot to put Ohio State ahead 73-65 with 1:45 left.

No. 20 Ga. Tech 75, Wake Forest 70

ATLANTA (AP) — Dennis Scott scored 22 points and Tom Hammonds 19 as No. 20 Georgia Tech survived a late rally to trim Wake Forest.

Tech, 16-7 overall and 5-3 in the ACC, held a 10-point lead with just under six minutes remaining before Wake Forest rallied and cut the lead to 72-70 on Sam Ivy's basket with 44 seconds remaining.

The Demon Deacons failed to score after that and Tech hit the front end of three 1-and-1 free throw situations in the final 34 seconds, one each by Brian Oliver, Hammonds and Scott.

LADIES

Come to think of it, there's not too many lady refs, period. Most people who go to prep and college games — regardless of the sport — hardly ever witness a woman in stripes.

Especially in West Texas.

"You're automatically thought to be weaker and not able to handle the pressure," Pardue said. "I've been told 'She's a good official, but can she handle the pressure of a really fast-paced game?' "

Added Spivey: "There's a lot of times when you have to prove yourself, but I think once you get out there and they see you, there's not a problem anymore.

"When they see you walk on the floor, they think 'Oh my God, here's a woman.' But I've had coaches come up to me and tell me I've done a good job."

Pardue, in her third year back on the floor after taking a four-year break for her children, also officiates women's games in the Lone Star Conference, travelling as far as Canyon and Portales, N.M., to pursue her hobby. Pardue's ultimate dream is to one day officiate in the Southwest Conference.

Both Pardue and Spivey agree that prejudices concerning women, those which have existed in Texas since the beginning of time, seem to be dissipating.

Dee Carter, secretary of the Permian Basin chapter of the Southwest Basketball Officials Association, agreed. "I think the prejudices are diminishing because of their ability," he said. "I think it's still there, but it'll be a long time before you see a woman an official working a men's college basketball game. It's like Pam Postema in baseball.

"But the guys who work with these ladies have complete confidence in them. They know that they're capable and can carry their end of the floor."

A third lady ref, Amy Wertz, just began her first season in the local chapter.

"People aren't used to seeing us," Spivey said. "It's like seeing a lady driving a dump truck. It's the attitude that men do certain things ... women do certain things."

More people appear to be heading toward acceptance of lady referees, and in that regard the two can be considered innovators.

Unless, of course, we discuss the issue of boy's or men's basketball.

Women have not yet gained the acceptance necessary to be considered appropriate for, say, an Angelo State-Abilene Christian men's contest. Or for that matter, a Midland Lee-Odessa Permian boy's game.

Pardue and Spivey, who have worked boy's games in smaller classifications, feel their time may come for more widespread recognition.

Midland College head coach Reggie Franklin agrees, and even welcomes the chance to let Pardue call an MC game.

"I think she's a hard worker," he said. "She has integrity and honesty. I've seen her work a lot of the girls games and she tries to do her best every night which is how you get ahead."

Franklin has not yet seen Spivey call a game.

The female factor aside, officiating a basketball game can be one of the toughest, most underappreciated, overly-abusive, flat out painful jobs today.

"Most coaches, I don't pay a lot of attention to," Pardue said, concerning disputes over calls that often arise in game situations. "You can't help but hear their comments. A coach badgering you about something doesn't help, it breaks your concentration."

"If they say something when I'm walking right by them, you can't help but here," Spivey said. "If it comes down to it, I get rid of the coach to avoid any more technicals. I believe the game is for the kids only. I'm there to keep things going the way they're supposed to and keep the game going ... I don't want to interrupt that flow."

Spivey is 26, single, and said she will "probably never be able to find a husband who would put up with her officiating."

Bill Pardue, though, falls in the understanding group.

"He doesn't complain about me being gone, two, three, four times a week," said Pardue. "There's no way I could officiate if he didn't help as much as he does."

Basketball officials are like umpires in baseball and line judges in football. They do what they do because they enjoy the sport, the situation, the job. Regardless of the abuse that may accompany their lofty position.

"I enjoy the kids. I enjoy the sport, and it's just a way of getting back into it," Pardue said, referring to the years she was known in Stanton as Connie Christon, an All-District forward during her junior and senior years.

Pardue was also the state champion in Class A in the 100- and 220-yard dashes.

Spivey graduated from Commanche (Tex.) High School in 1981, the year the team won its 13th straight district title. A knee injury, however, prevented Spivey from continuing her play in college.

Eventually, Pardue, who received offers for a track scholarship from Texas and Texas Tech upon graduation from high school, sees her dream of officiating in the Southest Conference coming true.

As for Spivey, career comes first, hobby second. But to her, it's a hobby she'll likely never give up.

"I love watching kids grow and get better," she said. "Seems like every game you go to, a kid is hot, and at the peak of their career. It makes you feel good watching them."

Walker wins one for his father

New York Times
News Service

HOUSTON — Kenny Walker of the Knicks almost skipped Saturoday's Gatorade Slam-Dunk Contest because his father died Wednesday.

But he decided to participate, saying he would dedicate his performance to his father.

His father would have been proud. Walker won the eight-man contest, part of this weekend's National Basketball Association All-Star Game festivities, with an acrobatic array of dunks, beating Clyde Drexler of Portland in the final.

Walker's 75-year-old father, Jerome Walker, died in Roberta, Ga., apparently of a stroke. Walker left immediately after winning the contest to attend his father's funeral Monday.

"I felt like my father was with me today," said Walker, who won $20,000. "I had that as motivation. I had a long talk with my mother and she is taking my father's death pretty well.

"She told me that life goes on. If my father had been here, he would've been either watching me today on TV, or he would've been here in person rooting me on."

The 6-foot-8 Walker was not originally scheduled to participate in the contest. But when Larry Nance, Michael Jordan and Dominique Wilkins bowed out with injuries, he was added.

Walker's best dunk came in the premliminary round, when he took off in the lane, turned 360 degrees in midair and dunked forcfully with one hand. The spectators roared, and from then on, Walker was one of their favorites.

The homecourt advantage worked wonders for Calvin Murphy.

Slam Dunk

The 5-9 guard, who spent his entire professional career with the Rockets, winning many games at the buzzer with his outside jumper, did it again. But this time, Murphy, 40, six years removed from the NBA, accomplished the feat for the West team in the Legends Classic at the Summit.

Murphy's fourth 3-point basket of the game beat the East, 54-53, at the buzzer. He finished with 26 points, hitting 11 of 19 shots from the field.

"This is where I have been shooting them from for 14 years," said Murphy, who has a new job as shooting coach for Houston.

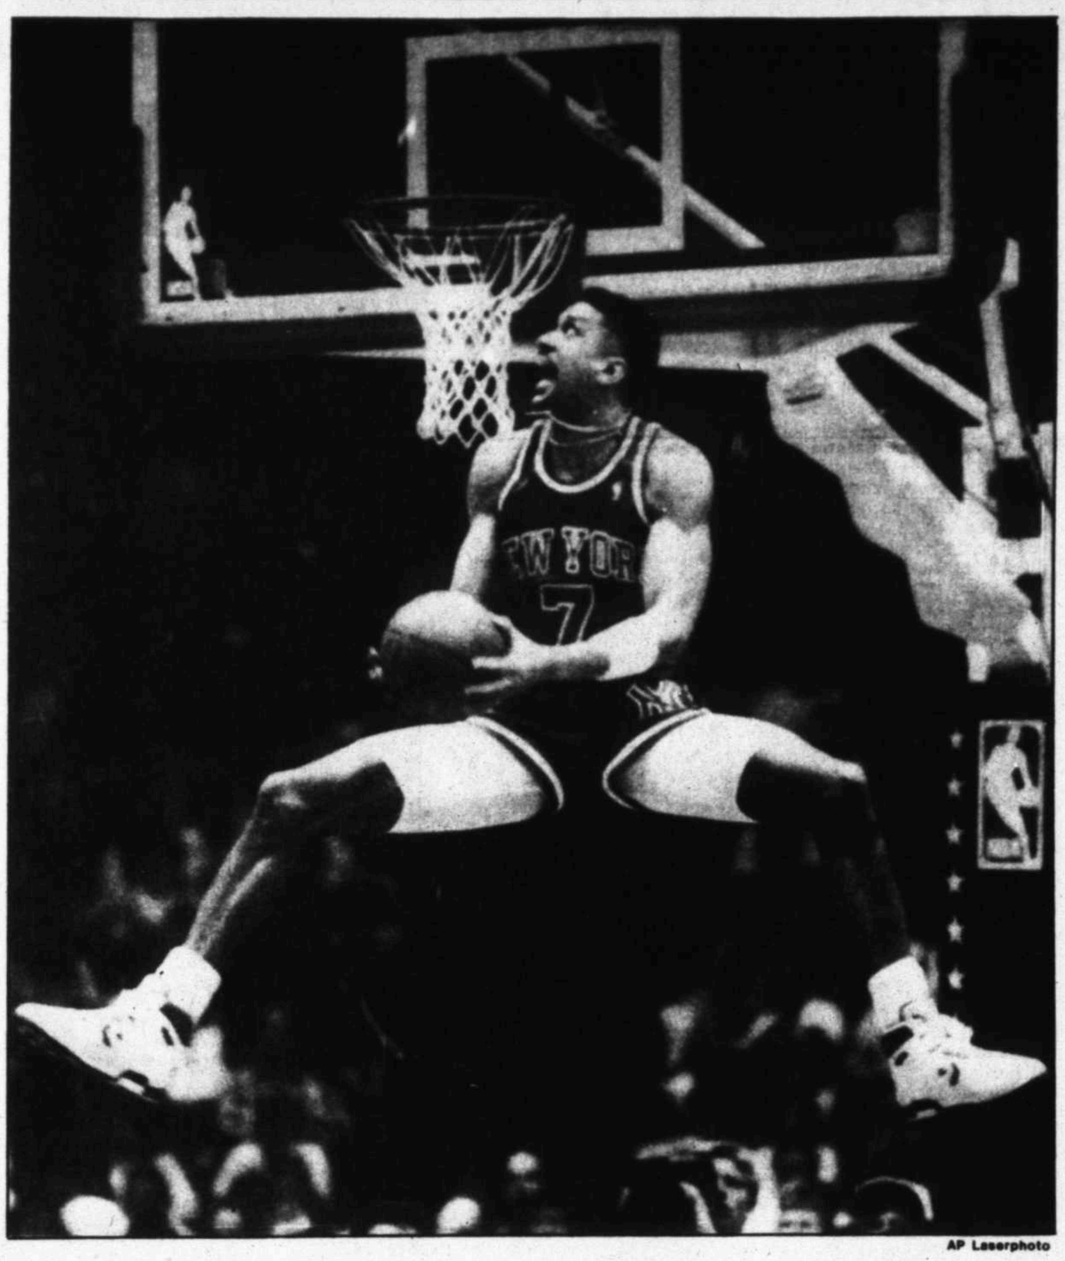

Seconds before Murphy won the game, Bobby Jones, who played as if he could return and help the Philadelphia 76ers immediately, put the East ahead on a 3-point play.

After falling down and juggling the ball for several seconds, Mike Newlin, another former Rocket, got the ball to Murphy for the deciding basket.

The Denver Nuggets will represent the NBA in the third annual McDonald's Open, Oct. 20 and 22 in Rome. Joining the Nuggets in the tournament will be the Italian League champion and two other European teams.

Hal Childs, the league's director of administration, confirmed that the Knicks had been asked to represent the NBA but had refused.

"Our preseason schedule had already been set and the dates would have conflicted," said Al Bianchi, the Knicks' general manager. "We tried to change them but couldn't."

Murphy leads West Legends

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

HOUSTON (AP) — Calvin Murphy, a former Houston Rocket, hit a three-point shot at the buzzer and set an NBA Legends Classic scoring record with 26 points to give the West a 54-53 victory over the East Saturday.

Bobby Jones, once a defensive specialist with the Philadelphia 76ers, stole an in-bounds pass, scored a basket and hit a free throw to give the East a 53-51 lead with six seconds left.

Then, Mike Newlin, another former Rocket, worked the ball to Murphy at the top of the three-point circle and he hit the shot at the buzzer.

Murphy, who eclipsed the late Pete Maravich's scoring record of 18 points set in 1984, was mobbed by his teammates, and was given a standing ovation by the pro-West sellout crowd of 16,000 at The Summit.

Newlin had 14 points for the West.

Jones led the East with 13 points and Spencer Haywood had 10.

The West lost television commentator Rick Barry because of knee injury with 9:05 left in the first half when Jones ran into him. Barry iced down his right knee for the rest of the game and did not play again.

The East led 28-26 at halftime despite 17-points from Murphy.

The game of former NBA All-Stars had its light moments, including a visit from Morganna, the kissing fan, who planted a kiss on Hot Rod Hundley. He missed his next shot.

On one defensive series Earl Monroe, lost a shoe and dashed around trying to distract the East by waving it at them.

The West increased its lead to 4-2 in the series.

Murphy's point , which included four three-pointers, was remarkable in that the Legends only played 12 minute halves with the clock running even during free throws except for the last two minutes.

Seattle's Dale Ellis won the three-point shooting contest Saturday.

Seattle's Ellis wins three-point contest

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — The only way Dale Ellis' victory in the NBA 3-point contest could have been sweeter Saturday would have been a victory over three-time champion Larry Bird.

Ellis, of the Seattle SuperSonics, hit seven shots in a row in the finals and beat Craig Hodges of the Chicago Bulls 19-15.

Rimas Kurtinaitis of the Soviet Union, the first non-NBA player to compete in these preludes to the league's All-Star Game, scored nine points, the lowest of any entry.

Ellis earned the $20,000 first prize and Hodges, also the runnerup in 1986, earned $10,000.

Bird, who won the previous three long-distance shooting contests, is recovering from foot surgery and could not compete.

"It would have been sweeter if I'd beaten Bird because he was the defending champion and was the favorite to win it again," Ellis said.

Ellis was second to Bird last year, and Bird beat Hodges in the 1986 finals.

Hodges shot first in the finals and hit three of his first four shots but he faded on his final position, missing his final four shots.

"I wanted to go out fast and put pressure on him," Hodges said. "That was my thinking, to make him hesitate. But this guy shoots so well in the regular season and I knew he'd shoot well here."

Hodges holds the record of 25 points for one round, scored in 1986, and his 20 points in the first round Saturday was the high for this year's event.

"I was a little winded after the semifinals so I think it helped for Craig to shoot first," Ellis said.

Nine entries shot five balls each from five different locations around the three-point line.

Ellis' total score for the three rounds was 56 points, one short of the record 57 points that Bird established in last year's event at Chicago.

Hodges and Ellis each advanced to the finals with 18 points in the semifinals.

Philadelphia's Gerald Henderson with 13 points and Indiana's Reggie Miller with 11 points, were eliminated in the semifinals.

Boston's Danny Ainge, Denver's Michael Adams, Dallas' Derek Harper, Miami's Jon Sundvold and Kurtinaitis were eliminated in the first round.

Sundvold came into the event leading the NBA in 3-point percentages. Sundvold has hit 32 of 55 3-pointers for a .582 percentage.

Painful memories for Thomas

By TIM LIOTTA

BALTIMORE (AP) — A year after a gold medal eluded her, Debi Thomas finds herself with no endorsements, some regrets, and lots of sour memories from the Calgary Olympics.

Thomas, now a junior pre-med student at Stanford, has participated in some professional ice shows, but has enjoyed no other finanical benefits from her bronze-medal performance at the Winter Games.

"It wasn't me out there skating (in the Olympics)," Thomas said at a press conference Saturday at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships. "It wasn't Debi Thomas."

Thomas, 21, questioned the way her former coach of 12 years, Alex McGowan, prepared her in the months leading up to the Olympics.

"I felt like I really could have used a vacation before the Olympics," Thomas said. "I felt like it was such a long time between the nationals and the Olympics I got sick of skating. It was sad to me because I really wanted to enjoy that Olympic year, but I found myself being bored and not wanting to go into the rink."

Even after attending the Opening Ceremonies, Thomas went back to the rink in Colorado Springs, Colo., to train. When she returned to Calgary, all she saw of the 1988 Winter Games was her practice rink and two hockey games.

"I really think my coach thought if he could get me in there training all those hours that I would automatically go out there and do it," Thomas said. "But I don't work that way at all. Never have, never will."

McGowan said he thought Thomas' training schedule wasn't much different from her preparation for other competitions.

"I thought I trained her for the Olympics the same way I trained her for the World Championships, which she won in Geneva (in 1986)," McGowan said.

The Olympics was billed for Thomas as a battle of 'Dueling Carmens' with Katarina Witt of East Germany. Both had chosen music from the opera for their long program.

Thomas was in first place halfway through the Olympic competition. However, in the final long program, Thomas missed several important jumps and lost the gold medal that was her to win.

Witt wound up with the gold, Elizabeth Manley of Canada took the silver, with Thomas third.

"I wanted the Olympics to be the best performance I ever did," Thomas said. "When I missed that first jump, the first thing that came to my mind was 'That's over.' It was hard for me to come back after that."

Thomas said McGowan "thinks I'm totally blaming him. ... I didn't need him to tell me a turn was bad. I knew that. I needed someone to tell me I could do it. I needed psychological support. Brian (Boitano, the men's gold-medal winner) got that. I didn't."

McGowan said before she took the ice "I told her she was the best in the world. I told her I felt she could do it. I don't know if she's blaming me (for losing) or not. I have my own reasons, which I don't want to reveal because it may hurt her image."

Thomas said McGowan failed from the start to understand what she enjoyed about skating.

"Over all these years he never tried to understand my reasons for skating," Thomas said. "He would ask me, 'Why do you want to go to college when you can make all that money as a professional skater?' I'd say, 'I don't want to be known as a professional skater.' My whole family went to college. I can't do this the rest of my life."

Thomas, who married shortly after the Games, expects to graduate in December of 1990 and to continue to her work in professional ice shows.

As far as not being able to cash in on her Olympic performance, Thomas said, "If Diet Pepsi ever wants me, I'm here."

Sanders decision: Money or school

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — This is Barry Sanders' dilemma — take the NFL's money and run or take his Heisman Trophy and try for two.

"I have a lot to gain by coming back, I have a lot to gain if I leave," Sanders said Saturday when asked if he will return to Oklahoma State for his senior year. "It's a situation where both sides look good."

The All-American running back said while he pondered the options, his family was exploring the legal avenues he could take to become eligible for the NFL draft.

Sanders, having already collected the Heisman Trophy and the Maxwell Award, was honored as Player of the Year at the Walter Camp Football Foundation's annual banquet.

Reports about his plans have been even more numerous than his awards.

After setting NCAA records last fall by rushing for 2,628 yards and scoring 39 touchdowns, Sanders indicated he would be back in 1989.

Last weekend, the Dallas Morning News reported that Sanders had told an NFL team he intended to turn pro. Then he told The Associated Press he had made a decision but declined to say what it was.

Next, he was quoted in the Wichita Eagle-Beacon, his hometown newspaper, as saying he planned to return to Oklahoma State. On Tuesday, when he received the Maxwell Trophy in Philadelphia, he waffled on his plans.

Sanders seemed puzzled by the confusion.

"Basically, I've stuck to the same story," Sanders said Saturdaay. "First I said I was staying, and the only other thing I've said is I'm weighing my options — if I wanted to leave, I might think about it if the opportunity was there.

"I haven't been thinking about leaving as much as people have been making it sound like. Anyone in my position, anyone on earth would think about leaving and going to the pros, and that's the situation I'm in, but people are making it seem like I'm saying I'm going, and that's not the case.

"Right now I'm just going to school and getting ready for next season."

Oklahoma State begins spring practice on Feb. 27 and Sanders plans to be there.

The NFL says he has until April 10 to apply for the April 23-24 draft. Since he is a true junior who has never been redshirted, he would need special permission to enter either the regular draft or the summer supplemental draft.

If the NFL turns him down, his other option would be in the courts and Sanders said his family has been "investigating the legal aspects — what I'd have to go through.

"At first, we were under the impression that I'd have to sign with an agent to become ineligible for the NCAA and that would make me automatically eligible for the draft. A few days ago (my father) said he's not sure that's the case."

Sanders hasn't lacked for advice. His father, William, and brother, Byron, a running back at Northwestern who has declared for the draft as a fourth-year junior), want him to turn pro. His mother, Shirley, would prefer that he stay in school. Either way, it will be Sanders' decision.

"That's how it has to be," he said. "I think this year I've had to grow up a little bit, and one of the things along with growing up is making your own decisions.

"As of right now I'm in school (he was late arriving here for the annual Walter Camp weekend because he didn't want to miss his Thursday classes). I think if I was going to go, if I had my mind just set on going, I don't really know if I'd be in school this semester."

Indecisive memo comical for AL teams

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — At first glance, it appears as though someone in the American League office would have a hard time umpiring or doing anything else that calls for fast, firm decisions.

The league office released this statement on Friday:

"There may, or may not, be a meeting Feb. 20. That meeting may or may not be in person or by teleconference."

An American League spokesman told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that a definite decision on the mysterious meeting would be made by next Wednesday.

The newspaper speculated that the indecisive message was merely advance warning for owners to clear their calendars in case the meeting is scheduled for that day, probably one at which the Texas Rangers' ownership situation will be discussed.

A special meeting, in which the owners are to decide whether Oklahoma billionaire Edward L. Gaylord will be permitted to buy majority interest in the Texas Rangers, had been scheduled for last Wednesday in Chicago. The meeting was postponed by commissioner Peter Ueberroth who is reviewing the Rangers' situation.

Ueberroth reportedly wants to meet other prospective purchasers for the AL franchise.

NBA at midway point: No Magic, Bird or Celts

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

It's the NBA's last All-Star break of the '80s, the decade of the Lakers and the Celtics, Magic and Bird. So who are the hot teams?

Not the Celtics or even the Lakers, who have won eight of the last nine NBA championships between them and have finished with the league's top two records the last five years.

The Celtics are proving that Larry Bird is the most valuable player of the decade, since they are .500 without him.

The two-time defending champion Lakers have proven mortal on the road — losing eight in a row at one point — and are actually being challenged in their own division by the Phoenix Suns, of all teams.

Neither does this season belong to the Detroit Pistons or the Atlanta Hawks, last year's up and coming challengers.

This is a season marked by surprises, streaks, stress and even shootings. Losers have been as notable as winners, a game was canceled because of a riot and a coach collapsed at courtside.

For the record, the division races at the break shape up like this:

Atlantic: New York Knicks, five games ahead of the Philadelphia 76ers.

Central: Cleveland Cavaliers, three games ahead of the Detroit Pistons.

Midwest: Houston Rockets, one game ahead of the Utah Jazz.

Pacific: Lakers, 2½ games ahead of the Suns.

If the season were over today, the playoff teams would be the Knicks, 76ers, Celtics, Cavaliers, Pistons, Bucks, Hawks and Bulls in the East, the Rockets, Jazz, Mavericks, Lakers, Suns, SuperSonics, Warriors and Trail Blazers in the West.

The biggest success stories have been surprises:

■ The Cavaliers, who until last year have not had a winning season since 1977-78 but now boast the NBA's best record.

■ The Knicks, who lost twice as many games as they won the last four years but now have the largest division lead, the best home record at 20-1 and, along with Detroit, the longest winning streak at five.

■ The Golden State Warriors, who at 25-20 under new coach Don Nelson already have won five more games than all of last season.

■ The Suns, who at 29-17 have already won one more than last season.

■ The Milwaukee Bucks, who were supposed to show their age but are tied with the Knicks for the fourth-best record.

■ The expansion Charlotte Hornets, who had the fourth-worst record at 13-35 but lead the league in attendance.

Lest there be any doubt about who's on top these days, just look at who's an All-Star and who's not.

Bird isn't; he's been out since the sixth game of the season for surgery to remove bone spurs from both heels. The only Celtic on the roster is Kevin McHale, and there are those who argue that Knicks forward Charles Oakley deserved it more.

Magic Johnson isn't an All-Star, either, knocked out by a hamstring injury Wednesday night in the Lakers' last game before the break. Two of his teammates are on the roster, but one of them is Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, added in Magic's place as a reward for his 20-year career, not his 10-point average this season.

Instead, the East team includes three Cavaliers — plus Coach Lenny Wilkens — and it could easily have been four, since Cleveland's leading scorer, Ron Harper, didn't make it. The West team includes three from Utah.

One young star who isn't there is Danny Manning, the No. 1 draft choice out of Kansas who was just beginning to give the Los Angeles Clippers some hope of respectability when he tore a ligament in his knee. He's out for at least a year with a career-threatening injury.

Pity the Clippers. They could almost be renamed the Losing Clippers. Not only did they lose Manning, they lost his Olympic teammate, Charles Smith, for 15 games, too, and — most embarrassing — out-lost the expansion Miami Heat.

The Heat lost its first 17 games, the worst start ever for an NBA team. The Clippers lost 19 straight — one short of the single-season record — before beating Houston 114-111 at home Wednesday night. One of the losses let the Lakers break their own eight-game road losing streak, the longest of the Magic Era.

For all that, it wasn't surprising that the Clippers also lost their coach, when Gene Shue was fired in the middle of the losing streak and replaced by Don Casey.

That was the only outright dismissal in the first half, but not the only change. Jack Ramsey quit as coach of the Indiana Pacers, and interim replacement George Irvin was replaced by Dick Versace. Frank Layden quit as coach of the Utah Jazz, saying basketball had become too much business and not enough sport.

The Sacramento Kings' Jerry Reynolds didn't quit, but he collapsed near the end of a game and was diagnosed as the victim of stress, exhaustion and poor eating habits.

Miami was forced to cancel a game against the Suns during football's Super Bowl week because of rioting. At 5-40, the Heat also is threatening the all-time low number of victories, set by the 9-73 Philadelphia 76ers in 1972-73.

One individual record fell when the Denver Nuggets' Michael Adams went 0-for-6 on 3-point shots in a 117-115 loss to the New Jersey Nets on Jan. 24, the first time in 79 games dating to Jan. 28, 1988, that Adams failed to make at least one "3."

Cleveland has the best road record in the NBA at 14-9 after going 11-30 away from home last season.

"The thing I like most about this team is its character," Wilkens said. "They never quit or hang their heads."

"They are beautifully coached, tough to defend and they've got some outstanding players," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said. "They're a team that could be headed for the NBA title."

The Cavaliers have made a strong division stronger still.

The Pistons, who lost to the Lakers in seven games for the NBA title last season, have hardly been disappointing, sporting the second-best record in the league at 31-13.

The Bucks are 15 games over .500, and Atlanta is nine games over, even though new acquisitions Moses Malone and Reggie Theus haven't quite meshed yet.

With Michael Jordan again leading the NBA in scoring but still not getting enough support, the Chicago Bulls are fifth in the Central but still on a pace to win almost 50 games.

In the West, the second half promises to be kinder to the the Lakers, whose early schedule was top-heavy with road games.

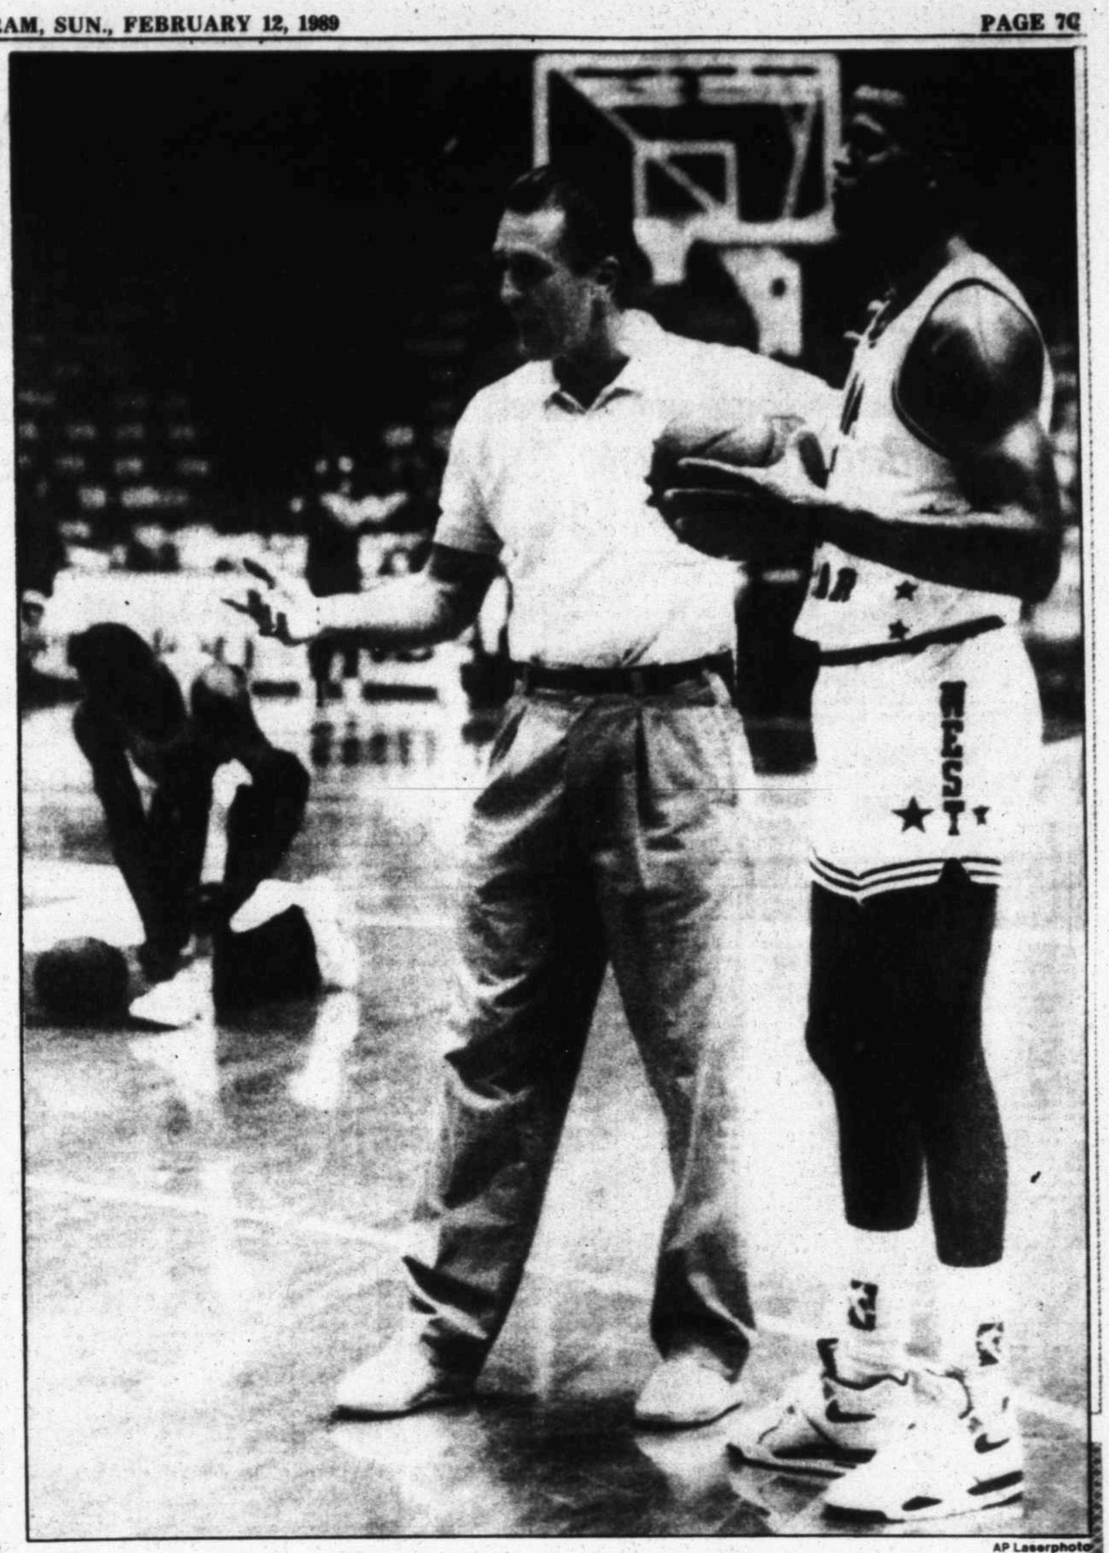

"We have guys playing 50 percent as well on the road as at home," Coach Pat Riley said.

At home, though, the Lakers are 20-2 and still the team to beat in the West if not in the NBA altogether.

Warriors All-Star forward Chris Mullin, who was undergoing alcohol rehabilitation this time last year, is the league's No. 6 scorer and guard Mitch Richmond is the highest-scoring rookie. The Warriors have excelled despite playing much of the season with 6-foot-8 Larry Smith at center because of injuries to Ralph Sampson.

All the juggling could make Nelson coach of the year, but the Suns' Cotton Fitzsimmons might have something to say about that.

The Suns, who were 10th in the NBA in scoring with 108.5 points per game in 1987-88, have improved to No. 2 with an average of 117.1. Free-agent signee Tom Chambers, sixth man Eddie Johnson and second-year player Armon Gilliam are the big scorers, while Kevin Johnson, acquired in last year's trade that sent Larry Nance to Cleveland, is developing into a top-grade point guard.

ALL-STARS

Len Wilkens, who was Seattle's coach when he led the West in the 1979 and 1980 All-Star games, will coach the East by virtue of leading the Cleveland Cavaliers to the NBA's best record at midseason.

Although none will be starting, Wilkens can call on three Cavaliers on the bench for the East in center Brad Daugherty, forward Larry Nance and guard Mark Price. Ron Harper, Cleveland's leading scorer, was not selected, however.

Other East reserves are center Patrick Ewing and guard Mark Jackson of New York and forwards Kevin McHale of Boston and Terry Cummings of Milwaukee.

The West reserves besides Abdul-Jabbar and Chambers are guard Clyde Drexler and center Kevin Duckworth of Portland, center Mark Eaton and guard John Stockton of Utah, forward James Worthy of the Lakers and forward Chris Mullin of Golden State.

Valentine's Delight

The circular corner fireplace is the focal point of the family room which also has an entertainment cabinet. This room opens onto a covered patio which extends the length of the house.

If you are trying to find a way to tell your Valentine how special they are and a dozen red roses or a box of chocolates will not suffice, then consider the gift of this week's featured home. Located in one of Midland's most exclusive neighborhoods — Warwick — any Valentine would relish the elegance and quality that this two-story home affords.

In this neighborhood, there has been a resurgence of young couples and this five-bedroom home will fit the needs of any family. The home has an upstairs area, complete with a huge gameroom, that is ideal for older children. Downstairs, there are two bedrooms situated down the hall from the master bedroom that are well suited for smaller children.

The appealing exterior only makes the interior of the home more intriguing to a visitor who passes by. Situated on the corner, the design of the house is very different due to it "wrapping around" the spacious lot.

A LARGE entrance serves as the hub of the home because it leads to many areas in the house — the master bedroom, family room, formal living room and upstairs area. Pale yellow wainscoting highlights the entrance hall that is big enough for a antique bench along one wall.

The sequestered master bedroom is situated to the left of the entrance and a chaise lounge is a wonderful place for that special Valentine to relax in by an angled window. The window provides a lovely view of the front yard. The room has pale blue carpeting and a large walk-in closet that has a wall of built-in drawers and shelves.

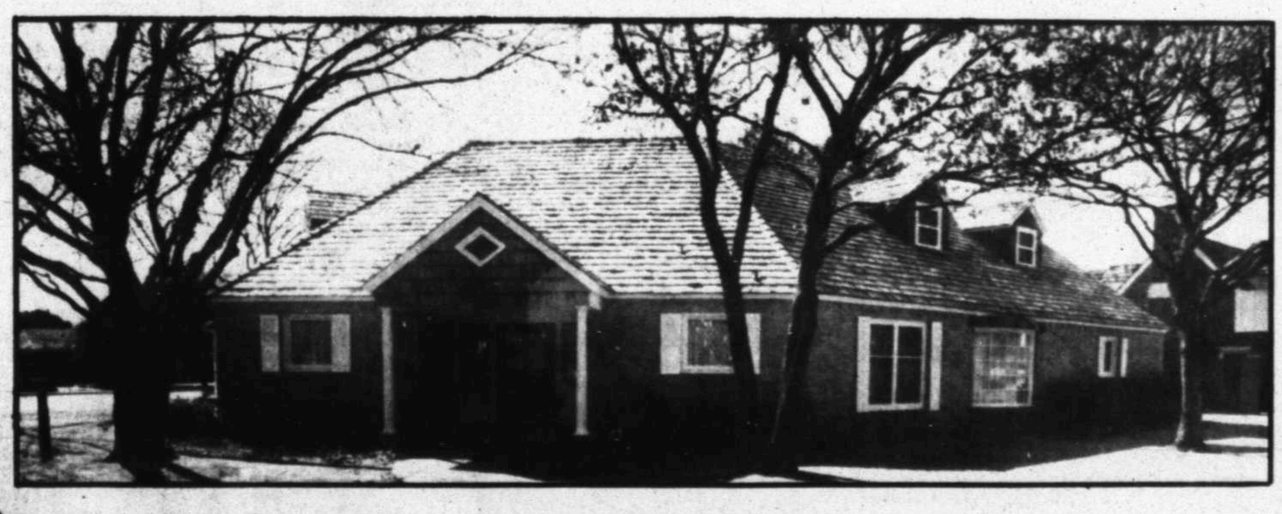

A curved marble vanity with a make-up area highlights the master bath. The vanity is situated in front of a large window where draperies can be closed when privacy is needed. A built-in shower and a square tub are the other amenities in the bath.

To the right of the entrance and next to the powder room, French doors open into the formal dining room. A cozy sitting area is arranged at one end of the room and a circular window provides a beautiful view of the surrounding neighborhood. This room flows into the formal dining room which is large enough to accommodate a dining room table that could easily seat eight guests, as well as a china cabinet and a server.

THE ENTRANCE steps down into the rustic family room and focuses on a rounded corner fireplace. This room has a brick floor, pale yellow paneling and an entertainment center. Sliding glass doors lead to a beautifully landscaped backyard. The patio extends around the length of the home and the yard is shaded by many aged trees.

The eat-in kitchen is situated to the right of the family room. Winter sunlight from the kitchen window brighten this room which has a Frigidaire oven and cooktop, as well as a Kenmore dishwasher.

Please see DELIGHT, Page 2D

This Warwick addition home was built 31 years ago and the exterior is just as stylish today as it was in 1958. Situated on a corner, the home wraps around the entire spacious lot.

DELIGHT

A utility room with space for a freezer is located to the right of the kitchen and has a large storage closet. A door leads to a paneled carport that can accommodate three vehicles, with additional parking off this area.

A long hall at the left end of the family room leads to the other bedrooms downstairs. Access to this hall can also be made from a door in the master bathroom and a door in the front side yard provides a private entrance for guests.

Both of these bedrooms have shuttered windows and large walk-in closets. These rooms are connected by a bath that has a vanity with two sinks, and built-in shower and a bathtub.

A winding staircase in the entrance hall leads upstairs to a fantastic haven for older children. The stairs open onto a large sitting area where children can have their own place to watch their favorite movies.

Two bedrooms are located off the sitting area and each have windows which provide a view of the backyard and spacious closets. These bedrooms have access to a hall bath which has a built-in shower and dresser.

Although this upstairs area seems to be too good to be true, an enormous gameroom that is found at the right of the sitting area makes this area absolutely perfect. This room can easily accommodate a pool table, a game table and a small sitting area. A built-in cabinet at one end has a small refrigerator, cabinets for storage and shelves for displaying trophies.

The other amenities of this Valentine's delight is a sprinkler system, an alarm system, wood paneling, crown moulding and ceiling fans.

The Carriage Company Realtors are offering this approximately 5,000 square foot home for $399,000.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

French doors open into the formal living room which is located to the right of the home's entrance. An intimate sitting area is ideal for entertaining guests and flows in the formal dining room.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Inventory, overpriced listings, Langston Realtors

Q. Suddenly I see for sale signs all over town. Is the MLS inventory of properties increasing and, if so, do you think this will precipitate a renewal of softening in real estate prices? R.A.

Langston

A. The MLS inventory is still stable — between 1100 and 1125 as compared to 1150-1165 in the fall. There does seem to be an increase in signs, but I believe this is due to a little more activity in the market created by company transfers that were postponed until after the holidays. Remember, "what goes out usually comes in": the increase in activity in home sales during the past few weeks indicates to me that while Midland is losing some corporate transferees, they are being replaced by new buyers coming into our market. Our associates Ronnie Williams, Pat Paxton, Laura Manulik and Sarah Collins, among others, have been particularly busy assisting incoming buyers. Please be assured, however, that we will monitor the market and will convey our concern if a trend for more listings versus fewer sales becomes significant.

Q. The home next door to me has been on the market for two years! This is a good neighborhood and the property is in pretty fair condition; why won't it sell? B.L.J.

A. Not knowing the specific property, I can only generally answer your question. However, when a property does not sell for an extended period of time, most of us with Langston's believe that in as many as 85% of the cases the property is overpriced; poor condition of the property, architecture that does not blend with the rest of the neighborhood, and a home in the highest end of the market where there are currently so few buyers for the remaining 15%. If a property is in more than one of these categories, (ie, is overpriced, is in less than optimum condition, and "sticks out like a sore thumb" in the neighborhood) the problem is really compounded. How does a seller know his neighborhood-/price range are being shown, if he is getting lots of lookers but no offers, or if the market comparables prepared by his Realtor indicate his home is above the competition, then it is undoubtedly overpriced.

Also, remember that the selection of a listing agent who is enthusiastic and competent, who has strong support from a larger, aggressive agency sales team and who has respect and cooperative working relationships with Realtors in all other offices is vitally important. Putting a sign up, an ad in the paper and a listing in MLS are only the first steps in selling a property. In our competitive market it is just as important, if not more so, to price the property right, extensively "sell" to the other 305 Realtors in multiple, and develop an innovative marketing plan. A case in point: one of our associates, Linda Miller, did just that last week and when she and Gloria Lott, another of our agents, put Linda's new listing under contract in three days!

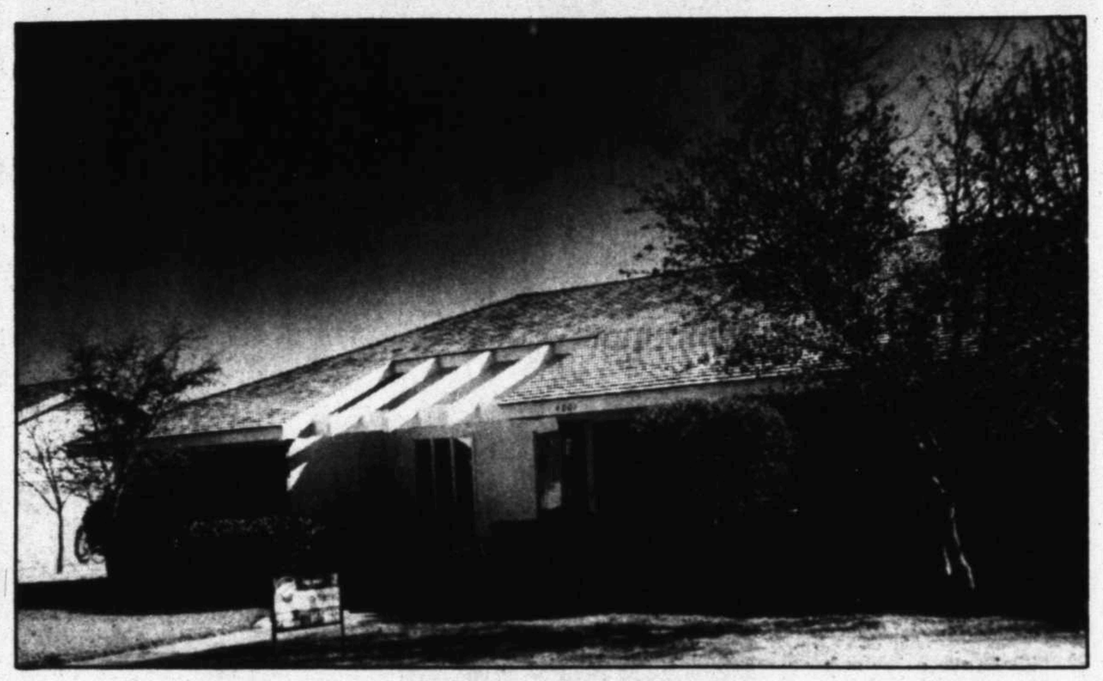

Q. How does Langston Realtors rate in size in real estate firms in the city? J.A.

A. We are the largest firm in the city and we are also the oldest multiple agent firm still owned by its original founders. With 41 full time licensed agents, we are 14% larger than our nearest competitor, according to the Midland Board of Realtors records. The growth of our company has been consistent and gratifying, especially with the intensive recruitment programs being conducted by some of the newer and smaller offices.

That our agents choose to remain with our firm, and that it continues to grow with new, unsolicited associates, is not as much a compliment to the Langston organization as it is to the loyalty, cooperation, pride and friendship that exists among our sales associates. We really do like and respect one another and work well together, a very important factor in our 24 hour, every day stressful position.

RE/MAX of Midland has a corporate listing in Crestgate that is designed around an interior courtyard. This contemporary townhouse features two living areas, four bedrooms and three bathrooms.

RE/MAX has affordable Crestgate townhome

BY JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

A contemporary townhome located in northwest Midland in the Crestgate subdivision is being offered by RE/MAX of Midland for $114,750. This four-bedroom, three-bath home is designed around a courtyard where the formal living room, family room and master bedroom all have large windows that view the courtyard.

Upon entering this home, a visitor immediately notices the parquet flooring and the deep green wallcovering which adorns the walls. A window in the entrance hall provides a view of a landscaped front flower bed.

The formal living room has a deep teal green carpeting and sliding glass doors provide access to the interior courtyard that has a decked patio. The living room could easily accommodate a sitting area to the right and a formal dining area to the left.

The kitchen and breakfast room are situated to the left of the formal living area and shades of burgundy provide a dramatic contrast to the white cabinets. The breakfast room has a pass-through into the living room for serving guest when entertaining formally.

A complementary wallpaper in shades of burgundy, peach, rose, mauve and blue highlight the kitchen which has a General Electric self-cleaning oven, cooktop and dishwasher. The kitchen also has a Compactall trash compactor, space for a built-in microwave, specially designed cabinets and a built-in desk.

From the kitchen, the tile gallery leads to the spacious family room with a vaulted ceiling. A white brick fireplace has built-in cabinets and bookshelves situated on each side. A wet bar is located at one end and is decorated in a tropical wallpaper. There is also room for a game table by the wet bar.

The tile hall extends back into the master bedroom which also has a wall of windows that view the courtyard. Leading into the master bath, a short hall has two walk-in closets with built-ins. Navy and cream decorate the walls of the bath which was designed with two separate areas. The lady's side has a long vanity with a make-up area and a bathtub. The gentlemen's area has a built-in shower and lots of storage cabinets.

A utility room is conveniently situated between the master bedroom and two of the home's other bedrooms. One bedroom is highlighted by a floral fabric and a built-in desk. The second bedroom has pale rose walls. Each of these rooms have a large walk-in closet and windows which provide a view of the backyard.

A bath connects these two bedrooms but access is also made into the bath from the hall into the bathing area of the bathroom for guests. Each room has a private access into the vanity area which has two sinks and a make-up area.

A fourth bedroom is located to the right of the formal living room and is well suited for guests or an older child. If an additional bedroom is not required, this room could be used as a study. The room has a private bath with a bathtub.

The other amenities of this contemporary home are a three car garage with automatic door openers, a sprinkler system, storage closets, glass fireplace screen with brass trim and ceiling fans.

This approximately 3,000 square foot home is a corporate RE/MAX listing and an associate would be delighted to give you a tour of this affordable townhome.

Make listing very inviting

It's the dead of winter, not fit for man nor beast to be house hunting. You're competing with a zillion other sellers in an oversupplied market. And, your property is vacant. How can you make your listing inviting to prospects?

The answer is to maintain it as though occupied and give it a "lived in" feeling.

First, do all the things you would do for an occupied property which will show pride of ownership:

- Spring clean after you move out, paying particular attention to those non-routine cleaning jobs--baseboards, windows, cobwebs in ceiling corners--and make bathrooms, kitchen and appliances sparkle.
- Make sure everything is in good repair. Some buyers may worry that many small items in disrepair may actually indicate an unseen major problem. So, fix those drippy faucets, squeaky doors, cracked windowpanes and other minor things you've been living with. Don't risk creating an atmosphere of neglect.
- Give your property a fresh smell. Eliminate any mold or mildew in kitchen or baths. Steam clean or replace carpets if needed to rid your home of pet or smoke odors. Prop open the door of a cleaned refrigerator, if unplugged, to avoid unpleasant smells. Change the furnace and air conditioning filters and run a cut up lemon through the garbage disposal.
- Turn off outside water cutoffs and wrap outside faucets to prevent freezing. Finally, invest in some light timers and set lights to go on and off as if the property were occupied.

Houseplant lighting, care essential

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Have you ever noticed that people who seem gifted with magic in their care and display of houseplants are often people who have lived in the same house or apartment for many years?

I have a friend who has lived in the same home she and her husband built more than 30 years and six grown children ago. During the course of those years she has become completely familiar with which sites and windows suit which types of houseplants to perfection.

Her Christmas cactus and Easter cactus plants are loaded to the point of distress each in their appointed season every year. She knows exactly where to stash them to set them up for abundant blooming.

And as the house stands in a clearing on a large property, there are no trees close by to confuse the patterns and intensities of light entering the windows of the house.

In my own home, a large, unshaded window facing north in our living room and south-facing windows dapple-shaded by several nearby groupings of tall native evergreen trees make it hard to figure which are the bright-light windows and which are not.

Add to that the fact that we have thinned out some of the trees close to the house at intervals since we have lived here and it's no wonder the plants, like their owners, sometimes get confused over the exact nature of the light exposure at each window.

In the end, there is no real substitute for establishing, through trial and error, the best sites in each of our homes for different types of houseplants.

However, to make a good stab at installing a plant in the best possible spot indoors in the first place, it's important to know the light requirement of the houseplants we grow and want to acquire. It's also a help to recognize the signs our plants give us that they are suffering from too much or too little light.

During the fall and winter in low-light, rainy winter regions too much light would be a rare problem indeed. Almost all houseplants during these typically dark times can use all the light they can get — especially flowering plants like African violets and impatiens, episcia (flame violet), begonias and Cape primrose (streptocarpus).

Though some flowering plants, such as geraniums and flowering maples, need very strong light and at least some direct sun daily to continue flowering in winter (meaning some supplemental lighting or at least a sun porch in low-light areas), almost all our indoor plants do best in bright indirect light. This means strong light short of any warm, direct sunlight.

This largest group of houseplants includes most of our popular foliage plants like dracaena and dieffenbachia, Chinese evergreen, palms and ferns, jade plant, grape ivy, prayer plant, philodendron, pothos and the different types of indoor fig (ficus) plants along with indoor flowering plants such as clivia and spathe flower (peace lily).

Along with bright indirect light this great majority of the plants we grow indoors thrives also in comfortably warm room temperatures and air that is moderately humid and freely circulating around them. Of this large group of houseplants, there are a few that will do all right in dimly lit areas. Some likely prospects for such spots are grape ivy, Chinese evergreen, pothos, philodendron and sansevieria (snake plants).

It's fairly safe to try a plant in a spot if it's possible to cast a shadow on the area during its brightest time of day. But if a plant begins to show signs of turning pale, weak and spindly, or the older leaves turn yellow and drop off while the other leaves look wilted, then you probably will have to give up trying to grow plants at that spot.

Take great care in watering plants in low-light areas during the winter. As the plant and its root system will be relatively inactive because of the low light levels, it won't be needing much water. Check that the top soil in the pot is quite dry before watering the plant.

And don't fertilize any but actively growing or flowering plants during the winter. Stop feeding them in November and resume fertilizing with new growth in late winter or early spring.

Combine mirror with storage space

It's convenient having a mirror over your bathroom sink or vanity, isn't it? But are you using that space to its fullest potential? You are if you combine the advantages of that mirror with the convenience of storage space. And you can do that very easily and attractively, with a bathroom cabinet.

If you don't have a bathroom cabinet, you may be cheating yourself out of some valuable storage space, according to a manufacturer of bathroom cabinets.

A bath cabinet provides safe, convenient storage for many items you would like to keep out of a child's reach, like medicine and various toiletries. It is also the ideal place to store many of the smaller things you like to keep at your fingertips when in the bathroom.

Bath cabinets are very easy to install and take up no more wall space than most mirrors. And they are available in many attractive styles complementing bathrooms different sizes and decors.

- Surface-mount cabinets are easily attached directly to the wall without the need to create a wall opening.

Love is in the Air

As the old cliche' goes, "Love is in the air," and at no time of the year is it more apparent than around Valentine's Day. Red hearts, pink cupids, lacy patterns and beautiful roses adorn greeting cards, store windows and candy packages.

And to celebrate this day of love, researchers at Hallmark estimate that nearly 900 million valentines will be exchanged this year, while researchers at American Greetings believe the number will be more than 1 billion.

This makes Valentine's Day the second largest (with Christmas being first) card- and gift-giving holiday in the United States, accounting for approximately 22 percent of all seasonal cards sold.

A FACT to lend credence to these estimates is that an estimated $735 million was spent by Americans on Valentine's Day cards and gifts in 1988.

And although Valentine's Day is thought of as a day for lovers, statistics show it is really a day for teachers and children.

According to information from both greeting card companies, teachers are the number one recipient of valentines, followed in order by children, mothers, wives and sweethearts.

One reason for teacher's and children's popularity on this day of love is the tradition of exchanging classroom valentines. And with more children attending day care and kindergarten, the market for this age group is expected to continue to increase.

Considering the popularity of this holiday of love, it's sort of ironic that historians aren't quite sure of who St. Valentine was or the origin of Valentine's Day.

There are, however, numerous theories about the holiday.

Some experts believe the day is connected with one or more saints of the early Christian Church, which had at least two saints named Valentine.

ACCORDING TO one story, the first valentine was reportedly sent in 270 A.D. by St. Valentine on the eve of his execution for refusing to renounce Christianity. The note was sent to his jailer's blind daughter thanking her for her kindness when she brought him food and delivered his messages. It was signed, "from your Valentine."

At least three of history's eight St. Valentines had feasts Feb. 14.

But other authorities have different theories about the origins of Valentine's Day.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Those who attended the recent performance by The Peking Opera at Lee High School auditorium will long remember the evening. A benefit (the first ever) for the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame, the opera was a dazzling spectacle of performing arts, including song and dance, juggling, martial arts, mime and acrobatics.

According to Nancy (Mrs. Buddy) Anguish, benefit chairman and immediate past president of the museum's board of trustees, the event was a resounding success, not only financially, but from a cultural point of view, offering Westerners a fascinating glimpse of an Oriental art form steeped in centuries of tradition.

Among those spotted enjoying the evening's entertainment were Georgia and Mayor Carroll Thomas, Carol and Jack Steele, Ruth Cole, Jane and Bob Ward and son, Gil, Mary and Bob Griffith, Caroline (Mrs. Marty) Miller, Debora Dillard and Brune and Ricardo Torres.

The cast of 60 was given the red carpet treatment upon their arrival at Midland International Airport, where they were greeted by the museum staff and members of the Midland Chamber of Commerce M Squad.

On the day preceding their performance, the cast members visited the Petroleum Museum and were served a barbecue lunch. Later that afternoonn, Charlotte (Mrs. Ralph) Williamson entertained the group at Karen's restaurant atop NCNB Texas National Bank, affording them a panoramic view of the city.

Underwriters, sponsors and patrons for the benefit were treated to a pre-performance dinner at the Petroleum Club. Beforehand, cocktails were served in the atrium, and wine was provided by American Wine and Import Co. and served by company representatives Jay Warren and David Ray in the Wildcatter Room.

The unique dinner table decorations were fashioned from Chinese kites, flowers and Chinese language newspapers. Kites also adorned the club's staircase.

Honorary chairpersons were former Midlanders, The President of the United States and Mrs. George Bush. Honorary co-chairpersons here for the occasion were The Consul General of the People's Republic of China and Mrs. Li Laoli of Houston, who were accompanied by Minister of Cultural Affairs Consul Ding Wei.

ONE OF THE MOST elegant parties of the season was the annual President's Ball at the Petroleum Club. As always, it was a gala affair, with music by the Mal Fitch Orchestra of Dallas, a lavish cocktail buffet and striking decor.

Approximately 350 persons attended the black-tie event, which honored outgoing president Clint Hurt.

The members dined on fish and shellfish, escargots, pork, duck, sirloin of beef, assorted salads, imported cheeses and fresh fruits. Dessert included petits fours and crepe suzettes, which were prepared flaming in front of the guests.

The main serving table featured a seven-foot high arrangement of red roses, flanked by tall candelabara. Additional serving tables were adorned with ice sculptures and rose centerpieces. Individual tables were centered with tiered arrangements of red roses and votive candles.

During the ten o'clock intermission, club manager Peter Ditley introduced the 1989 board of directors and expressed appreciation to the retiring board.

Bill Marshall is the newly-elected president. Other board members are Dick Beveridge, Arlen Edgar, Arden Grover, Craig Johnson, Robert C. Leibrock, Joe O'Neill III, Wilber Rocchio and Tim Thompson.

THE LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY Permian Basin Alumni celebrated Mardi Gras last weekend with a costume party at the Saddle Club Apartments clubhouse.

Some 60 alumni and guests joined in the festive occasion, which included dinner and the crowning of a king and queen, George Welsh and Connie (Mrs. Larry) Champagne.

Alums Clay Othold, Dominick Bazile, Warren Bell and Charles Unger each prepared jambalaya from a favorite recipe, and Karen Holgate cooked red beans for the throng. Two King Cakes were shipped in from New Orleans for the occasion.

Decorations featured the carnival colors of purple, gold and green and "throws," including beads and doubloons, which are traditionally tossed from the Mardi Gras parade floats into the crowd. Colored masks and streamers suspended from the windows also decorated the party rooms.

Among the partyers wee Judy and Mark Jones, Becky and Mike Nieman, Linda and Kevin Hughes, Phil Monticello, Renee and R.D. Pitre and Don Troha.

IT WASN'T EXACTLY smooth sailing for Lottie and Ed Eubanks on a recent South Pacific cruise, but definitely an adventure to chalk up to being frequent travelers. After several rough days at sea, which kept passengers confined to their staterooms, they learned they had just been through a typhoon.

But the rest of the two-week cruise went splendidly. They visited a number of islands, including Fiji, Samoa, Pago Pago, Bora Bora and Tahiti. The couple found the Polynesian people friendly and the scenery lush and beautiful beyond description. They were awed by the abundance of gorgeous flowers, which bloom year-round, and the tropical fruits, there for the picking.

They were met at some stops by Polynesian bands, and when enplaning for home at Tahiti, each traveler was presented a unique lei made of shells.

Gone 23 days, the couple also visited points of interest in Auckland, New Zealand; Melbourne and Sydney, Australia, and the surrounding countryside.

The couple feel in retrospect they might have realized it was going to be an adventuresome trip when their plane was struck by lightning en route from Midland to Dallas at the very outset.

Dating videos help all but camera-shy

New York Times News Service

TEMPE, Ariz. — First there were yentas. Next came great aunts. And let us not forget catalogs for mail order brides.

All — for better or worse — served as go-betweens for people looking for would-be lifelong valentines.

Then 20 years ago, "personals" exploded onto newspapers' advertising sections, giving singles a whole new way to meet.

But personal ads in newspapers have one distinct disadvantage. Unless a photo is enclosed, respondents have no idea what their prospective Mr. or Mrs. Right looks like.

"Video introductions" have solved that deficiency. With a VCR or two in almost every home, it's no wonder that introduction services by video have mushroomed.

But even they have their own unique problem, one that makes many singles still prefer newspaper ads: Most people are camera-shy.

Chuck Gianetto found this out when he started Meet Me On Video in the fall of 1987.

To this day, he still gets many more calls than he does customers. It's the thought of being interviewed on camera that scares people off.

Yet, other fears have prompted 200-plus singles to meet people on Meet Me On Video.

One, they hate being stood up, as they sometimes are when arranging a rendezvous with someone through the personals.

Two, there's no guarantee that a person met through the personals is actually single.

To address the above concerns, Gianetto instituted what he calls "deterrents" to eliminate what he calls "the weirdos."

Those who join Meet Me On Video must provide their Social Security and driver's license numbers. But the chief deterrent is the video itself. Gianetto says the chances are nil of married people exploiting his service, because they would be on video for all the world — and their spouses — to see.

Gianetto started Meet Me On Video after noting that even in singles groups people have a hard time meeting one to one. Business is growing, but he still has no plans on leaving his full-time job, although video introduction services in other parts of the country have expanded to a much greater size.

"When I started this, I had no clue there was such a thing as a video service," says Gianetto at his home in the Phoenix suburb of Tempe.

"This is the God-honest truth. I made this up from scratch. Everything I have is my own design. You should have seen it at first. Now, I have refined it to the point where it's nice and simple."

At least two people have been satisfied enough with Gianetto's "nice and simple" service to sign on for a second year.

Robie Roberson of Phoenix was first attracted to Meet Me On Video because of its low price, which at $175 a year makes it the lowest priced video introduction service in Arizona's largest metropolitan area. She spent this after having wasted nearly $500 with a national computer match-up service.

"This cuts through the red tape. The same 20 questions are asked of all the people. Their answers come from inside," says the divorced mother of two.

Gianetto interviews his customers in their homes. And he doesn't give them the questions in advance; hence, everyone who doesn't have a friend who gave them the questions has to answer spontaneously.

Once the five- to 10-minute tape is done, it's added to the appropriate age-level master tape. These then become available to Meet Me On Video members who view the tapes in the privacy of their own home.

VALENTINE

Some trace it to an ancient Roman festival called Lupercalia, a celebration held in honor of the pastoral god Lupercus to ensure protection from the wolves. This custom was celebrated Feb. 15.

As a part of the celebration, Roman maidens placed their names in an urn at the public square and each bachelor drew a name to determine his "blind date" for the coming year.

Still others link it with an old English belief that birds choose their mates Feb. 14, therefore, it was believed humans did the same.

The link between Valentine's Day and people in love seems to have evolved through some of these theories over time. It also is possible that the link stems from the Norman word, "galantin," meaning "a lover of women." (The letters "V" and "g" were once interchangeable, according to etymologists.)

In reality, Valentine's Day probably came from a combination of all of these sources; plus the belief that spring is a time for lovers.

The earliest known valentine, however, was sent in 1415 by Charles, Duke of Orleans, to his French wife while he was a prisoner in the Tower of London during the Battle of Agincourt.

Several years later, King Henry V sent Catherine of Valois valentine verses which were secretly composed for him by John Lydgate, the first anonymous writer of standard love rhymes.

After 1723, exchanging valentines became popular in America with the import booklets containing verses and messages that could be copied onto gilt-edged letter paper. But sending valentines became a booming business during the Revolutionary War.

Commercial valentines appeared in about 1800, and around 1840 the first "mechanical" valentine was created. By pulling a tab, a figure or object on the card would move.

Esther Howland, of Worcester, Mass., was the first American manufacturer of valentines. She had seen a valentine from Great Britain that intrigued her, so in 1847, she began to make samples and take orders.

Then she hired a staff of young women to produce the cards by hand.

Now, Hallmark offers approximately 2,000 different valentine designs, and American Greeting has more than 1,300 cards offering something to tickle almost every heart's desire. Available cards range from general valentine's greetings to specialty cards for mom, dad, sister, brother, grandparents, god children, step-parents and any other relative or special friend imaginable.

Musical cards, giant-sized cards and cards made with laser cuts, glitter metalics, fabrics, scratch-and-sniff and stickers are just a few of the varieties available.

So, even though it appears that Valentine's Day originated as a day for lovers, and to some extent still has that stereotype, it has become a holiday that offers an opportunity to tell others they are cared about.

Tips for school shopping offered

New York Times News Service

Marrty Harrison, Okemo, Vt., and Stu Campbell, Heavenly Valley, Calif., suggest asking these questions about children's programs:

- Is the school operated independently from the adult school? (A separate school indicates specialized teaching methods.)
- Are classes organized by age group and ability?
- Is there an indoor area for young skiers separate from the nursery?
- What is the ratio of students to instructors? (For 4- to 7-year-olds it should be about 4 to 1; for 8- to 12-year-olds it can be 6 or 8 to 1. During holiday periods, expect either of these ratios to be higher.)
- Is there a separate slope for the children's classes?
- Does the area have figures from cartoons or nursery rhymes for children to ski under, around and through?
- Is there a way for children to get out of class if they are cold or tired? (There should be a place for warming, drying and naps.)

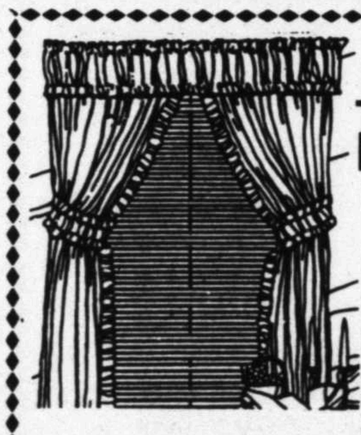

Diamonds found in carbon explosion soot

Copley News Service

Los Alamos (N.M.) National Laboratory scientists have become the first to discover the formation of diamonds in a high-explosive detonation. The diamonds were found in the soot from the detonation of carbon.

Apparently, the explosion's intense heat of more than 5,000 degrees and pressure (about 250,000 times normal atmospheric pressure) formed carbon clusters into diamonds.

Controversy changes image of family law

By LINDA GREENHOUSE
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Each case is a ripple, barely hinting at the changes engulfing parents, children and the laws that define family relationships:

■ A man goes to court in Indiana to stop his pregnant girlfriend from having an abortion.

■ A Washington judge orders a Caesarean section performed against the wishes of a dying woman on the premise — incorrect, it turned out — that her fetus had a substantial chance of survival.

■ A pregnant San Diego woman who used amphetamines against doctors' orders faces criminal child-abuse charges after her baby is born with severe brain damage.

■ The U.S. Supreme Court hears two appeals from unwed fathers who are fighting state laws that have kept them out of their children's lives. One father contends that the state must prove that he would make an unfit parent before it can terminate his rights as a father; the other father, armed with a blood test, challenges a legal presumption that the child cannot be his.

A genteel backwater just a few years ago, family law is a turbulent area of legal, social and now political concern.

Where once there was consensus on a parent's rights and responsibilities, today even a parent's identity may be called into question.

The law is developing so quickly and in so many different directions even that the majority of parents, who feel no direct connection with the intractable human dilemmas behind the headlines, may feel confused and concerned at the pace of change.

It is one thing to hear politicians talk in vague terms about the need for a "family agenda"; it is another to realize that even the definition of motherhood is no longer a foregone conclustion.

THERE ARE several reasons for the turmoil, according to Patricia A. King, a professor at the Georgetown University Law Center here.

Within the last few years, technology has enabled couples to overcome infertility and has empowered doctors to diagnose and sometimes treat a fetus before birth.

Equally recent, though hardly high tech, surrogate motherhood is also forcing the law to sort out who a child's parents are.

As the old stereotypes about women's roles crumble, the law's ancient assumption that women naturally have the primary responsibility for child care is also cracking. More than half the states, for example, have stopped giving mothers preference when awarding custody of young children.

Then there are the other social revolutions the law is struggling to address: no-fault divorce, for example, and changes in the ways families are organized.

And, as in the two Supreme Court cases, unwed fathers are appropriating the feminist rhetoric of equality to bolster their own claims.

As in any rapid transition, there are ragged edges. Without maternal preference as a guide to custody determinations, some judges are basing their decisions on financial stability; women who gave up careers to stay home with the children may thus lose out to the husbands whose financial success they facilitated.

"The law hasn't caught up with developments in either technology or morals," said Martha Minow, a Harvard Law School professor who specializes in family law. Rather, the field has become "the hot spot where it's all being fought out," she said.

HISTORICALLY, CHURCHES regulated marriage, divorce, adoption and the like. In the United States, Minow explained, state courts and legislatures became, in effect, the legal guardians of longstanding religious norms.

Now, more and more of these issues are being regarded as constitutional questions to be decided by federal courts.

The law currently provides three ways of looking at families, Minow said. The "family protection model" assumes that families must be able to make basic decisions free of government interference, as when the Supreme Court ruled decades ago that parents have the right to decide how they want their children to be educated.

Then there is the "individual rights model," which acknowledges that family members may have conflicting interests. In 1976, the Supreme Court adopted this approach in Planned Parenthood vs. Danforth, ruling that only a pregnant woman can decide whether to have an abortion; a husband's consent cannot be required.

Finally, the "child welfare model" recognizes that the family does not always provide the protection children need and that, under some circumstances, the state must destroy a family by terminating the rights of the biological parents.

How the state should make that determination, substantively and procedurally, is the topic of much litigation.

Minow said that the most difficult cases, the legal pressure points, occur at the fault lines of the three models. The rights of the child, or the unborn child, for example, may collide with the rights of privacy that the "individual rights model" accords mothers.

ARRAYED ALONG the fault lines are cases like that of the San Diego woman who gave birth to a brain-damaged baby and was charged with child abuse. The charges were dropped, but in their wake has come an explosion of law review commentaries over how states should deal with "fetal abuse."

Then there is the Washington case of the terminally ill woman who underwent a court-ordered Caesarean. She died, as did her premature baby; the court ruling, however, attracted national attention.

The Indiana case became moot when the pregnant woman aborted the fetus, defying a local judge's injunction — issued despite clear Supreme Court precedent to the contrary — and her boyfriend's pleas.

Opponents of abortion, however, are seeking other similar cases as part of a strategy to change the Supreme Court's position.

The two Supreme Court cases dealing with unwed fathers also raised challenging and emotionally charged questions about how to balance the rights of members of non-traditional families.

THE SUPREME Court has addressed the rights of unwed fathers in decisions dating to the early 1970s. Unwed fathers who come forward to assume their responsibilities have rights, the court has held, and these rights cannot be abrogated without due process.

But this generalization does not make individual disputes any easier to resolve. In McNamara vs. County of San Diego (No. 87-5840), a father sought to restore the parental rights he lost when a state court ruled that it was in his daughter's best interest to remain with her adoptive family.

The relationship between Edward McNamara and the girl's mother lasted only a few months; he learned of the pregnancy only after the baby had been born and placed for adoption. Under California law, a mother's parental rights can be involuntarily terminated only for unfitness, such as abuse or abandonment.

McNamara, whom the trial court found to be "a good parent who can provide a good, loving home," argued that under the 14th Amendment's equal-protection clause, the state should be required to prove that he would be an unfit father.

The second case, Michael H. and Victoria D. vs. Gerald D. (No. 87-746), also invoked the equal-protection clause. California law, like that in many states, presumes that a child born to a married woman is the legitimate child of the marriage, unless the husband is impotent or sterile.

Michael H., as he is identified in the court papers, had an affair with a married woman, Carole D.; their daughter, Victoria D., was born in 1981 while Carole and her husband were legally married. Subsequently, Michael, Carole and their child lived together as a family off and on for years.

Eventually, Carole and her husband, Gerald D., reconciled; Gerald opposed Michael's effort to have himself declared Victoria's legal father.

A BLOOD test showed with virtual certainty that Michael was the biological father. But the California courts said that there was no reason to discard the presumption that Victoria was Gerald's daughter, a presumption the appellate court called necessary to protect "the state's interest in preserving the integrity of the matrimonial family."

In his Supreme Court appeal, which Victoria joined through a guardian appointed to represent her interests, Michael argued that no such presumption exists to deprive a biological mother of her rights, and that if matrimonial integrity had been the byword from the beginning, there never would have been an extramarital affair or a child to fight over.

These cases have a compelling, soap-opera quality that breaks through the legal prose and serves as a sharp reminder of the human values at stake on the Supreme Court's docket. In the McNamara case, the father's brief asserted that he did not want to remove his daughter from the only home she has known; he just wants to be part of her life.

"All children," he said, "can use all of the love they can get."

Accordion artist predicts surge in 'squeeze box'

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — From his two-room apartment in St. Augustine's Retirement Home, Enrico Mastro-Nardi is leading a quiet crusade for a noisy instrument.

He's trying to revive the accordion to its glory days of the 1940s and 1950s, the days of Lawrence Welk and Dick Contino.

Mastro-Nardi, 77, spent 57 years teaching accordion in Chicago and Peoria. Now, he spends up to eight hours a day writing letters and mailing tapes of famous accordionists to the faithful — those who also remember the accordion in its heyday, the days when Mastro-Nardi and his band played six concerts a week.

Those were the days when everyone wanted to repeat the Dick Contino story, and parents couldn't get their kids accordions and accordion lessons fast enough.

Those were also the days when a new accordion cost $250, not the $2,500 a good new instrument would cost today.

Nonetheless, Mastro-Nardi believes firmly that the accordion's golden age is in the future, not in the past. "The accordion is coming back, and it's going to be better than ever," says the onetime band leader, who now limits his performances to playing with the Peoria Senior Citizens' Band.

"It's only 150 years old, an infant in the musical instrument family," he says. "During those 150 years, it made much progress, but it's going to take another 50 to 100 years to be recognized and respected by the music fraternity around the world."

Mastro-Nardi and his mother came to Chicago from Italy when he was 2 years old to join his father. He started work in a barrel factory when he was 14, earning 25 cents an hour.

A friend pointed out that family celebrations in their Chicago neighborhood invariably featured one of three well-known local accordionists.

"As we understood it, they got $25 for an afternoon," Mastro-Nardi says. "That was a lot of money."

With the help of his father, Mastro-Nardi got an accordion from the Wurlitzer Co. He also got lessons from Andy Rizzo, a famous teacher of the day. "He taught me to love the accordion for making music, not money," Mastro-Nardi says. "An invaluable lesson."

By 1935, Mastro-Nardi was teaching accordion. At first he taught in Chicago, but he soon added Peoria to his territory and spent three years commuting before deciding to settle in Peoria.

The accordion business was good through the 1940s and into the 1950s, but the coming of rock music saw its popularity plummet among the young who turned to guitars, electric organs and drums.

During the last 10 years that Mastro-Nardi played and taught, he had to supplement his income with a job at Caterpillar Inc. He played his retirement concert last September, and since then he has been the Accordion Crusader. It says so on his business cards and letterheads.

He is glad to hear that the accordion is finally making some headway with young people. December's edition of Keyboard magazine called the accordion "rock's new main squeeze."

Old sentiments of valentines never fade

New York Times News Service

There's so many kinds of valentines,
Some made of lace and glue.
There's comics and the stand-up kind,
And then there's postals too.
But when I choose my valentine
I'm going to choose just you.

This verse, from a turn-of-the-century valentine, perhaps best describes an unusual collection of vintage valentines at an eclectic Manhattan boutique.

William L. Conley, who owns the boutique, Churchill's, on Madison Avenue at 66th Street, recently bought about 500 valentines made between 1840 and 1940.

The former owner, an 88-year-old Manhattan woman who asked Conley not to identify her, had collected them since she was a young girl.

"She was in love with love," Conley said.

He saw the valentines when he went to the woman's Upper East Side apartment to buy rare books.

"She decided she had had her fun with them," Conley said. "And I loved them."

The valentines, priced at $6 to $350, are multifarious: they include simple fold-out cards with pop-up hearts and elaborately framed drawings of cupids reminiscent of Fragonard and Boucher.

Most of the intricately cut paper cards were made by hand in England and Germany. Some are slightly faded and fragile; some bear the signatures of the lovers who sent them.

Verses from the 1920s and later tend toward whimsy.

One from about 1890 is inscribed on a delicate pink paper heart surrounded by lace, with matching sentiment:

My love cannot change
My thoughts will not range
Though fate should us sever
This true heart of mine
Is thine, only thine
Now and forever.

"They're from an era gone by," said Conley, who opened Churchill's last June.

"Today's valentines are sexy rather than romantic," he added.

The valentines are strewn throughout the narrow store, which is teeming with jewelry, rare books, paintings, antiques and decorative gifts.

The prize of the collection is a valentine believed to have been made by the Duke of Windsor in 1946 for the duchess.

It is a carved-out hatbox decorated with pink satin and lace from the duchess's trousseau, and with garnets and cutouts of cupids and hearts from Victorian cards.

The verse is simple:

May your fond love in favor shine,
On him who sends this valentine.

Although Conley said he has been offered $2,500 for the valentine, it is not for sale.

He said unabashedly that he would be giving it to his own sweetheart.

Valentines is red-letter day

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — As Valentine's Day nears, the candy, greeting card and florist industries gear up for another red-letter day. But there's always someone caught red-handed trying to turn consumers toward some other token of affection.

This time it's Palace Brands, which wants lovers everywhere to think red, as in wine, when they fete their valentine. So the importers of Mouton-Cadet, the Bordeaux created by Baron Philippe de Rothschild, compiled a list of other "great reds."

Many are missing — red snapper amandine, pizza with red pepper flakes, red devils-food cake, Orville Red(enbacher) popcorn. Red Grange, Red Buttons. And that harbinger of spring, robin red-breast.

Once you read these, you're sure to think of more.

Ann-Margret — The sexiest redhead if ever there was one.

Boston Red Sox — Love 'em when they're down.

Cinnamon Red Hots — These candies will put your mouth on fire.

Cincinnati Reds — With a center fielder named Eric "the Red" Davis, and a manager named Pete Rose, this team steals as many hearts as it does bases.

Coco Red — Chanel's best-selling lipstick makes kissing more colorful.

Fergie — Britain's fun-loving, red-haired Duchess of York.

"Gone With the Wind" — The best-'read' love story.

James Coco and Alan Arkin — On Broadway and in Hollywood, the last of the red-hot lovers ....

Little Red Riding Hood — My, what big eyes she had.

Love That Red — Revlon introduced this best-selling red nail polish in 1956 and changed the hands of time.

Lucille Ball — We love Lucy, the zaniest redhead.

Nancy Reagan — Her wardrobe did more for the color red than any woman in history.

Red Carpet — Roll it out for someone special.

Red M&M's — Back by popular demand.

Red Porsche — Why drive anything else?

Red Skelton — Everyone's favorite sad clown.

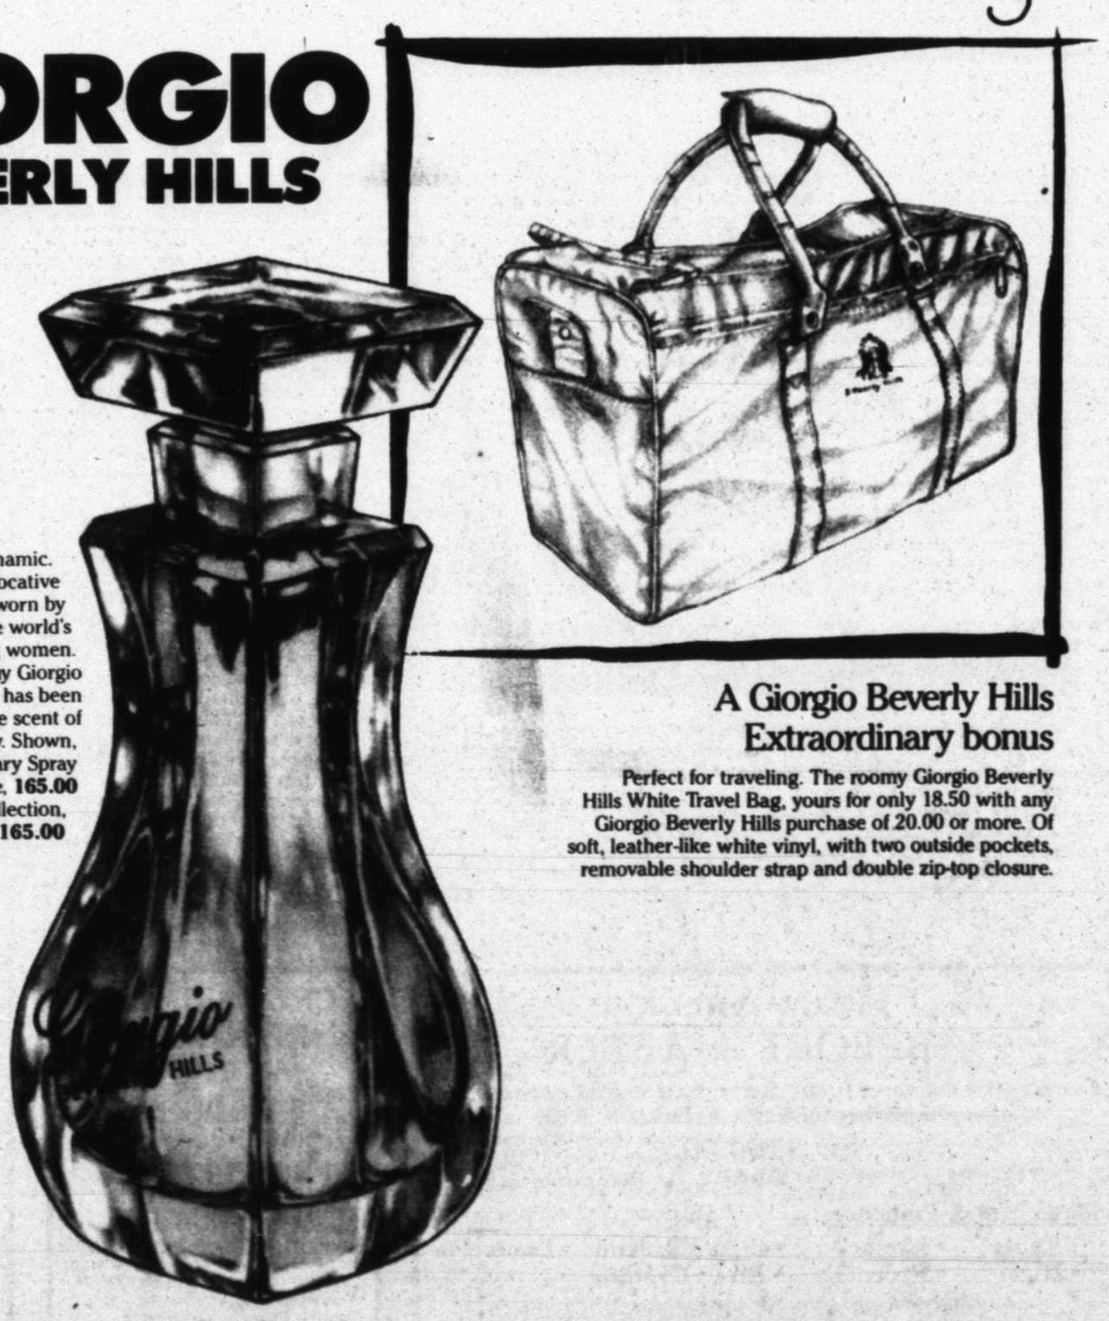

Robert Red(ford) — Women think he's a real sweetheart.

Ruby Slippers — Tap them together three times and say to yourself, "There's no place like home."

Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer — He'll go down in history.

Fantasies of St. Valentine's Day include chocolate

By LORNA J. SASS
Copley News Service

This year, as I began fantasizing about the type of chocolate I'd like to receive on Valentine's Day, my thoughts turned to possible definitions of heaven.

Since I had already been thinking about chocolate, it was quite natural to begin imagining heaven's decor as the inside of a gilded chocolate boutique filled to overflowing with irresistible, elegant bonbons, all of which were low in calorie and cholesterol. (If you're going to fantasize, you might as well go all the way, right?)

Snapping abruptly back to 1989 reality, I decided that perhaps the next best thing to living in chocolate heaven might be a job in the Manhattan test kitchen of Chocolatier, a bimonthly magazine founded in 1984 and devoted to the "brown sweetness" and its aficionados.

This thought led me to Adrienne Welch, test kitchen director of Chocolatier, who actually gets paid a salary to spend a minimum of five days every week thinking about, cooking with and tasting chocolate.

(To answer your probable question, no, Adrienne is not overweight. She is not even chubby, but sandy-haired, blue-eyed, petite and as intense as a fine champagne truffle.)

Adrienne's luminous background includes being an apprentice to Madeleine Kamman, an associate chef to Julia Child, a pastry chef for the famous New York gourmet shop Dean and DeLuca, and a chocolate maker for Bloomingdale's.

It was during the Bloomingdale's stint that Adrienne's Truffles were born and became such best sellers that she was invited to write the charming truffle cookbook, "Sweet Seduction" (Harper & Row, $7.95).

"Truffles are the ultimate gastronomic pun," said Adrienne during a recent interview. "If you can't have a real truffle, then why not have a chocolate one?"

Like many trained chefs, Adrienne finds working with chocolate a special challenge. "It's quite scientific," she told us, and although she has studied the technical aspects very thoroughly, Adrienne still finds that developing a recipe to perfection for the magazine may take as may as seven tries. The challenge is obviously something she thrives on.

"One of the things I have been working with lately is the mixing of chocolates to intensify and vary flavor," she said. With the brownie recipe below, for example, Adrienne discovered that by combining two different brands of bittersweet chocolate, the taste becomes richer and more complex.

"In this job, I am learning to appreciate more and more that the type of chocolate used in the recipe can affect the taste and texture of the final product a great deal," she commented.

An admitted addict of chocolate, Adrienne does aerobics to keep in shape. "I'm passionate about chocolate," she admits. "And even though I taste it every day at work, I find myself craving it over the weekends."

During a recent trip home to New England for the holidays, Adrienne found herself requesting one of the chocolates she had given her father as a Christmas gift.

And what about the idea of preparing a Valentine's gift for yourself? Here are some of Adrienne's best recipes.

The special bonus of this delicious gift is that if you own a heart-shaped cutter, you get to keep the cut-out scraps for yourself.

BROWNIE HEARTS

1 cup plus 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
¼ teaspoon baking soda
⅛ teaspoon salt
8 ounces semisweet chocolate, finely chopped
6 ounces bittersweet chocolate, finely chopped
1 cup plus 2 tablespoons granulated sugar
9 tablespoons unsalted butter, cut into 1-inch pieces
¼ cup light corn syrup
¼ cup water
3 large eggs
1 tablespoon vanilla extract
1¼ cups walnut halves, coarsely broken
Optional topping:
2 ounces white chocolate, coarsely chopped

Position rack in center of oven and preheat to 350 degrees. Line 13x9x2-inch baking pan with aluminum foil, leaving 3-inch overhang on short ends. Fold overhang under outside bottom of pan. Lightly butter foil covering inside bottom of pan.

In medium bowl, stir together flour, baking soda and salt. In large bowl, place the 2 chocolates.

In medium saucepan, combine sugar, butter, corn syrup and water. Stir over medium heat for 4 to 6 minutes until sugar dissolves and mixture comes to boil. Remove pan from heat and pour syrup over chocolates. Stir until chocolate melts and mixture is smooth.

Whisk in eggs, 1 at a time, blending until smooth. Stir in vanilla and flour mixture. Gently fold in walnuts. Scrape batter into prepared pan and smooth top with spatula.

Bake 20 to 30 minutes until cake tester or toothpick inserted into center comes out with a few moist crumbs sticking to it. Cool brownies in pan on a wire rack for 30 minutes. Refrigerate brownies in pan for 2 to 3 hours or until firm.

Untuck foil overhang and, using the 2 ends of foil as handles, lift brownies out of pan. Invert brownies onto flat baking sheet and gently peel off foil. Invert again onto another baking sheet. Using 2½-inch heart-shaped cutter with 1-inch cutting edge, cut out 15 brownie hearts.

If decorating brownies, in top of double boiler over hot (but not simmering) water, melt half of white chocolate, stirring constantly until smooth. Remove top part of double boiler from bottom. Stir in remaining chocolate and continue stirring gently until all chocolate is melted. Let chocolate cool until tepid.

Fit pastry bag with small writing tip and fill with melted chocolate. Pipe a zigzag pattern on top of each brownie heart. Place hearts on baking sheet and refrigerate for 3 to 5 minutes, until chocolate sets. Store brownie hearts at room temperature, in single layer, in airtight container.

You may prepare truffles as much as one week in advance. The heart-shaped chocolate box — an optional addition to the Valentine's gift — may be prepared up to two months in advance. Store both in cool place. If preferred, you can package truffles in a pretty heart-shaped box or tin.

CNS Photo

For this beautiful triple-layer White Chocolate Strawberry Valentine's Cake you don't need any special baking equipment — just a pair of scissors and a piece of cardboard for cutting out the heart shape.

CLASSIC TRUFFLES IN HEART-SHAPED CHOCOLATE BOX

For truffles:
½ cup heavy (whipping) cream
1 vanilla bean, cut in half
A few grains salt
8 ounces bittersweet chocolate, coarsely chopped
1 ounce high-quality milk chocolate, coarsely chopped
2 large egg yolks
1½ tablespoons dark rum
½ cup alkalized unsweetened cocoa powder
For heart-shaped chocolate box:
1 5⅜-inch heart-shaped chocolate box mold (see note)
1 pound milk or dark compound coating

For Truffles: In heavy small saucepan, combine cream, vanilla bean and salt. Bring mixture to slow, gentle boil over medium-low heat. Remove pan from heat and remove vanilla bean.

In food processor fitted with metal chopping blade, blend chocolates for 15 to 20 seconds until finely chopped. Add egg yolks and pulse twice. Pour hot cream mixture through feed tube while machine is running. Blend for 10 to 15 seconds until mixture is smooth. Blend in rum. Scrape this ganache into a medium bowl and set bowl over bowl of ice water. Using rubber spatula stir ganache constantly for 3 to 5 minutes or until it is cold and starts to thicken.

Using hand-held electric mixer set at medium-low speed, immediately beat ganache for 10 to 20 seconds until soft peaks start to form when beaters are lifted. (Do not overbeat or mixture will harden too quickly and texture of truffle will be grainy.)

Line baking sheet with aluminum foil. Fit pastry bag with ⅝-inch plain tip. Fill pastry bag with half of ganache and pipe 6-inch-long cylinders on prepared baking sheet. Refill pastry bag with remaining ganache and continue to pipe. Refrigerate baking sheet for 10 to 15 minutes until ganache cylinders are firm.

Slice ganache cylinders into 1½-inch pieces. Lightly dust ganache pieces with 1½ tablespoons cocoa. With fingertips form each piece into irregularly shaped 1-inch balls. Roll truffles in cocoa. Set aside in cool place.

For Heart-Shaped Chocolate Box: In top of double boiler over hot (not simmering) water, melt compound coating, stirring constantly until smooth. Remove double boiler from heat. Keep coating warm over hot water during molding process.

Using lint-free cloth, wipe inside of mold. With clean, dry pastry brush, brush inside of base and lid of mold with thin layer of compound coating. Wipe any excess coating from edge of mold with finger. Place mold in refrigerator for 3 to 5 minutes until coating hardens. Brush on second layer of coating and refrigerate for 3 to 5 minutes until hardened. Repeat procedure 2 more times for a total of 4 coats. Refrigerate mold for 20 to 30 minutes until hardened coating starts to contract from side of mold. Invert 2 parts of mold over cloth-covered work surface and gently tap, releasing molded box and lid. Fill box with truffles and store in cool place until needed.

WHITE CHOCOLATE STRAWBERRY VALENTINE'S CAKE

For sponge cake:
4 large eggs plus 3 large yolks
½ cup granulated sugar
Pinch of salt
1½ teaspoons vanilla extract
½ cup sifted cake flour
Confectioners' sugar for dusting
For Grand Marnier syrup:
⅓ cup water
2 tablespoons granulated sugar
1 tablespoon Grand Marnier
For white chocolate filling:
1 cup heavy (whipping) cream
2 teaspoons Grand Marnier
2 ounces white chocolate, finely grated
For garnish:
1 cup sliced almonds, roasted at 350 degrees for 8 to 10 minutes until lightly browned, coarsely crushed
1 pint strawberries, hulled and cut into thin slices

To make sponge cake: Position rack in center of oven and preheat to 350 degrees. Line bottom of 11½x17½-inch jelly roll pan with aluminum foil, leaving 2-inch overhang on short ends. Fold overhang underneath pan. Butter foil and sides of pan. Lightly dust pan with flour and tap out excess.

In large, heatproof bowl, whisk together eggs, egg yolks, sugar and salt. Set bowl over pot of hot (but not simmering) water, with bottom of bowl touching water. Continue whisking mixture for 1 to 2 minutes until sugar crystals have dissolved and mixture is warm to touch. Remove bowl from hot water.

Using hand-held electric mixer set at medium-high speed, beat mixture for 5 to 7 minutes until tripled in volume and batter is pale yellow and forms a thick ribbon when beaters are lifted. Beat in vanilla. Resift one-fourth of flour over batter and fold in briskly but gently. In three additions, fold in remaining flour. Scrape batter into prepared pan and spread evenly. Tap pan on work surface to release any large air bubbles.

Bake 15 to 17 minutes until center of cake springs back when lightly pressed. Cool cake in pan on wire rack for 10 minutes. Using small knife, loosen edges of cake from sides of pan. Untuck foil overhangs and use them as handles to transfer sponge cake to large wire racks. Let cake cool completely.

Using foil handles, transfer sponge cake to work surface. With long serrated knife, trim ¼-inch off all 4 edges of cake. Lightly sift some confectioners' sugar over top, and gently invert cake onto work surface and carefully peel off foil.

Draw heart 7¼ inches wide by 6½ inches long onto a thin piece of cardboard. Using scissors, cut out heart. Place cardboard heart on sponge cake and, using heart as a pattern, cut out 3 heart-shaped pieces of sponge cake. Cover sponge cake hearts with plastic wrap until ready to assemble.

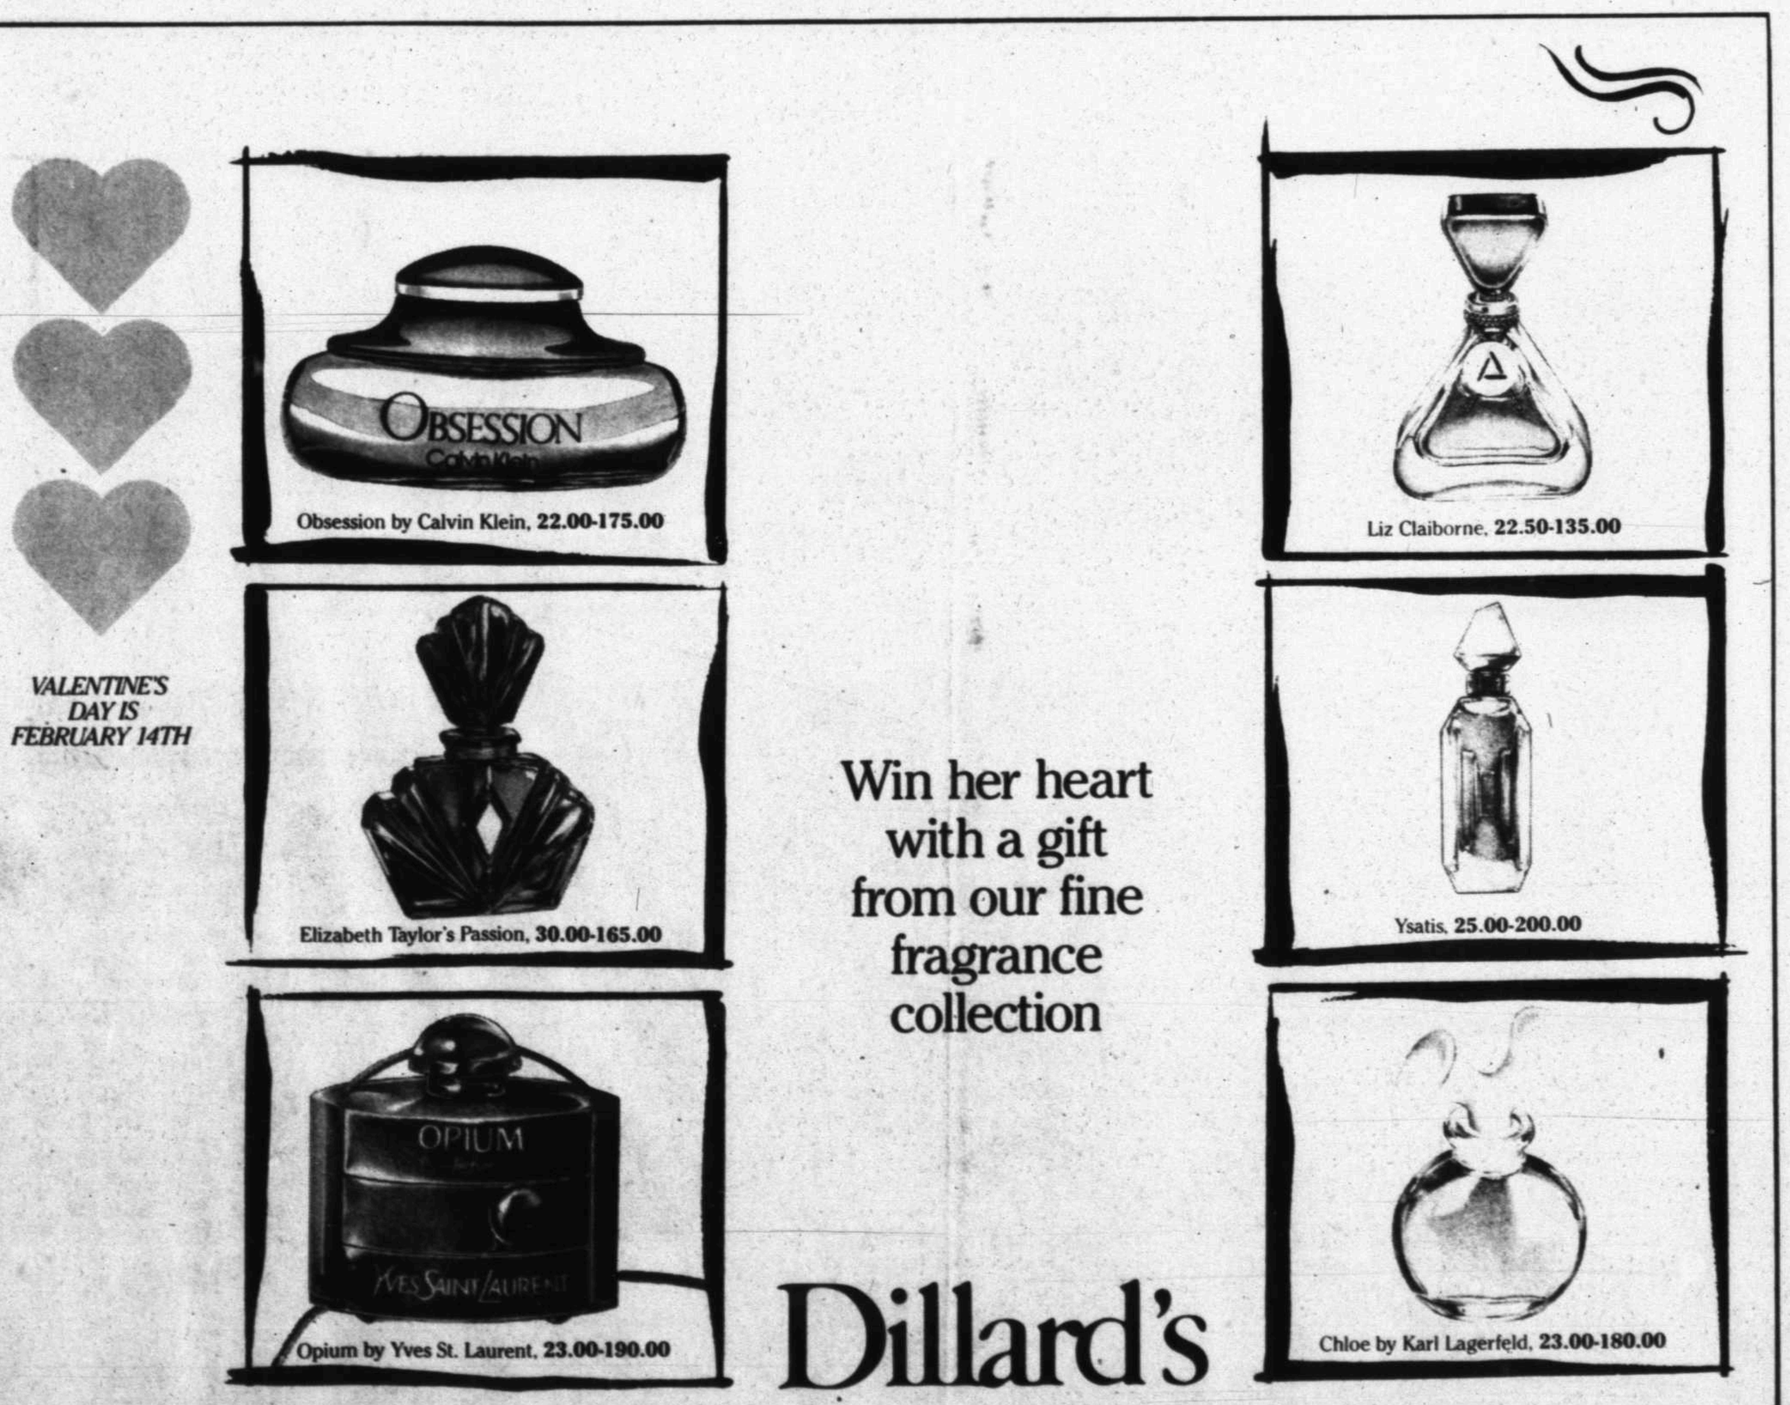

To make Grand Marnier syrup: In small saucepan, combine water and sugar. Cook over medium heat, stirring with wooden spon until sugar dissolves. Increase heat to high and bring syrup to simmer. Remove pan from heat and transfer syrup to small metal bowl. Let syrup cool 5-10 minutes until tepid. Stir in Grand Marnier.

To make white chocolate filling: In medium-size chilled bowl, whip cream with Grand Marnier until soft peaks start to form. Fold in white chocolate.

To assemble: Place 1 of sponge cake hearts in center of serving plate. Slip strips of waxed paper under edges of cake to keep surface of plate clean. Brush sponge cake with some of Grand Marnier syrup. Then evenly distribute ⅓ cup of strawberries over cake. Using a metal cake spatula, spread ½ cup of white chocolate filling over strawberries. Top filling with second sponge cake heart. Brush top layer with some Grand Marnier syrup. Arrange ⅓ cup of strawberries over this layer and spread ½ cup of filling over strawberries.

Brush third sponge cake heart with remaining Grand Marnier syrup and place it soaked-side down on top of filling. Using cake spatula, frost top and sides of cake with remaining filling. Coat sides of cake with roasted almonds. Keep cake refrigerated until ready to serve.

Just before serving, arrange remaining strawberries in overlapping pattern around top edge of cake.

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Surprise your kids, friends or grandparents on Valentine's Day with these whimsical treats for the sweet.

HEARTTHROB COOKIES

2 cups all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup sugar
1 cup shortening
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon peppermint extract

Stir together flour, baking powder and salt; set aside. Beat sugar and shortening with an electric mixer until fluffy. Add remaining ingredients; beat well. Add flour mixture; beat well. Tint and shape as directed for each cookie variation.

Place cookies on an ungreased cookie sheet. Bake in a 375-degree oven 8 to 10 minutes or until golden. Remove; cool on wire rack.

CHECKERBOARD HEARTS

Divide dough in half. Mix 10 drops red food coloring into one half. Wrap each half in clear plastic wrap; freeze 20 minutes. Divide each half into 8 pieces. On a lightly floured surface roll each piece into an 8-inch rope about ½ inch in diameter. Flatten each on four sides to form a square rope; place 4 ropes side by side on waxed paper, alternating colors. Top with 4 more ropes, alternating colors. Repeat 2 more times, forming an 8-by 2- by 2-inch dough block with a checkerboard pattern. Wrap in waxed paper; freeze until firm (1 hour). Cut dough crosswise into ¼-inch-thick slices. Using a 2-inch heart-shape cookie cutter, cut a heart from each slice. Reserve scraps for Bleeding Heart Cookies. Bake as directed. Makes 30.

HEART LOLLIPOPS

Cover and chill dough 2 hours or overnight. On a lightly floured surface roll dough ¼ inch thick. Cut with a 3-inch heart-shape cookie cutter. Place about 3 inches apart on ungreased cookie sheets. Place a stick under the center of each heart. Bake as directed. Cool 2 minutes. Remove; cool on rack. Frost and decorate as desired. Makes 30.

AT WIT'S END

Most men refuse to dance when married

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

You never know what you really elect to the White House until little bits and pieces start to fall into place.

A pork rind here ... a fishing pole there ... until you have a composite of the man who is going to set the style for this country for the next four years.

President Bush and his vice president waited until the day of the inaugural balls to drop their bombs. Neither of them dances.

There they were — two college boys in full tuxedo with knockout dates in dresses that cost more than our first car, with 13 balls, 13 orchestras and the eyes of the entire world on them, and they say, "We don't dance." So, what did they think they were doing there? Judging a cow-chip throwing competition?

Men have been getting by with this for years. They know women love to dance. It's a feminine trait to want to dress up and glide across the floor so everyone can see what you're wearing. Before women get married, their men dance their legs off. As the music starts up at the wedding reception, the first thing they hear is, "You don't want to dance, do you?"

My husband starts when he hears the music from the parking lot. "Oh God, there's music. You didn't tell me that."

"What did you expect to dance to? Bird calls?"

"I don't want to sit right next to the band," he announces. "Let's get a table away from the noise."

It won't matter. The moment I suggest we get on the dance floor, he slowly pushes his chair away from the table and with great effort rises to his feet. "What's the matter?" I ask.

"It's just my hip."

"The same hip you ran a 10K with this morning? The same hip you played two sets of tennis with? The same hip you rode a bicycle ...."

As he takes a deep breath and straightens, he displays yet another talent. I don't know how he does it, but from the moment the song starts, he adjusts his underwear, stops to visit with a few friends on the way to the floor, rebuttons his coat, and by the time I lift my arms to glide into his, the music magically ends and the orchestra takes a break. It's a gift.

What have President Bush and Vice President Quayle done that's so bad? you might ask. They have given the men of America permission for another four years to stand around at a dance as if they're attending a truck-pulling competition, that's what they've done.

As for women, we wait and we plan. Punch, anyone?

Average kitty litter not up to snuff

Copley News Service

Not to be indelicate, but traditional kitty litter just isn't up to snuff.

That's because the perfumes and deodorants in kitty litters don't soak up or neutralize smelly kitty urine. That may change, however, with the invention of something called "Better Way" kitty litter.

Houston biochemist Tom Nelson designed the stuff with the thought of being able to neutralize the odor of a cat box. He does it with a special clay as fine as sand.

What the clay does is take the kitty's urine and clump it up to about the size of a golf ball. So all the cat owners have to do to remove the smell is scoop up the clumps.

Romantic getaways ideal for first, second honeymoons

By GLENDA WINDERS
Copley News Service

Most newlyweds agree the honeymoon is the best part of the wedding celebration. No more decisions to make with a caterer, conferences with the florist or tedious fittings. No more showers, rehearsals or parties in hotel rooms with wedding guests from out of town.

At last, the two of you are alone. For married couples who haven't been alone in awhile, a second honeymoon may be the ideal way to revitalize feelings of romance.

To make sure your honeymoon — first or second — is everything you are dreaming it will be, start to plan well in advance. Send for brochures, leaf through travel books, talk with travel agents and friends and curl up in front of videos of the places you are considering together.

Make a decision early about exactly where you'll go. Think about how much time and money you have to spend, and consider your individual interests. Do you both enjoy roughing it out of doors, or would you rather dine at a gourmet restaurant before the theater? Or do you want a wedding trip that includes some of both?

Whatever you decide, book travel and hotel reservations immediately to avoid disappointment. Mention you will be on your honeymoon, and many hotels and cruise lines will provide courtesies such as better accommodations or flowers in your room.

Spend the first night of your honeymoon at your home or in a local hotel. Leave for your trip the next day. Don't start married life under the pressure of leaving your reception early so you can race to the airport to catch the red-eye special.

Wherever you decide to go, pack light. This reduces hassles in airports, cabs and hotels. Include the essentials — a filmy negligee, a scented candle, a small bottle of your favorite liqueur for an intimate nightcap — but leave behind tennis rackets, golf clubs and outfits that require multiple sets of accessories.

Plan your travel wardrobe around a basic color scheme so that you can wear the same shoes and jewelry. Keep dress-up clothes at a minimum.

If you're planning a resort stay, a multicity tour or a cruise holiday, one dressy outfit for each of you should suffice. Concentrate on shorts, jeans, casual skirts, slacks and comfortable shoes.

Instead of packing "his and her" suitcases, put clothing for both of you into each suitcase. That way your schedule needn't be interrupted by lost luggage.

And don't overbook. It's a big temptation to try and cram in every tour, museum and nightspot. If you miss some of the attractions this time, plan to return for an anniversary encore. For now, make sure you save time for long walks, relaxed dinners and leisurely breakfasts in bed.

Relish the time alone. Once you get back home, there won't be enough of it. And that is, after all, why you got married.

Here are some possibilities:

■ HEALTHY HONEYMOON — What better way to start married life than by making sure both of you are physically fit? Consider checking into a health spa for a week or so. They are springing up all over the world, but one of the oldest and best is Rancho la Puerta in Tecate, Mexico.

Here you'll stay in your own Mexican hacienda and eat vegetables, chicken and fish. The eight- to 10-hour days include organized sports, yoga, aerobics, hiking, kinetic toning, weight lifting, running and swimming. Then you can pamper yourself with a massage, a facial, an herbal wrap, a nap in a hammock or a soak in a heated whirlpool.

Entertainment is planned for each evening, but you're also free to look at the stars, breathe the mountain air and curl up in front of your fireplace.

Be as social or as private as you want. There are no phones or television sets here, so you can truly get away from it all.

Call (619) 294-8504 to plan this healthy honeymoon.

■ OFF THE BEATEN TRACK — If the idea of peace and quiet is attractive to you but you're not interested in organized activities, make a rustic lodge your honeymoon headquarters.

The Rockies, the Poconos and the Smokies are full of such spots, but if you'd like to explore a part of the country not so well-known to tourists, check into the Lodge of the Four Seasons on Missouri's Lake of the Ozarks.

The lodge offers a honeymoon package that includes robes, champagne, a fireplace, a lake view, cozy breakfasts, gourmet dinners in the four-star restaurant and a cruise around the lake.

Spend your days playing tennis or golf, paddling around in a canoe or horseback riding. Then have a swim or a soak in the whirlpool before catching a movie at the cinema right on the grounds.

Call (314) 365-3001 to plan this getaway.

■ OLD WORLD HOLIDAY — If time allows, spend your honeymoon abroad. There are several ways to manage such a trip, but planning is of the essence. Decide whether you want a whirlwind tour of several European capitals. Maybe you'd rather be alone and go at your own speed.

In either case, a theme honeymoon can be the best use of your time. Are you interested in art galleries? Cathedrals? Historical or literary monuments? Castles? Trace the Industrial Revolution through Great Britain or visit wineries in France.

There are many transportation/hotel packages available, and you'll need extra information about currency, passports and immunizations. Ask your travel agent for help in planning this one.

■ ISLAND DREAMS — Does your honeymoon idyll include surf, sun and seclusion?

Islands around the world cater to newlyweds, and you can choose from several ways to enjoy them.

Sail on a cruise ship to the Bahamas, Jamaica or the West Indies, or fly directly to Nassau and book reservations at one of the posh hotels on famed Cable Beach.

If the Pacific is your preference, Hawaii offers all you could imagine in terms of great food, historical sites and non-stop entertainment. Or explore exotic Tahiti. Again, a conference with your travel agent is in order.

■ BRIGHT LIGHTS — Are you city lovers? Do you enjoy live entertainment, ethnic restaurants, poking around in specialty shops?

Drive or fly to a city where neither of you has been before, check into a downtown hotel and start exploring. Good choices are New York, Boston, Washington, D.C., New Orleans, Chicago and San Francisco.

But make them your own. Hit the tourist spots, if you must, but also take walks through lesser-known neighborhoods, lunch at cafes that aren't written up in the guidebooks.

Write ahead to the Chamber of Commerce for literature, then start making reservations. And look for a hotel package that includes amenities such as theater tickets or rental cars.

■ OFFBEAT ADVENTURES — Are you curious and energetic? Looking for a honeymoon that will provide memories and stories to tell for years to come? Here are some suggestions from travel expert Arthur Frommer.

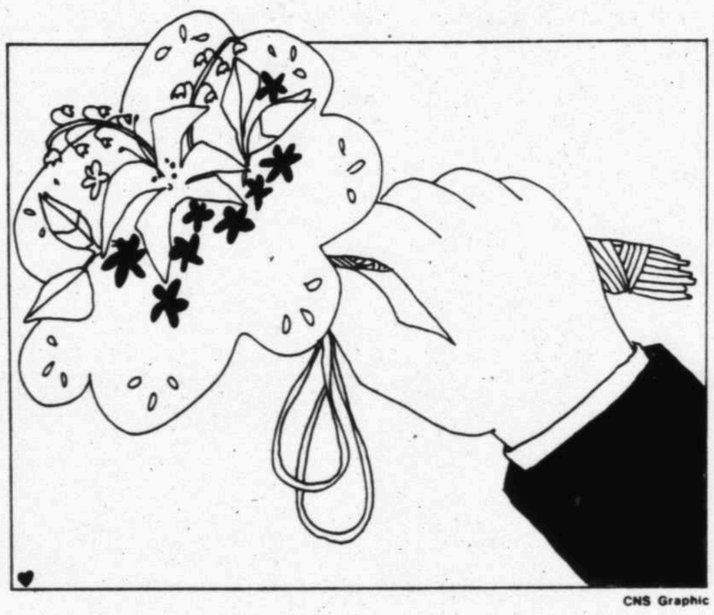

Trek through the Andes, the Himalayas or the Alps. Take an African tent safari. Enroll at a college and take an intensive course in a foreign language. Many universities now offer spots on archeological digs in exchange for a fee to support the research.

Explore the fragile ecosystem of the Amazon River by motorboat. Bicycle through New England or pack by mule through the Rockies.

Go white water rafting down the Colorado River. Stay on a working farm or ranch, or join an organized work crew headed for a Third World country. Dip into Frommer's latest book, "The New World of Travel," for more suggestions.

Bouquets brighten Valentine dinner table

By CAROL CUTLER
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

Valentine's Day could be a big day for tussie-mussies. What? Of course you know tussie-mussies; they arrived on these shores with the colonists.

For centuries, delicate ladies in England always carried them. So much the better to ward off the foul smells that emanated from streets in certain quarters.

Today, that primary reason may be largely a thing of the past, leaving the tussie-mussie to deliver romantic messages.

Some people call them nosegays, others prefer bouquet, but somehow tussie-mussie seems the most endearing term.

Actually, nosegay was the term used in England, which is precisely why the colonists eschewed that name for the fluffier one.

Tussie-mussies must be fragrant. How else to ward off unwelcome street aromas? For this reason, the little hand-held bundle of flowers always has a rose in the center.

Besides, in the language of flowers, rose means love.

Other sweet-smelling flowers surround the sweetheart rose — lilies of the valley, lilacs and freesias among them. Some florists even tuck in fresh sprigs of aromatic herbs, such as rosemary, thyme or lemon balm.

Though not especially perfumed, forget-me-nots, violets, baby's breath and anemones often are included because they are among the sweetest-looking blooms around. Cupid himself could have designed them.

The tussie-mussie should be nestled inside a lace paper doily that makes the proper fluffy frame. And, of course, there must be ribbon streamers to complete the utter femininity of the knot of flowers.

You don't even need a florist to make your tussie-mussie. Buy paper doilies, about 6 inches in diameter.

Make a 1-inch hole in the center and back it up with a round of thin cardboard.

Punch a hole in the cardboard, too, to match the one in the doily.

Gather your selection of charming little flowers and tie their stems together.

Cut stems to about 4 inches. Thoroughly wet some cotton wool and squeeze out most of the water. Wrap wet cotton around stems and cover with aluminum foil.

Then simply twist some ribbon around the foil, tie a bow at the top and cut a length long enough to let the ribbon float.

Now what do we do with our tussie-mussie? If you are having dinner at home, just the two of you or for a few couples, tie the tussie-mussie on the back of each lady's chair. Or place it on her plate. Romance doesn't always have to be practical.

The menu should lean toward aphrodisiacs. Oysters are said to be one, and this piquant version could not be easier to prepare.

SPICY OYSTERS

1 pint shucked oysters, smallest size available
1 cup dry white wine
Juice of 2 lemons
½ teaspoon vinegar, preferably Balsamico or red wine
¼ cup olive oil
2 bay leaves
¼ teaspoon hot pepper sauce
1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
Lettuce leaves
6 lemon wedges

Yields 6 servings as a first course.

Put oysters and their liquid in 4-cup non-reactive pot. Pour in wine, lemon juice, vinegar and oil. Add bay leaves, hot sauce and pepper. Stir to blend marinade.

Put pot on medium heat and bring marinade to boiling point. As soon as liquid begins to boil, remove pot from fire. Cover and marinate for at least 1 hour. Refrigerate at least 2 hours to chill.

To serve, line salad plate with lettuce leaves. Lift oysters out of marinade and place on lettuce. Sprinkle with parsley and add lemon wedge.

Note: Spicy Oysters can be prepared several days in advance and kept in the refrigerator.

Robots cited as mates of future

Copley News Service

Perfect marriages won't always be made in heaven.

In fact, in the near future they'll begin in machine shops.

Because man and machine will wed within the next 20 years.

According to Canadian futurist Frank Ogden, we will resort to romancing robots because of loneliness.

The robomates will be perfect humanlike reproductions, complete with skin and all essential working body parts.

According to Ogden, your cyborg lover will be programmed to fulfill your ultimate sexual fantasies.

In addition, he says your robomate will be programmed to meet your lifestyle.

So if you're a couch potato, you won't have to put up with someone nagging you about exercising all the time.

DEAR ABBY

Wife tired of fishing for praise

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure I'm not the only woman with this problem, so maybe you can help many others if you answer this in the paper.

My husband never gives me a compliment. When I ask, "How was dinner?" he says, "I ate it, didn't I?"

If I ask, "How was our lovemaking?" he says, "I come back for more, don't I?"

If I ask, "How do I look (new dress)?" he says, "If I tell you that you look nice, you'll expect it often."

Abby, how I long for just one small compliment once in a while — a kind word, a show of affection from this man. Perhaps someday, somewhere, some other man will discover how hungry I am for a little reassurance, and he will fill that need. Then, my husband will come home from work and I will be gone, and he will never know why. — NEEDY

DEAR NEEDY: Usually those who are unable to compliment others have never been complimented themselves. And those who have never felt loved have difficulty expressing it to others. Don't be so hard on your non-verbal husband. Tell him gently how much you long for a compliment. Don't suffer silently and hope that one day some other man will discover your need and fill it. Verbalize. It will help your husband to become more verbal.

DEAR ABBY: There are a few things I would like to bring to people's attention about motels, since I live at one and work as a desk clerk there.

A motel is for sleeping, and is not the same as an apartment building! Please check into your room as quietly as possible. Your next-door neighbor may be trying to take a nap. Or he may be staying at the motel because he is working the night shift in the area.

Horn blowing, for any reason, is thoughtless! If you have friends visiting you in your room, please remind them not to blow their horn as they pull away. Of course, that goes for checkout the next morning. Please leave quietly.

Don't be the guy who empties his ashtry in front of his motel room. There are receptacles handy for that purpose.

Ah, yes, the pool! Please leave your loud radios in your room. Not all the swimmers want to hear the latest heavy metal rock songs.

If you have a wake-up call, please don't hang up the phone in the desk clerk's ear!

Heed these suggestions, and the desk clerk can say with conviction, "It's been a pleasure serving you." — DESK CLERK

DEAR DESK CLERK: Good tips for guests. And speaking of tips, please leave something for the maid. Her job is one of the most demanding and least rewarding.

DEAR ABBY: Feeling that everyone deserves a fair shot, I decided to write to you to find out if a 15-year-old's opinions are important enough for your column.

We all know that deep down there is a little bit of prejudice in all of us.

My latest English assignment is to perform an "experiment" to find out how people perceive you — strictly by your appearance. People have a tendency to label others without even knowing them, which is unfair to the person.

Stereotyping and judging a person at first glance is a social barrier that we must learn to deal with and overcome. Are you interested in the results? — K.P. IN PORTLAND

DEAR K.P.: You bet I am. For example, if you're planning to dress like a punk rocker, you can expect people to assume that you are a punk rocker. One's appearance is the first statement that a person makes to the public. It's the one that "labels" you.

Now, please tell me why anyone would intentionally want to wear a misleading label.

DEAR ABBY: My mother and I are having a disagreement. Is it necessary to write and thank someone for a thank-you gift? This is not a joke. I am serious.

I had a houseguest over the holidays. She sent me a gift thanking me for my hospitality. My mother says I must acknowledge it.

I say that she thanked me for my hospitality, and there is no need to thank her for thanking me.

What do you say? — ENOUGH THANKS, ALREADY

DEAR ENOUGH: It is not enough. You should thank her for her gift.

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc. because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage is included).

Abigail Van Buren is columnist fo. Universal Press Syndicate.

Schedule less to get tasks done

Copley News Service

Managers who book themselves solid are asking for trouble, because over-scheduling often leads to feelings of frustration and failure when everything isn't accomplished.

That's why former IBM manager and author Lachland Henry suggests scheduling only 60 percent of a day for planned productive work and leaving the remaining 40 percent open for unexpected events.

His book "The Professional's Guide To Working Smarter" offers the following time-management tips:

Prioritize and plan your schedule for the next day before leaving the office.

Be realistic — limit yourself to five to 10 tasks a day and no more.

Tackle one task at a time and stick with it until you complete it.

And, finally, tap into your body's daily cycle.

In other words, if you're a morning person, schedule your most important work when you first get into the office.

Nursing home coverage discussed

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

In this country, the fastest growing population segment is 85 years old and older. Since this population also is most likely to need nursing home care, it's not surprising that the cost of this care is a concern.

Without doubt, nursing home care is expensive. The average cost of a year's service in a nursing home in 1986 was $22,000. Many elderly persons and their families wonder how they will pay for it.

To meet this concern, some insurance companies offer long-term insurance for nursing home care. The difficulty lies in deciding whether or nor the coverage will be needed, and which policy best suits an individual's needs.

Long-term care insurance is designed to protect persons from catastrophic nursing home expenses. The policy pays a set amount of money for each day of nursing home care in an extended period of time.

In general, long term policies are indemnity plans, which means the policy pays a set amount, usually per day, for care. A policy that pays $50 per day may seem reasonable now, while nursing home costs average $100 or less per day. However, these costs are rapidly increasing. In a few years the $50 per day may represent only a small portion of the daily cost of care.

Some insurance companies now offer a benefit adjustment option, with premiums based on several factors, including:

■ Age. The younger the policy holder, the lower the premiums.

■ Deductible. Most policies begin paying after the policy holder is confined to a facility for a certain number of days. Usually the longer the deductible period, the lower the premium.

■ Benefits paid, including amount paid and length of time the benefits cover. The more the policy pays or the longer time the policy covers services, the higher the premiums. For example, a policy paying $80 per day for four years may cost three and a half times more than a policy that pays $50 per day for two years.

Long-term care policies differ, both in benefits offered and in premium cost. When reviewing a policy, evaluate it carefully in terms of dollar value paid daily, length of the policy and premium cost.

For example, Policy A pays $50 per day, and has a built-in inflation factor, no prior hospitalization, 90-day deductible with a three-year maximum time period. Annual premium for this policy is from $240 at age 55 to $1,620 at age 75.

Policy B pays $50 per day, and has an inflation factor, no prior hospitalization, 20-day deductible and a four-year maximum time period. The annual cost for this policy with better benefits are $610 at age 55 to $2,515 at age 75.

Policy C provides $50 per day, no inflation factor, no prior hospitalization, 100-day deductible and a three-year maximum. Annual cost for this policy is $212 for age 55 and $1,745 for a person age 75.

As illustrated, policy benefits and costs vary greatly. When researching policies, remember to compare both benefits and cost. All policies are not the same, and the comparative shopper is usually rewarded for his or her research.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Shouting offends hearing impaired

NEW YORK (AP) — If an elderly parent has trouble hearing, don't shout.

"To shout at anyone with a hearing problem, particularly the elderly, is self-defeating," says Dr. Walter A. Petryshyn, medical director of the Deafness Research Foundation.

"The most important factor is not to lose your patience," he says, "but to determine whether they need professional help to hear or whether they are just tuning you out — something the elderly may do.

"Also, shouting places the elderly in an uncomfortable social situation. They feel confused and upset about the condition. And the problem may not be a hearing loss, but some other problem."

There are 7 million Americans suffering from presbycusis, a hearing loss in the aging — and the number is increasing as lifespans extend, according to the foundation, a nonprofit group dedicated to research on hearing disabilities.

The most significant deterioration in the elderly occurs in the cochlea, the nerve part of the inner ear, in the high frequency sounds, which are vital for the discrimination of words in hearing.

"The problem can be hereditary, but other factors may be involved," Petryshyn says. "Unfortunately, there is no surgical cure, and there's no medication that can alleviate or cure the problem."

If a medical examination discloses a significant nerve loss in high frequencies, rehabilitation is required. A hearing aid may help.

"The only help now available is the hearing aid, which amplifies all sound," Petryshyn says. "A person can hear louder, but not necessarily clearer, because the hearing aid does not select wanted sounds as the brain does.

"This confuses elderly persons. With normal hearing the brain selects what you want to hear. However, we're hoping that digitalized hearing aids will eliminate background noise in the future."

Seniors express themselves with writing

Copley News Service

What will you do today that is creative?

Many mature adults around the United States are finding the freedom of their years an opportunity to launch new creative efforts.

After all, you have built a lifetime of experience, a track record of success — and failures, too — thoughts and observations that just might produce a new form of fulfillment and sharing for you.

For some this expression will be presented in painting and other works of art. For others the capturing of images through photography will produce that satisfaction.

Probably the most popular expression for mature adults is in writing. All kinds of writing. Whatever makes you feel good; whatever comes to mind that will communicate with others.

In Spokane, Wash., Elinor Nuxoll is a mature American who retired three times, the most recent as the editor of the Retired Senior Volunteers Program, and earlier as the editor of the Senior Times newspaper for eastern Washington. Even with her three careers now past history she found a continuing need to write and share with senior citizens.

Her new work is not really a profit-making operation. She has created and edits the Senior Writers Network News, a regular newsletter for the special interests of mature adults and their creative writing efforts.

The newsletter presents information of value to senior citizens interested in writing as a hobby or even as a new vocation. Also presented are articles, reminiscence pieces and other articles by members — from all over the nation — together with reviews of books on writing.

"Senior adults have so much to share," the author and editor told us, "and this newsletter is my way of helping them to focus their interests, develop their abilities and see their work in print. Our newsletter also operates contests for our members and recognizes writings that are particularly good."

Membership in the Senior Writers Network is $6 per year, payable with letter of application. Information and membership address is: Senior Writers Network, East 1419 Marietta Ave., Spokane, WA 99207. The membership fee includes a subscription to the periodic newsletter.

Women 'thirtysomething' becoming first-time mothers

By SUSAN HARTMAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — This television season has been filled with images of single professional women thinking about having children on their own.

Melissa, the spiky-haired photographer of "Thirtysomething," considered it.

So did Murphy, the egotistical television journalist of "Murphy Brown."

J.C., the successful executive of "Baby Boom," has been raising a child on her own, and it looks pretty much of a snap.

For the single professional women in their 30's and 40's who have chosen to bear and rear children on their own, the reality is a lot more complicated and precarious.

So much hinges on dependable child-care arrangements and on the emotional and sometimes financial support of family and friends.

But many women who are able to manage all this describe themselves as more fulfilled than they expected to be. They are rapturous about their children.

A dozen self-supporting middle-class women around the nation earning $22,000 to $50,000 a year said in interviews that they had known what they were getting into despite the romanticized television images and they were surprised at how little prejudice they encountered.

They expressed no regrets about their choices, though most were wary of recommending single motherhood to others.

THE NUMBER of older single mothers is increasing. The National Center for Health Statistics of the Department of Health and Human Services said that of the 3,756,547 live births in the United States in 1986, 106,492 were to single women in their 30's and 40's; in 1985 there were 3,760,561 births, of which 95,477 were to single women in their 30's and 40's.

"There's a significant minority of women choosing motherhood at an age when they can't stand around waiting for the perfect relationship," said Judith Walkowitz, a professor of history at Rutgers University.

"They're aware of the high divorce rate, and of the instability of marriage as an institution. These women have the financial resources to make this decision, and they feel it's not such a deviant position. They won't look so different from divorced mothers."

Nora Lee, a 38-year-old teacher of children with learning disabilities, lives in Brooklyn, has been divorced twice and was told by doctors that she was infertile. She was delighted when she learned she was pregnant. "There was no way I was going to have an abortion," she said. "After all these years?"

Her pregnancy was complicated and she had to stay in bed for five weeks.

Ms. Lee, whose daughter, Shakara, is 4, has worked hard to build a support system: "I never could have done this alone," she said. "I made sure my sister and my close friend of 18 years live in my building. My sister is Shakara's second mother, and she spoils her to death."

Ms. Lee has also been helped by her parents, who "are of the old school," Ms. Lee said, adding, "They've been married 42 years." They often take care of Shakara on weekends. Shakara's father shares the cost of her nursery-school tuition, "and sees her often," Ms. Lee said. "If I'm going crazy, I pick up the phone and call him and he comes and gets her."

MS. LEE especially needed the support of family and friends during Shakara's first two and a half years, when she was in and out of the hospital with severe asthma attacks. "Friends came and stayed with her in the hospital so I could take naps."

The security of her teaching position "made everything possible," she said. "Believe me, I'm grateful."

But her work is exhausting, she said, and "sometimes I wish there were a man right here who could give me a break, an escape." But marriage is not on Ms. Lee's mind: "I don't think I'm suited for it. I like things the way they are."

If she has a regret, it is that her daughter is an only child. "Shakara is lonely," she said. "I'm always trying to get kids here to keep her company, instead of old me towering over her."

Would she have another child on her own? "Absolutely not!" she said, laughing.

"When I told my mother I was pregnant," said Gigi Williams, a 38-year-old makeup artist in feature films, "she was thrilled. They didn't think they were going to get a grandchild."

For Ms. Williams, whose home base is Manhattan but who also works in Los Angeles, working things out meant finding baby sitters in each city who could work 14-hour days, the average length of a day's shooting for a film.

IT ALSO MEANT coping with the instability of her profession; the baby was born a year ago during the strike by the Writers Guild, when she was without work for five months.

"My father paid for the birth because I didn't have insurance," said Ms. Williams. "I was also helped out by a few friends who gave me loans, and by a very understanding landlord." But that period was not unduly stressful because of her faith in God and because of her son.

"George is such a lovely, peaceful baby," she said. "He brings a focus to my life; all other priorities take a back seat. Before, my career was my life. Now it's, 'I have this job.'TH"

Her life with her son is orderly, if unconventional. When Ms. Williams is workin g on l cation she leaves her apartment with George at 5:30 a.m. Her trailer is outfitted with crib, stroller and toys. The baby, watched by the baby sitter, eats, naps and plays there.

Her social life includes George too: "If I go out to dinner or to a movie I bring George along," she said.

Only once, she said, did a producer object to George's being on the set: "This 27-year-old producer got really angry. But later she apologized and said the baby lent something human to the set."

"I was never obsessed with the idea of having a child," said a 45-year-old magazine copy editor who asked that her name not be used. "I didn't think much about it at all. I felt I had a pretty full life."

BUT WHEN, after the deaths of her father and her longtime companion, she learned at age 41 that she was pregnant by a man she was dating, "It was almost like an answer to unspoken prayers," she said.

When she became pregnant, she decided to keep the same schedule, which would enable her to bring up her child in the country if she could find reliable child care.

She decided to find a family her daughter could stay with during her three-day absences. "I interviewed families in their homes for six weeks," she said, "and saw a lot of depressing homes." Finally she found "a lovely couple with two kids of their own who are licensed by the state as child-care providers."

Her daughter's father lives in the same town. "He was initially appalled by the idea of my having the baby," she said, "and I didn't expect him to get involved. But his mother came to visit and said, 'I couldn't stand for there to be a grandchild of mine out there without my knowing her.' "

"Her father and I are now close friends," she continued. "And my daughter has a whole family of grandparents, aunts and cousins. We go over to the farm every Monday night and her father and I cook dinner together. He's not there for me on a daily basis, but he's there in an emergency."

Psychologist helps singles use relationship 'strategies'

Hearst News Service

She is a single woman in her early 30s and has begun to fear she will never marry. Attractive, outgoing and successful, she seems to have a talent for picking out men who are not interested in serious relationships.

He is in his 40s, recently divorced. He wants to meet someone new, but says there is no one out there. So he stays at home, eating off paper plates and wearing mismatched socks with holes in the toes.

Are these people doomed by circumstances? Or are they sabotaging their own chances at happiness? It's probably the latter, says psychologist Robert Lindbergh, who sees many single patients in his private practice and also gives special seminars on "strategies" for singles.

Twice divorced, Lindbergh, 50, is not going to pretend that a solitary life is the one most people would pick if given a choice.

"In the pecking order," he says, "happily married comes first. Then there is happily single, with unhappily married being third. But some people think it's better to stay in a nothing marriage than be single."

Lindbergh believes people are "genetically wired" to seek out relationships. Unfortunately, that predisposition does not guarantee one will find somebody. There are three questions that Lindbergh hears over and over, in a variety of forms, from the single people he counsels:

- How do I learn to live with being lonely?
- How do I meet somebody?
- I'm in this relationship with someone and I want to marry, but the other person doesn't. What can I do?

Each situation is different, Lindbergh says. But for people truly interested in finding answers to those questions, he recommends two exercises:

- Make peace with the fact that you may always be alone.
- Develop a clear picture of what you want in a relationship.

"By saying 'alone,' I mean not married," he adds. "Making peace doesn't mean that you'll like it, or that it's preferred, just that you've accepted it."

Deciding exactly what one wants from a relationship is the only way to avoid what Lindbergh describes as "a continuing series of heartaches." Know the minimum of what you will accept in certain areas and don't compromise, he says. At the same time, people have to be careful of developing a too-detailed image of their ideal mates.

"If single people learn to live alone, then they enter new relationships from a position of strength, they're not so desperate," he says.

People with positive attitudes create opportunities for themselves, Lindbergh says. And developing a positive attitude can be as systematic as laying down one's career goals.

However, don't hang onto bad relationships until a good one comes along. Lindbergh says he is convinced that someone who stays in an unhappy relationship can permanently damage the chances of finding a happy one.

"For some people, the best thing they can do is leave a bad relationship," he says, explaining that "bad" can encompass verbal abuse or even a relationship in which one person ignores the other. "More and more, I'm realizing a really bad relationship can tear at the psychological fiber of the strongest person."

While "in between" relationships, singles have to guard against treating themselves shabbily. This is the time to pamper one's self, Lindbergh says, not the time to eat soup out of a can.

ENERGY POLICY

Report calls oil imports a threat

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Inadequate reserve stockpiles and ill-advised tax and regulatory policies that discourage domestic oil exploration and production have made the United States dangerously dependent on imports from hostile and unstable nations, warns a study recently published by the Heritage Foundation.

The report, written by Milton R. Copulos for the conservative Washington think tank, says U.S. policy-makers should be alarmed that 40 percent of America's oil and scarce minerals come from the Soviet bloc and the Third World.

Said Copulos: "In times of peace, an excessive dependence on foreign sources of supply for any essential commodity can leave the nation vulnerable to enormous economic penalties. But in times of war, the availability of strategic materials and energy can make the difference between defeat and victory."

Copulos, a consultant to the Department of Interior and a visiting fellow at the Heritage Foundation, says the U.S. is extremely vulnerable due to the rising percentage of oil imports coming from the Persian Gulf. Since 1985, oil imports from the Persian Gulf have increased from 3 percent to 20.3 percent.

The energy expert says energy regulatory policy needs a complete overhaul to avert over dependence on foreign crude. He made the following recommendations to President Bush:

- Ease restrictions for exploration and development of oil and other minerals on federal lands.
- Streamline licensing procedures to speed development of a new generation of nuclear reactors incapable of malfunctioning.
- Establish mineral (including oil) stockpiles capable of supplying military efforts for three years, also establish stockpiles refined petroleum products such as jet fuel.

Gun makers aiming for lady buyers

By SUE FAHLGREN

DALLAS (AP) — The color brochure features a lavish fur draped across a polished table, next to a single white rose, a brass lamp and a small, rosewood-handled revolver.

Advertising for Smith & Wesson has taken a feminine tone since the nation's largest handgun manufacturer focused on women as consumers and introduced its latest line of pistols: the LadySmiths.

Handgun critics say the company and organizations like the National Rifle Association are peddling fear for profit by marketing handguns for personal safety.

But Smith & Wesson officials say they're simply meeting demand.

"We're in the business to serve people," said T. Stephen Melvin, president of Smith & Wesson in Springfield, Mass. "Women have been left to buy men's guns and there's been a void in the market."

Robert "Bob" Hass, vice president of marketing for Smith & Wesson, said the new line was developed after years of study and surveys of potential women gun owners.

"About four years ago, there was a real interest in guns among women, but they weren't buying them," Hass said. A Gallup survey showed 12.1 million women bought handguns in 1986, but millions more were undecided and wanted more information before buying or using guns, he said.

"We're trying to interweave the sale of the gun with the safety aspect of handguns," Hass said. "We think women, as well as men, have a perfect right to self-protection."

Smith & Wesson introduced four LadySmiths — 38-caliber revolvers styled to be lightweight and easy-to-handle — at a recent trade show in Dallas.

The gun manufacturer also announced it is setting up a toll-free number March 1 for women to call and talk to female gun specialists. Pamphlets packed inside LadySmith cases refer women to gun training courses, most certified by the NRA.

"Women are feeling very concerned about self-protection and a lot of them think a handgun will help them in that area," said Tracey Martin, manager in education and training for the NRA.

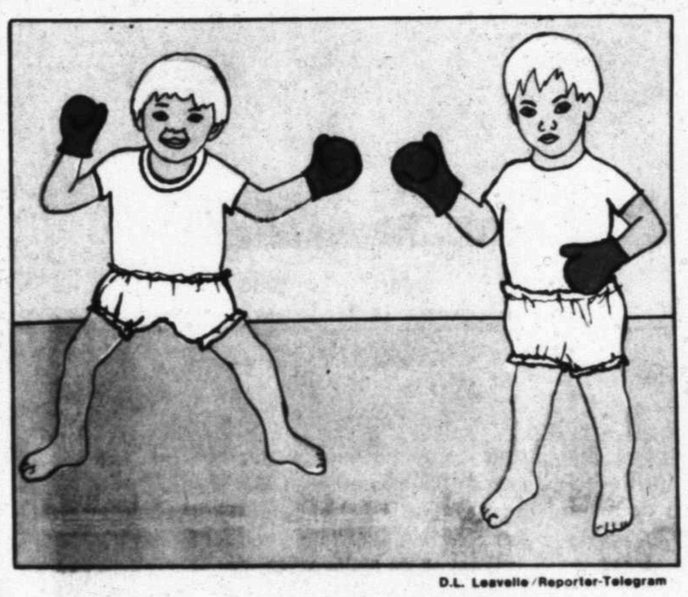

But Handgun Control Inc., a nonprofit group based in Washington, believes the NRA and Smith & Wesson are preying on a fear of crime among women to boost sales in a market that was dwindling in the early 1980s.

"It's pretty shameless of NRA and gun makers to increase sales with this type of thing," said Handgun Control spokeswoman Barbara Lautman.

"It's true that there has been a trend among women to buy handguns over the past few years," Ms. Lautman said. "But it's fostered a lot by a fear campaign by the gun lobby."

Handgun Control was established by Sarah Brady, the wife of former press secretary Jim Brady. He was wounded during the 1980 assassination attempt on former President Ronald Reagan.

Consumers have watched the hamburger wars between McDonald's, Burger King and Wendy's. They've watched the cola wars between Coca-Cola and Pepsi. Now comes the diaper wars.

Veragon, a Houston-based paper products company, wants to take on the "big boys" in diapers — namely Procter & Gamble, and capture a slice of the Texas market for its own.

"Our goal is to produce a low-priced, quality product capable of earning us a share of the regional market," says Dave Pitassi, a Veragon founder. The company's "Drypers" brand disposable diaper sells for as much as $1 less than Pampers, Luvs or Huggies.

The contender diaper is available at local Furr's-owned stores, and there's a chance it will be available at local Skaggs-Alpha Beta and M System stores in the near future.

"Myself and my partner Wally Klemp were looking at different business opportunities. I saw disposable diaper prices were pretty high, and I thought if we could produce a product just as good at a better price, the public would go for it, and that's been the case," explained Pitassi by telephone from his office in Houston. Klemp had worked for Coopers & Lybrand and Pitassi had spent some time at Procter & Gamble, as had the third principal, Terry Tognetti.

Since the introduction of Drypers, P&G has come out with a $2 off coupon on its diapers, redeemable immediately. In response, Veragon last week offered customers three $1-off coupons in exchange for each $1 Pampers, Huggies or Luvs coupon. In addition, the company throws in a $1 bonus coupon.

"When you come in and take market share, people respond," noted Pitassi. "This is a great opportunity to save up to $10 on diapers. They're one of those necessary things and are costly. But they have to be high-quality. If they're not, the price doesn't matter."

WORKERS' COMPENSATION

Sweeping reform bill proposed

House Bill 1 ready for hearings

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

After nearly two years of public hearings, select committee meetings, input from labor and business and serious lobbying by all the players, a Workers' Compensation reform bill stands ready to move forward in the legislature.

According to the bill's drafters who unveiled the final version of the bill Wednesday, the omnibus reform legislation represents a compromise among doctors, insurance interests, labor, business and lawyers.

"In order to move this off dead center — break the gridlock — you have to have a package in which all five interest groups have some gain and all five interest groups give up something in order to move to a new system," said Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, who along with Haskell Democrat Rick Perry, is a primary co-sponsor of the bill.

The House Business & Commerce Committee, to which the bill was referred, has scheduled hearings to begin Monday on the 200-plus-page document.

Virtually no area of the present system is left untouched by reform. Even the name of the primary agency involved — the Industrial Accident Board — would be changed to the Texas Workers' Compensation Board.

The extensive work which has gone into drafting the bill is one of its greatest strengths, said Perry, who was one of five House members on the Joint Select Committee. The bill represents a compilation of the recommendations gathered by the committee from experts "with no axe to grind and no economic interest in the pie that is workers' compensation."

The group spent more than 12 months and a half-million dollars in compiling its report as it was charged to by the 70th Legislature. "(R)unaway insurance rates and a perception of high costs and low benefits were the puzzling premises underlying the creation of the Joint Select Committee," the report said.

From that basis and the 10-member panel's 10 pages of recommendations and alternative, has come a bill which would reorganize and strengthen the re-named board, change the benefit structure and the adjudication process for disputed cases.

Instead of an injured worker's case getting a completely new trial at the district court level, the district court action would be treated as an appeal of the agency action, with administrative actions admissable in the second trial.

Perry noted that the IAB is the only state agency which uses "the antiquated trial de novo system. Texas is one of only three states which uses the system for workers' compensation claim appeals, he said.

The change to an administrative appeals process has been called "non-negotiable" by House Speaker Gib Lewis, who has taken "an exceptional interest" in Workers' Comp reform, according to Perry.

Lewis' high-profile concern is expected to serve the bill well in making it in and out of the Business & Commerce Committee quickly. "It is not unknown for him (Lewis) to pull a bill out of committee if it is getting bogged down, or legislators start trying to 'play' with it," Perry said.

The JSC has aired the issue out fully for 18 months, he said, so he does not expect committee members to propose major substantive changes in the bill.

Houston firm sells Soviet space program

TEXAS BUSINESS

AUSTIN (AP) — A fledgling Houston company, whose founder and half of its stockholders live in the Texas Hill Country, has signed a landmark agreement to market virtually all civilian and scientific services, hardware and data from the Soviet Union's space program.

"This is a red-letter day for Texas," said Bill Rubey of Wimberley. "We convinced them the future is here in Texas."

Rubey, heir to the Maxwell House Coffee fortune, is the founder of Space Commerce Corp. of Houston. A handful of wealthy, old-line Texans own stock in the company, including Jeff Bronfman, also of Wimberley, and heir to the House of Seagram Inc. fortune.

Space Commerce executives include Houston lawyers Art Dula and Merrill Shields. Dula is they year-old firm's president.

Rubey said the joint-venture agreement, which could be worth millions of dollars, was signed in late 1988 by Dula and Alexander Dynayev, who heads Glavcosmos, the Soviet civilian space agency. Rubey said the agreement gives the Texas company exclusive worldwide marketing rights, except Western Europe.

"So all the stockholders are going to get filthy rich," Rubey said.

The Soviets hope the venture will make them competitive with U.S. and European commercial space endeavors, according to Aviation Week & Space Technology magazine.

Rubey said the Soviet decision to contract with the Texas firm was based on a variety of factors including the participation of astronomer Harlan Smith in the Menafee Foundation, which promotes joint space ventures between the United States and the Soviet Union. Rubey is chairman of the foundation, which owns his stock in Space Commerce. Smith, the director of the McDonald Observatory of the University of Texas, is a foundation adviser.

"My role is not as a stockholder (in Space Commerce)," Smith said, "but as a catalyst to bring the people together at the right time. If this works out it will be very important."

Rubey said the Soviets apparently also were influenced by President-elect George Bush's ties to Texas. Rubey said Payload Systems Inc. of Boston, Mass., was Space Commerce's main competitor for the marketing contract.

"If (Gov. Michael) Dukakis had been elected," Rubey said, "the Soviets would have annointed the Boston company. They selected us because they wanted ties into the Texas establishment and the state where the next president is from."

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Would the Republic of Texas be in this fix?

I am one of those Texans who honestly believes that Texas should have never joined the Union.

In my opinion, the two republics would have been better off in the long run had they remained friendly neighbors, like Canada and the U.S., instead of getting married. But that's history.

It may be too late to change history, but not destiny. While Texas' course is charted mainly in Washington D.C. — by folks generally more bent on doing to us than for us — there are still a few things Texans can do for (or to) themselves in Austin — without the blessings of Congress or federal judges.

One of them, says Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, is to determine which fuel Texas will burn in its vehicles — gasoline or natural gas. So far there is no federal law prohibiting such a choice.

If we choose to continue with gasoline, our economic fortunes will certainly remain in the hands of Washington and OPEC. On the other hand, if we choose compressed natural gas (CNG) as our transportation fuel of choice, we can gain a measure of control over our economic destiny, says Mauro.

The reason? OPEC has sufficient oil reserves to control production quotas and create price swings of international oil prices. Washington, on the other hand, controls the taxing and tariff mechanisms to offset those swings. Neither have shown any concern for Texas in exercising those controls.

On the other hand, OPEC does not control natural gas prices. Moreover, in this department, it is Texas that has sufficient natural gas reserves to impact market prices.

The number of working rigs drilling for oil or gas is the primary economic indicator in West Texas and other parts of the state. There are few rigs drilling because of depressed prices of oil and natural gas. While there is not much Texans can do about oil prices, they can affect natural gas prices.

Here's how: Gas prices are depressed, because of a surplus or "bubble" in the market. The solution, then, is to generate enough new demand to remove that "bubble," get prices up, and put the rigs back to work.

How can demand be generated? One method, already underway on a state level, is to solicit and open new markets in the Northeast and California.

Another way is to create our own in-state demand by choosing to burn CNG in Texas trucks, vans, buses, school buses and fleet vehicles.

That method is essentially what Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro had in mind last week when he proposed an economic revitalization bill that would require thousands of state vehicles, school buses, and mass transit buses to convert to CNG.

Of course, such conversions would also clean up the air and that has earned the Land Commissioner a following in the environmental crowd, with such organizations as the Sierra Club signing on.

Said Mauro: "The bottom line is, we can breathe new life into the economy of this state by attacking air pollution," said Mauro.

The bill would require conversion to CNG of state-owned or operated fleets with more than 15 vehicles, school districts with 50 or more buses and all local transit authorities.

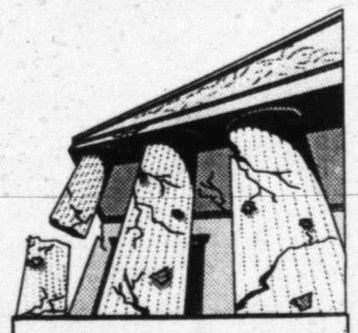

The bill sets out a timetable for compliance, requiring 30 percent conversion by 1994; 50 percent by 1996; and 90 percent by 1998.

In areas of the state that fail to meet minimum air quality standards, private fleets and local government fleets, except for police and emergency vehicles, would also have to convert to natural gas. These areas include Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth, Austin and Beaumont.

The bill also would prohibit the burning of fossil fuel oil in utility and industrial boilers capable of burning natural gas between April 15 and Oct. 15 each year.

The cost of converting to CNG could be financed through suppliers and offset by savings in lower fuel and maintenance costs.

Shoring up

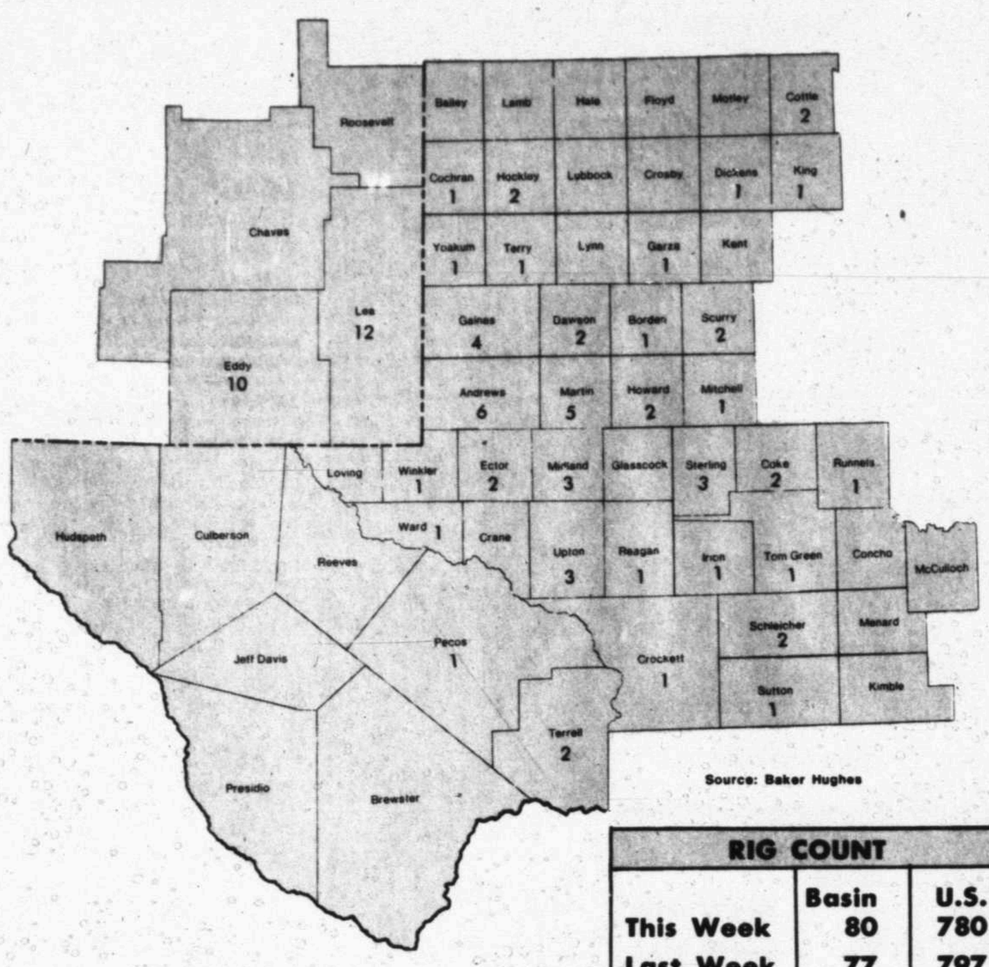

President Bush's plan for restoring the crumbling thrift industry got mixed reviews from economic experts in Washington.

Meanwhile, as the FDIC moved in to take control of an insolvent California savings and loan, they found no quick fixes for a troubled institution.

Basin tally up, U.S. count down

From Staff Reports

The national and Permian Basin rig counts were mixed this week, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

After gaining eight the previous week, the U.S. count dropped 17 to stand at 780, continuing its see-saw activity.

After dropping one the previous week, the Permian Basin tally gained three to stand at 80.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the Basin with 12 rigs. Next was Eddy County, N.M. with 10.

Irion, Sutton and Winkler counties saw new activity this week while Glasscock County was left with none.

Among major oil producing states, California and Oklahoma saw a decline at four, followed by Ohio, two; and Michigan, New Mexico, North Dakota, Pennsylvania and Texas, one each.

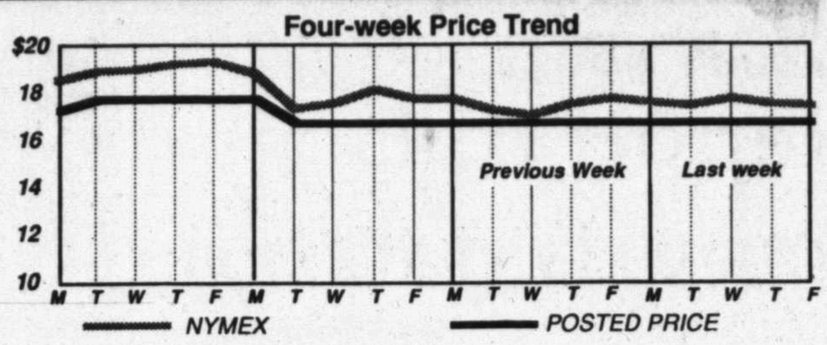

Colorado, Kansas and Louisiana had gains of two each while Wyoming had one.

Crude imports

The Texas Railroad Commission reports that total imports of crude oil and products for December 1988 averaged 7.96 million barrels daily, up from 6.7 million daily in December 1987. Year-to-date crude oil and product imports are up 9.2 percent compared to 1987 levels. Crude oil imports are up 9 percent and product imports are up 9.5 percent.

Enron reports year-end gas reserves

HOUSTON (SWN) — Enron Oil & Gas Co., a subsidiary of Enron Corp., has reported its year-end 1988 proved reserves.

The company reported total proved reserves at year-end 1988 of 1.5 trillion cubic feet (Tcf) of gas equivalent.

"Even though we sold nearly $282 million worth of non-strategic properties, representing 15 percent of our reserves, our total proved reserves at year-end 1988 were only about 13 percent less than year-end 1987 reserves of 1.7 Tcf," said Forrest E. Hoglund, chairman and chief executive officer of Enron Oil & Gas.

About 88 percent of Enron Oil & Gas Company's reserves are natural gas and 12 percent are crude oil, condensate and natural gas liquids. Approximately 92 percent of the company's reserves are located in the United States and 8 percent in Canada.

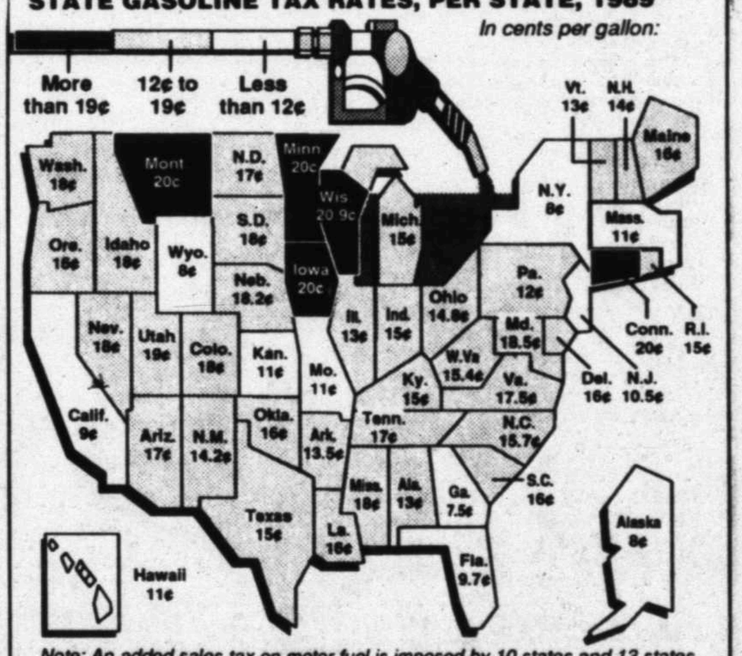

"1988 was a tremendously successful year for us," Hoglund said. "Even though we had a relatively small budget of $132 million, we were able to replace more than 140 percent of our production through drilling and acquisitions by concentrating in our core growth areas."

States' tax bite at the pump

As of Jan. 1, 1989, the average state gasoline tax was 15 cents per gallon. Five states have a gasoline tax of 20 cents or more per gallon, while 11 states charge less than 12 cents of tax per gallon. The current federal gas tax is 9 cents per gallon.

Southdown has record reserve additions

HOUSTON (SWN) — Southdown, Inc. has announced that the oil and gas reserves of its wholly-owned subsidiary, Pelto Oil Company, totaled 35.5 million barrels equivalent at January 1, 1989, 18 percent higher than a year ago. The future net pretax revenues of these proved reserves discounted at 10 percent per year increased 21 percent to $237.1 million at January 1, 1989 from $196.4 million a year earlier.

According to the reserve report prepared by independent petroleum engineers, Pelto's proved reserves of natural gas were 169.8 billion cubic feet at January 1, 1989 compared with 137.6 billion cubic feet a year earlier. The majority of the 23 percent increase is attributable to successful exploratory and development drilling offshore Louisiana. Proved reserves of crude oil and condensate were 7.2 million barrels at January 1, 1989.

Geothermal field may be Japan 's biggest

TOKYO (AP) — A geothermal field on the southern island of Kyushu could produce 250 megawatts of electricity and become the largest in Japan, a construction company said Thursday.

Fujita Corp. said one well that it drilled a year ago in Oita on Kyushu had been proved to be the largest producer of steam and hot water in the world, issuing 120 tons of steam and 100 tons of hot water an hour, enough to produce 20 megawatts of electricity.

Spokesman Hitoshi Miyagishima said Fujita was digging several more wells in the geothermal field and had a plan to build 30 wells to produce 250 megawatts of electricity with an investment of $1.2 billion.

But he said Fujita had not approached the local utility about building the plant, nor had it asked the national government for financial aid.

If the field is fully developed, it would more than double the current national total of 215 megawatts of electricity from geothermal sources, Fujita said. Press reports said Japan still would trail the United States because one field there has a generating capacity of 1,900 megawatts.

Japan, despite its many volcanos and hot springs, has not devoted much effort to exploring geothermal energy until recently. Its main drive has been into nuclear reactors, which supplied 29 percent of the country's electricity in 1987. The government has approved a plan to double the output of nuclear power plants by the year 2000. A nuclear reactor usually produces more than 1,000 megawatts of electricity, or more than four times the output of the projected geothermal field in Kyushu.

National Automobile Dealers Association president Ron Tonkin says standing up to automakers on dealers' behalf will a top priority.

Dealers' group leader sets stage for change

New York Times News Service

Big Three automobile executives are bracing for what well may be a year of discord with the influential organization that represents their franchise dealers.

Ron Tonkin, a combative car dealer from Portland, Ore., became president of the National Automobile Dealers Association, promising to "even out" the one-sided partnership between the factories and the nation's 20,000 dealers.

Tonkin is not the first elected representative for the car dealers with a list of grievances against the General Motors Corp., the Ford Motor Co. and the Chrysler Corp.

But dealers and executives agree that there has never been a president as blunt as Tonkin in the organization's 72-year history.

"They've labeled me as outspoken, but I see nothing wrong with that if that's what it takes to correct injustices," Tonkin said in recent interviews.

"I don't worry about whose toes I step on. I don't fear retribution. Not that I'm a fearless person, but I think the best way to face an issue is to be totally on top of it. I'm talking to the people who can fix the issues."

Three years ago, as a regional director, Tonkin called for the resignation of Roger B. Smith, GM's chairman, in response to operating problems at GM and falling sales of the company's products. Tonkin's dealerships sell a variety of car makes, including Chevrolet, Honda and Lotus.

Since then, Tonkin said he has patched up his differences with Smith — he even gives Smith high marks for improving GM — but he is still upset about other issues and remains angry at what he says are the arbitrary policies of lower-level GM managers who work with dealers.

GM, not surprisingly, vehemently disagrees that its middle managers rule arbitrarily.

Tonkin said the most important issue facing auto dealers is the elimination of fleet subsidies.

"We just don't have a level playing field when others can buy cars for less than franchised dealers." he said.

"We're intent on getting unity among dealers so we can accomplish our goals. We're finally getting the bigger dealers involved. They've been members but never have been involved in the issues," he said.

The Porsche 911 Carrera 4, the company's first production all-wheel drive auto is slated for introduction in American markets this spring.

Porsche rolls out all-wheel drive

Porsche Cars North America Inc. boasts that the introduction of its 911 Carrera 4 in the U.S. market advances the art of sports car building and the science of all-wheel-drive technology into a single package.

The company calls all-wheel-drive an oversimplification in describing the new model. Some four-wheel drive systems transmit equal power to front and real wheel without regard to load or road surface condition.

Porsche has supplemented race-proven drive components with state-of-the-art electronic sensors and control to create a sophisticated system of "intelligent" all-wheel drive.

Using multiple sensors, sophisticated electronics and two multi-disc hydraulic clutch units, the 911 Carrera 4's full-time all-wheel-drive system delivers more power to the wheels that have the traction to use it and — more importantly, they say — reduces power to the wheels that do not.

Design of the Carrera 4 began with a new floorpan and progressed through new suspensions at both front and rear to extensivelt revised, yet totally familiar-looking bodywork. The resemblence to other 911 models — in performance and appearance — is intentional; however, the new model shares of 15 percent of its components with the current series.

REFORM

Eliminating trial de novo also is the one issue that the West Central Texas lawmaker sees as a potential stumbling block for the bill.

However, "I think the argument that voting for House Bill 1 is somehow giving up a worker's day in court doesn't stand up very well," Perry said.

If it were an inherently pro-labor system, it would be in place in such organized labor strongholds as New York, Michigan and Pennsylvania, he said, which it is not.

Under the bill, the maximum weekly benefit for an injured worker would be raised from the current $238 to the statewide average weekly wage, currently $416.

Among other provisions in House Bill 1 are:

- Expanding the prohibition of benefits to intoxicated worker to include drug-related intoxication.
- Increasing the governing board from three, slotted members (business, labor and general public) to nine unrestricted volunteers, and a business-labor advisory committee.
- Reorganizing the board to include divisions for compliance and practices; medical review and compliance; industrial safety; education and training; and hearings and appeals.
- Strengthening the requirements for identifying "truly dependent" people for payment of death benefits. And,
- Allowing individual self-insurance under strict guidelines, with optional deductibles available from insurance carriers.

The other argument against the reform bill that Rep. Perry anticipates is that it does not guarantee lower insurance premiums.

"True," says Perry, "but it is obviously the right step in the right direction toward rate relief."

Many of the issues which could keep premium rates from going down are inherent in the state's sick insurance industry and not specific to Workers' Comp, he said. "But we can't afford to tag all those concerns on to this bill," he said in a Friday afternoon telephone interview from his office in Haskell.

DIAPERS

Introduced last September, Drypers features a patent-pending superabsorbent core consisting of paper fluff and two parallel bands of a superabsorbent material that can absorb up to 100 times its weight in liquid. It also uses lycra leg gathers and a tear-proof tape panel.

Pitassi said the company has received numerous letters of praise. Indeed, Jim Johnson of Lubbock, whose company, Gordon Murdock Brokerage Co. helped place Drypers in the Midland area, says that some stores are running out of stock on occasion.

Pitassi and Klemp, who both attended Lewis & Clark College in Portland, had started a diaper company several years ago in Portland. They sold their interest in it and moved to Texas to form Veragon. Pitassi, who had worked in Procter & Gamble's marketing department, handles the marketing while Klemp handles the financial end. Tognetti, who Pitassi estimates made three billion diapers during his nine years in P&G's production department, handles the production end of things.

While Drypers is currently Veragon's only product, Pitassi says they are looking at other products such as adult incontinence products. Current plans are to remain a regional concern, concentrating on Texas, New Mexico and Louisiana. The team is currently evaluating entering the markets in Arizona and California, and they haven't ruled out going nationwide.

In the meantime, they're sitting back and enjoying the response to Drypers.

ENERGY

- Restore the oil depletion allowance from 15 percent to 27.5 percent.
- Repeal the minimum tax on intangible drilling costs.
- Revise regulations to allow firms to meet air quality standards by using natural gas and oxygenated fuels such as alcohol and methanol as an alternate transportation fuel to gasoline.

Copulos said no federal lands should be closed to exploration before its economic value has been assessed, and said the California coast and Arctic National Wildlife Refuge should be immediately opened for exploration.

He called the minimum tax on intangible drilling costs an "arcane theory" that taxed legitimate expenses routinely deducted by other businesses. He also took a dim view of current depletion allowances, saying they deny oil companies the right to deplete assets.

While the Heritage Foundation supports incentives for oil and gas drilling, it has rejected an oil import fee as an "unworkable" idea.

GUNS

Ms. Lautman said advertisements produced by NRA and other pro-gun interests often feature women and children as victims of brutal crimes and that not even law enforcement officials can keep them safe, but owning a handgun will.

A January 1988 NRA ad shows a broken-heeled pump beneath the message: "He's followed you for two weeks. He'll rape you in two minutes. Who cares?" Another depicts a stocking-masked bandit with the question, "Should you shoot a rapist before he cuts your throat?"

"Last night I was raped," reads a May 1985, NRA advertisement which featured a photograph of a dishevelled woman with a black eye. "Where were the police?"

Smith & Wesson defended handgun marketing and the latest line of its guns.

"From our studies, we've learned crime is a major attitude in America," Hass said. "If that's on people's minds and, in specific, on women's minds, they have a perfect right to do that."

"We aren't going out with scare tactics," Melvin said. "This is a kind of consumer-producer relationship, rather than a hard-sell campaign. If women want to buy guns, we have produced a gun that's more suitable for them. If they don't, we're not going to force one on them."

Hass said about 9 percent of American women own handguns.

"But twice that number said they'd be interested in buying one. Most women said they had a latent desire to own a gun, principally for self-protection," he said. "Research also showed that a fear of crime was a pretty significant indicator of the change in women's attitudes about guns."

Over the past two years, Smith & Wesson conducted focus groups with women in four major areas nationwide: Dallas, Memphis-Nashville, Tenn., Winter Park, Fla., and Hartford, Conn.

"They told us they wanted a compact, sturdy .38-caliber revolver that would be easy to care for and easy to learn to use safely," Hass said. "So that's what we built."

The LadySmiths include two with a glossy-blue finish and two that are frosted stainless steel. Featuring 2-inch or 3-inch barrels, the five-shot pistols are fitted with specially designed rosewood stocks or wood-grained, finger-grooved combat stocks. Smith & Wesson suggests retail prices of $368 to $415, depending on the model.

PITTS

While the bill appears to be a win-win situation, with the state environment and economy winning, it is so historical and significant in its design and purpose that it is bound to encounter controversy and resistance.

Not since 1901 and the drilling of Spindletop has there been a serious challenge to refined petroleum products (gasoline and diesel) as the one and only transportation fuel.

Now, CNG, which requires no expensive refineries, is poised to become gasoline's first serious threat. Major oil companies, which have substantial investment in refining and downstream operations are not likely to openly welcome a threat to the status quo.

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association has offered up a list of other concerns such as refueling dangers, high pressures, contract busing, changing technology and temporary shortages of natural gas.

"While we support Mauro's efforts for clean air, the users of the alternate fuel program must be allowed input before PBPA can go on record for the bill," said Harry Spannaus, PBPA executive vice president.

Whatever the outcome of Garry Mauro's bill, it sends a message to Texans that is long overdue.

If Lonesome Dove's Capt. Gus McCrae were alive today he might put it this way: "Texas needs to stop being a helpless puppet in the hands of Yankee politicians and Arab princes. There are still a precious few things that we Texans can do to guide our own destiny. We should identify them and do them."

John Paul Pitts is business/oil editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

SPACE

That may be so, Smith indicated, because there still is some question whether the U.S. State Department will give the approval required for American companies to launch satellites on Soviet rockets.

Space Commerce officials, however, were invited to the State Department shortly after the presidential election to "brief them on why they should let U.S. satellites fly on Soviet rockets," Rubey said.

He said the firm also has had recent contacts with James Baker, the U.S. Treasury secretary and former Houston lawyer who is Bush's choice to be the next secretary of State.

But even if State Department approval is not given, the Soviet agreement with the Houston firm still gives Space Commerce the ability to market Soviet hardware and software elsewhere, notably to the developing world.

Rubey said Space Commerce recently began marketing in Mexico, where impending de-nationalization of the fishing industry has prompted Mexican officials to seek current information on offshore fishing grounds from remote-sensing satellites. The Soviets have such data for sale, Rubey said.

"We'll also be applying to the State Department for a license this spring for a Proton launch," Rubey said. "But we don't need a license to get (experiments) on the Mir." The Proton is the Soviet's chief expendable rocket for putting satellites into Earth orbit. Mir is the name of the Soviet space station.

Rubey said the agreement apparently gives the Houston firm broad ability to market even items only peripherally related to the Soviet space program.

"We're not sure yet what all it means we can do," he said. "Dula says it's better than having the MacDonald's franchise for the whole world. Apparently, we even have rights to sell scale models of the Mir and to take tourists to Baikonur." The Baikonur Cosmodrome is the Soviet equivalent of the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

If all goes well, Rubey said, some of the Menafee Foundation's profits from the venture will be turned over to the University of Texas at Austin.

The foundation "will be devoting one third of the income we receive from Space Commerce to UT-Austin through Harlan Smith," Rubey said.

The money would be used for "the development of international space and lunar-based research projects," Smith said.

Computer wizards reshape 'Nerds of the '90s'

EDITOR'S NOTE — Once upon a time, wizardry at an early age was apt to get channeled into such nerdy outlets as violin lessons or differential calculus on a slide rule. Fortunately for Leo Schwab, his birth coincided roughly with that of the personal computer where the master could fulfill his dreams on the wondrous keyboard of an electronic slave. Schwab has become the consummate hacker. The last of three articles.

By SID MOODY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (AP) — "You probably ought to go see Leo Schwab," said the phoner, a member of Silicon Valley's vast brotherhood of computer hackers. "He's a wizard. Even wears a cape."

So, off to see the wizard, following if not the Yellow Brick Road the — too good to be true — Golden Gate Bridge en route.

The wizard, capeless, opened the door of a brand-new suburban town house. His lair — absent clouds of steam or a wizardly switching panel — was equipped with California wall hangings and laid-back furniture. Schwab himself, lanky-tall, whose unlined face of 24 years was framed by an auburn beard, was further deflationary:

"I'm not a wizard. Maybe a semi-wizard."

Schwab was to demonstrate, however, that he could make a computer — essentially only an electronic box that can either say yes or no — pirouette magically under his spell.

"Computers consume almost all my waking hours," said Schwab, whose "sleep phase" runs from about 3 a.m. to 10 a.m.

This is one of the identifying field marks of the hacker breed. Dedicated, long, oddball hours.

"I want to write software and make a lot of money (a common but not always present field mark of a hacker) and (almost an invariable hallmark of the species) have fun."

Fun at the expense of the nation's computer networks that transfer billions of dollars of bank money daily, monitor heartbeats in hospitals, command satellites in space, switch all those zillions of phone calls, is not what hacking is about. Hackers resent being grouped with those who maliciously plant worms and viruses that befuddle computers. Hackers call them crackers.

Leo's apotheosis to semi-wizardry is not untypical.

He's a native of the San Francisco Bay area where kids absorb the binary system almost before they learn to stay afloat in hot tubs. Hacking, of course, is now worldwide, but its Bethlehem was at MIT in Cambridge, Mass., and then Silicon Valley. Leo's father was a mechanic, his mother a housewife. They produced a Leo gifted with a vivid imagination.

"I talked to myself a lot and daydreamed, usually with me in the starring role."

Once upon a time, wizardry at an early age was apt to get channelized into such nerdy outlets as violin lessons or differential calculus on a slide rule. Fortunately for Leo, his birth coincided roughly with that of the personal computer where the master could fulfill his dreams on the wondrous keyboard of an electronic slave.

IF YOU could afford one. Leo couldn't.

But the Byte Shop had just become Marin County's first computer store. Leo became its first "pest" or embryonic wizard alias freeloading hacker.

"They were permissive. They let me run anything. I played Pong in color on an Apple. Amazing! It was a black art then."

In the ninth grade Leo was introduced to the computer lab at San Rafael High. "I spent every spare moment there. I wanted to realize things in my imagination on the screen. I had a lot of kooky ideas I couldn't realize in other ways. I rarely achieved this because my mind was three years ahead of the technology."

Leo made do buying $6 disk drives for Paleozoic computers while waiting for the industry to catch up. He meanwhile devised his first computer game while daydreaming in algebra class.

"Then I graduated and suddenly was without a machine. A Computerland threw me out for the last time."

What was an apprentice wizard to do?

Leo had had a newspaper route. "Everyone on it found their paper precisely where they wanted it. Every day."

Such diligence had earned him the scratch to buy a $1,200 Commodore computer when they first came out. Computer games had been sweeping the country, making their teen-age inventors almost as rich as rock stars or junk bond salesmen.

The computer's combination of speed, programmability and endless permutations makes it a natural for games by quick minds. One of the first was concocted in the late 1950s by the three young programmers at Bell Laboratories in New Jersey. The idea of the game, dubbed Core War, was to wipe out the memory of an opponent's computer. All in fun, of course.

One of the players, ironically, was Robert Morris, whose son is suspected of having infected a major computer network last fall in what he may have thought was a hack but others think a crack.

IN THE '70s, computer games did for electronics what the rumble seat once did for necking. Everyone wanted to try out the new technology. By the original Hacker Ethic evolved first at MIT and described by Steven Levy in his landmark history, "Hackers," computers were a gift from the gods to man's ingenuity and should be thus forevermore free. Money got its nose in the tent, however, with the rage for game software, Donkey Pong, Pac-Man, Frogger.

Levy describes how Ken Williams, a college dropout, came to found On-Line Systems in the Sierra foothills where pubescent and post-adolescent programmers created fun and games in an atmosphere of anarchy and funny-smelling smoke so laid-back it risked toppling into the Pacific. Bob Davis, a one-time musician and hash-house cook, signed on after meeting Williams in a liquor store where he was working and taught himself to become a wizard game programmer.

John Harris, facing a nerdified future as son of a banker in San Diego, came of age just as games did and went to work for On-Line with a more generous royalty agreement than salary. One of his games at one point paid him $36,000 in royalties in a single month.

Leo Schwab just missed the gold rush.

"Those days are probably over," he lamented. "You'd have to be very clever or very lucky to be in the right place when something explodes economically.

"I graduated just when the bottom fell out of the games market. So many people said they could make a quick buck and did, and the quality suffered. People wanted something more than shoot-and-kill games. But it's not that simple. Every game you could think of has been done before."

So Leo surrendered to the heresy that even wizards might benefit from higher learning. He tried a community college but "a bad study ethic" convinced him to go to work programming.

A Kareem Abdul-Jabbar among the Spud Webbs of the computer world, Leo Schwab stands head and shoulders above his semi-wizard Silicon Valley hacking peers.

AP Photo

"I decided against free-lance. I like a paycheck."

He got a job in charge of low-level programming with a company in Corte Madera near here. "Anything someone couldn't do or wouldn't do they gave to me and I'd do it fast. In the process I'd play, develop a hack that would make the process simpler."

After 2½ years, Leo's employer was bought out by what he calls "vulture," not venture, capitalists. He was fired because he held to a more elastic interpretation of the free software proviso of the Hacker Ethic than did his new employers, regarding their copyrighted material.

After knocking around a bit, Leo now programs for $24,000 a year for a software firm in Glendale via a phone hookup.

He shares the town house with his girl and their landlord. When they are working, Leo is home hacking. When he gets burned out, "I hop on my bike and ride around for awhile."

Leo is asked about wizardry.

"I have a difficult time relating to my feelings, so when someone asks me a deeper question, I tend to reply on a technical level. In another time I might have been da Vinci."

WITH THAT, Leo models one of his two capes, a velveteen item that has "wizard" written implicitly all over it. As do his several wands. He also wears Tudor hats, the kind European Ph.D.s wear to commencements, the floppy disks of headgear.

His mental processes are da Vincian, which is to say, in contemporary terms, hackerian. The ability to see left-handed responses to right-handed challenges.

"I'll make a mental note of something — a shape, a sequence — and store it. I'll be talking to myself and will pick it out. I tend to see things three-dimensionally."

We are now in Leo's work space in his bedroom. It is lined with stuffed toys — they are his, not his girl's — some from childhood and some from his adulthood. He likes figures from the comic strip "Bloom County." His computer's cursor is a replica of the penguin-like bird from the strip.

Curiosity is essential to hacking, he says. "So is imagination, because often you're confronted with problems that don't yield to usual solutions. You probably have to be a little maniacal. And you have to enjoy it. If not, you're cheating yourself.

Leo flicks to a cable TV logo that is as snowy as a busted set.

"That's another kind of a political statement."

Another in the same genre are two slightly colored wine bottles, a dig at Ted Turner for colorizing black-and-white classic films. A robot pushes Leo's Bloom County bird all over the screen. An ax hews away at the CBS logo. Onions mutate in all sorts of oblate forms. Six red and white balls ricochet.

"I like things that bounce. I don't know why."

Leo, does this wizardry have any destination?

Leo is ready with answers. He used to show his graphics to his mother.

"Mom, look at that!"

"That's nice, darling. What is it?"

Leo would like some day to be able to afford a house in Ross, an upscale suburb outside San Rafael.

"I'll be disappointed, I guess, if I don't get there. But I'll probably be so enraptured with what I'm doing that, in California terms, the good energy will come back to me some day."

For now, Santa, the wizard wants $8,000 to buy a three-quarter-inch u-matic video recorder with single-frame ability which will facilitate animation.

"Basically, I want to earn enough money to buy more toys to earn more money to buy more toys. He who buys the most toys wins."

In Trump's game, as in his life, the object is money

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — First there was Trump: the real-estate developer.

Then there was Trump: the best-selling book.

Now there is "Trump: The Game."

For people whose salaries don't have a whole lot of zeroes but who dream of wheeling and dealing the way he does for a living — in spades — Donald J. Trump, the man, unveiled the solution this week.

"Trump: The Game" is not unlike Monopoly — the player with the most money wins.

But the stakes in the Trump game are a good deal higher than in Monopoly.

The smallest denomination of fake money — with Trump's picture in place of Grover Cleveland's or Woodrow Wilson's — is a cool $10 million.

"Trump: The Game" even comes complete with Trump cards.

Trump said he had offers from four toy companies that wanted to add a game to Trump Tower, Trump Parc, Trump Plaza, Trump Princess, Trump Castle and Trump's other prized possessions.

He said he chose the Milton Bradley Co. because "they're the Rolls-Royce of game companies."

And he said that, like real deal-making, "Trump: The Game" puts a premium on skill.

"I didn't want a game based solely on chance," Trump said.

"I wanted a game based on talent. And I wanted to teach people if they have business instincts. It's great if they can learn that from a game instead of having to go out and lose your shirt."

Which is not what Trump expects to happen to him, or to Milton Bradley, once the game hits the stores in April at $25.

Trump said he had "input" in developing the game with Milton Bradley and its game specialists.

George Ditomassi, the president of Milton Bradley, would not say how much the company had paid Trump to put his name on the game.

Trump said the profits would go to charities and estimated that the game would mean an additional $20 million for research on AIDS, cerebral palsy, homelessness and other problems.

"Trump: The Game" is so much fun, Trump said, that he could see himself sitting in his triplex apartment atop Trump Tower, playing "Trump: The Game" — clearly, a trumped-up excuse for relaxing.

Rescue juggles figures for budget's sake

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is sending Congress a 30-year, $200 billion plan to rescue the savings and loan industry that is carefully crafted to avoid inflating the federal budget deficit next year.

The proposal, submitted as part of the 1990 budget, spreads the costs over 30 years and shifts some of the budget outlays into the current 1989 fiscal year.

As a result, Bush is making it easer to keep his "no new taxes" pledge in the first year of his presidency by including an immediate $200 million savings in 1990.

The president would spend only $1.9 billion in tax dollars in 1990 on the biggest government bailout ever, compared with $2.1 billion proposed by the outgoing Reagan administration. Reagan called for outlays of $18.5 billion in fiscal years 1990 through 1993, $3.1 billion more than Bush would spend in his first four budgets.

But Bush would increase spending this year to $11.1 billion, up from $8.7 billion in the Reagan budget.

"That is the accounting sleight of hand that is in the Bush plan," said Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., a member of the House Banking Committee. "It's not that taxpayers are going to be paying any less, but that it shows up less on the budget."

Treasury Department officials who devised the Bush plan declined several requests for interviews Tuesday and Wednesday.

The president's plan is complex. Tax revenue and increased deposit insurance premiums paid by banks and thrifts would be used to make good on $40 billion in assistance pledged by S&L regulators last year and to pay off $50 billion in additional money borrowed through 30-year bonds sold over the next three years.

The Office of Management and Budget, a White House agency, this week released financing details showing $126 billion in spending from 1989 through 1999. According to the figures, the government would continue to spend $3.8 billion a year after that in interest on the bonds, bringing total spending to more than $200 billion over 30 years.

The administration had said that solving the S&L problem would cost $90 billion, but that amount did not account for the interest charges.

Budget Director Richard Darman said the public would shoulder $40 billion of the cost over the first decade and 54 percent, or more than $100 billion, of the burden over 30 years.

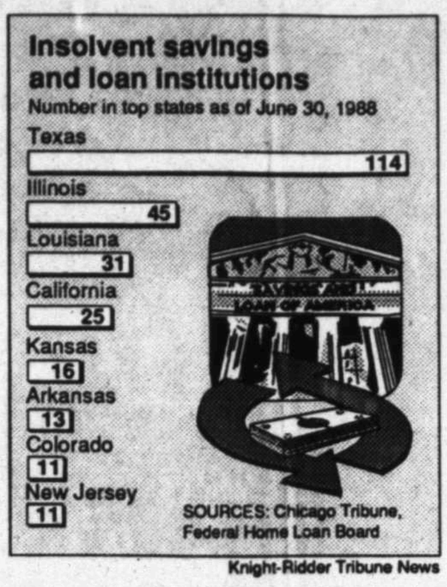

In the first decade, an additional $20 billion would be raised as an increase in the deposit insurance premiums paid by banks. The money would stay in the bank fund, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., but would count as revenue in the general budget and allow the government to spend that amount in tax dollars without adding to the budget deficit.

Private analysts make two criticisms of the president's proposal — that it doesn't provide enough money and that it's based on overly optimistic interest rate assumptions.

"I don't think there is enough money in this plan, but I think it is a very good and substantial down payment," said Robert Litan, a banking expert with the Brookings Institution. "I can understand why they don't want to acknowledge that now, but this is too little."

Bert Ely, a financial institutions analyst in Alexandria, Va., said Bush is assuming he can sell the 30-year bonds at an interest rate of 7.6 percent, nearly 1.5 percentage points lower than the current market.

"Of course it's a rosy scenario," Ely said.

FDIC has no magic wand for S&L's woes

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — When the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. began taking control of insolvent savings and loan institutions as part of the Bush administration's plan to solve the crisis in the industry, the Pacific Savings Bank of Costa Mesa, Calif., was as good a place to start as any.

Rocked by bad business judgments in the middle of the decade, Pacific Savings' liabilities exceed its assets by $200 million and it has lost an estimated $275 million in the last three years.

Industry executives and analysts said the FDIC's highly visible role in the cleanup effort could serve a valuable purpose in bolstering public confidence in the savings industry.

They said the FDIC's manpower and expertise could also help the government move quickly to sell or close institutions when money is available.

But they said that Pacific Savings, one of the first four savings institutions placed under control of the FDIC, also shows how the deposit-insurance agency's ability to speed a solution to the crisis is limited.

In the last year and a half, Pacific Savings has been under the close supervision of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp., until now the primary regulator of savings and loans.

The FSLIC brought in a new management team that stopped making risky investments in real estate and securities and re-emphasized traditional mortgage lending. The conservative approach seems to be stabilizing the institution.

Pacific Savings' loss for 1988 is expected to shrink to less than half the $113 million loss in 1987, and it has begun selling off some of its failed real estate investments in Texas, Louisiana and other states.

Under prodding from the FSLIC, Pacific Savings tried not to offer above-market interest rates to attract deposits, but industry executives say the bank does offer the higher rates from time to time, driving up its deposit costs as well.

Industry experts contend that the FDIC can do little more at Pacific Savings and at the more than 200 other sick institutions the government plans to deal with.

The arrival of the agency's officials at the institution's headquarters on Tuesday is not expected to change or accelerate the cleanup.

For all its reputation as a more aggressive and effective regulator than its sister agency, experts say, the FDIC does not have any weapons in its arsenal that will enable it do any more than the FSLIC has done.

"If they needed to boost FSLIC's manpower by calling in the FDIC, they should have done it several years ago," said Allan G. Bortel, an analyst at Shearson Lehman Hutton in San Francisco. "The FDIC has a good record, but they don't have any special magic."

In particular, analysts said that the FDIC would have a difficult time doing anything more than the FSLIC in forcing troubled institutions not to offer high interest rates for deposits.

"If you cut interest rates, you'll get deposit outflows," said Bert Ely, a consultant in Alexandria, Va.

For the most part, executives and analysts said the FDIC will have to administer to Pacific Savings and the hundreds of other ailing savings and loans in much the same way the FSLIC has, and await the arrival of the funds needed to finance government-assisted mergers or liquidations of the insolvent institutions.

The administration's rescue package includes a $50 billion bond issue to help pay for closing or merging the sick institutions.

Some analysts think that the Bush administration has oversold the abilities of the FDIC to help solve the industry's widespread troubles and that its reputation could suffer if it finds the problems as intractable as the FSLIC has.

"The FDIC could get a black eye out of this," Ely said. "Until the cash flow is there, the FDIC can't do much more than the FSLIC."

NEWS ANALYSIS

Bush's marks mixed on handling crisis

By MATTHEW C. QUINN
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President George Bush, who won initial praise for the way he tackled the savings and loan crisis, is now running into second thoughts from critics who say he did not put enough oomph into his rescue plan.

Some economists, for instance, are warning that Bush's $90 billion plan does not provide enough money to shore up the beleaguered industry and that the administration will ultimately have to ask Congress for more.

Other experts worry that Bush's regulatory overhaul might lead to the disappearance of the thrift industry, which was founded in the 1930s to provide mortgages for single-family homes.

And some feel Bush must be tougher on what one lawmaker called the "go-go boys" in the industry who caused the problem in the first place by using deposits to finance lavish lifestyles.

"Let's confiscate their yachts," said Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md.

Bush, however, received high marks for taking on the long-festering financial problem early, immersing himself in its complicated details and consulting closely with Congress.

Said Lawrence Kudlow, chief economist for the Bear Stears and Co. New York investment house: "I give Bush credit for jumping on it and clearing the decks."

But thrift analyst Bert Ely of Alexandria, Va., called the plan "an attempt to sugar-coat the problem" by not admitting at the outset that the taxpayers will have to foot almost the entire bill of bailing the foundering S&L industry. "It's not a bold enough plan for someone who wants to be a two-term president," Ely said.

Under Bush's plan, a new government agency would issue $50 billion in government bonds to close failed thrifts. The thrift industry would pay the principal and the taxpayers some $40 billion in interest over a 10-year period.

Both banks and thrifts would pay higher premiums for continued government insurance, and the agencies that oversee and insure them would be overhauled.

An additional $50 million would be provided to the Justice Department to ferret out illegal activities at thrifts. The government would take over some 350 insolvent thrifts to stem losses that are estimated at $1 billion a month.

Catherine England, an expert on the thrift industry at the CATO Institute, a Washington-based research institute, credited Bush for admitting for the first time that the taxpayers will have to foot a big part of the bill.

But she said the plan overestimates the ability of the banking and thrift industry to contribute funds. So the taxpayers will have to pay more than the administration anticipates, she said, adding: "I don't think he solved the problem."

Robert Litan, an economist at the Brookings Institution, another think tank here, said the Bush plan fails to provide funds that will be needed to bail out healthy thrifts that could slip into trouble during the next few years.

Litan predicted that in three years Bush will have "to come back and ask for more and it will be embarrassing because his reelection will near."

Kudlow, however, held out hope that the economy will improve and the government will be able to yield profit as it liquidates the assets of dissolved thrifts.

Bush's aides are holding up his overall handling of the crisis as a model for how he will deal with other problems.

First, he ordered his staff to study the problem even before he took office. Once he became president, Bush met with congressional leaders and thrift and banking officials to solicit their views. Last Saturday, he convened a meeting of top financial advisers at the Camp David, Md., presidential retreat.

One participant was amazed at Bush's familiarity with arcane details. At one point, as the president thumbed through a 2-inch-thick book of options, he asked: "Can we turn to Tab D on page 5? I've got a question."

After Bush announced his rescue plan this week, Congress greeted it with generally favorable reaction.

The Video Walkman is a hand-held unit consisting of an 8-mm videocassette recorder and a 3-inch color liquid-crystal television.

It weighs less than two and a half pounds without a battery and a cassette, and sells for under $1,000.

The product was named after the company's hugely successful audio device, the Walkman portable tape player, in hopes of repeating its performance, the officials said.

After introducing the Video Walkman here in August, Sony unveiled it in the United States in October and in Europe in December. Strong domestic demand has prevented the company from meeting overseas demand, the officials said.

Sony is to introduce a cheaper, playback-only version of the Video Walkman in April. The product is aimed at salespeople who use video in their sales presentations, and Sony projects initial monthly sales of around 1,000 units.

Joseph (Bobby Marshall) tries on his amazing Technicolor dreamcoat while his 11 brothers grow increasingly jealous, in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's production of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." The musical will be on stage through March 18.

Rock 'n' roll Bible story

"We all dream a lot. Some are lucky, some are not. But if you think it, want it, dream it, then it's real. You are what you feel."
— "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat"

Walking out the door, she kisses him goodbye and says, "Someday, we'll be together again."
He laughs.

The scene is drawn from real life and not a romance novel.

Every night since Jan. 2, Karen Weidmann and 28 other Midland and Odessa residents have been singing and dancing their way through rehearsals of Midland Community Theatre's production of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

The production, which opened this month, is onstage in Davis Theatre I through March 18.

For Mrs. Weidmann, a member of the MCT Singers for the past 18 months, singing in the opening musical of MCT's 1989 season represents her first experience on stage here.

"Everything has been difficult," says the mother of four children ages 3 to 10. "Probably every play's like this; I don't know because I'm new.

"But working out scene changes, getting costumes to fit, all of the technical things have been hard. The thing that keeps me going are the great people. I love the people in this cast. They're fun."

A Midlander for the past five years, Mrs. Weidmann is a member of the chorus.

"It's very easy music as a singer," she says. "The fun thing about it is it's all different styles — western, rock 'n' roll, ballads — all different kinds of styles."

Perhaps only in the fantasy world of Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice — who also produced "Jesus Christ, Superstar" and "Evita" — could Elvis Presley's rock'n'roll find its way into a musical retelling of the Old Testament story of Joseph, favorite son of Jacob, and his 11 resentful brothers.

Feelings erupt when Dad gives Joseph a special multicolored coat. The brothers sell him into slavery and tell their father he is dead. Eventually, Joseph finds himself in a most prominent position with the pharaoh of Egypt.

"The pharaoh scene is kind of neat," says Brian Schwanitz, who plays the pharaoh and one of the brothers. "The pharaoh is an Elvis impersonator and is in one of the biggest production numbers with the full cast dancing and singing."

Schwanitz, who has wanted to do a show "for the last couple of years," has auditioned for several productions in which he did not get cast. His last time on MCT's stage was in "The Elephant Man."

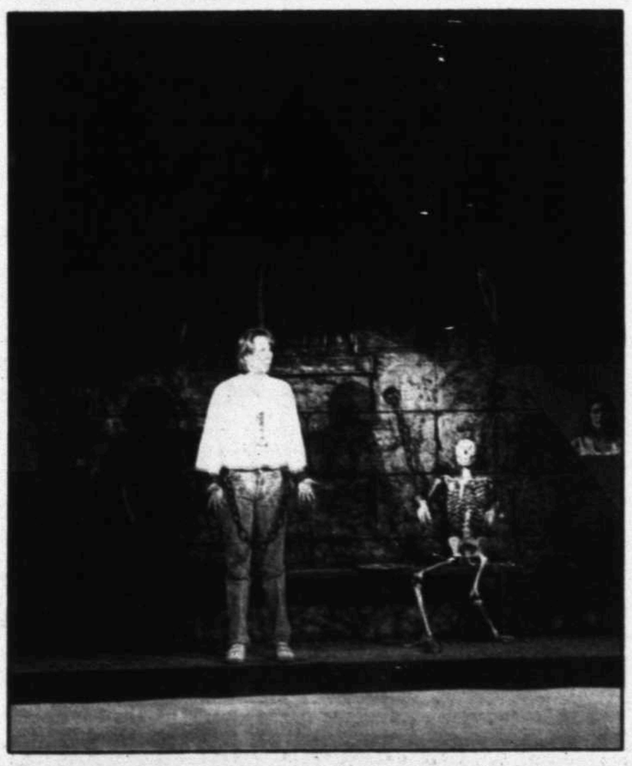

Being cast as a chorus member made Mrs. Weidmann feel "great. I was really excited. I'm really a very conservative person, and Joseph was a play that I thought I could do and feel good about it."

Schwanitz also was pleased to be cast in the production.

"Roles for tall people, anybody not a normal size person, are few and far between. I was the Indian in 'One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest,' and I was the Elephant Man when we did that here.

"I'm 6 foot 6, and there's not that many parts that lend themselves to being that tall, but a pharaoh can get away with being 6 foot 6, especially when Joseph and his brothers are almost all over 6 feet. It's a tall cast."

Among those "over 6 feet" in the cast are Joseph, played by Bobby Marshall, who works at Dillards; and 9 of his 11 brothers:

- Andy Salcedo, director of education for Kent Oil;
- John Haupert, store manager at Dillards;
- Michael Elkins, a senior at Midland High School;
- Bryan Patterson, a registered nurse in surgery at Midland Memorial Hospital;
- Brent Boyd, a geophysicist with ARCO;
- Jim Bartlett, an accountant for Adobe Resources;
- Dode Harvey, of Don Harvey Properties;

GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE

Jazz musician 'destined' to make music his life

Temple

Destiny implies something foreordained and often suggests a great or noble course or end. Lot suggests blind chance.

Which was at work in the following stories?

Born in Montreal, Canada, to two school principals actively involved in introducing music into the Canadian public schools, 60-year-old Maynard Ferguson began studying piano when he was 4 and violin when he was 5. Then, he discovered what was to become his first musical love at age 9.

"I heard somebody play a cornet or trumpet someplace and turned to my father and said, 'Buy me one of those,' and that was it," Ferguson told me in a recent telephone interview. He played his first solo with the Canadian Broadcasting Company in 1939, when he was 11. Then, 10 years later, he left Canada to join big band legend Jimmy Dorsey, then Charlie Barnett and Stan Kenton.

The three-time Grammy winner will be in town Wednesday for a jazz clinic during the day and a 7:30 p.m. public concert at Midland High School Auditorium.

When he was 16, he led his first jazz and dance band, composed mostly of players twice his age. Today, his fusion band is composed of members decades his junior.

Ferguson credits the expanding educational process with turning out performers — "like sports figures" — who have matured at an earlier age than in the past.

"That's why you see me with a younger band," he says. "Players at the age of 23 are seasoned players and very mature artistic players as opposed to sounding like they just got out of school."

Lee Carroll was 15 before he began playing an instrument. His musical preference was typical of his age — rock.

He had been 10 years old when the performing group Exile — then called The Exiles — was born. When the Dick Clark Caravan of Stars came close to his hometown, Carroll attended his first live concert. The opening act was Exile, based out of Richmond, Ky.

He had no idea then that by the time he was 35 he would be a member of this group.

The course of his career included the University of Kentucky when he was 18, where he joined several rock groups and eventually found himself, on occasion, being a member of a band which opened for Exile.

Eventually, Carroll studied music at the Berklee College of Music in Boston, and helped form an eight-piece jazz fusion band called "Fly By Night." When they toured through Kentucky, some members of Exile came to hear them play. At the time Exile had its big hit — "Kiss You All Over" — on the charts as No. 1 for four weeks. The single sold five million copies worldwide.

"After that Exile had problems following up their success as a pop band," Carroll says. " 'Kiss You All Over' hit too big, so big the band couldn't follow it. People started taking songs off Exile albums and make hits with them." Examples include Alabama's recordings of "The Closer You Get" and "Take Me Down," Janie Fricke's "It Ain't Easy (Being Easy)" and Dave & Sugar's "Stay With Me."

So Exile made a switch to country. Carroll left jazz and moved to Nashville where he became a sideman with The Judds about the time they were to hit it big. Then, 2½ years ago, Exile asked him to join the group. He is the 19th new member of the group.

"I was really excited about it," he says. "With the Judds, I had been a side man, an employee with no creative input. Basically, they were asking me to be a part of Exile. I was going to be the artist. It was like a big promotion for me, really."

Exile plays Midland's New West Club Thursday. The new show developed by the group each winter contains one constant — "Kiss You All Over."

"We can't do a concert without doing that song," Carroll says. He laughs and adds, "They won't let us off the stage. Exile's curse will be having to play that song as long as we live."

Both are doing what they love in life. Ferguson, who enjoys conducting jazz clinics for those learning music, says he's positive he's doing what he's supposed to do. "I really love the music, and I still enjoy the fact that we draw a young audience and the older audience." He laughs and says, "If I didn't love the music, I'd sell shoes."

"I'm being true to myself, and that's all I can do," says Carroll, who has wrestled with forging a balance in his life between creative talent and practicality. "In a way I found a gold mind, I'm happy doing what I do. Not many people can say that." He adds that he gets a bonus — having others enjoy the music.

No lifestyle is perfect. Those who work in a business which doesn't allow them to travel, at times, wish they could and those who do, at times, wish they didn't.

"There's an old Tibetan saying — 'There's a snake in every garden. No matter what you do in life, everybody has their snake in their garden."

Was destiny at work in these lives or was it lot?

Could the same be asked of Midland?

Our community is situated miles from everything, and yet Midland has made state, national and international news on several occasions in recent years — certainly more often than the average town of its size.

We also have entertainment opportunities which visitors find unusual when they visit our city.

Recently, a packed house at Lee High School witnessed the oldest, most popular theatrical art form in China — Peking opera — brought to Midland by the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum; another packed house heard the Thouvenel String Quartet, with special guest artist violist Judy Geist; Midland Opera Theater brought Texas Opera Theater to town for a performance of "Hansel and Gretel;" and the Midland Reporter-Telegram brought the Army Ground Forces Band to Midland for a free evening of musical entertainment.

And, this coming week, in addition to Maynard Ferguson and his "High Voltage" band Wednesday at Midland High and Exile Thursday at New West Club, the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale and the Lone Star Brass are performing at First Presbyterian Church at 8 p.m. Valentine's Day; Midland Community Theatre is presenting its opening musical of the year, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," at 2:30 p.m. today and this coming weekend; and well-known jazz pianists Johnny Varro and Ralph Sutton — via the West Texas Jazz Society — are performing in duo at the Midland Hilton ballroom at 8 p.m. Saturday night.

Georgia Todd Temple is entertainment writer for the Reporter-Telegram.

■ Ronnie Williams, with Langston Monarch;

■ and Schwanitz, a senior sales engineer with Schlumberger.

The younger two brothers are played by Greg Rich, a junior at Lee High School; and Odessan Fritz Anders, a music major at Midland College. Both are just under 6 feet tall.

In addition, Odessan David Whitaker, an environmental technician with Shell, plays the role of their father, Jacob.

Marshall, who was heard by Midland audiences last fall in Midland Opera Theater's Opera in the Park, has a bachelor of music degree in voice performance from Trinity University in San Antonio, and has done post graduate work at the University of Texas at San Antonio. He attended Seagle Colony in New York for two years and performed with the San Antonio Opera Guild before moving to Midland.

MCT's production encompasses an approach not tried before — seeing the story of Joseph through a child's dream.

"The show essentially is about utilizing one's imagination," says David Layman, MCT set designer. "Society I think tends to discourage originality and the use of creativity is viewed as unprofitable and unproductive — that's a generalization.

"What the director has done is taken the theme of the show — it's important to dream, dreams can come true, originality is an important part of being human — and he's displayed this theme through the eyes of a child," Layman says, referring to Don Bachmann, MCT executive director and director for this production.

"The child has this marvelous dream about Joseph, and the Technicolor dreamcoat," Layman says. "So this genie narrator comes out and walks him through the tale of Joseph. That's when the fun begins, and it doesn't stop."

Sharing the role of the boy having the dream are Brad Berger, the son of Sheryl and Allan Berger and a fifth grader at Santa Rita Elementary; and Whit Hammons, the son of Felicia and Henry Hammons and a sixth grader at Travis Elementary.

Other ensemble members are:

■ Megan Burleson, who also plays the role of Mrs. Potiphar and is a sales person at J.E. Borron;

■ Alyson Aldridge, a junior at Midland High School;

■ Diane Faulkner, a dance teacher;

■ Stephanie Dunson, a senior at Midland High School;

■ Beth Brimer, co-owner of Medical Insurance Services;

■ Tara Meyer, a junior at Midland High School;

■ Jennifer Helms, a sophomore at Midland College;

■ Trisha Absher, with Van Stavern Interiors;

■ Paula Shipp, a member of the MCT Singers;

■ Susanna Morrow, a sophomore at Midland High School;

■ Rebecca Engelstad, a music teacher at Hillander School;

■ and Ann Fullinwider, with Enertech Information System.

Introducing and commenting on the action is the narrator, Dawn Lester, who teaches private voice lessons.

Musical director for MCT's first membership show of the 1989 season, is Bob Fennell, speech and drama director at Midland High School; and choreographer is Brenda May, MCT choreographer and dance instructor. Stage manager is Jed Barker, with the Texas Department of Health; assisted by Rhondy Barker, with Grace Presbyterian Day Care; Gilley Estes, with Triesco, Inc., and Hastings Books, Music and Video; and Pat Voss, a reporter for Petroleum Information.

Production chairmen include Terry Martin, lights; Don Higgins, sound; props running, Liz Montagna and Frances Mees; stage crew, Chris Faucette; construction, Jim Choate; paint, Liz Pauley and Joanne Robertson.

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" includes numerous scene changes.

"Each song gets a different look, some songs get several looks," Layman says. "What we're attempting to generate here is a show which is a combination of a Sunday School class, an MTV music video, a dream, Sesame Street and the Gong Show."

Layman calls "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" "a free flowing theatrical piece.

"The sets are really pretty much indistinguishable from lights, props, costuming. They all merge together; all of the elements merge when and where they will. Sometimes lights will set the location. Sometimes it's just a costume change.

"For example, when the brothers go to Jacob to tell him that Joseph was killed by a goat, the number is done a la country and western. The corral comes out and two muppet horses sing backup and do some choreography. The scene is set with cactus and the brothers come out in boots and 10 gallon hats.

"What we're interested in is not biblical authenticity, but more the truth of the story as seen through the boy's eyes," Layman says. "The message is really delivered as a romp, a dream that's fun-filled from beginning to end."

NEW YORK (AP) — Viewers returned to olden days in CBS' "Lonesome Dove," and so did network ratings thanks to the hot competition sparked by the critically acclaimed Western miniseries.

"Lonesome Dove" headed off NBC's competition, a sexy made-for-TV movie, on Sunday and a bunch of high-rated comedies on Monday, and made NBC worry about losing its 30-week hold on first place in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings.

ABC put up "Ruthless People" on Sunday and the new "Columbo" on Monday.

Sunday's bonanza of programming drew 86 percent of the viewing audience to the three networks. Monday's drew 80 percent. The networks have averaged shares in the high 60s so far this season, as audiences have defected to cable and videocassettes. "Lonesome Dove" seemed to prove that a big event can still draw viewers to network television.

Sunday night's opening installment of the four-part miniseries was No. 1 in the Nielsen ratings, with a 28.5 rating. Monday's installment dropped to 23.8, still respectable.

"Lonesome Dove" starred Robert Duvall, Tommy Lee Jones and Anjelica Huston and is based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning novel by Larry McMurtry. Its opening night out-rated every movie or miniseries this season. Its average will likely make it one of the highest-rated miniseries in recent seasons.

Despite Sunday's performance, CBS couldn't get out of third place in the ratings.

NBC had an average, prime-time rating of 16.0; ABC 13.9, and CBS 13.0. Mid-week last week marked the beginning of the important February sweeps, one of four months when local affiliates' ratings are measured to determine advertising rates.

Each rating point represents 904,000 households with televisions.

NBC has now won 30 weeks in a row. But Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects, was worried that the last three installments of the miniseries would break NBC's streak.

"I would say this week is in jeopardy for us," Jaffe said. "Especially with the president pre-empting us on Thursday."

The networks will interrupt programming to cover President George Bush's address to Congress in prime time on Thursday, NBC's best night for ratings.

Last Thursday's "Late Night with David Letterman Anniversary Special" on NBC in prime time, ranked 17th. ABC put the "Barbara Walters Special" in the top 10 and "The American Music Awards" at 11th.

Fox Broadcasting Co. had its highest rating yet, an 11.6 for "America's Most Wanted," which ranked 45th among the network shows. "Married ... With Children" had its highest rating ever, 10.9, and ranked 53rd.

The top-rated shows last week were: "Lonesome Dove, Part 1," CBS; "The Cosby Show," NBC; "A Different World," NBC; "Murder, She Wrote," CBS; "Cheers," NBC; "Roseanne," ABC; "60 Minutes," CBS; "Barbara Walters Special," ABC; "Golden Girls," NBC; and "Who's the Boss?" ABC.

The lowest-rated network shows were: "48 Hours," "The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour," "The Magical World of Disney," "Tour of Duty," "HeartBeat," "Dream Breakers," "TV 101," "Murphy's Law," "A Fine Romance" and "Studio 5B."

ABC canceled "Studio 5B" after two episodes.

In the news ratings, "ABC World News Tonight" topped what essentially a three-way tie, with an 11.8 rating. The "CBS Evening News" had an 11.6. "NBC Nightly News" had 11.5.

OC to do 'Pirates of Penzance'

ODESSA — The Globe Theatre will present the Odessa College's production of the Gilbert and Sullivan musical "Pirates of Penzance."

Ken Golden will star in the role of Frederic, who as a young boy mistakenly was apprenticed as a pirate. His nurse Ruth, played by Lee Tollison, is somewhat hard of hearing and misunderstood Frederic's father's request to apprentice him to become a pilot.

Scooter Tilley plays the Pirate King who runs the band of pirates. As Frederic is preparing to leave the band of pirates, Major-General Stanley, portrayed by Jim Huddleston, and a group of pretty girls, all wards of Major General, happen upon the scene. One of the girls, Mabel, played by Dana Harlow, takes a particular interest in Frederic.

The pirates seize the Major-General after he has deceived them and in the end, the police come to the rescue.

Dr. Paula Thompson, chairman of the OC theater department, is director of the play while Charlotte Whitaker is musical director. Toni Stice is choreographer and Jack Streicher is technical director.

Showtimes are 8 p.m. Feb. 24 and 25, and March 2, 3, and 4, and 2:30 p.m. Feb. 26.

Candy crumby in 'Harry Crumb'

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

John Candy is back as the world's largest jockey and the most dim-witted detective on record. I like Candy, but his bumbling character Harry Crumb in "Who's Harry Crumb?" bored me to tears.

"You're a man of many talents, Mr. Crumb," says the man who has hired Crumb to rescue his kidnapped daughter. "It's a burden," Crumb answers, "but one I can live with." Unfortunately, it's too much to ask the audience to live with this inane humor.

Crumb plays the last and most inept in a line of private detectives, the kind of guy who takes incriminating pictures of his own client in a divorce case instead of photographing her spouse. Ha, ha. He is summoned from Tulsa to his family firm headquarters in Los Angeles to investigate the kidnapping of a beautiful heiress.

A subplot twist concerns the heiress's witchy stepmother (Annie Potts), who tries to bump off her hubby to secure his fortune before he pays the ransom and ends up a pauper.

The plot set-up is good but the script is dead in the water. Only one person in the audience laughed at the questionable attempts at humor. Candy gets the "best" lines, which are all just awful. Crumb's one-liners include such mundane stuff as, "I've been so thoroughly trained I don't have to think before I speak." Right. In another scene Crumb hikes up his trousers to display black cowboy boots and says, "I've got a black belt in akido, and boots to match," (You figure it out). If you don't find the previous lines downright hilarious, then avoid all the rest of the crummy humor that infests "Crumb."

In all fairness, Wesley Mann as the cross-eyed surly butler is funny. When asked to serve coffee by one guest at a dinner, Mann retorts: "Oh great. Now I suppose everyone will want some!"

But Mann appears briefly, not enough to make the film worth seeing. In fact, Candy even disappears from the film for long stretches near the climax, which allows the story to lose the small focus it had.

After watching "Crumb" crumble, I needed some cheering up. Renting "Trains, Planes and Automobiles" filled the bill and allowed me to see John Candy in a good comedy. For that matter, "Crumb" may be out on video soon, but I can only recommend that this sleep-inducing comedy be rented to insomniacs.

"Who's Harry Crumb?" rates 1½ rigs.

Karl Malden plays role of U.S. hostage killed by terrorists

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — For Karl Malden, the role of a man in a wheelchair murdered by hijackers of the cruise ship Achille Lauro, is more than an acting job, it's an attempt to remind people of terrorism's senseless violence.

"I just didn't want people to forget this man in a wheelchair was thrown overboard," Malden said. "We forget very easily."

"The Hijacking of the Achille Lauro," a dramatization of the 1985 terrorist attack, airs Monday on NBC.

Malden plays Leon Klinghoffer, a 69-year-old Jewish man from New York who was shot and tossed overboard when four Palestinian terrorists boarded the Italian cruise ship and took more than 500 people hostage for three days.

"It's not a long part, but it's an important part, because he's the only one that gets killed on the whole boat," said Malden, who was in Nashville for two weeks teaching acting at Vanderbilt University.

Malden, an actor for more than 50 years, won an Oscar for "A Streetcar Named Desire" in 1951 and starred in the TV series of the 1970s, "Streets of San Francisco." He more recently played the crusading father of a murder victim in the miniseries "Fatal Vision" and played Barbra Streisand's father in the film "Nuts."

Malden said he wanted to be part of "The Hijacking of the Achille Lauro" to honor the death of an innocent victim.

"His death is a symbol to the world of the senselessness of terrorism," he said.

Klinghoffer and his 58-year-old wife, Marilyn, took the trip because she was told she had cancer and only had a short time left to live, Malden said.

"It's ironic. She was the one who was supposed to die first," he said. "But he was killed, and she lived another six months after that. That's what fascinated me about it."

The pirates had threatened to kill passengers one at a time and blow up the luxury liner if 50 Palestinians imprisoned in Israel were not released.

But Malden said Klinghoffer, who was partially paralyzed by a stroke, was singled out for death because of his wheelchair.

"It was hard to manipulate. It was hard to get him to go from place to place," he said.

When the elderly man was ordered to move along with a group of other captives, he became frustrated and lashed out at the terrorists, Malden said.

"He told them 'to hell with them' and that's when something happened and one of them pulled out a pistol and shot him. They threw him and the wheelchair overboard."

The two-hour drama is also the story of Marilyn Klinghoffer, played by Lee Grant, who courageously endured her fear and the loss of her husband, Malden said.

"When they were caught, the Italians asked her to go and finger the people who were caught, and she did," he said.

"Some of the advice was, don't go, and just forget about it, but she did it, she picked them out of a line.

"In this world, you have to have courage to do that."

The day after Klinghoffer was shot, the Achille Lauro docked at an Egyptian port, where passengers and hijackers got off after officials negotiated with the pirates.

The four hijackers boarded an Egyptian plane, but it was intercepted by U.S. warplanes and the terrorists were put in the custody of the Italians.

Fiddle players pay tribute to Bob Wills

By BILL JOHNSON

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Frankie McWhorter tipped his pearl-gray cowboy hat back a bit farther on his head, squinted as though he was looking at the distance, and recalled his introduction to western swing.

The juke box was playing in the cafe where he ate while loading cattle down in Texas in 1949, he recalled last week.

" 'Faded Love' was all that was played the whole time I was there," he said. "I asked somebody what that nice racket was and they told me it was Bob Wills' fiddle.

"I decided I was going to get me a fiddle and a couple of months later I was walking past a pawn shop and there was a fiddle in the window.

"My friend said that's what I'd been wanting, so I went in and bought it and I've been fiddling and scraping ever since."

McWhorter, 57, of Higgins, Texas, was one of dozens of fiddle players who showed up at the state Capitol for the annual Bob Wills Day, a tribute to the man credited with originating western swing.

The day also was in tribute to the late Leon McAuliffe, who played with Wills. McAuliffe died last year.

Among all the fiddlers were a few guitar players — both acustic and steel — as well as some piano players, drummers and singers. One group traveled for 20 hours from Indiana just to appear.

Several members of the old Bob Wills band, the Texas Playboys, were among those who entertained visitors and provided concerts in both the Senate and House chambers.

Over and over again, the strains of "Faded Love" were heard. One time when it was struck up in the Senate chamber, all the listeners rose in tribute, as befitting the song proclaimed by legislative edict the official country and western song of Oklahoma.

Among those former Texas Playboys was McWhorter, who was with the Wills' band from 1960 to 1962. And he said he could still remember buying that first fiddle.

"It cost $27," he said. "I know, because I had to borrow $3 from my daddy to cover the check I wrote for it."

He said he "had worked for the Miller Brother Band" before joining the Texas Playboys.

After his two years with Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys, McWhorter said he went back to work on a ranch in Lipscomb County, Texas. But the music was still a strong draw.

"I have my own band now," he said. "It's called Frankie McWhorter And The Over The Hill Gang."

He said this was his first trip to Oklahoma City for the annual tribute to Bob Wills, and it was "quite impressive...what they're doing to keep his music alive.

"To know Bob Wills was to love him."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will be able to tie up loose ends and do things that will give your career and personal relationships enormous momentum. You are on the road to success! Do not look back. You can overcome almost any setback if you put your mind to it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get a jump on the competition by making long-distance calls. Telemarketing helps you reduce travel and boost profit margins. A relationship takes a dramatic turn today. Listen to your heart.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You feel upbeat and head for work or a meeting in a positive mood. People listen more carefully to what you say now. Focus on an anniversary or special event.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The future of a relationship may be out of your hands. Cooperation is the key to success both at home and in business. You make the right impression on someone you meet at lunch.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If your apartment house goes condo, you could get a bargain. Long hours will take a toll on your productivity unless you find a way to sneak in a catnap. A relationship matures.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Postpone travel and center your activities around home base. Mastering a computer will speed up tedious work and give you more freedom. You can be the life of the party this evening. Explore new relationships.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You feel more content now. Improvements in your work environment put you in a better mood. Keep careful track of credit card expenditures. This is not the time to exceed your limit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your writing and speaking skills are assets you can use to improve an employment or financial situation. Help a client's business expand and profits will rise. You know exactly what is needed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Those who spent most of the weekend outdoors return to work refreshed and happy. Concentrate on tying up the loose ends of a project so you can keep costs within budget.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Although you can win an argument, it will be a hollow victory if you offend higher-ups. Look for a more diplomatic way to get your point across. Travel is favored; control costs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stock market and real estate dealings can improve your cash reserves. Good times are coming. Although you still have to work hard, new business associations provide some relief. Count your blessings!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone is headed back into your life. You have a chance to make a good relationship even better. Your imaginative ideas will mean nothing until you present them to those in authority.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Deal with a joint financial matter before you lose the clout you enjoy. You will have to do a bit of backstage maneuvering to win. An affectionate relationship grows warmer today.

"How do you play this suit combination: K J x x opposite A x x?" writes a reader from the Bronx. That depends. If you need four tricks from the suit, or if you can't afford to lose a trick in the suit, the percentage play is to cash the ace and then finesse. But what if you need only three tricks? Take a look at today's hand.

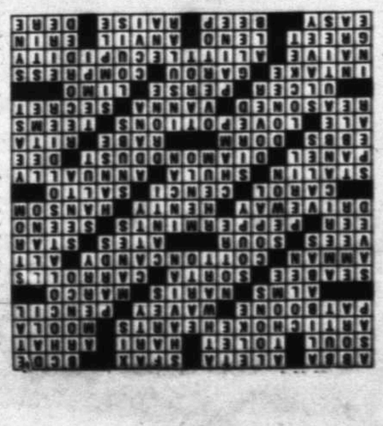

The road to four spades was quick and easy. With an opening bid facing a minimum opening, South simply bid game once the fit was located.

West led the top of his heart sequence. Declarer could count nine fast tricks. Barring a defensive blunder, the only place to find the 10th trick was in the club suit. He won the king of hearts, drew trumps, cashed the ace of clubs and finessed the jack. East took his queen, and the defenders cashed two diamond tricks before exiting with a heart. When the clubs did not split evenly the defenders had to come to a heart trick for down one.

But look what might have happened had declarer tackled the clubs differently. After drawing trumps, he should cash the king and ace of clubs. If the queen drops, as it does here, the hand is over. If it does not come tumbling down, declarer simply continues with a club toward the jack. That guarantees a third club trick, and with it the contract, whenever West has the queen of clubs or the suit breaks evenly. There are plenty of entries to the table's good club.

Ms. Hill transports the viewer into another world through her use of fantasy landscapes entricately detailed in technically-accomplished colored pencil.

She has been creating artwork professionally since 1976 and attended Tyler School of Art, Temple University. She maintains a studio in her home in Midland and recently illustrated a book published by the Nita Stewart Haley Library.

Ms. Murphy was born in Yorkshire in the north of England and studied at Bradford College of Art.

Husband, wife authors delve into mayhem, murder

By RONALD POWERS

NEW YORK (AP) — Steven Levy's book is about a hippie-like New Age guru who allegedly killed his girlfriend and stuffed her in a trunk. Teresa Carpenter's book is about a professor who battered his prostitute-mistress.

When this husband and wife dine at night, does mayhem mingle with the meatloaf? Not necessarily, they say.

"It would be wrong to suggest (our conversations) were excessively morbid. They don't tend to be morose," says Levy.

But Carpenter quickly adds, "We could swap forensic stories and I could tell him who he should talk to in the FBI."

For three years, Levy, 37, and Carpenter, 40, worked separately but simultaneously on these two accounts of similarly repulsive crimes.

The experience of both writing at the same time turned out quite well, Carpenter said during a recent interview at the couple's Fifth Avenue apartment, a well-lighted, book-filled home.

In his book — "The Unicorn's Secret: Murder in the Age of Aquarius," published in October by Prentice Hall Press — Levy examined the bizarre case of Ira Einhorn, Philadelphia's enigmatic peace-and-love freak and parapsychology crusader who was charged in 1979 with killing his girlfriend, Holly Maddux. Eighteen months after Maddux was last seen alive, her decomposed, mummified body was found in a locked trunk in their apartment.

Einhorn, known about town as "The Unicorn," shrugged off the allegations and accused the CIA and others of planting evidence in his home, but he skipped bail before trial. He remains a fugitive, likely living in Europe.

Carpenter's book, "Missing Beauty," published in June by W.W. Norton, is the story of what led Tufts University medical researcher William Douglas in 1983 to smash the skull of Robin Benedict, the high-priced Boston prostitute with whom he'd fallen insanely in love.

Even though the essentials of the stories are similar — both victims were women trying to extract themselves from relationships with obsessively possessive men — the two men could not be more unalike.

The Unicorn was a brilliant and charismatic bear of a figure, a ladies' man extraordinaire and counterculture oddball given to such benign weirdness as answering his door stark naked. Though he dressed in a dashiki and dirty jeans, sported a full beard and shoulder-length hair and frequently smelled bad, Einhorn established an incredible global network of scientists, corporate sponsors and wealthy benefactors.

"Ira was the epitome of the guy who worked in fringe circles, was antiestablishment and still looked like a hippie when he was almost 40," says Levy. "Douglas was this traditional, respected man."

Superficially, Douglas did appear to lead a normal life: He was a solidly middle-class family man with three children, an eminent medical school professor and acknowledged expert in cell culture.

"Everything about him was so normal, so stultifyingly normal...He was a man who one would never imagine could have gotten himself into a situation like this," Carpenter said.

But then there was that other side, sufficiently dark, private and perverse to fascinate the Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter for four years. Carpenter received the award in 1981 for her crime coverage for The Village Voice.

Here was "a scientist who had been embezzling research funds to support a mistress — who happened to be a hooker. He was living a double life...That's what hooked me," she said.

Researching her book, Carpenter spent weeks walking the streets and hanging out in the bars and strip joints of the Combat Zone, the netherworld that is Boston's red-light district, talking to bartenders, pimps, whores and strippers who knew Douglas' young victim.

"That was very difficult for me. I'm not a street person and never dared pose as one," she said.

While Carpenter was exploring the gamy depths, Levy was having anxieties of his own as he waited for her nightly call from Boston, assuring him that she was safe.

"I wasn't happy about it, but this is what Teresa does. It's important for her to do the story right," Levy said.

"Missing Beauty" is Carpenter's first book, but she was already a respected master of crime stories: She had reported on the killings of Playmate Dorothy Stratton and politician Allard Lowenstein.

"The Unicorn's Secret" is Levy's first major excursion into the genre; his other book, "Hackers," is about the personal computer revolution. Levy is a free-lance writer and contributing editor for Rolling Stone.

So, what is the allure of the macabre?

Says Levy: "When something happens it gives you a window into the way people live, the way people are. ...It's like an archaeological dig. Like if someone unearths a civilization frozen by a volcano or something. That's what a murder does — it freezes details of our lives."

Vidal takes provocative look at American life

"At Home," by Gore Vidal. Random House. 303 Pages. $18.95.

PHIL THOMAS
Associated Press

A Review

A reader of the two dozen essays in "At Home" may not agree with everything Gore Vidal has to say, but he will find the variety of views put forth provocative, to say the least.

In one piece, which tells in part of his family's roots in Washington, Vidal puts forward the brash, if unprovable, notion that the United States moved from republic to empire because of air conditioning.

"I date the end of the old republic and the birth of the empire to the invention, in the late '30s, of air conditioning. Before air conditioning, Washington was deserted from mid-June to September. The president...and all of Congress went home...But since air conditioning and the Second World War arrived, more or less at the same time, Congress sits and sits while the presidents and their staffs never stop making mischief at the White House."

In another, he declares the American empire officially dead. For what reason? "On Sept. 16, 1985, when the Commerce Department announced the U.S. had become a debtor nation, the American Empire died...Like most modern empires, ours rested not so much on military prowess as on economic primacy. ... Then the money power shifted from New York to Tokyo, and that was the end of our empire."

How to cope with this shift of economic power? Vidal offers a rather unlikely and startling solution in the wrily titled "A Cheerful Response." He writes:

"For America to survive economically in the coming Sino-Japanese world, an alliance with the Soviet Union is a necessity. After all, the white race is a minority race with many well-deserved enemies, and if the two great powers of the Northern Hemisphere don't band together, we're going to end up as farmers — or, worse, mere entertainment — for the more than 1 billion grimly efficient Asiatics."

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

Really good storytelling and an attention to historical background make "George Washington: Father of Our Country" an above-average biography for elementary school students.

David Alder breathes life into the complex character of Washington, using simple quotes from diaries and letters.

In fact, it's refreshing to see that facts concerning smallpox, slavery and war are not glossed over or ignored. Instead, Alder deals with them directly, but without condescension.

Although it is impossible for a book of this scope to give a complete synopsis of the historical setting, young readers not familiar with the turn of events may be confused when they read that Wasghington began his military career as a British soldier.

The accurate and interesting text is accompanied by black and white sketches by Jacqueline Garrick. However, Holiday House might have enhanced this fine book by providing more colorful illustrations to entice 8 and 9 year olds.

Fruit-filled sausage against the law in Michigan

CEDAR, Mich. (AP) — The breakfast sausage that was served at last week's Governor's Conference on Agriculture isn't exactly kosher in Michigan, but no one is complaining.

A 1952 state law listing all the ingredients retailers are allowed to stuff into sausage includes honey, eggs and garlic — but not cherries.

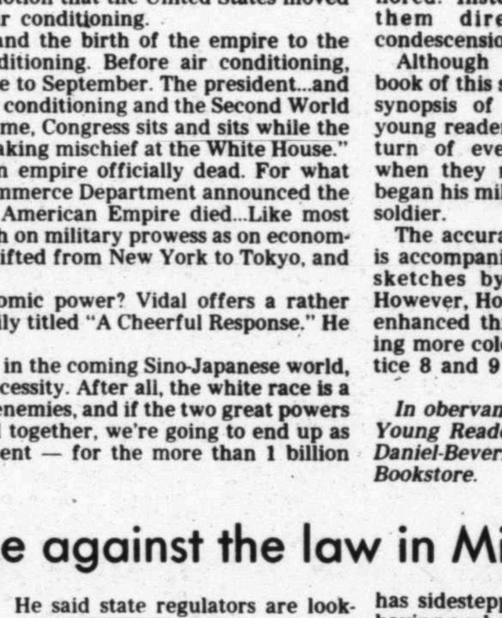

"But it's not exactly illegal, either," said Robert Jason, a regional supervisor for the Agriculture Department's food division in Traverse City. "When the law was made in 1952, nobody ever thought to put fruit in sausage."

He said state regulators are looking the other way until someone can amend the state's sausage laws.

Ray Pleva, a butcher who developed the cherry pecan sausage that graced the tables at the conference, has sidestepped the sausage law by having a wholesale sausage company stuff his links.

Federal law, which regulates sausage wholesalers, allows fruity fillers.
